Students Return This Week

By SUE HINSON

Astronomers say summer ends with the September equinox, about Sept. 23, but Greenville's summers really come to an end much earlier than the celestial calendar indicates.

This year, like most preceding years, the end will appear to come abruptly, as the lanquid, sometimes draining days of August are punctuated by the arrival of ECU's student population. University officials are predicting that about 13,500 students — approximately 100 more students than were registered last year — will stream into Greenville on Sunday and the following days before beginning classes Thursday. However, the students are in for a few surprises as both the city and university have been busy in their absence.

According to ECU Vice Chancellor Dr. Angelo Volpe, 175 new employees, both faculty and staff, have been added to the university payroll. That number, he said, reflects an approximate 60-person increase over last year's increase rate. He said the university is also working on plans for a new $14 million general classroom building, a $1.6 million renovation project for Wright Auditorium and a $700,000 general roofing renovation project. Work on those is scheduled to begin in the spring of 1985.

The ECU School of Medicine has also taken on some new members — 15 faculty and 17 staff — according to information and publications director Georgette Hedrick. She added that a cardiac surgery program was started at the med school this summer as well. However, med students will not be as surprised by the changes as other students, Mrs. Hedrick said. "The med students really haven't been absent this summer like the other students. The only time they get a real summer vacation is after their first year. Following that, they start back each year in July."

Newly resurfaced roads and more apartment complexes will greet the students as well. City and construction workers who have been working on a citywide road improvement program recently laid the last strip of asphalt and painted the last lines on streets surrounding the university, and local construction representatives say they have lots of rooms ready for student

Husband Changes Mind, Says 'Yes'

Ferraro To Disclose Income

NEW YORK (AP) — Geraldine Ferraro, hoping to close out a controversy that dogged the Democratic presidential ticket for a week, said Saturday her husband, John Zaccaro, has changed his mind and will make his income tax returns public on Monday.

Walter F. Mondale, campaigning in Missouri, and Ms. Ferraro, at home in Queens, both said they were "pleased" by Zaccaro's decision, disclosed in a statement.

The returns will be made public at the same time Ms. Ferraro complies with a federal disclosure law for vice presidential candidates.

Ms. Ferraro said she and her husband, a real estate developer who expressed fear that disclosing tax returns could harm his business, will release information that "goes beyond the requirements of the law."

The vice presidential nominee and her husband had spent nine hours meeting with accountants on Friday.

Republicans have been criticizing Ms. Ferraro for days over the subject, and GOP spokesman William Greener III said in Dallas, "She's honored a commitment she made to the American public and now we'll see what's in them."

In another development Saturday, Ms. Ferraro reacted angrily to an article prepared for Monday's edition of New York magazine which says the family company, now run by her husband, owned a building from 1963 to 1971 listed as a residence of a reputed organized crime figure.

The building was sold the same year her husband took over the business in the wake of his father's death, according to the article.

Shown an advance copy of the article while being filmed by a television crew, Ms. Ferraro looked at it briefly and said: "I'm outraged, absolutely outraged.

This Will Be Reagan's Week In Dallas

By DAVID ESPO
Associated Press Writer

DALLAS (AP) — It's already all over but the shouting as Republican delegates — a confident, conservative chorus with hardly a dissenter in the house — gather deep in the heart of Texas this week to provide President Reagan with a rousing boost toward re-election.

"We believe in ourselves, we're hungry for any opportunity and we're up to any challenge," Reagan said Saturday, using his final pre-convention radio address to depict the nation as stronger for his leadership.

For sure, Reagan will be master of all he sees at the 33rd Republican National Convention — unchallenged leader of his party and holder of an enviable lead in the public opinion polls over Democratic rival Walter F. Mondale.

So large was the lead — 23 points in one recent survey — that party leaders said they worried about overconfidence.

The opening gavel of the convention falls Monday, giving delegates two days to sample the political rhetoric and the hospitality of the convention city before Wednesday evening's televised renomination of Reagan and Vice President George Bush.

The convention will be a four-day pageant combining rhetoric, rallies and filmed tribute to Reagan and his wife. The program has been scripted for television, and the president is ready with a "rip roaring" speech for Thursday night. Campaign director Ed Rollins predicted a "hard-swinging" answer to Mondale's well-received acceptance speech last month.

The week's supporting cast runs from former President Gerald R. Ford to the Rev. Jerry Falwell, evangelical leader of the Moral Majority, to Charlton Heston, better known as an actor than former film star Reagan ever was.

Party leaders promised a convention that would leave people "entertained and informed." But chairman Frank Fahrenkopf Jr. said his worry was how to keep the television networks on the air with live coverage for an event lacking the slightest element of suspense.

So routine were the convention's earliest sessions that Reagan's own campaign activities — stumping in Midwest farm country on Sunday and Monday — seemed certain to upstage them.

He comes to Dallas on Wednesday, just hours before the delegates roar their approval of his nomination.

Mondale, nominated by the Democrats precisely one month ago, sniped at the Republicans from a distance. Embarking on a brief campaign swing to Missouri and Iowa, he ridiculed "this almost kook-right platform that they've cooked up .... That platform is going to help me because people are not going to believe it," he told the Dallas Morning News in an interview.

Not that there aren't Republicans who don't harbor doubts about the president or the uncompromisingly conservative platform he will run on.

There will be 2,235 delegates in the hall — 2,234 committed to Reagan, and Susan Catania of Chicago, officially uncommitted.

Some of the party's outnumbered moderates — Rep. Jim Leach of Iowa and Sen. Mark Andrews of North Dakota among them — cautioned that too strong a swing to the right could harm the party in the fall and in the future.

Outside the hall, city authorities prepared for dissent from non-Republicans, erecting a fence that stretched a mile and a half around the vast convention center, and raising $25,000 in private contributions to build a tent city for demonstrators that includes running water, electricity, pay telephones and a paved road.

More than 100 men and women took part in a pre-convention demonstration against the president, a three-kilometer run "against Ronald Reagan" through the streets of the convention city. "The right wing of the Republican party, led by anti-women President Ronald Reagan, has shut out virtually all American women," said the event's organizer, Deborah Erb.

Inside the convention center, workers toiled into the weekend finishing the hall. Red, white and blue standards marked each state's delegation on the floor, and local

East Replaced

DALLAS — Claude Allen, a campaign spokesman for Sen. Jesse Helms, said Saturday that he will replace Sen. John East as a member of North Carolina's delegation to the Republican National Convention.

The Associated Press quoted Allen as saying he did not know why the Greenville Republican would be unable to attend the convention. East could not be reached Saturday night.

Police Stressing Quality Training

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

So you want to be a policeman?

The requirements to begin the process are "minimal," Greenville's Chief Ted Holmes explained last week.

"You have to be a high school graduate or have your GED (general educational development certificate)" and be a minimum of 21 years old to go "on the street."

You must then pass an Employment Security Commission test; another written test to measure reading and writing ability, attitudes and maturity; a psychological examination; a physical fitness test; a regular physical examination; an interview with the chief, and a background investigation.

Now you're all set? Well, not quite.

If you meet all the requirements and are hired, you've got to pass a basic police training course, required by the state for certification, during your first year on the job.

Presently a minimum of 240 hours, the basic school requirements will be increased to a minimum of 369 hours begining in October.

Hunt Outlines Farm Proposal

By The Associated Press

Gov. Jim Hunt took his U.S. Senate campaign home to Wilson County Saturday, attacking federal policies that he said had delivered a "one-two" punch to tobacco state farmers, and outlined a counterpunch plan he said would bring them relief.

Hunt, who addressed "Young Farmers for Hunt" at a barbeque rally at his farm, said the future of the farm programs are "bigger than one man."

Hunt told the group that farmers had enough problems with interest rates, high operating costs and low prices, but that Washington had added to those problems.

"First, they doubled the tobacco tax," Hunt said. "That cut consumption by six percent. Then they ran up the huge deficits and interest rates that gave us the destructively high dollar. That cut tobacco imports by 19 percent and drowned us in cheap imports."

Hunt also said that the 1982 and 1983 tobacco which had been sent to stabilization amounted to more than 450 million pounds.

Hunt said he would introduce legislation if elected which would allow the assessments farmers have already paid for 1982 and 1983 stabilization stocks to complete their obligation for those crop years under the no net cost program.

"Farmers have paid assessments for the annual costs of these crops, and I do not propose that these payments be refunded," said Hunt.

Race Neck-To-Neck In Pitt

The Hunt-Helms senate race is too close to call in Pitt County, according to the results of a poll taken by a Greenville information firm.

Although 50 percent of the persons responding to the poll supported Democrat Jim Hunt and 46 percent supported Republican Jesse Helms, officials with Summa Information Systems said the poll puts the candidates neck-and-neck.

The poll was financed by the company and not by either candidate or a representative for the candidates, according to Robert Ussery of Summa. It was conducted Aug. 7-15 from a sampling of 250 registered and non-registered voters in the county.

Ussery said for a sample of that size there is a 95 percent probability that the results would not vary more than 5 percent plus or minus if the whole population had been interviewed.

The poll showed, Ussery said, that "although Pitt County was evenly divided on the choice of candidate, sharp differences are found on the basis of race and sex."

For example, he said, the results indicate women favor Hunt 60 percent to 32 percent. White males, on the other hand, favor Helms 2 to 1, according to the poll. On the other hand, 93 percent of the blacks polled support Hunt.

The key information in the poll is the 4 percent of the people surveyed that said they were currently undecided, Ussery said.

"One interesting thing we found out was that a large portion of the unregistered voters we surveyed that had an opinion on the race favored Hunt," Ussery said. "This group and the 1 percent that is undecided will decide the race."

Supporters of both candidates are "highly polarized" according to the poll, Ussery said. "The fact that women and blacks overwhelmingly favor Hunt and that white males, on the whole, support Helms, indicates this," he said.

Respondents were also asked whether they thought the candidates' television advertising was mostly negative or mostly positive. Seventy percent said Helms' ads were mostly negative, while 50 percent said Hunt's were mostly negative.

Ussery said the responses in the survey were obtained from direct mail and telephone interviews from a randomly selected sample of the adult population in Pitt County.

In addition to increasing the quantity of training, Holmes said the state recenly has done a review of the training requirements for certification with the idea of "improving the quality of basic training," as well.

One thing the review suggested, Holmes said, is a "need to improve the quality of instruction. They're working on a new system of certifying instructors, with the goal of improving quality."

"I feel very good about the caliber of people we've been hiring," Holmes said, citing the fact that three new Greenville officers were at the top of their class when the last basic school, sponsored by the Coastal Plains Law Enforcement Academy, ended earlier this month.

Denise Voncannon, police development specialist with the department, noted that while 55 percent (43) of the department's 78 sworn officers are high school graduates, 20 (26 percent) have associate degrees from community colleges and 15 (19 percent) have bachelor degrees from four-year colleges and universities.

"Out of the last 19 people we've hired," Holmes said, "10 are college graduates."

Holmes noted that for the first time, the City Council this year has has appropriated money specifically for training. In the past, Holmes said, the department relied on travel money to support training activities.

"Right now we're playing catch-up" as far as in-service training is concerned, Holmes suggested, noting that a number of new officers are being certified to operate Breathalyzers, the Police Information Network terminal, and the department's radar units.

And Holmes said "plans are to have training in crime scene searches for all the officers" as well as "a kind of patrol review ... you might call it advanced patrol techniques" and "speech classes ... public speaking."

Mrs. Voncannon, whose job it is to coordinate training programs, noted that in the first three months of this year, a total of 4,091 man-hours were spent by members of the department in various training programs.

In the three-month period that ended June 30, a total of 8,497 man-hours of training were recorded, she said, which included firearms training for all members of the department and the certification of 20 new officers to operate the department's six new radar units.

occupants which a drive around Greenville will patently reveal. Now located within walking distance of campus are three brand new, and one one-year-old, apartment complexes designed specially for the student population. Pirates Landing was completed in time for the last school year, and Ringgold Towers, Captain's Quarters and Kings Arms will be ready for fall semester occupancy.

The Greenville Police Department and Pitt-Greenville Chamber of Commerce are also giving their attention to the students' return. Police Chief Ted Holmes said his department will be concentrating on some of the traditional parking law violations that cause problems in neighborhoods adjacent to the unversity and will be adding additional resources to the downtown club area. And the chamber's Ed Walker said that all ECU students will be given a "Treasure Guide" devised by the chamber that outlines community services and shopping opportunities.

According to ECU officials, ECU's slightly higher population this year stems partially from a 5 to 7 percent increase in freshman and transfer enrollments. They added that out-of-state tuition has also increased by 9 percent, from $2,722 to $2,968 a year. Out-of-state students make up about 15 percent of the student body.

Jaycees Say New Rule Acceptable

By CAROL BLACKLEY TYER
Reflector Staff Writer

Jack Myers, Greenville Jaycees president, says he is not dismayed by the national Jaycee organization's ruling that women are eligible for membership as Jaycees.

"Our club voted against the measure at the state meeting and the state organization as a whole was against it," he said, "but we will do fine if women do want to join us. We're a strong organization and we'll continue to make valuable contributions to the community regardless."

It's his understanding, he said, that effective immediately any woman who meets the criteria of the organization is eligible. Gender will no longer be a factor.

He envisions, he said, that certain projects of the club may change a little. He gave as an example the way the annual Distinguished Service Award presentation is made. Previously, only men have been eligible — now people of both sexes will be, he believes.

Jane Harrison, Greenville Jay-C-Ettes president, said she believes the Jay-C-Ettes or Jaycee Women, an auxiliary of the Jaycees, will have to look at its membership rules in light of the national Jaycees ruling. "We'll probably be letting men in if they want to join," she said.

She said, in a recent Jay-C-Ettes meeting, the question, "Would you like to join the Jaycees?" was asked, and no persons present said they'd like to be a part of the sibling organization.

There was some thought given nationally to abolishing the Jaycee Women's organization through merger with the Jaycees. This proposal was withdrawn prior to the voting, Myers said he understands.

A NEW CEMETERY

We are pleased to announce our establishment of a new cemetery, at an old homeplace, here in Pitt County.

Ours will be a cemetery of choice.

It will be modern, in that we will have flat bronze markers, as do so many cemeteries today.

But our cemetery will be traditional in that we will have place for beautiful monuments of gleaming stone.

At our cemetery, you may choose standard vaults of heavy concrete. But you may also choose light-weight vaults of space-age materials that withstand heaviest pressure of earth and water.

At our cemetery, your choice is not confined to flat burial plots. We will make available, for your selection, lawn crypts and family vaults above ground, and mausoleum spaces.

We invite you to come to our cemetery and view our facilities. Go east on the Grimesland highway (NC Route 33) and, just after you leave the Greenville city limits, look to your left. You'll see the old homeplace there. Come right in. We'll be glad to see you.

Improvements Greet Returning Students To ECU

Here it comes — the annual invasion of East Carolina University students that will transform our area.

Some 13,500 students will pour on campus and thus considerably swell Greenville's population during the fall semester. They will be filling up dorms and off campus housing. There will be an increase in the number of vehicles operating on local streets and students will be seen in local stores purchasing soap, toothbrushes, wash cloths and towels and all the other things that are needed for setting up housekeeping in a new town.

In a few days the students will head to the classrooms to begin or resume their studies and work toward degrees. Across town at Pitt County Memorial Hospital a new year will begin for the ECU School of Medicine with some aspiring physicians starting their first year of medical studies.

Students will find improvements locally upon their return. Many streets around the campus have been resurfaced by the city. While it will not be evident right away the university is also ready to embark on a $17 million capital improvements program which will include a major new classroom building.

There will be new faculty members and other changes facing the student population and no doubt most will be convinced within a few weeks that college work becomes more difficult every year.

It is an exciting time for the university and the community. We welcome back the students and faculty.

Campaign's Rules Should Be Changed

We're approaching the point of thinking the furor over Congresswoman Ferraro's finances has become much ado about nothing.

That, and forming an opinion the rules on federal election campaigns need some changing.

As to the latter, they were largely written before the era when people in public life were less apt to have both spouses pursuing careers. It is almost commonplace today.

It takes no great mind to conceive a desire to maintain privacy and confidentiality that is the right of any private citizen save for the "infringements" endured by those who opt for public service; so we can sympathize with John Zaccaro, Ms. Ferraro's husband.

Another concept has come to the fore in our changing times: that the housewife is by virtue of the marriage contract a co-owner of the couple's assets; that in fact, as well as theory, the two have become as one. Conversely, if the husband — for any reason — does not pursue a career, and the wife does, the general rule would still hold true.

The quality of individual privacy in our political world has become ever more complicated. That leaves re-writing of the rule book on financial disclosure up to the Federal Election Commission, not only in the Ferraro case but others that conceivably will follow.

Sunday Morning Notes

Alvin Taylor

There are many natural wonders to be seen within driving distance of Greenville. The Nags Head area and Outer Banks are great treasures and the North Carolina mountains are delightful at any time of the year.

So, why drive a thousand miles to see a national park? Well, because it's there.

Your columnist journeyed to Bar Harbor, Maine, on a recent vacation to visit the famed resort area and the adjoining Acadia National Park.

The scenery is unbelievable. The park and Bar Harbor are located on Mount Desert Island and, unlike our coastal area, it is a rocky island with mountain peaks and lake-filled valleys.

It can be a place for hiking over rough terrain, climbing mountains, bicycling, camping and other physical activity. Or, because of an excellent road system, it can be satisfying to the most sedentary of us to drive around on well-kept roadways. Even access to the top of the tallest mountain — Cadillac Mountain at 1,532 feet — is by way of a winding, but safe road which carries one to the very peak.

But to get the flavor of another world one must leave the auto and hike rocky paths to the various points of interest along the coast.

Our first stop was just such a place. The path led to rocky ledges overlooking the sea. The modern world was left behind and one could sit on the ledges, that have been there before man existed, to view the surf crashing on rocks below.

Another stop was at a path which led to an ocean side cliff. The breath-taking view was down a sheer wall to the rock-covered surf perhaps 300 feet below.

Some rock climbers were descending the cliff using rope and other safety equipment. There was one young women, however, who shunned such equipment. Using relatively tiny protrusions of rock as hand and footholds, she ascended the wall like a human fly. Any slip would have meant sure death on the rocks below. We could barely watch.

The park contains beautiful valley lakes fed by the run off from the mountains, and wild life and beautiful wild vegetation abound. People actually climb the mountains and two were atop one peacefully flying a kite.

The park is completely open for hiking and exploring. Anyone who is so inclined could spend days observing its wonders.

Our two days there were overcast and views were sometime obscured by fog. Nevertheless, it was spectacular.

Is it worth a thousand-mile drive to see such sights? Indeed it is. Nothing man has ever created can rival it.

Cool It, Folks

James J. Kilpatrick

WASHINGTON — The role of the pundit is to offer sound advice to persons in public life, and the prerogative of persons in public life is to pay no attention to pundits. In that pessimistic vein, I offer this sound advice to Messrs. Reagan, Bush and Mondale, and to Mrs. Ferraro also: Cool it, folks, it's August.

This presidential campaign is going to die of boredom before it ever comes to life. If it were not for Mrs. Ferraro, the candidates would be chased out of town by hunting hounds and whippers-in, and the novelty of Mrs. Ferraro will not suffice for long. One does not expect much sanity in the years of our quadrennial lunacy, but in the old and better days campaigns did not begin until after Labor Day. No good purpose is served by the beanbag exchanges we have suffered lately.

If you have paid attention — and not many persons could have paid much attention — this vapid controversy involves a policy on federal taxes over the next four years. The president says that he has "no intention" of seeking an increase in the rate at which personal income is taxed. Vice President Bush says that nevertheless, in the event of a national emergency, the president would keep his "options open" to ask for additional revenues.

To the White House press, hungering for any old bone to chew on, this added up to "differences" that "could not be easily reconciled." The two were "at odds." Their disagreement reflected confusion and indecisiveness within the Reagan camp. And so on, ad nauseam. Such analytical writing is known to the trade as thumbsucking, and last week the usually imperturbable Bush let his exasperation show. "Zippity-dooh-dah," he snarled. Barbara should wash his mouth out with soap.

Walter Mondale, to be sure, started this horrid imbroglio in his acceptance speech. "Mr. Reagan will raise taxes," he said, "and so will I. He won't tell you. I just did." The magisterial tone of this peremptory pronouncement leaves much to be desired. What does Mondale propose to do with the Congress? Is he thinking of proroguing the House and Senate and fixing tax rates by imperial decree? A little humility is in order. A president proposes; the Congress disposes. It would be interesting to know precisely how Mondale would go about raising taxes, but it would be pleasant if he would wait until next month to tell us. August is too hot to worry about these things.

If the opposing camps would oblige the country by shutting up for a while, after the Republicans have had their fun in Texas, I would suggest a quiet stipulation on this issue. Let it be stipulated that as a general proposition the president opposes an increase in taxes, and that former Vice President Mondale, as a general proposition, supports an increase in taxes. Isn't that enough?

It is all the voters have any right to ask for. What we want to know about these opposing candidates is their cast of mind. How do they perceive the role of the state? Reagan believes that government is taking too much of the people's substance; Mondale believes that government is not taking enough. Reagan puts much reliance upon state and local governments and on the private sector; Mondale, for his part, puts greater emphasis upon the power of the national government.

These are among the general areas in which the candidates should inform us.

Enlistments Fall Short

Maxwell Glen and Cody Shearer

WASHINGTON — An Olympiad's worth of hype ended recently with the debut of ABC's new television series, "Call to Glory." As millions of Summer Games viewers might say of the ads for the Right Stuff-vintage program about Air Force pilots, they were the stuff of Pentagon recruitment commercials.

But Pentagon influence wouldn't be so far-fetched. The military is preparing to step up its recruitment efforts in face of a possible shortfall in key enlistment categories that wasn't expected at least until the early 1990s. The armed services believe that the All-Volunteer Force can expect more from additional promotion and incentives than efforts to revive a draft.

The revamped recruitment drive has been inspired by statistics disclosed in a marketing strategy prepared by the Army for the 1985 fiscal year. Those figures reveal a sudden decline in sign-ups for the delayed entry program (DEP), which allows recruits to wait a year before reporting to duty. The DEP has helped attract top-quality recruits to the military, and is a sensitive gauge of the recruitment market in general.

According to the survey, which was first disclosed in Defense Week, Army contracts for the top three levels of recruits have dropped 19 percent this year. Navy contracts are down 16 percent; Marine contracts, 12 percent. While Air Force recruiting has shown an increase over 1983, the DEP has fallen 11 percent overall.

Pentagon analysis of and concern for the decreases are capsulized in an executive summary of the Army marketing survey: "The FY85 recruiting environment is expected to be more difficult than that of FY83-84. Our prime market is shrinking; (contracts for future military service) are down; unemployment rates will continue to fall; ... and we will begin FY85 with fewer people in the (delayed entry program) than we did in FY84 ... This trend must be reversed."

The Pentagon's shopping plan explains the worries of the recruiters. The Navy, for example, is slated to grow from 450 to 600 ships; the Army plans to buy 5,000 new helicopters. Bottom-grade recruits, who under the DEP actually registered a 40 percent increase in the year ending last May 30, aren't the kind of people the military wants for its new toys.

Shrinkage in the pool of young people was expected to cause recruitment problems in the early 1990s, when many Pentagon purchases were to come off the assembly line. Some analysts say that a draft may be inevitable by that time.

Yet the Pentagon's own figures suggest that the much-feared shortfall is alreay here. Barring some major about-face in the employment picture, the question for military brass is how to reverse the trend.

The more than 10 million registrants with the Selective Service System would fill the void very nicely, officials concede. The registrant rolls are filled with well-educated young men — the easily trained types of whom recruiters dream.

Control

DALLAS (UPI) — Not since 1964 when they booed Nelson Rockefeller off the podium and nominated Barry Goldwater have conservatives so dominated the Republican National Convention.

Frustrated the last three and a half years because President Reagan has not pushed much of their social agenda, the conservatives took over writing the platform for the 1984 election campaign.

It includes much of the legislation they have waited in vain for Reagan to push, including such items as tuition tax credits and a constitutional amendment banning abortion.

When it came to the battle over whether or not there should be language in the platform that might allow for a tax increase if necessary to battle high budget deficits, the conservatives were not having any of it — even though it meant taking on Reagan.

For 48 hours, the White House operatives, who thought they were in firm control of the platform process, tried to find compromise language that would oppose tax increases in principle, but allow Reagan room to raise them if he thought it was needed for continued economic recovery.

The conservatives wanted no tax increase whatsoever and therefore no compromise. By a unanimous vote, the economic subcommittee voted for a plank that in effect said the drafters opposed tax increases, period, because they threatened economic recovery.

They added insult to injury by coming out in favor of a flat tax to replace the progressive income tax. Reagan is interested in the concept but does not want to be bound to it.

There is much more behind the conservatives' domination of the convention than just trying to get Reagan to run on the party platform they favor. The conservatives know as well as anyone else that no one reads a platform for the four years after the day it is passed.

The conservatives are confident Reagan will win re-election with any kind of platform. What they are looking to is 1988, who will run the party then and who will be its presidential nominee.

Rep. Jack Kemp of New York, one of the pioneer authors of the Reagan tax program, led the anti-tax fight in Dallas.

On the other side of the battle, arguing that deficits and economic recovery might demand a tax hike next year, was Sen. Robert Dole of Kansas, another player in the 1988 presidential sweepstakes.

Any battles being fought at the Republican National Convention over the next few days in Dallas are not just the latest installments of Reagan vs. his conservative base.

To the editor:

President Reagan has been quoted thusly: "My program hasn't hurt anybody. No one has been thrown out in the snow to die."

But there are other ways to suffer. Reagan's much-heralded tax cuts transferred relatively more burden upon the middle- and lower-income groups. His massive military spending, plus the tax cuts, inflated the federal deficits — though he promised to balance the budget. Massive federal borrowing increased interest rates, resulting in a surge of international investment in U.S. dollar interest-producing issues. The resulting "strong" dollar has crippled U.S. exports and the U.S. trade deficits have cost some 1.2 million jobs since 1982. Tobacco farmers, textile workers and lots of other Americans dependent upon a strong export trade have been hurt badly. Some are bankrupt as a direct result of Reagan's policies. His "free market" ideas need to be dumped in favor of a "fair market" philosophy.

To the editor:

Now that the excitement of the 23rd Olympiad is over, it seems we Americans have a very valuable lesson to gain from it all.

Certainly, our athletes showed courage, heart and good sportsmanship. These qualities are just what we should expect from them. But in the heat of the "68 goosepimple" show, the thrill and tears of it all, there was one very outstanding theme demonstrated by our winners of the gold, silver andd bronze. In the words of the TV commercial, they got their rewards the "old-fashioned way, they earned it." No labor unions, no governmental subsidies, no tenure by just hanging in there, but sheer hard work, long hours, and much sacrifice — thus, they "earned it."

It is too simplistic to say that we do not need some of the "crutches" that our society has today to aid in the pursuing of the American dream, but doesn't it make one think of just how our country became great in the first place and how our Olympic athletes are a modern-day reminder of that type of achievement.

Certainly, some of the pubic voluntarily contributed to help support them, but it was the athletes' hard work, long hours of practice and sacrifices that paid off for them in the end. Maybe, just maybe, we need to go back to the basics of what put America out front as one of the greatest nations in the world of nations today. Maybe we need to all think more about "earning" what we want and get rather than the route we seem to be headed now, with so much depending on governmental help, which is costing us more and more.

Here is hoping that the coming togetherness we felt during the Olympics and the thrill of being a part of all our athletes achieved and the realization of why they won out there in Los Angeles does not get forgotten nor discarded like yesterday's newspaper.

To the editor:

In a time of increasing federal control over religious matters, it is indeed joyous to hear of a victory over the agnostics and atheists. On June 25 the Senate passed a bill that guaranteed "equal access" to public school grounds for religious groups. The new law would prevent discrimination against religious organizations in that they have the same rights to public school grounds that other organizations have. The House of Representatives passed a compromise bill on July 25.

Senator John East co-sponsored this bill guaranteeing "equal access." Sen. East also supports the right of voluntary prayer in schools and a constitutional amendment to restore organized vocal prayer in public schools. I'm glad that John East endorses and actively supports what he believes is right. So, at least if the worst happens in November, we will still have one senator on which we can depend to stand by what he says.

To the editor:

I wish to disagree with your Aug. 7th editorial entitled "Opportunity," as well as point out some important facts from the tobacco growers' point of view.

Communist China is the largest producer of tobacco in the world. Tobacco is a high labor-intense crop and we cannot compete with China's cheap labor unless we are willing to lower our standard of living. According to the Foreign Agriculture Service, the average per-capita income for China is about $150 a year, which computes into about 7.5 cents an hour for labor.

Presently China's tobacco quality is inferior to American leaf, but tobacco companies can send retired State University professors there to improve their quality with our knowledge and expertise, which would severely jeoardize our markets. This has already taken place in Brazil.

John Cyrus reversed the trade figures for last year. The true figures are that we exported to China 70,000 pounds of bulk-blended tobacco for $195,000, part of which was imported to the United States with no duty. This represents about an average tobacco crop of approximately 30 acres in Pitt County. However, we imported a total of 254,000 pounds from China for $293,000, of which 132,000 pounds was burley at $149,000; 72,000 pounds of stems and trimmings for $20,000 and 92,000 pounds for $124,000 classified as scrap tobacco.

Dr. Hugh Kieger brands this trade as a golden opportunity and it may well be for the people he represents. But as a tobacco grower, I see no good in expanding this venture.

R.J. Reynolds' proposed production of cigarettes in China will only export jobs held by North Carolinians. Let's remember the plight of North Carolina textile workers, sugar cane producers and industries who have been duped into such unfair trade policies.

I believe that Jesse Helms is absolutely correct in opposing the most-favored-nation trade agreement with Communist China. He is looking out for our tobacco farmers.

Hi-Tech Takes On The Convention

DALLAS (AP) — Like paleontologists assembling the bones of a hi-tech dinosaur, workers are putting the final touches on a political show that may have little more relevance today than the giant brontosaurus that outlived its usefulness 150 million years ago.

The Republican National Convention that opens Monday certainly will be the most hi-tech in history. Computer terminals are set up by each delegation. The telephone system is digital, the mail electronic.

There will be giant screens and enough dazzling visual effects to amuse delegates even in this age of Star Wars and video games. A red, white and blue color scheme was deemed too old-fashioned and this podium is cast in shades of brown — "earth tones," the GOP planners like to call them. Sleekly curved, the platform adjusts to each speaker's height electronically.

Outside the hall, the cuisine is nouveau and so is the city. Much of it — particularly some of the larger hotels — looks like it was built last week.

But when Frank J. Fahrenkopf Jr. raps the gavel at 11 a.m., EDT, on Monday to call the 33rd Republican convention to order, delegates might well wonder what they're doing there.

No one is challenging the renomination of President Reagan and Vice President George Bush. Debates over the party platform have involved degrees of conservatism rather than any real ideological battles. For all practical purposes the platform fight is over since party rules make it close to impossible to carry it to the convention floor.

This will not be a convention that offers suspense or surprise. It is a made-for-television show that the television networks are getting reluctant to keep on the air.

As with the Democratic National Convention last month, the networks are offering selective coverage rather than the gavel-to-gavel showings of past conclaves.

Fahrenkopf insists that the American people are going to love the GOP show.

"Those people in front of their television sets will be entertained and informed," said the party chairman. "That's never been my concern. My concern is holding the interest of the networks and the buttons (that control) whether or not it goes out over the air."

The problem facing both parties may well be that politics has changed and made the conventions largely irrelevant.

The last time a Democratic convention took more than one ballot to select the presidential nominee was in 1952. The last Republican convention to go more than one ballot was in 1948.

A reason the suspense usually is over long before the convention is the growth of primaries and expansion of news coverage of the process. The fight for delegates has become a highly public process with each candidate's tally closely watched by the media.

It takes early success to attract the money necessary to stay in a presidential race. That tends to narrow the field quickly and assure that someone will emerge the winner before the convention convenes.

Not that conventions have lost all value. They are a chance for the parties to showcase their talent. Gov. Mario Cuomo of New York made the most of his opportunity as the Democratic convention keynote speaker. The same may prove true of one or more speakers at the GOP conclave.

And there should be an opportunity for Democrats and Republicans to get together and publicly fight among themselves over party platforms — even if those fights are pretty much over before either convention actually convenes.

The unmistakable feeling as the Dallas convention takes shape is that the days of these events are numbered, at least as they now are structured. Without the drama of a nomination contest, political conventions have less interest than most summer television reruns.

It would be ironic if the conventions were diminished by a decision by television that they no longer are worth extensive coverage. It was coverage of the political conventions a generation ago that moved television news into its modern era.

Leaving The Door Open

DALLAS — When his senior staff tried to settle the Republican internal tax dispute once and for all, President Reagan widened a philosophical split inside his party that is turning a Democratic blooper into a triumph.

That view is held not only by the congressional Young Turks fighting for an anti-tax hike plank in the platform. The professional operatives at the Reagan-Bush campaign agree that Reagan's plea to keep his tax-increase options open was a mindless political blunder that protects Walter F. Mondale from suffering for his high-tax gambit.

Indeed, as the Platform Committee began its work here Monday, a week in advance of the national convention, concerns were voiced by loyal Republicans about their president, despite his substantial lead against Mondale. His handling of the tax issue suggests control over his actions by the West Wing of the White House without reference to rank-and-file Republican sentiment.

It had seemed that Reagan and the Republicans were coming together against taxes. Vacationing in Santa Barbara, Reagan had followed his natural instincts to virtually write off higher taxes. The platform chairman, Rep. Trent Lott of Mississippi, rejected White House overtures for yet another backstage negotiating session to pound out a compromise plank.

But James A. Baker III, the mighty White House chief of staff, cut off his Texas vacation and lunched in California with Reagan. Then the president issued his tax-increase-as-a-last-resort statement to the consternation of nearly everyone just arriving in Dallas.

Sen. Robert Kasten of Wisconsin, who heads the platform subcommittee considering taxes, was disconsolate. He told ex-Transportation Secretary Drew Lewis, White House liason on the platform, that the president's contradictory statements on taxes were doing himself and the party no good.

As the president's faithful servant, Lewis could not agree — publicly. But friends report Lewis, Republican National Chairman Frank Fahrenkopf and other loyalists are most unhappy by what Baker hath wrought. Nobody in Dallas was given more than an hour's advance warning of Reagan's "last resort."

Reagan-Bush operatives attempted a classical political diversion: a press conference assailing Rep. Geraldine Ferraro for not releasing her husband's income tax returns. The bad old Republican habit of responding to policy trouble with tactical tomfoolery came a cropper when reporters pointed out that Vice President George Bush does not release his tax returns.

More pertinent were quiet efforts by Dr. Martin Anderson, an old Reagan servitor who softened right-wing initiatives on the 1976 and 1980 platforms. Anderson urged Kasten to leave the president some room on taxes (called "wiggle room" in the West Wing).

George Gallup

Poll

PRINCETON, N.J. — Geraldine Ferraro's selection as the Democratic vice president candidate comes at a time of growing public willingness to vote for women for political office at the local, state and national levels:

—In a just-completed national survey, nine in 10 Americans (90 percent) say they would vote for a qualified woman for top official or mayor of their city or community, an increase of 7 percentage points since a 1975 survey.

—A similar percentage, 87 percent say they would vote for a woman for governor of their state if she were qualified for the job. In 1975, the figure was 81 percent.

—Today, 91 percent say they would vote for a woman from their district for Congress. In the earlier survey, 88 percent expressed a willingness to do so.

—Public support for a woman for president has also increased from the high level recorded in 1975. Currently 78 percent, compared to 73 percent in 1975, say they would vote for a qualified woman for president. These recent findings represent a dramatic change from 1937, when the measurement was started, when only 31 percent said they would be willing to vote for a female president.

While support for a woman president today is two and one-half times as high as it was in 1937, nearly one-fourth of the electorate opposes the idea of a woman in the Oval Office or is undecided.

A Gallup survey last month shed light on this opposition: voters feel that a female president would stack up to a male in only one of six major areas of presidential responsibility. The public's greatest reservations about the qualifications of a female president are in foreign affairs — including dealing with the situation in Central America and handling our relations with the Soviet Union.

Men also come out ahead on dealing the economic conditions and unemployment. Only on improving the quality of life are women seen as more able than men.

Nevertheless, in broad terms, three in four Americans believe the nation would be governed as well, or better, if more women held public office, according to the current survey.

Uptrend In Support Among Both Sexes

The growth since 1975 in willingness to vote for women for local, state and national offices has occured about equally among both sexes. And, as in the earlier survey, the current support for women in political office is just as strong among men as among women.

The uptrend in public support for women in local, state and national political office parallels an increase in the number of women actually holding office. Ten years ago, there were only 16 women serving in Congress, all in the House. This year there are 24 women on Capitol Hill: 22 in the House and two in the Senate.

In governors' mansions, statehouses and city halls, the rise in the number of female officeholders has been even more impressive. In 1974 there were no female governors (Ella Grasso was elected governor of Connecticut that year but did not take office until 1975), 519 state representatives and only 91 state senators. This year, one governor, 816 state representatives and 177 state senators are women. Also, 86 cities with population over 30,000 have female mayors, in contrast with 12 a decade ago.

Following is the question on a woman for president and the trend:

"If your party nominated a woman for president, would you vote for her if she were qualified for the job?"

Woman For President

The results are based on in-person interviews with 1,579 adults, 18 and older, conducted in more than scientifically selected localities across the nation during the period July 27-30.

For results based on samples of this size, one can say with 95 percent confidence that the error attributable to sampling and other random effects could be 3 percentage points in either direction.

A Crusade Is Launched

For those who participated, the gathering on Smith Island in Core Sound on Dec. 28, 1940, was a solemn occasion. It marked the beginning of a crusade, a determined drive for world federation.

The group was there at the invitation of Robert Lee Humber, a Greenville native, lawyer and citizen of the world who had lived in Paris until earlier that year. Then he had fled with his French wife and two sons only a few hours before the French capital fell to the advancing Germans.

Humber, a graduate of Wake Forest and Harvard, Rhodes scholar and student at the Sorbonne, who had made a tidy fortune as an oil company executive and some fortunate investments in oil stocks, also carried with him a profound conviction that world peace could be achieved only through a world government with power to enforce its anti-war edicts.

Humber described the group he had invited to the assemblage on Smith Island as friends and acquaintances who comprised a "cross section of America." They included a judge, a preacher, an editor, a legislator, a filling station operator, a doctor, farmers, fishermen, carpenters and a boatwright. The meeting place was a small body of land that had been in Humber's family since 1723 when it was incorporated into the dowry of a Smith girl upon her marriage.

Humber fed his guests barbeque and expounded for an hour on his theory of world peace and read them a beautifully composed resolution urging world federation to bring it about. Then, in his characteristic quiet manner, he smiled and said, "What is your pleasure, gentlemen."

For a long interval his listeners kept their seats under the spreading oaks. They listened to the sigh of the wind in the trees and the muffled roar of the ocean upon the distant beach. Then Judge Luther Hamilton rose and broke the silence.

"My friends," he said in measured tones, "as far as I am concerned, this is the most historic moment of my life. Little did I dream that we were being called here today to pass judgment on what I consider the most important issue before mankind."

One by one the other members of the group voiced their approbation in varying degrees of eloquence. A Methodist minister called it a "simple application of the Christian gospel." C.S. Gibbs volunteered to offer a resolution at the next session of the North Carolina General Assembly.

Their reaction convinved Humber that his ideas were sound but that a groundswell of public opinion was necessary before Congress could be persuaded to consider it seriously. So he set out to build up that groundswell. He took his battle to colleges, universities, high schools, hotel lobbies — anywhere he could find an audience. The following year, the North Carolina Legislature became the first to endorse world federation.

While at Harvard, Humber had watched with fascination the efforts to achieve peace through a League of Nations. He studied the League Covenant and found it remarkable similar to the articles of Confederation which had loosely united the American colonies during the Revolution. Convinced that the league would fail, Humber began to ask himself, "If not the League of Nations, then what?" The answer seemed to be "law"

He continued his study at Oxford, and in Paris he watched at close range the operations. His misgivings and aprehensions began to give way to definite conclusions:

"Order can be maintained only by law ... All history proves the same ...

"Diplomacy can never produce peace for it relies for its enforcement upon war ... The virtue of law is that it is enforced upon the 'culprit' without implicating the innocent ... Diplomacy must be applied collectively to a whole nation without regard for individual innocence or guilt ..."

As for the United Nations, Humber saw in it the same weaknesses that had made the League of Nations a failure. He considered international law a fiction and asserted there is no court on earth before which a nation can be summoned against its will. The only recourse for aggrieved nations is the battlefield.

He voiced these conclusions eloquently, spreading his message. "Anywhere anything would meet, I would address it," he recalled. Lawmakers began to get the message. Within a few years 15 other states endorsed world federation. In addition to North Carolina, these included Alabama, Connecticut, Florida, Georgia, Lousiana, Massachusetts, Maryland, Missouri, New Hampshire, New Jersey, Oklahoma, Rhode Island, Tennessee, Utah and Virginia.

Although Humber continued to preach the need for achieving peace through a world federation and he was awarded the annual World Peace Award of the American Freedom Association in 1967, his drive reached its peak in May 1947 when the Missouri Legislature adopted the Humber resolution for World Federation. After that it lost its momentum and began to decline.

So much so that when the man who had been called the White Knight of World Federation died in 1970, the obituaries, while noting his efforts for world peace, said that the leading role he played in creating the North Carolina Museum of Art was his most significant achievement.

Humber, whose family settled in Greenville after it fled Paris, represented Pitt County in the state Senate from 1959 to 1963 and also was instrumental in founding what is now Pitt Community College.

Complaint Filed

GREENSBORO (AP) — Sumitoma Electric Research Triangle Inc. has filed a complaint in U.S. District Court in Greensboro in an attempt to end Corning Glass Works' exclusive patents for making fiber optics.

Sumitomo, a subsidiary of Sumitomo Electric Industries Ltd. of Osaka, Japan, has a $50 million research laboratory and plant under construction in Research Triangle Park to make fiber optic cables to transmit voice, video and data signals with light.

The complaint "seeks clarification of SERT's right to operate its Research Triangle plant without interference from Corning based upon threats of patent litigation."

Grandmother Freed

BURGAW, N.C. (AP) — A 70-year-old grandmother has been released under $500 bond after Pender County sheriff's deputies seized 13 marijuana plants from her garden.

Georgeanna Corbett of Burgaw told officers that she did not own the plants, Capt. L.J. Shepard said. She was charged with possession with intent to manufacture, sell and deliver marijuana, Shepard said.

The marijuana was growing in rows with corn and okra, with the tallest marijuana plant more than seven feet tall, he said.

Teen-Ager Finds $63,000

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Wally Wimmer is pumping gas at his father's south Charlotte gas station this summer and he saves his money, but when the opportunity to make a quick buck came his way, he considered it.

But when the 14-year-old found a bag of money containing more than $63,000, he gave it back.

Keeping the money crossed Wimmer's mind, he said, "but it just didn't seem right."

Wimmer's honesty ended a bout of anxiety for John Hovis of Carolina Cooling Supply, who had lost the bag earlier in the day after leaving it on the back of his truck, according to Charlotte police officer J.M. Jacobs.

Wimmer found the bag about 25 yards from Hovis' house.

General Is Promoted

RALEIGH (AP) — Brig. Gen. Alan Craig Roland of Lenoir was promoted to the rank of major general in the North Carolina National Guard in ceremonies Friday at the guard center in Raleigh.

Roland is serving as deputy commanding general, reserve components, Second U.S. Army, in Fort Gillem, Ga.

Aflatoxin Laboratories

RALEIGH (AP) — Four temporary aflatoxin testing laboratories operated by the North Carolina Department of Agriculture will go into operation around the first of September, Commissioner Jim Graham announced.

The laboratories in Edenton, Goldsboro, Greenville and Whiteville will reduce the load placed on the permanent labs in Raleigh and Salisbury. The four will remain open as long as they are needed.

Aflatoxin is a toxin produced by aspergillus flavus mold and can affect corn, the fifth largest cash crop in North Carolina. When the problem is severe, it makes the corn unfit for human or animal consumption.

Beer-Drinker Charged

BURGAW, N.C. (AP) — A 16-year-old boy who lost a bet about how much beer he could drink has been charged with first-degree murder in the stabbing death of one of the bet's winners, authorities say.

Pender County Sheriff's Capt. L.J. Shepard said Vincent Malloy of Maple Hill was charged in the death of Gregory Pickett, 21, also of Maple Hill, on July 16. Witnesses said Malloy bet Pickett and several youths that if he couldn't drink a six-pack of beer within 30 minutes, the others could whip him "like a child," Shepard said.

Witnesses said after Malloy lost the bet he submitted to the whipping. Pickett, one of the winners, later died of a stab wound in the chest from a pocket knife, Shepard said. Malloy was freed on $3,000 bond.

Marines Returning Home

CAMP LEJEUNE, N.C. (AP) — More than 1,800 Marines and sailors of the 24th Marine Amphibious Unit are returning home Thursday from Norway, where they participated in NATO Exercise Teamwork '84.

The unit is scheduled to arrive at the Morehead City port that morning before being bused to Camp Lejeune.

The unit left for Norway Feb. 18, then continued to the Mediterranean in April and assumed the role of landing force for the 6th Fleet. While there, several hundred Marines of the 24th Unit served ashore in Beirut, providing embassy security.

Those duties in Beirut ended July 31, almost two years after Marines had entered the city as part of a multinational peacekeeping force.

Just Celebrating And Socializing

Tar Heels Expect Few Fights As GOP Holds Convention

By MARY ANNE RHYNE
Associated Press Writer

DALLAS (AP) — North Carolinians say they see few fights awaiting them at the Republican National Convention, but that will leave more time for celebrating and socializing.

"If ever there was a cut and dried convention, I expect this one is going to be," North Carolina Sen. Jesse Helms said.

Helms, N.C. delegation chairman, arrived in Dallas a week early with about a dozen staff members prepared to do battle over the party platform but conservatives already were in charge and he did not have to offer lots of amendments or suggestions to get a platform he liked.

Most other delegates were scheduled to arrive Sunday, with the convention opening at 10 a.m. Monday.

"I'm 65 years old and if I want to go to eight or 10 (conventions) I need to get started," said state Rep. John Brown of Wilkes County. "I really wanted to go to this one," he said. "It should be a real lovefeast."

Frances Whitfield of Goldsboro also was excited about the prosects for a harmonious convention.

"I hope we do not have a floor fight," she said. "I want to come back from Dallas with the same friends I went with."

Sen. John East said he's going to the convention because he wants to "be a part of launching the president on the road to victory."

Mary Jane Hollyday of Asheville arrived early with Helms to work with the Committee on Resolutions. They helped keep planks opposing tax increases, supporting prayer in schools, advocating a constitutional amendment banning abortion, supporting space-based missile defense systems and supporting a crackdown on pornography.

Helms said he does not expect to speak to the full convention but 4th District congressional candidate Bill Cobey is scheduled to speak briefly Monday with five other congressional candidates.

The gathering of Republicans from across the nation gives Helms a fundraising opportunity. Last week, he held fundraisers in Dallas, Abilene and Lubbock. He scheduled a $500-a ticket luncheon in Houston for Monday and convention flyers were prepared for a private $500-a-couple reception in Dallas on Thursday.

GOP Gubernatorial candidate Jim Martin, now representing the 9th District in Congress, did not seek a position as a delegate but was expected to visit the North Carolina group Tuesday in Dallas.

North Carolina's Republican National Committeewoman, Mary Alice Warren of Winston-Salem, will be working as assistant tally clerk during the convention. That means she will help count any votes by delegates.

The delegation will get a clear view of speakers on the beige and brown podium from their red seats on the blue carpet of the convention floor. They'll be sitting to the left of delegates from California, President Reagan's home state. They are behind four state delegations, including New Jersey, and in front of Georgia delegates.

Flaherty is pleased with the delegation's hotel, the Plaza of the Americas. It is a 30-minute walk from the downtown convention center, one of the closer hotels. Delegates will have buses to shuttle them to the center or they can catch a "Hop-A-Bus," which is painted pink with rabbit ears on top.

"Our housing is absolutely one of the better hotels," said state party chairman David Flaherty, who was vice-chairman of the convention's housing committee.

The hotel has everything delegates could need, including clothing and specialty stores, a five-star French restaurant, a health club and an ice skating rink. Some well-known television personalities, including Diane Sawyer and Andy Rooney of CBS, are staying there also.

For those who watch the television series "Dallas," the hotel faces the office building where J.R. was shot.

The city already has rolled out the red, white and blue carpet with bumper stickers, buttons and caps that welcome visitors to the convention.

Oil Lease Sales Bring Bankruptcy Petition

WILSON, N.C. (AP) — A Wilson County couple who sold more than $6 million worth of oil leases to more than 400 people has filed for bankruptcy, according to court documents.

The investors, most from the Rocky Mount-Wilson area, put the money in three oil ventures undertaken near Shreveport, La., by Speight Oil Co. of Louisiana.

The company is owned by Elma Speight Farmer of Rocky Mount. Earlier this month, Farmer and his wife, Mary Alice Parker Farmer, jointly filed a voluntary Chapter 7 bankruptcy petition in U.S. Bankruptcy Court in Wilson.

The Farmers claim assets of just over $2 million and debts of about $12.2 million.

Listed in the Farmers' 156-page petition are the names of investors and the amount of investments made in Speight Oil Company's three ventures, which have thus far been unsuccessful.

The Farmers list 706 creditors and unsecured debts of $9,926,083, most of which is money investors put into the oil ventures. They also claim secured debts of $2.3 million. Speight Oil Co. has been in business since 1982.

Speight Oil Co. oil ventures prompted two civil suits last year by some investors, but neither suit has been settled and the bankruptcy petition automatically halts litigation in both.

In April 1983, a group of 10 Wilson area residents who invested in the ventures sued Farmer and others for more than $1 million in U.S. District Court, claiming the ventures were misrepresented.

In July 1983, 11 Wilson area residents and three businesses filed a joint $8 million lawsuit against the Farmers in Wilson County Superior Court over the same ventures.

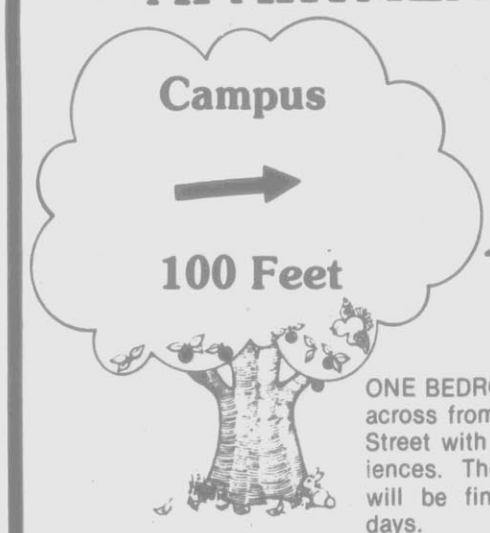

The plaintiffs claimed the Farmers breached their contract, conspired with a Louisiana company to defraud them, engaged in unfair and deceptive trade practices and failed to register securities.

Rocket Strikes Tanker

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — A Panamanian-registered tanker laden with 77,000 tons of Kuwaiti fuel oil was hit Saturday by "one rocket fired from one plane," setting its main tank ablaze, the captain said. It was the second attack on Persian Gulf shipping in four days.

Neither Iran or Iraq, which have been at war at the northern end of the gulf for almost four years, claimed responsibility. Gulf shipping sources said they believed Iran was responsible.

The captain, who identified himself as R. Stevanis, told The Associated Press in a ship-to-shore radio contact that the fire was quickly extinguished, there were no injuries, and that the 47,310-ton Endeavour was heading under its own power for the gulf port of Dubai.

Stevanis said the ship was sailing to England when the attack occurred about 100 miles east of Bahrain in the southern part of the gulf.

The incident took place in the same area where unidentified planes last Wednesday fired two rockets at the Pakistani tanker Johar. Those rockets missed. The Johar was en route to Saudi Arabia to load crude oil at the Ras Tanura terminal when attacked.

Lebanese Official Raps U.S.

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Prime Minister Rashid Karami charged Saturday that the United States had done nothing to stop "inhuman repression" by Israel in occupied southern Lebanon. Karami said his government may take its complaints to the U.N. Security Council.

Karami told reporters after a 1½-hour meeting with President Amin Gemayel that a final decision on lodging a complaint with the 15-nation council and seeking intervention against Israel would be made at a Cabinet meeting Wednesday.

"The United States has exercised no pressure to stop this inhuman repression" in southern Lebanon, Karami said. "So we are discussing a case at the U.N. Security Council to put things in their right course."

Local radio stations said Karami and Nabih Berri, the state minister for southern Lebanon, had appealed to the Reagan administration several times in the past two weeks to bring pressure to bear on Israel. The broadcasts said the pleas were conveyed through Reginald Bartholomew, U.S. ambassador to Lebanon.

"The message we've got is that the United States is totally indifferent," Karami said.

U.S. officials in Beirut have said that the Lebanese must work out their own solution with Israel. They have been particularly adamant about the U.S. maintaining a neutral stance since Lebanon last March canceled the U.S.-brokered troop withdrawal agreement it negotiated with Israel last year.

Karami's statement followed reports of new travel restrictions imposed by the Israeli army at the Bater-Jezzine crossing, now the only gateway linking the Israeli-occupied southern third of the country with the rest of Lebanon.

State and privately owned radio stations said Israeli authorities put up posters at the crossing that said taxis and cars would be banned from the gateway starting Sunday and trucks starting Aug. 29.

The ban means civilians would have to cross into and out of the south on foot, and truck owners would have to unload their cargos and carry them across.

Prof Sees Military Potential In Japan

KUALA LUMPUR, Malaysia (AP) — Japan's technology is so advanced that it can be easily and readily converted to military use, a New Zealand professor said at a forum at the Institute of Strategic Studies here.

W.T. Roy of the University of Waikato, in Hamilton, New Zealand, said Japanese manufacturers were already producing, under license from U.S. companies, sophisticated military equipment such as F-15 fighters and P3C maritime patrol planes.

He said Mitsubishi was making F-15s under license from McDonnell Douglas, and the Kawasaki steelworks were producing P3Cs under agreement with Lockheed.

He said such agreements with the United States have put Japan "on par with NATO in respect of conditions for the transfer of military technology."

Japan's advanced technology in metallurgy and communications is now being transferred to the United States under civilian joint venture agreements, but could readily be applied to military use in Japan, Roy said.

Police Fire Leaves 100 Wounded In India

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Police fired to halt demonstrators and wounded as many as 100 people Saturday on the third day of protests against the ouster of the Andhra Pradesh state government, a state police spokesman said.

No deaths were reported in Saturday's unrest, but state authorities said 19 people had been killed in unrest following the central government's dismissal of the state government on Thursday. The authorities did not elaborate.

Rioters set fire Saturday to two railroad stations and 21 government buses in Andhra Pradesh, a large southeastern Indian state of 55 million people, the officials said. State police said demonstrators blocked trains.

The officials spoke on condition they were not further identified.

The protests followed Prime Minister Indira Gandhi's action in dismissing the 19-month-old administration of opposition Chief Minister Nandamuri Taraka Rama Rao on Thursday, on the ground it had lost its legislative majority through party defections.

Critics of Mrs. Gandhi saw it as another move to strengthen her political base before national elections which are due to be called by January.

Authorities on Saturday banned public assembly by more than four people in Hyderabad, the state capital, on the eve of a scheduled public protest meeting of opposition parties.

Rama Roa meanwhile said he would "parade" 170 supporting deputies before Indian President Zail Singh in New Delhi on Monday to demonstrate that he still enjoyed majority support in the 295-member Andhra Pradesh legislature.

Rama Rao's Telegu Desam (Telegu-speaking nation) Party defeated Mrs. Gandhi's ruling Congress Party in state elections in January 1983.

"My dismissal is a mockery of democratic conventions and a blatant abuse of power by Mrs. Gandhi. I will fight it to the last," Rama Rao said Saturday.

Doctors advised him to rest after he complained of chest pains Saturday, but the 60-year-old former movie idol said, "I will not rest until democracy is restored in the state and the country."

He was dismissed one day after he returned home from a heart bypass operation in the United States.

Irish Stage Quiet March

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — After three nights of riots, thousands of Protestants paraded through Belfast on Saturday to protest what they said was police brutality against suspected Loyalist guerrillas and to demand an end to police use of informers.

Police wearing bullet-proof vests and carrying automatic weapons lined the streets as more than 20 bands led marchers past shops burned out in the rioting. There were no reports of violence.

Police estimated 3,000 demonstrators marched behind the bands. Some witnesses put the number of Protestant demonstrators as high as 10,000.

In London, meanwhile, about 3,000 demonstrators demanding removal of British troops from Northern Ireland paraded through the capital to mark the 15th anniversary this past week of troops being sent to the province.

A black wreath in memory of Sean Downs was carried by a small delegation to Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's official 10 Downing St. residence. She is vacationing in Austria.

Downs, a 22-year-old Catholic, was killed by police firing plastic bullets at a pro-IRA rally in Belfast last Sunday.

Three days of rioting by Protestants in this capital of Northern Ireland followed a courtroom scuffle last Wednesday between police and 27 purported Protestant terrorists fingered by confessed gunman William "Budgie" Allen.

Women relatives of the accused men threw plastic bags of urine at police in Belfast Crown Court. Eight police and several defendants were injured in the resulting melee.

The defendants face 227 charges, ranging from murdering Catholics to membership in the outlawed Ulster Volunteer Force, a Protestant terrorist group.

Allen is the latest "supergrass," or major informer, to turn on his former comrades. More than 200 Protestant and Catholic extremists have been convicted on informers' testimony in the last two years.

Saturday's march was led by women relatives of suspects named by Allen. They carried banners reading: "Smash the Supergrass System" and "We Demand Segregation for Loyalist Prisoners."

The mainly Catholic Irish Republican Army has been waging a guerrilla war to unite the Irish Republic in the south with Northern Ireland, a British province.

Infant Survives Massive Cancer

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — A 5-month-old boy whose life was threatened by a massive throat tumor that grew so rapidly it accounted for 15 percent of his body weight has come home from the hospital, and doctors say the "miracle baby" now shows no trace of cancer.

Doctors were stunned when Dennis Berghuis entered Orlando Regional Medical Center three months ago and doubted the infant would survive.

But on Friday, Peggy Berghuis, 20, took her son home.

"My miracle baby," she cooed to Dennis as happy hospital staffers watched them leave.

Dennis' ordeal began when his grandmother noticed a lump on his neck. The next day, he began having trouble breathing and was taken to Orlando Regional.

"We felt at first that he had a pneumonia or a lung infection," said Dr. Joseph Chiaro, the medical center's associate director of medical education for pediatrics.

"Then we got X-rays and other tests and realized that the lung problem and the mass at the base of his neck were related. The mass ... hampered his breathing. The mass was growing rather quickly," he said.

Although the tumor, known as a neuroblastoma, isn't unusual in children, doctors said the speed at which Dennis' tumor grew and the size it reached were extraordinary.

The growth spread into his chest. It wrapped itself around all the major structures in his neck, affecting the windpipe and the major blood vessels into his brain.

Chiaro said a team of specialists decided to try chemotherapy to shrink the growing mass, which at that point accounted for 15 percent of the baby's weight. It apparently worked.

NO MORE CANCER — Little Dennis Michael Berghuis, 5 months old, apparently is surviving a battle with a cancerous tumor that once accounted for 15 percent of his weight. The child has gone home from the Orlando, Fla., Regional Medical Center to continue his recovery. Four surgeons removed the growth in May. Doctors say the next two years will be critical for his survival. (AP Laserphoto)

"But then the respiratory problems got worse. It was hard for him to breathe. He couldn't swallow. They put a tube in his trachea that kept him alive until the surgeons could go in and take the mass out," Chiaro said.

On May 23, four surgeons worked for five hours to successfully remove the entire growth from the child's frail body.

But the most dangerous period followed the operation.

"For 14 days there was no movement," said Mrs. Berghuis. "No eye movement. Nothing."

But then, "slowly and surely, 'Bergy,' as we call him, came around," Chiaro said. "He's a tough little kid. It was a very rewarding experience."

Mrs. Berghuis said she visited her son every day, while her husband Francis, a 25-year-old disabled veteran on a pension, came to the hospital whenever he could find someone to care for their other son, 17-month-old Justin.

Although the family had insurance, they had to sell a home in Ocala and a pickup truck to help meet expenses of about $140,000.

Dennis will be considered cured if there is no recurrence of the cancer in two years, doctors said.

His only problem now, they said, is that he is a little underweight. He weighs 7 pounds, 3 ounces, less than the normal 13 to 16 pounds most children his age weigh.

"We have to get his weight back and make sure the cancer doesn't come back," Berghuis said. "We hope this will be an inspiration for others in our position. They can do wonderful things with cancer these days."

Chance For Loans Draws Long Lines

HAMMOND, La. (AP) — Banks provided food and shelter and even planned a cookout for hundreds of people who waited in line — some for at least five days — to apply for $100 million in low-interest mortgages.

"It's exciting to see people who are that anxious to get into a home of their own," said Nelly Stanga, executive vice president of Firstbanc Federal in Hammond. "Yesterday we gave them doughnuts and tomorrow we plan to have a cookout for them.

"We've offered them electricity and water, trying to make it as comfortable as can be."

The starting time for applications for the 30-year, 11.15 percent home loans was 9 a.m. Monday. The Louisiana Housing Finance Authority sold $100 million in bonds to help first-time home buyers.

The current commercial rate is 14.75 percent, said Jackie Williams, chief loan officer at Gonzales Federal Savings & Loan near Baton Rouge.

"We're ready for Monday morning," said Jan James of Gonzales, who was sixth in line for the $484,000 offered by Gonzales Federal. Some of those ahead of her in line said they'd been waiting since Aug. 13.

The story was much the same in other Louisiana cities, where people waited in campers, buses and lawn chairs.

At least 100 people waited Saturday in a building at the State Fair Grounds in Shreveport, where 13 Caddo and Bossier parish lenders planned to take applications for over $6 million in loans.

While prospective home-buyers in other cities waited nearly a week in line, the Caddo and Bossier lenders kept the site secret until 10 a.m. Friday, when Shreveport Mayor John Hussey made the announcement.

Plastics Fire Leaves Contaminated Runoff

FLEMINGTON, N.J. (AP) — About 600 people who fled when a fire at a plastics warehouse spewed toxic fumes returned home Saturday, but officials warned them to wash vegetables picked from gardens.

There was not much contamination in the air, but runoff from the water used to fight the Friday night blaze contained high levels of chromium and lead, two toxic metals, and smaller amounts of benzene, said state Department of Environmental Protection spokesman George Klenk.

The lack of toxic fumes was probably because "the fire was burning at such a high temperature that you had very good combustion," Klenk said, adding that because of the contaminated runoff, a surface cleanup of nearby Prescott Stream might be necessary.

Residents of the 20-block area of this central New Jersey community evacuated Friday night were allowed to return home about 2 a.m. Saturday, said Patrolman Travis Slaughter.

Thousands Greet Return Of Jazz

NEWPORT, R.I. (AP) — Jazz returned to its summer home Saturday, 30 years after the first Newport Jazz Festival began the tradition of outdoor summer jazz concerts.

More than 5,000 jazz fans from several states gathered to hear such artists as Dizzy Gillespie, Ray Charles, David Sanborn, Flora Purim and Airto, the Michel Petrucciani Trio and Tiger's Baku.

"It's nice," said pianist Petrucciani, the second musician to play. "It's like a lot of festivals. People outside. Everybody's happy."

The festival got under way at 11 a.m. with historic Fort Adams as a backdrop as passing yachts dropped anchor. The stone fort was built to protect Narragansett Bay from the British during the War of 1812, but it was never used.

Impresario George T. Wein produced the first Newport Jazz Festival in 1954, and its success spawned summer jazz concert series throughout the nation. He now produces festivals in London, Japan, and Nice, France.

"For us it is a special year," Wein said. "We began 30 years ago, and after a 10-year absence from 1971 to 1981, we came back to Newport." The festival was held in New York City during that decade.

"This year, we have a new arrangement with a new sponsor," he said. "It will assure the festival staying in Newport and assure the tradition."

JVC, the Japanese audio and video electronics company, has agreed to sponsor the festival through 1986.

Saturday's audience was receptive, with listeners more than willing to get up from their lawn chairs to give standing ovations. Many wore swimsuits under the partly cloudy sky.

Opening the festival was the fast-paced, funky Tiger's Baku. Petrucciani played a quieter sound, including a few blues-influenced pieces.

"I wish we could have played longer," Petrucciani said of his 30-minute set.

Flora Purim and Airto followed with their Brazilian sound. The soulful Ray Charles was the day's headliner. A jam session with several of the musicians was scheduled for the end of each day at about 6 p.m.

Scheduled for Sunday were Miles Davis, B.B. King, Dave Brubeck, Stan Getz and Ronald Shannon Jackson and the Decoding Society.

The rest of the nation will get to see this year's festival in the fall. The Public Broadcasting Service taped the musicians for a one-hour television special called "When Jazz Comes Home To Newport."

Kennedy Son Leaves Hospital

HYANNIS, Mass. (AP) — Sen. Edward M. Kennedy took his youngest son, Patrick, home from the hospital Saturday, the day after the senator's car collided with a plumber's pickup truck near their Cape Cod compound.

Doctors said the 17-year-old youth could go home from Cape Cod Hospital Friday after treating him for a slight concussion and cuts and bruises. But the senator said he thought his son should be held overnight for observation, according to family spokesman Edward Martin.

The 51-year-old senator drove Patrick back to the family's compound in Hyannis Saturday morning, Martin said.

"Probably, he's out for a sail with his father and Teddy (Jr.)," said Martin. "They generally sail when the weather's nice like this."

The senator and Leonard J. Bell, 63, a local plumber identified as the truck's driver, were treated for cuts and bruises Friday.

Bell face court Monday morning on a charge of driving to endanger, said Hyannis Police Sgt. Frank J.McKenna.

Bell's pickup truck apparently veered head-on into Kennedy's 1973 Pontiac convertible about 1:40 p.m. Friday, McKenna said.

Another passenger in the car, Kennedy cousin Thomas Gargan, 13, was not injured, Martin said.

Martin said Kennedy returned to the hospital Friday evening to visit his son for 15 minutes and also visited Bell at his home.

"He's known him (Bell) a long time," Martin aid.

Kennedy was driving the boys to the Bank of New England in Hyannis to see a gold coin collection salvaged from a shipwreck when the accident happened, Martin said.

Cause Of Transit Crash Investigated

CHICAGO (AP) — Federal safety investigators began an inquiry Saturday into the rush-hour collision of two commuter trains — after one train reported brake trouble — in a crash that killed one person and injured 47.

Nine representatives of the National Transportation Safety Board met with Chicago Transit Authority officials Saturday morning to discuss possible causes of the accident, which occurred around 5 p.m. Friday afternoon rush hour, said authority spokesman Don Yabush.

It was the first fatal crash involving a CTA train in seven years, he said.

Federal investigators planned to examine the two eight-car trains at a rail yard in the suburb of Skokie, Yabush said.

CTA chairman Michael Cardilli said the lead train's motorman apparently noticed a minor problem with the train's braking system and had stopped the train about 1,000 feet past a passenger station to investigate.

Initial reports showed that the lead train rolled backward down an incline into the second train, which had stopped when the first train came to a halt in front of it as it was leaving the station, Cardilli said.

Tension Between Red-Garbed Guru And Oregon Neighbors Is Growing

RAJNEESHPURAM, Ore. (AP) — In a daily ritual repeated around the world, Bhagwan Shree Rajneesh's disciples fall to their knees and bow toward Oregon.

But the Indian guru's reception in the state where he settled three years ago has been less than hospitable. Threats and lawsuits against his red-garbed disciples are numerous, and they in turn talk of "civil war."

Some Oregonians have been quite direct in expressing their suspicion of the Rajneeshees. Bumper stickers reading "Better Dead Than Red" and bearing Rajneesh's picture are pasted to cars, and some residents wear T-shirts with his picture inside a target.

Rajneesh has drawn 1,700 followers to Rancho Rajneesh, a former sheep ranch in central Oregon, and its commune-city, Rajneeshpuram. The sect worldwide claims 350,000 to 400,000 "sannyasins," or disciples, and as many as 1 million supporters who are not disciples.

The disciples have spent $100 million to turn the 64,000-acre ranch into a thriving farm — crops grown on 1,970 acres are expected to bring in $1.4 million this year. They toil 84 hours a week, many for little or no pay, for the privilege of living near Rajneesh, whom they call an "enlightened master."

Rajneesh teaches a blend of Eastern religious tradition and Western humanism as a means of reaching enlightenment, comparing himself to Jesus and Buddha and predicting global holocaust by the end of this century.

"No ordinary Noah's arks are going to save humanity," Rajneesh said last year. "You can only escape within, and that's what I teach."

Despite the dollars the Rajneeshees have pumped into Oregon's economy, an array of lawsuits challenge Rajneeshpuram's very existence.

The Oregon Court of Appeals ruled in June that the incorporation of Rajneeshpuram on land zoned for farming violated Oregon's laws. In a separate case, the court held that the city improperly annexed 119 acres of land. The Rajneeshees are appealing.

The state attorney general has filed suit alleging the town violates the constitutional separation of church and state. And the Legislature passed a law last year that cuts off most state financing to Rajneeshpuram until its legal status is resolved. New building on the land is prevented by a court order.

The federal Immigration and Naturalization Service is investigating Rajneesh and some of his followers, and an INS memo obtained by the San Francisco Chronicle said: "Perhaps this is wishful thinking, but there is speculation that ... the pressure applied ... to the immigration situation may cause them to pick up stakes and leave the United States."

The guru, who hasn't spoken in public in three years, holds a visa as a religious worker, but his application for permanent residency still is pending.

His silence was shaken Friday when a judge hearing a $1 million defamation suit against Rajneesh and two disciples threatened to issue an arrest warrant if he did not appear in court to testify. Rajneesh finally agreed to a videotaped deposition, to be taken Sunday at Rajneeshpuram.

After Rajneeshpuram was incorporated in 1982, city officials estimated 4,000 people would live here by the year 2000. University of Oregon researchers found that the average resident is 34, college-educated and made about $23,000 annually before moving to the commune.

But the Rajneeshees, faced with the possible loss of their city through court rulings, set up another base of operations in nearby Antelope, filling most of the elected positions and enraging the 40 residents, who tried — unsuccessfuuly — to disincorporate the town.

The move into Antelope, combined with the vigorous manner in which some disciples defend themselves and reports that the Rajneeshees are stockpiling firearms.

Conservatives Fearful Of GOP 'Double Cross'

By W. DALE NELSON
Associated Press Writer

DALLAS (AP) — Conservative activists said Saturday they are pleased with the Republican platform but fear President Reagan and other GOP leaders may "double cross" them by going back on the platform's pledge not to increase taxes

"I would not advise you to bet the farm that they are going to keep the promises in this platform any better than they did the last platform," said Richard A. Viguerie, chairman of the Populist Conservative Tax Foundation.

"We fear that we have seen nothing to date, that in 1985 both Republicans and Democrats are very likely to push the most substantial tax increases in U.S. history in order to take care of the deficit," said Don McAlvaney, chairman of the American Committe for Tangible Assets.

Paul Weyrich, chairman of Coalitions for America, said, "There are those in the Republican establishment who are determined to raise taxes and will attempt to do so regardless."

Viguerie warned, "If, next January, the Republican establishment goes ahead and sticks it to the taxpayers again, the GOP will be ripped apart. The anti-tax Republicans would consider it a double-cross of the highest order."

At a news conference, Viguerie and leaders of other conservative groups said they are generally satisfied with the GOP platform, although they consider it a little less conservative than the one adopted in 1980.

"I am happy enough with it," Viguerie told reporters. "I am convinced the president wants to do the right thing, but I think it is an open question, based on history, whether we will have a tax increase."

Howard Phillips, chairman of the Conservative Caucus, said the writers of the proposed GOP platform "sent a message to the Washington establishment and to the country that at the grass-roots levels, the Republican Party is a conservative party."

"I think our message to the Republicans is that if they don't want to squander the likely landslide that will fall into their hands as a consequence of the failures of the Democratic Party to appeal to the anti-liberal majority in this country, now is the time to get on the right track," Phillips said. "If they don't do it soon, we could face economic difficulties in 1985 and 1986 that would cause disaster for conservative candidates running on the Republican ticket."

Viguerie also warned that if the Reagan administration is returned to office and raises taxes, conservatives might conclude there is little difference between the parties and and support a third party instead.

Max Hugel, former deputy director of the CIA and an adviser to the Reagan campaign, said, "I think the president has the same conservative view as expressed in that platform."

"It is the obligation of this party to make absolutely certain that any commitment that is made to those who want to be in a position not to have to pay more taxes, they must, if they are to succeed in the future, keep to that obligation," Hugel said.

On A Roll

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan is riding a popularity wave so high that the televised Republican National Convention probably won't boost his standing in the polls, says campaign director Edward J. Rollins.

"We've got too much of a lead. We'll basically stay where we are," Rollins predicted in an interview on the eve of the Dallas meeting. His words could dampen expectations raised by the prospect of a four-night celebration on prime time TV.

The highlight of the week comes Thursday when Reagan delivers what Rollins describes as a "rip-roaring" acceptance speech.

Normally, a prime-time convention provides a candidate with a temporary surge in the polls of 5 to 15 or so points. Walter F. Mondale got just such a boost after the San Francisco convention, but it dissipated in the weeks since.

But with Reagan holding double-digit leads in the most recent polls, Rollins said he felt Reagan couldn't expect the traditional convention boost.

"All the polls have showed the president with the same kind of strength as before the Democratic Convention — a 10 to 15-point lead," Rollins said. "You can't expect at this stage for us to get much stronger just because we have a convention."

While Reagan held perhaps a 10-point lead before the Democratic convention, Mondale pulled even in the aftermath of the harmonious convention and his selection of Rep. Geraldine A. Ferraro as his running mate. But now most polls show Reagan has regained the lead by between 10 and 20 points.

Mondale Opens Midwest Swing

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Walter F. Mondale told a Farm Belt audience Saturday that Republicans have abandoned most voters — by going "so far to the right."

On the first stop of a two-day campaign swing through the Midwest, Mondale recalled that "the other day Reagan said the Democrats are so far left that they have left the country."

"I know it looks that way to them because they have gone so far to the right," Mondale told an enthusiastic crowd at a rally held in a farmers' market. "They are the ones who have abandoned the middle ground in America."

He said the GOP under Reagan has abandoned "positions over the years that even the Republican Party has taken."

Referring to the Republican convention which opens in Dallas on Monday, Nondale said, "I want as many people as possible to watch that portrait of privilege and compare it to our convention, a mirror of America."

Before launching his latest campaign sortie, Mondale told an interviewer at his Minnesota home that he expects to have a "field day" with the Republican Party platform because "if you look at where Americans stand on all the great issues that bear on our nation, they (the Republicans) are wrong."

Those issues, he said, include the federal budget deficit, taxes, arms control, the environment, civil rights, education and military spending.

Both presidential candidates are eager for the farm vote in the November election and Mondale is touring Missouri and Iowa this weekend in advance of a Reagan campaign trip to Illinois, Missouri and Iowa that starts Sunday.

Reagan Says Critics Ignoring Progress

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan said Saturday his critics are ignoring economic progress of the past four years and he said their gloomy assessments should be treated more skeptically by the news media.

With his re-election campaign about to get into full stride, Reagan said on his weekly paid political radio broadcast that liberal critics continue to say his economic program "hasn't worked" and that his plans "can't be done."

When the Urban Institute, a liberal think-tank, issued a study of the administration's economic policies last week, "it was only natural that some of the press would look for the same old doom and gloom," Reagan said.

"They didn't report that the study also said that elderly Americans have clearly done better under our policies with real gains of disposable incomes, nor that the social safety net is still largely intact for the nonworking poor," he added.

"What isn't clear is why those pessimists with so little faith in people, so little understanding of incentives, and so many bad predictions, are not more humble, and not treated a little more skeptically by the media," he concluded.

Reagan said that the liberal "old guard establishment — people who still make policies from abstract statistics, theories and models rather than looking at human behavior — have filled the airwaves with gloom, predicting our program couldn't meet our goals."

GOP ...

Republicans will showcase their leading women, as well — although none will reach so high this year as Democratic vice presidential candidate Geraldine Ferraro. U.S. Treasurer Katherine D. Ortega is delivering Monday night's keynote address, and other speakers will include Cabinet officers Elizabeth Dole and Margaret Heckler and Ambassador Jeane Kirkpatrick.

The convention marks the 20th anniversary of Reagan's emergence as a leading American conservative. His political debut came in a paid television speech in 1964 urging the election campaign of Barry Goldwater.

Reagan made a belated, unsuccessful run for the presidential nomination in 1968, eventually falling in behind the winner, Richard M. Nixon. Eight years later, after two terms as California governor, he challenged then-President Ford in a hardfought battle that wasn't lost until the convention opened in Kansas City, Mo.

In 1980, Reagan tried again, this time outdistancing a large field of candidates to sew up the nomination on the first ballot.

The convention this year begins with two sessions on Monday, with the keynote address to be delivered by Mrs. Ortega. Baker, retiring as Senate majority leader but looking ahead four years, also will speak.

On Tuesday, the main business of the convention will be routine ratification of the conservative platform — a statement of party principles that opposes any tax increase and all abortions, favors school prayer and demands enough military strength to "clearly prevail" in any armed conflict.

"The Republican Party looks at our people and sees a new dawn of the American spirit," it declares. "The Democratic Party looks at our nation and sees the twilight of the American soul."

Soviets Defend Yalta Policy

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union warned President Reagan on Saturday that no one is entitled to question the outcome of the Yalta Treaty that was used as the basis for dividing Europe after World War II.

Referring to statements Reagan made Friday to a group of Polish Americans in Washington, the official Soviet news agency Tass said that the president "challenged the post-war political setup in Europe."

Reagan said in his speech: "We (Americans) reject any interpretation of the Yalta agreement that suggests American consent for the division of Europe into spheres of influence."

Tass warned that both the 1945 Yalta agreement and the 1974 Helsinki Act on Security and Cooperation in Europe should not be reinterpreted.

"No matter what Washington says concerning the political realities of post-war Europe, no one is given (the right) to call into question the decisions of the Crimea Conference, just as the final act of the conference on security and cooperation in Europe. No one. The White House included."

Tass also accused Reagan of falling in with what the Soviets say are West German revanchists clamoring to restore the borders of Germany and other European countries to pre-World War II lines.

Reagan also praised the emeregence of the independent labor union Solidarity, now outlawed in Poland, as "a resurrection of the indomitable spirit of the Polish people."

Tass said that Reagan's pronouncements "strike the same notes as the demands made now by revanchists of all hues in West Germany. Reagan's statement directly points at the source of support for militarism and revanchist tendencies in Western Europe."

The news agency accused Reagan of distorting Polish history and failing to acknowledge the role played in World War II by Polish and Soviet soldiers.

It also mocked what it called the concern Reagan showed in his speech for Poland, saying the president had imposed sanctions against Poland that damaged the country and was "grossly intervening and continuing to intervene in the internal affairs of that sovereign state."

Reagan Let Papal Envoy Use Airplane

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration provided an Air Force plane for the Vatican ambassador to the United States to fly from California, where he had just met with the president, to the Virgin Islands for a religious service, the White House confirmed.

The ambassador, Archbishop Pio Laghi, had been invited to President Reagan's ranch near Santa Barbara, Calif., on Aug. 1 to consult about events in Poland. Reagan was at the ranch on a two-week vacation.

A private lobbying organization, the Americans United for Separation of Church and State, estimated the seven-hour flight to the U.S. Virgin Islands aboard a 14-passenger C-20 aircraft, with an Air Force crew, cost the taxpayers $16,300.

A White House spokesman, Mark Weinberg, said late Friday that the U.S. plane was the only way the archbishop could make it to St. Thomas in the Virgin Islands in time to attend the consecretation of a new bishop there. He said he "won't quarrel" with the estimated cost of the flight.

But the Americans United group, which opposed the recent establishment of full diplomatic relations between Washington and the Vatican, has protested the action in a letter to James A. Baker, the White House chief of staff.

Joe Conn, a spokesman for the group, said the letter contends "the use of a government plane and government personnel to fly a church official to a church service is an egregious violation of the principle" of the separation of church and state.

"It reflects an insensitivity to first amendment concerns," said the letter, referring to the First Amendment to the Constitution, which prohibits Congress from establishing a religion.

The letter urges the administration to account for the cost of the trip "and pay for these costs with campaign funds or other non-government resources."

Conn said a letter of protest was sent to Baker Wednesday, and was signed by Robert Maddox, the group's executive director.

Explosion Darkens Honolulu

HONOLULU (AP) — Hawaii's most populous island was blacked out early Saturday by an explosion at a power plant, shutting off electric water pumps and forcing hospitals and the heavily traveled Honolulu airport to operate on emergency generators.

The blackout on Oahu, where 80 percent of Hawaii's 1.2 million people live and where tourist hotels line the beach at Waikiki, occurred at about 12:50 a.m. Hawaii Standard Time (6:50 a.m. EDT), said Civil Defense administrator Malcolm Sussel.

Service was being gradually restored, with some areas getting their lights back in as little as 90 minutes but other areas expected to remain without power until noon.

It was Oahu's second island-wide power failure in less than 14 months.

Many residents slept through the blackout, and police and fire officials reported no major problems. But Oahu Civil Defense officials said some partly treated sewage was dumped into island waterways.

Hospitals continued operating on emergency power. Honolulu airport also switched to emergency generators, but some takeoffs and landings were reported delayed.

Hawaiian Electric Co. appealed to the public to conserve electricity, saying demand had increased as island residents woke up and raised the possibility that the limited generating units back in operation could be overloaded.

The power failure allowed partly treated sewage to be pumped into Lake Wilson, a reservoir in central Oahu, and Maunawili Stream, according to Oahu Civil Defense officials. Residents were urged to avoid swimming, fishing and boating in the waters until the pollution dissipated.

People also were asked to avoid using water because electric pumps were not operating. Police placed flares at major Honolulu intersections and urged motorists to stay off the streets while traffic signals were out of service.

The power failure occurred when an insulator in a voltage sensing device exploded at Hawaiian Electric's Kahe power plant on Oahu's southwest coast, which generates most of the island's electricity, said utility spokesman Doug Carlson.

Carlson said two generators operating at the Waiau power plant near Pearl City, about 20 miles from Honolulu, had to be shut down when the Kahe plant went off line to prevent an overload.

Shrapnel from the explosion damaged other equipment and tripped the entire power plant out of service, Carlson said.

The sensing device is located near a 138,000-volt circuit breaker, where the explosion originally was thought to have occurred, he said.

It may take technicians several days to determine the cause of the explosion, Carlson said.

The last island-wide power failure occurred on July 13, 1983, when a fire in a sugar cane field burned through a major power line.

Bogey Trims Trevino's Lead To One

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (AP) — From a potential rout, a romping run-away by Lee Trevino, it became a race.

The 44-year-old Trevino, playing about as well as possible, suddenly squandered two strokes of a once-commanding lead in the placid pond by the 18th green and opened the gates for a host of challengers going into Sunday's final round of the 66th PGA National Championship.

"I hit it in the water but it didn't dampen anything," Trevino insisted Saturday after he'd salvaged a third round 67 despite the closing double bogey that trimmed his margin to one slender shot.

"That's history," Trevino said of the shot from a fairway bunker that found the pond and changed the face of the tournament.

"I got greedy," he said.

"Now, with a one-shot lead, I can't be conservative. I have to keep on playing the way I've been playing all week, hitting the driver off the tee and going for the flag."

But there was no question that the closing lapse put the tournament in a different perspective.

A brilliant 30 on the front side put Trevino four shots in front of the field. And Lee, grim-faced in pursuit of his first title in three full seasons, held that margin most of the hot, humid, hazy day.

But the water shot changed things. Instead of having two players within striking distance, he now has at least seven, possibly more.

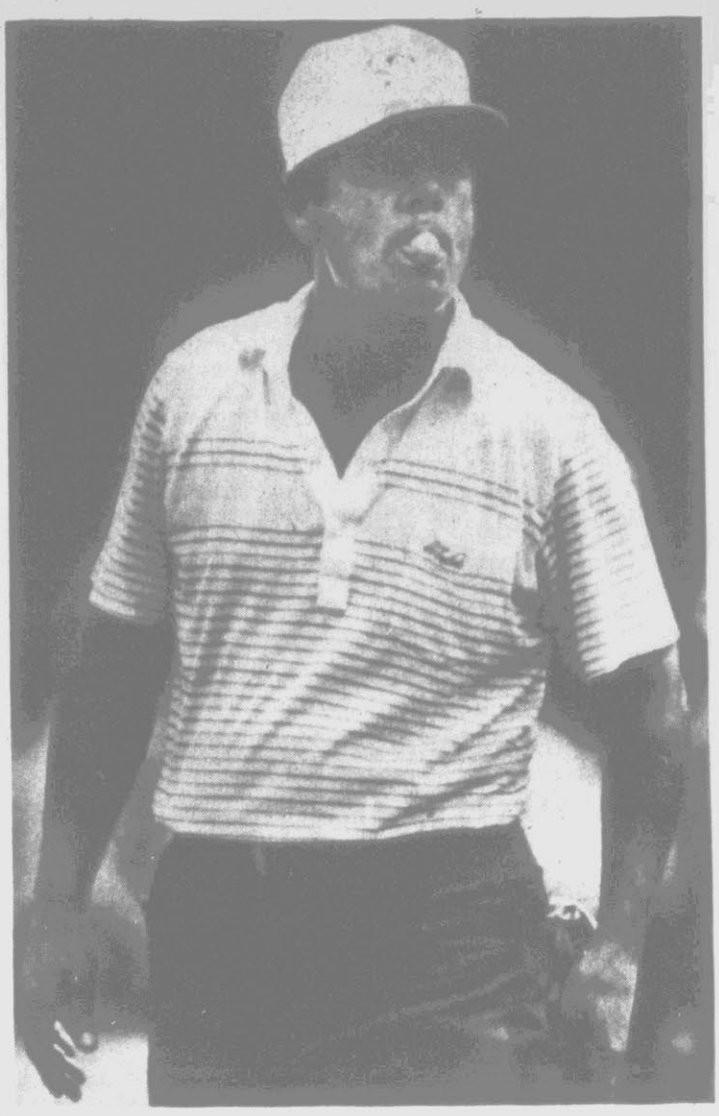

"The conditions are perfect for somebody to shoot a 65 and take the whole enchilada," said Trevino, who completed three trips over the deep, wiry, punishing rough on the Shoal Creek Club course in 204, 12-under-par.

His two closest pursuers, old friend and golfing foe Gary Player, and the dangerous Lanny Wadkins, agreed.

"I'm gonna make him play tomorrow," promised Wadkins, the 1977 PGA title-holder.

"It'll take a good driving round by whoever's close to win it," said Wadkins, who chipped in for an eagle-3 on the 11th and saved par after bouncing one out of the water on the 17th on the way to his 68 and 205 total.

"Anybody within seven shots can still win," said Player, a 48-year-old South African who ran a 50-foot putt through 15 feet of fringe and into the cup as the key shot in a round of 69 that left him two behind at 206. "The only dogleg putt I ever had," Player said.

Second Tongue Around

Tommy Nakajima of Japan, now a regular on the American PGA tour, and Larry Mize were next at 207. Each had a third-round 67.

Gary Hallberg and veteran Ray Floyd, twice a winner of this title, each had a 68 and were at 208, very much within striking distance.

Seve Ballesteros of Spain, the British Open champion who has made an art-form of escape for apparent disaster, made great saves on both the 17th and 18th for a 70 that left him at 209.

Defending champion Hal Sutton, playing a couple of hours in front of Trevino, scored seven birdies and an eagle on the way to a 64 that lifted him to a 211 total, five under par but seven strokes back going into the final round.

"It could have been in the 50's," said the 1983 Player of the Year, who missed five putts of 12 feet or less. "That's about as good as I've played all year."

Jack Nicklaus, a 5-time PGA champ and the architect of this course that is being played in professional competition for the first time, had a 71 that left him at 218, two over par.

And Tom Watson found that he'll have to wait at least one more year to complete a career sweep of all the game's major titles. Watson, winner of five British Opens, two Masters and the 1982 U.S. Open, struggled to a 74 and finished three rounds at 220, 4-over-par and out of the chase for the only major crown he hasn't won.

The squat and swarthy Trevino, who holds two U.S. Open and two British Open crowns and won the 1974 PGA title, started the day in a 3-way tie for the top with his playing partners, Player and Wadkins.

He pulled away in a hurry, however, making a 10-foot birdie putt on the first hole, then 2-putting for birdie-4 on the second.

First Scrimmage Gets Mixed Reviews By Coach

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

Any time a team scrimmages itself, the coaching staff ends up half-pleased and half-unsatisfied. And with Rose High School's opening scrimmage Friday afternoon, it was no different.

New coach Chip Williams divided the squad up into junior and senior units, and the juniors came out on top by a two score to one margin. And, as expected, some things pleased the coach and some things didn't.

"Our passing game seemingly looked ahead of schedule," Williams said, pointing out that it is hard to tell if the offense is that far ahead, or the defense that far behind when it goes against itself.

"I thought our line did a good job, and I thought we had some outstanding play on the part of some of them." He singled out Brian Bridges, Bill Zadeits, John Whichard, Churchill Thomas and Todd Morris for their play on the offensive line.

"We had some good runs by the backs, too," the coach added. "Both Anthony Collins and Tom Moore got off some good runs and showed a lot of promise. There were some others who could come along and get us some help in that area, people like Lorenzo Daniels and Mo Matthews."

Quarterback play, Williams said, was adequate. Clay Young and Ervin Best performed the duties there, as senior Battle Emory was sidelined with a shoulder problem.

"Dwight Smith, Adrian Brewington and David Walker, a transfer from Pinecrest, did a good job receiving. Smith caught one pass of about 20 yards and went on to score a touchdown on the play. Tyrone Barrett also did a good job receiving."

On the defensive side of the ledger, Williams said the line put forth a good effort, but that he didn't notice any standouts. At the linebacker posts, he said Charles Hill, Matthews, Darryl Perkins and Barrett looked good.

Brewington, Walker and Smith also looked good in the secondary.

"We made a lot of mistakes, as might be expected," Williams said. "Right now we have too many kids asking coaches what they are supposed to be doing. They should know now and I was disappointed in that aspect of the game. We can't do that (give them their assignments) during the game, so they've got to learn them. We have to improve on knowing and making good on our assignments, and we'll be working on that a lot in the coming weeks."

Defensively, Williams said he liked the aggressiveness shown, but that the gap assignments were not played as well as he had hoped. "On passes we didn't drop back well and cover our areas. That's something else we'll have to work on."

Williams still doesn't feel the Rampants are as far along as he had hoped they would be at this point.

"We did have some good runs on offense, but that was largely due to outstanding effort rather than team effort blocking. We have to have both.

"There were some good plays on defense, but again there were always some breakdowns. You can't have that and get shutouts. And getting shutouts is what we're trying to instill in our players — to shut the opponent out every time. I don't know if we can do it once this year, but I don't want it to be from lack of effort.

"Sometimes you get beat because the other team is just better than you are, but I don't want us to ever get beat because of a lack of effort."

The Rampants continue work this week, preparing for their scrimmage with Washington High School, set here next Friday at 4:30 p.m.

Rose opens the regular season on September 7, hosting Jacksonville's Cardinals.

Thompson, Nagel Join Field For Tournament

A change in part of the plans for the Ronald McDonald House Golf Tournament will bring together seven professional players in a special match.

The tournament, to benefit the construction of the Greenville Ronald McDonald House near Pitt County Memorial Hospital, will be held on Monday, September 10.

The field will include a number of celebrity golfers teamed with Pitt County players in a superball format.

Earlier, it was announced that tour professionals Jerry Pate and Tommy Aaron would be in the field, along with LPGA touring pro Terri Luckhurst.

Reynolds May, tournament director, announced today that three other pros, two of them former British Open champions, would also be in the field. Peter Thompson and Ken Nagle are both British Open champs, while the other is Chandler Harper, a former PGA winner. They will be joined by Buck Adams, the resident pro of the Country Club of North Carolina.

May said the four would be joined by Greenville golfer Harriette White, a former state amateur winner, to make a field of eight.

Pate, Adams and Thompson will be paired with White, while Aaron, Harper, Nagle and Luckhurst will for the other foursome.

An anonymous donor has donated $2000 to be awarded the winning team, with $1600 going to the losers, May said.

A gallery fee of $5 is to be charged.

Regular play in the tournament will begin at 7 a.m. and continued until 11:30. After that, there will be a break until 12 noon, when one of the pro foursomes will tee off. The other will follow at 12:10 p.m., with regular foursome play following after another short break.

Sandwiches and soft drinks are to be available on the course for the gallery.

Thompson is in the record books as one of two five-time winners of the British Open. He captured the tournament in 1954, 1955, 1956, 1958 and 1965. Only Tom Watson has equalled that number. The British Open record of six wins is held by Harry Vardon, but Thompson is the only one to have won it three times in a row since the end of World War I.

Nagle's championship came in 1960, and both he and Thompson are former Australian Open champions.

Harper, the veteran of the group, won his PGA championship in 1950, and is a member of the PGA Hall of Fame.

Pass Defense Improving

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

(Editor's note: This is the seventh of a series of stories on the prospects for the 1984 East Carolina University football team. Each story will cover a specific area of play. Today's story is on the defensive secondary.)

Over the last ten or so years, East Carolina University's secondary has taken a hot of heat. That heat has come both from the opposition's passing game and the Pirate fans, disappointed in the vulnurability of it.

Last year, however, as the season went along, the pass defense improved, and while secondary coach Linwood Ferguson isn't promising zero yardage and completions, he does feel that things are on the upswing despite the fact that at least half of this year's unit is composed of rookies.

"We've been giving up passing yards, for sure. But it's not just the secondary," Ferguson, in his first year on the ECU staff, said. "The whole defense has to share in it — both the success and the failure. But what we don't want to do is give up the big play: the long gain or the touchdown.

"Today, too many people throw the ball to well for you to be able to shut the passing game down. They're going to get yardage on you, you have to concede that. You just have to try and stop the big play. Hopefully we'll be able to do that."

Ferguson got some bad news last week when corner back Rally Caparas (6-0, 190, Sr.) decided not to return to school this year because of personal reasons. Ferguson and the staff are hopeful he will return next fall. Caparas had been listed as a possible starter at one of the corner spots.

However, two other veteran corners return in Kevin Walker (5-11, 178, Jr.) and Calvin Adams (5-9, 168, Sr.) Both of then were starters last year and bring quite a bit of experience to the position.

The free safety position appears to be a battle between two newcomers. Vernard Wynn (6-0, 178, Fr.), a red-shirt, is going up against Keith Ford (6-0, 185, Jr.), a junior college transfer. Both went through spring and Ferguson feels they are good athletes.

Ford is also able to play a cornerback position, and could be moved there should conditions warrant it.

At strong safety, James Martin (5-9, 183, Sr.), Gary London (6-3, 190, So.) and Randy Bost (5-9, 187, Sr.) appear in the picture. All three saw some action last fall, while London was a sometime starter. He, however, was injured in the spring, and Ferguson said he still has to evaluate him.

Others who could figure in the picture are transfer Ed Varnes (6-0, 192, Jr.), Ellis Dillahunt (6-0, 177, Fr.) a red-shirt; Tim Pittman (6-1, 175, Jr.), another transfer; and Tony Smith (5-11, 183, Fr.) another re-shirt, moved from wide receiver.

"We have only nine scholarship athletes in the secondary, so we're really kind of thin in recruited players," Ferguson said. "We do have speed, now we've got to give them the knowledge and confidence."

Ferguson, the fifth secondary coach in as many years, said that having so much turnover in the coaching position was another problem that the Pirates needed to overcome. "The players need to see some consistancy in the position."

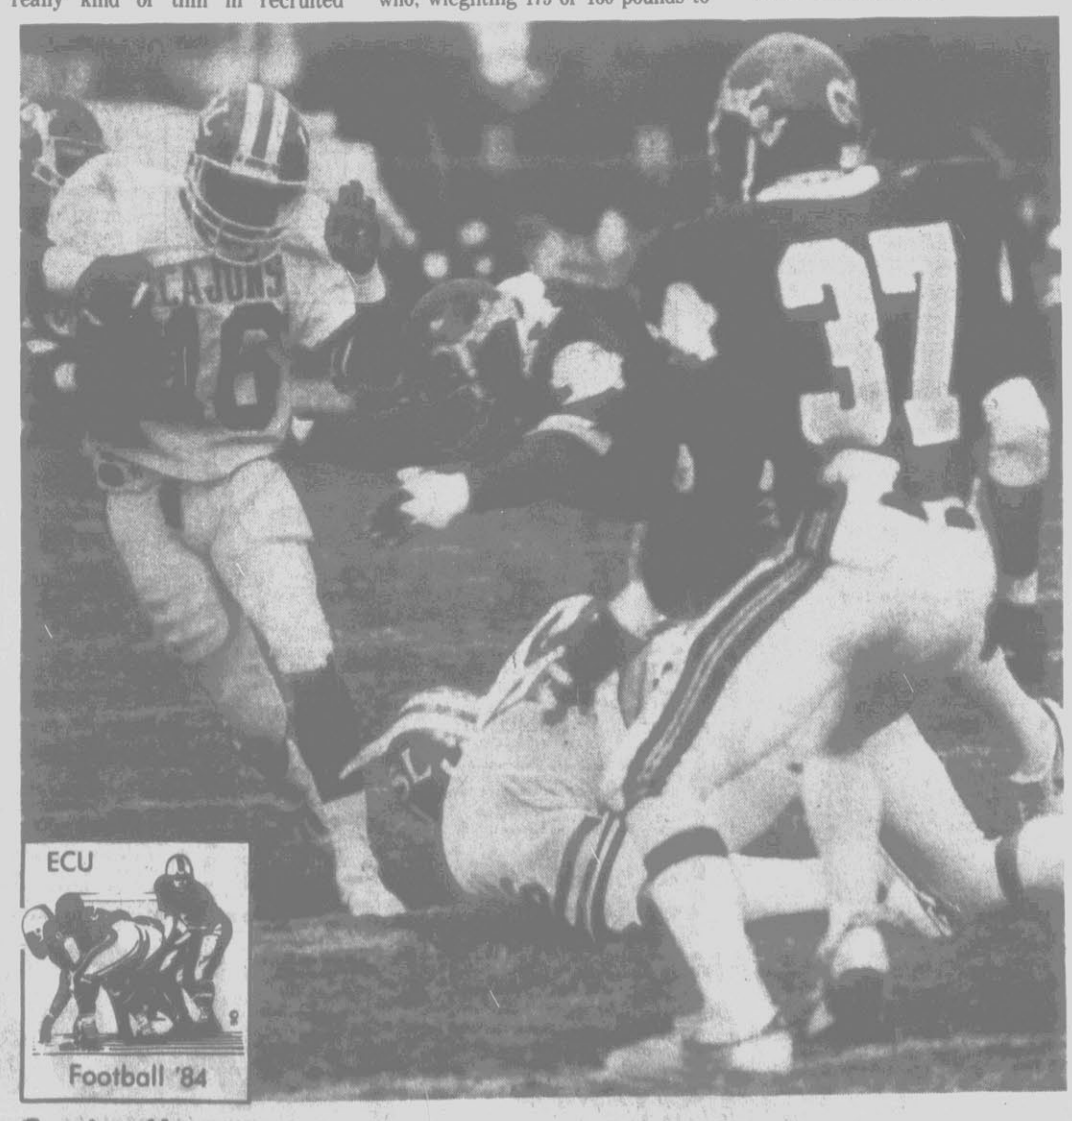

Defensive backs are usually considered the people to run down the ends and wide receivers, but they also have to come up and take down the backs when they break into the secondary. "It takes a tough kid who, wieghting 175 or 180 pounds to run up and tackle a fullback who weighs in at 220," Ferguson said.

"We need our best athletes in the secondary, and I think we have some good ones there. They have to be intelligent too, in making the right decisions to keep from giving up the big play. And it takes a split second decision, too."

Experience, as can be seen, is not great, and Ferguson doesn't feel that the depth is great either at this time.

"Florida State is going to be a real test for us. They'll throw the ball as well as anyone we'll play. We have to be ready for them."

Next: Offensive line.

Coming Up

Emory Unhappy After Scrimmage

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

"We're a million miles away and only two weeks to go," a disappointed Coach Ed Emory of East Carolina said after watching his team go through a two-hour scrimmage Saturday afternoon.

It was a day in which the defense completely dominated the offense. And the defense was supposed to be where most of the rookies were located.

"We made too many mistakes, mistakes we can't make against a team like Florida State," Emory said. "I didn't think we had a good offensive day. It was not productive at all."

Emory said that each unit ran a series of 12 plays on drives, then ran two long yardage and two short yardage situations before finishing up with a goal line series for each.

"Our first and second units didn't do well," Emory said.

None of the three top quarterbacks, Ron Jones, Robbie Bartlett or Darrell Speed were able to move the team with any consistancy. A bright spot — for the future anyway — may have been the quarterbacking of freshman Lewis Wilson in running the last series of downs with the other rookies.

"The defense had more enthusiasm, and I just hope it's because they are improving. The offense couldn't throw the ball at all." Only two passes were completed by the first three quarterbacks.

"I'm really concerned about the immaturity of this team," Emory said. "So far I'm still waiting for people to step forward."

Emory said there were several factors that could have made a difference in the scrimmage. There are several first string linemen who were injured and didn't work. They included center Tim Mitchell and tackle Tim Dumas.

"Getting out here," he said, gesturing to the turf of Ficklen Stadium as he leaned against the fence, "makes a big difference, too. There's a whole lot more pressure out here than on the practice field. Too, they're tired after three a days; their legs are tired. And it's hot too, but the heat has got to be our friend. If we are intimidated by the heat, then what are we going to do in front of 70,000 Seminoles?"

Emory said that while the defense did some good things, he was unsure whether it was because of improvement or of a lack of offensive thrust. "I'll probably be able to tell a little more once I see the tapes.

"But we're a young team and it's going to take time. We have to be patient with them and the fans have to be patient. We've got a lot of potential out here, but you don't build a team on potential."

The Pirates have two weeks remaining before their season opener at Florida State on Saturday, September 1.

Lopez Storms Into Lead

Quinlan Moves To Six Shot Advantage

NEW ROCHELLE, N.Y. (AP) — Rookie Sally Quinlan of Dennis, Mass., fired a 5-under-par 67 Saturday to move into a six-stroke lead over Therese Hession of Dallas after three rounds of the inaugural $100,000 MasterCard International Pro-Am LPGA golf tournament.

The 23-year-old Quinlan started the day one shot behind second-round leader Pat Meyers of Ormond Beach, Fla., but her six-birdie, one-bogey round on the 6,004-yard Westchester Hills course — one of three courses being played by the field — left her with a 54-hole total of 6-under-par 210.

Meanwhile, Hession matched par on the 6,213-yard Wykagyl Country Club in New Rochelle to finish the day at 216, two strokes in front of Meyers, who carded a 77 at Wykagyl and dropped into a three-way tie third place at 218.

"I made the turn and found I was ahead and said, 'I'm the leader!'" said Quinlan, who has never led a tournament and matched her previous best round as a professional. "I'm now telling myslef I'm going to win. I'm going to get some sleep and just keep trying to hit the ball well."

First-round leader Jane Geddes of Summerville, S.C., and Colleen Walker of Hialeah, Fla., were tied with Meyers, a one-time winner on the LPGA tour, at 218, eight shots behind Quinlan.

The tournament is the first in LPGA history to be played on three courses. The field, trimmed to 66 professionals for Sunday's final round, is also being played on the par 72, 6,-025-yard Knollwood Country Club course in Elmsford.

Sunday's winner will earn $15,000.

SHAKER HEIGHTS, Ohio (AP) — At first, Nancy Lopez did not know she had shattered two tournament and two course records with her 7-under-65 Saturday for the third-round lead in the Chevrolet World Championship of Women's Golf.

"I didn't realize I was 7-under until I signed my scorecard. I guess that's a sign you're concentrating very well," said Lopez.

"When I hit the greens, I felt confident," she said. "I felt like I was due. I haven't been in this position lately."

Because of her marriage and 9-month-old daughter, Ashley Marie, Lopez has played in half of the LPGA's 26 previous stops this year. She has only only once, at Costa Mesa, Calif., in March.

Yet she feels confident. "I'm very excited about tomorrow," she said. "I haven't been in this positon much lately. I'm just getting back into the competitive feel. I feel I can play well tomorrow."

Her 54-hole total of 208, eight strokes below par at Shaker Heights Country Club, was the lowest score for three rounds in this five-year-old tournament that matches the best 12 players of the year.

"It was a wonderful round to watch. She had a great touch," said JoAnne Carner, Lopez' playing partner.

Donna Caponi owned the previous 54-hole record of 210, shot in 1980. Lopez's 18-hole performance also broke the record of 66 Sally Little, JoAnne Washam and JoAnne Carner had shared.

Her 18 and 54-hole totals also represented club records.

Lopez, the wife of Houston Astros infielder Ray Knight, was two shots ahead of Betsy King, the 36-hole leader by three shots over Patty Sheehan and by five over Lopez.

King, appearing in this event for the first time, matched par of 72 and it wss good enough to keep second place at 210.

King had led or shared the lead with Sheehan through the first eight holes. Sheehan used a birdie on the ninth hole to assume the sole lead for two holes.

Sheehan, however, ran afoul of three straight bogeys at 13, 14 and 15 and fell from the top spot whileLopez birdied 12, 13 and 14 and took a three-shot lead.

Lopez, chasing the 29th victory of her nine-year LPGA career, broke the 18-hole record when she knocked in a 1-foot birdie putt on the 448-yard par-5 17th hole to dip 7-under for the warm, sunny day in suburban Cleveland.

Sheehan, this year's No. 1 money-winner, equaled par of 72 and slipped into a third-place tie at 213 with Carner going into Sunday's final round.

At stake is the richest first prize in the women's sport, $65,000, from the total purse of $200,000.

Carner's chances of a third consecutive victory in this tournament were still alive. She shot a 70, but was 5 strokes behind Lopez.

Pat Bradley was fifth with 72-216, followed by Juli Inkster, 72-217, Amy Alcott, 74-218, Alice Miller, 72-219, Ayako Okamoto, 74-220, Donna H. White, 74-221, Laurie Rinker, 68-222 and Hollis Stacy, 73-223.

Murphy Leads Braves To 8-3 Win

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Dale Murphy of the Atlanta Braves slapped five hits around Busch Stadium on Saturday, prompting him to comment on the difference between day and night baseball.

"It's not the same ballpark in the daytime. It's just completely different," Murphy said Saturday after combining with Glenn Hubbard to key an 8-3 triumph over the St. Louis Cardinals. "It's a good park to hit, the Astroturf's hot, the ball's bouncing. I wouldn't want to play here 81 games."

Among Atlanta's 14 hits was Hubbard's three-run homer, a shot which touched off the Braves' highest run production since July 20.

"I didn't think the ball would land there," Hubbard said of his homer. "As soon as I hit it I said 'sacrifice fly.' On hot days, the heat waves carry it, I'm convinced."

Although his team was convincingly beaten, St. Louis Manager Whitey Herzog said it could have been different had the Cardinals not left a runner stranded at third base with none out in the second inning and duplicated the sin two innings later with one out.

"We didn't execute on offense, we didn't play well on defense, we didn't pitch very well," said Herzog. "Those three things are conducive to losing."

On four occasions, Murphy led off innings with base hits and scored four runs, but ironically didn't drive in a run.

"It was one of those things. I don't know what to say," said Murphy, who on Sept. 14, 1979, had a five-hit day against the San Diego Padres. "I don't remember much about the first time it happened. Maybe if I continue to get the hits, I can drive in some runs ahead of me the next time."

Hubbard's ninth homer of the year came off St. Louis starter Danny Cox, 6-10, during a four-run Atlanta uprising in the second inning. That blow and a barrage of extra-base hits, which included three Murphy doubles, proved more than enough support for Tony Brizzolara, 1-1, who yielded nine Cardinal hits in six innings. Gene Garber pitched three innings to earn his sixth save.

Murphy's first double triggered the Braves' big second inning. Chris Chambliss followed with a walk and Murphy advanced on a fly ball by Rafael Ramirez. Hubbard then homered to left-center on a 0-1 delivery from Cox.

Alex Trevino scored the final run of the inning when he singled, was sacrificed to second and came home on Jerry Royster's double.

After the Cards scored in the bottom of the inning on George Hendrick's single and Lonnie Smith's triple, Atlanta added an unearned run in the third and made it 6-1 in the fifth on Murphy's double, a single by Chambliss and a groundout by Ramirez.

Smith scored St. Louis' second run in the sixth when he walked, took second on David Green's single, stole third and came home on Tom Nieto's sacrifice fly.

Atlanta added two runs in the seventh on doubles by Murphy and Chambliss and a two-base error by Smith in left field.

Brizzolara, making his second start since being recalled Aug. 5 from the minor leagues, departed in the seventh after Mike Jorgensen doubled and Willie McGee singled. Herr greeted Garber with a sacrifice fly that produced the final St. Louis run.

Compromise Fell Short

LINCOLN, Neb. (AP) — A University of Nebraska compromise offer to "go more than halfway" was rejected, leading to a lawsuit that concerns the televising of two college football games, Nebraska Chancellor Dr. Martin A. Massengale said Saturday.

"We traveled to Los Angeles earlier this week along with officials of Notre Dame University prepared to develop a compromise," Massengale said in a statement released by the university. "We offered to use our efforts in helping to arrange for CBS to telecast two of the three crossover games.

"Apparently other parties were already committed to taking legal action."

The suit was filed Friday by the Pacific 10 and the Big Ten conferences, the University of Southern California and UCLA. The 37-page suit seeks an injunction that would permit only CBS to televise games involving Nebraska-UCLA and Notre Dame-Southern Cal. The ABC and ESPN television networks, the College Football Association and Notre Dame, as well as Nebraska, are named as defendants in the suit.

"We're disappointed by the failure to reach a compromise," Massengale said.

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Manager Davey Johnson has made a lot of the right moves in keeping the New York Mets in contention this season, but one of his decisions backfired Saturday.

Rookie right-hander Ron Darling had a two-hitter and 3-1 lead after six innings, but he was lifted for a pinch-hitter and the San Francisco Giants rallied for a 6-5 victory.

Reliever Wes Gardner was touched for four runs in the seventh to give the Giants a 5-3 lead. The Mets tied it in the eighth, but the Giants won in the ninth on Manny Trillo's sacrifice fly.

"I was surprised because I felt I was still throwing well," Darling said. "It was Davey's decision and he's been right before, but this time it just didn't work out."

Johnson said his decision was based on the fact that Darling threw "about 125 pitches. ... I thought he was getting tired and I have confidence in my bullpen."

The winning rally started on Jeff Leonard's leadoff single. Dan Gladden sacrificed, and Leonard went to third on a wild pitch by Brent Gaff, 1-2. Randy Lerch, 4-1, pitched one inning for the victory.

The Giants trailed 3-1 entering the seventh before they teed off for four runs against Gardner and Ed Lynch.

Johnny LeMaster led off with a double, advanced on a grounder and scored on Gladden's single. Trillo's double created a 3-3 tie.

Chili Davis followed with another double for the go-ahead run. Lynch replaced Gardner and Dusty Baker belted a run-scoring single to left for a 5-3 lead.

The Mets bounced back to tie it with two runs in the eighth off reliever Greg Minton. Danny Heep led off with a single, reached third on a pair of grounders and scored on George Foster's infield single. Foster went to second as Hubie Brooks singled and scored as pinch-hitter Rusty Staub grounded a single to left.

It was Staub's 13th pinch hit of the season and his 11th pinch-hit RBI, both tops in the National League.

Each team scored in the first. Heep's single and Darryl Strawberry's two-out double off starter Bill Laskey put the Mets ahead. The Giants came back on Gladden's single and three straight two-out walks off Ron Darling.

New York took a 2-1 lead in the second on Rafael Santana's double and Darling's two-out single and added an unearned run in the fifth on Keith Hernandez's two-out single, third baseman Joel Youngblood's throwing error and Strawberry's run-scoring single.

Twins Sweep Twinbill From Bosox

BOSTON (AP) — Bobby Castillo allowed only one hit in six innings in his first 1984 start and Rick Lysander completed a four-hitter Saturday as the Minnesota Twins beat the Boston Red Sox 3-1 for a sweep of a doubleheader.

The Twins, boosting their American League West lead to four games, won the opener 6-4 with a three-run, ninth-inning rally.

Castillo, 1-0, plagued by shoulder troubles for a year, earned his first victory since Aug. 10, 1983 while Lysander collected his second save of the day and third of the season.

The only hit off Castillo was Wade Boggs' single, which second baseman Tim Teufel fielded behind the bag leading off the first inning. Castillo walked three and struck out one.

Lysander allowed a single to Marty Barrett in the eighth before Boston averted a shutout in the ninth. Rick Miller singled, went to third on a single by Jim Rice, and scored when Dwight Evans grounded into a double play.

The Twins got five of their nine hits and all three runs against Boston starter John Henry Johnson, 0-2, in the second inning.

With two outs, Gary Gaetti singled, took third on a single by Teufel and scored Dave Meier's single. Houston Jimenez then doubled off the left-field wall for two more runs.

Kirby Puckett, Mickey Hatcher and Kent Hrbek drove in one apiece in the ninth inning of the opener as the Twins overcame a 4-3 Boston lead.

Puckett, Hatcher, and Hrbek also drove in runs during a three-run fifth inning against Boston starter Dennis Boyd.

Boyd began the ninth by walking Teufel and Bob Stanley came in in relief. He was greeted by singles by Tim Laudner and Jimenez to load the bases. Mark Clear replaced Stanley and Puckett hit a sacrifice fly to tie the game. Hatcher then singled to score Darrell Brown, who was running for Laudner, with the go-ahead run, and Hrbek hit a sacrifice fly to score Jiemenz from third.

Ron Davis, who bailed out starter John Butcher in the eighth, improved his record to 5-9. Lysander worked the ninth for the save. Stanley, 7-9, took the loss.

The Red Sox, held to five hits, including Scott Gedman's 17th and 18th homers, for seven innings by Butcher, erupted in the eighth.

Boggs started the rally with a single to right and took second on Evans' ground single to left. Davis replaced Butcher and Rice grounded a single off Teufel's glove. Boggs scored and Evans raced to third as the ball rolled into shallow right field. Tony Armas struck out before Bill Buckner hit a sacrifice fly.

Boyd was in command in every inning but the fifth. Teufel began the inning with a walk and, after Laudner flied to center, Jiminez got a single when Rice was unable to hang on to a line drive on an attempted diving catch in left.

Puckett then grounded a single through the middle, scoring Teufel and sending Jiminez to third. Jiminez scored as Hatcher grounded out to first and Hrbek followed with a double to right-center, scoring Puckett for a 3-1 lead.

Baltimore 1
California 0

BALTIMORE (AP) — Manager Joe Altobelli of the Baltimore Orioles was almost caught on the horns of a dilemma.

But with the potential tying run on base in the California ninth, Orioles starter Mike Boddicker completed his second straight start by retiring Doug DeCinces and Brian Downing as the Orioles defeated the Angels 1-0 Saturday.

The game's only run scored in the first when Mike Witt, the hard-luck loser was charged with and error on an easy tapper back to the mound.

"Downing usually hits me pretty good, but so does Lynn," Boddicker said of Fred Lynn, who had a single and drew the second of his walks with one out in the ninth.

The count on DeCinces, who has driven in 22 runs this month, reached 3-2 before he grounded out on a run-and-hit play, with Lynn moving to second.

Then Downing, who already had two hits, popped out to end the game.

Had either DeCinces or Downing reached, Altobelli would have had to decide whether to let Boddicker face the left-handed-hitting Reggie Jackson or bring in left-handed reliever Tippy Martinez.

"I definitely would have gone out to the mound," said Altobelli, who indicated he hadn't decided in advance what he would have done. "It wouldn't have been easy to take him out."

Boddicker, 15-8, allowed four hits, struck out two batters and walked three en route to his fifth straight triumph, a personal high. It was the fourth consecutive loss for the Angels.

Witt, 11-10, allowed six hits, struck out six and walked six in seven innings. He has lost three in a row to the Orioles this season without benefit of a California run, and the Angels have scored no more than two runs in eight of his losses.

Mike Young opened the Orioles' first with a double off first base and took third on a fly ball by John Shelby. Witt, the American League strikeout leader, fanned Cal Ripken Jr., but he couldn't handle a bouncer by Eddie Murray. The ball skipped off the mound and ricocheted off Witt's glove. By the time he chased it down, Murray was safe and Young had scored.

Boddicker, who has allowed two or fewer runs in 17 of his 26 starts, was helped by double plays in the first two innings. The Angels' Brian Downing had two singles to extend his hitting streak to 12 games, but teammate Doug DeCinces had his stopped at 11.

Worthy Marries Cheerleader

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — It was a match made in blue heaven.

James Worthy, who caught an errant Georgetown pass which assured North Carolina of the 1982 NCAA basketball championship, married his college sweetheart, who was a cheerleader on the sidelines.

Worthy, rebounding from a loss in the NBA finals last season, was wed to Angela Lenora Wilder of Winston-Salem Saturday at St. Paul United Methodist Church.

Two Olympic Marks Bettered

Opening Ceremonies

MOSCOW (AP) — Soviet victories by Oleg Protsenko in the men's triple jump and Nadezhda Ralldugina in the women's 1,500 meters Saturday bettered marks set in the Los Angeles Olympics in action following the official opening of the Friendship '84 Games.

The day saw no world records here or in the other cities hosting the Eastern Bloc's answer to the Olympics.

While Protsenko was competing in the men's track and field competition, Sergei Kopylov, also of the Soviet Union, took the 1,000-meter cycling race here. His time — one minute, 3.56 seconds — easily bettered the winning Olympic mark, but conditions at the Moscow velodrome and at the Los Angeles Olympic track are not comparable.

Elsewhere, in the women's track and field in Prague, Czechoslovakia, Ralldugina ran the year's best time of 3:56.63, leading the Soviets to a 1-2-3 sweep.

In Sofia, Bulgaria, Bulgaria's Dilyana Georgyeva topped 34 athletes from 14 countries in the two-day rhythmic gymnastics meet. And Yuri Kovshov of the Soviet Union led a Soviet sweep of the equestrian competition in Ksiaz, Poland.

Protsenko's triple jump of 57 fet, 3 inches was followed by his compatriot Alexander Yakovlev with 57-1½ and Bulgaria's Khristo Markov, who jumped 56-8¾. All three outjumped Al Joyner's 56-7½, which won the American the gold medal at Los Angeles.

No other performances topped the times and distances at the Olympics, which were boycotted by many of the nations participating in the Friendship games.

Grigory Degtyaryev of the Soviet Union recorded 8,523 pointsin the decathlon, ahead of West Germany's Siggi Wentz, who took the bronze at los Angeles.

Andreas Busse of East Germany won the 1,500 meters in 3:36.65, Alexander Vasiliev took the 400-meter hurdles in 48.63 and Hungary's Gyorgy Bakos won the 110-meter hurdles in 13.52.

In the 200 meters, Vladimir Muravyev of the Soviet Union, with a 20.34, fell far short of Carl Lewis' Olympic mark of 19.81. Nede Dereje's marathon time of 2:10.32 would have placed him fourth at Los Angeles.

Cuban veteran Alberto Juantorena and Poland's Ryszard Ostrowski crossed the finish line in a dead heat in the 800 meters, both being timed in 1:45.68.

Meanwhile, in Prague, Ralldugina stormed across the finish line two seconds ahead of Ravilya Agletdinova, another Soviet. Yekaterina Podkopayeva was third.

Ralldugina's time was nearly seven seconds faster than the 4:03.25 posted by Olympic gold medal winner Gabriela Dorio of Italy in Los Angeles. Agletdinova and Podkopayeva also were under Dorio's time, clocking 3:58.70 and 4:01.60, respectively.

It was the 11th event during the three-day meet in which Eastern bloc women scored better results than the Olympic-winning performances.

The Bulgarian team won the 400-meter relay in 42.62 after Marlies Goehr, the former 100-meter world record holder, dropped the baton, ending her team's hopes of beating the world mark. The East Germans were well in the lead after three legs before Goehr's bobble.

The Soviet team won the gold medal in the 1,600-meter relay, clocking 3:19.12, a Soviet record.

In the last event of the competition, Zoya Ivanova led a Soviet sweep of the first five places in the marathon by clocking 2:33.44.

The Sofia rhythmic gymnastics competition was attended by athletes from East Germany, Spain, North Korea, Cuba, Norway, Poland, the Soviet Union, Hungary, Finland, France, Holland, Switzerland, Japan and Bulgaria.

Georgyeva, who led with 19.90 points after the first two apparatus performances (hoop and ball), on Saturday received a maximum 10 points for her performance with the clubs and 9.95 for the ribbon exercise for a winning total of 39.60 points.

Second was Anelia Ralenkova, also of Bulgaria, who was only fifth after Friday.

The individual apparatus competition was scheduled to take place on Sunday, the Bulgarian news agency BTA reported.

In the cycling competiton, Kopylov set his time on an air conditioned indoor wooden track. West Germany's Fredy Schmidtke Olympic-winning time of 1:06.10 came on an outdoor concrete track in sometimes gusty winds and under a blistering sun.

Runner-up Maik Malchow of East Germany was timed in 1:05.17 and Milan Gajek of Czechoslovakia was third in 1:05.67.

The starting field at the Moscow velodrome included 16 riders. But only the top three can be considered international class. The rest came from developing countries, some allied with the Soviet Union, like Ethiopia, Benin, Guinea-Bissau and Colombia.

In Ksiaz, Kovshov rode two different horses and took first- and second-place in the equestrian riding event, the official Polish news agency PAP reported.

Three Soviet women riders finished third, fourth and fifth.

In the second event of the day, Intermediare No. 1 for weaker horses, Ina Sablach of East Germany atop Formosa finished first, Madeline Winter of West Germany, riding Chagall, was second, and Elke Ebert of West Germany, riding Aloyusha, third.

Sablach also won the third and final event of the day, Intermediare No. 1 for stronger horses, riding Francisca. Winter finished second on Typhoon and Jan Miechev of Bulgaria was third.

Earlier in the day, the games were officially opened with a kaleidoscope of choreographed gymnasts and socialist ideology. Little girls in white leotards spun red and white beachballs in unison after a parade of Soviet athletes goose-stepped onto the field by the thousands.

It was an all-Soviet performance in the nearly full 103,000-seat stadium.

The Friendship '84 competitions began Friday with men's track and field events, drawing about a one-third capacity crowd for most of the day.

Soviet Defense Minister Dmitri F. Ustinov and Mikhail Gorbachev, considered No. 2 in the Kremlin hierarchy, were among five full Politburo members and other Soviet dignitaries attending.

President Konstantin U. Chernenko, who was reported a month ago to have left Moscow for his summer vacation, was not present for the nearly two-hour spectacle.

Dozens of children in traditional costumes of the 15 Soviet republics ended one routine in the performance by rushing up to the Soviet officials' box with flowers.

The opening, reminiscent of Olympic galas, was complete with a ceremonial lighting of the stadium's torch basin — a remnant of the 1980 Moscow Summer Games.

An announcer said the flame had been ignited from the eternal flame at the Kremlin's tomb of the unknown soldier several miles away.

Bogey Trims...

The big rush began with a 15-foot putt for a 2 on the fifth, a chip-in eagle-3 on the sixth and an eight-foot 10-inch birdie putt on the seventh — a 3-hole burst that ripped four strokes off par.

At that point he was five in front of the field and striding so quickly that his caddy, Herman Mitchell had to break into a awkward trot to keep up with him.

He put his second shot in a bunker on the par-5 11th, came out to eight feet and made the putt for still another birdie.

"After that, I was thinking about shooting a 63. There were some birdie holes left and I was playing good," he said.

But that was, really, the end of it.

He parred around through the 16th, routinely, and, at that stage, was playing about as well as possible. He hadn't missed a fairway. He hadn't made a bogey. He hadn't scored a 5.

But on the 17th, a par-5, his third shot was well away from the flag and he 2-putted.

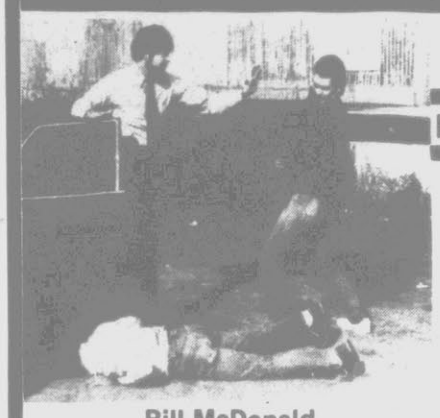

And, holding a 3-stroke advantage, he drove into the left fairway bunker on the 18th.

"I could have taken an 8-iron and played for a (bogey) 5, but I hadn't backed off from anything all week and I wasn't going to start now," Trevino said.

Collins On The Move

Former East Carolina University running back Tony Collins (33), looks for a hole as New England Patriot teammate John Hannah (73) tries to hold off Washington Redskins' defensive tackle Darryl Grant (77) during first half action at RFK Memorial Stadium in Washington Friday night. Collins gained three yards on the play, and the Pats went on to win. (AP Laserphoto)

Meyer Unhappy Despite Patriot Win Over Redskins

By The Associated Press

New England was credited with a National Football League preseason victory over Washington because the Patriots put more points on the scoreboard. But Coach Ron Meyer wasn't about to smile over that.

"The point is not to win these games," a downcast Meyer said after Friday's 31-27 triumph over the Redskins.

"The point is to stay healthy," added Meyer. "We lost a couple of key players."

Notable among the hobbled Patriots were wide receiver Irving Fryar, New England's No. 1 draft choice, and punter Rich Camarillo. Fryar suffered bruised ribs and an early report was that he might miss the regular season opener. And Camarillo, who suffered a knee injury, must undergo x-rays before his status is determined.

In the other NFL game Friday, Dave Kreig and Jim Zorn each threw touchdown passes as Seattle shaded St. Louis 17-7 in a battle of exhibition unbeatens.

Saturday night's exhibition schedule featured 10 games — Cincinnati at Chicago, Cleveland at Kansas City, Indianapolis at Denver, Detroit at Buffalo, Green Bay at the Los Angeles Rams, New Orleans at Houston, the Jets against the Giants in a battle of two New York club, Philadelphia at Minnesota, San Francisco at San Diego and Tampa Bay at Aflanta.

In addition to Fryar and Camarillo, New England also lost quarterback Tony Eason to a shoulder injury in the fourth quarter, which cleared the way for Tom Ramsey to come on and throw the game-deciding 40-yard touchdown pass to Craig James. Mosi Tatupu's second touchdown of the evening, a 23-yard run, gave New England a 31-17 edge.

While Meyer lamented the injuries that dimmed the luster of New England's first victory in three exhibition outings, Washington Coach Joe Gibbs was voicing concern over his mistaken-ridden club.

"Obviously, we are pleased with neither our offense, defense nor special teams," Gibbs said. "We fumbled the ball in close and we threw some interceptions. Those are mistakes we just can't make."

Joe Theismann ran for one touchdown and passed for another in staking Washington to a 17-10 halftime lead.

Kreig threw a 13-yard scoring pass to Cullen Bryant in the first half to pull Seattle, 4-0, into a 7-7 halftime tie with St. Louis, 2-1. Norm Johnson's 37-yard field goal broke the tie midway through the third period and Zorn completed the evening with a 40-yard strike to Chris Castor later in the quarter.

The Cardinals' only score came on a 1-yard pass from Neil Lomax to Doug Marsh 10 minutes into the game.

Best Is Named Baseball Aide

Billy Best has been named to fill the position of assistant baseball coach at East Carolina University, Dr. Ken Karr, director of athletics, announced Saturday.

Best fills the position vacated by Gary Overton when he was named head coach of the Pirates earlier this summer. Best comes to East Carolina from the Kansas City Royals organization where he was an outfielder for the AA club in Memphis, Tenn.

Best is no stranger to East Carolina baseball, however, having been a star player for the Pirates as an outfielder from 1977-80.

In 1980, Best, along with teammate Butch Davis, was drafted by the Royals. He spend a year in rookie ball before moving to Class A and most recently to AA in Memphis.

Best will be responsible for coaching the batters and outfielders, as well as tutoring the baserunners.

"We are very pleased to have Billy on board," Karr said. "I have confidence he will do an outstanding job for us and continue the fine work that has been accomplished by our baseball teams."

Best's name is still sprinkled throught the Pirate record book. He is third in most at bats (170), and second (16) and third (15) in stolen bases in a single season. He holds the record for the most triples in a season with six, and the fewest strikeouts in a season, fanning only once in 121 at-bats in 1980, and just twice in 170 at-bats in 1980.

Among career records, Best is first in at bats with 610, first in hits with 181, first in triples with ten, second in total bases with 241, first in runs with 124, first in stolen bases with 54, and first in runs batted in with 90.

Williams Admits He Gave Instructions For Beanballs

SAN DIEGO (AP) — An unrepentant Dick Williams openly admits he instructed his San Diego pitchers to try to bean Atlanta's Pascual Perez, and the Padres' president thinks the decision was part of Williams' "job."

Nevertheless, Williams says he expects no trouble between the National League West rivals and no fisticuffs between him and Atlanta Manager Joe Torre when the teams meet again in September.

"We went after Perez. There's no question about it — we tried to get him," Williams said Friday at the outset of his 10-day suspension from managing as a result of the action. "I think we had some honor to defend there."

The manager was one of seven people suspended as a result of Sunday's game between the Padres and Braves, which degenerated into a series of bench-clearing brawls after Perez and three San Diego pitchers were involved in brushback attempts.

Williams, who also was fined $10,000, was banished from the Padres' clubhouse an hour before Friday night's game against Montreal. He watched from General Manager Jack McKeon's press level box seat.

Ballard Smith, the Padres' president, appeared with Williams and McKeon at a news conference Friday evening to announce that National League President Charles "Chub" Feeney had reviewed the matter and refused to reduce the penalty.

"Mr. Feeney still felt that the fine and suspension were warranted, and while we don't agree with the result, we have a great deal of respect for the league office and we do agree that he (Feeney) considered the matter fully," Smith said.

"I have been very disturbed that Dick has been painted as the villain. One of the jobs of a manager is to protect his players, and that's what Dick was trying to do."

Williams made no secret that he told pitchers Ed Whitson, Craig Lefferts and Greg Booker to throw at Perez after the Atlanta right-hander beaned Alan Wiggins with the first pitch of the game.

The gist of his plea to Feeney was that the beanball war never would have started if Perez hadn't thrown at Wiggins, an action the Padres maintain was intentional.

"He's a headhunter — always has been," Williams said. "Anybody that didn't think Perez threw (intentionally) at Wiggins is either very naive or a member of the Ray Charles fan club.

"We had a nice 20-minute conversation, and it was a nice conversation. I've known Chub a long time," he said. "He heard my side of it, and evidently didn't think too much of it."

Williams and Torre later exchanged verbal blasts, Torre calling Williams an "idiot — spell that with a capital 'I' and a little 'w'," and the San Diego manager responding that he was ready to meet Torre "any place, any time."

But he said Friday he and Torre have gotten along well in the past, and "I think we'll get along well in the future, too. I don't anticipate any trouble."

The teams play in San Diego Sept. 21-23 and in Atlanta Sept. 28-30.

Williams will not be allowed to manage for the remainder of the Padres' homestand, which includes two more games against Montreal and a three-game series with the New York Mets. He'll also miss four games in Montreal at the outset of a 14-game road trip.

Asked if his suspension would bring his team closer together, Williams said, "No. This team can't get any closer."

1984 North Carolina Duck Stamp Print

By Artist Jim Killen

ABOUT THE PROGRAM

In 1983 North Carolina became the 25th state to obtain legislation for a Waterfowl Conservation Stamp and Print. The first year was highly successful and North Carolina conservationists and sportsmen alike are pleased that non-tax funds have been raised to assist in waterfowl conservation projects.

The 1984 Stamp Print Program promises to be very successful. This year the North Carolina Wildlife Commission selected Jim Killen as the Artist. His design of Wood Ducks is beautiful and especially appreciated since the Wood Duck is one of the most prolific species and is widely known throughout the State.

The original, painted in water color, is now owned by the state and is placed on display for public viewing.

DUCK STAMP PRINT COLLECTING

Collecting State Duck Stamp Prints is the fastest growing hobby among investors/collectors. It is not unusual for stamp print art to double in value the first year and show a steady growth in value over the years. They have been labeled "Paper Gold" by some collectors and many will argue that they are a far better investment than gold.

Collectors usually buy in series, that is, the same state print each year with the same print number. The 1984 North Carolina Waterfowl Print should prove to be a great buy, for it's beauty as well as value appreciation.

Rose Makes Return A Triumph

By KEN RAPPOPORT
AP Sports Writer

The fans came to see Pete Rose — and Rose gave them something to see.

With two hits, two RBI and a patented head-first slide into third base, Rose made a triumphant return to Cincinnati as player-manager Friday night and led the Reds to a 6-4 victory over the Chicago Cubs.

The 43-year-old Rose, appointed manager Thursday to replace Vern Rapp, inserted himself in his first line-up because "I knew the crowd was coming out to see me. They didn't come out to see me manage, they came out to see me play."

There were 35,056 — the largest crowd since opening day — that came out to Riverfront Stadium to see Rose's return. Rose spent 16 seasons with the Reds before leaving as a free agent in 1979, playing in Philadelphia and then Montreal.

"It's a whole new feeling having somebody like Pete Rose, who at 43 can show you how to hustle," said Cincinnati second baseman Ron Oester.

In the other National League games, it was Houston 7, Pittsburgh 4 in 10 innings; St. Louis 3, Atlanta 1; Montreal 8, San Diego 4; Los Angeles 2, Philadelphia 1, and New York 2, San Francisco 0 in 10 innings.

Rose didn't wait long to thrill the fans at Riverfront. In his first at-bat, he lined a run-scoring single and reached third base with a headfirst slide when the ball was misplayed for an error. He also doubled home the Reds' final run in the seventh after Dave Parker cracked a tie-breaking homer in the fifth.

Winner Mario Soto, 13-6, hurled a five-hitter, striking out three and walking five. Dick Ruthven, 3-8, was the loser as the Cubs dropped their fourth straight game.

"Some people, when you put the spotlight on them, good things happen," said Cubs Manager Jim Frey. "I just wish we'd had more runs."

Astros 7, Pirates 4

Jim Pankovits cracked a two-run single in the 10th inning as the Astros rallied to beat Pittsburgh and extend their winning streak to seven games.

The Astros trailed 4-3 after Doug Frobel's solo eighth-inning homer but singles by Mark Bailey and Kevin Bass and Don Robinson's run-scoring wild pitch in the ninth sent the game into extra innings.

Phil Garner drew a leadoff walk in the 10th before loser Kent Tekulve, 2-8, retired the next two batters. Tekulve then walked Terry Puhl and Bailey before Pankovits singled home the tie-breaking runs. Bill Dawley, 8-4, who worked two scoreless innings, then made it 7-4 with an RBI infield single.

Cardinals 3, Braves 1

Joaquin Andujar fired a two-hitter for seven innings to become the majors' first 16-game winner and also singled home a tying run.

Chris Speier homered and doubled and drove in two runs in support of Andujar, 16-11, who struck out eight and walked two. Bruce Sutter pitched the final two innings for St. Louis, recording his 32nd save, as the Cards beat Pascual Perez, 11-5.

Perez, one of 18 individuals fined in the aftermath of a bean-ball battle last Sunday in a contest against the San Diego Padres, yielded seven hits, the final Speier's home run leading off the seventh, and struck out seven in as many innings.

Expos 8, Padres 4

Andre Dawson and Gary Carter each homered to help Steve Rogers win his first game in almost two months. Rogers, 4-12, whose last victory came on June 19, limited the Padres to seven hits before needing relief help in the eighth from Jeff Reardon, who gained his 17th save.

The Expos' right-hander had lost seven decisions in a row.

Mark Thurmond, 10-6, who had won five consecutive decisions, lasted just 1 2-3 innings as the Expos reached him for five runs on five hits.

San Diego's Graig Nettles belted a pair of home runs and drove in three runs.

Dodgers 2, Phillies 1

Rick Honeycutt scattered nine hits in 6 2-3 innings and rookie Ken Howell pitched strong relief in leading Los Angeles over Philadelphia.

Honeycutt, 10-7, didn't allow an earned run, but had to pitch out of trouble in every inning but the sixth as he raised his career record against the Phillies to 3-0. Howell allowed just one hit and struck out four in 2 1-3 innings of relief.

Steve Carlton, 11-6, allowed the Dodgers only six hits, but was tagged with the loss when Los Angeles collected four of those hits in a two-run fourth inning, keyed by Steve Yeager's RBI single.

Mets 2, Giants 0

Wally Backman hit his first home run of the season with one out in the 10th inning to settle a pitching duel between Dwight Gooden and Mike Krukow.

Gooden, 11-8, pitched five-hit baseball for nine innings, striking out 12 and walking only one batter. Jesse Orosco pitched the bottom of the 10th and registered his 26th save as the Mets closed to within 1½ games of the first-place Cubs in the East.

Krukow, 10-9, allowed only six hits before giving up the game-winning homer, which followed a walk to pinch-hitter Mookie Wilson. The Giants' pitcher struck out 10 and walked three in his first loss since July 13.

Dealers Would Like

Why would the opening of a new Isuzu Truck Dealer cause such a reaction? For starters, Isuzu offers a larger choice of pick-up models than Toyota or Mazda. 19 to be exact. Including 2WD's, 4WD's, shortbeds, longbeds, gas powered or diesel.

Trooper II

Isuzu also offers the versatile Trooper II, a work-horse 4X4 truck that can double as a family station wagon or roomy van.

And finally, when you add the fact that Isuzu has earned the reputation of being one of the world's toughest trucks, you'll begin to understand why all those other dealers might wish we had never come to the neighborhood.

Quisenberry Only Adds Fuel To Fire

By BEN WALKER
AP Sports Writer

Dan Quisenberry was brought in to go for his 33rd save. Instead, he threw a gopher pitch.

The Kansas City Royals, who have counted on their ace reliever all season, turned again to Quisenberry to protect a 6-5 lead in the final two innings against the Texas Rangers on Friday night.

But the Rangers ganged up to score three runs in the bottom of the ninth, the final two coming a two-out homer by Pete O'Brien, for an 8-6 victory in Texas.

"In the eighth inning, I heard someone say that he had 20 saves in the last 20 attempts," O'Brien said. "I didn't need to hear that."

Nonetheless, O'Brien connected for his 17th home run of the season, which left the Royals 4½ games off the pace in the American League West.

In other AL games, Cleveland stopped Milwaukee 5-3, Minnesota held off Boston 6-5, Detroit trumped Seattle 6-2, Oakland crunched New York 7-3, Baltimore tripped California 6-5 and Toronto rallied past Chicago 4-3.

Billy Sample led off the ninth with a single and stole second. Gary Ward's infield single put runners on the corners, and Larry Parrish hit a one-out sacrifice fly.

That left it up to O'Brien.

"Maybe it was divine intervention," he said. "This is a real rarity for me off the Quiz. I was telling somebody that this was the first hit I've had off him since 1981. I had a broken-bat single."

Quisenberry's record fell to 4-3. Texas reliever Dave Schmidt got the victory and is 6-5.

Jeff Kunkel homered for the Rangers and Jorge Orta homered for the Royals.

Indians 5, Brewers 3

Bert Blyleven upped his record to 13-5 as the Tribe moved out of last place in the AL East while dropping Milwaukee into the cellar.

Blyleven went 6 1-3 innings for the victory and Ernie Camacho went the final two for his 16th save as Cleveland won its 53rd game of the season.

Andre Thornton's 26th home run, a solo blast, lifted host Cleveland into a 2-2 tie in the fourth. Brett Butler lined a two-run single in the fifth to send the Indians ahead.

Is There No Justice?
Dave Winfield of the New York Yankees reacts as umpire Joe Brinkman calls him out on strikes in the third inning of Friday's game with the Oakland A's. Brinkman's calls angered other Yankees and he ejected Toby Harrah and later manager Yogi Berra after they argued. (AP Laserphoto)

Twins 6, Red Sox 5

Kirby Puckett, Mickey Hatcher and Tim Teufel cracked three hits apiece to highlight Minnesota's 16-hit attack, while reliever Ron Davis saw his luck take an upward turn.

Winning pitcher Frank Viola, 14-10, and the Twins took a 6-1 lead into the eighth before Marty Barrett singled home a run with two outs. Rick Lysander then replaced Viola and promptly yielded a three-run, pinch-homer to Rich Gedman.

Minnesota called on Davis to protect the one-run lead in the ninth. Davis, who surrendered a game-winning home run to Boston's Jim Rice the night before, gave up a leadoff single to Dwight Evans before striking out Rice and Tony Armas and getting Bill Buckner on a foul pop for his 24th save.

Milt Wilcox continued to throttle Seattle in a game that drew 36,496 fans to Tiger Stadium as Detroit set a club attendance record.

The Tigers, leading the AL East by 10 games, have drawn 2,056,171 fans this season, breaking the mark of 2,031,847 set in 1968, the last year Detroit won the World Series.

Wilcox improved his career record against the Mariners to 11-3 by giving up one run in eight innings.

Kirk Gibson singled home two runs in the first inning and then doubled and scored in the second.

Upshaw's 18th home run with two outs in the top of the eighth tied it 3-3. Whitt belted his ninth homer with two outs in the ninth to pin the loss on Hoyt, 10-13.

A's 7, Yankees 3

Dave Kingman blasted his 30th home run deep into the New York bullpen at Yankee Stadium to highlight Oakland's triumph.

Kingman had an RBI single during a four-run first inning and then boomed his two-run blow in the third. The slugger leads the major leagues with 99 runs batted in.

Carney Lansford extended his hitting streak to a career-high 20 games with a run-scoring in Oakland's seventh.

New York Manager Yogi Berra was ejected in the eighth inning while arguing whether a ball had hit A's batter Mike Heath. Berra kicked dirt three times on home plate umpire Joe Brinkman, who ended the dispute by kicking dirt back at Berra.

Two New Bowl Games Approved

MONTEREY, Calif. (AP) — The NCAA Executive Committee and Council has approved the abandonment of the second Saturday in November as the earliest date a bowl committee can invite a prospective team, effective in 1985, it was announced Friday.

Such a decision means a team can be invited to play in a post-season bowl game prior to the beginning of a football season, or at any time during a season.

The decision will have to be ratified at the annual NCAA convention next January.

Also approved by the Executive Committee and Council was the establishment of two new bowl games, the Freedom Bowl, to be played at Anaheim, Calif., and the Cherry Bowl, to be played at the Pontiac, Mich., Silverdome.

The Freedom Bowl will be played on Dec. 26 this year while the Cherry Bowl will be played Dec. 22. Both bowl games will be open to Division I schools.

The Executive Committee and Council, which completed a week-long meeting on Friday, took steps toward toughening academic eligiblity requirements and instituting a drug testing program for college athletes.

Proposed language on those subjects have yet to be drawn up. The drug testing proposal will be heard at next January's convention while the academic requirement proposal will go before the University Presidents' Commission at an unannounced future date.

"The general membership will decide whether we will do it or not," John Toner, NCAA President and athletic director at the University of Connecticut, told the Monterey Peninsula Herald, referring to a drug testing program. "We have a plan to do it."

Concerning the new bowl games, Toner said, "The council approved the plan that was adopted by the executive committee" that met earlier in Kansas City.

"Today's announcement by the NCAA is a marvelous climax to a 2½-year effort by a very devoted committee," said Karl Wray, publisher of the Anaheim Bulletin and founder and current board chairman of Freedom Bowl Inc.

"This will be a tremendous annual sporting event for Anaheim which I think will bring a great deal of enjoyment for the citizens of Orange County besides extra business for Anaheim and all our neighbors in Southern California.

"We look forward to providing a first class contest for the sports-minded fans of our area."

The Freedom Bowl will be an "open bowl" meaning that the group can select the two best college football teams in the United States available for the local contest.

UCLA, USC File Suit Against CFA's TV Plan

LOS ANGELES (AP) — UCLA and the University of Southern California, accusing the College Football Association of selling the television rights to football games it does not own, has filed suit in federal court against that organization, it was announced Friday.

The two schools joined with the Pacific-10 Conference and the Big Ten Conference in filing the federal suit against the CFA, ABC-TV, ESPN (which is owned by ABC), the University of Nebraska and the University of Notre Dame.

The complaint accuses the defendants of violation of anti-trust laws and breach of contract.

UCLA Chancellor Charles E. Young called the CFA refusal to allow the UCLA-Nebraska and Southern Cal-Notre Dame games to be televised "so unreasonable that we have no other action."

Young appeared at a news conference at UCLA with Jon Strauss, senior vice president for administration at Southern Cal, in announcing the suit, which asks for a preliminary and permanent injunction against the CFA agreement with its member schools.

Both emphasized that the Pac-10 and Big Ten have a contract with CBS to show their home games, but the CFA agreement with ABC apparently prohibits CFA teams, including Nebraska and Notre Dame, from being televised anywhere except on ABC.

Strauss called the lawsuit "the last resort we have."

Young said it has traditionally been the right of home teams to arrange for their own television coverage.

"We have a commitment with CBS, which we plan to honor," Young said. "We will televise these games unless we are told we cannot do so."

Specifically in question are the UCLA-Nebraska game, scheduled for Sept. 22, and the Southern Cal-Notre Dame game, scheduled for Nov. 24.

Strauss, who called the Southern Cal-Notre Dame rivalry "the oldest intersectional in the United States," said the CFA agreement with ABC would "arbitrarily prevent us from bringing this game to millions of football fans across the country. It is unfair to USC and unfair to Notre Dame."

Young said negotiations with the CFA, which have continued for some time, broke down Thursday afternoon.

"We were not able to get any response," he said, adding that there has been no direct discussion with ABC.

"Our problem is not with ABC. The schools (Nebraska and Notre Dame) say the CFA has told them they are not free to (enter into other agreements)."

Both men said the two local schools had attempted to avoid legal action but said it became inevitable after the breakdown of talks with the CFA.

The CFA agreement constitutes "a breach of our pre-existing game contracts with Nebraska and Notre Dame," Young said.

He called the issue "clearly much more fundamental than which television network will televise football games. The practice has always been that the home team arranges for television coverage, making the best arrangement it can and sharing the receipts with the visiting team."

Young said the suit was filed without "rancor or animosity," but with the hope that the injunction will be granted before the Sept. 22 UCLA-Nebraska game, to be played at the Rose Bowl.

There was no indication as to when the suit will be heard or when the injunction could be granted.

EC Tennis Team Sets Meeting

There will be a team organizational meeting for East Carolina University's men's and women's tennis on Wednesday at 5 p.m.

The meeting is for returning players, recruited players and anyone wishing to walk on.

All players interested in competing in ECU fall and spring tennis must be present. The meeting will take place in room 145 in Minges Coliseum.

Decker Will Give Plans

EUGENE, Ore. (AP) — Mary Decker probably will decide Monday whether to compete in Europe this year or take time off to allow her injured hip to heal, her coach said Friday.

Dick Brown said Decker has been working out daily this week and wants to run three races in Europe.

The 26-year-old American distance running star was injured when she tumbled to the track at Los Angeles Coliseum after her feet became tangled with those of 18-year-old Zola Budd of Britain during the Olympic 3,000-meter final.

Brown said Decker wants to come back and race this year, but not if she's risking further injury.

"With the fall at the Olympics, she does want to come back just because she feels she has a lot of good races still in her," he said. "I think she feels she hasn't peaked this year."

Brown said Decker underwent a bone scan this week by noted Eugene sports physician Stan James. The exam showed no bone damage in the hip but showed "a significant amount" of damage to the soft tissue around the hip joint, Brown said.

He said Decker will jog easily Saturday and Sunday and will meet with James Monday before deciding whether to run in Europe.

Brown doesn't believe Decker is pushing herself to come back too quickly from the Olympic fall, and he believes she has come to terms with the Olympic incident emotionally. The coach said he hopes Budd also can come out of the incident emotionally intact.

"The important thing is that both the athletes come out of this feeling good about themselves and about each other," he said.

Annual Report
Pitt Soil And Water Conservation District

July 1, 1983-June 30, 1984

PITT SOIL AND WATER CONSERVATION DISTRICT is dedicated to the wise use of our natural resources and to the education of Pitt County citizens about the importance that soil and water have on our lives.

Pitt District is chartered as a legal subdivision of State Government. It is your unit of government which has the responsibility of conserving soil, water, and related resources. It is empowered to work with any federal, state, or local agency as well as any civic organization in the promotion of conservation. The District provides technical services for soil and water conservation planning and resource development to all people within the county. Assistance can be obtained by contacting our office - telephone 752-2720.

The Board of Supervisors meets monthly at the District office located in the Federal Building, 215 S. Evans Street, Greenville. All residents of Pitt County are welcome to attend these meetings.

Pitt District is glad to join other Conservation Districts throughout North Carolina in celebrating 1984 as the "Year of Conservation". This observance has been entitled SOIL AND WATER '84. The objectives are to inform our citizens how vital soil and water are to our very existence and to emphasize some of the best ways to protect these twin resources.

During the past year we have placed special emphasis on our information and education program. We are proud to recognize several Pitt County students and community leaders for their contribution to the conservation program.

OUR LAND - A PRECIOUS INHERITANCE

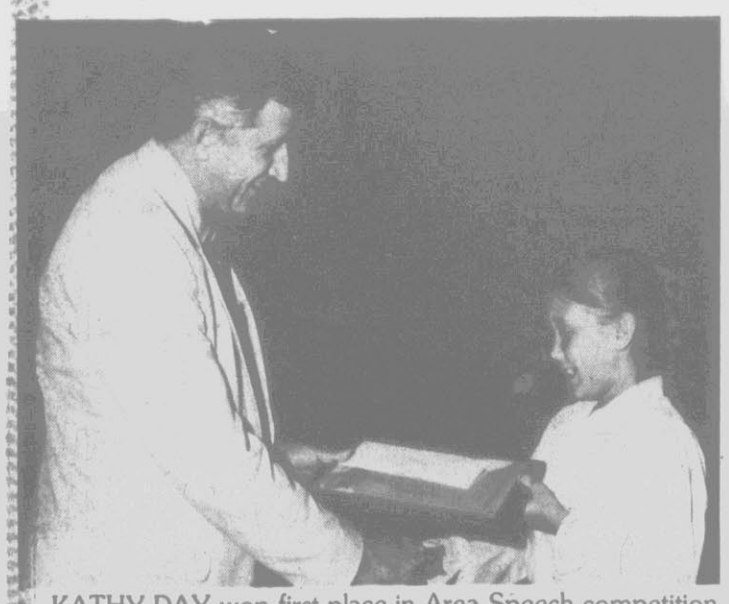

SOIL & WATER '84

The theme of SOIL AND WATER '84 is "Soil and Water - Yours for Life". Soil is the natural resource base from which our food and fiber must be produced. Good conservation practices are necessary to ensure that our soil will always produce an abundant supply of food.

The Tar River was once used only for navigation and fishing as shown in the above photograph. Now it serves as the water supply for Greenville. Water quality, particularly the control of animal waste and pesticides, has become increasingly important and forms a large part of the workload for District technical assistance.

KATHY DAY won first-place in Area Speech competition and represented Pitt District and Area V in the state contest held in Raleigh. She received a plaque from Dr. Maurice Cook, Director of the N.C. Division of Soil and Water, DNR&CD, for her participation.

The SWIFT CREEK WATERSHED drainage and flood prevention project was dedicated on November 23. Participants included SCS State Conservationist COY GARRETT, standing, and seated left to right, B. ALTON GARDNER, Drainage District Chairman; Congressman WALTER B. JONES, and CARROLL PIERCE, DNR&CD.

Board member CURTIS MARTIN, right, was presented a 20-Year Length-of-Service pin by former District Chairman ROBERT G. LITTLE.

Our staff assisted with a conservation training session for public school teachers held at East Carolina University.

Soviets Succeeding In Upstaging The Olympics

MOSCOW (AP) — Soviet organizers have apparently succeeded, perhaps too well, in attempts to upstage performances at the recent Los Angeles Summer Olympics without purporting to stage an "alternate Olympics."

In the first two days of Friendship-84 competition at several Eastern European sites, Communist-bloc athletes have consistently recorded efforts exceeding those posted by gold medalists at Los Angeles. But crowds have been relatively small, perhaps because the Soviets have been careful not to risk violating the International Olympic Committee charter by trumpeting Friendship-84 as an Olympic alternative.

A notable, though not unexpected, development has been the inability of Soviet-bloc athletes to equal the standards established by Carl Lewis of the United States during his romp to four gold medals at Los Angeles. Both the 100-meter and long jump winners at Moscow on Friday fell short of Lewis' marks, and the Soviets' 400-meter relay team couldn't equal the world-record time by the Lewis-anchored American team.

About 20,000 attended women's track and field events in Prague, Czechoslovakia's 50,000-seat stadium, and the 103,000-seat Lenin Stadium in Moscow was about one-third full for the opening session of men's track and field. Organizers were hoping for a full house for today's opening ceremonies at Moscow.

The Soviets organized Friendship-84 after announcing a boycott of the Los Angeles Olympics. The Eastern European meets, while organized for the 13 allies who joined the Soviet walkout, were also intended to attract teams that also competed in Los Angeles.

According to Soviet officials, 23 nations were taking part in track and field. Athletes from 49 nations are expected to compete in at least one of the nine sports on the Friendship-84 agenda, but only a handful of Western countries were represented.

Instead, many of those Western teams were in Berlin for the first of Western Europe's post-Olympic track meets. On Friday, American gold medalist Evelyn Ashford shook off jet lag to capture the women's 100-meter dash in 10.94 seconds, .03 faster than her winning time at Los Angeles. It also bested the 10.95 recorded Thursday by East Germany's Marlies Goehr during the Prague competition.

Greg Foster of the United States, silver medalist in the 110-meter hurdles at Los Angeles, captured his speciality in 13.16 seconds, the fastest time of the year for the event.

Czechoslovakia's Helena Fibingerova, who won the shot put at Prague on Thursday, won again on Friday at Berlin over West Germany's Claudia Losch, the Los Angeles gold medalist. Fibingerova got off a winning toss of 68 feet, 10 inches.

The highlight of Friday's Friendship-84 competition was a world-record discus heave of 240 feet, 6 inches by Irina Meszynski of East Germany. The throw was two inches better than the 1983 standard by Galina Savinkova of the Soviet Union, and over 26 feet further than the 214-5 effort of the Netherland's Ria Stalman at Los Angeles.

Olympic bests were exceeded in seven men's events at Moscow and in three women's events at Prague.

Meanwhile, Soviet riders dominated equestrian competition being staged at Ksiaz in southwestern Poland. Austria and West Germany were the only non-Soviet bloc countries taking part.

In notable achievements at Moscow:

— Yuri Sedykh of the Soviet Union heaved the hammer 281 feet, 6 inches, more than 25 feet further than the winning toss by Finland's Juha Tiainen at Los Angeles.

— East Germany's Uwe Hohn hurled the javelin 309 feet, 10 inches to exceed the top Los Angeles throw, 284-8 by Finland's Arto Harkonen.

— Konstantin Volkov of the Soviet Union won the pole vault at 19-¼, two inches better than the 18-10¼ effort that earned the Los Angeles gold for Pierre Quinon of France.

— Yuri Dumchev of the Soviet Union won the discus with a throw of 218 feet, 10 inches, four inches better than the Los Angeles throw of West Germany's Jochen Danneberg.

— Sergei Kasnauskas of the Soviet Union put the shot 71 feet to easily outdistance the performance of Italy's Alessandro Andrei, who threw 69-9 at Los Angeles.

— Sergei Protsishchin of the Soviet Union walked 20 kilometers in 1 hour, 21 minutes, 57 seconds — 16 seconds faster than the Los Angeles time of Mexico's Ernesto Canto.

— Andrei Perlov of the Soviet Union walked 50 kilometers over four minutes faster than did Mexico's Raul Gonzalez in winning the event at Los Angeles. Perlov was timed in 3 hours, 43 minutes, 6 seconds.

At Prague:

—Marina Stepanova of the Soviet Union won the 400-meter hurdles in 53.67 seconds, almost a second faster than the Olympic winning time of 54.61 by Morocco's Nawal el Moutawakil.

— Irina Podyalovskaya of the Soviet Union was clocked in 1:57.31 in winning the 800 meters, .29 seconds faster than Romania's Doine Melinte covered the distance at Los Angeles.

Soybean And Grain Prices Dampened

BY EDMUND O. LAWLER
Associated Press Writer

Long-awaited rains in the Midwest helped dampen soybean and grain futures prices Friday on the Chicago Board of Trade.

The warm, dry conditions throughout the Corn Belt this summer threaten to reduce crop yields. But Bob Lekberg, a grain analyst with Shearson Lehman-American Express in Chicago, said the rainfall probably won't be substantial epough to improve the harvest.

"It's likely that we'll look back on the weekend rains and say they were not adequate," he said. The rain and the prospect of rain did have the effect of slowing volume.

"There's enough water around that any would-be buyer is choosing to wait until Monday," Lekberg said.

Longer-range forecasts in-dicate dry conditions will return to the Midwest and renew concerns over crop damage that would limit supply and boost prices, he said.

Wheat prices were under pressure by the People's Republic of China's cancellation of plans to buy 273,000 metric tons of soft red wheat from the United States. Lekberg noted that the U.S. embassy in Peking said the Chinese are unhappy about U.S. textile import restrictions and that may have influenced their decision to re-nege on the wheat contract.

At settlement, wheat was 4¾ cents to 6½ cents lower with the contract for delivery in September at $3.44¼ a bushel; corn was 2½ cents to 5½ cents lower with September at $2.95¼ a bushel; oats were ½ cent to 1½ cents lower with September at $1.68¾ a bushel; and soy-beans were 7 cents to 24 cents lower with August at $6.60 a bushel.

Cattle and pork futures were mostly lower on the Chicago Mercantile Exchange.

A lack of demand for beef products weighed on the cattle futures, said Russell Dolce, a livestock specialist for Shear-son Lehman in Chicago.

"It's a seasonal thing: people are on vacation and others believe it's too hot to prepare a roast, for example," Dolce said.

Activity was light in the fro-zen pork belly pit where traders were awaiting the Agriculture Department's report on stocks in cold storage to be released Monday. Dolce said traders were anticipating a report showing an ample supply of bellies in the warehouses, which he said should put more pressure on the market.

At settlement, live cattle were unchanged to 1.02 cents lower with the contract for delivery in August at 64.20 cents a pound; feeder cattle were .30 cent to .55 cent lower with Au-gust at 66.37 cents a pound; live hogs were unchanged to 1.33 cents lower with August at 53.17 cents a pound; and frozen pork bellies were 1.82 cents lower to .47 cent higher with August at 58.27 cents a pound.

Cocoa's strong advance this week on the New York Coffee, Sugar and Cocoa Exchange stalled as the September contract fell by $58 a ton Friday.

Arthur Stevenson, a coffee and cocoa analyst with Shearson Lehman-American Express in New York, said prices slipped "on the perception that spot shortages were not as acute as first thought."

There were concerns that West African nations, particularly Nigeria, would be unable to deliver their cocoa supplies on time. "But the talk is that the shipments are now on their way to Europe," Stevenson said.

Gold and silver showed little life as they traded in a narrow range on the Commodity Ex-change of New York.

"The market was almost at a standstill," said Jack Boyd, a precious metals analyst for Drexel Burnham Lambert in New York.

"There was no motivation, the market even ignored a $5.2 billion increase in the money supply," said Boyd, who ex-plained that a strong money supply figure typically prompts fears of inflation and a sell off of gold and silver.

Gold settled 10 cents to 20 cents higher with the contract for delivery in August at $351.10 a troy ounce; and silver settled 4 cents lower with August at $7.825 a troy ounce.

Greenville Firm Gets State Grant

RALEIGH (AP) — JMF Engineering Enterprises Inc. of Greenville has been awarded $26,920 under a state research grant program designed to encourage small businesses.

The firm will use the grant to design equipment that will reduce worker exposure to toxic substances in the pharmaceutical industry.

Grants also were awarded to four other firms in the state by the N.C. Technological Development Authority.

Kirsten Nyrop, the authority's executive director, said the grants were awarded because "here is evidence in this state that businesses could get started or grow if they had money to do research or development."

U.S. Trade Deficit May Hit $100 Billion

By ROBERT BURNS
Associated Press Writer

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — When the Finnish manufacturer Wartsila AB decided the time was right to boost exports of its paper-finishing machines, there was little doubt where to push hardest.

"The United States is the biggest market in the whole world," said Bekka Salo, president of Wartsila's engineering division. "Everybody in Europe is looking to the American market now."

Like hordes of exporters around the world, Wartsila is taking advantage of an American buying spree that economists say may account for as much as one-half the total increase in world trade this year.

And like many European businessmen, Salo says his company's attraction to the U.S. market runs deeper than the lure of selling in a country whose strong currency makes foreign goods cheaper.

Wartsila is knocking on U.S. doors to get a toehold in what it sees as a lucrative market even after the dollar loses its steam.

"When we are making business decisions we can't just think about the daily dollar exchange rates," Salo said in a telephone interview from Helsinki, Finland's capital. "We have to think farther ahead than that."

Even so, the historic rise of the dollar in relation to other major currencies is a key reason for the surge of goods into U.S. ports. The U.S. trade deficit this year may hit $100 billion — far beyond the record $61 billion shortfall last year.

It also explains the furious rush of cash from Europe and elsewhere to U.S. shores. This "capital flight" troubles many governments, fearful that it weakens the ability of their own industries to rebuild obsolete plants and invest in new technologies.

But taken together, it appears the benefits to Europe of bigger exports outweigh the losses of investment money, economists say.

Francis Uyttebrouk, an international economist at Chase Econometrics Associates in Brussels, estimates the 10 countries of the European Common Market would lose about $15 billion in worldwide export earnings this year if the exchange value of the dollar were 20 percent lower than at present.

He contends that while Europe's loss of investment money to the United States is harder to measure, it is more than offset by the beneficial effects of higher exports.

Besides beefing up the non-U.S. exporters' profits, and thus boosting government tax revenues, the boom in sales to America is holding unemployment lower than it otherwise would be, economists say.

The Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development estimates that without a big increase in West German exports since 1980, that country's economic growth would have been 1.5 percent lower by the end of last year and its jobless rate a percentage point higher.

West Germany and other European countries are selling even more this year.

In the first five months of 1984, West Germany boosted its sales in the United States by 59 percent, or about $2.4 billion, according to the Common Market statistics office. France managed a 63 percent increase, representing about $1.1 billion.

And the boom is not confined to Europe.

Japanese exports to the United States were up 32 percent in the first half of the year, and Hong Kong posted a 100 percent increase.

Brazil, straining under the burden of the developing world's biggest foreign debt, has gained new hope for prosperity by posting a 24 percent increase in exports to the United States in the first seven months of the year. Its total sales surplus abroad was a record $7.2 billion.

Less visible is the steady stream of cash flowing out of Europe and much of the rest of the Western world into the United States. Foreign investment of all types in the United States has grown from $11 billion two years ago to an expected $80 billion this year, according to the U.S. Congressional Budget Office.

Much of this movement of investment money is explained by the high level of interest rates in the United States, which provide relatively bigger returns for buyers of U.S. stocks and other securities. Many investors also view the U.S. market as a haven in times of economic uncertainty and political unrest elsewhere.

That gap in interest rate levels also is one of the driving forces behind the dollar's ascent. The Federal Reserve Bank of New York, using an index that measures the dollar's value against the currencies of 10 major U.S. trading partners, says the dollar at the end of July was worth 35 percent more than at the start of 1982.

In recent days the U.S. currency has been at an 11-year high in relation to the West German mark, a seven-year peak against the Swiss franc and modern records against the French franc and Italian lira.

Just last year, the dollar's preeminence on foreign exchange markets was eliciting cries of anguish from some European governments.

Greek Socialist Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou appealed to the Common Market last year to slap controls on the movement of European cash to the United States, and other leaders accused the United States of ignoring European concerns.

But the Common Market took no action, and today the European complaints are fading as rapidly as their export earnings grow.

Shippers Perplexed

BOSTON (AP) — It is a graphic illustration of the trade imbalance: Goods sit in the warehouses of Bremen, Naples and Yokohama awaiting ships for America, while empty cargo containers pile up on U.S. docks for want of exports going overseas.

The surge of imports and the dearth of exports have created headaches for those in the business of international commerce. Shipping agents are scrambling for cargo space on U.S.-bound boats while steamship lines lose money on half-filled ships returning to Europe and Asia from the United States. Importers complain of long delays in shipments.

"It's the worst imbalance in the last 10 years," said Anne Aylward, the maritime director of the Massachusetts Port Authority. "It really is a national issue at this point."

The one-way flow of goods is blamed on a strong U.S. dollar that makes Japanese stereos and Italian shoes a bargain in this country while pushing up the cost of Gillette razors and Polaroid cameras overseas.

Ms. Aylward estimates that imports are up 14 percent in Boston. The increase has created a logjam that has added three to five weeks to the wait for overseas shipments.

"Empty containers are stacking up here while companies that want to ship into the United States have to wait," she said.

Other ports report similar problems.

Farmville's Sheila Turnage, Author of 'Trout The Magnificent'

Local Writer Maintains A Low-Key Lifestyle

Down a long road, up a bumpy winding path, in an ancient house hidden by a grove of trees lives an imp called Sheila the Shy One. A children's story? No, a children's-story author whose book "Trout the Magnificent" has just hit the market.

Perhaps, you might think, a shy person would not be a good subject for an interview. In this case that would be a false assumption.

Sheila Turnage is as interesting to know as she is articulate. She answers questions with ease, but rarely volunteers information.

She surveys the land surrounding the recently moved 200-year-old house. "Dog Fennel Acres," she grins, her thumbs hooked into the back pocket of her jeans. "They're everywhere, even my goats won't eat them," she says, waving a hand at the ferny weeds that are as tall as she.

But Sheila's tolerance in dealing with things of nature is high. One day, before winter settles in, she and her husband, Rod Beasley, will move into the newly renovated house with a ghost named "Carmen," cats Homer, Miss Emily, Quiche and Reka, and dogs Ginny and Bowser where she will write, and write, and write.

Meanwhile, this is what Sheila says about how she came to be the author of "Trout the Magnificent," the story of a fish with a wish to fly.

"I HAVE LOTS OF ANIMALS" . . . declares writer Sheila Turnage, shown here taking a stroll in the big yard of her home near Farmville. The two dogs belonging to her and her husand Rod Beasley accompany her on a tour to look over geese and chickens they keep on the place.

'Trout the Magnificent', by Sheila Turnage with illustrations in color and in black and white by Janet Stevens, has been published by the New York publishing firm of Harcourt Brace Jovanovich. It is in large format with hard covers and is priced at $12.95, available in local book stores.

Q: Do you feel a kinship with Peter Pan?
A: A very strong one. As a matter of fact when I was in high school everybody was reading "Love Story" and I used to go to school and prop a book in front of my school book and I would read whatever I wanted to read. I was reading in North Carolina history class one day and all of a sudden I just burst into tears — I had to get up and leave the room. Everybody thought I had been reading "Love Story" but I was reading "Peter Pan" and I had gotten to the part where they could go back and it just killed me. So, yes, I have a very strong affinity with Peter Pan.

Q: Are you a native North Carolinian?
A: Yes. I was born in Jacksonville, North Carolina. My father was the city manager there.

Q: When you relax, how do you do it?
A: I like to read — anything that is very private is relaxing to me. I like to read in my bed — also sitting in a totally quiet room.

Q: How did you get the idea for "Trout"?
A: U-m-m-m-m, partly because I'm Pisces. And so the fish is there — "Trout" is my autobiography — and I just liked the idea of writing about a fish, although Gunter Grass would die of shame. Gunter wrote a book called "Flounder" and I thought, well if Gunter Grass can write a book called "Flounder," I can write one called "Trout." It also had to do with my niece.

Q: How long did it take you to write it?
A: To write just the story itself? Two hours. Then I rewrote it to make it shorter and that took me a couple of days.

Q: Who is your favorite author?
A: (After a long, long pause) I would like to be able to write like John Steinbeck when he first started writing. I like his humor.

Q: Whom did you write "Trout" for?
A: One of my nieces. Lauren Brett. She's 4. I dedicated it to her and her two sisters. But I had her in mind when I wrote it.

Q: Does "Trout" have a message?
A: "Trout" has too much of a message. Something that bothers me tremendously about the book. It is incredibly didactic.

Q: Why do you think it sold then?
A: Well — that beats me. It's got a lot of dialogue. Apparently they liked the dialogue — it's probably what sold the book.

Q: What degrees do you hold?
A: B.A. in anthropology and journalism — well, a minor in journlism from East Carolina.

Q: How have you employed your anthropology?
A: You mean why did I get a degree in anthropology if I weren't going to "anthro?" U-m-m-m-m — I got a degree in anthroplogy very deliberately. Actually I also studied archaeology. I worked as an archaeologist for awhile in Guatemala. That's apparently the only thing that I have ever done with it but I studied anthropology because it's the study of cultures, which is the study of how people limit themselves through what they believe and why they do it, which to me is fascinating — because there are just s-o-o-o-o many ways to do it. It is such an important context when you are trying to understand what anybody is doing. (A pause) I was gonna go to Chapel Hill to study writing and had been accepted into their writing program. I went to talk to Ovid Pierce who was teaching writing at ECU at the time and he told me to go to Chapel Hill if I wanted to but the thing that writers screw up most on is, you can have all the style and technique in the world but if you don't have anything to say you might as well not have any style or technique. And that's the reason I ended up with a degree in anthropology. It was something that interested me and I thought it provided the best context.

Q: Is it profitable writing a children's book?
A: If it sells, sure. You get an advance and then you don't make any money till the book is out about six months and the royalty checks will start to come in.

Q: Do you have plans to do another?
A: I should do another one. I never had any interest in writing for children. I don't know anything about children. I had never written anything for children before I wrote that. It's just a fluke! It would make good sense to try to do that again because I've already got my foot in the door here. It's pretty difficult for me to program myself to write something specific. If I happen to write a children's story then I would be very pleased.

Q: Are you a good cook?
A: I am an inventive cook. But I'm an incurable slob. It's like — we clean up the house when we move in. When it gets so bad we move out. Except for one, every house we have lived in has been demolished.

Q: What is the best dish you have invented?
A: I made something to go with crawfish the other day that was pretty good.

Q: Where did you get the crawfish?
A: We have a pond. We are rebuilding this old house and it's in a low area so we made a pond next to it. We seined crawfish and got more of them any any sane person would ever hope to see in a lifetime.

Q: What did you call your invention?
A: Called it — "let's eat this." I like to make things up. If they're no good I throw them out to the chickens. Have you ever heard a chicken gag? It is not a pretty sound!

Q: Do you have a recurring dream?
A: I've had several recurring dreams. I recognize them and get very bored with them. I get actively irate with myself when I'm sleeping. I also have dreams that have credits. I watch the whole dream all the way through and then the credits run. "Produced by Sheila Turnage," "Written by Sheila Turnage," "Cast by Sheila Turnage."

Q: What irritates you?
A: Personal politics. Also people who move to the South and are determined to bring "cultcha" to the area without having the intelligence to realize that there is culture that is a very strong culture here. And I think having that diversity is nice. Being able to choose between different kinds of cultural activies is wonderful. But that latent bigotry of most of the people who come here irritates the hell out of me.

Q: Name something that "they" don't recognize as culture.
A: There is an entire culture here. An incredibly strong linguistic tradition here. Rhythmic with amazing images and it is as strong as it is because it's an oral tradition. Storytelling. Gospel music. Music which is played in country churches. It's not the thing that you would see on Broadway and it's not the thing that you would find in the Metropolitan Museum of Art but it's still based upon the culture.

Q: Then why don't you do something about it?
A: I'm writing as hard as I can. But I think that having that overlooked and downgraded irritates me tremendously. Mainly of course because it is my culture.

Q: Have you ever won anything in writing?
A: Fourth place in Writers Digest Fiction Contest and I won a fiction award for a piece of nonfiction in "The Rebel."

Q: If you lived before who/what were you?
A: (The response is immediate and serious). I lived in Boston during a smallpox epidemic in the mid 1700s.

Q: Have you ever been to Boston?
A: Uh huh. I went to Boston when I was about 12 years old, and was going through a graveyard and could see when I got to one line of open graves — people, especially women, in gray long dresses and I walked past and I would know all the names on the tombstones before I would get to them. So, I think I lived then and also in Europe in World War II — and I knew my sister then.

Q: What would you have liked to have been?
A: I would loved to have been with Marco Polo and I would have liked to have been a madam on the coast of Greece.

Q: What kind of relationship do you have with your editor?
A: A good working relationship except for one brief flurry of confusion. She called me early in the morning once. Her name is Anna Bier. A-N-N-A B-I-E-R. She said "It's Ah na Be ah." And I thought it was someone saying I want a beer. And I made appropriate responses — but we finally got it straightened out.

Q: If you had the power to change anything in the world, what would it be?
A: For everybody to have enough to eat. I think that would solve all of our political problems.

Q: The latest psychology books say to imagine yourself exactly as you want to be (successwise) and you can attain it. What do you see for yourself?
A: To be able to write whatever I want to write and put it in the mail and never have to mess with it again. Live in the country and not have to cope with anybody.

Q: What can Ferarro do to make the women's role easier?
A: She's doing it right this minute just by putting herself in a position to be seriously considered. By other women making her a position asset instead of a liability. By handling the immediate scrutiny that she is under with the grace that she has managed and by not behaving in a predictably flaky and hysterical manner has helped women tremendously already. Whether she wins or loses she has already helped women immeasurably all over this country and I think if Walter Mondale ends up in the White House it will be because of her and not her ending up there because of him.

Q: How do you and your mother differ?
A: My mother is very practical, deliberate. Confident in what she believes. She has a very strong emotional network. A more traditional view of the role of women.

Q: What brings you to tears?
A: Just about anything. I cry when I hear the news. I cry when I watch Benson. I cry when I read. I once broke into tears in a grocery store watching a woman trying to decide which bunch of celery to buy. I cry very easily.

Q: How do animals fit into your everyday life?
A: I have lots of animals. Goats, peacocks, chicken, ducks, quail. Dogs and cats. They crawl all over my life. I like the sound of animals and the social order they set up.

End of interview. But you can be assured we will all hear a lot more from Sheila Turnage in years to come.

THE OLD HOUSE . . . that is home to Sheila and Rod was moved to the site and is undergoing gradual renovation by the two. Sheila calls it "Dog Fennel Acres" in reference to the tall weeds growing on the place, some evident near the house in the photograph above.

Amy Jo Pierce Is Bride Of Robert O'Neal Lewis Jr.

Amy Jo Pierce, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Norwin C. Pierce of Greenville, and Robert O'Neal Lewis Jr., son of Robert O'Neal Lewis Jr. of Havelock, were married Saturday at 11 a.m. in Saint Paul's Episcopal Church.

The Rev. Lawrence P. Houston performed the double ring ceremony and served communion. Sharon Irwin presented a program of organ music and Bill Frazier played the trumpet.

The bride was given in marriage by her parents. Her matron of honor was Janet Clark of Greer, S.C., sister of the bride, and the maid of honor was Cindy Browning of Delray Beach, Fla.

Bridesmaids included Jane Pierce of Silver Spring, Md., and Virginia Pierce of Novato, Calif., sisters-in-law of the bride, Diane Bronstein of Kinston, Beth Raynor of Columbia, S.C., and Catherine Herold of Fayetteville.

Flowers girls were nieces of the bride, Sarah Pierce of Silver Spring, Md., Susan Pierce of Novato, Calif., Heather and Robin Clark of Greer, S.C.

The father of the bridegroom was best man. Ushers were Michael Lewis of Havelock, brother of the bridegroom, Dr. Donald Pierce of Novato, Calif., and Dr. Richard Pierce of Silver Spring, Md., both brothers of the bride, Howard Clark of Greer, S.C., brother-in-law of the bride, Dale Morris of Havelock, Joe Bryan of New Bern, cousin of the bride, and Tim Morgan of Winston-Salem.

The bride wore a formal gown of white taffeta over peau de soie designed with a high neckline encircled in alencon lace. The fitted bodice featured a sheer yoke of English net embroidered in Brussels lace and was overlaid in alencon lace that extended over the bodice front and basque waistline. The bodice was enhanced by seed pearls and iridescent sequins. The long Juliet sleeves were fashioned in taffeta and embroidered English net which extended to calla points also embroidered in schiffli lace. The full gathered skirt extended to a chapel train and was enhanced by a draped overlay of taffeta. The hemline was edged in alencon lace. The bride carried a cascade of phalaenopsis orchids and greenery.

The attendants wore formal gowns of royal blue taffeta. Each was designed with an open neckline, deep scooped back and elbow-length pouf sleeves, giving an off-shoulder effect. The bodice center front featured rows of French tucks and the gathered skirt fell from a natural waistline. Each carried two white cymbidiums accented with greenery.

Each flower girl wore a white tea length dress with royal blue English smocking around the collar and sleeves. The dresses were a bishop pattern with a lace edge attached collar. The girls carried white baskets of white flowers sprinkled with royal blue flowers.

A reception was given in the Parrish Hall by the bride's parents. Guests were greeted by Mrs. Samuel Sewall. Mrs. Lyle Lewis, aunt of the bridegroom, served wedding cake and Mrs. William Wright poured punch. The bridegroom's cousins, Gina Bryan and Brenda Lewis, handed out rice bags. Nephews of the bride, James, Tommy and Andy Pierce, and cousin of the bridegroom, Clifton Lewis, presented each guest bridegroom's cake.

The parents of the bridegroom entertained at a rehearsal party at the Sheraton-Greenville. A bridesmaids luncheon was given by Mrs. George Clark, Mrs.Earl Roseveare and Mrs. Robert VanVeld. Mrs. Sewall and Mrs. Charles Cain gave a bridal shower.

The bride graduated from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill with a degree in English education. The bridegroom graduated from East Carolina University with a degree in business.

COOL WATER

DENVER (AP) — A good idea for summer is to keep a pitcher of water in the refrigerator.

It quenches thirst, cools the body, cleanses the system and basically sustains life, says William A. Richardson, president of the American Water Works Association. And, he adds, it comes right out of the tap at a price that can't be beat.

The association says America's water is the highest quality water in the world and costs an average of $1.03 per 1,000 gallons.

Through Fiber Optics, Angioplasty Offers Hope To Cardiac Patients

Cardiologists may one day be able to guide a tiny fiber optic laser catheter through the vascular system to the heart and vaporize plaque that is clogging coronary blood vessels.

Or they may use specially developed microsurgical instruments to open the vessels. In either case, a fiber optic device in the catheter will allow direct viewing of the procedure.

Such ideas seemed farfetched a decade ago, but recent advances in the design and use of heart catheters have put them squarely in the realm of possibility, say researchers in a new program at Duke University Medical Center who are exploring these and other techniques.

A team of cardiologists, working closely with surgeons, radiologists and bioengineers at Duke, is designing and testing experimental catheters to provide more and better options in the treatment of coronary artery disease.

"The Interventional Cardiac Catherization (ICC) Program is also providing patients with the latest in proven clinical advances," according to program director Dr. Richard Stack, a cardiologist.

Among them, Stack said, is balloon angioplasty, which has proven to be a safe, effective and economical alternative to bypass surgery for many patients with coronary artery disease.

The procedure involves using a tiny balloon-tip catheter to widen the channel of a blood vessel narrowed by a buildup of plaque.

"Patients who have the procedure are usually able to go back to work in about two weeks, compared to an average recuperation of 11 weeks for bypass surgery," said Dr. Harry Phillips, associate director of the program. "And they are usually free from the painful attacks of angina that formerly limited their ability to play sports and lead active lives."

Angioplasty is also much cheaper than surgery, mainly due to a shortened hospital stay. On the average it costs three to four times more for a bypass operation than an angioplasty procedure, Phillips said.

Some 15,000 of the procedures were performed last year in hospitals around the country, and it's estimated that twice as many will be done in 1984.

"Angioplasty is a definite breakthrough, particularly with the various types of investigational balloon catheters we've been using since the ICC program began," Stack said. "We are now able to successfully dilate well over 90 percent of the blockages that are attempted."

However, he said they're still finding that during the healing process the vessel will develop a partial blockage again in up to 25 percent of patients.

"Patients who develop a recurrent blockage usually require a second or even a third balloon dilation procedure. That's why our research and development effort is focusing on alternative catheter techniques."

Despite these limintation, balloon angioplasty is now a very attractive alternative to coronary bypass surgery in many selected patients with coronary artery disease, Stack said.

During angioplasty, a hollow needle is inserted into a major artery through the groin, and a very thin flexible guide wire is steered through the arterial system under fluoroscopic control until it reaches the area of the narrowed vessel.

A second catheter with a balloon tip, called a dilating catheter, is then advanced over the guide wire. Once in place, the balloon is inflated by the cardiologist with a small amount of fluid. Patients remain conscious during the procedure and report little discomfort.

The experimental catheters under development will be guided in much the same way, Stack said.

Shoplifters took an estimated $1.25 billion of groceries from supermarkets last year.

Heart attacks kill 44 percent of the 1.25 million Americans stricken each year.

Wedding Vows Exchanged In Farmville Saturday

MRS. FARLEY

Jill Paulette Cutler, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Richard E. Cutler of Route 2, Farmville, and William Harrison Farley, son of Mr. and Mrs. Eugene H. Farley of Lynchburg, Va., were married Saturday afternoon.

The double ring ceremony was performed by the Rev. William N. Gordon in the Farmville Presbyterian Church at 3 p.m.

The bride was given in marriage by her parents and escorted by her father. Patricia Ann Cutler of Farmville, sister of the bride, was maid of honor and bridesmaids included Susan Morgan of Greensboro and Cindy Breneman of Charlotte.

The father of the bridegroom was best man. Chad Ashwell of Lynchburg, Va., was ring bearer. Chris Evatt of Greensboro, Jack Parker of Lynchburg, Va., Jeff Cutler of Farmville, brother of the bride, John Cros of Richmond, Va., and Chris Ingram of Wilmington were ushers.

A program of organ music was presented by Alice Cobb of Pinetops. Milton D. Barnette Jr. of Farmville was soloist.

The bride wore a formal gown of tissue taffeta designed with a Victorian neckline and fitted bodice. Silk Venise lace motifs etched with clusters of seed pearls embellished the neckline and bodice. The puff sleeves featured an inset of illusion accented by floral silk Venise appliques. Satin bridal buttons fastened the back of the gown. The full circular skirt extended into a chapel train and scalloped Venise lace bordered the hemline. The gown was designed by the bride and her mother. The bride wore a fingertip veil and blusher of illusion sprinkled with florets of Venise lace. She carried a bouquet of miniature orchids, tea roses and baby's breath.

The honor attendant selected a formal gown of dusty rose taffeta. Folds of taffeta draped the bodice in a wrap fashion. Pouf sleeves enhanced the low neckline of the gown. The gathered waistline was accented by a sash. Chantilly lace surrounded her nosegay of miniature orchids, burgundy tea roses, stephanotis and baby's breath. It was tied with ribbons of white and rose.

The bridesmaids' dresses were identical and their nosegays were surrounded with chantilly lace and were a combination of burgundy tea roses, stephanotis and baby's breath with cascading ribbons of white and rose.

The mother of the bride wore a formal gown of burgundy georgette over matching taffeta with a corsage of tea roses and baby's breath. The mother of the bridegroom selected a formal gown of lavender faille taffeta and wore a corsage of cymbidium orchids.

The couple will live in Cary after a wedding trip to Charleston and Kiwiah Island, S.C.

The bride graduated from Farmville Central High School and the University of North Carolina at Greensboro. She is business manager for Triangle Research and Development Corp. The bridegroom graduated from a Lynchburg high school and UNC-G. He is assistant vice president at the N.C. Corporate Credit Union.

A reception was held at the DAR House in Farmville.

Cynthia Cross, cousin of the bridegroom, poured punch and Mr. and Mrs. Floyd Messer Sr. served champagne. Wedding cake was served by Bett Pippin. Mrs. Steven Gardner, cousin of the bride, presided at the guest register. Guests were greeted by Mr. and Mrs. Streeter Tugwell and Mr. and Mrs. Milton Barnett Sr.

A dinner was held at the Colonial Inn in Farmville given by the parents of the bridegroom after the rehearsal. Friends of the Cutler family honored the bridal couple and out-of-town guests at the Farmvill Country Club at a party following dinner. A bridesmaids brunch was held Saturday at the Colonial Inn.

A summer tea was also given for the bride prior to the wedding ceremony.

Honorary bridesmaids were Lois S. Marshall of Richmond, Va., Susan Joan Allen of Summerville, S.C., and Tisha Church of Greenville, all sisters of the bride, Tammi Jewell of Richmond, Va., and Mary Warren of Raleigh.

Michael Wheeler of Lafayette, La., brother of the bridegroom, and Dr. James Wheeler of Atlanta, Ga., uncle of the bridegroom, were best men. Ushers were Capt. Byron Winn of Goldsboro, Capt. Kirk Yost of Montgomery, Ala., Thomas Fortunato of Binghamton, N.Y., and Capt. Bobby Henry of Goldsboro.

The bride wore a formal white gowen of sheerganza and chantilly lace. The gown was fashioned with a high neckline, sheer V-yoke encrusted with pearls and outlined with a chantilly lace ruffle accented with iridescents. The lace bishop sleeves closed with lace ruffles and traditional bridal buttons. The flowing skirt, with double lace ruffles accented with iridescents, extended into an attached chapel train. Her chapel length veil of silk illusion, bordered in lace, was attached to a matching lace capulet etched with pearls and iridescents. She carried a bouquet of white roses.

The couple will live in Goldsboro after a wedding trip to Grand Caymen Islands.

The bride is the granddaughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wendell W. Smiley of Greenville.

A reception was held at the Seymour Johnson AFB Officers Club and guests were greeted by Mr. and Mrs. Jerry Lommatzsch and Mr. and Mrs. Scott Smiley, aunts and uncles of the bride. Cake was served by Mary Warren. Goodbyes were said by Steve Smiley, uncle of the bride. Music was provided by Mac Stewart.

Determining Amount Of Elderly Aid

An adult son or daughter should help his or her aged parents more than a cousin, and a friend should offer more support than an acquaintance. On this most people agree. But exactly how much help should be given?

And how much help do parents owe to adult children? This is difficult to say.

"Differing expectations can be a serious concern," Dr. Linda George, associate professor of medical sociology at Duke University, recently told volunteers and professionals who deal with the elderly. Dr. George was one of the speakers at extension's Eloise Cofer Family Living Seminar held at North Carolina State University.

People are generally satisfied with a relationship if they feel they are giving and getting in equal amounts. Older people may become very uncomfortable as they are able to give less and less. They may withdraw from a relationship is they see they receive more than they give.

Only a small number of older people have the "after all I've done for you sundrome," Dr. George says. "These people demand an almost total lack of reciprocity. Friends will not put up with this for long; family members may feel they have to."

Disagreement over expectations workd both ways. For example, there may be a lack of agreement as to the amount of free babysitting a grandparent should give.

It helps when those involved see the cause of the conflict is differing expectations, not a lack of love.

Cabbage Are Good Buy At Markets

With cabbage selling for 20-25 cents a pound, try working some into your menus, suggest extension food and nutrition specialists at North Carolina State University.

It's a good source of vitamin C and a dieter's delight. Half a cup of shredded cabbage has less than 15 calories. Look for cabbage that is firm, heavy for its size and which has fresh crisp leaves with good color.

Serve it in slaw, steamed or try a casserole combining cabbage with ham, corned beef, sausage or cheese.

Dental Sealants Said Good Defense Against Tooth Decay

By CAROL BLACKLEY TYER
Reflector Staff Writer

Tooth decay is on the decline in Greenville and the acrylic dental sealants used by some dentists are part of the reason, some local dentists say.

Dr. Mike Dixon of Farmville said he uses the sealants in his practice, mostly for children, and that he believes they can be 80 to 90 percent effective as a barrier against decay on the biting surface of the back teeth if used as part of a good oral hygiene program.

Dr. Jasper Lewis, a Greenville specialist in children's dentistry, also uses sealants and has for several years. Several other dentists contacted say they do not use sealants but are considering them as they become more convinced of the safety and effectiveness of the product.

Dr. D.H. Taylor said he uses them and has for several years, but only for patients who he believes will do a thorough cleaning job. "Sealants work best and are intact longest when the mouth is clean," he said. "I'd rather seal pits and fissures with amalgam that I know will stay put than use acrylic sealants and then have to go back later and put in amalgam."

Dr. Gary Rozier of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill's School of Public Health said that much of the tooth decay prevention progress that has been made in recent years has been on the smooth surfaces of the teeth, thanks to the presence of fluoride in toothpastes and drinking water. But with the use of sealants comes hope for preventing cavities where most of them are almost certain to appear — on the occlusal or biting surfaces of the back teeth. The highly likelihood of cavities there are because of the indentations — called pits and fissures — that trap food and plaque and allow decay to develop there. "Some people have groovier teeth than others, but most everyone has some on the molars and biscuspids," Taylor said.

PROTECTION OF HER 6-YEAR MOLARS ... is under way for Melinda Roberson, 7, of Williamston as she has been prepared for Dr. Jasper Lewis to apply sealant to first the lower, then the upper molars. (Reflector Photo By Carol Tyer)

That's where sealants work. After a tooth is thoroughly cleaned and dried, an acidic solution is applied to the tooth to help the sealant adhere. The sealant is then brushed on the tooth enamel and allowed to harden. Some products call for another step which further fills in the fissures and uses a light to cure the product. Others "self-polymerize" in a one-step process.

"It's a lot like putting an acrylic coat on your kitchen floor," Ann Page Griffin, the dental health educator in Lewis' office, said. "If applied correctly, it's virtually impossible for the substances that cause decay to get down into the fissures and succeed in creating decay. When the sealant is applied, finger-like strands penetrate the tooth enamel, so it stays in places for years. Even if eventually reapplication is done, there continues to be benefit from the first application."

Dentists recommend the sealant be applied to a child's permanent molars as soon as they erupt — about age 6 for the first molars and about age 12 for the second molars.

Dr. Lewis stressed that sealants are not a substitute for proper brushing and flossing. He said, however, that sealants actually work in many cases where the best of brushing will not work. "There are fissures," he said, "so small that a toothbrush bristle would not fit into it, yet plaque can readily live and eat away there. That's why sealants are so useful."

Some of the doctors interviewed said they had some reservation about the sealants when they were first marketed about 15 years ago. Lewis said he used them from the beginning of his practice here 10 years ago, but is pleased that they've "been improved more and more."

Asked about the cost of sealant application, he declined to quote prices, but said it's less expensive than filling cavities and usually prevents the need for the latter.

More and more of his patients' parents are becoming aware of sealants and are asking about them, he said, and he sees this as healthy public awarness.

Most adults cannot benefit from the sealants, several dentists said, because the pits and fissures of their back teeth have already trapped the plaque and food that called for the fillings they now have — the damage has already been done and they already have either a mouth full of metal or teeth that need filling. Those who will benefits most from sealants are the upcoming generation who can have them applied as soon as their six-year and 12-year molars come in, Dr. Lewis and Dr. Dixon said.

The use of these, coupled with good flossing and brushing habits, regular checkups and drinking fluoridated water, gives hope for many younger children and those yet unborn to grow up with no dental decay at all.

Perfume and aftershave lotion attract more than members of the opposite sex. Heavy scents can bring bees and wasps.

Dear Abby

Anonymous Age Writer Should Correct Problem

DEAR ABBY: This concerns the letter from "Keep Me Anonymous," the woman who lied about her age on her job application. She was 41, but feared she would not be hired if it were known, so she put "29" on her job application and got away with it.

Abby, this woman urgently needs to be alerted to a serious potential problem when she reaches retirement age.

A woman I know well recently retired. In applying for her pension, she submitted her birth certificate, which revealed that she was 75 years old—not 65 as her employment records showed.

The private pension plan carrier, alleging fraud, denied her pension application. She received nothing, even though her employer had paid premiums for many years!

Please advise "Anonymous" to get her correct age into her pension file immediately. Faithfully yours,

(THE REV. CANON)
OLIVER B. GARVER JR.,
LOS ANGELES

DEAR SIR: Bless you. Your informative letter will no doubt save many souls. And a few heels, as well.

* * *

DEAR ABBY:
We know you're bombarded with questions,
Your mail likely runs into tons,
After picking the questions to answer,
Must they always be answered with puns?
Your wisdom we value most highly,
Your witty responses are fun.
We love you, Dear Abby—but spare us
The silly, nonsensical pun!

TOM IN CAMBRIDGE, MD.

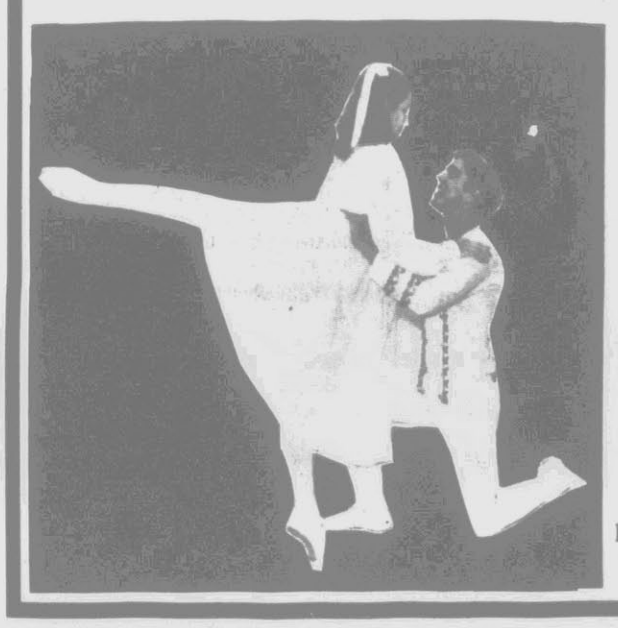

DEAR TOM:
Writing would be much less fun,
Without the "nonsensical" pun.
I know you abhor it,
But others adore it,
You lose—by 10 million to one.

(Do you hate to write letters because you don't know what to say? Thank-you notes, sympathy letters, congratulations, how to decline and accept invitations and how to write an interesting letter are included in Abby's booklet, "How to Write Letters for All Occasions." Every year, a child who is sick and tired of a mother shoving this column into her face and shouting, "Read this! It's you!" will write and ask why I always take the parents' point of view and never the child's.

This year's writer is from Long Beach and she says, "For so long you have written about children that do things that make their parents miserable, how about a few measly words to make parents feel like maybe they have done something right?" Signed: T.H.

You're right, T.H. It must seem like there'a no pleasing us. It's time for my yearly child-appreciation tribute.

Parents have done something right when they ask a child to bring them a glass of water from the kitchen and the child knows where the kitchen is.

They've done it when they get a birthday present on their birthday that their child has bought with his own money.

They've pulled it off when their child volunteers that she dropped the camera she borrowed and when the parents ask, "Have you any idea how much a camera like this cost and who is going to pay for it?" does . . . and will.

They've raised a winner when they point out to a son that his pants are ripped, his shirt is not ironed, the sole is coming off his shoe and his sweater is inside out, and he looks rotten . . . and he agrees with them.

It's a good day for any parent when their child speaks to them in public, when they put gas in the car after they've used it, ask if you're watching a TV show before they flip the dial, do dishes when it isn't their night, and thank you for anything.

It's a good time for parents when their children tell them the truth when you're gonna kill 'em for it, answer their parents without saying, "what do you want?" shut the door in the winter because it makes their Dad smile, or respect their mother's cold as they do their own.

Good kids are like sunsets. We take 'em for granted. Every morning they rise. Every evening they disappear. Most parents in a single lifetime will never imagine how hard they try to please us and how miserable they feel when they think they have failed.

Take a good look at your kids. I mean really look at them. You've done a lot better than you think you did. Now, tell them.

Home-Canned Foods Provide Nutrition

How nutritious are home-canned foods?

Compared to home-grown fresh foods, canned foods are one-third to one-half lower in vitamin C, thiamin and riboflavin. Other vitamins are only slightly reduced by canning, say extension foods and nutrition specialists at North Carolina State University.

Canned fresh foods are slightly less nutritious than the same foods frozen, but home-canned vegetables are often more nutritious than the "fresh" produce sold at the local store.

Using a pressure canner for acid foods and higher pressures (15 pounds) for low acid foods will help retain more nutrients. For help with home canning, contact the county agricultural extension office.

Make Child Care Change Gradual

Will child care arrangements be changing soon in your family? Remember that children often get very attached to their caregivers.

If at all possible, make the break a gradual one, recommends Dr. Frances Wagner, extension human development specialist, North Carolina State University. She recommends the following:

•Let the child know ahead of time that he will soon be saying goodbye.

•Arrange for the child to go back and visit his old day care center or home and caregivers. These people are important to him.

•Children appreciate mementos as much as adults do. Let the child have something to remind him of the time spent with the caregiver. A photograph of them together might be nice.

Home sales reached 5 million in 1983, more than twice the number sold in 1982.

AREA QUILTERS...stitched a sampler quilt showing sites and themes in Greenville and Pitt County.

Sampler Quilt Shows Area Sites, Themes

Sites and themes pertaining to Greenville and Pitt County have been stitched into a sampler quilt recently completed by the Greenville Quilters Guild.

Individual quilt blocks were designed by quilters in Pitt County as well as members of the guild. Some of the sites in the 20-block quilt are the Agricultural Extension Service sign, tobacco, East Carolina University pirate, dogwood branch, Pitt Community College logo, Ayden Collard Festival, Pitt County Memorial Hospital, Green Street bridge over Tar River, Voice of America, Eat Mo Shad, the Fleming house, an airplane, farm tractor in a field and several others. The quilt border is a dark green print.

The quilt is available to public and municipal groups, for buildings, clubs and festivals as a wall hanging for limited time periods.

It is currently being displayed at Planters Bank in downtown Greenville. Other places scheduled are: Belk Tyler, Aug. 27-Sept. 8; Calico Square, Sept. 9; Pitt County Agricultural Extension office, Sept. 10-21; Scotch Bonnet, Oct. 21-26; Carolina East Mall, Oct. 27.

The Greenville Quilters Quilt show will be held Nov. 9-10 at the Willis Building and the quilt will be shown there.

ROAD DANGERS

SKOKIE, Ill. (AP) — Darkness and rainy weather are two of the factors most responsible for automobile accidents.

According to the Rand McNally "Campground and Trailer Park Directory," the number of fatal car accidents on American roads increases sharply after dusk. The chances of being involved in a fatal car accident are reported as about three times as great at night as during daylight hours.

The directory also says it's not rain alone which makes roads hazardous. The rain mixes with oil and grease residue from cars to create a slippery film on road surfaces.

Cooking Is Fun

By TOM HOGE
AP Wine and Food Writer

My first food book, written 11 years ago, was devoted to one of my favorite fruits: berries. In researching the history of these delicious sweets, I was struck by the versatility of the blueberry, which the first colonists learned about from the American Indian.

The settlers quickly began making preserves and desserts with the blueberry, but the Indians taught them other uses that you don't hear much about anymore.

In 1616, Samuel de Champlain, the French explorer, encountered a group of Indians beating dried blueberries into a powder and adding it to a parched meal called sautauthig. And when Lewis and Clark made their historic journey into the Northwest Territory, a local tribe served them venison cured by pounding blueberries into the meat.

But the settlers used blueberries mostly for desserts, rarely in the main dish. Today, however, the blueberry is used for breakfast, lunch and dinner, not to mention late night snacks.

For breakfast, they are eaten topped with milk or cream, on cereal and in muffins and pancakes, as well as in jams and jellies.

The berries are becoming popular for diet luncheons, since they contain only 42 calories per cup. A shimmering blueberry salad, encased in gelatine, is often served. So is a mold of the berries mixed with cottage cheese and sour cream.

For dinner, game hen stuffed with blueberries is a favorite. Also, blueberry relish, a mixture of the berries, apples, vinegar, cloves and sweetening, is delicious on meat dishes.

For a late night pickup, blueberry snack bars are good. I have even seen a recipe for blueberry pizza, which did not entice me.

Around the turn of the century it was discovered that the berries flourished on burned land. Many a grower leased a huge tract of forest and set it afire. It worked but a lot of timber was lost. Today, the scorched earth method is still used under rigidly controlled conditions.

Here's a recipe for stuffed Cornish hens.

- 8 Cornish game hens
- Salt and pepper
- ¼ cup oil
- ¼ cup lemon juice
- ¼ cup bitters
- 4 cups fresh blueberries
- 4 teaspoons sugar
- ½ cup butter
- 8 small bay leaves

Sprinkle game hens inside and out with salt and pepper. Mix oil, lemon juice and bitters and brush game hens with mixture inside and out. Fill each bird with ½ cup blueberries and ½ teaspoon sugar. Sew or skewer opening and place in shallow roasting pan. Spread soft butter over breasts of birds and place bay leaf on butter. Roast in preheated 350-degree oven for 1 hour or until drumstick is easily moved. Discard bay leaf. Serves 8. Good with a chilled white wine.

GRANOLA LORE

WASHINGTON (AP) — Granola may sound like health food, says one consumer organization, but it could actually contain amounts of sugar, fat and calories as high as conventional candy bars and breakfast cereals.

In some cases, one cup of granola equals the same number of calories found in eight cups of puffed rice, five cups of oat cereal, four cups of whole wheat flakes, or three cups of shredded wheat. ——

The Inspiring Story Of A Marathon Man

By ROSALIND REID

RALEIGH — Take an iron-willed sports fan who's fought his way back from cancer, a stroke and a crippling back injury.

Match him with coaches, trainers and engineering students at North Carolina State University.

The result is Jim Letherer's "Miracle Marathon" — a man's 3,100-mile trek across America on one leg and a special pair of shock-absorbing crutches designed by NCSU students.

Letherer left Raleigh on May 5, bound for San Diego on a grueling journey to promote cancer research and raise the spirits of other disabled people.

As of June 13, he had logged more than 550 miles and was nearing Montgomery, Ala.

It's an effort the 50-year-old Michigan native put together with scant funding, plenty of moxie and a little help from his friends at NCSU.

He couldn't have tried it, Letherer said, without the year of strength training he went through with NCSU trainers and the special crutches which help his body take the miles of pounding.

The crutches use a type of shock-absorbing foam placed in football helmets. The foam cushions the shock waves that ripple across the upper body of a person walking or — in Letherer's case — running on crutches.

They earned students C.A. McDonald, Harry Wilfong and Bill Ridehour a letter of commendation from N.C. Gov. Jim Hunt. The students have had many inquiries about their invention, and Ridenhour is continuing the research project.

The story of Letherer's marathon and crutches has its origins in the national spotlight that fell on NCSU as the Wolfpack climbed to the 1983 NCAA basketball championship.

As the Pack coaches traveled to playoffs in Oregon, Utah and finally Albuquerque, N.M., they got to know a red-capped fan who'd turn up at each game in a wheelchair.

Letherer was a San Diego resident, a native of Saginaw, Mich., who'd lost a leg to cancer at age 10. A stroke in 1950 paralyzed half his body; after he fought that off, a bus accident put him in a wheelchair in 1976. The injuries didn't stop him from sailing to Ceylon or hitchhiking long distances to attend football games.

He told coaches of a dream he had — to run cross-country on crutches to raise interest and money for cancer research. Two weeks after the April 4 championship game in Albuquerque in 1983, "Captain Jim" turned up at the NCSU campus in Raleigh ready to train.

Over the next year, athletic trainers and strength coaches put Letherer through a program focusing on weight work to build his upper body strength. It wasn't long before he was working out with two-legged runners — including NCSU Chancellor Bruce Poulton, an early-morning jogger.

"He's a pretty incredible personality," Assistant NCSU Athletic Trianer Jim Rehbock said. "He's doing things right now with one leg and a pair of crutches that I couldn't do with two legs."

Early on, Letherer and his coaches recognized that conventional crutches wouldn't do the job he had in mind. Through Poulton's office, he found help in the student chapter of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers (ASME).

Dr. Ralph A. Burton, head of the department of mechanical and aerospace engineering, took him to one of the chapter's weekly luncheon meetings last November. "He went down and won their hearts," Burton recalled.

ASME members McDonald of Aylva, Ridenhour of Concord and Wilfong of Newton mounted strain guages on Letherer's old crutches and tried them out themselves. They found that the initial impact of a crutch hitting the ground generates an enormous shock wave across the upper body, arms and hands. Letherer's three-legged stride was producing continual shock waves.

The students considered complicated modifications before Rex Hospital donated a pair of crutches that could be easily modified. They built a column of the special foam into the lower part of each crutch and turned the pair over to Letherer in early April.

"He was really excited," McDonald said. And 18 days into the run, Letherer said the crutches were doing "super, super." Ridenhour was making him a second pair with a feature added to protect against wear.

The resilent foam inset acts like a built-in spring, Ridenhour said. "It's similar in concept to a pogo stick, but not quite so bouncy," he said.

The project was a novel one for the ASME students, whose training is primarily oriented toward careers in industry. But, noted McDonald, "mechanical engineering is a very broad curriculum. Yo do things like this as well as more industrial work."

Letherer has been holding press conferences and going on radio shows along his route from Raleigh to promote cancer research, boost the spirits of other victims and "pass on that spirit they have at (N.C.) State — that life's worth living, that you can make it if you try."

Among his sponsors are former Wolfpack center Thurl Bailey, now with the Utah Jazz, and other professional athletes. He plans to donate 10 percent of the proceeds to a cancer research fund in care of NCSU Basketball Coach Jim Valvano and Assistant Coach Ed McLean, giving most of the rest to support chemist Linus Pauling's cancer-related research.

"I'm not sure how much money I can raise for cancer research," he said, "but I know that when I can bring a smile to one kid in a wheelchair, it'll be reward enough for all the pain, misery, hurt and loneliness I'll go through on this Miracle Marathon."

Letherer said he chose the 3,100-mile goal of reaching Jack Murphy Stadium in San Diego to leave intact the record of Canadian cancer victim Terry Fox, who crossed most of Canada running on an artificial limb in 1980 before succumbing to cancer.

"He was a track star who lost a leg to cancer," Letherer said. "I lost a leg to cancer and became a track star."

HELP FOR HUNGRY

DAVIS, Calif. (AP) — A billion persons live in poverty and some 40,000 children die each year from malnutrition throughout the world, accordingn to Richard A. Redder, vice president of the Meals for Millions-Freedom from Hunger Foundation.

The only solution to overcoming poverty and hunger, Redder told a recent meeting of the U.S. House Select Committee on Hunger, is through a long-term development process in which people change their own lives through their own efforts.

Meals for Millions is an international voluntary agency that has evolved from a concept of famine relief to its present orientation of self-help programs. It has headquarters close to the University of California at Davis, a leading institution in agriculture, food science and nutrition.

FIRST DAY OF SCHOOL

STILLWATER, Okla. (AP) — In addition to being provided with new lunchboxes and shiny shoes. children should be emotionally prepared for their first day of school, says Elaine Wilson, Extension parenting specialist at Oklahoma State University.

Mrs. Wilson advises parents to ask older children to help reassure the younger ones about school. And if a child insists on not going to school, she suggests reminding that child in a matter-of-fact way that all children are required by law to go to school.

British Subjects Touchy About Their Portraits

EDITOR'S NOTE — Oliver Cromwell wanted his portrait to show him warts and all. He was a remarkable exception among British luminaries. Many, from Winston Churchill to Margaret Thatcher, have waxed wroth over their portraitist's work, with turbulent results.

By GRAHAM HEATHCOTE
Associated Press Writer

LONDON (AP) - Sir Winston Churchill groused that his portrait made him look like a half-wit. King George V's was burned and Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher complained that her eyes were wrong.

Official portraits are the problem. When the subject is famous, Britain turns into a nation of art critics and it's open season on the artist.

Rodrigo Moynihan, 74, a distinguished member of the Royal Academy, is the latest to get it in the neck from 10 Downing St.

Soon after Mrs. Thatcher had surgery last September for a detached retina, Moynihan started her first official portrait for the National Portrait Gallery.

When the gallery unveiled it on June 20, most people found the painting attractive, but director John Hayes said that although he thought the painting "an absolutely splendid work, a beautiful picture, the eyes are causing something of a problem."

It emerged that Mrs. Thatcher felt it gave her a squint.

"She pointed it out, shall we say. I think that I might have another go at the picture," Moynihan said. He disclosed that he added gray to the eyes when Mrs. Thatcher said they were too blue.

"It's not a new problem," said Sidney Hutchison, the Royal Academy archivist.

"We always have a portrait of the sovereign, and Charles Sims, who was one of our members, did a portrait of King George V for $1,260, which was shown here in 1924. Everybody liked it except the King, who said his legs looked like those of a ballet dancer.

"There was a lot of talk. The head was cut out with the idea of saving that, but eventually the whole thing was burned."

A portrait of Sir Winston Churchill by Graham Sutherland that would be worth at least $135,000 today spent 11 months with its face to the wall behind a boiler in the cellar at Chartwell, Churchill's home in Kent, before Lady Clementine Churchill broke it up and ordered it to a bonfire in 1955 or 1956.

The painting was widely praised, but the family said Churchill hated it because it showed him with the marks of old age. He said privately, "It makes me look half-witted, which I ain't."

Sutherland called the destruction "an act of vandalism unequalled in the history of art," when the story got out in 1977 after Churchill and his wife were dead.

Lady Churchill had no right to destroy the portrait, which should have gone back to the House of Commons which commissioned it for Churchill's 80th birthday.

It wasn't the first time that Lady Churchill dealt a knockout blow to an artist. She disliked a portrait of her husband by Walter Sickert, who taught Churchill to paint in the 1920s, and put her foot through the painting.

"Rows over official portraits go back at least to Tudor times," said National Portrait Gallery publicist Jean Liddiard.

"Robert Cecil, Secretary of State to Queen Elizabeth I, complained at the number of bad portraits of the monarch and issued a decree in 1563 to prevent any more being painted.

"Cecil called the portraits a 'great offense of that beautiful and unanimous majesty wherewith God has blessed her,' and ordered a heap of them piled up and burnt," Miss Liddiard says.

Oliver Cromwell, however, was without vanity and told Sir Peter Lely to paint him as he was, "all these roughness, pimples, warts and everything as you see me; otherwise I never will pay a farthing for it."

Having a portrait done is very popular these days, said Oliver Warman, general manager of the Royal Society of Portrait Painters.

He has 37 members who charge as much as $20,250 a commission, "and none of them is short of work."

Official portraits may be commissioned by big business, the armed services, museums and wealthy individuals. The royal family is pestered with requests for sittings.

In the first 25 years of her reign, Queen Elizabeth II became the most painted woman in the world, sitting for 55 portraits. Buckingham Palace said that others done without sittings brought the total registered with them to nearly 100.

Royalty has to grin and bear it much of the time. In 1973, the queen approved a portrait of herself by Royal Academician John Bratby which showed her with a black eye and an owl perched on her head, surrounded by other royals.

The artist called it "a celebration of the royal family."

Of a portrait of the queen's sister by Richard Stone in 1981, commissioned by a regiment of which she is deputy commander-in-chief, Princess Margaret said: "Mr. Stone, I have influenza and unfortunately I think you have caught it."

There was a storm in 1970, when Bryan Organ's portrait of Princess Margaret put her in a kind of fog with one side of her face only half defined. The Times of London said: "It appears that the princess is being fired out of a cannon."

The queen's favorite portrait of herself, depicted in the blue robes of the Order of the Garter, was painted in 1954 by the Italian, Pietro Annigoni, who lives in Florence. It was called slick and chocolate-boxy by some critics but it sells thousands of postcards every year.

Organ's official portrait of Princess Diana in a pants suit was slashed by Belfast student Paul Salmon at the National Portrait Gallery in 1981, but he explained he wasn't criticizing the artist.

"I did it for Ireland," Salmon said, who was ordered to jail for six months. The gallery now keeps its modern royal portraits behind perspex screens.

An Organ portrait of Prince Charles, depicting him seated in gumboots in front of a green fence, with the British flag drooping above him, was called "limp and lifeless" by one critic.

Psychiatrist Jane Firbank said the painting meant that Charles is "shut in, a man of action who cannot do anything as a monarch, while the limp flag shows the nation as a toothless bulldog."

Norman Blamey is a leading English artist who has just won a prize for a non-royal portrait which the Royal Academy regarded as the most distinguished work at its summer exhibition.

"Portrait painters live on a razor's edge and every portrait for me is a great anxiety," Blamey said.

Maneuvers

MOSCOW (AP) — About 60,000 troops from the joint armed forces of the Soviet-led Warsaw Pact allies will hold maneuvers in Czechoslovakia next month, according to Tass.

The official news agency said that Soviet Defense Minister Dmitri F. Ustinov will command the war games, to be called Shield-84.

Tass gave few details, saying only that they would be held in the beginning of September to coordinate the alliance's staff command and military operations.

Noisy Protest

GLASGOW, Scotland (AP) — Animal rights activists staged a noisy protest outside a posh restaurant, demanding that it take frogs' legs off the menu.

The protesters, one of them dressed in a frog suit, startled waiters and customers when they gathered outside the restaurant chanting slogans and waving placards that said "Frogs' legs belong to frogs."

When police were called, the pickets dispersed without incident.

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich. (AP) — A new five-story building here is heated entirely by warmth recovered from computers, lights and bodies — despite occasional sub-zero winter weather, reports Energy User News.

According to the publication, energy-efficient fan and pump motors, use of the building's rooftop cooling tower for spring and fall cooling and new insulation also contribute to a 50 percent drop in energy use, compared to similar buildings in the Grand Rapids area.

Marines Try To Recruit Reagan

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan said the Marines recruitment letter he received was the result of a "lance corporal's overactive imagination."

Nevertheless, it gave him a chuckle.

"Please let him know that he honored me in believing that I have what it takes to become a United States Marine," Reagan said in a tongue-in-cheek note of regret to Gen. Paul X. Kelley, Marine Corps commandant.

The undated computer letter was addressed to Mr. Ronald Reagan, 1600 Pennsylvania Ave., South Lawn, DC, 20052. The president responded on May 31.

Both letters were released Thursday by Rep. Guy Molinari, R-Staten Island, who obtained copies from Kelley.

Reagan, who is 73 years old, was urged to "take an honest look at your life and ask yourself if you're satisfied. With your job. Your income. Your opportunities ..."

He did, and apparently liked what he saw.

"Nancy is happy with the house and I am totally satisfied with my job," he said. "As proud as I am of the inference concerning my physical fitness, it might be better to continue as commander in chief.

"Besides, at the present time it would be rather difficult to spend 10 weeks in Parris Island," where many Marine recruits go for basic training.

Montserrat, South Seas In The Caribbean

EDITOR'S NOTE — "More islands there, man, than peas on a tin plate, all different size," says the narrator in one of Derek Walcott's Caribbean poems. All different stories, too. Here is one, about a tiny place pondering a big question.

By CHARLES J. HANLEY
Associated Press Writer

PLYMOUTH, Montserrat (AP) — A three-humped whale of an island, Montserrat rises up deep green from its blanket of sea mist.

The arriving airplane dips sharply to the left and bumps down onto a runway squeezed between surf and cliff. The visitor then is off through shadowy, thick-leaved valleys, past the little puffing volcano, down into Plymouth's cool, quiet streets, to the miniature main square — where on this evening a gray bespectacled man, small and big-voiced, is before a microphone, beneath a white clock tower stuck forever at 10:26.

"Our situation is absolutely hopeless!" declares Austin Bramble, leader of the Loyal Opposition.

His listeners, 1,000 strong, chuckle and shake heads knowingly at one another. Across the road, the darkening waters of Sugar Bay murmur gently. Palm leaves rustle overhead.

"John Osborne is so bloody stupid! What a big fool!" booms out Bramble.

The crowd guffaws, slapping backs, grabbing arms, leaning over antique black cannons in the grassy square. Old men dozing on the tower steps stir awake with a grin. John Osborne himself, head of the island government, quietly parks his Toyota at the crowd's edge to eavesdrop.

Schoolteacher Denzil Edgecombe smiles at the visitor. "It's beautiful, isn't it?" he asks.

It's Montserrat, one of the littlest, loveliest and last of Britain's Caribbean crown colonies, a Lilliputian land now debating the ultimate question — whether to cast off from the "Mother Country" and strike out into the world as a nation.

Osborne's independence crusade stirs some fiery rhetoric, but Montserrat carries on its debate in a Montserratian way, with humor and neighborliness, determined not to lose what it has and loves.

As toothless old Jim Corbett, a retired laborer, explained with a cackle, "We're a nice, sweet island ... a nice, sweet island."

Nice, sweet, teardrop-shaped Montserrat, 11 miles long and six wide, barely bigger than Manhattan, has just 11,675 people. It also has, according to Max Greer, chief statistician, 1,841 motor vehicles, 1,900 telephones, 3,000 goats and a few hundred donkeys. As a sovereign nation it would be the world's fifth-smallest, after Monaco and San Marino in Europe, and Nauru and Tuvalu in the Pacific.

Columbus happened on this place in 1493. He fancied a resemblance to northern Spain's mountainous landscape, and named it for an abbey there. Montserrat was later bloodied in fitful encounters between British and French. Britain finally established unquestioned control in 1783.

Such a story is common up and down the necklace of islands hemming the aquamarine Caribbean. What is uncommon about Montserrat is that it is the only "Irish" island among them.

It was first settled in 1632 by Irish Catholics who crossed over from nearby St. Kitts, fleeing persecution. In the late 17th century, Irish still outnumbered English by more than 2-to-1.

Today the population is 98 percent black, descendants of plantation slaves. But the island's Irish roots run through their surnames — "We have plenty Daleys, plenty Ryans," noted one Montserratian — and through the island map, in such places as Cork Hill and St. Patrick's, Sweeney's Estate and Galway's Soufriere — the last the name of the 2,000-foot-high volcanic crater that anchors the island's southern tip. The roots run, too, through the Montserratian accent, an unlikely lilt with an echo of old Erin.

Even at Government House, the roof peak sports a carved-wood shamrock. But the flag is the blue and red of the Union Jack. Inside the Victorian gingerbread mansion, a 40-year veteran of Her Majesty's Service — David K.H. Dale, Commander of the British Empire — sits as colonial governor.

The island, 25 miles west of Antigua and 1,260 miles southeast of Miami, is internally self-governing. The British retain ultimate control, especially over external affairs, and help finance capital projects, though they stopped supporting the island's operating budget a few years ago.

A combination of factors keeps the tourists away: The 3,400-foot runway handles only small planes; some vacationers with visions of white Caribbean beaches disdain Montserrat's darker volcanic sands, and the island offers no casinos or nightclubs, only tranquility.

Lamented restaurateur Watts, "I tried to get a franchise from one of the American fast-food operations, but they said we were just too small."

No neon, no jet engines, no burger palaces. "This is one of those places where the latest arrival always hopes he's the last," says Lew Arnold, 58, a former New York show business entrepreneur who has settled here.

The island's interior evokes the South Seas — valleys bright with breadfruit trees and sweet with the fragrance of bougainvillea, uplands of wild palm, ravines overflowing with feathery ferns.

The well-paved roads are lined with tidy gardens, weathered stone churches, lovingly tended graveyards. Tethered goats nibble at roadside grasses. Bent old men on donkeys meander down country lanes, beneath trees heavy with mangoes.

"We're a small, friendly island," said taxi driver Denzil "Moonshine" White. "You can pick a fruit anywhere and no one pays any mind."

Along Plymouth's sunny, clean streets, civility rules. "Good afternoon," a small schoolboy in neat blue uniform addresses a storekeeper. "May I have a glass of water?"

Serene, polite, abounding with fruit. But independence? Montserratians who oppose it argue that their island is too underdeveloped for nationhood.

St. Patrick's housewife Hess Skerritt, taking time out from her laundry, told an inquisitive passerby, "The pineapples are in, but they're going to waste. There's no canning plant. How can we be independent? There's nothing to build on."

The debate ignited last September when Chief Minister Osborne, whose party holds five Legislative Council seats to two for Bramble's group, remarked at independence ceremonies for St. Kitts, "I think we can be ready for independence in 2½ years."

The Montserrat establishment quickly lined up on the side of the status quo.

"Twelve thousand people in 40 square miles. How can we be an independent country?" Bertrand Osborne asks. Osborne, no relation to the government chief, is Montserrat's leading merchant and probably its most powerful man.

Agriculture remains its heart. The island has 1,476 farms, half of them under one acre. Hot peppers and live plants are two top exports.

But small textile and other assembly plants are becoming increasingly important employers.

The Chamber of Commerce president, hotelier Frank Edwards, says Montserrat needs a more rounded economy — modern agricultural production, food processing plants, new investment — before it could think about independence.

In fact, many Montserratians fear that even talking about it will scare off foreign investors, who seek stability in a place.

But John Osborne, a 48-year-old businessman, is undeterred.

Owner and operator of small inter-island freighters, Osborne says, "As a nation, you have dignity and respect in the world...Our own dignity is at stake."

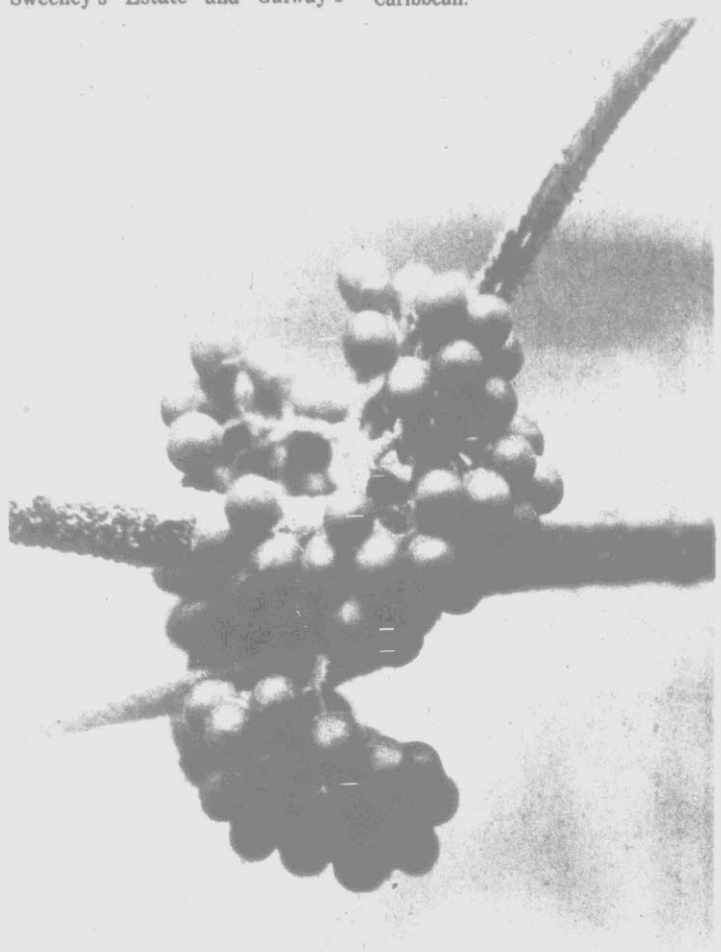

"Dignity" touches a nerve among these offspring of slaves, especially since Britain three years ago created a special passport for its few remaining colonies, requiring Montserratians to obtain visas to travel to the land they have been schooled to regard as the motherland.

Osborne does not favor a headlong plunge into independence, however. First, he says, Britain should build a jetport and improve the harbor to handle cruise ships. After independence, he says, "I'm sure we would get U.S. aid."

No matter how determined the chief minister, nationhood does not appear to be just over Montserrat's blue horizon. Britain would first need convincing that the majority of Montserratians want it.

Right now, most seem like the old donkey rider that local playwright David Edgecombe tells about.

"The old gentleman went to live in the States with relatives," Edgecombe relates. "But before long he came back to Montserrat. He said he missed his donkey. He liked things the way they were."

IN THE MAKING — They are green and still growing, but the berry clusters of a lovely native shrub, the Beauty Berry, will soon take on their early autumn splendor of a rich, royal purple. (Reflector Photo by Jerry Raynor)

Hitler Diary Money Still Missing

By TAMARA JONES
Associated Press Writer

HAMBURG, West Germany (AP) — The Hitler diary hoax goes to court next week but the fortune lost in recorded history's biggest literary swindle remains missing 16 months after investigators began probing the bizarre case.

A Nazi regalia dealer and prominent journalist face trial Tuesday (Aug. 21) on charges of bilking Stern magazine out of 9.3 million marks ($3.6 million) for the 62 faked journals.

But no money has been recovered, and prosecutors trying to solve the mystery must untangle a web of conflicting accounts of shadowy Nazi connections, cloak-and-dagger escapades behind the Iron Curtain and lavish spending sprees.

If convicted of fraud, fired Stern reporter Gerd Heidemann and Stuttgart artifacts dealer Konrad Kujau each face up to 10 years behind bars. Both are in pre-trial confinement.

Public interest has cooled considerably since the scandal broke into headlines around the world in April 1982, when Stern announced it had uncovered the "secret diaries of Adolf Hitler."

The West German government quickly exposed the handwritten diaries as "crude fakes" plagiarized from a post-war book on the Fuehrer's speeches and proclamations.

Heidemann and Kujau were jailed in May 1982. Kujau, 46, admitted to forging the books and implicated Heidemann.

Kujau's lawyer, Kurt Groenewold, has described his client as "a talented printer and calligraphist. When Heidemann offered him a lot of money ... more than he had ever seen, he manufactured the Hitler diaries."

Heidemann, a veteran investigative reporter who convinced his publishers Gruner and Jahr to buy the hardbound volumes and personally took delivery of them, has denied all charges against him.

The 52-year-old journalist, who had been assigned by Stern to investigate Germany's Nazi past, claims he believed the journals to be authentic and was the victim, not perpetrator, of the massive swindle.

Heidemann's attorney, Holger Schroeder, told The Associated Press by telephone that his client is "confident he will be exonerated."

Prosecutors allege that Heidemann pocketed at least 1.7 million marks ($653,000) and paid Kujau 1.5 million marks ($606,000) from cash Gruner and Jahr shelled out for the bogus books.

Heidemann reportedly bought luxury apartments, jewelry and cars, took trips and and poured money into his pet project — restoring his yacht Carin II, which belonged to Nazi Luftwaffe chief Hermann Goering.

According to reports in the West German media, Kujau bought two apartments, a row house and a storage shed for his collection of military memorabilia and Nazi artifacts.

Court officials expect the trial to last at least eight months, with the list of witnesses numbering several hundred.

The hoax prompted a shakeup of the editorial hierarchy at Stern, a slick illustrated weekly that had wooed more readers than any competitor with a format of often spectacular photography and sensational features.

Circulation slipped by around 150,000 in the last year, Stern spokesman Gunther Schoenfeld said, but "only a small part is due to the diary affair."

An influx of inexpensive new competitors is considered the chief culprit, Schoenfeld said in an interview. Current figures put circulation at 1.75 million.

Compromise

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — The United States and West Germany are nearing a compromise on an increase in funding to maintain and improve NATO military facilities, according to an alliance official.

A compromise is expected to result in a budget of $7.85 billion over a six-year period starting Jan. 1, 1985, said the official, speaking on condition of anonymity.

The United States had sought a budget of nearly $10 billion, but the expected compromise figure is a major increase over the $3.3 billion for the current five-year budget period.

Hard Times For Montmarte Artists

By CAROLYN LESH
Associated Press Writer

PARIS (AP) — Their countless canvasses of big-eyed waifs, Eiffel Towers and instant portraits grace living room walls from Kokomo to Tokyo. But hard times are coming for hundreds of artists atop Montmartre.

Under a new city ordinance, the ranks of the street artists will be cut by more than half this spring in the picturesque Place du Tertre, the 600-year-old square that sits in the shadow of Sacre Coeur basilica high above Paris.

Their forced departure is the result of a threefold problem: too many artists, too little space and too much hard-sell.

"No one wants to remove the artists completely, but there are too many of them in the summer and they're giving the area a bad name," said Andre Roussard, the owner of a Montmartre art gallery just off the main square.

"You can't cross the street without being bothered by their agressive selling techniques," he said. "The portrait artists are the worst. And what they're selling cannot be described as fine art."

Roussard is president of an 18-member commission overseeing the ordinance calling for thinning out and licensing street artists in the Place du Tertre, where a tourist can be immortalized in charcoal for a little over $20 or pick up an oil painting for anywhere between $35 and $200.

Beginning March 1, only 160 artists at a time will be allowed to set up easels on the square. A total of 320 artists will be licensed to share the 160 places that have been outlined in white paint on the perimeter of the square.

"Last summer there were 700 artists working in the Place du Tertre and it caused a lot of problems," Roussard said. "The square is just too small for that number."

Throughout the 19th century, writers and painters were drawn to the bohemian lifestyle and cobblestone streets of the Butte, as Montmartre is known locally. For a while, the area was the literary and artistic center of the capital before it was abandoned for Montparnasse in 1914.

Painters Toulouse-Lautrec, Utrillo and Picasso were one-time residents of Montmartre, a hill of twisting narrow roads on the northern edge of Paris.

These days, Montmartre is the third most visited tourist site in Paris after the Georges Pompidou cultural center and the Eiffel Tower. Legions of tour buses clog the streets in the summer and tourists spill out looking for an "original" French painting.

The art they see is often neither French nor original. Factory-made prints from Taiwan and cheap souvenirs abound. Roussard estimates that 75 percent of the artists in the square are foreigners.

"The problem is not that we need less artists but more space," said Teo Peng Seng, a 38-year-old from Singapore who has been doing charcoal portraits in the square for the past 10 years. "In the summer, the cafes on the square take up about three-quarters of the space with their outdoor seating."

Three associations of artists have asked Roussard's commission to create more space for artists by cutting back on seating of the seven cafes.

"There's no question of that happening," Roussard said. "One of the main reasons that tourists come up here is for the atmosphere of the outdoor cafes. I'm not against the artists. They're part of the attraction too. But we must live in harmony or we risk making a bad situation worse. All it takes is for a few tourists to go home complaining."

Under the new rules of the commission, only artists selling their own "original" paintings will be able to operate in the square. The selection process makes no attempt to judge the quality of work, but gives preference to those who have been operating in the square the longest.

Roussard does not mince words about the quality of the art.

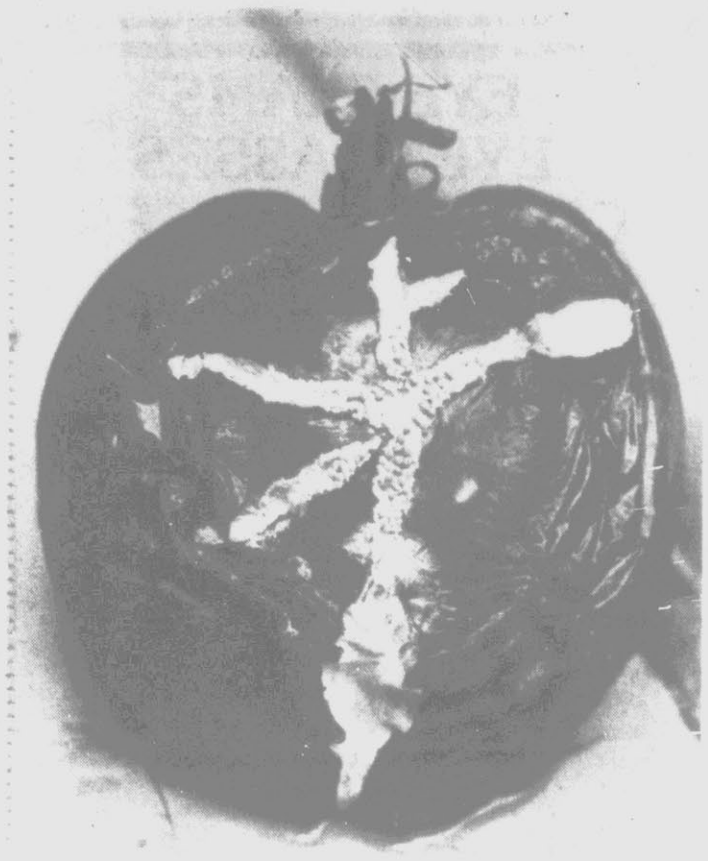

"It's just folklore — the thought that struggling artists make their names there," he said. "No artist of any note came from selling on the square. In my opinion, the people who are there aren't even artists. They're simply salesmen. They want to make money, not art."

Not far away, in a narrow bar off the square, a few artists sat mulling over Roussard's statements.

Joel, a 36-year-old Frenchman who does portraits on the square, didn't want his last name used.

"Nobody wants to be known as a 'Montmartre' artist if they're also trying to show their work in a gallery," he explained. "It's not something you'd brag about to the art world."

Jacak, a 26-year-old Pole, also didn't want his last name used. He made vague references to identity papers — or the lack of them.

Nedda's Two Theater Loves

By MICHAEL KUCHWARA
AP Drama Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Nedda Harrigan Logan's theatrical connections are impeccable.

Edward Harrigan, one-half of the fabled 1870s and 1880s stage team known as Harrigan and Hart, was her father. Her first husband, who died in 1940, was actor Walter Connolly. Her second is Joshua Logan, the director and producer who had a hand in "Annie Get Your Gun," Pacific" and "Mister Roberts," among other hits. And she herself was an actress who gave up the greasepaint only after marrying Logan.

But these days she has what she calls her current "loves," two projects that occupy most of her time. Naturally, they concern the theater. They are the Actors' Fund of America, the world's oldest theatrical charity, which she now heads, and "Harrigan and Hart," a musical based on the partnership of Harrigan and Tony Hart.

"Harrigan and Hart," which contains original songs by her father as well as new material by Michael Stewart, Max Showalter and Peter Walker, had a five-week run this summer in Chester, Conn. Mrs. Logan served as consultant for the show, which was produced by the people who run the Goodspeed Opera House, and attended each performance. Local reviews were encouraging, and a Broadway run is a possibility.

Harrigan had heart trouble and retired early from the theater. Mrs. Logan, the last of 10 children, never saw her father, who died in 1911, on stage.

"I was very young when he died," she said. "My mother — daughter of David Braham, a well-known conductor of his day — was married when she was 16. I wasn't born until her early 40s. I was not expected."

For most actors of those times, she said, life was difficult. It was an era of social discrimination.

"Theatrical people were not accepted at all," she said. "The public charities in New York wouldn't accept theatrical people."

That's why her father, along with P.T. Barnum, Edwin Booth, Joseph Jefferson and others, had helped form the Actors' Fund of America in 1882. It's a cause Mrs. Logan still champions passionately.

She was like her father in other ways, too. Deciding not to go back to boarding school, she followed him into show business. It was not a decision that pleased her mother.

"When I told her that I wanted to go on the stage, she said, 'Oh, you must go to school. You must be cultivated.'"

After working for several years in stock companies, she debuted on on Broadway in 1916 in "A Woman of No Importance." In the 1930s she went to Hollywood, where she appeared in such films as "Thank You, Mr. Moto" and "Devil's Island."

ALONE AGAIN

I wish someone would tell me what it is
That I've done wrong.
Why I have to stay chained up and
Left alone so long.
They seemed so glad to have me when
I came here as a pup.
There were so many things we'd do
While I was growing up.
They couldn't wait to train me as a Companion and a friend.
And told me how they'd never fear
Being left alone again.
The children said they'd feed me and Brush me every day.
They'd play with me and walk me
If I could only stay.
But now the family "Hasn't Time";
They often say I shed.
They do not want me in the house
Not even to be fed.
The children never walk me.
They always say, "NOT NOW!"
I wish that I could please them.
Won't someone tell me how?
All I had, you see, was love.
I wish they would explain
Why they said they wanted me,
Then left me on a chain?

Wild Animals Exhibition A Hit At World's Fair

By BILL CRIDER
Associated Press Writer

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — The bald eagle standing on Andrew Simmons' outstretched arm looks almost as big as he is, and the bird's angry, piercing screams resound through the Great Hall of the world's fair.

Clearly, this eagle is in no mood to face the crowd in front of the stage at the Mississippi Pavilion.

Simmons' wrist is protected from the sharp talons by a heavy leather gauntlet but the eagle, though tethered by a rope, tries to fly. It flogs Simmons about the head and shoulders with powerful wings.

The audience shifts nervously as Simmons stands at the microphone, easing the weight on his arm by clutching a tripod, and talks about splendid predators, keen eyesight, nests that may measure eight feet across and six feet deep. The eagle's beak is about the size of a Zulu spear head. It bobs within inches of Simmons' eyes and this bird is as mad as a wet hen.

With cool disregard for the menacing beak, Simmons tells the crowd it is too bad that some hunters still shoot at these birds, despite laws protecting them because they have become scarce.

"It would be somewhat of an embarrassment to let our national emblem disappear from the face of the earth," he says.

SCREAMING EAGLE . . . New Orleans naturalist Andrew Simmons, shown with a bald eagle perched on his wrist, has become one of the hits of the world's fair with his two-a-day show at the Mississippi Pavilion. He is also exhibiting a black leopard cub, a horned owl, and a young python. (AP Laserphoto)

There is a spirited flurry as the eagle resists going back into his wooden box, which has signs warning "Keep Hands Out!" above the airholes.

Such touches of reality, and glints of low comedy, have made this twice-a-day naturalist show a hit at the Mississippi Pavilion.

Simmons, who lives in New Orleans, is 36 with lank brown hair cut paggeboy style. He is as scrawny as Frank Sinatra in his salad days, and usually wears a khaki bush suit.

He has a variety of creatures as props in addition to the eagle, which wound up part of the world's fair after some hunter wounded it out in Colorado and it had to have medical care.

On this day the theme is predators and he brings along a horned owl. It squats cautiously on his gauntlet and looks over the house with saucer-like eyes, revolving its head almost full circle, rather like a devil imps out of a medieval black magic tale.

Owls are a farmer's friend because they keep down the rodent population, Simmons says. This is important because a female rodent is a baby machine, producing 100 offspring during its two-year life span unless an owl or whatever cuts off production.

Simmons also has a black leopard cub, an Asian breed but born in a zoo. It is as friendly as a collie pup and hard to hold, squirming in his arms, patting his cheek fondly with large paws, creating electronic static by trying to gnaw on the microphone.

Last, but not least, Simmons bring out a half-grown python, draping it around his shoulders like a shawl. It is already 10 feet long and as big around as Arnold's biceps

The snake crawls lazily as Simmons lectures. Its tail explores down his back, emerges between his legs and waves around inquiringly. The crowd shrieks with laughter. Simmons goes into a half-embarrassed shuffle. But he milks the contretemps for all it's worth before shifting the thick coil around his shoulders to a new position.

A naturalist's life has its quota of embarrassing moments, Simmons says. He recalls one that took place when he was driving along a highway and saw a freshly runover possum on the pavement.

His owl or eagle would regard the carcass as a succulent morsel so he pulled over, got out of his pickup and was scraping the deceased possum into a paper sack when a car stopped beside him.

"A matron with sympathetic eyes reached out and stuffed a $10 bill in my breast pocket,' he said. "She told me, "Here, go get yourself a decent meal.'"

Riding On A Wagon Train

GREENBRIER, Tenn. (AP) — They still laugh about the time a member of their group camped out beside a pond in order to catch the cool night breeze coming off the water and beat the mugginess of the day's temperature.

"He was all stretched out on his cot about halfway between sleep and wakefulness, when this frog jumped right up on his stomach," said Bernice Choate, a member of the Greenbrier Pony and Mule Club and an active participant in a monthly wagon train excursion that creaks through this area.

"It liked to scared him to death," Choate said with a chuckle. "He didn't know what it was, but he sure came up off that cot in a hurry. You should have seen him.

"Experiences like that and the fellowship — that's what keep most people coming back. Too, I think most of us just like being around horses and mules."

Three families came up with the idea for the wagon train about three years ago. They eventually gathered and rode around their neighborhood, attracting quite a bit of attention.

Now 15 to 20 families participate each month during good weather as the group travels by covered wagon or other drawn vehicle over a 35-or 40-mile course during weekends.

"A different family acts as host each month," said Choate, an employee of the DuPont plant in Old Hickory. "All live within a 75-mile radius of Greenbrier, and it is their responsibility to lay out the course and make all the plans.

"Some members bring all the food and equipment they will need for two days and to camp out overnight," he said. "Others like to go home at night, but leave their wagon and stock with the group overnight. Whatever they want to do is all right."

Earlier this year the group explored the Amish country around Bowling Green, Ky. Recently they circled the area between Cross Plains and Orlinda in Robertson County.

The youngest member of the group is a boy about 3, who began making the trips as a baby. The oldest is 69-year-old R.E. Porter and his wife, Gertrude.

"It's a right nice way to spend the weekend," Mrs. Porter said. She said her husband has farmed and has been around animals all of his life.

"A friend got my husband interested, and we started going along about two years ago. Now our son Terry goes along too, but we don't spend the night," Mrs. Porter said. "Terry has to get home every evening to milk."

Ten to 12 wagons with 40 to 50 people usually make the trip. Thirty to 40 head of stock also are involved, Choate said.

"It's pretty informal," he said. "We generally have a route laid out, but if we see something we want to look at, we stop and look at it.

"By night most everybody is pretty worn out so we just play some music and then go to bed after eating and taking care of the stock," Choate said.

"Motorists are pretty good. They've never been a problem because we always travel the back roads. Occasionally, a horse will balk at crossing a wooden bridge. But it's a pretty nice way to spend the weekend."

AIMING FOR ETON

LONDON (AP) — Plan ahead if you want your son admitted to Eton, the famed English school founded by Henry VI in 1440, advises an article in GEO magazine.

Americans interested in having an Etonian in their family must arrange an interview between their son and a representative of the school in the United States before Christmas of the boy's senior year in high school for possible admittance to one year of post-graduate study.

Enlistment for the full five years of tuition requires the candidate's name to be put on the applicants list at the latest by age 10 — or, better still, at birth, the magazine notes. In the coming school year there will be about a dozen Yanks at Eton.

On Nov. 17, 1976, China set off its largest atmospheric nuclear explosion to date. This prompted the United States to activate a network to monitor radioactive fallout.

Historic Capital Of Zanzibar In Shambles

By BARRY SHLACHTER
Associated Press Writer

ZANZIBAR, Tanzania (AP) — The historic old Stone Town of Zanzibar is falling to pieces.

Three people have been killed over the past two years by collapsing buildings.

"The unique cultural heritage and patrimony of the Stone Town is in danger of being lost," said the United Nations Center for Human Settlements (Habitat) in a recent confidential report obtained by The Associated Press.

"Rapid physical deterioration over the last 20 years has caused alarm both within the island administration and in the international community," it said.

The government of Zanzibar, a semiautonomous part of the East African state of Tanzania, has issued urgent appeals to potential donor nations and agencies, but so far the response has been disappointing, informed sources here said.

The town, built on a triangular peninsula, is home to 15,000 people who live in structures built during the past 200 years on narrow winding streets which create a puzzling maze for the first-time visitor.

The urban labyrinth reflects traditions brought by its former Arab rulers, which along with Indian, European and local African influences combined to make the town one of the most cosmopolitan centers along Africa's east coast.

Some important edifices like the imposing Beit el Ajaib — the "House of Wonders," built in the last century by a sultan for ceremonial functions — have been carefully preserved by the government which uses them for offices.

The House of Wonders is occupied by the ruling Socialist Party's "ideological" training institute, while the Forestry Department occupies the house where the famed Scottish explorer-missionary David Livingstone stayed before embarking for the African interior in 1866 in his search for the source of the Nile. It was that expedition that prompted the New York Herald to send a search party in 1871 headed by Sir Henry Stanley, who on finding him delivered the famous greeting, "Dr. Livingstone, I presume?"

But the many abandoned and collapsed residential buildings give this otherwise exotic capital the general impression of unchecked decay.

The precarious condition of 40 percent of the houses has proven a real danger. One person was killed when a house fell down last year and two people died similarly the year before. There are 160 partially collapsed structures altogether and their number is rising.

The Anglican cathedral and adjoining buildings, constructed of coral stone on the site of the main slave market that closed in 1873, is in a "dilapidated condition requiring immediate action if they are to be preserved for the future," the Habitat report said.

The study, prepared by a panel of international experts, urged that the majority of the town buildings be protected as the important sites already are.

"While not remarkable individually, when taken together they represent a unique urban complex which must not be allowed to disappear," the report said.

Some interest has been expressed by aid agencies in Norway, West Germany and Britain. But nothing specific has been proposed to help Zanzibar's government, currently experiencing severe economic difficulties, restore the Stone Town — a mammoth and costly undertaking.

"We don't know how to get it started on a concrete footing," said Muhammad Salim Sulaiman, assistant minister for land, housing and construction. "We are told the UNDP (U. N. Development Program) has no funds and the donors haven't moved like we thought they would."

A default on aid loan repayments by the mainland Tanzanian government automatically cut Zanzibar off from any new aid funding from the United States in accordance with the Brooke Amendment of the U.S. Congress.

This has upset some on Zanzibar which had received relatively little American funding in the past, aside from an anti-malaria project and a small livestock program. They feel the island could attract far more foreign economic assistance and investment if it was less tied to the mainland with which it merged 20 years ago.

Before the aid cutoff, the U.S. Agency for International Development carried out a study on improving the water supply and sewage system and rehabilitating housing in the Stone Town — all urgently required. Historic restoration would have been a "side benefit," said an American aid official based in Nairobi, Kenya, where the U.S. regional aid office is located.

"They would love us to do the project, and we would like to do it," he said in an interview. "But because of the (default) problem with the mainland, our hands are tied."

Despite the air of decay, Zanzibar still has an atmosphere of Arabian nights charms. And there is still life in the old Stone Town.

In the evenings, residents converge on Forodhani Park along the waterfront just opposite the House of Wonders — so called because of the awe it struck in the minds of 19th-century Zanzibaris due to its striking design.

Mangoes spiced with powdered chillies, soft tropical apples, durians, roasted cassava and ice cream are hawked by vendors.

Raised stone platforms called barazas line the streets and are used by neighbors to gossip by day and indefatigable card players by night.

The old Arab fort near the House of Wonders is the occasional center for cultural activities and wedding parties during which musical performances are given. Among the most popular local troupes is "The Royals," an all-women singing group which dresses in uniforms designed after those of the British Royal Air Force.

The Stone Town was inhabited mostly by Arabs and Indians until the bloody 1964 revolution when the island's majority African population toppled the Arab-dominated government which ruled since independence from Britain the year before.

In two days of carnage, an estimated 6,000 people were chased down to the town's beaches and massacred, according to reports at the time.

Many in the once prosperous Arab and Indian communities fled to the mainland, 30 miles across the Zanzibar Channel, and most Stone Town residents now are African.

IN THE JUNGLE — Tanya Roberts and Ted Wass are thrown together in a world of political unrest that threatens Roberts and her jungle paradise in this scene from "Sheena." Roberts admits that although she has been cast in mostly sex kitten type roles, she had to start somewhere. (AP Laserphoto)

Subteen Bond Film

By BOB THOMAS
Associated Press Writer

"CLOAK AND DAGGER" is a crackerjack spy thriller starring Henry Thomas, E.T.'s best friend, as a subteen James Bond. Improbable? Without doubt. But if you leave your incredulity at home, you can have a marvelous time.

Don't worry about similarities either. Like Barret Oliver in "The Neverending Story," young Thomas is a lonely boy who seeks a fantasy world to assuage the loss of his mother. As in "TRON" and "WarGames," video games play a big role in the intrigue.

The makers of "Cloak and Dagger" admit that the film is loosely based on the 1947 semi-classic, "The Window," in which the youthful Bobby Driscoll struggled to convince adults that he had witnessed a murder. The same thing happens to Henry when he is play-acting his favorite video game, Cloak and Dagger, with his unwilling neighbor, Christina Nigra.

Henry sees some thugs kill an FBI man over a game cassette that contains plans for a secret bomber. The dying man gives Henry the cassette, and the thugs find out the boy's identity. The chase begins.

Of course no one believe's Henry's story, least of all his father, Dabney Coleman, an Air Force sergeant who believes his son needs a shrink, not police protection. Happily, Henry has a valuable ally: Jack Flack, a superspy who makes James Bond seem like Don Knotts. Flack is strictly imaginary, but he appears when Henry needs him most.

Tom Holland's script is ingeniously crafted, ignoring lapses of logic (where is the FBI after the agent's murder?). Director Richard Franklin is obviously a student of Alfred Hitchcock (in fact, Franklin directed "Psycho II"). As Hitchcock used the Statue of Liberty and Mount Rushmore for props, Franklin employs the landmarks of San Antonio, including the Alamo.

Henry Thomas is the miracle who makes "Cloak and Dagger" work. His expressive face commands believability, and we feel every ounce of his frustration and fright. Dabney Coleman has a marvelous time as the license-to-kill Flack and plays the father completely straight — until the end. Christina Nigra is annoyingly whiny at first, but she becomes a valuable and sympathetic accomplice.

Gesture

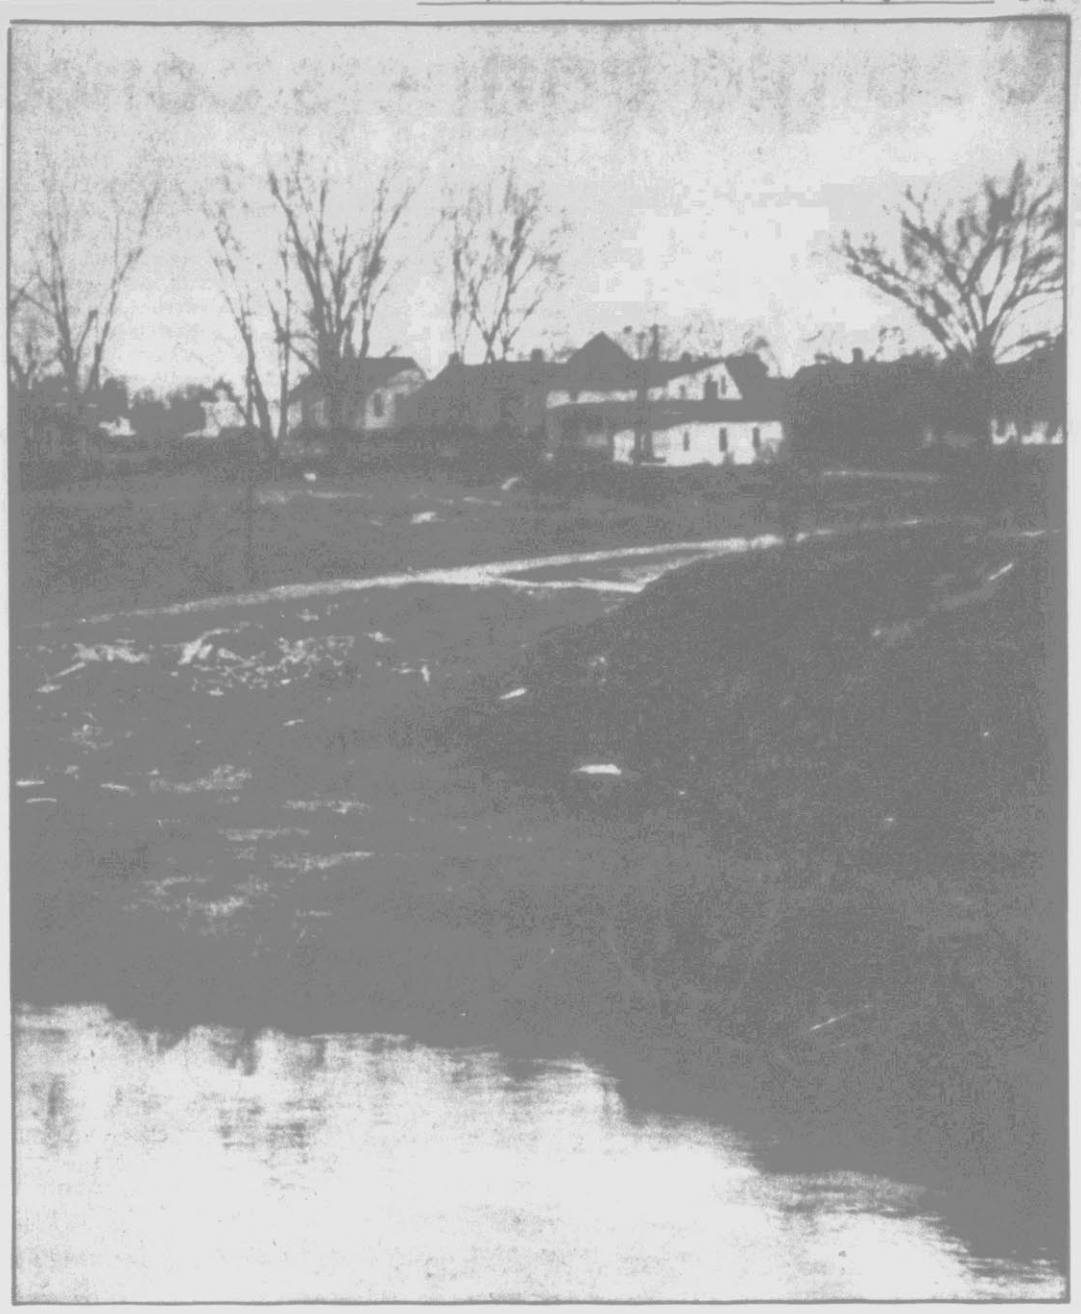

MONROVIA, Liberia (AP) — Liberia says it is asking the United States to cancel its debts as a goodwill gesture in response to the planned restoration of elected government.

Information Minister Alhaji Kromah said he talked about the debt cancellation with U.S. Ambassador William Swing and also asked him to work for a relaxation of conditions for future American grants and loans to the West African country. He did not give the size of the debt.

Town Common Through The Years

SLUM AREA .... Before the Town Common was restored, a slum area was located along the banks of the Tar River. (Photo courtesy the Greenville Housing Authority)

Text By Jane Welborn

If you ignore the roar of the traffic and concentrate on the songs of birds and the smell of the grass, it is possible to believe you are in Greenville in the early days of America. The green grassy lawn rolls down to the muddy waters of the Tar River, which winds placidly along. Moss-covered trees line the river banks across from the city.

You can almost look back in time and see animals grazing along the banks of the river. You can visualize the docks teeming with ships unloading their wares. Or, in the more recent past, you can see rows of dilapidated houses crowded beside the water and children playing in the rubble near the river.

But the modern visitor to the Town Common area of Greenville notices benches by an asphalt walkway. The Tar River is held in its banks by a concrete bulkhead.

The flags which have flown over the city during its 210-year history fly over the Common, and a centuries-old cannon keeps guard of the river bank. And the stately old trees tower over this historical spot located in the downtown business district.

The 18-acre tract of land now known as the Town Common has been through some drastic changes since the Pitt County seat was founded by Richard Evans in 1771. The park, which is now under the jurisdiction of the Greenville Recreation and Parks Department, is a reminder that the town was planned around the Tar River. The Town Common was dedicated to the city of Greenville in time for the city's Bicentennial celebration in 1974.

The Greenville Redevelopment Commission began its work in the late 1950s to restore the common area from a slum to the park the public now sees beside the Tar River along First Street near the Greene Street Bridge. There was opposition to the project from both residents of the area and landowners, as well as citizens who did not want federal government intrusion into city matters.

The early colonists of this country settled on the rich lands nearest the rivers and navigable streams. In 1761, when Pitt County was formed, the Tar River was navigable for about 100 miles.

When the city of Martinborough, later renamed Greenesville, was planned in 1771, the lots located near the river were too close to the flood plain to be marketable. It was a custom in those days to set aside a common grazing area for livestock and an open area for gatherings, but there is no documentation as to whether this area was set aside as a Town Common for Martinborough. However, the area which is now the Town Common was located in the original 100 acres of land donated by Richard Evans for the establishment of a county seat.

The river was the major form of transportation in colonial America; streets were cut out to the river through the years. "The Chronicles of Pitt County" states that in the 1850s, there was a "town common west of (what is now) Reade Street where public hangings occurred."

There was a ferry on the Tar River as early as 1781; the ferry was discontinued when a bridge was built in the 1820s. That area of the river was also the terminal point for the Greenville-Raleigh plank road (which was chartered in 1850 and built only as far as Wilson). An ice house was built to store the ice which was cut out of the Tar in the winter when the river was frozen solid from bank to bank.

In the age of the riverboat, the early 1800s, the area near the river was a busy place. Flat boats, stem wheelers and screw propeller-type riverboats negotiated the Tar and docked in Greenville. Warehouses were located close to the steamboat landing on Side Street, which ran down to the river. The Old Dominion Steamship Company and the Clyde Lines had docks located in the area and freight was loaded and unloaded throughout the day. "The North Carolina," "The Greenville," and "The Gov. Morehead" were important riverboats on the Tar at that time.

The area near the river became populated with homes, but because flood waters sometimes reached up to what is now First Street, the houses were not in good condition.

The area was obviously an eyesore in the early 1900s. According to Greenville native Billy Laughinghouse, a former chairman of the Redevelopment Commission, the downtown area near the river was offensive to people living nearby.

"I heard a story about Dr. Humber, who was a man of vision," Laughinghouse said. "In the 1920s, he said the area from Second Street to the river should be cleaned out. He wrote the law firm of James and James and they wrote back and said, 'Robert Lee, it would cost $100,000 and that's all the money in the world. There's no way it can be done.'

"I carried newspapers down there (to the area which is now the Town Common) when I was a kid," Laughinghouse continued, "and it was bad down there, and it got worse. It was a real slum.

"I remember it was said that the only reason that piece of land existed was to hold the earth together," he stated.

Frances and Tucker Smith, lifelong residents of Greenville, recalled that the "red light district" was located in what is now the Town Common area.

In the late 1950s, city leaders decided something should be done about the deteriorating downtown area.

"The Shore Drive project (Greenville's first urban renewal project) was the brainchild of Mayor Gene West," said Joseph Laney, executive director of the Greenville Housing Authority and a former member of the Redevelopment Commission. "He had the courage and foresight to embark on this renewal project even though it was unpopular."

The Shore Drive project involved clearing substandard homes and other buildings from a 54.7-acre tract between the Tar River and the city's central business district. Of the 218 families living in the area, only 29 owned the homes in which they lived. City property tax income from the area totaled only $3,251 in 1961.

"Mayor West was bucking the local feeling at this time," Laney said. "His feeling was that the downtown was entrapped by slum areas. The frame houses in the area had deteriorated into low-rent houses that were not being maintained. Mayor West wanted to expand the city and improve the tax base, so he embarked on an urban renewal project. Clearing out the slums was something that had to be done, but it took money and the city couldn't do it."

City officials applied for a federal grand to help in the urban renewal project. The grant, which came from the federal Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD), totaled $2,700,000. The total cost of the project was $4 million.

"The city had to put up 25 percent of the costs," Laney said. "Mayor West said that any program that gives the city $3 for every $1 spent is worthwhile."

The city's 25 percent came in the form of improvements that had to be made to the area. According to a 1978 final report of the Redevelopment Commission, the city of Greenville provided $223,000 in improvements to the Town Common and streets and a $272,000 cash contribution. The Greenville Utilities Commission provided $415,000 in improved modern underground utility distribution systems. The Redevelopment Commission provided $830,000 in site improvements, including the Tar River bulkhead, street improvements and storm drainage throughout the area. The Housing Authority constructed 225 units of low-rent public housing with a development cost of $2.8 million for the low income families displaced from the area.

Residents of Greenville were divided on the issue of urban renewal in the early 1960s.

"One of the first public hearings on urban renewal and public housing was held at the courthouse," said John S. Whichard, a former member of the Redevelopment Commission. "There was a very heated discussion pro and con. People were opposed to public housing because of government funding; they wanted housing to be developed by the private sector. The people who owned property down there (in the area of the Town Common) were losing a source of income. They (the city) couldn't move those people out of the area without having some other place for them to live."

"Folks even fought at the courthouse at the hearings," said Laughinghouse, a member of the Redevelopment Commission for 13 years.

"Greenville had never had any public housing, even though most cities had public housing in this part of the world at that time," he continued. "People in Greenville thought public housing was being forced upon them. Folks really got upset and there was a lot of animosity."

After a referendum endorsing the project narrowly passed in 1961, the city began purchasing the property located along the river. At this time, the Shore Drive project was under the direction of a retired Army colonel, A E Dubber.

Laughinghouse said it took the city many years to complete this phase of the project because it was difficult to find out who owned each parcel of land. "One of the big problems was the families who had left Greenville and passed the land down through the generations. It took forever to find out who the land belonged to," he said.

Those residents who lived in the area did not want to part with their land, the only home many of them had ever known. The city had to negotiate with landowners for many years before the land could be purchased.

"The problem with urban renewal is people," Laughinghouse noted. "You can move the world with enough equipment, but you can't move people."

The 67-acre tract cleared in the Shore Drive project contained 236 substantial residential dwellings.

Georgia Farmers Concerned About Future

By ELLIOTT MINOR
Associated Press Writer

MOULTRIE, Ga. (AP) - Ed Edwards and several cronies sprawled on piles of tobacco in a cavernous tobacco warehouse, telling bitter jokes about the plight of farmers.

Between laughs, the farmers listened intently to an auctioneer's sing-song chant echoing through the building. Soon would come bids on their tobacco -bids that were crucial to the farmers' economic well-being.

Although tobacco remains the top money crop here in Colquitt County, farmers are concerned about its uncertain future.

Declining cigarette consumption has reduced demand, and U.S. farmers are finding it increasingly difficult to compete with imported tobacco that can be produced more cheaply abroad.

"It's a good crop of tobacco. It's just that we've got more in it than we're going to get out," complained Edwards, as the auctioneer and a dozen buyers representing major manufacturers threaded their way through the tobacco stacks at one of Moultrie's huge warehouses.

Edwards, 62, who had 4,000 pounds of tobacco on sale recently, complained that prices were too low to give farmers a fair return on their investment.

"We need a $2 market to make any money," he said. "Cigarettes is high enough. Chewing tobacco is high enough. I guess the middleman is getting rich. But the farmer is going broke."

Edwards jumped up and joined the procession as it approached some of his tobacco, and he smiled as the bidding reached $2.05 a pound.

Although Edwards was satisfied with the price, he was not optimistic about the future.

"It looks like it's on its way out," he said. 'They can grow it in other countries cheaper than they can here. If we have to take a cut (in price) we're going to have to stop growing it."

Sam Merritt, 78, another Colquitt County farmer, agreed with Edwards' assessment of the situation.

"If you don't do a lot of the work youself, or your family, you'll go broke," said Merritt, who has grown 58 crops of tobacco since 1927.

Robert Miles, a tobacco specialist with the University of Georgia's Cooperative Extension Service in Tifton, said sales had been sluggish since the opening of the flu-cured tobacco market in south Georgia on July 25.

The current crop averaged about $1.62 cents a pound through Aug. 3, "a little higher than last year's (price)," he said.

According to Miles, Georgia farmers have planted about 40,000 acres of tobacco, with an expected yield of 84 million pounds, 11.6 percent less than last year.

"We've got to compete with markets around the world," he noted. "We're hoping prices will increase with middle-and up-stalk tobacco. We think we're going to be in pretty good shape.

"It has the weight and the real quality that the companies are after," Miles said. "We feel like the quality of the crop up to this point is very good."

The first tobacco to be harvested comes from the lower part of the stalk and is considered inferior to leaves from the middle or upper part of the stalk, which will be auctioned during the remaining six weeks of tobacco sales, he said.

Government graders in each warehouse assign minimum prices to the various tobacco grades. But unless the buyers or the warehouses offer at least one cent more than the assigned value, the tobacco goes into a stabilization program at the graded price.

The program, administered by the Flu-Cured Tobacco Cooperative Stabilization Corp., is designed to control production and give farmers minimum support prices so that they can recover production costs.

Tobacco that is acquired by the farmer-owned cooperative is processed and stored in warehouses for possible future sales.

Until a few years ago, the federal government used tax dollars to help fund the program. But some members of Congress objected, and since 1982 farmers have been assessed at least 7 cents a pound to run it.

Miles said with 700 million to 800 million pounds of tobacco already in stabilization, "we feel like if stabilization picks up a lot of tobacco this year, it coult almost spell doom for it (the program)."

Noting that the federal government gains $5 billion to $6 billion dollars a year from taxes on tobacco products, Miles said many farmers consider the assessments unfair.

Despite the initial low prices, Miles predicted farmers would end the season "in pretty good shape."

Edwards said he hoped sales would improve, adding, "If it don't get any better the finance company is going to own it all."

Plant Uses Corn To Produce Fuel

BOONE, N.C. (AP) — When you walk in the door, the smell of hot cornmeal is so strong you could swear that your grandmother is hidden somewhere behind the vats and hoses baking a batch of her special corn bread.

The fuel plant at the Watauga County Transportation Authority's garage on Winkler's Creek Road does use a lot of corn in its cooking, but the corn produces alcohol fuel, not bread, and the young mechanic who works there bears no resemblance to a grandmother.

AppalCART, as the transportation system is called, is now operating one of its vans with the product of the new 1,000-square-foot alcohol fuel production plant built with the help of Appalachian State University, the Appalachian Regional Commission and the Tennessee Valley Authority.

J. Lynn Leidersdorff, the transportation authority's director, said this week that AppalCART mechanics have converted one of the system's six-cylinder vans to run on the 98 percent alcohol fuel.

The various agencies involved originally conceived the plant as a project to show how fuel could be easily and cheaply manufactured from agricultural products for farm and industrial use, Leidersdorff said.

But he said nobody ever dreamed that the demonstration would work so well that the authority would consider making the plant a permanent part of its operations.

Leidersdorff said that the plant can make 2½ gallons of fuel for every bushel of corn meal used and that the leftover stillage from the process is sold to farmers, who use the mash as feed for pigs and cattle.

He also said that the system has many advantages for private use: a farmer can convert a tractor to use the fuel with just a few minor adjustments, a farmer can feed the leftover stillage to his animals; and anybody who chooses to convert his vehicle to alcohol fuel can cut the cost by 30 percent with tax credits.

Larger alcohol plants, many operated by major oil companies producing millions of gallons annually, can produce as much per bushel as Watauga's plant, but "there's no other small plant tthat gets that kind of yield we do," Leidersdorff said. The plant produces 60 gallons a week.

The still uses containers about 5 feet high and 4 feet across, connected to a maze of copper pipes. It is not limited to using corn for alcohol production.

Leidersdorff said that many other starchy or sugary substances — including sweet potatoes — could be used in the process.

North Carolina is the nation's leading sweet potato producer, but 40 percent of the crop never reaches the market because of flaws, Leidersdorff said.

He has scheduled a meeting later this month with sweet potato producers to work out a possible agreement for AppalCART to use the leftovers.

And it is all powered with propane gas and water pressure — no electricity is used. Leidersdorff said that he hopes the system can be converted to wood power in the future.

A 500-gallon cooking vat heats the pea-soup-like mash to 207 degrees beore it is sent to 6-foot-tall fermentation tanks for three days.

The mixture is then reheated and evaporated into a series of copper pipes where it condenses and ultimately becomes 190 proof alcohol — much like the drinking alcohol sold under the brand name Everclear.

But the enzymes used in the fermentation process make the AppalCART product undrinkable, Leidersdorff said.

Even so, the Watauga plant still is regulated by the state Department of Revenue and the federal Department of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms.

Leidersdorff said that he has not been keeping records long enough on the conversion to know the exact fuel mileage but that it is comparable with gasoline.

The fuel costs $1.13 a gallon to produce, making it more expensive than the gasoline the authority buys.

The cost is reduced, however, when the money brought in by selling the leftover stillage is added into the equation.

Low Esteem Bill Beaten

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — An assemblyman's bill to study the relationship between low self-esteem and social problems got no respect from the state Senate.

The measure introduced by Assemblyman John Vasconcellos, D-San Diego, went down to defeat on a 21-16 vote, six votes short of the two-thirds majority needed for approval.

One senator complained that Vasconcellos was "trying to reinvent the wheel."

"We can study this to death ... and still come up with no more answers than we have now," said Sen. Ollie Speraw, who claimed the causes of low self-esteem "are well known."

"Most of it is created by parents in the home," he said, knowingly.

The bill would have allocated $750,000 for a state commission that would have addressed the relationship between poor self-esteem and anti-social behavior and recommended ways to detect and prevent it.

Sen. Ralph Dills claimed the bill could end up saving the state money by reducing violence.

"It's a well-known fact," he said, "that people that do not have respect for themselves have little or none at all for other people." But Sen. Leroy Greene questioned whether government "should be in such an area at all."

Town Common...

The local fire department burned many of the buildings for fire-fighting practice.

"Colonel Dubber took the project through the rough stages and got the area cleared," Laney said. "My job (when he took over as chairman of the Redevelopment Commission) was to get the new development in."

Many different ideas were discussed for utilization of the plot of land near the river.

"During this period, City Hall decided they were going to build a new building. They decided to put it on the site of the Town Common," Laughinghouse said. "Of course, it never worked out.

"We all dreamed of a lot of things, but you had to back up and start again," he added. "Some plans were not economically feasible. In the early conception of the Town Common, there was a motel and shopping center planned for the land. A boat marina was also planned for the area."

Laughinghouse said that Dubber and lawyer Kenneth Hite, when they were attempting to find out who owned the parcels of land near the river, began researching the area. "They found a map that showed the original plots of the grant given for a city by Susana Evans. The area by the river had been designated as a Town Common and there were hangings and boats down there. At that time, the land had no deed and no one wanted it because it was under water part of the time."

It was then that the city fathers decided to make the area into a Town Common, a public park run by the city.

"The land sloped down to the river," Laney said. "The river came up almost to First Street in spots when the water was high. We made the Common useful by putting a bulkhead down and we raised the elevation 10 or 15 feet and made the entire area useable about 95 percent of the time by placing the elevation at the 15-year flood level."

The $3.8 million dollar program has generated well over $4.5 million in new construction. This produced a 1,700 percent increase in the assessed valuation of the area, according to the Redevelopment Commissions final report.

"This effort to clean up the city impressed Burroughs Wellcome when they were looking at Greenville as a possible location," Laney said. "The Shore Drive project was one of the reasons they were attracted to Greenville and became one of the factors in their decision to locate here.

"No one can look down there by the river and say anything bad about it. You can't fight adding $10 million to the tax base," he added.

Real Hero

By MATT WOLF
Associated Press Writer

EDINBURGH, Scotland (AP) — Director Bill Forsyth may be best known in the United States for his 1983 movie "Local Hero." But in Scotland, he's the real thing: a local boy turned hero, acclaimed internationally for committing his idiosyncratic Scottish humor to the screen.

Born in Glasgow, 55 miles west of here, Forsyth, 38, was in the Scottish capital for the British premiere of his film "Comfort and Joy."

It opened the 38th Edinburgh International Film Festival last week before an enthusiastic audience, including two stars of past Forsyth films, Gordon John Sinclair of "Gregory's Girl," and Peter Reigert of "Local Hero."

At a recent news conference, Forsyth defended the film against some English detractors and looked forward to its American bow this fall.

"There is a major difference in comprehension between Scotland and England," the bearded writer-director said, responding to critics such as Derek Malcolm in London's Guardian newspaper.

In an overview of the Edinburgh Film Festival's two-week program, which includes 12 British features in its 158 offerings, Malcolm said "Comfort and Joy" was a "slight disappointment." He described the Glasgow-set comedy as "fatally extended."

Eric Shorter in the Daily Telegraph wrote that the film "wobbles," adding, "the strokes of wit need a firmer framework ..."

"There is something in the English sense of humor that lacks a strong ironic context," countered Forsyth, whose films have been praised for their comically ironic approach to life.

"Scottish humor has more in common with American humor — New York humor to be exact," he said.Forsyth's past films have found favor with the New York critical establishment.

"Local Hero," his third film after the low-budget "That Sinking Feeling" and "Gregory's Girl," won Forsyth the best screenplay award from the New York Film Critics Circle last December.

"Comfort and Joy," which had a world premiere showing this spring in Los Angeles before an invited audience including Britain's Princess Anne, tells the story of a mild-manner disc jockey in Glasgow named Alan "Dicky" Bird. He gets caught up in an internecine battle among local ice cream sellers.

Aquino Assassination Bringing New Discontent To Philippines

By DAVID BRISCOE
Associated Press Writer

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — The assassination of Benigno Aquino remains a deep mystery but opposition to President Ferdinand E. Marcos has become more vociferous and an undercurrent of discontent has been flowing in the nation since it happened that Sunday afternoon a year ago.

President Marcos contends that all is not a reaction to the killing of his most viable political opponent on Aug. 21, 1983, but the result of new freedoms he claims to have opened up to Filipinos since he lifted martial law in 1981.

The 66-year-old president accepts the military version of the killing — that Aquino was shot on the airport tarmac by alleged communist agent Rolando Galman who was then killed by soldiers who had arrested Aquino upon his return from three years of voluntary exile in the United States.

The opposition claims to see government guilt in the evidence given at public hearings by an investigative board that has yet to announce its findings.

The president, who had jailed Aquino for seven years, had him sentenced to death on charges of subversion and murder and then let him go to Texas for heart surgery. Marcos denies opposition charges that he or his wife, Imelda, were involved in Aquino's death.

Marcos, in power for 19 years, also denies that any soldier would have killed Aquino or plotted his death.

For Marcos, it has been a tumultuous year of conflicting testimony in the Aquino investigation, increasingly bold street demonstrations against him, a spreading communist rebellion that has killed at least 1,075 people in five months, an election in which his opponents made surprising gains and continued delays in critical international loan negotiations.

Government officials acknowledged that hundreds of millions of dollars were taken out of the country during the days of political uncertainty following the assassination.

Tourists have also stayed away, with major hotels offering up to 60 percent discounts to lure them back.

For 52 million Filipinos, the year has brought a 38 percent devaluation in the peso, sharply increased prices, temporary commodities shortages, layoffs, strikes and bank closures.

More such troubles are expected as the government negotiates for new foreign loans and a restructuring of its $26 billion debt on which it hasn't made a payment for nine months.

The assassination has also brought a new mood of discontent affecting what Filipinos read, the movies they watch, the music they hear and the things they talk about. Even a children's coloring book has Aquino's assassination as its theme.

Some popular movies have followed political themes, including one about an activist Roman Catholic nun. Folk singer Freddie Aguilar, one of whose songs takes its title from a slogan used by Aquino followers — "You Are Not Alone" — has become a popular attraction at rallies. Opposition songs are frequently sung in bars and nightclubs.

The intricacies of the assassination remain a favorite topic of conversation in coffee shops, and magazines and newspapers regularly print accusations against Marcos and his party that would not have appeared before Aquino's killing. One weekly magazine has just printed the 48th weekly edition of a special supplement on issues surrounding the killing.

Marcos maintains this is the result of a new democratic era that began when he lifted eight years of martial law in January 1981. Opponents credit Aquino's martyrdom, combined with Marcos' need to keep a "democratic face," for his U.S. and other foreign backers.

They say they see flaws in Marcos' contention: continued allegations of military atrocities, occasional arrests of political dissenters and the recent use of tear gas, truncheons and guns to break up demonstrations and strikes.

Despite the changes since Aquino's death, Marcos, his family and business associates continue to be the most powerful and influential forces in Philippine society.

They still hold the vast majority of government posts. They run Manila's major media, control the vital sugar and coconut industries, and one of Marcos' closest allies, former congressman Eduardo Cojuangco, recently took over the giant San Miguel Corp.

Marcos himself has laughed off calls for his resignation and announced plans to run for re-election in 1987 "if the quality of those aspiring for the presidency of this country does not improve."

Opposition leaders have been predicting for years that the Marcos era is ending. More such predictions have been heard in recent days with renewed street demonstrations and growing sympathy even among some Marcos supporters to trim his nearly absolute powers.

Aquino, 15 years younger than Marcos when he died, had been a disheveled opposition's best hope for unity against Marcos' New Society Movement in the National Assembly elections last May 14.

Public reaction to the killing burst into a series of demonstrations across the country, including nearly daily ticker-tape rallies in Manila's usually staid financial district.

By May, the momentum had shifted to an opposition drive for seats in the National Assembly. Despite heavy government spending and a boycott movement by some opposition groups, Marcos' candidates lost nearly a third of the seats they had held, including most of those in Manila where Mrs. Marcos campaigned for her candidates.

Mrs. Marcos was one of several prominent government witnesses to testify before the assassination fact-finding commission that Marcos appointed in October to replace a panel of mostly former Supreme Court justices who resigned amid public distrust.

The new panel, headed by former Appeals Court Judge Corazon Agrava, held more than 700 hours of public hearings and collected hundreds of pieces of evidence before going into seclusion in July.

One of its most compelling documents was a collection of 150 photographs taken by 13 photographers, nearly all after the first five shots were fired. A tabloid compilation was selling briskly for the equivalent of 19 cents as the anniversary approached.

But the board, which held some sessions in Tokyo and Los Angeles, failed in a search for a photograph of the actual killing of Aquino or the first shots that felled Galman. Scores of reporters and cameramen covering Aquino's arrival were kept just out of sight by soldiers during the crucial seconds.

Most of the evidence and testimony presented to the board was public, but some were gathered behind closed doors.

Public reaction at the hearings indicates that any decision failing to exonerate Galman and pinpoint a soldier as the assassin would dissatisfy many of those who have followed the case closely.

Very little of the board's public testimony dealt with any possible conspiracy.

New Technology May Help Revive Abandoned Oil Wells

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — Petroleum industry officials are hoping that new technology applied to old fields will send oil flowing again from abandoned wells.

The cost of these new recovery methods is steep but a National Petroleum Council study shows the potential benefits are great. The study indicates it may be possible to recover 14.5 billion barrels of oil from old fields in the Southeast and other areas in the United States.

The experts found that 5.5 billion barrels could be recovered by pumping a miscible gas — a gas such as carbon dioxide which mixes with the oil — down a shaft to exert pressure on the oil and force it to the top.

Another 6.5 billion barrels could be brought to the surface through thermal methods, such as sending steam down into oil formations, and about 2.5 billion barrels may be salvaged through the use of chemicals.

"There were 481 billion barrels of oil discovered in the United States as of Dec. 1, 1982, and of that amount approximately 323 billion, or two-thirds, will be left in currently known reservoirs after conventional primary and secondary recovery methods are used," said John Rauber, an official with the council in Washington.

Rauber said this still-trapped oil "represents a sizable resource. This new technology could certainly increase the life of a number of fields."

Normally, oil flows from wells under its own pressure or is pumped to the surface. However, a great deal of the crude remains trapped in rock formations. Secondary recovery methods have included flooding the underground reservoirs with water.

Now, the new technolgy promises to make a third recovery attempt worthwhile.

Frank Robl, with Mobile Oil in Dallas, said that only a few years ago the idea of using carbon dioxide to recover oil would have been considered nothing more than a promising possibility.

But with increased financial incentives and some technical field successes, the new technologies are "on the threshold of potentially becoming a significant part of U.S. production."

The new recovery methods already are in use to a limited extent in the Southeast and have proven successful in several projects in West Texas and New Mexico.

Nitrogen gas is being used to force oil from a field in Florida, and carbon dioxide is being trucked to some fields in other states for limited testing.

However, the most ambitious recovery project in the region is in Mississippi, where construction will begin in September on a 94-mile pipeline to transport carbon dioxide from natural underground sources in the Jackson area to two south Mississippi oil fields nearing depletion.

The goal of the $250 million project by a subsidiary of Shell Oil Co. is recovering 40 million barrels of oil that otherwise would have remained underground.

Tom Denman, a spokesman for Shell in New Orleans, said that while his company hoped the undertaking would lead to the use of carbon dioxide recovery projects in other areas, "it is not a panacea for all fields. There must be sufficient oil there to justify the cost. But it is another tool that can be used to recover additional oil."

Robl, a member of the National Petroleum Council committee that studied the potential for additional oil recovery, said researchers had identified oil fields in Mississippi, Louisiana, Alabama and Florida that may be suitable for the new recovery methods.

He said the availability of carbon dioxide would have a direct bearing on future of such recovery projects. He noted that in Mississippi, the formation being tapped "is a sizable source of carbon dioxide."

Experts said that the 5.5 billion barrels which might be recoverable through the gas injection are located throughout the nation, ranging from the Southwest and Southeast to Alaska.

State Offers Sample Of Gems, Minerals

RALEIGH — North Carolina is nature's sample case of gems, according to Bill Wilson, geologist with the North Carolina Geological Survey Section of the Department of Natural Resources and Community Development.

Hundreds of rockhounds are attracted each year, he said, to North Carolina to explore for the more than 400 different varieties of gems and minerals that can be found here.

Emeralds, rubies, sapphires and garnets are the most popular gemstones, Wilson said.

Emerald, the state's official gemstone, is probably the most popular and most valuable of all gemstones found in North Carolina. Emerald is found near Hiddenite in Alexander County and near Little Switzerland in Mitchell County.

Ruby can by found in the alluvial gravels within Cowee Valley near Franklin in Macon County. This small valley also yields rhodolite garnet, sapphire, moonstone and rutile. The most preferred variety of garnet is probably rhodolite, which is found only in North Carolina.

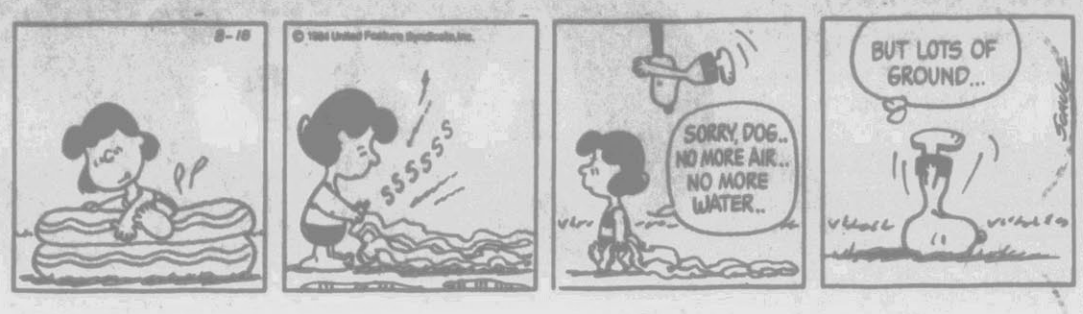

"Several publications are available that describe North Carolina's mineral and gemstone sites," Wilson said.

"Information Circular 21 takes a historical look at the state's gold production, where it was mined, and where you may still explore for gold today. The most popular publication is our information Circular 24 which identifies mineral collecting sites in North Carolina, provides information on gemstone cutting, a list of North Carolina gem and mineral clubs and interesting color photos of minerals and gemstones," Wilson said.

"The large variety of minerals found in North Carolina has attracted thousands of collectors, and with the variety, beauty and ever-increasing value of minerals and gemstones it's not too late to get started," he said.

A complete price list of these and other publications is available from the North Carolina Geological Survey Section, P.O. Box 27687, Raleigh, N.C., 27611.

THERE ARE SO MANY REASONS TO BUY A SAAB TURBO, YOU'LL NEVER HAVE TO ADMIT THE REAL ONE.

Tell them you needed the luggage space. Saab gives you a full 56.5 cubic feet when you flip down the back seat (53 in 4-door models).

Or talk about the front seat, explaining the merits of its orthopedic design and the fact that it's electrically heated for the wintertime.

Speaking of the wintertime, you could also point out the front-wheel drive, 15-inch wheels and Pirelli radials, all of which make snow driving easier.

We could go on and on. So could you.

But you'll never have to let them know what happens when you press the accelerator.

That is, unless the guy in the next lane really needs to find out.

Program Promotes Alcohol Awareness On Campus

GAINESVILLE, Fla. (AP) — When students return this fall to the University of Florida, they will be told by one campus organization that alcohol use is OK — if you are a responsible drinker.

That is the focus of a nationwide organization started at UF known as BACCHUS — short for Boost Alcohol Consciousness Concerning the Health of University Students. Bacchus was the Roman god of wine.

The organization was founded in 1976 by Geraldo Gonzalez, a UF graduate student at the time, and now chapters of the organization can be found in 46 states and Canada.

BACCHUS was the outgrowth of efforts by Gonzalez and the campus administration to address a growing problem of alcohol abuse among students.

"The university saw there was a problem here and we needed to do something," Gonzalez said.

After a series of seminars and meetings, Gonzalez and the university determined that an organization was needed to encourage responsible alcohol use.

"We knew that to be effective, we would have to have student involvement and an approach that was credible," said Gonzalez, who serves as national BACCHUS president.

The focus of the program is not to prevent students from drinking but encourage them to curb excesses.

"Drunkenness is not acceptable," Gonzalez said.

A year after its founding, BACCHUS chapters were formed on three other Florida campuses — Florida State, South Florida and Florida Atlantic. In 1980, BACCHUS became a national non-profit organization and has grown to 165 chapters.

"When we first started doing this in 1976, I knew it was an awesome problem and that nothing short of a national movement would have an impact," Gonzalez said.

Over the past several years, there has been a greater awareness of the alcohol problem with tougher drunken driving laws and moves to raise the minimum drinking age.

BACCHUS doesn't claim responsibility for those changes, but "we are part of that movement," Gonzalez said.

Patricia Oliver, president of the UF BACCHUS chapter, joined as a freshman in 1982.

Time Short For Decisions On Beach Properties

(Editor's Note: The following article is an opinion item written by Dr. Orrin H. Pilkey, James B. Duke professor of geology at Duke University and author of "From Currituck to Calabash: Living with North Carolina's Shore," "Living with the South Carolina Shore" and several other books on coastal eroision and development)

By DR. ORRIN H. PILKEY
Duke University News Service

Before World War II and the advent of bulldozers, American affluence and a major shoreline role for the Corps of Engineers, Americans rolled with the punches and retreated with the retreating shoreline. That's why the first row or two of houses, and sometimes five or six rows, have been removed by storms in most older U.S. Atlantic beach front communities (e.g., Wrightsville Beach). Some communities have passed into the sea. Fishermen have dredged up tombstones on the continental shelf that came from the old resort community of Broadwater on Hog Island, Va. In the 1950s beachfront lots were 600 feet deep at South Nags Head to allow houses to be moved back in response to already well-documented shoreline retreat.

After World War II, we began to fortify our shorelines to save threatened buildigns. The new American approach was simultaneous with accelerating sea level rise and accelerating shoreline retreat. It is now clear from long experience that if recreational beaches are to be preserved, there is virtually no way to halt shoreline erosion. In trying to save buildings we only destroy beaches. Many people do not realize that he intertidal portions of beaches are public property. Thus, public property is destroyed to save private property and once the beaches are gone, the public has no guaranteed access to the ocean.

Beaches in front of seawalls soon disappear due to wave action. Groins — walls built perpendicular to the shore — may temporarily build up a beach locally, but they cause strong erosion elsewhere. "Seascape," the highly touted artificial seaweed, probably causes little, if any, sand buildup on most open ocean beaches. If it did trap sand, it would simply cause erosion elsewhere. Bulldozing sand from the beach to build back the dunes is no erosion solution; it is erosion. Beach replenishment is the one solution that in itself doesn't destroy beaches and in fact builds them up. But replenlishment is expensive, a minimum of $1 million per mile. Historically, it only leads to intensified shoreline development as in the case of Carolina Beach.

Carolina Beach is in more trouble than any beach community in North Carolina. The beach, which has been replenished twice in less than a decade at a cost of $11 million, will likely disappear within three to five years. For economic and political reasons, the likelihood of a third replenishment is dim. We can soon expect pressure for walls, bulkheads, revetments, breakwaters and more sand. If the pressure is successful, Carolina Beach would then resemble the armored beaches of fortress-like Seabright, N.J., the Atlantic coast archetype in the "don't retreat at any cost" folly. In the March 1984 storm, Seabright claimed to have damages of $82 million although few buildings were damaged. The alleged damage to seawalls and "beaches" equaled the approximate worth of all the buildings in town, and it wasn't even a big storm.

It is too late for Carolina Beach, but elsewhere in North Carolina there is still time. Nags Head and Kill Devil Hills both have annual erosion rates of 4-6 feet. Nags Head values beaches over buildings and is more or less willing to let the sea roll on. Kill Devil Hills values buildings over beaches and has been trying to get state approval for shoreline armoring. If they succeed, they'll not only destroy their own beaches; they will greatly increase the erosion rate in Nags Head which is downstream in the sand supply system.

Bogue Banks is at an earlier stage of the game.

Serious erosion is only just beginning. Each community is displaying a different attitude toward the problem. Indian Beach politicos are expected to opt for armoring, and Pine Knolls Shores may opt to let the sea roll on. But the island is basically a single natural system, and serious problems are just around the corner. Without a coordinated program based on sound scientific data, no plan will work.

The time has come to plan for a strategic retreat from the North Carolina shoreline. Thanks to the Holshouser and Hunt administrations, our strong coastal management policies have put us in a good position to begin such a retreat. We responded to the Nags Head-Kill Devil Hills erosion problem by forming a task force which looked at available alternatives and basically concluded that Hurculean efforts to halt erosion were fruitless. Compare this with South Carolina where high rise condos are now being built along with new seawalls extending into the high tide surf zone (North Myrtle Beach). In South Carolina buildings are valued more than beaches and a "New Jerseyized" South Carolina shoreline is just around the corner.

Retreat from the shoreline is not "throwing up our hands and slinking away in despair," as suggested by a Corps of Engineers colonel. It is not "abandonment" of the shoreline as suggested by the American Shore and Beach Preservation Association. It is a common sense policy whose worth from the public's viewpoint can be strongly documented. A policy of gradual withdrawal is essentially what state government is now trying to do, although they wouldn't want to call it that.

There are many ways and combinations of ways to accomplish this. We can let houses fall in, we can move them, demolish them, prevent their construction near the beach to begin with and prevent replacement and remodeling of aging beach-front buildings. Retreat measures could be left up to individual owners, be paid for by federal insurance, be paid for by assessment of beach communities or we could just wait for a storm and allow no rebuilding. A variety of deed restrictions are possible such as noting that "this property is subject to shoreline erosion" and "the owner will not be allowed to halt shoreline erosion if it threatens the building." On narrow developed islands where man has interferred with natural island migration processes, we could "rollover" just like the island. Let houses leapfrog from the oceanside to the soundside as erosion continues. Instead of pumping sand on ocean beaches, pump sand on the soundside beaches to furnish new ground for leapfrogging houses. All of these solutions have been proposed and in some cases have been instituted by various state coastal management programs around the country.

There are a thousand ways to withdraw from the shore and the time has come to begin communitywide, islandwide and statewide planning for the inevitable. We can retreat now in orderly fashion or we can retreat later in disarray. But time is running out for sensible choices.

A Gray Day In Atlantic City

A QUIET DAY — When the weather's cloudy or cool at the famed resort beach of Atlantic City, N.J., there's often little action on the sandy beach beyond the boardwalk and string of gambling casinos. Here, members of the Atlantic City Beach Patrol, George Naame, left and Nich Talvacchia, relax at a life-saving boat on a recent Sunday afternoon when most visitors sought indoor entertainment. Beach Nudity

By KERIN HOPE
Associated Press Writer

ATHENS, Greece (AP) — Nudism became legal in Greece last October, but there is no rush this summer to open resorts for Greeks and foreigners to sunbathe in the raw.

Only six applications for nudist centers have so far been approved.

"We're not in a great hurry; we want to get it right," Nikos Skoulas, secretary-general of the state-run National Tourist Organization (EOT), said in an interview. "Nudism has been an emotional issue here in the past and we must be sure local people aren't offended."

The first three centers, campsites on the islands of Mykonos, Skyros and Andros, will open in 1985.

The Greek Orthodox Church quietly dropped its opposition to nudist centers soon after the law was passed unanimously by Parliament last year.

But local authorities, who have the power under the law to veto nudist hotels, motels or campsites in their areas, have proved reluctant to cash in on what could be a potentially lucrative sector of Greece's tourist industry.

"Nudism is something that came naturally to the ancient Greeks with their cult of physical beauty," Eleni Bonou, chief of EOT's tourist development division, said.

"But many modern Greeks in the provinces seem to feel that having a nudist center in their area might damage the existing social fabric."

There are only two nudist clubs in Greece, with an estimated membership of around 2,000.

Mrs. Bonou said her department has so far received 28 applications to set up nudist centers. The proposals range from campsites on two almost uninhabited islets off southern Crete to fencing off existing hotels in the popular Argolis district of southern Greece.

Nine applications for the two-year licenses were rejected outright by local authorities. Twelve more are still pending, she said.

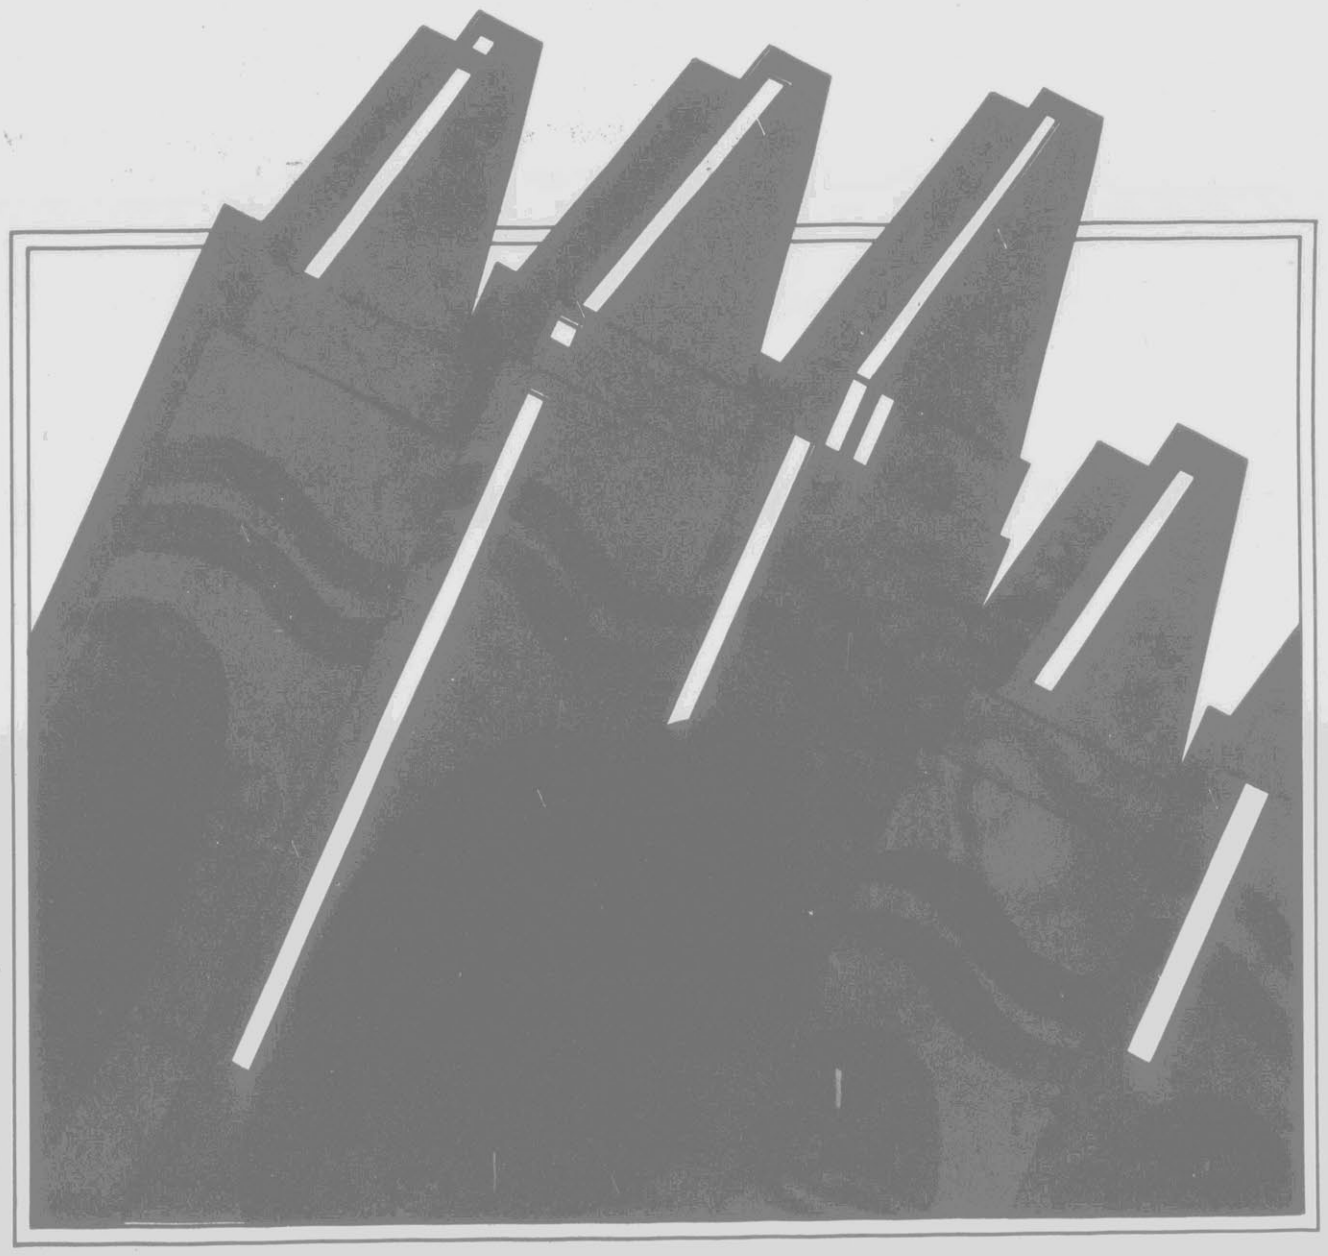

Officials are confident, however, that nudist centers will eventually catch on.

"One reason for the slow rate of applications is that we're having a good year for ordinary tourism and hoteliers and businessmen aren't pursuing specialized sectors," Skoulas said.

He said Greece hopes to attract about 300,000 nudist visitors yearly by 1987 — about half the number who visit naturist resorts in Spain and Yugoslavia.

That would represent about 5 percent of the present annual total of tourists to Greece, and bring in an estimated $250 million yearly.

No. 26810 – Fowler

Master Suite On A Private Level

by Jerry Bishop

Its four floors staggered at half-level intervals, the Fowler is both architecturally fascinating and effectively planned. Entering on the third level, one sees dining and sunken living rooms ahead on a space-expanded diagonal. The corridor kitchen extends into a traffic-free space open to living areas on one side, and a deck makes the outdoors a natural part of all social areas. One half-level higher, the master bedroom connects to a study and deck plus a luxurious compartmented bathroom.

On the second level of the Fowler, two smaller bedrooms have a landing with a bath and convenient laundry. The lowest level of the Fowler is a recreation basement. Framing uses large studs and rafters spaced at wide intervals to cut construction time, reduce the need for lumber and open deeper gaps for thicker insulating batts.

Homeowner Wins Redo Of Her Home

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

What happens when a team of magazine editors from New York descends on a middle class family in Katy, Texas, to make over the family home, redo the woman's hair and clothes, and even provide a new set of recipes?

According to Diana Hindt, winner of McCall's Magazine's "Reader of the Year" contest, it is sheer bliss.

Mrs. Hindt won for herself and family a prize worth an estimated $150,000 after her letter was selected from among thousands sent in by readers.

Between February and May, the magazine's editors and the New York design firm of Scruggs-Meyers remodeled the family's two-car garage into a master bedroom and bath, redid the kitchen, redecorated the rest of the house, providing new furniture and appliances (including a central air conditioner), and flew Mrs. Hindt to New York for a beauty makeover and a new wardrobe.

According to Robert Stein, editor of McCall's, the idea for the three-year-old feature originated as a decorating story.

"As we discussed it further, we decided to see if we could take one reader each year and do for her personally what we try to do for all our readers — to dramatize the way the ideas in the magazine apply to people's lives."

McCall's wasn't seeking a typical reader, added Stein, "because there isn't one." The Hindts are the first to agree that they are not a typical all-American family. As part owner of a small petroleum equipment company, Mrs. Hindt, 33, is the main breadwinner. Her husband, Bill, 47, is an importer and wholesaler of antiques and reproductions, but says "I'm the kind of husband who likes to stay at home."

Both were divorced when they met. They married 13 years ago and began the task of melding themselves, her daughter, and his four children into a family and later their son was born.

Although the family may not conform to the average, it was a typical home furnishings problem — lack of space — that led Mrs. Hindt to enter the contest.

With six children, the family needed more room than their three-bedroom ranch in a suburb of Houston provided. But they couldn't afford to remodel it themselves. A burning desire to convert that garage into a master bedroom and bath led her to write the winning letter.

Nevertheless, Mrs. Hindt recalled recently that she didn't tell her family — even her husband — that she had entered. "It sounded like such a crazy thing to do. I just wrote the letter and mailed it."

She finally did tell the family when she learned she was a finalist and that several McCall's editors were coming to meet the Hindts.

After being selected, she got a chance to describe her "dream house" to an editor and two designers. "I went into my ultimate fantasy about ripping out walls. I told them I wanted to have more space and more function out of the space I had," she said.

Home furnishings editor Ellen Frankel and the design team of Scruggs-Meyers came up with solutions that have made a major differences, she said.

ON THE HOUSE

Periodic inspections of your house reveal structural openings you did not know were there. Ignore these gaps and you will have trouble later on in the form of water, heat and air leaks.

It isn't always easy to tell when caulking is required. You have to search out its absence. Since small openings are not always visible, especially when they are higher than eye level, you need a ladder and a flashlight. Most especially, look around doors and windows where dissimilar materials meet. Such materials contract and expand at different times, thus producing the conditions that cause separations.

When you are making your inspection to see whether repairs are needed, don't trust your memory. If you do, you'll find that, as you move along from one part of the house to another, you are inclined to forget where the trouble areas are located. Carry along a pencil and paper, marking down where the gaps are, but more important, placing chalk marks at those spots. Should a heavy rain wash off the chalk, you will at least have a record of the locations.

Before caulking any opening, remove or scrape off any of the old caulking compound. The new compound will act as a filler, also expanding and contracting with parts of the house so it won't come out of place too quickly. Depending on how the job is done and other conditions, good caulk will last from two to seven or eight years, in some cases indefinitely. Since there are many different kinds of caulking compounds, ask questions of your dealer to be certain you get the type needed for the job at hand.

Some people do not know that caulk can be used to reinforce and aid old and crumbling mortar which no longer is keeping out water, but be sure to ask for a kind that features good adhesion to concrete. Remember, too, that compound acts to keep out insects that invade a house.

Sometimes, when caulking over a problem area, such as a grease spot, it is a good idea to apply some shellac to it, diluting it half and half with denatured alcohol.

Generally, the best way to apply compound is from a cartridge used in what is called a caulking gun. The nozzle of the cartridge is cut with a razor blade or sharp knife. You make the cut at a point where the nozzle tip will match the size of the bead to be made. If you cut it at an angle, the compound will be easier to apply. Follow the directions on how to break the inner seal of the cartridge, although usually they will tell you simply to do it with a screwdriver blade, a nail or a piece of wire. You then pull the plunger out all the way, insert the cartridge, bottom end first, and position the nozzle into the slot at the front part of the gun. Push in the plunger and squeeze the trigger to fill the cartridge nozzle.

As you apply the caulking compound, keep the cartridge at a 45-degree angle, avoiding erratic movements. When you have completed the application, slightly press in the nozzle and break off the connection with a quick twist.

When you complete the caulking and find that the job isn't as smooth as you wanted it to be, wet a finger and rub it on a little soap. Rub your finger along the compound line and you will find that it smooths it out.

If the gap is more than half an inch deep, first fill with oakum or some other product made especially for this purpose. You should have decided ahead of time whether the caulk is to be painted, because that decision affects the kind of compound you select. In any case, allow the compound sufficient time to cure, which will be explained to you on the container. Another reason to wait is to be sure that, if any shellac is to be applied, it is not done so until the curing is completed. Before you begin the project, see which kind of solvent must be used for the cleanup job.

(Do-it-yourselfers will find the solutions to many problems in Andy Lang's handbook, "Practical Home Repairs," which can be obtained by sending $1.50 to this newspaper at Box 5, Teaneck, N.J. 07666.)

Here's the Answer

Q. — I am going to put red cedar siding on the outside of my house and hope to do it myself with the help of my son. We are having considerable discussion as to whether to use red cedar shakes or cedar plywood. I also have heard you can get red cedar hardboard. What can you tell me about it?

A. — Hardboard siding in rough cedar texture has the same characteristics as regular exterior hardboard and can be finished almost any way you wish. The best way to make a choice among the shakes, plywood or hardboard is to get one of the companies that sells it to advise you where the product can be seen, preferably in the makeup of a house.

Q. — Our attic has been unoccupied for years. Now I plan to finish it. There is loose fill insulation in the attic floor. Should it be removed or left the way it is?

A. — If you were starting from scratch, there would be little need to place insulation in the attic floor, since its main purpose is to keep heat from the main part of the house from going into the attic. But, since it already is there, you might as well let it stay. The trouble of removing it might not be worth whatever is gained from it.

(The details of installing attic insulation are explained in Andy Lang's booklet, "Save Money By Insulating," which can be obtained by sending 50 cents and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to Know-How, P. O. Box 477, Huntington, NY 11743. Questions of general interest will be answered in the column.)

Garden Clinic

Q. Will placing hair in the garden keep rabbits and deer away? (A.N., Lowesville)

A. String small bags made of panty hose or cheesecloth, each filled with a fistful of human hair, around your plants. Place the bags every 20 to 30 feet to keep out deer, or every eight to 10 feet to keep out rabbits as well. People have used this remedy for years and it seems to work. However, all repellants depend on weather and the hunger of animals.

Q. How should I fertilize my lawn? I have fescue. (W.G., Kannapolis)

A. Fertilize fescue and other cool-season grasses with one pound of nitrogen per 1,000 square feet after mid-September. Ideally, this should be applied right before a rainfall. If no rain is forecast, delay fertilizing. You can burn fescue. You do not need to add potassium or phosphosrus in the fall because the grass won't take up these nutrients then.

Q. What makes cucumbers bitter? (I.R., Kinston)

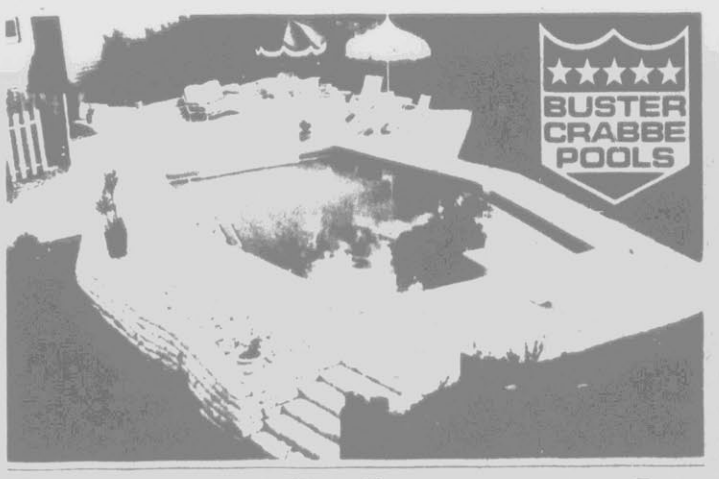

A. Lack of moisture and high temperatures. Cucurbitacin is the name of the substance that gives the fruit its bitter taste. The cucurbitacin is found in and just under the skin of the cucumber, never in the interior of the fruit. The bitterness penetrates more deeply at the stem end. So when peeling a cucumber, make the peel a little thicker at the stem end than at the blossom end, and the bitterness will be removed. But in squash, bitterness extends throughout the entire fruit.

Q. When I bought this property three years ago it had three dogwood trees on it that were six to eight feet tall. Last year one died and this year two died. The bark started to peel and under the bark tunnels had been bored in the trunk. What could be the problem? (E.W., Hickory)

A. The problem you described is probably caused by dogwood borers. Dogwood borers can be controlled by spraying with Thiodan or lindane in early June according to directions on the label. The dogwood borer is mainly a problem to trees which have been injured, such as by lawnmowers. Contact your county agricultural extension agenct for more information.

Durham Museum Adds A Coyote To Collection

DURHAM — The North Carolina Museum of Life and Science recently added a coyote to its collection of North Carolina animals. Coyotes formerly ranged west of the Mississippi River to the Great Lakes and north into Canada, but are now found throughout the eastern coast of the United States.

Coyotes have been found in Johnston, Wake, and Swan counties. The museum's coyote, a young female, was kept as an illegal pet. The former owners purchased the pup and kept her chained in a small enclosure.

The animal protection association in the area became aware of the situation and had the coyote confiscated. The coyote's rescue team consulted Tom Bennet, special agent for the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service.

It is illegal to own natural North Carolina wildlife without a permit. The N. C. Wildlife Commission was charged with the task of finding a suitable place for the coyote.

Bennet had worked with museum animal curators in placing animals before. The museum often takes in injured or abused indigenous wildlife. "Sometimes we have to make a special plea for funding," said the museum's chief animal curator, Lynn Moredock. "But in a case like this, there's always room for one more."

As animal curators worked to create space for the coyote, North Carolina Wildlife agents transported her to Dr. Jerry Shelton at the Guess Road Animal Hospital. The animal's physical showed her to be emaciated, anemic and suffering from severe internal parasitism. She also had much hair loss and chafing from a restrictive neck chain.

After treatment and a week's stay in the hospital, "Lonesome" Coyote was brought to the Museum of Life and science. She is housed in temporary quarters.

The coyote resembles a gray wolf, but is smaller, weighing up to 50 pounds. They are buff-gray colored with whitish underparts and have a brushy tail with a black tip. Coyotes eat small mammals, birds, fruits and berries. The animal is said to have mastered a skill which has eluded many a grocery shopper: how to tell a ripe watermelon from a green one.

Perhaps no single trait of the coyote is as well-known as its lonely night-time howl echoing across the moonlit landscape.

"People come by to visit 'Lonesome' and her cage looks small," said Moredock. "It's more room than she's ever had. She was kept on a short chain all her life — she's just a year old.

"The cage will do for now. What we'd like to do is to get an enclosure built for her in the wildlife area, over near the wolves. I think it would be educational for people to be able to compare them," Moredock said.

Tax-deductible donations toward "Lonesome's" new shelter may be made to the North Carolina Museum of Life and Science, P.O. Box 15190, Durham, N.C., 27704.

Allentown's Catbirds

By TOM FEGELY
Allentown Call-Chronicle

ALLENTOWN, Pa. (AP) — There's a good reason that in some locales the catbird is nicknamed "slate-colored mockingbird."

This common resident of Lehigh Valley dooryards is not only a close relative of the noisy and talented mockingbird, but in its own right it possesses a surprising repertoire of calls that can mimic everything from bluejays to Rhode Island reds.

But it's the distinctive "mew" that accounts for the catbird's name and familiarity — a sound that reveals its otherwise unnoticed presence.

The catbird prefers tangles of rosebush, forsythia, lilac and other backyard shrubs, as well as thickets growing on the edges of fields and woodlots.

Here catbird pairs raise their families, typically two each spring and summer. A rough, deep-hollow nest of twigs, bark, leaves and rootlets, often woven with grapevine, is built in some low, inconspicuous spot within the shrubbery.Occasionally a small tree will suffice.

Four to six eggs make up a typical catbird clutch. They're smaller than robins' eggs and deeper in color — a glossy blue-green with a bit more of the green. Although the male may occasionally babysit, the female actually carries out most of the incubation duties. Ten to 14 days after the eggs are laid the homely youngsters hatch, then spend another couple of weeks in the nest before meeting the world on their own.

The catbird's inconspicuous nest site, along with its drab plumage, make it one of the lesser-known backyard residents as far as novice birdwatchers are concerned.

Unlike the noisy mockingbird with its flashy white wing bars, the cardinal's crimson plumage and the nomadic flocks of white finches, catbirds are somewhat solitary and their colors are dull. Both the male and female, as with its cousins, the mockingbird and brown thrasher, look alike.

Yet the catbird can be rightly described as "sleek and handsome." Its trim, slate-colored attire and a black skullcap are the prime field marks.

The only color that it possesses is the patch of chestnut on the rump and base of the tail. During courtship time and when a cat or other intruder approaches, the tail flips up and the viewer may get a glimpse of the bird's hidden coloration.

From the spring through fall, the catbird's diet varies from insects to fruits. Ants, beetles, caterpillars and grasshoppers compose much of its menu in spring and early summer.

As fruits mature and sweeten, mulberries, elderberry, dogwood berries, raspberries and poison ivy berries are eaten. In the summer, the food needed by the fledglings and the adults themselves accounts for a number of insect deaths, making the catbird a beneficial species.

Scientists have determined that as much as 96 percent of the birds' diet in spring is insects. Where gypsy moths are abundant, the catbird is an important predator during the destructive pest's larval stage.

Catbirds are common in neighborhood yards, but these sleek birds also live in swamplands and wooded areas far from human habitation. In fact, a surprising number of catbirds live in swampy areas where insects are abundant and easy to find and catch.

Although the mockingbird's skills at imitating other sounds are unmatched by any other bird, the catbird comes in a close second. One feature that separates the two is that the catbird's notes are seldom repeated.

If it hears the scream of a jay or the call of a flicker, it will offer a semblance of the sound but not go into a continuous repetition as does the mockingbird. If anything, the catbird's cries are somewhat disjointed — but almost always include its trademarked "mew" somewhere in the medley.

Unlike most species that become silent once the courting and nesting seasons are over, the catbird can still be heard mewing from nearby thickets before setting wing for more gentle climes.

Occasionally catbirds stick around during the winter months, but this is a rarity. Most catbirds begin migrations in late September and are far to the south, in Florida, the Bahamas, Cuba, Mexico or Panama, by the time the first snows settle on the north country.

Water Project To Revitalize Mexican City

By CAM ROSSIE
Associated Press Writer

MONTERREY, Mexico (AP) — The Santa Catarina River dissecting this sweltering city dried up at the turn of the century. Its dusty bed, now a recreation center, has remained as a cruel monument to Monterrey's most critical problem — a shortage of water.

But the "Project of the Century," designed to quench an urgent need in Mexico's third largest city, is ending a very long dry spell.

"We have won the battle for water," says Gov. Alfonso Martinez Dominguez of Nuevo Leon state.

On July 27, President Miguel de la Madrid inaugurated the Cerro Prieto Dam and an 83-mile-long underground aqueduct — said to be the longest in the Americas — that has sent water cascading into hundreds of Monterrey homes.

"We have lots of water," one Monterrey woman said shortly after the dam was opened. Water in her home used to be cut off at noon, she said.

The project was conceived during the big-budget, big-spending era of Mexico's oil boom during the administration of Jose Lopez Portillo, from 1976 through 1982.

The federal government had to come through with most of the money for the immense project — valued at $192 million at the current exchange rate of 189 pesos to the dollar — after the 1982 peso devaluation put the state's plan in jeopardy.

This is one project that survived the oil boom and the subsequent 1982 bust that brought about the worst economic crisis here in 50 years.

State officials, prompted by the former president's rescue of the project, changed the name from Cerro Prieto to the Lopez Portillo Dam. But Monterrey citizens were so irked that the dam was named in honor of a president they blame for the country's economic disaster that even Martinez Dominquez still calls it Cerro Prieto.

This arid northeastern industrial center of nearly 2.5 million people sizzles under spring and summer heat that often surpasses 100 degrees. Severe droughts are common and even "good" years bring little rain.

Monterrey's main water source, La Boca Dam, failed miserably to meet the skyrocketing demands of a rapidly expanding city that uses 2,288 gallons of water a second. More than 800,000 residents in the region's poorer housing developments lack running water in their homes and must haul it in buckets from collective faucets or water trucks, often for long distance in the hills. Other residents, even in the wealthiest suburbs, have tolerated rationing imposed years ago.

"The hydraulic plan for Nuevo Leon, conceived to supply water to the Monterrey metropolitan area for a long period, is without a doubt the work of the century," said Enrique Torres Lopez, director of water and drainage of Monterrey.

He predicts the dam will assure a sufficient water supply in Monterrey through the year 2010.

Planners had to resort to extreme measures to transport the water across the state.

The aqueduct and system of five pumping stations carry the dam's water nearly 1,000 feet uphill from the town of Linares in western Nuevo Leon to a treatment plant on the outskirts of Monterrey.

Cerro Prieto's water storage capacity is four times greater than that of La Boca's 1.3 million cubic feet, Martinez Dominguez said.

"With these works, 97 percent of the families in the metropolitan area will have water in their homes," he said.

Millions of pesos also have been spent on television, newspaper and billboard advertisements that proclaim "Water has arrived" in one of the biggest government publicity campaigns to date.

Although hundreds of poor families must wait as long as a year for completion of the underground piping system that will bring water to their homes for the first time, Martinez Dominguez has received widespread acclaim for the project.

"Monterrey and its metropolitan area ... have a water supply source unique in the world," the newspaper El Norte said in a recent editorial.

"Coincidental proof of this is the fact that ... across our northern border and entering the land that at times seems to have everything, the United States, two Texas cities ... San Antonio and Austin, have entered a state of emergency for water conservation," the editorial added, referring to the severe drought plaguing Texas this summer.

Monterrey is 143 miles south of Laredo, Texas.

Water shortages have been chronic in many parts of Mexico because of drought or rapid urban expansion. Massive hydraulic projects have been designed in the Mexico City metopolitan area to bring a better water supply to its 17 million residents.

SUNDAY AFTERNOON LULL — In the early hours of a recent sultry August Sunday afternoon, fishermen had abandoned what is normally an active pier fishing site at Pamlico Beach. Chances are during those hot hours they sat in air-conditioned rooms watching the Olympic games on television. (Reflector Photo by Jerry Raynor)

Hoping To Save Lowry's Mexican Home

By SOLL SUSSMAN
Associated Press Writer

CUERNAVACA, Mexico (AP) — Devotees of Malcom Lowry's novel "Under the Volcano" sometimes come to this resort city in the mountains southwest of Mexico City just to tour its literary landmarks.

But some unlikely preservationists here are concerned that a key one — a house where Lowry once lived — might be lost unless the state government can be persuaded to purchase it.

They are hoping that the acclaim for John Huston's recent film version of the book can be translated into momentum for their campaign to preserve what is known locally as "The Lowry House."

"The significance as far as Cuernavaca is concerned is that Lowry has put Cuernavaca on the map," said John Spencer, a mild-mannered British sculptor and Lowry admirer who has called civic meetings and written articles about the house. "He has presented the world a very accurate picture of Cuernavaca in the '30s."

The house at No. 17 Alejandro de Humboldt Street now has a "for sale" banner draped in front.

The British novelist rented an apartment in the house while finishing "Under the Volcano" in 1946, and he may have lived in one of the bungalows in the house's lush garden while working on early drafts in the 1930s.

It appears in the book as what Monsieur Laruelle calls his "madhouse." The house's tower — only the base still remains — is the site for a key scene involving the doomed Consul, his brother Hugh and Yvonne.

The house and grounds now are in dilapidated condition, but on a clear day it is still possible to see the volcano Popocatepetl from the roof.

Lowry gave Cuernavaca the name "Quauhnahuac" in his novel, which chronicles the last 24 hours in the life of Geoffrey Firmin, a former British consul drowning in alcohol. Still attractive in his middle years, he seems among the most favored of men, with rank, education, intelligence and wit. Built around his fatal malaise is the return of his estranged wife who has had an affair with his half-brother.

Bluebird Family Thriving

AKRON, Ohio (AP) — Little by little, Marie Morgan's family is growing. The Akron woman is the stepmother to more than 100 bluebirds, hatched, raised and banded along three bluebird trails in Summit County over the last six years.

The project — the brainchild of Mrs. Morgan — was designed to assist the colorful but threatened Eastern bluebird.

The male bluebird has a bright blue back and wings with a reddish-brown breast and white belly. The female is slightly duller. It is an insect-eater known for its soft, melodic warble.

The bluebird's numbers have declined over 25 years, believed due to competition for nesting sites with other birds and due to man-made changes in the environment. About 20 bluebird boxes were installed in 1978 in O'Neil Woods near Norton, and in the Cuyahoga Valley National Recreation Area. The boxes were mounted on 5-foot poles to keep predators away.

At the same time, Mrs. Morgan, president of the Greater Akron Audubon Society, began banding bluebirds with color-coded aluminum bands. Recently, she encountered her first case of one of her banded birds, now a 3-year-old father, raising two nestlings at O'Neil Woods.

"That was really neat," she said. "It shows that we are making a difference. We honestly don't know if we're making a big difference or a little difference, but we're trying to help the bluebird make a comeback."

Mrs. Morgan said that maintaining the bluebird trails is a time-consuming effort that includes weekly checks on nests and examining nestlings for insect parasites that can weaken and kill the bluebird young. If insects are found, she said the young must be removed from the box, along with the old nest, and new nesting material must be added and the young replaced in the box.

"The bluebird," Mrs. Morgan said, "is a beautiful and beneficial bird. Its plight called for man's help. I got involved because I so enjoyed bluebirds in this area. I didn't want them to go away forever."

The major reason that bluebirds are declining in numbers is because they are losing nesting sites to other small birds. In addition, farmers have been clearing dead trees which used to house bluebirds and are no longer using wooden fence posts, another favorite home for the bluebirds.

Bluebirds generally nest in late March and early April. They normally have two eggs, which hatch in 14 days. The nestlings, fed insects by their parents, fledge in about 20 days. The parents may raise three sets of nestlings during a season, which runs into August.

Comprehensive Show By Artists Of The South

By PHYLLIS MESSINGER
Associated Press Writer

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — Southern writers won fame for their descriptions of the lush land of their region, its ceremonies and culture, but Southern painters never shared in the acclaim.

A traveling exhibition of about 175 paintings of the South, now at the Mississippi Museum of Art, may change that.

"This is the first really comprehensive study of Southern painting," said William Ferris, director of the Center for Southern Culture at the University of Mississippi. "There's never been a question about the South's literary or music heritage. But its art has not been understood. This exhibition is a major breakthrough."

As witness to its appeal, the show has attracted 83 percent more visitors to the Mississippi museum this summer than last.

"I think that shows that there is a lot of interest in good art here," said Norman H. McCrummen III, director of the museum.

Presented in five sections covering 1564 to 1980, the paintings depict Southern life from Charleston, S.C., home of America's first art museum, westward to Texas.

The earliest, a watercolor, gives an idealized vision of the French expedition to Florida.

An oil painting from 1864 portrays a small group of women mourning the death of a Confederate soldier. When the painting was first shown in the capitol at Richmond, Va., in 1864, a bucket was placed beneath it to collect contributions for the Confederacy.

The largest work, measuring 37 feet long and standing ceiling-high, offers a symbolic view of modern Southern life. A Ku Klux Klansman and a soldier carry a stretcher bearing a flag-wrapped baby in one portion. A black musician plays a guitar in another.

"One of the things that distinguishes Southern painting is its connection to the landscape," Ferris said. "And it also reflects the themes of Southern culture — race, slavery, Reconstruction, religion. These are all clearly Southern experiences."

Ferris said that until the last 30 or 40 years, "there was very little sense of community among artists in the South. Painters never felt they had patrons in the form of agents. Yet, literary agents were really close to Southern writers. They were advocates, sometimes close friends.

"Southern painters felt as if their work was treated as a commodity. Somehow painting didn't have the same kind of deference paid to it as writing."

Until recently, there were no art academies in the South and art wasn't taught in the public schools. So, Southern painters worked alone, often taking their inspiration from literature rather than other painters, he noted.

The exhibition, organized by the Virginia Museum in Richmond, took years to put together. It has been on tour, moving from Richmond to Birmingham, Ala., New York and now Jackson. It opens in Louisville, Ky., in September and will stay for two months before going to New Orleans, its final stop, in December.

The art show was expensive to put on, especially for the small Mississippi Museum of Art, which just moved to modern quarters downtown several years ago.

But McCrummen, who just became the museum's director in May, said he feels the museum "is entering a new phase."

A board of regents has just been formed. Its members are charged with the dual tasks of increasing museum membership and keeping an eye out for artists in the state.

McCrummen said the museum tries to bring in national exhibitions Mississippians otherwise might not get a chance to see and to exhibit regional work. The "Painting in the South" exhibition accomplishes both purposes.

"There's no question that the South has led the nation in literature in the 20th century," he said. "But we also have an abundance of really fine artists."

Local Writers Receive Awards

RALEIGH — Two Greenville writers and one from Martin County were prize winners in the 20th annual Tar Heel Writers Roundtable held at the Sheraton Crabtree Motor Inn in Raleigh Aug. 10-11.

Patsy Baker O'Leary of Greenville, who teaches creative writing at Pitt Community College, took first place in the short story category for her story, "A Voice Heard in Ramah." She received a silver engraved bowl.

Also in the short story competition, Greenville resident Reese Helms took second place for his story "With All Due Thanks to the Cat For Nabbing My Favorite Bird." Helms, winner last year of first place in the short story competition, is self-employed and currently is managing editor of the forthcoming publication, Pitt-Greenville Magazine.

Martin County writer and columnist from the Farm Life community, Gail Roberson, took third place in juvenile fiction for a story, "Secret of the Indian Cave."

A number of Pitt County and area residents attended the annual roundtable, directed by Bernadette Hoyle.

A Touching Tale

Something Out There. By Nadine Gordimer. Viking. 203 Pages. $15.95.

"Something Out There," Nadine Gordimer's eighth collection of short fiction, consists of nine stories, a novelette and superb writing.

Most of the pieces are set in the South Africa Gordimer has claimed as her own, and the novelette, after which the book is titled, more than illustrates her right to that claim.

It tells two parallel, yet interconnected, stories. One deals with an unseen animal that is roving about suburban Johannesburg, killing pets and frightening residents. It is being hunted by the police.

The other deals with a band of terrorists — two black men and a white woman and man. They also move about unseen, and they also are being hunted by the police.

As the animal steps up its destructive rampage, it unwittingly draws closer to being found and killed. And so it is with the terrorists. By electing to break away, they became outlaws and as such may be hunted and destroyed.

Among the shorter stories, the standouts include, "A City of the Dead, A City of the Living," "Crimes of Conscience," and "Terminal."

The first tells of a black woman whose home is being used against her will as a hideout for a black man wanted by the police. Angered by the man's unwanted presence, the woman betrays him to the white police.

The second concerns a police agent sent to spy on a woman suspected of criminal activity but in a wry twist the agent falls in love with the woman he has been ordered to incriminate.

The last tells the story of a woman afflicted with cancer, her desire to kill herself, and her husband's love for her. A touching tale, beautifully told.

The Powers Of Darkness

The Witches of Eastwick. By John Updike. New York, Knopf Publishers. 307 pages, $15.95.

John Updike may be America's best prose writer. For three decades he has been turning out carefully crafted stories about contemporary life and its moral, psychological and emotional problems. From such early works as "The Poorhouse Fair," "Rabbit, Run," and "The Centaur" to "A Month of Sundays" and "Rabbit Is Rich," Updike has built a reputation among both readers and writers as not only a master stylist but also an entertaining storyteller.

"The Witches of Eastwick," his most recent novel, provides another example of his skill.

"The Witches of Eastwick" is a story of the familiar and the fantastic: America during the Vietnam war and witchcraft in a small New England town. Updike combines the two elements so well that he manages to convince his readers that there is no barrier between the natural and the supernatural. Like others who have written successfully about the powers of darkness, Updike recognizes that good and evil are not separate, abstract qualities; rather they are intertwined and very much part of the everyday and the familiar.

At first, the town of Eastwick, R.I., seems quite ordinary. Jane, Sukie, and Alexandra are divorced, raise their children, and work to support themselves, but Jane flies through the air, Sukie turns milk into cream, and Alexandra creates thunderstorms. They also meet once a week to practice their black arts. Theirs is a fairly benign coven: they make magic to amuse themselves or to provide small advantages to friends or small problems to enemies.

Then into their triangle steps Darryl Van Horne, a mysterious stranger, who initiates them into more serious activities.

Updike tells his stories without broomsticks or brimstone. These are modern witches, worried about gaining weight, drinking too much, and the price of groceries. And Van Horne is a curiously contemporry devil; his main interests are his hot tub and his gourmet dinners. Like many of Updike's novels, "The Witches of Eastwick" captures the private trials of middle class people. Here, those struggling just happen to have supernatural powers.

Magic is more than a metaphor in the novel. The portents and potions are real, as are the sufferings of all who come into contact with the witches. Updike's novel is not a thriller in the manner of Steven King; it has no scenes of bloody disemberment, screaming terror. However, in its matter-of-factness, "The Witches of Eastwick" is convincing in demonstrating how ordinary and universal the powers of darkness have become.

FROM SHEPPARD MEMORIAL LIBRARY

By WILLIE MAE GIBBS

Among the new books at the library are two guidebooks for the layman that offer interesting and helpful ideas regarding change.

Tom Rush and Randy Read are co-authors of the book "I Want To Change, But I Don't Know How." For those who question whether their lives are going where they want, this comprehensive handbook for mastering change and guide to personal growth might be the answer. Discovering your own path is a tough job. Rush and Read provide the maps and tools necessary to help one in finding the way that's right for him. The authors do not suggest how to "adapt," "adjust," or simply "put up with" but how to get your own way ... ethically, with love, with self respect! Their book is referred to as a "pushy" book to help one actually do it ... all without the jargon or "psychobabble."

This guide to change and how to master it is recommended for lay people who want to change — before, after, during or instead of therapy — as well as for therapists and counselors working with change.

In "The Right to Feel Bad," Lesley Hazleton presents an entirely new way of looking at depression — the normal depression we all feel at times — and teaches us to regard it as a necessary process rather than a problem. To Americans who have come to believe that it is almost antisocial to admit unhappiness, Hazleton shows that depression is both essential and healing. It is a natural way of mourning for people, ideas, and ideals lost, and is as much a part of human vitality as happiness. Those who read Lesley Hazleton's powerful and persuasive book may continue feeling depressed every now and then, but they will have discovered ways to tolerate it and make peace with it.

BIG BUSINESS

BOSTON (AP) — Razors and blades are big business in this country.

David Preston, president of Gillette's Safety Razor Division, says, "wet, or blade shaving, is the most popular way to shave among the male population in the United States. This translates into millions of dollars for razor and blade manufacturers.

Preston says that in 1983, 2 billion blades and 15.4 million razors were sold in the United States, constituting about $673 million in retail sales.

Singer Ruth Brown To Perform

Recording artist Ruth Brown, known as "The Queen Mother of Rhythm and Blues," will perform in Greenville on Thursday, Friday and Saturday at the King and Queen North.

A legend in her time who retired some years ago to raise two sons, Miss Brown several years ago made a return to the world of music. She was featured in recent performances at the Vine Street Cafe in Los Angeles in June.

By coincidence, Greenville resident Dan Clifford was in California at the time and attended the Brown concert with a former school pal, actor Scott Wilson. On his return to Greenville, he contacted Miss Brown in New York City and she agreed to appear in a concert series in Greenville. Miss Brown, a native of Portsmouth, Va., noted that Greenville was not distant from her Virginia "home place."

She is scheduled to arrive at the airport in Kinston on Tuesday afternoon and to visit in the area prior to the three-day concert which begins Thursday.

Among gold records of past years she recorded on Atlantic Records during the 50s and 60s were "Teardrops From My Eyes," "Lucky Lips," and "Mama He Treats Your Daughter Mean." In movies she has appeared with Carrie Fisher and Chevy Chase in "Under the Rainbow." In the field of television, she played the role of Betty in the 1981 summer series, "Checking In" and in another sitcom production, "Hello, Larry?" In 1982 she performed in a Broadway show, "Blues In The Night" with Leslie Uggams.

For the Greenville performances, Miss Brown will be accompanied by New York comedian Norma Miller. Familiar Group To Welcome Students Back

By JANE WELBORN
Reflector Staff Writer

If you are walking across mall on the East Carolina University campus Monday night around 7 p.m. and hear live music, you will be listening to the rock sounds of Brice Street. The Greensboro-based band will perform free-of-charge at an outdoor concert.

"We're looking forward to the free concert because ECU is on the top of the list of our favorite places to play," said Jack Atchison, drummer and songwriter for the group, in a recent telephone interview.

The band, which is celebrating its 10th anniversary this year, was named for the Greensboro address where they practiced. The group still retains three of its four original members, Atchison, Doug Dennis and Steve Coble; Mike Rowe joined the band last year.

Brice Street has a large following in Virginia and the Carolinas. Through the years, the band has played in Greenville many times.

"We formed the band in June of 1974 and we first played in Greenville in August of that year," Atchison said. "The first night we played at the old Attic was a fair night because we had never played there before. But the next night, the place was packed; we have had good crowds in Greenville ever since.

"I don't know how many times we have played in Greenville over the years. It must have been 100 times," he added.

The drummer noted that the students in Greenville are a major reason they enjoy playing here.

"We have an ongoing love affair with the students as they come and go," he said.

"The young people at school are probably more accepting and open to hearing originial material, plus they are more aware of a variety of music on the music scene today," Atchison said. "They are not real narrow in their tastes, which appeals to our band."

The band once was known as the fellows who did the Beach Boys and Beatles medleys. Now they perform some of the old standbys, as well as music ranging from the Police to Bruce Springsteen to Chuck Berry, with some Prince thrown in.

"We as a band listen to a lot of different music," Atchison said. "When we hear something that we think will fit the band, we do it, not just because the song is popular. We could do things that would make the band more popular in a copy band vein, like heavy metal, but we want to do something that sets us apart. We pick tunes that you rarely hear any other band play."

"We have some new original material as well as some new copy stuff we have worked on," Achison said.

At this time, Brice Street is working on demonstration tapes in the hopes of getting a new record deal. Dolphin Records, a subsidiary of Record Bar, released two Brice Street albums before dissolving. The band is now affiliated with CMC Productions in Raleigh. (CMC also handles such regional favorites as Glassmoon, Control Group and O-Boy).

Brice Street also will play at The Attic Tuesday night. (Two other bands, O-Boy and The Theatrics, will also be playing in Greenville at The Attic on Monday. All performances are in conjunction with the fall semester opening at ECU).

Filmmaking Back In Astoria

By MICK BOROUGHS
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Before the film industry moved to California it was in New York, during an era when films had no voice. Then, "Hollywood" was called "Astoria," and the filmmaking was done at the old Paramount Pictures lot with stars like Claudette Colbert, Rudolph Valentino and the Marx Brothers.

Today, filmmaking has returned to Astoria, in the Queens borough of New York City. And that old movie lot is a multimillion-dollar studio center called Kaufman-Astoria, which will soon add videotaping and music recording to its activities.

"We're not out to take and destroy California. They've got hundreds of sound stages. But New York is the undisputed cultural capital of the world," said Harold Rand, the studio's marketing director.

Kaufman-Astoria has expanded to 13 acres from the original five-acre lot. Two additional stages were built last year next to the studio's mammoth 26,000-square-foot sound stage where "The Wiz" and "All That Jazz" were filmed.

Rand said a New York site for a major Hollywood-type studio is a big attraction to European directors wanting to make films on a U.S. location.

"European directors want to make films in the United States, and New York is some 3,000 miles closer to Europe than California is," he said.

Rand also noted that because New York is full of actors, directors and writers, it should be fertile ground for a major film studio.

But New York studio executives weren't always as optimistic as Rand, he recalls.

The art of filmmaking in New York suffered two setbacks, he said. The industry moved west to California where land was "dirt cheap" compared to New York City. In addition, filmmakers fled a serious patent dispute with the Edison Co., which held the patent-control of the film cameras.

The studio, owned by Paramount, continued making silent movies and later talkies, but the film industry in California prevailed. By 1942 the U.S. Army turned the New York studio into the Army Pictorial Center used for making military training films.

In 1970, the Army left and by the mid-1970s the studio was to be razed, said Rand. Instead it was reopened with the help of film unions, New York City officials and others forming the non-profit Astoria Studios Motion Picture and Television Foundation.

In 1982 the studios, then back in use, began an expansion project which continues today. George S. Kaufman, a New York real estate developer, gathered investors to make the newly renamed Kaufman-Astoria studios into a "communication center," collecting film, cable, recording and advertising businesses into one community.

"We feel this studio is a plan of vision. We're all here doing the same thing — trying to communicate," said Harvey Herman, of Herman and Rosner Enterprises, a New York advertising firm.

Herman said his agency moved to the studio complex in June after the rent of their Park Avenue office doubled. Herman and Rosner also had another interest in the studios' success — they handle Kaufman-Astoria's advertising account.

Besides private fundraising, the studios must depend on New York municipal aid. The city owns the 13-acre property and city officials are also eager for Kaufman-Astoria to do well.

"The studio is a big plus for New York City," said Benjamin Gruberg, assistant director of the New York City Motion Picture Liaison Office.

When the studio makes a profit the city will get 35 percent. In turn, the Museum of Moving Images, which will be developed on the studio site and opened in 1986, will get half of the city's 35 percent, said Gruberg.

With 66 movies filmed in New York in 1983, half of which were filmed entirely on location, said Gruberg, Kaufman-Astoria studios may recapture some of what Hollywood once took away.

BIG PROJECT

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. (AP) — The nation's largest commercial construction project currently underway is being built in a community of only 4,000 people.

The $1 billion R.J. Reynolds cigarette factory in Tobaccoville, N.C., will have 26 acres of covered floor space — 2 million square feet — when completed in 1986. That's equal to eight football fields. ——

Two Plays Given By Youth Group

Two children's plays were presented last Wednesday as the August fare of the monthly Best Lunch Theater Ever sponsored by the Playwrights' Fund of North Carolina. The plays were presented at the Greenville Museum of Art, 802 S. Evans St.

The duo, "Bubble Gum Time Warp" and "The Secret of the Magic Doll," were both written by young writers who attended the recently held Youth Creative Writing Forum.

"Bubble Gum" was authored by Ginny Baldreee, Reggie Barrow, Ellen Cotter, Joy Flynn and Laura Hough with assistance from Christine Rusch. It tells the story of three adventurous children warped backward in time to the 15th century to protect a princess.

Authors of "Doll" are Anna Shappley and Jennifer Colardo, also with assistance from Mrs. Rusch. The play's story shows what happens when a little girl's dream, a doll of her own, comes true. This play was a joint effort by Greenville city schools and the playwrights' fund. The director, Mary Ruth Spagnolo, said "The Secret of the Magic Doll" was written as part of an independent study project for the Triad Enrichment Program.

Cast members for the two plays were: Dianne Dorney, Kelly Eakes, Lydia Coulter, Carol Ambert, Susan Ambert, Jonathan Dodge, Carrie Shappley, Anna Shappley, Jennifer Colardo, Bonnie Seigler, Sally Steigler, Leah Westenberger, and Heather Merril.

Following the performance at the museum, Dr. Charles Sullivan and Ann Sullivan led a discussion of the plays and performances. The disucssion session for the Best Lunch Theater Ever series is sponsored by the N. C. Humanities Committee.

Resurrecting An Old Movie

By BOB THOMAS
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Giorgio Moroder, Oscar winner for his "Midnight Express" score and his song "Flashdance ... What a Feeling," has spent two years of his life and almost $2 million resurrecting a 58-year-old silent movie, "Metropolis."

Is he crazy? Not really. Moroder has already recovered most of his costs — "and I haven't sold the cassette rights yet."

Refitting a classic movie for today's audiences seems a curious enterprise for a music master whose achievements include platinum albums for Donna Summer (whom he discovered), hits for Blondie and Irene Cara, and scores for films from "Scarface" to "The Neverending Story."

Film historians cherish "Metropolis" as a visionary masterpiece by Fritz Lang, the gifted, difficult German with a talent for the macrabre ("M," "Dr. Mabuse"). During 1925-26 he made "Metropolis" in Germany with a cast of 36,000. The world in 2026 was presented as a division between the pleasure-loving rulers and the nameless, faceless masses who slaved at huge machines.

"I've always loved movies," Moroder said at his recording studio near Universal Studio. "Fifteen-20 years ago when I was a musician in Italy and Germany, I had plenty of time to see movies when I wasn't playing."

One of the films that impressed him was "Metropolis." Years later Moroder saw Francis Ford Coppola's presentation of the Abel Gance epic "Napoleon" and began thinking about a more modern subject to give the same kind of treatment. He remembered "Metropolis."

"Then I became obsessed with trying to reconstruct the film, which had orginally been three hours," said the composer. "Luckily I was able to find a complete list of inter-titles (explanatory titles used in silent films). I was able to find some scenes in the Australian Library of Film in Canberra, others at the Museum of Modern Art in New York. A collector in San Diego had a 9.5-mm copy, and John Hampton, who ran the Silent Movie Theater in Los Angeles, had a version."

After Moroder assembled his jigsaw puzzle, he applied his expertise to the score. Recording entirely in digital sound, he composed a futuristic score befitting the subject matter. Among the performers: Pat Benetar, Freddie Mercury of Queen, Bonnie Tyler, Billy Squier and Adam Ant.

"I offered 'Metropolis' to the major studios," said Moroder. "They all liked it, but they're not interested in anything that won't make them $20 million. It will be released by a new company, Cinecom, which can give it the special handling it needs. We'll open gradually, six cities at first, then 12, then 16."

Moroder grew up in the Dolomites of northern Italy listening to Radio Luxembourg play his heroes — Buddy Holly, Little Richard, Elvis Presley and the Beatles.

Historic Events Set For Kinston

KINSTON — The Caswell-Neuse Historic Site near Kinston combines two periods in North Carolina history. The memorial to Gov. Richard Caswell recalls the years of the 18th century surrounding the Revolutionary War, while the remains of the gunboat CSS Neuse bring to life the Civil War.

Thus, a decision was made to feature sights, sounds and soldiers of both eras as part of the annual Living History Program and Tactical Demonstration scheduled for Saturday and Sunday.

On both days from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m., the program will include encampments by groups representing the Tories and Patriots from the Revolutinary period and Confederates and Federals from the Civil War. Members of the units will be fully costumed and will explain to visitors the practices and lifestyles of the soldiers they represent.

A highlight of the program will be a display on the front lawn of the site comparing Revolutionary and Civil War drill tactics. All events are open to the public without charge. Refreshments will be on sale.

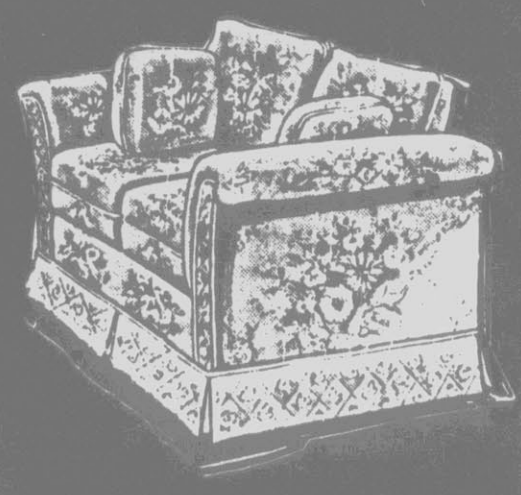

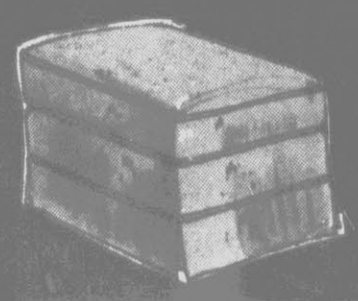

The Caswell-Neuse State Historic Site, just west on Kinston on U.S. 70 business, is administered by the State Historic Sites Section in the Division of Archives and History of the N. C. Department of Cultural Resources. For details on activities and regular hours of the site, call 522-2091.

BRAIN TRUST

NEW YORK (AP) — The country with the highest number of scientists and engineers in proportion to population is Switzerland, where 40 out of every 1,000 Swiss citizens are engaged in those occupations, according to a United Nations survey.

The Soviet Union virtually equalled Switzerland with 39.6 per 1,000, the survey said.

Japan was next highest with 35.3. The United States ranked near the bottom of the list with only 11 engineers and scientists per 1,000 of its citizens. ——— from the Carroll Righter Institute

GENERAL TENDENCIES: A nervousness and restlessness can cause you to make errors in judgment, but if you will pause and calm yourself, it will not only help others but give you a more intelligent stance.

ARIES (Mar. 21 to Apr. 19) A day when you could jump from one thing to another if you do not schedule your activities intelligently. Be careful of fast talk.

TAURUS (Apr. 20 to May 20) Don't voice any financial lack to others otherwise you could lose out where it counts the most.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21) Early plan your day's activities wisely so that you avoid any possible disappointments.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to Jul. 21) You could be obsessed by some picayune worry that should be forgotten immediately. Take time for meditation.

LEO (Jul. 22 to Aug. 21) If a friend should break a promise today, don't let it throw you for a loop, but get busy at important activities.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22) Some outside tension can cause delays but this is only temporary, so don't get discouraged. Rest up tonight.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22) You may be confused over some situation that has arisen, or will arise, so clarify your thoughts quickly.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21) You are not sure how to handle a condiiton related to one you love, so study it carefully and then you can decide.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21) You are tempted to lambast a partner who is not keeping promises, but study the situation and discuss the matter calmly.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20) You find very little seems to go right at work and that fellow workers are non-cooperative. Try to get things better organized.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19) There is much work ahead of you that is important, so forget that amusement you had in mind and get at it.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to Mar. 20) You or a close tie could be confused today and cause trouble at home, but use right tactics and all will be well.

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY ... he or she will be very fast mentally and will need to be taught to think before making comments and to finish one project before jumping into another one and thereby avoid getting into much trouble. Sports are a definite must here.

Trial Starts

ANKARA, Turkey (AP) — Fifty-six prominent Turks have gone on trial on charges they violated martial law by petitioning the government to curb torture, lift restrictions on the press and halt other human rights abuses, the Anatolia news agency reports.

The demands were in a petition signed by 1,256 writers, journalists, actors, doctors and professors. It was submitted to President Kenan Evren May 15.

New Singapore, Olympic Stamp Issues

By SYD KRONISH
AP Newsfeatures

Singapore, the island of many cultures and part of the British Commonwealth, is proud of its many historic buildings which have been labeled offically as "national monuments." The beauty and grandeur of four such monuments were illustrated on a set of stamps issued in 1978. This year, Singapore has released another set of four stamps depicting buildings of architectural and artistic interest which have been admired by all who visit its shores.

The 10-cent stamp shows the "House of Tan Yeok Nee." Built in 1885, it has an architectural style common in southern China at that time. Originally the home of a merchant, it later became a school for girls. But since 1940 it has been the headquarters for the Salvation Army.

The 35-cent stamp features the Thong Chai Building. In 1867 it was a hospital but now is famous as an arts and crafts center. The 50 cents depicts the Telok Ayer Market which has received acclaim in recent years as a food center. The $1 pictures the Nagore Durgha, a shrine built by Southern Indian Muslims in 1828. It still is a shrine with an unusual architectural style combining the best of the east and west.

This new set of Singapore stamps is available at your local dealer.

For those who think the country is going to the dogs, look for the upcoming block of four American Dog stamps. The first day of issuance is Sept. 7 to coincide with the annual convention of the American Kennel Club which is celebrating its 100th birthday this year.

The stamps will be printed in semi-jumbo size. Watch for details and first day information coming up in this column.

The U.S. Postal Service is offering a special philatelic souvenir folder commemorating the 1984 Louisiana World Exposition and its theme: "The World of Rivers — Fresh Water as a Source of Life." The souvenir folder will remain on sale until Nov. 11, the closing date of the Louisiana Fair.

Affixed to the folder is a block of four 20-cent Louisiana World Exposition commemorative stamps bearing the May 11 first day of issue cancellation. Included also are full-color reproductions of 10 previously-issued U.S. stamps which feature water resources in their designs.

The new folder is being sold for $1.25 at all philatelic centers and from the U.S. Philatelic Sales Division, Washington, D.C. 20265-9997. As usual, a $5 minimum purchase requirement and a minimum 50-cent postage and handling fee should accompany your mail orders.

———

Seven different Disney Olympic stamps highlight a collection of 207 world-wide Olympic issues available through the International Stamp Collectors Society, PO Box 854, Van Nuys, CA 91408. The price is $14.95 for the collection. Also available via the Society is a set of four gold foil airmail Olympic coin stamps from the United Arab Emirates at $4.95 per set.

———

Even neophyte collectors know that commemorative stamps issued by the U.S. Postal Service honor important personages or anniversaries and are "one-time shots." When they are sold out, they never are re-issued. No living person may be portrayed on a commemorative, or any other U.S. stamp. The rule is that the individual must be dead for at least 10 years — except for former Presidents. These stamps, however, are called "memorials" rather than commemoratives.

If you have an idea for a U.S. commemorative stamp, send your suggestion to the Citizen's Stamp Advisory Committee. The committee includes stamp collectors, business people, artists, historians and other philatelic leaders. Thousands of ideas are received each year but only a few are even considered.

SHOOTING DATA

BARTLESVILLE, Okla. (AP) — Energy companies that sell natural gas to industry have to read their own meters to keep track of the flow of gas.

Unlike most residential sites, industrial locations hamper data collection, because of muddy or flooded roads, washed-out creeks, locked gates and fences, and other barriers that inhibit regular meter readings.

To solve this industrial problem, companies are installing a system from Applied Automation that uses a computer at the site to collect data. By aiming an infrared "gun" from a truck or helicopter at the computer, for instance, a beam of light transfers the data from the computer to the gun. ———

Yesterday's Cryptoquip — DOG CATCHER COULDN'T COLLAR FIDO, THE FLEEING HOUND.

Today's Cryptoquip clue: K equals N

The Cryptoquip is a simple substitution cipher in which each letter used stands for another. If you think that X equals O, it will equal O throughout the puzzle. Single letters, short words, and words using an apostrophe can give you clues to locating vowels. Solution is accomplished by trial and error.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠KJ95 ♡A74 ◇83 ♣AJ93
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♣	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
2 ♠	Pass	3 ◇	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—Partner is fishing for game, and you should be happy to cooperate. You have already told him you have a minimum opening bid, but what a minimum! Excellent support for partner's suit and most of your points are prime. Failure to accept partner's invitation would be a crime. Bid four spades.

Q.2—East-West vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠95 ♡AKQ9873 ◇K62 ♣7
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
Pass	Pass	4 ♡	4 ♠
Dble	Pass	?

What action do you take?
A.—What's the matter—don't you trust partner? You have told him what you have and he has decided that your side can defeat four spades. To pull the double to five hearts would be a vote of no confidence in him.

Q.3—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠QJ95 ♡KQJ98 ◇7 ♣AQ6
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♡	Pass	2 ♡	Pass

What action do you take?
A.—If partner has the right cards, you could easily have a game. However, it might not be in hearts! Bid two spades. Partner now has the option of raising to three spades with four-card support (four spades might be your right spot), signing off in three hearts with no help in spades, or accepting your invitation by jumping to four hearts.

Q.4—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠K86 ♡K32 ◇A65 ♣K1053
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♣	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
1 NT	Pass	2 ♣	Pass

What action do you take?
A.—We are inclined to think that many players would take this opportunity to show their spade support, but why? You have a minimum opening bid and a flat hand. Partner has not promised more than four spades, and surely has at least four clubs. You are in your best spot—pass.

Q.5—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠876 ♡AQ53 ◇J9 ♣AJ92
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ◇	Pass	1 ♡	Pass
3 NT	Pass	?

What action do you take?
A.—Partner has shown a very good balanced hand of 20 or 21 HCP. Your action should depend on whether he is a conservative or aggressive bidder. If he is conservative, we would opt for a leap to six no trump. If he is aggressive, and invitational bid of four no trump should suffice.

Q.6—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠KQ86 ♡A84 ◇Q95 ♣875
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South
1 ♡	2 ♣	?

What action do you take?
A.—East's overcall has put you in awkward position—it is precisely to handle this kind of hand that Alvin Roth invented the Negative Double. If you don't use that convention, we suggest you make the slight underbid of two hearts. The fact you have a point more than the minimum for that action is offset by your lack of a ruffing value. Game is doubtful unless partner can act again.

Unease Over Honduran Banana Port Future

By MONTE HAYES
Associated Press Writer

LA CEIBA, Honduras (AP) — Far into the night, trains rumble through the center of town bringing carloads of bananas to cargo ships tied up at the long wooden pier.

It is a scene that has been repeated day and night since the turn of the century when the U.S. giant Standard Fruit Co. made La Ceiba its headquarters in Honduras. As the banana business flourished, La Ceiba grew prosperous; it became the biggest banana port in Central America and far outstripped other towns and cities in Honduras.

But there is growing unease about the future in La Ceiba now.

Standard Fruit is slashing its operations in Honduras because of rising costs and an uncertain banana market, laying off workers by the hundreds.

"The people of La Ceiba are afraid. The company let 1,000 workers go last year," said Margie Dip, a Honduran who is Standard Fruit's public relations director. "They always told us we should not depend on them — when they stopped making money, they would have to go."

The company still has 6,300 full-time and part-time employees. The next biggest private employer in La Ceiba is a printing firm that has fewer than 100 workers.

Most of the company's legacy remains — housing projects, roads, bridges, schools, a hospital, higher wages, a way of life heavily influenced by North America. But for La Ceiba's 80,000 people, the company became a crutch.

"We were the envy of Central America — this small piece of territory," said Mario Gonzalez, president of the workers' union at Standard Fruit. "Two years ago you would not have found a poorly dressed person on the streets of La Ceiba.

"If Standard Fruit leaves here, this will turn into a graveyard."

Few things have had as great an effect on Central America as the banana companies, and U.S. involvement in this turbulent region is heavily rooted in the role the companies have played here.

Standard Fruit's huge competitor, United Brands, is 110 miles west of here at La Lima.

With their economic clout, the banana companies became openly involved in the politics of this impoverished nation and won 99-year concessions to hundreds of thousands of acres.

As recently as 1975, United Brands was accused of paying a Honduran official $1.25 million to win a tax break.

The companies' impact extends beyond economics and is reflected in a lifestyle heavily influenced by American pop culture. Although Spanish is the national language, many people in the coastal cities speak English.

"Blue jeans, T-shirts with different sayings, even American slang — it doesn't take long for it to get here," said Mrs. Dip, the public relations director. "Almost every week people are traveling to the States and bringing back new things." Her son, like many young people from La Ceiba, attends a university in the United States.

Until 1954, banana industry workers were poorly paid. In that year they went on strike for 67 days, winning a large wage increase from the companies and laying the groundwork for the strong labor movement in Honduras today.

"When the companies came here, they exploited the Hondurans," Mrs. Dip said. "But that's changed. They're not saints, but they're good to us now."

Standard Fruit gave the La Ceiba area a much higher standard of living than cities in the mountainous south, including Tegucigalpa, the capital. But at the same time the town came to rely on the company for everything from jobs to medical care.

"Standard Fruit has been a doubled-edged sword for La Ceiba," said Ricardo Irias, who took early retirement from the company to operate Maxim's, considered the best restaurant in town. "When La Ceiba needed something like a bridge, people would say why bother with the central government — we'll get it better and faster from Standard Fruit.

"The thinking of the government was why worry about the people in La Ceiba. Standard Fruit is taking care of them."

In addition to a railroad, Standard Fruit built canals, bridges and roads to its plantations. It ran a fleet of steamships that provided weekly passenger service between La Ceiba and New Orleans, giving people on the coast greater access to the United States than to their own capital. The ships also carried mail and freight to ports along the coast until the early 1950s.

The company at one time supplied La Ceiba with telephone service, electricity and drinking water. It built churches and schools both here and in nearby communities. It donated land for a public stadium and the city airport. Under the latest union contract, it is providing the site, complete with lights, water and sewage lines, for a housing project for workers and $2 million in financing.

The company's English-language primary and high schools are staffed by American teachers and are open to all children in the community.

Standard Fruit also built the Vicente D'Antoni Hospital, one of the country's best, and donated it to the town. It still subsidizes the hospital to the tune of $1.5 million a year, but has reduced medical personnel and other employees from 800 to 500 to cut costs.

The high cost of social services and a wage scale three to four times higher than what workers in other industries receive have made it increasingly difficult in recent years for Standard Fruit's Honduran division to turn a profit, according to company officials.

"Our average worker earns between $15 and $17 a day compared to a basic salary of $3 to $4 a day in other agricultural operations," said Ridoniel Zuniga, financial manager for Standard Fruit.

"We have to find a way to reduce production costs to compete with our other divisions in Latin America and with other banana companies."

Community leaders have formed an association to seek new investment to offset the job losses that are expected to continue as Standard Fruit tightens its belt.

"Since the existence of La Ceiba, people here have depended on Standard Fruit for the jobs the town lives off of. But we can't always be dependent on one company," said Mayor Roberto Padilla.

Added restaurant owner Irias: "La Ceiba is at the stage where you become 21 and your daddy tells you that you have to make it on your own."

Arkansas Museum Is Exception To Big Art Spending

By CONNOISSEUR
A Hearst Magazine

Too many American museums today are shelling out megabucks for mini-values in art, says a leading American art authority.

The exception is a jewel of a museum in Little Rock, Ark., according to Thomas Hoving in his column in the August issue of Connoisseur.

"Every time I pick up a press release from an American art museum these days, I seem to read that another million dollar 'masterpiece' has been acquired, with much hullabaloo," he writes.

Hoving, editor of Connoisseur and former director of New York's Metropolitan Museum of Art, calls these works "Millionart" and describes them as anything from an American landscape painting to an Oriental bibelot.

He traces the trend in "millionart" back to 1961, when the Metropolitan Museum bought Rembrant's "Aristotle Contemplating the Bust of Homer" for a mind-boggling price of $2.3 million. He says that set off a chain reaction of superspending.

"Today, shelling out big bucks for works of art — sometimes second rate ones — has become a fashionable activity, reported eagerly by newspapers, television, and gossip columnists," Hoving says.

"Nowadays, if a curator does not present his acquisitions committee with something that costs more than a million rocks at least once a year, he or she is a 'wimp.'

"Recently, one member of an eminent museum purchasing committee was asked to vote for something priced at only $25,000 and blurted out nervously, 'If it's so cheap, how do I know it's any good?'"

One exception to the trend toward blockbuster spending, Hoving found, is the Arkansas Arts Center in Little Rock, which specializes in drawings.

He discovered the museum while going through press releases and catalogues announcing megabuck transactions.

"Then I came across a catalogue of 20th century American drawings from the Arkansas Art Center, leafed through, and bang! One terrific drawing after another, by Bellows, Glackens, Luks, Walt Kuhn, Wyeth, Larry Rivers, Georgia O'Keeffe, Alfred Leslie, William Bailey, Claes Oldenburg, Ivan Albright, Lee Bonteceu — 82 pieces of splendid quality," Hoving says.

He traveled to Little Rock to interview Townsend Wolfe, the center's executive director and the man responsible for assembling its stunning collection.

Wolfe told Hoving the center's board of trustees decided in 1962 to use its modest budget to buy only works on paper.

Since 1971, when the program shifted into high gear, the center has gathered more than 500 European and American drawings, from Rembrandt to contemporary American artists.

Wolfe explained to Hoving why the center acquired only drawings:

"A drawing for us is a major work of art; we feel that it possesses all the qualities of a painting or sculpture. It can provide us, the viewers with spiritual and intellectual experiences as profound as any other that man can have in the world of art. A drawing not only shows the search but can often be the promised land as well."

He summed up his strategy of collecting in one word: "Quality."

Wolfe told Hoving the group of more than 100 American masterworks cost the museum from $150 to a top price of $20,000, with most of the drawings in the $3,000-$4,000 category.

Which proves, Hoving says, "that if you're dedicated and if you have the 'eye,' you can still find a host of masterpieces well outside the lofty markets of 'millionart.'"

Fears In Hong Kong

By KHARK SINGH
Associated Press Writer

HONG KONG (AP) — Of all the world's great cities, Hong Kong may be the finest example of rags-to-riches success, but folks here fear that their good days are numbered.

Their anxiety stems from a date in the future, July 1, 1997.

That is when the New Territories, a 365-square-mile area of Hong Kong, reverts to mainland China under terms of a 99-year lease that Britain wrestled from the weak and doddering Qing Dynasty court during the Chinese-British Opium War.

Two other earlier treaties ceded to Britain "in perpetuity" the remaining 45 square miles of Hong Kong Island (in 1842) and portions of Kowloon Peninsula (1860), which adjoins the New Territories.

Peking does not recognize either of the treaties, contending they were coerced from the Qing Dynasty by British gunboat diplomacy to satisfy merchants intent on buying silks and tea from China and in return selling opium smuggled in from the poppy fields of India.

Even so, it is generally agreed, that Hong Kong, dismembered from the New Territories, could not survive for long on its own. It would lose 90 percent of its land area, together with the colony's international airport, key housing, commercial and industrial centers and a vital water reservoir.

No one expects that either Britain or China would want such a bleak scenario. But Hong Kong's residents are apprehensive, fearful that life under the Chinese communist system would bring drastic changes, impose restrictions that would stifle the colony's free market, and lead to capital flight that would bring Hong Kong to its knees.

Britain and China have been negotiating in Peking since 1982 on the turnover of Hong Kong's sovereignty. Both sides say they want to preserve the stability and prosperity of this city-state and its existing way of life and socio-economic system.

But skepticism runs through Hong Kong's population.

Commentator-columnist Margaret Ng notes that the negotiations are restricted to delegates from Britain and China without the participation of a Hong Kong representative.

"People here are not confident that the Chinese government or the British prime minister will put the interest of Hong Kong people first," she recently wrote. "We feel strongly that, when it comes to the crunch, we are not really important to them."

Traditionally, Hong Kong has been a haven for refugees from the mainland, who mostly trekked in between 1945 and 1949 as Mao Tse-tung's Red Army captured more and more of the mainland before their final victory over Chiang Kai-Shek's Nationalist forces.

By 1950, Hong Kong's population had quadrupled from 600,000 to 2.4 million. Today, hundreds still try to sneak in every year, swimming through shark-infested waters or wedged aboard fishing boats, ignoring a policy that requires the Hong Kong government to send them back if caught.

Of Hong Kong's population, now 5.5 million, it is estimated that two-thirds are refugees from China or their descendants. They have helped build Hong Kong into a dazzling antithesis of the mainland, a vibrant metropolis of capitalism that is the world's third largest banking center, after New York and London.

In the process, some have become fabulously rich. Bankers here estimate more than 1,500 Hong Kong residents have a net worth of $100 million each, most of them Chinese who make up 98 percent of the colony's population.

Those who can afford it, like garment-factory owner Wilson Cheung, 65, have already made contingency plans to leave Hong Kong. Others have sent their families to the United States, Canada or other countries to establish residency which would facilitate their own emigration later.

Cheung arrived here from China in 1952 almost penniless after experiencing what he described as an unpleasant life under the communists. China may have changed since then, he acknowledges, but he is taking no chances.

"Businessmen, landlords and many others were all labeled as oppressors and exploitors then," he said. "The sufferings they endured were beyond description."

Many businessmen now prefer to rent rather than buy factory space while others have postponed expansion plans until they see what develops from the Chinese-British negotiations.

Others, less affluent and with little hope of resettling abroad, have taken other steps to ensure their future. Some buy gold and others, like office clerk Lo Chi-yuan, 30, exchange their Hong Kong dollars for U.S. dollars and squirrel them away.

Lo says he fears the Hong Kong dollar will become worthless once the Chinese take over.

Although there are no statistics on the number of families that have emigrated, the Hong Kong Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals believes it has a barometer. In May 1983, it says, it took in 1,464

Japan Jammed

By DAVID LAMMERS
Associated Press Writer

TOKYO (AP) — Concern is mounting here that the distribution of Japan's population, like a boat with too many passengers on one side, is causing social problems because too many people live in the same place.

Kiichi Miyazawa, a former foreign minister who now is contending for Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone's job, has called for increased government spending on public facilities, particularly homes big enough to permit grandparents to live with their younger families.

"Despite a high savings rate, good technology, and a will of the people to work, we are left with an underdeveloped society where many people are forced to live in rabbit hutches," Miyazawa was quoted as saying in a recent interview with the monthly magazine Bungei Shunju. "More than enough energy is directed toward making things for export."

Japan is about the same size as California, and mountains take up about 71 percent of the land area. If the population was distributed evenly over the inhabitable land, Japan would have a density of about 1,452 people per square kilometer, compared with 386 for West Germany, 357 for the United Kingdom, and just 55 for the United States, according to government estimates. A square kilometer is about four-tenths of a square mile.

The problem is that about 60 percent of Japan's population of 119 million lives in urban areas with a density of 4,000 people per square kilometer or more.

At a recent seminar with international urbanologists, Japanese government officials said they fear the ratio will go up to 70 percent by the year 2000 as companies and businesses continue to build close to the mass markets of Tokyo, Osaka and Nagoya.

Those metropolitan areas grew quickly after World War II with an influx from the countryside. Now, the three cities — known as the "Big Three" and traversed by a three-hour ride on the "bullet train" — are home to nearly half of Japan's 34,750,000 households.

While these bustling cities are relatively clean and crime-free, the crowded conditions dampen the demand for cars and other space-hogging consumer goods. Japan's economy — growing on the strength of accelerating exports — has not enjoyed a similar rise in domestic spending.

With little room left in the major cities for a family to buy land, Japan's housing industry has been in decline for the past three years. Only rental housing construction has recovered recently.

The average small plot of land — 1,700 square feet — needed to build a small house in a Tokyo suburb, more than an hour from the central city, costs the equivalent of $95,000, the National Land Agency estimated in May. The same price in Washington D.C. will get about six times as much land 30 minutes from downtown.

House and land together cost an average of $155,000 in Tokyo, now beyond the reach of all but the upper middle class. Outside the Big Three cities, similar-size homes are 45 percent cheaper, the agency said.

Recent surveys show that half of the Japanese people are dissatisfied with their housing. But Kazuo Hayakawa, a former Ministry of Construction official who helped found a citizens group called the Japan Housing Council, said too may Japanese simply accept tiny apartments and exorbitant land prices with an attitude that it can't be helped.

"Too many people live in real ratholes," he added. "Their living space is so small it is impossible to live a normal family life."

He said apartments crammed full with furniture leave little room for children to learn to crawl and husbands with no place to relax at home often prefer to stay at work or to drink with co-workers.

The Ministry of International Trade and Industry has long encouraged firms to locate new plants in less populated areas, and has sought to develop a dozen "technopolis" centers outside the Big Three region, but with little success.

In Kagoshima Prefecture, a rural area on Japan's southern main island of Kyushu, state officials convinced the Kyoto-based ceramics firm of Kyocera to build a research center there, citing as one advantage the relatively cheap price of a house and land in Kagoshima City.

"It is just not convenient to live in Tokyo," Muneo Mori, a Kagoshima official, said in an interview. He added that the Kyocera researchers at first worried that Kagoshima's schools would be inferior to Tokyo's schools and that wives wondered if rural homemakers would be "too nosy."

Muneo said the researchers now say they relish the space and friendlier atmosphere of the medium-sized city. He added that he encourages bachelors to "not work so hard" and "take notice of our local girls."

Failing that, he said, Tokyo is just an hour and 40 minutes away by airplane.

Tribe Fears Loss Of Land

By RUBEN G. ALABASTRO
Associated Press Writer

BUGNAY, Philippines (AP) — Four years ago it was a government dam project that Bugnay's 800 Igorot tribal people feared would wipe out their ancestral homes. Today it is the war between the Philippine army and communist guerrillas in the nearby hills.

Igorot leaders say their fight against the dam still isn't over; their involvement in the guerrilla war has just begun.

Eight bullet holes in the door of the home where Macli-ing Dulag lived have been left untouched by his family members — a reminder of the night in 1980 when men they claim were army soldiers shot and killed him.

He was the pangat, or leader, of the village of 100 straw huts and had led Igorot opposition to the government's plan to build a dam on the Chico River, amid the spectacular 2,000-year-old rice terraces of northern Luzon.

Mario Yag-ao, the 64-year-old successor to Mcali-ing Dulag as the pangat, and other village leaders contend the army has brought the war to the area not only to combat the guerrillas but also to force the Igorots to leave so the dam can be built.

"If we go, that is when we will die," Yag-ao told visitors whom he welcomed to his house with a potful of rice and a bowl of coffee.

The military says it suspects the village in the Cordilleras Mountains of being a "Red Zone," or an area controlled by the Communist New People's Army (NPA).

Since June, when the government 185 miles to the south in Manila began an air-and-ground offensive against the rebels, an army detachment has kept watch on Bugnay from a hill overlooking it.

The Cordilleras are the ancestral home of 700,000 Igorots, the Philippines' colorful mountain people whose love for tradition is as fierce as their love for the land.

The area is rich in timber and contains gold. It also is a major tourist attraction because of the rice terraces rising up the mountainside in the mists.

Until a few decades ago, headhunters roamed the area. But the custom of taking enemy heads, rooted in pagan belief in fertility rites, died as Christianity advanced into the mountains.

Yag-ao pointed to a mountain beyond his ricefield where government planes dropped bombs on suspected NPA camps.

"Even if they bomb our people, we will stay," he said.

The military says the aim is to force the rebels out of their hideouts, then trap them as they flee. But villagers say they suspect the government of playing a double game of trying to get the guerrillas while breaking Igorot resistance to the dam project.

Economists say the dam would produce the power that industries need to develop the region. Tribesmen say the dam would flood their villages, drive them from their homes, and destroy ancestral burial grounds.

The military charges that the NPA is encouraging the Igorots to resist the dam.

Yag-ao said the military had called in Igorot elders and told them to stop supporting the NPA, or they might also be "affected by bombs and machine guns."

The elders responded that the military shouldn't blame villagers for the fighting, Yag-ao added.

"We told them, 'The NPAs come from Manila and the army also comes from Manila. You came here to fight. That's why the villagers are involved. Take your war out of our villages. It's your war, not ours.'"

Nobody has left the villages.

"If we leave," said Yag-ao, "we will be dispersed and we will be no more."

Events Poster

RALEIGH — To inform northeastern North Carolina residents of the many area quadricentennial events planned for the remainder of 1984 and for 1985, the Historic Albemarle Tour Inc. has prepared a calendar-poster listing those events. The calendar was designed and produced with funds provided by a state northeastern Historic Places Office grant.

The 24- by 30-inch calendar features a silhouette of the Elizabeth II, the wooden sailing ship built in Manteo as a reproduction of the sailing vessels used to bring English colonists to America in the 1580s.

The photograph was taken by Drew C. Wilson, a writer and photographer for The Coastland Times, a newspaper in Manteo. A committee of Historic Albemarle Tour, Inc. site managers headed by Gerald Butler, manager of Historic Bath, compiled the information and designed the calendar-poster.

It is being distributed throughout the 16-county area that makes up the Historic Albemarle Region of North Carolina. Any business or agency wishing to display the poster should contact Susan Hemingway, Historic Albemarle Tour, Inc., P.O. Box 759, Edenton, N.C., 27932, phone 482-7325.

. . . Lowry

Some critics believe the novel's strong reputation and some readers' fervent admiration stem as much from Lowry's troubled and alcoholic lifestyle as from "Under the Volcano" itself. Lowry died in 1957.

"I just feel that 'Under the Volcano' is a very great novel. I don't buy that it's a cult novel," said the 56-year-old Spencer, who learned about the book after he came to Cuernavaca 18 years ago.

He started campaigning to preserve the house after it was sold to an owner who pressured tenants to leave so it could be converted into a more valuable business property.

Allies were found at the Morelos State Film Commission, which cooperated with Huston on the filming of "Under the Volcano" last year.

Juan Jose Perez Padilla, the commission's head, earlier this year obtained a "stop work" court order on renovation of the house. Although the order's practical effect is minimal, the owner since has put the house up for sale for an unspecified price.

"I don't have any hope we can raise enough money to make a dent," said Meg Donahey, an elderly American resident of Mexico who works as a publicist for the commission. But, she added, the group hopes that at least starting a purchase fund would get Gov. Lauro Ortega's attention.

A report from architects involved in a state government program to beautify Cuernavaca recommended purchasing the house and grounds for conversion to a cultural center, but the current economic crisis in Mexico makes such purchases hard to justify.

The Cuernavaca that Lowry wrote about in his blend of fact and fiction was a quiet town frequented by expatriates.

Cuernavaca remains a resort, but the growth of industry and its proximity to giant Mexico City 53 miles to the northeast have made it a city in its own right where the foreign community is not as prominent as it once was.

Spencer, whose frizzy gray hair and wire-rimmed spectacles hardly give him the air of a civic activist, said he has never tried any similar campaign in the past.

"I'm absolutely green to this. I just floundered into it, and continue to do so," he said. "It seemed that no one else was prepared to pitch in at the time."

. . . Hong Kong

abandoned pets; this past May there were 2,104. The society has linked the increase to families who have left Hong Kong because of the 1997 jitters.

Prominent bankers and businessmen say such fears are unfounded because China has an enormous stake in the continued prosperity of Hong Kong. Such optimistic statements from bankers and businessmen should be obvious, say residents fearful of the communist takeover, because they already do business with China and would not want to encourage any pessimism about Hong Kong's future.

Hong Kong is one of China's largest commercial partners, providing the mainland government with $8 billion a year — about 40 percent of its foreign exchange. Also, they say, China holds more than $2 billion worth of investments in the territory, ranging from department stores and shipping companies to banks and real estate.

Through dummy corporations, Peking also gains valuable commercial expertise and even trades indirectly with Taiwan, seat of the rival Nationalist Chinese government.

Although the Hang Seng Index, a sensitive gauge of Hong Kong's stock values, plunged 20 percent when the Chinese-British negotiations began, it has since steadied but failed to fully recover. The government also reports total trade for the first six months of this year reached 205.3 billion Hong Kong dollars ($26.32 billion), an increase of 30 percent from a year ago.

The United States, Hong Kong's largest trading partner, accounted for 40 percent of the market, and also roughly one-quarter of the 119 new foreign companies established here since January, according to government statistics. U.S. officials say figures on the number of American firms which may have left Hong Kong because of 1997 fears are not available but they consider them negligible.

While Hong Kong ponders its future, local entrepreneurs have found ways to capitalize on the situation.

The 1997 Restaurant has opened for business and Rice Paddy Dolls, patterned after the Cabbage Patch Dolls, are being sold, complete with forged passports and fake immigration papers.

Christopher Columbus noted in his journal on Nov. 15, 1492, the use of tobacco among natives of the New world. It was history's first recorded use of tobacco.

Dame Judith Whips New Soap Into Lather

By Tim Boxer

Dame Judith Anderson says she will continue to watch her favorite soap opera, ABC's "General Hospital," even though she's now starring in NBC's new daytime drama, "Santa Barbara." The two serials are pitted opposite each other in the crucial soapstakes.

"I have been watching 'General Hospital' for 20 years easily," says the actress, one of the greats of the theater world.

But don't call "Santa Barbara" a soap. The grande dame hates that word. "You wash with soap — you watch serials," she declared.

"Santa Barbara" focuses on the lives and loves of four families in that California beach community, which is also Dame Judith's real-life residence. The 86-year-old actress portrays Minx Lockridge, the eccentric, naughty matriarch of the Lockridge family.

Minx rules her roost with a firm hand — and a whip. Whose idea was it to give her a whip in the show? "Mine," she says. "It's better than carrying a cane."

"She'll only hit the writers from time to time," says co-producer Bridget Dobson.

•••

Scott Baio will play a male au pair in "Charles in Charge," which debuts this fall on CBS. He's hired by a single mother to take care of her three children.

The show's producer, Al Burton, promises that the show will feature a family "who lives their lives in a moral way. There are no drugs or teenage suicide."

"Charles in Charge" is slated to air at 8 p.m. (ET) on Wednesdays, opposite ABC's "The Fall Guy." Baio says he is not concerned about the competition. "We are a happy show," he says, "while they are running cars through the wall."

Baio, who never took acting classes, says he learned the comedy craft from his mentor, Henry Winkler on "Happy Days." "That was really good training," he says of the long-running sitcom where he played Chachi.

He has no regrets about leaving "Happy Days" for its short-lived spinoff "Joanie Loves Chachi." "It just wasn't meant to be," he says. "But then again Chachi was short for Charles — maybe that's a good omen for the new show."

ABC News correspondents Peter Jennings (l.) and David Brinkley will share anchor duties for the network's coverage of the Republican National Convention from the Dallas Convention Center, airing Monday through Thursday, Aug. 20-23.

Michele Will Tell

By Michele Marks

DEAR MICHELE: I know that Vivien Leigh, who starred in "Gone With the Wind," is dead, but can you tell me when she died? What other films did she star in? Was she married? Did she have any children? — Teresa Mize

To Teresa: Born Vivien Mary Hartley, Nov. 5, 1913, in Darjeeling, India, the frail actress was plagued by tuberculosis throughout her life. In 1932, Miss Leigh married attorney Herbert Leigh Holman,from whom she took her stage name. Their daughter, Suzanne, was born in 1933. While filming "Fire Over England" (1937) with Lawrence Olivier, a sizzling romance blossomed setting Hollywood on its ear. Following divorces from their respective spouses, the two lovers married in 1940.

Miss Leigh's big break came in 1939, when she won the role of Scarlett O'Hara in "Gone With the Wind." A riveting performance earned her her first Oscar. Starring roles in "Waterloo Bridge," "That Hamilton Woman," "Caesar and Cleopatra," and "Anna Karenina" followed. In 1951, she won her second Oscar and a New York Critics Award as best actress for her role as Blanche du Bois in "A Streetcar Named Desire." Leigh divorced Olivier in 1960 after a long period of mental instability, and never remarried, although there were romances with actors John Merivale and Peter Finch. "Ship of Fools," released in 1965, was her last film role. The legendary screen beauty died in 1967.

DEAR MICHELE: I'm interested in singer Billy Joel. In "Goodnight Saigon," he sings about the Vietnam War. Did Joel serve in Vietnam? If so, what branch of the service? — Jerry Hall

To Jerry: Joel may be a musical genius, but as far as the military goes, he's a no-show. A self-described draft dodger, he avoided induction by declaring himself his mother's sole means of support.

Joel later admitted this was a lie, and that in those days he wasn't making any money. "Goodnight Saigon" is his haunting tribute to the men who served and the story they had to tell.

TV Chatter

By Polly Vonetes

Vacationing in Hawaii has convinced me of two things. One, if I were a star I would choose the beautiful island of Maui for my home away from home. And two, Tom Selleck is rapidly overtaking the Hawaiian pineapple in popularity. In every shop window there is a life-size poster of the handsome "Magnum, P.I." hero sporting his famous flowered shirt — with an exact replica displayed nearby whichtourists can purchase for about $30.

The new ABC series based in Honolulu, "Hawaiian Heat," has begun production. Co-stars Robert Ginty and Jeff McCracken have situated themselves comfortably on the island and are looking forward to a long run.

Vacationing Jeanne Cooper, star of the daytime series, "The Young and Restless," gave us quite a scare when she was rushed to the Maui General Hospital after drinking coffee laced with a cleaning solution.

Miss Cooper had been dining in a local restaurant around midnight and had ordered coffee. Apparently the coffee urn contained some cleaning solution. Miss Cooper unknowingly drank some of the coffee — and then complained of stomach pains. She was rushed to the hospital and released two hours later. Feeling shaky and looking a little pale, she nevertheless was a lucky lady.

Golf's World Series

By Willie Schatz

They're playing the World Series this week. Not just once, but twice.

How's that again? You say the World Series isn't until October? Well, you're right — if you're talking baseball. But if you like watching that other little white ball, you're in for a treat. Today, NBC presents the World Championship of Women's Golf (on two-hour tape delay) from Shaker Heights Country Club near Cleveland. And next weekend, CBS tees up the World Series of Golf, live from Firestone Country Club in Akron.

In addition to the tournament names, these events have another similarity to baseball. Both events are designed to showcase the top echelon having at each other. True, it's not the best-four-of-seven games, but the best-four-of-four days is pretty close.

Having been a distant second all year in money, network exposure and publicity, nothing will change for the women merely because it's their world championship. The best NBC can muster is a two-hour tape delay, and even that is not produced by the network. It buys the event from Trans World International, which for once steps out of its usual role as purveyor of trash sports to the masses.

The women deserve better. Their prize money of $200,000 is far below the men's kitty of $700,000, although the women's winner takes home $65,000, largest first prize of the year. The field is limited to a distinguished dozen, while the men allow 53 players to enter their sanctum sanctorum.

"This is among the Top 10 tournaments in world exposure," contends tournament director Hans Kramer of International Management Group, the tournament's packager. "We go live to several countries, including Canada and Japan. Our third round coverage last year, which was on at 6 a.m. Sunday in Japan, more than doubled the ratings of the U.S. Open. This is the most viable women's tournament in the world."

Except in the United States. Here at home the final-round ratings have gone straight down, from an opening 4.5 rating and 14 share in 1981 to a 3.5 and 10 last year. Conversely, the men have traveled the opposite path, shooting from a final-round low of 4.4 and 13 in 1980 to a hefty 6.3 and 18 three years later.

So there you have it. The numbers never lie. That's why CBS commits a full production crew to the World Series. And that's why NBC saves its money and doesn't buy the real thing.

Sunday, Aug. 19

NFL Pre-Season, NBC. The Dolphins and Raiders, hardly the best of friends, meet in the L.A. Coliseum. Charlie Jones and Bob Griese, the beneficiary of a new two-year contract, bring you the action.

They may be helped by a new SkyCam, which supposedly was ready to shoot two months ago. If it works, you'll see football from a totally different perspective.

PGA Championship Final Round, ABC. Live coverage of the final round of the last leg of the Grand Slam. It's the forgotten member of the quartet, but the winner will long remember what he did here. May viewers feel the same way about ABC's coverage.

Fri., Aug. 24

NFL Pre-Season, NBC. This time it's the Jets, who dislike their hosts even more than do the Dolphins, visiting the Raiders. Marv Albert and Merlin Olsen will get in their pre-season practice behind the microphone.

Coffman's MENS WEAR

and

Khaki

We are not sure about the validity of the thought that KHAKI was a World War II invention, but we do know that immediately afterwards there was a sudden appearance of the fabric in every young man's Wardrobe in this country. The love affair continues to persist. For Fall 1984 you can expect to see KHAKI pants as a basic for young men on campus or for any man's weekend Wardrobe. And, I suppose, we all know that there is no friend like that special pair of KHAKI pants that have been washed until they are paper thin...and who cares about the wrinkles? At all of our Coffman's stores we are going to be offering, during August, a special value to the true KHAKI customer.

"Hot. Steamy hot." That's how Billy Dee Williams describes his and Diahann Carroll's relationship on ABC's Dynasty this fall. "We're really great together; we'll make a strong impact on the show," he says. But Williams, who reportedly will be paid $40,000 for each of his seven appearances, doesn't know how he's going to be written out when the time comes. "The production people keep the story line all mystery and intrigue," he says. A word of advice, Mr. Williams: Stay away from Alexis.

Let's face it: Some Hollywood marriages last just about as long as the 6 o'clock news. (Was it Minute Rice that was thrown at the wedding of Michelle Phillips and Dennis Hopper, who held it together for eight excruciating days?) But Tinseltown is not without its share of long-running marriages. Witness Ray Milland and his wife, Mal, who will have been knotted 52 years next month; Danny Thomas and his wife, Rose Marie, who can boast 48 years of wedded bliss. And how about Robert and Dorothy Mitchum (44), Charlton and Lydia Heston (40), John and Julie Forsythe (41), Jimmy and Gloria Stewart (35), Kirk and Anne Douglas (30), Steve Allen and Jayne Meadows (30), Paul Newman and Joanne Woodward (26), and Robert and Lola Redford (26)? And let's not forget those two ex-residents of Hollywood Ron and Nancy Reagan, who will celebrate their 33rd anniversary next March.

□

Hunk-ering down has made fistfuls of money for former Mr. Universe Arnold Schwarzenegger. There are plans for three more Conan sequels. He's just made a record for CBS called Arnold Schwarzenegger's Total Body Workout, and has written an encyclopedia of bodybuilding. He also has made some smart investments in California. "Sure I'm a millionaire," says the 36-year-old hunk. "But I don't like to talk about money; it looks like I'm flaunting it. What's important is that I'll never have to take a role I don't want. I'm lucky that way." How about lucky in love? It would seem so. His companion of six years is Maria Shriver, daughter of Sargent Shriver, niece of Teddy Kennedy, and a correspondent for The CBS Morning News. "But," says Arnold, "she doesn't live with me, and we have no marriage plans." On the subject of politics, Shriver and the conservative Republican muscleman politely "agree to disagree."

□

It's time again to take note of Loni Anderson, who makes her bow as a jazz bassist on the new NBC series Partners in Crime, which also stars Lynda Carter. But there seems to be a bit of, uh, treble on the set. Seems Loni suggested to NBC Chairman Grant Tinker that she might go back to being a brunette for the series. Perish the thought! Tinker's reaction, reported by Loni, was: "Nobody wants to see you with dark hair — it would be just like NBC to spend a lot of money to get Loni Anderson and then have her be a brunette." Mr. Tinker sure can get to the root of a problem.

□

Dom De Luise, who stars with Burt Reynolds in Cannonball Run II, is chummy with Dinah's and Sally's and Loni's ex off the screen, too. Well, that explains the source of this privileged glimpse into Burt's private life: "He has a king-size bed and mirrored walls and ceiling," says Dom. "Next to the bed there's a trampoline. On the other side, there's a 20-foot fish tank, with about 400 fish in it. And the amazing thing about these fish is that they all swim sideways. Why? They don't want to miss out on any of the action." Okay, who's telling fish stories?

□

I.B. of Odessa, Texas, writes to ask Constance Towers, the star of the CBS soap Capitol and wife of John Gavin, the U.S. ambassador to Mexico, how her life shapes her role on the show. "I can bring a realistic sensibility to political functions like receptions," Towers explains. "Once during a sequence involving a fictional ambassador, there was a discussion about the wording of an invitation that would be shown on screen, and I was not sure if the phrasing was correct. So I called Mexico, got John away from his affairs of state, and he put us straight."

ALWAYS IN THE GROOVE

At 54, Dick Clark is still on top of pop music, and a hotter property than ever.

By Tom Nolan

He strides into the room, and there's that shock of recognition that always comes at meeting someone you feel you've "known" most of your life. The face — remarkably youthful at 54 — is the face you first saw live from Philadelphia back in 1957. And there's that unmistakable, soothing, modulated voice, still pleasing and familiar after 27 years' hearing — even if today the timbre is slightly nasal. Dick Clark has a cold.

"Sorry to keep you waiting, but now, today, I gotta do some radio commercials upstairs that'll play for a year," he explains as we settle down for an interview in a high-beamed meeting room inside the sprawling Dick Clark Productions complex across the street from the NBC studios in Burbank, Calif. "For a year, people all over the country will think I have a cold! And I'm trying to say, 'Guys, I can't do this Thursday, I'm gonna do it *Fri*day.' Well we don't have Friday; Friday I'm booked to do Bloopers. Saturday I do something else, Sunday I'm doing something else. . . ."

That's another thing you notice right away about Dick Clark: Every day is carefully scheduled to accommodate the record-breaking workloads of two separate careers. All America is familiar with the seemingly ubiquitous on-the-air Dick Clark: host of the perennial teen dance program American Bandstand, a Saturday morning staple on ABC; in charge weekday mornings of CBS's game show The $25,000 Pyramid; and — to complete the triad and make him "the first personality to simultaneously host series on all three networks" — gleeful co-anchor with Ed McMahon of NBC's TV's Bloopers & Practical Jokes. For radio, there are two weekly syndicated music programs. In addition to all this, Clark runs a very active production company that keeps networks and syndicators supplied all year long with a constant flow of specials, films and series such as The American Music Awards, Dick Clark's New Year's Rockin' Eve and The Golden Globe Awards.

So there are two Dick Clarks: the performer — a perpetual innocent who asks the same naive questions of musical chart-toppers year after year, and who supervises the playing of game shows with an enthusiasm nearly equal to the players' own — and the producer, a canny judge of public taste and distributors' wants.

"He's a communicator," says an admiring Ed McMahon, "which is the key to television. You have to talk to the audience, almost on a one-on-one basis. And he has that quality." Another secret of Clark's enduring success, McMahon ventures, is his ability to stay current: "The way he presents the artists now on American Bandstand, you can see that he's just right up to the minute."

Dick Clark has been in a groove since his boisterous childhood in Mt. Vernon, N.Y. "Yeah, I was always ambitious," he says. "In those days we didn't have electric iceboxes; I'd pick ice up off the street and sell it to the neighbor lady for a penny, because she thought it was cute. Opened a restaurant in my parents' living room. I was just a crazy kid, into adventures."

Clark's father was in the cosmetics business for 25 years, but when his teenage son expressed a desire to get into broadcasting, the senior Clark went to work as a salesman for a radio station in Utica, N.Y. He did it, says Clark, "to see if someday maybe he couldn't give me a hand." Clark's first job, as a radio station mail-room boy, came about through his father, and before long he was announcing on the air. By his senior year at Syracuse University, Dick Clark was a professional disc jockey. Soon he moved into television, and by 1956, he was hosting a Philadelphia dance show called Bandstand. The program became a network show the following year, and Dick Clark has been a genial national presence ever since.

Staying musically current is "terrific," Clark says. "It helps keep ya young!"

During that time, Clark has married three times and fathered two sons and a daughter. What was it like, I ask him, for his children to have grown up with a father so popular with the rest of the country's teenagers?

"I don't think they were terribly impressed by the way I made my living," he answers agreeably. "I tried to explain to them this was a most extraordinary way to make a living — not very stable, and not as glamorous as it might appear to be. They had a pretty good handle on it."

Did their own input as teenagers help keep him current in any way? He mulls it over. "Ummm, not really. I once knew a guy in the record business who played all his potential singles for his daughter, and the ones she picked, he'd release. When the daughter grew up, he lost his touch! So it's not a very good idea, professionally. . . ."

So how has he managed to stay musically current all these years? "There's no trick to it," he says. "It's very easy: by tuning yourself into what young people are interested in. It's terrific! It helps keep ya young."

What about the other side of the coin, then — did his own kids think their dad was extremely "with it"?

"I think they realized I knew a lot about the age group they were in. It's very difficult to pull something over the eyes of a father who's involved in being around kids. I guess they must figure you know what's going on."

All three children have "turned out great," he says. "They're all smart; they're all attractive. My youngest [Cindy, 19] is still in school, and she's got straight A's. My middle one [Duane, 21] graduated [from college] at 19, magna cum laude, Phi Beta Kappa. The oldest one [Richard, 27] graduated with honors." That son works at Clark's company as a television producer, while his brother works for a different Los Angeles film producer.

Another family member plays a crucial role in Clark's life: his wife since 1977, the former Kari Wigton, who serves as his personal assistant, oversees the details of his schedule and projects, and fills many of the functions of the manager and agent he does not have. An outgoing blonde, Kari says she and her husband are very different. "I'm always in a good mood, always happy and very even," she says when I speak with her later. "And he's very moody, up and down all the time — very excited if something fun is happening; very down if something goes wrong, like bad ratings on a show he's given a lot to."

Where she is socially at ease, Kari says, Dick is the opposite. "I've said to him that he's more comfortable with a television camera on him than he is at a party. He's very relaxed if he has a microphone. But making small talk is not one of the things he likes to do."

Another difference: "He doesn't like to be bothered with little things, but he likes his life very orderly. When we move or whatever, he has to have everything in order the minute we're settled; things can't be left in boxes. He needs his little nest, and it has to be totally organized, but he doesn't have the patience to deal with it. I think maybe that's where I complement him, because I take care of that.

"As far as our likes and dislikes," Kari adds, "we're 100 percent similar." One thing they both enjoy is cooking at their house on the beach in Malibu, Calif. "Dining is a big part of our lives," she says. "Whatever time we stop working, we always come home and have a nice dinner — a candlelit meal with wine in the dining room." When they can steal time from the schedule, the Clarks travel for fun, usually in brief Thursday-to-Tuesday mini-vacations.

At such times, Kari says, the Dick Clark to whom work is both job and hobby is able to set business completely aside. "He's just as good at relaxing as he is at working. He loves to go off to some island, do nothing, let his mind come to a screeching halt, and not think about anything except where we're going to have dinner that night."

Ask Kari Clark the secret of Dick's success, and her answer is unhesitating: "Smart. He's very smart, and he never says die. If someone says, 'Nope, it can't be done,' he says, 'Wait a minute, I know how it can be done!' Also, he's a real good salesman, very smooth, but only if he believes in something. And he's likable. I think the better you know him, the more impressed you are with him."

There appear to be certain things, however, that the mostly accommodating Clark does not want to tell about. His musical taste is one. "What I like to listen to won't take you anywhere," he assures me during a conversation in the trophy room at Dick Clark Productions. "That's like, 'Who hasn't been on Bandstand?' No, you don't want to do that."

But he must have some preferences.

"Oh, privately I do, sure. Never in public, because — to what purpose? What good does it do for me to say, 'I don't care for this particular artist,' if he or she or they are very, very popular?"

When I tell him that the interview is over, Clark claps his hands and leaps to his feet. "Okay! Let me take you down the hall and show you where some of the 900 crazy things that go on around here take place."

We walk down a corridor and into Clark's office — a big airy space filled with shelves and cases and counters holding all manner of souvenirs and memorabilia. With the offhand pride of a bright kid showing off his room, Clark points out his most prized possessions: "A brick from the Cavern Club, where the Beatles first performed.... A photograph of the original Beatles, signed by my friend Pete Best, who was the drummer before Ringo Starr ....The logo piece of the original Bandstand podium from Philadelphia...."

Earlier, Clark had marveled over the number of performers who'd played Bandstand over the years — some 9,000. "Boom! That's a lotta folks. I kick myself because I never kept an autograph book." Here, as he gives a tour past these show-biz mementos, you can't doubt the sincerity in that remark. Underneath it all, after all these years, Dick Clark is a fan. FW

MODERN LIVING

FROZEN FANTASY: TV DINNERS GO GOURMET

Lisa Powers

By Kathleen E. Hacker

Thirty years ago in their father's downtown Omaha test kitchen, Gilbert and Clark Swanson set about preparing a meal that would change the course of American life.

The brothers Swanson placed the pre-cooked food in a compartmented aluminum tray, covered it with foil and — ah, the masterstroke — froze it. The "TV dinner" was born.

Those who fretted about the future of the nuclear family pointed to this movable feast as just another fraying fiber in the country's moral fabric. Those who cared about the national palate were equally distressed about the TV dinner. Gastronomically speaking, a gustatory delight it wasn't. Yet it caught on. For a mere dollar, give or take a few cents, Mrs. America could finally be free of her infernal stove and a sink of dirty dishes. And she thought it was high time.

Nearly three decades of jokes, aspersions and hearty sales went by. Then, ever so slowly, the frozen dinner began to fall on lean times. By the late '70s, revenues were dipping precipitously as consumers, conscious of weight and health and more attuned to fine cuisine, lost their appetite for the old standbys. Even R. Gordon McGovern, president of Campbell Soup Co., which purchased the Swanson empire in 1955, dismissed his firm's own product line as "junk food."

"What do women want?" Sigmund Freud once asked. The crisis-stricken moguls of the frozen food business came up with an answer: gourmet-quality convenience dinners and entrees.

Today, shoppers can select from such exotica as teriyaki chicken garnished with pea pods, or seafood Newburg in cream sherry wine sauce. Gone are the aluminum trays of yore; the meals are packaged on plates that often are microwavable. The brand names themselves have a certain upper-crust ring, ranging from Dinner Classics and Classic Lite (both from Armour Food Company) to Le Menu (a Campbell introduction) and Stouffer's Lean Cuisine — the current best seller. Prices are relatively premium as well, generally ranging between $2 and $4 and topping $5 for some seafood concoctions.

"You can talk to working women and they will tell you they don't want to come home and spend all evening on the preparation of food," says William

Heitz, executive vice president and general manager of Armour's frozen food division. "The same is true of singles who just want to sit down and eat something they'll enjoy, without having to face leftovers the next day. They've shown us they want premium quality and convenience and that they're willing to pay for it."

The dinners and entrees are targeted at an audience primarily made up of middle-aged career women from households where income exceeds $25,000 and, to a lesser extent, singles and "empty nesters." Due to their combined demand, premium lines already account for nearly half the revenue of the $2 billion convenience-dinner industry and are being credited with spurring a 5 to 7 percent annual growth rate.

Although Stouffer's Lean Cuisine, aimed at calorie-counters, got a head start on the competition, the rest of the pack is moving up fast. Since Dinner Classics debuted in late 1979, sales have increased significantly each year, and the line has grown to 16 items. At Campbell, officials in charge of Le Menu initially pegged it as a $100 million business, but less than a year after its introduction in 1983, they altered their figures upward to $200 million. Weight Watchers reformulated its products in 1981 — "flat and tasteless," president Gerald Herrick declared of the old recipes — and case volume zoomed 80 percent.

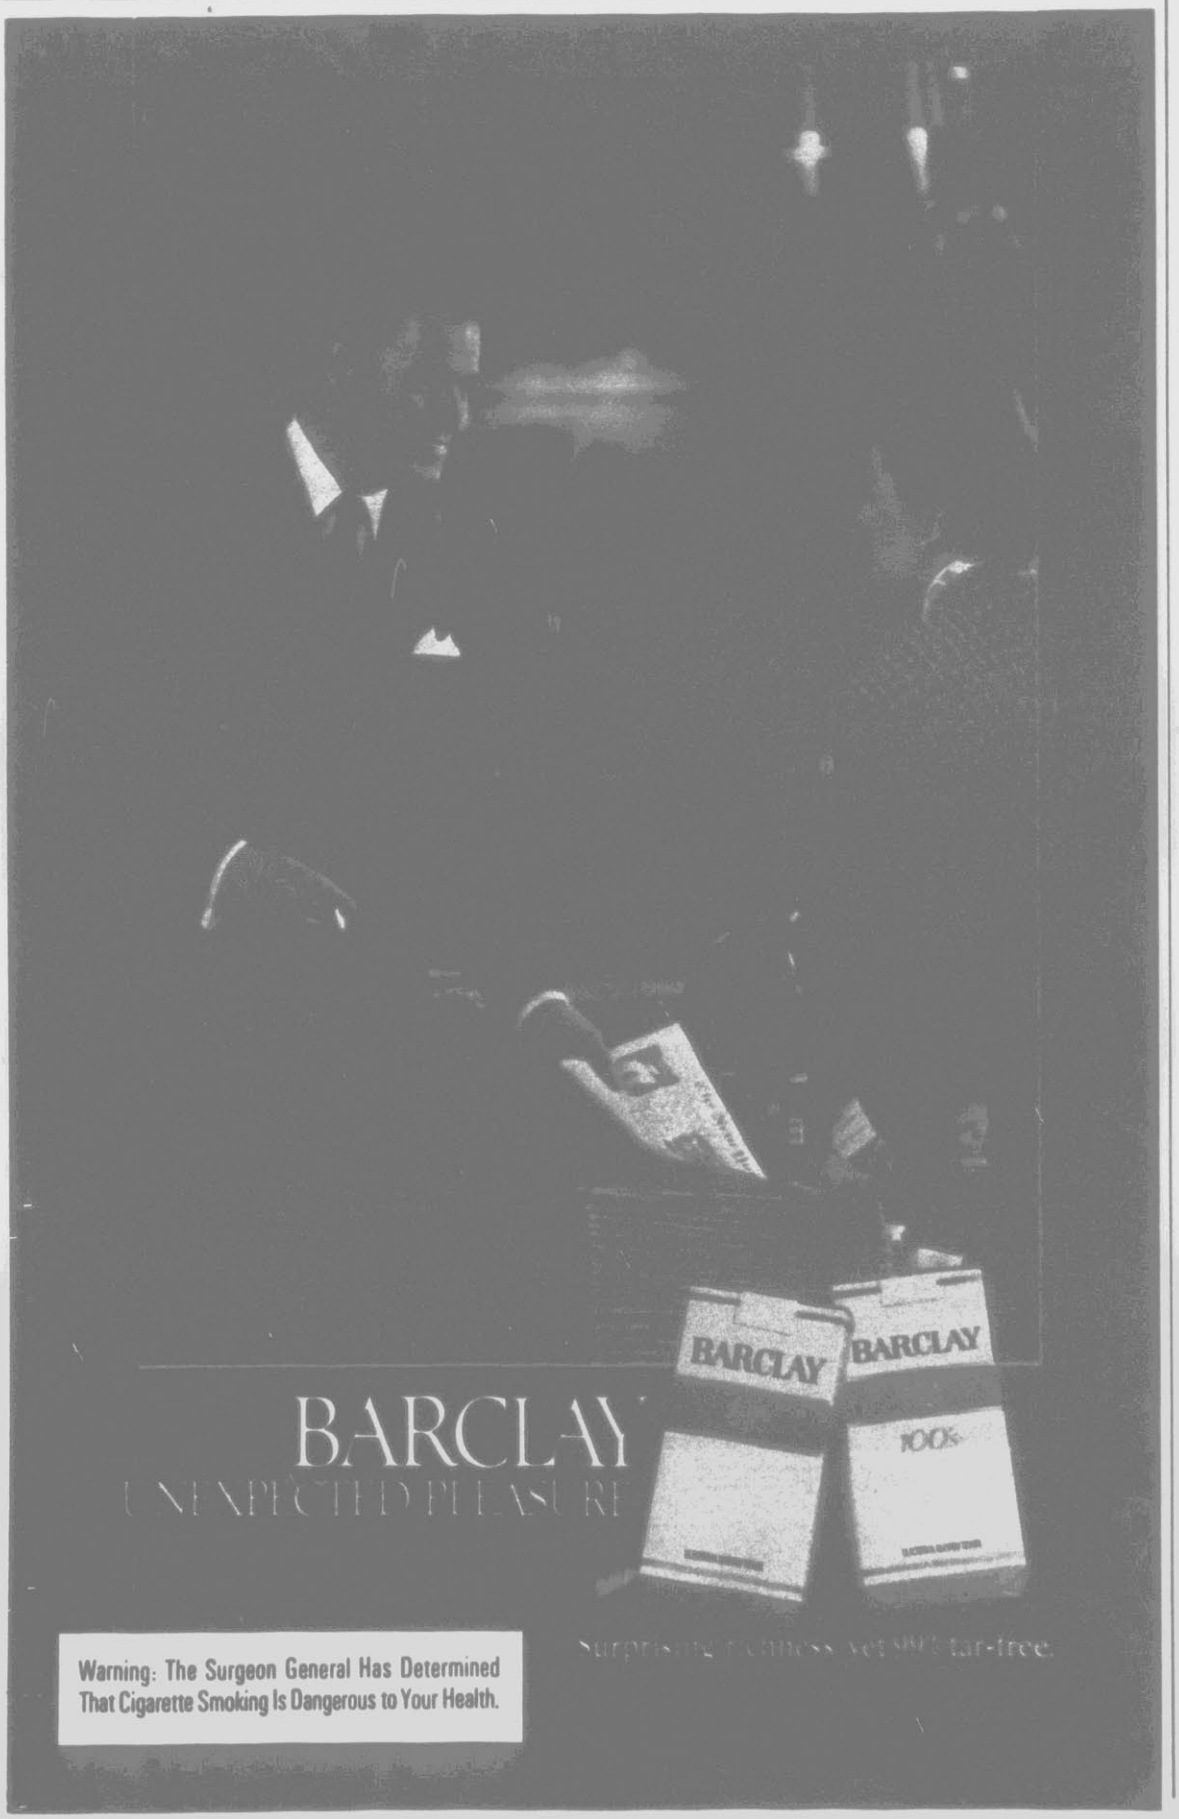

Even the badly ailing Swanson dinner line has been beefed up. Campbell poured $8 million into a revitalization program called Project Fix, in which everything from soggy french fries to pea-and-carrot combinations to bland sauces to anachronistic packaging got the heave-ho. "Believe it or not, some of our gravies actually use wine," notes Swanson marketing manager Dan Lynn. As a result of the overhaul, he adds, customers are "coming back in droves."

Despite the competitive spirit that currently prevails, entrepreneurs agree on one thing: Premium frozen dinners and entrees are, as Le Menu marketing manager Catherine Chang puts it, "the wave of the future." Indeed, 55 percent of all women in the United States now work outside the home, and the result is more disposable income, but less time, for two-paycheck families. One out of four adult Americans is unmarried and living alone. The senior citizen population is burgeoning. All told, that's good news in the frozen-food industry.

What's more, psychological barriers are crumbling. "There's a philosophy, going back some years, that if something is frozen, it's not good," explains Armour's William Heitz. "The idea that the nutritional value is gone tends to linger in the backs of a lot of people's minds. But today, the concept is to take something at its peak of freshness, prepare it, and flash-freeze it. As soon as people understand that idea, that the food is as good, if not better, than what they could make themselves, well, we'll really take off."

Heitz, in fact, recently began stocking his 94-year-old grandmother's refrigerator with Dinner Classics. "She'd never eaten that type of food before," he says, "but she tried it because I had bought it. And guess what? She thinks it's pretty neat." FW

MEDICAL ADVANCES

BOON DAYS FOR "DEVIL" HYPNOSIS

By Kathleen Doheny

Pat Redding

The day before she underwent surgery for removal of a facial tumor, Iris Crall made what she thought was an unusual request. "I told my anesthesiologist I needed to be in the right frame of mind and asked if my psychologist could come for a hypnosis session," recalls the 40-year-old Glendale, Calif., woman.

To Crall's surprise, her anesthesiologist not only agreed but offered to help. The night before the operation, Crall relaxed under hypnosis administered by her psychologist. The next day, her anesthesiologist used hypnosis to supplement mild general anesthesia.

Crall believes her relaxed, positive state of mind, achieved through hypnosis, speeded up her recovery. "Doctors told me to expect a five-day hospital stay," she says. "Instead, I had surgery on Friday, went home on Saturday and to a party on Sunday. I believe in doctors 100 percent, but it's amazing how you can also help heal yourself."

Increasing numbers of health-care professionals agree that hypnosis can be a boon. About 15,000 doctors, dentists, psychologists and other health-care workers use hypnosis in their clinical practices, estimates William F. Hoffman, executive director of the American Society of Clinical Hypnosis (ASCH), an organization with about 4,200 members that has nearly doubled in size since 1975.

Hypnosis — a relaxed state in which the subconscious is more susceptible to suggestion and in which the subject's ability to concentrate increases markedly — has lost some of its hocus-pocus image, partly because modern practitioners of the technique put it in proper perspective. "Hypnosis is a name we give to a perfectly normal process," explains Dr. Bernauer Newton, a Los Angeles psychologist who directs the Newton Center for Clinical Hypnosis and presides over the Society for Clinical and Experimental Hypnosis, an organization with about 1,200 members nationwide. "It is a process by which we alter our state of consciousness, and then apply a variety of psychological treatment procedures." But it should not be thought of as a panacea. "This form of treatment is an adjunctive form, not an alternative form," Dr. Newton cautions. "Remember, hypnosis is not a treatment in and of itself. It facilitates the efforts of the therapist and the patient to achieve what they want to achieve."

Experts point out that health-care professionals who offer hypnosis to their patients should have special training and skills in the technique and should not attempt to treat a condition with hypnosis if they are not competent to treat the same condition without it. Given those provisos, advocates of hypnosis feel that it can help patients help themselves — they can use it to motivate themselves, for example, or to reduce stress.

"Hypnosis is not magical, but it does have many practical applications," notes Dr. Harold J. Wain, director of the Consultation Liaison Psychiatric Service at Walter Reed Army Medical Center in Washington, D.C., and president of the ASCH. Dr. Wain has found that hypnosis, among its other uses, helps allergy patients to decrease lung constriction and cardiac patients to improve performance on treadmill tests. Other researchers have concluded that hypnosis is a useful adjunct in the treatment of such varied medical problems as hemophilia, burns, stroke rehabilitation, asthma, skin disorders and migraine headaches.

The American Medical Association says that hypnosis has a recognized place in medicine, but the technique has its opponents. Some conservative religious groups, says Hoffman — who receives occasional letters of protest at the Des Plaines, Ill., headquarters of the ASCH — "consider hypnosis the work of the devil." Medical experts might agree with that (though they would phrase their objections differently) in cases where hypnosis was being used irresponsibly or by inadequately trained practitioners. But when professionally administered hypnosis plays a supporting role in medical treatment, the vote of the health-care community is clear: Hypnosis can help. FW

"Prescription Drugs' Side Effects Revealed"

An Interview with Frank K. Wood, President, FC&A Publishing

(Atlanta, GA.) —

FC&A, a nearby Peachtree City, Georgia publisher, announced today the release of a new, low-priced, $3.99 book for the general public . . . Prescription Drugs Effects and Side Effects.

It reveals the little known side effects of over 200 of the most often prescribed drugs . . . side effects which are known to few people besides doctors. Read this interview with the author and publisher, Frank K. Wood.

Question: Are prescription drug side effects sometimes bad?

Answer: Yes. When you order my book you'll learn that prescription drugs can cause diarrhea, dizziness, dry mouth, sleepiness, depression, headache, insomnia, upset stomach, blurred vision, cramps, rashes, constipation, fever, stuffy nose, short breath, high blood pressure, fear, ringing sounds . . . and poor appetite, balance, sex or heart function.

Question: Frank, what are the good effects of prescription drugs?

Answer: You take drugs prescribed by your doctor for their good effects like relieving pain, fighting infection, birth control, aiding sleep, calming down, fighting coughs, colds or allergies, or lowering heartbeat and blood pressure.

Question: What secrets does your book reveal?

Answer: It reveals the answer to questions like these. When your busy doctor gives you a prescription, what do you, or even your doctor know about it? What's it for? Will you be allergic to it? What are its side effects and dangers. Will it affect other medicine you're taking?

It's up to YOU to keep yourself informed by reading this book. For example, on page 30 you'll learn that a drug you take for upset stomach can cause nausea . . . the very thing it's supposed to prevent . . . plus convulsions or heart attack!

Question: How can ordinary people understand medical facts and terms with your book?

Answer: It's easy to read. Facts are given in easy-to-understand words. (For example: instead of saying "uticaria", it says "hives.")

Two outstanding pharmacists have helped add newly discovered side effects to the new edition. The book describes more than 200 of the most often used drugs.

Question: Is it easy to look up and find drugs?

Answer: Yes, drugs are listed in alphabetical order for quick, dictionary-style finding.

The book lists brand names, money-saving generic names, good effects, side effects, warnings and interactions with other drugs.

It tells how to save money by using generic drugs instead of expensive brand names. It also explains drug categories.

Question: Will your book help me talk to my doctor?

Answer: Yes. According to a recent government survey, 75% of doctors don't tell their patients about drug side effects.

You can look up drugs you've taken in my book. Then you can tell your doctor if you have any possible side effects given in this book. If he thinks best, he may lower your dose, stop your medicine or switch to a different drug not having such side effects.

Question: How can readers get a copy of Prescription Drugs Effects and Side Effects?

Answer: It's easy. Simply cut out and mail the coupon today. There's a no time-limit guarantee of full satisfaction or your money back. Order this 30,000 word easy-to-understand book, edited by two pharmacists now.

Don't wait to order Prescription Drugs Effects and Side Effects. If you don't get this new book . . . you'll never know for sure if a drug you're taking makes you feel bad.

WHIZ QUIZ

HAPPINESS IS A TWO-BATHROOM HOUSE

By John E. Gibson

TRUE OR FALSE

1. You may feel smarter and more "on the ball" when you're happy, but it's merely an illusion.

2. Unhappiness may affect a person's disposition, but it does not alter his level of self-esteem.

3. The number of bathrooms in a home has a definite effect on the happiness of the people who live there.

4. If something is making you so unhappy that you could cry, by all means do so — it can make you feel a lot better.

5. Unselfish people are not necessarily happy people.

6. There are some people you can't make happy no matter what you do.

ANSWERS

1. False. A study conducted at the University of Pennsylvania examined the influence of depressed and elated moods. It showed that happiness exerts a very positive effect on how well you think and reason, and even on your memory. When you are unhappy, you do not function as well as when you're sitting on top of the world.

2. False. The same University of Pennsylvania study showed that even a mild degree of unhappiness has an immediate effect on how an individual views himself, causing him to question his own competence and to embrace self-defeating concepts.

3. True. In a Purdue University study, 200 families were interviewed to determine how their environment affected their levels of stress, happiness and contentment. Perhaps the most interesting finding was this: "Couples living in homes with more than one bathroom perceived their dwelling to be pleasant, homey and spacious, and they felt happy, safe and contented. Those with only one bathroom rated their dwelling as noisy, confining, depressing, stressful and crowded. Couples with children felt even more stress and discomfort than did those without children." It was concluded by the investigators that the number of bathrooms in a dwelling significantly affects the family, and that adequate space for privacy has a positive effect on a family's happiness and well-being.

4. True. Studies conducted by a team of University of California sociologists have demonstrated that there's nothing like a "good cry" (screaming, yelling, or tearing your hair are dry-eyed equivalents) to make a bad situation more tolerable. There is a distinction, however, between "good cries," which serve a cathartic function and make unhappiness more bearable, and "bad cries," which merely signal the pain of distress.

5. True. A Harvard University study focused on happiness, unselfishness and popularity. On a test designed to measure altruism, women scored significantly higher than men. Unselfishness, however, was related to happiness only for men. One explanation for this was that "being unselfish might contribute to greater happiness for men by augmenting their popularity with the opposite sex." One reason this may not work the same way for women is that men might value unselfishness in others less, as suggested by their lower scores for altruism.

6. True. Some people are positively allergic to happiness. It throws them for a loss. Psychologists have a word for this — anhedonia, which is defined as "a reduction in the ability to experience pleasure." Studies by Veterans Administration behavioral specialists indicate that such individuals "appear to be lacking in energy, and to lead dull, inactive lives." FW

OUR MONTHLY COLUMN ON LIVING TODAY

ASK PINOCCHIO — LYING'S NO JOKE

By Harriet Van Horne

It's become a standard joke on television sitcoms: A hapless character, often a child but usually one old enough to know better, is caught telling a whopper. Is he embarrassed? Yes. Is he sorry? Not even a little bit. "OK," he shrugs, "so I lied." Loud guffaws on the laugh track.

Lying, these shows seem to be saying, is OK. Getting caught is not. "It's not OK in this house," a parent may retort in the direction of the still chuckling TV screen.

Truth, it seems, like fidelity, has entered a gray area. Why isn't Washington's cherry tree escapade a fable for our times anymore? The rules were plainer when Shakespeare wrote, "If I tell thee a lie, spit in my face!"

The habit of lying is developed early. It's the child who tells the teacher, "The dog ate my homework," who will later tell the Internal Revenue Service he bought his Mercedes-Benz with money he found in a mattress.

And speaking of government, it's not setting very good examples itself these days. John Jenrette, former representative from South Carolina, came up with the unlikely story after the ABSCAM investigation that his mother had given him the wads of money that his wife, Rita, had found stuffed in a shoe. Investigators were not impressed. Watergate set the tone for a decade of unsavory and unsettling untruths from our leaders. Some may call it politics; most would call it lying.

Why do some of us grow up to be chronic liars while others are painstakingly — sometimes painfully — honest? Psychologists say the roots of lying can be found in the emotional climate of the home. Some children lie because they feel inadequate — not bright enough, not as graceful or as pretty as a sibling. Some lie because the truth, in their experience, has earned them nothing but a sharp whack on the behind.

Once a child's ego is damaged — most commonly through lack of love at home — his self-esteem suffers. Coping with harsh discipline or with remote, uncaring parents can cause acute depression and self-hatred in a child. Inevitably, a child projects this hatred onto others, sometimes by lashing out with hurtful lies.

The lie that is simply a boast harms nobody but the teller. A smart child quickly learns that the gullibility of his peer group is limited. Wise little chums know how many laps can be swum under water, they know that the diving board is not 60 feet above the pool.

The dangers begin when the lies hurt other people ("Susie was copying from my test paper"; "I saw Mr. Smith roaring drunk!"; "Tommy stole my bike"). Such lies constitute a serious character disorder, and long-term counseling or family therapy not only may be in order but necessary.

Saddest of all, some children lie to protect failed parents. They staunchly deny evidence of abuse, of alcoholism, of all the parental frailties that create a troubled home. When emotional support is provided by a teacher, a therapist or a stable friend, the truth can come out, usually with great relief.

There are, of course, times when lying is not only OK but called for. We all tell little white lies. Thousands of them. How else are we to soften the abrasions and ease the rejections of life? Sometimes we must lie to be kind.

And so, without guilt, we smile at the giver and say we've always wanted an ashtray in the shape of a coiled snake. We tell a nephew he is drawing lovely melodies from that squeaky violin. We praise the high school play and agree warmly with the mother of the 16-year-old leading lady that "it's more professional than some of the stuff you pay $40 a ticket to see on Broadway."

OK, so you lied. Benevolent little fibs that sweetened someone's day. No kin to the whopper told in the TV sketch. No slander of the innocent, no perjury. Even the excruciatingly correct Miss Manners has noted that "what the world needs is more false cheer and less honest crabbiness."

True, up to a point; but what the world does not need are the lies that wound friends, defraud creditors, betray public trust, or savage the reputation of a neighbor. These are the lies that are altogether too fashionable lately. Dr. Karl Menninger remarks upon the trend in his book Whatever Became of Sin?: "Lying has lately seemed to be gaining respectability. It is even practiced without apology by persons in high places." Those are the lies that are slowly eroding the trust that holds society together. Perhaps a backlash is on its way. Perhaps one day soon that cynical shrug, "OK, so I lied," will draw a cold stare — and not a single chuckle. FW

Harriet Van Horne is a well-known essayist on subjects ranging from politics to social mores.

Insecticide Awarded Third Patent

ROACH PRUFE, #1 in Three University Tests

The University of California and the University of Nebraska have just released two independent studies that have been published in the Entomological Society of America Journal. In the studies, thirty-one well known consumer and commercial insecticide products were tested in heavily roach infested homes and apartments. Confirming an earlier University of California published report, ROACH PRUFE's patented formula again took the #1 spot as the most effective roach killer. In the new University of California report, ROACH PRUFE was tested against the sprays and powders commonly used by the exterminators, and was the only product in the twelve-week study that showed 100% control. In the University of Nebraska study, well known consumer aerosol, fogger, and dust products were tested. Here again ROACH PRUFE provided the best results in their eight-week tests.

Disease Carriers Odorless, Easy To Apply

Alan Brite, holder of seventeen U.S. and foreign patents, has just been awarded his third patent on ROACH PRUFE. Brite says: "Because roaches simply do not recognize ROACH PRUFE as an insecticide, they do not try to avoid it by scattering to other parts of your residence as they do with other insecticides. Plus the electrostatically charged powder sticks to the roach's body and is then carried back into the walls and spread among the other roaches. The result is you kill not only the roaches you see, but also those hiding and multiplying in the walls."

ROACH PRUFE is odorless, non-evaporating, non-staining, and non-flammable. The powder is simply applied with a teaspoon under kitchen appliances and in other hidden areas. It can be used in homes, schools, hospitals, restaurants, plus new construction.

ROACH PRUFE is available at most hardware stores or it can be ordered direct from the manufacturer by sending a check or money order for $8.90. This includes postage for the one pound container. Add tax in California. One pound covers up to a nine room residence. You'll need an extra pound for a basement or garage. Send to Copper Brite, Inc., Dept. 12 at 5147 W. Jefferson Blvd., Los Angeles, CA 90016. Copies of the 3 University tests are available by sending a self-addressed stamped envelope to Copper Brite, Inc., Dept. A.

FAMILY MATTERS

REWARDS: DO THEY HELP OR HURT KIDS?

By Susan Lapinski

When 4-year-old Jessica does a good job of brushing her teeth at bedtime, she gets a reward — three storybooks of her choice, read by her dad. "It works out well for us," says Jessica's father. "Jess is learning a good habit, and also learning that books are fun."

Parents and professionals tend to agree that rewards can be very effective in teaching children good habits and shaping their behavior. But there are pitfalls to avoid — and some important guidelines to keep in mind.

Kimble Mead

"Parents should be aware of the risks. Rewards can be cheap and fast," says John Condry, an associate professor of human development and family studies at the New York State College of Human Ecology at Cornell University.

Condry's reasons for concern are bolstered by the results of a study he conducted with a colleague in the late '70s. In the study, college students were awarded 50 cents for each correct answer they gave on a test. The researchers found that because the money was tempting, the students focused more on the reward than on the personal satisfaction of being correct. "They played it safe by answering only easy questions, and were more concerned with whether the answer was right than with how they arrived at it," says Condry.

In raising his own three children, now teenagers, Condry has used material rewards occasionally. "But we tried our best to reward our kids in other ways," he says. "That included encouraging them to do something well, working beside them, providing a good role model, praising them afterwards."

That kind of reward may be all a child needs for motivation. "In our culture, what children want most is attention — love, hugs, kisses, knowing that they're wanted," says Janice Gibson, professor of educational and developmental psychology at the University of Pittsburgh.

Beyond that, there are some other things for parents to keep in mind about rewards:

They should be appropriate. Very young children need a tangible, concrete reward, whether it be a kiss or an ice-cream cone. So find the reward that is most effective in getting your child to clean his room or clean her plate. Later, a child will develop pride and satisfaction in being tidy and eating good foods, but the reward you provide now will get these good habits going in the first place.

They should be immediate. Because children have a different sense of time than adults, the effect of a reward is lost if it isn't directly tied to the behavior that earned it. For example, a first-grader has a hard time understanding that a good mark on a report card is the payoff for schoolwork that was completed weeks earlier. It's important to reward young children for their good actions right away, by praising a good paper when a child brings it home from school, or allowing TV time just after homework has been satisfactorily completed.

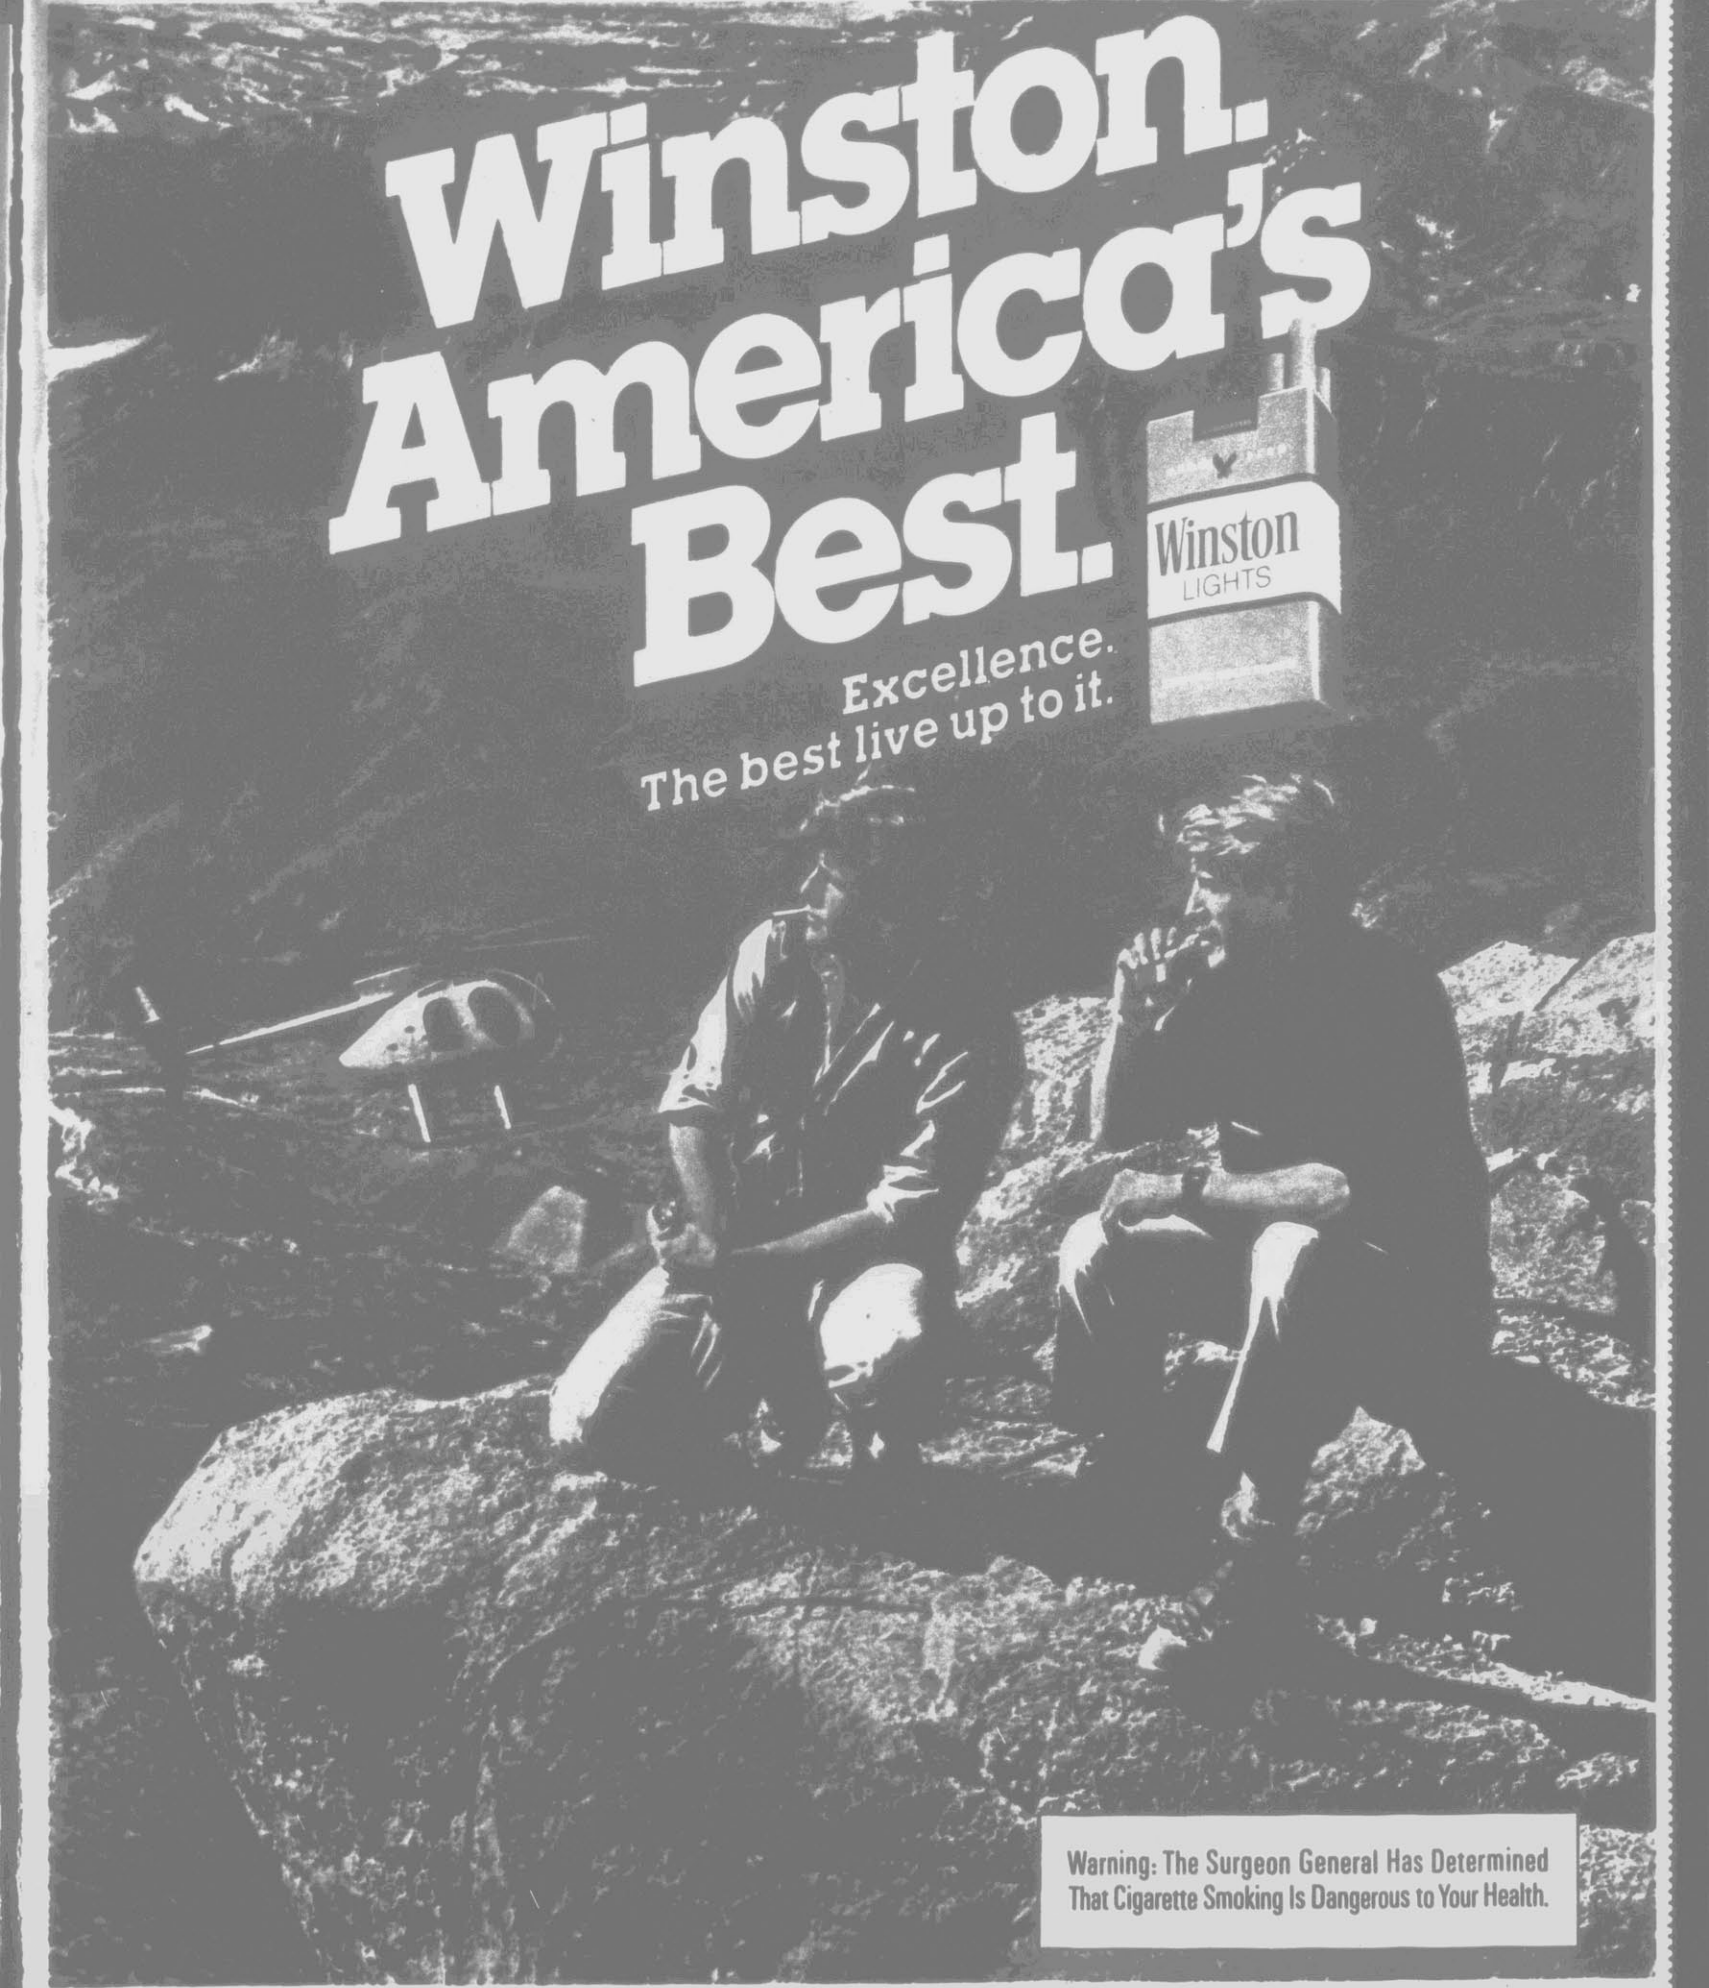

They should be consistent. Working parents who come home tired and preoccupied may have trouble remembering to praise a child who is just learning to say "please" and "thank you." But such inconsistencies "can set back what you're teaching 100 percent," says Gibson, the author of Discipline Is Not A Dirty Word (The Lewis Publishing Company). When it comes to discipline and rewards, parents need to present a united front as much as possible. Consistent behavior helps reassure children that the things they are being taught are genuinely valued at home.

They should be phased out over time. As children grow, parents will want them to internalize the values they have been rewarded for practicing. But weaning kids away from rewards must be a gradual process. "If you notice that your child's behavior is going in the other direction, then you're going too fast," says Gibson.

For as long as rewards are necessary, authorities say, parents should feel comfortable about using them to pass on their own values to their children by reinforcing good behavior. FW

SHOOT THE MOO

They shoot cows, don't they? They do if "they" is Agri-Graphics Ltd. Actually, what they do is photograph cows — 10,000 just last year. That's nice, you might say, but is there a living in it?

Well, the photos are used mostly to advertise bovines in dairy trade journals. (One of the cows that Agri-Graphics founder Danny Weaver photographed last year was the first to be auctioned off for more than one million dollars.) But many of the pictures are just for the owner's wall. Either way — and especially if big bucks are riding on the photo — the task, explains Weaver, "is to try to make the animal look more correct than she actually is." How? Weaver has his little tricks. For instance, you've got to get the ears forward. "That's a nice look," he says. "Cows can't smile. Ears forward — that's a cow's smile."

What does it take to work for Agri-Graphics? Weaver has specific thoughts on the qualities of a good cow cameraman. "My photographers must be cow people first, and photographers second."

WHETHER THE WEATHER COUNTS

Next time the conversation lags, try talking about the weather. No, not the usual "Hot enough for you?" brand of chit-chat. We're talking serious weather discussion.

David M. Ludlum has penned The Weather Factor, perhaps the most complete compendium of the ways in which weather has shaped life in America. For example, on August 29, 1776, unseasonal fog on Long Island saved the forces of the Colonial army from a defeat that could have ended the Revolutionary War almost before it got going. And do you remember the 1976 baseball game that was to have been played inside the Astrodome — but was postponed because of rain? (Floods trapped the Houston Astros and the Pittsburgh Pirates in the stadium, and prevented fans from making it out to the ball park.)

Further, the Siege of Yorktown was probably won by a violent windstorm, and wet weather elected Harry Truman. With facts like these to rain down on your listeners, the conversational flow needn't ever dry up.

BUT WHAT'S FOR LUNCH?

Dr. Alan Harmon, a research chemist at McCormick & Co., has been named the Top Tongue of 1983. We'll tell you about it.

Many employees at McCormick (the spice company based in Maryland) attend tasting panels every day. When we spoke with Dr. Harmon, he was on his way to a garlic panel. Could you, we asked, give us a taste of what these meetings are like? "The purpose," he said, "is to learn how to differentiate between tastes and to learn to describe them exactly." The sessions are enjoyable enough, he continued, "unless it's tartar sauce four times a week."

Of all the tasters, Harmon was tops. His prize was a pair of red ceramic lips. Dr. Harmon, we hope that victory is sweet.

KIDDY POLL

Some things never seem to change. That can be either reassuring or frustrating, depending on your point of view. In this instance, it is at least surprising.

Harry Reis, an associate professor at the University of Rochester's Center for Community Study, tested 92 children between the ages of 3 and 5 in hopes of finding out how kids at such a tender age see masculine and feminine roles. Each child heard a behavioral trait described aloud and was asked to point to the silhouette — an adult male or female figure — that went with the characteristic.

The results — in this post-liberation age — were unexpected. Out of the mouths of babes, traits considered to be masculine were: "adventurous," "self-reliant," "messy," "owns a big store," "brags," "makes most of the rules" and "strong."

The characteristics that were pointed to as feminine were: "weak," "talkative," "fussy," "quiet and afraid," "whiny," "loving," and "well-mannered." Obviously, nobody told these kids about the 1970s.

BEDSIDE READING

Ever wonder what folks are reading before they switch out the light and retire for the night? Here are two reports.

Desi Arnaz Jr., actor, Beverly Hills, Calif.

Mr. Arnaz reports that his favorite book is The Mystic Path to Cosmic Power, by Vernon Howard, because "it has taught me that I need only flow through life like a quiet river, easily and naturally."

Christina Crawford, author, Tarzana, Calif.

A book that Ms. Crawford has referred to constantly this summer has been Earl Mindell's Vitamin Bible. She has also read Winning by Negotiation, by Tessa Warschaw. The book, she's told her husband, is going to change their lives.

Second-Hand Smoke: The Myth and The Reality.

Many non-smokers are annoyed by cigarette smoke. This is a reality that's been with us for a long time.

Lately, however, many non-smokers have come to believe that cigarette smoke in the air can actually cause disease.

But, in fact, there is little evidence—and certainly nothing which proves scientifically—that cigarette smoke causes disease in non-smokers.

We know this statement may seem biased. But it is supported by findings and views of independent scientists—including some of the tobacco industry's biggest critics.

Lawrence Garfinkel of the American Cancer Society, for example. Mr. Garfinkel, who is the Society's chief statistician, published a study in 1981 covering over 175,000 people, and reported that "passive smoking" had "very little, if any" effect on lung cancer rates among non-smokers.

You may have seen reports stating that in the course of an evening, a non-smoker could breathe in an amount of smoke equivalent to several cigarettes or more.

But a scientific study by the Harvard School of Public Health, conducted in various public places, found that non-smokers might inhale anywhere from 1/1000th to 1/100th of one filter cigarette per hour. At that rate, it would take you at least 4 days to inhale the equivalent of a single cigarette.

Often our own concerns about our health can take an unproven claim and magnify it out of all proportion; so, what begins as a misconception turns into a frightening myth.

Is "second-hand smoke" one of these myths? We hope the information we've offered will help you sort out some of the realities.

FEET HURT ALL DAY?

Lanolin Foot Balm Makes them Feel Great!

GREASELESS LANOLIN FOOT BALM contains active ingredients formulated "just for feet". It is a soothing, greaseless, medicated cream created to provide fast relief for burning, aching, tired feet.

Lanolin is the thick rich substance that acts as a natural protective coating on the surface of the wool fibers found on sheep. It helps keep the fleece soft and luxuriant. Centuries ago Lanolin's natural skin-conditioning properties were discovered. A registered pharmacist, using his many years of experience, combined rich, natural lanolin with six other active ingredients to ease his own foot problems. His wife and friends used it and the word spread rapidly. The pharmacist called on Bob Lee one day and an arrangement was made so that Lee Nutrition could market LANOLIN FOOT BALM exclusively. Thousands of jars have been sold for $1.49 each—but act now and I will include GREASELESS LANOLIN FOOT BALM free with your order.

● OPEN LINES! Find a "line" associated with each person's vocation (Ex.: No. 1 — Airline): 1. Pilot: _____line. 2. Reporter: _____line. 3. Dancer: _____line. 4. Auto worker: _____line.

1. Airline. 2. Headline. 3. Chorus line. 4. Assembly line. Other answers are possible.

● Sum Fun! Twice nine is as much greater than four as twice this number exceeds a score. What number?

● Shell Game! Search each sentence for a shellfish: 1. The toy stereo failed. 2. Eric lamented his words. 3. The bacon charred.

1. Oyster. 2. Clam. 3. Conch.

● Riddle-Me-This! Where did the stablemen dine? On the hoss-cienda. What kind of music soothes cows? Moo-ed music.

BOTTOM LINE IS 20, FOLKS

While the sum of the four numbers across the bottom line of the triangle above is 20, the sum of the four numbers on the other two sides differ. Challenge:

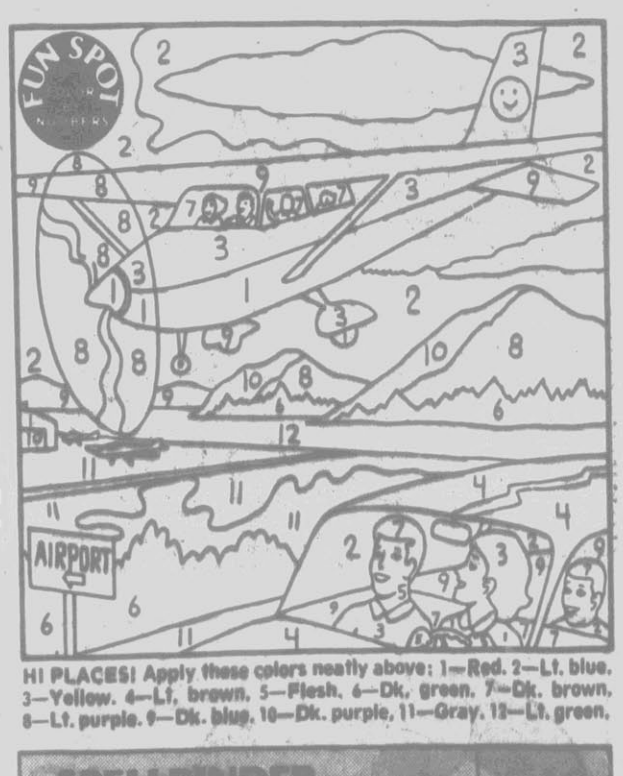

Switch one number from the bottom line with one number on the left side, and a second number on the bottom line with a number on the right side so that the sum of all the numbers on all three sides is the same — 20.

Which four numbers require switching around?

Switch seven and one, nine and three.

CATCH QUESTION! Something is loose in the barnyard above. What can it be? To find out, add missing lines dot to dot.

HI PLACES! Apply these colors neatly above: 1—Red. 2—Lt. blue. 3—Yellow. 4—Lt. brown. 5—Flesh. 6—Dk. green. 7—Dk. brown. 8—Lt. purple. 9—Dk. blue. 10—Dk. purple. 11—Gray. 12—Lt. green.

IN THE DAYS OF KING ARTHUR

CREATED BY HAL FOSTER

Our Story: TO THWART HER FATHER'S CONQUEST, MAEVE AGREES TO PASS ALONG WHAT SHE LEARNS OF HIS PLANS. SHE OVERHEARS MUCH, FOR NO ONE SUSPECTS MORDRED'S OWN DAUGHTER. AT LAST MORDRED IS READY. HIS ARMY HEAVES TO ITS FEET AND BEGINS ITS MARCH DOWN THE FOSSE WAY, FROM LINDUM TO CORINIUM AND THENCE TO CAMELOT.

BUT EACH NIGHT, AFTER WORD FROM MAEVE, VAL AND HIS ALLIES SNEAK OFF TO WARN THE TOWNS AHEAD THAT MORDRED PLANS TO PLUNDER.

THE TOWNSPEOPLE CAN OFTEN ARRANGE A FITTING WELCOME BEFORE ESCAPING WITH THEIR VALUABLES. ONCE, MORDRED FINDS HIS ARMY BOGGED DOWN IN WHAT SCOUTS HAD CLAIMED WAS DRY PASTURE. SOMEONE, IT SEEMS, HAD CARELESSLY BREACHED A DAM OR TWO.

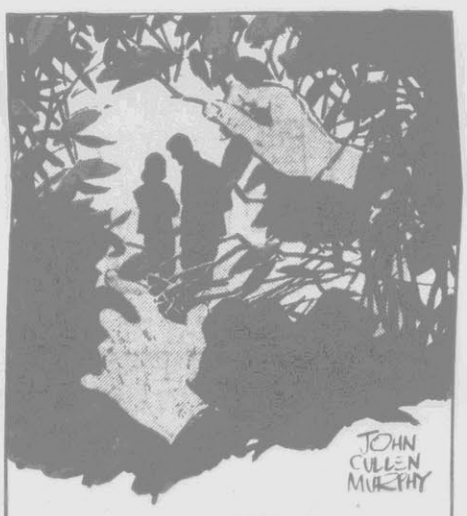

ANOTHER TIME THE FOE IS FIRE, FOR UNDER A HOT AUGUST SUN THE CROPS IGNITE LIKE TINDER. SEVERAL OF MORDRED'S COMPANIES ARE ENCIRCLED BY FLAMES. MANY ARE DOOMED TO ENRICH THE EARTH WITH ASHES, DOING SOME GOOD FOR ONCE IN THEIR LIVES.

AFTER A WEEK OF THIS MORDRED'S ARMY GROWS RESTLESS. MEN WHO LIVE FOR PILLAGE BEGIN TO GRUMBLE OPENLY. HOPING TO PROVOKE A MUTINY, PRINCE VALIANT GRUMBLES THE LOUDEST. "YOU PROMISED US GOLD AND SILVER," VAL REMINDS MORDRED. "AND WINE!" ADDS MARCUS. "AND WOMEN!" CRIES ARN. BUT ARN HAS NO RIGHT TO COMPLAIN.

EVERY NIGHT HE MEETS WITH MAEVE, BUT NOT EVERY NIGHT DOES HE GO UNSEEN. "SO THIS IS WHERE OUR SECRETS GO. MORDRED WILL PAY ME WELL."
