Local Democratic Leaders Like Ferraro

By CAROL BLACKLEY TYER
Reflector Staff Writer

Local Democratic leaders seem pleased that Democratic presidential candidate-apparent Walter Mondale has chosen New York Rep. Geraldine Ferraro as his vice presidential running mate. So do Republican leaders.

Janice Faulkner and Betty Speir, both of whom are attending the Democratic Convention in San Francisco, said in interviews Friday they have met Ms. Ferraro and are impressed with her ability. Mrs. Faulkner, a member of the Democratic Platform Committee of which Mrs. Ferraro is chairman, said that, while working on the platform in meetings in Washington, D.C., she was aware of the knowledge and concern for people the woman has and that she likes her very much.

Mrs. Speir, who has been with Ms. Ferraro during two Democratic Party events in North Carolina, said, "Her being chosen is historic and I think she's one of the finest candidates we could have. Without even considering gender, she's an excellent candidate with a good background in government, a warm human being. I am especially impressed with her ability as a speaker. She's really compelling."

Mrs. Speir said she's talked with many eastern North Carolinians since Ms. Ferraro's candidacy began being discussed and is "delighted with the fair-mindedness I've heard expressed."

"She comes from a district of hard-working middle class people," she added, "and that's not unlike eastern North Carolina. I think the ticket's going to do fine here."

First District Democratic Convention delegate Judy Sadler said, "I think she's most qualified and will be a great campaigner. Her vice-presidential candidacy will make for a very exciting convention."

Democratic leader Kenneth Dews said,"I didn't expect her to be chosen. But I guess having a woman as a major national candidate is an idea whose time has come. I think she's a very fine person, one who's come up the hard way and will have a feel for the people. I'm pleased."

Hal McKinney, vice chairman of the 1st District Republican Party, said, "I think the fact that Mr. Mondale has chosen a woman is fine, well and good. His problem is going to be this particular woman. I did some research on her voting record in Congress — she's 100 percent liberal. She's been in the forefront of every leftist cause there's been. This is going to hurt her in the South. Here in Pitt County, her record of voting against the tobacco program is also going to hurt her."

Republican Women's Club member Alice Mancini said, "I think she'll sink Mr. Mondale and I'm glad he picked her."

Mrs. Faulkner pointed out that there are 30 million women in the United States eligible to vote who are unregistered. She said she hopes having a female candidate for a major national office will serve as encouragement for many of them to get out and vote.

PLAYTIME AFTER STORM — Youngsters play in the water on Dickinson Avenue Friday afternoon after rains caused the underpass to flood. The flood forced traffic to be rerouted and some cars had to be pulled from the rising waters. According to Greenville Utilities nearly 1.2 inches of rain fell during the 24-hour period ending at 7 a.m. Saturday. (Reflector Photo by Tommy Forrest)

Manatt Out As Chairman

Mondale Stuns Party By Picking Bert Lance

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Walter F. Mondale moved to take charge of the Democratic Party structure Saturday by dumping Charles Manatt as party chairman and naming Georgia party chief Bert Lance as general chairman of his presidential campaign.

Persistent rumors that Lance would be named to Manatt's post sparked stirrings of rebellion among Democrats in this convention city soon after they started Friday night, but Mondale appeared to skirt the threat by stopping short of naming Lance as party chairman.

The very possibility of appointing Lance to head the party stunned some Democratic officials. "The Republicans are already running all over the United States talking about Carter-Mondale," said Texas party boss Bob Slagle. "This will just give them something else to talk about."

The hullaballoo intrigued campaign rival Gary Hart, whose aides produced names of delegates they claimed were ready to bolt from Mondale over the shakeup.

The Rev. Jesse Jackson, who arrived to a welcoming rally, said, "It appears to be another case of too few people making too many decisions.

"I was not given the courtesy of consultation in this latest Chuck Manatt-Bert Lance fiasco," Jackson said in an interview on NBC-TV. "I would hope that the Mondale camp would take into more account the role that Gary Hart and I must play if we are to leave San Francisco unified and strong."

Two delegates announced quickly they were abandoning Mondale for the ranks of the uncommitted — Nebraska national committeewoman DiAnna Schimek, who said she would try to encourage her state's other 11 Mondale delegates to follow her lead, and Richard Koster, head of the five-vote delegation representing Democrats living in Latin America.

Lance himself switched his allegiance to Mondale from uncommitted, and that still left Mondale with nearly 2,100 delegates, more than the 1,967 needed to win the nomination.

At a news conference in the yard of a vacation home in Lake Tahoe, Mondale commended Manatt for his "superb leadership of our party" but said he nonetheless would exercise his option as the presumed Democratic presidential nominee to replace Manatt by the end of the week.

He called Lance "an old friend and supporter."

The announcement came after Mondale met with Lance, former President Carter's budget director who resigned amid questions about his financial dealings.

"It's time for new leadership," Mondale said when asked why he was replacing Manatt. "It in no way reflects on Mr. Manatt."

Lance, standing by Mondale's side, said, "I am excited by this opportunity."

Asked if he was concerned that the allegations of past financial irregularities could become a political issue again, Mondale replied, "I consider myself a good judge of character. ... Bert Lance is a very, very fine human being with good values, a deep religious faith and a marvelous family."

Mondale said Lance would work with him in the search for someone to replace Manatt by the time the Democratic National Committee holds its post-convention session here Friday.

Lance's responsibility as general chairman of the Mondale campaign will include coordinating the activities of the Democratic National Committee, the House and Senate campaign committees and various local political committees.

In that way, it will be similar to the role being played in the Re-

Local Educators Say New Funding Will Help Schools

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

Local educators seemed pleased last week with what the General Assembly did in the way of funding for public schools before they adjorned July 7.

Lawmakers voted to set aside about $270 million in new money for education — about $185 more for each public school student — including a 15 percent pay hike for teachers, $1.2 million to pay math and science teachers during the summer, $5 million to buy a computer for every 100 students; $7 million for new science, math and vocational equipment; $1.4 million to teacher on-the-job training; $2 million for textbooks, and $2.1 million to develop standardized tests to measure student preformance.

The General Assembly also ordered the State Board of Education to devise a career ladder for teachers, to be tested by the 1985 school year and implemented statewide by 1986.

"I feel very good about the pay" Delma Blinson, Greenville school superintendent, said. "There is a general sentiment about the state that something significant needs to be done to attract and retain excellent teachers. I think the approximately 15 percent increase is a significant step in that direction."

Blinson said, "There are other things that still need to be done and the General Assembly did speak to some of these, such as reduced class size in grades 4 through 6. However, there are some things that still need to be done to improve professionalism of teachers."

The superintendent said additional resources are needed to help teachers "be able to do a better job; for example, reducing the paperwork demands that take time away from the actual teaching process."

Reducing the class size in grades 4 through 6, from one teacher per 30 students to one teacher for each 26, takes effect in the fall. And Blinson said that the Greenville school system "will probably receive four or five additional teachers" as a result of the legislation.

Blinson cited the mandated career ladder as "one of the most significant things," describing the career ladder as the "concept of having four or five classifications of teachers. They start out at one level and then, after a number of years and increased competency, move on to another level" with the ultimate level that of "master teacher."

He said the career ladder "allows teachers to advance within the profession" in a way similar to the system in higher education which has instructors, assistant professors, associate professors and full professors.

"Another significant action," according to Blinson, was legislative approval of a bill to improve math and science instruction by "providing additional terms of employment for some math and science teachers ... money for math and science materials and equipment ... money for some computers in the schools"

Plowshares Trial Yields Conviction

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — Eight members of an anti-nuclear group known as the Pershing Plowshares were found guilty Saturday of breaking into a Martin Marietta defense plant and damaging Pershing II missile components.

A federal jury deliberated one hour and 40 minutes before reaching the verdict against two women and six men, each who whom was charged with two counts of conspiracy and damaging government property. U.S. District Judge George Young set a sentencing for July 25.

Each defendant faces a maximum 15 years in prison and a $20,000 fine.

Members of the group broke into the Orlando defense plant early Easter Sunday and vandalized the facility by damaging missile components with hammers and smearing blood over a Patriot missile launcher.

"I believe that under the evidence, it's the only true verdict they could have rendered and been faithful to their oath," said prosecutor Tom Turner. "The evidence is quite clear. These people damaged government property, and they did so intentionally."

"This is the first step in a process," said defendant Patrick O'Neill, 28, of Greenville, N.C., after the verdict. "To change the process of slavery took a long time. And to change the laws that permit us to prepare for our own mass suicide will take a while, too."

The other defendants are Per Herngren, 22, of Sweden; James Perkins, 45, of Baltimore; Sister Anne Montgomery, 57, a Roman Catholic nun from New York City; Cristin Schmidt, 24, of Baltimore; Tim Lietzke, 32, of Richmond; and Paul Magno Jr., 27, and Todd Kaplan, 26, both of Washington, D.C.

After the verdict, juror Margaret Lee asked the nun how she could

By LORETTA GRANTHAM
Reflector Staff Writer

The U.S. Supreme Court's July 3 ruling in a Minnesota lawsuit states, in effect, that the Jaycees can be required to admit women as full members under certain state laws.

This decision, while currently affecting only the state of Minnesota, could one day make single-sex organizations a thing of the past. Several local mens' club presidents commented on the issue.

Jack Myers, president of the Greenville Jaycees, said "the ruling was based partly on Minnesota's public accommodations law" so he does not think it will really affect Greenville.

Jaycees in some states allow women to be associate members, Myers said, but associates are not given voting privileges as are full members.

"Our group will follow whatever the state organization decides," he said.

As far as allowing women to participate is concerned, Myers said, "In my opinion, it would change some of the ways of the club. There'll be men who resign on the day we admit a woman, but then there'll be others who won't mind. It'll take time to get over any initial resistance."

Walt Kitchen, president of the Greenville Host Lions Club, also mentioned the possibility of "initial resistance" from members if they were forced to allow women in the group.

"Of course," Kitchen said, "we'd comply with any decisions made by Lions International rather than have our charter revoked."

He said the Lions Club is a service organization dedicated to "preserving eyesight through the prevention and treatment of blindness and public education." When asked if female members would affect this goal, Kitchen said, "No, absolutely not. I can't see any change at all in the club purpose because of women."

Don Edwards, president of the Noon Rotary Club, provided a prepared statement from Rotary International which summerized several differences between the purpose and procedures of the Rotary Club and Jaycees. These differences allow the Rotary Club to continue operating without any changes in the membership rules.

For example, Carlos Canseco, president of Rotary International, said in the statement, "Rotary is a men's fellowship whose purpose is service. It is not a business or public accommodation. By policy, it is not political. Rotary prohibits a member from seeking any business or professional advantage from his membership."

Edwards mentioned the Rotary Club in Duarte, Calif., which lost its charter for permitting a woman to join in violation of Rotary's constitution. He said the Greenville Noon Rotary Club, therefore, supports the stance of not allowing females to join.

"If our club admitted a woman," Edwards concluded, "we'd run the risk of having our charter revoked by Rotary International."

What if womens' clubs were required to include male members? Ann Hefflefinger Barnhill, president of the Greenville Pilot Club, said she does not see a problem if any man interested in joining is willing to uphold the purpose of the group, which is to promote community service and strong professional and business ethics.

Mrs. Barnhill stressed that the court ruling does not say a group must alter its goals or structure, and the Pilot Club is an organization "for professional women."

"I don't know if we'd ever find a man interested in promoting our goals since we're a women's club," Mrs. Barnhill said. "I mean there are basic differences there that men and women experience in the working world."

She said if there was an individual willing to join the club because of his determination to support and work for the goals of the group, then he would probably be accepted. "Every club would be glad to get a member like that," she said.

Asked whether Carter had played a role in his selection of Lance, Mondale replied, "I told him about an hour ago what I was going to do."

Mondale said he talked to Manatt three or four days ago and told him he planned to make a change in the party leadership.

Asked who would prevail should a conflict arise between Lance and the new Party chairman, Mondale said, "the chairman of my committee will be very, very influential."

Mondale campaign manager Bob Beckel had said before Mondale's announcement that Lance was being interviewed because he has strong political credentials in the South, which Beckel said is "very critical to us" for a November victory.

Lance "helped us enormously" to recover from Mondale's early primary setbacks and win the South, Beckel said. "Mr. Mondale has an enormous amount of admiration for Mr. Lance, as do those of us who have worked with him closely," he said.

While it is traditional for the party's new presidential nominee to install the party chairman of his choice, Democrats appeared startled that Mondale chose to make the move even before the nominating convention convenes Monday.

Rep. Thomas S. Foley, D-Wash., the assistant House majority leader, said of the Manatt ouster, "People who have admired the work of Chuck Manatt obviously have some concern."

Big labor, whose support was essential to Mondale's drive for the nomination, also appeared cool to talk of Lance assuming a major role.

The chief spokesman for AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland refused to describe Kirkland's feelings about the possibility that Lance would head the party.

"We were not consulted and we were not involved," said spokesman Murray Seeger. "Lane did not talk to Mondale about this."

Southerners, though, appeared pleased.

Gov. William Winter of Mississippi, a candidate for the Senate, said, "I just believe anybody (from the South) who represents a position of leadership in the party and-or on the ticket will add strength in the South. ... Bert Lance would be well received in my state."

When Mondale named Rep. Geraldine Ferraro as his running mate last week, some Democrats suggested that the choice might hurt the ticket's chances this fall in the conservative South. Naming Lance to a top position would be a way to eliminate some of those concerns.

Lance was nominated by Carter, a friend and political ally, as chief of the White House Office of Management and Budget in January 1977. He later became the target of investigations into his banking practices at the Calhoun National Bank and the National Bank of Georgia, both of which he headed.

After a series of Senate hearings, Lance resigned in September 1977. A jury cleared him in 1980 of nine charges of bank fraud and bank fraud conspiracy, and the Department of Justice later moved to dismiss three other charges.

Traffic Accidents Cause 3 Deaths

By The Associated Press

Three people have been killed in traffic accidents in North Carolina this weekend, including a Tennessee man whose car rolled over on top of him, the state Highway Patrol reports.

Rick P. Cain of Nashville, Tenn., died when his automobile smashed through a guard rail, went down an embankment and overturned, throwing him from the car, the patrol said. The accident occurred at 6:35 a.m. Saturday in Polk County on Interstate 26, two miles west of Columbus.

The patrol said Robert Vernon Pyatt, 59, of Marion was killed Saturday morning in an accident on U.S. 70 east of Marion. Pyatt's car ran off the road and struck a culvert, throwing him from the vehicle, according to reports.

Friday night, 48-year-old Lula Pitman of Bakersville was killed when her car was struck by another vehicle on a wet N.C. 226 north of Spruce Pine.

"How dare you, sister ... stand in front of the court and say you're a Roman Catholic nun. I'm sorry, sister, people judge you for your words and actions," said Ms. Lee, who is also a Roman Catholic.

"From our hearts we followed our conscience," Sister Montgomery said.

The group, which has claimed it never intended to break the law but rather make a point, has used as its defense the argument that nuclear weapons are immoral and illegal.

The defendants admitted throughout the trial that they broke into the plant by cutting through a chain-link fence. They then broke down a door and entered a building where Pershing II missile components are manufactured.

The judge repeatedly warned the defendants not to use the courtroom as a "political forum" and told the jury that nuclear arms were not the issue at stake in the case.

as well as "additional money for vocational education and exceptional children."

Pat Minges, a teacher at Eastern Elementary and president of the Greenville chapter of the North Carolina Association of Educators, stressing she was speaking for herself and not for the NCAE, said "I feel good about what the Legislature has done overall. They made the biggest step foward in education since the Terry Sanford administration ... a great commitment."

But Miss Minges said said she is "concerned with the mandated career ladder plan that must be developed, piloted and implemented by 1986."

"It's not the plan itself," Miss Minges said, but rather concern that there "may not be enough time to develop it properly."

Betsy West, a teacher at Elmhurst School, said "I was pleased ... (I) feel like education received its fair share and feel (the General Assembly) has done what they said they would do for us (teachers).

"I'm at the top of the pay scale ... frozen at the top. I feel like we've got to have something like this (the career ladder)" so salaries will go up.

A teacher at Wahl-Coates School, Mary Rose Stocks,said, "As a teacher, I can say we surely do appreciate the effort of our law-making body in Raleigh."

Suggesting a career ladder is needed, Mrs. Stocks expressed the hope that "the proper people that understand the educational system will be the ones to develop the career ladder," which she said should "serve as a positive approach to the educational problems of today.

"Citizens are aware, I feel, that training of children today will make them better citizens tomorrow ... a productive member of society. That is what education is about, and I feel good about what they've (the General Assembly) done."

SCLC To Meet In Charlotte

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Calling North Carolina a "pivotal state," Southern Christian Leadership Conference president the Rev. Joseph Lowery officially announced the group's national convention will be held in Charlotte next month.

Lowery, speaking at a news conference, said North Carolina was an example of a troubled present and a bridge to a better future.

The timing of the SCLC's convention, scheduled for Aug. 15-18, could hold significant consequences for the November elections.

"The black leadership will come to chart its course" and reaction to the party platform following the Democratic convention, Lowery said.

Among those expected to attend are Democratic presidential hopeful Jesse Jackson, Atlanta Mayor Andrew Young and NAACP Executive Director Benjamin Hooks.

Lowery said also he will invite apparent Democratic presidential and vice presidential nominees Walter Mondale and Rep. Geraldine Ferraro to address the convention.

Gene S. Baker for Superintendent of Public Instruction
North Carolina needs new leadership for education. That leadership will be provided by Gene Baker. He is an experienced educator -- currently Principal of Belfast Elementary School in Goldsboro. Gene and his wife, Nancy, and their three children live in Goldsboro. He is a deacon and teacher at Glen Royal Baptist Church.
•Schools lacked adequate funding for textbooks, instructional materials and capital improvements.
•SAT and Achievement scores ranked near the bottom.
•Education's share of the General Fund had fallen from 60% to 42%.
As Superintendent of Public Instruction, Gene Baker will work to promote better discipline, self-esteem, patriotism and respect for authority in our schools. He will work to keep control of education at the local level and to restore pride and integrity to the educational profession.

Sunday Opinion

ECU Shortfall Leads To Major Improvements

East Carolina University officials were pleased. The official notification had come that the National Council for Accreditation of Teacher Education had restored full accreditation for teacher education programs.

The NCATE had raised questions about the governance structure of the ECU teacher education program in 1983. While university officials felt that nothing was wrong with the quality of the teacher education program, it was clear that structural changes had to be made to retain accreditation. That has been done and accreditation was restored retroactive to the 1983-84 academic year and effective through September 1990.

Certification of ECU teacher graduates was never in question and Dr. Charles Coble, dean of the school, said the problem was the governance structure which was decentralized into departments. Creation of a Council for Teacher Education and the appointment of Dr. Coble as director of teacher education answered that objection.

East Carolina, historically a teacher training institution, has the largest teacher training program in the state. Consequently it was not to the liking of administrators that the accreditation was in question.

Neverthless, Dr. Angelo Volpe, vice chancellor for academic affairs, said the long-range effect of the accreditation process has been excellent. "We're more procedurally strong than we've ever been, and we're going to continue to improve our programs," he said.

That is what the accreditation process is all about — to build stronger programs within the university.

Sunday Morning Notes

As usual it was a hot day for the visit to Virginia's King's Dominion. For the 4 year old the trip was a dream come true, with all the Smurfs, Flintstones, and other various cartoon friends available for a hug and photo session. Even some that were supposed to be real humans began to look like the cartoon variety.

Getting there at the opening for the regular day of business can be hazardous to your health. It's a wise choice to ride to the top of the Eiffel Tower replica and make out a strategy for the day's events and also get a bird's eye view of the smallest crowd.

Once you get into the ride areas comes the long wait, especially for some of the more popular rides such as the Shenandoah Log Flume and the White Water Canyon. For those who have small children, you are aware of the rides that are not for the small fry. The staff at this park seem to have an answer to the problem as to whether "junior" will fit or be tossed out of the ride. A small painted figure, usually "Boo Boo" or "Yogi Bear," at the entrance of the ride says "If you are shorter than I am, you can't ride." Wouldn't you know it, our 4 year old just came a half-inch under a couple of them. On the other end of the scale, a few rides designed for the small youngster had signs which said, "If you are larger than I am you CAN'T ride" Well, that left me out. I was really looking forward to the Captain Skyhook ride.

Next stop was the Wild Animal Safari Monorail. The monorail train was one of the only rides that had an air-conditioned coach. After a 45-minute wait (which was worth it), we loaded ourselves along with three other couples. The voice came over the PA system welcoming everyone to the exhibit. A lady sitting in front of us said, "You will notice the two exit doors to the right and left, and the oxygen mask will come down in case of decompression." The commentary was, of course, a take-off on the commercial plane flights taken by some of the riders.

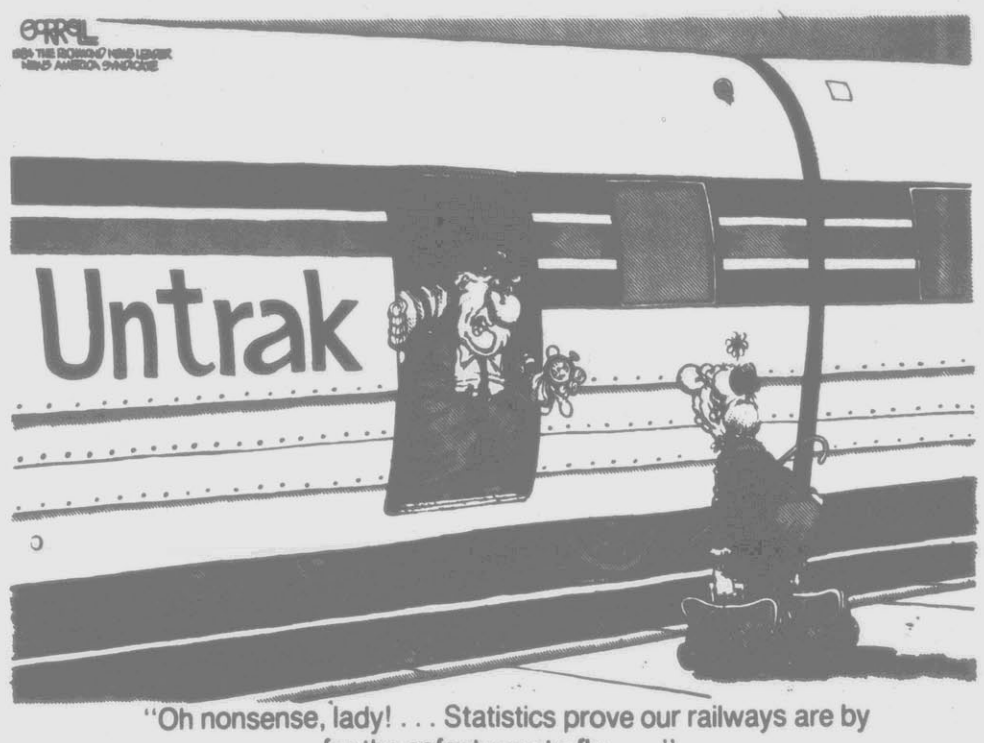

The safari ride made for some good photos, and it was a thrill for the youngsters on the ride to see live animals. Many of them left their marks on the windows, the point of a nose print or 10 almost perfect fingerprints.

The Giant Slide was another attraction which many smaller children liked. It's like a giant water slide minus the water. The waxed fiberglass surface and what appears to be a burlap sack is all that is needed to slide to the bottom. One small child who rode down with her father came to a halt at the bottom with a surprising frown. Her father leaned over and a sympathetic note asked, "Well, didn't you have fun?" The small child replied, "Am I laughing?"

I guess that summed up her feelings.

As the day wore on and it finally came time to leave, it was noticed on our way out a booth for "Lost Parents." We didn't get lost, but it was nice to know it was there.

The trip was well worth the time and money to see the smiles on a child's face when "Papa Smurf" gave her a big hug. The photo now hangs proudly in her room.

Local Blue Law Raises Few Hackles

What about Greenville's Blue Law?

The City Council conducted a hearing last week considering the possibility of doing away with it. A number of merchants appeared to suggest that the Blue Law be kept. There were a few persons there who spoke in favor of abolishing the Blue Law (which prohibits the sale of some items and the operation of some businesses on Sundays) but hardly was there an outpouring of public indignation against the Blue Law.

The comments heard at the public hearing would give the appearance that we have brought together the best of two worlds — one in which consumers have adequate shopping potential available to them on Sundays, but in which traditional stores don't have to stay open because the law says so.

We would judge the Greenville Blue Law to be unfair to some businesses and some customers. Certainly it is an archaic law which has been voted out by some neighboring communities. But given the fact there was no great demand from the public or businesses which are restricted from opening on Sundays, we would not be surprised to see the City Council follow the adage, if it isn't broke, don't fix it.

Younger Voters Left In The Cold

WASHINGTON — A sullen Ralph Nader met in San Francisco the other day with several of his longtime associates to determine what issues would prompt young adults to vote this fall. What they discovered was a large array of gripes with which to challenge Ronald Reagan and Congress, but also a distressing absence of motivation among students.

Indeed, while college-age Americans have plenty to gripe about these days, playing to younger voters won't be of principal concern to the major parties as they conduct their quadrennial galas.

This isn't to say that both conventions will be wholly geriatric affairs. Approximately 5 percent of all Democratic convention delegates, and 2 percent of the Republicans', were 25 or under in 1980. While these figures were a bit lower than in 1976, they have suggested that young Americans will play some sort of role in Dallas and San Francisco.

As a bloc, however, the younger members of each candidate's delegations will probably not be pressing student causes. Those causes will be irrelevant as usual, though not for any lack of beefs.

Perhaps the most topical issue is America's newfound passion for raising the drinking age. State legislatures around the country are scrambling to enact a uniform 21-year-old minimum now that Congress, with President Reagan's support, has linked it to highway construction funds.

Congress shrewdly waited until the bulk of U.S. campuses had emptied for the summer before agreeing to what was otherwise mom-and-apple-pie legislation. The higher-drinking-age lobby has successfully argued that drunken driving casualties have dropped in states where the age minimum has been raised.

But as one local student leader here contends, 99 percent of all drivers below the age of 21 in the District of Columbia have never been implicated for drunken driving. Taken as a microcosm of the national trend, that percentage suggests that most students have been unfairly penalized. Unfortuantely, the students' side of the issue isn't addressed in either party's platform.

Yet another would-be issue that is not addressed in either platform is the link between draft registration and federal aid to students, otherwise known as the Solomon amendment. With an almost 100 percent compliance rate, some people might not see any issue here.

But it took the Supreme Court to reverse a lower court's ruling that the Solomon amendment unfairly penalized non-registraints without due process of law. Some might view the high court's 5-3 vote as the amendment's last test. In our book, however, such a narrow margin underscores how students still have a point in contesting its constitutionality before individuals (congressmen, senators) empowered to make new law and policy.

Of course, some student concerns are addressed by the Democratic policy platform. Among them are a 23 percent reduction in grants in aid to education since 1980, acid rain and other environmental hazards, and the potential for an introduction of U.S. troops in Central America.

But the college-age American is more likely to be brought up in speeches than summoned to the dias. And that is because other, more vocal special-interests — Republican and Democrat — will have gotten there first.

The word is almost gospel among political candidates: Campuses are worth little more than the size of their lecture halls. For all their organizing, most college students don't vote.

But students will have their chance to speak across San Francisco Bay in Berkeley, where the National Conference on Registration and the Draft and Ground Zero California are sponsoring separate functions this weekend (July 14-15) at the University of California. If these and other alternative fora can help to transform latent anger into well-constructed protest, at least one major party may be more willing to treat the youth vote seriously.

If not, students could have no one to blame but themselves.

Reagan-Appointed Labor Board Changing Trend

WASHINGTON — Some interesting things have been happening lately at the National Labor Relations Board. We are seeking a remarkable manifestation of the maxim that the purpose of elections is not just to throw your rascals out, but to throw our rascals in.

Cynical as it sounds, the epigram makes sense. The presidential election of 1980 offered a choice not only of men but of political philosophies also. Jimmy Carter, Democrat, a moderate liberal, had the support of organized labor. He ran on a platform that contained a long section on "worker protection." Here the party pledged its support to the overthrow of state right-to-work laws, to the organization of public employees, and by clear inference to a pro-labor bias at the NLRB.

By contrast, Ronald Reagan, Republican, a staunch conservative, brought to the 1980 compaign a different cast of mind and a different body of attitudes. The GOP platform put great emphasis upon individual liberty, freedom of choice and free enterprise. In a section on "jobs and the workplace," the platform called for "a healthy business environment," for job creation in the private sector and for preservation of right-to-work laws. The Republicans acknowledged workers' rights to bargain collectively, but their platform made it evident that these rights must not be abused.

On these opposing views, Carter and Reagan went to the mat. And Reagan won.

That victory not only gave Reagan the right to implement his proclaimed policies; it positively obligated him to move in conservative directions. To his credit, Reagan has done exactly that. When the opportunity came along last year to replace NLRB chairman John Fanning, Reagan acted decisively. He named Donald L. Dotson to the chairmanship. Reagan also put Robert P. Hunter and Patricia Diaz Dennis on the board.

Creeping At Breakneck Speed

RALEIGH — Every legislative session, rank and file legislators, lobbyists and capital reporters get obsessed with two questions: Why's the Legislature moving so slowly? Why's the Legislature moving so fast?

These folks aren't in town two days at the beginning of a session when they're asking how long before the session will be over. In legislative chit chat, talk about adjournment is the social equivalent of talk about the weather. Tentative adjournment dates are scheduled and the assembly invariably fails to meet those dates. That's why people ask why everything is moving so slowly.

But as adjournment nears, the entire legislative process speeds up. Someone who has been sitting on a proposal for three months finally dumps it in the hopper and warns that the price of eggs will double if his 90-page bill isn't passed immediately. Everyone grumbles that bills are being ramrodded through without proper consideration. That's why people ask why everything is moving so quickly.

The reason for this contradiction is that the Legislature tried to do too much this session, says one of its leaders. Rep. Billy Watkins, D-Granville, says the June budget session would have adjourned after the scheduled three weeks if it had truly been just a budget session. "We had more heavy stuff than we've ever seen before in a short session," he said. By "heavy stuff" he meant major bills involving the inventory and intangibles taxes, interstate banking, intrastate phone calls, a phosphate ban, hazardous waste management and the bribery law.

The simple fact of the matter is that the 10-year-old system of alternating long and short sessions has come apart. The budget session has become an extension of the long session. "We had too many study commission reports on bills to the short session," Watkins said. Those study commissions, for the most part, were formed in the late days of the long session as a form of compromise. That is, folks couldn't get their proposals into law, but they got a study as a consolation prize. In the rush to get out of town in 1983, the compromisers created enough work for 1984 to ensure that "short session" would be a misnomer.

When the 1984 session opened, everyone expected to stay three weeks and go home. They stayed more than a month.

To the editor:
What is courage? It takes guts to have courage, and this is rare. I think those who possess this quality should be praised and commended.

Without the rare individuals who dared to be courageous, we could ask, "Would we are free Americans be preparing to celebrate our 400th anniversary, saluting our "Lady Liberty?" Sure, we all want to preserve the principles upon which this country was founded. None of us want communism at our doorstep. We're free to speak, choose and have the opportunity to become what we want. This is to me what America is all about. Our history books show that those who dared to be courageous enough to take a stand, to fight for truth, honesty, no matter what the cost, have gone down as playing the biggest roles in preserving "the land of the free and the home of the brave." Yet these individuals were criticized by many for being different, being forthright, for speaking the truth..

In this election year, perhaps a turning point in our history, Mrs. Eddie Knox dared to be courageous by speaking the truth, taking a stand, putting principle before party affiliation and publicly giving her support to Senator Jesse Helms. I believe she should be commended and praised for this. It takes guts, but it's time more free Americans turn to principle instead of partisan policy, examine the issues, take a stand for what is right for this state, for this country. We have that choice. Yet there are those who would try and strip people of this right by criticizing, twisting the facts, and falsely inferring untruths about Mrs. Knox or anyone else who would support a man of integrity like Senator Helms, just to obtain party satisfaction.

If the present Democratic Party is not a unity, look to why, and who — not to Mrs. Eddie Knox or to Senator Helms.

My hat's off to you, Mrs. Knox, for being you, for being different, for being courageous. We should have more like you.

To the editor:
There seems to be an attempt by the media to condition Americans to a dislike of Roberto d'Aubuisson, the conservative anti-communist candidate for president of El Salvador. D'Aubuisson's name is almost never mentioned without the dependent clause, "allegedly linked to right wing death squads," attached to it. "Linked" is a charge so vague as to be meaningless. These smears of d'Aubuisson appear to trace to a single source — the Carter Administration's radical Ambassador to El Salvador, Robert White. White's asssertion that he has "compelling evidence" that d'Aubuisson is a "pathological killer" is nonsense. According to the Wall Street Journal of Feb. 1, the House Intelligence Committee, Washington Post correspondent Christopher Dickey, a 1982 NBC documentary and even d'Aubuisson's main opponent in the election, Napoleon Duarte himself, examined White's so-called evidence and found it impossible to share his rabid views. White was further discredited when confronted by Arturo Muyshondt whom he claimed funded d'Aubuisson. He was forced to disavow his own report to escape a lawsuit.

The fact that Roberto d'Aubuisson and most of his associates have themselves been shot — many of them killed — tends to be studiously overlooked by the media.

A conservative anti-communist government was El Salvador's best hope of preventing eventual communist takeover, which will spell further trouble for the United States in this region — only a two-day drive from Texas.

Much has been made about Senator Jesse Helms' support for anti-communist d'Aubuisson. His opponent Napoleon Duarte's power base, with regard to financing and expertise, has always been outside El Salvador. Members of the Peace Corps helped organize his campaign for mayor of San Salvador. The support of the AFL-CIO, through its operations in El Salvador, was also vital to Duarte.

Duarte and his PCD party are left-leaning and will provide Moscow a prime target for further expansion in this area. I believe that, in time, we will wish we had had more senators in Washington supporting the anti-communist movements in neighboring countries.

To the editor:
In the June 21, 1984, edition of The Daily Reflector it was reported that Ike Baldree was to assume the principalship of D.H. Conley High School on July 1, 1984, and that Bob Carraway, principal of Conley High from its opening on Jan. 5, 1971, until June 30, 1984, would assume "another administrative position in the county."

I have anxiously awaited the newspaper article that would tell me what "administrative position" Mr. Carraway had assumed; but no news item related to this has been released by Dr. Edwin L. West Jr., superintendent of Pitt County schools. Is the reason no news item has been released due to the fact that the "administrative position in the county" that Mr. Carraway assumed or was transferred to is assistant maintenance supervisor for the Pitt County schools? Is there not a difference between an administrative position and a supervisory position? How can Dr. West transfer one of the best principals in Pitt County (and one of only three of 20 with the education specialist — Ed.S. — degree) to a supervisory position at the Maintenance Department? How can Dr. West justify putting a man with 21 years of successful educational and admnistrative service to Pitt County at the Maintenance Department? What effect is this transfer having on the morale of the hard-working men at the Maintenance Department, especially in light of the salary that is having to be paid for the assistant supervisor's position. Is this salary coming from the Maintenance Department's budget and also from local (Pitt County) tax dollars?

It is my belief that a man of Mr. Carraway's caliber, experience, and education should definitely be in a high-level administrative position, rather than in an assistant maintenance supervisor's position where he will have to spend the next six months gaining hands-on experience in maintenance before he can even function as assistant supervisor.

To the editor:
After reviewing local current events, I feel our area leaders need to be properly thanked for some of their actions.

First, I would like to recognize the Pitt County Board of Commissioners for their lack of vision in refusing to appoint tax districts for fire and rescue departments. Other counties in North Carolina have lifted the tremendous burden of fund-raising without the delay and expense of district elections. Not ours.

This same group of wise men, however, will shove the county into something as important and expensive to us all as school merger. We all know Greenville thinks of Pitt County as a "expanded tax base," and I suppose this is an easy way to get the taxes without having to go through expansion. I'm not sure I want the county and city school systems merged, and I feel this should be put to the Pitt County voters at the next election.

Next, I would like to express my appreciation to the good people at Pitt Memorial Hospital for a job well done. Almost every hospital in the area hides its Emergency Room somewhere in the back, but Pitt County goes beyond that and hides its Emergency Room so it's hard to find even if you know where it is. Now they are expanding the ER, and are not going to have a ramp to off-load patients. The excuse is, "That's the way it is at other large hospitals." Most of the area rescue personnel I know think this is as dumb as dirt.

Finally, I want to thank whatever was in charge of traffic for the July 4th fireworks display. Blocking the Greene Street Bridge southbound lane for 45 minutes was really cute.

Nancy Gains New Confidence

WASHINGTON (AP) — Nancy Reagan, who refused to give speeches during two presidential campaigns because the thought of it "scared me to death," has hired her own speechwriter and begun traveling around the country speaking out on drug abuse.

After a shaky start in the role of first lady, Mrs. Reagan's new willingness to accept invitations to be the keynote speaker at large convention gatherings is perhaps symbolic of her growing self-confidence and the White House belief that she has become the nation's foremost leader in the anti-drug crusade.

Asked through her press secretary to comment on her transformation, the president's wife replied: "In political life, which we've been in since 1966, you don't stay the same. You grow with new challenges and experiences.

"The more I've seen and heard, the more deeply I feel about drug abuse and the more I want to try to do what I can to solve this problem," Mrs. Reagan said. "It's so widespread and if that involves speaking to large audiences, then I'll speak to large audiences."

Does that mean the first lady, who so far has limited her speaking topic to drug abuse, also is ready to deliver political speeches this election year? "No, I'll leave political issues to my husband," she said. "He's the elected official." However, her growing association with the drug abuse issue is a political asset for her husband on its own.

Mrs. Reagan's press secretary, Sheila Tate, said the change in her boss was something that "logically happens to first ladies. When they get deeply involved in an issue, they lose any sense of self-consciousness or nervousness about addressing a group that size because they really do have something to say."

"I think it's called the first ladies' disease," Mrs. Tate volunteered. "All first ladies get bit by some kind of bug ... when they realize the power for good they have."

Though a former actress, Mrs. Reagan acknowledged she's a bit nervous "until I start speaking and see if I'm getting my message across."

Mrs. Reagan's debut into big-time speechmaking occurred very gradually. In her autobiography entitled, "Nancy," the first lady said that when her husband decided to run for governor of California in 1966, she wanted to help.

"But then the question arose, how? I had never made a speech in my life, and the thought of making one scared me to death. They said, 'You can stand up and take a bow, can't you?' I said I thought I could handle that, so that's what we settled for in the beginning."

Later, she began taking questions from the audience. But even after Mrs. Reagan got to the White House 3½ years ago, she spoke so slowly and haltingly when she greeted even relatively small groups that her staff quickly began preparing very brief remarks she could read.

After a year or so, the president's wife began making trips outside of the nation's capital to highlight her concern about the drug epidemic among youth. But she almost always chose situations — like greeting children informally in classrooms, or meeting with parents in a private home — where she would have to do little speaking.

"Speeches just seem to have gotten longer and longer," Mrs. Tate said. On occasion, the press secretary said, Mrs. Reagan would deviate a lot from her prepared remarks and then tell her staff she felt her speech hadn't been long enough. "She recognizes that a large audience and a keynote position require a major speech," she said.

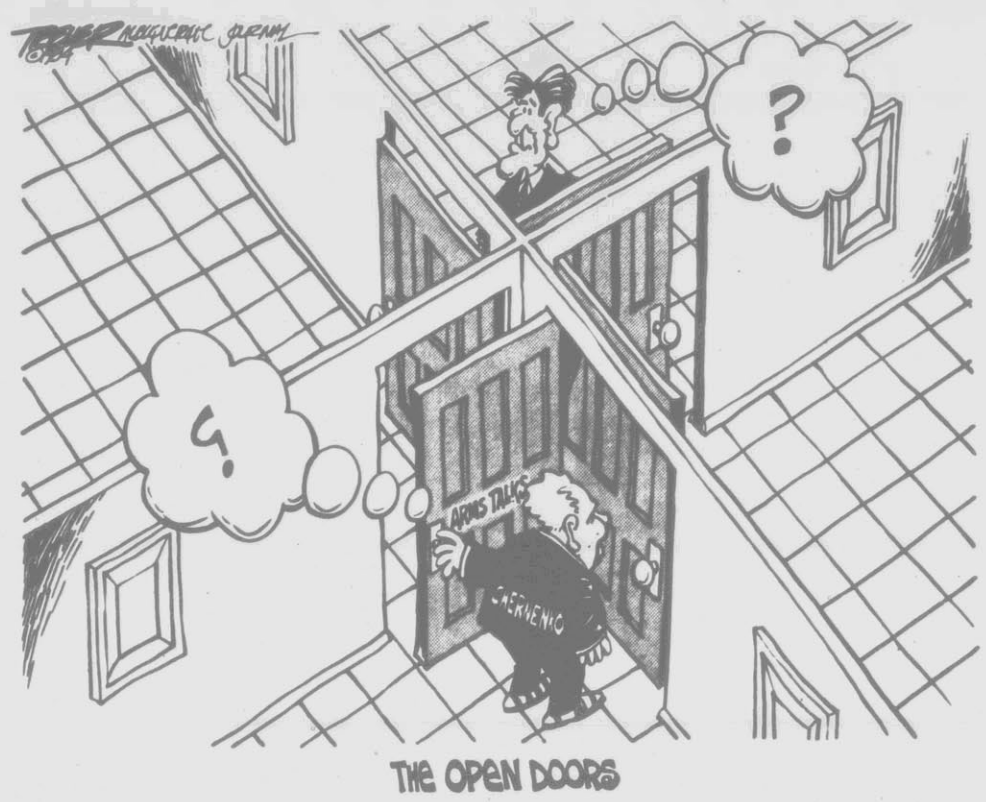

In April, Mrs. Reagan broke her old pattern by addressing audiences of a couple thousand each at a meeting of the National Association of Elementary School Principals in New Orleans and a session of the National Council of Alcoholism in Detroit.

In June, she addressed 6,000 members of the national PTA in Las Vegas, 12,000 Kiwanis conventioneers in Phoenix and, a week ago, 12,000 Lion's Club members in Las Vegas. All of her audiences have been active in the anti-drug movement.

Mrs. Reagan used her husband's stable of speechwriters until a month ago, when she hired her own: Mona Charon, who was recommended by the conservative columnist William F. Buckley Jr.

Mrs. Tate said the first lady gives the speechwriter a briefing on what she wants to say, gets a first draft and makes changes until the moment of delivery.

Problems From The Start

When he walked into the governor's office in the State Capitol that January day in 1953, Ed Rankin had more than his share of problems. It was the first working day of the administration of Gov. William B. Umstead, and Rankin was the new governor's private secretary. However, his boss had suffered a heart attack two days after his inauguration and was flat on his back in a Durham hospital.

Rankin, a former newspaperman who had gone into public relations work, was confronted with the task of organizing and running the governor's office while the chief executive slowly recuperated — in the hospital for several weeks and at the executive mansion for several months longer.

"For six weeks, the governor was flat on his back," Rankin recalled later. "We were operating blind. We couldn't burden him with the problems of the office. We simply had to stall for time."

Meanwhile, a restive Legislature was in session, anxious for details of the program Umstead had laid down in his inaugural address. As usual, state employees and officials were uneasy over the prospects of change at the start of a new administration. Umstead supporters were undecided and worried over the health of their chief.

In this uncertain atmosphere, Rankin and other key Umstead lieutenants put on a bold front while holding frequent councils of war to plot their next move. Participants in these sessions usually included W. Frank Taylor of Goldsboro, an attorney and former House speaker who served as Umstead's legislative counsel; John W. Umstead of Chapel Hill, the governor's brother and veteran legislator, and Rankin.

If anything, their problems increased when the governor swapped his hospital bed for one in the Executive Mansion. The governor was anxious to take over fully the reins of office and restive over the restrictions imposed by his doctors. His supporters and others importuned for the privilege of a bedside chat with the governor.

Through all the hurly-burly, Rankin remained unflappable. "I'll tell the governor what you said," he'd say to one caller. "I'll let you know what the governor says," he'd assure another.

"My problem early in the game was that I didn't know all the members of the Legislature and their relations to the governor," Rankin said. He recalled a man who questioned him about a report Umstead was considering naming a Republican to the State Board of Education. Rankin thought fast.

"I knew I had seen him around, but for the life of me I didn't know who he was," he related. So, he gave the reply that seemed natural for a staunchly Democratic governor:

"Why, you know Mr. Umstead wouldn't do a thing like that." The man's face fell. "Oh," he said. "I had hoped he would appoint me." He was a Republican legislator.

But the legislative field was the only important gap in Rankin's intimate knowledge of his boss. He had been a press secretary when Umstead was a U.S. senator and had criss-crossed the state with him during the hard-fought campaign in which Umstead lost the seat to J. Melville Broughton.

"That's how I was able to carry on while Mr. Umstead was sick," Rankin said. "I knew what he would have wanted me to do." But Umstead's death after 22 months in office and the succession of Lt. Gov. Luther H. Hodges changed all that.

Faced with dealing with a Legislature only two months later, Hodges asked Rankin to remain as private secretary, at least through the legislative session. Rankin agreed, and he and Hodges hit it off so well that he remained in the governor's office for five more years. He found Hodges in many respects the complete antithesis of Umstead.

Umstead "found it difficult to relinquish any responsibilities," Rankin said several years later in an interview. Hodges, on the other hand, "likes to delegate authority. He leaves me to run the office and he expects me to get things done."

Inevitably, during his long tenure with state government Rankin was mentioned in speculation as a possible candidate for governor. However, he told the Associated Press in a 1965 interview:

"I have never given it serious consideration. From time to time I have wondered how it would be to be in the governor's chair.

"I have had people talk to me about it. It certainly is a compliment," he added.

George Gallup

Poll

PRINCETON, N.J. — The enormous attention recently given drunken driving may have caused many Americans to become concerned about the hazards of driving and more attentive to safety measures.

1. More people today are buckling up, with 25 percent today compared with 17 percent two years ago saying they used a seat belt the last time they got into a car.

2. A growing number of Americans favor a law that would fine non-seat belt users, with 30 percent in the latest survey in favor of hitting offenders with a $50 fine, a law now in effect in New York State.

3. By a 2-to-1 ratio, Americans favor a law that would require all new cars to be equipped with air bags. Also, support slightly outweighs opposition, 50 percent to 44 percent, on a law that would require all new cars to have automatic seat belts.

4. The growing concern of Americans about auto safety is reflected in the fact that 79 perent favor a national law that would raise the legal drinking age to 21 in all states. Backers claim the law would significantly reduce drunk driving.

5. Gallup surveys over the last decade have shown that majorities of 70 percent or more consistently have favored keeping the present 55-mile-per-hour national speed limit.

A comparison of the latest and 1982 findings shows the recent increase in seat belt use to have been "across the board" — that is, about equally by age, sex and education.

Use in the West, however, has shot up from 24 percent two years ago to 35 percent today.

Air Bags Favored By 2-to-1

Air bags are favored by a 2-to-1 margin, 50 percent to 31 percent, with support highest among Easterners (71 percent) and persons 18 to 29 years old (75 percent).

The question about fining non-users of seat belts was asked in an in-person survey of 1,256 adults, 18 and older, interviewed June 29-July 1 in scientifically selected localities across the nation. The other questions are based on 1,516 in-person interviews, during the period May 18-21.

For results based on the smaller sample, one can say with 95 percent confidence that the error attributable to sampling and other random effects could be 4 percentage points in either direction. For the other findings the sampling error could be plus or minus 3 points.

New Insurance Package Is Making Lots Of Noise

NEW YORK (AP) — The life insurance industry traditionally likes to operate quietly and cautiously, but it has a new product that's beginning to make a lot of noise.

The item in question is universal life insurance, a package that combines standard death-benefit coverage with money-market investing.

It is already, as the Boston-based financial advisory firm of United Business Service describes it, "the most popular insurance product being offered today."

And it stands to get added impetus from the tax bill written by Congress this summer, which permits it to be treated the same way as conventional life insurance for tax purposes.

Prentice-Hall, publishers of tax information, says that means that "as long as a universal life policy meets the definition of life insurance in the new law, it gets all the tax breaks of a traditional whole life insurance policy." Among those benefits: No current federal income tax obligations as the policy's cash value builds up.

Despite its growing acceptance, there can be considerable confusion about what universal life insurance is, and what advantages it has to offer over other, older types of policies.

That confusion is understandable. Universal life is only one of several types of "new wave" policies that have appeared on the market in recent years.

Furthermore, the insurance industry itself has been generally reluctant to make too much of a fuss about it. Many companies have been wary of setting off a rapid flow of money out of conventional life policies, the financial foundation on which they rest, into the newer varieties.

But events — high returns on many kinds of money-market investments, financial deregulation, and increasing sophistication among savers and investors — have pushed universal life into the spotlight anyway.

Just how does universal life work? The American Council of Life Insurance says it "is designed to permit a policyholder to pay premiums at any time, in virtually any amount, subject to certain minimums.

"The policyholder can also change the amount of insurance more easily than under traditional policies. In a universal life insurance policy the amount the cash value increases each year reflects the interest earned on short-term investments."

That last point is particularly noteworthy. As in plain-vanilla whole life insurance, premiums paid by universal-life policyholders go partly to cover death benefits and the costs of the insurance company.

But whatever is left over, instead of being invested at a relatively low (and undisclosed) return, goes into a savings account that earns money market returns. The results achieved by that account are reported periodically to the policyholder.

On the horizon, United Business Service notes, is "Universal II," a proposed form of universal life that permits the money in the savings account to be invested in any one of several pools that work much like mutual funds. For example, policyholders might have the choice of a stock fund, a bond fund, a money-market fund, or some combination of the three.

This investment feature is now offered on a type of policy known as variable life. But variable life policies don't offer some of the other, flexible features of universal life.

Crashes Into Car Agency

Plane Avoids Collision, Kills 5

CONCORD, Calif. (AP) — An airplane that "banked real sharply" to avoid another plane slammed into a car dealership and exploded in flames Saturday, killing five people, witnesses and police said.

The plane, a twin-engine Cheyenne turbo-prop, crashed into the body shop and parts department of Shepherd Pontiac at 12:12 p.m. in Concord, about 35 miles east of San Francisco, said fire dispatcher Pete Alioto.

The plane was approaching Buchanan Field to land when the accident happened, said Bob Baldwin, area supervisor for the Federal Aviation Administration, said.

"It looked like (the pilot) decided not to land the first time and there was another plane coming, so he banked real sharply to avoid the other plane and as he banked his tail dropped and he went right down," said Diane Lister, a saleswoman at Concord Toyota about two blocks from the crash scene.

"I remember turning away and thinking the plane was too low and then I heard the crash," she added. "There was a big explosion and it burned fast and it burned hot. Those guys (at Shepherd) were real lucky.

"Fifty feet more and it would have landed right in the showroom. They would have been gone."

Baldwin said the plane can hold up to 10 people but that it was not immediately known if all the victims were in the plane.

Police said the victims included four adults and one child.

Tim Verducci, sales manager at Sun Valley Ford about a block from the crash scene, said that after the crash he heard "a couple of big booms. It hit a garbage bin first, then crashed into the building.

"Somebody said it flipped on its side as it approached the field, then hit the body shop, the parts department and the back of the main building. It damaged four or five new cars."

"There was kind of a mushroom shape as soon as it hit, a bunch of big pops," Verducci said. "The windows shook a little bit here."

Double Heart Transplant Fails

PITTSBURGH (AP) — A 50-year-old Vermont woman, one of two people to undergo back-to-back heart transplants last week, died Saturday, officials said.

The unidentified woman, who had suffered from chronic coronary artery disease, died of complications from the transplants at 2:35 a.m. at Presbyterian-University Hospital, said hospital spokeswoman Ann Metzger.

The woman underwent the double transplant during 14 hours of surgery Tuesday night and Wednesday morning, said Dr. Robert Hardesty, one of two surgeons who operated on her.

"The death was unexpected," Hardesty said Saturday. "We are uncertain as to the reason."

Hardesty said an autopsy was scheduled this weekend, but its results would not be available for several weeks.

Ms. Metzger said the woman's husband had asked that the patient's name and hometown not be disclosed.

In an operation ending July 8, Fred Davis, 35, underwent two heart transplants in Augusta, Ga. He was in serious but stable condition Saturday at the Medical College of Georgia.

Hardesty said the Vermont woman's first new heart was removed after signs of hyperactive rejection, a quick and fierce bodily rejection of the new organ.

The woman was put back on a heart-lung machine and another donor heart was quickly locacted in an undentified Maryland hospital, said Hardesty.

Hardesty picked up the donor heart at Dulles International Airport near Washington and returned to Pittsburgh, where the new heart was implanted about 7:30 a.m. Wednesday.

The woman was listed in critical condition until her death.

Warning Broadened

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Medtronic Inc. has issued an advisory to doctors, increasing to 32,250 the number of heart patients who should be monitored in case of failure of a pacemaker, a spokesman said.

The company sent letters to hospitals and doctors advising them to monitor 15,000 additional patients because the company's pacemakers' leads have been deteriorating at an unacceptably high rate, spokesman David Levy said Friday. Medtronic also asked physicians to return any of the leads, designated No. 6972, they have in stock.

The move Thursday was endorsed by the federal Food and Drug Administration, which in February ordered the recall of an earlier version of the lead.

Medtronic estimates 17,250 people are still using those units.

The suburban Minneapolis company had contended that modifications fixed the problem in leads produced after February 1982. But Medtronic later determined the modifications did not fix the more recent models.

A pacemaker lead is a coated wire running from the heart to a pulse generator implanted under a patient's shoulder. The lead carries a charge that controls the beating of the heart.

Marines Convicted

HONOLULU (AP) — Two Marines have been convicted of penetrating the Pearl Harbor Naval Base West Lock weapons depot, the Navy said.

Lance Cpl. Joe McWilliams, 25, of Staten Island, N.Y., and Pvt. Gregory W. Pratt, 20, of Moline, Ill., said they penetrated the zone May 6 to test the readiness of guards at the site.

The pair climbed two perimeter fences, ran undetected across a lighted field, then climbed a 60-foot guard tower and took a rifle, ammunition and radio from a guard, according to testimony at their court-martial.

Under military rules, they could have been shot on sight.

Navy To File Impact Statement

ANNAPOLIS, Md. (AP) — The Navy says it will complete a full environmental impact statement on the effect a powerful electromagnetic generator would have on the Chesapeake Bay.

The statement will be completed before a decision is made on the whether to proceed with the project, said Secretary of the Navy John F. Lehman Jr. in a letter Friday to Gov. Harry Hughes.

The money was presented to show appreciation for Eastern Pines service to the Cherry Oaks Community. The money was raised through the Annual Tasting Tea held in March and will be used to equip the new salvage truck for both fire and rescue.

Jacksons Open 3-Night Stand

IRVING, Texas (AP) — Rock superstar Michael Jackson and his brothers have won over one of their toughest critics with the opening of their Texas concert series, drawing a crowd of more than 39,000 screaming, stomping fans.

Ladonna Jones, 11, whose criticism led Jackson to order changes in the tour's ticket-buying procedure, got a kiss on the cheek and a hug when she met him backstage Friday night for a few minutes before the opening act of the Jacksons' second tour stop.

The Lewisville sixth-grader had written a letter to Jackson, her idol, complaining about the high price of tickets. He had cited the letter before the tour opened in Kansas City, Mo., when he asked the tour promoters to change their controversial method of selling tickets.

"It was great," a beaming Ladonna said when the one-hour, 45-minute concert was over. "'Billie Jean' was my favorite."

The tour promoters gave Ladonna four concert tickets which the youngster thought were on the front row but instead were in Section 1, Row 28.

Jackson, wearing a white-sequined coat and black pants, and his brothers rose from below their giant stage Friday night and made a rhythmic entrance amid a halo of red and green laser beams and blinding white lights.

Many fans had driven long distances to see and hear the singing brothers, and many waited for five hours in 90-degree heat before the concert at the semi-domed Texas Stadium.

"It wasn't long enough. No matter how long he played, it wouldn't be enough. I'd want him to go on forever," said Lisa Harris, 25, who paid $125 for her ticket, drove 10 hours from Corpus Christi and wore one white glove — a copy of Michael's trademark.

As in last week's Kansas City concerts, Michael and his brothers Jermaine, Tito, Marlon and Randy opened with rowdy, upbeat songs.

Shooting Kills Two Officers

COTTON PLANT, Ark. (AP) — This town of 1,300 people was in shock and mourning Saturday, hours after its two-man police department was wiped out by a shooting shortly after a third officer was laid off.

"My God, it's terrible," Mayor Emmitt Conley said after Chief Leonard Cross, 40, and Patrolman Roy Leon, 24, were slain Friday night with Cross' .357-caliber Magnum revolver.

The deaths brought to seven the number of law officers killed in Arkansas in two weeks. A state police trooper was shot to death June 30 and four De Queen policemen died en route to his funeral July 5 when a truck smashed into the patrol car in which they were riding.

"The worst things that usually happen here are when some riff-raff comes in on the weekends and the officers give them some help getting out of town," said Conley. "I am shocked. I am saddened. Those were fine officers who were only trying to do their job."

Benny Ray Hadley, 16, of Little Rock, was charged early Saturday with two counts of capital murder in the deaths of Cross and Leon, said Prosecuting Attorney Gene Raff. Authorities said Hadley's name also was sometimes spelled Bennie Hatley.

"People are very upset," Raff said. "It's a rather heart-rending situation here."

Cross and Leon were shot in a yard in the west end of town, apparently after trying to arrest Hadley for possession of a stolen motorcycle around 9:30 p.m., said Woodruff County Sheriff Leon Creasey.

In the yard, in front of a white frame home flanked by other decaying houses, a large patch of dried blood was visible in the grass Saturday.

Creasey said Randy Walker, a witness, saw a scuffle develop between Hadley and the policemen. Walker told police he went back into the house because he did not want to get involved, Creasey said.

Creasey said Cross was shot in the groin. Leon was shot in the left armpit and the bullet ripped through his chest, striking a lung, severing an artery and breaking his back.

Cross crawled about 30 feet to the patrol car to radio for an ambulance and was semiconscious when police arrived, but was pronounced dead when an ambulance got him to a hospital in Brinkley. Cross bled to death, Creasey said.

A trail of blood was visible Saturday from the yard about 30 feet out to the street, where Cross apparently reached his patrol car. A vertical streak of blood could be seen Saturday on the driver's side door of the patrol car.

Hadley, unarmed, was arrested Friday night by police in Des Arc, about 20 miles west of Cotton Plant, which is in eastern Arkansas.

Chester Junior, of Cotton Plant, was arrested and charged with interfering with the apprehension of a suspected felon. Creasey said Junior helped Hadley get to Des Arc.

James Brock, who was a Cotton Plant policeman until Friday and would have been on duty Friday night, was shaken by the slayings. The city laid him off because it could not afford to pay three policemen.

"I was the last one hired, so I was the one who had to go," said Brock, who went to work Friday as a policeman for McCrory, a nearby town. He was among the police who sped to the scene of the shooting.

"It could have been me," Brock said. "It could have been any one of us. Any man who wears a badge and carries a gun, it could have been anybody. It happens, but you know, we try not to think about it happening to one of us. It's something that's always in the back of a man's mind."

Creasey said he would assign a deputy, Bobby Smith, to police Cotton Plant until the town rebuilds its police force.

Smith was a Cotton Plant policeman until four months ago when he became a sheriff's deputy.

"Right now, I'm just too numb to think about anything, man," Smith said. "If I had still been working here, it would have been me."

An arraignment for Hadley, who was held without bond in the Woodruff County Jail in Augusta, was tentatively scheduled for Friday. Junior also was jailed in Augusta.

Creasey, who wept while being interviewed about the case, said the officers were "good men. I worked with both of them every day. Leon had a week-old baby."

Funeral plans for Leon and Cross had not been set Saturday.

In the other deaths, Richard Wayne Snell, 54, of Muse, Okla., has been charged with capital murder in the killing of Trooper Louis Bryant.

The driver of the gravel truck that killed the four De Queen officers has been charged with four counts of manslaughter, one count of driving too fast for conditions, and one count of driving while intoxicated.

Demos Poised For Mondale Convention

By DAVID ESPO
Associated Press Writer

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Democrats crowded into San Francisco Saturday to nominate Walter F. Mondale for president and celebrate his choice of Geraldine Ferraro for running mate. Mondale worked awkwardly at a distance to overhaul the party machinery for the fall campaign against President Reagan.

The Democratic National Convention convenes officially Monday afternoon.

Campaign rival Gary Hart already was in town and the Rev. Jesse Jackson arrived to a welcoming rally. They will have their delegates, but in all things during convention week, Mondale-Ferraro will likely get their way.

The ticket was on the minds of the delegates thronged to one of the nation's loveliest cities — even as Mondale was replacing party chairman Charles Manatt. Some party sources had said overnight that the job was going to Bert Lance; that provoked talk of a revolt and campaign sources indicated the Georgia party chief would get another post instead.

The very possibility of appointing an old confidant of Jimmy Carter stunned some party officials — and spawned talk in Hart's campaign on capitalizing on the discontent. A "lightning strike" like this could turn delegates away from Mondale, said Hart campaign manager Oliver Henkel.

Lance joined Mondale and Ms. Ferraro at their weekend resort in Lake Tahoe, Calif. Manatt, the wealthy California banker who took over as party leader three years ago, met with party contributors in the Napa Valley wine country.

Mondale and Ms. Ferraro suspended their strategy sessions long enough to greet runners carrying the Olympic torch across California. Only 48 hours on the ticket, Ms. Ferraro confessed, "I'm not used to having Secret Service in the house. I heard them walking around the house all night long."

Two hundred miles from the Mondale retreat at Lake Tahoe, the band inside the Moscone Center practiced "Country Roads," evidently to be ready when West Virginia's delegates cast their ballots, and workmen hoisted the red, white and blue standards that mark where each state's delegation resides on the convention floor.

Mondale's advance selection of the 48-year-old New York congresswoman drained the convention of all suspense. But what it lacks in mystery, the Democratic meeting may make up in emotion. For nearly half the delegates are women, and they will cheer Ms. Ferraro to the arches of the huge, underground convention hall.

And suspense or no, the four days in the Moscone Center in San Francisco mean free publicity, Mondale's opportunity to launch his White House campaign on nationwide television. His nomination for president will occur on Wednesday night. He accepts it officially on Thursday, immediately after Ms. Ferraro enters the history books as the first-ever woman on a national ticket.

Hart, whose destiny has been to go from darkhorse to contender to also-ran in six dizzying months, came Friday to the convention city with the allegiance of 1,300 delegates and a major say in the party platform. He will speak on Wednesday — just before the roll call that snuffs out his campaign.

Jackson will address the convention on Tuesday, the final speech of an often chaotic campaign that helped bring many black voters to the polls for the first time.

Mondale is hoping that each will give him a parting gift of unity, a peace that would contrast with the brawling campaign they waged against him and would heal the party in time for the uphill battle ahead.

He arrives Monday, survivor of a campaign season he began as consensus front-runner, only to be upset by Hart in the very first primary.

Mondale's nomination will cap a career in Democratic politics that began in the 1940s, when he signed up to volunteer in Hubert Humphrey's mayoral campaign in Minneapolis. Along the way, the 56-year-old Mondale served as attorney general of his state, U.S. senator and then vice president under Jimmy Carter. He has spent the last four years seeking the prize he claims this week.

Ms. Ferraro emerged from Mondale's own search for a running mate, skilled in the internal politics of the House of Representatives, but relatively little known outside Congress and her congressional district in New York.

The four-day convention will be marked by political speeches, tributes and rituals.

The highlight of the opening night is New York Gov. Mario Cuomo's keynote address, traditionally the theme-setter for the week. Carter also will address the convention, and the delegates will see a film memorializing Harry Truman in the centennial year of his birth.

Bush Raps Mondale's Record

DENVER (AP) — Vice President George Bush lashed out Saturday at Walter Mondale's record on Nicaragua, accusing him of ignoring the massacres of Miskito Indians and "the suppression of free worship and free press and free expression."

Addressing a crowd of about 9,000 at the Colorado Republican Convention, Bush said, "To me, it's terribly troubling that Mondale has opposed every specific action the administration has taken to meet the communist threat in Nicaragua."

"He wants us to forget about Cuban, North Korean, Vietnamese and Soviet support for the Nicaraguan regime; to forget that the Nicaraguans are exporting anti-American revolution to neighboring El Salvador.

"Walter Mondale remains silent," he continued, about the suppression of independent labor unions, the humiliation of church leaders and the massacre of the Miskito Indians.

"Forget about all that,' Walter Mondale seems to say. Well, this president and this vice president will not forget," Bush said.

Bush also attacked Mondale's past economic record, saying that as vice president in the Carter administration, his "advocacy of endless economic programs helped create the worst economic crisis since the Great Depression."

Bush warned Republicans not to expect a positive message from the Democratic National Convention next week in view of the "gloom and doom" theme spread so far by Mondale.

"They said there was a 'malaise' in America," he said. "There was no malaise; the only thing wrong with America was a lack of leadership from Carter and Mondale."

But since Ronald Reagan took control, Bush said, the "supposedly hopeless" economy has begun to turn around. He said the message he and other Republicans would carry in the campaign is one of optimism. He likened it to the passage of the Olympic flame across the country.

"Watching its passage through the nation, you've got to know that America is still good and free and proud and brave. You've got to know that America is back and standing tall," he said.

"Walter Mondale talks loosely and loudly about fairness and what he's going to do for working men and women. We know Mr. Mondale's history and from bitter experience, so do the American people."

Poll Backs Selection Of Ferraro

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Walter Mondale's choice of woman for his running mate apparently is a break-even proposition — a move that has as much support as it has opposition, a poll showed Saturday.

But the poll indicates Mondale's choice of Rep. Geraldine Ferraro could help the ticket somewhat among turncoat Democrats who voted for President Reagan in 1980.

The poll was conducted between July 7 and July 10 — two days before Mondale announced his choice of Ms. Ferraro for the No. 2 spot on the Democratic presidential ticket.

Hamilton & Staff, a public relations and marketing research firm, conducted a nationwide poll of more than 1,000 registered voters.

Thirty-one percent said they would be more likely to support Mondale if he chose a woman as a running mate. Another 31 percent said they would be less likely to support him if he picked a woman for the No. 2 spot on the party ticket. And 38 percent said they had no opinion or that it made no difference.

The concept of having a woman on the ticket helps most in the Northeast and with blacks, Yuppies — the young professionals who formed the core of Gary Hart's support — and former John Anderson supporters. The idea also had a plurality of support among women under 50; older women did not view it so favorably.

White House Says No Stall On Talks

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration said Saturday it is still planning to open talks on space weaponry with the Soviet Union in September, though the president is willing to postpone the meeting, if Moscow prefers, until the November election is decided.

Bob Sims, a White House foreign policy spokesman, denied reports that Reagan had specifically proposed to Soviet President Konstantin Chernenko that the negotiations on anti-satellite weapons be put aside until American voters have made their choice.

The president "has not proposed delaying the talks," Sims said.

But one White House official, commenting on the condition he not be identified by name, said he believes the president "is prepared to meet with them after the elections" if opening the talks before that time "would be a problem for them."

Last spring, Reagan told Congress there was virtually no point in attempting to negotiate a ban of anti-satellite weapons, or ASATs, because of difficulties in verfifying compliance with any such treaty. While he did not rule out the possibility of a much narrower agreement — on specific types of ASATs — policy-makers at the Pentagon have balked at any talks until the United States tests and deploys a version that involves a small missile fired from an F-15 jet fighter.

Democratic presidential candidate Walter F. Mondale has called for a "space freeze" and pressure has mounted in both the House and Senate for negotiations on all arms control fronts. When the Soviets recently proposed that ASAT talks be opened in September, Reagan accepted almost immediately.

When asked Saturday if there had been any proposed change in that timetable, the White House and State Department issued identical statements:

Hospital Walkout Unsettled

NEW YORK (AP) — A day-old walkout by health care workers at 27 hospitals and three nursing homes here could stretch into a prolonged strike, one negotiator said, while management and union officials said Saturday they were far from a settlement.

Negotiations on a two-year contract for the 46,000 workers had been scheduled to resume Saturday, but neither side wanted to bargain because their positions were unchanged.

"I see the prospect of a prolonged strike," said William Abelow, president of the League of Voluntary Hospitals, the management bargaining group. He said it was up to the union to make the first move toward compromise.

"It's an outrage," said Doris Turner, president of the District 1199 health care workers union. "I think they want a strike because they can make money by not paying our members. And they'll hang on just as long as they can until the patients begin to suffer."

The walkout, which started Friday, affects 17,000 patients — about half the hospitalized population of Manhattan, according to Peter Slocum, a spokesman for the state Health Department.

Police said no arrests have been made.

Discovery Goes Back To Hangar

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — The space shuttle Discovery was moved from the launch pad back to its large vehicle assembly building Saturday to be outfitted for its newly designated double mission.

The shuttle's massive tracked transporter took six hours to make the three-mile trip.

At the assembly building workers prepared to separate Discovery from its two booster rockets and fuel tank so it can be moved into a nearby processing building.

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration decided to combine Discovery's first and second missions into a single flight on Aug. 24 because of back-to-back, last-minute postponements of the ship's maiden flight in June that were caused by equipment failures.

NASA said that by combining the two missions, the shuttle launch schedule, which accelerates to one flight a month in October, could be kept on track.

Several modifications will be made so the shuttle's cargo bay can accommodate two extra communications satellites into orbit.

Discovery will carry three communications satellites, an experimental solar panel to be erected in space, a miniature drug purification factory and a crew of six.

Firing Leads To $55,000 For Officer

DALLAS (AP) — The city of Dallas has been ordered to pay $55,000 to a warrant officer whose termination letter was posted on the office bulletin board for two weeks.

The officer was later reinstated, but has since been fired again.

A state District Court jury ruled Friday that city officials wrongfully made public the letter written to Stephen Moreau notifying him of his May 1979 dismissal.

His attorney, Tony Wright, said Moreau was fired because he was vice president of a warrant officer's organization and was outspoken over a plan to phase out his department, which serves city warrants.

City officials said they fired Moreau because he improperly fired a shot while chasing burglary suspects.

A city review board later overturned the dismissal and Moreau, 36, was reinstated to his job two months after having been fired.

The jury also awarded $24,000 in legal fees to Moreau's lawyer, Tony Wright, and asked the judge to order the city to post a public apology to Moreau on the warrant office bulletin board and remove all references to the firing and appeal from Moreau's personnel file.

But Moreau is now appealing a more recent firing. He was dismissed six weeks ago for insubordination because he refused to stamp a judge's signature on warrants that had not yet been reviewed by the judge, Wright said.

Investments Cut

YORK (AP) — Mayor Edward Koch has endorsed a gradual reduction of city pension fund investments in companies that do business in South Africa.

Koch said Friday the city's five pension systems, with about $20 billion in assets, should immediately begin terminating investment in companies that do business with the police or the military in South Africa.

New Zealand Ousts Pro-U.S. Administration

WELLINGTON, New Zealand (AP) — The Labor Party led by David Lange ended Prime Minister Robert Muldoon's nine-year tenure with a landslide election victory Saturday. The conservative defeat was seen fueled by voter discontent over Muldoon's economic policies, confrontational style and close U.S. defense ties.

It appeared Labor would win 57 of the 95 seats in Parliament and Muldoon's National Party 36 seats, New Zealand television said. The Social Credit Party would probably win two seats, it said.

Election officials said turnout was heavy around the country despite bad weather.

Lange, who at 41 will become the youngest prime minister in New Zealand's history, called Saturday for national unity and a return to the prosperity and harmony many of his countrymen fear has been lost forever.He urged New Zealanders to forget party ties and work to restore the country's fortunes.

Lange told cheering supporters that work would begin immediately on dealing with the country's foreign debt, running at more than $11 billion.

During the campaign, Muldoon's rivals charged that New Zealand — with 3.25 million people — was proportionally the most indebted country in the world and faced economic ruin.

Lange entered Parliament in 1977 and became leader of the Labor Party only last year. He intends to act as foreign minister as well as prime minister in the new government.

Muldoon, flashing the feisty spirit with which he has dominated the country since 1975 through three terms in office, immediately asserted he would win reelection in 1987. He dismissed any possibility his party would dump him and said the new government leaders were "incompetents" doomed to fail.

"Three years from now we're going to be back in a landslide," the 62-year-old conservative said in what was supposed to be a concession speech.

Critics said that Muldoon, who was knighted by Queen Elizabeth II earlier this year, ran the government during his three terms of office with an aggressive, even autocratic style of leadership.Muldoon increasingly resorted to executive orders to govern the country and run the troubled economy.

Many workers opposed Muldoon for tough wage controls and what they considered anti-union legislation. Business criticized him for limiting interest rates and investments.

New Zealanders expressed concern about rising unemployment, now at 6 percent. Until 15 years ago, New Zealand prided itself on having full employment.

U.S. officials were reported to be edgy about Labor's campaign promise to sharply cut or ban visits by U.S. warships. The officials were worried that such a ban could spread to countries such as Australia and Japan.

Muldoon lost his one-seat margin in Parliament last month when a member of his party defected over a motion to ban nuclear weapons from New Zealand. Muldoon moved up an election that had been scheduled for November.

Some New Zealanders say that visiting U.S. warships carrying nuclear weapons make New Zealand a nuclear target. The Labor Party has promised to ban all nuclear-powered warships and says the United States will have to state if conventionally powered vessels have nuclear arms.

All warships would be banned if the United States refused to answer the questions, Labor says.

Trains Collide, Kill 36

DIVACA, Yugoslavia (AP) - A freight train smashed into the rear of an idling holiday express to the Adriatic coast Saturday, killing 36 people, according to a state radio broadcast.

There were about 1,500 people on the overnight passenger train, the official Tanjug news agency said.

It quoted railway station officials as saying all those killed were Yugoslavs.

The "death toll rose to 36," said the unattributed radio report. Earlier, Investigative Judge Tine Rozanc told reporters at least 30 had been killed.

The radio did not specify whether more bodies were discovered on the scene or if some victims in hospital had succumbed to injuries.

Tanjug said 24 people were hospitalized, some in serious condition. Officials said most of the passengers were young Yugoslavs, heading south on the first weekend of the peak vacation season.

The accident at this village about 15 miles south of the Italian border city of Trieste occurred at 6:10 a.m.

The freight train, moving at about 37 mph, plowed into the 14-car express stopped on a shunting rail, derailing and heavily damaging the last three cars, according to Tanjug.

The freight train engineer was held while investigators tried to find out if he failed to respond to a flashing stop signal or if the device malfunctioned, said Tanjug. It said the freight train began braking only about 15 yards before collision.

"All of a sudden there was a terrible crash," passenger Vera Milojevic, 41, told Tanjug. "Coaches started to break and steel to crack.

"A girl fell into my arms; she did not survive."

Her own injuries were reported as minor.

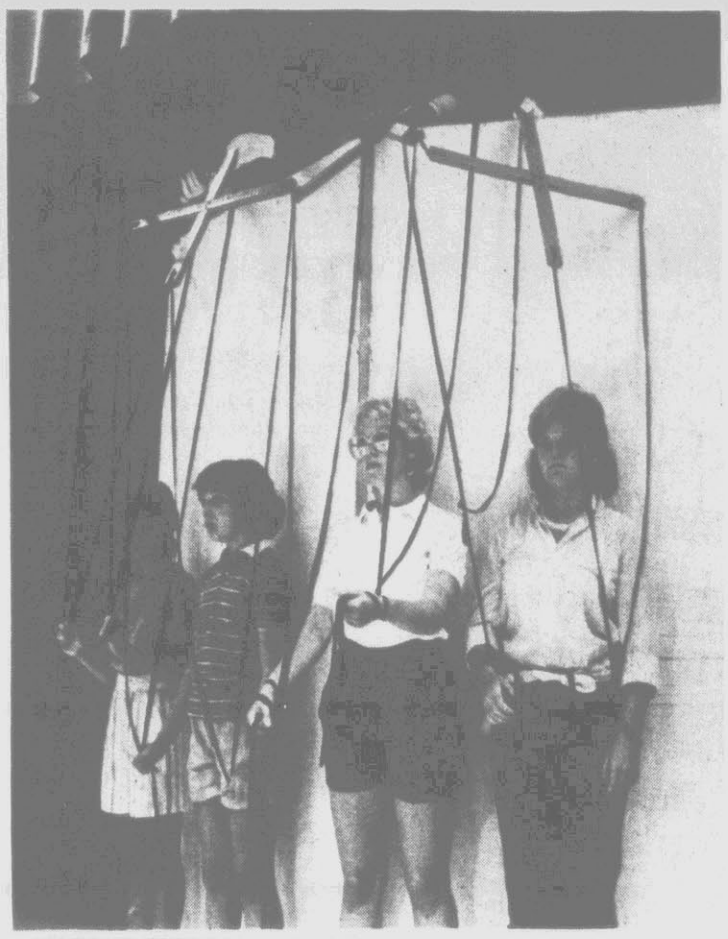

Zdenka Milojevic, identified by Tanjug as her niece, said: "The only thing I remember is cries of help, then weeping, then smoke."

Judge Rozanc said most of the dead were in the heavily battered last unit, subdivided into freight and passenger compartments.

Of the injured, 17 were hospitalized in nearby Isola. Dr. Mario Gasparini, a surgeon at the hospital in the town near the Italian border, told reporters many had "serious injuries of the extremities."

The express was heading from Belgrade, capital of this Balkan nation, to the Adriatic seaside resort town of Koper and then on to Pula, another coastal community about 50 miles south of here.

The section remained closed to traffic at sundown, with cleanup work not expected to be completed before midnight, according to Tanjug. Heavy equipment was removing the wreckage.

Violence Continues In Lebanon

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Sporadic artillery exchanges threatened to rekindle a war for dominance between pro-Syrian militias in north Lebanon Saturday.

In another development, Beirut's professional press association called a newspaper strike for Monday to protest the shooting of leftist publisher-editor Talal Salman in an assassination attempt. Salman was reported in satisfactory condition after surgery to remove bullets from his jaw and neck inflicted in the Saturday pre-dawn attack.

Syrian President Hafez Assad personally intervened late Friday night to halt four days of fierce battles between the Marada militia, loyal to former Lebanese President Suleiman Franjieh, and fighters of the Lebanese Syrian Social Nationalist Party in the northern farming districts of Koura and Zgorta.

Assad's Soviet-equipped army controls northern and eastern Lebanon. He threatened military action against both warring groups unless they heeded a cease-fire he called at 1 a.m. Saturday.

Police said the guns fell silent after Assad's cease-fire orders were sent to both commands around midnight, but intermittent skirmishes with mortars and multiple rocket launchers erupted anew after noon.

No casualties were reported in the renewed exchanges.

Police said at least 28 people were killed and 85 wounded, 13 seriously, in the four days of fighting at the foothills of northern Lebanon's Cedar mountains.

Franjieh's son, Robert, commander of the Marada militia, and Inaam Raad, president of the Syrian Social Nationalist Party, met in the presence of Syrian military experts in Damascus on Saturday and discussed arrangements to firm up the cease-fire. They later met with Syrian Vice President Abdul-Halim Khaddam.

The national coalition government has been preparing to extend law and order to other parts of the nation after successfully reconnecting the Christian and Moslem sectors of Beirut and reopening its airport and port.

Christian and Moslem militias, whose sectarian warfare had split the city in two, withdrew peacefully to make the government peace plan possible. But they still hold sway in wide areas of the nation outside Beirut, and Israeli and Syrian occupation troops also remain.

Reporters based in southern Lebanon said in telephone dispatches to Beirut Saturday that residents of the villages of Nabatiyeh and Jibchitt heard gunfire crackling all night at the Israeli Ansar detention camp.

Poland Expands Dissident Trials

WARSAW, Poland (UPI) — Poland's communist government announced it will try a priest and a dissident lawyer on charges of anti-state activities and charged Solidarity founder Lech Walesa's parish priest with inciting "public unrest."

The announcements Friday appeared to signal a new crackdown on dissent only a day after four prominent dissidents went on trial on charges of seeking the violent overthrow of the state.

From his summer retreat in Italy, Pope John Paul II led prayers for the four dissidents and in his sharpest statement yet urged Polish authorities to respect human rights in a nation that has sacrificed for "true independence."

"Let us pray for all those who are in prison, and above all for those who find themselves there for ideological reasons. Let us pray for their liberation," the pope said.

Jacek Kuron, Adam Michnik, Henryk Wujek and Zbigniew Romaszewski, all leaders of the Workers Defense Committee (KOR) that helped found Solidarity in 1980, are charged with trying to overthrow the state by force.

Solidarity sources in Gdansk said Henryk Jankowski, Walesa's priest and close friend, was charged there with preaching sermons that caused "public unrest" and allowing worshippers to sing the Solidarity anthem in church.

As Jankowski left his home to answer a summons to the state prosecutor's office relative to an indictment against him, thousands of supporters shouting "Long live Solidarity" surrounded him and showered him with flowers, the sources said.

Jankowski was ordered to return to the prosecutor's office Monday because the investigation was incomplete, the sources said. Police detained a small number of his supporters.

The official Communist Party newspaper, Trybuna Ludu, announced that Jerzy Popieluszko, a pro-Solidarity priest, would stand trial on charges of slandering the government in his sermons and for illegal possesion of explosives.

Voters Decide On Government July 23

Israel Faces Political Crossroad As Leaders Battle In Close Race

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir and opposition leader Shimon Peres are battling into the final week of an increasingly close election campaign.

Many observers see the July 23 balloting as a crossroad for the 36-year-old Jewish state — both for the future of relations with Arab states and for resolving divisive domestic issues that separate rich and poor, religious and secular.

In the closing weeks of the campaign, Shamir's Likud bloc has gone on the offensive. Polls show him gaining ground on Peres' Labor Party, which now leads by 7-10 percent compared to the commanding 15 percent margin Labor had in June.

The narrowing gap indicates that neither Likud nor Labor will win by a big margin and that either party would have to form a coalition with some of the 24 small parties running candidates in the election.

In 1981, the Likud bloc won 48 seats in the 120-member Parliament and the Labor Party 47 seats. Likud put together a governing coalition with the support of religious and other small parties, but the coalition fell apart and an early election was called.

Apparently unwilling to rely on small, special interest parties if Likud is chosen to form the next government, Shamir has called for a national unity government with Labor. The front-running Peres rejected the idea, saying "it will not be a national unity government but a national paralysis government."

The two candidates have often sounded alike as they fought over the middle ground — the 15 or more percent of the nation's 2.6 million electorate who pollsters say are undecided.

But the two parties have vastly different approaches to government and the list of unresolved conflicts that plague this nation of 4 million.

The pressing questions include what should be done about an economy with 400 percent inflation, how to end Israel's two-year-old involvement in Lebanon and whether territorial concessions are necessary to make peace with the Arabs.

There are deeper divisions as well. These include the social gap between the Ashkenazic Jews of European origin who have traditionally held the economic and political power and the Sephardic Jews who came mainly from Arab countries and have been at the bottom of the socio-economic ladder.

There is also an unresolved conflict about the role of religion in the Jewish state. Should Jewish law be the final authority as the Orthodox Jews want or are the 120 members of Parliament the final arbiters?

Shamir, 68, a pre-state underground leader and former Mossad intelligence agent, inherited the job of prime minister unexpectedly last September when Menachem Begin resigned and went into seclusion.

Like Begin, whose name is still chanted by crowds at election rallies, Shamir is an ardent nationalist who believes in making no further territorial concessions to the Arabs. He is pledged to continue, whatever the cost, a settlement program that has put 30,000 Jews and more than 100 settlements in the occupied West Bank of the Jordan River.

Likud's policy appeals to those who still view Labor as the Ashkenazi establishment that excluded them during the state's first 29 years of existence. Religious Jews, especially those who fervently believe in Israel's biblical claim to the occupied territories, also tend to prefer the rightist bloc.

Peres, 61, a former defense minister who twice lost to Begin in his bids to become prime minister, has sought to win over Likud supporters by blaming Likud for the Lebanon involvement and the country's economic woes.

Labor has suggested it will get Israel's sons back from Lebanon quicker than Likud and switch spending priorities away from West Bank settlements to development towns inside Israel.

Vietnam Reports Chinese Invasion

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Vietnam charged Saturday that Chinese divisions had attacked and occupied hills in two districts of Vietnam's northern border province of Ha Tuyen.

Several Vietnamese infantry and artillery divisions had been moved to the border opposite other districts in the province in preparation for an expected large-scale Chinese attack, the official Vietnam News Agency said in a report monitored in Bangkok. The districts were identified as Dong Van, Meo Vao, Xin Man, and Hoangsu Phi.

Chinese troops already had occupied hills in Thanh Duc, Thanh Thuy and Minh Tan hamlets in Vi Xuyen district, and Bach Dich and Phu Lung hamlets in Yen Minh district, the news agency said.

The agency quoted the Vietnamese Communist Party newspaper Nhan Dan as accusing China of having fired more than 600,000 artillery rounds on 28 of Ha Tuyen's 33 districts. Many areas have been constantly shelled since early April, VNA said.

It said Vietnamese in the border areas have contributed "hundreds of thousands" of work days transporting ammunition, digging fortifications and building roads in anticipation of a Chinese offensive.

The agency did not mention Chinese claims Friday that Chinese frontier guards had repulsed and inflicted "heavy casualties" on a Vietnamese division China said was intruding into China's Yunnan Province.

Diplomats in Thailand have said such claims by both China and Vietnam are exaggerated. The two countries have been trading bitter accusations, since 1979, when the onetime allies turned on each other over the issue of governing Cambodia and Peking sent troops across the border into Vietnam for a brief war.

Khmer Rouge guerrillas said Saturday they killed 43 Vietnamese soldiers and wounded 169 in successful "special attacks" against four Vietnamese positions near the Thai-Cambodian border.

A broadcast from the Khmer Rouge army radio said the attacks were launched last Sunday and Monday in the area of Pailin on the southern sector of the frontier. One 155mm howitzer, a tank and a number of other weapons were destroyed while other arms and supplies were seized by the guerrillas, the broadcast said.

There was no independent confirmation of the attack. The Khmer Rouge, which has in the past exaggerated battlefield successes, has reportedly been stepping up its drives against the Vietnamese in Cambodia.

Jermaine Jackson Plans One-Man World Tour

DALLAS (AP) — Jermaine Jackson says the spectacular concert tour of the Jackson brothers will have an encore of sorts — a worldwide tour of his own.

Jackson, performing with his brothers for the first time in nine years, didn't rule out the possibility that he'll appear with them again, but said he plans to concentrate on solo performances.

Having the brothers together again on the tour was "the greatest thing that happened to all of us," he said.

Jermaine reflected on his sibling's overwhelming popularity.

"Everyone says, 'You're not going to outsell Michael,'" he said. "People bring you against your family, but that is not the whole key. The key is doing quality music.

"I can put any of my songs up against the songs of Michael," he said. "It's just that Michael's songs are timely. We know that everyone is looking white and black, but if we can do something positive or just reroute someone's life, that is an accomplishment."

In 1975, Jermaine Jackson decided to stay with Motown Records while the rest of the family switched to another company.

Inmates Kill 2 Guards

WINNIPEG, Manitoba (AP) — Inmates stabbed two unarmed prison guards to death as the convicts were being locked in their cells for the night at the Stony Mountain Penitentiary, authorities said Saturday.

The deaths Friday night of the non-uniformed guards were the latest in a series of incidents at the gray stone prison located on a gentle rise on the Canadian prairie about 75 miles north of the Minnesota and North Dakota border.

Authorities at the medium-security prison said they had not determined how many prisoners were involved in the fatal attacks, but no hostages were taken. They said that shortly after the guards were slain at about 11 p.m., all of the prison's 508 inmates were locked in their cells.

They will remain there until a preliminary investigation is completed, said deputy warden Pat Newton.

She said guards Joseph George Wendt, 54, of nearby Selkirk, and Werner Rudy Friessen, 34, of Winnipeg, were attacked in a maximum-security section used for inmates who were back in prison after having served time before.

Stony Mountain prisoners recently protested alleged mistreatment by guards following an attempted hostage-taking incident in May. The penitentiary also was the scene of tense, 39-hour negotiations when hostages were taken in 1982.

Ms. Newton said there was "no apparent motive" for the Friday night attacks. She said the victims were going from cell to cell locking up prisoners for the night as usual, but gave no other details.

It was not known if other guards or prisoners overpowered the inmate or inmates involved in the slayings.

IRA Mine Kills Couple

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — A landmine planted by IRA guerrillas exploded Saturday on a country road near the border with the Irish Republic, killing two part-time British soldiers, one an unarmed woman, police said.

"After the explosion, there was a burst of gunfire aimed at the patrol from the other side of the border," police spokeswoman Emily Armstrong said in Belfast.

The outlawed Irish Republican Army claimed responsibility for the attack in a statement sent to Belfast news organizations.

The woman, Cpl. Heather Kerrigan, 20, was the fourth female member of the locally recruited Ulster Defense Regiment to be killed in Northern Ireland's 14 years of sectarian bloodshed.

Ms. Armstrong said that the eight-member Defense Regiment patrol was walking along a border road between Killeter and Castlederg when the mine exploded. She said it was not clear how the device was detonated.

Miss Kerrigan died immediately. Pvt. Norman McKinley, 31, died a short time later at a nearby hospital. A third soldier — said by family friends to be Miss Kerrigan's brother — was seriously wounded, Ms. Armstrong reported.

Miss Kerrigan's brother-in-law, Thomas Loughlin, was killed in March when an IRA bomb exploded in a van.

The predominantly Roman Catholic IRA is waging a guerrilla war to unite Northern Ireland, a British province dominated by Protestants, with the Irish Republic which has a Catholic majority.

Several hundred women serve in the Ulster Defense Regiment. Most of the women, known as Greenfinches, hold administrative jobs, but some join military patrols. All are unarmed.

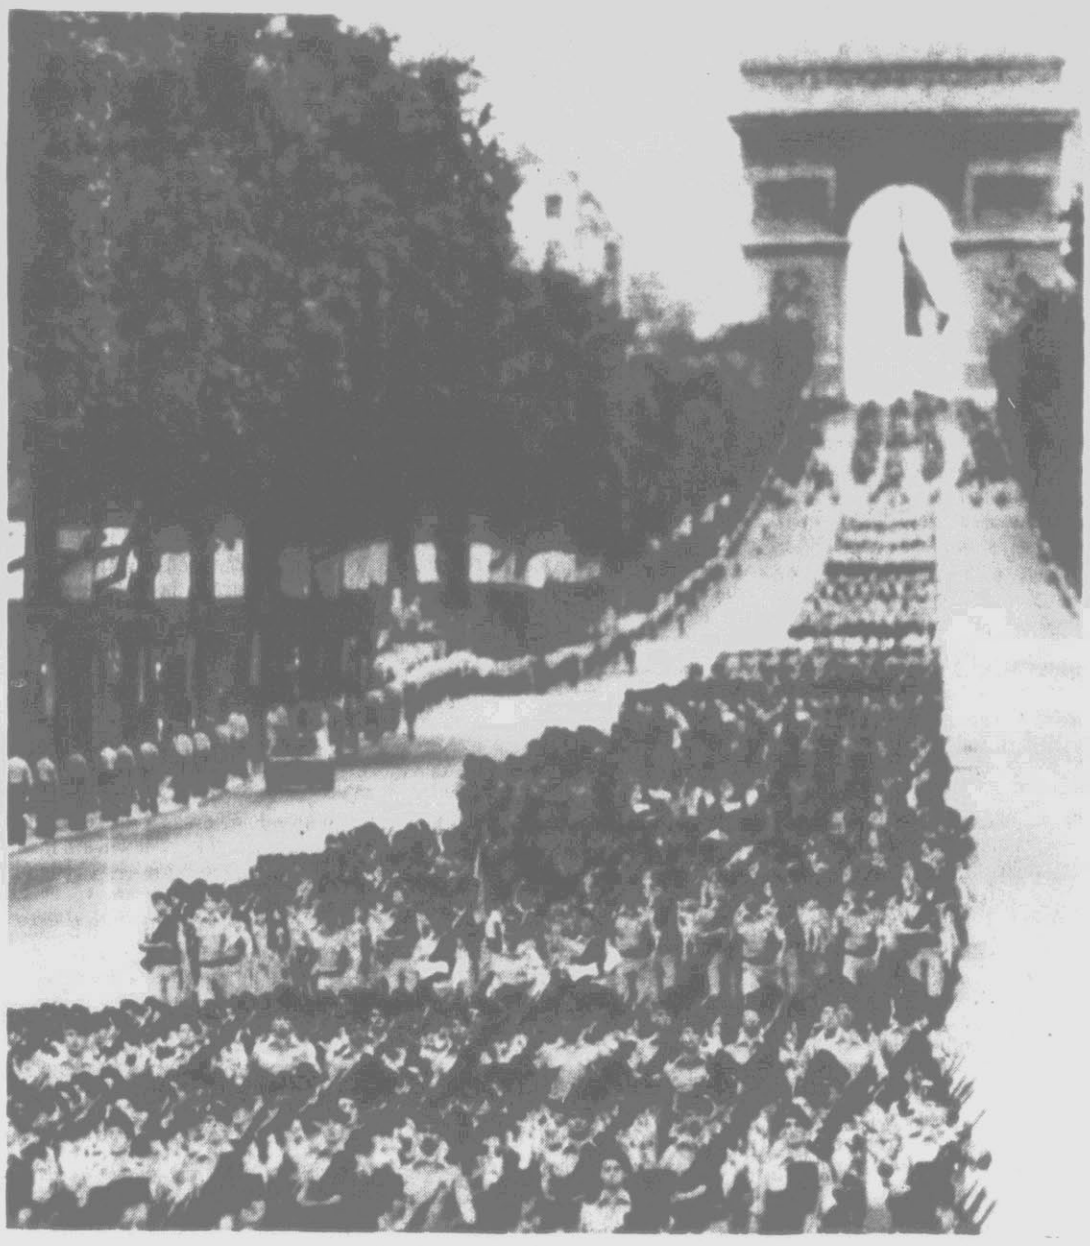

In the previous deaths of women members, Pvt. Yvonne Martin was killed May 2, 1975, when guerrillas attacked an army center in County Tyrone; Lance Cpl. Jeanne McLiggett was slain April 6, 1976, when gunmen fired on her jeep patrol, and Pvt. Margaret Hearst was killed Oct. 8, 1977, by guerrillas who entered her mobile home late at night and shot her to death in front of her infant child.

Priest Delegate Gets Suspension

DETROIT (AP) — A Roman Catholic priest has been suspended from his clerical duties because he is a delegate to the Democratic National Convention, officials of the Archdiocese of Detroit said.

The Rev. Robert Williams will not be reinstated until he has admitted his decision to defy church law was wrong, said Jay Berman, director of the archdiocesan Office of Communications.

Williams, pastor of St. Lawrence Church in the Detroit suburb of Utica, was suspended Wednesday by Archbishop Edmund Szoka. He may not celebrate Mass, hear confessions, preach or perform other priestly duties, Berman said.

BASTILLE DAY — French troops march along the Champs Elysee in Paris Saturday as part of France's observance of Bastille Day. French authorities used the observance to announce that corporate taxes will be cut by 8 percent in 1985. (AP Laserphoto)

France To Lower Corporate Taxes

PARIS (AP) — President Francois Mitterrand used the occasion of Bastille Day to announce Saturday that taxes on investments and wage payments by corporations would be reduced by 8 percent in 1985.

Later, Mitterrand rode in an open car escorted by 300 horsemen down the Champs Elysees to review a huge military parade and launch a day of patriotic displays, fireworks and dancing in the streets.

The annual celebration marks the July 14, 1789, storming of the Bastille prison in Paris during the French revolution.

Mitterrand, in an interview with several newsmen on state television, described the corporate tax cut as "the largest tax reduction since the liberation" of France in World War II.

The cut will affect what is known as the professional tax, a government levy on the money a corporation invests in a year and on the total amount of wages it pays in that year.

Businessmen have complained that the tax works against two of the socialist government's own goals — increased investments and employment.

Next year's 8 percent cut in the professional tax is part of an overall plan to cut total corporate and personal taxes by 1 percent in 1985.

Kuwait, Saudis Increase Patrols

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — Saudi Arabia and Kuwait intensified joint air reconnaissance patrols over Persian Gulf waters Saturday, hours after Iraq said its warplanes attacked two ships south of Iran's Kharg Island oil terminal.

Arab diplomatic sources said the Saudis and Kuwaitis were bracing to confront a possible Iranian reprisal raid on commercial shipping in the southern sector of the gulf.

They said that air and sea patrols by the two countries were limited to territorial waters, and did not cover international sea lanes south of the Iraq-Iran war zone.

The Iraqis said Friday they inflicted "direct and effective" hits on two "naval targets" near Kharg, but there was no independent confirmation of that report. The term "naval target" is often used by Iraqi military spokesmen to refer to oil tankers and bulk carriers.

Marine salvage sources in Bahrain and the United Arab Emirates said no distress signals were picked up from any vessel near Kharg Friday or Saturday.

The so-called tanker war broke out last February when Iraq imposed a sea and air blockade on Kharg and warned shipping companies to stay out of the war zone or risk air attacks.

Iraq, trying to cripple Iran's oil-based economy, have been hitting ships within a 50-mile radius around Kharg, unilaterally declared by the Baghdad high command as an "exclusion zone."

The Iranians retaliated with air strikes against Arab and other oil tankers in neutral waters near the Strait of Hormuz at the southern tip of the Persian Gulf and in locations close to Saudi and Kuwaiti coastlines.

Arab states along the gulf began to accelerate collective defense arrangements and seek sophisticated air defense weapons from the United States and the Soviet Union because of the tanker war.

Saudi Arabia and Kuwait, along with the United Arab Emirates, Bahrain, Qatar and Oman are grouped in a regional economic integration and defense pact called the Gulf Cooperation Council.

The Saudis last May acquired 400 U.S.-made anti-aircraft Stinger missiles for the defense of sensitive oil areas and territorial waters.

Teen-Ager's Suicide Leaves Family With Questions About Satanic Cult

By PAT MILTON
Associated Press Writer

NORTHPORT, N.Y. (AP) — At 12, Richard Kasso Jr. was an athlete, getting up at dawn to play football with friends. Then his life took an abrupt turn into drugs, and at age 17 he committed suicide in a jail cell, charged with a satanic ritual killing.

"He wanted to die," said his father, Richard Sr. "He was 40 pounds underweight, had slurred speech, no short memory, and all he thought about was drugs and rock music.

"About a year ago, we realized that whatever we had once in our son, we were never going to get it back," Kasso said in an interview Friday. "There was no light at the end of the tunnel."

Ricky frequently talked about suicide, his father said. Last summer he told a relative: "I think suicide would be the ultimate high — then I would be at total peace."

Ricky hanged himself with a bedsheet in a jail cell on July 6, one day after he was arrested and charged with killing 17-year-old Gary Lauwers.

Lauwers was tortured for three hours last month, stabbed 17 times and forced to say "I love you Satan" before his eyes were gouged out next to a bonfire. Police said he was killed because $100 worth of PCP, the drug called angel dust, had been stolen from young Kasso.

Ricky's friend James Troiano, 18, of East Northport, was charged with second-degree murder, accused of holding Lauwers while he was being stabbed.

Over the last three years, police in this seaside town of 7,500 on Long Island have found the remains of charred or tortured animals, apparent victims of ritual sacrificial slaughter.Some graves were dug up.

"We thought they were isolated incidents," said William Keahon, chief of the major offense bureau for the Suffolk County District Attorney. "We now suspect that it is a group of young kids in the area, loosely organized under the name Knights of the Black Circle, who is responsible."

He said Kasso was an influence in the group of about 20 teen-agers.

"Whether any of them are true believers in the devil or are just looking for attention, we don't really know yet," Keahon said.

Half of the cult members "don't have any idea who the devil is supposed to be. ... It was a way for them to feel important," said the Rev. Graham Walworth, pastor of the Trinity Episcopal Church.

He called their way of life "a form of revolution, a rejection against the standards their parents represent. They picked the theme that was most shocking, the thing that would horrify."

"We give our young people everything that is essential except a meaning for life," said Walworth.

Kasso, a teacher and football coach at Cold Spring Harbor High School, said he and his wife could be characterized as "over-achievers," but that as parents they were "not hard-nosed. I'm certainly forceful as a coach but not a disciplinarian."

He recalled that once when his son was failing in school he told him to get on the ball.

"He said to me, 'You know Dad, you expect me to be perfect just because you're a teacher and a coach,'" Kasso said. "I told him, 'No, I don't, but I expect you to pass.'

"He might have thought he couldn't meet our expectations," he added.

Blond, blue-eyed, Ricky appeared to be an all-American boy at age 12. "In the sixth grade, he would get up at 6 a.m. and meet friends to play football or baseball before school started," Kasso said.

But he started to experiment with drugs that year, his parents said.

"He was shy and maybe the drugs made him feel better, get rid of that self-doubt," Kasso said.

"'I love doing drugs,'" he recalled Ricky saying. "'I know it will kill me but it's my life and I'm responsible for it.'"

His former football coach at Northport Junior High School, David Harper, said Ricky was a good athlete but was under constant pressure from new friends in the drug culture."They thought being a jock was a dirty word," he said.

Ricky dropped out of school in the eighth grade and stayed away from home for weeks at a time, living in cars, on the beach, and later in a shack he and some friends bought. He listened endlessly to so-called "heavy metal" rock groups that use satanic imagery.

Last April, Ricky was charged with digging into a grave. Police said he was trying to exhume a body for use in satanic rituals.

The Kassos said they tried to help their son, and attempted to admit him to a mental hospital. The hospital refused, saying he was not a serious danger to himself or society.

"We had a tremendous love for Ricky," Kasso said. "Right now we keep going at it, trying to see if there was anything we could have done. We are feeling very guilty."

The scientific study of meteors began in 1883 when more than 200,000 shooting stars were sighted over eastern Northern America. The spectacle prompted many to believe the end of the world had come.

Cronkite Leads Manteo Flotilla

By ROBIN P. TEATER
Associated Press Writer

MANTEO, N.C. (AP) — After a visit by England's Princess Anne, a 70-boat flotilla led by former CBS-TV news anchorman Walter Cronkite on Saturday headed for this island to celebrate the 400th anniversary of British settlement in America.

The first of the private sailboats left Elizabeth City to the northwest at 8 a.m., with the fleet to arrive here Saturday evening.

On Friday, Princess Anne dedicated the $700,000 Elizabeth II, a replica of a 16th-century ship that brought the first English colonists to the New World, depositing them on the North Carolina coast.

Despite the failure of the voyage to establish permanent colonies, the effort "was a real act of bravery and faith," the princess told about 5,000 spectators.

"Now, 400 years later, we, their successors, find it very difficult to imagine why they didn't come sooner, knowing what we do now about this most attractive and productive state," she said.

Three morning rainstorms delayed Princess Anne's formal unveiling of a historical marker, and when she arrived at the granite marker after touring the boat someone already had removed the cover.

The princess went through the motions of removing an imaginary sheet, then spread her arms to the crowd, which cheered and clapped.

The weekend activities kicked off a three-year observance of the voyages, the first of which landed somewhere near Roanoke Island July 13, 1584. British attempts to establish a permanent colony in the area continued until 1587.

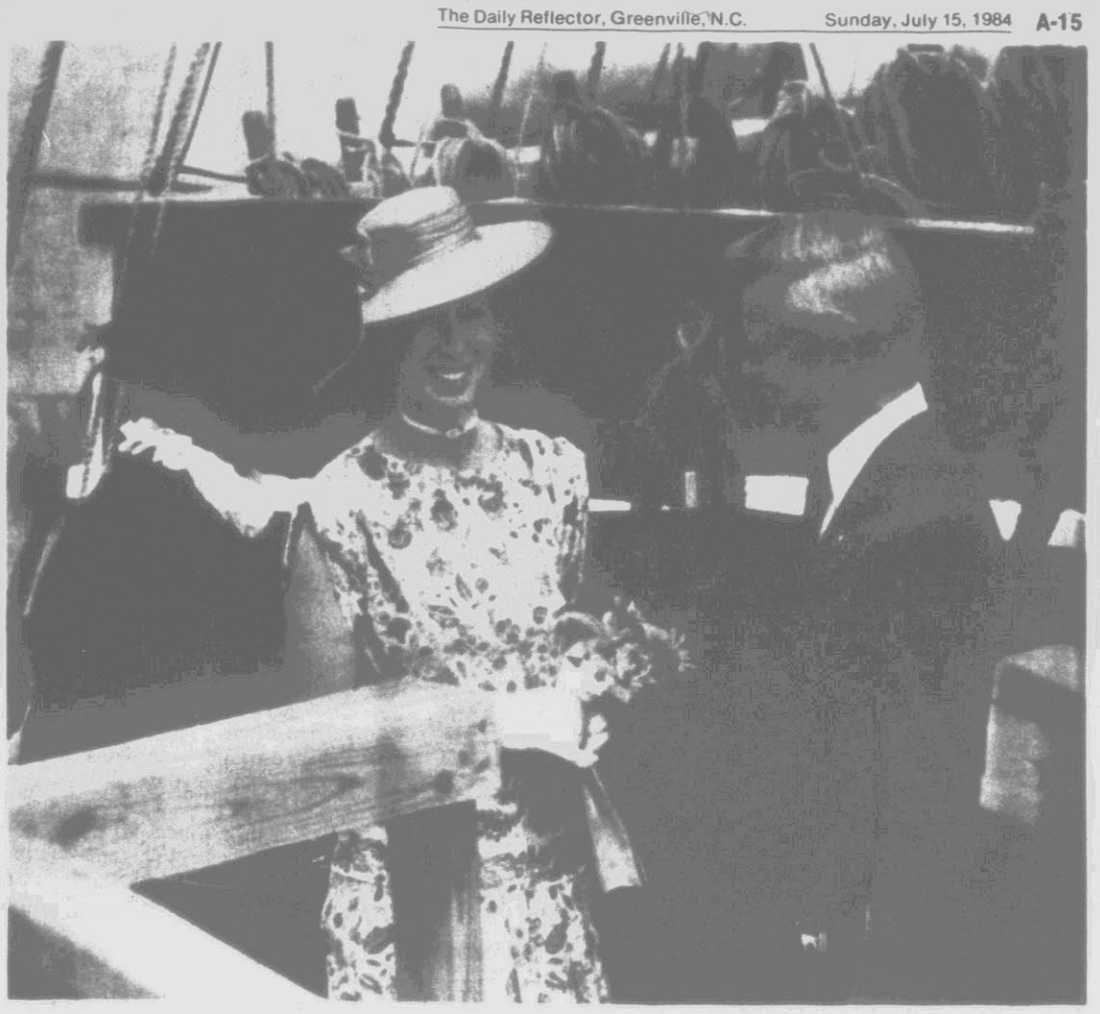

The first permanent English settlement was established at Jamestown, Va., in 1607, 42 years after the Spanish founded St. Augustine, Fla.

North Carolina Gov. Jim Hunt told spectators they should share "a pride of all that we are and all that we've become since those first English settlers stepped foot on the sands of this island."

Hunt said the mysterious disappearance in 1590 of the second colony — known as the "Lost Colony" — was "a turning point in history. Today we gather in the past ... but we will reap the benefit of our pride and our achievement in the future."

Calcium, Exercise May Help Elderly

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (UPI) — Exercise and the consumption of low fat milk products may help older people avoid broken hips and other painful fractures, a new study indicates.

A study of women over 60, conducted at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, found that those who remained physically active throughout their lives and those who consumed relatively large amounts of calcium had significantly stronger bones than other women.

"These findings are important because they clearly document for the first time with hard data some of the things that have been assumed about how calcium intake and exercise promote bone health," said Dr. John J.B. Anderson, professor of nutrition at the university's School of Public Health.

"There are an estimated 20 million Americans — mostly women — who are affected by osteoporosis, the gradual thinning of bone that can lead to fractures," Anderson said. "Our information underscores the importance of remaining active and getting enough calcium from milk products and other sources."

The study compared the amount of calcium intake and activity levels of 339 white women with precise measurements of the density and mineral content of their bones. It found the women who consumed more calcium and were more active had the strongest bones.

The volunteers in the study included 80 Seventh-day Adventists who practice a modified form of vegetarianism that allows milk and eggs as part of their diets.

When compared to women in the study who ate meat regularly, the vegetarians had a lower percentage of fat in their bodies, a significantly higher bone density and almost one-third greater mineral content in their bones.

Because of their relative affluence, other study participants, whose average age was about 77, were not believed to be poorly nourished, Anderson said.

"The people most susceptible to osteoporosis appear to be whites, especially women, with small frames and little fat who are inactive and who don't get sufficient calcium," Anderson said. "As a group, blacks tend to have stronger bones than whites and suffer fewer fractures."

Alderson said calcium carbonate is probably the best for of supplemental calcium, but he said patients should consult a doctor before any change in diet.

Senators Back Currin For Bench

RALEIGH (AP) — Sens. Jesse Helms and John East have recommended U.S. Attorney Samuel T. Currin as a nominee as U.S. District Judge for the Eastern District.

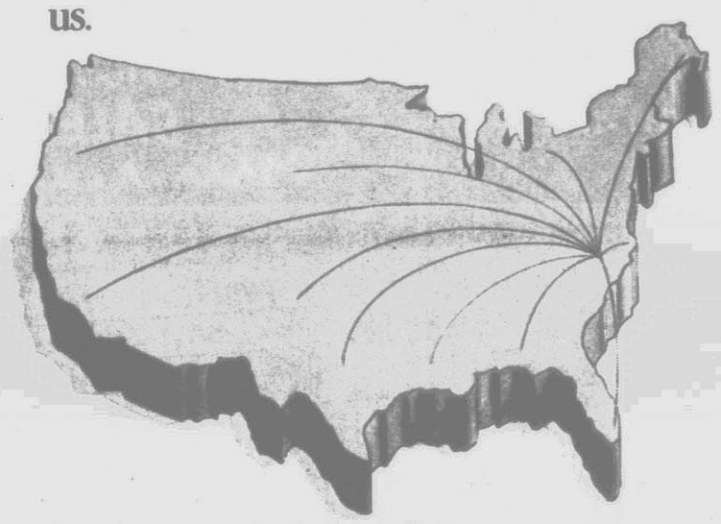

In a letter to President Reagan, Helms and East said they were nominating Currin because he "has the reputation of being a hard working and exceedingly capable United States Attorney."

The letter cited Currin's emphasis on the prosecution of sophisticated white-collar crime, fraud and major drug trafficking cases, and his involvement with the Drug Enforcement Task Force.

Tar Heels Combining Fun And Politics

By MARY ANNE RHYNE
Associated Press Writer

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Many North Carolina Democrats are going to their party's national convention like proud parents attending a child's high school graduation.

They're coming to watch a candidate they worked to get through the primaries come of age. Like any graduation, there will be celebrations, souvenirs and lots of pictures taken.

The convention also may bring serious issues for the delegation to face, including suggestions to eliminate second primaries like those in North Carolina.

Pat Ashley of Charlotte, a school administrator and Mondale delegate, said this is the first time she's really gotten involved in politics and she wanted to see the campaign through to the nomination.

"I'm going (to the convention) because I really believe in the candidates," she said.

This is the first time John Q. Burnette of Charlotte, vice president of NCNB National Bank and a Mondale delegate, has been a delegate. Burnette, also a member of the state Transportation Board, was an alternate in 1976.

"Banks have people in them who are very politically minded," Burnette said of his participation.

Burnette sees his trip to San Francisco as the outgrowth of the political education he began to acquire when he was 14 years old. That's when Burnette helped his mother pass out handbills for Franklin Roosevelt.

It's expected to cost the delegates $1,500 to $2,000 to attend the convention. Many held fundraisers because the state party does not offer financial help. The party does, however, offer advice on fundraising.

State Party Chairman David Price said there could be lengthy discussion whether the national party should condemn second primaries, an election practice confined mostly to the South.

In North Carolina a candidate must get 50 percent plus one vote to avoid a runoff, a practice that presidential candidate Jesse Jackson said works against election of women and blacks.

"I would hate to see some edict come down from the national party about such matters," said Attorney General Rufus Edmisten, who is leading the delegation with Gov. Jim Hunt. "I think it is best left to the states."

Others have strong feelings about runoffs.

"It's the most discriminataing thing I've ever seen," said Bob Drakeford of Carrboro, a Gary Hart delegate. "It's discriminating against folks who don't have all the cash in the world."

Drakeford said that if the matter is left up to the states there will be no change. He compared eliminating runoffs with prohibiting segregation and said it calls for a national initiative.

Hunt may be in the spotlight as a drafter of a controversial delegate selection plan and challenger to conservative spokesman Republican Sen. Jesse Helms. He may be asked to speak to the full convention.

California Lt. Gov. Leo McCarthy and his wife, Jackie, are hosting a $500-a-person cruise around the San Francisco Bay to build Hunt's campaign war chest. Special guest on the yacht will be actor Hal Linden.

There also is a Los Angeles luncheon at Jimmy's Restaurant on behalf of Hunt as the convention ends.

"Gov. Hunt will be sought out because of the Senate race and his leadership on key issues," Price said, citing the commission that drafted convention rules and Hunt's efforts nationally to improve education.

Hunt is challenging Helms' bid for a third term in a race some have called the most important outside of the presidential race.

The 88 delegates elected Hunt and Edmisten, also the party nominee for governor, to be co-chairmen. They will conduct meetings each morning before convention business begins.

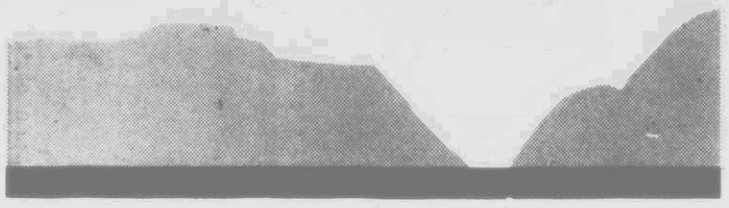

Hunt's legislative liaison, Zeb Alley of Waynesville, will be serving as legal counsel to the convention leaders. In that role, he could be called to help rule on floor fights.

Delegates for each of the three presidential candidates also served on national party committees on credentials, the platform and rules.

Willie Lovett of Durham, William Hodges of Washington and Karen Gottovi of Wilmington served on the Credentials Committee while Platform Committee members included Janice Faulkner of Greenville, Henry McKoy of Raleigh and Ronnie Thompson of Morganton.

On the Rules Committee were Chris Scott of Raleigh, Jane Patterson of Raleigh and Phyllis Lynch of Charlotte.

GREENSBORO (AP) — Greensboro-based Beaman Corp. more than doubled sales and went from loss to profit in earnings during its first fiscal quarter, which ended April 29.

Beaman reported sales of $8.5 million and earnings of $340,802 for the quarter, compared with sales of $3.7 million and a loss of $345,481 during the same quarter last year.

N.C. State Scientists Make Computer Picture Of Atom

RALEIGH, N.C. (UPI) — North Carolina State University physicists have produced the first computer picture of the birth of an atom of hydrogen, an accomplishment they said has importance for the basic understanding of atomic collisions.

The scientists say the work will help give them a glimpse of what goes on in lasers, in thermonuclear fusion devices being explored for possible energy development and in the hydrogen bomb.

Prior to the work by NCSU scientists, modern physicists relied on theoretical models of the hydrogen atom, the simplest and most abundant element in the universe. The theories helped explain the formation of hydrogen, with its one positive proton and its one negative electron, but scientists had difficulty sorting out the competing reactions involved.

"What we've done, for the first time, is to see what a real hydrogen atom looks like," said Dr. John S. Risley, associate professor of physics. "It relates to our fundamental understanding of matter."

Risley will present his findings and a related discovery about how the electronic charge circulates in the hydrogen atom on July 24 at the Ninth International Conference on Atomic Physics in Seattle, Wash.

The research team headed by Risley developed an experimental measuring technique that allows them to graphically depict the hydrogen atom formed in a collision involving helium.

The physicists worked in a special laboratory, using a 200,000-volt accelerator to shoot a proton into helium in a collision chamber.

The proton combined with an electron from the helium atom to form a hydrogen atom, leaving behind a helium ion.

Instruments measured the light given off, and a complex computer program based on established theories of atomic structure was used to analyze the measurements.

"With very detailed numerical calculations, you reconstruct what the hydrogen atom looks like at the moment it is formed," Risley said.

Now the physicists are working to analyze the motion of an electron inside an atom to see what internal currents are set up by the collision. They already have determined that the electron cloud, in which the electron moves, lags behind the proton, probably because of the attraction of the positively-charged helium ion.

"Hydrogen is the simplest atom," Risley said. "If we start to understand it, we begin to understand more complex atoms. We have laid the groundwork for extension into other fields." ———— upi

Suit Challenges At-Large Voting

STATESVILLE, N.C. (AP) — Black leaders have filed a civil rights lawsuit against the city of Statesville after four months of threatening legal action if the city's at-large voting system was not changed.

The suit alleges that the city's voting system denies blacks a chance to participate in government. It says that the city, the City Council and the Board of Elections and its supervisor violated the 1965 Voting Rights Act by diluting minority voting strength and ignoring the "one man, one vote" principle.

The suit was filed Friday in U.S. District Court in Statesville by Angus B. Thompson, a Lumberton lawyer and counsel for the state chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Plaintiffs are listed as the NAACP; the local NAACP chapter and its leader, Charles H. Roman; and Willie J. Beatty, the head of the Iredell Political Action Coalition.

The city's six council members are elected at large but represent districts. About a third of Statesville's 18,000 residents are black, but no black has ever been elected to the city council.

The lawsuit asks the federal courts to order the city to switch to a non-discriminatory election system or adopt a reapportionment plan for its six voting districts.

Reapportioning the voting lines to balance black and white populations would increase minority voting strength, the suit says. There is no black majority in any ward now.

The plaintiffs ask that those changes be carried out for the 1985 City Council election.

Black and white leaders began lobbying the City Council unsuccessfully six months ago to change the voting system. They proposed that each council member be elected by his ward and that two at-large positions be created.

The council postponed the matter for months, then defeated it unanimously with little discussion on April 16.

DUI Provisions Are Ruled Invalid

RALEIGH (AP) — A portion of the Safe Roads Act allowing drivers ages 16 and 17 to be charged if they have consumed any amount of alcohol violates federal and state equal-protection guarantees, a District Court judge says.

Judge George R. Greene issued his ruling Friday as he dismissed a charge of driving while impaired against Gregory E. Glosson, 16, of Raleigh. Glosson was charged June 10 when he registered an 0.03 blood alcohol level.

State law says a person is inxoticated if he has a blood alcohol level of 0.10 or higher.

Assistant District Attorney Dennis Franks, who prosecuted the Glosson case, appealed Greene's decision.

The law, enacted last year, bars drivers younger than 18 — who are considered "provisional" licensees — from driving with any amount of alcohol in their bodies.

Even Commissioner Says Title Game No Super Bowl

(See Related Stories Inside)

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — Commissioner Chet Simmons is the first to admit that the United States Football League's championship game is no Super Bowl.

Comparisons with the National Football League's title affair may be unavoidable, he says, but any conclusions must be placed in perspective.

"We're only in our second year and the other league has had 18 championship games," the USFL chief says. "The Super Bowl has gotten more glamorous. It's actually become more of an event than a game."

Premature or not, comparisons between Super Bowl XVIII, played in Tampa Stadium on Jan. 22, and Sunday night's USFL final between the Philadelphia Stars and Arizona Wranglers are inescapable.

It marks the first time rival leagues have held their championship events in the same city in the same year and is viewed locally as a "bonus" for an area eager to enhance its national image as a sports town.

But unlike January, when downtown streets were lined with colorful pennants greeting 65,000 out-of-towners looking for a good time, the week leading up to the USFL game lacked the electricity generated by the NFL.

Hotel lobbies were busy as usual but not jammed and the free-spenders who added another dimension to the city's nightlife were noticeably absent.

The USFL also chose not to compete with the NFL-sponsored social calendar accompanying Super Bowl week, holding several cocktail parties but nothing that rivaled the lavish party NFL Commissioner Pete Rozelle hosted at the Florida State Fairgrounds.

"Eighteen years from now maybe we'll be going through all that mind-blowing, hair-pulling, nerve-wracking situation we went through with the Super Bowl," said Rick Nafe, Tampa Stadium manager. "Certainly this (USFL) is a lot more relaxed."

In fact, with the exception of three banners hanging outside City Hall and a few scattered billboards, there was little to suggest the USFL's big event was even in town.

Still, there were indications that the league's second championship game would be more successful than the first which attracted a crowd of 50,906 in Denver.

More than 53,000 tickets had been sold by Friday, and Simmons said he was hopeful that at least 60,000 would file into the stadium for the 8 p.m. EDT showdown.

Media coverage was also more extensive, providing the USFL what it desperately seeks.

"We are significantly ahead of the credential requests compared to last year," the commissioner said. "That's very important to us."

A league spokesman said requests had nearly doubled to about 500. More than 2,200 writers and broadcasters covered Super Bowl XVIII.

Local officials, meanwhile, declined to speculate on the potential economic impact of the game, though they clearly expected it to be only a small fraction of the estimated $87.4 million windfall generated by the Super Bowl.

"Whatever we do is a bonus," said Shirley Ryals, a Tampa Sports Authority member who served on local task forces that helped plan both games.

A comprehensive study conducted for the Tampa Bay Super Bowl Task Force found the average stay in the area for a Super Bowl fan was 5.3 days and that each spent $210.25 per day.

Ryals suggested that the two-week period between the NFL Conference championship games and the Super Bowl gave fans of the teams in participating cities more time to make travel arrangements; encouraged longer stays and thus, more spending.

USFL fans in Philadelphia and Arizona, meanwhile, only had a week to make it to Tampa where about 30,000 tickets were sold locally before the Tampa Bay Bandits were eliminated from the playoffs.

The support the area showed for the Bandits in 1983 when the club ranked second in league attendance was instrumental in the decision to award the 1984 title game to Tampa over Jacksonville, New Orleans and Pontiac, Mich.

The USFL also was counting on the civic machinery that helped make Super Bowl XVIII a big success to remain intact.

It didn't, but Simmons indicated he was pleased with the reception the game received and with local preparation spearheaded by Bandits owner John Bassett.

"They have done everything they said they were going to do. The city has put itself out," Simmons said. "We're comfortable in town and comfortable with everything that was prepared for us.

"Now all we have to do," the commissioner added, "is get to Sunday and have a good football game."

Olympic Villages Open; Athletes Begin Arriving

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Three widely scattered Olympic villages opened their gates Saturday, and as athletes filtered in from around the world they were greeted by colorful ceremonies, choking smog, sweltering heat and tight security.

"Well, this is it!" Peter Ueberroth, president of the Los Angeles Olympic Organizing Committee, told a crowd of hundreds of spectators at the UCLA village. "What I want you to know is they (athletes) are boarding airplanes around the world."

Using scissors several feet long, Mayor Tom Bradley and other dignitaries cut a bright yellow-orange ribbon at UCLA so Zou Zhenxian, a triple jumper from China, could become the first athlete to enter.

Wearing a dark-blue blazer and necktie, Zou waved as he walked in. Zou, 29, from the northeast Chinese city of Dai Lian, plans to return Monday to Eugene, Ore., for additional pre-Olympic training. The games begin July 28.

Bradley, a freshman at UCLA in 1937, said: "I come to this campus this morning with a great sense of nostalgia."

Across town at the University of Southern California, another Olympic village opened, and athletes from Egypt, Italy, Romania, Japan, Australia and the United States entered.

"What you have before you," said USC alumnus Phillip Brubaker, the village mayor, "is a very fine university ... transformed into a home, into what will be a community of nations."

Temperatures and multicolored balloons soared as a shirt-sleeved Bradley told the UCLA crowd: "Today we open this village ... with a spirit of friendship that says to all, 'We welcome the world.'"

It hit 92 degrees before noon, and humidity was 37 percent — mostly from "subtropical" moisture from Mexico," National Weather Service spokeswoman Frankie Shaw said.

A pall of heavy smog hung over the city, continuing the longest July smog wave in 10 years, but Ueberroth has promised smog won't force any rescheduling of events.

Besides unarmed khaki-clad security officers with blue berets, scores of Olympic hosts and hostesses in powder-blue blazers were stationed every few feet throughout the entry area at UCLA and USC. Chain-link fences topped by barbed wire surround all three villages but were mostly festooned with official LAOOC colors — light blue, turquoise, violet, magenta, orange and peach — as well as Olympic insignia.

"I feel good," Ueberroth said in an interview. "Now the Games belong to the people, and the reputation of this community will be established."

He said 2 billion people around the world would watch the Games.

There had been complaints by athletes and coaches about the quality of living quarters, but Ueberroth said: "The athletes who come here are going to want to be here."

"You can see the color, you can see the friendship. ... It's going to be a great place to stay," Ueberroth told the crowd from the stage.

Facilities at the villages include dormitories, medical clinics, laundry rooms, training rooms, movie theaters and several cafeterias.

"We will be serving the athletes 470,000 pounds of meat, 103,000 loaves of bread, over 500,000 pounds of fruit and 680,-000 cartons of milk," said Faye Clarke, vice president and general manager of food services for the three villages.

For athletes with enough energy left to dance, discotheques also were available, as well as banks, hair salons, message centers, florist shops and video arcades were being finished.

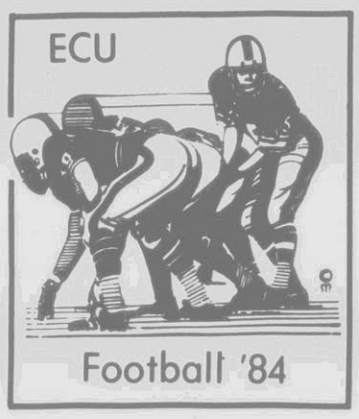

Plans call for about 6,600 athletes, coaches and officials to stay at USC, 4,400 at UCLA and 1,500 at UCSB in Goleta, 110 miles northwest of Los Angeles. But 24 athletes from Canada and Italy chose to stay at hotels rather than at UCSB, officals said.

Pirate Specialists Show Outstanding Talent In '85

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

(Editor's note: This is the second of a series of stories on the prospects for the 1984 East Carolina University football team. Each story will cover a specific area of play. Today's story is on the specialty game.)

There may not be any area on the East Carolina University football team for 1984 that is as experienced as the specialty game. The starters in each of the key positions return and offer outstanding ability.

If there is any hurdle to overcome, it might be the rebound of placekicker Jeff Heath from last year's sophomore jinx. As a freshman, the 6-0, 210-pounder, was perfect on his extra points and set new school records in field goals. But in his sophomore year, things got rocky. He missed three of 31 PAT tries and was only nine of 21 in field goals. He was still the team's leading scorer, and should move into the top ten all-time scorers at East Carolina early in 1984.

Coach Ed Emory feels that the Temple game, midway through the season, could have been the start of Jeff's troubles. In that game, he made only one of seven field goal attempts. "Maybe I put too much pressure on him when he kept missing," Emory said. "Maybe I shouldn't have kept him in there. But I felt that the best way for him to snap out of it was to keep on kicking."

"Even so, his kicking won the game for us at Southern Mississippi, and he had terrible conditions for it." ECU won that game, played in a driving rain.

This summer, Heath has been spending some time at some of the kicking camps around the country and Emory feels that he'll come back much improved.

While everyone returns on the field, the biggest loss the specialty game incurred came off the field in the death of volunteer coach Jack Boone, who coached the Pirates — and Emory — in the 50's and early 60's. Boone, a member of the East Carolina Sports Hall of Fame, died this past spring of a heart attack.

"I just haven't been about to cope with (Boone's death)," Emory said. "Nobody who isn't directly involved with our program knows the great loss we've suffered. He'd been with us four years and never took a penny for his work. He just took control of our specialty teams and he had a lot of input in other phases of our program. There's just no way we can replace him."

Still, Emory is excited about the prospects of the specialty game, with Heath, punter Jeff Bolch, snapper Stuart Ward and return specialist Henry Williams back.

Bolch (5-11, 181, Sr.) returns to handle the punting duties. Last season, on 50 kicks, he averaged 40.3 yards with only one blocked. That came during the heavy rains at Southern Mississippi. He should again handle those duties.

Backing him up are Robbie Bartlett (5-10, 185, Jr.) and Amos Adams (6-1, 196, So.). "We also have several walkons that we'll be looking at too," Emory said. "All three of those hit the ball well in practice this spring. Jeff matured a lot last year, and he stayed healthy and that really helped."

Heath's probable backups will include Dave Thomas (6-0, 205, Sr.), and Emory will, here too, be looking at some walkons.

Ward (6-2, 240, Jr.) returns as the snapper, a key job that is often overlooked. "He's as good as there is. I thought that (Whitley) Wilkerson was a good snapper, but Stuart is bigger and stronger. He also helps us on the travel squad since he's our back-up center and it gives us another place to take someone else."

Backing up Ward will be Kevin

Getting His Kicks

East Carolina kicking specialist Jeff Heath lets fly during action this past season. Heath is just one of the top specialty team performers returning to the Pirates this fall, giving that phase of the game outstanding experience and ability. Duke Greats Join McDonald Field

Two of Duke's all-time great basketball players, as well as the school's athletic director, and the president of the North Carolina Golf Association will be among the celebrities for the Ronald McDonald House Golf Tournament.

The tournament, which will aid in the construction funding of the house, will be held at Brook Valley Country Club on Monday, September 10.

A total of 42 teams, consisting of four area golfers and a celebrity, will compete in the Superball format tournament.

Jeff Mullins, considered by many to be the greatest player every to play for Duke, will be joined by Jack Marin, another Blue Devil all-America selection, in the field. Also playing will be Duke AD Tom Butters and former Duke athlete Dan Hill III, president of the N.C. Golf Association.

Mullins was an all-America selection in 1964 when he helped guide Duke to a second place finish in the NCAA tournament, marking the first time the Blue Devils ever made it to the national finals.

Mullins made the all-Atlantic Coast Conference team three times, from 1962-64, and was chosen to the All-East NCAA regional team the latter two years. He was picked to the Final Four team in 1964 when he led the tournament in scoring with a 29.0 point average.

His junior year, Mullins led the team to a third place finish in the NCAA Final Four, as the Blue Devils topped Oregon State after bowing to Loyola in the semifinals.

During Mullins tenure at Duke, the Blue Devils were ranked 10th, 2nd and 3rd by the Associated Press and 13th, 2nd, and 4th by UPI as they won the ACC tournament in '63 and '64. Mullins was selected as the ACC Player of the Year as a senior, also winning the Swett Memorial Award as Duke's most valuable player.

Mullins holds two Duke records, hitting 19 field goals in a single game, a mark shared by Dick Groat, and scoring 300 field goals in a season. His 43 points in a single game is third best, while his 750 season points is also third. He scored 1,888 points in his career, fifth best for a Blue Devil. He stands tenth in career rebounding with 776.

He played with the San Francisco Warriors after graduation, helping them to win the NBA title his final year as a pro.

• •

Marin, who overlapped Mullins, lettered at Duke from 1964-66, helping Duke to a second place ranking on both polls his senior year. That year, Duke went to the NCAA finals, taking third place again by topping Utah after losing to Kentucky.

Duke also won the ACC championship his senior year, and Marin was named to the all-America team that year. He was twice all-conference and shared the Duke Swett award with Steve Vacendak in 1966.

• •

Butters has served as the athletic director at Duke for seven years, guiding the university through an outstanding fund raising program for the improvement of Duke athletics.

Alcott, White Tied In Open Play

PEABODY, Mass. (AP) — Amy Alcott, who thrives on pressure and tough golf courses, and veteran Donna White, who is shooting for the moon, moved into a tie for the 54-hole lead Saturday in the U.S. Women's Open Championship.

Deadlocked at 218, two strokes over par, they will carry a one-shot lead into the final round Sunday.

Alcott, who numbers the U.S. Open among her 19 championships since joining the pro tour in 1975, gave her rivals something to think about overnight.

"It's going to be a dogfight," the 28-year-old Alcott said. "I'm going to put the ball on the ground, tee it up and rip it. I'm going to play my same aggressive, go-for-broke game."

"To win the U.S. Open would be ecstasy, the ultimate," said White, the 1976 U.S. amateur champion with only three LPGA victories since she began the pro tour in 1977. "It's something most golfers dream about. I consider this the most important tournament we play all year. Amy has won it before, won a lot of tournaments, so maybe she has an advantage, but I'm not going to think about it."

Blistering heat, sun-baked greens and gusty winds plagued most players for the third day in a row, but White and Alcott didn't have much trouble.

White, a 30-year-old mother who underwent back surgery last October, equalled par 72 on the tricky 6,285-yard Salem Country Club course for a three-round total of 218, two over regulation.

Then Alcott, the 1980 U.S. Open champ, came charging home to pull into a tie with just one round left in the $225,000 event worth $36,000, plus a ton of endorsement money, to the winner.

Alcott, 28, surrendered the undisputed lead with a double bogey 6 on the 52nd hole, but bounced back with a birdie 4 on the next green. Then she sank a clutch putt on the 54th hole for a third round 73 to go with her previous 71 and 74 for 218.

Rosie Jones, 24, a former Ohio State star seeking her first victory on the women's pro tour, remained in close contention despite a 75. Jones had a 219, just one stroke off the pace.

However, Penny Pulz, who shared the halfway lead at 144 with Jones, ballooned to a 78 for a 54-hole score of 222.

Japan's Ayako Okamoto, winner of two LPGA tournaments this year, ran into trouble on the back nine and took her second 74 in a row for 220.

Only three players among the 62 survivors of the 36-hole cut bettered par. They were 1974 U.S. Open champion and LPGA Hall of Famer Sandra Haynie, who equalled the best score here so far with a 69; 1981 Open champion Pat Bradley, who had a 70; and defending champ Jan Stephenson, who bounced back from a second round 81 for a 71.

Two-time Open champion Hollis Stacy and Betsy King, starting two strokes off the lead, each carded 75s for 221.

LPGA Hall of Famer Kathy Whitworth, winner of 84 tournaments but never the U.S. Open, had a 75 for 223. That tied her with Haynie, Bradley and Cathy Marino, who had a 73.

Patty Sheehan, the LPGA champion the last two years and the leading money winner in 1984, carded a third-round 74. That moved her into a tie at 224 with Stephenson, Heather Drew and Patti Rizzo. Drew had a 76 and Rizzo a 78.

The three scores pointed up the toughness of the course and the playing conditions. The last time the U.S. Open was played here was in 1954, when the late Babe Didrikson won by 12 strokes with a score of 291, three over regulation.

Third-round scores Saturday in the U.S. Women's Open golf championship at the 6,285-yard, par-72 Salem Country Club:

Donna White	75-71-72—218
Amy Alcott	71-74-73—218
Rosie Jones	73-71-75—219
Ayako Okamoto	72-74-74—220
Hollis Stacy	74-72-75—221
Betsy King	74-72-75—221
Lori Garbacz	74-76-72—222
Penny Pulz	75-69-78—222
Sandra Haynie	77-77-69—223

Bid For The Lead

U.S. Captures Davis Cup Match

By The Associated Press

John McEnroe and Peter Fleming turned back Jose-Luis Clerc and Martin Jaite 7-5, 4-6, 6-3, 6-1 in the doubles Saturday to give the United States an insurmountable 3-0 lead over Argentina in a best-of-five quarter-final Davis Cup match.

In contrast to two singles matches Friday night, Saturday's contest became an emotional battle. McEnroe and Clerc argued at the net, and McEnroe became so enraged by two line calls he bellowed, "America" at the officials.

With the match even at one set each, the Americans went ahead by winning a third set filled with service breaks.

The third set also featured a long verbal exchange between McEnroe and Clerc, bringing French referee Patrick Flodrops onto the court to restore order.

Earlier, McEnroe had appeared to drive a ball at Jaite, and then waved a finger at the teen-ager.

The Americans took charge in the fourth set, breaking Jaite's serve in the fourth game and Clerc's in the sixth. Fleming served out the match, and McEnroe put away a volley on match point.

In other World Group quarterfinal action Saturday, host Czechoslovakia took a 2-1 lead over France as Tomas Smid and Pavel Slozil teamed to beat Henri Leconte and Pascal Portes of 6-2, 5-7, 7-5, 4-6, 6-2 in the doubles event.

The Czechs took a 5-0 lead after 12 minutes of the first set. Leconte, fresh from his opening singles upset over Ivan Lendl Friday, then managed to win his serve, while Slozil lost his. But Portes' serve was broken and the set went to Czechoslovakia.

The two team traded trhe next two sets before Leconte and Portes stormed back in the fourth set after Smid lost his serve in the ninth game. But the Czechoslovakians appeared fresher late in the match and had little problems in the final set.

Reverse singles will take place Sunday.

Francisco Gonzalez and Victor Pecci, needing a victory to keep visiting Paraguay's hopes alive, teamed to win the doubles over Sweden and cut the Swedes' lead to 2-1.

Under him, Wallace Wade Stadium underwent a $5.1 million face lift, which included the Finch-Yeager sports health building. That complex includes the stadium press box, which may be used for other purposes throughout the year, rather that sitting idle.

Butters came to Duke from Ohio Wesleyan, serving first as baseball coach, then as assistant athletic director, associate athletic director and assistant to the chancellor before taking over as athletic director in 1977.

Butters played professional baseball, pitching for three seasons in the major leagues. In 1964, he had a 2-2 record in relief and has the fifth best ERA in the National League at 2.39. His career ended when he was injured in an automobile accident that year.

Hill is a familiar name to those who have followed Duke football over the years, since his father captained the 1938 Iron Dukes team that was unscored on, undefeated and untied until the Rose Bowl, when Southern California nipped them 7-3 in the late stages of the contest.

Hill, however, turned his efforts to golf, serving as captain of the Duke team as a senior. A scrach handicap golfer himself, Hill has advanced to the top position among amateur golfers in the state, serving as president of the golf association.

Samuel (5-11, 195, Jr.), "who could play for a lot of other teams," and Robert Lilley (6-1, 191, So.).

One of the more exciting players on the East Carlina team last year was junior college transfer Henry Williams (5-6, 180, Sr.). Williams twice carried back kickoffs for touchdowns, and also returned two punts for touchdowns. He averaged 31.1 yards per kickoff return, tops in the country, and 10.5 yards per punt return.

Joining him deep on kickoffs could be either Jimmy Walden (5-10, 174, Sr.) or Chris McLawhorn (6-0, 180, So.). Both of them also have the speed and ability to return the ball to good field position. One of them will also serve as the short man on punts.

"My biggest concern is who our holder (on placements) is going to be," Emory said. Last year, quarterback Kevin Ingram handled those duties and Emory thinks he did quite well.

This year, the holder could turn out to be Bolch. Emory feels he probably has more experience at it than anyone at ECU. "He holds for Jeff every day in practice, so he should know his duties. Other possibilities are quarterbacks Bartlett, Ron Jones and Darrell Speed. "I think Heath has good confidence in Bolch, and that means a lot."

There's a new rule in college football this year involving kickoff returns, too. Any kickoff which travels out of the end zone in the air will come back out to the 35 yard line. Those which touch the ground first, either in the playing zone or the end zone, will come back to the 20 if they bounce out. As usual, those caught and downed in the end zone will also come back to the 20.

"I really don't think it will open up the game that much," Emory said. "I'd be more in favor of kicking off from the 35 (instead of the 40) if that's what they want to do.

Seaver Battles Heat, O's For Win

BALTIMORE (AP) — Tom Seaver wilted a bit in the 91-degree heat, but the veteran knew just how to combat just another of a pitcher's problems.

Despite a ninth-inning home run by John Lowenstein, Seaver went the route on a seven-hitter in a duel with Mike Flanagan, and hurled the Chicago White Sox to a 3-2 victory over the Baltimore Orioles Saturday.

Two of the three hits off Flanagan were solo homers by Julio Cruz and Harold Baines, and an unearned run in the ninth provided Chicago with a pad to withstand the sixth homer by Lowenstein, who ended an 0-for-15 slump.

"I was a little bit tired," said Seaver, 8-6. "But one of the things you learn is to slow down the mechanics and not get overextended."

Seaver, 39, said he never tries to pace himself for a complete game.

"My object is to go seven innings," he said. "More than that is a bonus.

"You've got to get out of slumps as quickly as you can," said Seaver, who allowed 14 hits and 11 runs in 10 2-3 innings in his last two starts. "You do that by going back to basics."

Seaver walked one and fanned seven, one shy of his season high, while completing his fifth game in 18 starts. He retired 11 in a row before Lowenstein connected.

Baines was 0-for-14 lifetime against Flanagan when he hammered his 15th homer with one out in the fourth to snap a 1-1 tie.

The switch-hitting Cruz, batting .200, sliced his fourth homer into the right field bleachers in the third after Flanagan, 9-7, had retired the first eight Chicago batters.

Flanagan had retired 13 in a row when Carlton Fisk led off the ninth with a single, and the White Sox eked out what proved to be the winning run on a fielder's choice grounder by Dave Stegman.

Baines was safe after an attempted sacrifice was bobbled by third baseman Wayne Gross, and Fisk was forced at third on Ron Kittle's bunt. A wild pitch moved the runners ahead, and Greg Luzinski was walked intentionally to load the bases. Baines scored when Stegman grounded into a forceout, just beating the relay to first on the attempted double play.

The Orioles, who had won the first three games of the series, pushed across a run in the third to forge a 1-1. Floyd Rayford opened with a single and moved to second when Al Bumbry singled.

Both runners advanced on a sacrifice by Jim Dwyer and, with the infield back, Rayford scored as Cal Ripkin Jr. grounded out to shortstop Scott Fletcher. Seaver then fanned Eddie Murray.

The Orioles loaded the bases in the fifth on a single by Rayford, a walk to Dwyer and an infield hit by Ripken.

Oakland.....1

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — Dave Collins' ninth-inning battle with Oakland A's relief pitcher Bill Caudill lasted so long that he had trouble recalling the details.

"I know I fouled off seven pitches after the count was 1-2. I can't remember the first two strikes," said Collins, whose two-out double in the ninth gave the Toronto Blue Jays a 2-1 victory over Caudill and the A's Saturday.

"After every pitch I fouled off, I seemed to get more aggressive with the bat, and he just kept throwing harder and harder," Collins added. "To me, he's as good a relief pitcher as there is in the American League."

A few of the foul balls barely tipped Collins' bat, but A's catcher Mike Heath was unable to hold the ball for what would have been a strikeout. Heath and Caudill both thought the 1-2 pitch taken by Collins caught the outside corner of the plate for a strike.

"It was a ball, away and probably down low, too. But he wasn't trying to waste one. Caudill's not that kind of pitcher. He doesn't play games out there," Collins said.

"The horseshoe just wasn't on our side out there," Heath said.

Toronto pitcher Dave Stieb, 10-3, who won with a six-hitter, was an engrossed spectator during the Caudill-Collins matchup.

"It was one of those battles where there was either going to be a hit or a strikeout, and I was pulling for the hit," Stieb said.

Caudill, 8-2, relieved A's starter Steve McCatty in the eighth. He retired the first batter in the ninth before Ernie Whitt singled to right. Tony Fernandez pinch ran for Whitt and went to second on a drag bunt single by Alfredo Griffin.

The A's had only four hits off Stieb through six innings and got their fifth in the seventh when they tied the score 1-1.

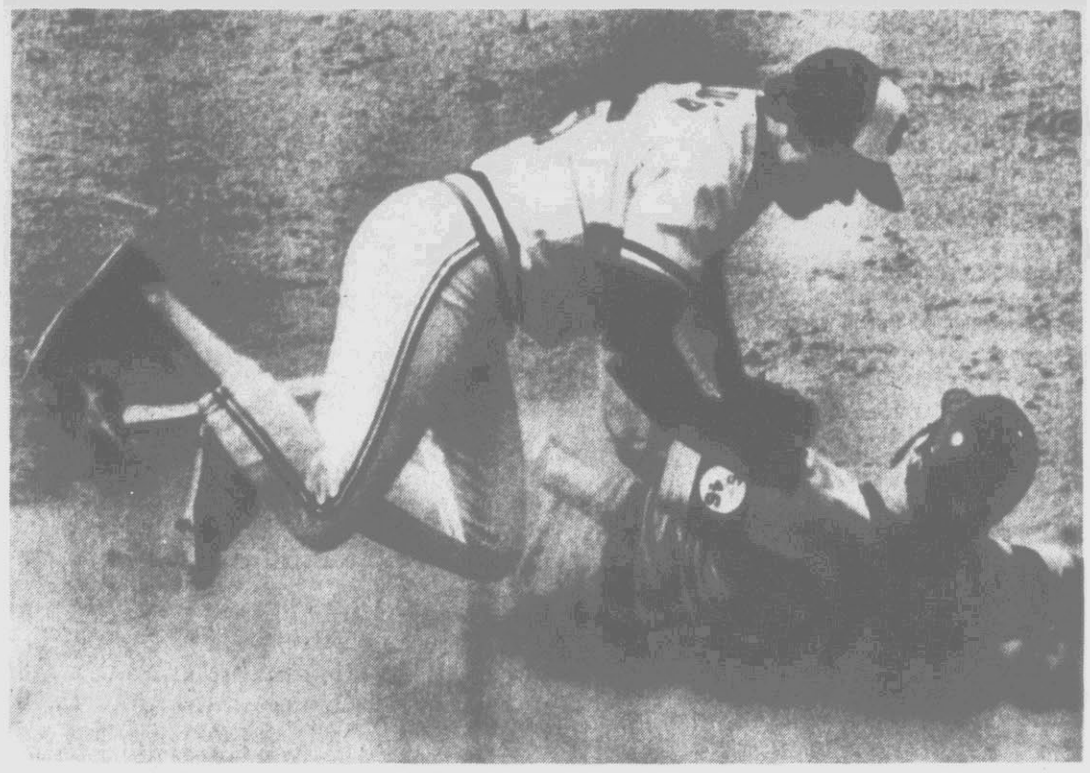

Bruce Bochte walked to open the A's seventh. Rickey Henderson, out of the starting lineup because of a bruised thumb, went in as a pinch runner and beat Stieb's throw to second when the pitcher tried for a force play after fielding a bunt by Mike Heath.

Toronto scored in the second inning on Griffin's one-out single. George Bell walked to open the inning and went to second on a single by Rance Mulliniks. Griffin singled to center field after Whitt popped out.

McCatty, who allowed seven hits, was relieved by Caudill after Willie Upshaw opened the eighth with a single.

Stieb faced a starting batting order including four players with averages under .200. Oakland regulars Henderson, Tony Phillips and Carney Lansford were out of the lineup because of minor injuries.

Can't Get Two

Greg Luzinski of the Chicago White Sox upends Baltimore Orioles second baseman Rich Dauer at second as the throw to first trying to get a double play was too late. The play allowed Harold Baines to score from third with what proved to be the winning run in the Sox 3-2 victory. (AP Laserphoto)

Shipp Signs With Miami

MIAMI (AP) — Oklahoma linebacker Jackie Shipp, the top draft choice of the Miami Dolphins, agreed to contract terms with the National Football League team, an official said Saturday.

Shipp's agent, Jack Mills, and Dolphins owner Joe Robbie reached agreement on the contract late Friday night. The 6-3, 235-pound rookie, a holdout since camp officially opened Thursday, arrived at the team's St. Thomas University training facility Saturday.

"Obviously, I'm pleased that Shipp has come to terms," said Dolphins Coach Don Shula. "We're going to give him as much practice time as possible within the next few weeks."

The Dolphins rookies and free agents will travel to Atlanta Monday to begin three days of practice against rookies and free agents with the Atlanta Falcons.

Shipp said he "felt both joy and relief to have this over with."

"I'm not one to show much emotion, but I feel real relaxed. There were just a couple of hangups, but we worked worked them out fine," Shipp said.

Joe Carter, a running back selected in the fourth round, is the only draft choice who hasn't agreed to terms with the team, Vaca said.

He said contract talks also were continuing with veteran tackle Eric Laakso.

Pirates Make Quick Work Of Giants

PITTSBURGH (AP) — The Pittsburgh Pirates played their longest game and one of their shortest games of the season within a 24-hour span, but they didn't come up short in either contest.

After beating San Francisco 4-3 in an 18-inning marathon nightcap of a twi-night doubleheader Friday, the Pirates breezed to a 6-2 victory Saturday over the Giants as Rick Rhoden pitched a five-hitter and utilityman Jim Morrison drove in four runs.

The game took exactly three hours less than the 5 hours, 11 minutes needed to play Friday's nightcap, which didn't end until the unbaseball-like hour of 1:32 a.m. EDT.

"We needed a quick one like this today," said Morrison, who had a two-run single and a home run to key the Pirates' attack.

"You really like to give your bullpen a rest after a night like last night and Rick Rhoden did that for us," said Pirates Manager Chuck Tanner.

The Pirates and Giants wound up playing 36 innings of baseball in a 24-hour span, including Pittsburgh's 8-2 victory in the first game of Friday's twinbill.

"I can't ever remember doing that much before," Morrison said. "You sure don't see that very often."

The Pirates took major league baseball's worst record into the All-Star break but now have won five games in a row, including four straight over the Giants. The Pirates lost all six games they played in San Francisco this season, but can sweep the six-game season series between the two clubs in Pittsburgh with a victory Sunday.

"I have no explanation for it. That's what makes baseball the game it is," Tanner said. "Last year, we won one game all season in Chicago but they only won once here. If you could explain it, you'd be Houdini."

"I just want to win Sunday," Morrison said. "We have a lot of catching up to do. We owe a lot of people a lot of runs and a lot of base hits."

Manager Frank Robinson was almost at a loss for words when asked to explain the Giants' constant losing in Pittsburgh.

"It's the same team we played two weeks ago," Robinson said. "We're just not playing the way we're capable of playing."

Rhoden, 7-7, retired 14 batters in a row at one point and struck out six while walking two. After Manny Trillo singled with one out in the second, Rhoden did not allow another baserunner until Jeff Leonard doubled to lead off the seventh.

The Pirates jumped on loser Mark Davis, 3-9, for two runs in the first. Tony Pena singled and Bill Madlock doubled with two out before Morrison lined a two-run single into left field.

"It sure was nice to score some runs early for a change ... it really helps our pitchers," Morrison said. "We haven't been helping our pitchers enough."

Chili Davis had given the Giants a short-lived 1-0 lead when he led off the game with his eighth homer of the season. Trillo lofted a sacrifice fly in the seventh for the Giants' other run.

Dale Berra made it 3-1 in the Pirates' fifth with his fourth homer of the season, a solo shot and his first since May 20.

Madlock hit his fourth homer of the season in the sixth and Morrison hit the next pitch for his third homer, marking the first time the Pirates have belted consecutive homers in a game this season.

The Pirates added a run in the eighth. Pena beat out an infield hit and Benny Distefano, attempting to sacrifice, popped out to third baseman Joel Youngblood. Youngblood, trying to double Pena off first, threw wildly as the Pirates' catcher went to third. Pena scored on Morrison's grounder.

CHICAGO (AP) — If there was any doubt before, Orel Hershiser pitched his way out of the bullpen and into a job as a fulltime starter for the Los Anglees Dodgers Firday.

After Hershiser's two-hit, 8-0 shutout of the Chicago Cubs, Dodgers Manager Tom LaSorda said the 25-year-old rookie right-hander would definitely start in five days.

Hershiser, 5-3, struck out nine, allowed only three fly balls and only two Cubs runners got as far as second base.

"You will not find many games pitched that well in this ballpark against this kind of a ballclub with the wind blowing out," said LaSorda.

"I've got the ball low and made the batters hit my pitch," said Hershiser, who added that his secret for success was getting the batters "to hit a lot of ground balls and hope my sinker is working."

"He didn't make any mistakes in the strike zone, and we helped him by swinging at some bad balls," said Chicago Manager Jim Frey.

Hershiser, who had been a reliever in the early part of the season, has won his last three starts since beating the Cubs 7-1 on June 29. He has allowed only one run in the last 35 2-3 innings

Hershiser allowed only two singles and did not give up a hit after the third inning. The only hits off the rookie right-hander were by Jay Johnstone in the first and Bob Dernier in the third.

Mike Marshall doubled in the second inning off loser Scott Sanderson, 5-2, and scored on Mike Scioscia's single. One out later, Rivera hit his first major league homer into left-center field bleachers to give the Dodgers a 3-0 lead.

Sid Bream doubled to score Franklin Stubbs and Marshall in the sixth inning. Stubbs homered into the right-center field stands to lead off the eighth inning.

The Dodgers scored twice more in the ninth. Rivera started it with a double and went to third on a sacrifice by Hershiser. Steve Sax's grounder brought Rivera home, and Sax wound up at second when Cubs third baseman Ron Cey booted the ball. Sax went to third on a grounder by Stubbs and scored on Ken Landreaux's single.

Moore Stuns Benitez With 2nd Round Knockout

"No, I wasn't surprised the fight was stopped," Moore said after referee Gerlando Lucia of Italy halted Saturday's middleweight bout at 1:18 of the second round. "He was just sitting in the corner taking punishment. He has to come out and fight."

Moore, the former World Boxing Association junior middleweight champion, knocked Benitez down with a right in the final minute of the first round and Benitez never seemed to recover as Moore kept him pinned in his corner.

"I was surprised he stayed in the corner," Moore said. "He used to be good in the corner."

"It was an accumulation of punches," said Moore, describing the blow that prompted Lucia to stop the bout. "It was hard. He just fell for the old right hand over the left."

Benitez said he sprained an ankle while backing up in the first round before the knockdown. He said he remained in the corner, hoping the pain would go away, but it did not and said he had trouble moving around in the second round.

Coastal Plains South Wins First Contest

The Coastal Plains South 16-Year-Old Senior Babe Ruth League All-Stars took a 1-0 lead in their best-of-three series with Coastal Plains North last night in district tournament play, winning 2-1.

The 17-18-Year-Old game, also between Coastal Plains North and South, had been delayed by rain and lightning after three innings of play as of a late report.

CP North took the initial lead in the game, scoring its only run in the second inning. Tommy Mobley doubled and then scored on a single by Mike Leggett.

CP South then tied it up in the third. Mike Elks walked, stole second and moved to third on an infield out. Randy Mills then brought him home with a suicide squeeze bunt.

The game winning run scored in the sixth as Lee Hardee hit a solo homer for a 2-1 lead that held the rest of the way.

No one had more than one hit for CP South, while Mobley and Leggett each had two for CP North.

The two teams, the only 16-year-old entrants in the tournament, resume play today at 5 p.m. A victory by the South would give them the title and sent them into State play on Friday at Goldsboro. A North win would force a deciding game on Monday.

In the 17-18-Year-Old tournament, the CP North and CP South game, if incompleted Saturday night, will be finished this afternoon, followed by the winner meeting Roanoke Rapids in the winners' bracket of the double elimination tournament. The winner of the event goes to the State Tournament at Jacksonville starting Friday.

Pitt Youths Win Opener

HAVELOCK — Pitt County's 13-Year-Old Babe Ruth All-Stars won their opening game in the state tournament yesterday, downing Durham, 2-1.

Anthony Harrison held Durham to only two hits in the contest, striking out five and walking three.

Pitt pushed into the lead in the second innning, scoring both runs. Ty Little doubled and scored on another two-bagger by Mark Smith. James Woodard walked and Darrell Moore singled, driving in Smith.

The lone Durham run crossed in the fourth inning, but Pitt quelled the rally and held on to claim the victory.

Pitt County returns to action today at 6 p.m. in Havelock, facing the winner of a later Saturday game between Dare County and New Bern.

Wood Takes Busch Lead

WILLIAMSBURG, Va. (AP) — Nee Willie Wood, a slightly-built, soft-spoken little fellow, set still another seasonal record and took 4-stroke command going into Sunday's final round of the $350,000 Anheuser-Busch Golf Classic.

His closest pursuers, Wayne Levi and host pro Curtis Strange, the men he played with in Saturday's third round and the men who will be his partners again Sunday, agreed the tournament is in his hands, that it's his to win or lose over the last 18 holes.

"If he shoots more than two under par, he's gonna win. For me to have a chance, I'm going to need some help from him."

Levi agreed.

"If he plays fair to good, it's gonna be tough to beat him," Levi said, and indicated it was all up to the rookie who has led all the way.

"If he's around par, if he lets us get within one or two, then it's going to be tougher on him."

"I'm going to try to keep the same strategy, try to play aggressive, keep firing at the pins, not back off," Wood said.

Wood, 5-foot-7 and 135 pounds, reeled off a string of four consecutive birdies on his way to a third-round 66 and completed three trips over the 6,746 yard Kingsmill Golf Club course in 197, 16 under par and the lowest 54-hole total on the PGA Tour this year.

Wood also set the seasonal mark of 131 for 36 holes after Friday's play.

Only his two playing companions on this muggy day on the banks of the James River, Levi and host pro Strange, could stay within striking distance of Wood, the low qualifier in last year's PGA Tour Qualifying School.

Levi, winner of six career titles, scattered seven birdies across his card in round of 68 and finished 54 holes at 201, including a bogey on the final hole after the national television cameras had ended their coverage for the day.

Strange, whose home is on this golf course, bogeyed the first three holes, but rallied with an eagle and three birdies for a 69 and 202 total.

Wood, with rounds of 63, 68 and 65 has led by margins of two, two and four strokes in the chase for the first title of his short career.

"I was a little nervous when we started today," he admitted, and got away to a rather uncertain start.

He missed a birdie putt of about four feet on the first hole, then missed the second green and bogeyed the hole.

"I tried to relax, settle myself down. I took a couple of deep breaths, got a drink of water," he said in his Oklahoma drawl.

Then, he got on a roll.

He punched a sand wedge to four feet and birdied the third. He hit a 4-iron second shot to six feet and birdied the fourth. He used the 4-iron again, this time from the tee on the par-3 fifth and came within one foot of making a hole in one. The tap-in was routine. And on the sixth, he rapped in a 20-footer for his fourth consecutive birdie.

On the back nine, Wood holed from about 20 feet on the 12th hole and then coaxed in a wide-breaking 15-foot birdie putt on the 13th.

That gave him a four-shot lead. Levi cut it to three on two occasions, but bogeyed two of the last three holes.

Third-round scores Saturday in the $350,000 Anheuser-Busch Classic on the 6,746-yard, par-71 Kingsmill Golf Club course:

Olympic Security Ready For 'Challenge Of The Century'

LOS ANGELES (AP) — An 18,000-person security force backed up by 77 helicopters, 500,000 rounds of ammunition and super-sophisticated command centers is ready to meet "the law enforcement challenge of the century" — protecting the athletes and spectators at the Summer Olympics.

Commanders of the force, drawn together from more than 50 local and federal agencies, say they are ready for everything from pickpockets to suicide terrorist attacks.

Efforts range from placement of burglar alarms at Olympic Villages to welding shut manhole covers to prevent telephone-line sabotage. But the overriding concern is with terrorists and their potential targets.

"It doesn't take any great genius to figure out where the attention is going," said Cmdr. Paul Myron of the Los Angeles County Sheriff's Department. "All you have to do is look at the headlines to figure out which teams have the biggest risk — the Turks and Israelis."

Indeed, one letter threatening the Turkish team arrived recently at the Rome offices of the Italian news agency ANSA, and it was signed by "ASALA," the acronym for the Armenian Secret Army for the Liberation of Armenia, one of the world's most active terrorist groups.

But after analysis at the Olympics Anti-Terrorist Operations Center near the UCLA Olympic Village, the note was found to be of little value, the Los Angeles Times reported.

"Even if the letter was genuine, there's little more we could do to protect the Turks than is already being done," said Ken Hill, White House Olympic Security coordinator.

There are dozens of command centers in addition to the two chief ones to be used during the Games: the Olympic Security Coordination building in downtown Los Angeles and the Anti-Terrorist Operations Center at FBI headquarters.

Organized by Olympic security chief Edgar F. Best over a two-year period, with some projects as long as five years in the making, the security force will combine high technology with low profile.

Best, a former FBI agent, called it "the law enforcement challenge of the century."

"What we are talking about is the doctrine of reasonableness," Best said in an interview. "This is an international sporting event, not a security event."

The security pricetag for the Games has been estimated at nearly $150 million, with federal costs alone at more than $80 million.

The Anti-Terrorist Operations Center, under Los Angeles FBI Agent-in-Charge Richard Bretzig, is monitoring the activities of more than 40 terrorist groups that could threaten the Games.

Besides that, an analysis was made of each of the 140 teams attending the Games to find what special security needs they might have.

The Times said it obtained documents of the study, which identify 105 separate international conflicts that could affect security at the Games.

Those conficts, the newspaper said are classified as "red" (highest risk), "orange" medium risk, and "yellow," lowest risk.

Besides the Turks and Armenians, other "red" category conflicts include conflicts between Chad and Libya, Ethiopia and Somalia, and Sudan and Libya.

While refusing to detail the studies, Bretzig said his assessment of where some threats might come from.

"Because of the presence of the large Armenian community in Los Angeles, and the recent history of terrorism, the Armenian terrorist groups must be taken very seriously, Bretzig said.

The agent also identified Croation, Palestinian, and Iranian groups which could be trouble. Bretzig and others told the Times that Libyan terrorists were a concern because of the volatility of the country's leader, Moammar Khadafy.

Bretzig said two domestic groups were also cause for concern: FALN, a Puerto Rican nationalist group, and Omega 7, an anti-Castro group made mostly of Cuban exiles.

Besides the studies, security experts have also made photographic surveys of every foot of the Olympic villages and venues.

And there is one other high-risk team security chiefs are concerned about.

"How better can some terrorist embarass the U.S. than by an attack on an American athlete," Los Angeles County Sheriff Sherman Block said. "With the withdrawal of the Russians, that danger increased. The Soviets would love to point out that we couldn't even protect our own and thus show their boycott was justified."

The visible security is the hardware and personnel.

Last year, Congress authorized a $50 million Defense Department appropriation for material assistance to local law enforcement agencies involved in the Games.

Hill said federal agencies, including the FBI, Secret Service, Customs, Immigration and Naturalization Service, among others, are planning to spend between $20 million and $30 million on the Games.

Most of that went to a $12 million radio system that links the 50 agencies under one network, with all messages scrambled to prevent eavesdropping; ultra-sophisticated "intrusion detection systems" to protect the three Olympic Villages; 77 helicopters, some leased and some provided by the Army or California National Guard, to be used for observation and transport.

The rest of the federal money went for items such as 500,000 round of ammunition, 330 M-16 rifles, night-vision devices and tents.

There are also 14 bomb-sniffing dogs from the military to beef up local forces, along with 70 military bomb disposal experts.

Of the 18,000 people in the security force, about 10,000 will be unarmed private security guards, mostly young people wearing khaki uniforms and blue berets.

More Than Just A Championship

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — The United States Football League descended on Tampa this week with serious business at hand — business that will be far from finished after the Philadelphia Stars and Arizona Wranglers decide the league championship Sunday night.

Upcoming collective bargaining negotiations with the players association; sagging television ratings and attendance, as well as a possible shift from a spring to fall playing schedule are all matters of concern that will remain unresolved when league officials disperse after the title game.

Commissioner Chet Simmons, during a "state of the USFL" news conference Friday, assured only one thing about the future — that there will likely be some changes in the way the 2-year-old league operates.

He avoided discussion of specifics, but made it clear that the league has to find a way to "maximize" television revenue; boost league-wide attendance and curb spending — possibly through a salary cap that owners are expected to seek when talks with the union get underway.

"We have to be cautious, careful and intelligent about how we spend money," Simmons said, adding that tightening wallets won't necessarily mean an end to the movement of players from the National Football League to the USFL.

"I don't see any change in that," he added. "The question is how much of it will go on and how high we can go to pay for these players before you put yourself out of business economically."

As to whether a shift to a fall schedule will solve the league's attendance and television problems, Simmons said he doesn't know.

"My gut feeling is I don't believe that we can stay exactly the way we were the first two years," the commissioner said.

Simmons acknowledged, however, that while a spring to fall move might prove beneficial for some franchises that it conceivably could prove disastrous for others that are enjoying healthy situations under the current setup.

"There are different problems in different markets," he said. "In a city like New York, there are 13 different sports attractions, counting thoroughbred and harness racing, when we're just getting started in the spring.

"In the fall, you'd only have to deal with the end of baseball and the beginning of basketball and hockey, which is no problem."

Simmons said the league is awaiting the results of two studies that will help determine its future.

One, which is near completion, will explore the business side of playing in the fall as opposed to spring, and the other will gauge public opinion of the USFL.

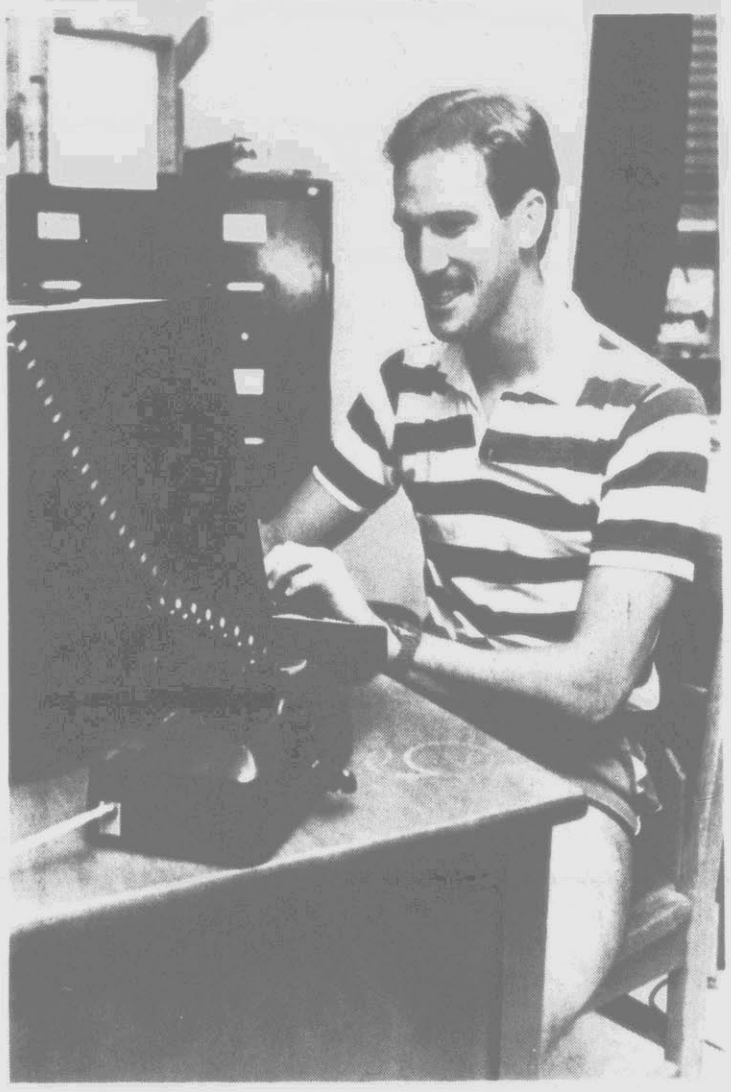

Meanwhile, Simmons said he hoped to continue television negotiations with ABC-TV on several fronts, including the possibility of more regional telecasts.

USFL ratings dropped during the 18-game regular season from 6.1 in 1983 to 5.6 this year, but the league is still hoping to get more than the $15 million the network wants to pay for rights next year.

The local television blackout for Sunday's 8 p.m. EDT championship game in Tampa Stadium was lifted Friday night when officials said ticket sales had climbed past 57,000.

Philadelphia is a six-point favorite to win the title that eluded them last year when it came up two points short against Michigan in the league's inaugural title contest in Denver.

"We were extremely disappointed last year when we didn't win," Stars Coach Jim Mora said Friday. "From that moment last year, it has been the goal of every person in the Philadelphia organization to come back and win this thing.

Dear Olympian

Steve Rash types a message on the console of a Telecommunications Device for the Deaf (TDD) at East Carolina University where the track star is majoring in physical education. A dedicated athlete, Rash took a first in the 110 meters high hurdles and finished second in the 400 meters intermediate hurdles at the recent Deaf Olympics qualifying trials in Texas.

ECU Student In Deaf Olympics

By GEORGE THREEWITTS
ECU News Bureau

In his appearance Steve Rash, a physical education major at East Carolina University, resembles most other athletes. He's tall, muscular and rigidly adheres to the athletic style of wearing gym shorts, T shirt and running shoes.

But the 21-year-old track speedster from Durham completes his wardrobe with some accessories that will never be sold in athletic and sporting goods stores. Folded into each of his ears is a small, flesh-colored device that enables him to hear. Rash is legally deaf.

Some people would call a hearing impairment a handicap but not Rash. His hearing has done nothing to slow him down. He's one of the fastest deaf athletes in the world and is competitive with many track runners with normal hearing.

In qualifying trials for the Deaf Olympics conducted recently at the University of Texas in Austin, he captured first place in the 110 meters high hurdles. His performance qualifies him for representation on the U.S. Track Team at the Deaf Olympics that will be held next summer in Los Angeles.

"I wanted to represent East Carolina in what I can do and I did," he said.

He also competes with the ECU track team and is looking forward to next year's season with the Pirates. He was redshirted this spring.

To qualify for the Deaf Olympics, an athlete must have at least a 55 percent hearing loss. Rash says his loss has been measured at about 70 percent.

When he runs he removes his hearing aid which doesn't present any real problems, he says. Unlike some deaf runners who must crane their necks to see the smoke from the starting pistol, Rash says he can usually hear the noise of the gun and even feel its vibration. In deaf competition the starting gun is supplemented by a flag dropped at the start of the race and sometimes by lights and an electronic pressure device in the starting blocks.

Track is a sport that is fairly new to Rash. While growing up in Durham, he said the sport didn't appeal to him. "I was interested in baseball. I even used to sleep with a bat," he said.

He attended high school at the N.C. School for the Deaf in Morganton and was disappointed at first when he discovered the school didn't have a baseball team.

"I played football and basketball and the coach there convinced me to give track a try too. I did. I liked it," he said.

In his sophomore year at N.C. School for the Deaf he won the conference championship in the high and low hurdles. In his senior year he won again and competed in the sectional and regional prep track meets and also in the World Games for the Deaf at Clogne, West Germany. While his performance at the World Games was hampered by an injury, he won a silver medal and his second place finish in the high hurdles broke the national record for the deaf in that event.

The greatest challenge in track, according to Rash, is the 400 meters intermediate hurdles because it requires a runner to go at full speed during the entire race. "You have to be both mentally and physically prepared to do well in this event," he said.

"I am going to change my event this year and run the intermediates. It's challenging," he said. "Very challenging."

Stars Rookie Will Get A True Test

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — When you're in your first year and you're getting ready to face a veteran known as "General," Mike McClearn, the rookie, says you concentrate and try not to get outsmarted.

And that's McClearn's battle plan for Sunday, when the Philadelphia Stars young offensive tackle squares off against Arizona Wranglers defensive end John "General" Lee, as their teams clash for the United States Football League championship.

The 6-foot-4, 295-pound McClearn got the starting nod in Philadelphia's third game of the season when veteran Brad Oates was injured.

Lee, 6-2, 261 pounds, has been playing professionally for nearly nine years, and this season he sacked opposing quarterbacks 19½ times for 137 yards in losses.

Stars Coach Jim Mora said Arizona has the best pass-rushing unit in the league, and McClearn will be expected to do his share to hold Lee & Co. in check.

"We did not do a good job defending our passer the first time we played them this season," Mora said. "If we don't do it Sunday night, it will be a long night."

McClearn is aware of Mora's concern.

"I feel pressure because I'm one of the younger players on the offensive line," he said Friday. "The coaches have talked to me, the players have talked to me. Everybody wants to make sure I know what I'm doing.

"But their whole defensive line is excellent. I'm not approaching it from the point that I've got to stop just Lee. I've just got to look out for him.

"The thing is concentration. If I don't concentrate, he'll beat me."

McClearn felt he had some success against Lee the last time the teams met, when the Stars pulled out a 22-21 fourth-quarter victory.

"He came away with just one sack, even though he got around me a few times," McClearn said.

"I think he felt like I was young and inexperienced, and he could outsmart me. I was pretty confident because it was my third start of the season. I was gung-ho, just about ready to take on anything."

But McClearn, a Temple graduate who joined the Stars after being cut by Cleveland of the National Football League, knew he could improve over that day's performance.

"We just got out of that one," he said. "Me and George Gilbert, who plays next to me, kind of had some problems on the left side. We weren't satisfied with our performance. I wasn't used to playing with him, or he with me."

McClearn has been working hard since then to improve his blocking, and has gained experience with eight starting assignments. He will start again Sunday for the injured Oates.

"I guess you could say Brad is definitely a starter because he has the experience, when he's healthy. I come in as a safety valve," McClearn said. "But he has helped me out with things, like dealing with the General."

"He's an excellent pass-rusher, smart and quick," McClearn says of Lee. "He gets you to commit yourself and then he beats you. I think I'll have to be on top of my game Sunday."

ECU Tickets Go On Sale

East Carolina Unversity football fans will again have the opportunity to purchase tickets to all Pirate home games at Wachovia Bank outlets beginning Monday.

This is the fourth year of the program, and tickets will be available at 45 Wachovia branches in 28 eastern North Carolina cities.

ECU, which finished the 1983 season with an 8-3 record and was ranked 20th in the final Associated Press poll, opens the 1984 season with a rematch at Florida State in Tallahassee, Fla. The Pirates open their home slate against Temple University Sept. 8 at Ficklen Stadium.

Other home games are Georgia Southern Sept. 22, homecoming against East Tennessee State Oct. 20 and the finale against Southern Mississippi Nov. 10.

Tickets for the 1984 home games are $11 for reserved seats on game day, but season tickets are available for $40. The Economy Plan will again be available, allowing fans to purchase tickets in units of five for half price in selected areas of the stadium.

Greenville Wins First BR Outing

PINETOPS — Tom Moye hurled a one-hitter — just missing a perfect game — as Greenville's 14-15 Babe Ruth All-Stars defeated Greene County, 11-0, Friday in the opening round of the district tournament.

Moye, who struck out eight, walked none in the contest. The lone baserunner to reach against him was the man who got the only hit, Monroe. That came in the fifth inning.

Meanwhile, Greenville was making progress on the offensive, rolling up four runs in the second inning to put the game away.

Scott Davis opened the second with a double and Eric Jarman reached on a fielder's choice. Travis King then walked, loading the bases. Axel Smith followed with a double, driving in all three runners. Smith then scored the fourth run on a single by Jason Galloway.

In the third, Greenville picked up three more runs for a 7-0 lead. Moye walked and Davis singled. Terry Warren singled in both of them, scoring himself on a hit by Jarman.

Greenville then went on to add single runs in each of the remaining four innings for the final 11-0 margin.

In other action in the tournament, Washington defeated Tarboro, 8-6, to also advance in the winner's bracket.

However, the game between Pitt County and Nash County was rained out and was rescheduled for Saturday afternoon.

Saturday's remaining schedule had Martin County, which had a first round bye, facing Washington, and Greenville meeting the Pitt-Nash winner in the winners' bracket of the double elimination field. Greene County was to face the loser of the Pitt-Nash game in the final game of the day, with the victim there falling out of the field.

In Greenville, meanwhile, the start of the Senior Babe Ruth League district tournaments for 16 and 17-18 year olds, was rained out and reset for Saturday evening.

Olympians Win Physical Game

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Pushed and shoved and hammered and hacked.

The U.S. Olympic basketball team got all it wanted Friday night in taking a 94-78 victory over an aggressive National Basketball Association team.

"That definitely was the most physical game we've play against them," said Olympic guard Alvin Robertson of Arkansas. "But that's really going to help us. We're going to have to play physical teams in the Olympics."

"That was tougher than any game I've played in except for the Chicago playgrounds," added Glenn Rivers of the Atlanta Hawks with a laugh.

There were 74 fouls called in the game, 36 against the U.S. team and 38 on the NBA squad.

Olympic Coach Bob Knight was assessed a technical foul early in the second half after arguing a charging call on Olympian guard Vern Fleming. He was a vocal participant from the sidelines the remainder of the game.

"People shouldn't be subjected to that kind of officiating," Knight said in a post-game news conference. "The officiating was horrendous tonight, but we should be prepared because that thing can happen in the Olympics."

The teams also nearly came to blows on two occasions in the final half.

Patrick Ewing, the center from NCAA champion Georgetown, squared off against Danny Schayes of the Denver Nuggets after bumping under the basket. They had to be separated by their teammates.

"I don't think Ewing got upset," Knight said. "I thought Ewing handled himself well tonight."

Rivers believes that Knight's rages at the referees will serve the Olympians well in the Games.

"I think the refereeing tonight is typical of what they'll face in the Olympics," he said. "Coach Knight will neutralize all of that.

"He keeps the referees nervous. He gets them to making the calls he wants."

The play, for the most part, was sloppy.

The NBA team, coached by Oscar Robertson, turned the ball over 34 times while the Olympians made 20 floor mistakes in the wide-open game.

The Olympians broke the game open midway through the final half, going on a 17-2 run, all from the free-throw line, to take a 79-58 lead with 5:21 to go. Robertson sank five free throws during the spurt.

The NBA team could get no closer than 90-76 on Rivers' 17-footer with 40 seconds left in the game.

With Chris Mullin scoring 12 points, the U.S. team took a 41-34 lead at halftime. Mullin and Robertson hit two baskets apiece from the field during an 8-0 burst that gave the Olympians a 39-32 lead late in the half.

Knight said he told a couple NBA players in the first half to "play hard, knock us around because that's got to help us in the long run.

"And I thought we came back in the second half and played as physical as they did."

Upper Volta Won't Compete

MOSCOW (AP) — Upper Volta has withdrawn from the Summer Olympics in Los Angeles in a move designed to protest the participation of Great Britain's rugby team in a South African competition, the Soviet news agency Tass reported Saturday.

Tass reported that the African state won't compete "alongside those who encourage racism."

Reporting from Cotonou, Tass said the message from Upper Volta leader Thomas Sankara was sent to the Organization of African Unity and Ethiopean leader Mengistu Haile Mariam.

Tass said the announcement also encouraged other African nations to follow suit.

"Upper Volta calls on heads of African states to stigmatize the English rugby players' trip to South Africa and withdraw from the Los Angeles games in which Great Britain will take part," Tass said.

"This step should be done in sympathy with the South African brothers and in accordance with the OAU decisions with regard to apartheid and all forms of racial discrimination," the message said, according to Tass.

Upper Volta's withdrawal from the games was triggered by "repeated gross violations of the olympic charter and the U.N. and OAU resolutions on sport links with racist-ruled South Africa," Tass quoted the African leader's message as saying.

Parrish Spoils Blyleven's No-Hitter

By The Associated Press

For Bert Blyleven, familiarity nearly breeded his second career no-hitter.

Blyleven was robbed of that feat Friday night by Larry Parrish's fourth-inning groundball single, the only hit he surrendered in a 5-0 Cleveland victory over Texas. Blyleven, a former Ranger, now has five career one-hitters.

"I pitched here for 1½ years," said Blyleven, whose last appearance as a Ranger came on Sept. 22, 1977, when he no-hit California. "It's a ballpark you have to pace yourself in in the early innings and hope it cools off."

Though he walked five, Blyleven was pretty cool himself, holding the Rangers off-balance in every inning but the fourth.

"At the beginning of the game, I didn't have the control I wanted," said Blyleven. "The fourth inning was the big inning for me."

After Parrish's single, Blyleven walked Pete O'Brien, George Wright sacrificed and Manager Pat Corrales ordered an intentional walk to Tommy Dunbar to load the bases.

"I didn't want (Buddy) Bell to hurt me and I didn't want Parrish to hurt me," he said. "I wanted to pitch to Dunbar, but Pat said he is a slashing type of hitter. It worked out good."

"He got better when I loaded the bases for him," said Corrales. "It seemed like he was struggling with his stuff up to that point. After that, he got command of his fastball and curve ball. It was like someone slapped him in the face and the ballgame was over."

Blyleven, 8-3, has been last-place Cleveland's best pitcher by far this season.

"I've always been a good stopper," he noted. "I try to go out and be consistent. I want to win every time I go out there. If that means that I'm a stopper, there's something wrong with the other guys. They should have the same attitude."

Successive homers in the fifth by Pat Tabler and Brook Jacoby paced the offense for Cleveland.

Elsewhere in the American League on a night when all East teams won, Baltimore and Detroit scored 11-inning triumphs, the Orioles rallying to beat Chicago 7-5 on Cal Ripken's three-run homer, and the Tigers downing Minnesota 4-2 on Lou Whitaker's two-run, inside-the-park shot.

New York swept a pair from Kansas City, 7-1 and 8-1; California nipped Milwaukee 5-4; Toronto 6, Oakland 3, and Boston 9, Seattle 5.

Orioles 7, White Sox 5

Ripken homered twice and Lenn Sakata and Floyd Rayford also connected. The first three Baltimore home runs came off Floyd Bannister and were the only hits the Orioles got against the left-hander. Rayford's one-out shot in the ninth tied the game after Bannister had retired 16 straight batters. Marc Hill's three-run blast had lifted the visiting White Sox into a 4-3 lead.

Chicago took the lead in the 11th when Vance Law walked, took third on a single by Julio Cruz and scored when Tippy Martinez uncorked a wild pitch while fanning pinch-hitter Carlton Fisk. But Chicago Manager Tony LaRussa ordered Ron Reed to pitch to Ripken with runners on second and third in the bottom of the 11th.

"I saw no sense in walking Ripken with (Eddie) Murray up next," said LaRussa. "That would just shrink the plate with the bases loaded.

"He is the Orioles' best game-winner against our club, and against everybody else," LaRussa said of Murray, who leads the league with 16 game-winning RBI and is hitting .426 with runners in scoring position."

"I'm probably the luckiest man in the world to have Eddie hitting behind me," said Ripken.

Tigers 4, Twins 2

Whitaker's sinking liner to left skipped past outfielder Darrell Brown and rolled to the fence, also scoring Tom Brookens, who had tripled ahead of him. Right fielder Kirk Gibson saved the game for Detroit in the ninth with a perfect throw to catcher Lance Parrish to nail Tim Teufel at the plate after Kirby Puckett singled.

"I was trying to get the run in from third," said Whitaker, who also doubled, walked twice and scored two runs. "It was an exciting baseball game and we really appreciate it because the Twins battled us so hard."

Minnesota remained in first place in the West by .001 percentage points. Detroit leads the East by seven games.

Brewers 5, Angels 4

Robin Yount belted a two-run homer and knocked in four runs for visiting Milwaukee. His ninth-inning sacrifice fly proved decisive.

Yount's big night upped his team-high totals in RBI to 46 and homers to eight. He also has the Brewers' best batting average at .302.

Yankees 7-8, Royals 1-1

New York got five-hit pitching in both games. Ron Guidry notched his first victory in nearly three weeks by giving up just five hits in eight innings of the opener and was backed by a four-run sixth inning.

In the second game, Marty Bystrom and Jay Howell stymied the Royals and got home run support from Oscar Gamble and Mike Pagliarulo, who hit his first major league homer.

Blue Jays 6, A's 3

Red Sox 9, Mariners 5

Wade Boggs drove in four runs with a pair of groundouts, a sacrifice fly and a single. Boston had 15 hits, paced by Tony Armas, Marty Barrett and Jackie Gutierrez with three hits each, and by Mike Easler with his 18th homer.

Night Deer Hunting Arrests Hit Record High — Many of North Carolina's illegal night deer hunters had a bad year in 1983. A record 658 arrests were made for this offense statewide last year compared to 511 cases in 1982.

"There are several factors that account for the increase in night deer hunting cases last year," said Colonel Winfield Rhyne of the Division of Enforcement of the North Carolina Wildlife Resources Commission. "First, we're placing a great emphasis on major wildlife violation — which includes night deer hunting. Many officers in the field have also received new patrol cars or four-wheel drive vehicles — replacing worn out equipment. This has made for effective patrols, especially in remote areas."

The biggest increases in arrests was made in wildlife Districts 3 and 4, which include the eastern Piedmont and southeastern portions of the state — and District 9 in the far western mountains. In Districts 3 and 4, arrests for night deer hunting doubled over last year, and in District 9 the arrest rate more than tripled.

"Typically, night deer hunting activity often goes up and down for no apparent reason," Rhyne said. "However, the increase is night deer hunting arrests in the Piedmont is probably due to the expansion and growth of deer herds in that area. The deer are more plentiful, so poachers are taking advantage of it. The same situation probably applies in District 9 in the far western mountains. Deer were relatively scarce in this area not long ago, but a restoration program conducted by the wildlife commission has brought them back."

The use of aircraft is one of the best tools for controlling night deer hunting, and 22 percent of the cases made last year involved the use of wildlife commission aircraft.

"We can cover a larger area very effectively using aircraft," Rhyne said. "Typically, we set up a detail involving a large area — often a whole portion of a county — where a lot of night deer hunting is going on. A pilot and single observer fly the area. They can literally spot a match being lit on the ground and have no problem detecting the muzzle blast from a firearm — it's amazing how much you can see from the air at night. They are also able to track the night deer hunters' vehicle. This information is relayed to teams of officers on the ground and enables us to make a large number of arrests quite efficiently."

"Working a firelighting detail" is considered one of the most hazardous duties for wildlife enforcement officers. Last year 12 cases of resisting arrest or assaulting an officer were made in conjunction with night deer hunting arrests. "The use of aircraft helps minimize this risk, and we also take other steps. All of our officers work in teams on night deer hunting details, and we get as many offficers to the scene of an arrest as quickly as possible. Fortunately, there were no serious assaults or injuries to wildlife officers last year."

Rhyne adds that a concerned public is probably the best tool for controlling wildlife violations. "Many reports of night deer hunting are made through our toll-free Wildlife Watch Hotline," he said. "This is a great help in controlling wildlife violations, and all calls will be kept strictly confidential."

Although night deer hunting takes place year round, this activity peaks from late summer through midwinter. Nigh deer hunting and other wildlife violations may be reported through the wildlife commission's 24-hour, toll-free Wildlife Watch Hotline at (800) 662-7137.

Outdoor Ethics Conference Slated — How can landowners, sportsmen and other outdoor recreationists work together to prevent landowner-user conflicts and outdoor abuse int he face of an expanding population? This is one of the questions that will be addressed at the first North Carolina Outdoor Ethics Conference. The event will be held September 28-29 at the Penn 4-H center near Reidsville.

The conference will focus on three goals: improving communications between landowners and outdoor users, promoting ethical standards among outdoors users, and developing techniques that everyone can use to improve outdoor ethics. Key representatives of outdoor user groups and landowners will attend.

Seattle Granted 1989 Final Four

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo. (AP) — Seattle has been awarded the 1989 National Collegiate Athletic Association basketball championships, site committee chairman Dave Gavitt announced Friday.

Denver will be the site of the 1990 NCAA Final Four tournament, Gavitt said.

Gavitt said representatives of both cities had presented strong presentations on Wednesday, and since no clear-cut choice emerged, the committee decided to make a double award.

The precedent for both finalists being selected for tournaments was set in 1978 when Albuquerque was awarded the 1983 Final Four and Seattle got the event in 1984. It was done again two years ago when New Orleans was selected as the site in 1987 and Kansas City was chosen for 1988.

Seattle hosted this year's Final Four and NCAA officials "were very impressed by the Kingdome," said Sam Sperry, assistant to King County (Wash.) executive Randy Revelle.

Sperry said the fact that Washington state will be celebrating its centennial anniversary in 1989 played a big factor in the decision to hold the tournament in Seattle.

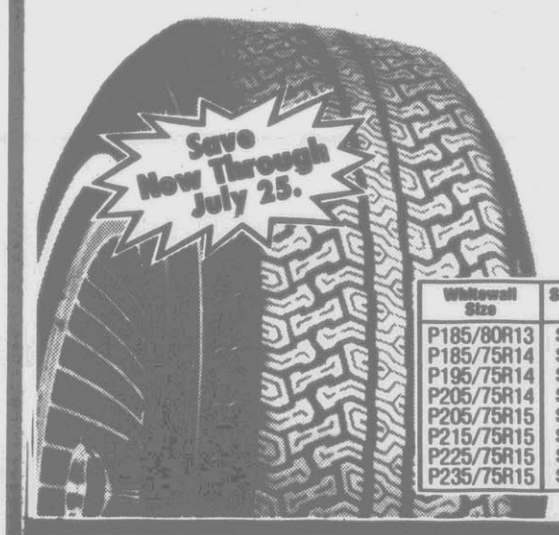

Following this week's presentations by representatives of Seattle and Denver, committee member Arnie Ferrin, of Utah, called this year's Final Four "the best one we've ever had."

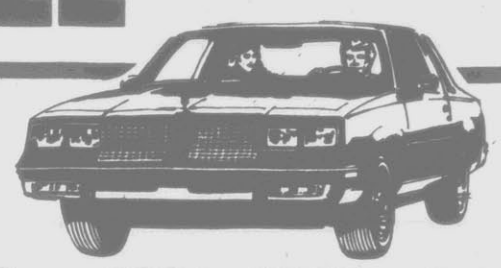

Ferrin was one of three committee members who took a field trip to McNichols Sports Arena in January when Denver hosted the NBA All-Star Game. The field trip committee's main concern during its visit to McNichols was a lack of working space for the number of reporters that the Final Four draws.

Seattle's Kingdome seats 38,-000 for basketball and Denver's McNichols Sports Arena can seat 17,000 fans.

Pirates Sweep Giants In Marathon

By The Associated Press

After playing 27 innings and nearly eight hours of baseball, the San Francisco Giants came up with nothing but dirt on their uniforms.

"These kind of games — when they go this long, you want to win them," said Giants first baseman Al Oliver after Friday night's agonizing doubleheader loss to the Pittsburgh Pirates. "I think rigor mortis was starting to set in with some people."

The Pirates won the opener 8-2, then took a 4-3 decision in the nightcap on Jason Thompson's bases-loaded single in the 18th inning that just got past the outstretched glove of Oliver at first.

"If I hadn't gotten that hit, I think I would have quit," Thompson said. "Games like this you think they'll never end. Another step and Al easily could have caught the ball and there's telling how much longer we would have played."

In other National League games, Chicago beat Los Angeles 7-5; Montreal turned back Cincinnati 7-2; New York edged Atlanta 5-4; St. Louis stopped San Diego 7-4 and Philadelphia clipped Houston 7-3.

Thompson's single scored Lee Mazzilli with the winning run in the nightcap and ended the National League's longest game in terms of both time and innings this season. The nightcap lasted five hours and 11 minutes.

Rod Scurry, 2-5, earned the victory by pitching the 18th after Don Robinson had blanked the Giants over the previous seven innings, striking out eight while allowing just three hits.

The Pirates were within one strike of winning in the ninth when pinch-hitter Chili Davis' two-out, two-strike single scored Steve Nicosia with the tying run for the Giants.

The 27-inning doubleheader marathon began at 5:05 p.m. EDT and didn't end till 1:32 a.m. Saturday morning.

In the opener, Lee Lacy knocked in four runs and John Candelaria, 8-6, scattered eight hits in seven innings to win his 12th consecutive game in the month of July dating back to the 1980 season.

Cubs 7, Dodgers 5

Keith Moreland drove in four runs with a homer and a single to lead Chicago over Los Angeles.

Former Dodger Rick Sutcliffe, 5-1, went five innings to gain the victory, while Lee Smith pitched the final two innings for his 19th save.

After Mike Marshall tied the game at 3-3 with a three-run homer in the third inning, the Cubs scored their winning runs in the bottom of the inning. Leon Durham's double drove in one run and two more scored on Moreland's eighth home run.

"The wind helped me on the homer. No doubt about it," said Moreland, who also contributed a two-run single in the first inning.

Expos 7, Reds 2

Derrel Thomas stroked three doubles, driving in two runs, and Andre Dawson added a two-run homer as Montreal defeated Cincinnati.

Reds starter Jeff Russell, 4-10, had a 1-0 lead and a no-hitter into the fifth but the Expos scored three times with Thomas doubling home the tying run.

The Reds made it 3-2 on Dan Driessen's fifth homer off reliever Bob James in the eighth. But after Rose singled to lead off the Expos' eighth, Dawson connected against reliever Keefe Cato for his sixth homer, making it 5-2. Wallach and Thomas capped the rally with RBI doubles.

"There's supposed to be a superstition about Friday the 13th, but when I woke up this morning and saw it was the 13th, I told myself it was going to be my day," said Thomas.

Mets 5, Braves 4

Wally Backman ignited two rallies with a single and triple, George Foster slammed his 13th home run and Walt Terrell pitched seven strong innings as New York beat Atlanta, the Mets' seventh straight victory.

New York Mets' Keith Hernandez (rear) takes it easy as he crosses home plate as Braves' catcher Alex Trevino waits for the ball during the three-run first inning Friday in Atlanta. The Mets won the game, 5-4, their seventh in a row. (AP Laserphoto)

Jury Rules USC Violated Former Coach's Contract

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — Former University of South Carolina football coach Richard Bell is hoping he can again devote full attention to his coaching career now that a lawsuit he filed against USC is behind him.

A nine-woman, three-man jury deliberated two hours late Friday before awarding $150,000 to Bell, ruling his contract was violated by the university when he was fired almost two years ago.

The 45-year-old coach claimed he was owed $150,000 in salary for the remaining three years on his contract. He was fired in 1982, at the end of his first year as head coach, after he finished a 4-7 season and refused an order from Athletic Director Bob Marcum to fire four assistant coaches.

Outside the courtroom Friday evening, a subdued Bell said he was happy the dispute apparently has ended.

"Needless to say, I'm pleased," Bell said. "I don't have any feeling of vindictiveness. I don't do anything out of bitterness to the University of South Carolina or the state of South Carolina.

"I just like to coach football and want to do a good job at Duke University," said Bell, who is assistant coach at the Atlantic Coast Conference school.

David Ratchford and Charles Cooper, the attorneys representing Bell, said testimony from Bell and from three other college coaches was a key factor in the jury's decision.

"I think our client was very believable," Cooper said. He also said expert testimony from University of Arkansas Athletic Director Frank Broyles, Georgia Tech Coach Bill Curry and Coastal Carolina Athletic Director Bobby Richardson was decisive in the case. Ratchford said the three made "a grand impression" on jurors.

U.S. District Judge Clyde Hamilton had issued a detailed set of instructions before the jury began considering trial evidence at about 7:15 p.m.

Hamilton told jurors if they believed Bell "failed to perform assigned duties" by refusing to dismiss four assistant coaches at Marcum's request, the panel should find for the university.

But Hamilton told the panel that if evidence showed Marcum stepped outside his authority in ordering the dismissals, they should find for Bell and award him the $150,000 remaining on his contract.

Marcum, who took over as USC's athletic director in 1982, testified earlier Friday he was forced to fire Bell because he made little attempt to correct problems in the football program.

During closing arguments Friday afternoon, attorney Ratchford cited witnesses who supported Bell's claim that only a head coach has responsibility to hire and fire assistant coaches.

Pirates Sweep...

The National League East leaders jumped on loser Pasqual Perez, 9-4, early and held on as Terrell evened his record at 7-7, pitching a five-hitter through seven innings.

Doug Sisk, who gave up an RBI single to Chris Chambliss in the eighth, and Jess Orosco finished up with the latter recording his 18th save.

Cardinals 7, Padres 4

Chris Speier blasted his first home run of the year, a three-run clout with two on in the 10th inning, to lead St. Louis over San Diego.

The hit by Speier was his second in a St. Louis uniform since being acquired July 1 in a trade from the Montreal Expos. The 34-year-old infielder picked on a 0-1 delivery from Luis DeLeon, 1-1, to make a winner of Neil Allen, 5-3.

The runs produced by Speier's blast were all unearned, stemming from San Diego third baseman Tim Flannery's boot of George Hendrick's grounder to start the Cardinals' 10th.

Phillies 7, Astros 3

Ivan DeJesus knocked in three runs with a bases-loaded double in the eighth inning to lead Philadelphia over Houston and Nolan Ryan.

Shane Rawley, 2-1, pitched six innings and gave up all three Houston runs before giving way to Larry Andersen, who picked up his third save.

Ryan, who lasted only 2 2-3 innings, has given up 18 hits, 19 runs, 17 of them earned in his last five innings. He has been the loser in his last seven decisions against the Phillies, and has lost his third straight since coming off the disabled list.

"I think it's an accumulation of time off," said Astros Manager Bob Lillis. "He pitched well between the two times he has been on the disabled list."

Consumers Will Soon Face Choice For Long-Distance

By NORMAN BLACK
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Within the next few months, hundreds of thousands of American consumers who have never thought twice about what company handles their long-distance phone calls will have to start thinking.

They will be told that their local telephone office is being "cut over" to provide something called "equal access." They will receive an informational mailing from their local Bell company, telling them it's time to pick the long-distance company they like best. Then they will face a barrage of radio, TV and newspaper ads, more mailings and even door-to-door solicitations from a host of long-distance phone companies.

The process will be repeated from exchange to exchange and city to city through 1986, when two-thirds or more of the roughly 80 million telephone customers served by local Bell companies will be affected.

The process is almost guaranteed to produce confusion, and quite possibly mutterings that the government should never have broken up the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. But consumers will be urged to pay attention, because the opportunity they are being offered is considered the most important benefit of the Bell System's demise.

In simplest terms, equal access means ease of dialing — the ability to place your long-distance calls through a company like MCI Communications or GTE-Sprint as easily as you do now through AT&T.

If you think you can save money with one of the competitors — and they all claim you can — you will not need a tone-generating phone; you will not need to dial up to 12 extra digits; you will not encounter a great difference in voice quality; and, at least with the largest of the companies, you will not have to pay a monthly service fee.

"For the first time in anybody's life, when it comes to long-distance telephone service, a person or business has the opportunity to take exactly the same service and pay different prices for it," said MCI spokesman Gary Tobin. "It would be as if two dealers were offering you the same Cadillac and one was selling it for $10,000 and the other for $6,000."

AT&T disputes the idea that consumers are being offered "the same Cadillac." But the competition between AT&T and its challengers is clearly changing.

The antitrust settlement that split the Bell System on Jan. 1 specifically called for AT&T to give up its local Bell companies under the theory that once set free, they could be required to treat all long-distance companies equally. The agreement then set out a three-year schedule for the Bell companies — extending to September 1986 — to modify their telephone switches to offer equal access.

The first battleground is in Charleston, W.Va. Telephone exchanges there serving roughly 34,000 customers were scheduled to be cut over to equal access Sunday.

Eight companies, led by AT&T, MCI and GTE-Sprint, signed up with the local Bell company to fight for those customers. But that is in Charleston. In other cities, literally dozens of long-distance companies are expected to enter the fray.

According to the Federal Communications Commission, more than 300 interstate long-distance phone companies operate in the United States, most of them resellers — concerns that lease capacity from companies like AT&T or MCI to serve customers. That figure is not quite as startling as it may sound, given the fact the long-distance market is worth more than $40 billion a year.

Financial analysts as well as the competitors expect few of those firms to survive, however. They suggest the outlook is particularly bleak for companies that do not have their own facilities, because rate reductions by AT&T will squeeze the profit margins of resellers.

"In 10 years, there may be four long-distance firms left," said Peter J. Foster, a founder and executive vice president of U.S. Telephone Inc., a Dallas-based reseller that was just acquired by United Telecommunications Inc., a major independent phone company.

Foster thinks U.S. Telephone will be one of the survivors, because United is committed to helping it build its own facilities.

Predictions of a major shakeout in the long-distance industry do not make things any easier for consumers. But many observers reject the notion that customers will decide to stick with AT&T as a safe harbor. In fact, said Steven G. Chrust, an analyst with the New York investment firm of Sanford C. Bernstein, the equal access process is perilous for AT&T.

"Given the huge share of the market they hold now — we estimate 85 percent of the interstate market — there's no question in my mind that AT&T will lose share," Chrust said. "AT&T has become more price competitive than we would have thought, and they've shown more marketing savvy than we would have thought.

"And while I don't expect the competitors to be able to undercut AT&T prices in the future as much as they do now, some will continue to be cheaper," he added. "Clearly, MCI and GTE-Sprint will be two major winners. The rest is a toss-up."

GM Is Recalling 68,000 Trucks

DETROIT (AP) — General Motors Corp. is recalling 68,000 trucks for repair of transmission and brake system defects that have caused 13 accidents and 10 minor injuries, the automaker said.

GM said Friday that 36,000 Chevy and GMC S-10 and S-15 pickups, from the 1982 and 1983 model years, have transmissions that can lock when placed in fifth gear. That could cause the transmissions to seize, locking the rear wheels, GM said.

Since fifth gear is a high-speed gear, GM has warned owners that they could lose control of their trucks. The automaker asked people not to use fifth gear and to go to a dealer for free installation of a "new blend" of transmission lubricant which it said would cure the problem.

The other recall was of 32,000 Chevrolet and GMC medium-duty trucks from the 1980 to 1983 model years. GM said air may get into the brake master cylinders and may cause partial loss of the brakes.

GM spokesman Harold Jackson said the most serious of the 10 injuries was a cracked wrist suffered by an occupant of a light pickup.

The defects were discovered by customers and dealers, Jackson said.

Come in for a screen test.

As these screens indicate, Macintosh™ can do all the things you'd expect a business computer to do. A lot of things you wouldn't expect a business computer to do. And some things no business computer has even done before.

Fed Will Review Policies

By CHET CURRIER
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — While the political spotlight turns to the Democratic convention this coming week, many Wall Streeters will be keeping an eye on the Federal Reserve.

The Fed's Open Market Committee meets Monday and Tuesday to consider what monetary policies to pursue in the months ahead.

Though no official report of any decisions the committee makes will be made until late August, investors in the stock and bond markets will be looking for earlier clues.

They may get some from the behavior of interest rates in the next several days. And they will be listening to the carefully chosen words of Paul Volcker, the Fed's chairman, when he testifies before Congress later this month.

By some measures, the Fed appears already to have achieved its mission of subduing inflation. Prices of many industrial commodities are depressed.

The government's Producer Price Index of finished goods has been unchanged for three straight months.

Yet there is widespread expectation in the financial world that the Fed will keep the brakes on expansion of credit, or even step down on them a bit harder.

"So the guessing game begins," said Deborah Johnson at the investment firm of Prudential-Bache Securities. "Will the Fed tighten? Will the committee vote to hike the discount rate to 9.5 percent?

"Our answer to both these questions is yes. Apparently the current level of interest rates isn't high enough to dampen economic activity. We believe this leaves the Fed no alternative but to tighten.".

Jack Lavery, chief economist at Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith Inc., said, "Although the inflation outlook appears quite favorable for the balance of 1984, monetary policymakers are likely to lean in the direction of insuring that inflation does not meaningfully intensify in 1985."

But Henry Kaufman, Salomon Brothers Inc.'s chief economist, said Friday that "no dramatic decision" was likely. He described the Fed's likely approach as one of "caution."

Lavery expects interest rates to "rise irregularly over the balance of this year and into early 1985."

Many stock-market investors apparently took a similar view in the past week as the Dow Jones average of 30 industrials dropped 12.70 to 1,109.87.

The New York Stock Exchange composite index fell .82 to 87.08, and the American Stock exchange market value index was down 3.70 at 193.52.

Amid all the pervasive concern about Fed policy and interest rates, some optimistic voices still can be heard on Wall Street.

"If inflation expectations are an excuse for rising interest rates, there is no current justification for them," said Argus Research Corp.

"Many, perhaps most, stocks are 'cheap,' measured by just about any standards we have used in the past," contended Heinz H. Biel at Janney Montgomery Scott Inc.

William Kent at Philips, Appel & Walden Inc. predicts a rise in the Dow Jones industrial average to at least 1,250 within the next 12 months.

His argument: "Pessimism is rampant. This extraordinary negativism means that the bearish fundamentals have been largely discounted.

"The insiders of listed companies have been buying for three months. The latest figures on the trading by members of the New York Stock Exchange have given a buy signal.

"If you believe the Fed will overdo any tightening and jeopardize President Reagan's November chances, you believe in the tooth fairy."

Lastly, he contended, "The majority of economists feel interest rates will go higher over the next six months. Therefore, they won't."

Argentine Courts Told To Speed Up

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — A federal appeals court has given the nation's top military tribunal 90 more days to complete the trials of former armed forces leaders charged with human rights abuses.

The civlian court also ordered the Armed Forces Supreme Council to report in 30 days on the progress of the trials. The charges stem from kidnappings, torture and murders carried out during the nearly eight years of military rule that ended in December.

President Raul Alfonsin had ordered the council to pursue human rights charges against nine members of the three juntas that ruled after the 1976 military coup. He said the proceedings should be completed during a 180-day period that ended in June.

Boy Triplets Are A 'Real Joy To Have'

At Christmastime Kevin O'Kane of Washington, N.C., kept telling his pregnant wife, Janice, there was more than one baby because she was so big.

"But I kept saying no! We found out in January through ultra-sound tests performed in Washington that we were going to have twins. They gave us the picture and the babies looked like they were boxing. From this picture Kevin said he saw a third baby.

"I went to the doctor the next week and when he examined me, he said he heard a third heart beat — but then said he was joking. I told him my husband was real concerned. In the middle of March another ultra-sound was done to see if the twins were growing symmetrically and then the third baby was found. I was then told to prepare to go to another hospital for delivery. As a high risk pregnancy patient, I was admitted to Pitt County Memorial Hospital at the end of March. The babies were delivered by Casearean section, for their safety, April 12," said Mrs. O'Kane.

The boy triplets and their birth weights were Alan, 4 pounds and $^1_2$ ounce, Brian, 3 pounds and 6 ounces, and Kyle, 3 pounds and 5 ounces. The Kanes also have a daughter, Erin, now 3^1_2.

"Brian and Kyle are identical. The doctors could tell that at birth. Alan may be identical, but only extensive blood work could verify that and the doctors didn't recommend we have it done. They all look alike — the difference in appearance is because of size difference. Alan is the largest baby, Kyle is the middle and Brian is the smallest. Kyle looks like Alan looked two weeks ago and Brian looks like Alan looked three weeks ago. If they ever get to be the same size, we'll probably be in trouble. I just hope by then they'll know their names and can correct me.

"The babies' personalities became evident to me as early as the hospital. Alan is more 'laid back,' but has less patience; he expects his needs to be met immediately. Brian is more sensitive to outside stimuli (sounds and lights). Kyle is in between — a mixture of the two. I have to wonder if this is because of their sizes," Mrs. O'Kane said.

Because of their different sizes, the babies are all drinking different amounts and will go between 5 and 6 hours between feedings. "When they're all eating the same amount and going the same length of time between feedings, I hope to be able to feed them at the same time to cut down on the amount of feeding time. It takes 2 hours or more to feed them. Now we keep a schedule on the refrigerator to keep up with who eats when.

"After the babies were born everyone at the hospital kept commenting on how remarkably healthy they were. I can't tell you how many times I was told they were so health because of excellent pre-natal care. I feel this is really true. I could never thank my doctors enough — I trusted them completely. We feel very fortunate and blessed," she commented.

"As preemies we were told they would just eat and sleep and we would have to wake them to feed them. Initially we did. Now they cry to be fed; however, we are still sticking to their schedule. They are staying awake periods which we can't predict. Finding time to sleep was the hardest part. My mother and mother-in-law each came for two weeks to help out. We now have a night nurse and it's working out beautifully," she added.

"The boys are a real joy to have around but they are demanding! I was a little afraid to go with Janice for the third time." Kevin said. "The first time, two babies were found and the second time, three babies were found.

"The people at work — Weyerhaeuser in New Bern — have been very supportive. Sometimes when I get only three hours of sleep, I'm not as alert. It's hard sometimes with three babies, but we're getting as lot of help and support from friends and neighbors — taking Erin on outings, to play school and dancing and with meals. The relization that we had three came when we brought them home from the hospital and had them in their car seats.

"There is very little time for anything other than babies — there's always something to do. We take special time with Erin after dinner each evening. We have had offers to keep the babies so we can go out for an evening, a day and a weekend. We'll be taking advantage of these offers soon.

"I truly feel these are Washington's babies because people who really didn't know us have sent cards and brought food over — friends, neighbors and their friends (strangers to us). Neighbors come over and help feed the babies. They know the routine and just walk in and go right to work. This allows me time to do something else — fold laundry, play with Erin and eat. We felt that the entire town was pulling for the babies. Mothers of twins have called with advice such as 'keep them on a schedule, it necessary for your sanity; have cribs set up differently as each child can have a crib for play and one for sleep; keep clothes, diapers, etc. both upstairs and down,'" she added.

Soon, the babies will be in seperate cribs which will be built-in in the nursery with drawer space underneath.

American Shows Spark London's Summer Theater

By MATT WOLF
Associated Press Writer

LONDON (AP) — After years of British hit shows dominating Broadway, the Yanks are now taking London's West End by storm.

By the end of July, 14 of the West End's 33 offerings will either be imports of such Broadway hits as David Mamet's "American Buffalo" or freshly staged revivals of American musicals such as "West Side Story."

"Eventually, Broadway and the West End will become interchangeable," said producer Michael White, who brought the ever-popular "Annie" and "A Chorus Line" to London.

More recently, White imported last season's Tony Award-winning revival of "On Your Toes," the 1934 Rodgers and Hart musical that had a 15-month Broadway run in 1983-84.

At London's Palace Theater with its Broadway star, prima ballerina Natalia Makarova, "On Your Toes" received rapturous reviews from the British press at its June 12 opening and is sold out through the summer.

Despite the trend, White said the current situation was not really new.

"Think back to the 1940s when we had a regular diet of Jerome Kern and Rodgers and Hammerstein," he said. "The only difference now is that we have a composer of our own — Andrew Lloyd Webber."

He said his plans for a West End run of "Torch Song Trilogy," Harvey Fierstein's 3^1_2-hour play about a homosexual drag queen, fell through when the proposition proved "too expensive."

Other musicals in from New York include the off-Broadway "Little Shop of Horrors," now in its ninth month at the Comedy Theater, and two that begin previews at the end of July: the David MerrickGower Champion "42nd Street" and the one-woman show, "Lena Horne: The Lady and Her Music."

Also tuning up nightly on the West End are revivals of the Jerome RobbinsLeonard Bernstein classic "West Side Story," Cy Coleman's "Little Me" with comedian Russ AbboT, and Tommy Steele's stage adaptation of the Gene Kelly film, "Singin' in the Rain."

Dramas on the boards encompass local versions of plays by Eugene O'Neill and Clifford Odets, as well as a London production of Paul Osborn's "Morning's at Seven," which won three Tonys in 1980, including a citation for Vivian Matalon, the British director who repeated his assignment in London.

Patricia Digby, assistant to producer Robert Mackintosh on "Morning's at Seven," said she feels that the current emphasis on American material is "just sheer coincidence, really. Robert loved it and brought it over, and that's that."

But Bill Kenwright, whose production of Odets' "The Country Girl" will close at the end of the month, said that many of these shows have been timed to benefit from the surge in American tourism due to the strong value of the dollar against the British pound.

"Americans form a major percentage of our audience," he said, "and now when they come to England, they get to see their Broadway hits, too — and much more cheaply."

A top ticket to "On Your Toes" here costs $20.10, half of what it cost to see it a year ago on Broadway.

The Royal Shakespeare Company's small Pit Theater in the Barbican Center recently opened an acclaimed revival of William Saroyan's "The Time of Your Life." Across the Thames at the National Theater, Clifford Odets' "Golden Boy" is in revival, as is the Frank Loesser musical "Guys and Dolls."

"Glengarry Glen Ross," David Mamet's Pulitzer Prize-winning play now on Broadway at the Golden Theater, received its world premiere last September in the National's small Cottesloe auditorium.

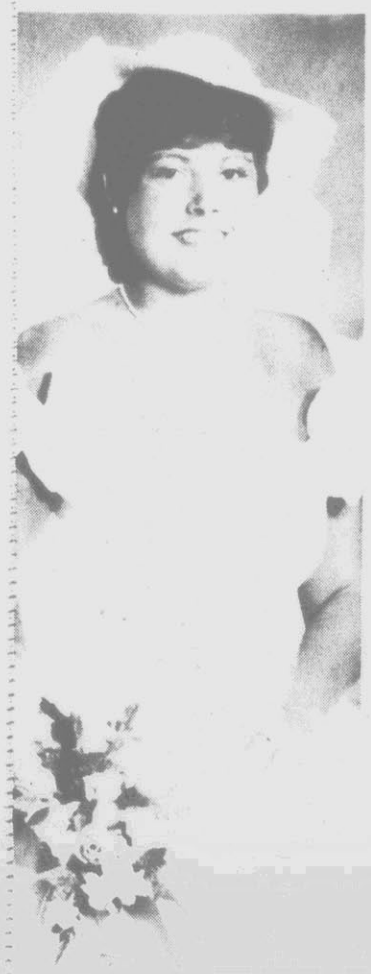

Couple Speaks Vows On Saturday Evening

The First Baptist Church in Farmville was the scene of the wedding ceremony Saturday evening at seven o'clock of Lisa Danielle Satterthwaite and William Larry Davis.

Performing the double ring ceremony was Dr. Ronald Lee Davis. Terry L. Moore was organist and Philip Evancho was vocalist. Both are from Greenville.

Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Harrington Satterthwaite of Farmville are the bride's parents. The bridegroom is the son of Irene Scott Davis of Windsor and the late Guy Thomas Davis Jr.

The bride wore a formal gown of white bridal taffeta designed with an open off-shoulder neckline outlined in a ruffle of silk roses and taffeta. The fitted bodice of the sleeveless gown was overlaid with floral motifs of beaded silk Venise lace. Silk roses enhanced a draped taffeta overskirt from which fell tiered flounces of wedgewood lace trimmed with satin ribbon. She wore a bridal hat appliqued with silk Venise lace and seed pearls complemented by pouffed veil of white crystal illusion. The bride carried a silk fan covered with a formal cascade of yellow roses, stephanotis and baker's fern tied with yellow and white satin streamers. She was given in marriage by her parents.

MRS. DAVIS

She attended Meredith College in Raleigh and graduated as a registered nurse from Watts School of Nursing in Durham. She is employed at Pitt Memorial Hospital.

The bridegroom's best man was Tommy Davis of Windsor, his brother. The bridegroom is a coach at Farmville Central High School and received his B.S. and M.A. degrees at East Carolina University.

Elaine Davis of Windsor, sister-in-law of the bride, was matron of honor and Martha Satterthwaite of Farmville, sister of the bride, was maid of honor. Each wore a formal gown of slate blue and white striped taffeta designed with an open sweetheart neckline, short gathered draped sleeves creating an off-shoulder effect. The surplice bodice was accented with a slate blue taffeta sash at the modified natural waistline from which fell the gathered skirt. Each carried silk fans arranged with creamy yellow miniature carnations, baby's breath and baker's fern tied with yellow and white streamers.

Bridesmaids included Diana Gordon and Ashley Jones of Farmville, Sara Johnson of Durham and Susan Gay of Greenville, cousin of the bride. They were dressed like the honor attendants.

The flower girl was Brooke Davis of Windsor, niece of the bridegroom. Brad Moldin of Cary was ring bearer.

A reception given by the bride' parents followed the ceremony. Guests were greeted by Mr. and Mrs. Eddie Randolph Allen, Mr. and Mrs. J.C. Brock and Mr. and Mrs. Horace R. Allen, all of Farmville. Laura Carr presided at the bridal register.

A rehearsal dinner, given by the mother of the bridegroom, was held at the Colonial Inn Friday evening after the wedding rehearsal. A cocktail dance was given by friends at the Farmville Golf and Country Club. A bridesmaids luncheon was held at the Colonial Inn on the day of the wedding given by family and friends.

The couple will live in Farmville after a wedding trip to Hawaii.

Debra Ann Odom Marries Saturday

Amid a garden setting of palms, white candelabras and ferns in wicker stands, Debra Ann Odom of Snow Hill and Michael Joseph Twiss of Raleigh were united in marriage Saturday at the First Baptist Church in Snow Hill. The Rev. William S. Brown officiated at the double ring ceremony. The bride was escorted and given in marriage by her uncle, Jasper Thomas Perry.

The bride chose a Fink original gown of chiffon over taffeta re-embroidered with alencon lace. The fitted torso bodice featured a Victorian neckline with a point d'esprit yoke outlined with scalloped alencon lace and short pouff sleeves ending with a ruffle. Alencon lace motifs etched with clusters of seed pearls appliqued the bodice. Bridal buttons fastened the back of the gown. The floor length flared shirt extended into a chapel train and scalloped schiffli embroidery bordered the hemline of the gown. To complement her gown, the bride chose a chapel length mantilla of bridal illusion bordered with scalloped re-embroidered lace flowing from a lace caplet etched with seed pearls. The bride carried a colonial bouquet of white roses, stephanotis and ivy centered with a georgiana orchid.

The bride's sister, Sherri Lynn Odom of Snow Hill, served as maid of honor. Bridesmaids were Patty Kirk of Raleigh and Kathy Rogers of Malone, N.Y. They wore formal blue gowns of chiffon over taffeta. Their gowns featured a fitted bodice with sweetheart necklines and sleevelets of alencon lace, pleated chiffon and taffeta. They carried white wicker baskets cascading with lilies, pixie carnations, roses, gerba daisies and statice in mixed summer colors. They wore white stephanotis in their hair. Each attendant wore a string of pearls, a gift from the bride.

The flower girl was Susanne Dozier of Greenville. She wore a blue mid-calf dress of dotted swiss organza with white pinafore and carried a miniature white wicker basket similar to the other attendants.

The bridegroom chose Marc Pepin of Malone, N.Y. as his best man. Groomsmen were Michael King White, Ivie Joseph Kirk and Robert Hewitt, all of Raleigh and George H. Odom III of Snow Hill, brother of the bride.

The bride's mother chose a dusty blue dress with an ivory alencon lace overblouse. The bridegroom's mother chose an ivory dress of organza. Both mothers wore corsages of white roses, stephanotis and pixie carnations.

MRS. TWISS

Allen Hardison, soloist, and Wesley Letchworth, organist, provided the wedding music. Mrs. C. Eddie Dozier of Greenville directed the wedding and Mrs. Ernie H. Copenhaver of Goldsboro presided at the guest register.

Following the ceremony a reception was held in the church fellowship hall. Guests were greeted by the bride's aunt and uncle, Mr. and Mrs. Jasper T. Perry of Snow Hill. Mrs. J.P. Bobbitt of Tarboro and Mrs. W.R. Harrell of Snow Hill poured punch. The wedding cake was served by Mrs. Jimmy Carraway and Jane Carraway of Snow Hill. Goodbyes were said by the bride's aunt and uncle, Mr. and Mrs. Bruce E. Collins of Eden. Sherri Odom presented wedding scrolls to those in attendance.

The bride is a rising junior at North Carolina State University and is majoring in engineering operations. The bridegroom also attended NCSU and is presently employed with Anderson Homes of Raleigh.

After a wedding trip to Montreal, Canada, the couple will reside in Raleigh.

Double Ring Vows Performed Saturday

WHITEVILLE — The wedding ceremony of Gwendolyn Paige Prevatte of Whiteville and Timothy Earl Ballance of Fremont was conducted Saturday afternoon at five o'clock in the First Baptist Church of Whiteville. The double ring ceremony was performed by Dr. Roger Gilbert and the Rev. Thad Prevatte, uncle of the bride.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Donald Prevatte of Whiteville. She received a B.S. degree in English at East Carolina University and teaches English and mathematics in the Martin County schools.

The bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. William Alton Ballance of Fremont. He received a B.S. degree and a M.B.A. from ECU and works for Wachovia Bank and Trust Co.

A program of wedding music was presented by organist James Warlick and pianist Mrs. James Warlick. Soloists were Mrs. James Masten and Bill Bennett. Handbells were directed by Mrs. Max Greer.

The bride was given in marriage by her father. She wore a white taffeta-lined gown with a sheer overlay. The dress was styled with a Victorian neckline and fitted bodice, both accented with pearls and scattered appliques. The dress was fashioned with three-quarter puffed sleeves enhanced by two satin roses at each elbow. The skirt flowed into a chapel length train. She wore a satin hat surrounded by seed pearls and accented by appliques and pearls on top; gathered net in the back of the hat held the flowing veil which was edged with satin. She wore matching elbow-length finger mits. She carried an arm bouquet of white long-stemmed roses, freesia, white gerbera daisies, stephanotis, ivy, eucalyptus and baby's breath.

MRS. BALLANCE

Maid of honor was Leigh Prevatte of Whiteville, sister of the bride. Bridesmaids were Sylvia Ballance of Fremont and Mrs. Ray Barnes of Plymouth, both sisters of the bridegroom; Belinda Knight of Carolina Beach, Celia Lynch and Angie Sellers, both of Whiteville. Each attendant wore a turquiose taffeta gown with gathered sleeves, fitted waist and a sash tied into a bow. The dress was layered three times in the front, forming a tea-length effect in the front and a floor-length effect in the back. The maid of honor carried two long-stemmed pink roses surrounded by baby's breath and eucalyptus and tied with pink lace ribbons. Each bridesmaid carried a single long-stemmed pink rose, surrounded by baby's breath and eucalyptus and tied with pink lace ribbon.

The father of the bridegroom served as best man. Ushers were Dr. Bill Ballance of Lakewood, Ohio, brother of the bridegroom; Ray Barnes of Plymouth, brother-in-law of the bridegroom; Mike Aman of Greenville; Doug Cline of Greensboro, and Dane Whitmayer of Lancaster, Penn.

Following the ceremony, a reception given by the parents of the bride was held in the church fellowship hall. Mr. and Mrs. Williard Huggins, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Langston and Mr. and Mrs. J.C. Hyatt greeted guests. Mr. and Mrs. Brownie Cook registered guests. Mrs. Lynn Duncan served the wedding cake. Serving punch were Mrs. Gregory Sasser and Beth Kennedy. Assisting in serving were Mrs. Robert Howard, Mrs. S.P. Stanley, Mrs. Larnell Willetts, Mrs. N.R. Britt, Mrs. Carl Batten, Mrs. George Holt, Mrs. David Coble, Mrs. Dick Tedder, Mrs. Grady Waters, Mrs. John Barker, Mrs. Harrell Simpson and Mrs. Riley Campbell. John David Millican provided music on the piano. Mr. and Mrs. Norman Heath said farewells. Mrs. L.P. Blackmon directed the reception.

The parents of the bridegroom gave a rehearsal dinner, held in the Whiteville First Baptist Church fellowship hall Friday evening. The parents and sister of the bridegroom gave an after-rehearsal party and dance held at Barberest Apartments clubhouse following the dinner. Mrs. Gregory Sasser served refreshments. Disc jockey Jim Smith provided entertainment.

After a wedding trip to Kiawah Island, S.C., the couple will reside in Greenville.

At Wits End

By Erma Bombeck

It was one of those days that a mother dreams about.

It was Saturday and I could sleep until I got a headache. The kids were grown and on their own. Nothing in the house leaked oil, dripped water, smoked when you plugged it in, made a funny sound or had a light burnt out. There were no deadlines and the big insurance premium was paid. I didn't have a thing in the world to worry about.

Then the phone rang.

It was one of my kids telling me she was driving to Vegas and not to worry. NOT TO WORRY! Now I had to devote at least five hours to wondering if the car would break down, or if some crazy would cross the center line and run her off the road.

Suppose someone ripped off her credit cards and money. Five hours out of a perfectly good day sitting around waiting for a police officer to call and say, "I have someone here who wants to talk to you. Speak up. She's in traction." Five hours of unrelenting fear. Would she reach over to change stations on the radio and hit a horse that ran out in front of the car? Would she drop into a roadside place for a hamburger and be dragged out on the road by a motorcycle gang who did wheelies around her? Would a sheriff running for governor pick her up for alleged speeding and accuse her of a crime for which he needed a suspect because he needed national press coverage?

When the phone rang again, it was another child who informed me he was going fishing in a rubber raft in the ocean.

"I hope you're not considering going this weekend," I said. "I'm already half crazy worrying about your sister driving to Vegas which is going to take at least five hours of misery and mental anguish."

"We're only going to be out for about four hours."

I was going to wash my hair, but what's a mother to do? I canceled that in case a Russian submarine surfaced just under their boat and dumped them into the Pacific. Or what if they caught a fish so gigantic it pulled their boat out into the open sea? Of course, there was always strong possibility of Jaws III coming to the beach for the summer, or a tidal wave they didn't hear about because a rock station didn't carry the news.

By my calculations, I had 10 or 12 hours of worry ahead of me when I heard from my third child. "Don't tell me," I said. "You're climbing Mt. Everest in tennis shoes just to punish your mother."

"Actually," he said, "I'm staying home this weekend."

I couldn't believe his insensitivity. Now I had to worry that he had no friends or social life. Unable to relate to anyone, he would become more withdrawn and finally trust no one. Eventually, he would pull his blinds and eat out of a saucepan on the stove. I would never go to his wedding where everyone said, "She looks too young to be his mother." I would never dangle grandchildren on my knee where people would say, "She looks too young to have grandchildren."

What are they trying to do to me?

Corn Should Be Rushed From Field to Table

By TOM HOGE
AP Wine and Food Writer

With the coming of summer, Americans across the land look forward to munching that rib-sticking delight that Russia's Nikita Khrushchev described as "sausage on a stick."

Corn is a staple in many countries today, but it was originally native to the Western Hemisphere. It is said to have first been cultivated in Mexico about 7,000 years ago.

Eventually, it became a crop of North American Indian tribes, who introduced it to the early settlers. They owed their survival in part to corn, eating it on the cob or, in winter, as flour for bread and cakes to eke out their catch of fish and game.

Today corn's popularity in America is still growing and people here consume about 6 billion bushels a year.

The vegetable gained wide dissemination when the early explorers took kernels back to Europe from the New World. The first written mention of corn in the colonies was in 1528 after De Soto landed in Florida.

Benjamin Franklin became keenly interested in corn, and conducted cross-fertilization experiments in his garden, producing a commercial crop that sold widely.

Corn is high in carbohydrates and contains vitamins A and C, plus only a small amount of sodium, so it is good for low-salt diets.

A corn-growing farm near where I live on Long Island has a warning printed in large letters: "What is sugar today is starch tomorrow." And it is true that corn turns quickly after picking and should be rushed from the roadside stand to your refrigerator and eaten the same day, if possible.

Indicating how widely corn is grown, this recipe for a souffle came from a high school home economics class in Bay of Plenty in far-off New Zealand.

2 tablespoons butter
¼ cup flour
1 cup milk
White pepper and salt to taste
Nutmeg and cayenne to taste
4 eggs, separated
1 cup corn, cream style
1 tablespoon dry mustard

Make white sauce with butter, flour and milk. Season with pepper, salt, nutmeg and cayenne. Simmer several minutes and let cool. Add 4 egg yolks, beat well, and add ¼ cup creamed corn and mustard. Whip egg whites and pour over sauce and mix. Spoon half mixture into buttered souffle dish. Cover with ¾ cup creamed corn. Add remainder of mixture atop. Bake at 375 degrees in preheated oven for 35 minutes. Serve with salad.

Book Records New Mothers' Experiences

By DIANE CURTIS
Associated Press Writer

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Lawyer Susan Keel surprised even herself when she found she wasn't eager to return to work after the birth of her daughter, Natasha.

At the insistence of husband Richard Katz, she agreed to stay home with Natasha for a year or so, but she was sure she would so miss her career as a divorce lawyer that her husband would agree she should go back to work.

What she found after the birth of Natasha was that the importance of a career had ebbed as she watched her child grow and decided the best person to care for a child was its mother.

"When I'm really honest with myself, I think it does make a difference" if a child is cared for by a parent, Ms. Keel, 35, said in an interview in her hilltop Mill Valley home.

"That's not a popular viewpoint because there are so many women who want to work, and so many women who have to, that people want to believe, as I wanted to believe, that it doesn't make a difference ...

"I think there's a real trend in women our age who have had careers and now are having children and are reacting the way I am," she added.

But even some of her friends are not reacting the way she is, and that is the point of a book called "Having A Baby," written by Ms. Keel and six other women, including best-selling author Danielle Steel Traina.

The book is a non-expert look at the emotional and physical trauma, exhilaration, pain and joy of pregnancy, labor, delivery and motherhood, including some words on mixing careers and motherhood, from seven different perspectives.

"There are seven ways we did it in this book," says Mrs. Traina, and the point of the book is that all seven are correct — and that there are many others.

The book was spawned in a pregnancy exercise class in Mrs. Traina's Pacific Heights home. The other exercisers and authors are Jan Yanehiro, Katherine Dusay, Averil Haydock, Mary Oei and Diana Bert, some with careers, some without, some who had had children before, some who hadn't.

The chapters include anecdotes and recollections written by each of the women, on everything from conception and finding a good doctor to weight gain and postpartum depression.

The need for such a book, Mrs. Traina believes, is the lack of "tribal ways" in modern life — the lack of a grandmother or an aunt or mother to pass on her experiences.

The authors don't pretend to be experts, except in the sense that every woman who has gone through pregnancy and delivery is an expert.

"One of the things we wanted to stress is it's not a medical book," said Ms. Yanehiro. "But we do show from our experiences that anything is within the range of normal."

Even on delicate and very personal issues, such as miscarriage and sex after delivery, the women are very frank. "One is left with the emptiness, the grief," Mrs. Traina said of her miscarriage, explained in detail in "Having A Baby."

Since the book was written about her pregnancy with Samantha, now 2, Mrs. Traina, 37, has had another child, Victoria, 8 months, and she has four other children from earlier marriages and from her husband John's previous marriage.

Ms. Keel also is pregnant with her second child, due late this summer, when Natasha will be 2½ years old.

Ms. Yanehiro, 36, co-host of a nightly San Francisco television program, "Evening Magazine," had a second daughter in May. Her first daughter, about whom she wrote the book, is named Jaclyn Mariko Zimmerman.

Ms. Yanehiro took off only five weeks after the birth of her first daughter and she plans to return to work soon.

"I love being a mommy. It's the best thing I've ever done," she says. "Those little hands, that little smile that lights up the worst day you've ever had. She melts everything away."

While she does feel guilty when she goes to work, especially when she's gone for up to 10 days at a time, "I choose to think that the quality time I give her is the best."

"I think for a long time we believed we could do it all and we could do it comfortably," said Ms. Keel. "I don't think that's true anymore. I think we have to make some sacrifices."

("Having a Baby" is published by Dell.)

Dear Abby

Young Mother Wants Approval Of Family

DEAR ABBY: I am a divorced mother of four young children. Five months ago I met a very nice man. He loves children and treats mine like his own. He makes a very good living (he's a truck driver) and says he wants to spend the rest of his life taking care of us. I know he loves us very much, and I love him. I've never loved or been loved like this before.

The problem is I'm 30 and he's 49 (looks 40 and enjoys life like a 25-year-old). Abby, he's older than my parents! He wants to be married and so do I, but what do I tell my family? I know it's my decision, but it's important to me to have my family's approval.

Abby, what would you do if your daughter came to you with this kind of news?

WONDERING IN ARIZONA

DEAR WONDERING: I would say: "Congratulations. What kind of wedding do you want?"

* * *

DEAR ABBY: I would like your opinion as to whether I should do anything about this matter or just keep quiet. My son recently announced his engagement. I have met his fiancee and they seem very much in love.

My son has lived away from home for the last 10 years, but when he lived at home I learned that he was a transvestite. I have no idea whether he has pursued this activity or not.

Should something be said to his fiancee regarding this, or should the entire matter be forgotten on my part? I am also wondering if this characteristic is inherited, as they have already stated that they want a family soon.

I do not want anything to come between them, so hurry your advice and sign me ...

WONDERING MOM

DEAR WONDERING: If your son is an active transvestite and he hasn't told his fiancee, he should. In any case, you stay out of it, Mom.

As for "compulsive cross-dressing and impersonating the opposite sex," which is the definition of transvestism, Dr. Paul Walker of San Francisco, an authority on the subject, informs me that it is not an inherited characteristic.

* * *

DEAR ABBY: If a strange man knocked on your door, the very first thing he would do is identify himself. If a stranger wrote you a letter, he would introduce himself with some opening remarks.

Why, oh why, then, is there such rudeness on the telephone? When I answer my telephone, most adults immediately ask, "Who is this?" They do not tell you who they are. If I am not the person to whom they want to speak, they demand to know, "Is So-and-So there?" If I inform the caller that So-and-So is not here, I am further questioned with, "Where did she go?" And, "When do you think she'll be back?" (All of this from a stranger who has not even identified himself.)

If this is the new etiquette, I think it stinks.

I am a graduate of Princeton, and also a physician if that matters. Sign me ...

RALPH OF LONG ISLAND

DEAR RALPH: This is not the "new etiquette," it's the old rudeness. The sure cure for that, Doctor, is to ask the caller, "May I ask who's calling, please?" immediately after the caller asks, "Who is this?"—and most certainly before you identify yourself.

CONFIDENTIAL TO 20TH-CENTURY PHILOSOPHER IN ANN ARBOR, MICH.: John Stuart Mill, a 19th-century philosopher, wrote: "In the frequent case of a man who causes grief to his family by addiction to bad habits, he deserves reproach for his unkindness or ingratitude. No drunk person ought to be punished simply for being drunk; but a drunk soldier or policeman should be punished for being drunk on duty."

Paloma Picasso Sued For Art Piracy

HEARST NEWS SERVICE

NEW YORK — Paloma Picasso, daughter of the late Pablo Picasso, is being sued for $1.2 million, accused of pirating the designs of a well-known calligrapher for her line of high-priced jewelry.

Calligrapher Arthur Baker charged, according to an article in the June issue of Connoisseur, that Ms. Picasso's exclusive line of "Gold Fish" jewelry was taken line-for-line from illustrations in his book, "New Calligraphic Ornaments and Flourishes," (Dover, 1982, $3).

Baker said that he first became aware of what the suit called Ms. Picasso's "design piracy" when he saw a newspaper ad for the jewelry a year ago last April.

Ms. Picasso did not deny she used Baker's book in developing her scribble-style pins.

"It's not a case of copying but of inspiration, of poetic license," said Anthony Ostrom, president of Tiffany's.

The store's design director, John Loring, defended the work, saying Ms. Picasso's modified Baker's designs "significantly" in order to "transform the two-dimensional drawings into three-dimensional jewelry pieces."

Loring added it was traditional practice in the trade to use "adaptations of (copybook designs) without acknowledgement of their original source or designer, even when known."

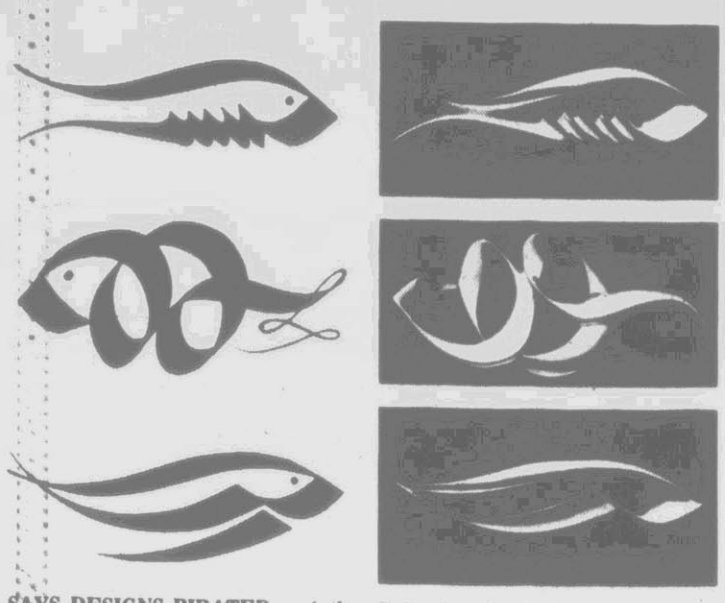

Baker's lawyer, Marc Schiller, denied significant changes were made in his client's designs.

"Ms. Picasso brought about as much 'originality' to her copy of Baker's designs as a child might in rendering 'three-dimensional' cookies with a cookie cutter," Schiller said. "Even a perfunctory comparison of the plaintiff's designs and Ms. Picasso's 'adaptations' conclusively demonstrates that Ms. Picasso's jewelry designs are direct copies, made without any intervening creative thought."

To complicate the matter, the book gives permission to use up to 10 designs in a single project, giving credit "where possible."

When Baker first complained to Ms. Picasso, according to the article in connoisseur, she offered to withdraw the pieces from sale. Baker reportedly told her not to.

"I feel as if I was trapped like the fly who is induced by the spider to come into his web," Mr. Picasso said in a court affadavit. "I was solicited by Baker to do the very thing I did, and now he has hauled me into court on claims which are completely without merit."

Collects Autographs Of Everyday People

By CINDY COX
Lancaster New Era

"Hi," he says. "My name is Charlie and one of my hobbies is collecting autographs of important people I meet all over the world. May I have yours, please?"

You're flattered. Someone told you that you looked a little bit like Kirk Douglas one time, but you can't lead this guy astray. So you explain to him that he must be mistaken — you're not anyone important.

But Charlie Ashenfelter, Lancaster's own "Autograph Man," disagrees. "To me," he says, "everyone is important. May I have your autograph please?"

For the last 19 years, Charlie Ashenfelter has given this pitch to people all over the world.

Some people collect stamps. Others collect coins, or rare bugs, or rocks. This 69-year-old man collects autographs. At last count, he had 46,607 signatures — a number he thinks may be a world record.

Ashenfelter's signatures are not autographs in the common sense of the word — not the "John Hancocks" of the glittering, the famous and the infamous.

Oh, he admits there might be a few well-known signatures sprinkled throughout his collection, butmost of the signatures are those of "everyday people."

"One of the main reasons I do it is because people frequently say, 'You just made my day. No one ever called me important before. No one has ever asked for my autograph.' They really get a kick out of that."

Ashenfelter began his unusual hobby back in 1965, quite by accident. Then a supervisor of employment programs for the state (he has since retired), he attended a management training program at Michigan State University. One day, he was asked to sit in on a special class of foreign students.

The Lancaster man was so impressed that he asked some of the students to sign a copy of the "Michigan State News" he had with him that day.

"The reaction I got from everybody I talked with that day was so positive," he remembers. "It inspired me to do it again."

Since he and his wife, Clara, enjoy traveling, he began collecting signatures on trips. From Belgium to Germany, he started asking people for their autographs. Here in the United States, he collected signatures from Chattanooga, Tenn., to Watertown, N.Y.

After a few trips, he organized his approach. He now asks people to sign one side of unlined sheets of notebook paper. Also, since one of his hobbies is lettering, he prints the names of the cities where he collects the autographs onto each sheet.

After a sheet is filled with about 200 signatures, Ashenfelter makes a photocopy of it and counts the autographs by drawing a line through each one. The notebook he carries with him has some photocopies of original sheets — which he uses to explain his hobby — as well as the current sheet he is filling.

Royal Opera In Arts Festival

By JACKIE HYMAN
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Sir Colin Davis, who is conducting the Royal Opera in its first visit to the United States, says the company was drawn here by the opportunity to participate in the Olympic Arts Festival.

"Sport, which attracted so many millions of viewers, has in this case been tied up with a lot of artistic ventures," Davis said in an interview.

The Royal Opera's premiere of a new production of Puccini's "Turandot," starring Gwyneth Jones and Placido Domingo, is the highlight of the 10-week arts festival held in conjunction with the summer Olympic Games. It will be performed at the opera's Covent Garden home in London on Sept. 1.

Also on tap during the Royal Opera's visit, which ends July 22, are Benjamin Britten's "Peter Grimes," starring Jon Vickers and Heather Harper, and Mozart's "The Magic Flute," featuring Helen Donath and Stuart Burrows.

Geraint Evans, who was to have made his farewell appearances in "Peter Grimes," was forced to withdraw due to illness. American baritone Thomas Stewart has stepped in.

Davis, 57, who will leave Covent Garden in 1986 to head the Bavarian Radio Orchestra in Munich, says he loves working in opera despite its pitfalls.

"The number of things that can go wrong in an opera are infinite," he said, citing the logistics of singers, musicians and massive scenery. "There you (the conductor) are, being a dynamo in the dark instead of being in full public view. I love the opera because I love human beings."

New operatic works are generally confined to small companies because of the cost of production, Davis said.

"It's too expensive to fail," he observed. "Opera is very expensive as an entertainment compared to, for example, hiring a tennis court for a couple of hours. But compared to the cost of sending somebody up in space, opera doesn't cost anything."

Davis, who became music director of the Royal Opera in 1971 and also serves as a gUest conductor of the Boston Symphony, sees parallels between music and other aspects of life.

On musicians, he said: "They have to sit there and they have to take part in something that is much bigger than an individual. They have to sink their egos, which makes them in their playing extraordinarily bearable. It would be a great advantage to the governments of the world if they could go about their work without saying a word."

Great art is created "only when people are fired by things that are much bigger than themselves," he said.

Mention any subject, and Davis can relate it to music. Doctors? "They're like conductors. They think they're supposed to know everything."

He has no patience for purists who insist that opera should be performed at exactly the same tempo for every production.

"The people who treat music or anything else as a holy book which is not to be tampered with are only hiding behind their own lack of courage," Davis said. "The best tempo is the one that's best suited to the voice that you're dealing with.

"Anyone who has any taste for the protean quality of life will understand what I mean. Life's like an amoeba, changing shape the whole time, full of false feet."

Davis is currently reading "Macbeth," in a German translation by the poet Schiller. Shakespeare renews my world," he said. "I have to keep in touch with the men for whom the world was a flaming orchid."

Bellow's Short Stories Recapture The Past

Aspiring writers would do well to study Saul Bellow. The man writes beautifully.

Bellow shows this talent once again in "Him ...," a collection of five stories, although some are of such length that they are actually novellas.

In the title piece, Bellow employs a device he has used before in his fiction — using the present as a means to recapture the past.

The narrator is Herschel Shawmut, an elderly American who has fled to Canada to escape his creditors. Friendless, a stranger in a strange land, Shawmut thinks of the years behind him and slowly unfolds his history to the reader.

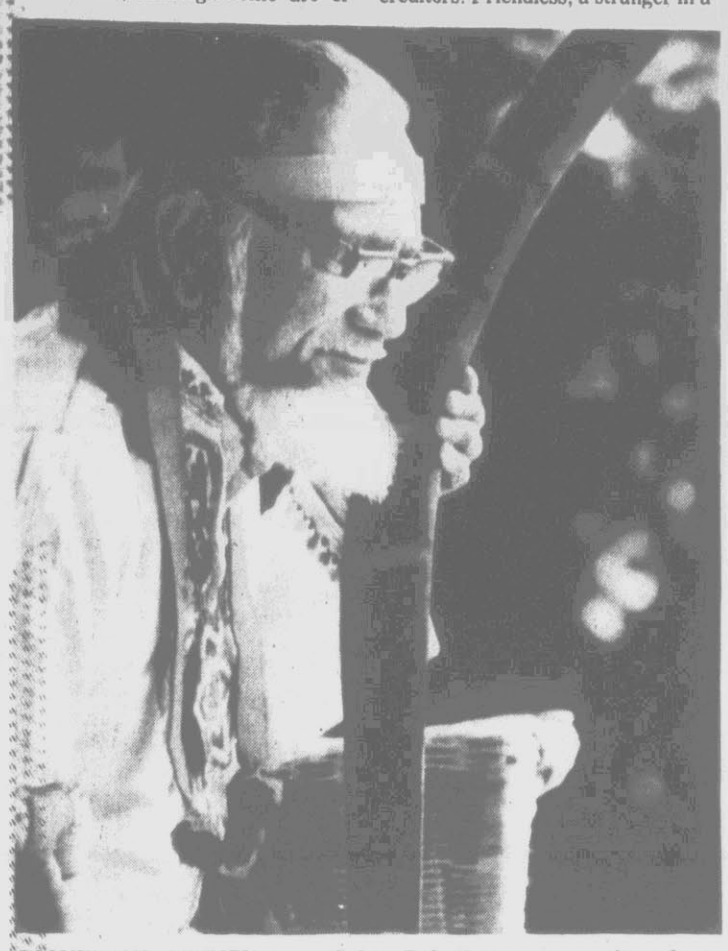

The recital of his life is in the form of a letter of apology to a woman he offended more than 35 years earlier. The owner of a sharp tongue that he cannot control, Shawmut has offended many over the years, but it is to this woman he writes because he feels he has hurt her the worst. As he tries to atone, Shawmut tries to explain what makes him act as he does and in so doing tells of his life in fascinating detail.

Bellow's use of the return-in-time device also appears in some of the other stories, most effectively in "Zetland: By a Character Witness," and "Cousins."

In the first, the narrator tells of a boy he knew long ago named Zetland and of the Chicago in which they grew up where, "The heat was corrosive, the cold like a guillotine as you waited for the streetcar."

In the second, the narrator is called on to serve as character witness for a distant cousin in trouble with the law. Why he feels obligated to stand up for this man is, of course, because of things that had happened many years before.

Hungarians Protest Proposed Dam On The Danube River

By ROLAND PRINZ
Associated Press Writer

GABCIKOVO, Czechoslovakia (AP) — In what is believed to be the biggest environmental protest in the Soviet bloc, 6,000 to 7,000 Hungarians have signed a petition protesting a plan to dam or divert a 138-mile stretch of the Danube River for a hydroelectric project.

Some of the work already has begun in this area where the river forms part of the Czechoslovak-Hungarian border. The frontier will be shifted in some areas.

The plan calls for the construction of one power plant here and one at Nagymaros, downstream in Hungary. The 138-mile stretch comprises lush forests, marshes and grasslands along the riverbed from Bratislava, capital of Slovakia in Czechoslovakia, to Budapest, Hungary's capital.

The Hungarian petition, whose signers include 50 prominent scientists, writers, artists and other intellectuals, is addressed to the Hungarian Parliament and Council of Ministers. Its calls on them to drop the project, agreed upon with Czechoslovakia in 1977.

The petition maintains that the list of adverse consequences is lengthy.

"The dam systems would cause serious damage to the drinking water supply, agriculture, the forests, and the network of settlements in countries affected," it says.

It also claims that the project "would cause irreparable damage to the landscape and natural environment" of two Danube regions, known as Csallokoez, an area of fertile farmland on the Slovak side, and Szigetkoez.

Officials interviewed in both countries maintained that the protest was exaggerated, unfounded and too late to do any good. But signature collectors said their rolls are growing.

Visitors who drove recently through part of the site on the Czechoslovak side saw dozens of trucks carrying gravel and building material through what used to be forest or grassland.

Four thousand workers were engaged in the project on the Czechoslovak side. On the Hungarian bank construction had not yet started, although officials said it would begin soon.

Marian Sereda, project manager on the Slovak shore, said in an interview that construction was under way along a 62-mile stretch of the Danube, with 6,180 acres already under construction in Czechoslovakia.

The system starts with a 12-square-mile reservoir extending from Bratislava to Samorin, from where the dammed-up water is led through a 10-mile canal to the Gabcikovo station. From there an overflow canal five miles long leads back into the Danube.

In a newspaper article, Hungarian biologist Janos Vargha, a chief critic of the project, contended that the amount of money Hungary will need to "prevent or contain environmental damage" will mean overall outlays of almost twice as much.

According to an official Slovak government booklet, plant operations were to start at Gabcikovo in 1986 and at Nagymaros in 1989. After "planning was reassessed," said Sereda, the new start-up dates were changed to 1990 and 1993.

"No ecological catastrophe is going to occur here," Sereda said in the interview, but he added, "You cannot avoid ecological changes."

As of 1995, the entire system is scheduled to generate over 3.6 billion kilowatt hours of electricity annually — an amount the two governments hope will save each counrtry nearly 5 million barrels of crude oil a year.

Apart from cheap electric power, the planners hope to prevent recurrent flooding and to enlarge the channel so smaller seagoing ships can go upstream as far as Bratislava.

That is "an old Slovakian dream," said one Hungarian, who asked not to be identified. He recalled bitter feelings that still simmer between Hungarians and Slovaks.

Much of southern Slovakia used to be part of Hungary, and the Hungarians would lose small tracts of land to their northern neighbors because of project's shifts in the river.

Csallakoez, according to critics in Hungary, is also the last ethnically pure major Hungarian settlement in Czechoslovakia. It is likely to lose that status as a result of the project, either as a result of flooding or population shifts.

No organized protests are known to have occurred in Slovakia, where dissent is not tolerated. People circulating the petition in Hungary are also wary of their own authorities but have reported no major crackdowns.

In Budapest, State Development Bank President Peter Havas, who cited "purely economic reasons" for the delay in the Hungarian part of the work, said: "Now, Hungary would not engage in such a project. We wouldn't have done it had a decision been taken in 1981 or later."

Havas, who is also the Hungarian government commissioner for the project, said the petition will have little impact.

"These protests are ridiculous," he said. "They (the signers) are protesting against something they don't understand."

But Miklos Breinich, deputy head of the Water Management Office, conceded that both scientific concerns and other protests were taken into consideration by authorities.

"We received many useful insights from these remarks," he said, "and we must honestly say that we now take a more serious look at questions of environmental protection. That was not so 10 years ago."

KING OF THE SUMMER WILDFLOWERS — It is generally acknowledged that Queen Anne's lace is the queen of summer wildflowers in eastern North Carolina. By the same token of assigning descriptive terms to flowers, logic would dictate that the tall, sturdy elderberry bush, with its multiple clusters of broad showy white flowers, can rightly be termed king of the summer wildflowers. Elderberries flower from early June on into the latter weeks of July. (Reflector Photo by Jerry Raynor)

STATUE OF LIBERTY

NEW YORK (AP) — An exhibition of photographs relating to the Statue of Liberty is on display at the New-York Historical Society through Jan. 13, 1985.

Entitled "Visions of Liberty," the exhibition celebrates the centennial of the statue, an anniversary that commemorates the official presentation of the assembled statue in Paris July 4, 1884. The statue was unveiled in New York City Oct. 28, 1886.

LIFE PHOTOS

NEW YORK (AP) — Some 200 black and white photographs, nearly all of which were taken on assignment for LIFE magazine, will be shown at the International Center of Photography Nov. 11 to Jan. 13, 1985.

The photos for "LIFE: The Second Decade, 1946-1955" were selected from some 156,000 pictures from the magazine's collection.

Works by more than 70 photographers will be on view. Among them will be Margaret Bourke-White, Robert Capa, Phillipe Halsman and Gordon Parks.

Miss Kitty Still Relies On Garden

FISHER, La. (AP) — Kitty Hildebrand's garden has kept her going for more than 60 years, but — for the first time — she doubts that her plants will support her this year.

"Something is going to have to turn up. I don't know what it is," said the 86-year-old woman, who known around town as Miss Kitty.

Although she's always sold her plants dirt cheap — 20 cents a plant for day lilies, 12 cents a plant for chrysanthemums, $1.50 a pound for dig-it-yourself garlic — she has sold enough until now to support herself.

But the infirmities that come with age have hit her hard this year.

"I haven't sold near enough this time. I was delayed getting them in the first of the year. Well, I fell. I had to wait a while to get over that," she said.

But Miss Hildebrand said she still brings flowers to the church every Sunday. And she hasn't lost her singing heart.

"I sing a lot when I'm by myself," she said. "Well, it makes you feel more like going to heaven. With my flowers. It has always seemed like to me that they went with heaven. I don't know how I would ever have got by if it hadn't been for my flowers. They make me think more about heaven."

She and her family used to dig more than 100 pounds of garlic a year, in addition to day lilies, chrysanthemums, tiger lilies, irises, petunias, dasies, popcorn spirea and other plants that fill her yard with color.

People who wanted to dig up the liriope grass — a ground cover — could get it for three cents for several clumps. Even at that price, she can remember one $500 sale and another for $300.

But it's been a while. One customer who used to buy 50 pounds of garlic a year — by mail, at $6 a pound COD — is dead. Another is out of touch. This spring, for the first time in years, she didn't even dig up the garlic when it was time.

"I didn't know if I'd sell it any more," she said. "I was 86 years old on the second day of April. You know I can't get around and do much at that age."

The garlic, like many of the plants she grows, carries a story.

"This garlic comes from Mississippi when my grandmother came from Wilkinson County, Miss., back in eighteen and seventy-seven," she said. The family has lived since then on the 102-acre tract where Miss Hildebrand and two nephews still live.

She started selling flowers when she was 22. Her mother had died four years earlier, distraught at the thought of leaving her husband without anyone to care for him.

Miss Hildebrand was planning to marry a Texas schoolteacher, but didn't hesitate to vow that she would care for her father — and for her six older brothers and two older sisters — instead.

Miss Hildebrand said she told her mother things would be fine, "and I've made it so far. I've never been on welfare. I've made my own living all these years.

The young woman with a 9th grade education began by selling handmade quilts, but a friend suggested that she advertise flowers for sale in a new flier, called the Market Bulletin.

That began a business that — eked out with money made as a poll worker for elections and by winning prizes for canning at the Sabine Parish fair — continued for the rest of her life.

But Miss Hildebrand, who can remember days when she worked at the polls for $1.50 rather than the current $75, and who won 27 ribbons — and the attendant cash prizes of 50 cents to $1.50 each at the parish fair last year — said she probably won't have those sources of income this year, either.

"I've canned a little. Not much. I don't know as I will try to take it. I just can't get around like I used to," she said.

But she still gets her vegetables and much of her fruit from plants on the 102-acre homestead.

"I have peas and tomatoes and butterbeans. I've got me a sweet potato patch. I've got me a nice watermelon patch. I've got my pear trees. They're just loaded with pears."

She has other blessings.

"I have so many good friends. I tell you, I love my friends. ... I have a little dog. His name is Peter."

And she has her flowers — and a glimpse of a future even more blooming.

New Post Card

The 13-cent Fredric Baraga postal card will be issued in Marquette, Mich., on June 29, where first-day ceremonies will take place.

For more than 37 years, Baraga devoted his life to educating the Indians of the Great Lakes. In 1831 he settled in Michigan's lower peninsula during a period when many settlers feared the Indians. But Baraga promoted peace and harmony. To the Indians he became a friend and a teacher, erecting schools and churches. In 1835 he moved to Michigan's upper peninsula and continued his work among the Chippewa Indian tribes. Because of his contributions, the land around the Great Lakes where he lived and worked is referred to as "Baragaland."

The design of the card depicts Baraga and an Indian guide in a canoe. In the upper right corner is "USA 13c." Below the design are the words "Frederic Baraga, Michigan, 1835."

First day of issue cancellations will be available. You may purchase the card at your local post office and mail it no later than July 29. Send to: Customer-Provided Stationery, Postmaster, Marquette, MI 49855-9991. No remittance is required. Uncanceled stamps issued before June 29 may be affixed to the card to receive first-day cancellation.

You may choose to have the USPS provide the card by mailing requests to: Frederic Baraga Postal Card, Postmaster, Marquette, MI 49855-9992. It must be postmarked no later than July 29. The price is 13 cents per card. Enclose a money order for that amount.

The USPS reminds collectors to send gummed self-addressed labels to expedite the return of first-day requests.

Mexico's La Trouppe Delights Young World Fair Audiences

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Four-year-old Amanda Keeney of Queens, N.Y., doesn't understand Spanish, but she gleefully sat through a performance by a Mexican acting company at the World's Fair.

Mexico's circus-like company, La Trouppe, opened the largest theater festival for young audiences ever staged in the United States on June 1.

Language was no barrier for the audience because the actors' lines were whistled, not spoken. For the finale, whistles were given to the audience. The ensuing cacophony was Amanda's favorite moment and she blasted away with gusto.

Eleven companies were involved in the festival, nine from overseas. They ranged from La Trouppe to groups with serious scripts for teen-agers. It is the first international theater festival ever produced for a world's fair.

The flavor of the Mexican production contrasted to that of New York's First Lady which opened the same day and is a serious play dealing with the historical and emotional tensions of Eleanor Roosevelt's life.

"I thought it was fabulous," said Laura Gowdy, 15, of New Orleans. "I don't know anything about Eleanor Roosevelt, but I was impressed. Everyone has a really good voice and they changed clothes and props so fast, so professionally.

"Besides," she said. "Franklin's cute. My mother was saying that the smile was the same smile."

Miss Gowdy said she planned to return for the opening of the French show.

"I'm excited about the French one because I'm taking French and I want to see if I understand them."

But she had complaints about the sound in the performance tent — as did the rest of the audience — and the actors.

The spillover from a street public address system pumping recordings into the adjacent Italian Villiage commercial district is not the only difficulty producer Orlin Corey contends with.

"Initially we were to be in a 1,200-seat house, the World Theatre, which dwindled along the way to 600, then disappeared one day," he recalled.

The French production is full scale and will be staged downtown in the Orpheum Theater. The famed Sicilian Marionettes will bang out their classical bloody mayhem from the time of Charlemagne on a stage in the Italian Village.

Other companies in the festival include Brazil, with a parable about freedom featuring costumed birds as main characters; England, with the legend of Sir Gawain and the Green Knight; Canada with a mime production, "The Potato People in the Piggy Bank Caper," which has costumes including "larval masks."

Japan produced two shows, one a traditional mime highlighting gymnastics, and the other a contemporary tale of young friendship.

Former Athlete Succeeds In Food

SPARTANBURG, S.C. (AP) — When folks here start talking about hometown boys who made it big, Charlie Bradshaw's name is likely to come up.

A star quarterback at Wofford College in the 1950s, Bradshaw and former teammate Jerry Richardson got together after graduation to found Spartan Food Systems Inc., a restaurant firm that started in 1961 with one Hardee's hamburger franchise and today operates nearly 500 restaurants with annual revenues of more than $300 million.

In 1979, Spartan Food Systems caught the eye of Trans World Corp., then the parent company of Trans World Airlines, Hilton International Co. and Canteen Corp., a food-vending subsidiary.

Trans World $80 million to acquire the company, which by then included Quincy's Family Steak House restaurants as well as Hardee's.

Trans World's board of directors soon elevated Bradshaw to senior vice president for food services, giving him responsibility for all Canteen Corp. operations as well as Spartan Food Systems.

And more recently, the board elected Bradshaw president and chief operating officer of Trans World, giving him full responsibility for all of its food, lodging and real estate subsidiaries.

Although Bradshaw, 47, does not qualify as a real hometown boy, having grown up in Lake City, Fla., he is as loyal as any Spartanburg native.

"I transferred to Wofford from the University of Georgia in January of 1956, and I've been here ever since," he said in an interview. "This is a great town to live in. We love it."

His promotion to Trans World president will require him to move to New York City, but Bradshaw said he and his wife, Judy, will not give up their Spartanburg home.

"We're not giving up Spartanburg; in effect, we're gaining New York. Some people who work in New York have weekend and summer houses in Connecticut or on Long Island. We just happen to have ours in Spartanburg, South Carolina."

Bradshaw and Richardson, who played wide receiver, split up briefly after graduation. Richardson played pro football for the Baltimore Colts and Bradshaw took a job with a Ford dealership in Spartanburg.

"I had a desire to get involved in coaching, but I thought the monetary return from a career in business would be greater," said Bradshaw. "I decided to get the pleasure of coaching out of Little League, which I did for several years."

In 1961, Joe Brewer Jr., Bradshaw's brother-in-law, approached Bradshaw about investing in a fledgling North Carolina hamburger chain called Hardee's. He initially scoffed at the idea, but changed his mind after spending an hour in front of one of the restaurants in his wife's hometown of Rocky Mount, N.C.

"I wrote down every sale," Bradshaw said, "and I couldn't believe it."

Meanwhile, Richardson had been steered into the restaurant business by Colt owner Carroll Rosenbloom, who helped Richardson and two other Colt players, Alan Ameche and Gino Marchetti, start an establishment called Gino's.

Bradshaw and Richardson got together with Brewer and two other investors to open the first Hardee's franchise in Spartanburg.

The two friends soon bought out their partners' shares of the business and began making and selling hamburgers 12 hours a day and planning new locations.

The company grew quickly, going public in 1969 to broaden its capital base.

In the business world, Bradshaw and Richardson moved as smoothly together as they did on the football field. The two established individual management styles, with Chairman Bradshaw more in the public eye and President Richardson taking the role of operations manager.

Spartan Food Systems' profits have grown every quarter since the company's founding. It currently operates 280 Hardee's in nine Southeastern states, making it the chain's largest franchise.

As owner of the Quincy's chain, which it purchased in 1977, Spartan Foods owns and operates 184 of the family style steak restaurants.

Study Cites Racial Bias By Co-Ops

ATLANTA (AP) — Only 2 percent of the board members of rural electric cooperatives in 12 Southern states are black, even though the population of the areas served by those cooperatives is about 24 percent black.

That's one of the findings of a two-year study of Southern electric cooperatives by the Southern Regional Council, a privately funded, nonpartisan research and action organization founded in 1944.

"Electric cooperatives were born from the magnificent notion that they would be grassroots democratic organizations that serve all their members," said Steve Suitts, executive director of the council. "But over time in the South, they have grown to be the very opposite of the concept that gave them birth."

Suitts said the council's Co-op Democracy and Development Project, which is at least six months away from publishing its findings and recommendations, found underrepresentation of blacks on the boards of electric cooperatives throughout the South.

Relying on documents the electric cooperatives filed with the federal government between 1981 and 1983, Suitts said the project found that out of a total of 3,035 board members in 12 Southern states, only 61 were black.

In Mississippi, for example, cooperatives provide electricity to areas where the population is 37 percent black. But Suitts said no black ever has served on a co-op board in Mississippi.

The Southern state with the best representation of blacks on co-op boards, according to the SRC's findings, was South Carolina, where 5 percent of the 221 board members were black.

Suitts said board members of Southern electric cooperatives have been able to perpetuate themselves in office by turning their annual meetings — those required by law for the election of board members — into more of an entertainment event or picnic for the community than a democratic election.

In addition, he said council researchers have turned up evidence that board members use a variety of other tactics to keep themselves in office, including:

—Using co-op employees to solicit proxy votes for incumbent board members when they are reading meters or collecting bills, while at the same time denying potential challengers to board members access to lists of the cooperative's customer-members.

—Scheduling annual meetings at times when most members cannot attend, and abruptly adjourning such meetings when it appears incumbent board members might lose their re-election bids.

Mattie Olson, a spokeswoman for the National Rural Electric Cooperative Association in Washington, said her organization would have no comment on the SRC's study until it is published and the association has time to analyze its findings.

Electric cooperatives in the South were set up in the 1930s and 1940s under a New Deal program designed to turn on the lights in rural America. They were created by local citizens using model legislation enacted by the various Southern legislatures.

Because that model legislation provided that cooperatives would be democratically controlled by their customers, only two Southern states — Arkansas and Virginia — have given their public service commissions the authority to regulate the rates charged by electric cooperatives.

In one state where co-op electric rates are not regulated — Mississippi — Suitts said a study by a legislative committee found that cooperatives had the lowest operating costs of any provider of electricity in the state, but they also had the highest rates.

"Co-ops have it both ways," Suitts said. "As economic institutions, if they were privately owned, the SEC (Securities and Exchange Commission) wouldn't let them get away with practices they use in elections to perpetuate their boards.

"If they were entirely government institutions, there would be much more strict scruitny of their conduct, and there would be much easier ways to get at their nonresponsiveness to customers.

"As it is, they sit right between government and the private sector and get the benefit of the worst abuses of both," he said.

Suitts said evidence that electric cooperatives are not the grassroots organizations they were intended to be is particularly ironic in light of the Reagan administration's current efforts to undercut the financial support cooperatives receive from the Rural Electrification Administration.

The REA, which makes loans to cooperatives at an interest rate of 5 percent, owes the U.S. Treasury $7.9 billion it cannot repay. The debt accumulated because the REA has been borrowing money from the Treasury at normal market rates and lending it to the co-ops at 5 percent interest.

YOUR DAILY Horoscope
from the Carroll Righter Institute

GENERAL TENDENCIES: Don't allow the luxury of feeling sorry for yourself over an annoyance or fancied slight, for becoming a martyr now could negate much of the beneficial conditions you've made for yourself.

ARIES (Mar. 21 to Apr. 19) You are discontented over family and real estate matters but don't show your feelings as of yet.

TAURUS (Apr. 20 to May 20) Drive most carefully on the highways where there could be some danger. Try not to be sarcastic.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21) Study your financial position well and you rid yourself of that idea of lack which is bothering you.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to Jul. 21) Some situation seems difficult to solve, but if you are patient, you find all works out just fine. Be forgiving.

LEO (Jul. 22 to Aug. 21) If you are objective, you can solve that problem that has you feeling tied down. Your mate could be testing you, so be adroit.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22) Your personal desires could be difficult to attain, so get busy on outside duties. Not a good day to have a group meeting with friends.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22) Don't take any risks with public or outside duties you have to handle today. A higher-up could be in a bad mood; take this in stride.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21) You would like to change your interests at this time but doing so hastily could bring you much loss.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21) Don't let some financial affair disturb you, and don't argue with another over it.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20) An irritable partner could upset you, if you permit, so take his or her views lightly. Show that you are dependable.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19) You want to show your gratitude to benefactors but don't know how as of yet, so await a better time. Be happy at home.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to Mar. 20) Although you had planned to have a good time, something may come up that will prevent this. Be more philosophical.

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY ... he or she must be taught to be more understanding of others, especially at home. Discipline should be gentle to prevent a resentful attitude that could last throughout life. Once better timing is learned, your progeny can become quite successful. Teach good manners early.

The Lee Home Near Bear Grass Displays Varied Regional Antiques

The Lee home, located just outside of Bear Grass, is neatly packed with old furniture, lanterns, church pews, hand-turned flour sifters, irons, dippers, baskets and hog scrapers. Every nook and cranny sports some type of antique item.

"I started collecting antiques about six years ago because it's so much fun. I love anything that's old. Now I ask for them for birthdays, Christmas, anniversaries — everything," Mrs. Lee said.

She and her husband Donnie, who have two children, spend most of their time farming tobacco. But in her spare time, Mrs. Lee has managed to collect a myriad of old things.

"My favorite place to go is antique stores in Greenville — Red Oak is my favorite. My husband picks up a lot of old things at Ruritan sales in the winter and at auctions. And people bring me stuff all the time," she said.

Mrs. Lee also hunts for the items in old barns and houses. "I look for them everywhere people will let me look," she commented.

Complementing the antique items are hand-made crafts. Each wall in her house is teeming with colorful cross-stitch designs of old-timey scenes, which are framed in wood by her husband. Mrs. Lee hand makes quilts, curtains and pillows and spices up empty corners with other hand-made knick-knacks such as stuffed ducks. Candlewick crafts and punch tin items are also numerous.

Surprisingly, the rooms do not appear cluttered. Organized and homey, her house's contemporary items blend in with the old. For example, her washing machine and dryer have been enclosed in wooden containers.

Most of the antique furniture she owns was given to her — an old pie safe, a high-back bed, a dresser, an eating table and church benches. She refinishes the worn-looking items.

"I refinish all of the old furniture I get. A friend of mine gave me the old high-back bed out of an old house. It had some black paint on it and a scratch, but I fixed it up and now it would probably sell for $800 or $900," Mrs. Lee said.

Collecting old baskets is another one of Mrs. Lee's hobbies. Meticulously hand woven, her variety of time-tainted baskets dangle from the ceilings.

"I love baskets. All of mine are real old and I have a lot of different kinds, but my favorite is an old apple basket. Some day I hope to have all my ceilings filled with baskets," Mrs. Lee said.

But one day, she added, some of her antiques will have to be given away because "sooner or later there'll be no more room."

Multi-level Contemporary

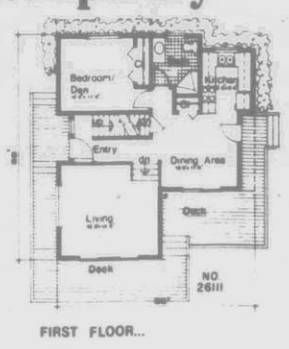

by Jerry Bishop

The features of this multi-level contemporary, the Thayer, lend character to both the exterior and interior. A wooden deck skirts most of three sides. Great variety in the size and shape of doors and windows is apparent.

Inside, the living room forms a unique living center. It can be reached from sliding glass doors from the deck or down several steps from the main living level inside. It is overlooked by a low balcony from the entryway and dining room on the lower level and from the second floor landing. Large windows on both the right and left keep it well lit.

Horses Powered Early Vacuum Cleaners

BLOOMINGTON, Ill. (AP) — When a housewife vacuumed her rugs in turn-of-the-century London, the whole neighborhood knew it.

The vacuum cleaner, an enormous horse-drawn affair, pulled up to the house and sucked the dirt out by means of an 80-foot hose. The contraption was so noisy that it nearly got its owner, Sir Hubert Booth, arrested for creating a public nuisance.

Ever since people started tracking dirt onto carpets, inventors such as Booth have been looking for ways to remove it, according to researchers at the Eureka Co. here, which celebrates its 75th anniversary this year.

The big question for inventors was whether to get rid of dirt by blowing it away or by sucking it up. The Whirlwind, a "sweeping machine" using suction and powered by a hand-operated fan, had been patented in 1859, but was unsuccessful. Its problem was that it spat out almost as much dirt as it inhaled.

Booth used an original, if unsanitary, method to prove that suction was superior to blowing. He lay on a grimy carpet face down, put a handkerchief over his mouth, and sucked hard. His handkerchief trapped the dirt, showing him that when used with a filter, suction worked.

Others quickly followed Booth's lead. Soon, manufacturers with names such as "Air Cleaning Company" and "Sanitary Devices Company" were turning out "pneumatic carpet renovators" and "apparatuses for removing dirt." Finally, one firm acquired all the basic patents and called itself the "Vacuum Cleaner Company," and the rest of the fledgling industry followed suit.

Some of the first vacuum cleaners were more ingenious than effective, the research indicates. One model required two persons to operate it — one to pump a bellows with foot pedals and another to apply the nozzle to the floor. Another, the "Water Witch," sold for the then princely sum of $75 and had to be placed in the kitchen sink or bathtub before operation.

Electricity, not water, brought success to the new product. By 1913, the Eureka Vacuum Cleaner Co. was manufacturing a model with five adaptations for the different types of household electric currents then in use, as well as attachments for bare floors, walls, upholstered furniture and crevices.

Manufacturers were quick to point out the advantages of the new electric machines to over-burdened American housewives. "It eats up the dirt!" heralded one 1909 ad. "The terrors of the old primitive way of housecleaning — of ripping up and tearing down, of endless confusion and toil and drudgery — all are now abolished."

Electricity made the vacuum cleaner a viable product, and engineering ingenuity made it an affordable one for the average consumer.

By 1918, there were so many manufacturers that companies found it necessary to promoDv their models' unique features. To help dealers boost sales, a trade magazine article listed 40 uses for a vacuum cleaner, such as a way to kill ants, clean the dog dry clothing, kill bees and wasps, dust women's hats and make a lazy hot-air register "jump."

The '20's were the decade of door-to-door selling, as manufacturers adopted outside sales forces to "go out and get the business." One major company had 5,000 door-to-door salesmen in 1927.

Milestones in vacuum cleaner improvement have included the motor-driven brush in the '30s, the tank cleaner in the '40s and the canister in the '50s.

From rug beaters to a Royal Electro-Hygiene, a variety of carpet sweepers and vacuums is on display in the Home Arts Collection at Henry Ford Museum in Dearborn, Mich. The collection traces the evolution of technology in the home, covering handwork of colonial times through mass-produced conveniences of the present.

The industry today produces hand vacs and compact vacs, two-motor vacs and self-propelled vacs, and even models with electronic controls to adjust the suction power. These descendants of Hubert Booth's horse-drawn contraption are now in more than 99 percent of all American homes.

A drawer that is stuck can test your temper. If you do not stay in control of the situation, a minor problem can turn into a major one. One exasperated tug too many or too strong and you have a broken drawer or damage to the object that is causing the trouble in the first place.

There are lots of reasons for a stuck drawer, among them loose nails, warpage, broken runners, just plain wear and a jammed item inside the drawer. In the latter case, the drawer usually opens a bit, then sticks. If you tug at the drawer gently, it sometimes will come free. If not, don't force it. Use a ruler or some such tool to prod inside the drawer to dislodge the object. Should the drawer not open even the tiniest bit, unusual but not rare, insert the blade of a putty knife into the opening between the drawer and the bureau frame. Do this very gently.

If all efforts to open the drawer without forcing are unsuccessful, see how the bureau is constructed and whether you can get results by taking out the drawer above or below the blocked one. You may even have to take off the back of the piece of furniture, which can be tedious but not difficult.

Most of the time, a drawer acts up in a different way. It just doesn't slide smoothly. Take everything out of the drawer and begin a thorough examination of it and the runners on which it moves back and forth. Check the construction of the drawer.

If you find some loose nails, withdraw them and replace them with similar nails. Follow the same method of attachment as used in the original construction, but when this isn't possible, substitute glue for nails. Don't use screws when nails and glue were the original fasteners. Especially look at the bottom of the drawer to see whether it is pulling away from its frame. Actually, the inspection will reveal, even to a novice do-it-yourselfer, what is wrong and how it can be fixed.

One thing is important. Be very careful not to make any drastic adjustments requiring the removal of very much wood. If you do, you may regret it later when moisture re-enters the wood and swells it. Whenever possible, sand rather than plane.

Sometimes the runners are worn or out of whack. Here again, common sense will reveal that to you, as the drawer is slid in and out. See whether the problem requires sanding or an adjustment or possibly replacement of the slides and runners. In some cases, you may find it advisable to replace old wooden runners with modern ones of metal or plastic, with or without ball bearings to make them work easier.

If any wood is removed at all during the repair job or if the sliding parts have no finish, seal them with a mixture of shellac and denatured alcohol, half and half. When everything is completely dry, apply wax or paraffin or some other lubricant to the slides and runners.

It may be the drawer has to be lifted slightly to open all the way and nothing else is wrong. In that case, place a couple of thumb tacks in the runners at the front end. This will lift the drawer slightly so it slides easily.

Corner joints can be strengthened with wood blocks, glued in place. Most of the time the blocks have to be clamped in place until the glue dries, but check to see whether the clamps are necessary. You may have an adhesive that does not require pressure to keep the parts together during the curing process.

(Do-it-yourselfers will find tips on a variety of repair subjects in Andy Lang's handbook, "Practical Home Repairs," which can be obtained by sending $1.50 to this paper at Box 5, Teaneck, NJ 07666.)

'Jewelry' Pieces May Look More Like Home Furnishings

By BARBARA MAYER

— A steel, silver and gold sculpture that includes as a design element two detachable earrings.

Are they jewelry or home decorations?

The question is being asked more frequently nowadays as artists-jewelers break new ground in shape, size and materials of one-of-a-kind pieces nominally called jewelry.

Several recent exhibitions in New York make it clear that contemporary American and foreign jewelry artists have gone beyond traditional definitions in the objects they design and make.

They demonstrate a much broader idea of the word jewelry than the general public assumes, says Arline Fisch, a jeweler and president of the Society of North American Goldsmiths, co-sponsor of one of the exhibitions.

"This jewelry seeks to make a political or social statement or a connection with the real world. The popular movement closest to it is probably the punk movement in music and clothing," she said.

Ms. Fisch said new ideas in jewelry were primarily being developed in art jewelry while the more commercial world of mass-marketed jewelry had yet to be influenced in this way.

The occasion for the recent outpouring of creativity in jewelry was the society's annual four-day meeting held this year in New York. The group, founded in 1970, is a non-profit organization dedicated to fostering the art of metalsmithing.

Coinciding with its meeting at the Fashion Institute of Technology, two exhibits surveying the diversity of handmade jewelry were presented at the American Craft Museum.

"Jewelry USA," an exhibit of 222 pieces by 122 American artists, is the result of a competition sponsored by the society. Entries from jewelers making both one-of-a-kind and production pieces were received and a panel of three experts selected the winners from among 2,200 slides submitted by 575 entrants.

After the exhibit closes Sept. 1, it will travel to museums in approximately 10 other American cities, according to Paul J. Smith, director of the American Craft Museum.

Also on view at the craft museum was a show of the work of 50 artists from 17 foreign countries. Helen Drutt, guest curator of this show and author of its catalogue, "Jewelry International: Contemporary Trends," is adjunct professor of 20th-century crafts at Moore College of Art in Philadelphia.

Garden Clinic

Q. I recently planted some shrubs that had been growing in containers. How often should I water them? (R.G., Lincolnton)

A. Water container-grown shrubs at least once a week after planting in the garden this summer. As new roots are growing and moving into surrounding soil, the need for water is critical. Be sure not to apply water faster than the soil can absorb it.

Q. When should sweet corn be harvested? (O.V., Durham)

A. Silks begin to turn brown and dry as the ears mature. Check a few ears for maturity by opening the top of the ear and pressing a few kernels with your thumbnail. If milky juice exudes, the ear is ready for harvest. Cooking a few ears is also a good test for maturity.

Q. How can we control love vine in our garden? (E.B., Hickory)

A. Love vine, sweet vine and dodder are some common names for several similar species of parasitic weeds. The stems of love vine are yellow to orange, and the plant has no leaves or true roots. Love vine twines around other plants, inserts root-like structures into the plant and begins to live as a parasite off the plant it has entwined. To control love vine, remove and destroy (burn if possible) love vine, and all infected plants. Do this before love vine has a chance to seed. There is a herbicide called Dacthal that will kill love vine seedlings when applied before they emerge. Remember to read and follow all label instructions when using any pesticide.

Q. Do you have a list of the things that need to be done in the vegetable garden in July? (K.J., Raleigh)

A. Here are some of the things that need to be done in July: Continue to plant warm season vegetables. Water the garden regularly. Sidedress vegetables. Harvest Irish potatoes when vines start to die and store then in a cool, dark location. Continue to control insects and diseases. Harvest vegetables early in the morning for best quality. Sow seed of leafy greens for fall transplants. Prepare to plant a fall garden since August is the main planting month for fall gardens.

Q. — I expect to do a job soon with hardboard, which I have never used before. I understand tempered hardboard is harder than untempered, but are there any other differences? What is each type used for and which costs more?

A. — Tempered hardboard is more moisture-resistant than the untempered type and costs more. Because of this moisture-resistance quality, it is generally used where there might be high humidity, as in the kitchen and bathroom or an outdoor structure. The untempered kind is used for most other purposes. Both types can be painted, although you can buy hardboard which has been painted at the factory. Other varieties also are available, including many kinds of plastic-faced hardboard. Possibly the most familiar type of hardboard is peg-board, which has hundreds of holes in it for the placement of metal pegs on which tools and other items are hung.

Q. — A house we had in mind has a septic tank. I understand the tank has to be cleaned every few years. Is this much of a job and must it be done professionally? Also, what about maintenance?

A. — Yes, the tank has to be cleaned periodically. It can be every two years or every five years, depending on many factors, including the number of persons in the house. The best way to handle both cleaning and maintenance is to have a professional company do it. Professional equipment is needed for the cleaning. You can do an annual inspection yourself, but it is best to have the same company do it under a special service contract. Anything you do yourself must conform with local health codes. The septic tank company must follow those codes or soon be out of business.

DEAR READERS: We have had many requests over the years for those hands that we consider to be our favorites. That makes quite a list. For the time being, therefore, we are devouting the Sunday column to a series of famous hands. At the end of the series, we will go back to our weekliy question and answer column.

Opening lead: King of ♡.

You might like to try this hand as a double dummy problem. It is based on a hand that was played by the Swedish master, Einar Werner, in a European Championship in the 1950s. At the table, Werner found the winning line after some five minutes thought. We doubt whether you will be able to match his performance even though you are looking at all 52 cards.

After West's overcall, a cue-bidding sequence got North-South to an aggressive six spade contract. In view of West's vulnerable overcall, it is reasonable to assume he has the king of diamonds. However, you cannot afford to draw trumps and then attempt to get to dummy with the queen of diamonds, because the defenders will be able to take a diamond and a heart trick.

Werner's solution was pretty as a picture. He ruffed the opening lead with dummy's deuce, cashed the ace of clubs and then discarded a heart on the king of clubs. He continued with a club from the table, and ruffed in hand with the ace!

That set up dummy's clubs, but also set up a trump trick for the defenders. However, that was the only trick they were due to get.

Declarer crossed to the queen of spades and then started running winning clubs. On the first of these, he sluffed his remaining heart loser. The defenders were welcome to ruff at any time they wanted to. But that would leave only one trump outstanding. No matter what the defenders returned after ruffing the club, declarer would be able to win in hand (a heart by ruffing, a diamond with the ace), cross to the board with the king of trumps while drawing the last trump, and enjoy all the good clubs on the table to make his slam.

Send any questions for this column to Charles Goren and Omar Sharif, care of this newspaper. Each week a prize of a copy of the new "Goren's Complete Bridge," a $9.95 value, will be awarded for the question judged to be the best received.

Striped Bass

A steady decline in North Carolina's striped bass population may be caused by starvation of young fish soon after they hatch from Roanoke River spawning areas, an East Carolina University biologist says.

Roger Rulifson of ECU's Institute for Coastal and Marine Resources has studied samples taken from the river over the past two years.

"We're finding that most of the fish have nothing in their stomachs or that the bellies are full of non-nutritional debris," said Rulifson. "As many as 80 percent of the young striped bass in our samples may be starving to death, but we don't know why."

One possible explanation is that the striped bass larvae can't find enough of the microscopic zooplankton that serves as their primary source of food, Rulifson said.

Platform Battles Probably Will Be Mostly Symbolic

By TOM RAUM
Associated Press Writer

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Despite major concessions from Walter F. Mondale's majority that drafted the 1984 Democratic platform, Gary Hart and Jesse Jackson are planning floor battles over selected parts of the document.

The battles, however, are likely to be more symbolic than of substance, and far less bitter than the 1980 platform confrontation between forces loyal to then-President Carter and Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass.

The platform — a traditional quadrennial political document of goals and campaign platitudes — will be presented to the Democratic National Convention Tuesday evening.

It is a composite document, tailored for Mondale's candidacy but also heavily beholden to themes generated by Hart and Jackson. And while borrowing heavily from the campaigns of the three Democratic rivals, the 35,000-word statement of party philosophy contains page after page of stinging criticism of President Reagan's "government by subtraction."

And, predictably, it holds out the promise of a better life for all Americans under a Democratic president.

Despite the harmony, there will be floor flights over four minority reports — one by Hart and the other three by Jackson.

Such planks required signatures of 25 percent of the committee members.

Although the Mondale majority on the committee made numerous concessions in accepting language from Jackson's "new directions" and Hart's "new ideas" agendas, they stood firm in some controversial areas. They are:

—A Hart plank spelling out when a Democratic president should not use military force, a watered down version of an earlier Hart plank ruling out use of U.S. land forces in a Persian Gulf war.

—A Jackson plank urging "substantial" cuts in defense spending instead of the increased spending endorsed by the committee version.

—A Jackson plank stating opposition to runoff primaries common in southern states. The platform draft opposes such races only where they can be demonstrated to be discriminatory.

—A Jackson plank stating, in absolute terms, a "no first use" policy for nuclear weapons. The committee version calls just for moving toward such a policy.

—A Jackson plank advocating stronger affirmative action programs and asserting that quotas are permissible in some situations. The platform reiterates Democratic opposition to all quotas.

"This is a broad-based document ... a document all of us can be proud to run upon," said Rep. Timothy Wirth, D-Colo., Hart's top spokesman on the 435-member platform committee which adopted the document.

Seeking to avoid a repeat of the platform brawls of 1980, party officials set out from the beginning to keep the document general and broad, with efforts made to sidestep areas of controversy.

This year's relative harmony was achieved under the leadership of Rep. Geraldine Ferraro, D-N.Y., whose role helped propel her into the national spotlight as a potential vice presidential candidate.

She kept in close touch with each of the three camps and sucessfully fought off most attempts to make the platform specific.

"It got a little more specific than we intended," Ms. Ferraro said. "But my real goal was to avoid mentioning specific legislation or putting dollar figures on programs. And we did that. It came out better than I expected."

The platform is more fiscally conservative than those of either 1976 or 1980. Absent are jobs or other major spending programs — the 1980 platform contained a $12 billion jobs program proposed by Kennedy. It also advocates increases in defense spending.

The platform lashes into the huge federal deficits of the Reagan years, vows to restore cuts in domestic programs made by the president and urges "sensible arms control agreements."

Democrats promise to reduce deficits through a more cost-efficient military, through a fairer tax program and though controlling health costs.

It criticizes Reagan as "the first president in over 50 years who has not met face to face with Soviet leaders" and proposes annual summits with Soviet leaders under a Democratic administration.

On Central America, the platform opposes Reagan's emphasis on military aid, stresses the importance of a politically negotiated settlement, advocates restrictions on military exercises in the area, and vows that all future aid to El Salvador should be tied to human rights progress.

The platform proposes for the first time that political action committees be prohibited from contributing to presidential and congressional campaigns.

The platform also goes further than past party platforms in guaranteeing legal rights to homosexuals in employment, the military and immigration. It also deplores acts of violence against "gay men and lesbians."

It also endorses ratification of a new Equal Rights Amendment. And from the Hart campaign, the pitform includes calls for programs to revitalize the nation's older, heavy industries; for easing trade barriers; for modernization of the military; for tough new laws to protect the environment against acid rain and toxic waste.

MILAN, Italy (AP) — A judge ordered male and female defendants on trial on terrorism charges be separated after receiving a report that two of them engaged in sexual activity in his courtroom.

Terrorist defendants of both sexes are held in crowded cages in Italian courtrooms and some male and female defendants have been seen caressing behind a protective curtain of their colleagues.

Famed Serpentarium Closing Its Doors

By JOEY HOLLEMAN
Associated Press Writer

MIAMI (AP) — For 38 years, the tacky, yet menacing hooded statue has perched atop the Miami Serpentarium, luring passersby on U.S. 1 inside to marvel as Bill Haast and his snakes perform.

But besieged by taxes, inflation and the lagging tourist industry, the Serpentarium will close its doors sometime after Labor Day.

The building will be destroyed to make way for a shopping center, and the haunting statue will move to South Miami High School, home of the Fighting Cobras.

Haast will find new homes for the turtles, iguanas, alligators and non-poisonous snakes, but the venomous snakes will head to Salt Lake City to begin new careers with Haast.

"That's progress I guess," Haast said in an interview. "Taxes, insurance and everything is going up, and tourism is declining..."

Haast isn't really upset about the situation. The move is something he has been dreaming about for years. The economic situation gives him a good excuse to move into a laboratory atmosphere, rather than continue at a tourist attraction.

"I'm going to be able to devote all of my time to what was the purpose of the Serpentarium — the production of venom and venom research. Now, I'll be able to go that way 100 percent," said the spry 74-year-old, anticipating a long stay in Salt Lake City, where he will work side-by-side with University of Utah scientists.

When Haast, a high school dropout with no medical schooling, began collecting venom for research purposes nearly 40 years ago, he knew that making a living would be difficult. To pay the bills, he put his snake handling skills on display.

For their Serpentarium admission, the curious can view virtually lifeless snakes in display cases or watch various less dangerous reptiles loll about in landscaped pits.

But what they really come for is to marvel at Haast's skills. After each short tour of the grounds, Haast pulls out the cobras. Carefully hanging on to the other end of the snake, he deploys his free hand behind the creatures fanned hood. With a lightning quick motion, he gains a safe hold just below the jaw.

Haast, bitten 141 times by deadly snakes, explains that the display isn't all show. By catching the snakes this way, he can drain more venom out of them. And venom is his real reward, not the applause or the tourist dollars.

"I enjoy (the show biz atmosphere of the performance). It's a challenge. But it's not so much for the public. The whole purpose is to get the venom," he said.

Though Haast built up an immunity to the snakes' deadly poison by injecting a mixture of diluted venoms into his blood stream, a couple of the bites have nearly been fatal.

He still hopes for a breakthrough in using venom for medicinal purposes.

Actually, he said the discovery was made in the 1970s when he teamed with Dr. Ben Sheppard to produce a substance named "Proven." Sheppard documented the success of the drug when used to treat arthritis and other diseases of the nervous system.

The Food and Drug Administration, however, forced Sheppard to quit prescribing the drug to his patients because it hadn't been thoroughly tested.

A long court battle ensued, with the federal agency winning in the end. Thus, Proven has been both the most fulfilling and the most frustrating aspect of Haast's work.

"Although Proven has not been accepted by the FDA," Haast said, "for the people I know have been helped by it, it has been the biggest thrill of my life."

Haast said he hopes the researchers in Utah will help him convince the medical establishment that the powerful substances in snake venom, when tempered chemically, can be useful. That has been his goal since 1946.

Along the way, Haast has had plenty of other thrills. The phone never stops ringing, with frantic voices on the other end asking for his help in snake-related cases. He has flown around the world to donate his highly immune blood to snake-bite victims or to provide rare venoms for anti-toxins.

Easy access to his special knowledge and abilities will be the real loss in South Florida when the concrete cobra comes down in September. But he insisted that anyone with snake-related problems will still be able to consult with him.

"I think I'll be more active in Utah," he said.

Female Nuke Plant Operator Says Hazards Exaggerated

By ROBIN P. TEATER
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — The controversy surrounding nuclear power never entered into Mary Beth Laird's decision to take a job at the Brunswick nuclear power plant near Southport.

The 28-year-old Wilmington woman said she was looking for something different when she answered a newspaper ad for Carolina Power & Light Co.'s nuclear operator training program.

Mrs. Laird said she has encountered no problems at Brunswick and charged that movies, such as "The China Syndrome," grossly exaggerate the hazards of working at a nuclear power plant.

"The danger that's involved in my job is inherent with any industrial setting ... you could be canning soup for the Heinz company and you could break your ankle," said Mrs. Laird, a Pittsburgh native.

"I tend to think that people make decisions on too little knowledge. I would say 95 percent of the people in the United States don't even understand how electricity works."

Until three years ago, the operation of a nuclear power plant eluded Mrs. Laird, who had studied marine biology at the University of North Carolina at Wilmington.

Now one of about 4,000 licensed operators in the country, Mrs. Laird oversees a control board with about 3,000 gauges, switches and dials. The equipment monitors and controls the production of electricity and shows operators how various plant and safety systems are performing.

But becoming a licensed operator wasn't easy.

After completing three months of classroom work at CP&L's Shearon Harris nuclear power plant in Wake County, Mrs. Laird underwent another three months of on-the-job training at Brunswick.

She also took a two-week course at the Hatch nuclear power plant near Vidalia, Ga., where she trained on a reactor simulator, which Mrs. Laird said is similar to a flight simulator used to teach pilots.

"Before you can even get through the gate to get into the plant, you have to go through general employee training," said Mrs. Laird. "It's an extremely rigorous program (to become licensed by the Nuclear Regulatory Commission).

"If you really want to achieve a license, you have to achieve a thick skin at the same time."

Mrs. Laird has had to develop even thicker skin because she's a woman.

Working almost exclusively with men, Mrs. Laird said most of her co-workers have "become pretty well used to me."

"You get most of the double-takes from the new people coming into the plant," she said. "You're always going to have holdouts — people who regard you with a little reserve at first ... especially since the industry is so heavily populated with people from the Navy."

Mrs. Laird said the industry is seeing more and more women hired for various jobs at nuclear power plants.

"I just really wish that people could understand that we do a job just like everybody else," she said.

Bolivia Blocks Guevara Auction

LONDON (AP) — Sotheby's auction house says it has indefinitely postponed this week's scheduled sale of the diaries of Che Guevara, the late Argentine-born revolutionary, because of legal action by Bolivia.

The Bolivian government claims that it owns the diaries and that they were stolen. Sotheby's spokeswoman Anne-Marie Arpels said it could be 18 months before the case is resolved.

Guevara, a top lieutenant of Fidel Castro in the 1956-59 Cuban revolution, later fought with rebels in Bolivia. He was captured and executed by the Bolivian army in 1967.

Sotheby's says it is satisfied the diaries are genuine and that the vendor has the right to sell them. The firm estimates the diaries would sell for about $325,000.

Last month, Bolivia asked a London court to bar Southeby's from auctioning the diaries pending a hearing to determine ownership. The court issued a temporary injunction against the sale.

Elections Delayed

DHAKA, Bangladesh (AP) — The militray government says parliamentary elections will be held Dec. 8, more than six months later that originally scheduled.

Chief election commissioner A.K.M. Nurul Islam said 48 million people in Bangladesh were eligible to vote for members in the 300-seat parliament. President Hossain Muhammad Ershad's government earlier postponed both parliamentary and presidential elections scheduled for May 27 after major opposition parties objected to holding the elections on the same day.

Talks Recessed

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — Delegates to the East-West talks on troops reduction in central Europe have begun a summer recess and will resume discussions Sept. 27, a NATO official says. The talks are now in their 11th year.

Timbuktu Still Survives On Its Ancient Mystique Lure

By MORT ROSENBLUM
AP Special Correspondent

TIMBUKTU, Mali (AP) — Ageless, timeless, a camel caravan appears in the shimmering distance. As it looms steadily larger, a plaintive wail drifts over the dunes, and repeats its mantra:

"You buy this sword. Authentic Tuareg. Cheap."

An Iowa tourist lurches atop the lead camel, struggling to absorb the atmosphere despite the whining sales pitch of the youngster with the sword.

Cursed by drought and devastation, Timbuktu has nothing to live on but its mystique. Even that is wearing thin in this ancient crossroads and seat of Islamic learning at the bottom edge of the Sahara.

Under the paralyzing midday sun, the town dozes, as always, in the shade of 700-year-old mud minarets and a few stone colonial balustrades. After dark, when only strangely thin Arabic melodies float from latticework windows, the old mood returns.

In the day, bright plaid golf shorts and beach hats of tourists with fat wallets rival Timbuktu's flowing robes and turbans. The city's traditional dignity and reserve is now tinged with brazen hustling.

That dilemma racks Timbuktu, a city so remote and mysterious that people once said "from here to Timbuktu" as if it were the end of the earth. The old ways can no longer support the 10,000 residents and 20,000 refugees in the crumbling mud and tile city.

Tuareg nomads, the fabled "blue men of the desert," first settled here along the Niger River in about 1100. "Tim" means "place of" and legend identifies Buktu as a slave woman who tended animals.

African chieftains conquered it in time, and Timbuktu became the seat of empire. Rulers built canals and mosques. Islamic scholars from the Middle East and Spain came to study. Merchants amassed fortunes in slaves and trade goods.

Moroccan Arabs seized the city in 1591 and then lost it to the Malian Bambara kingdom 80 years later. After another century, the Tuareg took it back again. What had been a rich settlement of 50,000 inhabitants became a famine- and plague-wracked outpost of 10,000 by 1800.

For most of its life, Timbuktu has lived on Tuareg sufferance. Spear scars on the city's carved wooden doors attest that successive rulers never managed to subdue proud Tuaregs who regularly swept in on camels for plunder.

The azalai — salt caravans — that crossed the desert each year to bring vast wealth from the Saharan mines numbered up to 10,000 camels, heavily armed against Tuareg marauders.

French colonizers halted the raids but did little to curb the Tuaregs' fierce independence. The French banned the word "slavery" but it was decades before they abolished the practice.

Today the Tuaregs' spears and swords are for sale to the 3,000 to 4,000 American and European tourists who arrive each year by Land-Rover, chartered aircraft or on erratically scheduled commercial flights.

A few camels still cross the desert for salt, but "Azalai" has a new meaning: It is the name of an air-conditioned French chain hotel around which Tuaregs clamor for handouts.

Most tourists find themselves shaken by the despair of refugees camped on the fringes of Timbuktu. Children and parents, beset by hordes of flies, seem to await Allah's will.

With no rain, there is no farming. The herds are gone, taken southward or dead of starvation.

If numerous for Timbuktu, the tourist wave is no massive tide. Because of unreliable air service, the 39-room Azalai averaged a 6 percent occupancy rate in 1983, and the comfortable government rest house was nearly empty.

A private charter service has replaced Air Mali, the national airline known to foreign residents as "Air Maybe," and its operators say they intend to assure regular flights.

Mahamane Samouda, sleek and stout in a brocade gown behind the wheel of his rattling Toyota pickup taxi, says he likes the tourists but not the refugees. "They try to eat with us, to live with us, but we don't have enough," he says. "There is no room here for them."

Physically, Timbuktu has hardly changed from its heyday centuries ago.

After independence in 1960, socialist Mali set up the Jigiseme supermarket, but residents still buy their canned peaches and flashlight batteries in the two traditional markets that also feature mounds of chilis, West German food-aid herring, reeking dried fish and herbal cures for ailing camels.

Gossip and lovers' declaratios are exchanged by the flash of eyes under veils as women drift swiftly by.

For Mayor Kadar, the magic is undefinable.

"Since my childhood, I have studied the mystery of Timbuktu. It is all in how you see things. You have your own mystery, such as sending people to walk around in space, as if there is not enough room down here. That is the nature of mystery."

But he is clear on the reality:

"This is a real place, our city, and as long as there is a single mouthful of food and a drop of water, there will be a Timbuktu."

400th Anniversary Handbook

RALEIGH — Its authors call it a navigational map to enjoying and understanding America's 400th Anniversary. "America's 400th Anniversary Handbook," the official souvenir program for the 400th, has been published by Storie/McOwen Publishers, Inc.

Written by Doug Barger, Phil Evans, and Nick Hodsdon, the 400th handbook provides information about opening ceremonies for the 400th which were held at Manteo July 13-15. Maps, a schedule of activities during the commemorative period of 1984-1987 and highlights of special events are listed.

But a major portion of the book is devoted to the story of the first English colonists in the new world, and their neighbors, the Carolina Algonkian Indians, who had been in North America long before the English arrived.

The handbook includes chapters on Elizabethan clothing, food, language and pastimes, as well as one entitled, "An Indian's First View of the English." There is a history time-line and information about archaeological digs for Indian and English remnants now in progress. The last chapter in the book is about the "Elizabeth II," the 16-century-style ship that has been built especially for the 400th.

A teacher's guide to the handbook will be published in August, so the handbook can be used as a tool for teaching history to North Carolina eighth graders and other students. The teachers' guide of about 250 pages will contain student worksheets and material for a five-to-six week history course.

The fully illustrated handbook has 64 pages and sells for $4.95 at book stores, museums and gift shops across the state. For more information about it and the teachers' guide, contact Storie/McOwen Publishers, Box 308, Manteo, N.C. 27954, telephone 473-5881.

Beach Access Sites

RALEIGH — You can get to the coast, but can you get to the beach? Yes, You can.

If you're planning a summer trip to the coast, you'll find over 350 pathways in 18 coastal communities where you can get to the beach without crossing private property. To find these pathways, look for the orange and blue "Public Beach Access" signs.

The Beach Access Program, established by the General Assembly in 1981 and administered by the N.C. Office of Coastal Management, Department of Natural Resources and Community Development, provides three main types of access facilities along the coast:

•Regional facilities provide parking, restrooms, outdoor showers, dune crossovers and litter receptacles. Many of these sites have water fountains seating areas and lifeguards. All are accessible to the handicapped.

•Neighborhood facilities provide limited parking, dune crossovers and litter receptacles. Many of the sites are accessible to the handicapped.

•Local facilities typically provide dune crossovers and litter receptacles; many are accessible to the handicapped.

For more information on the access sites in a particular part of the coast, write the Office of Coastal Management, Department of Natural Resources and Community Development, Box 27687, Raleigh, N.C. 27611 or call 733-2293.

Gift To History Museum

RALEIGH — Philip Morris USA has given $90,000 to the campaign to build a new home for the N.C. Museum of History, announced Newton O.Fowler Jr., general manager for the company's Cabarrus Plant operations in Concord.

The $3.5-million project provides for the renovation of the building in downtown Raleigh which fomerly housed the N.C. Museum of Art and construction of a 30,000-square-foot annex to it. With the Philip Morris gift, more than $3 million has been raised in state and private funding.

A flexible exhibition space adjacent to the new museum's main lobby will be named for the Philip Morris company in recognition of its gift. The gallery will feature introductory exhibits which will orient visitors to the museum itself as well as special-emphasis exhibits on topics such as military history.

The museum currently shares cramped quarters with several other state agencies in the Archives and History/State Library building.

The new facility will provide twice the total exhibition space now available. There will also be three times the present classroom space and a 200-seat auditorium.

Woodcarver Creates Toy Working Models

NEW SPRINGFIELD, Ohio (AP) — Bill Simcox has an interest in woodworking, but he differs from those fathers who might make toys only for their youngsters.

Simcox makes wooden toys for all three of his children — Billy, 14, Connie, 21, and Cathleen, 18 — and for himself, too. And the kids understand that dad's toys are not to be played with.

Simcox displays his toys on shelves, desktops and in showcases because they are tiny replicas of machines. What's more, most of them work like the real thing.

His interest in toy building generally focuses on models of industrial machines built by the Caterpillar Tractor Co. and has caught the attention of executives in the firm's Peoria, Ill., headquarters. Simcox says he has been asked to make some models for display in Peoria.

Simcox has built a windmill, a tractor-trailer rig loaded with a bulldozer, an excavator, a wheel-loader, a grade-all and a gasoline engine. He's working on a drag line, complete with a 6-foot boom, which will be part of a Mantiwok Model 4600. The real thing weighs many tons and has assorted accessories for performing various heavy industrial jobs.

Simcox, who has worked as a heavy equipment mechanic, uses no blueprints in his hobby. He works from pictures of machinery and illustrations of working parts.

Simcox, 42, says he's had very little training in woodworking but feels he has a talent for it. He had dabbled in woodworking occasionally until 1982, when he saw a magazine story of a man who makes wooden toys.

His first effort involved using pine, maple and redwood to make a tractor-trailer rig loaded with a bulldozer. He put it together in a week, proud that he had not used a single piece of metal, until a nephew complained that the wheels didn't roll.

He sacrificed his wooden principle for metal axles, and since then all his "toys" have wheels and major parts that roll, turn or otherwise move as they do on the real machines. The models are on a scale of 1 inch to 24 inches.

Simcox's second effort, a Caterpiller excavator, took two weeks of evenings at his work bench. Each track shoe on the machine was individually cut and glued in place, and each rail on the operator's deck was fitted in individual holes.

Ruth Duffus Show On View At GMA

An exhibition of paintings including colorful gatherings of flowers and pleasant landscapes are currently on view in the Upstairs Gallery of the Greenville Museum of Art, 802 South Evans Street.

The show is the work of Ruth Duffus of Greenville, a long-time artists whose subjects in this show range from still lifes to landscapes to a trio of portraits.

Contrary to an earlier article relative to Mrs. Duffus' show, the artist is not a self-taught artist. She studied at the Maryland Institute of Art in Baltimore, where she was awarded a renewable scholarship in art. She has a background in design in all media. Additionally, she has given private lessons and night classes, including teaching art in public schools in Michigan.

Six of the pieces being shown are landscapes, five are flower studies, three are portraits, and one is a still of fruit arranged on a table. The flower paintings and still life are rich in color, as are the landscapes, one with a lone figure leaning against a structure. All of these are diffused with slightly muted handling of paint that borders in some instances on impressionistic work. One of the paintings, "The B & O Tower" is different from all the others, a mixed media architectual type painting.

Mrs. Duffus's show will be on view through August 15. Another show, that of 50 drawings by Matisse housed in in downstairs galleries, will be up only through Tuesdasy.

Selections of paintings, prints and sculpture from the permanent collection, as well as items from the museum's Jugtown collection and other works are also on view at various points in the museum. Museum hours are 10-9 on Tuesdays, 10-6 Wednesdays through Friday, and 11-3 on Saturdays, closed Sundays and Mondays. Admission is free.

Satterfield Piece In Major Jewelry Show

ECU News Bureau

Satterfield's "Lyric Pin" is among some 200 works by 123 artists from 29 states selected for "Jewelry USA," a May 25-Sept. 1 exhibition at the American Craft Museum II. The show was organized by the museum in cooperation with the Society of North American Goldsmiths.

Satterfield is the only North Carolina artist represented in the show. Works for display were selected in a national competition held during the winter, and, according to a museum spokesperson, comprise "a collection of the best contemporary jewelry in the United States."

An active exhibitor, Satterfield has shown his work in several major regional and national shows. Earlier this year, he had works on view in the Society of North American Goldsmiths annual show at the Mitchell Museum, Vernon, Ill., and the Fashion Institute of Technology in New York.

His work has also been included in a traveling exhibition of American jewelry which was shown in several European cities in 1979-80.

Ava Gardner Museum Is Open Through August 12

SMITHFIELD — The "Ava Gardner Museum" in "The Teacherage," the film star's childhood home on Brogden Road seven miles southeast of Smithfield, will be open to the public from noon until 8 p.m. Thursdays through Sundays through Aug. 12.

Hosts for the museum are Dr. Thomas M. Banks of Florida, a native of Wilson, his wife Lorraine, and Ava Advocates of Smithfield. The museum contains Dr. Banks' collection of Gardner memorabilia, the world's largest.

Recent additions include gowns worn by Miss Gardner in "She Went to the Races" (1945); "My Forbidden Past," with Robert Mitchum (1951), and "The Great Sinner," with Gregory Peck (1949).

The museum is a non-profit venture and there is no charge for admission.

Visitors are to watch for "Brogden Road" signs on Interstate 95 and U.S. 70 and U.S. 70-A near Smithfield. The simplest route is to turn onto Brogden Road at the A&P Store on U.S. 301 in Smithfield.

Miss Gardner, whose film career began in 1941, has made approximately 45 movies and has starred with almost every leading man of the era — from Clark Gable to Paul Newman

She continues to make a film each year and to appear in television programs. Her latest is "A.D. — Anno Domini," a television miniseries to be aired at some date in 1985.

Bertie Cypress Is A State Champion

By KAY SCOTT
N.C. Department Of Natural Resources &
Community Development

RALEIGH — When Sir Walter Raleigh's colonists first set foot on Roanoke Island, giant pines stood watching and waiting. Farther up the Albemarle Sound, another sentinel, already hundreds of years old, watched over the swamp forest. Today, this champion stands as a silent witness to the changes 400 years have brought.

Standing 138 feet tall and 38 feet around, this champion is one of the largest living things east of the Rocky Mountains. It is North Carolina's Champion Baldcypress Tree.

"Throughout history, forests and trees have played a big part in North Carolina's development," said H.J. "Boe" Green, director of the Division of Forest Resources, Department of Natural Resources and Community Development. "Trees are our state's lifeblood. So, it is logical that we honor as a champion the largest of each species through our Big Tree Program."

A champion big tree is not necessarily the one with the biggest trunk or the one that is tallest. According to Green, "Champion trees are determined by using a formula that takes the tree's circumference measured in inches, added to the tree's height measured in feet, plus one-fourth of the average crown spread. The nominee of a given species with the most points is declared the champion."

Of course, it is important that the exact species of the tree be determined. White oaks compete against white oaks, longleaf pine against longleaf pines, and so on. Since only native or naturalized trees are eligible for champion tree status, the American Forestry Association and the N.C. Division of Forest Resources (which administers the program in North Carolina) have adopted the "Checklist of Native and Naturalized Trees of the United States" as the guide to those trees eligible to be included.

"The March 1984 North Carolina Register of Big Trees listed 149 state champions," stated Green. "Seventeen of these trees are also national champions." (The National Big Tree Program is administered by the American Forestry Association in Washington, D.C. The national program strives to find the largest of each of our nation's tree species.)

"Since nearly 200 native or naturalized tree species are eligible to be on the register, our list is far from complete," concludes Green. "We invite everyone to join in this search for North Carolina's champions."

To begin your search, contact Forest Resources' Raleigh office for a list of current champions and a nomination form, including instructions on how to measure your champion. Armed with this information and a tape measure you can begin the search.

If you have questions or want a list of current champions and a nomination form drop a card or a letter to: Big Tree Search, Division of Forest Resources, P.O. Box 27687, Raleigh, N.C. 27611.

FROM SHEPPARD MEMORIAL LIBRARY

By MEREDITH FOLTZ

If the weather is too hot or wet for you to be outside, you can stay inside and plan your garden with the help of these two new Sheppard Library books.

John Brookes' "The Garden Book" was first published in Great Britain, but it will nonetheless delight the eye and fire the imagination of the American reader. Heavily illustrated with color photographs, drawings and diagrams, "The Garden Book" aims to awaken you to the possibilities for designing the area surrounding your home.

Types of gardens are pictured for a variety of residences — modern and traditional, urban and suburban and rural. The gardens here demonstrate treatments of fully exterior courtyards and patios as well as balconies and conservatories which mingle interior and exterior space.

Layout diagrams suggest placements for plants, furniture, walls, lighting, buildings and water. Choices for fencing and surfacing materials, garden furniture, pots and containers and garden sculpture are shown. A care and maintenance section describes not only the cultivation of the plants you choose but also the upkeep required for certain garden structures.

In his foreword, author Brookes says that he "cannot overemphasize the necessity of immersing yourself in theories of design and styling before setting forth to design your own solution" to the problem of establishing a garden which complements your home environment. Readers will happily immerse themselves in the luxurious illustrations and practical ideas found in "The Garden Book."

Another import from England is Christopher Lloyd's "The Adventurous Gardener." Lloyd encourages gardeners to be experimental, make changes and take chances with the flowers, trees and shrubs in the home landscape. Unlike the title above, "The Adventurous Gardner" is more a collection of observation-and-opinion pieces. Despite his British references, Lloyd's enthusiasm will encourage you to adapt his advice for local conditions.

A Review

Brethren Of The Black Flag. By Margaret Hoffman. Coastal Plains Publishing Company. Danville, Va. 329 pages. $8.95.

In "Brethren of the Black Flag," Margaret Hoffman, combining fact with fiction, tells of the conspiracy of Charles Eden, governor of the proprietary colony of North Carolina, with Edward Teach, a pirate, to rob a Spanish treasure ship of a vast fortune in silver — in the early 1700s.

The characterizations of the two men are detailed and there is emphasis on the contrasts between them. Circumstances and events which caused each to become what he was is explained.

Eden, a charming man, but without scruples, born into wealth, position and power feels he should prove his metal. He resolves to perform one mighty feat of piracy — to rob the Spanish plate. Edward Teach, to avoid poverty and humiliation of unemployment after leaving naval service fighting for England during the War of the Spanish Succession, became a pirate. He became Blackbeard.

"Brethren of the Black Flag," essentially a pirate story, should be afforded less serious stature than a work by Robert Louis Stevenson, but on the other hand, it is due more worthy esteem than a history by Mel Brooks. Of his own "The Prince and the Pauper" (set in the 16th century), Mark Twain wrote: "It may be history, it may be only legend, a tradition. It may have happened, it may not have happened: but it could have happened. It may be that the wise and the learned believed it in the old days; it may be that only the unlearned and the simple loved it and credited it."

Scattered throughout the book are flaws and blemishes, several of which relate to printing and production quality. However, at least a few appear to be oversights on the part of the writer.

But the story is told in a straightfoward, intriguing style. Citizens of North Carolina and Virginia will be attracted to the legend. During this month, Americans (especially North Carolinians) begin an elaborate commemoration of the 400th anniversary of the arrival of English ships and the settlement of a British colony by Sir Walter Raleigh on Roanoke Island. This book tells one page of the history that has been North Carolina's during the past 400 years.

Poet Rivers To Read Wednesday

Greenville poet Jim Rivers will be spotlighted at the July presentation of The Best Lunch Theater Ever at noon Wednesday at the Greenville Museum of Art.

There is no admission charged and the public may bring along a bag lunch with refreshments to be served by the staff of the museum.

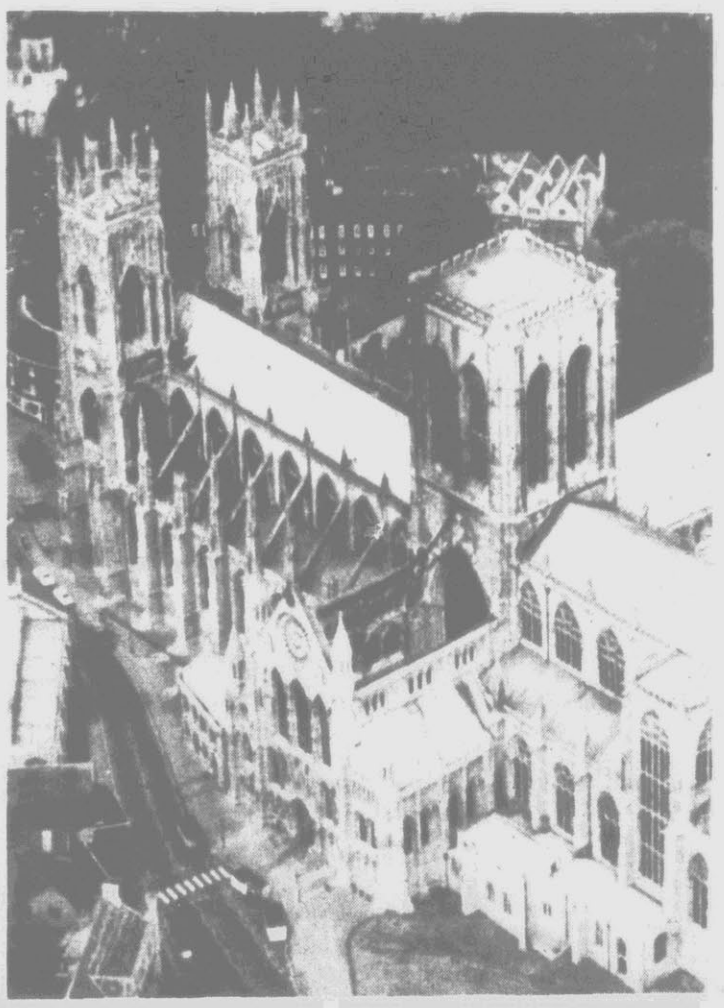

The monthly events at times features reading productions of plays-in-progress; at other times poetry readings.

Rivers will be reading selections from his own poetry. He writes poetry both in English and Spanish. A native of Chicago, he lived and worked in Mexico and South Carolina before moving to North Carolina a few years ago. He is the author of two volumes of poems, "The Lady in Once White Shoes," and the more recent "Proud and on My Feet," published by the University of Georgia Press. Another volume of his poems is forthcoming.

His poems have been anthologized in several collections, including a recent anthology published by the Association of University Presses. Rivers is the recipient of several prestigious awards, among them a state of Virginia cultural award. He has been invited to give a reading of his work this fall at the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill.

"A poet writes not only for himself but for others." Rivers commented about his attitude on poetry. "What helps me most is contact, feedback. I like to know how an audience responds to what I've done. There's a need for immediate human contct and reinforcement. Readings establish a contact between the poet and his fellow beings which can't be established by reading books."

The Wednesday monthly events at the museum are sponsored by the N.C. Humanities Committee, the Pitt-Greenville Arts Council, and the N.C. Arts Council.

DAMAGED BY FIRE — The roof of the 13th-century south transept of York Minster in York, England, the largest Gothic cathedral in northern Europe, has been completely destroyed, following a fire in the early hours of July 9. Firemen numbering 140 battled the blaze for three hours to save the remainder of the cathedral. (AP Laserphoto)

State Of Festivals

By LINDA FRANKLIN
Associated Press Writer

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — It used to be easy for the travel writers in the Arkansas Parks and Tourism Department to tick off the upcoming festivals. Not any more.

"All of a sudden, everybody, even the smallest towns are wanting to have a festival," travel writer Kerry Kraus said in a recent telephone interview.

There's the old reliables — the Bradley County Pink Tomato Festival in Warren, the Peach Festival in Johnson County, the Grape Festival in Tontitown, the Turkey Trot Festival in Yellville and War Eagle Fair at War Eagle Mills.

Now, there's Toad Suck Daze in Conway, the Watermelon Festival in Hope, the Brickfest in Malvern, the Mosquito Fest in Stuttgart and Ding Dong Days in Dumas.

The festivals mean camaraderie for the people, civic pride for the towns and tourist dollars for the state.

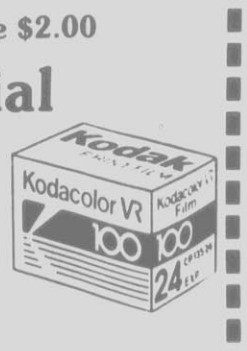

Charles McLemore, director of research for the parks department, said a 1980 study done by the University of Arkansas of the War Eagle Fair showed an overall economic impact of $5 million in the area. The average expenditure was $167.80.

The department sometimes conducts surveys on state highways. McLemore said 1 to 2 percent of those questioned mention arts and crafts fairs as part of the reason for the trip. The people queried travel at least 200 miles roundtrip or are on an overnight trip, he said. The percentage is substantial if you apply it to the 14 million tourists the state has each year.

Miss Kraus said the number of festivals seemed to mushroom during the past few years. "It's a good way to get everybody involved," she said. They say they have a nice town and want other people to know about it," she said.

Sunday In The Park

Today's Sunday in the Park entertainment will be a threefold celebration in music highlighting a sampling of music heard, played and sung in North Carolina during the past 400 years. The program is one of Greenville's contributions to observances of America's 400th Celebrations.

The concert gets under way at 7 p.m. at the Sunday in the Park site east of Reade Street between Third and Fourth streets. There is no admission charged. Funding for the weekly summer Sunday programs is provided by the city of Greenville.

One individual and two groups are scheduled to perform today — Lightnin' Wells, the Wallace Family and the Sunday in the Park Chorale. The latter is an octet assembled especially for today's anniversary program.

Mike "Lightnin'" Wells, a native of Goldsboro, holds a degree in English from UNC-Chapel Hill and a degree in recreational therapy from East Carolina University. Interested since boyhood in rural music, Wells first began performing professionally in the early '70s while a student at Chapel Hill. Over the years, he has performed extensively in eastern as well as in Piedmont North Carolina.

His range of music covers blues and cowboy music, early bluegrass and gospel. A versatile musician, he plays banjo, harmnica, mandolin, autoharp and the dobro, but his primary instrument is the guitar.

The Wallace Family — Will Wallace and his three daughters, Cindy, Laura and Connie, perform a variety of fiddle music — everything from old traditional music to bluegrass and blues. In 1982 they performed at the World's Fair in Knoxville, and this year they won a talent competition at Great Hahira, Ga.

The three girls, all violinists, are students in Greenville schools. They have studied classical music with Mamie Dixon and Joanne Bath, and "fiddle" music with their father, who also is a guitarist.

The third group, the Sunday in the Park Chorale, features the singing talents of eight local singers. Their portion of today's concert will cover musical selections ranging from madrigals popular during the Elizabethan period on through 400 years to the present time.

Through special permission, the chorale will perform "The Legend of The Lost Colony," Greenville's Mike Kinzie's composition chosen as the official state song for the 400th Anniversary — which is also being performed in a concert at Manteo tonight with the Super Grit Cowboy Band and the N.C. Symphony Orchestra.

Other performances by the chorale will include a revolutionary composition by Billings and Civil War Music.

The Sunday in the Park Chorale will be accompanied by Otto Dykstra, accordian; Lynn Marks, recorder, and Lightnin' Wells, mandolin.

Joseph's Dreamcoat Musical Next At ECU

"Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat," the musicalization of an oft-told Old Testament tale, is the next offering of the East Carolina Summer Theater. Scheduled for a six-night run, "Joseph" will open Monday at 8:15 p.m. and will continue through Saturday at McGinnis Theatre.

Before the success stories of their Broadway shows "Cats," "Evita" and "Jesus Christ Superstar," Andrew Lloyd Webber and Tim Rice wrote "Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat." Since its inception it has been expanded, recorded, taped for television and staged for production all over the world.

"Joseph" not only popularizes a portion of the Old Testament, but on another level, operates as a show business parody, kidding such personalities as Gene Autry and Elvis Presley. The story, which is suitable for the entire family, is told entirely in song and the score is made up of a variety of musical styles including cowboy tunes, vaudeville numbers, ballads, calypso and even a French chanson.

Joseph's story begins with his being sold into slavery by his 11 brothers, who are jealous because he is the favorite of their father, Jacob, who has given him a coat of many colors. He is resold to the wealthy Potiphan, whose wife fails to seduce Joseph and has him thrown in jail. Because of his power to interpret dreams, and to predict Egypt's seven fat years and seven lean years, he becomes the Pharoah's "No. 2," and eventually is reunited with his family.

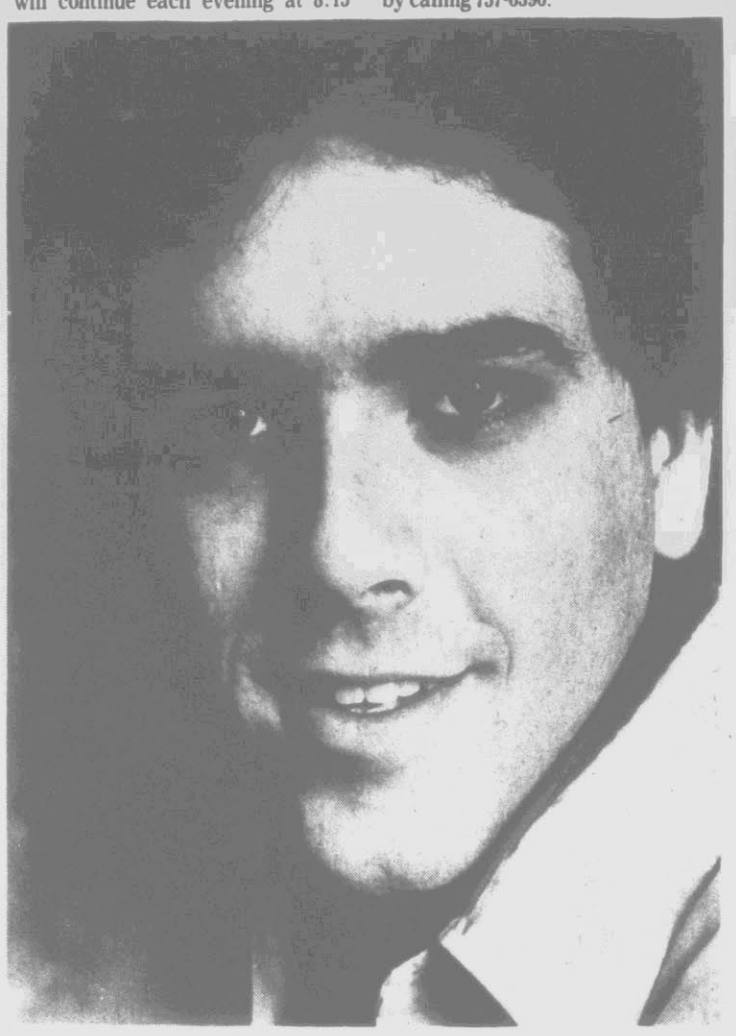

Many of the songs are parodies of other musical styles. David Heckert as the Pharoah delivers a show-stopping Elvis initation, complete with tight white pants, ducktail and "uh-huhs." And Joseph's 11 brothers go through several transitions. In "One More Angel in Heaven," they are twangy-voiced cowboys, clicking their heels in leaps straight out of "Oklahoma." A versatile crew of song-and-dance-men, they later mourn the good old days in a sad cafe balad, wearing berets and affecting French accents, and defend their brother Benjamin, accused of stealing a gold cup, in a Spanish-accented calypso.

The costumes have been designed in the same manner as the throw-away humor of the play, including overalls for the 11 brothers with their initials on the front and numbers, in Roman numerals, on the back. Robert Alpers' scenery includes camels on wheels and glowing pyramids.

Broadway veteran Jay Fox directs the show, which stars Bruce Ewing as the handsome, pure and courageous Joseph, and Barbara Gulan as the singing and dancing narrator who introduces and comments on the action from start to finish.

"Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat" is the third of four Broadway musicals at the East Carolina Summer Theater. The final musical production, "The 1940s Radio Hour," will open July 23, and will continue each evening at 8:15 p.m. in McGinnis Theater through July 28.

Tickets are still available for "Joseph" and "Radio Hour," and may be purchased at McGinnis Theater in Greenville, corner of Fifth and Eastern streets, 10 a.m. until 8:30 p.m., or may be reserved by calling 757-6390.

FAVORED BROTHER ... Actor Bruce C. Ewing stars as Joseph, the favored brother in the musical "Joseph And The Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat." The musical, suitable for all members of the family, will be presented at 8:15 nightly at McGinnis Theater on the ECU campus. Tickets are availble at the box office or by calling 757-6390.

Albemarle Tour Attractions

During the summer of 1984, all eyes are upon Roanoke Island and America's 400th Anniversary Celebration. However, North Carolinians planning to drive to the Outer Banks for the celebration may want to visit any number of the sites on the Historic Albemarle Route.

The Historic Albemarle Tour includes 16 historic sites, museums and visitor-oriented attractions in northeastern North Carolina. Four of the sites are located on Roanoke Island where the quadricentennial events are planned.

Those four sites are the Elizabeth II State Historic Site which features a reproduction of a 16th century wooden sailing ship, "The Lost Colony" outdoor drama which is in its summer season, the Elizabethan Gardens and the North Carolina Marine Resources Center/Roanoke Island."

The other 12 sites are located either on or close to the three main highways that will carry Tar Heel and other vacationers to Roanoke Island.

Travelers taking the northernmost route, U.S. 158, can make stops at Historic Halifax, Historic Murfreesboro and the Museum of the Albemarle. A short side trip can also be made to the Newbold-White House near Hertford.

Historic Halifax has several outstanding buildings of the 1700s and early 1800s, an old cemetery and a working archaeological dig. Murfreesboro, located between the Roanoke and Chowan rivers, was an 18th and early 19th century port-of-call for sailing vessels. The town has many original structures of that time, many of which have been restored.

Elizabeth City is home to the Museum of the Albemarle which portrays the history of a 10-county Albemarle area. Lumbering, farming, shipping, fishing, hunting, Algonquin Indians and the U.S. Coast Guard are featured in museum exhibits.

For many Outer Banks visitors the most direct route will be by way of U.S. 64. Historic Tarboro, Hope Plantation, Historic Edenton and Somerset Place Historic Site are worth visiting along this route.

Hope Plantation requires a short trip north on U.S. 17 from Williamston. The elegant Georgian and Federal style home of Gov. David Stone, built around 1880, houses a fine collection of period furnishings with many excellent regional pieces.

From Hope Plantation, it is a short drive on U.S. 17 to Historic Edenton, an area settled as early as 1685, planned in 1712 and incorporated in 1722 as the first provincial capitol of North Carolina. It was in Edenton in 1774 that 51 women signed a resolution supporting the acts of the rebellious provincial congress. That action, known as the Edenton Tea Party, was the first purely political activity by women in America.

From Edenton, travelers can take U.S. 32 for the return to U.S. 64. Less than 25 miles away is Creswell, site of Somerset Place, a splendid 19th century plantation estate with a beautifully preserved mansion and cluster of out-buildings. Located on the shores of Lake Phelps, the restoration includes the original brick walks and formal garden built and planted in 1830.

The southern-most route to Roanoke Island is by way of U.S. 264. Four Albemarle Tour stops are clustered in Beaufort County. Historic Washington, founded in 1776, and the first town in the United States to be named after Gen. George Washington, is the first stop. Several historic churches, the second oldest courthouse in the state, a large downtown historical residential area, and a compact ornate historic downtown remain intact.

An interesting side trip to the Aurora Fossil Museum requires travel along N.C. 33. There the story of millions of years of geographical change can be seen in formations containing fossils such as shark's teeth.

A ferry trip across the Pamlico River (25 minutes) carries the traveler to Bath, incorporated in 1705 and the state's oldest town. Historic Bath is the home of the oldest church building still in use in North Carolina, St. Thomas Episcopal Church. The town also features the Palmer-Marsh House, the Van Der Veer House and the Bonner House.

Moving east on U.S. 264, the vacationer arrives at Belhaven. Located in the Victorian-era City Hall of that town is the Belhaven Memorial Museum, which houses a unique display of Americana. The museum offers a fascinating glimpse into the past with everything from coins to coffee mills, hand-made clothes to hand-cranked telephones and much more.

For more information on the Historic Albemarle region, write Historic Albemarle Tour, Inc., P.O. Box 759, Edenton, N.C. 27932, or call 919-482-7325..

Finally, A Tour In America

By PAUL RAEBURN
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — In 1976, the jazz saxophonist Wayne Shorter released a record called "Native Dancer" in collaboration with Milton Nascimento, a gifted Brazilian composer and singer who at that time was not well known in the United States.

Jazz fans quickly latched on to the recording, and Nascimento developed something of a cult following here. Though copies of his Brazilian records occasionally turned up in record stores, Nascimento himself remained out of sight, enjoying a growing popularity in Brazil, elsewhere in Latin America and in Europe.

In June, Nascimento finally arrived in the United States, making his American debut in two packed concerts at Carnegie Hall. The audiences, made up largely of Brazilians, cheered Nascimento and sang along with the many tunes that are by now standards there.

Musicians also crowded into Carnegie Hall to hear Nascimento and his excellent band, led by Wagner Tiso on piano, a boyhood friend.

Nascimento's compositions are deeply rooted in Brazilian and African folk music, an association underscored by his plaintive vocals and his straightforward, simple accompaniment on acoustic guitar.

In Nascimento's hands, that strong folk influence is transmuted into sophisticated, challenging music that retains the universal appeal of folk music but sustains the interest of the most demanding listener. That perhaps explains the music's popularity among jazz musicians.

Nascimento, 42, began his recording career in 1967 with "Codil," a Brazilian record. In 1969, he recorded the first of his five American albums, "Courage," for A&M Records. His first Brazilian LP, consisting of his own compositions, was "Clube da Esquina." It was recorded in 1972 and is still considered to be one of Nascimento's finest records.

He was born in Rio de Janeiro but grew up in Tres Pontas in the Brazilian state of Minas Gerais, northwest of Rio. He began playing guitar as a teen-ager in the '60s, by which time he had become friends with Tiso.

In 1967, he began writing songs in collaboration with Fernando Brant, a lyricist whom Nascimento had met in the city of Belo Horizonte, not far from his home.

That collaboration continues. Brant, who is not a composer, writes lyrics for other musicians and is responsible for the words in most of Nascimento's songs.

Nascimento, in an interview in his hotel room the day before his debut, talked about why he was now coming to the United States to perform.

"Now is the right moment," he said in Portuguese through an interpreter. "A lot of American musicians and composers are talking about Brazilian music, and the press is interested in Brazilian music."

Carnegie Hall had repeatedly extended invitations to Nascimento, but until now he had been unable to accept because of other commitments. Indeed, this New York visit was a stop enroute from Brazil to Europe, where Nascimento was scheduled to play in more than half a dozen countries.

"The European people like it when I sing in Portuguese," he said. Nascimento understands English but speaks it only haltingly. "It's different in America where the taste is that everybody sing in English. Now that's changing."

Nascimento has written two ballets, three movie soundtracks, a religious work entitled "The Mass of Quilombos" — named after a commune created by freed Brazilian slaves — and has established a music school for young people with Tiso.

He has also acted in three films, including Werner Herzog's "Fitzcarraldo," shot in the Amazon.

At Carnegie Hall his voice had a powerful, emotive edge, and conveyed the intimacy and mystery of his music even to those who understood no Portuguese. The rhythms of the tunes were complex, occasionally using off-kilter time signatures of five or seven beats to the measure.

Networks Set Reduced Convention Coverage

By Andrew J. Edelstein

The quadrennial spectacles of balloons, speeches and political hoopla known as the presidential nominating conventions are upon us once more. This week, the Democrats gather at the Moscone Center in San Francisco (July 16-19). The Republicans will convene in Dallas from Aug.20-23.

But viewer will notice a difference this year. Bowing to increased costs and low ratings, the networks have cut back the gavel-to-gavel coverage that once characterized its airings of past conventions. The balloons, placards and hyperbole-filled speeches will still be there — only we'll see less of them.

CBS and NBC will cover the Democratic National Convention from 9-11 p.m. (ET). ABC will begin its coverage at 8 p.m. (ET) on Monday and at 9 p.m. (ET) the other nights. Coverage may begin earlier and extend past 11, depending on what happens on the convention floor.

Meanwhile, PBS will be airing the feed from cable's C-SPAN. Robert MacNeil and Jim Lehrer will air their nightly news hour from the convention cities.

CBS will also air a 30-minute preview of the Democratic convention on July 15 at 10:30 p.m. (ET), hosted by Dan Rather. Rather will be the network's convention anchor for the first time, replacing the venerable Walter Cronkite.

CBS is the only network to assign both its morning news anchors as floor correspondents. Diane Sawyer will join Leslie Stahl, Bob Schieffer and Ed Bradley on the floor in San Francisco, while Bill Kurtis will join them in Dallas. Bill Moyers will provide commentary.

Tom Brokaw will anchor NBC's convention, the first time NBC will be using a single anchor since 1952. Former co-anchor John Chancellor will be on hand for his eighth set of conventions, to offer analysis and commentary. Roger Mudd will be the podium correspondent, the first time the former CBS newsman will be reporting for NBC. NBC's four floor correspondents are Chris Wallace, Ken Bode, Connie Chung and Don Oliver.

Nell (Nell Carter) is in seventh heaven when the man she met at her Weight Winners group (James Watson, Jr.) picks her up for their first date in "The Way to a Man's Heart" episode of "Gimme a Break," airing Thursday, July 19 on NBC.

Michele Will Tell

By Michele Marks

DEAR MICHELE: It is true that Billy Gray, who was on "Father Knows Best," was a drug addict? How old was he when he was on the show? — Glenda Primus

To Glenda: Born William Thomas Gray on January 13, 1938 in Los Angeles, Gray was already a show business veteran at age 16 when the series "Father Knows Best" premiered on October 3, 1954. In real life, Gray was nothing like the character of Bud Anderson he portrayed on the show. He admits to having used marijuana, although he insists that on the night of his arrest on March 25, 1962, he was not 'on' anything. Police had pulled him over on suspicion of drunken driving and found traces of marijuana under the seat of his car. He was sentenced to a 90-day jail term and was on probation for three years. The studios avoided him like the plague and even his agent dropped him. A former motorcycle racer on the West Coast, today Gray is an out-of-work actor.

DEAR MICHELE: Who starred in the first film version of "Back Street"? I know the male lead was Charles Boyer, but who was the female lead? — Blanche Szilagyi

To Blanche: I am well acquainted with "Back Street"; the late director John M. Stahl's daughter is a longtime friend of mine. Based on novelist Fannie Hurst's tearjerker, the original film version of "Back Street," released in 1932, was directed by Stahl and starred Irene Dunne and John Boles. The 1941 remake starred Margaret Sullivan and Charles Boyer. In 1961, the third version hit the theaters and featured Susan Hayward and John Gavin as the star-crossed lovers.

DEAR MICHELE: Will you please tell me if it was David Soul who played the grandfather on the series "The Second Years." And who played his son? — Nettie Smithour

To Nettie: David Soul did not appear in this 1967-68 sitcom — it was Monte Markham. Markham starred in the dual roles of Luke/Ken Carpenter. Luke was the one who was caught in a glacier slide while prospecting for gold in Alaska and returned 67 years later after thawing out, chronologically 101 years old, but with a 33-year-old face and form. Ken was his look-alike 33-year-old grandson. Luke's older-looking son, Edwin, was portrayed by Arthur O'Connell.

TV Chatter

By Polly Vonetes

During the recent television critics' press tour in Phoenix and Los Angeles, we viewed pilots of 22 series. Among them were six that seemed excessively violent — "Streethawk" (ABC), "Honolulu Heat" (ABC), "Cover Up" (CBS), "Hunter" (NBC), "Miami Vice" (NBC) and "Hot Pursuit" (NBC).

A particular favorite of mine was ABC's "Call to Glory," a drama focusing on the life of a fictional U.S. Air Force family in the early 1960s. Craig T. Nelson and Cindy Pickett star in the limited summer drama, which premieres Aug. 13.

The two-hour premiere movie dealt with the Cuban missile crisis of 1962 and contained news footage of President Kennedy and the events leading to the withdrawal of the missiles from Cuba. Other events scheduled to be interwoven into future story lines include the Beatles' first appearance on "The Ed Sullivan Show" and the John F. Kennedy and Martin Luther King assassinations.

Dramatic anthology shows that you can look forward to include Angela Lansbury in "Murder, She Wrote," on CBS, Michael Landon in NBC's "Highway to Heaven" and ABC's "Finder of Lost Loves," with Tony Franciosa, Deborah Adair and Anne Jeffreys.

ABC invited us to attend a dinner party honoring Aaron Spelling at the Beverly Wilshire Hotel. He will be producing more than 144 hours of programming for the network this season. The stars of his series — "Dynasty," "Hotel," "T.J. Hooker," "The Love Boat," "Matt Houston," "Finder of Lost Loves" and "Glitter" — all showed up to honor "the boss."

Spelling has cast more than 600 "semi-retired' stars in his series at one time or another, including the canceled "Fantasy Island" and "Hart to Hart." Spelling says he bases his success on the theory that "viewers like entertainment — we don't try to shove social issues down their throats," he says.

Elizabeth Taylor will appear next season as a guest on her favorite series, "Hotel." She reportedly will arrive at the hotel in grand style with luggage containing 15 fabulous designs created for the occasion.

Patricia McPherson, who starred as genius mechanic Bonnie Barstow during the first season of "Knight Rider," will resume her role on the series this fall.

Questions & Answers

GREGARIOUS GARY — How do I get in touch with Gary Coleman? I enjoy "Diff'rent Strokes" very much and really liked the movie "The Kid with the Broken Halo." Could you please tell me how old Gary is now? — C.D., Sturgeon Falls, Ont.

Good-natured Gary is now a trouper of 16. You may write to him c/o NBC, 3000 W. Alameda Ave., Burbank, CA 91523.

GREAT GRANNY — Can you tell me how old the actress who played Granny on "The Beverly Hillbillies" was at the time? My husband says about 40 but I say more like 60. — C.D., Fort Nelson, B.C.

You're almost on the button. Feisty Irene Ryan was 59 when "The Beverly Hillbillies" premiered in 1962 and 68 when it finally bit the dust a decade later. Miss Ryan died in 1974.

Peter Jennings will anchor ABC's coverage. David Brinkley will provide analysis for the first time at a convention for ABC.

While the networks have reduced their convention air time, two cable networks, CNN and C-SPAN, will offer extensive convention coverage. CNN will begin its convention coverage each day at 6 a.m. and air a nightly recap at 1:30 a.m. C-SPAN will air the entire proceedings unedited and without commentary.

James Caan stars as a stonemason searching for his two children (Heather Bicknell and Andrew Fenwick), who have been abducted by the U.S. Department of Justice, in "Hide in Plain Sight," Saturday, July 21 on CBS.

ANDY'S ALTER EGO — I have been thinking about comedian Andy Kaufman a lot since he died because I thought he was terrific and talented. But try as I might, I can't remember the name of one of his famous characters. He was a cheap nightclub singer who was a real pain in the neck. — D.H., Rossland, B.C.

The crooner in question was named Tony Clifton. Kaufman never admitted that he and Tony were the same person. He even insisted that Clifton be given separate contracts whenever he was booked.

IT SURE WASN'T CHEERS — A friend and I are having an argument about the name of the tavern in the old "Gunsmoke" series. Where exactly did Miss Kitty hang her hat? — J.R., Wayburn, Sask.

Sports Quiz

By Steven Friedlander

COMIC RELIEF

Q: Is it true that Dick Gregory once said, "Baseball is very big with my people. It figures. It's the only time we can get to shake a bat at a white man without starting a riot"?

A: Yes.

CHAIRMAN OF THE BOARD

Q: Who holds the record for most rebounds in one NCAA championship tournament game?

POST-CHAMPIONSHIP BLUES

Q: Could you tell me what the Washington Bullets did the year after they won the championship?

A: The Washington Bullets won the championship during the 1977-78 season. The next year, they finished 54-28, but lost in the championship final to the Seattle Supersonics.

SOCCER TO ME

Q: Has an American soccer team ever made it to the World Cup finals?

A: No. The best showing for an American team was in 1930. After defeating both Belgium and Paraguay, the Americans advanced to the semifinals, where they were beaten by Argentina 6-1.

FOR THE MONEY

Q: Who were the notorious 1919 Chicago Black Sox players implicated in the "Black Sox Scandal"?

A: Eight men were banned from baseball by Commissioner Kenesaw Mountain Landis for allegedly fixing the 1919 World Series, although a jury trial found the eight not guilty. The players were Ed "Knuckles" Cicotte, Oscar "Happy" Felsch, Shoeless Joe Jackson, Claude "Lefty" Williams, Fred McMullin, George "Buck" Weaver, Charles "Chick" Gandil and Charles "Swede" Risberg.

LONG RUN

Q: Before Frank Shorter in 1972, who was the last American to have won the Olympic marathon?

A: John Hayes won the gold in 1908 in 2:55:18.4. It is interesting to compare that time with Shorter's 2:12:19.8 — almost 43 minutes faster.

ALL DECKED OUT

A: Miss Decker holds seven American records. She leads the pack in the 800 meters; 1,500 meters; the mile; 2,000 meters; 3,000 meters; 5,000 meters; and 10,000 meters. Miss Decker's time in the 5,000 meters, 15:08.26, is a world record, although Zola Budd recently ran an unofficial 15:01.83.

HARPER: GOOD MANNERS. COURTESY OF HER PARENTS

In her short career, actress Tess Harper, 33, has built up quite a resume. She co-starred with Oscar winner Robert Duvall in Tender Mercies and will soon be seen with Kris Kristofferson in Flashpoint. And oh yes, there's also Silkwood, Amityville 3-D, the TV miniseries Chiefs and Celebrity, and the TV movies Kentucky Woman and Starflight One. Still, Tess doesn't quite have the nerve to approach a star and strike up a conversation. The most she usually squeaks out is: "I've been a fan of yours a long time. I think your work is marvelous." That's just what she recently told Jason Robards when the two happened to be on the same airplane flight. "Thank you very much," he replied, totally unaware of his fan's identity. "And I didn't tell him," says Tess, whose profile at parties is as low as her profile on planes. "I won't talk to anyone unless we've been formally introduced. Stars must be so fed up with an endless procession of total strangers gushing at them. I was at a party with Dolly Parton recently and I wanted to tell her that my father thinks she's the most incredible singer around, but we weren't introduced so I never did. I'm still a small-town girl and remember everything on the subject of good manners that my parents taught me."

□

Confident that he can restore his singing career to its former Rocky Mountain heights, John Denver is on the comeback trail this summer via a cross-country tour. Even though his image is more angelic than those of many current pop stars, "I think I can make records that today's young fans will buy," Denver says. "People may challenge my image, but that's OK. There's nothing awful behind it." Denver is less sure that he'll have another go 'round with matrimony [his 15-year marriage to his college sweetheart, the famous Annie Denver in Annie's Song, broke up last year]. "I'd like to fall in love again but I'm not sure that I ever will; I'm too busy right now to have a woman in my life."

□

Howard Keel, at 65, has considerable job security. In his fourth season as Clayton Farlow on Dallas, he is under contract to appear in at least 30 more episodes. And he's not the only active Hollywood male senior citizen. Burt Lancaster, 70, is spending this month in Europe filming Voyager of the Four Seasons. James Mason, 75, is talking of making a TV version (the type of production has not been set) of his and Paul Newman's hit movie The Verdict.

DENVER: TOWARD NEW HEIGHTS

Country singer-songwriter Hoyt Axton, who played Bonnie Bedelia's father in the film Heart Like a Wheel, and who appears as a dad in Gremlins, Steven Spielberg's latest opus, is not exactly turning cartwheels over the four-letter language in the latter movie. "It's old-fashioned but I just feel those words shouldn't be there, and I told 'em so — strongly," claims Hoyt. "People in Middle America don't go for that kind of language. My mom, my brother and his wife and their kids will wince." Still, believes Axton, "I've done pretty good for an old fat boy from Oklahoma."

AXTON: GRINDING AN AXE OVER BAD LANGUAGE

When people talk about what a card Joan Rivers is, they don't realize the accuracy of their description. The comedienne now has a line of sassy greeting cards. A get-well message from Rivers: "Follow Joan Crawford's advice — beat a cold, slap a fever." And for a good-humored girlfriend who's been careless in her correspondence: "You'd better write, or you'll be tried by a jury of your peers — 12 tramps." Oh Joan, you really send us.

Do you think that you and your music will survive the way, say, Judy Garland and her songs have endured? — L.M., Anniston, Ala.

I wish I could say yes. But it's pretty much in the lap of the gods. Actually, as a singer, I'll be more fondly remembered after my time has passed than I am now. I'm proud of the way I sing, so I hope some of it sticks around.

JOEL HIGGINS

What would you do if you came into $1 million? — S.D., Ogden, Utah

Probably nothing different from what I'm doing now. I'd possibly get more living space, perhaps move to a farm or ranch. I certainly would not eat any more than currently I do. I doubt if I'd buy a lot of clothes. Shopping bores and tires me. So I guess I'd keep on doing what I'm doing, and possibly consider an investment or two.

FRISCO GOES CONVENTIONAL

By Warren Hinckle

Globe Photos

Residents are hearkening back to the days before they knew their houses were "Victorian," and when no one minded that their city was called Frisco.

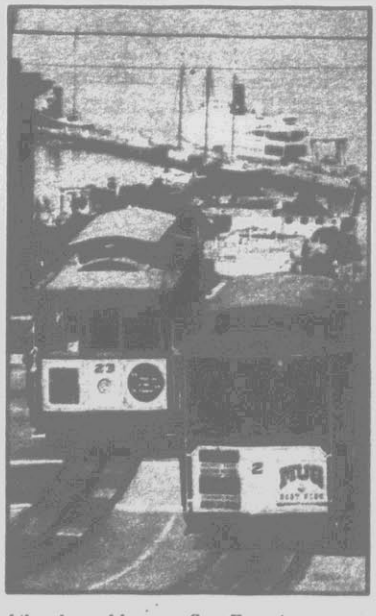

For a while it seemed that the sidewalk preachers who strut Market Street denouncing San Francisco as the Sodom and Gomorrah of the West and predicting that it will collapse of its own excesses might be right. Everything seemed to go wrong. The cable cars broke down. Mayor George Moscone was assassinated in City Hall. The liberal city's largest left-leaning church, the Peoples Temple, self-destructed in a South American rain forest. Sam's Grill, which was Sam Spade's favorite restaurant, burned up. Even the most infectious San Francisco boosters got down in the dumps. As W.C. Fields said of Philadelphia, it was enough to take away the giggles.

But while the attention of the media was focused on Los Angeles and the preparations for the 1984 Olympic Games, San Franciscans were doing some mighty regrouping and recouping. The cable cars were repaired, Sam Spade's chophouse was rebuilt, and San Francisco won itself a triumphant triad of events. The city just played host to baseball's All-Star Game (for the first time since 1961), is now gearing up for this week's Democratic National Convention, and will soon be the site of Superbowl XIX. San Francisco is definitely on a roll.

While the ever-volatile Democrats gather to decide the nomination, the television networks will be filling prime time with shots of cable cars and the Golden Gate. It seems an appropriate time to take a look at what has happened to Everybody's Favorite City. She's been through some changes.

San Francisco now claims to be the richest metropolis in the nation. Dianne Feinstein, the starchy lady mayor who wears silk blouses with bows, recently announced that San Francisco had a budget surplus in excess of $130 million for the fiscal year ending June 30. By way of contrast, Miami has a surplus of $2.1 million, and Boston a shortfall of an estimated $32 million. The news that the larder was full bolstered the city's confidence. It also sparked memories of the San Francisco of a century past, when, according to legend, cleaning ladies struck it rich speculating on mining stocks, and scrubbed floors with diamond-encrusted hands.

San Franciscans, who for the most part consider themselves a sturdy and right-minded lot, have also begun to reassert some of their traditional values. Many citizens feel stung by the media portraiture of their city as a citadel of weirdos and refugees from charnel houses. They think San Francisco may have gone too far to indulge tourists and may have been too permissive toward its flower children and Frisbee throwers.

Robert A. Isaacs/Photo Researchers, Inc.

Like the cable cars, San Francisco seems to be back on track.

The old steel trolley cars returned this summer to their Market Street runs and are packed with riders who apparently prefer the old-fashioned iron machines to the high-tech Muni-Metro subway running three times faster, two stories beneath them.

San Francisco labor unions are planning a 100,000-strong march for the week of the Democratic Convention, which falls on the 50th anniversary of the 1934 San Francisco General Strike, to show that the blue-collar worker still plays a strong role in this increasingly white-collar city.

And even outdoor public boxing has made a resurgence.

Moreover, it looks as if gay San Francisco is cleaning up its act — at least its more overt ones. A group of homosexual leaders recently met with the city's public health director to show their support for new city regulations aimed at stopping sexual activity in the all-male bathhouses. What's more, with the onslaught of the AIDS epidemic, many of the city's sexually oriented bathhouses have already closed down or are being converted to gyms. The San Francisco Department of Public Health announced this year that venereal disease among gay men in the city had dropped more than 50 percent from 1980 to 1983, indicating a major decline in sexual promiscuity in its gay population.

This is not to say that San Francisco is giving up its gays, or its tradition of gaiety, and the city still loves a good protest. The Moral Majoritarians have announced Convention-week plans for a pro-family, anti-homosexual forum which gay groups plan to picket. COYOTE, a national organization of prostitutes, is also scheduling counter-Convention activities. Republican Party officials are hoping such festivities will embarrass the Democratic Convention. Democrats are hoping against hope that the media won't notice them.

Many San Franciscans, however, are yearning for a return to the pre-World War II days before the city became self-conscious and began to object to being called Frisco. It was then just a fun place to live, not a tourist mecca or media shooting gallery. Cable cars were merely things to go to work on; the sound of dice in cigar-store back rooms was street music, and the twilight was effulgent with the gleam of splendidly iced martinis, from the Mark Hopkin's Lower Bar atop Nob Hill all the way out to Malloy's in Colma, where the cemetery workers drank. In those days, the unofficial mayors were the McDonough brothers, who, from their bailbond factory at Kearny and Clay streets, regulated all business that was best done after dark while the cops drank next door at Cookie Picetti's. An old sport named Shanty Malone was king of the publicans; a place named the Flytrap had great food; high-rise meant elevator; God was in His heaven, and Joe DiMaggio was coming up to bat with the score tied in the bottom of the ninth.

The events of April 24, 1984 were a perfect indication of San Francisco's nostalgic, fun-loving mood. The bay was the blue of Frank Sinatra's eyes, and the many citizens who had played hookey in order to go for a sail unfurled festive spinnakers from their boats — from a distance the deep waters around the Golden Gate Bridge appeared decorated with children's birthday favors. Downtown, the restaurants were packed with people feasting on lunches of poached salmon, fresh cracked crab, and sourdough french bread washed down with California wines bottled less than 50 miles away.

In many ways it was the quintessential San Francisco day because at 1:15 p.m. there was an earthquake.

San Francisco took the quake — which registered 6.2 on the Richter scale, as against the 1906 whopper that leveled the town at 8.3 — in good spirits. Financial district bars logged one of their busiest afternoons. Supervisor Quentin Kopp was at a lunch at Bardelli's restaurant, where they were discussing the fact that this will be Howard Cosell's first Superbowl. Kopp said that when the shaking stopped the entire restaurant burst into applause and spontaneously began singing "San Francisco," the rousing song from the 1936 Jeanette MacDonald-Clark Gable movie about the 1906 earthquake.

In the old days, it was just a fun place to live, not a tourist mecca or media event.

At Pier 39 in Fisherman's Wharf, San Francisco Police Chief Con Murphy was at Vannelli's restaurant briefing reporters about security plans for the Democratic National Convention. The pilings supporting the eatery began shaking like a Halloween skeleton. "Dianne's probably in her jumpsuit by now," Murphy said, an irreverent San Francisco in-joke about Mayor Feinstein, who wears fire department helmets to fires and blue police jumpsuits during civil defense drills. The police chief then bought an ice cream cone and, before returning to his office, strolled down to the docks to check the old fishing boat he is repairing in his spare time. San Francisco took this earthquake in stride.

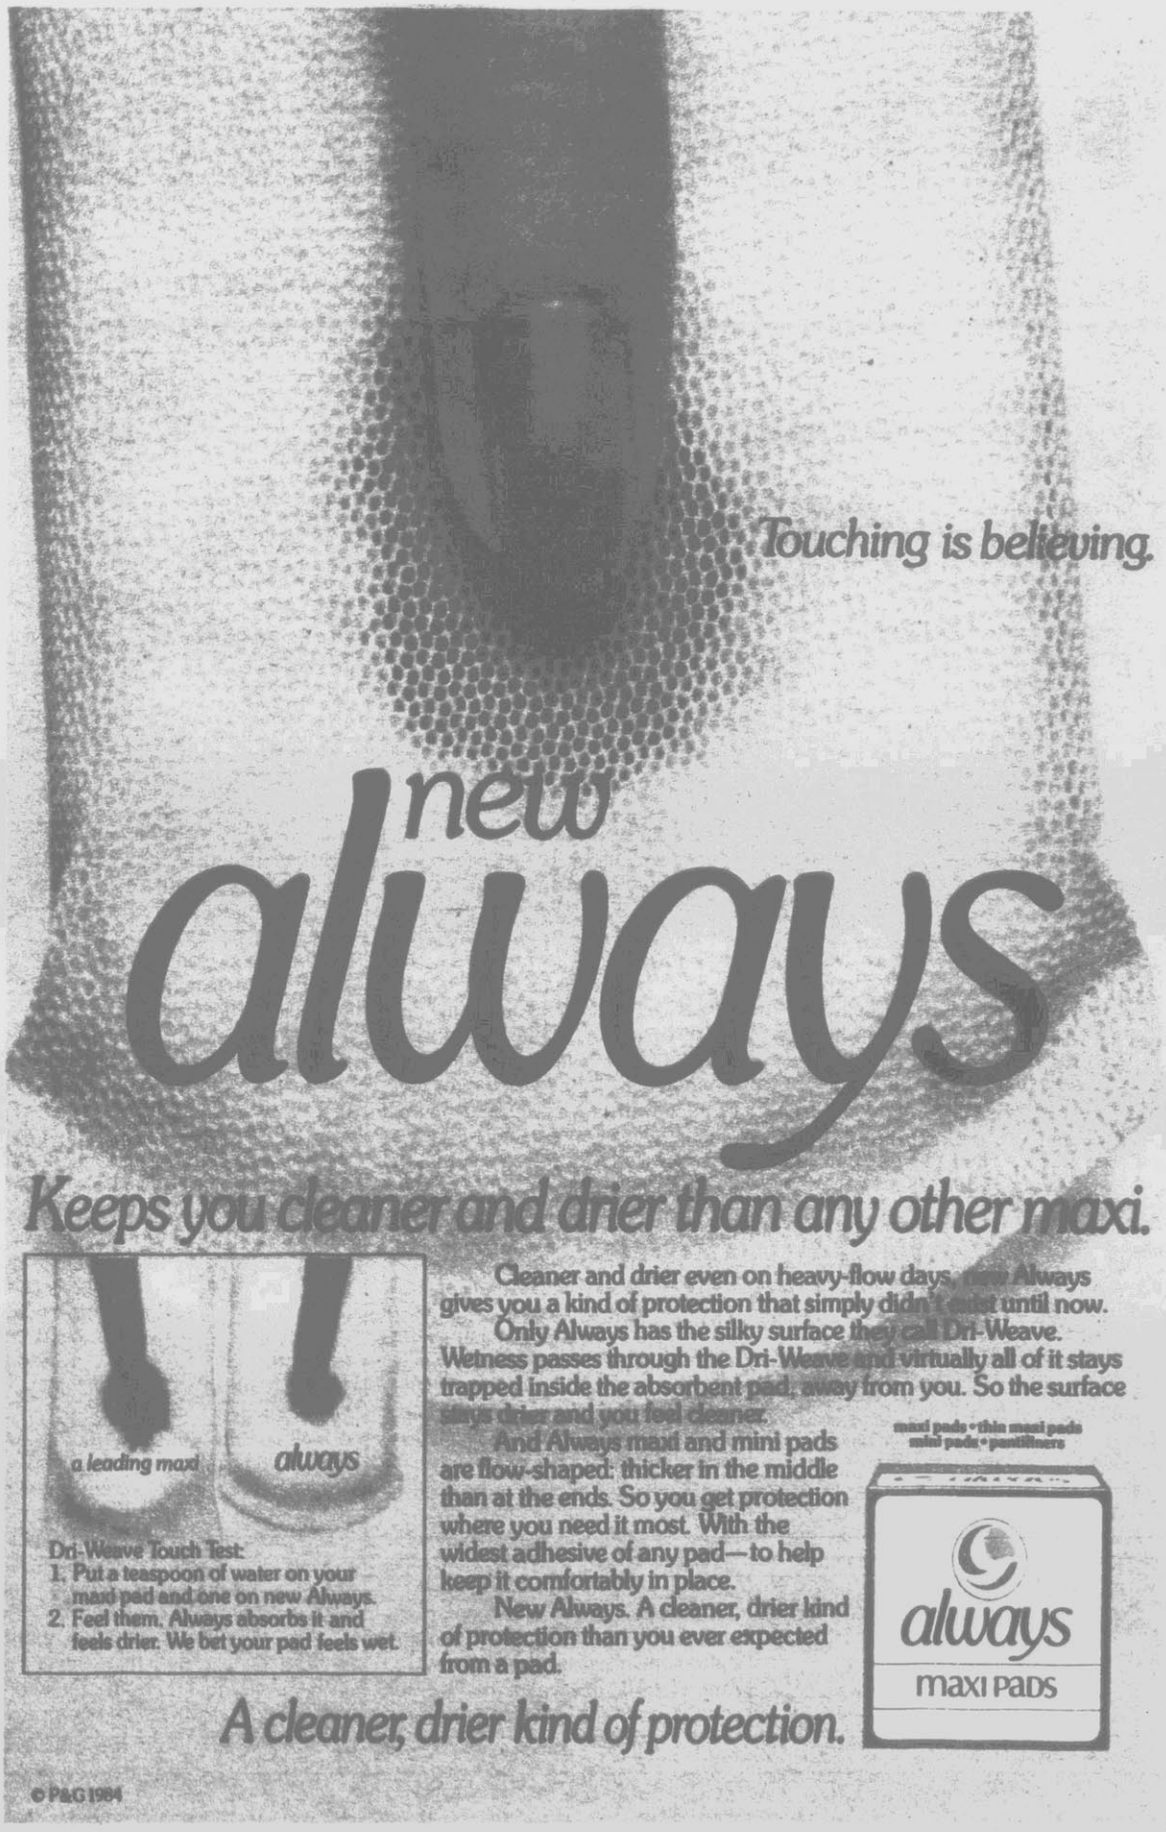

Perhaps, however, the best illustration of the sentimentality and devotion San Franciscans are feeling about their home these days is the battle which recently occurred over the choice of the city's official song. San Franciscans hotly debated whether it should be Tony Bennett's syrupy ballad "I Left My Heart In San Francisco" or the more robust "San Francisco" from the earthquake movie, sung in different generations by Jeanette MacDonald and Judy Garland. Radio stations ran contests, television stations editorialized, and the beef filled newspaper front pages. The song battle consumed the town to the extent that much official business was sidetracked and hardly anyone spoke of anything else for weeks.

The Old Town sentiment seemed overwhelmingly with the Jeanette MacDonald-Judy Garland song. Over 5,000 San Franciscans jammed the magnificent City Hall Rotunda to sing and dance to a 12-piece orchestra in a spirited rally for "San Francisco."

But Mayor Feinstein, a former Junior Grand National Rodeo Queen with strong views about culture, threatened to veto any slight to "I Left My Heart In San Francisco," which she said she loves to hear played when she gets off a plane at airports in foreign lands. The Board of Supervisors resolved the Great Song Battle by making "San Francisco" the city's Official Song, and "I Left My Heart..." the Official Ballad.

San Francisco should feel good about itself these days. It has two songs. Most cities don't even have one. FW

MORAL PERSPECTIVE

LAY A SOLID RELIGIOUS FOUNDATION FOR YOUR CHILDREN

By Robert Coles

For years I visited the homes of ordinary American people and tried to understand how their children grew up. Because I was trained in psychoanalytic psychiatry and child psychiatry, what caught my attention, as I talked with parents and children, were their worries and fears — the difficulties they experienced as they struggled (as boys and girls) to grow up, or (as adults) to make a living and be responsible mothers and fathers. My purpose in making all those home visits, I explained, was to document the ways in which people deal (or fail to deal) with the stresses this life offers. I tried to be as receptive as possible to the concerns of the people I spoke with. But I realize now that I tended to pay little attention to families' professed religious interests or beliefs.

I heard, day after day, all sorts of interesting stories, often stories of persistence and endurance in the face of substantial odds. After all, I was talking with black and white children going through the crisis of school desegregation in the 1960s South; with Appalachian children trying to comprehend the relatively bleak future of, say, a particular hollow's families; with Indian and Chicano children whose parents had had difficulties in this country, and with the children of working-class and suburban people as well. And when I talked with children from quite comfortable circumstances (I would call them our "privileged ones"), I found they had plenty of doubts and fears, too — a reminder that no one, however lucky by virtue of his or her social standing or economic position, escapes the strains of life.

In fact, as my work progressed I began to notice a rather astonishing irony as I compared what I heard from children and parents of varying social circumstances. Here, for instance, are the words of a child whose parents live about as well as anyone in the world would want to live:

"I don't know why my mother and dad seem so unhappy all the time, but they do. Now that I'm 13, I pay more attention to what they say to each other. When I hear them talking I get sad. I realize that most of the time they're arguing. My father wants to play golf, and my mother wants to go to a movie or to the museum. She says he should come with her. He says he wants to go his own way on weekends. She says she doesn't see much of him during the week because he's always traveling, and at night he talks on the phone with people who work with him.

"All my parents want is for me to 'behave'; I hear that word 10 times a day. No, I don't 'misbehave.' I've never really gotten into any trouble. When my mother tells me to behave, she's telling me to dress the way she thinks I should, and talk the way she thinks I should, and 'be nice' to people — that's the most important thing. But then, she has her 'bad moods,' she calls them, and she's not nice to us at home, and she admits later that she barks at people all day long. I heard the man in the post office tell his friend that some days my mother is the sourest person who comes into his building. My father says the trouble is Mom doesn't know what to do, now that my brothers are in high school and I'm almost there. She was always watching over us, even with the maids we had, and now she shouts at the people who work for her."

These are not the remarks of a young lady who is sitting on top of the world — even though she will one day be an heiress compared to others of her generation. As she grew up, this girl often wondered why there was so much gloom inside her house while the gardener always seemed so happy. I asked her once what "happiness" means. She found the question a hard one to answer but eventually I heard this brief, compelling definition: "Happiness is when you really know what you believe, and it makes you smile, and you're not a grump anymore!"

She was right to have noticed the gardener who tended her parents' rather ample acreage. He whistled and sang a lot. He smiled a lot too. Over the span of one year I talked with him at great length, and with his wife and children, one of whom, a girl, was only half a year younger than the girl I have just quoted. Here is what this gardener's daughter had to say about him, about her mother, about the life she was then living: "My daddy says we're just passing through here; we're on the way to meet God, or if we're bad, we won't see him because the Devil will keep us away. My mother tries to think of God every morning before she gets out of bed, so she'll do like He wants us to do. She says she forgets sometimes; she's so tired and sleepy, she just wants to go back to sleep when the alarm goes off. But somehow she always does get up in time. It's God who's in her head, my daddy says, telling her what's got to be done, and what's right to do.

"Daddy reads to us from the Bible. He says if we remember what God told Moses and what Jesus told the people, then we'll be alright, even if it's hard sometimes to pay all the bills on time. I say my prayers at night, and in the morning I try to remember to thank God I'm alive and I'm feeling good. I've heard my mother crying sometimes, because she has asthma and she has to fight just to breathe when she gets an attack. But she prays, and she catches enough air to stay here with us. When God wants you, He takes you, Daddy said. But he expects you to do your best until your time comes!"

So it goes for this child who has few expectations of success, yet who — already, at 12 — has learned to fit both this life's burdens and its opportunities into a powerful and compelling moral perspective. Not that such a view of things spares this family from moments of self-doubt, if not outright despair. These are hard-working but also hard-pressed people, and they sometimes wonder why their considerable efforts and exertions are rewarded so meagerly — while those whose land they tend, whose homes they care for, live so much better.

Yet, self-respect can be absent in those who have a lot of money, as can moral purpose and ethical standards. The gardener, remembering his years of work in various neighborhoods, told me: "I can't say I don't envy the people I work for. I'd be a fool — I'd be crazy — to say it doesn't bother me that some live so well, and we're just scraping by, and my brother can't get a job, even though he wants one real bad. But I'll look around me, when I'm doing my lawn-mowing or I'm trimming the bushes, and I see that some of these people who pay me aren't in the best shape, if you stop counting their money and listen to the way they talk about themselves. This one drinks too much, and that one drives crazy and smashes up his car.

"Some of the rich kids I see, they drink a lot, like their folks, and they use drugs, and they live fast, real fast, and all they think of is clothes and how to wear their hair and what records to buy and who's most popular. To me, it's sad when people forget who's really important — and the one who's most important is God, and He told us that we have to live according to what's right. You don't go to Heaven by praying in Church on Sunday and then the rest of the week being a mean, selfish person. You go to Heaven by living the way God did when He came here to visit us. He tried to help people who were poor. He tried to be friends with people who were unpopular. That's what I tell my kids: Remember how Jesus lived when He showed up on this earth! Keep His life in your mind, I tell my kids — but I tell myself too!"

It is not so much, as the gardener has noticed, that many people who have a lot of money and power are bankrupt morally, whereas many who have little in the way of material possessions have a strong spiritual life. The point is not that we ought to denigrate those who live comfortably or romanticize the lives of the poor — even as we ought not automatically assume that someone who is well-to-do is necessarily a thoughtful and honorable person, or that someone who is poor is necessarily lazy or lacks adequate intelligence. Rather, we need to understand how people make sense of this life — if they do so at all. We need to understand the moral underpinnings of our daily lives — the reasons for the ways in which we conduct ourselves at home and at work.

For many of us, no matter what our backgrounds, these reasons are essentially religious. That is to say, the moral assumptions which inform our lives are connected to a particular religion's ethical imperatives. Perhaps it took too long for me, a doctor, to appreciate how important religious life is for many people as they cope with life's challenges and as they go about bringing up their children. It is a means, really, of providing themselves with what philosophers have always said we need: a vision of what truly matters and of what is trivial and inconsequential. Without such a vision, life can be confusing, maybe even a little empty. A 19-year-old Harvard student recently put the matter this way, and I have no doubt he was speaking not only for himself, but also for his sister and brother, four and six years younger: "Ever since I was a kid I wanted to know everything, but I'm beginning to realize that you can't just surround yourself with facts and figures; you need to know what you should do with all that knowledge — you need to have what they keep calling, around here, 'a frame of reference.' "

Religion is a means of providing what philosophers have always said we need: a vision of what truly matters and of what is trivial and inconsequential.

It is up to parents to provide that frame of reference for their children. Moral purpose is what children require. A child who lacks moral purpose — anyone who does — is experiencing a kind of hunger. I well remember Anna Freud, who virtually founded the discipline of child psychoanalysis, telling a group of us (ourselves anxious for a sensible, convincing perspective on the nature of our professional work) that "children have a right to their parents' moral respect." I was intrigued, at the time, by that phrase "moral respect." I had come to know her, so was able, later, to ask her about her use of the expression. She was quick to spell out her thoughts: "We owe our children, above all, a foundation for a moral life." She went on to remind us that without such a capacity for moral reflection, cultivated from the early years and continued throughout life, we lose our grip on civilization and enter the jungle as merely wild animals. Moses knew this when he handed down the Ten Commandments, and Jesus of Nazareth when He delivered His Sermon on the Mount. Many of us also know it, and we try to instill this and other religious and moral teachings in the minds and hearts of our children. The gardener I mentioned earlier knew this too: "If I didn't have a church to go to, I'd be left with myself; I'd be drifting along, like some of my bosses, wheeling and dealing with life, instead of trying to do what I heard a minister say once, that you should find meaning in the world, so you can tell your kids why you want them to be good and to do good." Zucchini Pickles

8 cups Heinz Distilled White Vinegar or Apple Cider Flavored Vinegar
2 cups granulated sugar
¼ cup pickling salt
2 teaspoons celery seed
2 teaspoons ground turmeric
1 teaspoon dry mustard
9 pounds 6 to 8-inch zucchini, unpeeled, cut into ¼-inch slices
1 quart thinly sliced onions (4-5 medium)

Combine first 6 ingredients in saucepan; bring to a boil. Pour over zucchini and onions; let stand 1 hour, stirring occasionally. In saucepot, bring mixture to a boil, then simmer 5 minutes. Continue simmering while quickly packing one clean, hot jar at a time. Fill to within ½ inch of top making sure vinegar solution covers vegetables. Cap each jar at once. Process 5 minutes in boiling-water bath. Makes 6-7 pints.

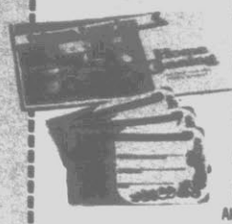

Strawberry/Peach Jam

4¼ cups prepared fruit (about 1 qt. fully ripe strawberries and 1½ lb. fully ripe peaches)
2 tablespoons lemon juice
6 cups (2 lb. 10 oz.) sugar
1 box SURE•JELL® Fruit Pectin

PREPARE FRUIT: Stem and thoroughly crush, one layer at a time, about 1 quart strawberries. Measure 2¼ cups into 6- or 8-quart saucepot. Peel and pit about 1½ pounds peaches. Grind or chop very fine. Measure 2 cups; add to strawberries. Add lemon juice.

MAKE JAM: Measure sugar and set aside. Mix fruit pectin into fruit in saucepot. Place over high heat and stir until mixture comes to a full boil. Immediately add all sugar and stir. Bring to a full rolling boil and boil hard 1 minute, stirring constantly. Remove from heat and skim off foam with metal spoon. Ladle quickly into hot jars, filling to within ⅛ inch of top. Cover and process in boiling water bath for 5 minutes. Makes about 6½ cups or about 7 (8 fl. oz.) jars.

EXTRAORDINARY PEOPLE

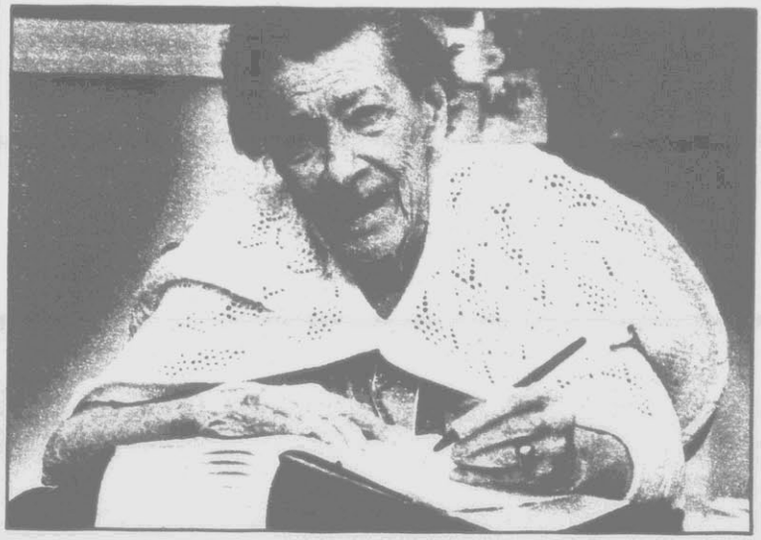

HELEN SANTMYER — AN OVERNIGHT SENSATION AT 89

By Trudy Krisher

Hospitality Home East, a nursing home facility in Xenia, Ohio, has had to turn its attention away from high-fiber diets, the monthly payroll, and the occasional cranky octogenarian. Of late, the home has played host to CBS News, Time, Life, Newsweek and The Honorable Richard Celeste, Governor of Ohio.

The calm in the eye of this media hurricane rests her 87-pound frame against the lamb's wool padding of her wheelchair. Emphysema makes her breathing labored. She catches her breath and whispers, "I don't know what all the fuss is about. It's very gratifying, of course. But sometimes I just can't understand what all this sensation's about."

The sensation is about a book titled . . . And Ladies of the Club and its author, Helen Hooven Santmyer. The novel spans the years between 1868 and 1932, and takes place in a small southwestern Ohio town called Waynesboro, a pseudonym for Santmyer's native Xenia. The story centers on a group of women who belong to a literary club, and follows them across the generations. Publishers Weekly, in a featured review, called the book "a warmly human story in a cool, taut, educated prose that never flags from first page to last." When it was published, its author was 86.

Charles Stenbrunner/Dayton Newspapers Inc.

But the current "sensation" was a long time in the making.

Santmyer, now 89, began work on this novel in earnest after Ohio Town, a collection of her essays on small town existence, was published in 1962. But she had been thinking about this book for most of her life. She wanted it to be a kind of retort to Sinclair Lewis, the tart-tongued novelist whose Main Street had made her so angry that she seethed every time she thought about it. "The book annoyed me because I don't think it was an unprejudiced picture of a small town."

Santmyer's portrait, which has been called "The Great Middle American Novel," is more sympathetic to the little places. "Getting away from a small town to the city is not the answer," says Santmyer.

She knows. Her early years took her away to Wellesley College from which she graduated in 1918 and to England's Oxford University where she earned an advanced degree. Working for a while at Scribners, the New York publishing house, she published two early novels, Herbs and Apples (1925) and The Fierce Dispute (1929). But eventually she came home to Xenia, the small town where she was raised, serving for many years as dean of women and head of the English department of nearby Cedarville College. "I tried a lot of places," she says. "This is where I belonged. I think it's important to stay and survive."

Surviving adversity has been Helen Santmyer's way of life, and the making of her 1,176-page novel is a classic story of true grit. "Helen has always been plagued by health problems," says Mildred Sandoe, 84, a lifelong friend of Santmyer, who now resides with her in the nursing home. She cites early cases of typhoid fever, hepatitis and undulant fever that weakened Helen in her young adult years. Later on, when Santmyer was working on Ladies, she suffered from a spinal column injury received when she fell in the stack room of the Dayton Public Library; it was then that doctors also discovered her emphysema.

But Helen Santmyer persevered. By the time she submitted . . . And Ladies of the Club to Weldon Kefauver, her old friend at the Ohio State University Press, the handwritten manuscript had come to fill eleven boxes.

Kefauver believed in the book as "an enormous contribution to local Ohio history," but he also recognized that it was too long. He recommended that 1,000 pages be cut, a task Helen, aided by her friend Mildred Sandoe, undertook at precisely the same time that her health seriously began to fail.

"There were repeated spells in the nursing home or the hospital," says Miss Sandoe, her neat gray curls firmed down under a hair net. "But Helen never stopped working on her book. She would ask me to bring it out to the hospital. I would read it to her and she would make suggestions from the bed. She has tremendous willpower."

That willpower resulted in a final manuscript that was published by the OSU Press in 1982. But the hefty volume bore an equally hefty $35 price tag. "When we saw that first copy, our hearts just sank," says Sandoe. "Between the bulk and the price, we knew no one would read it."

But someone did read it, and her enthusiasm has made all the difference. Grace Sindell of Shaker Heights checked it out of her local library, read it with delight, and passed the good news about it along to her son, Gerald. He just happened to be a California television producer who knew a good property when he saw one. Ladies, young Sindell recognized immediately, was another Gone with the Wind. "There was great power in watching the characters' lives played out," he says enthusiastically.

A flurry of activity ensued: contract talks about world rights, movie possibilities, a TV miniseries. Eventually Ladies was picked up by Owen Laster of the William Morris agency, whose clients include James Michener, Gore Vidal, Robert Penn Warren . . . and now Helen Santmyer.

The rest, as they say, is history. Putnam's bought the rights to republish the book in hardcover. Berkeley Books bid $396,000 to issue it as a paperback. The Book-of-the-Month Club paid $110,000 for the right to offer the saga to its members. And Helen Santmyer, from her nursing home in Xenia, was simply "flabbergasted."

A cart wheels by in a hallway of the east wing of the Hospitality Home. Its shelves bear labels: high fiber, low carbohydrate, diabetic. A nurse in a white uniform begins to serve lunch to the home's most celebrated resident. The squeaky wheels of the cart cause the celebrated head, which had begun to nod on the celebrated chest, to snap up like a bloodhound on the scent of a trail. Ladies, Santmyer says, picking up the dangling end of the conversation, was a way of "capturing the feeling of Old America changing, while New America seemed to be tumbling about one's ears." Her hands lift from the upholstered armrests of her wheelchair, her body arches visibly against the lamb's wool. Her novel, she says, fully awake, traverses the period when presidents from Ohio like Grant and Hayes and Garfield and McKinley were governing the nation. "They were strong, independent people," she says. "I wanted to paint a picture of what those men and women did."

The result is a special kind of portrait painted by a special kind of woman. A panoramic mural of nearly 100 years of American life, . . . And Ladies of the Club is a canvas that records a legacy of courage and determination, of strength and independence. It was written by a woman who continues that legacy. PW

NEW FRONTIERS IN MONEY-MANAGING

TAKING STOCK OF THE COMPUTER

By Gordon Williams

Imagine that it's three or four years from now and you're using your personal computer to put some extra money to work. You ask the computer for the dozen most promising stocks that day, given your needs.

Your computer races through the data stored in a gigantic computer hundreds of miles away. The answer comes back in a twinkling and you place an order (also through your computer) to buy 25 shares of Amalgamated Jelly Bean.

That's exactly how it will be in a few years, if the Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC) has its way. The SEC, the federal agency that regulates our stock market, wants to give all investors instant access to all financial facts and figures on all 10,000 companies whose stock is publicly traded. The information will be stored in SEC computers, which you can view free of charge or that can talk to your computer by telephone.

The SEC recently awarded a contract to a team of three companies that will run an 18-month pilot of the system available later this year, says Kenneth A. Fogash, deputy executive director of the SEC. The actual system should get rolling by 1986.

As futuristic as the SEC's electronic-information system sounds, it will be built on foundations that already exist. There are already plenty of programs available for home computers to help you invest your money. Such big commercial data-base services as Dow-Jones News/Retrieval, CompuServe, and The Source can bring torrents of financial data to your computer today.

The first thing the SEC wants from the new electronic information system is speed. When the new system is running, companies will send all information electronically — and immediately — to the SEC's computers. Instead of waiting months for the information, as we do now, it will be there within days.

But speed will just be part of it. The company that finally runs the electronic-information system must take all that data and package it so that it's most useful to you. The financial information about each company will have to be meshed with up-to-the-minute quotations from the stock market.

This still won't take all the risk out of investing in the stock market. But it will boost your chances of picking stocks that can earn a profit for you — without subjecting you to undue risk. When it comes to the ups and downs of the stock market, that alone will be a vast improvement. FW

"Vitamin Side Effects Revealed!"

(Atlanta, GA) —

FC&A, a nearby Peachtree City, GA, company announced today the release of a new $5.99 research report, "Vitamin Side Effects Revealed".

It reveals surprising side effects and other secrets about vitamins . . . facts that aren't generally known by the public. Read on through this interview with FC&A President, Frank K. Wood.

Answer: Yes, two vitamins can actually be harmful in high doses. Other vitamins can sometimes cause diarrhea, dizziness, sleepiness, depression, upset stomach, cramps, high blood pressure, fear, ringing sounds or poor heart function.

Even so, the good effects of vitamins outweigh the bad effects. But you must know what vitamins you need and how much to take. That's why you need my new research report.

Question: What other vitamin secrets are revealed in this new research report?

Answer:

- How you can get vitamins for free.
- Not one but two vitamins which can help fight hardening of the arteries, and coronary heart disease.
- Two minerals that help protect against cancer.
- A vitamin that helps protect against schizophrenia and lower cholesterol.
- Two minerals and a vitamin that can combat osteoporosis, which causes the collapse of the backbone in older women.
- Two minerals that can help lower high blood pressure.
- A mineral that helps regulate blood sugar levels.
- A vitamin that protects against sunburn, fights viruses and helps wounds heal.
- A mineral complex that may slow down aging.
- An amino acid that combats cold sores and Herpes infections.
- A vitamin that helps increase circulation in the legs and increases fertility.
- A vitamin that helps alcoholics control their drinking.
- A vitamin that helps control premenstrual tension and fights depression and helps prevent kidney stones.

Question: What else is in the research report?

Answer: Complete descriptions of every vitamin. What each does for you . . . How much you need to take . . . What foods contain different vitamins . . . How prescription drugs, alcohol, and smoking can destroy certain vitamins . . . How particular vitamins can fight many diseases . . . How much of each vitamin you can safely take . . . How long your body stores each vitamin . . . Deficiency symptoms for each vitamin.

Answer: It's easy. Simply cut out and mail the coupon today. There's a no time-limit guarantee of full satisfaction or your money back.

Don't wait to order "Vitamin Side Effects Revealed." If you don't get this new book . . . you'll never know all the things different vitamins can do for you — and their side effects.

NEW! ...DUGAN AND THE EDITORS OF CONSUMER GUIDE® ...PROGRAM

FLATTEN YOUR STOMACH FOR WOMEN & MEN

Here's a fast, sure program to get you looking and feeling better than you have in years. Trim, tone, and shape your middle with just a few minutes of exercise each day.

The youthful look of a narrow waist—it's yours if you want it! So get ready to flatten your stomach with the New 7-Day Flatten Your Stomach Program from Consumer Guide.®

Yes, this new program gives you a different exercise plan for every day of the week. You alternate days of lighter exercise with days of more vigorous exercise. And on the seventh day you ease up with a special maintenance-level routine (perfect for the weekend!).

The secret is in the way each day's exercises work together so that all—and not just some!—of the four major abdominal muscles get toned up. Some of these muscles run up and down. Others run side to side. And some crisscross the abdomen at an angle. If you exercise only one of these muscles (say, by doing sit-ups) your stomach may be hard. But it won't be flat!

The New 7-Day Program, however, has been designed to produce balanced muscle development and shaping, while avoiding injury and soreness. Do these simple, easy-to-follow exercises each day and see if you don't feel more fit, energetic, self-confident and attractive in just a few short weeks.

So don't put off the day when you can start enjoying a slim, firm waistline. Order the New 7-Day Flatten Your Stomach Program now.

Easy To Use

This book has simple exercises with easy-to-follow directions illustrated in full-color on 64, large 8½" x 11" pages which are spiral bound to lie flat and stay open. So now what's your excuse?

HOW'S EATIN'?

SPICE IT UP, CAJUN-STYLE

By Marilyn Hansen

Paul Prudhomme, a young Cajun chef from Louisiana, has been reaping laurels and acclaim in culinary circles across the United States. His food has a distinctive, tantalizing quality that reflects his roots. Here are a few of his recipes for you to try.

CAJUN MEAT LOAF

A combination of pork and beef gives more flavor diversity to this dish, but you can use all ground beef, if desired.

- 2 whole bay leaves
- 1 tablespoon salt
- 1 teaspoon ground red pepper
- 1 teaspoon black pepper
- ½ teaspoon white pepper
- ½ teaspoon ground cumin
- ½ teaspoon ground nutmeg
- 4 tablespoons unsalted butter
- ¾ cup finely chopped onions
- ½ cup finely chopped celery
- ½ cup finely chopped green peppers
- ¼ cup finely chopped green onions
- 2 teaspoons minced garlic
- 1 tablespoon Tabasco sauce
- 1 tablespoon Worcestershire sauce
- ½ cup evaporated milk
- ½ cup catsup
- 1½ pounds ground beef
- ½ pound ground pork
- 2 eggs, lightly beaten
- 1 cup very fine dry bread crumbs

1. In a small bowl, combine bay leaves, salt, red, black and white peppers, cumin and nutmeg; set aside.

2. In a 1-quart saucepan, melt butter over medium heat. Add onions, celery, green pepper, green onions, garlic, Tabasco, Worcestershire and combined seasonings. Saute until mixture starts sticking excessively, about 6 minutes, stirring occasionally and scraping the pan bottom well.

3. Stir in milk and catsup. Continue cooking about 2 minutes, stirring occasionally. Remove from heat; allow mixture to cool.

4. Place ground beef and pork in an ungreased 13 x 9-inch pan. Add eggs, cooked vegetable mixture and bread crumbs. Mix by hand until thoroughly combined.

5. In the center of the pan, shape mixture into loaf about 12 x 6 x 1½ inches. Bake uncovered at 350° for 25 minutes, raise heat to 400°; continue cooking until done, about 35 minutes longer. Serve immediately.

Makes 6 servings

NEW ORLEANS BLACK MUFFINS

- ¾ cup hot water
- ½ cup molasses
- ¼ cup milk
- 2 cups whole wheat flour
- 1 cup all-purpose flour
- ¾ cup sugar
- 3 tablespoons baking powder
- 1 teaspoon baking soda
- 1 teaspoon salt
- 1½ cups coarsely chopped dry-roasted pecans

1. In a medium-sized bowl, combine hot water and molasses, stirring until well blended. Stir in milk until blended.

2. In a large bowl, sift together the flours, sugar, baking powder, baking soda and salt.

3. With a rubber spatula, fold the liquid mixture and pecans into the dry ingredients just until flour is thoroughly incorporated; do not overmix. Spoon into 12 greased muffin cups. Bake at 300° until done, 45 minutes to 1 hour. Remove from pan immediately. Serve while hot.

New Foolproof Weight Loss System Features DiCellulite 2000 AM/PM™— The Miracle Diet Tablets That Weren't Expected Until the Year 1990!

"Just 2 tablets a day . . ."

- NO CALORIE COUNTING
- NO EXERCISING
- NO HUNGER PANGS

by Paula Lavey, President National Health Products, Inc.

This is a long story.

If you read it all the way through, that's proof you're seriously considering losing weight. If you have at least 15 or more pounds to lose, we've advanced the scientific timetable by half a decade to make it easy for you — so easy we'll refund twice what you pay for this program if it fails you. How can we make this astounding guarantee and still stay in business? Simple!

You may have seen our ads across the country during our test market last year. Here are the results — "Of the tens of thousands who ordered DiCellulite, 97.2 out of every 100 customers lost the excess fat and weight they desired without hunger pangs or lack of energy." Yes, it really does work. And DCP/2000™ will work for you too (even if other programs have failed you).

The 24-hr. effective combination of ingredients will help you lose weight all day and all night. EVEN WHILE YOU SLEEP!

EIGHT EFFECTIVE COMPONENTS
Weight Loss Experts Say:
"Here's the magic formula —"

AM FORMULA

Each morning when you take your AM tablet, you'll feel it begin to work within minutes. Your own body chemistry will activate its special timeclock which will work all day to help you lower your caloric intake. You'll eat 3 hardy meals a day without fear or guilt! DCP/2000 AM gives your willpower a tremendous boost and contains no caffeine or stimulants that can make you jittery.

PM FORMULA

The seven ingredient PM tablet is a complex of amino acids and other elements that are often deficient during a rapid weight-loss cycle. Amino-therapy is the latest discovery in the all-natural health and life extension field. Here's how this tablet can help you:

DCP/2000PM-1 A fat mobilizer. This ingredient helps make it easy for the fat to leave your body. You'll get rid of body fat easily, naturally, and without even knowing it.

DCP/2000PM-2 A gentle diuretic. This ingredient maintains proper body water levels, preventing fluid buildup and the uncomfortable bloated feeling that goes with it.

DCP/2000PM-3 An essential amino acid. Lack of this element in your metabolism can mean uneven moods, low energy, and lack of vitality and sex drive. You'll love the new you.

DCP/2000PM-4 A super energy lift. This complex group of aminos helps you feel peppier and happier. You may not crave sweets for that often needed boost of energy. You'll love it!

DCP/2000PM-5 A natural fiber. This ingredient is one you know well. It helps clean the digestive tract. You'll feel more alive than you have for years.

AND THAT'S ONLY THE BEGINNING

DCP/2000 is only half the story. National Health Products adds to the miraculous DCP/2000 a weight loss system so simple, so basic and so logical, you'll wonder why it hasn't been this easy for you before. The DCP/2000 system is so powerful in stripping the fat off your body we're not at all afraid to offer you DOUBLE YOUR MONEY back if it doesn't work exactly as we say it does, without hunger pangs or discomfort.

- How long has it been since you could wear the size you wore when you went to school?
- How long has it been since you looked in the mirror without thinking, "One of these days I'll get rid of these bulges?"
- How long has it been since you were able to grasp your waistline or thigh and not have a handful of flab?

Here's a suggestion. Circle these questions with a red pen or pencil, then look at them again two months after starting the DCP/2000 Weight Loss System.

Unless you have no commitment at all or deliberately try to scuttle your own progress, you'll be happier than you've been since, pound by pound and inch by inch you lost the slim trimness you used to have — and can have again!

I promise you.

WHAT IN THE WORLD

BY MARION LONG

COOL GERMS

This may not be the season to tell you this, but you may be allergic to your car air conditioner. Allergist Prem Kumar, an associate professor of medicine at Louisiana State University, began studying the problem when one of his patients complained that he had coughing attacks whenever he got into his automobile. Acting on a hunch, Kumar discovered that a common fungus was thriving in the air conditioner's coolant tank.

Kumar stayed on the case, surveying allergy and asthma sufferers, of whom 18 percent said their symptoms worsened in a cooled car. When their air conditioners were examined, Kumar found even more fungi. He theorizes that the warm and humid air that passes through the cooling capsules makes the air conditioner a perfect breeding ground for fungi. He's working on a method of disinfection, but until he has it perfected, car owners might as a friendly mechanic to clean the air conditioner and coolant tank capsule. The cost of the work should be insignificant enough to sneeze at. One hopes.

PUPPY LOVE

People will try and try, doggedly endeavoring to make their pets happy. A recent innovation is Date-A-Pet, an Indianapolis-based service through which man's best friend can meet the doggie of his or her dreams.

Date-A-Pet matches male beasts with females who have been deemed ready to bear puppies. It's a service designed to help dog breeders by saving them the cost of advertising for a suitable mate for their pup. Not to mention how much it can help the dogs. The Date-A-Pet matchmakers will even hook up different breeds of dogs if that's what it takes to make some lonely pooch happy. Says Laura Foster, who runs the service with her husband: "There are dating services for married people, single people, tall and short people. So why not one for pets?"

Who was it that once said it's a dog's life?

FOWL FRANCHISE

For decades, Americans have feasted on China's most famous duck: Peking. Now the Chinese have the opportunity to feast with — or at least under the auspices of — America's No. 1 duck: Donald. Yes, China's first fast food restaurant has opened, and its mascot is the inimitable Disney quacker. "Everyone knows Peking Duck, but since this is Western food, those involved thought Donald Duck was most appropriate," says David Ho, general manager of the company that brought fast food to Peking.

The establishment, called the Yi Li Righteous Advantage Fast Food Restaurant, will serve a combo of Eastern and Western fare to Peking diners. Hamburgers will go for the equivalent of 55 cents, and fries will be a quarter; the beef curry and sweet and sour pork will cost 90 cents. At these prices, however, fast food may be slow to take off. The usual meat and vegetable dish for two at a (native) Chinese restaurant runs between 30 and 40 cents.

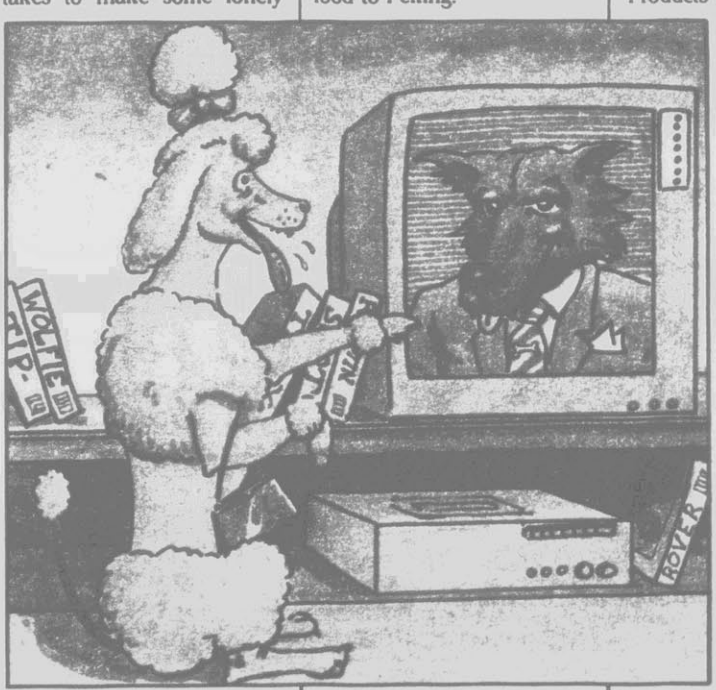

WITHDRAWAL SYMPTOMS

Used to be that all a bank robber had to contend with was the bank guard, the safe, surveillance cameras, and alarm systems. If he managed to get past all that, grab the money, and get out of the bank, his crime might indeed pay off.

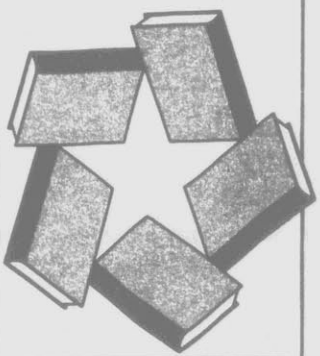

Not any more. Protection Products Corporation of New Orleans has come out with a most unpleasant deterrent it says we good guys can bank on — the S.O.S. Pak. It looks like an innocent stack of currency, but once the crook flees, a bank teller can set it off by remote control.

The device is designed to make a thief's getaway a whole lot harder. The Pak releases tear gas and smoke, sprays indelible red dye, and makes a sharp sound that closely resembles the report from a .38 caliber pistol. Surprise!

Score one for the good guys.

- HAL'S PALS! Dear Hal: What animal shows the widest range of emotions? Dear Pal: The laughing cryena. Dear Hal: How many bald-headed men can pedal a unicycle? Dear Pal: Just one.

- Boxing Match! Pat keeps 39 coins in two boxes. One box contains nine more than two-thirds of those in the other. How many coins are in each box?

Twenty one and eighteen

- Noe Way! Count negatives in: "Don't never say I didn't see nobody never give you nothing." Answer in 30 seconds.

Answer is six

- Tongue Tests! Say fast: Hedda shredded the cheddar. Skippy misses Mitzi, Mitzi misses Skippy. An itty bitty blue-black bug bit Billy.

HE'S TOO SMART FOR WORDS

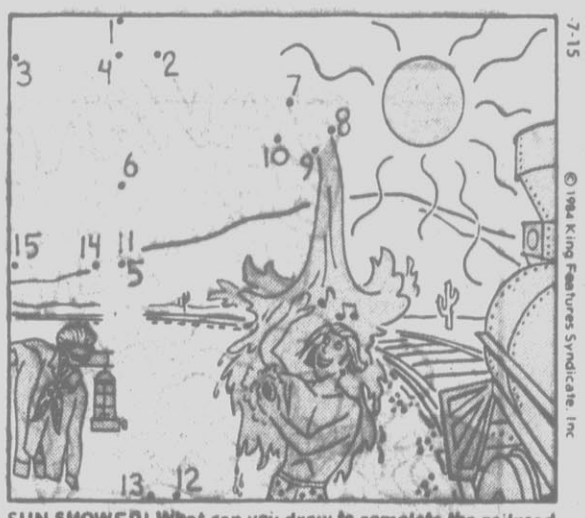

"Ha, ha, ha," said the jokester. "It is easy to see from this calendar page that the precise date today is the 16th of July."

"I thought you would never ask," said he. "You see..."

His reply: "Half of July is gone. And, as you can see half of the word July is gone.

IN THE DAYS OF KING ARTHUR

CREATED BY HAL FOSTER

Our Story: FROM THE NORTH COUNTRY MESSENGERS SPEED TOWARD CAMELOT WITH THE NEWS: AN ARMADA HAS APPEARED OFF THE COAST. MEN HAVE LANDED, PEASANTS FLEE THE FIELDS FOR THE SAFETY OF STONE WALLS, BUT STONE WALLS ARE SOMETIMES NOT ENOUGH.

THE INVADERS WASTE NO TIME. AS ONE PARTY FORTIFIES THE BEACH ANOTHER SLIPS INLAND AND PROVIDES A TASTE OF THINGS TO COME. "TERROR," THEIR LEADER HAD SAID, "IS OUR BEST GENERAL." AS WORD OF THE VILE DEED SPREADS, RESISTANCE WILL WEAKEN.

AND BY THE SHORE, MORDRED--FOR IT IS HE--DIRECTS HIS MINIONS. MORDRED, WHOM ALL THE WORLD THOUGHT DEAD, CLAIMED BY A MERCILESS SEA. YET THE WATERS HAD SPARED HIM, THOUGH THE DENIZENS OF THE DEEP WOULD TREAT HIM MOST UNKINDLY. NO LONGER CAN HE WALK AND RUN LIKE OTHER MEN. THE MISSING LIMB FUELS HIS JEALOUS HATRED OF KING ARTHUR AND SWEETENS THE PROSPECT OF REVENGE.

"BURN THE SHIPS," MORDRED COMMANDS, AND AT ONCE THE VESSELS ARE PUT TO THE TORCH. THERE WILL BE NO GOING BACK. MORDRED SURVEYS HIS MEN: THUGS AND CUTTHROATS, RENEGADES AND RUFFIANS, BULLIES, BRUTES, AND BUTCHERS FROM THE FOUR CORNERS OF THE EARTH. SOON THEIR RANKS WILL SWELL. AND SOON HE WILL WEAR A KINGLY CROWN, FOR HE HAS PLANNED LONG AND WELL.
