Voters Will Decide House Bids May 8

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

While the majority of Pitt County voters will have the opportunity to vote for their spokesmen in the N.C. House of Representatives in the May 8 primary, no one in the county will be able to vote for representation in the N.C. Senate until July.

Incumbent Rep. Ed Warren of Greenville and Walter Jones Jr. of Farmville, who represent Greene County and most of Pitt County, have no opposition for their 9th House District seats in the primary.

Only residents of Bethel and Carolina townships, which are in the 6th House District with portions of Martin, Bertie and Hertford counties, will have a choice to make for the N.C. House.

Candidates seeking the 6th District seat, now held by John Gillam who is trying to unseat U.S. Rep. Walter B. Jones, include: Joe M. Parker, an Ahoskie publisher and a member of the original group of supporters of a medical school at East Carolina University; developer L.M. "Mutt" Brinkley of Ahoskie, a former town councilman and currently a member of the Bertie County Board of Commissioners, and educator William D. Harrison of Williamston, who was unseated by Gillam after serving in the General Assembly in 1981 and 1982.

The reason Pitt voters won't select a nominee for the Senate on May 8 is more complex.

The 1982 General Assembly approved redistricting plans for both House and Senate districts throughout the state. It was that new House district plan that separated Bethel and Carolina townships from the rest of the county.

The 1982 Senate redistricting plan joined all of Pitt County with Chocowinity township in Beaufort County and a portion of Martin County as District 9. Opponents filed a legal challenge and a federal court, on Jan. 27 of this year, ordered changes in, among others, the sprawling 2nd Senatorial District in northeastern North Carolina.

So the General Assembly in March adopted more changes in the districts.

Changes in the 2nd Senatorial District had a rippling effect which split Pitt County. The new plan joined Pitt's Bethel, Farmville, Arthur, Belvoir, Falkland and Fountain townships with Martin's Robersonville Township, 20 townships in Edgecombe County, and all of Wilson County in a new 6th Senatorial District.

The new 9th District includes the remainder of Pitt County, all of Beaufort County except Pantego Township, and seven townships (including Williamston) in Martin County.

A panel of three federal judges on April 20 cleared the way for June 5 primary elections in new Senate districts in Mecklenburg and Cabarrus counties, by approving those new districts. But the judges withheld approval of the new districts in the northeast.

Those districts, covered by the Voting Rights Act of 1965, had to be reviewed by the U.S. Justice Department, the judges said.

Most of the districts, including the 6th and 9th, were approved by the Department of Justice Friday night. So the primary election for the Senate seats will be held July 17, and candidates may file from May 18 to May 25.

Prior to the General Assembly session in March, R.L. "Bob" Martin of Bethel and Tom Taft of Greenville had filed as candidates for the Senate from the 9th District.

But because the redistricting split the county, Martin was no longer a resident of the 9th District. Rather than move from Bethel, Martin announced that he would seek the 6th District seat.

Since Taft was left as the only announced candidate for the 9th District seat, former Greenville Mayor Percy Cox announced that he would oppose Taft whenever the primary is held.

Political observers in the new 6th District said last week that the only person mentioned as a candidate to oppose Martin is Shelly Willingham of Rocky Mount.

Observers in Beaufort County say that although several names, including Washington publisher Ashley Futurell, former chairman of the board of trustees of East Carolina University, have been mentioned as possible candidates in the 9th District race, they don't expect anyone from Beaufort County to file as a candidate.

Trustees Propose New Medical Unit

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

East Carolina University trustees have approved the creation of a Center for Health Improvement within the ECU School of Medicine to coordinate the school's activities and programs which foster wellness, good nutrition and preventive medicine as well as rehabilitation following serious illness or major surgery.

The proposal must be approved by the University of North Carolina general administration before it is put into effect.

Dr. William Laupus, ECU vice chancellor and dean of the medical school, said the health improvement center would act an "an umbrella" for health care services already offered by the school of medicine and new programs designed to provide "better health care for the people of eastern North Carolina."

The center will focus special attention on the health status of people in small towns and rural communities across the state.

Trustee S.J. Wornom, a member of the board's medical affairs committee, said the center will not duplicate efforts of other agencies, such as local health departments and service agencies.

In other business at the meeting Friday, the board approved the list of graduates who will receive their degrees May 5 and approved the re-roofing of Umstead Dorm at an estimated cost of $135,000.

John S. Rainey Jr. of Enfield, president of the Student Government Association for the coming year, took the oath of office as a member of the board.

The board also addopted a resolution of appreciation to Paul Naso of Southern Pines, who served on the board of trustees as SGA president for the past year.

Chancellor John Howell, in his report to the board, said the school needs more contributions that can be used for scholarships and faculty development.

Mondale's Coming

Democratic presidential hopeful Walter Mondale has scheduled an 80-minute campaign stopover in Greenville Monday in preparation for North Carolina's presidential primary on May 8.

The former vice president's staff said Saturday Mondale will arrive at the Pitt-Greenville Airport at 11:40 p.m. and go immediately to the FCX Store on Line Avenue for a meeting with farmers. Mondale is scheduled to hold a news conference at the same site at 12:40 p.m., then leave at 1 p.m. for Knoxville, Tenn.

Mondale's scheduled stop in Greenville would be the second by a Democratic presidential aspirant in the last two weeks. The Rev. Jesse Jackson campaigned in Greenville April 19, participating in a reception at a local restaurant.

Mondale campaigned in the Research Triangle last Wednesday.

GREAT Recorded Ridership Gains While Others Fell

By SUE HINSON
Reflector Staff Writer

Even though patronage of North Carolina's public transportation systems declined in 1983, Greenville's bus system did just great, according to a recently issued report of the N.C. Department of Transportation.

The report showed that state ridership on municipal bus systems dropped 4 percent in 1983 from 1982 while ridership on Greenville's GREAT buses went up 10 percent — the largest increase in North Carolina. Only two other systems were listed as having ridership increases — 4.7 percent in Wilson and 1.5 percent in Salisbury. The largest transist system in the state, located in Charlotte, transported over one-third of the state's reported ridership of 24,888,637, yet Charlotte's 8,869,227 riders reflected a decease of 2 percent from the previous year.

Systems represented in the report included Charlotte, Winston-Salem, Raleigh, Durham, Chapel Hill, Asheville, Greensboro, Fayetteville, Wilmington, High Point, Gastonia, Salisbury, Greenville and Wilson.

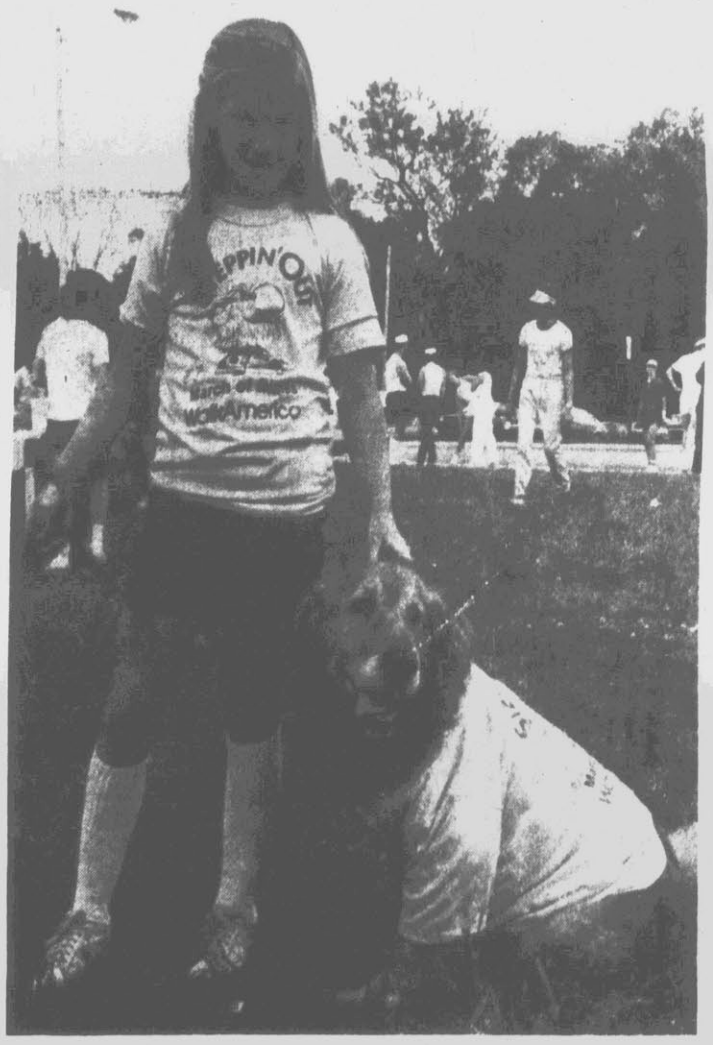

According to GREAT Coordinator Nancy Harrington, the increase in patronage was due in part to route revisions.

"In April of '82, we revised our routes and I believe that that's been part of it. Our old routes sort of went in circles. Now we've set up the system to go back and forth in somewhat straight lines so someone can ride out to an area and the bus will be back to pick them up in 30 minutes instead of 60 minutes as was previously the case. That's made it a whole lot easier for some people to ride," Mrs. Harrington said.

Greenville Public Works Director Mayo Allen also attributed much of GREAT's success to the reogranzation efforts of transit coordinators.

"I believe more people used the transit system during the last calendar year because we reorganized the routes to go through certain neighborhoods where bus service was most needed. We also included Pitt Community College when we reorganized," Allen said.

An Hour Lost

Trial Basis Job Turned Into Lifetime Work For Retiring Editor Schlienz

By CAROL TYER
Reflector Staff Writer

"Do you think this will be a permanent job?" Don Schlienz asked that question of D.J. Whichard Jr., to whom he was applying for an editor's job on The Daily Reflector in 1945. Recently discharged from the Army after 4½ years of wartime service, Schlienz had in mind settling down in one place for a while.

"We'll see," Whichard answered him. Schlienz had previously done no newspaper work and Whichard was hiring him on a trial basis. Adjusting to the work of putting together a newspaper each day is no easy task for anyone, much less one uninitiated by education or experience, so Whichard felt the need to hire Schlienz on a temporary basis.

"Mr. Whichard still hasn't told me whether the job is permanent," Schlienz, who has been news editor of The Daily Reflector for 39 years, said. On Friday he gave up this position and turns Monday morning to a part-time writing position on the newspaper staff. He's still satisfied, he says, to view the world almost entirely from the confines of The Daily Reflector office and his home in the College Court area of Greenville.

"I came to Greenville," he said, "because my parents were here." His father and mother, Don and Irene Schlienz, had moved here from Florida while he was in the Army during World War II. His father was an Internal Revenue Service agent.

There is a possibility, Schlienz said, that he got his job on The Daily Reflector as a result of a decision he made while reading a letter written by one of his fellow medical corpsmen who had been a newspaper reporter before entering the war. "For some reason, my friend offered to let me read a letter he was writing to his wife and I marveled at how literate it was. It was an eye-opening experience. I determined that, if he could write like that, I could, too. And I started putting thought and care into my letters to my parents and other correspondents.

"As my father and Mr. Whichard had coffee sometimes, my father would share my letters with Mr. Whichard and he told him to tell me to come to see him when I came to Greenville, that he needed an editor."

Schlienz was born in Petoskey on the southern peninsula of Michigan, but had been raised mostly in Orlando, Fla. He did two years of general college work at the University of Florida at Gainesville, then dropped out "because I really didn't know what I wanted to do and there didn't seem to be much point to continuing." He said he then worked in a drugstore, in a restaurant and in a hotel dining room until he entered the Army.

His Army years were spent aboard a ship in the Caribbean and the Pacific oceans. "We put in at many ports and I saw a lot of the world on both sides of the Panama Canal," he said.

His first days at the Reflector were guided by Dr. Ralph Deal, a retired East Carolina Teachers College professor who had been serving as editor on a temporary basis. "Dr. Deal stayed with me for about a week and a half," Schlienz said, "then Mr. Whichard worked with me a day or two and then I was on my own."

In June 1946, shortly after informing his parents "he travels fastest who travels alone," he met and began dating Dot Elks, a young Pitt County native. They were married in November of the same year and now enjoy three children and two grandchildren. Their children are Mary Jane Boyd, who works for a newspaper in Carolina Beach, and Don and David Schlienz, both members of the U.S. Navy. Don is stationed in Long Beach, Calif., and David is now aboard ship off the coast of Spain. Their grandchildren are Melinda and Matthew Boyd, both of Wilmington.

The Schlienzes are members of St. Peter's Catholic Church and Schlienz has worked over the years for various causes, including the Cancer Crusade and the Red Cross Bloodmobile. An avid reader, he says he'll still read once he's retired. Part of it will be on-the-job as he peruses various newspaper and news magazines to keep abreast as he writes editorials and other contributions to The Daily Reflector.

His first newspapers were six to 10 pages; recent non-special editions have been up to 78. "The process was more involved, more time-consuming back in the hot metal days," he said, referring to the hot metal printing method used for most of the years he was editor. "Now with offset printing, it's simpler, yet there are just other problems. There's still plenty to be done."

He says no particular days stand out in his mind as he looks back over a nearly four-decade career as a news editor. "Some days I liked my handiwork," he said, "some days I was very dissatisfied. It's the nature of the business, but by the time you finish one day's paper, you're already creating another one and regretting or congratulating yourself is really a waste of time. You just have to move forward into the next day."

GREAT ...

"But the success of the GREAT system is also due to the hard work of our drivers and the clear way they explain their routes. I personally think GREAT is no longer a stranger in Greenville. Now a person can get from one side of the town to the other with no problems at all — from Colonial Heights to Carolina East Mall, to any shopping center in the area, to the doctor, anywhere really," he said.

Mayo said charters were also partially responsible for the ridership increase. "We've been doing some charter service over the past several years. The medical school has used us several times to carry 25 or so people to the airport in Kinston or to meetings, but we only travel within a 50 mile radius of Greenville and the farthest we've been so far is Kinston."

Mrs. Harrington said no plans have been made to change the system in the near future because everything is going so well.

"My first priority," Howell said, is "money for more merit scholarships," followed closely by "money for faculty enrichment."

"We always need private funds to add to those from the state," which provide the university's basic program, Howell said.

Additional funds for merit scholarships and faculty enrichment, the chancellor suggested, would "demonstrate that East Carolina University is an academic institution to be reckoned with."

Cannon Recovered

SAVANNAH, Ga. (AP) — A three-ton rifled cannon was recovered from the wreck of the CSS Georgia Sunday and placed in a plastic-lined pool at Fort Jackson, a Civil War fortification downriver from Savannah.

"We have a broadside gun from the CSS Georgia, one of the four main guns on the vessel," said Scott Smith, director of the Coastal Heritage Society which operates Fort Jackson as a museum.

"It could fire an exploding shell or a cast-iron bolt for breaking through armor. The maximum range was six miles."

The Georgia was built in 1862, financed by the women of Savannah, and given to the Confederate Navy to help defend their city from Union forces at the mouth of the river. More of a floating battery than a warship, it was scuttled by its crew in 1864 as Union Gen. William T. Sherman's men marched into the city, completing their march across Georgia from Atlanta.

The latest traffic fatality, Maggie Culley, 79, of Bethelwood, S.C., died Saturday afternoon when the car she was a passenger in ran off Interstate 95 in Robeson County. Authorities said she was thrown from the vehicle, which then rolled over on her.

The three Salisbury residents died Friday night when a car traveling at a high speed on a rural Rowan County road ran off the highway and hit trees.

Fire Wrecks National Forest

OSCODA, Mich. (AP) — A wind-whipped fire charred more than 1,500 acres of a national forest on Saturday and forced the evacuation of at least 1,500 people near a U.S. Air Force base, authorities said.

The blaze began about 3 p.m. as a brush fire in the Huron National Forest, about 3½ miles southwest of Oscoda, but rapidly consumed the dry woodland in the northern section of the state's Lower Peninsula, said U.S. Forest Service spokesman Tracy Young.

Personnel were placed on alert at the nearby Wurtsmith Air Force Base, which houses B-52 bombers and cruise nuclear missiles, although a base spokesman said there was no immediate danger to the complex.

At least two people suffered heart attacks and several others were treated for smoke inhalation, but their conditions were not available, said Lt. Raymond Knuth of the Oscoda-Au Sable Township Police Department.

Knuth said the fire, which was fueled by 35 mph winds, was contained but not under control at 6:30 p.m., adding there still were several hot spots.

About 1,500 people were evacuated for several hours from residential areas just south of Oscoda, a Lake Huron city of about 4,000-5,000 people, said Sgt. Edward Polack of the Michigan State Police post at East Tawas.

However, firefighters were able to contain the blaze by forming fire breaks, plowing and back burning areas near it, Polack said. He added there was no damage to residential or commercial areas.

The 3 p.m. service scheduled Sunday at White Oak Missionary Baptist Church in Grimesland has been canceled. The program will be rescheduled.

Bicycle Safety

Mayor Janice Buck has proclaimed this week as Bicycle Safety Week.

Accidents involving bicycles which cause serious injury and death are a growing problem in the Greenville area, the mayor said, and an involved and informed citizenry is necessary for a successful bicycle safety program.

Guest Speaker

Willis H. Rea, horticulturist at Tryon Palace in New Bern, will address members and guests of the Greenville Branch of the English-Speaking Union at a luncheon at the Sheraton Hotel on Saturday. He will speak on the development of English gardens and show slides taken on his travels to England.

He will be introduced by Margaret Hayward Nassef, a native of England and a hostess-guide at Tryon Palace.

Reservations for the Saturday luncheon must be made with the E-SU secretary, Annie Turner, by noon Thursday.

Interpreters

The Hearing Impaired program at East Carolina University will provide sign language interpreters on the platform for the university's 75th commencement Saturday.

Degrees will be conferred upon approximately 2,550 graduates during the 10 a.m. ceremonies in Ficklen Stadium. Judge Gerald Arnold of the N.C. Court of Appeals will be the commencement speaker.

Contest Entrants

Two winners from last year's storytelling contest at Wahl-Coates School have been entered in the "Tar Heel Memories Program,' a feature of the North Carolina Heritage Week observance this week. Any student is eligible to enter, and every entrant will receive an honor certificate. Selected tales will be published in a "Tar Heel Memories" booklet.

The two entrants are Blake Stallings, a sixth grader this year, and Matt Kraczon, a seventh grader this year at Greenville Middle School.

Migrant Camps

Landowners planning to house migrant workers must contact the Pitt County Health Department, Environmental Health Section, at least 30 days prior to arrival of the workers, according to Dr. Robert Ehinger, director of the Pitt County Health Department.

Application must be made for permission to operate a migrant labor camp in Pitt County, and the 30-day lead time will allow landowners to meet standards or correct possible violations.

A migrant labor camp is defined as a camp housing 13 or more people. "Please remember that the number '13' refers to infants and children, spouses and other family members as well as any workers," Ehringer said.

Mended Hearts

A meeting of the Eastern Carolina Chapter No. 23 of Mended Hearts Inc. will be held Thursday at 7:30 p.m. in the Gaskins-Leslie Center. The program wil be conducted by Dr. Richard Gay Israel, exercise physiologist in the East Carolina University School of Medicine.

The meeting is open to all persons interested in helping others that have or have had heart problems.

Clarification

Tom Johnson, a candidate for the Pitt County Board of Commissioners in the May 8 primary, said Saturday that an article that appeared in Friday's edition of The Daily Reflector was incorrect in saying he "voiced support for a merger" of the city and county schools at a candidates' forum Thursday night.

"I want cooperation," between the two boards of education, Johnson said Saturday.

Asked if he was opposed to a merger of the schools, Johnson said, "no," but added, "Prior to consideration of merger, there must be increased cooperation between the two school boards and administrative staffs; energetic leadership on the part of the commissioners to facilitate and encourage cooperation; adequate funding" to meet the need of both school systems, and a committment to avoid problems such as those which occurred when the school systems in Wilson and Wilson County merged.

Johnson also suggested that "a serious effort" be made to move the city school offices to the county office building, a move, he suggested, which could improve cooperation between the two school systems.

Bicycle Week

The Greenville Citizens Bikeway Committee, in conjunction with the N.C. Department of Transportation Bicycle Committee, is sponsoring Bicycle Safety Week this week.

Committee members will assist police in presenting films and safety pointers to students in grades K-6 in school assemblies this week.

Wednesday has been designated as "Ride Your Bike to Work Day." Several local fast food restaurants will offer free coffee and soft drinks to commuters on their way to and from work on that day. Saturday at 10 a.m. a Bike Rodeo will be held in Jaycee Park on Cedar Lane. The Greenville Optimist and Host Lions clubs will assist in administering eight bicycle tests.

Spring Festival

The Ayden Council of the Pitt-Greenville Chamber of Commerce will sponsor a spring festival Saturday from 11 a.m.-4 p.m. There will be a craft show in the parking lot of Third and Pitt streets beside Ayden Flower Shop. Entrants will furnish their own display tables.

Boating Course

The Greenville flotilla of the United Coast Guard Auxiliary will offer a boating skills and seamanship course at Pitt Community College beginning Wednesday from 7-10 p.m. For more information call 756-1511, 758-4644 or Pitt Community College.

Nurses Observance

Mayor Janice B. Buck of Greenville has proclaimed May 6 as National Nurses' Day and May 1-8 as National Nurses Week.

Sunday Opinion

Being Left Out Is Kind Of Nice

It has to be very satisfying to Greensboro, as well as to all Tar Heels, for North Carolina to be classified as having three of the top five "best places to live" in the United States. Asheville and Raleigh were the others named.

Greensboro tied for first place in a New York geographer's survey. Greenville (ours, that is) was not mentioned. We feel rather smug on both counts.

The study confirms what we've long felt was indisputable — North Carolina is pretty special, with life-fulfilling potentials unmatched anywhere.

We have no objections to the omission of Greenville; rather, we appreciate it. You let something extra special be broadcast around the countryside, and you also get a surge of people looking for the good life. ... And there goes the neighborhood!

Sir Walter Raleigh proved that.

Our comfortable blend of campus, trade, manufacturing, medicine and farming makes a diversified culture. The climate is ideal (cold in winter and hot in summer ... to say nothing of being located on a path well known to hurricanes and tornadoes). It adds variety to the most casual conversation and exchange of thoughts.

But don't brag. Somebody might be listening.

Lebanon Shifts Toward New Life

Embattled, bloodied, grief-torn Lebanon may be now moving toward a modus vivendi which could end the strife that has become a habit.

It was so simple one would have thought the remedial steps could have been adopted long ago. Instead, it required much suffering and finally the imposition by force of arms of demands for sharing of powers in government.

The distinctly minority Christian factions who have been holding the reins (albeit in name only) had to admit they could not govern; and so — according to a plan which they were forced to accept — Moslem elements of the country will be getting a larger governmental role which someday may be recognized as the dominant role in running the country's affairs.

The result might be called "democracy by the gun;" which on the surface was folly of the worst kind but perhaps also the only means. It tells us something about the flaws in human nature.

It Seems Hazardous Just To Live

WASHINGTON — There are times, as all of us in this health-conscious society are aware, when it appears that everything is bad for us and nothing at all is good for us. The same thought occurred the other day to some artful fellows at the Tobacco Institute, who proceeded to round up a list of 200 things that some authorities have told us we ought to avoid. One of those things, incidentally, is fresh air.

The tobacco folks are understandably sensitive on this matter. Since at least 1888, cigarettes have been condemned as "coffin nails." The U.S. surgeon general periodically produces volumes of statistics intended to prove that cigarettes cause lung cancer and heart disease. A vigorous anti-smoking lobby keeps trying to ban cigarettes altogether in airplanes, restaurants and public buildings. Californians last year voted in a referendum on the issue.

But if cigarettes are hazards to our health, so is just about everything under the sun. The danger of fresh air . was cited by two Chicago doctors in 1978, who found that breathing too much fresh air can cause insomnia and nightmares.

Glancing through the institute's doomsday list, we find at least some documentation for all kinds of hazards.

Air conditioning, according to a leading microbiologist, can cause a kind of asthma. Airports that handle jet aircraft evidently contribute to high mortality rates among nearby residents. Overexposure to anesthetics makes female nurses more susceptible to childbirth problems. Some over-the-counter antacids may complicate kidney problems.

Apricots and cherries are related to cyanide. Aquariums often contain a bacterium that can cause skin trouble. The chairman of a U.N. committee says that asphalt road surfaces may contain cancer-causing agents. Beavers carry a parasite that can contaminate water supplies.

Sunday Morning Notes

The late Col. A E Dubber was director of the Redevelopment Commission and Housing Authority for many years. Prior to that he served a full career in the U.S. Marine Corps and retired with the rank of colonel.

His military duties prepared him for the civilian job of running Greenville's urban renewal program and developing and operating low rent housing.

In 1951 Col. Dubber was in charge of construction at the U.S. Marine Corps Depot of Supplies in Albany, Ga. As with most large construction jobs there were large problems.

One of them involved a huge live oak tree which was in the middle of a proposed road to the central headquarters building. The contractor wanted to take the tree down and Col. Dubber was adamant that the tree would remain.

To make a long story short, Col. Dubber won and the tree is there to this day. In fact it has become the focal point for all subsequent buildings on the base.

That was 24 years ago, but recently the Marine Corps decided to honor Col. Dubber for his services. In July the tree will be dedicated to his memory.

His wife, Patricia, commented, "Needless to say, I think my husband would far rather have a tree dedicated in his memory than a street, park, building or whatever!"

Recalling Col. Dubber, we would have to agree.

The lady, obviously the mother of the toddler, wore a T-Shirt which read:

"We have ways of making you talk."

And a friend was in town recently. "If you know anyone who wants to hire a college graduate, please let me know," he said.

Then he explained that his son was graduating from college and would be needing a job.

"I'm the best job placement service he can get," our friend laughed. He explained that he had another son coming along who would enter college next fall and would be needing financial support.

"I might take a day off to come here and help him look for a job." So said our friend.

Some Say Schultz Is Protecting Himself

WASHINGTON — A senior White House aide, worried that Secretary of State George Shultz has gone astray with a top-level diplomatic nomination, took his fears recently to equally worried conservative Republican senators on Capital Hill.

The White House official had only one purpose: to protect President Reagan from getting hurt by Shultz's decision to name Michael Armacost, outgoing ambassador to the Philippines, to replace political under secretary Lawrence Eagleburger. The post is not only the department's highest for the career Foreign Service; it can also set the tone and pace of U.S. diplomacy.

That improbable grieving session between White House insider and complaining Reaganauts about a nomination sealed weeks ago typifies what ails Ronald Reagan's Foggy Bottom — no less under stoical George Shultz than flamboyant Alexander Haig. With the departure of tough, diplomatic maestro Larry Eagleburger, a sharp chip off the Kissinger block, Shultz has turned a rare opportunity into a potential pitfall. He selected a successor he hopes, in the words of an insider, will not crowd him and Deputy Secretary Ken Dam "because Eagle had too much muscle."

Unfairly or not, watchdog Senate Republicans concerned with Reagan's ideological purity long ago marked down Armacost as a symbol of the Carter administration. With Sen. Jesse Helms in the lead, half a dozen Republicans sent a succinct, embittered letter to Shultz hinting that Armacost, during his four years in high-level Carter administration posts, favored U.S. troop withdrawls from Korea.

Zbigniew Brzezinski, Carter's hawkish national security aide, privately has offered to tell the Senate Foreign Relations Committee that in fact Armacost opposed the American troop drawdown. But that will not begin to assuage the senators. They are preparing a rough reception for Armacost's confirmation hearing. And some presidential aides are encouraging them to do their best — unless the president signals his support for Armacost in a personal message to each of them.

That is hardly Reagan's style. Indeed, insiders told us the president does not wholly share Shultz's enthusiasm for Armacost. But since he gave Shultz carte blance on all appointments, his intrusion at this point might put unbearable strains on Shultz. At last week's Cabinet meeting, Shultz betrayed a touch of immanent (cq) strain when he asked White House aides for their support on Armacost "without condition" — a strange request for the president's first Cabinet minister to have to make.

But not even the White House can help cure more basic problems with the Armacost appointment. With only one contemporary exception, the job of political under secretary has always gone to a career Foreign Service officer. Armacost only joined the Foreign Service in 1981 and his rank of minister-counselor is junior to perhaps 100 or more career diplomats. In the ranks of the Foreign Service, whatever Armacost's inherent worth as an experienced diplomat, Shultz has hit an exposed nerve.

Gilmore Escapes Barbs

RALEIGH — Out on the campaign trail, supporters of the Democratic gubernatorial candidates are cutting each other up something awful. There've been dirty tricks, rumors and just plain old ugly things said about each other. But, so far as this reporter has been able to determine, Tom Gilmore of Julian, has seldom, if ever, been the target of these attacks.

There could be two explanations for this. First, as some folks say, Gilmore escapes the treatment because he is an honest, likeable person who means well. More likely, Gilmore escapes the ugly attacks because none of the other candidates see him as a real threat. He lacks the political credentials, campaign funding and name identification of his opponents. In a conservative state, he's clearly a liberal who is spending the little money he has on TV ads in which he brags that he's got the guts to raise taxes.

As this campaign began, Gilmore's press secretary complained that he was often grouped with the "minor" candidates in news accounts. Endorsements from the N.C. Association of Educators and the state AFL-CIO ended that practice but polls show that Gilmore has just not caught fire with the public.

His campaign suffered from a lack of organization until NCAE brought in its troops and that help may have come too late. He also suffered from a lack of money which meant he coulnd't buy name identification. Instead, he tried for free publicity through his 84 work days program. It brought his name identification up, but not as quickly as advertising helped opponents Lauch Faircloth and Eddie Knox.

Many political types say Gilmore simply outreached himself in running for governor. He is 47, a former three-term legislator from Guilford County, a former deputy secretary of human resources and leader of the statewide campaign that defeated a four-year legislative term amendment in 1982. That's the kind of resume that qualifies someone for the Council of State, maybe even lieutenant governor, his critics say. But not governor. Gilmore failed to excite people early which created money and organization problems.

In this conservative state, Gilmore's issues might also cause him trouble. He opposes the death penalty and promises to seek its repeal in 1985, if elected. He also proposes a comprehensive program of improvement for the public schools which he admits might require a tax increase.

Probably more popular is his proposal to conduct a complete study of the tax system with an eye towards reform. Gilmore says that such a study might recommend creation of a state lottery. If so, he'd favor putting the idea to a referendum.

Gilmore opposes the current second primary system and introduced legislation in both 1973 and 1977 that would have eliminated it. He does not favor repeal of the gubernatorial sucession amendment nor is he willing to rule out a run for re-election in 1988. (These stands are consistent with his feeling that the legislature has become too powerful recently.)

Gilmore opposes the election of utilities commissioners but he favors changes in the state's Construction Work in Progress law. He says the law was "improper and took advantage of the ratepayers. I voted against this law in 1977 and was one of the few legislators who opposed it."

Gilmore's bid for the governor's office is a longshot. But, if the NCAE and the AFL-CIO give him the amount of support they promise, he should finish higher than the sixth spot, where the polls usually find him.

Public Forum

To the editor:

At a recent City Council workshop meeting, a report by City Manager Gail Meeks disclosed how really dedicated our city employees are. The assistance provided our neighboring towns and communities in the recent tornado is most impressive. The Greenville Fire and Rescue personnel responded to emergency assistance requests and the employees worked all night Wednesday, March 28, providing emergency medical services. The Greenville police were called in on Wednesday night and early Thursday morning to assist by enforcing the curfew which was imposed by the sheriff, and also responding to a large number of service calls. Most of the personnel in both departments worked double shifts in their dedication to help.

The "clean-up" need after the tornado in Ayden was so great that Ayden crews needed assistance. Greenville Public Works employees worked 278 man-hours in assisting the town of Ayden to clean up debris. The Public Works employees also gave 60 hours in Simpson in the clean-up effort and 278 hours was spent unloading supplies and assisting the central disaster relief center at the New Greenville Warehouse.

As we see the events of recent days, we recognize blessings mixed with the tragedy. We mourn for the loss of life and property, but we are blessed by the warmth and closeness and fellowship that has occurred. The generous manner in which our people and others far away have responded is assurance that "good people" are still with us. The response by the city of Greenville makes me proud to live here. Despite the sadness, much love and kindness has arisen from the rubble.

Seldom do we hear of a personal interest and concern being shown by large companies toward the individual customer. I'd like to share excerpts from a letter we recently received:

"We at Exxon were deeply concerned at the reports of the recent devastation in your area. If you were affected, we extend to you heartfelt sympathy and we wish to offer you special payment terms on your credit card account, should this be of assistance to you."

To the editor:

The struggle for equality and justice in the American system has taken many routes. Beginning with the arrival of African ancestors generations ago, our society has moved from slavery to Reconstruction, from interposition and nullification of freedom to freedom of choice. Now affirmative action to reverse discrimination — perhaps even benign neglect is evident.

In this ebb and flow from progress to regression and back again, there stand out giant figures who can proclaim the essence of truth and life. Two such stalwarts have died in recent weeks — almost unnoticed and ingnored by the masses of us. Clarence Mitchell and the Rev. Benjamin Mays allowed their voices and their lives to ring loudly and to radiate clearly the truth for which they worked unceasingly. Each man in his own quiet manner permitted his handiwork to express the principle "that no man (or woman) should put another person down."

As we gaze into the realm of tomorrow, we wonder whether any of us has learned the lessons of these men and other people who toiled for peace, harmony and righteousness. We see an America where the poor and minority citizens on death row have been capriciously selected to face execution — albeit deservingly. We see an America in which the poor and minority citizens seem to have been denied access to equal justice under the law — whether in a Miami courtroom case on in a Wyoming courtroom verdict. We also see an America in which the majority of us appear to have been unaware that more rigorous standards have been established to minimize access to more profitable futures for the majority of us citizens.

Against this current backdrop is the Easter season. This season provides us with the opportunity to realize that, regardless of any circumstances, hope prevails that one may overcome the barriers of any day. Jesus Christ came to conquer all fears and obstacles — even torture and death.

So it is then that, although warriors of the past — JFK, HHH, MLK, Roy Wilkins and others — may have departed this life, Americans have the solace that a new, gifted and committed generation of leaders will articulate the truth of God and overwhelm the hearts of us all. The words of Wordsworth remain appropriate: "The old order changeth, yieldeth place to new, and God fulfills Himself in many ways."

To the editor:

Nathan Shoe, son of Mr and Mrs. Dwight Shoe of China Grove, celebrating his 10th birthday, died after he fell through a rooftop skylight of the N.C. Legislative Building Tuesday.

Nathan was born to Dwight and Ann Shoe after their other children were grown. He was the joy of their lives. Dwight and I have talked about Nathan many times over the past 10 years as we shared dinners and companionship. We both sell educational materials to the public schools across North Carolina, so we see each other often.

In the early '50s, classmates Dwight and Ann Shoe were a familiar sight strolling across the campus of East Carolina University. Dwight was a starting offensive end on the East Carolina football team. He was a great football player. He later served as an assistant football coach at Davidson College. Ann and Dwight are both graduates of East Carolina University.

As a former athlete and coach myself, I know this is the toughest game Dwight Shoe will ever have to participate in.

My prayers and sympathy are with Ann and Dwight Shoe in the loss of their son, Nathan Shoe.

Reagan May Open New Doors

AGANA, Guam (AP) — When Richard M. Nixon set foot in China in 1972 and became the first American president to visit that country, his arrival opened a new era in U.S.-Chinese relations.

It was a startling development in the diplomatic world, but it was not a trip intended to work out specific problems.

Nixon was followed to China by Gerald R. Ford, whose 1975 journey was intended to demonstrate that Nixon's opening to China was not just a fluke, and that the relationship could grow.

Now Ronald Reagan is following in the footsteps of his two Republican predecessors, after an overnight stop on this South Pacific island. In the view of his aides, his journey is intended to show that with the U.S.-Chinese relationship on a solid footing, the two countries can get down to normal business, and that means trade.

As he began his journey, Reagan met with trade industry representatives in Tacoma, Wash., and told them: "I go as something of a salesman, doing everything I can up to the limit of putting a 'Buy America' sticker on my bag."

U.S.-Chinese trade grew in leaps and bounds in the decade following Nixon's journey, but it has fallen recently.

From an historic high of $5.5 billion in 1981, it dropped to $4.4 billion last year. In 1983, the United States suffered a $71 million deficit with China, the first such trade deficit since 1977.

"The trade issues have become heavily politicized and have replaced Taiwan as the principal irritant in our relationship," said one senior administration official, speaking on the condition that he not be identified by name.

The disputes that make this subject even more difficult than the debate over the future of Taiwan, the island to which the Nationalist government fled from the communists in 1949, involve export controls and textiles. The question of textiles carries political overtones made all the more sensitive in a presidential election year.

While Reagan is unlikely, during his seven to eight hours of meetings with China's most senior leaders, to become a trade negotiator, the subject is an important element in his visit.

In a related area, U.S. and Chinese negotiators, at work several months, have been unable to agree upon an investment treaty, as Americans try to overcome what one said was the difficulty in negotiating such a pact with a country that operates a planned economy.

"It's meshing apples and oranges here, and it's proving very difficult to do," the official said.

The textile question is considered the most sensitive in the trade area because "the textile industry is flat on its back," the official said.

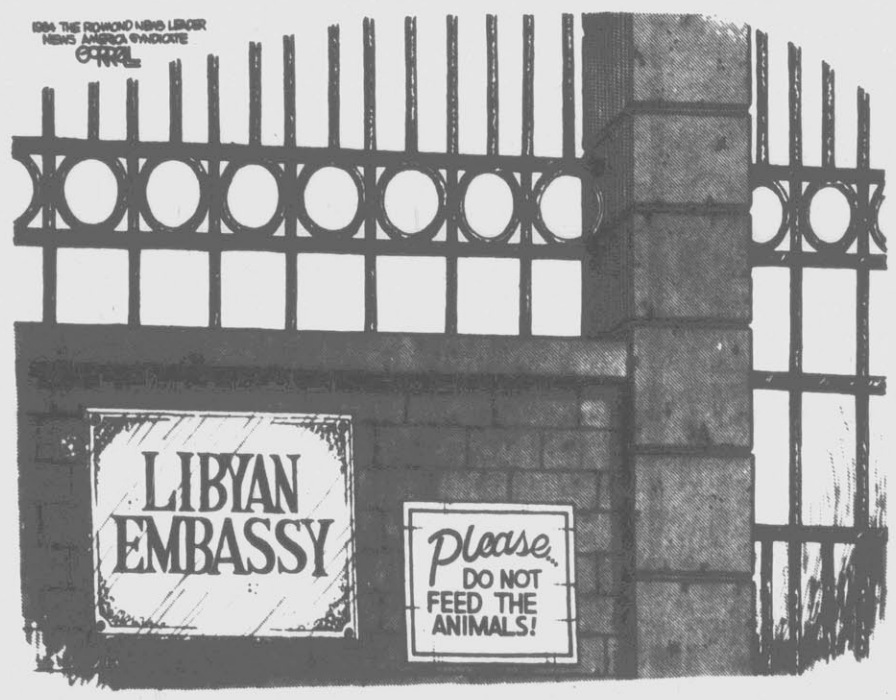

He said the Chinese would like the United States to remove all restraints on textile imports. "They'd like to sell as much as they could," he said.

When a U.S.-Chinese textile agreement expired and negotiations for a new pact broke down in January 1983, the United States imposed unilateral import controls, in a move to protect the American textile industry.

A new textile accord was reached last July, but it was opposed by the U.S. textile industry. That opposition prompted further Chinese cuts in purchases of U.S. agricultural products.

The export control question deals with the shipment of high technology items to China. Under a recently worked out formula, the United States agreed to license exports at approximately twice the level of technology given to Warsaw Pact countries.

Thinking

WASHINGTON (AP) — This week, rain or shine, 70 experts on subjects ranging from forestry to population control will pack themselves off to Wye Island, a remote outpost on the Chesapeake Bay, to see if there are solutions to some of the world's most pressing problems — or if we simply ought to give up.

When they get back three days later they hope to have answers, and to be able to persuade the U.S. government, the World Bank, businessmen and the media that their recommendations deserve attention.

The conference was organized by the World Resources Institute on a hopeful note. Once the key problems were identified, said James Gustave Speth, chairman of the steering committee, the next priority was "to try to move away from a gloom-and-doom psychology towards a more positive vision of an attainable future and to identify steps that can help us attain that future."

This is hardly the first time some of the brightest people in the world have tried to make the future livable. Sometimes their efforts are dragged down by politics, sometimes by the very enormity of the issues.

Speth, who once clerked for an eternal optimist, the late Supreme Court Justice Hugo L. Black, hopes this time the message will be different. "There's no cause for despair or pessimism," he said in outlining the conference the other day. "We haven't really scratched the surface of actions that can be taken to correct these problems."

Ultimately, the Reagan administration will have to be convinced the United States has a stake in addressing problems that mostly pinch the Third World.

Speth said the sales pitch will be to demonstrate that "these concerns are very much related to our long-term economic interest and to our long-term security interest."

He said the United States will not be able to resolve its security concerns in Central America, for instance, "until we have a more profound understanding of the relationship of resources and land-management to the future of people in the region."

The others are from overseas, including a forestry and wildlife specialist from Peru, a drought control director from Upper Volta, a chemist from China's Academy of Sciences and the director general of Mexico's National Institute for Biological Resources.

There will even be an environmental activist from Sri Lanka, who has led a citizen's peace march around the island to promote civil harmony in his troubled country.

They would seem to have more on their plate than any 70 specialists can handle in just three days. But the problems are so related to each other the conference has an almost awesome scope. Land problems rub against forestry problems. Fisheries and pollution are inextricably linked.

Clearly, the world's capacity to provide energy and other resources is finite.

Speth said the participants were asked to think in terms of addressing the deterioration of resources and the environment in ways that can provide economic development and growth.

"What we hope will come out of th[illegible]nt message," he said, "not the message everyone heard so many times of pessimism about the future.

Luck Or Ineptitude?

WASHINGTON (UPI) — For more than three years, President Reagan has touted his foreign policy as a pillar of strength and constancy in contrast to the "weakness" and "vacillation" of the Carter administration.

But beneath the rhetoric, there are signs the Reagan foreign policy is strained by miscalculation, bad luck and ineptitude.

On the plus side, Reagan has set aside his long-held suspicion of communism to preside over a blossoming relationship between the world's largest democracy and China, its most populous nation, which he is visiting this week.

His success in integrating military strength into foreign policy brought mixed results: a political triumph in Grenada, a chill in East-West relations, failure in the Middle East and a deepened crisis in Central America.

But for more than a year, the administration has had trouble not only formulating an effective foreign policy, but also communicating its policy at home and abroad.

Former Secretary of State Alexander Haig's memoirs paint a picture of foreign policy being shaped by amateurs who rose through personal devotion and political savvy, rather than expertise.

During the last two weeks, the administration has demonstrated a lack of foresight in projecting problems of its own making and indecision once forced to cope with them.

In two cases — the furor over the CIA-assisted mining of Nicaraguan harbors and the disclosure that Reagan had signed a tough directive endorsing pre-emptive strikes and reprisal raids against terrorists — the administration failed to anticipate public repercussions.

In a third case, the administration was torn by disagreement over how to minimize the political fallout of bypassing Congress in granting emergency military assistance to El Salvador — even though the decision had loomed for weeks.

"The problem is that we just have problems making decisions," said one White House aide. "And once they're made, we have problems acting on them."

Nor is consistency a hallmark of the foreign policy Reagan projects in public.

On April 2, he ruled out negotiations to ban anti-satellite weapons by rejecting the notion any such treaty could be verified. Two days later, in his election-year role of peacemaker, he proposed a similar ban on chemical weapons that is rife with verification difficulties.

That same week, Reagan delivered a major speech in which he bashed Congress with one hand for meddling in foreign affairs and extended an olive branch with the other — embracing bipartisan cooperation, but suggesting Congress should keep quiet once policy has been set in the Oval Office.

Seventy-two hours later, his call for cooperation and consultation was drowned out by angry charges from Capitol Hill that he is pursuing a reckless course.

'Straight Edge'

WASHINGTON — Two former student radicals, now married, recently revisited this city, a scene of their most tulmutuous days during the 1960s. This time, however, they brought not placards and sleeping bags but two neatly-attired children and reservations at a posh hotel.

Indeed, towing behind them a daughter in a white dress and a son with a 1950s-vintage crew cut, they looked every bit the traditional nuclear family.

Or so it seemed. Underneath the cleanly-shaven scalp of the couple's 12-year-old son was the mind of a boy dedicated to punk rock's most startling splinter movement. The movement is called "straight edge." Its advocation is clean living.

While most punkers seem to have adopted chemical vices as part of their repertoire, straight-edgers disavow drugs, liquor and smoking and look down on compulsive sexual behavior. Theirs is a form of asceticism rarely seem among working stiffs, let alone high school and college students.

As parents of a straight-edger, the two ex-activists said they supported their son's preference for leather jackets and scateboards over booze and dope. They didn't even mind his frequent visits to punk dance clubs.

But they conceded there were problems. Their son, for example, refused to let them smoke or drink in his presence. With the roles reversed, they found themselves stealing away from their children, wondering what ever happened to the libidinous '60s.

One reason for their unusual predicament is the nationwide popularity of a punk rock band called, not insignificantly, Minor Threat. Though the four-member group disbanded last November, Minor Threat has remained for straight-edgers what the Beatles once were for hippiedom: a model for a lifestyle.

Ian MacKaye, Minor Threat's 22-year-old lead singer, wrote "Straight Edge," the song that captured what he insists is not a movement, but "a state of mind." At one point, the tune goes as follows:

"... I'm a person just like you,
But I've got better things to do,
Than sit around and smoke dope ...
Never want to use a crutch,
I've got the straight edge."

MacKaye says he quit the band at a high point in its popularity because a career in rock 'n' roll music didn't interest him. But he adds that he's been a teetotaler all his life and intends to remain so.

Straight edge, which MacKay calls "an anti-obsession, pro-positive-thinking idea," is personal preference turned cultural phenomenon. It has attracted much of its mystique as a form of rebellion against convention — ironically, the same way drugs became popular two decades ago.

"After the initial investigation ..." MacKaye contends, "the kids just grew up taking drugs ... It became a nice crutch for everybody. Whereas before, it was kind of a challenge thing."

Straight edge, of course, has not gone without its own challenges. MacKaye admits that many of its initial followers have already given up life as a Boy Scout. And though several other bands have taken up Minor Threat's message, MacKaye says straight edge has spawned "a lot of response movements" (punk, you see, has as many as 40 different edges.)

Yet the straight-edgers' biggest obstacle may lie in the cynicism of parents, teachers and other adults. "They say they like it," MacKaye says, "but I don't think they believe it's going on.

"They're also intimidated," adds MacKaye, recalling heated arguments with adults about their own alcohol consumption. "Straight-edgers have a lot of willpower that most parents don't."

In their uniform of black leather and ominous ornamentation, punkers may be the least likely people to sell wholesome living to the PTA. And skeptics can point out that straight-edgers have indulged in some of the violence for which punk rock has been denounced.

Yet straight edge has given a new generation of parents a different twist on an old problem. Clean living could prove more resilient than a short-lived trend and catch on beyond the punk world. As the radicals-turned-straight-arrow mother and father have already asked, how do you tell a kid to live it up?

Poll

PRINCETON, N.J. — Amid debate over the U.S. involvement in planting mines in Nicaguan harborsm the public opposes, by a margin of 49 percent to 39 percent, providing military assistance to Central American governments, believing we should not get involved in the internal affairs of these nations.

Opinion on this issue divides sharply along political lines, with Republicans in a just-completed survey preferring military aid over non-involvement, 55 percent to 34 percent. Democrats, on the other hand, favor a hands-off approach over increased arms aid by 59 percent to 29 percent. Voters who describe themselves as Independents mirror the national findings, with 50 percent saying the United States should not get involved and 39 percent favoring military aid.

Consistent with the trend over the past year, the same survey shows that 48 percent disapprove of President Reagan's handling of the Central American situation, greatly outnumbering those who approve (29 percent).

The poor marks Reagan receives for his actions in Central America snd in marked contrast to the 52 percent-to-37 percent approval rating currently accorded the president for his overall performance in office.

Two key features of Reagan's Central America policy are to provide military support for the El Salvador government against leftist guerrillas and to aid rightist rebels seeking to overthrow the Nicaraguan government.

Here is the question asked to ascertain the public's opinion of Reagan's handling of the situation, and the trend:

"Do you approve or disapprove of the way Reagan is handling the situation in Central America?"

Zookeepers Have Offered Chimps Tender Human Care

By MIKE MAHAN
Asheboro Courier-Tribune

ASHEBORO (AP) — Human dedication and sacrifice have kept two baby chimps alive at the North Carolina Zoological Park.

Amy and Rudy, two chimpanzees born at the zoo this past December, are being hand-reared by a group of zookeepers after the chimps were rejected by their mothers. The keepers have spent as much as 12 hours a day for the first few weeks feeding, bathing, medicating and observing the zoo's first-born chimps.

Now, the two chimps are being kept in the chimpanzee night quarters away from the others.

If a chimpanzee is born and the mother rejects it, which has been the case in every chimp birth at the zoo, zookeepers must care for the animal.

The chimps are observed and fed every two hours for the first several weeks. They are cleaned, medicated if needed, fed and examined for general health problems such as constipation, diarrhea or blood spots.

According to General Curator Les Schobert, the two chimps are becoming "increasingly active." But it will be another month before they are able to crawl out of the small crib and quell their curiosities.

And then it will take another three to six months of development before the zoo staff begins a re-introduction process, eventually placing them back where they belong with their own species.

"At nine months to a year, they'll be able to scoot around and get into everything," said Schobert.

Chimpanzees grow at such a slow rate as compared to other animals, they need more than the few weeks of tender love and care mothers of other animals give. So zoo officials aren't as happy as they would be if the mothers accepted their infants.

According to Schobert, the five female chimps now at the zoo have spent most of their lives in captivity and never had the chance to watch their wild companions raise young. If zoo officials can get just one mother chimp to rear its baby, the rest of the chimps could follow her example.

"When they haven't had the opportunity to learn from other chimps, they rely purely on their instincts," Schobert said.

Although all of the adult chimpanzees at the zoo were born in the wild, the only contact they had with chimpanzee rearing was when they themselves were being raised.

According to Schobert, a newborn chimp introduced to the community without a mother could be endangered.

So the zoo staff will wait until the time is right and slowly begin re-introducing the young into the community. Rather than placing the youngster into the community, carefully selected members of the community are placed in an isolated area with the youngsters. Slowly, the young and old become acquainted with each other.

"We can't start the re-introduction process until the young chimp is capable of competing for food and able to get away from the other animals if the need should arise," Schobert said.

A chimpanzee born at the zoo in January was being reared by its mother, but complications led zookeepers to keep the mother and baby away from the rest of the community the majority of the time.

"We had gotten that one to the point where we even got it outside with the rest of the troop," Schobert said.

But the mother rejected the baby and the chimp died after zoo officials tried a variety of methods to re-introduce the chimp.

Schobert said he feels the adult chimps learned a lot from the experience. "With each experience they have, I think the chances increase that they'll rear," Schobert said, adding that exposure to the chimp born in January helped. "The smells, the observing I think it did help us a lot."

Although the mother of a chimp born April 15 carried its offspring properly, it refused to let the newborn nurse, so officials had to remove it from its mother and start the long process of hand rearing.

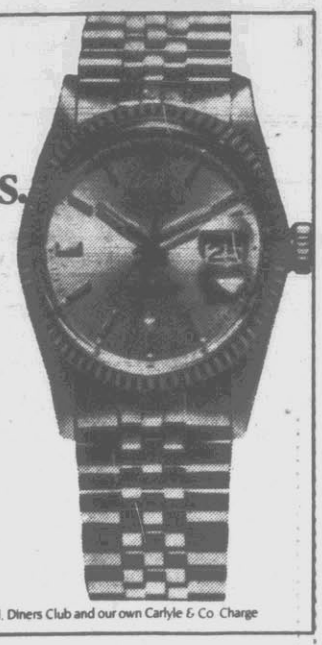

Until it was taken from the zoo Tuesday morning, the tiny, premature chimp was lying in an isolated glass enclosure that filtered the air the chimp breathed. Zookeepers wore gowns and masks when handling the chimp.

A solution of glucose or dextrose is fed to newborn chimps every two hours, and everything the chimps do is recorded.

"You're talking about 20 to 30 minutes every two hours for the first couple of weeks," Schobert said.

During the early stages of hand raising, a youngster may often develop diarrhea or constipation which, if not attended to, could lead to serious problems. The formula fed to the chimp is changed often.

20 Arrested After Bombs Discovered

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Bombs were found and dismantled on six Palestinian buses in east Jerusalem and the Israeli-occupied West Bank of the Jordan River, police reported Saturday.

Israel Radio said 20 people were arrested, including an army officer and residents from the Tel Aviv and Jerusalem areas as well as Jewish settlers in the West Bank.

Israel Television said earlier that among those picked up by police were several men who held government jobs and an electronics engineer with a senior rank in the army reserves. It did not give their names.

The television report said the suspects were known to have "radical views" in favor of Jewish settlements in the West Bank and the Golan Heights, captured from Jordan and Syria in the 1967 Middle East War.

It also said that one of the men detained was a member of Kach, an extreme nationalist group led by the Rabbi Meir Kahane, who founded the New York-based Jewish Defense League.

Interior Minister Yosef Burg, who oversees the national police force, issued a statement saying the bombs had been found and dismantled early Friday. "It is our absolute and clear policy to oppose any act of terror," he said. "We will do everything to find the guilty people whosoever they are."

Television and radio accounts said the explosives were found on six buses belonging to the Kalandia bus company, which provides service between the Arab sector of Jerusalem to Palestinian refugee camps and towns on the West Bank.

The reports did not say how the bombs were discovered, but said no one was on the buses when they were found and dismantled.

National police spokesman Koby Bachar declined to provide any details about the attempted bombings. "There is a news blackout on the entire subject," he said.

Six Revised Districts Gain Federal Approval

By The Associated Press

The U.S. Justice Department has approved six Senate districts in North Carolina which were revised during a special session of the Legislature, a state official says.

The Justice Department approved districts 1, 2, 6, 9, 10 and 11 Friday night, said Alex Brock, director of the state Board of Elections.

"The approval by the Justice Department clears the way for the state to schedule primary elections," Brock said in a telephone interview Saturday afternoon.

Brock said that the primaries in those districts would be scheduled for July 17.

Senate District 14 and House Districts 8 and 70 are still under review by the Justice Department because they are covered by the Voting Rights Act of 1965, as were the districts approved Friday, Brock said.

A three-judge panel had ordered the state to redraw the district lines in Senate Districts 2 and 22 and House Districts 8, 21, 23, 36 and 39, ruling the districts diluted minority voting power.

The three-judge panel recently approved the new Senate District 22 in Mecklenburg and Cabarrus counties as well as House Districts in Wake, Durham, Mecklenburg and Forsyth counties.

The panel became involved in the redistricting after minority voters filed suit, arguing that the redistricting plan unconstitutionally diluted their voting power.

District 1 covers Camden, Chowan, Currituck, Dare, Hyde, Pasquotank, Perquimans, Tyrrell and Washington counties and parts of Beaufort, Bertie and Gates counties.

District 2 covers Hertford and Northampton counties and parts of Bertie, Edgecombe, Gates, Halifax, Martin, Vance and Warren counties while District 6 includes parts of Edgecombe, Martin, Pitt and Wilson counties.

District 9 includes parts of Beaufort, Martin and Pitt counties while District 10 covers Nash County and parts of Edgecombe, Halifax, Warren and Wilson counties.

Libya Ordered To Free Britons

LONDON (AP) — The government said Saturday it is demanding that Libya release two Britons still detained after diplomatic relations were severed. In Tripoli, the Libyan capital, the Libyan diplomats expelled from Britain received a heroes' welcome.

Their departure Friday ended an 11-day police siege of the Libyan Embassy here that began after gunfire from the building killed a British policewoman and wounded 11 Libyan dissidents demonstrating across the street.

Col. Moammar Khadafy, Libya's authoritarian ruler, met Saturday with the expelled Libyans, who were described in aLibyan telecast monitored here as "the revolutionary force which was based at the Libyan Arab People's Bureau (embassy) in London."

In what was seen as a possible peace signal, however, a "basic popular conference" in Sabha, south of Tripoli, ruled against Libya cutting relations with Britain, saying "relations are between peoples, not governments."The conferences, nominally people's forums, always reflect Khadafy's will.

The issue is academic, however, as Britain severed relations with Libya when it refused to surrender the embasssy killer to police. But London has said it has no quarrel with the Libyan people and wants good relations, provided Libya renounces violence.

With British and Libyan diplomats back in their capitals the day after the siege ended, police launched a full-scale investigation into the April 17 shooting that killed Constable Yvonne Fletcher, 25, even though they said they assumed the killer was among the 30 Libyan diplomats who left Friday and probably would never be caught.

The British Foreign Office said Saturday it was making "the strongest possible representations" to Khadafy's government about two Britons who have been held in Libya since the day of the shooting.

Douglas Ledingham, 35, Tripoli manager of British Caledonian Airways, and John Campbell, who was not further identified, have not been told what charges they face and have been prevented from seeing British diplomats, a Foreign Office spokesman said.

But he added they were "in good health," and there was no reason to believe they were being ill-treated. Ledingham has telephoned his wife in Britain, the spokesman said.

On Friday, as the staff of the Libyan Embassy was being expelled, Ambassador Oliver Miles was hauling down the Union Jack at the British Embassy in Tripoli. He flew home to London that night with 11 other diplomats and their families, leaving behind two diplomats whose top priority was the fate of Ledingham and Campbell, the Foreign Office said.

St. James's Square, site of the embassy, remained sealed off Saturday, although a group of reporters and photographers was allowed to tour it briefly during the afternoon.

ECU Speech Pathologist Has Theories On Stuttering

By LESLIE TODD
ECU News Bureau

In most academic disciplines or professional fields, new ideas that challenge traditional theories and practices are met with resistance and skepticism. Usually, the new approach creeps slowly into the body of knowledge, nurtured along by a small group of determined proponents who insist that their voices be heard.

For more than a decade, Richard Shine, a speech pathologist in East Carolina University's School of Allied Health, has made his voice heard on the subject of stuttering. Taking his cue from research begun in the 1920s, Shine has challenged popular theories on stuttering with presentations at conventions, seminars and workshops throughout the United States and in Europe.

His basic premise is simple. Stuttering, Shine contends, is not the result of stress, psychological problems or parental pressure. Rather, he and a growing number of speech pathologists argue that stuttering is caused by a coordination problem between the muscles used in speaking. The child who stutters is compared to the awkward youngster who has trouble running or learning to throw a ball.

Shine blasts conventional wisdom that portrays stuttering in young children as a temporary difficulty best handled by being ignored. He rejects widely held opinions that suggest that parents aggravate stuttering by urging children to talk differently, that children who stutter are unaware of their speech behavior, and that parents are unable to properly diagnose stuttering when it occurs in thier children.

"For years," he said, "parents of children who stutter have been needlessly victimized by prevailing professional opinion. They are told to do nothing, yet their fears and frustrations multiply as they watch their children struggle to speak.

"There has never been one shred of evidence to support the assumptions and opinions that form the basis for popular thought on stuttering in young children," Shine said. "Certainly there are many children who stutter and also demonstrate signs of emotional instability or nervousness; but these problems, although they may complicate treatment, are never the cause of the stuttering."

To treat young stutterers, Shine has developed a fluency training kit that is coming into wide use throughout the United States. Emphasis is placed on helping the stutterer change the way he talks and compensate for his lack of speech coordination. Parents are encouraged to help their children at home and to talk with them openly about the problem.

Shine credits his awakening to new ideas on stuttering to experiences with two young stutterers early in his career as a speech pathologist, and to the influence of a pioneering instructor at the University of Northern Colorado. Beginning his college studies at the University of Northern Colorado with business courses, Shine used his savings and picked potatoes and beets to pay his way through school.

His introduction to speech pathology came virtually by accident. He enrolled in a voice and diction course taught by a professor of speech pathology. The instructor encouraged him to pursue a new career.

After earning a master's degree, Shine began work with the Scott County, Iowa, public schools as a speech and hearing clinician and later as a program director. It was here that his work with two young stutterers forced him to drop his faith in traditional approaches to stuttering and embrace the methods first introduced to him by his instructor at Northern Colorado.

"The first child was a severe stutterer who fit none of the accepted patterns for emotional problems and so forth," Shine said. "Furthermore, he was acutely aware of his stuttering, something which the literature said was unknown in pre-school children.

"The second child was the only kid in his kindergarten class who failed to show a single speech disfluency in the standard series of tests; but when I engaged him in a spontaneous conversation, he stuttered severely.

"So in 1964, I became one of the first (speech pathologists) to buck the system," he said. "I've been both chastised and loved ever since."

After earning a doctorate of education in speech patholgy and audiology and working as an assistant professor and coordinator of clinical speech services in the public schools for Penn State University, Shine joined the faculty of ECU's School of Allied Health and Social Work in 1974. At that time, he also stepped up the campaign to promote his views on stuttering.

"My mission is to take the fear out of childhood stuttering," Shine says. "I want people to know that this is something they can deal with and something they can change."

Hart Favors Alternate Energy Source

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn. (AP) — Democratic presidential contender Gary Hart says he wants to restore Tennessee Valley Authority funds cut by the Reagan administration and is in favor of developing alternative energy sources.

"Energy independence means conservation," the Colorado senator told The Chattanooga Times in an interview during a campaign stop Friday.

"But it also means restoring programs that began in the '70s to develop alternative, renewable supplies of energy and producing greater amounts of fossil fuels, including coal."

Hart called himself a longtime supporter of TVA, which employs nearly 34,000 people in the South, and said he was impressed with the "unique experiment."

Hart said he wanted to create a construction fund, supported by federal state and local governments, that would fund private contractors, who would be obliged to hire a percentage of unemployed people.

It's No Handicap

DENVER (AP) — Saying his blindness was no secret when he was appointed to the bench, a judge has refused to quit a non-jury murder case in which the defense says a videotaped confession is crucial.

Juvenile Judge Dana Wakefield, who has been blind since birth, told defense lawyer Maureen Cain on Thursday that a "videotape witness is no different from a live witness." Ms. Cain had argued that her 17-year-old client's "demeanor and innuendo" on the tape would be impossible to describe to Wakefield.

Wakefield, a judge for 4½ years, said Colorado laws on the reasons for disqualifying a judge from a case did not include blindness.

Gov. Hunt Launches 400th Anniversary Celebration

PLYMOUTH, England (UPI) — Gov. James B. Hunt Jr. Friday kicked off America's 400th anniversary, marking the first voyages that led to the settlement of North Carolina's Outer Banks.

"Four hundred years ago, a small band of brave men stood here," Hunt said. "They know that behind them was a city already rich in history and a nationl bursting into full flower. And in front of them? They knew something about this ocean — its treachery, its sudden storms and deadly calms."

Friday's ceremony honored the Roanoke Voyages, made from 1584-1587 by Philip Amadas and Arthur Barlowe, who were sent by Sir Walter Raleigh. No permanent settlements resulted from those voyages because the colonists either died, returned to England or disappeared, such as the settlement on Roanoke Island, N.C., that came to be known as the "Lost Colony."

The voyages did pave the way for other important English settlements, including Jamestown, Va., and Plymouth, Mass. Hunt placed a plague in the Plymouth harbor to commemorate the voyages.

"Today, we celebrate the beginning," Hunt said. "In July, come with us, all of you, to Roanoke Island, N.C., where those brave men walked, and celebrate the blooming of the old world's dream of a new world of freedom and vision."

Blacks Lean To Mondale, Cite Jackson Influence

NEW YORK (AP) — A majority of black Americans favor Walter Mondale as the Democratic presidential candidate, but 70 percent say Jesse Jackson's campaign has made them more likely to vote Democratic in November, according to a Newsweek Poll released Saturday.

Fifty-two percent of the black respondents said they would prefer to see Mondale get the Democratic nomination, compared to 38 percent for Jackson and 8 percent for Gary Hart.

Among all voters, the breakdown was Mondale, 52 percent; Jackson, 7 percent; Hart, 38 percent.

The poll results do not necessarily mean that a majority of blacks would vote for Mondale over Jackson. Forty-two percent said they believed Jackson supporters would vote for him to demonstrate black power, not because they think he would make a good president.

Forty-four percent disagreed, saying it was because they believe Jackson would make a good president.

The poll, conducted by the Gallup Organization, questioned 752 adults of varied racial backgrounds, and another 238 black adults, by telephone on April 25-26. The margin of error was 4 percent in the national sampling and 8 percent in the black-only sampling.

When asked, "Has Jackson's candidacy made you more or less likely to vote Democratic in November?" 70 percent of the black sample said more likely, while 19 percent said it would have no effect.

Among all voters, 33 percent said Jackson's candidacy would make them more likely to vote Democratic, while 26 percent said it would make them less likely and 35 percent said it would have no effect.

Most respondents agreed that Jackson is not the single best representative of blacks in America. Only 11 percent of the black respondents and 15 percent of the overall sampling said Jackson represents black Americans better than any other person.

And both sets of respondents were divided on the question of whether Jackson has hurt his chances by the way he handled charges of anti-Semitic statements.

Thirty seven percent of the blacks surveyed said Jackson's handling of the issue will hurt him, compared to 42 percent of the national sampling. Fifty-eight percent of the black sample and 51 percent of the national sample disagreed.

No Talks Scheduled For Vegas Strikers

By TIM DAHLBERG
Associated Press Writer

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — A union leader said Saturday that strikers are "not near a settlement at all" in a walkout by 17,000 resort workers in this gambling mecca, and blamed hotel negotiators for sabotaging the talks.

Meanwhile, a Saturday night demonstration was planned on the Strip, said a union source who spoke on condition his name not be used.

"It looked like we were making some significant progress until Vince Helm showed up and they walked out," said Dennis Kist, head of the stagehands union, following Friday's stalemate in talks. Helm is the director of the Nevada Resort Association, which represents 20 of the 32 struck hotels.

Kist said he met for 22 hours with negotiators for the Hilton, but came away empty.

"I must stress we are not near a settlement at all," he said.

Kist accused the NRA of attempting to sabotage any potential settlement by its members.

"I feel the resort association does not want any of the hotels to settle," he said. "Any time they feel it's near a settlement, they'll come in and break it up."

Neither Hilton Vice President Henri Lewin nor Helm returned repeated phone calls for comment Saturday.

Forty-eight union members were arrested in a Friday demonstration which blocked off a portion of the famed gambling Strip as about 100-riot-equipped polie hauled off pickets protesting the reopening at the Flamingo Hilton. The total arrests climbed to 527 since the strike began April 2.

No new talks were reported in the dispute, despite earlier optimism that contracts would be reached with the city's two Hilton hotels.

Both sides reported early Friday they had a tentative settlement, but a snag developed over when the wage increases would take effect. A union meeting with Caesars Palace representatives broke off after about two hours and both sides declared an impasse in those talks.

The culinary and bartenders unions, which represent most of the striking workers, were involved in those talks, but representatives of unions representing stagehands and musicians also met with the Hiltons.

RING OF CHILDREN — First Lady Nancy Reagan is surrounded by dancing Chinese children during her visit Saturday to the Fusuijin neighborhood committee in Peking. Mrs. Reagan visited the school, medical unit, and family unit. (AP Laserphoto)

Toddlers Enjoy Nancy's Bunny Hop Demonstration

PEKING (UPI) — First lady Nancy Reagan charmed hundreds of Chinese toddlers Saturday with a bunny hop and then squirmed as she watched a patient being given an acupuncture treatment.

Mrs. Reagan, enjoying perhaps the liveliest and most colorful activity on her China schedule, toured Fusuijin (Happiness Peace Borders), a model neighborhood in the old quarter of Peking.

At the neighborhood nursery school, scores of perky tots from 2 to 5 burst into a deafening chant of "Welcome, warm welcome," waved roses and homemade streamers and rattled strings of rusting bottle caps as Mrs. Reagan stepped into their compound.

The first lady moved to a small enclosed court where she was quickly surrounded by tots dancing and prancing to Chinese accordion music called "Cowboy."

When the music stopped, Liu Yu, 5, bravely stepped up to Mrs. Reagan and asked her to join.

After taking a classroom seat, Mrs. Reagan watched the preschoolers dance and sing in precision that would dazzle professionals.

"It's amazing," she said.

One song featured six girls dressed in green knit sweaters that said "football" in English and singing, "I Want to be a Small Duck."

Mrs. Reagan gave the school art supplies and a Viewmaster with six sets of slides showing scenes of America.

At the neighborhood medical clinic, Mrs. Reagan listened to the neighborhood committee's work in medical counseling and birth control for Fusuijin's 2,000 residents.

When females reach the age of 14, we "make sure they take up birth control," said the director of the one-room clinic.

Mrs. Reagan was visibly startled when the clinic personnel began to demonstrate acupuncture on a woman who had cataracts.

As the first thread-thin needle went swiftly into the back of the patient's head, the first lady grimaced.

"Doesn't it hurt?" she asked.

For the Saturday banquet hosted by the Reagans, the first lady wore an embroidered red and gold silk cheongsam, a tight-fitting traditional Chinese dress with slits up the sides, which was presented to her by the wife of President Li Xiannian. The dress was set off with green jade and gold earrings.

Hospitals' Survival Threatened

Survival of up to 1,000 of the nation's smaller hospitals is threatened by an unprecedented and continuing decline in hospital admissions, health care leaders said Saturday.

Only large hospitals and medical centers, such as those linked to universities, appear untouched by the mini-depression affecting the $120 billion-a-year, 1.1 million-bed hospital industry.

Most of the experts linked the decline to growth in procedures done on an out-patient basis.

"A number of hospitals are operating at 50 percent of capacity," Dr. Stuart A. Wesbury, president of the American College of Hospital Administrators, said.

"Everywhere I go talk is of reducing staff, closing floors and units. Many threatened hospitals are in smaller communities where there may be competing hospitals. Workers are being laid off in hospitals that haven't cut staff in 40 years, Wesbury said.

"Various hospital experts estimate that from 200 to 1,000 hospitals in the United States may close as the result of the declining number of patients and the competition from alternative care-providers."

The American Hospital Association said the decline in admissions during the last three months of 1983 was 5.5 percent, compared to a dip of only 0.8 percent during a comparable 1982 period.

"It is the greatest shift on the hospital scene since the AHA started monitoring it 30 years ago," McMahon said.

To help affected hospitals among its nearly 6,000 members, the AHA this month provided instruction on how to close down beds and fire workers.

Further impact on the declining admission scene was expected from a growing trend among Blue Cross and Blue Shield plans to require pre-admission authorization for all but medical emergencies, obstetrical care and mental health services. Eighteen of the 90 plans have adopted the system and 10 more are about to.

Auditors from the plans must certify a medical necessity before a doctor can admit a "Blues" patient for other than the three designated reasons.

Fire Units Scrape For Financial Support

ASHEVILLE (AP) — Faced with rising equipment costs, volunteer fire departments more than ever depend for moral and financial support on the people they protect.

The Stewart Simmons Volunteer Fire Department in Watauga County, like other departments across the state that serve rural areas, had trouble scraping together enough money to get organized.

A struggling member of a North Carolina network that saved about $750 million worth of state taxable property in 1981, the department near Boone met with local resistance initially.

"When we first started three years ago, a lot of people didn't understand why a change was needed," said Chief Gordon Fox. "Down here in Triplett, our fires were put out by the department in Deep Gap. But the road down here is pretty winding, so sometimes they couldn't get down here fast enough," he said of Elk Creek Road.

The property owners association of nearby Powderhorn Mountain was quick to see the need, however, and bought and donated to the fledgling department a 1946 Maximum pumper.

The firefighters went door to door asking for $25 from each of their neighbors to raise the $5,000 needed to update the truck and to buy six firefighting suits.

When Stewart Simmons donated a five-year lease to a block building he owned on Jakes Mountain Road, the department had a home. And after the 23 firefighters showed their serious intent by putting out a few fires, the Watauga County commissioners began alloting them the $11,500 they furnish to all county fire departments.

But even now the going is rough. The department is paying off a $90,000 loan used to buy a new pumper and pay for the construction of a new building. Annual payments are $14,000 — $2,500 more than what the county supplies them.

And so the department raises the difference and its operating money through its pig pickings held three times a year.

Famous throughout Watauga and Wilkes counties, the suppers bring together the residents of Triplett who dance, make some music and eat some pork, all in the name of their fire department.

"It's been tough, but the community's supported us real well," Fox said. Jack and Inez Todd donated one of their four acres of land recently so the department would have a place to build. Neighbors are helping erect the new station.

"Anytime we need somebody to cook for the suppers, they are ready to volunteer," Fox said.

The departments are finding such community support more crucial than ever.

Fire truck prices have increased 300 percent since 1974. Air packs that supply oxygen to firefighters in burning buildings now cost $1,000 each. According to industry estimates, the average department of 36 men and three trucks costs $350,000 to start up.

As a result, fewer citizens are banding together to attempt the long, slow process of establishing rural fire protection.

Also contributing to the slowdown, however, is the large number of departments already existing in the state. According to Horace Moore, executive secretary of the North Carolina Firemen's Association, there are about 1,380 of them with about 45,000 volunteers. The coastal regions remain the least protected.

The counties do their part to fund the departments. Most contribute part of the money they receive from the state in sales tax revenue. And most have helped set up fire service districts in which residents agree to pay a special tax to fund the fire department.

A county can use its share of the state sales tax for 37 designated services. Fire protection is one of them. In Buncombe County, commissioners divided $216,213 in sales tax revenues among its 21 volunteer departments. It also distributed $1,120,179 in ad valorem taxes authorized by the residents of each of the county's 19 fire districts.

County commissioners create tax districts, such as fire, school and sanitation, in two ways. They establish a County Service District after making studies called for during a public hearing. They delineate the boundaries of a Rural Fire Protection District after a successful referendum requested by 35 percent of resident real estate owners.

Firefighters won't hesitate to go to a fire outside their boundaries, which further strains their budgets, Moore said.

About 75 percent of Buncombe County lies outside of fire districts, but all of it enjoys fire protection. This benevolent attitude further strains the volunteers' budgets, according to M. Jerry VeHaun, director of the county's emergency services.

The Tennessee Valley Authority helped Cherokee County's fire departments get started in 1973 by supplying them with Army surplus trucks. And the state Forest Service has supplied small four-wheel-drive pumpers to new departments in Clay and other western North Carolina counties.

In some districts in North Carolina, homes and businesses voluntarily pay departments a yearly fee based on the value of their real estate. Non-payment does not result in non-protection, Moore said, adding that compliance runs at about 70 percent.

Some departments are created with revenue given them by subscribers, though they are very few and concentrated in the southeastern part of the state, according to Jerry Grimes, assistant deputy commissioner of the fire and rescue division of the state Department of Insurance.

Because they may, by rights, refuse to put out the fire of a non-member, they are not recognized by the insurance industry, he said.

But as Moore said, "the pig and chicken barbecues are what support the rural departments."

Recent Occupational Safety and Health Administration regulations requiring better safety gear could have resulted in the scrapping of much of the volunteers' equipment if Moore and the firemen's association hadn't successfully lobbied to have their departments exempted.

Besides the expenses involved, Moore objected to the principle. "I'm opposed to volunteers being told to do any damn thing anyway," he said. "There's no telling how many millions of dollars they save the taxpayers in lower insurance premiums."

He said they saved about $750 million worth of taxable property in 1981. He also said their efforts saved the state $600 million in paid firefighters' salaries.

"Taken as a group, I'd say they contribute more to the economy of this state than any other single group — notwithstanding the fact that they save many lives," Moore said.

Police Continuing Probe Of Kennedy's Last Hours

PALM BEACH, Fla. (UPI) — Detectives tried Saturday to trace the final hours of David Kennedy and learn the source of a possibly fatal dose of drugs in the bloodstream of the troubled 28-year-old son of the late Robert F. Kennedy.

The cause of Kennedy's death has not yet been revealed, but initial tests showed "significant amounts" of cocaine and Demerol painkiller in his body.

Detectives also found 1.3 grams of 70 percent pure cocaine in the hotel room where Kennedy was found dead Wednesday, along with a vial of prescription pills.

Chief toxicologist Bill Heidtman said the final results of drug screening on Kennedy would probably be given Monday to the Palm Beach County medical examiner.

"Seventy per cent pure cocaine is dangerous," said a narcotics detective trying to learn where Kennedy obtained the drug. "Too much of it could kill you. That cocaine is pretty strong even for someone with a heavy tolerance."

Police Capt. Richard Woods said the vial of prescription pills found on a bed in Kennedy's hotel room was "about half-full at least, maybe better." He declined to identify the pills or their owner.

"If, in fact, these drugs caused his death, then the person who provided him with them could be guilty of homicide," said police Lt. Thomas H. Perry, who assigned six detectives to find the source of the drugs.

Palm Beach Police Chief Joseph Terlizzese said detectives were attempting to piece together Kennedy's final hours. He said that among the people police had interviewed was an unidentified young woman who had been seen with him.

One of the last people to see Kennedy was a taxi driver who told UPI he took Kennedy to the family's oceanside estate about 4 p.m. Tuesday. The cabbie, who refused to identify himself, said he drove Kennedy back to the motel about 30 minutes later.

Kennedy, who drifted into drug use not long after the 1968 assassination of his father in Los Angeles, was buried Friday at the Holyhood Cemetery in Brookline, Mass., following a private funeral mass for about 75 family members and friends at his mother's estate in McLean, Va.

Kennedy went to Palm Beach last week to spend the Easter weekend with other family members who gathered at the mansion of the family matriarch, Rose Kennedy. Mrs. Kennedy, 93 and in poor health, has reportedly not been told of the death of David, one of her 29 grandchildren.

Red Avoids Dirty Words In Routines

RALEIGH, N.C. (UPI) — Comedian Red Skelton doesn't see the humor in routines involving sex, four-letter words or put-downs of people.

"I know every dirty joke in the world, but I don't think people should have to pay to hear them," Skelton said Saturday.

The use of four-letter words in comedy routines today is "short-cut for thinking" about how to make an audience laugh, he said. Comics shouldn't say things "that you can read on public bathroom walls."

Skelton, who will turn 71 in July, said he recently watched comedian Eddie Murphy on television and was disturbed by Murphy's frequent use of four-letter words.

"He doesn't need it because when he read straight lines, he was funny to me and Mrs. Skelton," he said.

He also disdains routines that belittle people.

"It's the same thing as using four-letter words to shock people," Skelton said.

He considered himself a guest in people's homes during his years in television and radio. When people come to see him, they are in "my living room."

Skelton, who began his career in a medicine show and spent 20 years on television, met with reporters while in Raleigh for a two-night show sponsored by North Carolina State University.

He apologized for his delivery.

"I have an impediment in my speech. Every once in a while I stop and breathe," he said.

He said he likes all the comic characters that have made him famous, including Clem Kadiddlehopper, Sheriff Deadeye and the salesman for Guzzler's Gin.

Oklahoma Begins Cleanup, 8 Missing In N.D. Blizzard

By KIM MILLS
Associated Press Writer

Crews in North Dakota searched Saturday for eight people missing after a blizzard dumped up to 25 inches of snow, while Oklahoma residents began rebuilding after tornadoes that killed 11 people and turned most of the town of Morris into rubble.

The same blizzard also paralyzed northeastern Wyoming for three days and claimed three lives, officials said.

There was no water, electricity or phone service in Morris and National Guardsmen restricted the town to everyone but its 1,300 residents and those with special passes.

"It seemed like residents here spent all day yesterday just numb," said Lt. Pat Collins, Oklahoma Highway Patrol spokesman. "Right now, they're really beginning to stir around."

With most of the rubble bulldozed away, many residents of the town 30 miles south of Tulsa began the arduous task of rebuilding, Collins said.

The Civil Defense Department was coordinating clean-up efforts with the state Transporation, Health and Agriculture departments.

Two-thirds of the town was flattened when a string of about a dozen tornadoes swept across Oklahoma Thursday and Friday, killing 11 people and injuring 100. Gov. George Nigh said Friday he would ask President Reagan to declare Okmulgee and Pawnee counties major disaster areas.

The National Guard trucked in 6,000 gallons of drinking water to Morris while the Red Cross set up emergency stations serving hot and cold food, and also erected temporary shelters in Okmulgee for people displaced by the storms.

"A few minor incidents" were reported Friday night during a curfew in Morris, Collins said.

"There was apparently a rock-throwing incident inovlving some outsiders and National Guardsmen," he said. "And one other minor disturbance: a woman reported that somebody was trying to kick in her door. But it may have just been the wind."

In western and central North Dakota, the sun reappeared Saturday after a blizzard left 25 inches of snow in Minot and knocked out power to up to 3,000 customers across the state.

There were no reports of injuries or deaths, but eight people were missing and authorities were appealing for information to help find them, said Lyle Gallagher, director of communications for North Dakota state radio.

"We've had over 20 people located one way or the other — located in vehicles — and we've had some people that were missing that turned up OK," he said.

"The biggest problem we have right now is that the telephone lines are tied up with people caling in to ask if snowplows are working," he added. "They're real antsy, they want to get going."

Several thousand North Dakotans spent Friday night without power, and it may be Sunday or Monday before electricty is restored to all of them, said Dennis Hill, a spokesman for state rural electric cooperatives.

Snowplows were out in much of the state, but were being hampered by abandoned cars and trucks on the highways, Gallagher said.

The National Weather Service said the 15.7 inches of snow that fell on Bismarck, N.D., was the biggest single April snowstorm in recorded history, breaking a record that stood for 65 years.

In Wyoming, skies were mostly sunny Saturday after the storm released its grip on the northeast part of the state. Two Wyoming residents died of exposure during the storm and a third was in a weather-related traffic accident, officials said.

Four men who spent 53 hours in the cab of a pickup were found early Saturday, 26 miles southwest of Gillette. Sheriff's Deputy Rick Keats said it took rescuers four hours to plow through one drift 10 feet high and 200 feet long.

Chinese Have Learned American Media Savvy

By JAMES GERSTENZANG
AP White House Correspondent

PEKING (AP) — From briefings by senior officials to hastily announced mini-news conferences, the Chinese have learned to play America's news media games.

"Puzzling" was the word used by President Reagan's national security adviser, Robert C. McFarlane, to describe Premier Zhao Ziyang's informal, 10-minute news conference with American reporters awaiting Reagan's arrival at the Great Hall of the People on Friday morning.

U.S. officials were surprised that the Chinese leader would talk to reporters before the first working session with Reagan got under way.

In picture-taking sessions, the Chinese leaders have bantered amiably with Reagan and the president's wife, Nancy. By doing so, they have offered television cameras a sketch of relaxed senior leaders — veterans of Mao Tse-Tung's revolution and of periods of isolation from the West who now appear as comfortable with American politicians under the glare of TV lights.

Western politicians have long known that skillful use of the news media can go a long way toward affecting the image they project.

The lesson has not been lost on the Chinese.

Their media relations during Reagan's visit have been directed not only at the American public — more than 200 representatives of U.S. television, radio, news agencies, newspapers and magazines accompanied Reagan — but, naturally, at 1 billion Chinese citizens as well.

That domestic effort provided one of the flaps of the visit that caused concern U.S. officials.

The Chinese edited from their TV coverage of Reagan's speech the president's praise of capitalism, his harsh criticism of the Soviet Union and his mention of God. This prompted White House spokesman Larry Speakes to quip to American reporters: "They don't cut us as much as you do."

In a more serious vein, Speakes said the Chinese government, "which controls information in the country, has given the president extensive news coverage — certainly more than we would consider likely for most foreign leaders visiting the United States."

"We ... regret the fact that statements by the president which would have given the Chinese people a better understanding of our country and its people were not included in the Chinese media's coverage of the speech," he said.

Later, the Chinese removed similar Reagan comments from an interview conducted by Chinese television.

The Chinese authorities demonstrated their sophistication about the U.S. news media and reporters when a CBS correspondent tried to ask a question at the Zhao news conference after a CBS colleague had already been called upon.

Cutting the reporter off, a government official pointed out that the network had already asked one question.

After nearly every meeting Reagan has held with Chinese leaders, Chinese officials have briefed reporters, just as U.S. officials have done. Their assessments of the meetings have not always been identical, but it was in their direct contact with American reporters that the senior Chinese leaders have shown their public relations skills.

In his exchange with reporters, Zhao deftly parried a question about how he felt about serving as host to Reagan, who had spent years denouncing China.

"I think that any politician with vision will see that it is an outmoded idea to distinguish nations for friendly or hostile relations on the basis of ideology," he replied.

And even Deng Xiaoping, the 79-year-old senior leader who was twice purged and twice resurrected politically, showed his skill in a smiling performance on Saturday.

Posing for pictures with the president and Mrs. Reagan, Deng said the current visit was too short and that Mrs. Reagan should return and leave the president at home.

"You can bring your grandchildren along; we won't maltreat you," he said, demonstrating a flair for easygoing chit-chat before the cameras.

Marines' Test Successful

CAMP LEJEUNE, N.C. (AP) — Camp Lejeune-based servicemen participated in an exercise to evacuate 343 civilians from the Navy base at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, Friday in what officials called a successful test of U.S. combat readiness.

"What transpired Friday morning was a practical test of our evacuation procedures as part of Ocean Venture '84," said Lt. Commander J.D. Van Sickele, public affairs officer for the naval base.

Evacuation of the civilians and deployment of the Marines took less than four hours, Van Sickele said.

The civilians, all dependents of military personnel or civilian employees of the base, boarded 31 aircraft from the Air Force Military Airlift Command and flew to Jacksonville, Fla. while Marine reinforcements were flown in from Camp Lejeune.

The same aircraft flew in 800 Navy personnel and Marines from the 3rd Battalion, 6th Marines from Camp Lejeune, who remained on the island to practice reinforcing a 400-man Marine contingent permanently based there.

Guantanamo Bay, on the eastern tip of Cuba, is the only U.S. base on communist soil. The U.S. occupies the base — despite the absence of diplomatic relations between the two nations — under a treaty with Cuba signed in 1903.

The Lejeune force is one of the units assigned as an air alert force, which tests its own readiness and its ability to evacuate U.S. citizens from foreign countries.

It remained at Guantanamo Bay to conduct training with Col. James Hicks' Marine Ground Defense L Force, a 400-man unit assigned to fend off any attack on the base until help could arrive.

"If there was an attack, certainly my job would be to provide security until these gents coming in on planes were on the ground," said Hicks.

Bill Would Allow Competition

RALEIGH (AP) — A legislative panel on Friday endorsed a bill that would allow telephone companies to compete for in-state long-distance service in North Carolina.

The bill, which will be considered by the Legislature during its short budget session in June, authorizes the state Utilities Commission to allow competition if it would serve the public interest.

The bill could mean lower rates and better service for customers in the state, said Rep. George W. Miller, D-Durham, after the recommendation of the Legislature's Utility Review Committee.

"Competition is going to offer a magnitude of new services by reason of technological development," said Miller, who sponsored the bill and who is a member of the committee.

"These are things we should be in a position to take advantage of," he said. "Almost everyon agrees these are cost-beneficial."

The bill was passed by the House in 1983 and is pending in the Senate.

Robert D. Swezey, information services director for MCI Communications Corp., said the company could offer savings of 25 percent to 40 percent to residential customers and 15 percent to 25 percent for business customers, compared with rates offered by American Telephone & Telegraph Communications.

Federal law allows interstate long-distance competition, but in-state comptition is prohibited by North Carolina law.

Boy Nominated For Citation

HENDERSONVILLE, N.C. (AP) — Six-year-old Jay Goodman is among six children being considered for Hartford Insurance Co.'s top award for bravery after he saved his mother, her boyfriend and her infant son from a trailer fire.

Jay is credited with awakening the three on Oct. 23 and received Friday a silver medal — Hartford's Junior Fire Marshal Fire Safety Super Kid Award. Authorities who attended the ceremony said he has a good chance of winning the gold medal, which will be presented in Los Angeles in August.

Jay said fire-safety techniques taught in his kindergarten class at Dana Elementary School showed him what to do in a fire.

"I needed to go to the bathroom and saw a lot of smoke," Jay said. "I went to wake somebody up and (dragged) my baby brother by his feet to get him out of the smoke. I learned how to do it in school. I wasn't scared."

His mother, Renee, 22, said she's sure everyone else in the trailer would have died without Jay's quick thinking.

"He was yelling 'Mama, wake up. We're all going to die. The house is on fire," said Mrs. Goodman. "When we woke up he was dragging his little brother by his feet. I grabbed the baby and shoved them out the door."

The fire started in Jay's bedroom and has been attributed to faulty wiring, authorities said.

About 40 volunteer firefighters brought the blaze under control within minutes. One of the firefighters, Monroe Heatherly, had gone to Jay's school two weeks earlier and taught the pupils to avoid smoke by crawling away from it and to "stop, drop and roll" if their clothing should catch fire.

Heatherly praised Jay's teacher, Jane Amos.

"We're quite fortunate Ms. Amos carried out the program all week," Heatherly said. "A lot of teachers don't have that much interest."

During the presentation Friday, Hendersonville Mayor Donald Michalove read a letter to Jay from Gov. Jim Hunt.

"Thank you, Jay, for being a real hero and keeping your cool," Hunt wrote.

Market Exhibits Demonstrate Furniture, Computer Ties

HIGH POINT (AP) — Exhibits at the Southern Furniture Market indicate that the futures of computers and furniture are inextricably bound together.

Not only are many manufacturers at the market offering desks and wall systems designed for home and office computers, but some also display computers programmed to aid designers and salesmen.

"We're in the infancy of a whole new era," said Richard J. Udouj, president of Riverside Furniture Corp. of Fort Smith, Ark. "We made our entry into the (computer furniture) market last April, and it's been highly successful. Now we're expanding on it, but we're still only scratching the surface."

Riverside offers a traditional-looking rolltop desk that has a built-in power base, phone jacks, security system and clock. The pecan desk on display at the Southern Furniture Market Center in High Point also has a rollout printer tray, a sliding top to cover the keyboard and openings for various cables. It retails for up to $1,800, Udouj said.

"People who buy computers don't want junk furniture," he said. "They've spent several thousand dollars on a computer and they don't want to hide it in a closet."

Riverside also sells a $599 wall system with a rising shelf to hold the keyboard. The video screen sits on another shelf and a printer sits on a rollout tray.

Sligh Furniture Co. of Holland, Michigan, sells a $2,000 traditional mahogany wall system with track lighting, a pullout table for the keyboard, a swing table for the printer and another for notepads or books.

"We've had very good demand for this," said Robert Sligh Jr. "It's exceeded our expectations."

The company also offers an L-section mahogany desk for $2,000 that features an adjustable platform, which controls the angle of the screen to avoid glare.

Less expensive are the computer desks made by Frank & Son of New York. The company offers a wood-formica bilevel desk with storage bin for about $350 retail.

"These are work stations," said vice president David Locke. "You're going to spill coffee, beer, bread crumbs and so forth."

Meanwhile, Search and Source Inc. displayed a computer system designed for designers. A videotape databank holds color pictures of thousands of products so interior designers can match them with existing items and customers' tastes. The items can be chosen by color, pattern, texture, price and style.

Another computer system displayed by Arco Chemical Co. is designed to help retailers sell mattresses. Customers view a video program and press a dot on the screen to indicate their age, sex, sleeping habits and other information. The program gives advice on types of mattresses based on that information.

The program urges often-shy shoppers to lie down on the mattresses before buying anything.

Defensive Action

Lakers Destroy Mavericks

INGLEWOOD, Calif. (AP) — Kareem Abdul-Jabbar scored 16 of his 18 points in the first half Saturday as the well-rested Los Angeles Lakers took command early and rolled to a 134-91 victory over the weary Dallas Mavericks in the opener of their National Basketball Association Western Conference playoff series.

The second game of th best-of-seven series will be played at the Forum Tuesday night before the action moves to Dallas for the third and fourth games.

The Lakers, who had been idle since completing a three-game sweep of Kansas City in a first-round series last Sunday, blew the Mavericks off the court in the first half thanks to a stifling full-court press and 65.3 percent field goal accuracy. Dallas hit on just 34.1 percent of its floor shots in the opening 24 minutes.

Los Angeles took a 10-2 lead after three minutes of play, saw its advantage trimmed to 12-8 and then really took off. The Lakers outscored the Mavericks 18-2 in a span of 3:28 to make it 30-10 with 3:43 remaining in the first period. Dallas wasn't closer than 13 points after that.

It was 36-21 after one quarter and the Lakers scored the first six points of the second period to extend their advantage to 21 points. Los Angeles continued to pull away until it was 68-38 at halftime.

The Lakers only had three turnovers in the first half to 10 for Dallas.

The Mavericks, who advanced to the second round of the playoffs by nipping Seattle 105-104 in overtime at Dallas on Thursday night to win that series 3-2, were unable to mount a serious threat in the final 24 minutes.

It was 99-66 after three quarters and reserves played most of the final period for both teams. Abdul-Jabbar left for good with 3:23 left in the third period.

Mike McGee led the balanced Los Angeles scoring attack with a career playoff high 25 points. Michael Cooper and Bob McAdoo finished with 18 and 17 points, respectively, for the Lakers. Seven Los Angeles players scored in double figures.

The high-scoring Dallas tandem of Mark Aguirre and Rolando Blackman was held to only 28 points, 16 of them by Aguirre, which led the Mavericks. Jay Vincent and Bill Garnett added 11 points each for the losers.

Dallas, appearing in the playoffs for the first time in its four-year history, had beaten Los Angeles three times in the five regular-season games between the teams.

But that didn't mean a thing in Saturday's nationally televised contest, even though the Lakers, in the playoffs for the eighth straight year, were without starting forward Jamaal Wilkes, who has been sidelined throughout the playoffs with an intestinal disorder. Wilkes may be able to return to action later in the series.

The Mavericks-Lakers game was the first game of the second round of the playoffs. The other three series get underway Sunday with the New York Knicks at Boston, the upstart New Jersey Nets at Milwaukee and Phoenix at Utah.

The Celtics, who had the best regular-season record in the NBA, have to concern themselves with the status of star forward Larry Bird's ankle and the hot shooting eye of the Knicks' Bernard King.

Bird has not practiced since spraining an ankle Tuesday in Boston's final game against Washington. The rest of the Celtics have had five days to rest, however, while the Knicks had to go into overtime to beat Detroit Friday night, when King scored 44 points to set a record of 213 points in a five-game series.

"If we take away the easy baskets and make him earn everything he gets, we'll be all right," said Cedric Maxwell, who probably will guard King for most of the series.

New Jersey upset the defending champion Philadelphia 76ers in the first round, but the Bucks made no secret that they would rather meet the Nets.

"I would rather play New Jersey because it gives us the homecourt advantage," Bucks Coach Don Nelson said. "But they're a capable opponent and they'll give us all we can handle. New Jersey is a very strong ballclub playing at its highest capabilities of the year."

If the 76ers had beaten New Jersey, Milwaukee would have had to open the second round in Philadelphia rather than at home. But veteran Bucks center Bob Lanier conceded there are other reasons he would rather face the Nets.

"When you play a team (Philadelphia) that has kicked you in the butt the last three years, you kind of want a change of pace," he said.

Utah beat Phoenix in four of five meetings during the regular season, but the Suns have won nine of their last 11 games, including a 3-2 victory over favored Portland in the first round.

All-Star guard Walter Davis was a pivotal factor in the Suns' defeat of the Trail Blaz-ers, averaging 26.4 points — including 29 in the series-clinching victory at Portland.

Trainer May Miss Derby Battle

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Trainer Woody Stephens reaches the end of his rocky road to the Kentucky Derby next Saturday when he tries to win the famed race 10 years and one day after he won the 100th Derby with Cannonade.

But Stephens might not be on hand to watch his duo of Devil's Bag and Swale race in the 1¼-mile, $250,000-added Derby, which is expected to be contested by from 17 to 20 3-year-olds.

The 70-year-old Hall of Fame trainer, who suffered three broken ribs two months ago, is in a Louisville hospital with pneumonia and while doctors say he should make it to the Derby, that's still not certain. Mike Griffin, a former trainer who works for Claiborne Farm, is handling Devil's Bag and Swale.

Devil's Bag was put to his final prep for the Derby Saturday in the one-mile Derby Trial, which he won by 2¼ lengths despite tiring at the finish.

Besides the pain and discomfort, it's been a winter and spring of anxiety for Stephens.

James P. Mills' Devil's Bag, the 1983 2-year-old champion, was syndicated for $36 million and was the Derby favorite before he even raced as a 3-year-old.

"I don't believe I've ever had one who could run like this," Stephens, who has trained winners of more than 200 stakes, said after Devil's Bag easily won his five 2-year-old races.

But now there are questions about Devil's Bag's ability to carry his speed over a distance and his competitiveness when hooked by a another horse.

Going into the Derby Trial, Devil's Bag's only two wins this year have been at seven furlongs. In the 1⅛-mile Flamingo at Hialeah, his only race around two turns, he led for three-quarters of a mile, then faded to finish fourth.

Claiborne Farm's Swale, who closed his 2-year-old campaign with three stakes wins, opened 1984 with a victory, finished third in the 1 1-16-mile Fountain of Youth, then rebounded to win the 1⅛-mile Florida Derby March 31.

But in his last start, Swale finished second, eight lengths behind He Is A Great Deal in the 1 1-16-mile Lexington at Keeneland April 17.

"The only thing I can think of is Swale didn't like the sloppy track," said a perplexed Stephens.

Still, the Stephens entry should go off the favorite in the Derby. He also ran the favored entry of Judger and Cannonade May 4, 1974, when Cannonade won the Derby.

Take Althea.

Trainer Wayne Lukas said Saturday that Althea, the filly who won the Arkansas Derby, will start in the Kentucky Derby. Lukas also said that another filly, Life's Magic, will run in the Derby.

Lukas also indicated another filly, Life's Magic, might start in the Derby, but she is more likely to run in the Kentucky Oaks next Friday.

There have been 32 fillies in the Derby, but only four in the last 47 years. Two have won — Regret in 1915 and Genuine Risk in 1980.

Another story is Silent King, the smallish colt who trainer Bud Delp tried to sell and couldn't.

"In his works he acted like a $5,000 horse. I didn't have a horse in the barn that couldn't beat him," said Delp, who also trained Spectacular Bid, the 1979 Derby and Preakness winner. Harry, Teresa and Tom Meyerhoff, who owned Spectacular Bid, also own the stretch-running Silent King.

Delp put Silent King in a $30,000 claiming race in the colt's first start last year, hoping someone would take him off his hands.

Silent King not only didn't get claimed, he won the race and went on to win his only other two starts as a 2-year-old. This year he came from 24 lengths back to win the 1 1-16-mile Lecomte Handicap, beating Taylor's Special, in his debut. Then he rallied from far back to finish third in the Louisiana Derby Trial, closed for second in the Louisiana Derby and on Thursday rallied from eighth, 14 lengths back, with three-eighths of a mile left to finished second by 3¼ lengths to Taylor's Special in the 1⅛-mile Blue Grass at Keeneland.

"What it is, he's a competitor in the afternoons," said Delp.

"He ran good, and I think he deserves a chance to run back in the Kentucky Derby," said jockey Bill Shoemaker, headed for his 23rd Derby. "And, if they want me, I'll ride him back."

There is the story of Eddie Delahoussaye, scheduled to ride Gate Dancer in a bid to become the first jockey to win three consecutive Derbys. He won in 1982 with Gato del Sol and last year with Sunny's Halo.

The only other jockeys to win consecutive Derbys were Isaac Murphy, in 1890-91; Jimmy Winkfield in 1901-02, and Ron Turcotte, with Riva Ridge and Secretariat in 1972-73. Of the three, only Winkfield got a shot at winning three straight, finishing second in 1903.

Gate Dancer is a story, too. The colt wears ear muffs because crowd noise seems to bother him.

Bobby Ussery also finished first in the Derby on consecutive years, with Proud Clarion in 1967 and Dancer's Image in 1968.

Mahaffey Takes 3-Shot Lead In Houston Open

THE WOODLANDS, Texas (AP) — John Mahaffey, playing aggressively on his home course, shot his third consecutive 3-under-par 68 Saturday to take a 2-shot lead after three rounds of the $500,000 Houston Open golf tournament at The Woodlands Country Club West Course.

Mahaffey, who earlier won the Bob Hope Desert Classic, ran in a birdie on the first hole of the day and then had 11 straight pars to finish with a 204 total, nine under par for the tournament.

"I've got one speed on my swing and that is fast," Mahaffey said. "It's the only way I can play now. I can't slow it down like I used to. If I start backing off, I don't think I can win the tournament."

Mahaffey held a 2-shot lead over five golfers in at 206, including Corey Pavin, Doug Tewell, Buddy Gardner, Mark O'Meara and 36-hole leader Bobby Wadkins.

Calvin Peete was another stroke back at 207 after a third round of 1-under-par 70.

Mahaffey, inspired by the hometown gallery, finished birdie-bogey-birdie on the final three holes and accepted the cheers of the crowd.

"Now I know what Arnie felt like all those years," said Mahaffey, a former University of Houston star. "You have to kind of stay on an even keel in golf but it's kind of hard with all the people behind you like that.

"But I can handle that the rest of my life if they want to cheer for me."

But he was soon joined by Gardner, who overcame a double bogey and a slow-play warning on No. 12 for a 2-under-par 69.

Pavin started the day with a 4-under-par 138 total for 36 holes but birdied the first two holes of the round and ran in another birdie on the par 3 No. 5 hole for a 7-under-par pace.

Pavin's second straight 68 gave him a 7-under-par 206 going into Sunday's final round. Pavin has won $82,244 this season and finished second in the Phoenix Open.

Pavin said a bogey on No. 10 was actually the key to his round.

"Even though it was a bogey I felt pretty good about it," Pavin said. "The putt felt good when I hit it."

Pavin got up and down to save par on No. 15 and ran in an eight-foot birdie putt on No. 16 to cap his round.

Former University of Houston golfer Bruce Lietzke fired a third-round 69 go go five under par for the tournament with a 208 total. Lietzke had birdie putts on Nos. 3 and 16 and bogeyed No. 12.

Nick Price also finished the day with a 69 and a 208 total.The former UCLA collegian bogeyed the par 4 No. 10 hole but was back on a 7-under-par pace with a birdie on No. 16.

Wadkins, who started the day with a 2-stroke lead, dipped to six under par and finished at 7-under with a third-round 73 for a 206.

Waugh Captures Two Victories

NEW BERN — William Waugh took first place in two events and the Rose High School girls finished second overall in their division, setting two new school records in the Colonial Classic Track Championships held in New Bern Saturday.

Waugh won the shot put and the discus. His winning toss in the shot was 56 feet, 6½ inches, while he hurled the discus 145 feet, ½-inch.

Roswell Streeter also was a first place winner for Rose, taking the high jump with a leap of six feet, eight inches.

Rose's girls team took one first, as Doris Richardson captured the triple jump with a school record lead of 36 feet, ½-inch. Richardson also place fifth in the long jump, going 15 feet, 10½ inches. Sonya Williams was third in that event at 16-1½.

The other school record came in the 1,600-meter relay, with Rose finishing second in 4:12.5. Jennifer Byrd, Dawn Lambing, Lisa Pagel and Jody Ross ran the event for the Rampettes.

Lisa Pories tied the school record in the high jump with a leap of 5 feet, while Cindy Humphrey finished sixth at 4-8.

The 400-meter relay team of Pagel, Virginia Best, Byrd and Williams finished third in 51.2 seconds, while the 800-meter relay team of Williams, Paula Parks, Byrd and Inena Daniels was third in 1:50.5.

Rose's girls meet New Bern in a dual meet Wednesday, while the boys' return to action Saturday in the Big East Conference meet at Kinston.

Pirates Take Relay Event

PHILADELPHIA — East Carolina University's 400-meter relay team captured first place in the IC4A race held at the Penn Relays Saturday, while Craig White took fifth place in the college men's 110-meter hurdles.

The relay unit of Chris Brooks, Erskine Evans, Joe Dingle and Henry Williams sped through the 400-meter race in a time of 40.75 seconds, just nipping Princeton, which finished secind in 40.91.

White, who has already posted a time good enough to qualify for the Olympic trials later this year, took fifth place in the hurdle event with a time of 14.05. Jack Pierce of Morgan State finished first in 13.5. White was 14-hundreths of a second off fourth place, taken by John Timpson of Texas Southern.

Newman Named As Top Female

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

During her initial collegiate campaign, Cindy set, or shared in, two varsity and five freshman records for the Pirates, and was named the Most Outstanding Female Swimmer on the ECU team this year.

Those accomplishments have led to her becoming the first swimmer named as the Daily Reflector's Female Collegiate Athlete of the Year.

She is also the first freshman to ever win the award, regardless of the category.

She joins Terry Long, named last week as the Male Collegiate Athlete of the Year, as a 1983-84 honoree. The Prep Male and Female Athletes of the Year will be named in late May.

Not only is Newman the first swimmer to win the award, she is also the first non-basketballer among the women. Previous winners include Sam Jones, now a member of the USA's Olympic team handball squad; and Mary Denkler, who saw some action in the European League's before returning here to enter graduate school.

As a high school swimmer, Newman earned four letters, four most valuable awards, and served two years as her team's captain. She also set three state records in the North Carolina Meet for Statesville High School.

Her decision to come to East Carolina was based on a couple of things. First, her brother Perry had been a four-year swimmer for the Pirates, so she was familiar not only with the school, but the program.

And second, she felt that her best hopes were with a Division II NCAA program, and that's what the Lady Pirates swim in.

Earlier in the season, she was quoted as saying that the work on the college level is tougher than in AAU training. "I come from a small club and there wasn't a lot of competition," she said. "Here we do a lot more work. There's more pushing from the other girls, but that's good. I need that."

Cindy's specialty is the 100-yard butterfly, and she swam it well enough to break both the existing ECU freshman and varsity records, swimming home with a time of 60.16 seconds.

Cindy Newman

Then, joining Caycee Poust, Jessica Feinberg and Jean Keating, Newman helped post a new varsity record in the 400-yard medley relay, with a time of 4:07.89.

Keating, Vickie Gorrie and Poust joined with Newman in the 200-yard freestyle relay for a new freshman mark of 1:42.61, while Keating, Scotia Miller, Poust and Newman set a new 400-yard freestyle relay record of 3:43.70.

The team of Newman, Keating, Lori Livingston and Annette Burton set a new frosh mark in the 400 medley relay of 4:15.90, while Miller, Poust, Gorrie and Newman swam the 800-yard freestyle relay in the freshman record of 8:08.10.

Her times in the 100 fly, and the 800 free and 400 medley relays were good enough to qualify her and her teammates for the NCAA nationals, but she was unable to place there.

At least not this year.

Coach Rick Kobe feels that Newman's potential is still not totally tapped. "She was a little nervous as a freshman, and next year I look for her to do much better. She should get down around 58 seconds in the fly. She got a lot of background this year and did her best times.

"Next year should be her big year," Kobe continued. "I can see her placing in the nationals. She was only a second off this year, and she has the talent to make that up and then some."

Newman, in addition to winnning the Most Outstanding Swimmer award on the Lady Pirate team, was also the leading point winner for the women. "She's our most versitile swimmer," Kobe said. "She can swim not only the fly, but any of the freestyle events from the 50 to the 1,000. We look for big things from her in the future."

Tigers Play Like Cornered Cats

DETROIT (AP) — Chet Lemon says that being on top of the American League East is making the Detroit Tigers play like cornered cats.

"We've been digging down and going as hard as we can every inning," Lemon said after homering in Saturday's 6-2 victory over the Cleveland Indians. "It's just like a cat: You back him into a corner, he'll come out fighting. When you're on top like we are, you know people are going to be coming after you."

Lemon and Lou Whitaker homered to back the three-hit pitching of unbeaten Jack Morris as the Tigers stopped the Indians' winning streak at five games. Detroit, meanwhile, registered its 17th triumph in 19 games this season.

Morris, who struck out five and walked three, is 5-0, the best start in his career. He was 4-1 in April of 1982. Last year, when Morris became the Tigers' first 20-game winner in 10 years, he didn't win his fourth game until June 3.

"I think the key is that the guys are hitting for me right now," said Morris, who stayed home while the rest of the Tigers made a two-day trip to Texas earlier in the week. "We're just on a roll. There's no other way to explain a streak like this."

The Tigers, who saw their chance to tie Oakland's 1981 major-league record of a 17-1 getaway dashed in a 19-inning defeat Friday night, jumped on Cleveland's Rick Behenna, 0-1, for a run in the first inning and led all the way.

"This team is young and they want to do things," Cleveland Manager Pat Corrales moaned. "At times they want to do too much. There's a difference between aggressive and dumb. Today we were dumb."

Whitaker singled in the first inning and was forced by Alan Trammell, who stole second and scored on a single by Darrell Evans. Barbaro Garbey and Lemon singled in the Detroit second, Dwight Lowry sacrificed and both runners scored on Trammell's double for a 3-0 lead.

The Indians narrowed it to 3-2 without benefit of a hit in the fourth. Tony Bernazard and Julio Franco walked to start the rally and moved up on a double steal. Bernazard scored on a grounder by Mike Hargrove and Franco came home when Morris uncorked a wild pitch while facing Brook Jacoby.

"I didn't have my best stuff today, but I pitched a good game, I thought," Morris said. "Of course, you can be a crafty pitcher with a four-run lead."

The Tigers put it away in their half of the fourth. Lemon hit his fourth home run, a solo shot, into the upper deck in right-center, Lowry singled and Whitaker hit his third homer into the upper deck in right.

"I was a little surprised," Lemon said. "You don't usually see me hit one that far."

The Indians protested that Lowry missed second while rounding the bag, but umpire Ken Kaiser said shortstop Franco failed to indicate which runner he thought failed to touch the base.

Afterward, Kaiser refused to say if either runner missed the base.

"That would be like indicting somebody after the jury has already found him innocent," Kaiser said.

Boston.....8
Chicago.....7

CHICAGO (AP) — Tom Seaver suggested it may have been Murphy's Law that helped destroy a 6-0 Chicago lead and pave the way for Boston's 8-7 victory Saturday — and Red Sox Manager Ralph Houk couldn't disagree.

"We went through a stretch like that, losing seven in a row, when nothing seemed to fall our way," Houk said. "But today we got the bloopers to fall and we got some big hits when we needed them."

Tony Armas hit a titanic home run well beyond Comiskey Park's center-field bullpen in a seventh-inning rally that cut Chicago's lead to 6-3 and Jim Rice belted a wind-blown homer into the bullpen in the eighth off Britt Burns as the Red Sox added three more to tie it.

"There's no tougher loss than the loss we had today, and I feel as bad as anybody on this team that we couldn't hold a 6-0 lead," said Seaver, who is still seeking his first American League victory. "You go through periods where it's almost like Murphy's Law (when everything that can go wrong does) around here. These are not very happy times. We're not having much fun around here."

Indeed, the White Sox, who won 99 games last year, more than any team in baseball, have won fewer than any team so far this season. The loss was their fifth straight, eighth in their last nine and they are 6-13 this season.

Pinch hitter Eddie Jurak, a .125 hitter, provided the fatal blow Saturday, belting a two-out, ninth-inning triple that tied the game 7-7.

On any other day, according to reliever Ron Reed, who pitched to Jurak, the ball should have been caught. However, a 15-mile-an-hour wind blew it over the head of right fielder Harold Baines. Jurak then scored the winning run when shortstop Scott Fletcher muffed Jerry Remy's grounder.

"The pitches were made," said Reed, 0-3. "The balls just weren't caught."

The White Sox had taken a 7-6 lead in their half of the eighth. Pinch hitter Jerry Hairston walked, pinch runner Jerry Dybzinski stole second, moved to third on a fly ball and scored an unearned run on a passed ball by Rich Gedman.

Chicago opened the scoring in the fifth off Boston starter Bobby Ojeda. Fletcher singled with one out, took second on a groundout and scored on a single by Rudy Law, who came home on Carlton Fisk's double.

The White Sox made it 6-0 in the sixth when Vance Law doubled between a pair of walks and Julio Cruz unloaded the bases with his first career grand-slam and his first home run of the season.

Seaver allowed a hit in each of the first two innings, then retired 14 straight batters before Wade Boggs opened the seventh with a double. He scored on a single by Rice, who came home Armas' 460-foot shot, only the sixth ever to land in Comiskey Park's center-field bleachers.

"I've hit some long ones to left, but that's the first one I've ever hit that far to center field," Armas said. "All the conditions were right for hitting one that far."

The Red Sox made it 6-6 in the eighth when pinch hitter Rick Miller led off with an infield hit. Burns came on and allowed a base hit to Remy, then walked Dwight Evans to load the bases.Miller scored when Boggs grounded into a double play and Rice followed with his first home run of the season.

Mark Clear, 2-0, allowed an unearned run in the eighth but picked up the win with 2 1-3 innings of hitless relief. Bob Stanley pitched the ninth for his third save.

ANAHEIM, Calif. (AP) — California left-hander Geoff Zahn is beginning to buy the notion that all he has to do to win during the month of April is walk onto the field.

Zahn went the route on a six-hitter Saturday for a 10-1 victory over the Seattle Mariners even though he felt he was in for a short day.

"I had no idea what I was doing until the fifth inning. I didn't have any rhythm and they had me on the ropes," he said.

But Zahn somehow always manages to come out on top during April. While improving his 1984 record to 3-1, he also upped his career mark for the month to 24-5. He has won a total of only 99 games in his 12-year major-league career.

"I can't explain my success, especially this time," said Zahn, who began the season on the disabled list with a thigh injury. "I felt like I was still in spring training. Considering how I went into this April, I feel pretty good."

Five of Seattle's hits didn't leave the infield, as Zahn walked three and struck out two.

Zahn benefited from a California attack that profited from five Seattle errors to score seven unearned runs, including four on Gary Pettis' seventh-inning grand slam.

The Mariners took a 1-0 lead in the top of the first with an unearned run of their own as California third baseman Ron Jackson bobbled Jack Perconte's leadoff grounder. Perconte came around to score on a grounder, a fly ball and Dave Henderson's infield hit.

Loser Mark Langston, 1-2, walked Brian Downing and Bobby Grich to open the bottom of the second. Bob Boone bunted for a hit and Downing and Grich both scored when third baseman Darnell Coles heaved the ball down the right-field line. Boone scored on Rob Picciolo's infield hit to make it 3-1.

Boone's sacrifice fly in the third scored Jackson, who had reached base on Coles' second error. Pettis' triple and Juan Beniquez's RBI single in the fourth gave the Angels a 5-1 lead.

Langston left after again walking Downing and Grich with one out in the seventh. Dave Beard got Boone to hit into a forceout before walking Dick Schofield to load the bases. Perconte muffed Picciolo's grounder as Downing scored and Pettis followed with his first home run of the season into the right-field seats.

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — Dave Kingman, who got a taste of the American League seven years ago, is loving it the second time around.

"I played with Dave in Chicago with the Cubs. I can tell you he's having a lot of fun now," said Ray Burris, who hurled a four-hit shutout Saturday only to be upstaged somewhat by another Kingman home run.

Kingman belted his 10th homer in April, moving within one of the major-league record for the month, as the Oakland A's downed the Minnesota Twins 7-0.

"I'm not aware of that record and I'm not going to think about it," Kingman said. "I just know I've got a lot of confidence at the plate and I like the designated hitter role.

"I didn't know what to expect in this league. I've never seen most of these pitchers, so I've just gone to the plate looking at pitches, looking for the ball. It's a two-way street, of course. The pitchers don't know much about me."

The major-league record of 11 April homers is shared by Pittsburgh's Willie Stargell (1971), Graig Nettles of the New York Yankees (1974) and Philadelphia's Mike Schmidt (1976).

Kingman had brief stays with the New York Yankees and California Angels in 1977 when he hit six AL homers before returning to the National League.

His 10th homer of 1984 capped a five-run second inning. It was the 352nd of his career, moving him ahead of Dick Allen into sole possession of 33rd place on baseball's all-time list.

Burris, 2-0, won his first start of the season, striking out seven in the first complete game of the year by an A's pitcher.He will stay in the starting rotation, Manager Steve Boros said. The A's other starters, who had put $200 into a pot to be collected by the first man to go nine innings, were debating whether latecomer Burris was eligible.

"That's not the issue," Burris said, laughing off the possible windfall. "We've got a double-header Sunday (the A's final games of the month) and our bullpen was able to relax today."

Dwayne Murphy and Kingman both hit two-run homers in the second inning off Al Williams, 1-3. It was the second homer in two games for Murphy, who has three this season. Kingman, who did not homer until Oakland's eighth game, has hit all 10 in the last 15 contests.

Kingman leads the majors in homers and runs batted in with 26. He has played in 19 of Oakland's 21 games and 10 of his 18 hits are homers. He is batting .254.

McLaughlin Is Miller Winner

McLaughlin, driving a Cavalier, grabbed the lead on lap 131, during one of eight caution flags in the 250-lap race around Martinsville Speedway's .526-mile asphalt oval.

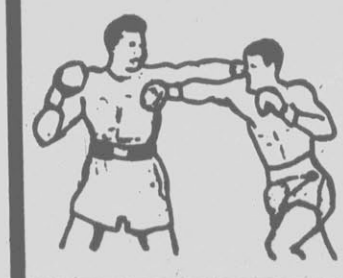

The Waterloo, N.Y., driver stayed out front the rest of the way, beating the second-place Sunbird of Hirschman across the finish line by one second.

Charlie Jarzombek, whose Cavalier took the lead on the first lap and led until he pitted for fuel and tires on lap 128, was third.

Brewer-Casper Hold Lead

AUSTIN (AP) — Gay Brewer rolled in a short birdie putt on the final hole Saturday to give Brewer and partner Billy Casper a 1-shot lead after the third round of the $500,000 Liberty Mutual Legends of Golf.

Brewer's putt put his team at 17-under-par 193 for the best-ball tournament on the senior PGA tour.

"It was about as long as a good rainbow trout," Casper said of Brewer's two-foot putt on No. 18.

Second-round leaders Miller Barber and Julius Boros managed only a par-5 on the closing 590-yard hole at the Onion Creek Country Club and finished the day at 194.

Barber had four birdies, including on No. 15 and No. 16 and barely missed another birdie putt on No. 17.

He and Boros started the round with a 1-stroke edge over Casper and Brewer but had to regroup after two bogies on the front nine.

The Legends tournament, the richest on the senior tour, will wind up Sunday with the winners sharing $100,000. That round also will be televised nationally on NBC.

A key hole that kept the tournament close was No. 15, where Casper and Brewer had their only bogey in 54 holes, and Barber knocked in a 35-foot putt for a birdie to make up two strokes.

Barber followed with a six-foot putt on No. 16, which Brewer matched.

Defending champions Robert DeVicenzo and Rod Funseth finished at 14-under 196, three strokes back. DeVicenzo, who shared first place in 1979 with Boros, had two putts rim out of the cup, and three other putts by the defending champions barely slid by the hole.

Bob Goalby and Doug Sanders and Sam Snead, a two-time winner of the Legends, and Jim Ferree were tied for fourth at 12-under-par 198.

Bob Rosburg and Christy O'Connor had the best round of 62 but are at 201, eight shots back of the leaders.

Arnold Palmer and partner Dow Finsterwald collected nine birdies for a 63 after making only three in the previous two rounds. They are far back at 208.

Blasts Into Lead

Funseth Keeps Mind On Golf

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Rod Funseth started Saturday's round in the Liberty Mutual Legends of Golf as if he had nothing on his mind but golf.

Funseth has inoperable lung cancer and knows it. But he tries not to dwell on it.

"The doctors told me to go ahead and play golf," he said before setting out with partner Roberto DeVicenzo in quest of the Legends $100,000 first prize.

"There's nothing they can do. An operation would only determine what type cancer it is," he said in patient response to questioners.

He said he believes the cancer was caused by his work with asbestos as a civilian employee of the U.S. Navy at Bremerton, Wash., in the 1950s.

Funseth said the cancer was on his mind Friday, "and that's why I played the front seven holes so badly."

After that, he had five birdies, and suddenly defending champions Funseth and DeVicenzo were 11-under par 129, two strokes back of the leaders, after two rounds.

Another senior pro golfer at the Legends, Bob Toski, said he was surprised Funseth was playing so well.

"It's hard to concentrate," Funseth said, "but I'm glad I'm playing golf. That way I don't have to think about it."

Asked how he felt Saturday, he said, "Only fair," but he quickly added, "It's the heat, and humidity."

On the first hole, he saved par for his team, but it wasn't until No. 3 that he had a chance to really enjoy himself.

At the edge of the green in two shots on the 377-yard hole, Funseth rolled in a 30-foot putt for a birdie.

Trio Ties For Orlando Lead

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — Betsy King, Alice Miller and Missie McGeorge tied for the second-round lead of the LPGA's Orlando Classic Saturday after Jan Stephenson triple-bogeyed the final hole.

King and Miller shot 5-under par 67s and McGeorge a 70 for identical two-round totals of 136, eight under par. The 54-hole, $150,000 event winds up Sunday.

The veteran Stephenson, who shared the first-round lead with tour rookie McGeorge with 66, had a 2-stroke edge over the others when she stepped to the 18th tee.

She promptly drove her ball into the water, hit a 9-iron short, chipped past the hole and then three-putted from three feet for her triple-bogey seven on the par-4, 355-yard finishing hole.

"I'm in a state of shock because I played so solidly the last two days," said Stephenson, who has 12 wins in 10 years but has been struggling for many months.

She wound up with a 71 for a 137 total going into the final round. She is tied with Cynthia Pleger, who had a 69.

King, who started the day three strokes back of Stephenson and McGeorge at 69, began Saturday's round with three straight birdies, then added two more for her 67.

Miller, who won at Sarasota earlier in the year, also started three shots back of the leaders and canned six birdies and a bogey for 67.

Tournament rookie McGeorge continued her steady work on the greens, canning four birdies from 8-20 feet. She also had two bogeys for her 70 on the par-72, 6,276-yard Cypress Creek Country Club course.

Miller said she expected the final round to be "basically a putting contest," with Stephenson right in the thick of it. "She's ready to start playing well again. She's hungry," said Miller of Stephenson.

The field of 131 pros was cut to 75, those having a two-round total of at least 146.

LaPoint Performs For A Few Friends

MONTREAL (AP) — Usually when Dave LaPoint pitches against Montreal Expos, a huge delegation from his hometown in Glens Falls, N.Y., makes the two-hour drive to Olympic Stadium.

"But there were only 15 or 20 today (Saturday) because my best friend was getting married and I guess they all went to his wedding," said LaPoint, the St. Louis Cardinals' left-hander. "They've got to get their priorities straight."

Those who went to the ballpark saw LaPoint, who enter the game with a 6.75 earned run average, scatter six hits over 7 2-3 innings as the Cardinals posted a 6-1 victory over the Montreal Expos. Bruce Suter finished up for his sixth save.

"I was like a golfer playing out of the trap for a while," said LaPoint, who was staked to a 3-0 lead in the first inning and promptly walked the leadoff batter in Montreal's half of the inning. He came around to score.

"Every game I've been in this year it seems the walks have come around to score," LaPoint said. "There was only one today. I was lucky in that regard."

Darrell Porter's two-run homer was the key blow in the Cardinals' first. It came against Bryn Smith, unbeaten in four previous decisions.

"He wasn't as sharp as he usually is, for some reason," Porter said of Smith. "I haven't seen too many fastballs down the middle from him, but that's what I got the first time up."

Lonnie Smith opened the game for St. Louis with a triple and, after Andy Van Slyke walked, David Green hit a sacrifice fly. Smith, who was bidding to become the major leagues' first five-game winner, yielded Porter's fourth home run on the next pitch, a towering fly ball beyond the right-field fence.

Montreal cut the margin to 3-1 in its half of the first as Gary Carter's two-out single scored Pete Rose, who walked and took second on a wild pitch by LaPoint.

The Cardinals increased their lead with a third-inning run on George Hendrick's RBI single and a two-out single by Ken Oberkfell in the fifth which scored Van Slyke, who led off with a double. They added a run in the ninth off Bob James on Willie McGee's triple and a double by Van Slyke.

It was the Cardinals' third consecutive victory after a seven-game losing streak and Montreal's third straight setback after a four-game winning streak.

The Atlanta center fielder, who entered the game batting .186 after winning National League Most Valuable Player honors the last two years, smashed two home runs, drove in four runs and singled and stole a base as the Braves beat the Houston Astros 5-3.

"I felt I swung at better pitches. I've been known to swing at bad ones," said Murphy. "I maybe was a little more disciplined on the later pitches."

Murphy hit both homers off Bob Knepper, 2-3. His fifth-inning clout was a high line drive that cleared the orange home run line by at least 20 feet.

"It was an off-speed pitch. It gave me a lot to look at," Murphy said.

Knepper agreed.

"If you make a bad pitch to him, you know you'll get beat," he said.

Atlanta starter Rick Camp, 2-0 did not allow a hit until Kevin Bass led off the Houston sixth with a single. Gene Garber pitched the final 2 2-3 innings to earn his first save of the season and send the Astros to their fifth consecutive setback.

Murphy followed a third-inning single by Claudell Washington with his third homer of the year. He connected again in the fifth following a walk to Washington and a forceout as the Braves won their third game in a row for the first time this season.

The Astros, held hitless through five innings for the third consecutive game, scored their first two runs in the seventh. Jerry Mumphrey and Denny Walling opened the inning with singles. Mumphrey took third on Ray Knight's fly ball and scored on Harry Spilman's single. Houston's second run scored when Craig Reynolds greeted Garber with a sacrifice fly.

Atlanta scored its last run in the eighth off Vern Ruhle when Murphy singled, stole second and came home on a single by Terry Harper. The Astros got a run in the bottom of the eighth on a single by Bass, Garber's balk and a pair of groundouts, with Jose Cruz getting the RBI.

NEW YORK (AP) — Of the 25 New York Mets, Ross Jones may have been the least likely candidate.

"I play the least of anybody on this club," Jones said. "I've only been used a couple of times as a defensive replacement."

On Saturday, Jones got his first major-league hit, a run-scoring double in the ninth inning off Philadelphia relief ace Al Holland that gave the Mets a 4-3 victory over the Phillies.

"I'm relieved I finally got the first hit," said Jones, who came into the game in the eighth inning to play shortstop. "It's something you want to get over with. You wonder if you're ever going to get that first major-league hit, and for it to be the game-winner, well, it couldn't be much better."

"We were behind in the eighth and I came up with a big clutch hit," Strawberry said. "Then another young player, Ross Jones, came up with another one. That's the way this team is. We have a lot of young players, but we've got a lot of talent."

Holland, 0-2, took over in the ninth and Hubie Brooks led off with a bloop single just over the head of second baseman Juan Samuel. Holland struck out pinch hitter Mike Fitz-gerald before Jones' game-winning hit. Brooks scored easily as shortstop Ivan DeJesus bobbled the relay.

The Mets are 5-0 in one-run games this season and both of Holland's losses have come against New York. Winner Ed Lynch, 2-0, pitched the final two innings in relief of starter Ron Darling.

Hudson survived some early wildness and had allowed only two hits since the second inning inning until Strawberry's home run.

The Phillies took a 1-0 lead in the second inning when Von Hayes walked, stole second and scored from there on DeJesus' infield hit to short. Jose Oquendo's throw just missed getting DeJesus at first and Hayes, running all the way, beat first baseman Keith Hernandez's throw to the plate.

The Mets tied it in the second when Strawberry walked, stole second, continued to third when catcher Ozzie Virgil's throw sailed into center field and scored on a single by Mookie Wilson.

Philadelphia went ahead 3-1 in the third. Samuel singled, stole second for the second time in the game, and, two outs later, scored on a single by Joe Lefebvre. Glenn Wilson then hit a blooper down the right-field line for a triple and Lefebvre scored.

The Mets scored a run in the third without a hit. Hudson walked Wally Backman and Oquendo and Backman went to third on a fly ball by Hernandez. George Foster then hit a pop-fly behind first base and Backman scored Samuel collided with first baseman Len Matuszek, who made the catch, and knocked him down. Samuel was given an error.

Cincinnati.....7
San Francisco.....6

CINCINNATI (AP) — Dave Concepcion's two-out double off the center-field wall scored Tom Foley in the 13th inning Saturday, giving the Cincinnati Reds a 7-6 victory over the San Francisco Giants.

Gary Redus opened the 13th with a single off Randy Lerch, 1-1, the sixth San Francisco pitcher, and stole his fourth base of the game. However, he was trapped off second on Dave Parker's grounder and Foley forced Parker before Concepcion delivered his game-winning hit that ended the 4-hour, 28-minute contest and sent the Giants to their fifth consecutive setback.

The Reds tied the game 5-5 on pinch hitter Cesar Cedeno's two-run homer off Gary Lavelle. The Giants went ahead 6-5 in the 10th when Cincinnati's Brad Lesley walked John Rabb, Gene Richards intentionally after a sacrifice, Manny Trillo and Joel Youngblood. But the Reds tied it again in the bottom of the inning on pinch hitter Brad Gulden's two-out single that scored Foley, who had entered the game as a pinch runner after Tony Perez singled.

Solo home runs by Jack Clark, Dusty Baker and Chili Davis helped the Giants take a 5-3 lead into the ninth. All three San Francisco homers came off Cincinnati starter Frank Pastore. Clark belted his third home run of the season with two out in the third and Baker and Davis hit consecutive homers, the first for each, with none out in the fourth.

The Giants made it 4-0 in the fifth. Youngblood singled, moved to third on a groundout and Dann Bilardello's passed ball and scored on Al Oliver's single.

Suspense Missing In NFL Draft

NEW YORK (AP) — The National Football League holds its annual draft Tuesday, with a lot of the suspense and about four dozen of the top prospects already gone.

There is no question who will be the first pick — wide reciever Irving Fryar of Nebraska has already been signed by the New England Patriots. They acquired the top choice from the Cincinnati Bengals after the Bengals were unwilling to match the U.S. Football League's bid for Brigham Young quarterback Steve Young, who signed with the Los Angeles Express for $40 million over 43 years.

And the Houston Oilers announced this week that they will take Fryar's teammate, guard Dean Steinkuhler with the second choice, making it the first time since 1967, when Bubba Smith and Clinton Jones of Michigan State were chosen by Baltimore and Minnesota, that two players from the same school have been 1-2 in the draft.

Fryar, considered a game-breaker in the James Lofton-John Jefferson mold, might have been the first pick overall in any event. But so might have Young, or Heisman Trophy winner Mike Rozier, who signed with the Pittsburgh Maulers, or mammoth defensive tackle Reggie White, now of the Memphis Showboats.

In fact, according to the assessment of NFL scouting combines, independent sources and professional "draftniks," the USFL has picked off about a third of the potential first-round choices; a quarter of the college players expected to make it in the NFL, and about 90 who might have been among the 336 players drafted in Tuesday's 12 rounds.

That means that when representatives of the 28 teams convene at the Omni Park Hotel at 8 a.m. EST, each choice will be even more important than it has been in the past.

"There are 130 guys with 'make it' grades left in the draft right now. Without the USFL there would have been 175," New York Giants Coach Bill Parcells said. "But there are enough good players out there to have a really good draft if you pick them right. You just have to pick right because the margin for error is greater."

Steinkuhler, a 267-pounder with speed and strength, was considered the second best player in the draft and had been coveted by the lineman-poor Giants, who pick third.

That leaves New York with the choice of trading down and taking a lineman with a later pick or making a choice — the most likely would be linebacker Carl Banks of Michigan State or Maryland's Boomer Esiason, the top-rated quarterback prospect.

Among the other players expected to go high are wide receiver Kenny Jackson of Penn State, who may be taken by the Philadelphia Eagles choosing fourth; linebacker Wilber Marshall of Florida; defensive linemen Rich Bryan of Oklahoma and Bill Maas of Pitt, and defensive backs Mossy Cade of Texas and Don Rogers of UCLA.

The Kansas City Chiefs have the fifth pick of the first round, followed by the San Diego Chargers, Cincinnati Bengals, the Colts, Atlanta Falcons, New York Jets, Chicago Bears, Green Bay Packers, Minnesota Vikings, Buffalo Bills, New Orleans Saints, Cincinnati (with a choice acquired from the Patriots for the top pick), St. Louis Cardinals, Cleveland Browns, the Colts (a pick acquired from Denver in the John Elway deal last year), Detroit Lions, Los Angeles Rams, Seattle Seahawks, Pittsburgh Steelers, San Francisco 49ers, Dallas Cowboys, Miami Dolphins, Washington Redskins and the Bengals again with a pick acquired from New England, which got it from the Los Angeles Raiders as compensation for the Raiders' signing of Mike Haynes.

This may be the last year the NFL draft is held so late.

Perez Suspension Lifted

HOUSTON (AP) — The one-month suspension of Pascual Perez following drug charges was lifted by an arbitrator who ordered the Atlanta Braves pitcher reinstated to the team's active roster, the Braves said Saturday.

Commissioner Bowie Kuhn called the decision by arbitrator Richard I. Bloch "inexplicable, indefensible and highly destructive of baseball's efforts to deal with its serious drug problem.

"I will decide shortly what further action is appropriate in this case," Kuhn said in a statement from New York.

Perez, convicted recently in the Dominican Republic of cocaine possession, was suspended without pay until May 16 by Kuhn, retroactive to April 3. He also was placed on probation through May 15, 1985.

The Major League Players Association immediately filed a grievance protesting the suspension, saying there was "no just cause" for the disciplinary action.

The matter went before an arbitrator following preliminary hearings with baseball's Player Relations Committee.

"We obviously are happy to get Pascual back earlier than expected," John Mullen, Atlanta's general manager, said in a statement issued here where the Braves played the Astros Saturday. "But we have no further comment at this time and will not until we see the arbitrator's written decision."

A written decision will not be available until next week.

Al Thornwell, the Braves' executive vice president, said in Atlanta that the team was notified of the decision by Kuhn's office Saturday morning.

"Before we reinstate him, we'll have to make a roster move. We're at (the limit of) 25 players right now," Thornwell said. "It'll probably be the early part of next week before we reinstate him and move someone else off the roster."

Thornwell said Perez, who worked out in prison in the Dominican Republic and has worked out on his own, is in shape to pitch, and added that he likely would step straight into the team's five-man pitching rotation.

"Heaven knows we need help," said Thornwell, referring to Atlanta's 8-11 record.

"I'm ready," said Perez, who was with the team in Houston. He was allowed to work out with the team under the terms of the suspension. "I just want to get going. I feel very, very happy to be here."

Manager Joe Torre said he was "more surprised by today's decision than happy. I'm glad it's over with. It was a grueling 4½ months for him."

Catcher Bruce Benedict said: "The club is pleased to have him back. He's eager and we're ready."

Perez was arrested in Santiago on Jan. 9, convicted of cocaine possession in a Santiago court March 23 and fined approximately $1,000. An appellate court upheld the conviction on April 5.

Bloch, who handles grievances as part of baseball's collective bargaining agreement with the union, ruled April 3 that players Willie Wilson and Jerry Martin — who were each given one-year suspensions by Kuhn last December — should be reinstated on May 16.

Wilson, Martin, Willie Aikens and pitcher Vida Blue, all members of the 1983 Kansas City Royals, were convicted on drug charges. Wilson still plays for the Royals, Martin is with the New York Mets, Aikens is with the Toronto Blue Jays and Blue was released during the season and is currently out of baseball.

Kuhn later announced that Aikens, who also was suspended for one year, could return to action May 16 under terms similar to those imposed by Bloch in the cases of Wilson and Martin.

Prepared Andujar Cracks Homer

By JOHN NELSON
AP Sports Writer

Joaquin Andujar, the unpredictable St. Louis Cardinals pitcher, stepped to the plate for a fifth-inning at-bat against Montreal wearing a little extra protection.

He was expecting a pitch at his head, and he got it from Steve Rogers, the Expos' right-hander who was retaliating for a pitch two innings earlier that Andujar had tucked under Bryan Little's chin.

"I wore an ear flap when I went to bat because I knew they might try to throw at me," Andujar said, "and I didn't want to get hit in the ear."

Rogers' first pitch to Andujar was high and inside, and Andujar had to duck away. He hit the next pitch from Rogers deep into the left-field seats for his first home run in nearly four years.

The homer broke a 2-2 tie and sent the Cardinals to an 8-2 victory over the Expos Friday. In the rest of the National League, Los Angeles beat San Diego 1-0 in a game shortened to seven innings by rain, Atlanta shut out Houston 6-0, Philadelphia beat New York 8-3, Cincinnati clobbered San Francisco 9-3 and Pittsburgh edged Chicago 3-2.

Rogers wouldn't say if he had thrown at Andujar purposely, but Andujar said his pitch to Little in the third was an accident.

"I was trying to pitch him inside," said Andujar, who has been known to do such eccentric things as shower with his clothes on and sleep with his stereo playing full blast.

Home plate umpire Bruce Froemming warned both benches after Rogers' pitch. The next pitch was thrown in a different location, and Rogers said that was an accident.

"He was pumped up and I threw a ball into his wheelhouse," Rogers said.

Andujar scattered 10 hits in going the distance, striking out two and walking two. Rogers left trailing 5-2 after Ken Oberkfell hit a two-run double in the sixth inning.

"It was nice to see him (Andujar) hit one," Oberkfell said, adding that the only problem was, "... now we'll have to listen to him for the next six months."

Andujar, who normally takes a healthy swing but seldom connects, hadn't homered since Aug. 10, 1980. It was the fourth homer of his career, three coming against Montreal. Lonnie Smith got St. Louis off to a 1-0 start by leading off the game with a homer, his second.

Dodgers 1, Padres 0

Rick Honeycutt limited San Diego to just one hit in six innings, and Steve Yeager homered to enable the Dodgers to move into first place in the NL West over the Padres. Los Angeles has won six straight to drop San Diego out of first place for the first time this season.

After waiting 1 hour, 49 minutes in rain, the game was called.

The only hit off Honeycutt, 4-0, was Luis Salazar's bunt single in the fourth. Honeycutt faced just 19 batters, one over the minimum, and no Padre hit the ball out of the infield.

Braves 6, Astros 0

Pete Falcone lost his no-hit bid with two out in the seventh inning, finishing with a three-hitter to shut out the Astros. Falcone also had two doubles, scored a run and drove in two runs as he won for the first time in four decisions.

Falcone, who walked four and struck out four, did not give up a hit until Phil Garner's infield single to third. Falcone retired 18 of the first 20 batters, including 11 straight in one stretch.

Home Run Clout

Atlanta Braves' Chris Chambliss (10) is congratulated by teammates and manager Joe Toree, in jacket, after belting a solo home run in the first inning Friday night in the Astrodome. Houston pitcher Joe Niekro served up the pitch and Braves' Claudell Washington also had a first inning homer. (AP Laserphoto) cisco its fourth straight loss. Concepcion's three-run shot highlighted a five-run eighth inning that made the game a rout.

Pirates 3, Cubs 2

Tony Pena homered, and the Pirates scored a tie-breaking run in the fourth inning after a two-base throwing error by Cubs catcher Jody Davis. Pena's homer, which came earlier in the inning, tied the score 1-1. Lee Lacy then singled and stole second, scoring when Davis' low throw scooted all the way past charging center fielder Bob Dernier.

Bill Madlock singled in an eighth-inning run that proved to be the game-winner when Kent Tekulve gave up a run in the ninth on consecutive singles by Ron Cey and Mel Hall and Davis' RBI-grounder.

Akeem Leads Parade To NBA

By The Associated Press

When Akeem Olajuwon announced on April Fool's Day that he would return to the University of Houston for his senior year, a Cougar official told the press: "He's a lot smarter than you guys give him credit for. Remember what day it is."

As it turns out, he WAS only fooling.

Houston's 7-foot All-America center was one of two players who announced Friday that they were skipping their senior year in college and making themselves available for the June 19 National Basketball Association draft.

Charles Barkley of Auburn, a standout in the recent Olympic Basketball Trials, also announced that he would turn pro and there were reports of several others on the verge.

Wisconsin star Cory Blackwell is reportedly still planning to skip his senior year to play in the NBA. Blackwell, an All-Big Ten forward for the Badgers, was unavailable for comment, but a source close to the player said he felt he had little to gain by returning to Wisconsin next season.

Alfrederick Hughes, a 6-4½ guard who was the nation's fourth highest scorer with a 27.8 average, also might pass up his senior year and enter the draft, according to his coach, Gene Sullivan of Loyola of Chicago.

"My feeling is if he gets guaranteed money, I'd advise him to go," said Sullivan.

North Carolina's Michael Jordan, an All-America and Player of the Year in college basketball this past season, is awaiting Coach Dean Smith's advice on whether to turn pro.

Olajuwon's decision was a mild surprise, since the Nigerian has said all along that he would like to return to help the Cougars win a national championship. Coach Guy V. Lewis' team has been in the Final Four three straight years, but each time has come up empty-handed.

Olajuwon is expected to be the No. 1 choice overall in the draft. He averaged 16.1 points, 14.3 rebounds and blocked 207 shots this past season, the second two figures the best in the nation. He also had 85 dunks and was a major factor in the Cougars being dubbed the "Phi Slama Jama fraternity" for their dunking ability.

The Portland Trail Blazers and the Houston Rockets will flip a coin May 10 for the right to the top pick.

"I've decided to enter this year's draft and forgo my final year in school," Olajuwon said at a news conference in Houston. "I want to end speculation on my future so I can concentrate on my studies."

Barkley, a 6-foot-6, 275-pounder who is one of 20 finalists for the 12-member Olympic team, said in Auburn, Ala., that he expects to go high in the draft.

"I feel like if I go in the top five, the opportunity will be there," Barkley said. "I feel like it will be for the best."

Barkley averaged 15.1 points and 9.4 rebounds for the Tigers this past season.

Players who sign with NBA teams will not lose their Olympic eligibility. Olajuwon is not a U.S. citizen and thus was ineligible for the team.

Under the new clarification of an amateur accepted by the International Olympic Committee, a player may sign a professional contract, have an agent and be insured by the professional club and still be eligible.

Olajuwon denied a report in Friday's New York Post that he had reached an agreement with the Trail Blazers that would pay him $1.2 million a year. Olajuwon said he reached the decision to turn pro Thursday night, but had discussed it with his parents in Nigeria a week ago and told them he would probably leave school.

"This is very hard to do," Olajuwon said. "I was thinking I was going to stay in school, but this is my decision. I'm going to have to live with it. It's best for me to enter the draft this year."

The NBA had no comment on the Post report, which also said the Trail Blazers had a contingency plan to sign Georgetown's Patrick Ewing, another 7-foot All-America, in case they lost the coin flip.

Ewing has said he would remain in college and get his degree, but Hoyas Coach John Thompson said earlier this month that the star center would keep his options open.

Undergraduates must declare themselves for the draft by May 5.

"No member of the Portland Trail Blazers has made an offer to or been in touch with Akeem Olajuwon or Patrick Ewing or their agents, if they have one. We won't know any more about our No. 1 draft pick until all undergraduates declare on May 5, and there is the coin flip on May 10."

Falls Road Tops GCA

ROCKY MOUNT — Falls Road used a double and an error to score four runs in the third inning and take a 12-2 baseball victory over Greenville Christian Academy Friday.

It was the final game of the year for the Knights, who close out the year with a 3-8 record.

The Knights took the initial lead in the game, scoring once in the top of the first. Falls Road came back with two in the bottom of the second, however, to move ahead.

Then, in the third, Falls Road put the game on ice. Henry Steed singled and Dan Griffin walked. Ken Morgan also walked, loading the bases. Charlie White doubled, and when the ball got by in right field, all four runners came around to score to up the lead to 6-1.

Falls Road added one in the fourth and five in the fifth. The other GCA run scored in the fifth.

Steed led the Falls Road hitting with three, while White had two. No one had more than one hit for the Knights.

Indian Bunt Ends Tiger Streak

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON
AP Sports Writer

The Detroit Tigers may go on to capture the American League bunting, but their latest winning streak came to an end thanks to the Cleveland Indians' bunting.

A game which began Friday night ended early Saturday some 5 hours and 44 minutes later with the Indians beating a curfew by pushing across four runs in the 19th inning to defeat the Tigers 8-4 and prevent them from equaling the record 17-1 getaway of the 1981 Oakland Athletics.

The fatal 19th began innocently enough with a single by George Vukovich. Otis Nixon and Brett Butler laid down consecutive sacrifice bunts and Glenn Abbott, the fourth Detroit pitcher, mishandled both of them, loading the bases.

"A major league ballplayer has to make those two plays," Abbott said. "We might still be out there otherwise. I just tried to do too much. There's no excuse for it."

Tony Bernazard followed with a sacrifice fly to deep right that Kirk Gibson dropped for the third straight error, allowing Vukovich to score and reloading the bases. Two outs later, Mike Hargrove doubled home three insurance runs to nail down the Indians' fifth consecutive triumph and leave them five games behind the 16-2 Tigers.

"It was a long day at the office, but it was worth it," said Cleveland Manager Pat Corrales. "We tried to play the way we've been playing. Our bunting certainly helped us (the Indians have hit only five home runs)."

In other AL games, the Oakland A's downed the Minnesota Twins 5-3, the California Angels trounced the Seattle Mariners 9-3, the Milwaukee Brewers shelled the New York Yankees 12-0, the Baltimore Orioles edged the Texas Rangers 4-3 in 11 innings, the Boston Red Sox beat the Chicago White Sox 5-3 and the Toronto Blue Jays nipped the Kansas City Royals 1-0.

Athletics 5, Twins 3

Dwayne Murphy broke open a close game with three-run homer in the fifth inning off Larry Pashnick, making his first start of the year. Winner Steve McCatty, who had not lasted more than six innings in any of his five previous starts this season, allowed nine hits, including Randy Bush's leadoff homer in the ninth, before Bill Caudill came on to register his fourth save. The victory lifted Oakland into first place in the AL West, six percentage points ahead of California.

Angels 9, Mariners 3

Fred Lynn's solo homer and Brian Downing's three-run shot in the first inning got the Angels started. With two out in the first, Lynn's third homer gave the Angels a 1-0 lead. Singles by Doug DeCinces and Reggie Jackson preceded Downing's fifth homer of the season. Rookie Ron Romanick held Seattle hitless until Alvin Davis hit his sixth home run with one out in the fourth. Romanick went 7 1-3 innings before giving way to Luis Sanchez.

Brewers 12, Yankees 0

Mike Caldwell fired a five-hitter and Charlie Moore drove in five runs to highlight a 16-hit Milwaukee attack. Caldwell owns a 10-3 record in Yankee Stadium and resumed his Yankee-killing ways after going 0-3 against New York last year with a 5.68 earned run average.

You're Out!

Moore capped a three-run second inning off Shane Rawley with a two-run single and tripled home two more runs off Bob Shirley in a three-run fifth. He also drove in a run with a grounder in the eighth. Jim Sundberg delivered a run-scoring double in the second inning and a two-run triple in a three-run third as the Brewers won for the first time in nine games at Yankee Stadium.

"Things are finally back to normal," said Caldwell, who threw only 109 pitches. "I'm keeping the ball down, getting ahead of the hitters, and getting the groundballs. I love this ballpark. In my only 20-win year (22-9 in 1978), I won my 20th game here on a shutout."

Orioles 4, Rangers 3

John Lowenstein rapped a run-scoring single in the 11th inning for the winning run. Cal Ripken Jr. singled to open the 11th and moved to second on a wild pitch by Dave Tobik, who also wild-pitched home the tying run in the 10th inning. After throwing two balls to Eddie Murray, Tobik issued an intentional walk to the Baltimore first baseman. Lowenstein then singled on a 2-2 pitch to score Ripken.

The Orioles trailed 2-1 when Jim Dwyer tied the score in the eighth with a pinch-hit homer. Gary Ward's RBI-single put the Rangers in front in the top of the 10th but Baltimore tied it in the bottom of the inning on Wayne Gross' single, an error by Texas shortstop Curtis Wilkerson on Floyd Rayford's grounder that allowed pinch-runner Todd Cruz to reach third and Tobik's first wild pitch.

Red Sox 5, White Sox 3

Rich Gedman hit two home runs and Mike Easler added another while Dennis Eckersley scattered 10 hits. The loss was the fourth straight for the White Sox, who have lost seven of their last eight games and are last in the AL West after winning the division a year ago.

LaMarr Hoyt suffered his second consecutive loss after a 15-game winning streak. Gedman broke a 1-1 tie with his second-inning homer and in the fourth, Easler and Gedman homered on successive pitches.

Blue Jays 1, Royals 0

Doyle Alexander and Dennis Lamp combined on a six-hitter and George Bell drove in the game's only run with a bases-loaded grounder in the first inning. Alexander edged hard-throwing rookie Mark Gubicza, who allowed seven hits in eight innings. In the Toronto first, Damaso Garcia singled, extending his hitting streak to 12 games, and Lloyd Moseby drew a one-out walk. Willie Upshaw was safe on an error by second baseman Frank White and, with the bases loaded, Bell grounded to White, who got a force on Upshaw as Garcia scored.

Sam Norris On Express

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Sam Norris, a linebacker who started nine games for the Arizona Wranglers last season, has signed with the Los Angeles Express, the United States Football League team announced Friday.

Norris, waived by the Chicago Blitz earlier this month, is a 6-foot-3, 221-pounder who attended East Carolina and San Francisco City College.

He had 127 tackles, six sacks, two interceptions and two fumble recoveries for the Wranglers last season.

He replaces David Howard, who is sidelined with an achilles injury, on the Express roster and will be available for duty in Los Angeles' game Monday night in Houston.

Knicks Ease By Pistons, 127-123

DETROIT (AP) — Folks in the Motor City don't often agree with New York Coach Hubie Brown on the subject of his Knicks and their Pistons. This time, though, there was no denying the obvious truth of his statements.

"From my standpoint, and I mean this with all sincerity, it's too bad that someone had to lose," Brown said Friday night after his Knicks had downed Detroit 127-123 in overtime. "They went out swinging and Isiah Thomas' effort in the fourth quarter was a staggering punch to us."

The victory enabled New York to win the National Basketball Association playoff series three games to two and sends the Knicks against the Celtics in an Eastern Conference semifinal series that begins Sunday in Boston.

"We are proud of our people," Brown said. "It's so easy to go in the tank, especially in front of 20,000 people."

The Los Angeles Lakers were to host the Dallas Mavericks today in the first game of their Western Conference semifinal series. In addition to the Knicks and Celtics, two other NBA playoff series will begin Sunday — Phoenix is at Utah in the Western Conference and New Jersey is at Milwaukee in the other Eastern Conference game.

Brown was proudest, of course, of Knicks' forward Bernard King who shook off the flu to score a game-high 44 points and set a National Basketball Association scoring record for a five-game series.

King's 213 points eclipsed the old record of 197 set by Elgin Baylor for Los Angeles against Detroit in 1961. King scored more than 40 points in each of the last four games. He had 36 in the opening game of the series.

"I don't even remember what happened, it was so intense, so exhausting," King said of Friday's effort. "But, we stood up and fought back. I wanted this very badly, thought of how many times I've been in this situation. I wanted to take it home."

The Knicks took a 114-111 lead with 26 seconds remaining in regulation on a short jumper by King. But Thomas, who had 21 points in the fourth quarter, canned a three-point jumper with 23 seconds left.

After a New York turnover and a Detroit time out, Thomas made a move to the basket with nine seconds to go, but Darrell Walker stripped him of the ball and time ran out before the Knicks Trent Tucker could get off a final shot.

"Isiah just took the game into his own hands," King said. "There were so many times I thought we were going home for a vacation. But, I'm looking forward to going to Boston, now."

Detroit took a 116-114 lead with 4:45 remaining in the five-minute extra period on a basket by Bill Laimbeer.

However, Tucker tied it 20 seconds later on a jumper from the corner.

King put the Knicks ahead to stay with 3:29 remaining with a stuff that made it 118-116. The Knicks then ran off the next five points before Thomas canned another 3-pointer.

Thomas, who scored five points in the overtime, finished with 35 points for the Pistons, who were making their first playoff appearance in seven years.

"This was one of those games where the last team standing wins it," Detroit Coach Chuck Daly said. "It was like a 15-round boxing match and they were the last team standing. Give credit to New York. They really made some big plays."

Bill Cartwright scored 29 points for the Knicks and Ray Williams added 17.

Kelly Tripucka had 23 points for the Pistons.

The game was played in the Joe Louis Arena because the Pistons' regular home court in the Pontiac Silverdome had been booked for a motocross race. A crowd of 21,208, largest in Joe Louis history, saw the action.

Akeem Era Ends At Houston

HOUSTON (AP) — The era of Akeem is over at the University of Houston.

Seven-foot Akeem Abdul Olajuwon, the Nigerian whose domination on the basketball court twice fell just one game short of a coveted NCAA title, said Friday he would become eligible for the National Basketball Association draft and skip his final year at Houston.

"This is very hard to do," Olajuwon said at a news conference. "I was thinking I was going to stay in school, but this is my decision. I'm going to have to live with it. It's best for me to enter the draft this year."

With Olajuwon at center, Houston made it to the Final Four the past three years, bowing out in the semifinals in 1982 and then failing in the finals in 1983 to North Carolina State and 1984 to Georgetown.

He said said he would like to have made a fourth trip to the Final Four but there was "no guarantee" that would happen. "That's the price I have to pay," he said.

The 1983 title game was his most memorable moment as a collegian, he said. It was a game that the highly favored and No. 1-rated Cougars lost when Lorenzo Charles, in the last second of play, slammed in a dunk over Olajuwon.

"I can't forget that moment," he said.

He denied a New York Post report Friday that he already had agreed with the Portland Trail Blazers to a seven-year contract worth $1.2 million a year.

"That's not true," he said. "I don't know where they got that from."

Portland and the Houston Rockets will participate in a coin flip May 10 to determine which team will get the top choice in the NBA draft. Olajuwon said each of those teams appealed to him and that influenced his decision to turn pro.

In Houston, Rockets General Manager Ray Patterson said he was "kind of surprised" with Olajuwon's decision, but said his presence would "improve the quality of the draft."

"He's an outstanding talent. He's certainly made a name for himself."

But Patterson refused to say if the club, which last year had the top pick overall and selected Ralph Sampson, would choose Olajuwon.

"We need to find out who else is coming out. The options will present themselves as we get closer to the draft."

In Portland, Trail Blazers General Manager Stu Inman also refused to tip his hand.

"He would be obviously one of the top two or three people in the draft," Inman said. The club has not indicated whom they might select.

"I have no real reaction to whether his decision was right or wrong," he said. "I don't know Akeem. But I'm sure he's had some reasonably good advice."

Houston Coach Guy V. Lewis, who was out of town Friday, was "behind me 100 percent in whatever I would do," Olajuwon said. School spokesman Jay Goldberg said, "I'm sure he (Lewis) wishes the best for him."

Olajuwon wound up his three-year career this season by leading the nation in rebounds (500), blocked shots (207) and field goal percentage (67.5). As a Cougar, he pulled down 1,067 rebounds, blocked 454 shots and shot 63.9 percent from the field. He finished with a 13.3 point per game scoring average, including 16.8 this past season.

Olajuwon said he made the decision to turn pro Thursday night, but discussed it a week ago in a telephone call to his parents in Nigeria. They told him they would back whatever decision he made, Olajuwon said.

Friday's announcement was a reversal of what the Lagos, Nigeria native said April 1 as the Cougars prepared to meet Georgetown in the NCAA finals in Seattle. He said then he would return to Houston for his senior year.

"I was thinking then I would stay in school," he said.

But the fact that neither Houston nor Portland is near the NBA's player salary limit, and the fact that he likely would wind up with either team, convinced him, he said.

He had until May 5 to make his intentions known, but said he announced it Friday to "end speculation on my future and concentrate on my studies and final exams."

GCA Girls Defeated

ROCKY MOUNT — Falls Road Academy scored big early and went on to take a 15-8 victory over Greenville Christian Acadmey in a girls' softball game Friday.

GCA grabbed the initial lead, scoring two in the top of the first, but Falls Road came back with four in their half of the inning, then added seven in the second for an 11-2 lead.

Falls Road picked up three more in the third and one in the fifth. GCA scored five times in the fourth and got one in the seventh on a solo homer by Jo Williams.

Amy Fuller led the Falls Road hitting with four, while Cindy Evans and Pam Dutton each had three, and Jane Bunn, Kim Nolen, Beth Wells and Kim Harrison each added two.

GCA was paced by Tammy Huggins and Kim Faulkner, each with three hits, while Williams and Page Brown each had two.

The loss gives the Lady Knights a 5-8 record and ends their 1984 season. The record is the best ever for the Lady Knights.

Fusina's Arm Flattens Breakers

By The Associated Press

"Fusina has played so well for us lately — I wouldn't trade him for any quarterback in the league," said Philadelphia Stars Coach Jim Mora after watching Fusina's sparkling performance in a 35-0 United States Football League romp over the Breakers Friday night.

Fusina passed for five touchdowns to tie a USFL single-game record and lead the Stars, 9-1, to their seventh straight victory.

"The Stars are a real fine football team," said New Orleans Coach Dick Coury. "They are the No. 1 defensive team in the league, and they sure showed it tonight. They jumped out so fast. The situation just got out of hand. We had no momentum, no continuity. I told the players to forget the game. There's nothing you can take that's good from this game."

In other USFL action Friday night, Memphis beat Pittsburgh 17-7 and Jacksonville whipped Oklahoma 34-6.

David Riley and Willie Collier were on the receiving end of two touchdown passes each from Fusina, and Steve Folsom scored the other TD.

The nearest New Orleans came to scoring was in the fourth quarter, when a 26-yard pass from quarterback Johnny Walton to Frank Lockett gave the Breakers a first-and-goal on the Stars' 2-yard line.But on the next two plays, the Stars' George Cooper nailed New Orleans running back Marcus Dupree at the 7 and sacked Walton at the 15. After a running play, Walton's fourth-down pass to Lockett with 7:05 left was wide.

"I have been embarrassed before as a coach, and I will be embarrassed again as a coach," said Coury. "I didn't think anyone in this league could shut us out. I was really shocked. I expected an even game, and we were never in it. You have to give credit to the guys in the other uniforms."

Showboats 17, Maulers 7

Rookie quarterback Walter Lewis threw for 264 yards and two touchdowns as Memphis defeated Pittsburgh.

The former Alabama star completed 24 of 32 passes and had no interceptions as the Showboats gained their third victory in 10 games. He completed 11 of his last 12 passes in a drive that ended with the final whistle with the ball on the Pittsburgh 14.

"Walter Lewis is getting better with every game and tonight he had a great night passing," said Memphis Coach Pepper Rodgers. "I thought he showed a lot of poise tonight."

Bulls 34, Outlaws 6

Jacksonville quarterback Robbie Mahfouz tossed two touchdown passes and engineered a series of clock-eating drives as the Bulls downed Oklahoma.

Jacksonville punted on its first possession but scored on its next five to put the game out of reach for Oklahoma, which played before its largest home crowd of the season at 29,324.

Oklahoma Coach Woody Widenhofer said his Outlaws were a "tired, beat-up football team" after a second straight loss.

"We were just another football team out there, just another expansion team," he said. "It was very obvious to me that we weren't ready to play tonight."

Meanwhile, in Sunday's action, the Michigan Panthers hope to rediscover in New Jersey whatever it was that sparked them to the USFL championship last season.

Three weeks ago, the Panthers were riding high, unbeaten. Now they're 6-3 and in a three-way scramble with Houston and Oklahoma for the leadership of the Central Division. Last Monday night, Michigan looked listless in a 20-7 loss to Tampa Bay.

"Anytime you have three losses in a row, it makes things that much harder," Coach Jim Stanley said. "But we came to New Jersey with four straight losses last year and went on to win the whole thing. I'm far from ready to throw in the sponge."

Also Sunday it's Birmingham at Denver and winless Oakland at Chicago. Tonight it's Washington at Tampa Bay and San Antonio at Arizona. And on Monday night it's Los Angeles at Houston.

The Panthers' lone touchdown against Tampa Bay came not on a sustained drive but on an 80-yard pass play from Bobby Hebert to wide receiver Walter Broughton. "We've been a big-play team," Stanley said, "and sometimes I think a big-play team forgets how to earn it."

"Most of the balllubs in the USFL have gotten substantially better in the last year," Michigan linebacker John Corker said, "so you can't say there is not room for the Michigan Panthers to improve a lot more themselves. We're just going to have to bear down and do that.

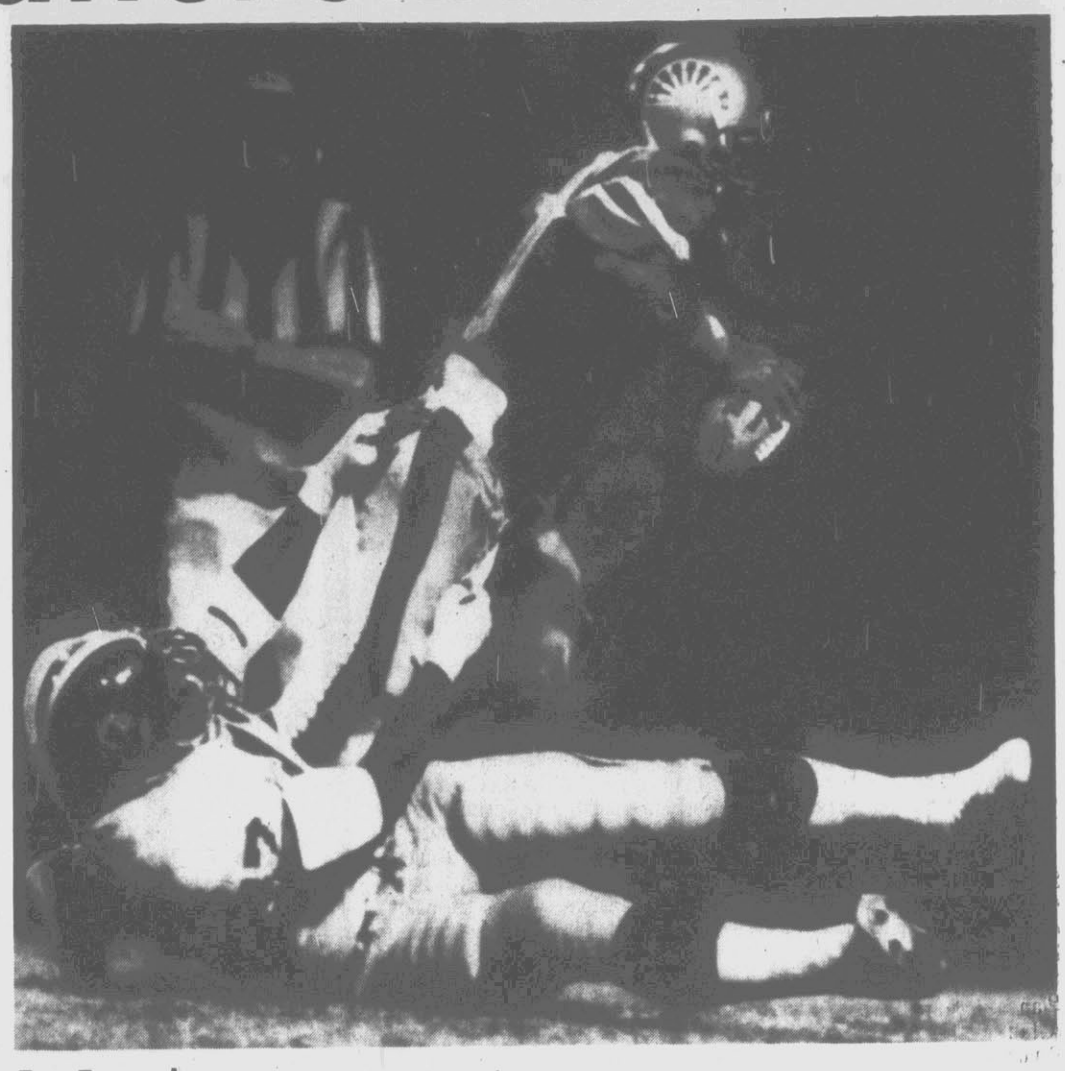

"The character that we have as a team is going to really show up when we go down to New Jersey," Corker added. "We are going to put our first-place standing on the line again. Another loss will take us out of first place." New Jersey is 7-2 and chasing Philadelphia in the Atlantic Division.

Birmingham is 8-1 and being touted as the league's best team, but Stanllions Coach Coach Rollie Dotsch cringes at such suggestions.

"I think we're one of the five or six best teams in the league right now, along with Denver, Tampa Bay, New Orleans, Philadelphia and New Jersey," Dotsch said. "But I wouldn't say we're THE best. People may be saying that because we lost our opener and then have won eight straight games. We're on a roll now."

Still, Coach Craig Morton of the Gold is impressed by the Stallions."Birmingham is by far our biggest test of the year so far," he said. "I think they're the elite of the league right now. This is our opportunity to knock off a giant.

Denver is 7-2, coming off a 20-18 loss to New Orleans last week that snapped a five-game winning streak.

Passion Reigns On Capitol Hill

WASHINGTON (AP) — The question of who the team belongs to — the owner who pays the bill or the city and the fans who help subsidize the venture — was passionately discussed on Capitol Hill.

The switch of the National Football League's Oakland Raiders to Los Angeles followed just last month by the Baltimore Colts move to Indianapolis, drew heated testimony Friday before the Senate Commerce Committee.

"Oakland was first, Baltimore was second and who will be third?" asked Baltimore Mayor Donald Schaefer.

Sen. Rudy Boschwitz, R-Minn., holding up a Minneapolis newspaper and noting the recent sale of stock in baseball's Minnesota Twins and the rumored transfer of the financially-ailing team to Florida, said he feared the worst.

"The potential threat of a loss of a franchise is real to any city with a sports team," Boschwitz said. "Franchises are being shopped around with cities paying irresponsible owners ransom to get them."

Under the proposal, a team could only leave a city if it first demonstrated its financial need, had the approval of the league of which it is a member, and the original host city was unable to match the offer of the jurisdiction bidding for the team.

As it is written, the proposal would be retroactive to the first of the year and would affect both the move of the Colts from Baltimore to Indianapolis and, the New York Jets decision to abandon Shea Stadium in Flushing, N.Y., for the more spacious Giants Stadium in East Rutherford, N.J.

"This bill places a cloud over the Jets' move to New Jersey," Sen. Frank Lautenberg, D-N.J., said. "New Jersey did not rob any market of its team. It was our facility that attracted the Jets and has attracted New York fans."

"If this bill is passed how are we ever going to get the Major League baseball team we have never had," Lautenberg asked.

Indiana senators Richard Lugar and Dan Quayle, in a letter to the committee, said they were prepared to make a "goal-line stand" against the bill if necessary.

"My reading is that this legislation is very unlikely to get anywhere," Lugar said. "But in the unexpected event it should gain momentum, I want to assure my colleagues in the Senate that I am prepared to use my influence to block it."

"People in sports franchise cities have a deep emotional attachment to, and a bonafide interest in, the local teams," Sen. Charles Mathias, R-Md., said. "That interest must be recognized and protected by the law.

"Unless Congress addresses this problem promptly and decisively, the Colts and other teams will play their home games in unfamiliar towns," he said, instead of cities that "have sustained them through good years and bad and left high and dry."

Second Andretti Set For Indy Try

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Al Unser Sr. and Jr. became the first father-son drivers to race against each other in the Indianapolis 500 one year ago. Mario and Michael Andretti want to be the second pair.

"You never know what's going to happen, but I have no mixed feelings," Michael Andretti, 21, says of the possibility of racing his famous father for the checkered flag in the world's most celebrated automobile race.

"If I beat him, then I've beaten the best. I'll race him as hard as anybody else, and I know he'll do the same."

The younger Andretti, who teamed with his father for a third-place finish at LeMans last year, was among the first group who got a head start on the mandatory drivers' test Friday during the opening session of the U.S. Auto Club's annual Rookie Orientation Program.

The rookie program winds up Sunday. USAC will begin technical inspections of the record 117 cars entered for the May 27 race starting Tuesday, and the track opens for practice the following Saturday.

Last year, Al Unser Jr. finished 10th, the highest among six rookie starters, but he was penalized two laps for passing under the yellow caution light so he could position himself between his front-running father and second-place Tom Sneva. Sneva eventually passed both Unsers with about 25 miles to go and went on to his first Indy victory.

"I don't think what he did was all that bad," the younger Andretti said of the younger Unser's attempt to keep Sneva in second place. "I didn't see him do anything dangerous, and he was racing for a position, too. If he is lapped, it hurts him.

"It's a courtesy to move over (for a faster driver), but it's not mandatory," Michael said. "I wouldn't have passed (other cars) under the yellow, like he did, but every circumstance is different."

The annual Rookie Orientation Program, now in its fourth year, gives the first-year drivers a chance to familiarize themselves with the track without the hectic rush-hour traffic situations that develop throughout the three weeks leading up to the race.

The rookie test consists of 10 laps each in successive 5-mph brackets starting at 170. Other rookies who completed the early phases of the drivers' test on Friday included Al Holbert, Stan Fox, Tom Gloy and Roberto Guerrero, all experienced road racers.

"This is one of the toughest rookie crops to come along," Michael Andretti said. "There are a lot of good drivers. It will be tough to be rookie of the year; that's one of my goals."

All of the rookies must wait until formal practice begins next week to take the final phase of the test — 10 laps at more than 190 mph.

"It's really helped a lot," said Michael, who also tested here last fall at more than 200 mph. "I've run 40 or 50 laps, and I'd have had a lot of uneasy minutes if I hadn't. I've been able to answer a lot of questions."

One of the rookie drivers who signed up for this weekend's voluntary program was John Paul Jr., who does not have to take the driver's test because of extensive experience here last year. Paul passed his rookie test last year and practiced at more than 200 mph before breaking his leg in a crash.

Another familiar face at the track on Friday was three-time Indy winner Bobby Unser, who retired from racing two years ago but is serving as an unofficial, part-time consultant for the Theodore Racing Team and its rookie driver, Bruno Giacomelli.

Mario Andretti, who finished second to Unser in 1981 and will be seeking his 19th Indy start this year, also was on hand to watch his son's progress on the 2½-mile track.

"It's fast, real fast," Michael Andretti said of his initial impression of the famed Speedway. "You're always a bit nervous at first, with the past history of this track. It can be mean.

"But if you attack it with respect, you can handle it. That's what I'm trying to do," Michael said. "I'm getting there. I don't feel real comfortable yet, but by qualifications (starting May 12), I should be there with enough miles."

Coastal Coach Carr Is Fired

CONWAY (AP) — Coastal Carolina has fired head baseball coach Larry Carr following his recent criticism of the school's athletic department and Athletic Director Russ Bergman.

In a statement early Friday afternoon, Bergman said he would fill in as baseball coach for the rest of the season. Coastal has two games left in regular season play and is competing for a playoff spot in the NAIA.

IOC Avoids Budd Issue

LAUSANNE, Switzerland (AP) —The director of the International Olympic Committee says she doesn't want to get involved in the controversial Zola Budd case.

"Zola Budd is a British problem, not an IOC problem," IOC Director Monique Berlioux said Friday of the South African-born distance runner who is trying to gain eligibility for the 1984 Summer Olympics in Los Angeles.

The 17-year-old Budd was granted British citizenship recently, hoping it would help her eligibility for the Summer Games. South Africans are banned from most international and Olympic sports because of their country's apartheid racial policy.

Earlier this year she ran the world's fastest time in the non-Olympic 5,000-meters which was 6.43 seconds faster than the recognized world record set by American double world champion Mary Decker in June 1982.

Berlioux said the eligibility committee studied soccer and tennis matters during Friday's one-day meeting at the IOC's headquarters at the Chateau Vidy on the shores of Lake Geneva, but stayed away from the Budd case. She also said that Budd's eligibility was not scheduled to be discussed by the committee.

Previously, some eligibility committee members said the Budd case would be raised at Friday's meeting.

Several Third World nations reportedly have asked IOC president Juan Antonio Samaranch to prevent Budd's participation in the Los Angeles Games.

So far, Budd hasn't been selected for the British Olympic team.

According to IOC rules, a naturalized athlete cannot compete for the new country until he or she has lived in the new country for three years. But some British track and field officials have said this does not apply to Budd because her father is British-born.

Bluefish Public Hearings — The South Atlantic Fishery Management Council invites all fishermen interested in bluefish to atend a public hearing and voice their opinion on the Bluefish Fishery Management Plan as prepared by the Mid-Atlantic Fishery Management Council.

Bluefish are one of hte most improtant fish to recreational fishermen along the Atlantic Coast. The value of the recreational rod and reel fishery was estimated to be at least $98 million in 1980. Although a large portion of landings come from state waters, a significant portion comes from federal waters.

Proposed rules set quotas on the commercial fishery and control measures if nesessary to assure that fishing continues throughout the season. Also, the commercial fishery may be closed if necessary to prevent exceeding the quota in a particular area when 80 percent of the allowable harvest has been caught. According to the proposed regulations, all vessals fishing in federal waters must have a permit to harvest bluefish for sale, and party and charter boats must have permits to fish for bluefish in federal waters.

Public hearings on the plan will be held from 7-10 p.m. at the following locations:

Southport King Mackerel Derby — The Southport King Mackerel Derby has names Harold Anthony Brusher, marine fisheries biologist from Panama City, Fla., to catch tag and release the 10 fish for the three-day Derby Memorial Day weekend.

Mr. Brusher graduated from Hamboldt State University with a degree in fisheries and biological sciences. He has worked as a marine fisheries biologist in Texas, California, Florida and for the food and agriculture organization of the United Nations in Kenya. He is a member of the Internation Gamefish Association and has published articles in several professional magazines. Recently, Mr. Brusher has been tagging king mackerel to observe their migratory habits.

The Southport King Mackerel Derby, the first fishing derby of its kind on the east coast, will award $500,000 to the fisherman who catches the designated king mackerel during the derby. The angler catching the winning fish will receive $50,000 per year for 10 years.

The Southport King Mackerel Derby will have 10 fish caught, tagged and released within five miles of the Cape Fear River by Mr. Brusher early in the event. There will be the $500,000 first prize, two second prizes of $1,000 each, and seven third prizes of $500 each awarded during the contest May 26-28. Entry fee per boat is $300.

Application forms will be sent upon request to: Harold Matthews, P.O. Box 10694, Southport, N.C. 28461.

Teacher Workshops Slated — Teachers may wish to participate in one of the outdoor education workshops being offered this summer by the N.C. Wildlife Resources Commission and the N.C. Division of Forest Resources. Each workshop offers three continuing education units of credit. Workshops will feature investigations in soils, water, forests, wildlife and simulations of land-use planning.

Educators in grades K-12 and in all curriculum areas will benefit from the workshops. Dates and locations aer as follows:

•Clemmons State Forest near Clayton from June 18-24

Ellis Hopes Luck Changing Now

MARTINSVILLE, Va. (AP) — Tommy Ellis believes in luck, and he believes his has been almost all bad.

The veteran short track racer got out from under his cloud Friday long enough to be the fastest second-day qualifier for Sunday's $250,300 Sovran Bank 500 Grand National stock car race.

Ellis drove a Chevrolet Monte Carlo SS owned by Tim Morgan and the four McClure brothers to a fast lap averaging 89.108 mph around the .526-mile Martinsville Speedway oval.

That was good enough to lock up the 11th starting position in the 31-car field — the first 10 spots were set Thursday — but it also was third fastest overall.

Bill Elliott, who was second fastest Friday at 88.985 — and fourth fastest overall — also improved considerably over his Thursday effort.

"We made some wrong decisions Thursday," said Ellis, 36. "We were way off. But we went back to the motel and talked about it last night and decided we were just going to start all over again today.

"This team is coming together. They're learning to handle my moods. I'm very serious about my racing, and I told the guys that when I came to the team. They understand.

"Now all we need to do is change our luck," added the 1981 late model sportsman champion. "I brought my bad luck with me.

"My sportsman program is ... broke. I couldn't do anything right. We've just had an absolutely miserable year — not enough sponsorship and no capital.

"Then, the first two races (in Grand National), we had brake problems where parts weren't working property. And, at Darlington, we went from 38th to sixth before the right front wheel stud broke.

"But the only thing we are lacking is luck," added the Richmond, Va., driver. "I knew they (the Morgan-McClure team) had a lot of potential and that I could make them competitive.

"Now people are noticing us. Not the press, but the competitors. They're putting the watch on us in practice."

Ellis appeared in just eight Grand National races prior to this season. His best finish was a fourth at Charlotte in the fall of 1981.

When he was contacted earlier this spring about taking over the ride then held by Lennie Pond, Ellis jumped at it.

"I felt like it was now or never," he said. "I just never had the money to have my own Grand National team and I never had the opportunity to drive a good car, although I had opportunities for rides in slower cars. But I knew this was going to be a good team.

"But I still feel like an outsider. I'm like the new kid on the block. It takes a while for these guys to accept you.

"In that (sportsman racing) I was as good as I could be. When you walk around, you know everyone and everyone knows you. Here, I'm an outsider and I feel like a rookie."

But that doesn't keep the feisty Ellis from exuding confidence about the future.

"I know for a fact if I can stay out of trouble and be running at the end of the race, I'll be in contention," he said.

Sunday's 500-mile race, the richest short track event on the Grand National circuit, is scheduled to start at 12:30 p.m. EDT.

1. Joe Ruttman, Chevrolet Monte Carlo SS, 89.426.
2. Harry Gant, Chevrolet Monte Carlo SS, 89.203.

Francis X. Larkins, president and chief executive officer, said the company's bed and bath division sales increased 19 percent over last year, while carpet and rug division sales rose 28 percent.

He said sales growth and a larger than normal first quarter inventory build-up resulted in high mill operating levels which reduced unit costs. Margins improved as a result of moderate operating expense growth relative to sales.

New Board Member

William A. Dees Jr., who is engaged in the general practice of law as a partner in the firm of Dees, Smith, Powell, Jarrett, Dees & Jones in Golsboro, has been elected to the board of directors of Branch Corp.

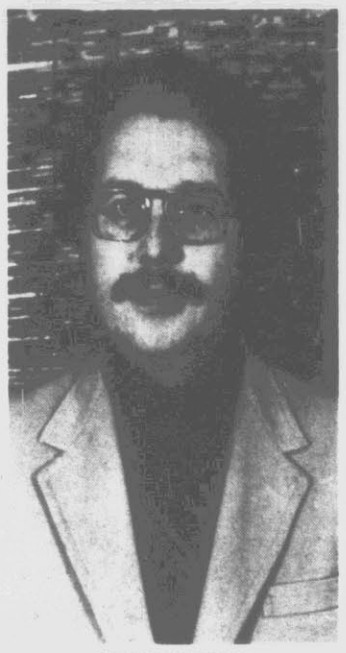

A Goldsboro native, Dees has served on the board of governors of the North Carolina Bar Association and as president of the District Bar Association.

Dees, a member of the Board of Governors of the University of North Carolina, was a member of the State Board of Higher Education from 1963 to 1965.

He is a graduate of the University of North Carolina.

Boxing Facility

Bill McDonald, founder of the GOJU-SHORIN karate system and the Bill McDonald Karate School, has announced the opening of an amateur boxing gym and training center in Greenville at 904 Dickinson Avenue. He said BEMJO Boxing Gym will be a part of the karate school but will operate separately with boxing instruction.

JOHN ORMSBY

McDonald said that Greenville has hosted the TKE boxing tournament for four years but has not had a formal gym or training outlet for aspiring boxers.

Boxing instruction will be supervised by John Ormsby, who has operated boxing gyms in Tampa, Fla., and Cncinnati, Ohio. Ormsby, who has had over 20 years experience in martial art related sports, has promoted, managed and trained professional and amateur fighters, said McDonald.

New Firm Opened Friday

J.B. Surles III, manager of Home Builders Supply Co. of Greenville, has announced the opening of Builder's Bargain Center on Dickinson Avenue through a joint venture with a Goldsboro firm.

Surles said Home Builders Supply and Goldsboro Builders Supply, headed by A.L. Perry, will operate the center in a new facility at 1700 Dickinson Ave. across from the Pepsi plant. Surles will be president of the operation.

The spokesman said the firm, offering a general building materials inventory, began operations Friday with a noon ribbon cutting by Mayor Janice Buck. The business will be open from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. six days a week.

Surles said the facility will offer the same types of products as Home Builders Supply, which will continue operations, but will function somewhat as a mill outlet store with both first rate merchandise and seconds available.

A feature of the business will be drive-through accomodations for customers on a total self service basis, said Surles. Mark Case will manage the business, which is housed in a 30,000-square-foot structure.

THE QUALITY GOES IN BEFORE THE NAME GOES ON

The desktop and portable Z-100 PC's are designed with enhanced features that take you beyond IBM compatibility. Like internal expandability that allows you to add peripherals without adding size. Storage that can expand up to 11 megabytes with a hard disk-all within the same single desktop unit. A footprint more compact than the IBM PC. The ability to run virtually all software disigned for the IBM PC plus Zenith's own extensive library of IBM-compatible software. Faster video response. And a detached keyboard similar to an IBM, but with a "smarter" key layout for added convenience.

The new Zenith PC's come from a tradition of winning technology that created the dual-processor Z-100, chosen as the stand-alone microcomputer of the United States Air Force and Navy. To find out how the new Zenith PC's can take you to total performance, call us!

The "most-affordable" Peugeots

To Peugeot, "affordable" doesn't mean "stripped."

So even the least-expensive Peugeots are well-equipped Peugeots.

Power steering and power brakes are standard equipment. And reclining bucket seats. And a tachometer. And Michelin steel-belted radial tires. Even little touches like remote-controlled outside mirrors that de-ice themselves.

The Peugeot GL sedan.

And the Peugeot GL station wagon—a wagon so roomy that, with its rear seat up, it has more cargo space than any other wagon available in America.*

Economic Indicators Likely To Drop

NEW YORK (AP) — Strong new evidence of a slowing economy is expected in the next few days.

When the government issues its report Monday on the index of leading economic indicators for March, analysts say, the figure is likely to show a significant drop.

The forecasting firm of Evans Economics projects a 0.8 percent decline, with the chance that it could be as large as 1.5 percent.

At the investment firm of A.G. Becker Paribas, economist Richard Hoey sees a drop of between 0.4 percent and 1 percent, with 0.7 percent the most probable reading.

The index, calculated by the Commerce Department, is designed to detect future economic trends by measuring early warning signals in such things as building permits, prices of certain raw materials, business formations and even stock prices.

Because private economists have access to these figures as well, they can estimate in advance what the government report will look like. "We now have enough statistics for March to state definitively that the index of leading indicators will be down sharply," Evans Economics reported a few days ago.

The index is not infallible, most experts agree. It can give errant signals at times and, like many other official gauges of the economy, it is subject to revision later on when more complete data are in.

But at the moment, a good many observers believe a dropoff in business activity is indeed at hand — and none too soon, they say. As Evans Economics puts it, "Last year the economy went on a binge. We are now paying for that binge in the form of higher inflation and higher interest rates."

Jack Lavery, economist at Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, observes that "continued strong gains in overall business activity would add to the nervousness in the financial markets, since upward pressure on both interest rates and inflation would intensify.

"Conversely, if the economy is in a 'transition' phase, moving from a period of rapid growth to a more moderate pace of expansion, a subsequent easing in credit conditions could materialize."

Lavery argues that there already is a fair amount of evidence in hand that this transition is taking place — including recent declines in retail sales and a downward turn in measures of consumer confidence.

In the view of Lavery and others, all this means that there could be quite a dramatic change in the picture presented by the economy for the second quarter of the year, in comparison to the first three months.

The gross national product, according to the latest figures, grew at a powerful 8.3 percent annual rate, after adjustment for inflation, in the first quarter.

Lavery sees "a statistically much weaker real GNP gain in the present quarter." Evans Economics says the number may be close to zero in the April-June period, creeping up to just 2 percent or 3 percent in the second half of the year.

As long as a slowdown doesn't open the doors to a new recession, most economists agree it would be a favorable turn of events, putting the economy at a pace that can be sustained over time without causing a lot of adverse side effects. It presumably could encourage the Federal Reserve to loosen up on its credit policy.

"Slower economic growth is a precondition for an easing of monetary policy," says the Value Line Investment Survey, the nation's largest independent investment advisory service.

"But the Federal Reserve will no doubt want to see more evidence that a slowdown is actually occurring. The Fed would probably also like to see better evidence that inflation is under control."

Prices Fell On Futures Markets

By KEITH E. LEIGHTY
AP Business Writer

Industrial demand for money appeared to unsettle the futures markets and drove financial instrument futures prices lower Friday.

A report that private sector borrowing reached $4.5 billion last week prompted concern about the market's ability to meet the demand for money from industry, said Bill O'Neill, director of research in New York with Rudolph Wolff Commodities Inc.

Demand from the private sector indicated that industry is continuing to expand, he said.

"Their needs are still quite vast," he said. Coupled with the need to finance the federal Treasury's borrowing to cover the deficit, the demand for funds from the financial sector led to concern that interest rates are likely to climb, he said.

Financial instruments move inversely to interest rates.

Treasury bonds at the Chicago Board of Trade fell 18 ticks to 20 ticks with the contract for delivery in June at 6431. A tick is 132nd of a percentage point and represents a price move of $31.25 on a contract with a face value of $100,000.

Grain and soybean futures prices were mostly higher in light trading on the Chicago Board of Trade.

Prices were mixed early in the session but rallied shortly after the opening and then held the gains through the day.

Weather is one factor supporting prices, said Dale Gustafson, a grain analyst in Chicago with Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc. He said the wet weather already has caused minor delays in corn planting and the forecast for more rain over the weekend followed by cool temperatures could mean further delays.

Additional delays could result in smaller crops, and farmers might switch from corn to soybeans, which can be planted later in the year, said Gustafson. He noted that corn for delivery in December gained 2 cents a bushel while November soybeans gained only ¾ cent a bushel, reflecting that possibility.

Marsha's Assignment Is Now Routine

By TOM FORTNER
ECU Medical Writer

Close your eyes for a moment ... Keep them shut.

Now imagine that you are standing in the lobby of Pitt County Memorial Hospital, surrounded by a bustling crowd of patients, employees and visitors. Ahead of you is literally a city within a city, including a population of several thousand people, busy sidewalks and intersections, a complicated maze of corridors and offices.

PROOFREADING...Marsha Young checks her typewriting on a VeraBraille, a new device that gives blind people new capabilities. (Photo by Jim Woltjen)

Now, all you have to do — with your eyes still closed and without help from anyone — is find the surgery department on the second floor ...

That would be a pretty intimidating assignment, wouldn't it? But it's a challenge that Marsha Young confronts, and overcomes, every working day, to the point that it has become routine. Marsha Young is a 27-year-old medical transcriptionist in the surgery department. Married and the mother of a four-year-old daughter, she is attractive, witty and hard-working. And she is blind.

You might not realize that, however, from a cursory glance around the offices of the Department of Surgery. Marsha could easily be mistaken for any one of several co-workers, as all of them go busily about their day's activities. The only hint of any difference might be that Marsha seems a little quieter than most, that her desk is unusually neat, and that beneath that desk, partially concealed from visitors, lies a large, black, apparently breathing object. That would be Patsy, Marsha's loving seeing eye dog, whom she describes as "99 percent nose."

The point here is simply that Marsha, after nearly a year on the job, has become more or less and fixture in her office — another member of the team. For most people that might not be news to write home about. For a blind person, through, it's a long-sought destination. And because it takes so long to get there, it's a big part of Marsha's story.

Marsha has been legally blind all her life, but as a little girl she could still see well enough to read and make out most objects. She developed cataracts at age 14, however, and by 1976 had lost almost all her vision.

A Greenville native, Marsha attended public school here for four years, then enrolled in the Governor Morehead School in Raleigh, a state residential school for the blind. In 1979 she earned a high school diploma via correspondence courses from the Hadley School for the Blind in Winnetka, Ill. And a year ago in July, while a resident of Burlington, she completed a nedical transcription course through the same school, which supplied her with the basic terminology required for employment in a hospital, medical school or physician's office. Marsha did so well in the course, in fact, that the school presented her with a 49-volume set of braille medical dictionaries as an expression of their support.

It was at that point then that Marsha, a bright student now in possession of a marketable skill, was at last ready to take her place in the world of work — if only she could find a job.

Marsha's job search brought her to Greenville, where she enlisted the aid of Patrick (Pat) Parker, a rehabilitation couselor working for the state Division of Services for the Blind. With some 140 active cases in a four-county area, Parker prepares visually handicapped persons to find jobs.

"We establish that they have a vocational handicap because of a visual handicap," said Parker. "Then we attempt to remove that vocational handicap."

Parker arranged for Marsha to take a program of orientation and mobility, to reacquaint her with Greenville and its environs. Marsha and Patsy worked with an instructor, Andra Smith, traveling everywhere and doing everything they would likely go and do in everyday situations. A lot of time was spent at the hospital, where Marsha would lay her hands on a relief map of the building and form a mental image of it. The goal, said Parker, was to make Marsha completely self-sufficient in her travels — a major hurdle for blind people.

Parker also helped Marsha with her job search. They made up a packet of resumes and application materials, and practiced communication skills in simulated job interviews. Parker, noting that Marsha was sensitive, meticulous and an exceptionally good typist, felt she had an excellent chance to make it.

"I felt very strongly that she could prove herself once she got into ti," said Parker. "She wants everything perfect, which is exactly what you want in a medical transcriptionist."

Still, it's difficult to overestimate the problems that blind people have in finding jobs. Parker said employers are hesitant to take on a blind worker for fear they will require too much special attention and will slow down output. Another concern is for the safety of the visually impaired worker, as well as for those around him.

"We've made a lot of headway with public education," said Parker, "but I still think that blindness is still one of the most feared handicapping conditions."

The Department of Surgery at East Carolina University School of Medicine was willing to look beyond the mythology of blindness, however, and give Marsha a change to prove herself. Last December the department hired her as a full-time medical transcriptionist, to work with a large staff of physicians and administrators in the medical school's teaching addition located in the hospital.

The appointment was only temporary. It would be up to Marsha to demonstrate that she could handle the work. In particular, department officials were determined that Marsha be treated, for the most part, like everyone else.

PATSY LOUNGES...below Marsha's desk, using a doorstop as a pillow.

Funny thing about it, though, that's precisely what handicapped people desire most in their work — to be treated like everyone else. They want to be treated as if their handicap doesn't exist, or more accurately, as if its existence doesn't matter. More than anything, they want to fit in, and that's hard, because it's sometimes easier to allow yourself to be coddled. Says Marsha: "As long as you get special favors you never fit in, because that keeps you different."

And Parker adds: "The surgery personnel have pitched in when help was needed, but they haven't mothered her."

Like anybody beginning their first job, Marsha was initially apprehensive. "It was a big change," she said, "and I'm not a person who's big on changes." Marsha's supervisors at first noted that she seemed to be trying too hard, that she worried too much about mistakes and that she was reluctant to tackle unfamiliar tasks. But as Marsha became more comfortable in her work, her natural talent surfaced.

"Her work is excellent," said Connie Stenquist, an administrative manager in the department. "She can fly through a clinic tape. And she's got a fantastic memory."

Stenquist added that Marsha's personality has also been a welcome addition to the staff. "Everybody has enjoyed having her here," she said. "She fits in beautifully."

Marsha was made a permanent employee in May. Despite her development in the job, though, one thing kept Marsha from becoming completely self-sufficient. Although she could handle all the typing sent her way, she was still unable to proofread her work, a small but essential step. This meant that other staffers had to proofread for her, often interrupting their own work to do so. It was just a little inconvenience, but it was also a nagging reminder of Marsha's dependency.

Eliminating it required a $7,000 piece of technology. From the N.C. Services for the Blind, Marsha was able to obtain a device called a VersaBraille. About the size of a shoebox, the VersaBraille is a portable braille word processor. It interfaces with Marsha's more conventional Apple IIe word processor to allow her to proofread and correct in braille the information she has typewritten on the Apple. Marsha's VersaBraille is one of only 80 in use in the U.S. and Canada, which puts its owner in pretty select company.

Marsha's Apple is also fitted with a speech synthesizer, a device which will vocalize typewritten text in a language which can only be described as "computerese." The vocalization isn't all that clear, or particularly suited to big proofreading jobs, but it does allow quick checks more readily than the VersaBraille. The metallic voice is also a source of comic relief around the office. "Everybody loves it," said Marsha.

They're also still trying to figure out how it works. Marsha has only had the VersaBraille and the Apple since late summer, so she's still "on the kindergarten doorstep," as she puts it. And that very point demonstrates a basic truth about blindness that Marsha has evidently accepted: It's hard work. She recalled that at the Governor Morehead School, they begin teaching typing to students in the fourth grade.

"Everybody else isn't going to learn braille for your convenience," she said. "You just have to learn so much more to get to the same place" as sighted people.

The same place, according to Pat Parker, falls under the heading of "productive citizen."

"She never has wanted to depend on society," he said. "She wants to make her own way. Her aim has been to come off the tax rolls into competitive employment where she now is a taxpayer."

Parker gives a lot of the credit for Marsha's success to the hospital and the School of Medicine. "We couldn't have asked for a department to work any closer than they have with us," he said. But he quickly added that Marsha deserves most of the credit. "She gets the work out and that's what's important."

It sure is, because it's the irrefutable evidence that Marsha has arrived.

ON A STROLL...are Marsha and her seeing eye dog, Patsy. They are in the teaching addition at Pitt Memorial Hospital.

Frustrated Teacher Becomes One-Woman University

By RUTH YOUNGBLOOD

BOSTON (UPI) — When Sandi Serkess graduated from college a decade ago, there were no jobs open for the teaching training she was so anxious to use.

Faced with a glutted market and an oversupply of elementary school teachers, she found employment and frustration in one job after another — from clerk to stand-up comedienne.

Now at age 31 she describes herself as a "one-woman university," teaching 25 different subjects in a 10-week semester and qualified to teach 25 more. She says the ideas all emanate from her rocky emotional and professional past.

"My teaching dream has finally come true," she said.

The classes she teaches include such basics as grammar, writing skills, vocabulary building and spelling extending through a huge repertoire dealing with psychology, business skills, preparation for graduate school exams and the histories of psychoanalysis, economics, holidays and humob.

"But I'm always looking out for new subjects," she said. "I'd try teaching almost anything."

Miss Serkess, who has written a book on improving memory, teaches at the Cambridge and the Boston Centers for Adult Education. With a master's degree in counseling, she is often an instructor of American literature and salesmanship at Chamberlayne Junior College.

By choice, she hasn't taken a vacation in seven years.

"My courses are my autobiography," she explains, going through a list four pages long. "If you read the list, you'll know me."

"Take Math Anxiety," she said. "In order to work as an income tax preparer, I had to get over my apprehensions about math."

"Sharing anxieties in a supportive environment encourages adults to tackle what they fear, whether it be decimals, fractions or the many problems found in everyday math.

"Together we balance checkbooks and learn to get the most for the money on shopping trips."

Citing "Business Strategies" and a selection of related subjects such as "Organizational Decision Making" and "Letter Writing for Business," Miss Serkess referred to the office politics she encountered from her first clerking position to a job in public relations.

"The class focuses on group behavior, communications systems and sexual harassment in the workplace," she said.

It also deals with "the unspoken rules, handling the office pest and answering such questions as, 'Is it good to be an eager beaver?'"

Then there's a popular "Woody Allen Meets Doctor Freud" class that she said arose from her nightclub comedy acts created when she was juggling several jobs to pay the bills.

"It was a real challenge to laugh at myself," she said.

She added that the course takes a serious look at humor, comedians and whether they are "inwardly angry, filled with fear, or just plain clever."

A series on "Alcoholism and Drugs" emerged from Miss Serkess' experience as an alcoholism counselor seven years ago; "Eating and Emotions" arose from her bout with anorexia nervosa, when she dropped from 250 to 80 pounds; many classes study skills she admits she lacked in high school.

"My students know I've been there," Miss Serkess said. She said that while the motivation comes from within, each class demands "months of research and preparation."

She maintains a complex filing system, referencing everything she reads, and shs pends time daily reading up on the latest developments in every subject she instructs.

Her teaching load astounds colleagues.

"She's certainly in a class by herself in terms of the diversity of topics she instructs," said Jim Smith, assistant director of the Cambridge school, which has an enrollment of 24,000 adults.

While others consider it a tall order to switch from teaching a subject such as the "Origins of Consciousness and Identity" to "Preparing for the Post Office Exam," Miss Serkess finds the transition natural.

"That's because I'm people oriented," she said.

Miss Serkess frankly admits traumas such as childhood obesity and loneliness, flunking out of high school and her anorexia nervosa laid the groundwork for her "unsatiable curiosity about human beings."

When a woman in her grammar class was obviously falling behind, Miss Serkess told her, "I'm not going to let you fail. You're going to learn, and you can count on me."

From that point on, Miss Serkess checked and rechecked to make sure the student understood. After the final session, the woman hugged Miss Serkess and said, "You're the best teacher I've ever had."

In her "Short Course for Short Memories," Miss Serkess explains that association, attaching what one doesn't know to what one does, is the most effective principle of memory reinforcement.

But she cannot resist recalling her appearance on a national television program as a "noted memory expert" when she forgot the term, "photographic memory."

"I know it! I know I know it! It's right on the tip of my tongue, but I can't think of it," she recalled telling the baffled host.

"Citing my mistakes makes me feel very human," she said.

"I don't want to sound like a superwoman. Teaching allows me to help other people. It makes the pain I've gone through worthwhile."

REMISSIONS

ATLANTA (AP) — Remissions can lead people with arthritis to develop a false sense of security, cautions the Arthritis Foundation.

People with arthritis often experience remissions, during which some or all of their symptoms may disappear, but usually temporarily and often without treatment. When this happens, many people think they are cured.

The symptoms may go away but the arthritis doesn't, says the foundation. It still may be present in the body or the joints, lying in a dormant or inactive state. Arthritis sufferers should continue to see the doctor and follow their prescribed treatment program during a remission.

Couple Speaks Vows In Saturday Ceremony

GOLDSBORO — The wedding ceremony of Judith Carol Sharp of Goldsboro and James Harvey Dobbins of Winston-Salem was conducted Saturday afternoon at three o'clock in the Saint Stephens Episcopal Church.

The double ring ceremony was performed by the Rev. Peter C. Robinson. A program of wedding music was presented by organist Eugene Mauney. Acolyte was Dan Charles Sharpe of Goldsboro, brother of the bride.

The bride was given in marriage by her parents, Mr. and Mrs. James Virgil Sharpe Jr. of Goldsboro. The parents of the bridegroom are Ms. Mattie Lou Dobbins of Greenville and Robert C. Dobbins of Pawtucket, R.I.

The bride wore a gown of white satin and taffeta. The fitted bodice was made of valenciennes lace and featured princess sleeves with satin shoulder bows and a basqued waistline. She wore a derby covered with matching lace and seed pearls with a fingertip blusher and a waltz length veil of illusion. She wore gloves of valenciennes lace and carried an arm bouquet of long-stemmed salmon roses and baby's breath with white satin ribbon streamers.

Matron of honor was Chery Sharp Thornton of Elizabethtown, sister of the bride. She wore a tea length dress of pink taffeta with a ruffled neckline, princess sleeves and a pink sash. She carried a bouquet of multi-colored daisies and baby's breath accented with pink satin streamers.

Bridesmaids were Kim Annette Wall of Kannapolis, Lura Jo Sherrill of Charlotte and Julie Carol McIver of Castle Haynes, cousin of the bride. Each attendant wore a gown styled like that of the matron of honor, each in solid pale blue, lavender or pale yellow. Each attendant carried a nosegay bouquet of multi-colored daisies and baby's breath with streamers to match the color of their gown. Each attendant wore matching ribbons in her hair.

Baker Bland of Vanceboro, uncle of the bridegroom, served as best man. Ushers were Robert Dobbins of Marietta, Ga., and Charles Dobbins of Danielson, Conn., brothers of the bridegroom, and Mitchell Carteledge of Greensboro.

Following the ceremony, the bride's parents entertained at a reception on the church grounds. Guests were greeted by Mr. and Mrs. Lee Alcorn, cousins of the bridegroom, and Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Price. Cake was served by Donna McIver and Rhonda Lou McIver, cousins of the bridegroom. Debra Wooten and Cidy Wooten of Kinston, cousins of the bride, poured punch. MRS. DOBBINS

At Wits End

By Erma Bombeck

To my knowledge, no one has ever researched the history of volunteerism. Was the battle at Little Big Horn a group of fathers and sons attending a Scout camporee that got out of hand? Was some poor mother volunteered by her kid to bring the potato salad for 500 for the first Thanksgiving at Plymouth Rock?

I suspect we will never know for sure, but of one thing I'm certain. Volunteerism prepares you for greatness. Leafing through the pages of history, you can almost read between the lines. Take Sadie Orchard. Do you think her becoming the first woman to drive a stagecoach in 1880 in the Wild West was by accident? Get hold of yourself. This woman had been a veteran of five years of Stagecoachpooling, hauling kids around from one outpost to another for everything you can think of from kicking-the-can Little Leagues to intramural barrel races. History reports she carried a bullwhip. Don't we all.

And what about Rebecca M. Winbourne, who was known as the Betsy Ross of the Confederacy for making a flag that was adopted by the Confederate Congress in 1861?

Women don't go around making flags for a hobby. I smell a committee here who needed a woman to make a flag out of old dyed flour sacks in less than two weeks. They picked on poor Rebecca who had come to their first meeting . . . as a guest.

And what mother who ever suffered through merit badges has not wept for Evelyn Cheeseman, who traveled alone among cannibals in the South Pacific in 1881, and collected more than 42,000 insects and parasitic worms.

Recognition for volunteers even existed at the turn of the century, but what's the use if you don't get the media out? Therefore on Oct. 24, 1901, I suspect some health organization sent Annie Edson Taylor over Niagara Falls in a barrel. The trip took 35 minutes and got her on the wire services, along with the cause.

And who could forget Josephine Schauer Blatt of New Jersey, who is credited with making the greatest lift ever made by a woman — 3,564 pounds. And why not? Only a year before on a field trip with 35 pre-schoolers on a picnic, she picked up a carriage and threatened them with walking back to town if they didn't shape up!

The volunteer is a species that has endured in America. I do not presume to suggest what their epitaph will be. But Katharine Elisabeth Goethe's is as good as any: "Say that Frau Goethe is unable to come, she is busy dying at the moment."

Founder's Day Plans Discussed By Women

Plans for Founder's Day were discussed at the meeting of Xi Gamma Xi Chapter of Beta Sigma Phi Sorority.

The meeting was held at the home of Kay Smith, who gave a program on Decorating Your Windows.

The scrapbook committee finished pictures to complete this year's scrapbook and a vote was taken for Sister of the Year award to be announced at Founder's Day Monday evening at the Sheraton.

Plans were made for the installation of next year's officers and a ritual for members of Pi Chapter.

Information was provided for consideration for a fund drive to benefit the Ronald McDonald House as a service project for next year.

In Appreciation

My most sincere gratitude goes out to many people for their gifts, cards, prayers, the love shown, and the concern for my safety after the tornado March 28th which destroyed my home. And also for the anxiety they felt not knowing how critical my condition was after being admitted to the Critical Care Unit of Pitt County Memorial Hospital. Fortunately, after many tests, it was diagnosed that I did not have a heart attack, but a bruise on my heart and chest muscles from the air pressure build up just before the house exploded.

Special thanks go to the Eastern Pines Rescue Department for their quick response to the call for help from Simpson and to the doctors and nurses at the hospital when we arrived. They were organized, professional, concerned, caring and efficient. I could not have asked for better treatment that night and the following days in the hospital.

My very special love goes to my concerned children who came home from Westfield, N.J. and Ogden, Utah and my daughters and son-in-law living in this area who tried to save as many of my personal possessions as possible. Thanks to my other family members who were so concerned and the many friends and persons, unknown to me who helped my children with the terrible ordeal of clearing the debris of the home in which they were raised. I'll be forever grateful to all the above and last but not least, to Jesus Christ, our Lord, who was standing by me all the way.

On The Young Side

By Clay Deanhardt

Spring break means many different things to different people. To some, it is the chance to hit the beaches and do some heavy relaxing. For others, it is a chance to recouperate from the rigors of school life and try to steel themselves for the last term. But for others, a lucky few, spring break is a chance to see the sights of the outside world in Europe. This year there were two such European expeditions from Rose.

Continuing a long tradition of such trips, French teacher Mrs. Nell Williams took several students on a four country tour of England, Switzerland, Italy and a long stay in France. Coordinated by the American Institute for Foreign Study, the tour included such sights as the Sistine Chapel, Notre Dame Cathedral, the Eiffel Tower and the famous Piccadilly Circus.

This year's second group was headed by three teachers, Mrs. Marie O'Callaghan, Mrs. Elaine Tschetter and Mrs. Billie Lennon. This group stayed in England for the entire week and was able to see such sights as Buckingham Palace, Westminster Abbey, Stonehenge, Stratford (the birthplace of William Shakespeare) and Oxford. This trip was arranged by the American Council for International Studies.

For another select group of dedicated students, spring break means a hectic schedule of rehearsals and construction sessions to prepare for this year's spring musical Finnian's Rainbow. But next weekend, the hours of practice and preparation finally pay off, as Rose High presents its rendition of the classic play. Under the direction of Mrs. Betty Topper, and the orchestral direction of Chuck Allen, the play will be presented on three nights, May 4-6, at 8 p.m. in the Rose High gym. Tickets are $4 at the door and $3 in advance from anyone involved in the production. Walk, crawl, drive or jog, but be sure to come enjoy the show and support the performing arts at Rose.

Jones-McKenzie Vows Spoken On Saturday

ELM CITY — Julia Lynne McKenzie became the bride of Stephen Edwards Jones Saturday afternoon at two o'clock in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Cecil W. Tyson, aunt and uncle of the bride. The Rev. John C. Andrews Jr. officiated at the single ring ceremony.

The bride is the daughter of Mrs. Kathryn Hayes McKenzie of Lumberton and Murphy Grady McKenzie Jr. of Orrum. The bridegroom is the son of Mrs. E.R. Jones of Laurinburg and the late Mr. Jones.

The bride wore a tea-length gown of ivory silk organza. Styled with a natural waistline, the gown featured a fitted bodice with a batteau neckline which fell into a V in back. Schiffli embroidery adorned the bodice and skirt as well as the scalloped hemline. The long sleeves were ruffled at the wrist. She wore a crescent of miniature gladioli and apple blossoms in her hair and carried a similarly designed bouquet of orchids, miniature gladioli and apple blossoms.

Immediately following the ceremony, guests were entertained at a reception given by Mr. and Mrs. Tyson. Mr. and Mrs. E. Allan Ware of Detmold, West Germany, sister and brother-in-law of the bride, greeted guests. Ware proposed a champagne toast to the couple.

The bride is a graduate of N.C. State University and is employed by the U.S. Department of Agriculture, ASCS in Pitt County. The bridegroom graduated from East Carolina University and is associated with Environment I, Inc. in Greenville.

After a wedding trip to Hawaii, the couple will reside in Greenville.

Miki Ann Ito Weds John Anthony Derrico

MRS. DERRICO

WILMINGTON — Miki Ann Ito and John Anthony Derrico were united in marriage Saturday at St. John's Episcopal Church. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Alfred Durrance. Mary Henry Byers presented wedding music on the organ.

Parents of the bridal couple are Mr. and Mrs. Takeru Ito of Greenville and Dr. and Mrs. Charles John Derrico of Plainview, N.Y.

The bride was given in marriage by her father. Her honor attendant was Donna Ree McLaurin of Greenville. Bridesmaids included Elizabeth Ito Hart of Greenville, sister of the bride, Mary Jo Derrico of Plainview, N.Y., sister of the bridegroom, Susan Riddle Vick of Winston-Salem, and Linda Kay Ellis of Greenville. Junior bridesmaid was Bronwyn Amy Ito, sister of the bride.

The father of the bridegroom served as best man, and ushers included Nicholas Charles and Charles Mark Derrico of Plainview, N.Y., brothers of the bridegroom, William Jeremiah McGraw of Wilmington, and John Pierpont Morgan of Atlantic Beach.

The bride wore a formal gown of white silkened organza over peau de soie. The gown was fashioned with an open portrait neckline accentuated with organza ruffles emphasizing the French pouf sleeves. Appliques of imported silk Venise lace embellished in pearls enhanced the fitted baroque bodice. The full skirt and attached chapel length train were bordered at the hemline in a ruffled flounce of crystal pleated organza interspersed with chantilly lace. She wore a walking length illusion mantilla held in place by a Juliet headpiece trimmed in silk Venise lace and beaded with pearls. She carried a cascading bouquet of white roses, stephanotis and English ivy. She wore her mother's pearls.

The attendants were dressed in formal gowns of rose silk organza designed with a one-shoulder neckline surrounded by a double ruffle. The bodice and waistline were fitted with a fabric rose and self-tie at the waist. The gowns featured a full flared skirt. They carried bouquets of mixed spring flowers in varying pastel colors tied with streamers of azalea pink.

The junior bridesmaid wore a white floor length gown of lace over taffeta with a rose silk organza sash.

She carried a miniature bouquet identical to that of the other attendants.

A pig-picking was held at the home of William Jeremiah McGraw after the rehearsal. Mrs. Bernard Vick and Mrs. Tracy McLaurin entertained at a bridesmaids luncheon Saturday noon at the Ramada Inn in Wilmington.

Teen-Age Moms Get Break Under Program

By TERRI COLBY
Associated Press Writer

SPRINGFIELD, Ill. (AP) — Nine months ago, 14-year-old Edith Dougherty was finishing up the seventh grade at a central Illinois elementary school — and finding out she was pregnant.

At about the same time, 19-year-old Mary, who didn't want her last name published, was without a home of her own after being forced to leave her parents' house — only months before the birth of her child.

Today, both young women are mothers of healthy babies and have found help and support in dealing with their unplanned parenthood. They received the help through a new state program, called Parents Too Soon.

"In the past, teen-agers have been teen-agers until they get pregnant ... and so they're adults," said program coordinator Linda P. Miller. "But they are still children and they need more care and more help than an older person in the same situation."

The project, involving nine state agencies and administered by the state, is funded with $12.9 million in federal block grants, and offers services ranging from advice on contraception to job training. Though not all of the services are new, they haven't been united in one comprehensive program before. Ms. Miller said she knew of no similar program anywhere in the nation.

She said the need for the program is evident from the number of Illinois teen-agers who give birth each year. In 1982, more than 25,000 infants were born to teen-agers between the ages of 11 and 19 in Illinois, accounting for 13.9 percent of children born in the state that year. This year, one in 10 girls between the ages of 15 and 19 is likely to become pregnant, she said.

Parents Too Soon is intended to reduce the number of teen-age pregnancies, help teen mothers and their babies get health care and help young mothers learn the job skills they need to make it on their own.

The program is also aimed at reducing the incidence of child abuse and saving tax dollars by cutting the number of welfare cases. Ms. Miller noted that half the recipients of Aid to Families with Dependent Children are women who had their first child during their teen years.

"I think in the long run it ought to save money," Ms. Miller said.

Fiscal benefits aside, the program is best understood in terms of the basic services it provides to young mothers.

Edith, for example, needed a ride from her family's trailer in Auburn to her doctor's appointments, information about social service programs and someone to talk to about having a baby.

Mary needed more — help in finding an affordable apartment and furniture, getting public aid, learning to take care of a baby and how to stretch money. She also needed someone to talk to.

"I ain't growed up all the way," she said.

Her problems started not long after she became pregnant with her daughter, Trixy. She didn't get along with her family and she was kicked out of their home.

"I was on the streets for six months with Trixy in my belly," living with friends and getting along as best she could, she said.

In January, after the baby was born, Mary shared a one-room apartment with her child and a swarm of roaches. Family Services found her another apartment, but she was forced out by fire. Parents Too Soon helped find her a new and better home and helped furnish it.

Edith lives at home in Auburn with her newborn daughter, her mother, brothers and sisters. She hopes to return to school.

"I want to make something out of my life ... not always be on public aid," she said. "I want to set a good example."

Ms. Miller said that as of mid-March, the Parents Too Soon program had served about 13,600 clients and expected to serve about 21,000 by the end of September.

Earlier this month, Gov. James Thompson told lawmakers that Parents Too Soon was "one of the most ambitious programs this state has undertaken."

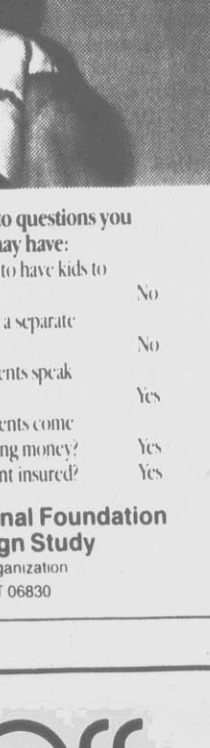

Thompson said the program involves "helping young people avoid the mistake of having children before they are ready to handle the responsibilities or helping them to understand what goes into child-raising if they do have children."

For Edith, Mary and others whom Parents Too Soon has helped, the message is simpler.

"Don't ever close the program," Mary said. "There's a whole bunch of girls out there who need help and these people can do it."

Dear Abby

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1983 by Universal Press Syndicate

Friend Is Demoted To A Bridesmaid

DEAR ABBY: Four months ago, my closest friend since the eighth grade asked me to be her maid of honor. (I'll call her Julie.) I was thrilled but a little surprised because I had assumed she'd ask her sister, "Jennifer," who is a year younger than Julie.

Well, yesterday Julie called to tell me that she was sorry, but her mother insisted that she ask Jennifer to be her maid of honor and she hoped I wouldn't mind. I told her she was hoping for too much — that I minded very much — and she shouldn't have asked me if she didn't want me. She said she really wanted me, but her mother decided she should have her sister instead and she couldn't say no to her mother. Abby, whose wedding is it, anyway?

Then Julie asked me to be a bridesmaid. I told her no thanks — if I couldn't be her maid of honor, I didn't feel like attending her wedding.

Next thing I knew, her mother called to say that Julie had made a "mistake" to ask me in the first place and I should be reasonable and be a bridesmaid.

Now I'm hurt and angry and all mixed up. what should I do?

DEMOTED

DEAR DEMOTED: Accept the invitation to be a bridesmaid, but please get over the anger, hurt and resentment. A sourpuss makes a very unattractive bridesmaid.

•••

DEAR ABBY: A woman signed "Impossible Dream" consulted you as to the meaning of a recurring dream she'd been having. She dreamed she was pregnant — at age 74!

Your reply, "Perhaps you have a fertile imagination," was less than adequate and even flippant.

Nature does not waste time with "impossible dreams." This lady's dream of preganacy definitely has a possible meaning.

I suggest that it meant she still had a potential for growth in a new area of her life.

BEAUTIFUL DREAMER

DEAR DREAMER: Although dreams surely have some significance, I am not "Jung" enough to interpret them. Many readers, however, offered the following:

1. Dreaming of being pregnant means something could be "growing" inside her. A tumor, perhaps. She should see her doctor without delay.

2. Her dreams of pregnancy indicate that she is unconsciously longing for romance.

3. Pregnant at 74! That was no dream, lady, that was a nightmare!

4. Obviously, the woman is about to give birth to a creative, unique or quite valuable idea.

5. It must have been something she ate.

Woman Episcopal Priest: It's Not Mashed Potatoes

By LINDA G. CALECA

INDIANAPOLIS (UPI) — The nation's first woman Episcopal priest says religion isn't "like instant mashed potatoes. It takes time."

"There are so many do-gooders, especially church people, who just go in somewhere and want to bring God to everyone immediately," the Rev. Jacqueline Means of Indianapolis said. "It just doesn't work."

Mrs. Means, 47, outspoken street-smart associate priest at St. John's Episcopal Church in Speedway, should know — she has spent much of the past seven years bringing her ministry to the state's prisons, jails and halfway houses.

"I know that if Jesus were here today, he would go where people are hurting," she said. "He would be in the prisons and the jails."

"Reverend Jackie," as she likes to be called, never had to be sold on religion. As a child of alcoholic parents, she was looking for God, looking "for the helpers."

"I was always wondering where the helpers were," she said. "I was always wondering why no one came around to ask me why I didn't have any lunch money, or why I didn't have any book money."

She was so unhappy as a teenager that at age 16 she dropped out of high school in Peoria, Ill., and got married.

"I got married to get away from the house," she said.

Four children later, Mrs. Means, married to truck driver Delton C. Means, decided she wanted to spend her life helping others. She announced to an archdeacon at her church that she wanted to become a diocese layreader and read lessons and prayers during church services.

"Archdeacon Fred Williams came to the church the next Sunday and brought his book of rules, and pointed to a page, saying, 'It says here layman, not laywoman. There are no laywomen.'"

"I said, 'That's not fair. I want to know why I can't do it.'"

"I think I almost gave the poor man a heart attack," she said, laughing. "Shortly after that, I began training to be a layreader."

In April 1974, she became the first woman deacon of the Episcopal Church, and on Jan. 1, 1977, she was ordained the nation's first woman Episcopal priest.

Trained as a nurse, she continues to work for a college degree.

"I had to be the most unlikely person in the world to be ordained the first woman priest, but that's what I wanted, and I was a gutsy thing," she said.

It took guts to weather the ordination, which was marred by protestors outside All Saints Episcopal Church in Indianapolis.

Mrs. Means said the ornate ceremony is "like a wedding. They ask if anyone objects, and two people spoke up" against women priests.

"With life changing so fast every day, people don't want the church to change," she said. "They want to see the same people in church each Sunday, do the same ritual. They want to sit in the same pews."

But slowly, Mrs. Means said, the church is changing.

She says her family has suffered because of her work.

"My children will tell you the church took their mother away from them," she said.

She was divorced from Means in 1979 after 25 years of marriage. She recently divorced her second husband, an ordeal that has sent her into therapy.

Mrs. Means spends her days, and a good many evenings, listening to others. Her primary congregation is Indiana's prison population, mostly women at the Marion County Jail and the Indiana Women's Prison in Indianapolis.

"The women just need someone to talk to, someone who isn't there one day and gone the next," she said. "They need to talk to someone who isn't tied to the system."

It was Mrs. Means' work at the Women's Prison and other prisons that led her six years ago to help found Craine House, a halfway program for women operated by Episcopal Community Services.

"I noticed that it was like a revolving door," she said. "Women would finally get out of prison, and then they'd go back to their ways and get thrown right back in."

Mrs. Means' latest fight is to establish a residential program for non-violent offenders in a vacant Indianapolis motel.

"This is something that is badly needed for the young first-offenders who have not committed violent crimes," she said. "They shouldn't be locked up with the hardened criminals..."

Mrs. Means is angry because church officials in the community are fighting the program.

"I can understand it if community people were leading this fight, but church people should be looking at the needs of these young people," she said.

When Mrs. Means isn't fighting for what she believes, she preaches. Her favorite day is Sunday, because that's when she "gets people thinking."

She preaches while walking the aisles or sitting on the communion rail because "when you speak from a pulpit, you're speaking down at people."

"It's hard to find a place where a woman priest is really accepted, but I know there's a place like that out there," she said. "And I'm going to find it."

Book News

FROM SHEPPARD MEMORIAL LIBRARY

By WILLIE MAE GIBBS

Recent additions to the library's collection of cookbooks encourage being creative in preparing meals, and at the same time provide the opportunity of serving meals which are nutritious and low in calories.

"Cooking Light" by Susan McIntosh contains over 500 delicious, calorie reduced recipes, including favorites such as crepes, spaghetti, hot chocolate and muffins. Recipes in this book prove that a low-calorie diet does not have to be just tolerable but can be enjoyable. Dieters can for example enjoy pancakes if they top this breakfast favorite with a light fruit sauce instead of a high-calorie syrup.

Recipes are just a part of this special cookbook. Other features include menu suggestions, weekly menu plans, a calorie/nutrient chart and general dieting and exercise tips — guidelines to help you develop healthier living and eating patterns. The wealth of information on cooking light, along with the wide variety of intriguing menus that this book offers may be just the stimulus you need to start practicing a new way of cooking.

Nancy Baggett, Ruth Glick and Gloria Greene are the authors of a unique cookbook called "Don't Tell 'Em It's Good For 'Em." In this book they offer a very practical solution to others who like them are concerned about their family's eating habits and would like to improve their chances of living long, healthy lives. Realizing that you can't change eating habits overnight, they have experimented on their own families using their invention of the Nutri-Steps, an easy-to-follow system of reducing sugar, fat and salt in your food so gradually no one will ever notice. They have developed over 250 creative and appetizing dishes that are guaranteed to appeal to even the most finicky eaters. Their book includes everything from main dishes to soups, salads, breads, snacks and desserts.

In addressing the problem of how to cook healthy foods that the family will eat, the authors have concentrated on adaptations of favorites that taste good and still keep fat, salt and sugar to a minimum. The basic recipes in this book are more healthful than versions found in standard American cookbooks. Each basic recipe is followed by one or two or even three further improved Nutri-Steps.

Spring At Asheville's Biltmore Is A Flowering Profusion

MASS OF COLORS ... The English Walled Garden at Biltmore House and Gardens becomes a mass of red, yellow and white blooms with the advent of spring. Approximately 50,000 Holland bulbs are planted annually in the four-acre garden.

ASHEVILLE — If the profusion of buds is any indication, the spring of 1984 will be one of the best in several years. That's the prediction of Bill Alexander, greenhouse and gardens manager of Biltmore Estate, who has been watching the spring weather patterns with great interest.

"The last two years have been characterized by late spring freezes; 1982 was particularly bad," he said. "This year we've had some unusually cold weather, but the plants seem to have survived it well."

Long known for its spectacular English Walled Garden, Biltmore Estate also possesses one of the finest collections of native azaleas in the United States. The nucleus of the collection is the result of 14 years of work by a band of botanical explorers called "The Azalea Hunters." In fact, they were Chauncy Beadle, Biltmore's first landscaping director, and two associates who gathered native species between 1931 and 1945.

The extensive records kept by "The Azalea Hunters" document the plants they found, their original habitat, and their various blooming characteristics. The search led them as far south as Texas and as far north as Pennsylvania. In 1940, the collection was given to Biltmore Estate and planted in an area formerly designated as "The Glen," where it has grown and flourished ever since.

Today, the Biltmore azalea collection provides a subtle dimension of color to a season characterized by vivid hues. It begins in the English Garden with the blooming of approximately 50,000 Holland bulbs in mid-April. By planting the bulbs according to color in geometrically shaped beds, a tapestry-like effect is created.

In late April and early May, the native azaleas begin their show of color. The blooms, which range in color from white to shades of pink, yellow, orange and orange red, are complemented by a variety of other plantings in the Azalea Garden. These include conifers, magnolias and hollies, in addition to the rare Franklinia tree and Elliottia.

It is not until late May and early June that the mountain laurels bloom, followed by the native rhododendrons almost a month later. "The Rosebay rhododendrons, used extensively along the approach road, are characterized by luxuriant foilage and pale blooms," said Alexander. "They are always a surprise to people accustomed to the large, brightly colored blooms of the hybrids.

"The mistake many people make is in coming to see our native rhododendrons too early in the season. Generally, they don't bloom at Biltmore until late June or even early July," he added.

"People interested in knowing about the blooming sequence at Biltmore House and Gardens are welcome to call our ticket office. Since the flowers' schedules are so affected by the weather, it is always wise to call ahead to see what is blooming," added Alexander. In addition to the bulbs, azaleas and rhododendrons, Biltmore Estate's spring blooming sequence includes an array of ornamental trees and shrubs from around the world.

Biltmore Estate is open to the public for self-guided tours for which admission is charged. The Estate includes Biltmore House, the 250-room French Renaissance chateau built here by George Vanderbilt in the 1890s; formal and informal gardens; a winery, which will be open to the public in the spring of 1985, and Deerpark Restaurant, where visitors to the Estate can enjoy lunch.

The Estate is open from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. daily throughout the year except for Christmas Day, Thanksgiving Day and New Year's Day. Information about Biltmore Estate and its spring flowers may be obtained by calling (704) 274-1776 or writing to: The Biltmore Co., One Biltmore Plaza, Asheville, N.C. 28803.

Seek Fund Increases

RALEIGH — Arts Advocates of North Carolina's board of directors voted unanimously at its April meeting to support a $2 million increase in the 1984-85 state appropriation for the N.C. Arts Council, the primary state agency to serve over 600 non-profit arts organizations and 20,000 individual artists throughout the state.

At the first meeting of the board of directors, held April 6, officers were elected. They are: Mary D.B.T. Semans of Durham, president; Roy Parker Jr. of Fayetteville, vice president; Betty Cone of Greensboro, secretary, and Thomas Wright III of Wilmington, treasurer. C. Miller Sigmon of Raleigh has been hired as executive director.

The action taken also included planning a statewide membership solicitation program, including corporate solicitation.

Arts Advocates was recently established as a statewide lobbying organization to meet the need for a politically non-partisan voice for all the arts in the state. Arts Advocates will provide a membership network to promote a unified approach to arts advocacy, education and lobbying at the state and federal levels.

Jugtown Pottery Next At NCMA

By SHARON BROOM

N.C. Museum of Art

RALEIGH — "Jugtown pottery: The Busbee Vision," an exhibition of 45 objects from the collection of the North Carolina Museum of Art, will be on view at the museum May 5-Aug. 19. The exhibition demonstrates the influence of the arts and crafts movement and of oriental ceramics on the production of Jugtown Pottery, founded by Jacques Busbee, as well as the Jugtown revivial of traditional American forms.

Busbee, a portrait painter, and his wife Juliana Royster Busbee were Raleigh residents who became interested in the work of North Carolina potters in the early 1900s. The Busbees began to research pottery making in Moore, Randolph and Montgomery counties in the eastern Piedmont, but found this once-thriving native craft on the verge of extinction. After moving to New York City in 1916, the couple decided to try to revitalize the North Carolina pottery industry and to provide a market for the wares by selling them in their New York City tearoom which Juliana Busbee operated.

The ideas that the Busbees brought to the project were influenced by the arts and crafts movement which had emerged in the late 19th century. Philosophers of the movement held that modern tastes had been corrupted by industrialization, and that society should return to the simple beauty of handcrafted objects. While this theory had led to the creation of short-lived Utopian communities, it was Jacques Busbee's intent to supply arts and crafts principals to an already-existing community where a local craft had once flurished.

Returning to North Carolina, Jacques Busbee worked for five years with the independent potter-farmers in the Moore County area, many of them from families which had been producing wares since before the Revolution. He found, however, that these older craftsmen were not receptive to his ideas, and that their output failed to meet the demand of the Busbees' New York clients.

In 1922 Jacques Busbee opened Jugtown Pottery in Moore County, near Seagrove, a workshop where he could train the younger potters of the region and encourage greater production. Among those who came to work at Jugtown was 18-year-old Ben Owen, who joined the project in 1923 and remained there until 1959 as chief potter. Owen's work became synonymous with the excellence of Jugtown pottery, and he remained one of the most respected potters in the Southeast until his death in 1983.

The Busbees' original intent was to produce traditional wares such as the whiskey jugs, storage jars and pie dishes used in the region for generations; however, they soon learned that the market demanded more variety. Jacques Busbee began to introduce decorative vases based on oriental forms — "translations," he called them, rather than reproductions. As the exhibition demonstrates, some of the Jugtown objects were directly influenced by Chinese and Korean examples which Jacques Busbee found in libraries and museums, while others show a subtle blending of these oriental forms with traditional American shapes.

The extraordinary artistic and commercial success of the Busbees' Jugtown experiment led, as they hoped, to the revival of production among other potters in the Moore County area, which is today a vital and well-known center of pottery activity.

After the death of Jacques Busbee in 1947, the North Carolina Art Society formed a committee to establish a collection of Jugtown pottery in his honor, and the Jacques Busbee Memorial Collection later became part of the collection of the North Carolina Museum of Art. Gay M. Hertzman, assistant director, has organized the exhibition from the memorial collection and subsequent gifts.

The exhibition is accompanied by a fully-illustrated catalogue which also includes oriental prototypes of Jugtown forms. A free lecture on the exhibition will be given by Mrs. Hertzman on Sunday, June 24 at 3 p.m. in the museum auditorium.

The exhibition and catalogue are supported by funds from North Carolina Art Society.

Museum hours are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tuesday through Saturday, 1-5 p.m. Sunday. There is no charge for admission. For information, call (919) 833-1935.

(Editor's Note: The Greenville Museum of Art, 802 S. Evans St., has in its permanent collection what is reputed to be the third largest public collection of Jugtown pottery. The GMA collection numbers 30 pieces, all but one given to the musuem by Elizabeth Savage. The majority of these Jugtown pieces are from the Busbee era.

The production exemplifies the purpose of the North Carolina Opera which is to tailor productions for students and adults in schools and communities throughout the southeast. NCO is the official educational and touring arm of the Charlotte Opera Association.

The NCO is funded by the North Carolina Arts Council, Burroughs Wellcome Co., Carolina Power and Light Co., A. E. Finley Foundation, First Citizens Bank & Trust, IBM of Raleigh, the Martha and Spencer Love Foundation, and the Cato Corporation.

Wanted: Loveable Dog

"Wanted: loveable, lightfooted look-alike of Sandy, the winsome dog made famous in the long-running comic strip 'Little Orphan Annie.'" That's the classified ad being run in several North Carolina newspapers by The East Carolina Summer Theater.

On July 2-7, the Summer Theater will present the Tony Award-winning Broadway musical "Annie," which numbers among its featured players a runaway dog named Sandy. To find just the right personality for the role, the Summer Theater has scheduled auditions on Wednesday at 7:30 p.m. in McGinnis Theater, corner of Fifth and Eastern streets on the ECU campus in Greenville. Dogs who yearn for the smell of greasepaint and the roar of the crowd should attend.

According to director Edgar Loessin, "We are looking for a dog who is a little bit of a ham and yet has the discipline of a seasoned performer. The dog must be trained (or easily trainable), responsive to commands, certainly not shy in front of large crowds, love children and be available for rehearsals which begin June 17."

Dog owners should prepare their pets to walk alone across the 40-foot width of the McGinnis Theater stage and to respond to simple commands.

Dogs being cast can expect to have their travel expenses met by the theater, and owners should be available for rehearsals and performances if needed.

For further information call 757-6390.

'Finian's Rainbow' Opens At Rose High On Friday

The selection for this year's annual spring production at Rose High School is the well-known musical, "Finian's Rainbow," a song-filled favorite of many years standing. The musical also incorporates substantial portions of magic and wit.

"Finian's Rainbow" will be presented at 8 p.m. Friday, Saturday and Sunday in the Rose High School auditorium. Tickets are priced at $3 in advance and $4 at the door. Reservations may be made by calling the school office, 752-3169.

A deaf mute, Susan communicates through dance.

The romance between Woody and Sharon is expressed in songs such as "Old Devil Moon" and "If This Isn't Love."

Missitucky is the setting of this fantasy touched with reality, the home state of Senator Billboard Rawkins — Jeffry Jones. The ambience of the play is further revealed in the sharecroppers of the Missitucky area, who provide energetic dances under the direction of choreographer Sherryl Mercer to melodies such as "The Great Come and Get It Day" and "This Time Of Year.'

Air Force Open House May 6

SEYMOUR JOHNSON AIR FORCE BASE — The Thunderbirds, the U.S. Air Force's Air Demonstration Squadron, will show their precision flying maneuvers on May 6 during the 1984 Armed Force's Open House at the base.

The Thunderbrds performed their first aerial demonstration on June 8, 1953, at Luke AFB, Ariz. In the ensuing years, the group has displayed its artistry before millions of spectators worldwide. People of 45 nations, across a variety of cultures and languages, have seen the skill and precision of Air Force pilots performing intricate maneuvers in the skies.

The Thunderbird mission is to demonstrate the capabilities of Air Force jet aircraft and the professional skills that the Air Force develops in its people to fly and maintain these aircraft. This plays a major role in supporting Air Force recruiting, retention and community relations programs.

Beginning their second year in the F-16 "Fighting Falcon" jet aircraft, the Thunderbirds continue the tradition of excellence established by their compatriots of years past. All Thunderbirds are volunteers, competitively selected for assignment to the team.

Other displays and demonstrations during open house will include an F-15 "Eagle" jet aircraft. The F-15 is an all-weather, highly maneuverable tactical fighter aircraft designed to gain and maintain air superiority in aerial combat.

Aircraft on static display will include an F-4E "Phantom" jet of the 4th Tactical Fighter Wing, and a KC-135 "Stratotanker" air refueling jet assigned to the 68th Air Refueling Group.

The KC-10 "Extender," capable of refueling fighter, bomber and cargo aircraft, and designed to transport passengers and equipment, will also be on display with many other aircraft.

The 4th Security Police Squadron will demonstrate its Military Working Dog Teams and precision hand-to-hand combat techniques. Drill teams and musical groups will also be at the open house, which will be conducted from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Free admission and ample parking will be available.

Aussie Mel Gibson Starring In New Bounty Mutiny Film

By BOB THOMAS
Associated Press Writer

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. (AP) — When Mel Gibson burst upon the movie scene in such Australian-made films as "Mad Max" and "Gallipoli," American audiences figured he came from Down Under. The Aussie accent sounded like the real thing.

But as his fame grew and the interviews came, people learned that Gibson had been born in Peekskill, N.Y. He lived his first 12 years in the United States until his parents and their 10 children moved to Australia.

When he was here last year for the opening of "The Year of Living Dangerously," the actor's accent was unmistakably Australian. Back again for this year's Academy awards, he sounded American.

"That's because I've just made two films as an American," he said. "The muscularity of the mouth becomes a habit that is hard to change."

The two films illustrate Gibson's rise as an international star: "The River," with Sissy Spacek and "Mrs. Soffel," with Diane Keaton.

One warm afternoon at the Beverly Wilshire Hotel, Gibson sat down for an interview. He was dressed in a terrycloth robe, and the suite looked cyclonic: clothes draped over furniture, filled ashtrays on the breakfast tray, phone messages strewn on the floor.

"I resist in the beginning, but once I get into them, I can find them enjoyable. It's just a matter of getting into gear," he said. "I want people to see 'The Bounty,' and if interviews will help, I'll do them."

"The Bounty," is Dino De Laurentiis's $25-million version of the mutiny tale that has already been filmed twice — three times if one includes the Australian version with young Errol Flynn.

Gibson is cast as Fletcher Christian, played by Clark Gable in 1935 and Marlon Brando in 1962. Gibson studied with a voice coach to adopt the accent of an English gentleman-sailor of the 1780s.

The new film contains something remarkable during the mutiny itself. Gibson, who has presented an intense but self-controlled image on the screen, suddenly erupts in violent emotion as he rails against the brutal Bligh, played by Anthony Hopkins.

"Yes, that was rather a surprise when I did it," said the 28-year-old actor. "I studied both the Bligh and the Morrison accounts of the mutiny. Both of them were eyewitnesses, and both said that Christian was 'extremely agitated' and 'sweating and crying.'

"'I'm in hell,' he said. "I figured the way to play that was by flipping out," Gibson said."I didn't tell anyone what I was going to do. After the first take, the director, Roger Donaldson, ordered extra cameras. Obviously, I couldn't do it many times. This was primal-scream time."

Gibson has been on the move for more than three years, making films in Manila, England, Tahiti, Tennessee and Quebec. Everywhere, it seems, but Hollywood. That suits him.

"I don't really know this area," he remarked. "If you want to know about the inside of the Beverly Wilshire Hotel, I can tell you. But Los Angeles — I only come here for two weeks or less, and I see nothing of it.

"I don't fit here. It's just not my kind of place. I guess it's a matter of 'different strokes for different folks.'"

Traveling hasn't been so bad, he added, because he is generally accompanied by his wife, Robyn, daughter and twin sons — "they stay with me as long as they can stand me, then they go home. I'll see 'em in a couple of weeks."

Gibson is the major product of the creative explosion of the Australian film industry, which, he lamented, has fallen into a decline.

"They opened the door and let other artistic people into the country," he said. "A lot of good things happened, but there were some abuses, too. So they shut the door, and filmmaking is dormant at the moment. I think they made a mistake. They should welcome talent from wherever it comes. And those of us who work abroad can come back with what we've learned."

Gibson's next film will be made in his adopted land, another "road culture" film similar to the solitary biker he played in "Mad Max" and "The Road Warrior."

Joe McGlohon Came Home For Club Date

By JANE WELBORN
Reflector Staff Writer

Saxophone player Joe McGlohon, here recently for a night club performance, sighed and said, "I love coming home."

But, McGlohon, a member of the Soul Survivors band with singer Steve Bassett, said he would rather travel around the country with the band than stay in one spot.

The Greenville native said he began playing the saxophone in sixth grade. "Mr. (Jim) Rodgers taught me band in junior high school and high school," he said. McLawhorn plays the guitar and some piano, which rubbed off on him from his mother, who is a piano teacher.

After graduation from Rose High School in 1972, McGlohon began a stint with Heartwood, a country-rock band popular in North Carolina. He moved to Atlanta with the band and cut a couple of records.

He began playing with the band Good Humor five years ago after moving to Richmond, Va. He recently joined forces with Richmond-based Steve Bassett, who McGlohon describes as "a blue-eyed soul brother."

"I am dedicated to go on playing with Steve until the creative outlet is gone," McGlohon said. The band plays rhythm and blues music.

McGlohon and the band were in Greenville as the opening band for Stevie Ray Vaughan and Double Trouble at a local nightclub.

"I'm good enough to get work and keep my family fed and a roof over their head," McGlohon said. He added that through the years it has been important to him to develop credibility as an artist and for his own self-respect.

"I've made contacts through the years and have been exposed to major recording artists," the musician said. "I have gotten to know lots of good people and play in lots of good places.

"Although playing live is my favorite, I would eventually like to be an engineer in a recording studio," he added.

McGlohon, after reminiscing about old times in his hometown, said, "A couple of weeks ago, the band opened for Delbert McClinton here" at a nightclub. "I saw 15 or 20 people in the audience that I went to high school with. I was proud to let them see that I've gotten as far as I have."

Beaufort's Children Theater Date

WASHINGTON — The Beaufort County Arts Council Children's Theater will present its production of "Striking Out!" for two performances May 12. There will be a matinee at 3 p.m. and an evening performance at 7 p.m, both in the Washington High School Auditorium.

General admission is $3 for adults and $2 for children 12 and under. Call 946-2504 for ticket information.

"Striking Out!" is the comic portrayal of a co-ed baseball team facing the worst slump of the season — without the coach. A children's show in six innings, this is a perceptive play about young America's favorite pastime — Little League.

Set in the visitors' dugout, with monologues on the pitcher's mound and at home plate, the Angels brass out a real game against an imaginary team of powerhouse hitters. The team members discover they have a lot to learn about themselves and the true spirit of baseball.

The cast includes eight boys and six girls, ages 8-13, and one adult. The production is being directed by Joey Toler.

Impressions Of, And Souvenirs From, The Tornado Of March 28

FARMER-AUTHOR . . . Tom Forbes, his three and one-half year son, Daniel, are shown against the backdrop of a large felled oak tree in the forest near their house. The tree was one of many toppled by the March 28 tornado.

Text And Photos By Jerry Raynor

"I still get in an emotional state, find myself torn between a great sense of joy that we didn't get what others got and had to suffer for, and great sadness at what happened to others," said Tom Forbes, speaking about the March 28 tornado that roared its path of death and destruction through eastern North Carolina. "I still find the tears welling up when I remember some of the heartbreaking things I saw."

Forbes, a Pitt County native, author and farmer, his wife and young son narrowly escaped the brunt of the Wednesday night path of horror. "We didn't realize until daylight Thursday just how near it came to our house," said Irene Glover Forbes, known throughout North Carolina as a gifted potter.

The two, and their three and one-half year son, Daniel, live, according to Tom, "back in the woods beyond where the owls are" at the end of a mile-long plus dirt road that branches off State Paved Road 1411. "In short, we live in Beaufort County three miles northeast of the Pitt-Beaufort County boundary line at Tranter's Creek," Tom explained.

Their home, a modest-sized showpiece constructed primarily by the two over a period of a couple of years, incorporates old beams and stained glass windows salvaged from various vanished churches. The home site, built on a tree covered knoll overlooking fields, woods, and at back, a large pasture, is also the location of Irene's pottery studio and Tom's book-filled writing hideaway.

"At first, I had this sense of guilt that maybe it wasn't fair we were spared as we were," Irene commented. "Later, I came to realize it is not wrong that I am grateful for this blessing which has been ours."

The two said at daylight Thursday, March 29, they saw that the path of the tornado had been headed straight for their house, but veered just before reaching their home. "It was as some inner force directed the storm to turn away from us," Tom remarked. "It literally made a right angle turn 300 feet short of our house, raced across a small field, and entered another woods.

"On Wednesday night, the night of the tornado," Tom recalls, I was sitting in our living room reading William Least Moon's 'Blue Highways.' Irene was in the next room taking a nap on a sofa. Daniel was asleep upstairs. I knew severe storm warnings had been posted, but really hadn't thought too much about it. Irene woke up, came into the living room, turned the TV on."

"I turned to channel 12. The weather man's map reported showed tornadoes in southern areas of Pitt County and eastern areas of Beaufort County. 'Tom, that's right within our area,' I said. He became concerned then, put his book down."

"At that moment, our lights went out. I could hear a roar. I found a flashlight and ran upstairs to bring Daniel down. I put Daniel on the sofa, myself on top on him. Irene got on the floor. We covered ourselves with all the pillows we could find.

"The roar of the storm became louder," Tom continued. "It sounded like a big vacuum cleaner mixed with other sounds like meat frying or pop corn popping."

"It felt like a vacuum cleaner too, the immense pressure," Irene added. She pointed to a wood stove in the living room. "The door was closed, closed tight, but the pressure of the wind blew the door open, scattered ashes all over us."

Tom said the roar, the feel of imminent explosion lasted only a short time. He found his small battery-operated weather radio and turned it on. "I got the Eastern Pines Fire Department station and heard the guys there carry on conversations about the difficulty of getting to D. H. Conley High School because of roads being blocked by trees, pieces of trailers, fallen wires. We knew then that it had been a terrible storm."

Without lights, with rain still falling heavily, they decided the wise thing to do was to stay put. "I lit candles, ready to put them out if we heard another roar," Irene related. "To calm their nerves, I served Tom and Daniel big pieces of German chocolate cake.

"Daniel has two pacifiers, and he asked for both. 'They will protect me from the storm,' is the explanation he gave for wanting both. Eventually we decided to go back to bed. Tom kept his boots on, refused to take them off."

"My security blanket," he laughed. "Somehow I felt safer with them on."

Irene remembers waking up at 4:30, startled. "There were two balls of strong white light bobbing just outside the windows," she said. "My first thought was 'My God!, on top of everything else, the Martians have come!" A check by Tom revealed the bright lights were portable lights utility repairmen carried. "It's incredible to me that these men were out all night, tracing down fallen lines, restoring power whenever possible. Fortunately our area was relatively easy to restore service to."

At first light Thursday, they were up. "That's when we were able to equate the frying, popping sounds to the amazing sight that greeted us," Tom said. "The field in front of our house was littered with tree tops, limbs, huge segments of tree trunks torn from the forest and deposited in the field."

Later on Thursday, the full power of the storm became more evident. "I went to work with my tractor to pull the litter of trees out of the field," Tom explained. "Many of the limbs, four, five, six inches in diameter were jammed four to five feet into the earth. The tow chain on the tractor wouldn't budge them. I had to attach a hydraulic lift and pull them up straight up before I could drag them off the field."

Within the forest, more dramatic evidence of the power of a tornado came to light. "At one place, two huge pines, at least 28 inches in diameter, had been snapped off above the level of my head. They evidently had been sucked up into the air, then driven straight down into the earth only a foot or two from their trunks.

"We have surmised, after studying the pattern of destruction through the forest," Irene explained, "that this type of thing, the upward suction, happened at any point the storm changed direction, a sudden twisting process. Then, at points where the storm traveled in a straight line, the demolished trees were felled in a herringbone pattern."

A small logging firm was called in to salvage whatever was possible from the damaged forest. "They have finished the job now," Tom said. "They logged about 7,000 board feet of timber. It was twice as expensive to get the forest cleared because they had to go all through the woods to get the fallen and broken trees. I hope I'll about break even on costs."

A COLLECTION OF DEBRIS . . . For a month following the tornado, Tom Forbes has been accumulating bits and pieces of checks, a handmade poster, a book, a book cover, bills and a page of music. These he are assembling in his writing studio as a souvenir for his young son, Daniel.

. . . "It was if some inner force directed the storm away from us."

. . . "My first thought was: 'My God! On top of everything else, the Martians have come!"

STURDY CEDARS . . . lining the dirt road to the "old house" where Irene Glover Forbes grew up, were battered and twisted by the force of the tornado. One of the cedars, out of camera range, was totally destroyed.

Souvenirs Of The Storm

It was while following the logging operators in the woods that Tom began to come across personal debris showered by the storm within the forest. "One of the first things I found was half of a check with a Route 1, Clinton address. The next day, I came across the matching half, several hundred feet away." Tom wrote the owners, Howell and Gracie Ellis, explaining how he had found their cancelled check. "I was surprised and pleased to hear from them soon after," Tom commented. "Unfortunately, they had not been as lucky as we had been." The letter from the Ellis family reported "Thank God, no one was hurt or killed" and added "we have some fine, good-hearted people in this state, and you are one of them." Altogether, the Ellis family counted as a total loss their house, their daughter's trailer, Howell Ellis' father house, a neighbor's house "and a lot of outbuildings, about 15 buildings in all." They enclosed half a dozen color photographs revealing the chaos of destruction in their immediate area.

Each week since the end of March, Tom has continued to come across bits and pieces that the tornado rained down in his fields and forests. "It's really a rather ludicrous mix," he chuckled. "Look at these," he indicated a collection of fragments stored in his writing studio.

Among the gatherings is a muddy, rain-stiffend paper back book, "Faith In God Heals," by Ernest Angley. It was opened to a page containing a passage from Matthew 23:02, followed by Angley's text: "When man humbles himself before his Maker, he never fails to reap the blessings promised to the obedient heart. (Then) "'Pride goeth before destruction, and an haughty spirit before a fall.'" (Proverbs 16:18).

"Angley is a televison evangelist who has written inspirational type books," Tom noted. "I'm not given to a sense of the prophetic, or to superstition," Tom commented, "yet it's rather striking that the storm-battered book happened to be open at that particular page."

Often, items found by Tom, as in the case of the Ellis check, have been separate pieces of an entity discovered some distance apart from each other. Another instance of this was a hand-lettered oblong posterboard sign. The first fragment found was lettered "Heaven." The second fragment, "Pennies From," was discovered a couple of days later 300 feet away from the first fragment.

"I've not yet found pennies or other money," Tom said. "Instead of pennies from heaven, I've been rained upon with debris from a tornado."

Also in the collection is a much folded, crumpled piece of music, "The First Noel," with pen and ink notations — perhaps for a piano student; the gaudy cover of a hard-core porno paper back book; fragments of checks from Grimesland and Winterville, a blue circular piece of material which Irene has identified as a cut-out piece for a quilt; and an oil bill from Tankard Oil Company in Washington. Larger pieces, stored in a barn, include a six-foot completely undamaged piece of lightweight panel "from a trailer, I would imagine," and a single brown-painted slat "most likely from a house shutter.

"I have a hunch that the porno book cover and the other items were from different households," Tom laughed.

From Tom and Irene's home, it's about a quarter of a mile to "the old home," on the farm known as The Hardison Place. That is where Irene grew up, where her mother and father lived until their deaths in recent years. When the tornado ripped through the forest, it struck directly in front of the old two-story house, now the home of Irene's brother, Bertand Glover.

The main house was not damaged, but an outbuilding, "the old spinning house, which dates back to pre-Civil War days, was skewered on its foundations," Irene said. "I think it probably would have been demolished had it not been in the embrace of an old Empress of China tree which seems to have taken the brunt of the wind from the building." (An Empress of China Tree, which bears large clusters of lilac flowers in the spring followed by clusters of brown seed pods is also commonly known as a Royal Polonnia tree).

Just before the dirt road to the old house circles into the yard, there is a stand of very old cedars on each side of the road. These are now broken, twisted, one of them totally destroyed. "Those trees are well over 100 years old," Irene said. "They have weathered a lot of storms, but nothing like this before."

Experiences Fermenting

Asked what, if any of the emotions and experiences he has gained from the storm might become the basis of future writing, Tom replied: "There's ideas fermenting in my mind. I've jotted down the recollection of my feelings, my experiences. They will likely show up in a manuscript I'm working on now."

Tom's first novel, "Quincy's Harvest," a story about a teenage boy growing up in rural Pitt County during the Depression, was published by Lippincott several years ago. It received wide critical acclaim, including a highly favorable review in The New York Times Book Review.

"Just now, I'm still too close to it all to be objective about my emotions," Tom said, "but in time I'll be able to write about it, to see the whole picture in a clearer, less emotional light."

Little Space Can Appear To Be Big

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

In areas where living space is affordable and plentiful, it might seem impossible to convert a 15-foot square room below street level into an apartment providing all the amenities.

But if there is one thing interior designers who work in large cities where space is at a premium have learned, it is how to make a little space seem like more than it is.

As a result, the best ideas for utilizing unattractive and small spaces tend to come from large cities. Recently, for example, the inventiveness shown by Daniel Stern, a 36-year-old New York designer, in converting a 15-foot room into a comfortable studio apartment garnered him an award from the S.M. Hexter Co. as a "residential interior of the year."

Stern said that although he chose to select luxurious and expensive furnishings for his own use, many of the same ideas could be carried out on a much smaller budget.

For example, anyone seeking to gain storage and living space can employ, as he did, convertible furniture such as sleep sofas and tables that function as both cocktail tables and dining surfaces. Such furniture is now available in a number of price ranges, or it can be fashioned by a do-it-yourselfer.

To convert the small room he found into a home for himself, Stern designed a setting with shelves along a number of walls and used a wood screen to hide the shelves and to provide screening from the outside since passersby could look in. He also created space for dining, entertaining and sleeping.

The wood lattice material of ash, which Stern used, allows light to enter from the windows and, since it is lit from behind, creates an effect of more natural light than is actually present. For total privacy, electrically controlled shades can be rolled down over the windows which are at ceiling height.

While not totally opaque, the lattice-work screen which lifts off a track in some sections and opens like a hinged door in others hides the items stored behind it on shelves sufficiently for his purposes. Those who wish to do something similar, but at lesser cost, could seek lattice or lathe in building supply or garden outlets or could fashion their own from wood strips, he said.

Eliminating horizontal and vertical planes and replacing them with a diagonal arrangement of furniture and space has visually expanded the space he had at his disposal and also has made it possible to tuck two triangular closets into the apartment.

Stern opted to create a custom convertible coffee table-dining table. He cut apart two Mexican pillars to make four chunky and interesting "legs" on which a glass top normally rests. The table in front of the sofa is on casters so it can be rolled out of the way.

To seat up to eight for dinner, he replaces the glass top with a larger wood top. The table's legs are raised to dining height through the use of four brass rods which slip into the bases and lock.

Other stratagems he has adopted to create a pleasanter space include upholstering the walls of the room to minimize noise from the street. He installed a suspended ceiling above which he added insulation for noise control inside the building.

'We create something personal and different'

Here's the Answer

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

Q. — Our house has shingled siding. We would like to change the color of it. Would be all right to use latex paint?

A. — Yes but there is more to it than that. You did not say whether the shingles ever were treated. What's on them — stain, paint, a wood preservative or nothing? If it is stain, you will have to be careful the stai doesn't bleed through the paint. One way to find out is to do a small, inconspicuous area and then wait about a month. If the stain does not bleed through, it's probably safe to proceed. You can apint over paint and probably over a preservative, but, in the latter case, use the same test as for stain.

Q. — What's the difference between an allen wrench and a hex-type wrench?

A. — None. They are one and the same.

Q. — We intend to buy wall-to-wall carpeting. It is sold by the square yard. I have always had trouble figuring out square yardage. Can you help me?

A. — Yes. To get square yardage, measure the length and width of the room in feet. Multiply the footage of each dimension and divide by 9. To make sure you haven't made a mistake, take the dimensions in feet to the store where you intend to purchase the carpeting and ask the dealer to compute the square yardage, then compare it with your own.

Q. — I have to install a fixture on a ceramic tile floor, but do not know how to drill holes in the tile without causing it to split.

A. — Measure very carefully to be sure they will match the holes in the fixture. A quarter of an inch can make a big difference, so be certain the holes are exactly right. To make a hole, first tap a nail i the precise spot, hitting it gently yet being sure it goes a bit below the glazed part of the tile. When that has been done, apply some regular household oil into the hole. You will need an electric drill that operates at slow speed. Use a carbide-tipped bit. Drill very carefully, as though you were drilling into an egg and did not want to break the shell. The hole then should be filled with a small piece of dowel. When you fasten the fixture, drive screws into the dowels. You will have strong fastenings.

Q. — I have done a lot of wood finishing in the past, but never have used wood filler. What puzzles me is when to use a paste filler, when to use a liquid filler and when not to use any filler at all?

A. — A paste filler is used on the coarser-grained woods, although there has been a tendency in recent years to skip the filler and enjoy the appearance of the texture. In any case, some of the woods where paste filler is used are oak, walnut, mahogany, chestnut, hickory, rosewood, ash, elm, butternut, satinwood and locust. Fillers generally are not used on woods such as pine, fir, cedar, cypress and poplar. Liquid fillers ar used sometimes on woods such as birch, maple, cherry and redwood.

Q. — How deep should foundation footings be? Is it true they should be on wet soil?

A. — Footings can be anywhere from 6 inches to 5 feet below the surface. The depth depends on a number of factors, including the depth of frost under certain weather conditions and what has been learned over the years in local areas. Check your local building codes. Footings should rest on soil that is very slightly damp, definitely not soil t at is wet.

(The technique of using varnish, shellac, lacquer, stain, bleach, remover, etc., are detailed in Andy Lang's booklet, "Wood Finishing in the Home," which may be obtained by sending 50 cents and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to Know-How, P. O. Box 477, Huntington, NY 11743. Questions of general interest will be answered in the column.)

Garden Clinic

Q. Will my Easter lily survive if I plant it outside? (D.C., Elon College)

A. Yes. Plant your Easter lily in a sunny spot. One receiving four to five hours of sunlight per day is sufficient. Don't cut the stem off, but allow it to die naturally. Your Easter lily will bloom again next summer.

Q. What are some herbs I can grow in hanging baskets?

A. Trailer herbs such as rosemary, thyme and dittany are naturals for hanging baskets. Lemon balm, chives, sweet marjoram and parsely are also nice in baskets. If you hve room for only one, parsely may be the most useful since it is used fresh as a garnish, and fresh and dried in many dishes.

Q. Is there a spray to kill Eastern tent caterpillars? I have several tents in an ornamental cherry tree. (P.L., Graham)

A. Tear the web apart. If the webs are out of reach, spray them with a jet of water from the garden hose. There is no practical chemical control.

Opening lead: King of ♡.

The trend today is toward five-card major opening bids. Some years ago, the late Sonny Moyse, when editor of The Bridge World, devoted much ink to espousing the cause of the 4-3 major-suit fit. Even before that Adam Meredith, the mercurial genius of British bridge, was advocating his idea of three-card spade suit opening bids.

Meredith's theory was that the spade suit possessed great preemptive qualities. It stole the whole one-level from the opponents. He practiced what he preached. This hand is from a tournament many years ago.

In third seat Meredith trotted out his favorite one spade opening bid. When he ran from two no trump doubled to three clubs, North should have realized what was going on. Instead of passing, North rashly leaped to four spades, but a catastrophe was averted by Meredith's skill.

West led the king of hearts and continued with the ace. Meredith ruffed, finessed the queen of diamonds successfully and ruffed another heart.

With impeccable timing, declarer cashed the ace of diamonds and the ace-king of clubs. He ruffed a club low in dummy and was overjoyed to find that suit divided evenly. He came back to hand by ruffing dummy's last heart with his queen of trumps. By now he had now scored eight of the first nine tricks and he was in his hand for the coup de grace.

Declarer led a club and West was helpless. If he ruffed low, declarer would overruff with the table's ten, and the trump ace would be the fulfilling trick. So West ruffed with the jack of trumps.

Meredith, however, had a neat counter. Instead of overruffing, he sluffed a diamond from the board. Now dummy was poised over West's K-9 with the A-10. No matter how the defense proceeded, sooner or later dummy would score both trumps for the fulfilling tricks.

Beaufort Keeps Charm But Adds Modern Look

By DENNIS PATTERSON
Associated Press Writer

BEAUFORT, N.C. (AP) — In the mid-1960s, Beaufort had the look of a town that had been around for more than 250 years.

The harbor, which had attracted whaling ships and sailors as early as 1709, was lined with old store buildings, many of which were empty and unattended.

The salt water slowly ate away at pilings under those stores and only breaks in the building gave a view of Bird Shoals, the barrier island across the harbor which was home to wild horses and more common coastal wildlife.

Scattered through the residential areas were homes dating from the 1760s to the mid-1800s, some fairly well kept, but others in disrepair.

But 20 years, a major investment of local and federal grant money, private restoration and community pride have changed the look of the town from seedy to charming.

The old stores on the harbor side of Front Street are gone now, replaced by a boardwalk, docks and waterside shops that attract ships from all over the world.

The local historical society manages 10 buildings dating from 1767 to 1859, and private homes throughout the town sport small shields issued by the historical society showing the year the homes were built.

Old homes, the kind that can be restored, are a hot item on the real estate market for more and more people who want to retire to a quaint, seaside community that has kept in touch with its past.

The boardwalk project, which was in the planning stages by the late 1960s and in the construction phase by the early 1970s, has become a model for what can be done with federal urban renewal money.

Town administrator A.C. Blankenship said town officials regularly get calls from other towns wanting to know how they made the project work.

"Unfortunately, this seems to be one of the few places where it (federally funded urban renewal) has been a success," Blankenship said. "We think it's because of the planning that was done and the community support."

The entire project cost about $1.5 million, with the town providing 25 percent of the expenses through bond money and in-kind contributions.

The cutbacks in federal grants, Blankenship said, have so far not affected the town's plans for continuing work on the harbor area.

"We just got another grant that will be used to build a 36-room inn and more dock facilities on the waterfront," Blankenship said. "Work on the docks has already started."

Sailboats of all sizes tie up at the public docks year-round, and others anchor in the harbor, using ship's boats to ferry passengers to the boardwalk and the array of new shops that have sprung up beside old established businesses downtown.

"There was a time when there'd be only a half dozen ships in the harbor," said Charles McNeill, curator of the Hampton Mariner's Museum, which is a port of call for most visiting sailors. "Now, you can count 150 to 200 masts in the harbor."

McNeill said maritime research done by the museum shows Beaufort has returned to its roots in creating a waterside boardwalk.

"It's really putting it back the way it was 100 years ago," McNeill said. "Then, there was a boardwalk there which was sort of the town social center."

"You'd meet people there you might not see anywhere else, and it became sort of a social place," McNeill said. "That's happening all over again now. People are coming back for their nightly stroll on the boardwalk."

McNeill said the growth of the museum, stemming from full state funding beginning in 1975, is directly linked to renewal efforts downtown and will culminate next year with the museum's move to a new building on Front Street.

Beaufort Mayor Joyce P. Fulford said the renovation efforts met with some resistance at first, but drew widespread support once the project began. She said it is still difficult to explain exactly why the project has been so successful.

"It's really been a combination of things," she said. "I can't pinpoint any one thing that made it work. But the community was slowly dying and people knew something had to be done."

She said the town, which has about 4,000 residents, has tried to keep its quaint character while developing a new look.

"We have an architectural board that approves all plans in the historic district," she said. "We've had some fights with businesses over the kinds of signs they wanted to put up and so on, but it's because we want to keep the character of our town."

That character, in part, is set by the old homes that dot the narrow streets of the historic district.

A lot of those homes have been restored by private homeowners, said Betty Shannon, director of the Beaufort Historical Association.

The association, which is made up of volunteers, provides an historic homes tour of five of the 10 buildings it manages in a historic complex a block off the waterfront.

The association headquarters in the Josiah Bell House, built about 1825, is furnished with Victorian-era antiques, including a forerunner of the juke box which plays music using large, perforated steel discs.

Some of the town's house foundations were built from ballast stones used by sailing ships because the area's sandy soil contained no stone.

Carteret County's third courthouse, which became a court building in 1796 after being used as an Anglican church, features an original 13-star American flag.

An apothecary shop and doctor's office from 1859 features a set of medical saddlebags used by circuit-riding doctors and original medicine bottles found when the building was moved to the historic complex.

The thick walls of the old county jail, built about 1829, keep the two large cells, jailer's quarters and museum room cool even in the heat of summer. A hangman's noose over the stairwell to the second floor was once used to dispatch a prisoner sentenced to death, Ms. Shannon said.

"Moving the jail here was a monumental project," Ms. Shannon said. "It weighs 50 tons and was moved in one piece. While it was being moved, people would come by every morning to see how many feet the old jail had been moved since yesterday."

A small house on the complex grounds will become a "hands-on" historic house for school groups and other visitors. The house already includes weavers who loom rag rugs and will eventually include on-the-hearth cooking and other old-time skills.

IRS Declaring War On Tax Protestors

By KEVIN McGILL
Associated Press Writer

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Armed with computers and bolstered by Justice Department troops wielding new laws, the Internal Revenue Service appears to have declared all-out war on tax evaders — whose ranks have swelled in recent years.

In Louisiana, the IRS and Justice have drawn a bead on, among others, Gerald Savoie of Sulphur, who runs what he calls the Louisiana Caucus Club and distributes a 70-page book entitled "Tax Loopholes for Working People."

Henry Holmes, a spokesman for the IRS district office in New Orleans says "Tax Loopholes," which Savoie sells for $10, is nothing more than a package of blatantly illegal subterfuges.

Savoie, he said, is just one among an estimated 40,000 people in the nation (up from 6,000 in 1978) who are known to be trying to illegally avoid paying their income taxes.

Holmes said a Justice Department suit seeking to force Savoie from distributing his book is one of four such actions already taken to keep people from marketing tax evasion measures disguised as legal tax shelters. More are planned.

Meanwhile, the battle is being waged on other fronts:

—In New Orleans, U.S. Attorney John Volz announced on April 12 that a federal grand jury returned a four count indictment against Gerald D. Grass of the suburb of Metairie.

He was charged with providing false information on tax forms that led his employers to stop withholding income tax from his wages. If convicted he could be fined $10,000 and sent to jail for a year.

—In Houston, the IRS recently began using a new computer system that automatically finds and calls delinquent taxpayers while flashing their records on a video screen monitored by an IRS official.

The computer can reach out and touch any delinquent taxpayer in Louisiana or in the Houston and Austin IRS districts. It puts top priority on putting the person at its monitor screen in touch with businesses or individuals who have owed a lot for a long time.

—In Bogalusa, La., Glenn Crain was ordered this month to pay $4,500 in damages for petitioning the courts with what was deemed a frivolous tax case. Crain, echoing a common theme, had claimed his wages were not taxable income and that the income tax is unconstitutional.

Crain, the court stated, "knew when he filed his petition that he had no reasonable expectation of receiving a favorable ruling."

—The IRS says there are 40 criminal ivestigations going on in Louisiana alone to weed out tax protesters. Laws passed in 1980, Holmes said, provide not only for stiff civil penalties, but also for criminal penalties in some cases of up to $100,000 in fines and five years in jail.

Savoie said he is confident he can survive the Justice assault, claiming an injunction stopping him from distributing his book would be an infringement on his Constitutional rights.

"Certainly they can't preclude my freedom of speech," he said in a recent telephone interview.

Hospital Stay Can Be Eased For Child

WASHINGTON (AP) — "Hospital experts agree that children suffer less and recover more quickly when family members play a key role in the hospital care of children," says Susan C. Farkas, research associate at The Catholic University of America's National Center for Family Studies.

Yet despite this consensus, she says, too few families are allowed to become involved when their children are hospitalized. School-age children are rarely given adequate emotional support by hospitals, adds Ms. Farkas, the author of the monograph "Hospitalized Children, The Family's Role in Care and Treatment."

What most people don't realize is that the severity of the stress children experience during a hospital stay is not necessarily related to the severity of the illness, she says.

"A child about to undergo a minor operation may be even more upset than a child who is facing open-heart surgery," she explains. "Most children are intensely afraid of needles and also fear that they will never wake up after anesthesia. They are often angry at their parents for letting them get into the situation."

Other factors causing stress to hospitalized children are fears of separation from parents, friends and home, and of the unknown. Some children feel guilty about being hospitalized, notes Ms. Farkas.

"If old enough to understand the seriousness of their diseases or injuries, the children may regard the hospital stay as punishment for something they did wrong."

Ms. Farkas offers these suggestions for parents of a child facing hospitalization:

— Learn as much as you can about the nature of your child's illness and reason for hospitalization.

— Ask for explanations from hospital staff if there are issues you don't understand.

— Find out from hospital staff how best to explain your child's medical situation to him or her.

— Take seriously your rights and responsibilities to help make decisions about your child's care.

— Help the hospital staff understand your child.

— Be aware of your child's possible fears.

— Stay with your child to provide reassurance and company when necessary and possible.

— Teach your child to take responsibility for his or her own treatment. Independence is a critical part of the emotional life of a school-age child.

— Help your child keep in touch with friends and school.

From PHELPS CHEVROLET

By Norman Vanhorne

STEERING FAILURE WARNING

In a recent California study of 409 fatal single-vehicle accidents, almost one-third had one or more mechanical defects. Steering system deficiencies accounted for over 26 percent of these mechanical defects. Fortunately there are warning signs before steering failure. Don't ignore them. Here's what to look for:

Shake, shimmy or bumping felt in the steering wheel when on smooth roads usually indicates improper wheel balance. Out of balance wheels can cause shimmy and loss of control at highway speeds. This condition also greatly increases wear on tires and suspension points.

Shake, shimmy or steering backlash on rough roads is usually a sign of one of three things: worn tie rods, ball joints or idler arm. The failure of any of the three will result in the complete loss of steering control.

★★★★★★★★

When you think Chevrolet—think PHELPS CHEVROLET—where you get a good deal plus a great deal more. We pride ourselves in offering the lowest price, maximum trade allowance, low cost financing and quality service.

ECU's Jeff Johnson Studied Fishermen's Social Networks

By NANCY DAVIS
UNC Sea Grant College Program

In New England, they're called "high liners." Here, they're known as "smart" or as "experimenters."

They're the fishermen who are respected. The ones whose names always come up in conversations about commercial fishing. The ones who are first to try something new. They are the leaders.

Sea Grant researcher Jeff Johnson, an anthropologist at East Carolina University, recently completed a study of social networks, information flow and the adoption of technology among North Carolina commercial fishermen. He found that the relationships in a fishing community have a strong influence on the way fishermen do things.

Johnson's study is the first of its kind to concentrate on fishermen. Previously, studies focused on farmers. Those studies pointed to people who had higher incomes, who had more education, and who read a lot as leaders in the community. "But, fishermen are different from farmers," says Johnson. "Farmers may not see their neighbors for weeks. But fishermen pull into the same harbor every day. We need to know how information gets passed among those fishermen."

Johnson took his study to Crabtown. He won't divulge the real name of the town he studied, but he does provide a few clues. Crabtown is a rural fishing village along the central North Carolina coast. For the past two centuries, Crabtown's existence has depended on commercial fishing. Johnson says fishing is more than an occupation for the approximately 500 Crabtown residents; it's a lifestyle.

Johnson spent a summer with the fishermen of Crabtown. He talked with them, fished with them and interviewed them. (Marcus Hepburn, a former Sea Grant researcher, helped Johnson collect the data.) And, he found that the Crabtown fishermen were cliquish. By questioning the fishermen about their association with other fishermen, Johnson was able to construct a model of social networks in the fishing village consisting of four cliques. "Once we know the structural relations in the community, we know how to get information out," says Johnson.

Crabtown fishermen consistently referred to two main cliques — the "Big Fleet" and the "Little Fleet." The cliques are based on the age and fishing styles of its members and where they dock their boats. The Big Fleet is composed of fishermen in their late 30s. The Little Fleet is made up of fishermen in their late teens or early 20s.

Out of the four basic cliques, at least two fishermen emerged as "opinion leaders," says Johnson. One of those fishermen was referred to most often by other fishermen as someone they talked to frequently. The other leader is part of the Big Fleet, but he has connections with the younger group as well. These "cross-clique ties" allow him to serve as a liaison between the two groups, says Johnson.

To test the social networks in Crabtown, Johnson examined the adoption of two innovations: a sled for shrimp trawling and a kicker plate for clam kicking. The sled replaces the heavy wooden doors on the inside wings of a shrimp net. The kicker plate directs the prop wash from the boat down at the sediments, loosening clams and making them easier to net. The kicker plate has increased the efficiency of mechanized clamming and has allowed fishermen to exploit clam beds in areas not accessible with the use of traditional techniques.

Johnson found different results for each innovation. Most of the fishermen adopted the sled for the first two shrimping seasons. But, the kicker plate showed a longer period of adoption.

Opinion leaders aren't the only influencing factors in the adoption of an innovation, explains Johnson. For example, a fisherman is more likely to adopt an innovation if he can see it in operation. One fisherman told Johnson, "You see somebody do something and you'll try it."

Earl Chadwick, a Marshallberg fisherman, was the first in Carteret County to try a sled configuration on his 26-foot trawler. He heard about it from relatives who were fishing down south. Chadwick says most fishermen learn about new gear from other fishermen. "Fishermen are like a bunch of ducks," he says. "One of them does something and all the others follow."

Johnson says fishermen adopted the sled quickly because it is plainly visible, particularly when the boat is in the harbor.

On the other hand, the kicker plate is found on the rudder below the waterline. The only time a fisherman would see the plate is when the boat is in dry dock. Johnson says the kicker plate's low visibility contributed to its long adoption period.

Word-of-mouth isn't the only way information travels. Johnson says fishermen also find out about innovations by listening to their VHF or CB radios.

The radio is so effective in spreading information that some fishermen either keep it turned off or talk in elaborate codes that only members of their clique can decipher.

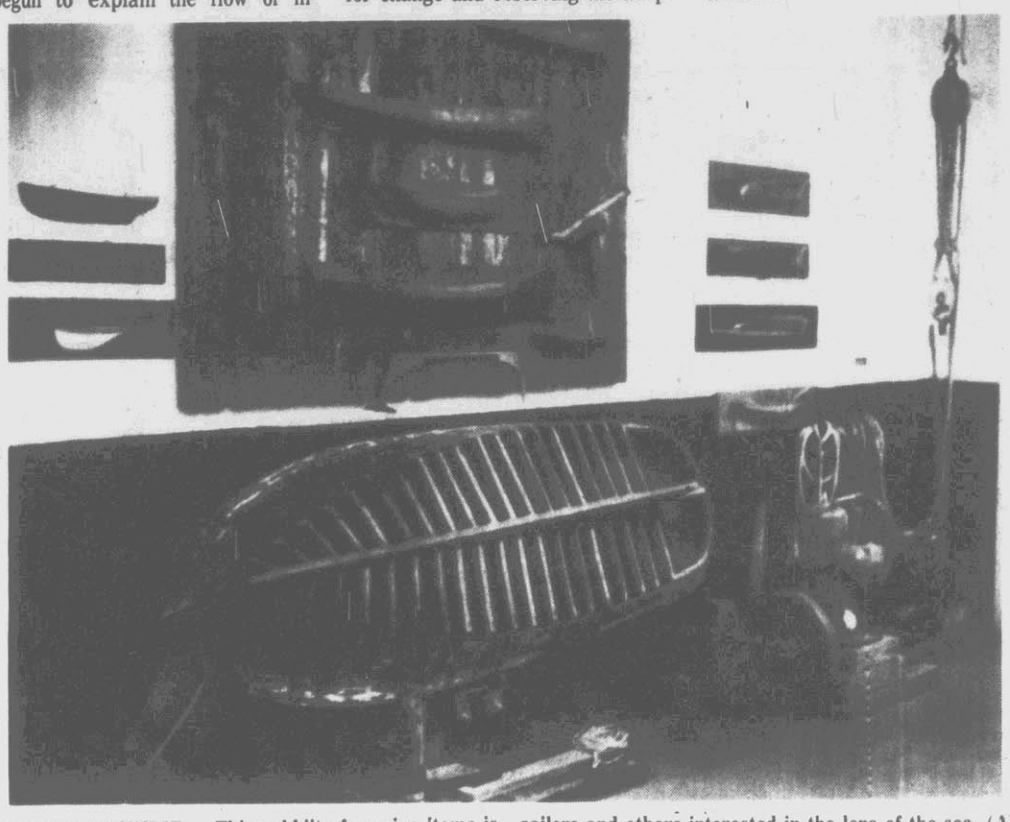

The opinion leaders have other ways of learning about innovations. "People who read commercial fishing periodicals tend to be more experimental," says Johnson.

But, he adds that education is not necessarily a determinant of an opinion leader. "For the older fishermen, a seventh-grade education in their day was pretty good. It's as good as a high school education is today," says Johnson. "But once a fisherman knows how to read and write, that's all that matters out on the water."

Jim Murray, Sea Grant's Marine Advisory Services director, says Johnson's study will help his team improve the way they do business. "Our agents can use the study to pinpoint the leaders for themselves."

Johnson says his study has just begun to explain the flow of information through a fishing community. His next step would be to follow these fishermen for three or four years, monitoring the cliques for change and observing the adoption of other innovations.

He adds that it's time to know as much about fishermen and their social network as we know about farmers.

Faces For The Dead

By MICHAEL ROSS

SHANGHAI, China (UPI) — Singing to himself helps Jin Miaolin take his mind off work. "It cheers me up," said Jin, who spends most of his time bent over dead bodies.

Jin is a make-up artist — but not for the living. He works at the Longhua state crematorium, preparing the faces of the dead for their funerals. In his spare time, Jin is a popular composer. Two of his songs have become nationwide hits in China.

"I've seen so much sadness in my job that it has given me the feeling I should write happy songs," Jin said in a recent interview at his place of work.

Jin began composing 10 years ago and more than 80 of his songs have been recorded since then. But his big break came in 1980, when "Postgirl," his most popular tune, was broadcast on the radio and quickly sold out in the stores. That was followed by another hit, "Happy Young People," in 1981.

Popular music in China — that is, music that is officially encouraged to be popular — tends to be a mixture of clumsy morality and ideological mush with no sex and a heavy emphasis on the virtues of clean socialist living. It is not exactly the stuff that Michael Jackson hits are made of; more like the philosophy of Karl Marx as sung by Pat Boone.

Jin's music is no exception.

"Postgirl" is a snappy little tune about a female letter-carrier who loves her work and sings about how determined she is to be successful. "Happy Young People" is full of la-la-las and explains "why Chinese youth are so happy," Jin said. Some sample lyrics:

"...Why am I so happy?

"Because I love the colorful life.

"I am like a lark in spring, flying into blue skies.

"I love the ordinary work."

"The song is about myself," Jin said.

Spring home improvement: a breath of fresh air

Spring fever sparks boost to home repair

With the arrival of spring, everything gets topsy-turvy. People peel layers of clothes as the sun warms the air. All the senses are aroused during the spring and the first thing noticed is the immediate surroundings.

You know that you have "spring fever"

The desire to clean everything, "spring fever," comes to the fore after months of unconsciously leaning on walls in the entranceway to remove drippy boots and shoes. The "cozy" atmosphere in the living room and/or den, which developed through the accumulation of books, magazines and reams of newspaper, now seems at least a little cluttered and, perhaps, overwhelming.

For people who do not live in buildings regularly maintained by a superintendent, the interior is the least of the two dilemmas. Many times, more pressing problems like, "How am I going to fix that leaky roof?" or, "Does the house need a new coat of paint?" take priority.

Inside or out

Whether starting on the inside or the outside, one must order priorities of improvements as well as establish budgets.

Often, a specialist is called in to repair a specific problem area, be it the plumbing, roofing, or painting.

The reasons why

Limited finances and a sense of confidence to do the job quickly and efficaciously prompt homeowners to pick up paint brushes and rollers, remove storm windows and install insulation.

Once the outside looks polished, the interior must be spruced up as well. Window shades and blinds are pulled up and curtains drawn to "let the sun shine in."

Consider carpets

One major checkpoint is to determine whether the carpet or rug needs to be cleaned; vacuuming doesn't remove deep down build-up.

This is also a good time of year to assess the decor. Should the walls be repainted? Should pictures be hung?

In addition to aesthetics, safety should be another checkpoint. Is there a fire extinguisher in the kitchen, and smoke detectors placed strategically throughout the house?

Do you have a complete supply of basic tools including hammer, screwdrivers, adjustable wrenches, nails, screws, bolts and thumbtacks for emergency repairs? Are there extra fuses or circuit breakers in case of a blow-out?

REFURBISHING YOUR HOME'S EXTERIOR involves a wide range of factors, including the house's shape and style, the look of the neighborhood and climatic requirements. Before starting this major project, advise the experts at Olympic Stain, one of North America's leading makers of paints and stains for household protection, take into account the Three P's — Planning, Preparation and Product Selection.

Planning, preparation and product selection...

The three "P's" are the key to house painting and staining

Americans intent upon adding a fresh, new coat of paint or stain to their homes this spring would be wise to mind their P's, if not their Q's, according to experts at one of North America's leading makers of paints and stains for household protection.

Planning, Preparation and Product Selection are the three key P's recommended to homeowners by Olympic Stain, a division of The Clorox Company.

Planning involves (1) taking a good look at the structure and design of your home, (2) recognizing how your home fits within the context of your neighborhood, and (3) considering the natural environment and the climate in which you live.

Draw a sketch

Before selecting the color for your home, Olympic Stain recommends that you draw a sketch of the house and try various color combinations on paper. Refer to a snapshot of your house so that important details like trim are noted.

Remember that your climate may influence your color selection. Light colors reflect sunlight, thus absorbing little heat.

Darker colors will soak in heat, perhaps an aid in cooler climate communities. Light shades will make a small home appear larger, while dark shades will scale down the look of a larger house.

Single color dominant

Except for special circumstances, contrasting colors should not be used equally. Only one color should dominate, with trim colors used to blend in with such visual elements as chimneys, rooflines, windows, doorways and entranceways.

The end result of this planning is to select house and trim colors that suit your own tastes while blending in with your home's environment.

For added ideas, simply drive around your neighborhood and study how other homes of similar structure and form are painted and stained, using this information to help you select the look that's right for you.

Once you have your plan, preparation of your house for painting becomes vital.

If you have put off repainting too long, you probably face some extra work in preparing the surface. On the other hand, if you paint too soon, you could end up with a thick build-up that may eventually crack or peel.

Before preparation, carefully inspect the south side of your home, which is subjected to the most wear, to determine whether a new coat is due.

And remember, the preparatory work is the most important part of your repainting job. Don't cut corners if you expect your paint job to last.

Then, say the Olympic Stain experts, follow these steps:

Steps to follow

- Inspect the structure to find out what you're up against. Look for peeling, discoloration bleeding in the wood, masonry cracks and missing caulk, mildew, salt build-up and rotting.
- Isolate moisture problems caused by rain, snow, frost or fog, which together cause the greatest wear on your outside surfaces. Repair all breaks in gutters and downspouts, and cut back tree limbs and bushes whose touching leaves may be the source of your moisture problems.
- Remove old paint using a paint scraper and a wire brush when flaking, cracking, peeling or buildup is evident. Always wear goggles while scraping paint from your home.
- Clean the surface using water and detergent, with a carwash hose brush attachment, if possible. Be sure to rinse thoroughly to assure proper paint adhesion later.
- Prime or seal bare wood before painting, especially those spots you have just scraped and cleaned.

You now are ready to paint or stain.

Product selection is the final and most telling step you'll take in giving your home a new appearance and added protection. Paints and stain differ in many ways; in chemical composition, in their intended use, and in their reaction to various surfaces.

Selection of coatings

Exterior house coatings are either oil base or latex. Latex coatings provide better color and sheen durability than oil base, are less apt to peel and blister than some other coats, and tend to be faster drying.

Paints come in a variety of sheens, from flat to satiny, the latter most often selected for use on trim.

Linseed Oil

Linseed Oil wood stains are unparalleled in showcasing the true beauty of natural wood, whether in clear transparent finish or in any number of semi-transparent shades that add further color and impact to that of natural wood.

Linseed oil stains provide protection by penetrating and strengthening the wood fibers. Olympic even boasts oil stains with weather screen designed to give wood added water repellency and resistance to decay.

THIS COMFORTABLE BEDROOM takes its cues from the elaborate oriental rug, "Manali," imported from India by Trans-Ocean, Inc. Picking up the deep red tones of the design is the small patterned bedspread and priscillas "Scottish Thistle" from Burlington House Draperies' Laura Ashley collection. Handwoven baskets and crafts add textural and design interest.

Source: Hand Tools Institute

STRIKE IT SAFE — According to the Hand Tools Institute (HTI), a basic knowledge of striking and struck tools helps get the job done safely and effectively. The number one safety rule, says HTI, is to wear safety goggles when using striking and struck tools. The Institute points out that the safest blow is one that is squarely to the center of the struck tool In addition, the striking tool face should be 3/16's of an inch wider than the surface the struck tool.

Beautifying your bedroom can be easy with ensembles

One of the most impressive instant improvements of all time may have been carried out by Cinderella's Fairy Godmother. The idea of waving a magic wand to transform anything in our lives from drab to beautiful has eternal appeal; some Cinderella rooms in our homes are no exception.

For instance, if your "spare" bedroom looks like a cross between an attic and your old dorm, instead of an attractive bedroom for overnight guests, be they expected or the "surprise, surprise!" kind, you should know that the drapery people have put together take-out ensembles that are really magic wands in disguise.

Bedrooms were second

"Bedrooms used to take second place in decorating the home," says Barbara Koller, product development manager at Burlington House Draperies.

"Most of the effort and expense went into the public rooms like the living room, but now all kinds of bedrooms — master, guest or kids — are getting the attention they deserve as places where we spend a great deal of private time."

The ready-made ensembles from Burlington, which combine bedspread, window treatments, pillows and round table covers, not only go together to create decorating unity, but have been designed to give everything a look that is definitely not "instant" anything: the trims, the ruffles and the ruching all look as if a custom seamstress had brought out her best braids, ribbons and piping, and had been sewing for weeks.

Unfortunately for many homeowners, when the wind whips up, the shingles on their roof blow off.

This common and costly problem can be mitigated, however, by adherence to proper application procedures and use of a wind tested and approved shingle.

Whether you do the reroofing job yourself or hire a professional roofing contractor, be sure to demand that shingles be secured and applied properly. Failure to do so not only may result in wind damage but affect the validity of the manufacturer's warranty.

New roofing shingles can be secured by nails or pneumatically driven staples. When using nails, shingles should be fastened with standard, ⅜-in. flat head roofing nails of sufficient length to penetrate into the deck.

Nailing instructions

Check manufacturer's application instructions. In general, however, the nails per shingle should be placed just below the black self-sealing stripe and driven into the shingle straight and flush with the shingle tab.

Some larger shingles may require four or six nails. Tests conducted jointly by Manville and Underwriters Laboratories (UL) have proven that, when applied correctly, staples hold every bit as well as nails.

An important advantage to the use of staples is that they typically speed the application process. Staples should be applied with the crown of the staple parallel with and below the self-sealing stripe to a depth flush with the shingle.

Can affect warranty

Further, to conform with most manufacturers' warranties, staples must be driven with an approved pneumatic stapler. Air pressure gauge is mandatory with pressure set at 90 psi.

Staples must be zinc coated, no less than 16 gauge and used on a one-for-one basis with nails. Shingles should be stapled from the end nearest the shingle just laid, proceeding across the surface.

Consumers should be aware that not all manufacturers have approval from UL for use of staples for their shingles. However, the entire line of Johns-Manville fiber glass shingles is approved and fully warrantied for use with properly applied staples.

In addition to how the shingle is secured, the design and quality of the shingle can make a difference in its ability to withstand wind. Underwriters Laboratories applies stringent wind tests to shingles and to those that pass UL awards a "UL Wind Resistance Label."

In brief, the UL wind test includes the use of a wind-generating machine capable of delivering a stream of air at a velocity of 60 miles per hour.

This stream of air is applied against a test panel of shingles adjusted to various inclines and distances from the machine for a two hour period.

Easy summertime living

SUMMERTIME and the livin' is easy . . . or it should be! According to home economists from Whirlpool Corporation, the Thin Twin Laundry System can be a big help on laundry day. Designed for consumers who want the laundry center to be in a convenient part of the home, its small size (24" wide x 71¾" high x 27¼" deep) makes it ideal for condos, apartments, vacation homes and homes with limited space.

Replace worn-out roof

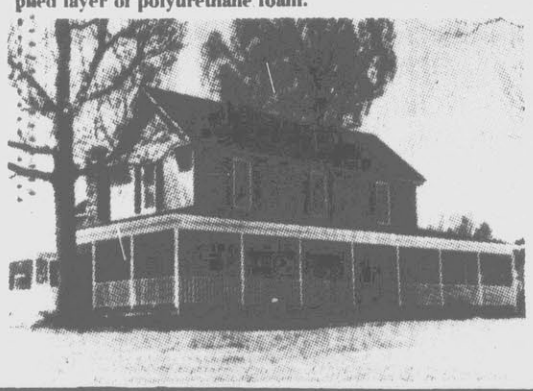

A missing shingle can be replaced. A loose shingle can be nailed. But a badly-worn roof requires reroofing, warns the Asphalt Roofing Manufacturers Association.

When selecting a roofing material, be sure to choose it on the basis of durability as well as looks. Today's asphalt shingles, for example, offer fire-resistance, low-maintenance, lasting protection and durability, as well as attractive styling.

Before and after

IN 1875, this home was a log cabin. Having last been modernized in the 1930's, the house badly needed repair and renovation. Hunter Douglas aluminum siding gave the house a new lease on life. Elite R Plus Woodgrain, Dutch-lap siding is in keeping with the style of the home and offers additional insulation since each panelback boasts a factory-applied layer of polyurethane foam.

Can your home possibly be too airtight? The experts say yes

In the days before airtight homes, ventilation was accomplished largely through cracks and leaks in the home itself. Of course, the home was likely to be a bit drafty in the winter and rather warm in the summer.

Now, with ever-increasing heating and cooling costs, homeowners across the country are tightening up their homes. Plugging leaks and adding storm windows and doors, along with increasing insulation, saves money and keeps homes cooler in the summer and warmer in the winter.

But a too-tight home can cause problems. Problems like musty smells, stained ceilings, crumbling plaster and peeling paint can be traced to a lack of proper ventilation.

Simple solutions

What can a homeowner do to maintain an energy efficient home and avoid these problems?

The problems may arise when more water vapor is produced in the home than is dispersed to the outside through ventilation. Water vapor in the home develops from a variety of everyday activities such as cooking, cleaning, laundry and bathing.

If this water vapor is allowed to collect in the attic or walls, it can soak the insulation, thereby decreasing its effectiveness. Water vapor can also soak into the internal structure of the home. Once the insulation dries, it regains its insulative qualities, but other parts of the home may not dry out as easily.

The way to avoid these problems is to prevent too much water vapor from collecting and to provide a way for it to escape to the outside air. (Some extremely airtight homes may need a heat-recovering air exchanger.)

Important areas to consider are (1) sufficient ventilation and (2) vapor barriers, if needed. (Vapor barriers are materials which retard the movement of water vapor.)

Insulate to save

Home energy experts agree that adding fiber glass insulation to your attic is probably the easiest and most cost effective way to lower heating and cooling bills, so let's look at how ventilation and vapor barriers should be used in the well-insulated attic.

Consider attic ventilation first. Proper ventilation lessens heat build-up in the summer and lets moisture escape in summer and winter. At least two vent openings, located so air can flow in one and out the other, should be provided.

Recommended minimum

As a basic guide, the recommended minimum amount of attic vent area your home should have is one square foot inlet and one square foot outlet for each 300 square feet of ceiling area.

Second is the use of vapor barriers in the attic between the inside air and the insulation. Manville insulation in batts and blankets can be purchased with a vapor barrier already attached to one side.

New homes or those without attic insulation should be fitted with this type of fiber glass insulation with the vapor barrier (facing) side installed towards the warm-in-winter (heated) part of the home. Attics with some existing insulation require unfaced fiber glass insulation with no vapor barrier.

Questions about these and other home energy matters can be answered with the help of a free brochure from Manville, "The Homeowner's Guide to Installing Fiber Glass Insulation." This brochure, HIG-505, is available by writing to: Manville Service Center, 1601 - 23rd Street, Denver, CO 80223.

Along with the insulation itself, a basic understanding of insulation, ventilation and vapor barriers is all that's needed to help provide your family with a secure and comfortable environment while lowering energy usage at the same time.

A "prescription" for greener spring lawns

Homeowners with turf problems can now discover the correct lawn mixture specifically formulated for their particular needs thanks to Greenview Prescription Lawn Seed, according to Gene Wright, General Manager of Greenview Lawn Products.

In cooperation with regional turf experts, Prescription Lawn Seed will be formulated under the direction of Dr. William H. Daniel, Turf Specialist, who has had over 30 years of turf research and teaching experience.

Effective combination

He will combine his ongoing evaluation of turf research from America's leading universities, including University of Illinois, Michigan State University, Purdue University and the University of Wisconsin, with the strength to be found in new varieties to ensure that your particular seed formulation will be the best obtainable for your lawn.

Greenview has developed a "lawn questionnaire" that asks all the pertinent questions about your lawn. This unique and easy-to-fill-out form pinpoints basic growing and maintenance factors, and queries such things as how often the area is watered and the type of drainage (is your lawn thin, patchy or thick?) textures of soil (are there sunny and shaded sections and to what extent?) — to name a few facts that will relate to prescription research.

Aluminum replacement windows brighten home, save energy

Your home was robbed last winter and you may not be aware of it. If you have old windows, they may be stealing up to 40 percent of your heat by allowing it to seep outside of your home. You can arrest this energy thief by installing aluminum replacement windows.

Energy moves through a window in one of two ways — conduction (heat or cold travels through solid objects such as a pane of glass) and infiltration (air leaks through the cracks).

Two panes of glass have a higher resistance to conduction, because they trap a layer of air between them which acts as a very good insulation.

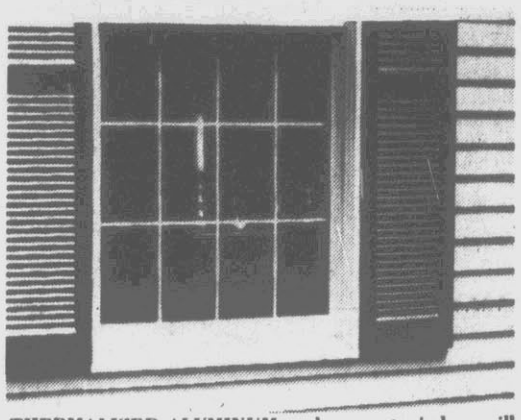

Furthermore, conduction is eliminated through the use of thermal barriers located in areas such as the sash, main frame, and between storm and prime windows.

There are several ways to tell if your windows are allowing costly heat to escape. Open your double hung window part way and try to move the sash from side to side. If it is loose, it probably leaks air.

On a cold or windy day take a fluffy feather, a strip of tissue or a lighted candle and move it around the edge of the window frame. If you see signs of leakage, you've got a problem.

Additionally, if the wooden frames are warped, rotted or if the putty has flaked away from the frames, replacement may be in order.

High quality thermalized aluminum replacement windows are as energy efficient as any other windows available today. Aluminum, wood, steel and vinyl plastic are most often used for the frames of windows.

THERMALIZED ALUMINUM replacement windows will guard against energy loss as well as provide an attractive look to your home.

The thermalized aluminum product will retain its shape and strength over the years, and will probably be more energy-efficient in the long run since wood may shrink or warp and vinyl plastic can warp away from the weather stripping. Steel may rust and, generally, requires more maintenance than aluminum.

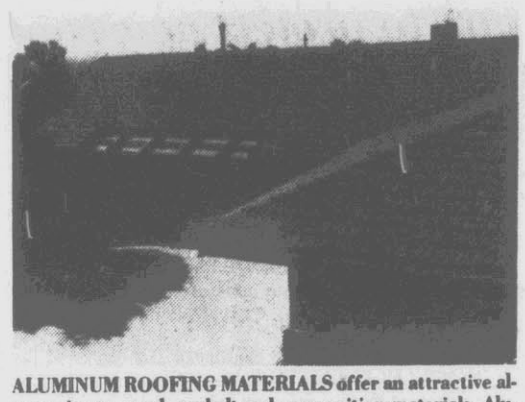

Thermalized replacement windows will guard against energy loss as well as provide an attractive look to your home. Aluminum windows usually come in a mill finish, white or bronze painted finish with additional optional special colors available from some manufacturers.

Not only are replacement windows attractive but they require little maintenance. Wooden windows usually come with a primer and must be painted after installation and then every three to six years depending on weather conditions.

Aluminum replacement windows come with a factory baked-on or laminated finish that often lasts as long as the house. The frame will not swell or rot and is structurally very strong.

The amount of heating and cooling fuel saved by your new replacement windows will depend upon the size of the windows, the severity of your weather, the type of window improvement you are planning, and the cost of the fuel you use.

For more information on how to safeguard your home from energy loss, by installing aluminum windows, write to the Aluminum Association, Department SM, 818 Connecticut Avenue, N.W., Washington, DC 20006.

ALUMINUM ROOFING MATERIALS offer an attractive alternative to wood, asphalt and composition materials. Aluminum roofing is durable, fire-resistant, leak-resistant and provides a good long term value to the homeowner.

Investing in storm windows?

Add solar screens to make them save energy all year

Thousands of homeowners install storm windows and doors each year. If you are one of those planning on investing in storm windows this season, here's a tip on how to make sure that the storm windows you buy will be year-round energy savers.

Instead of conventional insect screens that usually come on most storm windows and cover only the bottom half of the window, specify that your storm windows be equipped with a full screen made of SunScreen® solar screening.

Year-round effectiveness

This way, you'll get a window that will help you keep the heat inside during winter months and outside during summer months. And, you'll have a storm window that will pay for itself much faster in the form of lower heating and cooling bills.

How much faster? Well, a survey done by a Houston, Texas, utility company a few years ago showed an estimated pay-back period for storm windows to be from about 10 to almost 30 years, depending on whether you install them yourself or hire a contractor.

The same survey showed that solar screens could pay for themselves on summer energy costs alone in two to three years, even if contractor-installed. These screens block up to 70 percent of the sun's heat and glare for "instant" comfort on a bright sunny day.

The pay-back on a storm window equipped with a full-length SunScreen solar screen should be considerably shorter than that for a conventional storm window alone.

By "piggy-backing" the two products together, you'll save on installation costs and have a window that is year-round energy efficient.

If full solar radiation is desirable on some windows, for example, south-facing windows, the solar screens can be removed and stored during winter months.

Most energy auditors agree that windows are usually the least energy-efficient part of any building. In the winter, heat escapes through and around windows to the cold outside.

Since heat always travels in one direction . . . from warm to cold . . . the process reverses itself in summer . . . with outside heat radiating toward the cooler inside. The extra layer of insulation provided by SunScreen solar screens helps to keep the heat where you want it year-round.

Other benefits

In addition, solar screens work year-round to help protect draperies, carpets and upholstered furniture against fading. SunScreen solar screening comes in several colors and choices so you can enhance the exterior of your home.

Solar screens also provide daytime privacy . . . you can see out, but not in. And, they keep the bugs out when your windows are open.

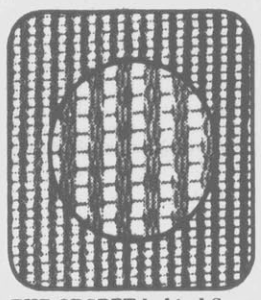

Since the solar screening is an open mesh, woven of fiberglass, gentle breezes can come in, allowing healthier, natural ventilation.

If you're shopping for storm windows, ask for SunScreen solar screening as an option. It will cost a few extra dollars now, but it will save you energy dollars for years to come.

If you already have storm windows, a screen shop can install full SunScreen solar screens for you. Look in the telephone book under "Screens — Door & Window" or "Storm Windows & Doors."

Write for information

For additional information on SunScreen solar screening, contact Phifer Wire Products, Inc., P.O. Box 1700, Tuscaloosa, AL 35403. Enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

THE SECRET behind SunScreen® solar screens is this unique patented mesh, which blocks up to 70 percent of the sun's heat and glare.

SKYLIGHTS FOR WINDOWLESS BATHS

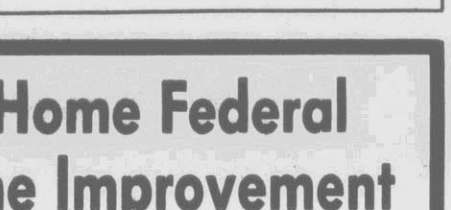

Many of today's baths are built without windows or adequate ventilation. If this is the case in your home, remedy the problem — without major remodeling — by installing a ventilating skylight.

COUPONS CAN BE PROFITABLE HOME BUSINESS

Shopping with coupons has now gone beyond saving a few cents. Rising supermarket prices have made it a necessity, but have you ever wondered how profitable it can be?

For many people refunding has become a profitable home business which they can run from the kitchen table. Believe it or not, top refunders get back most of their grocery money each month. If their grocery bill is $500 and they receive $450 in refunds, that money is clear . . . and that's a nice little business!

To reach that level, supershoppers do more than clip coupons. They know how to get coupons mailed to their door. They also know how to get information on loads of manufacturers' refunds few people seem to know about.

Manufacturers issue coupons in the hope of establishing regular customers for their products, and would like to see them used.

An astonishing fact is that, though 83 billion coupons and refunds are issued each year, only five percent of them are ever used.

A consumer service group has obtained a special report that gives the inside tips on how to get more manufacturer coupons and refunds each week.

The report also tells shoppers how to set themselves up to receive manufacturers' refund checks in the mail on a regular basis, which is one of the keys to saving up to 90 percent of their grocery bill.

Shoppers interested in receiving this report or more information about making money with these sample coupons should send a self-addressed stamped (long) envelope to Consumer Services, P.O. Box 9, Orangeburg NY 10962.

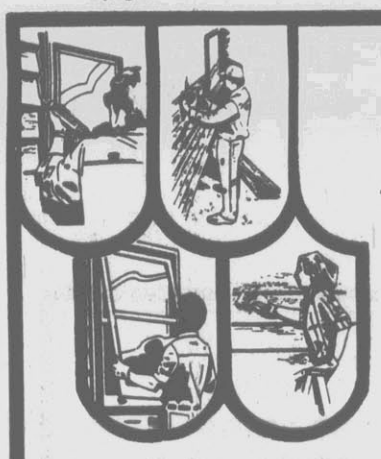

LOUVERS FIT IN SMALL SPACES

Wood louver doors, available in folding and sliding styles, are ideal for closets in areas of the home that are too small for the outward swing of regular doors.

In addition, louver doors permit the free circulation of air inside the closet to prevent mildew.

WIND DAMAGE to residential roofing can be a costly problem to homeowners. Experts at Manville advise homeowners to be sure shingles are secured properly and insist on a shingle which has passed Underwriters Laboratories wind resistance test. The entire line of Johns-Manville fiber glass shingles carries the UL Wind Resistance Label.

Roof windows can convert attics into bright and airy living spaces

Both areas, however, suffer the disadvantages of insufficient light and ventilation. One way to get around this problem in the attic is with dormers. But, they can be expensive and time-consuming.

Attractive alternative

An alternative that takes far less time and much less expense is the installation of roof windows. A newly-developed roof window, manufactured by Andersen Corporation of Bayport, Minn., can transform an attic into a well-ventilated living space with lots of natural daylight.

Passive solar heat source

One or more roof windows, says the leading manufacturer of windows and gliding patio doors, can also serve as a source of passive solar heat when installed in a south-facing roof.

High performance insulating glass, which is better than triple-pane glass of equal thickness, is standard in Andersen roof windows.

The roof window and its hardware are designed for excellent ventilation, weatherability, security and convenience.

The roof window comes in six popular sizes designed for simple installation with typical rafter and truss spacing. Venetian blinds or aluminized reflector shades to control light are optional.

Take action against mildew

ELIMINATE BATHROOM MILDEW AND ODOR . . . by caulking around tubs, showers, sinks, toilets, faucets, baseboards, sliding door tracks and other areas where water seepage can produce objectionable odor and mildew and, in time, can even promote rot and structural damage. Use Silicone II, Home Pro™ Bathroom Tub & Tile Sealant from General Electric to form a water-tight seal around bathroom fixtures. It bonds to porcelain, ceramic, glass, fiberglass, most plastics and metals, and is not affected by heat, cold, moisture and most household chemicals. This flexible silicone sealant offers a 50 year durability and is also ideal for resetting loose tiles and for mounting towel bars, cup dispensers, toothbrush holders and other accessories.

Wood moulding needs finishing

Many home improvement projects are over when the carpentry is done; others aren't finished until the finish has been applied.

Wood moulding is an example. Applying moulding to a piece of furniture, a wall, or a ceiling, is just the mechanical part of the job. Finishing the wood moulding is the artistic part.

- Opaque paint, which covers the wood completely and can be used on new wood or previously finished wood. It comes in a wide range of colors and is available as glossy, semi-gloss or flat. Paint used on new wood works best when a primer coat is applied first.
- Clear or natural finishes that let the wood grain show through. Among these finishes are shellac, lacquer, varnish, oil and wax.
- Semi-transparent stains which enhance the natural beauty of the wood grain. They include penetrating stain, non-penetrating stain, oil stain and latex stain.

Classics: decorating for design versatility

Investing in one timeless piece that always looks right with everything is the secret behind many a fashionable wardrobe.

Focusing around a single important element is also a key to keeping a room looking up to date with minimal effort or expense despite ever-changing styles.

One home purchase which can create a variety of looks is an Oriental rug. Decorative versatility is one of its key assets. In a myriad of subtle shades and intricate all-over designs, the traditional Indo-Persian patterns, for example, can go formal or casual, depending on their surroundings.

For instance, here, the richly complex rust sarouk design, "Manali" imported from India by Trans-Ocean, Inc., lends a warm informality to a bedroom highlighted by crafts and a few understated oak furnishings.

Yet, this bedroom could easily change from country to classic with a dressy bedspread and formal draperies, fruitwoods and crystal accessories, while the rug stays exactly where it is.

When even more redecorating is in order, the same Trans-Ocean rug could be moved to a dark-toned "masculine" study or to act as a foil to the sleek decor of a highly contemporary living room.

The rug needn't be limited solely to this household, however. When it's time to move to a larger house or back to an apartment for two, an area rug can be picked right up and moved.

In all-wool, the Oriental, like those of antiquity, is enhanced with the mellowing of age, so it can be expected to grace the homes of future generations.

And, since the same mideastern patterns have been in style for the past three centuries, you can be sure that no matter how tastes and styles change, this type of area rug will always be in the height of fashion.

SOLAR SCREENS can make even storm windows more energy efficient and help reduce fading and glare year-round. They can be easily installed on any type or size of window too.

Do-it-yourself wallcoverings gain favor with homeowers

Millions of dollars will be spent this year on home renovation and remodeling. And, many of those dollars will be invested in do-it-yourself products.

If you are planning a do-it-yourself decorating project, consider pre-trimmed and pre-pasted vinyl wallcoverings for one or more of your rooms.

They can make a dramatic difference in your decorating scheme, and you can do the entire job in an afternoon. The experts at May Fair Wallcoverings offer easy instructions on how to hang your own wallcoverings.

Tools

To apply pre-pasted vinyl wallcoverings you will need a yardstick, scissors, a razor knife with extra blades, a broad knife for trimming, a sponge, a plumb line and a step ladder.

You will also need a water tray which can be purchased at your local wallcovering store.

To determine how many rolls you will need, measure the height and width of the walls to be covered. Divide the total square footage by 30, the average amount of coverage from a two-bolt roll of wallcovering. From this figure subtract a single roll for every two ordinary-sized window and door openings.

After your purchase, make note of the dye lot number, pattern number, the name of the manufacturer and collection, in case you want to order additional rollage at a future date.

Preparation

Walls should be clean and dry. All nails and hooks should be removed and all cracks and holes should be filled and lightly sanded.

New or unpainted walls should be covered with a coat of oil base primer/sealer and lightly sanded.

A plumb line should be drawn on an inconspicuous wall, next to a window or door. This will be the starting point for hanging the first strip.

The length of the first strip should be the same as the height of the wall, with an extra 4" top and bottom for trimming. At least three strips should be cut using the first as a guide for pattern match.

Each cut strip should be marked to indicate the top and rolled up from the bottom with the pattern facing inward.

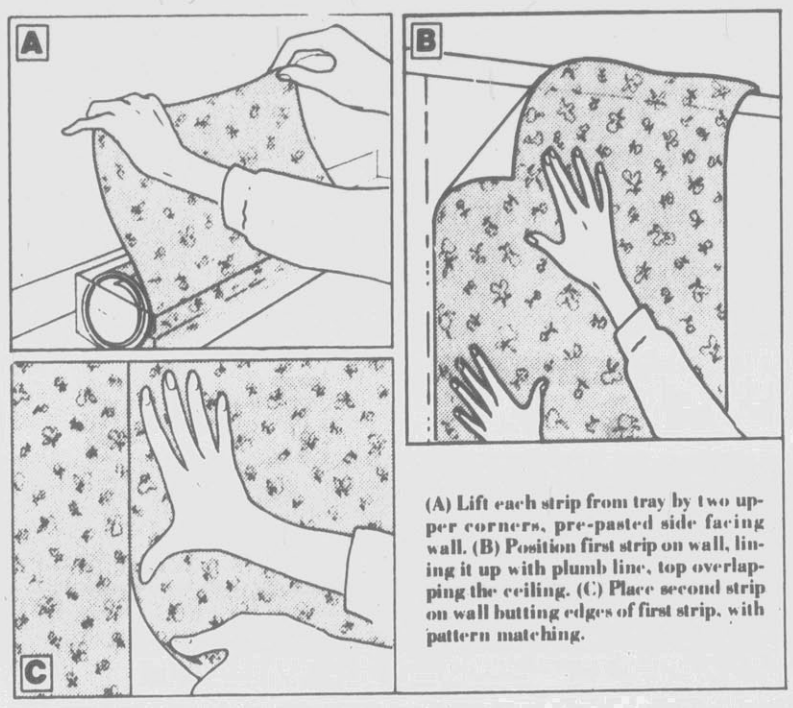

The water tray should be filled halfway with lukewarm water and placed on the floor in front of the wall area to be covered first. The first rolled strip should be placed in the tray and immersed for 60 seconds.

The strip should then be lifted from the tray by the two upper corners with the prepasted side facing the wall.

It should be put in position on the wall in line with the plumb line, top and bottom overlapping the ceiling and baseboard.

Air bubbles and excess paste should be smoothed out with the smoothing brush, using downward strokes from the center.

Excess wallcovering at the top and bottom should be trimmed with the razor knife, using the broad knife as a guide.

The second strip should be placed on the wall alongside the first strip with edges butting and pattern matching. This strip and all others should be hung in the same manner as the first.

The same procedure should be used when hanging wallcovering around windows and doors. The strip should be placed on the wall, overlapping the window or door as necessary.

Diagonal cuts should be made in the corners to allow the strip to be pressed into place around the frame and trimmed as necessary.

As you proceed around the room, wallcovering can be easily wrapped around outside corners, pressed into place and trimmed.

For inside corners, the wallcovering strip should be cut into two parts. The first length should be placed on the wall, extending ½" onto the next wall.

The second strip should be positioned in the corner overlapping the first, with pattern matching. Smooth and trim each section and continue.

MayFair's vinyl wallcoverings are scrubbable and stain-resistant, and will provide years of enjoyment. And, because they are peelable, they can be easily removed to make way for your next project.

For more information on how to hang wallcoverings, write to MayFair Wallcoverings, Nairn America Limited, Suite T-97D, The Executive Mews, 1930 E. Marlton Pike, Cherry Hill, NJ 08803.

Kitchen remodeling: practical and beneficial in more ways than one

An estimated 3.1 million kitchens were remodeled in 1983 and for good reason. Remodeling the kitchen not only makes life easier and more fun for the family, it often can increase the resale value of the home.

One of the most practical reasons for remodeling is to accommodate new appliances that are often significantly more energy efficient and provide features in tune with today's lifestyles.

Ellen Cheever, a Maytag kitchen design expert, suggests when planning kitchen remodeling the placement of appliances is critical to how well a kitchen "works."

For example, a dishwasher is both an energy and work-saver in the kitchen, but it should be placed in relation to other appliances, cabinets, counters, doors and windows.

The appliance needs to be located so that access to cupboards, drawers and counter areas is not blocked from any direction when the dishwasher door is open.

Most right-handed people work from left to right in the kitchen. But research has shown that the dishwasher may be the exception. More often than not a dishwasher is placed to the left of the sink because the counter area on that side of the sink is a natural gathering place for dirty dishes.

In a small kitchen that can't accommodate a built-in dishwasher, a movable island to house a convertible model dishwasher may be the answer. The dishwasher can be stored out of the kitchen until it is needed, then rolled in at clean-up time.

Additional considerations for dishwasher placement and energy savings are available in a new booklet, "Kitchens for Today's Living."

Information about choosing the basic shape of a kitchen, locating appliances to accommodate cooking couples and innovative storage ideas are also included. For a copy send $1 to: The Maytag Company, Consumer Information Center, Dept. 209YG-MT, Newton, IA 50208.

Steel siding provides durability and beauty

The idea was to create an outer covering for homes that would eliminate the need to repaint every few years without changing the architectural style.

The result was the introduction of pre-finished metal residential siding in 1947, which virtually revolutionized the home improvement industry.

Since that first panel of siding was produced, there has been a continuous upgrading of the product, particularly with the introduction of steel siding. Technological advances in the manufacturing process, the addition of energy-saving features, and the introduction of colors and textures to choose from, have all contributed to steel siding's acceptance by homeowners as the preferred exterior covering for their homes.

Not only is steel siding the ultimate choice for strength and durability, it is corrosion resistant, easy to take care of and practically never needs painting.

A simple wash with your garden hose can, in most cases, keep your steel siding looking new for years.

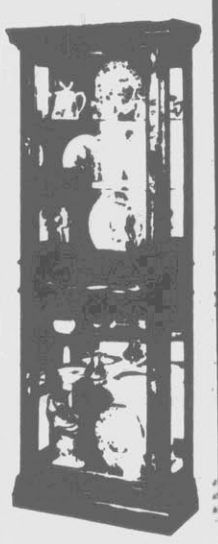

It withstands harsh winds, snow, rain and even hail and, when properly installed, steel siding can reduce your energy bills.

For the price it costs to paint every few years, you can get beauty, convenience and savings, from quality steel siding, like that made and produced by Alside, the world's leading manufacturer of residential siding products.

Some companies cannot offer you a wide range of styles, colors and textures. Alside, the originator of residential siding, offers the discriminating homeowner a wide choice of earthtone or bright colors; vertical and horizontal siding panels of different widths; and a selection of embossed natural wood-grain textures.

Savings tips...

Add fiber glass insulation for comfort and savings

If you were among those caught with high heating bills this past winter, now is the time to prepare for next winter, and guarantee your family a more comfortable summer as well.

Energy bills don't have to spiral up endlessly. There are methods for taking control of your home heating and cooling bills, and adding insulation is one of the most effective methods.

Increasing the amount of insulation in your home reduces the temperature loss from the inside to the outside. So, you provide a more comfortable home and pay less to heat or cool it, because the treated air (warmed by the furnace or cooled by the air conditioner) is kept where you want it.

For existing homes, the easiest and most cost effective place to start reinsulating is the attic. Fiber glass is the recommended form of insulation because it is light and clean, easy to handle and non-combustible.

The amount of energy savings realized will depend on the climate, the amount of insulation installed, the amount of existing insulation, the type and size of the home, living habits and family size.

Many local utility companies, if asked, will conduct a home energy audit and recommend measures for reducing energy consumption.

The Manville Building Marketing Division also offers a free, Do-It-Yourself Home Energy Audit brochure that lists the 10 most important steps to take to decrease the amount of energy use in a home.

To decide whether an attic will benefit from additional insulation, first determine the amount of existing insulation. If existing insulation is loose fill, measure its depth. If existing insulation is in the form of batts or blankets, the R-value will probably be printed on the top or bottom.

Use the following general guidelines to determine the R-value for existing insulation:

Depth of loose-fill insulation	R-value
3"	R-7
6"	R-14
9"	R-21

The R stands for resistance to heat flow. The higher the R-value, the greater the insulating power.

Once you know how much insulation you have, you can determine how much more is needed by subtracting the R-value of existing insulation from the recommended R-value for your geographical area.

Some homeowners will want to reinsulate their attic as a do-it-yourself project. In this case, fiber glass batts or blankets are the best choice for ease of installation and to ensure proper R-value.

A retail building supply center will be able to help with determining amounts needed. Manville Best-Pak™ is a boon to the do-it-yourselfer because its compressed packaging makes it easier to transport and handle.

When installing insulation in the attic floor or crawl spaces, Manville insulation experts urge that care be taken to avoid covering air vents.

Ventilation above insulation in an attic floor is necessary both winter and summer. In winter, open vents let moisture vapor escape. In summer, the moving air lessens attic heat build-up.

Always provide at least two vent openings, located so that air can flow in one and out the other. A combination of eave vents, and continuous ridge venting works the best.

If the homeowner prefers, the entire job can be turned over to an insulating contractor who will help determine the insulation needs and install the product. Many contractors use blowing wool, a loose form of fiber glass insulation.

Whether as a do-it-yourself job or hired out, adding additional insulation pays for itself in the form of lower energy usage.

HOME ENERGY EXPERTS say adding insulation to your attic is the most cost effective way to save money on heating and cooling bills. Manville fiber glass insulation in batts and blankets make do-it-yourself installation quick and easy.

In addition to fiber glass insulation, there are a number of other methods which help reduce the amount of energy consumed in a home. Reducing outside air infiltration through the use of storm windows and doors, weatherstripping and caulking around window and door frames will add to the energy efficiency of the home.

And increased insulation and weathertightness will not only improve the comfort level of your home and reduce energy usage, they can also help you get a tax credit of up to $300 from the Federal government.

Fifteen percent of the cost of insulating a home, up to a total cost of $2,000, can be deducted from Federal income tax returns.

To qualify, construction of the home to which insulation is added must have been "substantially completed" before April 20, 1977. Other energy-conserving improvements qualify for the tax credit also.

To receive a free copy of the "Home Energy Audit" brochure, # HIG-447, write to the Manville Service Center, 1601 – 23rd Street, Denver, CO 80216.

And to learn more about re-insulating your home, the Manville Corporation offers a free "Homeowner's Guide to Installing Fiber Glass Insulation" brochure, # HIG-505.

Teenager's hideaway

TREETOP BEDROOM. Tucked away among the eaves is this bedroom/study for a young teenager. The deep window seat is the ideal spot for serious reading. The daybed accommodates friends who stay over. And the Biofresh carpet by Lees resists soiling and is guaranteed to smell fresh. Biofresh antimicrobial treatment cuts off bacteria-caused odors at the source. This is important because dogs and cats stay over, in addition to friends. Biofresh is effective against spills and mildew, too.

Helpful suggestions for the selection and care of carpeting

Today's homeowner is faced with many decisions concerning purchase and care of carpet. How then does one become a smart shopper and decide on the right color, pile height, pattern and carpet texture that is affordable and meets lifestyle needs of the home?

It doesn't matter if you are buying a new home or decorating the old, carpet represents a long term, major investment. This investment is judged by the cost of the carpet and the length of its service.

After making the investment in carpet, homeowners should understand that carpet needs to be maintained on a regular basis to look good consistently and thereby get the most out of the investment.

Two-step maintenance

Carpet manufacturers recommend frequent, planned maintenance which includes two basic steps:

Frequent vacuuming and carpet dry cleaning.

Over the years, mothers and grandmothers have taught us to clean the carpet when it looks "bad." For some, this may be every three or four months; for others, once a year or less.

However, by the time dirt and spots begin to show, carpet is usually matted and some degree of damage is done. This usually results in a complete "restoration" cleaning to refurbish the life of the carpet.

Design improvements

Carpets of the '80s combine good looks with inherent properties that help carpet to wear and look better longer. Colors, patterns and textures are designed to disguise and resist soil and stains better than ever.

New fibers make the cleaning process easier. However, fiber producers and carpet manufacturers alike tell us that carpet must be maintained as the dirt shows up in the traffic lanes.

As with any carpet, the same cleaning habits should be established for maintaining treated carpets. The dirt is still there — it's just hidden.

Regular cleaning for all carpet is important not only for appearance's sake, but will, over a period of time, extend the life of the carpet.

Using a pre-treatment cleaning technique not only works for rings around collars and cuffs, but also for carpeting.

Use of a pre-clean mist before drycleaning makes cleaning process easier and loosens soil from the carpet fiber. Pre-cleaning is especially effective on tough stains such as coffee, blood or ground-in dirt.

Drycleaning with a product such as Host, is a new method of deep cleaning carpet that is easy to use, economical, safe and highly effective.

What it is

The cleaner is actually a moist, biodegradable compound made of thousands of tiny "sponges" impregnated with a blend of water, detergents and grease-cutting solvents.

The compound has just the right amount of moisture built in to remove the dirt, without causing it to be washed down deeper into the carpet. This is what traditional wet methods can do.

DO-IT-YOURSELF THERMOSTAT will replace most old fuel-wasting thermostats with programmed savings. It lowers or raises temperatures up to 10° and returns to normal for heating or heating/cooling systems. Economy schedules are automatic — set it and forget it. Save on costly energy while you're sleeping or away from home. This Robertshaw thermostat pays for itself in months, pays off in savings for years. Sold nationwide in home centers, building supply and hardware stores, it carries a three-year warranty.

BY FOLLOWING TIPS from the KitchenAid Dishwasher Information Center, you can take full use of the labor-saving advantages the dishwasher was designed to offer.

Dishwashers clean more than just dishes

It would be a real time-saver if you could put your entire house in a dishwasher for cleaning. Obviously, you can't. But dishwashers aren't just for dishes, which is really good to know when it's spring cleaning time.

By enlisting the aid of your dishwasher, you can save the time spent on soaking and scrubbing by hand, and gain extra hours of leisure time to spend with your family and friends.

The Advisory Board of the KitchenAid Dishwasher Information Center (KADIC) — a clearing house to provide consumers with answers to all their questions on dishwasher performance — suggests that there are a number of household items, other than the normal daily dishes, that may be safely and efficiently cleaned in the dishwasher.

Once considered a luxury item, the dishwasher has moved to the top of the necessities list of more than 45 percent of American households, primarily for its time-saving features.

By using the dishwasher to clean your refrigerator's special compartments, drawers and ice trays, for instance, you'll be taking full use of the labor-saving advantages the dishwasher was designed to offer.

Not only can your dishwasher save you time, it can save you energy as well. Eighty percent of the total cost of operating a dishwasher is the cost of the energy used to heat the water.

With a dishwasher which heats its own water, such as the KitchenAid, you can turn back the setting on your water heater to provide 120° F incoming water and save 10 percent or more on home water heating costs.

In addition, the average machine uses only 8-15 gallons of water during a complete cycle, which is generally less than would be used for handwashing.

Following are some recommendations from KADIC for uses of the dishwasher that will lighten your spring housecleaning load:

- Glass chimneys from hurricane lamps; glass globes from chandeliers and other lighting fixtures;
- Kitchen canisters (caution with lacquer or non-waterproof finishes);
- Range top splash trays (position carefully to avoid damage to rack coating);
- Oven broiler trays (same caution as above);
- Range hood filters (Caution: Anodized aluminum will discolor from use of detergents and high water temperatures);
- Down-draft range air filters and cooking grids (same caution as above);
- Bathroom cups and toothbrush holders (load in small-items basket);
- Shower curtain rings and other bathroom accessories;
- Refrigerator compartment drawers and ice cube trays;
- Kitchen caddies used to hold cooking utensils;
- Vegetable brush and nylon mesh cleaning pads;
- Children's toys made of molded, sealed plastic;
- Barbecue grills.

As during normal usage, it is best to follow manufacturer's instructions for dishwasher safety. Generally, avoid placing hand-decorated ceramics and woodenware or plastics that are not declared dishwasher safe in the dishwasher.

Another hint to remember for maximum dishwasher performance is to always load the dishwasher according to manufacturer's directions. Overcrowding prohibits good water circulation and drainage, causing poor soil removal as well as spotting and filming.

For further information on the overall use and time-saving benefits of the dishwasher, contact KADIC, KitchenAid Division, Hobart Corporation, Troy, OH 45374.

Handy kit for do-it-yourselfers offers quick fix for ceilings

Can you relate to any of these ceiling situations?

- The old plaster has so many cracks you're thinking of booking it on the Borscht Circuit.
- After three bottles of medicated shampoo, you finally realize it's the old paint that has dandruff and not you.
- The neighbors' kids aren't allowed to play in your "X"-rated basement because of the exposed joists.

Okay, things aren't quite that bad. But the ceiling is showing its age (or incompleteness) and you'd like to facelift it with do-it-yourself tile or planks. Maybe the kind that look just like real wood.

You're hesitant, though. You've never put up a ceiling before and you're afraid it might be over your head, figuratively as well as literally.

For first-timers

Well, put off putting up no longer. There's now a way to install ceiling tile or planks that was designed by Armstrong especially for first-timers.

It's called the Easy Up method and it starts making things easier even before you set foot on a ladder. The installation materials come in a single kit, so you don't have to hunt all over the store — or several stores — for what you need.

All included

The kit contains these items: 4-foot metal tracks that are nailed through the old ceiling into the joists, nails, clips that snap onto the tracks and slide over the lips of the tiles to invisibly hold them in place, and a step-by-step instruction booklet.

Any standard tile or plank can be installed in this way.

The new method involves less bother than stapling tiles to wood furring strips. The short tracks are easier to handle than long warp-prone wood strips, and they require only a third as much nailing to attach them to the old ceiling.

The special clips eliminate stapling labor altogether, along with the expense of buying or renting a staple gun.

Easy Up beats cementing the tiles, too. There are no cans of adhesive, no brushes, no drop cloths to worry about.

Besides, cementing is practicable only when the existing ceiling is in good condition, whereas track-supported tiles can go over the worst ceiling because they are anchored in the joists above.

There are other advantages. You have more margin for error: Tracks don't have to be spaced exactly 12 inches apart, as with furring strips, because a clip will secure a tile no matter where it engages it.

No sawing is necessary: You can simply offset the tracks to end up flush with the end wall.

Easy to do

And you can remove tiles without ruining them: Just slide the clip away to loosen a tile for a minor correction, the insertion of a light fixture, etc.

An Easy Up kit handles 20 to 24 square feet of tile.

Carried by numerous building supply stores and home centers, the kit sells for around $8 to $9.

FIRST-TIME CEILING INSTALLERS can stay on track by using the Easy Up kit from Armstrong. It contains short metal tracks that are nailed to the old ceiling, and special clips that snap onto the tracks to hold the ceiling tiles or planks in place. No stapling or cementing is necessary. The kit works with any standard tile or plank.

Home resales can be job-related

More and more home resales are a result of job transfer, new jobs or a desire to live closer to work, according to one study.

Out of 3,872 resale transactions surveyed in 1981, more than 40 percent of the buyers and sellers changed homes for job-related reasons.

Hobby that's decorative and enjoyable...

Aquarium provides eye-catching focal point

The arrival of spring signals that we will soon be enjoying the beauties of nature — blooming flowers and greening shrubs and trees.

Another natural beauty that can be enjoyed within the home are ornamental fish. The fascinating movements, bright and distinctive color and various shapes of ornamental fish are a delight for the whole family.

Enclosed porches (or California or Florida rooms) are ideal locations for goldfish aquariums. Goldfish, unlike tropical fish, do not need a heated aquarium and are a great addition to spring and summer living.

GOLDFISH AQUARIUMS are easy to set up, require minimal maintenance and provide a rewarding hobby for the entire family.

Benefits of goldfish

Goldfish are fun, goldfish are beautiful and, in fact, a study conducted by researchers at the University of Pennsylvania in 1980 concluded that watching ornamental fish in home aquariums was a definite benefit in relieving stress.

So, if you have some extra space and would like something your whole family could enjoy, consider an aquarium with ornamental goldfish.

To go about starting a goldfish aquarium, you will first want to locate a good dealer. If you have a friend who has an aquarium, ask for a reference; otherwise the phone book lists most tropical fish retailers.

Tropical fish are warm-blooded and require a heated aquarium. Goldfish do fine in an aquarium with a water temperature of around 65°.

Investigate equipment

When visiting a tropical fish store, get an idea of different sizes of aquariums and type of equipment you will need. A goldfish aquarium should be covered with a reflector using fluorescent lights which do not throw off a significant amount of heat.

In terms of a stand for your aquarium, your dealer will have a selection, but you could also consider building one to match the decor of your room. This is relatively simple but be sure it's very sturdy since the weight of the aquarium and water is quite heavy.

A good idea is to build an open stand out of 2 x 4's and then cover the front with decorative paneling to match your room decor and leave the back open so that the wiring and tubing from your aquarium's pump and filter can be stored out of sight.

Good filter important

In addition to the reflector you will also need a good filter since goldfish are rather messy. Your dealer can help with a selection.

Even though you don't need a heater, it's a good idea to use a thermometer to make sure the water temperature does not rise beyond 80°F.

A recent development in thermometer technology is the liquid crystal digital thermometer which affixes to the outside of the aquarium, yet measures most accurately the water temperature.

If you are going to keep a lot of fish you will also want a separate air pump in addition to the filter to add more oxygen to the water.

Attractive ornaments

Decorating your goldfish aquarium can be great fun. There are multi-colored gravels, highly decorative backgrounds, hundreds of ornaments as well as plastic plants so real in reproduction it's almost impossible to distinguish them from live plants.

Most good retailers will have a complete assortment, and your selection should be based on the size of your aquarium and the amount of money you decide to spend.

Once you have set up your aquarium, you should add a chlorine neutralizer to the water and initially add only a few fish. These fish will help develop the proper biological condition necessary to maintain a fully stocked aquarium. After three or four weeks, assuming everything is functioning properly, you can then go ahead and add the rest of the fish.

Aquarium maintenance is much simpler than people think. Every two weeks a partial water change (not greater than 20 percent), by siphoning the water from the bottom of the aquarium, is all that's required.

A device called the Hydro-Clean allows efficient siphoning by separating the debris from the gravel and removing it with the water from the aquarium. On a monthly basis, your filter will require minimal maintenance. That's all there is.

Following this simple routine, your goldfish will live a long and prosperous life. In fact, one of the biggest problems people have is spending too much time maintaining their aquarium. On a daily basis, goldfish should be fed a small quantity of a quality flake food or pellet.

Goldfish are truly beautiful and have been increasing dramatically in popularity. There are many different body shapes and colors to choose from in a variety of price ranges. They will survive at much lower temperatures and could be left in an unheated area for most of the year.

Goldfish and tropical fish form the basis for a truly rewarding life-time hobby — and one the whole family can enjoy.

A STATIONERY DRAWER is attractive enough to show off with this new lace pattern of shelf liner. It's Rubbermaid's new Smooth'n Easy™ Shelf Liner with a special new adhesive that clings yet is easy to apply and remove.

Are your shelves and drawers under cover?

Everyone deserves at least one junk drawer in their life. Indeed most people do have one (or more).

But there's something about the spring and fall seasons that creates an urge to comb through one's belongings and take control. Maybe that's only because you need to dig out clothes to suit the season; whatever the reason, when "organizing fever" hits, be prepared.

Ideally every shelf and drawer in your home should have a special purpose. When you know what that purpose is, the battle is half won.

Concentrate on one area at a time, so you'll quickly see the results of your efforts. It may be a spice cabinet, the linen closet or a bedroom drawer, but completing one small area will encourage you to approach others.

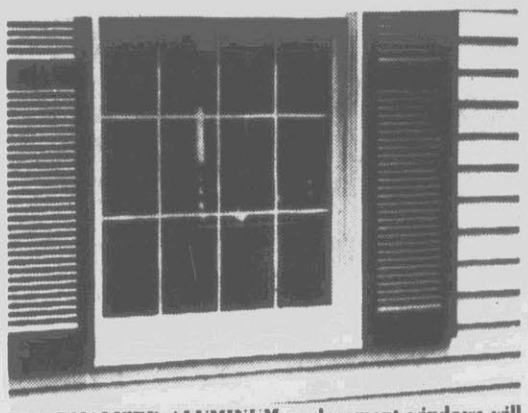

First remove all contents, separating items that belong in this area from those that should be stored somewhere else. Next, line the drawer or shelf for a clean, fresh beginning.

Rubbermaid's new Smooth'n Easy™ Shelf Liner is easy to apply and reposition. A new adhesive grips shelves and drawers, yet can be removed easily later when you want to change the pattern or color.

Replace the items that belong in this area. Now, don't quit! Face that pile of items you decided belong somewhere else and sort each piece by the room it belongs in.

Lastly, make one trip to each of these rooms to store these items in their proper place.

The next time you open a cabinet or drawer, rather than hiding it under cover, you may find yourself wanting to show it off. With organized contents and a pretty shelf liner, why not?!

THERMALIZED ALUMINUM replacement windows will guard against energy loss as well as provide an attractive look to your home.

WEAR GOGGLES WHEN USING HAND TOOLS

When it comes to using any hand tool safely, there is one rule that has universal importance: Wear safety goggles, says the Hand Tools Institute, an association of American and Canadian manufacturers of quality hand tools.

HTI, which conducts a continuing safety education program for consumers and for professional hand tool users, has stressed the importance of wearing safety goggles in booklets, safety flyers, audio-visual presentations and other publicity materials used to disseminate its safety message.

BUYING VERSUS RENTING

Nearly 75 percent of American households expect to own rather than rent their next home, according to a study by Louis Harris and Associates entitled, "Buying a Home in the 1980s: A Poll of American Attitudes."

While the study indicated that fewer people expect to move in the next five years, homeownership as an investment and a means of establishing roots will motivate those that do move to buy, not rent.

Don't forget the roof!

SPRING IS A WONDERFUL TIME of the year. Flowers in bloom, trees in leaf, baby animals and birds appearing on earth. But it's also a time for cleaning up after a hard, long winter. After the snow and ice melt, doesn't the lawn really need attention? The house itself looks as if it needs a fresh face, a new coat of paint in order to be a legitimate partner in the celebration of the season. Roofs need maintenance, too, whatever the age of the house. If your abode is over 15 years old, then you might need a new roof. Look for telltale signs: dried out shingles with curled edges; clogged drains and gutters; rusted metals flashing and loose nails and shingles. Then, call in a professional roofing contractor to give you technical advice. This spring, treat yourself to a beautiful spruced-up home. More than 85 percent of American houses have asphalt shingle roofs with a life span of from 12 to 15 years. This time, choose premium shingles for a longer-lasting roof. GAF Corporation, for example, offers Timberline Class A fiberglass shingles that carry a 30-year limited warranty. They come in pleasing, natural earth-tone shades and interesting random patterns. These fiberglass products protect against fire, wind and weather damage that can occur during the year's four seasons.

About the house:

By LIS KING

Of late, Americans are learning what Europeans have known for centuries: ceramic tile is great for kitchen floors, countertops, backsplashes, rangehoods and other surfaces that must stand up to hard wear with minimal care.

But, according to the Tile Council of America, an organization that has studied design trends for almost 40 years, the rapidly increasing use of ceramic tile in U.S. kitchens isn't merely related to practicality.

"Tile's new fashion talent is what's really attracting today's consumer," notes Council president Rudy Thornberry. "The range of colors, shapes, patterns and textures now on the market is simply overwhelming . . . So much so, that the consumer just might find it difficult to make a choice."

Further complicating the selection is tile's well-known durability, which means that homeowners will be living with their choices for a long, long time.

For this reason, the Council recommends a conservative choice for large surfaces, such as floors and whole walls, especially in rooms where you spend a lot of time.

In a family kitchen, for example, you are best off with a floor in a neutral hue. It won't tire the eye in just a few years, and it will go with countless generations of appliances and other kitchen elements.

But don't be afraid to use bright colors and decorative designs for small areas and accents. They are just great for dressing up rangehoods, backsplashes and such.

The color choice

Choosing a neutral kitchen floor needn't mean just going for something beige or brown. American manufacturers are now producing a wealth of new textures and shades.

Beige, for example, may be a quarry tile in peachy tan, rosy taupe or palest sand. And the browns range from caramel to espresso.

White, that all-time classic of the non-colors, is usually a luxurious dream for floors, but ceramic tile makes it a practical reality, even for busy kitchens.

An array of greys has also expanded the neutral palette, and there are also numerous new greyed-off shades of the blues and greens that put them in the muted category so ideal for floors.

There's no law that says you have to use identical colors on floors and walls. Perfect matches from floor to countertop to backsplashes are often seen in contemporary kitchens where crispness is of the essence.

But, going to different colors for countertops and walls offers delicious design options that country buffs and more traditional souls find it hard to resist.

Remember, that most kitchen wall and counter areas are relatively small, so here you needn't feel restricted.

Go with tile colors and designs that you will really love to look at. A romantic flower hue, such as cherry blossom pink or cornflower blue, is sure to bring relief from rows of dark wood cabinets, for example.

Decorative ideas

Lots of tiles with decorative themes, such as herbs or wildflowers, are available, and they are terrific as accents in backsplashes, on rangehoods or as borders around windows or doors.

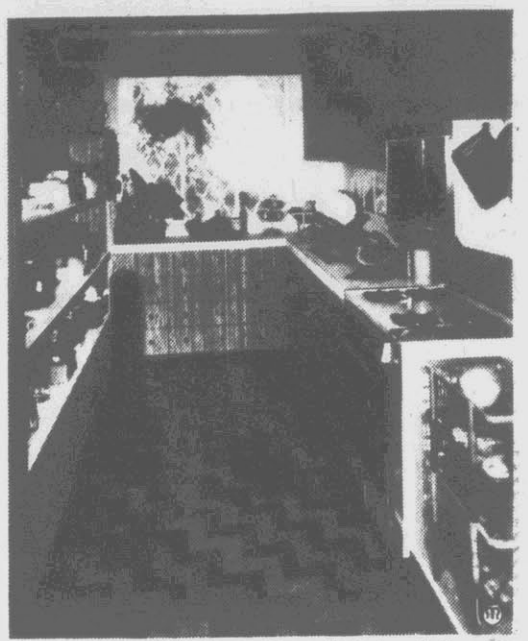

If you like a bit of drama, think of using two or three contrasting tile colors together. Run just a single band of bright color on a white counter and backsplash, for example. Or run stripes vertically, horizontally or diagonally on an accent wall.

For designer flair underfoot, consider combining two tile sizes or colors in a pattern. Ceramic mosaics lend themselves particularly well to designer patterns.

Plaids and stripes in neutral colors are interesting for informal kitchens. Checkerboard floors in black and white have an air of formality and suit citified kitchens.

A border in a contrasting color running all around the kitchen floor is an effective custom touch.

For more ideas on ceramic tile in kitchen schemes, write the Tile Council of America, Dept. K, Box 2222, Princeton, NJ 08540, for an informative, illustrated leaflet. Enclose 25 cents for handling.

Good advice for builders

Professional Builder magazine, which has been urging builders to offer smaller, smarter and more affordable housing to first-time buyers, also has some merchandising advice for builders.

The trade journal says first-time buyers need viable decorating ideas for their first home. Young buyers can be scared off by extravagance. They should be given some do-it-yourself projects. Builders are told to merchandise livability, personality and privacy for this market.

Bringing back the simplicity and elegance of the gazebo

For some people, the sight of a gazebo brings to mind the Gay Nineties — the days of the Gibson girl and her straw-hatted beau, of concerts where the band played the newest hits of Sousa and Strauss.

Nowadays the gazebo is no longer relegated to the center of town. And, for many people, these Victorian-style shelters represent everything that's good about the great American backyard.

A gazebo like this one, which is particularly sturdy and easy to build, could well become your whole family's favored spot for warm-weather rest and relaxation.

Gazebos differ as widely as the backyards in which they're located, but they seem to share one characteristic: The little bit of extra effort put into detailing makes their commonplace materials look ornate.

Cedar was used for the gazebo as shown. You could easily use pressure-treated lumber for all the structural members.

Pressure-treated lumber is less expensive than other types of wood recommended for outdoor projects, yet it's highly resistant to damage from moisture and insects.

This six-sided gazebo measures 8 feet from any two parallel sides of the hexagon. The materials listed are for a gazebo of this size; alter the dimensions to suit your needs.

Here tongue-and-groove decking was used for the gazebo floor. You can substitute 1x or 2x lumber if you like. Support the floor boards with three 2x6 joists as shown in the drawing. Nail a skirt made of 2x4s to the perimeter.

Toenail six 8-foot-long 4x4 posts to the floor boards. Measure the space between the posts and assemble the sections of railing and top trim to fit. The crosspieces of the railing are 2x4s; those of the top trim are 2x4s and 2x2s. The vertical slats are made of 2x2s, which have been angle-cut.

Toenail these sections in place. Note that the four posts on the two open sides of the gazebo are trimmed with 2x6s.

Also note the little shelf shown on the far side of the gazebo. If you choose to include a shelf, make it from a 2x6 and a 2x4.

Angle-cut and bevel the 2x6s that run around the top of the gazebo. Nail these together at 90 degrees, forming what looks like giant-size molding. Nail these pieces to the posts.

Make the lower rafters of 2x6s. (This section of the roof has a pitch of 10-12 — that is a 10-inch rise for every 12 inches of span.) Notch them as shown to accommodate the 2x6s atop the posts.

To the rafters, nail twelve 2x4 beams as shown. Make the upper rafters of 2x4s. (This section of the roof has a pitch of 17-12.) Toenail these rafters to the lower ones.

Into the space between the ends of the upper and lower rafters, insert a central spike made from two laminated and beveled 2x6s. Nail it in place.

Cover the rafters with sheathing made of 1x10s and ¾-inch exterior-grade plywood. Top the sheathing with cedar shakes.

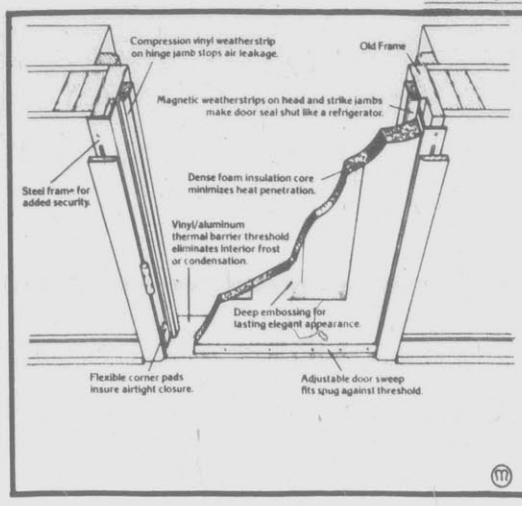

Check your local building codes before beginning construction to be sure you meet local requirements.

Be sure to follow the manufacturers' instructions when using power tools. And don't forget to wear safety goggles when using a hammer or power tools.

SUMMER FUN is as easy as one, two, three in this open-air gazebo.

A DO-IT-YOURSELF PROJECT which pays off in added home security is the Benchmark Secura-Fit™ door and frame unit which easily replaces old entrance doors. Step-by-step illustrated instructions come with the carton which contains everything needed for fast installation with common hand tools. Cutaway drawing (above) clearly shows energy-saving features of the Benchmark system and steel frame that increases protection against forced entry.

Increase home security with innovative door system

These days, everybody is interested in increasing home security. Common burglar deterrents include neighborhood patrols, costly alarm systems and unsightly window gates.

A new, and particularly effective method of home protection, is the Secura-Fit™ door system from Benchmark, which incorporates the added protection of steel-into-steel security with the permanent beauty you want in an entrance door.

You simply place the new Secura-Fit door/frame into the existing wood frame. Secura-Fit comes complete in one carton, with everything you need — including easily followed step-by-step illustrated instructions.

You get a steel insulated door, prehung in its heavy duty steel frame. With weatherstripping of TPE vinyl that seals like a refrigerator door, and a frost-free thermal barrier threshold. A total package to block loss of heating or cooling — at your entranceway.

With its foam insulation and tight weathersealing against air infiltration, a Benchmark Secura-Fit system provides several times more insulating value than a traditional wood door/storm door combination.

Specially designed to fit a wide range of existing openings, Secura-Fit installs from inside the house. Thus, an old door can easily be replaced without disturbing anything on the exterior, including storm doors and siding.

You're getting extra protection against the most often-used method of burglar entry. Secura-Fit offers the rigid design of a steel door with hinges welded in a steel frame. For greater strength, the frame is mounted with security screws to the wood framing.

Aluminum roofs offer lasting value, protection

The most important, and often most neglected, part of your home is your roof. It must weather extremes in temperature as well as hail, rain and snow. A deteriorated roof can invite water damage, and detracts from the total appearance of your home.

Today, aluminum roofing materials offer an attractive alternative to wood, asphalt and composition materials. Aluminum roofing is durable, fire-resistant, leak-resistant and provides a good long term value to the homeowner.

Effects of weather

Many factors, such as extreme temperatures and harsh weather conditions, contribute to the deterioration of your roof. Aluminum shingles are durable and will not rust, rot, split or crack.

And, with the many modern synthetic coatings being used today, some manufacturers guarantee their aluminum shingles, shakes and ribbed systems against chipping, fading and chalking for decades.

Fire resistance a plus

Another worthwhile benefit aluminum shingles provide is fire-resistance. In arid regions of the country, particularly the south and west, lightning, errant sparks or bottle rockets around the Fourth of July can start a fire on a wood-shingled home.

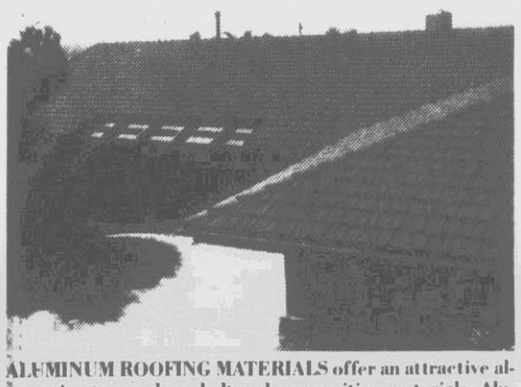

Even wood shingles that are specially treated to make them more fire-resistant will remain so for a limited time only. Aluminum roofing is virtually fire-resistant.

Matter of aesthetics

An old and deteriorated roof detracts from your home's entire appearance. A deteriorating roof may look bad but still work.

An aluminum roof, because it is so durable and requires little maintenance, will remain attractive for decades, as well as do its job.

Asphalt, wood and composition material roofs are susceptible to leaking as they age. If installed properly, aluminum roofs are among the most water-tight systems available.

ALUMINUM ROOFING MATERIALS offer an attractive alternative to wood, asphalt and composition materials. Aluminum roofing is durable, fire-resistant, leak-resistant and provides a good long term value to the homeowner.

Custom-looking mirror walls now affordable

Homeowners who have admired costly custom mirrors in the homes of the well-to-do can now enjoy the luxury of mirrored walls in their own homes, thanks to a revolutionary mirror wall system developed by Mechanical Mirror Works.

Now homeowners have an alternative that will contribute to their home's individuality and that desirable 'sparkle.'

Look of luxury

The new easy-to-install mirror system has made available to homeowners affordably-priced mirror walls that allow the luxurious look without the high cost of custom fitting, cutting and installation, still providing the clean and neat look of professional installation.

Panels are beveled, light in weight, have no raw edges, and need no cutting or fitting. They are shipped directly from the manufacturer.

Each mirror panel — available in three different widths — is encased in a thin protective metal frame, shatter-proofed on fiberboard backing for extra safety. The beveled mirror strips add the finishing touch.

The wall system requires no special tools or equipment. Each individually framed mirror panel is screwed to the wall — much in the same manner as a large picture. Then, the mirror strip is easily applied over the panel covering all spaces.

Mirrors add excitement and style to a room. Decorators say they make a room look twice its size.

Decorative pluses

Additional information on the new wall-to-wall mirror system is available by calling (212) 204-0200 or writing to Mechanical Mirror Works, Inc., 2702 First Street, Long Island City, NY for the illustrative brochure.

Sensible spring spruce-up starts with a cedar chest

It's spring and the fever is upon you — the urge to decorate, the need to re-do. It's an annual rite, the one that is practiced just about the time Mother Nature is doffing her winter duds for more dramatic spring clothes.

Maybe it's the first warm breeze that triggers it, or the bulbs pushing through the soft soil, or the bright green leaves unfolding.

Whatever, there you are, like clockwork, moving furniture, painting and retouching, cleaning, polishing and shaping up the house front. Once again you've fallen victim to the demonic drive to spring clean! Where to begin?

"Start by removing all evidence of winter," says Linda Dalton, consumer specialist at The Lane Company, makers of fine cedar chests.

She advises you take down heavy drapes, remove bedspreads and slipcovers. Replace heavy woolen blankets and flannel sheets. Gather up the family's winter clothes, sort and clean and then pack them away.

"If you're short on storage space, this might be just the right time to think about buying a cedar chest or adding one to a vestibule, child's room or hall."

Cedar chests are no longer strictly for moth-proofing, says the Lane expert. "That sweet-smelling interior is dustproof, mothproof and airtight, but there are now more than a hundred styles to complement every decor."

For the style-conscious the cedar chest has been fashioned into every period style from French Provincial to Early American. You can choose a chest from several hand-rubbed veneers of many popular cabinetwoods such as cherry, oak, pine and maple.

If you've a yen to redecorate, the cedar chest can be the starting point for any room in the house. For the dining room, a chest with drawers or interior trays can be used to store extra table linens, napkins and candlesticks.

And, the cushioned cedar chest is a charming addition to a windowed alcove in a bedroom or living room where you can sit and watch for the first blooms of spring.

The cedar chest in a wide variety of styles and sizes is at home in the tiniest cottage and largest villa or country farmhouse.

"Every chest comes with its own lock and key," says the Lane specialist. And the warranty assures you the special protection for your stored possessions inside.

THE VERSATILE CEDAR CHEST makes a charming addition to every room in the house. Over 100 styles, from French Provincial to Early American, provide a moth-proof, dustproof storage place for treasured belongings.

Elegant decorating for your home...

Trompe l'oeil: French phrase that translates into chic painted designs

Have you ever wished for a tranquil country scene behind your city shutters, or a living room bookcase full of leather-bound volumes, or a trellis full of blooming vines for the kitchen nook? A painting technique called trompe l'oeil can make your wishes come true!

Translated from the French, trompe l'oeil means, "to deceive the eye." It is so convincing, that perfectly flat walls and ceilings come alive with three dimensional pictures that seem real enough to touch.

One example of this technique is the wall shown here. Though it looks like expensive marble, this wall was actually created completely with paint.

Create a window

In addition to its purely decorative potential, trompe l'oeil is useful for minimizing architectural faults. A windowless room will open up dramatically when a window with a simple scene is painted on one wall, or when several life-like plants are painted in a corner.

Though creating the look of marbleized walls and bookcases full of books are projects best left up to an experienced painter, there are a variety of less complicated trompe l'oeil paintings.

The trellis is given a three dimensional effect with the use of two colors; one color, usually a lighter shade of the wall color, or the traditional white is used for the body of the trellis strips.

Another color, usually a beige or gray, is used on the upper portions of the bands to shade each one and add the illusion of dimension.

Nearly 75 percent of American households expect to own rather than rent their next home, according to a study by Louis Harris and Associates entitled, "Buying a Home in the 1980s: A Poll of American Attitudes."

TROMPE L'OEIL transforms a plain wall into an elegant, interesting feast for the eyes. The look of marble on the walls and pillars and the interestingly detailed arches were all accomplished with paint.

Insulation can lower air conditioning bills

Most people associate home insulation with icy winds, shivering temperatures and blowing snow. However, many homeowners are not aware that fiber glass insulation is a year 'round worker, not only sealing in warm air and the cold out, but keeping cool air in and hot air out during the air conditioning season.

The time is right

Remember last summer's record heat wave? Those hot and muggy days will be back again, and homeowners should investigate the benefits of insulation now, according to George Hoffmann, Vice President of Marketing, CertainTeed Corporation.

"Just as winter heating bills continue making ever larger dents in budgets, so will electricity and air conditioning costs. Proper insulation will make your home more comfortable in the summer and help reduce your energy bills," he said.

"Exact savings will vary depending upon where you live in the country and the thermal condition of your home, but an insulated home provides savings for the homeowner year in and year out — year 'round."

Easy and sensible

Interestingly, insulating the attic to let insulation work during the summer and winter is not difficult or particularly time-consuming. Millions of homeowners have discovered just how easy and sensible it is to do it themselves.

For example, CertainTeed fiber glass insulation comes in rolls or batts in 6" to 12" thicknesses in light, self-carry, poly plastic packaging.

Less than a day's work

Hoffman illustrates the simplicity of do-it-yourself attic insulation by pointing out that "the average size attic can easily be insulated by a man or woman in a single afternoon."

If you want to completely insulate your home, it's wise to consult a professional insulation contractor who can insulate those areas inaccessible to the do-it-yourselfer, including the sidewalls.

He can recommend where to insulate and how much insulation should be used to produce the greatest dollar savings in energy conservation.

Cut fuel bills with your screwdriver and new quartz setback thermostat

Using just his screwdriver, any home handyman can install a new automatic setback thermostat in minutes. The result: years of significantly lower fuel bills.

Cutting those costly energy bills comes from raising and lowering home temperature automatically. Energy-saving schedules can be easily set by the homeowner, and will repeat until changed with this quartz-type thermostat.

Either one or two daily energy-saving programs can be quickly set on the quartz clock dial. These Robertshaw thermostats offer models to control heating (and heating/cooling) equipment automatically.

Individualized control

Programs for temperature changes can be matched to the family lifestyle, and quickly changed to suit changing needs. For example, one economy period can be set for sleeping and the other to allow for absences.

All the user does is dial in the times and the amount of change (1° to 10°) in home temperature. Energy-saving programs will be followed automatically until changed by the homeowner.

Depending on home insulation factors and amount of fuel now used, homeowners can realize a payback in a matter of months. This automatic quartz thermostat also qualifies you for energy credit deductions on federal income tax returns.

Two models of the Robertshaw automatic quartz thermostat will replace most manual thermostats now in use. The heating-only model covers low voltage, millivolt and three-wire zone systems, while the heating/cooling model replaces low voltage thermostats.

Easily available

These DIY thermostats have quartz movements for longer battery life, and carry a three-year warranty. They're available at home centers, building supply dealers, hardware and large retail outlets nationwide. For a free brochure, write to Robertshaw Controls Company, 100 West Victoria Street, Long Beach, CA 90805.

Build your own atrium greenhouse

Now, thanks to Z-BRICK brand facing brick, building one doesn't have to take an architect or an expensive craftsman.

You apply them with an adhesive mortar to particle board or plywood sheathing — eliminating the weight, mess and expense of regular masonry.

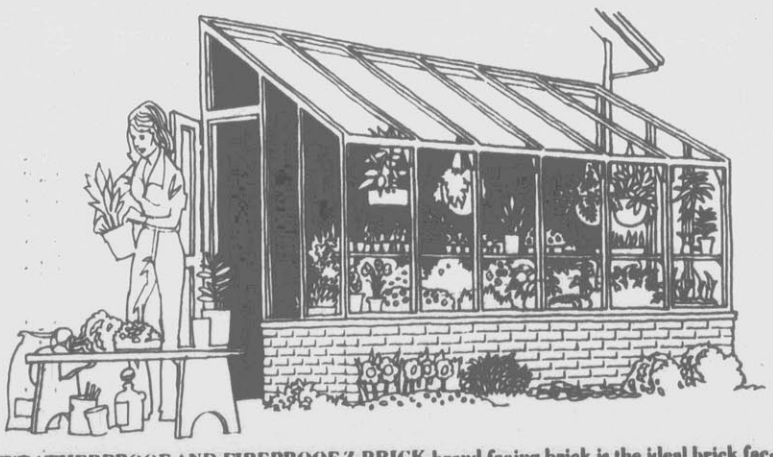

Plan on locating your greenhouse with a southern exposure for best results although, in some locales, an eastern to southeastern exposure is acceptable.

Because Z-BRICK is weatherproof and fireproof, it is an ideal building material for this greenhouse.

There are three types of Z-BRICK brand facing brick: Inca, a traditional, smooth-shaped brick with concise edges for a more formal look; Country Rustic, with an irregular cut, with contoured surface or handmade look for a casual, rustic or antiqued look; and Design Images brick with deep-clefted, rugged surfaces with multi-shading in popular earth tones. Colors range from reds and golds to buff, smoke and white.

There is also a Design Images Ltd. Graystone and Sandstone. Z-BRICK facing brick and stone will fit into any yard or home decor.

Plans for the atrium greenhouse, complete with instructions for planting tables and covering material — as well as plans for nine other easy-to-build outdoor projects are available for 50¢ from Z-BRICK Company, Woodinville, WA 98072. Be sure to ask for the Atrium/Outdoors Plan Book.

WEATHERPROOF AND FIREPROOF Z-BRICK brand facing brick is the ideal brick facing for this atrium greenhouse. Plans for this greenhouse, complete with instructions for potting tables — as well as plans for nine other easy-to-build outdoor projects — are available from Z-BRICK Company.

How to select a home insulation contractor

With energy costs projected to soar unabated for at least the next 10 years, according to most experts, the wise homeowner will want to investigate how to make the family home as energy efficient as possible.

While some attics can be insulated by a do-it-yourselfer in an afternoon, maximum energy savings are obtained by insulating an entire house — a procedure that can't be done by the homeowner.

To properly insulate inaccessible areas and side walls in addition to attics, a professional home insulation contractor should be consulted.

The contractor is specially trained to determine where to add insulation, and to advise how much insulation is required to give the best return on investment in energy conservation.

A good place to begin is the telephone book under "Insulation Contractors — Cold and Heat" or with the local insulation contractor's association.

Once the local professional insulation contractors have been identified, look for four important things any qualified professional will provide: credentials, references, written estimates and high-quality products.

To check a contractor's credentials, contact the Better Business Bureau. Local contractor associations also can be of assistance in this area.

Next, ask the contractor for references. If he's well established in the community, he should have a list of satisfied customers that he would feel confident to have you contact. Talk with some of the people on the list to get their opinions of the contractor's work and honesty.

Get written estimates

Most importantly, obtain firm estimates — in writing — of the work that is to be done and the materials to be used. The easiest way to avoid disappointment and misunderstanding is to have everything spelled out clearly before the job begins.

Several contractors should submit written estimates in order to determine the best one to work with. To properly compare them, make sure that their estimates are for comparable jobs — using the same materials, quality of workmanship and R-values.

The R-value is the measure of an insulating material's resistance to heat flow. The higher the R-value, the greater the insulating power.

Quality tested and manufactured to demanding standards, Insul-Safe® II offers superior thermal performance over many other kinds of blown-in insulation.

In addition, it is noncombustible, will not absorb moisture, will not rot or decay, and it has no corrosive effect on pipes and other metal objects.

It was the first insulation of its kind to be certified by the National Association of Home Building Research Foundation under its labeling program.

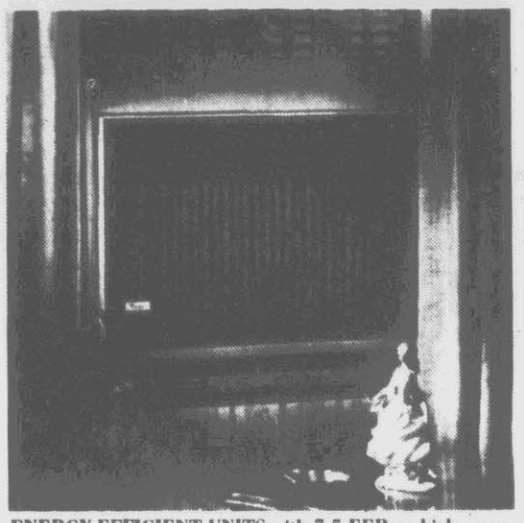

For more information about home insulation contractors, write to the CertainTeed Home Institute, P.O. Box 860, Valley Forge, PA 19482 for the free booklet: How To Select An Insulation Contractor.

FIBER GLASS INSULATION from Manville in batts and blankets may be purchased with a vapor barrier already attached.

Now's the time...

ENERGY-EFFICIENT UNITS with 7.5 EER or higher represent over 60 percent of Whirlpool Corporation's newly introduced air conditioner line. The Mark model AC1402XM offers 14,000 BTU/hr. with an EER of 9.9 making it the most energy efficient Whirlpool unit.

More and more Americans have vowed never to spend another summer sweltering. It is no secret that high temperatures and humidity take a toll on human dispositions and that an air conditioner certainly can help keep the home and family members more comfortable.

According to home economists from Whirlpool Corporation, modern air conditioners are designed with features to fit every need and pocketbook. In addition, they are more energy efficient today than ever before.

For example, Whirlpool offers 38 models with cooling capacities ranging from 5,000 to 29,000 BTU/hour with over 60 percent of the models providing a 7.5 or higher energy efficiency ratio.

Along with 22 models designed for standard double-hung windows, the Whirlpool line offers four specialty models for those hard-to-fit horizontal sliding or crank-out casement type windows.

In addition, consumers can choose from seven through-the-wall models that offer custom-fit appearance or they can choose from five heat/cool models that provide cool comfort when weather is warm and sticky, but quickly convert to heaters when needed to take the chill out of inside air.

Redressing sure cure for dull cutting edges

Knowing when to discard a dangerously worn tool is one way to avoid possible injury, but many tools can be redressed and reshaped to look and function like new.

Chisels, punches and other struck tools that have dull cutting edges and are out of shape require more effort to use, perform poorly and could lead to injuries from chipping of the striking or struck surfaces.

Discard abused tools

The Hand Tools Institute (HTI), an association of American and Canadian manufacturers of quality hand tools, warns against redressing any tool with a battered, chipped, mushroomed or cracked cutting edge or striking force.

When a tool has reached this stage through normal use or abuse it should be discarded, says HTI.

According to HTI, there are three basic rules to follow when redressing the cutting edge of any tool.

HTI reminds the tool user that an additional rule, and one that applies to using any hand tool safely, is to wear safety goggles to protect against eye injuries.

A hand file should be used to redress the worn edge of an axe starting two or three inches from the cutting edge and filing to one-half inch from the edge.

Work for a fan shape, leaving reinforcement at the corners for strength. File the remaining half inch to blend into the previously filed area preserving the original contour of the cutting edge.

Grinding care

High speed grinding, such as a bench grinder, should be avoided because it can cause the tool to become over-heated which draws the temper from the tool and makes it susceptible to chipping or cracking.

In addition, properly storing struck tools by hanging them in a rack will preserve the cutting edge.

Clean less, enjoy more

Make up your mind to spend more time enjoying your home and less time cleaning it.

Organization is the key. People who work outside the home know they must do chores the easiest, fastest way. Full-time homemakers can enjoy more time with children, friends, volunteer work or hobbies by adopting similar work-saving techniques.

- Streamline your kitchen by clearing your countertop of rarely-used items and knick-knacks.
- Get an early start. Set your alarm a half hour earlier and you'll be able to do a load of laundry, some ironing and cook breakfast before the day really begins.
- Do all daily housecleaning chores in one block of time. If you decide to clean right after breakfast, and you notice a dusty lamp in the afternoon, ignore it. It will still be there the next morning.
- Get a cordless, rechargeable hand vacuum such as the Norelco Clean Up Machine so you don't have to drag out your big vacuum cleaner any time crumbs fall on the coffee table or the dog tracks dirt into the hall. You'll find this especially convenient when the family has been watching TV and snacking in the den.
- Declare pick-up time once a day for other family members and yourself. Fifteen minutes before bedtime would be ideal for school-age children to put away sweaters, games and footballs; first thing in the morning might be more convenient for Mom and Dad. Whenever, make it only once.
- Make a schedule for yourself and stick to it. For example, if you've decided to do laundry on Monday mornings, and teenage Suzie shows up in the afternoon with a blouse she just must have washed, explain that she'll have to do it herself.

Moses tests wings in 'Falcon Crest'

By Joe Haviland

In the past three years, William R. Moses has done a considerable amount of growing up both on and off the set of CBS' "Falcon Crest." The consistently top-10 series, created by Earl Hammer of "The Waltons," has represented a big break for the young actor who started out doing commercials. But it is just a beginning for Moses, who is eager to expand both his role and career.

"I'm getting older and I don't look like a male ingenue anymore." says Moses. "There's been a conscious effort to try to grow up with the character."

In the series, Moses' character, Cole, is the son of Chase Gioberti (Robert Foxworth), who exudes a strong paternal image as the owner of Falcon Crest. Playing that role has presented limitations for Moses.

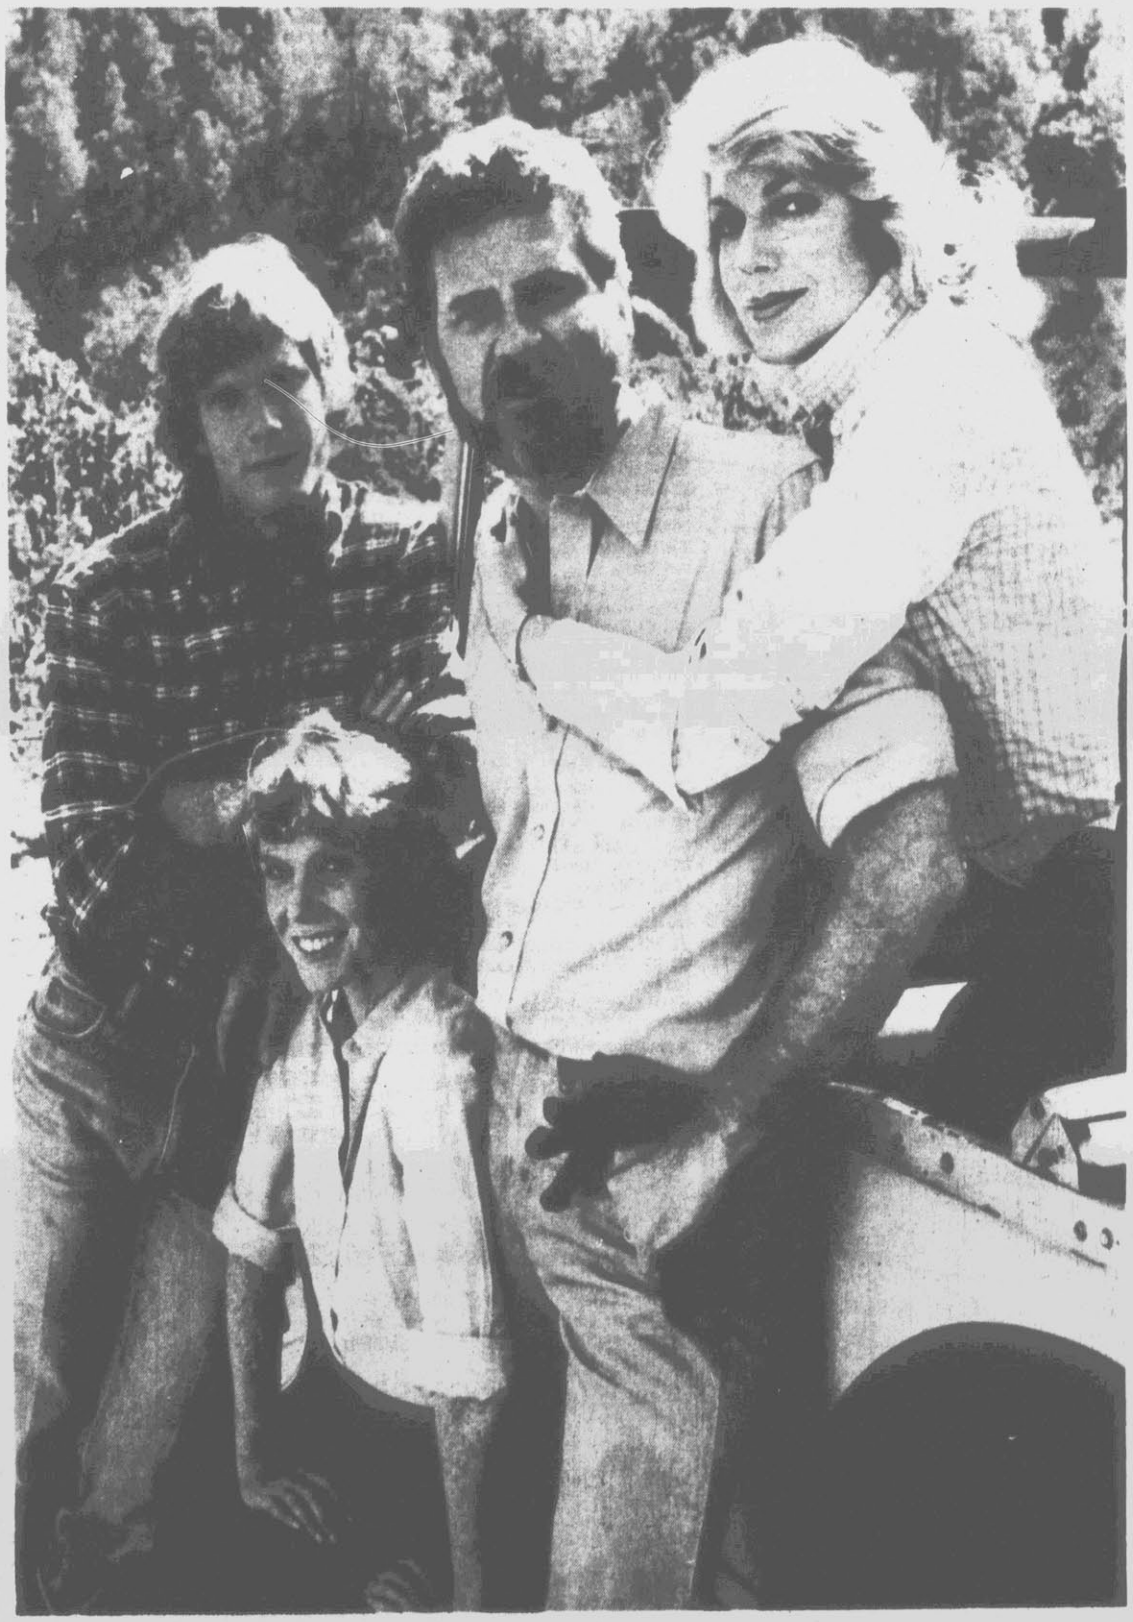

"There have been times when I have felt like a planet revolving around the sun, waiting for the revolution to come around again so that I could be in the spotlight.

"Being the son of the hero (Chase) means that when Cole has a problem, it's up to the hero to solve it," continues Moses. "That's the problem facing William Moses' character right now. I would like to have that situation resolved, whereby Cole can be his own man; independent of his dad."

Currently in the series Moses' character has gained custody of his son, Joseph — with the help of his father, who signed over half of Falcon Crest to Angela Channing (Jane Wyman) in exchange for the baby. "Now that Cole has his child, it creates other problems that he will have to contend with.

"Cole and I are a lot alike in that we were raised well, imbued with strong values and morals," says Moses. "We know right from wrong and are both basically easy-going people. In other areas we differ. I'm more decisive and more intelligent, able to get more of what I want. I would like to see those traits more in Cole."

Moses broke into show business five years ago in a Sprite commercial. After leaving the University of Southern California, where he majored in international relations and participated in acting workshops, Moses knocked on doors for two-and-one-half years.

True story filmed

NBC is filming a four-hour miniseries based on the best-selling book by Joe McGinnis about the murder case involving Dr. Jeffrey MacDonald, a former Green Beret. The doctor was convicted of the murder of his pregnant wife and two young daughters nearly 10 years after the crime was committed in their Fort Bragg, N.C., home. MacDonald claimed, and still does, they were slain by drug-crazed hippies.

Michele Will Tell

By Michele Marks

DEAR MICHELE: This question has been bothering my friends and me. I hope you can help. We remember the commercial with the line, "Try it, you'll like it." Some of us say it was an Alka Seltzer commercial and some say it was from a Life cereal ad. We can picture a heavy, balding man with all kinds of food in front of him, looking miserable. Which is it? — Connie Hayes

DEAR MICHELE: I have heard that Dick Clark is 75 years old. Is this true? What is his formula for looking so young? — Mildred Rogers

To Mildred: Clark is no spring chicken, but he's hardly ready for senior citizen discounts. He is 54 years old, born November 30, 1929 in Mt. Vernon, N.Y. For those who are interested in his secret of youth, Clark is coming out with a new line of men's grooming aids.

DEAR MICHELE: Can you tell us if Faye Dunaway attended high school in Vero Beach, Fla. any time in the late 1940's? If so, under what name? My brother thinks he may have attended high school with her at that time. The fact that she attended Florida State at Gainesville supports his allegation. — E.J. Schroeder

TO E.J.: I seriously doubt Ms. Dunaway was in your brother's high school class because she would have been too young. Born Dorothy Faye Dunaway on January 14, 1941, in Bascom, Fla. she is the daughter of Grace and John Dunaway. Mr. Dunaway was a career Army officer. Ms. Dunaway attended high school in Tallahassee, Fla., and won a scholarship to Florida State. She also attended the University of Florida and received her bachelor's degree from Boston University.

DEAR MICHELE: In February of 1984, Sidney Sheldon's "Master of the Game" was offered for TV viewing. Was this a remake? I remember seeing the movie several years ago and would like to know the name of the leading actress in the original. I think it was Bette Davis. — Edith L. Knapp

To Edith: "Master of the Game" was not a remake. It was a first-time-ever miniseries based on Sheldon's best-selling book. Although Bette Davis has appeared in numerous motion pictures made for television, thus far her only leading role in a miniseries was in "Family Reunion."

TV Chatter

By Polly Vonetes

Linda Evans and Joan Collins look out — another lovely and talented "over-40" woman will be making her debut on "Dynasty" this week. Diahann Carroll has been cast as a woman of mystery.

If 40 is good then 80 must be better. Experts predict that Wendy's "Where's the Beef?" star, Clara Peller, will replace the Cabbage Patch Kid doll on this year's Christmas list with a talking doll of her own. Merchandisers of leading chain stores estimate that retail sales of licensed products (everything imaginable, including bubble gum) bearing her famous slogan will total $50 million this year. That's nothing to beef about.

Other octogenarians in the news are Bob Hope, who will be celebrating his 81st birthday on NBC this month and 83-year-old Helen Hayes, who guest stars in Michael Landon's new TV film, "Highway to Heaven." She has been cast as a resident of a rest home who finds that life outside her room can still be vibrant and fulfilling.

Amanda Blake, who played Miss Kitty on "Gunsmoke," has received the American Cancer Society's courage award from President Reagan. Miss Blake, who served as national crusade chairperson for the Society, has personally waged a successful battle over cancer.

Country music fans get ready — "The Fourth Annual Country Comes Home" special will air Thursday night on CBS. The special, airing from the Grand Ole Opry House in Nashville, is hosted by Charley Pride and Glen Campbell. The top names in country music will be performing for the benefit of the Opry Trust Fund, a permanent fund to assist hardship cases in the country-music community.

Rock fans show surprising TV tastes

By Ethlie Ann Vare

Conventional wisdom has always had it that rock 'n' roll rots your brain. One would assume, therefore, that the average hard-rock listener's taste in TV would run toward "We Got It Made" and "The Smurfs." Not so.

According to a study by the Street Pulse Group, a New York-based record industry consulting firm, these are the surprising nine favorite shows among hard-rock radio listeners: "Hill Street Blues," "M*A*S*H" (even in reruns), "Cheers," "Saturday Night Live," "Dynasty," "The A-Team," "60 Minutes," "Late Night with David Letterman" and "Magnum, P.I." Rock fans also listed MTV as part of their viewing choices.

For softer rock fans, the 10 favorites are, in order: "Hill Street Blues," "M*A*S*H," "Fame," "Dynasty," "60 Minutes," "The A-Team," "Magnum, P.I.," "Cheers," "General Hospital" and "Three's Company."

Since the survey was conducted among active record buyers, maybe we'll soon be seeing ads for the latest ZZ Top album in between exposes by Mike Wallace and Morley Safer.

Mr. T dolls are a hit; Donahue to New York

By Cindy Adams

NEW YORK — Katharine Hepburn checked into New York University Hospital to have her ankle reset and fused. She moved into the hospital's 11th floor suite with a big entourage including special nurses. She signed into the hospital under an assumed name and had round-the-clock bodyguards at her door.

Rita Moreno and Dr. Leonard Gordon will celebrate their 19th wedding anniversary in June by getting married again... Mr T banked a $600,000 royalty payment from the sale of Mr. T dolls. His wallet's bulging more than his biceps these days... Ex-Beatle George Harrison is pouring his millions into being a film producer... Up front at Cafe Versailles was Fats Domino, who was flashing oversized diamond rings, a diamond watch, diamond cuff links, studs, a tie pin, belt buckle and two security guards... Besides airing his talk shows from here next season, Phil Donahue wants to host TV specials. NBC's thinking about it.

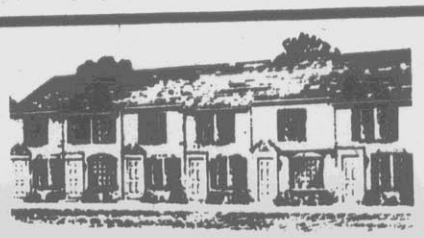

The other day Gloria Wan, of the classy hair emporium Roger & Gloria of New York, was summoned to the town house of a Mondale supporter. Walter Mondale himself was sitting in the dining room's papa bear chair under a blue barber robe reading a newspaper. Miss Wan wielded her razor saying, "You're better looking than your photos." "That's what I tell my wife," Mondale replied.

Although Prince Andrew gave Koo Stark the brush, let it be known that she is not without a current beau. Her new love is London photographer Mauro Carraro.

For the seminars Lucille Ball did at the Museum of Broadcasting in New York, she removed a few feet of her "I Love Lucy" earnings to dress the part, ordering 50 outfits from Halston.

Bob Costas Gets Comfortable

By Willie Schatz

What a difference 18 months makes.

The last time NBC asked announcer Bob Costas to spend the football season away from the telecast booth and in the network studio, he declined. It wasn't that he didn't want the job as host of "NFL '82." It was, however, neither the time nor the place to say yes.

It is now. That's why when the NFL football season begins again in September, Costas will be spending Sunday afternoons at 30 Rockefeller Plaza, trying to cope with the chaos that's endemic to "NFL '84." He'll replace Len Berman, who hosted the show the last two years. It was touch and go for Berman, but his contract has been renewed. He'll be in the studio every weekend except during football season, when he'll yield to Costas.

"When they first asked me, there were three things that bothered me," Costas says. "First, I was afraid it would take away from my career as a play-by-play announcer. Second, I hadn't been at NBC long enough to be comfortable doing 'NFL '82.' Third, I was going to replace Bryant (Gumbel). He'd been terrific. So no matter how well I did, and especially if I did poorly, I'd be unfavorably compared to Bryant."

But that's history. Gumbel has been co-hosting "The Today Show" since the fall of 1982. Costas has established himself as one of the two best baseball announcers (the other is ABC's Al Michaels) in television. He's also made his mark in football, even if spending the last two months hosting NBC's live sports studio show has made him very comfortable.

"That was a good move for both of us," Costas says. "There wasn't that much pressure between the end of the football season and the start of the baseball season. If I wasn't comfortable, I could tell them. If they didn't like me, they could say so. There would be time to change our minds.

"I had no doubt I could do it. I wasn't worried about my abilities. But I was worried about the mechanics, because I didn't have any studio experience. Now I know the basics and I know the outer limits of how wrong things can go."

Things have gone mighty well so far, thank you. Costas has the network's promise that Saturday afternoon baseball still comes first. In a conflict between the World Series and "NFL '84," which could happen Oct. 14, football is penalized by his absence. He won't miss "NFL '84" for a meaningless Twins-Mariners game, though.

"I've got to work on not being so bothered when things aren't 100 percent right," Costas admits. "If it's a 99 percent good day, I think about the one percent that's bad. The thing I'm most worried about in this job is developing accurate information that's given to me concisely. If you're sabotaged by faulty information, even though it's going to be accidental, you're dead.

"The best thing about this is that it will make me better doing baseball. The more exposure I get and the more people see me, the more weight my remarks will carry."

The man's not exactly a lightweight now. When football season's over, there may not be scales strong enough to support him.

Sunday, April 29

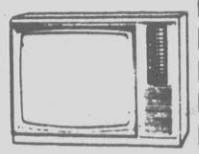

Liberty Mutual Legends of Golf, NBC, 4-6 p.m. The final 18 for this over-50 crowd. The winning team splits $100,000, which might be their largest payday since they first addressed a ball.

NBA Playoff doubleheader, CBS, 1-6 p.m. If Philadelphia and Boston aren't playing each other, one of them will surely be featured. Bet your house the Lakers will appear in the second game.

Saturday, May 5

Kentucky Derby, ABC, 4:30-6 p.m. Jim McKay, Howard Cosell, Jack Whitaker, Bill Hartack and 23 cameras roam Churchill Downs. Maybe director Chet Forte and producer Chuck Howard will have better luck than last year, when the wind blew Cosell's toupe off and bad lenses ruined their isolated shots of winner Gato del Sol.

CASTRO-VESCO: A COCAINE ALLIANCE

Cuban Navy bases are being used to smuggle Colombian cocaine into the U.S. At the center of this huge conspiracy, according to U.S. drug agents, sit fugitive financier Robert Vesco and Cuban leader Fidel Castro. How and why has Castro gotten involved? See our exclusive, revealing report.

ASK THEM YOURSELF

Daryl Hannah sure made waves as a mermaid in the film Splash. And why not? She's been preparing for the role most of her life. Her favorite fairy tale is Hans Christian Andersen's The Little Mermaid, and on vacations she and her friends would tie their legs together before going into the pool in order to play lissome underwater creatures. "I've always wanted to be a mermaid," says Hannah. "It would be great if I could always play mythological characters, but there aren't that many good films with those kinds of roles. Making movies is like getting a license to play for your whole life." A rather flippant view of acting?

□

Looking for Donna Mills? She's not on the Knots Landing set, you say? Then run over to Rodeo Drive and corral her at Neiman Marcus. That's the favorite hangout of Mills, who gives new meaning to "mean" as the scheming

MILLS: CLOSE TO HER CLOTHES

Abby Ewing on the hit Dallas spinoff. "It wasn't long ago that Abby was a bookkeeper at Knots Landing Garage; her clothes were pretty drab," remembers Mills. "Today, she's an executive and the only character who can afford to wear relatively expensive things." Though Mills' size-four figure would probably look swell in designer gowns, they're a bit out of line with the show's budget, minute compared to Dynasty's. Still, silver lingerie gets a nod of approval from the accounting department, and from male viewers. What does Donna Mills usually sleep in? "T-shirts."

HANNAH GETS IN THE SWIM

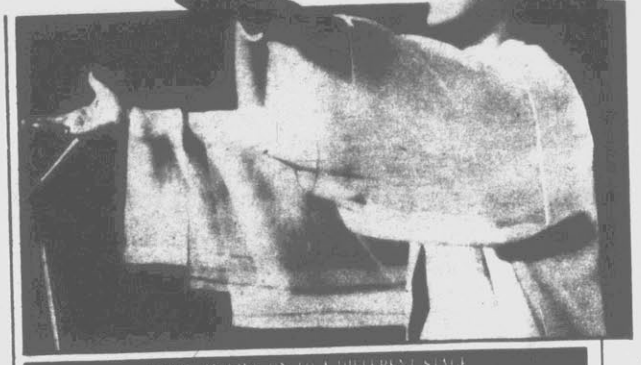

They said the day would never come — but it has. Lena Horne, who has had her share of stormy weather (her second husband and her only son died within one year of each other), has decided to retire in October, when she wraps up the tour of her one-woman show. Lena, age 66, marking her 50th anniversary as a performer, has her future nicely mapped out: She'll spend time with her grandchildren, then attack the books she's never had the time to read.

□

What do you do when you're the star of a big-budget science fiction movie and you've barely seen a single sci-fi flick in your life? That's the plight of Robin Curtis, who stars in the role of Lieut. Saavik in Star Trek III, scheduled for June release. "It was really a blessing in disguise," says the actress. "I came to the set clean, fresh, with my own interpretation." Though Robin is cool on the subject of futuristic plots, she loves the idea of actually going to the moon. "Sci fi is fantasy," she explains. "Traveling to the moon is very real."

□

What's in a name? Ask Alana Stewart. The soon-to-be ex-wife of rocker Rod Stewart is looking to change her last name once again, but not necessarily by way of marriage. The Texas-born beauty started her modeling career with the surname Collins, then switched to Hamilton when she married the ever-tan actor George H. When she wed the "Do you think I'm sexy" star, he insisted on the change to Stewart. After all, Rod didn't want any wife of his acting under another husband's name. Macho ado about nothing is what we think. One possibility — no surname at all, a la Cher — has been rejected. Says Alana, "I think that would be a little presumptuous."

HORNE: MOVING ON TO A DIFFERENT STAGE

□

FINNEY: THE BALD TRUTH

money on his appearing in a sequel as the shiny-domed Daddy Warbucks. Seems that since his Oscar nomination for best actor in The Dresser, Finney has been so inundated with offers, he has decided not to commit himself to anything definite. There might be a terrific script at the bottom of the pile — perhaps one that won't require him to keep shaving his head?

CASTRO AND VESCO: THE COCAINE ALLIANCE —

© 1980 Shelly Katz/Black Star

In November 1982, a Federal grand jury in Miami took the extraordinary step of indicting four Cuban Government officials, including an admiral in the Cuban Navy, on charges of smuggling drugs into the United States. The indictments caused a worldwide sensation, but the real kingpin of the smuggling operation was not among those charged. He is Robert Vesco, the fugitive financier who has led a shadowy existence in the Caribbean region for the past eight years.

FAMILY WEEKLY assigned investigative reporter Ernest Volkman the job of tracking down how and why Vesco and the "Cuban connection" came about. Volkman, who last year in FAMILY WEEKLY exposed Nazi butcher Klaus Barbie's connection with American intelligence, spent two months, in this country and the Caribbean, tracing an extensive drug-smuggling empire that has been masterminded by Vesco. What follows is the result of Volkman's investigative effort, which included interviews with many U.S. intelligence and narcotics agents, Cubans and others directly involved with the cocaine conspiracy.

The villa is one of the luxurious homes that dot the breathtakingly beautiful seaside area about 17 miles east of Havana, Cuba. Complete with private dock and beach, the sprawling white house with the red tile roof currently belongs to the Cuban Communist Government, which seized it when its wealthy owner fled to the United States nearly 20 years ago.

The villa is used by the Government for VIP guests of Fidel Castro. Ordinarily, it would not be worthy of mention, except that its current occupant — at this writing — is a very special guest of the Cuban Government.

His name is Robert Vesco, and his presence there is tangible evidence of one of the most unusual partnerships in the history of crime. Simply put, Vesco and Fidel Castro have gone into the drug-smuggling business.

How this bizarre partnership came about involves an extremely tangled tale, the bottom line of which is money — and lots of it. According to admittedly imprecise estimates, believed to be on the conservative side, Castro and Vesco sit at the center of a huge drug-smuggling operation that is responsible for a significant portion of the illegal narcotics coming into the United States. The operation has generated nearly $20 billion in profits during the past four years alone, and Castro is believed to have made about $50 million thus far on his end of the deal.

"Fundamentally," says one U.S. narcotics agent, "the story of Vesco and Castro is a story of pure, unadulterated cynicism. These are people who deserve each other."

THE BAHAMIAN CONNECTION

eluding U.S. authorities for years. Probably the most wanted white-collar criminal in recent U.S. history, Vesco was indicted in 1971 for looting $224 million from investors who had put their money into a Swiss-based mutual fund known as Investors Overseas Services (I.O.S.). Additionally, Vesco is wanted on charges that he made an illegal $200,000 contribution to President Nixon's 1972 reelection campaign — in the hope of having the I.O.S. charges dropped.

Since then, Vesco has popped up all over the Caribbean, living at various times in Antigua, Costa Rica and, most significantly, the Bahamas. It was while residing there three years ago, according to U.S. law-enforcement officials, that Vesco began smuggling drugs.

As Vesco could not have failed to notice, the Bahamas have been notorious for years as a prime trans-shipment point for marijuana, cocaine and other narcotics moving northward from production centers in South America, primarily Colombia and Bolivia. Dotted with tiny islands and secluded anchorages, and only 50 miles from the United States, the Bahamas are ideally suited for drug-smuggling operations. Fast boats regularly run the gauntlet of the U.S. Coast Guard and Drug Enforcement Administration (D.E.A.) attempts to stop them. The potential profits, however, are worth the risks: A boat loaded with 100 kilos of cocaine can bring up to $25 million in street sales.

The hundreds of millions of dollars passing through this Bahamian connection — the single most important entry point of illegal drugs being shipped to the United States — attracted Vesco's interest, and by 1981, U.S. officials became aware that a new sophistication and style seemed to have entered the Bahamian trade. They were right: Vesco was organizing the traffickers into a much more efficient business organization, and, in the process, subverting Bahamian Government and police officials with an extensive bribery scheme that soon converted some Bahamian bureaucrats into virtual partners. "It's almost indescribable what goes on out there," says one U.S. agent of the Bahamas.

Vesco's most sophisticated contribution was the solution of a problem that had been bedeviling major narcotics traffickers for years: What could they do with all the money they were earning? This may not seem much of an obstacle, but in fact it is. Some traffickers have so much money, they tally it up in pounds. More importantly, bundles of unaccounted-for money tend to attract the attention of Federal agents, especially from the I.R.S.

Vesco devised a solution that Federal agents concede was nothing short of brilliant: He set up a series of small banks in the Caribbean, where secrecy laws make it easy to protect the identities of depositors. Working in concert with corrupt lawyers and accountants in the Southeastern United States, Vesco then devised a complex scheme to launder all that drug money through a series of bank transactions that converted cash into holdings in offshore corporations based mostly in the Caribbean.

But although the drug business was flourishing, Vesco had some worries. One was an escalating U.S. effort to stop it, including a crackdown on big dealers in this country and an increasingly successful effort to infiltrate the major drug-smuggling rings. More significantly, the advent of the Reagan Administration brought a renewed campaign to block smuggling routes, using increased air and ship patrols. Clearly, the smugglers would need a lot of help if they were going to be able to evade U.S. patrols.

One of Vesco's most important partners, a notorious trafficker named Carlos Enrique Lehder Rivas, is believed to have provided the answer: the Government of Cuba.

A COCAINE PARTNERSHIP

U.S. agents were well aware of Lehder. For years, the Colombian had been listed as one of the world's major cocaine traffickers. Operating out of the Bahamas, he virtually took over one small island, Norman's Cay, setting up landing strips and a sophisticated communications system (including a 120-foot radio antenna, which probably allowed for contact with most of the U.S. East Coast) in order to run cocaine into the United States via a small fleet of boats. U.S. agents say Lehder and Vesco met in 1980, when the Colombian was trying to figure out a way to hide the money from his drug profits. He decided to go into partnership with Vesco, and by 1981 the two men were the most important suppliers of cocaine to this country — in the process, raking in nearly $300 million a year.

By 1982, Lehder had established contact with agents of the D.G.I., the Cuban intelligence service, operating in Colombia. The Cubans needed Lehder; they were trying to run guns to leftist M19 guerillas in the Colombian countryside. Lehder, with his extensive smuggling operation, was perfect for the job, and a deal was struck: Lehder would aid Cuban arms smuggling into Colombia, while the Cubans would provide protection, anchorages and other help for his drug-smuggling operations into the United States.

As a highly successful smuggler, Lehder attracted a lot of attention from U.S. drug agents. It was an interest that increased substantially when the agents noticed Lehder in deep conversation with known D.G.I. agents in Colombia. "You didn't have to be much of a genius to figure out that the Cubans were cooking up a deal with Lehder," says an American intelligence official. "The formula was simple: For the Cubans to be talking to Lehder could mean only that their orders came straight from the top. In other words, Castro. Lehder worked with Vesco, which meant that sooner or later, Vesco and Castro would be working together too."

It was not long before U.S. officials had proof of the Cuban involvement: tracking of drug-laden boats revealed that some of them were operating in Cuban waters and berthing at Cuban ports. Obviously, there was official Cuban Government sanction for the drug boats. What the Americans did not realize then was that the Lehder-Cuban connection was only the beginning of what would become a much more extensive business partnership.

As Vesco realized, the Lehder-Cuban deal was important, but given the Castro Government's apparent willingness to work with drug smugglers, there was potential for an even greater business arrangement. Before Vesco could make a move, however, the Cubans themselves acted. In late 1981, D.G.I. operatives in Colombia contacted another Vesco drug business associate – Johnny Crump, an American with a severe stutter, whose family had settled in Colombia years before. After his cattle-ranching business failed in 1979, Crump went into the narcotics racket, running a large-scale cocaine and marijuana-smuggling operation with Vesco in the Bahamas.

Crump knew Jaime Guillot-Lara, another Colombian listed by U.S. agents as one of the biggest and most successful marijuana smugglers in the world. It turned out that Guillot and Crump shared a problem: U.S. agents were consistently knocking off their associates and seizing their boats. There were heavy losses, and Crump — who at one point was making $3 million a year from drugs — was in trouble. So was Guillot, who had lost six ships.

Apparently aware of their problems, the Cuban D.G.I. agents had a proposition: official Havana protection for the drug ships, in exchange for which Guillot and Crump would obtain American arms in the United States, then smuggle them into Chile to be used by anti-Government forces. Both men accepted the deal, and the Cubans then proposed a more efficient method for smuggling drugs. The problem, the Cubans noted, centered on the large "mother ships" (big merchant vessels) the Colombians were using to move drugs into the U.S. Those ships, loaded to the gunwales with tons of narcotics, represented a huge investment; if the American agents seized such a craft, the loss would be considerable. The solution, the Cubans noted, would be for the mother ship's load to be transferred into a number of smaller and faster boats. The Americans could not hope to intercept every craft. Thus, the traffickers could afford to lose a small boat or two, as long as the other boats got through.

Since transferring drugs from a big ship to smaller ships is difficult on the high seas, the key to the scheme was the use of Cuban ports. The mother ships would dock at several Cuban Navy bases (most often at Cayo Largo), where the drugs would be transferred to smaller boats, anything that could make the run. The large ships involved in the operation would have the name "Viviana" painted on their sterns, a signal to Cuban Navy warships that they were to be protected and escorted into Cuban ports. ("Viviana" was the name of Crump's infant daughter.)

The "Viviana" operation was a key piece of evidence about the entire conspiracy. "We learned," says a U.S. official familiar with the case, "that the D.G.I. agents in Colombia had established a very close relationship with Crump. So close, in fact, that one of the senior D.G.I. men served as godfather for Viviana, Crump's daughter. Crump may have thought it was clever to use his daughter's name as a codeword in the operation, but it ultimately backfired, providing an important link between the Cubans and Crump. When Crump was arrested last year in this country for drug trafficking, it was the Viviana business that indicated an undeniable tie with Crump and his Cuban friends. Obviously, it can be fairly deduced that it was all a D.G.I. operation, with the D.G.I. men taking their orders from Castro himself. There's no way the D.G.I. and the Cuban Navy would have carried out drug smuggling without Castro's official permission, that's for sure."

Ed Stuky/Camera 5

Robert Vesco, in Costa Rica, 1977.

The deal was somewhat similar to the one worked out with Lehder, but with an important difference: This time, the Cubans demanded a cut of the drug profits, according to U.S. agents, amounting to $500,000 to $700,000 for each large boatload sailing in Cuban waters, depending on the size and type of cargo.

ENTER CASTRO

The Cuban insistence on money caught Vesco's attention immediately, for it suggested that Castro might be willing to do real business with drug smugglers, despite the Cuban Government's official (and stiff) prohibition against all narcotics. As Vesco further noted, the Cuban involvement initially seemed mainly political, connected with smuggling arms to leftist guerillas. But the Cubans were now looking for a cash piece of the action.

No one is quite certain exactly when it came about, but some time late in 1982, Vesco established contact with Castro's representatives and apparently suggested that there were a number of attractive business propositions to be discussed, all of which could lead to extensive profits for the regime. At first glance, there is cause to wonder why the Cubans, officially a revolutionary government firmly opposed to having anything to do with drugs, would want

It is probable that Vesco did not know the real answer to that question, but the C.I.A. did. The answer, the agency discovered, had nothing to do with capitalism, but a lot to do with a very serious problem Castro was facing. The problem was the D.G.I. itself. Created, nurtured and funded by the Soviets, the D.G.I. had been taken over by the K.G.B. in 1967, and since then, operated as a virtual K.G.B. branch office. Its Moscow-trained leaders were total Soviet puppets, and Castro fretted that as long as Moscow controlled the D.G.I. purse strings, he would never have his own intelligence service.

Castro concluded, say U.S. agents, that he would have to form his own intelligence agency, one loyal only to him. To do that, however, required money — lots of it — and money was in very short supply in Cuba. Operating the country on a Russian dole estimated by the State Department as $1 million a day, Castro had no access to the very large amount of cash that would be required to fund and operate a competing intelligence agency.

The connections with drug runners provided one source of secret income, and Vesco then proposed another lucrative scheme. Cuba was the target of an American trade embargo, which meant that Castro lacked the kind of high technology he needed for modernization of the Cuban economy, especially the sugar industry, the country's staple. Vesco proposed a plan under which he would arrange to smuggle into Cuba advanced American technology, the kind the Soviets could not provide — in exchange for which Castro would protect the drug traffickers. As an added bonus, the Cubans would be paid a cut of the cocaine and marijuana traffic moving into the United States.

It is unknown at this point how much advanced technology Vesco was able to procure for Castro, but it must have been extensive, for by last year, U.S. agents had begun to receive reports that Vesco had taken up residence in Cuba, where he was being treated like royalty, at the magnificent seaside villa just outside of Havana.

Further confirmation of the extent of the Castro-Vesco partnership surfaced last year, when U.S. Customs agents, investigating a case of illegal shipment of goods out of Texas ports, unearthed a businessman from that state who had shipped a load of bull semen — vital for breeding high quality cows that are especially suited to tropical climates — to Cuba in an arrangement with Vesco. But as the agents dug deeper, they found that the illegal shipment of semen was evidence of a larger conspiracy: In an extensive arrangement involving four countries, Vesco had contrived to smuggle out of the United States a large amount of embargoed equipment to Cuba, including computers and $700,000 worth of sugar-processing technology.

The investigation also provided intriguing peeks into Vesco's special status in Cuba. For example, the agents found a man whom Vesco used as a conduit for money to be given to several men charged in the United States in connection with the illegal shipments. According to the man, he flew in a private plane hired by Vesco

(Atlanta, Georgia) —

Answer: Roach Kill works. Period. Its formula is 99.5% effective as proven in tests at a leading university.

In contrast, eight well known brands of spray insecticides flunked the same scientific tests. They failed to kill a high number of roaches in heavily infested areas. One of these smelly sprays actually failed to kill any roaches at all!

Question: What is Roach Kill?

Answer: It's an odorless white powder. Roach Kill is applied in seconds from a squeeze bottle behind appliances and in other out-of-the-way areas.

Question: Frank, how does Roach Kill work?

Answer: The secret is in the fact that it's odorless. Roaches can't smell it, so they don't avoid it like they avoid smelly spray insecticides. Instead, they walk right over it. They pick up a little bit on their legs and carry it back to their hidden nests in the walls. There, Roach Kill wipes out the whole colony that breeds new roaches.

Question: How long does it last?

Question: What is your full guarantee and how does it work?

Answer: Roach Kill is so incredibly effective that it has a double-your-money-back guarantee. Roach Kill is guaranteed to wipe out every roach in the house or apartment with one treatment or I'll send the customer double his money back.

All a customer has to do is return the empty bottle with a note that he saw even one single roach after trying it according to the simple directions.

Question: How can readers order Roach Kill?

Answer: To order now, call toll-free 1-800-554-1800 Operator 951 for Visa or Mastercard orders. Or, simply write your name and address on a piece of paper plus the words: "Send me Roach Kill." Mail the paper with a check for $9.95 plus $2.00 shipping and handling to the following address: FC&A, 23 Eastbrook Bend, Dept. VFW-4A, Peachtree City, GA 30269.

It's that easy. Order extra bottles for garages and basements. There's no extra shipping charge on large orders. Two bottles cost only $19.90 + $2.00 shipping.

Double and triple orders are shipped extra fast by UPS. Single orders by mail. Prove to yourself that it really works! Remember our double-your-money-back guarantee.

CASTRO-VESCO

into Havana, where, despite the fact he had no visa or passport, Vesco waved him through customs and took him to the large villa mentioned earlier. Vesco, he told U.S. agents, handed him $240,000 with instructions to use it raising bail for defendants in the case involving illegal shipments.

Some time before this incident, Federal narcotics agents in Florida had uncovered another part of the Vesco operation. The key was the arrest of Crump while he was trying to unload cocaine in Florida. Crump agreed to become a Government informant, and equipped with a new identity and under round-the-clock protection, has since been fevealing the connections between the Vesco drug operations and the Cuban Government.

Crump's revelations — along with other information from several defectors from the D.G.I. — have led the Reagan Administration to publicly accuse Castro of running a drug-smuggling operation. In testimony before a Senate subcommittee in April 1983, James H. Michel, Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs, said: "We have a report that the Communist Party Presidium, and specifically Fidel Castro, in early 1979 considered a scheme to begin dealing with narcotics smugglers, using Cuba as a bridge and support base for the networks to the United States."

The Cuban Government has consistently and flatly refused to discuss such allegations.

Although the arrests in Texas and Florida may have put a crimp in Vesco's operations, it would be an illusion to think that they have slowed him much. For one thing, U.S. agents have no real idea how much American technology Vesco has managed (and is still managing) to smuggle into Cuba. For another, the drug traffic northward into this country continues at even greater levels (it is now estimated that traffickers in Colombia alone ship about 50 tons of cocaine here each year. Further, despite indictments of crooked lawyers and bankers who have worked with Vesco in his scheme to hide drug profits, money is still pouring into new banks that Vesco seems able to create overnight.

The problem is the enormous potential profit to be made in smuggling. Vesco's standard payment of 7 percent of a drug deal to those willing to run the risk of laundering the money in Bahamian banks is tempting to anyone who wants to take a chance on becoming a millionaire overnight. And to the traffickers, who also stand to make millions, trying to get boats past the U.S. bloodhounds seems a risk well worth taking.

More importantly, the gamble is still appealing to Fidel Castro, who, thanks to Vesco, has found a source of the money he so desperately needs. As U.S. authorities are the first to concede, stopping men of the ruthlessness, shrewdness and sheer amorality of Fidel Castro and Robert Vesco is not easy. After all, they are proven survivors. FW

AMERICA WELCOMES BACK DANISH MODERN

By Evan Frances Agnew

In 1949, Hans Wegner, a Danish cabinet maker, designed a round chair that was so beautifully crafted and comfortable that Americans dubbed it The Chair. At the same time, his Scandinavian colleagues were boggling our minds with their innovative yet wonderfully practical furniture pieces: stacking chairs, stools and tables; storage-wall systems; castered and swiveling seating; and rocking chairs and rolling teacarts that looked more like sculpture than furniture. Americans toasted "skol" to "Danish Modern."

Unfortunately, the hand-built pieces were prohibitively expensive, partly due to import tariffs and high shipping costs. Still, because the quality of the materials, design and craftsmanship had no equal at the time, Americans who could afford to pay the high prices did so with pleasure. The rest of the country could only admire from afar.

Then, inevitably, some manufacturers here in this country decided to get on the bandwagon and "knock off" the Scandinavian pieces. To entice and feed a mass market, they cut prices by using inferior materials and techniques. The honest simplicity and beauty of the Danish, Swedish, Norwegian and Finnish pieces were missing from the imitations, which carried the appellation of the unique originals. It didn't take long for consumers to tire of these copies. The style began to be associated with cheap motels, and by the early '60s, "Danish Modern" was synonymous with tacky.

But their designers bridled under the accusation that nothing new had happened since the classic period of the 1940s and '50s. Their designs had always depended more on evolution than revolution, and instead of straining to invent something merely for the sake of "newness," they continued to concentrate on improving already-existing styles that, through the centuries, had demonstrated their practical value. Their diligence paid off. Americans have once again become appreciative of Scandinavian furniture.

A little bit of history: Modern Danish design can be traced to functionalist-architect Kaare Klint, who in the 1930s designed furniture to conform to human proportions. It was Klint who introduced the practice of molding traditional designs into new and innovative forms, placing the stress on function. His major work was done with Chippendales, but he also had great success

WORK ETHICS

THE COURAGE TO GIVE IT A GO

By Marion Long

It happens to hundreds of people daily; it happens to tens of thousands of people every year: an injury on the job that keeps them out of work for months, even years. And studies show that the reasons they don't go back to work are not totally medical.

The biggest reason, says Kathy Rickert, director of the work-capacity program at Illinois's Grant Hospital, is that "most of these individuals are afraid to return to their jobs. The idea of going back to do the same activity that injured them is frightening."

Pat Redding

There are other explanations — such as legal advice to stay off the job while accident claims are settled — but for the most part, getting employees to return to work is a matter of convincing them that they are able to resume their former responsibilities.

To this end, several hospitals — in Michigan, California and Illinois — have established their programs in "work-capacity." These are designed to provide injured workers — as well as their employers and insurance companies — with hard data about just what they are able or unable to do.

They start by performing seemingly simple tasks, intended to provide information about their tactile senses, range of motion, and endurance.

Once the participants complete the two-week program they receive a detailed description of their work capacity. More important, says program director Rickert, is that "We give them confidence by showing just what they can safely do." FW

The trend was continued in the 1940's and 50's by Wegner (still an active designer) and others. One of Wegner's great achievements was his adaptation of the English Windsor into a beautifully symmetrical Peacock chair. In a time when many of the international pieces on the market were harsh, angular, spartan and literally as well as figuratively cold (often of tubular steel), the Scandinavians were exporting furniture that was cozy and comforting — with exposed grain from a wealth of available woods (beech, oak, elm, rosewood and teak, though the last lost much of its appeal from overuse). It was rich in color, uncomplicated in form, lightweight and pliant. Though new and exciting, the pieces seemed like old friends.

"Denmark's position in international furniture design," Wegner says, "is a consequence of our late industrialization, which allowed our craftsmen to survive and preserve the skills that were lost elsewhere." The designer is a freelance contributor, rather than an employee, collaborating with the manufacturer. This system is preferred by even the larger Danish companies.

Still recovering from the loss of the American market in the '60s, Scandinavian designers looked for ways to increase the appeal of their product to consumers in the United States. They experimented with plastics and metals, steel wire, nylon thread, fiberglass and K.D. (furniture that could be knocked down or broken into parts for transporting. This eased the cost of shipping considerably.) They moved into mass production, but with sensitivity and respect.

One man, an American named Robert Darvin, played a large part in bringing Danish Modern back to this country. To solve the problem of furnishing his own apartment handsomely but on a modest budget, Darvin bought furniture from an Air Force pilot who was flying it in from Denmark. From this beginning, Darvin started the "Scandinavian Design" retail chain. His 30-store organization (from Boston to Minneapolis) sold $60 million worth of furniture in 1983 and expects to double that in 1984. The company also sells through the mail.

According to Furniture Today (and confirmed by trade export divisions of all four Scandinavian countries), the growing strength of the dollar has made Scandinavian furniture products more competitive in the United States. In 1982, Denmark was the fourth largest exporter of furniture to this country with $450 million in sales, mostly in wood furniture. And in 1984, 25 percent of all Danish furniture exports will be shipped here.

"Danish Modern" is back. Still noted for its beauty, quality and comfort, and now for its affordable price, it's better than ever. FW

HOW TO JUMP START A SLOW STARTER

By Lenora Yuen and Jane Burka

Much has been written about how to deal with our own tendency to procrastinate. But how do you cope with someone else who is always putting things off?

To help a procrastinator, you have to start with the proper attitude. Realize that your influence over the person in question is limited. You can try to guide him or her to do what you want, but you can't make the individual take action. Also, be flexible about your strategy. If one approach fails, a different technique may help to light a fire under your delayer.

One helpful strategy is to sit down with the procrastinator and discuss the task, the completion date and the consequences of not getting it done. Be specific and concrete so that both of you have the same understanding as to what is expected. By allowing the procrastinator to actively participate in defining the goal, deadline and consequences, you will give that person a sense of control and may help to diminish his or her need to put things off in order to feel more powerful.

Procrastinators often set extremely unrealistic goals. They think about what they'd like to accomplish rather than about what's possible. To help such people be more realistic about a task, watch for phrases such as, "No problem — won't be any trouble at all." Then, ask questions that will help him think more clearly: "What's actually involved in rebuilding the fence, Sam? Is it really just putting up new lumber?" Such questions will get the person to stop and consider.

A procrastinator also tends to be vague and unrealistic about time and about what steps are necessary to reach his goal. Therefore, he or she often gets caught short, leading to a frantic last-minute scramble. One way to avoid this frenzy is to help the person set small mini-goals, a series of steps that need to be accomplished in order to reach the larger, final objective.

Try to function as a consultant and not as a director. In other words, offer your support, be a sounding board, and guide the procrastinator into being realistic, but don't try to decide things for him. Avoid continually checking up on the procrastinator's progress or reminding him or her about what needs to be done. This will cause resentment about your watchfulness. You should also never come to his rescue by doing the task yourself.

In addition, you'll want to reward the procrastinator for a job well done, say, with an evening at the movies after he has spent two hours working.

You need to let a procrastinator know that your caring and respect are not based solely upon his success or failure at accomplishing certain tasks. It may take a while for the message to sink in, but it's one of the most profound ways you can help a procrastinator — starting right now. FW

FREDDY
The Frog Prince

Once upon a time, in a dark green forest there lived by the side of a still deep pond a giant green frog prince named Freddy.

He sat upon a lily pad, listening and waiting for a playmate. Freddy was lonesome, and most of all he wished for a cosy corner in a nice friendly home, where he could sit and smile at all the people that lived there.

Wouldn't you enjoy having an amusing friend like Freddy? He's simple to sew from bright green felt—just add your own fiberfil stuffing and a little love...place him in a corner in the family room; take him to a college dorm, or let him guard the other toys in the nursery or playroom.

K-102—Freddy, the Frog Prince kit contains complete easy-to-follow instructions, pattern pieces, felt, and embroidery floss for a 12-inch toy.

THE LAW

WHEN CHILD-SUPPORT PAYMENTS STOP COMING

By Saunders M. Bridges Jr.

In a small Southern city, a 10-year-old boy stays at home alone every evening, while his mother works at a second job. She wouldn't need to moonlight if she were receiving the child-support payments ordered by the court when she and her husband were divorced. But her ex-spouse sits in jail, choosing to serve time for contempt of court rather than make his payments. "We both wanted custody," he says. "She got it. Now let her pay for it."

According to the latest Census Bureau figures, only 53 percent of parents with custody receive the full child-support payments ordered by the courts. Twenty-eight percent receive nothing at all; almost $4 billion per year goes unpaid. Margaret M. Heckler, secretary of Health and Human Services, calls the situation "a major cause of poverty among women, who constitute the vast majority of those awarded custody and child support."

"Support is a part of my budget," explains one mother. "When the payment doesn't come, I'm automatically overdrawn at the bank." But the fathers who aren't paying are faced with difficulties as well, says Wylie Caldwell Jr., a Family Court judge in South Carolina. "Few families have extra money, even after divorce. Suddenly there are two households to maintain. The father, who usually pays the child support, may be left with too little to live on. Very often he has to choose his creditors over his children."

But occasionally, even men who can afford to send money refuse to make support payments because of anger or jealousy. Others use the money as leverage to enforce visitation rights. "Sometimes when payments stop," says Judge Caldwell, "we find an underlying dispute over visitation. But fathers should remember that the courts are available to enforce visitation as well as support payments."

Still, some groups, such as the National Organization for Men (N.O.M.), blame the courts for sometimes making the problem worse. "Husbands don't get fair treatment," says N.O.M. founder Sidney Siller. "Mothers get custody 95 percent of the time, but the husbands almost always have to pay."

Enforcement of court-ordered support payments can present judges with a dilemma. "Sometimes we have to order a father to jail," says Caldwell. "He may lose his job, which makes things worse, but there's not much else we can do. And frankly, once they're threatened with jail, they usually find a way to make payments."

Moreover, it looks as if enforcement will get stricter. The House of Representatives recently passed a bill that would strengthen collection procedures across the country. The bipartisan bill, strongly supported by the Reagan Administration, creates incentives for states to allow garnishment of wages, seizure of income-tax refunds and the placing of liens on personal property. All this worries N.O.M. "It gives the father no opportunity for a hearing," says Siller, "thus depriving him of the Constitutional guarantee of due process." The bill's supporters, however, argue that husbands do get a hearing in court on the day when support payments are originally set.

Can anything be done to avoid payment disputes before they arise? There is a growing trend to route payments through the court, rather than directly to the custodial parent. When support payments become past due, the court automatically summons the provider to pay. If the parent doesn't send money within a specified time, he — or she — can be fined or jailed.

Joint custody, instead of just visitation rights for one parent, seems to help. In joint-custody situations, says James A. Cook, president of the Joint Custody Association in Los Angeles, payment delinquency is only 6 percent. "There is one universal fact we've noticed," says Cook. "The more contact a parent has with the child, the more likely he is to make the payments on time." FW

HOLIDAY NOTES

BOOKING A VACATION ON CAMPUS

By Ruth Rejnis

Christina and Paul Besse raved about their vacation last year: They had an attractive, air-conditioned room, good meals, lots of activities, congenial company.

Sound like a luxury spa? A cruise? A European guided tour?

Well, believe it or not, this New Orleans couple "holidayed" on the campus of Texas A & M University.

Vacationing on a college campus seems like a contradiction in terms, but it's actually an increasingly popular trend. The Besses are part of a growing number of Americans who take advantage of the holidays offered on a few dozen campuses across the country open to individuals and families for part of the summer. For a fixed and usually reasonable fee, vacationers are offered room and board, classes in a wide variety of topics, and extracurricular activities.

Course options (generally in the form of short lectures) range from arts to earth sciences. During her one-week stay at A & M, for instance, Mrs. Besse attended talks on world geography, photography, gemology, woodcarving, antiques and agriculture, as well as a lecture by author James Michener.

"After all that I felt I had really ventilated my mind," she recalls.

People who vacation at Ohio Wesleyan University this summer will be studying a single theme: "The Many Faces of Power." Laura Newman, head of the week-long June program, explains that, in addition to attending classroom lectures, participants will visit state Government offices. The cost is expected to be around $260 per person. "They are absolutely spoon-fed, we take such good care of them," Newman says.

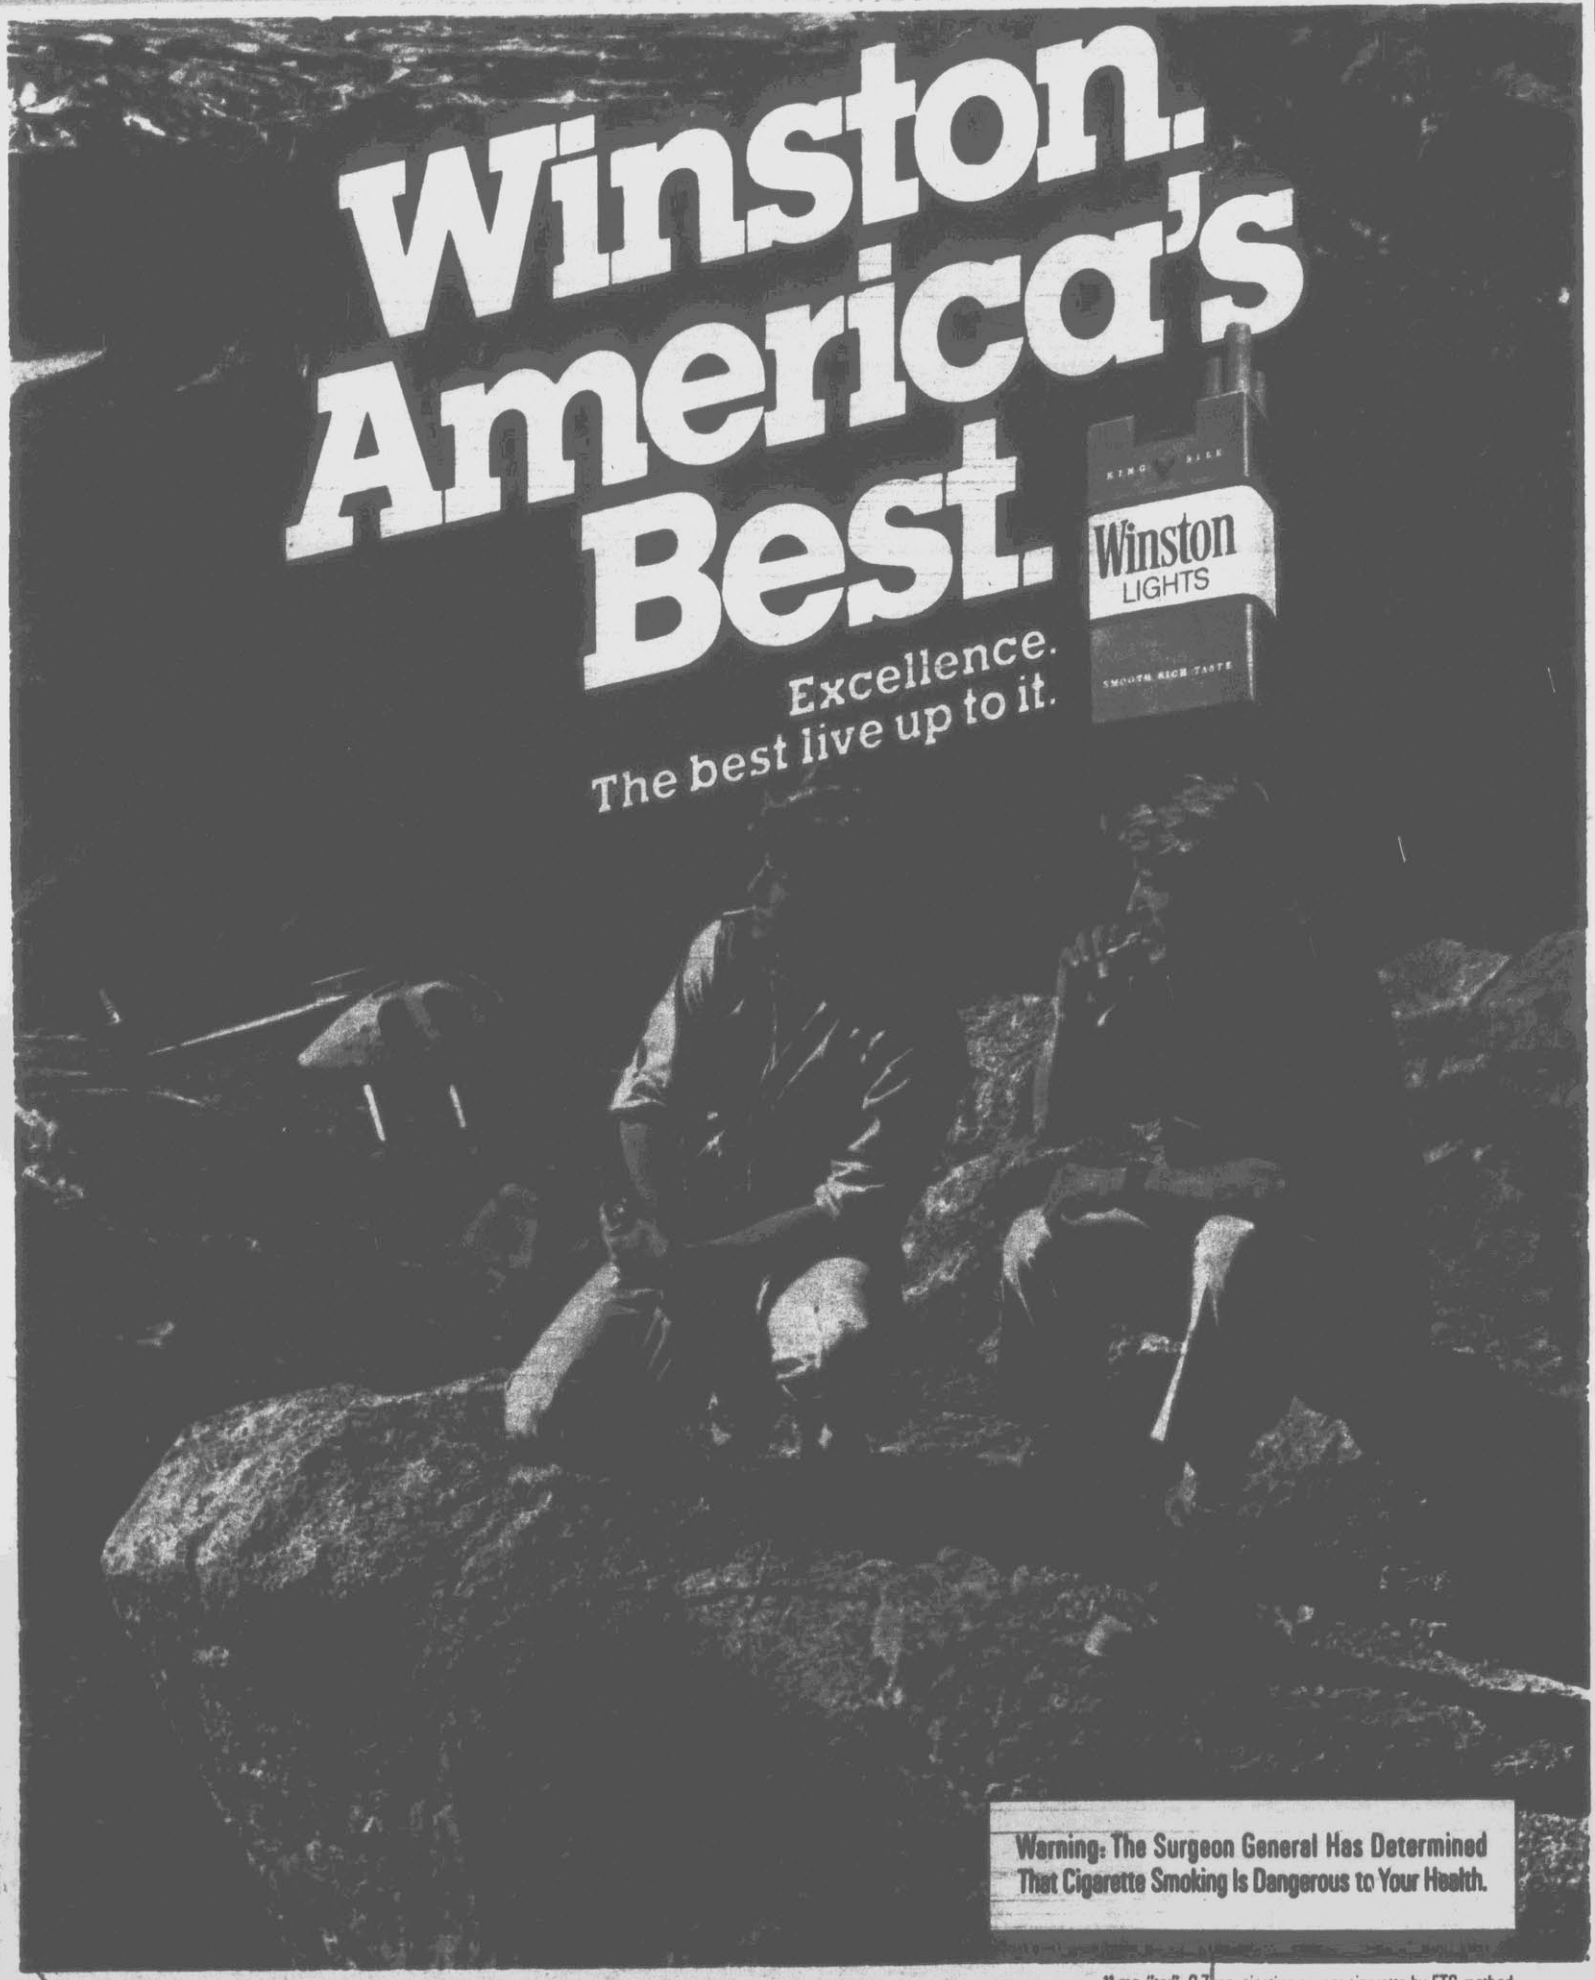

Children are also well provided for. Almost all college vacation programs include special daytime activities to keep youngsters busy. And with simply furnished dormitory rooms or suites, Mom and Dad don't have to worry about kids getting rambunctious. What's more, the whole family can use the schools' leisure facilities, such as pools, tennis courts, bowling lanes and video game rooms.

Rates for campus vacations range from fairly high-priced ($600 or so per individual, less for children) to very affordable (around $250 per person, less for kids). Most programs run from four to seven days.

The nonprofit, Boston-based Elderhostel program, which arranges for "students" 60 or older to enroll in colleges around the country, includes summer programs among its offerings. Elderhostel participants can, for example, spend a week during the summer on the tree-shaded campus of Stevens Institute of Technology in Hoboken, N.J., near New York City. Tour guides from the school regularly escort small groups of students into Manhattan. Cost of the program: just $190 per person . . . almost the price of one night at a luxury hotel in the Big Apple! WHIZ QUIZ

ONLY TIME WILL TELL

By John E. Gibson

TRUE OR FALSE

1. How fast or how slow time passes for you depends on your internal clock.
2. Time passes faster for introverts than for extroverts, who need frequent stimulation to keep from being bored.
3. When you're upset about something, it can play tricks on your sense of time.
4. You can tell a lot about a person's attitude and outlook on life with nothing more than a stop-watch.
5. The older you get, the slower time passes for you.
6. Your internal clock stops ticking when you go to sleep.
7. Being good at telling the time without looking at a clock reveals something about your personality.

ANSWERS

1. True. University of California studies have shown that one's internal or biological clock, which measures time on a subconsious level, can make clock time appear to pass swiftly or slowly ("I can't believe it's five o'clock already," or "That clock must have stopped again. It seems like we've been here all day."), depending on what's going on around you, what you're doing, and your personality type.
2. False. Studies conducted at the University of Calgary (Canada), City University of New York, and the University of London show that when subjects are asked to estimate various periods of time — ranging from a few seconds to an hour or more — extroverts report that time passes more quickly than do introverts.
3. True. Studies at the University of Rochester, George Mason University (Va) and Sweden's University of Uppsala have shown that when a person is emotionally upset, his internal clock ticks faster than the clock on the wall, causing him to think that more time has passed than actually has. And when a person is under severe stress, time may seem almost to stand completely still.
4. True. There are two interesting personality types — each as different from the other as are introverts and extroverts: the internally-oriented, who view their rewards as being dependent upon their own actions, and the externally-oriented, who tend to see their rewards as dependent on some external source, such as luck, fate, or powerful others.

In time perception studies conducted by a team of psychologists at Mercyhurst College (Pa.), subjects were tested on their ability to estimate the passage of time in 15–, 30–, 45– and 60–second intervals. Results: Internally-oriented people estimated the time intervals much more accurately than did the externals. The investigators concluded that "the internal's conception of time is not only more accurate, but more dynamic and autonomous than the external's."
5. False. Psychological studies at the University of North Alabama have demonstrated that though the passing years may slow a person down appreciably, they have the opposite effect on time, causing it to pass much more swiftly when a person is older than when he was younger. In the study, which was comprised of men and women of various ages, subjects all reported that time seems to pass much more rapidly at the present than when they were one-half and one-quarter their present ages.
6. False. Research sponsored by the National Institute of Mental Health has shown that your internal clock functions while you're asleep as well as when you're awake. That's why many people have an "inner alarm" that enables them to awake at the time they want to.
7. True. Several psychological studies have shown that the more accurate your sense of time, the more practical you are in your approach to problems and the more you are inclined to be action-minded — rather than a dreamer or visionary. FW

EXTRAORDINARY PEOPLE

A GRADE "A" TEACHER WHO LOVES HIS JOB

By Denise Melilli

For the past 13 years, John Bowen has been the advisor of The Times. Not The New York Times, but the Lakewood Times, a twice-monthly student publication at Ohio's Lakewood High School.

His read-all-about-it success with the aspiring journalists in his charge is exemplified by his record: His students have won over 400 individual awards since he joined the staff, and the paper has received the Quill & Scroll Gallup Award (the journalism honorary society's top prize for editorial excellence) for five consecutive years.

In recognition of his efforts, Bowen, 37, was named the 1983 National High School Journalism Teacher of the Year by the Dow Jones Newspaper Fund. It might not have been front-page news, but it gave Bowen an "extra" boost.

His own introduction to headlines and pica widths was, Bowen reports, "in the classic way": He had an English teacher who believed in his potential as a newswriter. But as time went on, his enthusiasm for reporting became overshadowed by his admiration for teachers. Somehow, the classroom just seemed a more appealing place than the newsroom.

"It's the kids," explains Bowen. "Seeing the things they can do and watching them progress and grow is a terrific experience, and it's even better when you can take a kid who has never thought about writing and reporting and get him to try it. That student may never go into journalism, but seeing what he can do and watching him succeed is a success for me."

"There is often more attention given to selecting a football coach than there is to selecting a journalism teacher," he points out. "A football coach can teach students how to play football and encourage them to win. But if a team loses a game, then they put it behind them. If there is an error in a game, then you let it pass.

"In journalism it's not that easy. If you make an error, it is printed and it's there forever. A mistake can affect a reputation — and not just for a week, but perhaps a lifetime."

Attention to accuracy and excellence has made The Times an award-winning publication. Nonetheless, the honors are secondary to providing students with a place where they can start their careers and sharpen their writing skills.

"I try to be as good as I can, and if that means winning awards, then I am happy with our success," Bowen says. "When I started as the journalism advisor, I felt we had to win the awards for recognition of our progress. But we don't have to do that anymore."

Bowen: Class act

Despite his obvious love for teaching at the high school level, there was a brief period seven years ago when Bowen considered moving on. "I figured I'd be more fulfilled teaching at the college level," he recalls.

He did, indeed, apply to several colleges and received an offer. "But at the last minute, I realized that teaching young students was more important to me," he explains. "I haven't reached the point where I want to leave, and I may never reach that point. Each crop of kids is another challenge.

"There are rough spots in what I do, and I am always working on getting people to respect journalism as an academic discipline. There are some teachers and people who feel that I don't teach anything worthwhile."

Stressing the importance of who, what, when, where and why — the five w's of reporting — has at times been a trying experience for Bowen.

"The journalism teacher is alone in a school. There is no one else on the staff who understands the pains and the needs. They wouldn't want to. They only understand that they are upset if their pet project is not placed on page one — all of page one.

"Yet I feel vindicated by the hassles," Bowen concludes. "It is a reinforcing experience, and it confirms that what I am doing is worthwhile." FW

OLYMPIC GREEN

The Summer Games are still three months away, but there's already a bit of an Olympic overload. There's the official car, the official camera, the official candy — there's probably an official anti-perspirant — of either the U.S. Olympic Team or the Olympics themselves. Aren't we just a little tired of it all?

Apparently not. Crain Communications of Chicago (they publish Advertising Age) surveyed over 1,200 adults on this very subject. And, surprise! Not only has America's Olympics saturation point not been reached, but many people (35 percent) are more likely to purchase the products of Olympic sponsors than they are to buy others.

The Olympic sponsor label is also an attention grabber. Almost three-quarters of the folks polled said that they had seen ads that mentioned Olympic sponsorship. And the people most attracted to these products are those in the $20,000 to $40,000 income group — just the consumers Olympic sponsors had hoped to win in the first place.

BUGGED BY THE COLD

Cryogenics, the process by which life is preserved over extended periods of time through freezing, has long been given a frosty reception by serious scientists. Now, however, specialists at North Dakota State University (in Fargo) are giving the procedure a cold hard look.

Every year, many strains of rare and genetically unique insects — which are used in research — are destroyed because of the expense and difficulty of maintaining laboratory colonies. In order to preserve them for future generations of scientists, the Dakotans are looking into freezing the sperm and embryonic cells of these bugs. When they are thawed out and transplanted to eggs, the scientists hope that they will develop into mature insects.

Even if it doesn't work out, imagine the possibilities for a great sci-fi flick inspired by a melt-down in the ol' cryogenics lab.

HOW GAUCHE!

Right-handed people have heard for years that left-handedness is a sign of creative genius. Consider Michelangelo, Einstein, DaVinci and Reggie Jackson. One theory: The left side of the brain, which controls the right side of the body, is the center of rational thought; the right hemisphere of the brain, which governs the left side of the body, is the source of abstract, emotional thought. Some researchers believe there's a tendency among very creative people, who rely heavily on the brain's right hemisphere, to favor their left hands.

Now it appears that the same theory of how the brain is organized is shedding some light on the cause of phobias. Claude Chemtob, a psychologist at the Veterans Administration Hospital in Honolulu, noticed that a large proportion of the people he treated for irrational fears were either left-handed or had many southpaws in their families.

After further research, he has theorized that phobias may be caused, in part, by "incomplete lateralization" (a confusion over which side controls what) in the brain.

In most people, the rational hemisphere (left side) controls its more creative neighbor. But in many phobics, the two sides appear to share control, and the rational element is unable to overcome the fears dreamed up by the more emotional right hemisphere.

PTOOEY!

Though the annual Convention of Watermelon Growers is already over and most melons won't be ripe for a couple of months, the rules of the convention's Watermelon Seed Spitting Contest are worthy of note — as you start dreaming of summer picnics. Melvina Bauer, editor of Produce News, filled us in.

- A person's height, weight or size of mouth shall not prevent any individual from competing.
- Official seeds will be provided to all contestants.
- Blowpipes are prohibited.
- A contestant who accidentally swallows a seed while sucking in air prior to seed launch will be given one extra seed.
- Denture wearers whose teeth go farther than the seed shall abide by the judge's decision.

HOCUS-FOCUS

CAN YOU TRUST YOUR EYES? There are at least six differences in drawing details between top and bottom panels. How quickly can you find them? Check answers with those below.

Differences: 1. Picture is missing. 2. Foot is moved. 3. Arm is moved. 4. Stacks are narrower. 5. Dial is different. 6. Phone book is smaller.

Junior Whirl®

by Hal Kaufman

● POINT BLANK! Restore the missing word: "None of us can stand other people having the same _____ as ourselves" — Oscar Wilde, "The Picture of Dorian Gray." P.S.: It's a six-letter word that rhymes with salts.

The missing word is "faults."

● Tacks Problem! If it costs one cent for the first tack and double that for each tack thereafter until 32 tacks were used, what would be the total cost?

Sixty three cents.

● Seedy Bunch! Unscramble names of six garden vegetables: 1. SEAP. 2. RONC. 3. SEBAN. 4. SPINURT. 5. ABAGCEB. 6. TUCELET.

1. Peas. 2. Corn. 3. Beans. 4. Turnips. 5. Cabbage. 6. Lettuce.

PUZZLING WEATHER!

On Monday, the day before yesterday, the weatherman advised: "Today's weather is the opposite of yesterday's. If the weather is the same tomorrow as it was yesterday, the day after tomorrow should be the same as today, and the next day clear."

So far so good, it turns out. It is raining today, Wednesday, and it rained the day before yesterday.

Question: What was the weather like yesterday and what day next should be clear?

Indications are it was clear yesterday and should be again tomorrow (Thursday).

Prince Valiant®

CREATED BY HAL FOSTER

Our Story: PRINCE VALIANT OBSERVES THE CURIOUS CUSTOMS OF THE DAWN PEOPLE, WHO EMERGE FROM THEIR HOVELS ONLY AFTER DARK AND SPEAK OF THE DAY GONE BY AS "YESTERNIGHT." THEY SUP AT SUNRISE AS THE BARD CYNAN SINGS THE EPIC TALES OF NIGHTS OF YORE. ONCE HE TELLS OF THE LAST KING OF THE DAWN PEOPLE TO RULE OVER BRITAIN, AND THIS IS HIS TALE:

"WHEN THE BRITON CAME TO OUR SHORES, THIS KING WENT TO THE PRIESTS. 'SO LONG AS THIS CANDLE BURN,' THEY TOLD HIM, 'OUR ARMIES SHALL PREVAIL.'

"THE PRIESTS SPOKE TRULY, FOR THE BRITON WERE BEATEN BACK. ONE MORE ENCOUNTER AND THEY WOULD BE DRIVEN INTO THE SEA. YET THE KING WAS UNHAPPY, FOR HE WAS SORE SMITTEN WITH LOVE FOR THE WIFE OF A NOBLE LORD, AND SHE RETURNED NOT HIS LOVE.

"ON THE EVE OF BATTLE THE KING RECEIVED A VISITOR. 'TAKE ME IN YOUR ARMS,' HIS BELOVED TREMBLED, FOR THE KING'S PROWESS AND FEATS OF VALOR AGAINST THE BRITON HAD CHANGED HER HEART. IN ECSTASY HE FINGERED HER GOLDEN TRESSES AND MET HER PARTED LIPS.

JOHN CULLEN MURPHY

"'WAIT!' SHE CRIED OUT SUDDENLY. 'WE MUST NOT BE SEEN. MY HUSBAND WILL SLAY US BOTH.' AND BEFORE THE KING COULD STOP HER SHE TURNED TOWARD THE CANDLE....

"....AND BLEW IT OUT. THE NEXT MORN, THE KING AND HIS MEN FELL BEFORE THE CONQUERING BRITON. THE DAWN PEOPLE FLED FOR ALL OF TIME INTO THE HIGH COUNTRY.
