Easter

Flowers, Dresses, Church

By SUE HINSON
Reflector Staff Writer

Pretty little girls dressed in sprigged cotton dresses, straw hats woven through with colored ribbons, children carrying straw baskets excitedly poking through grass for painted eggs, bouquets of freshly cut spring flowers — these are just a few of the sights and thoughts common to Easter. And each year we all wait for and expect to see these things, to talk about these things.

This year is no exception ... pastors have prepared their congregations to celebrate Jesus' life, death and resurrection this year as they always do. Clothing and department stores have filled their windows with the latest in fashion and eggery, and florists' shops have been besieged with orders. Meterologists are again predicting that the Easter holiday will be a wet one, and as usual, quite a few local pastors were hoping that not a drop would fall to ruin their sunrise services.

Dr. Cedric Pierce, pastor of Black Jack Free Will Baptist Church, is one of the many who put in a good word about the weather. He hoped that the rain would hold off because, Pierce said, this year's Easter service "should really be something to remember." Between 5:30 and 6 a.m., members of Black Jack FWB Church planned to join on the church grounds to hear numerous musical selections by church soloists, duets, quartets and the church choir as the sun peeked over the horizon.

The congregation of St. Gabriel's Catholic Church scheduled a sunrise witness, too, according to the Rev. Jerry Sherba. "We are also holding a solemn vigil Saturday night for those who wish to be baptized and for others to proclaim their faith," he said. St. Gabriel's regular Sunday mass will include two flautists and a pianist in the performance of a Bach sonata. "In addition, one of our church members, Carla Conner, will sing 'I Know My Redeemer Liveth,' a song from the Messiah," Sherba said.

Mrs. Maurice Nixon, director of the Cornerstone Missionary Baptist Church Child Care Center, said that Easter really began on Friday for

Twisters Kill 4 In Mississippi

WATER VALLEY, Miss. (AP) — Tornadoes and heavy thunderstorms rampaged through northern Mississippi on Saturday, killing four people, destroying homes and businesses and knocking out power and telephone lines.

"We know it hit a store north of downtown and they're still pulling people out of it," said a dispatcher at the Water Valley Police Department in this northern Mississippi Delta town about 60 miles south of Memphis, Tenn. "The tornado went right over the police station and I can see trees and power lines down everywhere."

Telephone lines were down in Yalobusha County outside Water Valley, the sheriff's office reported. Ambulances had to detour around fallen trees on their way to the county hospital in Water Valley.

Tornado touchdowns were also reported in the towns of Philipp and Minter City, about 25 miles southwest of Water Valley.

Four people injured in those storms were in the intensive care ward at Greenwood-Leflore County Hospital, being treated for broken bones and lacerations, said Charles Carpenter, an emergency room medical attendant.

Carpenter confirmed that two other storm victims were dead on arrival at the hospital.

Two others were dead on arrival at Tallahatchie General Hospital, said Bill Engle, the hospital's director. Two people injured by the storm were hospitalized at Tallahatchie.

State officials said the storm that hit Philipp also left extensive damage in the Paul community, the site of a church camp.

Civil Defense officials in Tallahatchie County reported downed power and telephone lines and a nighttime search for injuries and damage.

Court To Hear Draft Challenge On Federal Aid

By JAMES H. RUBIN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Four small liberal arts colleges, adding a new dimension to an important Supreme Court case, are telling the justices that the government is limiting academic freedom and free speech by denying federal aid to male college students who fail to register for the draft.

Withholding government grants and loans to enforce the draft registration law "endangers the diversity of college student bodies by curtailing the ability of certain groups of male students — such as those with limited financial resources and those holding dissident pacifist views — to attend," the colleges said.

They made the argument in a "friend-of-the-court" legal brief submitted to the Supreme Court. The colleges also said the government is practicing sex discrimination because the loss of student aid applies only to young men.

The colleges are Haverford and Swarthmore in Pennsylvania, Oberlin in Ohio and Earlham in Richmond, Ind. Their total enrollment is around 8,000. All but Oberlin were founded by Quakers, a religious group committed to pacifism.

The Supreme Court will hear arguments Monday over whether the government may deny federal aid to male college students who fail to register with the Selective Service System.

A decision in the case, which calls to mind draft protests of the Vietnam War era, is likely to be announced by July.

U.S. District Judge Donald L. Alsop in St. Paul, Minn., ruled last June that it is an unconstitutional form of punishment to force students to forfeit federal aid unless they prove they have registered for the draft. In doing so, he invalidated a 1982 law that disqualifies non-registrants from receiving student loans and grants.

The Supreme Court has suspended Alsop's ruling pending its review of the case and the law is being enforced.

The four colleges urged the high court to broaden its examination beyond the issues addressed by Alsop.

Their brief said the law "impairs the freedom of our institutions of higher learning. The statute isolates particular groups of male students for special, adverse treatment in an area — education — totally unrelated to the objective of military conscription."

The law also places a heavy administrative burden on the colleges and forces them into an adversarial relationship with students by requiring the students to prove they are registered for the draft before they can receive aid, the document said.

It also noted that many of their students depend on federal financial assistance. At Swarthmore and Oberlin, three out of five students receive such aid.

The colleges said they pride themselves on enrolling students from diverse backgrounds, including some conscientious objectors to military service.

Forcing some students to sacrifice federal aid — and a college education — rather than register for the draft "will have a profound impact on the character of these colleges' learning environments," their brief contended.

Embassy Personnel Urged To Leave

By MARK S. SMITH
Associated Press Writer

LONDON (AP) — The government wants everyone in the besieged Libyan Embassy to get out of Britain, even though that also means freedom for the gunman who killed a policewoman and wounded 11 Libyan dissidents, an official source said Saturday.

The source, who asked not to be identified, told The Associated Press the government is negotiating with the aim of getting all the people in the embassy out of the country, and he said the expulsions could take place in the next few days.

"The most obvious thing is that there is a distinct possibility that the killer will go free because it will be hard to prove it. The evidence has probably been destroyed. Also, the Libyans can hide behind the Vienna Convention" guaranteeing diplomatic immunity even for crimes, said the source.

Foreign Office and police estimates put the number of people in the embassy at 20 to 30.

Libyan leader Col. Moammar Khadafy told a news conference in Tripoli, Libya, that he was willing to send a team of investigators to London to find out who killed policewoman Yvonne Fletcher, the British Broadcasting Corp. reported.

Khadafy said if it was determined that the gunman was a Libyan, he would be returned to Libya, put on trial and punished, according to BBC. It quoted the colonel as saying Britain would be invited to send observers to any such trial.

BBC reporter Kate Adie, who was at the evening news conference, said that when she suggested there was a stalemate in the situation, Khadafy replied, "I think not. Things are opening up."

Khadafy also repeated his previous statements that Libyans inside the embassy were not armed and that the British were responsible for the events that occurred at the building.

Jesse Was Late, But The Crowd Waited

By JERRY RAYNOR
Reflector Staff Writer

Two hours of patient (for some, impatient) waiting in a hot, crowded hall with a thousand other people for a visitor to show up can, to say the least, be wearisome.

In most instances, the majority of people under such circumstances would have left after the first few minutes or half-hour of waiting. "We certainly could never expect to hold an audience waiting so long," Scott Parker, general manager of the ECU Playhouse, commented.

But the audience at King and Queen North Thursday afternoon, black and white, male and female, young and old, displayed staunch determination to stick it out. They were waiting to see and to hear the Rev. Jesse Jackson, a candidate for the Democratic nomination for president of the United States.

When people left their seats unoccupied to visit the bathroom, to go outside for a cigarette — they left some article to indicate occupany or asked a neighbor to tell inquirers the seat was taken — perhaps some sort of record of friendly swapping of reservation favors must have been established.

Planners for the event obviously took into account that Jackson's reputation for late arrival would likely be true for his Greenville appearance. Willie Mae Carney, mistress of ceremonies and a vice chairman of the 1st Congressional District Black Caucus, the sponsoring organization for Jackson's visit, had a handy — and long — list of fill-in activities to help hold the audience's attention.

One or two welcoming speeches, including an early welcome by Greenville Mayor Janice Buck to visitors representing all areas of eastern North Carolina, was followed by renditions of musical selections, among them a marvelous interpretation of "America The Beautiful" sung by Debra Leathers with Johnny Wooten at the organ.

From time to time, Wooten and his singers — selected from several local church choirs — relieved the parade of speeches given by a roll call of candidates or their representatives invited by Ms. Carney to present a two-minute statement.

She began the open invitation by asking if there was "a spokesman in the audience representing Governor Hunt or that other man." She moved down the list — governor, lieutenant governor, U.S. representative, state officers, judges, county commissioners, school board members. Several candidates or representatives spoke, all duly keeping their comments limited.

Then came the first of several announcements on the status of Jackson's approach to Greenville. At about 4:45 p.m.: "He is getting ready to leave Rocky Mount, should be here within an hour."

With time still left to keep the audience pacified, officials already in office and not involved in being elected, but who happened to be on hand, were invited to make brief statements.

Still time left. Dr. Clarence Gray, a minister and principal of Eastern Elementary School, spoke on the topic, "It Is Time.

Without warning, Dr. Andrew Best broke in on the musical scene, with a powerful if off-key version of "One Day." An elderly man, leaning against the hall's bar, drinking ice water, commented, "Lord have mercy, I sure hope he's better at doctoring than he is at singing."

A couple of public announcements filled in a bit more time; that, and a repeated warning for the driver of a certain car to move it, or else.

Ice water, incidentally, was a saving grace of the day. Young girls scurried about constantly, keeping pitchers of it filled in tables in the hallway, on the big bar, on the edge of the stage.

Hawkers outside and inside offered for sale a colorful collage poster with photographs of Jackson embellished with a long poem. Others sold metal Jackson campaign buttons, and still others circulated inside and outside, crying out their wares, color portraits of Jackson. D.D. Garrett and several assistants had ready takers from hungry people for small cardboard boxes of

Reagan To Preach Stability On Peking Trip

By JAMES GERSTENZANG
AP White House Correspondent

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. (AP) — President Reagan is carrying one overriding message with him on his trip this week to Peking: The evolving U.S. relationship with China is on firm footing, despite tremors caused by trade problems and difficulties reaching a nuclear power agreement.

That is the view that has emerged from a series of interviews with and briefings by administration officials as Reagan and his entourage move slowly westward from Washington to Peking.

Reagan spent Saturday at his ranch 30 miles northwest of here. He is scheduled to arrive in China at midday Thursday after a leisurely journey that was arranged to give him a chance to adjust slowly to the 13-hour time difference between the two capitals.

His trip to China is the first by an incumbent U.S. president since Gerald R. Ford made the journey in 1975.

It will offer the American and Chinese people a view of 73-year-old Ronald Reagan, for years a staunch defender of Taiwan and vociferous critic of the People's Republic of China, making his first trip to a communist nation.

Indeed, he winds up the six-day journey on May Day, an international workers' holiday, by visiting a commune on the outskirts of Shanghai.

The president was said by a senior administration official who was intimately involved in setting up the trip to have insisted that he have "a chance to have a dialogue with the Chinese people" because "he didn't want to go over there and just meet with the government."

So, when he visits the Rainbow Bridge "Township," the new name used for communes in a China moving toward a freer economy and flirting with limited private enterprise, "he'll be out in the fields with the peasants," said the official.

Reagan also will meet with several hundred members of the American community in China, and will be the host at a dinner for which frozen turkey for 500 or 600 people is being flown from the United States.

But the emphasis of the trip is far from the farmlands near Shanghai or a hotel banquet hall in Peking.

Rather, the focus will be to show that "this relationship with China is here to stay," said one senior administration official who spoke on the condition that he not be identified by name.

"We've got difficulties, of course," he said. "We have problems, as we have in all kinds of bilateral relationships. But this is on firm ground."

It is likely that when the president returns to Washington late on the evening of May 2 he will be carrying signed treaties promoting U.S.-Chinese cultural exchanges and protecting U.S. companies from facing the threat of double taxation.

But an agreement on the sale of U.S. nuclear technology to China remains very much up in the air, although some officials in Washington and Peking are beginning to indicate progress is being made, and another pact easing U.S. investment in China is uncertain.

One official, speaking privately, said that the United States has never tried to negotiate a bilateral investment treaty with a nation operating a planned economy.

"It's meshing apples and oranges here, and it's proving very difficult to do," he said.

The Chinese are interested in building 12 nuclear power plants, to help meet the energy needs of their 1 billion people. The United States, along with the Soviet Union and several other nations, would like to take part in an order that could be worth about $20 billion, by U.S. government estimates.

But under a 20-year-old U.S. law, China would have to guarantee that no nuclear material will be reprocessed, enriched or otherwise altered in form or content without the approval of the United States, and that no fuel that could be used to make nuclear weapons may be stored in a facility that does not have U.S. approval.

The Chinese feel that control of the fuel is a matter of national sovereignty, administration sources say, although similar requirements are placed on all nations with which the United States has nuclear power agreements.

"We have made it crystal clear to the Chinese that we've gone about as far as we can go and the ball is in their court," said one official.

The question of trade is central to the president's journey.

U.S.-China trade dropped from $5.2 billion in 1982 to $4.4 billion by some estimates in 1983. Last year, the United States suffered a $71 million deficit in trade with China, the first since 1977.

With the U.S. textile industry suffering a slump, limits were placed on imports from China.

"The trade issues have become heavily politicized and have replaced Taiwan as the principal irritant in our relationship," said another senior administration official.

Libya ...

Britain's ambassador in Tripoli, the Libyan capital, met with Libyan Foreign Minister Ali Abdussalam Treiki for a third straight day.

Home Secretary Leon Brittan told reporters after an all-day meeting here of the "crisis Cabinet" committee that the talks with Libya were going "painfully slowly" and feelings had been inflamed by Friday night's bombing at London's Heathrow Airport.

Police said the timebomb that ripped through a baggage claim hall, injuring 25 people, was similar to devices planted in London last month in a blitz aimed at exile opponents of Khadafy.

"Feelings are exacerbated by the terrible bomb outrage that occurred yesterday," Brittan said.

He stressed that there was no proof of a connection between the airport bombing and the embassy standoff, which began Tuesday when a man shooting from an upper-story window sprayed an anti-Khadafy rally with submachine-gun fire.

The British government has said repeatedly that it wants to question the Libyans inside the embassy and search the building for weapons, accompanied by a Libyan diplomat. Libya is demanding an immediate, unconditional withdrawal of police who have had rifles trained on the building since the shooting.

Since the siege began, a major consideration for Britain has been the safety of the British Embassy staff in Tripoli and the 8,000 other Britons working in Libya. There is the possibility of reprisals by Khadafy if a Libyan is charged with the murder of Miss Fletcher, 25.

But The British press reported police anger and fears of a public backlash if Miss Fletcher's killer walks free. The police were said to believe that letting the Libyans go would jeopardize the credibility of Britain's tough stand against terrorism.

In Tripoli earlier, British Ambassador Oliver Miles described negotiations with the Libyans as "constructive, friendly I would say ... I think there's been a dropping off of tension."

"The building has got to be cleared, and we have got to be satisfied that it doesn't contain anything of danger to the people of London in the future. It's not right that the streets of London should be as they are now in the wake of this incident," he said.

Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher was spending Easter weekend at her Chequers country retreat west of London. Earlier in the day, her spokesman described Libya's latest proposals as "not entirely negative."

But the spokesman, who asked not to be identified, described the government's mood as "one of growing impatience." He said there was "a desire to bring the crisis to a close quickly."

The Libyan news agency JANA described the Miles-Treiki meeting Saturday as having had a "cordial character, emphasizing the anxiety of both countries to do everything to maintain and develop relations beteween them."

On Saturday, reporters were allowed behind the blue plastic sheeting that police installed to block all four entrances to the Libyan Embassy from public view.

In the square, the checkered cap of the slain policewoman lay on the ground. The tall helmets of the bobbies who rushed to her aid — including her fiance Constable Michael Liddle — were nearby.

Four police vans abandoned during the shooting remained in the square. Around it, uniformed officers crouched in doorways and behind trees. Blue-bereted marksmen lay on mattresses on nearby rooftops, their high-powered rifles trained on the building.

Officials in Kuwait, meanwhile, reported they were mediating between the British and Libyan governments to help end the standoff.

her and other employees of the center. "We were out early Friday morning hiding eggs for the children and then we held a short program to explain the significance of Easter to the children before we held the egg hunt."

"I think the whole thing was just as much fun for us as it was for the children," she said. "It was great to watch the kids running around and to hear them talking about the clothes their mommies had brought for them to wear to church Sunday."

Mrs. Nixon said Cornerstone planned to hold a sunrise service along with a number of its sister churches. "I expect there will be about 500 people there," she said.

Merchants reported brisk business as Easter approached.

A Farmville florist said business was good and that corsages and arrangments were high on his list of best sellers. "This is one of the times that people want to remember others. For instance, the people in this little town of Farmville like to remember visits paid, deceased relatives and friends or just buy a corsage for a special lady to wear to church," he said.

A department store manager in Greenville said "plush stuffed animals, ready-made and do it yourself easter baskets, clothing, accessories ... they're all going well."

Shortly before 6 p.m., another travel status bulletin: "He's been spotted passing through Fountain. He's due here in 10 minutes." Within minutes, those who had drifted outside, standing in clusters in the light rainfall, began drifting back inside to take their seats.

Quiet settled down on the restless audience. One or two children were heard whimpering, asking when they would eat supper. Mothers hushed them, promising, "It won't be long now, baby."

Finally, at 6:10 p.m., brisk activity on stage. Jackson, a big smile on his face, came into view through the curtains draping the back of the stage. Magically, restlessness vanished. In it's place, an electric wave of shouted and singing welcome.

Their man, the object of a two-hour wait, the Rev. Jesse Jackson, had arrived.

Area Farmers Honor Jones For Service

KINSTON — A group of farmers from Pitt, Greene and Lenoir counties has presented veteran Rep. Walter B. Jones, a Farmville Democrat who is seeking another term in Congress, a handmade plaque featuring a detailed map of the 1st Congressional District.

The plaque symbolized the farmers' appreciation of Jones' work on their behalf in Washington, according to Buzz Shackelford, a Greene County farmer who helped coordinate an appreciation dinner for Jones held in Kinston Friday night.

The dinner attracted 215 people, most of whom were described as farmers. They heard state Sen. Harold Hardison, the principal speaker, discuss the importance of seniority for members of Congress.

Other speakers included Sam McLawhorn of Grifton, a member of the state Board of Agriculture. Dr. Jess McDaniel, president of Lenoir Community College, served as master of ceremonies.

Collision

Approximately $700 vehicle damage resulted from a collision Friday at the intersection of Reade and Cotanche streets, according to Greenville police records.

The accident occurred when a vehicle driven by Carl Dennis Kratz of Warrenton, Va., collided with a vehicle driven by Deborah Reutter of 217 Woodhaven Road. Estimated damage to the Reutter vehicle was $300, whilce damage to the Kratz vehicle was placed at $400. No injuries were reported and Kratz was charged with a safe movement violation.

Man Burned In Rural Fire

A Route 4, Greenville, man received serious burns Friday night in a fire that caused heavy damage to his residence.

According to Staton House Fire Chief Darrell Williams, firemen found Buster Johnston lying in the front yard of the burning house. Williams said the house was fully involved when fire units arrived, and it appeared the fire may have started in the kitchen area of the wood frame structure.

The official said Johnston had second and third degree burns over a major portion of his body.

Members of the Greenville Rescue squad transported Johnston to Pitt County Memorial Hospital where he was listed in stable condition Saturday night.

The owner of the house was listed as Eula Johnston. Members of the Belvoir Fire Department also assisted the Staton House department in the 9:55 p.m. fire.

In a additional fire Saturday morning Staton House members responded to a call at a house in the Hillsdale area north of Greenville off rural paved road 1401. Firemen said flames were leaping from the rear windows of the structure. Williams said no one was home when the fire apparently started in the bedroom. The house was reportedly occupied by Ruth and George Gorham.

Damage was estimated at $15,000 in the 9:51 a.m. fire.

There were no injuries reported.

Gen Mark Clark: His Death Ends Era Of Giants

Somebody else said it, but it fits the scene: "The last of the giants" of World War II died Wednesday

Retired U.S. Army General Mark W. Clark served his country in three wars as well as many peacetime years ... of which to him the most cherished may have been 11 years as president of The Citadel.

He loved that school with a soldier's heart; giving of himself and his experience toward the equipping of young men with the ideals and responsibilities he had known most of his life. For that he was more than admired and respected. He was loved in return.

Announcement of his death at age 87 included highlights of his military career: wounded in France during World War I, serving during the St. Mihiel and Meuse-Argonne offensives, and later in Belgium and Germany.

In 1942 he, as a major general, slipped into North Africa and through negotiations with the French Army the landings by American troops in that theater were possible. Later, as commander of the 5th Army, he landed in Italy and directed operations expelling the Germans.

Ten years later Gen. Clark was named commander of the United Nations forces in Korea, and on orders from President Eisenhower negotiated an armistice. His medals were many, and honorably earned.

From those of us who remember, as well as from those who came on the scene long after those years of duty and heroics, Mark Clark is entitled to a fervent "well done".

Service League's Donation To PCMH Is Major Item

The Daily Reflector did not err in headlining the Greenville Service League's $191,000 gift to Pitt County Memorial Hospital as a "major gift".

It was large by any standard; and made several times larger by virtue of its source, a group of concerned and dedicated women who raised that sum through their own efforts.

In all, the Service League has donated more than a half-million dollars to the hospital. The most recent contribution was designated for helping equip a new cardiac intensive care unit.

The ladies, most of whom we are sure have domestic resposibilities — and some having business or professional — are to be commended for their unselfish concern.

It has crossed our mind that in so many organizations ... churches, schools, clubs etc. ... fund-raising appears a very special province for a woman's touch.

There are obviously unique talents involved and applied when there are needs to be met.

Ingram Is Unknown Factor

RALEIGH — Talk to active Democrats and you'll hear a lot of different scenarios on the May 8 gubernatorial primary. Almost everyone is picking either Eddie Knox, Lauch Faircloth or Rufus Edmisten now. They comprise what is being called the "upper tier" in the six-way race.

But even the most diehard supporters of those three men add a qualifier to their scenarios. It goes something like this : "Watch out for John Ingram. He's got his people out there and he's going to get his 17 or 20 percent."

Ingram, the state's insurance commissioner, is in fourth place in most of the polls — a postition which doesn't appear to worry his supporters. "Our strength is never reflected in the polls," says his daughter and office manager Gini Abee.

The Ingram troops count on a strong core of support among working people who, Ingram claims, are too busy to be polled. They say that just as he pulled upsets over E.R. Secrest in the 1972 race for commissioner and over Luther Hodges Jr. in the 1978 race for the U.S. Senate nomination, he'll win this nomination in 1984.

While Ingram is the beneficiary of loyal supporters, he also suffers from possibly the strongest opposition any of the six candidates face. To many active party workers, Ingram is the one candidate they cannot support. While his supporters see him as someone who "fights for them," his detractors see him as an ineffective demagogue who exhibits symptoms of paranoia.

Ingram, 54, is a native of Randolph County, where he still votes. He has both his undergraduate and law degrees from UNC-Chapel Hill. He served one term in the state House before winning the first of his three terms as insurance commissioner in 1972. He has run statewide four times which, including primaries, run-offs and general elections, means he's been through nine statewide campaigns, more than the other five candidates combined.

In this campaign, Ingram alone has been able to create a major issue. He is proposing the election of utility commissioners and his five major opponents all oppose the idea. Ingram is also hitting hard at the state's Construction Work in Progress (CWIP) law which allows utilities to recover some construction costs before a facility goes on line.

Asked to answer a lengthy questionnaire on the issues, Ingram refused to stake himself out on many, saying he would put the issues to a vote. For example, Ingram answers a query about possible support for a constitutional amendment banning abortion with a call for a referendum. Similarly, he'd seek a vote on the Equal Rights Amendment, the proposed appointment rather than election of state superintendent of public instruction, the gubernatorial succession amendment and questions of a state lottery — he'd vote against it — and any tax increase. (Since the issues of succession and the superintendent would require constitutional changes, they'd have to be voted upon anyway.)

Sunday Morning Notes

Hugh Winslow spotted a piece of wadded up paper in his yard on Hooker Road the day following the tornados which struck Pitt County and many other areas of North and South Carolina.

He picked it up and smoothed it out. It was a canceled check for $12 signed by Mack Herring and made out to the Mount Olive Rotary Club on Jan. 1, 1977. It represented the January dues to the club.

Winslow has been a Rotarian here since 1936 and he took the check to his club meeting on the Monday following the storm to exhibit to his fellow Rotarians.

He said it is interesting that the check was endorsed by Paul R. Patton, who was then Mount Olive club treasurer. Winslow remembered Patton, who had lived in Greenville when his father was pastor of Jarvis United Methodist Church in the 1920s.

Mount Olive was hard hit by a tornado and it is virtually certain that the canceled check was brought here by the high winds.

Ironically, the winds chose the grounds of a former Rotary Club president here to dump the old check.

Way back when Harry Truman took office as president of the United States — upon the death of Franklin D. Roosevelt, he was little known to the press and to the public.

Roosevelt had dumped Henry Wallace as his vice presidential running mate in 1944 and chose the senator from Missouri. Roosevelt was a giant of a president, presiding as he did over the Depression recovery and the nation's participation in World War II. Thus Truman was even less known than vice presidents of today.

Then, with Roosevelt's death, the man was suddenly president and everyone wanted to know everything about him — like what the "S", his middle initial stood for. It was soon determined that it didn't stand for anything. The "S" was simply put there by his parents because everybody needed a middle initial. It was finally concluded that since the "S" didn't stand for anything the traditional period behind it wasn't needed, and that was the way Harry S Truman was supposed to be written at the time.

Now, however, there is a 20-cent postage stamp out bearing the likeness of Truman. The name, printed alongside, now shows the "S" with the period behind it. So far as we know, however, the "S" still doesn't stand for anything.

Finding Your Way To The Real World

WASHINGTON — The University of Minnesota recently settled a long and drawn-out lawsuit brought by the school's student newspaper. The decision was understandable, but it was regrettable all the same. If the university had kept fighting, the U.S. Supreme Court might have had an opportunity to review a question it has never yet tackled directly: What are the rights of a student editor at a public institution?

The issue bobs up as perennially as the daffodils of spring. In the usual sequence of events, an ultra-liberal student editor publishes material that is obscene, libelous or in grossly bad taste; the university undertakes to punish the editor in some fashion; the editor sues for an injunction to stop the punishment; and the editor wins every time. The legal theory, drawn from the 14th Amendment, is that the state cannot abridge the editor's right to freedom of the press.

The theory strikes me as hogwash, but until the Supreme Court strikes it down, student editors will remain free and irresponsible, the only untouchable editors in the land.

Minnesota's controversy was in the classic tradition. At the end of the 1978-79 school year, The Minnesota Daily produced what may doubtfully be described as a "humor" edition. The 8th U.S. Circuit Court last October summarized the contents in this fashion: The paper satirized Jesus Christ, the Catholic Church, evangelical religion, public figures and ethnic groups. The edition contained scatological language. It had many "explicit and implicit references to sexual acts."

The edition produced a reaction that at first must have delighted the sophomoric editors. The regents found the issue "flagrantly offensive." State legislators and prominent alumni denounced the Daily out of hand. Sensitive and unsophisticated students deeply resented the mockery of their religious beliefs. Some of the offended students raised a pointed question: Why should they be compelled, through student fees, to support a publication they found sacrilegious?

Why indeed? The university's Board of Regents thought it over and concluded that the objecting students had a point. The board then proposed a system by which students, if they wished, could obtain a refund of the $2.56 fee that went to the student paper. The editors then sued the university's president, C. Peter Magrath. Last October, the 8th Circuit restored the nonrefundable fee, and last February the board decided to throw in the sponge. The university will pay $182,000 in legal fees and will contribute $5,000 toward a program that will bring scholars and journalists to the campus to discuss freedom of the press.

The 8th Circuit, following a dozen precedents in the lower federal courts, held that a public university may not constitutionally take adverse action against a student newspaper, such as reducing the paper's funding, because it disapproves of the paper's content. The court was satisfied that the refund system was intended as a punitive measure, and President Magrath in effect conceded as much. His thought was that the threatened loss of income would promote responsible journalism. What it did, said the court, was to have a "chilling effect" on the young editors at the Daily.

As I see it, these hotheaded infants richly deserved to be "chilled." Under the Constitution, student editors have a right to freedom of the press. All of us have the right. But they have no constitutional right to be free with someone else's press, and that is the situation here. The editors did not found The Minnesota Daily.

Public Forum

To the editor:

The March 15, 1984, issue of "The Washington Spectator" presents some bothersome facts about the Cold War mentality and its effects upon domestic programs. Editor Tristram Coffin explains that it was Winston Churchill's "passionate dislike of the Soviet state" which ultimately influenced President Harry Truman to set up the U.S. as international policeman, peace-keeper, etc.

Adm. Gene LaRoque (USN, Ret.), is quoted regarding the $3 trillion lavished on the Pentagon as a consequence of the Cold War views: it has "given us 10 years of conflict in Vietnam (and) an escalating military invovement in Central America, made big business out of preparing for war in peacetime, and (brought us) closer to the brink of nuclear war ..."

Meanwhile, poor Fulton, Missouri, school children need $25 a month scholarships to be able to stay in school; in Phoenix a 14-year-old dies while state and hospital officials haggle over the costs of a needed operation. And the average of all public school teachers' pay is reported to be about the same as that of a green second lieutenant, with perks.

Somewhere in all of this, one is inclined to inquire, "What really is the American Way?" While we prepare to arm outer space, the federal administration rejecdts many of the proposals of it own President's Commission on Excellence in Education, some states (by virtue of high unemployment) are forced to reduce outlays for education, and the federal administration would like to leave education's funding to state and local governments.

To the editor:

Spring fever is everywhere! The sound of lawn mowers fills the air and folks are digging over their gardens and planting is begun. The plant nurseries are crowded with excited buyers of colorful plants to be taken home, nurtured and cared for and, not least of all, to enhance the home and yard. Then the neighbors will say, "See what a pretty yard They have!"

Yes, spring brings new life! However, while rebirth should be a happy occasion, Humane Society volunteers and animal control officers in Pitt County know that it won't be for thousands of puppies and kittens that will never have a healthy, happy home. The problem can only be solved when pet owners have their pets spayed or neutered.,

The Humane Society of the United States has asked us to tell you that "it is wrong to allow females 'one heat' or 'one litter' before being spayed. Neutered males will have less desire to roam and will be less aggressive, more gentle. The operation won't change the dog's or cat's basic personality either. Ideally, animals should be altered when they are still young."

Pet owners this spring should make a real commitment to their animals. First off, visit the veterinarian for all necessary shots. Arm yourself with expert information on the care and protection of your pet or write to the Pitt County Humane Society for a copy of our "Survival Kit." Just send your address, and a donation, if you will, to P.O. Box 8121, Greenville, N.C. 27835-8121.

The foster homes of the local Humane Society are full of cats and dogs of all ages and beeds, all looking for a good home. They are free for addoption, although a donation to help offset whatever medical expenses they have already incurred, is asked of the new owner. Such a little to ask for a lot of love. And when yoou take your new bit of "spring fever" home with you from wherever, make it so that the neighbors will say, "See what a well-behaved pet they have!" Remember, we're not talking petunias!"

To the editor:

I am angry! We have lived here for one year annd during that time we have seen several accidents occur at the corner of Fourth and Summit streets, which could easily have been prevented by a traffic light.

Why isn't something done? How many of our students have to be hurt or killed before something is done about it? Why should a street be "one way" on only part of the street? Our neighbors who have lived here two years have written and complained to no avail.

We have just taken into our apartment a young girl who was involved in an accident. Her parents are upset. We're upset and she is hurt.

Somebody please listen! I intend to write and write until somebody does. Do something about this dangerous intersection before something happens that Greenville will be a long time forgetting.

I'm concerned about the students of this community. I'd like to see them live. I am angry! I happen to love kids!

To the editor:

Since I have not seen any of our Alaska crew in years, I have the duty to tell you that you are wrong in stating that the use of chemical weapons was not resorted to in World War II.

The Japanese issued poison gas (cyanide) grenades to their troops on Kodiak and Attu Island in the Aleutians during World War II. When we came in to dig them out with the bayonets, they used 'em. It was a big war and these were little islands, population today less than Greenville's. CBS News (7 o'clock) April 16 made the same boo boo. But this is your boo boo. I think you will want to check and correct.

Reagan Hints At Tax Cut

WASHINGTON — Tucked away — and largely overlooked — in a speech by President Reagan to New York state's Catholic school parents April 5 was a hint of a possible massive election-year tax cut for the traditional American family.

For the first time, the president pointed out that tax laws have discriminated against American families since the 1940s by an effectively lowered exemption for dependents. He attacked "a tax system that excessively burdens the family and actually discriminates against ... family values."

Then, in the next breath, he informed his New York City audience that he had ordered the Treasury to come up with recommendations "to make your taxes more simple, fair, for families and for all Americans." Back in Washington, that gave hope to Reagan administration officials who have been waging an uphill fight for bigger tax allowances for dependents.

The stakes involved in that fight are immense: the Reagan re-election campaign's strategy, economic policy in a Reagan second term and the outcome of the struggle between the Republican Party's elitist and populist wings.

The conventional wisdom in the financial community, widely shared in the Treasury and elsewhere in the administration, has been the need after the 1984 election for a consumption-based tax system. Either through a national sales tax, new investment incentives or a combination of both, the individual's discretionary spending would be channeled out of consumption and into savings.

But what about ordinary, working heads of families who lack discretionary income? Populist Republicans fear that consumption-based taxes will only aggrevate the havoc already wreaeked on the American family by the Internal Revenue Code and incidentally confirm the GOP's image as the Rich Man's Party.

In his April 5 speech, Reagan noted that the $600 exemption set in the 1940s for each dependent (it is now $1,000) would be more than $3,000 if it had been indexed for inflation during the past 40 years. In fact, as a share of per capita income, the exemption would be $5,600 today.

The tax system's bias against the family derives mainly from mindless government acquiescence to inflation. But in part it reflects the economic theory, shared by key professionals at the Treasury, that children represent "consumption" items and should be treated as such for tax purposes.

This anti-family mindset has been battled from the White House policy office by Bruce Chapman, who as census director in the Reagan administration's early years became attuned to what the government has done to the family. A founder of the liberal Republican Ripon Society, he has emerged inside the administration as a champion of the family.

Chapman runs up against the numbers: To double the dependents exemption to $2,000 will shoot a huge (perhaps more than $200 billion) hole in Treasury revenues. Thus, it must fit into an overall tax "simplification" package that generates additional revenue by broadening the tax base.

But Chapman is not alone. Rep. Jack Kemp's flat tax bill doubles the exemption, a proposal where supply-side economic conservatives and New Right social conservatives converge.

Americans For France

During two years of combat in World War I, including service with the French Foreign Legion in trench warfare on the Western Front and later as a pilot with the legendary Lafayette Escadrille, Kiffin Rockwell became something of a fatalist.

"From the time a man enters the army he should consider himself as good as dead," the Asheville man once wrote, "then every day of life is just that much gained."

On Aug. 3, 1914, the day Germany declared war on France, Rockwell had become the first American to offer his services on the side of the embattled French.

"I am very anxious to see military service, and had rather fight under the French flag than any other, as I greatly admire your nation," the 22-year-old youth said in a letter to the French counsul at New Orleans.

"I do not consider that I am fighting for France alone, but for the cause of humanity, the most noble of all causes," Rockwell later wrote his mother. It all sounds very idealistic now, but it should be remembered that Rockwell belonged to a generation whose ideals had not been tempered by four global conflicts or by the threat of nuclear destruction.

Kiffin Rockwell was born in Newport, Tenn., on Sept. 20, 1892, but his mother moved to Asheville with her two sons and a daughter after the death of her husband, a Baptist minister. She became a successful osteopathic physician while her children attended school. A teacher at the Orange Street School remembered Rockwell as "a handsome, intelligent, chivalrous boy of 15, immaculate in person as in honor, impatient in the tedium of school routine, restive, though ever courteous under restraint; with serious deep-set, gray-blue eyes aglow with enthusiasm over tales of daring adventure breaking rarely into a surprising light of merriment."

Young Rockwell definitely was not a student. He enrolled first at Virginia Military Institute but quit after obtaining an appointment to the U.S. Naval Academy at Annapolis. He resigned there to enroll at Washington and Lee University, which has honored him with a memorial plaque in its Robert E. Lee Chapel. He left college without graduating and was working in the advertising business when World War I broke out and he volunteered.

Accompanied by his brother Paul, who had attended Wake Forest and Washington and Lee, Rockwell sailed for Europe late in 1914, where the two enrolled in the French Foreign Legion. The salary was definitely not an enticement, for they were paid one cent per day.

After brief training and service in the trenches along the Aisne River and near Rheims, Kiffin Rockwell took part in the First Foreign Legion Regiment's attack against Vimy Ridge in May 1915. Of the 4,000 men who participated in this attack only 1,700 came out alive. Kiffin was wounded in the thigh in the storming of Newville-Saint Vaast.

Although Kiffin's wound was not treated for four days, he considered himself fortunate. He wrote his mother, "It is only the pieces of shell and the poisonous gases that we are afraid of. The only rest one gets is when he is wounded; so it was really rather welcomed by me."

But the injury to his leg made it impossible for Kiffin to continue to march with the Foreign Legion, so he requested a tranfer to the French Army Aviation Corps. After aviation training, Kiffin received his flying brevet in November 1915, in time to become one of the organizers of the Lafayette Escadrille, a group of Americans fighting for France. The escadrille was assigned to protect French bombardment squadrons which were bombing German munitions factories.

By early September, Rockwell had participated in 141 aerial combats. He was credited with downing three enemy planes and with seven other probables. But on Sept. 23, 1916, Rockwell's string ran out. While flying at 12,000 feet, he dived to attack an enemy plane and was struck in the chest by an explosive bullet. His plane crashed, and he was buried — as he requested — where he fell.

Nixon Interviews Fall Short Of Worst

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Richard Nixon still doesn't seem to understand.

He now is telling us (on CBS in three installments for a reported $500,000) that the Watergate break-in was wrong and stupid and the effort to cover it up was even worse. He says giving up the presidency was the most profound way he could have said he was sorry.

Not quite. After 11 years, Nixon apparently still doesn't see what the worst part of Watergate was.

It is not that he and his agents broke the law and got caught because they weren't clever enough to get away with it. That is like relegating what happened in Watergate to the status of a technical violation of the tax code or a speeding violation. It trivializes the real crime of Watergate.

What Nixon did and cannot admit is that he hurt his country as surely and perhaps more seriously than the spy who sells military secrets to an enemy.

He and his people hurt the country by contributing to the decline of the idealism that Americans still have about their country and their system of governing themselves. The pervasive cynicism that underlay the entire Watergate episode was a sneering denial of some of the basic values of American life.

It is easy to point out that the ideals of fair play, equality before the law and the trust conferred on those who are given public office frequently are violated in this country.

But most Americans believe these values are worth striving for and are part of what makes the United States the best country in the world. To them, these and other "naive" ideas are what separate this country from the corrosive corruption that afflicts many older and more "sophisticated" nations.

For the man entrusted with the highest office the people can confer to wipe his feet on these ideals in the name of political expediency is a crime far worse than burglary or conspiracy to conceal a crime. It is the murder of a dream that sustains a national purpose.

Nixon twice took an oath to "preserve, protect and defend the Constitution." Then he and people acting his name trampled on the Constitution and the laws that are based on it. They made a mockery of the proposition that all of us, presidents and paupers, must live by the same basic rules of conduct. They put themselves above the law.

Fascist and communist dictators do that. Kings, claiming they have a divine right to rule, do that. Americans trust that their presidents won't do that and won't allow the people who work for them to do that.

But in his most recent public utterances, this former president of the United States does not speak of values or ideals or trust. He tells us only, in effect, "I broke the law. I got caught. I paid the penalty. I owe no more."

It is possible that Richard Nixon can pay no more because he does not and cannot understand what it is he did. That indeed would be a tragedy, in human terms perhaps the saddest of the whole sorry affair.

Clothes Can Make The Interview, Some Say

WASHINGTON — Whatever your age, please take 30 seconds to complete the following true-false test. Your answers could determine your success in the job market.

Pencils ready? Begin now.

(a) A job applicant should always carry a gold or silver pen to an interview because it's an unobtrusive way to display one's professionalism.

(b) Brown is an unacceptable color for an man's suit.

(c) Every suit should be aired out for 24 hours before it's placed back in the closet so its natural fibers may regain their shape.

(d) Do not wear any fragrance to business meetings since it can bring on a strong negative emotional reaction in people.

(e) In the business world, one's shoe color should never be lighter than the color of one's hemline.

Pencils down, please.

If you answered every question with "true," you may have an edge in one of the increasingly emphasized categories of job competition: personal appearance. But if you answered some incorrectly, don't feel resigned to a life as a hamburger chef. Anyone who believes their occupational fate is tied to, among other things, the color of their shoes, probably won't amount to much in the long run.

Like the drought-stricken town that turned to a traveling medicine man for rain, young adults are sufficiently desperate in today's job market to believe that dress may be the answer. "I don't think you could get a job with a tie, but I'm sure you could lose a job with the wrong tie," a Yale University senior told The New York Times last February. Alas, even the smart ones hanker for snake oil.

Increasing numbers of aspiring professionals and college students are turning to fashion magazines and how-to books for tips. Magazines such as Gentleman's Quarterly, M, Glamour, Harper's Bazaar and many others enjoy booming circulations at present. Meanwhile, at least five book publishers plan to release their entries in the dress-for-success category by next winter.

The first of this latter grouping is "The Professional Image" (Putnam, $16.95) by Susan Bixler, a consultant to corporations on employee dress. Bixler contends that the right image for the '80s is totally different from the dark suit/white shirt look of the '70s. Meticulous attention to a winning mixture of detail (the right belt, gloves, hats, hosiery, briefcases, jewelry, etc.) and color is what's required in this decade.

In her book, Bixler suggests wardrobes for men and women (along with tips on color, fabric and styling) as well as grooming techniques.

Trouser cuffs are fine on tweed and herringbone, but not on pinstrip or dark suits.

Facial hair is out. Men look younger, more efficient and more businesslike if they're clean-shaven (watch for those nose hairs, please).

Gray is a good color for suits, skirts, blazers and blouses, but inappropriate for a briefcase.

Upgrade your wardrobe inexpensively by investing in four or five good quality silk ties.

Don't wear a new, untried outfit on an important occasion.

Never buy anything until you have checked the fit in a three-way mirror.

Bixler says acquiring a professional image is the most "obtainable of all business skills." While it won't guarantee you a job, she suggests, it could mean the difference between being rejected on the spot or not advancing within a company as fast as the Gucci crowd.

For first-time job seekers, particularly students, Bixler recommends that they "beg, borrow and steal ... to do whatever you can do to present yourself at your very best level." This might include a group of students purchasing one appropriate briefcase, a tie and gold pen for "the interview." She also advises students to practice their handshake and test themselves before a video camera.

Those aspiring to "make it" in the professional world, according to Bixler, should invest an initial $3,000 in a basic wardrobe (men should have five suits but can get by with two, and three jackets and three pairs of trousers; women need two suits, three dresses). But a complete wardrobe also requires $300 to $1,000 worth of upkeep per year.

Bixler admits that "it's a shallow and unfair system ... but that's the way it is." She says there's hope for people like us, who air their clothes by leaving them on the floor — if we spend money.

One can only wonder the extend to which Japan would grow if it acquired some of America's latest business priorities. Maybe we should send them Susan Bixler. It might even do us some good.

By GEORGETTE F. HEDRICK
ECU Medical Writer

A new unit has been created at the East Carolina University School of Medicine to centralize sophisticated laboratory equipment and provide faculty researchers with access to advanced research technology.

It's called the Shared Research Resources Laboratories, and as the name implies, it was established so researchers could share certain types of equipment which might otherwise be unavailable locally or regionally or too expensive for individual investigators to purchase through grants or departmental funds.

The administrator for the SRRL is Dr. Robert G. Crounse, a physician who is an experienced research scientist and medical school administrator. Crounse, who joined the medical school faculty in 1980, was recently named associate dean in the school's administration.

Working with Crounse on the SRRL staff is Dr. John T. Bray, who serves as director of the laboratories, and Dr. Paul Fletcher. Bray previously held an appointment in the department of surgery and Fletcher in the department of microbiology.

"We believe the Shared Research Resources Laboratories will greatly enhance the research capabilities of the school of medicine by supporting current faculty projects and spurring research in new directions," said Crounse.

"Investigations in many areas now are limited by the high cost of technology needed to support experimentation. Increased competition for research dollars has limited grant funding for major equipment, and department chairmen here at the medical school must carefully allocate state dollars in their budgets," Crounse said.

He said the laboratories will also be an attractive support service for the medical school in its recruitment of new faculty.

The idea for a central laboratory for major instrumentation really began to take off this winter when Kevex Corp. of California donated an Ultra-Trace 0600 analytical system to the school of medicine. A sophisticated electronic device, the Ultra-Trace 0600 has analytical capabilities that are need by a number of faculty members for their individual projects.

By housing the equipment in a central lab, Crounse said researchers from the medical school and university will have access to this expensive technology.

He said arrangements have also been made to centralize certain major equipment located in the medical school's surgery and microbiology departments.

Being ordered for the new laboratories is a cell flow cytometer/cell sorter that will enable ECU investigators to separate and study for the first time certain types of related cells. A large scale fermenter essential for advanced projects in biotechnology research is also in order.

The inclusion of mass spectrometry and nuclear magnetic resonance are under consideration, he said.

In addition to consolidating instrumentation, Crounse said another benefit of the SRRL is that it will free faculty investigators from the burden of maintaining and operating equipment that is extremly complicated and sensitive.

"The laboratories' faculty, research assistants and technicians will be responsible not only for conducting experiments," Crounse said, "but also ensuring that equipment is properly serviced and maintained.

Labor Hopefuls Butt Heads

Sen. Richard Barnes, D-Forsyth, a candidate for labor commissioner, says incumbent John Brooks is out of touch with laborers. But Brooks says Barnes has added to labor problems by failing to support Labor Department legislation.

In a public television debate filmed Friday at North Carolina State University in Raleigh, Barnes said Brooks "promotes conflict when there should be compromise and certainly the people of North Carolina are the ones who are affected by that."

Brooks, seeking his third term, said Barnes failed to help the Labor Department get money for its $11 million budget.

"I've written Mr. Barnes a number of letters seeking his assistance in getting the funds needed for vocational education in North Carolina, but I'm sorry to say that his record shows he did not vote for it," said Brooks.

Barnes, a business development officer, responded that Brooks has never asked him for the money and has never come to his legislative office.

The exchange between Barnes and Brooks left a third hopeful, Don Wiseman of Cary, with the role of a passive onlooker for much of the debate.

Barnes promised that if elected, his first priority would be to improve the state's Occupational Safety and Health Division so that it would get federal certification.

Brooks defended North Carolina's OSHA program as "the foremost occupational safety and health program in America today." But he said Barnes and other legislators were at fault for refusing to fund additional inspectors and industrial hygienists needed to meet federal standards.

Barnes, who has the endorsement of the state AFL-CIO and the N.C. Association of Educators, called for better treatment of migrant workers.

"I will not condone slavery in the state of North Carolina," he said. "I don't mean that farmers need to go out there and build Hiltons for the migrant workers but that they treat them like human beings."

Barnes, like Brooks, supports regulations requiring farmers to provide adequate drinking water and portable toilets for field workers. Brooks said the state has made improvements for migrant workers.

In other political news, Ed Turlington, state coordinator for Walter Mondale's presidential campaign, confirmed that the former vice president will campaign in North Carolina next week.

"It is in cement that he is going to be in North Carolina next Wednesday," said Turlington. He said it hadn't been decided where in the state Mondale would go.

In the wake of visits by Democratic presidential hopefuls Gary Hart and the Rev. Jesse Jackson, Sen. John East, R.N.C., said Jackson's campaign was "overtly racist" and divisive.

"That campaign has an anti-Semitic — and by that I mean anti-Jewish — cast to it ad ought to be condemned," East said Friday.

East also criticized Jackson for saying he would seek to phase out the federal tobacco program that provides price supports and production controls.

Meanwhile, Lt. Gov. Jimmy Green dismissed as "propaganda" polls that show him trailing in the Democratic race for governor and insisted he is the front-runner among the 10 candidates.

"I don't believe at any time that any poll with any credibility has shown Jimmy Green trailing anybody," he said Friday in Asheville. "I think I'm ahead."

Green criticized opponents for paying for polls and hinted that the buyer gets the results he wants. "We didn't want to waste money trying to win this as a propaganda war," he said.

Recent polls conducted both by candidates and by North Carolina newspapers and independent pollsters have shown Green in a second, three-man tie behind behind Democrats Eddie Knox, D.M. "Lauch" Faircloth and Rufus Edmisten.

Gov. Jim Hunt denied Friday that his political organization had any involvement with the alleged theft of documents from accountants for Jefferson Marketing, the firm that handles political advertising and mailings for Sen. Jesse Helms.

Two Raleigh newspapers reported this week that in 1982, Jefferson Marketing wrote off $96,568 in campaign debts owed by two statewide Republican candidates in exchange for their mailing lists. Jefferson Marketing said documents detailing the alleged writeoffs were stolen from its accounting firm.

"Did The News and Observer receive these documents from a political agent? From Jim Hunt's campaign?" asked Jefferson's president, Douglas Davidson, in a statement.

Hunt said in a news conference that he had seen "no indication whatsoever that we've had anything to do with it."

Quakes Hit California

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — A series of small earthquakes hit two areas of Southern California Saturday, jostling coastal residents but causing no damage or injuries, authorities said.

An earthquake centered one mile east of Huntington Beach struck at 3:58 a.m. and registered 2.8 on the Richter scale, said Dennis Meredith, spokesman for the California Institute of Technology in Pasadena.

The quake, located about 35 miles south of Los Angeles, prompted phone calls to police, but caused no injuries or damage.

"I received one call from someone who wanted to know if we had an earthquake, but I didn't feel it, so I said 'no,'" Huntington Beach police spokeswoman Sue Murphy said.

A Costa Mesa police spokesman said the department had received several calls from people who felt the quake. Costa Mesa is located about 38 miles south of Los Angeles.

Meredith said there also had been about a dozen offshore earthquakes near Santa Barbara, located on the coast about 85 miles northwest of Los Angeles.

The earthquakes, the largest of which measured 3.2 on the Richter scale, occurred between Friday and Saturday afternoons and were centered about eight miles southwest of Santa Barbara, Meredith said.

A Santa Barbara Police Sgt. Leonard Paredes said the department received several inquiries about the earthquakes, but no reports of injury or damage.

The Richter scale is a measure of ground motion as recorded on seismographs. An earthquake of 3.5 on the Richter scale can cause slight damage in a local area.

The 1964 Alaska quake that killed 131 people measured 8.4 on the Richter scale, while the San Francisco earthquake of 1906 was estimated to register 8.3.

Hart Has Primary Numbers, But Lags In Delegates

WASHINGTON (AP) — Gary Hart has fared far better at the ballot box than in the delegate count in his bid to defeat Walter F. Mondale for the Democratic presidential nomination.

If the delegates had been meted out simply by the votes cast in primaries to date, the race between the Colorado senator, the former vice president and the Rev. Jesse Jackson would be a lot closer than it stands today.

The latest Associated Press delegate count shows Mondale with 1,128.8 delegates, or 57 percent of the 1,967 he needs to snare the nomination at the Democratic National Convention in San Francisco in July.

Hart has captured 626, Jackson has 167.2, and 318 of the delegates chosen to date are uncommitted or backing favorite sons or candidates who have already pulled out of the race.

Mondale has won slightly more than 50 percent of the 2,239 delegates chosen to date in 37 primaries and caucuses and from the ranks of elected and party officials; Hart has 28 percent; Jackson 7, and the rest are uncommitted or backing others.

Even without counting votes he may capture from that uncommitted block, Mondale need only win 49 percent of the 1,694 yet to be chosen in 20 primaries and caucuses to be virtually assured of a first ballot victory.

Simply looking at the votes cast in primary states depicts a much closer race.

According to a tally by Congressional Quarterly, some 8.6 million Democrats voted in primaries through April 10, when Mondale trounced Hart in Pennsylvania and harvested 124 of the available delegates to Hart's 20 and Jackson's one.

Mondale got 711,830 votes in Pennsylvania, or 47 percent, to Hart's 529,198, or 35 percent. That gave Mondale 3.4 million, or 39 percent, of all the votes cast in the Democratic primaries to that point, compared to Hart's 3 million, or 35 percent, and Jackson's 1.4 million, or 17 percent.

Democratic officials caution against juxtaposing the popular votes with the delegate count. It leads to comparisons of apples and oranges, says Louise Lindblom, the Democratic National Committee's rules expert.

"You have to look at every state individually. Every system is different," she said, adding that a candidate's performance in individual congressional districts is more important in figuring his delegate tally than his cumulative vote statewide.

For instance, she cited Alabama, where Mondale won the March 13 primary with 144,000 votes, or 34 percent, but wound up with half the pledged delegates. Sen. John Glenn of Ohio finished second, Hart third and Jackson fourth, but Jackson won nine delegates to Glenn's five.

"Why did Jackson get more for fourth than Glenn for second? Because Jackson came out on top in two of the seven different (district) races," she said.

Pope Says Vigil Mass At Vatican

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Pope John Paul II, breaking with tradition, said the Easter Vigil Mass in St. Peter's Square Saturday before tens of thousands of pilgrims on a chilly star-lit night.

The Easter Eve Mass traditionally is held in St. Peter's Basilica but was moved outdoors to the huge square for the first time ever to accommodate the crowds that have flocked to Rome for the closing of the Extraordinary Holy Year of Redemption.

"Oh, truly blessed night! Oh, night you have once and for all revealed the power and the force of Christ crucified, the power and the force of the Redeemer of the World," the pope said in his sermon. "Jesus Christ lives and we live in Christ."

The 63-year-old pontiff spoke from a platform in front of the Basilica as temperatures dipped into the low 40s.

The spiritual leader of the world's more than 790 million Roman Catholics changed from his purple mourning robes to joyful white vestments to celebrate the resurrection of Jesus Christ.

He began the ceremony by lighting a long white candle, symbolizing Christ as the light to the world, and leading a procession of cardinals and bishops to the altar from the obelisk in the center of the square, bathed in light and decorated with white lilies.

A chorus sang "Gloria."

Later, the city of Rome resounded with the ringing of bells at more than 500 churches, following the booming lead of the 10-ton "Campanone," the master bell of St. Peter's.

The pope had baptized 29 adults earlier Saturday, and he spoke to them in his sermon: "You come from nine countries, some close and some far away geographically, but all equally dear to my heart."

The newly baptized came from Japan, South Korea, Czechoslovakia, Kenya, Ghana, Egypt, the Netherlands, France and Italy.

Speaking to about 1,000 Polish pilgrims Saturday morning, the pontiff issued strong support for the now-outlawed independent Polish trade union Solidarity in his native country.

"The gains made during the 1980s must be respected. They can't be wiped out and they can't be diminished," John Paul said.

"One must look with respect on this great force of Polish spirit which, under the name Solidarity, has gained the esteem of so much of the world."

More than 250,000 pilgrims are expected to pack St. Peter's Square for the pontiff's Easter Sunday Mass at mid-morning. It will be followed by the traditional address "Urbi et Orbi" — To the City of Rome and the World — and the closing of the Holy Year of Redemption.

To Deliver Boy's Tape To Reagan

DENVER (AP) — A tape recording by a 12-year-old boy asking President Reagan for help in a bitter custody dispute between his homosexual father and fundamentalist mother will be hand-delivered to the president after a copy sent by mail got lost, a minister says.

The Rev. Maurice Gordon, minister of the Lovingway United Pentecostal Church, said Friday he hopes to find a courier to hand-deliver a duplicate tape by Brian Batey to the president.

"(The original tape has) probably been confiscated because on the outside of the envelope there was a note ... that would capture the attention of someone who could conceivably ... snatch it and toss it in the trash," Gordon said.

The typed message on the outside of the envelope said, "This letter is from the son of the homosexual father and Pentecostal mother and is very urgent because my mom is in jail."

The boy's mother, Betty Batey, is in the Denver jail for refusing to reveal her son's whereabouts. She says Brian doesn't want to live with his father and went into hiding when she turned herself in to the FBI on April 4.

Frank Batey, the boy's father and an avowed homosexual, was awarded legal custody of the boy in 1982, but he has not seen his son since he disappeared with his ex-wife 18 months ago.

Gordon says Ms. Batey lost custody of Brian in California when she refused to let her ex-husband see the boy for 10 months. Batey's Colorado attorney, Thomas Gillooly, however, said other factors probably were involved as well in the decision to award custody to Batey.

Brian sent the tape recording to the president about a week ago and at the same time sent transcripts to the news media. In essence, the tape said Brian did not wish under any circumstances to return to the custody of his father.

Pair Held In Deaths

WILMINGTON, Ohio (AP) — Two men were arrested Saturday, one after briefly holding relatives hostage, in the slayings of a couple and their teen-age son at their rural home, said Clinton County Sheriff Patrick Haley.

Donald Danes and his wife Karen, both 39, and their son Rodney, 15, were found the morning of March 29, stabbed and beaten. The couple's 5-year-old daughter Lisa apparently slept through the killings and was found unharmed.

Haley said the names of the two arrested Saturday would not be released until Monday, but said they are both from adjoining Brown County. He said they were being held pending formal charges by prosecutor Ronald Carey.

They were arrested at their homes, Haley said. There was "a minor incident" when one "kept some members of his family hostage," but later released them unharmed, he said.

The three victims lived at Lees Creek, about 15 miles from Wilmington.

Danes, a salesman for the Mac Tool Co., was found in his truck, which was parked in the driveway. The doors were locked and the key was in the ignition, Haley said at the time. The battery was dead but neighbors said they had seen the truck's lights on.

His wife's body was found fully clothed in a locked bathroom and the teen-ager's body, clad in underwear, was found on the floor of his bedroom, Haley said earlier. It was not clear if the bathroom door was locked from the outside or inside.

The boy's feet and hands were bound with cord. Mrs. Danes was not bound but a cord was found beside her, he said.

Lisa was found by a neighbor who went to the house the morning after the killings.

Sandra Sheley, who stopped by to pick up Rodney to take him to school, said Lisa answered the door and seemed confused when asked where her parents were.

When asked about Rodny, Mrs. Sheley said, Lisa replied that he was in his room, which was "a mess." Mrs. Sheley found Rodney's body, took Lisa to her house and called police.

Haley said earlier in his investigation that he was unable to find a motive or signs of forced entry. He said the house was not ransacked although relatives said some guns may be missing.

Soviets Get Missile Data

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Soviet bloc agents received key summaries of multibillion dollar research in U.S. missile defense systems in a case that led to a Silicon Valley engineer's guilty plea to espionage charges, a newspaper reported.

James D. Harper Jr., 49, whom federal investigators said was paid at least $250,000 for delivering thousands of documents to Polish agents in Warsaw in 1980, entered the plea Monday in U.S. District Court and will be sentenced May 14.

The San Francisco Examiner in its Sunday editions quoted an unnamed industry expert involved in the development of missile defenses as saying that the stolen documents were carefully selected summaries of more than a decade of research into anti-missile weaponry.

The information provides Soviet scientists "an excellent leg up" on research ranging from radar design to missile tracking systems, according to the newspaper's source. "It gives the Soviets guidance for their research and development and could save them an incredible amount of money."

The newspaper's source reached the conclusion after seeing a list of the documents.

But Jack Ruina, a professor of electrical engineering at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, said the missile defense concepts described "are passe," although references to technical details in the papers "might be quite sensitive."

Although the listed documents describe research into projects that had not reached the construction stage, the expert said they provided:

—Descriptions of sighting systems, lasers, sensors and, in one case, details of one of the most sophisticated radar systems ever designed, according to the defense systems expert.

—A thorough, technical description of an experiment to shoot down approaching missiles as they travel outside the atmosphere. The U.S. Army venture, called Homing Overlay Experiment, still is being conducted, said Ed Vaughn, a spokesman for the Army's Ballistic Missile Defense research office in Huntsville, Ala.

—The executive summary of a U.S. Army study in the 1970s to devise a nationwide system to defend against a relatively light attack. The Light Area Defense Study was so politically sensitive that reports about it were never widely circulated in the defense community, the industry expert said.

Hunt, Helms In Close Race

By MARY ANNE RHYNE
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., is believing in political polls now that they show him tied with or slightly ahead of Democratic Gov. Jim Hunt in their Senate battle.

"We never were as far behind as some of the polls showed at one time," Helms said.

"We have a lead in the race," Hunt said. "The question is how great the lead is."

The highly visible race is an expensive project for both candidates. The latest campaign reports show the candidates had raised $9.6 million three weeks before the May 8 primary. Because neither Hunt nor Helms faces strong primary opposition, they are concentrating on the Nov. 6 election.

Hunt raised nearly $1.7 million in the first three months of 1984, about $200,000 more than he collected in all of 1983.

Helms raised $2 million in the first quarter of this year. Last year, Helms reported $4.4 million in contributions.

Hunt's report showed contributions from North Carolinians as well as well-known performers. Film stars Paul Newman, Joanne Woodward and Barbra Streisand each gave $1,000. Television producer Norman Lear gave $2,000. Comedian Woody Allen contributed $250, as did Marlo Thomas and Joel Gray.

Other well-known contributors to the Hunt treasury include former Secretary of State Cyrus Vance, $500; New York Times publisher Arthur Sulzberger, $250; Park Broadcasting Co. chief executive officer Roy H. Park, $2,000, and chairman of the Duke Foundation, Angier Biddle Duke, $1,000.

Helms' fund raising report shows cowboy star Gene Autry of Hollywood, Calif., contributing $1,000, and Ellin Berlin, wife of New York City composer Irving Berlin, giving $1,500. North Carolina and out-of-state businessmen, housewives and farmers gave Helms contributions in the $1,000-and-over range.

Helms and Hunt face opposition in the primary from little known candidates. Republican George Wimbush of Charlotte, who says Helms does not represent the majority of GOP voters, and Democrats Harrill Jones of Gastonia, a civil rights activist, and Tom Allred of Greensboro, a vocal supporter of presidential candidate Lyndon LaRouche.

The November ballot would be the second on which Hunt and Helms have appeared together. In 1972, Hunt was elected lieutenant governor and Helms became the state's first Republican senator in 70 years. Hunt outpolled Helms by 17,354 votes.

A number of surveys have tried to predict the outcome of a Helms-Hunt race in November:

— A Charlotte Observer poll in February showed Hunt with 46 percent and Helms with 42 percent of the vote. In June 1983, an Observer poll showed Hunt with 50 percent and Helms with 31 percent.

— The University of North Carolina has shown Hunt leading Helms since the school began polling on the U.S. Senate race in 1981. In March, the poll showed the gap has closed to Hunt with 47 percent of the vote and Helms with 45 percent.

— A survey by professional pollster Walter DeVries of Wilmington shows Hunt and Helms switched places between January and March. Hunt had 50.9 percent of the vote and Helms had 49.1 percent in January but Helms had 50.9 percent and Hunt had 49.1 percent in March.

"It obviously signals the movement and momentum is in our court," Claude Allen of the Helms' for Senate Committee said. "It is still an uphill battle and we're not getting overconfident."

"It is neck and neck, nip and tuck," said Hunt's campaign director Joseph Grimsley. "It depends how much TV you've got on whether he's got a point or two."

Grimsley argues that votes bought with advertising are subject to change with the next commercial. He says Hunt must time his advertising for the most crucial moments, especially in light of Helms' 2-to-1 lead in fundraising.

Helms reported Tuesday that he's raised a total of $6.4 million compared to Hunt's $3.1 million.

"It's a game of nerves," Grimsey said. "It takes nerves to hold back on resources until you can apply them to the general election. There is no vote for Jim Hunt or Jesse Helms in May."

"It's going to be close and go right down to the wire," Hunt said. "If we can keep this race close as we head into the fall when spending will be more nearly even, then we are going to win."

Helms' advertising attempts to portray Hunt as being too much of a politician and unwilling to take a stand. It tries to link Hunt with big-spending policies and liberal Democrats.

Hunt's commercials try to point out discrepancies in Helms' Senate record and claim Hunt can do a better job by working with other lawmakers.

Helms criticizes Hunt for not taking stronger stands on issues or for taking inconsistent stands.

"It takes more than press releases and promises," Helms said. "It takes some courage and some forthrightness."

When Hunt traveled to Oklahoma, Texas, New York, Arizona and California in recent months to seek contributions he drew fire from Helms.

Hunt has criticized Helms for relying on direct mail to finance his campaign with out-of-state money. Helms retaliated with a series of commercials asking why Hunt made such statements and then established a New York Committee to Elect Jim Hunt.

The Helms committee also sought to portray Hunt as a fence straddler after a February meeting of the National Governors Association.

Hunt supported the governors' proposal to increase taxes and cut the defense budget in an attempt to reduce the deficit. At the time, Hunt said he opposed both measures but wanted to send President Reagan a signal that immediate action on the deficit is needed.

Hunt later released a position paper on defense calling for increases of 5 percent to 7 percent in the budget. He also said he opposes any tax increases.

Grimsley said Helms is "making mosquito bites the issue" and said Hunt can show that Helms' voting record is poor on many issues.

Helms is trying to portray Hunt as a big spender.

"More people than every before understand the real villains (on issues like the budget, defense and foreign policy) ... have been politicians who have tried to solve problems by throwing money at them," Helms said.

President Reagan and his economic policy remain popular in North Carolina and Helms' re-election committee has tried to link Hunt with Democratic presidential candidates Jesse Jackson and Walter Mondale.

Helms promises in his commercials never to support Jackson or Mondale for president and asks where Hunt stands.

2 Die As Bus Wrecks

PAROWAN, Utah (AP) — A California charter carrying 45 people home from a ski trip crashed early Saturday along Interstate 15, killing two people and injuring dozens of others, authorities said.

A hospital official said the bus was carrying high school students to Orange County, Calif., from a ski vacation in Steamboat Springs, Colo.

The cause of the accident wasn't known immediately, but the area had received snow overnight.

Los Angeles County Fire Department public information officer DeWitt Morgan, who said he called on behalf of family friends, said Utah Highway Patrol troopers told him that two people had died and at least 30 others were injured.

The injured were taken to Valley View Medical Center in nearby Cedar City, in southern Utah, where six were admitted and the others were being evaluated, said Administrator Dale Gardner.

Gardner would not reveal the condition of the patients admitted. He said 42 high school students from Orange County, Calif., along with two advisers and the driver were taken to the hospital.

Gardner said the bus was carrying the students back from a ski vacation at Steamboat Springs.

Dave Hintze, a state Division of Wildlife Resources officer, said the accident occurred about 6 a.m. about four miles north of Parowan. He said he did not know the cause of the accident.

The area had received snow overnight, although Hintze said he did not believe it was snowing at the time of the accident.

But Morgan said he was told blizzard conditions existed at the time of the accident. He also said there were 54 students involved in the skiing trip, from Capistrano, Dana Point and Laguna Hills high schools in southern Orange County.

James Daniels, who had two children aboard the bus, said his son Jeff called about 1½ hours after the accident.

Booze Ban Irks Students

By JOHN M. DOYLE
Associated Press Writer

SOUTH BEND, Ind. (AP) — Trouble is brewing in the shadow of Notre Dame's Golden Dome. A new, restrictive alcohol policy at the Catholic university has students crying in their beer and has sparked demonstrations reminiscent of the anti-war protests of 15 years ago.

Three rowdy protests by thousands of students last week disturbed the peace — if not the dignity — of the pastoral Indiana campus.

Scores of bedsheet banners, normally proclaiming the abilities of the Fighting Irish football team, now festoon dormitory windows with such slogans as, "The Drinking Irish: Help Save This Endangered Species," and "You Expect Us To Date These Girls Sober?"

What has the students' Irish up is a report by a campus committe on "the responsible use of alcohol." Word of the new policy was announced Tuesday in the student newspaper under the headline "The Party's Over."

"It's too bad this couldn't have been over a more important issue," said Dean of Students James Roemer. "The university feels it has taken a very reasonable position on a serious problem."

The committee's recommendations, announced Monday night, would end under-age drinking and limit drinking in campus housing to private rooms. The legal drinking age in Indiana is 21.

The new rules would outlaw public drunkenness, forbid public drinking with a few exceptions, and limit the number of students at dorm parties serving alcoholic beverages.

Roemer said the new policy will be instituted to combat the "moral problem" of alcohol abuse.

"We're going to make a statement with this new policy that public intoxication will not be accepted," he said Friday. "This is not a local phenomenom, but a national problem. Too many people are ruining their lives."

The new policy has distilled a brew of student outrage.

Last Wednesday afternoon, 1,500 chanting, hooting students — many holding open beer cans — rallied outside the administration building to protest the new rules, which go into effect next fall. Some students stormed through the building, shouting beer slogans and obscenties and throwing paper and confetti.

The rally followed a midnight campus protest outside the residence of the Rev. Theodore M. Hesburgh, the university's president, who is out of the country. Another midnight protest was held Wednesday night.

The demonstration was highly unusual at a school where a decade ago, Hesburgh warned potential anti-war protesters they would get 15 minutes to go back to class or be expelled.

"That was a little bit scary," said Roemer of Wednesday's incident. "I think student leaders need to take responsibility for such actions. Fortunately, no one got hurt and there was no damage."

Robert M. Bertino Jr., student body president, admitted Wednesday's protest got a little out of hand.

"It's really unfortunate. It's making us look like cry-babies," said the 21-year-old junior from Joliet, Ill.

He promised another rally scheduled for Friday will be "a more organized thing. We've even invited the administration to speak."

Roemer said he hopes the whole issue blows over.

"The university took a very moderate position. We haven't said we're going to enforce the Indiana law where it violates individual privacy. But Father Hesburgh has said if this doesn't work, the campus will go completely dry."

Student leaders stressed the issue is not just drinking rights but student rights.

"The alcohol policy is representative of the administration's policy over us," said Cathy David, student body vice president.

"It's more like the spark that set everything off. It's not like the only thing we're fighting for. We're fighting for a much bigger set of values than just the alcohol policy," said Ms. David, a junior from Plainview, N.Y.

Those values, she said, include "freedom, the right to act responsibly and the right to learn what's going on in the real world, like learning to drink responsibly."

Four blocks south of campus is an intersection known as Five Points where there are as many taverns as there are street corners.

At Corby's Tavern, owner Harold A. Rowley Jr. was philosophical about how the new rules will affect his business.

"Our business is at capacity as it now stands. We just can't handle a great deal of additional business, so I don't think this is going to be a windfall," Rowley said.

Lava Threatens Home

VOLCANO, Hawaii (UPI) — A fiery river of lava from Kilauea volcano overran a pig farm Saturday and burned its way toward a house before the mountain quit pumping out the glowing rock, officials said.

Jack Lockwood of the U.S. Geological Survey said the latest eruptive phase of the volcano ended at 5:35 a.m. Saturday but the lava continued to move because of gravity.

The lava flow destroyed two vacant structures Friday night and was stagnating one-half mile from the Kalapana Bypass Road, where several houses lay in its path, a quarter mile from the ocean. Geologists said the lava still might have enough momentum to overrun another house 60 feet away.

National Park officials said the flow overran a pig farm early Saturday but it was unclear whether the animals were turned loose or evacuated. Cages were brought to transport the pigs but officials said the cages arrived too late to help.

First Ladies Offer Inside Views

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich. (AP) — The public got a peek at life in the White House as six female members of four presidential families told of the joys, sorrows and frustrations they experienced while living in the executive mansion.

Two former first ladies, three presidential daughters and one granddaughter provided insiders' views during a conference Thursday and Friday at the Gerald R. Ford Museum titled "Modern First Ladies: Private Lives and Public Duties."

The object of the first such meeting, conceived by former first lady Betty Ford, was an exploration of the role of the wives of presidents. But the women spent most of their time swapping tales about life behind the White House's iron bars and the Secret Service's protection.

"I resented a lot about the White House," Luci Baines Johnson Turpin said of her first year there. "Then I realized I could adjust or I could adjust."

She said she adjusted.

Despite a 50-year span in their times in the White House, the six women agreed they shared many similar experiences and emotions.

Susan Ford Vance and Mrs. Turpin were teen-agers when their fathers served as chief executive.

"There were an awful lot of labels (like) Watusi Luci," Mrs. Turpin said. "I felt like I was the black sheep of the family."

Said Mrs. Vance: "It was a confusing time."

Mrs. Ford called Aug. 9, 1974, the day her husband became president with the resignation of Richard Nixon, "the saddest day of my life."

"I did not want my husband to become president," she said. "(But) we had no control over it. ... It was so abrupt that it shocked you into action."

Mrs. Turpin remembered when her father was unexpectedly catapulted into the presidency by President John F. Kennedy's assassination.

She said she was at the National Cathedral School in Washington when she learned of the killing, and recalled thinking, "the president is gone and I didn't know how my daddy was." Lyndon Johnson was in Dallas with the president when Kennedy was shot.

But it was the numerous light-hearted moments of the conference that gave all a candid glimpse of the women's day-to-day lives.

Storm Kills 7, Destroys Property

DIGGING OUT ... Jim Bailey, dressed in his bathrobe, uses his snowblower to clear snow from the walkway in front of his southeast Demver home on Saturday. As much as three feet of snow fell in the foothills west of Denver since Friday. (AP Lasophoto)

By ROGER PETTERSON
Associated Press Writer

An "unusually strong" spring storm plastered up to 3 feet of wet snow on the central Rockies and western Plains on Saturday and sent thunderstorms, high winds and tornadoes across the Midwest and the South, killing seven people and destroying homes and property.

The winter-like weather, which ended a week that earlier saw temperatures in the 70s at Denver, closed schools and forced cancellation of some Easter services, and threatened young livestock.

"This is when it starts catching everybody — snow tires get off, and you just kind of forget about it," said Yellow Cab driver Jim Polinski as he slid through downtown Denver in the predawn hours Saturday.

Snow fell early Saturday across eastern Colorado, western Kansas, western Nebraska and southeastern Wyoming, and a winter storm warning was posted for northeastern Colorado and the Pikes Peak-Palmer Divide area.

Tornadoes and heavy thunderstorms whipped through Mississippi, killing three people in Tallahatchie and LeFlore counties, according to law enforcement officials. Several houses and numerous mobile homes were destroyed, said Ed Ambrose, a local civil defense official.

The storm also dragged a 1,000-gallon septic tank out of the ground and carried it a half-mile across a field, authorities said.

Another tornado plowed through a residential area north of Memphis, Tenn., Saturday afternoon, injuring two people and damaging several houses, said sheriff's deputies.

Rain-swollen Bear Creek in Lebanon, Mo., was blamed for the death of a woman whose car was swept from a bridge Saturday morning, highway patrol troopers said. A passenger in the car managed to kick out a window and escape, the troopers said. Three other people were killed Friday near El Dorado Springs, Mo., when their car slid on rain-slick pavement into the path of a truck.

Nearly 2 feet of snow had fallen on parts of northern Colorado and southeastern Wyoming since Friday, with an even 3 feet at Buckhorn Mountain, northwest of Fort Collins, Colo., and 35 inches in the foothills northwest of Denver, the National Weather Service said. Denver got a foot of snow overnight. Up to 32 inches fell in the mountains west of Cheyenne, Wyo., and light snow continued Saturday in the southeastern and central parts of the state.

"This storm is stronger than your average April snowstorm but not unprecedented," said Steve Markkanen, a weather service forecaster in Denver. In April 1885, 23 inches fell in the Denver area, and about 17 inches fell in the late 1950s. "So this is unusually strong storm, but it's by no means a record-breaker."

He said the storm would ease off Sunday, but warned that another storm front could arrive by midweek. "A very strong storm system is rushing toward us. There will be a risk of more snow, but it's too early to tell whether it's a major storm like this one."

Ahead of the storm center, Columbia, Mo., got 2.96 inches of rain in an 18-hour period and Quinter, Kan., got 3.11 inches in 24 hours. A flash flood watch was issued for parts of Tennessee, Kentucky and Kansas and some flooding was reported in southwestern Missouri. Kearney, Neb., got 3.00 inches of rain by morning. Washington, Ind., had gotten 1.68 inches since Friday and Mount Carmel, Ill., got 2.30 inches.

A tornado watch was issued Saturday afternoon for eastern Arkansas, southeastern Missouri, extreme southern Illinois, western Kentucky and Tennessee and northwestern Mississippi.

Hailstones as big as tennis balls fell at Pilot Point in Texas' Denton County, and others as big as baseballs crashed down late Friday at the town of Savoy, Texas.

Wind gusting up to 66 mph caused property damage at Fort Smith, Ark. Tornadoes late Friday killed a camper and injured at least four other people at Lake Canton, Okla., and ripped through a mobile home park at Valley View, Texas. Behind the storm in Utah, wind gusted to 71 mph early Saturday around Farmington.

Along with the winter-like weather in the Rockies, the storm had pulled hot, dry air up from Mexico's Chihuahua desert into southern Texas, kicking temperatures up to 111 degrees Friday at Cotulla and 110 at Kelly Air Force Base in San Antonio. The National Weather Service dubbed it the "Chihuahua Express." Temperatures were milder Saturday, but the hot, dry weather of last week left a high fire danger in parts of southern Texas.

Denver's Stapleton International Airport operated with only two of its four runways open early Saturday.

"A couple of thousand people stayed overnight with us," said Morris Pierce of Stapleton's operations office. "The airlines passed out blankets and made sandwiches and coffee. They're sleeping in the chairs and some are sleeping on the carpet."

Some highways in northeastern Colorado were closed Saturday, and snow and blowing snow during the night closed Interstate 25 north of Raton, N.M., and U.S. 87 from Raton to Clayton. Two feet of snow and high wind kept a 50-mile stretch of Interstate 80 shut down Saturday in Wyoming from Cheyenne west to Laramie.

El Ninos, the shattering of normal weather patterns whose 1982-83 occurrence was especially devastating, appear on the average of every four or five years, but irregularly — as rarely as 10 years apart or as frequently as every two years, according to National Geographic.

Alien Claims Army Never Took Action

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — An illegal alien who joined the U.S. Army with a phony birth certificate says military officials discovered his identity three years ago but never did anything about it, the El Paso Times reported Saturday.

Pfc. Manuel Grajeda, an air defense gunner whose tour of duty expires May 1, says he hopes to re-enlist but doubts the Army will let him, according to the copyright story.

Army officials, who say an investigation into the matter was apparently never completed, said they reopened the case Friday when contacted by the Times.

Calls by the Associated Press on Saturday to reach Army spokesmen on the base were unsuccessful. Grajeda's phone at his base residence also went unanswered.

Grajeda, who said he wanted to join the Army because he was out of work, said his ruse probably would not have been discovered had he not been assigned in 1981 to Fort Bliss, the El Paso base where a man whose identity he assumed with the phony birth certificate has been working since 1975.

A native of Cuidad Juarez, Mexico, across the border from El Paso, Grajeda said he joined the Army six years ago in Los Angeles after buying in Mexico an exact duplicate of a birth certificate belonging to Juan Beltran, a civilian employee at Fort Bliss.

Beltran at the time was in the Air Force at the base and had security clearance, he said. He told the Times he began having problems with the Internal Revenue Service in 1981 when his Social Security number showed up on tax returns for both himself and Grajeda.

"I don't blame him (for being upset)," Grajeda said. "I'm really sorry for what I did."

Beltran, who has never met Grajeda, said he has had trouble getting both income tax refunds and National Guard pay, and has been given a temporary income tax account number by the IRS.

The Army Criminal Investigation Department began an investigation in 1981 after receiving a complaint from Beltran, according to Army documents. But the agent conducting the probe no longer works at the base and Army officials said the probe may not have been completed.

Another criminal investigator signed papers which listed Grajeda's real name and recommended no prosecution, the Times said.

The report was accompanied by a letter from Capt. Anthony Giasi, Grajeda's commander, asking that Grajeda be given an honorable discharge and allowed to enlist under his real name. But the Army apparently never acted on the report, the Times said.

Grajeda, who was recently demoted after a urine test showed he had used drugs, says Army officials have told him they wouldn't allow him to re-enlist because he had lied about his identity and drug use.

Bomb Threat

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A United Airlines flight to Honolulu was diverted to Colorado Springs, Colo., Saturday because of a bomb threat phoned to a local television station, air traffic controllers said.

The Boeing 747, with 433 people aboard, left San Francisco at 2:20 p.m. but was diverted after an anonymous caller told KGO-TV there was a bomb aboard the plane, United's Flight 35, said John Ball area manager of the Oakland Air Traffic Control Center.

Ball said the plane was sent to a high altitude because the caller apparently had told the television station the bomb was a pressure-sensitive device.

Children Have Storm Victims In Mind

LAURINBURG, N.C. (AP) — Some children in Cabarrus County have helped bring Easter baskets to youngsters in areas devastated last month by tornadoes.

"It's just overwhelming," said Brenda Gilbert, school coordinator in Scotland County, where more than 100 baskets were taken. "The baskets are so much nicer than anything you'll see in a store. And they're full of love. That's what makes them so special — you can't buy that in a store."

Concord Schools Coordinator Beverly Carpenter, who supervised the project, said children at Wolf-Meadow Elementary put 625 baskets together in 10 days, more than doubling the school's original goals.

Marlboro County in South Carolina got 270 baskets, while 250 went to children in Robeson County.

"Our response was unreal," Ms. Carpenter said. "The enthusiasm was jumping. The more we got, the more the children wanted to give."

The project started when Ms. Carpenter had kindergarten teachers send letters home with students. Eventually several hundred children were involved.

"One little girl went around her neighborhood collecting money from her neighbors," Ms. Carpenter said.

"Collections totaled several thousand dollars," she said, adding that Concord officials had trouble deciding how to distribute the baskets.

Ms. Gilbert helped with distribution, calling school coordinators and principals throughout the tornado-ravaged areas to determine the number of children in need. Fredrickson Trucking Co., a Charlotte-based firm, brought baskets to Scotland County.

Additional items not placed in baskets were distributed to handicapped children in Scotland County, Ms. Gilbert said. A box of toys went to one handicapped child whom Ms. Gilbert said was "traumatized" by the tornado.

Eight-year-old Marty Hackler, who with his five brothers and sisters is living in temporary housing since the storm leveled his house, said he liked the basket "just fine."

"I wasn't thinking much about getting one," he said.

Murder Trial Starts

By CLAYTON HASWELL
Associated Press Writer

DEDHAM, Mass. (AP) — A prominent anatomy professor whose affair with a young artist ended with her disappearance a year ago, allegedly after she tried to end their relationship, goes on trial on murder charges Monday even though her body never has been found.

William H. Douglas, 42, is charged with murdering Robin Benedict, 21, who was last seen at Douglas' home on March 5, 1983.

Prosecutors say Ms. Benedict, a graphic artist, led a double life as a prostitute in Boston's Combat Zone of adult theaters and bookstores, and that Douglas was obsessed with her and jealous of her relationships with other men. They said she charged Douglas thousands of dollars which he misappropriated from Tufts University School of Medicine.

"We will prove without a doubt that William Douglas killed Robin Benedict," said John Kivlan, Norfolk County assistant district attorney, before Superior Court Judge Roger Donahue imposed a gag order in the case at the request of the defense.

Kivlan has said he will use a piece of brain tissue found in the pocket of a shirt at Douglas' home and blood and hair found on a sledgehammer left in a roadside trash bin to prove Ms. Benedict is dead and that Douglas killed her.

Kivlan admits there have been few murder convictions without a body or witnesses, but says there is precedent.

"This so-called white matter (found in Douglas' shirt) comes from the deeper part of the brain," Kivlan has said. "If the commonwealth can prove an individual is dead as a result of unlawful conduct, then there are grounds for a conviction."

Douglas, who won national acclaim with his research into the effects of chemicals on eye cells, has pleaded innocent.

"The whole case is Mickey Mouse," said Thomas Troy, Douglas' attorney. "That's all I can tell you because of the gag order."

According to a police report, Douglas met Ms. Benedict in a Combat Zone bar in March 1982, and began paying her $50 an hour for her time whether they had sex or not.

"His contacts with Robin Benedict became an obsession. When he had exhausted his personal funds and his family's funds, he began to steal from his employer," Kivlan said.

Douglas pleaded innocent Oct. 12 to charges he misappropriated more than $50,000 from Tufts. No trial date has been set on those charges. He resigned as an associate professor of anatomy last June.

Clarence "J.R." Rogers, Ms. Benedict's roommate, told investigators he thought Douglas was responsible for Ms. Benedict's three arrests for prostitution. All three complaints were dismissed.

Paul Landry, a state trooper who investigated the case, said, "I am of the opinion that Douglas called the Boston vice squad and left tips when Robin went to her apartments with other men."

Three days before her disappearance, according to affidavits, Ms. Benedict told Douglas she never wanted to see him again, and called Douglas' wife, Nancy, to ask for her help.

Mrs. Douglas told police she saw Ms. Benedict's car in front of their house on March 5 and that when she returned later the car was gone. Ms. Benedict has not been seen since.

The next day, Ms. Benedict's blood-smeared jacket was found in a trash bin along a highway, along with a bloody hammer with a single strand of human hair.

Banks Facing Loan Rivalry

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — North Carolina banks are facing "rate wars" similar to fare wars in the airline industry as they try to lure loan applicants, Wachovia Corp. President John Medlin says.

Medlin, speaking Friday to about 50 stockholders at the Winston-Salem bank's annual meeting, said "higher and more volatile money costs will make it more difficult to maintain satisfactory margins" of profit.

So far, however, Washovia's earnings haven't reflected stiffer competition for loans. The bank's net income rose 9.6 percent to $24.333 million, or $1.51 per share for the quarter ended March 31. In the same period last year, earnings were $22.12 million, or $1.38 per share.

Loan demand by business is growing, but not fast enough to absorb the "substantial inflow of funds to banks and thrifts," Medlin said. Because of the increased competition, "astute funding and credit-riak management" will become more critical for banks.

Meanwhile, Wachovia is primed to take advantage of changes in banking laws that would allow banks to enter other states, Medlin said, adding that the prospects are good for the General Assembly to pass an interstate banking bill later this year.

Medlin declined to disclose Wachovia's plans for interstate banking, saying it is too early to detail strategies.

"It is always important to avoid letting extraneous clutter and transitory fads in the marketplace detract from accomplishment of the daily task," he said.

A General Assembly panel in April voted unanimously to recommend that the Legislature allow regional banking among Southeastern states, ensuring that the issue will be considered in the short session in June.

The bill would let bank holding companies in other Southeastern states to acquire North Carolina banks if North Carolina bank holding companies are given the same privileges in those states.

Wachovia is North Carolina's second largest bank holding company with assets of $7.5 billion.

Former Guard Recalls Experiences

By NANCY BROWER
The Asheville Times

ASHEVILLE (AP) — Men condemned to death have nothing to lose. They resort to desperate measures. Just ask Rae Cartwright.

Ms. Cartwright, 27, once was a guard on San Quentin Prison's infamous "death row." During that time, she says, one inmate tried to electrocute her. Another fashioned a spear and hurled it at her. A motorcycle gang member sentenced to death for killing his wife grabbed her through the bars and stared at her with cold-eyed hate.

Ms. Cartwright says she the first woman in California to work a condemned row unit. "They tried other women," she said, "but they only lasted a day or two."

She spent two years as guard for 34 condemned men in the prison considered California's "garbage dump."

Ms. Cartwright came to Asheville a year ago to escape the fast-paced life of California. "I was not tired of San Quentin," she said, "I was tired of California."

Her new job is as an eligiblity specialist for the local Department of Social Services, but law enforcement was her first love.

"When I was 9 years old, I wrote to the FBI asking the best way to become an FBI agent. At 18 or 19, I looked into police work, but the opportunities were poor, the pay was low and the work was mostly investigating bicycle theft." So Ms. Cartwright became manager of high-fashion shoe stores.

"Mother was a nurse in the hospital at San Quentin," she said. "She said positions for correctional officers were open." The public's term for the job was "prison guard."

"I took the test," Ms. Cartwright said. "It was almost an insult to my intelligence." She got a job one week before her 21st birthday.

In prison lingo, San Quentin is "the joint." In the three years Ms. Cartwright was there, 1978-1981, its population was 3,000 felons requiring maximum security. "San Quentin got the three-time losers, the bad guys of all the state prisons. It housed the only death row in California."

When the young officer was assigned to death row, not only the inmates were against her. "Male officers on the row felt themselves to be the elite group and didn't want their territory invaded by women. They all signed a petition before they even met me saying they didn't want me there."

She worked from 6:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m., serving breakfast to the condemned men on death row and the gang leaders and high-escape-risk inmates confined on the maximum security unit. "They had great food," she said, "always a well-balanced meal and lots of coffee and milk."

The men on death row, she said, were "excellent physical specimens. They care more about their appearance and physique than anything else. They exercised all the time."

It was part of her job to handcuff the men in their cells and escort them one by one to the exercise yard. It was during these times she was in greatest danger.

"One gentleman tried to electrocute me. Knowing I was due on my rounds, he cut off his radio cord, plugged it in and put the raw end in a puddle of water outside his cell." Only rubber-soled boots saved her.

Another inmate saved the metal tops of cardboard cylinders that held potato chips and fashioned them into a long spear head. He made a shaft of tightly-rolled newspapers. "He even tied a rope to it so he could pull it back in, but he missed me," Ms. Cartwright said.

"I confronted him with why he had done it. He said he loved me and if he couldn't have me, he'd fix it so nobody could.

"Then there was this wife-killer, a member of a motorcycle gang. He was very intelligent, but he had emotional problems. He grabbed my arms and started pulling me toward him. He had me right up to the bars. I said, 'Charley, you can't do this. Let me go!' And he did."

Ms. Cartwright said the day-to-day mood on death row was anything but gloomy. "The men were very vibrant and social. It's not that they are locked out of society that bothers them so much, but that they are confined in such a small place. They can have TVs and radios and any kind of books. There's a canteen where they can purchase candy and cigarettes and cosmetics."

Most condemned men felt they would never be executed, she said. "Very few were afraid of dying," she said. They depended on the appeals system and clogged courts to save them.

"If there is any one thing they had in common, it was that they felt they were beating the system. They had the attitude, 'I'm on death row. There's nothing else you can do to me. I can do anything I want, and what can you do to me? Put me in jail?'"

Ms. Cartwright said she believes in capital punishment, but feels it is not being carried out correctly. "Society should be made to face it," she said, "like publish hangings long ago. The public should see that somebody is dying."

A giant chasm at the bottom of Piccaninnie Ponds in southeastern Australia splits the earth to a depth of nearly 190 feet. National Geographic says that in this sinkhole realm the water is so clear that divers feel as if they are floating in midair.

War Games For Troops

FAYETTEVILLE (AP) — Soldiers from the 82nd Airborne Division at Fort Bragg will be among 5,700 Army troops that will take part in an airdrop into Camp Santiago, Puerto Rico May 1 as part of a Caribbean exercise, Army officials say.

Three C-130 Hercules aircraft and a small contingent of personnel from the 317th Tactical Airlift Wing at Pope Air Force Base also will be involved, according to Pope spokesman Lt. Walter Thorp.

Pentagon spokesman Capt. James Santana said the exercise, dubbed Ocean Venture '84, began Friday with Navy mine-countermeasure exercises in the Atlantic.

The exercises are planned as a demonstration of U.S. ability to keep sea lanes open in the Caribbean area, officials said.

The portion of the exercises involving ground troops will begin April 30 with a battalion-sized Marine amphibious assualt on Camp Santiago, followed by the 82nd Airborne airdrop the next day, Santana said.

Army officials said they didn't know whether all the estimated 5,700 Army troops involved would be from Fort Bragg. But a Navy information officer, Cmdr. David Barron, said the war games would involve the 82nd Airborne and "associated support units."

Pirates Hold Off Wesleyan Rally

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

East Carolina, out front 6-0, found itself in a struggle to hold onto the lead but escaped with a 7-5 baseball victory over N.C. Wesleyan last night at Harrington Field.

Wesleyan, which came in with a 28-7 record and the number three ranking among NCAA Division III schools, fought back in the final two innings to chase Robbie McClanahan, who had fired a fine game until he began to tire in the late frames.

East Carolina, which had beaten the Bishops, 18-7, at Rocky Mount two weeks ago, held them off, however, and came away with its 25th victory against nine losses.

McClanahan, who allowed only one hit in the first six frames, was touched for a double in the seventh, then game up an unearned run in the eighth when the Bishops spoiled his shutout bid.

In the ninth, McClanahan walked the first batter, gave up two singles that scored a run, and then walked the bases full before Coach Hal Baird brought on Bob Davidson.

Davidson gave up a run-scoring single and two sacrifice flys before finally getting the side out to earn his third save of the season.

Baird said he really hadn't considered pulling McClanahan earlier and didn't think he really got that tired. "He hadn't thrown that many pitches," Baird said afterwards. "He was pretty much in control until there at the end, and I felt that if he had been able to get more breaking stuff in there, he might have finished. But Bob has had pretty good stuff lately, so we decided to go with the fresh arm.

"Wesleyan battled back well on us. Maybe it will wake us up some. We hit the ball better tonight, too."

The Pirates got but eight hits in the game, but also benefited by ten walks by Wesleyan pitching. The problem came in getting them around. ECU left ten men stranded during the night.

Two of those were left in the first and a freak double play got the Bishops out of the second innning. In the second, ECU had only one official at bat. Chris Bradberry walked but was thrown out stealing. Steve Sides then walked, moving to second when Mark Shank grounded out. But Sides, a freshman, made a rookie mistake, forgetting the number of outs and coming off the base long enough for the first baseman to fire the ball to second to tag him out and retire the side.

In the third, the Pirates pushed over three runs to take the lead. With one away, Greg Hardison singled to center and scored on a double by David Wells. With two away, Winfred Johnson was intentionally walked, but Mike Williams followed with a second double, driving in both Wells and Johnson.

After leaving a man stranded at second in the fourth, the Pirates picked up three more in the sixth. Wells walked as did Johnson (the second of three walks in five appearances). Williams singled just over third, loading the bases. Bradberry walked to force in Wells, and Steve Sides beat out an infield hit, scoring Johnson. Williams was forced at home on Shank's grounder, but Jim Riley walked, bringing in Bradberry. Hardison flew out to end the inning with the bases loaded.

Wesleyan finally pushed over its first run in the eighth. Kevin Rose singled and with one away, Ronnie Shorter walked. Both moved up on the second out of the inning and Rose scored on a passed ball.

East Carolina got that back in the bottom of the inning as Riley hit his first collegiate homer, leading off the inning. ECU then left two more men on base when the frame ended.

Clen Mattocks led off the ninth with a walk and Terry Coates singled. John Haggerty got a hit to right, bringing in Mattocks. John Green walked to load the bases and that ended McClanahan's time on the mound.

Richard Beaupre greeted Davidson with a run-scoring single, and Paul Prisco hit a sacrifice fly to right center, scoring Haggerty. Greene scored on another sacrifice fly by Steve Durelli.

But the next batter grounded into an out, and that ended the rally in plenty of time.

Hardison and Williams each had two hits for the Pirates while Haggerty had two for Wesleyan.

The Pirates return to action on Monday night, again hosting Wesleyan in a 7 p.m. game. They travel to Wilson Wednesday for a doubleheader against Atlantic Christian at 6 p.m. at Fleming Stadium, then return home Thurs-

Rose Advances, Jaguars Upset

By JIMMY DuPREE

HOLLYWOOD — Mike Smith ripped a bases-loaded triple to give Rose High School a 4-4 tie, then scored the eventual winning run as the Rampants held off North Pitt 8-4 Saturday in the opening game of the Pitt Easter Baseball Tournament being played at D.H. Conley High School.

In the second game, Steve Quinn threw a three-hitter and Stanley Robinson and Eric Wade slammed back-to-back homers as North Lenoir thrashed Farmville Central 11-0 in five innings.

Pitcher James Watson overthrew first base on a tapper by Gene Johnson allowing two runs to score in the fifth, and the Chargers of Ayden-Grifton rolled up a 13-10 victory in the third game of the day.

In the nightcap, Scott Overby ripped a two-run homer in the top of the seventh, then ranged into the whole at shortstop with the bases loaded in the bottom half of the frame to lift New Bern to a 7-6 victory over tourney host D.H. Conley.

Rose pitcher Steve Wall helped himself with a pair of hits including a two-out, two RBI double in the fifth inning. Wall struck out eight and allowed just four hits in six innings, while reliever Battle Emory struck out a pair in retiring the side in order in the seventh. The victory lifts Wall to 2-1 on the season.

Farmville faces North Pitt in the loser's bracket at 11 a.m. Monday, while Kinsotn plays Conley at 2 p.m. The Rampants, 11-3-1, advance against North Lenoir at 5 p.m., while Ayden-Grifton faces New Bern at 8 p.m. in the other winner's bracket showdown.

Catcher Eric Woodworth went 2-3 for the Rampants, who managed just seven hits.

"We popped the ball up for 15 out of 18 outs," Rose Coach Ronald Vincent said. "I feel like we didn't play as well as we have, but I was impressed with North Pitt. They got the bat on the ball pretty well.

"I thought Steve Wall pitched well after the first couple of innings, and Battle Emory pitched extremely well in relief. We got to see some of our other players today that don't normally play, so it was a good game for us from that standpoint."

The Rampants, heavily favored going into the game, sputtered early. After retiring the first two Panthers without incident, Wall hit Daniel Keel with a pitch. Alfred Braxton slapped an infield single, and Linwood Harris walked to load the bases.

A double by Jeff Lloyd drove in a pair of runs for the Panthers, and Harris scored on a wild pitch.

After starter Rich Grimes retired the Rampants in order in the bottom of the first, the Panthers added

Lady Pirates Dump Heels

Stacy Boyette's infield hit along with an error by North Carolina allowed Leslie Bunn to score the only run of the game in the 11th inning as East Carolina finished the Lady Pirate Classic softball round robin as the only undefeated team.

ECU defeated Virginia 3-1 and Liberty Baptist 6-4 before facing the Lady Tar Heels in the final game of the event. In other action, UNC blanked Liberty 4-0 and Virginia 6-1, and Liberty beat Virginia 4-1.

The leading hitter of the day was ECU's Lisa Zmuda, who finished 3-8 with a pair of RBI. Carolina's Virginia Augusta, who held the Lady Pirates hitless until the 11th inning, was named the outstanding pitcher of the day. Melissa Jarrell of UNC was tabbed as the outstanding defensive player.

Augusta struck out 23 Lady Pirate batters through 10 innings, but began to tire in the 11th.

Tamara Franks singled for the first ECU hit but was later out attempting to advance. Bunn singled with two out and went to third when Boyette beat out a grounder. The UNC third sacker let the ball get by on the play, and Bunn raced home to end the game.

"This was a nice way to end the season," ECU Coach Sue Manahan said. "Augusta had already pitched one game, and she got tired and we started to get our bats on the ball to make a few plays.

"Our defense didn't make any bad plays, and we held on most of the way. Robin Graves pitched a heck of a ballgame for us.

"Our season had its ups and downs, and it ended on an up note. I'm very satisfied with our record (25-15) most of our girls are back, so we'll have no more rookies (in fast pitch softball). I'm already looking forward ot next year."

Douglas Completes Victory

BULLETIN

DURHAM, N.C. (AP) — North Carolina pitcher Gordon Douglas was scheduled to sit out Saturday night's Atlantic Coast Conference tournament game against Georgia Tech, but he got the call once again and responded with a performance that earned the Tar Heels another tournament title.

Douglas shut down Georgia Tech to collect a save and guide the Tar Heels to a 9-4 victory.

Tar Heels, Jackets In ACC Final

By TOM FOREMAN Jr.

DURHAM — Scott Jordan, whose defense kept Georgia Tech close, cracked an eighth-inning grand slam home run to give the Yellow Jackets a 5-3 triumph over North Carolina State Saturday in the Atlantic Coast Conference baseball tournament.

The victory set up a battle between the Yellow Jackets and North Carolina, which stopped Clemson 7-6 and eliminated the Tigers from the tournament.

Carl Sitler singled off Wolfpack starter Mike Pesavento, pitching on two days of rest. Walt McConnell walked and Jeff Mons singled to score Sitler.

After Mike Yancey was hit by a pitch, Jordan drilled a 1-1 pitch over the left-field fence, his eighth homer.

Jordan robbed Lane Lindley of an extra-base hit in the fourth inning when he made a running catch before crashing into the center field wall. He made a diving stab of Tracy Woodson's line drive in the fifth inning.

N.C. State, which finished at 32-8, scored three times in the second inning off Yellow Jacket starter Stu Rogers. Jim Toman drew a lead-off walk and Tracy Black followed with his sixth homer, a towering drive to right field. It was the Wolfpack's 11th home run of the tournament.

Doug Davis followed with a single and moved over on Andrew Fava's single. Dickie Dalton sacrificed both runners ahead and Lane Lindley's infield grounder scored Davis.

Both pitchers went the distance. Rogers, wearing a brace on his right knee to protect an injury he suffered while playing quarterback last fall, raised his record to 3-2. Pesavento is 7-1.

In the opener, shortstop Walt Weiss homered from both sides of the plate and drove in four runs to keep the Tar Heels undefeated in the tournament.

Weiss' hitting knocked the Tigers out and gave the Tar Heels a chance at winning the title Saturday night. Clemson finished at 35-16.

John Jay's RBI-double in the second inning gave Clemson a 1-0 lead, but North Carolina rallied with three runs in the bottom of the inning.

Devy Bell walked and moved over on a sacrifice. Matt Merullo's single sent Bell to third and Paul Will's single scored Bell.

Long Way Around

East Carolina University guard Terry Long (74) leads quarterback Kevin Ingram, now in the Canadian Football League, on a play during a 1983 game at Ficklen Stadium. Long, ECU's first concensus All America, has been named The Daily Reflector's male college Athlete Of The Year.

Terry Long

ECU Star Selected Top Reflector Athlete

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

When it comes to picking the Daily Reflector Athlete of the Year for the 1983-84 season, there wasn't a lot of disagreement as to just who it should be.

East Carolina offensive guard Terry Long, who made the first-team all-America for eveyone but the United Press International, was the pick, following in the footsteps of several teammates.

Since the award was instituted three years ago, each of the Collegiate Male Athlete of the Year awards have gone to ECU football players, each of whom was an all-America selection.

Tootie Robbins, an offensive guard, won the award two years ago and has gone on to play professional football in a starting role for the St. Louis Cardinals of the NFL.

Last year, it was Jodie Schulz, a defensive end, who followed that up by being selected by the Philadelphia Eagles. He worked himself into a starting role before suffering a knee injury that sidelined him for the year. Whether he will be able to recover enough to continue his career is still uncertain.

But when it came to gathering awards, there was no one like Terry Long.

The 6-0, 280-pound senior from Columbia, S.C., was the equivilent of the 98-pound weakling as a young teenager. As a senior at Eau Claire High School in Columbia, he weighed only 160 pounds, playing nose guard in his only year of prep football play.

After high school, Long entered the U.S. Army as a paratrooper, and suddenly found himself in a love affair with weight lifting. But the time he completed his service and enrolled at East Carolina four years ago, he was anything but the lad he was when he left Columbia.

As Long began to develop his talents, he was switched from the nose guard position to the offensive line and it was there that he blossomed, earning plaudits from all over as a senior.

But he might have gotten his biggest boost off the field in the North Carolina Powerlifting Championships in the spring of 1983.

There, the veterans laughed at Long — a novice to powerlifting competition — when he passed over lighter weights to go on to the championship weights. But the laughs soon turned into solid applause as Long broke every existing record in the N.C. tournament, lifting a total of 2,203 pounds, at that time the third highest total in the world. He heaved up a squat of 837 pounds, a bench press of 501 pounds, and a deadlift of 865 pounds. No one in the state ever lifted over 800 pounds before.

It led the East Carolina sports promotion office to put out a poster of Long showing off his mucsles, along with his stats — 40" waist; 54" chest, 21" arms, 20½" neck and 30½" thighs.

Astoundingly, Long still cut through the 40-yard dash with a time of 4.8, and that and his strength have left pro scouts licking their chops.

During the 1983 season, Long was a frequently the man the Pirates ran behind, either on plays into the line, or behind him on sweeps as he pulled.

When the season ended, the awards began to pile up. First, there was the Walter Camp All-America team, then came the Kodak All-America squad, chosen by the Football Coaches Association. That was followed up by the Football Writers team, and he then finished up with the Associated Press team. UPI picked Terry to the second unit, the only blot on the otherwise perfect first team listing.

As a result, Long is considered the first concensus all-America player to have played for East Carolina.

Patience Pays Off For Thornton

CLEVELAND (AP) — Cleveland Indians slugger Andre Thornton gets a lot of respect from American League managers.

"I was hoping they'd steal second base so we could walk him," Kansas City Manager Dick Howser said of Thornton after the designated-hitter drove a long sacrifice fly in the eighth inning to give Cleveland a 3-2 victory. "He's a very patient hitter and a tough out in that situation."

Thornton, who had earlier hit his third home run, delivered the game-winner off reliever Joe Beckwith after Brett Butler led off with a single and moved to third on a sacrifice and Julio Franco's infield hit.

"When you're in a situation with a man on third and one out, you just like to get the ball into play. The pitch was a good pitcher's pitch, but I was fortunate enough to wait on it and hit it the way I wanted to," Thornton said.

Since Thornton has been Cleveland's only power hitter for years, many managers have told their pitcher to "pitch around him".

That doesn't bother Thornton, who says, "You can make a mistake trying to pitch around a guy. I feel that if I walk, the hitters behind me can drive in runs."

Bert Blyleven, 3-1, yielded both Kansas City runs over the first eight innings to pick up the victory. Ernie Camacho pitched the ninth for his second save.

Kansas City starter Danny Jackson, 0-1, walked Butler leading off the eighth. Tony Bernazard sacrificed Butler to second and Julio Franco's infield hit moved Butler to third. Joe Beckwith then relieved Jackson and Thornton greeted him with a sacrifice fly to deep center.

Kansas City took a 1-0 lead in the first when Darryl Motley led off with a single, stole second, took third on Pat Sheridan's single and scored when Jorge Orta grounded into a fielder's choice.

Otis Nixon walked leading off the Cleveland third and stole second. Nixon went to third when Brett Butler singled and scored as Tony Bernazard grounded into a double play.

Andre Thornton gave the Indians a 2-1 lead in the fourth inning when he slugged his third homer over the left center field fence but Kansas City tied the game in the sixth when Sheridan singled with one out and scored on Hal McRae's two-out triple.

Blyleven struck out seven batters. His fourth victim, Onix Concepcion in the seventh, was Blyleven's 2,000 American League strikeout. The right-hander now has 2,525 career strikeouts.

NEW YORK (AP) — Frank Tanana couldn't remember the last time he pitched a two-hitter. He only knew it was a long time ago, a time when he was a fireballer and not a junkballer.

"So many things have changed since then," said the veteran left-hander, who allowed only two singles in eight innings Saturday as the Texas Rangers defeated the New York Yankees 1-0.

Ned Yost singled home an unearned run in the sixth inning and reliever Dave Tobik earned his second save as the Rangers snapped the Yankees' three game winning streak.

Tanana, 2-1, allowed singles to Lou Piniella with two out in the fourth inning and Rick Cerone leading off the eighth, while walking four and striking out the same number. He came within one inning of matching his low-hit complete-game effort, a two-hitter against Minnesota in 1974 when he pitched for the California Angels.

"I'm a pitcher now," said the 10 year-veteran. "I've pretty much been this way for the last five or six years. I keep the hitters off balance and keep the ball in the ballpark. I have found out in the years that I haven't had the good, hard fastball that it's not how you throw it, but where you throw it. My best pitch is the 'unexpected' pitch."

Tanana pitched out of mild two-out trouble in the seventh and eighth innings, first striking out Toby Harrah with a runner on second and then forcing Ken Griffey to ground out with two men aboard. He got them both on 3-2 pitches.

"They were both changeups," Tanana said. "That was my best pitch today."

Tobik allowed a two-out single to Don Mattingly in the ninth before retiring pinch hitter Oscar Gamble on a grounder.

With one out in the Texas sixth, Buddy Bell was safe at first when shortstop Andre Robertson booted his grounder for an error. After Larry Parrish forced Bell at second, Parrish took second on a wild pitch and Pete O'Brien walked. Yost then drilled a single to left off Ray Fontenot, scoring Parrish.

Fontenot, 0-3, who was the victim of a 3-0 shutout against Minnesota in his previous start, allowed six hits in seven innings.

Piniella was ejected after the first pitch of the seventh inning for arguing a strike called by umpire Jim McKean.

Ringing The Bell

California.....8
Toronto.....4

TORONTO (AP) — There's nothing sweeter for Bobby Grich than watching the California Angels run up the score early in a ballgame.

"It's a tremendous lift to go up 7-1," said Grich, who drove in three runs in California's 8-4 victory Saturday over the Toronto Blue Jays. "Everybody's relaxed, cracking jokes on the bench and having a good time.

"Days like this are when it's the most fun to play baseball."

A recurring back problem has kept Grich out of the lineup seven of the last 10 games.

"It went on April 3rd, the third season in a row," said Grich, 35, who played first base Saturday. "I guess it's the cold weather that gives me problems.

"But given the fact I was in just three of the last 10 games, I was surprised at how comfortable I felt at the plate."

Grich connected for a solo home run in the second inning and added a two-run double in the Angels' three-run fourth. Reggie Jackson started it for the Angels with a two-run triple in the first.

"This club has something to prove," said Grich. "Some of us were injured last year and others didn't have good years. We're trying to prove we're not the over-the-hill gang."

Jackson got the Angels off to a 2-0 lead with his triple in the first inning, while Grich hit his solo shot in the seond and keyed California's three-run third with his double.

Rookie Ron Romanic, 2-1, scattered nine hits for his first major league complete game, and extended California's winning streak to four.

The Angels put the game away with three runs in the third and chased California's starter Jim Gott, 0-1.

With two out, Jackson walked and moved to third on Brian Downing's double. Grich scored both runners with his double to right and then came home when right fielder George Bell dropped Ron Jackson's fly ball to run the score to 6-1.

In the first inning, Gott walked Garry Pettis and Rob Wilfong to open the game and one out later, Jackson ripped an 0-2 pitch in the gap in right center. The Blue Jays scored in the first on an RBI grounder by Lloyd Moseby and added two more runs in the sixth on Willie Upshaw's sacrifice fly and a double by Cliff Johnson. The Blue Jays scored their final run in the seventh on Alfredo Griffin's sacrifice fly.

The Angels added a run in the fourth with Pettis scoring on an error and another in the fifth on an RBI single by Wilfong.

BALTIMORE, (AP) — Fourteen games into the season and the Baltimore Orioles finally gave a two-game winning streak.

With Saturday's 5-3 triumph over the Minnesota Twins, the Orioles put together consecutive victories for the first time since winning the World Series last October.

"We're back," joked Manager Joe Altobelli. "I wouldn't say I'm really happy. I'm content. I like what I see from the top of our lineup. We're getting the runners on and driving them in."

The Orioles got a pair of hits from Lenn Sakata, who recently was inserted in the leadoff spot, and two hits from John Shelby, who was dropped from the leadoff role to second in the order.

Eddie Murray also collected two hits, driving in two runs and giving him four hits and five RBIs in the last two games.

"We had some things going today," Altobelli said. "Sakata, Shelby and Rip (Cal Ripken Jr.) give us a lot of speed in the top of the lineup and it's begginning to make things happen."

A-G, Bears Advance In Pitt Tourney

another run in the second. Walter Pratt led off with a single, and a pickoff attempt got by Gary Scott at first allowing Pratt to race to third. A sacrifice fly by John Hobbs drove in Pratt for a 4-0 North Pitt lead.

But the Rampants mastered Grimes' pitching in the second frame. Woodworth opened with a single, and Wall ripped his first hit. Scott drew a walk to load the bases, and a base on balls to Van Alston drove in courtesy runner David Jester.

Smith ripped a shot to deep center to drive in the runners, and Traye Fuqua's sacrifice fly plated Smith.

The Rampants added another run in the fourth, as Scott led off with a single, stole second, moved to third on a fielder's choice and scored on a sacrifice fly by Doyle Kirkland.

Rose plated its last two runs after two out in the fifth. Mike Kinley drew a walk, Woodworth singled and Wall followed with his two-run double.

The Panthers left the bases loaded in the sixth and two on in the fifth without scoring, as they dropped their ninth game in 10 outings.

"We've got to be the best 1-9 team around," North Pitt Coach Doug Warren said. "We've been hitting the ball better and better all year. We can put enough runs on the board to stay close, we just can't seem to get enough to win.

"We did what we thought we had to do to have a chance to win: take the lead early and play tough defense."

• • •

"We just got out-played," Farmville Central Coach Bill Davis said. "They were ready and we weren't. If we're going to win any more ballgames, then mentally we're going to have to be ready. We hit the ball well at times, but they just didn't fall in."

The Jaguars managed just two hits, both of those by losing pitcher Joey Steppe. North Lenoir pounded Steppe for nine runs off seven hits in 1⅔ inning.

Jerry Waters finished 2-2 for the Hawks with three RBI, while Wade went 2-3 with a pair of RBI.

Leadoff hitter Darnell Thorbs walked to open the game, then stole second and moved to third on a wild pitch. Jerry Waters walked, and Bobby Simmons singled in both runners. Simmons went to third on the throw to the plate and later scored on a single by Wade for a 3-0 North Lenoir lead.

Steppe single and Taylor Walston walked to open the second for the Jaguars, but Quinn struck out Greg May, Brian Windham and Dennis Tripp to end Farmville's first scoring threat.

The Hawks did most of the damage in the second, but only after Randy Barwick reached first on an error and was nailed at the plate attempting to score on a single by Kenny Abram. Abram stole second and went to third on a single by Thorbs, and both runners scored on a single by Waters.

John Johnson was hit by a pitch, and Robinson followed with his three-run blast. Wade's homer set the score at 9-0, as freshman Robert Evans came on to strike out Joe Lane for the third out.

"Evans threw the ball real well after he had a chance to get warmed up," Davis said. "He mixed his pitches well. This was his first pitching in a varsity game. It might be that he could be one of our regular pitchers by next year."

But the damage had already been done, and the Hawks added solo runs in the third and fourth to abbreviate the game.

Farmville Central left runners on first and third with one out, as again Quinn retired May and Windham on strikes.

North Lenoir improved its record to 10-2-2 on the season, while the Jaguars slipped to 9-3-1.

Kinston took a 10-4 lead with seven runs in the top of the fifth including a three-run homer by Tom Vermillion, but the Chargers rallied for eight runs in the bottom of the frame to take a 12-10 lead. Ayden-Grifton added another run in the sixth.

Wesley Hardee led the Chargers with two hits in three at bats, while Shannon Peede and Jackie Conway each went 2-4. Johnson picked up the victory after going to the mound in the fifth.

Johnson led off the fifth with a single, and after one out Tony McLawhorn singled and an error allowed Johnson to take third. Conway singled in Johnson, and Leo Venters and Hardee walked to drive in McLawhorn. Peede singled, and an error allowed Conway and Venters to score. Hardee crossed the plate on a fielder's choice by Doug Coley, and Kinston intentionally walked Moye before Johnson's grounder gave A-G the lead.

Ayden-Grifton improved its record to 10-5 on the year, while Kinston slipped to 5-10.

New Bern's Buddy Nay ripped a two-run homer in the sixth to cap a four-run barrage that knotted the score at 5-5.

In the bottom of the seventh, Todd Cochran singled but was out trying to stretch it to a double. Fred Bryant singled, and Chris Via and Calvin Phillips walked to load the bases.

The Bears elected to make a pitching change, bringing in Kevin DeBruhl, but Shane Adams walked to drive in Bryant. Paul Hill rapped a grounder up the middle, but Overby scooped the ball for the tag at second to end the rally.

Cochran led Conley with three hits in four trips to the plate, while Via ripped a three-run homer in the third.

New Bern improved its record to 6-9, while Conley slipped to 8-5.

Faldo Leads Heritage

HILTON HEAD ISLAND, S.C. (AP) — Tom Kite got a share of second with an 18th hole birdie putt, but said the 4-shot margin enjoyed by England's Nick Faldo will be a difficult obstacle to overcome Sunday in the final round of the $400,000 Sea Pines Heritage Classic.

"It's gonna be tough," said Kite, who played the third round Saturday in the company of the 26-year-old Englishman who last year took enough time off from his American Tour schedule to gain the No. 1 position on the European circuit.

"Nick is playing well," Kite said. "I think he missed only one fairway. He's playing very, very well. He'll be very difficult to catch.

"But," Kite said, "it's hard to get through a week on this golf course without some sort of disaster happening to you."

Faldo, with a solid, 3-under-par 68, completed three trips over the Harbour Town Golf Links in 201, a distant 11 strokes under par.

"I'm just going to try to play solid tomorrow, get under par early and try to win this one," said Faldo, who has yet to take an American title and lists that as his "main objective for the year."

Harbour Town, he said, "won't let you go to sleep. It won't let you play defensively.

"I just have to keep trying, keep going forward. I just want to try to play as well as I have the last three days."

Kite, despite a pair of 6s, salvaged a 70 with the last-hole birdie and tied Dan Pohl and Larry Rinker for second at 205.

Pohl and Rinker, neither of whom has yet won on the PGA Tour, each had a third-round 69.

Tom Watson, a five-time British Open champion and twice the winner of this title, closed up with a 66 that left him at 207, six strokes off the pace.

He was tied with Hubert Green, another two-time winner on this picturesque links, and Ronnie Black. Green, mired in a long, discouraging slump, had a 68 and Black matched par 71.

Defending champion Fuzzy Zoeller and PGA titleholder Hal Sutton each had 69 and were in a large group at 208.

Denis Watson, a South African and one of the first men off the tee, tied the course record of 63 set by Jack Nicklaus in 1975. He used only 22 strokes on the tiny greens that serve as a Harbour Town trademark and completed 54 holes at 210.

Faldo, a two-stroke leader when the day's play started, opened up birdie-birdie and really wasn't threatened.

"That got me off to a very good start and I just tried to keep it going," said Faldo, a three-time British PGA champion and winner of five European titles last season.

He hit a 6-iron some 6 feet from the flag on the first hole, got his second just short of the green, chipped to 5 feet and made birdie-4 on the second.

Faldo, now in his second full season as a member of the American Tour, bogeyed the third after missing the green, but got the shot back on the next hole, getting up and down from a greenside bunker for birdie-4.

He made another good save, this time from a pot bunker at the back of the ninth green, then rapped in a pair of 15-foot birdie putts on the 10th and 16th.

Faldo was five shots in front of the pack at that time, but pulled a 7-iron shot into a bunker on the 17th and made bogey.

Kite, who finished sixth in last week's Masters and was in title contention until he hit into the water on the 12th hole of the final round, got the ball close to the hole for a couple of birdies on the front side, but hurt his score with bogeys on two of the par-5s.

He missed the green with his third shot on the fifth and pull-hooked his second into the water on the 15th.

Reid Ross Tops Rams In Optimist Tourney

WILSON — Fayetteville Reid Ross pushed over four runs in the fourth inning and gained a 5-0 victory over Greene Central in the opening game of the Wilson Optimist Baseball Tournament Saturday at Fleming Stadium.

The Rams got only three hits in the contest, and Todd Grant picked up two of those.

Reid Ross got all it needed in the fourth, scoring four times thanks to some Greene Central errors. Steve Sanders as hit by a pitch and Mike Downs walked. John Hutchinson reached on a fielder's choicee and Bec Pollom reached on a two-out error, scoring both Sanders and Downs. Robbie Moreau also reached on an error, bringing in Hutchinson and Pollom.

Reid Ross added another run in the fifth.

Pollom led the Fayetteville hitting with two.

Greene Central drops into the tournament's losers' bracket and will face Wilson Fike on Monday at 11 a.m. Reid Ross will face Havelock in a 5 p.m. Monday in the winners' bracket. Havelock took Fike, 1-0, in their game.

Perez Lifts Reds; Dodgers Fall, 9-6

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Tony Perez, who began his major-league career with the Cincinnati Reds 20 years ago, pulled the team out of a seven-game losing streak Saturday with a two-run pinch triple.

"We needed that hit, needed those runs and needed this win," the veteran first baseman said after a 5-4 victory over the San Francisco Giants."This is a young team. Someone had to pick it up, and it was up to the old man."

"Breaking that streak wasn't easy," added Manager Vern Rapp. "We had to battle right down to the end, and our bench won it for us."

The 41-year-old Perez broke a 3-3 tie when he belted his triple with two out in the eighth inning following an intentional walk to Duane Walker. The two runs batted in gave him a career total of 1,579, tying him with Hall of Famer Rogers Hornsby for 17th place on the all-time list.

"It's tough to sit in the dugout for eight innings and then make that run to third. My old bones need to be loosened up a bit," Perez said after the 78th triple of his career.

Dan Driessen walked to open the eighth against Giants reliever Greg Minton, 1-1, and was sacrificed to second by Dave Concepcion. Ron Oester grounded out, with Driessen moving to third, and pinch hitter Walker was walked intentionally before Perez batted for Dann Bilardello and lined an 0-2 pitch off the right-field fence.

The victory went to Ted Power, 1-0, the second of four Cincinnati pitchers.

The Reds took a 1-0 lead in the first inning when Cesar Cedeno's single scored Tom Lawless, who walked and stole second. Cincinnati made it 3-0 in the fourth when Dave Concepcion and starting pitcher Joe Price had RBI doubles off Giants starter Bill Laskey.

San Francisco threatened in the third when Steve Nicosia and Fran Mullins opened with singles, but both were thrown out at the plate. Nicosia tried to score from third on a grounder to third baseman Lawless and Mullins was out on a double steal attempt.

Price blanked the Giants on four hits until the sixth, when they scored three runs, tied the game and chased the Reds' starter. Manny Trillo led off with an infield hit. After Jack Clark walked, Jeff Leonard doubled a run home and Joel Youngblood followed with a two-run double.

CHICAGO (AP) — Tony Pena isn't going let a sore thumb keep him out of the lineup, not after what happened to him late in spring training.

Pena singled home a run in the first inning Saturday and then keyed a four-run seventh with a double to lead the Pittsburgh Pirates to an 8-5 victory, snapping the Chicago Cubs' three-game winning streak.

"I pulled a hamstring and missed the last 10 days of spring training," said Pena, explaining why he started the season by going hitless in his first three games and 11 times at bat.

Since then, the snappy little catcher has hit safely in eight of 10 games, going 15-for-38.

"I'm not going to let this thumb keep me out of the lineup," said Pena, who had ice on the thumb as the result of being hit by a Rick Reuschel pitch in the third inning.

"I had a tough time starting after missing all those games in spring training and now I feel real good," said Pena, adding: "Except for the thumb."

Pittsburgh Manager Chuck Tanner sits in admiration of Pena, a 26-year-old from the Dominican Republic who is in his fourth full season with the Pirates.

"He's coming by leaps and bounds," said Tanner, "and he still hasn't reached his potential. Personally, Johnny Bench was the greatest catcher I ever saw because I didn't see (Gabby) Hartnett or (Mickey) Cochrane.

"I'm not saying Tony Pena is going to be another Johnny Bench but he has a chance of coming close to being a Bench," said Tanner.

Adding to Pittsburgh's 15-hit attack Saturday were Marvell Wynne and Johnny Ray who contributed three hits each.

Successive singles by Ray, Bill Madlock and Jason Thompson to open the seventh broke a 4-4 tie and Pena followed with his double for another run. A single by Amos Otis drove in another run and the fourth run scored on an errant pickoff throw by pitcher Rich Bordi.

Jose DeLeon, 1-0, was the winner in relief and reliever Dickie Noles, 0-1, took the loss.

The Pirates jumped on Rick Reuschel, who came off the disabled list Friday, for two runs in the first inning on Wynne's triple, a double by Ray and a single by Pena.

Gary Woods cut the lead in half with his first homer in the third inning and a walk to Jody Davis and Ron Cey's third homer of the year put the Cubs in front 3-2 in the fourth inning.

With one out in the sixth, Otis walked and Noles replaced Reuschel. Doug Frobel grounded out but Dale Berra walked and pinch hitter Lee Mazzilli and Wynne followed with run-scoring singles for a 4-3 Pittsburgh lead.

Leon Durham's homer in the sixth, his second of the year, tied it before the Pirates erupted in the seventh.

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Philadelphia pitching coach Claude Osteen played a role in the Phillies' 12-2 triumph over the New York Mets Saturday when he helped John Denny overcome frustration.

"He was having trouble with the umpire," Osteen said. "He made a lot of good pitches and wasn't getting them (strikes). I wanted to slow his tempo."

With the score 4-1 in the top of the third, Denny appeared to be struggling. The Mets' had scored their first run and Keith Hernandez walked to put two runners on base with two out. Osteen came strolling from the dugout to calm Denny down.

"I tried to settle him down," said Osteen. "The more upset he got, the faster he threw."

Denny went on to pitch a six-hitter for the Phillies' first complete game of the season even though he said that "it was very windy out there and I felt stiff."

Denny, 2-1, the 1983 National League Cy Young Award winner, struck out seven and walked two. He retired 16 batters in a row until Darryl Strawberry, Mookie Wilson and Hubie Brooks singled with two out in the ninth, but left fielder Glenn Wilson nailed Strawberry at the plate to end the game.

Mets Manager Davey Johnson, whose team still leads the NL East by one-half game over the Phillies, was upset.

"When you have a pitching breakdown, it sometimes leads to breakdowns in other departments," he said. "I'm not going to put up with some of the stuff I put up with in the minors. I'm annoyed for the first time this season. I'm going to talk to some of them."

Mets starter Mike Torrez, 0-2, pulled a groin muscle in the second inning and had to leave the game. He was charged with three runs.

Wilson also provided some offense with a three-run homer and Bo Diaz added a two-run blast, both in the fifth inning off Craig Swan, who has given up five homers and 13 earned runs in 12 innings this season.

The Phillies took a 2-0 lead in the first inning. Juan Samuel walked and came around on singles by Len Matuszek and Mike Schmidt. Matuszek scored on Joe Lefebvre's sacrifice fly.

Philadelphia added two more in the second. Von Hayes walked and, after Torrez hurt himself, Diaz singled off Ed Lynch. Hayes scored on a sacrifice fly by Ivan DeJesus and Diaz, who took second on the play, scored on Samuel's single.

The Mets picked up a run in the third on a walk, an infield hit by Lynch, a passed ball and an infield out. They made it 4-2 in the fourth on a one-out triple by Wilson, who had three hits, and an infield out. Denny slammed tghe door after that in recording his 14th career victory in 18 decisions against the Mets.

The Phillies made it 9-2 in the fifth on the homers by Wilson and Diaz and added three in the eighth on a two-run double by Ozzie Virgil and Denny's single.

San Diego.....9
Los Angeles.....6

LOS ANGELES (AP) — If the San Diego Padres are able to put it all together this year and win their first National League West Division championship, they figure they will do it on the strength of their corps of promising young ballplayers.

Nonetheless, it was veterans Steve Garvey and Goose Gossage who showed the Padres the way Saturday.

Garvey snapped out of his recent batting slump with three hits and three runs batted in and Gossage picked up his sixth save of the season as the Padres rolled to a 9-6 victory over the Los Angeles Dodgers.

"You just have to keep trying and know you're going to come out of it sooner or later," said Garvey, who entered the game with a .167 batting average. "Whether you win or lose, you have to have the same approach to your job. I think that comes from experience."

Gossage, whom San Diego signed as a free agent over the winter, was called upon in the eighth inning and staved off the Dodgers' final threat in the three-hour, eight-minute game that saw the two clubs use a total of 30 players and combine for 26 hits.

"Goose has done an outstanding job for us so far," Garvey said of the former New York Yankee fireman, "and I think he's going to like it here with the slower pace and less pressure. I think he'll find it a chance to relax and have a new start."

However, youth did play a role in San Diego's win. Twenty-three-year-old outfielder Tony Gwynn, the National League's top hitter with a .436 average, had three hits and scored three times.

The loss snapped Los Angeles' two-game winning streak against the division-leading Padres and was only the Dodgers' third in their last 11 games.

"It was just one of those days for us," said Los Angeles Manager Tom Lasorda. "We had a couple bad breaks that hurt us, but San Diego played a pretty good game. Our guys kept battling back, but we just fell a little short.

"We'll come back strong tomorrow."

San Diego scored twice off loser Jerry Reuss, 1-1, in the first inning when Luis Salazar singled and went to second on Alan Wiggins' bunt single. Terry Kennedy singled in Salazar with Wiggins taking third and the Padres' second baseman stole home on the next pitch.

Los Angeles got a run back in its half of the first off winner Mark Thurmond, 1-2, when Steve Sax reached base on an error and went to second on a balk. Ken Landreaux sacrificed Sax to third and he scored on Pedro Guerrero's groundout.

The Padres scored four more times off Reuss and chased him in the third. Gwynn opened the rally with a double and scored on Garvey's single. Garvey went to second on a wild pitch and scored when Kennedy reached base on an error. Carmelo Martinez doubled in Kennedy and scored on Kevin McReynolds' single.

Los Angeles scored again in the fifth when German Rivera reached on a fielder's choice, went to second on a groundout and scored on Landreaux's single.

San Diego padded its lead in the sixth with a pair of runs off Dodger reliever Pat Zachry. Wiggins reached base on a fielder's choice, went to third on Gwynn's single and scored on a single by Garvey. Gwynn, who had gone to third, then scored on a single by Kennedy.

With two out, B.J. Surhoff doubled to score Merullo and Will.

Chuck Baldwin reached on a two-base error and produced a run to pull Clemson within one in the third, but the Tar Heels started another three-run outburst.

Glenn Liacouras reached on a two-out double and Surhoff was intentionally walked. Weiss, batting left-handed, then stroked a 2-2 pitch from Jay over the right-center field wall for a 6-2 edge.

Clemson scratched out a run in the sixth and two more in the seventh on Jay Fulton's RBI-double and Ray Williams' grounder.

Weiss retaliated by hitting the first pitch from Tim Rice to right field for his fifth homer.

In the ninth, Jim McCollom led off with a single, got to second on a passed ball and reached third on an infield out. Chuck Baldwin's single scored McCollom.

Baldwin stole second and got to third when the catcher's throw got away. Reliever Gordon Douglas, the third Tar Heel pitcher, then struck out Jay Fulton and Ray Williams to end the Clemson threat.

Starter Steve McGuire picked up the victory, his fifth, while Douglas got his sixth save and second of the tournament.

Oliver Whitaker, 4-1, was the loser.

Rozema Keeps Tigers Rolling, 4-1

DETROIT (AP) — Detroit right-hander Dave Rozema has discovered that it's a lot easier to pitch when he's not in Manager Sparky Anderson's dog house.

Rozema, the Tigers' answer to Puck, combined with Doug Bair to toss a five-hitter at Chicago on Saturday as the red-hot Tigers beat the White Sox 4-1 to improve their record to 11-1 — best in the major leagues.

"He's had me angry a few times," Anderson conceded. "I've said to him, 'David, I've tried to get rid of you so many times, but you're probably going to outlast us all'. I'll say this: Jim Campbell (the Tigers' president) always gave me good advice. He always reminded me of one thing: Rosey can pitch."

In the past, Rozema has made headlines for missing team airplanes, judging wet T-shirt contests, and kung-fu kicking his way onto the disabled list. His antics so frustrated the manager two years ago that he issued his well-publicized "my way or the highway" statement.

Last winter, however, with help from his best friend, outfielder Kirk Gibson, Rozema began to shed his playboy image. He quit drinking, lost his beer belly and reported to spring training in the best condition of his life.

His efforts were rewarded when Anderson put him into the starting rotation.

"I'm glad Sparky has the confidence in me," said Rozema, who now joins the manager for a long walk each morning when the club is on the road. "I think I understand him better, now, and he understands me, too.

"I'm still dry. You don't see any beer here. By this time last year, I might have had five already. I'm having fun in a different way this year."

Rozema, 1-0, making his second start of the season, allowed two hits, striking out seven to match his career high. He walked two over the six innings he worked.

"I like David better now," Anderson said. "I kid him. He's like my special thing."

Bair came on to start the seventh and notched his first save after giving up an RBI double to Greg Walker in the ninth.

Chicago's LaMarr Hoyt, 2-1, who was thwarted in his effort to win his 16th consecutive game over two seasons, gave up 10 hits. Hoyt, the 1983 American League Cy Young Award winner, struck out five and walked four.

Hoyt's last defeat occurred July 23, 1983 when he lost 10-7 at Milwaukee.

"I've pitched worse and won," Hoyt said. "I didn't have my best stuff by any means, but I felt like I battled them. I knew the record was put there. I'll just have to try to start another streak."

Detroit's Lou Whitaker hit his second homer into the upper right field seats leading off the first inning, the ninth time in his career he has started a ballgame with a home run.

BOSTON (AP) — Veteran reliever Tom Burgmeier of the Oakland Athletics says that "when you get a little a-g-e on you, it takes a little longer to get your bones loose."

However, Burgmeier was ready as usual when summoned from the bullpen in the seventh inning Saturday, earning his first save of the season and No. 100 of his career in the A's 5-2 victory over the Boston Red Sox.

"It was a little chilly out there," said the 40-year-old left-hander. "I stayed in the clubhouse for the first six innings, but I was nearly frozen in less than an inning in the bullpen."

Despite biting cold and a whipping wind, Burgmeier warmed up in a hurry. He got the call with runners on first and third and two out in the seventh. With Wade Boggs representing the tying run, Burgmeier retired the 1983 American League batting champion on a routine fly ball and preserved the lead over the last two innings.

Burgmeier said he still feels at home in cozy Fenway Park. He should. He earned 40 of his 100 saves during five years with the Red Sox from 1978-82 when he played out his option and signed with Oakland as a free agent.

Dave Kingman and Dwayne Murphy supplied most of the offense. Kingman slammed a two-run homer, while Murphy also had two RBIs with a solo homer and a single.

Kingman lined a shot through a stiff crosswind into the screen in left-center after Bruce Bochte walked on a 3-2 pitch with one out in the second inning.

Murphy, who had an RBI single in the third inning after Donnie Hill singled and took second on a balk by Boston starter Mike Brown, compIted Oakland's scoring by drilling his first homer into the bleachers beyond the A's bullpen in right field in the seventh. The A's also scored an unearned run in the fourth on an error by Boston shortstop Glenn Hoffman, a single by Hill and a wild pitch by Brown, 0-2.

Winner Mike Warren, 2-2, allowed seven hits and two runs before needing relief in the seventh from Keith Atherton and then Burgmeier.

The Red Sox, who snapped a seven-game losing streak Friday night, scored a run in the third inning on a walk, a single by Jerry Remy and a grounder by Dwight Evans. They scored again in the seventh on a single by Rich Gedman, a walk and an infield hit by Remy.

Brown allowed eight hits before being replaced in the seventh.

Milwaukee.....6
Seattle.....2

MILWAUKEE (AP) — It was the victory, rather than whom it was over, that pleased Milwaukee Manager Rene Lachemann.

The Brewers, behind Mike Caldwell's seven-hit pitching, beat the Seattle Mariners 6-2 Saturday.

It took five games for Lachemann to get a victory over his former team. He was fired by the Mariners midway through last season.

"We just needed a win," Lachemann said. "There's nothing special about a 5-9 record."

Caldwell, who struggled with his pitches most of the game, was able to record his second complete game of the season.

"I thought my control was quite a bit off from my other three outings," said Caldwell, who stayed with off-speed pitches "I was getting the ball up all day."

"Caldwell gave us an outstanding game," Lachemann said. "It just shows that when you don't have real good stuff you can go out and win."

The Brewers scored four times in the second inning to chase Matt Young, 2-2, and give Caldwell all the runs he needed. Caldwell struck out three and walked two in gaining his third victory in four outings.

Ted Simmons triggered Milwaukee's rally in the fourth with a one-out single and Mark Brouhard followed with a double. Bill Schroeder then singled deep to second to score Simmons and Jim Gantner singled to drive in Brouhard.

Schroeder scored the third run on Rick Manning's fielder's choice that forced Gantner at second. Manning, after stealing second, scored on Paul Molitor's base hit. Roy Thomas then came in for Young to get the final out.

The Brewers added a run in the third on Gantner's bases-loaded walk.

Seattle scored in the fourth when Gorman Thomas led off with a walk, went to third on Barry Bonnell's single and raced home on Steve Henderson's single.

The Mariners got another run in the seventh when Bonnell singled, went to second on a wild pitch, and scored on Dave Henderson base hit. Manning's RBI single in the eighth gave the Brewers their final run.

Milwaukee's Cecil Cooper extended his hitting streak to 12 games with a single in the seventh.

He was selected Most Valuable Offensive Blocker, Most Outstanding Senior and Most Outstanding Senior Strength Award winner on the Pirate team this year.

Now, if he can find room for it in his growing trophy case, he's got one more: the Daily Reflector Collegiate Male Athlete of the Year award.

Also considered for the award was ECU swimmer, Chema Larranaga, a member of the Peruvian Olympic team both in 1980 and this summer in Los Angeles. Larranaga set two pool and varsity records, in the 1,000 and 1,650 yard freestyles. He also won the mile at the Eastern Collegiate Championships, and has qualified for the 1984 South American games.

Next week: the Collegiate Female Athlete of the Year award.

Valenzuela, Brock Battle Slumps

By JOHN NELSON
AP Sports Writer

Los Angeles Dodgers Manager Tom Lasorda thinks he may have found a cure for the ills of pitcher Fernando Valenzuela and first baseman Greg Brock.

All they needed was one good game, and Friday night, the doctor paid a visit.

Valenzuela earned his first victory in four starts with a five-hit, six-strikeout performance, and Brock, who came in hitting .146, had three hits, including a home run, two RBI and scored three times as the Dodgers defeated the San Diego Padres 8-2.

"It was good medicine for both of them," Lasorda said.

Valenzuela said his problems had been caused by poor control, but that wasn't a problem against San Diego as the Dodgers won their eighth game in the past 10.

"I had good location tonight, and that made the difference for me," Valenzuela said. "I put the ball where I wanted to."

The Dodgers also got home runs from Ken Landreaux, his first, and Terry Whitfield, his third, among their 10 hits off four San Diego pitchers.

The only runs off Valenzuela came in the fifth when Carmelo Martinez walked and Kevin McReynolds and Garry Templeton hit successive RBI doubles.

"We've just had some great pitching against us the last two nights," said Manager Dick Williams, whose Padres were beaten by Dodgers right-hander Alejandro Pena the night before. "We haven't been hitting like we should, but Fernando looked great throughout the game."

In other NL games, New York defeated Philadelphia 3-1, Chicago edged Pittsburgh 5-4, Atlanta beat Houston 8-7 and San Francisco defeated Cincinnati 6-4. Montreal at St. Louis was rained out.

Mets 3, Phillies 1

George Foster's RBI single snapped a 1-1 tie in the 10th inning, and the Mets added an insurance run when Philadelphia reliever Al Holland balked home a run as New York won its third straight game. Each of the Mets past three victories have come in the final inning of the game.

Jose Oquendo started the winning rally with two out when he was walked by Holland, who had come on in relief of Steve Carlton. Keith Hernandez then singled, sending Oquendo to second, and Foster singled home Oquendo. Hernandez went to third on the play and scored when Holland balked.

Pitcher Tim Leary drove in the Mets' other run with his first major league homer, but the victory went to Doug Sisk, who extended his scoreless streak to 10 1-3 innings with 1 2-3 innings' work against Philadelphia.

Cubs 5, Pirates 4

Mel Hall singled through a drawn-in infield with the bases loaded to give the Cubs a 10-inning victory over Pittsburgh.

Ryne Sandberg started the Cubs' winning rally off reliever Kent Tekulve with a triple. Tekulve then walked Gary Matthews and Bill Buckner intentionally to face Ron Cey. Cey grounded into a forceout at the plate, but Hall's singled scored Matthews with the winning run.

Matthews homered for Chicago, and Jason Thompson homered for Pittsburgh, tying the score 4-4 in the sixth inning.

Braves 8, Astros 7

Glenn Hubbard's error in the top of the ninth allowed Houston to tie the score 7-7, but he singled with the bases loaded and none out in the bottom half of the inning to give the Braves their one-run victory.

Dale Murphy, who hit a three-run home run in the third, started the rally with a double. Bob Horner, who was ordered to sacrifice, then beat out a bunt, and Chris Chambliss walked to load the bases.

Kevin Bass opened the Astros first with his first home run, only Houston's second this season.

Giants 6, Reds 4

San Francisco scored four unearned runs in the eighth inning to erase a 4-2 deficit and beat the Reds. The Cincinnati errors were by shortstop Dave Concepcion and third baseman Nick Esasky. Scot Thompson's two-run single tied the scoe 4-4, and the go-ahead run scored on a wild pitch by reliever Tom Hume. Dusty Baker drove in an insurance run with a single.

Right-hander Jeff Russell left after the Giants loaded the bases in the eighth. He had driven in two runs with a sacrifice fly in the fourth and a single in the eighth that put the Reds up 4-2.

Greg Minton, 1-0, got the victory and Gary Lavelle earned his second save.

Gibson Tunes The Clubs Of Professional Golf

HILTON HEAD ISLAND, S.C.(AP) — When golfers on the PGA tour need work on the most important part of their stroke, almost all of them go to see Lew.

Lew Gibson, custom club repairman for the PGA tour, adjusts, balances and tunes golf clubs for the pros. Working out of his custom-built trailer workshop, Gibson makes the sweetest club that much sweeter for the men who earn their living on the links.

"I don't do any one particular thing," he said. "I'm like a pit stop for A.J. Foyt in a race, but there are 200 A.J.s out here and every one of them says 'Lew, fix it, it doesn't feel right.'

"Their sense of feel is so phenomenal that they can describe exactly what they want," Gibson said of his customers.

Gibson, a Perrytown, Texas, native, was born in 1924. He has worked the PGA tour full time for the last six years, but his career in golf club repair spans nearly 40 years.

"I started in golf during the Depression in 1936. I worked a nine-hole, sand green golf course called Wolf Creek for 25 cents a day plus room and board," Gibson said.

"A banker named Carl Ellis actuually got me started in club repair. I rewrapped a putter for him with a leather grip and he gave me a dime. Ten cents was damn near a half-day's pay. I said, 'this is for me,'" Gibson recalled.

Gibson's golf days were partially interrupted by a 14-year stint in the Marine Corps from October 1941 to his retirement in 1954. He saw combat in World War II in the Pacific theater and action in the Korean War.

Gibson said he tried to get serious about golf in the late 1940s.

"I attempted a playing career for a while between the two wars, but I was never that good. I was a pretty good hustler, but I made more money fixing clubs for the fellows who beat me on the course,' he said.

Gibson's club repair has come a long way since the days he wrapped putters for a dime. This year he will travel more than 50,000 miles following more than 35 stops on the PGA tour. He also operates at three USGA events, the Canadian Open and plans to incorporate four stops on the LPGA Tour next year.

He has full-time contracts with the Information Services Division of AT&T and the R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. for the Vantage World of Golf. Gibson makes personal appearances and conducts clinics on club adjustment and tuning.

Gibson works on a flat rate when adjusting clubs for touring pros and also custom tunes standard manufacturer clubs the to pro's specifications.

Last Wednesday, Gibson was busy with a set of Northwestern irons for J.C. Snead. The club heads came from factory stock and he was modifying them to Snead's personal standards.

"J.C. liked the basic shape of the head, but he didn't like the looks," Gibson said.

"I grind them one head at a time and check with him and see if it is what he wants. We keep working together until we have exactly what he wants."

Gibson says he is a lucky man.

"I've basically had two jobs in my life — the Marine Corps and this — and the Marines wanted too much work for the money they paid. I love this. One, my business address is great," he said pointing to the lush greens and fairways of the Harbour Town golf links, "and two, I work for who I want, when I want and no one's gonna tell me different."

Surprisingly enough, Gibson has been all but blind in his left eye for nearly four years. But he had a cornea transplant almost two weeks ago and the surgery was a complete success. Gibson was on the golf course five days after the operation playing a round with his doctor.

Gibson's work is more a matter of mechanical perfection. He works to produce the feel and touch demanded by a professional golfer. Gibson's own tools and methods sometimes mean a big paycheck for one of the golfers — as in last year's Heritage Classic.

"Last year I was having a cup of coffee with Fuzzy (Zoeller) and he said that he thought his club shafts were a litle stiff. So I put a No. 1 shaft on his No. 2 club and he liked it. ... He went out and won the tournament."

Charger Errors Let Falcons Win

PIKEVILLE — Ayden-Grifton committed seven errors against C.B. Aycock Friday, with the final two in the seventh giving Aycock a 6-5 victory in Eastern Carolina 3-A baseball action.

Doug Coley went the distance on the mound for the Chargers, scattering eight hits and striking out 13 Aycock batters, but the defense cost the righthander the victory.

After one out, John Thomas reached first on an error and Duane Nichols singled. Johnny Carr tapped a grounder to shortstop, but Gene Johnson threw the ball wide at second base allowing Thomas to score. A throw to the plate was late, and catcher Roger Moye threw to second attempting to put out Carr.

Moye's throw went through to the outfield, and Nichols raced home with the winning run.

"We had three errors that inning that gave it away," Ayden-Grifton Coach Bob Murphrey said. "We were two outs away from one of the biggest wins of the year.

"For us, its our defense most of the time. (Jackie) Conway is out, he's our regular shortstop, so we had people out of position. With seven errors, I wonder how it was that close.

"Coley pitched a heck of a game. He didn't give up but two earned runs, the two home runs."

Paul Summerlin went 2-4 for the Falcons including a solo homer in the third, while Tommy Dunn also finished 2-4 with a solo homer in the fifth.

Coley led Ayden-Grifton with two hits in four trips to the plate and two RBI.

The Chargers posted three runs in the fourth, as Wesley Hardee opened with a double and scored on a single by Coley. Moye reached first on an error, and Johnson walked. Eddie Brown attempted the suicide squeeze but reached first with a bunt single to drive in Coley. Moye scored on a fielder's choice by Tony McLawhorn.

In the sixth, Coley singled and moved to third on a single by Johnson. Brown squeezed in Coley, and McLawhorn doubled in Johnson for a 5-3 Charger lead.

Aycock plated one run in the sixth before the winning runs in the seventh.

Ayden-Grifton, now 8-5 overall and 5-3 in the conference, opened play Saturday against Kinston in the Pitt Easter Tournament.

Edenton cut it back with one in the bottom of the sixth to trail 13-9, but two runs off a John Modlin homer in the seventh finished up the Washington scoring.

Joe Ange picked up the victory for Washington in his first appearance on the mound this year for the Pam Pack. Coming in in the second, his first pitch was the four-run shot hit by Bunch, but he did the job after that. He stuck out 11 and scattered eight hits, allowing but two earned runs.

Seattle Leads West, O's Trail East

Headache Time

Boston Red Sox catcher Gary Allenson (top) bends over third baseman Wade Boggs, holding his head at bottom, after Boggs was injured trying to catch an infield fly during second inning action Friday night against the Oakland Athletics in Fenway Park. AP Sports Writer

Would you believe the Baltimore Orioles in last place in the American League East and the Seattle Mariners in first place in the West?

Believe it . . . for now.

"I think we need to take it on a day-to-day basis to the All-Star Game break and then assess the situation," Jim Beattie said after checking Milwaukee on six singles and pitching the Mariners to a 5-0 victory over the Brewers and into the lead in the AL West, one-half game ahead of Oakland."We are keeping close and winning the games we used to lose."

Meanwhile, the world champion Orioles got a pregame pep talk from owner Edward Bennett Williams and then broke their second four-game losing streak of the young season with a 4-2 triumph over the Minnesota Twins on Eddie Murray's two-run homer in the 10th inning.

"Basically, he wanted us to forget about the past and go from here," said outfielder Gary Roenicke. "He told us to forget about the glory of 1983 and the slow start of 1984."

Elsewhere in the AL, the Detroit Tigers nipped the Chicago White Sox 3-2, the California Angels outslugged the Toronto Blue Jays 10-6 in 13 innings, the New York Yankees downed the Texas Rangers 4-1, the Kansas City Royals defeated the Cleveland Indians 6-4 and the Boston Red Sox beat the Oakland Athletics 3-1.

Rookie Alvin Davis cracked a three-run homer to back Beattie's nine-strikeout pitching.Davis' fourth home run of the season came with two out in the seventh inning, gave Seattle a 4-0 lead and chased Milwaukee starter Don Sutton.

"It was a game where we had an opporunity early to score," said Milwaukee Manager Rene Lachemann, whose Brewers have lost all four games against Seattle, Lachemann's former team. "Then Beattle overpowered us. When he has his fastball like he did tonight, he's almost unbeatable."

Orioles 4, Twins 2

Minnesota took a 2-0 lead in the third inning on Tim Teufel's two-run double. But Baltimore's John Shelby singled a run across in the fifth, Murray greeted Minnesota relief ace Ron Davis with a game-tying RBI single in the seventh and homered off Davis in the 10th following Cal Ripken Jr.'s leadoff single.

Murray broke out of a 2-for-20 slump and boosted his lifetime average against Davis to .440 on 11 hits in 25 at-bats, including three homers and eight RBIs.

As for a possible return appearance by Williams, Manager Joe Altobelli said the owner "can come back whenever he wants, whenever he's available."

Tigers 3, White Sox 2

Lance Parrish's disputed single with two out in the bottom of the ninth scored Lou Whitaker from third base with the winning run. Whitaker opened the ninth with a walk off Chicago reliever Ron Reed, was sacrificed to second and took third on a groundout.

Parrish followed with a soft fly ball on which left fielder Ron Kittle attempted a shoestring catch, but umpire Nick Bremigan ruled he trapped the ball and Whitaker scored to give the Tigers their 10th victory in 11 games this season.

"The ball was caught," said Kittle, whose two-run homer put the White Sox on top in the second inning. Detroit's Kirk Gibson singled a run across in the bottom of the second and tied it in the seventh on Larry Herndon's RBI single.

Angels 10, Blue Jays 6

Consecutive doubles by Rob Picciolo, Fred Lynn and Doug DeCinces triggered California's four-run 13th inning that ended Toronto's four-game winning streak. DeCinces also hit a sacrifice fly to tie the game in the ninth and singled a run across in the 11th as the Angels overcame a five-RBI performance by Toronto's Lloyd Moseby, who belted the first grand slam of his major-league career. Brian Downing homered for the Angels.

Yankees 4, Rangers 1

Ron Guidry fired a five-hitter for his first victory of the season and Ken Griffey's two-run single capped a three-run second inning. Guidry struck out seven, did not walk a batter and lost his bid for a shutout on Larry Parrish's eighth-inning home run. After Oscar Gamble's sacrifice fly in the first inning, the Yankees added three more in the second off Dave Stewart. After one-out walks to Andre Robertson and Omar Moreno, Randolph lined a run-scoring single. He and Moreno then worked a double steal and Griffey followed with his two-run single.

Royals 6, Indians 4

Frank White and Hal McRae hit home runs for Kansas City while winner Larry Gura yielded three runs in five innings and Dan Quisenberry pitched two innings of one-hit relief for his sixth save. White hit a solo homer off Neal Heaton in the first inning and Mcrae belted a two-run shot in the third. The Royals broke a 3-3 tie with two runs in the fourth. Leon Roberts singled, took third when second baseman Tony Bernazard misplayed Butch Davis' grounder and scored on Don Slaught's single. Onix Concepcion greeted reliever Luis Aponte with a sacrifice fly.

Red Sox 3, Athletics 1

Utility infielder Eddie Jurak ignited a three-run fourth inning with a double in his first time at bat this year and Boston went on to snap a seven-game losing streak. Jeff Burroughs' second-inning homer gave Oakland a 1-0 lead, but the Red Sox scored all their runs in the fourth on Jurak's double, Mike Easler's triple and doubles by Tony Armas and Glenn Hoffman. Relief ace Bob Stanley, who pitched 5 2-3 scoreless innings against Texas Wednesday night, blanked Oakland on one hit over the final 3 1-3 innings for his first save.

Irsay 'Ecstatic' Over Colts' Ticket Sellout

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Indianapolis Colts owner Robert Irsay is "ecstatic" about the unexpected stampede for season football tickets, which sold out two days after they went on sale, says his son, Jim Irsay.

"He feels great about it after all those years of struggling in Baltimore. He's ecstatic to see a place where we're really wanted," the younger Irsay, the team's general manager, said Friday.

Orders topped $8.1 million Friday and were still coming in.

Meanwhile Friday, U.S. District Court Judge William E. Steckler, as expected, rejected a Baltimore request and allowed the National Football League to deal with the Indianapolis Colts.

Steckler denied without comment the motion by attorney Edwin Thomas, who said earlier he expected that decision by the judge and would take the case to the U.S. 7th Circuit Court of Appeals in Chicago.

Thomas did not say when that appeal would be filed.

The NFL had been prohibited from operating with the Colts in Indianapolis under an injunction issued two weeks ago by a Baltimore judge. Approval of player contracts and television and radio agreements would have been delayed had the injunction been upheld.

Steckler's ruling, which he said was "effective immediately," referred only to the Baltimore injunction and its effects on the NFL's operations with the Colts.

The merits of a Baltimore suit to take over the team through eminent domain will be heard at a later time.

"It's been absolutely tremendous," the younger Irsay said of the rush for seats in the new Hoosier Dome. "We thought we'd have a great turnout, but we never thought in 2½ days we'd have it sold out."

The stadium will hold about 61,000, and enough orders had been received to ensure a sellout of the 57,000 that will be offered on a season basis for the 1984 NFL campaign. The rest will be held out for sale the week before each game.

The younger Irsay said no seat assignments have been made and that the management has not decided how to handle the overflow of orders for season tickets.

"We want to urge people to keep sending them in, but most likely there will be some cut-off date because of such a tremendous outpouring (of ticket orders)," he said.

The Colts moved to Indianapolis from Baltimore three weeks ago.

The younger Irsay said there probably would be a decision next week on the team's training site for this summer. A temporary headquarters has been set up at a closed elementary school on the city's northeast side, but that facility isn't adequate for training purposes, he said.

He confirmed the Colts are looking at several college football facilities, including Butler and Indiana Central in Indianapolis, as well as Purdue in West Lafayette and Anderson College.

"One thing (to consider) is the fields," the younger Irsay said of factors in the Colts' decision on a training site. "We have to have (football) fields that are level and adequate as far as size and condition. A couple places we looked at, the fields were not up to par. Next is air conditioned dorms with the right-sized beds. They have to be as large as possible for our players.

"Then we look at locker rooms. We're trying to find locker rooms that can hold 110-120 players. Whether we use their lockers or bring in our own, we need a room to handle that number of people. Also, we have to have accessibility (to the facility). Going to a major college could be difficult since they begin (practice) earlier (than the small colleges). We need to have the place to ourselves.

"I'd say Anderson's been impressive, but we're also talking a lot with Indiana Central," he said.

Use of the training facility would be only for this season since the Capital Improvement Board, which runs the Hoosier Dome, is obligated under its contract with the Colts to build a $3 million to $4 million office-training complex.

"The closer the better, of course," the younger Irsay said of the temporary site. "We're really trying to find one we don't have to put a lot of money in since we're only going to be in there one year."

The Colts will conduct a minicamp in the Hoosier Dome on May 30. The regular training camp will be in July, and the first home game will be Aug. 11 in an exhibition against the New York Giants.

Pirate Golfers Second At ODU

NAGS HEAD — East Carolina Univeristy's golf team closed out the 1984 season Friday, finishing second in the two-day Old Dominion Invitational Tournament.

Campbell University took first place in the team scoring with a 582 total, while the hosting Monarchs were second with a 585 team total. East Carolina ended up with a 589 total. Ten teams participated in the tournament.

Chris Czaja led the Pirate scoring with a 71-73—144 total. Other Pirates included: Mike Helms, 70-75—145; Roger Newsome, 74-74—148; David Waggoner, 75-77—152, and Don Sweeting, 78-77—155.

Conley Correction

D.H. Conley's boys' track team was the winner in a three-way meet held at West Carteret Thursday.

Conley finished the meet with 64½ points while Havelock had 56½, not 66½, as stated in Friday's Daily Reflector. The error was the result of miscommunication.

History Is Not On 76ers' Side

By BARRY WILNER
AP Sports Writer

History is not on the side of the Philadelphia 76ers.

The defending National Basketball Association champions fell into a huge hole Friday night by losing their second consecutive home playoff game to the New Jersey Nets. The underdog Nets blitzed Philadelphia 116-102 to grab control of their best-of-five opening round series. The next two games — Sunday and, if necessary, Tuesday night — will be played on the Nets' court.

The 76ers are trying to become the first championship team to repeat since the Boston Celtics did it in 1968 and 1969. And they are faced with a deficit only one other club, the Fort Wayne Pistons in 1956 against St. Louis, has ever overcome in a five-game matchup.

Julius Erving, who was held to 12 points by the aggressive Nets defense, surveyed his team's dire situation and said, "we have to get back to doing what we were doing earlier in the season and we have to do it quickly to win three games in a row."

Micheal Ray Richardson scored 32 points, handed out nine assists and made four steals for the Nets, who have won five of eight games against the Sixers this year.

"The 76ers look like a puzzled team," said Richardson, whose career seemed ended by a drug dependency problem prior to this season. "We came out aggressive, hard and solid. They made us shoot our jump shots and fortunately they were going down.

"When I made my first three shots I knew I was really on."

Richardson scored 24 of his points in the first half as the Nets built a 67-50 lead. When the 76ers battled back in the second half from a 24-point deficit to within five, he helped put the game out of reach with his third three-point field goal and followed with a three-point play.

"I really feel good," he said. "It's the best I've played in a long time. I feel that I'm completely back. I haven't played this well in three or four years.

"We're going for a sweep. We don't want to come back here. We want to win it at home."

Darryl Dawkins scored 22 points and Albert King 15 for the Nets.Moses Malone's 25 points and Andrew Toney's 22 were high for the Sixers.

Nets Coach Stan Albeck Albeck, asked if he expected to end the series Sunday, said, "You've got to be crazy. These guys (76ers) are not knocked out. They can come back. This is not over by any stretch of the imagination."

In other NBA play Friday night, it was Los Angeles 109, Kansas City 102, and Portland 122, Phoenix 116. The Lakers are up 2-0 in that series and the Suns and Trail Blazers are deadlocked 1-1. Both series resume Sunday.

Also on Sunday, Detroit is at New York and Utah visits Denver. Both of those series are tied 1-1.

Tonight, Boston, ahead 2-0, is at Washington; Milwaukee, also up 2-0, is at Atlanta, and Dallas, tied 1-1 with the SuperSonics, is at Seattle.

Lakers 109, Kings 102

The Lakers swept two games at home from Kansas City, which has not won in Los Angeles in 10 years. Kareem Abdul-Jabbar scored 26 points, Magic Johnson added 23 points and James Worthy came off the bench to score 18 for the Lakers.LaSalle Thompson led Kansas City with 23 points, and Eddie Johnson had 18.

After trailing 71-54 midway through the third period, the Kings stormed back to pull to within 83-81 early in the final quarter before the Lakers began widening the margin again.

"We'd like to finish it," said Lakers Coach Pat Riley. "We don't want to let them get back in it. They showed us in the fourth quarter they can come back."

Trail Blazers 122, Suns 116

At Portland, 27 points by Jim Paxson and 26 from Mychal Thompson led the Trail Blazers, who also withstood a furious fourth-quarter rally. Thompson added 13 rebounds as the Blazers dominated the backboards after being outrebounded badly in the series opener loss

Walter Davis scored 17 of his 25 points in the fourth quarter and sank a pair of free throws with 1:06 to go to slice Portland's lead, once 21 points, to 118-116.

Kenny Carr's basket with 50 seconds to play opened the lead to four and free throws by Calvin Natt and Carr clinched it.

"You don't let up on the accelerator when you're going uphill," Thompson said. "We barely made it over the top."

"We helped them by missing more shots," Davis said. "It's going to be a good series. We're not down, but we are a little unhappy. We wanted to win both games here."

Young Regains Some Respect

CHICAGO (AP) — For somebody out to regain the respect of his teammates and others around the United States Football League after a miserable week off the field, Los Angeles quarterback Steve Young made some big strides.

But despite his impressive statistics, including 422 yards in total offense, the Express fell 49-29 Friday night to the Chicago Blitz at Soldier Field.

"I played my heart out," he said, the tears welling in his eyes.

Indeed, the 21-year-old All-American out of Brigham Young, playing in only his fourth professional game, riddled the Chicago defense by connecting on 25-of-37 passes for 302 yards and one touchdown. He also rushed 16 times for 120 yards and another touchdown.

But his performance was overshadowed by events off the field earlier in the week, when he spoke at length to Chicago reporters that the 2-year-old USFL "may fall by the wayside ... sooner than you think." He also speculated that four or five teams would be swallowed up by the National Football League.

"The things that happened this week are very unfortunate," Young said. "I got drawn into something that I didn't want to be drawn into ... I never said nothing negative my whole life. I've been very positive all my life, and I certainly didn't want to offend anyone.

"I'm just going to work my butt off to earn back any respect that I've lost," Young said. "I've always been very positive and football means very much to me. I just want to forget about it from here on out."

In another USFL game Friday, Jacksonville beat Memphis 12-10.

Blitz Coach Marv Levy acknowledged that Young had a good game, but added: "There are also other quarterbacks in the league that throw the ball as well as him, and some throw it even better."

Blitz quarterback Vince Evans completed 13 of 25 passes for 134 yards and one touchdown. He also rushed for a pair of 1-yard touchdowns.

Chicago running back Gary Worthy, activated just before the game, led the Blitz in rushing with 119 yards on six carries.

Both the Blitz and Express are now 3-6.

In games last night, it was Arizona at Houston and Oklahoma at Birmingham. On Sunday, it's Denver at New Orleans; Philadelphia at San Antonio; New Jersey at Pittsburgh, and Washington at Oakland.

Monday night, it will be Tampa Bay at Michigan.

Linebacker Douglas West tackled Memphis running back Alan Reid in the end zone to give the Bulls their victory.

Recreational Boating Deaths — What type of person is most likely to be killed in a boating accident?

Well, a leading insurance company's statistical analysis reports that the person is likely to be a man in his 20s. Chances are he had been in a small boat that capsized, and he subsequently drowned. It is also very likely that either the victim or the person steering the boat had been drinking at the time of the accident. And surprisingly, it may very well have happened in clear weather and on calm waters.

Sex and age are major factors in boating fatalities. Males account for 90 percent of all fatalities.

The analysis also reported that 90 percent of the accidental deaths involve small boats.

Open motorboats account for 50 percent of the fatalities, while rowboats and canoes are involved in little more than 20 percent. Sailboats are the safest form of boating, accounting for five percent of the fatalities reported.

Drowning accounts for 85 percent of all boating related deaths. The major cause of these deaths is capsizing. Other reasons are falling overboard and colliding with another boat or object.

The report states that the leaing cause of recreational boating deaths may very well be alcohol abuse. Two out of every three boating fatalities are alcohol related and, in some areas of the country, almost two-fifths of the skippers involved in fatal boating accidents were judged to be "legally drunk" at the time of the accident.

Fifty percent of the fatal boating accidents occur in non-tidal calm waters — lakes, ponds, reservoirs, gravel pits — under good weather conditions (light or moderate wind).

More than half of the fatalities occur between May and August, when a greater number of boats are in use.

Seven out of 10 people killed in boating accidents did not use personal flotation devices, despite the fact that they were known to be on board.

Today, more than 60 million people participate in recreational boating as compared with 45 million in 1972. Also, the number of boats in use increased from 8.5 million in 1972 to 14.9 million in 1982.

The study showed that fatalities due to recreational boating accidents decreased from 1,437 in 1972 to 1,178 in 1982.

This analysis was based on statistics compiled by the Coast Guard, the National Center for Health Statistics, and the National Transportation Safety Board.

Wild Turkey Season Outlook Good — The outlook for the spring hunting season for wild turkeys is good according to a turkey specialist with the North Carolina Wildlife Resources Commission. The season opened on Saturday, April 7 and runs through Saturday, May 5. It is the only spring hunting season for big game allowed in North Carolina. Only bearded turkeys (gobblers) may be taken, and dogs may not be used in the hunt. The daily bag limit is one bird, and there's a possession and season bag limit of two birds.

Fishing Report — The only news this week comes from the Nags Head area where lots of three pound bluefish were being caught off the piers. Paul Hodges, owner of Calico Jack's Marina on Harkers Island, reports very little action. He thinks the trout, blues and flounder should start biting any day now.

Around the Wilmington area, spot, flounder, bluefish and an occasional trout have been caught.

Tar Heels Near Title

By TOM FOREMAN Jr.
AP Sports Writer

DURHAM — If North Carolina had any hits left in its bats, the Tar Heels hoped to put them to good use Saturday in the Atlantic Coast Conference baseball tournament.

The top-seeded Tar Heels pounded out 15 hits against North Carolina State, but needed clutch relief pitching from Bob Mulligan to claim a 13-12 victory Friday over the Wolfpack and escape the winner's bracket unscathed.

North Carolina and Clemson, which tied for first place in the ACC regular season, clashed Saturday at the Durham Athletic Park. The Tigers used a 10-run fifth inning to break a scoreless tie and eliminate Maryland 12-1 Friday.

Georgia Tech got 17 hits against Duke pitching Friday, but it took Matt Geist's ninth-inning solo home run and his 10th-inning, two-run single to lead the Yellow Jackets to an 8-4 victory. That triumph knocked the Blue Devils out of contention and set up a Yellow Jacket-Wolfpack encounter at 4 p.m. Saturday.

The survivors were to play at 7 p.m. If the Tar Heels win two games, they'll claim the tournament trophy. If not, there will be one more game Sunday at 2 p.m.

In earlier games Friday, N.C. State pulled out the heavy aluminum bats and banged out a 10-5 victory over the Blue Devils. North Carolina completed a 4-0 shutout of Maryland, with Scott Bankhead and Gordon Douglas combining on a three-hitter in a game suspended after six innings Thursday night because of rain.

"It was a very exciting ball game," North Carolina coach Mike Roberts said of the three-hour, 40-minute Tar Heels-Wolfpack slugfest. "I guess we were fortunate that it was the ninth inning and were still up one run."

Mulligan retired pinch-hitter Jim McNamara on a called third strike, then set the Wolfpack down in order in the ninth to record the save and make a winner of starter Roger Williams, 9-1.

Hugh Brinson, 5-1, was the loser for the Wolfpack.

"Both clubs have been swinging hot bats all year and tonight was no exception," N.C. State coach Sam Esposito said. "When we went to the bullpen, both teams struggled."

One player who has not struggled during the tournament has been Wolfpack designated hitter Jim Toman. Entering the tournament at .222, he has four home runs and four doubles in 11 at-bats. He now holds the tournament record for total bases at 24 and runs batted in at 11.

The Tar Heels led 13-8 before the Wolfpack mounted an eighth-inning rally on just one hit. Alex Wallace tagged a two-run homer to right-center field off Williams, and Tar Heel pitchers Tim Kirk and Walt Weiss surrendered five straight walks. Mulligan then came in and caught pinch-hitter Jim McNamara looking on a third strike.

Toman, Tracy Woodson, Tracy Black and Doug Strange smashed home runs in the Wolfpack's victory over Duke.

Toman cracked a two-run shot, his seventh, to right field to cap a three-run third inning. It was his third homer of the series, one shy of the tournament record.

Woodson added his 25th homer in the fifth — a two-run shot to left that gave him a career total of 46. That is two less than the ACC record of 48 set by Kevin Bunn of Wake Forest.

In the seventh, Strange led off by hitting a 2-0 pitch from Alan Soyer over the right-field wall for his fifth homer and a 7-0 lead. After Toman doubled, Black cracked his fifth home run to right field off reliever Dave Coughenour.

N.C. State starter Bud Loving was working on a four-hitter before the Blue Devils roughed him for four runs in the eighth. Capping that rally was a three-run homer by Ron Bianco, his ninth, and a two-out solo shot by Dave Amaro.

Seth Edwards added a bases-empty home run in the ninth to complete the Duke scoring.

Loving is 7-1. Soyer, 3-6, took the loss.

The Maryland-Clemson game was switched from Durham Athletic Park to Jack Coombs Field on the Duke University campus to keep the tournament on schedule after rain postponed the game Thursday night.

Maryland pitcher Alan Sadler hurled a one-hitter through four innings when the Tigers erupted for 10 runs. The big blow was Jay Fulton's grand-slam, his fourth homer. Run-scoring singles by Jim McCollum, Chuck Baldwin, Steve Baucom and Ray Williams aided the rally.

George Stone completed his first game in 10 outings for Clemson and raised his record to 6-2. Sadler is 2-5. Maryland finished at 14-14.

Pete Geist homered to tie the game in the ninth and contributed a two-run single in the 10th to lead Georgia Tech past Duke.

The Yellow Jackets held a 3-1 lead until Duke rallied in the bottom of the eighth. Mark Militello sent Fred Donegan home on a sacrifice fly and Ron Bianco followed with a two-run homer. It was his 10th home run and set a Blue Devil single-season record.

Pitcher John Horn's next offering sailed over the head of Russ Lee and both benches emptied. Order was restored, but the Blue Devil rally died.

Mike Stanford, who until this season had never registered a decision, picked up his second victory. Mark Sikorski took the loss and ended at 3-1 while Duke finished 25-13.

Meyer May Change Plans

FOXBORO, Mass. (AP) — Coach Ron Meyer says he's thinking of switching his plans to install a single-back offense for the New England Patriots now that the National Football League has acquired Craig James, an expensive acquisition from the United States Football League.

"We've been thinking of going to a single-back offense, but we may do some rethinking now," Meyer said Friday after the Patriots announced the signing of James, given his release by the Washington Federals, to a three-year pact.

Sources, who asked not to be identified, said the signing cost the Patriots about $1 million.

"He's a heavy-duty running back capable of doing everything a running back is called upon to do," said Meyer, who coached James at Southern Methodist University, adding, "We have three proven NFL running backs, so Craig will not have to do it all."

The others are Tony Collins, Robert Weathers and Mosi Tatapu.

James teamed with Eric Dickerson at SMU to form one of the most potent backfields in college football and was the sixth player chosen in the USFL's inaugural draft in 1983.

Hampered by injuries, he missed 10 of the Federals' 26 games during the last two years. Earlier this week, he passed a physical by Patriots team physician Dr. Bernard Zarins, said Pat Sullivan, Patriots general manager.

James has been sidelined since the second week of the season with an injury to his right knee.

"He's a very flexible player. He's a good receiver. He's a good, consistent runner, and he's also a good punter," Sullivan said. "In his senior year, he was the third-leding ground gainer in the Southwest Conference, and that says a lot."

The Patriots picked James in the seventh round of the 1983 NFL draft, but James opted for the USFL instead.

Berl Bernhard, Federals president, announced Friday that the team had released James from any future contractual agreements. He said James' injuries had made it impossible for him to provide the Federals with the offensive power the club had hoped for when it made him its first-round draft choice.

James originally signed a four-year, $2 million contract with the Federals. His release will mean a one-third reduction in the payroll for the financially strapped team.

American Farmers Eye New Chemical Sprayer

BY EARL ARONSON
AP Newsfeatures

A new "controlled droplet applicator" sprayer is being tested at Cornell University, which says it could revolutionize the way American farmers spray chemicals to control weeds, insects and diseases.

Researchers say this rotary or CDA sprayer could replace conventional hydraulic sprayers. The device needs only a few gallons of water to mix with chemicals to cover an acre of cropland. The hydraulic sprayers need as much as 20 to 40 gallons.

Researchers hope that even the amount of chemicals needed might be cut drastically, helping farmers cut chemical costs while reducing risk of environmental contamination.

William B. Duke, a weed scientist at Cornell's New York State College of Agriculture, says he is convinced after years of testing that CDA's concept of pesticide application is the "biggest single innovation since farmers first began using pesticides decades ago."

Farmers will eliminate heavy spray tanks, realizing a substantial saving in energy costs, and require fewer trips to refill tanks, Duke explained.

"The day is coming," he added, "when farmers will buy and use pre-mixed chemicals in small containers, much the same way physicians have ready-to-use vials for injections."

This would eliminate the need for farmers to mix chemicals with large amounts of water or worry about disposing of leftover chemicals safely.

The CDA includes a cone-shaped, electric-powered spray nozzle that rotates at high speed (up to 5,000 times per minute). The rotation forces the chemical solution to move up a series of grooves cut in the sprayer's inner wall; when the solution reaches the rim of the "cup," it hits a series of "teeth" that break up the solution into droplets.

"The faster the nozzle spins, the finer the droplet," Duke says. "Droplets from conventional hydraulic spray nozzles vary in size greatly, but the rotary nozzle makes generally uniform droplets. At 2,000 rpm, it produces droplets of 250 microns, or one 10,000th of an inch in diameter."

Duke found that droplets of this size are best for weed control because they are less susceptible to drifting to non-target areas even under moderately windy conditions.

He considers this sprayer's major attribute its ability to control weeds with a low volume of water.

Duke estimates that only two to four gallons of total spray solution per acre are needed to effectively control weeds, as opposed to the 20 to 40 gallons of chemical solution now being used with conventional sprayers. The scientist also found soybean oil to be an effective carrier and he recommends that one gallon of soybean oil be used, regardless of total spray volume.

Preliminary findings indicate that chemical rates could be reduced by as much as 50 percent.

Could Lose Patent Rights

GREENSBORO (AP) — Professors may keep profits from their writings, but inventors may lose patent rights and profits to the University of North Carolina at Greensboro under a policy adopted by the board of trustees.

The policy, adopted Thursday, applies only to university personnel who use university time or resources in their writing or inventing.

While officials said no ongoing research at UNC-G is likely to yield inventions, the policy requires inventors on the university payroll to report inventions developed with university resources to the UNC-G Patent Committee.

If the university retains patent rights, revenues from the invention will be shared with the inventor. After deducting for the cost of obtaining and protecting patents and marketing the invention, the first $50,000 in profits will be shared equally by the inventor and the university.

Bank Eyes N.C. Branch

BOSTON (AP) — Bank of Boston says it has applied with the Comptroller of the Currency to establish limited-purpose banks in 10 states along the Atlantic coast and in the Southeast.

Spokesman Wayne Taylor said Friday the bank was trying to position itself to take advantage of recent federal decisions that appear to lift some of the long-standing prohibitions against nationwide banking.

Bank of Boston applied to establish banks in Birmingham, Ala.; seven cities in Florida; Atlanta; Chevy Chase, Md.; New York City; Greensboro, N.C.; Hilton Head, S.C.; Nashville, Tenn.; Houston; and Vienna, Va.

Bank of Boston was responding to the comptroller's recent decision to end a moratorium on chartering "limited-purpose national banks" and the Federal Reserve Board's recent approval of U.S. Trust Corp.'s request to expand the activities of a Florida subsidiary.

In Bank of Boston's view, the Fed's decision effectively states that a bank holding company can own "deposit-taking entities" in other states so long as they do not make commercial loans.

If approved, the limited-purpose national banks, also known as "consumer banks," would be able to take deposits and make consumer loans and write mortgages but could not be involved in business lending.

Grain And Soybean Futures Prices Continue Up-Swing

By KEITH GAVE
Associated Press Writer

Grain and soybean futures prices continued their advance Thursday on the Chicago Board of Trade, where activity was light as traders anticipated next week's government crop report and prepared for the long holiday weekend.

Stock, bond and commodities exchanges in the United States and most other nations will be closed on Good Friday.

Bob Lekberg, a grains analyst with Shearson American Express, described the rally in grain prices as "bona fide" because prices rose "without any help" from the external markets. He noted that precious metals prices and currency futures were weak through most of the sesson.

Prices were bolstered by trader expectations that Monday's U.S. Department of Agriculture report, a nationwide inventory of grain supplies, will show sharp reductions in beans and corn, and a lesser reduction in wheat, Lekberg said.

He also noted that forecast of stormy weather in the western regions of the Grain Belt was supporting prices because more inclement spring weather could further delay planting and field preparations in the Midwest.

The Chicago Board of Trade and other exchanges are closed until Monday in observance of Good Friday.

Wheat futures prices settled 1½ cents to 3½ cents higher, with the contract for delivery in May at $3.71 a bushel; corn was 2¼ cents to 3½ cents high-er, with the May at $3.57½ a bushed; oats were unchanged to 2½ cents higher, with the May at $1.76¼ a bushel; and soybeans were ¾ cent lower to 1¾ cents higher, with the May at $7.80½ a bushel.

Meat and livestock prices opened lower as expected Thursday on the Chicago Mercantile Exchange in the wake of the government's cattle-on-feed report that showed a 2 percent rise from a year earlier in the 13 major beef-producing states.

But futures prices gained throughout the session and closed mixed in moderate trading, largely because traders expect cash prices to continue a downward trend, according to Bob Holbert, a meat a livestock analyst in Chicago with ContiCommodity Services Inc.

"The futures markets may wind up being a trading affair, since they're already so much lower than the cash markets," Holbert said.

A rally in live hogs and fro-zen pork bellies futures also helped offset losses in cattle prices, said Bob Kuhn, an analyst in Chicago with Dean Witter Reynolds Inc.

Kuhn added that anticipation that "the weather could turn nice anytime now," spurred some additional buying because a return to more spring-like weather would allow farmers to do more field work and have less time to market their live-stock.

Live cattle futures prices settled .37 cent lower to .30 cent higher, with the contract for delivery in April at 71.30 cents a pound; feeder cattle prices were .57 cent lower to unchanged, with the April con-tract at 66.90 cents a pound; live hogs were .05 cent lower to .30 cent higher, with the April at 50.17 cents a pound; and fro-zen pork bellies were .02 cent lower to .43 cent higher, with the May contract at 67.55 cents a pound.

Gold and silver fell victim to profit takers on the New York Commodity Exchange on Thursday after a mild rally pushed prices higher the day before.

"The general feeling was that the rally was overdone yester-day, and there was some profit taking," said Gail Levey, an analyst of precious metals with Shearson American Express in New York.

Futures prices settled lower after moderate trading in a narrow range. Gold was $1.70 to $3.10 lower, with the contract for delivery in April at $3 84.30 a troy ounce; silver was 8.2 cents to 10 cents lower, with the April contract at $9.32 a troy ounce.

Cotton prices remained firm and are expected to continue advancing Monday, according to Ernest Simon, a cotton analyst with Prudential-Bache Securities in New York. He cited export and sales figures released after the close of trading Thursday on the New York Cotton Exchange.

Sales of cotton for delivery during 1983-84 increased 119,200 bales, the USDA reported. Also, U.S. cotton exports totaled 222,-500 bales, a new marketing-year high.

Cotton closed unchanged to .49 cent higher, with the contract for delivery in May at 79.12 cents a pound.

Market Debate Continues

By JAMES F. PELTZ
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market keeps focusing on the economy, and the market's behavior of late shows the focus is anything but sharp.

For the past several weeks the debate has centered on whether the economy's expansion is slowing or not — a difficult task since economies do not turn on a dime.

Amid the debate, the stock market has bogged down in a so-called trading range pending some signal that could move prices in a definite, sustained direction.

For example, if one draws a horizontal line of the movement of the Dow Jones industrial average since the end of January, the line would resemble a steady pulse rate — its flows up and down in repeating intervals.

But investors are not about to stop guessing about the economy's growth, since it determines the direction of interest rates and inflation.

This past week the Commerce Department said the economy expanded at a very strong pace of 8.3 percent in the first quarter, well above the annual rate most economists had expanded.

Growth at that rate is unnerving to Wall Street since it increases the credit demands of businesses, which together with the Treasury's credit needs raises the upward pressure on lending charges.

But Wall Street is more concerned with the second and third quarters. And that's where the focus gets hazy.

Some observers suggest that given 8.3 percent growth in the first quarter, it is nearly inevitable that the economy is now slowing down. A boon for stocks?

Not necessarily, others say. Just because the economy is moderating, is it moderating to the point where rates will not only stop going up, but actually fall? If not, perhaps stocks are not the investment of choice.

For the manager of a multimillion-dollar investment portfolio, say a pension fund, this debate makes for some tough decisions.

John A. Mendelson, senior vice president of Dean Witter Reynolds Inc., proposed this past week being "fully invested" in stocks because stocks could well be "in a broad rebound this summer."

A "significant decline" in the yields of government bonds is in the offing, and the "second leg" of the stock market's bull rally "will be ignited by the start of this bond rally," he wrote.

But Leon Cooperman and Steven Einhorn, market strategists for Goldman, Sachs & Co., proposed nearly the opposite.

The wrote that "there is no reason to expect a sustained rise in the (stock) market at this time," and suggested to portfolio managers that they keep a "near maximum cash representation" and a "near minimum equity representation ..."

In other words, the best offense for now is a good defense, at least in terms of the stock market.

Yet the market managed a modest advance this past week, its second straight weekly gain.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials gained 7.95 to 1,158.08, but that was still down 128.56 points from its 1984 high of 1,286.64, which was reached Jan. 6.

The New York Stock Exchange composite index edged up 0.38 to 90.89, and the American Stock Exchange market value index rose 1.36 to 207.93.

Big Board volume averaged 83.19 million shares a day during the holiday-shortened week; markets were closed on Good Friday. The previous week's average daily turnover was 85.36 million shares.

Those investors who are defensive about stocks "are not really committing new funds to the market, but continue to trade stocks by switching from one group to another," says Michael Metz, technical analyst at Oppenheimer & Co.

That has contributed to the trading range in which the market is now stuck, and these ranges usually follow a sharp move, he says, adding that in this case the move was down.

"So the big question on Wall Street is, 'Is this the end of the decline or just a pause before it resumes?' There is no consensus about that, so the market gains no momentum," Metz says.

Mendelson of Dean Witter says not only would a bond market rally boost stocks, but that stocks are due for an upswing because history shows that rallies of more than 50 percent often were followed by 10- or 11-month pullbacks. This latest pullback, in terms of the overall market, is now more than 10 months old, he says.

But Einhorn of Goldman Sachs says he and Cooperman have their own consensus of at least two: "Cash will be the asset of performance" this year, he asserts.

They, like most others, believe the economy will indeed slow down, if it hasn't already.

"But we don't believe it will be slowing enough to alter the fundamental rise in interest rates we anticipate," Einhorn says. "At best it allows for some technical rally in the bond market (and lower interest rates) that would be short-lived."

Bell Companies Outshine Parent

By NORMAN BLACK
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — With the benefit of hindsight, it should not have been surprising that the Bell System companies might more quickly adapt to life without their former parent than vice versa.

After all, it was Ma Bell — the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. — that had to oversee the breakup of the Bell System on Jan. 1 while turning itself into a marketing-oriented firm, challenged on all sides by competitors. The Bell companies, by contrast, were left with their basic line of business — regulated, local phone service — untouched.

Nonetheless, AT&T and the seven Bell companies it created managed to surprise Wall Street this past week with first-quarter earnings reports. AT&T turned in a disappointing performance, below the expectations of most analysts, while the Bell companies showed unusual strength.

The contrast was drawn even more sharply by the fact that three of Ma Bell's former children did better than their former parent; it was reinforced yet again when AT&T Chairman Charles L. Brown acknowledged to reporters the company could not expect to reach the $2.02 per share earnings level it had earlier forecast for 1984.

AT&T disclosed its earnings on Wednesday in Milwaukee during its annual stockholders meeting, the first since the breakup. It reported after-tax income for the three months ending March 31 totaled $226.9 million, or 20 cents per share.

AT&T had forewarned Wall Street its earnings would fall below $300 million when it announced last month that its board of directors had declared a 30-cent-a-share dividend even though income wouldn't support that payout.

"But the earnings were surprisingly low," said Steven Chrust, an analyst with Sanford C. Bernstein & Co. "It's going to make the world sensitive to the fact that AT&T is not quite the investment that a lot of people bought it for. Nobody ever thought that AT&T's dividend would be at risk. But it might very well be."

The Bell companies, by contrast, were showing better than expected strength, attributed to efforts to trim expenses and reduce their labor forces. BellSouth, Ameritech and Bell Atlantic all managed to show up AT&T, reporting first-quarter earnings of $270.4 million, $257.6 million and $235.4 million, respectively.

Will Study

RALEIGH, N.C. (UPI) — Gov. James B. Hunt Jr. appointed a task force Friday to study whether North Carolina should set up a statewide emergency medical helicopter transportation system.

"When people are seriously injured in traffic accidents, or suffer severe burns, or when infants are born prematurely, every second counts in getting them the specialized medical care they need," Hunt said in a statement. "This is especially true in rural areas or in rugged terrain where rescue and evacuation may be difficult or time consuming."

North Carolinians currently can count on military airlifts based in Fort Bragg, but Hunt said that group has limits on its manpower and aircraft.

The "most-affordable" Peugeots

To Peugeot, "affordable" doesn't mean "stripped."
So even the least-expensive Peugeots are well-equipped Peugeots.
Power steering and power brakes are standard equipment. And reclining bucket seats. And a tachometer. And Michelin steel-belted radial tires. Even little touches like remote-controlled outside mirrors that de-ice themselves.
The Peugeot GL sedan.
And the Peugeot GL station wagon — a wagon so roomy that, with its rear seat up, it has more cargo space than any other wagon available in America.*
Perhaps the most comfortable "affordable" automobiles in the world today.

Authorities Foil Credit Card Ring

By COTTEN TIMBERLAKE
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Despite its importance, the proxy statement is possibly the least-read document distributed by corporations, an investor relations firm says. And companies are trying to combat that apathy with photographs and fancy graphics. But even sans glitz, the booklets can make interesting reading.

The proxy statement is "a legally mandated disclosure document," says John C. Wilcox, managing director of Georgeson & Co., a proxy solicitation and investor relations firm on Wall Street. "What goes into it is determined by the Securities and Exchange Commission."

The booklets, millions of which now are being mailed to shareholders, outline what business will be conducted at the companies' annual shareholder meetings and provide other information.

There are thousands of publicly held companies that hold annual meetings, which are mostly uncontested, Wilcox says, and about 80 percent of them are clustered in April and May.

Management's proxy card, really a ballot, and the proxy statement are mailed together, and must be preceded or accompanied by the company's annual report because, "The shareholder has the right to see how the company did last year before deciding how to vote," Wilcox says.

The materials are generally sent four to six weeks before the meeting and the proxies have to be returned by the annual meeting date.

The dissident has his own proxy card and statement that he mails to shareholders. But, "In the course of a year, I doubt there are 50 proxy fights" in which dissidents challenge management, Wilcox says.

What can shareholder's find out by reading their proxy statements?

Management's booklet tells them where and when the annual meeting will be conducted, outlines the business at hand and tells them who has voting rights.

It asks that shareholders ratify the company's auditors and it lists the directors who are up for election or relection.

"They can find out a lot of background information about the directors. They can find out about compensation of top management, not only salary, but also perks," Wilcox says. Retirement, stock option and other benefit plans are described.

They also can find out how much stock management and the directors own and the statement lists any shareholders who own more thar five percent of the company's stock.

The statement also says where the list of all shareholders will be made available for viewing just before and during the annual meeting.

Management proposals that are subject to shareholder approval also are outlined in the proxy statement. They could include an increase in capitalization or changes in the corporate charter — such as adopting cumulative voting or reincorporating in another state.

"If there is any theme for this year's annual meeting season it's the proliferation of these 'shark repellent' (anti-takeover) proposals," Wilcox says.

He said that over 90 percent of the management anti-takeovers proposals, which include staggering the terms of directors and increasing the number of outstanding shares, are being approved by shareholders.

Shareholder proposals that management opposes also are included in the statement.

"Usually (shareholder) proposals have a social, poltical, religious issue. Very often they are not related to the business of the company," Wilcox says.

There are fewer shareholder proposals this year than in the past, said Diana Wienckoski, administrator-information resources at the American Society of Corporate Secretaries Inc. She cited new proxy rules, that for example require a shareholder to hold at least 1 percent or $1,000 worth of stock for at least a year and at the time of the annual meeting.

"The proposals range over many many subjects, over many areas. I don't thinks there's any one specific theme this year," she said.

But South Africa remains "a very hot item," she said. Other subjects include nuclear power and military contracts.

Companies Dressing Up Bland Proxy Statements

NEW YORK (AP) — Virtually every bank in the New York area was victimized by a counterfeit credit card ring that ripped off $50 million in four states last year, officials said.

The ring, which was planning to expand its operation to Los Angeles to capitalize on the summer Olympic games, was smashed with the arrest of five men and the issuance of arrest warrants for six others, authorities said Friday.

Up to 30,000 counterfeit cards were seized in a raid Friday, said U.S. Attorney Raymond J. Dearie. The phony cards were sold on the street for $200 to $250 and used throughout the world for an average of $1,000 in purchases, Dearie said.

"It's the biggest that has been discovered anywhere in the world," Dearie said of the card-peddling ring.

Dearie said the ring, which fleeced banks in New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania and Florida, was broken by a police undercover operation while banks knowingly took $1 million in losses to aid the investigation.

At a news conference, Dearie said there were indications the ring had been planning to expand its operations to West Coast banks because legitimate cardholders had increased their credit lines in anticipation of the summer Olympic games.

Dearie said the ring obtained the names and account numbers of cardholders either by picking up carbons of vouchers signed in stores or from "low-level" bank employees. The data then was transferred to phony plastic credit cards, he said.

The ring sold the cards wholesale for $40 apiece, Dearie said. He said that each card was good for about a month, at which time it would be discovered as counterfeit when bills were sent out. Meanwhile, an average of about $1,000 in purchases were charged to each bogus card, Dearie said.

Authorities said the investigation began last May when postal agents opened an undercover storefront to purchase cards from the ring and sell them to users.

Dearie said the undercover operation handled 3,000 cards and actually sold 1,000.

The legitimate cardholders were protected because the banks were told of the sales and would not bill them for such purchases, he said.

Asked how many banks were involved, Dearie replied: "You name it."

The arrests were made Friday because the probers believed they had identified the printer and financier of the operation.

The suspects were taken into custody after an undercover inspector ordered 150 cards Thursday and went to pick them up at a Staten Island diner, which was not identified.

Agents then went to a residence in Glen Gardner, N.J., where Dearie said they confiscated up to 30,000 cards.

Dearie named the printer as Frank Grappone, 45, of Staten Island, and said duplicating equipment and additional cards were found in his shop in Bellmore, N.Y.

Arrested on conspiracy charges were Grappone; Roger Goodman, 46, of the New Jersey location; Emilio Miraglia, 40, of Brooklyn; Gilbert Oxios, 47, of Seaford, N.Y.; and Salvatore Golinello, 41, of Staten Island.

Arrest warrants, Dearie added, have been issued for Joseph Miraglia, of Brooklyn; Salvatore Cardella, 54, of Manhattan; Frank Barone, 55, of the Bronx; Frank Polito, 27, Robert De Sero, Sr., 43, and Florentino Zambrano, 39, all of Queens.

Surrounded by would-be usurpers and assassins, the emperors of Byzantium led risky lives. Of the 88 emperors from Constantine I to XI, 13 took to a monastery, and 30 others died violently — starved, poisoned, blinded, bludgeoned, strangled, stabbed, dismembered or decapitated, according to National Geographic.

Rabbits, Eggs and Baskets

Local Collectors Display Easter Knicknacks

In several Pitt County homes, collections that bring to mind the Easter season are used year-round. Rabbits, decorated eggs and handwoven baskets abound, and the collectors display their items throughout the year. The collections are especially appropriate for an Easter celebration.

The Easter Bunny would feel comfortable in the Greenville home of Ms. Harvey Wooten. The famous bunny would settle in comfortably with the 246 rabbits in Ms. Wooten's collection.

"I have every type of rabbit but a live one," Ms. Wooten said, displaying rabbits made of wood, crystal and porcelain. She has rabbit music boxes and stuffed rabbit toys. Rabbits grace mugs, plates, napkins and paintings.

"You don't have one rabbit for long," Ms. Wooten said jokingly. "Before you know it, one rabbit has multiplied into 246 rabbits."

Ms. Wooten has kept a log of the rabbits in her collection. "It's the only way I can remember them all," she said. She puts a number of the bottom of each rabbit item and records in a book where the rabbit came from and the date it was added to the collection.

She said she consciously began the collection about four years ago when she realized there were seven rabbits on her chest of drawers.

"Once you start a collection, it's amazing how many of that object you can find," she said. "Rabbits jump up everywhere." Easter is an especially hard time for a rabbit collector.

She said that most of the rabbits have been given to her by friends who know ofd her passion for the animals. She has received very few duplicates.

Sometimes she buys a rabbit to remember a trip or something special that has happened to her.

One of Ms. Wooten's favorite rabbits is a Steuben glass hand cooler shaped like a rabbit. Another special addition to her collection is a carved ivory rabbit from an estate in India that she found in an antique shop.

Egg Collection of Mrs. Rebecca Boyle

"Rabbits are warm and cuddley," Ms. Wooten said. "I have always liked them. In fact, two of my favorite books when I was young were 'The Little Rabbit Who Wanted Red Wings' and 'The Velveteen Rabbit.'" She said that since she was 8 years old she has been saying the phrase "Rabbit, rabbit, rabbit" as soon as she wakes up on the first day of each month for good luck.

Eggs have been collected by Mrs. Janet McGlohon of Greenville. The polished eggs, mostly made of alabaster, are displayed throughout her home.

The colors of the eggs in her collection range from a dark green to a light pink. She also has green eggs, blue eggs, yellow eggs, white eggs.

"I bought my first egg locally as an accent piece for a table," Mrs. McGlohon said. "I thought it was pretty, but I had no real intention of collecting them. But from then on I looked for the eggs as I traveled. Friends saw that I was interested in them, and began to give them to me." She now has 35 eggs in her collection.

Alabaster is a soft mineral deposit that is found in Italy, England and France, Mrs. McGlohon said. It is found in different colors and can be carved easily, and sanded and buffed to a high polish.

Most of the eggs Mrs. McGlohon has in her collection are Italian alabaster. A brown alabaster egg was purchased in Rome when the McGlohons traveled to Italy; another brown one was found on the Isle of Capri.

Mrs. McGlohon said she has eggs that were purchased in Mexico, Florida, Hawaii, the Orient and Virginia and Texas.

"No matter how many alabaster eggs you see, you probably can't find two identical eggs," Mrs. McGlohon said.

Mrs. Ruby Finch of Greenville has decorated real eggs for many years. Her efforts include not only Easter eggs, but also bridal eggs and Christmas tree decorations made from egg shells with lights placed inside.

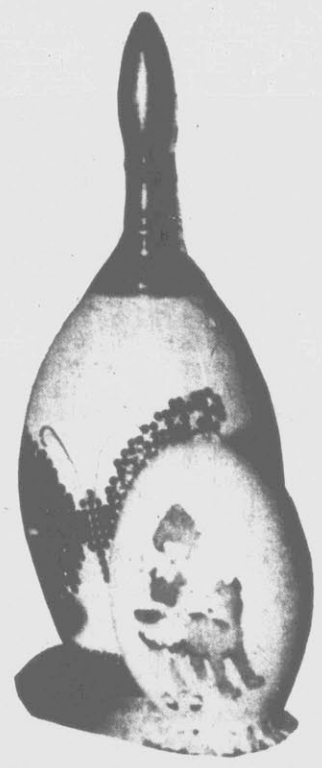
She said she uses mostly double yolk goose eggs and paints them or covers them with pearls, sequins and jewels.

She has coated eggs in gold leafs, covered them in seed pearls and covered them with 35 coats of paint.

Mrs. Finch said she began eggery as a hobby and taught herself. "My aunt had seen some and she told me about them," she said. "I tried one and got hooked on decorating the eggs."

Text And Photos

By Jane Welborn



Rabbit Collection of Ms. Harvey Wooten

She has given as presents most of the eggs she made, she said, and others were sold at bazaars and shows.

"Very few of the eggs I decorated were planned in my mind when I started," Mrs. Finch said. "I would just start decorating and use my imagination.

The story of the Easter egg, according to Mrs. Finch, comes from a Ukranian folk tale of a egg peddler who left his basket of eggs by the side of the road to go help Christ bear the cross. When the peddler went back to get his basket, the eggs were changed different colors.

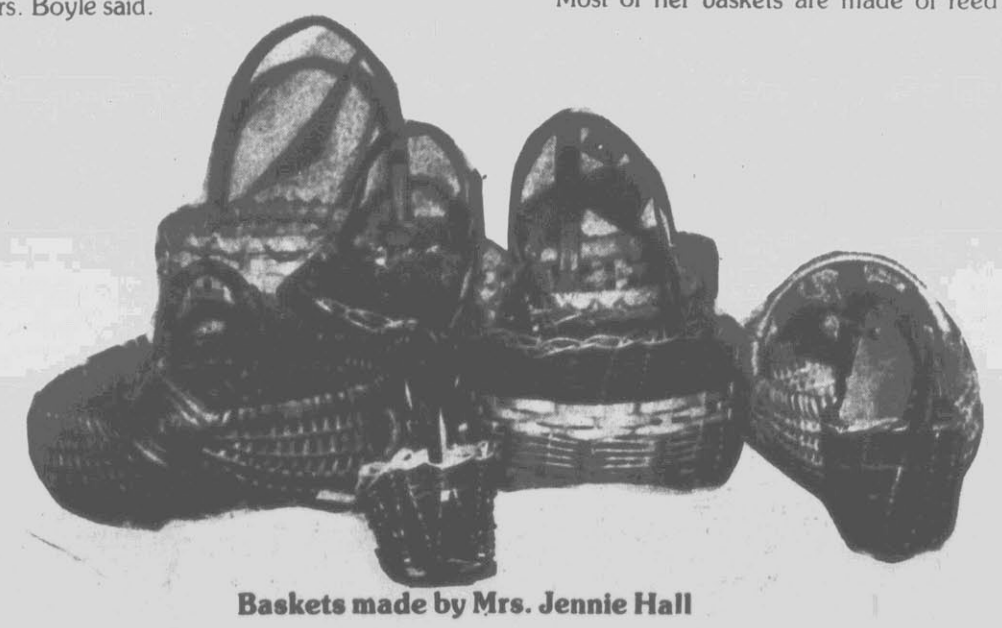
Decorated eggs originated during the Renaissance in Russia when a czar had an egg decorated with real diamonds, rubies and sapphires for his wife. French Faberge eggs covered with jewels are extremely expensive and are found in museums, Mrs. Finch added.

Eggs also fill the home of Mrs. Rebecca Boyle in Winterville — real eggs of all shapes and sizes, each decorated in a unique way.

The art of eggery can be elaborate, time consuming and expensive, but the results are well worth it, according to Mrs. Boyle.

Many different processes can be used in decorating the egg shells. Mrs. Boyle said common media used for decorating include decopage, oil paint, powdered chalk, wax painting and pen and ink. Jewels, braid, wrapping paper, sequins and any number of materials can be applied to the outside of the shell.

"There are no limits on what can be made but the imagination," Mrs. Boyle said.



Baskets made by Mrs. Jennie Hall

"My husband likes to do scratch carving," she said. "The process is something like scrimshaw." The shell is colored with natural dye and the image is made either by scratching the picture off and leaving the background dyed, or by scratch the dye off the background and leaving the picture the color of the dye.

A sharp cutting tool is used to cut the shell's "filigree work" — fancy shapes and doors which open. Dental drills can also be used to do the cutting, Mrs. Boyle said.

She began making the eggs 12 years ago as a hobby. "My sister went to a decoration class at the recreation center and learned how to decorate eggs. I wanted to know what she was doing and when she showed me the eggs she had decorated I said, 'Yuck. Who would want to do that.' But I decided to try it."

One of her first efforts, and her "pride and joy," is a shell covered on the outside with pearls, sequins and braid. The base of the shell is a music box which plays "How Great Thou Art" and the choir figurine inside the shell is illuminated by a lightblub hidden inside.

Although she no longer makes the eggs, she travels to "egg shows" to sell supplies for the art and to add to her collection.

"I've seen a decorated egg that sold for $3,500," Mrs Boyle said. "I also heard that another one sold for $5,000. You can make the eggs as fancy or as simple as you want them to be."

One of the rarest, and largest, eggs in Mrs. Boyle's collection is the Cassowary egg; the egg of this South American bird sells for $125-150. The smallest decorated egg in her collection is a snail egg from Hawaii; the cardinals gracing the egg must be viewed with a magnifying glass.

Mrs. Boyle said the eggs are purchased from researchers and from zoos, and that only unfertile eggs or eggs that didn't hatch can be purchased. "The zoos and researchers can then use the money they get for an egg that they would have thrown away," Mrs. Boyle said. "We don't bother conservation at all."

Game bird and domesticated bird eggs are also used in eggery, but it is against the law to possess song bird eggs, she said.

Handwoven baskets are one of Jennie Hall's specialties. The Winterville resident learned to make baskets six years ago at a workshop sponsored by North Carolina State University, and the fruits of her labor can be filled with eggs during the Easter holidays.

Most of her baskets are made of reed or split oak. The material can be dyed with chewing tobacco, walnuts or any type of dye that will stain human skin.

For some types of the baskets, material is woven around a frame. For others, the bottom of the basket is woven and the sides are brought up and woven.

Ms. Hall said she has seen baskets that sell for over $125.

Although rabbits, eggs and baskets bring to mind Easter celebrations, these local women display their collections year round. But the collections have special significance on Easter Sunday.

Karen Robinson Weds Ricky H. Wood

MRS. WOOD

Karen Dawn Robinson of Greenville and Ricky Herbert Wood of Ormondsville were married in a double ring ceremony performed by the Rev. Jack Mayo in the Ormondsville Free Will Baptist Church Saturday at 2 p.m.

Parents of the couple are Mr. and Mrs. William Robert Robinson of Greenville and Mr. and Mrs. Harrison Lee Wood of Ormondsville.

Music was provided by Dennis Teel of Greenville, pianist, and Celia Grace Moye of Kinston, who sang "We've Only Just Begun," "The Wedding Song" and "Througfh the Eyes of Love."

Given in marriage by her parents and escorted by her father, the bride wore a formal gown of white chantilly lace over peau de soie. The gown was fashioned with an open Queen Anne neckline adorned in appliques of silk Venise lace beaded with pearls. The Edwardian styled sleeves were fahioned in the sheer point d'esprit trimmed in scalloped chantilly lace. The full skirt and attached cathedral train featured ruffled tiers of the imported French lace. She wore a garden hat overlaid in point d'esprit and appliqued in silk Venise lace. The hat was accented with imported illusion veiling with a French pouf bow. The bride carried a cascade of pink roses and carnations, lily of the valley, stephanotis and baby's breath.

Teresa Cunningham of Walstonburg was honor attendant and wore a formal gown of daphne rose satin brocade. The sleevesless gown featured a fitted bodice and open neckline with pouf bows at the shoulders. The full circular skirt was trimmed in ruffles which draped into a bustle effect over the skirt. She wore a matching rose braid garden hat accented with matching illusion featuring a pouf bow with streamers. She carried a lace fan with silk minuette roses, pink silk daisies, lily of the valley with baby's breath and ribbon.

Bridesmaids were Angela Bullock of Winterville, cousin of the bride, Susan Clemmons of Ormondsville, sister of the bridegroom, Theresa Coward of Ayden, cousin of the bride, Debbie Morris of Belvoir, cousin of the bride, and Carol Johnson of Winterville. Several showers and a bridesmaids dinner was given prior to the wedding.

At Wits End

By Erma Bombeck

I think I always knew in my heart that World War III would have something to do with food — or the lack of it. I've seen it in dieters . . . the unrest, the greed, the violence over a leftover chop in the refrigerator that turned brother against brother.

Already the rumblings of war have started. They were mild skirmishes at first between the fast food forces: fried chicken turned against roast beef, tacos fought the secret sauces, and the McMuffin clan brutally attacked the French croissant. Since the hamburger entered the arena, however, the war has escalated. "Where'e the beef?" has not only haunted us every day on TV, it has been elevated to a political sacrament by Democrats and Republicans alike.

At Arizona State prison, "Where's the beef?" has become more than that. It's the battle cry of the decade.

Meat loaf ("where's the beef?") is being used to punish the inmates. This is the way it works. The first time a prisoner breaks the rules, he is prohibited from buying anything at the prison store. On the second day he misbehaves, he is not allowed visitors. On the third day, his personal property is taken away from him. On the fourth day, he loses all visitation rights and on the fifth day he begins a meat loaf diet that continues for 21 days.

The Arizona Civil Liberties Union called the program "cruel and unusual punishment."

This is not the first time food has been used to inflict pain. Have you ever had a mother who made split pea soup on the 12th of February and you were still eating it on June 8th? Or served you turkey from Nov. 24 to Jan. 12 dressed in a different costume every day?

Meat loaf is the secret agent of kitchens everywhere. No one ever really knows what's in it. It could be anything. when I was a child I used to stand at my mother'e elbow and watch her cook. In most things, she was quite open and sharinf. The meat loaf was always concealed by a large bowl in which she threw things she kneaded with her hands. When I asked what was in it, she said, "Lord, child, you don't want to know."

All I know is it once scratched the diamond on her wedding ring.

It's ironic when you think about it. Every year we go over the defense budget and spend billions to perfect a weapon that would bring a nation to its knees when we've got the perfect one right here in our kitchen.

I pray we never have to uee the meat loaf. We're not that kind of people.

Marriage Announced

MRS. DONALD MAURICE YELVERTON...is the former Jan Ellington Phillips, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Edward Ellington III of Greenville, whose marriage to Mr. Yelverton, son of Mr. and Mrs. Hubert D. Yelverton of Black Creek, took place Saturday in the garden at the home of the bride's parents. The couple will make their home near Greenville.

THAT'S BITTER

PLAINVIEW, N.Y. (AP) — Chemists have discovered what may be the most bitter substance on earth.

Called denatonium saccharide, the white powder is reportedly 3,000 times more bitter than quinine and retains its bitter taste even when diluted to one part in 100 million.

The company where the powder was discovered says a possible use is to put the substance in animal repellents or poisons.

Bridal Policy

A black and white glossy five by seven photograph is requested for engagement announcements in The Daily Reflector. For publication in a Sunday edition, the information must be submitted by 12 noon on the preceding Wednesday. Engagement pictures must be released at least three weeks prior to the wedding date. Cooking Is Fun

CRUDITES & DIP

The way a well-known cooking school teacher suggests offering this French hors d'oeuvre.

To make the Dip mix together 1 cup mayonnaise (made with olive oil), 1 cup sour cream and 1 teaspoon tabasco sauce. Finely mince 2 cloves garlic, 2 tablespoons capers, enough scallion tops to make ½ cup and enough parsley leaves to make ½ cup; add to mayonnaise mixture and chill for 1 to 4 hours. At serving time arrange at least 5 kinds of such vegetables as julienned carrots and green and sweet red peppers, blanched florets of cauliflower or broccoli, sliced fennel heart, trimmed scallions, radish flowers and cherry tomatoes on an attractive platter and surround with lettuce. Serve the Dip in one or two small bowls in the center or on the sides of the platter.

RING SIZE

PALO ALTO, Calif. (AP) — By using telescopes alone, astronomers once calculated that the rings around the planet Saturn were more than half a mile thick.

However, an astronomer at Stanford University, after analyzing the Voyager I radio signals that passed through the rings, has concluded the rings are no more than 50 yards thick.

MRS. McLAWHORN

Miss Jones, Mr. McLawhorn Marry

The wedding ceremony of Constance Hope Jones and Daniel Christy McLawhorn, both of Greenville, took place Saturday evening at seven o'clock in the Shelmerdine Pentecostal Holiness Church.

The Rev. Bobby Williams conducted the double ring ceremony. A program of wedding music was presented by organist Randy Buck of Greenville. Pansy Sue Hardee of Ayden, sister of the bride, sang "Let It Be Me," "The Wedding Prayer" and "Just You and I." The wedding was directed by Sybil Morris of Ayden.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Troy Lee Jones of Route 2, Greenville. Parents of the bridegroom are Mr. and Mrs. Claxton McLawhorn of Greenville.

Given in marriage by her parents and escorted by her father, the bride wore a formal gown of white organza over peau de soie designed with a Queen Anne neckline outlined in re-embroidered lace accented with silk Venise lace appliques. Organza and chantilly lace fashioned the full bishop sleeves, edged with an organza ruffle. The full circular skirt and attached semi-cathedral train were trimmed in re-embroidered chantilly lace and a ruffle of organza. She wore a walking length illusion veil trimmed in lace to complement her gown and carried a bouquet of spring flowers.

Maid of honor was Kristy Hardee of Ayden, niece of the bride. She wore a formal gown of jacquard taffeta in American beauty designed with an open neckline and fashioned with a fitted bodice with pouf bows at the shoulders. The full, circular skirt was trimmed in ruffles of jacquard taffeta which draped in a bustle effect over the skirt back. She wore a matching derby hat trimmed in schiffli lace and carried a bouquet of spring flowers.

Bridesmaids were Carolyn Allen of Winterville and Judy Peele of Ayden, both sisters of the bride; Kim Baker of Hertford, Tempie Quinn of Winterville, and Cristina McLawhorn and Alisa McLawhorn, both sisters of the bridegroom from Greenville. Each bridesmaid wore a formal gown of jacquard taffeta in contrasting shades of daphne rose, huckleberry pink, powder, lightning and lilac styled like that of the honor attendant. They each wore derby hats in colors to match their gowns and carried a bouquet of spring flowers.

Flower girl was Gretchen Hardee of Ayden, niece of the bride. She wore a full length gown of dusty rose taffeta styled similar to that of the attendants. She carried a white basket of spring flowers. Ring bearer was Todd Peele of Ayden, nephew of the bride.

The father of the bridegroom was best man. Ushers were Jonathan McLawhorn, brother of the bridegroom, Wesley Smith of Greenville, nephew of the bride, and Larry, Jim and David Hardee, all cousins of the bride from Greenville; and Wayland Hardee of Ayden, brother-in-law of the bride.

The mother of the bride wore a formal gown of burgandy tinaseta Italian silk designed with an open neckline. The mother of the bridegroom wore a dusty rose dress with a pleated skirt identical to that of the mother of the bride.

After the ceremony, a reception was given by the parents of the bride in the fellowship hall of the church. Guests were greeted by Mr. and Mrs. Ola Porter of Greenville, aunt and uncle of the bride. Cake was served by Margaret Porter, aunt of the bride, and punch was poured by Patricia Wilson of Dunn. Goodbyes were said by Mr. and Mrs. Gentry Boyd of Greenville. Terry Good of Greenville, cousin of the bride, presided at the register.

An after-rehearsal dinner was given by the parents of the bridegroom at the Golden Corral Restaurant.

The bride is a graduate of D.H Conley High School and is employed by Pitt County Memorial Hospital. The bridegroom is a graduate of D.H. Conley High School and is employed by Piggly Wiggly.

After a wdding trip to Charleston, S.C., the couple will reside at Route 2, Ayden.

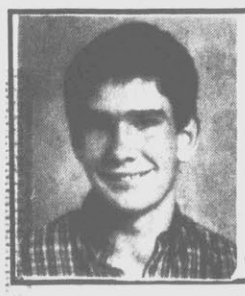
MRS. LIVINGSTON



On The Young Side

By Clay Deanhardt

Who is the representative from Madison County that is the present speaker of the house in the N.C. Legislature? Just ask any Rose High Quiz Bowl team member and they'll tell you — it's Liston B. Ramsey. But last week the team didn't know this important fact and it cost them the state Quiz Bowl championship.

Rose got to the state playoffs by first winning the county round and then placing second in the district round. Then, last Saturday, the team arrived in Raleigh to face the 15 other teams to make it that far. Out of 260 teams that began the competition in the county round and the 72 teams that made it to the district contest, these were the very best teams from throughout the state; the last survivors in a competition bent on proving the validity of Darwinistic philosophies.

Rose easily defeated its first opponent, Pamlico, by the score of 150-35 but then Rose had to face the mighty North Carolina School of Science and Math, the team that had won the state for the last two years in a row. The competition was fierce and challenges and protests by both teams kept the spectators on the edge of their seats. But by the time the dust had settled, Rose came out victorious, edging out the enemy by 10 points, 175-165, on the final question of the match. The entire audience gave a standing ovation to the winners. That put Rose in the semi-finals, where they faced New Hanover, a team that scored over 200 points in their first two games. Once again, the team came out with a win, this time by a score of 175-140 and this put them in the final round against Hibriten. The contest was close through the first two rounds and in the last round, Rose was down by five points with the final question, worth 30 points, going to them. Unfortunately, none of the team members could come up with the name of Ramsey and Hibriten took the state championship, 145-140.

Second place out of a starting field of 260 teams isn't bad though and the team deserves congratulations. One last time, this year's starting team was Derek Dickens, Elizabeth Ellen, Betsy Kane and Steve Worley. Alternates were Clay Deanhardt, Doug Frelke, Kevin Hewett and Charles Moore.

Advisors Barbara Mallory, Brenda Lewis and Virginia Jones also deserve a lot of credit for their support of the team. Excerpts from the competition, including the final two rounds, will be shown at 2 p.m. today on PBS.

This has been a busy week at Rose because the list of students to be accepted to the prestigious Governor's School this summer have been announced. Those attending GS West in Winston-Salem are: Betsy Kane in art; Ingrid Lalik in dance; Doug Frelke in drama; Charles Moore in natural science; Clay Deanhardt in social science; and Andrea Bath, Sara Burden, Robert Haggard, Amy Moore, Danielle Neiman, Sheila Pearson and Samantha Steingold, all in instrumental music.

Those attending GS East in Laurinberg, will be Leah Harris in drama, Ginny Close and Beth Parham in instrumental music and Anne-Lynne Davis in social science.

A safe and peaceful Easter holiday to each.

Miss Nowell and Mr. Rehm Exchange Wedding Vows

MOUNT OLIVE — On Saturday at three o'clock in the afternoon in the First Baptist Church here, Lela Marsha Nowell and Charles Richard Rehm, both of Greenville, exchanged wedding vows. The Rev. Anthony Z. Gurganus officiated at the double ring ceremony.

MRS. REHM

A program of wedding music was presented by Steele Sasser, organist.

The gown was fashioned of organza, chantilly lace and Venise lace designed with a Queen Anne neckline with pearls, lace and crystals. The gown had sheer lace sleeves and an empire waist with matching lace. The full skirt accented with lace appliques was worn over a hoop and the chapel train bordered in chantilly lace was designed with satin streamers. She wore a fingertip veil of silkened illusion attached to a half wreath of silk flowers accented with pearls and satin streamers. She carried a bouquet of gardenias centered with a lavender orchid.

Mrs. Pamela Casteen Edwards of Goldsboro was matron of honor. Bridesmaids were Kathy Pearce Sayers and Francine E. Lane, both of Greenville; Jody L. Lancaster of North Myrtle Beach, S.C.; Elizabeth F. Reynolds of Zebulon and Suzanne E. Conner of Raleigh.

Honorary bridesmaids were Mary Frances Casteen and Cheryl Hatem, both of Goldsboro; Martie Lamm of Wilson, cousin of the bride; Joan R. Balkcum of Raleigh and Jane Rehm of Rocky Mount, twin sisters of the bridegroom.

Barry W. Rehm of Rocky Mount, brother of the bridegroom, was best man. Ushers were William Milton Jr. and Ralph Mark Nowell of Goldsboro, brothers of the bride; Kevin Sayers, Donald F. Julian and Ralph B. Hawinks of Greenville.

Cheryl Hatem of Goldsboro presided at the register. Mrs. Cecil Langley of Calypso directed the wedding.

Following the ceremony, a reception was held in the church fellowship hall. Hosts and hostesses were Mrs. Mary B. Nowell, grandmother of the bride, and Mr. and Mrs. Ervin Privette, all of Wendell; Mrs. Marjorie N. Lamm of Wilson and Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Winton Nowell of Front Royal, Va., aunts and uncles of the bride. Mrs. Evelyn Hooks of Fremont and Mrs. Fay Rhodes of Goldsboro served cake and Mrs. Loretta Grant of Goldsboro and Mrs. Marguerite Winbon of Fremont poured punch. Guests were greeted by Congressman and Mrs. Charles O. Whitley of Mount Olive and goodbyes were said by Dr. and Mrs. Robert H. Shackleford of Mount Olive.

Following the rehearsal, a barbeque dinner was given at the Southern Wayne Country Club by the bridal couple. Friends of the bridal couple were hosts for a party and dance at the Southern Wayne Country Club following the dinner.

The Goldsboro Country Club was the setting of a bridesmaids luncheon. Hostesses for the event were Mrs. Evelyn Shackleford, Mrs. Miranda Conner, Mrs. Opal Knowles, Mrs. Gaynelle Barfield, Mrs. Catherine Reinhardt, Mrs. Dorothy Sykes, Mrs. Arlene Talton, Mrs. Audrey Whitley and Mrs. Virginia B. Wrenn-Creel Vows Solemnized LUCAMA — The wedding ceremony of Delores Ann Creel and William Lee Wrenn, both of Route 6, Greenville, was held Saturday afternoon at two o'clock in the Lucama Church of God. The Rev. Willam Henry Wrenn, father of the bridegroom, performed the single ring ceremony.

The gown was designed with a modified Queen Anne neckline with simulated pearl trim and a slightly raised waistline with a satin ribbon belt. The ruffled hemline extended to form a chapel length train. She wore a bandeau style headpiece with nylon lace trim to match the bridal gown. The white fingertip veil had a blusher of nylon netting. She carried a Bible covered with a bouquet of yellow silk roses with baby's breath.

Maid of honor was Amy Elizabeth Wrenn of Lucama, sister of the bridegroom. Bridesmaids were Barbara Jean Creel Bryant of Wilson, sister of the bride, and Lisa Michelle Turner of Lucama. Each attendant wore a wine colored floor length gown of lustrous polyester designed with an empire bodice and triple spaghetti straps. The gown was complemented with a detachable ruffled cape of polyester chiffon with bow trim at the neck. Each attendant carried a spring bouquet.

MRS. WRENN

Jami Jo Carraway of Greenville was flower girl. She wore a wine colored floor length gown and carried a small basket of silk spring flowers. Ring bearer was Chris Mitchell of Cornelius, nephew of the bridegroom. He carried a white heart-shaped pillow of acetate satin trummed with lace and satin ribbons with the wedding band and a yellow rose bud.

Best man was Jimmy Lee Jones of Greenville. Ushers were Thomas Randall Wrenn of Lucama and Ernest Keith Wrenn of Cornelius, both brothers of the bridegroom.

A reception was held outside behind the church.

Cost Of Living Can Be Reduced

"The cost of living is like the weather; everybody talks about it but few people really expect to do anything about it," says Dr. Thelma Hinson, extension family resource management specialist, North Carolina State University.

Research has shown that an individual or family can reduce living costs by as much as 10 to 20 percent just by closely monitoring and changing daily practices. Ten practices which can help the average person reduce living costs are:

- Simplify your basic life style. Distinguish between real needs and wants. Eliminate wants until you reach your goal.
- Budget your money. Decide how much is to be saved, spent and shared. Make a written plan and stick with it. Stay within your spending allowance.
- Study everyday living habits to reduce waste. Avoid overbuying, impulse buying, excessive use of credit and wasting goods. Keep a close check on miscellaneous spending; this is about 15 percent of some people's budgets.
- Consider total cost before purchasing. Installation cost, upkeep and maintenance all count.
- Try to plan ahead to take advantage of seasonal sales.
- Be cautious about borrowing.
- Recycle items for further use by family members or others.
- Consider substituting handmade and homemade for items purchased at the store.
- Reduce transportation costs. At a total cost of 32 cents a mile, an unnecessary 10-mile trip costs $3.20.
- Make sure insurance is adequate. Too much means dollars are wasted on premiums, but too little leaves you open to possible financial ruin.

Women Of Tehuantepec Are Still Macho

(EDITOR'S NOTE — In Mexico, men have traditionally been dominant. But not so in Tehuantepec. There, it is the women who rule the roost, for reasons that are both physical and economic.)

By MONTE HAYES
Associated Press Writer

JUCHITAN, Mexico (AP) — Mexican men are known for flaunting their machismo, but throughout the sweltering Isthmus of Tehuantepec they tread softly.

In Juchitan and nearby towns, it is the tall, fiery women known as Tehuanas, famed as traders and political rebels, who wear the pants.

They are members of the Zapotec Indian tribe that dominates the windswept narrow waist of land in southeastern Mexico between the Pacific Ocean and the Gulf of Mexico.

A local politician not in their favor recently discovered that they are not women to be trifled with. When he entered the public market that spills into the streets around Juchitan's municipal palace,the beefy Tehuana vendors splattered him with fish blood. He quickly retreated and has not been seen thereabouts since.

"Here, women are respected," says Hermila Guerra Carrasco, a stout 32-year-old Zapotec matron who sells fruit drinks from a kiosk in Juchitan's central plaza.

In traditionally male-dominated Mexico — where machismo sometimes takes the form of contempt and mistreatment of women — the isthmus is home to a society in which women rule the roost.

The Tehuanas run the market, shops and much of the other commerce in this town of 100,000 inhabitants, relegating the men to work in the fields or as laborers in town.

Bright as peacocks in their sweeping, floor-length skirts, they appear to drain color and life from the listless men of the town.

The men are often seen sitting in the shade of buildings to escape the scorching sun as the statuesque Tehuanas stride down dusty streets carrying baskets of goods on their heads.

If a man happens to get in the way of one of the husky women in the crowded market, more than likely she will elbow him out of her path without appearing even to notice him.

The younger Tehuanas of the isthmus are regarded as among Mexico's most beautiful women, their black eyes and cinnamon skin set off by rainbow-colored skirts and brightly embroidered "huipiles," cotton blouses.

As much as half a foot taller than other Indian women, they appear even bigger because of their long dresses and regal bearing.

Their daily attire is colorful, but on fiesta days they don more elaborate dresses, large halo-style bonnets of white lace and gold filigree jewelry.

"They are proud of their identity. That is evident because they show it continuously with their language and dress," says Alicia Barabas, an anthropologist with the National Institute of Anthropology and History.

At night, when the tropical heat eases, the Tehuanas fill the plaza in front of the municipal palace. They buy tacos from passing vendors, stuff them with meat shaved from baked cow skulls, swap salty stories and eye any attractive man who passes by.

Sometimes whistles accompany the approving stares. A foreign journalist who visited Juchitan recently provoked shouts of "Guero (blondie), come on over."

The dominance by women in the isthmus extends back to before the Spanish conquest and is based on their skill as merchants as well as their control of the family's pursestrings.

The market in Juchitan, the biggest in the region, overflows with the standard fare in meat, vegetables and fruits. The Tehuanas also hawk such local delicacies as armadillo and iguana, both sold bundled up but alive.

Marcario Matus Gutierrez, head of the local cultural center, says that most men in the region work in agriculture, a seasonal occupation that leaves them little earnings.

"The woman has more income than the man," he says. "What she earns in one month, the man earns in six months. It's not that the man doesn't work. He just doesn't produce money like the woman."

In addition to their fame as traders, the Tehuanas, especially those from Juchitan, have earned a reputation as rebels against outside authority.

Matus Gutierrez says the Zapotecs of the isthmus have "a defiant attitude" toward authority because they were not defeated militarily by the Spanish, instead coming to an agreement that initially gave the local towns some autonomy.

In 1660 four Tehuanas led a rebellion against the local Spanish governor, killing him. The uprising was put down and the women were captured and decapitated as punishment.

In 1866, a group of French soldiers landed on the Pacific coast near the town of Tehuantepec as part of a French invasionary force. Matus Gutierrez says the local men did not want to resist, but the women shamed them into fighting and then led the men into battle. The outnumbered French force was wiped out.

"This has remained in the collective memory of these people," Matus Gutierrez says.

Present-day authorities are just as likely to get a taste of Tehuana ire.

In 1980 the Tehuana women led the mob that seized the municipal palace after the ruling Institutional Revolutionary Party, the PRI, won bitterly disputed elections.

Most recently, dozens of women as well as men were arrested in December when they battled police and soldiers sent to retake the palace from PRI opponents who lost another heated election.

Speaking of the Tehuanas, local PRI leader Jaime Mendoza says, "Those women are fearless. They will turn on anyone."

Dear Abby

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1983 by Universal Press Syndicate

She Wants To Send Late 'Thank Yous'

DEAR ABBY: I'm an intelligent, successful women with a silly problem I'm embarrassed to ask my friends about.

In my last semester of college I married a wonderful man. My career was beginning to bloom, my wedding festivities were tri-state and I was much less sensitive to the feelings of other people than I am now.

In short, I sent written thanks to about half the friends and family who gave me wedding gifts, and I don't know quite what to do about the others. You see, it's been five years. I still have the list of names and addresses, but I don't know what to say — if anything.

My marriage is strong, my son is adorable, but my conscience is anything but clear. What should I do? I know I wouldn't excuse this kind of negligence in anyone else, and I don't know whether I should excuse it in what was a younger, flightier me.

GUILTY CONSCIENCE

DEAR GUILTY: Ignoring your problem will not make it disappear. Don't look for a "clever" way to say, "Better late than never." Admit your embarrassment, apologize for your tardiness and simply say, "Better late than never."

•••

DEAR ABBY: I am going with a very fine young woman. She has been married before. (So have I.) I would like to ask her to marry me, but she has made it plain that she doesn't care for diamonds or anything flashy. Any suggestions?

A MAN OF MEANS

DEAR MAN: Give her a pearl necklace — with no strings attached.

•••

DEAR ABBY: I am the mother of a boy 5 and a girl 2 1/2. Can you recommend any books that will help me explain sexual abuse to my children? I want them to be aware that they have the right to say no to anybody who does something they feel uncomfortable with. But I want to tell them in a way that won't frighten them.

The older they get, the more I realize that I won't be able to watch over them 24 hours a day. I want them to be prepared to deal with that situation if, God forbid, they should ever have to.

HOUSTON MOTHER

DEAR MOTHER: Ask the librarian at your public library if there are such books. (There should be.) Also, your local bookstores will surely have some. In the meantime, tell your children that their bodies are private, and they have the right to say no to anyone who attempts to violate that privacy.

And be sure to tell them that if anybody — and I mean anybody: relatives, close friends, neighbors or sitters — tries to entice them into secret "games" and makes them promise they won't tell, they should immediately tell you. Statistics show that most children are abused by relatives, neighbors or friends of the family.

•••

DEAR ABBY: What is the official position of the Roman Catholic Church regarding human artificial insemination? Some say the church condemns it, and others say it depends upon which diocese you live in.

NEEDS TO KNOW

DEAR NEEDS: Artificial insemination was rejected as not morally acceptable by Pope Pius XII as early as Oct. 22, 1951, in an address to Italian midwives. He stated that parents should be completely dedicated to their children, and that this involvement carries over into the marriage iteslf, so much so that articial insemination cannot be approved because it is such a depersonalized procedure, and that which is sacred is reduced to the level of the biological.

Couple Unites In Marriage On Saturday Afternoon

The wedding ceremony of Betty Jean Smith and Ronnie Eugene Buck, both of Greenville, was performed in Jarvis Memorial United Methodist Church Saturday at 2 p.m. by ministers, Rick and Judy Jennings.

Parents of the bride are Mrs. Rose Marie Whitehurst and James Curtis Smith of Greenville. Parents of the bridegroom are Howell Buck of Clay Root and Mrs. Chris Catapano of Greenville.

The bride was escorted by her father and wore a white formal gown of alencon lace which featured lace covered bodice, Queen Anne neckline accented with pearls and sequins and full bishop sleeves with lace cuffs. The skirt was A-line. It had multiple tiers of lace bordered with ruffled matching lace which flowed into a chapel length train. She wore a lace covered Juliet caplet with a waltz length veil. She carried a bouquet of long-stemmed pink roses.

The maid of honor was sister of the bride, Doreen Lynn Smith of Greenville. The flower girls was Azure Marie Chappell, niece of the bride, and Mary Ellen Sidsey, niece of the bridegroom.

The best man was Allen Meeks of Black Jack and ushers included John Fields and Richard T. Moye.

Misty Darr directed the ceremony.

The bride works at Marathon Restaurant in Greenville and the bridegroom works at Silverthorne Electric Co. in Greenville.

The couple will live in Greenville after a wedding trip.

A reception was held after the ceremony at the Ramada Inn.

Mrs. Cassie Tyson served cake and Ms. Darr poured punch.

TV PRICES

PORTSMOUTH, Va. (AP) — Television sets today are better than those of the past but their price is only a bit higher, according to a video products maker.

Jacques Robinson of General Electric says the average retail price of a TV set in 1967 was $568. Had prices grown with the consumer price index increases, he says, the average set today would cost $1,682.

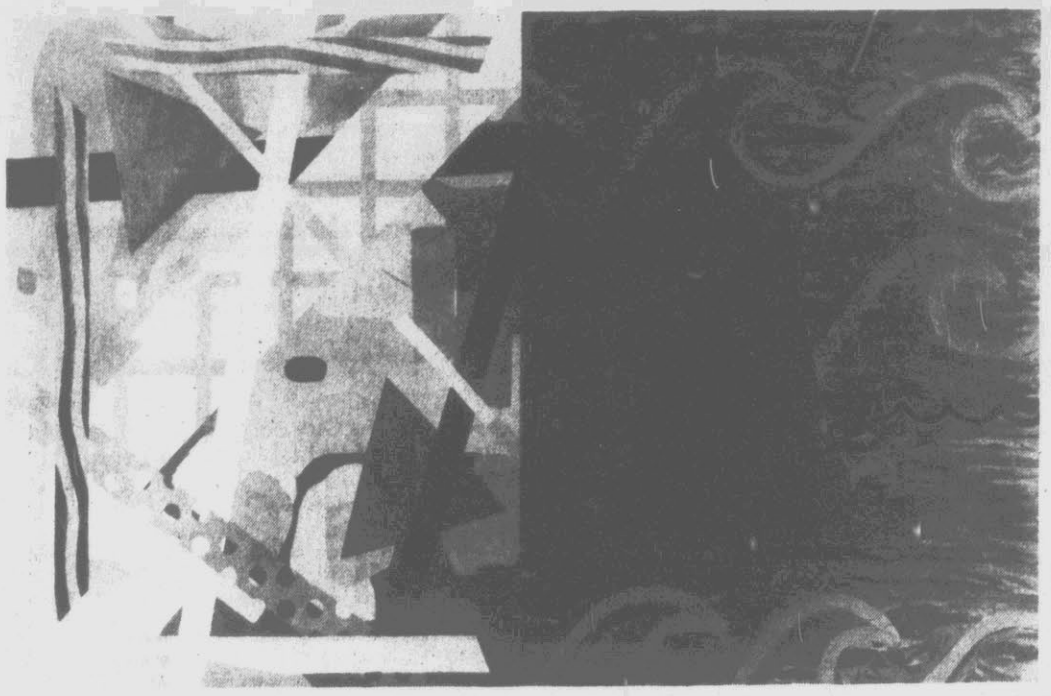
1984 NCAE Show Opening Saturday



A PAINTING ... by George McKim of Greenville is one of 109 works by 105 North Carolina artists selected for the 1984 North Carolina Artists Exhibition at the N.C. Museum of Art, Raleigh. McKim is one of 13 artists from Greenville and one from Bear Grass whose work was chosen from 1,466 entries by more than 800 North Carolina artists. (Photo courtesy NCMA)

RALEIGH — The 1984 North Carolina Artists Exhibition, a juried show of 109 works in a variety of media by artists from around the state, opens Saturday at the North Carolina Museum of Art in Raleigh, to be on view until June 3.

Designed to provide a showcase for new developments among North Carolina artists, the show icnludes painting, sculpture, drawing, photography, ceramics, metalwork and weaving. Additionally, the 1984 show is the first to include video and film.

This will be the 43rd showing of the exhibition, which had its beginnings in a statewide non-juried show sponsored by the N.C. Art Society in 1937. Held annually through 1980, the exhibition was suspended for three years while the museum gradually closed the galleries at its former location in downtown Raleigh and moved into the new building on Blue Ridge Boulevard.

Now presented as a triennial event, the 1984 NCAE has been organized under a new format. Formerly selected by a panel of jurors, the exhibition now shows works chosen by a single guest curator. Howard N. Fox, associate curator for exhibitions at the Hirshhorn Museum, Smithsonian Institution, has selected the 109 works from 1,466 entries, the largest number ever submitted to the NCAE. More than 800 artists sent entries to the 1984 show. The work of 105 artists, including a team of two collaborators, has been chosen.

The exhibition presents a wide variety of styles in both abstract and figurative art. Also included are two installation works created for specific sites in the musum, as well as five works in film and video.

Accompanying the exhibition is a catagloue which illustrates each of the works being shown. The exhibition and related activities are supported in part by funds from the North Carolina Art Society.

Of the 105 artists whose work was chosen for the NCAE, one, Davy Davenport, is from Bear Grass. Thirteen are Greenville artists — Bill Byers, Karyn Drum, Tom Grubb, Jim Jacobs, Norman Keller, Charles Kelser and Jacob Postma (working as a team in a video work), Edward Levine, Betsy Markowski, George McKim, Betty S. Melton, Bob Ray and Terry Al Smith.

Museum hours are 10 to 5 Tuesday through Saturday, 1 to 5 on Sunday, closed Monday. There is no charge for admission. For more information, call 833-1935.

London Bridge was transported across the Atlantic in 1971 and opened as a tourist attraction at Lake Havasu, Ariz. The original bridge over the Thames was opened in 1831.

Book News

By SUSANNE H. LONG

April's offerings on the new books shelf in the children's room will provide a variety of pleasant reading expereinces to delight young ones. In "Dawn," Caldecott Honor Book artist Molly Bang captures the poignancy of a Japanese legend, adopting it to a 19th century setting.

A poor shipbuilder rescues a wounded Cnaada goose, releases it, and soon thereafter meets and marries a beautiful, mysterious woman who weaves the sails of ships. The husband is tempted by a man who wants a racing schooner with a set of magical sails called Wings of Steel. The woman agrees to oblige her husband with his promise not to come into the room where she is weaving. His impatience and curiosity lead to an astonishing discovery.

All fans of Maruice Sendak's "Where the Wild Things Are" will appreciate the similar adventures of Simon in "Simon's Book" by Henrik Drescher. In a dream adventure, a boy's pens and ink bottle defend him against a nighttime beast. Their invigorating romp through the child's drawing pad results in an imaginative, colorful picture book.

Older children will enjoy "Melinda Takes a Hand" by Patricia Beatty. When Melinda and her sister are stranded in the Old West, Melinda's adventures revolve around her involvement with a wide assortment of problems: two English gentlemen long to build a castle on the prairie; the Mittelman family wants other Jewish settlers to share in synagogue services; and Judge Garway's Great Dane insists on wandering. The story is fast-paced and funny, and characters are lively.

In "Benjy in Business" by Jean Van Leeuwen, a third-grader struggles to earn $22.95 for a fielder's mitt. Since saving his allowance or getting a job is not practical, Benjy tries a lemondade franchise, a toy sale, and a car and dog washing business. Benjy's enterprises are entertaining as he discovers business is tougher than he had expected.

Interesting non-fiction selections include an informative model book, "Fighter Planes" by Ed Radlauer, describing models form the Sopwith Camel in the Boeing P-12 and ME 109. "Catnip" by Millicent Selsam provides an intriguing introduction to one of nature's unusual plants, and "The Early Family Home" by Bobbie Kalman, an excellent choice for children interested in history, describes in detail the problems and pleasures of early American life.

A Review

'Secret Agent' A Walloping Story

"Secret Hostage." By Adele H. Blake. Winterville, N.C. Creative Resources Systems, Inc., Paper, 225 pages. $6.95. (Available in local bookstores)

This book, although written as fiction, states without equivocation there is corruption in the federal judiciary in eastern North Carolina and questions the extent of its roots.

On the back cover is the statement: "Secret Hostage is a true story. Only the names have been changed to protect the guilty, as well as the innocent." However, the names of persons and places have been only thinly disguised.

Phil and Adele Blake are hard-working successful tobacco farmers. Phil has been indicted by the IRS on charges of income tax fraud, but he feels his problems are innocent errors easily explainable.

Throughout the year 1977 he is subjected to repeated attempts by a variety of characters to involve him in bribing the trial judge. The couple at first are worried but concerned enough so that Adele keeps a detailed record of the attempts. As the harassment continues they come to suspect the motives of everyone connected with the case.

The story moves forward from March through December, but occasionally there is confusion about the chronological order of events. There is unnecessary repetition; for instance, we are told at least four times of the financial problems with the couple's lawyers. There are numerous printing errors.

No doubt, the book was intended to be self-serving, but circumstantial evidence does abound. One wonders why the author chose fiction as the medium. Except for a few direct accusations, which could be left to the reader's imagination, most of the story is documented.

In spite of its defects, it is a walloping good story. There is intrigue and suspense enough to hold our attention. There is pathos — Adele must undergo surgery for cancer just as her husband prepares to enter prison — but it never becomes maudlin. The description of life on the tobacco farm is vivid and we are able to identify with Phil and Adele and their children. We grow with them from relative naivete to the point where they "don't believe in justice any more."

The cover design by David Allen is inspired. It shows a partially completed picture puzzle. Indeed, the story is a mosaic of incriminating pieces, but we look in vain for the piece which contains the "smoking gun."

PLAYING SOLO

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — Some musicians find relatively few compositions that feature their instruments in a solo role. But now there is a competition seeking to remedy the problem.

The current round of the George Eastman Prize Competition is open to works for double bass — the largest instrument in the string family, but one that few composers have given the musical spotlight.

The international competition, which carries a $5,000 prize for the winner, is sponsored by the Eastman School of Music of the University of Rochester. Entries are due by the end of 1984.

Krasner Retrospective Next At Chrysler

NORFOLK, Va. — Nearly 60 large-scale paintings and works on paper have been selected for exhibition at the Chrysler Museum in Norfolk from the widely acclaimed retrospective organized by the Museum of Fine Arts, Houston, and curated by Barbara Rose.

The exhibition, which will open April 27 (to be on view through June 17), traces the art of Lee Krasner, born 1908, a pioneer member of the New York School of Abstract Expressionist and the widow of the late Jackson Pollock. The show includes works from her "Little Image" paintings of the late 1940s through large collages of the 1950s, and mural-size canvases of the 1960s, '70s and '80s.

Upon closing at The Chrysler Museum, "Lee Krasner: A Retrospective" will travel to the Museum of Modern Art in New York and then to the Musee National d'Art Moderne in Paris.

Partial funding has been provided by a grant from the National Endowment for the Arts, Shell Companies Foundation Inc., and the Jesse H. and Mary Gibbs Jones Exhibition Endowment Fund. Additional assistance for the catalogue has been provided by the DeWitt Wallace Fund No. 3 in Community Funds, Inc.

Barbara Rose of the Museum of Fine Arts in Houston, one of the leading art historians in the United States, will lecture on "Lee Krasner and the Origins of Absract Expressionism" at Chrysler at 5:30 p.m. May 9.

The Chrysler Museum is located at Olney Road and Mowbray Arch in Norfolk. Museum hours are 10 to 4 Tuesday through Saturay, 1 to 5 Sunday, closed Monday. Admission and parking are free. For more details, call 804/622-1211.

PUBLISH OR PERISH

BLOOMINGTON, Ind. (AP) — A historian at the University of Indiana has suggested that Galileo was caught up in the "publish or perish" syndrome of many modern-day scholars.

Richard Westfall says the famous astronomer, who had been appointed to the court of the Grand Duke of Tuscany because of his discoveries of moons circling Jupiter, was under pressure to produce more.

PAPER SACKS

PENSACOLA, Fla. (AP) — The brown paper grocery sack was conceived in 1883 when Charles Stillwell invented a machine that made self-opening bags.

Stillwell's sacks opened with a flip of the wrist and stood alone on oblong bottoms. Today, American supermarkets use 22 billion such bags annually, according to St. Regis, a maker of bags.

Perils Of Writing In A Minor Tongue

By RISTO MAENPAA
Associated Press Writer

HELSINKI, Finland (AP) — The trouble with writing in a minor language such as Finnish, says award-winning author Paavo Haavikko, is that what sounds right in his tongue seldom sounds right in other languages.

Haavikko recently won the University of Oklahoma's Neustadt International Prize for Literature, recognizing his status as one of the best current writers in a small language. It's the most important award for a Finnish author since F.E. Sillanpaa won the Nobel Prize for Literature in 1939.

Writing in the language understood by just over 5 million people is "an asset because the language is terribly young and therefore very versatile," Haavikko said in an interview with the Associated Press.

"It's a drawback because it's very difficult to translate into any other language," he said. "By just mixing the words, you can get many meanings, which is not possible in the major languages that must follow a more logical pattern. Therefore, it's difficult to make Finnish breathe in English."

Sitting in the downtown Helsinki office he calls Arthouse, the corporate name under which he publishes his novels, plays, opera librettos, TV plays, aphorisms and other literary works, the 53-year-old author reflected on the art he turned to three decades ago after deciding that selling real estate wasn't for him.

"Writing is such tough work I wouldn't recommend it to anybody," he said. "I write about two hours a day, but after that I'm completely washed out."

Haavikko became literary director of Helsinki's Otava publishing house in 1967 but left the post last year to devote all his time to writing. "A writer always carries with him the dream of the novel when one is free to write, but for me, it's not so," he said. "It's work, work and more work."

Haavikko began writing in 1951, when he was 20. Since then he has won all the national literary prizes of this literature-mad country, including the Literature Prize of the State eight times.

He fits into no literary niche.

"He did not have to go through any preparatory stage to find his style — he was born complete into Finnish poetry," said Finnish critic Kai Laitinen.

Another critic, Pekka Tarkka, said: "Haavikko's dramatic works are temporally diverse. The scene can be in any period, from the time of the Icelandic Sagas to the present. The stage setting can just as well be on land or on sea, in a primitive woodman's hut or in a king's court. His characters can be gods, heroes of epic poems, king's bishops, businessmen or intellectuals. His characters reflect the hard realities of life both gloomily and bitingly, but often characterized by shrewd comedy."

Haavikko's main project at present is a history of Waertsilae, Finland's biggest private company.

A tall, bespectacled man with a gray goatee, Haavikko avoids publicity and shunned most requests for interviews after an international panel of judges awarded him the 1984 Neustadt Prize last month.

He has a reputation as a keen businessman, and he frowns when he talks about the possibility that most of the $25,000 stipend from the Neustadt Prize will go for taxes. He has applied for a tax exemption for the prize money, but the government has not yet made a decision.

Choral Society To Sing Brahms' 'Requiem'

Soprano Jon Ward Shaw and bass-baritone Thomas E. Mercer will be featured soloists in the Greenville Choral Society's spring presentation of Johannes Brahms' "Requiem," to be presented at 3 p.m. April 29 in Wright Auditorium on the East Carolina University campus.

Tickets are $3.50 for adults and $2 for students, and may be purchased at the door or in advance from any Choral Society member.

The Choral Society will be joined by the Women's and Men's Glee Cubs of ECU to provide a chorus of over 100 singers. Rhonda Fleming, msucial director of the society and a faculy member of the ECU School of Music, will conduct.

The "Requiem" will be performed with a full orchestra comprised of community and ECU musicians.

Jon Shaw has an extensive background as soloist in large choral masterworks such as Haydn's "Lord Nelson Mass," Handel's "Messiah," and Schubert's "Mass in B." She has also sung leading roles in "Carmen," "The Magic Flute" and other operas. Her most recent solo appearance in Greenville was in the Bach "Magnificat" with the Choral Society in 1981.

Thomas Mercer is a music evanagelist who has appeared on television in North Carolina, Florida and Tennessee, and as guest soloist in concerts and oratorios. He has sung the title role in Mendelssohn's "Elijah" and frequently appears with Metropolitan Opera star Jerome Hines in "I Am the Way." He most recently appeared with the Greenville Choral Society as bass soloist in Haydn's "Theresa Mass" presented last spring.

The Greenville Choral Soiety has presented a broad spectrum of major choral works to the community since its inception in 1969.

"Greenville has an incredible wealth of talented musicians who work for several months in preparation for each concert in order to bring quality performances of masterworks to the community," said director Rhonda Fleming.

The Brahms "Requiem" is an example of the Romantic era of music, a work rich in harmonies and soaring melodies set to scriptural text.

Youth Publishes Entertainment Journal

By FRANK SANELLO
UPI Entertainment Reporter

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — Who is Todd Jensen and why are top directors, actors and studio executives willing to confide their past and future to him?

Director Sydney Pollack discussed the problems of getting Dustin Hoffman into a girdle for "Tootsie" with Jensen.

John Badham revealed his first "industry" job as a delivery boy at Universal and why he refused to direct the sequel to his monster hit "Saturday Night Fever."

A studio chief in Culver City divulged a new process that turns vintage black and white films into color.

Private chats with Clint Eastwood, Sylvester Stallone and Harrison Ford are planned for the near future.

Jensen is the publisher of Entertainment magazine, which features movie and videogame reviews, gossip and cable TV columns, celebrity interviews and box-office reports.

Entertainment has published fourteen monthly issues to date, costs 50 cents and has a tiny circulation of 50.

So why are all these high-powered talents willing to talk with a publication whose "saturation" area is beautiful suburban Burbank?

His celebrity subjects are probably tickled by the fact that Jensen is 13 years old.

Despite his youth, the eighth-grader puts out a sophisticated product.

In the October issue, Pollack discussed the influence of France's New Wave on his film style and called Dustin Hoffman a "difficult...Miss America."

Badham used one of two interviews with Jensen to plug his new production company and decry the lack of good scripts. The interview, which USA cable taped, took place in Jensen's basement where he publishes the magazine with the help of two contributing editors, his aunt and 10-year-old brother Matt.

Jensen solicits the stars by sending copies of Entertainment to their press agents and follows up with a phone call. Clint Eastwood's publicist said to call back when Eastwood's next picture opens, the only time the superstar talks to the press.

"It helps," Todd admitted, "when people take a 13-year-old seriously."

The magazine has grown up along with its publisher. An early issue when Jensen was 11 quoted Badham as saying, "A lot of actors are real stuck up and selfish and know-it-all. Matt Broderick was real smart and clever."

He insists his aunt transcribed the tape of the interview.

"A lot of it was boring," he said.

Two years later, the publisher was writing about avant-garde filmmaking and journalistic ethics. The March issue contains the first of a three-part series on "violence, sex and profanity" in Hollywood.

Not all his reportage is so high-minded. And some reviews make John Simon sound like a Hallmark greeting card.

Of the female lead in "Footloose" he wrote, "Lori Singer, wearing inch-thick makeup, looks like Max Factor's test model."

Jensen is not above gossip, as when he reported that Steven Spielberg and George Lucas were both chasing after Barbra Streisand in London.

Another issue contained a bona fide scoop about the plot of the sequel to "Raiders of the Lost Ark."

The young publisher keeps very busy. Besides putting out the magazine, he writes for the school newspaper and yearbook. After he appeared on a local children's TV show featuring child prodigies, the producer took him aside and offered Jensen a job as the show's resident film critic. "That's Incredible!" called to interview Jensen.

For a UCLA screenwriting course, the youngster cranked out a script about the cocaine trade in Los Angeles, which he hopes to pitch to Sydney Pollack. Jensen says he would prefer to direct and have Pollack star.

He is already planning a sequel to his unpublished novel, "Killjoy," about a nuclear holocaust.

But his life is not all glamor and investigative gossip.

He was kicked out of the premiere of "Yentl" by a press agent who refused to believe Jensen was a legitimate reporter.

The publisher got into the screening by showing a security guard a copy of his magazine.

'Bedroom Farce' At Center Stage

GOLDSBORO — The Center Stage Theater of Goldsboro will present its final production of the 1983-84 season with six performances of "Bedroom Farce," a British comedy by Alan Ayckbourn. The action centers on the course of one long Saturday night, ruffle beds for four couples, tempers, marriages and domestic order.

Curtain time for all performances will be at 8 p.m. The play opens Thursday, with other performances on Friday and Saturday, and again on Thursday, Friday and Saturday, May 3, 4 and 5. All performances will be staged at Herman Park Center in Goldsboro.

Tickets are $3 for adults and $2 for students, and will be available at the door. All season ticket holders will be seated 45 minutes prior to curtain time.

East Africa's black rhinos can sprint at 35 miles an hour. They have been known to charge at trains passing through their territory.

Songwriters Competition

NEW YORK — An international songwriters competition to benefit the Songwriters Hall of Fame Museum, sponsored by the National Academy of Popular Music and the New York Music Company, is now underway.

A grand prize of $25,000 will be awarded to the writer of the best lyrics to the new instrumental, "Nora's Tune." The winner of the competition, in addition to the $25,000, will have the winning lyrics recorded by Nora and published by The New York Music Company. "Nora's Tune" appears on the debut album Foreign Legions, just released by The New York Music Company, with music by singer/composer Nora.

An insert in the ablum gives details of the competition. Proceeds received by the songwriters Hall of Fame from this competition will go towards establishing a Music Mueum in New York City.

Competition judges include lyricist Sammy Cahn, Paul Anka, Neil Sedaka, composer Julie Styne, lyricists Mitchell Parish and Bobby Weinstein, and Sid Bernstein, music manager and promoter.

The songwriters competition runs until Dec. 31. Lyric entries should be typed on a separate sheet of paper and sent with a $5 donation to the Songwriters Hall of Fame Museum and a completed official entry form for each entry to: 1984 International Songwriters Competition, The National Academy of Popular Music, 29 West 57th Street, 6th Floor, New York, N. Y., 10019.

Free Program In Durham

DURHAM — A combination program of symphonic music and break dancing will be presented free of charge to the public in Durham on Sunday, May 6. On that date, the Friends of the North Carolina Symphony and a break dancers group, The Atomic Force, will join talents in the meadows at Forest Hill.

Break dancing has been termed as a spinoff from top locking — a combination of acrobatic movement, karate and some ballet with a touch of free style New York footwork.

The program begins at 3 p.m. and will conclude at 4:30 p.m.

A committee of the friends is planning a benefit garden luncheon before the concert at the home of Mrs. Nello L. Teer, Jr., in Hope Valley.

For more details on the benefit luncheon and the concert program, contact Mrs. Kit Boney, Symphony Office, P. O. Box 28026, Raleigh, N. C., 27611 — phone, 733-2750.

TEXAN GUITARIST . . . Stevie Ray Vaughan provided some electrifying sounds from his well worn guitar at a concert in Greenville Thursday night at the Greenleaf. A Texas favorite of many years, Vaughan has recently come into the national spotlight as lead guitarist for Davie Bowie's hit song, "Let's Dance." (Reflector photo by Jane Welborn)

Texan Guitarist In Greenville Concert

Backstage, the man is soft-spoken and small in stature. But when he steps on stage and begins playing his well-worn guitar, he seems to be a giant.

Stevie Ray Vaughan, a 28-year-old guitarist from Austin, Texas, plays an electrifying, aggressive brand of the blues that vibrates the playing space and the audience. The loud wailing sounds he wrings out of his guitar are overpowering.

Vaughan and his band, Double Trouble, performed before a small but appreciative audience Thursday night at a local nightclub, The Greenleaf.

In the wake of acclaim for his recent debut album, "Texas Flood," and work as lead guitarist on David Bowie's popular "Let's Dance" album, local music fans may think Vaughan is an overnight sensation. But his current recognition from his fans, who include Mick Jagger and Ron Wood of the Rolling Stones and Jackson Browne, comes after years of playing in Texas bars.

"It feels great to have people listening to what we're trying to do," Vaughan said in an interview before the show. "It's gratifying to know that people like the music."

Vaughan has spent 20 years playing the guitar.

"I picked up a guitar when I was eight," he said. His early influences were the blues of B.B. King and Ray Charles, and his older brother Jimmy Vaughan, lead guitarist for the Fabulous Thunderbirds.

Vaughan grew up in Dallas and began playing local clubs at the age of 12. He dropped out of high school before his senior year after finding it hard to juggle school work and late-night gigs.

Tommy Shannon, Double Trouble's bass player, said, "I met Stevie Ray when he was 15 and then he was the best guitar player in Texas."

"Only in Texas," chimed in drummer Chris Layton with a laugh. "He was the best in Iowa, too."

Double Trouble, made up of Vaughan, Shannon and Layton, formed six years ago although the members had known each other for years.

The band became a hit throughout Texas, but its first big break came when Mick Jagger, after seeing a videotape of the band, flew Double Trouble to New York for a private audition at the Danceteria club in 1982. Three months later, at the urging of veteran producer Jerry Wexler, the band played at the Montreux Jazz Festival in Montreux, Switzerland, where they came to the attention of Bowie and Browne.

Browne offered the band the use of his Los Angeles studio, where they cut the tracks for their album, and Bowie invited Vaughan to play lead guitar on his latest album.

"I was really surprised when Bowie asked me to play on 'Let's Dance,'" Vaughan said. "We each play a completely different type of music, and I didn't know what was expected of me, but it worked out great."

Vaughan and the band don't seem to be fazed by their famous fans.

"They treat us like ordinary people," Layton said. "And we think that your opinion, or the opinion of anyone in the audience, is as valuable as theirs."

Besides, Vaughan said, "Life's not about fame, it's about helping other people. Fame is an illusion. Like a lit cigarette, it will burn out. Fame detracts from what we're trying to do, and that's to help people."

Vaughan said his goal throughout his 16 years of performing hasn't changed. "I just want to play what I feel and get to the hearts of people," he said.

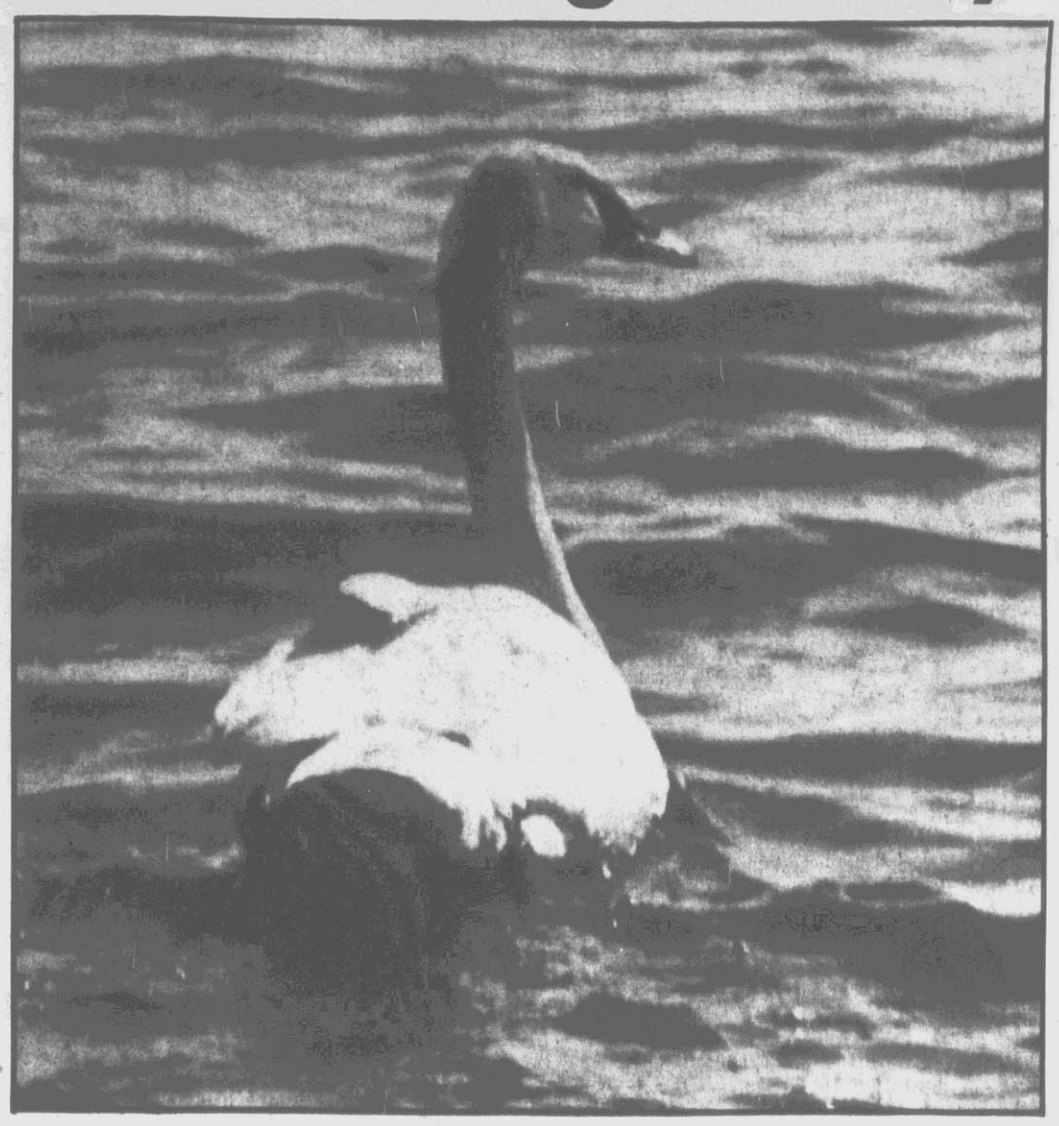
'Dry Dust' Lake Has Fascinating History

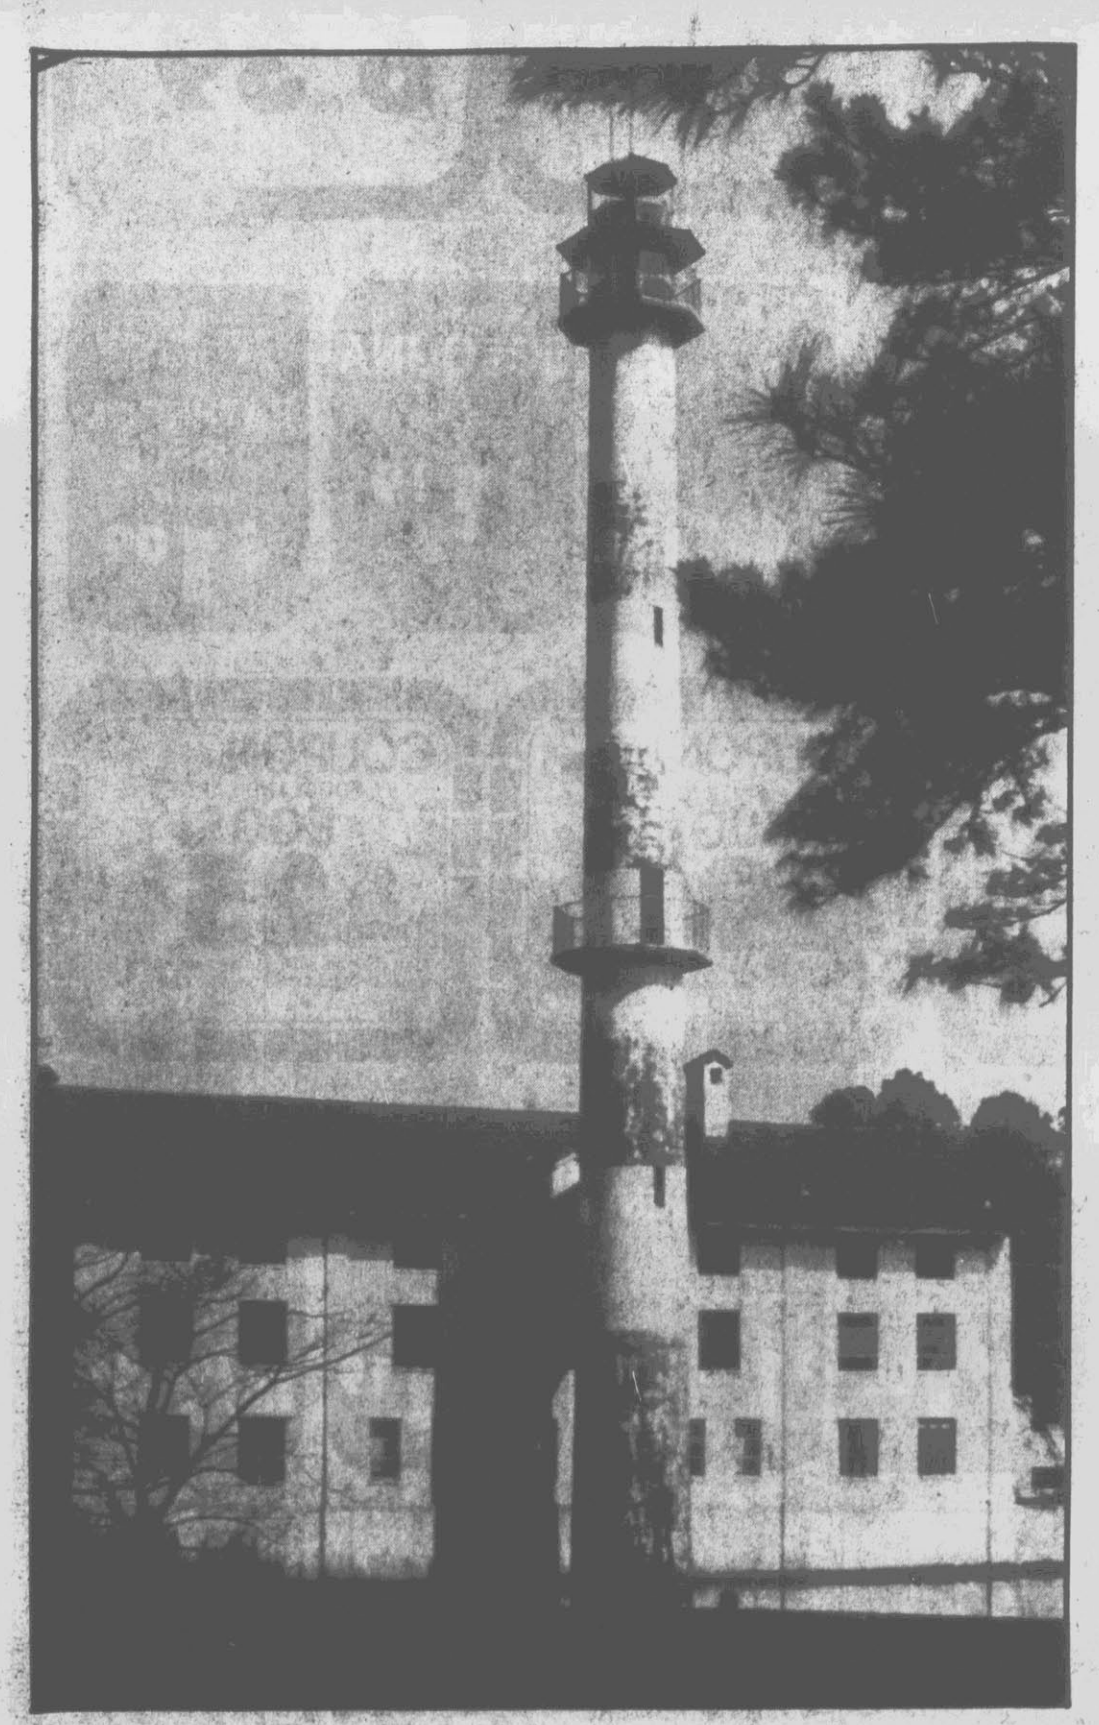
FISHING FOR LARGEMOUTH BASS at Lake Mattamuskeet is a treat for fishermen, who travel many miles for the opportunity. Fishing for catfish, bream and other species is also excellent along the canals and the lake shore in early spring and fall.



A WHISTLING SWAN swims in the water along the causeway at Lake Mattamuskeet. The refuge is a wintering ground for large numbers of these swans, as well as ducks and geese.

Lake Mattamuskeet, North Carolina's largest natural lake, is rich in scenery and wildlife.

Story and Pictures by Angela Lingerfelt



THE OLD HUNTING LODGE at Lake Mattamuskeet was at one time brimming over with waterfowl hunters. Today, a circular staircase has been built into the 120-foot smokestack of the former pumping plant, making it an observation tower.

Lake Mattamuskeet in Hyde County, once dubbed the "Canada Goose Hunting Capital of the World," may not have its hunting clientele anymore, but as a national wildlife refuge it offers a sanctuary to many kinds of wildlife and a variety of outdoor activities.

Through years of efforts to convert the lake bottom to farmland, Lake Mattamuskeet has remained steadfast and today its more than 50,000 acres of water, marshlands, timber and croplands provide an excellent place for fishing, observation of animals and plants, outdoor photography or hiking.

The lake, which is the largest natural lake in North Carolina, is shallow with an average depth of two feet. It measures 10 miles long by five to six miles wide.

The formation of Lake Mattamuskeet, which means 'Dry Dust' in Indian tongue, is a mystery. Some say the lake was formed by ground fires in a prehistoric juniper swamp. There are other theories as well.

The Mattamuskeet Indians, original inhabitants of the area and a sub-tribe of the Algonquian Indians, had a legend telling of a great ceremonial fire which burned the land for 13 moons. This basin, they claimed, was hollowed out by the fire, then filled with rain water by the gods they worshiped.

Some theorists say the basin was formed by meteorites that at one time showered coastal North Carolina. This theory has been suggested because of the lake's tear drop shape and because the eastern shores are higher than the western shores.

The last of the Indians who lived in the area around the lake had left by 1791. The land from that time until 1915 belonged to the state Literary Board, which tried to sell it in parcels during the 1800s.

In 1915, D.N. Graves of Winchester, Mass., bought the lake bottom and formed a company to convert the lake to farmland. Financial problems forced him to give up the project and sell the land in 1917. The North Carolina Farms Co. bought the land, but also failed in its efforts to drain the lake.

By 1923 the land belonged to August Heckscher, a New York multimillionaire and one of the nation's foremost philanthropists, who also wanted to convert the lake bottom to farmland.

At Lake Mattamuskeet, he built the world's largest pumping station, which had four steam engines capable of pumping one million gallons of water per minute. He also built several hundred miles of ditches and canals to carry the lake water to the pumping station, where it was then pumped into a seven-mile canal to the Pamlico Sound and the ocean.

Heckscher and his staff cultivated the lake bottom for four years. During this time, a small village called New Holland was formed around the pumping station.

In 1929, insects, foul weather, pump overflows and a poor economy hampered Heckscher from draining the lake further. In 1933, he returned the ownership to the state, which in turn sold it to the federal government. Heckscher had spent almost $17 million on the project.

Eventually the lake refilled with water and, in 1934, it was declared a federal waterfowl refuge.

During the late 1930s, the Civilian Conservation Corps converted the pumping station to a hunting lodge and a causeway was built across the lake. For 40 years, Mattamuskeet Lodge was considered the Canada goose hunting capital of the world. It had accommodations for about 45 hunters and visitors.

Despite efforts in the 1950s to maintain the lake as a major wintering area for waterfowl, the goose population dwindled because of over-hunting and changes in farming which attracted birds to grain crops farther north.

In 1974, Canada goose hunting was banned on the lake and, without the hunting clientele, the lodge closed.

Today, the refuge is available for a large variety of outdoor activities, including wildlife observation, hiking, photography, herring dipping, crabbing and bird watching. Fisherman travel for many miles to bass fish at the lake, especially in early spring and fall.

Hunters are allowed to hunt only ducks and coots on specific dates during the hunting season. Details on hunting are available from the refuge manager, Route 1, Box N-2, Swan Quarter, N.C.

Refuge personnel conduct many projects throughout the year to benefit wildlife. Mattamuskeet biologist Kelly Davis said some of the refuge's yearly projects include waterfowl banding, osprey banding and bald-eagle hacking, which is "raising a bird of prey in an artificial environment without it knowing it."

She said waterfowl hunts for kids under 16-years-old are conducted each year during Thanksgiving. The refuge staff, she added, also conducts a Youth Conservation Corps for kids 15 to 18 years old who work for minimum wage doing maintenance and land management work. It also has a volunteer program for "anyone who wants to do anything," Mrs. Davis said.

WHITE-TAILED DEER are abundant at Lake Mattamuskeet National Wildlife Refuge.

NEAR EMPTY PALACE — Tibetan women wash clothes while children play in the lake below the Potala Palace in Lhasa, Tibet, where the Dalai Lama resigned before he fled to India after an abortive uprising against Chinese rule in 1959. Greenville Homes Tour April 28

A span of over one hundred years in architectural styles is represented in the 1984 Greenville Area Homes Tour, scheduled for Saturday, April 28.

Sponsored by the Greenville Area Preservation Association, the tour will include two distinctly different Spanish Colonial homes, designs attributed to Greenville architect R.L. Johnston. Johnston reputedly designed several structures in the Greenville area after he vacationed in southern California and became fascinated with the Spanish architectural influence found there.

"This is one of our best tours in terms of architectural variety," GAPA president Walter Faulkner said. "We hope people will take this opportunity to learn more about the county's architectural heritage."

Architectural styles represented in the tour include examples of American Foursquare, American Queen Anne, Georgian and a contemporary home. The Pactolus Baptist Church, built in 1883, and the Devenport Store, a late 19th century commercial building, finish the one-day tour.

The Humber House on Fifth Street will serve as ticket headquarters for the eight-stop tour, which begins at 10 a.m. Other stops include the Johnston-Rogers House (Alpha Omicron Pi Sorority), 805 Johnston Street; the Means House, 1203 E. Fifth Street; the Taylor-Slaughter House, 901 E. Fifth Street; the Rees House, 116 S. Harding Street; the Conway House, 120 Robin Road; and the Pactolus Baptist Church and the Davenport Store in Pactolus.

Tour notes, including directions to each location, may be picked up at the Humber House headquarters on the day of the tour. The Eastern Office of the North Carolina Division of Archives and History, also housed in the Humber House, will have exhibits, as well as a slide presentation, beginning every half-hour from 9:30 a.m., explaining the function and services of this Division of Cultural Resources.

The event has been GAPA's primary fund-raising function since the Association's founding in 1980. Proceeds are used by the Association to help identify preservation projects, to help educate area residents on the importance of preservation and to assist, when possible, with specific preservation projects. GAPA is an associate member of the Pitt-Greenville Arts Council, the Historic Preservation Foundation of North Carolina and the National Trust for Historic Conservation.

Advance tickets may be purchased at a savings from the following places: Arlington Hall, 327 Arlington Boulevard; Carriage House Antiques, 903 Dickinson Avenue; Central Book and News, Greenville Square; Pitt-Greenville Arts Council, 117 W. Fifth Street; Tadlock Insurance, 320 Evans Mall; and Tapscott Designs, 222 E. Fifth Street. Advance tickets are $5 for individuals and $2.50 for students. Prices will be $6 and $3 on April 28. Mail requests should be accompanied by a check, payable to GAPA, and sent to Homes Tour, P.O. Box 673, Greenville, N.C. 27834-0673.

Chairpersons for the Homes Tour are Walter and Janice Faulkner. Others on the committee include Dot Paschal, Kate Phillips, Catherine Lang, Corinne Sewall, Phoebe Dail, Ruth Taft, Diana Davenport, Stan Little, Donn Morgan and Frank Van Leeuwen. Several book and garden clubs, the Alpha Omicron Pu sorority and many more volunteers are working with the Preservation Association on the project.

The tours, sponsored by the Murfreesboro Historical Association, Inc., will have tickets for sale and information on the tour route at the Roberts-Vaughan Village Center, 116 East Main Street in Murfreesboro.

Murfreesboro, a small northeastern town near the Virginia border, is 72 miles north of Greenville (via Bethel, Oak City, Aulander and Ahoskie). It is one of the richest in architecture of any eastern North Carolina town. Names and brief descriptions of buildings on the April 28-29 tour are:

In Murfreesboro:

• Hertford Academy, constructed in 1811 for an academy following authorization by the General Assembly in 1794.

• Winborne Law Office and Store, reconstructed in 1976 from another site. The building was previously used by Judge B. B. Winborne, an author, for writing and as his law office.

• William Rea Museum, oldest brick commercial structure in North Carolina, built in 1790 by a Boston merchant and shipper. Now houses a Gatling Gun and woodwork salvaged from the Gatling Plantation.

• The Edward Murphy House, home of a shoemaker, built in the early 1800s. Restoration recently completed.

• The Rev. Thompson House, built about 1790, features five dormer windows and early chimneys.

• The Goodman-Jenkins House, dating to about 1726, a small house originally situated on land given to Henry Jenkins by the King of England in 1699. This is the first time it has been opened to the public.

• The John Hill Wheeler House, rebuilt in 1814 by Wheeler into an impressive two-story Flemish bond brick house around the original one-story house of 1810.

• Boys Scout Welcome Center — Once the office of the Smith-Douglas Company, moved in 1977 to its present site to serve as headquarters for a 70-mile canoe trail of the Meherrin, Chowan, and Wiccacon Rivers.

• Murfreesboro Municipal Building has an informative photograph/picture display of the town's history.

• The Riverfront, a gift shop housed in a building moved to Murfreesboro from the village of Winton, the county seat of Hertford County.

• The Pipkin House, a doubled porticoed house constucted about 1830 by Dr. Issac Pipkin. The sitting rooms are furnished with a fine collection of antiques.

• The E. T. Vinson House, built about 1875, now serves as a real estate office.

• The Walter Reed House was home to the doctor of Panama Canal fame as a small boy and again at the time he was a medical student. Since 1977 the house has served as a Human Services Center.

• The Yeates-Vaughan House, with the rear section built about 1790, the front Greek Revival section added in 1835. Contains all original woodwork.

• Roberts-Vaughan Village Center. The original structure dates from 1790, with additons in 1835 that give it its Greek Revival character. All original woodwork intact.

• McDowell Columns Building, Chowan College. Constructed of locally made bricks for the Chowan Baptist Female Institute, the building now serves as the administation building of the college.

Jay Trail:

• The Winborne House is a Greek Revival house constructed about 1818 and moved in 1976 to its present site from Main Street. The home houses a collection of artifacts collected during the Army tours of its current owner, Major Richard Hammel.

• The Vinson House, noted for the entrance hall and a beautiful stairway, was built about 1870. Now being restored.

Village of Como:

• Buckhorn Baptist Church, built in the 1910, is on the site of an Anglican Chapel built in the 1730's.

• The Little Courthouse, first a school, was built about 1872. The building was also used by the Justice of Peace to hold court there — thus its name of Little Court House.

Wildlife Stamp Ready

WASHINGTON — The first "Wildlife Stamp of the Year," a portrait of two Ross' geese by wildlife artist Chuck Ripper, is now available from the National Wildlife Federation in exclusive stamp and print combinations for collectors.

After almost 50 years of issuing wildlife stamps, the National Wildlife Federation commissioned Ripper to create the painting, available as a limited edition art print, a special edition art print, an individual stamp, or a sequentially numbered block of four stamps.

"Ross' Goose" is a portrait of the smallest of North American geese, often described as a miniature snow goose. In September, these birds of the northern Canadian tundra begin their long migration south, heading for California's lush Sacramento Valley.

Ripper has painted many of the National Wildlife Federation's wildlife stamps, and drawm more than a thousand wildflowers for "Peterson's Field Guide." In 1982, he created an issue of 50 new stamps for the U. S. Postal Service featuring the official bird and flower of each state.

The "Wildlife Stamp of the Year" is available in several versions:

•The first edition has been signed and indivisually numbered by Ripper, is limited to 1,500 prints and includes a mint condition stamp.

•The special edition print is also signed and numbered, but in addition has been remarqued to include a small, personally drawn sketch unique to each print. This edition includes the stamp and is limited to 250 copies.

•The open edition is of the same quality as the others but is not signed or numbered. The stamp is included.

•The single stamp of the year is 2 by 2 3/4 inches and comes in a commemorative folder.

•The block of four stamps, carrying an individual number in a sequence of 5,000 blocks to be produced, comes in a commemorative folder.

For more information, including prices of each variety of the stamp and print, write to: Stamp of the Year, National Wildlife Federation, 1412 16th St., Washington, D.C., 20036.

Edenton Symposium Set For May 16-18

By PALMER HILL
N.C. Department Of Cultural Resources

RALEIGH — If you were reared in North Carolina, there's a good chance your ancestor ate collared beef in England, sufferd under stringent Elizabethan laws, or cured illnesses with herbs in the new world.

Whether your forebears were native Americans or Englishmen, you can learn more about their lifestyles at a symposium to be held by the Edenton Historical Commission May 16-18.

The symposium will deal with the Elizabethan period and the Indians at the time of the Roanoke Voyages of 1584-1587, expeditions which resulted in the first British settlements in the new world. The three-day session is being held in cooperation with the department of continuing education at East Carolina University. Frances Ingles is co-chairman of the symposium. The Edenton Historical Commission has held a symposium every other year for the last 16 years.

On the afternoon of May 16, participants will report to Barker House, Edenton's Visitors' Center, for room assignments. Edenton residents will provide bed and breakfast to participants for a fee. That evening the group will eat sea biscuits, quaff wine and listen to Rennaisance music at an Elizabethan social, then be given a tour of the Homestead. Built in 1733, it has double porches on all four sides in the West Indian manner.

On the morning of May 17, Dr. David Phelps, professor of anthropology at East Carolina University, will give a lecture on the Indians of the Roanoke Basin. Dr. Phelps and his team are searching for remains of Algonkian Indian settlements in the Albemarle-Pamlico region.

Also on Thursday morning, British scholar Audrey Michie of the Museum of Southern Decorative Arts in Winston-Salem, will speak on Elizabethan decorative arts. She was consultant on furnishings for the Elizabethan room at Fort Raleigh.

On Thursday afternoon, Dr. Harriet Flannery, an expert on the herb thyme, will give a lecture, "Indians and Herbs." She is in charge of research in aromatic oils being conducted for R.J. Reynolds Industries at Avoca Farms in Bertie County.

Later on Thursday, participants will be given a tour of historic sites in the Edenton area, including the Cupola House, the finest Jacobean home south of Connecticut; the Iredell House, home of James Iredell Jr., governor of North Carolina, 1827-28; St. Paul's Episcoapl Church, the second oldest church building in North Carolina, and the Chowan County Courthouse, called the finest Georgian courthouse in the South.

Thursday evening, an Elizabethan feast of pastries, shrimp in leaves and other 16th century delicacies will be held at Beverly Hall. Local madrigal singers will entertain the group.

On Friday, Gilbert Burnett, a Wilmington attorney, will speak on crime and punishment in the Elizabethan period. A concert of Elizabethan music performed by a group from East Carolina University will follow.

The price of the symposium is $60. For more information, contact Ruth Rose at Barker House, Box 474, Edenton, N.C. 27932, telephone 483-3663.

Big Bicycle Race May 12

HAVELOCK — The third annual Colonial Capital to Cape Hatteras Bicycle Ride for 1984 is scheduled May 12. The ride will begin at Bicentenial Park in New Bern at 7 a.m.

The route will be along scenic highways of eastern North Carolina, with a ferry crossing to the Outer Banks and then the ride to Historic Cape Hatteras Lighthouse.

The ride is for fun, but those riding will be collecting pledges from sponsors with all proceeds to go to the "Save the Lighthouse Fund." Each registered rider will also receive a collector's item T-shirt dated for this year's ride.

For a registration form and for more information, send a self-addressed, stamped envelope to: Jeremiah Day, 1002 E. Main St., Havelock, N.C., 28532, or call 447-3731.

Stamp News

By SYD KRONISH
AP Newsfeatures

People are fascinated with antiques, whether it be clothes, autos, furniture or figurines — even baby buggies. The popularity of items from yesteryear can be seen on stamp issues of many countries all over the world.

An 1880s baby buggy, for example, is featured on a new 7.4 cent U.S. coil stamp. It is the 14th in the Transportation Series, depicting early modes of transportation. The series was started in 1981 with the release of the 18-cent Surrey stamp.

Featured on the new coil adhesive is a pen and ink rendering of a baby buggy which was offered by a toy company in Chicago in its spring 1887 mail order catalog. The stamp designer was Jim Schleyer of Burke, Va.

Across the top of the stamp in two lines is "Baby Buggy 1880s, USA 7.4 cents." The central design shows a side view of the buggy. The color is brown. The 7.4-cent denomination meets the basic third class rate for carrier route presorted bulk mailings. To meet philatelic needs, however, the uncancelled version will be sold in increments of 10 only at philatelic centers and by mail order from the Philatelic Sales Division in Washington, D.C.

The first day of issue is April 7. Deadline for first-day covers is May 7.

To order first-day cancellations, you may utilize the usual two methods. If you prefer to purchase the stamps and affix them to your own covers, you must add 13 cents more in postage to meet the minimum first class rate. Send to: Customer-Affixed Envelopes, Postmaster, San Diego, CA, 92199-9991. No remittance is required. It must be postmarked no later than May 7.

Should you wish to have the USPS affix the stamps, they will place the new 7.4-cent coil stamp and a 13-cent Liberty Bell stamp to meet the minimum first class mailing requirement. Enclose a money order for 21 cents for each cover. Do not send cash. Send to: Baby Buggy Stamp, Postmaster, San Diego, CA 92199-9992. Mail prior to May 7.

Backlands Poverty

By DANIEL DROSDOFF

AGUAS BELAS, Brazil (UPI) — For Manuel Pereira da Cunha, a small bird the size of a baseball is fair game.

"If I can shoot 12 or 15 of them, my family will eat," the 73-year-old hunter said, fondling his homemade, muzzle-loading musket.

There is precious little game left in the parched backlands of Brazil's northeast, but what there is — small birds and rodents — means life or death to men such as da Cunha.

These hunters try to make every shot count, and they carefully measure the powder and bird shot they pack down the barrel with a ramrod.

The interior of Pernambuco, like eight other northeast Brazilian states, is ravaged three out of every 10 years by drought that ruins crops, forces farmers off the land and into the cities, kills off cattle and usually touches off a flurry of government relief measures.

Only this time the drought is going into its sixth year with no relief in sight.

Despite 25 years of planning and effort, the Brazilian government has failed to devise an investment program in agriculture, irrigation and economic alternatives that will minimize the damage from long dry spells.

"This is the worst drought since Brazil was discovered," said Valfrido Salmito, superintendent of the Northeast Development Agency in Recife.

The agency, known by its initials SUDENE, was founded in 1959 to develop and oversee a strategy to combat poverty in the northeast, which has about 30 percent of Brazil's population yet only produces 6.5 percent of the national wealth.

Its 3,000 bureaucrats and planners, based in a modern, 13-story building, have guided modernization and industrialization in the northeast — an area that produces sugar, alcohol, petroleum, textiles and cooking oil — but they have not provided enough jobs to offset periodic downturns in the economy.

Salmito said large investments in irrigation to harness the northeast's rivers — the Sao Francisco, Jaguaribe, Parnaiba and Piranhas — were needed to keep farmers and ranchers on the land permanently.

"The largest investments have gone to the other areas of the country," he said. "The Northeast gets 15 percent of the federal funds but has 30 percent of the population."

He estimated unemployment at 40 percent, with 2.7 million people employed in public works projects at a salary of $15 a month plus a food ration.

The effects of the drought are not readily visible in Recife, the coastal capital of Pernambuco surrounded by lush sugar cane plantations.

But in Aguas Belas, 180 miles inland, the low mountains resemble desert areas of the American West. The trees are withered and brown, and the river beds are dry.

The chief crop in the Aguas Belas area now is cactus, used as feed for Brahma cattle that are slowly dying of hunger and thirst.

In normal years the area also produces beans, rice, milk and millet.

"This area used to be the biggest producer of black beans in Pernambuco, but last year we weren't able to produce a kilo (2.2 pounds)," said Aguas Belas Mayor Clodoaldo Bezerra Jonatas, 40, who also runs a 1,000-acre farm.

He keeps an automatic pistol in his belt since an assassination attempt last year in Recife, in which he was slightly wounded but his secretary was killed.

"I don't know who the assailants were," he said. "There is a climate of insecurity throughout the country."

In February, about 1,000 townspeople stormed the Aguas Belas warehouse and looted emergency food supplies. Such looting occurs sporadically in isolated towns of the northeast.

"They were not violent, just hungry," Bezerra Jonatas said.

He said the $15 a month paid by the government for work on public projects was "not enough to live on" and that "60 percent of the men in the area get part of their food by hunting."

One of the big fears of Brazil's large farmers is that northeasterners some day will become radicalized into a revolutionary force.

Until now the poor have been stoic about their hardships, often moving to more prosperous areas of Brazil.

For Pereira da Cunha, the current drought is not the worst one he has been through.

"It was worse in 1915," he said. "Then, we had to eat cactus. The government didn't send any beans in those days."

SMALLER FACTORIES

FARMINGTON, Conn. (AP) — Factories of the future may be smaller.

Allan Drane of Emhart Corp. says, "As industry tends toward increasing automation, you'll see smaller, more compact plants being built. Plants will be designed primarily to accommodate increasingly miniaturized manufacturing processes. That means the dimensions of these buildings could be reduced drastically from how we build them today."

Irish Village Spruces For Reagan Visit

By ED BLANCHE
Associated Press Writer

BALLYPOREEN, Ireland (AP) — The ballyhoo in Ballyporeen, where President Reagan will dig up his roots in June, is the biggest thing to hit this somnambulant County Tipperary village since the IRA shot a British soldier dead at the crossroads 63 years ago.

A signpost at the crossroads where it happened points in four directions — even though there are only three roads.

But Ballyporeen, after centuries of being in the middle of nowhere, finally has found direction and hopes that a presidential visit has put it on the map.

The 310 villagers are sprucing up the place with a rainbow of colors — greens, yellows, blues and bucketsful of whitewash — as cows amble down its two streets.

Reagan's welcome falls neatly between the ecstatic reception President John F. Kennedy, a Roman Catholic, got on his visit to Ireland in 1963 and the protests that greeted President Richard M. Nixon, whose ancestors were Quakers, in 1970. Reagan is a Protestant, although his roots lie in this Roman Catholic land.

Nonetheless, as Tipperary's most famous son, he's guaranteed a warm welcome here during his visit to Ireland June 1-4.

Ballyporeen is the anglicized version of the original Gaelic name, Beal Atha Phorin, which means "the way of the small potatoes."

But John O'Farrell, who changed the name of his bar to the Ronald Reagan Lounge when Reagan's roots came to light in 1980, believes that the presidential visit will turn small potatoes into big bucks.

"It's given us a great sense of pride," he said in his bar, a reincarnation of one burned down by the British in the independence war in reprisal for the soldier shot at the crossroads.

"But after years of neglect, we're seizing this opportunity with both hands. We hope we'll all benefit from the many Irish-Americans who will want to come here now. The Reagan connection has really put us on the map."

It all started in O'Farrell's bar in November 1980 when Hugh Peskett, senior genealogist from Debrett's Peerage, the who's who of Britain's bluebloods, walked in, ordered a Guinness and told the tipplers that Reagan's great-grandfather, Michael O'Regan (the name became Reagan later), was a local boyo.

"We couldn't believe it," said O'Farrell. "We thought the Englishman was joking."

Michael, one of the six children of sharecropper Thomas O'Regan, left Tipperary during the great potato famine of 1845-48, along with more than a million other poor Irish forced into exile by starvation.

He went to London where he married 22-year-old Catherine Mulcahy, daughter of another Tipperary dirt farmer, in St. George's Roman Catholic church Oct. 31, 1852. They emigrated to America in 1858. Michael took up farming near Fairhaven, Ill., and died in 1880.

Peskett also believes that Reagan is descended from Brian Boru, an 11th century high king of all Ireland and the Emerald Isle's first national hero.

Researchers said Reagan's family tree goes back to Raigin, a nephew of Boru who was killed fighting Viking invaders at Clontarf, near Dublin, in 1014. Boru's victory ended Norse domination of Ireland.

The ancestral home of Ronald Reagan now is a briar-ringed cowpatch. Nothing remains of the clay and wattle shanties that once were the hamlet of Doolis, two miles west of Ballyporeen, where the O'Regans lived.

Its only inhabitants these days are Paddy Russell's nine black and white cows chewing the cud in the shadow of the Galtee Mountains.

Reagan will spend less than two hours in Ballyporeen when he flies in by helicopter from Galway on June 3, the third day of his four-day visit to Ireland en route to an economic summit meeting in London.

"It's going to be Ballyporeen's only rush hour," quipped Con Donovan, who runs one of the village's five little shops and who by dint of his membership of Tipperary County Council is a key figure in organizing what everyone calls "the visit."

Like everyone else, Donovan is cashing in. He's stocked up with Ronald Reagan T-shirts. They're stacked in his shop beside the packs of potato chips and canned fruit and bundles of black rubber Wellington boots.

O'Farrell, whose family has run one of Ballyporeen's six bars for 300 years, will play host to Reagan for 20 minutes and serve him lunch on the great day.

Leaning on his mahogany-topped bar, marinated by decades of stout and John Power whiskey, he said: "I don't know what I'll feed him. The White House people haven't given me a menu. But they've had people in to check my kitchen and they seem happy with it."

Upstairs, O'Farrell and his dark-haired wife, Mary, have converted their children's playroom into a Reagan souvenir shop.

Mary has been busy packing clay she dug from the long-vanished Reagan homestead into plastic sachets for sale at 30 pence (40 cents) each.

The "visit" has already provided some bonuses. Ballyporeen is switching from old crank-handled telephones — four of them — to a direct-dial system.

"You could say that your man (Reagan) has revolutionized communications down here, and not before time," said Donovan.

But Ballyporeen hasn't seen anything yet. Some 2,000 reporters, photographers and television teams are expected to descend on the village for Reagan's lightning visit.

The village boys' school is being converted into a press center, with a modest 50 telephone lines. Every hotel for miles around has been booked out for early June, to the chagrin of Irish fly-fishermen who usually have the place to themselves.

Donovan mused: "I hope the visit won't change the village or its people. They're being subjected now to media attention and they're not sure how to handle that.

"They're easygoing people themselves. But I have this feeling that things are never going to be the same around here after this."

Funds Being Sought For History Library

BRADDOCK, Pa. (AP) — The first library Andrew Carnegie built in the United States is a shabby shell of its original grandeur, wrecked by vandals and ravaged by weather after it was shuttered 10 years ago.

"I think even the rats deserted this building. Andrew Carnegie would be appalled," said David Solomon, 74, a former librarian and volunteer caretaker working to restore the desecrated edifice.

"The place was raped and ravaged. It was a sickening thing to see. This building was part of so many people's lives. It was like someone you grew up with, like a member of your family, and it was sick and dying," he added in a recent inteview. "At least now, there's a flicker of life."

Solomon is president of the 125-member Braddock Field Historical Society, which took over the building in 1977 and dreams about restoring it "in its entirety for use the way Andrew Carnegie intended it to be."

After raising $80,000 for a new roof and clearing away tons of debris and peeling plaster, the society reopened the children's library in June 1982.

Restoring the entire building, however, would take several million dollars, and there is no ready sponsor. "We're trying to do it by bits and pieces," said Solomon, the librarian for 12 years until the building closed.

In 1875, Carnegie, a Scotsman whose first job in America as a bobbin boy paid $1.20 a week, built the country's first integrated mill to mass produce steel. His Edgar Thomson Works became the mother plant of the U.S. Steel Corp.

Carnegie's first library was a gift to his largely immigrant workforce, which at the time toiled 12 hours a day, 84 hours a week. The turreted, three-story, Romanesque granite and steel structure was the first of 1,946 Carnegie libraries built in the United States.

"The library building is built to last. Its walls are granite and will not crumble. Its beams are steel and cannot burn," Carnegie said at dedication ceremonies on March 30, 1889.

"I venture to predict that when generation after generation shall have passed away, this library will remain and be recognized as a center of light and learning, a never failing spring of all good influences."

After an addition was completed in 1893, the library housed the first Carnegie Hall, a 34-by-88-foot indoor swimming pool, public baths, billiard tables, bowling alleys, a gym and a barber shop.

Farmers, Policy Makers Face Uncertainty Over The Future

By DON KENDALL
AP Farm Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — As in any election year, the basic question confronting farmers and government policy makers in 1984 seems to be: Where have we been and where do we go from here?

President Reagan had a bittersweet answer last week during a White House session with the Newspaper Farm Editors of America. An estimated 2 percent to 4 percent of the nation's farms will fold this year, Reagan said, partly due to his administration's attack on inflation, which lowered the value of land used as collateral for loans.

The farm failure rate would have been 1 percent to 1½ percent in normal times anyway, he said.

Reagan declined to predict when economic recovery would reach the farm sector, but he noted that "prices are up and are holding firm."

Others in the administration have noted that costs of government farm programs since Reagan assumed office in 1981 have skyrocketed, indicating the massive price support operations and other aids that have helped farmers cope with many of their financial storms.

In the 1982-83 fiscal year that ended Sept. 30, for example, the Agriculture Department's price support operations climbed to a record of about $18.9 billion from $12 billion the year before — which was a record at the time. Largely because of smaller crops, higher prices and a modified dairy program, federal outlays are expected to drop sharply this year, perhaps to around $6.7 billion.

The administration's payment-in-kind program, additionally, funneled an estimated $9.7 billion worth of surplus wheat, corn, sorghum, rice and cotton to farmers who participated in the 1983 PIK program by taking land from production. Along with drought, 1983 crop production was cut dramatically, leading to an improved price situation this year.

Howard W. Hjort, who was USDA's chief economist during the Carter administration, is now a private consultant. He told the farm editors, "I have come to conclude that our present food and fiber policies are on a disaster course."

The sharp runup in farm program costs is one of the reasons Hjort thinks policy is in bad shape. He noted the open-ended structure of the 1983 PIK program, which did not include any lid on federal benefits.

"Not only was it the most massive, but the payments were in excess of what could be justified — and that makes cost-effective programs more difficult for the future," Hjort said.

"Budget outlays have reached an all-time high. If such outlays would have taken place during the period that I was there (at USDA) with the responsibility for the budget, I could be assured that I would have been relieved of that position."

William Lesher, who holds Hjort's old job in the Reagan administration, said that farmers remain under financial stress despite improvements over the past year.

"With roughly half of all farmers debt-free, the debt concentration is high, particularly among larger producers," Lesher said. "One recent survey indicated that as much as five-sixths of all farm debt is owed by less than one-third of the farm operators."

Looking ahead, he said, the 1985 farm bill could resolve "many of the factors that contributed to the increasing financial strain" on farmers in the early 1980s.

"At issue is whether traditional farm policy programs and tools such as acreage reductions, loan rates, target prices and reserves can meet the policy needs of a rapidly changing farm sector dependent upon a less stable international market while effectively promoting the broader interests of the general economy," Lesher said.

Lesher and his boss, Agriculture Secretary John R. Block, say the details of the administration's 1985 farm bill strategy will emerge after a long series of meetings, studies and policy debates.

Teacher Is Using Computer To Sharpen Students' Skills

CARLISLE, Pa. (AP) — Priscilla Laws is a Ph.D., a scientist, author of a consumer book on the effects of low-level radiation, wife, mother of two — and is now devoting most of her time to changing how students learn about science by using computers.

"When I was growing up, all I wanted to do was marry a horse rancher and live happily ever after like Dale Evans," says the 44-year-old professor of physics at Dickinson College here.

She grew up in San Francisco, her passions continuing to be sports and horses until her high school years.

"Then I had two very good science teachers who, because of my interest in experiments and my sense of how science works, encouraged me to pursue my growing interest," she recalls.

She believes, though, that her inclination to question things generally taken for granted — such as the routine use of medical X-rays, the hazards of which she has discussed on network radio and TV talk shows — ic dee to the influence of her parents, both journalists.

In 1965, while she was doing her graduate work at Bryn Mawr College, she met and married a fellow graduate student, Kenneth Laws, now also a physics professor at Dickinson. The Laws have two children, Kevin, 15, and Virginia, 13.

During the past 20 years, Ms. Laws says she has noticed a decline in her freshman-level students' math and science skills.

"Students are often uninterested in science because they're only asked to read about it. Only rarely are they given an opportunity to perform experiments," she points out.

"The cost and the time it takes to organize even simple laboratories in the classroom, especially after the cutbacks, are prohibitive, and without them the fundamental concepts of the scientific method remain uninviting and remote."

Ms. Laws says she became especially conscious of the problem when she realized that her own daughter was turning her nose up at science because she found it boring and too technical.

As both a concerned professor and parent, she set out to do something about the lack of student interaction in the classroom.

"I was conducting a workshop for teachers on the use of personal computers in science teaching, and I felt much more could be done to make science experiments easy to do with computers," she says. "I had in mind the old science kits and chemistry sets we used to use."

She and her colleagues involved a group of her own students and some local high school students and, as a team, began designing a lab station for use with the popular home computers. It will be available commercially this spring.

"We designed it to be affordable for both parents and schools as well as enticing to young students," she says. "The first package we designed will allow students to perform their own temperature experiments.

"The enormous amount of time students spend playing video games can now be educational," she adds. "Instead of using the joystick on their video games to shoot down aliens, they plug in a heat sensor and the way temperature changes with time then appears on a graph on the video screen."

Ms. Laws describes the lab station as a shortcut. It collects and interprets data in an instant, eliminating some of the rote aspects of scientific experimentation and freeing the student to test new hypotheses quickly and easily.

Farmer Has Feathery Job

BELLEVILLE, Pa. (AP) — Poultry farmer Buck Metz began raising chickens for their feathers as a hobby 12 years ago, using their hackles to tie fishing flies that tantalize trout.

His pastime is now the world's largest mass production specialty feather farm but is still unable to meet demand. Metz raises 60,000 birds a year, has distributors in 13 foreign countries and grosses nearly $1 million.

"People virtually can't get enough of his feathers. You have to stand in line and wait," said Dick Surette, publisher of the New Hampshire-based "Fly Tyer" magazine. "Before he came along, high quality feathers just weren't available anywhere. He's filled a real void for lots of avid fly tyers."

Since 1941, Metz Hatchery Inc. has raised chickens in a fertile valley 30 south of State College. It produces 12 million broiler chicks, accounting for half of the family's $4 million in gross annual revenues, and 16.8 million table eggs each year. The hatchery's annual chicken feed bill is $1.1 million.

Until Buck Metz got hooked on fly fishing, however, no other chicken farmer ever thought of breeding birds just for their feathers on a large scale.

"There were experts in fly tying and in poultry production. We put the two together. We were one of first to recognize the market potential," said Metz, 42, a third-generation poultry geneticist who has toiled meticulously to perfect the best hackle bloodlines.

"All of our competitors combined raise 10,000 to 15,000 birds a year. We're three or four times as big as rest of our competitors put together," he added in a recent interview.

The prized feathers are on the neck and saddle cape of Metz roosters. The feathers are long and narrow with enough flexibility to be tied to tiny fishing hooks. They have a minimum of web so they will float, and their colors appeal to fish by imitating insects.

The gross worth of an average feather chicken is $15. A top grade neck retails for $48, but has enough hackle to make 15 to 20 dozen flies and can last for several years.

Metz' first commercial hackle was a dun — a dull, drab gray feather matching the color of insects that are the staple of a trout's diet.

A high quality dun hackle was unavailable in natural shades, but the feather farmer found it by mating a black chicken with a white one. Metz now offers 15 colors and is experimenting with more.

Portugal's Revolution Surviving

LISBON, Portugal (AP) — The assignment for a group of young military officers that night 10 years ago was to listen to two music programs on the radio.

At 10:55 p.m., April 24, 1974, they were to tune in to disc jockey Joao Paulo Dinis on a station called Emissores Associados de Lisboa to see if he played a song called "E Depois do Adeus" (And After the Goodbye).

Then at 12:20 a.m., April 25, they were to switch to the Roman Catholic station Renascenca, and listen for a song called "Grandola, Vila Morena" (Grandola, Dark Town), the lyrics of which begin:

"Grandola, dark town, land of brotherhood,
"The people are the ones in charge...."

The signals were given. By dawn the officers of the clandestinely organized Armed Forces Movement had launched Portugal's "Revolution of the Carnations," bringing an end to 41 years of right-wing dictatorship in Portugal.

The song "E Depois do Adeus" was a signal telling the officers the plans for revolt were in place; the second was the signal to act.

The revolution has survived these past 10 years, but not without political turbulence that has resulted in 15 governments and rising public protest in recent years over economic conditions.

But its early days were days of rejoicing.

Crowds poured into the streets of Lisbon, tossing red carnations at the smiling soldiers in their armored vehicles.

"Grandola, Vila Morena," a protest song, became the unofficial national anthem.

Graffiti on walls across the land read "Long Live Democracy" and "Let's All Work Together."

The nation had grown weary of seemingly endless wars in Portugal's far off African colonies and the lowest standard of living in Western Europe.

Six people died in the coup that ousted Prime Minister Marcello Caetano and President Americo Tomaz and the old regime embodying what had been known as "the new state."

The only serious resistance came from members of the secret police who surrendered the following day at their barricaded Lisbon compound.

Tanks, many manned by 18-year-old conscripts, rumbled through the pre-dawn darkness, surrounding government and police buildings as well as radio and television transmitters.

Caetano and Tomaz surrendered and were flown into exile.

Caetano, who assumed the dictatorship founded by Antonio de Oliveira Salazar in 1933 upon the latter's illness in 1968, died in Brazil in 1980. Tomas, 90, has returned to Lisbon where he lives quietly.

The only military person associated with the coup who is scheduled to speak at ceremonies here this coming Wednesday to mark the 10th anniversary of the revolution is Antonio Spinola, a retired general and military governor of the former Portuguese African colony of Guinea-Bissau.

Two months before the coup, Spinola, then deputy army chief of staff, published a bombshell book titled "Portugal and the Future," in which he called for a political solution to the independence wars being waged in the colonies of Bissau, Mozambique and Angola, all now independent nations.

Portuguese families of all social classes had grown increasingly bitter over losing relatives in the wars to hold on to the African colonies. Between 1961 and 1974 the wars cost the armed forces 7,674 dead and 27,919 seriously wounded.

When a seven-member Junta of National Salvation assumed formal control of Portugal the evening of the coup, Spinola was named president. But he also flew into exile a less than a year later after trying unsuccessfully to stage a countercoup March 11, 1975, that grew out of serious political differences with the more left-leaning Armed Forces Movement.

Perhaps the most charismatic actor in the two tumultuous years that followed the coup, Maj. Otelo Saraiva de Carvalho, a former colonial soldier, has been barred by the military from speaking to the press in the days leading up to the anniversary ceremonies.

"Otelo," as he is known to everyone, was suspected of being involved in an attempt by leftist members of the Armed Forces Movement and the governing Revolutionary Council to oust conservatives in a foiled Nov. 25, 1975, coup that led eventually to the moderation of the revolution and an end to fears expressed in the United States and Western Europe of communist domination of Portugal.

The two years following the coup brought dramatic upheavals, and the years since 1976 have seen a consolidation of parliamentary democracy. But the country's economic situation under a succession of center and center-socialist coalitions has steadily worsened, in part due to the international economic recession.

CAR TALK

From PHELPS CHEVROLET

By Jimmy Foreman

WATCH OUT FOR TALL GIRLS

If you want to avoid "car" trouble, don't pick up tall girls. At least that's one of the implications you could make from a recent study conducted by the Cornell Aeronautical Laboratory.

It seems that woman are twice as likely as men to suffer whiplash in an automobile accident. The study also pointed out that tall persons are more likely to have whiplash injuries and that front seat passengers suffer whiplash more often than drivers.

The CAL scientists hypothesize that women's neck muscles are weaker and hence the greater susceptibility to injury. Whiplash is generally as injury that results from accidents in which a slower moving auto is hit from the rear.

So, to be safe, if you pick up lady hitch-hikers, select only short ones and make them ride in the back seat.

★★★★★★★

When you think Chevrolet—think PHELPS CHEVROLET—where you get a good deal plus a great deal more. We pride ourselves in offering the lowest price, maximum trade allowance, low cost financing and quality service.

Isuzu. The Longer Haul.

Isuzu's longbed pickup not only gives you 45.7 cubic feet of cargo space, it's also built tough enough to hold up over the long haul. Under its rugged good looks, an all-steel, welded body with steel ladder frame. And a reliable power plant worthy of the name Isuzu.

So your toughest choice now is which Isuzu longbed to go with, the 2-wheel drive, 4-wheel drive, gas or diesel.

Tennessee Grannies Packing Guns Now

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — The 74-year-old grandmother settled down on the couch, her crochet bag in tow, to watch the afternoon soaps.

On the coffee table, only inches from a white Bible, rested a pearl-handled .32-caliber pistol.

"I'm always careful not to set my gun on the Bible," she said. "That just wouldn't seem right. But I always have it near me — when I'm in the kitchen cooking, in my bedroom, or in here watching my stories. It just makes me feel safer."

Millions of other widowed, divorced or single women, young and old, are determined to gain a sense of security that a handgun can provide.

According to the 1980 Figgie Report on the Fear of Crime, 45 percent of the women in the U.S. own a gun. Those most likely to have guns are women who live alone, the report said.

And those numbers are growing, said Alan Gottlieb, chairman for the Citizens Committee for the Right to Keep and Bear Arms.

"There is no doubt that over the last decade, more women have bought guns," Gottlieb said. "The gun distributors are telling us that they are getting more women in, and more men buying guns for women."

The Knoxville grandmother, a retired businesswoman, said she has been the victim of four armed robberies. She's been shot at, tied up, taped to a chair and forced to lie face down on the floor of her store.

Her north Knoxville home has been broken into four times, including once when startled thieves ran out the back way as she entered the front door.

"Some people may think I'm crazy for having a gun, and it might be against the law to carry it around with me in my car, but I don't care," she said.

"I'm willing to go to jail if that's what it takes to protect myself," said the woman, who asked not to be identified because she has brought charges against some of her assailants and is afraid they will seek retribution when they are released from jail.

The woman and her 77-year-old sister, a Sevierville widow who also asked not to be identified, have three shotguns, including a sawed-off 20-gauge; a .22-caliber pistol; the .32-caliber with its finely carved handle; a .38-caliber Rossie pistol; a 30.06 rifle, and a .38-caliber revolver.

"I guess that would surprise a lot of people," the sister said. "They probably look at us and think, 'Those sweet little old ladies? Why, they couldn't hurt a fly.'"

"Well, I say you just try me," she said.

The widow can shoot from the hip, plugging the bullseye of her homemade target from 20 paces. The younger sister learned how to shoot while working as a security guard during World War II.

"I'll tell you what's sad is all the women who own guns but don't know how to shoot them. That's like sitting there with a good steak in front of you but never taking a bite," the elder sister said.

Gottlieb agreed, and said gun education is one of the primary concerns of his national organization.

"Our position is that a gun is the best thing a person can have for self protection, but only if they know how to use it," he said.

"These women can't just go out and buy a gun and not take the time to learn how to load it, shoot it and clean it. If they're doing that, then they're just buying a false sense of security and they're liable to wind up getting hurt," he said.

But knowledge still isn't enough, Gottlieb said.

The women said they are prepared to pull the trigger if necessary.

"I'd hate to think I sent somebody out to eternity," the Knoxville sister said, glancing down at her Bible. "But I'd shoot if I had to. Otherwise, there's no point in having the gun to begin with."

Emory Study Pinpoints Electoral College Faults

By ROBERT BYRD
Associated Press Writer

ATLANTA (AP) — An Emory University professor says the Electoral College is not only an archaic way to pick a president, but discourages people from voting in all elections.

In U.S. presidential elections, the candidate winning the popular vote in a given state gets all of that state's electoral votes, and those electors — 538 of them nationwide — actually pick the president.

That winner-take-all vote in each state discourages thousands of people from going to the polls, said Emory professor Richard Cebula. His new study shows that in states where one party is historically dominant, fewer people bother to vote.

"We're saying that in states where one party is dominating over the other, members of the majority party take a more resigned attitude, and they feel they certainly have an adequate number of votes," he explained. "And people in the minority party feel 'Why bother voting? Our votes are overwhelmed anyway.'

"Both parties wind up having a diminution of voting power."

Cebula, who teaches a "public choice" course blending political science and economics, analyzed Census Bureau voting data from 1976 — a presidential election year — and 1978 — an off year. Both elections showed similar results, he said.

In "one-party" states, where more than 55 percent of the legislators are of one party, voting was from 6 percent to 13 percent lower compared with states where the parties were more equal in power, Cebula said.

Broken down by age, voting was down 6 percent among voters aged 18-24 and those over 65, and down 13 percent in voters in the 25-44 age group and in voters 45-64 years old.

Cebula's study does not try to determine why the age groups break down differently, but he speculated that older voters who are retired have more time to vote, while younger citizens may be more idealistic and less prone to voter discouragement.

The Emory professor said Americans are bombarded with election night explanations of the electoral system and are well aware of how it works. That knowledge, he hypothesized, convinces people that their votes don't matter.

And, he added, once voters are in the habit of staying home, they are likely to continue, so the discouragement stemming from the Electoral College affects non-presidential elections as well.

"The Electoral College," he said, "has acted to very significantly discourage voter participation.

"By contrast to most other industrialized nations, we have one of the lowest — or the lowest — voter participations, and we're supposed to be the vanguard of democracy on this planet."

Cebula thinks the way to increase voter participation is relatively simple — eliminate the "unnecessary" Electoral College.

"We'd take out one of the biggest stumbling blocks to ... voter participation," he said.

Essay Wins Competition

MIDDLETOWN, Conn. (AP) — In complete freedom, no one is free. This is the lesson of Nobel Prize winner William Golding's "Lord of the Flies," says Graham Burnett, eighth-grade student at Waldrom Academy in Merion, Pa.

He is winner of the 1984 "Books Make a Difference" contest sponsored by Read magazine in cooperation with the Library of Congress.

In his winning essay, Burnett said Golding's story of English schoolboys stranded on a tropical island illustrated that only in an orderly system where freedom was joined to responsibility could society survive.

It is when the boys throw off all responsibility, says Burnett, that they are reduced to savages and their society is doomed.

The "Books Make a Difference" contest is sponsored annually by Read, a classroom language arts magazine published by Xerox Education Publications.

No. 10310 — The Maplegrove

A-Frame Inspires Striking Design

By Jerry Bishop

With a facade that suggests a winged A-frame, the Maplegrove, an innovative one level design, matches its striking exterior with a luxurious and livable floor plan.

Three bedrooms and two and one half baths are included in the plan, which also calls for a formal dining room and great room and informal family room.

Unique in approach, the facade uses an interesting combination of glass, wood, and stone, accented by front and rear chimneys. Entry is into a gracious foyer with the guest-oriented great room at left. The great room, enhanced by high vaulted ceilings and expanses of glass, provides a generous area for entertaining, a wood-burning fireplace, and a connecting formal dining room.

The design, however, is equally geared to family living and supplies a family room with fireplace and vaulted ceilings adjoining the U-shaped kitchen. Careful planning results in a laundry room that doubles as a mud room, and a half bath that is just steps from the kitchen.

Solar Home Proves Successful

By MARY N. YIONOULIS
N.C. State University News

According to its computer readout, North Carolina State University's Solar House is doing "very well, thank you," heating and cooling at remarkably low costs.

The 2,020-square-foot house, adjacent to the NCSU McKimmon Center in Raleigh, was built in the fall of 1981 to research solar energy systems and to demonstrate energy conservation techniques to the public.

So far, its heating and cooling record reads as follows:

•During the winter of 1981-82, the total cost of heating was $39.60; the cooling cost during the summer of '82 was $69.42.

•During the winter of 1982-83, the heating cost was $44.35; the cooling cost in the unusually hot summer of '83 was $140.

Performance of the traditional two-story, three-bedroom house is evaluated by project directors Albert S. Boyers and Herbert M. Eckerlin through a sophisticated data acquisition system set up in a storage area.

Boyers and Eckerlin, both members of NCSU's mechanical and aerospace engineering faculty, report that the house's passive solar features, especially the sunspace, have performed both efficiently and economically — "far beyond our expectations."

The two-story-high sunspace (or solarium) with double glass walls facing south is the primary passive solar heating feature of the fully-furnished NCSU Solar House. Other passive components — which collect, store and conserve the sun's energy for space heating without mechanical parts — include heavy masonry outside walls, insulated interior walls and window coverings.

"We believe such efficient overall performance shown thus far represents a significant achievement in the use of passive solar features for the climate in the Southeastern part of the United States," said Boyers.

With another winter season now over, the project directors are beginning to collect data on its most recent thermal performance. They believe that even though costs are expected to be higher for the very cold winter of 1983-84, the NCSU Solar House will continue to demonstrate efficient and economic winter and summer energy use.

For information on blueprints, scheduling of group tours or printed materials on house performance, call Carole Coble, administrative assistant for the house, at 919-737-3799.

ON THE HOUSE

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

At one time, very few do-it-yourselfers owned any power tools. And when they did, they usually were portable electric drills.

Today, the portable power drill is still the most used tool in the home workshop. It not only is used in the workshop, it often is kept somewhere handier, such as a kitchen drawer, a sewing room or a hobby area. Many homes have more than one electric drill, one for the man of the house and one for the lady.

The popularity of this tool has increased for a number of reasons. One is that it is one of the few tools which, in many cases, have decreased in price. Another is that the double-insulated housings prevent an electric shock if something goes wrong, thus eliminating a fear that some persons had of them in their early days. And still another is that they have become so much more versatile, being available not only in variable speeds but also able to handle dozens of useful accessories.

You will see the tools rated generally as ¼-inch, ⅜-inch and ½-inch. Those are the sizes of the maximum drill bit shank that can be held. Note that wording — the bit shank, not the size hole the bit will drill, which sometimes confuses novices.

For instance, if the shank of the bit or accessory is ¼-inch, a ¼-inch drill will hold it, even if the bit or accessory drills holes or does work half an inch in size.

The quarter-inch drill has been the biggest seller over the years, but lately manufacturers are making more and more ⅜th drills for do-it-yourselfers so that bigger shanks can be held in the chucks. The ½-inch size usually is for professionals, although it is a useful tool for home handy persons who work on large projects or do much drilling in concrete or other hard materials.

The larger the size drill, the slower the speed and the more torque or twisting power it has. Or, to put it another way, the more revolutions a minute. the less power it has. The single-speed drills were adequate for many years, but when it was discovered that many persons needed more powerful drills, especially with accessories, the manufacturers began to make variable-speed models, so that you could make them go slower or faster depending on the kind of material you were using.

Nowadays, a drill with both variable speeds and a reverse is excellent. Many households have one of each, using the cheaper, single-speed for most tasks. Incidentally, a drill with more features normally costs more.

When you select a drill, by the way, pick it up and handle it, comparing it with other drills of different sizes and makes. A drill that feels the most comfortable in your hand should be your first choice, if possible, since a drill that doesn't "feel" right can get heavy and awkward if it is used for some time.

The variations of drills are almost endless. So are the types of accessories. You can even get a drill for driving and removing screws, one for sanding and several for numerous other specialty tasks. If you intend to do any drilling where an electrical outlet is not available, consider the cordless type, which is rechargeable.

When changing a bit or inserting an accessory into the chuck, always unplug the drill first. Also, the chuck key to a drill has an uncanny way of disappearing just when you need it; therefore, keep it taped or otherwise attached to the cord somewhere near the end of the plug. You'll never again have to search for it.

(Do-it-yourselfers will find much helpful data on a variety of subjects in Andy Lang's handbook, "Practical Home Repairs," which can obtained by sending $1.50 to this paper at Box 5, Teaneck, NJ 07666.)

Here's the Answer

By ANDY LANG

Q. — My brother and I intend to build a carport this spring, since we do not have a garage. Because the weather is fairly mild in our locality, we do not intend to enclose it fully. I have seen some carports made by 2-by-4s and some made with post-and-beam construction. Which is better and, if we use post-and-beam construction, which we are inclined to do, will we be able to build the walls on the ground and then lift them into place? In the past, we have found this a much better construction technique.

A. — By all means, use the post-and-beam construction method. It is stronger and lends itself to the prefabrication system.

Q. — In buying some tools the other day, I saw a rather small hammer with a magnetic head. What is this used for?

A. — For tacks. The magnetic side enables the user to hold the tack and then push it into place. The regular face of the hammer is used for other blows.

Q. — We have an unfinished bureau we want to finish. I have several kinds of power sanders. Is it necessary to use a belt sander first?

A. — It depends on how rough the surface of the wood is. The belt sander is not necessary unless the wood is in rough condition. Otherwise, use an orbital sander, followed by a hand sanding.

Q. — Can I use soapy hot water for cleaning a paint roller which has been used for latex paint or will hot water ruin the nap?

A. — Yes, you can use hot water, but don't squeeze it dry. Just press it gently and, when it is almost dry, let the air dry the rest of it.

Q. — I am getting ready to fix and reglue our outdoor furniture. I have found the standard white glue good for most purpose. Can I use it for that?

A. — No. Most white glue is polyvinyl acetate and is not waterproof. It should not be used for any outdoor project. Most waterproof adhesives come in two containers, the contents of which must be mixed just before using.

(Techniques of using varnish, shellac, lacquer, stain, bleach, remover, etc., are detailed in Andy Lang's booklet, "Wood Finishing in the Home," which can be obtained by sending 50 cents and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to Know-How, P.O. Box 477, Huntington, NY 11743. Questions of general interest will be answered in the column.)

Q. Should I go ahead and set out bedding plants? (I.G., Franklinton)

A. Don't be impatient to set out tender bedding plants. They should not be set out until late April in the Piedmont, mid-April along the coast, and around May 10 in the mountains. April can be a cold, rainy, windy month, and the young plants will not grow until conditions are favorable.

Q. What kind of tree paint should I use for wounds to a small tree I have pruned? (E.F., Charlotte)

A. The use of tree paint and wound dressing is no longer recommended. Reserach has proven that wound dressings do not prevent decay, discourage insects or in any way help the tree.

Q. I have three four-year-old cherry trees. In the spring they put out new growth but grow very little. It doesn't seem to matter whether I fertilize them heavily or lightly; they grow the same. Apples and peaches that were planted at the same time are bearing size. The largest cherry is four feet tall with a trunk that is one-half inch thick. What could be the problem? (J.C., Taylorsville)

A. Your trees may be suffering from poor soil drainage. Cherry trees thrive on a wide range of soil types, provided the soils are well drained. Perhaps no fruit tree is more sensitive to the effects of a poorly drained soil than the cherry. For success with cherries, lighter soils are to be preferred. Also, it is always a good idea to have the soil tested.

Q. How can I attract hummingbirds to my garden? (J.G., Cary)

A. Hummingbirds prefer to feed on the nectar of tubular or deep-throated flowers and are especially attracted to bright red or orange. Some flowers, vines and shrubs that should attract hummingbirds are cannas, trumpet creeper, coral honeysuckle, azalea, fuchsia, scarlet sage (salvia), gladiolus, phlox, weigela, columbine and nicotiana. Hummingbird feeders can be purchased at most garden or hardware stores. A typical mixture for the feeders consists of one-fourth cup of sugar and one cup of water.

Anti-Smoking Move Growing

TOKYO (AP) — While smokers in many countries are being driven into corners by anti-smoking adversaries, in Japan the new Health and Welfare Minister took office recently saying that "smoking is the basis of my good health."

Kozo Watanabe, who hails from a tobacco-growing electoral district, added that he went through 80 cigarettes a day during a recent election campaign.

That the minister, official overseer of the nation's physical well-being, could make such a statement illustrates how Japan is still an unrepentant heavy-smoking society.

And that Watanabe retracted the comment the next day after protests from anti-smoking groups shows how the abstainers, while still outgunned, are beginning to appear from the haze.

"Little by little, we're making progress in homes, offices and public buildings," Midori Nakada, one of the founders in 1978 of Japan's "right to dislike smoking" movement, said in a telephone interview.

Since her campaign gained national attention, non-smoking cars have been added to trains and planes, and the sick can now usually find a breath of fresh air in sections of public hospital waiting rooms.

Ms. Nakada, however, accused the government — which is politically beholden to 100,000 tobacco farmers and reaps sizable revenues from its monopoly hold on cigarette sales — of "dragging its feet" in supporting non-smokers. She also says it is lax in informing people of the dangers of smoking to health.

The Japan Tobacco and Salt Public Corporation in 1982 sold a record 310.3 billion cigarettes, 2.7 billion more than the previous year.

The corporation said 66.1 percent of Japanese adult men were smokers, down from a record 83.6 percent in 1966 and the lowest rate since the corporation began keeping records 40 years ago. Among women, 13.5 percent smoked every day or occasionally. Smoking is on the rise among young women in particular, although it is still considered bad form for women to smoke at work or on the street.

By comparison, 38 percent of American men and 33 percent of women were smokers in 1980. In France, statistics compiled in 1979 showed 55.9 percent of men and 29.8 percent of women were smokers.

Ms. Nakada's group stresses that it is only trying to clear the air for non-smokers, not intimidate those with the habit.

The Health and Welfare Ministry said in 1980 it had issued a report concurring with the World Health Organization that smoking had a clear linkage with heart disease, cancer and respiratory ailments. But the report's main message was that long-range health education was needed and heavy smokers should be advised to cut back.

A similar menthol-mild message appears on cigarette packs — "For health purposes, let's be careful not to smoke too much." The tobacco monopoly has resisted all suggestions that a stronger warning is warranted.

Cancer in recent years has become the No. 1 killer in Japan, and health fears are certainly one reason for the declining number of male smokers.

Sea Museum To Get New Site

By DENNIS PATTERSON
Associated Press Writer

BEAUFORT, N.C. (AP) — The Hampton Mariner's Museum sits on a side street in Beaufort, but thousands of sailors from New England to the Virgin Islands have no trouble finding it when they want nautical charts, instruments or other information.

"We have people who come in here all the time and say they heard about us in St. Thomas or the Bahamas," said Charles McNeill, the museum curator. "In the height of the season here, you can count 150 to 200 masts out in the harbor, with boats from all over the world."

McNeill, a former Merchant Marine officer who directed the state port at Morehead City for 17 years, became curator in 1975 after the museum had languished for nearly 24 years.

Founded in 1951, the museum was used to house an array of ship's hardware and naval memorabilia in dusty cases. Although officially a part of the state Museum of Natural History, it did not receive full state funding until 1975.

"It was just before dying," McNeill said. "At that time I was the only staff member."

But the days of displays glued on plywood, naval relics crammed into cases and a non-existent staff have disappeared.

Next year, the museum will move from its rented facilities to a new building across the street from the waterfront. On the waterfront, the museum's Watercraft Center already houses a small craft collection, maritime research activities and a boatshop.

The new building will also bring a new name — the North Carolina Maritime Museum.

The museum now has a world-class shell collection which already was scientifically catalogued and mounted when given to the museum. The collection is so large that only parts of it can be displayed at one time.

"We'll probably have room to display all of it when we move into the new building, but I'm not sure we'll do that," McNeill said. "People seem to enjoy coming in and seeing something different every few months."

Box after box of shells not on display are stacked throughout the museum's workrooms — in an old shower, on top of cabinets, anywhere flat space can be found.

The shell displays are augmented with examples of mounted fish and coastal wildlife that mix with old shipbuilders' tools, a scrimshaw exhibit, wooden ship models and artifacts from early coastal life.

"What we're trying to do is blend maritime history with natural history," McNeill said. "We think that's the way to go."

The museum also offers a library for mariners, with books on a wide variety of sailing topics, plus rare volumes that include a Dutch book on shipbuilding from the 1600s and a 100-year-old copy of the "Rime of the Ancient Mariner" illustrated with elaborate woodcuts.

Geoffrey Scofield, an Englishman bound for the Virgin Islands, stopped into the museum in 1979 to use the library. He never left.

Scofield, a master boatbuilder and designer who learned his craft in England, stayed in Beaufort to organize the museum's boatbuilding skills program.

The program, which trains a limited number of students in wooden boat building, has been put on hold this summer while Scofield builds a 24-foot ship's boat to be used on the Elizabeth II, a reproduction of a 16th century sailing ship built for the 400th anniversary of the English colonizing expeditions.

The museum also sponsors an annual boat show featuring wooden craft.

In a back room, Mike Alford works on maritime research, drawing up plans for small boats that were once used along the North Carolina coast. Drawings for about 50 of those boats, many of which have disappeared, have been completed.

For the school groups who frequent the museum in April and May, there is a variety of field trips designed to teach children about the coastal environment.

The trips range from slogging through the mud of a coastal salt marsh in search of wildlife to hunting for fossils and shells on the Shackleford Banks offshore.

For those who fancy seafood, the museum also offers an annual "strange seafood" dinner limited to 1,000 diners.

The dinner, held each year in August, features foreign seafood delicacies like octopus and squid as well as North Carolina oddities like herring roe and eggs.

The museum is expected to attract more than 100,000 visitors this year. McNeill said.

Old Church Plans Last Mass Today

PLAQUEMINE, La. (AP) — One last Mass will be celebrated at Immaculate Conception Church here on Easter, then the doors will be locked to end 45 years of ministry.

No priest can be found to replace the Rev. Fred Roggiosa, who died last year, said the Rev. Charles J. Crowley.

"It's beginning to happen more because young people don't want to go into the priesthood," said Crowley. "They don't way to sacrifice. They want to be free."

"Maybe it's a reflection of what's happening in society and the church in the last 15 years," said Monsignor Robert Berggreen, vocations director of the Baton Rouge diocese.

Founded in 1939, Immaculate Conception is one of several churches in the diocese founded by the Josephine Fathers, a group of English priests in the St. Joseph Society of the Sacred Heart.

It's had an interracial congregation from its early days, and currently has about 60 black parishioners and 30 white people, said the Rev. Edward G. Bowes, who has served as pastor for several months.

Financial problems play no part in the closing of the church, because parishioners have been generous in their support of the church, Bowes said.

Crowley said the congregation of Immaculate Conception will attend either St. Jude or St. Clement of Rome, and records will be sent to one of those churches.

Berggreen said Immaculate Conception is the first church to close in years, but the Josephine Fathers are having to make decisions on how best to use their dwindling numbers.

He wouldn't speculate about whether more churches might be forced to close in the future.

"That might have the effect of the prophecy causing something to come true," he said.

He said 40 seminarians are studying in the Baton Rouge diocese, "and that's not bad for a parish of our size."

"Under the movement of the Holy Spirit, the needs of the people are going to be met," he said.

SILENCE IS GOLDEN

DEAR READERS: We have had many requests over the years for those hands that we consider to be our favorites. That makes quite a list. For the time being, therefore, we are devoting the Sunday column to a series of famous hands. At the end of the series, we will go back to our weekly question and answer column.

Opening lead: Jack of ♠.

1975 was the 25th anniversary of the Bermuda Bowl matches — the world team championship of bridge. To commemorate the occasion, the event was staged on the tranquil island of Bermuda, where the late Norman Bach organized the first championship.

The tournament was anything but tranquil. The calm of international bridge was shattered by cheating accusations against one of Italy's pairs. Then a shaken U.S. team frittered away a considerable lead and lost the final to Italy on the famous "king of clubs" hand featured in this space some time ago.

This hand cropped up early in the final and helped the U.S. to its lead. The Italian South opened a weak one no trump and there could be considerable discussion as to what West should bid with his solid eight-card suit. You would find supporters for any number of clubs from two to five.

In the room where the Italians held the East-West cards, West introduced his clubs at his first opportunity and bought the hand at four clubs, which went down one trick. Sitting West for the U.S. team was Billy Eisenberg. He decided that there was no need for him to enter the auction immediately, so he passed!

The auction took a most pleasant turn for him. When North showed a hand with a long diamond suit and a smattering of strength, South elected to try three no trump on the basis that the diamond suit would produce at least six tricks for his side. Eisenberg passed again (he was happy with the contract — if he doubled North-South would almost surely run to four diamonds) and three no trump became the final contract.

In the best textbook style, Eisenberg led his fourth-best club — the jack. By the time he had cashed all eight of his clubs, his partner had signaled for a spade lead. So the defenders took the first nine tricks for a gain of 350 points, or 8 International Match Points.

'El Nino' Cut Anchovy Supply

WASHINGTON (AP) — The unusual warming of Pacific Ocean waters last year, known as the El Nino phenomenon, brought bad news for some lovers of pizza and Salade Nicoise — an anchovy shortage.

Officials of the National Marine Fisheries Service attributed a drop in the U.S. anchovy catch to 23.3 million pounds, down from 103.3 million pounds in 198., to the El Nino, a mysterious phenomenon that plays havoc with many fish.

Egyptian Teacher Sees Greenville As 'Golden City'

By LA RONA MURRAY

"I recognize Greenville as a Golden City with special opportunities for taking pride in education as well as for its farming achievements," says Sabro Honna Itnasious, who came form Cairo, Egypt, last August to make Greenville his home.

Itnasious, an avid patron of education, Egyptian history and religion, is an instructor at Whal-Coates School. An English teacher in Cairo and Luxor for more than 20 years, Itansious speaks his second language fluently.

He likes to compare the advancement of education, from its cradle of civilization with its hieroglyphic form of writing and crude writing on papyrus, to our modern day facilities for learning.

"In Egypt, there are four stages of education, pretty much like here in America," he said. "We have six years of primary school, three years of preparatory school equaling to junior high, three years of secondary school, and our higher education with five principal universities in Cairo alone, which includes many branches throughout Egypt."

Arabic is the official language of Egypt but French and English are mandatory subjects in class rooms. According to Itnasious, the president is trying to raise the standard of living for Egypt's 42 million people. "But Egypt is shorthanded on certain educational tools," Itnasious commented. "Here in America we just take it for granted that we can walk down the hall and use a copier. We do have computers in Egypt, but not in the schools as yet."

He explained that though living conditions in Egypt are comfortable, there is a continual effort to improve them. "There is no unemployment problem. In fact, employees are always looking for workers."

Itnasious has an extensive background of educational achievements. He graduated from Teacher's College in Cairo in 1963 with an advanced diploma, then served as principal and teacher in various prepatory schools in various schools in Luxor and Cairo.

His responsibilities included management of fiscal affairs and physical plants in the schools. From 1964 to 1973 he served as a teacher and department chairman of Luxor Military High School for Boys. Among his volunteer activities was his work in the Holy Bible Orphanage Society and as YMCA director in charge of program development and career planning.

At Wahl-Coates, Itnasious assists with the class of severely handicapped children. Describing a little girl in a wheelchair, he said: "When she leaves her chair she can stand for a while as she wears shoes with a back helper to enable her to stand. Her eyesight is unsteady, she sees a little to the right but not straight ahead. I tried to shake hands with her but found she can't keep her hand open.

"Through practice we will try to help her use her hands. She is a promising child. She can improve a lot through practice and concentration and careful help. We want to teach her to give signs with her hands so she can express some of the actions she cannot voice.

"Someone told me this child loves me and that makes my efforts worthwhile. Small children are pure, they know true feelings."

Other duties Itnasious has been assigned at Wahl-Coates include instructing students on the application of education as well as enlightening them on Egyptian history, along with its possible influence on our culture.

According to him, many of the students are eager to learn about things such as the early ultra-religious state of Egypt, rife with polytheism, headed by the cosmic sun god Ra; the origin of the pyramids; Egyptian arts and engineering, and its educational system.

"Sometimes the students ask lots of additional questions after a discussion," he said. "I know from this that they are learning."

Commenting on the many dieties of early Egypt, Itnasious said, "From Ra came many gods. Among them were the most popular triad of Osiris, his wife Isis, and Horus, his son. They bear some similarities to our modern triune God, God the father, God the son, and God the holy ghost.

According to an excerpt from a manuscript prepared by Itnasious on the history of Egypt, our present astroloigcal chart with its zodiac played a prominent role in early Egypt. "The Egyptians had recognized the planets and their movements and had named stars and constellations," he said. "They perfected some devices for measuring time at night by the stars and they invented the first star clocks, which have been found on coffin lids."

From the position of the stars at the birth of an individual the fate of the early Egyptian was determined, much like the belief in astrology today.

About 90 percent of Egypt's population embraces the Islamic faith. Itnasious is a member of a minority religion in Egypt, the Christian Coptic Church. History records that Mark, a follower of Jesus, founded the church in 42 A.D. while on a visit to Egypt. This makes it one of the world's oldest religions. Its doctrines, and its long and ritualized liturgy, distinguishes it from other religions.

Since there is no Coptic church in Greenville or nearby, Itnasious attends St. Peter's Catholic Church. "The Catholic religion," he states, "is believed to be the nearest thing to the Coptic religion."

Reflecting on his childhood in Egypt, Itnasious said his father was a businessman dealing in supplying materials, including animal skins, to shoe manufacturers.

"I have five brothers and four sisters," he related. "My childhood was normal, typical of any other Egyptian family. I always enjoyed books, maybe too much. I spent a lot of my time in libraries."

Focusing on later years, he mentioned the roles some of his ex-students play in Egyptian life today. "Some are lawyers and doctors, some are laborers. It gives me a great feeling of satisfaction knowing I played a small role in their future," he said.

Itnasious came to Greenville at the suggestion of his son, Murad, and a married daugher, Emkon Abader. Murad is enrolled at East Carolina University, majoring in physics. Etedel, his wife and a former student of his in Cairo, is planning to join Itnasious in the near future.

Wandering Grogan now 'Living It Up'

By Nicholas Bronte

If, a few years back, anybody had told Toronto-born Liz Grogan about all the wacky things she would one day be doing on CTV's "Live It Up," she says she most certainly would have told him he was crazy.

Actually, considering that Miss Grogan holds a psychology degree from the University of Toronto, she would probably have put matters a trifle more tactfully. In retrospect, it's obvious that from the day she left college, her career path followed a meandering but steady route toward exactly what she's doing now.

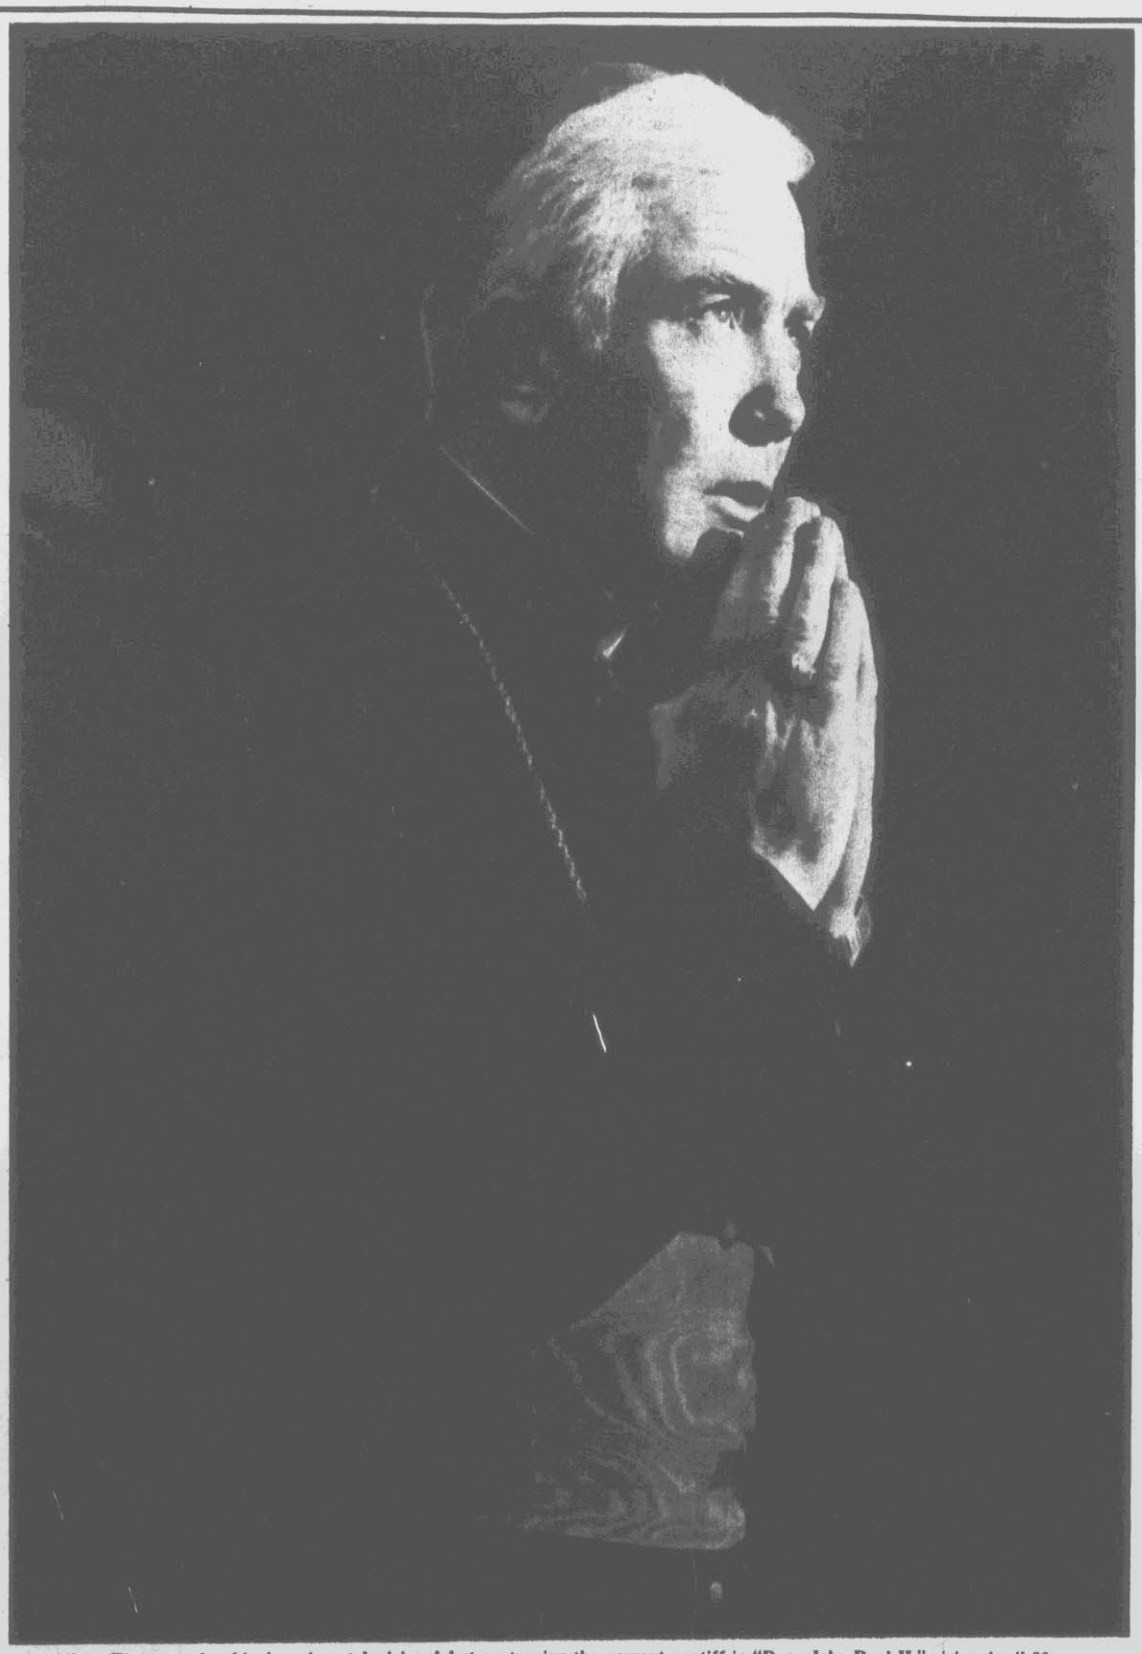
After extensive traveling during her early 20s, Miss Grogan, now 34, impulsively joined an independent film company. She then veered into TV as the host of "Noon Hour," a local Winnipeg show. Two years later she was back in Toronto as a story editor for "Hourlong," a local news show.

That, in turn, led to a job producing and directing "The Barbara McLeod Show," one of CBC's most popular talk-fests. Miss Grogan's reputation for making the impossible look easy was so impressive that CTV decided to steal her away to replace Mary-Lou Finley when she left "Live It Up."

All of that, says Grogan a bit breathlessly, explains just how a level-headed psych major ended up doing such daft things as riding a whale, jump-starting a Maserati while wearing a ball gown, being wrapped in plastic for the dubious purpose of shedding inches from her svelte figure, and playing private eye on one of those "murder weekends" that are becoming so popular. She was positive that the butler didn't do it and she was right.

All in all, after wrapping up the last show of her second season, Miss Grogan is convinced that, even if she had become a practising psychologist, and even if her work had exposed her to the nuttiest of nut cases, her life could never have ended up as zany as it has.

All last winter, for instance, she said she continually had to leave parties so she could run home and take time-lapse photos of the mass of hydroponic plants she was growing for the show. "Do you have any idea what it does to your social life," she mock-wails, "to constantly be saying, 'Excuse me, but I have to go home now and take pictures of my plants'?"



Albert Finney makes his American television debut portraying the current pontiff in "Pope John Paul II," airing April 22 on CBS.

Eilbacher stars

Lisa Eilbacher, Holland Taylor, Bruce Jenner and James Earl Jones have been cast in a comedy-drama pilot for ABC.

In the pilot, currently filming in San Francisco, Miss Eilbacher and Miss Taylor star as a daughter-mother detective team. Miss Eilbacher portrays the daughter who's suddenly saddled with her impulsive, socialite mother in the detective agency she runs with her late father's partner (Jones). Jenner plays a former football star employed by the agency.

Star returns

The daytime series, "Another World" will celebrate its 20th anniversary on Friday, May 4. However, there will be another cause for celebration on that day. Jacquie Courtney will return to the program, recreating the popular character Alice Frame, whom she portrayed during the first 11 years of the series.

Michele Will Tell

By Michele Marks

DEAR MICHELE: I have a bet with my son that it was Robert Mitchel who starred in Jane Russell's film, "The Outlaw." Please help me out. — Joseph S. Koziel

To Joseph: Sorry dad, you're wrong this time. The 1943 film starred Jane Russell in her screen debut, with Thomas Mitchess, Jack Buetel, Mimi Aguglia, Joe Sawyer and Walter Huston as Doc Holliday. Directed by Howard Hawks, with plenty of help from Howard Hughes, RKO studio chief and Jane Russell's lover at the time, "The Outlaw" was outlawed for seven years. The obvious exploitation of Ms. Russell's "full-figured" assets created a furor. My, how times have changed in 40 years.

DEAR MICHELE: I would like to know if Lawrence Welk is still in show business or has he retired? — Loni Presse

To Loni: Welk took a temporary hiatus from show business, but is scheduled to return in a brand new syndicated show. Wunnerful, wunnerful.

DEAR MICHELE: Is Hugh Beaumont, who played Ward Cleaver on "Leave It to Beaver," dead? — Gary Williams

To Gary: Yes, Hugh Beaumont died May 14, 1982 at the age of 72. A victim of a heart attack while visiting his son overseas, he is survived by his widow, two sons and a daughter. Although Beaumont is best remembered for his role on "Leave It to Beaver," the late actor had numerous film credits and also appeared in the series "South of Panama."

DEAR MICHELE: Help! What is the name of a World War II movie that took place in Europe and starred Richard Burton? — JoAnn Hackman

To JoAnn: "Where Eagles Dare" is the title of the feature film based on Alistair MacLean's novel. Released in 1969, the action-packed thriller featured Richard Burton and Clint Eastwood, along with an excellent supporting cast.

DEAR MICHELE: Having watched Sonny & Cher on TV in the past, I often wondered if Cher could be related to a singing duo my husband and I enjoyed a number of years ago, Keely Smith and Louis Prima. Cher's mannerisms seem so similar to Miss Smith's. — Francis Schifo

To Francis: Cher's mom was a singer; however, she was not Keely Smith. Born Cherilyn La Piere, her father was a banker. Any resemblance to Miss Smith is pure coincidence. But, like Sonny & Cher, Louis Prima and Keely Smith were husband and wife.

TV Chatter

By Polly Vonetes

Rome burns again: Stuart Cooper, director of the 12-hour miniseries, "A.D.," filming in Tunisia, has alerted the fire departments of Monastir (population 30,000) and Sousse (population 435,000) to be on hand during the filming of the climactic sequence. They will be needed to control the flames that will destroy a three-square-block recreation of Rome circa 69 A.D. Three hundred Tunisian locals, playing panicked Romans, will take part in the scene, which will require four nights to film.

The recent break-in at Penny Marshall's home reads like a scary version of "Laverne and Shirley." Miss Marshall escaped harm but was shaken when she was held hostage after surprising burglars in her Hollywood home. She managed to set off a silent alarm before confronting the two men, dressed in Japanese warrior clothing, who were ransacking the rooms. After they grabbed her, the perpetrators threatened to kill her with a samurai sword if she didn't give them jewelry and money. Fortunately, the police had surrounded the house and were able to apprehend the burglars as they attempted to leave.

Mary Jo Catlett has been signed to star in a TV movie based on the life of singer Kate Smith. The long-overdue film, "When the Moon Comes Over the Mountain," is named for Miss Smith's theme song.

Who plays John Abbott on "The Young and the Restless"? Also, is Steven the real first name of the actor who plays Andy Richards on the same soap? — B.S. Rio Dell, Calif.

Jerry Douglas plays John Abbott. And, yes Steven is "Andy's" real first name. His last name is Ford and he is the son of former president Gerald Ford and his wife Betty.

Henry Winkler sees 'Happy Days' ahead

By Peter Meade

Henry Winkler

There's a lot more to Henry Winkler than the black leather jacket he wore for 11 years as the Fonz on "Happy Days." The actor has been involved in a variety of extracurricular activities since leaving the ABC sitcom.

Winkler's current preoccupation is directing. He made his directorial bow in a 1982 episode of the "Happy Days" spinoff, "Joanie Loves Chachi." But that was just a trial run for "All the Kids Do It," a CBS "School Break Special," to air Tuesday, April 24. Winkler, in his capacity as executive producer of the project, went to the network with what he calls "a one-line idea" for a program about the effects of teenage drunk driving. When the network executives accepted the idea, Winkler was asked if he had any suggestions for a director.

"I pointed to myself," says Winkler. "Hey, I've directed my daughter (who's almost 4) in plenty of home movies."

The executive producer got his way. Winkler is involved with four production companies: Monumental (for movies), Fair Dinkum and Winkler-Rich (for TV) and JZM (children's TV). JZM — the initials stand for his three children, Jed, Zoe and Max — is behind the hour-long "All the Kids Do It."

Now that "Happy Days" has ended its run as one of the most successful series in television history, Winkler will have more time for his role as the devoted father. He will also have time to work on other projects and keep in touch with "Happy Days" alumni.

Winkler will be directing Scott Baio in "All the Kids Do It." He calls the former Chachi Arcola, cousin of the Fonz, "a complete professional." He also has hopes to work with Ron Howard and Anson Williams again, and his movie company is currently working with director Rob Reiner on a feature called "The Sure Thing." But another series is not just around the corner.

"There are too many things to do," says Winkler. "Directing is great fun. In producing, I knew how everything ran, especially working in theater. But movies are more complicated. But I think 'All the Kids Do It' is a great little movie. Kids are so sophisticated today, you can't talk down to them. But I want to take them on an emotional journey that will knock their socks off."

USFL Heads Home

By Willie Schatz

April 22 marks the ninth week of the USFL regular season. ABC will once again broadcast a game of the week. As usual, Keith Jackson and Lynn Swann (or Tim Brant and Lee Grosscup at the backup game) will do the play-by-play and analysis.

The USFL is hoping for a great game. ABC, of course, is hoping for a ratings bonanza as well. The network, however, doesn't need the high numbers as much as the USFL.

The fledgling league is desperate to score touchdowns with viewers. The league has made no bones about its future — and its future on ABC in 1985 and 1986. The first two years cost ABC $18.4 million — absolute peanuts in the sports television world. Protecting itself, as any smart business would, the network has the option to broadcast games in 1985 for $14 million and in 1986 for $18 million. It has the right of first refusal for 1987.

ESPN is also in on the USFL's act. This week and every week it has games on Monday and Saturday nights. For that privilege, the cable network parted with $4 million last year and $7 million this year. It also has a right of first refusal in 1985.

Each night, USFL owners dream of monstrous television contracts that by themselves would change their clubs' balance sheets from bright red to jet black. The league is projecting as much as $8.6 million in television revenue per club in 1987. Not quite NFL dollars, but not hay, either.

The league's survival depends on the television contract. If ratings are strong, and ABC likes what it sees on the field, the network will pick up its option.

There's certainly more to like this year than last. First, the play has dramatically improved. Second, there are other recognizable names around besides Herschel Walker. Many have been stolen from the once-mighty NFL, an indication that the USFL thinks it's here to stay. Third, as the players' performance has improved, so has ABC's. Last, but not least, ratings are up.

So it looks good for the USFL as the season begins to draw to a close. After the regular season ends on June 24, ABC will telecast four divisional playoffs, the two conference championships and the championship game on July 15.

By that time ABC should have decided what it's going to do next year. Now that viewers have grown accustomed to football in the spring and summer, ABC wouldn't take it away from them. Or would they?

Sunday, April 22

Women's Tennis Association (WTA) championship, NBC, 2:30-4:30 p.m. Brought to you live by Dick Enberg and Bud Collins. Both they and the network are warming up for the French Open and Wimbledon.

Heritage Golf Classic, CBS, 3:30-6 p.m. Defending champion Fuzzy Zoeller is always fun to watch. He's one of the few who acts as if he's really enjoying himself. Check him out.

Sportsworld, NBC, 4:30-6. p.m. The Phoenix 150, with Paul Page, Indy champion Johnny Rutherford, Gary Gerould and Bruce Jenner calling the action. A 14-pound camera will be placed in Bobby Rahal's car, the better for you to get a feel for the thrill of racing.

Saturday, April 28

Liberty Mutual Legends of Golf, NBC, 4-6 p.m. The seventh edition of this team best-ball tournament. You have to be over 50 to qualify. Arnold Palmer will be there, an automatic plus for the network. It guarantees his army will watch.

ASK THEM YOURSELF

Pamela Sue Martin will celebrate the end of her fourth and final season as Dynasty's Fallon by slipping off to the South of France with entrepreneur-husband, Manuel Rojas. But the couple will make it a working holiday as they try to sell their independently produced feature, Torchlight, to distributors at the Cannes Film Festival. The film, which stars Martin along with her ex-Dynasty brother Al Corley and Steve Railsback, concerns the breakdown of a marriage when the husband gets hooked on cocaine. "Maybe it was a risk," says Martin, who also co-wrote the movie, "but that's the only kind of thing that interests me now. During my whole time with Dynasty, I've been aching to do something I feel is significant. Now I've done it. It's a great feeling."

□

One of Hollywood's newest young sex symbols, Kevin Footloose Bacon, wants everyone to remember that he has sizzled in many small roles in low budget films — Diner is the best known of these — and that he intends to continue the pattern if the project is worthy. For instance, he agreed to do a cameo role in True Love just to be near his own true love, Tracy Pollan, the leading lady. "I want to be rich and famous like everyone else," says Kevin. "But I've found that it's much more important for me to do good work. I never want people to think there's a price on my head." Maybe Kevin can rely on sweetheart Tracy to bring home the bacon.

Canadian singing star Anne Murray, who recently picked up her fourth Grammy Award for "A Little Good News," has tentative plans to record an album of standards a la Linda Ronstadt. "But I would take a more authentic approach," says Murray, a longtime Linda fan. "Linda's a modern-day singer and doesn't have the technique those Big Band Era people had. I would tread very carefully and sort of meld the modern with the old."

□

Just about everybody who feasts eyes on Bo Derek comes to the same numerical conclusion: ten. Okay, okay, but who goes down in Bo's book as that special double digit? Other than husband John, that is. "Sinatra. His voice melts me and always has. I grew up on him, dropped out for rock 'n' roll for a while — but always was faithful to ol' Blue Eyes." We call that being perfectly frank.

□

In our "Ask Them Yourself" page on March 4, we completely misrepresented superstar Larry Hagman's opinion of his daughter and son-in-law as artists. In fact, Hagman is an enthusiastic supporter of their artwork, and has numerous pieces of theirs displayed in his home in Malibu, California. Larry is reported to be behind his daughter — and her husband — 100 percent, and regards both of them as extremely talented artists. We are sorry.

□

Sachi Parker, Shirley MacLaine's 27-year-old daughter by Tokyo-based businessman, Steve Parker, will soon make her acting debut in the new Burt Reynolds film, Stick. But Sachi, who grew up in the Orient with her father (Shirley and Steve, married for 29 years, were divorced last year after a lengthy bihemispherical relationship), keeps a low profile. Currently residing with her mom in Malibu, she is being at least as elusive as Greta Garbo. According to MacLaine's press agent, Parker doesn't want her own unconventional upbringing compared with that of the Debra Winger character in MacLaine's film, Terms of Endearment.

□

Dolly Parton plans to spend three months writing a screenplay about a country girl (guess who). Explaining that it's time she ran the show, Parton will also produce her bucolic epic. All we can say is "Hooray for Dollywood."

How did you get your big break? — J.O., San Mateo, Cal.

I was a page at NBC and part of my job was to study pictures of the execs, so I'd know what they looked like, for security purposes. One day I was assigned guard duty outside a studio and one big brass, whose photo I hadn't studied, wanted to go in. "Your name, please," I said. "I don't recognize you." He said "I'm coming in anyway." I replied, "No you're not." I was on the verge of being fired until it was pointed out that I was only doing my job. So I stayed, and found my way to The Tonight Show.

Still Thinking Positive

Happy Easter, Dr. Norman Vincent Peale

By James S. Kunen

Norman Vincent Peale and Ruth, his wife of 53 years: "In the first place, we love each other."

There I was chatting with Dr. Norman Vincent Peale and his wife, Ruth, in his simply furnished office at New York City's Marble Collegiate Church, where he is in his 52nd year as pastor. Dr. Peale, having finished conducting the Sunday service and counseling a stream of parishioners, was telling me about the book he wrote in 1951.

"I first called that book The Power of Faith. But my publisher said, 'Who are you writing this for, church people? Don't you want to reach everybody?' I said, 'Sure, as many as I can.' 'Well,' he said, 'I've got an idea. In this manuscript there's a repetitive phrase that I think would make a better title.' I said, 'What is it?' He said, 'It's The Power of Positive Thinking.'"

Norman Vincent Peale didn't go for that at first, but Ruth agreed with the publisher that 'positive thinking' meant faith — really — and Dr. Peale always has valued Ruth's opinions. So he went along, and since then The Power of Positive Thinking has sold 15 million copies in 39 languages. Today, Dr. Peale, at 85, is working simultaneously on his 30th and 31st books; writing a weekly newspaper column that appears in over 50 publications; co-publishing, with Ruth, Guideposts, an interfaith magazine with four million subscribers; doing radio spots broadcast on 440 stations; and recording inspirational telephone messages dialed a million times a year throughout the nation. He has to reread Positive Thinking to convince himself he can do it all.

People who've never heard of Norman Vincent Peale know it's important to "think positive," and if they don't, there's always some best-selling author or "seminar-trainer" eager to teach them. But Norman Vincent Peale has probably done more than just about anyone else alive to shape middle-class American culture. That's why I really wanted to meet him.

My enthusiasm was tempered by skepticism, however. My own relationship to middle-class American culture has been an adversarial one. My first book, The Strawberry Statement, was a chronicle of the 1960's student movement. If you bet that I never voted for Dr. Peale's longtime friend Richard Nixon, you'd win.

To prepare for the interview, I read The Power of Positive Thinking, and at first I was circling things to attack. But before I knew it, I'd forgotten about that and was excitedly underlining insights and ideas that seemed addressed directly to me.

For instance, my interview with Dr. Peale was scheduled for 1 P.M. but I realized that to do a good job of it, I should get to the church at 11 a.m. to hear his sermon. As it happened, I was out till 3 A.M. engaging in "superficial escapism through feverish activity which merely deadens pain temporarily and does not heal, as, for example, parties and drinking." (The Power of Positive Thinking, p. 202.) When I struggled awake on Sunday morning, I realized there was no way in the world I was going to make the sermon. "You dirt ball, Kunen," I thought. "You've messed up again. Now the interview is going to be a failure."

"Wait a minute," I heard another voice say. "The mind always tries to complete what it pictures. So always picture 'success' no matter how badly things seem to be going at the moment." (PPT, p. 24.) I felt a weight lift off my shoulders. Everything would be just fine.

And it was. Dr. Peale, who with his round face and gray hair bears a resemblance to Senator Sam Ervin, and Ruth, a diminutive, white-haired woman with twinkling blue eyes, were both warm, friendly, open people who seemed to be as interested in me as I was in them.

"Is success as a human being synonymous with material success?" I asked Dr. Peale.

"In my mind, success is to be a successful person," he replied in his strong, gravelly voice. "That is, you're in control of yourself. I met a man the other day. He has no money; never held a big job. But he's on top of his life. That would mean he's not motivated by fear, anxiety, hate, jealousy or any of those destructive emotions."

Peale has done more than almost anyone else to shape middle-class America.

"Speaking of success, you've been happily married for 53 years. How do you do it?"

Dr. Peale and Ruth, each of whom is the child of a minister, looked at one another for a moment and smiled. "In the first place, we love each other," he said simply. "I'm very happy in her company."

Ruth nodded agreement. "I believe that a wife undergirds a husband's weaknesses, and encourages his strengths," she said. "If you undergird his weaknesses, that means you recognize them and then you decide that you're going to live with them. You're not going to change him. A lot of marriages break up because the wife thinks she's going to change that guy." She frowned and shook her head. "I found that Norman didn't know how to balance a checkbook, so I soon took that over. Then I realized that he was going to have a very busy professional life, so I started to organize things." They both chuckled.

Nothing makes people laugh so much as recognition of the truth. It was Ruth who had gotten on the phone with me to arrange this interview. Ruth was the one who acted as gatekeeper, determining which parishioners saw Peale and for how long. Peale said that if Ruth weren't a minister's wife, she'd be "a tycoon." I don't doubt it. The question is: If Peale weren't Ruth's husband, what would he be? Less than he is today, I think.

"The idea of 'positive thinking' turns up everywhere," I said. "For instance, Mary Kay Cosmetics — they stand up and shout, 'I am going to be a success! I am going to sell a lot of cosmetics.' Is that a distortion of the idea?"

"Well, yeah, it is," Dr. Peale said quietly, reluctant to criticize. He sat pensively for a moment; then his face brightened as he thought of something positive. "The best thing you can say about it is that it's a kind of affirmative process. Let me tell you about Mary Kay. I went down there to speak to her convention one time. I spoke to about 3,000 women at 11 in the morning, and they were all dressed in evening dresses, long white dresses —"

"— Pink dresses," Ruth corrected.

"Huh?" Peale looked over at his wife quizzically.

"Her color is pink," she responded firmly.

"Well, I don't remember," Peale conceded with a little laugh. "But she made quite an impression on me. She said, 'I've got a man here this morning to tell you how to be beautiful on the inside, and that will make you beautiful on the outside.' Any demonstration of trying to be more than you've been sort of strikes me sympathetically."

"You speak in the book of people who, because they have inner peace, are never sick a day in their life. Does that mean if you do get sick, it's your own fault?" (I can't stand people who blame the victim.)

"Oh no, no, no — that's ridiculous!" Dr. Peale more or less shouted, waving his arms. "The Christian religion above all things is just plain common sense. And you don't get sick because you've done something. However, if you hate people, if you are filled with prejudice and fear, all this can make you sick."

PEALE

He sat a little taller in his chair as he began, from long habit, to preach. "God didn't make a secure universe. He made people who could handle insecurity with aplomb and gallantry — that's what he made. And these folks who seem to think that if you're good, you're going to be spared all the adversities of life — that's an old question: Why do the righteous suffer and the evil prosper? Well, God doesn't pay all his bills on the first of the month, but He pays them ultimately."

I pictured a Supreme Being with a cluttered desk, always running a little bit behind, His "in" box eternally fuller than His "out" box. It was an affecting image; Peale was affecting me.

"Jesus was the greatest statesman," Peale said, "because He taught us to 'love one another.'"

"As a society, maybe the United States isn't thinking as positively as it might," I suggested delicately, lest the cloud of politics blot out the sunny optimism in which I was basking. "Like the death penalty doesn't seem a very positive way to deal with a criminal, because that's totally ruling out the possibility that there's any goodness in that person." I knew Peale was a conservative, so naturally, I expected him to be in favor of the death penalty, which I oppose.

"The United States doesn't think," Dr. Peale declared emphatically. "You think. Ruth thinks. I think. But we think as individuals. There is no such thing as mass thinking, except as we all contribute to it. Now, if a miracle could happen where everybody in this country suddenly became a positive thinker, that would mean they were all thinking with faith. Then I do believe they'd throw out things like capital punishment; they'd throw out all prejudice between the Jew and the Christian, the black and the white; that would all go down the drain."

This Dr. Peale was full of surprises! I was emboldened to ask, "What do you think about the nuclear arms race, and the fact that the whole world seems to be in peril of extinction, and here we are building 100 MX missiles?" I hastened to add, "I'm not trying to draw you into being political."

"This isn't a political question," he replied. "This is a life-saving question. George Bernard Shaw or somebody said that Jesus is the greatest statesman of all time, if humanity could get to believing that He was. Now what's He saying? 'Love one another.' Why should the Russians hate the United States, and why should the United States hate the Russians? If everybody in the U.S. knew that unless we got together with our so-called enemies, we'd all be killed tomorrow morning, wouldn't we do something about it? If we knew for sure that we were all going to be blown up tomorrow at noonday, we'd get down on our knees and we'd start praying that the Russians wouldn't do it and that we could get together with them. So why don't we just decide to do it before the eventuality occurs? I believe that Jesus Christ's principles work."

I agreed with him — who wouldn't? — but I was reminded of something that had been bothering me. "I'm Jewish," I said, "and in your book you talk about putting all your faith in Jesus. Does that leave me out?"

"I'm so glad you brought that up!" he replied with genuine enthusiasm. "When you run into 'Jesus,' just change it to 'God.'" He gazed into the distance, reflecting. "This teaches me another lesson, maybe. I write for everybody; maybe I'd better use 'God' more and 'Jesus' less. But when I do that, I get a feeling of being disloyal."

"You could just say once at the beginning of your next book what you've said to me," I suggested.

"You think that would cover it?"

"I think that would do it."

"O. K." he said. "You know, you've helped me."

I'd helped him! What a wonderful feeling! Either Dr. Peale was a genuinely humble and appreciative man, or he had an ability to know exactly what to say to make anybody think that he was. Either way, he was great.

"Except, we would get thousands of letters," Ruth cautioned him.

"It's true that there are an awful lot of narrow-minded people in the world," Dr. Peale agreed.

"Absolutely," I said. "I was listening to a radio minister the other day who had a letter from a listener that said, 'Settle an argument: Can a man be saved if he does not believe in the Virgin Birth?' And the radio minister said, 'No, a man cannot be saved if he does not believe in the Virgin Birth.' I thought: 'Who are you to say?'"

Dr. Peale shook his head sympathetically. "The good, big Heavenly Father, the good God who loves us all, that he would cast into hell somebody who didn't believe in some theological idea — it's just ridiculous!" He reflected for a moment and added, "Anybody who thinks he has all the answers is a little suspect."

Until now, that most definitely included me. I certainly learned a lot from Norman Vincent Peale. FW

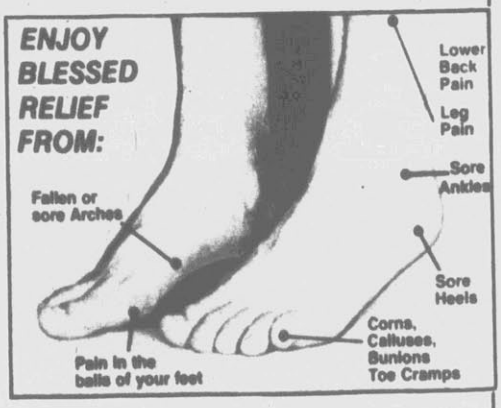
Here's how to stop foot pain...instantly!

There's really no mystery about what causes foot problems

Very simply stated, when you're born, each of your feet has 26 different bones held in balance and position by tendons, muscles and ligaments.

Once something happens to destroy this balance, (no matter what your age) it's irreversible unless you do something about it.



There's really no mystery about finding relief

Since 1948, over 3,000,000 people are enjoying blessed relief they never thought possible . . . thanks to Flexible Featherspring® Foot Supports which are made in West Germany.

How do Featherspring bring relief? Well, unlike costly special shoes, mass-produced arch preserves, or ready-made, drug store remedies, custom-formed Flexible Featherspring actually restore and maintain the elastic support your feet had when you were a youth.

No matter how long you've had foot problems—be it 3 months or 30 years—the instant you slip a pair of Featherspring in your shoes (one pair is all you'll ever need)—you'll be able to stand all day, walk, dance, even jog or run in total comfort.

What people say in unsolicited testimonials about Featherspring:

"Thanks to Featherspring, I can continue making my living playing golf . . . My feet were so painful that I could barely walk 18 holes in any tournament. Then, I heard about Featherspring. Since I tried everything else, I might as well give them a chance. Now that I wear Featherspring, I'm back on the tour and my feet are absolutely pain-free!"

J.R. (Touring Golf Pro)
Naples, FL.

". . . I have thoroughly enjoyed the comfort Featherspring have provided me. You would not believe the difference they have made my feet feel-before I had such pain when walking because I have severe callus' on both of my feet."

M.W.R./Richmond, VA

"Received my wife's Featherspring two days ago. They are super . . . neither of us can believe the results. She has had terrible feet for years; already no pain. Incidentally, her sore knee is much better . . . As a retired physician, this result is amazing."

Dr. C.O.C./Tucson, Arizona

"I want to thank you for refunding to me the full amount of what I ordered. I admire your company for this with no strings or red tape."

G.K.M./Warwick, Rhode Island

"Wish I had believed your ad five years ago."

Mrs. W.C., Fayetteville, N.C.

CLEAN CAMPAIGN

LICKING ORAL HYGIENE PROBLEMS

By Marion Long

"I'm ready for bed, Mom."

"O.K., dear, but did you clean your tongue?"

Clean your tongue? Yes, you've read right. One day in the not-so-distant future, tongue cleaning may be as much a part of the pre-bedtime ritual as are brushing and prayers.

In India, whence this phenomenon hails, cleaning one's tongue is the norm, and the number and quality of one's tongue cleaners is a sort of status symbol. Now Raj Syal, who has imported tongue cleaners to America, is trying to convince Americans that the practice is as important to their oral health as brushing and flossing is.

Dave Simons

Doctors contend that keeping your tongue clean fights bad breath and helps destroy plaque — because it gets rid of bacteria — thus helping to prevent gum disease and tooth decay. So in order to acquaint America with this age-old secret of oral hygiene, Syal has formed a company based in Ohio and has started an advertising campaign that he hopes will soon go nationwide.

As might be expected, the ad agency had some trouble coming up with a tasteful campaign. No matter how attractive the model was who demonstrated the proper method for using the cleaners (7 inches long by ¼ inch wide, which you use by scraping across your tongue), the ads were hardly appealing. After several unsuccessful attempts, the agency finally settled on a cartoon character, hoping that a tongue-in-cheek approach would be the most successful. FW

PLANE SPEAKING

HOW SAFE ARE SMALL AIRLINES?

By Toni Raiten

Hedge-hoppers, crop dusters, puddle-jumpers — America's small, regional airlines have long suffered with a public image that put them somewhere between the bi-plane barnstormers of the 1920's and the major airlines of the 1980's. And industry experts say the front-page controversy over last October's fatal Air Illinois crash — which was linked to that regional carrier's troubled financial condition — gave the flying public one more reason to feel uneasy about regional airlines and the small planes they usually fly.

The Air Illinois tragedy, and Federal investigations that followed, grounded the airline for a month. Two of the company's biggest planes (73 passengers each) were decertified by the Federal Aviation Administration, which cited inadequate maintenance procedures. The carrier resumed operation on January 14, however, with company president Roger Street declaring, "We're a brand-new airline."

In fact, statistics show that small carriers have improved steadily in the last five years. However, they still have a higher percentage of accidents than major companies. In 1983, for example, the accident rate for regionals was .78 per 100,000 departures, which is much better than in 1975, when they suffered a full 3.3 accidents per 100,000 take-offs. But the 1983 regional percentage is still nearly twice that of major carriers.

One reason for this, says John Galipault, director of the Ohio Safety Aviation Group, an airline industry watchdog, could be that some small airlines may occasionally cut corners on maintenance and fly in severe weather to save costs and prevent loss of ticket sales. "Money is a serious factor," he observes.

Industry spokesmen and Government experts counter Galipault's concerns, citing the improved accident rates and rising profits for small airlines. They say incident reports are rising because small airline business is growing. "With the advent of deregulation, small-carrier traffic increased greatly," says Robert Buckhorn, spokesman for the National Transportation Safety Board.

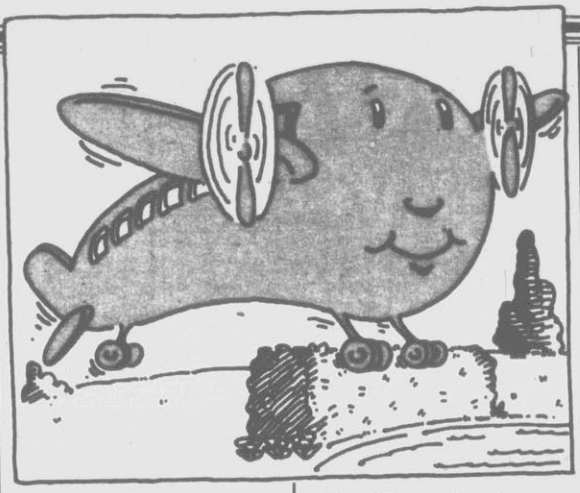
Regional airline accidents are also frequently less spectacular. The small carriers rely on prop planes, usually carrying fewer than 50 passengers, and, unlike major air crashes, the accidents regionals suffer usually involve few people. The Air Illinois crash, in Oct., for example, killed 10 people, including crew members.

Pacific Southwest Airlines, one of the nation's largest regionals, was, however, involved in a major accident in 1978 when one of its jets, with 137 aboard, collided with a private airplane and crashed. Seven people on the ground, and all those aboard the jet, died. No evidence of airline mismanagement was found in the probes following the crash. And PSA spokeswoman Margery Craig says that the increase in passengers since the crash shows the disaster had little effect on public confidence in PSA. "It was a freakish accident," she says.

The key to improved safety may be improved finances if, as critic Galipault contends, operators cut corners when their cash-flow is tight. Airline deregulation could help small airlines in this respect by boosting their profits.

When the Federal Government stopped regulating routes and ticket prices in 1978, many of the regional airlines expanded. According to the Regional Airline Association, the nation's 245 smaller carriers flew 18.5 million passengers in 1982, up five million from 1979.

Increased traffic and competition have winnowed out weaker operations and proved to be a financial boon for stronger regionals. Air Wisconsin is expecting 1984 revenues to top $80 million, up from $13 million in 1977. "We feel deregulation accelerated our growth," says Air Wisconsin's vice president, William Geenan.



Kimble Mead

His airline endured a crash in Omaha in 1980 (there were eleven fatalities), but Geenan is still confident that small airlines are getting more professional and more reliable.

Bar Harbor Airlines of Maine may symbolize the future for small carriers. It was founded in the 1940's to fly lobsters to Eastern cities, but over the years Bar Harbor has grown. The firm served seven cities when deregulation took place and now flies to 17. "Maybe the best way to gain public confidence," says Bar Harbor's sales manager, John Colton, "is for people to realize small airlines aren't so small any more." FW

GETTING PERSONAL WITH

OLIVIA HUSSEY

A REAL-LIFE ROMEO AND A BRAVE NEW CAREER

Hussey with co-star Nicholas Clay in the miniseries The Last Days of Pompeii.

Olivia Hussey became an instant sensation at 16 when her elfin beauty graced movie screens in the part of Shakespeare's tragic heroine, Juliet. It soon seemed, however, that her career was star-crossed as well. After Romeo and Juliet (1968), Hussey appeared in such movies as the ill-fated Lost Horizon and Death on the Nile, never landing another role rivaling Juliet. Her personal life was troubled by a brief, unhappy marriage to Dean Martin Jr. and bouts of agoraphobia — a psychological disorder which makes its victims afraid to leave their homes. Today, however, Hussey, 32, is happily remarried (to Japanese singer Akira Fuse), will soon be starring in the ABC miniseries The Last Days of Pompeii, and is conquering her fears. Recently, she braved an interview with FAMILY WEEKLY Associate Editor Mary Ellin Bruns.

Bruns: You worked with Laurence Olivier on The Last Days of Pompeii. What was that like?

Hussey: It was lovely. I had met him when I was filming Romeo and Juliet, but I didn't think he would remember me. I asked my hairdresser, Mark, about it, and he said, "Oh, I'm sure he will." The next morning Mark came into my dressing room and said, "Guess what? I was doing Sir Laurence's hair this morning and he said, 'Little Olivia, I haven't seen her in years. Do you think she'll remember me?'" That's the kind of person Olivier is.

Q: How did you meet your present husband?

Hussey: I went to Japan to make a TV commercial. Akira was doing the music for it. We met on the stage. The moment we saw each other we knew that was it.

Q: I understand your first year of marriage involved getting over some linguistic hurdles.

Hussey: At first it was very difficult because of the communication problem. Also, learning to live with someone was very hard, especially after I'd been used to being on my own for almost six years. Akira and I have a strange relationship. A lot of times he'll look at me and I'll know exactly what he's thinking. He doesn't have to say a thing. I waited a long time for him, I tell you. It's a match made in heaven.

Q: You have an Argentinian father and an English mother. How do you think that has affected you?

Hussey: I have the Latin temperament and the English prudery, the two sides.

Q: You've said that Romeo and Juliet took a lot out of your childhood. In what way?

Hussey: I went from being a schoolgirl who sometimes did plays and walk-on parts to appearing on the covers of magazines and being talked about by everyone. It was a big shock. I was away from home for a year. I missed growing up with my friends, sharing things with them.

Q: I read that as a child you were very jealous of your younger brother.

Hussey: Once, when I was 2 years old, I stuffed mud down his throat. Now I think, "How terrible." I adore him.

Q: Why was it so difficult for you to find decent parts after Romeo and Juliet?

Hussey: The good thing about Romeo and Juliet was that it brought me into the public eye, which is every actress's wildest dream. The bad thing about it was that for the next 10 years people only thought of me as Juliet. They thought, "She's an actress who can only play in period pieces."

Q: For many years you were a victim of agoraphobia but recently you've begun to overcome it. What has helped you?

Hussey: I still have it. But a doctor in London gave me medication which helped with the panic and fear. My meditation teacher also helped me become calmer.

Q: How did agoraphobia affect your career?

Hussey: During the worst year I didn't want to leave my home, let alone think of going on a set.

Q: Are you pleased with your career right now?

Hussey: I'm beginning to feel that way. It's good to be seen and good to be working. FW

SNACKS

HERE'S MIGHTY MUFFIN

By Marilyn Hansen

Americans have rediscovered the muffin. And why not? Muffins are flavorful but nutritious, wonderful for breakfast as well as for snacks. And the 1984 versions are real mighty muffins: oversized, almost a complete meal in themselves. Try one of our appealing recipes and see for yourself. Remember, too, if your family is small, any leftovers can be frozen to enjoy at another time.

CRANBERRY-PECAN-BRAN MUFFINS

1¼ cups unsifted all-purpose flour
1 tablespoon baking powder
½ teaspoon salt, or to taste
¼ cup packed brown sugar
1 cup ready-to-eat bran cereal
1 cup milk
1 egg
3 tablespoons vegetable oil or shortening, melted
1 cup fresh cranberries, chopped
¼ cup chopped pecans

1. Preheat oven to 400° and grease muffin-pan cups. On sheet of foil, stir together flour, baking powder and salt. Set aside.
2. In large bowl, measure brown sugar, bran and milk; mix. Let stand a few minutes to soften cereal. Mix in egg and oil thoroughly.
3. Stir flour mixture, cranberries and pecans into sugar-cereal mix until combined.
4. Mound batter high in muffin-pan cups. Bake for 25 minutes, or until lightly browned. Serve hot. Makes 12 large muffins

APPLE-CINNAMON MUFFINS

1 cup chopped apples
¼ cup sugar

1. Preheat oven to 400°. Grease muffin pan.
2. In large bowl, combine flour, baking powder, salt, brown sugar and 1 teaspoon cinnamon. Make a well in center of flour mixture, and add milk, egg and butter. Stir just until ingredients are combined and moistened. Mix in chopped apple.
3. Mound batter high in muffin-pan cups. Mix remaining cinnamon with sugar and sprinkle over muffins. Bake 20 minutes, until lightly browned. Makes 12 large muffins

1 cup yellow cornmeal
1 cup unsifted all-purpose flour
¼ cup sugar

WHAT IN THE WORLD

BY MARION LONG

Pat Redding

BITTER MEDICINE

Sure, Mama's mustard plaster could pull a cold out of any chest, but there are some folk remedies that may cure you of life.

According to an article in Prevention magazine, a number of the best-known home remedies are as dangerous as what they cure. While sassafras tea has been purported to cure rheumatism and typhus, it is loaded with safrole, an oil that has caused fatal tumors in lab rats. Ice water baths for a victim of heatstroke may shock him into heart failure. Rubbing snow (or anything) on frostbitten skin is dangerous. And the idea that putting manure on an insect bite stops itching just plain stinks.

Some age-old cures do work, however. Holding your breath usually cures hiccups; fennel tea does relieve, uh, flatulence; and chicken soup will combat cold symptoms (the vapors help breathing).

FIGURES NEVER LIE

To some people life is so, well, predictable. Take George Miller. Miller is a professor of statistics at Northern Illinois University. In 1979 he began to forecast the winners of the Miss America Pageant. He's been right three of the last five years.

And he might have done even better. Both his '81 and '82 picks got so much publicity that some observers felt they were ignored by the judges. Miller kept his selections secret in 1983, and sure enough he had picked Vanessa Williams, Miss New York, as well as two of the four runners-up.

How does he do it? Miller collected information on the backgrounds, physical attributes and educations of 2,300 former contestants and fed it all into his own computer data base. From that base, he came up with a composite Miss America. He won't say much about that Miss A, except that she hails from a small town, has a plain last name, weighs about 120 pounds, and sings. Judging from his success so far, you might say Miller has a way with figures.

NEW WAVE

While the jogging boom seems to have run its course, the swimming wave has yet to crest. A recent Harris poll shows that the number of regular swimmers — now 26 million — will continue to rise about 5 percent in each of the next five years.

According to Dr. Albert Kattus, director of cardiac rehabilitation at Santa Monica Hospital, swimming is both relaxing and good for you. "You're using your entire body," he reports. It conditions the heart, gently tones all major muscle groups and burns up 400 — 800 calories an hour. Swimmers also avoid the injuries and strains to joints and muscles that jogging can occasion.

And, says Dr. Keith Bell, a sports psychologist in Austin, Tex., while swimming "you feel totally alive. For the moment, you're absorbed in the flow of life." So to speak.

OF REDEEMING VALUE

Each week hundreds of thousands of Americans scour newspapers and magazines for their share of grocery coupons. Now, a company called Q Comp is going to make it easier for bargain hunters.

What Q Comp proposes to do is install coupon-dispensing machines in eight Boston supermarkets this month. The purpose of this is twofold. They hope to make some dough by contracting with manufacturers to print and distribute their coupons weekly. They will also gather information about the coupon-using habits of the buying public. Shoppers will be given an encoded card that they redeem for coupons. The card will make it possible to determine "how quickly coupons are used, and what levels of discount it takes to get consumers to switch brands," according to a Q Comp executive.

HAPPY DAYS

April 22 through 28 is National Secretaries Week and there's reason to celebrate. Contrary to what we saw in the 1980 movie 9 to 5, most secretaries get along with their bosses and feel their work is appreciated.

BIZ, a bi-monthly publication of the Xerox Learning System, surveyed secretaries and administrative assistants of executives. Those questioned are, for the most part, happy. They feel involved in the work their bosses do and that their supervisors (90.7 percent) are "ready and willing" to listen to suggestions. The secretaries also say that their bosses trust their judgment and allow them to act independently. Further, 98 percent said that the executives they work for praise them often. As a result, the vast majority like their jobs and plan to continue in them.

The survey failed to show whether or not these happy assistants were required to fetch coffee.

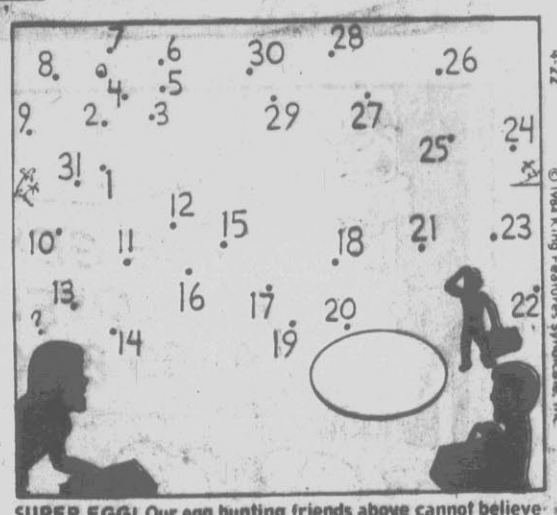
"S" CURVES — BEWARE

See if you can puzzle out the two words described in this verse-riddle:

I know a noun of plural number.
Foe to peace and restful slumber.
Most other nouns I must confess,
Are made plural with an "S."
But if you add an "S" to this,
Strange is the metamorphosis.
That plural noun is in retreat,
Replaced by something nice and sweet.

Add "S": 10 cares and it becomes caress.



SUPER EGG! Our egg hunting friends above cannot believe their eyes. To complete scene, add lines 1 to 2 to 3, etc.

FAMILY STYLE! Add colors to this family outing scene: 1—Red. 2—Lt. blue. 3—Yellow. 4—Lt. brown. 5—Flesh. 6—Dk. green. 7—Dk. brown. 8—Lt. green. 9—Dk. blue. 10—Lt. purple. 11—Dk. purple.

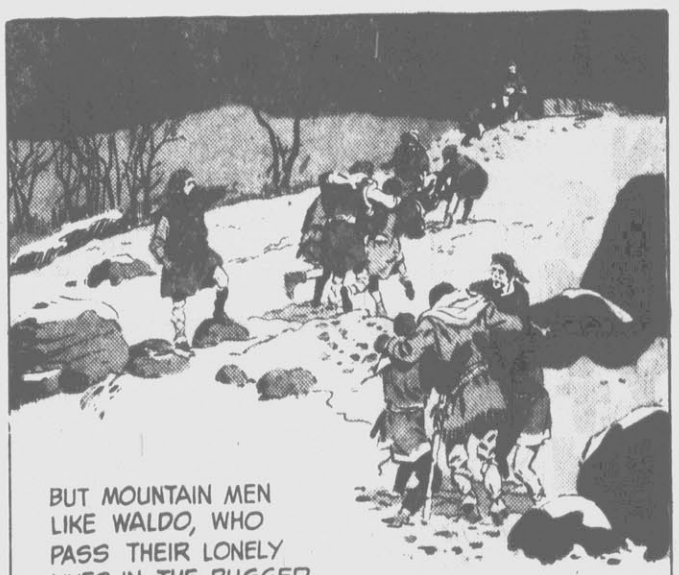
IN THE DAYS OF KING ARTHUR

CREATED BY HAL FOSTER

Our Story: FROM HOVELS DEEP INSIDE THE ANCIENT HILLS COME THE DAWN PEOPLE, HEEDING WALDO'S CALL. THEIR ANCESTORS SETTLED BRITAIN AT THE DAWN OF TIME. CENTURIES LATER, WAVES OF NEW INVADERS DROVE THEM INTO THE MOUNTAINS. NOW THEY EMERGE ONLY AFTER DARK AND SHUN THE "NEWCOMERS" WHO RULE BRITAIN BY DAY.

SOMETIMES THE DAWN PEOPLE ARE SEEN BY ORDINARY BRITONS, WHO THINK THEY ARE FAERIES AND FEAR THEIR POWERFUL CHARMS.



BUT MOUNTAIN MEN LIKE WALDO, WHO PASS THEIR LONELY LIVES IN THE RUGGED UPLANDS, KNOW THE DAWN PEOPLE WELL. WALDO SPEAKS TO THEM URGENTLY IN A STRANGE TONGUE: "GATHER THE WOUNDED AND BRING THEM TO THE GREAT BROCH. LET YOUR PRIESTS WORK THEIR PHYSICK."

THE DAWN PEOPLE WORK QUICKLY, FOR SOON IT WILL BE LIGHT. IN THE HILLS THEY CLEAR AWAY THE ENTRANCE TO THEIR BROCH. THE PRIESTS RAISE THE BASKET TO THE PATCH OF SKY AND SOON ALL ARE LOWERED INSIDE. THEN THE MOUTH IS SEALED ONCE MORE.

THE PRIESTS OF THE DAWN PEOPLE ARE SKILLED AT THE HEALING ARTS, THEIR SECRETS OLDER THAN THOSE OF THE DRUIDS. THEY DRESS THE VICTIMS' WOUNDS WITH A BALM OF SOOTHING HERBS AND WRAP THE FREEZING BODIES UP IN COVERLETS OF DOWN. WHEN ALL IS DONE THE DAWN PEOPLE TAKE THEMSELVES TO SLEEP, FOR THE SUN HAS RISEN.
