Reactions Mixed After Market Opener

By MARY SCHULKEN
Reflector Staff Writer

"It's not that good, but it's not that bad either," was the way one farmer described Wednesday's opening day sales on the Greenville Tobacco Market.

Reactions were mixed to the opening, but farmers, warehousemen and local agricultural officials agreed that the Eastern Belt fared better than the Middle and Border belts on the first day of sales.

According to the Greenville Tobacco Board of Trade, a total of 734,164 pounds of tobacco changed hands in Greenville on the first day of sales for Eastern Belt markets. The average price per hundred pound was $155.30, higher than the 1983 opening-day average of $148 but lower than the record opening-day price of $160 in 1981. Of the leaf sold, 30,318 pounds, or 24 percent, went to the Flue-Cured Tobacco Cooperative Stabilization Corp.

Across the 11 other Eastern Belt markets, prices averaged $156 per hundred pounds. Preliminary estimates indicate that 28 percent of all tobacco sold went to the co-op, compared to 44 percent in 1983.

Most tobacco sold Wednesday in Greenville was lugs and primings, according to John Bryan of the Greenville Tobacco Board of Trade. "The quality (of the tobacco) on the floor looked good, it was clean," Bryan said. "We had some farmers disappointed but I think we did very well on the whole." In Greenville prices per hundred ranged from $148-$194, he said. Sales totaled $1,140,645.

Billy Clark of Raynor, Forbes & Clark Warehouse said he "was very pleased" with first-day sales. "On the first day you don't really know what to expect, but on the whole, it was a good opening day."

Clark said 12 percent of the tobacco sold at Raynor, Clark & Forbes Warehouse Wednesday went to co-op. He noted that participation from companies was good. "The tobacco companies showed signs they were more interested in some tobacco than others," he said. "Lower primings sold better than leaf higher on the stalk, which is higher grade tobacco." Clark said he expected this on the first day since "most companies don't get orders for tobacco in until later."

Clark said a small number of farmers turned tags on their tobacco

Wednesday, rejecting bids in hopes of higher prices later. "There were not too many turning tags," he said. "There were some turned, but not many."

"On the whole, I think we did better than other belts on opening day, particularly the Border Belt," he said.

Sales resumed today in Greenville and at 11 a.m. officials reported prices had continued "steady at Wednesday's levels."

SALES CONTINUE...Tobacco sales continued today in Greenville after Wednesday's opening day prices brought mixed reactions from farmers and agricultural officials. Tobacco brought an average of $155 per pound in Greenville the first day and a total of 734,164 pounds were sold. (Reflector Photo By Chris Bennett)

Burford Appointment Swept Away By Flood Of Criticism

By RANDOLPH E. SCHMID
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Stung by Congress, former EPA Administrator Anne Gorsuch Burford sought to defuse an election-year furor by withdrawing as the new head of a federal environmental advisory group.

The controversial former head of the Environmental Protection Agency withdrew as chairwoman of the National Advisory Committee on Oceans and Atmosphere Wednesday. She was to have been sworn in today.

President Reagan's announcement early in July that he would name Mrs. Burford to the post stirred a storm of outrage among environmentalists, both Democrats and Republicans.

The Republican-controlled Senate voted 74-19 last week to urge Reagan to rescind the choice, and the House echoed that sentiment on Tuesday by a 363-51 vote.

Reagan defended Mrs. Burford at a news conference after the Senate vote, but accepted her withdrawal on Wednesday, according to Deputy Press Secretary Larry Speakes.

"Neither she nor the president was prepared for the groundswell of outrage that swept the country... it illustrates that the environment is an extremely high priority for all Americans," said Sierra Club spokeswoman Diane MacEachran after announcement of the withdrawal.

"The public outrage over her appointment is one indication of how far out of touch Reagan is on environmental issues. Reagan's repeated assaults on the environment will come back to haunt him in November," said Geoffrey Webb, political director of Friends of the Earth.

Plane Has Explosion; Passengers Said Safe

By SCHEHEREZADE FARAMARZI
Associated Press Writer

Iranian Foreign Ministry officials in Tehran reported an explosion aboard a hijacked Air France jetliner today, but said all its passengers were safe. Air France said the three hijackers were with Iranian authorities.

The ministry officials, reached by The Associated Press by telephone from Beirut, Lebanon, said the people from the Boeing 737 were on the runway near the plane. The officials spoke on condition of anonymity.

"All the passengers, our passengers and the crew are safe," said Maurice Bouhog, a spokesman for Air France in Paris. "The hijackers are with the Iranian authorities."

One Iranian official said no one, hostages or hijackers, had been injured. He said it was not clear what caused the explosion, but that it apparently took place after everyone left the plane.

Air France said a total of 14 passengers — including a 10-year-old American boy — had been released in Tehran by the hijackers in addition to a steward who escaped in Cyprus. That left 46 passengers and crew — all men — on the airport runway in Tehran.

The hijackers of an Air France jetliner earlier rigged the aircraft with explosives and said they would blow up the plane and their hostages if France did not meet their demands, an airport official told The Associated Press.

The official, who had been reached by telephone from Beirut, reported, "They've given them (French officials) until 4:30 p.m. (Tehran time, 9 a.m. EDT)." He spoke on condition of anonymity.

It was the second deadline set by the hijackers. They said earlier they would kill a French hostage every hour after 9 a.m. local time if the French did not release five men from their prisons. That deadline passed with no one reported harmed.

The hostages aboard the airliner reportedly included French, U.S., Japanese, Indian, Swiss and Finnish passengers.

Among 14 passengers freed by the hijackers in Tehran was a 10-year-old American boy, Air France said. The airline refused to identify him, and would not say if his parents were aboard the plane.

Air France said 12 women, a girl and the boy were released from the plane at Tehran today and that a steward had escaped earlier in Cyprus. With 38 passengers and six crew reported on the aircraft originally, that would leave the three hijackers and 46 hostages.

Cypriot authorities said the hijackers carried knives and perhaps explosives. The plane landed in Geneva, Switzerland, Beirut and Lanarca, Cyprus on the way to Tehran.

U.S. Treasury To Borrow Billions

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government will end up borrowing $157.6 billion to finance its red-ink spending this fiscal year, an amount 22 percent below the amount needed to make up for last year's record federal deficit.

As that news was announced Wednesday by the Treasury Department, officials also projected borrowing needs for the first quarter of the year starting Oct. 1 will be $55 billion to $60 billion, the highest quarterly figure in two years and a signal that large deficits are still very much a problem.

The government had to borrow $202.3 billion last year to finance a record debt of $195.4 billion. While the deficit this year is expected to range between $170 billion and $175 billion, the borrowing needs dropped even more sharply.

One of the differences, administration officials said, was that while the government ended last year with a cash balance of $37.1 billion, the cash balance at the end of this fiscal year will be a lower $20 billion.

At a news conference to announce borrowing plans for the next two quarters, Treasury Undersecretary Beryl Sprinkel said borrowing during the current July-September quarter would total $44.6 billion, bringing the amount for the 1984 fiscal year to $157.6 billion.

He said borrowing for the first quarter of the 1985 fiscal year, from October through December, would be between $55 billion and $60 billion, which would mark the highest borrowing level since January-March of 1983, when borrowing totaled $56.4 billion.

Sprinkel said the government would sell $16.75 billion in new securities next week, raising $9.6 billion in new cash and redeeming $7.2 billion in maturing securities.

The new offer calls for $6.5 billion in three-year notes to be auctioned next Tuesday in minimum denominations of $5,000; $5.5 billion in 10-year notes to be auctioned next Wednesday in minimum denominations of $1,000; and $4.75 billion in 30-year bonds to be auctioned next Thursday in minimum denominations of $1,000.

Sprinkel called on Congress to raise the debt limit before leaving for its August recess, saying the government would run out of money by early September. He said any delay in raising the limit, which has already been raised once this year to $1.573 trillion, would throw the Treasury's borrowing plans off schedule and end up costing the government more in higher interest rates.

The government announced no new ways to finance the burgeoning debt, although Sprinkel said Treasury Secretary Donald Regan would be presented next week with a list of recommendations from a working group which has been studying the problem. He said he hoped Regan would announce his decision well before the end of the year.

Educator Calls Art And Drawing '4th' R In Kid's Development

By PATRICIA McCORMACK
UPI Education Editor

"The more I draw the better I see and the more I understand," contemporary artist Richard Serra has said.

And the more your children draw, the better they will see and understand, says David W. Baker, associate professor of art at Louisiana State University in Baton Rouge.

Baker quotes Serra in a report on children's art, "The Fourth R in Education."

"Art is not only the birthright for every child, it is the basis for learning the other '3 R's,'" he says in the report for parents.

Also editor of School Arts Magazine, Baker prepared the report while serving as a board member for Crayola Dream-Makers, a national program to encourage children's aspiration and achievement in art. It was inaugurated this year by Binney & Smith, maker of art material.

"Picture-making is one of the most basic acts of mankind, as the evidence of the ancient cave and rock drawings tells us," Baker says.

"And as it was with their ancestors, pictures are equally basic in the life and development of the individual child. Children, wherever they are, teach themselves and test their knowledge of the world through the images they create."

"By the time 5-year-olds enter school they have, just by virtue of being human, invented for themselves an abstract communication system composed of images."

"And the awesome thing about it is that it's a system that communicates with every other child in the world — and with observant adults. It crosses cultures, geography, time. And the children have done it by themselves."

"Because of that, they have the wherewithal to begin to handle higher forms of abstract communication — verbal language math, and so on."

Baker says picture-making also is risk-taking and that children can dare to be themselves in putting down and exploring ideas that may be different from those of their peers.

"Making pictures is a safe way to test unknown ideas and to express what the poet Wordsworth called 'thoughts too deep for words,'" the children's art expert said.

Baker offers six steps for parents interested in nurturing "this essential growth process."

1. Be sensitive to the importance of drawing in child development. Remember, children's art reveals the inner workings of a child's mind. Those early scribbles are as much a part of a child's mental development as the toddler's crawling and falling are of his physical growth.

2. Make opportunities and materials available. Provide paper, crayons, markers, paints and a place to work. Avoid thin or hard, glossy paper and poor quality coloring materials. The parent should not inhibit creativity for the sake of neatness. But the child should know not to paint on an Oriental rug. Let child know the rules while being given a place for this creative, if messy, pursuit.

3. Encourage. The answer to "what will I do today" could be, "Get out your drawing materials." When the child asks, "What shall I draw?" talk about possibilities. Inspiration can come from chatting about a trip or activity the child is looking forward to.

4. Extend the child's awareness by looking at art together in museums or galleries, in books or in the environment — park statues, posters, billboards. Encourage the child to look and to talk about what he or she sees.

5. Draw and paint with your child at home. Many museums and art centers now offer parent-child workshops. If parent-child workshops are not available, ask to have them offered.

6. Advocate good art teaching and a formal program in school. When children do art they not only learn about themselves but they also delve into geography, science, storytelling and other developmental skills.

"They need more than pumpkins at Halloween and valentines in February," Baker said.

Candlelight Ceremony Performed

Claudia Mausi Michel and Charles H. Chauncey were united in marriage in a candlelight ceremony Friday at 7:30 p.m. at the home of Mr. and Mrs. David Bell.

The double ring ceremony was performed by Thomas Newman. The bride is the daughter of Karin and Kurt Michel of Giessen, West Germany. The bridegroom is the son of Annette Chauncey of Route 5, Greenville.

The bride was given in marriage by Harold Chauncey, uncle of the bridegroom. Donna Bell, aunt of the bridegroom, was pianist for the ceremony.

The bride wore a formal gown of white peau de soie styled with a sweetheart neckline, short puff sleeves and A-line skirt. Lace applied with seed pearls trimmed the neckline. She wore a circlet of lace trimmed with seed pearls for a headpiece. The fingertip veil of illusion was bordered in lace. She carried a bouquet of white and yellow daisies with greenery tied with white satin ribbon.

A reception followed the ceremony.

The couple will live near Greenville after a wedding trip to unannounced points.

The bridegroom works at Vermont-American.

Cooking Is Fun

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
Associated Press Food Editor

Americans have strong feelings, I've discovered, about potato salad.

Some want the potatoes cubed, not sliced.

Some want the salad to be dressed with oil, vinegar, salt and pepper.

Some want their potato salad warm with a bacon dressing.

Some want the salad to be made with mashed potatoes.

And some say potato salad must be made with a combination of French dressing and mayonnaise.

And some, especially Southerners, want sweet pickles in their potato salad. This time around we have a recipe — and very good it is — for this group.

POTATO SALAD
6 to 8 medium (2 pounds) potatoes

1 cup thinly sliced celery

1 medium (4 ounces) sweet red pepper, seeded and sliced (¾ cup)

4 small scallions, thinly sliced (¼ cup)

¾ cup drained sweet pickle slices, halved

¾ cup mayonnaise

3 tablespoons sweet pickle liquid

½ teaspoon salt

¼ teaspoon dry mustard

Pepper to taste

Scrub potatoes and cut each in half; do not peel. In a saucepan barely cover potatoes with boiling water; boil until tender when pierced in center with a fork — about 25 minutes. Drain at once. Cool slightly. With the help of a small knife, strip off skins and discard. Cut potatoes into ½ to 1-inch cubes; turn into a large bowl; add celery, red pepper, scallion and pickles; toss together.

In a small bowl whisk together mayonnaise, pickle liquid, salt, mustard and pepper; pour over potato mixture and stir lightly to coat. Cover and chill for at least a few hours to allow flavors to blend.

Makes about 2 quarts.

POPULATION SHIFT

WASHINGTON (AP) — By the year 2034, only 7 percent of the world's population will live in developed countries, according to a recent demographic study.

Currently, about 25 percent of the population lives in developed nations.

Bridal Policy

Jokes About Blond Son Make Black-Haired Mother See Red

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I are the proud parents of a beautiful son, now nearly 3. As he began to grow and change, we were astonished that his hair color was totally different from ours. Although there are blonds further removed from our family line, my husband and I and everyone else on both sides have black hair.

I am fed up with people who constantly make jokes like, "It must have been the mailman," etc. Now, my husband is saying the same thing in the presence of other people, and I am burning! It's as though he is apologizing for the fact that our son is a blond. Or maybe he wants to get his cheap comment in before someone else does.

What can I say when these remarks are made? And what is our son going to think when he's old enough to understand that people are accusing his mother of adultery? I need a snappy comeback.

OUTRAGED

DEAR OUTRAGED: Forget the snappy comeback. If you try too hard to defend yourself, people may think you protest too much.

You can, and should, tell your husband that you are hurt, not amused, by his "jokes." But as far as the others are concerned, don't make an issue of it. When your son is old enough to "understand," he will realize that these comments are not meant to be taken seriously.

DEAR ABBY: I need your advice on a problem that has been bothering me for some time. I am 40 years old and am married to "Betty," a good woman who loves me very much. I loved her when I married her, but I fell out of love with her over the years and became very unhappy at home. I moved out two years ago and found a job 500 miles away. I have continued to send Betty money for her support. (There are no children.)

Now I have fallen in love with "Lori," a wonderful person with extremely high morals. We have never made love. Lori and I are talking marriage, and I must now decide between her and Betty.

My heart tells me to divorce Betty and marry Lori, but my conscience keeps interfering. Lori did not take me away from Betty. My love for Betty was dead when I left home. Meanwhile, Betty keeps calling and begging me to come back.

I've talked to my pastor, who says I must honor my marriage vows with absolutely no regard for love. What do you say?

-GUILTY CONSCIENCE

DEAR GUILTY: I say you are shopping around for advice hoping to find someone who will give you approval to divorce your wife and marry your new love. Your problem is an unwillingness to make a choice and take responsibility for your own actions—a hallmark of immaturity.

Grow up. And when you no longer feel the need to ask what to do, you will be a man, my son!

DEAR ABBY: A young man wrote that he was devastated because he had been losing his hair since age 17. How I wish I could look him in the eye and tell him that he is nuttier than a Christmas fruitcake!

The same thing happened to me. I looked back down my ancestral line and saw bald men like fence posts. Here and there could be found a post with moss growing on top (hair on an occasional head), but those with hair performed not one whit better as fence posts than the "baldies."

Abby, please tell that young, "intelligent," average-looking 22-year-old fellow to quit feeling sorry for himself. Instead, he should look in the mirror and keep telling himself that bald is beautiful. If he accepts himself as he is, others will accept him at his face value—not his skull value. Sign me ...

AGE 82, BALD AT 19

DEAR 82: Bravo for you, my friend. But unfortunately not all men have your inner strength and value system.

and 14. The three of us have been living on child support, welfare and an occasional part-time job when I can get one. Believe me, we barely make ends meet.

My 14-year-old daughter makes $40 a week baby-sitting, and we've had some heated arguments because I asked her for $5 a week toward her room and board. She's threatened everything from running away, to quitting her baby-sitting job, to doing nothing until she's old enough to live away from home, if I demand any of her wages.

I feel like a villain for asking for a lousy $5 a week. Was I out of line to ask? And should I quit asking?

HURTING

DEAR HURTING: You were not out of line to ask, but in view of your daughter's attitude, you'd be wise to quit asking. If she should bite the hand that feeds her, you may be stuck for rabies shots.

***

DEAR ABBY: A cousin of mine was married 10 months ago. It was her first marriage and his third. The bride was 24 and the groom (are you sitting down, Abby?) 81, but he could have passed for 65 or 70.

This cousin had a baby boy last week, and she and her husband are happy as a pair of teen-agers.

I've never heard of a man in his 80s fathering a child. I think he set a

PENNSYLVANIA DUTCHMAN

DEAR DUTCHMAN: Probably not. But if somebody out there can top this, I'll hear about it.

DEAR ABBY: A very good friend is planning her wedding and has asked me to be her maid of honor. She's planning a church wedding with all the trimmings, including walking down the aisle in a white wedding gown just like a pure and innocent bride, which she is not. She's presently living with her fiancé.

Most who know her are either laughing at her or criticizing her. This is her first marriage and his second. I told her I couldn't participate in a church wedding because I disapproved of her past conduct and also the kind of wedding she's having.

She is now not speaking to me. This bothers me because we have been best friends since childhood. What do I do now?

PERPLEXED

DEAR PERPLEXED: The fact that you are "bothered" indicates that you may regret your decision. If so, tell your friend.

Perhaps you may not know that a church wedding with all the trimmings is a first-time bride's privilege and is not reserved for virgins only.

It Had To Be Done

Of course there was criticism in salvaging Continental Illinois National Bank & Trust Co. There has been criticism in the past when government action was taken to save or protect a private business institution.

Saving Chrysler Corp., for instance, ran counter to the instincts of private enterprise advocates. That bailout philosophy also runs counter to any number of other government actions to safeguard smaller private sector fields of business.

One might add another whispered fear among observers: rescuing the Illinois-based bank just could be seen as a green light to other financial giants to plunge even deeper into highly speculative undertakings because they had "nothing to lose", Uncle Sam would rescue them. There were and are reasons for government to remain aloof.

In its own way, Continental Illinois posed a crisis element greater than any heretofore known. Many billions of dollars were involved and more than 2,000 smaller community institutions were endangered. The word "trust" in our banking industry would be forever tainted; and without trust there would be no banking.

In the end, averting a major disaster for many hundreds of communities and the threat to the nation's banking industry prevailed.

Terms adopted by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. in its rescue operation included (other than money) acceptance of a handpicked new management team believed capable of putting the institution back on course.

No taxpayers' money is involved. Where you bank you have probably seen signs proclaiming membership in the FDIC; such institutions contribute to the insurance program the FDIC represents.

What is happening today is producing some shockwaves; but those shockwaves would be infinitely greater if there had been no FDIC prepared to step in or a government unprepared to deal with major financial crises in case of dire need.

We hope nothing like it ever occurs again. In this instance something had to be done; but it is bitter medicine running contrary to long-held convictions.

Picking A Focal Point

Two earth-shattering things happened in recent weeks that affected every person in this country. One was that the Democratic National Convention selected a woman as its vice-presidential candidate, and the other was that Miss America of 1984 appeared on the nation's newsstands as nude in Penthouse magazine.

For those Americans who are far more interested in the fate of Miss America than they are in the Democratic ticket, the news that Vanessa Williams lost her crown split the country down the middle. Everywhere you went you found bitter arguments between those who believed Miss Williams was treated unfairly, as opposed to those who claimed abdication was the only honorable way out.

I was so shaken by the whole affair I sought out a bar on Monday night where Washington opinion-makers meet to discuss the latest work crises. Grown men were yelling at each other.

One again the right wing lined up against the liberals in voicing their moral indignation.

A conservative columnist said, "The pageant people had no choice but to force her to resign. Miss America is the nearest thing this country has to Princess Di, and by posing in the buff Vanessa tarnished this country's tiara."

"She was hoodwinked into posing for the pictures two years before she went for the title," a liberal columnist shouted. "I would be the last one to condone nudity in any magazine, but in this case as exception should have been made, particularly since Vanessa Williams, as Miss America, has always behaved like a queen."

Another conservative columnist piped up, "That's typical double-standard left-wing thinking. Your heart bleeds for everyone who shucks off all her clothes for Penthouse, but you people still will never forgive Nixon for Watergate."

I didn't want to be left out of the conversation. "I don't believe we should allow this to become an ideological question. We have to put the pictures in context. Those of us who respect the family and live by the Judeo-Christian ethic tradition do not buy Penthouse, and therefore will not be exposed to the photos. The only ones who will be affected by them are the people who actually purchase the magazine, and they comprise just a handful of dirty old men in this country."

The conservative columnist retorted, "What about all the kids who pick it up at the newsstand, look at the pictures and then put the magazine back? Don't you think it has an affect on them?"

"Possibly," I admitted, "but why throw out Miss America with the bathwater? There isn't a man in this bar who doesn't wish that Vanessa Williams had not posed for the pictures. But as Jesse Jackson has said many times, 'We must condemn the sin and not the sinner.'"

"Why bring Jesse Jackson into this?"

"For the same reason you brought Nixon into it. What has the country gained by forcing Miss Williams to abdicate? I would rather have an unclad Miss America than no Miss America at all."

"I'll drink to that," one of my liberal supporters said.

"I won't," a conservative columnist yelled. "She was punished so that generations of future Americans will never have to fear that the person who holds the second-highest position in this land will ever pose for a skin magazine again. What kind of message would we be sending to the Soviets if we allowed Miss America to wear her crown on the Bob Hope show, but showed her wearing nothing in Penthouse magazine?"

The bartender, trying to avoid a fistfight, said, "You know what I would have given her?"

We all asked what.

Mideast Peace Has Priority

WASHINGTON (AP) — Provided its lease is renewed in November, the Reagan administration intends to make a Middle East settlement one of its principal foreign policy objectives the second time around.

The U.S. national security adviser, Robert C. McFarlane, made that clear when he identified the Middle East, the Third World and arms control as 1985 priority concerns in a speech recently to a group of businessmen here.

Considering the commitment in the Democratic platform to resume the Camp David process "with urgency," undoubtedly Walter Mondale would also make a special effort to promote peace between Israel and the Arabs if he defeats Ronald Reagan.

Mondale played a leading role in the Carter administration's construction of a formula for the 1979 Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty and for dealing with the Palestinian problem. On both fronts, a lot remains to be done.

But the inconclusive election in Israel, and the absence of any detectable shift in the positions of King Hussein of Jordan and the Palestine Liberation Organization, could make it difficult for either Reagan or Mondale to reverse the downspin in U.S. influence.

Lurking behind a facade of impartiality at working levels of the State Department was hope for a Labor victory as the leverage the United States needs. Labor is considered more flexible than Likud on West Bank settlements and more inclined to trade territory for peace.

A conciliatory Israel presumably would inspire concessions by Hussein and PLO Chairman Yasser Arafat — at least that's the theory of leading Middle East experts here.

But the Israelis gave neither major party a majority in the Knesset. Barring a Labor-Likud coalition, small special-interest parties will have disproportionate influence in the way the country is governed and be in a position to complicate or even veto any new policy initiatives by Israel.

Reagan waited nearly 20 months before unveiling a "fresh start" toward peace. His September 1981 plan, which featured some form of Jordanian supervision over the Palestinians on the West Bank, was immediately rejected by Israel.

For several months, Hussein consulted with Arafat and flirted with the idea of having a joint delegation participate in U.S.-sponsored negotiations. But he decided against it, charging the United States with being too biased in Israel's favor to be a credible mediator.

Corporate Olympics

LOS ANGELES — Don't fret if you haven't cashed in on a buyer's market in Olympic tickets.

This 23rd Olympiad has always been of, by and for corporate America. Now that the sponsors have paid for the Games, they will enjoy them in a relatively regal fashion. Lesser sorts, please step aside.

Indeed, for the average American or foreign visitor, the overall cost and consternation of attending these Games will probably outweigh the easy availability of tickets. The sight of VIPs coming in style and comfort may leave some people with not so favorable memories of this salute to free enterprise.

During the two weeks of the Games, Los Angeles' more than 600,000 expected visitors will include thousands of individual Olympic backers and top brass from sponsoring and supplying companies. About 30 firms, ranging from Anheuser-Busch to Times-Mirror, dumped at least $4 million each into Los Angeles Olympic Organizing Committee (LAOOC) coffers. Another 700 individuals and companies (2,000 were sought originally) became partons for $25,000; 56 licensees gave the LAOOC a percentage of their revenues.

Most of these major donors will spend much more entertaining themselves and clients. Olympic sponsor Sports Illustrated, for example, is bringing in hundreds of advertisers and other guests every three days and shuttling them by bus between Olympic events and a cruise ship in nearby Long Beach. Fuji Film blew more than $200,000 on one party alone.

But their gifts have guaranteed sponsors and patrons certain unpriced privileges, like access to 30 percent of the tickets and preferential treatment at hotels and event sites. Highway cops are even supposed to make sure that VIP buses don't miss an opening gun — an usual use of taxpayer funds to ameliorate, selectively, Los Angeles' freeway traffic problem.

People who have bought the other 70 percent of Olympic tickets will have to deal with that problem. When they arrive for a competition, they may have to pay $20 or $100 to park.

Strength For Today

According to the traditional form of the oath taken when one is about to give evidence, he swears to tell "the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth."

To swear to tell the whole truth about anything is really an ambitious promise. Merely to know the whole truth about one's own desires, motives, and actions is not always possible.

Yet though the task in its completeness may be beyond our abilities in some areas, we should always attempt to tell the whole truth. A half-truth is often more misleading than no truth at all. How often we damage reputations with half-truths — we tell the bad but are silent about the good we know, and thereby create a false impression.

The very concept of truth is never relative. It means the whole truth as we know it even though subsequent events may prove that we do not know it all.

Waring Gave Much

To those with long memories, the death of Fred Waring must have been a shock. He only seemed immortal.

Waring was "pre-TV". His long-ago radio shows were the equivalent of television's Golden Era of drama and comedy ... revolutionary, too, in their way ... bearing the original imprint of voices that were not only blended but words enunciated in such a way the lyrics were wholly understandable. It was a Waring trademark; and teachers across the land clamored for his help in training choruses. He obliged.

Concert tours and television appearances were a part of his life.

At age 84 he was still holding workshops, and died last Sunday shortly after having shared his know-how with young people. Give thanks for him, not to him. The examples he set and lessons Waring taught might have taken seed. We hope so.

The Waring story began with "The Pennsylvanians" (a choral group organized while at the University of Pennsylvania) and he clung to the name of his alma mater. Fred branched out into orchestral arrangements of both old songs and contemporary; and his name became synonymous with "excellence" in his share of the music field. The Waring name will long be associated with pleasant memories.

Another Chance In Israel

WASHINGTON — Far from teeth-gnashing, the Israeli political stalemate gives Ronald Reagan's men as much cause for comfort as for complaint, including a long-awaited chance to demand basic reforms in Israel's chaotic economy. Leaving Mideast peace plans on the back burner where they've been barely simmering for almost two years does have political drawbacks. Now there is no chance whatever for the president to cash in on some miraculous peace plan for the West Bank. A Labor Party surge in Monday's election might have given him a real or cosmetic opening to be exploited for the Man-of-Peace image he covets for the Nov. 6 election.

But instead of always elusive Arab-Israeli peace, Reagan is not poised for an offer easier to deliver: a whole new measure of American assistance to help Israel solve its dreadful and worsening economic crisis. The new Israeli government, at least temporarily freed from the demands of pandering to Israeli voters, will have every reason to accept U.S. help, and the sooner the better, even with no-nonsense conditions.

In store is juicy new U.S. economic aid, but aid conditioned on Israeli acceptance of major economic reforms that will unquestionably hurt after the consumer spending binges and loose fiscal operations of the past few years. "We're not going to dictate," a Reagan top policymaker told us, "but we are going to lay down stiff conditions for our help."

That puts Uncle Sam in the role of Israel's special banker in a more far-reaching way than ever before. The insistence on basic reforms will give the U.S. influence over Israel's economy — if details can be worked out — similar to International Monetary Fund (IMF) rule-making over other ailing countries. With Israeli diplomacy on hold probably until new elections because of the lack of any clear consensus, distractions from fierce U.S.-Israeli-Arab tugging and hauling over West Bank and Lebanon peace should be minimal, allowing at least a foundation of economic reforms to be laid.

No one is happier over the prospect of poring over complex economic nostrums for Israel than that well-known economist, Secretary of State George Shultz. Shultz sady struck out again and again in his valiant but amateurish political efforts to find solutions for Israel's invasion of Lebanon and its long occupation of the Arab-populated West Bank.

But Shultz thinks he knows exactly what Israel's economy needs, now so battered under 400 percent inflation and a crumbling shekel that the Bank of Israel suspended trading in the U.S. dollar right after the election. Shultz and some of his longtime economist friends, including Herb Stein, have been mapping austerity plans for the post-election period in Israel for months.

North-South Economic Conference Opens

By GEORGE JAHN
Associated Press Writer
VIENNA, Austria (AP) — Rich nations should open their borders to goods from underdeveloped trading partners and help them reduce crippling foreign debts, U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez De Cuellar told delegates today at a major North-South economics conference.

While welcoming the economic upturn in developed nations, Perez de Cuellar cautioned that it might be of short duration and said events in the Third World "give no cause for satisfaction."

He called for "balance of payments finance, the alleviation of the debt burden and the immediate rollback of protectionist measures against developing countries" in the keynote address of the fourth conference organized by the U. N. Industrial Development Organization.

The 135-nation conference, which ends Aug. 18, is dedicated primarily to boosting industrialized growth in underdeveloped nations, through technology transfers, training programs and increased development aid. But the Third World's major concern is focused on its massive foreign debt which reached $800 billion in 1983, according to UNIDO statistics.

Unemployment and pressures for protectionist measures continued in developed countries, despite the economic upturn, said Perez de Cuellar.

In indirect criticism clearly aimed at the United States, he said "high interest rates and monetary instability" contributed to conditions which "raised doubts about the sustainability of the recovery."

With the exception of parts of Africa, the economic picture is brightening slightly for the Third World, he said.

"But the projected growth in 1984-85, except in parts of Asia, is not going to allow more than the most modest of improvement in individual living standards," he declared.

Austrian President Rudolf Kirchschlaeger, in a welcoming speech, criticized "shortsighted, restrictive and protectionist measures" in world economic relations, without naming specific countries.

gested that wide differences of approach separated them from the developing world.

In oblique criticism of regularly issued Third World calls for a new economic order, Ambassador Richard Williams, the chief U.S. delegate, said many industrialized countries prefer tackling specific ills and think little of sweeping declarations.

"We come with with some specific agenda items, dealing with labor training, with energy, with rural development that we want to offer some specifics on," said Williams.

"We have continued to take the view that UNIDO should focus on specifics, not generalities; results, not political declarations, that we shouldn't play for the grandstand but play for results. And we're not alone."

The world's developing nations, joined in the so-called Group of 77, appear to be bidding for broader conference initiatives.

"We have to evolve a well thought out strategy embodying a perspective that encompasses several decades rather than years," declared Shri V. P. Singh, India's minister of commerce and chairman of the Group of 77, in a pre-conference speech. "Policies and plans usually have short durations and are usually expressed only in financial terms."

He criticized the advantage "which the suppliers of technology have," declaring: "This inequitable situation must be remedied."

According to UNIDO figures, industrial production in the developing world has stagnated since 1980, after growing by 45 percent from 1973-1980.

Williamson said that Washington was aware of this development and other economic problems of poor nations.

"Industrial development for the Third World is a high priority for us," he said. "The overall picture, helping industrial development in the Third World, is important to the U.S. and this is a forum where this is going to be discussed."

Police Say Truck Stalled Before Crash

By MOIRA BAILEY
Associated Press Writer
COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — A man whose wife was killed last week when an Amtrak train slammed into their pickup told police he accidentally stalled the truck when he realized the train was coming, officials said.

Patricia Phillips, 35, died in the July 26 collision at a Goose Creek crossing that sliced off the truck roof and knocked the pickup into a utility pole about 150 feet away.

Her husband, Michael, 34, managed to get out of the truck before the collision, one of five fatal Amtrak accidents in a month. None of the passengers aboard the north-bound Silver Meteor was injured and the train did not derail.

According to Goose Creek Police Chief Richard Ruonala, as Phillips "came onto the track surface, his wife yelled his name."

"At that same moment he heard the whistle and looked to his left and saw the train," said Ruonala.

Phillips slammed on his brakes but didn't disengage the clutch and stalled the truck, Ruonala said.

"He then told his wife to get out. He jumped out on the driver's side and cleared the truck before the train struck it. His wife was unable to get out of the truck," the police chief said.

Phillips was charged with failure to yield right of way, Ruonala said.

"He does not recall whether or not he stopped at (the) stop sign prior to entering the grade crossing," said the police chief.

The only witness to the crash was a passenger in a vehicle that had just crossed the tracks and passed the truck, Ruonala said.

The woman, who was looking back at the tracks, saw the brake lights on Phillips' truck "just momentarily ... flash on and off," Ruonala said.

"We've completed the investigation. It is on our South Carolina accident report. We did not bring any criminal charges," he said.

The National Transportation Safety Board is investigating reports on the accident but didn't go to the scene, said Ed Butler of the NTSB in Atlanta.

"I don't believe it will warrant a full-scale investigation," Butler said today. He has requested copies of witness statements and reports from the investigating officer and will forward them to the NTSB's Washington office.

FAA Head Claims Airways Are Safe

WASHINGTON (AP) — The head of the Federal Aviation Administration said today the number of aircraft "near misses" is shrinking and insisted, despite the recent spate of such incidents, that the nation's airways are "unequivocally safe."

"We've had near misses ever since we've had two airplanes," declared FAA Administrator Donald Engen. "We've been managing these near misses."

Engen, speaking at the National Press Club, said he is confident the airways are "unequivocally safe ... and, indeed, becoming safer."

His remarks came after three incidents this week near Baltimore-Washington International Airport in which commercial jetliners and other aircraft came closer to each other than FAA minimum separation rules allow.

Engen said two of the incidents involved small private planes that were not under the guidance of FAA controllers and the third, which involved two Piedmont Airlines aircraft, was being investigated because of an apparent controller error.

But Engen insisted that the number of such incidents is just "getting more visibility" and that the actual frequency of aircraft flying so close as to pose a potential safety hazard has been declining for four years.

Martin Co. Markets Open

WILLIAMSTON — Opening sales on the Williamston tobacco market Wednesday averaged $153.94 a hundred pounds, officials reported today.

The two auction warehouses here sold 252,977 pounds of tobacco for a total of $389,425.

Sales at the Robersonville market's two warehouses began this morning.

Williamston's opening day average was less than the $156.30 average for the 11 markets in the Eastern Belt holding sales Wednesday.

The highest average on opening day was $165.93 per hundred pounds posted in Kinston, while the lowest was in Farmville, at $152.22 per hundred.

Baby Critical Following Ordeal Of Second Surgery

LONDON (AP) — Thirteen-day-old Hollie Roffey, the world's youngest heart transplant patient, was in critical condition today, but awake and holding up well under the strain of an operation to seal a perforated bowel, a hospital bulletin said.

"Hollie is awake," said the bulletin from London's National Heart Hospital. "The heart has stood up to the second operation. Surgically the operation to the bowel went well but naturally we are anxious about the after-effects of the operation."

"The baby is still critical," the hospital statement said, although her heart, transplanted from a 3-day-old Dutch infant who had died from brain damage, survived the Wednesday night operation on her intestine.

Hollie, who was born July 20 with the left side of her heart missing, was rushed into surgery Wednesday, two days after she had received the new heart.

Hospital staff said that after Monday's heart transplant she was "quite active" and that they were optimistic about her recovery. But on Wednesday surgeons operated on her for two hours to cut out a piece of bowel that had a hole in it and rejoin the two sections of intestine.

Keeping constant watch over Hollie, whose crib is a germ-free incubator, were staff of the National Heart Hospital's intensive care ward and a teddy bear, given to her by nurses.

Tom Cosgrove, chief administrator of the hospital, said the intestinal problem "was not at all related" to the heart transplant.

"It has arisen independently and is simply an unfortunate development," Cosgrove said.

On Wednesday night, Cosgrove reported that Hollie's condition was "extremely critical. She has just undergone another operation (the intestinal surgery) and for a very small child to undergo such surgery again is, of course, extremely difficult and extremely complex."

But Hollie's pulling through a second major operation so close after the first trauma gave doctors hope she would survive.

"We are very pleased by the fact that her new heart has managed to cope with the invasion of another surgical procedure," Cosgrove said Wednesday night. "It is, of course, still very, very early and we just hope that the surgery that has been carried out will have managed to sort out the problem that has arisen today."

Hollie's fight for life has pulled at the heartstrings of the nation.

N.C. Navy Man Dies After Cop's Rescue Attempt Fails

NORFOLK, Va. (AP) — The heroic efforts of a policeman were not enough to save two Navy men trapped in a burning automobile, although one witness said the officer went into the car a second time after an explosion blew him out of the vehicle.

The witness said Officer J.M. Stewart was hurled from the burning car Tuesday as he tried to rescue the men. Stewart returned to the car and finally got one of the men out.

"Then he just collapsed on the ground," said the witness, Donald Ray Wornstaff. "I've never seen anyone do anything like that before. I've got brothers-in-law on the fire department in Virginia Beach. I used to be a private detective, and I've seen a lot of things. But I've never in my life seen so much courage demonstrated."

State Trooper D.C. Williams identified the victims as the driver of the car, Brian Thomas Haslett, 22, of New Brighton, Pa., and a passenger, David Robert Gradeless, 23, of Kitty Hawk, N.C.

The accident occurred shortly after 11 p.m. when the car crossed a median strip and collided with the truck, which was traveling in the opposite direction.

Wornstaff said he was driving to Newport News and arrived at the scene "seconds after the accident."

"The car was starting to burn. Hot liquid was starting to pour down, and flames were billowing up," he said. No rescue personnel had arrived at the scene, but several motorists stopped.

He said he wasn't aware there was anyone in the car at first.

"Then I saw two figures. They weren't moving around. One appeared to be pinned on the driver's side, and the other was leaning over on him."

"Everybody was trying to get the doors open," he said. "But they were jammed shut. The flames were getting bigger."

About that time, Wornstaff said, two Norfolk police officers arrived on the scene.

"I shouted someone is still in the car. A policeman yelled and took off his duty belt and his gun and ran toward the car. He and two other people ran over and yanked and yanked on the car."

That policeman was identified as Stewart.

Stewart's partner, who wasn't identified, grabbed his fire extinguisher and tried to put out the fire. Wornstaff said, but "it was futile."

8-2 Answer to yesterday's puzzle.

CRYPTOQUIP 8-2

ICJDEPJH GEUU-GEUJ GJUUD
IX NIEG PJXG ICJDNIEDH.

Yesterday's Cryptoquip: WAS THE SHOE SHOP'S INTERIOR PANELED IN SANDALWOOD?

Today's Cryptoquip clue: U equals L.

The Cryptoquip is a simple substitution cipher in which each letter used stands for another. If you think that X equals O, it will equal O throughout the puzzle. Single letters, short words, and words using an apostrophe can give you clues to locating vowels. Solution is accomplished by trial and error.

Southern Bell Cuts Work Force

ATLANTA (AP) — Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Co., cutting at all levels of the company, has reduced its number of employees in Georgia by 32 percent during the past 18 months.

Some 4,238 employees were transferred to various American Telephone & Telegraph Co. operating units no longer connected with Southern Bell's services because of the AT&T breakup in January.

Another 1,845, however, have been cut from the staff, mostly through attrition or by employees choosing to leave the company, said company spokesman Richard Miles.

The staff cutbacks have been accomplished in part to cut costs, said Walter W. Sessoms, vice president for Southern Bell's Georgia operations.

Sessoms' remark came in testimony filed Monday with the state Public Service Commission as part of the company's rate case, in which it seeks a $112 million increase.

Former Agent Says Bad Judgement Used

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The FBI sting that resulted in automaker John De Lorean's arrest on cocaine charges was a "steamroller" that caused its creators to exercise bad judgment, an ex-government agent who participated in the operation testified.

In his second day on the stand in defense of De Lorean, ex-Drug Enforcement Administration agent Gerald V. Scotti said a mood of triumph swept the agency when it learned that the onetime General Motors executive had been arrested.

"I, like every other agent in the case, was on a real high that we had made a case that had so much notoriety," Scotti said Wednesday of the Oct. 19, 1982, arrest.

"Did you think De Lorean was guilty or innocent?" asked Assistant U.S. Attorney Robert Perry.

Scotti answered reluctantly, saying he believed only the jury could make that decision.

"My state of mind was I felt he was guilty myself. I thought we had made a good case," he said.

De Lorean, 59, is charged with conspiring to distribute $24 million worth of cocaine to save his failing car company in Northern Ireland. If convicted on all counts, he could face 67 years in prison.

Scotti, who resigned last year during an investigation of a leak of government information, said he believed DEA agents "cared" about establishing De Lorean's true intentions.

"But I think we were all blind to what we were doing," he added. "This thing was on a steamroller and we lost sight of where we were. This case was so important that a lot of us who would have used better judgment on another occasion used bad judgment."

Asked if he thought at the time of the arrest that De Lorean had negotiated a drug deal, Scotti said: "We all really hoped so and wanted to believe it. I'm not sure anybody knew what he had actually done."

Throughout the De Lorean sting, Scotti said, "We were all blind to what was going on.... We were all caught up in a zeal to press this case further."

The defense contends that De Lorean was targeted for a drug arrest by a government informant and that agents leaped at the chance to arrest a celebrity.

Perry asked if Scotti was among those "blinded."

"I was part of it," Scotti said. "I was caught up in it as much as anybody else. I wanted to see it happen."

Scotti was grilled for a full day Wednesday by Perry, who drew on Scotti's DEA personnel records to imply his judgment was impaired during the De Lorean investigation — not by ambition, but by the breakup of his marriage and subsequent financial problems.

Scotti denied this, and the defense demanded to see the personnel files.

The witness acknowledged he had family problems in 1982 and said he confided in his supervisor once that his work performance was suffering.

But when Perry suggested that the witness lied to the supervisor, William Waters, about his role in providing secret information to a defense attorney in another case, Scotti became incensed.

"I did not lie to Bill Waters," he said adamantly.

The agent, defending himself against a barrage of accusations from Perry, stood fast in his claim that the government's "star informant," James Timothy Hoffman, boasted of being able to "get De Lorean" four months before the automaker's arrest.

He said he suspected the informant's plan could be entrapment.

"It didn't sound good to me," Scotti said of Hoffman's first report that he was working to "deliver John De Lorean" to the DEA.

"If what he was saying was true, it would have sounded like he was setting him up," Scotti said. "It was sounding like entrapment."

Fatal Accident

A 32-year-old Greenville man was killed in a one-vehicle collision on N.C. 11-U.S. 13 about 4 1/2 miles north of Greenville early today, the N.C. Highway Patrol said.

Trooper S.F. Padgett said Johnny Russell Glisson of River Road Trailer Park was driving a pick-up truck north on N.C. 11-U.S. 13 when the vehicle ran off the highway in a curve, ran down an embankment and overturned, about 5:10 a.m.

Padgett said Glisson was partially thrown through the windshield of the vehicle and was trapped between the dash and the roof.

Damage to the truck was estimated at $2,500.

First Documented Mule Birth Claimed In Nebraska

CHAMPION, Neb. (AP) — A geneticist who examined blood and chromosome tests says a southwest Nebraska farm may have been the site of the first provable case of a mule giving birth. Mules, a cross between a male donkey and a female horse, are usually sterile. But Dr. Oliver Ryder of the Center for the Reproduction of Endangered Species at the San Diego Zoo said Tuesday that initial test results indicate that a female mule gave birth to a male mule colt on July 6 at the Bill and Oneta Silvester farm near here.

"Preliminary data indicate that the baby qualifies as an offspring of the alleged parents," Ryder said. "As far as I'm aware, it's the first documented case of mule fertility."

The tests were sent to Ryder from the farm.

The newborn Blue Moon — named after the expression "once in a blue moon" — apparently is the offspring of Krause, a female mule, and Chester, a male donkey.

Over the years there have been several claims of mules giving birth but none has ever been proved, Ryder said in a telephone interview.

Although test results in the Blue Moon case are preliminary, he said he was confident that they were valid.

Of the blood tests provided, Ryder said, "all the samples were consistent with the pedigree."

The results of chromosome tests indicate that Blue Moon and Krause are both mules. Both animals have the chromosome count of other mules, 63. A horse has 64 chromosomes and a donkey 62. Further, Ryder said, the shape of Blue Moon's chromosomes is that of a mule's.

Usually, male mules don't produce sperm and female mules don't go into heat or produce eggs.

Ryder speculated that Krause produced a viable egg carrying genetic information only from her horse mother, and it combined with sperm from the donkey father to produce Blue Moon.

"Everything was found to be consistent with a birth as it was reported," he said.

The Silvesters raise mules as a hobby and were startled when they found the newborn Blue Moon in a pasture with Krause one morning last month. Blue Moon looked just like Krause, Silvester said.

He reported the birth to Dr. Dave Johnsen, an Imperial veterinarian, and the tests were ordered.

Johnsen said the Silvesters apparently were not aware that Krause was pregnant and that the birth they reported to him was authentic.

"I really feel it's happened," he said. "I don't think they're trying to fool anyone. They're as surprised as anybody."

Johnsen examined Krause two days after Blue Moon was born and said there was no question that she had given birth.

The baby mule definitely looks like the mother mule, he added.

"It's nursing and doing fine," he said.

Ryder said the next step in the research in the case is to try to breed Krause to Chester again. The chromosome tests will also be repeated.

"We are just starting to think about what should happen next," he said. "We want to make full use of this opportunity."

The case could afford scientists a rare look at the way reproductive cells are made, he said.

Through the process of embryo transplants, two horses have been born to mules since June at Cornell University in Ithaca, N.Y. A third mule has been implanted with a donkey embryo, said Dr. Douglas Antezak, an associate professor of medicine at the College of Veterinary Medicine.

FORECAST FOR FRIDAY, AUGUST 3, 1984

YOUR DAILY Horoscope

from the Carroll Righter Institute

GENERAL TENDENCIES: After a good start in finding a better means by which to extend your interests beyond their present boundaries, you find that some delays and obstacles enter the picture.

ARIES (Mar. 21 to Apr. 19) A delightful person is about to come into your life, so be ready to accept him or her. Pay only the most pressing bills now.

TAURUS (Apr. 20 to May 20) Be sure to get recreations planned early since an associate could put a crimp in your plans later. Don't let this delay depress you.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21) Everything seems to go every smoothly in the morning so plan your work so that the afternoon will not bring interruptions.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to Jul. 21) Get in touch with a bigwig early who can make your life easier, but avoid costly amusements in the evening.

LEO (Jul. 22 to Aug. 21) Early handle that vital work ahead of you since it can bring you fine benefits but later avoid arguments at home.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22) Early plan amusements with your buddies for the evening, but be sure to drive carefully. Settle that matter quickly.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22) Some monetary problem can be settled best with the aid of a family tie, but then don't get into further debt.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21) During the morning you are able to handle problematical affairs very wisely, but after lunch it is better not to make decisions of any importance.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21) Follow ideas of a good advisor who can show you how to get ahead financially since later you have to handle private concerns.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20) Vital decisions should be made in the morning when your judgment is good since later an imposing pal could waste your time.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19) A wise person could show you how to improve your image with the public, but later don't take any risks with outsiders.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to Mar. 20) You can gain wishes with the aid of a good pal so listen to what he or she has to say. Important that you drive with utmost care.

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY ... he or she will have great investigative capabilities and get to the truth of any situation which could easily stump others and delve into the motivations as well. So slant the education along lines of research and there can be much success during this lifetime. Teach not to be so prejudiced.

Oil Could Hit Beaches

PORT ARTHUR, Texas (AP) — Stiff winds pushed a 25-mile-long oil slick from a grounded tanker to within six miles of the Texas coast today, and the Coast Guard predicted the wildlife-threatening goo would blacken beaches by Friday.

"It's now just a matter of waiting for it to arrive," said Coast Guard spokesman Keith Spangler. "We have clean-up crews, vacuum trucks and the like, standing by."

The oil, spilled from a British tanker that grounded 10 miles off the Louisiana coast Monday, could wash ashore anywhere along the 25-mile stretch between High Island and Galveston between tonight and Friday evening, Spangler said.

Lt. Joe Ocken, a spokesman for the Coast Guard office in Galveston, said he had lined up contractors ready with loads of straw and earth-moving equipment to begin mopping up beaches when the oil hits.

Spangler said the oil will be thick and gooey when it hits, tarring any bird or other wildlife it contacts.

Ramsey Seeking Clarification On The DWI Law

RALEIGH (AP) — Saying the state's drunken driving law is "under a cloud of uncertainty," House Speaker Liston Ramsey has asked the North Carolina Supreme Court for an advisory opinion on the law's constitutionality.

"The people throughout the state are bewildered as to just what is the law for driving drunk," Ramsey said in a letter dated Friday and sent to all seven justices. He added that the law's provisions "appear unevenly enforced because of varying rules by District and Superior Court judges."

The Safe Roads Act, enacted Oct. 1, requires mandatory jail sentences for repeat offenders, strict sentencing guidelines, immediate 10-day suspension of a driver's license for registering a 0.10 or more on a breath analysis and a waiver of the requirement that the technician administering a breath analysis testify in court.

The provisions regarding a breath analysis have been criticized by attorneys who say they are unconstitutional.

Ramsey and Chief Justice Joseph Branch could not be reached for comment Wednesday and other justices declined to comment on Ramsey's request for an opinion.

Requests for advisory opinions are "rare birds," said J. Gregory Wallace, clerk of the Supreme Court. The court usually rules on questions of law raised by appeals of cases decided in lower courts.

In 1982, Gov. Jim Hunt joined the lieutenant governor and house speaker in asking the court to rule on the separation of powers between the legislative and executive branches of state government.

Assistant Attorney General Isaac T. Avery III, who has handled the state's suit to consolidate and review constitutional challenges to the law, said Wednesday that he would seek permission to bypass the appeals court and go straight to the Supreme Court.

Last year about 85,000 people were charged with driving while impaired, and a similar number could go through the courts this year while the challenges remain unresolved, Avery said.

He said Ramsey's appeal might help his cause.

"We're glad he's interested," Avery said. "We need to speed up this process. To wait until another 85,000 people go through the system is not in the best interest of anybody."

Helms, Hunt Agree: Tobacco Companies Should Buy More

By MARY ANNE RHYNE
Associated Press Writer
U.S. Senate opponents Jesse Helms and Gov. Jim Hunt attended different tobacco market openings, but their plea to tobacco companies was the same: buy more flue-cured leaf.

"I told them I would see about helping them with a little (cigarette) labeling bill after I saw what they did with North Carolina tobacco," said Helms Wednesday in Greenville, where he attended opening sales on the Eastern Belt.

Hunt, returning to his native Wilson County for first-day auctions, said farmers have a right to expect tobacco companies to buy the crop.

"It's a good crop," the Democrat said, adding he would send telegrams to companies urging them to "get in and really bid for this tobacco."

Opening prices ranged from $1.30 to $1.94 a pound on the Eastern Belt and parts of the Middle Belt that opened Wednesday.

U.S. Agriculture Secretary John Block, joining Helms in Greenville, made a campaign-style statement for the GOP senator, saying "I'm not sure you fully appreciate having the chairman of the Senate Agriculture Committee to protect you" against tobacco foes.

"It's yours, it's North Carolina's. I think you ought to remember that," Block said.

State Agriculture Commissioner Jim Graham performed his tobacco-eating routine for Block and his wife.

"I love tobacco," Graham said, gnawing on a cured leaf.

Later Wednesday, the Governor's Office said a telegram had been sent to "heads of major tobacco purchasing companies."

In the telegram, Hunt said Flue-Cured Tobacco Stabilization Cooperative receipts during early sales "have been much larger than expected."

He added, "This will be a make-or-break year for our tobacco program. The program's future will be determined by the amount of success we have in reducing Stabilization stocks."

The Federal-State Market News Service said opening prices ranged from $130 a hundredweight to $194 a hundred on the Eastern Belt and Middle Belt "with quality offerings much better than opening day last season."

On opening day in 1983, Eastern Belt prices averaged $149.54 per hundred and 44.6 percent of the sales went under loan. First-day sales on the Middle Belt last year averaged $142.70 per hundred with 39.6 percent going to Stabilization.

The service said Wednesday "a relatively high percentage was being placed under loan or being purchased by the warehouses. By the end of the day, however, the picture could change sharply. Farmers were rejecting bids in several instances."

The service reported improved prices Wednesday on the South Carolina-Border North Carolina markets, where farmers were angry and bitter over opening prices Tuesday.

Gains on the Border Belt ranged from $3 to $7 a hundred pounds. The top average was $204 per hundred for a few sheets of tobacco, and the lowest plunged to $112 per hundred. On Tuesday, prices averaged $152.13 per hundred and 14.2 percent went under loan.

At the Greenville auction, John Cyrus, tobacco affairs chief for the state agriculture department, said the presence of Helms and Block may have influenced the companies.

"The companies jumped on the first line a lot quicker than they usually do," said Cyrus. "Of course, when you have the Secretary of Agriculture there and a U.S. senator who can maybe help you with a cigarette labeling bill, the companies might want to make a good showing."

Carolyn Blasts Jesse

ASHEVILLE (AP) — Carolyn Hunt, at the urging of Gov. Jim Hunt's aide Wayne McDevitt, blasted U.S. Sen. Jesse Helms for twisting her husband's record.

"All that money Helms spent trying to make my husband look weak and indecisive was wasted," said Mrs. Hunt, who was in Asheville Wednesday to thank workers in the "Dollars for Hunt" fund-raising campaign.

Mountain Is Getting Bolt-Glue Treatment

By TOM MINEHART
Associated Press Writer

WATERVILLE, N.C. (AP) — High in the Great Smoky Mountains near the Tennessee-North Carolina line, workmen are literally bolting and gluing a mountainside together so it will stop crumbling and sending sometimes-fatal boulders crashing down onto Interstate 40.

Traffic along the busy, bumpy highway linking Asheville and Knoxville, Tenn., stops for up to half an hour while workers blast and push off rocks that seem in imminent danger of falling.

Hundreds of junked cars, smashed flat and stacked three deep, stand as a wall between the road and falling rock, but boulders have taken huge, bite-like chunks out of shorter concrete barriers.

The $13 million project began in the spring of 1982 after a pile of rock 200 feet wide fell onto the road along the Pigeon River Gorge in Haywood County about a mile from the state line, blocking North Carolina's main access to the World's Fair in Knoxville. It should be finished by the end of the year, said Ron Watson, the North Carolina Department of Transportation's resident engineer for the project.

"There have been a couple of fatalities directly attributed to falling rock," he said. "I'm sure there were many others where a rock was in the road and caused a wreck. We had quite a large number of wrecks down there. Almost every week, there was a big truck wreck."

Where a fracture in the mountain appears in danger of widening under water pressure from heavy rain or an earth tremor and sending tons of rock falling onto the road, workers are bolting the rock together with steel bolts an inch wide and as long as 90 feet.

"We drill through the questionable rock into good solid rock beneath," Watson said. "We put epoxy glue in the bottom, stick the bolt in, spin it to mix the glue and it sets up in three or four minutes."

Grout poured into the hole prevents corrosion. Hydraulic jacks then apply 70,000 pounds of pressure to each bolt and a nut is put on the end.

"We've probably put in 20,000 feet of bolts already," said Watson. "We're probably halfway."

"It's a very common practice," said Dr. Duncan Heron, a professor of geology at Duke University in Durham. "It ought to work. We'll see."

Watson said if the highway's route through the mountains had been cut correctly in the first place, the problems might not be so severe.

"Twenty years ago, when the road was built, we did not presplit rock cuts," said Watson. "It was not a practice at that time ... it was just plain blasting."

Presplitting, which involves drilling closely spaced holes along the desired crack in the rock, lessens the shock of the blast to the rock that remains and reduces crumbling within the rest of the mountain, he said.

"If that road were built today with more modern technology, it wouldn't be as dangerous," he said. "I don't know how much investigation of the geological formation of the mountain was done then. Now we do an in-depth geological review" for such projects.

Motorists traveling the scenic highway along the Pigeon River can see four tall, red cranes along the cliffs beside the westbound lane. Workmen on one crane are using devices shaped like bulldozer tracks to scrape loose rocks off the mountainside. Sometimes a small backhoe is lifted up to the cliff to push other rocks off. The other three cranes hold drilling platforms.

The project's first phase involved building two more eastbound lanes closer to the river to move the traffic away from the cut. Heavy wire mesh was then placed over some rock that couldn't be bolted or scraped off. One of the last phases will be to build a wall between the westbound lane and the rock face to catch falling debris. With a chain link fence at the top, it will be 8 feet tall in the most dangerous areas, Watson said.

Three Tennessee contractors are working on the project — one firm on the initial project along the four miles just east of the border and two firms on six "major problem" cuts in the area, he said. They can work only about half the time because traffic can only be held up for 15 minutes at a time.

CWP Plaintiffs Will Receive Papers On Government Probe

GREENSBORO (AP) — Documents containing information about the government's probe of Communist Workers Party members and the 1979 Klan-Nazi shootings will be turned over to the plaintiffs in a civil rights suit, attorneys say.

Lawyers for the U.S. Justice Department and the city of Greensboro said Wednesday they would turn over by Aug. 31 most of the government papers sought by the suit's 16 plaintiffs.

The plaintiffs contend the documents will show the FBI and other government agencies knew beforehand that Klansmen and Nazi were prepared to attack anti-klan demonstrators on Nov. 3, 1979.

But U.S. District Judge Robert Merhige Jr. objected to motions by the plaintiffs that might further delay the 4-year-old lawsuit.

The $48 million lawsuit filed in 1980 charges that Klansmen, Nazis and government officials conspired to violate the civil rights of five CWP members shot to death during the Nov. 3 anti-Klan rally in Greensboro.

The plaintiffs, including survivors of the five slain communists and other party members wounded during the rally, are being represented by the Greensboro Civil Rights Fund.

In both state and federal trials, Klansmen and Nazis have been acquitted of murder and civil rights charges.

The jury trial of the civil suit is scheduled for Oct. 8.

"That trial date is not being moved unless the good Lord takes this federal judge's life," Merhige advised attorneys. "This case has been sitting here for four years."

"Don't spoil the mood," Merhige told Lewis Pitts, the plaintiff's lawyer, when Pitts asked for the continuance. "You and I are going to go away buddies today. That's all we are going to hear about it."

The discovery period, used by attorneys to deposition witnesses and examine information relevant to their case, is scheduled to end Sept. 3, three days after the government documents will be made available.

Pitts argued that it would be impossible to digest the government material and use it to go after more information before the discovery period is over.

Attorneys say the material amounts to many thousand pages, including a 12,000-page FBI report on the incident.

Government officials named as defendants include agents of the U.S. Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, the FBI, the U.S. Justice Department, FBI agents, Greensboro police, the State Bureau of Investigation and Michael Schlosser, former Guilford County district attorney.

Daniel Sheehan, another lawyer for the plaintiffs, said in an interview that it was "totally unreasonable" for the court to impose such stringent time restrictions, which he said will make it impossible for attorneys to prepare their case.

Sheehan said the next discovery hearing may be Sept. 1, when he probably will ask for an extension of the discovery period.

Joe Sher, the lawyer for the U.S. Justice Department, and Charles Nichols, the lawyer for the city of Greensboro, had no comment on Wednesday's hearing.

"Chance and Leathers Family Reunion"

The family picnic will take place at 2:00 p.m. at the Greenville Middle School on Arlington Blvd. Saturday, August 4.
On Sunday, August 5, a program for the family will be held at the Holiday Inn on Memorial Drive at 1:00 p.m.
Family's motto: A Strong Family Is The Foundation For A Strong Nation
Family's colors: Blue and White
Music for the family will be provided by Mrs. Myriam Harris and Mrs. Deborah Leathers.

This year's guest speaker will be coming from Tarboro, North Carolina, Mr. Curtis L. Perry.

Mr. Perry is president of the Lawrence Development Corporation; deacon at Free Union Baptist Church; a master Mason of Unity Lodge 64; past president of Edgecombe County Mental Health Association; past president of Coker Wimberly School P.T.A.

Perry is an 18 year veteran educator in Tarboro City Schools. He taught Sociology and U.S. History for 14 years and for the past 4 years he has served as an administrator. He has also worked for Edgecombe Technical College where he taught "Civil and Criminal Law".

Perry graduated from Fayetteville State University with a B.S. in Social Studies. He was awarded the Master Degree in Educational Administration from ECU in 1982.

Those family members and friends who still might be interested in attending, please contact Jerome Chance, the family's coordinator, at the lobby area of the Holiday Inn on August 2 by 5:00 p.m.

Attorney Says 'Hit Man' To Finger Governor's Chum

HONOLULU (AP) — A reputed organized crime "hit man" has pleaded guilty to killing four people, including a state senator, and an attorney says he has agreed to implicate one of Gov. George R. Ariyoshi's closest friends and supporters.

David Schutter, attorney for Ariyoshi's backer Larry Meheu, said he expects Meheu to be named in a criminal indictment within two weeks based on the testimony of Ronald Ching.

Ching appeared in state Circuit Court on Tuesday and pleaded guilty to killing state Sen. Larry Kuriyama; Charles Marsland III, 19-year-old son of Honolulu prosecuting attorney Charles F. Marsland Jr.; ex-convict Arthur K. Baker; and Robert Fukumoto, who prosecutors said was an organized crime figure.

In a statement issued after Ching's plea, Marsland called the case "potentially the most significant inroad into organized crime in the history of our state."

"He's a hit man, he's organized crime, and he was paid to make his hits," Marsland said.

Schutter charged at a news conference that Ching agreed to plead guilty and to implicate Meheu in the killings in return for a maximum 20-year sentence, and alleged that Marsland and his staff had been conducting a "political vendetta" against Meheu and Ariyoshi.

The plea agreement was sealed by the court.

Meheu appeared at Monday's news conference with Schutter and Cyrl Kahale, an associate of Meheu who was recently exonerated of murder and kidnapping charges.

Meheu, who owns a ranch on the island of Hawaii and operates the state's largest security guard firm, said he thinks he is being targeted by prosecutors because of his pending libel suit against Rick Reed, Marsland's spokesman and executive assistant.

Before he joined the prosecutor's office, Reed published a small newspaper on the island of Maui. In an article in 1977, Reed alleged that Meheu was the "godfather" of Hawaii's organized crime.

While he declined comment on Ching's dealing with the prosecutor's office, Reed said Schutter's comments about a vendetta "reek of illogic, born of fear."

Schutter "obviously believes the best defense is a good offense," Reed said.

Ching, 36, is serving a 21-year federal prison term after pleading guilty in 1981 to firearms and narcotics violations. He was returned to Honolulu after being indicted in June on a charge of kidnapping and murder in Baker's 1978 disappearance.

Baker, who government attorneys say was an informant in a federal drug investigation, was abducted from a Honolulu bar where he was working. Fukumoto also was an informant for Marsland's office.

Also indicted was Kahale, a former bodyguard for entertainer Don Ho, and a longtime associate of Meheu. Last week, Marsland's office announced that charges against Kahale had been dropped after new evidence contradicted earlier eyewitness testimony to the Oahu grand jury.

As part of his news conference, Schutter announced that Kahale has filed a $35 million suit for false arrest against Marsland's office.

Kahale was held 12 days in jail in lieu of $2 million bail, but was released when bail was reduced after the prosecutor's office could not justify the high figure in court.

Schutter charged that Kahale was indicted "in some desperate hope that it would result in some kind of false testimony against Larry (Meheu)."

He claimed Marsland's office has been trying to prove Meheu was involved in illegal campaign contributions to Ariyoshi's 1982 re-election campaign.

After a nearly year-long investigation by Marsland's office, a grand jury found no evidence of felony offenses related to the campaign, but referred several possible misdemeanor violations to the state Campaign Spending Commission, which enforces campaign spending laws.

The commission announced last week it found "probable cause" that petty misdemeanors had been committed in the failure by Meheu to report certain travel expenses related to Ariyoshi's campaign.

Meheu's Hawaii Protective Association holds the security contract at all the state's airports. He served two four-year terms as a member of the state Board of Land and Natural Resources as an appointee of Ariyoshi.

Legislation Would Increase Benefits For Stamp Recipients

By MARGARET SCHERF
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — The average food stamp recipient would receive an additional 63 cents per month in benefits under legislation passed by the House.

Approved 364-39 on Wednesday, the bill would slightly raise benefits for all recipients, permit the homeless to receive them, and increase the assets recipients are allowed to have.

The Reagan administration strongly opposes the legislation, which supporters said implements many of the recommendations made by the President's Task Force on Food Assistance.

Budget Director David A.

Stockman said he would recommend that President Reagan veto the bill. Stockman said it repeals important reforms achieved in 1981 budget legislation, expands food stamp spending by $1.1 billion over the next three years, and "directs benefit increases to the highest-income program beneficiaries."

Rep. Kika de la Garza, D-Texas, chairman of the House Agriculture Committee, said, "I wish we did not need this bill. But we do need it, because we still have needy people in many parts of the country ... people who have been bypassed by economic recovery."

The Senate has not acted on any similar legislation.

Food stamp benefits were reduced in previous budget legislation, which based them on 99 percent of the Agriculture Department's so-called thrifty food plan, which is the cost of a nutritionally adequate low-cost diet.

The bill increases food stamp benefits for all recipients by basing maximum benefits in 1985 on 100 percent of the thrifty food plan, adding 63 cents to the average recipient's monthly benefits.

The measure permits homeless people who meet other eligibility standards to receive food stamps. Current law requires food stamp beneficiaries to have a fixed household address. The bill also makes recipients of Aid to Families with Dependent Children and Supplemental Security Income automatically eligible for food stamps.

Another provision would raise the assets limitation for determining food stamp eligibility from $3,000 to $3,500 for households with two or more elderly persons, and from $1,500 to $2,250 for all other households. The assets limitation excludes the value of a residence, a portion of the value of an automobile, business assets and household belongings.

It would retain for fiscal 1985 the existing $4,500 limit on the value of an automobile that may be excluded from a recipient's assets in determining food stamp eligibility. But it would allow the limit to increase at the rate of inflation in subsequent years to a maximum level of $5,500.

Current law provides certain allowances to employed food stamp recipients to compensate for work-related expenses, allowing them to exclude a portion of their earned income in determining food stamp benefits. The bill increases this allowance, known as the earned income deduction, from 18 percent to 20 percent of a worker's earnings.

Food stamp recipients facing high child care costs or spending more than 50 percent of their net income on housing and utility costs receive an allowance for these costs. The bill raises the ceiling on this allowance, permitting households to deduct up to $155 per month from their income for purposes of determining food stamp benefits, instead of the current $125.

Under the legislation, states would be required to implement job search programs for food stamp recipients. The bill also would stiffen penalties against states with excess food stamp error rates.

Evidence Supports New Sub-Atomic Particle

STANFORD, Calif. (AP) — A mysterious sub-atomic particle dubbed Zeta is unlike all the other particles and forces which physicists believe make up the basic building blocks of matter, according to an international team of 78 scientists.

Until the discovery, announced Wednesday at a Stanford University symposium, scientists thought they had documented or knew of all sub-atomic particles, which come from the nucleus of the atom.

The Zeta particle was discovered in Germany, where scientists were using a Stanford University-designed device called a crystal ball detector.

The detector, seven feet in diameter, is composed of 672 separate crystals stacked into a sphere and records particles as light, scientists said.

The collaboration of 78 international scientists was led by professors Elliot Bloom of the Stanford Linear Accelerator Center and Hans Bienlein of a research facility in Hamburg, Germany.

The particle's "neutral charge, long lifetime and large mass make it unlikely to be made from the known quark building blocks in the usual fashion," the scientists said.

Physicists believe matter consists of particles and forces, the bricks and mortar of nature. According to current theory, the bricks are quarks and leptons. Quarks make up protons and neutrons and leptons include the electrons.

Current theory argues that all atomic particles with substantial mass are made up of combinations of two or three quarks, which always exist in pairs or triplets.

Quarks fall into six categories. The most massive, called the top quark, was discovered in June at CERN, the European Laboratory for Particle Physics near Geneva, Switzerland.

The scientists said Zeta is not a lepton and probably isn't made up of quarks because it has too large a mass, lives for a relatively long time and has no electric charge.

"It has absolutely no practical value at all," said Joel Shurkin, a science writer for Stanford University. "It is pure research. It just means that it helps you to understand nature."

"This raises a lot more questions — which scientists love," he added. "They're having a very good time."

The Zeta particle does not fit "anybody's definition," Shurkin said, adding that "they don't even know what to call it."

Presentation of the results at Stanford was made at the 12th annual summer institute of the Linear Accelerator Center by Bogdan Niczyporuk of the Cracow Institute of Poland, a visiting scholar and one of the experimenters.

In their statement, the scientists said: "The new particle was discovered in the decay products of the Upsilon meson, a tightly bound state of b-quarks formed at 9.5 billion electric volts in electron-positron collisions."

Guerrilla Attacks

LIMA, Peru (AP) — Police say Maoist guerrillas killed 29 local officials and other residents in attacks on three isolated Andean villages where peasants recently formed anti-rebel units.

Three columns of guerrillas of the Shining Path movement entered the villages of Querobamba, Morcolla and Kocho in Lucanas province, police said Wednesday. They reportedly killed justices of the peace, mayors, council members and other residents in the attacks Tuesday.

Study Outlines Costs Of Checking Population Growth

By MORRIS W. ROSENBERG
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — The world's population, which is now expected to top 6 billion in 15 years, could be slowed with national commitments and sharply increased funding for family planning, according to a study released Wednesday by the Population Institute.

Ninety-two percent of the growth is expected to occur in the world's poorest countries, said Werner Fornos, president of the institute, a private, non-profit organization which conducted the study titled Project 1990.

The study surveyed population growth problems and programs in 12 developing countries which now account for half the world's population growth. Currently the global population is estimated at 4.7 billion.

India's population, even with its extensive family planning programs, is now growing at the rate of 2 million per month. Even if India's fertility level remains at its present rate, the study said, its population would grow from 746 million now to 1.053 billion by the year 2000, the study said.

Kenya's growth rate of 3.8 percent is among the highest in the world and would raise its population from the current 19.5 million to 50 million within 25 years.

Also covered in the study were Bangladesh, Brazil, Egypt, Indonesia, Mexico, Nigeria, Pakistan, Thailand, Turkey and Zaire.

Projections prepared for the study indicate that if developing countries reach their national fertility goals, the world's population at the end of this century may be under 5.7 billion and could peak at under 7 billion in the middle of the next century.

Even assuming significant fertility declines, the combined population of the 12 countries will nearly double from 1.4 billion in 1980 to 2.7 billion in the year 2030, according to the institute's projections.

The study estimated that $22.5 billion would be needed during the next 15 years to enable the 12 countries to reach their current lower-fertility goals by expanding availability and use of family planning. The cost for 1985 alone would reach $850 million.

Funding for family planning is now provided by national governments, private organizations, individuals who can afford to pay for services, and international donors.

The major industrial nations are now contributing $520 million annually to such programs, including $240 million from the United States, the largest single contributor, Fornos said.

He emphasized that outside efforts and resources cannot solve any country's population problem. "National governments must have the political will and couples must have the desire" to control birth rates, he said.

said. Recent surveys in some 50 developing countries found that "one third of the respondents had not wanted their last child, one half did not want a future birth, and half of those who did want a future birth preferred to wait," Fornos wrote in a preface to the study. The surveys found that only about 40 percent of the persons interviewed had access to modern contraceptives.

One-third of the couples in the 12 countries now use family planning methods, but the study found that usage varied widely from less than 10 percent in Nigeria, Pakistan and Zaire to 60 percent or more in Brazil, Indonesia and Thailand.

4 WAYS TO SAY "CHARGE IT"

"Reach For The Good Life"

Playboy Hutch Set To Become Student Dorm

By SHARON COHEN
Associated Press Writer
CHICAGO (AP) — The Playboy mansion, where Hugh Hefner once scampered about with scantily clad bunnies, will soon have new tenants whose interest in nudes is more academic — students attending the Art Institute of Chicago.

Playboy officials announced Wednesday that they will turn over the 72-room mansion, which has an estimated value of $3 million, to the School of The Art Institute for use as a coed dormitory. The mansion will eventually be donated to the school.

The one-time bunny hutch on Chicago's posh Gold Coast will be named "Hefner Hall," after Playboy magazine's founder. Hefner lived and worked in the mansion from 1959 to 1971, when he moved to California.

The Victorian-style mansion, with bronze chandeliers and a massive Italian marble fireplace, will serve as the first student residence for the Art Institute.

The mansion — which Hefner hasn't visited since 1978 — has a game room, steam room, bowling alley, and indoor pool complete with waterfall and underwater bar whose walls are adorned with nude photos of Playboy's playmates.

Many of those playmates joined in bunny bashes and celebrity soirees that were commonplace at the mansion during its heyday in the 1960s.

But Neil Hoffman, Art Institute president, said the school plans to run the dormitory in standard student-housing fashion. "This particular dormitory will be run with rules and regulations," he said.

About 50 of the school's 1,500 students will live in the mansion — two to a room. Room costs will be about $2,500 a year, Hoffman said. Lectures from visiting artists also will be held in larger rooms.

Hoffman said all the details have not yet been worked out, such as whether it will be too expensive to keep the pool open.

Playboy will lease the mansion to the Art Institute for a nominal $10 a year for five years.

"It is our intention and their hope it will become a permanent gift," said Christie Hefner, Hefner's daughter and president of Playboy Enterprises Inc.

Non-Disclosure Issue On Income Different For Ferraro, Hansen

By CHRISTOPHER CONNELL
Associated Press Writer
An AP News Analysis

WASHINGTON (AP) — Moments before the House reprimanded him for faulty financial disclosures, Rep. George Hansen told his colleagues their next target could be the Democratic nominee for vice president, Geraldine Ferraro.

That charge notwithstanding, there are significant differences between what the Idaho Republican and the congresswoman from Queens, N.Y., did not disclose about their spouses' finances.

Hansen got in trouble in part because he disclosed nothing about his wife's assets and liabilities, including major bank loans and silver transactions linked to Hansen's own political fortunes. He also failed to report a $135,000 loan of his own.

Ms. Ferraro to date has disclosed nothing about the assets and liabilities of her husband, John A. Zaccaro, a wealthy New York real estate developer and manager.

But Mrs. Ferraro specifically claimed an exemption under the Ethics in Government Act that would allow her not to disclose her spouse's holdings.

Hansen, an anti-establishment conservative, claimed no such exemption. He had been in trouble in the past for flouting campaign finance laws, and his reprimand Tuesday came as he was still fighting a criminal conviction and sentence of up to 15 months in prison and a $40,000 fine for violating the disclosure law.

He argued in vain that he should have been given a second chance to amend his disclosure statements. He claimed Attorney General William French Smith was given a break after reporting a controversial $50,000 severance payment from a steel firm in 1981. He said White House Counselor Edwin Meese III was recently given an extension on his disclosure statement to include a $15,000 interest-free loan made to his wife.

"If you do something like this to George Hansen today, are you going to call her (Ferraro) in tomorrow?" asked Hansen, who claimed 253 House members "have enough aberrations in their forms" to wind up in trouble from over-zealous prosecutors.

Ms. Ferraro is required by law to file a disclosure statement with the Federal Election Commission within 30 days of her nomination.

She issued a statement July 24 promising to go beyond the law's requirements by disclosing her own and her husband's tax returns as well as their assets.

She had declined to discuss her finances until then, but said, "My financial disclosure forms for 1979-1984 complied with what is required of members of Congress who have spouses with separate financial holdings."

Zaccaro's assets will be revealed for the first time, she said, "because my husband and I believe that it is in the public interest to do so and because the office of vice president is one of high public trust. My husband and I agree that any exemption from disclosure for him which might otherwise be available is outweighed by my nomination and its responsibility."

Her running mate, Walter F. Mondale, has already made public his tax returns and other detailed financial information.

The congressional disclosure statements she has filed each May for the past five years have raised some eyebrows because although she disclosed nothing about her husband's assets, she identified herself as secretary-treasurer of his firm, P. Zaccaro Co., Inc., and owner of one share of stock in it valued between $5,001 and $15,000.

To get the exemption from disclosing a spouse's income that she claimed, a member must meet three strict tests:

- The member must have no "detailed or specific knowledge" about the spouse's holdings.
- The member must have had nothing to do with the development of the spouse's assets. The firm was founded by Zaccaro's father in 1935.
- The member must not, benefit from the spouse's income and holdings.

On the latter point, the House ethics committee instructs members that this test of independence cannot be met if the member stands to inherit the spouse's holdings, or if they are used to pay for family vacations, children's education or operating the household.

Don Foley, a spokesman for the Mondale-Ferraro campaign, said Tuesday that Ms. Ferraro had no comment on Hansen's charges.

Hansen is the first and only government official ever convicted under the 1978 ethics act. Hansen, who nearly went to jail in 1975 after pleading guilty to two misdemeanor financial violations, also said in his defense Tuesday that his lawyers had told him there was nothing wrong with his disclosure statements.

Report Indicates Army Not Ready To Meet Chemical Weapons Attack

By WARREN E. LEARY
AP Science Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — American troops lack the proper sensing equipment to tell them if they are under attack by many of the chemical and biological weapons that could be used on today's battlefields, says a National Academy of Sciences study.

In a report for the U.S. Army, released Wednesday, a committee said the United States not only lacks proper sensors to adequately warn its troops about known chemical and biological weapons, but better equipment under development will not be ready until the next decade.

Sensing equipment in advanced development could alleviate some of the deficiencies of current technology, but it "is not planned to become operational until 1990 at the earliest," said the report.

The committee of the academy's National Research Council said current systems for detecting chemical weapons, such as nerve gas and blister agents, are too slow, require too much maintenance and do not detect all known weapons.

Worse still, it continued, no sensor in use or under development can detect possible biological agents, such as bacteria, fungi or biologically derived toxins.

"As a result, not only will the United States lack sufficient chemical and biological sensing equipment should war break out within this decade," it continued, "but also equipment becoming operational in the 1990's will have been designed to respond to a then ancient threat."

Even with its shortcomings, U.S. equipment to detect, identify and monitor chemical and biological agents "appears superior" to that of the Soviet Union and Warsaw Pact forces, the report said.

Although both major powers are parties to the Geneva Chemical Warfare Protocol of 1925, which prohibits use of such weapons, each nation maintains stockpiles of them for defense.

However, the Soviet Union appears to have placed great emphasis on these types of forces and an armed conflict could expose U.S. troops to many of these agents, the report indicated.

The Soviets maintain a well-trained chemical force of up to 100,000 men and an estimated 35 percent of all their conventional munitions contain chemicals or smoke, it continued.

The report recommended that the Army speed work on sensor systems already in development so that they could be available "well before 1990." It also suggested that efforts to detect and identify biological agents be accelerated.

The committee also suggested that U.S. forces develop a "real-time" network of sensors that provide immediate information on both the presence, nature and concentration of all toxic agents.

A system of varied devices is needed to detect use of these agents over a wide area as well as near individual soldiers, and speed is crucial if troops are to take defensive measures, such as donning respirators and protective clothing, it said.

The report noted that spending on chemical and biological agent detection has grown in recent years, from $12 million in 1979 to almost $35 million in 1983.

Economic Victory

ROME (AP) - Socialist Premier Bettino Craxi's coalition easily won a vote of confidence on the government's economic policies.

The Chamber of Deputies, the lower house of Parliament, passed the measure Wednesday by a vote of 336 to 228.

It was faulty legal advice that allowed Ms. Ferraro and her husband to escape with a slap on the wrist from the FEC in 1979 after the election agency found that Zaccaro had illegally loaned $110,000 to his wife for her first campaign to Congress in 1978. The law allows a candidate to spend unlimited amounts of personal funds, but a spouse can lend or give only $1,000. Her husband and the campaign committee were fined a total of $750.

The FEC's general counsel stated in an Oct. 5, 1979, memorandum that "the violations were serious in nature," but the agency agreed "to accept the relatively small civil penalties in this case based on the mitigating factors involved."

Zaccaro and his wife's campaign got the incorrect advice from a lawyer who formerly worked for the FEC.

Bad Tidings

On this day in 1939, Albert Einstein wrote a letter which was to change history. A refugee from Nazi Germany at the time, he wrote to President Roosevelt warning him of a colossal new weapon that he feared the Germans might develop. He explained, "A single bomb of this type ... exploded in a port, might very well destroy the whole port, together with some of the surrounding territory." Six years later the United States exploded the atomic bomb over Hiroshima.

NEW YORK (AP) — Stock prices soared in early trading today, extending a week-old rally.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials vaulted 12.36 points to 1,146.97 in the first half hour.

Gainers outpaced losers by about 4-1 among New York Stock Exchange-listed issues.

On Wednesday, the Dow Jones industrials shot up 19.33 points to 1,134.61, its best performance since June 18.

And bond prices finished slightly higher Wednesday despite the Treasury Department's announcement of plans to auction $16.75 billion in new bonds and notes next week.

Stocks and bonds appeared boosted by government reports of a slowing in some segments of the economy.

The Commerce Department said orders to U.S. factories fell 1.4 percent in June, and that spending for new construction slipped 0.2 percent last month.

The nation's retailers are reporting July sales today, strong ones. Kmart said its sales were up 8.2 percent from a year ago. Montgomery Ward reported a 5.9 percent rise and R.H. Macy said sales jumped 10.3 percent.

In Brussels, Belgium, the European Common Market today announced a compromise settlement of its four-year-old antitrust case against U.S.-based International Business Machines Corp.

The European trading bloc's complaint against the world's largest computer maker centered on its contention that IBM was abusing its dominant position in the European computer market. IBM denied the charge.

However, IBM has agreed to change its business practices in the Common Market, said Frans Andriessen of the Common Market's administrators commission.

In return, he said, the commission agreed to suspend legal proceedings brought against IBM for infringements of Common Market competition law.

With more than 1,300 stocks rising in price Wednesday, advances outpaced declines by more than 4-1 on the NYSE.

Big Board volume surged to 127.52 million shares from 86.91 million Tuesday. It marked the 100th time that NYSE volume has topped the 100-million share level, and all of those active sessions have occurred within the past two years.

The NYSE's composite index of all its listed common stock rose 1.85 to 88.58. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was up 3.48 at 192.15.

Plane ... Anne ...

Tehran Radio reported the French pilot of the Boeing 737, Jean Nicol, had told Iranian officials by radio that the Arabic-speaking hijackers had set explosives throughout "most parts of the aircraft" and were "ready to blow it up."

The radio, in a broadcast monitored in London, said the hijackers took one passenger outside the aircraft and indicated they would execute him. The radio said the hijackers relented and returned the hostage to the plane after Iranian officials agreed to read their demands over the radio.

The Islamic Republic News Agency quoted a French Embassy official in Tehran as saying "it was not possible" for the government to free the prisoners on short notice.

The Iranian news agency said the French charge d'affaires in Tehran, Jean Perrin, was summoned to the Iranian Foreign Ministry and told of the hijackers' demands. With the reported French rejection of the demands, Iran "will not accept any responsibility...if any sad events occur," IRNA said.

Tehran radio, monitored in London, broadcast a statement from the hijackers that was signed "The Islamic Organization for the Liberation of Jerusalem."

It said: "The French government is bent on reviving past colonialist methods" and is responsible for "a great many crimes throughout the world" and in France itself.

The statement said the hijackers "have decided to demonstrate our mettle to this criminal regime" and by so doing, bring its message to "the meek of the world and world Moslems." They vowed to "continue our comprehensive measures against the interests of this expansionist government throughout the world."

The statement said "international Zionist propaganda" stifled their message otherwise.

The radio did not say in what language the statement was made. It quoted it as saying France was entertaining the idea of setting up "a new empire."

In Paris, a crisis center had been set up at the French Foreign Ministry.

IRNA, citing reports from Mehrabad Airport, said earlier today that Iranian Foreign Ministry officials "are keeping up their efforts to stall for more time for the French government in order to save lives of the passengers."

"We are still negotiating and we have hopes. But it is not certain what will happen," said one Iranian official reached by telephone from Beirut. He declined to give his name.

He said release of five men imprisoned in France was "one of their main demands," but did not elaborate.

Of 64 people aboard the plane when it left Frankfurt, West Germany, for Paris on Tuesday, one steward was left behind during a refueling stop in Cyprus and 14 women and children were freed after the plane landed in Tehran on Wednesday.

Study Ordered For Gaston

WELDON, N.C. (AP) — The House Appropriations Committee has directed the Army Corps of Engineers to conduct a full environmental impact study on Lake Gaston, Rep. Tim Valentine, D-N.C., announced today.

"The committee directs that none of the funds available to the Corps be used relative to the transfer of water from Roanoke River Basin, Lake Gaston, to the James River Basin, Virginia Beach, until the Corp has made an environmental impact statement," Valentine said in a prepared statement.

Valentine said the committee made the decision during a session Wednesday night.

The ruling will now go to the Senate, where Valentine said he expected it to be acted upon before the end of the session.

League said "Regardless of whether she jumped or was pushed, President Reagan shouldn't get a gold medal for getting rid of Anne Burford again." He expressed continuing concern about the administration's environmental policies.

And Jay D. Hair, head of the National Wildlife Federation, termed her move "the second best thing Anne Burford has done for the country in the past three and one-half years. The best was her resignation as head of the EPA."

The administration has been seeking to improve its image among environmentalists in recent weeks, but Mrs. Burford's appointment had drawn widespread opposition among such groups.

Sen. Robert Stafford, R-Vt., said he was "pleasantly surprised" by the resignation, "I think she's done the right thing, and it will make life easier for the president."

Mrs. Burford resigned as EPA administrator in March 1983 under pressure of congressional probes into the agency's management.

The Justice Department later said an investigation cleared her of any legal wrongdoing. Reagan said she had dutifully carried out her orders and become an innocent victim in a dispute between the administrative and legislative branches of government.

While her selection to head the advisory committee drew criticism early, the attacks peaked over the weekend following reports of Mrs. Burford's comments at a speech in Colorado.

Asked about her new job, she derided the advisory group as a "nothingburger."

"It meets three times a year. It doesn't do anything. It's a joke," she told reporters.

"For the long-term success of (the committee) it is probably desirable that she has resigned," said John A. Knauss of the University of Rhode Island, a widely respected oceanographer whom she was to have succeeded.

Mrs. Burford's home telephone is unlisted and attempts to contact her through her husband's office at the Bureau of Land Management were unsuccessful.

In her letter to Reagan, Mrs. Burford said she was withdrawing "to avoid any further disruption of a thoughtful discussion" of environmental issues.

"In recent weeks, there has been an unwarranted furor created around my appointment," she wrote. "This debate does a grave disservice to your outstanding record on the environment."

"The people of the United States must be given the opportunity to make a fair and objective analysis of your accomplishments on environmental issues," Mrs. Burford said.

The votes in Congress were only advisory, and Sen. Ernest Hollings, D-S.C., said he plans to continue efforts to put some teeth in supervision of the committee in the future.

"I'm glad she has decided to step aside. But her nomination points up the need to protect our environment from the ravages of political appointees."

Rep. Don Young, R-Alaska, a defender of Mrs. Burford, termed the episode unfortunate.

"Here is a lady with the greatest qualifications in the world (who had to resign) because of public perceptions through the media," Young said.

Rep. James H. Scheuer, D-N.Y., who was the chief sponsor of the House resolution calling for her removal, said: "Mrs. Burford is at last showing more good sense than those who proposed her appointment. I am sure her decision will come as good news to Republican political strategists...."

Delays, Disputes Rattle Women

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The United States women's gymnastics team, rattled by delays and disputes in the judging, settled for Olympic silver to Romania's gold, literally falling short of duplicating the feat of the American men's team.

One day after the U.S. men achieved their first team gymnastics gold in 80 years, the American women finished higher than ever before in the event, surpassing their bronze performance in the 1948 London Games.

They might have done even better, but after a delay of nearly eight minutes over the judging of Kathy Johnson's routine on the balance beam, and a 9.6 score which displeased the Pauley Pavilion crowd, teammate Julianne McNamara took a tumble from the beam. And just about any hope the Americans had of catching the Romanians fell with her.

"I had to wait up there an awfully long time," McNamara said. She appeared distracted as she paced during the delay. Twenty seconds into her routine, she fell to the mat, clambered back onto the beam and finished, but for only a 9.2.

"I definitely think the long pause affected her," Don Peters, the U.S. women's coach, said. And despite filing some protests over the scoring — they had to do with other routines, not Johnson's or McNamara's — Peters acknowledged: "We lost. The Romanians simply beat us. The Romanians did a better job. Overall, the scoring was very fair."

"The gold medal is a little shinier, but we're happy with the silver," he added. "This team worked very hard to get it."

The men return to the gym tonight with the all-around individual title at stake. Peter Vidmar of Los Angeles, with 118.55 points, holds a slender edge over China's Li Ning, at 118.45, in the duel for the championship.

And the swimmers, following a day off to savor Tuesday's five-gold haul, hit the water again today with five more golds up for grabs.

Wednesday night's bittersweet ending couldn't dull McNamara's perfect performances on the uneven bars and in the floor exercises. The 18-year-old from San Ramon, Calif., became the first American woman ever to chalk up 10s in Olympic gymnastics. Nor could it wipe away the 10 by 16-year-old Mary Lou Retton of Fairmont, W. Va., in the vault.

Nor could it tarnish the finish of two unprecedented gold-medal triumphs earlier in the day — by cyclist Steven Hegg of Dana Point, Calif., in the 4,000-meter pursuit and Greco-Roman wrestler Steven Fraser of Ann Arbor, Mich., in the 198.5-pound class.

Also on Wednesday: — Mark Breland of Brooklyn, N.Y., stopped Pedro Reyes of Puerto Rico in the second round of their 147-pound match and Jerry Page of Columbus, Ohio, outpointed Helmut Gertel of West Germany at 139 pounds.

And, in U.S. team events: — The men's basketball team rolled past Uruguay 104-68 as Patrick Ewing of national-champion Georgetown scored 17 points and had nine rebounds, three blocked shots and four of the team's 13 slam-dunks.

— The women's volleyball team rallied from seemingly certain defeat by upset-minded Brazil to win 12-15, 10-15, 15-5, 15-5, 15-12.

— The women's field hockey team beat Canada 4-1.

— The women's handball team edged China 25-22.

— The men's water polo team defeated Greece 12-5.

Going into today's competition, the United States has 29 medals, 18 of them gold. China, which won the bronze in the women's gymnastics after getting the silver in the men's competition, is second in overall medals with 13 and in gold with six.

South Korea and Great Britain each picked up its first gold of the Games on Wednesday as Weon-Kee Kim won in Greco-Roman wrestling at 134 pounds and Malcolm Cooper took the three-position small-bore rifle, while China swept to its fourth weightlifting gold as Yao Jingyuan won the lightweight division.

And Italy took three golds, two in the modern pentathlon, as it won the team event (the United States got the silver), Daniele Masala won the individual and Vicenzo Maenza won at 106 pounds in Greco-Roman wrestling.

The Romanian women started the optional exercises with a 45-point lead over the United States gymnasts and quickly widened it, aided by two 10s — Ecaterina Szabo in the vault and Simona Pauca on the balance beam.

When the counting was done, the Romanians had a winning margin of 392.20-391.20 and their first gold of these Games. And, more notably, they had their first women's gymnastics gold ever — a feat they had failed to achieve when Nadia Comaneci was capturing the hearts of the world in Montreal eight years ago.

Szabo has been touted as Comaneci's successor, the next unbeatable darling. But after Wednesday night, she was second in the overall performance with 78.75 points to Retton's 79.05. The women's individual championship will be decided Friday night.

Hegg was timed in 4 minutes, 39.5 seconds as he beat West Germany's Rolf Golz by 4.47 seconds in the 4,000 pursuit cycling. Leonard Harvey Nitz of Sacramento, Calif., won the bronze.

Hegg's triumph gave the United States its third cycling gold in four events. "It's everything I've been training for," he said. "It's overwhelming. ... Someday my grandkids are going to look in the history books and they'll know I was the first guy to win a gold medal in track cycling. It's great."

Fraser became the first U.S. gold medalist in Olympic Greco-Roman wrestling by defeating Ilie Matei of Romania. And he knew he had a shot at it. "I thought it was possible, but I knew I had to sellout totally and believe in myself," he said. "When the going gets tough, you've got to quit thinking of yourself and keep going for the people out there."

Frank Andersson of Sweden, as three-time world champion the Olympic favorite, won the bronze — and even though Fraser beat him in their match, Andersson insisted after the finals, "I still think I'm a better wrestler than the American."

North State Rolls Past Fort Bragg

WINSTON-SALEM — Greenville's North State Little League All-Stars romped to an 11-4 victory over Fort Bragg in the first round of the North Carolina State Championship tournament yesterday in Winston-Salem.

Two other games scheduled for yesterday were postponed by rain. Belmont and Monroe were tied at 5-5 when rain interrupted their contest, while Northwest Forsyth and Franklin had not yet played. Those games were to be played today, with the second round of the tournament postponed until Friday.

In Friday's contests, North State faces Lenoir, which had a first-round bye, at 5 p.m., while the winners of the two games today meet at 7 p.m. The championship will now be decided on Saturday with the winner advancing to the South regional in St. Petersburg, Fla.

Fort Bragg gained the initial lead in the game, scoring its first run in the second inning. However, Greenville's Derrick Clark tied it up with a solo homer in the third for a 1-1 deadlock.

Greenville broke the game wide open in the fourth inning scoring six times to take a 7-1 lead. After an out, Walter Gatlin doubled and Jamie Brewington singled. Calvin Yarrell got a hit, driving in Gatlin. Abram Lang's bunt single brought Brewington over. After Derrick Clark walked, Heath Clark doubled, driving in Yarrell and Lang. Tim Moore followed with a triple, scoring both of the Clarks.

Fort Bragg rallied on a triple and three hit batsmen in the bottom of the fourth, closing the score to 6-4. Greenville came back with three of its own in the fifth, scoring on singles by Gatlin, Lang, Park Williams and the Clarks. One final run scored in the sixth for Greenville.

The North Staters banged out 18 hits in the game, including two each by the Clarks, Moore, Gatlin, Brewington, Yarrell and Lang. Gatlin hurled the victory, allowing only one hit — a triple. He struck out 12, walked four and hit three.

Mize Hopeful Of Second Win

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — Larry Mize, who broke through to his first career victory here a year ago, is hoping a return to Memphis will provide a turnaround in his golfing fortunes this season.

"Coming back to Memphis can't do anything but help," the 25-year-old Mize said before teeing off today in the first round of the $500,000 Danny Thomas-Memphis Classic.

"This is like coming home. There are good memories here. I'm really looking forward to it, looking forward to turning it around here."

"I played pretty well the first half of the year, but the last few months my game hasn't been exactly what I'd like it to be."

"Actually, I'm playing pretty well. I feel real good about the way I'm hitting the ball," said Mize, who has collected $126,509 in this, his third season on the tour, and has had four top-10 finishes.

"I'm just not scoring very well, not as well as I should. I'm playing well and not scoring. It's just a matter of getting the putts to fall."

"But just last week I started putting a little better. It's moving in the right direction. And I'm looking for the chance to turn things around this week."

Mize, who played with former President Gerald Ford in Wednesday's pro-am, has major opposition in Tom Kite and Gary Koch, each a two-time winner this season, and such consistent performers as Gil Morgan and former U.S. Open and PGA champ Larry Nelson.

The 156-man field that will be chasing a $90,000 first prize over the 7,249-yard Colonial Country Club course also contains 1984 tour title-winners Andy Bean, Bob Eastwood, Scott Hoch, Hale Irwin, John Mahaffey, Tom Purtzer and Scott Simpson.

Also on hand are Gary Player, four-time Memphis winner Dave Hill, Jerry Pate and 54-year-old Gene Littler, making his first start since suffering a broken arm five months ago.

CBS will provide national television coverage of portions of the final two rounds Saturday and Sunday.

Hoyt Gets Past The First Inning

AP Sports Writer

The first inning has been the worst inning for Chicago White Sox pitcher LaMarr Hoyt this season.

So Wednesday night's complete-game, 5-3 victory over the Boston Red Sox was a satisfying moment for the 1983 Cy Young Award winner.

"I want to win every game, but I can't do that. The idea for me is finishing games, and I wanted to finish this one badly," Hoyt said.

Hoyt, who had been knocked out by the New York Yankees after just two-thirds of an inning last Friday night, said he relied on his fastball early in the game, and on breaking balls in the final three innings to limit Boston to seven hits and one walk. He struck out four and issued a ninth-inning homer to Bill Buckner.

Hoyt also managed to get out of the first inning without allowing a run for only the ninth time in 23 starts.

In other AL action, it was Seattle 5, Minnesota 1; California 6, Oakland 4; Baltimore 7, Texas 2; Cleveland 4, Detroit 2; Toronto 4, Kansas City 1 and New York 7, Milwaukee 3.

Hoyt, 9-11, broke a personal three-game losing streak with the victory, getting support from Ron Kittle's three-run homer.

"I pitched good inside tonight," Hoyt said. "I used the fastball more than any other time this year."

Kittle's three-run shot, his 24th homer, came with two out in the third, and Carlton Fisk walloped a solo homer in the fifth. Both came off Boston starter and loser Bob Ojeda, 9-8.

Fisk called his 13th homer of the season the hardest ball he has ever hit. It landed on the left field roof and bounced out of Comiskey Park. Kittle's was in almost the same spot, on a 3-2 changeup.

"When I saw that it was heading for the roof, I was just hoping it wouldn't hook foul," Kittle said.

Fisk also recorded a personal milestone in the game with a bloop single in the first inning. It was his 1,500th career hit, and he became only the 14th catcher in major league history to reach that plateau.

Mariners 5, Twins 1

Salome Barojas combined with two relievers to scatter nine hits as Seattle defeated Minnesota and stopped the Twins' five-game winning streak.

Barojas, 7-3, worked five innings and allowed one run on six hits while walking four and striking out two. Dave Beard worked the next three innings, and Mike Stanton pitched a hitless ninth.

Seattle took a 1-0 lead in the first on an RBI groundout by Spike Owen off Mike Smithson, 11-9. The Mariners scored twice in the third on Dave Henderson's bases-loaded single and an error by Smithson on Barry Bonnell's chopper in front of the plate for all the runs they needed.

Angels 6, A's 4

Tommy John allowed six hits over 7 1/3 innings and Rob Picciolo contributed two RBI to lead California over Oakland, the Angels' third straight victory. John, 6-9, picked up his first win since July 8 with relief help from Luis Sanchez, who worked 1 2/3 innings.

Loser Bill Krueger, 7-8, lasted only 3 2/3 innings before leaving the game after giving up four hits, five walks and four runs.

Orioles 7, Rangers 2

Cal Ripken Jr. and Wayne Gross clouted two-run homers and Storm Davis scattered seven hits as Baltimore defeated Texas.

The Orioles rapped out seven extra-base hits, easing the way for the 22-year-old Davis, 11-4, to match his career high of five consecutive victories. After Texas scored an unearned run in the second inning, the Orioles rallied for five in the third while chasing Charlie Hough, 11-9.

Indians 4, Tigers 2

George Vukovich blasted two solo home runs to back the combined three-hit pitching of Steve Farr and reliever Ernie Camacho and lead Cleveland over Detroit.

Farr, 2-7, retired the first 14 batters he faced and allowed two hits through 6 1/3 innings before Camacho blanked the Tigers the rest of the way to earn his 13th save. Farr struck out eight and walked two to earn his second victory since being recalled May 15 from Maine of the International League.

Blue Jays 4, Royals 1

Damaso Garcia snapped a 1-1 tie with a run-scoring single in the seventh inning and pinch-hitter Ernie Whitt blasted a two-run homer in the eighth to lead Toronto over Kansas City.

Garcia's single scored Tony Fernandez, who had tripled, and made a winner of Luis Leal, 12-2. Leal checked the Royals on eight hits through seven innings. Jim Gott, the third Toronto pitcher, collected his second save in as many games. Whitt's homer, his seventh this season, came off reliever Bret Saberhagen.

Yankees 7, Brewers 3

Phil Niekro won his 13th game and Ken Griffey's three-run homer highlighted a five-run first inning as New York coasted over Milwaukee.

Niekro, 13-5, scattered five hits in posting his 281st career victory. He walked three and struck out three as the Yankees won for the sixth time in their last seven games. The Yankees supported Niekro with a 14-hit attack, including a string of five straight hits off losing pitcher Jamie Cocanower, 7-11, when the Yankees broke the game open in the first.

Knight Praises Defense After Third Cage Win

INGLEWOOD, Calif. (AP) — The defense does not rest when you play for Bobby Knight. Just ask Wayman Tisdale and Chris Mullin.

Tisdale and Mullin, explosive offensive players in college, scored 12 and 13 points in the unbeaten Americans' 104-68 assault of Uruguay Wednesday for their third Olympic victory.

But forget their offense. It was the pair's defense that drew praise from Knight.

The Indiana coach told a news conference, "I think Chris should repeat what I told him at the end of the first half."

Mullin, the Big East's leading scorer with almost 23 points a game for St. John's last season, grabbed a microphone and quoted Knight as saying, "That's the best 15 minutes of defense you've played in your life."

Knight interrupted, "No, I said, 'That's the best defense you've ever played in your life.'"

And, Knight likes the attitude of Tisdale, already Oklahoma career scoring leader and the only player to make All-America in his first two collegiate seasons.

"One thing I have enjoyed more than anything in coaching this team," Knight said, "is working with Wayman. He's done an excellent job at working to do what we want. I told him after the game he had played good defense and he said, 'I sort of liked it.'"

Partly because of the defensive development of Tisdale and Mullin, the Americans are limiting Olympic opposition to 36 percent shooting. They are winning by average margins of 25 points.

And then there's a fellow named Patrick Ewing.

Georgetown's 7-foot All-American recaptured his NCAA title form. Shaking a string of nagging injuries, Ewing played with his old enthusiasm, intimidating Uruguay, 1-2.

He scored a team-leading 17 points and had 9 rebounds, 3 blocked shots and four of the Americans' 13 dunks.

"I think the way Patrick plays, he plays emotionally. Mentally, he was into the game today," Mullin said.

One of Ewing's stuffs started an 18-0 U.S. spurt. Michael Jordan slammed in two more baskets at the end of the streak, good for a 53-22 lead three minutes before halftime.

The Americans' performance — a 53-33 domination of rebounding and a 52-32 percent edge in floor shooting — confirmed Uruguay Coach Ramon Etchamendi's pre-game thinking.

"At no time did we think we could win," he said through an interpreter. "Perhaps if we had played five against seven."

He was right. The Americans cruised to their 72nd triumph in 73 Olympic games.

The Uruguayan coach refused to use the fact his team was playing its second game within 16 1/2 hours as an alibi.

Did Etchamendi see anybody giving the Americans a battle?

"Spain, possibly Italy," he answered. "The Spanish and Italian teams have more experience than the Americans."

Knight spent an off-day today setting up the team's plans for its last two games of Pool B, against France Friday and Spain Saturday.

The American women, off Wednesday, were scheduled to play one of their toughest games late today, matching 2-0 records against South Korea.

The past and present performances of the South Koreans have U.S. Coach Pat Head Summitt worrying about the matchup of the only unbeaten teams in the tourney.

"They beat us in 1979, 1980 and 1981," Summitt said. "It took us a long time to beat them. They could be the surprise team of the tournament."

Still, comparative scores indicate it could be another romp for the Americans.

The United States whipped Yugoslavia 83-55 in its opener Monday and followed that with an 81-47 beating of Australia Tuesday. South Korea struggled to nip the Yugoslavs 55-52 Tuesday after edging Canada 67-62 a day earlier.

The 3-0 Spanish men's team kept pace with the United States with a 97-82 decision over France Wednesday night. Canada ripped China 121-80 in the other Pool B contest.

Yugoslavia's 1980 gold medalists remained unbeaten in Pool A, crushing Egypt 100-69. Italy, the current European champion, also went 3-0 with a 89-78 victory over Brazil. Australia edged West Germany 67-66 on Ian Davies' jump shot with more than two minutes left in the other Pool A game Wednesday.

Russian Defends USSR Boycott

LOS ANGELES (AP) — "I wish that all countries could be here," said the journalist. "I strongly believe the Olympics are for everyone."

A common thought and a common statement during the Los Angeles Games that are marked by the 17-nation, Soviet Union-led boycott. But perhaps an uncommon sentiment for a journalist from the Soviet Union.

Yuri Ustimenko, a Tass correspondent who is covering the Olympics, said the Games are "not just for the Soviets and the Americans. Not just for the good guys and the bad guys, as Ronald Reagan says. For Everyone."

In an interview with the San Diego Tribune, however, Ustimenko contended that the reason his country gave for the boycott — security worries — was valid.

"There were reports in the California newspapers and American newspapers about a group called Ban The Soviets Coalition," he said. "Their stated goal was to make our life as miserable as possible. Our response was to seek out the policy of your government. What would Washington's action be against this group?"

"All they said is that this is a free country and people could do what they wanted to do. OK, that is your policy. We can't dictate to you how to run your lives, but we were concerned about the safety of our athletes," Ustimenko said. "No steps were taken to control the Ban The Soviets Coalition, so we were left to our actions."

"Suppose your athletes were coming to Moscow and there was a Ban The Americans group. Would not you have been worried?" said Ustimenko, who also said the boycott was firmly backed by his countrymen. Ustimenko flatly dismissed three popular American theories on why the Soviets really boycotted — a fear their athletes would not fare well in the competition; a payback to the United States for its boycott of the 1980 Moscow Olympics; and a concern that Soviet athletes might defect to the West.

"If I were properly British about it, I would say rubbish or poppycock," said Ustimenko, who in fact used an American expletive that means "of no substance."

Ustimenko also criticized the Reagan administration.

"Washington is using the Games as part of an election campaign," he said. "It is sheer electioneering. The

Romanians Cling To Slender Lead

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Romania, a dropout from the Communist-bloc boycott of the Olympic Games, has derailed the American gold hunt in the gymnastics competition by edging the U.S. women for the team title.

But Coach Don Peters, a critic of the judging earlier in the competition, had no excuses for the silver medal his team won Wednesday night — the first team medal for American women since 1948.

"We lost, the Romanians deserved the gold," said Peters. "The right team won tonight ... We did not perform to our best potential."

Led by its stoic but sensational 17-year-old, Ecaterina Szabo, and rising star Simona Pauca, 15, the Romanians refused to surrender the slim lead they held over the United States going into the optional routines at Pauley Pavilion on the UCLA campus.

Each team received perfect scores of 10 — two for the Romanians and three for the Americans, the first ever collected by U.S. women gymnasts at any Olympics.

But Julianne McNamara, 18, of San Ramon, Calif., who earned two of those perfect marks, also fell from the balance beam on the second event of the night, virtually ending any chance for an American victory.

Romania, a runnerup to the Soviet Union in the last two Olympics, finished with a score a score of 392.20. The United States totaled 391.20 while China won the bronze with 388.60.

The U.S. men, led by Peter Vidmar and Bart Conner, hope to get the gymnasts back on the golden track tonight when individual honors will be at stake in the men's optional competition.

The men have already pulled the biggest upset of the Los Angeles Olympics with their dethroning of world-champion China Tuesday night for the team gold medal.

McNamara was perfect in the uneven bars and floor exercise while the crowd-pleasing Mary Lou Retton, 16, of Fairmont, W. Va., scored a 10.00 in the vault.

Her tumble off the balance beam was a rare mistake on the apparatus she considers one of her favorites.

"I definitely think the delay affected her," said Peters, referring to McNamara's having to wait six to eight minutes to start her routine while the judges settled the score for teammate Kathy Johnson.

"I had to wait up there an awfully long time," McNamara said. "The only thing is, I was up there thinking. But that's the way it goes."

Johnson's sparkling routine finally was given a 9.6, and although Peters said he did not file a protest on the score, he added he had no idea why the judges took so long to decide the mark.

But Peters said he did file protests over the scores received by Pam Bilek, 15, of Garden Grove, Calif., and on the vault mark given Tracee Talavera, 17, of Walnut Creek, Calif.

Nevertheless, Peters said, "Overall, the scoring was very fair."

And, he conceded the Americans were their own worst enemies.

"We made a lot of little mistakes," he said. "It was not a night for perfect performances and both teams felt the pressure."

Szabo got the Romanians rolling with a perfect vault at the end of the first rotation.

Pauca, a relatively unknown in international gymnastics circles, sealed the victory with a flawless somersault-filled routine on the balance beam.

China got a perfect score from Ma Yanhong in the uneven bars, a feat that went virtually unnoticed in the midst of the duel between Romania and the United States.

Romanian Coach Adrian Goreac said his team was not overly concerned that the Americans would overtake them in the finals.

"After many misses, we were still ahead," he said. Asked how he felt about coaching the Olympic champions, "a little tired, but naturally contented."

Of the Americans, he said, "their only weak point is their lack of experience."

Retton, an acrobatic dynamo, compiled the best scores of the night in the optional exercises, 39.55 points, and vaulted into first place in the overall standings for the all-around qualifications with 79.05 points. Szabo was second and McNamara third. Johnson, in sixth, was the third U.S. qualifier for the all-around event on Friday.

The gymnastics competition has been marked by down to the wire battles and the trend is expected to continue in the all-around men's finals tonight.

Vidmar and Conner, both of whom wept openly during the team gold-medal presentation, rank first and fourth going into the finals for the all-around title — considered the most prestigious of the individual medals. Sandwiched between the two Americans are Chinese stars Li Ning and Tong Fei.

But Conner insists the United States has already won the gold that mattered most.

Receives Game Ball

Greenville Mayor Janice Buck receives the game ball autographed by the winning team in a softball tournament held here among inmates from minimum security prisons in the east during July. At left is Talmadge L. Barnette, Eastern Area Administrator for the North Carolina Department of Corrections, while Jackie L. Moye, program assistant and recreation coordinator for the eastern area, looks on at right. The Greene County unit won the tournament with New Hanover as runner-up. Other units competing were Gates, Martin, Carteret, Duplin and the Goldsboro Youth Center. Inmates financed the tournament through their unit canteens, and no tax money was used for the tournament.

appearance of an American president at the opening ceremony was a shame. I like America. It is not America, the beautiful, or America, the ugly. It is both. It is all things. It is a great country... or should I say it has a great people.

"It is just a shame that a country as great as this has an administration like the one you have..."

Ustimenko said the Soviet people remain interested in the Los Angeles Olympics.

"We, and by that I mean Tass, are interested in covering the Olympics because the people of my country are very interested in what is happening here," he said. "I had a call... from Soviet Sports, a sports publication I don't work for, and they begged me — begged me — to send them reports of the sports activities here in Los Angeles. Yes, we are very interested in what is happening in Los Angeles."

He said he believes that, if the Soviet athletes had come to the Games, they "would have won the most medals. I'm quite certain of that."

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Japan and Nicaragua have joined the United States and Italy as the undefeated teams of the Olympic baseball tournament at Dodger Stadium.

Nicaragua edged Canada 4-3 on a 12th-inning home run by Arnoldo Munoz in the first game of Wednesday's schedule, while three Japanese pitchers combined on a 2-hit, 2-0 shutout of South Korea under the lights.

The United States goes after its second victory when it faces Italy at Dodger Stadium tonight. Both teams won their openers Tuesday, with the Americans posting a 2-1 victory over Taiwan while Italy had to come from behind in the ninth to beat the Dominican Republic, 10-7.

Taiwan faces the Dominican Republic in the other baseball game scheduled today in the eight-team tournament.

Although baseball is only a demonstration sport at these Games, a crowd of 39,120 turned out for the Wednesday night game, while 25,000 saw the extra-inning afternoon game in the 56,000-seat ballpark.

The crowds have been heartening to promoters of Olympic baseball.

"The final day is already sold out and the semifinal day is near sellout," said Steve Brenner, publicity director for the Los Angeles Dodgers and Olympic venue press chief at the stadium.

The opening-day doubleheader crowd of 52,319 "surprised us and was larger than we expected," Brenner said Wednesday. He said he now looked for a daily average of 45,000 — 5,000 more than the original projection.

In Wednesday night's game, Yukio Yoshida, a righthander with an underhand delivery started for Japan and held the Koreans hitless until the seventh. Then, with a man on base because of an error, Kim Yong-Kuk singled between first and second, with the runner taking third.

Southpaw reliever Kazutomo Miyamoto came on and shut off a possible rally. But when he walked the two leadoff batters in the ninth, he was relieved by Akimitsu Ito, who picked off the lead runner and struck out Kim Yong-Kuk. Ahn Un-Hak singled to center, but the runner was thrown out at third base.

Japan scored in the fourth on a leadoff walk to Kojo Shoda, a single by Yukio Arai and a sacrifice fly by Katsuyuki Fukumoto. Japan's second run came when Fukumoto off the ninth with a single, advanced on a passed ball and a sacrifice and came home on a short fly ball that was caught by the South Korean second baseman Kang Ki-Woong down the right field line.

In the afternoon contest, Nicaragua's Munoz redeemed himself by hitting his game-winning homer with one on and two out. In the top of the 12th, he had let Canadian Larry Downes' grounder go through his legs, allowing Tom Nelson to score to put the Canadians on top 3-2.

Cubs Slip Into Lead In East

By JONATHAN VITTI
Associated Press Writer

The Chicago Cubs have worked hard and fought long for first place in the National League East.

They took over by winning seven of 10 games against their two division rivals, the New York Mets and the Philadelphia Phillies.

They displaced the Mets from the top for the first time since July 7 with Wednesday's 5-4 victory over Philadelphia. It was the third consecutive one-run game between the teams, of which the Cubs have won two.

With Jody Davis' ninth-inning sacrifice fly, the winning run scored in the final inning for the second straight day. The Cubs hit three homers on Wednesday.

They won because of a misplaced bunt that traveled barely 60 feet. "I'd certainly like to think the breaks go with you when you're playing well," Cubs Manager Jim Frey said.

"It was a bad bunt that landed in a good place," said Philadelphia Manager Paul Owens. "It was a big one for the Cubs, it put them in first. It could have been a big one for us."

The Phillies scored in the top of the ninth off reliever Lee Smith, 6-4, to draw even 4-4.

But Henry Cotto led off the bottom of the inning with a double off Al Holland, 5-6, and the Phillies elected to walk Ryne Sandberg intentionally. Owens brought in right fielder Von Hayes as a fifth in-fielder. Gary Matthews attempted to bunt to the right side to put the runners in scoring position.

But the ball struck Matthews' bat near the label and what resulted was a lazy infield fly that landed left of the mound — which Holland had just vacated in hopes of cutting off the bunt.

"It hit the bat and it just jumped," Matthews said. "Believe me, I was just trying to get it towards first."

That loaded the bases with none out, and after Keith Moreland struck out, Davis lined the game-winner to left.

In other NL games, San Diego beat Los Angeles 4-3, Pittsburgh blanked Montreal 4-0, St. Louis trounced New York 11-2, Atlanta edged Houston 6-5 and Cincinnati topped San Francisco 6-3.

Philadelphia's Steve Carlton carried a 3-2 lead into the sixth, only to have Moreland lead off the inning with his 11th homer. Two outs later, Ron Cey and Larry Bowa singled, and Dick Ruthven punched a grounder into right field for a single and the lead.

Len Matuszek doubled to lead off the second and eventually scored on Carlton's single. Philadelphia made it 3-0 in the third as Hayes led off with his 11th homer and Matuszek followed one out later with his 10th.

But the Cubs scored single runs in the fourth and fifth. Sandberg homered in the fourth inning, his 15th, extending his hitting streak to 11 games. Cey led off the fifth with his 15th of the season make the score 3-2.

Padres 4, Dodgers 3
Kevin McReynolds went 4-for-4 and drove in three runs, including two on a solo homer and a tie-breaking eighth-inning double.

Alejandro Pena, 11-6, got two outs in the eighth before Carmelo Martinez singled. McReynolds then lined Pena's first pitch to the center-field fence to score Martinez.

Craig Lefferts, 2-3, pitched 1 1/3 innings to gain the victory, with Rich Gossage recording the final two outs for his 21st save.

McReynolds tied the game with a bases-loaded single in the bottom of the second, then put the Padres on top 2-1 in the fourth with his 15th homer.

The victory was the fifth consecutive and eighth of nine for the Padres, who completed a sweep of their three-game home series with the Dodgers.

Pirates 4, Expos 0
Larry McWilliams pitched a six-hitter and Lee Lacy's two-run homer capped a four-run Pittsburgh sixth inning. McWilliams, 6-8, tossed his second shutout of the season.

Lee Mazzilli led off the sixth with a triple down the left field line, but was thrown out at the plate on Jason Thompson's grounder. Tony Pena's double scored Thompson, and Johnny Ray followed with an RBI single. Lacy then stroked his eighth homer of the season.

Charlie Lea, 14-6, pitching two days later than planned because of a stomach virus, failed for his third consecutive start to win his 15th game.

Cardinals 11, Mets 2
Joaquin Andujar won his major league-leading 15th game and St. Louis pounded out 17 hits against Dwight Gooden, 9-7, and two relievers as the Cardinals won their sixth in a row. The Mets dropped their sixth straight.

"I was surprised to see us get 17 hits," Andujar said. "I expected a four- or five-hitter — because he (Gooden) is tough."

Andujar, 15-9, allowed seven hits and struck out five. It was his 10th complete game of the season, also tops in the majors.

Braves 6, Astros 5
Dale Murphy's league-leading 26th home run, a two-run shot in the eighth inning, gave Atlanta a comeback victory. Phil Garner's RBI single and a two-run pinch-single by Jim Pankovits gave Houston a 5-4 lead in the bottom of the seventh.

Rafael Ramirez led off the eighth with a single and Murphy followed with his drive off reliever-Julio Salano, 0-1.

Reds 6, Giants 3
Gary Redus drove in three runs with a homer and a seventh-inning single while Joe Price hurled a four-hitter to send the visitors to their fourth straight defeat.

Redus highlighted the three-run seventh inning with his RBI single. His two-run homer gave Cincinnati a 2-0 lead in the third. Nick Esasky added a sixth run with his eighth homer in the eighth inning. Bob Brenly drilled his 12th in the sixth.

Cheerleading Mars Coverage

By DAVE GOLDBERG
AP Sports Writer

Anyone who wonders why ABC would fork over $225 million for the rights to televise the Olympics only has to correlate it with this fact — attendance at the U.S. soccer team's first two games has been more than 140,000.

In other words, if it's the Olympics, people will watch events that for 3 1/2 out of every four years are begging for fans. Not only soccer, but horses romping over obstacles, cyclists racing the clock around an oval, volleyball, rowing, shooting, modern pentathlon and Greco-Roman wrestling.

And they'll get particularly interested if, as is the case this year, the home team is winning.

Unfortunately, ABC has marred its coverage by:

— Selling so much commercial time that it sometimes seems like the sports events are fillers between commercials;

— Cheerleading and otherwise intruding on Olympic drama that could stand on its own merits;

— Choppiness caused by the overabundance of commercials. If Keith Jackson and Digger Phelps think the officials disrupted the flow of play in Wednesday's U.S.-Uruguay basketball game, what about interruptions in midair by Diet Coke?

How about a hand for Howard Cosell!

If he's become an intrusive element on Monday Night Football and baseball, he's in his element at the Olympic boxing.

First, unlike many of the analysts ABC has hired fresh from locker rooms, his comments aren't too technical. He consistently explains the difference between amateur and professional rules and he refrains as best he can from cheerleading — he's about the only person ABC has who seems honestly interested in non-Americans.

Second, boxing is the perfect forum for Cosell's penchant to introduce sociology into sport. Almost to a man, the U.S. boxers are rags to (almost) riches stories, kids whose route from poverty is in their fists.

U.S. gymnastics in its most dismal days.

But he should realize — or be reminded of the fact by someone at ABC — that he's at least nominally a journalist, not a representative of the U.S. team. He rooted out loud on every routine and, even with the U.S. ahead throughout, whined about the judging — "the scoring has just been atrocious," he said, with only two routines to go.

Then he noted that the U.S. score was higher than the Soviets' winning score in 1980, suggesting that the U.S. might have beaten the Soviets.

Maybe, maybe not. Maddux of all people knows that gymnastics judging is the most subjective of rituals. And as he noted himself, scores have been going up so drastically that it might be time for the scoring rules to be revised.

Meanwhile, nobody bothered to tell us, with the United States holding a .65 points lead going into the final round, just what the Chinese needed to do to catch the Americans. Or how badly the Americans had to mess up. Sure, you can figure it out, but what are analysts for?

Apparently, they were too busy cheering in the press box.

High Stakes Bingo Games Flourish On Reservations

By RICHARD T. PIENCIAK
Associated Press Writer
SANDIA PUEBLO, N.M. (AP) — This year has brought new hope for the residents of a tiny, impoverished Indian reservation just outside Albuquerque.

Plagued with high unemployment and cutbacks in federal aid, the Sandia Pueblos have turned to high-stakes bingo.

They are not alone. About 100 of the nation's 261 Indian reservations now conduct some form of bingo.

Millions for new schools, hospitals, libraries, gymnasiums and farms are being raised by tribes that formerly peddled rubber tomahawks and held alligator wrestling exhibitions.

"Bingos are the catalyst for Indian tribes to generate income," said Richard Bernal, business development agent for the 312-member Sandia tribe, which started the games in January. "I would hope that bingo would continue as a source of revenue for years to come."

Last year, Florida's Seminole tribe netted $3.5 million, paying out $1.200 "revenue distribution" checks to each of its 1,500 members.

"The bingo money is very important to the tribe," said Seminole tribal attorney Jim Shore. "We wouldn't have been able to progress to the point we have without it."

Basically, no-holds-barred Indian bingo is allowed in the 43 states that regulate the game. If the local church or veteran's club can run bingo, Indians can, too. As long as those games are held on federally recognized tribal land, Indians can set their own terms and conditions, according to recent court decisions.

The state of New Mexico, for example, limits charitable groups to three sessions a week, with a total prize payout of $1,500 per session. The Sandia game guarantees $10,000 for each of its Thursday-through-Sunday sessions, with a possible $50,000 night's payout, depending on bonus jackpot prizes.

Last November, the Cherokees of North Carolina staged a $1 million bingo marathon that attracted con-

Many tribes give away door prizes like color television sets, stereos and Caribbean cruises to entice customers.

"This is a real gold mine — and it's a good gold mine because these people never have gotten a good shake," said John Brown, who until recently conducted bus tours to the Sandia games from El Paso, Texas, and Roswell, Ariz. "I think this is great way for the Indians to get out of their poverty."

Bernal said profits from the Sandia game would be used to start more conventional capitalistic enterprises on the reservation. "We're trying to become a little more diversified in what we're doing," he said.

The Sandias also hope to pay off the mortgage on the bingo building, improve the pueblo's water and sewer system, and subsidize recreational activities and social programs hurt by federal cutbacks — health, education and the elderly.

Tribe members run the concession stand and serve as floor clerks, reducing the pueblo's unemployment rate from 20 percent to near zero. "Basically, everyone who wants a job is working," said Bernal.

The Sandia bingo hall is a refurbished warehouse used in the early 1970s by a now-bankrupt Indian enterprise that built cabinets, trays and sorting tables for the U.S. Postal Service.

The building sits alongside an interstate highway in the eastern portion of the 22,871-acre reservation, which runs from the Rio Grande to the base of the picturesque Sandia Mountains.

Over the years, the warehouse has been occupied by a series of non-Indian, mostly unsuccessful businesses, according to Bernal.

Now, the gigantic room is filled with new tables and chairs. TV monitors provide a clear view of the last number called. Clerks roam their sector between games selling instant bingo tabs, which are similar to instant lottery cards sold by many states.

There is 24-hour security, and big winners are escorted home on request.

The Sandias began considering bigtime bingo in mid-1981. The tribal council took its time, wary of the outsiders needed for professional expertise.

Bernal first visited the Seminole operation in Hollywood, Fla.

On top of the revenue checks, in four years the Seminoles have bought two farms, built two gyms costing $550,000 each and also provide hot meals for the tribe's elderly.

They run games on three of their five reservations — 19 games a week at the two largest centers: afternoon, night and night-owl sessions.

Sandia officials next investigated an equally productive Indian operation in Prior Lake, Minn. They were so impressed that they hired away Scott Lukoski to be their general manager.

"There were dirt roads and poor living conditions before bingo," said Lukoski, who learned the bingo business from his parents, who helped run a non-profit game for a parochial high school in Florida. "Within eight months of operation, the roads were paved, living conditions were improved, they set up a medical clinic and a day care center. ... I've seen these halls do some really good things."

Convinced they were on the right track, the Sandia tribal council signed a management contract late last year.

The game has been drawing about 700 players a night since it opened Jan. 11. In May, the tribe began four afternoon matinees, which average 300 players.

Bernal said the expected profits were "a closely guarded secret," but he didn't dispute they'll exceed $1 million this year.

And there's room to grow — the bingo hall seats 1,700, one of the largest Indian bingo arenas in the country.

The Sandias drew their first overflow crowd May 5, when contestants paid $100 each for a chance at more than $100,000 in cash and prizes. Another $100 night is slated for Aug. 4.

BIG NIGHT FOR BINGO — Crowds fill the bingo hall at the Sandia Pueblo near Albuquerque, N.M. The sports car at right was the grand prize during a recent night. Bingo on Indian reservations opened in 1982 when the

Most Indian bingos — including the Sandia game — are run by outside firms, often for huge chunks of the profit. Such deals have not made all Indians happy.

Members of the Barona tribal council in Lakeside, Calif., narrowly avoided being impeached last year in a dispute over the 50-50 split of profits with management.

The Yaquis were filling their 1,300-seat arena near Tucson, Ariz., seven nights a week for more than a year, sometimes paying out jackpots of $35,000.

"We had a wonderful contract, 60-40. Sixty for the tribe, 40 for them," said Valencia. "Unfortunately, they claim there was never any profits to pay. We never got a dime."

The chief said he was "not allowed to ask questions or see the books." So in January, the tribe replaced the management team with a group that gives the Indians more control.

Under the new team, three of the next six nights produced profits, Valencia said.

Such disputes have led to calls for federal control over the Indian games.

A proposed federal bill would require tribe members to approve a bingo operation, make certain that Indians don't enter into business agreements that primarily benefit outside management firms and allow management fees only when they are based on something other than a percentage share of revenue, according to Bureau of Indian Affairs spokesman Vince Lovett in Washington.

"The bill does not prohibit high-stakes games. It just requires that if they are held, they be for the benefit of the tribe," said Lovett.

But Bernal said Indians were generally opposed to any attempts to regulate their games. "Anytime Indian people try to take advantage of an opportunity, people try to stop them — and bingo's no exception," he said.

There also have been accusations of organized crime influence, but Lovett said an investigation had failed to find any evidence.

"The talk about the invasion of organized crime was sort of an initial reaction by those who thought there must be something wrong with this — 'The Indians can do this and we can't,'" he said. "There is no substance to it."

Bernal said FBI background checks had been done on every investor and the 125 employees.

The percentage breakdown of the profits will average 70-30 in the tribe's favor over the seven-year contract, with the management firm getting more in the first years, he said. Additionally, tribe officials control the books and can buy out the management firm's share after five years.

"As for the morality of it, people are not losing money that they would use for other things. It's no different than the states that have lotteries," said Bernal.

"People can come here for 5-6 hours and spend $50, or they can spend a few hours at the racetrack and drop several hundred dollars. I guess it depends on what kind of action you want."

Agriculture Groups Blast Proposed Lease Plan

By BARRY MASSEY
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — A plan by a Chicago-based group to acquire family farms from debt burdened growers and lease them back to farmers met with sharp criticism Wednesday before a congressional panel.

But one of the organizers of the plan defended the proposal as an effort to aid some farmers struggling with large debts and rejected suggestions that the program is only a tax shelter for the wealthy.

"I am proud that my associates and I are able to make this contribution to farming and the preservation of the family farm in our country," said Richard Hollerud, a real estate broker and partner in a company behind the farmland acquisition group called Consolidated Family Farms.

Farm organization officials assailed the program in testimony before the subcommittee on family farms of the Senate Small Business Committee and urged panel members to direct a government study of the extent of such plans nationwide and their effect on agriculture.

"We believe, for example, that plans of this kind will speed the trend toward complete absentee ownership of this nation's farmland," said DeVon Woodland, president of the National Farmers

Organization. "We don't believe it is fair to allow tax-avoidance partnerships to use their unfair economic edge to move in on debt-ridden farm families and take over their land."

His remarks were directed at the plan by Consolidated Family Farms, a partnership, under which a farmer would deed ownership of his land and buildings to the partnership in exchange for security interests in the group. No money would be involved in the transaction.

The securities, called depositary units, would be worth 90 percent of the farm's market value less any debt the farmer owes on the property. As part of the exchange, the partnership assumes the farmer's debt and allows him to stay on the farm and cash rent the land.

So far, no farms have been acquired but the committee was told that land in 30 states is under review for possible participation in the program. In addition, Hollerud said the Chicago-based firm has filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission to offer farm shares for sale in the future to the public.

Hollerud, during questioning by subcommittee chairman Sen. Larry Pressler, R-S.D., said 1-to-5-year leases will be negotiated with farmers and acknowledged that they could be forced from the property by the partnership.

Still, he assured the subcommittee members that the partnership would not dictate day-to-day farm operations and said the program had wrongly been viewed "as a threat" to family farms.

Representatives of the National Grange and National Farmers Union joined the National Farmers Organization in criticizing Consolidated Family Farms.

"I know how desperate many farmers and ranchers are in these times, and it appears to me that this proposal is not in the best interest of family farming or the future of farming in America," James C. Miller of the National Grange said in prepared testimony. "It appears to be antithetical to the fundamental premise of family agriculture — farm operators who own the land they till."

Miller said the solution for financially strapped farmers is "profitable prices in an economic climate conducive to family farming."

"The ills of agriculture cannot be solved by exchanging a farmers land for a limited partnerships paper," he said.

Six Arrested By Agents In Credit Card Ring

MIAMI (AP) — Secret Service agents Tuesday seized 28 counterfeit credit cards and arrested six men in a fraud ring that stole over $1 million through some 2,000 bogus charge cards, officials said.

"The basic scheme was to counterfeit credit cards bearing the logos of Visa and MasterCard," said Ronald J. Szego, special agent in charge of the Miami Secret Service office. He said more arrests were expected.

The men allegedly sold counterfeit credit cards, bought merchandise with the cards, and recruited store employees to accept the bogus plates, Szego said.

Legitimate account numbers were obtained by rummaging through businesses' garbage, and through dishonest store employees, Szego said.

Among those arrested was Enrique Bover, 25, described by Szego as the kingpin of the enterprise based at two record stores he owns in Miami and Hialeah.

The other five were identified as Roberto Gomez, 33, and Guido Yero, 44, both of Hialeah; and Javier Codecido, 20, Alfredo Lopez, 33, and Jose Esquijarosa, 32, all of Miami.

"The Bover operation is responsible for over $1 million in losses to the credit card industry with the counterfeiting of approximately 2,000 credit cards," Szego said.

Eight other alleged members of Bover's group have been arrested in the past two months, Szego said.

Study Predicts Medicare Program Will Probably Fail To Cut Costs

By DANIEL Q. HANEY
AP Science Writer

BOSTON (AP) — A controversial Medicare program designed to save money by paying flat fees to hospitals probably won't work because doctors will simply admit more patients to keep hospital profits up, say researchers who studied admission patterns.

The researchers believe, in fact, that the strategy could backfire and end up costing the Medicare system more, not less.

The program breaks down all illnesses into 467 "diagnosis-related groups," or DRGs. Medicare pays hospitals the same amount for all patients with the same diagnoses, no matter how long they actually stay in the hospitals. It is intended to give the hospitals an incentive to send patients home sooner and hold down costs.

The study found that there is little consensus among doctors about when to send patients to the hospital. Youngsters in one town, for instance, may be 12 times more likely to have their tonsils out than are children who live somewhere else. It all depends upon the "practice styles" of the doctors who work in a particular place.

Hospitalization for such common disorders as asthma, high blood pressure and ulcers varies dramatically from place to place within the same state, the researchers found. Because there is so little agreement about such matters in the medical profession, doctors can easily admit more patients if they think their hospital needs the business.

"Increasing evidence indicates that there is no practical limit to the demand for hospitalization based on a consensus within the medical profession about the need for or value of specific types of services," the researchers wrote. "Our hypothesis suggests that in the absence of additional controls on hospital capacity or employment levels, the DRG system may well accelerate the rate of increase in per capita costs for hospital care."

The DRG system is being phased in over three years to try to hold down these costs. Between 1977 and 1982, Medicare expenses increased an average of 19 percent each year. Expenditures during fiscal 1984 are expected to reach $66.5 billion.

The latest analysis was conducted by Drs. Philip Caper of Harvard, John E. Wennberg of Dartmouth and Klim McPherson of Oxford. It was published in Thursday's New England Journal of Medicine.

Medicare officials in Washington, who are familiar with the article did not return several telephone calls seeking comment.

The doctors looked for differences in the way physicians practiced medicine in the areas served by 30 hospitals in Maine.

"People assume that most medical decisions are scientifically based and don't vary much between hospital market areas," Caper said in an interview. In fact ... there's very little consensus."

In Maine, the researchers found, for example, that hysterectomies were 3½ times more common in some areas than in others. Overall, 90 percent of the medical and surgical admissions were even more variable than hysterectomies.

Hospitals stand to lose money under DRGs, because they will have to discharge patients sooner. The researchers suggest that doctors will respond by admitting more patients to keep the beds full.

"The incentives for physicians to increase volume will be most direct in for-profit hospitals if they own shares or receive bonuses based on profit," they wrote. "But physicians practicing in the nonprofit sector are also motivated to keep their institutions in financial health."

"The increasing supply of physicians," they wrote, "should make it easy for hospitals with excess capacity to recruit physicians whose clinical interests coincide with a profitable mix of services, or 'product line.'"

Four states — Massachusetts, New York, New Jersey and Maryland — are exempt from the DRG program because they have their own cost-containing systems.

Secretary Returns; Papers Are Cautious

LONDON (AP) — Foreign Secretary Sir Geoffrey Howe returned today from talks with Chinese leaders to brief Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher on plans for Britain and China to sign a draft agreement next month on the future of Hong Kong.

Howe, after four days of consultations in China, stopped in Hong Kong on his way home Wednesday to announce that two countries would initial a draft agreement on China's takeover of the British colony in 1997.

The agreement is said to guarantee Hong Kong's Western-oriented lifestyle when the colony is returned to China, and it calls for China and Britain to set up a joint liaison group giving Britain a consultative voice in Hong Kong affairs until the year 2000.

Hong Kong recently has suffered a business downturn over fears that the Chinese would restrict current political and economic freedoms when they take over. Howe said Wednesday, however, that the Chinese had agreed to preserve Hong Kong's capitalistic system for 50 years after the takeover.

Hong Kong was settled by the British during the Opium War in 1841 and leased from China for 99 years starting in 1898.

The independent Financial Times commented today that the Chinese, "having made life exceedingly difficult for Britain's negotiators in the talks ... have proved magnanimous in victory."

"It should not obscure the fact, however, that any agreement ... will depend entirely for its success on Peking's good will and the often stated desire of the Chinese leadership to preserve Hong Kong as a stable and prosperous enclave of free enterprise on the edge of a huge Communist land mass," the newspaper commented.

The Times of London, also independent, said the announcement that the liaison committee will from 1988 be based principally in Hong Kong was bound to cause "consternation" in the British colony. There have been fears that the establishment of the joint commission would give the Chinese the right to interfere in colony affairs before 1997.

The Times said, however, that there was "much to be welcomed" in Howe's announcement and "reason to suppose that the agreement now in the offing ... will be one that Parliament and the people of Hong Kong would be advised to accept."

Construction Workers Rush To Finish Winery

ASHEVILLE (AP) — Workmen building a $6.5 million winery at Biltmore House and Gardens estate in Asheville are putting in overtime in a breakneck race with this year's grape crop.

"The man who is in charge of the grapes tells me that they are looking good," Mike Smith, public relations director for Biltmore House, said Wednesday. "The rain has not been a problem. They are watching out for mold and mildew. They can spray for that."

The best time to harvest grapes is in late August or early September, according to Smith, who said the exact date is determined by sugar tests of the grapes.

If the grapes make passing marks, the picking starts.

The 30,000-square-foot wine-making facility is scheduled to be in operation in September. A second phase, consisting of a visitors center and testing rooms, will open in May 1985.

The Biltmore Estate Winery is under construction next to the old dairy barns, which are being incorporated into the new complex. A focal point will be the old clock tower on one of the barns.

On Wednesday the construction site was a beehive of activity surrounded by a sea of slippery red mud.

Stainless steel tanks where grape juice will become wine are in place in one wing of the massive complex. The aging process in those two-story upright silver tanks complete with cooling jackets will take one to two years.

There are also several massive horizontal stainless tanks, built into motorized cradles which will turn the tanks from time to time. Here the red wines are made, Smith said.

"They built the walls, then lifted the tanks in with a big crane before they put the roof on," he added.

UNLOADING SHELLS . . . A lone figure walks through mountains of clam shells at an unloading point at the Industrial Canal in New Orleans. Clam shells have been dredged from Louisiana's lakes and oyster shells from along its Gulf Coast shoreline for 70 years. Environmentalists say dredging companies should have been forced to make a thorough study of what dredging does to plants and animals in the lakes and coastal areas. (AP Laserphoto)

Ballot Error Causes New Secession Vote

By MOIRA BAILEY
Associated Press Writer

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — Residents of the predominantly white Hemingway area will vote again on seceding from their mostly black county because numbers were erroneously placed on the ballots in the failed referendum, state election officials decided Wednesday.

"The secrecy of the ballots was affected by numbering the ballots," said James Ellisor, executive director of the State Election Commission.

Although it wasn't certain whether the ballot numbers matched numbered names on the July 17 polling lists, testimony showed "some of those comparisons could have been made," Ellisor said.

"There was no way we could get around it. Our commission does not like to overturn an election," he said.

Either side can appeal the decision, he said. Some 1,300 people in Hemingway and adjoining Johnson Township voted to secede from Williamsburg County and join nearby Florence County and 891 voted against the proposal, which failed to win the necessary two-thirds majority.

The area for which secession was proposed is 54 percent white, while Williamsburg County is 65 percent black.

Secession supporters say moving to Florence County would mean a larger tax base, with better schools and services. Opponents claim the annexation is racially motivated.

The new election date will be determined by Gov. Dick Riley and will be limited only to those who voted in the earlier referendum, Ellisor said.

The state election panel made its decision after ruling earlier Wednesday that it didn't need to hold a new hearing on the issue.

Instead, commissioners said they could decide the protest by reviewing testimony given last week to the Williamsburg County Board of Canvassers, which deadlocked along racial lines.

Secession supporters said a new referendum should be held because of the numbers on the paper ballots, which corresponded with numbers on a sheet where voters signed their names. Opponents of secession said there was no evidence that any votes were revealed.

Although "unfortunate," the numbering was a "rather natural mistake" that could have been avoided if the ballots had been rechecked before the election, Ellisor said.

Edward Graham, who represented secession supporters, said there was "one critical fact that everyone agrees on. Each and every ballot involved in this election ... was numbered."

He contended that having numbers on the ballots was unconstitutional.

However, Charles Barr, who represented secession opponent James Pasley, said, "The evidence is not sufficient to invalidate the election."

"There is no proof that actual identity of persons voting would correspond to the number on the ballot," Barr said.

"Although you can determine how people voted, no one determined how people voted," said Gordon Jenkinson, an attorney representing Williamsburg County.

Jenkinson pointed to the large turnout at the polls for the referendum and to the current anonymity of the voters.

"There was no chilling of voters at the polls. No one was chilled and did not appear at the polls. ... No one has been identified as of this date. At this stage of the proceeding, the secrecy has not been violated," he said.

On the three-member Williamsburg County election board, the Rev. George Coursar, who is black, voted to uphold the election results, while Durward Lewis, who is white, voted for a new election. The third board member disqualified himself.

Since election protests must be decided by a county majority, the matter was referred to the state level.

Customs Service Will Step Up Gulf Manpower

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. Customs Service is increasing its manpower to stop cocaine and marijuana smuggling, particularly along South Florida and the Gulf Coast, a customs official says.

In fiscal 1983, 4,731 pounds of cocaine and more than 2 million pounds of marijuana were seized, with a combined street value of more than $3 billion, said Customs Commissioner William von Raab.

Von Raab told a House subcommittee the seizures represent only a fraction of the illegal drugs entering the country and said customs has decided to add 80 new people to its Maritime Patrol. Sixty of them will be in the Southeast.

He said the additional manpower "will take us a long way toward meeting this nation's serious drug threat."

Vice Admiral Benedict L. Stabile, vice commandant of the Coast Guard, told of a shift away from seaborne smuggling and an increase in airdrop activity. He said that this shows that law enforcement efforts are having an effect. Drug smuggling has become more difficult and expensive for the trafficker, he said.

Stabile said most maritime drug traffic destined for Florida and the Atlantic and Gulf Coast regions leaves from South American or Caribbean staging areas. He called marijuana from the Guajira Peninsula on the north coast of Colombia "the prime example."

Rep. Glenn English, D-Okla., chairman of the Government Operations panel, said neither agency now has enough equipment to succeed in the drug interdiction program. "The drug traffickers are better equipped than is law enforcement," he said.

'Jesse Can't Shag' Spoofs Helms-Hunt Race

By TOM MINEHART
Associated Press Writer
CHARLOTTE (AP) — A pair of Charlotte songwriters has come up with a political spoof that centers on a dance called the shag and North Carolina's hotly-contested U.S. Senate race.

Scheduled to be released Wednesday, the tune "Jesse Can't Shag" gives star billing to North Carolina's Republican Sen. Jesse Helms, who is being challenged by Democratic Gov. Jim Hunt.

"Jesse can't shag, he's got two right feet.

"Jesse can't shag, he can't get the hang of it.

"Jesse can't shag, he don't try anymore.

"Come on Jesse, shag or get off the floor."

Jack Dillard, who wrote the lyrics to "Jesse Can't Shag," said copies of the record would be sent today to some 200 North Carolina radio stations, to stations elsewhere in the country and to Helms and Hunt.

"We don't know what this is going to do," he said. "We're going to have a little fun with it and capitalize on the situation."

Helms could not be reached for comment and did not return telephone calls. An aide in his Washington office who asked not to be identified said she didn't know if the senator could dance the shag, but she added, "It wouldn't be any great loss if he couldn't."

The song itself has comment of sorts from Helms — a tag line spoken by former disc jockey Ed

Galloway imitating Helms' voice. "Now hold on a cotton-pickin' minute," the voice says. "What kind of communist plot is this? Jim Hunt can't shag either, he's a Baptist. Equal time, I demand equal time and by George I'm gonna have it."

The shag, danced to beach music along the coast and in college towns in North Carolina and South Carolina, is like a cross between the jitterbug and the bop, Dillard said.

Dillard, 34, who works for a Charlotte advertising firm, said he and high-school buddy Craig Fulton, 35, did most of the work on the song. They have collaborated on several serious songs for country and beach-music artists and a few other "novelty" songs, but this is their first political spoof.

"I myself am a Jim Hunt man, but Craig I suspect is a Jesse Helms fan," said Dillard, adding that the Democratic Party and the Hunt campaign had nothing to do with the song.

Dillard and Fulton, an admissions recruiter for the University of North Carolina at Charlotte, also perform musical comedy acts, including a spoof on preppies called "The Izods."

Dillard said the band performing "Jesse Can't Shag" is called the Filibusters, but he said they wished to remain anonymous.

"They all wore hoods when they came into the recording studio," he said. "But there is absolutely no truth to the rumor that Rita Jenrette is one of the back-up singers."

The record is the first coming out under the Bullmoose label, which Dillard and Fulton created to "give us some splash" on the song.

Dillard said he would donate $1 from sale of each of the singles to the federal deficit fund in Washington. "We would like nothing better than to wipe out the whole thing, a $210 billion deficit, one record at a time," he said.

Commissioner Prepares 'Wish List'

By JOHN DINGMAN
Associated Press Writer
JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — More troopers, more money, more facilities — they're all on the "wish list" of Mississippi Public Safety Commissioner James L. Roberts Jr. But, he says, the state's tight-money budget means he must work with what he has.

He said he decided when he took the post six months ago that he would not press the Legislature for more, on the theory the department should try to do its job with what it had.

"But when I absolutely have to have something, I will let the Legislature know in great detail" and let the people know, he said, "not to place blame, but to give the public a status report."

When it comes to future needs, "the sky is the limit" for the Narcotics Bureau, he said, in view of the magnitude of the drug control problem in the state.

Roberts moved into the job after serving 12 years as Pontotoc County prosecutor, a post he credits with giving him great insight into law enforcement matters.

Like many a young lawyer, he said he took the job for experience, and "somewhat to my surprise, I found I enjoyed law enforcement."

He said his experience in working with local police matches what the Highway Patrol must do: Work in close coordination with sheriffs and local police.

Unlike the troopers in Louisiana, Alabama and many other states, the Highway Patrol in Mississippi is limited to its basic job of highway safety on state and interstate roads.

But Roberts said he does not feel this restricted the patrol's ability to enforce the law.

The criminal investigation division of the Public Safety Department has jurisdiction everywhere in the state, and the Narcotics Bureau and the Crime Lab also work statewide.

And, as he pointed out, "there are a lot of felonies" that occur on the highways.

Roberts said any attempt to turn the Patrol and the other divisions into a full-fledged state police operation would be prohibitively expensive. At least 100 more troopers would be needed, along with all the equipment that would go with them.

"In our case, it would require troopers to have training they do not get now," he said. "They are not trained to handle such things as domestic disturbances."

"It would cost a ton of money to make the change."

He said that while he does not argue against the concept of a state police force, he doesn't plan to work for it in Mississippi.

"I am going to work within the system as it is," he added. "The sheriffs are good, we have a workable system, and we can work in coordination with them."

Roberts said he was disturbed that money and staff restrictions make it impossible for the Highway Patrol to mount a 24-hour road operation of the type he would like.

But he said that during the New Orleans World's Fair, troopers are out 24 hours a day in the central and southern parts of the state. And, he said, all of them are on quick call if needed.

He also is disturbed, as a former prosecutor, with the long appeals time involved in some cases.

He recalled that one case he helped handle in Pontotoc County resulted in a death sentence almost nine years ago, and the man still is on Death Row in the state penitentiary in Parchman.

Although Roberts said he does not want to deprive anyone of due process, there had to be a point where litigation must cease.

"I do not know what the magic deadline is," he said. "Six months is too early, but eight or nine years is too long."

"I do think there has to be an alpha and an omega, a beginning and an end, and we need to get back to the omega concept in law enforcement."

Roberts said he still is learning his job, doing it by getting out into the field more and more on late afternoons and weekends.

He said that although he has not actually ridden patrol with troopers, he had made a practice of stopping in at patrol stations. He recalled that he had startled two troopers when he dropped into a truck stop at Meridian and found them on their lunch break.

But he was quick to emphasize that he is "not a snooper."

Roberts said he did not seek his job, and, in fact, took it with some reluctance. And, he added, he was not committed to the future.

But, he said, one of the things his agency needs "as much as anything is permanence in leadership."

"Historically, there has been a total change in leadership every four years, and it is difficult to accomplish the things that need to be done."

His predecessor, retired Lt. Gen. Sidney Berry, spent two days briefing him on the post, he said. Then, Berry told me "I probably could run it, and probably should do so," and left.

That, Roberts said, is just what he's trying to do — full time.

Homemakers New Target

By WILLIAM E. SCHULZ
Associated Press Writer
DALTON, Ga. (AP) — The American tufted carpet industry, crippled by recession after it turned 20 years old, has matured and is aiming its sights at a new market, America's homemakers.

"Our industry is 25 or 30 years old, at most. Tufted construction (compared with woven carpets) revolutionized the industry. Ninety percent now is tufted. We rebuilt from the ground up," said Ronald E. VanGeldren, president of the Dalton-based Carpet and Rug Institute.

Tufted carpet was easier and cheaper to produce, with a wide variety of colors and patterns. With those choices, "people just decided they were not going to step out of bed in the morning onto a cold floor," he said.

In just a few years, America went from wood floors and rugs to a lifestyle that was 76 percent carpeted. Housing starts and commercial construction boomed and builders wanted miles of carpet for plywood floors.

It brought boom to north Georgia where there are some 300 carpet plants, plus supplier plants, such as yarn makers, and about 30,000 industry jobs. About 73 percent of the nation's carpet is made in north Georgia, VanGeldren said.

Recession hit the carpet industry hard in the early '80s. Production, which reached a record 1.2 billion square yards in 1979, sagged to 890 million yards in 1982. This year's production may hit 1.1 billion yards.

"Depression creates ideas — 'How do you do more with less?'" he said.

That brought new technology and new management.

One example, VanGeldren said in an interview, is foam dying, which is rapidly replacing water dying. It saves the cost of the water and saves the cost of fuel to dry the died carpet.

"Financially it has been difficult for the carpet makers," he said. "It has really changed, from the old entrepreneur who could make money in spite of himself to the manager of today. Now there is more professional management."

"Today the company that has smart management is flourishing. The one that has not seen the light is hurting."

To fight its way out of the recession, the industry devised several strategies, including introduction of new, easy-care fibers and anti-static carpet.

"Those two were almost revolutionary," VanGeldren said. In addition, hundreds of new styles were introduced. At the Chicago carpet show this year, 96 companies introduced 362 new carpets.

Life Imitates Art, And Back Again In Upcoming ABC Television Series

By JERRY BUCK
AP Television Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Here's a case of life imitating art and art imitating life: an old radio show, "Mr. Keen, Tracer of Lost Persons," inspires Lloyd Shulman to become a missing persons investigator and he in turn inspires an upcoming ABC series, "Finder of Lost Loves."

"As a kid that was a fantastic program and I used to think, what a fantastic way to make a living," Shulman said. "I never thought that someday I would be doing that kind of work. In fact, I call my company 'Mr. Keen, Tracer of Missing Persons." Shulman, 55, has spent 24 years tracking lost persons — most specifically, lost loved ones. He reunites mothers and sons or brothers and sisters who haven't seen each other for decades. He estimates he's found more than 85,000 persons.

"I look for clients with an emotional need to get in touch with somebody," he said in a telephone interview. "A lot of people don't know where their mother or brother or daughter is. I solve so many of these problems and every time I do I get a tremendous personal feeling." Shulman said he began by tracing missing persons for banks and insurance companies but found it too impersonal.

"I usually feel that next to the person I'm looking for and the person I'm working for, I'm the person who cares the most," he said. "I feel like I'm part of the family. I feel I'm related to them for that one investigation."

"Then I go on to another case and hope to hit a home run again. It's a good feeling to know that except for you, that mother and daughter may never have gotten in touch with each other."

Shulman was the inspiration for

"Finder of Lost Loves," according to Sal Janucci of Aaron Spelling Productions. But, he said, the detective played by Tony Franciosa is not directly based on Shulman.

He said loved ones usually become lost because of divorce and broken families or because someone leaves home after an argument.

"One man told me he had been a Marine Corps drill sergeant and that was the way he ran his home," he said. "His son got fed up and left home 25 years ago."

"Stubbornness also plays a part, and people do move and have unlisted phone numbers. It's not always easy to get in touch with someone. Anything that can happen to people will happen to missing people. They die, they go to prison. Right now I'm looking for a lot of the hippies who left home in the 1960s."

Shulman said he traced people with the help of 10 staffers. He also has numerous contacts around the country.

A simple case that's quickly solved costs about $500, he said. Tougher cases can run to $2,000, but the average is less than $1,000. Shulman said clients pay 10 percent of the estimated cost in advance and nothing more until the person is found.

"If I don't find him," he said, "they don't pay."

Shulman added: "If everyone knows where everyone they care about is, that's a good feeling."

Martha Coolidge Directs 'Joy Of Sex' For Paramount Pictures

By BOB THOMAS
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — From "Valley Girl" to "Joy of Sex," Martha Coolidge's recent career as a film director seems at first blush to be based on libidinous sensation.

Not so, insists the film maker, who found early success with serious docudramas. "Valley Girl," which sounded like a ripoff of the Val-Girl fad, was praised by many critics as a funny and touching depiction of young love. The returns are not yet in for "Joy of Sex," which Paramount is releasing this month. Miss Coolidge insists the title is misleading.

"It's about sex, but it isn't a sex movie," explains the articulate, businesslike director. "It's about a 17-year-old girl who has been over-protected and wants to get experience. She wants love, but she doesn't know how to find it.

"She goes through the agonies of adolescence that all of us have endured, not knowing about sex, wondering how it is done, yearning to be alone with a boy, insecure of doing the right thing."

"The movie is extremely joyous, and it's the first adolescent sex comedy with no prostitutes. There is only a flash of background nudity, nothing important. The rating is R, but I don't think it should be. A PG13 (special guidance for children under 13) would be more appropriate. The picture is too sweet to be an R."

"Joy of Sex" has had a long history. Paramount Pictures bought title rights to the Alex Comfort sex manual 10 years ago, tried many approaches to a movie. All failed until the National Lampoon people took it on. Meanwhile, Paramount had been impressed by "Valley Girl" and proposed the project to the 37-year-old Miss Coolidge.

"I had been offered a lot of teen-age sex comedies after 'Valley Girl," said Miss Coolidge, "and 'Joy of Sex' was the only one that was not too raunchy."

She had filmed "Valley Girl" for an incredible $350,000 (reported gross: $17 million) and looked forward to the luxury of working for a major studio. Forget it. Paramount wanted "Joy of Sex" filmed for under $3 million. Miss Coolidge did.

"And I had only two weeks to prepare, because Paramount would lose rights to the title if the picture wasn't started before May 31 last year," she added.

The film was originally called "National Lampoon's Joy of Sex," but the Lampoon dropped out. "The tone of the picture is not what you associate with the National Lampoon," the director explained.

Miss Coolidge, who recently married producer Michael Backes, is now working in the Century City luxury of Tri-Star Pictures, preparing for a fall start of "Real Genius." Yes, it's another youth comedy, but this time she'll have a budget befitting her status as a can-do director.

'Phar Lap' Is Based On A Champion Horse

By BOB THOMAS
Associated Press Writer

"PHAR LAP" was the champion horse that became a legend in Australia by its winning ways and its mysterious death in California in 1932. It was inevitable that a Phar Lap biography would come from the burgeoning Australian film industry.

It's a good, strong racing movie, loaded with sentiment, as can be expected of the genre. The horse itself, as played by an oversized chestnut named Towering Inferno, is endearing, and the devotion of its trainer, Tommy Woodcock (Tom Burlinson), warms the heart. But two of the major characters prove less than lovable, and they help slice through the sentimentality.

The film begins with the arrival in Australia of an ungainly, wart-faced New Zealand horse, derided by everyone but a luckless trainer, Harry Telford (Martin Vaughan). Impressed by the horse's blood lines, Telford buys the animal for $336, sight unseen. The money comes from a tough-talking American businessman, Dave Davies (Ron Liebman), who agrees on a three-year lease to Telford.

Phar Lap (Siamese for lightning) seems like a loser until Telford overtrains it as a cure for laziness. Suddenly the horse starts winning. And winning.

After scoring 14 victories in a row, Phar Lap becomes a problem to the racing establishment and the bookies. The horse is shot at, required to carry 150 pounds in the Melbourne Cup. Phar Lap's strapper (handler) protests against such punishment, also the overtraining by Telford.

Phar Lap is sent to the $100,000 Agua Caliente Handicap, the world's richest. The horse wins, but there are ugly threats that its invincibility could threaten the underworld's gambling empire. Two weeks later, Phar Lap is dead. The cause remains undetermined.

Ship's Remains Offer Clues To Past

By STUART MORGAN

THE CSS CHATTAHOOCHEE — In this illustration by Bob Holcombe, director of the Confederate Naval Museum, the Confederate gunboat appears to be similar to many other schooner-rigged sailing vessels of the Civil War period. Only one stack, aft of the main mast, distinguishes the Chattahoochee as a steam-powered vessel.

After 121 years beneath Georgia's murky Chattahoochee River, the wreck of the Confederate gunboat, Chattahoochee survives. Her structural remains, partially buried in the muddy river bottom, offer clues to the vessel's past and provide historical information about the industrial facilities operating in Columbus, Ga., during the Civil War.

Eight students and four instructors from East Carolina University's seventh underwater archaeology summer field school recently braved hot weather and the river's eerie darkness to take advantage of the archaeological and historical opportunities presented by the Chattahoochee's remains. Their investigation of the wrecksite, located 12 miles south of Columbus, Ga., took place from June 17 to July 13.

Representing colleges from as far as Colorado and Canada, the students and the ECU instructors wanted to accomplish several objectives during the project. The objectives, developed by the James B. Woodruff Confederate Naval Museum to help determine potential for complete excavation and recovery of the sunken vessel, were: 1) to determine how much of the vessel has survived, and 2) to determine the condition of the remains.

Although most of the warship's remains still rest in the turbid waters of the Chattahoochee at a depth of 25 feet, a 30-foot stern section of the 130-foot ship (30 feet in beam and 10 feet in draft) was raised from the river near Fort Benning's Engineers Landing in 1964. The section is on display at the Confederate Naval Museum in Columbus.

The field school team members accomplished both objectives during their four-week stay and collected architectural and construction data and recovered artifacts from the site as well. The artifacts are now undergoing conservation in ECU's conservation laboratory. The data will be used in preparing an archaeological site report on the project.

Historical Background

According to ECU history professor Dr. William N. Still, Columbus was an important manufacturing center during the Civil War (1861-1865). Heavy guns, machinery parts, engines and boilers were manufactured there for Confederate warships such as the Chattahoochee. The town was also the site of a Confederate shipyard and an important center for railroad and water transportation throughout the 19th and early 20th centuries.

Dr. Still, who also co-directs the ECU graduate program in Maritime History and Underwater Research, said Columbus was the head of navigation for the Apalachicola-Chattahoochee River system. "Because vessels could not travel any further upriver," Dr. Still explained, "many docked at Columbus to load and unload passengers and cargoes." Lt. A.F. Crossman, a Union naval officer during the Civil War, was said to have described Columbus as "one of the great depots and sources of strength to the confederacy."

The CSS Chattahoochee carried six heavy guns and was built at Saffold, Early County, in 1861 and 1862. Her first commander was Lt. Gatesby Jones who previously commanded the Confederate Ironclad Virginia — better known as the Merrimac — in her famous battle against the USS Monitor at Hampton Roads, Va.

After Union forces captured the blockade runner Fashion (a schooner) up the Apalachicola River on May 24, 1863, the Chattahoochee became involved in the most important operation of its brief career. The ship, under the command of Lt. J.J. Gurthrie, attempted to rescue the Fashion.

The gunboat left the town of Chattahoochee on May 26 and continued 28 miles downriver to Blountstown Bar. Discovering that the water was only seven-and-a-half-feet deep at the bar (not enough to allow the 10-foot drafted gunboat's safe passage) Gurthrie ordered an overnight stay, hoping that the river would rise the following morning.

The river did not rise, however, and at 10 a.m. the next day the order was given to raise steam in preparation for returning to Chattahoochee. But a boiler explosion occurred aboard the gunboat. Fourteen men were killed in the blast. To prevent the vessel from falling into the hands of advancing Union Forces, the Confederates burned and then scuttled the three-masted, schooner-rigged, steam-powered vessel.

Work at the Site

After ECU instructors located and identified the wreck of the Chattahoochee, they led students in a reconnaissance of the wrecksite to familiarize them with the condition of the wreckage and the equipment they would use throughout the project.

Gordon P. Watts, director of underwater research at ECU and co-director of the school's graduate program in Maritime History and Underwater Research, directed the underwater activities. He was assisted by Wes Hall, archaeological assistant for the graduate program; Dr. Richard Stephenson, field assistant; and David Beard and Bruce Terrell, graduate assistants.

Following the reconnaissance, the 12-member team established a longitudinal baseline (for reference) through the wreck along the keelson. The keelson — a longitudinal beam fastened inside the hull along the keel — was partially exposed above the river bottom.

Next, the team exposed a set of frames running across the vessel and took a cross section in order to establish the lines (configuration) of the vessel at that point.

"We also established a baseline on shore to tie in the position of the wreck and its relationship to the river bank," Hall explained. "After establishing that baseline, we selected a test excavation area in the vicinity of the main mast step forward of the engineering space. We estimated that we would be able to obtain more archaeological information from that area," Hall added.

Working with their above-water counterparts, students investigating the wreck used an induction dredge to remove soil from the excavation area. They also used an air lift to remove sediment from the wrecksite.

"Utilizing a water-jet probe and transect line," Hall said, "we were able to determine the depth of sediment burying the wreck and the type of material (wood, metal, etc.) buried beneath the river bottom."

Despite poor water visibility, the team used an underwater video camera and underwater 35 millimeter cameras to record features of the wrecksite. In addition, the team conducted a magnetometer survey of the wreck area, and recovered four solid-shot cannonballs, four ventilation grates (probably used to ventilate the engine room below deck), and an assortment of artifacts, including fasteners such as spikes, and nails. A phathometer (depth recorder) was used to develop a contour map of the river bottom in and around the wrecksite.

"The artifacts we recovered, the majority of which were associated with the gunboat's engineering space, document the level of technological sophistication achieved by the industrial complex in Columbus during the Civil War," Watts said.

"Those artifacts suggest that some material associated with the construction of the ship, such as fastenings from England, may have been brought through the Union Blockade.

"We have discussed informally the possibility of returning to Columbus to assist the Confederate Naval Museum in additional investigation of the wreck," Watts said. "But before any concrete plans can be made, we will have to complete our analysis of the archaeological and historical information generated by this summer's project."

Ohioan Joins Blackbeard Cast

By CAROL BLACKLEY TYER
Reflector Staff Writer

Actress Kathleen Holmes says she's never had to project her voice over wind and crickets before, but has found she loves it.

The Ohio resident has the role of Mary Ormond, Blackbeard's mistress, in the outdoor drama "Blackbeard" now being performed each Thursday through Saturday at 8:45 p.m. at the Bath Amphitheater in Bath. This is the first time she has been in an outdoor drama.

Miss Holmes participated in a "cattle call" audition for many outdoor dramas all at once in Chapel Hill last spring. She was called back to try out for six different productions and was chosen for the leading role in Blackbeard.

A tall stately brunette, she follows a shorter blond Shauna Barnaby who played Mary Ormond for several years. "I think Stuart Aronson visualized Mary Ormond as a short cute blond," she said, "but he's flexible and seems happy with me in the role. I'd never worked with a director who was also the writer of a play before," she said. "I thought it might be difficult because most writers have such an emotional investment in their work. But Stuart is wonderful to work with. He's conscientious, yet reasonable and open to input from others."

Kathleen has been involved in theater since she was 14. She says she attended a Thespian-oriented high school in Perry County, Ohio, and consequently accrued much experience in drama both on and off the stage by her junior year in high school. Then, along with her brother, Robert, also an actor and dancer, she transferred to Fort Hayes School for the Performing Arts in Columbus, Ohio, to complete her senior year, taking a few academic courses simultaneously at Bexley High School there.

Her other two brothers, Tim, 17, and Sean, 12, are also involved in theater, as is her father, who began acting after she and Robert did. "The only person in the family not in the theater," she said, "is my mother. She's developing her career in another field. She's a buyer for Limited Express, a chain of stores which sells high fashion for teenagers."

Her parents and her brother, Sean, came to Bath to see her in "Blackbeard" and be with her on her birthday, July 14.

At the end of her summer stay at the home of Miss Lizzie Swindell in Bath, Miss Holmes said she will return to Ohio University, where she is majoring in theatre. When she's not on the "Blackbeard" stage or working in the business office of the "Blackbeard" theater, she practices for roles for which she expects to try out next year. She looks forward to an internship in professional theater during her senior year and will be applying at various well-known theaters around the country in the near future.

Introducing Trooper II, Isuzu's First Convertible.

Meet Trooper II, a compact workhorse of a truck that converts to a 4X4 off-roader that converts to a roomy van that converts to a station wagon.

Its rugged, 4X4 construction is designed to handle off-road conditions, yet deliver a comfortable ride on the highway. Its 79 cubic feet of rear cargo space is the biggest in its class. And with an optional rear bench seat, it'll carry a family of 5 and still give you over 45 cubic feet of cargo space.

Whatever you ask of it, wherever you want it to go, Trooper II will perform, like a real trooper.

 Opening lead: Ace of ♠.

On defense, choosing the right suit to attack is often only part of the problem. Equally important is which card you lead.

North-South conducted a routine auction to an acceptable game. The contract would have been virtually a laydown had there been no wasted values in clubs. With nothing to guide him, West chose the ace of clubs as his opening lead.

When dummy appeared, two things were obvious: It was futile to continue clubs; and the defenders would have to get their tricks in a hurry, because the diamond suit on the table offered a rich source of discards.

It was also clear the only suit that offered any hope for the defense was hearts. So West shifted to the ace of hearts and continued with the jack—"I had to find you with the K-10 of hearts, partner!" Declarer covered with dummy's queen and his 10 became a trick—making four-odd.

West's analysis was right as far as it went, but it did not go far enough! If West finds the right shift at trick two, he need find his partner with no more than K-9 of hearts to defeat the contract.

The winning defense at trick two is to shift to the jack of hearts. (A low heart is no good—declarer simply plays low from the board.) East captures dummy's queen with the king and returns the suit. Now declarer's 10 is trapped by the combined East-West tenace. Try it.

Congress Jabs At Pentagon's Tool Prices

WASHINGTON (AP) — Blow by blow, Congress is getting its money's worth out of the Pentagon's $436 claw hammer.

The fabled hammer, the $9.609 allen wrench and the $265.50 screw-driver were hauled out of the $652 tool box at yet another Capitol Hill news conference on Wednesday to decry the Defense Department's spare parts procurement practices.

Rep. Barbara Boxer, D-Calif., wore an $850 cable bracket around her neck ("the chain was extra") and complained that "it cost more than my wedding band." She reminded the roomful of reporters and television cameras that she was a sponsor of House-passed legislation designed to enhance competition in the military's spare parts market.

The only new wrinkle was the presentation of a mock "spare parts catalog," assembled by a private group called the Defense Budget Project, which listed 86 items which the Pentagon once bought — or planned to buy — at exorbitant prices. None of the information was new.

Most of the items displayed Wednesday have long been brandished on the floor of the House by Rep. Berkley Bedell, D-Iowa, who spearheaded the reform legislation approved two months ago. He did not participate in the replay.

Sen. Rudy Boschwitz, R-Minn., was scheduled to show up, but didn't. An aide, Tom Mason, said the senator had the flu.

On Tuesday, a Pentagon spokesman had attempted to blunt the event in advance, calling it "guerrilla theater" linked to the political season. Boschwitz is running for re-election, as is Ms. Boxer.

"I want to beg your indulgence long enough to point out that all of the items in the catalog were found by Department of Defense auditors, and we have corrected those problems and even rewarded those who helped us find those items," said Michael Burch. "In almost all instances, we've obtained a refund."

"There are some people who are attempting to use this issue for their own political gains ... and I'm not saying it's limited to Democrats," he added.
