County Seeking Bids On Donated Items

By CAROL TYER
Reflector Staff Writer

There is probably enough clothing and equipment left over from items donated for Pitt County tornado victims to fill 10 or 12 tractor-trailor rigs, according to Ed Garrison, director of the county Department of Social Services.

And that is after a concerted effort over a two-month period to distribute the items, including a "yard sale" on June 2 that netted $8,000 and attracted an estimated 6,000 people.

Now, Garrison said, the County Commissioners have decided to seek sealed bids for the whole lot of items still at the New Greenville Warehouse, which needs its floors cleared in time for the coming tobacco auction season.

Garrison said the bids will be opened June 18, and the buyer will be required to move the items by no later than June 23.

County Attorney Bill Watson estimated there are more than 2,000 boxes containing clothes and shoes; 300 men's and women's long coats; 425 men's suits and sports coats; 2,100 women's blouses, 50 women's pantsuits, 1,800 women's slacks, 2,500 women's dresses, 300 women's purses, 3,000 pairs of men's, women's and children's shoes; 800 men's shirts, 200 men's, women's and children's sweaters; 100 formal dresses, 600 women's suits, 20 white uniforms, 200 pairs of socks, 100 belts, 950 kitchen and household items, and 40 hardback and paperback books.

Money raised by the sale will go into the Pitt County Tornado Disaster Relief Fund administered by the DSS.

Margaret Dixon is the social worker who has been assigned to do continuing work with tornado victims. Garrison said her work has actually increased recently, as many of the persons putting their

Party Unity

GOP Goal

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

Now that the primaries are over and nominees for statewide offices have been selected, Republicans will be stressing party unity on the campaign trail to the November general election.

"We're going to try to maintain close contact with the people ... offer them the conservative point of view," Andy Andrews, chairman of the Republican party in Pitt County, said while commenting on the GOP's campaign strategy.

"We're going to use a lot of individual contact ... door-to-door, phones, meetings.

"Each individual campaign manager has his own way of doing things. But party unity is going to be one of our strong points. We're going to stress party unity," Andrews said.

Jim Martin, the GOP nominee for governor who will face Democrat Rufus Edmisten in November, "will be an outstanding representative of all the people of North Carolina ... not just Republicans, but Democrats also," Andrews said. "Personally ... I don't think we have any problems with the Democratic nominee. I feel we have got the most qualified man (Martin)."

As for the race for the U.S. Senate between incumbent Republican Jesse Helms and Gov. Jim Hunt, the Democrat nominee, Andrews said "It's going to be a long, hot summer.

"I feel that Senator Helms' support is just begining to show. It took a while for people to begin to see the seriousness of the situation. But as people become more aware of the campaign, Senator Helms will gain support.

"I feel pretty good about the way things are going right now," Andres said, but he added, "We can never win any election without Democratic support. We really are outnumbered ... we're considered a minority party in North Carolina."

However, the county chairman said, "I feel the Reagan To Soviets: Let's Talk

By MAUREEN SANTINI
Associated Press Writer

LONDON (AP) — President Reagan and his six colleagues at the economic summit urged speedy renewal of nuclear arms control talks Saturday, telling the Soviet Union that the United States is ready to bargain "anywhere, at any time, without preconditions."

While thousands of anti-nuclear demonstrators massed in the streets of London in an effort to disrupt the summit finale, the leaders of the seven major industrial democracies also joined in a denunciation of international terrorism and called for an end to attacks on oil tankers in the Persian Gulf.

Soviet reaction to the arms talks appeal was swift and negative. The Kremlin's official Tass news agency said it showed only that the Western leaders "intend to continue the position-of-strength policy."

In a separate economic communique, the chiefs of state of the United States, Britain, France, West Germany, Italy, Canada and Japan also expressed concern about the impact of high interest rates on the world economic recovery — and especially the debt-burdened Third World.

The final communique, read by British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, the summit host, in London's 15th century Guildhall, was shorn of draft language praising Reagan's efforts to curb U.S. budget deficits, a mild rebuke that betrayed backstage dissension over his economic policies.

The leaders, partly in deference to Reagan's re-election campaign, delicately avoided blaming the United States for high interest rates, but there was no mistaking their deep concern over the threat to the world

Hart Stays In, Will Seek Backing By Uncommitted

DENVER (AP) — Gary Hart said Saturday he has considered the long odds against his defeating Walter F. Mondale, but has decided he will continue to seek the Democratic presidential nomination.

Recalling other tough political contests he has faced, Hart told 3,000 cheering delegates to the Colorado state Democratic convention that if there is one thing they know about him it is "that I do not quit."

"I continue most of all because to turn back now would violate all I stand for, all I believe in," Hart said.

With Hart's devastating loss in New Jersey in one of the final primary elections on June 5, many of Hart's advisers urged him to either withdraw, or continue a low-key candidacy in which his name would be placed in nomination at the Democratic National Convention before Mondale would win a first ballot victory.

But in his speech to the home crowd in Colorado, Hart indicated that he would intensely pursue delegates, including more than 300 who are uncommitted to Hart, Mondale or the Rev. Jesse Jackson.

However, Mondale is already assured the nomination unless 27 or more of the 1,994 delegates who say they back him defect. It only takes 1,967 to win the nomination and Mondale seems likely to pick up more as some 100 state party leaders are assigned delegate seats in the next few weeks before the July convention. He gained five in that category Saturday in Massachusetts. Hart has 1,222.75 delegates, including two gained Saturday in Massachusetts.

All Wet

NEW YORK (AP) — Declaring the competition "all wet," city officials lovingly drew and packed four quarts of New York tap water Saturday and plunged into a multi-city water "Taste Challenge."

"We're very confident that we're going to win," said Andrew McCarthy, spokesman for the city Department of Environmental Protection. "The city's water is very highly rated."

The samples, in unmarked containers, are to be judged just before the convention convenes at 1 p.m. Sunday, McCarthy said.

Satellite Goes Out Of Control

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — A $30 million international communications satellite tumbled out of control after it was launched over the Atlantic Ocean Saturday and NASA officials said there was no way to save it.

The rocket, which was launched by a new "stretched" model of the Atlas-Centaur rocket, lifted on schedule at 7:03 p.m. EDT and everything went well for 23 minutes when suddenly the Centaur upper stage went out of control. The launch control center reported the Centaur and the attached satellite were tumbling.

John Gibbs, Atlas-Centaur project manager, told a news conference an hour after the failure that officials don't know what went wrong.

"If we have this wrapped up in six weeks to two months we'll be doing well," Gibbs said, adding that the National Aeronautics and Space Administration would have to analyze data relayed from the rocket.

The two attached vehicles were in an orbit ranging from 93 miles to 759 miles above the Earth, NASA officials reported. The intent was to place the satellite in a stationary orbit 22,300 miles high.

Officials said eventually the rocket and satellite would burn up from friction because of the low orbit, but NASA could not estimate when.

The failure occurred when the rocket was in contact with a tracking station on Ascension Island in the South Atlantic. It would take several days to fly the data tapes back from the island, NASA said. A review board has been set up to study the failure.

The International Telecommunications Satellite Organization paid NASA $60 million to launch the satellite.

Drivers Charged

Greenville police issued three safe movement violations this weekend after responding to traffic accident calls.

Mohammed Tawifth Amer of Wallace was charged Friday following an accident on 10th Street involving the car he was driving and a vehicle operated by Charles Adams Vincent of 3107 Tucker Road. Damages in the accident totaled $4,000 — $2,000 to each car.

Connie Minges Bond of 1307 Kingsbrook Road was also charged Friday following an accident involving the car she was driving and one operated by Christi Gray Clark of New Bern. There was no damage to the Bond car and $700 to the Clark vehicle.

Also charged was Mary Lynn Cherry of King's Row Apartments. According to police reports, Ms. Cherry's car and one driven by David Leon Taylor of Ayden collided on S. Evans Street Friday resulting in damages of $600 — $300 to each car.

No charges were filed in a Greenville Boulevard accident Saturday involving cars operated by Toni Croce Blackwell of Rocky Mount and Verna Wilson Thompson of Grimesland. Damages to the Blackwell car were estimated at $500 and $100 to the Thompson car.

Approximately $2,000 in damages resulted from a Friday accident on Greene Street involving cars driven by Mae Weathington Warren of 802 Mumford Road and Annie Jackson Roberson of Bethel. Damages were estimated at $2,000 — $1,000 to each car.

Also on Friday, cars driven by Howard Nelson Wilson of 116 Oxford Road and Jackie Robinson Daniels of 129 Trent Circle collided on Memorial Drive. Damages were estimated at $500 to the Wilson car and $25 to the Daniels vehicle.

Stabbings

A Greenville man was stabbed with a butcher knife several times by an unidentified assailant Saturday, according to the Greenville Police Department.

Police said James Bonner was taking a bath at his home on 613 W. Third St. when a man came into the bathroom and stabbed Bonner with a butcher knife in his left arm, back and groin. Bonner was taken to Pitt County Memorial Hospital where he was reported in good condition Saturday night.

Police said Ms. Harben told them she was attacked by a man who entered her trailer while she was asleep. Mrs. Harben, who was stabbed in the abdomen and cut on the hand, underwent surgery at PCMH. She was reported in fair condition.

Gasoline Prices Dropping

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Gasoline storage tank operators are "working the bottoms of their tanks," indicating they believe supplies will remain stable despite the Persian Gulf war between Iran and Iraq, oil industry analyst Dan Lundberg said Saturday.

"Any time Persian Gulf developments signal the likelihood of a serious shortage, the holders of storage will start stocking up," Lundberg said in an interview. "As long as it does not seem too hazardous, the holders of storage will be de-stocking."

Gas prices, in Lundberg's most recent survey of 18,000 service stations across the country, dropped .0013 cents in the last two weeks at the retail level and .0064 cents at the wholesale level.

The average price of all grades of gasoline, including taxes, was $1.2086 a gallon Saturday, Lundberg said. The drop — despite the onslaught of the heaviest driving season and the Memorial Day holiday — started in May when the average price of gas reached $1.2112.

In June of last year, gas prices averaged $1.2412, in June of 1982 they were $1.2826 and in June of 1981, when President Reagan first decontrolled oil, they averaged $1.3511.

Despite a 5-cent-a-gallon tax increase and added costs because of local taxes, gas prices are down nearly 20 cents a gallon from June 1981, he said.

"The world is deeply concerned about the possibility of a third oil shock," Lundberg said. "Yet the United States is behaving as if there is no tomorrow. We are behaving as if we believe there is going to be more and more production and lower and lower prices."

Lundberg said he will not make predictions about the price or supply of crude.

"The Persian Gulf conflict knocked all predictions into a cocked hat," Lundberg said. "Everything depends on the hostilities in the Persian Gulf."

Lundberg said prices increased by four cents a gallon in the first four months of 1984, but then started to go down as the Persian Gulf war heated up and the traditional heavy driving season approached.

The price of gasoline in the United States has been deteriorating during the second quarter of this year. In the second quarter of last year, prices were up an average of 12 cents a gallon.

"Gasoline, in a world threatened with shortage, is loose. It is in such surplus that prices are toppling," he said.

Vincent, in Winterville on the way in and she's been with me ever since. People started rolling in at 10:20 bringing gifts and the next morning at 2:30 a.m. we were still checking in items. It continued and continued and continued. It was overwhelming. The people came from everywhere, sent tractor trailers and airplane loads.

"People came to volunteer. (She estimates between 100 and 125 different persons, some from as far away as New Bern and Raleigh.) Many of the tornado victims themselves would come to get things they needed and end up staying to help. The atmosphere out there was always one of cooperation and sharing. Even the huge crowd last Saturday for the yard sale was just as orderly and nice as could be," she said.

"Hugh gave all the workers a pig-pickin' last week and you should have seen all the crying going on. We've all become so close."

Asked if she'd do it again, she said, "You bet. I need a little vacation first, but then I'd be glad to start over."

lives back together after the March 28 tornado have now learned that their needs will not be met totally by private insurance coverage or by government grants. He said he expects that the DSS tornado relief service will continue for at least another 14 months.

Rachael Hardee, volunteer coordinator of the collection program which brought in the huge outpouring of gifts for tornado victims, calls the March 29-May 29 experience "the high point of my life."

"Never before," she said, "have I called upon myself to give of myself in this way. When I watched that lady on TV that morning, crying over having lost everything she owned, and picked up the phone to call Hugh (Hardee, owner of the New Greenville) for the use of his warehouse, I had no idea what I was getting into, what hard work it would be, and how satisfying it would be. I called the newspaper then and a couple of radio stations, telling them we'd start collecting stuff at 10 o'clock.

economy if those rates are not reduced.

"You understand it was difficult for us to publish a text which could have embarrassed a government which is present here and is in the middle of a pre-election campaign," French Finance Minister Jacques Delors told reporters.

Reagan offered his own assurances of U.S. willingness to negotiate in his weekly U.S. radio broadcast beamed back from London, saying, "We're prepared to reduce nuclear weapons dramatically as soon as the Soviet Union is ready to work with us."

Secretary of State George P. Shultz told reporters later that none of the summit participants had any new ideas how to lure the Soviets to the bargaining table. "There was no discussion of any particular thing to do beyond saying that it's a mistake — when somebody picks up and walks out of a bargaining session — to try to make some concessions to get them back," he said.

Treasury Secretary Donald Regan said of the summit, "I think we got most of what we wanted."

After he meets with U.S. Embassy personnel Sunday, Reagan is to return to Washington at the end of a 10-day European trip that also took him to Ireland, the land of his ancestors, and to Normandy, France, for ceremonies marking the 40th anniversary of the Allied D-day invasion of Nazi-occupied France in World War II.

Republican Party has done a good job in presenting a slate of candidates. We feel we have filed candidates that will do a good job and offer a good alternative to chose from."

Randy Daub, Martin's campaign manager in Pitt County, said, "We're looking forward to finally getting down to a one-on-one contest, based on the issues, and feel like we have the issues covered."

Doub said, "We're looking for a lot of Democratic support" for Martin in the race for governor, "and we feel like we've got a lot of their support."

Martin, who now represents the 9th Congressional District in the U.S. House of Representatives, was in Pitt County "at least five times" before the May 8 primary, Doub said, which "shows his committment to get to know the people of Pitt County and eastern North Carolina. He is interested in the people here, and will be a governor eastern North Carolina can depend on."

Martin, Doub said, "helped get the tobacco tax reduced ... helped Congressman (Walter) Jones on the Oregon Inlet project. That shows his committment to eastern North Carolina and Pitt County."

"Pitt County is an important county for him (Martin) to do well in," Doub said. "It's sort of the hub of eastern North Carolina. A lot of people look to Greenville and Pitt County for leadership."

As for Rufus Edmisten, who won the Democratic nomination for governor in last Tuesday's runoff primary, Daub said Martin "always predicted Edmisten would win, but he (Martin) told me privately he didn't care" who the Democratic nominee was. "He doesn't mind facing the best the Democrats can offer. Put up their best. We'll run against them. Give the people a choice between the two best people. He doesn't mind running against the best."

Doub said if former Charlotte Mayor Eddie Knox had won the Democratic nomination, it would be "two outsiders running against state government." With Edmisten, it's an outsider running against "an insider, part of the administration."

Doub said "I think comparisons and distinctions" between the two candidates "will be much easier to make with Edmisten," as the nominee.

Doub suggested that if Presdent Ronald Reagan "carries this state by 60 percent," in the November election, "there is a very good chance Jim Martin will be the next governor."

Both Doub and Andrews said it is too early to know if Reagan will visit Pitt County during the campaign. "That sort of thing will be decided later," according to Doub , but "I know he will come to North Carolina several times."

Nita Rasberry, coordinator for the Helms for Senate campaign in the county, was reluctant to talk about specific plans. But she said a campaign headquarters will be opened in the near future, campaign workers will be using telephone banks to urge support for Helms, and that the incumbent senator will be "coming to Greenville and Pitt County."

Mrs. Rasberry said "Senator Helms represents a point of view ... many, many others share," and "we know he will stand up for us in that he'll fight the tough ones, no matter what the odds, never putting his party above his principles."

According to Mrs. Rasberry, Helms "has always had strong Democratic support, and all evidence indicates that (Democratic) support (for Helms) will be very strong in Pitt County again this year."

She said having Martin as the Republican nominee for governor should help Helms in his re-election bid, and that strong support for Reagan and Helms in North Carolina will help the Martin campaign.

JIM MARTIN, GOVERNOR

The Pitt County Republican Party Enthusiastically Endorses The Candidacy Of Congressman Jim Martin For Governor.

-Presently serving his sixth term in the U.S. House of Representatives from North Carolina's Ninth District

-Former President of N.C. Association of County Commissioners
-Successfully sponsored recent amendments in House Committees for the reduction of the Federal Tobacco Tax and the construction of the Oregon Inlet Jetties.

POSITION ON ISSUES

ELIMINATE INTANGIBLE & INVENTORY TAXES-These "nuisance" taxes are an obstacle to business development and discourage savings. Replacement of revenues produced by these sources would come from the current state surplus.

IMPROVE QUALITY OF EDUCATION-Institute merit pay that would offer better pay for better teaching, not just "favoritism" pay. Renew emphasis on basic instruction in reading, writing, math and science. Restore discipline in classrooms.

COMPLETE INTERSTATE 40-This link to the seaport at Wilmington is essential to the entire state and must have top priority.

OPEN MEETINGS-Public business must be conducted in public and violation of this principle punished. Only personnel matters and real estate should be exempted from "sunshine" laws.

INTEGRITY IS THE KEY-Public must be assured that the Governor is as good as his word, that he will not compromise his principles or abuse the "spoils" system and he will carry out his duties with dignity and in a manner that enhances the reputation of his office.

AS A CONGRESSMAN-Martin has stood for responsible fiscal policies, sound money, and economic opportunities and incentives based on an invigorated marketplace. He has championed the interest of North Carolina industries that have provided strength and job opportunities across our entire state, such as textiles, tobacco, furniture, transportation and housing; as well as the financial institutions that undergird them.

SHIFTING RESPONSIBILITY-From the federal to the state and local level is something Martin has long advocated. The trend in this direction has inevitably presented state officials with an unprecedented financial crisis, necessitating choices between priorities for which there will be no adequately inclusive source of funding. Consequently, his experience on the tax-writing Ways and Means Committee and the Budget Committee have prepared Martin to help lead and resolve those difficult choices in North Carolina.

Train Petition

The Carolina Association of Passenger Train Advocates has initiated a petition drive as part of an effort to encourage the state Legislature to earmark funds for a trial run of of a proposed new passenger train.

CAPTA's petition urges the General Assembly "to take the first step toward developing east-west passenger services across our state by approving funds for one year's test of the daily train."

The proposed service would connect Charlotte, Salisbury, High Point, Greensboro, Burlington, Durham, Raleigh and Henderson with each other and northeastern cities from Richmond to New York.

CAPTA said the new train would begin in October if the General Assembly appropriates $500,000 as the state's share of operating expenses for the first year. Amtrak, the National Railroad Passenger Corp., has agreed to pay half of the costs of the new train, according to Martin L. Wheeler Jr. of Charlotte, CAPTA president.

Sunday Opinion

By Any Name, Turnover Is Still Money For City

Greenville Utilties members decided Tuesday night they would rather attempt to find more money for turnover to the city government than to take over the cost of street lighting and povide preferential electric rates to the city.

City officials had asked the Utilities Commission to assume the cost of street lighting at $62,000 per year and to sell power to the city at wholesale which would mean a savings for the city of $300,000.

Members of the commission recognized the maneuver for what is — simply another way to obtain turnover from the Utilities Commission to the city government.

If there is going to be additional turnover then let us show it on the record as being turnover. Selling power to the city at reduced rates would only disguise the fact that other Utilities customers are making up the difference in the rates that they pay.

The battle for turnover from the Utilities to the city has been going on almost annually for as long as anyone can recall. A formula was established at one time in an attempt to provide a fair return to the city. That obviously did not work, but it is time to establish on a businesslike basis a fair return from Utilities operations and then stick to it.

It is understandable that the City Council feels the need to maintain adequate city services and certainly council members want to hold down tax increases. They also, however, have an obligation to see that reasonable electric rates are maintained in the Greenville Utilities service area. If the city government continues to increase its take from Greenville Utilities there could come a point where electric rates will have to be set well above those of comparable utilities.

Sunday In Park Is Fun For All

Greenville has a special attraction for young and old in the summer months — Sunday in the Park.

The program is varied and entertaining.

The setting is attractive and overflows with family atmosphere. It's a good place to be on a Sunday evening. You're invited.

A concert by the Marine Band opens the series; followed in subsequent weeks by a wind ensemble, some instrumentalists and a singing group, the Eastern Symphonette, a string band and cloggers, a musical celebration of America's 400th Anniversary, and last (but never least) a jazz band that has never missed performing in the park, The Monitors.

Performances are funded by the city under auspices of the Recreation and Parks Department. The public is assured of a relaxing way to spend an evening, as long as the weather cooperates.

(Where are you Weatherman, when we need you?)

Sunday Morning Notes

Last week was Industry Appreciation Week in Pitt County and for those who can recall years in the past the appreciation is heartfelt.

The industry here has provided jobs for thousands of people and taken the sting out of poor agricultural years which once meant economic disaster for the entire area.

Modern industry not only has provided steady salaries but also benefits such as health plans, life insurance, retirement and paid vacations. They are benefits that old time farm workers never had.

Back in the 1930s and '40s there was industry in Pitt County — but nothing like today.

The major industry was tobacco processing and plants were scattered over the Dickinson Avenue (Dogs' Head) area in Greenville, as well as being located in Farmville. On 10th Street there was Person-Garrett, Export and Greenville Tobacco Co. Imperial Tobacco Co. was located on Atlantic Street and the E.B. Ficklen Tobacco Co. was on Ficklen Street. Interestingly, all the buildings are still there, although some of them have been converted to other uses.

The tobacco companies had year-round employees but most of the work was seasonal and involved redrying the tobacco that was purchased off area markets.

Since most workers lived near the plants, they were called to work by factory whistles and each had its distinctive sound.

The years went by and the old processing plants became inefficient. Now Carolina Leaf has a modern plant in Greenville as the only redrying plant here.

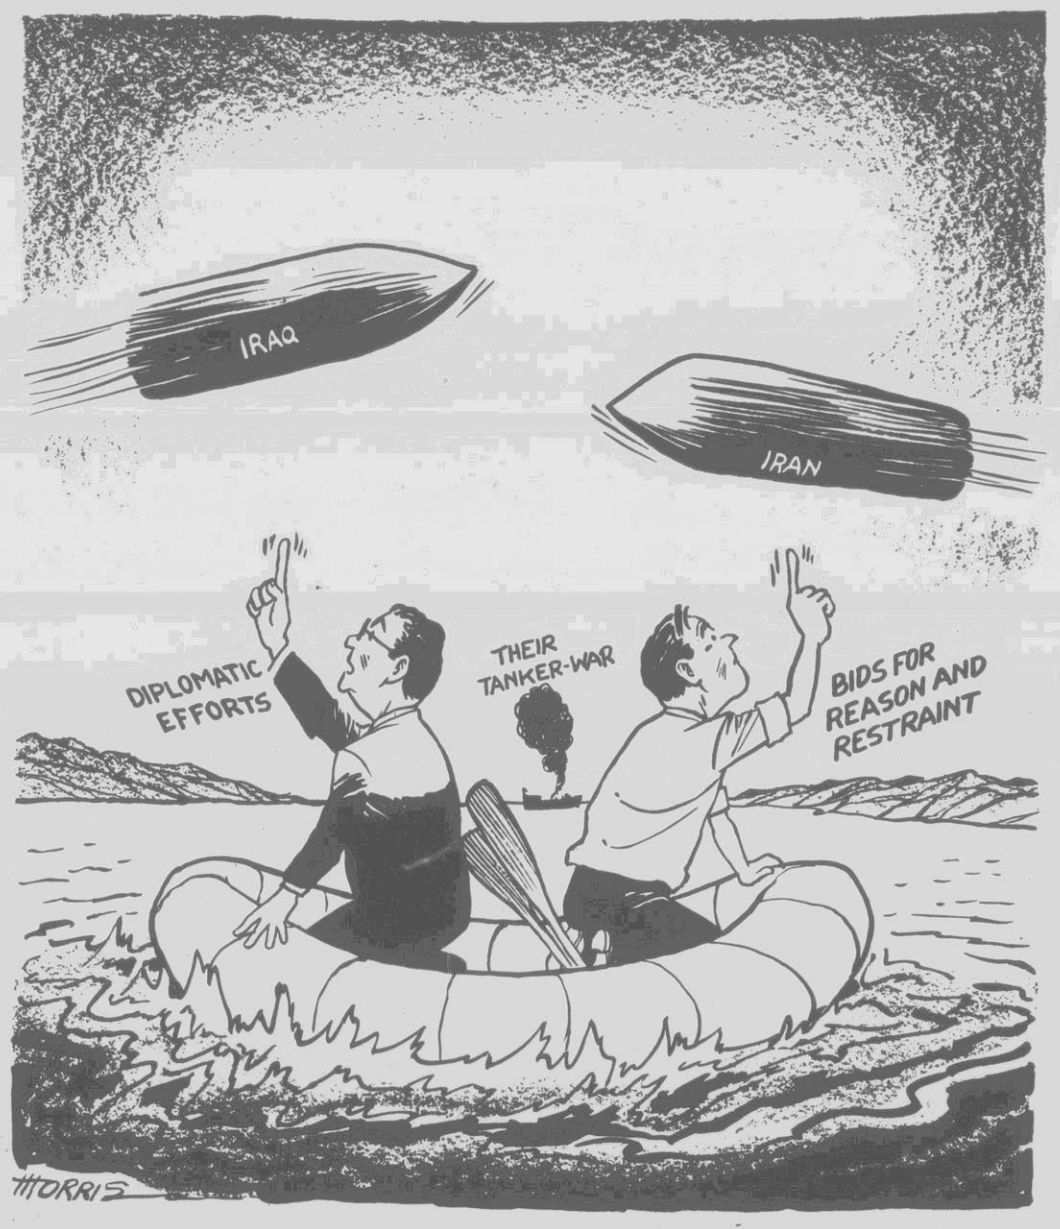
There was some other industry, of course. National Spinning was located in the building at Dickinson Avenue and Hooker Road, (a site now occupied by Fieldcrest.)

Greenville Hosiery was located on 14th Street.

That was about it. The salaries were low and vacations and benefits were unheard of but, even then, industry was the difference between having some money or having none at all for many of the workers.

We've come a long way since in attracting industry which pays well for qualified workers and, if we have come this far in a few decades, who knows what is ahead?



THEY MUST STILL THINK YOU CAN WIN A WAR!

Task

RALEIGH — North Carolina's newly formed Task Force on Missing Children found out just how tough a task it faces when it met for the first time on May 30.

The problem of missing children, a problem which has begun to receive considerable national attention in the past several months, is complex, hard to define and extremely wide-ranging. It is a problem made up of dozens of other problems, most of which North Carolinas have known existed for a long time.

The first task of any study group is to define its topic. Therefore, Charles Dunn, the former SBI director and a children's advocate, opened the meeting by trying to define the term "missing children." It does not define easily.

There are five general categories of missing children. They are children who wander off and get lost, children who are kidnapped, children who are involved in a custody fight between separated parents, children who, either of their own choice or because they are abused at home, run away, and, they are children who leave home and no one ever reports that fact.

The differences involved in those five categories show how diverse the "missing children" problem is. For example, solutions to the problems stemming from custodial kidnappings have little bearing on the problem of children who simply wander away from home and get lost. In attempting to study the problems behind each classification of "missing child," the task force will find itself studying the recognized social problems of child abuse, divorce, children of unmarried parents, runaways and child pornography and prostitution, to name only the most obvious.

In confronting the problems of each classification, the task force will find itself asking the police to change their policies on responding to missing persons' calls, the courts to change the way runaway, child abuse and custody cases are handled, the schools to add instruction and counselling, and the state's rescue squads, police and sheriffs to change their search methods.

The problem of missing children, said those speaking to the task force during its first meeting, must be attacked at its roots. Unfortunately, those roots spread widely as those of a big water oak.

The problem is further complicated by the paucity of good information available on missing children. It is estimated that 1.8 million children are missing in this country, said Kristen Cole Brown, a national expert who spoke to the task force. But she admits that that number is really only a guess. "We have no idea how many children are missing in this country."

Nor does North Carolina know how many of its children are missing. The director of the Police Information Network says there are only 203 children listed as missing in his computer's files.

Campaign Changes

WASHINGTON — The most important labor negotiations thus far in 1984 began quietly last month here in the capital. Representatives of the U.S. Postal Service met briefly with a bargaining team from the two largest postal unions. The Postal Service people put their offer on the table. The unions thought about it for two weeks and then called the proposition "garbage." It promises to be a long, hot summer down at L'Enfant Plaza.

The Postal Service is so independent that it's not quite accurate to speak of "the government's" offer. Nevertheless, the service is a government agency, and the 678,000 postal workers for all practical purposes are government employees. Taking one thing with another, they are the best paid workers in town. The Postal Service, precisely because it is a part of government, cannot afford to reach a wage settlement so generous that it would provide a costly example for other unions, such as the autoworkers, to emulate this fall.

Thus the Postal Service has proposed that the present three-year contract, in its essential elements, simply be extended for another three years. Under certain circumstances there would be a cost-of-living adjustment; some other modest changes and improvements would be allowed, but Postmaster General William F. Bolger's idea is to hold the next bottom line at today's bottom line.

Owing to some lush contracts reached in 1975 and 1978, salary scales in the Postal Service have now reached levels that may fairly be characterized as breathtaking. A postal janitor starts in Grade I at $19,562. A garage helper, in Grade III, begins at $20,458. Most clerks and carriers are hired in Grade V or Grade VI, with a starting salary of $21,511 or $22,099. These are the base rates. Because of premiums for overtime and holiday work, actual pay is considerably higher. When account is given to such fringe benefits as health insurance and life insurance, the average clerk — a clerk with five or six years' experience — is pulling down almost $28,000 a year.

Bolger's contention — a hard contention to refute — is that these wages are far higher than the wages paid in private industry for jobs of comparable skill. It is an ironical thought that the 18-year-old high school graduate, once he signs on with the Postal Service, immediately begins to earn more than the typical teacher to whom he bids farewell.

These facts of postal life are not lost in the job market. A year or so ago the Postal Service announced that it would receive applications for 3,500 jobs. An estimated 350,000 applications poured in. That evidence of desirability presumably is not lost on the postal unions, either. The 601,000 workers in collective bargaining units have jobs that millions of other people — including many school teachers — would dearly love to have.

That reason, among others, suggests that there will be no postal strike. The postal unions are bound to have a vivid memory of the air controllers' strike in 1981. President Reagan, citing both law and the public interest, fired the controllers who joined the illegal strike and found replacements for them. No president could temporize with a paralyzing strike of postal workers. People do foolhardy things, but it would take folly on a prodigious scale for postal employees to hit the bricks if the present contract expires in July without a new agreement.

Contract Talks

RALEIGH, N.C. (UPI) — The style of political campaigning for legislative seats in the state's most populous counties is undergoing a change because of a federal court order requiring single-member districts in those counties.

Legislators say the new districts require them to concentrate on the needs of a narrower geographic area and reduce somewhat the effectiveness of campaign advertising in the mass media.

"I will be more attentive to the area I'm representing," said Rep. George Miller, D-Durham, "but my ties to the community are such that it will be necessary to pay attention to the interests of all of Durham County."

Miller is one of dozens of lawmakers who found themselves in new districts after a federal court required the Legislature to revise its 1982 reapportionment plans earlier this year.

The court banned the historic use of multimember districts with members elected at large in favor of single-member districts. The ruling was designed to increase black representation in the General Assembly by creating districts with predominantly black populations, thus ensuring the election of black legislators.

In the process, legislative districts in some of the state's most populous counties were divided into smaller, single-member districts.

Durham County's three House members no longer run county wide but now officially represent three separate districts within the county, one of them predominantly black.

Mecklenburg County's eight-member delegation now represents eight separate districts, including two that are predominantly black; a four-seat Senate district covering Mecklenburg and Cabarrus counties is now made up of four separate districts with one black district.

One black district and five others were created in Wake County, while Forsyth County's five House seats were divided into two predominantly black ones and a three-member at-large district.

While the changes were designed primarily to increase black representation, some politicians predict they also will increase the number of Republicans elected from those counties because the breakup eliminates black support for Democratic candidates.

"I really believe that single-member districts are going to provide the opportunity for Republicans to win seats they've never had a chance at in the past," said state GOP Chairman David Flaherty.

Flaherty feels the Republican Party has the chance to pick up eight to 10 seats from the redistricting changes enacted during a special session in March and he expects other gains because "it's a presidential election year, when we normally do better."

The GOP could increase its strength to 32 or 33 seats in the House and 12 to 18 in the Senate, he said. The party now has 18 House and six Senate seats.

State Democratic Party Chairman David Price felt Democrats will continue to win in the new districts, but admitted the changes "will require a more targeted campaign effort, campaign appeals that are more tailored to a specific area."

Rep. Louise Brennan, D-Mecklenburg, said her new district has forced her to alter her campaign style.

"I'm limited in using the mass media (radio, television and newspapers) effectively," she said. "I have to do more grassroots, door-to-door style campaigning."

Mrs. Brennan defeated a primary opponent last week in the first round of primary elections held under the new reapportionment plans and she faces Republican opposition in the fall.

"My district overall is predominantly Democratic in registration," she said. When asked whether the district has a record of voting Republican, Mrs. Brennan said, "Well, it's highly competitive."

Mrs. Brennan felt Mecklenburg County lawmakers will continue to try to represent the county as a whole, but, "as new people run and are elected from a more narrow constituency, it certainly will have an impact on the way politics affect the county and the city of Charlotte."

To the editor:

Our friend Patrick is in jail. The rest of us are all barefoot and pregnant. We have become immune to the word missiles. Have they become as American as apple pie? We sell stingers almost as easily as brown speckled eggs.

If there are some who are concerned, we are also concerned with landlords, kidney failure, heart disease, love affairs, asthma, quality time, our teen-agers' identity crises, our identity crises, new husbands and wives, former husbands and wives, a fresh batch of babies, aging parents, car payments, pending surgery, lost mail, lost jobs, a piece of metal found in a slice of salami, impacted wisdom teeth, mortgages, grief, depression, air pollution, tornadoes, child abuse, school systems, college tuition, calculus, the high price of living ... And we need time now and again for joy, to keep our balance.

If we could see the actual price tag of modern weaponry fluttering in the sweet cool morning air on actual missiles parked on the Town Commons we would be shocked. By keeping us mutually all "barefoot and pregnant" and preoccupied with our more or less desperate concerns our time is consumed in a vision of life that is blinkered as a horse's eyes are shielded from peripheral vision by leather blinkers. (I can't help but remember Germany under the Nazi regime.) I am worried that we in our own needs do not perceive the forest for the trees. Thank you, Patrick, for bringing us into dialogue with one another as we support your action or not. We must pay attention to why Patrick is there.

To the editor:

Some major personal reasons why people spread gossip:

1. To win social recognition. Some individuals seek social acceptance by being "the first with the news." However, the chronic gossip finds that his ploy is a double-edged sword. Others ask themselves: "Does this person talk about me like that?" Trust in this person is usually quite low.

2. To gain personal advantage. It is relatively common for some individuals to manipulate for personal gain by feeding false information into the grapevine.

3. To punish or hurt. Ruining someone else's reputation through the grapevine is used by adolescents, politicians, governments, and others as the means to a punitive end. Why such problems cannot be handled directly is a key question, because this kind of behavior reflects personal immaturity.

4. To communicate indirectly. Sometimes information is put into the grapevine with the knowledge that it will surely get to another individual or group very quickly.

5. To get reactions. Sometimes gossip is repeated to determine how others will react to a personally contemplated course of action.

6. To experience vicariously. Gossip columnists, gossip-oriented tabloids and individuals all cater to our need for experiences through others that we can't do ourselves.

7. To protect or warn. Some gossip is protective. Warnings can be passed on the basis of grapevine information, particularly where unfair actions on the part of others are suspected. One person may "top off" another to equalize the situation.

Gossip carries with it many negative connotations. Gossip hurts feelings, damages reputations, and compromises careers. It's most difficult to stop gossip once it has started its rounds.

"For he that will love life and see good days, let him refrain his tongue from evil and his lips that they speak no guile." (1 Peter 3:10)

To the editor:

I am disappointed that your newspaper has not reported or taken issue with the North Carlina Council of Churches report on tobacco. This report has been headlined in papers across the country including New York and Washington, D.C. Even National Broadcasting Company (NBC), New York,sent a reporter and television crew to Pitt County last week for two days to interview people involved in our churches and production of tobacco. We were told their findings would be aired on NBC television news at 6:30 p.m. one day this week, nationwide.

Irreversible damage has been perpetrated on the tobacco farmers and economy of the producing states. The Metzenbaums, Eagletons and other tobacco critics will remind Congress that even the North Carolina churches oppose the tobacco program.

It is ironic that tobacco has been singled out as the whipping boy. Why not corn, rye, and hops which are used to produce alcohol? What next? Even eggs are said to contain cholesterol.

Reverend Rufus Stark II, a Greenville native, chairman of the study committee, states, "We found serious moral questions involved with the production of tobacco." It seems to me they could find many more important moral issues to attack rather than spend six months studying this issue.

Many of us will seriously consider if we want our so-called tainted money used to fight our tobacco program. When I inquired as to how much my church funded the Council of Cchurches I was mailed a 1972 budget of the conference.

Use of land to grow tobacco is questioned as immoral when there are hungry people. Much more would be accomplished if they would buy some of our huge surplus food and feed the hungry.

George Gallup

Poll

PRINCETON, N.J. — President Reagan's approval ratings have remained remarkably stable for the last seven months, with the proportion of the public approving of his overall job performance neither exceeding 55 percent nor dropping below 52 percent during this period. A trend of this duration in presidential election years is unprecedented in Gallup history.

In the latest (mid-May) Gallup Poll 53 percent say they approve of the way Reagan is handling the duties of his office while 38 percent disapprove and 9 percent withhold their opinion.

The last time significantly more Americans approved than now was in August 1981 when 60 percent gave the president a passing grade and 24 percent disapproved. Reagan received lower job ratings throughout most of 1983, topping the 50 percent level only in the last two months of the year. Reagan's upward trend during 1983, however, ran counter to another Gallup norm: in the third year of their initial term, presidents almost invariably lose public esteem.

At this point in past election years, Presidents Carter and Ford had lower job approval scores, 38 percent and 47 percent respectively, and lost their elections. On the other hand, Presidents Nixon (62 percent), Johnson (74 percent) and Eisenhower (69 percent) had higher approval ratings and won their election bids.

Reagan Weakness: Foreign Policy

President Reagan's weakest point at present is his handling of foreign policy, with about one-third of the public, 36 percent, approving and 49 percent disapproving. This positive rating falls about midway between the 46 percent approval rating the president receives for his handling of relations with the Soviet Union and the 28 percent approval for dealing with the situation in Central America.

With few exceptions, presidents who have made state visits abroad have subsequently been rewarded by enhanced popularity here at home. However, any positive effect President Reagan's late-April trip to the People's Republic of China might have had on his overall popularity may have been offset by the public's generally low assessment of Reagan's handling of the Central American situation.

In the public's view, President Reagan fares best for his handling of the national economy, with 48 percent currently approving. This assessment has not varied by more than one percentage point in the last six months.

The latest results are based on in-person interviews with 1,231 adults, 18 and older, conducted in scientifically selected localities across the nation during the period May 18-20.

For results based on samples of this size, one can say with 95 percent confidence that the error attributable to sampling and other random effects could be 4 percentage points in either direction.

Playing Out The Card

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan was playing to American voters and worried Europeans when he proposed on his trip to Ireland that the United States and the Soviet Union discuss a pledge against using force in Europe.

But he was also trying to break the deadlock in arms control talks by seizing on what initially was a Soviet idea. In effect, Reagan is willing to consider renouncing force in Europe if the Soviets accept various American proposals to lessen tensions, primarily by lowering the risk of surprise attack.

In the past, when the Soviets offered to discuss a no-force pledge, the United States dismissed the idea as superfluous since in signing the U.N. charter nearly 40 years ago member nations renounced force to settle disputes.

The Soviets have called for mutual pledges by the Warsaw Pact and NATO. But only a few days before his Dublin speech, Reagan said there was no point to it since NATO is dedicated to peace anyhow.

His turnabout was so subtle, tucked into a speech in which he rehashed his overall arms control policy, some of the early press accounts overlooked the offer.

It isn't surprising that Reagan chose his trip to Europe to show new interest in an old Kremlin idea. The Europeans are worried about the stalemate in U.S.-Soviet negotiations and are witnessing a surge in missile deployment by the superpowers. The Dutch are not the only allies edgy about the sullen relationship between Washington and Moscow. They live precariously in the shadow of Soviet SS-20s and American cruises.

Reagan wanted to demonstrate he cares. In saying he would like to "reach out" to the Soviets to reduce tensions, the president also had a clear political goal.

He will need the support of more than hard-line conservatives in November. To win a second term, Reagan has to persuade voters in the middle of the road that he is sincere about wanting to curb the growth of nuclear weapons and achieve some accommodation with the Soviets in this nuclear age.

Talks on nuclear weapons have been in suspension for more than six months. Moreover, there is no indication of a shift in policy by either side in order to bring about a resumption.

The only potential area of progress this year is in other areas — reducing NATO and Warsaw Pact troops in Central Europe, for instance, and reducing tensions in Europe through "confidence-building" measures.

The Soviets have not nibbled yet at an American proposal to finesse a dispute over current Communist troop strength. But Kenneth Adelman, the U.S. arms control director, and other U.S. officials have not given up hope. The current round of talks in Vienna expires June 19.

The so-called "confidence-building" measures were introduced by Secretary of State George P. Shultz to the 35-nation disarmament conference in Stockholm in January. They include:

An exchange of information about the organization and location of NATO and Warsaw Pact forces. Annual previews of military exercises. Advance notice of "significant" military activities. Inviting observers to such activities.

The Soviets have shown some interest, but not enough to get started on an agreement. By embracing their idea of a no-force pledge, Reagan hoped to lay the groundwork for a compromise. However, U.S. policy is to have all 35 nations — 33 in Europe, plus the United States and Canada — consider taking the pledge, rather than just NATO and the Warsaw Pact.

Holder Of The Gold

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Nowhere is the modern version of the Golden Rule — "Whoever has the gold makes the rules" — more evident than in Congress where the holders of the money also manipulate procedures.

Take the budget, for example.

The 1974 Budget Act is supposed to make Congress's spending conform with an outline approved by both the House and Senate. It requires the budget to be approved by May 15. Only then are appropriations supposed to be made for various government programs and departments.

The act has been controversial since its inception with leaders of the appropriations committees worried that their power to determine where money is spent was being undermined.

This year, with the budget process all tied up with efforts to reduce the deficit, the House and Senate have approved very different documents and are nowhere near reconciling the two into a single resolution.

Given that situation and the fact of a short legislative year due to politics, the holder of Congress' "gold," the House Appropriations Committee, decided to move ahead independently of the budget.

Acting like the frustrated household money manager who painstakingly works out a budget for rent, groceries and all the rest but then abandons it in favor of simply paying the bills, the congressional money mavens waived the budget and started doling out the money without it.

The first of 13 money bills — a $15.5 billion measure for the Energy Department that includes $4 billion for water projects and $7.4 billion for nuclear weapons — was passed by the House this week, but not before a lively discussion over budgeting.

Appropriations Committee Chairman Jamie Whitten, D-Miss., assured the House his panel will keep its bills within the House budget's spending targets set in April.

But Rep. Elliott Levitas, D-Ga., was not convinced.

"We are tearing the budget act to shreds right now," he said, ripping a piece of paper into bits to illustrate his point.

Budget Committee Chairman Jim Jones, D-Okla., went along with Whitten.

Noting the House's budget contains a $182 billion three-year plan to cut the deficit, Jones said it would go against the spirit of red ink reduction to approve higher spending.

"I hope the spirit of comity in his body and a person's word and the faith of a fellow members is still good," Jones said.

This year's situation provides further evidence that 10 years after the inception of the budget process, it probably needs reforming.

A study by a special House Rules Committee task force on the budget process concluded that tighter rules are needed to make the budget effective and called for an accelerated timetable to prevent situations like this year's from occurring.

The study suggested requiring a budget be passed by April 15, a month earlier, and requiring all appropriations bills to be approved by June 10.

Surprise By Shultz

WASHINGTON — Surprising the White House, Secretary of State George Shultz quietly added an unexpected item to his summit schedule in London last week: a meeting with Israeli Defense Minister Moshe Arens. Arens lunched twice with Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger here recently but Shultz was tied up with the NATO meeting and could not see him.

Top aides of President Reagan were irritated when Shultz's schedule was submitted for Oval Office inspection. The president had assumed his chief diplomat would be fully occupied with him on tough economic issues confronting the summit nations: Western Europe, Japan, Canada and the U.S.

But, in the words of one U.S. diplomat, Shultz feared Weinberger was "getting a leg up" on him with one of Israel's most popular leaders. When he discovered Arens would be in London he arranged catch-up ball. Cap Weinberger is widely regarded as a possible Reagan choice for secretary of state in a second term.

Weinberger has signaled congressional supporters of the "headgear amendment" that no one in the uniform services like it — but that if Congress insists members of the Jewish faith should be allowed to wear yarmulkes on duty, he will not recommend a veto.

The amendment slipped through the House before the Memorial Day recess on a non-record vote, proposed by Rep. Steve Solarz and strongly backed by Jewish members of the House. It is by no means limited to yarmulkes; any article of clothing required by various religious sects could be worn by servicemen if it did not hamper the carrying out of duties.

House leaders worry that the amendment, if it became law, could boomerang against both Jews and other religious adherents who took advantage of it by signaling them out for hazing. Their plan: hope that it can be quietly dropped when the defense bill to which the amendment was attached comes up for conference with the Senate.

The three most gifted orators in the Democratic Party — Gov. Mario Cuomo of New York, Sen. Edward M. Kennedy of Massachusetts and Sen. Joseph Biden of Delaware — have been tentatively ruled out as keynoters for the San Francisco convention.

Cuomo eliminated himself months ago by endorsing Walter F. Mondale. Key party insiders would prefer to keep Kennedy off the speaker's platform until the nominee has been picked.

Biden, neutral in the presidential fight, has had spectacular success in addressing state party conventions.

A Try At Changing History

When David Lynn, architect of the U.S. Capitol, set out to rewrite history, he soon found himself involved in a real hassle. This happened back in 1959 when Lynn directed a redecoration of the House chamber.

Folks who took the trouble to count noted that 11 stars had been carved on the marble mantel behind the speaker's desk. Lynn explained that the 11 stars symbolized the 11 original states. "How come?" asked folks who had been taught from childhood and firmly believed that the United States consisted originally of 13 states.

Lynn explained that North Carolina and Rhode Island were omitted because they had not ratified the U.S. Constitution when George Washington was inaugurated president on April 30, 1789. North Carolina had insisted that Congress ratify the Bill of Rights before it would join the union. After this was done, it ratified on November 21, 1789. Rhode Island waited until May 29, 1790.

"North Carolina and Rhode Island will have to demonstrate that they are entitled to be listed among the orignial states," said one of Lynn's architect advisers.

But Lynn quickly backed down when he was taken to task by Rep. Robert K. "Farmer Bob" Doughton, veteran North Carolina congressman and chairman of the powerful House Ways and Means Committee. He told Lynn that this slight to the fair name of North Carolina did not sit well with him nor with the people back home.

He cited a few facts of history: that 13 states, including North Carolina and Rhode Island, joined in drafting the Constitution, that three North Carolinians signed the Declaration of Independence, that the flag flown by Washington's army during the Revolution had 13 stripes, that the Great Seal of the United States, which dates back to the Continental Congress, has in various places 13 stripes, 13 stars and 13 arrows, all symbolic of the 13 original states.

Lynn contended the stars were mere decorations and did not symbolize anything at all. Doughton was not buying that explanation. The North Carolina congressman, who was nicknames "Muley" as well as "Farmer Bob," allowed that if something was not done about those stars, "there's liable to be an explosion around here."

"It will be corrected," said Lynn.

"When?" demanded Doughton.

"Well, you'd better get it straightened out," thundered Doughton. "It's either gross ignorance or an insult to North Carolina and Rhode Island."

When Lynn's workers came up with a redecorated mantel a couple of days later, Doughton was still unhappy. Since there was no more room on the row where the 11 stars had been carved, the two stars representing North Carolina and Rhode Island were placed on another part of the mantel, about a foot nearer the rear wall of the House Chamber. After inspecting the mantel, Doughton complained that "those two back stars look like the afterthought they are."

"That won't do," he told Lynn.

Seth Muse, a photographer for several North Carolina newspapers who had been waiting impatiently for the matter to be settled because he wanted to go home for the upcoming New Year's celebrations, came up with a suggestion.

"If the stars don't stand for anything," he said, "why not put up a couple more, making 15 in all? Then there can't be any argument which stars stand for which of the original 13 states."

"Would that suit you?" Lynn asked Doughton, who replied:

"So long as there is no discrimination against North Carolina, anything you do is all right with me."

Lynn apparently took it in strive, but I dare say the star episode was the last time he undertook to revise history.

Tip O'Neill: Focus Of Two Campaigns

By CLIFF HAAS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — In the topsy-turvy world of election-year politics, Democrats and Republicans alike are saying they can use Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., and the way he runs the House of Representatives, to their benefit in the fall congressional campaigns.

Republicans point to the 71-year-old Massachusetts Democrat as a symbol of the abuse of power in the House, which the Democrats have controlled for 29 years. It's a "fairness issue," they say.

Democrats point to the white-haired, rotund O'Neill as the only force stopping President Reagan and his GOP allies from turning the United States into a society of only rich and poor. It's a "fairness issue," they say.

Both sides are hoping the arguments will help them pick up House seats this year. Republicans want to trim the 102-seat majority the Democrats hold, while the Democrats want to make sure they lose none of their troops, and add to their strength in fact.

"We believe that we, as Republicans, have had our rights as a minority trampled upon and therefore the rights of the people have been trampled upon," said Rep. Guy Vander Jagt, R-Mich., chairman of the National Republican Congressional Committee, which aids GOP House candidates.

Vander Jagt's group is test-marketing two television commercials that say O'Neill, who has been speaker since 1977, has been running the House in an arbitrary, dictatorial fashion that would prompt the founding fathers to shed a tear. "Bring back the pride," say the GOP television commercials. "Vote Republican."

At the same time, the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee, headed by Rep. Tony Coelho, D-Calif., is sending out fund-raising letters this month signed by O'Neill.

The letters tell potential donors: "The best 'insurance protection' you can buy to protect you and your family against unfair, dangerous, even catastrophic Reagan administration policy decisions is available right now ... The harsh truth of the matter is that you and your family will be adversely affected if Ronald Reagan's actions are not stopped by a strong Democratic House of Representatives."

That Democratic House as run by O'Neill is the issue Republicans are trying to distill.

"I guess what we've got to get better across is that Tip O'Neill and a 100-vote majority in the House symbolizes a bottling up of some pieces of legislation that can frankly affect the everyday lives of the average citizen," said Hous-Qepublican Leader Robert H. Michel of Illinois.

He pointed to revisions of the criminal code that would toughen enforcement and punishment and reform the immigration laws as examples of legislation that O'Neill has kept from debate and votes on the House floor.

"The general public does not know how the Congress works, they don't know how it functions. Let's face it, 39 percent of the people think we Republicans control the House," Michel said.

What is at stake is the power to dictate the ratios of Democrats to Republicans on legislative committees, the scheduling of bills on the House floor and the rules that government activity in the chamber.

"Frankly, from what I've seen from polling, it isn't enough for us to just say. 'Give the president a Republican Congress to help his program,'" Michel said.

In addition, he said, the length of the Democratic presidential nominating race this year and "the fact that it's been delayed as long as it has, has tended to continue to focus attention on the speaker as the titular head of the Democratic Party.

"Now it seems to me we ought to be able to play that to our advantage since that shows where the trouble spot is for moving some of these very key issues," Michel added.

Republicans used an O'Neill lookalike in television commercials in 1980 and briefly in 1982 to poke fun at Democrats and their policies. But this year, it is O'Neill himself who is becoming the focus of debate.

Taking advantage of the system that telecasts House proceedings live to a potential 17 million homes via the Cable Satellite Public Affairs Network, a group of junior Republican conservatives — saying they want to dismantle the "liberal welfare state" and build a "conservative opportunity society" — has reserved time on the House floor almost daily since January to bitterly attack Democratic policies.

O'Neill has likened the participants to "the Three Stooges," and said they are "regressives" of the "John Birch type" who favor "crackpot legislation."

Last month, he suddenly ordered the House employees who operate the remotely controlled cameras to pan the chamber during the so-calledspecial orders being delivered by the Republicans.

The cameras showed a virtually empty chamber, the usual situation during the speeches after the House has finished it legislative business.

Previously the cameras focused only on the member speaking, making it impossible for viewers at home to see what else was going on in the chamber.

Republicans were outraged, saying they had been ridiculed. But the incident, along with other recent skirmishes on the floor involving O'Neill and the conservatives, has galvanized the GOP minority.

Democrats say they welcome the GOP attacks on O'Neill.

"They attacked Tip O'Neill before; they said he was out of gas and out of touch," Coelho said. "It backfired. The Republicans turned Tip into everybody's grandfather, a folk hero."

"This candidacy has been nothing less than a miracle, a political miracle possible only in America," Hart said. "And it continues to be, for there is only one delegate count that matters and that is the one taken ... in San Francisco.

"Today, despite the odds, the predictions of experts, and the cynicism of pundits," Hart said, "this candidacy is alive and well."

Several party leaders who talked with Hart in Washington Thursday and Friday said they got the impression from him that he would keep his name in the race, but do nothing to harm the prospects for eventual party unity if he fails to block Mondale at the convention.

And in his speech Saturday Hart included one conciliatory note for Democrats who have urged him to pull out for the sake of party unity, and to increase Mondale's chances of defeating President Reagan in the fall.

"I will do nothing that does not advance the purpose of defeating Ronald Reagan," the senator said. "I will do everything to achieve a Democratic victory in 1984."

He also referred to the intense opposition by the AFL-CIO and other union organizations to his candidacy.

"As president of the United States," he said, "Gary Hart will be the strongest pro-labor president we have ever seen."

Hart has been criticized for delivering campaign speeches in a style which fails to arouse his audiences.

But on Saturday, the state convention delegates interrupted him dozens of times with applause and gave him a standing ovation at the end.

At one point, Hart referred to the late Robert F. Kennedy's assassination just over 16 years ago following Kennedy's victory in the California Democratic presidential primary.

Hart's voice broke as he said: "For those of us who helped him and believed in him and suppported him, and shared his dream for America, the wound of his loss has never healed. In that campaign he framed the challenge best and it still summons us today."

In an appeal to delegates around the country, Hart said the decision on who will be the nominee cannot be made by "following the paths of least political resistance. The issue is not political comfort or conventional wisdom.

"Nor can anyone take refuge in the safety of political commitment given at an earlier moment in a different setting."

Hart said the defeat of Reagan is a "moral imperative" and he believes he is still the most likely candidate to win in the fall.

Hart's aides said the senator wrote the speech himself, and considered it to be one of the most important of the campaign.

Delegates Don't Reflect Voting

WASHINGTON (AP) — Gary Hart, who finished the Democratic primaries a distant second to Walter F. Mondale in the delegate count, trailed him by less than 500,000 votes out of nearly 18 million cast.

And the Rev. Jesse Jackson, who has complained about the party's delegate selection rules, wound up with 18.4 percent of the popular vote but only 9.6 percent of the delegates.

Despite complaints from candidates on the short end of the delegate count, the party process for selecting its presidential nominee — with convention delegates selected to cast the actual nominating votes — is not much different from the Electoral College system by which the president actually is elected every four years by 538 individuals.

Just as the nationwide popular vote is not necessarily reflected in the Electoral College vote for a president, the popular primary vote does not translate directly to convention strength.

Tornado-Flattened Wisconsin Town Will Be Rebuilt

By RICHARD EGGLESTON
Associated Press Writer

BARNEVELD, Wis. (AP) — One of the few things left standing after a tornado tore through this community of about 600 was the water tower bearing the village name, but many residents, feeling "lucky to be alive," are optimistic about rebuilding the town.

A tornado early Friday killed nine people and injured about 82 others. Only 24 homes were left livable and the business district was ravaged.

The town was bustling Saturday, despite rain, with the whine of chain saws and the roar of heavy equipment as volunteer crews and residents worked to clear away the wreckage.

Some residents said Barneveld would be a better community when it is rebuilt. But others weren't as optimistic.

"Come back in a couple of weeks and you'll be surprised how this town looks," said Ted Arneson, president of the Barneveld State Bank, as crews moved in a trailer from which full service banking would be conducted beginning Monday.

"You bet we're going to rebuild. I'm sure of it," said Barbara Arneson, Ted's sister and bank vice president.

"We've been here all our lives. We're not going to leave. This town is going to continue to prosper," she said, clearing up the mess at her home a few blocks away. "The spirit is with us. We are lucky to be alive."

Although much of the town is gone — the gas station, St. Mary's Catholic church, the post office, the fire station — some of the community's physical assets were spared.

Before the tornado struck, virtually all the books from the Barneveld Village Library had been stored in a bank vault while a new library building was under construction. The books were unharmed, as were valuables in bank safety deposit boxes and the bank's records.

Village president Steve Eveland, who was attending the World's Fair in New Orleans when the tornado struck, also hopes Barneveld will rebuild, but he was less optimistic after seeing the destruction.

"It's enough to make a grown man cry, and that's just what I did," Eveland said. He said a community meeting would be held to disccuss whether to rebuild.

"I don't know — when that many businesses are gone," she said.

Damages from the tornado totaled about $17 million to $20 million, Shirley Fulton of the State Division of Emergency Government said Saturday. She said damages in Barneveld came to $9.94 million and damages in outlying areas of Iowa and Dane Counties totaled an additional $7 million to $10 million.

STILL STANDING — The water tower is one of the few items still standing in the town of Barneveld, Wis., after a tornado swept through the community of 600. Residents of Barneveld say they are optimstic about the future and will rebuild. (AP Laserphoto)

And Still More Storms

By The Associated Press

A new onslaught of rain-laden thunderstorms caused flooding Saturday in the Midwest, forcing people from their homes, stranding two people on a street sign for hours and floating away cars in the wake of killer tornadoes that devastated two small towns.

On one side of the thunderstorms, a mass of hot air broiled the Northeast with record temperatures near 100, while to the west, the waterlogged Colorado Rockies shivered with more June snow and Winter Park, Colo., greeted the ninth day of June with a low of 23 degrees.

During the night thunderstorms dumped heavy rain from Kansas to Illinois with many places getting more than 3 inches, and hailstones the size of golf balls fell across parts of Kansas. Olathe, Kan., got an even 8 inches of rain in 24 hours. Soldier, Kan., got an unofficial 5 inches during the night, for a four-day total of 13.5 inches.

"We expect this system to be hanging over the Midwest for a day or two more. There is the potential for more severe weather before this thing moves east," Hugh Crowther, a meteorologist with the National Severe Storms Forecast Center in Kansas City, Mo., said early Saturday.

The storm system had spawned more than 50 tornadoes since Thursday from Oklahoma to Wisconsin, and 16 people were killed.

Up to 200 people were forced from their homes in Overland Park, Kan., by flooding, estimated Police Lt. Phil Barbour.

Indian Creek spilled from its banks from Overland Park south to Olathe, sweeping cars as much as two blocks and flooding numerous homes, said police Capt. John Round.

Two teen-age girls caught by racing water clutched a street sign along a flooded Overland Park street for seven hours before being pulled to safety about 7 a.m.

Record Heat Strikes Northeast

By DAVID L. LANGFORD
Associated Press Writer

The calendar says summer is almost two weeks away, but it got about as hot as it ever does across the muggy Northeast again Saturday and the lingering heat wave kept ambulances and emergency crews on the run.

The Emergency Medical Service in New York reported its busiest day in years as many areas from the Virginias to Maine reported record or near-record temperatures and a cloak of stagnant and polluted air stifled the region.

Railroad and subway tracks buckled in a few spots, and officials said that may have caused Friday's derailment of an Amtrak passenger train near Philadelphia.

It was so hot in New York that the carriage horses popular with tourists were taken off the streets for the horses' safety.

Beaches all along the Eastern Seaboard were packed with "wall-to-wall" people.

"It's unbelievable," said Police Officer Michael Murphy, reporting on the crowd at Revere Beach north of Boston, where the mercury had reached a record for the date of 96 by 2 p.m., and kept climbing. "There must be 50,000 people out there."

Traffic was backed up for miles on Long Island in New York as an estimated 100,000 people headed for Jones Beach.

It had never been so hot so early in the season at Portland, Maine, where the temperature reached 93 at 1 p.m., eclipsing a record for the date of 92 set 34 years ago.

Other cities that either broke or tied a record for June 9 at 96 degrees included Atlantic City, N.J., Hartford, Conn., New York City (Kennedy Airport), and Wilmington, Del. Providence, R.I., had a record at 95.

Fire hydrants were tapped by the hundreds, creating water pressure problems in some areas. In New York, where officials said one open fire hydrant wastes 1.4 million gallons of water a day, the city received 150 complaints of illegally opened hydrants on Friday.

On Saturday, crews were sent out to shut them off or attach water-saving sprinklers.

"We have water pressure complaints throughout the city," said Jeffery Sommer, deputy commissioner of the city Environmental Protection Department. "All our maintenance people are doing is sweeping the city, closing hydrants."

New York's Emergency Medical Service, which on an average day receives about 2,500 ambulance calls, handled 3,525 on Friday, the most in 14 years.

"And today we're running ahead of that," Eileen Hertzberg, a spokeswoman for the service, said Saturday.

She said emergency service personnel are spending more time on the phone, explaining to people what to do to cope with the heat.

Children Chipping In To Help Restore Statue Of Liberty

"Dear Miss Liberty, We are sorry that you are falling apart," wrote Shelby Sheridan, a fourth-grader from Parma, Mich. "Our school has collected $119.11 so you could be fixed."

The letter is typical of thousands received by The Statue of Liberty-Ellis Island Centennial Commission describing efforts to aid the celebrated copper lady.

Millions of children, who attend the likes of one-room schoolhouses in Montana or private schools in Manhattan, are holding fundraisers and walkathons and donating their allowances.

To date, children have raised more than $800,000 of the $78 million collected to repair the statue on Liberty Island in time for its July 1986 centennial and to restore neighboring Ellis Island, said commission spokeswoman Penny Becker.

A total of $230 million is needed to complete the joint project.

Most of the children have never seen the 125-ton, 30-story statue, built as a gift from the people of France to the people of the United States.

But like their 19th century counterparts who sent in pennies, nickels and dimes to help build the pedestal for the national landmark, children everywhere are contributing to Lady Liberty.

The amount of the contribution doesn't really matter. Whether it's a nickel sent by an Illinois boy or the record $11,700 raised by a group of Florida elementary school students, the message behind each gift is the same.

"I am sending my contribution to you because I care what happens to Miss Liberty," wrote Chris Gates of North Aurora, Ill., who sent five cents in an envelope bearing a 20-cent "Love" stamp.

"I am worried about the Statue of Liberty!" Erik Paul Ressel, from Anchorage, Alaska, wrote Chrysler Chairman Lee Iacocca, who heads the fundraising drive. The third-grader enclosed a check for $118.20 and added that his classmates were also planning a carnival.

"How much would it cost to clean a fingernail?" he wondered.

They don't have much to give, she said, "but they are proud to be Americans and wanted to be a small part of this fine project." The envelope contained $5.23.

And like the amounts, ways of raising funds run the gamut from selling cookbooks of their grandparents' favorite recipes to door-to-door canvassing; the methods as limitless as a child's imagination.

The John Adams Elementary School in Highland Park, N.J., raised $1,617 selling origami — objects made of folded paper. Ambitious students from Calhoun School in Crossett, Ark., sold shamrocks, decorated Easter eggs and hawked T-shirts with "Save Lady Liberty" emblazoned across the front, raising $1,800.

Fourth graders at the Leila G. Davis Elementary School in Clearwater, Fla., raised $100 by growing petunias from seed and selling the plants.

Airlines Engage In Price Contest

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A fare war on coast-to-coast flights touched off by People Express is spreading, with two other airlines saying they will match the $119 one-way fare on some flights to a second airport in the New York City area.

Trans World Airlines and World Airways said they would offer the low fare to Kennedy International Airport.

People Express, a low-cost airline flying mainly to East Coast and Midwest cities and London, is based at the Newark, N.J., International Airport. It does not have facilities at Kennedy, the metropolitan area's largest airport.

United Airlines announced Thursday it would match the $119 fare, which People Express plans to offer next week. American Airlines is cutting its fare almost as low, and also says it will institute the reduced fare on some Kennedy flights.

Nevertheless, most airline officials and analysts said they do not believe an all-out fare war has been declared.

Except for People Express and World, the airlines imposed restrictions on the budget fares, including advance-purchase and length-of-stay requirements.

Analysts predicted the airlines probably would not feel the financial impact of the competition during the busy summer tourist season, but it may be felt in the fall.

"The summer does not make that much difference," said Hans J. Plickert, first vice president of E.F. Hutton & Co.

Jackpot Winner Facing Charges

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — A man who won a $4.4 million state lottery jackpot in September now faces charges of writing bad checks, police said Saturday.

Raymond Lenox, 40, of Philadelphia, was arraigned on fraud charges Wednesday and allowed to sign his own bond on $100,000 bail.

"I figued he was good for the money," Municipal Judge Alan Silberstein said.

Lenox, who owns two restaurants, collected $168,452.20 last fall as the first of 21 annual installment on an $8.8 million Lotto jackpot he split with another bettor Sept. 20, lottery spokesman Michael Keyser said Saturday.

Keyser said no other jackpot winner has faced similar charges. He refused to comment further on the case, saying police had not notified the bureau about the charges.

Detectives said the checks involved the purchase of a piano and carpeting, but they declined to provide details about the amount of money involved.

Lenox said at the time that the district attorney's office had agreed to allow him to pay off the claim starting June 1. Detectives would not say whether Lenox was charged Wednesday under the April warrant.

N.Y. March Hits Military

NEW YORK (AP) — Almost 10,000 demonstrators marched under a broiling sun Saturday through midtown Manhattan to protest U.S. military involvement in Central America and the Caribbean basin.

The protesters, waving signs and banners, wove uptown from Dag Hammarskjold Plaza, across the street from the United Nations, to Madison Avenue and 60th Street, then westward to Seventh Avenue and southward again to Times Square, where a mock trial of U.S. policymakers was staged. No arrests were reported.

"We charge the defendants with planning for nuclear war and destruction. We charge them with planning for genocide," said Suzanne Ross, a leader of the coalition that organized the rally and march.

"We must convict these defendants today and stop this insanity," she said.

Activist lawyer William Kunstler said in a speech the mock charges against President Reagan, Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger, U.N. Ambassador Jeane Kirkpatrick and former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger were being leveled "by the people of the world."

"Of course, you know what the verdict is," Kunstler said in an interview, accusing the administration of fostering oppression.

The rally was held in a fair-like atmosphere with 47th Street closed to traffic and lined with food and drink vendors.

Suspect Arrested In Bomb Blasts Set In Three States

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — A 24-year-old man injured in an explosion in his car at an Iowa shopping center was charged Saturday with possession of bomb parts after officials arrested him in connection with the discovery of more than 20 bombs in three states, a federal prosecutor said.

Earl Steven Karr was charged with illegal possession of a firearm in connection with the discovery of pipe bomb parts in his Minneapolis rooming house room, said U.S. Attorney James M. Rosenbaum.

In a news conference, Rosenbaum said Karr may face further charges in Wisconsin and Illinois, the other states where bombs were found. Five people were hurt in the blasts which occurred since Memorial Day.

"We have no evidence to indicate that he had an accomplice or belonged to an organized group," Rosebaum told reporters, adding that there was no immediate indication of a motive.

The prosecutor said Karr had been living at the rooming house a short time but declined to say whether the man had an address elsewhere.

"The final break in the case came yesterday, when there was an explosion in a parking lot near a restaurant in Mason City, Iowa," Rosenbaum had said earlier in a prepared statement.

Rosenbaum said items seized in the man's car appear to match items used to make bombs which were placed in cities in Wisconsin, Minnesota and Illinois since May 25.

Rosenbaum said search warrants were obtained to seize other devices or parts that could be used in bomb manufacturing from the suspect's Minneapolis home, and in addition "there were materials suitable for personal disguise."

The man injured in the Mason City blast was transferred Friday to the burn center at St. Paul-Ramsey Medical Center in St. Paul, Minn., where he was listed in serious condition Saturday with first and second degree burns on his arms and face.

"His face and arms were like raw hamburger. There was lots of blood and his hair was completely singed," said Daniel Oelke, manager of the Mason City restaurant outside which he blast occurred. The young man got himself out of the car but "didn't say a word," Oelke said.

Oelke said he was about five feet from the car when he noticed at his feet a piece of pipe six or eight inches long, wrapped with masking tape with a copper wire protruding at one end and a battery attached. Police quickly cordoned off the area, he said.

"We are optimistic that the apprehension will terminate this series of senseless bombings," Rosenbaum said. "We have no indications of any organized groups being responsible."

Rosenbaum said there is a chance that some pipe bombs may still be found, but he said authorities are optimistic no more will be placed.

World's Fair Owes Builders

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Contractors who built the $350 million World's Fair will have to wait until ticket sales improve to collect the $12 million owed them, fair officials say.

But some of the smaller contractors say they might go broke unless they soon get the money due since May 20.

The major problem is $15 million the fair owes to a New Orleans bank, which must be paid before contractors get their money.

Broke School System Struggles To Stay Open Two More Weeks

LYNN, Mass. (AP) — Weeds push up through cracks in the concrete steps outside the aged Classical High School where two teachers are joking ruefully about their "volunteer" jobs with the Lynn school system.

It's been more than a week since 1,200 school employees got their last paychecks, and some are beginning to feel as broke as their employer.

On Thursday, more than two weeks before its school year was scheduled to end, this poor coastal city of 79,000 north of Boston hit the bottom of its $24.2 million school budget.

School administrators say they ran into unexpected costs for substitute teachers, maternity leave and special education. Mayor Antonio Marino says the school committee plain and simply overspent.

State school officials say there's probably truth to both versions. But Lynn's financial situation, they say, also points up a larger problem faced by older industrial Massachusetts cities, which lack an adequate tax base to provide quality services.

"Lynn is the worst of the communities that are having financial problems," said Terry Zoulas, a spokesman for the state Department of Education. "But other communities like it are facing problems, too."

Long a money-tight community, Lynn's fiscal struggles worsened after 1980 when Massachusetts voters approved the tax-limiting Proposition 2½.

The measure prohibits cities and towns from levying property taxes in excess of 2½ percent of their assessed valuation. In the first year after it went into effect, municipal revenues statewide declined by $465 million and school spending dropped $136 million, according to Department of Education figures.

In Lynn, 220 school jobs were eliminated the first year after Proposition 2½.

Marino believes Lynn's current school problems began last fall when the school committee decided to rehire 73 employees who had been laid off, implement a costly new curriculum and grant pay raises for teachers. The school committee knew — or should have known — the added expenses would drive its budget into the red, he said.

"You can't spend money you don't have," said Marino. "If something isn't working, you don't fix it by defying the law and going out and overspending. You try to change the law."

But Deputy School Superintendent Fred Cole said the additional staff and payroll were taken into account when the budget was set last year, and that the schools were socked by a lot of unforeseen expenses.

"I suppose we could have done nothing and lived within our budget. It makes sense, but it provides a lousy education for our children," he said.

This school year, Lynn spent an average of $1,822 to educate each student. New Bedford, another working class seaport, was the only large city in Massachusetts to spend less, Cole said. The city was also well below the state average in spending for bilingual and special education, he said.

Two weeks ago, administrators of the 12,440-pupil school system threatened to shut down schools a month early, claiming they couldn't afford to finish the school year. The closure was halted when a Superior Court judge ruled that Lynn was legally bound to keep schools open until June 22 to comply with a state law that requires students to be in school 180 days a year.

On Wednesday, the Lynn City Council voted 11-0 to approve a state bailout plan that would let the education department borrow $2.6 million against next year's state aid to keep school doors open two more weeks.

The plan also would create a steering committee of city, school, state and business officials to examine the city's finances and permit the state to hire a management consultant by Aug. 15 to recommend spending cuts and other fiscal procedures.

Surprisingly, the uncertainty about when schools will close has sparked little reaction from students and parents, according to both the mayor and school administrators.

Teachers and other school employees have continued to work despite not having been paid for the past week. Their paychecks await final approval of the state bailout plan by Marino and the state Emergency Finance Board.

"It's not that we can't afford it for a few days," said one Classical High School teacher who asked not to be identified. "But if this goes on, I just can't see a quality education continuing in this system."

"The fallout is that bright, young people don't come in (to teach)," said James Daley, principal of Breed Junior High School. "You take the young buck with one or two kids — they saw the handwriting on the wall and they skiddooed."

N.C. Methodists Oppose Tax Fund

LAKE JUNALUSKA, N.C. (AP) — Delegates to the Western North Carolina United Methodist Church's annual conference Saturday voiced opposition to capital punishment and gambling and refused to support the World Peace Tax Fund Bill.

The World Peace Tax Fund measure, which has been introduced both in the U.S. Senate and House, provides that taxpayers conscientiously opposed to war may choose to have their tax payments spent for non-military purposes.

The delegates also declined to support a petition opposing the government's policy toward Nicaragua.

Drug Helpful In Treating Arthritis

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — An anti-cancer drug has proven "very effective" in treating rheumatoid arthritis, according to a study presented Saturday at the American Rheumatism Association's annual meeting.

The drug, Methotrexate, helped reduce pain and swelling in more than half of the arthritis sufferers who used it in an 18-week nationwide trial, said Dr. John R. Ward, a physician at the University of Utah.

Ward, who directed the study, said it was the first comparison of Methotrexate against a placebo in testing the drug's effectiveness and safety for rheumatoid arthritis.

Rheumatoid arthritis, which affects 6.5 million adults in the United States, is the most common type of crippling arthritis, Ward said.

The drug is not expected to be useful in the treatment of osteoarthritis, another common form of arthritis which affects the joints but is generally a milder and more limited disease, he said.

Traditionally prescribed in combination with other drugs for certain types of cancer, Methotrexate was developed by Lederle Laboratories in the 1940s, Ward said. It is now used in treating cancers of the breast, lungs, head and neck, he said.

The rheumatoid arthritis study was conducted at eight university clinics and the National Institutes of Health. It involved 189 volunteer patients who had failed to respond to other treatments, but continued to take nonsteroidal anti-inflammatory drugs such as aspirin during the study.

Fifty-seven of the 95 patients given Methotrexate and 53 of the 94 patients given a placebo completed the treatment, Ward said.

Half of the patients given Methotrexate experienced reduced swelling, compared with 8 percent of those given placebos, Ward said, while 75 percent of those given Methotrexate reported less pain and tenderness, compared to 20 percent on placebos.

"Real improvement is difficult to define, it's such a subjective thing," Ward said. "Still, the patients on Methotrexate said they felt better, and the swelling-pain reductions indicate the drug, given in low weekly doses, was very effective.

"In fact, we believe the percentage of improvement would have been even greater had the trial exceeded 18 weeks."

Ward said it is "not entirely clear" how Methotrexate works in alleviating rheumatoid arthritis. He also said the trial didn't allow enough time to determine if the drug could diminish progression of the disease.

Of the patients who didn't complete the trial, he said most withdrew because of adverse drug reactions, while others were dropped for lack of response.

Reservations For Jail

BRADENTON, Fla. (AP) — It didn't look like the usual lot of prisoners at the Manatee County Jail. These were judges, lawyers, housewives, retirees and stockbrokers, and all 38 had reservations for a night behind bars.

They were subpoenaed, thumbprinted, assigned cells, locked-up and fined $5 each before their release Saturday morning.

The purpose was to christen the brand new $13 million, seven-story jail, make sure everything worked right and find out if taxpayers were satisfied with the way their money was spent.

"It's a wonderful learning experience for us and I hope you," Capt. Sally McCammon, director of detention, said after the mock prisoners were let out of their pastel-colored cell blocks.

Most of the volunteer prisoners said they were pleased with the way the new facility was set up, although a few complained of strange noises, uncomfortable beds and boredom.

"I can't imagine being like that (imprisoned) all day," said Nan Russell, former head of the League of Women Voters in Bradenton. "What do you do all day? I like to get up and go in the morning, but here there was nothing to do."

Marchers Try To Blockade U.S. Embassy

LONDON (AP) — Tens of thousands of anti-nuclear demonstrators marched through central London and many tried to blockade the U.S. Embassy and the headquarters of the seven-nation economic summit on Saturday.

Police said they arrested 198 people, including 80 who were hauled away as they tried to seal off The Mall leading to Lancaster House, where leaders of seven major Western industrial democracies were finishing their three-day summit.

The U.S. Embassy at Grosvenor Square, a mile from Lancaster House, was under virtual siege during a four-hour protest by 2,000 demonstrators who lay down across access roads and linked themselves together by cobwebs of string. Police set up barricades and dragged away demonstrators to make way for the occasional official car.

In brilliant sunshine and 73-degree weather, a huge procession wound two miles from London's Hyde Park to Trafalgar Square behind an 18-foot model of a U.S. cruise missile. Organizers said 100,000 people took part but police estimated the crowd at 50,000.

Trick cyclists and street musicians weaved among the marchers. Sporting banners with the legends, "Stop Thatcher's Surrender — Return Cruise to Sender" and "Reagan, Hollywood or Bust," the march took nearly five hours to snake into Traflagar Square.

It was the biggest protest since 250,000 demonstrators gathered prior to the deployment of the cruise missiles in Britain last November.

President Reagan smiled and waved from his black limousine at about 150 jeering demonstrators who were allowed to remain behind barricades in The Mall. Their chants switched from "Maggie out" to "Ronnie, Ronnie, Ronnie, out, out, out."

A series of motorcades carrying host Conservative Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and the leaders of France, Italy, Canada, West Germany and Japan also swept past.

Minutes before the presidential motorcade appeared a lone demonstrator lept over a barrier and sat down in The Mall. Four police officers raced forward and carried him away.

Armed with a walking stick and a flower, 70-year-old Michael Foot, ex-chief of Britain's opposition Labor Party, marched at the head of the demonstration alongside leaders of the sponsoring Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament.

"My message to President Reagan is ... the British government does not speak for the people of Britain," said Foot, who led Labor to defeat in June 1983 elections on a leftist platform which included banning cruise and Britain's own nuclear arsenal.

Speakers in Trafalgar Square attacked Reagan and Mrs. Thatcher, whom they labeled a puppet.

"This rally has a message for the next president of the United States: your cruise missiles and all American nuclear missiles in this country are already labeled 'Return to Sender,' " said Joan Ruddock, head of the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament.

In nearby Whitehall, site of Britain's government offices, a handful of counter-demonstrators slung a banner across the street saying "President Reagan is our friend." Through a loudspeaker they played World War II entertainer Dame Vera Lynn singing "The White Cliffs of Dover."

Earlier Saturday seven women demonstrators were arrested for wailing and singing near the U.S. Ambassador's residence in Regent's Park, north London, where Reagan is staying, police said.

Another four were charged with criminal damage for throwing red paint over the steps of the U.S. Embassy on Friday night.

All the women came from a peace camp at the U.S. Greenham Common Air Base, 50 miles west of London, where cruise missiles were deployed Nov. 10.

A total of 572 cruise missiles and Pershing 2 rockets are due to be deployed in five West European countries by 1988. NATO officials say they are being deployed in response to the Soviet Union's buildup of midrange SS-20 nuclear missiles.

Pope To Visit Swiss

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Pope John Paul II on Tuesday begins a six-day visit to Switzerland, which broke normal diplomatic ties with the Holy See in the 19th century.

Many Swiss Protestants have criticized the upcoming visit or specific parts of it, such as the planned meeting between the pontiff and the Federal Council, the executive branch of government. Some Roman Catholics are also skeptical, saying John Paul's stay will not be long enough for him to examine church problems thoroughly.

Switzerland suspended normal diplomatic relations with the Vatican in 1873, in a dispute over papal infallibility.

Since 1920 the Vatican has maintained an ambassador in Bern, but Switzerland is not one of the 107 nations with ambassadors to the Vatican.

Church sources said they don't expect any changes in the diplomatic status to be discussed seriously during the pope's tour.

The influx of predominantly Roman Catholic foreigners over the last three decades has given Catholics the majority in Switzerland.

According to a 1980 census, there were 3 million Roman Catholics in Switzerland and 2.8 million members of Protestant denominations.

In 1973, a Swiss national referendum that passed with a narrow margin lifted restrictions that prevented the Roman Catholic Jesuit order from running schools. The sanctions were imposed in 1847 after Protestant cantons — or states — broke up a "separate alliance" of Catholic cantons.

The Jesuits have 100 priests in Switzerland, according to 1983 statistics. Most run retreat houses, parishes and publications. One directs a school.

U.N. Willing To Mediate

BEIRUT, Lebanon (UPI) — U.N. Secretary General Javier Perez de Cuellar said Saturday the United Nations was willing to help mediate an end to the Israeli occupation of southern Lebanon, where Israeli troops have come under increased guerrilla attacks.

Police reports said five explosions were set off in the southern City of Sidon and were believed to have been roadside bombs aimed at Israeli patrols detonated to coincide with Perez de Cuellar's visit to Lebanon.

In Beirut, fighting between rival militias flared along the Green Line dividing the Moslem and Christian sectors of the capital as Perez de Cuellar met with Prime Minister Rashid Karami and President Amin Gemayel. A powerful car bomb also exploded in the Christian town of Jounieh, killing one person and injuring 15 others, including five policemen.

Beirut radio and police in Sidon, 25 miles south of Beirut, reported five explosions in the city but details were unavailable because of massive Israeli security measures.

"We believe they were roadside bombs against Israeli patrols and that the attacks were timed to coincide with (Perez) de Cuellar's visit to Beirut," a police official said.

Israeli troops have come under increased attacks by Lebanese guerrillas intent on driving them from the region, which Israel invaded in June 1982. The campaign was aimed at sweeping out Palestinian guerrillas, who had been attacking northern Israeli settlements.

Perez de Cuellar, who arrived from Damascus as part of a Middle East tour to assess the regional situation, met Gemayel and Karami in Baabda, a Beirut suburb.

"We are ready to discuss security arrangements for southern Lebanon ... through the United Nations Security Council or a third party. We want Israel out of our territory, and we welcome whoever can help us achieve this aim," Karami said.

Iraq Threatens Merciless Strikes On Iranian Targets

By The Associated Press

Iraq threatened Saturday to attack Iranian economic installations, including its Kharg Island oil terminal, "without mercy," until there is no oil for Iran to export.

"We now possess all the means enabling us to deal the final blow" to the Iranian economy, Iraqi state radio said. "Logic dictates that Iraq deal its blow without mercy."

Iranian jets and artillery attacked across the southern part of the border Saturday, according to war communiques from Iran and Iraq.

A statement issued in Baghdad said eight Iraqi civilians were killed and 23 others were hurt by Iranian artillery fire that hit the provincial capital of Basra and six other border cities.

Iran's official Islamic Republic News Agency said Iranian planes successfully attacked Iraqi military installations and "sensitive points" at Ali Al-Gharbi. Quoting a communique issued in Tehran, the agency said four Iranian jets also struck Iraqi forces near the town of Ali Al-Sharqi.

Both cities are directly across the border from Dezful, which Iran said was struck by an Iraqi missile early Saturday. Iranian officials said 12 people were killed in that attack.

Iraq confirmed the air attack, but said Iranian jets were intercepted by anti-aircraft fire, and were forced to drop their bombs outside of Ali Al-Gharbi. Four persons were wounded, it added.

Arab diplomatic sources said oil ministers of the six-member Gulf Cooperation Council are increasingly worried about an escalation of the Iran-Iraq war, and that they are to discuss joint action to protect gulf shipping at an emergency conference Sunday in Taif, Saudi Arabia.

In a meeting several days earlier, Mana Saeed Oteiba, oil minister of the United Arab Emirates, flew to Taif for talks with Saudi Defense Minister Prince Sultan.

Results of the discussion were not disclosed, but informed sources said the two men discussed joint air cover, naval escorts and other ways to protect gulf shipping from further raids by Iran.

Since May 13 Iran has been accused of attacking two Kuwaiti oil tankers, a Saudi ship and one Liberian-registered oil-chemical carrier in neutral Arab waters.

More than two years ago, Iraq declared the area around Kharg Island a war zone, and since then its warplanes have made repeated attacks on cargo ships and tankers in that zone.

The gulf council members are Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, the United Arab Emirates, Bahrain, Qatar and Oman.

The oil ministers also will review the amount of crude oil stockpiled in industrialized countries, pricing and production, the United Arab Emirates news agency WAM said.

Foreign ministers of the six countries also were scheduled to hold emergency talks in Taif on Tuesday, according to news media reports.

Iraq said earlier Saturday that its jetfighters hit two "big naval targets" north and southwest of Kharg Island Thursday night. But Iran's official Islamic Republic News Agency, citing unidentified official sources, rejected the Iraqi report as a "lie."

IRNA said Iraqi warplanes attempted to attack the city of Korramabad several times Friday night, but "each time the aggressive Iraqi planes were forced to turn tail before carrying out their mission."

Arab and Western diplomatic sources along the gulf said Iran has massed an estimated 400,000 revolutionary guardsmen along Iraq's southern border for a major offensive. Tehran Radio said Saturday that "Iran's brave youths are continuing to leave for the battlefront."

Iraq and Iran have been trading retaliatory air raids, missile attacks and artillery shelling since Tuesday, following an attack by Iraq on the city of Baneh in Iranian Kurdistan. More than 300 people were killed in that attack, according to official Iranian counts.

U.S.-Honduran Games Continue

JAMASTRAN, Honduras (AP) — The Honduran armed forces chief says joint military maneuvers with U.S. troops will continue indefinitely.

Gen. Walter Lopez Reyes made the statement Friday at the close of a week of exercises by Salvadoran, Honduran and U.S. military units at this airfield near the Nicaraguan border.

He said the United States "is the most powerful champion of world democracy and its advanced military technology, its tactical and strategic concepts and the quality of armament" help its allies modernize their armies.

"The joint maneuvers with the United States will continue with the goal of improving our defensive capacity before the destabilizing actions of Marxism-Leninism" in Central America, he said.

The exercises, 20 miles from the Nicaraguan border, are part of the two-month-long Granadero I maneuvers by 4,100 soldiers from the three countries. Smaller excercises in Granadero I are to continue until the official termination date of June 30.

The next planned exercises are called Big Pine III, and Pentagon sources said months ago that they might start in September. A firm starting date has not been announced.

Col. James Strachan, a U.S. military spokesman in Honduras, said in a telephone interview Saturday that at least 700 American soldiers would stay on after the end of Granadero I.

Proposed Law Changes Farm Labor Rules

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. farmers — particularly producers of vegetables, fruit and nuts — could face a radically changed labor market if a sweeping immigration reform bill now before Congress becomes law.

The bill would for the first time make employers, including farm operators, subject to penalties if they hire illegal aliens. It also offers amnesty for undocumented workers already in the United States for several years.

After months of delays, the measure is due to be taken up this week by the House amid signs that support for it may be slipping. Democrats, who control the House, are split on the politically charged issue.

While reliable statistics are unavailable because of the underground nature of the alien labor market, agriculture is generally believed to be among the greatest users of illegal foreign labor.

Because of its arduous, often backbreaking nature and low pay, U.S. citizens for the most part shun farm harvest work. But to Third World workers, U.S. wages often give them a chance to earn four or five times what they could at home.

More than half of all spending for hired farm labor occurs in 10 states with heavy concentrations of vegetable, fruit and other labor-intensive farms. California is by far the largest user of such temporary help, followed by Florida, Washington, Pennsylvania, New York, Michigan, Texas, Oregon, Arizona and Ohio.

It is those areas that would be hardest hit by the ban on undocumented labor, according to a study by Robert Coltrane, an Agriculture Department economist. But the bill also would affect the Midwest, the mid-Atlantic states and New England, where illegal immigration is reportedly on the upswing and such labor is used to help harvest tobacco, sugar crops and other commodities.

"Agricultural employers are facing a serious situation here, whichever way it goes," Coltrane said in a recent interview. If the legislation becomes law, producers will have to adjust to an entirely new set of labor regulations. If it does not, they remain subject to spot raids by agents of the Immigration and Naturalization Service that can wipe out their labor force in mid-harvest.

"Many would rather live with the uncertainty of the INS raids than with the legislation," he said.

The proposal is highly controversial for several reasons. While addressing fears that illegal aliens are taking away jobs from U.S. workers and posing a burden to domestic social services, the bill has angered Hispanic groups who say it would heighten discrimination against Hispanics who are U.S. citizens. It is particularly controversial in areas where Hispanics are an important voting force, particularly the Southwest.

The bill's documentation requirements also have aroused the ire of those who believe it could lead to some form of national identification card and a deprivation of civil liberties.

House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., who took substantial political heat for delaying action on the measure earlier this year, now has promised the House will take it up this week. The Senate passed its own version, with the support of the Reagan administration, last year.

Some farm workers enter the United States legally under a Labor Department employment arrangement known as the H-2 program. Over the past five years, 15,000 to 19,000 such jobs have been certified annually.

Christians Get Tour Of U.S.S.R

MOSCOW (AP) — A record number of U.S. Christian representatives began a two-week working tour across the Soviet Union on Saturday, precipitating some extraordinary cooperation between the Communist government and churches.

In order to accommodate the 265 church people on their wide-ranging journeys, guides of the government Intourist service were given special training in theology and church history.

"It's a new day," said the Rev. Bruce Rigdon of Chicago's McCormick Theological Seminary, who is leading the members of Protestant, Roman Catholic and Eastern Orthodox churches.

It is the largest single religious group to visit the Soviet Union, and the government agreed to have its guides briefed on Soviet religious life and teachings by Soviet church leaders, Rigdon said.

"It's the first time in history for Intourist and the churches to work together," Rigdon said. Intourist previously has given its guides special training for other groups such as businessmen, he said.

The visitors were given a two-hour tour of the Kremlin on Saturday. They met with the U.S. ambassador in the afternoon and visited churches in the evening.

They say their objective is to establish closer personal tie between American and Soviet Christians in the interest of friendship, mutual support and peace.

"The more our two peoples are able to see one another, the better the chance for growth of good will," said Adelaide M. Sabath of Chicago, a Roman Catholic. "Americans generally have little or no adequate, correct understanding of religious life in the Soviet Union," she said.

The Rev. Alton Beaver of Medford, Okla., a clergyman of the Disciples of Christ Church, said many of his parish members did not know there were any Christians in the Soviet Union.

Americans tend to be either totally ignorant of Soviet religious life, or only aware of stories of repression, said the Rev. Priscilla Inkpen of Scotia, N.Y., a United Church of Christ clergywoman.

"Some people and groups seek to portray all aspects of the Soviet Union as bad," she said.

The visitors will divide into six small groups for trips to a dozen Soviet cities in the Baltic republics, the Ukraine, the southern republics and central s0627 -b- The visits "will hopefully build trust and friendships — in 13:14 both directions," said Kay Frank of San Ramon, Calif., — a Presbyterian. Helen M. Casey, a Midland, Mich., Roman Catholic, said "Everything we, and they, learn and experience about each other will be a plus to our present understanding."

Haitian Survivors Sent Home

MIAMI (UPI) — Sixty Haitians who survived the capsizing of their rickety Florida-bound sailboat were returned to Haiti Saturday aboard a Coast Guard cutter and immigration officials denied they would be persecuted at home.

"All of (the survivors) had been interviewed and none made any claims of persecution," said Leon Jennings, an inspector for the Immigration and Naturalization Service in Washington.

"Through the State Department, we have had follow-ups for people returned to Haiti and we have not had any claims of persecution after they have returned," Jennings said.

Red Cross volunteers, representatives of the regime of Haitian President-for-Life Jean-Claude Duvalier and U.S. Embassy officials were to meet the cutter Hamilton, which was to dock at Port-au-Prince later Saturday.

"The Red Cross will provide them with food and transportation, and clothes if necessary," said Jennings.

Sixty-three Haitians were among at least 70 refugees jammed into a 30-foot wooden sailboat that capsized Wednesday night about 30 miles off the coast of Haiti.

Seven people drowned. Three of the survivors were seriously injured and treated at a military hospital at the Navy's Guantanamo base on Cuba.

The three injured were flown to Haiti Friday and the USS Wainwright deposited the seven bodies at the docks of Port-au-Prince, said Coast Guard Lt. George Kerr in Miami. Initial reports said four were injured.

An undetermined number of others were missing and presumed drowned, including Jacques Crevecoeur, 47, an INS interpreter.

"After three days of searching the area, we didn't find anything. They are presumed dead," Kerr said.

The rickety sailboat overturned while being boarded by Coast Guard officials as part of a U.S. interdiction policy to stifle the flow of illegal aliens into the country.

The boat was swamped because its passengers saw the boarding party and rushed to one side of the craft, authorities said.

INS officials said it was apparent the sailboat was headed for Florida, where as many as 50,000 Haitians have migrated in the last five years. Dozens have died at sea.

Room Fire Forces Guests To Evacuate

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Hundreds of people were evacuated from the 500-room Americana Hotel on Saturday after a bed and wall caught fire in a room on the hotel's 15th floor, authorities said.

No serious injuries were reported and the fire was contained to the room and extinguished a short time later, said Capt. Joseph Galetti of the Kansas City Fire Department.

A hotel security guard and a Kansas City policeman suffered smoke inhalation and were transported to area hospitals for treatment, Galetti said.

Two women were inside the room when the blaze began, Galetti said. The cause of the fire had not been determined, he said.

The two-alarm fire was reported about 4:25 p.m. by staff members of the hotel, Galetti said. Thirty-eight firefighters from 11 companies reported to the 28-story structure in downtown Kansas City.

Galetti said 350 of the hotel's rooms were occupied. Most of the guests were evacuated from the building while some remained in the lobby, he said. Guests were allowed back in their rooms when the area was secured by firefighters after about 40 minutes.

Rooms above the room in which the fire began sustained smoke damage, and others on the 15th floor were damaged by water, he said.

Runaway Gets Free Ride Home

TUSCALOOSA, Ala. (AP) — A Massachusetts runaway celebrated her 18th birthday Saturday by becoming the first person to take advantage of Trailways bus line's new Operation Home Free, getting a free bus trip home.

Shields said the Red Cross in Tuscaloosa contacted the bus station after Trailway's Chairman James L. Kerrigan announced the new program Friday on ABC's "Good Morning America."

Operation Home Free, a project of the bus company and the International Chiefs of Police, allows runaways to contact authorities and get a free ride home from Trailways.

Shields declined to release the young woman's name, but said she told Red Cross officials Friday that she wanted to return to her home in Salem, Mass., "before her 18th birthday."

She turned 18 on Saturday, he said.

The ticket agent said he wasn't certain how she got to Tuscaloosa, in western Alabama.

Two Fugitives Still At Large

By The Associated Press

Four of the six fugitives from Virginia's death row were back behind bars Saturday, but the recapture of two of them in Vermont left authorities puzzled about the location of the last — and perhaps most dangerous — pair.

"We have no information ... whatsoever" on brothers James and Linwood Briley, said Capt. R.A. Clark, a troop commander of the North Carolina Highway Patrol. "We don't know where they are. We're at a standstill."

Clark was among the dozens of local police, Virginia and North Carolina troopers and highway patrolmen, FBI agents and Virginia corrections officers who have been combing the area around Warrenton, N.C., since May 31, when six convicted murderers faked a bomb threat and escaped from the Mecklenburg Correctional Center just across the Virginia border.

Two were recaptured the day after the escape in a laundromat two blocks from the Warrenton police station. On Friday, Lem Tuggle Jr., 32, was recaptured in the southwest corner of Vermont after an armed robbery, and Willie Leroy Jones, 25, gave himself up on the opposite side of the state.

Maj. James Ryan, director of the Vermont State Police, said he did not believe the Briley brothers had accompanied Tuggle or Jones to Vermont. "Then again, we didn't expect the others to be up here either," he added.

"I'm afraid the worst is yet to come," said Heman Clark, North Carolina secretary of public safety and crime control. "I believe the toughest ones are still out there. ... These are desperate criminals and must be very, very dangerous."

The Brileys — Linwood, 30, and James, 28 — and a third brother, Anthony, were convicted in 1980 of a total of 11 murders in the Richmond area. Anthony Briley, 25, is serving a life sentence and was not involved in the escape.

Clark had said Friday that Tuggle told Vermont investigators he had left the Brileys in their hometown of Richmond. But police and corrections officials in Richmond and Vermont said Saturday that didn't appear to be the case.

"That appears to be false and never should have been released," said Richmond Police Maj. V. Stuart Cook. "The word that we have basically is they (Tuggle and Jones) are not making any statements."

Local and state police and the FBI were in conference from 6:30 p.m. Friday to early Saturday, said North Carolina Trooper M.D. Hammonds.

"They're hoping the information from whatever interrogations they've had up there (in Vermont) will be helpful," Hammonds said.

Task Force Told Hunger On Increase

RALEIGH (AP) — Hunger pains are growing stronger in North Carolina where emergency food aid requests are up but the number of food stamp recipients is down, health officials told a task force investigating hunger.

"We do know that North Carolina has a hunger problem that is more serious than in the last few years, that it's associated with adverse health problems and that it ought not to be ignored," Dr. J. Larry Brown of Harvard School of Public Health said at a public hearing Friday.

Brown, who chairs the Physician Task Force on Hunger in America, and a team of physicians this week toured North Carolina's welfare offices, rural shanty towns, and depressing migrant camps.

Statistics show the number of families living below the poverty line rose 42 percent from 1981 to 1983 in North Carolina, while participation in the food stamp program declined.

Sister Helen Wright, director of Urban Ministries in Raleigh, told the task force about the psychological effects of hunger and malnutrition.

"We put the poor people in the position of being in crisis," Sister Wright said. "They always have to go every month and beg for food. ... There's high tension in these families. They're always in crisis.

"Why should the richest country in the world put 15 percent of the people in this state who live below the poverty line in the position of begging for food?" she said.

While food stamp participation in North Carolina has fallen from 66 percent of those in poverty in 1981 to 40 percent of them today, there's been a "dramatic increase" in emergency aid requests in some counties.

Durham County Social Services Director Dan Hudgins said his agency has seen the requests grow from 611 in 1982 to 1,240 in 1983. He said many people have an exaggerated image of food stamp fraud.

"I'm not saying there's no recipient fraud, but it's blown out of all proportion," Hudgins said.

"How can you eat so much and still be so thin?"

Maybe you know someone like that. Someone who eats and eats, yet never seems to gain an ounce. Maybe you've wondered why you weren't so lucky? Well, it's not just luck.

Phone Service Rates Set For Debate

RALEIGH (AP) — A state House bill to permit competition on in-state, long-distance telephone service is bringing predictions of lower long-distance bills, warnings of higher local costs and attracting the attention of many lobbyists.

The bill was passed by the House in 1983 and is pending before a Senate Ways and Means Committee. Interest in the bill has intensified and committee debate could come this week.

North Carolina is one of a minority of states that allows only one company to offer in-state, long-distance service. American Telephone & Telegraph Co. handles N.C. calls between metropolitan service areas in the state called "local access transit areas."

Nationally, companies are allowed to compete to offer the lowest long-distance rates for calls from one state to another.

The bill introduced by Rep. George Miller, D-Durham, would give the state Utilities Commission authority to let more than one company offer such service if it thinks that would benefit consumers.

"The commission ought to have the discretion and authority by statute to consider this rapidly developing area," Miller said. "At the present time, it may be proposed in the interest of consumers but their (the commission's) hands would be tied."

Miller said the bill requires the commission to be sure before it acts that competition would not lower long-distance rates to the point of raising local telephone rates. For years, long-distance service has subsidized local calls.

The Utilities Commission Public Staff is supporting the bill, partly for that reason.

"I think the way the bill is structured, the commission would have the flexibility to guard against that kind of problem," said Gene A. Clemmons, director of the staff's communications division.

Clemmons said a recent study indicated that large majority of residential customers makes no long-distance calls or very few long-distance calls while everyone is affected by local rates.

"We would certainly want the commission to have flexibility in embarking into the competitive environment," Clemmons said. "We do not want the commission's hands to be tied with statutory language."

In preliminary debates, spokesmen for AT&T have suggested an amendment that would require the Utilities Commission administer regulations uniformly, without giving smaller companies the price advantages they enjoy nationally to promote competition.

For example, AT&T and the companies offering competitive long-distance service pay fees for access to local phone lines. The companies offering competitive service get a 55 percent discount over the rates paid by AT&T.

Joyce Deaton, AT&T public relations manager in Charlotte, said her company needs the amendment because it serves both rural and urban customers. She said the other companies serve only densely populated areas.

"This could create a situation ... through which people who live in the big city get cheaper service than people in the rural areas," she said in a telephone interview.

Governors May Change Method For Elections

WILMINGTON (AP) — A University of North Carolina Board of Governors committee is studying a proposal that would elect the board chairman by secret written ballot instead of by voice vote in an open meeting.

Board member R. Phillip Haire of Sylva presented the plan at a Friday meeting, noting the board's code "does not provide a specific procedure for the nomination and election of officers to the board and ... this motion is offered for use during the election of officers at the July 1984 meeting for the term August 1984 to July 1986."

Under state law, the board is required to select from its membership a chairman, vice chairman and secretary during each even-numbered year to serve two-year terms. The method of election is not specified.

UNC system President William Friday, who will turn 64 on July 13, is close to retirement age and the next chairman is expected to play a key role in choosing his successor.

Also within the UNC system, the chairman of the board of trustees at North Carolina Central University, for example, heads the committee that searches for candidates to serve as chancellor.

During the board meeting, questions were raised about whether the new election procedure would violate the state's open meetings law. The proposal was sent for study to the board's governance committee, which Haire said would seek an advisory opinion from the attorney general's office.

In other business, the board adopted a revised faculty consulting policy designed to protect its 16 institutions against conflicts of interest.

Starting July 1, faculty members who want to work for firms outside the university would have to disclose any special ties to those companies. Faculty members will be asked whether the firm provides funding for university research or whether the faculty member or someone in his family holds an office or financial interest in the company.

Requests for work involving possible conflict will be reviewed by the faculty member's dean and department chairmen.

Helms Says Death Squads Don't Exists

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Sen. Jesse Helms says a lack of evidence of right-wing death squads in El Salvador and a meeting with that country's defeated conservative presidential hopeful Roberto D'Aubisson was enough for him.

"He (D'Aubisson) didn't strike me as being the kind of fella who would be connected with death squads," Helms said.

At a news conference Friday before a campaign dinner in Charlotte, the North Carolina Republican also said members of El Salvador's conservative ARENA Party would include "most, if not all, of the free enterprise folks in the city of Charlotte" if the party were in North Carolina.

In the recent presidential election, D'Aubisson was defeated by the Christian Democratic Party's Jose Napoleon Duarte and has been accused of connections to so-called death squads.

But Helms, who is seeking a third term against Democratic Gov. Jim Hunt, said he became convinced there were no death squads after meeting D'Aubisson for the first time last September in Hot Springs, Va.

Helms said intelligence agencies couldn't provide him with evidence of the death squads. He said Robert White, former President Jimmy Carter's Nicaraguan and Salvadoran ambassador, has made the only accusations of right-wing death squads.

White "orchestrated the overthrow of Nicaragua, turning it over to the communist Sandanistas, and then he tried to go over to El Salvador and do the same thing," Helms said. "He's the one constantly yelling about death squads, and there's no evidence to support it."

Helms said he didn't know who was responsible for the slayings attributed to the death squads.

Swale Wins Belmont Stakes

Swale Captures Belmont

NEW YORK (AP) — This time there were no excuses for Swale, the Kentucky Derby winner who finished seventh in the Preakness. The track was soft, his workouts were relaxed and he was rested.

On Saturday, Swale won the $516,700 Belmont Stakes by four lengths, giving trainer Woody Stephens and jockey Laffit Pincay Jr. their third straight victory in the final leg of the Triple Crown.

Stephens and Pincay, who became the first trainer or jockey to win three consecutive Belmonts this century, combined to win with Caveat in 1983 and Conquistador Cielo in 1982.

"The more you get, the sweeter it gets," said Stephens, the 70-year-old Hall of Famer who had his troubles this spring. Not only did he lose Devil's Bag, the winter book favorite for the Kentucky Derby with a pre-Derby injury, but he battled pneumonia which sidelined him for most of Derby week.

"He was going nice all the way, the pace was easy and I just didn't know how far he would go," said Stephens.

"He had excuses every time he lost," said Stephens. "Time between races always helps him. (The Preakness was three weeks ago). He worked faster than we liked him to in the Preakness. At Keeneland (for the Lexington Stakes) the track was too sloppy. I felt we would be all right for the Belmont.

"This is great medicine. I feel real good," he said. "It was nice to be the trainer of three."

Despite the sweltering 90-degree weather in this longest of the Triple Crown races, Swale equaled the fourth fastest Belmont in history with a time of 2:27 1-5 for the 1½ miles. Swale equaled the 1968 time of Stage Door Johnny. Secretariat set the Belmont record of 2:24 in 1973.

Swale took the lead shortly after the start and led the field of 10 other 3-year-olds the rest of the way in the richest Belmont ever.

"On the backside, he was very strong," said Pincay. "We weren't going to let anybody go by. I think he's the best 3-year-old in the country ... at the Preakness (where Swale finished seventh), the track was hard, and he didn't handle it. That's why we got beat.

"At the Preakness, he warmed up good, and today he warmed up good. In the stretch, I knew he had it. I knew I had a lot of horse. It was one of the easiest today. He was on the lead, and there was a slow pace. Everybody likes to have a horse like that," Pincay said.

Pine Circle, 25-1 shot, came between horses with a quarter of a mile to go and rallied to finish second, three lengths in front of Morning Bob, who was a head in front of Play On, the second choice.

Gate Dancer, the Preakness winner running without the drug Lasix, which he used in Kentucky and Maryland, finished out of the money. Lasix, a diuretic, is banned in New York.

The first quarter was run in 24 4-5, the half mile in 49 2-5, three quarters in 1:13 3-5 and the mile in 1:37 3-5.

Swale, who now has nine victories in 14 career starts, also turned in a second-place effort in the Lexington Stakes after winning the Florida Derby. Before that, he finished third in the Fountain of Youth after winning the Hutcheson Stakes.

The son of 1977 Triple Crown winner Seattle Slew, Swale was sent off at odds of 3-2 by the crowd of 47,369 and became the 10th horse to win the Kentucky Derby-Belmont double and the first since Bold Forbes in 1976.

Swale also became the 19th New York-based horse to win the Belmont in the past 23 years.

Play On, the Preakness runner-up sent off as the second choice, was first out of the gate, but Pincay put the dark bay colt in front after that.

"This horse can really run," said Pincay. "He's just not consistent. He doesn't like hard tracks and that's really why he ran the way he did (in the Preakness). I knew at the quarter pole we'd win.

"He broke super. It was a very slow pace. At the five-eighths pole somebody came close and I let him go again. Woody Stephens deserves a lot of credit for this," Pincay said.

Swale paid $5, $4.40 and $3.60. Pine Circle, ridden by Patrick Day, paid $15 and $7. Morning Bob, a supplemental entry at a cost of $32,500 since he was not nominated for the Belmont, paid $4.40.

Morning Bob, a 6-1 shot ridden by Jorge Velasquez, finished a head in front of Play On.

Completing the order of finish were Coax Me Chad, Gate Dancer, Silent King, Exattic, Romantic Tradition, Back Bay Barrister and Minstrel Star.

The winner's purse from the record gross purse also was a record — $358,500. It boosted Swale's career earnings to $1,790,341.

Play On, ridden by Jean-Luc Samyn, trailed Swale by 1½ lengths after a mile and by the same margin at the top of the stretch, with Gate Dancer running third. But Swale was in command and, by midstretch, built a three-length lead with Morning Bob second and Play On backing up to third.

Loblolly Stable's Pine Circle, who had finished sixth in the Derby and fifth in the Preakness, earned earned $113,674 for finishing second. Morning Bob, the Pennsylvania Derby winner owned by Michael Spielman and Richard Bonze, collected $62,004. Play On and Welcome Farm got $31,002.

All starters carried 126 pounds.

Swale had been overshadowed by stablemate Devil's Bag, but when Devil's Bag suffered a pre-Derby injury, Swale became Stephens' main horse.

The victory was the ninth in 14 starts for Swale, who has been out of the money only once in his career. Although a three-time stakes winner this year — the Hutcheson, Florida Derby and the Kentucky Derby — Swale has been inconsistent, failing to win after especially quick workouts.

Stephens blamed that as a factor in the Preakness loss.

On Thursday before the Belmont, Swale worked four furlongs in 48 4-5, which pleased Stephens, and he predicted the victory.

D. McDaniel won Belmonts in 1871, 1872 and 1873 with Harry Bassett, Joe Daniels and Springbok.

"It's a great feeling for three in a row...I know it's been a long time that anyone has ever done it," Stephens said.

Pincay became the second rider to win three consecutive Belmonts. James McLaughlin won aboard Forester in 1882, George Kinney in 1883, Panique in 1884 and then repeated the feat with Inspector B. in 1886, Hanover in 1887 and Sir Dixon in 1888.

Beck Takes Shot Lead Into Finale

HARRISON, N.Y. (AP) — Chip Beck, a frequent challenger but not yet a winner on the PGA Tour, takes a one-shot lead and some high hopes into Sunday's final round of the $500,000 Manufacturers Hanover Westchester Classic.

"I've spent a lifetime trying to get in this situation," said the 27-year-old Beck, who led through three rounds as recently as two weeks ago.

"All you can do is to think about playing good golf.

"I hope I can handle it."

Beck, the leader all the way in this event in the suburbs of New York, completed three trips over the hilly, 6,687-yard Westchester Country Club course in 202, 11 shots under par.

Jay Haas moved into second place with a 68 in the continuing muggy, hazy heat. For the third day in a row, the temperatures reached into the mid-90s. Haas, in a slump most of the season, will take a 203 total, 10 under par, into Sunday's final round of the chase for a $90,000 first prize.

"After the way I've played this year, it's a real pleasure to be in this position," Haas said.

Although Beck has not won, "he's been in the hunt before — he's not a rookie," said Haas.

"He led through three rounds at Muirfield (two weeks ago). He's been there. And he's playing good. We'll have to catch him," Haas said.

Tom Kite, who has finished in the top 10 in five of his last six starts, and Scott Simpson were another stroke back at 204. Kite had a no-bogey round of 68 and Simpson had a 70.

They appeared to be the only others in title contention. It was another two strokes back to Jim Dent, at 206 after a 66.

The group at 207 included Mark Lye, Gary McCord, Mark O'Meara and Loren Roberts. Lye had a66, McCord a 67, O'Meara and Roberts 70s.

South African veteran Gary Player, once within two strokes of the lead, backed off with a 38 over the last nine holes and finished with a 73. At 208, he was a distant six strokes back.

Beck, who started the day with a two-stroke lead, maintained that margin over the front nine, but saw it began to slip. On two occasions, Haas advanced to a share of the lead.

But Beck ran in a 35-foot birdie putt on the 14th. Haas got back in a share of the top spot with a 10-foot birdie on the 15th, then fell one behind with a bogey from a bunker on the 16th.

"A mediocre round of golf," said Beck. "I'm just fortunate nobody made a run at me."

Martina Coasts To Victory

PARIS (AP) — Martina Navratilova became only the fifth player in history to capture the elusive Grand Slam of tennis Saturday when she crushed defending champion Chris Evert Lloyd 6-3, 6-1 to win the women's singles title at the French Open championships.

With last year's Wimbledon, U.S. and Australian Open crowns already under her belt, the 27-year-old Czechoslovakian-born naturalized American joined an elite band of players to win the world's four most prestigious tournaments consecutively.

Only two other women, America's Maureen Connolly in 1953 and Australia's Margaret Court Smith in 1970, have accomplished the feat. Among the men, Don Budge won it in 1938 and Australia's Rod Laver did it twice, in 1962 and 1969.

If she wins the women's doubles final with Pam Shriver on Sunday, Navratilova will become only the second person to win the slam in both singles and doubles Smith teamed with fellow Australian Ken Fletcher to win all four mixed doubles titles in 1963.

On Sunday, John McEnroe will attempt to become the first American to win the French Open men's singles crown since 1955, when Tony Trabert won his second straight here on the slow red clay courts of Roland Garros Stadium. The top-seeded McEnroe will play Czechoslovakia's Ivan Lendl, who is seeking his first Grand Slam title in his fifth trip to a Grand Slam tournament final.

Two other championships were decided on Saturday. Yannick Noah and Henri Leconte became the first French pair since 1946 to win the men's doubles, defeating Czechoslovakia's Tomas Smid and Pavel Slozil 6-4, 2-6, 3-6, 6-3, 6-2, and American's Dick Stockton and Anne Smith captured the mixed doubles, downing Australians Anne Minter and Laurie Warder 6-2, 6-4.

Navratilova's crushing 63-minute victory over Lloyd was her second French open title — she also won here in 1982 — and her ninth Grand Slam tournament crown. She has won Wimbledon four times, the U.S. Open once and the Australian Open twice.

"I feel very proud to be among a very select group of tennis players," a jubilant Navratilova told the sun-drenched 17,000 capacity crowd after her victory on the Center Court at Roland Garros.

In addition to her winner's prize of 98,000, she collected a special $1 million bonus put up by the International Tennis Federation two years ago to the next Grand Slam winner.

When the new French champion turned up 45 minutes late — apparently held up by traffic after leaving the stadium — Budge said: "In my day, I would have been on time for a thousand bucks. Boy, things sure have changed, but I think it's great."

Navratilova went into the final with an awesome record. She had lost only two matches in two years and had dropped only one set — to Hana Mandlikova in the semifinals — on the way to the final here.

Lloyd, her great rival, has not beaten her since the Australian Open in 1982 and had taken only three sets off her in 10 meetings since.

The defending champion, herself trying for a place in the record books — a sixth women's singles title at the French — played well in the early stages and had three break points in the third game for a 2-1 lead. But instead, she quickly found herself 1-3 down and won only three more games in the match.

In the second set, Navratilova played some of the best tennis of her career. Serving powerfully and volleying cleanly, she wore down Lloyd with a stream of delicate drop shots that had her opponent scurrying in the heat towards the net.

Lloyd did not win a single point on her service and only seven in the entire set, five of them in the sixth game when she saved two match points and broke Navratilova's serve.

Serving to save her title, she fell behind 0-40 for the fourth time in the set and Navratilova put away her third match point with a volley into the open court.

"I said I didn't think I would be as nervous in the final and I wasn't," Navratilova said. "Once you get there, it's a little easier.

"I've still got the doubles to play and we're going for the slam in that as well, so I can't do too much celebrating tonight."

While Lloyd's challenge faded in the heat, the only real fight of the day came, literally, in the stands.

In the middle of the opening set, play was halted for over one minute when two men stood up and began exchanging blows before being restrained by other spectators.

Emory Is Ready For Any Challenge

DURHAM, N.C. (AP) — East Carolina head football Coach Ed Emory polished off a slab of Shoney's hot fudge cake the other day pondering the Pirates' schedule for this fall and for falls to come.

And even as he put away the last bite, Emory knew he couldn't have his cake and eat it, too.

"They schedule 'em, I play 'em," he said.

Auburn. Miami. Penn State. Pittsburgh. LSU.

Money. Recognition. National exposure. Prestige. Membership in the College Football Association.

Big-name opposition and big-time football programs often go hand in hand, and when you're not there yet, when you're still on the road, an aspirant, you have to dig the trenches before you can jump in, go to war, hold your own, overcome.

So it is at East Carolina, home of the near-miracle workers of 1983, a football team that came ever so close to perhaps the most extraordinary Cinderella story ever in collegiate football.

The Pirates — or Bucs as they're fondly called — lost three games last season, all in Florida, all in dramatic fashion. They could have — and according to Emory, should have — won each game. But they lost, to Florida State, Florida and eventual national champion Miami.

Had the Bucs won more than a goodly measure of respect in those games, the football program at East Carolina would have been ahead of schedule. There would be bowl money to spend, national exposure galore. But as it is, more is needed to deliver the Bucs to that lofty rank they seek, and one of the tools they're using to get there is scheduling heavyweights.

Emory says he doesn't cringe when Dr. Ken Karr, ECU's athletic director, walks into his office — perhaps with yet another proposal to play a "big-time" team — because that's the way to the top.

"I haven't had much input into scheduling for the last four-and-a-half years," Emory said. "Dr. Karr

Bell Clears 19 Feet In Vault

SAN JOSE, Calif. (AP) — Earl Bell became the first American to clear 19 feet outdoors in the pole vault, clearing 19 feet, ¼ inch Saturday in the USA-Mobil Outdoor Track and Field Championships.

Billy Olson was the first American to surpass the magic 19-foot barrier, soaring over that height during the 1984 indoor, with a best of 19-1½.

Bell, formerly of Arkansas State University, first set the American record of 18-7¼ in 1976 while he was a junior at the school.

The present world record in the pole vault is 19-3½, set last week by Sergey Bubka of the Soviet Union.

Earlier Saturday, Judi Brown shattered the American record in the women's 400-meter intermediate hurdles and Leslie Maxie cracked the world junior mark in the same event in finishing 1-2.

Right after that dazzling performance, Valerie Brisco-Hooks smashed the American record in the women's 400-meter dash with a sizzling clocking of 49.83, putting her in ninth place on the all-time world list.

Brown, the 1983 Pan American Games champion and the 1983 NCAA titleholder while at Michigan State, was clocked in a sparkling 54.99 seconds in erasing the American record of 55.69 set last year by Lori McCauley in the high altitude of Colorado Springs, Colo.

Maxie, the sensational 17-year-old from Mills High School in Millbrae, Calif., lowered the world junior record to 55.20. The previous mark of 55.61 was established by Radostina Shtereva of Bulgaria this year.

Maxie had broken her American junior record of 56.08 in winning her semifinal heat, but she couldn't capture the title in the final against the long-striding, smooth-running Brown.

"I had a dream (Friday night) I'd run 54.8," said Brown, "but I had no idea I'd get near it. I was awre of Leslie (Maxie) and knew that if I didn't run the race I was capable of, she would beat me."

The fans at San Jose City College got a big diaappointment in the men's 400 hurdles when Edwin Moses, the world record holder and 1976 Olympic champion, withdrew from the final without explanation.

If Moses had run and won, he would have extended his winning winning streak to 100 overall, including 89 in finals.

The women continued to dominate the meet, as Kim Gallagher scored a distance double in the women's 800 and 1,500 meters, and Merlene Ottey completed a sprint double in the 100 and 200.

Gallagher, who will be 20 Monday, first won the 1,500 in 4:08.08, surging past Francie Larrieu-Smith with about 130 meters remaining and pulling away for the triumph.

Then, about 50 minutes later, she came back to capture the 800 in 1:59.87, the fifth best performance ever by an American. Again, she came from behind, this time with about 100 meters left.

It was the first women's 800-1,500 double in the national championships since 1965, when Marie Mulder took both events. That year was the first time the 1,500 was contested in the meet.

Ottey, the winner of the women's 100 Friday, sped to victory in the 200 Saturday in 22.20, making her the second consecutive doubler in those events.

Evelyn Ashford did it last year for the fourth time, her previous doubles coming in 1977, 1979 and 1981. Ashford did not enter either the 100 or 200 this year.

Earlier, controversy surrounded two field event finals, as Jud Logan won the hammer throw title and Curt Ransford captured the men's javelin crown.

The controversies, however, did not involve the winners. They surrounded Ed Burke, the fourth-place finisher in the hammer throw, and Mike Barnett, who wound up fifth in the javelin.

In the hammer throw, Burke, the former American record holder, fouled on his first two attempts in the trials, then appeared to be distracted when he fouled on his third try.

And he protested.

The head judge of the event upheld the protest, and Burke was given another throw. On that attempt, he uncorked a legal throw that put him into the final.

Usually only eight men make the final. But the Games Committee decided to include Ken Flax, the thrower who would have been bumped by Burke's inclusion.

After Logan, also a former holder of the American record, had won the event with a heave of 240 feet, 6 inches, all the throwers except Flax signed a petition that the head judge be overruled and Burke's fourth-place mark of 231-1 not be allowed.

The petition was denied by a three-man committee of meet officials, and the final results stood.

"That (controversy) shouldn't happen in a national championship meet," said Logan.

"If the crowd was jeering, that's part of the game. I think if it had happened anywhere else, it wouldn't have been allowed. It's like he had a home court advantage."

The 44-year-old Burke owns the Los Gatos Athletic Club, located in a suburb of San Jose. He graduated from San Jose State in 1962.

"The controversy didn't affect me," said Logan, "but I know I would have been very displeased if he had displaced me. I feel some guys had legitimate gripes.

"I know this will drive a lot of guys to be after his skin in the olympic Trials (beginning June 16 at Los Angeles)."

Kelly Aims For Passing TD Mark

By The Associated Press

Houston pass-master Jim Kelly has a chance to stand alone as a quarterback, and it's likely he will after Sunday's United States Football League game with the Chicago Blitz.

The Gamblers' quarterback already has 36 touchdown passes to tie the professional football record set by George Blanda of the Houston Oilers of the old American Football League in 1961. He needs only one scoring pass in the regular season's final three games to set a new standard.

"Jim Kelly is very good," said Chicago Coach Marv Levy. "He's outstanding. The (offensive) system has helped him."

Levy feels that it will be a tough day for his Chicago team, which lost 45-36 in their last meeting with the high-powered Gamblers and are barely in the hunt for a playoff spot.

"That (last) game with Houston developed into a track meet, and we just can't let that happen this time," said Levy. 'It's very difficult to cope with a very cohesive complementary offense."

The surprising Gamblers, 10-5, lead the Central Division race over the Michigan Panthers, the defending USFL champions.

Michigan played at Oakland in one of Saturday's two USFL games. In the other, Tampa Bay played host to Memphis.

In Sunday's other games, Washington visits Birmingham, New Orleans is at New Jersey and Los Angeles visits Oklahoma. San Antonio plays at Pittsburgh Monday night.

In action Friday night, Denver dropped out of first place in the Pacific Division, losing 21-19 to the Philadelphia Stars, and Arizona routed Jacksonville 45-14.

Along with Houston, Philadelphia, Birmingham and Tampa Bay have already clinched playoff spots.

With an 11-4 record, the Generals can add to that list with just one victory in their last three games, while their Sunday opponents are longshots for a playoff appearance. For the 8-7 Breakers to make the playoffs, they need to win their last three games, while the Generals lose their last three.

Both teams have been in slumps lately.

"When we went 5-0 (at the start of the year) we played mostly expansion teams," said New Orleans Coach Dick Coury. "Maybe it gave us a false sense of security. We've hurt ourselves with mistakes (in the last 10 games.)"

Washington has won only two of its 15 games, but one of those was a 31-17 decision over the Generals on May 11. Birmingham, 12-3, has not played well against the run of late, and Coach Rollie Dotsch expects the Federals "to test us with the run.'

Oklahoma, meanwhile, is reeling from seven straight losses, as well as the loss of quarterback Doug Williams to injury. With Williams out, the Outlaw-Express game will feature a duel of rookie quarterbacks, Rick Jonhson for Oklahoma and Steve Young for Los Angeles.

DA Now Looking At UTEP Program

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — The University of Texas at El Paso's track program, already under investigation by the NCAA, now will be looked at by the El Paso County district attorney's office for possible criminal violations, District Attorney Steve Simmons says.

Simmons said Friday that a report from three attorneys investigating the track program showed enough evidence to merit a probe by his office.

He declined to specify which areas of Texas law may have been violated, but said investigators from the El Paso Police Department would help in the probe.

Possible irregularities in UTEP's track program first surfaced in early April when head Coach Larry Heidebrecht abruptly resigned amid allegations that he may have kept some reimbursement money from track meet sponsors that was intended for the school.

The NCAA began an investigation of its own shortly after the allegations were made public.

Heidebrecht has declined to comment on the allegations or the investigations and he could not be reached for comment Saturday by The Associated Press. No one answered his home telephone.

The university sued the former coach in late May, asking a county court-at-large judge to order Heidebrecht to reveal records of any money he received from track meet sponsors.

UTEP said in its lawsuit that it provided Heidebrecht with travel expenses for athletes competing at various track meets across the country. The lawsuit said the former coach was supposed to give the school any money reimbursed to him by sponsors of the track meets for the athletes' expenses.

UTEP is asking the court to order Heidebrecht to provide an accounting of amounts owed, to pay any sums due to the university and to pay the school's attorneys' fees and court costs.

Heidebrecht, 34, was hired in August 1982 and took over a UTEP program that had produced 18 NCAA championshps since 1974.

Flanagan, Lowenstein Pace O's Win

BALTIMORE (AP) — Mike Flanagan pitched a seven-hitter in wilting 92-degree weather and John Lowenstein rapped a two-run, bases-loaded single as the Baltimore Orioles defeated the Detroit Tigers 4-0 Saturday.

It was the ninth loss in 15 games for the slumping Tigers, but they enjoyed a five-game lead in the AL East pending a night game involving second-place Toronto. The Orioles have won 10 of 13 to pull within 9½ games.

Flanagan, 5-4, retired 13 of the first 14 Detroit batters before Darrell Evans and Rusty Kuntz singled with one out in the fifth inning. Lowenstein made a fine catch of a liner by Tom Brookens to left to end the threat.

Detroit starter Juan Berenguer, 3-4, was felled by a deflected liner off the right side of his face just before yielding an RBI single to Cal Ripken Jr. for the first Baltimore run in the third.

After issuing a one-out walk to Ripken in the sixth, Berenguer was bothered by leg cramps and was replaced with an 0-2 count on Eddie Murray.

But reliever Aurelio Lopez walked Murray and after a checked-swing single by Wayne Gross loaded the bases, Lowenstein's hit made it 3-0. Rich Dauer added an RBI single with two outs.

Rick Dempsey walked with one out in the third before Berenguer deflected Al Bumbry's liner and fell face-down on the mound after being struck.Dempsey reached second on the play and scored on Ripken's two-out single through the middle.

Seattle 7

CLEVELAND (AP) — The Cleveland Indians scored six runs in the first inning with the help of a sloppy Seattle defense and held on for an 8-7 victory over the Mariners as shortstop Julio Franco participated in a major league record-tying five double plays.

Reliever Ernie Camacho came on to quell a Seattle rally in the eighth inning with the help of a double play and Steve Farr, the sixth Cleveland pitcher, finished the game for his first major league save, preserving the victory for George Frazier, 3-2.

Thornton scored when left fielder Steve Henderson dropped Carmen Castillo's line drive for an error, and Brook Jacoby loaded the bases with a single. Jerry Willard walked to force in a run and Tony Bernazard followed with a sacrifice fly. Butler then capped the inning and knocked out Mark Langston with an RBI single.

Larry Milbourne's double and Bob Kearney's sacrifice fly drove in runs to cut Seattle's deficit to 6-2 in the second, but Cleveland got those two back in the bottom of the inning on Castillo's RBI single and a passed ball by Kearney.

Phil Bradley opened Seattle's third with a single and rode home when Al Davis slugged a home run, his 14th. The Mariners added two more runs in the inning on an infield out by Milbourne and an RBI single by Kearney.

Seattle rallied to pull within 8-7 on Jack Perconte's RBI single off reliever Tom Waddell in the eighth inning.

Franco's performance in the field was the 48th time in major league hisotry that a player had participated in five double plays in a game.

Chicago 8

CHICAGO (AP) — Greg Luzinski's second grand slam in as many games Saturday tied a major league record and powered the surging Chicago White Sox to an 8-4 triumph over the Minnesota Twins.

Luzinski's bases-loaded homer, the seventh of his career, came in the seventh inning after Harold Baines had walked to force in the tie-breaking run. By hitting his second slam in two games, Luzinski tied a record held by nine other major leaguers, starting with Babe Ruth.

The victory was the fourth straight for the White Sox and their sixth in the last seven games.

John Butcher, 4-4, took the loss.

With the scored tied 3-3, Scott Fletcher opened the seventh for Chicago with a single and Julio Cruz walked. Rudy Law sacrificed and Pete Filson replaced Butcher and walked Carlton Fisk intentionally. Filson then walked Baines to force in the lead run and Luzinski greeted reliever Mike Walters with his third homer of the season.

The Twins took a 1-0 lead in the first when Mickey Hatcher drew a walk with the bases loaded after Kirby Puckett beat out a bunt, Tim Teufel doubled and Randy Bush was given an intentional walk.

Chicago scored three runs in the bottom of the first. Fisk doubled and went to third on a single by Baines. With two outs, Greg Walker doubled both runners home and Walker scored when third baseman Gaetti threw wild past first on Tom Paciorek's grounder.

Dave Engle doubled in the Minnesota third and scored on a single by Brunansky and the Twins tied it in the fifth when Teufel was hit by a pitch, went to second on an infield out and scored on a single Bush.

Dodgers Rally To Ease By Braves, 4-3

LOS ANGELES (AP) — R.J Reynolds' double with the bases loaded in the bottom of the ninth inning gave the Los Angeles Dodgers a come-from-behind 4-3 victory over the Atlanta Braves Saturday.

The Dodgers entered the ninth trailing 3-2. But after Braves reliever Steve Bedrosian, 4-2, struck out Pedro Guerrero to start the ninth, Mike Scioscia singled and pinch-hitter Terry Whitfield doubled pinch-runner Steve Sax to third. Bedrosian walked pinch-hitter Rick Monday intentionally before Reynolds delivered the game-winning hit to right that broke the relief pitcher's scoreless string at 19 2-3 innings.

Winner Fernando Valenzuela, 6-6, struck out nine batters to regain the National League strikeout lead with 93.

The Braves jumped to a 2-0 lead, the eighth time in nine games on the current home stand that the Dodgers have trailed in the first inning.

A single by Rafael Ramirez, one of his three hits, a double by Randy Johnson and a balk by by Valenzuela produced the Braves' first run. Johnson then scored on Murphy's groundout.

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Joel Youngblood blasted a three-run homer with two outs in the bottom of the ninth inning, rallying the San Francisco Giants to a 6-5 triumph over the Houston Astros Saturday.

The winning rally started with two outs. Al Oliver lined a single and when the count went to 2-0 on Jeff Leonard, reliever Bill Dawley replaced Frank DiPino. Dawley, 3-4, then completed the walk to Leonard before Youngblood belted a 1-1 pitch to right for his fifth homer of the year.

Frank Williams, 3-0, who retired the side in the ninth, was the winner.

The Astros had scored twice in the seventh, taking advantage of two infield misplays, to break a 3-3 tie. Craig Reynolds led off the seventh with a single and went to third on Enos Cabell's bloop single. Cabell stole second and Reynolds scored when second baseman Brad Wellman failed to handle catcher Steve Nicosia's throw for an error.

Ray Knight doubled to right with one out, sending Cabell to third. Tony Scott was then walked intentionally to load the bases and Gary Lavelle replaced reliever Jeff Cornell.

With the infield drawn in, pinch hitter Jerry Mumphrey grounded to shortstop Johnnie LeMaster, who bobbled the ball and had to throw to first, enabling Cabell to score.

Jason Wing singled to load the bases and Moore reached on an error, scoring Fickling. Brewintgon then finished off the scoring in the inning with a grand-slam homer.

Sportworld got five more in the third with Moore hitting a three-run shot, while four scored in the fifth.

Brewinton and Tye Fickling each had three hits for Sportworld while Wing and Moore each had two. No one had more than one for the Lions.

First Federal.....14
Moose.....3

Keith Corbett tossed a three-hitter as First Federal rolled to a 14-3 victory over the Moose in Tar Heel Little League action Saturday.

First rederal scored twice in the first, then pushed over eight in the third to put it out of reach.

Michael Hollis and Eric Smith both walked to open the third and Mike Cox singled. Drew Johnson reached on an error, scoring Hollis, and two more scored on a double by Lee Watson. Corbett doubled, driving in Johnson and Watson, and then Corbett scored on a single by Steven Meeks. Thomas Adams walked and Hollis reached on a fielder's choice that got Meeks. Smikth singled in Adams, and Rives Mann singled to score Hollis with the final run.

First Federal added one in the fourth and three in the fifth, two of those on a homer by Cox. The Moose got two in the fourth and one in the sixth.

Carroll & Assoc.....5

Jerry Dancy banged out three hits in leading Wellcome to an 8-5 Tar Heel Little League victory over Carroll & Associates yesterday.

C&A took the lead with one in the top of the first and added four in the second for a 5-0 lead. A three-run homer by Michael Sutton sparked the second.

But Wellcome came back with one in the bottom of the second and scored three more in the third to cut the lead to 5-4.

Then, in the fourth, Wellcome added four more to take the game. Jason Browder led off with a walk and Josh Potter singled. Scott Byrd also singled and a hit by Joe Norris scored Browder. Dancy followed with a double, driving in all three runners to give Wellcome the win.

Byrd added two hits for Wellcome, while Travis Williamson had two to lead Carroll.

has done it, but on a couple of occasions he has asked me about it. He did ask me about the LSU game in 1985 because that'll be in December, and I said, 'Well, that'll be good because we'll be going to a bowl game in 1985 anyhow. So go ahead and schedule it.'"

In addition to LSU in 1985, East Carolina's other noted opponents, including recent additions, are Pitt, N.C. State and South Carolina this season, Miami, Penn State and Auburn in 1985; West Virginia in 1986, Florida State again in 1987 and Illinois in 1987.

"Everybody always thought I was commiting suicide, anyhow," he said. "I've taken the challenges all my life. God knows. And I guarantee you, when you wake up in the morning with an outlook on the world, you better have a productive day. You better make it productive. But I think we've got a chance, even with four past national champions on the schedule.

"Some of our coaches might get starry-eyed, but he (Karr) hasn't scheduled anything that I've backed off from, that I've said, 'Hey, what are you doing?' I think we've scheduled people we've got to play, that'll bring the money and the recruits. We're gambling that we'll be successful, but I think we'll be able to compete with those people.

"That's what you want. You want the best, the most enthusiastic. Why mess around playing in the minor leagues when you can play in the major leagues," Emory added. "I think last year we could have competed against any football team in America — defensively, offensively and kicking. And that's our goal, to compete with the best.

"Penn State? they don't make me nervous, or LSU or Auburn. We're not going to Auburn just to get the payroll. We're going down there to win."

But Emory adds, "we're not going to slip up on nobody no more, neither."

This season's schedule also will be top-heavy with road games — only four in Greenville and seven away. "But I think this will be the last year we'll have to do that," Emory said. "I think next year we'll be five at home and six on the road, and some years in the future we'll be six at home and five on the road." The Pirates still have one date to fill in 1985.

Another factor in the recent scheduling splurge, Emory said, was to enhance East Carolina's position with the CFA, which voted last weekend to accept ECU — an independent in football — and two other universities into its ranks.

Each school needed 60 percent of the membership votes to be accepted, and one of the conditions of membership is for the school to play 80 percent of games against other CFA members.

"We're not protected by a conference," Emory said. "We have to play 80 percent of our games against Division I schools. That was the only negative thing for East Carolina about the CFA. A team like Wake Forest or Duke can play six, five conference teams, and then play six double-A teams and their conference protects them."

Yes, Emory said, by scheduling such teams as Auburn, LSU and Penn State, East Carolina also could count on a number of votes.

"That was part of it," Emory said. "The only thing we had negative was we weren't playing 80 percent CFA members. So this was one of those things. We had no alternative, and to get the votes, we had to play them. Florida State and Miami are independent CFA members, and to get the Southeastern Conference voting for you, you get LSU and Auburn. And Penn State doesn't want to play a Division AA team.

"I'm not saying that East Carolina campaigned for votes, but I think, in a way, you have to be.

"We want to play a national schedule. We want to win a national championship," Emory added. "And the only way to win is to play them guys. Maybe we're gambling like heck, and that's why it's so tough to be a graduate of East Carolina and be the coach, because what's best for the university sometimes isn't best for the coach."

But, as Emory said, CFA membership wasn't the lone objective in scheduling tougher opponents.

"We wanted CFA membership, we wanted to play a national schedule, we wanted an opportunity to make a great deal of money and we wanted an opportunity for national exposure," he said.

Emory is relentless in pursuit of excellence for the ECU program, and he said he believes the 1984 season will be crucial to its goals.

The team will be inexperienced at many positions, and the squad he hopes to field in 1985 and 1986 will be built on the record of 1984.

"It's the year that's so important," Emory said, "because we have to hang in. And I guarantee you, when we line up in 1985, I don't think there'll be a magazine in the country that won't say we've got the toughest schedule in college football."

That schedule includes Penn State, Auburn, N.C. State and LSU on the road, and South Carolina, Tulsa and Miami at Ficklen Stadium.

"We're trying to build an army of fans," Emory said. "We're trying to get everybody, 2½-million, 3-million people east of Interstate 95 to stay in the East and see football on Saturday afternoon."

Stabler May Call It Quits

GULF SHORES, Ala. (AP) — New Orleans Saints quarterback Kenny Stabler, planning to marry a former beauty queen who also marched at West Point, says he may take a vow to retire from football after this season.

"I've been trying to make plans for after football for a long time," Stabler said in a recent interview. "I've been trying to take the necessary steps to maintain a certain kind of lifestyle."

Stabler, 38, said he's taking the game "from year to year," but, he added, "right now, I'm leaning toward this being my last one. I really can't say that for sure, but I'm making plans in that direction."

Stabler, recovered from arthroscopic surgery on both knees last December, said that he'll marry Rose Molly Burch, 25, in a private ceremony at his residence on the Alabama Gulf Coast this Thursday.

Burch, of Mobile, a former Miss Alabama Universe, dropped out of West Point in 1976 because, she said, "I could hardly carry the rifle."

But she caught up with Stabler, twice divorced, after seeing him at a Gulf Shores restaurant about five months ago.

"We struck up a conversation. It's been a whirlwind situation," said Stabler, planning a gala wedding reception Friday night at the Riverview Hotel in Mobile.

Stabler, a former University of Alabama star and 15-year football veteran, said he's expecting Saints Coach Bum Phillips and jazz musician Al Hirt, among others, to attend.

Bird Paces Celts To 121-103 Win

BOSTON (AP) — In some games, he'd make crisp passes. In others, he'd grab rebounds in bunches. In all of them, he scored well. But Larry Bird never staged his usual dominant performance in the championship series.

Until Friday night.

While the Boston star finally was playing his complete game, the Celtics, for the first time in the National Basketball Association finals, played theirs and dumped the Los Angeles Lakers, 121-103.

After charging back from a 2-1 deficit to grab a 3-2 lead, the Celtics can capture an unprecedented 15th NBA crown Sunday in Game 6 in Los Angeles. A seventh game, if necessary, would be here Tuesday night.

"We've got to go out there with the intensity we've had the last two ballgames," said Boston's M.L. Carr. "This team is hungry."

Bird feasted on the Lakers Friday night while the players roasted in temperatures that reached 92 degrees at courtside.

He had made just 41.8 percent of his field-goal attempts in the first four games but connected on 15 of 20 Friday night and led all players with 34 points and 17 rebounds.

"Eventually, we all want to be great-granddaddys, sit around the fireside and tell what we did," said Carr. "Obviously, Larry's going to be the best granddaddy of all."

"The man who made the difference is Larry Bird," said Los Angeles Coach Pat Riley. "He does whatever he has to do to win."

Bird, who scored the winning basket with 16 seconds left in Boston's 129-125 victory in Game 4 Wednesday night, said, "I've been scoring well but I've been missing shots. It was bound to come around for me."

And for the team.

"We're finally doing the things we wanted to do throughout the series," Bird added.

The Celtics enjoyed a 51-37 rebounding advantage, had their best shooting game of the series and kept the Lakers from exercising their devastating fastbreak.

"This is the first game overall where we played our game," said Boston guard Dennis Johnson, who had 22 points, six assists and three steals.

"The slow tempo affected our game," said James Worthy, who topped the Lakers with 22 points.

Boston led 55-53 at halftime and started the third quarter with a 13-3 spurt capped by Bird's second three-point field goal to take a 68-56 lead. But Los Angeles got the next nine points to slash the lead to 68-65.

The Celtics countered that with an 8-2 burst midway through the third quarter that made the score 76-67. The lead never dipped below seven points after that.

Boston hit 51.7 percent of its shots, while Los Angeles made just 42.8 percent of its field-goal attempts. It was the first time in the finals that the Lakers' accuracy dipped below 51 percent and only the third time in 19 playoff games that they didn't connect on at least half their shots.

"We did a better job of running the offense," said Boston Coach K.C. Jones. "The shots had been there all series, but we haven't been patient. The last two games we've really run the offense well and looked for the open man."

The Lakers' best two players had problems. Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, the NBA's all-time leading scorer, hit just seven of his 25 shots and scored 19 points. Earvin "Magic" Johnson connected on three of nine and managed a series-low 10 points.

"We tried to be conscious of getting back on defense," said Jones. "We tried to put pressure on 'Magic' all over the court and tried to tire him out. With the heat and the intensity of the game that kind of defense can take a toll on you."

"My shot wasn't there. I played poorly," admitted Abdul-Jabbar, who said he was affected by the heat.

"I wasn't absorbing enough oxygen and was having trouble breathing throughout the game," he said. "It was like being in a steambath with all your clothes on and doing 100 pushups and then running up and down."

"We knew te heat was there and we didn't want to use it as an excuse," said Carr.

"We didn't run because we didn't rebound, and the Celtics were getting back," said Los Angeles forward Kurt Rambis.

Jamesville Topples Hayesville For Title

JAMESVILLE — What started out as a tight game suddenly became a run-away Friday afternoon as Jamesville High School romped to a 26-6 victory over Hayesville in the final game of the State 1-A championship series, clinching the state title.

Jamesville swept the series in just two games, winning the Thursday night opener, 12-1.

Both teams pushed over two runs in the first inning, as Hayesville gave signs of not letting the Bullets run away with it again. But their hopes were short lived as Jamesville came back to score ten times in the second before being retired.

That made it 12-2 and Hayesville never got back on track.

"Our guys really played great this weekend," Coach Jerry Ange said. "They were ready after getting beat (by Hayesville there) last year. They played two outstanding games."

Jamesville, serving as the visiting team in the game, struck first with two runs in the top of the first. Matthew Moore tripled and scored on a Greg Hardison three-bagger. Richie Ange then brought in Hardison with a single.

Hayesville came right back to even it with two in the bottom of the frame. Mike Smith and Glenn Matheson both singled and moved up on a passed ball. They scored when Mike Parker singled.

But then came the second and the Bullets put the game out of reach. Earl Bowen opened with a walk and Whit Brown singled. Pee Wee Groover's sacrifice bunt was relayed to second, but failed to get anyone, loading the bases. Moore then reached on an error, scoring Bowen. Hardison walked, scoring Brown and Ange singled to drive in Groover and Moore. Hardison scored on a sacrifice fly by Rusty Holliday.

Terry Perry singled in Ange and Kevin Perry walked. Bowen reached on an error, loading the bases again. But Brown quickly cleared all but one, hitting a triple. Groover singled, but Brown had to hold up at third, scoring when Moore hit a sacrifice fly with the tenth run of the inning.

Jamesville went on to add four each in the fourth and fifth, one in the sixth and five in the seventh.

Hayesville picked up single runs in the fourth and sixth and scored twice in the fifth.

Ange led the Jamesville hitting with four in six trips, driving in six runs. Brown and Holliday each had two hits, and each drove in four runs. A total of 16 players — the entire roster — played for the Bullets.

And the Bullets will return nearly all of the players off the championship team, too. Only Moore and Holliday graduate. "That's going to be a couple of big gaps for us to fill," Ange said. "Matthew played a good defensive center field for us, and his bat was a big one for us too. Rusty (16-0 this year) lost only one game the last two years, that to Hayesville up there last year.

"But we do have seven juniors in the starting lineup who will be back next year and can do the job. We just have to strengthen our pitching staff a little bit."

The championship was marred, however, when a fight erupted after the game. Ange said that both Holliday and Terry Perry had to be taken to the hospital for treatment, and that Holliday missed his graduation exercises because of it. Both were released after treatment.

"I was really disappointed in (Hayesville's) lack of sportsmanship," Ange said. "It was a disappointing finish to our season to have them act like that after our kids played their hearts out," the coach said.

He said the team would be honored in the near future with a dinner and awards ceremony.

Trammell Sparks Detroit Victory

By The Associated Press

Following a pattern that started late last season, the Orioles disappointed a festive crowd of 50,361 Friday night by dropping a 3-2 decision to the Detroit Tigers.

"We've been struggling to get guys in from scoring position," said Detroit's Alan Trammell, whose sacrifice fly in the seventh inning capped a two-run rally that resulted in victory.

The triumph pushed Detroit's lead in the American League East to 5½ games over Toronto, which lost to New York 4-3 in 11 innings, and 10 games over the Orioles.

In other AL games, Boston bopped Milwaukee 11-3, Texas smacked Oakland 8-4, Chicago slammed Minnesota 6-1, Cleveland held off Seattle 4-3 and California at Kansas City was rained out.

Last season, on their way to the AL East title, the Orioles lost the first games of key matchups in New York and Detroit before coming back to sweep the remainder of each series. In the AL Championship Series, they lost the first game to Chicago and then rallied to win three straight. And in the World Series, Baltimore lost Game 1 to Philadelphia before rallying to win four straight.

Last weekend, the Orioles got mauled by the Tigers before coming back to win the final two games in Detroit.

Baltimore and Detroit play today and a double-header Sunday and then do not meet again until September.

Asked if the next three games were important, Baltimore Manager Joe Altobelli said, "Sure they are, and they would have even if we had won this one."

Detroit won the game in the seventh when Storm Davis, 6-2, walked Dave Bergman on a 3-2 pitch with one out and then Howard Johnson doubled. Right fielder Jim Dwyer misplayed the ball for an error, allowing Bergman to score and Johnson to reach third. Trammell then lofted his sacrifice fly.

Johnson's double came on the first pitch after the Memorial Stadium scoreboard flashed a message that the Baltimore Blast had won the Major Indoor Soccer League championship, which got a roar from the crowd.

"It was bad timing," Altobelli said of the message. "They should have waited until the inning was over."

Milt Wilcox, 7-3, won for just the fourth time in 16 career decisions against the Orioles. Willie Hernandez pitched the final two innings — he struck out pinch-hitter Benny Ayala with two runners on to end the eighth — for his fifth save.

Yankees 4, Blue Jays 3

Toronto's 19-game winning streak in one-run decisions ended when Steve Kemp's hard grounder took a bad hop and went for an RBI-single with two outs in the bottom of the 11th inning.

Blue Jays reliever Jim Acker retired the first two Yankees in the 11th before Dave Winfield beat out an infield single, extending his hitting streak to 15 games, and then stole second. Kemp's smash skipped in front of second baseman Damaso Garcia and went over his head, driving in Winfield.

Red Sox 11, Brewers 3

Jim Rice keyed a 15-hit attack with two homers and a single as he drove in five runs at Fenway Park.

He belted a two-run homer in the first inning, delivered an RBI-single to snap a 3-3 tie during a four-run third and blasted his 10th homer of the season, a two-run shot, in the fourth.

Wade Boggs also contributed three hits, including a triple, while Tony Armas smacked his 14th home run and a single.

Rangers 8, A's 4

Pete O'Brien drove in six runs with some timely hitting as he cracked two two-run doubles and a two-run single.

O'Brien put Texas ahead 2-0 in the first inning with his first double, singled home two runs to break a 2-2 tie in the fifth and doubled again in the sixth.

White Sox 6, Twins 1

Chicago put the game away quickly in the first inning as Dave Stegman led off with a triple and Scott Fletcher and Tom Paciorek drew walks from Frank Viola to load the bases.

Greg Luzinski then blasted a grand slam, making it 4-0. It was Luzinski's second home run of the season and his sixth career grand slam, his first since 1979 when he played for Philadelphia.

Phils Sweep Pirates; Braves Fall

By The Associated Press

The Philadelphia Phillies ended a four-game losing streak with a double-header sweep. The Chicago Cubs lost their third in a row. Atlanta finally lost for the first time this month. And San Diego got back on the winning track as the National League's division races tightened up.

By sweeping Pittsburgh 5-4 and 2-1 with the help of unlikely hero Kiko Garcia, the Phillies pulled into a tie with the Cubs in the NL East. The Cubs lost 5-4 at St. Louis. A 4-1 victory over Montreal pulled the New York Mets within a game of the division co-leaders.

In the NL West, the Braves saw a nine-game winning streak end with a 5-3 loss at Los Angeles. Tim Lollar pitched his first shutout in more than two years, equalling a career high with 12 strikeouts, as San Diego beat Cincinnati 6-0 to pull within one-half game of Atlanta. The Dodgers are 2½ back.

Phillies 5-2, Pirates 4-1

Garry Maddox hit a two-run homer in the opener, and Garcia, hitless in 10 previous at-bats this season, went 4-for-4 in the nightcap as the Phillies extended Pittsburgh's losing streak to five games.

Garcia started at third base in both games in place of Mike Schmidt, who has a sore wrist. He was 0-for-3 in the first game and said afterward, "I was starting to wonder if I was ever going to get a hit this season."

Garcia drove in one of Philadelphia's two runs in the second game to back the combined eight-hit pitching of Kevin Gross, 2-1, and Al Holland, who had a save in each game for 12 this season. Gross worked 7 1-3 innings.

Jerry Koosman, 5-6, worked 6 2-3 innings to win the opener. Glenn Wilson and Sixto Lezcano homered for Philadelphia and rookie Benny Distefano homered for Pittsburgh.

Cardinals 5, Cubs 4

Chicago's relief pitching failed as the Cardinals scored four runs in the seventh inning to erase a 4-1 Cubs lead and win their fifth straight game. Tim Stoddard, relieving Warren Brusstar, walked four batters in the inning, forcing in the tying and winning runs.

"When you stink, you stink," Stoddard said, adding, "I'll never ask to be taken out. I don't care if they hit six homers in a row."

The Cardinals got their first run of the seventh off Brusstar when Art Howe singled, Andy Van Slyke doubled and Ozzie Smith hit an RBI-grounder. Brusstar left after Darrell Porter drove in a second run with a single, and Stoddard then walked Ken Oberkfell and Lonnie Smith to load the bases. A walk to Tommy Herr tied the score, and when George Hendrick walked, for his league-leading ninth game-winning RBI, the go-ahead run scored.

Mets 4, Expos 1

Ed Lynch, 6-1, checked Montreal on five hits through seven innings, and the Expos committed four errors as the Mets won their fourth straight to move within a game of the NL East co-leaders. Doug Sisk worked the final two innings to complete the six-hitter.

Hubie Brooks and Mike Fitzgerald drove in runs in the second, aided by an error by Expos starter Steve Rogers, 2-5. Terry Francona committed an error in the third that contributed to the Mets other two runs.

Dodgers 5, Braves 3

R.J. Reynolds hit a bases-loaded single with two out in the Dodgers seventh to snap a 3-3 tie and end a winning streak that equaled the second-longest of the season in the majors. The Phillies had a 10-game winning streak in May, and Detroit had two nine-game winning streaks in the American League.

Mike Marshall and Ken Landreaux homered for the Dodgers, and Dale Murphy and Gerald Perry hit homers for the Braves. Murphy has 14 to lead the league.

Reynold's game-winning hit came off Gene Garber, but Len Barker, 4-6, was tagged with the loss. Bob Welch, 5-6, got the victory with two innings of relief help from Pat Zachry, who earned his first save.

Padres 6, Reds 0

Tim Lollar not only pitched well, getting his first shutout since May 9, 1982, but he also singled home two runs in San Diego's four-run third inning. The two-run single gave Lollar, who is hitting .321, 12 RBI, setting a club record for pitchers.

"Forty to fifty percent of my pitches are right down the pipe," Lollar said. "I just throw it hard and let them try to hit it. Just put down a sign and let me throw it."

Giants 5, Astros 4

Joel Youngblood hit a two-run homer, and Chili Davis and Jeff Leonard each hit solo homers for the Giants. Youngblood homered in the second and Davis hit his in the third to give the Giants a 3-0 lead.

Leonard's homer in the sixth gave San Francisco a 5-3 lead, and, after Houston pulled with one on Jerry Mumphrey's sacrifice fly in the seventh, Greg Minton pitched two scoreless innings to earn his third save.

Wachovia held a 3-1 lead after four innings, but Coke took the lead with five runs in the bottom of the fifth.

Kelly, Scott Davis and King drove in a pair of runs each, with King's two-RBI double capping a nine-run rally by Wachovia in the top of the sixth. Wachovia added four more in the seventh, while Coke managed a lone run in the bottom of the frame.

Bland also walked, stealing second. Both scored on Grant Harmon's double. White followed with his homer, a two-run shot.

Derrick Hines singled in Clark, and Edwin Manning reached on an errorr, scoring O'Neal and Gatlin. Hines scored on a wild pitch and Hollis Gunn reached on an error, scoring Manning.

Coke added one in the third and three in the fourth for its 12-run total. Union Carbide gott all three of its runs in the fifth.

In the fourth, Exchange put it away with nine runs, taking a 15-1 edge. Battle walked and moved up on a passed ball and an error. Chris

NO. 1 IN EASTERN NORTH CAROLINA

Oklahoma St. Whips Texas, 18-13

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — Oklahoma State baseball Coach Gary Ward says too much has been made of his team's rivalries with Texas and Arizona State.

"We're here to win a baseball championships and they're just obstacles in our way," Ward said earlier in the NCAA College World Series.

The victory kept second-ranked Oklahoma State alive in the double-elimination tournament and sent the 61-14 Cowboys into an elimination game Saturday night with third-ranked Cal State-Fullerton. The Titans, now 64-20, earlier Friday eliminated top-ranked Arizona State, 6-1.

The loss to Oklahoma State sends 60-13 Texas into a Sunday championship game at 8:10 p.m. EDT against the winner of Saturday night's semi-final.

"I was pleased with the execution of the top of our order," Ward said of Friday's play. "I wanted a clean game. I wasn't happy with the poor play. I wanted a 15-1 game, a clean victory. Execution is the name of the game and the bottom line is the score difference."

The Cowboys jumped on Texas starter Wade Phillips, 3-1, with three runs in the first on Pete Incaviglia's two-run triple and an infield error, one of nine errors committed by the Longhorns.

Randy Whisler added a bases-loaded triple in a nine-run second inning second to help stake Oklahoma State to 12-0 lead.

"We were flat after the Arizona State game," said Texas Coach Cliff Gustafson, referring to Thursday night's 8-4 win over ASU in the winners' bracket finals.

"Oklahoma State put the ball in play good, but they didn't hit it hard," said Gustafson.

Texas chipped back with four runs in the top of the fourth when OSU starter Gary Kanwisher walked two and Dennis Cook's single loaded the bases. Rob Walton, who picked up the win in relief for OSU to go 3-2, came on to give up an RBI single to Steve Labay, walked to more runs home before ending the rally.

Texas added four more in the sixth when two more walks set up Rusty Richards' RBI single. David Denny doubled home the Longhorns' sixth run and two more scored on a throwing err9r.

OSU scored two more in the sixth before Texas' Mike Anderson hit first homer of the year with two on in the eighth to cut the difference to 15-11.

"I was pleased with the play of Anderson, particularly his three-run homer," said Gustafson. Anderson was called in to spell regular catcher Darren Loy, who was sidelined with a bruised hand.

But Oklahoma State scored the three runs back in the bottom of the innning on sacrifice flies by Bell and Whisler, and an RBI single by Kevin Fowler.

Texas' Jamie Doughty hit his 12th homer of the year with two down in the ninth and Bill Bates scored the final run on Scott Vondemkamp's double.

The run total by Oklahoma State tied a Texas record for most runs scored against the Longhorns in a single game, and broke Texas' eight-game winning streak at the College World Series.

Dascenzo's four stolen bases in the game also equalled the CWS record set by Washington State's Bob Fry against Texas in 1965.

"The key was the left-handers," said Kirk Bates, whose two-run single in the fourth inning provided the insurance runs needed by the Titans. "That's the only way to beat ASU."

"The adjustments we had to make were fairly simple," said Arizona State Coach Jim Brock, "but we just didn't seem to make them. We should have swung the bat better and we should have played better, but we didn't."

Fullerton scored two runs in the second inning when Bob Caffrey walked, John Bryant singled and Caffrey scored when ASU center fielder Oddibe McDowell mishandled the hit. Bryant scored the game-winning run on George Sarkissian's sacrifice fly.

Canadian Hydro Wound Destroy Shad Run — Coastal shad runs may become a thing of the past if a proposed tidal-power project is buile by the Canadian governmentin the upper reached of the Bay of Fundy in Nova Scotia. Fisheries biologists studying the proposed project recently discovered that one-fourth to one-third of all the shad on the east coast use the proposed site as a summer feeding ground, and millions of these fish would be killed by power plant turbines during the course of the summer.

Powered by the bay's 53-foot tides, the proposed facility would be the largest tidal power plant in the world, producing 4,800 megawatts of electricity. In comparison, Carolina Power and Light Company's Shearon Harris nuclear plant near Raleigh will produce only 900 megawatts of electricity when completed. The tidal project would include a five-mile dam, studded with 128-140 turbines that would be 25 feet in diameter. On incoming tides, the turbines would lie idle and fish would be free to pass through the dam while water was being impounded. After tidal cycles, the water would be released and the impoundment drained while generating power, forcing fish to swim a gauntlet of whirling turbine blades.

Dr. Michael Dadswell, a fisheries biologist with Canada's Department of Fisheries and Oceans, estimates that on each pass through the turbines almost 10 percent of the shad would be struck and killed by the blades. The fish remain in this portion of the bay throughout the summer, and their migration patterns show that they would enter the impoundment and pass through the turbines 10 to 20 times in the course of the season. Dadswell estimates that 40-90 percent of the approximately six million shad that use the bay as a summer feeding ground would be killed by the turbines in a single summer.

"The impacts of this project would be felt along the entire east coast — including North Carolina," said Harrel Johnson, a fisheries biologist with the North Carolina Division of Marine Fisheries. Johnson also serves as chairman of the shad and herring technical committee of the Atlantic States Marine Fisheries Commission. "First, there is the direct impact of fish. Some form of safe passage for shad and other fish is needed.

"There may also be an effect on the ecology of the feeding grounds. Because of the extreme tides, huge expanses of mud flats are exposed to the air at low tide. This helps make these areas rich in nutrients, and biologically they are very productive. The power project would impound water on these flats over the course of several tides, reducing their value as summer feeding grounds for fish."

Shad are a popular sport fish in North Carolina and are routinely caught during spawning runs in the Tar Cape Fear, Neuse, Chowan, Pamlico, Trent, Blanc and White Oak rivers. In addition, they provide a commercial fishery. In 1982, commercial fishermen in North Carolina caught 411,852 pounds of shad with a dockside value of over $180,000.

Fisheries biologists feel that the proposed tidal-power project may also hurt herring and alewife runs in North Carolina. In 1982, the commercial catch for herring and alewives was 9,437,703 pounds with a dockside value of $704,599. Most of these fish are caught in the Chowan River and in other coastal rivers draining into Albemarle Sound.

"We feel that alewives and herring migrate to the same summer feeding grounds as shad," said Roger Rulifson, a fisheries biologist at the Institute of Coastal Research at the University of North Carolina. Before coming to North Carolina, Rulifson was at Unity College in Maine and worked with Dadswell on the power project study. "When we were doing field work at the proposed power plant site on the Bay of Fundy, we saw vast schools of herrings and alewives that were so thick you could almost walk across them. These fish are very similar to shad, and limited tagging studies indicate that herrings and alewives throughout the east coast probably summer in the Bay of Fundy. We hope to expand our tagging program to gain more information."

Ultimately, biologists fear that the proposed project may affect many other species of fish. "Shad, herring and alewives furnish a valuable source of forage for striped bass, tuna, bluefish and many other important species," Johnson said. "The loss of this forage base could certainly hurt many important fish populations and coastal fishermen in the long run."

Tournament Postponed — The first annual River Park North fishing derby has been rescheduled due to high water in the park. The derby has been rescheduled for Saturday June 23, from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Registration forms are still available from River Park North, The Outdoor Shop and The Trade Gas Station on Greenville Blvd.

Jim Killen Wins N.C. Waterfowl Stamp Contest — Jim Killen, Ducks Unlimited Artist of the year for 1984, has won the contest to be design artist for the 1984 North Carolina Waterfowl Stamp. The stamp design is made into limited edition prints which are sold through dealers throughout the United States. The $6\frac{1}{2}$ X 9-inch print sells for $135, while the stamp is $5.50.

The net proceeds from the sale of the print and the total proceeds from the sale of hte stamps go to the North Carolina Wildlife Resources Commission. The overall program is a result of enabling legislation passed in late 1982. The non-tax conservation stamp is voluntary, and the proceeds go to fund waterfowl projects, on-going and planned for the future, throughout North Carolina.

Fishing Report — High water has brought freshwater fishing almost to a standstill. With the exception of a few sandy farm ponds, the water is generally muddy and high. On the coast, grey trout are quite active around Ocracoke and on most of the piers. Small flounder and bluefish are filling the coolers on the piers. King Mackerel were still abundant off Bogue Banks.

Pearson Claims Pole At Pocono

LONG POND, Pa. (AP) — It was probably the most unusual pole position David Pearson has won in his long and illustrious Grand National stock car career.

The 49-year-old "Silver Fox," a part-timer on the Grand National circuit since the end of the 1978 season, drove to the top starting position Friday for Sunday's Van Scoy Diamond Mines 500 at Pocono International Raceway.

But, despite his fast lap of 150.921 mph on Pocono's 2.5-mile trioval, he will not even be at the wheel of the Budweiser-sponsored Chevrolet Monte Carlo SS when it leaves pit lane for the first time Sunday.

That's because Pearson has been recruited by car-co-owner Junior Johnson to help out while regular driver Neil Bonnett continues his recovery from a broken right wrist.

Bonnett will be at the wheel for the parade and pace laps, but will drive for the pits as the rest of the field takes the green flag. That will assure him of getting all the Winston Cup championship points earned by the car in the race.

Last week, at Riverside, Calif., Benny Parsons qualified the car ninth and waited in the pits until Bonnett came roaring in under the green flag.

The stop cost the team 21 seconds and Parsons was 38 seconds behind the leader at the end of the first lap. But a caution flag on the second lap got him back into the pack and he wound up finishing second to Terry Labonte.

"I just hope we get the same kind of break," said Pearson. "But I'm not going to pay attention to that part of it. I'll just run the best I can and see what happens."

It was Pearson's first pole position since 1982.

Pearson, who stands second only to Richard Petty with 105 career victories, has driven no more than 10 races in a single season since the 1978 season, when he won four of 22 starts. This will be the first time he has driven at Pocono since 1978.

"I drive about 10 or 11 races a year and I pick the schedule pretty much based on where are the best locations for my sponsor (Chattanooga Chew) and on the money. Pocono just hasn't been part of the program."

Pearson said he agreed to drive the Budweiser car here when Johnson telephoned him two weeks ago.

"He called before Riverside and asked me to run here and (next week) at Michigan," Pearson explained. "We never really did discuss the money or anything like that. I just knew he need help. And I knew he'd help me if I needed it."

Bonnett's wrist, originally injured when his steering wheel was turned violently during a race on April 29 at Martinsville, Va., was placed in a special cast at that time. He was able to drive that way for several weeks, but reinjured the wrist after his power steering failed early in the World 600 on May 27.

Pearson only had about 15 practice laps in the car Friday before qualifying.

"We were making some changes to try to make it easier for him," said crew chief Doug Richert. "But I'm not surprised he won the pole.

"I've heard in the past that David is the type of driver that when he practices he doesn't have the car right on the edge. But, when he goes out for qualifying or the race, that's when he gives it his all. That's what he did today."

He is the ninth different pole winner in 14 events this season and now has won at least one pole in 21 of the last 22 seasons.

The top 20 starting positions for the 40-car field were locked in Friday, with the rest of the grid to be filled Saturday with another session of time trials.

The race, which will be televised live by ESPN, is scheduled to start at 1 p.m. EDT.

McEnroe, Lendl Set For French Final

In fact, it's been 29 years since an American walked off the red clay courts at Roland Garros Stadium with the men's singles trophy at the French Open tennis championships.

Tony Trabert did it in 1955, successfully defending his title. But for nearly three decades, American men have gone home empty-handed from the singles event.

McEnroe can change that when he takes on Czechoslovakia's Ivan Lendl in Sunday's title match.

On the other hand, the women's singles championship has had a decidedly stars-and-stripe hue since 1979, the year Chris Evert Lloyd won the third of her five titles.

Navratilova also was seeking something special — her fourth consecutive Grand Slam title and a $1 million bonus awarded by the International Tennis Federation (ITF).

"My goal is to bankrupt the ITF," Navratilova joked Friday. "Why not back-to-back Grand Slams ... I'm not going to rest on my laurels."

Then, noting Lloyd's goal, she said: "We'll both be making history, one way or another."

Navratilova shook off a shaky, nervous start Friday before beating Czechoslovakia's Hana Mandlikova 3-6, 6-2, 6-2. Lloyd pulverized outclassed Camille Benjamin of Bakersfield, Calif., 6-0, 6-0 in their semifinal match on Thursday.

That was Lloyd's 51st victory here. Bjorn Borg of Sweden had held the old mark of 49.

Lendl, seeded No. 2, advanced to the men's final Saturday by crushing 1982 French Open winner Mats Wilander of Sweden, seeded fourth, 6-3, 6-3, 7-5. McEnroe was equally as devastating as he rolled over third-seeded Jimmy Connors 7-5, 6-1, 6-2.

"Lendl is playing pretty well," McEnroe said, "but he's hitting a lot of moon balls. I don't think you'll see much of that tomorrow."

McEnroe, ranked No. 1 in the world on the Atari-ATP computer but never better than a quarter-finalist here before this year, was referring to Lendl's apparent willingness — when well ahead of Wilander — to rally patiently from the baseline with heavy topspin groundstrokes and wait for the Swede to make a mistake.

The tactic, which appeared to work, resulted in some tedious exchanges, including one point which had the ball being hit 65 times before the Czechoslovak put it away for a winner.

In the long baseline battle, Wilander held his serve only four times in the entire match and was outgunned by Lendl's powerful forehand. The 19-year-old Swede was able to produce only a few of the blinding passing shots he used in the quarter-finals against Noah, who, unlike Lendl, is a serve-and-volley player who constantly is attacking and at the net.

Instead, Wilander was pinned behind his own baseline, playing defensively because of Lendl's ruthless, powerful ground strokes.

Lendl said the key to his match against McEnroe would be the American's serve. "The main thing is to return his serve, because if you do that he's not comfortable."

But Lendl has not been able to handle McEnroe's serve this year. The fiesty New Yorker defeated the world's second-ranked player in the championship matches of three indoor tournaments this year and also stopped him in the title match of the Tournament of Champions at Forest Hills on a synthetic clay surface in May.

"Lendl was very patient out there today," Wilander said Friday. "I think he has a very good chance in this tournament. It's very difficult to play serve-and-volly (on clay) like McEnroe."

The 31-year-old Connors, who failed once again to win the only Grand Slam title that has eluded him, was leading 5-4 in the opening set when McEnroe switched to a higher gear and took complete command. Connors was able to win only three games the rest of the match.

McEnroe pounded out 12 aces and a succession of first-service winners in the two-hour, 11-minute contest. And, as he saw the match slipping away from him, Connors began a stream of unforced errors, espcially on his forehand, as he tried to pick up the pace.

McEnroe was fined for verbal abuse after he shouted at a spectator, lost his temper with a line judge and exchanged words with Connors.

In the third game of the middle set, a forehand by McEnroe was called wide. As McEnroe protested the call, Connors appeared to wipe out the mark with his foot.

Holmes' Lawyer Files Suit Against Don King

EASTON, Pa. (AP) — Heavyweight boxer Larry Holmes, already battling one promoter in court over a disputed contract, has accused another promoter, Don King, of withholding profits from the 1982 title defense against Gerry Cooney.

Attorney Gus Milides filed a lawsuit Friday on Holmes' behalf, contending King has engaged in a "flagrant and fraudulent attempt" to avoid paying Holmes a large sum of money. The exact amount was not specified.

The suit represents the second major fight Holmes has undertaken against King, who has promoted the heavyweight many times. Holmes relinquished his World Boxing Council title Dec. 11, 1983, rather than fight Greg Page while under contract with King.

The suit filed Friday asks Northampton County Court to require King to produce unaltered account books from the fight within 20 days and to appoint an auditor to determine how much money is owed.

Judge Robert A. Freedberg ordered King to show cause why he should not be made to account for revenue from the fight and why an injunction should not be issued to obtain pertinent records.

A hearing has been set for July 5 at the Northampton County Courthouse in Easton, where the undefeated boxer lives.

A woman at King's New York City office said no one was available to comment on the legal action.

In the other suit, now in U.S. District Court in Philadelphia, Holmes claims promoter-attorney Richard Hirschfeld of Virginia Beach, Va., tricked him into signing a contract last October for promotion of the upcoming fight against Gerrie Coetzee.

Hirschfeld's attorney in the case said Friday the litigation probably would prevent Holmes from defending his International Boxing Federation title against Coetzee before next January. But Holmes' attorney in the case said he expected a quick resolution of the suit in Holmes' favor.

In the suit against King, Holmes said he reached an agreement in June 1982 to have King represent him in the promotion of his July 11 match with Cooney.

The agreement guaranteed Holmes a minimum of $5 million for the fight and Cooney a minimum of $3 million. King and his production company were to receive $1 million, as would Cooney's promoter, Tiffany Productions.

In addition, Holmes claims he was promised 35 percent of the profits from the sale of "worldwide ancillary rights" for telecasts, licenses, concessions, posters and souvenirs.

Holmes claims King never made an exact account of the "large and substantial sums of money" received from the ancillary rights.

Bills Claim Valentine

Zack Valentine, former East Carolina University all-star, has been placed on waviers by the Philadelphia Eagles, and has been claimed by the Buffalo Bills.

Valentine, from Edenton, was a top performer for the Pirates at defensive end, moving to linebacker when he was drafted by the Pittsburgh Steelers. After several years as a top reserve with the Steelers, he was traded to the Baltimore Colts, who cut him in a bizarre incident, then was claimed on waviers by the Eagles. He spent this past year on the injured reserve list with a knee injury.

The "grand" wagon... from Peugeot

So big is the Peugeot 505 S wagon that you can carry over half a ton. And so richly appointed that almost every imaginable luxury is standard equipment.

Air conditioning. Cruise control. Power steering, brakes, windows, antenna. Central locking. A 50-watt sound system. Plush velour upholstery (leather optional). Even heated front seats. All standard equipment.

We've got it. Come and try it.

Conversion Of Pitt Plaza To Be Finished In July

By ANGELA LINGERFELT
Reflector Staff Writer

Mall construction on the 18-year-old Pitt Plaza shopping center is "coming along real well" and is expected to be complete by Aug. 1, said John Kane, president of J.M. Kane & Co., owner of the center.

"We're extremely pleased with the way things have gone. All of the current retailers are in business and haven't had to close at all because of the heavy construction," Kane said.

The current 225,000-square-foot center is being expanded to 300,000 square feet and the number of stores is being increased from 30 to 60. Kane said a manager for the future mall was hired around May 1.

Mark Pitney, who is heading the $3 million project, said the quarry tile for the interior will be laid next week. He added that the facility will be enclosed and equipped with heating and cooling systems by July 15.

Kane said new shops will be opening anywhere from the last week in August to mid-November, at the latest.

"We have about 30 new tenants right now. All of the merchants that are in the center tod.y will remain, with either relocated or remodeled stores. The only new shop that we are at liberty to announce is the Galleria, a linen shop," he said.

In light of the heavy construction going on around the shopping center, Kane said, "The contractors have done a good job of keeping the public protected from the work going on. There haven't been any accidents with the public, which we're very proud of."

The Greenville Boulevard facility was originally built in 1965 as Pitt Plaza and was Greenville's first full-service shopping center. Its name will be changed to "The Plaza" when construction is completed.

Workers Getting Protection

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Spreading court fights over the "employment at will" doctrine has brought legislation in California and five other states that would restrict the power of employers to fire workers.

Not surprisingly, employers are not happy with the proposals, but neither are leaders of organized labor or the lawyers who specialize in taking companies to court in "unjust dismissal" cases.

The proposals are aimed primarily at workers who do not belong to unions and hence are not protected by union grievance procedures. The bills generally would make it easier to contest a company's right to fire workers "without just cause," while lessening the damages that could be won.

Until recently, non-union workers had little recourse to contest firings because of the legal doctrine known as "employment at will," which considered employees to be working with the consent of the employer. But recent court rulings have chipped away at that idea, and the number of lawsuits has mushroomed — as have the costs involved.

Hence the proposals for changing the current system.

Employers, however, oppose the bills.

The legislation "could worsen the anti-employer climate in California," warned Don Butler, president of the 2,500-member Merchants & Manufacturers Association based in Los Angeles.

His sentiments were echoed by David Zurvalec, industrial relations director for the Michigan Manufacturers Association, referring to a bill proposed in his state.

"It will result in endless disputes, litigation and mediation," Zurvalec told a legislative hearing. "It will be another example of why the cost of doing business in Michigan is so much higher than in other states."

The Michigan and California bills would permit workers who felt they were fired unjustly to take their complaints to the state mediation services — a far less costly procedure than fighting a dismissal in court.

Similar bills have been introduced in the Massachusetts, Wisconsin, Ohio and Pennsylvania legislatures.

Jack Stieber, head of the industrial relations department at Michigan State University in East Lansing, said about 3 million U.S. workers who have no protection are fired annually. Of dismissed workers who are protected by unions, about half ultimately win their jobs back.

Now through August 18

A step back in time

All you need to step back in time this summer is a tour ticket for Tryon Palace in New Bern.

"Welcome to the Government House and Governor's residence of the Crown Colony of North Carolina," says Henry Billings, sergeant-of-the-guard, to begin the process of transporting visitors — via Kermit Hunter's play The Rising Splendor — through time to June 28, 1771.

Billings invites visitors into the Palace and establishes that the date is the day before William Tryon, the royal governor, his wife and 10-year-old daughter are due to depart from North Carolina. Tryon has been named governor of New York. Only two months ago, guests learn, Tryon and his militia from the New Bern district put down a rebellion of regulators — inland farmers wanting tax reforms.

With this setup, visitors begin their tour and as they walk through the Palace, various scenes unfold. They are treated to a look at the private lives of the residents, their friends and the household staff. Nostalgia, treasonous talk about the English Parliament, kitchen lore and even the stirrings of a love affair are overheard during this trip through time.

There are 12 characters in the seven-scene drama that is based on historical fact. The production was expanded by Hunter who wrote in two additional characters for the new season.

A school teacher and a maid were added to the lineup this year. In addition, a character written for the original production but never portrayed will be performed — giving even those who have seen the dramas three new characters and scenes to see.

The author also wrote the outdoor dramas Unto These Hills and Horn in the West.

The period-costumed drama takes place within rooms elegantly decorated with 18th century furniture, chandeliers and wall hangings in the restored building — a building that in 1770 was called the finest government building on the North American continent.

The building called "Tryon's Palace" was completed in New Bern in 1770 on the eve of the revolution that ended the English settlement of the original colonies. It was the first permanent capitol building for the colony of North Carolina even though it was not built until almost 200 years after the first English settlement in America at Roanoke Island.

The drama tours alternate with regularly scheduled decorative arts tours except for Sunday and Wednesday when only the regular tours are conducted by costumed museum guides. The Tryon Palace complex is now open seven days a week, from 9:30 a.m. to 4 p.m. Monday through Saturday and 1:30 to 4 p.m. on Sundays.

SAMUEL CORNELL, Tory New Bern businessman, who loaned the money to outfit the militia and complete construction of the Palace building, stands beside an 18th century lead water pump near the kitchen wing of the Palace. There are two of these pumps, made in England and brought by sailing ship to the colonies.

BY THE END OF SUMMER, the sergeant-of-the-guard, played by Drew Edwards of New Bern, may really be seeing double. Two girls, Laurie Johnson and Jennifer Borowicz, both of New Bern, play the 10-year-old Margaret Tryon. They alternate days of performance during the season.

THE DRAWING room with its spinet piano was a favorite of the Tryons. Here characters playing Margaret Wake and William Tryon examine an 18th century flute.

A NEW CHARACTER, Hannah D. played by Michelle Sermon of Pollocksville, adds to the humor of this drama season when she shares with the audience some of the aspects of life at Tryon Palace.

Dr. White Marries In High Noon Ceremony Saturday

Dr. Elizabeth Alliaude White and Philip Haywood Koonce III were united in marriage at high noon Saturday at St. Paul's Episcopal Church. The Rev. Lawrence Patrick Houston Jr. officiated at the ceremony.

A program of wedding music was presented by Sharon Irwin, organist, and Mrs. James Searl, flutist.

The daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Steven Merle White of Greenville, the bride was given in marriage by her father. The bridegroom' s parents are Mr. and Mrs. Philip Haywood Koonce Jr. of East Greenwich, R.I., formerly of Kinston.

Mrs. Joseph Warren Tart of Charlotte served as her sister's matron of honor. Bridesmaids were Marilyn Elizabeth Koonce, sister of the bridegroom, Mary Gray Gilchrist of Alexandria, Va., Dr. Susan Barnes Casper of Asheboro, Dr. Dale Ellen Nichols of Bedford, Va., Dr. Susan Joyner Pruitt of Birmingham, Ala., Dr. Annnamarie Reddin of Raleigh and Dr. Sharon Rose Stephenson of Benson.

The father of the bridegroom was best man. Ushers were Michael Gray Koonce of White Sulphur Springs, W.Va., brother of the bridegroom, Steven Worley and David Grier White, brothers of the bride, Joseph Warren Tart of Charlotte, Junius Heritage Koonce of Tarboro, cousin of the bridegroom, Capt. Cortez Alonzo Cooper III, USA, of Augusta, Ga., and Lt. Kenneth Westcott Norwood, USN Medical Corps, of Chesapeake, Va. Stephen Alexander King was acolyte.

The bride wore a formal gown of white silk taffeta and re-embroidered alencon lace accented with seed pearls. The fitted bodice dropped to a bouffant skirt with a border of lace at the hemline extending into a chapel length train. The portrait neckline was enhanced by silk roses on the shoulders and the full length sleeves ended in calla points at the wrists. Her waltz length veil of tiered silk illusion was attached to a halo of pearls and orange blossoms. She wore the bridegroom's gift of pearls and carried a cascade of tiffany roses, lilacs, lily of the valley and Queen Anne's lace.

The bride received her B.S. degree from Davidson College and her M.D. degree from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. The bridegroom also received his B.S. degree from Davidson College and served in the U.S. Army with the 64th Armor. He resigned his commission with the rank of captain.

The matron of honor wore a gown of coral taffeta designed with an off-shoulder ruffle and a fitted bodice. The sashed floor length skirt ended in an asymmetrical ruffle. She carried a cascade of sonia roses and dendrobium orchids asccented with trailing ivy. The bridesmaids' dresses and flowers were identical.

After a wedding trip the couple will live in Nashville, Tenn.

The bride will begin residency in pediatrics at Vanderbilt University Hospital and the bridegroom will pursue a master's degree in the School of Business also at Vanderbilt.

A wedding breakfast at the Greenville Country Club followed the ceremony and was given by the bride's parents. The parents of the bridegroom, his grandmother, Mrs. Thomas Royster Mayo of Tarboro, and his great-grandmother, Mrs. Newby Walker Frazier of Tarboro, entertained at a rehearsal dinner at the country club. A dance followed at the Brook Valley Country Club and was given by friends of the bride's family. Mrs. James Fred Webb and Mrs. Joseph Loyd Horton Jr. entertained the bridesmaids at a luncheon at the home of Mrs. Webb.

Moms Should Heed Advice For Kids — Drink Milk And Eat Vegetables

By BETH AUSTIN

The mothers should have taken their own advice, says Dr. Myron Winick, a professor and director of the Institute of Human Nutrition at the Columbia University medical school in New York City.

Many women fail to meet their own nutritional needs, often because they lack correct information about women's changing food needs over a lifetime, Winick said in an interview.

Winick, author of "For Mothers & Daughters: A Guide to Good Nutrition for Women" (Morrow, $12.95), said one-third of all women suffer from some nutritional deficiency, often because their desire to be fashionably thin leads them to unbalanced fad diets.

When they try to cut down on fats by cutting out milk and milk products, they risk brittle bones later on, he said.

"Dairy products are the main source of calcium in the human diet," he said.

People lose needed calcium when they cut down on dairy products as a whole instead of reducing their intake of dairy products with higher fat content.

Bones are made of calcium and the body feeds off calcium stored in bones when the diet is short of that element. This leaves bones brittle and porous, a condition known as osteoporosis.

Winick said the condition is 12 times more frequent in women than men.

He said it occurs so gradually women may not know of the deficiency until it is too late.

He said the problem is worst for pregnant and nursing mothers. Their bodies will steal from their own calcium reserves to nourish the child, he said.

Doctors are unsure exactly what exaggerates the problem in women, Winick said. Calcium loss may be caused by a genetic or hormonal tendency.

"Obviously, the more calcium in the bones you have to start with, the better off you'll be," he said. "Older women will absorb less calcium than young women."

The risks incurred in cutting out needed nutrients to lose those last 5 pounds are far greater than the danger posed by the pounds themselves, the doctor said.

"Chubbiness is not a medical term," he said, adding that people who are overweight by just a few pounds are no more at risk than thin people.

"True obesity is different from being overweight. There is no question that people who are truly obese are at an increased risk for certain diseases," such as high blood pressure, hardening of the arteries and diabetes.

Winick said the likelihood of conquering an obesity problem is quite slim.

"The most common cancers in this country all have a cure rate higher than true obesity. It's a very, very difficult problem, and one doesn't solve it with celery sticks."

MRS. OWENS

Couple Weds On Saturday

Thala Jean Hudnell and Jack Denton Owens were united in marriage Saturday afternoon at two o'clock in a ceremony performed in the First Pentecostal Holiness Church. The Rev. Roger Leggett of Jackson, Miss., performed the double ring ceremony.

Parents of the couple are the Rev. and Mrs. W.M. Hudnell Sr. of Snow Hill and Jackie Roberts Owens of Jackson, Miss., and the late Earnest Owens.

Walton Hudnell Jr. of Chocowintiy, brother of the bride, gave her in marriage. Tammy Leggett of Roper was honor attendant and bridesmaids included Rebecca Lane of Williamston and Debbie Sauls of Fremont.

The flower girl was Holly Caroline Bliss of Manassas, Va., niece of the bride. The ring bearer was Zachary Wingett of Savannah, Ga., nephew of the bride.

William A. Mills of Greenville was best man while ushers were Anthony Hudnell of Belhaven, nephew of the bride, and James Morrisette of Prince George, Va.

A program of organ music was presented by Betty LeRoux of Greenville and Elizabeth Byrum of Savannah, Ga., sister of the bride, sang "There Is Love" and "The Lord's Prayer."

The bride wore a formal gown of white organza designed with a high neckline encircled with silk Venise lace. The fitted bodice featured a sheer yoke bordered by a flounce of chantilly lace embellished with silk Venise lace. The long fitted sleeves were fashioned with a pouf over sleeve of organza and a cuff of chantilly lace trimmed with silk Venise. The full circular skirt and attached chapel train were enhanced by multi-tiers of chantilly lace. She wore a halo of silk flowers accented with a veil of illusion and carried a bouquet of white silk roses and orchids. It was accented with miniature blue and pink flowers and white satin streamers.

The maid of honor wore a formal gown of pink faille taffeta designed with an open neckline. A taffeta ruffle bordered the neckline which was complemented by short pouf sleeves. A matching sash encircled the modified waistline from which fell the gathered skirt. She wore a halo of pink silk flowers and carried a fan of pink and blue silk flowers with streamers.

The flower girl wore a formal gown of light blue chiffon styled with a high neckline accented with a silk rose. The full skirt was enhanced with a bustle. She wore a halo of silk flowers and carried a basket of silk flowers.

A reception followed the ceremony. Cake was served by Sylvia Gammon of Williamston and Ada Walker of Jackson, Miss., aunt of the bride, poured punch. The refreshment tables were accented with white linen cloths and decorated with ivy and white swans.

Nor can it be solved by fad dieting, he said.

"There are a hell of a lot of people on fad diets, and none of them do what they're supposed to do," he said. "The evidence is that no fad diet makes you lose weight any faster than a balanced diet of equal calories.

"If you take it long enough — just eat grapefruit — you're going to run into a deficiency. Some of these fad diets are so unbalanced they have produced deaths."

To conquer a weight problem, he said, "Alter the lifestyle as little as possible. Don't set goals that are impossible."

Winick said diet books that show up on best-seller lists do little to help people conquer lifelong weight problems.

But they do increase public interest in food and nutrition, especially among mothers, he said.

For example, baby food manufacturers bowed to public pressure and stopped adding salt and flavor enhancers to their products.

Increased awareness of the dangers of sodium is leading to new, salt-reduced products, he said.

For one thing, he said, many working women do not have time to cook every meal from scratch. And a few trips to the local fastfood outlet are not likely to cause great nutritional harm.

"There is a place for eating out, for use of processed foods," he said.

DETECTION

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — It is now possible to detect and measure minute contaminants in sealed, sterile medicine vials without opening the containers.

Researchers at the University of Rochester and at Schering-Plough Corp. say they used far-field holography to produce three-dimensional images of all particles within containers of injectable solutions.

REDUCES GUESSWORK

NEW YORK (AP) — A computerized software system has been developed to help eliminate the guesswork in business decisions before final action is taken.

Richard L. Crandall, president of Comshare, which developed the system says, "The decision support system is a collection of integrated software which can perform all of the functions formerly done by several separate software packages.

"This process gives business professionals in medium and large firms the same capabilities to analyze their decisions as airline pilots who use computer simulators to practice flying without risk before they actually take to the air."

Women Can Win In Politics — But It's Harder

By NANCY GRIFFIN

AUGUSTA, Maine (UPI) — Women can't tap into the "good-old-boy network," don't have great personal wealth or entree to traditional fund-raising sources, but the author of a new book says they can win political seats — it's just harder.

Barbara Trafton of Auburn, a former Maine state senator and Democratic National Committeewoman, has written a how-to book for would-be women politicians called "Women Winning: How to Run For Office."

"Why should women get elected? We are being told by experts that we are different — more human, unique and practical," Ms. Trafton said.

No matter what differences a female contender brings to the political arena, the author says she still needs the basic technical skills to win the contest.

Ms. Trafton should know.

She won her first of three terms in the Maine legislature in 1975 without benefit of a manual such as the one she has written.

Her 164-page guide is designed to eliminate the kind of trial-and-error methods she was forced to employ in campaign planning, fund-raising, media coverage, image-making and neutralizing the opposition.

Although the number of women holding political office has tripled in the past decade, Ms. Trafton said, by 1980 only 12 percent of political officeholders nationwide were women.

Most women running are the challengers in their contests, Ms. Trafton pointed out, yet, "Female incumbents are recognized as virtually unbeatable and female newcomers are now taken as serious contenders."

The book outlines the extra stumbling blocks that fall in the path of the woman office-seeker. Ms. Trafton says the average woman entering the political arena is married and the mother of several children over the age of 12.

"Whatever household arrangements the woman politician makes have to suffice not only for her family, but also for her public," Ms. Trafton writes.

"All politicians must learn to live in the fishbowl, but women politicians experience a greater loss of privacy," she said, because people seem to think it is all right ask a woman personal questions that they would never ask a man — such as "Who's watching the kids?" or "Who's making your husband's supper?"

Fund-raising — a crucial element in winning any political contest — is really an area where women must try harder because they are number two on both ends of the contribution spectrum — giving and receiving, Ms. Trafton writes.

"Whereas men frequently donate large sums to political candidates ... women usually confine themselves (often of necessity) to the $10 to $50 range," she writes. "Since most men are reluctant to fund women candidates, this disparity definitely has a political impact."

She concludes that more women must become political contributors if more women are to become political office-holders.

Ms. Trafton, who has promoted her nationally-selling book on a cross-country tour, offers women candidates highly-touted technical advice as well as readable, anecdotal tips on taking care of their physical appearance, emotional well-being and health while waging successful grass-roots campaigns.

Illustrative stories recorded in the book attempt to allay the fears and debunk the myths for women worried they have too little political knowledge to run a successful campaign, or do a good job when elected.

Ms. Trafton quotes an unnamed member of the Maine Commission on Women who said: "It's time for all of us unqualified women to take our places next to all the unqualified men serving in office."

Vows Said In Evening Ceremony

AYDEN — Patricia Diane Carter of Ayden and Mark Anthony Phillips of Kinston were united in marriage Saturday evening at eight o'clock on the lawn of the home of Mr. and Mrs. Lathan H. Dennis of Ayden. The Rev. Stan Wingard officiated at the double ring ceremony.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph E. Carter of Ayden. Parents of the bridegroom are Mr. and Mrs. Mark L. Phillips of Kinston.

Escorted by her father and given in marriage by her parents, the bride wore a formal gown of white taffeta accented with alencon lace designed with a high neckline encircled with clipped re-embroidered alencon lace. The fitted bodice featured a sheer yoke of English net re-embroidered in a floral motif. The full leg of mutton sleeves featured ruffle trim. The basque waistline extended to a chapel length train accented with a ruffle of alencon and Venise lace. She wore a fingertip veil of imported illusion with a pencil edge which was attached to a halo of white silk flowers accented with pearl centers. The bride wore pearls, a gift from her parents. She carried a cascade bouquet of white bridal roses, daisies and miniature carnations.

Kathryn P. Carter of Myrtle Beach, S.C., sister-in-law of the bride, served as matron of honor and Rita Jackson of Grifton served as maid of honor. Bridesmaids included Jo and Debra Dennis and Tami Dennis Moore, cousins of the bride, and Traci Allen, all of Ayden. The flower girl was Marklen Pickett, niece of the bridegroom of Snow Hill. Honorary bridesmaids included Karen Bowen, Deanna Dennis, Tonya Dennis and Ginger Haddock, all of Ayden. They were remembered with pink roses.

The attendants wore violet gowns of chiffon with taffeta linings. The bodice formed a flounce trim with a scooped back neckline. The waistline was accented by a spaghetti tie belt extending into a flared skirt. Each carried a white lantern decorated with mixed spring flowers and streamers.

Ronnie Duvall of Kinston was best man. Ushers included Terry Braxton, Kendall Daniels and William Dixon, all of Grifton, Jeffrey Daniels of Kinston and Ken Harrell of Snow Hill. The ring bearer was Christopher Carter of Myrtle Beach, S.C., nephew of the bride.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas K. Wilson presided at the guest register and Shirley Dennis directed the wedding.

The parents of the bride entertained at an after-rehearsal party Friday night at Bum's Restaurant. Cake was served by Teresa Dennis and punch was poured by Rubelle Arnold.

The couple was honored at several showers and parties prior to the wedding.

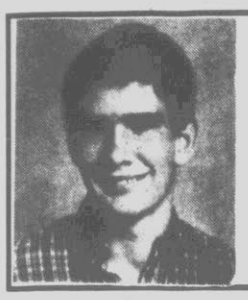
MRS. PHILLIPS



On The Young Side

By CLAY DEANHARDT

It is a rare time in one's life when one gets a new opportunity to make a fresh start, when one comes to a new beginning. On Thursday, 325 people were given that new beginning as Rose High held commencement exercises for the class of 1984.

It started with the seniors and distinguished guests marching to their seats. Each senior wore a smile and some shed a tear, because each knew that 12 long years of work were finally going to be rewarded this night and that after this night, each one would begin his/her induction into the world of adulthood.

Caroline Powell, secretary-treasurer of the senior class, spoke first, giving the invocation. Sharon McLawhorn gave the thought for the day, about the fight for success. Marjorie Jones introducted the speakers for the ceremonies, Rena Meteye, Steve Worley, Elizabeth Ellen and Alana Tinkham.

Rena spoke to the crowd about their futures in her speech "Our Time Has Come." Steve spoke to the seniors about "Our Choice" and Elizabeth talked about a "wax world" where the inhabitants did nothing but pretend they were some sort of useless object and urged her fellow classmates not to do the same thing. Alana discussed "The End of Our Rainbow" about finally reaching the end of one's rainbow by graduating and also for the need of new rainbows, new goals in life that each graduate should strive for.

Dr. Delma Blinsom, superintendent of city schools, presented the graduating class. The students received their diplomas from school board chairman, Steven G. Wall, as each was announced by Howard Hurt, principal.

The reactions were varied — some walked calmly across the stage, others raised their hands in victory, some shed a tear at the thought of losing these old friendships through the year. The feelings of elation and fright were shared by each graduate.

Perhaps Alana best summed everything up at the end of her speech when she said, "Now that we have come to the end of one rainbow, we have only to look around us to find many more waiting to be pursued. In the musical Finnian's Rainbow, there is a song which says:

Follow it over the hill and stream.
Follow the fellow who follows a dream.

That is what we are faced with tonight. Opportunities are everywhere. To look at our rainbows is only to dream, to follow then is our reality."

Chicken Parts Sell Better

Of the 10.6 billion pounds of raw chicken sold by U.S. broiler producers in 1983, 58.9 percent were sold as parts, compared with 31 percent in 1973 and 16 percent in 1963.

A study by Perdue Farms found regional preferences: New Yorkers like legs, Boston and other New England cities prefer breasts, and Baltimore consumers go for wings — wings account for 36 percent of all chicken parts sold in that city.

The growth in sales of chicken parts over whole or cut up chickens is attributed in part to smaller families, more single parent households and working mothers and eat-on-the-run lifestyles.

Her chapel mantilla of bridal illusion was bordered with Brussels lace and was attached to a lace caplet etched with seed pearls. She carried a handmade silk bouquet.

The honor attendant wore a rouyal blue taffeta gown styled with a fitted bodice with an off-shoulder sweetheart neckline. She carried a mum with streamers in wedding colors. Bridesmaids wore floor length light blue taffeta gowns styled like that of the honor attendant and carried similar flowers.

The couple will live in Nashville after a wedding trip to the Bahamas.

The bride is a graduate of Rocky Mount Senior High School and works at Carolina Telephone in Rocky Mount. The bridegroom is a graduate of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill and works at Nash General Hospital in Rocky Mount.

A reception was held at the YWCA. Margaret Hyman presided at the register. Sherry Henderson served cake and Mary Carthon, aunt of the bride, poured punch. An after-rehearsal dinner was held Friday evening in the church dining hall.

Cooking Is Fun

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
Associated Press Food Editor

FRUIT RICE

¼ cup plain yogurt
2 tablespoons honey
1¾ cups cooked select brown rice, cooled
1 orange
1½ cups sliced mixed fresh fruit

Stir together yogurt and honey; stir into rice. Cut peel away from orange so no white membrane remains; slice and dice, saving juice. Toss orange and its juice with the sliced mixed fruit; fold into rice mixture. Makes 4 servings.

BLUEBERRY TART

1½ cups all-purpose flour
Sour Cream
2 cups frozen unsweetened blueberries, rinsed
3 large egg yolks
¾ cup sugar

Into 1¼ cups of the flour cut butter until it is in fine particles. Stir in 2 tablespoons sour cream until dough forms a ball; press over bottom and sides of an ungreased 9- by 1½-inch cake pan with removable bottom. Bake in a preheated 375-degree oven until golden — 20 minutes; remove from oven and reduce temperature to 350 degrees. Spread blueberries over hot pastry. Meanwhile, beat together until smooth the egg yolks, 1-3rd cup sour cream, sugar and remaining ¼ cup flour; pour over blueberries. Continue baking until top is golden — 45 to 50 minutes. Cool on a wire rack; remove side wall of pan. Serve warm. Makes 8 servings.

New Breed Fathers: You've Come A Long Way, Daddy

By LINDA CORMAN
United Press International

Fathers are no longer just bystanders in child-raising — their new role often starts in the delivery room and sometimes winds up in full-time parenting.

This Father's Day will see a new breed of fathers taking a more active role in their children's lives. Some do so by choice, determined not to be as distant from their offspring as they were from their own fathers. Others have been thrown into a more active role in child-rearing by divorce or because their wives are spending more time at work outside the home.

Paul Knouse, 47, an investment counselor from the Boston suburb of Winchester, is one of those fathers thrown headlong into his new role because of divorce.

Until his separation four years ago, Knouse was a traditional father.

He said his "main responsibility was earning a living, fixing bicycles and taking the family on weekend jaunts."

"That meant minor involvement during the week, except for doing what was asked," he said. "You certainly did not take the children for physicals or get called away from work for emergency dental appointments."

Now, as a fulltime father of two sons, Knouse makes school lunches, leaves work early on snow days so they are not home alone, and has taken a course on how to communicate with his children.

"It doesn't come without a lot of sacrifices," he said. "But I feel I'm getting to know my boys like no other father gets to know his boys."

Men have come a long way in parenting from the days of the country's founding fathers, according to Kyle Pruett, associate professor of psychiatry at Yale University.

"For centuries," Pruett said, "men were not allowed to go near their babies. In Puritan cultures, women were the only beings charged by God to be near infants. People believed there were noxious and evil things which happened between fathers and children. Fathers couldn't go near their children until they were 6 years old and in breeches."

Dr. Michael Yogman, associate chief of the division of child development at Boston's Children's Hospital, said that today nearly all hospitals allow fathers in the delivery room, compared to only 27 percent as recently as 12 years ago.

For the past decade, Yogman has worked to dispel the notion that fathers are incompetent with infants.

When he started his research, "fathers would not be involved with young babies," Yogman said in a recent interview. "They were bystanders watching their wives until the baby began to talk or throw a ball."

"People have described dance type behavior — cooing, smiling, vocalizing — between mothers and infants," he said. "When we asked men to play with their (infants), we found the identical sensitivity to the baby's timing and rhythms."

Yale's Pruett has done a pilot study of families in which fathers were the primary care-givers and determined that there are advantages to father being the dominant parent.

He found infants who were primarily taken care of by their fathers were more outgoing and displayed more persistence in problem solving than other babies.

Pruett explained the differences in part by citing the fathers' tendency to pick up their infants in a "football position," slinging them over the crook of their arm looking outward, rather than "nestled into their mother's breasts."

By STEVE SANDERS
Written for UPI

The first six years of a child's life are the most crucial to the development of physical skills. During this time, parents should provide their children with the equipment and opportunity to explore and develop their movement potential.

A new philosophy about the physical skill development of young children has been sweeping the country over the past 10 years. This trend, while not as mature as the movement by adults toward belonging to fitness centers in the quest of health and enjoyment of leisure time, deals specifically with the physical skill development of children and the importance of that development at an early age.

The trend is toward the growth of fitness centers for young children. The goals of such facilities centers on the development not only on the physical skills needed to participate in a increasingly complex world, but also in the development of positive attitudes and confidence in oneself.

As children mature to adults, acquiring a level of physical skill gives them the opportunity to participate in a physically active lifestyle. Children who have acquired a high level of skill may feel more compelled as adults to participate regularly in activities to stay healthy and fit.

The trend toward skill development or fitness centers for children is not a fad. There is a growing concern and realization by adults that although some children may develop physical skills without much help from adults, most will not reach their full physical potential without some guidance. This guidance needs to take place at an early age with appropriate equipment and instruction from adults.

As in reading, math or other academic areas, a foundation of basic physical skills must be provided at an early age in order that the child can develop and refine other skills. Just as we cannot teach children to read if they don't know the alphabet, we cannot teach the game of tennis, for example, if the child can't hit the ball.

As parents ready their children to enter first grade, they should prepare them physically as well as mentally and socially. This preparation may take place at home or children can participate in skill development centers, just as adults join and participate in activities at the local fitness center.

Two nationally recognized, quality programs dealing with the physical skill development of young children come to mind.

The first, Gymboree, a nationally franchised program based in California, is for children under the age of 4. The program deals with development of physical skills through play. The philosophy is one of providing appropriate equipment for children to play on in order to develop desired skills.

The second, directed by Carol Hammett and Elaine Buefiel in Portland, Ore., is called Tiny Tot Fitness. This program takes a more specific approach to teaching physical skills in children from 5 months to 6 years of age. Considered more of a pre-school physical education program than a play program, Tiny Tot Fitness specifially deals with development of ball handling, rhythm and dance, locomotor and gymnastic skills.

Both programs are good for children. While the two philosophies are different as far as curricular approach, the mention of both types of programs together gives parents some idea of the range and scope of existing programs. Literally hundreds of centers similar to Gymboree and Tiny Tot Fitness have started programs for young children.

If you live close to a center that provides quality skill development activities for young children, you are urged to investigate that program. If not, it is our hope that this column, along with parent involvement with their children, will fill the void.

Over the next several months, this column will deal specifically with informing parents of the skills children should be exposed to and the appropriate age to begin instruction. Our hope is to stimulate interest in parents to expose their young children to developmentally appropriate skill activities along with providing them with the knowledge on how to instruct and what equipment to provide young children. Next week: The physical skills children should begin to develop before entering first grade

At Wits End

By Erma Bombeck

I will probably never get a chance to meet Julia Miles and that's too bad. I think we could be good friends. But she's the wife of the British ambassador to Libya and I sort socks for a living.

Julia endeared herself to me when I read that when she and her family were forced to leave Tripoli in such a hurry because of the political climate, she left behind a pet rabbit in the embassy garden called Honeybun. Well, you can imagine the public outcry once this little-known fact was run through all the wire services around the world. Civilized nations just don't go around abandoning their rabbits.

Julia was quoted in the London Daily Express as saying, "There has been so much fuss over the BLANK thing, I wish I had eaten it before we left."

There were questions to be raised. Did the rabbit have diplomatic immunity? Could they extend his visa? Could he travel alone? Could he be used as a hostage?

What mother has not toyed with the idea of making an orphan out of a pet that she didn't want in the first place? Be honest now. No one is taking names. Surely, it has crossed your minds on more than a few occasions.

I had kids who won goldfish by throwing a ping-pong ball in a glass of water. The fish came with a two-hour guarantee. Ours lived to develop bowel problems. I thought he'd never go.

Our hamsters never fell prey to diseases like all the other hamsters owned by my friends. Ours just multiplied and ran around a lousy exercise wheel all night long. One day, someone just left the cage open. No questions were asked.

For more years than I like to think about, we had a chameleon in a cage on the back of the commode. He was carried up from Florida in a Velveeta cheese box. He had only one trick. Every time someone flushed, his entire body bounced off the top of the cage, hit all four sides and when he came down he was swimming in mid-air for dear life. Had I not been afraid to touch him, I would have sent him to that big septic tank in the sky.

Julia knows . . . as we all do . . . that pets should be protected from children in the first place. If we're not going to make a lifetime commitment to them, we should never assume responsibility for them. But we're all basically weak.

Is Honeybun still in Libya? Get serious. A newspaper spent $3,913 to fly the animal to the Miles home in London so they could all be together again.

DEAR CECILY: My husband's favorite bought fudge is vanilla flavor. I'd like to make some for him, but need a recipe. — CANDY CON-NOISSEUR.

DEAR CANDY CON-NOISSEUR: The latest recipe I have tried for vanilla fudge uses sour cream and in my opinion the flavor and texture are delightful. And the recipe offers a bonus: for cooks who like chocolate, we tell how to add that flavoring.

Your request reminded me of a note I recently received from a New York friend. I quote: "Did I tell you that when I visited my friend Mary G., in Orlando, Fla., she and her husband said one of their favorite ways of spending Saturday evening is getting together with another couple and sitting around in the kitchen talking and making fudge. And that's just what we did the weekend I was there. It was fun." — C.B.

SOUR CREAM FUDGE

- 2 cups sugar
- ½ cup sour cream
- 1-3rd cup light corn syrup
- 2 tablespoons butter
- 1 teaspoon vanilla
- ½ cup walnuts, coarsely chopped

Butter an 8 by 8 by 2-inch baking pan.

In a heavy 3-quart saucepan, cook over moderate heat, stirring constantly, the sugar, sour cream, corn syrup and butter until mixture boils. Cover and cook 1 minute.

Remove cover. Without stirring, continue cooking until the temperature on a candy thermometer reaches 236 degrees or a small amount of mixture when dropped into a large bowl of very cold water forms a soft ball that flattens on removal from the water. Off heat, add vanilla; do not stir. Cool on a wire rack until temperature reaches 176 degrees — about 15 to 20 minutes.

With a wooden spoon beat until mixture just begins to thicken slightly and turns creamy — about 3 minutes. Stir in walnuts. Turn into prepared pan, spreading quickly and evenly. Cool. Cut into squares.

Chocolate Sour Cream Fudge: Follow recipe for Sour Cream Fudge. Add 2 squares (each 1 ounce) unsweetened chocolate with the vanilla. Do not stir, cool and continue as recipe directs.

Mary Cunningham Talks About Bendix Days

By GAIL COLLINS
UPI Business Writer

NEW YORK (UPI) — Mary Cunningham, possibly the most famous businesswoman in America, and half of the nation's only celebrity business couple, was having trouble with a question about "friends."

"There were a number of allies," she began, after moving a vase of tulips, tape recorder and copy of her new autobiography onto the table next to her.

"I do mention the secretaries who were very strong allies and supporters and continue to be."

Pressed for an example of something a more personal, she paused. "A — pal?" she asked in her even, good-learner voice.

"Well, I tell you quite frankly, if you ever went through an experience like this ... it is so major, so devastating, that you are not prone to sharing it with very many people."

The experience, which Mary Cunningham describes in terms usually reserved for the Black Death, was her fall from power at Bendix Corp., where she was pushed out the door amidst headlines of possible hanky-panky in the boardroom.

She has written an autobiography to tell her side of how she went from a corporate strategic planner to the hottest ticket on the television talk-show circuit.

The book's initial reviews have been, in Ms. Cunningham's opinion, "catty." She blames that on her criticism of the press. But she seems genuinely puzzled about why many of the stories are so snide.

It is a difficult question to answer. Mary Cunningham seems to lack any sense of irony about her own life, so she tends to bring it out in those who interview her.

"What a perceptive question," she said, when asked how she and husband Bill Agee feel about their fame.

"I try very hard to think of myself as I really am as opposed to as a celebrity, who's been made bigger than life. I think it's my responsibility as a human being, when I get up in the morning, to think of myself first and foremost as a humanist, as somebody who has a responsibility to other human beings to demonstrate the kind of values that are going to make corporate America a better place to live and work.

"To be perfectly honest, it is very difficult to be a celebrity business couple. I'm not complaining, because I know that's not a becoming thing to do, nor a constructive thing to do."

Mary Cunningham, 32, has been famous since she was 29, but her image has mutated with the seasons. There was her period as a feminist martyr, when her saga made women around the country wonder if sexual innuendo would be used forever to bar them from the corporate fast track.

That was followed by the silly era, when she and ex-boss Agee married and were photographed in romantic postures for national magazines.

Then came Agee's disastrous attempt to buy the unwilling Martin Marietta Corp., when the couple became America's short-term corporate profiteers, the symbol of why the Japanese are winning.

The book takes Mary Cunningham through her formative years in New Hampshire, where she struggled to achieve "sainthood" in high school, but failed to become very popular — "While other families chatted over the latest movie in town, we discussed theology and the travails of Sir Thomas More."

On through a philosophy degree at Wellesley and off to Harvard Business School, she graduated at the top of her class but failed to become very popular.

"The day I was admitted to the Century Club, an elite organization for Harvard students considered most promising by their professors, was the day I lost many of my friends," she wrote. "My success at job interviews further sealed my doom."

Agee, then the aging whiz-kid head of Bendix Corp., lured her to the suburbs of Detroit with the offer of a job as executive assistant and the promise he would "mentor" her as other powerful men had mentored him into the top job of a Fortune 500 company. ("I was a sucker for steep learning curves.")

At Bendix, Mary Cunningham was Agee's right-hand person, developing expertise in everything from pensions to brake systems and helping produce a long-term strategy to shift the company from the automobile business into high tech.

But she failed to become very popular.

"At the close of business he'd send us off with a familiar request: 'Now I want you all to go home, think about what we've discussed and come back tomorrow morning with ideas,' she wrote. "Naturally, I was the only one who took the request seriously.

"I would spend all night poring over documents and come in the next morning with a 30-page memo drafted on what I thought needed to be done.

"The more I did, the more impatient Agee was with his staff. 'Even a 28-year-old woman can do more analysis and show more energy than you seasoned executives who've been here 10 or 15 years,' he'd say."

Within a year and a half of her graduation from Harvard, Ms. Cunningham had gone from executive assistant to vice president for public affairs to vice president of strategic planning.

She was not the first person in business to move so far so fast, nor the first corporate teacher's pet who made enemies among the other overachievers who were passed by.

She was not even the first to become the target of sexual gossip. But the gossip became public and gave her enemies the ammunition they needed.

In retrospect, she said, a woman seeking a fast route to the top might not have wanted to choose a mentor whose own management team was split and semi-hostile, who was unhappily married and looking for a 16-hour-a-day "alter ego."

But Mary Cunningham remains shocked that people got the wrong idea about her relationship with Agee.

At public gatherings, she wrote, "When Agee wanted someone with him to ease a conversation or welcome a new face, he'd summon me up to the platform. Diane (Mrs. Agee) always hung back."

Later: "Agee mentioned his pending divorce to me and asked me if I might know of a convenient place where he might store his books and other belongings until he could find a new home." Thus her boss came to rent an apartment in the Cunningham condominium.

The "old gossip mill" really started grinding, however, when Agee volunteered some comments about "the personal relationship we have" before an auditorium full of employees and several reporters.

"It is true we are very, very close friends and she's a very close friend of my family. But that has absolutely nothing to do with the way that I and others in this company evaluate her performance," he said in an apparent effort to put an end to the talk.

It was probably the first time in the history of modern capitalism that a corporate head chose, however discreetly, to deny in public he was sleeping with the vice president for strategic planning.

"Pushing their way into what had otherwise been a private employee meeting of an annual nature, where the chairman saw fit to answer any and all questions he received and to try to make that look like an unprecedented move, and to put words in his mouth about romance and affair, to my mind is sick journalism," she said.

Although Miss Cunningham was vice president for corporate and public affairs at the time, she did not advise Agee on his statement. That, she said, was up to another executive who "interfaced with the media regularly."

Words like interface crop up in Mary Cunningham's conversation, which is full of very long, carefully structured sentences.

Miss Cunningham, blonde with a small neat figure, is attractive, as she says in her book. But her appearance is striking mainly for the care that goes into the makeup, the dresses, the nails and the posture. She has, apparently, always made an effort at everything.

"I was ambitious for worldly success, but only as a means to influence constructive change," she wrote. "It was a novel approach and one that sometimes antagonized my classmates. You just couldn't be ambitious and high-minded at the same time."

Once the Bendix era begins, however, "Powerplay" grows silent about how Mary Cunningham found moral meaning in all those brake studies and hostile corporate takeovers.

If she stopped talking values after graduation, it was only out of modesty, she said in the interview.

"Now it may not have been written about because it wasn't the fashionable thing to write about at the time. But in the Bendix organization — a great deal of (my) time was spent doing just this — mentoring other women, spending time with people for example, who were hired who had cerebral palsy, who had various kinds of physical infirmities, who were trying to do their job whether it was polishing the bronze outside the building or trying to help in the lunchroom.

"I spent hours with those individuals. No, I didn't write about in the book because frankly it would have looked a little self-serving."

Agee, who reneged on his promise to quit if the board forced Ms. Cunningham out, comes in for his share of knocks in the book.

"In his reading of the book Bill, I think, finally understood what it really felt like to be Mary Cunningham and to have felt the kind of loyalty and respect that drove me to accept a resignation, and to have done so without creating any more upheaval and turmoil — that I could have created — for the Bendix corporation," she said. "... A more retaliatory, more vindictive person would have behaved differently."

Agee, who later returned to apologize and propose, lost his job after the Martin Marietta fiasco, in which Bendix not only failed in its own takeover bid but wound up acquired by another company.

These days, she said, her husband is very happy in Cape Cod, where he is chairman of Semper Enterprises, a venture capital firm of which Mary Cunningham is president.

Dear Abby

Angry Child Seeks Parents' Apology for Their Mistakes

DEAR ABBY: Do you think parents should apologize to their children for the mistakes they made in raising them? This may seem like an absurd question, but I'm dead serious. I doubt that I will ever get over the hurts I've suffered at the hands of my parents until I hear them say those golden words, "We were wrong."

Without going into the details, the mistakes my parents made were big ones. Had I not spent years with a shrink working through a lot of emotional garbage, I would not have been able to write this letter.

One day I sat my parents down and explained some of the problems I've had—and why. I pleaded with them to acknowledge their guilt, and encouraged them to tell me their side of the story.

"It's all water under the bridge," my father said.

My mother said, "We did the best we could, and I don't think we have anything to apologize for."

Where do I go from here, Abby?

VICTIM

DEAR VICTIM: Go back to your shrink and find out why you can't seem to let go of your anger and resentment.

All parents "make mistakes" in raising their children, so in a sense we all suffer from our parents' mistakes, as they did from the mistakes of their parents.

Your passionate need to hear your parents acknowledge their "guilt" presupposes that their mistakes were made deliberately to hurt you, which is highly unlikely.

Most parents try to do their best, so their mistakes should be attributed to lack of knowledge and understanding rather than intentional malice.

DEAR ABBY: I believe that one can tell a great deal about a person by what he values in literature. Will you please share with your readers something you consider a literary or philosophical treasure? Thank you.

ROSEMARY IN PASADENA

DEAR ROSEMARY: With pleasure. It is from a slim little volume titled "The Prophet" by Kahil Gibran:

ON CHILDREN

"Your children are not your children. They are the sons and daughters of life's longing for itself. They come through you but not from you, and though they are with you, yet they belong not to you. You may give them your love, but not your thoughts. For they have their own thoughts. You may house their bodies but not their souls, for their souls dwell in the house of tomorrow, which you cannot visit, not even in your dreams. You may strive to be like them, but seek not to make them like you. For life goes not backward nor tarries with yesterday. You are the bows from which your children as living arrows are sent forth. The archer sees the mark upon the path of the infinite and he bends you to his might that his arrows may go swift and far. Let your bending in the archer's hand be for gladness; for even as he loves the arrow that flies, so he loves also the bow that is stable."

* * *

DEAR ABBY: It's Mother's Day eve as I write this. My children are now 23 and 24 and still living at home. They have just explained why they can't buy me a gift again. Each year it's a new reason, but it always boils down to the fact that they are short of money. I notice they always have money to buy whatever they want for themselves.

Abby, every year (also on my birthday and Christmas) I say, "What I really want wouldn't cost you a cent. Just make me a card, promising that for just one day you will gladly do any favors that I choose without arguing and complaining."

Would you believe they refused? The closest I've ever come to it was once when my son wrote out a list of his choices, which were not agreeable with me.

I ran into the same problem with my husband. I told him that for my birthday all I wanted was for him to do some handyman chores. No luck there either.

Was my suggestion out of line? I would think that most people would jump at the chance to do chores instead of spending money.

WHOSE DAY IS IT, ANYHOW?

DEAR WHOSE: To demand services in lieu of a purchased gift is no gift—it's blackmail.

The concept of services offered as a gift is lovely, but only when volunteered by the giver—not demanded by the recipient.

DEAR ABBY: I have mothered five children and here I sit, the morning after Mother's Day, wondering whether some children are just insensitive to their parents' feelings, or if I'm overreacting to my hurt.

All our kids are grown—some married, all have good jobs and are financially responsible. We raised them that way, and feel we did a good job. We don't live close to our children, but we keep in touch and are a close family.

I worked away from home only after our children were grown—not before—because I felt that raising them properly was my first priority. My husband is still employed full time. Every Christmas, birthday, anniversary, etc., I have sent all the children and their spouses a gift. (And made sure they arrived on time. When a birthday or Christmas gift arrives two weeks late, it loses some of its excitement.)

Today, I feel a little hurt because I received nothing for Mother's Day. I rationalized it, saying, "They're too busy—I really shouldn't feel this way."

I was a good mother. I gave my children lots of love, and let them go when it was time to leave the nest. I do not interfere in their lives.

I never forgot my own mother on Mother's Day, and find it hard to understand how any child could. So please, Abby, print this for children of all ages to read. Perhaps they aren't aware of how much it hurts to be forgotten.

FORGOTTEN IN PHOENIX

DEAR ABBY: I am one of the mothers who was forgotten on Mother's Day. I'm telling my adult children that from now on I want them to please forget all holidays and special days.

That way, when they forget, it will be at my request.

FORGOTTEN MOTHER, ANY TOWN, U.S.A.

A Review

"Star Trek III" Loaded With Mysticism

This is another voyage of the star ship "Enterprise." In another decade on a smaller screen, Gene Roddenberry created a story about a starship and crew which failed in its primary five-year mission of attracting high ratings but nevertheless boldly went on into the universe of syndicated reruns, seeking out new life forms and audiences.

AIN'T MISBEHAVIN' — Arnold Eric Prioleau and Joy Pryor sing "Honeysuckle Rose" from the musical review "Ain't Misbehavin," a salute to Fats Waller. The show, a presentation of Piccolo Spoleto, is being performed through the run of Spoleto Festival USA. (AP Laserphoto)

The "Enterprise" finally was beamed onto the large movie screen, and in "Star Trek III: The Search for Spock," now playing at the Plitt Theaters, Captain Kirk and his valiant but aging crew once again leap into warp drive.

Paramount Pictures used one of the oldest plot devices on record to insure the success of this film. At the conclusion of "Star Trek II" Mister Spock died. Or seemed to die. The Trekkies, fans of the original television program, and others who have become almost adicted to the adventures of the "Enterprise" and its crew had faith that this was not to be the end of the trip.

They were, of course, correct. "Star Trek III" promises to answer the riddle of Spcok's death.

For a story which once relied on action and fast pacing, "Star Trek III" is surprisingly slow this time around. The film is curiously loaded down with not only actors playing roles more suitable for people 20 years younger but also an excessive amount of metaphysical speculation.

The pseudo-philosophy was always part of the fun of the series, but in this reincarnation the sheer weight of monologues and dialogues about the nature of creation, life, and the soul is as obious as the age of the cast.

Producer-writer Harve Bennett presented director Leonard Nimoy a script overload with myth, mysticism, and religion. What he failed to provide was a dramatic story, one which would establish a narrative viewers would find exciting.

Successful science fiction often explores speculative regions, but the successful films, and books, entertain as story as well as essay; we care about the characters because of what they do. In "Star Trek III" we care about the characters because of who they were.

"Star Trek III" is a nostalgic movie. The pleasure derived from watching the film comes primarily from remembering earlier episodes of the adventure. First-time viewers will be lost, or bored. There are, however, enough fans to make the movie a success, and viewers who carry images of the television series with them to the theater will enjoy much of the movie.

The major question about "Star Trek III" is, of course, does Spock live? I think you know the answer.

Entertaining Fantasy

Enderby's Dark Lady. By Anthony Burgess. McGraw-Hill. 160 Pages. $14.95.

The inimitable Enderby lives.

Enderby is the earthy, middle-aged English poet who's been the subject of three previous novels. "Inside Enderby" ends with his attempted suicide. "Enderby Outside" tells of eccentric capers that lead to his flight to Morocco. "The Clockwork Enderby" brings him to New York and more escapades, terminating with his death from a heart attack.

But that death was fiction, Burgess says, a hypothesis that doesn't preclude another hypothesis, another choice of the author's. So instead of going to New York and dying, in "Enderby's Dark Lady" he goes off to Indiana, an alternative first visit to the United States to write a musical about Shakespeare — "not only in verse but in mock Tudor dialogue."

Enderby, Shakespeare and America are a combination full of antic potential. "Anything went down all right in this mad America," Enderby soon concluded. So he turned up for his first visit to the theater where the Shakespeare musical was being staged wearing a disreputable cap, "an overcoat of faded plum ... blue linen trousers, an open yellow shirt with crimson foulard and a seagreen cardigan. He wore no spectacles. He could see enough and some things he did not wish to see."

Enderby soon meets his dark lady — literally. She's a gorgeous black singer, the musical's female lead. He immediately falls in love with her, a weakness she deals with kindly. The rest of the theater people are entertainingly ridiculous.

The novel opens with a short story, a fantasy about Shakespeare set in Elizabethan England, which had won Enderby the commission to write the musical. It ends with another fantasy, another journey in time, featuring a space visitor in Shakespeare's England. In between is a dense, pithy mix of word play, ribald humor, slapstick, mishaps and misunderstandings and satire. It isn't dull.

Journey Of Restoration

I, Giorghos. By William J. Lederer. Norton. 287 Pages. $12.95.

While not every reader may find George Adamson's journey believable, few will argue the pleasure derived from reading a novel that is simple, straightforward and smooth-flowing, uncluttered by too much explanation and detail.

"I, Giorghos" is by William J. Lederer — an author, who along with Eugene Burdick, wrote "The Ugly American," a story that attracted much attention and interest when it was published some years back.

As "I, Giorghos" opens, Adamson, an American-born author, is on his way to Greece, where he had been acclaimed, 11 years earlier, for his book, "Mount Athos, the Holy Mountain." Adamson's returning to Greece older, heavier, and burdened by personal troubles. He needs the $10,000 advance promised by his Greek publisher for a new book in order to meet a $5,000 payment on his divorce settlement. He is 57 years old, and worried about his recent heart attack.

Almost from the moment Adamson steps on the plane to return to Greece, he begins a journey that will restore his physical health and his mental and emotional spirit. He will have many friends, old and new, to guide him along the way, including, oddly enough, an old, red Greek sailboat. During his stay in Greece, Adamson successfully researches and writes his new book about some early Greek saints.

But it is what Adamson doesn't discover in his research, which is what happened during the 40 days the saints went into the wilderness and fasted, that spurs him on to the final leg of his journey, where he finds the answers to some lifelong questions.

"I, Giorghos" is written in the form of a journal that Adamson keeps during a six-month period from April through October in 1967. In it, Adamson describes his adventures in Greece, the people he meets, and the struggle he has in ridding himself of past emotional scars. This is a very readable book, and Adamson is a thoroughly believable character.

JOURNALISM AWARD

UNIVERSITY PARK, Pa. (AP) — H. Eugene Goodwin, professor of journalism at Pennsylvania State University, has won an award for his book, "Groping for Ethics in Journalism."

Goodwin won the Frank Luther Mott-Kappa Tau Alpha Research Award for the best 1983 book involving journalism research. He will receive a $750 award at the August meeting of the Association for Education in Journalism at the University of Florida, Gainesville.

Goodwin will share the $1,000 award with Harrison E. Salisbury, who will receive $250 for his book, "The Journal for Our Times, A Memoir."

PAST REFLECTIONS

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The polished look has changed only slightly in three thousand years.

A researcher applied modern instruments to an ancient mirror and showed it was produced in much the same way as mirrors are ground today by amateur telescope makers.

Valerie Olson, an optical physicist at Hughes Aircraft, put an ancient Mexican mirror, made about 3,000 years ago by the Olmec people, to a series of tests that determined the well-preserved areas showed little light scattering, an indication of good polishing.

MUSICIANS ADDED

NEW YORK (AP) — The addition of four musicians to the permanent personnel of The Chamber Music Society of Lincoln Center beginning this fall will bring the society's artist roster to a total of 18.

This is the largest it has ever been and exactly double the number with which the society began operation in 1969.

CHOPIN FESTIVAL

MIAMI (AP) — The Chopin Foundation of the United States has announced that the first Chopin Colony Summer Music Festival will be held in Boone, N.C., July 8-26.

It says the festival, held in collaboration with Appalachian State University, will present "some of America's most gifted young musicians in solo, chamber music, and symphonic concerts."

PRIZE WINNERS

Roger Rosenblatt, author of "Children of War," won the $2,500 first prize. The book captures the perceptions of children in the war zones of Belfast, Israel, Lebanon, Cambodia and Vietnam.

Bienville Square Suffers From Overuse

By GARRY MITCHELL
Associated Press Writer

MOBILE, Ala. (AP) — Cows and pigs no longer roam Bienville Square, as they did more than a century ago. Gone is the sight of townsfolk hanging clothes from the park's tree limbs.

Gone, too, is the fence which the city erected around the square in the 1850s to keep out livestock.

But a fence couldn't keep out the urban problems which now plague the historic park in downtown Mobile — problems such as congestion and the wayfarer with a sleeping bag under his arm or wine bottle in a paper sack.

Since Hurricane Frederic struck the city in 1979, leaving tons of fallen tree limbs in its wake, concern has increased over the city's landscape appearance and the survival of wind-damaged trees that form a canopy over historic Government Street.

Bienville Square, with its 77 live oaks and solitary magnolia, draws particular concern, since the public park is set in the middle of the downtown business district and plays a key role in the city's history.

It is named after the city's founder, Jean Baptiste LeMoyne, Sieur de Bienville, who also founded New Orleans.

Last year, the city threw out an annual Mardi Gras drinking and rock-and-roll party that had located itself in the park and added to the wear and tear on the square.

A more dangerous threat has been the trample of feet over the past 141 years, compacting the sandy soil so much that water can hardly seep deep enough to reach tree roots, said Ray Dickens, a turf specialist at Auburn University, one of many specialists who have examined the square.

Years ago, the city attempted to build a bus stop canopy on one side of the park. That created such a stir that the canopy was cancelled, leaving an odd piece of concrete on the north side of the square.

"Park desecration," critics called the idea that sent attorneys to search deeds. They found that the park must always be a park, nothing more or less.

Other debates began over attempts to open a tourist information center and, on another occasion, to erect a billboard.

But the real threat to the park has come more from years of use, said landscape architect Fred Rux. He said three of the giant live oaks are dead and await removal.

"It's urban stress," Rux said, "earth compacted by people walking, lack of fertilizer."

Rux has a city contract to begin renovating the park this fall. The project includes installing an underground irrigation system.

Streetscapes, a non-profit corporation of volunteers, which wants to improve the city's appearance, has launched a drive to provide funds for a gardener and additional plantings.

"It'd be a sorry city if we couldn't raise the funds," said Anne Wright, president of Streetscapes.

Rux said 18 benches will be placed in the park when the renovation is complete and sidewalks leading to the central fountain have been repaired.

He said he hopes the gardener will discourage transients from loitering and sleeping in the park. "We want to encourage people to sit in the grass and eat lunch and discourage them from taking shortcuts across certain areas that are worn down."

Rux said the transient problem could be solved if people were attracted back to the park. "A transient doesn't feel as comfortable with people around."

Of course, he joked, "We could always turn on the sprinklers."

The renovation also calls for planting azaleas and holly.

Assistant Parks Superintendent Max McGill hailed the participation of private contributors since the city is strapped for funds.

"We're not able to maintain the parks at a level the city would like," McGill said. "We're mowing once every four or five weeks. We really ought to be doing it once every two weeks. We're not doing any edging and little raking."

Mobile has 51 parks, 20 of them downtown. The parks are maintained by 37 workers.

DICTIONARY PROJECT

NEW YORK (AP) — Plans to computerize the "Oxford English Dictionary" were recently announced by the Oxford University Press.

The undertaking is expected to span several years and cost roughly $10 million. It will involve the resources of IBM and the University of Waterloo, Ont., in addition to those of Oxford.

The dictionary at present exists in 13 hardbound volumes of 16,570 pages, with three additional supplements of about 1,300 pages each and a fourth one due in 1985.

DELACROIX SHOW

There are about 70 prints and drawings in the show; they range from Delacroix's studies of Algerian women to works based on Shakesperean subjects.

The Judas Priest Band Is Loud, Aggressive

By MARY CAMPBELL
AP Newsfeatures Writer

"We don't go around blowing our own trumpets," says Judas Priest's lead vocalist, Rob Halford, when that's mentioned to him.

"But we can substantiate it with our shows and albums, our belief in ourselves and what we see around us from other heavy metal bands.

"There are some quite good American heavy metal bands but I wouldn't put them in the same league as Judas Priest. I don't say we're the greatest heavy metal band in the world but I welcome that remark. I'm not going to refute it for one second."

The five-man group, now on a long American tour, saw its first album come out 10 years ago. The big breakthrough in America was two years ago.

"Most of our records were selling gold in America," Halford says. "Suddenly 'Screaming for Vengeance' went platinum last year. It was a remarkable leap forward for the band in America.

"Tours have been lucky in America for a number of years. We've been able to tour extensively and fill major arenas. Our show is a spectacle and entertaining and unique."

The current album, "Defenders of the Faith," the faith being heavy metal music, went to No. 18 on U.S. best-selling charts the first two weeks in March. It had only fallen to No. 70 by June 2.

Each album has sold more than the one before, Halford says, and the band is optimistic that will continue. However, he admits, there almost was a dip in 1981, with "Point of Entry."

"We did feel we lost a little bit of momentum with 'Point of Entry.' It shook us up, actually. People within the industry remarked how good they felt it was and how it matched the previous album, 'British Steel.'

"I think fans were expecting another 'British Steel.' But our thought was not to take heavy metal to its extremes but explore the possibilities of writing songs with a heavy metal approach. It didn't go, though it finally sold more than 'British Steel.' We learned a lesson.

"We went in with a straightforward raw approach to putting the 'Screaming for Vengeance' album together and it proved to be extremely successful. We did the same with 'Defenders of the Faith.' I think it's the greatest thing Priest has ever written."

The cover of the album shows a "metallian," a cat-like, heavy-metal monster. Halford says, "We built the album cover and put it on stage in three-dimensional view in humungous scale. The mouth on the critter is seven feet high. I spew forth from it to make my entrance."

Although Judas Priest is willing to spend money on its shows, members don't ignore making money and trying to hang on to it. For the last couple of years, they've been tax exiles from England.

"I'm from a small industrial town in the Midlands of England, Walsall, known for its steel, iron and leather," Halford says. "It's quite ironic, me being a leather freak. My mother, father and 17-year-old brother, a budding musician, still live there. I've still got a house there. I do have a home in Phoenix. I'm the first member to make a sort of movie, I guess. I'm still a swinging bachelor.

"Ken Downing and Ian Hill live in a fairly close radius. Ian is married to my sister. Glen Tipton lives about 30 odd miles north and Dave Holland is the same distance south.

"Not having the freedom of going back to England more than 60 days of the year is a raw deal but I'd rather suffer that than give it all to the tax man," the singer says. "It's the way of making sure you hold on to what you've slaved 10 years for, keeping it available for later in life."

As for writing songs, he says, "Up until the 'British Steel' album, myself, Ken and Glen wrote songs alone or in twos.

"That generally leads to some sort of tension, especially when royalty checks come in. It's something you have to be very careful about. It can be destructive. Outside of the pleasure you do get, you want a decent wage at the end of the year. I think that was one of the reasons we decided to sit down as three people and write songs together.

"It not only dismissed that area of argument but we suddenly realized we'd been wasting each other's talents. Now ideas come flooding out of us."

Halford says that when Judas Priest started, as a quartet — none of them are members now — in about 1970, the vocalist took the name from a Bob Dylan lyric. K. K. Downing and Ian Hill, learned to play guitar and bass, and joined when the original guitarist and bassist left. "Then the singer and drummer left," Halford says. "Ian was dating my sister. He said, 'Why not try Rob?', for which I'm eternally grateful.

"The band started to attract attention. A record company offered us a deal. K. K. felt he wanted another guitarist in the band to fill out the gaps that are always apparent when a rhythm guitarist starts to play leads. These days it doesn't matter to people. But thank goodness we've got two guitarists now. Glen came in two weeks before we made the first record.

"In retrospect, we would say that's when the typical Judas Priest came into being."

The group moved to Columbia Records from Gull Records for its third record, "Sin after Sin," in 1977.

"We're clean-living boys and always have been," Halford says. "We do have Mom and apple pie in England, you know."

But they wear leather, which some don't consider the badge of "clean-living boys."

Halford says, "Leather is a very comfortable form of clothing, practical, long-wearing, extremely expensive and smells nice as well.

"Leather is also a somewhat sadistic look. But the music and the look has to go together. On the cover of the first album we're in silks and satins. I thought, this sounds good but it doesn't look right. I used to do costume changes. I wore a leather jacket for a song from the second album and the rest of the guys thought that appeared to be the right direction. We changed as a unit to develop the image of leather and chains. We started to bring in whips, motorcycles and machine guns. It got completely out of control.

"These days we're trying to stylize. We've got new costumes — but not too far removed from what people have seen in the past.

Family's Store Offers Variety But No Frills

DUNBAR, Pa. (AP) — Pechin's Shopping Village has a bad location, a slipshod look, a pockmarked parking lot, no piped-in music — and a $30 million yearly business.

Its rock-bottom prices, like coffee for a nickel and free meals for senior citizens, keep a loyal core of mostly blue-collar patrons coming back from as far away as Ohio, West Virginia and Maryland.

"When people go shopping, they want the best prices and best quality, not necessarily a lot of frilly things," says Donald D'Amico, manager of the earthy emporium in rural Fayette County south of Pittsburgh.

"As for music and soft lights, it's not something our customers expect. We're always working to improve, making it easier to shop. But I don't think we'll ever have marble walls."

Pechin's (pronounced Peech-uns) offers meats, groceries, shoes, jeans, fertilizer, pet food, linoleum, plumbing, pool chemicals, motor oil, lottery tickets, trout lures and rifles in a complex that expanded from one store. If you drive another mile, you can also buy from the family lumber mill.

In the food market, unmarked aisles that have no understandable pattern separate stacks of groceries, some still in crates.

Covered by a sagging, leaky roof is a floor of concrete, tile and patched planks — a sign of hasty expansion for a store that has 250 non-union workers and is closed on Sunday.

Pechin's sits near a fork in a road several miles off U.S. Route 119 past a junkyard at the foot of Dunbar Mountain in this hamlet of 1,400 residents. Gist Run Creek runs along and under part of the store, which makes winter shopping cold and slippery.

"I call it the second worst location in the world. I'm sure there's one somewhere that's worse than this, but I don't know where it is," says Sullivan D'Amico, 60, who opened the store in 1947.

"But we must be satisfying somebody or we wouldn't do business," he adds. "As long as I'm successful, I'm not changing anything. We try to get the best possible prices for our customers. If they aren't saving money, why would they come here?"

The store started in a basement of 500 square feet and grew to over 50,000 square feet of space, although D'Amico never made an exact count. He buys directly from name-brand manufacturers and only when products are on special to keep the markup as low as possible.

The meat department, which offers the store's most prized bargains, butchered 17 cattle carcasses and 3,125 chickens on a recent Friday. D'Amico resorted to a rationing system after brawls broke out among people waiting for choice cuts.

"It's not a fancy place, but it serves a purpose. If I bought $50 worth of groceries here, it would cost me $75 just up the road," says John Dvorcak, 75. "What do I care about fancy if prices are out of this world?"

Cultured Pearls Are Coming Soon

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Some 250,000 irritated mussels are reluctantly growing a crop of pearls for John Latendresse in unpolluted lakes at secret locations in Louisiana, Texas and Tennessee.

It is the first commercial cultured pearl venture in this country, the result of years of research that started in Tennessee in 1963.

"For security reasons, I can't say where the lakes are," Latendresse says. "Everyone wants to learn our secrets. And we are afraid of losing some of our pearl farms due to toxicity."

What he means is that an unfriendly competitor could dump chemicals into the water and foul up production. Mussels choke in polluted water — one reason 23 species are on the endangered species list.

Latendresse's American Pearl Farms, of Camden, Tenn., looks forward to harvesting pearls by the bushel. He sells most of them at prices ranging from $2 to $150 each.

"We have taken some already — nothing great," says Latendresse. "We sold them to collectors. They were clamoring to buy the first fresh water pearls grown in America."

The 250,000 mussels were gathered from rivers or lakes in Kentucky or Tennessee by scuba divers who work at depths of up to 93 feet.

In the nucleating laboratory in Camden, each mussel chosen to become the "mother" of a pearl is carefully pried open by one of the firm's 41 employees. A tiny bit of matter, either a chunk of meat cut out of a "sacrifice" mussel or a bead of shell, is placed inside.

It takes 10 to 15 minutes.

After that, the mother mussel goes back into the holding trough to rest and recuperate and to be transferred later to a lake.

There the mothers spend the rest of their life, two or three years, suspended on a net, pampered and monitored, doing their best to ease the irritation caused by the foreign material placed within their body by coating it with layers of calcium and lustrous nacre.

In two or three years, each mother mussel has made a pearl, hopefully a nice round one, since they are preferred over the egg shapes, baroques and "sticks."

Latendresse says a harvest is scheduled for fall, with the first major harvest to come in 1986. He says a well-managed farm of 30 surface acres will produce, in two or three years, about 5 million pearls of over two carats each.

Latendresse got most of his techniques from the Japanese, who have done it for a long time. He says the mortality rate, 75 to 80 percent at the start, was down to 7 percent — less than the Japanese rate.

Research Unit Says Spending Cuts, Tax Increases Needed

By Martin Crutsinger
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Ballooning federal deficits can only be brought in line through a combination of domestic and military spending cuts and hefty tax increases, according to a study published by a leading liberal research organization.

The Brookings Institution warned that the need to reduce the federal deficit was so urgent that Congress should impose a spending freeze on most domestic programs for next year and raise everyone's taxes through a surcharge of up to 6 percent.

In one of the most sweeping changes, the study called for scrapping the current income tax in favor of a tax on what a person spends.

A change to a consumption tax would replace the "appallingly complex" 71-year-old personal income tax with a system that would reward savings and investment, according to the study, which was published Tuesday. A consumption tax covers only spending while exempting savings.

The nex tax could raise $108 billion additional revenue for the government in 1989, eliminating more than one-third of the expected $308 billion deficit that year, the study predicted.

The study said by adding cuts in domestic programs — such as Social Security and Medicare — and reducing military expenditures by canceling such weapons systems as the MX missile and the B-1 bomber, the deficit for 1989 could be shrunk to $20 billion.

While the Reagan administration has supported domestic spending cuts similar to those advanced by the Brookings study, it has fought hard to maintain its defense buildup and protect the tax cuts it won in 1981.

The administration is in the middle of its own review of the tax code with its recommendations scheduled to be made public following the November election. The consumption tax is one of several options being considered, but Treasury Secretary Donald Regan said recently such a tax could unfairly penalize lower income persons who must spend a larger portion of their incomes on necessities.

But the Brookings study said that by taxing expenditures on a sliding rate, the progressive nature of the current tax system could be maintained. The study said that a tax rate ranging from between 6 percent and 38 percent would be sufficient to raise the money meeded to whittle down the budget deficits.

The current tax rate ranges up to 50 percent. But the Brookings plan would eliminate exemptions such as interest on home mortgage payments.

While the Reagan administration has stressed budget cuts as the key to reducing deficits, the Brookings study said these cuts must be coupled with tax increases to make any kind of dent on deficits projected to total $600 billion over the next three years.

"A plan to bring the deficit down must be perceived as fair, spreading the pain over taxpayers and recipients of government benefits," said Alice Rivlin, former head of the Congressional Budget Office and the Director of the Brookings study.

"We believe that the domestic spending programs can be made more effective, defense objectives can be obtained at substantially lower cost and a thorough overhaul of the federal tax system can make it both fairer and more favorable to economic growth," she told a news conference Wednesday.

The Brookings study, titled "Economic Choices," would go much farther in attacking deficits than is currently being contemplated by Congress or the Reagan administration.

The study calls for deficit reduction measures totaling $323 billion over the next three years, compared to a $140.1 billion Senate-passed package and a $182.4 billion House measure.

For the 1985 fiscal year, which begins in October, the study calls for a one-year freeze in domestic spending, including the elimination of cost-of-living raises for Social Security recipients. The only exemption to the freeze would be welfare programs.

In addition, the study calls for a $2 billion cut in President Reagan's defense buildup in 1985 and a $23 billion tax increase, made up of either a 6 percent surcharge added to everyone's current tax bill or a smaller surcharge coupled with elimination of a variety of deductions.

In 1986 and later, the plan calls for more sweeping cuts in domestic and defense programs. People not now drawing Social Security benefits would see future benefits reduced, but those currently on the program would be protected. In addition, increases in Medicare health payments would be limited to 1 percent above the level of inflation.

Task Force Wants More Chemistry

WASHINGTON (AP) — Too little science is taught in elementary schools, too few high school teachers are well-grounded in chemistry, and even college courses in chemistry fail to fill the needs of students, according to a special task force of the American Chemical Society.

In a recent report they offered 40 recommendations to help solve these and other pressing problems of chemistry education.

"One of the most important changes that must be made is a reemphasis of laboratory work," says Dr. Peter Yankwich, a chemistry professor at the University of Illinois, Urbana, and chair of the task force. "Students are expected to learn from watching a teacher demonstrate a principle like neutralization of an acid with a base, but it's just not the same as giving a student 'hands on' experience."

Laboratory exercises have been used less and less in recent years because they are expensive and the logistics, such as scheduling time for each student to use a limited number of instruments, can be difficult, according to the report.

The task force emphasizes that laboratory work is important for students at all levels, from kindergarten to graduate school. In high school, the report says, 30 percent of class time should be dedicated to laboratory work.

Another major recommendation is for "vigorous and large expansion of National Science Foundation and other federal programs to upgrade the quality of science instruction through direct service to teachers." According to the report, only a quarter of elementary school teachers feel confident in teaching what little science is in their curriculum.

At the high school level, says Yankwich, the vast majority of students are not being taught chemistry by certificated teachers of chemistry. They are being taught by persons who have minimal background in chemistry and little if any qualifications to maintain and advance their working familiarity with the subject.

"We need to encourage teachers to keep up with the advances in their subjects, to expand their understanding of the sciences," he says. As recently as 1977, almost half of all high school science teachers had taken part in NSF-sponsored education programs, but those programs no longer exist and the number of teachers taking part in continuing education programs has declined significantly.

The task force also recommends establishing guidelines for college-level chemistry courses aimed at non-science majors.

"Chemistry is a neglected liberal art with an important role in contemporary society," Yankwich says. "Understanding it is fundamental, particularly because our society must make many important decisions about technical questions on energy, health, disposal of toxic wastes, and other subjects that affect all of us."

Radio Comedian Created A 'Town'

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) — In a cluttered office cubicle in downtown St. Paul, America's Tallest Radio Comedian is thinking long and hard about shag carpets, church suppers and cast-iron deer.

It is Wednesday, and Garrison Keillor's mind is on Lake Wobegon, Minn., the fictional "hometown" he created, a town that 2 million Americans feel they know as well as any on the map.

Come Saturday, Keillor will do what he has done most every Saturday for the past 10 years: don a cream-colored suit and red tie and stand before a tangled web of microphones in a shabby St. Paul theater.

There, in a halting cadence as rich and soothing as a swallow of sorghum, the 6-foot-4 expatriate with the bushy eyebrows and jutting jaw will bring America the news from "the little town that time forgot and the decades cannot improve."

If the decades have been unable to improve Lake Wobegon, the same does not hold true for the radio program that showcases it. When "A Prairie Home Companion" made its debut on July 6, 1974, the live audience totaled 20 people.

Success didn't come overnight. It wasn't until 1980 that the show went national. The following year, it won the George Foster Peabody Award and has since grown into a coast-to-coast hit, attracting more than 2 million listeners — multitudes by public radio standards.

Each week, 1,600 fans fill the Orpheum Theater in downtown St. Paul, outnumbering the hardy souls of Lake Wobegon by 500. General admission costs $5, and tickets are sold out two months in advance.

The show, produced by Minnesota Public Radio station KSJN, is carried by 218 public radio stations across the country, and it is credited with raising $3 million for public radio.

Fans tune in to hear an eclectic blend of fiddle, piano and banjo music, and to listen to off-beat guests like Dr. Tom Weaver, who taps out the "William Tell Overture" on his teeth.

They tune in to hear "ads" for "sponsors" like Ralph's Pretty Good Grocery ("If you can't find it at Ralph's, you can probably get along without it"), the Fearmonger's Shoppe ("Serving your phobia needs since 1954"), and Powdermilk Biscuits, available "in the big brown bag with the dark stains that indicate freshness."

But mostly, they tune in to hear Keillor, who lopes onstage midway through each two-hour show to deliver a 30-minute monologue from the town where "the women are strong, the men are good-looking, and all the children are above average."

Lake Wobegon actually was founded on Keillor's morning show, which ran from 1968 to 1982. He invented sponsors to make the show seem more successful.

Powdermilk Biscuits was his first sponsor. Jack's Auto Repair ("All tracks lead to Jack's") signed on at about the same time.

By 1976, a town had sprung up to house these sponsors, and listeners began meeting such colorful citizens as Father Emil, conservative pastor of Our Lady of Perpetual Responsibility Church.

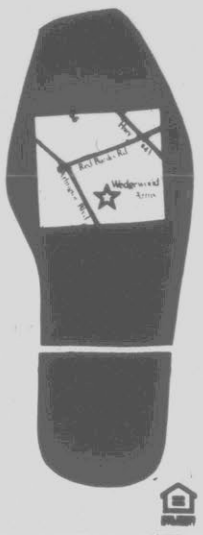
We put our foot down about apartments being within walking distance.



Wedgewood Arms apartments are within walking distance of three shopping centers, a nursery school, a junior high school, doctors' and dentists' offices and an athletic center.

As if that wasn't enough, three major traffic arteries, 264 Bypass, Arlington Blvd., and Charles St. are close enough to be seen and not heard.

Fact is, no apartments in town can legitimately claim to be more convenient to more things than Wedgewood Arms.

And, that's not all. Because Wedgewood Arms is not only convenient, it's different in other ways, too.

Take the floorplans: they're different from anything you've ever seen. And when you add in high energy efficiency, tennis courts, swimming pool, and the neighborhood "feeling" that these apartments will give you – well, you'll just have to see for yourself.

Featival Centers On Eating Catfish

BELZONI, Miss. (AP) — You know you've made the right turn off Mississippi 49 for the World Catfish Festival when the smell of cooking oil begins to fill the air.

There's enough oil to fry about 6,000 pounds of catfish pieces, including several pounds each for the entrants to Belzoni's famed catfish-eating contest.

Cotton may be king in the South, but in Belzoni he bows to catfish, who's crowned anew each year.

Belzoni, population 2,500, is the seat of Humphreys County, and "Catfish Capital of the World," as any T-shirt sold on festival day reminds you. Of the 61,000 acres of catfish ponds in Mississippi, 30,000 are in Humphreys County, Mayor Tom Turner says. And he also says that there are only 10,000 more acres in the whole world where catfish are farm-raised.

Turner, who has spent his life in Belzoni, grows cotton, soybeans and rice — not catfish, although he spends a great deal of time promoting the whiskered, freshwater creatures.

The town Turner heads is so small you can pass it by in a flash. But when you finally come upon the patriotically festooned Humphreys County Courthouse, you've found the right place.

The Art Of Taxidermy

Preserving Outdoor Memories

Those exquisite drake pintails, eight-point buck heads and 10-pound bass often seen mounted on living room walls serve as showpieces or conversation starters, and bring back fond memories for the hunter and fisherman — freezing in a blind, standing on the bank of a pond while swatting yellow flies. At least they serve these purposes if they're mounted properly.

Two local taxidermists say that a good mount is one that appears life-like. It must be in a natural position, painted well and must have been taken care of properly after it was taken.

Joe Albea, who is a hunter and wildlife photographer, said "the ultimate outcome of the bird is determined by the taxidermist knowing the animal and its habits. I'd say about 50 percent of how the animal turns out is how natural-looking it is when it's finished."

Albea, who only mounts birds, began practicing taxidermy nine years ago when he took a 10-week course at Pitt Community College. Albea said the instuctor showed the class a step-by-step process and then let them work on their own birds.

"Even though I took the course, I really had to learn by practice. You have to have a lot of interest in it because it gets pretty involved, especially with birds," he said. Albea, who is manager of the Outdoor Shop, has mounted birds on a full-time basis with Franc White of the Southern Sportsman. He now does it three or four months out of the year.

"In the years I've been doing it, I've probably mounted 800 or 900 birds. That plays a big part in how well they're mounted. The more you do, the better you do them and the less time it takes," Albea commented.

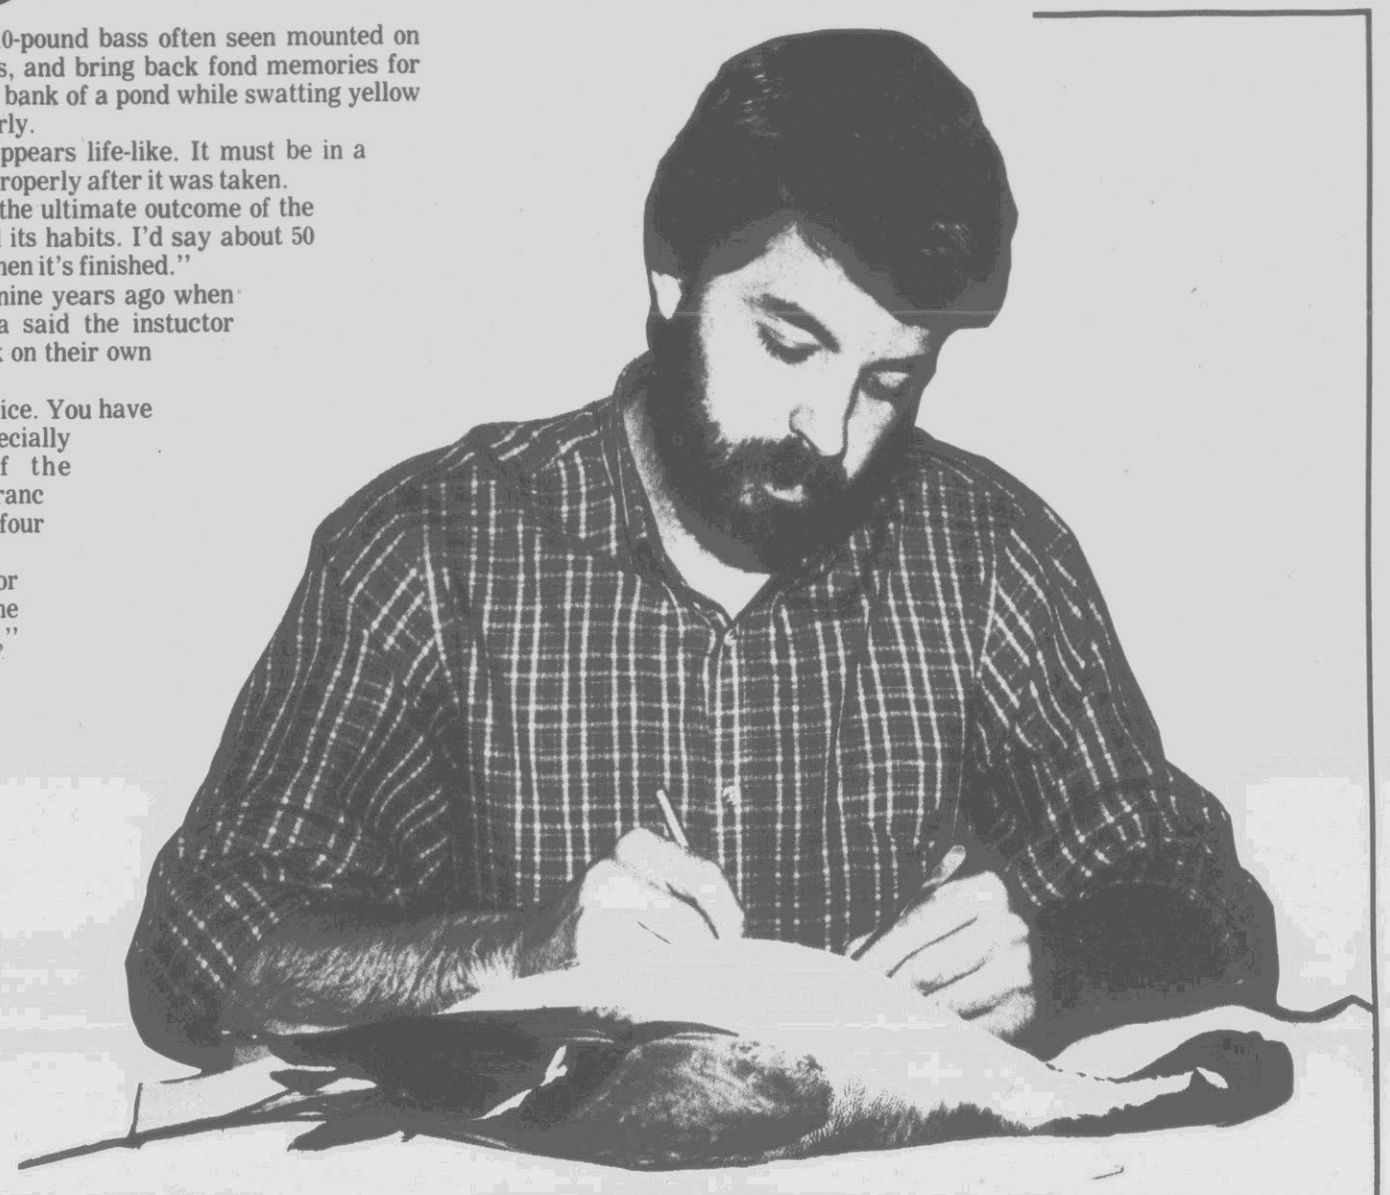
Another well-known taxidermist is Perry Rogers, who mounts almost everything except birds. He feels that the basic principles of taxidermy are easy to learn, but those skills must be perfected by practice.

"To learn taxidermy you can read a book, take a class or whatever. But you develop your own techniques and style by doing. The real work is learned by trial and error, experimentation and motivation," he said.

For example, Rogers said he can paint a bass in five minutes, but it took him years to learn how.

Rogers, who is a fireman and native Pitt Countian, learned how to mount animals when he was 14 years old, but did not do it as a business until 1981. He now operates his business, Roger's Taxidermy, from his home in Hardee Acres.

"When I was a small boy I had a friend, Jay Johnson, who was a master taxidermist. That's how I became interested in it," he said.



JOE ALBEA begins the first incision on a drake pintail.

To become a taxidermist a person must obtain a state license, which does not require any kind of stipulations. To mount birds, a person must also obtain a federal license, which requires that he show some type of taxidermy training, whether it is a course or an apprenticeship.

The basic principles of mounting an animal are relatively simple: (1) take the animal, (2) skin the animal, (3) preserve the skin, (4) make or buy an artificial body, (5) stretch the skin over the artificial body and fasten it in place, (6) pose the animal, (7) retouch faded colors, and (8) mount the animal on a suitable panel.

But before the animal can be mounted, it must have been taken care of properly after it was killed. For game birds, such as waterfowl, dove, quail and pheasant, Albea made the following suggestions:

1. Don't put a feathered bird in a plastic bag and put him in the freezer. Condensation occurs on the inside of the bag and "rains" on the bird. It takes six hours to eight hours for a bird to totally freeze, so the feathers will become matted if they get wet.
2. Dry the bird well before freezing.
3. Wrap the bird in newspaper or paper towels and then put him in a plastic bag.
4. Place a paper towel in the bird's mouth.
5. If the bird is wounded on the back or stomach, wash the wound with cold water and lay the bird with the wound up in the freezer.

Albea said it takes about 15 minutes to take good care of the bird. He stressed that it will only look as good completed as it did when it was brought to him.

Rogers also said an animal should not be mounted if it is not in good shape. "A taxidermist is not a genius. He can't make something out of nothing," he said.

Rogers said not to wrap fish in newspapers because it absorbs the moisture out of them. He suggested a plastic bag or aluminum foil.

Rogers said there are two main causes for bad deer mounts: (1) the skin was split too far up the throat, and (2) the deer wasn't brought to the taxidermist fast enough.

"The person who shot the deer usually rides it around on the back of his truck too long showing it off. The thin areas spoil quickly in the sun," Rogers commented.

If a person can't remember what to do after an animal has been killed, Rogers said he should call a taxidermist and ask him.

After an animal is mounted, it requires little care. Both taxidermists said to keep the mounted animal out of direct sunlight or heat. Albea suggested lightly dusting mounted birds with a damp paper towel once a month.

If an animal has been mounted properly and is taken care of, it really should be a showpiece for many years.

"Taxidermy is an art form and you must have a creative mind to do it. It is a series of concepts and ideas relayed from moments in the field and reveals characteristics you remember from a hunt or highlights of an exciting event," Rogers commented.

Indian Dancers Plan Performance

DURHAM — The Uday Shankar India Culture Centre Dance Company will make its first appearance at the American Dance Festival, Monday through Wednesday as part of the ADF's First International Modern Dance Festival. The performances will be at Reynolds Theater at the Bryan Center on Duke University's West Campus and begins at 8 p.m.

Highlighting the performances will be choreography which represents the work of three members of the Shankar family. The family, most especially Uday Shankar, is renowned throughout India and the world for leadership in India's modern dance movement.

Pieces by the late Uday Shankar include an excerpt from his 1941 "Man and Machine;" "Village Festival," a lively folk piece from 1935; and "Bathing," a depiction of five girls near a water's edge, from 1931.

Also on the program will be "Missing You" by Amala Shankar, a tribute to her husband, Uday Shankar; and "Surya Pranam," by Mamata Shankar, Uday Shankar's daughter, which is an homage to the sun god. The works will be performed to live music by the company of nineteen dancers and musicians noted for its multi-colored costumes and exotic musical scores.

Uday Shankar, who early in his career performed with and choreographed for the legendary Anna Pavlova, created his modern choreographic style by building on traditional Indian themes. He toured extensively throughout the world and particularly in the United States under the ageis of the late impressario, Sol Hurok.

Shankar's family — which consists of brothers Ravi, Rayandra, Aschia and Devendra; his wife Amala; daughter Mamata and son Ananda — continues to perform and teach the works and technique left by Uday Shankar as well as choreographing and composing new works of their own.

In addition to the three performances, the company will participate in the ADF's humanities program, "Dances and Their People: The Aesthetic and Cultural Significance of Modern Dance" at 5 p.m. on the lawn of Baldwin Auditorium on Duke University's West Campus. This event is open to the public.

For tickets and ticket information call the box office at 684-4059, and for information on any of the ADF's 50th anniversary activities call the ADF offices at 684-6402.

OLD BONE — A finger bone encircled by a ring, perhaps a wedding ban, was discovered by a volunteer digger at the Custer Battlefield National Monument in southeastern Montana recently. A five-week dig, which started in May, has already found more battle artifacts than anyone expected from the 1876 battle between Sioux Indians and an army led by George Armstrong Custer. No white man survived the battle, which has been immortalized as "Custer's Last Stand." (AP Laserphoto)

American Dance Festival Set To Begin Golden Anniversary

DURHAM — In a special evening of celebration, the American Dance Festival will begin its Golden Anniversary season tonight by honoring some of modern dance's most beloved pioneers.

Highlight of tonight's celebration will be the presentation of the 1984 Samuel H. Scripps/American Dance Festival Award to choreogrpaher/educator Hanya Holm. Broadway entertainer Alfred Drake will present the $25,000 award, offered annually to choreographers who have made significant lifetime contributions to modern dance. The award, the largest of its kind in America, established in 1981, has previously been awarded to Martha Graham, Merce Cunningham and Paul Taylor.

In addition to her wide range of work in choreographing and teaching modern dance, Miss Holm worked extensively on Broadway, choreographing musicals such as "Kiss Me Kate," "My Fair Lady," and "Camelot."

Tonight's celebration event will also offer appreciation to many leaders in modern dance, with special dedications to Balasaraswati, exponent of South Indian dance; Martha Hill, founder of the American Dance Festival at Bennington and Connecticut Colleges; Louis Horst, composer and mentor to a number of outstanding choreographers; and John Martin, author, dance lecturer and first dance critic of the New York Times.

The awards and dedication will be followed by a performance of Miss Holm's work by the Don Redlich Dance Company, and a 20-minute video presentation about Miss Holm's life and work, prepared by Marilyn Cristofori for an upcoming national broadcast.

Presentor Alfred Drake, who worked with Miss Holm on the Broadway production of "Kiss Me Kate," is perhaps best-known for originating the role of Curly in "Oklahoma," for which he won the Variety New York Drama Critics Poll in 1943. He also appeared in "Kiss Me Kate" and "The King and I."

The ceremony and performance will take place at Duke University's Page Auditorium before an audience of invited guests, members of the Association for the American Dance Festival, ADF subscribers, faculty, students, staff and celebrities from the dance world.

THE MARINE BAND ... from the 2d Marine Aircraft Wing at Cherry Point will perform at 7 p.m. today at the Sunday in the Park site on the grassy slope east of Reade Street between Third and Fourth Streets. There is no admission charged and the event is open to the public.

Sunday In The Park Opens With Famed Marine Band

Greenville's 1984 Summer in the Park season will open at 7 p.m. today with a performance of musicians in blue uniforms — members of the 2d Marine Aircraft Wing Band. The band, which has played here several summers, is under the leadership of Master Gunnery Sergeant Dwight Treat. Gunnery Sergeant Stephen J. Stafford is the band's drum major.

Organized in 1943 in the Pacific Theater of Operations, the 2d Marine Aircraft Wing Band has been home-based at Marine Corps Air Station in Cherry Point since 1946.

The band is composed of a field band, concert band, stage band, rock group and a combo. It has performed in 28 states, in Canada, Mexico, Scotland, Germany, Denmark, England, Bermuda, and in the Caribbean. Some of these performances have been for celebration events or festivals such as the Mardi Gras, the Cotton Bowl, the Kentucky Derby, Indy "500", among many others. The band recently took part in the NATO International Azalea Festival in Norfolk and at the inauguration of the govenor of Illinois.

For the band's program here today, a range of music covering melodies from Broadway, light classics, patriotic, pops, and military music will be presented. A special musical tribute will be paid to all branches of the armed forces as a commemorative gesture to the 40th anniversary of the landing of troops on Normandy Beach in France on June 6, 1944.

Director Treat is a native of Cottage Grove, Oregon. He joined the Marines in August 1953. During his 30-vear career, he has toured with bands of units stationed in Japan, California and Okinawa. He and his wife, the former Judith Lee Wilson have three children.

Drum major Stafford of New Haven, Conn., enlisted in the Marines in October 1975. In addition to duty at Cherry Point, Stafford was previously assigned to a Marine Band in Japan.

Patrons attending the concert are reminded to bring along folding chairs, pillows, blankets, etc. for greater listening comfort. In the event of rain, no rain date has been set.

The seven Sunday in the Park concerts for the summer of 1984 are under the auspices of the Greenville Recreation and Parks Commission, with Stuart Aronson coordinating the programs. Funding for the program is provided by the city of Greenville.

Country Star Hoyt Axton Turns To Acting For His Second Try

By BOB THOMAS
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — It's the second time around as an actor for country music star Hoyt Axton, and this time he may have it right.

Axton stars in "Gremlins," a major candidate for top summer box-office honors, playing an amiably incompetent inventor who brings home a lovable little creature that later spawns an army of creepy crawlies and terrorizes a town.

Axton, 46, came here from his Lake Tahoe headquarters for the film's press junket but he didn't stay at the brand-new Sheraton Premiere Hotel at Universal City with the other junketeers.

"I drove my Greyhound down, and I always stay at Beverly Garland's Howard Johnson Inn," said the friendly, mountainous Axton. "Many of the country music people stay there because there's room to park your buses. And the rooms have thick walls so you can play music in the early morning if you want to."

These days Hoyt Axton is drawing as much attention as an actor as he does for his country music. He usually is cast in the role of a father, as in "Black Stallion," "Liar's Moon," "Heart Like a Wheel" and now "Gremlins."

Axton first started acting in the TV series, "Bonanza." He said producer David Dortort saw him at a club here in 1962 and made the offer.

"I did it, and I was horrible," Axton said. "I wasn't prepared, and I blew it. Then I did a role in a movie 'Smoky' with Fess Parker, and I was bad in that one, too. I realized I was taking up space and time that I didn't deserve; I was taking jobs from others far more dedicated and capable than I was."

Axton said he needed training, so he enrolled at the Columbia Studio workshop and then at Eric Morris' Circle Theater.

"After a few months, I said to myself: 'These other guys are studying how to get loose. I'm already loose as a goose.' That's when I quit and went back to music," he said.

The Oklahoma-born Axton has been around music all his life, working at it since he was 15. His inspiration, he said, came when his mother read a news clipping about a nameless suicide, then he and a friend turned out a song in 22 minutes. It became Elvis Presley's hit "Heartbreak Hotel."

Axton started playing the San Francisco coffee-house scene in 1958. Four years later he and a friend composed "Greenback Dollar," a hit for the Kingston Trio. He also turned out "The Pusher" for Steppenwolf and toured with Three Dog Night, contributing to their big sellers, "Joy to the World" and "Never Been to Spain." Meanwhile, his own career as a country music singer was thriving.

"I stayed away from acting for 10 years," he remarked. "Then in 1975, Dennis Weaver, who I think is a great guy, said he had a good role for me to play in 'McCloud.' I played it and really had a good time. After that I did a 'Bionic Woman' and a few other things."

During the "Gremlins" junket, Axton told director Joe Dante and producer Michael Finnell he objected to two things in the film: a vulgar anatomical reference and a girl's recital of how her father had died trying to climb down the chimney as Santa Claus.

"I'm no preacher and I'm no prude," Axton remarked afterward, "but a lot of Hollywood people don't realize there's a whole nation out there between Bakersfield and East Orange, N.J., filled with people who don't think as they do."

Alaskans See '91 As Year To Decide Fate Of Culture

By PAUL JENKINS
Associated Press Writer

KOTZEBUE, Alaska (AP) — For Alaska natives still trying to preserve their traditional culture, 1991 could prove as fateful as the advent of the white trader, explorers, and exploiters two centuries ago.

Only in a few villages have native ways survived the encroachments of modern civilization, with its cash economy and alien values.

Of late, there's been a rekindling of interest in maintaining old ways, but the natives' past as well as their future is tied to the land. That link could be broken in 1991, when the protection Congress afforded the 13 native corporations in the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act expires.

The law set up the corporations to accept nearly $1 billion and 44 million acres to settle aboriginal land claims in Alaska and each native was give 100 shares of stock. The shares could not be sold, nor the land be taxed — until after 1991.

Now, there is a growing fear that the stock — which has paid few dividends to shareholders — will be sold and rich multinational firms will wind up with the land, and its resources in minerals and timber.

"It's not a chance. I'd say there's a 90 percent probability that the stock will be sold," says Sheldon Katchatag of Unalakleet, vice chairman of the United Tribes of Alaska, which claims to represent more than 70 village governments. "What's to stop them from selling the stock, which is only a piece of paper?"

"Most of the native corporations would be attractive takeover targets," says Byron Mallott, head of Sealaska Corp., a Juneau-based regional corporation with 15,800 shareholders and timber and fishing assets of $482 million. "They are corporations with modest business operations on a global scale with relatively significant land holdings in a resource-rich state."

Until recently, the regionals have been involved in drawn-out fights to secure assets granted them under ANCSA and have been able to concentrate on business for only the last four years, Mallott says.

He says unless Congress recognizes these difficulties and acts before 1991 "we may be in deep trouble."

For a people historically dependent on subsistence fishing and hunting, loss of the land could be disastrous.

"Without land it would be difficult for us to maintain our culture," says John Schaeffer, head of NANA Regional Corp., based at Kotzebue.

It wasn't long ago that native customs nearly perished under the impact of white development. Many natives still remember being chastised by white missionaries or agents of the Bureau of Indian Affairs for speaking their own language.

What emerged from cultural repression were people forced to abandon the security of their language, history and centuries-old customs.

Their offspring for the most part would be educated and speak English rather than their native tongue. They would ride snowmobiles instead of dog sleds, use high-powered rifles for hunting, watch television and slug it out in the business world.

But the cost has been high.

"Alcohol, drug problems, an inability to hold jobs and high suicide rates, what we saw was a breakdown," says Schaeffer. "We were showing the symptoms of a society with a poor value system. The Western values were not enough."

In the 11-village NANA region around Kotzebue, the native leadership three years ago started a Spirit Program in an effort to rebuild a cultural identity.

"Our cultural values for the most part are human values taught in most societies," Schaeffer says. "Basically, human values are the same for everybody. They're in the Bible. They're in the Koran."

Those values include sharing, love of children, respect for elders, self-respect and caring for the family.

At Metlakatla, the 86,000-acre southeast Alaska home of the Tsimshian Indian tribe and the state's only native reservation, many watch the approach of 1991 with a sense of relief.

The 1,200 members of the tribe refused to participate in the 1971 settlement, because it appeared the tribe would lose some of its island home, says Mayor Harris Atkinson.

In other regions, natives are turning away from Western-style government and demanding a return to traditional councils or councils chartered under the Indian Reorganization Act of 1934, partly as a way of protecting their land after 1991.

Such governments also give the councils a measure of local control and power in deciding who will live in the villages and who will have the right to run for office. At least one village, Tyonek, has gone to federal court in an attempt to evict uninvited whites.

Willie Kasayulie, chairman of the Association of Village Council Presidents which represents 56 villages in western Alaska's Yukon-Kuskokwim Delta region and a member of the IRA council at Akiachuk, is in the thick of a battle with the state over how the village will operate.

Residents of the fishing village of 450 on the Kuskokwim River want to abandon state-recognized city status and return to being a federally recognized IRA village. The village became an IRA community in 1948, 11 years before Alaska became the 49th state.

Alaska officials concerned about the village's decision have frozen about $400,000 in village funds.

"I think everybody is worried about 1991," Kasayulie says. "I don't think we can survive without the land. The economy in native communities is minimal. People need land for subsistence. Land is very important to native people."

'Lost Colony' Favorites Returning

MANTEO – Two former favorites in the cast of "The Lost Colony" will be reunited this summer. Cora Mae Basnight, who was seen as the wily Indian woman, Agona, for 26 years (1957-82) will be performing that role again on special occasions during the season.

For these special performances this year, she will be reunited with Durham native, New York actor Tom Hull, in the role of crusty Old Tom.

Hull was Old Tom during the years 1963 to 1968, and is returning to "The Lost Colony" cast this season for the first time in 15 years. Hull has appeared in more than 200 professional plays in New York and on tour since he last performed in "The Lost Colony." This past season, he appeared in the East Carolina University production of Erskine Caldwell's "Tobacco Road."

In performances in which Ms. Basnight does not play Agona, the role will be performed by Gigi Grill of Indiana, Pa., in her second year as Agona.

Heading the large cast for 1984 are Gary Hackenburg of Blairstown, N. J. as John Borden; Karen Stone of Charlotte as Eleanor Dare; Tom Whyte of New York City as Sir Walter Raleigh; and Nancy Kaye of Manteo as Queen Elizabeth.

Opening night for the 1984 season of "The Lost Colony" is set for July 15.

By CONCEPCION BADILLO
Associated Press Writer

"They've told me so many times, that I've ended up believing that I really signify an opening, and that women use my songs to tell their men what they wouldn't dare to otherwise," she said in an interview with The Associated Press.

The singer, whose biggest success was the song, "I No Longer Feel Anything When I Make Love With You," currently charges about $10,000 per show, one of the highest fees of any Mexican popular entertainer.

Her private life has become as well known as her songs. Critics frequently accuse her of exploiting it for publicity purposes.

"Being happy is the only thing that's important to me. All the rest doesn't interest me at all," The 29-year-old Miss D'Alessio said.

She recently separated from 23-year-old soccer player Julio Canessa from Uruguay. They were married last August at an exuberant, televised ceremony.

At the time, Miss D'Alessio said, "Finally, I've found true love."

Now she says: "It was very pretty, but it simply didn't work out."

It was her second marriage. Prior to that, the popular Latin singer had a torrid and well publicized romance with Carlos Reynoso, a former star soccer player from Chile who is now the trainer for the team, America, here.

"For the time being, I don't want to have anything to do with anyone," Miss D'Alessio said. "My career is the only thing that interests me. To go international — to perform, for example, in Atlantic City.

"I've had enough, but I've had enough of them (her former mates) — not all men, who I think are the most beautiful gift God gave women."

When she first became famous with the image of a "sweet and tender" ballad singer, she was married to Mexican singer Jorge Vargas. They had two children.

Although her songs regularly appear on the hit charts in Mexico and Central America, she has received relatively little promotion from her record company.

"I'm like a check made out to the bearer — everything I record hits," she said.

Life In Peru

Ronald Wright's "Cut Stones and Crossroads" is subtitled "A Journey in the Two Worlds of Peru" with good reason.

An anecdotal account of Wright's lengthy travels in Peru, the book treats with life as it is in contemporary Peru and then contrasts this with the way things were long ago in the days of the Incas.

An archeologist, Wright lives in both the past and the present. On a trip to Otusco, for example, he tells of the bus in which he is riding — so decrepit "I can see the drive shaft through holes in the floor" — while in the same paragraph he also describes a hill the bus is passing as being riddled with holes that served the ancients as sepulchers.

Wright's journey also follows the rise and fall of the Inca civilization — but in reverse. It begins at Cajamarca, the place where the conquistadors destroyed the Incas and ends at Titicaca where they had "their mythic dawn."

In between, Wright both informs and entertains the reader with prose nuggets about the Inca way of life and contemporary Peruvian ways.

Lima, for example, is a place where a third of all Peruvians live "but there is little Peruvian about the place. It began as the beachhead of a foreign power and has never learned to change. Lima looks to Europe and America as models, and to the rest of the country only for the wealth to indulge the resulting inferiority complex ..."

It is a nation of sharp contrasts, and it is to Wright's credit that he illuminates them so clearly for the reader.

Fisheries Panel Sets Regulations

RALEIGH — Regulation changes concerning striped bass, pound net stakes, blue crabs, crab pots in Newport River, and mechanical clam harvesting highlighted the North Carolina Fisheries Commission meeting held recently in Morehead City.

These changes were made after the annual regulatory cycle of public meetings and public hearings during March and May. The changes become effective August 1, according to Jerry Gaskill, commission chairman.

Areas in which regulation changes have been made are:

•Striped bass (rockfish) — The commission approved a closed commercial season on striped bass in the inland coastal waters during June 1 through Sept. 30 and gave the director of the Division of Marine Fisheries (acting through the Secretary of Natural Resources and Community Development) the authority to regulate the harvest of striped bass in the Atlantic Ocean.

The harvest season for striped bass in the Atlantic will be set by proclamation each year. It will be unlawful to sell or offer to sell any striped bass during the closed commercial season. The commission also adopted a new minimum size for stripers taken in the Atlantic Ocean of 24 inches during the open season. Additionally, no gill nets can be used in Albemarle Sound from June 1 through Sep. 30, except mullet nets that must be set within 300 yards of shore.

•Pound net stakes — Pound or fyke net sets will have to be registered with the N. C. Division of Marine Fisheries prior to installation of stakes or net. Sets will have to be re-registered annually. Failure to re-register or abandonment without removing all stakes shall constitute a vioilation.

Additionally, pound nets must have a navigational opening of at least 25 feet at the end of every third pound marked with international orange signs no less than six inches square. Each pound is required to have reflective tgape attached to one pole.

•Blue crabs — Mature female crabs less than five inches from tip of spike to tip of spike will be legal.

•Crab pots — The limit of pots per licensed vessel in Newport River, Carteret County, will be no more than 150. This regulation applies only to Newport River.

•Mechanical clam harvesting — Special no-cost permits will be required for all mechanical methods of taking clams. Such permits may impose conditions and requirements. Previously, only hydraulic clam dredgers needed permits. Clam kickers (using prop to dig out clams) will now be required to have pemits)

•Oyster season — The Director of Marine Fisheries was given flexibility in regulating the oyster harvest season, gear use and limits.

•Primary nursery areas — Minor changes were made in several primary nursery areas by changing the boundary lines. Some small creeks and bays were added to the nursery area system. Nursery area line adjustments were made in Carteret County and along the Intracoastal Waterway in Pender County.

•Military restricted areas — A new regulation was enacted which specifically warns fishermen of the dangers of carrying out fishing activities in designated military training areas.

Complete listings of regulation changes will be available June 15 from lcoal Marine Fisheries law enforcement officers and Marine Fisheries offices in Elizabeth City, Manteo, Washington, Morehead City, and Wilmington.

After a gala performance in Philadelphia on June 21, Stierle and the other members of the American team will leave for Helsinki, where solo elimination rounds in classical and contemporary dance will be held from June 23 to July 10.

Stierle is the son of Mr. and Mrs. William Stierle of Hollywood, Fla. He has been invited to join the junior company of the Netherlands Dance Theater.

River May Yield Historial Items From Civil War Era

ECU News Bureau

Civil War relics and other historical material buried for more than a century in waters of the Chattahoochee River in Georgia may soon be located, investigated and identified by underwater researchers.

A six-weeks field school by the East Carolina University program in Maritime History and Underwater Archaeology, co-sponsored by the Confederate Naval Museum, Columbus, Ga., will center on investigating cultural material preserved beneath the waters of the Chattahoochee.

The ECU program is directed by researchers who located and investigated the long lost wreck of the famous Civil War ironclad USS Monitor and recovered the 1,500-pound anchor of the Monitor off Cape Hatteras last summer.

On the Chattahoochee, the ECU divers and underwater researchers hope to locate remains of the Confederate gunboat Chattahoochee and a Confederate Navy yard. For four weeks, beginning June 16, students and staff of the underwater research program will be in the Columbus, Ga., area for the river surveys and investigations.

"This unique program will provide a limited number of students with a basic introduction in American maritime history and the scientific menthods and techniques employed in the recovery of data preserved at submerged historic cultural sights," said Dr. William N. Still, ECU professor of history and co-director of the program.

"Each student in the program will participate in a series of lectures, workshops and seminars designed to provide a sound concept of maritime history, historical research and underwater research methods and techniques," Still said.

Still said the classroom work will also provide information concerning trade patterns, transportation, shipbuilding, industry and agriculture of the period which will be helpful in interpreting materials located during the Chattahoochee project.

In addition to the USS Monitor project, Still and co-director Gordon P. Watts, underwater archaeologist, have conducted field schools in a number of coastal harbors in the Carolinas and Bermuda and along inland rivers such as the Northeast Cape Fear in southeastern North Carolina.

The Chattahoochee River, famed in literature by poet Sidney Lanier, rises in north Georgia and flows southward through the Atlanta area and west Georgia. For much of its lower length, it forms the border between Georgia and Alabama before flowing across Florida to the Gulf of Mexico.

On the Chattahoochee, Still and Watts said survey activities will utilize state-of-the-art remote sensing electronic equipment to locate inundated structures, features and vessel remains associated with the area's history.

Cultural material identified during the survey will be investigated to provide data related to age, origin and cultural significance, they said.

The field school project will be financed in part by a $12,000 grant from the Confederate Naval Museum.

Historic Little Residence In Robersonville For Sale

RALEIGH — The Historic Preservation Foundation of North Carolina Inc. is offering to sell the historic William Joseph Little house in Robersonville. Little was a well-known farmer in Martin County and built his Classical Revival home in Robersonville in 1913. The Little family continued to reside in the house until the mid-1970s.

The residence has two-storied columns, wrap-around porch and porte cochere. Inside it has handsome woodwork with mantels topped with mirrors, paneling in the dining room, pocket doors and arches leading to an open staircase in the center hall. The entrance is especially notable with sunburst transom and side lights with beveled glass surrounding a double front door.

The William Joseph Little house is in good condition and sits in a residential neighborhood on Main Street in Robersonville. Its 4,800 square feet includes 10 spacious rooms and two baths. In addition, there is a garage and an outbuilding on a one-acre lot. The Historic Preservation Foundation is offering the house for $60,000.

The house will be sold subject to protective covenants to be administered by the Historic Preservation Foundation of North Carolina Inc. Restrictions will allow the buyer flexibility in the use of the property while protecting the structure from demolition, inappropriate exterior alterations or insensitive additions.

Those interested in the building should contact Larry D. McBennett at the Historic Preservation Foundation of North Carolina Inc., 11 S. Blount St., P.O. Box 27644, Raleigh, N.C. 27611, telephone number 832-3652.

Merchant Ship Will Be Built

BEAUFORT — Hampton Mariners Museum and the Society of Interpretive Historians have joined resources in a project that will result in the construction of an 18th century merchant vessel of the type used on the Carolina sounds just before and after the American Revolution.

Following a reenactment of a naval engagement and other festivities at Bath on May 19, the board of the society presented the museum with a check for $500 to initiate research to gather data and material relating to the design and construction of small trading vessels that linked the coastal communities carrying passengers and vital goods.

Rudy Weiman of Fayetteville, president of the society, vice-presidents Jim Collins of Lillington and Marek Munden of Fort Fisher, and treasurer Jean Collins made the presentation. Accepting for the musuem and Friends of the Museum, who will oversee disbursment of the research money, was Mike Alford, who will be responsible for conducting the research and drafting the construction plans.

A boat about 30 feet long is envisioned, which will be used to interpret the role of small vessels during the period of about 1775 to 1800. Goods entering central coastal North Carolina came by sea to Shell Castle Island in Ocracoke Inlet.

These smaller vessels were used to transport the cargoes to many communities bordering the sounds and rivers but the exact nature of these boats has never before been the subject of study. Research and drawings are expected to be complete in time to begin construction as early as the spring of 1985.

Tape Tales

FARMINGTON, Conn. (AP) — Some may frown on the practice, but taping conversations may have a positive effect in solving domestic problems.

That's the opinion of Krass Kestin, a counseling psychologist who has employed the technique after discussing personal situations with Emhart employees here.

Kestin explains, "Their work was suffering because of problems at home and they poured out their feelings.

Actress Consents To be Villainess

LOS ANGELES (AP) — When producer Dino DeLaurentiis sought a super-villainess for his new movie, "Conan the Destroyer," he naturally wanted Sarah Douglas.

After all, wasn't she the darkly malevolent Ursa in "Superman" and "Superman II"? And hasn't she fascinated television viewers as the abrasive Pamela Lynch in "Falcon Crest"?

"I turned down 'Conan' six times," the provocative Britisher said. "I said, 'Oh, no, not another evil queen flashing her eyes and sucking in her cheeks!'

"But then I heard that (rock star) Grace Jones was going to be in the picture. That intrigued me. I had read about how she crashed in and out of England and all the wild things she has done. I responded to the challenge."

Miss Douglas added that she needed a break from the TV series and wanted to spread her wings. "I had taken the series thinking it would be episodic, but they were using me every day. We worked it out so I spent four days a week in Mexico City on 'Conan' and three days in Burbank for the series," she said.

"Conan the Destroyer," which will hit the nation's screens on June 29, offers a varied cast: the Austrian muscleman Arnold Schwarzenegger, basketball immortal Wilt Chamberlain and Ms. Jones.

"I was the token actress," Miss Douglas remarked.

She recalled her meeting with Chamberlain: "I said, 'Oh, yes, you're the man who plays net ball.' That's what we call girls' basketball in England."

Miss Douglas plays the sorceress Taramis. She said it was the best job in the movie. "I do all the talking, remaining in the castle while all the others go out and have their little adventures," she said.

Play-acting has been part of Miss Douglas' life almost since her birth 31 years ago in Stratford-on-Avon. "I was on stage at Stratford at the age of 14, but I was around actors all my life," she said. "My mother massaged their feet. Really. She was and still is a physiotherapist, and she took care of actors when they had aches and pains. I was bounced on the knees of many a star I later acted with."

She graduated from the National Youth Theater to the London theater and English films. As an extra in "Rollerball," she met an American actor, Richard LeParmentier. They married three years ago, and he is now a writer.

"We own a house here and just bought another one in England," she said. "I don't know why, but maybe I just don't want to lose my roots.

"They wanted me to sign a five-year contract for 'Falcon Crest,' but I refused. Spending that long in a series is not part of my career plan, and I agreed to one more season only. Nine more months and I'll be free."

Smell Of Success

GRASSE, France (AP) — The sweet smell of success comes from this little town in the south of France by the dawn's early light.

Its most famous product is jasmine, which is used for making expensive perfumes. One kilo of jasmine equals 5 million flowers, which must be cut by hand at sunrise only, at the moment when the flowers are just beginning to open, according to Guy de Mouy, chairman for Jean Patou Inc., a perfume producer.

Other ingredients used for perfume making include rose oil. One drop of this essence is extracted from the petals of 70 roses, he added.

Giveaways: Ones You Can't Refuse

NEW YORK (UPI) — There once was a time when a sales promotion involved a free drinking glass with your gasoline purchase, or collecting green stamps at the grocery store.

At Hotel Inter-Continental Houston today, the bonus for repeat guests is a free round-trip air ticket to Europe.

"You have to make the offer so exciting you induce people to break their habits," said Joseph Smyth of Inter-Continental Hotels Corp. "The better the deal, the cheaper, because you're attracting new people."

In other words, Inter-Continental believes a modest giveaway program is less cost-efficient than a spectacular one. That's because a free key case or rental car discount probably will not attract any new business, but will be skimmed up by regulars who would have stayed at the hotel anyway.

A really glamorous giveaway costs the hotel more up front, but may attract brand new revenue in the form of brand new customers.

"We've learned you can get people to radically change their habits," said Smyth, senior vice president marketing for the Inter-Continental chain.

Although the 500-room hotel is in the Galleria section of Houston, about 20 minutes from downtown, the Inter-Continental now is attracting some guests whose business is in the center of the city. Smyth believes it's because of the giveaway.

Two Dallas businessmen, he said, are collecting points by holding their corporate meetings in an Inter-Continental suite.

"One woman checked in with five children, put each in a different room, and said she was sending her estranged husband the bill," Smyth said.

The "Houston Plus" plan began March 1 and runs through September 15. So far 3,500 visitors have taken out membership cards, and 1,300 have accumulated enough points to win tickets.

Travelers must spend five nights — consecutive or not — to win a free round-trip coach flight on Pan American to any of 16 European cities. The trips can begin at any of six American gateway cities: New York, Los Angeles, Miami, San Francisco, Seattle and Washington, D.C. For those who live elsewhere, Pan Am is offering $59 flights to the nearest departure point.

One catch in the program is that participants must pay at least the per-night "moderate" rate of $110 for a single room.

But the hotel does have the highest average in the city, meaning more of its visitors were paying regular room rates, and fewer staying on discounts.

Inter-Continental decided to try the flight giveaway in Houston, Smyth said, because the city has a "tremendous overcapacity" of hotel rooms.

"A new hotel possibly could take a long time to attract a clientele," he said.

Houston also is a city that's interested in overseas travel. Among the Americans who stay in European Inter-Continental hotels, Smyth said, Houston residents formed the second largest group — after New Yorkers.

The Inter-Continental chain has committed itself to giving out up to 5,000 round-trip tickets.

"It's a very good deal," Smyth said. "In many cases it's cheaper for people to come and pay for the five nights than it would be to stay free. Five nights cost $550, but a flight between Los Angeles and London costs $1,200."

Intercontinental has never tried such a program before, he said, and won't know whether it will do so again until the results of the Houston experiment are in.

"As long as you feel you're bringing in new people, you can justify almost anything," Smyth said.

Educator Built Students' Zest For Earning Power

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — Oh, but Jesse Marshall had plans. A sheltered but savvy Southern black, he knew where the future lay, even at 15. Not in teaching. No $40 a month — the meager salary his mother earned — for him.

He'd driven her over those bumpy backwoods roads to the schoolhouse too many times, gone hungry too many times, eaten the kindly banker's leftovers too many times for that.

Business — that was the ticket. Although he only swept floors, his job at the bank taught him about the business world, and his chores at the banker's house showed him what that world could buy.

But by the time he brought his chemistry degree out of Arkansas M&N in 1940, his relatives had lost the drug store where he planned to be the pharmacist. The dream was gone, but the family had to be fed.

So he taught, even became assistant principal at an Arkansas school. The pay was low and, to earn extra money, he worked at a nearby white college washing windows and laboratory glass.

His degree may have given him fancy credentials, but Jesse Marshall was, by his description, "all dressed up with no place to go."

In the Army, where he became an officer, and at Indiana University, where he earned master's and doctoral degrees, Marshall realized that thousands of blacks throughout the country were graduating with degrees to nowhere.

Families were starving to pay for those degrees, Marshall realized, and the waste frustrated him. As an educator, he resolved to do what he could to stop it.

Thirty-two years later, as retiring vice chancellor for student affairs at N.C. A&T State University, Marshall has dedicated his life to giving the institution's graduates earning power as well as window dressing.

His counseling programs have helped thousands of students choose a productive major, and the recruiters he at first dragged onto campus — only six came the first year — brought the job offers that led to careers. As many as 700 recruiters now visit A&T each year in search of employees.

And his efforts to establish intramural sports and other activities helped students enjoy the social life that contributes to a well rounded person.

"I wasn't sure if I was going to make it when I first got here," Marshall confides now, as he prepares to return to teaching for a year or two before retiring from the university.

"The people who were doing the job on an acting basis before I got here, well, I obliterated their hopes for moving up and they resented me. Right away I had a bout with the student newspaper because they didn't understand what I was trying to do. It was very difficult."

A&T's students showered him with plaques and other honors and the "Ayantee" yearbook staff dedicated its 1984 edition to him.

"I chose to come to A&T," Marshall said. "At the time I came here, in 1964, the big schools in the Northeast were hand picking blacks for their staffs. I could have gone 12 or 13 places, but land grant colleges are known for developing leadership, for nurturing students. Service is very important at land grant schools and I was attracted by that.

"It was a difficult time for this school. The students were rebellious. Jesse Jackson had just left, the marches and the protests had just ended. I took the responsibility of trying to work with the students. I lived on campus six years and had kids in my house almost every night until midnight.

"The kids quickly found out I was interested in what they were interested in, but that they had to have dignity, had to follow rules and regulations to make progress."

Marshall doesn't take credit for dreaming up all the innovations he brought to student services on campus. Many of the best ideas were stolen from other schools, observed while he served on various accreditation committees, he said.

But Marshall did bring a philosophy to the job that he hopes endures long after he leaves.

Wachovia Home Equity Loans

If you have a financial need or an opportunity that you cannot conveniently meet with a short-term loan or savings, consider this. It's likely that your home is worth more than you paid for it, and that you have reduced the amount of the original loan. Wachovia offers ways that you can borrow from the equity you've built up.

How Wachovia can make the equity in your home available to you.

Appraised Value of Your Home		Maximum Loan Amount Basis		Balance on First Mortgage		Amount Available for a Home Equity Loan
$150,000	× 75%* =	$112,500	–	$75,000	=	$37,500
$100,000	× 75% =	$ 75,000	–	$50,000	=	$25,000
$ 50,000	× 75% =	$ 37,500	–	$25,000	=	$12,500

*Typical percentage of appraised home value that can be used to secure a loan with approved credit. Amounts shown are for illustrative purposes only. For specific details on how a Home Equity Loan can fit your situation, see a Personal Banker℠.

For major borrowing needs.

A new option: Equity BankLine.

In addition to the traditional Home Equity installment loans, Wachovia now offers Equity BankLine, which gives you a line of credit of $10,000 or more based on the equity you have in your home. It's pre-arranged, so you can access it any time simply by writing a special check.

Your interest rate is based on Wachovia's Prime Rate plus 2% and may vary monthly. For example, during the month of June, 1984 the Annual Percentage Rate (APR) for Equity BankLine is 14.5%. And under current North Carolina law your rate cannot exceed 15% APR.

While there are no loan origination fees (or "points") charged for Equity BankLine, the borrower pays mortgage loan closing expenses at the time the line is established and at every 10-year anniversary.

Equity BankLine is a convenient and economical way of turning the equity you have in your home into cash you can use wherever and whenever you want, without having to reapply for a loan.

Kids' Fears

NEW YORK (AP) — The most common fear of children is being alone, a survey by Spring magazine of its 250,000 4th- to 6th-grade readers indicates.

The 5,000 letters received by the magazine, published by Scholastic Inc., in answer to the query, "What are you most afraid of?" revealed the second greatest fear was getting up in front of class. The third was a fear of animals, especially dogs and snakes.

Studies May End Dispute On Treating Cholesterol

By DANIEL Q. HANEY
AP Science Writer

BOSTON (AP) — If 1,906 middle-age men take a foul-tasting medicine for a rare condition called hypercholesterolemia, do the results have any bearing on what ordinary people should eat for breakfast?

The question is the nub of a disagreement among scientists about using the frailties of a few to judge the living habits of many.

In this case, they are debating if a careful but limited study of people with a rare cholesterol condition can be used to make dietary recommendations for millions of Americans.

The whole idea of experiments, of course, is to apply the results to more than the 10 or 100 or 1,000 individuals studied. The arguments begin when sticklers ask whether those individuals really mirror the ways and workings of a larger part of the population.

At issue this time is the interpretation of one of the biggest medical stories of the year. When it was released last January, the $150 million federal study — called the Lipid Research Clinics Coronary Primary Prevention Trial — seemed to confirm what many Americans had accepted as fact: Lowering cholesterol saves lives.

Yet there is uneasiness among some heart specialists and nutritionists that the study has been used to make a point that it does not prove: that otherwise ordinary people with higher-than-average cholesterol levels should go on cholesterol-lowering diets.

In a still-unpublished critique, Dr. Joseph Vitale and Robert N. Ross of Boston University Medical School called the affair "an impressive example of misconstrued and misunderstood research results."

However, Dr. Robert I. Levy, who launched the project while head of the National Heart, Lung and Blood Institute, asserts, "I don't think that the data have been overinterpreted."

Despite overwhelming evidence that high levels of cholesterol in the blood causes heart disease, one central question remained: Will people live longer if they eat less cholesterol and saturated fat?

Cholesterol is a major ingredient of the plaques that form on artery walls. This condition is known as hardening of the arteries or arteriosclerosis, and it leads to heart attack and stroke.

People take in cholesterol in two ways — through cholesterol-rich food, mainly eggs, and saturated fat, which is converted into cholesterol in the body. However, about 70 or 80 percent of blood cholesterol is manufactured in the liver independently of diet.

Answering the diet-heart question directly would be a huge, probably impossible undertaking. It would mean following the health of thousands of people eating and living outside the laboratory. A federal task force estimated 13 years ago that such a study would cost between $500 million and $1 billion.

So the federal researchers did something simpler. They studied the effects of a cholesterol-lowering drug on people with very high cholesterol levels.

First, they examined 480,000 men between the ages of 35 and 59 and singled out those with hypercholesterolemia, an inherited disorder that results in extremely high cholesterol levels. Only 5 percent of the population have this much blood cholesterol.

Next, these men were put on cholesterol-lowering diets. If the diets worked, they were excluded from the study. Finally, the researchers were left with 3,806 men whose high cholesterol levels were independent of diet. For an average of 7.4 years, half of them took a cholesterol-lowering drug called cholestyramine, and half took dummy placebos.

When it was over, 9.8 percent of the comparison group had suffered heart-related disease or death, compared with 8.1 percent of the drug patients.

"They studied a very small proportion of the population, and a very small proportion of them had anything bad happen, and the change in that was very small," said Dr. Donald Berwick of the Harvard Community Health Plan. "A lot was made of it, much more than the actual evidence warranted."

The study is significant, because it is the first to show that lowering cholesterol will reduce the risk of heart disease. But does this happen in more than 5 percent of the population?

The federal researchers said their findings can reasonably be extended to people who were not studied: to women, to younger men and to people with lower but still elevated cholesterol levels. And they said the data support the view that lowering cholesteral by diet is also beneficial.

Levy says he thinks the data can be interpreted to say that anyone with higher-than-average cholesterol levels should be considered for cholesterol-lowering diets or drugs.

Dr. Jan Breslow of Rockefeller University says the study dealt only with people with very high cholesterol levels.

Author Eases Task Of Keeping Home Clean

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

Cleaning house the way mother did takes about 25 hours a week, says Ann Guilfoyle. But most people today don't have 25 extra hours to devote to the task.

As a single working mother, the New York-based writer certainly did not have the time to spare. As a result, she and her child were, in her words, "living in chaos." She would periodically binge on house cleaning, but on a day-to-day basis, the house was not in good order, she says.

To make life more comfortable, however, the 46-year-old New Yorker decided to change her mode of operating — figuring out what was essential to keep her household going and allowing the rest to slide. She says her efforts resulted in an orderly and comfortable household. They also helped produce a book on the subject which may help others do the same for themselves.

She wrote "Home Free, The No-Nonsense Guide to House Care" to help those who want a smooth-running household with a minimum of attention. Subjects covered include establishing order and priorities and preventive measures that forestall the spread of soil.

According to Ms. Guilfoyle the major pitfall generally is that standards are simply too high. "Many of us still carry around the outdated mores that drove our mothers or grandmothers ... More realistic standards would be based on the limitations of our lives," she said.

"When standards are too high, there is always something more to be done and you're rarely satisfied with what you can actually accomplish," she added.

It takes some discipline to set up a system, but once the framework is established you can relax and let many things drift. Furthermore, the pleasure of a smoothly-running home is also an important motivation to keep the system in operation.

The first step, says Ms. Guilfoyle is expedient compromise. "Decide what's important to you and attend to that. The rest is discretionary."

Based on interviews and research she did for her book, she says an experienced professional house cleaner can thoroughly surface-clean a typical three-bedroom two-bath house in less than four hours, provided the space is picked up in advance.

To work like a pro, decide what you intend to accomplish and in what order the work will be done, then stick to the plan. "Amateurs tend to do a bit more here and there as they go along and drift back and forth from job to job. This slows you down and prevents you from accomplishing the day's goals."

Some tips for streamlining the job include assembling supplies ahead of time. Keep small tools and cleaning supplies in a portable carrier. Start with an easy job; then do the harder jobs in the first half of the cleaning period instead of at the end when you are tired and have lost interest.

If two people are cleaning at the same time, work in separate areas, she suggests. Work to a predetermined deadline, beginning and stopping promptly. Give yourself a reward at the end of the job. It might be watching television, having a friend over, having a special snack, or listening to music.

If you tend to dawdle, set a portable timer at first to help you become aware of how much time is passing.

To make life easier in her own home, Ms. Guilfoyle made some changes in her decorating scheme. She says there are many ways of minimizing maintenance by selecting easy-care decorative objects, colors and materials.

For example, she switched from white walls to a medium gray tone. "In New York, gray is the same color as dirt," she noted. However, it is also a neutral that takes on different characteristics depending on the accessory colors used with it and the quality and amount of light in a room.

Another way to camouflage dirt on walls and eliminate or minimize wall-washing chores is to select a wallpaper with a busy pattern. If white or a pastel color is the only way, then opt for rough textures, if possible. Barn siding and brick painted white both take little maintenance and show few smudges, she said. When using paint, opt for a glossy enamel which is easily washed instead of a flat paint which is not.

Another idea is to look for and obtain help from others. "Older persons who may live nearby often need the money which housework could bring, but are too proud to ask for it," she said. By tactfully asking them, you may find an invaluable resource.

Young women tied at home with young children may benefit from the extra pair of hands, a friendly listening ear and the now-outmoded skills an older person may bring to the house.

"How many people today know how to mend and iron?" she asked.

Here's the Answer

By ANDY LANG

Q. — I have to work on an old piece of furniture soon and want to avoid some trouble I had with a similar project a few years ago. There are a few places where nail holes and cracks must be filled with a patching material. Since I plan to stain the wood after the old finish has been removed, how can I also stain the patches? The last time I did it, the patches did not properly take the stain, and I made a mess of it.

A. — You can buy wood patching materials that can be stained along with the rest of the wood. Not all do, however, so you will have to ask the dealer for the right kind. Some stores may not carry more than one kind of wood filler. If the one you patronize is of this type, shop around for a store which has a patching material which can be stained.

Q. — I was interested in your answer to a reader about the difficulty of keeping sound out of a room unless the sound is muffled in the area where it is produced. I thought your readers might be interested in my experience. At night, you could hear coughing or even snoring from our neighbors who shared a common wall. We had a carpenter put up book shelves on the entire wall. We filled it with all our books and even bought some from a used book store. The result was fantastic. The room actually seems soundproof now and we have a delightful library-bedroom combination.

A. — Thanks.

Q. — I am handy with most things and would like to try putting a new roof on an old house I just bought. I intend to use fiber glass asphalt shingles and, in fact, have already picked out the kind I want. Is there someplace I can get a step-by-step guide on how to install the shingles?

A. — You should be able to get such a guide from the place where you purchase the shingles. In the event you can't, write to Roofing Products Division, Celotex Corp., P.O. Box 22602, Tampa, FL 33622.

Q. My tomato plants keep wilting. They receive plenty of water. What could be the problem? (L.D., Sanford)

A. The problem could be too much water. Poor soil drainage can also stunt plants and cause them to turn pale yellow. Nematodes could also be responsible. Have the soil tested and follow the recommended treatments. Some diseases can also cause wilting. Using resistant varieties is the best way to prevent wilting caused by diseases.

Q. What is the best time of day to cut flowers for flower arrangements? (W.R., Greensboro)

A. Cut flowers early in the morning. This is when the moisture content is highest and the flowers are more turgid.

Q. When should carrots be harvested? (E.R., Sylva)

A. Harvest carrots when the roots are three-fourths to one inch in diameter. The largest roots generally have the darkest tops.

Q. When should I renovate a strawberry bed? (G.B., Lincolnton)

. The best time to renovate a strawberry planting is immediately after the last harvest. Remember that strawberries need abundant water to fully recover after renovating or replanting.

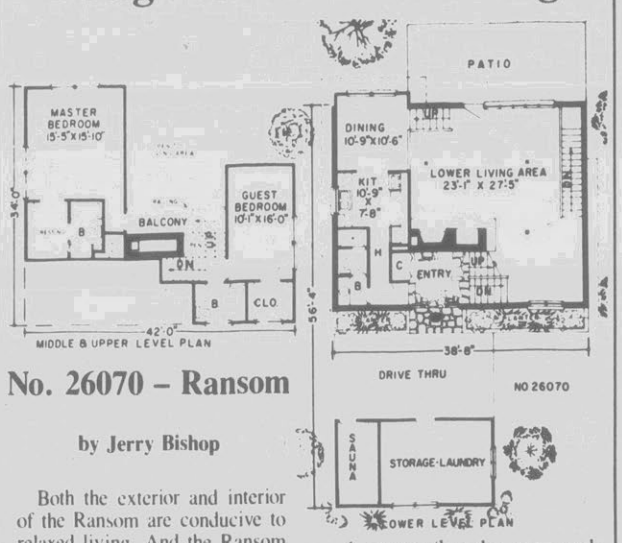
Design for Relaxed Living



No. 26070 – Ransom

by Jerry Bishop

Both the exterior and interior of the Ransom are conducive to relaxed living. And the Ransom is ideal for a sloping lot. A feeling of flowing space is created by four levels. The Master bedroom is on one level with a spacious dressing room and full bath. Go down a level to the guest bedroom which also boasts a full bath and large closet. A balcony off the master bedroom looks out onto the lower living area.

Relax there before the fireplace or step out onto the patio above the basement for some fresh air. Up seven steps from the living area you'll find yourself on the kitchen/dining level.

A storage/laundry area and sauna are in a building of their own, separated from the rest of the house by a drive-thru. However, this small building shares a common roof with the rest of the house for the rainy days. Stucco, stone, wood shutters and shakes and casement windows finish an inviting facade.

ON THE HOUSE

THE PRODUCT — A flexible, all-purpose adhesive for use around the house and automobile.

Manufacturer's claim — That this adhesive is equally effective on porous and non-porous surfaces, including wood, china, ceramics, canvas, leather, vinyl, metals, glass, rubber, plastic laminate and concrete ... that it has a strong initial "wet-tack" which allows a 20-minute period in which bonded materials can be realigned ... that it dries clear and colorless, resists snap, break or shatter, even on impact ... that it can be used indoors and outdoors because it contracts and expands with changes in temperature ... that it will not bond to the skin and is easy to clean up ... and that it is water resistant, heat resistant and cold resistant.

Manufacturer's claim — That it can be used wet or dry ... that it produces even, smooth surfaces on compounded drywall seams ... that it is now available to do-it-yourselfers after having been used by professionals for years ... that either side of the screen can be used ... that it resists clogging and loading ... and that, when fine compound dust accumulates, the sanding screen can be rinsed clean, shaken to remove excess moisture and put back to work.

Manufacturer's claim — That this cleaner can also be used to bleach and remove rust stains from wood ... that the solution is applied, scrubbed thoroughly with a stiff brush and rinsed completely with water in from two to five minutes ... and that it can be used as a general all-purpose cleaner to brighten and remove oxidation from aluminum, brass, copper, chrome and galvanized surfaces.

(The adhesive is manufactured by Consumer Products Division, Borden Inc. 180 East Broad St., Columbus, OH 43215; the abrasive screen by Household Products Division, 3M Center, St. Paul, MN 55144; and the cleaner by Savogram Co., P. O. Box 130, Norwood, MA 02062.)

(Do-it-yourselfers will find much valuable information in Andy Lang's handbook "Practical Home Repairs," which can be obtained by sending $1.50 to this newspaper at Box 5, Teaneck, NJ 07666.)

Tool Makes Gardening Easier

By EARL ARONSON
AP Newsfeatures

Three heads make it easier than one — or two hands — to tend your garden and home landscape today.

A new high technology tool has three heads — interchangeable units — for one lightweight, portable machine that helps reduce tedious, back-breaking handwork. The Green Machine Expand-It in seconds can be changed from a string-trimmer, brush-cutter tree-pruner to a weeder-cultivator or a power blower.

The Tap-for-Cord string-trimmer accepts circular metal blades for cutting heavy weeds, brush and small tree limbs. The reciprocating blades of the weeder-cultivator dig into the soil at 2,000 cycles per minute, allowing air, water and fertilizer to penetrate. Its compact size make it ideal for flower and vegetable beds and hard-to-reach areas.

The power blower attachment will be appreciated by those who dislike raking, a chore found in an "unscientific poll" to be universally disliked. It blows grass clippings, leaves and other garden debris into relatively neat piles for easy pick-up and disposal.

The machine will facilitate both spring and autumn cleanup. The machine features blade and debris guards and other safety devices.

If you're on a budget, you can buy the tool plus a single unit, and later add the other components.

Except for oiling, little maintenance is required. Draining the gasoline tank after each use can help lengthen engine life. After emptying the tank, the engine should be run until it stops to clear the line.

In summer, make sure your African violets have enough humidity. Set their clay pots on top of an inch or so of pebbles in a tray or saucer. Water the tray or saucer to the top of the pebbles and evaporation will create a humid environment.

For summer, African violets prefer sun filtered through a window screen or light net curtain. If they have lush dark green foliage but no blooms they may need more light.

Okefenokee Gives Nature Cloak Of Safety

By ELLIOTT MINOR
Associated Press Writer

FOLKSTON, Ga. (AP) — The nation's largest freshwater swamp — a survivor of fires and assaults by loggers, poachers and land speculators — shelters thousands of endangered species, while providing insight into a unique environment cloaked in mystery.

Known as the "Land of the Trembling Earth" because of its floating islands of peat that sustain vegetation and quiver when touched, the Okefenokee once was a haven for moonshiners and poachers, who lived in makeshift camps for up to a week while making nighttime forays to kill alligators for the hides.

Each day the rituals of life and death go on, as they have for centuries, beneath the swamp's moss-covered cypress tress.

"The sound carries quite a way at night," said John Schroer, manager of the Okefenokee National Wildlife Refuge. "Most people think it's a big bear coming through the swamp."

President Franklin D. Roosevelt set aside most of the swamp as a National Wildlife Refuge in 1937, and 353,000 acres were declared a National Wilderness area in 1974, providing more protection for the Okefenokee's shy inhabitants.

Hollywood producers have made eight movies in the swamp, including "Swamp Water," "Black Fury" and "Lure of the Wild", and each year thousands of people visit.

The U.S. Department of the Interior operates a visitors center on the east side near Folkston, the state maintains the Stephen C. Foster State Park on the west side near Fargo and a private group operates the Okefenokee Swamp Park on the north side near Waycross.

"The first time I went into the swamp I couldn't believe it," said Jimmy Walker, manager of the swamp park. "I said 'Hell, I've been halfway around the world and haven't experienced anything like this.'"

Walker's fascination with the swamp prompted him to quit a $100-a-week job as an insurance salesman in 1955 to become a $50-a-week ticket vendor at the park.

"I think legend and fable have dramatized the swamp," Walker said, recalling the tales of "life-devouring quicksand and renegades" that made him fearful as a child of venturing into the swamp.

He said the swamp means different things to different people, but everyone finds it facinating.

"There's something about this place that keeps bringing you back," he said.

It also shelters the American alligator, the red cockaded woodpecker, the wood stork and the eastern indigo snake, all on the endangered species list.

More than 300,000 people visit the wildlife refuge each year, and those who want to experience swamp life firsthand can spend up to five nights in the Okefenokee, traveling by canoe and camping on raised wooden platforms.

Mike Brothers, who recently lead a party of seven on a three-day trip through the swamp, described it as "one of the best canoe trips I've ever been on."

"Everybody thought it was spectacular," said Brothers, a curator at the Museum of Arts and Science in Daytona Beach, Fla., "You don't meet other people. You get a great sense of isolation and see lots of beautiful orchids."

Brothers said the group spotted 42 alligators in one three-mile stretch and estimated they saw 70 to 80 gators altogether.

Brothers said the group enjoyed the great diversity of animals and plant life in the Okefenokee, which has many small islands, prairies, and lakes.

A group of speculators formed the Suwannee Canal Company in 1890, hoping to drain the swamp into the Atlantic Ocean to harvest its timber and sell the land for farming.

Although the workers dug a canal more than 15 miles long in the swamp, they were unable to reach the ocean and the company went out of business.

"Luckily it failed," said Schroer. "It was just too big a job and they gave up. With the technology we have today, it would be possible to drain the swamp."

The Hebard Cypress Company began extensive logging operations in the swamp in 1908 and eventually hauled out 425 million board feet of lumber, enough to build 42,000 homes.

Hebard built trestles in the swamp and laid hundreds of miles of track to haul out lumber, some of it from 900-year-old cypress trees. The company also established a thriving logging town on Billy's Island, in the heart of the Okefenokee.

The settlement became a ghost town after 1925 when logging operations ceased. Two major fires in the swamp have wiped out most signs that humans were ever there, but the town's graveyard survives.

Bernard Patten, a University of Georgia zoology professor who has spent 10 years studying the swamp, said the logging operation "left a permanent scar on the swamp."

The university has for a decade maintained a research facility at nearby Camp Cornelia, where scientists study the effects of varying water levels on swamp vegetation and other environmental matters.

Patten, who hopes to establish a biological research station at the swamp, said scientists have discovered higher than normal levels of mercury in some fish.

"We want to know where it's coming from," he said, adding that the mercury does not pose a threat to humans who eat the fish.

Opening lead: Two of ♡.

It is easier to swindle a pair of experts than a pair of neophytes — good players tend to play and defend in a reliable, intelligent fashion. The hero of this magnificent con job was U.S. internationalist John Moran. The hand occurred in a tournament in Canada, and his victims were two of that country's great players.

An innocent psychic opening bid by West led to a strange auction by Moran and his partner. Moran will be the first to admit that his slam contract was not exactly ironclad. He had a sure trump loser, so he could not afford to lose a club trick as well. When East covered the jack of hearts with the queen at trick one, that could be accomplished only if he could end play an opponent into breaking clubs for him.

The normal play in trumps would be to lead to the ace and back toward the queen. But even if the spades were 3-3 and declarer guessed what to do, the defender who won the king of clubs would be able to exit safely with a trump and no end play would be possible. Under those desperate circumstances, Moran elected to pursue a rather devious course.

After ruffing the opening heart lead, he led the queen of trumps from hand! Can you blame West for not covering when that guaranteed him a certain trump trick? He got no second chance.

When the queen of trumps held, declarer cashed the king of diamonds and successfully finessed the 10. He discarded a diamond on the ace of hearts, and two clubs on the king of hearts and ace of diamonds. Next he cashed the ace of spades, ruffed dummy's last heart and exited with his last trump, sluffing a club from the table.

West perforce won the trump and his last three cards were all clubs. His forced club return was run to the queen, and the ace of clubs and the 13th diamond on the board scored the last two tricks.

CBC Film Remembers 1st Wildlife Advocate

By Nicholas Bronte

Today, we have a respect and concern for wild animals that contrasts strikingly with the callous indifference that existed before the turn of the century. Conservation groups, humane societies, game laws and wildlife sanctuaries all work to safeguard animal life.

However, few people realize that the birth of this movement was in the 1898 publication of "Wild Animals I Have Known," a book that would become a lasting Canadian best seller. Tonight, on "Ernest Thompson Seton: Keeper of the Wilds," CBC presents a dramatic documentary on the man who wrote that and many of the other books that long ago began what we now call conservation consciousness raising.

Seton was born in England and came to Canada as a child in 1866. Wandering the woods in Ontario and Manitoba while studying the birds and animals, he discovered what would become a lifelong fascination with wildlife. He taught himself scientific observation and was, at one time, the most famous animal illustrator in North America.

As an artist, scientist and author, Seton was probably Canada's first ecologist. Although he wrote and painted more than a hundred years ago, his concern for wildlife then are the same as ours today.

The CBC film explores Seton's life and dramatizes two of his best-known animal stories. Seton's most famous tale, "Lobo, King of Currumpaw" is a true story of a wolf hunt Seton conducted in the Currumpaw Valley of New Mexico. The cunning and defiant fight of a wolf named Lobo inspired Seton to write a story and to champion the right of wolves — indeed of all wild animals — to lead lives undisturbed by man.

The second Seton story, "Krag, the Kootenay Ram," concerns a mountain sheep nimbly outwitting a hunter who is determined to shoot him. It's obvious that the author meant the tale as an analogy of the importance of keeping a balance between man and nature. Whenever nature is pushed to the extreme, Seton seems to be saying, it will push back for survival and, if necessary, destroy man in the process.

Michele Will Tell

By Michele Marks

DEAR MICHELE: Does Tom Selleck have a financial interest in a professional football team? If so, which one? Can you also tell me the name of the song and singer in the film "Rome Adventure," starring Troy Donahue and Suzanne Pleshette? — Irene Ritchie

To Irene: Selleck is racking up big bucks in "Magnum, P.I." and feature films, but has not invested any of his income in a football franchise. Perhaps you're thinking of that other actor, who lovingly refers to Selleck as his 'kid,' Burt Reynolds. In addition to his dinner theater and other investments, Reynolds owns a piece of the USFL's Tampa Bay Bandits.

The romantic ballad you refer to is "Al Di La," sung by Emilio Pericoli. By the way, it was during the filming of "Rome Adventure" that Donahue and Miss Pleshette became enamored. They were betrothed in 1964, but the marriage was almost as short-lived as Troy's film career. It went kaput the same year.

DEAR MICHELE: I could have sworn that actor Jack Cassidy played the part of Ted Baxter in the early episodes of "The Mary Tyler Moore Show." Did he? — Chris Byers

To Chris: Cassidy, who died in 1976 after setting himself and his West Hollywood home aflame while dozing off with a lit cigarette, was never the narcissistic Ted Baxter. That role began and ended with the capable actor Ted Knight.

TO OUR READERS: A storm of controversy has arisen over my recent reply to Connie Hayes in regard to the Alka Seltzer commercial with the famous line, "Try it, you'll like it." I will stand by my answer and so will Alka Seltzer. Released in 1972, this commercial is catalogued as No. MIAS 2413. The scenario goes something like this: A middle-aged, balding man is in a restaurant and a waiter is telling him, "Try it, you'll like it." The customer's response is "So I tried it, I thought I was gonna die." Alka Seltzer then comes to the rescue. "Try it, you'll like it" is not a line from a Life Cereal commercial.

TV Chatter

By Polly Vonetes

Christopher Durham, who plays Matt McCandless on "Capitol," did not "bare all" as this month's celebrity centerfold in Playgirl. Actually, his photos were tame when compared to some of the others in the magazine. Being from the same Virginia hometown as Durham, I was curious about the local reaction.

What do you say to the mother of a centerfold? When I broached the subject with Shelby Durham, she said, "I am so glad you asked how I felt. Chris knows and I want everyone else to know I do not approve of what he did. He was not raised 'that way.' When some of our elderly friends call about it, I find it embarrassing."

Like all mothers, Mrs. Durham is loyal to her son. She quickly adds that she will be traveling to Milwaukee this summer where Christopher will be starring in a musical.

Reactions from Durham's male friends were radically different from his mother's. Most accepted it as something you may have to do as you climb the ladder to success in show business. As for the local teenage girls — after a lot of giggles — I heard such reactions as "Oh, my God!" "I never knew" and "When is he coming home again?"

'Trapper John, M.D.'

Gonzo (Gregory Harrison) is forced to make a difficult decision when he is informed by Trapper (Pernell Roberts) that he must dismiss one of three equally qualified surgical residents, on "Trapper John, M.D.," airing Sunday, June 10 on CBS.

Lee Majors

'The Cowboy'

Lee Majors and Leslie Wing co-star in "The Cowboy and the Ballerina," a TV movie about a former world champion rodeo rider, who is trying to regain his title, and a defecting Russian ballerina who meet and fall in love. It is currently filming in Los Angeles for future broadcast on CBS.

Shultz flips over Netherland reception

By Peter Meade

As a member of "The A-Team," Dwight Schultz is used to seeing jeeps being flipped over. But he's not used to being in them while it happens.

"I leave that to the stunt men," says Schultz, who plays H.M. "Howling Mad" Murdock on NBC's top-rated series.

The closest he has come to being in a jeep rollover came in a most unlikely place and time — during a recent promotion tour of the Netherlands.

More than 20,000 fans stormed the plane that brought Schultz, Dirk Benedict and Mr. T to the land of tulips and windmills. Security was not prepared for such a Beatlemania-like mob, so when three-fourths of the A-Team (George Peppard was unavailable for duty; he was moving into a new house) got into an awaiting jeep, the fans were more than a mite overenthusiastic.

"It was quite an experience," says Schultz. "Everywhere we went we were shocked by the response. There are 14 million people in the Netherlands and 7 million watch 'The A-Team.' A few places where we landed by helicopter we had to take right off again. We just weren't prepared for this."

Nor was Schultz prepared for the popularity he has enjoyed by playing the A-Team's schizophrenic aviator extraordinaire. "I never thought I'd be on a television series," he says. "But I'm quite glad I am. Life is just one surprise after another."

The four-day trip to the Netherlands was a surprise for another reason. Schultz and his comrades were told it was a vacation. But the network had other plans.

"We were up 36 hours before we got any sleep," says Schultz. "And we never got more than six hours of sleep at any time, so we were wiped out by the time we got back. My good luck charm was stolen the moment I got off the plane. I was hoping to wear that one for three or four more years."

Dwight Shultz

Three or four more years seems like a conservative estimate for how much longer "The A-Team" will remain on the air. The action format of "The A-Team" receives an A for effort, even if it gets an F for realism. The only other missing ingredient is distaff decoration. The team's original "girl," as the members call her, Melinda Culea, was fired and her replacement, Marla Heasley, won't be back next year.

"She was never listed as one of the regulars," says Schultz. "They're trying to find someone, but there are a lot of politics involved."

Croissant A Paris

By Willie Schatz

Mon Dieu, think of the trials and tribulations of telecasting live from Paris. First, there's the language barrier. Second, there's the six-hour time difference from New York. Third, there's the difficulty of condensing two weeks of tennis into nine attractive hours on the home screen.

But that all comes with the territory when you're broadcasting a Grand Slam event, which NBC has been doing for the last two weeks at the French Open. The network's effort climaxes today with its second live telecast of the men's singles final (call it "Croissant a Paris," the Gallic answer to "Breakfast at Wimbledon").

"We're about where we were seven or eight years ago at Wimbledon," says Geoff Mason, who will produce NBC's telecast. "We're building a franchise, just the way we did at Wimbledon. We're just beginning to establish a relationship with the French. But we're not quite on the same broadcasting wavelength yet. And the language can be a terrible problem, especially under the time pressure. So we're going to be patient and keep it simple.

"It's taken us quite a while to arrive at the point where we are with the BBC," Mason explains. "We built that (Wimbledon) franchise into the best broadcast in television. That's where we want to get with the French Open."

Sunday, June 10.

NBA Playoffs, CBS. If the championship series is not a four-game sweep, the network will broadcast Game Five of the best-of-seven series. In addition, the final round of the $500,000 Westchester Open will be shown either before or after the game. If the series continues past today, Game Six will be played Tuesday night, June 12 and Game Seven will be played Thursday night, June 14.

SportsWorld, NBC. A 10-round middleweight bout between John Collins and Alex (The Bronx Bomber) Ramos. Neither guy can fight much, but Ramos has gotten some ink for skipping training to be with his girlfriend and wearing pinstriped trunks (gee, which team wears those?) into the ring. His dress might be the highlight of the day.

U.S. Olympic Team Trials, ABC. Boxing finals from Fort Worth. Without the Russians to pound, the Americans may have to take out their frustrations on each other.

ASK THEM YOURSELF

MOORE: THE DRILL OF IT ALL

Terry Moore's secret marriage to Howard Hughes in 1948 netted her a multimillion-dollar settlement from the late billionaire's will. So what did the lady do with the lucre? Well, diamonds may be some girls' best friends, but Terry preferred to cozy up to oil wells. "One in Texas, one in Virginia," she says. And just to prove the adage that the rich get richer, both wells have gushed with the substance known as black gold or Texas tea. Now for the big question: Will Terry buy another well? Or maybe she believes in the maxim that less is Moore.

□

If Playboy magazine had a message, it would probably be something on the order of "Grin and bare it," or maybe "Let it all hang out." Well, there are a few things that the magazine's founding father, Hugh Hefner, would like to keep under wraps. For example, Peter (The Last Picture Show) Bogdanovich's upcoming book The Killing of the Unicorn: Dorothy Stratten, 1960-1980 (due out this fall from Morrow), which portrays Hef in a less than charitable light. Dorothy Stratten, the 1980 Playmate of the Year and Bogdanovich's former girlfriend (the two met during the shooting of the film They All Laughed) had her tragic story told earlier this year in Star 80. The Bob Fosse film, starring Mariel Hemingway and Cliff Robertson (as Hefner), offered an unflattering view of Hugh. But Hef isn't going to sit around the Playboy mansion in his pajamas this time. He's asked the magazine's attorneys to press Morrow for changes. If the publisher proves receptive to changes, say mansion sources, no legal action is planned. And Hefner, who may know better than anyone how effective publicity is in selling a product, is keeping things hush-hush.

BEATTY: BEATING THE DRUMS FOR GARY HART

Warren Beatty is playing a role that for him is a bit out of character — a background performer in Gary Hart's bid for the presidential nomination. The reason? Both Hart and his longtime friend Beatty don't want to give a Hollywood sheen to the senator's image. Even so, the Oscar-winning director of Reds was the creative force behind several commercials recently taped by the presidential hopeful. Observers say that Warren had complete artistic control of the spots — the only way he's happy doing a film of ANY length. But don't bother looking for his name in the credits.

Price-conscious Beverly Hills residents with a yen for body resculpturing are returning from mainland China with the news that Beijing physicians are doing a booming plastic surgery business at bargain basement prices. An eye tuck costs $20, and a nose job will set you back a mere $35. To take just a bump off the old proboscis, the charge is $25. The price of an economy-class ticket to China: about $2,000. That would remove an unsightly bulge from your wallet.

□

Director Peter (Breaking Away) Yates could be said to be in deep trouble with his kids. When he was on location in Bermuda filming The Deep, in the summer of 1976, two of his children came along and Yates taught them how to skindive. "Now, ever since they came back to the city, they've been complaining they have nowhere to practice, nowhere to dive," laments the director of The Dresser, who probably wishes the kids had taken up something like, well, bicycling. But this news should make a splash with Yates' children: Screen writer Peter Benchley is finishing the script of The Deep II. IF it's shot in Bermuda, and IF Dad gets the nod as director, it may be breakers away — assuming that Dad doesn't waver in his decision to take them along.

I certainly don't feel any more mature because I'm working, if that's what you mean. Perhaps I even feel a bit younger — I'm 15 — than my other friends because I'm short. I suppose the only difference is that I can't get as close to anyone as "civilian" kids can because I'm working. It seems that as soon as I get friendly, I have to go out of town for work, or go back to the set.

Simply that we were young, our hearts were young, and we had a wonderful time. We worked late, then went out to the clubs. One night, we caroused a bit too much. I was a tour guide then, on the job at 9 a.m., and didn't have time to go home, so I decided to save time by freshening up in the pool in front of Rockefeller Center. I swam a bit before I got fished out by a guard. If anyone did that now, it would be all over the papers. At that time, it seemed no more than a big joke.

Reagan On The American Family

Altemus

Worries about the American family, once seemingly the province of fusspots and moralizing meddlers, are now on the national agenda. Issues like the two-paycheck household, day-care centers, birth control, abortion, Baby Jane Doe, and sex education in the schools make news. In part, conservative and liberal activists have forced some of these issues onto the front burner. But more than partisan politics — or special agendas — is involved. In 1984, issues of the American family are hitting home hard.

At the center of these concerns is a debate about fundamental values. Technological, social and economic changes have produced new pressures for fathers, mothers and their children. With many members of the media currently preoccupied with such problems as the latest turn of fortune in the Middle East, presidential aide Edwin Meese's finances and so on, FAMILY WEEKLY has sought to contribute to the quality of 1984's presidential debates by narrowing in on family issues. To this end, we've been publishing, since January, "Getting Political" interviews with the presidential candidates — all focused on family concerns.

Our most recent of these interviews on the American family took place in the Oval Office of the White House on a cold, grey afternoon in Washington. Although top presidential aides Michael Deaver and Michael McManus hovered in the background listening intently, no one interrupted the session with the president, who looked dapper in a dark blue business suit and was clearly delighted with the interview subject. I will intrude on the interview narrative only occasionally — to let you know the mood in the room, the tone of Mr. Reagan's voice, or whatever. The president replied to questions without notes or help from aides; what follows is virtually verbatim, edited only slightly for grammatical sense and space.

Q: Mr. President, one reads about more and more children being raised in a climate of divorce, more and more one-parent families, and more and more children going to day-care centers, out of the direct care of their mothers who have to work. Is the government doing something wrong, or is this just the way society is going? Is there anything government can do?

REAGAN: A number of things. First of all, while they were not aimed directly at the family, government policies, which led us down the road of excessive inflation and taxes, impoverished families to the point where both parents found it necessary to work if they were going to provide the things they believed their children should have. This had an effect on a great many families. And, in this modern time, there have been trends that have reduced family values in many people's minds.

We have almost doubled the tax credit for working mothers who use child-care facilities. Through our private sector initiatives department here, we're holding seminars and working with employers throughout the country, and more employers are now putting in day-care-center facilities for the children of their workers. This could wind up being the best kind of day care because the mother would have the opportunity during the working day to at least get in to see her child. And that would be better than the purely institutional care that goes with so many day-care centers.

Q: Some people feel we need more government aid for abortion and birth control. But what about people who want to nurture life rather than end it?

REAGAN: Consider that there are probably a million, a million and a half, people in this country who can't have children and want them and are on waiting lists to adopt. Abortion is not the answer to their problem. The answer would be facilities — a helping hand to, say, a young girl who's gotten into trouble and who now chooses the abortion route. We must make it more possible to help that young girl; make it possible for her child to be born and adopted. We must take care of her in her time of trouble.

(A group of photographers, some representing the wire services, were ushered out after a short "photo opportunity." I learned later that the extended presence of photographers makes Mr. Reagan nervous.)

Q: You have been prominent in your support of school prayer. Your political position on this issue is well known and astute. Some people advocate teaching sex education in the schools. Do you think that there is a level of such instruction that needs to be taught in the schools?

REAGAN: Well, now — (laughter) — let me answer that in two parts. I don't think my position on school prayer is well known. As a matter of fact, our legislation fell short of the two-thirds majority it needed because a number of senators whom I talked to personally were convinced that a yes vote would have meant the federal government mandating the schools that they would have to have prayers. And they were sincerely and honestly concerned: "Well, who's going to write those prayers?" . . .

I don't know how this distorted view got around. My view on school prayer is that the government is supposed to be neutral with regard to prayer because the government is neither to advocate nor prevent religious practice. And all that we were asking was that the Constitution be interpreted, as I believe it really reads, to say that if someone wants to have prayer in school, they can have prayer in school. So much for that.

Now, to get down to sex education. In my present capacity, it doesn't matter much what I may feel about it. I don't think the federal government should have a part in that. It belongs right back where most of education does, and that's at the local school district level where the parents can have a voice in the education their children are getting.

Speaking as a parent, I have to say that I think there's reason for concern. Touching on the previous half of this question, the worry about separating church and state has segued over into sex education, so that where it is being taught, there is a total avoidance of any moral connotation with regard to sex. And to teach sex as a purely physical function without taking into consideration the moral precepts that are involved — I think this should be of concern to those in charge of education.

(The president was warming up to the topic — and the occasion. Initially a bit nervous, he began to hit his stride. One imagined what it might have been like to interview President Carter, ever on top of details but often missing the main point, or President Nixon — dark, brooding, insecure. Reagan seemed reasonably at peace with himself, comfortable in the presidential role, if not overly worried about facts and details.)

Q: On another issue, Mr. President, we know your position on reducing the government's involvement in people's personal lives. But the intervention of the Surgeon General in the Baby Jane Doe case on Long Island struck some people as "good ol' busybody Uncle Sam" acting like Big Brother. Should government be involved in this kind of thing, or is that sort of a special case and you don't see it as part of a pattern of government activity?

REAGAN: The initial interest in all of that came about with another Baby Doe [in Indiana] that was allowed to starve to death because it was believed that that baby had such handicaps at birth that he would be unable to have a full, rich life. There are many people with physical handicaps who have very full and rich lives. And the fact that in this case they could decide that the baby shouldn't live, but they knew that if they took his life it would be murder, so they stood back and in a technical sense did not take his life, they just let him starve to death, which took about a week . . . .

In civil rights there is a rehabilitation feature about not discriminating against the handicapped. And all the government asked in this case on Long Island was to see the records to see if, because of the handicaps with which the child was born, she was being discriminated against by being denied the surgery that could change some of those handicaps. And the court has ruled that, no, the government couldn't see those records. But this was done in the context of, as I say, the civil rights law regarding the handicapped.

Q: Well, one worry, though, is that medical science seems to come up with some fabulous new operation or treatment almost every week, and the whole business of prolonging life beyond a "sensible" point is likely to arise again and again. I just wonder whether you're worried about government getting involved in every other case that presents itself.

REAGAN: Well, no. If there's one thing that is a responsibility of the federal government, it is the guarantee of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. Now, there is life and some people take it upon themselves to say we want to cancel that life out, based on our opinion of what it might become. How do you rectify that?

REAGAN: Yes. Can we have a Constitution that says one thing and then, faced with problems of this kind, let the government say: "Well, in this case it doesn't count. You're not entitled to life."?

Q: The press occasionally voices criticisms such as how can President Reagan talk about the importance of religion in American life when the president and Mrs. Reagan don't go to church on Sunday? Or how can you talk about family life because you don't visit your grandchildren? Does the press sometimes go too far in looking at the private lives of public officials? Or are these fair points to raise, in your view?

Insecticide Awarded Third Patent

ROACH PRUFE, #1 in Three University Tests

The University of California and the University of Nebraska have just released two independent studies that have been published in the Entomological Society of America Journal. In the studies, thirty-one well known consumer and commercial insecticide products were tested in heavily roach infested homes and apartments. Confirming an earlier University of California published report, ROACH PRUFE's patented formula again took the #1 spot as the most effective roach killer. In the new University of California report, ROACH PRUFE was tested against the sprays and powders commonly used by the exterminators, and was the only product in the twelve-week study that showed 100% control. In the University of Nebraska study, well known consumer aerosol, fogger, and dust products were tested. Here again ROACH PRUFE provided the best results in their eight-week tests.

Disease Carriers Odorless, Easy To Apply

Alan Brite, holder of seventeen U.S. and foreign patents, has just been awarded his third patent on ROACH PRUFE. Brite says: "Because roaches simply do not recognize ROACH PRUFE as an insecticide, they do not try to avoid it by scattering to other parts of your residence as they do with other insecticides. Plus the electrostatically charged powder sticks to the roach's body and is then carried back into the walls and spread among the other roaches. The result is you kill not only the roaches you see, but also those hiding and multiplying in the walls."

ROACH PRUFE is odorless, non-evaporating, non-staining, and non-flammable. The powder is simply applied with a teaspoon under kitchen appliances and in other hidden areas. It can be used in homes, schools, hospitals, restaurants, plus new construction.

ROACH PRUFE is available at most hardware stores or it can be ordered direct from the manufacturer by sending a check or money order for $8.90. This includes postage for the one pound container. Add tax in California. One pound covers up to a nine room residence. You'll need an extra pound for a basement or garage. Send to Copper Brite, Inc., Dept. 12 at 5147 W. Jefferson Blvd., Los Angeles, CA 90016. Copies of the 3 University tests are available by sending a self-addressed stamped envelope to Copper Brite, Inc., Dept. A.

REAGAN

REAGAN: I don't think it's a fair point to raise when they take, from their viewpoint, just something they see and they don't have all the facts. And they don't have all the facts. Nancy and I miss going to church very much. And we know why we can't go. Now, some have implied that we didn't ever go; well, we did. And when we came here we started going to church. But we became self-conscious about the fact that when we arrived on Sunday morning we detracted from the frame of mind that people should be in when they go to church. And yet, we were encouraged by the people there. But when it came to a matter of security and when you look at the barricades that have to be put up around the White House itself, how can we go to church knowing that some terrorist — that we could be responsible for causing the deaths of many people by our being there? So, we can't go.

But, I've been encouraged in other ways by some clergymen whom I respect very much. They've told me that, in view of the risks, they feel it's possible to practice religion without actually going to church, even though we would like to attend. And we do. After I heard and learned about all the series of miracles that intervened to save my life when I was shot three years ago, I decided whatever time I had left belonged to someone else.

Q: I would think that that 1981 experience is something that no one could ever quite block out of one's mind. And, not that one lives in fear, but it must put a cast — put things in a certain context.

REAGAN: Yes. And if you're out amongst them you're a little more alert than you might have been before. (Laughter.)

Q: I can imagine. Another question, Mr. President. Generation gaps are nothing new; there seems to be at least one in every family. Your daughter, Patti Davis, has been quoted as saying that arresting people for smoking pot is silly, and that living with a boyfriend is as normal as brushing your teeth. What is it we've done with these young people, Mr. President, or does Patti have a point, and maybe the old morality is, well, a little bit old for today's times?

REAGAN: I'm just sorry that spanking is — (laughter) — out of fashion now.

Q: And you mean that — don't you? (Laughter.)

REAGAN: Yes. (Laughter.)

Q: The values one learns growing up in a small town — in your case in Illinois — may form the core of the American conscience and consciousness. Do any of these come in handy in Washington, or are they simply irrelevant? I mean the honesty and the openness that you find in a small town.

REAGAN: I'm glad that I grew up in a small town, and I'm glad that I went to a small college. If I could recommend it to any young people, I'd tell them to do the same thing. I don't say that people living in small towns are better than people living in cities — I don't mean it in that way at all. But I think that in a small town where you're not anonymous, where you're recognized — and it's the same when you get to a small campus — you can't hide. You know that you're known. There are more things expected of you. For example, in a big university it's so easy for students to just go to class and back to their quarters after class, and not get involved in any of the other outside activities that are also very educational. But in a small school you're needed....And pretty soon you find everyone's involved. And they discover things about themselves they might never have discovered.

Q: The population of the U.S. is changing demographically, as you know. The Census Bureau has identified the drift into smaller towns, into suburbs, and into the Sunbelt. I wonder if you feel that the things you say you stand for are a direct reflection of this trend and that people are responding to them as something that's important to have?

REAGAN: I think what we're seeing is a swing of the pendulum. When I was a young man, over 70 percent of the people in this country lived in what was small-town and rural America. Today, about 75 percent of America lives in urban centers. We've turned into an urban population. It's hard for people to realize that, while we've doubled our population, there are any number of countries out there — a tremendous number of countries — that have a smaller population than they had 50 years ago. Now what we're seeing, I think, is that the big migration into the cities didn't live up to what some people wanted for themselves.

Q: Mr. President, I think that some Americans are troubled, or puzzled, when they hear their bishop or minister or rabbi declaiming on political issues. Do you think, in a certain sense, the American clergy ought to sort of go back to prayer — to stay out of politics and leave that to you?

REAGAN: No, because in a society like ours, if you start designating professions or trades that should not participate in political discourse, where do

FLATTEN your STOMACH

FOR MEN ONLY

Come on guys! Get ready to flatten your stomach with the new FLATTEN YOUR STOMACH: FOR MEN ONLY program from the Editors of Consumer Guide®.

Yes, even if you watch what you eat. Even if you engage in some kind of sport or exercise, your stomach may still bulge and sag because your abdominal muscles are not properly toned.

That's why you need a program of exercises that work together so that all — and not just some — of the four major abdominal muscles get toned up. Some of these muscles run up and down. Others run side to side. And some crisscross the abdomen at an angle. If you only exercise one of these muscles (like most men do when they do sit-ups) your stomach may be hard. But it won't be flat.

The new FLATTEN YOUR STOMACH: FOR MEN ONLY program, however, has been designed to produce balanced muscle development and shaping, while avoiding soreness and injury. It gives you seven different routines, one for each day of the week. Each routine becomes more vigorous as you move through the program. You may do the entire series in one week. Or get in shape gradually by staying on one routine for several days before you move on to the next. But either way, you'll end up with a stomach that's both hard and flat.

So take action now. Try these simple, easy-to-follow exercises and see if you don't feel more fit, energetic and self-confident in just a few short weeks. Order the new FLATTEN YOUR STOMACH: FOR MEN ONLY today.

you stop? I used to face that as an actor. There were many people who said that actors, because they're known and because they can attract an audience, shouldn't be out campaigning for candidates or for causes they believed in, speaking at fundraisers and so forth, and we used to be criticized. And there were people within the profession who said: "No, your business is acting up there. You just wait and act." And, as I said then and I say about these others, where then would you stop? Who would be the ones permitted to talk about public issues? Now, I do say this — because I have disagreed sometimes with some of the more extreme positions taken by some of the clergy — if they're going to do that, they have an obligation to really look at both sides and make sure that they are advising their flock correctly.

Q: Your position on the church-state issue is interesting: You feel in a way that we may have overdrawn the line a bit, and you're a little more comfortable than some people with clergymen talking about political issues.
REAGAN: Sure.

Q: And politicians talking about religious issues?
REAGAN: Yes.

Q: Mr. President, this is a little bit off the beaten track, but if you were to resign voluntarily sometime in your second term, assuming, as many do, that you will be re-elected, is Mr. Bush ready and able to assume the office of the president? Have you trained him well enough?
REAGAN: It isn't a case of my training him; it's a case of what he's capable of doing. I think he's probably the best vice president we've ever had in this country. I believe that we have, over too many years, thought of the second in line as someone who's just sitting on the sidelines, you know, looking for signs of ill health in Number One and waiting for something to happen. Well, no — I've always believed that they're really like an executive vice president in a corporation, and they should be used as that. [Bush] is very much a part of everything that goes on in our Cabinet, in our administration. He has been in 48 states. He has been in 53 countries. He was in charge of our project of reducing — which we did successfully — a number of regulations. I don't know of a vice president who has ever been as much a part of the action as he is.

Q: As you approach the conclusion of what many people think will be only your first term, if God said, "Okay, Mr. Reagan, you can go back to January 1981 and do it all over again so it will come out differently," can you think of two or three things that stick in your mind as little blips that you wish you could have smoothed out?
REAGAN: I'd have gotten in the car quicker on March 30, 1981. (Laughter.)

(Editor's note: With this Q&A session, FAMILY WEEKLY has now published interviews with every major candidate for the presidency in 1984, except for former Vice President Walter Mondale, to whom the magazine continues to extend its invitation.) FW

A RECORD-BREAKING FLIGHT FROM FRIGHT

© Rick Browne/Picture Group

By Bethany Kandel

At 37,000 feet over the Pacific in a Gulfstream III, jetting toward America, Brooke Knapp knew for sure she had a shot at flying around the world in less time than any commercial pilot in history. Seven hours later, at 9:10:12 a.m. February 16th, she touched down at National Airport in Washington, D.C.

She had done it. By circling the globe in 45 hrs., 32 mins., 53 secs., Knapp had set the all-time round-the-world speed record, cutting almost half an hour off the record set in 1976 by a Pan Am 747. Along the way, she also set 43 other flying records for a lifetime total of 103 — more than any other pilot.

Hard to believe that just seven years ago Brooke Knapp was afraid to be airborne. She changed all that.

"I'm a restless person," Knapp explains. "I have a driving force within me always pushing forward to find new frontiers and challenges." On the first day of each year she makes a list of her fears and then sets out to conquer them. Fear of flying topped the list in 1977. Her husband, Charles Knapp, chairman of Financial Corp. of America and an avid pilot, encouraged her to take lessons. She procrastinated for months, then showed up late. "I'm the only person who loved ground school."

The romance of flying propelled her interest and she was soon performing loops in open cockpit biplanes. But flying for fun wasn't enough. When friends complained that deregulation had cut out much of the air service to smaller cities, Knapp, who'd been working in a stockbrokerage firm, decided to go into business. She quickly assembled a tax shelter group, bought a $2.5 million jet, and founded Jet Airways. It took off in no time and is now one of the largest executive charter airlines on the West Coast, flying passengers like Bob Hope, Paul McCartney, Jane Fonda and Jerry Brown.

For Knapp, the sky was not the limit. The next challenge: "I wanted to prove myself to a male-dominated industry that didn't take me seriously." She likes to tell the story of a female passenger who asked her in all sincerity, "Do you really know how to fly this airplane?" Knapp turned to her male copilot and said, "Why didn't she ask you that?" So in February 1983, Knapp took off from San Francisco in a Learjet christened "The American Dream." She circled the globe from east to west in 50 hours, knocking 15 hours off the previous record for a pilot in a private aircraft. She accomplished this through a combination of careful route planning and excellent turn times (landing, refueling and taking off).

Last November, she became the first woman to circle the Earth over the poles and the first civilian pilot in years to land in Antarctica. "That trip was a confirmation that we didn't just luck out the first time," she says.

When she returned to Los Angeles, reporters asked: "What's next?"

"How do you like Moscow to Peking?" she joked.

"Suddenly, a fire lit under me," Knapp recalls. Despite the fact that Russia is normally closed to U.S. air traffic, Knapp — in a matter of weeks — convinced Soviet officials, as well as authorities in China, Japan, Great Britain and the U.S., to give the flight the go-ahead. To make it a gesture of peaceful, non-political international cooperation, Knapp called it the Flight for the World's Children, flew children's letters and artwork from nation to nation, and got corporate sponsors like Hitachi Corp. to donate more than $400,000 for UNICEF.

The aviation industry has since recognized her as one of the top pilots in the country. "Brooke Knapp clearly has 'the right stuff,'" says Stephen Oster, director of the National Aeronautic Association.

Brooke sees it all as only the beginning. She's already talking about a non-stop world flight in an F-15 jet fighter with mid-air refueling. "That," she says, "would truly be awesome." FW

BURNING ISSUE

A RASH REACTION TO DRUGS AND THE SUN

By Merri Rosenberg

Most people know that drugs and alcohol don't mix, but drugs and sunshine? This can be a potentially harmful combination as well.

Many routinely prescribed and over-the-counter drugs can produce skin rashes or sunburn in some people as they soak up solar rays — whether they're lying on the beach, getting in a few sets of tennis or even strolling down a city sidewalk. Known as photosensitivity reaction, these rashes and burns are caused by the drug's interaction with sunlight.

While such effects are relatively rare, experts caution consumers to be aware that what they might dismiss as a rash or ordinary sunburn may in fact be an adverse drug reaction to sunlight. If you are taking medications and notice a skin rash or burn, alert your doctor. Children and the elderly are more susceptible than others, according to Oscar Araujo, Ph.D., a professor of pharmacy at the Univerity of Florida in Gainesville, because their skin is thinner and more sensitive.

The most common categories of drugs that can produce this reaction include the following: antihistamines, familiar to most allergy sufferers; antibiotics; diuretics, used by heart patients, high-blood-pressure sufferers and some dieters; anti-acne medications; oral birth-control pills; tranquilizers; antidepressants. Some perfumes and cosmetics can also cause problems, as can sunscreen preparations (especially those that contain PABA), which though used to prevent sunburn have just the opposite effect in certain individuals.

"Many topical preparations can create a reaction," says Judith Jones, M.D., Ph.D., a clinical pharmacologist with the Food and Drug Administration in Rockville, Md. "Some people, especially those with chronic allergies, can have problems with sunscreens."

The sun's interaction with a drug can also lead to heat stroke. "A lot of antihistamines, or drugs with antihistamines in them, can affect your ability to sweat," reports Dr. Jones. Be alert to possible signs of heat stroke, such as nausea, dizziness or uncontrolled movement. If you experience such symptoms, call your doctor immediately and use cold packs to prevent further damage.

Doctors cannot predict whether an individual will have a photosensitive reaction, so to avoid possible problems, limit your exposure to the sun if you're taking drugs. Protect yourself by keeping the sensitive areas of your body covered — especially the face, shoulders, neck and feet. Read the labels on over-the-counter medications carefully and consult your pharmacist or physician if you have any questions about your medication. The best protection, says Dr. Jones, "is to know what you're taking." FW

THE BEAR FACTS

THE BAD NEWS GRIZZLIES: THEY EAT PEOPLE, DON'T THEY?

By Jon R. Luoma

This is a story about bears. Like some of the oldest and best stories about bears, this one begins with the words: "Once upon a time."

Once upon a time, there were at least 100,000 grizzly bears ranging across almost all of the western half of the United States. A huge and powerful animal with no natural enemies, the grizzly held a position of absolute dominance in the wilderness forests of the West. The grizzly in America was a king of beasts.

The early nineteenth century explorers Lewis and Clark encountered droves of grizzlies on the banks of the Missouri River, and some early frontiersmen told of seeing the great bears on the Pacific coast, eating the carcasses of beached whales. But as the nation was settled, these great, hulking beasts began to vanish.

By the 1960s there were only two regions south of the Canadian border where the grizzly thrived. One of these was the nation's most famous "bear country" — Yellowstone National Park on the Wyoming-Montana border.

Much of Yellowstone's 2-million-acre "park" is rugged, isolated wilderness; just what grizzlies need to survive. Because the park is protected from heavy development, logging and mining, there once was every reason to believe that the grizzly would endure.

Yet today it is clear that the grizzlies of Yellowstone could become a "once-upon-a-time" story too: Only about 200 grizzlies now inhabit Yellowstone. They are listed as a "threatened" species, though that word may not reflect the seriousness of their plight. As Gary Brown, assistant chief ranger for resources management at Yellowstone puts it: "It isn't the number of grizzlies that concerns us, it's the population trend. And the most recent data we have shows a downward spiral."

Naturalist John Muir once said of the grizzly: "To him everything is food except granite." Indeed, grizzlies are huge creatures, typically ranging from 300 pounds up to, in rare instances, half a ton, and they have voracious appetites. That's part of the problem.

A natural diet of berries, nuts, roots, insects, fish, and even deer and elk is not the only one that appeals to a bear. Grizzlies by nature are wary of humans, but potential bear-food abounds near people. If a bear is rewarded once by an easy meal, it will almost inevitably return to the same spot. Eventually the bear comes to associate the proximity of people with a first-rate meal. And for the bears, contact with humans often means bad news.

Bears that stray outside of the park in search of an easy meal are still shot by ranchers who fear for their livestock, and by poachers who kill for profit.

And occasionally even those who want to save grizzlies have been responsible for killing them — not for profit, but of an ironic, bitter sort of necessity born of the bears' run-ins with humans.

Dr. Chris Servheen, grizzly bear recovery coordinator for the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, is a man committed both professionally and personally to saving the animal. Yet he was forced to put a 435-pound grizzly to death last year. In the early morning hours of June 25, the bear had entered a campsite in the Gallatin National Forest, just outside of Yellowstone Park, and without warning, dragged a camper out of his tent and ripped him apart for no apparent reason.

Stephen Krasemann/Photoresearchers

Such attacks are exceedingly rare in grizzly country. There have only been four in the entire Yellowstone ecosystem since the turn of the century, two of them before 1920, and two in the last 12 years (six fatal attacks have occurred at Glacier National Park in Montana since 1967). Yet wildlife managers say they must operate on the assumption that some bears are a threat. An unarmed human is no match for a grizzly that can break a cow's neck with a swat of its paw and rip open the tough hide of an elk with one swipe of its knife-like claws.

Unless a problem bear has actually attacked someone, wildlife managers usually trap it in a cylinder and fly it by helicopter to the park's deep backcountry, hoping that it will stay out of contact with humans. It seldom works, however, and those bears that seem incurably habituated to humans must eventually be removed from the ecosystem. Some are flown to remote wilderness areas in northern Canada; others are shipped to zoos.

Unfortunately, removing a bear from the region accelerates the population problem in that it is a blow to future breeding success. "It would be great if a bear we ship to Canada could beat the odds and establish itself in unfamiliar territory," says Yellowstone's Brown. "But it doesn't do a thing for the future of the Yellowstone ecosystem."

At the core of the grizzly's clouded future is the fact that as few as 32 breeding-age females are left in the park. Grizzly sows normally breed only once every three years, giving birth to an average of two cubs. Thus, further declines seem inevitable.

"We can't do much about the birth-rate problem," Servheen admits, "so we have to do something about the man-caused mortalities. If we can stop the destruction of grizzly bear habitats and if we can limit mortality, the bear might still recover."

The various state and federal agencies that administer the park are now working together to limit deaths.

Vigorous efforts are being made to stop poaching, and the enforcement program has been enhanced by a National Audubon Society reward program that offers up to $10,000 for information leading to the arrest of poachers. Furthermore, last year the park agencies instituted new policies designed to minimize conflicts between bears and humans. Part of the effort focuses on educating campers. But more important, when there is potential for conflict, trails or campsites or even whole tracts of the park may now be temporarily placed off-limits in deference to the needs of the bears.

By the time the bears of Yellowstone went into hibernation last winter, these measures appeared to be succeeding; there were only six documented cases of grizzlies killed by humans in 1983, a decrease from 14 the previous year.

There's no certainty that the success will continue. But researchers agree that unless it does, the Yellowstone grizzly is almost certainly doomed.

There has not always been such unanimity among those studying the problem. In fact, a disagreement in 1968 dealt the grizzly a costly blow.

In that year, a program that Ranger Brown now calls "natural regulation" was begun, the intent of which was to encourage entirely wild populations of animals within the park, independent of human support. In the case of the grizzlies, that meant closing the park's open-pit dumps where they regularly congregated for an easy meal.

But twin brothers John and Frank Craighead, at the time the only wildlife biologists to have intensively studied Yellowstone's grizzlies, raised the argument that the bears had become dependent on the dumps as a highly stable source of protein.

Despite the Craigheads' recommendation for a gradual phasing out, all the dumps were closed by the early 1970s. The Craigheads warned that it would force some bears into settled areas in search of food, and inevitably raise bear mortality at the hands of humans. Indeed, known grizzly mortality in the region roughly doubled during the first five years that bears were making the transition from dumps to natural sources of food.

Today, it is generally accepted that the Craigheads were right all along about the grizzly bear's decline. And if the bears are to be saved, it will take a concentrated long-term effort on the part of all the park's agencies.

Brown acknowledges that there are difficult times ahead, and that the park's various functions often conflict. "We want to provide as much of the park as possible for the people," he says. "At the same time, we want to make sure that the bear survives. But the two interests are often in conflict."

Still, there will be grizzlies in Yellowstone this summer. Hikers into the park's backcountry will, quite rightly, feel a twinge of awe at one of the few animals on earth that humans must fear — a creature that, like Yellowstone itself, is a spectacular piece of raw nature preserved. And just maybe the story of the grizzlies of Yellowstone will never have to begin with: "Once upon a time...." FW

CAR CARE MADE SIMPLE IN OUR NEW MONTHLY COLUMN

WHAT TO CHECK FOR CAREFREE SUMMER DRIVING

By Don Sharp

"Daddy," said the child, "I know hobgoblins and monsters hide under the bed, but do they hide under the car, too?"

"An interesting thought," said the father, stooping to peer into the shadowy innards. "Let's check."

Under the Hood

Oil Change: Of under-the-hood matters, an oil change is the most important. During the cold season, minute quantities of fuel condense into liquid during start-up and while the engine is warming. This liquid gasoline escapes past the piston rings, winds up in the oil, and degrades its ability to lubricate. In addition, moisture in the cold air the engine sucks in also condenses and winds up in the oil, where it combines with the gas to form acids that eat away metal engine parts.

These evils do not depend on sub-zero temperatures. Atlanta has quite enough frosty mornings to degrade engine oil over several months, and Los Angeles certainly has the moisture during the winter.

To be sure, modern engines and oils are so good that some car manufacturers specify an oil change no more often than every 7,500 miles, in contrast to the 2,000-mile interval that was standard 20 years ago. Long intervals notwithstanding, oil that has been collecting condensed gas and water for several months needs changing.

Tune-Up: Besides an oil change, summer driving also calls for a tune-up. Nowadays, that mostly means a check on the dozen or so elements of the pollution-control system. Many of these elements respond to heat: They go into one position when the engine is cold and move into another when it is hot, and their motion often gets sluggish in the winter. If they stick in one position, the engine won't run properly. Too often, the mechanic looks elsewhere for the problem, so ask that the system get a thorough check.

Heat Riser: Some cars have a spring-leaded trapdoor of sorts, a "heat riser," in the exhaust manifold, about where the exhaust pipe connects to the engine. If the heat riser sticks in the closed position, it restricts exhaust flow, and the restricted exhaust flow will cause all kinds of problems — particularly overheating — even a new radiator won't cure.

Air Conditioner: After several months of idleness, air conditioners often refuse to work when summer comes. Most of the time, the Freon refrigerant gas has simply seeped out and the system can easily be recharged. However, things get more serious if the compressor has seized up or corrosion has made a leak in the external heat exchanger. Go to a shop specializing in air conditioners.

Under the Body

The stuff underneath the car matters just as much as the stuff under the hood, particularly those hinge-like joints that let the wheels bounce over bumps and turn right and left. Wintertime slush (usually laden with salt) and frequent rains force moisture into those joints. Since oil and grease float, the water can displace the grease in those joints and cause them to rust. Joints with rubber bushings that have no grease are not exempt from hazard, for the moisture can cause the surrounding metal to rust, after which the rusty metal chews up the rubber bushing.

Accordingly, put the car on a service station lift and have the mechanic inspect everything under there that moves. Everything. This means the rubber and metal bushings in the suspension system A-arms and struts, on the "sway" bar, and on the shock absorbers; as well as the steering system tie-rod ends and the ball joints. Look for damage inside the tires, for wear on disk-brake rotors, and for defects in the exhaust system. Give the parking brake cables a pull and make sure each one moves freely. And don't forget to check the universal joints on rear-drive cars or to look up above the headlights and in other nooks and crannies for accumulations of mud, for these places will be the first to rust.

As a final thought, say you've just bought a used car and wonder about its health; well, give it this same once-over. You may not always like what you find, but better to find it at home rather than in a thunderstorm on a busy freeway — a setting that is a favorite for hobgoblins. PW

SMART MONEY MOVES FOR SINGLES

By Merrie Spaeth

There are 46 million single adults in this country, and they all have special financial needs. For guidance on the right money moves for singles to make, FAMILY WEEKLY talked to Nancy Dunnan, a financial analyst and writer for the New York brokerage house of Sherman Ralston and author of Financial Savvy for Singles (Rawson).

Q: Ms. Dunnan, financially speaking, what's the best thing about being single — and what's the worst?

A: The best thing is the independence you have in terms of handling your money. You don't have anyone second-guessing you or criticizing you. The worst thing is what is called "the waiting game." I found singles have an almost phenomenal ability to delay making financial decisions. They think, "Oh, I'll wait until I'm married." In the process of delay, a lot of good opportunities go by. It's not a wise way to handle your money.

A: Establish a list of short-term financial goals that you can reach in a year's time. This list will vary depending on your age and your life situation. In the 20's, the list will reflect that you're just getting established, and may include items such as buying a car. In midlife, if you're a single parent, you need to increase your income. Later the list will reflect the need to set up retirement funds. Write down your short-term goals and assign starting and ending dates. Make them specific dates because it's too easy for singles to "float." Once you've got your short-term goals, it's time to draw up a budget.

Q: What's the biggest money mistake singles make?

A: Not saving. They tend to spend their money rather than save it, particularly if they aren't in charge of supporting someone else. And in doing the research for this book, I discovered that single women in particular tend to stick their heads in the sand about money more than men.

A: They should put away 10 to 15 percent of their income. One excellent investment for singles is real estate. There's no reason to believe that only families should be home buyers. Singles should also save for retirement. They ought to be worried about the Social Security system. Even corporate pension plans are being restricted by economic realities. This is even more important for women, who seem to think that their husbands' pension will take care of them. Only 5 percent of women collect from their husbands' pension, and the average widow is living on $4,000 a year. FW

There has always been some friction between smokers and non-smokers. But lately this friction has grown more heated.

The controversy has been fueled by questionable reports which claim that "second-hand smoke" is a cause of serious diseases among non-smokers.

But, in fact, there is little evidence—and certainly nothing which proves scientifically—that cigarette smoke causes disease in non-smokers.

Skeptics might call this the wishful thinking of a tobacco company. But consider the scientific judgment of some of the leading authorities in the field—including outspoken critics of smoking.

For example, in 1983 the organizer of an international conference on environmental tobacco smoke (ETS) summarized the evidence on lung cancer as follows: "An overall evaluation based upon available scientific data leads to the conclusion that an increased risk for non-smokers from ETS exposure has not been established."

Even the chief statistician of the American Cancer Society, Lawrence Garfinkel, has gone on record as saying, "passive smoking may be a political matter, but it is not a main issue in terms of health policy."

Which brings us back to our original point: cigarette smoke can be very annoying to non-smokers.

But how shall we as a society deal with this problem?

Confrontation? Segregation? Legislation?

No. We think annoyance is neither a governmental problem nor a medical problem. It's a people problem.

Smokers and non-smokers have to talk to one another. Not yell, preach, threaten, badger or bully. Talk.

Smokers can help by being more considerate and responsible. Non-smokers can help by being more tolerant. And both groups can help by showing more respect for each other's rights and feelings.

But eliminating rumor and rhetoric will help most of all.

Because when you stick to the facts, it's a lot easier to deal with the friction.

WHIZ QUIZ

IS A HAPPY MARRIAGE JUST A CHORE?

By John E. Gibson

TRUE OR FALSE?

1. Sharing the household chores helps the morale of both spouses.
2. Most men are more creative than their wives.
3. There are significant personality differences between single women and married women.
4. There's no truth to the notion that men tend to marry women younger than themselves and women choose older men for husbands.
5. As couples grow older, physical attractiveness becomes less important.

ANSWERS

1. True. Using data from a national sample of married couples, University of Illinois investigators have found that wives are happier and less subject to depression if their husbands help with the housework, and that husbands are not depressed as a result of helping. It was noted that anything that gives a person's morale a boost and increases his or her sense of well-being cannot help but have a positive effect on the quality of the marriage.
2. False. Though wives may not always make the most of their creative potential, a study of creativity, conducted by investigators from Iowa State University and the University of Georgia, showed that wives scored significantly higher than husbands on standard tests of creative thinking.
3. True. A University of California study showed that there was little difference in morale between the two groups. In general, single women exhibited more poise and assertiveness than married women. And while singles valued personal growth and achievement, most wives gave personal relationships and household activities the highest priority.
4. False. An examination of marriage licenses issued over a 50-year period, conducted by Ohio State University behavioral scientists, revealed that the husband was older than the wife in over 75 percent of the cases. The study concluded that this tendency "supports the sociobiological theory of mate selection, by which males select younger females to enhance reproductive possibilities and females select older males to match their level of physical maturity."
5. False. A team of psychologists at Claremont Men's College and Claremont Graduate School (Calif.) examined the effects of physical attractiveness on the marital adjustment of older couples. The investigators concluded from their findings that "physical attraction is important in long-term married couples' relationships, especially for males. The older husband's self-esteem may be bolstered if he thinks his wife perceives him as attractive, and his satisfaction with his appearance also seems to enhance his wife's contentment with the relationship. The wife may also evaluate her own physical assets more favorably if she believes her husband is attractive." FW

PEAK EXPERIENCE

HAPPY TRAILS TO YOU

By Marion Long

There's a mountainous task facing America's hikers. Because of overuse and abuse, many of our most beautiful wilderness trails are in dire need of repair. And while it's an uphill battle, the Appalachian Mountain Club (A.M.C.), the country's oldest mountaineering organization, has a plan for getting the work done.

The A.M.C., which is headquartered in Boston, has taken on the responsibility for maintaining 1,000 miles of trails in various regions of the U.S. But members can't do the job alone, so the club is offering Mountain Volunteer Vacations. The plan includes room and board, training, supervision, tools — all the amenities. What you contribute is the sweat and elbow grease to help put the trails back in shape (general maintenance, building erosion-control bridges, etc.) It's a great vacation — scenic, adventurous, inexpensive and productive — and the only costs are transportation and a project fee that runs $10 to $100.

There's still time to sign up for the A.M.C. programs. This summer and fall volunteer trailblazers will be at work in New Mexico, in and around the Grand Teton National Park in Wyoming, in the White Mountains of New Hampshire and the Berkshires of New York.

Volunteers don't have to be mountain folk. They just have to be in pretty good physical shape and be willing to work. There are no restrictions on age, and, according to A.M.C. spokesman Tom Deans, volunteers need only "a spirit of adventure and a desire to pour something back into the mountains and rivers they love." BREAK DANCING HITS THE STREETS EVERYWHERE

By Joanne Kaufman

They move like plugged-in mannequins, as if they were Olympic gymnasts speeded up to 78 r.p.m. Or maybe more like robots with souped-up motors. They're break dancers, whose backbending, breathtaking moves are chronicled in TV commercials and such films as Flashdance, Breakin' and the just-released Beat Street. They're also turning heads and setting trends around the nation.

Break dancing, a melange of gymnastics, ballet, martial arts and pantomime, began a decade ago in the underprivileged neighborhoods of New York City's Harlem and South Bronx. But in recent years it has broken out all over the country. Chicago, Atlanta, Philadelphia, Washington, Los Angeles and Detroit are new sites for this highly specialized brand of dancing in the streets.

And it isn't just restricted to the cities anymore, insists Akiva Talmi, a New York-based ballet promoter and manager who is sponsoring a 40-city cross-country break dance tour that began May 26 and will run through October. "Suburban kids who see it on television and in demonstrations at shopping malls are trying out their new-found skills at sweet-16 parties and barmitzvahs," Talmi says.

Two basic movements predominate in break dancing, according to Talmi: spinning — on the shoulders, head, elbows, back and hands — and so-called "popping," or "electric boogie," an isolated — and jerking — action from jaw to head, from elbow to hand. "Break dancing is revolutionary in that it changes the center of gravity from the feet to the head," he points out.

In the late '60s, gangs began to use the break dance as a means of determining territorial rights. The group that executed the best glides (a movement that resembles walking on air), windmills (shoulder pirouettes) or "suicide" moves (backward flip to forward flip to a flip landing on one's back) was the group that could claim the block. Indeed, according to legend, rival gangs would try to "out break" each other not just for a specific slice of land but for the favor of a girl, as well.

Breakers, almost all of whom are male, do not participate in conventional social dancing. They perform for others, usually in teams of six or so — an outgrowth of dancing for rival gangs — and they are accompanied by the beat of rhythm and blues or rock music ululating from an oversized radio, or by "rapping": rhythmic rhymes that are autobiographical vignettes. The appropriate foot gear for the serious breaker: high-topped basketball shoes with wide, white laces.

Breakers like to perform under crazy pseudonyms such as Airborne, Wiggler or Fame Jackson. This, explains Talmi, gives them a "strong, positive identity"; it's a way of putting a high gloss on skills they have been polishing for years.

Tony Lopez, a.k.a. "Powerful Pexster," one of the main breakers in the film Beat Street and a member of the New York City Breakers, a professional performing group, views breaking as an escape from the streets and a ticket to film stardom. "I saw kids on TV doing it and I said, 'I can do that.' My body got accustomed to it. People never dreamed you could get your body into all those positions. They're fascinated.

"I can see myself doing it for a while," he says. "It makes me feel important. People look up to me. Believe me, I have girls calling me up saying they love me. They don't know me, but they've sure heard about me." FW

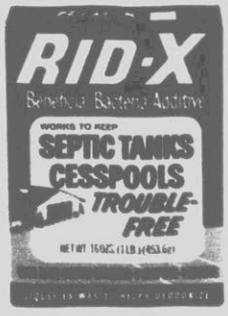
The alternative to waiting around for your septic system to back up



Your septic system is going to back up, right? Is there any way around it? Or is it just one of those nervous and very costly facts of life?

Well, you really don't have to helplessly wait for it to happen. You can simply flush RID-X® down your toilet every month.

RID-X adds billions of safe bacteria to help keep septic systems running trouble-free. Laboratory tests have proven that 1 lb. of RID-X liquifies 25 lbs. of solid waste in hours. That's better than the leading liquid septic system additive, or yeast, which contains no bacteria.

Just as important, RID-X is safe. It contains no harsh or caustic chemicals and won't harm pipes or your system. And, it's inexpensive and simple to use.

FREE. The makers of RID-X will send you "The Worry-Free Way to Care for Your Septic Tanks and Cesspools." This informative booklet can help you avoid potential damage, inconvenience, and expense from septic system failure. Just mail a card to "Booklet," c/o RID-X, P.O. Box 400B, Thornwood, NY 10594.

WHAT IN THE WORLD

BY MARION LONG

CULTURAL SENSITIVITY

It's a commonplace of scientific research that living things are sometimes destroyed in the pursuit of knowledge and the greater good. This causes few problems as long as only the hard cold light of the scientific method is trained on the work. But what happens when a researcher feels bad about the loss of life the job sometimes necessitates?

In Japan, where all forms of life are held in especially high regard, several researchers have constructed a memorial to those "microorganisms that have been used to promote the welfare of humans." Takeo Kasabo, a microbiologist in a chemical plant in Kyoto, Japan, had at first planned to build a very small memorial, but after he discovered that many coworkers shared his "subtle sense of guilt" at destroying the tiny life forms, the project grew.

They chose a scholastic temple in Kyoto as their site, and they dedicated their shrine with an inscribed stone placed atop a Buddhist prayer scroll. On top rest the ashes of bacillus subtilis, sealed in a container. Let that one germinate.

FOOD FOR THOUGHT

America, not only are you what you eat, you are also where you eat. With television, the telephone and modern methods of transportation, regional distinctions in the U.S. have blurred. But food seems to be one way of retaining a sectional identity. And according to a summary of Dept. of Agriculture data by the Food Institute, it is not just distinctive foods — Southern fried chicken, Boston baked beans, Florida's key lime pie — that help to define regions. It's your regular groceries as well.

The report found that America's middle — the North Central states — is in danger of, uh, expanding. These states consume 17 percent more ice cream, 23 percent more canned fruit, and 25 to 30 percent more candy and potato chips than the national average.

Northeasterners consume large quantities of frozen vegetables and warm up by drinking 66 percent more tea than the rest of the nation. They also eat an incredible number of doughnuts.

The South eats more than its fair share of fish and jellies. And canned peas are especially popular there. Canned peas? Out West, people are wolfing down twice the national average of whole wheat breads. Westerners are also health-conscious, eating up to 20 percent more fresh fruits, vegetables, and cheeses.

WEIGHTY BUSINESS

It was bound to happen. The only surprise is that it didn't catch on earlier. Think about it. People go to work every day. The health conscious among them work out every day. Simple. Combine work and workout and you'll make a fortune.

At least that's what Bodytech Designs is hoping as they introduce their new briefcase exerciser. What it does is allow you to carry around 50 weight exercises for both your upper and lower body right in your briefcase. The thing that makes it all work is a "power module," sort of a sophisticated fishing reel that is hooked up to a retracting cord. As you perform an exercise — choose rowing, dead lifts, curls or any of 47 others — the exerciser provides resistance, which can be adjusted to any weight between 15 and 150 pounds.

GRAVE MATTERS

Tom Murray, an English professor at Ohio State University, has finally turned in his paper on how he spent his last vacation. He didn't use his time off for sunbathing. In fact, he may have acquired a somewhat ghostly pallor.

Dr. Murray passed away the hours by eavesdropping on conversations at funerals — to find out how people talk about death. After listening to 250 such exchanges at 30 mortuaries in St. Louis, he identified a 10-part pattern of discourse: greeting, expression of sorrow, statement of shock, request for information about the death, praise for the deceased, statement of loss, consolation, comment on the deceased's appearance, offers of help, and, finally, farewell.

Digging a little deeper, Murray discovered that mourners spend far less time consoling the bereaved than they do asking about how the death occurred. In another finding, Murray reported that most (almost two-thirds) of the guests "sneaked away" after the funeral without saying goodbye to the family.

CREATED BY HAL FOSTER

Our Story: IN THE MELEE ONLY BLUNTED WEAPONS ARE USED, YET THE INJURIES ARE STILL MANY AND PAGES SCRAMBLE TO PULL FALLEN SQUIRES FROM THE FRAY. YOUNG MARCUS DOMINATES, SENSING THE WEAKNESS IN EACH OPPONENT. ONLY PRINCE VALIANT, DISGUISED AS SIR TRUEHEART, SUCCESSFULLY RESISTS THE LAD'S ONSLAUGHT.

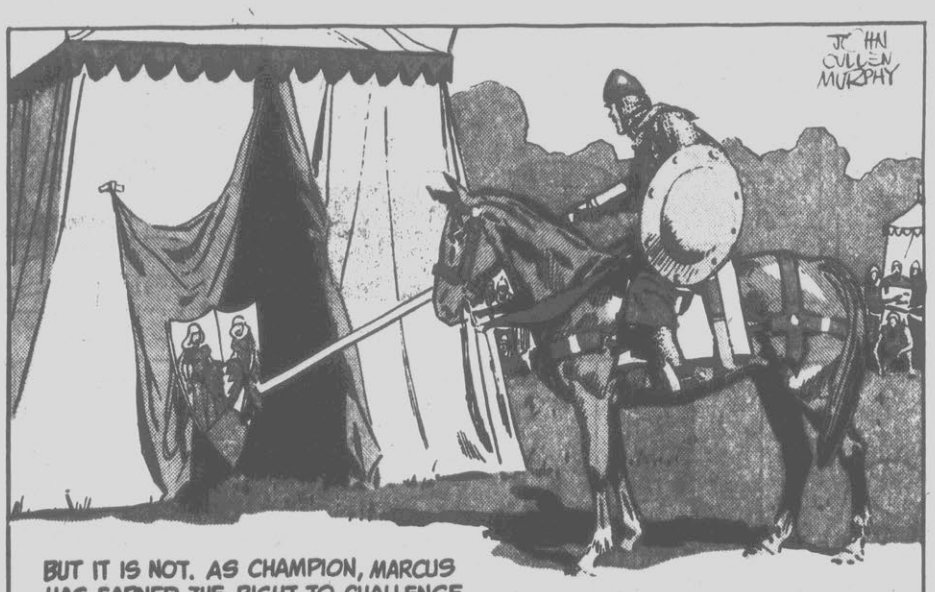
HE ACCEPTS THE LAURELS WITH TYPICAL HUMILITY. "IT WAS CHILD'S PLAY," HE TELLS AN ADORING KAREN. "PERHAPS NEXT TIME I SHALL GET SOME EXERCISE." NEARBY, VALETA SULKS OVER THE BAD LUCK THAT HAD FELLED HER CHAMPION. SIR TRUEHEART HAD COME SO CLOSE.

HE HAD ALSO BEEN INJURED. "A BROKEN ARM IS THE PRICE YOU PAY FOR TRYING TO CHEER YOUR DAUGHTER," SAYS THE PHYSICIAN MORGAN TODD. VAL GRITS HIS TEETH AS THE BONES ARE RESET. IT WILL BE A LONG TIME BEFORE HIS NEXT MELEE. HE IS GLAD THIS ONE IS OVER.



BUT IT IS NOT. AS CHAMPION, MARCUS HAS EARNED THE RIGHT TO CHALLENGE WHOMEVER HE PLEASES. ALONE AMONG THE COMBATANTS ONLY SIR TRUEHEART HAD NOT SUCCUMBED TO THE COCKY YOUTH'S PROWESS. IT IS TIME TO FINISH THE JOB. MARCUS TOUCHES HIS LANCE TO SIR TRUEHEART'S SHIELD: "COME ON OUT, OLD MAN," HE TAUNTS.
