Consumer Prices Hold Line As Food Costs Fall Sharply

WASHINGTON (AP) — Consumer prices, restrained by the steepest drop in food prices since last June, inched up just 0.2 percent in May, the government said today.

Also aiding the moderation in the overall price increase, which rose at a rate less than half that of April, was a tiny 0.2 percent gain in gasoline prices.

So far this year, inflation is running at an annual rate of 4.6 percent as measured by the Labor Department's Consumer Price Index.

That's slightly better than most analysts' predictions of a 5 percent inflation rate for all of 1984 and seemed to fly in the face of some forecasts that the economy's surprisingly strong growth could rekindle more serious inflation.

Indeed, economist Jerry Jasinowski of the National Association of Manufacturers commented after today's announcement that "there's been more hype about inflation than there has been inflation."

And, at the White House, presidential spokesman Larry Speakes proclaimed: "Inflation remains under control at the shopping counter. ... We're on the right course of sustainable growth with low inflation."

Last month's 0.2 percent food price decline was the result of cheaper beef and veal, poultry, vegetables and eggs.

Over the last three months, food prices have tumbled at an annual rate of 1.5 percent. Food prices had held steady in April after falling 0.1 percent in March.

As for energy, the department said that, through last month, gasoline prices, which normally rise at the start of the summer driving season, were 11.8 percent below their peak level of March 1981. Gasoline prices had been up 0.4 percent in April and a full 1 percent in March.

For the last 12 months, prices overall have risen 4.2 percent. The price index had risen 0.5 percent of April and 0.2 percent of March.

Retail prices rose 3.8 percent last year for the best showing since the early 1970s. Prices rose 3.9 percent in 1982 after shooting up 8.9 percent in 1981 and 12.4 percent in 1980.

Today's report was in line with Wednesday's preliminary estimate on the Gross National Product, the total value of the nation's goods and services.

That report, which projected the economy growing at a robust 5.7 percent annual rate in the current quarter, also estimated an inflation rate of 2.8 percent in April-June.

Greene Account Detailing Murders Is Read To Jurors

By JANE WELBORN
Reflector Staff Writer

A statement of guilt made by Harvey Lee Greene Jr. to law enforcement officials was read Thursday to jurors during the sentencing phase of Greene's trial for the double murder in Bethel Dec. 19.

Greene is on trial for the beating deaths of Sheila Marlene Bland, 17, and John Michael Edmondson, 33, in Young's 1-Hour Cleaners.

Greene earlier this week changed his plea from innocent to guilty, and the jury of seven women and five men must decide whether Greene will receive the death penalty or life imprisonment for the first degree murders.

Bethel Police Chief Jerome K. "Jerry" Ratley Thursday read to the court the statement he said Greene dictated to him the night of Jan. 1 at the State Bureau of Investigation office in Greenville.

The statement, signed by Greene, related that Greene had written some bad checks in his father's name and needed money to cover the checks. It stated that on Dec. 19, Greene had entered Young's Cleaners with a toy gun and asked the clerk (Miss Bland) to give him the money in the cash register. At that point, Edmondson came into the cleaners and when Greene turned, Miss Bland jumped on his back.

The statement said that Greene fought with Edmondson after throwing Miss Bland off his back. He then picked up the toy gun and told the two to get behind a partition. Greene took some rolled coins under the cash register and asked Miss Bland and Edmondson for their money. When Edmondson handed him $20, the two began fighting again.

"While we were tussling, I saw a pipe laying on one of the machines ...," the statement made by Greene said. "I hit him in the head ... I hit him three times on the head."

When Miss Bland began "screaming and kicking up a fuss, I hit her" two or three times in the head, the statement said.

Ratley used an aerial photograph to point out the location in Bethel of Young's Cleaners, the post office, the hedge where the pipe was found and Greene's residence.

In other testimony Thursday, Dr. L. Stanley Harris, regional medical examiner, said that both Edmondson and Miss Bland had died as a result (Please turn to page 12)

Demos Push Unity By Inviting Carter

WASHINGTON (AP) — Democratic Party leaders, in their drive to heal internal party wounds and promote unity, are inviting former President Jimmy Carter, their unsuccessful standard-bearer in 1980, to participate in the Democratic National Convention next month.

It was the first indication from the Democrats that the ex-president might play any role in the San Francisco convention.

Party Chairman Charles T. Manatt told reporters at a news conference Thursday that he had invited the former president both by letter and a follow-up telephone conversation.

"I have reason to believe the Carters will be coming to part of the convention, the first part ... that he will make a presentation on Monday evening," the opening session of the July 16-19 event, Manatt said.

However, an aide to Manatt, Gene Russell, said later that the former president had not yet formally accepted the invitation.

Carter's name has not been frequently mentioned at Democratic gatherings. The sting lingers over Ronald Reagan's landslide defeat of Carter in 1980, when Walter F. Mondale shared the Democratic ticket.

Mondale, the probable nominee this year, on Thursday interviewed Los Angeles Mayor Tom Bradley, the first vice presidential candidate of several who will journey to Minnesota before the convention.

The overture toward Carter came as Democrats sought to join together in support of a party platform.

The party's platform committee was to work today on a 112-page first draft of the document, endorsed by the campaigns of both Mondale and Sen. Gary Hart of Colorado. Supporters of the Rev. Jesse Jackson have said they can support most of the document.

"The three campaigns are harmonious, unified and dedicated to beating Ronald Reagan," platform Chairwoman Rep. Geraldine Ferraro of New York told the platform panel on Thursday. Votes on the document were expected this weekend.

Reagan often refers to the policies of the former Democratic president as the underlying cause of the current high deficits that plague his administration.

Democratic officials, in general, in the past have not discussed Carter's presidency as they talk about efforts to win back the White House this fall.

The convention invitation came up on Thursday when a reporter asked Manatt at a news conference what role — if any — the former president would play in the convention.

New York Gov. Mario Cuomo, whose designation as the party's convention keynote speaker was the subject of the news conference, had high praise for the former president. "I am a great admirer of President Carter, who I think has never been appreciated by the American people," Cuomo said.

Cuomo was Carter's chairman in New York four years ago. This year, Cuomo actively campaigned for Mondale, who called him Wednesday night and asked him to give the keynote address, traditionally a statement of party philosophy and values.

"I will be talking about the notion of family, the notion of a politics that hasn't really failed ... about the Democratic party as the party of reasonableness," Cuomo said.

Hart Weighs Pros And Cons

WASHINGTON (AP) — If Walter F. Mondale settles on Gary Hart as his running mate, the choice would match two of the most dissimilar Democrats since 1960 when Texan Lyndon B. Johnson was reluctantly persuaded to run with John F. Kennedy.

Then, as now, the choice was made following a long, bitter battle for the presidential nomination between two men of very different backgrounds and political styles.

As the presidential candidate who cast himself as the leader of a new order in American politics, Hart's potential as a vice presidential candidate for Mondale could pose a dilemma for the Democratic Party and Hart's own long term political ambitions.

Publicly, Hart spokeswoman Kathy Bushkin says it is premature to talk about the likelihood of a Mondale-Hart ticket.

"He is a candidate for the nomination and is going to the convention that way," she said.

Today, Hart ends five days out of the public spotlight to deliver a speech accusing the Reagan administration of widespread violations of government ethics.

While his candidacy officially continues, Bushkin concedes that "Gary has gotten a fair amount of counsel" on the advantages and disadvantages of running for vice president.

Privately, Hart's staff is known to be sharply split on the vice presi- (Please turn to page 12)

Tar Heel Republicans Meet To Pick Nominating Delegates

RALEIGH (AP) — North Carolina Republicans met today to elect delegates to the national GOP convention and draft a platform strongly endorsing the Reagan Administration's domestic and foreign policies.

Up to 1,800 delegates are expected at the 1984 state Republican convention, which got underway Thursday night with a "Salute to Jesse Helms" dinner.

The featured speaker was Charles M. Lichtenstein, a member of the United States delegation to the United Nations.

Senate majority leader Howard Baker, R-Tenn., was scheduled to address the keynote banquet tonight.

U.S. Rep. Jack Kemp, R-NY, was to speak at a Young Republicans luncheon.

GOP candidates for statewide and national office also are on hand.

The party has been dominated by Helms and other conservatives since the mid-1970s, and the platform was expected to reflect that philosophy.

However, two resolutions were expected to spark controversy on the convention floor. One opposes efforts to restore voluntary school prayer and the other endorses the proposed Equal Rights Amendment.

James P. Cain, chairman of the convention's resolutions committee, said the two resolutions would be sent to the floor without a recommendation. They were suggested by committee moderates who had equal representation with conservatives, Cain said.

Thirty-three of the state's 53 national convention delegates were selected during congressional district meetings earlier this year. The remaining 20 were to be selected this afternoon.

The party also will choose 53 alternates to the national convention in Dallas.

The state convention concludes Saturday with a luncheon honoring gubernatorial candidate Jim Martin. The featured speaker will be House minority whip Trent Lott, R-Miss. U.S. Sen. John East will address the convention on the final day.

Dear Abby

By Abigail Van Buren

Food Handlers Also Money Handlers, Yuk!

DEAR ABBY: The letter from "Please Wash in Winona" was right on! I, too, have noticed that people don't wash their hands nearly enough. As the people at the Mayo Clinic so wisely pointed out, the 10 most common spreaders of infection are one's own 10 fingers.

Abby, you touched upon it, but you should have emphasized strongly that another notorious germ carrier is money! Especially paper bills. Each time paper money passes from one pair of hands to another, it becomes filthy.

Today there are many establishments, large and small, that sell food to eat on the premises or carry out. This includes hot dogs, hamburgers, pizza, ice-cream cones, etc. Notice how many employees prepare the food, serve it, then take the customers' money and give them the change. In a few minutes they are back to handling food again without having washed their hands.

I personally will not eat where the same employee who handles the food handles the money.
A FRIEND IN MILLBURY, MASS.

DEAR FRIEND: Thanks. That's food for thought, but not for eating.

DEAR ABBY: I am interested in learning your opinion of the increasingly prevalent practice of brushing one's teeth in public restrooms, particularly in the office buildings such as the one I work in.

Although brushing after every meal is no doubt laudable, I find it exceedingly objectionable to be made an unwilling party to the personal hygiene of a total stranger, with the attendant spitting, etc.

Not only do I think it is plain bad manners, I find it downright disgusting. What do you think?

GROSSED OUT IN GEORGIA

DEAR GROSSED OUT: True, witnessing a public teeth cleaning can be somewhat unpleasant, but hear this: The sooner one brushes and flosses after eating, the healthier his teeth will be. Of course, it is absolutely imperative that the bowl be left sparkling clean.

I fully expect that this advice will be met with groans from squeamish readers who would like to flog me with a rope of dental floss, but I'll take my lumps. A clean and healthy mouth is essential to general good health.

DEAR ABBY: This happens all the time, and I guess I'll just have to sit there and take it unless I find a way to stop it. This is a woman's fault; I have yet to see a man who is guilty of this rudeness: When two couples go out together and one of the men is talking, the other woman (I am a woman) will turn to me and start a two-way conversation on an entirely different subject!

I try to turn away from the woman in order to listen to the conversation that is already going on, but she insists on talking directly into my ear. I try to show no interest in what she's saying, avoiding eye contact, and continue to listen to the men's conversation, but she keeps yammering away about some petty, gossiping trivia until I can no longer hear the other conversation.

So what do I do?

READY TO SCREAM

DEAR READY: Communicate verbally. Try to keep the resentment, impatience and irritation out of your voice when you tell her that you would like to listen to the conversation that is currently taking place.

Transplants Common, But Problems Linger

By BRENDA C. COLEMAN
Associated Press Writer

CHICAGO (AP) — In Tennessee, a liver transplant operation is canceled just hours before it is scheduled to begin. The intended organ donor, an Illinois man, first declared dead, suddenly coughs and is kept alive four days until his heart fails.

In New Jersey, the parents of a suicide victim win $150,000 in a suit charging harassment by doctors who kept their son on life support machines for three days while trying to persuade them to donate his organs.

In the Bronx, a distraught welfare mother places a tearful call to the director of an organ procurement program, saying she doesn't have the clout to arrange the "media blitz" she thinks necessary to find a donated liver for her child.

Such cases illustrate the lingering problems associated with a once-exotic medical weapon that has now become commonplace — the organ transplant.

Since the 1950s, doctors have found ways to give patients new kidneys, bone marrow, hearts, livers, pancreases, middle ears, skin and corneas.

But despite the miracles, not enough organs are available for people who need them.

No one knows how many people die because suitable organs could not be found. But only about one-eighth of the almost 20,000 Americans who die each year in such a way that their organs could be donated actually become donors, according to Arthur Caplan, a specialist in medical ethics at the Hastings Center at Hastings-on-Hudson, N.Y.

"Most people don't think about this issue (of donating organs for transplant)," said Caplan. "It's kind of like buying a funeral plot."

Perhaps the most basic problem is determining when death occurs, so that the organs may be removed. Currently, a patient will not be considered dead as long as his brain activity remains above a certain level, even if there is no hope for his recovery.

But rather than saving lives, such a standard can prolong dying at great expense and anguish, according to a team of North Carolina doctors writing in a recent issue of the American Medical Association's Archives of Neurology.

It also stands to reason that many people waiting for organs do not get them because the current strict standards of death prevent some donations, said researcher Dr. Edward V. Spudis.

"When a vital part of the brain is irrevocably damaged ... and some other part of the brain is relatively normal ... I believe the family and society in general would sanction a declaration of brain death which would result in allowing the liver or kidneys to be used," Spudis said in a telephone interview.

However, Dr. John C. McDonald, president of the Southeastern Organ Procurement Foundation, said doctors are understandably cautious about declaring death too early.

"One mistake in a million is one too many," said McDonald. "I'm sure that organs are wasted because people are not willing to take the chance of making one mistake. I guess that's the right position. It's certainly my position."

Even when death is certain, organs may not be made available because the families refuse.

Caplan wants to change the system so that suitable organs would be automatically removed from dead patients, placing the burden on the family to object to such removal.

"The way it is now, it's up to the doctor to ask a family," he said in a telephone interview. "Under my system, it would be mandatory, as part of the declaration of death."

But Kay McGahan, the lawyer who represented the New Jersey couple, said a doctor there took a similar position in the case she handled and that "from a family point of view, that's kind of callous."

Donald W. Denny, director of procurement at the University of Pittsburgh, which has the world's largest liver transplant program, says the biggest problem is the failure of doctors to take advantage of potential donations.

Often, doctors don't alert organ procurement programs when a potential donor is available or tell the families of patients who have died that their organs would be suitable for donation, he said.

Some families really want to donate but are never given the chance, he said. Others who are glad they were given the opportunity to donate go out of their way to tell him, he said.

"I have a mother who calls every year, she had a son who jumped to his death," he said. "She calls to find out how the recipient of his kidneys is doing."

Denny also emphasized that media campaigns are not behind all transplants. "That's not how we get donors," he said. "We have been doing livers for 3½ years. We have not transplanted one liver directly as a result of media focus on that patient."

Yet, he said "we have parents of kids who think 'my kid is not going to get a liver unless my kid gets on the front page of newspapers all over the country.'"

Sightless Farmer Does His Chores by Sound

By CRAIG McEWEN
The Fargo Forum

FERTILE, Minn. (AP) — Farmer LeRoy Masche often stumbles, bumping into objects or taking scrapes that most of us never fear. He is blind.

He operates his farm with no frills, and is darn proud of it.

Sound replaces sight as he maneuvers about the 180-acre property he rents five miles north of Fertile, feeding cattle, fanning grain, repairing machinery and planting the spring crop.

Instead of using a cane or a guide dog, Masche walks his acreage snapping his fingers, feeling for an echo that tells him something is in his way.

Wind is his primary foe, making it difficult to hear.

"To a blind guy, wind is about as friendly to me as fog is to you guys when you drive," he said. "Wind can throw you off once in a while."

Masche, 41, was born in Ada and lived with his family at Beltrami before his family moved to Fertile when he was 9. But most of his early life was spent in Faribault, where he attended the Minnesota Braille and Sightseeing School from 1949-1964.

Damaged nerve endings left Masche nearly blind at birth. He completely lost sight in one eye at age 2, leaving only blurred sight in the other.

"I wrestled with a cow here about six years ago and lost the other one," he said. "Basically I've been a blind man all my life."

While in Faribault, Masche learned to tune pianos in a two-year post-graduate program. For years he has had a traveling band in which he plays a Cordovox, a combination organ and accordion.

But Masche grew up on a farm and wanted to return to agriculture. So in 1971, after his father's death, Masche moved his wife, Donna, a nurse's aide, and their son, Mike, now 16, back to Fertile. They also have an 11-year-old daughter, Marsha Lynn.

Masche had studied vocational agriculture in high school and wanted to give it a try.

"We've got lots of junk around here. It's very unfancy — pretty plain and simple. We somewhat go with the flow and what we can afford to do."

"We get discouraged. I get mad, sometimes I suppose a little quicker than I should," he admitted. "In this line of work there's a lot of things I can't do because of my sight."

But he keeps trying.

"Everyone deserves a right to try what he or she wants to do and you're not a failure until you prove to yourself you can't do it. That's my attitude," he said. "My general goal in life has been to be as normal as any other person. I believe in working for what I get."

Masche has about 80 acres of tillable land and raises 19 head of beef cattle — Hereford-Angus cross.

"As you see, we've got an old barn laying there. It got tired," he said, pointing to a scattered, somewhat picked-over pile of lumber left after the barn fell down.

He talked to his animals while opening a gate to the barnyard where he feeds them.

"Somebody strange here, huh, girls?" he said, occasionally tripping over broken bales while climbing atop a hay stack to retrieve fresh, third cutting alfalfa. But that didn't impede his progress.

"I like to be able to walk in among the animals and work with them. It's kind of fun to tame them," he said.

As Masche walked around his farmyard, he identified each piece of machinery.

"Now we're standing in front of an old combine. There's an old horse cultivator. I got an Allis Chalmers setting there, another combine behind it for parts."

"Here we got a Ford tractor with a loader on it. And, oh, I do know how to run that sucker, you damn betcha," Masche said, climbing into the driver's seat, cranking over the engine, raising and lowering the hydraulic loader.

"These are just normal things every farmer does, the only thing, I'm doing it in the dark," he said while changing blades on an old John Deere cultivator.

When he's not farming, he performs for dances about four times a month.

"I'm a self-taught musician. I started I guess, they tell me, when I was about 7. Now it's gotten to be kind of a breadwinner."

Hotel Competition Tough In Boston

By FRED BAYLES
AP Business Writer

BOSTON (AP) — Once it was tough trying to reserve a room in one of Boston's fashionably aging hotels. But then came a new hotel. And another — and another and another.

In the past three years, one gleaming hotel tower after the other has sprouted on the Boston skyline. By next year the building blitz will have added eight hotels and 5,000 first-class rooms, boosting the city's hotel capacity by 60 percent.

But now it appears that — for the near future — there may not be enough guests to fill those rooms.

The occupancy rate of the city's hotels has been dropping since 1979, and the downturn is expected to accelerate when the city's only convention hall, Hynes Auditorium, closes in 1985 for two years of renovations.

There have been signs of fiercer competition. Late last year the Marriott chain admitted one of its employees had used the name of a dummy corporation to reserve and tie up 50 rooms for four nights at the Copley Plaza.

Marriott called it "an error in judgment." Copley Plaza Director Alan Tremaine said it was "dirty pool."

While most people in the business say the incident was an exception, they all agree the genteel members of the hospitality industry will face some tougher going these next few years in Boston.

"It certainly makes us run faster. Everyone is working very hard to 'keep their share of the market,'" said Roger Saunders, president and owner of Saunders Hotels Co. Inc., which owns and operates three Boston hotels — the Lenox, Park Plaza and Copley Square. "The market cannot expand as fast as the number of new rooms."

The Boston hotel war follows a boom and bust pattern that goes back to the late 1920s when there was another frenzy of hotel building.

Five hotels opened in 1927, just two years before the Depression abruptly halted the healthy flow of business travelers. The hotel trade then limped along until the better days of World War II.

By 1950 the city had 12,000 hotel rooms — the same number Boston will have sometime next year. But through the 1950s and 1960s the hotel business fell off, victim to the motor inn and the Boston-New York air shuttle, which made it unnecessary for visiting business travelers to stay overnight.

Many hotels closed; others were converted to college dormitories and condominiums.

Jerome Solomon, head of the Boston office of Pannell Kerr Forster, an accounting firm that studies the hotel industry, said Boston was rediscovered in the Bicentennial fervor of the 1970s.

"It became attractive to groups and attractive to tourism," he said.

Business boomed. In 1979, the hotel occupancy rate was at a healthy 77.6 percent. Although Boston's occupancy had dropped to 67.5 percent by last year, Solomon said it was still the fourth best in the country, behind New York, Los Angeles and San Francisco.

Boston hotels had the third highest average room rates last year, $72.54 a night, behind New York and Washington.

The steady demand encouraged many national chains like Marriott, Hilton and Westin to build in Boston. "They all wanted a presence in Boston," said Solomon.

But Solomon expects occupancy rates to dip into the 50 percent range over the next few years as the Hynes Auditorium is expanded.

"It's a simple case of an increase in supply and a decrease in demand," said Solomon. "What happened effectively was an over-projection of the business that would come to the city."

Saunders said the situation would make for more aggressive promotion campaigns among the city's hotels. Hotels have already started advertising special packages to fill their rooms on slow weekends.

"There will be a battle for business that is healthy," said Saunders. "We will have to get out of our offices and start selling more than we have in the past 10 to 20 years."

There will be more competition for corporate customers as hotels offer greater discounts — up to 30 percent in some cases — to companies that send executives to Boston for business.

But consumers will not be as lucky. Solomon said hotels only discount their rates as a measure of last resort. "If you get into rate cutting, it is difficult to recover from that image of a low-rate facility," he said.

Bob Cummings, president of the Greater Boston Convention and Tourist Bureau, thinks the new competition will be healthy for the city. He pointed to an increase in state money promoting Boston as a tourist spa.

"I think there has been an attitude that tourism was a frivolous activity," he said. "But that has changed now that the public has seen the jobs and income tourism brings."

Chick Peas Make Good Salad

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
Associated Press Food Editor

Chick peas (also known as garbanzos and ceci) are comparatively inexpensive and such an excellent source of protein they deserve to be served often. Here is what a famous botanist and amateur chef had to say about their use:

"The chick pea is a widely cultivated legume of notable prominence in the excellent cuisine of such areas as the Mediterranean, Asia, and in Mexico and many other parts of Spanish-speaking America. In these countries chick peas appear in a wide array of recipes, from hearty soups and stews to salads. Cooking the dried ones at home usually requires hours and hours — a lengthy time. For the average recipe, canned chick peas are perhaps to be preferred."

I heartily concur in recommending canned chick peas. Here is a simple but unusually savory salad in which they are used.

CHICK PEA AND ARTICHOKE SALAD

6-ounce jar marinated artichoke hearts
¼ cup olive oil
¼ cup lemon juice
¼ teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon black pepper
1 garlic clove, crushed
Two 19-ounce cans chick peas, drained
1 cup diced tomato

1 tablespoon capers
Lettuce
3 hard-cooked eggs, cut into wedges

Drain marinade from artichokes into a medium bowl; reserve artichokes. To marinate add olive oil, lemon juice, black pepper and garlic; whisk well. Add chick peas, tomatoes, capers and reserved artichokes; gently stir together. Let stand at room temperature for 1 hour. Before serving, arrange over lettuce; garnish with hard-cooked eggs. Makes 6 servings.

Remote Chance

By any standard, efforts by survivors of the Bataan Death March to get legislation permitting them to sue Japanese companies in U.S. courts for compensation for their slave labor has a tenuous basis.

Sixty thousand men shared the ordeal of a 70-mile march as prisoners of war, and from all accounts, those that died were the lucky ones. It happened more than 40 years ago. Witnesses say there are 3,000 alive now.

A 1951 treaty bars suits by war prisoners against the Japanese government. So the handful want compensation from those industries of another generation for whom they were forced to work.

The victims presumably were under governmental supervision, kept in governmentally operated camps. (We had POW camps, too, and inmates had an opportunity for outside work at very low pay.)

Survivors of the ordeal in the Far East received U.S. military pay for their time as prisoners as well as benefits provided by Congress to all veterans for rehabilitation and care.

The Justice Department is opposed to the survivors' legislative proposal as being preferential treatment. It is wholly reasonable.

Our sympathies for the petitioners are deep, but their chance of success appears remote. Circumstances surrounding their case weakens their appeal.

Shorter Days

If you didn't notice yesterday, it was the first day of summer.

This year the question might be, so what else is new?

It has been summer for weeks with the temperature reaching the high 90s on several occasions. Not only has it been hot, but it has also been dry with virtually no rainfall recorded here for the month of June.

Anyway, it is scientifically determined that the Summer Solstice began at 1:02 a.m. Thursday and summer will officially be with us until September.

Thursday was also the longest day of the year and from this point on daylight hours will shorten minute by minute as the sun moves southward, eventually bringing summer to the Southern Hemisphere.

For our area the temperatures seldom follow the calendar bracketing for summer, but the day with the longest hours of day light is significant. From this point on we can look forward to gradually shortening days.

Platform Raises Questions

WASHINGTON — The latest battle for the Republican Party's soul was joined when a Reagan-Bush campaign official, shown an early draft of the party platform, blurted out: "This would be great if our candidate was Jack Kemp, not Ronald Reagan."

Told of those comments, the Platform Committee chairman, Rep. Trent Lott, rejoined: "I thought they (Reagan and Kemp) were the same." Lott's meaning was that Reagan might well embrace Kempish provisions in the platform draft, such as a gold standard and the flat tax, even though senior White House staffers might not.

But even the president may not enjoy absolute veto power over all planks. Lott views the platform as a party, not a presidential, document. Conservative firebrands on the Platform Committee, such as Rep. Newt Gingrich of Georgia, are ready to threaten a floor fight in Dallas as leverage to keep the party on the track it went down in 1980.

Senior Reagan aides believe that to prevent un-Republican disarray in Dallas, good soldier Lott — who as House Republican whip pushed the 1982 Reagan tax increase he loathed — would take marching orders from the Oval Office. But there is conservative determination that the platform will not be written by presidential assistant Richard Darman, the most influential policy adviser at the White House.

Actually, there may not really be all that much difference on the issues between Lott and Darman. The Platform Committee is likely to avoid the "gold standard" and "flat tax" phrases abhorrent to White House ears, while it will embrace both concepts in substance. Darman is certainly not opposed to either concept or to platform criticism of the Federal Reserve Board's tight-money policy.

Really at stake is who calls the signals at Dallas and for party policy beyond that: congressional "ideologues" or White House "pragmatists." That struggle focused earlier on the selection of a keynote (a job earmarked for a woman). The conservative choice was U.N. Ambassador Jeane Kirkpatrick. Gingrich pushed a Kirkpatrick-for-keynote resolution through the Georgia Republican Convention, and a national campaign was being mounted.

To choke that off, the announcement of U.S. Treasurer Katherine Ortega's selection as keynote was hurried. Just before the president left for Europe, he telephoned Republican National Chairman Frank Fahrenkopf to say he wanted Ms. Ortega. Telegrams for Ambassador Kirkpatrick had trouble reaching the president, who immediately after leaving his decision behind him, was airborne for Europe.

Conservatives are being reassured that Ms. Ortega actually was picked a month earlier to stop a centrist keynote, Transportation Secretary Elizabeth Dole. Unlike either Mrs. Dole or Ambassador Kirkpatrick, Ms. Ortega is strictly a creature of the Reagan administration who won't create much excitement but can be counted on to read the speech written for her.

Why did the White House not impose similarly docile platform leadership to assure an approved document, as did Lyndon B. Johnson in 1964 and Richard M. Nixon in 1972? Because the president's senior staff, seeking to avoid friction with congressional Reaganites, felt a less authoritarian approach could achieve platform control.

That may prove a miscalculation. Apart from the strong-willed Lott, subcommittee chairmen are Sen. Robert Kasten (economics) and Kemp (foreign policy). Not surprisingly, the latest draft proposes a "Fair and Simple Tax," which happens to be the title of the Kemp-Kasten flat tax. Gingrich is an active member of the drafting committee, while the Platform Committee's most aggressive liberal — Sen. Lowell Weicker — is not.

Oddly, the White House has not been invited to executive sessions and has not asked to attend them. But Darman does read platform drafts.

Learning Life At Home

Due to an illness, my wife has been out of action and I have found myself in the role of home manager. I must admit, I never paid too much attention to what a wife did to maintain a house, and assumed it was a snap compared to solving the Iraq-Iran war.

I am now realizing there is more to housekeeping than the TV commercials would have us believe. Here are some of the things I discovered in my new consciousness-raising position:

A laundry hamper only holds dirty clothes. It does not wash them.

There is no such thing as an empty dishwasher.

Garbage disposal units do not grind up steak bones, or forks and spoons.

Appliance repairmen all have answering services but never call them for their messages.

You cannot grow food in refrigerator. You have to go to a supermarket and buy it. No matter what you buy for dinner your bill always comes to $49.50.

Many varieties of food have to be cooked. This requires pots and pans. Fresh fish and meat do not come with instructions. Neither do fresh vegetables. Frozen meals taste just as good as frozen meals.

A person can overdose on hamburgers and scrambled eggs in less than five days.

Garbage has to be put on the street once a week, or no one will take it away.

Grass has to be watered or it will turn brown.

After making up beds two days in a row, the thrill is gone.

A neighbor never congratulates you on your waxed floors.

Polyester-blend suits start to smell if you don't take them to the dry cleaner.

When a fuse blows in the house it has to be replaced or the lights won't go back on.

United Parcel only rings your bell when they have a package for the person next door who isn't home.

The telephone only rings when you're in the bathroom, or outside watering plants.

You never have enough cord when you're vacuuming a rug. But you always have too much when you're trying to put it back in the closet.

People who live in glass houses have to wash their windows all the time.

The one item you need to complete a chore is downstairs when you are upstairs, and upstairs when you are downstairs.

Dogs and cats have to be fed or they'll turn on you.

The only serviceman who will come when you call him is the piano tuner.

The best way to clean up a son's room is to close the door and pretend it is not part of the house.

Taking a headache remedy does not necessarily mean there will be less dust in the living room.

No one gives you a bonus for getting a stain out of the sofa.

Illegal alien housekeepers are better than no aliens at all.

It's amazing how little comfort you get out of hearing sympathetic friends tell you they know exactly what you're going through.

I discovered, admittedly late in the game, there is no such thing as upward mobility in home management, no chance for advancement, and no opportunity for a wage increase. I now understand for the first time why wives need soap operas and "The National Enquirer" to get them through the day. It's their only link with reality. Somebody else's infidelity sure beats the hell out of getting grease off the stove with the perfect paper towel.

Rarity

NEW YORK (AP) — John Reed, the new chairman of Citicorp, is a rarity. Not so much because he never made big international or business loans at the bank-centered financial institution. Or, that at 45 he may be young for the job.

More unusual is that Reed is a long-term thinker and doer in a business world in which time often is measured in bits, such as weeks or months, rather than in chunks, as in years or decades.

In the past couple of decades short-term has become the American way of life. In many companies the president must produce profits within a year or be ready to quit. And the focus is even shorter in the stock and bond markets.

Instant gratification. Results — Now! Who knows what tomorrow will bring so let tomorrow take care of itself. Time speeds up, and in terms of activity, each day is like an old-fashioned century.

The short-term focus produces an almost constant sense of agitation and even hysteria.

Washington's monthly economic figures about retail sales, jobs, housing and prices are viewed as ominous or welcome news — until the following month's numbers undermine the assumptions earlier made.

Wall Street analysts tell customers to buy because a company's quarterly earnings exceed expectations, although the three-month figures might not be indicative of sustained strength, and might even be obviated a month later.

Mutual fund managers examine their portfolios and decide to dress them up for their own quarterly reports to clients, eliminating those stocks that might be down at the time, regardless of their long-term quality.

Economic forecasts are filled with a sense of expectation or foreboding that persists month after month as the short-term economic results are charted and graphed and analyzed for portents of the future.

Sometimes the forecasts don't even last a month, because the figures on which they are based often fail to endure more than a few weeks before being adjusted higher or lower. If you forecast, you must forecast often.

Research and development, which takes years to pay off but then may pay off big, is pushed to the rear at major corporations, and money is spent instead on sales and marketing, where the results show up within the year.

Executives rise through the corporate hierarchy by demonstrating short-term results, knowing that when the negative consequences of their high-strung performance are discovered they will be ensconced in another, bigger job.

Prof. Eugene Jennings, insightful analyst of executive behavior, calls attention to the irony of the chief executive who sets long-range policies for his company, gets fired when results do not show up quickly, and is replaced by a short-term thinker who then benefits from his predecessor's efforts.

The payoff time is short today. Impatience is often considered a virtue. And that makes Reed's appointment all the more rare.

Reed's vision of banking's future included huge investments in technology to capture the accounts of America's households, while many other large banks, honoring tradition, continued to lend to business and other institutions.

Short-term, his actions were viewed as a disaster. One move — flooding the country with credit cards — cost perhaps $80 million in bad-debt writeoffs. Consumer banking at Citibank, centerpiece of Citicorp, fell deep into the red.

But over the longer term his actions have paid off, and consumer finance at Citibank is expected to contribute hundreds of millions of dollars to earnings next year.

John Reed has been named chairman of Citicorp, in large measure, you may be sure, because he has shown a way that has many others following their lead.

Cause For Consideration

WASHINGTON — Sen. Bill Bradley (D-N.J.) was discussing the merits of a larger Strategic Petroleum Reserve in a press conference last week when a reporter interrupted him with a pressing question.

"Let's get to something more interesting, senator," shouted the reporter, as the boys in the Senate

Press Gallery hooted. "Who are you rooting for between the Celtics and the Lakers?"

While former New York Knickerbocker Bradley said he favored the Lakers (at game time, he recalled with some bitterness, the Celtics always turned up the heat in the visiting team's locker room), the digression from his immediate concern — America's energy future — wasn't lost on him. As Bradley admitted to us, "This is not an issue that jumps out at consumers or politicians when they get up in the morning."

Bradley is among a dozen young Democratic and Republican members of Congress who believe in planning for the future. This explains Bradley's present obsession, in light of the current troubles in the Persian Gulf, to increase the size of the Strategic Petroleum Reserve. He wants to shield consumers from the economic chaos that would result from any oil supply disruption.

It's Bradley's view that the reserve, which, with 409 million barrels is 45 percent below its authorized capacity of 750 million barrels, needs more oil. Bradley would allow the reserve to grow to 1 billion barrels by 1990.

Though the Reagan administration says it has enough oil in the reserve to supply the nation's needs and those of our allies for up to six months, skeptics like Bradley argue that energy needs in an emergency would probably exceed forecasts — especially since the military can claim almost all of the reserve if it wants.

The Strategic Petroleum Reserve has been an integral part of national energy policy since late 1975 when Congress passed the Energy Policy and Conservation Act in step with the Nixon and Ford administrations' Project Independence. Unfortunately, although successive administrations have remained committed to the reserve, political considerations have inhibited its growth.

For example, the reserve didn't receive a drop of oil until the end of the Ford administration; during a quarter of Jimmy Carter's time in office, it didn't receive any.

In the same spirit, the Reagan administration has consistently forced Congress to lower the rate at which it's filled. The administration has said the Strategic Petroleum should only be used under the most extreme circumstances. In other words, let price discipline the marketplace. (In 1982 President Reagan also vetoed legislation that would have extended his authority to impose price and allocation controls on oil.)

Not coincidentally, energy prices have continued to rise despite an overall glut in world oil supplies. The increases have brought extraordinary pressures on family budgets. Average household expenditures on residential fuel and electricity now hover around $1,500 a year; oil-heated home in the Northeast pay as much as $2,000 a year in energy bills.

Bradley, a senator from the frost belt, knows how energy costs are hurting his constituents. That's why he's introduced a package of nine proposals that would, among other things, increase the size of the Strategic Petroleum Reserve.

A larger reserve, Bradley reasons, will alter the underlying structure of the oil market and presumably reduce the vulnerability of the marketplace to Big Oil's manipulation.

Strength For Today

"He has no background."

If we say that about a person, usually it is an unkind thrust. It would appear that a person is born with background or is born without background. This is in a measure true, but not entirely so, for we can create a background.

Beginning with us a new and higher variety of life may come into the family circle of which we are a part, and descendants will think of us with gratitude because we started something new and noble in family life. This does not mean that we have made a great financial success. It means that we have led a noble life. People just have to admire what we have done because of the wonderful, loving and sacrificial spirit in which we did it.

Are you lacking in background? Don't worry — you can create background in wholesale quantities.

Study Links High Hormone Levels, Breast Cancer

LONDON (AP) — Early results of a British study have established a strong link between breast cancer and high hormone levels, a chief researcher for the Imperial Cancer Research Fund says.

John Moore said in an interview Thursday with the British news agency Press Association that his team's study appears to show that women with high levels of biologically active estrogen are more susceptible to cancer than those with lower levels.

A comparison of Japanese women to American and British women has reinforced the link, he said, although the reason some women have higher levels of active estrogen remains unknown.

Studies by the London-based fund show that British and American women have a higher level of active estrogen than Japanese women. Earlier studies showed that American and British women, about 8 percent of whom will contract breast cancer, are eight times as likely to get it as the Japanese for genetic, dietary or other reasons.

Moore said his team's findings were derived from tests on 18 women on the English Channel island of Guernsey who took part in a cancer screening program and later developed breast cancer.

"We found that in testing their early blood samples, in every case levels of active estrogen were higher than the control samples," Moore said. The women were compared with 10 healthy "control" women of the same age and in the same stage of their menstrual period, he said.

"We're still a long way from saying this is a cast-iron finding, but it makes some sense," Moore said.

Researchers hope to compare blood samples of a larger group of breast cancer sufferers before making a firm conclusion, he said.

Moore said he did not know when complete results of the study will be available. He said his team plans to publish the results, but he did not know where.

He said previous research found little link between estrogen levels and cancer because it had not differentiated between active and non-active states of the hormone.

A new method of hormone analysis developed at the University of California-San Francisco enabled the British research team to examine the estrogen in more detail, he said.

The new method allowed estrogen to be classified into three types — free estrogen, estrogen which is bound to a protein called albumin, and estrogen bound to one of the family of globulin molecules.

Moore said estrogen in the free and albumin-bound states was biologically active and suspected of putting women at risk.

He said the suspected danger occurred if cells in the breast, which can absorb estrogen from the blood more readily than cells of other organs, take in the substance in its free state or detach the hormone from the albumin protein.

"We hope that if this study is confirmed we may be able to manipulate the hormonal environment using drugs and stop breast cancer before it gets started," Moore said.

Seven Policemen Facing Discipline

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Seven more police officers have been accused of misconduct involving a graduation party for rookie officers where a prostitute performed a sex act on stage.

Police Chief Cornelius Murphy said Thursday the new charges ended the department's investigation of the April 26 party.

"It's over," the chief said. "This closes the book on the administrative investigation of the incident ... We've got a department to run. Let's get on with it."

Two rookie police officers — called the "architects" of the incident in which a recruit was handcuffed on stage while a prostitute performed oral sex upon him — were suspended a week ago.

Four other officers have been fired because of the party.

Murphy suspended rookies Edward Ruppenstein, 27, and Thomas Lovrin, 23.

Ruppenstein was president of the 156th Police Academy class, which was celebrating completion of field training at the Rathskellar Restaurant, a popular police haunt, when the incident occurred in front of about 70 partygoers.

Murphy set a hearing next Thursday for the officers.

Ruppenstein and Lovrin are formally accused of conduct unbecoming an officer, bringing the Police Department into disrepute and failing to cooperate with police officers investigating the case.

The other five officers are accused of "secondary misconduct" in the case. Their names are being withheld because of the minor nature of their alleged infractions, the chief said.

Already fired from the force were veteran vice officers Peter Balestreri, 27, and Joseph Hession, 28. Also dismissed were rookies Anthony Marcal, 25, and Mark Lagarejos, 22.

Their actions, Murphy said, "brought discredit and ridicule upon the department ... and call for the strongest possible action."

Also still facing a hearing is Sgt. Michael McNeill, 35, who was bartender at the party.

Troopers Check Sect's Children

ISLAND POND, Vt. (AP) — State troopers raided 20 homes in a secretive church sect commune today, taking about 110 children from their homes to learn if they have been physically abused, police said.

Almost 100 troopers, armed with a search warrant and assisted by state social workers, entered the commune of the fundamentalist Northeast Kingdom Community Church, whose members call it the "Kingdom of God."

There was no resistance, according to reporters at the scene.

The action was carried out after two years of effort by the state to get the parents to identify and report abuse and neglect," said David Dillon, spokesman for Gov. Richard Snelling in Montpelier.

The children were placed on buses headed for state District Court in Newport. Their parents were allowed to accompany them.

State officials will request a court order granting them 72-hour emergency custody to learn whether the children have been abused.

Church members freely admit they hit children with slender rods that resemble 2-foot-long balloon sticks as part of their religious upbringing. The church members say the children are never abused and that the rods only sting.

"I will confirm there is an operation in progress for the purpose of serving certain court orders on certain adults and juveniles in the town of Island Pond," said Administration Secretary David Wilson. He said no arrests were made.

Church members refer to the outside world as the "Kingdom of Satan."

The group has been in Vermont for about five years. It has about 350 members and has had a stormy relationship with neighbors since its arrival. Almost half its members are under 18, while one-fifth are under the age of 5.

Church members have avoided contact with outsiders and have refused to speak to the press. Church policy is set by a group of 12 elders, who mete out punishment to transgressors.

One church leader, Charles "Eddie" Wiseman, has been charged with simple assault for an alleged seven-hour beating of a 13-year-old girl, who was left with 89 welts on her body, from her neck to her toes. Church elders said the girl was beaten because she lied.

The sect, founded in Chattanooga, Tenn., in 1972 by Elbert Spriggs Jr., receives income from the 11 businesses it operates, including a 24-hour restaurant.

Children are taught at a church-run school that has not received state certification.

The church has had periodic disputes with state officials over truancy and discipline, but has managed to maintain its privacy because of the isolated location of the town. About 1,500 people live in Island Pond, about 20 miles from the Canadian border.

A year ago, the state dropped truancy charges against seven church parents for lack of "reliable witnesses."

Last October, church officials acknowledged they were building an "ark" that would serve as a trans-Atlantic carrier. The church has a satellite community in Navarrenz, France.

Flag Design Deadline Near

RALEIGH — Dare County's 400th Anniversary Committee is holding a banner-designing contest, "Flags for the 400th," as part of its celebration of America's 400th Anniversary. Little time is left, as deadline for submitting a design is July 1.

The idea is to design a standard or banner in the Elizabethan heraldic manner. Individuals, businesses of any kind, civic organization and churches can enter the competition.

First prize is a one-week, all expenses paid trip to England for one, which will include sightseeing, as well as two days with John Brooke-Little, a member of the Queen's household assigned to the College of Arms in London. Brooke-Little will judge the contest and award the prizes on July 13, following a procession of the flags. Entries will be displayed on the bridge connecting Manteo to the Elizabeth II State Historic Site at the opening ceremonies of America's 400th Anniversary on July 13, and during "Roanoke Revelry," the Elizabethan street fair taking place July 13-15. Each flag will be identified by designer, owner and meaning of symbols.

Those who wish to enter must submit designs done to scale in color by July 1 to: Vera A. Evans, Queen of Arms, Dare County 400th Anniversary Committee, Box 1000, Manteo, N.C., 27954.

Kits giving full instructions for designing a banner or standard are available from the address listed above. Those ordering must enclose $1 to cover mailing costs. Anyone visiting the Manteo area can get a kit from the Dare County 400th office or call that office at 473-2143.

Governors Urge School Reforms

BOCA RATON, Fla. (AP) — Although education has traditionally not been a high priority in the South, the region is now leading the nation in school reforms including merit pay for teachers and tougher graduation requirements.

Governors of Southern states meeting here at the Southern Regional Education Board are making proposals to further improve the region's educational system.

"All of the interesting things being done in education are coming from the south," said Michael W. Kirst, professor of education at Stanford University.

Gov. Lamar Alexander of Tennessee, chairman of the board, said the South spearheaded the move for improvements because the region needed to do so the most. He also said Southerners have also come to realize that educational reforms are the only way for states to progress.

"We have also been blessed with leaders who have made a priority of it," Alexander added.

Some governor called for a national student achievement test by which to grade how good a job schools are doing.

"This competition has been the engine of reform in our schools," said Gov. Bob Graham, speaking of Florida's ranking of school districts by test scores.

Graham and Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton said the system would encourage competition "in the best sense." Clinton, though, added that there must be a consensus on what specific educational goals must be targeted for the testing system to work.

"I basically favor the idea of some comparable test on a regional or national basis, but can we agree on what we want our students to absorb? If we can agree on that, can we agree on what we want to test?" Clinton said.

A fear of embarrassment could make some southern states resist the national test, but schools everywhere will be better off for competing, Clinton said.

"It's almost always painful, but it's always better to know than not to know how well we're doing in all areas of life," Clinton said.

Dairy Farmers Get Over $136 Million

WASHINGTON (AP) — Dairy farmers who signed up in the government's "diversion" program have collected more than $136 million so far as payment for cutting back on milk production in the first three months of 1984.

The Agriculture Department said Thursday the payments went to farmers who signed contracts to reduce milk production 5 percent to 30 percent during a 15-month period that began Jan. 1. The estimated total cost of the program is $940 million.

Officials said the payments, tabulated as of mid-June, covered the January-March quarter and represented about 73 percent of the total payments the department expects to make for cutbacks in the first three months of the program.

The largest payments, $16.9 million, went to farmers in Wisconsin, the biggest dairy state. Minnesota and California each received more than $11 million.

In all, 37,888 dairy farms were enrolled in the program out of 303,580 that were eligible — 12.5 percent of all dairy farms in the United States. The department classifies a dairy farm as any unit with one or more cows.

The enrollees included about 20 percent of all commercial dairy farmers, department officials said.

The program was authorized by Congress last year as part of a package to head off further increases in milk production and a buildup in surplus dairy products — butter, cheese and non-fat dry milk — that are bought by the government to support milk prices paid to farmers.

As part of the package, milk supports were lowered to $12.60 per 100 pounds from $13.10 to help discourage farmers from increasing output. Further reductions are authorized next year if production is not brought into line.

Officials estimated that milk price supports this year will cost about $1.5 billion, compared with $2.6 billion in 1982-83.

The law also provides for deductions of 50 cents per 100 pounds on all milk marketed during the 15-month duration of the program to help offset the payments to participating farmers.

About $277 million has been collected since the deductions from milk checks began last Dec. 1.

House Passes Reform Plan For Schools

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — A proposal to revamp North Carolina's public school system "reflects the best thinking of 20 years of studies," a supporter said as the state House approved a bill to implement the three-pronged program.

The plan, which would make fundamental changes in curriculum, personnel and financial policies, was passed 94-0 by the House and sent to the Senate.

"It sets a new direction for ... education in North Carolina," said Rep. Joe Mavretic, D-Edgecombe, a member of the Education Policy Council that crafted the package.

Another council recommendation — that the General Assembly meet as one committee for up to 20 days next year to consider education matters — didn't fare as well. After drawing sharp criticism, it was returned to the House Education Committee.

Meanwhile, the Senate agreed to consider a bill that would give voters the opportunity to let the state education board appoint the superintendent of public instruction, who currently is elected statewide.

If the bill is approved, a referendum on the matter would be held during the November general election, since the change would require a Constitutional amendment.

The School Reform Act of 1984, which supporters called a move to affirm the education board's role as the state's top education authority, directs the board to submit this year a series of reports on curriculum and personnel.

One report would prescribe a "rigorous statewide standard course of study" that would stress mastery of basic skills, set subjects and textbooks for each grade, set core curriculum and electives, establish a minimum school-day length, limit class sizes, set student performance and promotion standards, and provide for guidance counselors in all elementary schools.

The bill also would establish criteria for becoming a teacher, principal and school superintendent and would create a system for teacher advancement to advanced levels as educators and to administrative posts.

Finally, it would clarify a policy set forth in 1933 that gives state government the primary responsibility for funding current operating expenses and makes local government shoulder the burden of capital improvements.

The proposal to convene the Legislature as a committee of the whole next year floundered as lawmakers questioned the feasibility of spending hours each day for 20 days conducting hearings and debate on education.

"I personally think this is a terrible idea," said Rep. Paul Pulley, D-Durham. "I can't imagine 120 people wrangling over these complex issues. ... We have enough trouble in committee."

Rep. Jo Graham Foster, D-Mecklenburg, defended the proposal, saying 75 cents of every dollar in the state General Fund goes to education. "I do not think this is foolish," she said. "I think it's time well spent."

Other legislative action:

A bill already approved by the House that would give farmers a tax credit for letting charitable organizations glean their fields was approved 45-0 by the Senate.

The bill, sponsored by Rep. Mary Seymour, D-Guilford, would allow a credit of 10 percent of the market value of the crops taken. The food would be distributed to the needy.

"This ... would encourage people to give this food and let it be eaten rather than wasted," said Sen. Marshall Rauch, D-Gaston.

The House approved and sent to the Senate a series of bills levying a tax on hotel and motel room rentals. The bills levy the tax in Cherokee, Cumberland, Guilford and Craven counties and the towns of Long Beach and Lumberton.

Wake County Democratic Senators Wilma Woodard, Joe Johnson and William Staton introduced a bill that would reinstate funding for merit pay increments for state employees.

The bill would cost $18.7 million from the General Fund and $5.6 million from the Highway Fund.

Barfield Interviews Canceled

RALEIGH (AP) — The attorney for convicted murderer Velma Margie Barfield says Mrs. Barfield will not be available for media interviews that were scheduled for today, but declined to give reasons for the cancellation.

"The interviews will not take place," Jimmy Little said Thursday night. "I will not go into the reasons. I'll be happy to explain to anyone who wants to call me tomorrow."

Earlier Thursday, Little had repeated claims that the policy was an attempt "at absolute intervention in the clemency process."

"As I said yesterday, I believe that is the reason behind limiting media access to Mrs. Barfield," he said. "There is no way to get a meaningful story in the kind of situation they've set up."

Patty McQuillan, spokeswoman for the Correction Department, said late Thursday night that she had not heard from Little and was working on the assumption the interviews would go ahead as scheduled.

She said two newspaper representatives had already been selected for today's scheduled interviews.

Crew Zaps Video Record

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Jeanine Dearduff had just breezed past the world record of 7½ million points on a video game when she fell victim to videotape — a TV crew filming the feat yanked the game's cord to plug in its lights.

Mrs. Dearduff recalled the screen went blank and then photographer Gerald Waymer said, "Oh my gosh, did I do that? Did I do that?"

"It was just an honest mistake," said Waymer. "There's no other way I could describe it. I was a little ashamed I'd pulled the wrong plug, but then I felt better when they said she'd already made the record."

Mrs. Dearduff had spent 14 hours in pursuit of an unprecedented 10 million points on the game Tapper.

Prof Defends His Action

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — A Chapel Hill professor accused of complicity in an art smuggling case says French authorities filed charges against him to defray their own embarrassment in letting a rare French painting out of the country.

The dispute over the Cleveland Museum of Art's 1981 purchase of "The Holy Family on the Steps," a 1648 painting by Nicholas Poussin, turned into an international incident Tuesday when a French magistrate issued an arrest warrant for Sherman Emery Lee, 66.

Lee, a retired director of the museum, lives in Chapel Hill and teaches at the University of North Carolina and Duke University.

U.S. officials said Thursday, however, that they will not recognize the warrant, and will not consider either detaining or extraditing Lee unless the French government makes a direct request through diplomatic channels. No such request had been made by late Thursday, said a spokesman for the U.S. Justice Department.

NCNB Reaches Settlement

GREENSBORO (AP) — NCNB National Bank and Lawrence Systems Inc. of San Francisco have reached an undisclosed settlement in the bank's efforts to recover nearly $4 million from the collateral control firm, officials say.

NCNB filed suit against Lawrence Systems, accusing the company of fraud in connection with $7 million in loans the bank made between 1977 and 1982 to gold and diamond dealer Nathan Shaffir. The company had been retained to certify Shaffir's holdings, but Shaffir later admitted never having the gold collateral he claimed.

NCNB attorney Herbert Davis said Thursday only that a settlement had been reached.

Attorneys for Lawrence also declined to give details of the settlement, but they said Lawrence agreed to drop counterclaims accusing NCNB of coercion, "scandalous" accusations and of using poor banking practices.

In January 1983, Shaffir pleaded guilty to five federal fraud charges and was sentenced to 12 years in prison and fined $30,000.

He was charged with making false statements to the bank and removing from his Greensboro office more than $2 million in diamonds that were security for the loans.

Label Vote May Be Upcoming

By The Associated Press

The way may have been cleared for U.S. House approval of a bill to put new health warnings on cigarette packages after a conversation between Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., and Rep. John Dingell, D-Mich.

"I think he's satisfied, but I don't want to speak for him," Helms said of Dingell, who had set today as a deadline for receiving assurances from tobacco-state senators that they would not block the bill.

Dingell, chairman of the House Energy and Commerce Committee, declined to comment on the conversation with Helms.

A House vote on the compromise bill could come Tuesday if Dingell is satisfied that it will not be subjected to delaying tactics in the Senate.

Former Kinston Editor Dies

KINSTON, N.C. (AP) — John Hall "Jake" Strother, a former editor of the Kinston Daily Free Press, died Thursday at the age of 70.

Strother joined the newspaper in 1936 as a cub reporter. He resigned as editor in 1973 when the paper was sold to the current owner, Freedom Newspapers Inc.

A memorial service was scheduled for Saturday at 11 a.m. at Kinston First Baptist Church.

FmHA Disaster Loans Available

RALEIGH (AP) — Gov. Jim Hunt on Thursday announced that all of North Carolina's 100 counties have been declared eligible for Farmer's Home Administration disaster loan assistance because of bad weather.

Previously, 85 counties had qualified for assistance due to adverse weather conditions between March 1, 1983 and March 29, 1984.

Farmers who have suffered losses due to drought, heavy rains, high winds, high temperatures, severe storms or tornadoes during that period may apply for aid at their county FHA office. The deadline for applications is Dec. 4.

Senate Considers Budget Additions

RALEIGH (AP) — Democrats in the state House are calling the $602 million in additions to the 1984-85 budget a historic step toward improving education, but some Republicans say the bill isn't receiving the scrutiny it should.

Regardless of their feelings, most legislators are supporting the $602 million package. The bill won approval Thursday in the House, 109-3, and was scheduled for a vote in the Senate today.

Voting against the bill in the House were Republicans James Hughes of Avery County, Reid Poovey of Catawba County and Brad Ligon of Rowan County.

Senate budget leaders fell three votes shy of the two-thirds majority needed to suspend the rules Thursday for immediate consideration of the bill.

Sen. Bill Redman, R-Iredell, said only a select handful of legislators are drafting the bill and, "that's a violation of what I consider the Democratic process."

Rep. Al Adams, D-Wake, said that about 80 percent of the budget additions are going to raise the salaries of state employees by 10 percent and salaries for teachers and administrators by 15 percent. He said an additional $31 million will be spent to lower the maximum size of classes in grades four through six from 33 students to 29 students.

"What we're doing here is making a bold step to improve public education in North Carolina," Adams said. "When you tell your grandchild what you did, say you served in the short session of 1984 and helped put education on the front burner in North Carolina."

But Rep. Thomas Rhodes, R-New Hanover, noted that the 10 percent salary increase for state employees also goes to legislators. He said that on top of a bill enacted last year, lawmakers will get a 20 percent salary raise in 1985.

Appropriations Committee Chairman Rep. William Watkins, D-Granville, said that was "political talk" because legislators are two years behind getting a pay raise.

Lawmakers are prohibited from giving themselves a pay boost. They must make legislative pay raises take effect in the next session. With the 20 percent raise, legislators will be making $8,395 a year.

"The operation of the General Assembly takes about one-fifth of 1 percent of the total state budget," said House Speaker Liston Ramsey. "This is one of and probably the lowest in the nation as a percentage of the total state budget."

Rep. Howard Coble, R-Guilford, said it has come to the point "when one dares rise on the floor of this House to engage in dialogue ... or propose an alternative, he becomes a showboat, he becomes a politician."

Senate To Debate Drinking Age Proposals Next Week

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate is ready to consider a bill that would combat drunken driving by establishing 21 as the national legal drinking age and automatically stripping licenses from those found driving while intoxicated.

Sen. Lowell P. Weicker, R-Conn., who was instrumental in drafting the compromise measure, said Thursday the Senate will begin debate on the legislation next week.

The compromise was fashioned during a meeting called by Senate Majority Leader Howard Baker, R-Tenn. At that meeting Weicker said it was also agreed that the Senate will consider an alternative drunken driving bill crafted by conservative senators.

The conservatives' approach ignores the 21-year-old drinking age, leaving that matter to the states, but retains the automatic penalties for convicted drunken drivers.

The measure backed by Weicker, Sens. John C. Danforth, R-Mo. and Frank R. Lautenberg, D-N.J., combines the views of lawmakers with different approaches to solving the drunken driving problem.

Those favoring the minimum drinking age believe their solution will remove from the highways thousands of teen-agers who drive across "blood borders" to buy liquor in neighboring states. These are boundaries separating states with different drinking ages.

Weicker said he favors stiff penalties — automatic license revocations, jail terms and fines — as the most effective weapon. "I don't care if a driver is 18, 30, 40, 50 or 90. If it's a drunk driver, get him or her off the road," he said.

The House already has passed legislation that would eliminate a portion of a state's highway construction money for refusal to raise the minimum drinking age to 21.

"If you want to send a political message, go ahead and pass the House bill as is," Weicker said. "If you want to send a message to the drunk driver, then let's get on with it and make the bill more comprehensive."

States failing to raise their drinking age to 21 would lose federal highway construction funds. States enacting stiff penalties against drunken drivers would receive additional highway safety money.

The conservative alternative would give states the extra highway safety money for enacting the stiff penalties against drunken drivers.

Sen. Steven D. Symms, R-Idaho, Gordon J. Humphrey, R-N.H. and Alan K. Simpson, R-Wyo., are chief backers of the conservative legislation.

Conferees Working On Defense Packet

WASHINGTON (AP) — A conference committee today was working out differences between House and Senate versions of a defense spending bill for next year, with most of the conflict focused on the number of MX intercontinental missiles President Reagan wants to build.

The Senate passed its $291 billion package before dawn Thursday on an 82-6 vote. Just before that action, it recommended that European allies increase defense spending but decided not to threaten to withdraw U.S. troops from the continent if they refuse to do so.

The House passed its $284 billion version of the defense authorization bill three weeks ago. Work on the two measures is expected to continue through next week.

The Senate bill gives the Pentagon almost all the weapons the president wants, although it followed the House's lead in deleting funds for chemical weapons and approved only 21 of the 40 MX missiles Reagan had sought for the fiscal year starting Oct. 1.

The House set aside money for 15 of the missiles but it banned use of the funds until next April. Even then, the money would be available only if Congress decided that the Soviet Union had failed to bargain in good faith over arms limitations.

The MX, a rocket designed to carry 10 nuclear warheads, was saved in the Senate only by the tie-breaking vote of Vice President George Bush. The House approved its restrictive language by only a single vote.

In an important vote shortly before passage, the Senate decided, 55-41, against a move to pull out 90,000 American troops from Europe by the end of the decade if the 15 other members of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization do not increase their contributions to the alliance's non-nuclear military force.

Sensors then voted, 94-3, to limit U.S. troop strength in Europe at the current 326,414, blocking planned Pentagon increases.

The Senate's refusal to approve the troop withdrawals came after two days of heavy lobbying by Reagan, other top U.S. officials and European leaders. They all argued that it was the wrong way to get NATO to spend more money.

Meanwhile, the administration contended that difficulties in verifying two nuclear test ban treaties negotiated in the 1970s but never ratified makes it difficult to comply with a Senate request that the accords be submitted for approval.

The Senate on Wednesday voted 77-22 to tatch its request to the 1985 military authorization bill as a non-binding "sense of Congress resolution."

State Department spokesman John Hughes told reporters Thursday the administration has reviewed the treaties several times and has concluded each time that both the 1974 Threshold Test Ban Treaty and the 1976 Peaceful Nuclear Explosions Treaty "are not effectively verifiable in their present form."

Flashdance Skater Dies

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Sunny Johnson, the 30-year-old film and television actress who came to prominence as the frustrated figure skater in the movie "Flashdance," has died after being taken off life-support systems at UCLA Medical Center.

Miss Johnson was rushed to the hospital Monday night after a blood vessel burst in her brain, said her agent, Steve Dontanville. Doctors determined she was clinically dead Wednesday and with her family's permission they removed her from the life-support systems, he said.

The actress had appeared in several television series, including "Baretta," "Charlie's Angels" and "The Devlin Connection" and was a member of the cast of "Bay City Blues," a short-lived series about baseball.

She last appeared in the film "The Immoral Minority Picture Show," yet to be released.

But she was best known for the 1983 "Flashdance," in which she played the role of Jeanie, best friend of the aspiring dancer portrayed by Jennifer Beals.

Family Can Keep House It Won

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — A husband and wife accused of being illegal aliens from Mexico will not lose the house they won in a drawing and had been rehabilitating, a church group says.

The board of directors of Partners: People in Progress voted unanimously Thursday night to allow Jose and Sylvia Carmona to keep the house under a lease-purchase agreement, said the Rev. Robert Frerking, a Partners board member and pastor of Lutheran Mission of the Good Shepherd.

The Carmonas had won the house in a drawing sponsored by Lutheran charities. The family was to receive an interest-free loan for five years in exchange for the "sweat equity" they invested in the home.

"If we hadn't gone through with it, I think in a sense we would have judged them guilty," Frerking said. "They only stand accused at this point."

Frerking said the Carmonas deserved the house because "they've lived up to their end 100 percent."

Ban On Jackson Concert Brings Flood Of Protests

FOXBORO, Mass. (AP) — One radio station sent selectmen live chickens in a limousine and a 64-year-old state senator threatened to lead a protest march as angry fans expressed outrage at a ban on a concert by Michael Jackson and his brothers.

The wave of criticism Thursday came after selectmen in this town of 14,000 voted to reject permits for two Jackson concerts at Sullivan Stadium, the 61,000-seat home of the New England Patriots football team.

Selectmen said they feared the concerts would mean vandalism, traffic problems and a loss of business.

Selectman William J. Gaffey, 55, owner of Bill's Barber Shop and a Foxboro resident for 33 years, said he had received a death threat after the decision Wednesday night.

"Someone called my wife a 7 in the morning to tell her they were coming out to blow my head off, but they didn't put it so nicely," he said. "And I have five grandchildren who wanted tickets to the concert."

Charles Sullivan, the owner of the stadium and executive vice president of the National Football League New England Patriots, wanted to bring Jackson and his five brothers to the 61,000-seat stadium on Aug. 11-12. His efforts won him the contract to run the Jacksons' 11-city tour.

Michael Chamberlain, president of Stadium Management Corp., which is handling the tour, said there would be no attempt to appeal the decision, which means Jacksons will probably miss New England.

Two disc jockeys at WROR-FM were so angry at the Foxboro decision that they hired a limousine to deliver live chickens to the selectmen.

State Sen. Royal L. Bolling traveled to Los Angeles this year to convince the singing group to come to Sullivan Stadium, the largest arena in the Boston area. He charged the selectmen were influenced by the fact that many of the Jacksons' fans are black.

"They feel the town is going to be the 'Mecca for Minorities' when all the evidence is directly opposite," said Bolling, of Boston.

He proposed legislation to limit the power of the selectmen to turn down concerts and said he would lead a multiracial march of thousands of Jackson fans to the concert site if Foxboro officials don't change their minds.

Late in the day, another politician joined his protest.

"Michael has been welcomed in the White House and yet racial prejudice, bigotry and intolerance will deprive Massachusetts teens from seeing entertainers who only espouse what is good about our yqth and our country," said state Rep. Marie Howe.

Gov. Michael S. Dukakis and Boston Mayor Raymond Flynn said they were sorry about the decision, but neither agreed to intervene on behalf of the Jacksons' fans.

Many callers to radio stations charged that racism played a part in the decision of Foxboro, a town which has only 50 black residents according to census figures. Callers pointed out the town allowed white groups like David Bowie and The Police to play at the stadium last summer.

A week ago the selectmen approved a July concert by Tony Bennett and Rosemary Clooney.

Town Counsel Richard Geleman, speaking for the selectmen, called the charge of racism a "scurrilous thing to say."

"That was absolutely not a consideration and it reflects very poorly on the town of Foxboro," he said.

Miami Sprays Medflies

MIAMI (AP) — A helicopter sprayed the pesticide malathion on a downtown neighborhood today, beginning an eight-week aerial spraying campaign against the citrus-damaging Mediterranean fruit fly.

The program, which eventually will cover 81 square miles, began the day after a fifth Medfly was found downtown.

Today's first helicopter run began at 6:30 a.m. and was to cover about four square miles centered in the Little Havana neighborhood, where four Medflies were found Tuesday, said George Gwin, assistant survey director of the Medfly program.

State agriculture officials fear the insects could spread north, threatening the heartland of Florida's $1 billion-a-year citrus industry.

Ground spraying crews also started their second day of saturating downtown vegetation in an expanded area, Gwin said.

The fifth fly, a live male, was discovered Thursday about a half mile south of where three males and an unmated female were found Tuesday, Doyle Conner, state agriculture commissioner, said.

Malathion, mixed with chemical lures, should cause no problem for residents, said Conner. State health departments have been using the pesticide in stronger concentrations for 30 years to control mosquitoes, he said.

Profiles In Pride And Productivity

Joe Carter...

Joe Carter came to work at Farmville 16 years ago after retiring from the U. S. Army Aviation Corps as a senior master sergeant.

"I was 38, had 22-plus years in the service and was too young to take up permanent fishing," he chuckles.

He began work among the tenter frames, huge oven-like devices which stabilize the fabric and apply chemical finishes after dyeing.

"Mechanics has always been my long suit," Joe says, "and I'm proud to be taking part in the modernization of our plant. Farmville plant is undergoing dramatic changes as C&A beefs up its manufacturing capabilities.

Corliss Reid...

"I'm proud of my team and the progress we're making..."

In her 14 years with C&A, Corliss Reid has played many Roles. She worked her way up from quality checker to section person, responsible for keeping knitting machines operating.

Corliss attended our supervisory development course, a formal training program which helps prepare employees for greater responsibility.

Now she's taken on a new set of challenges as third shift supervisor in knitting services.

"There's a lot to learn," Corliss admits, pointing out that her department is undergoing many changes.

Procedures are changing, aimed at making us more productive — and more competitive in our markets."

Change is always disturbing but I believe that everyone involved will be better off as we get accustomed to our new techniques."

Everything's computerized today," Joe says. "This puts a real challenge to all of us in maintenance, for we must continuously pick up new training in order to maintain the new equipment."

There are other challenges as well: Seldom does a new piece of equipment go into service without modification. We modify on the floor to meet manufacturing needs. This gives us an edge over our competitors. And thanks to talents like Joe Carter, we remain, as our slogan says, "Always a step ahead."

Matt Pierce...

Matt Pierce is a key member of our dyeing and finishing team. As D&F technical manager, he is playing a major role in our move to computer control.

He's also responsible for the evaluation of new chemicals and dyeing procedures.

"We're putting in many systems which will increase our productivity, reduce waste and improve our product quality," Matt explains.

"Batch dye weighing will minimize human error, while providing us with a much better inventory control...."

"Microprocessors are giving us both better process control and information systems...."

"I'm pleased to be deeply involved in these state-of-the-art systems. They will assure that Fashion Fabrics remains the customer's choice when quality workmanship is paramount."

Sale Of Planes To Taiwan Upsets Peking Diplomats

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration, which won praise earlier this year for improving relations with China without alienating Taiwan, is now under attack from the rivals, with each saying its security is being jeopardized by Washington.

The administration's East Asia diplomacy had been viewed as foreign policy bright spot that U.S. officials liked to point to as proof of American ability to pull off a delicate balancing act.

But the announcement Tuesday of the sale of 12 C-130 transport planes to Taiwan angered Peking in much the same way that Taipei was irritated by the disclosure last week of U.S. plans to sell weapon technology and anti-tank and anti-aircraft missiles to China for the first time.

Taiwan also is troubled by the prospective sale of U.S. nuclear technology to China while Peking is upset by new U.S. demands for stronger assurances that the technology will not be used to help other countries develop a nuclear capability.

U.S. officials seem confident, however, that the criticism from both sides over the past few days will be short-lived.

"We have been betrayed by American administrations in the past and are naturally wary of it happening again," said the English-language Free China Journal, a Taiwanese government publication.

A commentary published a few days after the announcement of the U.S.-China arms deal said Taiwanese people "are especially concerned" about weapons transfers to China since Taiwan is "the most vulnerable to attack and the prime target of their aggression and conspiracy."

It also criticized prospective nuclear and defense technology sales to China. "A potentially dangerous aggressor is being armed, however cautiously," the commentary said.

China, meanwhile, said the sale of the C-130 transports to Taiwan "obviously violates" the August 1982 Peking-Washington agreement governing U.S. arms sales to Taiwan.

The State Department described the transports as being of "1950's vintage," responding to Peking's complaint that their function "far exceeds that of any other military transport aircraft the United States has supplied to Taiwan."

The U.S.-Chinese conflict over the terms of a nuclear cooperation agreement appears to stem from the decision of the two countries to commit themselves to the transaction without working out all the details in advance.

The agreement was initiated during President Reagan's April visit to Peking but now the administration wants new and binding assurances that China will not transfer nuclear technology, including spent fuel, to another country.

The United States reportedly sought the assurances following indications of Chinese assistance to Pakistan in developing nuclear weapons.

China maintains it is committed to a policy of non-proliferation and Pakistan has said publicly it does not intend to develop a nuclear weapons capability.

But Sen. Alan Cranston, D-Calif., said Thursday that new information shows Pakistan has developed, with design assistance from China, the capacity to build several nuclear weapons per year.

A Chinese Foreign Ministry spokesman made clear Wednesday his government is not prepared to give any additional assurances on non-proliferation.

The timing may have been coincidental but hours before that statement, the same spokesman announced that Qian Qichen, the vice foreign minister responsible for relations with the Soviet Union, will visit Moscow shortly.

The sudden flurry of criticism directed at Washington by both Peking and Taipei has offset to some extent what many analysts had regarded as deft diplomatic footwork by the administration in its dealings with the rivals.

After a rocky start, the Reagan administration's relations with China had rebounded earlier this year, based primarily on the successful visit to Washington by Premier Zhao Ziyang in January and the return visit to Peking in April by Reagan.

Even as Reagan was preparing for that trip, Taiwanese officials were saying they were "very appreciative" of the "friendly attention" Taiwan's interests had received from the administration.

At the time, Taiwanese affairs analyst Robert Downen said, "He has had it both ways," speaking of Reagan's success with Peking and Taipei. Downen, of Georgetown University's Center for Strategic and International Studies, added that the Taiwanese people believe no other American leader would treat them any better.

French-Soviet Talks Bring On Exchange

MOSCOW (AP) — French President Francois Mitterrand met in the Kremlin today with Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko, and officials said the session was businesslike despite a sharp exchange of comments Thursday night.

French presidential spokesman Michel Vauzelle said Mitterrand and Gromyko talked for two hours, twice as long as scheduled, and concentrated on European security and disarmament.

He described the session as "serious" and said, "There was a desire on both sides to express positions openly."

Mitterrand and Soviet President Konstantin U. Chernenko exchanged unusually blunt comments during toasts at a dinner Thursday night.

Mitterrand said the case of dissident physicist Andrei Sakharov "put into doubt" the East-West Helsinki accords on human rights. It was believed to be the first mention of Sakharov by name in one of the formal toasts at dinners hosted by the ruling Politburo for visiting dignitaries.

The French president also said France considers the Soviet Union's medium-range SS-20 missile arsenal in Eastern Europe a threat to its security.

Chernenko told Mitterrand that the Soviet Union will not tolerate interference in its internal affairs. Lectures on human rights "only provoke an ironic smile," he said.

Vauzelle said there was no mention of Sakharov in today's meeting, but that Mitterrand again insisted, as he did to Chernenko on Thursday, that France's independent strategic nuclear force cannot be included in U.S.-Soviet arms talks. The Soviets have insisted on counting French and British missiles along with those of the United States.

The official Soviet news agency Tass said Mitterrand and Gromyko "discussed some major international problems ... in a frank and businesslike spirit."

Troops Reported Massing

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — Iraq claimed Iranian troops were massing in border towns in preparation for a major offensive and said Iran shelled an Iraqi village today in violation of a mutual agreement not to attack civilian areas.

Iraqi Foreign Minister Tarek Aziz made the allegation about troop concentration in a message Thursday to U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar, who mediated the 11-day-old accord against attacks on non-combatants, and asked him to "take immediate measures to check the matter."

Kuwait, meanwhile, said it may turn to other nations for weapons following a U.S. rejection of its request for Stinger anti-aircraft missiles, which it says it needs for defense against attacks on its shipping in the Persian Gulf.

Aziz, in a previous message to de Cuellar, had said military personnel and facilities "should not be deployed in or near residential centers to avoid involving such areas in the war."

The Iraqi Foreign Ministry said Aziz told de Cuellar that Iran was shelling the town of Abadan and Mohammara (Khorramshahr) as staging points for the expected offensive against Iraq." Iraq and Western military sources have said hundreds of thousands of troops appear to be poised just east of the border for an attack.

Aziz earlier in the day received three U.N. military observers and a civilian administrator who flew in to monitor the agreement, the official Iraqi News Agency reported. A similar team was to be stationed near Iran.

The agency quoted Aziz as telling the U.N. officials that his country was honoring the agreement.

An unidentified Iraqi military spokesman, reading a communique over the state radio, said Iranian gunners fired artillery shells into a village in the southern Basra region today, following a similar attack on a residential neighborhood in the same area Thursday night. Iraq has accused Iran of violating the agreement four times since it took effect June 12. No casualties have been reported.

Iran accused Iraq of violating the accord Wednesday by shelling the oil city of Abadan.

AMBUSH -- A HIGHLY SUCCESSFUL METHOD!

IN THE PRACTICE OF WAR THE ANCIENT ISRAELITES LEANED HEAVILY ON VARIOUS STRATEGEMS, SUCH AS SURPRISE, AMBUSH, PRETENDED RETREAT, AND SUCH CIRCUMVENTIONS AS WOULD KEEP THEIR ENEMIES IN A DISTRAUGHT STATE OF HELPLESSNESS. WE LEARN IN GENESIS 14 THAT WHEN ABRAHAM WENT TO RESCUE HIS NEPHEW LOT, HE DIVIDED HIS FORCES, WHICH CERTAINLY SUGGESTS AMBUSH AND, SUCCESSFULLY ATTACKED AND VANQUISHED THE ENEMY. ALSO NOTED IN THE BOOK OF JOSHUA, CHAPTER 8, ARE PLANS FOR A VERY SUCCESSFUL AMBUSH BY WHICH JOSHUA AND THE ISRAELITES HOPED TO DEFEAT THE SOLDIERS OF THE CITY OF AI. A MUCH USED FORM OF AMBUSH WAS TO DRAW THE OPPOSING FORCES INTO A LARGE GULCH OR RAVINE BY MAKING THEM BELIEVE THEY WERE PURSUING A SMALL NUMBER OF MEN. WHEN THE PREY WAS SUCCESSFULLY LURED INTO THE CHASM, THE MAJOR FORCE, HIDDEN UP ABOVE, WOULD THEN ATTACK--MUCH TO THE ENEMY'S CHAGRIN!

Minister Clowns Around At Altar

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — The Rev. William H. Pindar has spent 19 years of his life in the Presbyterian ministry. For 13 of them, he's been clowning around.

While many religious men and women put on dark robes and solemn faces to meet their congregations, Pindar puts on the face of a clown.

At the altar of the Old Pine Street Church in Philadelphia, he often wears a frayed top hat sprouting an oversized flower and rainbow suspenders supporting baggy pants and covering an outrageously bright shirt.

Pindar will not speak a single word. Instead, he prances around

Resignation

BONN, West Germany (AP) — Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher, leader of the small Free Democratic Party for 10 years, says he plans to resign as party chairman in February 1985, a year before his term ends.

His announcement came at a meeting of Free Democrat leaders who were discussing the party's future following internal dissent over Genscher's leadership and a big defeat in European Parliament elections last Sunday. The Free Democrats drew 4.8 percent of the vote in Sunday's elections, short of the 5 percent needed for seats in the parliament.

Leader Named

WASHINGTON (AP) — Maj. Gen. Edward L. Tixier has been named commander of U.S. Forces in Japan and chief of the U.S. 5th Air Force.

Tixier is currently deputy assistant secretary of defense for Near Eastern and South Asian Affairs and has been involved in arms sales talks and studies with countries in the Persian Gulf region. The 54-year-old Tixier, a native of Clayton, N.M., has been nominated by President Reagan for promotion to lieutenant general.

Variable Interest Now In Disfavor

WASHINGTON (AP) — House Majority Leader Jim Wright and a variety of House Democrats and Republicans are calling for an end to variable interest rate mortgages unless lenders agree to limit interest rate increases.

Wright testified Thursday before the House subcommittee on housing and community development, where he read complaints from people who wrote him about jumps in home-loan interest rates that caught them by surprise.

The Texas Democrat said a Southern Virginia woman was offered a $47,500 loan with a graduated payment plan that would increase monthly payments from $410 a month to $620 a month over the first five years and have the woman owing the bank $59,000 at the beginning of the sixth year.

"If these hearings are not to sound the call of 'Farewell to ARMs ...' I think they should. We've got to start rolling it back sometime. The time is not going to be any easier or any better than right now," Wright said.

Rep. Stewart B. McKinney, R-Conn., the panel's ranking Republican, said interest rates ought to be "life capped" or limited in the amount they could go up.

Subcommittee chairman Henry B. Gonzalez, D-Texas, agreed, saying: "Where the sky's the limit, the sky will become the limit."

But Edwin J. Gray, chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, told the subcommittee that self-regulation not re-regulation by the federal government is the proper way to combat "obvious abuses that have occurred" in adjustable rate loans.

He said the home-loan industry, which his agency regulates, "has made great progress" in reviewing the way they make adjustable rate mortgage loans.

"Self-regulatory efforts are underway, eliminating or reducing some of the negative side effects of many ARM products," he said.

Gray also told the subcommittee "there is no way our savings institutions can remain viable and pursue their clearly defined public policy objectives — to provide ample funds for home ownership and housing related investments — without the widespread use of the ARM."

Wright disagreed, saying the adjustable rate mortgage "is the most insidious thing that has happened in a most insidious direction in which the entire structure of interest rates is taking us."

"There is not a more dangerous menace to the prospect of long-term economic recovery in our nation than the precipitous unsupportable increase in interest rates," said Wright.

"The so-called adjustable-rate mortgage has simply built another floor under interest rates, provided another excuse for the lenders in the temple to gouge the unsuspecting and defenseless public," he said.

AMA Vows Fight Fee Regulations

CHICAGO (AP) — Any attempt by the government to impose laws requiring doctors to treat Medicare patients without being able to set fees will mean "war," says the executive vice president of the American Medical Association.

Dr. James Sammons told the AMA's House of Delegates meeting Thursday that Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., and other Democratic leaders in Congress are pushing hard for such a plan as part of a budget compromise.

The House of Delegates is a policy-making body.

Sammons, who said his information came from Budget Director David Stockman, told the delegates that despite organized medicine's strong opposition to any mandatory setting of Medicare fees by the government, Stockman couldn't guarantee that it would be excluded from a budget compromise deal.

If that happens, Sammons said he told Stockman, "you'll have a war on your hands."

But a spokesman for Rostenkowski, chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, predicted "the war will be over in 24 to 48 hours," with physicians facing new government controls.

John Sherman, the Rostenkowski aide, said the required payment levels would make doctors share in the "sacrifices" needed to hold down health costs.

Sammons noted that AMA opposition to mandatory fee assignment had killed the plan in the Senate and the House this year. Under various earlier proposals, doctors who treated Medicare patients at fees set by the government but billed them for additional amounts could lose their privileges to practice in hospitals that accept Medicare payments.

He said the government no longer has enough money to finance the kind of medical care it promised elderly people when Medicare was first enacted, but instead of requiring patients to pay more or raising taxes, the government is trying to restructure the traditional doctor-patient relationship.

At Sammons' urging, the AMA delegates shouted a unanimous voice vote to endorse the association leadership's opposition to government-imposed Medicare fees.

Dr. Joseph Boyle, newly elected AMA president, said mandatory assignment of fees by the government interferes with the doctor-patient relationship and goes against medical principles.

Although most doctors may treat some needy patients at reduced fees or at no fee, they balk at being told to do so by a third party, he said.

"A large number of physicians want to deal directly with our patients, and we want no responsibility to anyone else," Boyle said.

really be the oldest of the old politics."

Picturing the scene at the climax of the Democratic National Convention where the two nominees stand together before a national television audience, the aide said, "You hold up his (Mondale's) hand, and praise him as a future president and try to sell that to the American people."

At that point, the adviser said, Hart's supporters could legitimately ask, "Then why did you oppose him in the first place?"

In the end, however, Mondale's choice of a running mate may hinge on simple raw politics, whether public opinion polls show Hart as providing the strongest possible ticket in a year when the Democrats are facing one of the most popular presidents since Franklin D. Roosevelt.

If that happens, said one Democratic official, "That will show that Hart's themes drawing a clear difference between him and Mondale did not sink in very deep, and that for the time being party unity is more important than new ideas."

'Justice Winner' In White's Assault Trial

McKINNEY, Texas (AP) — After his acquittal on a misdemeanor assault charge, Dallas Cowboys quarterback Danny White smiled and declared justice the winner.

White was acquitted Thursday night by a jury of four men and two women who sat through a four-day, star-studded trial pitting the Cowboys veteran signal-caller against a 17-year-old high school football player, whom White admitted striking.

"My faith in the system was a little bit shaky in the beginning," White said. "It's been, to some extent, restored after the verdict and the fact that some good people made a good decision. Justice was served in the long run."

White, 32, said he slapped Jon Michael Clark to protect himself and three of his children after the youth's dangerous driving nearly forced White's van into a head-on collision at 80 mph.

Clark said White punched him in the nose after forcing his Camaro off a rural road north of Dallas.

Jurors, who deliberated an hour, indicated they never reached consideration of White's self-defense plea because they all had reasonable doubt that White actually hit Clark with a closed fist as alleged in the charge.

Clark and his family called the trial "a circus" and said White's character witnesses — including Cowboys Coach Tom Landry, retired quarterback Roger Staubach and middle linebacker Bob Breunig — swayed the jury.

"I just feel that Danny White is above the law," said Clark, a Plano High School student and tight end on the football team.

His mother, Betty Clark, said her son was placed on trial by White's attorneys.

"It was just a four-star-studded extravaganza. That's all it was," Mrs. Clark said. "It was a circus."

White said he'll now turn his attention to football and the upcoming season.

Ashford Injures Hamstring

Lewis Completes Triple

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Carl Lewis competed a sensational triple in the U.S. Olympic Track and Field Trials, while Mike Tully helped stamp the American pole vaulters as a force to be reckoned with at the upcoming Games.

Lewis finished off his five-day reign in the sprints and long jump with a sizzling 19.86-second victory in Thursday's final of the men's 200 meters to clinch his fourth Olympic berth.

Earlier in the week, the 22-year-old Lewis handily won the 100, in 10.06, and the long jump, at 28 feet, seven inches. And he had warmed up for the 200 final with a 19.85 clocking, third fastest ever, in qualifying.

Tully soared to an American record 19 feet, three-quarters of an inch and came close twice while attempting a world record height of 19-3 3/4.

In Thursday's other finals on the fifth day of the eight-day trials, Judi Brown rewrote her own American record in the women's 400-meter hurdles with a 54.93 clocking, and Georgia Tech freshman Antonio McKay turned in the fastest men's 400 meters in the world this year, 44.71.

Lewis' outstanding week put him in both Olympic sprints, the 400-meter relay and the long jump, thus giving him a chance to duplicate Jesse Owens' four gold medal haul of 1936.

"If I compete at this level in the Olympics, I will do very well," Lewis said, adding that his combined performances during the week were "my best in all my events."

Americans figure to dominate the Olympic sprints, and Lewis, who stands alone among current long jumpers, said, "I don't see why it will be any different for me in the Olympics; the same people will be there."

Queried about his future after the Olympics, Lewis, selected by pro football's Dallas Cowboys and pro basketball's Chicago Bulls during their respective drafts, said he thought the Bulls picked him only for publicity, but added of the Cowboys, "I'll wait until after the Games and see how serious they are."

Kirk Baptiste, Lewis' teammate at the University of Houston, finished second in the 200 final at 20.05, while Thomas Jefferson of Kent State, was third at 20.37 to earn the final Olympic berth. Roy Martin Jr., a 17-year-old high school student from Dallas, just missed a berth as he finished fourth in 20.43.

Tully, a 27-year-old former world record holder who's made a successful comeback, became the third American to clear 19 feet as the U.S. vaulters, who had lost their traditional international prominence, continue to rally.

Doug Lytle cleared 18-8 3/4 for the second berth on the U.S. team, and Earl Bell, who had gone a national record 19-0 1/4 earlier this month, got the third and final spot with a 18-4 3/4 effort. Billy Olson, who has cleared 19-0 1/4 indoors, finished seventh to miss a berth on the team.

Tully's vault put him in a tie for fourth place on the all-time performers' list. Only world record holder Sergey Bubka (19-3 1/2) of the Soviet Union, Thierry Vigneron of France (19-1 1/2) and Pierre Quinon of France (19-1 1/4) have gone higher. The Soviets' Vladimir Polyakov also has cleared 19-0 3/4.

"We've got three tough Americans on this team," Tully said. "With the boycott, we're going to look tough to pick up some medals."

Tully had made the U.S. team four years ago when America boycotted the Moscow Olympics. Since then, he had dropped from sight, only to reappear last summer and win at the Pan-American Games. Then he went 18-11 last month in what was then an American record.

"This comeback has been very well-planned; it's no accident," said Tully, ranked No. 1 in the world in his event in the late 1970s before he "retired for a couple of years," a period during which he got married, played tennis and golf, took up flying, battled allergies and had a knee operation.

"I just wanted to qualify for the Olympics," he said. "It's about time I had a chance at the Games."

In the women's intermediate hurdles, Brown said her race wasn't exactly perfect, despite the record.

"I had an awful race," she said. "My steps weren't right, I was terribly nervous, and I was just thankful I cleared the last hurdle."

"After that, it was just to make it to the finish line," said Brown, a 22-year-old former Michigan State student.

Angela Wright finished second in 55.33 and Sharrieffa Barksdale, the former American record-holder from the University of Tennessee, took third in 55.58 to get the other two hurdles berths.

In the men's 400, McKay said he was thrilled to earn a spot on the U.S. team, commenting, "I want to carry on the great tradition of great track and field athletes coming from the United States. I want the whole world to see the kind of performances that athletes from this country can give under a program of freedom."

Alonzo Babers was second in 44.86, and Sunder Nix third in 45.15 to earn the other two berths in the 400.

Evelyn Ashford's hopes of winning three Olympics golds ended when she pulled up in the women's 200 qualifying because of a tender hamstring muscle, and world champion Calvin Smith, slowed by a leg injury suffered two weeks ago, failed in his bid to make the men's 200 team.

Ashford, who won the 100 final earlier in the week, had hoped for golds in both sprints and the 400 relay. She said after pulling up in the 200 that she simply did not want to risk the mild injury turning into something more serious.

Smith, the 100 world record holder (9.93) had finished fourth in the 100 final to just miss a berth, but he will be on the U.S. team as a member of the 400 relay. He did not even make it to the 200 final, finishing fifth in his heat during Thursday's semis.

Meanwhile, Mary Decker, the world champion in the women's 1,500 and 3,000 meters, breezed to victories in both of her events, a 4:13.70 in the 1,500 in the morning, then an 8:56.12 clocking in the 3,000 in the evening.

The 1,500 semifinals will be held tonight and the 3,000 final Saturday.

Owners Adopt Drug Program

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Major League Baseball's drug abuse program might trigger a thaw in the chilly owner-player relationship, Bowie Kuhn and Lee MacPhail say.

Kuhn, the game's outgoing commissioner, termed the agreement adopted Thursday by the owners a "dramatic breakthrough in labor relations and sports."

MacPhail, head of the Player Relations Committee, said the program's greatest strength is the owner-player partnership it will rely upon in the battle against drug abuse.

"The key thing is the players and clubs are working together," MacPhail said. "With both sides supporting the program, we think we can get more peer pressure from players themselves. They know better than anyone who has a problem."

"The great majority of our players do not have a drug problem and do not condone drug use in any way. The Players Association has a big stake in this, as we all do."

The Players Association has already given near-unanimous approval to the program, which was opposed by some owners because it does not include mandatory, random testing of all players.

But it does call for substantial penalties for missing more than 30 days because of drug-related problems. And players who refuse testing after treatment for drug abuse will be subject to punishment at the discretion of the commissioner.

The owners met for more than three hours in a hotel near Kansas City International Airport Thursday and gave the plan what Kuhn described as "overwhelming" approval.

The next step is the creation of a three-person Joint Review Council, an integral part of the program. A committee of owners and players will appoint the panel.

"As part of the implementation of what happened here today, I will be issuing a new and strengthened set of disciplinary rules with regard to players who fall in any way outside of the program," said Kuhn, who is to be replaced as commissioner on Oct. 1 by Peter Ueberroth, head of the Los Angeles Olympic Organizing Committee. "I really think that ... given the history of often times little cooperation between the Players Association and the Major League clubs ... this is a dramatic breakthrough in labor relations and sports."

Essentially, the agreement calls for a "salary abatement" procedure as a way of penalizing players who continue to abuse drugs — not including marijuana, alcohol and amphetamines. A player who steps forward and asks for help will receive full pay the first 30 days of treatment and half pay the next 30 days.

"Beyond 60 days, if the club keeps the player on the major league roster, he will get minimum salary,"

Michel Signs With Pirates

New East Carolina University baseball Coach Gary Overton has signed his first recruit — Rose High School pitcher Billy Michel.

Michel, a 6-4, 220-pound right hander, compiled an 11-1 record for the Rampants in his senior season. Along with a 1.89 earned run average, Michel batted .333 and was named to the All-Big East unit. He is currently 3-0 with the Pitt County American Legion team.

"We think he had a fine senior year and has developed himself into one of the top pitchers in the state," Overton said. "He made himself into a real good player over the last year."

Billy Michel is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Tom Michel. His father was the leading scorer and rusher for East Carolina in 1963 and is still among the Pirate career scoring leaders.

said MacPhail. The current minimum major league salary is $40,000.

A club that suspects a player of drug involvement can ask him to undergo examination. If he refuses, the evidence will be presented to the Joint Review Council, which can dismiss the club's suspicions or recommend that the player undergo testing or treatment. If the player refuses, he will be subject to disciplinary action by the commissioner. A player will also be subject to penalty if he refuses to be tested after undergoing treatment.

Wayne County Homers Swamp Snow Hill, 4-3

SNOW HILL — Sean Sullivan ripped a two-run homer in the sixth and Jansen Evans added a solo blast in the seventh to lead Wayne County to a narrow 4-3 win over Snow Hill Thursday in American Legion baseball.

Tony Tillman struck out 12, walked three and scattered six hits as he went the distance on the mound for Wayne County.

Evans, Sullivan, Anthony Jernigan and Paul Summerlin had two hits each for Wayne.

Anthony Russo sparked the Snow Hill offense with a solo homer in the bottom of the sixth. Russo's blast was the only production of the game until Sullivan put Wayne ahead 2-1 in the sixth.

Evans' homer gave Wayne a 3-1 edge, but it took another run in the eighth to put the game out of reach. Bert Moleski walked, Summerlin singled to left and Tillman advanced the runners with a sacrifice before the only error of the game on a grounder by Evans allowed Moleski to cross the plate.

In the bottom of the frame, Nat Norris singled but was out on a fielder's choice by Russo. After two outs, Billy Godley singled, and Joey Stepp drove in Russo with a hit. Todd Grant added a single to plate Godley before Tillman closed the door.

Godley went the distance on the mound for Snow Hill, striking out eight and walking four.

Snow Hill, now 7-8 on the season, plays at Edenton Saturday and at Wilson Sunday night.

Brewers Support Sutton In 4-3 Win

By The Associated Press

There's nothing wrong with Don Sutton that a few runs wouldn't cure ... and a few is what Milwaukee finally got him. But it was just enough for the Brewers to nip the Detroit Tigers 4-3.

The 39-year-old Sutton, who was backed by only two runs in his previous four starts and had a personal five-game losing streak since his last victory May 15, held Detroit to one hit over the first six innings Thursday night. Then he got strong relief help from Rollie Fingers to notch his 270th career triumph.

"He's pitched well, but we haven't done anything for him," said Manager Rene Lachemann. "We had just eight runs in his seven losses. You can't expect to win like that. He's pitched a lot better than his 4-7 record."

The Brewers haven't been doing much winning this season, but they now boast a three-game winning streak, including two victories in Toronto.

"I can't remember the last time we've won three in a row," Lachemann said (it was more than a month ago). "That gave us a big lift, especially against this ballclub right here. Everything they do turns out right. You're never sure until you get into the clubhouse after the game that you've won."

In the only other American League games, Toronto downed Boston 5-2, New York beat Baltimore 5-3 and Cleveland blanked Minnesota 7-0.

Jim Sundberg's third-inning homer off Juan Berenguer gave Sutton and the Brewers a 1-0 lead and Milwaukee made it 3-0 in the fifth on Bobby Clark's single, Sundberg's double, a wild pitch and Ed Romero's sacrifice fly. They added what proved to be the winning run in the sixth on a walk and Ben Oglivie's double for a 4-0 lead.

Detroit scored all its runs in the seventh on a walk, Chet Lemon's RBI double that chased Sutton and Larry Herndon's first home run of the season off Rick Waits.

"I'm a realist," said Sutton, who spent 16 years with Los Angeles and is the Dodgers' all-time leader in eight pitching categories. "I know that I'm near the end of my career. I don't have many good fastballs and curveballs, but I'll keep doing this as long as I don't embarrass myself and the club I'm playing for."

"There's three kinds of pitchers in baseball. There's a Jack Morris or Dave Stieb, who can make you win; those who can make you lose and those who can give you a chance to win. I'm one of those who can give you a chance."

The comebacking Fingers, who allowed one hit over the final 2 1-3 innings for his 12th save, said he has "no pain in the arm whatsoever. Every now and then I have to have a day off. But each day it's getting stronger. All I want to do is be able to get back and pitch decent and maybe people will stop asking me that question."

Blue Jays 5, Red Sox 2

Willie Upshaw drove in two runs, including the tie-breaker with a ninth-inning single, as Boston's longest losing streak since 1977 went to eight games.

Luis Leal, who blanked the Red Sox on two hits last Saturday, threw only 81 pitches in firing a four-hitter and outdueling rookie Al Nipper, who allowed five hits over the first eight innings before being knocked out in the ninth.

Willie Aikens' RBI single and a sacrifice fly by Buck Martinez produced Toronto's other runs in the ninth. The Red Sox tied the game on Mike Easler's eighth-inning homer.

"The guy (Leal) pitched a good game, it's that simple," said Boston Manager Ralph Houk. "Another loss. He's a tough pitcher. He wasn't as tough as he was in Toronto, but he still had good stuff. That's three good games in a row for Nipper, but it seems we don't score when he pitches."

Yankees 5, Orioles 3

Don Mattingly ignited a three-run first inning with a two-out single and doubled home the lead run in the fourth while Shane Rawley, a last-minute starter, allowed three runs in the second inning and held the Orioles scoreless thereafter until giving way to rookie Clay Christiansen with two out in the eighth.

Loser Scott McGregor retired the first two batters of the game before Mattingly singled and Don Baylor homered. The Yankees added another run when Dave Winfield singled, Toby Harrah walked and Brian Dayett singled. With the score tied 3-3 in the fourth, Butch Wynegar singled with two out and scored on Mattingly's double. The Yankees chased McGregor and made it 5-3 in the sixth on a single by Bobby Meacham and Willie Randolph's double.

Rawley said he was over the "sinus condition," which the Yankees gave as the reason for putting him on the disabled list last month.

"That's what they decided to call it, but it was my shoulder that hurt," Rawley said. "I guess they wanted me to sound healthy if they wanted to trade me. They can't trade you with a sore arm."

"When I came out of spring training I had a sore back. A week later I broke some muscles in the ribs. I didn't pitch for 17 days and then I blew out my shoulder. I feel good now and I hope I can get back in the groove again."

Indians 7, Twins 0

Neal Heaton pitched a three-hitter while Brett Butler, Jerry Willard and Andre Thornton homered, the first time this season Cleveland has hit three homers in a game.

"I've been waiting a long time for him to pitch that game," said Manager Pat Corrales. "He beat a pretty good fastball-hitting team with fastballs. He was ahead in the count all day and he was getting the outer half of the plate."

"I basically mixed them up," said Heaton. "And I threw a lot of strikes. I didn't have rhythm the first half of the year. I hope this is the start of a better second half."

Denver Aims At Berth

By The Associated Press

Lately, the Denver Gold has been headed the wrong way and the Oakland Invaders in the right direction, but only the Gold has a goal to shoot for tonight.

The playoffs.

Oakland lost its first nine games of the United States Football League season. Since then, though, it has won seven of eight. That's not quite good enough to qualify for postseason play.

Denver, on the other had, has lost eight of its last nine games — but that one win coupled with a 7-1 start gives the Gold a chance for a wild-card berth. It needs not only a victory over the Invaders but a loss by Arizona Saturday night against the Pacific Division-champion Los Angeles Express.

"Oakland's season is seen as successful because it is finishing strong after losing its first nine games," Denver Coach Craig Morton said. "Ours is considered a failure because we lost all those games after a great start."

"But we are the ones who still have a chance to finish 9-9 and make the playoffs, which I think would be a great accomplishment for this team."

Tonight's other game is Pittsburgh at Jacksonville. Sunday's games are Tampa Bay at Birmingham, Michigan at Chicago, New Jersey at Philadelphia, Oklahoma at San Antonio and New Orleans at Washington, the Federals' last game in the nation's capital. The franchise moves next season to Miami.

The regular season ends Monday night with Memphis at Houston.

Like the Invaders, their coach, Chuck Hutchison, is just running out the string of a disappointing season, even though they're finishing on an upbeat note. Hutchison, who replaced fired John Ralston three games into the season, will be replaced next year by Charlie Sumner. But his lame-duck status hasn't extinguished his enthusiasm.

"I think we're one of the best teams in the league right now," he said. "We don't deserve to be in the playoffs with the record we have, but if you look at the way teams are playing in the league over the past three or four weeks, we are playing as well as anybody."

Despite Denver's still being in contention, Coach Craig Morton is in hot water. Club owner Doug Spedding has expressed disenchantment with Morton's work habits.

"I never met a guy who worked from 9 to 5 that could get it together," Spedding said. "It's going to take 12 hours a day to make this thing work. I won't settle for less." And he added: "I'm not sure he wants to change."

But the coach said he could. "I'll work 12 hours a day if that's what he wants me to do," Morton said. "He's the boss. I don't see what you're going to do for 12 hours a day — but if Doug wants me here 12 hours, I'll be here."

In the first Invaders-Gold game, seven weeks ago, Oakland was a 20-17 overtime winner. "We miss a couple of field goals, get a touchdown taken away on a holding call away from the ball, and then get trapped twice and don't win the game," Morton said of that meeting. "I'm not trying to take the blame away from myself or the coaches. But ... coaches have nothing to do with whether you win or lose. They just tell you what play you're going to run, and the players take it from there."

In other National League action, Pittsburgh beat Chicago 8-6, Los Angeles stopped Cincinnati 9-7, San Francisco trimmed Atlanta 5-3 and Houston crushed San Diego 11-5.

The Mets chased Charlie Hudson with a five-run fifth inning to take a 6-1 lead, but the Phillies jumped on New York starter Walt Terrell and relief ace Jesse Orosco for six runs in the top of the seventh to go ahead 7-6.

Then, against Bill Campbell, 3-2, in the bottom of the inning, Ron Hodges knocked in the tying run with a groundout and Staub, batting for Orosco, 5-2, later singled home the tie-breaking run.

Jim Kern replaced Campbell and New York added a run on Wally Backman's grounder as the Mets amassed their season high in both runs and hits. They had 17 hits off four Phillies pitchers.

"No one should be proud of a game like that," said Phillies Manager Paul Owens, whose club committed two errors and raised its season total to 79. "It's certainly not one to write home about."

Dodgers 9, Reds 7

Steve Yeager's pinch-hit grand slam home run in the seventh inning powered Los Angeles over Cincinnati and ended the Dodgers' losing streak at seven games.

The Reds had built a 6-2 lead after four innings for starter Mario Soto, pitching while appealing a five-day suspension because of a ball-throwing incident in Atlanta. But Soto left in the sixth with a sore back, and Mike Scioscia singled home a run off reliever Bill Scherrer to cut the lead to 6-3.

Los Angeles then scored five times with one out in the seventh. Pedro Guerrero's double delivered the first run before Yeager came off the bench to smash his grand slam off reliever Bob Owchinko.

Burt Hooton, the third Dodger pitcher, earned his first victory in four decisions with two innings of relief. He gave up a run in the seventh on Nick Esasky's RBI groundout, and Orel Hersher came on in the eighth for his first save.

"I was just trying to get the ball up in the air," Yeager said of the fourth grand slam of his career. "I don't have blazing speed. If I hit it on the ground, it's going to be a double play."

Giants 5, Braves 3

Bob Brenly's RBI double capped a four-run fifth inning, leading San Francisco over Atlanta.

Trailing 1-0 after Dale Murphy hit a solo homer in the fourth, the Giants got RBI singles in the fifth by Scot Thompson and Joel Youngblood, another run on an error and a double by Brenly to lead the Giants to their first victory over the Braves in six tries this season.

Bill Laskey, 4-6, who was relieved by Greg Minton in the seventh inning after consecutive doubles by Chris Chambliss and Ken Oberkfell bought in Atlanta's second run, gained the victory. Rick Mahler, 5-2, took the loss.

"I've been seeing the ball pretty well the last couple of days," said Thompson, who had four hits Wednesday and three Thursday night.

Astros 11, Padres 5

Denny Walling's pinch-hit triple triggered a six-run Houston rally in the fifth inning that carried the Astros over San Diego, their first victory over the Padres in six games.

Regulator Defends Rescue Of Bank

WASHINGTON (AP) — A government-led, multibillion-dollar effort to rescue Continental Illinois National Bank & Trust Co. was the least costly and most responsible action possible, not a favor to big banks, a federal bank regulator says.

And the action didn't mean the government is abandoning a plan to instill "market discipline" on the banking industry by making depositors of large amounts of money subject to clear risks, said William Isaac, chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp.

Isaac, whose agency insures bank accounts up to $100,000, made his remarks in a speech prepared for delivery today to the Association of Bank Holding Companies in Newport, R.I. Copies were also released in Washington.

The FDIC led a $7.5 billion rescue effort to keep Continental Illinois afloat after losses on bad energy loans and a widespread withdrawal of deposits led to a crisis last month at the nation's seventh-largest bank.

Some critics have said the FDIC should have forced a merger with a stronger institution or simply allowed Continental to fail — steps the agency has taken with some smaller banks.

Brushing aside the idea of letting the bank go under, Isaac said regulators "realistically" had two choices:

—Force a merger that "would have required substantial FDIC financial involvement to protect against the uncertainties" a new partner would face.

—Provide a quick loan of money to keep the bank going, the step the government took "to give the FDIC, bank management and prospective investors or merger partners the time needed to resolve the bank's difficulties in the most orderly manner possible at the lowest cost to the FDIC."

"We do not expect these funds to remain in Continental beyond the comparatively short period required to develop the permanent solution," Isaac said. "It is too early to predict, but it is certainly possible that the permanent solution will not result in any loss to the FDIC."

He said "much ado has been made" of the agency's public assurance that no depositor — no matter how big his account — would lose any of his money in Continental, no matter what eventually happened. But he said the infusion of billions of dollars would have had the effect of protecting those depositors anyway, so why not say so and end speculation?

Spokesmen for the nation's small banks — and some members of Congress, too — have said or implied that a federal bailout of Continental showed discrimination against smaller banks, where failure has meant big losses for depositors with accounts over the $100,000 insurance limit.

Isaac acknowledged that the FDIC had been using in some test cases a "modified payoff" procedure in which depositors over the insurance limit were indeed exposed to the risk of loss. But he said, "If we had employed the procedure at Continental, it would have entailed an abrupt change of policy on a massive scale and would have threatened hundreds of small banks which maintained, correspondent relationships with Continental as responsible under the well as thousands of other businesses around the world. circumstances, and small banks would have been among the principal victims."

Marijuana Grows On City Hall Steps

VINELAND, N.J. (AP) — This southern New Jersey town is proud of its produce, but officials weren't very pleased by the half-dozen 5-inch seedlings found growing among the geraniums in a flower pot on the steps of City Hall.

The miniature crop was marijuana, said police officers who confiscated the plants and now are searching for the gardener who tended the illegal weeds.

A security guard, Dominick Gervato, tipped police to the pot in the flower pot after a man attending a state class for those convicted of drunken driving told him of the plants Tuesday night.

"He says, 'I found marijuana in one of the plants out there,'" recalled Gervato. "I don't know what marijuana looks like anyway."

Vineland considers itself the eggplant and dandelion capital of the world.

Sometimes a technically inferior play could be your only hope. Even if it needs some help from your friends, the opponents.

Although the final contract cannot be faulted, South's method of getting there leaves a great deal to be desired. His hand was far too strong to reopen with a simple suit bid. He should first have doubled to show his strength. Then he would not have felt compelled to jump to game at his next turn to describe his hand.

West cashed two hearts and then shifted to a club. Declarer won in hand and led the jack of spades. West covered to "make sure" of a trump trick, and great was the fall thereon. Now declarer's only other loser was a trump. Making four-odd.

An expert kibitzer remarked that declarer had taken an inferior line. South's play of the jack of spades at trick two would succeed only against a singleton 10 with East and both higher honors with West. He pointed out the technically correct way to handle the suit was to lead to the ace in the hope of finding West with a singleton king or queen—that was twice as likely as hoping East held the singleton 10.

Declarer simply thanked him without even bothering to point out the fallacy of the kibitzer's logic. While it is true, in the abstract, the best way to play this spade combination is to lead low to the ace, that could not succeed here. West was virtually marked with a guarded spade honor, or the king-queen, for his opening bid, so declarer's lead of the jack could not cost. If the suit broke 2-2, it made no difference; if East did hold the singleton 10, it was the winning play. And it had the added advantage that, every now and then, some careless defender would cover from a holding such as West's!

GM Recalls 1980 Cars

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Environmental Protection Agency has ordered General Motors Corp. to recall about 550,000 1980-model cars whose emissions exceed federal standards on nitrogen oxides.

Models affected by the recall are the 1980 six-cylinder Buick Regal, Century, Century Wagon, LeSabre and Skyhawk; Pontiac LeMans, LeMans Safari Wagon, Grand Prix, Catalina, Bonneville, Firebird and Sunbird; Chevrolet Monza; and Oldsmobile Cutlass, Cutlass Supreme, Cutlass Wagon, Delta 88 and Starfire equipped with 231 cubic inch displacement (3.8 liter) engines.

California vehicles are not included in the recall.

GM will notify car owners subject to the recall. But it's not yet clear if the company will make the repairs free of charge for everyone. The automaker said it would limit free repair to cars are under 5 years old and have mileage under 50,000.

The EPA said it disagreed with GM's interpretation of its responsibility, and believes that the automaker must repair all the affected cars, regardless of their age or mileage. GM and EPA are already in court to settle the issue.

EPA said its investigation revealed that the cars exceed the government's 1980 standards because their exhaust gas recirculation systems are defective.

Valves which control the recycling of exhaust gas to reduce nitrogen oxides emissions were blocked with a carbon-like substance, EPA said. Vehicles on which the valves were blocked had average nitrogen oxides more than twice as heavy as the government standard.

Nitrogen oxides are formed in the air when any fuel is burned at high enough temperatures, with automobiles and electric utility and industrial boilers the principal sources, the EPA said.

Stroke And Heart Disease Top Killers

GENEVA, Switzerland (AP) — The World Health Organization says heart disease and stroke are the world's leading killers, causing 25 percent of all deaths.

Respiratory diseases like bronchitis, influenza, pneumonia and tuberculosis rank second, causing 18 percent of all deaths, according to the WHO annual report published Thursday.

The report said infectious and parasitic diseases, particularly diarrhea, rank third, causing 14 percent of deaths worldwide. Cancer ranks fourth, causing 9 percent of all deaths.

The 800-page report also said life expectancy worldwide ranges from 35 to more than 70 years, the lowest being in such countries as Chad, Central African Republic, Gambia, Senegal and Upper Volta. Longer life expectancy rates were reported in industrialized countries, peaking in Japan and Switzerland. The longest life expectancy is for women in Japan, at 79.6 years.

PBS Show Explores Drive By Blacks To Gain Control

By TOM JORY
Associated Press Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — "Power and Prejudice in America" is an even-handed though overly ambitious examination of an election-year subject that is made particularly topical by the Rev. Jesse Jackson's campaign for the Democratic presidential nomination.

The hour-long, independently made documentary, on public television Monday night, focuses on the efforts of black activists in rural Quitman County, Miss., to wrest control of local government from minority white officeholders.

The film is deficient in its failure to explore in depth the reasons why only two of 11 black candidates won county office in Mississippi's statewide elections in 1983.

Ignorance and intimidation are blamed for the dismal performance at the polls, but we've heard that before. "Power and Prejudice in America" doesn't really demonstrate how those forces work, though there is a lot of talk about them.

The only ones who can really tell us how are the people who didn't vote, and no one seems to have talked with them.

Instead, the documentary attempts to cover too much ground, wandering north to Chicago and Philadelphia and Cambridge, Mass., and waxing academic to consider social, cultural and even physiological theories (that last one discredited) of racial distinction.

Those shortcomings aside, "Power and Prejudice in America" is a worthwhile and largely effective exercise that, with one exception, is at its best on location in Quitman County.

The Rev. Carl Brown, a black community leader in Quitman, summarizes the issue at hand in the opening scene:

"Our basic problem right now is the threat of loss of power. We're beginning to see racism resurge, basically not because of intermarriage, but it's simply a threat of loss of power, the idea, 'If you take over, you're going to do us like we done you.'"

No white politician will admit that. Instead, Harold Chrestman, a county supervisor for 28 years, declares, "Some of the best neighbors I ever had was colored people. ... I don't mistreat one of them. I don't sass one of them."

You wouldn't think that sort of benevolence would be enough to re-elect Chrestman over a black challenger, but he does ultimately win another term.

Karen Thomas, who produced and directed "Power and Prejudice in America," talked with plenty of people, and most of them had something worthwhile to say. "As you get closer to an election ... where blacks are coming to power," says pollster Patrick Caddell, "whites, even whites who are not racist, become nervous ... and they end up voting for the white candidate."

Still, it seems as if someone in Quitman County could have told us that, and more graphically.

The exception mentioned above takes viewers out of Quitman County to Chicago, where Leanita McClain, at the time a columnist for The Chicago Tribune, recalls the election of Harold Washington, a black, as mayor of that city:

"Before, I had thought I might live to see this Utopia, this checkerboard neighborhood of everybody living quite normally. And I think what astounded me about the Chicago election is that it's not going to happen in my lifetime. It may well not happen in my children's lifetime."

Miss McClain, the first black member of the Tribune's editorial board, was found dead at her home in May, an apparent suicide. A former colleague said the 32-year-old columnist had experienced occasional depression because of the strain of "serving as a role model for so many young women across the nation."

She had written after Washington's election of her shock at the reaction of white colleagues: "I've been crushed by their inability to share the excitement of one of 'us' making it into power. ..."

Miss McClain's emotionally wrought reflection on Washington's triumph on "Power and Prejudice in America" is only marginally related to the events in Quitman County, but it's particularly poignant in light of her own personal tragedy.

Directors Strike Possible In July

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — The Directors Guild of America is gearing up for a possible strike that could halt production at major and independent film studios and disrupt programming at the major television networks.

With the directors contract set to expire June 30, insiders say the 7,000-member DGA and the Alliance of Motion Picture and Television Producers are far apart on a cue card full of economic and work-related issues.

The Directors Guild has formed a strike preparation committee headed by actor Jackie Cooper. Tracking down and disciplining members who cross picket lines would be Clint Eastwood, director-star of "The Enforcer," and Sam Peckinpah, who directed "The Wild Bunch."

Unlike the actors and writers guilds, the Directors Guild has never struck the alliance, which represents the major film studios and more than 200 independents, and the major TV networks, ABC, CBS and NBC.

The networks could be forced to resort largely to reruns in the event of a strike. A prolonged walkout could delay the start of the fall season.

"The employers seem determined to push us to the wall. While we continue to be flexible, there are certain items we cannot and will not concede. They are important for generations to come," said Directors Guild president Gilbert Cates.

Deficiencies Cited For Blood Ailments

WASHINGTON (AP) — Getting the full, recommended amounts of calcium and other nutrients in a balanced diet may keep people from getting high blood pressure even with unrestricted use of salt, say Oregon researchers.

In a report published Friday in the journal Science, the researchers say high blood pressure, or hypertension, is more closely associated with deficiencies in certain nutrients than with excesses of others, such as sodium.

Researchers from Oregon Health Sciences University say a study based on statistics from a federal health survey indicates "calcium was the nutrient for which reduced intake was most consistent in hypertensive individuals."

A finding which indicates an inverse relationship between salt or sodium intake and blood pressure stirred immediate controversy among hypertension experts.

The report said there is evidence that high sodium intake results in lower blood pressure, contrary to what other human and animal studies have concluded for decades.

Dr. David A. McCarron and coworkers said their findings "raise the important question of whether sodium restriction is routinely advisable in many hypertensives."

McCarron said in an interview that mounting evidence indicates calcium may mediate the role of sodium in hypertension, and he called for experts to re-examine the relationship between sodium and the disease.

"I don't want people to go out and eat a lot of salt now," he said, "but if they eat a balanced diet with the right amounts of dairy products, fruits, vegetables and fresh meats, there is a possibility that the sodium will have no effect (on blood pressure)."

Other blood pressure experts, however, said the results should be interpreted "with extreme caution" and advised against normal or hypertensive people adding more salt to their diets.

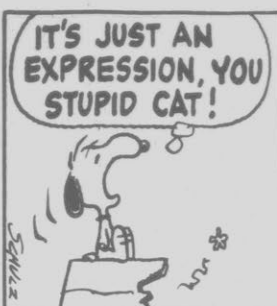

"This is just one study and I could fill a room with other studies that show a definite relationship between high salt intake and increased blood pressure," said Dr. William T. Friedewald, head of the National Heart, Lung and Blood Institute's division of epidemiology and clinical applications.

"The public should continue trying to lower the salt in their diets and not change their habits based on one study," Friedewald said.

Dr. Antonio M. Gotto of Baylor University, president of the American Heart Association, said in an interview that he would not advise hypertensive patients on reduced-salt diets to try to decrease their blood pressure simply by raising calcium levels.

"This is a preliminary study and, as the authors point out, one cannot conclude from a statistical association that there is a cause-effect relationship," he said.

The Real Lady Lindy

Anne Morrow Lindbergh, the wife of aviator Charles Lindbergh, was born on this day in 1907. Despite her husband's fame, she despised publicity. She would often disguise herself in public or hide on the floor of her car to avoid reporters. Ironically, the nickname "Lady Lindy" referred not to her but to famed woman aviator Amelia Earhart who was said to look much like Charles Lindbergh.

Floods May Not Affect Food Prices

By MICHAEL BATES
Associated Press Writer

Spring rains that flooded more than 6 million acres of farmland in six Midwestern states caused damage to farmers expected to exceed $1 billion, but should have little immediate impact on food prices, state and federal agriculture officials say.

Crops washed away by up to 16 inches of rain in the last two weeks represent only a small portion of the corn, soybeans and sorghum planted nationwide, according to the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

The flooded acreage represents only about 4 percent of the estimated 82 million acres of corn, 65 million acres of soybeans and 15 million acres of grain sorghum expected to be planted this year, according to the state-federal Crop and Livestock Reporting Service.

But on the Chicago Board of Trade, the nation's major commodities market, the price of soybeans for July delivery rose 3 to 17 cents to close at $8.07 1/4 a bushel Thursday after the Department of Agriculture indicated that a shortage was developing.

State agriculture officials warn they won't be able to make an accurate assessment of flood damage until the water recedes — a task made more difficult as up to 2 1/2 more inches of rain fell Thursday on parts of South Dakota.

"It'll be some time before we really know," said Morris Westfall, director of Missouri's Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service. "But we are expecting devastating damage" for farmers. He agreed with the USDA, however, that the flooding would have little impact on supermarket prices.

The scene was grim in the waterlogged countryside as many farmers hired pilots to spread seeds in areas that can't be reached by tractors and officials warned of severe erosion of valuable topsoil.

"We're going to have erosion problems wherever there's a lot of runoff," said Ron Larson of the South Dakota Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service. "Even though it was farmed in the contour, the ground was so saturated and the rain is coming so fast it's just breaking right through the contour strips."

Larson estimated that 50 percent of the 2 million acres of corn and soybeans that farmers in 20 southeastern South Dakota counties said they intended to plant either won't get seeded or has been washed out and will not be replanted.

One western Iowa county reported losses of up to 200 tons of topsoil per acre. A loss of 10 tons per acre is considered excessive, according to conservation officials.

In Holt County, Mo., an estimated $30 million in damage has been caused after runoff from the Missouri River and its tributaries turned 75,000 acres of farmland into waist-high sea.

Five northwest Missouri counties — Holt, Buchanan, Atchison, DeKalb and Andrew — were declared disaster areas Thursday by President Reagan, making residents there eligible for grants and low-interest loans to rebuild.

Similar scenes were repeated elsewhere in the Missouri Valley as the runoff-choked river has swelled to nine miles wide in places.

"We were virtually saturated and got 16 more inches of water," said Iowa climatologist Paul Waite. "This is probably the rainiest spell since 1947."

Iowa officials estimate 84,000 acres of Brown County corn and grain sorghum sustained losses of 25 to 30 percent, with 51,000 acres of soybeans recording likely to be 40 percent loss.

Graydon Anderson, head of the U.S. Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service, estimated that Iowa farmers will lose $600 million worth of crops. The impact on related businesses could push the losses past $1 billion, said Duane Skow, of the U.S. Statistical Reporting Service.

Daryl Meyer, general manager of the Brown County Co-op Association in Hiawatha, Kan., said longtime farmers have told him the damage is even worse than that caused by a devastating 1951 flood.

"From what the farmers say, we've never seen the kind of flood damage we've got now," Meyer said. "And that goes back a lot of years — even some years when we didn't have the kind of conservation efforts we have now."

While government officials wait for drier weather to complete damage estimates, farmers wonder if they have time to plant or replant their spring crops.
