Gillam Says 'Not Interested' In State Post

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

State Rep. John Gillam says his motives in seeking funds for a new state post in eastern North Carolina did not involve his personal future. The Windsor Democrat said those who say he wanted the job for himself were "playing politics."

The question of why Gillam sought funding for an area economic development coordinator, to work through the Department of Community Colleges, in eastern North Carolina has been raised by some people in recent weeks.

Gillam included provisions for the funding in legislation which provided so-called "pork barrel" funds for special projects supported by members of the General Assembly.

The omnibus local appropriations bill, which provided the money for various local projects throughout the state, includes a $30,000 appropriation "from the General Fund to the Department of Community Colleges ... to hire an area economic development coordinator for northeastern North Carolina," for fiscal year 1984-85.

Gillam, as the representative from the 6th House District, represents Bethel and Carolina townships in Pitt County, and portions of Martin, Bertie and Hertford counties in the General Assembly.

Several eastern North Carolina Democrats, in conversations over the past several weeks, have suggested that Gillam has been seeking the position. None would speak for attribution.

Gillam, contacted Friday, said he was not interested in the development post.

"I am very thankful that we got the money ... (but) I am not interested in the job," Gillam said.

Contacted by phone at Nags Head, where he is vacationing, Gillam said "obviously people are enjoying playing politics while I'm on vacation.

"The money will be used to look at economic development in a way similar to the way (former governor) Luther Hodges looked at economic deveopment with Wake, Orange and Durham counties in the 1950s," Gillam said "... as seed money to see if it will work. That's what the community colleges were designed for, to educate and train people for industry."

According to Gillam, "Nothing surprises me in politics. This sort of adds into the type of thing my family and I have had to put up with for the past few months ... another example of what's been going on.

"But I can assure you, I am gainfully employed, and that I appreciate everyone's interest in helping me with my welfare ... but I question whether they are really interested or not. I find it comical."

Former Gov. Bob Scott, president of the state's community college system, also rejected the idea that Gillam has been seeking the job, saying he has had no request to hire Gillam.

"None of us (at the community colleges' state office) have seen him (Gillam)," Scott said, and "nobody's applied for the position. In fact, we're not ready for that. We're still trying to come up with a job description."

Scott said "What happened, he (Gillam), early on in the short session, came by to express interest in joining the community college system. We talked in vague generalities, and nothing was said one way or the other, except I said we didn't have any positions available ... or money.

"I said some of the schools might be interested (in hiring Gillam). That was the sum and substance of it."

However, Scott said,"when the (local appropriations) bill came out two days before they (the General Assembly) adjourned," the money for the development coordinator was included.

"That was the first time we saw it," Scott said. "In fact, we didn't ask for it." But Scott suggested, "Now that we've got it, we will do something with it."

Scott said "all the state is covered presently" by community college development coordinators.

"We do have one for northeast North Carolina," Scott said, but acknowledged that the present coordinators cover rather large areas. "What we'll do is divide that ... or take a little bit out of the eastern Piedmont area" to form a

July Left Record Rainfall

Sun rarely peeped from behind dark rain clouds during the month of July in Pitt County and, according to Cliff Strickland of the Greenville Utilities Commission Water Plant, a record 12.36 inches of rain fell during the period.

The Water Plant's records date back through 1970, and Strickland said that during the past 14 years July 1977 had the least amount of rain — .88 inches.

Strickland said July 1984 "set no records as far as highs go." Last July, Pitt County had a high of 101 degrees, and in July 1977 temperatures soared to a record high of 104 degrees. A record low temperature of 51 degrees occurred in July 1975, Strickland said.

July 1984 was the coolest overall except for July 1970 when temperatures averaged a few degrees lower for the entire month. Strickland described last month's weather as "fairly mild and rainy."

Fuel Explosion On Florida Key Injures 4 People

MARATHON, Fla. (AP) — A 10,000-gallon fuel tank exploded at a dock here Saturday, shooting a fireball hundreds of feet in the air, injuring four people and destroying a warehouse, mobile homes and boats, authorities said.

Local firefighters took two hours to extinguish the blaze on this island in the Florida Keys and hosed down two other fuel tanks to keep them from exploding, said Jerry Powell, spokesman for the Monroe County sheriff's office.

One man was admitted to Fishermen's Hospital with burns on his upper body, while three firefighters were treated for smoke inhalation, hospital officials said.

The blast and the fire leveled most of the 200-foot-long Pinellas Oil Dock on Boot Key Harbor, including a marine-parts warehouse and two mobile homes, Powell said.

Two fiberglass boats were melted to the water line, Powell said.

The blaze started just before 2 p.m. EDT when the motor of a fuel truck pumping gasoline into a 10,000-gallon tank on the dock raced out of control and exploded, Powell said.

The driver, Paul Anderson, 30, of Florida City, was burned in the initial explosion but jumped into the water to put out the flames, Powell said.

He was taken treated at the hospital for first- and second-degree burns on his upper body.

Darbie said he called for help, but minutes later the flames from the truck spread to the fuel tank, which expoded and shot a fireball and a column of black smoke hundreds of feet into the air.

A deputy who arrived after Darbie's initial call used his patrol vehicle's loudspeaker to advise nearby residents to evacuate.

The area is not heavily populated, but people were in the vicinity working on boats, Powell said.

Firefighters from Marathon were on the scene in five minutes, and volunteers from nearby Conch Key, Big Pine Key and Sugar Loaf Key soon followed, Powell said.

Marijuana Sites Found

By The Associated Press

Marijuana plants valued at about $600,000 were found in a first-of-its-kind air search Saturday conducted by State Bureau of Investigation agents, county sheriffs and the North Carolina National Guard Aviation Division, authorities said.

About 600 to 700 plants with a street value of $1,000 each were found and destroyed in nine or 10 counties, according to SBI Assistant Director Cuyler L. Windham. Windham said he couldn't say in which counties the search was conducted because of the possibility of arrests. But the search was conducted in both the eastern and western parts of the state, he said.

No arrests were made, he said. "That will come after an investigation," he said. "It depends on whether you can tie it (the marijuana) to somebody."

ECU Hopeful Body Gifts Will Continue

Two East Carolina University medical school officials said they hope the indictment of the curator of anatomical material at the University of North Carolina Medical School will not deter the public from donating their bodies to a medical school.

Lester S. Sandlin, 42, the curator of anatomical material at the UNC-Chapel Hill school of medicine for eight years, was indicted last Monday on charges of stealing and selling 11 cadavers belonging to the medical school. The bodies were shipped to a medical school in Martinique, an island in the West Indies.

Dr. William E. Laupus, dean of the East Carolina University School of Medicine, said "all this (investigation) has done is upset a lot of people who are interested in donating their bodies to science."

"Donations from people are handled with great delicacy and care and we (at the East Carolina University Medical School) do our best to see that everything is appropriate for the families and those who may be involved," Laupus explained.

The dean said the ECU medical school has been studied and no similar problems were found.

"We have occasional times when we have more cadavers than we can use at any given time, but we don't ever sell bodies and wouldn't conceive of it," the dean said.

"There is really no surplus of bodies," Laupus added. "In the past several years at ECU, we had close calls as to whether we had enough bodies for our own needs."

Dr. Carl Morgan, chairman of the school's department of anatomy, said 90 percent of the cadavers used in anatomy classes at ECU are donated.

"Other bodies are given to the medical schools when someone dies without any family or friends and the body is unclaimed," Morgan said.

"By state law the body becomes the property of the state and is turned over to the North Carolina Commission of Anatomy, the governmental body responsible for seeing that donations are handled properly. The body is then turned over to one of the four medical schools in the state, usually based on geography. If the body is located in eastern North Carolina, the ECU medical school usually gets the body.

"We have an adequate number of cadavers, but we don't have a

Latin America: A Lesson In Borrowing

By EDUARDO GALLARDO
Associated Press Writer

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) — The borrowing spree launched a decade ago to modernize Latin America has come to a painful halt with many of the largest projects unfulfilled and the region $350 billion in debt.

The burden of paying the money back to lenders has risen to 65 cents of every dollar earned from exports. For the past two years, virtually all new loans from banks have gone to pay interest owed to these same banks.

Meanwhile, huge public-works projects started with earlier loans have failed to pay off. Some are halted or slowed by the continent's deep recession. Others were so ill-conceived they are losing millions of dollars after years in operation.

Where did the money go?

— Most countries, including Brazil and Mexico, the two largest debtors, concentrated their funds on government projects like dams, factories and roads to build the basis for future prosperity. Some projects worked, others didn't, some show promise.

— Military regimes that dominated Latin America in the 1970s borrowed billions to import new weaponry.

— A commonly reported drain in some of the countries is the pockets of corrupt officials.

— Even less traceable are the $80 billion in loans to private Latin American sources. (The Swiss-based Bank of International Settlements estimates that at least $50 billion slipped out of the region between 1978 and 1982 to be invested in property or banks in the same financial centers where the money was borrowed.)

Brazil completed a world-competitive steel complex and Mexico just inaugurated the world's longest aqueduct, to relieve the city of Monterrey from chronic drought.

Brazil has also spent $14 billion in nine years building Itaipu, the world's largest hydroelectric dam, without yet receiving a kilowatt of power. It has poured $3.5 billion into three nuclear power plants, but the only one operating is down most of the time for repairs.

Colombia's joint venture with Exxon to open the world's biggest open pit coal mine is expected to earn the country $100 million a year in exports, but production is at least two years away.

The bottom line of the spending binge is this: Latin Americans' per capita income rose from $2,270 in 1973 to a peak of $2,770 in 1980 but then, as the growing debt burden helped produce a recession, it fell to $2,520 last year. The people of Argentina, Bolivia, Chile, Peru and Venezuela — all heavily indebted countries — earn even less now than they did a decade ago.

Nowhere is the soul searching over borrowing habits more intense than in Argentina, where the armed forces inherited a foreign debt of nearly $9 billion upon seizing power in 1976 and quintupled it before retreating to the barracks last December.

After months of investigation just to determine the size and breakdown of the debt, the new civilian government charged that, of $43.6 billion owed by Argentina, about $30 billion was spent on unproductive ventures.

"This debt was contracted without significant compensation in physical or technological goods," President Raul Alfonsin told his countrymen. "On the contrary, this debt brought with it the destruction of part of the productive capacity that existed here."

Latin nations began borrowing heavily in 1974 — the year after OPEC shot up the price of oil — to defray the cost of imported oil. The loans came largely from private U.S. banks that had to recycle dollars deposited by the oil exporters. The easy credit also spurred massive oil development in Mexico and Venezuela, the region's main producers.

Until then, Latin America had received most of its loans from governments and agencies, such as the World Bank, which lent for specific development projects. The sudden outpouring of commerical bank credit was less discriminate.

As billions of dollars flowed to governments for "free disposition," many countries used the money as subsidies to keep gasoline prices low. They assumed, wrongly as time proved, that the oil shock was temporary and they became hooked on those loans by the time oil prices leaped again in 1979, forcing new borrowing to cover trade deficits.

Some improvement projects financed by foreign loans became

The city of Buenos Aires marked its 400th birthday in 1980 by opening its first expressways — one of the few visible fruits of Argentina's borrowing. The expressways were supposed to be self financing, but too few motorists were willing to pay tolls. The city has lost $100 million.

Bolivia, borrowing against its promising oil reserves, built one of the region's most sophisticated refineries. But that only diverted resources from exploration, and production diminished as the reserves ran down. The refinery is working at half capacity and Bolivia, which stopped exporting oil six years ago, could become an oil importer in 1985.

SIDOR, a Venezuelan steel complex expanded with bank loans, has lost tens of millions of dollars in each of the past six years. So much cash was consumed by Venezuela's state bureaucracy of 47 autonomous agencies that one financial analyst said "corruption was the largest project undertaken."

Large sums disappeared from PEMEX, Mexico's oil monopoly, during the oil boom years when it borrowed $18 billion. Its former director, Jorge Diaz Serrano, is on trial with others allegedly involved in a $34 million fraud case.

In Haiti, millions of dollars lent by Canada and the International Monetary Fund vanished from the nation's central bank in 1981, prompting both to suspend credits to Haiti until fiscal discipline was introduced.

Military hardware swallowed other large credits. Peru and Ecuador, which held a bloody border skirmish in 1981, spent about one fourth of their foreign borrowing on imported arms. Argentina's military chiefs spent about $8 billion preparing for the war they lost to Britain over the Falkland Islands.

A shift to free-market economies in Argentina and Chile put more loans in private hands but made them no more productive. Overvalued currencies in both countries made foreign goods far cheaper, encouraging spending sprees for imported cars, TV sets, refrigerators and whiskey. Argentines spent an estimated $5.5 billion on shopping trips to Miami and other foreign cities.

"Most of Chile's debt was contracted by Chilean banks and not by productive industries because the biggest business here was lending money for consumption," said Ricardo Lagos, a Chilean economist critical of the military government's policies.

Argentine speculators borrowed $3 billion and loaned it out in Argentine pesos, making huge profits on the spreads between interest and exchange rates, according to an official audit in Buenos Aires.

Chile's two largest financial conglomerates profited in the same way, but both collapsed with the Chilean peso in 1982. Among their assets seized by the central bank were 20,000 unsold luxury apartments built in a speculative frenzy with foreign loans amid an acute shortage of working-class housing.

The same currency imbalances prompted wealthy Latin Americans to send their savings abroad. Mexicans own $25 billion worth of U.S. property, according to official Mexican figures.

Although no job description has been written for the new position, Scott said, "Basically, whoever fills it will be contacting industries in the area with respect to training needs for employees ... staying in touch with industrial developers .. anything to do with respect to industrial recruitment. They will serve in a coordinating capacity between schools and businesses and industries of the region ... those are the major broad functions ... planning training programs."

Gillam did not seek re-election to his state House seat and lost a bid to unseat incumbent Rep. Walter Jones for the Democratic nomination to the 1st Congressional District seat in the May primary.

During the campaign, he called for "the creation of an economic development council of the 21 counties of the 1st Congressional District ... the first of its kind, to identify local and regional resources ... to attract small, clean industry to eastern North Carolina."

Other special projects money included in the bill by Gillam were $5,000 each for the Martin County Players Fund and the Hotel Freeman restoration project, as well as $2,500 each for the Asa Briggs Homeplace and the Gallery Theater.

Computer Board Started Locally

A new personal computer "bulletin board" has been established in Greenville for use by computer users.

The People's Message System (PMS)-Greenville is a telecommunications system which allows a computer owner to use a modem or a device which connects the computer to a local telephone line to send and receive messages and other data. The user can also place items for sale and exchange programs with other users. Feature articles also will be placed on the system.

The system will be expanded in the future allowing a user to upload and download programs directly from the "bulletin board" to his computer for his personal use.

System operator Ross Shuping of Greenville said the "bulletin board" is a free service for the area computer users, centered mainly around the Apple Computer. Other systems will be supported as space permits.

Shuping also noted the software for the system was developed by Bill Blue of Santee, Calif., and will be a fulltime system with a 30-minute limit for each user. The number for the system is 756-3369.

Unknown Buried

ORANGE, Va. (UPI) — Some 125 members of recreated Civil War regiments from as far away as Texas gathered Saturday to lay to rest an unknown Confederate soldier shot out of a tree more than 100 years ago.

The mourners, many dressed in authentic period costumes, followed a horse-drawn hearse to a small cemetery just on the outskirts of this central Virginia community of 1,500.

surplus" at ECU, Morgan said.

"By law, medical schools do not buy bodies and by law, we do not sell bodies," he stated. "On the other hand, there are certain expenses incurred in preparing these bodies for dissection and in transporting bodies from hospitals and local communities to the medical schools.

"If a funeral director assists us in bringing the body to the medical school, we do compensate him for his services," Morgan said. "The North Carolina Commission of Anatomy has set a fee structure for the expenses. Funeral homes are paid $1 per mile one way to cover transportation expenses.

"If a funeral director embalms the body, he is entitled to a fee of up to $100. If he procures the death certificate and gets all the paper work done, he is entitled to $5. If the body is at a hospital, there is no extra fee, but if the funeral home has to go to a home to remove the body, a $20 fee will be paid for that," Morgan noted.

"The question in Sandlin's case is did he receive money for the bodies or money for the transporation of the bodies," Morgan suggested.

"Sandlin has been indicted, but until all the facts are out, we will not know if he has done something wrong. He may not be convicted," Morgan said. "The bodies weren't mistreated in any way and nothing was done to them that wouldn't have been done in Chapel Hill. The question is over money that has changed hands."

Cadavers are used in medical schools throughout the nation to teach aspiring doctors about the parts of the body.

According to an Associated Press story, Sandlin's attorney, Ann Loflin of Durham, said Sandlin did nothing improper. She said the bodies were surplus cadavers and that Sandlin received no payment for them aside from money to cover transportation costs to a Florida mortuary that shipped the bodies to a medical school in Martinique.

Space Stations Could Only Add To Knowledge

New horizons invariably grab our attention.

Space flight and the exploitation of space are now almost old stuff; but they continue to hold high places in those new horizons that cross our fields of vision and imagination. We look forward to each step much as youngsters anticipate birthdays and Christmas. The concepts stir wells of enthusiasm.

Such is the case with the proposal our country lay the groundwork for a permanently-manned station in space that would be much larger and infinitely more capable of broader roles in a multitude of research and manufacturing fields. The project, discussed by President Reagan in an upcoming magazine article, is said to have an initial funding of $150 million included in already-signed legislation.

It's no new idea. Visionaries projected such a goal long before the first orbital flights. We would assume dozens of practical and impractical plans for space stations have been blueprinted by engineers and stored for consideration when the time was "right." That time is apparently very near. No target date has been set, but the early 1990s are eyed as an achievable goal.

Most of the know-how already exists.

There is no way one could tally practical benefits accrued from past investments in this country's continuing space programs. They affect our daily lives in many ways; their value (dollar-wise) is incalculable.

At this point we stand on the edge of a golden age.

For most of us a year seems like a very long time; but somewhere each year there are teams of people making progress on every important problem we can think of. The acquisition of knowledge and its application is simply snowballing at undreamed-of rates. The space station project will add even more impetus and serve as a stimulus to learning among our young people as well as active participation by ever more scientists and industrialists.

The dividends can only be beyond imagining.

All-Male Colleges Find Life Rough

In this era of the ERA we read with some surprise that the all-women's college is surviving while the all-male schools are disappearing.

Within the Tar Heel state alone we have Salem College, Peace, Meredith, St. Mary's, Bennett and Queen's College. The Associated Press story reporting on the women's college scene says there are only two all-male schools, Wabash (in Indiana) and Hampden-Sydney (in Virginia) in the country. Even they are seeing pressures to admit women as students.

Part of the explanation may lie in that more women are now attending college than men.

But Wabash President Lewis Salter says women just don't get a fair shake in the coed classroom. He feels turning coed can lead to the "deterioration of educational opportunities for women because all the leadership positions are grabbed by men, and women defer to men in most classroom situations."

We wonder.

The demise of all-male schools implies other factors at work; and strength of the women's colleges reinforces those suspicions.

Could it be the now "liberated" women are in the process of affirming greater aggressiveness than the males? That's not very ladylike.

Sunday Morning Notes

Along a stretch near the intersection with Memorial Drive Brown-Wood Pontiac-Cadillac, Grant Buick, Pechelas Volkswagon, Toyota East, Joe Culliper Chrusler-Plymouth, Dodge and Peugeot and Bob Barbour Subaru, Renault, Volvo, Honda dealerships are located. Hastings Ford is father east on Greenville Boulevard and Holt Oldsmobile is soon to move to West Greenville Boulevard.

Farther south on Memorial Boulevard, Phelps Chevrolet and East Carolina Lincoln Mercury GMC are located.

It wasn't always that way, however. There has been a gradual move by auto dealers to the outskirts of Greenville.

In 1950 one could find most of the car dealers in the downtown area and, in fact, some of the buildings are still there.

The Chevrolet dealership was on East Fifth Street, then known as White Chevrolet. The two-story building at 209. E. Fifth St. is now occupied by a night club.

Fords were sold by John Flanagan Buggy Co., a dealership which evolved from a buggy manufacturing business to become one of the largest Ford dealerships in the nation. It was located in a large building at Fourth and Cotanche streets, which has since been demolished to make way for a parking lot.

Scott Motor Sales was located at 219 E. Fifth St. and sold that sold standby, the Studebaker. The building at Fifth and Reide has been demolished.

Tetterton Motor Co. was located at 414 S. Washington St. and was the dealer for DeSoto and Plymouths. Copeland Motors at 407 Washington St. sold Chryslers and Plymouths. The building is no longer there.

Some dealerships had ventured away from the downtown area. Folger Buick was located at 117 W. 10th St. Brown-Wood was at 1205 Dickinson Ave., a location only recently abandoned.

Pitt Motor Co. was at 502 N. Greene St., and who remembers what they sold? The answer — Kaiser-Frazer automobiles, which were the project of steel magnate Henry J. Kaiser following World War II. the Kaiser and Frazers and the forerunner of the American compact cars, the Henry J., were well built automobiles but they eventually disappeared from the scene.

DEBATE NUMBER ONE!

James J. Kilpatrick

Matter Of Love

WASHINGTON — Tony Coelho, a gold medalist in the political Olympics, sat down to breakfast one morning recently with a group of senior correspondents. Actually, Tony Tony seldom sits. He sort of bounces, propelled by the coiled springs of his own enthusiasm. This morning he was in transports.

"I love it!" he kept saying. "I absolutely love it!"

For the record, Tony has spent all his adult life on Capitol Hill. He was graduated from Loyola in 19 and came immediately to Washington to serve in the office of Congressman B.F. Sisk. On Sisk's death he ran for the seat in 1978, won hands down, and at 42 he is now in his third term as representative of the 15th district of California. He is chairman of the House Democratic Campaign Committee. You should know also that Tony is short, dark-complexioned, of Portuguese descent. When he talks, which is most of the time, his words do cartwheels, back flips and handsprings.

"What about Gerry Ferraro? She's hot. I tell you she's hot. She overshadows everybody. Do I want to see her debate George Bush? Let me tell you what: I feel sorry for Bush..I really feel sorry for him. She would knock his pants off. Look: We have a ceremonial president. The country is being run by Jim Baker and Ed Meese. They're hired guns, but they're running the country. Who elected them? Nobody. Bush is third-string. Would I love a debate? I would absolutely love a debate.

"Before the convention, I was concerned. I said so. We were on a negative slide. But with Gerry Ferraro, we went whish-h-h. Right up! Now we have tremendous momentum. She's a 10. When she came on the ticket the White House panicked. Absolutely panicked. That's the only word for it. After the convention Reagan came after her. Bang, bang, bang! They're trying to destroy her. I love it, I absolutely love it! We have a race now, and it's changed the whole picture.

"Look: The financial people have started big giving again. Our candidates are excited. Former Democrats are coming out of the closet. Reagan has no coattails. None whatsoever. But Gerry Ferraro has huge coattails. Everyone wants her to come campaign, make an appearance, generate excitement. That's what Mondale does not have ? excitement. She has it."

A reporter broke in to ask if the Democratic ticket might be perceived as Ferraro-Mondale, rather than Mondale-Ferraro.

"I don't care how the ticket is perceived. We just want to get to the White House. A vote is a vote. I don't care if they vote for Gerry because she's Italian, because she's Catholic, because she's a woman. That's a vote for us. She's catching on. I love it that she's catching on. She has inner peace. She's comfortable with herself. You know who else has inner peace? Ronald Reagan. Do I want a confrontation? You bet I want a confrontation.

"Lance? Aw, c'mon, boys and girls. You know Bert Lance is a one-day story. I told you when he came into the campaign it was a one-day story. Now I tell you it's a one-day story when he goes out. Lance is no big deal. Let me tell you about the polls. Are we in trouble? In the country as a whole, prospective voters are 49 percent Democratic, 32 4 percent Republican, 19 undecided. That's trouble? We're going to pick up a minimum of three seats in the Senate ? that's a minimum ? and five to seven in the House. I'm conservative. You didn't know that. I'm giving you conservative figures. Five to seven. If our ticket wins big we'll take back the Senate. In Texas I'll make you a bet. We'll regain Phil Gramm's seat; we'll win it easy; it's not even close. I could not be in better shape than I am today.

"California? There's tremendous movement there. It's not like it was. Gerry Ferraro has changed all that. She's hot. We're going into California. We're going after it. It's a personality state. It pays no attention to parties or issues. It's who projects.

Decision

The excitement sparked by the selection of Geraldine Ferraro as the Democratic vice presidential nominee might have been there for the GOP eight years ago and, looking back, might have kept Jerry Ford in the White House.

Ironically, President Reagan, who is fond of telling female audiences that when a woman is elected president she will be a Republican, may have had a bit to do with the fact that in 1976 a prominent GOP woman was as close as could be to being nominated to run with Ford in a campaign he lost narrowly to Jimmy Carter.

Ford had eked out a convention victory over Reagan and looked around for a suitable running mate. His eventual choice, Sen. Robert Dole of Kansas, is blamed by some strategists — although post-election polls do not bear them out — for damaging the ticket with his rash campaign remarks.

Dole was a last-minute choice among four finalists in the hotel room where Ford and his top advisers met late into the night and again in the early morning following his own slim convention victory.

The other three were William Ruckelshaus, former EPA administrator and former deputy attorney general, Sen. Howard Baker of Tennessee, and ambassador to Great Britain Anne Armstrong.

Ruckelshaus was ruled out because he had no national stature and was unproven as a campaigner. Baker was scratched because Carter was a shoo-in to carry Tennessee. Dole, who few were excited about, had Washington experience, a reputation as a sharp campaigner and a good bet to win the farm states that Ford had alienated with his grain embargo.

But what of Mrs. Armstrong?

She was a rancher from the make-or-break state of Texas, a leader of the Republican National Committee, a diplomat and a woman. Ford was behind by as much as 33 points in the polls, and a dramatic move such as naming a woman could have given the ticket the pizazz it needed.

It also could have given the ticket the state of Texas, which, of course, went Democratic and helped Carter nail down his Electoral College victory.

But the Ford advisers could not agree on anyone through the night, and Ford had met with the defeated Reagan who, according to some sources, put in a good word for Dole.

So a ragged, weary group of presidential advisers was asked to make final recommendations by 9 o'clock in the morning of the day the running mate was to accept the vice presidential nomination.

No one spoke up, and Ford ended the matter by saying, "It's Dole."

In later days, Dole would express surprise at his selection, joking that Mrs. Armstrong was away in London and could not return in time, and Ruckelshaus would not fit on a campaign button, leaving it between him and Baker.

Medical Costs

RALEIGH — If you read a recent report from Blue Cross - Blue Shield of North Carolina, you'd be likely to think that the people of Orange County are either a lot healthier or a lot sicker than the people of Columbus County. The Blue Cross report showed that people in Orange County make the lowest number of visits, and the people of Columbus County the greatest number of visits, to the hospital each year.

But according to the study, the people of these two counties generally enjoy the same level of health. Hospital usage is higher in some North Carolina counties than it is in others primarily because of the way doctors choose to treat their patients, says Dr. Sandra Greene, BCBSNC's senior health economics researcher.

Her report showed that, "Generally, it is the larger metropolitan areas and the counties with the medical centers that exhibit the lower rates of utilization (of a hospital), while clusters of counties, mostly in rural areas, show the highest rates."

Dr. Greene sought to define hospital usage in several different ways. She rated counties by the number of hospital patient-days per 1,000 population, by the number of admissions and by the number of admissions statewide by county of residence. In all three, a single pattern developed. The same counties scored high in all three rankings.

A number of variables were tested to explain the differences in counties. She checked by age, education, race, economic level, and by a number of factors present in the medical community such as the occupancy rate of the local hospital and the doctor to population ration. None of these factors could be found to have a significant impact on the hospital's usage rate. BCBSNC was left to make the assumption that, "Most of the variation is due to physician practice manners." That is, in some places, doctors are a lot more disposed to plunk you in a hospital bed than in other places.

(Some of the factors were said to have some impact. Areas where the population is better educated and where there is a smaller doctor to population ratio were found to have lower hospital usage rates. Also, areas where ambulatory surgery is available also had lower usage rates.)

The high usage counties are bunched together in the northeast and in the southeast. Almost all of the rural counties of the east and several in the west have moderately high usage rates.

Tax Issue Comes Down To A 'Maybe'

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. (AP) — President Reagan's aides are trying to dispel the impression that Democratic challenger Walter F. Mondale has put their candidate on the defensive about the sensitive issue of a post-election tax increase.

After a week of conflicting signals about whether Reagan would entertain the possibility of increasing taxes to help pay for the enormous federal deficit, the answer appeared to come down to a resounding "maybe."

"The president would raise taxes only as a last resort," said deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes. "Walter Mondale would raise them as a first resort."

Speakes' remarks occurred in an interview with The Associated Press at the end of a week dominated by the controversy.

As Reagan wound up his two-week vacation, Speakes and other advisers played down the significance of the matter. But the perception lingered that Reagan and Vice President George Bush, in their eagerness to disavow the Democratic challenger's assertion of a secret administration plan to hike taxes, had come close to bungling the issue.

During a meeting Monday with Bush, the president told reporters: "I have said it before and I will say it again - and no matter how many of you try to put in a hedging line - we have no plans for, nor will I allow plans for a tax increase."

Some people interpreted that as Reagan's most emphatic statement to date on the subject. But within a few hours, Bush gave a press briefing in which he said Reagan was keeping his options open. The previous day, the vice president had acknowledged that unspecified "revenue increases" may be necessary to help cope with the huge federal deficit, estimated at about $170 billion this year.

The two men seemed to be at odds publicly, although by the end of the week most everyone was insisting there had not been any discrepancy at all.

Asked whether he believed the matter could have been better handled by the White House, Speakes sought instead to place the blame on reporters.

"Our opinion was that Bush got trapped into using four words: 'increase revenues' and 'options open,'" he said.

On the one hand, Speakes argued that reporters badgered Bush into saying something he didn't mean. On the other hand, Speakes maintained Bush never said anything that was contrary to the president's policy.

"It happened because you sit here and try to pull his eye teeth, and you finally succeeded, is what happened," Speakes said at Friday's press brifing.

From now on, Speakes said, Bush will "quote what the president said, and not step into it, as he did here with you ..."

Peter Teeley, the vice president's press secretary, agreed with Speakes that reporters were partly to blame in insisting Bush was disagreeing with Reagan when he did not believe he was.

However, Teeley added, there was plenty of blame to go around.

"It's one of those things that happened," he said in a telephone inyerview from Washington. "Nobody is pe2fect and so we made some mistakes."

He acknowledged that Bush could have chosen his words more precisely, but said no top-level White House aides had "expressed any concern or stated in any way that the vice president went off the policy reservation."

While campaign spokesman James Lake admitted the matter could have been better handled, Speakes insisted it was "a lot of smoke and no fire."

"The voter out there is not paying any attention," Speakes said. He said voters only have the impression that Mondale was to raise taxes and that Reagan does not.

Speakes and Lake both said there was no empirical evidence that the campaign had been damaged by the incident.

"We are exactly where we want to be," Speakes said. "We have Ronald Reagan as a man who does not want to raise taxes and Walter Mondale as a man who wants to.

"THE WAY I SEE IT, MILO, WE GOT THREE MONTHS TO FIGGER A WAY TO THROW REAGAN OUT WITHOUT LETTING MONDALE IN...."

John Paul Gets A Name

One of the intriguing little mysteries of history deals with when, where and why a young Scotsman named John Paul adopted the surname Jones and went on to become America's greatest naval hero.

During the years, a legend has grown that the man who won immortality by asserting, "I have not yet begun to fight," had adopted the surname in gratitude to two North Carolina benefactors, Willie and Allen Jones. North Carolina historians disagree on whether the legend has any basis in fact.

Back in 1935, Arcchibald Henderson, a UNC mathematician and historian wrote an article in which he asserted categorically that John Paul visited in Halifax in 1774 or 1775 and was befriended by Willie Jones. In this and later articles, Henderson proclaimed that John Paul adopted the surname "out of gratitude to Willie Jones."

In taking this stand, Henderson disagreed with another UNC prof, Phillips Russell, who had written a biography of John Paul Jones several years before. Russell had poohpoohed the contention John Paul Jones took his surname from Willie Jones. Russell agreed with other biographers that the young man who had fled the West Indies island of Tobago under a cloud after killing a mutinous sailor had adopted the name Jones in the same spirit that another person seeking anonymity might call himself Smith.

Another Tar Heel historian, Gerald Johnson, a former UNC journalism professor who became an editorial writer for the Baltimore Sun and who wrote a biography of John Paul Jones which was published in 1947 took a middle course. He said, "Maybe."

Henderson said his "categorical affirmation" of the Jones legend was based upon family legends related to him by his grandmother, Sarah Jane Bailey, wife of a Hillsborough physician. Mrs. Bailey told Henderson that as a girl her mother had been a frequent visitor to "The Grove," the home of Willie Jones in Halifax County. He said Mrs. Jones had told her young visitor that John Paul, "a young ship captain, was harbored for some months" by her husband before their marriage. Henderson said this was early in 1775. Johnson agreed with this in part, but suggested that John Paul's visit — if there was one — probably came several years before 1775.

"The legend is," wrote Johnson, "that at some time the young John Paul paid a visit to North Carolina and was attacked by a severe illness, whereupon Willie Jones took him into his house and kept him for weeks, and the women of the household nursed him back to health. So later ... out of gratitude to his benefactor he took" the name of Jones.

"The legend is not supported by a single line in John Paul's hand, and since he was fervent in his expressions of gratitude to every benefactor, some of his biographers have dismissed this story as pure moonshine. Yet it is curious that it flourished for generations without any reason whatever ..."

"He (Jones) was wanted on a technical charge of homicide, and it was his intention at the proper time to appear before the court; but war intervened," Johnson related. "The assumption of a new name seems, therefore, to have been less a measure of real concealment than a conventional gesture, deceiving nobody but perhaps sparing his friends some embarrassment by permitting them to deny knowledge of anyone named John Paul."

In his historical novel, "Drums," James Boyd wrote a version of Paul's adopting the name of Willie Jones that really sounds like moonshine. Boyd wrote that when John Paul was leaving the Jones home, Willie Jones handed the younger man a purse.

"'I'll take no money,' the other (Paul) answered roughly, then paused. 'Ye've but one thing, sir, that ye can give me.' He spoke softly.

"'And what is that, pray?'

"'Your name.'

"'Good Gad, sir. You surprise me!'

"'In a' my life, ye're the first to treat me like a gentleman. Give me your name, sir. I'll not shame it.'

"Mr. Jones withdrew the purse and shook Paul's hand.

"'I am complimented, sir — overcome. As to the name, take it, my friend, and welcome. It is not without honor in this country; but I believe that you will confer far more honor on it than it can possibly confer on you.' He put his other hand on the young man. 'So, good-bye, Mr. Jones.' He laughed to cover his embarrassment and turned away."

One of those who considered the legend that John Paul Jones adopted his surname in gratitude to Willie and Allen Jones was Lincoln Lorentz, who also wrote a biography of the naval hero. Lorentz said there was "no authentic record to prove that he ever met either of them or that they served him in any way.

"It is reasonable to believe, on the other hand, that after the death of the mutineer he chose for his declared incognito the common name Jones, which like Smith, best served his anonymity, and later determined to retain it," Lorentz added.

Control

PRINCETON, N.J. (AP) — Robert Wolfe has a special term for his activities in this college town. He is, he says, "engineering" the real estate market.

The results of that engineering are clearly evident: An impressive, manicured 1,750-acre home, office and research center in this and the neighboring town of Plainsboro, not far from Princeton University.

The university, in fact, owns almost every square-foot of the park, leasing space to developers and corporations such as IBM, RCA, Merrill Lynch, Mobil and Exxon. And to the Liposome Co., founded by a Princeton professor.

The university maintains 100 percent control of what goes into its Princeton Forrestal Center, says Wolfe, a Princeton graduate and partner in K.S. Sweet Associates, which advices academic institutions on investments.

"We had seen other areas grow rapidly and ugly," he explains. "We were very concerned about ad hoc development." The university, he said, had to protect itself. Thus its magnificent effort in real estate engineering.

There was another motive. "Money," says Wolfe.

The trustees, he says, set three goals: 1. to positively influence growth in the area, 2. to bring in corporations compatible with the university's interests and which possibly might interact with it, and 3. to make money.

Princeton Forrestal is one of the finest examples of a growing trend toward real estate projects built on university-owned or controlled land, and with university sponsorship.

Universities no longer are passive in the marketplace. The Urban Land Institute lists at least 50 instances of university real estate developments already completed, or being planned or developed.

To begin with, there is the famous Stanford University shopping center and office-research park, now almost fully developed in Palo Alto, Calif. and considered by many to be the forerunner of today's university developments.

One of the most impressive, state-supported Research Triangle Park, is being developed just east of Raleigh, N.C. by North Carolina State, Duke and the University of North Carolina. And the University of Pennsylvania, Drexell, Villanova and Temple are cooperating in developing their own research park.

Among other universities with projects completed or under way are Cornell, Georgia Tech, George Washington, Harvard, M.I.T., Purdue, Rennselaer, Rutgers, Delaware, New Mexico, Oklahoma, Rochester, Texas, Utah and Yale.

Since Columbia University owns and leases the land under Rockefeller Plaza in New York, these more recent real estate efforts might not be strictly pioneering, but they certainly represent a new phase based on new needs.

"With government subsidies for education being cut back and edcuational costs increasing each year, many universities are seeking new ways to bring in revenue," says Wolfe, who serves as Princeton Forrestal's general manager.

Given the economic realities, he says, 'it might be irresponsible for educational institutions not to pursue viable business opportunities." A bit later he observes, "We (the educational community) cannot afford not to."

Douglas Porter of the Urban Land Institute, a Washington, D.C.-based developer's group, agrees. "University administrators all over the country are scanning their property holdings with a fresh perspective," he says.

"Real estate is a business undertaking and you must make good sound business judgements," he says. Asked by other universities for advice on prospects, he often tells them there are better ways to invest their money.

"You need land, motivation, location and expertise," he says. For a project to work, however, that land need not be undeveloped. M.I.T., forinstance, is now redeveloping an industrial site in Cambridge, Mass.

Princeton's property was largely farm or virgin land, and 500 acres of it will remain in its more or less natural state in order to provide a more pleasant, interesting and, Wolfe hopes, more productive environment.

"It was a risky, far-sighted decision" by the trustees, he says, but if it sets the tone for other parks he considers it will have been worth it.

To date, the idea seems to be paying off. When Princeton Forrestal was begun in 1977, rents in the area ran about $4 a square foot. They are pushing past $20 now, and Princeton is receiving about $1 million a year from leases.

George Gallup

Poll

PRINCETON, N.J. — For a brief period following the Democratic convention, the Republican and Democratic tickets were effectively tied. the Reagan-Bush ticket has now regained the lead and holds a 10-point advantage over the Mondale-Ferraro slate. Prior to the convention, the GOP ticket led the Democrats, 53 percent to 39 percent.

Thus, as many political observers expected, the GOP ticket has recovered some, but not all, of the ground it lost as a result of the highly acclaimed Democratic convention July 16-19 in San Francisco.

In the latest Gallup Poll, Reagan and Bush are the choice of 52 percent of registered voters to 42 percent for Mondale and Ferraro, with 6 percent undecided. In a Newsweek poll conducted by the Gallup Organization July 19 and 20, as the convention was winding down, the rival tickets were statistically deadlocked, with the Democrats receiving 48 percent of the vote to 46 percent for the Republicans. In a pre-convention, July 13-16, test election, Reagan-Bush led Mondale-Ferraro by a 53 percent to 39 percent margin, as noted above.

"Now I'd like to get your honest opinion on this next question. It doesn't make any difference to me how you vote...I only want to record your opinion accurately. If the presidential election were being held today, which would you vote for — the Democratic candidates, Mondale and Ferraro, or the Republican candidates, Reagan and Bush? (Those who were undecided or who named other candidates were asked): As of today, do you lean more to Mandale and Ferraro, or to Reagan and Bush?"

REAGAN-BUSH vs. MONDALE-FERRARO
(Based on registered voters)

	Reagan-Bush	Mondale-Ferraro	Other, Undecided
July 27-29	52%	42%	6%
July 19-20(x)	46%	48%	6%
DEMOCRATIC CONVENTION
July 13-16	53%	39%	8%
July 12-13(x)	49%	43%	8%
FERRARO ANNOUNCEMENT
June 29-July 2 (xx)	51%	43%	6%
June 22-25 (x)	55%	38%	7%

(x) For Newsweek
(xx) Reagan vs. Mondale

Among all registered voters, the GOP ticket boasts three strong supporters for every two moderate ones while the Democratic ticket has about equal numbers of strong and moderate backers. Republicans strongly support their party's choice by a 5-to-2 ratio while the Mondale-Ferraro ticket has about equal numbers of strong and moderate backers.

Holding A Joker

WASHINGTON — Israel's fear of an Islamic Bomb has helped convert Ronald Reagan's China ace into a joker, depriving the president of the foreign triumph he though he had for a presidential campaign not bulging with brilliant successes abroad.

The China ace was Reagan's solitary achievement in Beijing during his trip last April. With fanfare, he cleared the sale of U.S nuclear power reactors to power-shy China in a deal touted to be worth up to $15 billion to U.S. suppliers over the next dozen years. Three months later, following discreet pro-Israeli lobbying, the deal is dead for this year. That leaves Reagan holding a joker, China angry and the world again made aware of Israel's unique influence over U.S. foreign policy.

The opposition was led by Sen. Alan Cranston, a pillar of the pro-Israeli bloc and for years an effective Senate voice in trying to stop world proliferation of nuclear weapons. Cranston told the Senate June 21 that the Chinese have been giving Pakistan concealed nuclear weapons help, citing as his source unidentified "intelligence" that he said he had not received in any classified briefings from the Reagan administration.

Nuclear proliferation was indeed a factor in Cranston's conversion of Reagan's ace to joker. And the president did indeed cut some corners and ignore some fine print in agreeing to the nuclear power plant sale. But the real thrust by Cranston was a line in his Senate speech, ignored at the time, that China-aided nuclear weapons progress in Pakistan had "far more profound implications than were presented by the Iraqi nuclear program" in 1981. That line sent chills through the Islamic world.

Israel claimed that Iraq was concealing construction on a nuclear weapon, dubbed the Islamic Bomb, under cover of a nuclear power reactor it bought from France. Shortly before Israel's 1981 election, then-Prime Minister Menachem Begin sent his air force to Baghdad to destroy that Iraqi reactor.

Cranston's charge that Pakistan's nuclear program now poses a greater threat to U.S. world interests than Iraq's did may reflect genuine concern in Jerusalem. It does not, however, reflect high-level views in the Reagan administration. One official told us: "The Israelis have been providing us with intelligence for at least the past year but they invariably overestimate the Pakistani program and its fissionable (weapons-grade) material."

Concern in Israel over the U.S.-China power reactor deal has been made known to members of Congress in several private briefings here. Although Israel's Ambassador Meir Rosenne told us he did not know of a single briefing by an embassy official, Capitol Hill insiders insist that both the embassy and the American Israel Public Affairs Commmittee (AIPAC) have raised warnings about the U.S.-China reactor deal to members of Congress. One of the leaders briefed was Cranston, who is Senate Democratic whip. The briefing took place in mid-June, just before his speech warning the Senate about Chinese-Pakistani collaboration.

What guaranteed success of the discreet moves against the Reagan-negotiated pact with China is the presidential election campaign. Courting the Jewish vote as hard as he can against Walter F. Mondale, Reagan was vulnerable from the start because of his bold promise to veto any bill to move the U.S. Embassy from Tel Aviv to Jerusalem.

But Cranston's attacks on Pakistan will give the president other problems, even if he decides to send the dormant U.S.-China reactor agreement to Congress after the election. The senator excoriates Pakistan, a U.S. ally, for trying to acquire nuclear weapons, and demands a halt in American aid to countries seeking nuclear arms. But he has ignored Israel's presumed possession of at least a dozen nuclear "devices" and, like China, its refusal to sign the non-proliferation treaty.

Reagan can try to deal with such prejudice after the election. But there is little he can do before Nov. 6 to explain how his glittering China ace got rubbed out so fast he could not even submit it to Capitol Hill.

Polish Cargo Ship Strikes Mine In Southern Red Sea

By The Associated Press

A Polish cargo ship struck a mine near the southern end of the Red Sea on Saturday and the explosion stopped the ship dead in the water, the official Polish news agency PAP reported. It said the strong blast extensively damaged engine room pipes, but caused no injuries.

Shipping sources in Jidda, Saudi Arabia, reached by telephone by The Associated Press in Bahrain, confirmed the explosion aboard the Jozef Wybicki and said it took place about 150 miles north of the 17-mile-wide Bab el-Mandeb straits, which link the Indian Ocean and the Red Sea.

It was the latest in a series of mysterious explosions involving commercial ships in the 1,450-mile-long Red Sea, a vital shipping route connecting Europe to the Persian Gulf and South and East Asia.

Lloyd's Shipping Intelligence Department in London had said Friday — before the latest incident — that at least 13 ships had been damaged since the explosions began last month, five ships in the Suez Gulf at the northern end of the sea, and the rest off the coast of North Yemen in the south.

The Polish agency said the crew of the 5,713-ton Jozef Wybicki was attempting to repair the damage and another Polish ship, the Leopold Staff, was helping. The Jozef Wybicki had been sailing from Malaysia to Jidda.

Many nations have expressed concern about the blasts, which threaten both commercial and passenger shipping in the important waterway. Thousands of Moslem pilgrims are traveling in the Red Sea at this time of year to the holy cities of Mecca and Medina in Saudi Arabia.

The United States, France and Britain have agreed to Egyptian requests to assist in mine-clearing operations in the sea and the 150-mile-long Suez Gulf, at the northern end of the sea. The gulf flows into the 100-mile-long Suez Canal, which links the Red Sea and the Mediterranean.

Two French minesweepers and a support ship left the port of Toulon on Friday for the Red Sea, and four British minesweepers were expected to arrive at the Suez Canal on Wednesday.

The United States is sending the Navy's amphibious transport dock Shreveport, which is expected to arrive in the Red Sea in mid-week with four mine-hunting Sea Stallion helicopters aboard.

Costa Rican Leaders Out

SAN JOSE, Costa Rica (AP) — All 14 members of President Luis Alberto Monge's cabinet resigned Saturday, making way for a reorganization following widespread accusations of government corruption.

Presidential spokesman Carlos Valverde told reporters the Cabinet resigned to "give the president a free hand to reorganize it." He said a statement by Monge would be read over nationwide radio and television.

Business and labor leaders have been publicly criticizing the government in recent weeks, claiming that corruption was rife within the administration.

Mistrial

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. (UPI) — A mistrial was declared Saturday in the case of a woman a psychiatrist testified had "become one person" with the 13-year-old daughter she was accused of killing.

After more than 11 hours of deliberations, a jury of five men and seven women failed to reach a verdict in the trial of Louise Lachat, accused of first-degree murder in the 1982 drowning death of her daughter Michelle. District Attorney Donald Tisdale said he had not decided whether to seek a new trial.

No Solution Sighted In Israeli Crisis

By NICOLAS B. TATRO
Associated Press Writer

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Three weeks after Israel's general elections, the nation still has a crisis in government with no solution in sight.

Labor Party leader Shimon Peres and outgoing Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir have met three times to try and forge a bipartisan government, but both sides concede little headway has been made.

If the talks fail, the possibility looms that new elections may be the only way out.

The main issues still to be resolved are who would be prime minister in a so-called national unity government, and what would the foreign policy of a such a government be.

Compromise proposals include an unprecedented rotation of the premiership between Peres and Shamir.

To get around policy disputes, such as the basis for negotiating peace with Jordan, suggestions have been made that the government limit itself to trying to solve the nation's faltering economy.

Labor edged Likud by 63,000 votes in the July 23 elections, ending up with 44 seats to 41 for Likud in the 120-seat Knesset, or parliament. But neither party was able to line up a parliamentary majority from the 35 other seats held by 13 small, special interest parties.

Trying to break the stalemate, President Chaim Herzog stepped in a week ago to name Peres prime minister-designate. He gave Peres three weeks to form a government — preferrably one that included both major blocs.

The leftist Al Hamishmar newspaper, which speaks for the six-seat socialist Mapam faction in the Labor alignment, predicted the coalition talks would fail because neither party could sacrifice fundamental policies.

"It wasn't the polarized vote that split the people. The vote merely reflected the split in the nation," the paper said. "The rift won't be healed by artificially mixing opposing political movements in the government, but only when one side convinces the other of the justice of its course."

Ariel Sharon, the brash former defense minister and leading hardliner in the Likud bloc, has insisted the new government continue its settlement push in the West Bank.

"A national unity government with the participation of the Likud will object to any plan for freezing settlements. The Likud will continue its settlement policy," he told the daily Hadashot newspaper.

Peres' campaign platform proposed launching a peace initiative with Jordan on the basis of a territorial compromise and a de facto freeze in settlement building.

When the issue came up in unity talks last week, Peres clashed with Shamir, who was quoted in a leaked transcript of the meeting as saying "Likud will not be willing to accept a proposal that includes territorial compromise."

Such a land-for-peace trade has been the basis of U.S. peacemaking efforts in the Middle East since 1967. The current israeli deadlock augured poorly for President Reagan's plan for federating the West Bank with Jordan.

Only once in the 36-year history of the Jewish state have Israeli politicians buried their differences and formed a national unity government.

That was in 1967 when Israel faced impending war with neighboring Arab states and lasted until August 1970, when Likud bolted to protest a U.N. resolution proposing a land-for-peace trade that was accepted by the late Labor Prime Minister Golda Meir.

Yehezkel Dror, a political science professor at Hebrew University, said on Israel Radio it was difficult to arouse the same sense of unified purpose to deal with the threats of 400 percent inflation and a mounting foreign debt of $22 billion.

Iraq Claims Victory In Air-Sea Fight

By PETER SMERDON
United Press International

Fiery air and sea battles erupted in the Persian Gulf Saturday with Iraq claiming it destroyed five "large naval targets" and shot down three Iranian warjets in a predawn attack on an Iranian convoy, the Iraqi News Agency said.

The fighting raged for more than two hours at the Khor Mousa channel leading to the Iranian port of Bandar Khomeini, the official Iraqi News Agency, INA, reported.

There was no immediate comment from Iran and Lloyds of London, the world's foremost ship insurer, said it had not received any reports of the battle, about 30 miles east of the Iran-Iraq border.

Iraq said the fight erupted when an Iraqi reconnaissance aircraft spotted an "enemy convoy" with Iranian air cover steaming up the 20-mile-long channel at the northern end of the Gulf, heading toward Bandar Khomeini.

The Iraqi reports did not indicate the nationality of the "naval targets" in the convoy. Both Iranian and foreign vessels carry supplies for Iran to Bandar Khomeini.

"In a dogfight, the warplanes of the Iraqi air force shot down three enemy F-14 jets which crashed in flames into the waters of the Gulf," INA said in a dispatch monitored in Beirut.

The United States supplied the late Shah of Iran with more than 75 F-14 "Tomcat" fighters in 1979 but Iran has lost several of the aircraft in its 46-month-old war with Iraq. Many more are believed to be out of service for lack of parts and maintenance.

"Then the Iraqi navy dealt crushing blows to the enemy shipping and succeeded in hitting and destroying five large naval targets," the news agency said. "Flames were seen burning in them."

The Iranian planes abandoned the vessels they had been escorting "after failing to save any of them," the Iraqi report said. "All Iraqi planes and ships returned safely to base."

Iraq has declared a "war zone" around all Iranian ports and oil terminals in an attempt to cripple Tehran's war effort and cut its revenues, used to fuel the Iranian war effort. Iran has retaliated by attacking ships trading with Iraq and its allies in the Persian Gulf states.

The narrow Khor Mousa channel is an area favored by Iraq for ambushes. Iraq said its warplanes attacked seven ships July 1 going to Bandar Khomeini, hitting five of them and forcing two others into a minefield where they were destroyed.

Two of the strikes were confirmed. Iraqi missiles crashed into a South Korean freighter and a Cypriot-registered bulk carrier, killing two crewmen and wounding 10 others.

Bomb Destroys Troop Convoy

COLOMBO, Sri Lanka (AP) — A remote-controlled bomb devastated a Sri Lankan army convoy on a highway near the northern city of Jaffna Saturday, killing at least eight soldiers and wounding more than 20, reliable sources said.

Indian officials in India's southern city of Madras, meanwhile, announced that five men were arrested and house used as a bomb factory was seized in connection with the Madras airport bomb blast that killed 29 people and wounded scores on Aug. 2. That explosion was believed linked with Tamil demands for their own homeland in Sri Lanka, as was the Saturday bombing near Jaffna.

The Saturday bomb was concealed in an old van parked by the roadside and was set off by remote control as military trucks passed, said the sources, who spoke on condition they not be identified.

Telephone efforts to obtain official comment in Colombo were unavailing, but a state police officer said there was a report of five soldiers killed in an ambush in the same region.

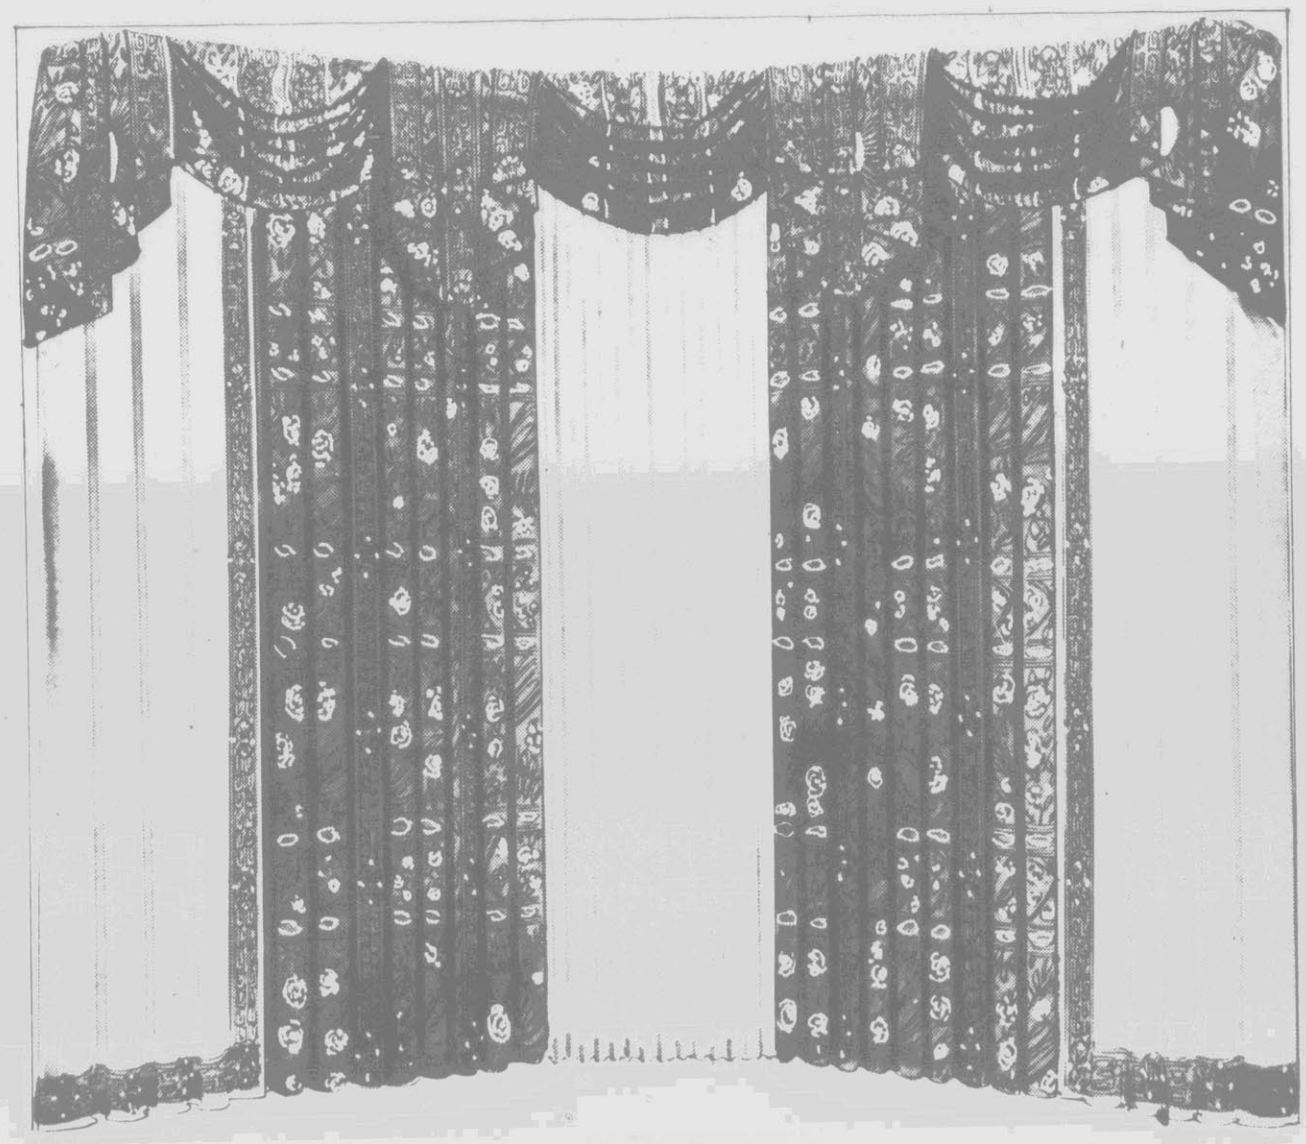

The bombing was the worst since an almost identical blast killed 13 soldiers in July 1983. That bombing was widely blamed for triggering two weeks of violence in which more than 400 members of the Tamil minority died.

Preacher Is Prison Escapee

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — A preacher who asked permission to preach to inmates at the State Police barracks was arrested when he showed up to deliver his sermon after a routine background check showed him to be an escaped convicted killer, authorities said.

The Rev. Governor Reiss was arrested Friday on a 1974 warrant accusing him of escaping from an Alabama prison where he'd been serving 32 years for murder and assault, Trooper Mike Edmonson said Saturday.

A routine background check was made on Reiss, of the Port Allen Christian Center, after he applied to preach to inmates housed at the barracks while serving on work details for state agencies, Edmonson said.

"We're not just going to let anyone back there," the trooper said.

The background check turned up two arrests, so police ran a further check for outstanding warrants and found an escape warrant sworn out Sept. 25, 1974, Edmonson said.

"They called him up ... and told him to come to State Police headquarters because he'd been accepted," he said. "Of course, when he came on down, they accepted him and brought him to the East Baton Rouge Parish jail. I guess all acceptances aren't great.

"The guy was extremely surprised. It was a shock to him, but he knew what he'd done in the past, so I don't think he was completely surprised," Edmonson said.

Alabama authorities said they would start extradition proceedings immediately, Edmonson said.

He said he didn't know any details of Reiss' conviction or alleged escaped.

Study Cites Court Costs

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Although incompetent teachers are a major problem in public education, they are seldom fired because schools are wary of court fights that can cost upwards of $100,000, a federal study showed Saturday.

The study financed by the National Institute of Education urges schools to develop written review systems, meeting specified criteria, to safely and effectively weed out bad teachers.

"The cost of using this approach is probably high, however the costs of retaining incompetent teachers may be even higher," concluded the study, "Managing the Incompetent Teacher."

Conducted by the Institute for Research on Educational Finance and Governance and the Clearinghouse on Education Management, the study examined one of the most controversial topics in education today — what to do with teachers who can't teach.

Only about half the nation's 16,000 school districts now have establishe evaluation programs. And many are so poor they would likely be unable to stand up in court, the study found.

Satellite Launch Put Back Again

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — The launch of satellites from three nations was postponed a second time Saturday because the payloads may have become contaminated by strips of plastic that peeled off an air-conditioning hose, NASA officials said.

The satellites of the United States, Great Britain and West Germany were supposed to have been lifted into orbit by a Delta rocket to study the solar wind and Earth's magnetic fields.

But technicians making a final prelaunch check Saturday said they found about 10 plastic strips, up to 5 inches in length, inside the nose covering over the satellites.

The strips were pieces of an aluminized insulation liner on an 8-inch-diameter air-conditioning hose that cools the covering, officials said.

Liftoff was scrubbed on Thursday when a computer broke down at the West German space center near Munich.

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration said it decided to postpone Saturday's launch so the satellites could be examined for possible contamination of solar cells or delicate instruments.

Officials said the launch could be rescheduled no earlier than Wednesday.

Lobbyists

RALEIGH (AP) — The price tag for wining and dining state legislators for the 23-day short legislative session was $555,000 for lobbyists and industry officials, an expense report filed with the Secretary of State's office indicates.

The spending excludes salaries, and falls below last year's spending record of $818,565 for the six month session.

Anti-Anxiety Drug Being Tested On Elderly

By DORALISA PILARTE
Associated Press Writer

MIAMI (AP) — A new drug that seems to relieve anxiety without the undesirable side effects of other tranquilizers is being tested on senior citizens, a group sometimes overlooked when new products are tested for marketing.

"The elderly or the infirm or someone whose health is compromised ... are particularly sensitive to any pharmacological compound," said Dr. Roberto Dominguez of the University of Miami.

"It is not unusual for a medication to be released into the market ... and for it not to have any homogeneous data on an elderly population," he said.

The drug, buspirone, has been undergoing testing in the United States for the past seven years, but this is the first time that a tranquilizer has been tried on a uniform sample of elderly people, said Dominguez, who heads the project here. Similar tests are under way at the University of California-Los Angeles.

Southern Florida, with its concentration of retired people, seemed an obvious choice to test the drug, which was developed by Mead-Johnson and which Dominguez said may be marketed sometime next year.

"We're beginning to recognize that the elderly comprise a different part of the population," said Dominguez, director of the outpatient Psychopharmacology Research Program at the University of Miami-Jackson Memorial Medical Center. "We realize that a person of 75 metabolizes a drug differently than a person of 25.

"Drug dosages and side effects may be entirely different — and this information the physician needs to prescribe accurately," he said.

The tests are not specifically required by the federal Food and Drug Administration, but the results will give physicians needed data on how elderly patients could react to the drug, Dominguez said.

Buspirone, a minor tranquilizer, is not habit-forming, does not have sedative side effects and does not interact harmfully when taken in conjunction with other drugs, including alcohol, Dominguez said.

Susan Cruzan, an FDA spokeswoman, said the drug has come up before two advisory committees for review and is considered to have "no potential for abuse or addiction."

Anxiety is an emotional condition that implies dread and overworrying. Physical symptoms include restlessness, tension, irritability and problems with sleeping, memory and concentration.

Most people occasionally experience mild anxiety. But when it becomes disruptive to a person's life, treatment may be needed.

Buspirone is not meant for severe psychological disorders but for temporary ones, Dominguez warns.

"Suppose you have an individual for whom being 'nervous' is more or less a part of their lives," Dominguez said. "This is a much more chronic pattern. Relaxation or meditation could be better for this individual.

"But say a second individual is suddenly promoted. He's feeling insecure, having a couple of drinks ... constantly worrying about tomorrow and developing an overwhelming anxiety" because of the unexpected change, Dominguez said. "This is not part of his personality. From a cost-effective point of view, psychotherapy may not be for him."

Buspirone has already been tested on young adults at Miami and the results have been analyzed and submitted to a British medical journal for publication, Dominguez said. It is also being tested on elderly people by Dr. Jay Cohn at UCLA.

Curfew Extended By Town

LAWRENCE, Mass. (AP) — An overnight curfew brought peace Saturday to a neighborhood shattered by two nights of violent skirmishes between Hispanics and whites, and officials of this old mill city voted to continue the curfew another night.

"You could hear a pin drop. It was beautiful, beautiful, beautiful," said Alphador Roy, an 81-year-old resident of the troubled Tower Hill neighborhood.

About 70 police officers patrolled the four-block area when Friday night's curfew began at 8 p.m., and community leaders drove around with loudspeakers, urging residents to remain indoors.

By the curfew's end at 6 a.m. Saturday, "very, very few officers" were still on the scene, said Alderman Raymond H. Johnson, city director of public safety.

Twenty-eight people were arrested overnight for violating the curfew and related charges, and one man was taken into protective custody, but police said there were no major disturbances.

The order barred all outdoor activity in the area of public housing and clapboard homes, and police continued a ban on liquor sales and closed "places of amusement and entertainment."

Mayor John Buckley said the curfew and police patrols would continue Saturday night with 70 local officers on call and 30 state troopers held in reserve.

"It was a calm, cool night. We had very few incidents and we hope this going to continue and cool off further," he said. "We hope we can sit down with these people and settle any differences."

But leaders of the Hispanic community said the tensions that led to the violence remained.

"Tomorrow, maybe something happens. Who knows?" said the Rev. Elijah Gonzalez.

Hispanic leader Nunzio DiMarco attributed some of the problems to feelings that authorities are not attuned to the needs of the Spanish-speaking commmunity.

"How would you feel if you lived in a community, and aside from having a language barrier and looking a little different, you are not accessible to the same types of things that other people have?" he asked.

For some, he said, throwing firebombs and rocks "is just a matter of attracting attention to their needs. It could have been much worse."

Flood Area Gets Forecast Of Rain

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — Residents of parts of New Mexico braced for more rain and the governor declared a state of emergency in one county Saturday after flash floods that ripped out roads and flooded streets and highways.

The National Weather Service issued a flash flood watch for east-central and southern New Mexico until midnight Saturday, and southern Lincoln County was under a flash flood warning for part of the day.

Gov. Toney Anaya declared Lincoln County in a state of emergency Saturday, allowing relief from state agencies, and Anaya's press aide, David Roybal, said the National Guard was shipping 10,000 sandbags from Albuquerque to flood-threatened Ruidoso.

"Officials in the community of Ruidoso earlier had declared a state of emergency, and they requested a similar declaration from the state," Roybal said.

The normally quiet Rio Ruidoso rose to flood stage in the town in the south-central part of the state on Thursday after being fed by about 5 inches of rain in five days, and threatened dozens of homes along its banks, said Frank Potter, assistant village manager.

The Rio Ruidoso, which flows through the middle of town, rose 3 feet in 24 hours until it peaked Thursday afternoon, Potter said.

"The ground is so saturated that every drop that falls goes right to the river," said village manager Jim Hine.

Police went door to door to residences in threatened areas along the river Saturday warning people to move to higher ground, and evacuation centers were set up at public buildings and a church.

Hine said street department and water department employees had been on duty 48 hours straight and faced more work clearing out culverts to keep water flowing.

Reagan Says Solons Get 'F' On Action

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. (AP) — Giving House Democratic leaders "a red letter F," President Reagan chided a "do-nothing" Congress on Saturday for postponing action on what he called important legislation until after its recess.

During his weekly paid political radio speech, Reagan announced that he had signed the so-called equal access bill for public schools. The president said the measure was the only item in a package of six important bills that won congressional approval before Friday's recess.

The measure, which Reagan said was long overdue, allows student religious groups to meet in public high schools during non-school hours.

But Reagan accused the House Democratic leadership of failing their party's test of "new realism" — set by presidential candidate Walter Mondale — by not enacting the other measures he said were important to Americans.

He said these bills included a constitutional amendment mandating a balanced federal budget, a proposal to create economic enterprise zones in depressed areas, and a measure to allow spouses to have investment retirement accounts. Reagan also cited legislation that would authorize tuition tax credits and undertake a comprehensive anti-crime program.

Reagan said the House leadership had a "do nothing" record and should receive "a failing grade, a red letter 'F.'

"When the Democratic leadership keeps saying "no to America,' they showed how far they are from 'new realism' and how far they have drifted from mainstream thinking," Reagan said.

Evoking President Truman's criticism of a "do-nothing" Congress, Reagan said "Were he with us now, I think he would relish the chance to run against those who proclaim a 'new realism' and then do nothing."

Delegates Say Don't Promise

WASHINGTON (AP) — A majority of Republican National Convention delegates do not believe Walter F. Mondale's claim that a post-election tax increase is inevitable, but most do not favor an ironclad GOP promise not to raise taxes.

Those were the findings of an Associated Press survey of 1,591 of the 2,235 GOP delegates — more than 71 percent — who will be attending their party's convention next week in Dallas. The delegates were surveyed Aug. 1-10.

The delegates seem in accord with the wishes of GOP leaders on the volatile tax increase issue, which has triggered a volley of charges and countercharges from the Reagan and Mondale camps.

AP correspondents asked delegates in every state, Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands: "Do you believe a tax increase will be necessary in 1985 to reduce the federal deficit? Should the Republican platform pledge the party against seeking a tax increase?"

Some 1,074 of the 1,575 delegates — 67.5 percent of those surveyed — said no tax increase will be needed; 334, or 21.1 percent, felt the government will need to raise more revenues next year.

Ferraro Planning Solo Trip

NEW YORK (AP) — Geraldine Ferraro, the Democratic vice presidential nominee, flies to the West Coast Sunday on her first solo campaign swing to three states targeted by the campaign as important to a November victory.

The New York congresswoman plans to visit with senior citizens in Sacramento, Calif., stress crime control at a meeting of district attorneys in San Diego, and tour a high technology plant in San Jose, to stress the importance of jobs.

She also plans to visit Washington state, where a rally is planned in Seattle, said Patricia Bario, Ms. Ferraro's new press secretary.

Ms. Ferraro is scheduled to arrive for a possible fund-raiser in Portland, Ore., Tuesday night and then make an address and possibly hold a news conference there Wednesday morning, said Charles Duncan, an advance man for the campaign.

After leaving New York on a chartered jet Sunday morning, Ms. Ferraro plans to pick up campaign aides and make a quick stop in the nation's capital to visit a training session of campaign workers in Mount Vernon, Va.

Anne Wexler, a Washington government relations consultant who is Ms. Ferraro's senior political adviser, said that Ms. Ferraro chose early campaign visits to the three states in the West "because they are targets of this campaign."

State Seeks Death Order For Youth

By TOM MINEHART
Associated Press Writer

North Carolina is seeking the death penalty for 15-year-old Roger Giles, but his attorney says he's "only a child" and innocent of killing an elderly Buncombe County man with an ax.

"He was 15 years and four months at the time of the crime in March," said Buncombe County public defender Roger Belser. "No child has ever been executed in North Carolina for a crime committed at 15. There were a couple of cases in the 1940s when 15-year-olds had death sentences commuted to life.

"The governor's commutation statements reflect that the concept of killing children was repugnant even 40 years ago," Belser said.

Giles is accused of killing John E. McMahan, 85, on March 23 and was arraigned on July 30. He is scheduled to be tried — as an adult — on Aug. 20.

"The facts clearly indicate he's guilty of first-degree murder," said Buncombe County District Attorney Ron Brown. Giles also is accused of breaking and entering, larceny and armed robbery for allegedly stealing $67 from McMahan, and the state's felony murder rule allows prosecutors to bring first-degree murder charges in such cases.

Officials said Giles, a resident of the eastern North Carolina town of Irwin in Harnett County, stole a bicycle last fall and was put on probation as a juvenile. He ran away from home, was caught and was placed in the Juvenile Evaluation Center in Swannanoa in Buncombe County.

He ran away from the center on March 19 with William Lee Rasor, 16, of Hiddenite. They hid in McMahan's shed in Black Mountain. When McMahan found them and turned to call the police, he was hit on the head with a blunt ax and killed. Giles and Rasor are scheduled to be tried together on first-degree murder charges. Both have pleaded innocent.

"There'll be a serious question as to his (Giles') responsibility for the death of Mr. McMahan," said Belser. "But if it ever came to that stage of the trial, there are many reasons why that child's life ought to be spared. He's definitely a child."

Larry Vellani, co-director of the Prison and Jail Project in Durham, said there are now only two 15-year-old in Death Row in the United States — in Kentucky and in Pennsylvania. The youngest people now on North Carolina's Death Row are 19 and 20, he said.

Good Ideas Can Bring Dividends

RALEIGH (AP) — In at least one North Carolina program, it pays to have good ideas.

The State Employee Suggestion System, which began in 1976, has led to the trimming $2,236,676 from the cost of running state government, according to Karen Piner, who directs the program for the Office of Administrative Analysis.

As an incentive, employees whose ideas are accepted can earn cash rewards or time off, Ms. Piner said. In nine years, $115,808 and hundreds of days off have been awarded.

If the suggestion results in a cost savings, the suggestor is awarded 25 percent of the first year's net saving up to a maximum of $5,000," she said. If the benefit is intangible, such as safety, which can't be calculated in dollars, they can get up to three days off."

The concept is often simple. For example, the state Department of Transportation buys more than 5,000 pounds of rags each year for use by mechanics who maintain the department's huge fleet of vehicles.

The N.C. Department of Human Resources accumulates hundreds of worn-out bed sheets each year in its many resident care facilities around the state.

Now the rag producer is being paired with the rag user.

It's an idea "so simple it almost makes you look dumb," said Jack Barnes, administrative officer of the State Employee Suggestion System.

But Barnes estimates that the simple idea could save the state $5,000 or more in the first year.

The system's success has attracted inquiries from several other states that want to try similar ways to stimulate creative and innovative thinking among employees.

Goals of the program are to increase productivity, improve services to the public, identify safety hazards, improve working conditions, conserve energy resources, eliminate waste and unnecessary expenditures and increase morale.

The suggestions can range from the simple to the strange. An employee at the N.C. Zoological Park, for example, proposed making methane gas from animal waste and using the gas for fuel. The idea has been approved but not fully implemented yet while studies continue on how it can be accomplished, Ms. Piner said.

A state capitol policeman, noticing that flags over state buildings quickly become frayed along the outer edge from constant exposure to the wind, suggested the flags be sent to prison workers for resewing, instead of purchasing new flags. Still in its first year, savings are being monitored to determine the cash award to the suggestor.

But many more suggestions are rejected than accepted — some because they are duplicates of ideas already under study, others because they are considered impractical, unnecessary or relate to options that already exist. Nothing relating to personal grievances, salary or taxes will be considered.

Stabilization Leaf Receipts Still Lower

By The Associated Press

The amount of flue-cured tobacco going under government loan this year on all tobacco markets remained at half the 1983 level for the same period for the second straight week, tobacco officials said.

The Flue-Cured Tobacco Cooperative Stabilization Corp. has picked up 17.9 percent of the 1984 crop in the first 10 days of the marketing season in Florida, Georgia, North Carolina and South Carolina, compared with 33.9 percent in the same period last year, according to statistics compiled by the Federal-State Tobacco Market News Service.

"We are pleased with the percentage of tobacco going to Stabilization so far," said Dr. T. Carlton Blalock, executive vice president of the Tobacco Growers Association of North Carolina. "The weather damage we had predicted has not been as severe, and I'd say we have the makings of a good crop."

Blalock said heavy July rainfall had caused some of the crop to mature earlier than normal, resulting in lighter, less full-bodied tobacco. But he said the tobacco companies have indicated that once more upstalk tobacco reaches the markets, they'll begin buying more.

For the week, Stabilization receipts rose to 19 percent from 16 percent last week, but remained well below 1983 levels during the first two weeks of the market, said Fred G. Bond, general manager of Stabilization, a grower-owned cooperative that takes under loan tobacco that fails to bring a bid above the federal support price. Stabilization sells the tobacco later.

"We are still hopeful that by the end of the season, we'll be down in volume as well as percentage," Bond said. "We'll see that trend begin probably sometime as early as next week in the Georgia-Florida markets and in a few days in the Middle and Eastern belts."

Middle Belt prices Thursday averaged $169 per hundred pounds, up three percent from opening day prices of $157. On the Eastern Belt, averages rose 9.6 percent over opening day, from $156 per hundred pounds to $171, while the South Carolina-North Carolina Border Belt saw prices edge up to $169 per hundred, compared with with $152 on opening day.

Trial Sought

RUTHERFORDTON, N.C. (AP) — A Rutherford County man, who confessed to killing a 23-month-old child by placing him in a freezer, says he panicked when he found the child's dead body and is appealing for a new trial.

Ronnie Dale Smith, 22, now in Central Prison in Raleigh, pleaded guilty on March 15 to the second-degree murder of Michael Brandon Lowery, whose lifeless body was discovered Oct. 21, 1983 in a freezer at the home of the child's mother, Marie Lowery, Smith's girlfriend at the time.

Helms Planning To Restore Reagan Conservatism To Party's Platform

By MARY ANNE RHYNE
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — Republicans will draft a party platform this week in Dallas and Sen. Jesse Helms is promising to amend planks so they conform with President Reagan's most conservative philosophies.

Helms, a member of the platform committee, said in a telephone interview last week that Reagan has been forced by the Democratically controlled House to compromise on too many issues. He said Reagan's re-election will be a mandate for the president to stick with his conservative ideas.

"Because of the House of Representatives and its opposition to practically everything, his advisers have insisted he trim his sails on a lot of issues," Helms said. "With his re-election, the message will be sent to Washington that enough is enough.

"The majority of the American people agree with Reagan's policies as they understand them to be," Helms said. "There is a need to identify them a little more clearly."

Those ideas include a call for amendments to the Constitution to permit organized school prayer and require a balanced budget, a stand against raising taxes next year, a stand on behalf of space-based missile defense systems and a return to the gold standard.

"I will not let go unchallenged any effort to go contradictory to the philosophies of Ronald Reagan," Helms said.

He said he foresees few problems but said he was asked by the White House and Defense Department officials in Washington to sit in on committee meetings to defend Reagan's viewpoints.

Helms, who faces a tough re-election battle this year against Democratic Gov. Jim Hunt, is taking several staff members and close advisors with him to Dallas. The state Republican Party has reserved rooms during the convention for 125 workers for the Helms for Senate Committee.

Some of the staff members will be in Dallas this week but many said they were unsure when they would arrive.

Also going as delegates are the National Congressional Club chairman and Helms' strategist Tom Ellis, director Carter Wrenn and assistant director Mike Holt.

The club is a conservative political action committee that was started to retire Helms' campaign debt and has expanded to help conservative candidates across the nation and rank as one of the largest PACs in the nation.

Helms said the early drafts of the platform which he's seen look pretty good but he listed several areas of concern.

He said he agrees with Reagan that taxes need not be increased in 1985 and Republicans should pledge to reduce the cost of government. Helms has advocated a 10 percent across the board cut in government spending while sparing the Social Security program, defense spending and interest on the federal debt.

"Increasing taxes is precisely the wrong way to go," he said. "We need to economize... This thing of raising taxes would be like throwing gasoline on the fire."

Conservatives led by New York Rep. Jack Kemp have won Helms' support in seeking a return to the gold standard. They argue that a dollar is no longer a dollar because it is not backed directly by gold.

They say a return to the gold standard would make the economy more stable and predictable, allow the federal budget to be balanced and lower interest rates.

An effort to pledge to return to the gold standard at the 1980 party convention led to a compromise in which the GOP called for "a dependable monetary standard."

The gold standard was abandoned in 1971, when Republican Richard Nixon was president.

A group of moderate and liberal Republican senators led by Sen. Lowell Weicker, R-Conn., has proposed planks opposing government-sanctioned school prayer.

The current platform draft does not call for an amendment to the Constitution to permit organized, vocal school prayer despite Reagan's support for such an amendment. Helms would like to see Reagan's philosophy on prayer in the platform.

The platform does include a call for an amendment to balance the budget as sought by Helms.

IN THE STATE

State OKs New Bogue Drawbridge

RALEIGH, N.C. (UPI) — The state Board of Transportation has approved more than $48 million in highway improvement contracts, including construction of a new bridge connecting Atlantic Beach and Morehead City.

Gilbert Corp. of Delaware was awarded the $7.9 million contract to replace a two-lane drawbridge now spanning Bogue Sound between the two cities. Construction is set to begin next month and to be completed in August 1987.

The hourly opening schedule of the drawbridge causes heavy traffic backups during the summer tourist season, but the replacement will be a high-rise bridge.

Morehead City officials opposed the project because they want a new bridge built on a location several miles to the west to help reduce the traffic problem.

State officials say they do not have enough federal funds to build a bridge to the west, but can replace the drawbridge using federal money allocated for replacement projects. Planning has begun on a proposed bridge to the west, which would be the third connecting Bogue Banks to the mainland.

Transportation Secretary W.R. Roberson Jr. said the replacement for the drawbridge would help the traffic problem.

"My concern, and the concern of the Board of Transportation, is not only the traffic congestion in the area but also the safety factor," he said.

Going For The Gold

Lewis Matches Owens' Mark

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Carl Lewis kept his appointment with a legend Saturday, winning his fourth gold medal at the Summer Games while anchoring the U.S. men's 400-meter relay team to a world record and matching the mark of Jesse Owens.

Valerie Brisco-Hooks kept a date with history, too. She won her third gold medal of the 1984 Games, running a leg on the winning U.S. women's 1,600-meter relay team to become the first woman in track and field to accomplish that feat since Wilma Rudolph did it in 1960.

Americans swept all four track relays, with Chandra Cheeseborough running a leg on both women's races.

And the United States won seven boxing gold medals, breaking Cuba's Olympic record set in 1980.

Two of the other glamour events in track — the men's and women's 1,500 meters — went to Sebastian Coe of Britain and Gabriela Dorio of Italy.

But the spotlight this day and all through the Olympics was on Lewis, seeking to match the storied record of Jesse Owens, who won gold in the same four events in 1936 at the Berlin Games.

Lewis said he was considering dedicating one of his medals to Ruth Owens, the late track star's widow.

"Without the inspiration of Jesse Owens — hey, I wouldn't be here today," he said. "So I'm thinking about dedicating one to (her) and the rest to my parents."

Lewis and his teammates, Sam Graddy, Ron Brown and Calvin Smith, were smooth. And fast. Clocked in 37.83, three-hundredths of a second under the old world record, they finished ahead of Jamaica and Canada, who were both far back.

The old record of 37.86 was set in 1983 by a U.S. national team that included Lewis and Smith.

"To end the meet with a world record ... makes it real special," Lewis said in a television interview. "This has been the time of my life. I want to thank millions and millions of people because I got so much support."

The race was smooth, the run without fault and Lewis was pulling away as he crossed the finish line.

Lewis and his teammates were cheered wildly by the Colesium crowd. They waved an American flag, which Lewis later draped over his shoulders. He smiled, he held flowers and then the team carried a big heart-shaped balloon as they took their victory lap.

Later, Lewis' teammates — with the Jamacian team joining the celebration — carried him off the field.

Louganis Takes Platform Lead

THE DAILY
SUNDAY MORNING, AUGUST 12, 1984

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Greg Louganis set up a Sunday battle for his unprecedented second men's Olympic diving gold medal by overwhelming Li Kongzheng of China Saturday in the optional portion of the men's platform preliminaries.

Louganis, who won the springboard gold medal on Wednesday, didn't take over the lead until the eighth round of the 10-dive preliminary. He gained control of first place with seventh and eighth-round scores of 91.20 with an inward $3\frac{1}{2}$ somersault and 82.80 with a forward $3\frac{1}{2}$ somersault.

On those two key dives, no judge gave Louganis a score of lower than 9.0. Then he got scores of 88.11 and 91.80 on his last two dives, earning scores of no less than 8.5.

His brilliant performance on his last four dives gave Louganis a 10-dive total of 688.05, breaking his own platform record of 687.90 set last year in the World Cup meet.

"I feel good, I feel like I did my homework," Louganis said afterward.

But he added: "I'm capable of hitting 700. I need to do better on my required dives."

No man has ever won both diving gold medals in the same Olympics. Klaus DiBiasi of Italy came the closest, winning the platform gold and the springboard silver in 1968.

Li, third after the four-dive morning compulsories, passed Louganis in Round 6 with 89.10 points for a back $3\frac{1}{2}$ somersault. Li maintained first place with 89.76 on his seventh dive, a reverse $3\frac{1}{2}$ somersault, which has a maximum degree of difficulty factor of 3.4.

But in the eighth and ninth rounds, Li couldn't score higher than 60 points, enabling Louganis to take an insurmountable lead. Li finished in second place with 615.69 points.

"I'm not surprised by the Chinese," said Louganis. "They are very talented, very quick."

Bruce Kimball of Ann Arbor, Mich., got one perfect score of 10.0 and took a narrow lead over Louganis during the four-dive morning session of compulsory dives. He fell to the No. 4 qualifying spot with 602.64 behind Tong Hui of China, who jumped from eighth place to third with 608.04.

Kimball got an award of 10.0 from one judge on his second dive of the morning qualifying session, an inward $1\frac{1}{2}$ somersault from the pike position. The 52.80 points he got on the dive put Kimball, 21, a six-time national platform champion, in the lead to stay for the rest of the four-dive compulsory session.

Louganis, of Mission Viejo, Calif., who has won 26 national diving titles, was seventh after his first dive, more because of a low degree-of-difficulty factor than poor execution.

Louganis, 24, who hasn't lost a platform event in an international meet since 1980, jumped to third place after the second round when he did a back dive from the pike position and was awarded all 9.0s and 9.5s.

Louganis got into second place in Round 3, but couldn't catch Kimball, who finished the session with 195.81 points to 191.34 for Louganis.

Other qualifiers for Sunday's final were Albin Killat of West Germany with 542.10, Chris Snode of Britain with 507.96, Jon Grunde Vegard of Norway with 494.67, Miguel Zavala of Mexico with 492.24.

North St. All-Stars Leave For Tourney

Greenville's North State Little League All-Stars leave today for St. Petersburg, Fla., to compete in the 1984 South Regional tournament, the last step before the World Series.

The North Carolina state champions will be one of 13 teams ranging from West Virginia to Texas in the field, as play gets underway at 10 a.m. Monday. The finals, weather permitting, will be held on Thursday at 2 p.m.

Greenville will be facing the Virginia state champions in the first round of the tournament, at 6 p.m. Monday, the final game of the first round of play. The winner will advance to play Tennessee at 6 p.m. Tuesday, while the loser in the single elimination tournament goes home.

The Virginia championship was won by the West Springfield League out of Springfield, Va., a suburb of Washington, D.C.

Other teams in the field include Texas and West Virginia, which meet at 10 a.m. Monday in the tournament's first game; Arkansas and Louisiana, set to meet at 12 noon; Georgia and Kentucky, meeting at 2 p.m., South Carolina and Mississippi, facing each other at 4 p.m., and Florida and Alabama, both of which drew first round byes, along with Tennessee.

The winning team in the tournament will represent the South in the Little League World Series, held in Williamsport, Pa., with the finals of that tournament broadcast nationally over television.

Dan Gordon, Greenville Little Leagues supervisor, said efforts to get the first game on radio locally, failed to materalize, but if the team advances to the semifinals or finals, there is a good chance that they will be broadcast.

ECU Backs Return With Experience

By JIMMY DuPREE
Reflector Sports Writer

With the lack of experience at quarterback and defensive line and the extensive publicity centered around kick returner/flanker Henry Williams, it's easy to see how East Carolina University's running backs have all but faded from the pre-season picture.

But, indeed, the backfield is one spot that the Pirates have experienced players and talented newcomers ready to challenge for a starting berth.

Senior Jimmy Walden and junior Tony Baker return as the leading candidates the tailback slots, while senior Reggie Branch is expected to secure the fullback position vacated by the graduation of leading rusher Earnest Byner.

Byner led the Pirates to an 8-3 record in 1983 with 174 carries for 867 yards and a 5.0 yard-per carry average. He scored four touchdowns and averaged 78.4 yards per game and is currently a leading candidate for a starting position with the Cleveland Browns.

"Reggie Branch played all year behind Earnest," ECU assistant Coach Robbie Barrow said. "What (Earnest) meant to us was that he was a great leader. We lost one of the best backs in the country when he left. If he was six feet tall, every pro team in the country would have drafted him.

"We had to use Earnest at backup tailback last year, and that hurt us as far as depth. But Reggie pushed Earnest all year; he's one of the reasons Earnest is so good now. He knew he couldn't take a bad step.

"Reggie is a great leader on the field as far as work habits are concerned. He's big, tough and physical; he finished a strong first in spring drills at fullback."

Calling Branch strong could be considered an understatement. At 5-11, 220 pounds, Branch is strongest blocker of the backs in the Pirates' Option-I offense — capable of bench pressing 460 pounds. But Baker and Walden have developed into formidable blockers, as well.

"With our offense, the backs have to be able to block when we pass," Barrow said. "Tony and Jimmy are equally good blockers, and Reggie is the most solid blocker. Our tailback and fullback on sprint-out passes have to block a defensive end who probably out-weighs him by as much as 75 pounds; that's not an easy thing to do."

Baker leads the returners with an average of 59.3 yards per game and 4.6 per carry last year, while Walden follows with 41.2 per-game and 4.2 per carry stats. Branch carried the ball just 40 times and tallied 166 yards for a 4.2 average. But Baker

Carner Slips By Sheehan In Henredon

AP Sports Writer

HIGH POINT — JoAnne Carner, forced to finish her second round shortly after sunrise Saturday, charged past defending champion Patty Sheehan at sunset with a 3-under-par 69 to take the lead after three rounds of the $180,000 Henredon Classic LPGA tournament.

Carner's total of 207 is two strokes ahead of Sheehan, who opened her third round with two straight bogeys, rallied for three birdies on the back nine and finished at even-par 72.

Sheehan had trailed Carner by five shots through 12 holes before Sheehan birdied three of the last five holes — including a 25-foot putt at 18 — to close the gap.

Carner might have maintained her lead had it not been for a muscle problem in her lower back which she said forced her to alter her swing by the end of the round. She bogeyed the 18th hole and lost ground.

"All day I had played with it," said Carner of the injury. "I hit the first putt (at 18th green) too long, and it was too dark to see the grain on the second putt."

Heavy thunderstorms pelted the Willow Creek course twice Friday. The round was delayed at mid-morning and play was suspended in the afternoon with about 90 golfers out on the course.

Under threatening skies, golfers resumed at 7:30 a.m. EDT Carner, an LPGA Hall of Fame member and the tour's top all-time money winner, started her morning at the 16th hole before staging the rally to put her on top. Carner, Sheehan and Dot Germain were the last threesome on the course and finished in near darkness.

Thankful Medalist

achievement had created as it moved step by step toward conclusion. Anticlimatic, perhaps.

ABC did not even televise the historic occasion live, waiting almost 15 minutes to show the tape.

Lewis had won the 100-meter race, the long jump while only making two of six attempts, the 200 meters and now the relay. He won them all with ease, although not everybody thought he won them with grace.

The Willingboro, N.J., native declined to talk to print reporters throughout the Olympics and he was booed for not attempting to break Bob Beamon's world record, by passing the last four attempts in the long jump.

So, how will Lewis be remembered? As the man who duplicated Owens' feat, as the man who reached dizzy heights in field and track?

Or will his gold be tarnished by his off-the-track image? An image his agent says will assure him the same kind of big-money contracts as rock star Michael Jackson.

Owens' widow, Ruth, was happy for Lewis.

"For Carl to do what he did was wonderful," she said after watching the performance on television in San Diego. "That's what the Olympics are all about. Jesse's records have stood for a long time. Watching this was like seeing it all over again"

She also said that Lewis and Owens "are two different personalities" despite their shared record, but predicted Lewis would not have trouble adjusting to pressure placed on him by supporters and the media.

"I think Carl has his feet well on the ground. I'm very happy for him," she said.

As the Olympics, saturated with U.S. gold, sped toward the finish line, American boxers Mark Breland, Pernell Whitaker and Paul Gonzales quickly picked up gold medals before Virgil Hill lost in a hair-line decision to Joon-Sup Shin.

Then Henry Tillman got the U.S. boxers back on track, winning America's fourth of the day, and Steve McCrory of Detroit started the evening session with a split decision in the flyweight division over Redzepovski of Yugoslavia. Meldrick Taylor of Philadelphia then won a unanimous decision, 5-0, over Peter Konyegwachie of Nigeria.

Jerry Page of Columbus, Ohio, beat Thailand's Dhawee Umponmaha in the 139-pound class, for the record-breaking seventh U.S. boxing gold. Cuba won six golds four years ago, when the United States and its powerful team of fighters boycotted the Games. This time, Cuba joined the Soviet-led boycott.

Evelyn Ashford won her second gold of the Games, anchoring the U.S. women's 400-meter relay in 41.65 seconds. She earlier won the women's 100-meter dash.

Ashford and her teamates — Alice Brown, Jeanette Bolden and Cheeseborough — had an easy time in their 400-meter relay victory. The U .S. led throughout, and at the end Ashford had a 10-yard lead and was pulling away.

Canada was second, Britain third.

Brisco-Hooks won the women's 200 and 400 meters earlier, the first person — woman or man — to achieve that double at the Olympics.

She ran the third leg of the relay Saturday. And — when Cheeseborough crossed the finish line first, in Olympic-record time of 3:18.29 — Bri sco-Hooks had a triple-crown of gold shared only with Rudolph, who was here as an TV analyst. Fanny Blankers-Koen of the Netherlands shares the Olympic record of four track and field golds with Owens and now Lewis, winning her's in 1948.

The men's 1,600 relay also went to the United States, with the squad anchored by Antonio McKay winning in 2:57.91. Also on the winning team were Sunder Nix, Ray Armstead and Alonzo Babers, the winner in the men's 400.

In archery, Americans men swept gold and silver. Darrell Pace of Hamilton, Ohio, broke his own Olympic record to win, with 2,616 points, 45 more than his old mark. Rick McKinney was second with 2,564.

In tennis, a demonstration sport at the Olympics, Steffi Graf, 15, of West Germany, won the women's finals over ailing Sabrina Goles of Yugoslavia. Stefan Edberg of Sweden won the men's gold, defeating Francisco Maciel of Mexico in two sets.

In diving, Greg Louganis, the springboard champion aiming for an unprecedented double gold, was in first place after preliminary dives in the 10-meter platform. He had 688.05, breaking his own platform record of 687.90 set last year. China's Li Kongzheng was in second with 615.69, while American Bruce Kimball was fourth at 602.64. The finals are Sunday.

In boxing:

•Breland, a welterweight from Brooklyn, N.Y., won the most important bout of his career, giving him a record of 110-1 in amateur life. He clearly outclassed and outpointed Young Sy An of South Korea, winning 5-0.

•Whitaker, a 132-pound lightweight from Norfolk, Va., stopped Luis Ortiz of Puerto Rico with three seconds remaining in the second round after the Puert Rican took two standing 8-counts in the final minute of the round and had his nose bloodied. The bout was halted when one of Ortiz' cornerman climbed onto the ring apron.

•Gonzales won the gold medal in the 106-pound light flyweight division without boxing. Salvatore Todisco of Italy, his opponent, was unable to fight because of a broken thumb.

•Shin, a hard-hitting southpaw, was a narrow 3-2 winner over Hill. Two judges voted for each boxer and the third called it even.

Under Olympic rules, the judge must decide on one or the other, and he voted for Shin. A jury of five judges, which reviews all 3-2 and 4-1 decisions, concured with the 3-2 decision.

Louganis Excels On 'Dive Of Death'

LOS ANGELES (AP) — In the Olympics it's listed innocently enough as Dive 307C, but competitors know it as the "Dive of Death."

Russia's Sergei Shalibashvili was killed when he tried it. America's Greg Louganis' hopes for a gold medal in platform diving rest on it.

The diver stands on a platform 33 feet above the water, jumps up and begins doing 3½ reverse somersaults. As he comes down, his head must clear the edge of the platform. There is no margin for error.

Louganis had to watch in horror at what happened then follow the unfortunate Soviet.

"It was difficult," Louganis said. "But I just blocked out what had happened and concentrated on my own dive. I had to. That's one dive you don't want to fool around with."

Ron O'Brien, the coach of the U.S. diving team, said, "It's the meanest dive of them all, no doubt. But Greg had never had any problems with it."

In fact, O'Brien said Louganis needs to start getting a little closer to the platform.

"He's never been close to the platform on that dive," said O'Brien. "His problem has been that he's too far away from it. That's understandable considering it's the hardest dive being done."

Louganis' "Dive of Death" will come shortly after 1 p.m. Sunday — his final effort on a 10-dive program.

He will try the dive whether he's ahead or behind in a go-for-broke shot at becoming the first male in Olympic history to win both diving gold medals. He won the gold medal in the springboard on Wednesday.

"Once you get to a meet you can't change your program and the dive is in our program," said O'Brien. "Greg has been working on it since Dec. 1, 1982. He's ready."

Louganis performed the dive at the Olympic Trials in June without a hitch.

"You can't be real tired or tense when you try that dive," said O'Brien. "Maybe that's what happened to the Russian."

O'Brien said "I'm sure Greg's knees were knocking. The dive is hard enough without having something shocking happen just before you get on the platform."

He said "There's no problem doing it from the springboard because it's a glancing blow if you hit the board. If you hit the platform, it's like being hit in the head with a baseball bat."

It was competitive diving's first death in 80 years and there was some sentiment to take it out of the Olympic program.

"There's an element of danger on any dive off the platform," said O'Brien.

carried the ball 76 times for 367 yards when Byner missed part of the 1982 season with injuries.

Byner was fourth on the Pirates' pass reception list with 13, but Walden caught six and Baker three for support to the aerial attack.

"Walden probably has the best hands, but Tony is a little faster," Barrow said. "We're more likely to throw to Jimmy, but Tony's worked hard on catching the ball over the summer."

Both Walden and Baker have been hampered by injuries during their careers at ECU, and Barrow said it will be important to find top reserves ready to play.

Junior tailback Bubba Bunn returns to the Pirate camp after missing the 1983 campaign with academic problems, while junior Dwight Richardson and freshman Terry Paige are expected to challenge for playing time. Quarterback Darrell Speed saw limited action at tailback in 1983 and may be used again this season.

At fullback, Pat Bowens, JuCo transfer Bobby Clair and Lewis Hill will provide support.

"The big thing is that we're going to have to have some of these other people come to the top and fight for playing time," Barrow said. "Jimmy and Tony are as healthy as they've been, but they have a history of minor injuries.

"Richardson had his best spring since he's been here, and Paige improved a lot also. Bubba Bunn put on some weight while he was out, but he's lost it now. He gives us that big tailback that we don't have with Jimmy and Tony.

"Bowens ended up finishing behind Reggie, but he hurt his shoulder in the spring. He traveled with us last year as the third fullback, but we'll have to see how he is in practice now. Bobby Clair was a junior college All-American (at Northeast Oklahoma) and looks outstanding."

And the Pirates recorded a good recruiting year in the backfield, according to Barrow. Jarrod Moody of Northern Nash High School and Tim James of Hartsville, S.C. lead the East Carolina freshman contingent.

"Moody looks real smooth," Barrow said. "He's another big tailback who's really impressed us. He's such a skilled athlete and a good student, as well. Moody's one of the top running backs in the state, and Tim James was one of the top picks in South Carolina. James looks really good; he could be the person to watch in the future.

"We have a chance to be good, now all we have to do is get these young kids ready to play. That's where Reggie and Jimmy and Tony will have to be the leaders of the group."

Emory To Test Flipping Skill At ECU Promotion

The East Carolina University athletic department announced plans for a football promotional day at Carolina East Mall on Saturday, August 18.

Featured will be the 1984 Oldsmobile Firenza donated by Holt Oldsmobile which will be given away at the first home sellout fo the 1984 season. The car will be filled with balloons, and the public will receive an autographed football and a set of season tickets to the ECU home football games.

East Carolina mascot, Pee Dee the Pirate, will be on hand and everyone is invited to register to win a birthday party with Pee Dee.

ECU cheerleaders will be present, and Pirate souveniers will be given out at random.

Head Coach Ed Emory will participate in a pancake flipping contest against three local television sportscasters. Emory will try to out flip Greg Kerr of WNCT-TV, Kenny Hoff of WITN-TV and Lee Moore of WCTI-TV.

The festivities begin at 11:30 a.m., while the pancake flipping contest is from 12:30 to 1:30 p.m.

Rampants Progressing Slower Than Expected

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

After a week and a half of practice, new Rose High School football coach Chip Williams finds himself with mixed emotions about his squad.

He's extremely pleased with the attitude of the players and their eagerness to learn what he wants to teach. But he's unhappy that things are not progressing as quickly as he had hoped.

The Rampants have had some attrition, too, but that's to be expected. "We had 60-some players out for the varsity at the start, but it's dropped down to about 46-47," Williams said. "I was hoping that we'd be further along in techniques and in progressing in the offensive scheme."

However, while these things are lagging behind, Williams says that the players are doing all they can to improve and to learn. "They're doing everything that's asked of them and are developing."

Williams has brought a strict discipline to the team. "That's the only way I know to be successful," Williams said. "I have to show them that it's the right way — and it is."

In the 12 practices to date, Williams says that the Rampants have put in two kicking teams, about one-half of the defense and two-thirds of the defense. "What I mean by that is the sets we're going to use and, to a certain extent, the players we expect to use, too."

Williams said that a lot of time had been spent — and will be spent — on teaching the techniques of blocking and tackling. "Not only how to do this, but where we want people to run. It's very technical and fundamental."

The Rampants, unlike some teams in the area, will not open their season until the second authorized play date of the 11-week North Carolina High School Athletic Association season. (Each team can play ten games.) This, thus, allows Williams to have an extra week to prepare the team for the season, rather than having an open date at some point along the line. "It's a blessing," he said of the late start. "We're going to need every bit of the time.

"But, I will say this. We're going to be ready when we walk on the field."

While Williams has brought in one coach — and is hopeful of still getting another — he is pleased with the way the old coaching staff which has returned has blended in. "They're doing what I ask of them and I think we're going to develop into a good staff."

The coach is also pleased with the leadership shown so far by the senior class. "I haven't had a senior miss a practice yet," he said. "We really haven't had too many people miss at all. Of course, you're always going to have a few to miss because of work, and you're always going to have some who just aren't going to show for other reasons."

Williams feels much of the success the Rampants may have this year will come because of the offensive line, and he says that this group is moving into shape. "We're still not sure of some of the positions, but things are looking up at this time."

"We have some others who show promise in these positions and we hope that they come through. They have to! We want to be very strong in the offensive line.

"We're trying to be very positive with the team, to build confidence," Williams said.

"We have four weeks to get ready for our first game. We're going to need every day of it."

Olympic 'Class Of 1980' Graduates

By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer

LOS ANGELES — America's Olympic Class of 1980, left back four years ago by a widely questioned principle that thrust sports into the arena of politics, finally has graduated with honors.

After the United States passed on the Moscow Games, many of its world class athletes could not afford to wait around for the next Olympiad. The demand of time and energy simply was too much of an investment for them to make and their medal chances were over, buried by the boycott.

Others, however, stayed and prospered, hauling home their share of gold, silver and bronze, but more importantly, finally getting to compete in the Games. Merely by being here, they have beaten time, and that may be the toughest opponent of all for any athlete.

These Games will be remembered for the multi-medal track accomplishments of Carl Lewis. They also should be remembered, however, for the disappointments of those who stayed and lost and the triumphs of those who stayed and won.

Mary Decker has been trying to win an Olympic medal since 1976. Her chance this time ended with her writhing in pain in the Coliseum infield after a collision in the 3,000-meter race.

Decker's disappointment was not unique, though. There were a host of other 1980 team members who came up short, athletes such as Larry Myricks, America's best long jumper in the pre-Carl Lewis era who won the trials in his event four years ago.

When he got to the Games this year, Lewis had squeezed past him, leaving Myricks as America's second best long jumper and fourth in the Olympic competition. There are no medals for finishing fourth.

No American athlete excited the track and field crowd as much as veteran triple jumper Willie Banks, who leads cheers before he takes off down the strip. Banks, a 28-year-old lawyer, reached back for one more sunrise in his specialty, but found that twilight had set in. He finished sixth.

The wait was worth it for others, though. Edwin Moses, the world's premier 400-meter hurdler, repeated his gold medal performance of 1976. Benita Fitzgerald-Brown won the women's 100-meter hurdles. Pole vaulter Mike Tully and Mac Wilkins in the discus both won silvers as did sprinters Alice Brown and Chandra Cheeseborough.

The Olympic swimming pool was kinder to survivors of the 1980 boycott.

Tracy Caulkins, so distraught after the 1980 disappointment that she considered giving up the sport, stayed instead and cashed in with two individual medley gold medals as well as a relay gold. With her Olympic dream fulfilled, she announced her retirement from competitive swimming.

Caulkins had plenty of medal company from 1980 swimming alumni. Mary T. Meagher won two butterfly and one relay gold, Nancy Hogshead took three golds and a silver, Cynthia Woodhead and Susan Rapp each earned silver.

Among the men, Rick Carey and Rowdy Gaines each took three golds and Greg Louganis ruled the diving competition with a gold in the springboard. Louganis goes Sunday for a platform gold medal, which would make him the only man ever to accomplish an Olympic diving double.

There were disppointments in swimming. Kim Linehan finished fourth in the 400-freestyle. Matt Gribble failed to qualify for the 100 butterfly. Perhaps the toughest to take was John Moffet, top qualifier in the 100-meter breastroke, who was injured in the preliminaries and finished fifth in the final.

Six members of the U.S. women's volleyball team stayed with the squad through the boycott, convinced that the payoff in 1984 would be Olympic gold. When it turned out to be silver instead some of the veterans like tiny Debbie Green broke down in tears. But the silver was the first medal this nation has ever won in the sport and that alone should be considerable consolation.

Because Olympic boxers move swiftly to professional paydays, there are rarely repeaters in that sport. America offered only one this year, Robert Shannon, the boxing barber. He also was the only American boxer on the 12-man team to leave here without a medal.

If they decide to give one for perseverence, though, Shannon and the other 1980 survivors should be considered. They've earned that.

Bill Elliott Takes Pole

Elliott, driving a red-and-white Ford Thunderbird, broke the MIS record of 164.339 mph he set in June at the Miller 400, which he later won.

It was the third time this year the 26-year-old Dawsonville, Ga., native has set the fast time in a Grand National event. This time, he led a string of 26 drivers over the 160 mph mark.

Bell's Homer Ends Davis' Streak

TORONTO (AP) — Storm Davis, who moments earlier had stood in disbelief on the mound, was a figure of dejection in the Baltimore Orioles' clubhouse.

Davis, who was three outs away from his seventh straight victory since the All-Star Game, watched his first pitch to George Bell sail over the right-field fence in the ninth inning for a two-run homer to give the Toronto Blue Jays a 3-2 victory.

"It was a high fastball," said Davis of what turned into Bell's 16th homer of the season. "I was just trying to get ahead. They took a gamble (the Blue Jays didn't sacrifice) and it paid off."

"I thought it was off the wall," said Davis. "I didn't think he got it all."

"I knew I hit the ball pretty good, but I didn't know it was out" said Bell. "It's a long way to right-center (375 feet)."

The loss was the ninth in the last 12 games for the slumping Orioles and coupled with New York's win over Cleveland, dropped Baltimore into fourth in the American League East behind the New York Yankees.

"We need every game from here on out," said Davis. "Every game Toronto and Detroit wins shoves us farther back in the pack.

"But Toronto's a tough club to beat. They're one of the best clubs in the American League and double-tough to beat here."

Baltimore manager Joe Altobelli thought his club should have put the game away in the eighth when they loaded the bases with none out but failed to score against reliever Jim Gott.

"I certainly didn't look forward to not scoring with the bases loaded," he said. "This was a pretty tough loss, no doubt."

"We wanted to win three of four in Cleveland and couldn't do it," Altobelli said of the Orioles' preceding series where they split. "We certainly can't win three of four here now."

Davis, 12-5, had checked the Jays on five singles entering the ninth before Rick Leach opened the inning with a single on an 0-2 count.

"Leach's hit was a big hit, believe me," said Toronto Manager Bobby Cox. "He got the rally started and with an 0-2 count, did a heck of a piece of hitting."

The homer by Bell was just the fourth home run given up by Davis this season.

Gott, who pitched hitless relief the final two innings after taking over for Luis Leal, improved his record to 6-5.

Toronto took a 1-0 lead in the third inning on a run-scoring sacrifice fly by Dave Collins.

Rance Mulliniks opened the inning with a single and after Ernie Whitt walked, both runners advanced on a sacrifice bunt by Alfredo Griffin. Davis hit Damaso Garcia to load the bases and Collins followed with a fly to center that scored Mulliniks. Lloyd Moseby ended the inning by flying out to center.

The Jays threatened in the seventh when with one out they had runners on first and second.

New York.....10
Cleveland.....1

CLEVELAND (AP) — Rookie third baseman Mike Pagliarulo is not surprised that he is hitting .293 for the New York Yankees after struggling during the first three months of this season with a .212 average in the minor leagues.

"I wasn't playing that much down there and it was tough to be consistent. Up here I know when I'm going to play, against right-handers, so I can relax and think about that," the left-handed hitter said after clubbing a home run and driving in three runs as the torrid Yankees routed the Cleveland Indians 10-1 Saturday.

Pagliarulo was called up to the Yankees from their Triple-A Columbus team on July 7, and has drilled 13 extra-base hits in his 82 at-bats with New York. The Yankees, who have won all 11 of their games against Cleveland this season, are 25-8 since the All-Star break, and Pagliarulo says that being surrounded by so many hot-hitting veterans helps him.

"They make me feel comfortable on and off the field," the 24-year-old said. "I'm not nervous. They help me with hitting tips and I'm relaxed at the plate."

Don Mattingly also homered and he and Dave Winfield each had three hits as New York won for the 13th time in its last 15 games.

The triumph, the Yankees' 13th in 15 games, gave them an 11-0 record over the Indians this season.

The Yankees backed Phil Niekro, 14-6, with a 13-hit attack. Niekro yielded six hits in seven innings while striking one and not walking a batter before getting relief help from Bob Shirley. The victory was Niekro's 282nd of his career.

Steve Farr, 2-9, was the loser.

New York, which has the best record in baseball since the All-Star break, 25-8, has outscored Cleveland 78-25 this season and hit 17 home runs to Cleveland's two.

Bobby Meacham led off the Yankee first with a walk and later scored on Winfield's single. The Yankees made it 3-0 in the second on Pagliarulo's two-run homer, his second of the year.

Mattingly slugged his 17th homer leading off the sixth and the Yankees scored three more runs in the inning on Steve Kemp's RBI single, an RBI single by Pagliarulo and Omar Moreno's RBI groundout.

Cleveland scored its only run in the sixth on George Vukovich's RBI single but the Yankees scored three more in the seventh on a fielding error by center fielder Brett Butler, an RBI double by Don Baylor and Kemp's RBI single.

Moreland's Single Lifts Cubs

MONTREAL (AP) — Keith Moreland knew he wasn't going to get a good pitch to hit, so he took a swing at a bad one and won a ballgame for the Chicago Cubs Saturday.

Moreland golfed a single from off his shoetops to score Ryne Sandberg from third base with one out in the top of the ninth to lift the Cubs to a 2-1 victory over the Montreal Expos.

It was the fifth game-winning RBI this week and sixth in his last 11 games for Moreland, who entered the game with a .439 average over that stretch.

"It was an outstanding piece of hitting on Moreland's part," said Cubs Manager Jim Frey. "It (the ball) probably would have hit in front of the catcher (if Moreland hadn't hit it)."

Moreland said he wasn't interested in where the ball would land.

"I was just trying to make contact," said Moreland. "Lea (Expos starter Charlie Lea) gave me a pitch to hit early in the count and I didn't hit it. A pitcher of his quality is thinking of striking me out and I knew I wasn't going to see anymore good pitches."

As far as Frey was concerned, the Cubs had seen too many good pitches since they arrived in Montreal. The Expos had halted the Cubs' six-game winning streak by taking the first two games of the four-game series.

"After struggling with the bats for two games, that was the best inning of hitting we've had since we got here," Frey said.

Sandberg hit a leadoff single, stole second and advanced to third on a fly ball to right by Gary Matthews. Lea, 14-8, then walked Leon Durham intentionally before Moreland stroked his third hit of the game to score Sandberg.

The Cubs took a 1-0 lead in the second when Durham doubled, moved to second on a single by Moreland and scored on Ron Cey's sacrifice fly.

That run stood up until the Montreal fifth when Mike Stenhouse hit a leadoff single and scored two outs later on a double by Tim Wallach. The ball beat Stenhouse to the plate on the play, but catcher Jody Davis dropped Larry Bowa's relay when Stenhouse slid home.

Maleeva Tops Bonder For Clay Court Title

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Top-seeded Manuela Maleeva of Bulgaria defeated No. 3 seed Lisa Bonder 6-4, 6-3 to claim the women's singles title at the $574,000 U.S. Open Clay Court tennis championships Saturday.

The 17-year-old Maleeva, ranked No. 6 in the world, earned $34,000 for the victory at the Indianapolis Sports Center. The title is the third of the year for Maleeva, who also won the Swiss and Italian opens on clay surfaces.

The two players held serve through the first eight games of the opening set before Maleeva broke Bonder's serve to take a 5-4 lead.

Maleeva then held serve to take the set.

Maleeva and Bonder exchanged service breaks to open the second set, which was tied at 3-3 before Maleeva won the final three games to close out the match.

Throughout the match, Maleeva moved Bonder off the baseline with drop shots and then won points on passing shots or Bonder's missed volleys.

In men's singles play, top-seeded Andres Gomez of Ecuador was leading No. 10 seed Heinz Gunthardt of Switzerland 5-2 in the first set of a semifinal match when a thunderstorm late Saturday afternoon forced the suspension of play.

No. 16 seed Libor Pimek was scheduled to play unseeded Balazs Taroczy of Hungary in the other men's semifinal match.

Defense Keys U.S. Win

INGLEWOOD, Calif. (AP) — If the rest of the world has improved so much in basketball, why did the U.S. men's team win the Olympic gold medal so easily?

Defense.

That's the opinion of Antonio Diaz-Miguel, coach of the Spanish team that lost 96-65 to the Americans in the championship game Friday night.

"I believe Bobby Knight revolutionized the sport 19 years ago," said Diaz-Miguel. "Nobody put the defense in front of the center."

The U.S. defense held the opposition to an average of 63.2 points per game while the Americans scored 95.4 in posting an 8-0 record. The victory earned the United States the gold for the first time since 1976 and the ninth time in 10 Olympics.

West Germany, a 78-67 loser in the quarterfinals in a foul-plagued game, came the closest to the Americans.

In beating Spain for the second time in the tournament, the United States held Spain's big scorer, 6-foot-6 Juan Antonio San Epifanio, to just four points. He had been averaging 20.7.

"They're not going to catch up if the United States remains serious about Olympic basketball," said Canadian Coach Jack Donohue about the foreign basketball programs. "The U.S. always had the best players. Now they take their time, pick the coach early and scout the other teams."

The absence of the Soviet Union took some of the luster off the triumph, but Knight had no doubt his men would have beaten the Soviets.

"I have one word to say about the Russians," he said brusquely at postgame news conference. "You people have never seen the Russians play, and I've been watching them for two years. The Russians wouldn't have won here. They can't play defense. They couldn't have beaten some of the teams in this tournament, and if you guys don't know that, you're not as smart as I think. And I don't think you're too smart anyway."

Diaz-Miguel, Knight's longtime friend, wasn't as cocksure that the Americans could have beaten the Soviets.

"I believe the Soviet Union has as good ability as the U.S.," he said. "The Soviet Union can equalize the U.S. in rebounding. The Soviet Union has more experience than the American players, and they have good shooters. But, I don't believe they have the defense of the U.S."

Knight also said he was pleased that Henry Iba, who coached Olympic teams in 1964, 1968 and 1972, watched the game at the Forum "for probably his last great Olympic moment since he had the gold medal stolen" in 1972.

It was a reference to the Americans' only loss in 78 Olympic games — 51-50 to the Soviet Union when officials allowed three seconds to be added to the clock after time had run out.

The two countries haven't met in the Olympics since 1976. The Americans boycotted the 1980 Mosow Games and the Soviets boycotted the Los Angeles Games.

Michael Jordan led the Americans Friday night with 20 points and was their top scorer in the Olympic tournament with a 17.1 average. Wayman Tisdale added 14, Sam Perkins 12 and Steve Alford 10 againt Spain as the team shot 64 percent from the floor.

The Americans pulled away early in the first half after Knight was slapped with his first technical foul of the tourney.

None of the players was expected to be on hand for the closing ceremonies Sunday. Most left for their homes Saturday.

The 12 players were driven hard by Knight, beginning in April at the Olympic Trials.

Tisdale, a two-time All-America who said he has become a better player while working under Knight, said, "I have a lot of respect for Steve Alford. He has to put up with it for three more years."

Alford was Knight's star player the past season as a freshman at Indiana.

Six of the players — all first-round draft picks — are headed for the National Basketball Association. North Carolina teammates Jordan (Chicago) and Perkins (Cleveland) were the third and fourth picks overall.

Arkansas' Alvin Robertson already has signed with San Antonio, Leon Wood of Fullerton State goes to Philadelphia, Vanderbilt's Jeff Turner to New Jersey and Georgia's Vern Fleming to Indiana.

Tisdale has two years remaining at Oklahoma but this is expected to be his final year in school before turning pro. Except for Alford, the remainder become seniors this fall — Chris Mullin at St. John's, Patrick Ewing at Georgetown, Joe Kleine at Arkansas and Jon Koncak at Southern Methodist.

They, too, figure as first-round NBA choices.

"Ten years from now," said Pete Newell, coach of the victorious 1960 team which included Oscar Robertson and Jerry West, "we'll be looking back at this team like we looked at the '60 team."

The 1960 gold medal team, led by Oscar Robertson, Jerry West and Jerry Lucas, averaged 102 points and gave up an average of 60.

Judge Refuses Request To Delay Denny McLain Trial

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — A federal judge refused to delay the racketeering trial of former major league pitcher Denny McLain despite his attorneys' pleas that they are too busy to represent him early next month.

McLain's attorneys, Arnold Levine and Rick Levinson, wanted U.S. District Judge Elizabeth A. Kovachevich to postpone the trial, which is set to begin Sept. 10. They said they have another case coming up soon and they don't want to spread their time between the two cases.

"Denny McLain has a right to counsel of his choice," Levine told the judge Friday. "He chose us. It's not his fault that we're unavailable."

McLain, major league baseball's last 30-game winner, and six others were charged in an indictment unsealed March 19.

But the former Detroit Tigers standout was the only one accused on all five counts of the indictment. And attorneys for some of the co-defendants said it would be unfair for them to have to be tried with McLain.

McLain, 40, wanted two separate trials for what his attorneys claim are separate conspiracy charges — a loan-sharking conspiracy and a cocaine conspiracy.

Kovachevish also refused that reqest.

In an eight-page memorandum, the government detailed its theory of the case to show why all the defendants should be tried together.

McLain and Barry Nelson were officers of First Fidelity Financial Services and Seymore Sher worked with them in the business through which they met people "who were totally desperate to obtain loans. Money was sometimes extorted from such persons by the defendants," or loaned at illegal interest rates, the memorandum said.

McLain, Sher and Frank Cocchiaro used "economic threats and threats of violence" to collect the debts, and "the evidence is expected to show that Cocchiaro was McLain's and Sher's superior, or boss, in connection with their loan-sharking activities," according to the memorandum, submitted by Assistant United States Attorney Ernst Mueller.

The government alleges that McLain, Sher and Cocchiaro also were involved in an illegal sports bookmaking operation out of the First Fidelity office in Tampa.

"McLain and Sher also engaged in illegal collection activities in connection with a gambling debt incurred by a bettor through this operation," the memorandum said.

The government alleges that drugs became a part of the association when McLain directed two individuals who could not meet loan shark payments to sell marijuana to raise the money.

"More significantly, however, the evidence is expected to show that in spring 1982, after First Fidelity went into bankruptcy, Nelson and McLain wre desperate for money and decided to engage in a cocaine transaction to alleviate the situation," the memorandum said.

"McLain obtained three kilos of cocaine which he attempted to sell through Barry Nelson and Mel Kaplan, an individual who was employed by a corporation affiliated with First Fidelity Financial Services," the memorandum said.

McLain then "initiated several other cocaine transactions" to raise money to repay Seymore Sher "in connection with their prior loan sharking activities."

Nelson has already pleaded guilty to one count in the case and promised to cooperate with the government, so has Larry Eugene Knott, another co-defendant.

The five defendants still in the case are McLain, Sher, Cocchiaro, Kaplan and Jose Rodriguez, who is charged with conspiring with McLain to import cocaine.

Levine and Levinson are representing defendants in a racketeering case set to begin Monday. That case is not expected to end until after Sept. 10, and the judge in the case has also refused to delay the trial.

"We're going to have to tell Denny to start looking for other counsel," Levine said after the hearing.

But McLain said he can't afford to hire somebody else and that another attorney, at this point, wouldn't have time to prepare his case.

"I don't know what to do," McLain said. "I'm not going to do anything. I can't afford new counsel."

Police Sergeant Aids U.S.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A police sergeant claimed a bit of credit Saturday for the U.S. team's gold medal in basketball, saying he rushed Michael Jordan's jersey to the Forum just as the Friday night game against Spain was starting.

Jordan, who scored 20 points in the U.S. team's 96-65 romp over the Spaniards, had accidentally left his jersey in his room at the University of Southern California Olympic Village.

Jordan discovered his error at about 6:15 p.m. Friday, and without the jersey, he might not have been allowed to play in the 7 p.m. game because trading jersey numbers isn't allowed, police Cmdr. William Booth said.

Police in Inglewood, where the Forum is located, dispatched a car to pick up the jersey, but it wasn't allowed inside the village. Just then, Los Angeles police Sgt. Emilio Perez happened to be driving by the apartment building where the American team is staying.

"The assistant (U.S.) team manager ran out and flagged me down and was yelling and screaming," Perez said.

"It was getting very, very close to starting time," Booth said, adding that Perez "scooted over to the Forum with Michael Jordan's uniform."

Just as the buzzer sounded alerting players that the game would start in five minutes, a team official grabbed the jersey from Perez and handed it to Jordan, Perez recalled.

"Michael Jordan threw on his jersey and ran out just as they were calling his name," Booth said.

Saturday morning, Perez said he was given some rewards by U.S. team officials: six Olympic pins and a sports medicine staff T-shirt. Perez said he also was told he will receive Jordan's autograph and some team photographs.

"It gives you the feeling of being part of their gold medal — having a small to-do with it," Perez said Saturday.

After the game, Jordan explained how he forgot the jersey.

"I put everything in my equipment bag except my tennis shoes," he said. "So then I had to take it all out to get my shoes in. I just forgot to put my blue uniform in there with my shoes."

Twins' Sale Heads Meeting Agenda

NEW YORK (AP) — Final approval of the sale of the Minnesota Twins heads a list of items on the agenda for baseball's annual summer meeting on Wednesday in Philadelphia.

The sale, from Calvin Griffith to Minneapolis banking tycoon Carl Pohlad, must be ratified by three-quarters of the American League teams and a majority of clubs in the National League. Ratification is considered a formality.

Also on the agenda will be a report from baseball's Long Range Planning Committee on the possibility of expanding each league to 16 teams. There currently are 14 teams in the American League and 12 in the National League. No action is expected on this issue.

Two other items on the agenda will be a report from the Player Relations Committee and a presentation on the Major League Scouting Bureau.

Baseball's current basic agreement with players expires on Dec. 31, and the Player Relations Committee will be responsible for handling labor negotiations for owners.

The scouting bureau report will concern expanded participation in the program to include all clubs by Sept. 1. Previously, some clubs have not participated in the program.

In addition, owners will hear a proposal that non-U.S. resident players attending high schools or colleges in the United States be brought under a different draft rule. Currently, they fall under protection of the high school and college rules but are not subject to selection under provisions of the draft.

Shattered Dreams

Decker Down After Collision With Budd

By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer

LOS ANGELES — Controversy continues to follow Zola Budd, the slender, 18-year-old South African, whose very participation in the Olympic Games stirred ill feelings before the competition ever began.

Budd was at the center of a mishap which cost American Mary Decker her chance at a gold medal in the 3,000-meter race Friday night.

At first, officials blamed Budd for the collision which sent Decker tumbling to the track and out of the race that was won by Maricica Puica of Romania in 8 minutes, 35.96 seconds.

Budd, who had faded badly in the final lap to finish seventh in the race, was disqualified for about 30 minutes, then reinstated with an official time of 8:48.80.

Originally, officials invoked Rule 141 of the International Amateur Athletics Federation which states: "Any competitor jostling, running across or obstructing another competitor so as to impede his progress shall be liable to disqualification. If in any race a competitor is disqualified for any of these reasons, the referee shall have the power to order the race to be rerun, excluding the disqualified competitor."

Although Olympic officials were not about to rerun this race, they blamed Budd for the episode. Then they reversed themselves.

"The jury of appeals has reviewed the film regarding the disqualification of Zola Budd and she has been reinstated to her original position," Mort Tenner, competition director of athletics, announced. "The jury does not hold Zola Budd responsible for what happened in the race."

Decker, however, did.

"I don't think there is any question that she was wrong," Decker said. "It could have been inexperience on her part. The rules say that you have to be a full stride ahead before you cut in."

The race was the first major international competition for Budd, whose eligibility was questioned because of her South African ancestry. South Africa is barred from the Olympic Games because of its racial policy of apartheid and Budd competed as a British subject after gaining citizenship from that country in just 13 days earlier this year.

Budd was distraught over the episode and tried to apologize to Decker, but the American waved her away, saying, "Don't bother."

Budd told the Daily Mail, the London tabloid that paid to bring her to Britain last March, that she wasn't upset about the way she ran.

"But I am upset that Mary fell and that the crowd seemed to think it was my fault," she said. "I don't know what happened but I think she ran into the back of me."

The South African Press Association quoted Budd as calling Decker "my idol."

When the race ended, another bizarre twist was added by a bare-chested man in a grass skirt who rushed on the field past security guards, and embraced Budd.

The Decker mishap occurred shortly after Budd had moved in front of the field which the American had led almost from the start. The barefoot teen-ager appeared to cut across in front of Decker, throwing the American off stride. Decker tumbled to the track, grabbing the number off Budd's back as she fell.

Americans Dominate Boxing

LOS ANGELES (AP) — With the field of contenders depleted by the Soviet-led boycott, it's not surprising that 10 Americans made today's finals of the Olympic boxing tournament, says super heavyweight Tyrell Biggs.

Biggs, of Philadelphia, said it was clear from the beginning that U.S. fighters would dominate the competition in the absence of the powerful teams from Cuba, the Soviet Union and East Germany.

"With the boycott this is no surprise," said Biggs, who meets Italy's Francisco Damiani for the gold medal. "If all the countries were here, it would be a hell of a surprise."

The 10 fighters in the finals tops Cuba's previous record of eight in the final bouts of the 1980 Moscow Games. Cuban fighters won six.

The best American performance came in 1976 when six boxers qualified for the finals and five won gold medals. Five U.S. fighters also won gold medals in 1952.

Already, one American boxer has been guaranteed a gold medal.

Paul Gonzales of Los Angeles won in a walkover over Italy's Salvatore Todisco after Todisco broke his thumb and was unable to fight in the 106-pound finals. Todisco broke the thumb while pounding out a 5-0 decision win Thursday night over Keith Mwila of Zambia.

Only two members of the 12-man U.S. squad failed to make the finals. Robert Shannon was stopped in the third round of his 119-pound fight with Sung-Kil Moon of South Korea, while Evander Holyfield was disqualified by a controversial referee's decision in the 178-pound semifinals.

The United States protested the decision to disqualify Holyfield because he knocked Kevin Barry of New Zealand down after the referee had ordered the two boxers to stop fighting.

But an International Amateur Boxing Association (AIBA) protest committee on Friday rejected the protest, saying a careful review of the videotape of the fight clearly showed Holyfield had hit after the break.

"There is no question in the minds of the protest committee," said Col. Don Hull, president of the AIBA. "They reviewed the film and it is clear that there was a violation and that an illegal blow incapacitated. The referee enforced the rules."

While most of the attention has been centered on the strong American team, Italy advanced three fighters to the finals, and Yugoslavia, South Korea and Canada all have two boxers with chances for gold medals.

Today's matchups include Steve McCrory of Detroit against Redzep Redzepovski of Yugoslavia, 112 pounds; Hector Lopez of Mexico vs. Italy's Maurizio Stecca, 119 pounds; Meldrick Taylor of Philadelphia vs. Peter Konyegwachie of Nigeria, 125 pounds; Pernell Whitaker of Norfolk, Va., vs. Luis Ortiz of Puerto Rico, 132 pounds; and Jerry Page of Columbus, Ohio vs. Dhawee Umponmaha of Thailand, 139 pounds.

Also fighting for the gold medals are Mark Breland of Brooklyn, N.Y., vs. Young-Su An of South Korea, 147 pounds; Frank Tate of Detroit vs. Shawn O'Sullivan of Canada, 156 pounds; Virgil Hill of North Dakota vs. Joon-Sup Shin of South Korea, 165 pounds and Willie deWit of Canada, vs. Henry Tillman of the United States, 201 pounds.

In the 178-pound division, Anton Josipovic of Yugoslavia will win the gold medal in a walkover because the left hook launched by Holyfield put Barry on the canvas and knocked him out of the tournament despite being declared the winner of the bout. Amateur boxing rules prohibit a boxer from fighting for 28 days after an incapacitating blow to the head.

Biggs, the world's top-ranked super heavyweight, is involved in perhaps one of the most interesting matchups with Damiani, whom he beat in the World Championship in 1982 and again last April on a decision during the World Championships' Challenge at the Sports Arena.

Damiani didn't take the latest defeat well, claiming he won the decision and was looking forward to a rematch "to remove any questions about who deserves the top spot."

"I want Biggs," he said earlier.

The two losses to Biggs are the only defeats in Damiani's last 53 bouts and he has climbed to the No. 2 spot in the International Amateur Boxing Association rankings behind Biggs. Damiani also owns a victory over three-time Olympic champion Teofilo Stevenson of Cuba, who has beaten Biggs twice without a defeat.

In the 201-pound matchup, Tillman, who lives just a few miles from the Sports Arena, will be looking to avenge a loss to deWit in the April challenge for the world title.

DeWit, a strong Canadian known for his punching power, decisioned Tillman in that match, but the American was forced to take the fight on only four days notice when the scheduled opponent, Angelo Musone, pulled out. Tillman said his boxing skills will make the difference this time around.

"A boxer always beats a slugger if he's a smart boxer," said Tillman.

First Woman Disqualified For Steroids

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A javelin thrower from Greece was disqualified from the Olympics Saturday, the first woman and fourth athlete found to have used steroids at the Games.

The International Olympic Committee disqualified Anna Verouli, 27, of Greece, saying urinalysis showed she had used anabolic steroids.

Verouli had finished seventh in her group in the qualifying stage and did not make the finals, so her disqualification has no effect on the medal standings.

The three previous disqualifications because of steroid use were Sweden's Thomas Johansson, who lost his silver medal in wrestling, and non-winners Mahmoud Tarha of Lebanon and Ahmed Tarbi of Algeria, both weightlifters.

Golden Knight

Jordan Leads Gold Rush

Even if the Soviet Union had shown up at the 1984 Olympics, the pair insists the United States still would have won the men's basketball gold medal.

"We'd beat the Russians wherever they want to play. The Russians can't play defense. There isn't any way they could come close to these players," Knight, the fiery U.S. coach, said after the Americans' 96-65 rout of silver medalist Spain Friday night.

The only serious mistake Jordan made was leaving the right uniform in his Village room. It took a police escort to get the outfit to him by game time.

"It was Duke blue. If it had been Carolina blue, I wouldn't have forgotten it," he said.

After collecting a game-high 20 points for a team-leading 137 in eight games, Jordan said, "It's not a big disappointment the Russians weren't here. We would have won the gold medal anyway. I think we could beat the Russians anywhere, any time."

Jordan, the college game's Player of the Year from North Carolina, calls this the greatest U.S. Olympic team ever. "We wanted to go out and prove it. We did," said the 6-foot-5 forward-guard.

That's some statement, considering the Americans have lost only once in 78 Olympic games and mined gold nine of 10 times. They were 8-0 in the Forum, handing the Spaniards their only two defeats. Spain settled for its first Olympic medal in men's basketball.

Yugoslavia, the 1980 gold medalist, had beaten Canada 88-82 for the bronze Thursday night.

Even after absorbing the losses to the Americans by a combined 64 points, Spanish Coach Antonio Diaz-Miguel refused to call the U.S. team superior to the Soviets.

"I believe it would be a very good game to watch," he said. "The Soviet Union can equalize the rebounding of the U.S. It has more experience than the American players. They have very good shooters, but I don't believe it has the defense of the U.S."

But first, the Indiana University coach ordered his players to hoist 80-year-old Henry Iba, a three-time Olympic coach whose only loss was a controversial 51-50 defeat by the Soviets.

"In 1972, a gold medal was stolen from Coach Iba, absolutely taken away from him. It wasn't taken away here tonight," said Knight, who entertained no post-game questions at a news conference.

"He has much power (with the officials). With a team like this, he doesn't need it," said the Spanish coach. "I believe the referees permitted too much hand contact. I think the referees are afraid after my friend, Bob, talked to them."

Jordan countered: "I think they were doing the same thing to us that we did to them. I don't think we were playing dirty."

Ironically, it was Knight's first technical foul of this two-week tournament that ignited a burst. It swept the Americans into a 52-29 halftime lead.

The American coach drew a technical for beefing about a goaltending call against Sam Perkins with less than six minutes gone before 15,067 Forum fans.

Jose Maria Margall sank the technical foul shot and Juan Antonio San Epifano's following basket cut the U.S. margin to 15-11.

The Spaniards scored only three field goals in the next 10 minutes. The Americans collected 27. By then, it was 42-19.

Pete Newell, the coach of the 1960 U.S . Olympic team led by Oscar Robertson, Jerry Lucas and Jerry West, did not step onto the 1984 bandwagon.

"I think my first eight or nine guys were just as good," said Newell, the coach of what has been regarded as the best American team ever.

ATLANTA (AP) — The Atlanta Braves announced Friday that relief pitcher Terry Forster was placed on the 15-day disabled list with an aggravated right hamstring pull.

To replace Forster on the roster, the National League club recalled reliever Jeff Dedmon from the Braves' AAA affiliate in Richmond, Va. Dedmon had been at Richmond for only five days.

Caldwell Snaps Streak, Yanks Fall

By The Associated Press

While Caldwell was recording a 4-2 victory, his first since April 27 — his nine-game losing streak tied the club record set by Tom Murphy in 1975 — the Indians made it 10-for-10 on the losing side against New York when they dropped a twi-night doubleheader to the streaking Yankees 6-4 and 10-1.

The teams have three more games remaining this season, all in the next three days. Only twice this century in the majors has a team failed to win at least one game in a season series, Baltimore going 12-0 against Kansas City in 1970 and 11-0 against Oakland in 1978.

"I didn't go out there thinking I was going to lose my 10th in a row," says Caldwell, who scattered six hits in eight innings. "Now, I'd like to win 10 in a row."

New York's Don Baylor hit a two-run homer in each game against Cleveland, driving in three runs in the nightcap along with Dave Winfield and Ken Griffey. The Yankees, 24-8 since the All-Star break, moved into a third-place tie with Baltimore in the American League East, the first time they have been that high since April 20.

"On any team, when a few guys start hitting it helps everybody. It seems like everybody starts hitting then," said Griffey. "Everybody's contributing significantly. Our young pitchers have been throwing the ball real well."

In other AL games, Detroit nipped Kansas City 5-4, Toronto blanked Baltimore 2-0, Texas trimmed Boston 8-4, Minnesota thumped Seattle 13-7 and Oakland edged California 7-6 in 10 innings.

Caldwell and Richard Dotson were locked in a 1-1 duel until the seventh when Robin Yount singled and was forced by Cecil Cooper. Ben Oglivie walked, Ted Simmons' double put Milwaukee ahead 2-1 and Bill Schroeder drove in a run with a grounder. Ed Romero hit a sacrifice fly in the ninth. Cooper homered for Milwaukee, Carlton Fisk for Chicago.

Just last Sunday, Caldwell was bombed 7-0 by the White Sox, lasting just one inning.

"I pitched a bit quicker tonight and I had better luck and they hit a little less," said Caldwell. "I just went back to basics, throwing breaking balls away and fastballs inside."

Yankees 6-10, Indians 4-1

Baylor's fifth-inning homer gave the Yankees a 4-1 lead in the opener. Steve Kemp followed with a triple and scored on a single by Butch Wynegar. Tim Foli rapped RBI doubles in the third and sixth innings while winner Joe Cowley scattered eight hits in 6 2-3 innings. Baylor's homer capped a three-run first inning in the nightcap and Winfield added a two-run shot in the fifth while Ray Fontenot pitched seven strong innings.

"We just want to win very badly," said Fontenot. "Everybody wants to prove we're a much better club than our midseason record showed."

"I hope we can keep pulling off this excellent comeback," echoed Cowley. "It's too early to tell how far we can go, but we're sure going to scare the heck out of somebody."

Tigers 5, Royals 4

Kirk Gibson tied the score 4-4 with a sixth-inning homer and pinch-hitter Ruppert Jones connected off Joe Beckwith in the eighth as the struggling Tigers won for only the seventh time in their last 19 games and remained eight games ahead of second-place Toronto in the AL East. Jones' homer made a winner of unbeaten reliever Aurelio Lopez, who is 10-0. Willie Hernandez pitched the ninth for his 25th save.

Kansas City's George Brett, who was hitting just .056 against Detroit this season, drove in three runs, two with a homer in a three-run fifth inning that gave the Royals a 4-3 lead as Detroit's Dan Petry failed for the fourth time to become the AL's first 15-game winner.

Blue Jays 2, Orioles 0

Doyle Alexander checked Baltimore on three hits and Tony Fernandez hit an inside-the-park home run. Baltimore's Dennis Martinez also pitched a three-hitter, but Toronto's first hit resulted in the game's first run. In the third inning with two out and an 0-2 count, Fernandez hit a line drive on which center fielder Bumbry got a late jump and then missed on the short hop. The ball rolled to the fence and Fernandez scored standing up with his third home run of the year.

The Blue Jays scored their second run in the seventh without a hit on a walk to Dave Collins, who stole second, went to third on a groundout and scored on a wild pitch. Alexander walked one and struck out seven.

Rangers 8, Red Sox 4

Larry Parrish drove in three runs and Charlie Hough scattered seven hits for his 10th victory in his last 14 starts. The Rangers scored four runs in the fourth inning to chase Boston starter Bobby Ojeda and take a 7-2 lead. Donnie Scott doubled, Wayne Tolleson tripled, Tolleson scored on Curtis Wilkerson's squeeze bunt that Ojeda misplayed for an error, Billy Sample beat out a bunt and Wilkerson scored on Buddy Bell's single. Parrish greeted reliever Steve Crawford with an RBI single. Tony Armas hit his 32nd homer for Boston.

Twins 13, Mariners 7

Tim Laudner collected four hits, including a two-run homer, and drove in three runs while Tim Teufel hit two solo homers and Kent Hrbek hit one to pace Minnesota's 21-hit attack. Laudner homered in the fifth inning, led off a four-run fourth with a triple and rapped an RBI single in a four-run seventh. He also singled in the sixth. Teufel homered in the seventh and eighth innings, while Hrbek hit his 18th homer in the third to give Minnesota a 1-0 lead. Steve Henderson and Alvin Davis homered for Seattle.

Athletics 7, Angels 6

Mike Davis led off the Oakland 10th with a single off Luis Sanchez and continued to second when right fielder Fred Lynn bobbled the ball. He scored the winning run when Sanchez threw wildly to first on Jim Essian's sacrifice bunt. It was California's third consecutive setback and dropped the Angels 1½ games behind first-place Minnesota in the AL West.

California built a 5-0 lead after two innings with Daryl Sconiers driving in three runs and Lynn hitting a two-run homer. Rickey Henderson's two-run homer and Dave Kingman's two-run double highlighted Oakland's five-run third. In the Angels' third, Doug DeCinces doubled and scored on Brian Downing's single for a 6-5 lead. The A's tied it again in the seventh on doubles by Carney Lansford and Kingman.

Gold Eludes Decker Again

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Once again, there is pain and frustration for Mary Decker. Once again, the Olympic gold — the track and field goal she has sought above all others — has eluded her grasp.

"Obviously the Olympics and I don't have a very good relationship," she said in a tearful news conference Friday night after her attempt for a 3,000-meter gold ended with her sprawled helplessly in the infield, grabbing her injured hip in agony as the rest of the field ran away.

"Something always seems to go wrong."

It was high drama in stark contrast to the cooly premeditated quest of Carl Lewis for four Olympic gold medals. Lewis and the the rest of the U.S. 400-meter relay team breezed through qualifying Friday and will try for the gold tonight.

A victory will give Lewis the first place he needs to equal the four golds won by Jesse Owens at the Berlin Games 48 years ago.

The relay is one of 10 finals scheduled today — the last big day of competition in the Los Angeles Games. The final event, the men's marathon, is scheduled Sunday evening in conjunction with the closing ceremonies.

Friday night, Decker seemed to be in control the first half of her race, with a slight lead over Zola Budd and Romania's Maricica Puica.

Then, slightly past the midway point, Budd, the 18-year-old barefoot South African whose career already had been shrouded in controversy after she switched her citizenship to Britain to run in the Olympics, moved slightly ahead of Decker.

Exactly what happened next is unclear, despite repeated videotape replays. Budd was in front of Decker, but the two were very close. Decker's foot seemed to strike Budd's leg. They both staggered a few steps, then the American runner went tumbling to the ground, grabbing her injured hip.

The meet referee initially disqualified Budd, who was running in her first international race. The British team appealed and the jury of appeals studied tapes from six different angles before reinstating Budd, who faded to seventh place at the finish.

Decker left no doubt who she felt was to blame. She said Budd cut too close in front of her. "I hold her responsible for what happened," Decker said. "I didn't do anything wrong. In fact, I was running a very good race."

The 26-year-old Decker — winner of the 1,500 and 3,000 meters at last year's world championships — has never won an Olympic medal. She was thwarted by injury in 1976 and missed the 1980 Games because of the U.S. boycott.

She dropped out of the 1,500 field at Los Angeles to concentrate on the 3,000 — her best shot at a gold.

After the race, Budd tried to console Decker, but Decker said she told Budd, "Don't bother."

Budd did not talk to the mass of reporters at the Games, but she told the South African Press Association, "I am really upset because Mary Decker has always been my idol."

And The Daily Mail, the London tabloid that paid to bring Budd to Britain last March, quoted her as saying she didn't know what happened, "but I think she (Decker) ran into the back of me."

Cornelia Buerki of Switzerland, who finished fifth, said Decker was to blame. "I only saw that Mary fell as she tried to pass Zola on the inside. It was definitely not Zola's fault because the one coming from behind has to watch out," Buerki said. "Mary made the mistake."

Puica won the race and has an excellent shot at a second told today in the 1,500 meters. Wendy Sly of Britain won the silver and Lynn Williams of Canada, the bronze.

There were four other finals Friday night, and West Germans won two of them.

In the discus, Rolf Danneberg, a 31-year-old unemployed teacher from West Germany, ruined a bid for a last hurrah by Mac Wilkins of the United States. Danneberg won at 218-feet, 6-inches. Wilkins, the gold medalist at Montreal who says he is retiring after this meet, was second a foot behind the winner.

Wilkins said he had fouls on two throws that would have won the event. "My first reaction is it seemed so simple out there," he said. "I should have thrown farther."

Danneberg wasn't at all upset with the distances.

"That Wilkins is not satisfied with his throw is his problem," the bearded West German said through an interpreter.

"I had a very good beginning," the winner said. "a very good first throw for me to get ready for the finals. I could throw the next five throws as hard as I could."

The other West German gold went to Ulrike Meyfarth, who captured her first Olympic title 12 years ago at the age of 16 in Munich. Meyfarth won the high jump with an Olympic record mark of 6-7½. Sara Simeoni, the previous record holder, also topped her old mark to finish second at 6-6¾.

Joni Huntley of Beaverton, Ore., wound up third at 6-5½, tying the Olympic mark set by Simeoni four years ago.

Julius Korir, a Kenyan who attends Washington State University, won the 3,000-meter steeplechase in 8:11.80. Joseph Mahmoud of France was second at 8:13.31, while Brian Diemer of the United States was third at 8:14.06.

America's Henry Marsh, who has suffered from a virus in recent weeks, stayed with the leaders until the final 100 meters but faded to fourth. He collapsed and was treated at the track for exhaustion.

Zhou Jihong Puts China Ahead Of Diving Field

LOS ANGELES (AP) — China has officially arrived on the international diving scene, led by a 97-pound teen-ager with a baby face and nerves of steel.

Nineteen-year-old Zhou Jihong won the women's 10-meter platform gold medal at the Summer Olympics Friday night, defeating Americans Michele Mitchell and Wendy Wyland for her country's first diving gold.

Zhou compiled 435.51 points in 10 dives, compared with 431.19 for silver medal-winner Mitchell and 422.07 for bronze medal-winner Wyland. Both U.S. women are from Mission Viejo, Calif.

Zhou faced unrelenting pressure from the Americans. While teammate Chen Xiaoxia crumbled, Zhou refused to give in.

"Our game plan was to put pressure on Chen Xiaoxia and Zhou in the late dives but you have to give Zhou credit, she just wouldn't fold," U.S. Coach Ron O'Brien said.

"I was happy they (Mitchell and Wyland) both got medals," O'Brien said. "We showed a lot of character. It looked like the Chinese were going to runaway with it in the early dives."

China only began to compete internationally in diving in 1981. O'Brien said the Chinese will be a force for years to come.

"They are formidable competitors," O'Brien said. "They are here. They will be tough from now on, now that they've won an Olympic medal."

Zhou said there are more divers just like her in China.

"We have many younger divers in China," she said. "In 1988 we hope to perform better. I reached my normal diving standard but Chen did not perform up to her potential."

Mitchell said she wasn't unhappy finishing second.

"I'm pleased with the way I dived," she said. "I kept my head together pretty good."

Wyland came from far back to capture the bronze.

"I was pleased with the way I closed," she said. "I was happy we both were able to get medals. We worked hard a long time for them."

Zhou is no rookie on the platform diving scene. She was the FINA Cup platform winner last year and a third-place finisher in the 1982 World Championships in Ecuador.

"I started out as a gymnast but tried diving and I decided to change," she said.

The final Olympic diving event began today with preliminaries in the men's platform. American Greg Louganis hopes to add the platform gold to his springboard title. If he does, he will become the first male ever to win both events in an Olympics.

NO. 1 IN EASTERN NORTH CAROLINA

OUTDOORS With Joe Albea

Sales Tax For Wildlife — In the future when you buy shotgun shells, a new fishing rod, or any other hunting and fishing equipment at your local sporting goods store, you'll be helping wildlife. Recently, the North Carolina General Assembly adopted legislation that will return a portion of existing state sales tax receipts from the sale of hunting an fishing equipment to the North Carolina Wildlife Resources Commission for conservation programs. This legislation was sponsored by Sen. Harold W. Hardison of Deep Run and had the strong support of Gov. James B. Hunt Jr.

The first transfer of funds, which will be made this year, will total $500,000 and will be used for improvement in wildlife enforcement programs. In fiscal year 1985-86 the wildlife commission will receive $2 million in sales tax funds which will be used for various wildlife programs. In subsequent years the annual appropriation will be based on the $2 million figure and adjusted up or down depending on total tax receipts. At least 50 percent of these funds must be used for non-recurring costs — such as large equipment items, renovation of existing facilities, and other projects.

"This legislation is a great step for wildlife conservation. As far as we know, we are the first wildlife agency in the nation to receive funding based more closely to the business that wildlife generates," said Vernon Bevill, executive director of the N.C. Wildlife Resources Commission. "As we enter our budget planning process for the next two years, these funds will give us a much clearer picture of what we have to work with and will allow for better opportunities to implement wildlife programs on the ground.

"This approach will maximize our effectiveness in many areas. We plan to make significant improvements in our enforcement, boating access and inland fisheries programs in the near future. Of course, other areas of need will not be neglected."

"I think it's important that we recognize our General Assembly for their willingness to support a progressive wildlife management program in North Carolina," said J. Robert Gordon of Laurinburg, chairman of the N.C. Wildlife Resources Commission. "We must have their help to maintain a quality wildlife program, and we appreciate how they have worked with us to improve outdoor opportunities for the millions of sportsmen and other citizens who enjoy our wildlife.

"We all benefit from these programs. For every dollar spent on wildlife programs in North Carolina, almost $50 is returned to the economy of the state by those pursuing related outdoor interests."

A 1980 survey demonstrated that wildlife related activities are worth at least three-quarters of a billion dollars to the North Carolina economy.

Wildlife Note — The horseshoe crab, named for its hoof shape by early English settlers of North Carolina, is not a crab at all. Its nearest relatives are spiders and scorpians.

Fishing Report — Fishing continues to be fair both inland and on the coast. Spanish mackerel have been biting sporadically well off Core and Bogue Banks. Gary Bach of Greenville, fishing with his brother and father, caught a cooler full of Spanish trolling Clark spoons off Cape Lookout. Gene Baker, also of Greenville, landed over 100 Spanish while fishing just outside Bogue Inlet.

Offshore fishermen were picking up a few white marlin off Oregon Inlet. The end of this month should be a hot time for white marlin on the outer banks. A few largemouth bass have been caught in farm ponds around town. Plastic worms fished deep seem to be the best bait going right now.

Press Reacts To Budd-Decker

By The Associated Press

Zola Budd's controversial collision with Mary Decker in the Olympic women's 3,000-meter run was front-page news in Budd's adopted England and in her native South Africa.

"Zola Budd in Final Shock," trumpeted The Daily Mail, the London tabloid that paid the expenses for the 18-year-old Budd to emigrate to England last March. The paper devoted its entire front page to Budd's collision with Decker, which knocked the American medal favorite to the ground and out of the race.

Romania's Maricica Puica won the gold, Britain's Wendy Sly the silver and Lynn Williams of Canada the bronze, but the finish order was pushed aside by the mid-race tumult.

The London Times headlined its story "Silver for Wendy Sly and Zola Disqualified," while the Daily Telegraph blared, "Zola in Olympic Drama."

British Broadcasting Corp. TV constantly showed replays of the Decker-Budd collision, and BBC radio and other stations made the incident the top news item. But neither the broadcasts nor the various newspaper accounts attempted to hand out blame.

London Daily Mail reporter Neil Wilson, writing from Los Angeles, said: "Zola Budd's Olympic dream died in controversial fashion ... Her moment of disaster was a collision with her great American rival Mary Decker which caused Decker to crash out of the race ...

"It looked as if Miss Decker crashed into Miss Budd in an attempt to find room to pass on the inside, fell herself and never got up," Wilson wrote.

Wilson quoted Budd as saying: "I am not upset about the way I ran but I am upset that Mary fell and that the crowd seemed to think it was my fault. I don't know what happened but I think she ran into the back of me."

The South African papers rushed to press shortly after the race ended and were already being circulated when word came that Budd's disqualification had been reversed by race officials. Still, the incident was the worst imaginable end to what many South Africans saw as a kind of emergence from 24 years in the Olympic wilderness. South Africa has been barred from the Olympic movement since 1960 because of the government's racial policies.

Unlike most expatriates, the fawn-like, 18-year-old Budd remained a national hero even after becoming a British citizen and was being ballyhooed as South Africa's candidate for gold.

South Africa is also barred from receiving a television feed from the Olympics, so about 300 fans of the barefoot running star gathered in the middle of the night to watch a special satellite transmission of the race.

"The cheers that sounded around the satellite room (at the start) changed to at first a diffident, uncertain mumbling and then an uneasy silence as Budd proceeded to run the race of the untried competitor she was shown to be," the South African Press Association said.

The Citizen newspaper said, "Zola Booed as Decker Crashes," noting that the 90,000-plus crowd in the Los Angeles Coliseum jeered Budd for the rest of the race after Decker fell.

The papers carried prominently Decker's sobbing criticism of Budd, who until her record-breaking 5,000-meter run eight months ago was an unknown farm girl in Orange Free State Province.

The Mail said Budd "clearly cut across the front of the American," and added: "The rest of the race must have been sheer torment for her as she faced the anger of the crowd and finally crossed the line."

Americans Take Silver In Men's Water Polo

By The Associated Press

A tie proved as disastrous as a loss for the United States in water polo as the 1984 Olympic Games moved into its penultimate day of competition with medals to be decided in a handful of smaller sports.

Finals were scheduled today at various sites in canoeing, men's field hockey, archery, tennis, judo, and team handball, while individual jumping — the last equestrian event — was set for Sunday at Santa Anita Park.

The United States water polo team, the objects of a best-selling poster at these Olympics, had been seeking the nation's first-ever gold in the sport.

But Yugoslavia, led by the fourth-quarter goals of Denis Lusic and Milivoj Bebic, tied the United States in the competition at Pepperdine University in Malibu and wound up with the same record as the Americans, 4-0-1.

The Yugoslavs were awarded the gold because of a better goal differential, 47-33, versus the 43-34 margin of U.S. Still, the silver medal represented America's best finish in the sport since 1904.

The bronze medal went to West Germany. Spain settled for fourth, Australia was fifth and the Netherlands sixth in the top bracket.

In archery, 1976 gold medalist Darrell Pace was in pursuit of his second Olympic championship today as competition concluded with the 50-meter event. Chinese teen-ager Li Lingjuan paced the women.

After ousting the top seeds, Stefan Edberg of Sweden and Yuogslavia's Sabrina Goles pursued championship today at UCLA in tennis, a demonstration sport at these Games.

Sweden's first two gold medals of the Games came Friday, when Agneta Andersson took the 500-meter kayak singles and teamed with Anna Olsson to win the kayak pairs at Lake Casitas.

Japan's Hitoshi Saito won the heavyweight championship Friday in judo, which winds up today at Cal State University-Los Angeles with the open weight championship.

And West Germany's Reimer Klimke, who helped his country to the team dressage title earlier, won the individual competition Friday. The gold medal may have been the fourth overall in Klimke's career, but it was his best finish ever in dressage — which represents the school figures in classical horsemanship. Klimke, 48, rode Ahlerich to a score of 1,504.

ARCHERY

Pace of Hamilton, Ohio, increased his lead in men's archery Friday with a record straight-shooting performance at the 90-meter distance. He scored 601 points with 72 arrows, an average of better than eight points per arrow and a world record for an International Archery Federation event. He had a total of 1,930 points.

CANOEING

At Lake Casitas, New Zealand's Ian Ferguson also scored a double gold by winning the men's 500-meter kayak and joined Paul MacDonald to sweep the doubles.

Larry Cain of Canada was the winner in the men's 500-meter singles. The Canadian doubles champs were Matija Ljubek and Mirko Nisovic of Yugoslavia.

FIELD HOCKEY

The Netherlands beat Australia 2-0 at East Los Angeles College on Friday to clinch the women's gold medal in the round-robin, six-nation tournament.

Sophie Van Weiler netted what proved to be the winning Dutch goal on a penalty shot in the 38th minute as her team concluded the tournament with a 4-0-1 record.

West Germany finished at 2-1-2 and won the silver and the United States got the bronze. The United States, which tied Australia in the standings, clinched the bronze after a shootoff the Americans won 10-5 on penalty strokes.

In men's games, New Zealand beat Spain 1-0 for seventh place, Kenya edged Canada 1-0 in overtime for ninth and Malaysia topped the United States in a penalty-stroke contest for 11th.

Pakistan and West Germany face off for the gold medal today. Australia and Britain will try for the bronze.

TENNIS

Edberg was to meet Francisco Maciel of Mexico in the men's tennis finals today after the Swede knocked off top-seeded Jimmy Arias of the United States 6-2, 6-1 on Friday.

Arias, the fifth-ranked player in the world, and Paolo Cane of Italy will be third in tennis, which is scheduled to become a permanent addition to the Olympics during the 1988 Games at Seoul.

Cane lost to Maciel 6-2, 6-1 in the semifinals Friday.

Goles, who upset top-seeded American Kathy Horvath on Thursday, beat Katherine Tanvier of France in Friday's semifinals. Steffi Graf of West Germany beat Raffaella Reggi of Italy to earn the other spot in the finals.

TEAM HANDBALL

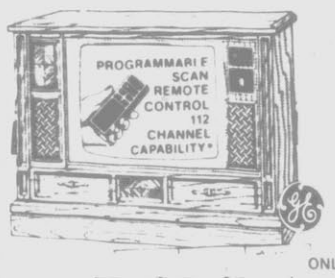

Yugoslavia and West Germany meet for the gold medal today in the men's team handball tournament, and Romania will play Denmark for the bronze.

In competition Friday, the United States and South Korea won their first games each in the tournament.

The United States finished in ninth place by beating Japan 24-16 and South Korea downed Algeria 25-21 to take 11th place.

Strawberry Fined, Pirates Top Mets

By The Associated Press

Darryl Strawberry was fined, and the New York Mets continued to play as if they should be.

"We're just going through one of those streaks right now where nothing is going right," said first baseman Keith Hernandez after the staggering Mets were beaten 4-1 by the Pittsburgh Pirates Friday night. "We'll come out of this — but the sooner the better."

The loss was the sixth straight for the Mets and the 13th in their last 16 games. The tailspin has come in the midst of a disciplinary problem with their All-Star right fielder. Strawberry was fined an undisclosed amount of money by Mets Manager Davey Johnson for reporting late to Friday night's game.

In the other NL games, Montreal beat Chicago 4-2; Atlanta split a doubleheader with San Diego — winning the first game 3-1 and losing the nightcap 10-4; Cincinnati beat Houston 5-4 in the 12-inning opener of a doubleheader before the Astros won the second game 11-7; St. Louis blanked Philadelphia 3-0 in 10 innings; and San Francisco defeated Los Angeles 4-1.

John Tudor, 7-8, and Kent Tekulve combined on a seven-hitter. Tudor struck out four and walked two before needing help in the eighth from Tekulve, who posted his 10th save. Sid Fernandez, 3-1, suffered his first major-league loss.

"It was a typical Tekulve performance," said Pittsburgh Manager Chuck Tanner. "His sinker was outstanding. We've been in a ton of two-run games (73 with a 23-50 record) this season. That shows we have always been battling."

Expos 4, Cubs 2

Gary Carter's tie-breaking solo home run with one out in the eighth inning lifted Montreal over Chicago. Carter's 23rd homer snapped a 2-2 tie and gave the victory to Bob James, 5-4, who pitched the final two innings in relief of starter Joe Hesketh.

Tim Stoddard, 8-5, who relieved Cub starter Rick Reuschel in the eighth, was the loser.

Mike Stenhouse's sacrifice fly in the second gave the Expos the lead and they made it 2-0 an inning later on an RBI single by Dan Driessen. The Cubs tied it in the fourth on a homer by Gary Matthews and an RBI groundout by Steve Lake.

Braves 3-4, Padres 1-10

Claudell Washington and Dale Murphy hit consecutive home runs in the third inning, leading Atlanta over San Diego in the first game of their doubleheader. Ace reliever Steve Bedrosian, 8-6, making his third start of the season and only the eighth of his big league career, outdueled the Padres' Dave Dravecky, 8-6. He allowed six hits, walked two and struck out four in 8 1-3 innings before needing help from Donnie Moore, who posted his 14th save.

Steve Garvey and Bruce Bochy smashed RBI doubles to highlight a four-run third inning as San Diego broke a four-game losing streak in the nightcap.

Reds 5-7, Astros 4-11

Skeeter Barnes' leadoff home run in the 12th inning led Cincinnati over Houston in the first game. Barnes, who entered the game in the ninth as a pinch-hitter and grounded into a bases-loaded double play, homered on the first pitch from Julio Solano, 0-2. John Franco, 4-0, earned the victory in relief.

Ray Knight and pitcher Bob Knepper cracked two-run singles in a six-run first inning, powering the Astros over the Reds in the second game. An 11-batter assault keyed by the singles by Knight and Knepper, 11-8, knocked out Cincinnati starter Frank Pastore, 3-7. Julio Cruz and Bill Doran added RBI singles in the Houston first.

Cardinals 3, Phillies 0

Tom Nieto hit a sacrifice fly and Willie McGee belted a two-run homer in the 10th inning to lead St. Louis over Philadelphia.

Darrell Porter drew a walk off reliever Larry Andersen, 1-3, to open the inning. Then the Phillies brought in Al Holland, who walked Chris Speier and then was charged with a balk that sent Porter to third and Speier to second.

Nieto followed with his sacrifice fly to score Porter with the tie-breaking run. McGee then laced his fifth homer to give the Cardinals a 3-0 lead.

Bruce Sutter, 4-3, came on in the ninth and pitched two scoreless innings for the win.

Giants 4, Dodgers 1

Mark Calvert pitched a five-hitter for his first complete game in the major leagues to lead San Francisco over Los Angeles.

Jeff Leonard had three of the Giants' eight hits off Fernando Valenzuela, 9-13, who pitched seven innings and allowed all four Giants' runs. Valenzuela took over the NL strikeout lead, raising his season total to 178 by fanning 11 batters.

Calvert, 2-2, was recalled from the minor leagues two weeks ago. He was 1-4 with the Giants last season.

Edberg Whips Jimmy Arias

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Stefan Edberg, one of the richest athletes in these Games after taking an unprecedented junior Grand Slam last year, never hesitated when the Swedish Tennis Federation asked him to play in the Olympic exhibition tournament.

No prize money or computer points are at stake in the under-21 tournament at the UCLA tennis center.

But Edberg could not resist the chance of being part of the Olympics and playing on UCLA's fast surface — Edberg is the only Swedish world-class player who loves the serve and volley game.

He had no reason to regret the decision after defeating Jimmy Arias of Buffalo, N.Y., 6-2, 6-1 in Friday's semifinals. Edberg was awesome, winning five games at love and breaking Arias' serve five times.

"I knew I had a chance to win, but I didn't expect this," Edberg said later. "I like to play that kind of player. I have a kick serve that comes up on his backhand and makes it hard for him to return."

Edberg won 69.5 percent of his first serve points. His second delivery was also very strong, winning 70 second serve points. He volleyed strongly and he also returned very well.

"It was my biggest win after beating (fellow-Swede) Mats Wilander in Milan," Edberg said. "I don't know if I have played better before. I have played so well for one set, but today I kept it up for two sets."

Arias, ranked fifth in the world behind Wilander and a semifinalist in last year's U.S. Open, said it was his worst beating of the year.

"I had trouble with his kick serve and with my own ground strokes," he said. "Stefan played great. I knew I was the last American left, but he was more inspired than me."

The 18-year-old Edberg has not dropped a set en route to the final and will be heavily favored Sunday against Francisco Maciel, a Mexican Davis Cup player ranked number one in his country.

Maciel defeated Paolo Cane 6-2, 6-0 in the other semifinal, but the Italian was troubled by a stomach injury and his serves were well below average.

Edberg, who won the junior titles in the French Open, Wimbledon, U.S. and Australian Opens last year, rocketed from 83 to 17 on the Association of Tennis Professionals' computer within two weeks last March after beating Wilander in the $365,000 Cuore Cup in Milan.

Tennis, once on the Olympic program, is only a demonstration sport in Los Angeles. Special medals will be awarded. Tennis will be an official Olympic sport in the 1988 Summer Games in Seoul, South Korea.

Edberg said he hopes he can play in the 1988 Games if they will be open for pros.

Raiders Rally For 21-20 Victory Over Redskins

WASHINGTON (AP) — The setting and storyline changed, but the ending remained the same for the Los Angeles Raiders and the Washington Redskins.

Six months ago, the Raiders ran roughshod over the Redskins, handing the National Conference champions a 38-9 loss in Super Bowl XVIII in Tampa. Friday night, playing on the Redskins' home field, the Raiders came from 13 points behind in the second half to eke out a 21-20 preseason victory.

Quarterback Marc Wilson came off the bench to lead the comeback with three touchdown passes, the last a 26-yarder to rookie Sam Seale with 30 seconds left. The play, an audible, was called at the line after defensive back Vernon Dean was detected playing Seale at the line of scrimmage.

"He was playing me real tight, to the inside," said Seale, who faked a short route, turning Dean around. "He turned the wrong way and I was wide open."

"It was a hard-fought game," noted Redskins Coach Joe Gibbs, who reinserted his starting unit in a futile attempt to halt the winning drive by the Raiders. "We hate to lose a one-point game."

"It hurts, but I rather it happen in the preseason than in the Super Bowl," said Redskins defensive captain Mark Murphy.

"We had them on the ropes but let them get away. I hope we can learn something from this," said Redskins kicker Mark Moseley, who kicked 22 and 36-yard field goals to help the Redskins take a 20-14 lead into the fourth quarter.

Washington quarterback Joe Theismann, who tossed a 21-yard touchdown pass to tight end Clint Didier, said despite the loss the Redskins had regained a measure of self-respect following the Super Bowl drubbing.

"This is more indicative of the type of intensity the Redskin team has. We felt we wanted to play with pride," he said. "We don't think the score of the Super Bowl is indicative of the type of football team we have."

A capacity crowd, only the second preseason sellout in 10 years here, helped fuel the intensity as 26 penalties were assessed for 269 yards.

Trailing 10-0, the Raiders began to move the ball in the second period behind Wilson, who had replaced Jim Plunkett after the latter twisted a knee.

The Redskins came right back, however, as rookie Jimmy Smith electrified the crowd with a 101-yard kickoff return for a touchdown and a 17-7 halftime lead.

"It was a good feeling," said Smith, who is battling for a spot on the roster. "I looked around and saw 50,000 people cheering and said 'This is it.'"

Wilson, who was 11-for-20 for 239 yards, led the Raiders on a 69-yard drive that culminated with a 26-yard pass TD pass to Joe McCall as Los Angeles pulled within 20-14, setting up the fourth-quarter dramatics.

Held in check for most of the period, the Raiders took over for the last time with 1:15 to play. Moving from his own 21, Wilson ran for seven yards, then hit passes to Seale and Jeff Simmons down to the Redskin 26, setting the stage for the winning pass to Seale.

In the only other game Friday night, St. Louis quarterback Neil Lomax threw touchdown passes of five yards to Earl Ferrell and 12 to Pat Tilley in the first half, leading the Cardinals to a 14-10 triumph over the Kansas City Chiefs.

Saturday's schedule featured the debut of the Colts in Indianapolis, where they host the New York Giants. The Colts moved from Baltimore in the offseason.

In other action Saturday, Philadelphia is at Pittsburgh; New England at Buffalo; Atlanta at New Orleans; Chicago and Green Bay meet in Milwaukee; Cincinnati visits Tampa Bay; Detroit hosts Seattle; Miami is in Minnesota; the New York Jets travel to Houston; San Francisco plays at Denver; and Dallas is at San Diego.

Where's my Software!

KAYPRO has heard this question over and over again. It seems that a lot of computer purchasers didn't receive what they bargained for.

Many times an unsuspecting buyer finds a personal computer he likes, takes it home, sets it up...and then discovers he can't use it. It doesn't really matter what kind of computer it ends up to be, it will no-doubt fall under the category of incomplete...except for one.

Let's make a comparison and see why: Here's what you'll get with the IBM PC Jr: First, you'll pay a suggested retail of $1000. You'll receive no monitor, and only one disk drive. There is no application software. Here's what you'll receive with the Apple IIc: You'll pay a suggested retail price of $1300. You'll receive no monitor, only one disk drive and use only Apple software. Now, here is what you'll get with a KAYPRO 2 Microcomputer: For a suggested retail price of $1295, you'll receive a powerful microcomputer, 2 disk drives (storage for nearly 200 pages of written text), a 9" non-glare monitor, familiar typewriter keyboard and 95% of the software you'll ever need.

Your application software includes Word Processing, Spelling Correction, What If? Financial Analysis, Mailmerging, Cash Flow, Inventory Control and much, much more! Since the need to purchase expensive add-ons is virtually eliminated, you can see why KAYPRO is called the complete computer.

In the mean time, if you hear someone asking the question "Where's my software?", just tap him on the shoulder and tell him KAYPRO has the answer.

Livestock And Meat Prices Mixed

By KEITH E. LEIGHTY
AP Business Writer

Cattle prices were mosAly higher, with support from steady wholesale cash prices, said John Ginzel, a livestock analyst in Chicago with Drexel Burnham Lambert.

Grocery stores aggressively featured beef cuts last weekend, which has supported cattle futures in recent sessions, but if such featuring is discontinued, he said, prices are likely to be put under pressure.

Hog and pork belly prices were mixed, but pork bellies for delivery next year were higher. Pork products were higher on wholesale markets, and that gave some support to the pork complex, Ginzel said.

He noted also that the slaughter has been posting an expected increase, although animal weights have been declining.

Chuck Levitt, a livestock analyst in Chicago with Shearson Lehman-American Express, said the key to the hog market will be the slaughter level in the weeks ahead.

If the slaughter remains 10 to 12 percent below the level of a year ago, he said, the glut of pork in storage freezers will be alleviated. However, analysts are concerned that meat pack-ers, who have been losing money in recent weeks, have cut back the slaughter so much that farmers are holding a surplus of live hogs that will have to marketed in the fall.

A factor that kept trading light was anticipation of the Agriculture Department's report next week that will show the number of cattle on feed lots in the seven major beef producing states, Levitt said.

Live cattle settled .15 cent lower to .25 cent higher with the contract for delivery in August at 65.10 cents a pound; feeder cattle were .87 cent lower to .40 cent higher with August at 65.90 cents a pound; live hogs were .18 cent lower to .35 cent higher with August at 53.95 cents a pound; and frozen pork bellies were .48 cent lower to .55 cent higher with August at 55.67 cents a pound.

Wheat and corn futures prices were steady and soybeans were lower in very light trading on the Chicago Board of Trade.

Most prices eased early in the session, as traders were expecting the Agriculture Department's harvest report to predict good harvests of corn and soybeans.

The report was released after the close of trading and most analysts said the numbers were slightly below expectations.

The USDA projected a corn harvest of 7.67 billion bushels and a soybean harvest of 2.04 billion bushels. Analysts had expected figures of 7.71 billion bushels of corn and 2.04 billion bushels of soybeans.

Bob Lekberg, a grain analyst in Chicago with Shearson, said as a result of the lower-than-expected figures, futures prices could rally slightly on Monday.

But Susan Hackmann, a grain analyst in Chicago with Pershing Futures, said a soybean harvest of more than 2 billion bushels would discourage buying.

Lekberg said weather would be a more important factor in Monday's trading, however, as hotter and drier conditions than normal are forecast for much of the Corn Belt.

Wheat prices were supported Friday by reports of buying by exporters, sources said. The USDA disclosed major pur-chases of U.S. wheat by the Soviet Union this week, and more purchases are likely, said Victor Lespinasse, a grain analyst with Dean Witter Reynolds.

Wheat settled unchanged to 1½ cents higher with September at $3.54¾ a bushel; corn was 2 cents lower to 1½ cents higher with September at $2.93¾ a bushel; oats were ¼ cent lower to ¼ cent higher with September at $1.72¼ a bushel; and soybeans were 2½ cents to 10 cents lower with August at $6.36 a bushel.

Precious metals prices fell on the Commodity Exchange in New York.

Prices rallied slightly early in the session, but fell later when the U.S. dollar posted an advance against major foreign currencies, a development that diminishes the value of gold as an investment compared to other investments that are pegged to interest rates.

Gold settled $6.10 to $6.50 lower with the contract for delivery in August at $342.80 a troy ounce; silver settled 21 cents to 22 cents lower with August at $7.633 a troy ounce.

Heating oil settled .10 cent to 1 cent lower with the contract for delivery in September at 76 cents a gallon.

GM Plans To Cut Work Force

DETROIT (AP) — General Motors Corp. will begin reducing its executive and white-collar work forces next month as part of a reorganization of the automaker's North American car operations, a company spokesman said today.

"We started at the top in creating our new management team," said GM spokesman William B. Winters. "They are going to determine that certain jobs are redundant. That's the whole purpose of the reorganization — to streamline."

GM Chairman Roger Smith said the planned layoffs will be "sizable but as yet unquantified," according to confidential documents published today by the Detroit Free Press.

Under the program, some white-collar workers will be assigned to other GM jobs while others will be asked to retire early or to accept cash payments for resigning, Winters said.

"Our primary focus is to find people jobs in GM," Winters said. "For some of them it would mean layoff."

The reorganization will cover GM's 4,000 top executives, the newspaper said Smith wrote in a July 27 memo.

"Management must make sure that the individuals who are ultimately separated are the ones (GM) can best afford to lose," the paper reported that Vice President William MacKinnon wrote in a July 19 memo.

The reorganization involves the grouping of GM's car divisions into two groups — one made up of the Buick, Cadillac and Oldsmobile divisions and the other consisting of the Chevrolet and Pontiac divisions and General Motors of Canada Limited.

Bull Market Kicking At Wall Street Door

By CHET CURRIER
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — As it celebrates its second anniversary, Wall Street's bull market is once again kicking up its heels.

On Aug. 12, 1982, the Dow Jones industrial average closed at a two-year low of 776.92. In the days and weeks that followed, it began one of the most powerful rallies in Wall Street history.

Two years later, the financial world is being treated to an encore performance.

Since the end of July, stock prices have soared at a dizzying rate. Trading volume records set in the early stages of the bull market have been shattered, and talk abounds on Wall Street of new highs for the market before the year is out.

The similarities of the two market upsurges have been striking. Both seemed to come out of nowhere, at a time when many investors were preoccupied with worries about the economy, or away on summer vacations.

But analysts point out that there is at least one major difference between them. The 1982 liftoff came amid a recession, several months before even the first signs of recovery appeared.

The 1984 rally, by contrast, is set against the background of a year-and-a-half-old economic expansion that has already outstripped almost every forecast.

In the last four months of 1982, the market climbed about 40 percent. "This time, however, the business cycle is far too advanced to permit a rise of similar magnitude," maintained Heinz Biel, an analyst at Janney Montgomery Scott Inc.

Still, many investors seem convinced at the moment that there is a lot more growth in store for business activity. Their optimism is based on the perception that inflation still gives no indication of reviving.

"All modern cycles have ended when inflation gathered enough steam so that government policy was necessary to suppress it, which also suppresses the recovery as well," said Greg Smith at Prudential-Bache Securities. "There should be no need for any such policy over the next three to six months."

In the past week, the Dow Jones average of 30 blue-chip industrials climbed 16.01 to 1,218.09, on top of the previous week's record 87.46-point rise.

The New York Stock Exchange composite index gained 1.85 to 95.08, and the American Stock Exchange market value index was up 4.54 at 208.37.

"Confidence that inflation will remain below double-digit levels is building gradually," said Charles Lieberman at Shearson Lehman-American Express.

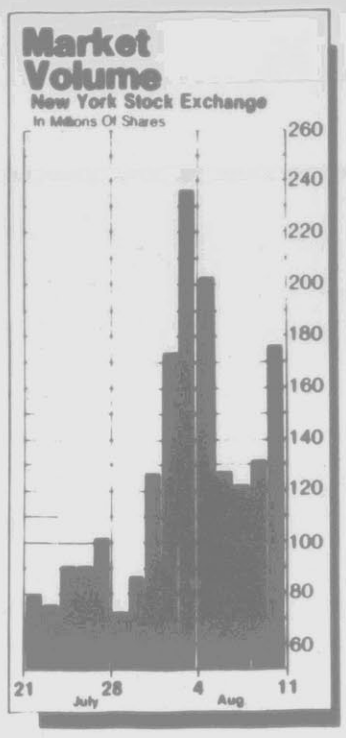

"The belief that inflation will be contained has always depended on some assurance that the economy would not overheat. The failure of monetary policy to moderate the pace of previous expansions enabled those cycles to push the limits of capacity too far, with progressively accelerating inflation the unfortunate result.

"Much has been learned from those difficult experiences," Lieberman said. "The willingness of Federal Reserve officials to tolerate what appear to be very high real interest rates indicates very clearly the depth of their commitment to reducing the economy's underlying inflation rate."

Amid the general euphoria, many observers acknowledge that there are still potential obstacles in the market's path. The problem of the federal budget deficit, for example, has not been magically resolved.

In Biel's view, "Most probably stock prices will move higher in the months ahead, possibly to new highs in the averages, but the outlook for 1985 is more doubtful.

"It is the first year of a new presidency, even if the incumbent gets his second term, and this may be the time to do the unpleasant but necessary things that are being swept under the rug in an election year."

Agencies Offer Aid To Traders

By CHANGING TIMES
The Kiplinger Magazine

Making money in futures trading is tough, as experts frankly admit, and the highly speculative nature of the market breeds disagreements, as well as disappointments.

It's even more frustrating when the professional you rely on gives you misleading advice, goes broke, or mismanages your account.

Settling a dispute could be as simple as discussing the problem with the brokerage firm. But if that avenue proves a dead end, the exchanges, the National Futures Association (NFA), or the Commodity Futures Trading Commission (CFTC) might provide a remedy.

The commission oversees both the exchanges and the professionals you are likely to deal with: futures commission merchants — the brokerage firms; the exchange-member floor brokers; commodity trading advisers; the people who operate commodity trading pools, and those institutions' employees, who are known as associated persons.

At last count, about 70,000 of all types were registered with the CFTC, usually a prerequisite for doing business legally. But a substantial number of firms are believed to be conducting unregistered futures business.

All the exchanges must by law maintain an arbitration service for disputes with (and among) members or delegate the cases to the NFA. Those services, however, are rarely used, perhaps because customers may deal directly wth the trading firm, they don't know of their programs, or the particular exchange doesn't deal with the particular type of charge.

Using the individual exchanges can create jurisdictional issues when a complaint is based on transactions in several markets. The NFA (200 W. Madison St., Chicago, IL 60606, 312 781-1300) inaugurated a national program in March last year. It plans to operate a self-regulatory organization for the futures business in the same way the National Association of Securities Dealers functions in securities markets.

The NFA has jurisdiction over disputes involving futures contracts traded on all U.S. exchanges. It says it will conduct hearings in any city where qualified arbitrators are available. You need not employ an attorney in NFA proceedings. A single arbitrator, instead of a panel, resolves claims of $5,000 or less. The arbitrator usually relies completely on written statements for amounts under $2,500; personal appearances aren't mandatory.

NFA arbitration awards are binding and ordinarily can't be appealed to the courts, but an award can be enforced by legal action. The fees vary with the amount of the claim or counterclaim — from $50 for claims below $2,500, up to $200 plus 1 percent of the excess over $15,000.

VA Cutting Ceiling On Home Loans

WASHINGTON (AP) — For the first time in nine months, the Veterans Administration is lowering its interest-rate ceiling on VA-backed basic home loans, and the president of a lenders group says he hopes further reductions are on the way.

The change, effective Monday, will limit interest charges on new level-payment mortgages backed by the agency to 13.5 percent, down from 14 percent. Such loans are available to eligible veterans and their families.

Most home loan rates have been rising along with other interest rates in the economy through the spring and summer. In fact, the most recent government statistics showed average rates at 15.2 percent in early July for conventional home loans not backed by the government.

But some rates have eased since then, and many economists expect them to decline further in coming weeks.

The reduction in the ceiling on VA loans was made possible "by an improved mortgage market that is showing more optimism among investors that inflation has subsided and that the economy's growth rate has leveled to a more sustainable pace," said VA Administrator Harry Walters.

Felix M. Beck, president of the Mortgage Bankers Association of America, whose members make most VA-backed loans, said, "The drop in the VA rate was justified by market conditions that reflect the economy at manageable growth levels and the money supply within the target range."

"In addition, with inflation relatively calm, hopefully we can look for further reductions in interest rates that could spur greater activity in the real estate marketplace," he added.

"However, the federal budget deficit still looms as a threat to interest rates because of the inflationary expectations it causes," Beck said.

The announcement by the VA said the reduction would mean a savings of about $24 a month on a new level-payment agency-backed loan averaging $61,000.

The agency also said it is reducing by one-half percentage point the rates for two other categories, lowering the ceiling for graduated-payment mortgages to 13.75 percent and for home-improvement loans to 15 percent.

Manufactured-home loan ceilings will remain unchanged at 16 percent for homes with lots and at 15.5 percent for lots only.

Monday's changes will not affect the interest rates on existing VA loans, which remain the same for the life of the agreements.

Security Tightened

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Security will be tightened at a Sperry Corp. defense systems plant after two peace activists were arrested and charged with smashing computer parts used to guide U.S. submarines and planes, a company spokesman said.

Barb Katt, 26, and John LaForge, 28, both of Bemidji, were charged Friday in federal court with destroying government property at the plant in suburban Eagan. They were released without bail after appearing before U.S. Magistrate J. Earl Cudd in Minneapolis.

If convicted, they face a maximum penalty of 10 years in prison and a $5,000 fine.

Tom Parker, the FBI agent in charge of the investigation, said he could not discuss the incident. "We're in a very tight 'no comment' position," he said.

The pair "took a hammer and hit some of the equipment and broke it," then poured a substance resembling blood on the equipment, Eagan police Capt. Pat Geagan said.

A group identifying itself as the Sperry Software Pair Defense Committee in Minneapolis claimed responsibility for the incident, which it said was carried out by "peace activists."

The committee's statement accused Sperry of "war crimes and crimes against humanity" because of the company's involvement in nuclear weapons production.

Don Bruun, manager of media relations for the Sperry Corp., said a man and woman "gained entry" to Sperry's Defense Systems Division Plant, which operates 24 hours a day, around 6:40 a.m. Friday and damaged computer equipment in three work stations in the building's lower level.

'IFYE' Student Thinks America Is Big

BY MARY SCHULKEN
Reflector Staff Writer

America is big and very pretty, says Jogchum Meindert Finnema of the Netherlands, but he doesn't like our snakes.

"We don't have snakes in the Netherlands," he commented quickly when questioned about the differences between the United States and his native land. "You seem to have lots of them here."

Finnema is an International 4-H Youth Exchange Student, or "IFYE," from the Netherlands. One of his nine weeks in the United States was spent on the farm of John and Miriam Lewis of Farmville, working with tobacco and hogs and getting a taste of American family life. In addition to snakes, Finnema said he's had a little trouble with our fast food restaurants.

"The first thing I had to do here was learn how to eat in a fast food restaurant," he said. "We have fast food restaurants at home (in the Netherlands) but they're different from the ones here.

"You have to learn to make a choice from an enormous amount of food," he explained. "And you have to know what to order when. When do you eat pancakes, for example?"

Finnema has mastered the fast food game since entering the United States earlier this summer and he's also sampled prominent slices of eastern North Carolina culture like barbecue, tobacco, hot dogs and seafood.

So far, he says he likes what he's seen.

"Americans are very nice," Finnema said. "I expected them to be tougher. We see them on American TV and they're very different. Really they're quite nice."

America is a pretty country, Finnema said, and much larger than his native land. "Everything is much bigger here. The roads are larger, distances are longer and cars are larger."

The geography of the two countries is very different, he said. "Holland is very flat, we have lots of water and lakes in many places. The part of America I have seen is more rolling with trees and forests."

Holland has very small counties, Finnema said, and in a few miles the buildings and architecture can differ drastically. "We do not have old houses and buildings that are no longer used standing because land is so scarce," he said. "In Holland we tear them down, we need the space."

His country is thick with bicycles, Finnema said, and is called the "China of Western Europe" because of the number of bikes. "The school children ride bikes to school instead of buses," he said. "We even have special traffic lights for bicycles." Finnema pedals eight miles each day to catch a ride to the university he attends 30 miles from his home. He is a third-year agricultural student focusing on a combination of economics and crop science and says he hopes to land a job with an international firm when his school days are over.

Although Finnema wants an agricultural-oriented career, he did not grow up on a farm. His father supervises construction of highway interchanges and dikes in Holland, he said, and his mother is a part-time nurse in a retirement home. "Both my grandfathers were farmers, though," he said.

The agriculture of the U.S. and Holland is quite different, Finnema said. "We don't grow your soybeans, peanuts, cotton and tobacco there. I saw these crops for the first time here."

Much of Holland is cultivated as pasture for dairy cattle, he said. Other important crops are sugar beets, wheat, rape, seeds and flowers. The country's biggest export is carnations, Finnema said, not tulips like most Americans think.

"We have lots of hothouses where we grow the carnations," he explained. "We

A NEW EXPERIENCE ... Jogchum Meindert Finnema, left, a 4-H exchange student from the Netherlands, examines tobacco on the Lewis farm near Farmville. Finnema spent a week of his nine-week visit to the United States with John and Miriam Lewis, working with hogs and tobacco. Finnema, an agriculture student, had never seen tobacco, cotton or soybeans before coming to eastern North Carolina. Miriam Lewis, right, explains to Finnema how to tell when to harvest tobacco. Mrs. Lewis also spent time in Holland several years ago as a 4-H exchange student.

Scientists Closing In On Stress Illness

By DANIEL Q. HANEY
AP Science Writer

BOSTON (AP) — Stress is more than just another trendy bugaboo of the '80s. Scientists think they're closing in on how it can make people sick.

The evidence is still circumstantial, but the belief is building that stress in all its many facets weakens the body's immune system, the incredibly complex barricade against disease.

In the test tube, the critical white blood cells that kill invaders don't work so well if they come from people who are under stress.

Science has only recently begun to explore this link in earnest. The First International Congress of Neuroimmunology was held just two years ago. The researchers haven't agreed yet on a name for their endeavor. Some call it "behavioral immunology" or "psychoneuroimmunology." Even "psychoneuroendocrinoimmunology" has its fans.

Dr. Norman Geschwind of Massachusetts Institute of Technology describes the small corps of neuroimmunologists as "explorers seeking the Northwest Passage between these vast intellectual continents" — the central nervous system and the immune system.

That passageway is probably stress hormones, powerful chemicals like adrenaline that the body exudes when confronted by saber-toothed tigers, traffic jams or snarling bosses.

Among other things, these hormones speed up body functions for emergencies. Lungs pump faster; blood pressure rises; the heart races. But that's not all.

These same hormones have a definite, measurable, suppressing effect on the white blood cells that serve as the radar, tanks, missiles and foot soldiers of the body's hot and cold war on disease.

It's a complicated business. Different stressful emotions such as fear, anger, and depression probably evoke different hormones. These, in turn, may have different effects on immunity. At the same time, different departments of the immune system are going about their work independently, in cooperation or even at odds.

No one begins to understand it all. Firm answers aren't in yet to the big questions: Can this stress-caused weakening of immunity explain why some people get infections and cancer and others do not? And if it does, can people lead healthier lives by learning to cope with stress?

Stress-reducing classes, gadgets and gimmicks have become a minor industry. Yet no one has proven that these efforts really make people healthier. Enticing hints, however, emerge from a still-unpublished study at Ohio State University.

Dr. Janice Kiecolt-Glaser and her husband, Ronald Glaser, studied elderly residents of retirement homes. Some were taught relaxation and stress management. Some talked to college students three times a week. And some did nothing different.

At the same time, the researchers measured the activity of one branch of their immune systems called natural killer cells. These blood cells are believed to be an important line of defense against cancer and infection. When the study was over, they found that natural killer cell activity had pepped up considerably in those who had relaxation training and someone to talk to, but it was highest in the relaxation group.

Although not very much can be made of one study, "certainly it opens the prospect that this might be a reasonable way to potentially enhance immunity," said Ms. Kiecolt-Glaser.

Scientists use several tacks to gauge the impact of stress on immunity, but one of their favorites is the mitogen response. When confronted by bacteria, viruses and other germs, blood cells called lymphocytes divide, spread an make antibodies to neutralize them. Mitogens are plant chemicals that trick these cells into doing the same thing. When researchers measure how the blood cells react to mitogens, they have an idea of how hard the immune system will work to fight disease.

College students are willing guinea pigs for these studies. Experiments show that students' immunity falls during the stress of exam time. Immunity is lower, too, among youngsters who have led especially stress-filled lives.

These studies square with the observation that people who have been exposed to high levels of stress have poorer health. They are more likely to suffer colds, high blood pressure and heart disease.

Among the most powerful of life's stresses is the death of a spouse. Widows and widowers are vulnerable to serious and even fatal illnesses after the passing of a husband or wife.

Dr. Steven J. Schleifer and colleagues at Mount Sinai School of Medicine in New York took blood from men whose wives were dying of breast cancer. Even though they were under obvious stress during the illness, their immunity — measured by the mitogen response — fell when their wives died. It was still depressed 14 months later.

Scientists are still exploring the chain reaction of hormones that let loose when a car backfires, a bill collector calls or a pot roast catches fire in the oven.

First, the brain's cortex notices something amiss. It sends a message to the hypothalamus, which in turn emits corticotrophin-releasing factor. This instructs the pituitary gland to generate adrenocorticotrophic hormone. And this stimulates the adrenal cortex to release corticosteroids.

These cortisone-like steroids are just one brand of stress hormones that are known to dampen immunity.

A completely different chain reaction prompts the release of catecholamines. One of these, adrenaline, suppresses immunity, while another, called norepinephrine, seems to boost some immune responses.

Endorphins, the body's natural pain killers, and thymic hormones are also apparent regulators of immune vigor.

Whether or not the release of these hormones can ever be brought under conscious control is still unclear. Yet some preach, and many believe, that casting off disease can be a matter of will.

Barbara Lynn Tucker Is Bride Of Roy J. Grogan

Jarvis Memorial United Methodist Church was the scene of the wedding ceremony of Barbara Lynn Tucker and Roy J. Grogan Jr., both of Dallas, Texas, Saturday evening at seven o'clock.

Parents of the couple are Dr. and Mrs. Donald Hugh Tucker of Greenville and Mr. and Mrs. Roy J. Grogan of Weatherford, Texas.

Susan Leigh Tucker of Greenville, sister of the bride, was maid of honor. Bridesmaids included Jeaneane Treece of Houston, Texas, and Georganne Catalani of San Antonio, Texas, both sisters of the bridegroom, Patti Dawson Aldridge of Greenville, Kathryn Smith McKinley of New Orleans, Patricia Schaffer and Mary McManaway, both of Charlotte.

The large puff sleeves were scattered with seed pearls and adorned with bows on the shoulders. The bodice was fashioned in alencon lace and beaded with pearls and crystal sequins. The skirt was gathered at the waistline and fell to slipper length. A pearl and lace scallop edged the hemline which flowed into a chapel train. The bride wore a Juliet cap covered with Brussels rosepoint lace which belonged to her great-great-grandmother. The same heirloom lace was used to edge the blusher. The chapel length veil was of sheer illusion and trimmed with seed pearls.

The honor attendant wore a formal evening suit of antique moire taffeta designed by Wilhelmina of Dallas. The fitted jacket, with elbow length puffed sleeves and peplum, and the skirt were of wedgewood blue and accented by a coral cummerbund of the antique moire over an ecru silk camisole. The bridesmaids wore identically styled suits.

The mother of the bride wore a navy crepe column gown designed by Richilene. It was accented with pearlized sequins and beads. The mother of the bridegroom wore a formal full length evening suit of pale gray silk organza with a jacket of french silk ribbon lace.

He received a J.D. from the University of Texas School of Law and is an associate of the Dallas law firm, Jackson, Walker, Winstead, Cantwell and Miller. The bride is currently working on a master's of divinity degree at Perkins School of Theology.

A pig picking and dance was held at the Brook Valley Country Friday night and were given by friends of the bride. A golf tournament, given by the bridegroom and the bride's father, was held Friday morning at Brook Valley Country Club while the bridemaids were given a luncheon by Mrs. James E. Clement, Mrs. Hermon Herrin of Gastonia and Mrs. William H. Taft Jr.

The rehearsal dinner was given by Mr. and Mrs. Roy J. Grogan Thursday night at the French Country Inn in Selma. A shower was given by friends at the home of Patti Aldridge.

use special lights and export them by plane as soon as they are ready."

While with the Lewis family Finnema has been feeding hogs, cleaning stables, harvesting tobacco and going to livestock sales. Mrs. Lewis, who spent several months as an "IFYE" in Holland a few years ago, said the program is designed to "expose them (the exchange students) to normal American life."

"We've planned lots of field trips for Jogchum, the beach for example, so he's seen a lot of eastern North Carolina, but he's also worked with us on our farm," she said. "The point is to show him what American life is like."

Nearly 80 percent of all married people polled nationally say their marriage is warm and loving. Thirteen percent claim peaceful coexistence.

At Wits End

By Erma Bombeck

Reprinted by Request:

When you come right down to it, there are two kinds of people in this world: those who can tolerate a cricket in the bedroom at night and those who can't.

I won't tell you which group I'm in. I will only say it's a very revealing trait and offers an insight into the person's total personality.

Those who tolerate crickets at bedtime are the kind of people who can sit through "Aida" and not hear a person sitting behind them who is ripping a breath mint out of a wrapper at 82 decibels.

They're the kind of people who can go camping and be oblivious to a party across the lake where the thump-thump of a stereo playing weird music is carried by the winds to your campsite.

They're the insensitive kind of people who can sleep right through a crying baby at 3 a.m. and have the gall to say the next morning, "Why didn't you wake me? I'd have warmed the bottle."

They can play poker with the guys until 3 a.m. and then come home and tell you with a straight face that they don't know if the Floyds are getting a divorce or not. Ha! Ha!

You can't miss 'em. Whenever you see a mouse in the house in the fall, these are the flakes who will tell you, "It's only a field mouse and he's just as scared as you are" . . . when you know in your heart the mouse is pregnant and is building a condo in your spices.

Oh, make no mistake, it takes a special breed of person who can lie in bed and hear a cricket's bloodcurdling screech in the closet, then the bathroom, then under the bed, and feel nothing.

That's it. These people don't feel. They don't acknowledge a dripping faucet, a hook that isn't fastened above a zipper, a stamp put on a letter crooked, a cupboard door in the kitchen standing ajar.

They're just animals! They can put a book down in the middle of a page, never wash their hands after playing with the dog, don't brush after every meal, and call their mother on Mother's Day . . . collect!

But mostly, they're people who can sleep while an animal is under their bed rubbing its legs together with a sound that shatters glass. As I said, I won't tell you which group I'm in, but you all know who you are out there.

Check Causes Of Water Dripping

Check the following causes before you call a repair person, suggests Sandra Dellinger, extension housing specialist, North Carolina State University:

•The unit should be tipped toward the outside so the water drains in that direction.

•The outside drain hole in the back of the unit may be plugged. Check it and clean out if necessary.

•If the air is extremely humid, keep hot, humid outside air out as much as possible, turn the thermostat to a warmer setting and use a medium fan speed instead of low.

•Check to see if the unit has a frozen evaporator (inside coil). If it does, run the unit in "fan-only" position until the frost is gone.

Is Unsealed Food Safe

If a jar or two of home-canned food did not seal properly, is it still safe to eat?

"It is as long as you refrigerated it immediately. Use the food as soon as possible or repack and process the contents for the full time using a new lid," says Dr. Nadine Tope, extension foods and nutrition specialist, North Carolina State University.

If the unsealed jar is discovered later in the pantry, it is not safe to eat. It should be discarded without tasting the food.

Couple Marries In Saturday Ceremony

The First Presbyterian Church of Greenville was the setting of the marriage of Melody Dean Outlaw to John Eric Kingsbury Saturday at 4 p.m. The Rev. Richard Rhea Gammon officiated at the double ring ceremony. The couple exchange vows which they had written.

A program of wedding music was presented by Robert E. Irwin, organist. Jerry Jolley sang "The Call" and "The Wedding Prayer" as the benediction.

The bride is the daughter of I. Manley Outlaw of Goldsboro and the late Gaynelle Jones Outlaw. Mr. and Mrs. Owen J. Kingsbury Jr. of Greenville are parents of the bridegroom.

MRS. KINGSBURY

The bride was escorted by her father and given in marriage by her father and stepmother, Jessie Lee Wiggs Outlaw. The bride wore a formal gown of tissue taffeta. The bodice was appliqued with Venise and schiffli lace accented with short puff sleeves and a sweetheart neckline. The bouffant skirt extended into a chapel length train. Her wore a wide brim hat trimmed in Venise lace and seed pearls. A chapel length veil of crystal illusion trimmed in Venise lace appliques was attached. She wore a head shaped diamond pendant and diamond earrings, gifts of the bridegroom.

Denise Rudisill of Greenville was matron of honor and bridesmaids included Karen Kingsbury of Greenville, sister of the bridegroom, Cindy Fickling of San Angelo, Texas, Gretchen Weber of Surf City and Joli Brooks of Greenville.

The father of the bridegroom was best man. Ushers were Anthony Outlaw of Goldsboro, brother of the bride, Darrel Rudisill and Paul S. Randolph, both of Greenville, and Fred Tracy of Florence, S.C.

After a cruise to the Bahamas, the couple will live in Wilmington.

The bride is a graduate of Goldsboro High School and graduated magna cum laude from East Carolina University with a degree in music education. She is employed by New Hanover County schools in Wilmington.

The bridegroom is a graduate of J.H. Rose High School and Pitt Community College. He is employed by Blazer Financial Services in Wilmington.

Following the ceremony the bride's parents entertained at a reception in the church fellowship hall where the bridal portrait was displayed.

Cake was served by Annie Marie Outlaw, aunt of the bride, and Connie Outlaw, cousin of the bride. Pouring punch were Diana Brittain and Janet Austin, cousins of the bride.

The parents of the bridegroom entertained at a rehearsal dinner, a pig picking at the Tar River party house for members of the wedding party, relatives, out-of-town guests and friends. A bridal luncheon was held Friday at Margaux given by Denise Rudisill. Several showers were also given for the couple prior to the wedding.

Relationships Need Forming

Often, before the child has adjusted to the divorce, Mom or Dad remarries.

"Children in stepfamilies have the problem of divided loyalties," says Dr. Frances Wagner, extension human development specialists, North Carolina State University.

The child may wonder how he can like his new stepdad without being disloyal to his father. Parents have divided loyalties too. What should they do when the child and stepparent disagree?

"Parents must allow stepparents and stepchildren to form their own relationship without interference. This involves settling their own differences as well as getting to know each other," Dr. Wagner says.

The natural parent sometimes needs to support the stepparent in order to strengthen whatever authority he or she is expected to assume.

The new stepparent's role is not always clear. A stepfather may or may not assume the role of father, and the same is true of the stepmother. If the natural father or mother and children have been living for some time as a single parent familiy, he or she may have assumed both roles. Or an older son or daughter may have taken a leadership role.

"The stepparent can be accepted in only those roles which others allow him or her," Dr. Wagner says. "Taking charge usually takes time."

Parents of the couple are Mr. and Mrs. Robert S. Howell of Route 1, Whiteville, and Mr. and Mrs. Jack Taylor of Ayden.

The bride was given in marriage by her father and wore a gown of candlelight satin with French chantilly lace. The gown was styled with a high neckline of lace, basque drop waist, fitted bodice, leg of mutton sleeves and full skirt. Pearl buttons accented the gown back. She wore a cathedral length veil attached to a cap beaded with seed pearls. The bride carried a bouquet of coral tiger lilies, miniature carnations and roses, daisies and baby's breath.

Debbie Edwards of Raleigh was the honor attendant and bridesmaids included Cara Bizzell, Karen Cameron and Barbara Tomlinson, all of Greenville, Judy Swientoneiwski of Suffolk, Va., and Alice Pate of Beulaville. Pam Cole of Roxboro was an honorary attendant.

Each of the attendants wore a gown of teal blue styled with spaghetti straps, fitted bodice and full skirt. A matching jacket with puffed sleeves complemented the gown. Each carried a bouquet of coral tiger lilies and roses, daisies, baby's breath and miniature carnations.

The mother of the bride was dressed in a mauve formal gown fashioned with an embroidered jacket. She wore a corsage of miniature roses, daisies and baby's breath. The mother of the bridegroom selected a David Morris designer two-piece ensemble of pearl gray accented with bugle beads. She wore an orchid wrist corsage.

Corsages were given to Jessie Nelson and to grandmothers of the couple.

A reception followed the ceremony and was held at the Ayden Country Club. Assisting in serving were Mrs. Baker Bland, Myrtle Ruth Bryant, Debbie Tyndall and Whitney Macafee.

The couple will live in Greenville after a wedding trip to the mountains and Lake Lure.

Help Pets Beat The Heat: Don't Leave Them In Cars

DEAR ABBY: Now that the warm summer days are upon us once again, please remind your readers that it is extremely cruel to leave their pets in a parked car—even with the windows cracked.

When I see an animal in the car on a warm day, I place a card under the windshield wiper. It reads:

"We understand you meant to be kind in taking your dog with you today, but you could be risking his life.

"On a hot summer day the inside of a car heats very quickly. On an 85-degree day, for example, the temperature inside your car—with the windows slightly opened—will reach 102 degrees in 10 minutes. In 30 minutes it will go up to 120 degrees. On warmer days it will go even higher.

"A dog's normal body temperature is 101.5 to 102.2 degrees Fahrenheit. A dog can withstand a body temperature of 107-108 degrees Fahrenheit for only a very short time before suffering irreparable brain damage—or even death. The closed car interferes with the dog's normal cooling process, that is, evaporation through panting.

"If your dog is overcome by heat exhaustion, you can give immediate first aid by immersing him or her in cold water until body temperature is lowered."

Knowing that you are an animal lover, I hope you will find this column worthy.

JO ANN RIFKIN, SACRAMENTO, CALIF.

DEAR JO ANN: It is indeed. I've published the above information several times, but it's worth repeating.

Now a word to my readers: The above-mentioned cards can be obtained by writing to the Animal Protection Institute, P.O. Box 22505, Sacramento, Calif. 95822. The cards are free, but enclose a long, self-addressed, stamped (20 cents) envelope, and if you are able, include a dollar or two for this fine, non-profit organization.

DEAR ABBY: After reading the letter from "Louisiana Duck Hunter," I had to write. He said, "The only truly effective mosquito repellent used by duck hunters in these parts is an Avon product called Skin-So-Soft." Then he went on to say it could be found in the sporting goods stores on the shelves right next to the commercial insect repellents!

Abby, if this is true, the Avon Co. would like to know the names of the stores, because Avon products are sold only by Avon representatives who call on customers in their homes.

I should know. I've been an Avon representative for 18 years.

J.G. FROM DEL MAR, CALIF.

DEAR J.G.: Thanks for writing. And now a message to the sporting goods people in duck hunting territory: If you are caught selling Avon products, you're dead ducks.

* * *

DEAR READERS: For the first time ever, the long form of the 1980 census questionnaire asked respondents to volunteer their ethnic origin.

Only 6 percent referred to themselves as "American," and 10 percent did not answer the question.

The largest ethnic group in the nation was the 50 million citizens who said they were of English or partial English descent.

German stock was a close second at 49 million. The Irish were 40 million; French, 13 million; Italian, 12 million, etc.

Where did I get this fascinating tidbit? From the newsletter of New York's Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan. Thank you, senator!

DEAR ABBY: Two months before my 17th birthday, I had an affair with a 32-year-old man. "Dale" was a good friend of my parents and he worked in the same office as my mother. The affair lasted only a few months. Shortly after that, my mother filed for divorce, spent all her time with Dale, and then it dawned on me that she and Dale were more than just friends.

When I realized that I had been used, I decided that my mother should know what kind of man Dale was, so I told Mother right in front of Dale that he and I had been in bed together. Dale denied everything, and my mother called me a "lying slut."

I told my dad, and he had me file charges of statutory rape against Dale. Dale begged me to drop the charges, and after we talked to lawyers and the district attorney, the case was dismissed.

During all this I went to live with my father and Mother moved in with Dale.

Abby, I can't see how my mother can live with a man who would have sex with her own daughter! Maybe I'm jealous, but I need help in handling my feelings because I am upset all the time over this. Please help me.

—USED AND CONFUSED

DEAR CONFUSED: You are right on both counts: You are jealous, and you need help in handling your feelings. Dale didn't deserve to get off so easily, and you desperately need professional help to resolve your feelings of anger, guilt and betrayal. Your local mental health facility can provide counseling at a price you can afford to pay, so please don't put it off.

(Problems? What's bugging you? Unload on Abby, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038. For a personal reply, please enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope.)

Early Start Needed To Prevent Frailty

By PATRICIA McCORMACK
UPI Health Editor

Preventing rickety bones in old age starts around age 30.

That's when smart females start a calcium intake watch, making sure they get 1 gram of the substance daily — either in pill or dietary form, says Dr. William Arno Peck, expert on osteoporosis, a condition implicated in the 200,000 hip fractures in women over age 65 each year.

The bill for those runs into millions. No price can be put on the suffering.

The National Institutes of Health reports complications from these fractures now constitute the 12th most frequent cause of death in the United States.

Proper calcium intake from the age of 30 on, Peck claims, helps keep bones strong. He said most Americans get less calcium than they need and even the Recommended Daily Allowance falls short of his gram-a-day dose.

Peck, physician-in-chief at the Jewish Hospital of Washington University Medical Center, St. Louis, chaired the recent National Institutes of Health Consensus Development Conference on Osteoporosis.

He also recommends exercise to ward off the possibility that one's bones will cave in as the years roll on. Jogging, walking and biking are best. Such exercise puts stress on bones, making them stronger.

Swimming, while a good exercise generally, does not put the same kind of stress on the skeleton. Doctors say bones under stress undergo less resorption.

Peck said that lifestyle factors that can increase a woman's risk of developing osteoporosis include chain-smoking, heavy drinking, and consuming large quantities of coffee daily.

There was a caveat to his calcium edict: anyone with kidney trouble should ask her physician for guidance about calcium pills.

The expert talked about calcium and exercise during an interview on the risks and benefits of various strategems for treating and preventing osteoporosis, the degenerative bone disorder that causes abnormal bone loss. Other therapies include estrogen and vitamin D.

Peck said no single therapy exists either to treat or prevent osteoporosis. Some therapies have possible untoward effects, and doctors should help patients to be on the lookout for them.

Peck said experience indicates estrogen can help if taken about 5 to 10 years after natural menopause and at once in the case of artificial menopause induced by removal of the ovaries.

"The common view is that if you delay menopause five years, ultimately you reduce to 50 percent the chance of a hip fracture 20 years later," Peck said.

He said women with clotting disorders should not be considered candidates for estrogen treatment. Even for others, the hormone, given in very low doses as directed by a physician, is not whithout its risks, he said.

One is the possible development of cancer of the lining of the uterus — endometrial cancer.

Peck said this form of cancer is highly treatable when spotted in the very earliest stage. He recommends that physicians who put their patients on low doses of estrogen make certain the women have a gynecological examination every six months.

Mary Ellen Carawan of Winston-Salem and Abdallah Riad of Atlanta, Ga., were married Saturday in the chapel of Centenary United Methodist Church in Winston-Salem.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Cleveland Eugene Carawan of Greenville. She was formerly employed as the nutrition program director for Reynolds Health Center in Winston-Salem.

The bridegroom is the son of Gen. and Mrs. Ali Haridi of Alexandria, Egypt. He is employed as a pilot for Piedmont Airlines.

The couple will live in Winston-Salem and Flovilla, Ga.

Update Of Weekly Food Costs Offered

How does your food bill compare with that of other similar American families? The U.S. Department of Agriculture has issued an update of weekly costs of food eaten at home.

The USDA computes the cost of food for four food plans — thifty, low-cost, moderate and liberal, say extension food and nutrition specialists at North Carolina State University.

The average family of two (both between the ages of 20 and 50) spend $37.10 on the thrifty food plan, $46.40 on the low-cost plan; $57.10 on a moderate plan, and $70.60 on a liberal plan.

The figures for a family of two, both 51 or over, are $35.20, thrifty; $44.50, low-cost; $54.50, moderate, and $64.90, liberal.

A family of four with preschool children spends $53.70 on the thrifty plan; $66.60 on the low-cost plan; $81.10 for a moderate eating plan, and $99 for a liberal plan.

Once those two children reach elementary school and are eating more, the figures rise to $61.70 for thrifty; $78.10 for low-cost; $97.50 for moderate, and $117.30 for a liberal food plan.

If your household contains a teenaged girl, add $15.80 a week on a thrifty plan; $18.90 on low-cost; $22.80 for moderate, and $27.50 for liberal. A teenaged boy, not unexpectedly, eats more. If he is between the ages of 12 and 14, allow $16.10 to $31.80. Between 15 and 19, add another dollar to each of the above categories.

Each plan covers the cost of foods that provide well-balanced meals and snacks for a week. The totals do not include alcoholic beverages, pet food, soap, cigarettes, paper goods and other nonfood items bought at the grocery store.

The USDA uses the thrifty plan figures to set coupon allotments in the food stamp program.

To accurately compare your food bill, use the figures above if all meals are eaten at home or carried away from home. If members are eating some meals out, deduct five percent from the amount shown for each meal not eaten at home. So, if everyone eats lunch out five days a week, subtract 25 percent, or one-fourth of the cost shown.

PRESERVATION BATTLE LOST — The block-long Lit Brothers Building, located on Market Street between 7th and 8th Streets in downtown Philadelphia, is being readied for the first phase of demolition at an early date. Tom Hine, architectural writer and critic for The Philadelphia Inquirer, notes the finely detailed building has been the subject of efforts by preservationists to save the landmark structure, closed since 1977. A recent inspection of the building resulted in its being declared a public safety hazard, thus providing a basis for the decision to demolish. Hine said plans for use of the site have not been formulated at this time. (Reflector Photo by Jerry Raynor)

Watauga Show To Feature Indian Artifacts

By PALMER HILL
N.C. Department Of
Cultural Resources

Ray Ward's cornfield will make the history books, but not because of his corn.

In 1974 anthropology students from Appalachian State University walked through Ward's property and stumbled onto some arrowheads. After nearly 10 years of digs and analysis, the cornfield has yielded a range of artifacts dating from 6,000 B.C. to the late 18th century A.D.

A display of some of these artifacts will be opened to the public next year as part of Watauga County's 400th Anniversary activities.

America's 400th Anniversary is a three-year celebration being hosted by North Carolina in honor of the Roanoke Voyages of 1584-87. The voyages brought the first English settlers of the new world to the Outer Banks of North Carolina. Dare County, in the northeastern part of the state, had been planning festivities for years, but Cherokee County, in the far west, was the first county outside the northeast to declare its support for the 400th. Today every county in the state has a 400th chairman, and western counties are actively taking part in a look at 400 years of history.

Watauga County will look back even farther than 400 years when its citizens examine spearheads dated at 6,000 B.C., the evidence of a pre-Cherokee Indian village dated at about 1,000-1,400 A.D., and remnants of a late 18th century log cabin. The anthropology deparment at Appalachian State University will put the artifacts on public display next year in conjunction with the Watauga County 400th Anniversary Committee.

Rutherford County plans a "First Colonie Faire" for 1985, which will reproduce aspects of native American and Elizabethan cultures of 400 years ago — "what the colonists left in England and what they found here," according to Matthew McEnnerney, Rutherford County 400th Committee member.

McEnnerney said the "faire" will include music, dance, drama, scholarly readings, food, games and art. Rutherford's 400th Committee is working with C. Walter Hodges, a world authority on Shakespeare's theater, in order to plan the festival.

Juniors and seniors in Mitchell County High School will know what is was like being carried across the Atlantic in a 16th Century vessel after they participate in a ship-building contest during the 1984-85 school year. Blue prints for the "Elizabeth II," the 16th century-style reproduction of a ship which sailed to the new world in 1585, will be on hand. However, beyond that, students will be on their own. A prize will be offered by the Mitchell County 400th Committee.

McDowell County's 400th Committee will hold an Elizabethan tea this winter at Carson House on Buck Creek at Pleasant Gardens. The festivities will include Elizabethan costumes, foods and music. Carson House, built in 1790, was the home of Jonathan Carson, a gentleman farmer, and was the seat of county government from 1843-45. It is undergoing some restoration work.

History is being taught in fourth and eighth grades throughout North Carolina, but in Madison County, seventh graders are becoming familiar with their heritage, too. In the last four years four seventh graders from the county have won first or second place in the national "History Day" contest at the University of Maryland. Therefore, during America's 400th anniversary, seventh-grade teachers are putting an extra emphasis on history.

Morganton, in Burke County, is celebrating its 200th anniversary as well as the 400th this year, and the county courthouse is being restored in time for a week of festivities Sept. 9-16. The North Carolina Supreme Court held its sessions at the historic courthouse before the Civil War.

"Voices of Burke," a play written especially for the anniversary, will be performed Sept. 10 and Sept. 12, at 8:30 p.m., in the courthouse. On Sept. 11, Burke County schools will give a performance at the courthouse, and on Sept. 13 and Sept. 15, the Western Piedmont Symphony will perform there, at 8:30 p.m. For more information, call Harry Jordan, Burke County 400th Chairman, (704)437-3000.

Fifth graders in Bumcombe County schools will participate in a poster and cartography contest this fall. For those entering the poster contest, the goal will be to depict an early North Carolina scene involving the "lost colony." Entrants in the cartography contest will draw a map of the early coast of North Carolina.

An Elizabethan feast will be held Sept. 25 at 6 p.m. at the Biltmore House in Asheville as a fund-raiser for the Polk County 400th Anniversary Committee. It will be "a black-tie affair, 16th century style," said Donna Anthony, Polk's 400th co-chairman. The evening will feature music, poetry, wine tasting and a buffet, including a roast suckling pig. It will be open to the public and tickets are $40 each. Call Donna Anthony, (704)894-8216.

Yancey County plans a presentation of folk music in Burnsville's town square. The Celo Symphony will sing songs of 400 years ago, and members will accompany themselves using instruments of the era. They will also sing some early North Carolina songs.

Haywood County's 400th Committee will hold "Folkmoot, USA: North Carolina's International Folk Festival" Aug. 1-13. Folk dance and music groups, authentically costumed, from 10 foreign countries, will perform at various locations in the county. Teams from the United Kingdom, India, Holland, Turkey, Germany, Spain, Mexico, Puerto Rico and the United States will be on hand.

Western Carolina University will hold "Mountain Heritage Day" Sept. 29 from 8 a.m. through the evening in Cullowhee in conjunction with the Jackson County 400th Anniversary Committee. Called "the kind of celebration mountain folks used to have," it will include traditional fiddle music, picking, clogging, smooth dancing, gospel singing and shape-note singing. Crafts and traditional skills demonstrations will be featured. There will be several contests, including an old truck contest and a tobacco-spitting contest. The Western Carolina University Mountain Heritage Center will offer special exhibits and shows on Southern Appalachian heritage and life.

Florida Couple Raising Exotic Koi Fish

By DORALISA PILARTE
Associated Press Writer

MIAMI (AP) — For centuries, only Japanese royalty and nobility bred and kept brightly colored carp in their garden pools. But now plebian South Floridians have taken up the trendy hobby.

Koi is the American pronunciation of the Japanese word for carp, and nishikigoi means brocaded carp, the strain carefully bred for its vibrant splashes of color — blood reds, cobalt blues, brilliant golds and opalescent whites.

"The Japanese breed thousands of fish, then they cull heartlessly," said Elaine Lowe, who with her husband Jim, imports, breeds, sells and provides care for the exotic koi in South Florida.

"We love fish," said Mrs. Lowe, 39. "So, if it weren't a business, we would have it as a hobby."

Prize koi, exhibited in competitions held in Japan, can command figures in the thousands of dollars. They are clearly not meant for a fish fry.

"At $100,000 for a champion koi, it would be a very expensive meal," said Lowe, 59.

Koi live an average of 70 years, but one fish, kept by Komei Koshihara, president of Nagoya Women's College in Japan, is said to be at least 200 years old. The age was determined after scales were examined under a microscope. The scales show age circles in much the same way trees do in their trunks.

That makes koi, a cousin of the goldfish, one of the few pets that could outlive their masters.

"In Japan, they (bequeath) them down from one generation to another," Mrs. Lowe said.

Although Lowe raised fish as a pastime since he was in his mid-30s, he started specializing in koi 14 years ago, when he took an early retirement from his job as technical equipment designer at the University of Miami's Rosenstiel School of Marine and Atmospheric Science.

"I read an article about retired Japanese (military) officers taking up koi breeding as a dignified hobby," he said.

Before moving to Miami in 1981, Mrs. Lowe worked four years as an oceanographer with the U.S. Naval Oceanographic Office in Washington, D.C. She then worked six years as a biologist and senior editor with the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service in Louisiana.

That is where customers bring in their sick koi for treatment. Two laundry tubs, painted white with red crosses in the front, serve as "beds" for the aquatic patients.

"We don't just sell fish," Mrs. Lowe said. "We try to educate people on how to take care of their fish."

The couple has turned their backyard into a charming tropical version of a Japanese garden.

Ponds teeming with a rainbow of koi are nestled among avocado and mango trees, an ancient frangipani and a ficus, the trailing roots of which Lowe has braided over the years into a natural, cool grotto.

Lowe designs the ponds, complete with overhanging mini-waterfalls in hunks of coral rock that serve double duty: the splashing helps air the pond water and the rocks provide the koi with a hiding place, giving them the sense of security they seem to love.

The largest pond, capable of holding 12,000 gallons of water, features a clump of papyrus and a miniature wooden path curving over and ending at a corner where the Lowes keep four loud geese.

Several concrete vats hold other koi in various stages of development. They are kept covered with panels of mosquito netting weighed down by a plastic tube frame. Koi are strong jumpers.

"One of our patients was so strong that he jumped out of the vat" in the laboratory, Lowe said. "He must have been on the floor for an hour when we found him."

The "patient" was quickly revived with super-oxygenated water and shortly after was splashing about, good as new.

"He was one of the ones who wanted to leave the hospital before he was discharged," Mrs. Lowe said.

The koi business keeps the couple constantly occupied cleaning, feeding and keeping the fish healthy. But they say they prefer being self-employed rather than working for someone else.

"I love it here because you're on your own," Mrs. Lowe said. "And whether you succeed or fail, it's because of your own efforts."

Cairo Attracts Arab Visitors

By ROBERT H. REID
Associated Press Writer

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — During hot summer months, when Westerners shun the gritty pyramids or the oven-like tombs at Luxor, Egypt's tourist haunts are swarming with Saudis and other Arabs from the Persian Gulf area.

They come here, not to gaze at the Sphinx or wander through the Egyptian Museum, but to escape the brutal heat at home, relax in the nightclubs, gamble in the casinos and enjoy the pleasures of a more cosmopolitan, less restrictive society than their own.

Their presence, though resented by many ordinary Cairenes, not only brings in hard currency during the off-season for Western tourists but helps Egypt maintain contacts and cultural influence in the Arab world.

According to the Ministry of Tourism, nearly a half million Arabs visit Egypt every year, most from countries which have broken diplomatic relations with Cairo because of its peace treaty with Israel. Last year that number included about 160,000 Saudis, making the desert kingdom Egypt's largest single source of foreign visitors.

"I like Egypt so I come here often," said a 26-year-old Saudi in American-accented English. "I don't like Camp David but why should that stop me from enjoying myself." Camp David in Maryland is where the peace treaty with Israel was signed in 1979.

With their distinctive dress — graceful, flowing white robes for men and black attire with veil for women — Gulf Arabs stand out in crowds of Egyptians, many of whom prefer Western styles.

Saudi, Kuwaiti and other Gulf families can be seen munching mango ice cream at outdoor cafes along the Nile or strolling the downtown streets — men first, followed a few paces behind by wives and children.

At night, Gulf Arab men jam nightclubs along the Nile or on Pyramids Road, many enjoying the alcohol drinks that are banned in their own countries by Islamic Law.

Although the number of Arabs visiting Egypt fell off sharply following President Anwar Sadat's visit to Jerusalem in 1977, the figures have been climbing since President Hosni Mubarak took office after Sadat's assassination three years ago.

"They like to come here in summer because it's cooler than in the Gulf, and it's an Arab city so they feel more at home," said a travel agent. "They can relax here and have a good time."

Tourism Ministry officials and travel agents agree that Gulf Arabs visit Egypt for reasons quite different from Americans, Japanese and Europeans.

The latter group comes to cruise the Nile, see the pyramids and visit ancient tombs of upper Egypt. For Gulf Arabs, Cairo is a major cultural center, a combination of Paris and Las Vegas.

New Book On Fate Of Lost Colonists Is Published

By PEGGY HOWE
N.C. Department Of
Cultural Resources

What happened to the "Lost Colony?"

In a new book published by the Department of Cultural Resources, an eminent historian explores this intriguing mystery by speculating about the fate of North Carolina's famed "Lost Colony."

"The Lost Colonists: Their Fortune and Probable Fate" by David Beers Quinn has recently been published by the department's Historical Publications Section, in cooperation with America's 400th Anniversary Committee. The third in a series of publications about various aspects of the Roanoke Voyages, this softcover book describes the departure from England in 1587 of the 118 settlers, their arrival at the wrong destination, their help from friendly Indians, their struggles and the return of their governor, John White, to England for supplies.

Before leaving, White agreed with the colonists that, should they move from Roanoke Island, they would leave clear evidence as to where they had gone and should add an indication in the form of a cross if they were in danger.

When White arrived in England, he found that country under threat of imminent invasion by the Spanish Armada. All ships were required for England's defense, leaving none available to take the governor and supplies back to the Roanoke colony.

After many difficulties, White was finally able to secure a ship and return to the Outer Banks, not six to eight months later as he had anticipated, but almost three years after he had left. He found little trace of his colony, except the word "Croatoan" inscribed on a tree, but with no sign of the agreed-upon distress code. Croatoan was a nearby village inhabited by Indians who had been friendly to the colonists.

Quinn suggests that, when White returned in 1590, he was unable to search the area carefully since the captain of the vessel that brought him to Roanoke Island had little interest in locating the colony and was impatient to set sail. White had no choice but to return with the ship.

Relying upon his thorough research of the few existing sources, Quinn traces the probable movements of the colonists after John White left them in 1587. His theory is that, shortly after White's departure, the main body of the colonists packed up and turned toward Chesapeake, their original destination, leaving a small group of men on Roanoke Island to await the governor's return.

As White's return became a more remote possibility, Quinn speculates that the English colonists at Chesapeake would have identified with nearby friendly Indians. His guess is that the settlers lived peacefully there until about 1607 when they and their Indian friends were massacred by Powhatan, the powerful Indian leader who feared European threats to his empire. The book states, "There is no doubt, however, that Powhatan was held responsible (in England) for the violent and bloody end of the Lost Colony."

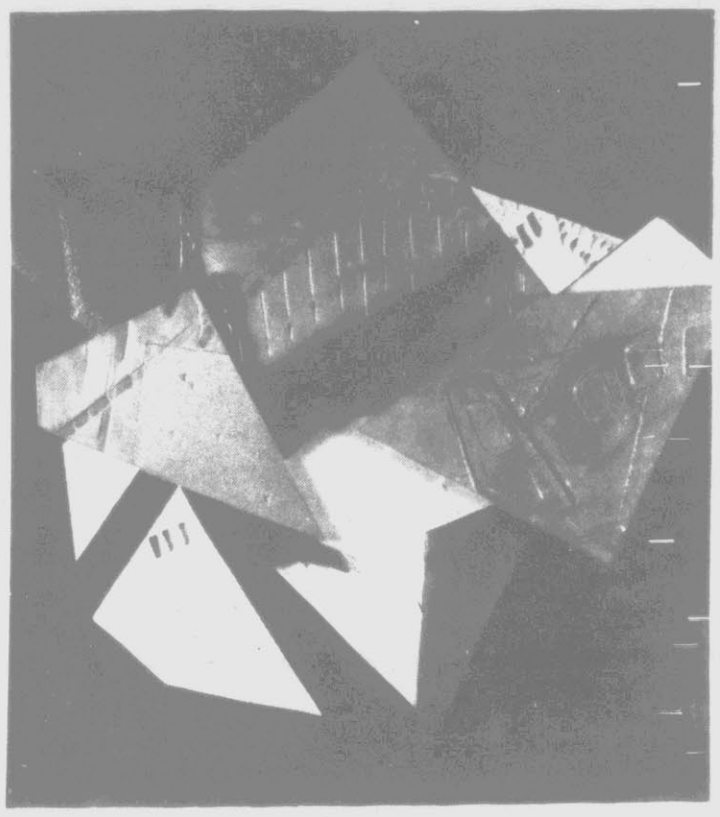

Quinn discusses searches for the colonists by later explorers, but admits that no conclusive evidence has surfaced as to what happened to the first English settlers in North America. The author's hope is that today's archaeological explorations, taking place in connection with the 400th Anniversary, will help solve the 400-year-old mystery — the disappearance of the "Lost Colony."

"The Lost Colonists: Their Fortune and Probable Fate" is available for $2 per copy, plus $1 postage and handling, from the NCDCR, Historical Publications Section, 109 E. Jones St., Raleigh 27611 (919)733-7442. It may also be obtained from the North Carolina Museum of History Gift Shop in Raleigh, the Elizabeth II State Historic Site in Manteo, some other state historic sites and commercial bookstores.

The Soviet Union inaugurated its first five-year plan to increase farm and industrial production in 1928.

CERAMIC WALL RELIEF — by Dawn Enochs is one of the works by three women artists now on view at the Arts Council of Wilson. Ms. Enochs, Anna Daughtry and Margie Worthington are exhibiting in a show co-sponsored by The Wilson Daily Tiems and the Arts Council. Ms. Daughtry holds the MFA from East Carolina University, and Ms. Enochs and Ms. Worthington are MFA candidates at ECU. The Arts Council is located at 205 Gray St., Wilson. Hours are 9-5 daily, and admission is free.

Southeastern U.S. Indians Had Well-Defined Lifestyle

By RON HARRIST
Associated Press Writer

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — Their women owned property and participated in government and they lived in cabins, grew corn and other crops and used horses to bear the spoils of the hunt rather than of combat. They were the native Americans who once inhabited the Southeast.

"When the Choctaws and Chickasaws made peace and negotiated with the French in 1702, some of their women were in the party," said Dr. Patricia Galloway of the state Department of Archives and History. "The French apparently thought the women were at the meeting to cook and perform other chores but, based on what we now know, it is safe to assume they were there to participate in setting policies and making decisions."

Experts say these early Americans may have numbered 100 million before the arrival of Europeans, whose diseases apparently killed the natives in great numbers.

Ms. Galloway and others seeking to uncover the history of Indians in the Southeast agree that the ethnic groups or tribes with names like Natchez, Chickasaw, Choctaw, Biloxi, and Tunica were not the war-like savages often portrayed in movies.

"I believe the general kind of picture we get from films is that all Indians hunted buffalo, lived in teepees, battled wagon trains and were a nomadic people," said Ms. Galloway. "While the Indians of the plains were nomadic, this certainly was not the case in the Southeast."

Researchers have found that the tribes had a well-defined system of government and the Indians had expertise in many areas, inluding agriculture and forest management.

They lived in cabins, sometime two-story quarters, had summer homes and storage structures, Ms. Galloway said, and often planted gardens of corn, squash and beans near their central villages.

The Indians taught the Europeans how to plant corn and some of their forest management practices, such as controlled burning, are still practiced today, she said.

The tribal groups were descendants of complex societies, known as chiefdoms, that existed long before the first Europeans arrived on this continent. They apparently were still functioning when explorer Hernando DeSoto traveled through the Southeast in the 1530s and 1540s.

But by the time the French and English arrived in the interior some 150 years later, the chiefdoms had largely disappeared, apparently victims of diseases brought by the white man.

"The inheritors of these chiefdom societies were much more loosely organized in village groups," she said.

Ms. Galloway said that while movies often showed Indians at war, Indians of the Southeast were usually too busy at their tasks for such activity.

The Choctaws, the only remaining organized Indian group in Mississippi today, and the other groups were prepared to defend their territory, she said, but they spent most of their time hunting, fishing and harvesting both domestic crops and wild food.

"And except for Andrew Jackson and the Creeks, none of the Indians in the Southeast ever fought against the United States," she said.

"Their biggest battle was with white greed and misunderstanding," Ms. Galloway said. "Just as in the case of the Cherokees in the Carolinas, our Choctaws, Chickasaws, Creeks, Seminoles and Cherokees also had their 'trail of tears."

"In spite of the fact it has been about 150 years since they were deprived of much of their land, the Indians of the five civilized tribes have managed to retain a great deal of their culture," she said. "For example, Choctaw, rather than English, remains the mother tongue of the Mississippi Band of Choctaw Indians.

Todd Savitt Is One Of Book's Editors

WESTPORT, CONN. — Dr. Todd L. Savitt, an associate professor of humanities at the East Carolina University School of Medicine, is one of three persons editing the two volume publication, "Dictionary of American Medical Biography," published recently by Greenwood Press, Westport. The two volume set will sell for $95.

Other editors are Dr. Martin Kaufman and Dr. Stuart Galishoff. Joseph Carvalho III is editorial associate of the volumes.

The work, largest of its kind since 1928, documents the development of American medicine by giving profiles of noted American doctors from the early colonies through horse-and-bubby doctors on through prominent doctors today. Also included are profiles on patent medicine manufacturers, inventors, spiritual healers and others who were outside the medical mainstream but who provided major alternatives to the medical practices of their day.

Savitt attended the University of Rochester School of Medicine, and received the Ph.D. in history from the University of Virginia. He is the author of "Medicine and Slavery" and several articles on black health in the U.S.

Book News

FROM SHEPPARD MEMORIAL LIBRARY

By SUSANNE H. LONG

It may take a special book to lure a child away from the swimming pool or softball field now that we're running out of summer. There are a number of books likely to do just that on the New Books cart in Sheppard Memorial Library's Children's Room.

"The Sign of the Beaver" by Elizabeth George Speare is an exceptional book. When 13-year-old Matthew is left alone to guard a newly built cabin in the wilderness, he is nearly defeated until he meets a resourceful Indian boy. As the new relationship warms to friendship, the Indian trades the secrets of forest survival for Matt's aid in learning the ways of the white man, knowledge becoming useful on the changing frontier. The boys help each other adapt in a beautiful story of the 1700s, exploring the relationship between early settlers and the Indians.

Older children are invited to enjoy "Exploring Our Living Planet," produced by the National Geographic Society, a book dedicated through fabulous photographs and fascinating information to remind us of the magnificence of our world. The book is powerful in its descriptions of the earth's surfaces, volcanoes, earthquakes, mineral formations, ocean floors and mountain tops, plus the forces that shape and change the land and sea.

Small children will appreciate the moonlit pictures and magical rhyme of Eugene Field's "Wyken, Blynken, and Nod." The story of the nighttime adventures of three fishermen has delighted children for years.

Nancy Tafuri's "Have You Seen My Duckling?" is another good choice for toddlers, who respond well to the bright colors and repetition as a mother duck goes from creature to creature in the marsh looking for a missing duckling.

Another American Born Australian Actor

By BOB THOMAS
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The latest hot actor from Australia is no more Australian than American-born Mel Gibson. He is Tom Burlinson, who was born in Toronto and lived in New Jersey and Hertfordshire, England.

HORSEMAN — Tom Burlinson, who plays Tommy Woodcock in the film "Phar Lap," befriends the horse of the same name in a scene from the movie. Although Burlinson was acquainted with horses in his last film, "The Man From Snowy River," the actor from Australia says, "Phar Lap" required an entirely different style of riding. (AP Laserphoto)

But in this year's earlier import from Down Under, "The Man From Snowy River," and the forthcoming "Phar Lap," the 28-year-old Burlinson seems like a native of Australia. Indeed, he has lived there from the age of 10.

Burlinson was here to help 20th Century Fox launch the American release of "Phar Lap," which already has made back its cost in Australia.

Phar Lap is not exactly a household name in the United States. But racing fans don't need to be told who he was.

Some track historians peg Phar Lap as the greatest racer in history. A big, homely chestnut from New Zealand, the horse became a national hero with its astounding come-from-the-outside finishes. Phar Lap won 37 races in three years — 14 consecutively.

Phar Lap came to the United States in 1932 to win the $100,000 Agua Caliente handicap, then the world's richest. Shortly afterward the champion died under mysterious circumstances. When Swale died unexpectedly this year after winning the Kentucky Derby and Belmont Stakes, sports writers cited the parallel to Phar Lap.

Tom Burlinson, who plays Phar Lap's strapper (handler) Tommy Woodcock, admitted his early education about horses had been lacking.

"I had been on a horse twice before 'Snowy River,'" he said in an interview. "I found myself playing a legendary young man who had been on and around horses all his life. Fortunately I was taken in hand by a fourth-generation mountain bushman who taught me everything I needed to know.

"'Phar Lap' required an entirely different style of riding," he continued. "I also had to make good friends with Bobby, the horse that plays Phar Lap — his real name is Towering Inferno. Some people say that horses are dumb; I don't think so. I hadn't seen Bobby in eight months when we met again. He knew me immediately and went right back to his old tricks."

For the new film, the actor had the help of Tommy Woodcock himself. The veteran is still active in Australian racing at 78.

"That's all right with me," he said. "In 'Snowy River' I was playing 18 when I was 25, and in 'Phar Lap' I'm supposed to be in my early 20s. It's an advantage to be able to play young characters and use the experience you have gained as an actor."

Burlinson's British father worked for an international firm, which explains why he lived two years in Canada, four in the United States and four in England.

"I have clear images of my life in this country, my first day in school, for example," the actor said. "I was an all-American boy, Little League and all that. When I went to England, I had to make adjustments to another kind of life. Then in Australia I was known for a couple of years as 'that little English boy.'

"I'm a permanent resident of Australia, but I'm still a Canadian citizen. That's an advantage: I can enter the U.S. without a visa."

Burlinson studied law in college, but in his last year switched to the National Institute of Dramatic Arts. One of his classmates was Mel Gibson.

He worked in theater and television, then won the "Snowy River" lead over 2,000 actors. He recently worked in his first international movie, Paul Verhoeven's "Flesh and Blood," which filmed in Spain with Rutger Hauer and Jennifer Jason Leigh.

He makes his home in Sydney and so far has remained unmarried.

"The last 10 years have been so busy that I'm just not ready for a steady relationship," he said. "I'll get married eventually, and I understand the need: Acting is an unsettling life unless you have an emotional base. Traveling the world like this becomes a bit unreal."

Turkish Newspapers Face Many Problems

By EMEL ANIL
Associated Press Writer

ANKARA, Turkey (AP) — Turkey's major national newspapers, which use color lavishly and employ some of the most advanced technologies in Europe, are reeling from falling circulations and rising costs — in addition to dealing with military censorship.

The newspapers started feeling the financial squeeze in 1980, when the government launched an economic recovery program and eliminated most state subsidies.

The price of state-produced newsprint shot up to the equivalent of $346 a ton from $106 four years ago.

In the past year, communications expenses including telephone fees rose by 200 percent.

Fierce competition prodded newspapers more than a decade ago to purchase advanced printing equipment and to publish everything from comic strips to gory crime photos in color. The rising value of the U.S. dollar has now made imported material for color printing more costly.

Papers have raised their own prices; for the first time a daily newspaper, at 50 Turkish liras (13 cents), is more expensive than a loaf of bread, which costs 40 liras (10 cents).

This in turn has led to a drop in circulation despite steady population and literacy growth. The combined circulation of five major dailies is down to 1.7 million from 2.1 million in 1977, according to a recent survey published by the weekly Yanki-Echo.

Strongly capitalized Hurriyet, Turkey's largest daily, and the Gunaydin chain of magazine-type dailies have been least affected by the financial crisis, according to newspaper circles.

But these sources say other dailies borrowed heavily at high interest rates to cover steep costs and now have trouble servicing those loans.

Other Turkish businesses are in similar straits, ruling out increased advertising revenue as a major source to cover rising newspaper costs.

In a recent article, Nezih Demirkent, president of Istanbul's Journalists Association and a former executive of Hurriyet, urged the government to extend support to newspapers, both financially and through greater tolerance for press freedom.

After the military takeover in September 1980, martial law authorities barred any direct criticism of the government and periodically closed down several newspapers for violating the ban.

Restrictions on press freedom have been partially eased in practice since a civilian government was elected last November to serve under a military president.

Although martial law remains in force in 41 of 67 provinces, including the major cities of Ankara and Istanbul, no major daily has been closed since the elections for stepping out of line. There have also been fewer news blackouts. Prison sentences passed on journalists are often reduced to fines.

But publishers and editors complain that the civilian government of Prime Minister Turgut Ozal is not doing enough to ease press problems

Writers To Meet Tuesday

The first meeting of the Greenville Writers Club for the month of August will be held at 8 p.m. Tuesday at the home of Mrs. Ida Wooten Tripp, Rt. 5, Pactolus Highway.

Those wishing to share rides from Greenville are to meet at 7:30 p.m. at Krispy Kreme Doughnut Shop on East Tenth Street.

Anyone interested in any form of creative writing is welcome. Those bringing poetry manuscripts to be read are asked to bring 10-12 copies for distribution. Play manuscripts should be in sufficient copies to permit a copy for each character. Other manuscripts are to be in one copy only.

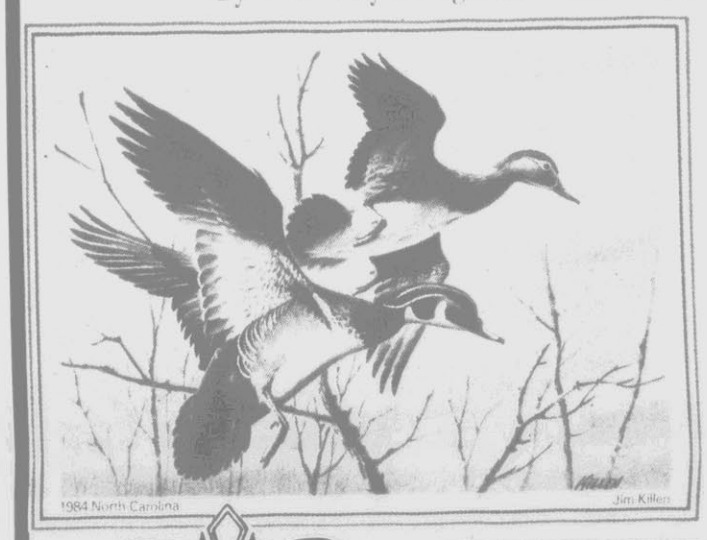

BRITISH COUNCIL STAMPS — The 50th anniversary of the British Council is being marked by the issuance of four stamps on Sept. 25. The council, with representatives in more than 80 countries, has several principal aims: to bring people to Britain to study; to send people overseas to teach and advise; to provide libraries and promote British books; to project Britain through its arts; and to teach the English language. Typical council activities shown on the stamps are: 17 pence, a doctor examining a baby in Nigeria; 22 pence, a British violinist performing in Athens, Greece to a score by Michael Tippett; 31 pence, a British engineer and a native of Sri Lanka discussing a building project; and 34 pence, foreign students learning the English language. Jackson Fashion

Bill Sullivan, spokesman for the licensing division of Stadium Management, says the line will run from $15 childrens' pajamas with the singer's image to couture designs in the "several-hundred-dollar range."

Strange Seafood Festival Thursday

BEAUFORT — The 8th annual Strange Seafood Exhibition takes place this year on Thursday, from 2 to 4 p.m. on the site of the Beaufort Historical Restoration grounds, adjacent to the North Carolina Maritime Museum (formerly the Hampton Mariners Museum) in downtown historic Beaufort.

This year, due to the popularity of the program and the overwhelming numbers attending in the past, a decision was made to limit admittance to 1,000 ticket holders, with tickets priced at $3 each. Only a few tickets remain, with ticket sales to be continued until all are sold. (For reservations, call 728-7317.)

Now a nationally acclaimed summer event, the Strange Seafoods sample meal features seafood such as coquina clam soup, yaupon tea, shark salad, and stingray casserole. Each dish is prepared and served by museum staff members and expert cooks from throughout North Carolina.

A special 400th Anniversary table will highlight seafoods which sustained North Carolna's first English colonists. Demonstrations will also be offered on such things as how to clean crab and squid, and how to remove conch and scallop from their shells.

Rain date for the event has been set for Friday.

Recipes for each dish served are printed in the "Strange Seafood Recipes" cookbook, on sale at the museum for $5 or by mail for an additional $1 to cover postage and handling. The cookbook can be ordered from: The N.C. Maritime Museum, 120 Turner St., Beaufort, N.C. ,28516.

Sailors Luck

Hearst Magazine News

Some sailors can ride out the worst of storms with nary a queasy moment, while others on the same boat feel sick as soon as they see a wave. Why?

Hormones, of course. NASA researchers, reports an article in the August issue of Motor Boating and Sailing, recently found that people who are resistant to motion sickness may produce larger amounts of such hormones as adrenaline, noradrenaline and ACTH — hormones that are recognized as part of the body's normal reaction to stress — than do people who experience motion sickness.

The NASA study determinded that men who were resistant to motion sickness produced more of these hormones both under stress and under normal circumstances. The scientists said that they did not find a simple cause-and-effect relationship.

Erik Estrada In Stage Play

By MICHAEL KUCHWARA
AP Drama Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Erik Estrada is taking a chance.

Mary Tyler Moore did it when she left Mary Richards behind in Minneapolis and came to Broadway to star in "Whose Life Is It Anyway?" It won her an honorary Tony in 1980.

Farrah Fawcett did it last year in an attempt to shed the Tinseltown halo she earned as one of "Charlie's Angels." She went off-Broadway to star in "Extremities," a drama about rape. It won her new respect as an actress.

Now Estrada, who for six years rode the concrete ranges of California's freeways in the NBC motorcycle series "CHiPs," has jumped, feet first, into "True West," Sam Shepard's off-beat tale of two brothers and their encounter with the myth of the old west. It's been running for more than two years at the tiny Cherry Lane Theater in Greenwich Village.

His hair is flecked with wisps of gray, but otherwise the 35-year-old Estrada looks as athletic as ever, the same sturdy shape as when he made Sgt. Frank "Ponch" Poncherello a household name.

Although "CHiPs" was better known for its car chases than the quality of its conversation, it gave Estrada something invaluable — audience recognition and a secure financial base.

It's something Estrada, who came out of New York's Spanish Harlem, has always worked for. His parents were divorced when he was a child. Until he was 16, he wanted to be a police officer, like a detective who once dated his mother.

But after appearing in a high school play, he "freaked out over the feeling that I got on stage." At 22, he left New York. But Estrada was not an instant success in Hollywood. He didn't land an acting job for three years. Instead he sold used cars and tended bar.

Estrada played almost all the dramatic television series on the air at that time but usually he was, in his words, "the Latin with the knife, the Latin with the gun, the brick, the blade etc."

"CHiPs" was the breakthrough, turning Estrada into a television sex symbol who generated as many as 3,000 fan letters a week.

But the satisfaction of "CHiPs" came at a price.

"When you do a television series for six years, 14 to 15 hours a day, there is no you. You don't belong to you anymore. You belong to the show," Estrada said.

When the producers of "True West" offered him a part in the play, he didn't hesitate.

In "True West," Estrada is going against type. He wasn't interested in playing Lee, the menacing, more macho brother with a sinister edge. Instead, he's playing Austin, the screenwriter, an Ivy League intellectual with a fondness for sweaters.

"In film, it's all hurry up. You strap on a guy for maybe 30 seconds. Print," said Estrada. "In the theater, you're strapping on a guy for two hours. You have to be him."

Musicals Presented In Former Factory

By MICHAEL KUCHWARA
AP Drama Writer

CHESTER, Conn. (AP) — Near the banks of a boulder-strewn brook called the Great Creek, new musical comedies are being nurtured in what was once a knitting needle factory.

The nation's newest incubator for that most original of American art forms is called the Goodspeed at Chester, which this summer began its first season of untried musicals. It has been put together by the folks who run the Goodspeed Opera House, a gingerbread architectural gem across the Connecticut River in East Haddam.

The East Haddam operation specializes in dusted-off musicals written over the past 75 years. This year it has already done Rodgers and Hart's "The Boys from Syracuse" and is currently running "Follow Thru," a 1929 musical by De Sylva, Brown and Henderson through Sept. 7. Bob Merrill's "Take Me Along," based on Eugene O'Neill's "Ah, Wilderness," finishes off the season which ends Nov. 18.

But the Goodspeed also has made occasional forays into new territory. Such Broadway hits as "Annie," "Man of La Mancha" and "Shenandoah" started there.

Now it has gone into full-time production of new shows at its building in Chester, the Norma Terris Theater, named after the woman who played Magnolia in the original 1927 production of "Show Boat" and who is an enthusiastic supporter of Goodspeed.

Both theaters are run by Michael Price, a 46-year-old former child actor from Chicago who eventually wound up in East Haddam after stints at New York's Lincoln Center, working under Richard Rodgers, and as producer at the Valley Music Hall in Salt Lake City.

"We were doing experimental theater in our rehearsal hall in East Haddam, on a 99-seat basis, popping up a new show every so often," Price said.

But the productions were closed by officials of the East Haddam Planning and Zoning Commission, as were subsequent moves to the theater's paint shop and then to a barn, he said.

The Goodspeed had in its possession an old knitting needle factory, donated more than two years ago by the C.J. Bates Co., which decided to move to new facilities nearby.

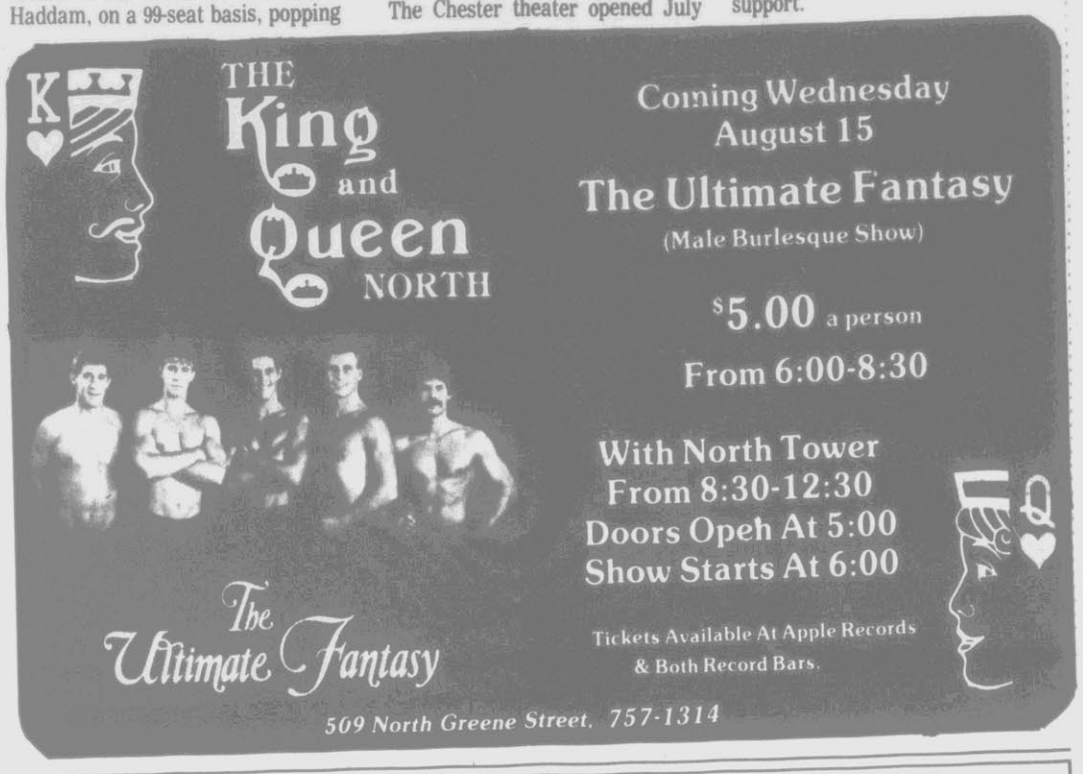

It had used the property to store scenery, according to Price. But a $750,000 renovation job turned the utilitarian work place into an attractive 200-seat theater.

The Chester theater opened July 10 with a five-week run of "Harrigan and Hart," an affectionate tribute to the old theatrical team of Edward Harrigan and Tony Hart, two of the most popular performers of the 1870s and '80s.

The Chester theater also plans an adaptation of Mary Chase's comedy "Mrs. McThing" for October, and two months later, "A Broadway Baby," which will combine actors with the puppets of Sid and Marty Krofft. A fourth production is scheduled for next spring. Each will cost about $200,000, with Goodspeed contributors, the Shubert Foundation, the Connecticut Commission on the Arts and the National Endowment for the Arts providing financial support.

Broadway — Still The Heart Of Theater Magic

TWO TYPES OF ENTERTAINMENT . . . co-exist in close proximity to each other. In the photo above, lines form outside two adjacent theaters, the Helen Hayes and St. James, where "Torch Song Trilogy" and "My One And Only" are now playing. In the photograph at right, only a couple of blocks away from the two large theaters, the Triple Treat Theater offers x-rated movies and a live nude show.

The lullabies, the comic gems, dramatic lines that capture the spirit of America are heard on Broadway's great White Way

Text And Photographs

By Jerry Raynor

It has had its ups and downs over the decadess — Depression years woes, the coming of talking movies and later television competition, the spread-out of theater action to other areas of New York City and the pull of regional theater — but the mid-Manhattan sector of New York commonly referred to as Broadway still survives. Broadway may be an aging girl — but there's a lot of life left in her yet.

The area of Manhattan loosely encompassing Broadway, 42nd to 47th Streets, Fifth, Sixth and Seventh Avenues, and the Avenue of the Americas, including ever-busy Times Square today remains an irresistible magnet — both to those in theater and the constant stream of dream seekers and visitors.

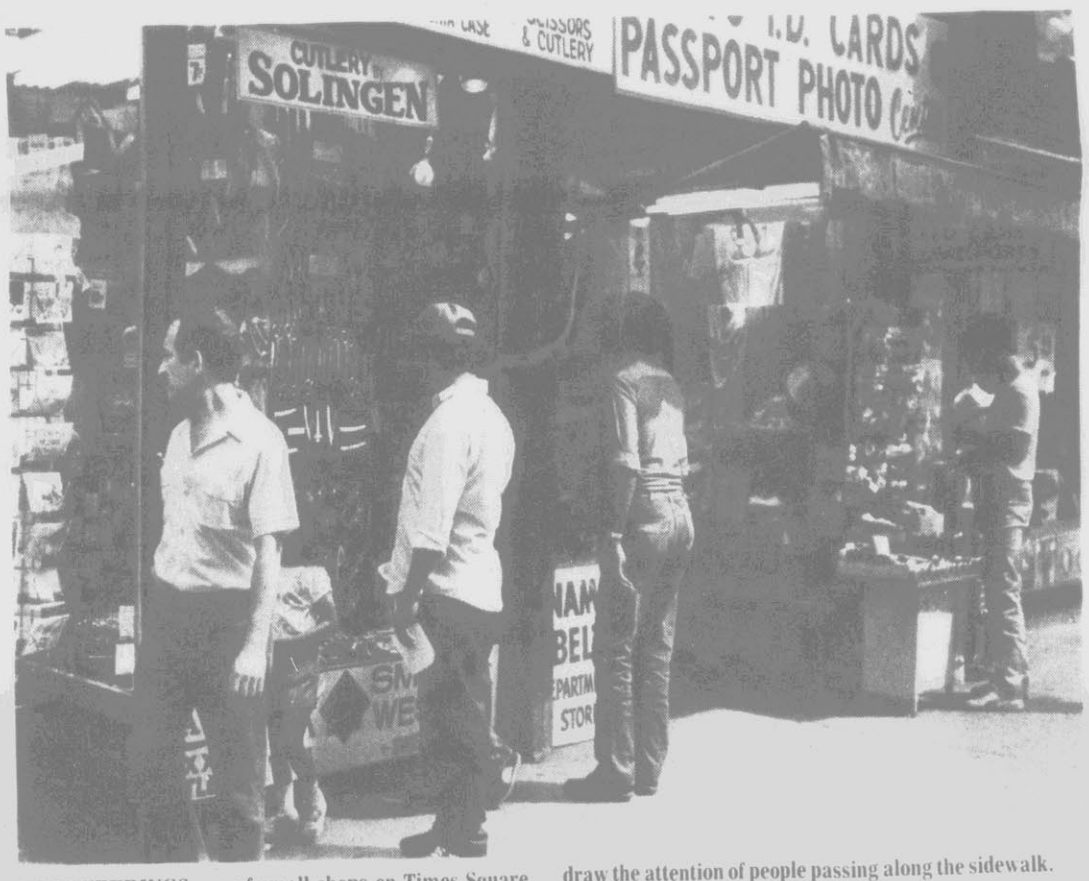

This compact area has witnessed countless scenes of triumph and failures in the entertainment world. The legendary heart of theater in America, Broadway can be a dream come true or a sad finale of failure.

On any given day on the streets around Times Square, a visitor mingling with the throngs along the sidewalks will encounter representatives of dozens of ethnic groups, will see an array of high and low fashion. On one corner, a contingent with a Texas drawl warns passersby to repent, to beware of the evils of the world. Across the street, a trio of black Muslims hand out literature.

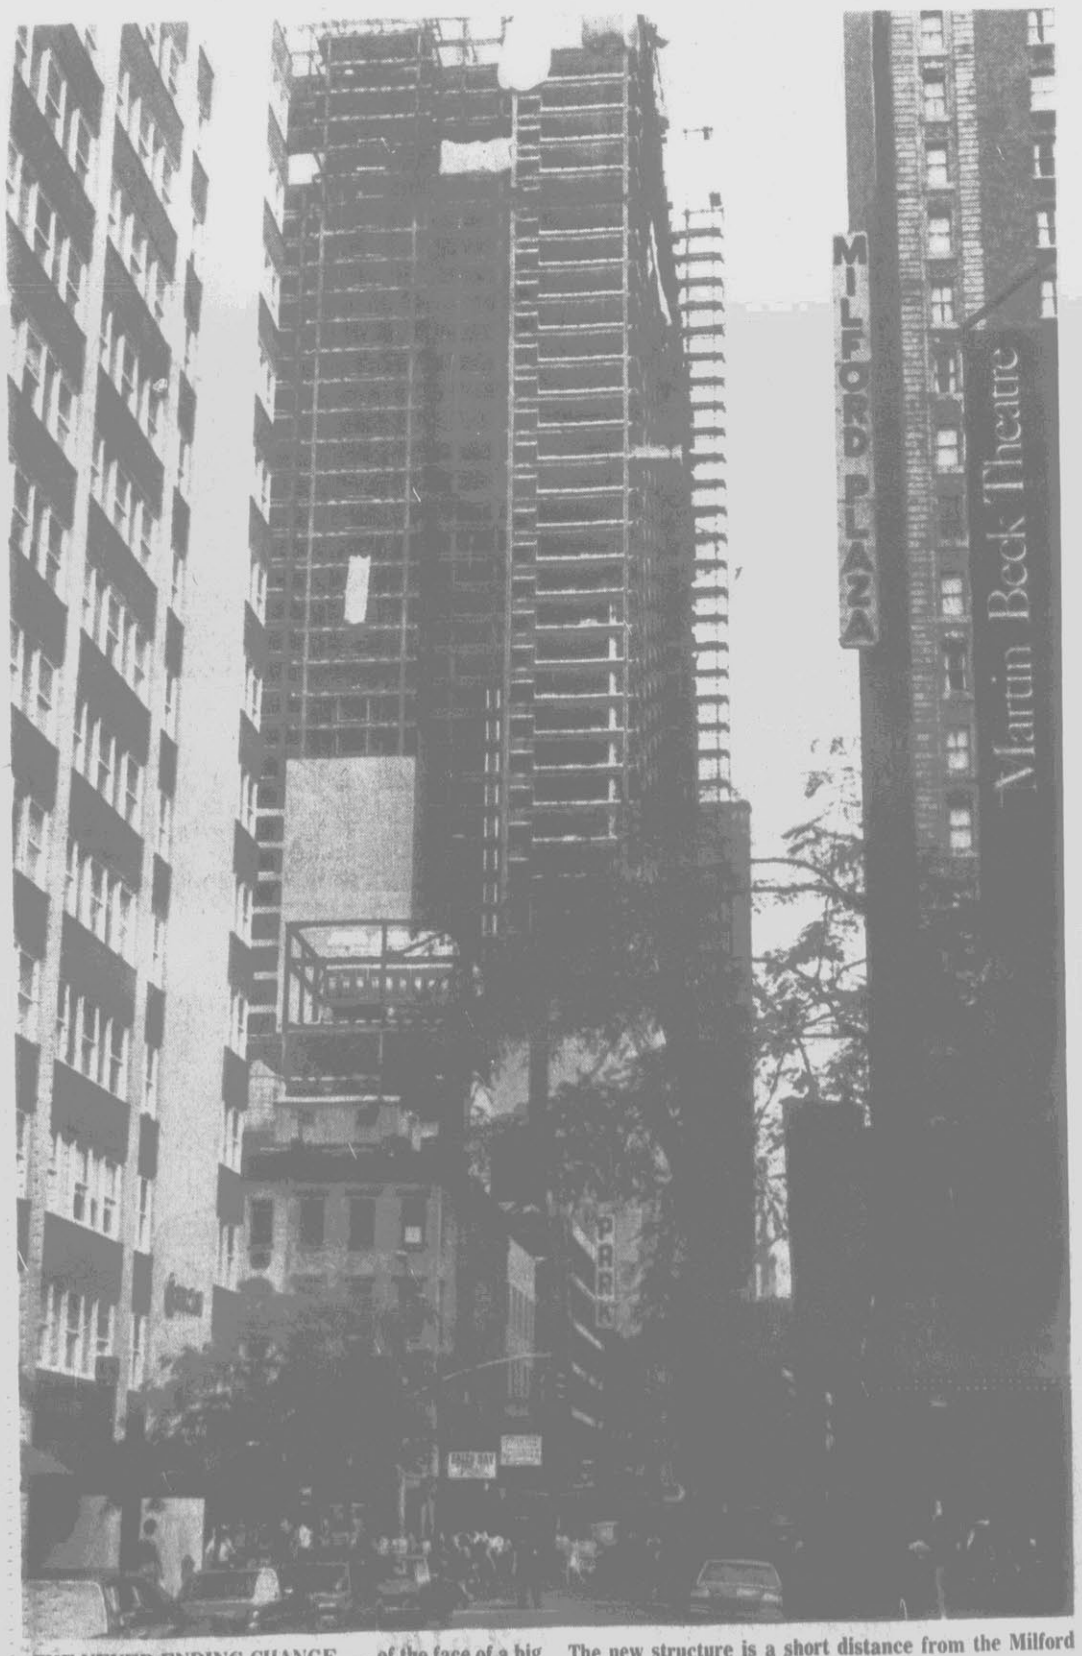

Stylishly gowned women heading for a matinee and young men bedecked in rock 'n roll finery pass to and fro, seemingly oblivious of the presence of each other.

Whatever the status of Broadway today in the overall world of American theater, it still retains much of its charm, its magic as a spot like no other.

THE OFFERINGS . . . of small shops on Times Square — cutlery, belt buckles, name plates, passport photos — draw the attention of people passing along the sidewalk.

THE NEVER-ENDING CHANGE . . . of the face of a big city is reflected in the construction of a new high-rise hotel, the Marquis, one of a chain of Marriott hotels. The new structure is a short distance from the Milford Plaza and the Martin Beck Theater.

PEOPLE EVERYWHERE . . . As in the words of the memorable early 20th century hit tune, "The Sidewalks of New York," people are constantly on parade on the sidewalks of Manhattan — while in the streets, cars, taxis, buses, and delivery carts create an endless medley of motorized motion and vibrant street sounds.

Moisture Makes Difference In Woodworking

By JACK WARNER
United Press International

The woodworker's greatest nemesis — other than himself — is moisture, and trying to follow all the recommended procedures for dealing with it can be nearly impossible.

The general rule is that the wood must be dry enough to work; but how dry is dry enough? It depends on where you live. Dry enough in Atlanta means something much different than dry enough in Tucson.

Generally, you figure the wood is dry enough to work when it has reached what the wood scientists call equilibrium moisture content — EMC. This will vary considerably depending on the area of the country and the nature of the room where the wood is kept, but basically EMC means that the moisture content of the wood has come into balance with the humidity of the place where it is stored, and it won't get any drier until the humidity of the room changes or the wood is moved to a different place.

Most amateur woodworkers have neither the means nor the space to buy and store wood in large quantities. They buy it as they need it, or when they come across something they cannot resist. Nearly all of it is alleged to be kiln dried.

Buying kiln-dried wood, unfortunately, is no specific guarantee of anything. To begin with improper kiln drying can virtually ruin the wood. If it was run through the kiln too quickly, you might find it full of checks and honeycombs when you cut it.

But assuming it was properly dried to a moisture content of, say, 8 percent, that means only one thing — when the kiln operator removed the wood from his kiln, it had a moisture content of 8 percent.

If the wood is not stored in a room where the humidity is controlled to keep it at 8 percent, the moisture content immediately begins to change. So by the time the woodworker buys it, the wood may no longer be anywhere near as dry as it was when it came out of the kiln.

The only practical way to determine the moisture content of a board is to use a moisture meter on it. These can be had as cheaply as about $125, and they are quite accurate. But there are some drawbacks. These meters take their reading through a pair of thin spikes that must be driven into the wood. Not many dealers are going to let you go through their stock putting holes in it, small as they may be.

I don't have one of these meters for the simple reason that there is not much I can do with the information they give me. Through the use of a borrowed meter, I have pretty well satisfied myself that the EMC in my basement, where I store wood and work it, is about 12 percent. That, by the best standards, is too wet to work. But there is nothing I do about it, short of air conditioning or dehumidifying the basement, which is impractical.

The whole issue is further complicated by the question of where the finished piece will go. If I could keep an EMC of 8 percent in my basement, that would be theoretically lovely. But what if I make a piece that winds up in a room that is not air conditioned? The piece will take on considerable moisture in the summer; a good deal more than 8 percent, I would expect.

Central heating and air conditioning, as any antique collector knows, are the bane of old pieces of furniture. These pieces were made a hundred years or more ago, when there were no such conveniences. Pieces of furniture generally stayed in the same geographical area in which they were made, and the humidity of the cabinetmaker's shop was essentially the same as his customer's home. There were no great fluctuations. But the introduction of these old pieces into climate-controlled environments has led to a lot of major cracks that otherwise would never have appeared.

What can a modern woodworker do about this?

—Get your wood from a reputable dealer who stores it in a reasonably dry room.

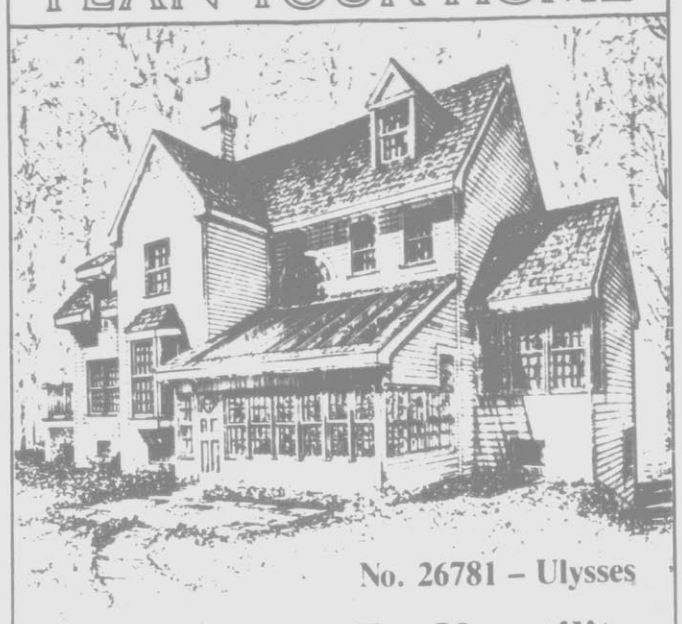

—Keep your own workshop and storage area as dry as you can, assuming you live in an area of humid summers.

—Make sure your construction methods are sound — that solid wood is allowed to move without restriction across the grain.

—Plan ahead — stack thinly resawn wood under a heavy weight for at least four or five days so that it can reach EMC before you mill it.

These precautions will generally see you through.

Many Options For Versatility

by Jerry Bishop

The Ulysses offers versatility and practicality. Many southern windows, including bay, half-round, and dormers capture light and warmth from the winter sun. A fireplace in the family room radiates heat to the adjoining optional den and to the nearby kitchen through a spacious hallway.

To the front of the lower level of the Ulysses are a powder room, dining room and living room for more formal family living or entertaining. An optional

Garden Clinic

Q. Is it safe to can foods without salt? (U.S., Lillington)

A. Yes. In canning, salt is used for flavor only and is not necessary for safe processing.

Q. Can fruits and vegetables be canned without heating if aspirin is used? (D.A., Greensboro)

A. No. Adequate heat treatment is the only safe procedure to prevent spoilage and give satisfactory results.

Q. My green beans have small, black specks on them. The problem is a lot worse than in previous years. I sprayed with Selvin. What could be wrong? (E.B., Kannapolis)

A. It is not possible to tell what your problem is from the desctiption you give. Check with your county agricultural extension agent for an exact diagnosis. Two possibilities are anthracnose (which is caused by a fungus) and a bacterial blight (which is caused by one of several types of bacteria). The symptoms of anthracnose are more noticeable on the bean pods than on the rest of the plant. The symptoms of bacterial blights are usually noticeable on the entire plant, not just on the pods. Anthracnose generally causes larger lesions than bacterial blight. Both anthracnose and bacterial blights thrive in moist, cool conditions. Bacterial blights are difficult to control. Growing the beans in a different spot in the garden each year (crop rotation) will help. Also, purchase disease-free seed or collect seed from plants that are not infected to lessen the chances of passing the disease to next year's crop. Rotating crops, using disease-free seed and collecting seeds from plants that are not infected are also control methods for anthracnose. Anthracnose can also be controlled with the fungicide maneb, which is sold under the trade names Manzate, Dithane and Tersan. Before applying any pesticide, identify what the problem is. Sevin is an insecticide — a pesticide that kills insects. Since the problem you dscribe is probably caused by disease and not insects, spraying with Sevin would not help. Spraying with the wrong pesticide can cause more harm than good.

Common Sense, Basic Guides Help In Choosing Wallpaper

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

You've decided to put up wallpaper, but with so many sample books on the market and wall coverings steadily growing in popularity, the choices can be rather dizzying.

First, she says, research your room. Consider the room's function and the amount of time the family will spend in it. Is it a primary room like a master bedroom or kitchen? Or is it a secondary space, like a guest bathroom that is not used so frequently?

For primary rooms, she recommends colors and patterns that are easy to look at and live with. Save the bold adventurous styles for secondary rooms and passageways.

Next consider color. The entry of the sun into the room is an important consideration when selecting colors. Bold, bright colors tend to become harsh in bright sunlight. Strong contrasts are more effective in dim light.

"Don't decorate a space you haven't lived in — or at least visited at 9 a.m., 12 noon and 3 p.m. on sunny and cloudy days," says Ms. Peterson.

Personal tastes also should influence color selection. Take a look in your closet. If there is no green in the wardrobe, chances are good that you won't be happy with it on your walls.

One more tip: Warm colors tend to bring a wall in and make a room feel warm and cozy. Cool colors give a sense of expansion.

Measuring carefully is the next step. To know how much wallpaper to buy, you have to measure accurately. A good rule of thumb, says Ms. Peterson, is to measure the distance around the room. Treat doors and windows as if they didn't exist and include them in the measurements. Next, measure the height of the room. Then, multiply the distance by the height. Divide the number by 27 to get the number of rolls necessary to do the job, she said.

She advises do-it-yourselfers to order extra wall coverings, allowing for any mistakes or future repairs. Most retailers will give an 80 percent refund on unused rolls, she says. That is a lot less trouble than trying to match dye lots at a later date. However, check the store's policy before you order.

Selecting the right type of wall coverings can provide camouflage for cracked and peeling walls. A vinyl wallpaper in a small-scale overall pattern will draw attention away from the wall's imperfections and it will hold up better in a damp area than paper.

Kitchens, bathrooms and children's rooms also benefit from the use of vinyl products, because they are washable.

Solid vinyl coverings on fabric backing are generally considered the strongest type of wall covering and are often used in commercial areas. Paper-backed vinyl is the next strongest. Vinyl-coated papers are less durable but work well in baths and kitchen areas not subject to heavy-duty use.

Avoid paper in the kitchen, she recommends, because it will absorb grease and show spots.

An appropriate option in living rooms, dining rooms and dens is a textured covering such as grasscloth, linen, cotton or silk. These coverings — laminated to paper — enrich the atmosphere in more formal rooms.

It's tricky to know which type of pattern will work best on your wall. Ms. Peterson says that "generally, large goes with big spaces and small patterns go with small spaces. But there are always exceptions." For example, you might want a big effect in a tiny vestibule. In that case, achieve it with an intense splash of color or a giant pattern.

Here's another decorating tip: overall patterns with lots of coverage — whether light or dark — show less wear. Large open or empty patterns show scratches. For this reason, overall patterns are a good choice for rooms and passages that are heavily trafficked.

Besides studying wallpaper sample books, you can order a three-foot sample-square — it costs about $1.50. Ms. Peterson recommends tacking the square up on the wall at home. Live with it for a few days and see if it goes with the furniture, fabrics and other colors in the room.

Most of us are never really certain whether the energy systems in our houses, both heating and cooling, are performing at maximum efficiency.

What is little known is that you can get the facts about how these systems are acting — in both principal and vacation houses — at little or no cost. There's a fairly recent federal government program under which home energy audits are available through your local utility, free or at a nominal cost, usually $10 or $15. In addition, audits are increasingly being offered by the manufacturers of heating and cooling equipment at no obligation.

The energy specialist begins the audit with a complete inspection of your building from attic to cellar, noting the location and construction of windows and doors; the construction of exterior walls, ceiling, roof and floor surfaces and the building foundation; and the quantity and quality of any existing insulation. Next, a thorough check for energy leaks in windows, doors, foundation, ducts and around air conditioners, as well as an inspection of caulking and weatherstripping, is conducted.

Based on this data, the inspector calculates heat loss from different areas and develops a "plan of attack" for your home. A detailed report, often in the form of a computer printout, suggests where insulation, storm windows, caulking and weatherstripping are needed, and in what quantities. Most auditors will recommend additional improvements, such as restricted-flow showerheads, insulation for your water heater and ducts, thermostats, adjustments to your heating system or new heating equipment.

You'll then receive an estimate for the suggested conservation measures, based on current costs of materials and labor. You can eliminate the latter by doing the work yourself. You'll also get an indication of the payback time for each measure, based on the type of fuel you use, its cost, and how much fuel the improvement is expected to save.

If you are considering switching from an oil furnace to a gas furnace, for example, check with your utility before purchasing a unit. Some utilities have minimum efficiency standards, and will conduct an energy audit on your house to make sure the unit you are planning to buy will operate in accordance with the efficiency standard for your home. The audit will indicate where you should weatherstrip or insulate in order to reach the utility's efficiency standard with the furnace you've chosen.

Before turning you loose, your utility will provide you with a list of contractors who can perform the suggested work. Some will go a step further and act as your "general contractor," collecting bids and arranging for contractors to do the work, and helping to arrange financing through local banks. In some cases, the utility itself will make the loan, allowing you to repay it with your monthly gas or electric bills. The loan may require that you work with contractors participating in the program.

In addition, some utilities offer a free follow-up inspection to check the quality of the work done, and if it's poor, the contractor may have to return and correct it. Some experts advocate an annual reappraisal to see if your fuel costs can be trimmed further with new products or techniques.

Since improvements on your heating and cooling equipment and conservation measures enhance your home's market value, an energy audit is a good investment, and a successful follow-up inspection is an excellent selling point. If you're house-hunting, check out the energy efficiency before you buy.

Opening lead: Jack of ◇.

She was delicate and fragile, obviously used to the better things in life. Yet she would not meet a person's eyes directly, almost as if she wanted to keep anyone from reading hers.

"My story is a sad one," said the Queen of Clubs. "As you can imagine, I am accustomed to being treated with finesse, especially when I'm in the company of the head of our House. I still shudder when I recall an incident that happened some years ago.

"I was in dummy for all to see after my declarer had reached a game in hearts on a normal auction. The player to my right led the top of his diamond sequence, won by my uncle the king. I thought I knew how the play would progress. The declarer would draw trumps and then finesse me. Even if I fell into the clutches of that dreadful man, the King of Clubs, all would not be lost. My declarer could still finesse the nine of spades and, should that drive out one of the two top honors, he would hold his losers to two spades and me.

"Imagine my surprise when, after drawing trumps, my declarer took two more rounds of diamonds, getting rid of my handmaiden, the Two of Clubs. Then, as if he had never heard of a finesse, he crossed to the Ace of Clubs and brutally handed me over to the King of Clubs!

"I remember the horror of it as if it were today. To my surprise, the King of Clubs did not seem delighted with his prize. It seemed that his master was having a bit of a problem. If he returned a minor-suit card, declarer would get a ruff-sluff; if he returned a spade, the defenders could take only two tricks in the suit. Either way, the contract was safe.

"They made a great fuss over me and said that it was only because of my sacrifice the contract was made. But I still don't understand it—after all, that was no way to treat a royal lady!"

Cardinal Visits

CHICAGO (AP) — Cardinal Joseph L. Bernardin intends to tell the Polish people that American Catholics admire their faith and courage during his 10-day visit to Poland, a spokeswoman says.

Bernadin, head of the Archdiocese of Chicago, left for Warsaw Thursday to begin a journey that will include an outdoor Mass in the shrine city of Czestochowa on Aug. 14, the eve of the Assumption, a Catholic holy day.

Sister Joy Clough, a spokeswoman for the cardinal, said Bernardin's trip will roughly follow that taken by Pope John Paul II when he visited Poland in June 1983.

Name Change

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — Upper Volta's recent name change to Bourkina Fasso has presented the U.N. Security Council with a problem.

Upper Volta now holds the council presidency, which rotates monthly on an alphabetical basis. Alphabetically, as Bourkina Fasso, it would hold the presidency again in October after Zimbabwe.

If it is not given the presidency of the 15-member council in October, the African nation might miss the next turn reserved for it as Upper Volta and thus be delayed two months in the rotation.

Gezhouba Dam Is Considered 'Engineering Showpiece'

By JEFF BRADLEY
Associated Press Writer

GEZHOUBA DAM, China (AP) — Bats flutter noisily around the floodlights, welding sparks glow in the distance, and the outlines of giant cranes tower eerily overhead.

At night, the work on Gezhouba Dam on the Yangtze River, the biggest hydroelectric project in China, looks like a scene from "Close Encounters of a Third Kind."

Gezhouba is the first dam ever built on the world's third longest river. It stretches more than a mile from bank to bank.

One-third of China's one billion people live along the Yangtze, which flows 3,900 miles from mountainous Tibet to the fertile rice-growing plains of central China and on to the East China Sea.

Scheduled for completion in 1986, Gezhouba Dam already is generating enough electricity to transform life in the adjacent city of Yichang and surrounding Hubei Province.

In a nation struggling to catch up with the world, the mammoth $2.27 billion undertaking — Chinese-designed and Chinese-built — is heralded by the government as an engineering showpiece.

For the 400,000 residents in the Yichang district, the project has virtually eradicated unemployment, improved housing and brought television and refrigerators into a previously Spartan lifestyle.

"Before the dam, there was electricity from two small power plants, but only in the old city," said newspaper reporter Li Ning, who has followed the project since its inception in 1970. "In the suburbs, people used oil lamps. Now all nine counties in Yichang Prefecture have electricity."

When finished, the dam will produce 14.1 billion kilowatt hours of power a year, more than three times China's entire output when communist rule began in 1949.

By the end of the decade, a 500,000-volt transmission line will carry power to the nation's largest city, Shanghai, 670 miles to the east, easing a serious energy shortage.

Most of the project's 60,000 workers are laborers, earning an average of $27 a month, plus housing and other subsidies.

With the help of imported heavy vehicles, they will have poured 385 million cubic feet of concrete and moved 10 times as much earth and rock by 1986.

The Yangtze was successfully dammed for the first time in history on Jan. 4, 1981, and the coffer dam withstood an early test when the highest floodwater for 80 years stormed through the sluice gates six months later.

Harnessing the river, which carries 80 percent of China's inland waterway traffic, was first envisioned by Mao Tse-tung and Chou En-lai in the 1950s.

Calendar Lists Events Planned For 1984, 85

RALEIGH — To inform northeastern North Carolina residents of the many area quadricentennial events planned for the remainder of 1984 and for 1985, the Historic Albemarle Tour Inc. has prepared a calendar-poster listing those events. The calendar was designed and produced with funds provided by a state northeastern Historic Places Office grant.

The 24- by 30-inch calendar features a silhouette of the Elizabeth II, the wooden sailing ship built in Manteo as a reproduction of the sailing vessels used to bring English colonists to America in the 1580s.

The photograph was taken by Drew C. Wilson, a writer and photographer for The Coastland Times, a newspaper in Manteo. A committee of Historic Albemarle Tour, Inc. site managers headed by Gerald Butler, manager of Historic Bath, compiled the information and designed the calendar-poster.

It is being distributed throughout the 16-county area that makes up the Historic Albemarle Region of North Carolina. Any business or agency wishing to display the poster should contact Susan Hemingway, Historic Albemarle Tour, Inc., P.O. Box 759, Edenton, N.C., 27932, phone 482-7325.

FORECAST FOR MONDAY, AUGUST 13, 1984

GENERAL TENDENCIES: A day when you have a considerable amount of cleverness and resourcefulness to handle whatever problems arise and to reduce the plan of action you considered over the weekend.

ARIES (Mar. 21 to Apr. 19) Private activities can be handled very well today, provided you get the assistance of a bigwig who has your interests at heart.

TAURUS (Apr. 20 to May 20) You have fine friends who can assist you to gain your aims, provided you ask them, and then tonight you can be together for fun.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21) Handle the problematical affairs of a public nature that can arise today, but tonight your home is your best bet.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to Jul. 21) You get fine ideas today and should jot them down so that later you do not forget them.

LEO (Jul. 22 to Aug. 21) Your hunches are good and you can plan your business more intelligently now, so get busy during the daytime. Be subtle.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22) Be sure you know how partners feel about being associated with you, and if there are any complaints, rectify them.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22) A good day to improve your environment so that it becomes more functional and pleasant to be in as well.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21) Know what it is that the one you love expects of you and you can increase happiness of both in the days ahead.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21) Try to get at the root of that tension at home and clear up the matter. Do some entertaining at home.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20) You can comprehend the needs of allies so you can now communicate well with them. Keep your accounts straight.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19) Getting into financial and other practical affairs is most important, and you can add appreciably to assets.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to Mar. 20) You understand what will make you happy so do something about it, and stop delaying. Take it easy tonight.

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY ... he or she can easily comprehend psychic or visionary ideas and then make them workable and practical, so slant the education along lines that require just such a capability. A fine underlying humor in this chart.

THE BEST WAY TO LOOK AT A SAAB IS FROM THE INSIDE OUT.

There's not too much you can put on a sticker these days that other cars don't have.

Disc brakes, rack-and-pinion steering, front-wheel drive. Even a turbo is not so unusual in a certain caliber car.

The difference comes in the way those things work together. The way it feels to accelerate, for instance. To take a sharp curve. To stop.

Obviously, the only way to discover this difference is to take a test drive. So a Saab salesman's pitch needs little more than one sentence: "Let's go for a ride."

Pitt's Labor Rate Holds Steady

Preliminary civilian labor force estimates recently released for June 1984 indicate the jobless rate in Pitt County remains at 5.8 percent, the same as the May figure.

This compares to a June 1983 unemployment rate of 9.3 percent. The 6.2 percent unemployment rate for North Carolina reflected an increase of .4 of one percentage point over the May rate of 5.8 percent. This slight increase statewide was due to the seasonal entry and re-entry of job seekers into the labor market.

Total employment in Pitt County showed an increase from the May figure of 46,480 to the June total of 46,770. The total employment figure for North Carolina for June was 2,885,400.

While the civilian labor force for the county rose, so did the employment figure, which along with seasonal factors helped keep the employment rate constant. It appears that there have been jobs available for the job seekers who have entered the labor force.

"We are delighted that Pitt County has enjoyed a 94.2 percent employment figure for the third consecutive month," stated Jim Hannan, manager of the Greenville Job Service office.

Old Healing Art Being Kept Alive

By RON HOWELL
Associated Press Writer

MEXICO CITY (AP) — A national medical school here is keeping alive the 200-year-old healing art called homeopathy, which has been spurned for decades by the medical establishment in the United States.

The National School of Medicine and Homeopathy is the only state-sponsored school in the world where homeopathy is taught side-by-side with surgery and other standard clinical techniques, Dr. Roberto Chavez Oloquin, the school's director, said in an interview.

"Here in Mexico we have a tradition of herbal healing," Emilio Ygartua, spokesman for the Mexican Health Department, said. Herbal healing is still practiced by Indian groups here, and Ygartua said "that has made it easier for this type of medicine to continue developing."

Homeopathy takes its name from the Greek words meaning "similar" and "suffering," and practitioners of the art often repeat the standard aphorism, "Like cures like."

If a patient is nervous, on edge and hopelessly addicted to cigarettes, the cure according to this theory would be tobacco.

"We would give him tobacco in very small dilutions, prepared according to homeopathic rules," Dr. Ester Valero, head of the clinic at the national homeopathic school, said.

"It would take away the nervousness and within three months it would take away his need to smoke."

Among the array of substances used to make homeopathic medicines are bees, spiders, marijuana, ants, flowers and snake venom.

Ninety years ago, there were some 10,000 homeopaths and two dozen homeopathic medical schools in the United States, according to Sumter Brawley, executive director of the National Center for Homeopathy in Washington, D.C.

Today, no American medical school teaches homeopathy. And only some 300 doctors, nurses and other health professionals are registered with the center as homeopaths, having taken courses offered by the center or other homeopathic groups, Brawley said in a telephone interview.

In contrast, Ygartua estimated that in Mexico 15 percent of the people using Health Department clinics choose homeopathic doctors.

"My mother had cancer and was cured by a homeopath who used nothing but homeopathic medicines," Efrain Junco Olvera, a second-year student at the National School of Homeopathy, said.

Junco, 22, said his mother's experience led him to attend the school of homeopathy, rather than a traditional medical school.

The school accepts students by competitive exam, and then puts them through seven years of classroom and clinical work before they graduate as homeopath-surgeons. Graduates can set up a private practice or work at Health Department or Mexico City government clinics and hospitals.

Two other government departments that run public hospitals and clinics do not offer homeopathic treatment.

Homeopaths say their basic medicines were tested and proven effective by Samuel Hahnemann, the German physician and chemist who developed the like-cures-like system in the late 1700s.

The key to homeopathic treatment, practitioners say, is the use of extremely small doses that stimulate the body's defense mechanism.

Opposition To Coastal Regulation Is Fading

By DENNIS PATTERSON
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — When the Coastal Area Management Act was approved by the North Carolina General Assembly in 1974, it brought howls of protest from developers and landowners who saw it as an attack on private property rights.

In 10 years, much of that opposition has died, local officials say, and the act has helped protect the environment without clamping a lid on booming coastal development.

But among developers, the act is still a sticking point, a thorn in the side they say is just another level of bureaucratic inefficiency and paperwork.

Court challenges to the act produced rulings that the state had the right to regulate development of the delicate environment along the coast, an area that had seen a 300 percent growth in population between 1960 and 1973.

When CAMA was approved, only four counties and seven towns in the 20-county coastal area had land use plans that dealt with housing density, water and sewer lines and other development issues.

The act created the Coastal Resources Commission, a 15-member board appointed by the governor that conducts public hearings on signifigant coastal development and administers regulations under the act.

One of its first acts was to set a 1976 deadline for all 20 counties, or any towns within each county, to develop local land use plans. All but Carteret County met the deadline and Carteret later approved a plan.

Morehead City Mayor Bud Dixon said much of the early opposition to CAMA in the county has died down.

"When it first started, a lot of people were upset," Dixon said. "But it's turned out to be a great thing for us. We certainly will benefit from it. We don't hear much about it anymore."

Dixon, who came to Morehead City in 1946, said he remembered the days when development was completely unregulated. Marshes were filled in, canals dug and trailer parks established with no guidelines.

"You can see such a difference now," Dixon said. "There's development, but it's planned development."

Tom Singleton, an Emerald Isle builder, said he agreed with the intent of CAMA, but not with its performance.

"The intention of the act couldn't be any finer," Singleton said. "Saving the environment is important, but through the years, CAMA has just been a complete bureaucracy.

"I haven't really seen them achieve much. I think the intentions could have been handled better by informed local people. Local people were handling it 10 years ago and doing quite well."

Singleton said confusion over development responsibility had led to the destruction of at least one large tract.

"I know of one 20-acre tract that was destroyed because CAMA thought the town of Emerald Isle had the authority and Emerald Isle thought CAMA had the authority and the county thought somebody else had it," Singleton said. "And the bulldozers scraped and tore, and didn't leave a single tree standing."

Kathy Henderson of the Office of Coastal Management said some resentment still lingers over CAMA and land use planning, but most people see the need for regulated development, particularly considering the coastal building boom of the last 10 years.

"Without CAMA there would probably be little saltwater marsh left," she said. "There was a time when developers thought nothing of filling in a swamp to build houses, but those sort of episodes just don't happen anymore."

The marshes, which are breeding grounds for fish and shellfish, are now recognized as a critical part of the state's commercial fishing industry.

"The attitude toward estuaries and wetlands has completely changed," said David Owens, director of OCM. "Now people realize that without a healthy estuarine system there would be no fishing industry. That requires maintaining water quality as well as the actual marshes, tidal flats and seagrass beds."

Owens said CAMA also has prevented the wholesale leveling of sand dunes for housing development along the coast. The destruction of dunes has been blamed in some areas for galloping erosion that now threatens beachfront buildings.

"There was a time when people didn't know much about the oceanfront," Owens said. "They knew the beaches were dynamic, but did not recognize the importance of the primary dune system in protecting the buildings behind it.

"Today, people know that the dunes are a vital part of the barrier island ecosystem and must not be trampled or weakened if they are to continue protecting buildings."

The town of Pine Knoll Shores has existed 10 years, the same period as CAMA, but used the act as a foundation for even more stringent development requirements.

"We advocate CAMA and are maybe peculiar because we feel that way," said Town Clerk Corinne Geer. "We have tried so desperately to preserve what we find so attractive here.

"Our regulations are generally more restrictive than theirs (OCR). Our town has a lot of talented people who have watched other coastal areas destroyed. We don't want that to happen here."

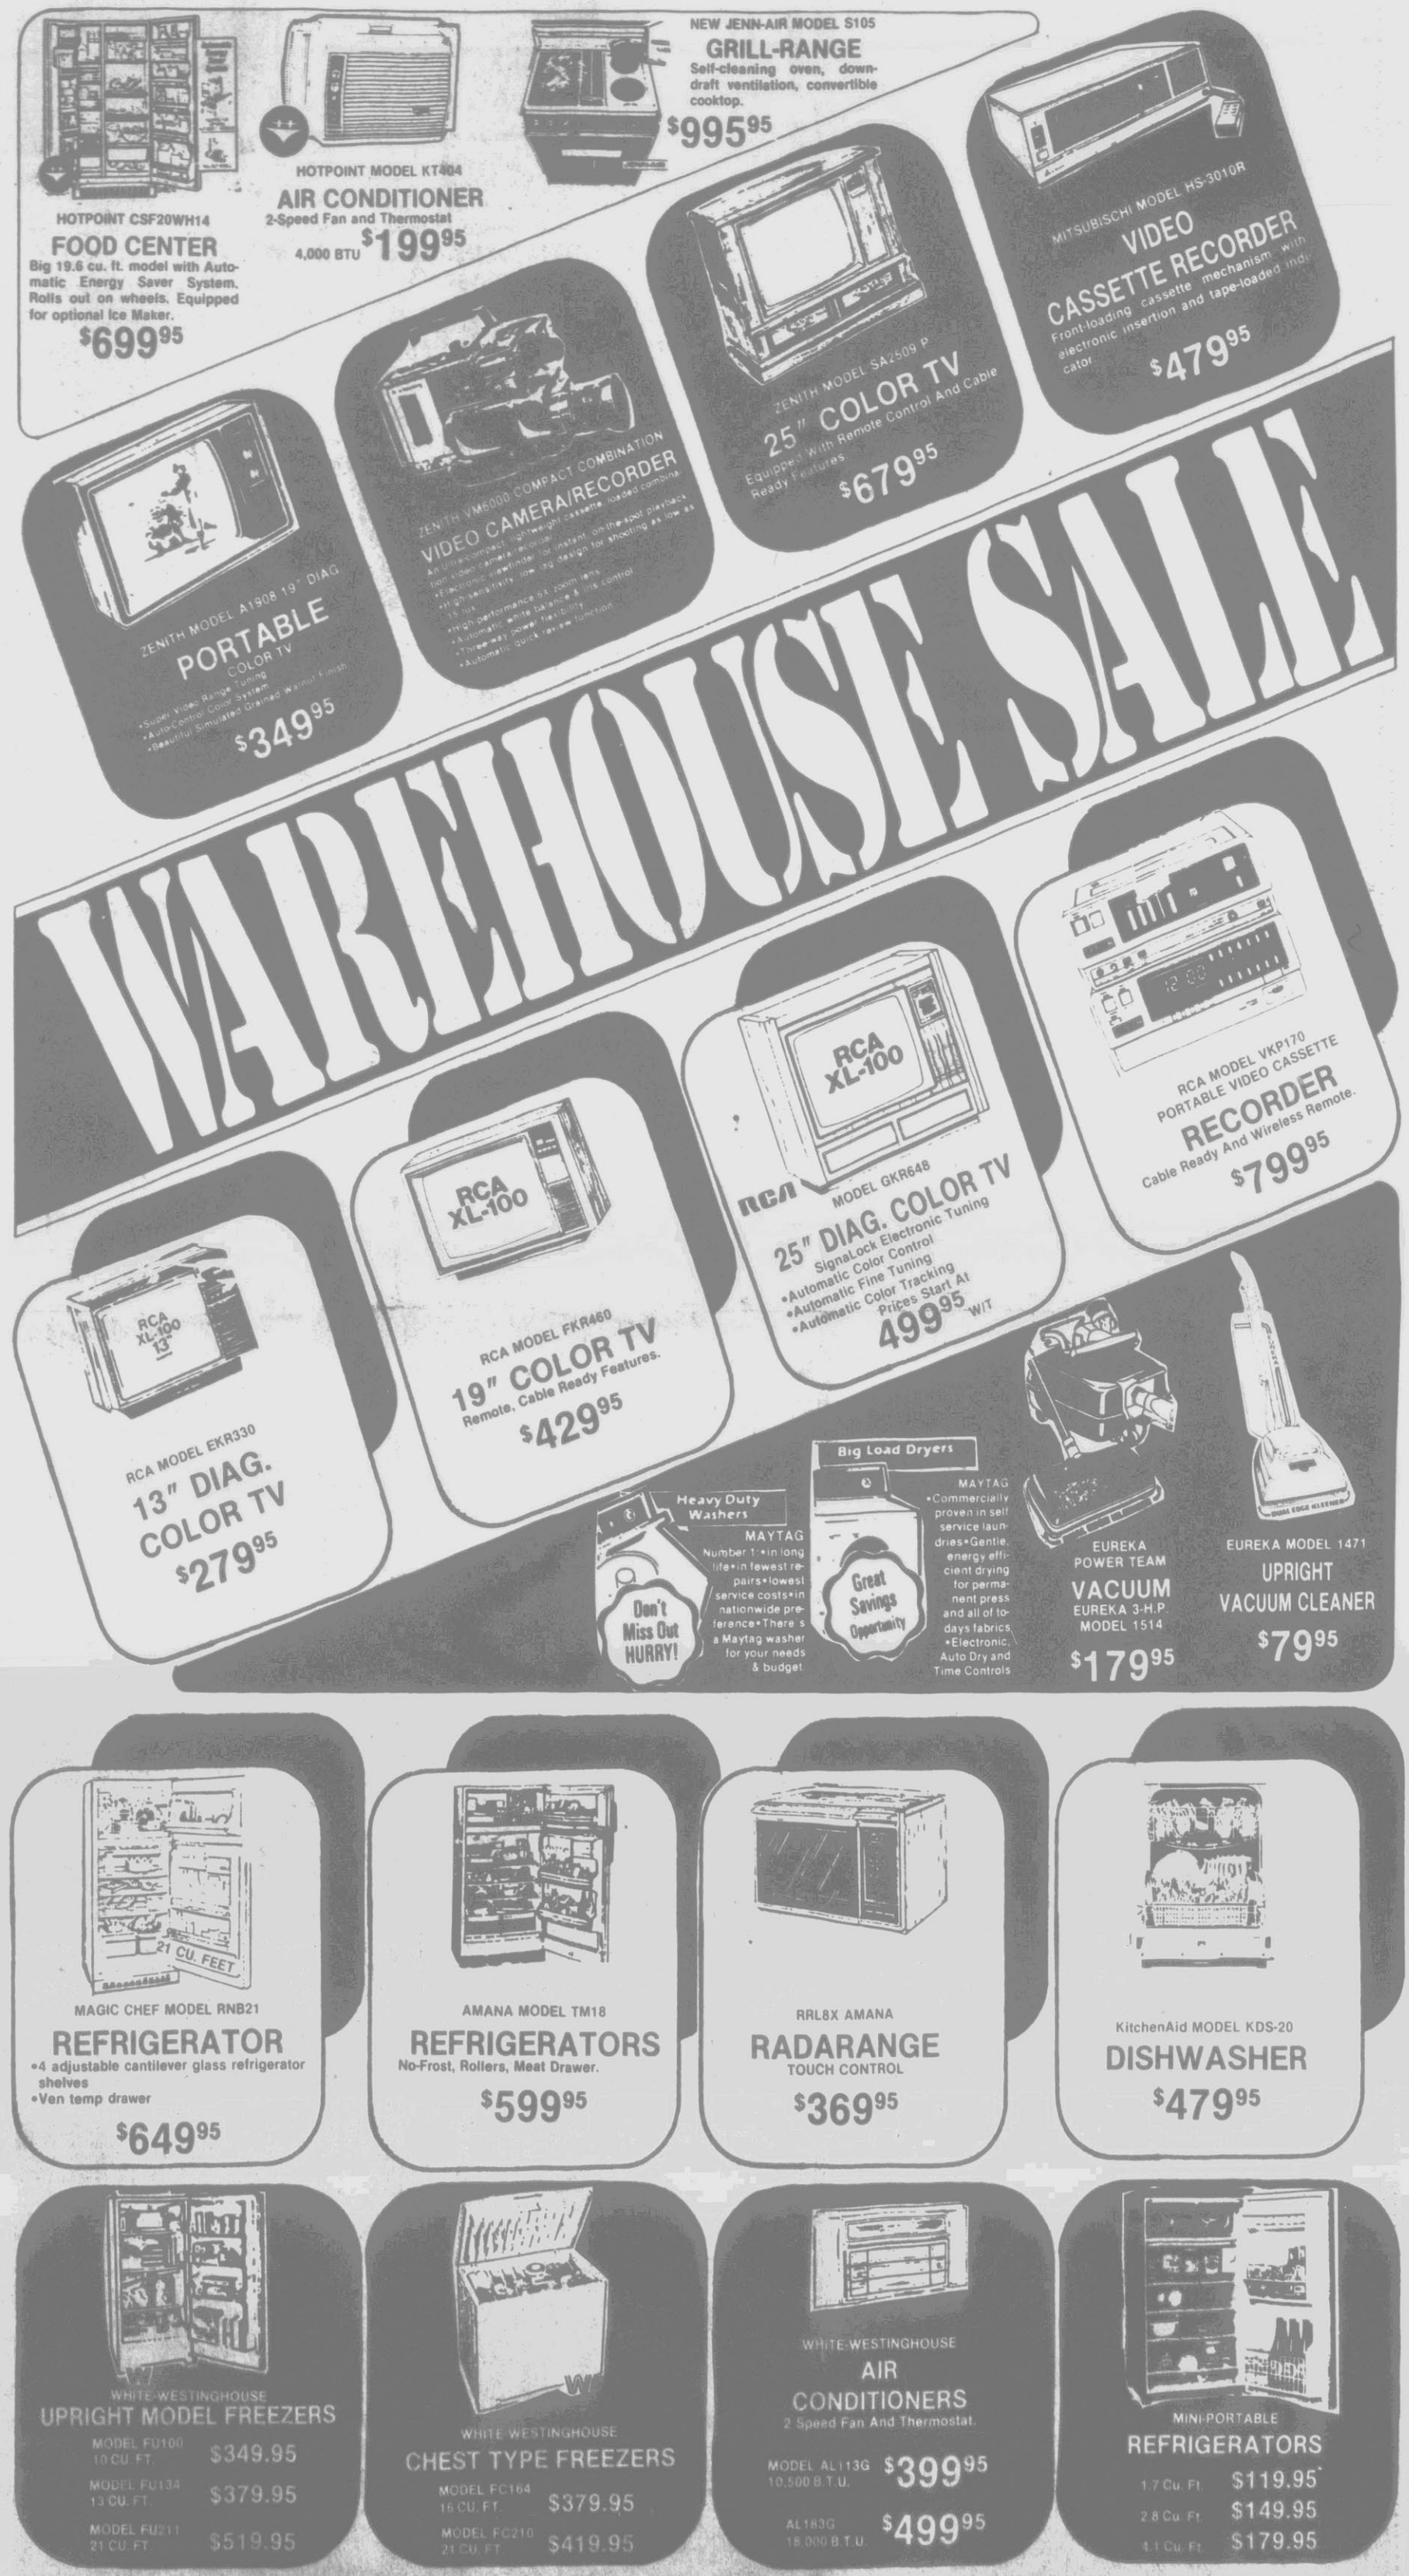

Dr. Parker Chesson, chairman of the Coastal Resources Commission, said CAMA has not stopped development and was never intended to stop it. But he said it has made development come to grips with the environment.

Part of that understanding, he said, will involve adapting to coastline erosion, a serious problem in the northern part of the Outer Banks.

"I think development is going to have to take into account erosion," he said. "We've put in the setback requirement, which has raised some controversy, but all we've really done is pushed back in time the confrontation between development and the ocean.

"Somehow, we have to get people to realize that development is going to have to move as the ocean moves. You can not hold back the ocean."

Louisiana Prison Has Inmate Band

PONCHATOULA, La. (AP) — A governor named them The Chain Links but musicians in the Hunt Prison band dream of becoming a free-man band with lucrative gigs and recording sessions.

"We'll call ourselves The Changed Links," said Robert Thibodeaux, who drew six years for possession of stolen property.

Thibodeaux might have been free already, having served his time, but he asked the prison to delay the paper work so he could attend a recording session at Gold Meyn Records' studio in Ponchatoula.

The band is headed by Herbert "Slick" Brown, a New Orleans musician with a diplomat's touch. He maintains personnel at six blacks, six whites.

"The (inmate) population likes it that way," said Brown. "I did it on purpose. If I need a country vocalist or a Top 40 I want someone who can do it well. I sing soul. I have young, I have old. It keeps the population satisfied."

On the country side is L. B. Davis, 45, serving seven years for simple burglary. He writes country songs, sings and plays guitar.

Never in his wildest dreams could Davis have believed that one day he would strum guitar and sing in what is considered the "official" National Association for the Advancement of Colored People's band at Hunt.

On the other hand, black musicians in the group probably never thought they would play country western music.

The band decided it was the official NAACP band after it was twice sent to play at the NAACP family day rally at Baton Rouge.

Usually, they get out to perform about twice a month. Warden John Whitley said they would be gone every day if he accepted every invitation for the band to come play.

"We try to keep it to public functions," he said.

All this traces back to Denny Barberio, who once tried to make a living playing music in motel lounges but now is a State Department of Education teacher. He works with prisoners afflicted with learning disabilities or behavior disorders, or both.

The Chain Links, who got their name from former governor David Treen when they played a barbeque at the mansion, got started with Barberio's personal equipment.

Barberio moved off to another prison facility for awhile, leaving the fledgling band with Slick Brown.

"When I went back to Hunt I couldn't believe how far they had come," he said.

Barr and most members of the band say Brown, who is serving 25 years for armed robbery, keeps the band going. He handles arranging, producing, writes songs, plays saxophone, keyboards and is backup percussionist.

The band is recording a single. One side has one of Brown's songs, "You've Changed My Life." On the flip side, one of Davis' creations: "Haven Where Losers Hide."

The recording session cost about $1,000. The money was chipped in by band members and other prisoners at Hunt.

"A lot of the guys bleed (sell blood)," Brown said. "A lot of the guys have crafts."

"We feel like we are accomplishing something," he added. "We could be lying in the institution doing dead time. This record could mean jobs for us when we get out."

Black Bus Driver Set Precedent

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — In 1955, Rosa Parks aroused the ire of Southern whites by refusing to sit in the back of a Montgomery, Ala., city bus.

Eight years later, Albert Mynatt not only was able to sit in the front of a Knoxville bus, but was allowed to drive one.

"I guess I did feel like I was breaking ground. As long as I had been at K-Trans, they had never had a black man on the road," said Mynatt, his eyes lighting up with pride.

"Knoxville always had segregated seating. They'd ask you to move on back."

Today, 20 of 91 K-Trans drivers are black.

Mynatt began working for K-Trans in April, 1942. From then until 1963, he worked nights, setting up brakes and doing basically whatever needed to be done to keep Knoxville's buses and electric coaches rolling.

In 1963, President John F. Kennedy formed the legislation that eventually became the Civil Rights Act of 1964.

"(A supervisor) sent letters to three of us in 1963 to have a meeting," he said.

"He suggested we start training in three days. I finished my training first. The passengers had no problems. The supervisor said some of them wouldn't like it, but that was just the way it was."

Apparently no one had trouble with the K-Trans decision to let blacks drive its buses.

"The passengers took it pretty well," said George Chauvin, K-Trans supervisor of transportation. "Back then, you'd start at 5 in the morning and work until midnight. It was long hours and low pay — for everybody."

"At first, I was apprehensive, but it went so well that first week that I felt fine about it from then on out," she said.

Mynatt said conditions for blacks now are better than they were when he started work.

"Knoxville's always been liberal with its work ... I believe if a man's qualified to do work, he should get the job. It don't matter about black, white and race. I think there's a job for everyone," he said.

In addition to breaking the color barrier, Mynatt also has one of the best safety records in K-Trans history.

"To be a safe driver, you have to be cautious at all times. It only takes a split second for an accident to happen. It's a challenge, a pleasure. You make it that way," he said.

Mynatt called his 42 years with K-Trans "rough but wonderful."

He witnessed the demise of the streetcar in the late 1940s and the increased use of buses in the early 1950s.

Mynatt used his driving time to think and develop a philosophy for living.

"It don't take money to make you what you are," he said. "Take it one step at a time. Don't overdo it. Because you make a nickel more, you always want $100 more of somethin' else."

Inmates Repair Cars

MODESTO, Calif. (AP) — Fixing up bent and tattered auto bodies is teaching Stanislaus County honor farm inmates skills that authorities hope will keep them from getting into trouble again.

The premise is that prisoners are less likely to commit crimes if they have the ability to acquire and hold a job.

"If a guy's got a job, money in the bank and a place to stay by the time he gets out of here, there's that much less chance of him ever coming back," said instructor Chuck Dulaire, a former auto body shop owner.

The inmate-students fix banged-up county vehicles for about 25 percent of the cost of having the work done at a commercial garage, Dulaire said.

Some vehicles wouldn't have been worth repairing at commercial prices, added Sheriff's Lt. Jim Scott, the honor farm's commander, who obtained federal job-training funds to finance the project.

As inmates learn enough repair skills to get a job, they are placed with businesses through a job-placement program and spend the rest of their jail time on outside jobs, returning to the honor farm at night.

Auto repair shop owners such as Richard Kirk, who hire inmates, get tax credits and are reimbursed 60 percent of an inmate's salary for six months.

He fired the first for drinking but has had success with the other two, Larry Nalley, 37, and Duane Smith, 24. Both are serving terms for repeat drunken-driving offenses.

"I've never had any ambition to settle down and do well in a job," said Nalley, a Napa County resident with a history of convictions dating back to age 21. "I like working with cars, working with my hands and being creative. Now I can do all that at one place and make a little money at it.

"I really feel this will be my last time in jail."

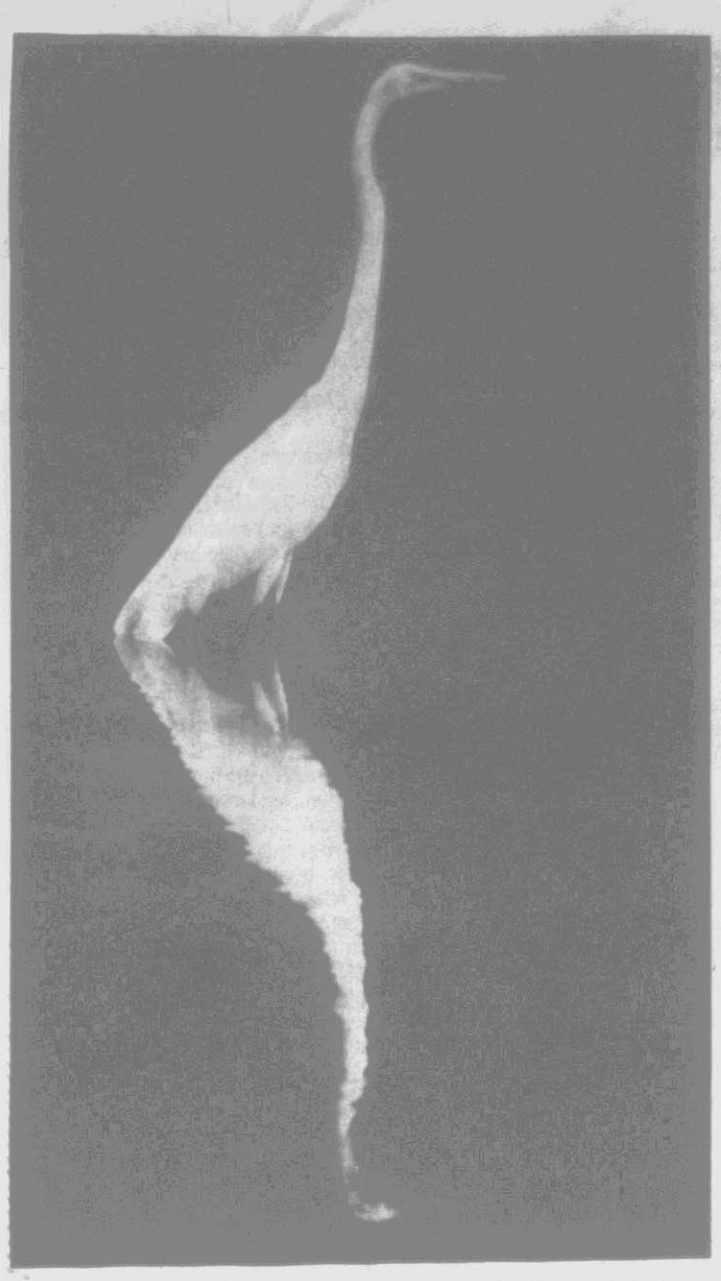

Smith said he entered the program because "I wanted to work and I wanted to learn something new."

He also participates in an alcohol treatment program and plans to take computer technology classes at Modesto Junior College as well as work for Kirk when his jail time is completed.

Cancer Victim Says Diet Saved His Life

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — "I feel like I'm terribly obligated to help others. I feel a great weight," said Norman Arnold. "I want so badly to help other people, but I don't want to go too far and sound like an oracle, because I'm not.

"All I know is what happened to me."

What happened was that Arnold was supposed to die and he didn't. Two years ago the Columbia businessman had cancer. Today he says he doesn't.

Doctors discovered during a routine gall bladder operation in July 1982 that Arnold had pancreatic cancer, as well as diseased tissue on his liver. He was told he had between six and nine months to live.

Two weeks later, Michio Kushi told Arnold, "You can recover."

While in the hospital, Arnold read a story about a doctor who apparently had reversed his own cancer after going on a diet of whole grain, vegetables, soup, sea vegetables, beans, fruit and soy products.

Arnold and his wife, Gerry Sue, arranged for a macrobiotic cooking instructor to come to their house as soon as Arnold was out of the hospital. Arnold continued to read about macrobiotics, then flew to Boston to meet Kushi.

"When he said, 'You can recover,' it was an exciting thing for me," said Arnold, who has since become a member of the board of trustees of the non-profit Kushi Foundation.

Being confident that the diet will work helps, he said, and he was somewhat skeptical at first. He asked a lawyer to investigate other stories about people who had recovered from cancer with the help of macrobiotics.

"He found people who had been given up by traditional medical treatment who had recovered very well," Arnold said. "I spoke to some of these people. There was a minister and an airline pilot who was up fixing his roof when I called. That kind of confidence helped me when I was so low and so full of despair."

Mrs. Arnold learned how to cook the macrobiotic way, and the whole family, including the Arnold's three sons, went on the diet. The children never complained that the food was "yucky," Mrs. Arnold said.

"When you're cooking for a cancer patient or any particular illness, it's like nursing," she said. "But now it's part of our life. It's just our normal way of eating."

In the meantime, Arnold went ahead with five of his 60 proposed chemotherapy treatments. He credits macrobiotics with lessening the side effects of chemotherapy. In September 1982 he was given antibodies from a mouse in which a tumor had been induced. The treatment is intended to strengthen the patient's immune system and is known as a "mouse monoclonial antibody" treatment.

"I think it is probably one of the most important future treatments of cancer," Arnold said. "But I'm one of the few who have had any longevity following it. I don't know if it's that or macrobiotics. It may be some combination that was helpful."

Although macrobiotics does say patients should get some exercise, it isn't stressed the way Arnold thinks it should be. "A person recovering from an illness must have exercise. Part of the diet is to help get rid of toxins in the system. Cancer cells can grow and flourish in a stagnant environment. The more exercise they can tolerate and the more they can do, the more they should do."

Arnold said he underwent a CAT scan in December that showed no sign of cancer.

The National Cancer Institute has released guidelines specifying that consumption of fruit, vegetables and wholegrain products has been associated with reduced risk of colon, mouth and throat cancers and that a low intake of fats reduces the risk of breast and colon cancer.

While studies are under way on the relationship between diet and cancer development, the American Cancer Society says that "scientific evidence is not firm enough to make unequivocal dietary recommendations in regard to cancer prevention."

In a statement on unproven methods of cancer management relating to macrobiotic diets, the society says it "would strongly urge individuals afflicted with cancer not to participate in treatment with macrobiotic diets" and warns that the more restrictive macrobiotic diets pose a serious hazard to health because they fail to meet all nutritional needs.

Evidence that macrobiotic diets are effective in cancer treatment consists only of "testimonials," and because Kushi considers conventional treatments such as radiation and chemotherapy as toxic, patients may be "needlessly discouraged" from getting such treatment, the cancer society statement says.

"We know I was ill with a life-threatening illness. We know the chemotherapy didn't do it. It could not have been effective (after only five treatments). The monoclonial antibody, while very good for the future, is not very effective yet.

"Positive thinking was a good adjunct, and the exercise program was important. If you do it that way (point by point), the vast majority of the logic points to macrobiotics.

Only 25 percent to 30 percent of the people who get involved with macrobiotics experience "real positive results," Arnold said. But he adds that the diet's success rate is better than chemotherapy's.

There are two reasons why macrobiotics isn't always successful, he said. Either people don't stay with the diet, or they turn to it as a last resort and their bodies, already irradiated or filled with toxic chemicals, are too weak.

Arnold said he considers macrobiotics not just a diet but a lifestyle.

"You try to become more peaceful and in balance with the environment. You do work toward this, and the food helps.

Mafia Loses Ground To New Groups

By RICK HAMPSON
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — For 50 years this has been the mob's capital, the city where Al Capone was born and Albert Anastasia was gunned down in a barber's chair. It was home to Lucky Luciano, who oranized the mob, Meyer Lansky, who financed it, and Joe Valachi, who exposed it.

But today, organized crime's loosening grip on the underworld is charted by the map of ethnic New York: Colombians in Jackson Heights, Cubans on the Upper West Side, blacks in Harlem, Russians in Brighton Beach, Chinese in Chinatown.

The pattern extends across the nation with Arab heroin smugglers in Detroit, Vietnamese extortionists in southern California and Japanese racketeers in Honolulu.

Hungry for their share of the nation's organized crime market, estimated this year by the President's Organized Crime Commission at $84 billion, some of these groups are taking over traditional mob rackets such as gambling, narcotics and prostitution.

In his office, however, the mug shots belong to men the Colombians have pushed off the front page: "Big Paul" Castellano, under indictment for racketeering; Philip Rastelli, paroled after six years in prison; Carmine Persico, serving a five-year prison term.

The mob is not a national army of hit men with a monopoly on organized crime, but rather a loose association of local entrepreneurs who rely far more on intimidation, corruption and mediation than on murder.

Forged in Prohibition bootlegging wars and nurtured by law enforcement neglect after World War II, the American Mafia is singular in name only. "The mob" is really about 25 mobs, called families, located in larger Northeastern and Midwestern cities.

Since 1957, when police raided a national meeting of mob leaders in Appalachin, N.Y., fragmented and misunderstood police intelligence has been used to depict the mob as a national, centrally directed organization, a sort of Sears, Roebuck & Co. of organized crime.

That legend has been exploited by politicians for votes, by police for funds and by gangsters for intimidation. But in dozens of interviews, investigators, prosecutors and researchers described the Mafia less like Sears than a Rotary club.

The FBI says the nation's Mafia families have about 1,700 "made" members, men of Italian descent who have taken oaths of silence and obedience and have done a favor for the family, such as murder.

President Reagan has pledged to "break the power of the mob in America," and the government says its latest war on its leaders will destabilize their families and undermine its aura of invincibility.

Joseph Bonanno, 78, the last surviving founder of one of New York's five families, is serving his first prison term, as is Carlos Marcello, 74, boss of New Orleans for 37 years. The government has imprisoned whole echelons of the mob hierarchy in Kansas City, Cleveland and Los Angeles, and indicted at least one leader in virtually every family.

Mob leaders "are getting jittery," said Patrick Healy of the Chicago Crime Commission. "They don't take chances anymore. If they even think a guy might talk (to investigators), they take him out."

Six of the 10 men rated by police as the top leaders of New York's five mob families are over 70. The eight men ranked by the Chicago Crime Commission as that city's top mobsters have an average age over 70. Only about 10 of the 250 members of New York's Gambino family, reputedly the Mafia's largest, are under 50.

And tough, hard, disciplined new members are getting hard to find. The urban neighborhoods from which they were recruited changed, their families moved to suburbs and the sons got better education and jobs.

Columbia University anthropologist Francis Ianni studied a smaller Mafia family with the help of several family members who insisted he change names. He found that only four of 27 fourth-generation men had gone into crime; most had gone to college and many into professions.

He also found that the $30 million family business was gradually increasing legal operations, such as a nationally known Italian food company and bakery chain, and leaving or being forced out of illegal ones, including gambling and loan sharking.

The experience of the Lupollos, as Ianni calls the family, shows that while mobsters can corrupt legitimate businesses, ownership of such businesses can have a legitimizing influence on mobsters.

"All of a sudden they have this valuable asset that they don't want to lose," says Ronald Goldstock, head of the New York State Organized Crime Task Force. "They tend to become more conservative."

Meanwhile, the dirty work — the pushing, the hustling, the killing — is being assumed by those on the next rung of what sociologist Daniel Bell called the "queer ladder" of social mobility.

In cities such as Buffalo, Newark, Miami and New York, gangsters from disadvantaged ethnic groups have taken over Mafia rackets, sometimes by arrangement with the mob, sometimes by force.

Black gangsters extort money from white numbers bankers in southwest Philadelphia and dominate the drug traffic on Chicago's South Side, according to local crime commissions. In New York, police estimate that more than a fourth of Mafia gambling operations have been taken over by Hispanics or blacks.

The Mafia has been beaten into immensely profitable new areas such as marijuana and cocaine. Many of the new crime groqps "are organizing and control up to 75 percent of the nation's methamphetamine traffic," the Drug Enforcement Administration says.

Even the booming heroin trade is not controlled by American mobsters. Most of the dealers are Sicilians, "independent operators who form coalitions," said Reena Raggi, a federal narcotics prosecutor in Brooklyn. "Their links tend to be more with Sicilian (Mafia) families than the traditional families here."

The transfer of criminal power has been almost bloodless, indicating how outmuscled the mob really is. In Philadelphia, the older faction of the warring Mafia family has resorted to using members of the Pagans motorcycle gang as bodyguards.

The Mafia is no longer the most terrifying name in crime. In 1982, Colombian drug dealer Orlando Galvez — an informer — and his wife and two children were shot to death in their car on a highway in Queens.

Although the killers never were caught, authorities said they undoubtedly were members of a rival Colombian gang.

"The Mafia might murder a suspected informer, but the Colombians might also murder his wife and children," said Bruce Jensen of the DEA.

Just as the Mafia has lost control of the street, it has lost police protection: in cities like New York, following police reform; like Newark, where the white political machine was voted out of office; like Union City, N.J., where corrupt officials were prosecuted.

That, said Lt. Frederick Martens of the New Jersey State Police, explains the demise of the Mafia's vice monopoly. The mob's real strength, he said, is not muscle — the armies of enforcers disappeared with Prohibition — but its ability to corrupt police and public officials to arrest or harass competitors.

Economic power often renders violence unnecessary. A New York restaurant owner accepted coin-operated video games that he didn't want from one mob-controlled distributor, because he knew that otherwise he wouldn't get cigarettes from another mob-run firm.

By controlling some labor unions and businesses, mobsters are often able to fix prices, rig bids, extort kickbacks and dodge taxes — practices not unheard of in ostensibly legitimate businesses.

In this twilight zone, a reputed mobster like Carmine "The Doctor" Lombardozzi, who used a Brooklyn Kiwanis club as a front for loansharking, mingles with and is sometimes indistinguishable from a politician open to a bribe or a businessman in quest of labor peace.

"These are the guys who make organized crime go," says Edward McDonald, head of the federal Organized Crime Strike Force in Brooklyn. "It's all more complex than just the Mafia. Some legitimate businessmen went into bed with organized crime all the time."

Archivists Study Southern Indians

By RON HARRIST
Associated Press Writer

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — Their women owned property and participated in government and they lived in cabins, grew corn and other crops and used horses to bear the spoils of the hunt rather than of combat. They were the native Americans who once inhabited the Southeast.

"When the Choctaws and Chickasaws made peace and negotiated with the French in 1702, some of their women were in the party," said Dr. Patricia Galloway of the state Department of Archives and History. "The French apparently thought the women were at the meeting to cook and perform other chores but, based on what we now know, it is safe to assume they were there to participate in setting policies and making decisions."

Experts say these early Americans may have numbered 100 million before the arrival of Europeans, whose diseases apparently killed the natives in great numbers.

Ms. Galloway and others seeking to uncover the history of Indians in the Southeast agree that the ethnic groups or tribes with names like Natchez, Chickasaw, Choctaw, Biloxi, and Tunica were not the war-like savages often portrayed in movies.

"I believe the general kind of picture we get from films is that all Indians hunted buffalo, lived in teepees, battled wagon trains and were a nomadic people," said Ms. Galloway. "While the Indians of the plains were nomadic, this certainly was not the case in the Southeast."

Researchers have found that the tribes had a well-defined system of government and the Indians had expertise in many areas, inluding agriculture and forest management.

They lived in cabins, sometime two-story quarters, had summer homes and storage structures, Ms. Galloway said, and often planted gardens of corn, squash and beans near their central villages.

The Indians taught the Europeans how to plant corn and some of their forest management practices, such as controlled burning, are still practiced today, she said.

The tribal groups were descendants of complex societies, known as chiefdoms, that existed long before the first Europeans arrived on this continent. They apparently were still functioning when explorer Hernando DeSoto traveled through the Southeast in the 1530s and 1540s.

But by the time the French and English arrived in the interior some 150 years later, the chiefdoms had largely disappeared, apparently victims of diseases brought by the white man.

"The inheritors of these chiefdom societies were much more loosely organized in village groups," she said.

Ms. Galloway said that while movies often showed Indians at war, Indians of the Southeast were usually too busy at their tasks for such activity.

The Choctaws, the only remaining organized Indian group in Mississippi today, and the other groups were prepared to defend their territory, she said, but they spent most of their time hunting, fishing and harvesting both domestic crops and wild food.

"And except for Andrew Jackson and the Creeks, none of the Indians in the Southeast ever fought against the United States," she said.

"Their biggest battle was with white greed and misunderstanding," Ms. Galloway said. "Just as in the case of the Cherokees in the Carolinas, our Choctaws, Chickasaws, Creeks, Seminoles and Cherokees also had their 'trail of tears."

"In spite of the fact it has been about 150 years since they were deprived of much of their land, the Indians of the five civilized tribes have managed to retain a great deal of their culture," she said. "For example, Choctaw, rather than English, remains the mother tongue of the Mississippi Band of Choctaw Indians.

"Together with maintaining their culture, however, Indians of the Southeast after having regained some of their land are beginning to prosper in our modern world. This should not be terribly surprising when we see the true picture of their prosperous lives before the coming of the white man."

Good With The Bad

MADERA, Calif. (AP) — Almost 33 years late, Ellsworth John Hunt has received the Purple Heart he earned for wounds suffered in Korea.

But the package containing his medal also bore a letter finally confirming conclusively something Hunt had refused to fully accept: his brother, Daniel, was killed in a separate action of the Korean war six days after Ellsworth was wounded.

"I knew he was missing in action, but I never really knew he was dead," Hunt said in an interview.

Ellsworth Hunt was only 17 when he and his brother entered the service in March 1951. They went through boot camp together, then were shipped to Japan and were dispatched to different infantry units in Korea.

That notice dimmed the luster of Ellsworth Hunt's Purple Heart. He was shot under the shoulder by machine gun fire while advancing up a hill toward an enemy position Sept. 22, 1951. Hunt kept carrying his own machine gun until a concussion grenade exploded a few feet behind him.

"I woke up in a Tokyo hospital a month later," he recalled.

Hunt spent the next 1½ years in hospitals before being discharged. He didn't apply for the Purple Heart until this year because he "thought they automatically awarded it to you when you were wounded."

Now a grandfather, Hunt noted that "my kids are older than I was when I should have gotten the medal."

Nautical Treasures Can Bring Profits

NEW YORK (AP) — A galleon with $2 billion in treasure. A Roman sailboat that may have crossed the Atlantic before Columbus. A craft that dates from the very beginning of sea travel.

The Earth's oceans, seas and lakes conceal thousands of shipwrecks. Some, such as the Lusitania, have been stripped clean, and others, like the Titanic, have not even been found. But as a group they contain billions in gold, silver and artifacts, along with an equally rich store of answers to ancient historical puzzles.

On Thursday, Peter Gimbel opens the bank safe that he recovered two years ago from the wreck of the ocean liner Andrea Doria. Regardless of what is found inside, Gimbel — who kept the safe in a shark tank and plans to open it on live television — already has reaped a treasure of free publicity.

But the undersea discoveries of many other Americans easily eclipse Gimbel's, as do the treasures they dream of finding.

The most recent epidemic of treasure fever dates back to 1937, when Art McKee found a single Spanish coin dated 1721 in a shipwreck off the coast of Florida. After scuba gear and underwater detection equipment were developed in World War II, treasure hunting grew as a hobby — and an obsession.

In 1964 divers found 2,500 gold doubloons worth more than $1 million on the ocean floor off Vero Beach, Fla. Then came two big, multi-million dollar finds: the Spanish galleon Maravillas in 1972 in the Bahamas, and the galleon Concepcion in 1979 off the Dominican Republic.

The king of the treasure hunters is Mel Fisher, who has raised more than $50 million from the galleons Atocha and Marguerita and is still looking for $500 million he says they spilled on the ocean floor.

New treasure finds have been reported this year. A Martha's Vineyard man claims to have found the Whidah, a pirate ship carrying gold and silver that sank near Cape Cod in 1717. Last month treasure hunters said sonar readings had located the De Braak, a British ship laden with jewels, gold bars and silver that sunk in 1798 two miles off the coast of Delaware.

But the world's biggest treasure hunt is taking place in Colombia, where the San Jose, a galleon that sank in 1708, is thought to be sitting in 700 to 1,200 feet of water. With an estimated $2 billion in gold aboard, the San Jose is regarded by treasure divers as the world's greatest undiscovered wreck.

Most galleons were blown by storms onto beaches or reefs, where they were easily salvaged. But the San Jose sank quickly in deep water after a cannonball from a British warship hit her gunpowder storehouse. So far, salvors have spent millions of dollars and more than five years in their search.

If the San Jose is the deep's richest treasure, the Titanic is its most famous. Millionaire Jack Grimm led expeditions in 1980, 1981 and 1983 to try to find the luxury liner on the bottom of the Atlantic.

Another Titanic search team is scheduled to leave next summer from the Wood's Hole Oceanographic Institution in Massachusetts. National Geographic's Emory Kristof, the expedition photographer, said it will have more time, a bigger boat and better equipment than Grimm's parties.

Although the Titanic was rumored to have a fortune in jewelry aboard, its primary value is its celebrity. Collectors pay $1,000 for a German U-boat periscope lens; what would they pay for a Titanic life preserver?

For historians and marine archeologists, shipwrecks are a different kind of treasure. When divers found the 1864 steamer Bertrand in the Missouri River, they gained a window on the past — the boat was carrying a year's supplies for a general store in Montana.

"Any well-preserved wreck is a time capsule," said Clive Cussler, a novelist and shipwreck hunter who in 1981 raised the huge bronze bell of the Union warship Cumberland from the James River in Virginia.

Two of the most important recent discoveries were outside the United States. Robert Marx, the treasure hunter who found the Maravillas in 1972, has discovered fragments of pottery storage jars used on ancient Roman ships on a reef outside Rio de Janeiro.

Marx said his attempts to find the ship itself have been frustrated by the Brazilian government, but Harvard marine archeologist Peter Throckmorton called Marx's find "the most dynamite discovery" since the first evidence of Viking settlements in North America.

Last year a Bronze Age vessel that may be more than 3,000 years old was discovered off the Mediterranean coast of Turkey. This summer a team led by George Bass, director of the Institute of Nautical Archeology in Texas, is excavating the wreck, the oldest ever found underwater.

Farm Genetics Offer Way To Advanced Levels Of Breeding

NEW YORK (AP) — With test tubes, laboratory dishes and needles finer than an infant's hair, researchers are finding dramatic shortcuts in the ancient, patient science of breeding plants and animals.

A bundle of techniques known as "biotechnology" is cutting years off the traditional timetable and eroding the natural barrier between species that can't be mated or crossed. With techniques such as growing plant cells in laboratory dishes and transplanting genes between plants or animals, researchers hope to produce: — Plants that resist disease, drought, bugs, herbicides and salinity.

— Pigs and cattle that grow twice as fast.
— Leaner meat and more nutritious grain.

Such improvements should add $5.6 billion a year to the international crop yield before the turn of the century, and $20 billion a year after that, says L. William Teweles & Co., a Milwaukee agricultural consulting firm.

Researchers find themselves in a "very early stage of a field that is now really beginning to explode," says Winston Brill of Cetus Madison Corp. in Madison, Wis., one of many new research companies at the forefront of the technology.

It may take 3,000 genes to run a one-cell organism and a plant or animal can require about 1,000 times as many. In the massive library of genes, the biotechnologist wants to insert another gene to make a tomato less watery or a pig grow faster.

The first commercial benefits, experts say, probably will appear in tomatoes and potatoes.

Campbell Soup, for example, already is testing seeds for tomatoes with more solids and less water. Commercially grown tomatoes are now about 95 percent water, and less water would mean less waste to process, a Campbell spokesman said.

Similarly, Frito-Lay is trying to develop a more solid potato for its potato chips. It also wants a potato plant that resists disease better, yields more potatoes per acre and produces less sugar, which makes potatoes turn brown, a spokesman said.

Frito-Lay and the firm doing research for Campbell, DNA Plant Technology Corp. of Cinnaminson, N.J., grow plant cells in a laboratory to produce quickly many new strains to choose from.

Typically, a leaf is put in a laboratory dish with chemicals that encourage its individual cells to divide repeatedly and form clumps of cells. The clumps are moved into other chemicals that encourage shoots and roots to grow, and whole plants then develop.

With this process a single leaf can produce hundreds of genetically different plants. Nobody knows exactly why they differ. Maybe genes in leaf cells change slightly in their exposure to the environment, and the laboratory chemicals encourage other changes.

Another trick, used by Frito-Lay and DNA Plant Technology, produces plants from species that can't be crossed in standard breeding. "Protoplast fusion" means removing the walls of two plant cells, fusing the cells and growing them into a hybrid plant.

The most direct approach for transferring genetic characteristics, transplanting genes, is far more advanced in one-celled organisms than in plants or animals. The transplant of a virus gene into bacteria produced a vaccine for hoof-and-mouth disease in 1981, for example. Current studies involve altering bacteria to fertilize plants, stave off frost damage to crops, or even produce an enzyme that converts a slaughterhouse byproduct into cocoa butter, which is used in making candy bars and hair and skin conditioners.

In plants or animals, gene transplants pose problems such as growing a whole plant from the cell that gets the gene. But researcher Brill of Cetus Madison believes genetically altered plants, probably tomatoes or potatoes, may be sold in about five years.

Only one or two genes can be transplanted now, he says, and the first benefits probably will involve the simplest transplants. So disease resistance and, in crops like corn, increased nutritional value are likely candidates. More efficient photosynthesis may be an early improvement too.

Developing plants to grow in salty soil may take 20 to 50 years, Brill says. Salt injures plants in many ways, and hundreds of genes might have to be transplanted to gain resistance to all of them.

George Kidd of the Teweles consulting company expects the first plants altered by transplanted genes to be sold in the early 1990s. And by the year 2000, he says, transplants will make corn and wheat crops look a lot different.

Corn plants will be about one-third shorter with two or three ears per stalk, he says, rather than one. Both modifications will make mechanical harvesting easier. Other changes include resistance to disease and herbicides, and more efficient use of fertilizer.

Wheat also will be shorter to avoid being blown over, Kidd says. Each seed will put up 10 or 15 stalks instead of four or five, and the head of the stalk will contain twice the grain. The plant will use fertilizer more efficiently and resist disease and harm from insecticides.

Gene transplants also may pay off for animals. So far they have given Thomas Wagner of Ohio University in Athens a lot of oversized mice and potential help for the livestock industry.

Wagner created his mice with the gene that orders production of growth hormone in cattle. He altered the gene to order more hormone, and then, with a needle less than a thousandth of an inch wide, injected it into a mouse egg cell that had been fertilized only hours before. The gene was incorporated into the library of mouse genes by a cell mechanism that repairs broken genetic strands.

The result: a scaled-up mouse, weighing twice as much as normal but eating only half-again as much food, a 30 percent increase in efficiency. Such mice pass along the growth characteristic to their offspring.

"There is absolutely no scientific reason whatsoever which would indicate livestock wouldn't function the same way," says Wagner, who is now trying his technique with cattle, sheep and pigs. The growth hormone, which breaks down body fat to fuel the growth, should also produce leaner meat, he says.

Plastic Surgery Advances

PEKING (AP) — China's only plastic surgery hospital once concentrated on patching maimed faces and limbs, but now it also bobs eyes, enlarges noses and fixes deformed ears.

"We do not encourage this, but the people want it, so we are not opposed," said Dr. Song Ruyao, 68-year-old director of the hospital and president of the Chinese Plastic Surgery Society.

The ruling Communist Party once banned all plastic surgery as a vestige of bourgeois decadence and Western worship, and closed the hospital during the 1966-76 Cultural Revolution.

A relaxation of these puritan standards over the last few years has brought a boom in Chinese vanity, and now thousands of people want cosmetic operations, from nose jobs to face lifts.

"Even the United States does not have this," Song said of the complex in western Peking, which has 300 beds and 13 operating rooms.

Officially called the plastic surgery hospital, it is China's only facility devoted to reconstructive surgery, and Song said it performed more than 2,000 operations last year.

He said the hospital still concentrates on major reconstructive surgery — transplanting bones, flesh and skin to repair traumatic injuries.

But demand for cosmetic surgery is now so high that the hospital has a walk-in clinic where simple operations can be performed after payment of a 10 fen (4.5 cents) registration fee.

The most popular operation is for bobbed eyelids — converting the characteristic Chinese single eyelid to a double "folded" lid, he said. It takes 30 minutes and costs 20 yuan ($9).

For payment of 30 yuan ($13.50), doctors take cartilage from a rib to enlarge the characteristically small Chinese nose, he said. This also is popular.

"Most of our patients are young ladies," he said. "We get very few boys; they seem to be embarrassed."

Foreigners may come, he said, but must pay "four to 10 times" as much as ordinary Chinese. "It depends on their financial situation," he said.

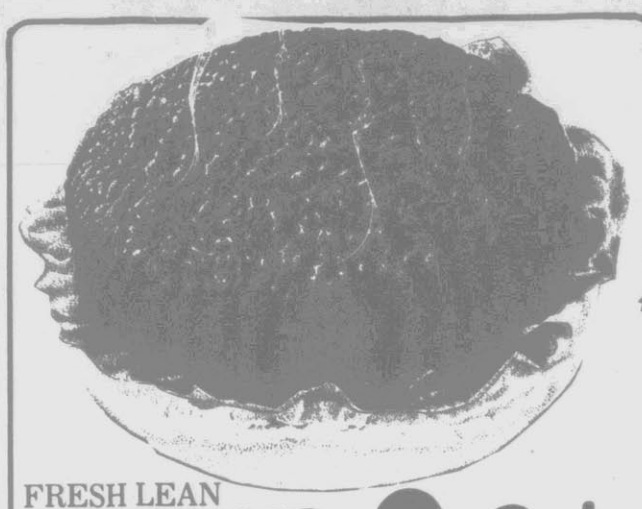

Song said he is not envious of his U.S. counterparts, some of whom collect high sums to perform artful cosmetic surgery operations. His own salary is 330 yuan ($148.50) a month.

"They are the most skilled surgeons in the world," he said. "But my personal view is that they are wasting their talent."

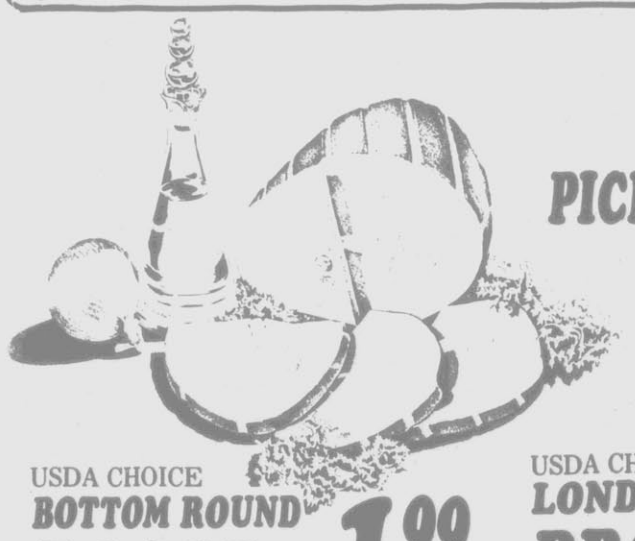

He said plastic surgery in China developed as a direct result of 1937-45 anti-Japanese war, when bombing and shelling disfigured a half-million soldiers and civilians.

Duffy Not Planning To Leave 'Dallas'

By Ian Harmer

DALLAS — "Dallas" devotees concerned about the health of Bobby Ewing (played by actor Patrick Duffy), who was left bleeding and bullet-riddled at the end of last season's cliffhanger, can stop worrying.

Bobby will be back next season. Right now, Duffy is working 12 hours a day in the scorching heat of this oil-rich corner of Texas, continuing the role he's held down for six years as one of the few good guys on the No. 1 TV nighttime soap.

Despite rumors to the contrary, Duffy has no plans to leave Bobby behind him when his contract expires at the end of the 1984-85 season.

Duffy just might change his mind if "Vamping," a movie which premiered in Dallas (naturally) at the end of last month and is nationally released this week, is a monster hit.

In "Vamping," Duffy is cast as a down-on-his-luck saxophonist who turns to petty larceny to supplement his meager income. He finds himself pitted against rich and powerful personalities and implicated in a sordid murder mystery.

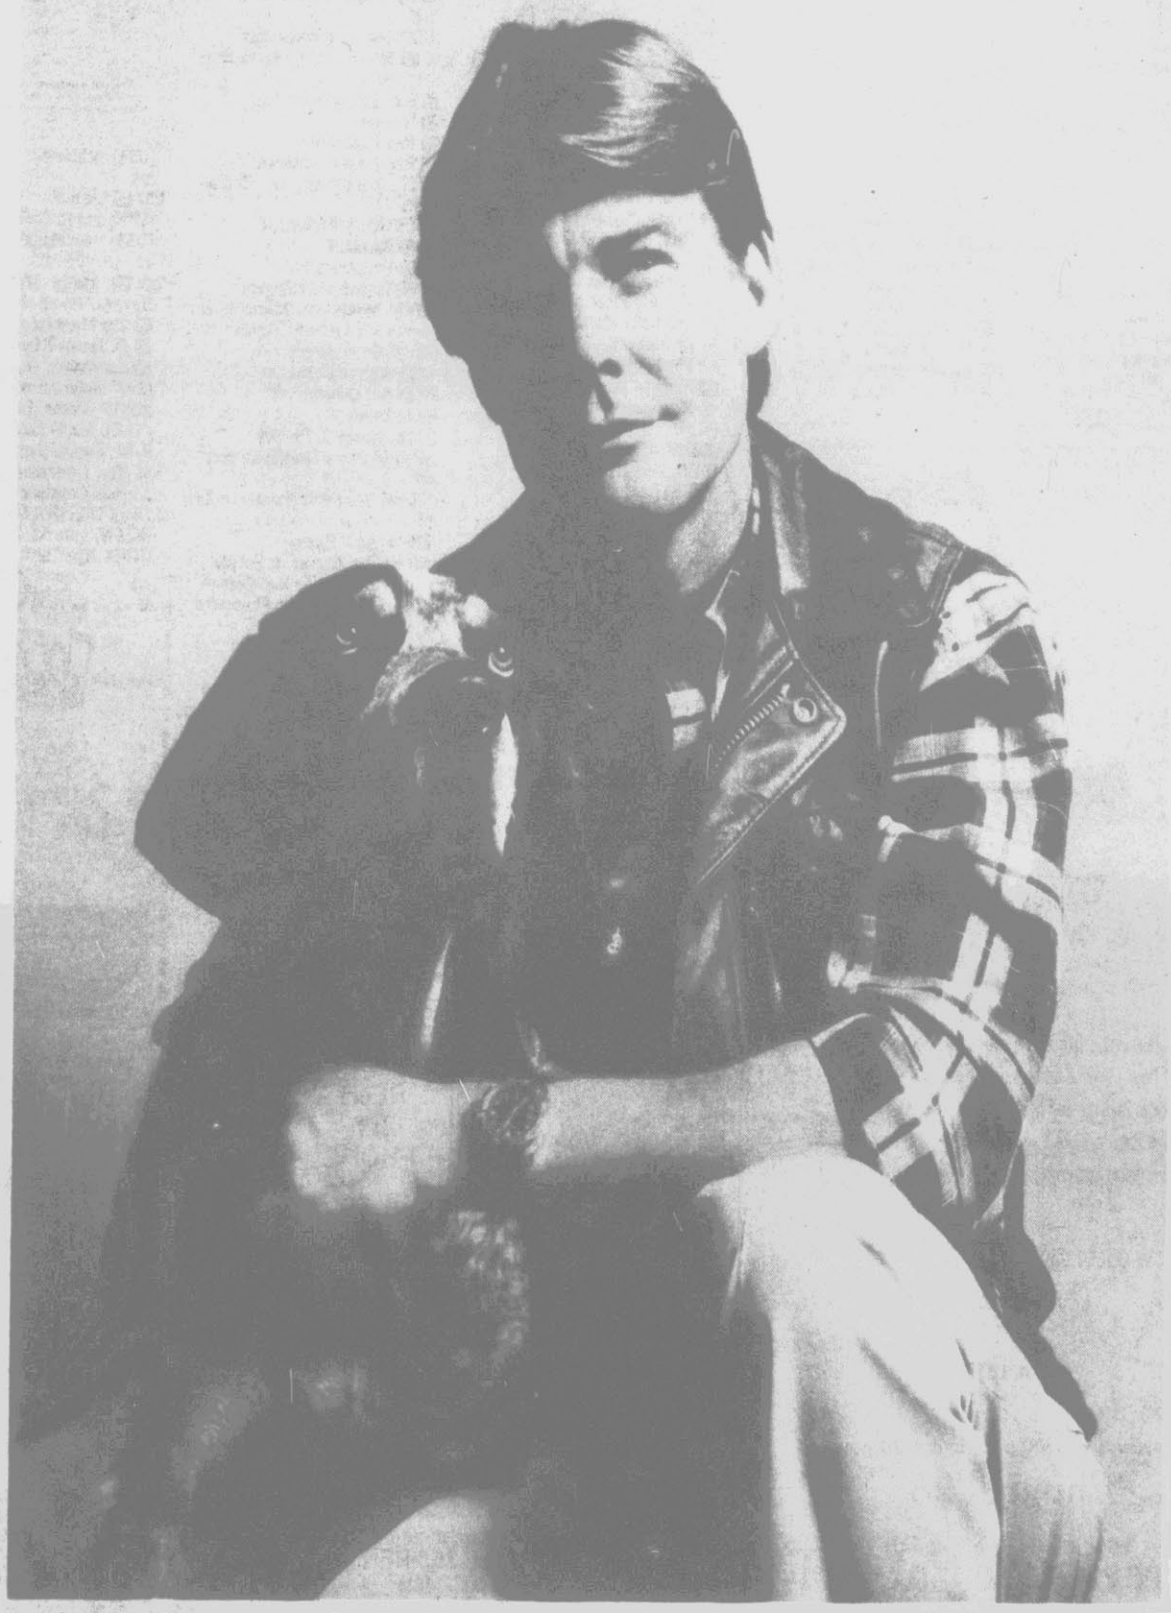

Shot on a shoestring budget in Buffalo, N.Y., the film was ready for release more than a year ago.

"I financed part of the project myself and I learned the hard way that making an independent movie is tough enough, but getting it out to an audience is tougher still," says Duffy. "For me, the most important attraction of 'Vamping' was that it gave me a chance to play a character nothing like Bobby Ewing."

Duffy says that Bobby has grown a lot in the last year or so, but he's "still very much the good guy of 'Dallas.'" He says "there are times when I wish he was more flawed, more human."

But Duffy makes it clear that even though he may gripe from time to time, it doesn't mean he's unhappy with the show.

"There is a tendency in this business for people to assume that an actor who expresses an opinion about his role in a TV show must be trying to get out of it," he says. "That's not true in most cases and I am grateful to Bobby Ewing. For one thing, I wouldn't have had 'Vamping' without him.

Jan-Michael Vincent stars as Stringfellow Hawke in a special two-hour episode of "Airwolf," airing Monday, Aug. 13 on CBS. (Rebroadcast)

Michele Will Tell

By Michele Marks

DEAR MICHELE: I understand Alex Karras, star of "Webster," was booted out of the NFL for his involvement in drugs. Why was he so heavily punished when other players get arrested and then continue to play? — Michael Thorpe

To Michael: Karras may be retired from football, but false assumptions may find you drop-kicked into the end zone. The former Detroit Lion All-Pro tackle was suspended for the 1963 season for placing bets on his own team. Said Karras: "The truth is that I was a rotten gambler. I couldn't pick the Super Bowl champ to beat the Little Sisters of Charity if I had a month's concentration." Karras left football in 1970, at age 35, and today virtually ignores the game. Thirteen battering seasons took their toll: He suffers from arthritis and dizzy spells.

DEAR MICHELE: I am confused. For years, I have been watching the "Miss America" and the "Miss U.S.A." pageants. What's the difference between the two? — Tamara Marshall

To Tamara: "Miss America" is the most beautiful, most talented, most intelligent women representing the United States in the "Miss America" pageant. "Miss U.S.A." is the most beautiful, most intelligent women representing the United States in the "Miss U.S.A." pageant. Miss U.S.A. goes on to represent us in the "Miss Universe" pageant. The difference is that Miss U.S.A. and Miss Universe don't have to have any talent. Miss Universe is, of course, the most beautiful, most intelligent woman in the galaxy.

DEAR MICHELE: Is the actor who plays Mr. Smith on "Lost in Space" the same man who played the Martian on "My Favorite Martian"? — Rhonda Korson

TV Chatter

By Polly Vonetes

John Ritter was quick to defend his series, "Three's a Crowd," the revamped and renamed version of "Three's Company." During the recent TV press tour, journalists questioned the series premise of having two unmarried characters share a bed — especially at 8:30 p.m.

In the premiere episode, the fun-loving kids of "Three's Company" go their separate ways. Janet (Joyce DeWitt) is getting married, Terri (Priscilla Barnes) is leaving for her new nursing job in Hawaii and Jack (John Ritter) is moving to a new apartment with his live-in girlfriend, Vicky (Mary Cadorette).

Vicky is from a broken home and doesn't believe in the institution of marriage. She prefers living with Jack, "not because we have to — but because we want to."

"I don't feel I am going to poison the minds of the youth of America in living with an unmarried woman," says Ritter. "I lived with my wife for two years before we got married. If that's a sin, so be it."

Costas Makes His Mark

By Willie Schatz

When Bob Costas put on his NBC blazer for the 1982 baseball season, he joined three broadcasting legends — Tony Kubek, Joe Garagiola and Vin Scully. Costas was hardly a rookie behind the microphone, but that's some fast company.

"I was pretty deferential at the beginning," Costas said before a recent Orioles game. "Then I started trying to impress everyone and show I belonged. Now I'm finally becoming myself on the air.

The key was the way Tony treated me. He really relaxed me. He showed everyone we were a team. We finally found our chemistry in the last game of the '82 season."

Kubek, however, thinks they've made a good equation all along.

"I don't think I helped him all that much," Kubek said. "I haven't changed him a bit and he hasn't changed me a bit."

Nevertheless, Kubek has been through some changes at NBC. He shared the baseball broadcasting booth with Curt Gowdy, Jim Simpson and Garagiola before joining Costas.

"The play-by-play guy has to be No. 1," Kubek said. "He has the most important job. I can say anything I want any time I want. He can't. Garagiola lost sight of that, and I think he was wrong."

"We're equal in importance, although not in certain kinds of knowledge," Costas said. "We don't go in there with a premeditated plan. There's no arrangement that it's my time or his time. It's OK if he takes an inning to say his piece. If he's on a roll, that's fine."

And that's not all. Musically, the pair are at least a generation apart. Recently, Costas related to the Orioles pre-game and between-innings music — Bruce Springsteen and the Rolling Stones — far better than did Kubek. And Costas is somewhat more of a journalist than Kubek, which makes sense given his background as an announcer and Kubek's as a shortstop.

So how have they become the best duo in the business? Because they care about baseball and they aren't afraid to show it.

"We're not sports announcers assigned to baseball," Costas explained. "We're sports fans who happen to announce baseball."

ANNOUNCER CHATTER:

There will be two more football players in the NFL broadcasting booth this season. NBC has hired former Dallas Cowboy defensive lineman Harvey Martin, while erstwhile Pittsburgh Steeler quarterback Terry Bradshaw will call signals for CBS.

We are not sure about the validity of the thought that KHAKI was a World War II invention, but we do know that immediately afterwards there was a sudden appearance of the fabric in every young man's Wardrobe in this country. The love affair continues to persist. For Fall 1984 you can expect to see KHAKI pants as a basic for young men on campus or for any man's weekend Wardrobe. And, I suppose, we all know that there is no friend like that special pair of KHAKI pants that have been washed until they are paper thin...and who cares about the wrinkles? At all of our Coffman's stores we are going to be offering, during August, a special value to the true KHAKI customer.

HEADLINERS

MILLS: THROUGH THE AGES.

In Hayley Mills's book, it seems, angels may be ageless, but not without their troubles. Once married to movie producer Roy Boulting, 33 years her senior, Mills, 37, is now keeping company with 23-year-old aspiring songwriter Marcus Maclaine. In between, Hayley had a nine-year liaison with actor Leigh Lawson, by whom she has a son, 7-year-old Jason. She has an 11-year-old son, Crispian, by Boulting. Mills disavows any rumors of marriage to Maclaine but says, "It's true I've been seeing a lot of him."

CRANE: THAT COSMOPOLITAN GIRL WITH DAD

Susanna Crane, doe-eyed daughter of Republican Rep. Phil Crane of Illinois, may not have it all, but she's apparently got most of it. At the urging of mama Arlene, who modeled furs and casual clothes before her marriage (and her eight children), Susanna entered Cosmopolitan magazine's "Cover Girl" contest and has parlayed her top-10 finish (with a fetching photo in the July Cosmo) into a budding modeling career herself. Miss Crane had plenty of competition for her honorable mention: 16,000 fresh faces answered Cosmo honcha Helen Gurley Brown's call.

□

Some people will cop any excuse to get out of town in the summer. Andy Summers, lead guitarist for the rock group Police, habitually huddles with other members of the band in a Caribbean recording studio to edit the group's albums. The reason? Andy, a millionaire many times over, strongly objects to paying London studio fees. "At 100 pounds an hour," he complains, "you can't even afford to have a tea break." Summers likes a little leisure time to get behind — and in front of — the camera; in a London show of his photographs he posed obligingly with a Summers original of — who else? — Summers.

□

The trouble with losing your glasses is that you can't look for them until you find them. So discovered actor Danny Aiello, for whom lens is more. There he was with Mia Farrow on the set of Woody Allen's upcoming film The Purple Rose of Cairo when his glasses vanished. "They're lost forever," gasped Aiello, rushing to the phone. Danny, it seems, is always losing his red-framed glasses. Indeed, his SOS is so habitual that his optician stands ready to send a replacement to wherever the actor may be squinting.

SUMMERS: A NEW DEVELOPMENT.

Filmmaker Peter Gimbel and his wife, Elga Andersen, who appeared with the late Steve McQueen in the movie Le Mans, are responsible for this Thursday night's TV special Andrea Doria: The Final Chapter. Gimbel was the first person to dive to the wreck after its sinking in 1956. But all was not smooth sailing for the couple. Just before they were to leave on the 35-day expedition, Elga stopped short, explaining she had forgotten a most important piece of equipment. Her scuba mask? Her air tank? "My mascara," she said sweetly to her husband, who was probably ready to give the lady 40, uh, lashes. Well, let's just hope the stuff was waterproof.

It's been 50 years since she won her Oscar for It Happened One Night, but by the looks of Claudette Colbert, that one night could have been last night. She's 79, but Colbert's low bangs, high cheekbones, high style, and high comic timing haven't changed. Clearly, she's earned the right to spend every lolling moment at her Barbados plantation, where she has played hostess to such Hollywood chums as Frank Sinatra and Ron and Nancy Reagan. But none of that for Colbert, who jets from New York to her native Paris to London, where she's now performing with the endlessly suave Rex Harrison in a revival of the 1920s drawing-room comedy Aren't We All. The play may have a higher fluff content than cotton candy but, Colbert says, "Rex asked me and it seemed like a good idea. You have to do something — you cannot just sit still and grow old."

□

A.E., of Fort Smith, Ark., writes to ask Constance McCashin of CBS's Knots Landing: "Do you prefer filming in big cities or small towns?"

McCashin replies: "I grew up in a small community — Greenwich, Conn. Some people resent the fact that everyone knows who they are. I thought it was nice that people knew me and I knew them. In a small place, when you go shopping, people recognize you and say hello. They're all so friendly. I find the whole atmosphere in smaller towns very warm and relaxing."

COLBERT: NEVER SAYS NEVER.

WHAT'S THE BEST FAMILY SIZE?

By Dr. Robert Coles

Some men and women, well before marriage, have already decided upon the ideal size for their families — a given number of children. The reasons for such a decision, often enough, are quite personal: fond memories of growing up in, say, a large family, or unpleasant memories of being an only child. Sometimes those reasons might be reversed: A man or woman liked being an only child, or emphatically didn't enjoy being one of eight or nine brothers and sisters. Then, too, there are people who have no clear idea of how many children they might want to have. "I don't know," one hears, or "I haven't really thought about it — maybe two or three."

A good number of people have thought about it, yet they arrive at a final answer only through experience — the ups and downs of marriage and parenthood, which might persuade one couple that the first child should be the last, and another that lots of children are life's major blessing. There are, of course, some families whose choices are defined by biology rather than attitude — couples, for example, who cannot have any more children, or can have them only with considerable risk. And there are those who, out of religious or moral conviction, keep having children even though they might feel a certain reluctance or worry about it, perhaps because there isn't enough money at hand.

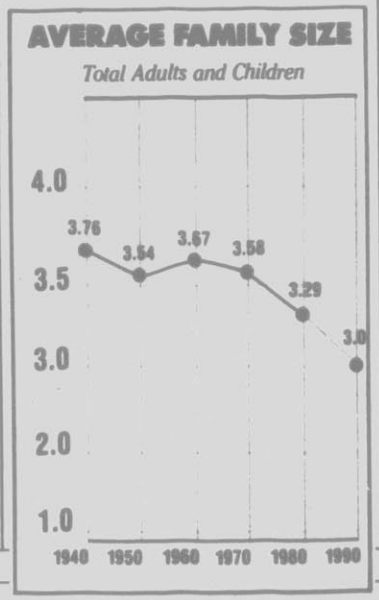

Sometimes a parent will experience many different attitudes toward family size over time — as was the case with a mother of eight who told me years ago about the shift in her own ideas about children: "I come from a small family, I guess. There were only three of us — two boys and me. But my parents always wanted more kids. My mother came from a large Italian family. My father came from a large Irish family. I had so many cousins I couldn't keep track of them.

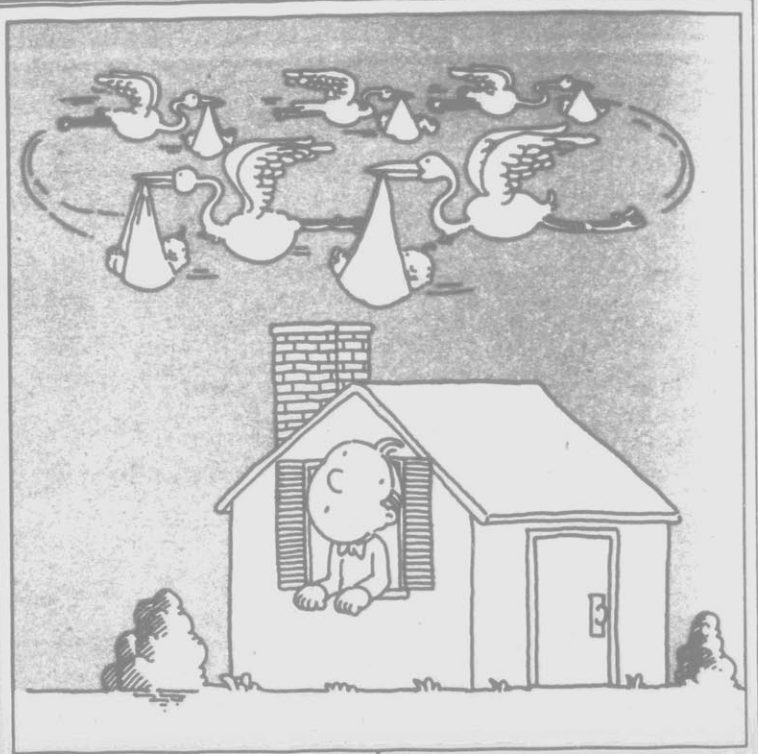

"I thought back then that I didn't want to continue all that — kids and kids and kids! I can recall a story in a magazine about the average American family, and there were the mother and the father and a boy and a girl. I thought to myself: That would be great, just to have a couple of kids, and no more. Then I could really pay attention to each kid, like my parents did. Both of my parents were really brought up by their older sisters.

"I'm the one who's carrying on the family tradition! Like I said, I thought I wouldn't. I thought I'd settle for a small family. But my husband was an only child, and he said, 'No way.' To tell the truth, after our first was born, our Sally, I wanted to stop right there. She was a wonderful, wonderful baby. She was quiet and sweet, and she smiled all the time, and she never woke up in the middle of the night, the way our other children, almost all of them, have done. I got so attached to her that I began to worry about having another baby, because it would break up our love, mine for Sally and hers for me. I think, for a while, my husband felt the same way.

"But we're Catholics, and even though we tried not to have children through the rhythm method — and we even talked about using contraception — we ended up having our second daughter, Debbie, and that was no fun. I had a lot of trouble with that delivery, even though it was the second, and maybe I'm just being superstitious when I say this, but the result was that Debbie turned out being a very difficult baby: She cried and cried, day and night, to the point I thought I was going to lose my mind.

"Well, Debbie outgrew her 'colic,' and by then my husband and I wanted one more child — a boy! We had our boy; we were lucky. My husband just adored that kid, and we'd gotten used to having a lot of noise and commotion around the house, and one day we were talking, and suddenly my husband was sounding like his old self — that we should just let them come, one after the other! 'Wait a minute,' I said, but then I stopped and thought, why not! Of course, I wasn't totally convinced. Neither was he, actually. We had to think about money. Who doesn't, except the rich. Sure, you can say that you don't have to live in luxury, and you can hand the clothes down and be real economical with food. But there's only so far you can cut down; sooner or later those big expenses start hitting you hard. And just as important, I worried back in those days about whether there was enough of me to go around. I mean, how much energy can one person have — for her husband, her children, the house and all it demands of you, and — I know it sounds selfish — to have a little bit left over for yourself.

"We just decided to put the matter in the Lord's hands. I think, secretly, my husband and I had decided that we'd have a big family. And that's how we ended up with our eight kids: five girls and three boys. It's been hard a lot of the time, but I'll tell you, I'd never, ever do any different, if I was to have a second chance. The same goes for my husband. We look at each other sometimes, when we're sitting in church — and the whole pew is us and only us! — and we are both thinking the same thing, I know: Thank you, dear Lord, for these blessings, all eight of them. They're worth eight million dollars, at least!"

She went on to tell me about the satisfactions of having a large family: the way older children took care of younger children; the way self-centeredness or egoism (which we all have, to some degree) yielded to the demands of a group of 10 people. Her children were "each individuals," as she put it. They had their idiosyncrasies, their respective strengths and vulnerabilities. But her family possessed a solidarity that made it hard for any one child to be demanding and spoiled. On the other hand, as she was the first to admit, "some of my children, maybe, haven't had quite as much as others, at least from me and my husband."

No life is perfect, nor is any family size going to guarantee parents anything and everything they want — for themselves or for their children. Rather often, in large families, a wonderful solidarity does emerge: a sense of "us" that dampens the rivalries and competition that so commonly occur in smaller families. But in those smaller families, as the mother of eight noted herself, a great deal of attention can be given to this or that child, often to good effect, creating opportunities and advantages that can help shape a quite special person. In one-child families such an outcome is by no means rare — but there may be difficulties, if not outright dangers: a child who is lonely; a child who expects (and gets) just about everything, and so may be relatively vain or self-preoccupied; a child who has trouble getting along with others, accepting the give-and-take one learns to regard as normal in a larger family.

One more sibling may not change that state of affairs — because two children can fight and fight, or become polar opposites in so many respects that each is substantially shut off from the other. A third child can "break up" such a family positively — so that the parents needn't concentrate as intensely on how "the two and only" manage. Sometimes two of the children become closer, leaving the third child comparatively alone. On the other hand, the three children can emerge as distinct individuals, with no such "pairing off" taking place. It is obviously not a matter of family size alone, but of the particular family — how the parents regard their children and, not least, how able they are to enrich their children's lives. The more social and economic opportunities a family has to offer, the more likely it is that its children will pursue their different ways productively.

No matter what our preferences, those who gather statistics tell us that the average American family size will be exactly 3.0 by 1990 — down from today's 3.26 and 3.58 in 1970. The so-called only child will soon be a major presence among us, and the old-fashioned large family will be relatively rare — a cause for regret, surely, for some of us. Perhaps enough of us will continue to have a range of children (large families or medium-sized families of three and four children) so that we will learn from one another and — very importantly — offer this country a variety of children: offspring shaped by all sorts of family situations and sizes.

In the course of my work as a child psychiatrist, I have seen troubles occur in every kind of family, large and small. I have seen remarkably solid families in which there have been only one or two children or, in contrast, many sons and daughters. But I've been especially impressed by the strength and vitality of those families with four or five children. I am not recommending any particular number of children as ideal — I am simply sorting out in my mind memories of the various families that I've observed and studied.

A number of parents have told me how much they learn from their first and even second child — how much more relaxed and knowing they feel when a third child is born, and a fourth. A pity to stop at one or two, they may observe. And yet they do so for entirely understandable reasons (financial, social, even moral — out of their personal conviction that the world is already too heavily populated). But those who do go on to have two or three more children often tell me they have been especially pleased with the way things have worked out in their families.

Over the years I've come to realize that for many of us the size of the family we dream of having, or end up having, is not only a matter of our social or religious or ethnic backgrounds but of our quite personal lives — how we grow up as children, how we want to live as adults. As in most matters, the mind's experience is often the deciding force, no matter the significance of considerations such as the pocketbook, the teachings of a religious tradition, the customs and values of a neighborhood, a country, a certain historical era. And why not — given the intensely personal nature of what it means, day in and day out, for each of us to be a parent. FW

GETTING PERSONAL WITH

JOE BOLOGNA

HARD-LEARNED RULES OF THE MARRIAGE GAME

Although they made their names as co-authors of the 1968 play and the 1970 screenplay Lovers and Other Strangers, Joseph Bologna and Renee Taylor have been the closest of spouses and working partners. They co-wrote and co-starred in the 1971 film Made for Each Other, and were co-interviewees in publications all over America. The couple recently co-authored and co-starred in the play It Had to Be You in Los Angeles.

Even though Bologna's solo career has been gaining momentum with his starring roles in such films as My Favorite Year, Blame it on Rio, and the soon-to-be-released The Woman in Red, the 48-year-old actor/writer still views his marriage as the most important venture of his life. Bologna was interviewed for FAMILY WEEKLY by West Coast journalist Mitchell Fink.

FINK: Does the professional closeness you have with Renee strain your marriage?
Bologna: In some ways it's easier, in other ways harder. It's harder because we deal with four relationships — husband, wife, writer, writer. Now, this gets even more complicated when we're acting together. Then it's six relationships. My writer will have a certain relationship with Renee's actress, and so on.

Q: How do you turn off the working relationship?
Bologna: By taking vacations together and, once in a while, separately. Just recently I got in the car and for four days I was gone. By myself. I drove up to Yosemite [National Park]. Renee was busy doing things, and she wouldn't have wanted to go anyway, so I went alone. It was wonderful, just being by myself, listening to myself think.

Q: Renee isn't as well-known now as you. Does that become a problem at home?
Bologna: Our relationship has about 500 problems, just about all of which can be solved. But the fact that I'm working more in films than Renee, that's one of the unsolvables. After Meryl Streep and Jane Fonda, there aren't a whole lot of parts for women . . . . I think the problems of the show-business marriage are blown out of proportion. My marriage has lasted for 20 years. And it's as strong now as it ever was. If you're committed to a relationship, you do whatever it takes to make it work. In our case, there are certain rules.

Q: Like what?
Bologna: We don't have extramarital affairs. Monogamy is an absolute rule—a simple rule for us. For someone else, if your sexual preference is to live in an igloo with a casaba melon, great. But I need structure in a relationship, and my structure is built on monogamy. I like this structure. I like my family. I like being bonded with another person. It's a very safe, warm feeling. No matter what problems I have in life, I know I can count on the love of that person.

Q: Any other rules?
Bologna: Not really, except that you can't hold things in for too long. At some point you have to deal with what's bothering you. No matter what's going on, both of us know that we have to get back to being in love. I know what it is to be in love, and when I've tasted steak, I can't go back to hamburger. I know what it means to be emotionally turned on. And in a way that's why acting and writing together helps. When we work together, we're very close to our feelings — the love, the sexuality — and I'd rather get those feelings from my wife than go somewhere else. So we constantly have to get back to that thing — if it takes seeing a psychiatrist, or having a fight. If we've locked horns on some thing, we have to do that thing that unlocks them, whatever that thing is. And with us that thing is being madly in love. FW

EXTRAORDINARY PEOPLE

NASA'S "TRAVEL AGENT"

WANT TO FLY WITH HIM?

By Howard Rosenberg

Most people gaze at the night sky and see a wondrous natural light show. Alan Ladwig looks up and imagines the firmament bustling with human activity — artists, manufacturers, builders, industrialists, entrepreneurs, all plying their trades in the milieu of zero gravity.

As manager of NASA's ambitious Space Flight Participant Program, the 35-year-old Ladwig is helping to fulfill his own dreams. He views himself as a "cosmic wagon-master helping pioneers reach the New Frontier."

Rockwell Industries

Alan Ladwig

By late next year, NASA hopes to launch a civilian, non-astronaut observer into space aboard the shuttle. Thousands have already asked for a seat, including ABC anchorman Hugh Downs, Civil Aeronautics Board Chairman Dan McKinnon, and folk singer John Denver.

Yet NASA officials have spurned all requests, opting instead to pick their own passenger. A selection process is being devised that will include both NASA and civilian review committees, medical evaluations, and thorough background investigations. Ladwig is supposed to make sure it all runs smoothly — just like Ward Bond easing homesteaders across the prairie in Wagon Train.

Perched in a swivel chair next to a coconut-headed mannequin that serves as a hanger for his suitcoat, the cleft-chinned, mustachioed Ladwig is both a space zealot and a pragmatic bureaucrat well aware of the exorbitant cost of space travel (prospective bookers of space in the shuttle's cargo bay must make a $100,000 down payment before negotiations even begin). "I can't come up with a dollar-and-cents reason why we should [send a civilian into space]," says Ladwig. "It has to do with higher aspirations and goals."

Ladwig's goals have been lofty ever since he joined the now defunct Committee for the Future while he was a student at Southern Illinois University in the late '60s. "All there was at the time was the Apollo program with three people in a tiny capsule," he recalls. "We were advocating moving masses of people into space, and folks would look at us like we were crazy."

After college and a two-year stint as a personnel specialist with the Army in Greece, Ladwig took his master's degree in education and his visions of extraterrestrial touring to Washington. There he joined the Forum for the Advancement of Students in Science and Technology (FASST), a space advocacy group that lobbied NASA to include college-level science projects among the shuttle's planned experiments.

When NASA decided to use projects from high school students instead, Ladwig signed on to manage the program for the agency. He helped ensure that experiments ranging from beehive construction to crystal growth were aboard shuttle flights.

Ladwig became an assistant to the shuttle program's director, Lt. Gen. James Abrahamson. When the general — whom Ladwig describes as a "visionary" — left NASA to head up President Reagan's "Star Wars" space weapons project, Ladwig was named to manage the Space Flight Participant Program. "I feel good about it — lucky to be involved," he says. "I think space should be opened up to everybody . . . and I think it's happening. It's moving in the same sort of pattern that the exploration of any frontier takes. A certain kind of person goes out first. Then, in a later phase, people will come out to commercialize the frontier. . . . It will be the commercial efforts that will really open up space. People will discover that it's the place to move outward, to do things differently for the future."

In the near future, though, Ladwig must concern himself with more mundane problems, such as sifting through the flood of applications NASA expects will pour in from prospective shuttle passengers. Ladwig says, "I'm here to explain the opportunities — to show people how they might qualify for the program and brief them on what may lie ahead."

But Ladwig won't have any personal role in the selection process itself. "If people think I'm selecting them, I won't be able to talk with them as freely," he explains. He might also be the target of intensive lobbying or even bribery. But it would all be to no avail — Ladwig is so scrupulous and wary of those who might try to influence him that he shunned the innocent offer of a reporter to pick up a luncheon tab.

Whoever gets the nod from NASA as the first passenger aboard the shuttle is bound to become an instant celebrity, simply by virtue of the fact that he or she will be paving the way for non-astronauts in space. Yet Ladwig bristles at the suggestion that the flight might be viewed as gimmickry or as a chance for the passenger to cash in on the inevitable public attention.

"The last thing we want," he insists sternly, "is for someone to walk off the shuttle, wave goodbye to us, and then merchandise himself for a million dollars. The American taxpayers would tear us apart, and justifiably so. We, I think, are going to demand some sort of commitment." It's possible the passenger will become a temporary employee of NASA and agree to represent the agency for a year after the flight. At any rate, whoever gets to fly away on the shuttle will have to be flexible enough to devote a minimum of three months to NASA for the necessary training.

After years of dreaming and working to open up the frontiers of space, doesn't Ladwig want the first passenger on the shuttle to be none other than Alan Ladwig? "Oh, I'd love to go up, but I don't pretend to have the necessary qualifications for that role. Maybe I can go on a later flight." He pauses, flashes a sly smile, and asks mischievously, "Did Ward Bond ever go over the mountain into the promised land?" FW

THE HOME COMPUTER

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS KIDS ASK THE MOST

By Gordon Williams

If your family is one of the 50 million American families still trying to decide whether to buy a home computer, here are six questions that your children are most apt to ask about them. The questions are based on a check of youngsters and parents who own and use computers.

Q: What games can you play on a home computer? Are they as good as the games at an arcade?
A: Hundreds of games are available for home computers, including just about all the arcade favorites. And plenty of of these were designed specifically for computers.

Understand, though, that a computer is designed to do many things pretty well — of which playing games is one — while an arcade machine is designed to do just one thing extremely well — play a specific game. Arcade games will usually have flashier graphics and better controls. But games for a home computer can be more complex.

A: Those ads that seem to be saying that you'll fail in school if you don't have one leave it pretty vague about how a home computer can help.

There are computer programs to teach specific subjects — from math to foreign languages. There are even programs that will help you cram for your SAT exams. And educational programs are getting better all the time.

You can use your computer to bring lots of helpful information right into your home — from the latest news stories to articles from encyclopedias.

Most helpful for youngsters, though, is using a home computer as a word processor. You need a computer, printer and a word processing program (about $1,000 for all of it). Then you compose what you're writing on the computer's screen — rewriting all you want before you set a word down on paper.

Using a word processor will be faster and neater than using pen and ink, and you can keep revising your thoughts. Most students report a marked improvement in their grades when they shift to a word processor.

Q: Do I have to know how a computer works to use it?
A: Not really — any more than you have to know how the internal combustion engine works to drive a car. You don't even have to know how to write a computer program, or know a computer language, to make a computer work. Flip a switch to turn the computer on, put in a program, and that's all you have to do. Anything else you learn about computers and computer programming is up to you.

Q: What businesses or professions will make the most use of computers when I'm grown up?
A: It's hard to imagine any field that won't be using computers in a few years — to juggle numbers, to store data, to write and edit reports, to design things, and to communicate with other computers.

Q: Can my computer really talk to other computers?
A: Sure. You need a device called a "modem" ($100 and up) to connect your computer with the telephone lines, and a program so your computer can communicate with others.

Then your computer can make contact with hundreds of other computers around the country. There are commercial data banks (SOURCE and CompuServe) that have volumes of information on file for a fee. There are bulletin boards you can dial up that offer games and other features that you can copy for free. You can "talk" directly with other computer owners — typing out your messages on the keyboard.

WARNING: There has been plenty of publicity given to computer "hackers" sneaking into business or government computers.

First, that's harder than it sounds. Second, it is a federal crime that can get you into serious trouble.

Q: Do I have to be afraid of breaking a computer?
A: The computer itself is built of solid-state electronic devices. The keyboard and the tape player or disk drive that you use to feed programs in, though, are mechanical devices and are considerably more fragile.

Still, computers are pretty sturdy machines. Treat one with the same care you'd use with your stereo system or TV set and you won't have to worry about breaking it. PW

SALAD BOWL

HOW TO DRESS UP HEALTHY OCCASIONS

By Marilyn Hansen

Everyone loves a good salad, particularly one that is well-dressed. With the blending of a good oil — perhaps a fruity olive — and the right vinegar (a light rice-wine vinegar or a flavored fruit vinegar such as raspberry), a vinaigrette dressing can be great. However, for a change of pace, you might like to try a thick buttermilk blue-cheese dressing or a piquant jalapeño blend. Addendums provide interest: croutons, of course, slivers of nutty cheese, chopped hard-cooked egg, crumbled bacon, capers, sliced radishes, a sprinkle of chopped walnuts or slivered, toasted almonds. But whether you choose to create a simple salad of buttery Bibb or an olio of odds-and-ends, the right dressing can make it really special. Here is a lively selection to help you widen your repertoire.

BLUE CHEESE DRESSING

1 cup mayonnaise
¼ cup buttermilk
Dash freshly ground black pepper
½ teaspoon sugar
1 cup (4 oz.) crumbled blue cheese
2 teaspoons cider or white vinegar

1. In a medium-sized bowl, blend mayonnaise and buttermilk until of a pourable consistency.
2. Stir in pepper, sugar, blue cheese and vinegar. Mix until blended. Refrigerate in a covered jar until ready to serve.

Makes 2 cups

ZESTY CHILI DRESSING

1 (6-oz.) can vegetable juice
2 tablespoons oil
Dash chili powder
Dash Tabasco sauce
1 tablespoon chopped green jalapeño peppers
2 teaspoons grated onion or finely chopped green onions
2 tablespoons sliced pitted black olives or stuffed green olives

1. In covered jar or shaker, combine vegetable juice, oil, chili powder, Tabasco, peppers, onion and olives. Cover tightly; shake well.
2. Refrigerate 2 hours or longer, until thoroughly chilled. Shake well before using.

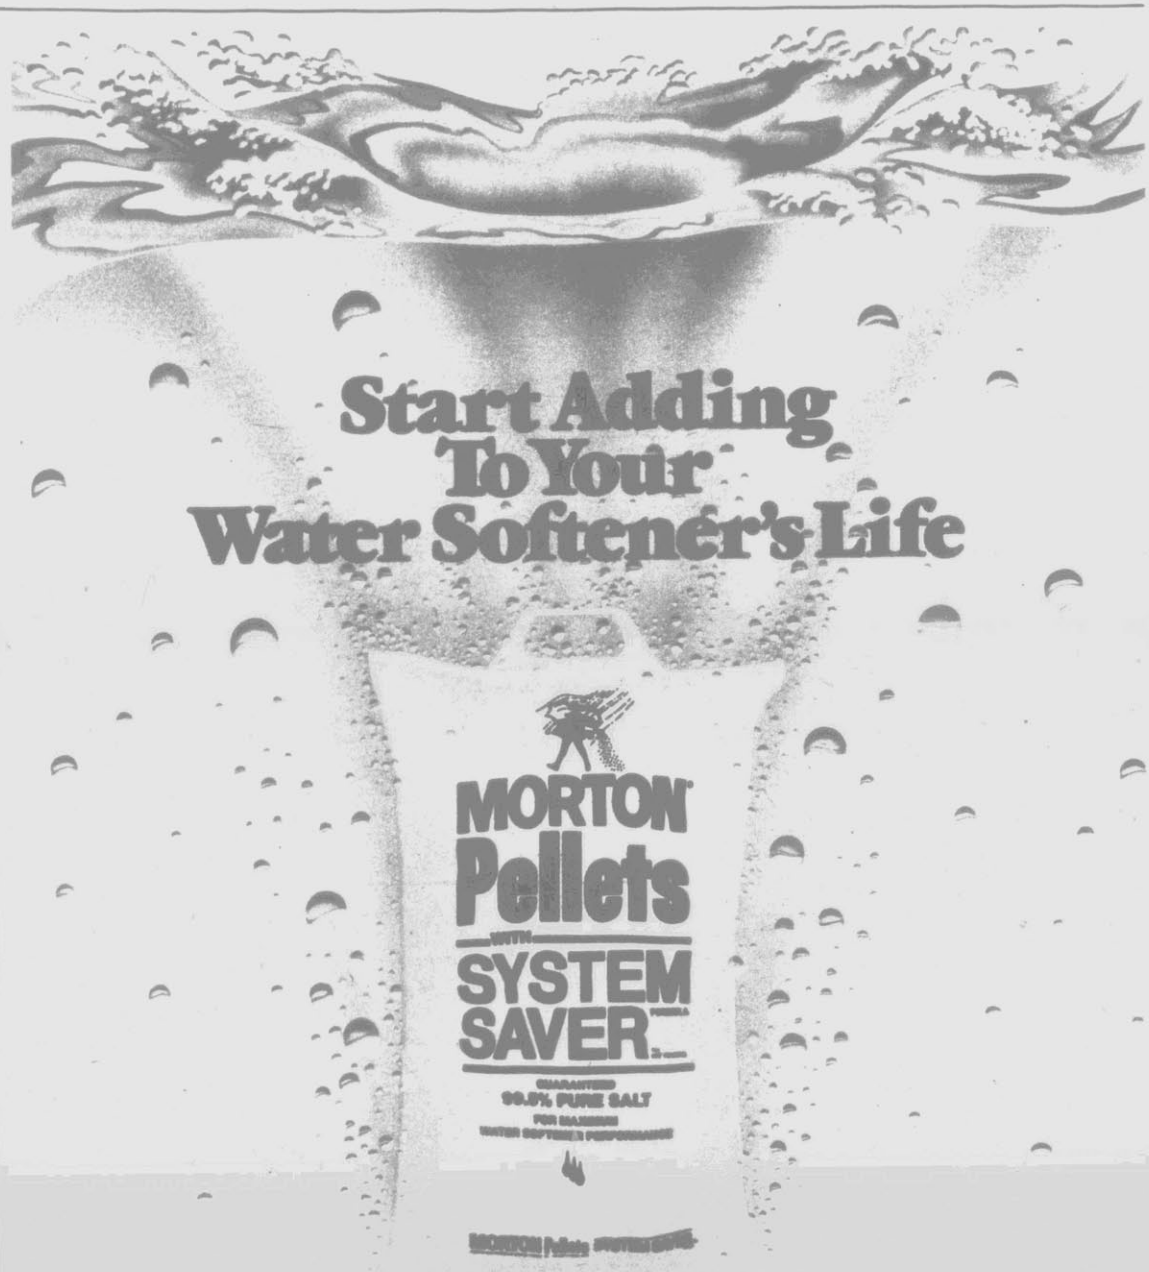

Makes 1 cup

MUSTARD DRESSING

3 tablespoons white vinegar
3 tablespoons Dijon mustard
¼ cup oil
½ cup skim milk
1 tablespoon finely chopped parsley or dill
1 teaspoon sugar
½ teaspoon salt, or to taste
Few twists freshly ground black pepper

1. Place vinegar and mustard in blender container; cover. Blend on medium speed 20 seconds or until well mixed.
2. With blender running, slowly pour in oil. If necessary, stop blender during processing and push ingredients toward blades with rubber spatula. With blender running, slowly pour in milk.
3. Add parsley, sugar, salt and pepper; cover. Blend on medium speed 20 seconds or until well mixed. Cover; refrigerate.

Makes about 1¾ cups

WHIZ QUIZ

THE ALL-IMPORTANT SELF-ESTEEM FACTOR

By John E. Gibson

TRUE OR FALSE?

1. If your sex life is on the blah side, it may be because you're selling yourself short in the self-esteem department.

2. How success or failure affects you depends on your self-esteem.

3. How a child feels about himself is likely to depend on how his mother feels about him.

4. To a large extent, your social class determines your self-esteem.

5. Owning a pet increases your level of self-esteem.

ANSWERS

1. True. The California School of Professional Psychology surveyed 98 subjects (49 married couples) on self-concept and sexual problems. Those with problems differed from the others in that there was a marked discrepancy between their real and ideal self-concept. These findings suggest that a person's love life can improve if he reconciles this difference. In short, people who are satisfied with themselves tend to be better lovers.

2. True. A group at the State University of New York studied the effects of self-esteem on success and failure. Ninety undergraduates were monitored following both successes and failures arranged for by the researchers. The students who scored high on tests designed to measure self-esteem performed equally well following success and failure. Students with low self-esteem performed significantly better after a success than they did after a failure.

3. True. The findings of University of Tennessee researchers showed that actions that communicate acceptance and approval to children had a positive impact on a child's self-esteem. Pressure to achieve also had a salutary effect. Punishment, however, even though the child might feel it is deserved, has a negative effect. And while punishment is sometimes necessary, the findings suggest that if it is used sparingly and thoughtfully it will enable a child to maintain a more positive self-concept.

4. False. Research was conducted at the University of Santa Clara (Calif.) and the University of Texas on the relationship between social class and self-concept. Subjects of various ages and from all social classes were surveyed. The results showed no relationship between social class and self-concept; the self-esteem level averaged the same for all classes.

5. False. In a study conducted at Wright State University (Ohio), male and female college students — pet owners and non-owners included — were given a battery of psychological tests. The results indicated that "differences in self-esteem were insignificant, but that pet owners do tend to have higher empathy scores (ability to put oneself in another's place and see the world as he sees it), and higher interpersonal trust scores (more trusting of others)." WHAT IN THE WORLD

BY MARION LONG

CLASS CHANGES

Have things really changed so much since the psychedelic '60s? Well, yes. Bucknell University, a coed college in Pennsylvania, surveyed its 1984 graduating class and compared the results with a similar survey taken in 1968.

In contrast to their '60s counterparts, the student body of today was decidedly less absorbed in politics, with only 42 percent "quite interested" compared with 53 percent 16 years ago.

Further, economics majors have tripled in number, but there are only one-fourteenth as many students majoring in secondary education as there were in 1968. The number of students who hope to work for a large corporation has jumped from 33 to 45 percent. And the attractiveness of a career in academia has dropped from 21 to 14 percent.

Today's students also feel a stronger sense of allegiance to their parents, tend to study harder, and are considerably more likely to approve of the death penalty. The times they are a changin'.

A RUDE AWAKENING

Not being alarmist, this page has never felt it necessary to report on the controversy surrounding snoring. But the time has come. There has been a breakthrough.

Psychologists at Rutgers and Cornell universities have come up with relief for all those who have suffered through a night in the same room with a snorer.

Relief takes the form of an alarm that gradually conditions nocturnal noisemakers to wake up when they begin to snore. When the snorer begins to saw logs, he or she sets off a high-pitched alarm in a pillow speaker. As time goes by, the machine's sensitivity increases so that it is tripped by even the softest snort. Eventually, the snorer shuts up.

The intrepid researchers report that 70 percent of their patients are cured of their noisy habit within two months. In one case, the device enabled a couple to vacation together for the first time in 10 years. Because of the husband's snoring they couldn't sleep in the same room and weren't able to afford separate rooms while on a trip. For information, write Snor-no-mor, Box 968 Piscataway, N.J. 08854.

WHAT'S IN A NAME?

It's the way of the world. Fame is fickle. One day you're a household word. The next day you're confused with someone else altogether.

Journalism students at the University of Central Florida polled 100 people. Eighty of them did not remember Spiro Agnew, the former vice president. Many of them thought he was former Florida governor Reubin Askew. Even less familiar was Mary Cunningham, who resigned from the Bendix Corporation because of the brouhaha over her relationship with company head Bill Agee. Some people thought she was Richie's mother on the television show Happy Days. And 87 folks thought U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz was the creator of the comic strip Peanuts. (Good grief!)

Conversely, all 100 recognized the name of entertainer Dolly Parton. Other unforgettable people were Neil Armstrong (98) and Charles Lindbergh (95).

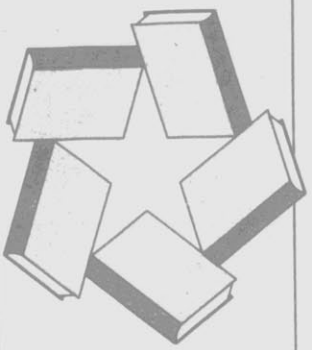

AS WE GO TO PRESS

Isn't life iron-ic? It turns out that what we've always suspected is true. Permanent press really isn't all that permanent. A nationwide poll by Daily News Record, a men's fashion newspaper, produced some interesting findings on this pressing issue.

First, men are much less rumpled about the "straight-from-the-dryer" look than women: 20 percent of the men and 38 percent of the women surveyed said they iron their PP pants and shirts. Younger people seem to get more steamed about it than older folks, with 74 percent of the 18-to-24 set ironing their clothes at least "frequently," while the greatest number of "never press" answers came from people over 50 years of age.

Finally, the wrinkled look seems to have caught on to the greatest extent in the North Central and Western states, where people showed the least tendency to strike while the iron was hot and touch up those temporary-press shirts. By the way — clothing industry insiders have leaked the news that the term "permanent press" is gradually being replaced by the more accurate "durable press." This should add a new wrinkle to the push for truth in advertising.

IN THE DAYS OF KING ARTHUR

CREATED BY HAL FOSTER

Our Story:
MAEVE, THE HUNTRESS, MISTRESS OF THE HOUNDS -- AND MORDRED'S DAUGHTER. SO THAT WAS HER HIDEOUS SECRET. ARN IS WRACKED BY TORMENT. DOES MAEVE CONDONE HER FATHER'S DEEDS? DOES HER PULSE THROB WITH THE SAME CORRUPTED BLOOD? YET IN HIS HEART ARN REMEMBERS THE MAEVE OF A SWEET NIGHT ON A NORTHERN ISLE.

BUT NOT NOW, PERHAPS NOT EVER. MEANWHILE MORDRED'S ARMY WAITS AT LINDUM, TILL ALL IS READY FOR THE FINAL PUSH. ONE NIGHT PRINCE ARN IS AWAKENED BY A SLAVER OF SALIVA. THE HOUND STANDS BACK, AS IF EXPECTING TO BE FOLLOWED. ARN OBEYS HIS INSTINCTS.

MAEVE STANDS IN A COPSE, CARESSED BY THE SOFT LIGHT OF DIANA'S ORB. ARN IS SHY AND UNCERTAIN. IT IS MAEVE WHO BREAKS THE ICE. "YOU LEFT TATTERED RAGS BEHIND YOU ON MY ISLAND," SHE SMILES. "THUS DID ARTHUR MARK YOUR SCENT AND BRING YOU HERE."

SHE PATS THE CREATURE'S HEAD. "ALL MY HOUNDS ARE NAMED AFTER THE FAMILY I WAS NEVER ALLOWED TO KNOW." SHE POINTS TO THE LARGEST OF THE DOGS, THE QUEEN OF THE PACK. "THAT ONE ALONE IS NAMELESS, FOR MY MOTHER I NEVER KNEW." THE VOICE TRAILS OFF, AND ARN IS WARMED BY MAEVE'S SUDDEN WEAKNESS AND SORROW.
