Harmonious GOP Set To OK Platform

DALLAS (AP) - Republican convention delegates, fired by partisan rhetoric that portrayed Walter F. Mondale as the over-promising candidate of a failed past, were ready today to shout approval of a platform "wrapped in red, white and blue" and pledging to hold the line on taxes and assure victory in any future war.

Dissenters from the conservative planks on social issues and from the refusal to include even benign mention of the Equal Rights Amendment in the platform failed to muster the support to wage a floor fight. Delegates will hear the platform outlined at a morning session and then give their final approval tonight.

The Platform Committee finished action on the document on Monday. Panel chairman, Rep. Trent Lott of Mississippi, turned to White House liaison Drew Lewis and said, "I've got it all ready for you, Drew, wrapped in red, white and blue."

President Reagan watched his party's convention from the White House and worked on the speech he will deliver Thursday night when he and Vice President George Bush accept nomination for a second term.

In addition to adoption of the platform, tonight's schedule included speeches by former President Gerald Ford and Sen. Bob Dole of Kansas and his wife, Transportation Secretary Elizabeth Dole.

A tough talking Democrat nearly stole the show at the convention's prime time debut Monday when U.N.

Ambassador Jeane Kirkpatrick, a conservative heroine, lashed the Democrats who nominated Mondale as the "blame America first crowd" on foreign policy.

While laced with attacks on the Democrats who met last month in San Francisco, GOP convention rhetoric also included bids for "mainstream" members of the opposition to cross party lines and support Reagan.

Keynoteur Katherine D. Ortega cited Mondale's rivals for the Democratic presidential nomination — Ernest F. Hollings, John Glenn and Reubin Askew — as examples of mainstream Democrats. And she quoted Gary Hart's description of the Mondale economic program as "a collection of old and tired ideas, held together by paralyzing commitments to special interests and constituency groups."

The Republicans gave women a prominent role Monday night. In addition to Mrs. Ortega and Mrs. Kirkpatrick, Health and Human Services Secretary Margaret Heckler addressed the delegates. The other major speaker at the session was Senate Majority Leader Howard Baker Jr. of Tennessee.

Baker described Mondale as "trying to invent another America — a trembling, despairing, miserable America that needs the Democratic Party to come to its rescue."

The Tennessee senator added that "the only rescue America has needed lately was from (President) Carter and Mondale in 1980."

City School Board Appoints Three To Head System On Interim Basis

By JERRY RAYNOR
Reflector Staff Writer

Effective Jan. 1, 1985, and continuing until at least June 30, 1985, the position of school superintendent in Greenville will be filled by a three-member management team.

A resolution approved Monday night by the Greenville Board of Education authorizes action to "establish and empower a management team composed of the current director of administration, Richard Preston; director of elementary instruction, Charles Ross, and director of secondary instruction, Rebecca A. Oats, to serve as and exercise the duties and responsibilities of superintendent as prescribed by the General Statutes of North Carolina and the policies and regulations of the Greenville Board of Education."

Dr. Delma Blinson has announced

he will retire Dec. 31 as superintendent of the school system. Blinson said he planned to accept employment as a faculty member at East Carolina University.

Since both the city and county school boards are currently considering the consolidation of the two units, members of the city board included in the resolution a statement "that a permanent superintendent should not be appointed at this time in order to facilitate the possible consolidation of the two school systems." At the same time, the city board said it sees "a need to continue the orderly operation and management of the Greenville City Schools in the interim."

In order to have one of the three act as superintendent, the resolution contains a provision that "the Greenville Board of Education may

City Crew Will Open Graves

By SUE HINSON
Reflector Staff Writer

In an effort to make burial procedures more uniform, the Greenville City Council voted Monday to put the city in charge of openings and closings of graves in cemeteries owned or controlled by the city beginning Oct. 1.

The measure, City Manager Gail Meeks said, will ensure that graves on property within the city's jurisdiction meet the depth requirement and maintenance and quality standards. Under past policy, local morticians were responsible for opening and closing of graves.

Problems arose, Mrs. Meeks said, because most of the morticians in town were not able to hire full-time employees to dig graves. "So when they had a burial, they had to hire someone for a couple of hours to dig and close. As a result, those people were not familiar with city requirements and some problems arose," she explained. The city requires that all graves be at least four feet deep.

Lonnie Anderson of Flangan's Funeral Home, who said he was one of several area funeral directors who met with the council three times to request the measure, agreed that the greatest problem has been getting someone to dig the graves.

"Most of the time we'd have to pick up somebody to dig today and tomorrow, then that person would go off on what we call another hustle and we'd have to get someone else," Anderson said. The instability of that situation, he added, would sometimes cause problems. "Every now and then they'd dig in the wrong plot, but not too often. Water was also a problem. When it was wet outside, it was almost impossible for us to get to four feet. The grave site would be just like a mud hole."

George Wilkerson of S.G. Wilkerson and Sons Inc. Funeral Home said his company had no objections to the council's action, but that the measure could possibly affect the personnel setup at Wilkerson's. He added he has not looked into the situation in depth so he is not sure what will be done. Wilkerson employs two full-time grave diggers and sometimes has to hire additional personnel to handle its opening and closing load, he said.

Anderson said the city should look off into its price scale on cemetery plots.

"I think one of the problems we're going to run into now is that everybody will not be able to pay the prices the city is demanding. The $100 and $125 fees for openings and closing don't bother us, but will everyone be able to pay that in addition to the $250 charge for city plots? They'll have already put out about $350-$400 and will still have to buy a casket to put in the ground," he said.

Also, Anderson suggested discounts on family plots. "If you want to bury your family together, you should be able to buy one grave for $250 and discount for the others, but we never did reach a conclusion on that in our meetings," he said.

Representatives of Flangan's

The Pitt County Board of Commissioners Monday presented certificates of appreciation to 32 individuals and organizations for volunteer service to the county over the past year, and adopted a resolution citing county Finance Officer Margaret Roberts' selection as county finance officer of the year by the N.C. Association of County Commissioners.

Those honored Monday were nominees for the 1984 Governor's Award for volunteer service. Eleven of them — William F. Whiteford, Carolyn Turnage Rouse, Etsil Mason, Coleman Bailey, Mary Craft, Mavis Hall, John Tripp, Gene Had-

Commissioner Kelly Barnhill, vice chairman of the board, said the purpose of the awards was to "thank you for your volunteer service (and the) many, many dollars in savings for the taxpayers of the county."

Mrs. Roberts, who has been an employee of the county since September 1962, received the state award at the association's meeting in Asheville earlier this month.

Mrs. Roberts was named assistant finance officer in June 1964, became finance officer in July 1978, and VERSATILE DESIGNS...for holiday ornaments can be done in either counted cross stitch or needlepoint.

Pat's Pointers

By Pat Trexler

Needlecrafters everywhere are already counting the days until Christmas — trying to find time to make gifts, decorations and ornaments. Your Christmas is sure to be merry with these charming holiday designs for counted cross stitch or needlepoint. Work any or all of the charted designs on 18-count even-weave fabric and frame them in Christmas colored frames to hang on your tree or on a wreath or holly branch as door decoration.

As shown here, they fit perfectly into a 2 1/4- or 3-inch frame. If you prefer to use a more loosely woven fabric, the designs will be larger and ideal for scattering on a tree skirt, Christmas colored frames to hang on your tree or on a wreath or holly branch as door decoration.

To obtain instructions and charts for working the six Christmas designs, send your request for Leaflet No. CS-913 with $1 and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to: Pat Trexler (The Daily Reflector), P.O. Box 810, North Myrtle Beach, S.C. 29597.

Or you may order Kit No. C-913 by sending a check or money order for $13 to Pat Trexler at the same address. The kit price includes the instruction leaflet, six Christmas red frames, cross stitch fabric, embroidery floss, needle and shipping charges.

A recent visit to Copenhagen, Denmark, brought back memories of the first time I saw traditional counted cross stitch on a trip to that exciting city in 1971. Up until then, cross stitch to me meant working over large stamped X's in uninspired designs, usually on cheap fabric.

In Copenhagen, I searched for needlecraft shops and stopped in one that had a window display of what I thought was very fine petit point. Imagine my surprise when I discovered it was actually cross stitch worked from charted designs on fine even-weave fabric!

I bought materials for several small projects and merrily stitched my way through the other Scandinavian countries, finishing them all before we landed in New York on the return flight.

Dismay set in when I tried to find the necessary fabric for more projects in this country — it was impossible to find in the City where I lived at the time, and even mail-order houses were no help.

Happily, this is no longer the case. Even-weave fabric is available in almost every city, town and village in the United States today. While any fabric with an even weave can be used, the most common used fabrics are Aida and Hardanger.

The Aida cloth is available in 11-, 14- and 18-count, and Hardanger is a 22-count fabric. The count refers to the number of stitches made across a 1-inch span of the fabric.

People with less than perfect vision may feel that this type of work would be too fine for their eyesight, but I can assure you that most people have no trouble with it at all.

I have worn glasses for nearsightedness ever since I was a teenager and must now admit to membership in the bifocal set, but I have worked on the 22-count without any eyestrain.

Perhaps the best way to describe even-weave fabric is to say that it is woven with groups of thread in blocks, with small holes in each of the four corners of each block. Your needle passes up or down through these holes, with a perfect little cross stitch made over each block.

You don't have to peer as closely as you might think to find the right place to insert the needle if you will just let the needle "walk" across the fabric. That is, just run the needle along a line of holes, until it comes to the right spot and it will slip easily into the right hole. This is more easily demonstrated than described, but I think you will see what I mean when you try it.

At Wits End

By Erma Bombeck

Reprinted by Request:

In looking over a rack of greeting cards the other day I was impressed with the fact that there was a message for every occasion from "Happy Birthday to My First Daughter-in-Law" to "Congratulations on Your Trial Separation."

Not finding what I wanted, I asked a salesperson behind the cash register, "Do you have a card inviting your husband to dinner?"

"Do you mean the standard greeting simply stating that dinner is on the table and would he please drop whatever he is doing and make an appearance?"

"That's the one." I nodded.

"No, but we get a lot of calls for them," she said.

The engraved invitation is woman's last resort. Man's resistance to come to the table has always been a mystery to me. Sometimes I say, "Dinner's ready!" just to watch his feet turn mechanically and go away from the table.

You would think one would run out of things to do while the food is cooling down, but they never seem to. They clean out the medicine cabinet, go to the bathroom, check their faces for growth of beard, turn television channels, check the car to see if they left the lights on, get the paper, have a discussion with the children in their rooms on "What is life?" and (this is my favorite) change their clothes when they have been sitting around in them for three hours.

Also peculiar to the Deaf to Dinner Syndrome is the no-response. For years, I have stood in the doorway of the kitchen and courted varicose veins of the neck by yelling, "DIIIIHNNNNNAAAAAHHHHH!" When there is no response, the first time, it becomes a chant.

With each no-response, I give it another shot. Finally, like an apparition, the husband appears and says in a quiet voice, "There is no need to shout. I heard you the first time."

I frankly think greeting card companies are missing the boat on this one. There are conservatively 85 million husbands in this country just sitting there like Scarlett on her veranda waiting to be invited to dinner. Multiply this by five dinners a week plus six weekend meals and you have a little moneymaker in invitations there.

Until then
DIIIIHNNNNNAAAAAHHHHH!

Home Closing Costs Can Be Unpleasant Surprise

By CHANGING TIMES
The Kiplinger Magazine

When you're buying a home, your initial financial concerns are with the actual cost of the house and what the monthly mortgage payment will be. But unless you know what to expect, closing costs can be an unpleasant surprise.

Closing costs, the expense of transferring ownership from seller to buyer, can amount to a few thousand dollars and usually must be paid at the time of settlement. Financing payments usually make up the largest portion of the settlement bill.

On a national basis it's difficult to say what closing costs run, simply because there is no uniformity to how the costs are counted and calculated.

But within local markets you generally can get a ball-park figure on what to expect. For example, in Atlanta closing costs on conventional loans commonly come to 3.3 percent of the loan amount. In California 2 percent is closer to the mark. Neither of those estimates includes any discount points charged on the loan or the real estate brokerage commission.

A discount point is equal to 1 percent of the full amount of the loan and is payable to the lender at closing.

Once you actually apply for a loan, you're generally entitled under the Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act (RESPA) to specific information about the costs.

Within three days of receiving your loan application, the lender must mail a good-faith estimate of your closing costs. At the same time you should receive a copy of "Settlement Costs," a booklet put out by the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD). If you're at an early stage in the home-buying game, ask any lender for a copy of this informative booklet before you commit yourself to buying anything.

You will be expected to come to the closing with a certified check made out for the amount of the estimated settlement costs. There may be last-minute expenses, however, that you'll have to cover with a personal check, such as the value of fuel oil left in the tank and measured just prior to closing.

Technically, the settlement agent must supply you with a list of all the available costs the day before closing.

The first page of the estimate of settlement costs summarizes all funds transferred among the buyer, seller, lender and other providers of settlement services, separated into columns that show the net due to be paid or received by the borrower and the seller.

If the estimate of settlement costs is presented in the same format as the uniform settlement statement you and the seller will be handed at the closing, turn to the second page for a breakdown of the amounts due. They will be shown as either the buyer's or seller's obligations. Here's what you'll find:

— The broker's real estate commission (usually about 6 percent) pays for the work done by the real estate agents to sell the home. It is divided up between the agent who put the home up for sale and the agent who found you, the buyer. Usually the seller pays this expense.

— Lender's charges can include the lender's cost of processing the loan (commonly called the loan origination fee), loan discount points, appraisal fee, borrower's credit report and mortgage insurance application fee.

— Prepays include mortgage interest, property taxes, and mortgage and hazard insurance premiums that are frequently paid in advance at closing. The amount of interest owed usually covers the period between closing and the end of the month. For example, if settlement takes place Aug. 15 and you must make your first mortgage payment Oct. 1, the lender will collect interest through the end of August.

In addition, lenders often require payment of the first year's mortgage and hazard insurance premiums at closing. In some cases a buyer may arrange for the seller to transfer the remaining hazard insurance, paying the seller on a prorated basis for the remainder of the policy term.

In general, items paid for in advance by the seller, such as property taxes, would be prorated in favor of the seller at closing. Items paid in arrears, for example interest on an assumed loan, would be prorated in favor of the purchaser.

— The borrower may be required to pay an initial amount at closing to set up a reserve fund, or reserves, and each month a portion of the regular payment will be added to the reserve to assure sufficient sums to pay future taxes and insurance premiums.

— Title charges pay for various transaction costs, notably the title search required by the lender. An examination is made of the public records to determine whether the title you receive has any ownership or financial claims and restrictions on the use of the property. Other related charges include title insurance (the lender's mandatory policy and possibly additional owner's coverage), document preparation, notary fees and the lender's attorney fees.

— Government charges cover the recording of the loan and property documents at the county courthouse, as well as related transfer taxes.

— Other charges can cover such expenses as a property survey and a pest inspection.

For Young Shoplifter, Being Caught Freed Her

DEAR ABBY: The letter from the woman who shoplifted a 78-cent box of candy brought back memories.

When I was a young girl, I helped another girl steal a 10-cent ring from a 5-and-10-cent store. (She "accidentally" knocked the ring to the floor, I picked it up and slipped it to her, and she put it in her purse.)

I slept over at her house that night. We had a fight, and I told her if she didn't shut up and let me go to sleep, I would tell her mother about the ring she stole. Her mother heard us, came into the room and said, "What ring?"

My friend had to tell her mother the truth, so the next day her mother and my mother marched the two of us back to the store, made us confess to the clerk and return the ring. Abby, that was the worst moment of my life, but it was one of the best lessons I have ever learned.

It happened 64 years ago, and from that day on I was never tempted to steal a thing. NAMELESS IN LANCASTER, PA.

DEAR NAMELESS: Your friend's mother was wise. An ounce of humiliation is worth a pound of punishment.

me to write down my sexual fantasies, and he even loaned me a book of erotic stories that he asked me to discuss with him. Then he asked if he could come to my home to see me. (My husband was overseas.) How dumb I was!

After he got what he wanted, he dropped me. I felt guilty for seven years because he made me believe that I had instigated it.

Another therapist was able to help me face my real problem, which has nothing to do with sex. (I had been raised by a domineering, mentally sick mother.) The second therapist also helped me to deal with this sicko who had subtly seduced me. I hope this isn't too long for your column. It could help other women who think therapists can do no wrong.

ANOTHER VICTIM

DEAR VICTIM: You say "he's still out there." Why should he go unpunished, free to do to other women what he did to you? If you haven't let him know that you are wise to him now, please consider it. It may not be too late to report his unprofessional conduct to the proper authorities.

Overstated

We suspect the number of bank failures thus far in 1984 is overemphasized by commentators and observers.

True, there were 60 bank failures in 1939 (which now seems like an ancient nightmare) compared with 49 thus far this year, and there may be more. (After all, there are many more banking institutions than 45 years ago, and the number of '84 failures represents a tiny fraction of today's total.)

The Great Depression provided many lessons for bankers and the government, and one result was that in the '84 failures no depositor has lost money at a bank or savings and loan that was covered by insurance.

Observers of the banking industry generally agree the somewhat hectic economic picture of very recent years — coupled with instances of poor management — pushed some institutions over the brink. It has been a shakeout period.

If you (or we) were directly affected, it is very likely we'd all be running around shouting like Chicken Little that "the sky is falling."

If you look out the window, all you'd see is just another nice (but warm) day.

Questions

John Z. DeLorean, the auto executive, has been found innocent of eight charges involving conspiring with undercover government agents to possess and distribute cocaine.

The verdict followed an exhaustive trial and seven days of deliberation by the jury which heard the case. It would not be proper to quarrel with the verdict. A jury was chosen and its members sat through months of testimony before reaching a conclusion of DeLorean's innocence.

The case, however, raises questions once again about government "sting" operations — that is those which use undercover agents to involve an individual in an illegal operation. Using undercover agents to infiltrate illegal operations is a historical part of police work, but using such agents to actually participate in the illegal arrangements seems a relatively new procedure.

The tactic raises questions, and at the very least the government must review the procedure to make certain it is sound enough to obtain convictions.

See What You Get

NEW YORK (AP) — Are you one of those trusting souls who really believes that by pulling at the little red plastic strip you can undo the wrapping on the packet of peanut butter crackers?

Or that you can be certain the pouring spout will pop out of the milk carton, as the instructions promise? Or that when it says "tear on dotted line" the line will be so deeply perforated you can tear neatly?

These are among the frustrations of anyone exposed to modern merchandising and marketing, which is just about everyone. In perhaps a growing number of instances, people find that what they see and hear isn't what they get.

When the milk carton is damp, for example, you cannot always expose the spout. "Perforated" lines are sometimes merely printed. And that little red plastic strip might be sealed inside the package — visible, but unreachable.

The frustrations are generated not only by things that don't work, but by promises not kept.

The toll road, for example, that charges you dearly because it promises to save you time and stress, and then presents you with a construction crew and a traffic jam.

Or the lifetime guarantee that requires you to package the product, ship it and pay for all parts and repairs, thus spending more for a reconstructed item than a new one would cost.

Or the homeowner's "complete" insurance policy you believed gave you total coverage, as the agent indicated, until you tried to collect on the water in your basement and learned that naturally flowing water was excluded.

The frustrations are provoked also by words loosely used, such as: "You'll be delighted," or "easy credit," or "luxury accommodations," or "charming little cottage."

Nobody can be sure you'll be delighted. Credit is seldom easy. Luxury often turns out to be common. Charming, as in the real estate ads, might be dummy.

The irritations are further aroused by advertising images that strain credibility.

The cigarette that suggests a better lifestyle but irritates your throat, the car that offers romance but gives you a greasy repair shop, the airline that offers you a better world but gives you a delay at a jammed airport.

At least the brokerage firms, in their recommendations that you buy stock, include this statement in their reports: "Past performance is not necessarily an indication of future earnings." But it's in very small print.

Add to these irritations the magazine subscription card that falls to the floor, the weatherman's "scattered" showers that fall all day, the computer that bills you for something you never bought — and you have a pail of frustrations.

Legislative News Coverage Changes

RALEIGH — As the General Assembly has changed over the past 30 years, so has the way in which the news media cover the assembly.

Dick Hatch, director of public affairs for WUNC-TV and since 1955 a member of the capitol press corps, says the focus of legislative news reporting has shifted from social and political angles to a concentration on issues.

Writing in the latest issue of Popular Government magazine, Hatch gives several reasons for this change. First, he noted that until 1973 the Legislature only met once every two years. Now it meets every year. Sessions are also longer. They used to run about 90 days; now they run 150 or more. With the Legislature in session so much, the mere fact that legislators are in town is no longer news.

The legislative process, although still far from being completely open, has opened up considerably in recent years, Hatch says. With more meetings open to reporters, more issue discussion can be reported to the public.

The Legislature also produces more information for public consumption today, Hatch says. The wealth of study committee reports that are available in the library means reporters have more solid information to use in their stories.

Access to reports and meetings have meant reporters could focus in on the issue under discussion and move away from stories simply about the politicking going on in stairwells and back rooms of the old Sir Walter Raleigh Hotel, where most legislators stayed.

That increased openness has changed the make-up of the press corps, he says. "With few published reports and an institution that often made key decisions at unofficial meetings in hotel rooms, only the experienced reporter who knew the people and the background of the issues could make sense of what was going on," he writes. Today, reporters can breeze into the assembly and get a fairly coherent story even if they had no previous experience in the building.

Changes in the news business have also meant changes in the way the assembly is covered. Television arrived in 1955 when WUNC broadcast House debate on court-ordered desegregation. Nightly news coverage of the assembly has been growing slowly since, he says. With the coming of one-hour local news programs on some TV stations, it is likely that increased broadcast time will be dedicated to assembly news.

On the other hand, some newspapers have cut their coverage of the assembly, Hatch contends. They "respond to surveys showing their readers more interested in features and people news."

Hatch sees some important changes in assembly news coverage in the coming 16 years. The assembly will meet almost continuously as issues become increasingly complex and as state government assumes responsibilities now in the federal domain, he predicts. The reporter covering the assembly will be there continuously and will have new resources to aid his or her reporting. But that reporter will still have to develop a more in-depth understanding of specific issues than is required today and, with the spread of the assembly to a second building in 1983, it is almost certain that the number of reporters on the job will increase.

Several years ago, the U.S. House opened its meetings to gavel-to-gavel coverage on the C-Span network. Hatch says continuous TV coverage of the N.C. General Assembly may arrive some day. He suspects that public television will produce such coverage but says it would most likely be transmitted by cable or along another television channel.

Mondale Chaffs Over Retreat

ST. PAUL, Minn. — Walter Mondale felt a personal "sense of betrayal" over Geraldine Ferraro's retreat from her promise to publicize husband John Zaccaro's income tax returns. He has been battling for his political life to reverse Zaccaro's veto.

Fritz Mondale would not say anything publicly that would pit himself against Gerry Ferraro. Her presence on the Democratic ticket was the dramatic boost he needed following the convention. Privately, however, he minces no words over his anguish, described by one intimate as a "sense of betrayal." Ms. Ferraro's damaging handling of her husband's tax returns has shaken up Mondale. It has left him angry and feeling badly used. Insiders believe that he was not even informed in advance of the Aug. 12 bombshell in which she reneged on her tax-release pledge.

Democratic politicians were astounded at reports from inside the Mondale camp that Ms. Ferraro had failed to inform her chief before her meeting with the press in which she disclosed her husband's veto. But she has displayed feisty independence as Mondale's running mate before. Some Democratic operatives even saw in this streak of independence an asset in converting Ms. Ferraro into a new political star.

On at least two occasions she has refused to follow campaign schedules ordained by the Mondale staff. Mondale backed her up. She has also asserted her strong will to set down high-ranking politicians with whom she disagreed.

But that strength of will grows elusive when it comes to her husband's tax returns, an issue that dwarfs all the earlier disputes about campaign schedules. Indeed, Ms. Ferraro's inability to convert her husband into her political partner on so vital a matter as tax disclosure gave critics of a woman vice president a billboard-sized target. "If she can't convince him," a Democratic supporter asked us, "how will she handle Congress?"

Mondale's problem was not Rep. Ferraro's inability to influence her husband but whether he had clout enough to influence both of them and end the debilitating controversies over financial disclosure that are corroding his campaign. They include her claimed exemption from listing her husband's financial holdings under House reporting rules after her 1978 election; the family loans she illegally used to finance that campaign, and then the infinitely more damaging battle over Zaccaro's tax returns.

Mondale knows that Zaccaro's mind must be changed and that one agent of change is Gerry Ferraro. But her offhand way of revealing the veto left Mondale aghast. The record hints at Ms. Ferraro's rationale.

Not once since she started out as an assistant district attorney in Queens has Zaccaro exposed even a corner of his complex financial affairs as a real estate developer and property owner. Ms. Ferraro has never disputed her husband's demand for financial privacy. That helps explain her strange disclaimer in refusing to disclose his income tax returns. Mondale intimates here and in Washington say that when Ms. Ferraro was asked to issue her written pledge to publicize her own and her husband's income tax returns, three days after the Democratic Convention, Mondale got no inkling from her of possible troubles ahead.

That explains the "sense of betrayal." It is a grievance Fritz Mondale could shed under only one circumstance: a complete turnaround by John Zaccaro. Whatever shadowy hobboblins lurk in the Zaccaro tax returns — and there may be none at all — they pale in comparison to continued stonewalling.

Some Are Looking Ahead To '88

DALLAS (AP) — In cameo auditions for a role that won't be cast until 1988, Republican candidates-in-waiting are doing some advertising at Ronald Reagan's convention.

It doesn't mean much, although it does provide a trivial pursuit for politicians and onlookers at a purely predictable, clockwork convention.

The one thing that does count for 1988 is the ritual renomination of Vice President George Bush, to run with the Republicans' leading man again and thereby to remain the candidate most eligible to succeed him atop the ticket.

The party's more ardent conservatives don't like that prospect. They are not resisting Vice President Bush in 1984; he's part of the package. But they will fight to resist his promotion in 1988. They suspect that Bush may be a closet moderate.

An Associated Press survey of 1,687 delegates to the Dallas convention ranked Bush the favorite for 1988, preferred by 42 percent. Rep. Jack Kemp of New York was second with 17 percent, Senate Republican Leader Howard H. Baker Jr. third with 8 percent. Then came the Doles — 2 percent for Sen. Robert J. of Kansas, 1 percent for his wife, Elizabeth, the secretary of transportation.

That might be called momentum for Bush if one national convention foretold another, which seldom happens. Then too, Bush learned what momentum is worth when he was contesting Reagan for the 1980 nomination. He claimed "big Mo" just before Reagan clobbered him in the primaries.

These days, Bush is saying all the right things at a convention commanded by conservatives. "I feel totally compatible with what the president is doing and yes, I would take this country, try to, in the same direction," he said.

"I don't think about 1988," Bush said in an NBC-TV interview. "...

I've done nothing direct or indirect — scheduling, personnel, anything — where somebody can say, 'Hey, he's playing 1988 politics.' I believe no politics has been the best politics."

He is, however, making nearly 60 appearances around town during five days at the Dallas convention, and taking a slap or two at his detractors. "There are some on the fringes of American politics that I'll never appeal to," Bush said. He added that a lot of them aren't even Republicans.

Bush's spot on the ticket also endows him with some extra time and attention at the convention microphone — and on national television. Not much, but maybe a few bonus minutes as befits a vice president.

Baker, Kemp and the Doles get their rationed appearances first.

Baker led off Monday night. He is leaving the Senate to become, almost certainly, a full-time candidate for president in 1988. He tried in 1980, but faltered early in the primary elections.

His convention speech was a 10-minute collection of Republican applause lines, as in:

"Misery has become very important to Walter Mondale. When he's in office, he creates it. When he's out, he invents it."

He drew appropriate applause, but the performance was no show-stopper.

Kemp and the Doles are on the program Tuesday night.

None of those moments are likely to be remembered for long. Nor will they be likely to translate into so much as a vote when the 1988 competition begins.

There are exceptions, but the forecasts, the guessing games and the ringing pronouncements of the would-be successors to power at one national convention seldom last long enough to affect the next one.

One of the exceptions echoes from 1960, when the Republicans met in Chicago and nominated Richard M. Nixon. The conservative wing wasn't happy that year, but Sen. Barry Goldwater lectured them on behalf of the ticket.

"Let's grow up, conservatives," he said. "If we want to take this party back — and I think we can someday — let's get to work."

They took over in 1964, nominating Goldwater, shouting down liberal and moderate dissenters, and watching the GOP ticket lose in a landslide to Lyndon B. Johnson. That was the year Reagan first moved to the national political stage, as a campaigner and a fundraiser for the Goldwater ticket.

Nixon, twice a loser, was nowhere to be seen, and nowhere in the guessing about the 1968 ticket. But he led it, and won the White House.

There were a lot of bets to be won by any political oddsmaker willing to speculate at convention time in 1972 that the 1976 nominees would be Republican Gerald R. Ford versus Democrat Jimmy Carter. None were.

Then again, the closely contested 1976 GOP convention in which Ford edged Reagan pointed clearly to the challenger's nomination four years later.

All of which proves nothing except that speculation about 1988 is highly speculative. It does, however, serve the good purpose of keeping politicians out of the noonday sun.

It's very hot in Dallas.

Strength For Today

When Abraham Lincoln was a young man he had just read through a grammar book for the first time. He who was to produce some of the finest prose had only about a year of formal schooling. In his young manhood he bought for $1 a barrel of odds and ends, sight unseen. The barrel contained mostly junk and trash, but there was among this a copy of Blackstone's "Commentary on the Laws of England." Lincoln seized upon it eagerly and studied it night and day. The volume played an important role in the formation of Lincoln's mind and career. Everything he thought and did in his legal and political career went back to Blackstone's principles.

Let us not be too preoccupied by what lies around the corner for us, but let us be conscious of the fact that destiny may at any time be ready to put its hand on our shoulder. A slight event may change the world for us and for the world's inhabitants.

Tar Heel Delegate Says Blacks Can Gain Strength In Two-Party System

By MARY ANNE RHYNE
Associated Press Writer

DALLAS (AP) — Blacks in North Carolina could increase their political clout and restore the two-party system by becoming Republicans, says Richard Bishop of Fayetteville.

Bishop, who is retired from the military, has learned about Republicans and Democrats firsthand. He spent 18 years in the Democratic Party and joined the GOP in 1968. He ran for county commissioner in 1974 and this year is a delegate to the Republican National Convention, the state's only elected black delegate.

Claude Allen of Raleigh, spokesman for Sen. Jesse Helms' re-election campaign, was elected an alternate and is serving as a delegate because Sen. John East has been unable to attend.

"This party has done more for me," he said. "I don't want promises, I want preservation. The Democratic Party gave me promises."

As a Republican, Bishop has served four terms on the Cumberland County Board of Elections. He said he believes he was not selected for the job because of his race but because of his background.

Bishop said he likes the Republican Party because it has taken less tax money from citizens and believes in fewer government programs. He quickly admits that not all people agree with him but he insists they need a choice of parties and philosophies.

"The two-party system is not working," said Bishop, noting that

North Carolina's registration is 3-to-1 Democratic. "The checks and balances need to be there."

Bishop said blacks could help restore those balances by considering the Republican Party. He said that if all blacks left Democrats at one time to join the Republican Party it would be worse than the stock market crash in the 1930s.

Broken promises should make blacks consider becoming Republicans, he said. Bishop cited as one example presidential candidate Jesse Jackson and his inability to influence Democratic nominee Walter Mondale.

"If they don't see what happened I don't know what it will take to wake them up," he said.

Bishop stands out in the crowd because fewer than 5 percent of the 2,235 delegates to the Republican convention are black. He said the absence of blacks is "lonesome, heartbreaking, a problem I hope one day will be solved. They're not only letting me down, they're letting themselves down and the generation behind us down."

Bishop acknowledged that being one of the few blacks in the state's Republican Party has not been easy.

"It's sometimes degrading," he said. "I have to prove and prove what I'm about. They don't believe I'm for real."

Bishop said he's in the GOP to stay but after joining both parties he thinks there should be more emphasis on individuals than parties.

He said he wanted to attend the convention partly because he feels a responsibility to seek a solution to his neighbors' problems and partly because, "If you sit at home you get it second-hand and you may not get the true picture."

But Bishop said blacks should not wait for other minority group members to join the party before they consider doing so.

"The role model is within ourselves," he said. "We must set that pace."

MacDonald Sues Author

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A former U.S. Army Special Forces doctor convicted of killing his wife and two daughters filed suit against the author of the book on the case, charging the book contained "multiple false statements."

Attorneys for Jeffrey MacDonald, who is serving three life sentences for the 1970 murders, filed the $15 million suit in federal court Monday.

MacDonald said he let author Joe McGinniss live in his house and allowed him access to his most intimate thoughts because he thought the book would give a positive account of the notorious case.

But instead, McGinniss, who wrote "Fatal Vision," "became convinced Dr. MacDonald was guilty of the murders of his wife and children," the suit said.

MacDonald also wants an accounting of royalties McGinniss has received and he claimed the book was "multiple false statements of fact."

The former Green Beret and Long Beach emergency room physician has claimed his family was bludgeoned to death in their Fort Bragg, N.C., home by drug-crazed hippies.

Attorneys Cite Misuse Of Funds

RALEIGH (AP) — A report by two attorneys for the Wake County school board says the school system may have misused funds for a variety of programs besides the previously disclosed misuse of $490,000 in federal funds earmarked for educationally disadvantaged children.

The report said the school system may have misused money intended for vocational education, bilingual education, refugee children and emotionally disturbed children.

Attorneys George Rogister Jr. and Richard Schwartz recommended the school board conduct further investigations into the use of federal block grant funds, bilingual grant funds and funds for refugee children.

The report, released Monday, said the money earmarked for disadvantaged children was used to pay basic math teachers because school administrators failed to implement the required program for disadvantaged children.

The report concluded that "the breakdowns in the system were so widespread that it is impossible to isolate any single act or individual that directly caused the problem."

Fort Speaks To A&T Convocation

GREENSBORO (AP) — North Carolina A&T State University must seek to meet the challenges of future job markets while being accountable to its history, Chancellor Edward Fort told faculty and staff members Monday.

Fort said the university must also seek a balance between the exploding growth in high technology and continued demand for graduates with liberal arts backgrounds.

"This campus and others like it play a key role in the projected success of the state of North Carolina and its relationship to trans-world competition," he said.

"Our responsibility is to manage carefully our resources to ensure quality education for our students," he said. "The '80s have ushered in an era of increased accountability of public institutions. The clamor for increased accountability is bound to continue."

Murder Charges Are Dropped

RALEIGH (AP) — Murder charges were dismissed Monday against a man and a woman because the 3-year-old son of the victim was judged too young to testify about the events leading to his mother's death.

Charges against Roy Lee Banks, 25, and Cynthia Honeycutt Howard, 21, were voluntarily dropped Monday by Assistant District Attorney Evelyn W. Hill.

A neighbor found Sheryl L. Medlin, 18, floating in her bathtub with a knife in her chest in March 1983. Her son Mikey, then 2½, was with her.

Ms. Hill previously had sought to have the 3-year-old boy testify, but a judge ruled the child was too young to testify because he did not understand the difference between truth and falsehood.

Flaherty Gets Safety Lecture

DALLAS (AP) — North Carolina Republican party chairman Dave Flaherty and his wife, Nancy, came to Dallas looking for a lesson in politics, but they got a safety lecture instead.

Flaherty arrived last week and that same day he was caught jay walking. "I was just walking along looking and I kept walking (across the intersection)," he said. "It was embarrassing."

Flaherty said the policewoman gave him and his wife a warning when she learned they were from out of town, but asked them if they didn't have traffic lights in North Carolina.

In an organizational meeting of N.C. delegates, Flaherty warned that Dallas takes its traffic laws seriously.

Father Indicted For Murder

MARSHALL, N.C. (AP) — A Madison County grand jury has indicted a Hot Springs man on charges of fatally poisoning his 5-year-old daughter.

Richard Lewis Johnson, 36, was indicted Monday on a charge of first-degree murder. His arraignment hearing was scheduled for Sept. 4 in Madison County Superior Court.

Johnson was arrested at his home July 4, two weeks after his daughter, Joyce, died at Memorial Mission Hospital in Asheville June 20. The child had been treated twice before at the hospital for an undetermined illness, said Dr. H.E. Hinman, Buncombe County medical examiner.

An autopsy determined there was poison in her body, Hinman said. Johnson, the son of former Hot Springs Police Chief Leroy Johnson, was denied bail after his arrest and has been held in the Madison County jail.

At a Madison County District Court hearing Aug. 2, Dr. Tom Howard, who treated the child the night she died, testified that she may have had a fatal reaction to an insecticide, said District Attorney Tom Rusher.

Police Chief Is Resigning

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — Lucius A. Powell, Winston-Salem police chief for the past four years, announced his resignation, saying he has been considering a "substantial career change."

"I don't have a certain future in that regard yet, but I have been in law enforcement for 21 years, and before that I spent eight years on active duty in the military as an air traffic controller," Powell, 48, told city aldermen Monday night.

"There are a lot of other things to do, and I want to have the freedom to do those things," he said.

Sworn in as police chief in May 1980, Powell succeeded Thomas A. Surratt, who had resigned. Powell previously served as assistant police chief in Albuquerque, N.M.

Nazi Acquitted Of Trespassing

BAKERSVILLE, N.C. (AP) — Avowed Nazi Frank Braswell, cleared of trespassing at a Hardee's restaurant, said he didn't know if he would drop a $30 million federal civil rights suit.

District Court Judge Charles Phillip Ginn Monday found Braswell innocent of trespassing as charged by former Spruce Pine Hardee's manager Brenda Meyerhoffer.

Ginn recommended Braswell drop the suit filed in July because "I don't think you have much of a case over there."

Braswell said he had not decided whether to take Ginn's advice. But his wife, Patsy, convicted last year with him of conspiring to firebomb Greensboro in 1980, said the federal case would be pursued, "though it may be dismissed against some of the parties."

The suit seeks $5 million from Regency Investments Inc. of Boone, $5 million from Hardee's Inc. of Spruce Pine, $6 million from the town of Spruce Pine, $2 million from Spruce Pine Police Chief Ray Gunter, and $1 million each from 12 other individuals, including police officers and Hardee's employees.

Braswell testified that the employees of the fast-food restaurant and Spruce Pine policemen have been engaged in "a murder conspiracy against me because of my political viewpoints."

Cyrus Says Hunt Leaf Plan Helpful

RALEIGH (AP) — A proposal by Gov. Jim Hunt would keep tobacco farmers from paying more than the $112 million they've already paid for any losses of the federal price support program for the 1982 and 1983 crops, a state tobacco official said Monday.

"What the governor was saying is that there is going to have to be some further federal assistance to get from where we are to where we've got to be to stay in the business of tobacco production," said John Cyrus, tobacco affairs specialist for the state Department of Agriculture.

Cyrus said growers have already been assessed $112 million for the 1982 and 1983 crops through a fee of 7 cents per pound sold.

But Cyrus said losses from the two crops might exceed the funds collected, forcing the government to use assessments from the 1984 crop to pay losses from earlier crops. Hunt's proposal would have the government absorb any additional losses for those two years.

"There is really no way that farmers can shoulder all of the loss that is likely to occur unless we change the program," Cyrus said. "What the governor is saying is that we should let the amount already collected apply to any losses from the 1982 and 1983 crops."

"If we can get the burden of the 1982 and 1983 crops behind us, we would have turned the corner and things will look up," Cyrus said.

Fred Bond, general manager of the Flue-Cured Tobacco Cooperative Stabilization Corp., said no one really knows whether the government will lose money on the 1982 and 1983 crops, but that most growers would probably applaud Hunt's proposal.

Cool, Dry Weather Expected In State

By The Associated Press
The calendar says August, but the weather is saying September.

A large area of high pressure building south from the Ohio-Pennsylvania region is expected to control North Carolina weather for the next couple of days, bringing rather cool and dry air.

A weak low pressure system moving toward the South Carolina coast may bring some cloudiness to the extreme southeast by tonight, but most areas of the state should remain clear.

Another cold front moving toward North Carolina will be close enough to the state by late Thursday to cause scattered afternoon and evening thunderstorms. Thunderstorms could linger into Friday and Saturday.

But until Thursday, daytime temperatures will remain mild and the air should be unseasonably dry. Lows tonight could drop below 60 in the northern mountains, and will be in the low to mid 60s elsewhere.

to the tobacco farmer would be welcomed," Bond said. "It would be needed to maintain a sound tobacco program."

Hunt, who is seeking the Senate seat now held by Republican Jesse Helms, made the proposal Saturday during a "Young Farmers For Hunt" rally in Rock Ridge.

Claude Allen, a spokesman for Helms, was in Dallas with Helms last week and said he had not heard of Hunt's proposal.

Highest Grocery Bills Found In Alaska

By RANDOLPH E. SCHMID
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Residents of the Dakotas and Rhode Island pay the nation's smallest grocery bills while the biggest supermarket tabs are rung up in Alaska and Nevada, government statistics show.

The average American spent $973.61 on groceries a year, according to figures from the 1982 Census of Retail Sales. But spending varied widely from state to state for a variety of reasons.

Alaskans paid the most for groceries — $1,503.37 per resident — largely because food prices are driven up by high transportation costs. At the other end of the scale, residents of North Dakota, where many people tend their own gardens and raise livestock, each spent $788.22 during the year.

The state where residents came closest to being typical was Iowa. Residents there spent $973.15 each at grocery stores in 1982, only 46 cents short of the national average.

The Food Marketing Institute has estimated 1982 per capita grocery spending at $21 a week, or $1,092, slightly more than the Associated Press calculation based on census figures.

Spokesman Jack Cergol said the trade association found food spending tended to be lower in the Midwest and highest in Western states, although the group's statistics were not done on a state-by-state basis.

Residents of central cities and suburbs tended to spend more on groceries than rural residents, he said.

Ralph L. Parlett of the Agriculture Department's economic research service pointed out that spending on food varies for a wide variety of population and demographic reasons.

Alaska is usually the most costly state on all measures, he said, because goods have to be shipped long distances to the state, where the residents are widely scattered in isolated outposts.

He also noted that Alaskans have the most to spend with the nation's highest per capita income.

Nevada, the No. 2 state for grocery spending, is also in the top 10 in per capita income.

In addition to finding lower average spending in states with more agriculture, ethnic and cultural differences influence eating habits — and thus food spending — in differing states.

A preference for local seafood or fruits and vegetables in some areas, for example, would tend to lower expenditures, since meat is generally the most costly item in a family's food budget, according to studies by the Agriculture Department.

Also, studies have shown that the elderly tend to spend less on food, and some states at the lower end of the cost scale have more elderly than some higher cost areas. The median age in 1980 for Rhode Island, for example, was 31.8, while at the other end of the scale the median age in Alaska was 26.1.

North Dakota was the only state where annual spending was less than $800. Rhode Island, with per capita spending of $826.27, slipped into second place, followed by South Dakota at $826.93.

North Dakota ranked 24th in per capita income in 1983, according to the Commerce Department's Bureau of Economic Affairs. Income for Rhode Islanders ranked 23rd in the nation, while South Dakota was No. 38.

Nationally the Census Bureau counted 128,128 grocery stores across the nation in 1982, up from 126,842 five years earlier. These stores had sales totaling $225.6 billion, a 56.4 percent increase over five years.

In addition, grocery stores had 2,020,729 employees, according to the 1982 count, and a payroll of $21.3 billion, or $10,523 per worker. The markets averaged 16 workers apiece.

Judge Says Guards Framed Inmate

NEW YORK (AP) — A judge awarded $90,000 to a former "model prisoner" and his wife, saying guards angry with the inmate's success as a jailhouse lawyer framed the couple with false charges.

U.S. District Judge Abraham D. Sofaer said Monday the guards rigged charges against Thomas Morrison, 56, by planting contraband in a package his wife brought to the Green Haven Correctional Facility.

The three New York state correction officers were fined $5,000 each.

Sofaer said the guards planted a vial of fluorescent ink in the package in September 1978. Because the ink is used to stamp marks on visitor's hands, the vial left the impression that Morrison planned to use the ink in an escape plan.

"The charges against them appear to be nothing less than a wicked joke," the judge said.

The judge called Morrison "a model prisoner." He also said a marijuana cigarette was planted in Morrison's cell.

Sofaer said that once the vial was "discovered" by the guards who planted it, Morrison was branded a security risk and moved to an isolation cell at Clinton Correctional Facility while his wife, Madeleine

Morrison, 54, was arrested by state police on false charges of smuggling contraband. The charges later were dropped.

While prison administrators were unaware the charges were false, they used the opportunity to rid themselves of Morrison, who filed many suits against them, Sofaer said. One of Morrison's suits overturned the state's practice of paying no interest on inmates' savings accounts.

Ford Recalling Trucks

DETROIT (AP) — Ford Motor Co. says it will recall about 4,200 heavy trucks produced from 1981-1984 to correct a problem with a steering shaft assembly that could disconnect and cause the driver to lose control.

Ford also said Monday that it was advising owners of 29,850 diesel-powered pickup trucks to bring their vehicles to dealers for inspection and possible installation of shields for their fuelwater separators.

No injuries have resulted from either problem, said Ford spokesman Chuck Snearly.

The steering shaft problems involved Ford's LL-9000 and LTL-9000 series of heavy trucks, the company said in a statement. The owners of some 1983- and 1984-model 6.9-liter diesel 4x4 F-250 heavy duty and F-350 series chassis cab vehicles were being told to check with dealers for possible installation of shields, Ford said.

Cruise Fire Leaves 31 Hurt

MIAMI (AP) — Some of the 738 people aboard a docking cruise ship panicked and knocked people over trying to flee a smoky fire that injured 31 people before firefighters brought it under control early today, officials and passengers said.

The fire was reported aboard the Scandinavian Sun at 11:16 p.m. Monday, and was reported out at 12:20 a.m. today, said Miami Fire Department spokeswoman Christie Hickman.

But Miami Fire Chief Ken McCullough said later. "We're not sure if it's out yet. There aren't any flames but the heat is incredible. We don't know if it's just the steel holding the heat, though."

The ship's captain, Finn Hansen, said the fire began in an auxiliary engine room shortly after the ship docked. The cause of the blaze was an electrical malfunction in a transformer in the engine room, McCullough said.

A sister ship, the Scandinavian Sea, burned for days at Port Canaveral in March after a blaze started in a cabin and spread through several passenger decks. The fire started as the ship returned from a one-day gambling "cruise to nowhere."

Passengers said they first saw smoke and flames Monday as the 441-foot ship docked at the end of a one-day cruise to Grand Bahama island.

The blaze spread to two decks above the engine room, but no one was on either deck at the time, McCullough said.

"Smoke just started billowing out. The main hold was full of smoke. The whole lower deck was full of smoke," said Connie Danluck of Miami, who went on the cruise with her two daughters, ages 8 and 9.

She and her daughters were among 50 passengers who had to leave the ship by way of a 40-foot fire truck ladder.

Vivian Quevedo, 22, of Miami, said she and several relatives were in the lobby when they felt the heat and smoke. Several passengers panicked and ran for exits, knocking down other passengers, she said.

"We had to pick somebody up," Miss Quevedo said. "There was this guy who was with us during the trip who has muscular dystrophy. He was knocked down and people were walking on him. My dad had to pick him up."

There were 537 passengers and 201 crew members aboard the Scandinavian Sun, owned by Miami-based Scandinavian World Cruises, said Coast Guard Capt. Rene Roussel.

The injured were taken to three hospitals. Ms. Hickman said. She said two firefighters suffered first-and second-degree burns to the ears and were treated and released from Mercy Hospital.

Most of the injured suffered smoke inhalation, minor abrasions, cuts and bruises, said Miami police spokesman Juan Santos. Hospital spokesmen said all were treated and released.

Scandinavian World Cruise officials at the scene refused to talk to reporters.

Postal Workers' Unions Leave Strike Door Open

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Unions for 520,000 postal workers authorized their leaders to enter binding arbitration to settle their deadlocked contract talks, but left the door open for an illegal strike that the government says would trigger mass firings.

Separate conventions Monday of the American Postal Workers Union and the National Association of Letter Carriers rang with denunciations of Postmaster General William F. Bolger and evoked memories of the ill-fated air traffic controllers' strike of three years ago.

The unions represent all but about 100,000 of the nation's postal workers.

If negotiations are not resumed, the arbitration process could culminate in a binding three-year contract in December. Part of that process includes fact-finding boards which are currently considering the issues.

All 600,000 postal workers have been without a contract since July 21 when they rejected the government's "final offer" of a three-year wage freeze and a two-tier wage scale under which new employees would be paid an average of $5,300 a year less than veterans in the same jobs.

The postal workers now earn an average of $23,000 annually and benefits worth about $4,600. Before talks broke off, the unions were demanding wage and benefit increases averaging 10 percent the first year of any new contract.

Bolger has vowed to fire strikers and allow private companies to deliver the mail if postal employees walk off the job in defiance of federal law forbidding strikes by government employees.

Nevertheless, the unions refused on Monday to rule out the possibility they would walk off the job.

Moe Biller, president of the 300,000-member APWU, called Bolger "the most anti-union postmaster general in history," declaring, "This union is on a roll and if Postmaster Bolger stands in the way we're going to roll right over him."

"Let me put the U.S. Postal Service on notice," said Vincent Sombrotto, president of the 220,000-member letter carriers union. "If it ... tries once again to cut wages or benefits, our union has given me the power to call a strike."

Mrs. Khrushchev Dies

MOSCOW (AP) — Nina Petrovna Khrushchev, widow of ousted Soviet leader Nikita Khrushchev, died earlier this month in a Moscow hospital and was buried next to her husband, a Communist Party official said today. She was 84.

An official at the Leninsky region branch of Moscow's Communist Party told The Associated Press that Mrs. Khrushchev died the night of Aug. 8-9. She did not give the cause of death, but said Khrushchev's grandson and namesake, Nikita, reported his grandmother died in a hospital in southwest Moscow.

Mrs. Khrushchev was buried three or four days later next to her husband in Moscow's Novodevichy Cemetery, the official said.

The cemetery is the most prestigious burial place in the capital after the Kremlin wall, where all former rulers of the Soviet Union except Khrushchev are buried.

Her husband's death of a heart attack in September 1971 at age 77 was officially announced in similarly low key fashion, with a very brief obituary without headline or portrait in Pravda, the Communist Party daily newspaper.

Khrushchev, who became Communist Party secretary in 1953, was removed from power in 1964 and lived in obscurity until his death.

Little is known about Mrs. Khrushchev's early life. Born in 1900, she met her husband when he worked in the Donbas coal region in the Ukraine in the early 1920s. She became his second wife in 1924 and bore him three children, daughters Rada and Yelena, and a son, Sergei.

Big Day For Elephant

DALLAS (AP) — A flag-waving, harmonica-playing elephant named Baby Star is getting more ink and air time than some human big shots at the Republican National Convention.

"It couldn't happen to a nicer elephant," said owner Bruno Loyale, a trapeze artist turned tentmaker. "She's living it up and really enjoying it. And none of it has gone to her head yet."

As a member of the species that symbolizes the GOP, Baby Star's having a convention filled with days of wine and roses and nights of posh parties that most folks in this convention-crazed, socially conscious city would kill to get in to.

And to top it off, she may have a rendezvous with President Reagan. She's already posed with VIPs captivated the crowd at a chic department store, and appeared on national television.

The odds are awfully good that the demand for elephants in Dallas has never been as large or as lucrative, and Bruno is the first to admit it.

"Baby Star's working a total of 82 hours this week and pulling in an average of $1,000 an hour," he said. "I wish there would be a Republican convention the rest of the year."

The 750-pound, four-foot tall Baby Star is not the only elephant making the Dallas social circuit, but she's probably the busiest.

The ever-popular Emma, a 12-year-old resident of the International Wildlife Park, has been making only limited and prestigious engagements, such as Monday night's prime-time television session at the Dallas Convention Center.

Reagan Campaigns In Midwest

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, probing for Walter Mondale's weak points in key heartland states, is charging that a Mondale-backed bill to require use of U.S. parts in imported cars "would destroy far more jobs than it would save."

Reagan leveled the charge Monday as he ended two days of campaigning through three Midwestern states that could prove crucial in the Nov. 6 presidential election.

He then returned to Washington to work on his acceptance speech today. He will travel to the Republican National Convention in Dallas on Wednesday for his renomination and will deliver his acceptance speech Thursday.

Ken Khachigian, the speechwriter credited by many Reagan aides with the best understanding of the president's speaking style, traveled with him aboard Air Force One and was to meet privately with Reagan at the White House today to put the final touches on the address.

In Decatur, Ill., Reagan charged that Mondale's support of legislation that would require foreign automakers to incorporate U.S.-made parts in their cars could come back to haunt American farmers.

The so-called domestic content proposal could trigger a wave of retaliatory protectionism that would punish American farmers, who are heavily dependent on crop exports, Reagan said in a speech at Millikin University.

Mondale, the Democratic presidential nominee, "couldn't have been thinking of American workers when he made his promise" to the AFL-CIO, Reagan said, adding that "domestic content would destroy far more jobs than it would save."

"A true friend of farmers would renounce immediately his or her support for such misguided legislation," the president added in remarks at an agricultural forum. "Our administration is determined to create jobs the right way, with economic growth and technological innovation."

The president didn't mention the domestic content issue during an earlier stop in Ohio, where labor unions strongly support such legislation as a means of revitalizing the country's manufacturing industry hard hit by recession early in Reagan's term. Instead, during a stop in Cincinnati, Reagan hammered at Mondale's announced intention to seek a tax increase next year, calling it a "typical knee-jerk reaction" of the Democrats.

"And believe me," Reagan added to the cheers of several thousand flag-waving supporters, "when their knee jerks, you get kicked."

Reagan himself has tread a narrow path on the tax issue, emphasizing his opposition to higher taxes while leaving room for some new revenue-raising measure if the economy demands it. He said Monday he would look at a tax increase only as a "last desperate resort" and dwelled instead on his pledge to simplify the tax system.

Kirkpatrick Creates Stir At GOP Session, But Doesn't Plan Change

DALLAS (AP) — United Nations Ambassador Jeane Kirkpatrick got a warm reception from Republicans for her hard-line views on foreign policy, but says she is still "a kind of welfare-state liberal" and doesn't plan to switch from the Democratic Party to the GOP.

"I don't have any such plans," she said in an interview with CBS News after her speech to the GOP national convention Monday night.

Mrs. Kirkpatrick was greeted by signs saying such things as "Kirkpatrick Is Fantastic" and "Jeane's OK for Reagan." The crowd applauded 13 times in 25 paragraphs. The band even played "Happy Days are Here Again," the traditional Democratic theme song.

Mrs. Kirkpatrick said, "I am grateful that you should invite me, a lifelong Democrat. On the other hand, I realize you are inviting many lifelong Democrats to join our common cause."

In the CBS interview, however, she sounded as though she was making common cause with conservative Republicans in the foreign policy area only.

"I care about a society which works, which provides a good standard of living for everybody and a minimum standard of living for everybody, in which people care about each other, in which we have strong voluntary institutions. I would call myself a kind of a welfare state liberal on domestic affairs, in fact," she said.

In her speech, the UN ambassador lashed out what she called the "blame America first crowd" in the Democratic party and said that President Reagan's election ended "a dismal period of retreat and decline" under the administration of former President Carter.

"In the 3 1/2 years since his inauguration, the United States has grown stronger, safer, more confident, and we are at peace," she said.

"And at each step of the way, the same people who were responsible for America's decline have insisted that the president's policies would fail."

Bush Doubts Black Vote

DALLAS (AP) — Vice President George Bush says Walter Mondale cannot depend on the votes of blacks who supported the Rev. Jesse Jackson, but he concedes that President Reagan probably won't get many, either.

At a news conference Monday, Bush also brushed aside his ultra-conservative critics as "irrelevant" and said he won't worry about them if he ever runs for president. An Associated Press survey showed Bush the hands-down favorite among GOP convention delegates as the presidential nominee in 1988.

Touching base with varied constituent groups, Bush was meeting today with delegates from Massachusetts and New Jersey and a gathering of senior citizens after similar appearances Monday before women, blacks and Jews.

At a reception for black Republicans Monday night, Bush clapped his hands in time with the music as bandleader Lionel Hampton, playing vibes, led a rendition of "When the Saints Go Marching In." The words "Reagan and Bush" were substituted for "the saints."

Veteran's Holdout Ends

Steelers Waive Harris

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Franco Harris may have extended his 12-year pro football career by frequently running out of bounds to avoid punishing tackles.

But when the 34-year-old running back — almost certain to be named one day to the Pro Football Hall of Fame — prolonged his contract talks and missed a month of training camp, the Pittsburgh Steelers ran out of patience.

In a stunning move, the Steelers put Harris on waivers Monday. Any other NFL team can now claim Harris for a mere $100 — or $384,900 less than Harris would have been paid in 1984 under the option year clause of his contract.

"I don't think they really wanted me," Harris said at his home Monday night, floodlights from TV cameras lighting up a neighborhood located just five blocks from Three Rivers Stadium.

"I'm sorry it had to end this way. A lot of great moments, a lot of great people are in Pittsburgh," he said.

Harris needs just 363 yards to break Jim Brown's National Football League rushing record. He has been one of the most durable backs in football history, missing only nine games in his career, and gained 1,007 yards last season despite running behind an often makeshift offensive line.

Harris made the Immaculate Reception, perhaps the most famous play in football history; holds or shares 24 NFL records and is the only running back to gain more than 1,000 yards in eight seasons.

But the Steelers felt there was no time for nostalgia when Harris balked at his current contract, refused to report to training camp on July 20 and requested a two-year deal that would have paid him substantially more than his current salary.

"We did everything we could to sign Franco," Steelers President Dan Rooney said at a news conference. "We initiated the negotiations in March and negotiated in good faith throughout the talks. We wanted to do this right and we wanted him to get the record."

"We believed we were meeting their requests," Rooney said. "In fact, we thought we reached agreement last Sunday (Aug. 12) after a meeting with Franco and Bart Beier (Harris' agent) and several telephone discussions that evening. We expected Franco to report to training camp last Monday."

"Football is a team game. Franco has been a great player and always put the team before himself. By not reporting to camp, he placed us in a position where we had no alternatives left. It would not be fair to the team, players and coaches to let this situation continue."

"I am not happy with it but I have to think of the coming season and this team."

Harris said the Steelers' decision "was a surprise, no doubt about it" because he, Beier and Rooney had negotiated as late as Sunday night. Harris said he was prepared to report to camp Monday and awaited only a promised phone call from Rooney.

"When he didn't call I had a gut feeling something would happen," Harris said.

While Harris wanted a two-year contract, the Steelers refused to budge from their offer of a one-year deal with an option year provision.

"It (the option year) wasn't a big issue to me but I guess it was important enough to the Steelers to go ahead and cut me. In negotiations it seemed the Steelers did not have any need for me the second year," Harris said. "I find it hard to believe that just the option would make this happen."

Harris, the most productive playoff runner in NFL history, now finds himself feeling much the way he did when he was a senior at Penn State.

"I'm wondering if I'll get that phone call. I'll be sitting by the phone. Probably I'll be nervous," he said. "I still think I can play."

Franco's name is one of the most famous in sports. Franco and Terry Bradshaw and Mean Joe Greene were players who, to their fans, were not just part of the Pittsburgh Steelers — they were the Steelers.

Greene retired more than two years ago and Bradshaw was recently forced to retire because of an arm injury. Now, only John Stallworth, Larry Brown, Mike Webster, Jack Lambert and Donnie Shell remain as veterans of all four Steelers' Super Bowl championship teams.

"We all learn in life," Harris said. "If we don't, what's the sense of being around? I've been in football a long time and I've seen what happened to Joe Greene and Terry Bradshaw."

Harris was not a flashy, game-breaking runner like Brown or O.J. Simpson. His longest run a year ago was 19 yards. But he has been one of the most consistent and durable running backs in NFL history.

His 11,950 career yards rank only behind

Brown's 12,312 yards and he gained 1,000 or more yards in all four of the Steelers' Super Bowl championship seasons. He has 1,556 yards in playoff games alone.

Harris' best season was 1975, when the Steelers beat the Dallas Cowboys 21-17 in Super Bowl X. He ran for 1,246 yards and scored 10 touchdowns in the regular season, then gained 314 yards and scored two touchdowns in the playoffs.

Harris also was the key figure in perhaps pro football's most famous play. His shoestring catch of a deflected Bradshaw pass on the last play of a 1972 playoff game against the Oakland Raiders — the first post-season playoff game in Steelers' history — went for a game-winning, 60-yard touchdown and became known as the "Immaculate Reception."

"He is a future Pro Football Hall of Famer. He will become pro football's all-time leading rusher in 1984. His success has paralleled that of the Steelers," proclaims the Steelers' current media guide, which is highlighted by a full-color cover drawing of Harris.

Harris, one of the catalysts in the Steelers' transition from NFL doormats to a dynasty, was the only player named to the Pro Bowl every year from 1972 to 1980.

Overton Earns U.S. Team Slot

ZACHARY, La. — Kristi Overton of Greenville won the National Girls (14-17 years old) Overall title competing this past weekend.

After Overton's performance in Sunday's open women's trick division, she was selected to represent the United States at the World Cup to be held in London, England next week.

Jack Rollins, also of Greenville, placed fifth in the senior men's tricks event at the Nationals, while Jackie Rollins was sixth in the girls' tricks event.

Tigers Continue To Pound Opponents

By The Associated Press

It was a super game in what has been a super season for the Detroit Tigers.

Lance Parrish and Chet Lemon each blasted two-run homers and Darrell Evans had a solo shot to back the combined five-hit pitching of Jack Morris and Dave Rozema as the Tigers belted Oakland 14-1 Monday night. The Tigers, runaway leaders of the American League East, collected a season-high 20 hits and even forced the A's to use infielder Mark Wagner on the mound for the final 12-3 innings.

"I've played 15 years and never been in this situation before, and that's why I came here in the first place," said Evans, who joined the Tigers as a free agent this season and has been a part of their divisional romp — Detroit has a 10½-game lead on Toronto. "I think I've done a lot to help this club."

Morris, 16-8, also has done plenty. He tied St. Louis' Joaquin Andujar for the most wins by any major-league pitcher, giving up only three hits in seven innings. In his previous three games, Morris had surrendered 20 earned runs on 26 hits in 13 2-3 innings. His earned run average zoomed to 3.89 from a low of 1.88 on May 30 after he got off to a 10-1 start that included a no-hitter.

"Tonight, Jack had good control. In his last few starts, he didn't," Parrish said. "I think maybe he came away with some positive thoughts tonight."

"I think they go hand in hand. You control yourself, you have a better chance of controlling pitches."

Wagner was the only Oakland pitcher able to control his pitches. He relieved Chuck Rainey in the seventh after Manager Jackie Moore asked for volunteers.

"In the sixth inning, he went around and asked who wanted to pitch," recalled Wagner, a former Tiger, who surrendered two hits, walking one and striking out Johnny Grubb. He did not allow a run. "I went up and told him I'd go a couple of innings. When I was a little kid, I always wanted to pitch in Tiger Stadium. It was fun. It was a big thrill."

"The last time I pitched was about 1972 in American Legion ball."

Kirk Gibson and Doug Baker doubled in runs in each of the first two innings. In the four-run third, Parrish and Lemon had two-run homers.

In the fifth, Barbro Garbey singled in a run. Doug Baker scored on a wild pitch by Rainey, Alan Trammell tripled to drive Garbey home and Gibson singled Trammell across. Herndon eventually singled home Gibson.

Evans hit his homer in the sixth. Elsewhere, it was Baltimore 5, Seattle 4; Kansas City 8, Boston 5; New York 8, California 4, and Chicago 7, Texas 5.

Orioles 5, Mariners 4

Rookie Mike Young belted a pair of homers and the Orioles held on to edge visiting Seattle. Young, who homered leading off the first and third innings, has 15 home runs for his last 15 games. The triumph was the fourth in a row for the defending World Champions, their longest winning streak since May.

Al Cowens homered, his first since July 27, for Seattle.

Royals 8, Red Sox 5
George Brett singled off the Fenway Park wall to knock in three runs in the second inning, but injured his left hamstring running to first base and left the game. He'll be out on a day-to-day basis.

Starter Mark Gubicza, 9-9, surrendered all five Boston runs on solo homers by Mike Easler and Rich Gedman and a three-run blast from Marty Barrett. But relievers Joe Beckwith and Dan Quisenberry, who picked up his 33rd save, closed the door as Kansas City moved into a tie for second in the West with California, 4½ games behind Minnesota.

"I was pretty confident," said Gubicza. "With Joe and Quisenberry out there you can feel good about your chances of winning the game."

Yankees 8, Angels 4

Joe Cowley finally is making his mark in the majors after eight seasons of minor-league duty and 52 1-3 innings of work for Atlanta in 1982. Cowley struck out 13 Angels — including Reggie Jackson three times — as New York, which has scored 25 runs in its last three games, cruised.

"I never try for strikeouts," explained the 26-year-old Cowley. "But when you look up and you've got two strikes on so many hitters, you just have to go for the third."

Bobby Grich and Rob Wilfong homered for California.

White Sox 7, Rangers 5

Greg Walker hung in on Charlie Hough's knuckleball, then deposited a fastball into the seats for a three-run homer to pace Chicago. Richard Dotson, 13-10, won for only the second time in eight starts since the All-Star break.

"I don't try to overswing on knuckleballers," Walker said. "I got ahead of him and he threw a fastball inside."

Walker was ejected in the eighth for arguing a third strike.

"I didn't say anything to get thrown out of the game. I kicked dirt in frustration, not at him (home plate umpire Steve Palermo)," he explained.

Court Set To Decide Georgia Champion

ATLANTA (AP) — The Alpharetta American Legion baseball team, believing it won the state championship against Gainesville 13-9 last week, has asked a Superior Court judge to decide who holds the title.

Fulton County Superior Court Judge Isaac Jenrette issued a temporary restraining order overruling a league disqualification of the Alpharetta team and declaring the team from north Fulton County the state champion.

The Gainesville team was not represented in court Monday, but Jenrette said it could respond to his ruling Monday. The Gainesville team "has a right to be heard," Jenrette said.

Whichever team is state champion is scheduled to play in the Southeast regional tournament Wednesday in Deland, Fla.

The dispute is based on the American Legion baseball player eligibility rule saying players must be 18 years old or younger and come from high schools in the immediate area of the team.

College freshmen may play under certain conditions, but the rule covering their eligibility is unclear, Jenrette said.

Gainesville claimed that Brad Kuehn, a University of Georgia freshman, was ineligible to play for Alpharetta because his high school alma mater, Crestwood, was not in the Alpharetta area. Crestwood High School is on Colonel Drive south of Roswell.

American Legion state baseball director William Tucker initially denied Gainesville's protest, then changed his mind and ruled against Alpharetta, according to evidence presented Monday.

Jenrette reversed Tucker's decision.

Oliver, Phillies Eye Pennant

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The Philadelphia Phillies acquired Al Oliver from the San Francisco Giants with their eye on repeating as National League East champions. The veteran first baseman-outfielder thinks they made the right decision.

"This deal gives us a proven hitter," Phillies Manager Paul Owens said before Oliver belted a double to help his new team defeat his old one 6-4 Monday night.

"The thing about Oliver is that he's been through everything and doesn't scare up there," Owens said.

Ten hours before the game, the Giants traded Oliver and an unnamed minor league player to the Phillies for two unnamed minor leaguers.

Oliver, who had demanded a trade so he could continue his drive for 3,000 career hits, was batting .298 in 91 games for the Giants, with no home runs and 34 RBIs. He has been in and out of the Giants lineup for most of the season with injuries.

The 15-year veteran has a lifetime average of .305 — fifth highest among active NL players — and has more than 2,600 hits.

Oliver is expected to provide the Phillies with left-handed hitting they lost when a knee injury sidelined Joe Lefebvre for the season and a pulled hamstring put Tim Corcoran on the disabled list.

"We have a lot of hitters in our lineup who haven't been through a pennant race, and Oliver's experience is going to help us," Owens said.

The Phillies stand six games behind the Chicago Cubs, with the New York Mets three back.

Oliver said he had expected to go to an American League team to fill in as a designated hitter.

"But this is a pleasant surprise," he said.

"It's been a tough season trying to adjust to not being with a contender and trying to adjust to being in and out of the lineup after playing regularly."

"Since coming back from the disabled list (Aug. 7), I've probably hit the ball harder than I have all year. I'm back to my old self. The only thing missing is the right trajectory for the long ball, but Philly is a good place to come and this would be a good time to start hitting them out," he said.

"Now I'm looking forward to helping them. ...The No. 1 thing for me would be to win a World Series," Oliver said.

Owens indicated Oliver will take Len Matuszek's place, at least for the next several weeks. Matuszek is batting .240, but he has 10 homers and 33 RBIs in fewer at-bats than Oliver.

"We might find ways to play both Lenny and Oliver at the same time if they get hot. But we just felt we needed an experienced hitter," Owens said.

To make room for Oliver, the Phillies placed catcher Bo Diaz on the 21-day disabled list with an inflamed left knee. Diaz has not fully recovered from surgery he underwent May 1 on the knee, the team said.

Oliver, 37, was acquired by the Giants on Feb. 27 from the Montreal Expos in exchange for Fred Breining and Max Venable. Last year he batted .300 for Montreal, his eighth straight .300 season.

Oliver was signed by the Pittsburgh Pirates in 1964 and batted .285 in his rookie season in Pittsburgh five years later. He played for the Pirates until the end of 1977, when he was traded to the Texas Rangers.

Show, Gossage Hurl Padres Past Mets, 3-1

By The Associated Press
One of the few raps against the San Diego Padres this season has been a perplexing inability to win in front of a big home crowd. So much for that bugaboo.

Before 50,869 lured into San Diego's Jack Murphy Stadium for the game and a fireworks display, the Padres rode the pitching of Eric Show and Rich Gossage to a 3-1 victory over the New York Mets Monday night.

"A lot of people have been saying that we can't win in front of a big crowd, but I think we proved them wrong tonight," said Ozzie Virgil, the Padres' third-base coach who is acting as manager while Dick Williams sits out a 10-game suspension.

The victory maintained San Diego's nine-game lead over Atlanta in the National League West while New York slipped four games in back of Chicago, a 6-1 winner over Houston, in the NL East.

In other games Monday, Atlanta got by Pittsburgh 4-1 in 10 innings. St. Louis outscored Cincinnati 9-7. Philadelphia beat San Francisco 6-4, and Montreal shaded Los Angeles 3-1.

Show, 13-7, took over the team lead in victories while helping San Diego snap a three-game losing streak.

"I'm not a stopper like Sandy Koufax or Nolan Ryan," said Show. "The truth is there is an awful lot of luck involved in pitching."

Show gave up five hits in eight innings, but called it a night after walking Darryl Strawberry to open the ninth. Gossage earned his 23rd save with four pitches, getting George Foster to ground into a double play and then blowing Hubie Brooks away for the final out.

"Babe Ruth couldn't have hit those sliders he was throwing to-night," Brooks said.

New York's batting woes are beginning to torment Manager Dave Johnson.

"It seems like six weeks since we've had a big inning," he said. "It seems like the only runs we get are on groundouts or sacrifice flies."

Alan Wiggins opened the San Diego first with a single off New York starter Sid Fernandez, 4-2, and swiped second for his 53rd steal of the year. Wiggins went to third on a passed ball and scored on Tony Gwynn's grounder to short.

New York tied the game in the fourth when Strawberry walked, went to third on Foster's single to center and scored on Brooks' fielder's choice grounder.

Kevin McReynolds tripled and scored on a sacrifice fly by Carmelo Martinez in the fourth and Wiggins added insurance an inning later with a solo homer, his third of the year.

Cubs 6, Astros 1
Left-hander Steve Trout, 11-5, equaled his career high for victories in a season, but the outing was not without incident. Trout gave up six hits and seven walks, and twice in the first four innings had to pitch out of bases-loaded jams. The only Houston run scored in the fourth on a double-play ball.

Ron Cey slugged a three-run homer and Keith Moreland drove in three runs with a pair of singles as Chicago snapped Houston's longest winning streak in three years at nine games. Bob Knepper, 12-9, took the loss.

Braves 4, Pirates 1
Brad Komminsk broke up a 1-1 game in the 10th with a two-out double and Alex Trevino followed with a two-run single as Atlanta marked Manager Joe Torre's return from a three-game suspension. Torre was penalized for his role in the San Diego-Atlanta beanball war Aug. 12.

In the 10th, Dale Murphy reached on a force play and moved to second on Chris Chambliss' single before Komminsk dropped a double inside the left-field line. Ken Oberkell was walked intentionally and Trevino followed with his single to hand reliever Kent Tekulve his ninth loss in 11 decisions. Reliever Gene Garber, 2-2, got the win.

Cardinals 9, Reds 7
Pitcher Dave LaPoint drove in three runs, rookie Terry Pendleton doubled in two and Darrell Porter slammed a two-run homer to key the Cardinals' 15-hit assault. LaPoint knocked in runs with a groundout, a single and a sacrifice fly before being lifted during a three-run Reds uprising in the fifth. Jeff Lahti, 4-2, pitched the final 3-2-3 innings.

Ozzie Smith, making his first appearance since a broken wrist put him on the disabled list July 13, tripled to start the Cardinals fourth off Reds starter Jay Tibbs, 2-1. Smith scored on LaPoint's single, and Pendleton's two-run double capped the uprising. An inning later, Porter drilled his 10th homer and LaPoint added a sacrifice fly.

Cesar Cedeno had a two-run homer and Dave Parker a solo shot for Cincinnati.

Phillies 6, Giants 4
Al Oliver, traded by San Francisco on Monday morning, came back to haunt his old club only 10 hours later, stroking a two-run double that climaxed a five-run Philadelphia uprising.

John Russell opened the Philadelphia second with a double off Giants starter Mark Calvert, 2-4, who then hit Ivan DeJesus with a pitch. Russell and DeJesus advanced on a sacrifice bunt and came home on a double by Juan Samuel. One out later, Von Hayes singled to score Samuel, Mike Schmidt reached on an infield hit and Oliver finished things with a two-run double to left-center.

John Denny, 6-3, allowed only two hits in six innings, but headed for the showers when Bob Brenly hit a three-run homer in the seventh. Larry Andersen pitched 2 1-3 innings in relief before Al Holland got his 27th save by getting the final out.

Expos 3, Dodgers 1
Bill Gullickson, winless in eight previous decisions against Los Angeles, finally beat the Dodgers by scattering seven hits over eight innings. Gary Lucas pitched the ninth for his eighth save. It was Montreal's sixth consecutive victory and the third straight defeat for the Dodgers.

"It took me five years, but I finally beat them," said Gullickson, 9-7. "I pitched some bad games and lost, and pitched well and still lost."

Cubs' Day Games May Cost Owners In Series

By JOHN NELSON
AP Sports Writer

Those nocturnal beasts of baseball — owners with black ink in their veins — are on the prowl again. Their intended prey: the day-teeming Chicago Cubs.

With the Cubs holding a slim lead in the National League East, baseball stands to lose a bundle as it faces the prospect of midweek playoff and World Series games in daylight for the first time in a decade.

Some reports place the figure at as much as $700,000 per team in lost television revenues should that happen.

It's a sad story, but it was written by baseball. This time, the networks seem to be getting too much of the blame for exerting pressure on the Cubs that is coming, in fact, from baseball's ownership.

It seems that baseball's $1 billion contracts with NBC and ABC, struck last year, contain rebate clauses. Baseball must return some of the money if playoff and World Series games normally played in prime time are moved to daytime. Thus, owners have begun a campaign to get those games played at night.

"The influence is money itself," said one source. "They [the owners] struck this deal, and now they realize what's at stake."

Since the Cubs do not have lights at Wrigley Field, as many as five playoff and six World Series games could be held during the day. Under the six-year television contract, ABC will telecast the playoffs this year and NBC the World Series.

The baseball commissioner's office admits that alternatives are being studied in case the Cubs go all the way. Such alternatives might include the installation of temporary lights at Wrigley Field or transferring the games to another site, like Comiskey Park, where the White Sox play, or Milwaukee County Stadium, if the White Sox should get into the playoffs.

The simplest alternative, if one becomes necessary, might be to alter the schedule to allow the playoffs and Series to begin outside of Chicago, thus eliminating some of the weekday games at Wrigley Field.

"Obviously it's a bit of a different situation as far as Chicago is concerned," says Chuck Adams of the commissioner's office. "We're examining all scheduling alternatives. Nothing is final at this point, and so far there is no conclusion."

Temporary lighting might present a logistical problem, since Wrigley Field is located in a residential area and there isn't a lot of room for light towers. But representatives of both networks said it would be possible — that it has been done in college football, for example. One hurdle cleared, there's also the problem of an Illinois state law and a city ordinance effectively banning lights at Wrigley Field.

A citizen's group call CUBS (Citizens United for Baseball in the Sunshine) lobbied vehemently for the local statutes against lights and certainly would also strongly oppose moving the Cubs for postseason play. A shift in venues seems the least likely of all alternatives. It would be unfair not only to the team but also to fans who have waited since 1945 to see the Cubs win a pennant.

Local efforts to keep owners from tinkering with the schedule have drawn wide-ranging support.

Illinois Rep. Ellis Levin, D-Chicago, said efforts to install temporary lights set a bad example for children because baseball owners were "saying they can violate the law with impunity. This is arrogance and it sets a bad example."

An NBC spokesman, Tom Merritt, says his network "will abide by whatever decision major league baseball reaches," while admitting that NBC would prefer to make its World Series telecasts during prime time on week nights to take advantage of the higher ratings.

Jim Spence of ABC goes one step farther. "Our position goes beyond abiding by baseball's decision," he says. "I want to hit head on with what I've read that ABC is taking steps to force the Cubs to play at night. That is not true."

"Our position simply is that we support whenever the Cubs want to play their games. We will televise them whenever they're played."

And, with day games cutting the ratings approximately in half, the two networks could pocket as much as $18,200,000 in rebates from owners to cover losses in advertising revenue.

Clemson Player Dies After Weekend Traffic Accident

FLORENCE, S.C. (AP) — Marvin Montgomery was a skilled athlete, well-liked and a natural leader whose death Monday was "a tragic loss" for his family and "for the Clemson University family," Clemson football Coach Danny Ford said.

Montgomery, a Sumter resident and graduate of Hillcrest High School, was one of the top Clemson prospects — a wide receiver who earned numerous honors for his high school play. The 18-year-old Clemson incoming freshman died from injuries received in an auto accident during the weekend near his Sumter home.

Montgomery died at 12:35 p.m. at McLeod Regional Medical Center in Florence from "grave brain and spinal cord injuries," according to hospital spokesman Easton Clark.

State Trooper T.E. Owens said Montgomery was injured 7 p.m. Saturday in Sumter County when the sports car he was driving crossed the opposite lane of traffic, hit a tree and flipped at least twice.

In a statement Monday, Ford called Montgomery's death "a tragic loss for Marvin Montgomery's family and for the Clemson University family and everyone who was ever associated with him."

"He was a very well-liked player on our team and had already demonstrated that he was a great leader. He had outstanding ability academically and athletically, but he was really a better person than all of his accomplishments combined," Ford said. "He will be greatly missed, and we send our sympathy and regret to his family."

Owens said Montgomery lost control of a late-model Mazda RX-7 while rounding a curve about a mile from his home. Owens estimated the car was traveling 70 miles per hour.

A passenger, Johnny Martin, 18, Sumter, was thrown 40 feet from the car on its first flip and did not require hospitalization. Montgomery was thrown 20 feet from the car on its second flip.

Owens said the Georgia-registered car did not belong to Montgomery, but was registered to another member of the Clemson football team and was loaned to Montgomery.

Montgomery, a 6-foot, 170 pound athlete who garnered numerous honors at Hillcrest High School, was considered one of Clemson's top high school prospects.

"He was one of the blue-chip boys we recruited this year," said Bob Bradley, Clemson sports information director. "He was touted as one of the state's top high school receivers last season."

Bradley said Montgomery caught 32 passes for 719 yards and seven touchdowns as a senior at Hillcrest in 1983, as well as carrying the ball 42 times on end-around plays, gaining 265 yards at 6.3 yards per carry. He led his team to the 4-A state playoffs two years in a row.

He was selected by coaches to the All-State football team, as well as by the Orlando Sentinel newspaper to the All-Southern team and was listed among the nation's top 100 players in The Sporting News, Bradley said.

Golf World Series In Best Time Slot

AKRON, Ohio (AP) — Even if it is still August, tournament officials believe the World Series of Golf is in its best time slot.

"This is the end of the golf season worldwide. The majors all are over. It's the ideal date," Tournament Director Jim Cook said Monday.

"The players are at their peak form right now, a week after the PGA," the series official said. "If we had it later in the year, Jack Nicklaus, for one, would not be on his game."

One of this year's leading players,

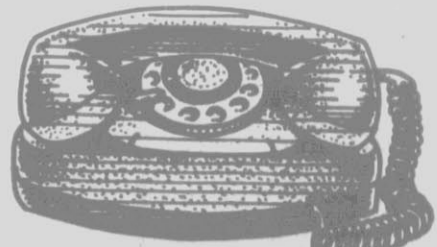

U.S. Open champion Fuzzy Zoeller, apparently will have to withdraw from the international field of 43.

Cook doubts Zoeller will be able to overcome the nagging back injury that forced him out of the PGA at Shoal Creek last week.

The other three majors' winners, Ben Crenshaw from the Masters, Spaniard Seve Ballesteros from the British Open and Lee Trevino from the PGA, will be part of the field starting play Thursday over the Firestone Country Club South course.

Pediatricians Renew Boxing Opposition

CHICAGO (AP) — Pediatricians must become "vigorous opponents" of amateur boxing by adolescents because of increasing evidence of "slow, progressive brain injury" in young boxers, a national pediatrics group says.

Writing in the August issue of Pediatrics, the Sports Medicine Committee of the American Academy of Pediatrics said the academy is underscoring its opposition to boxing for adolescents.

"Amateur boxing is potentially dangerous, and yet youngsters are involved in boxing at ages 3 to 4 years," the article said.

"Impoverished youths view boxing as a means of financial gain with the potential of providing a new life," the article said. "Unfortunately, for many, it is a means of improving their physical condition at the risk of slow progressive brain injury, with occasional or no financial rewards."

Dr. Eugene Luckstead, a committee member from Des Moines, Iowa, said by telephone Monday that the academy would seek the cooperation of other medical groups in opposing boxing for people under 18. He said doctors should distribute brochures opposing boxing and advise patients of the dangers when they come in for physical examinations.

"It doesn't make sense for us to work in medical areas where we try to prevent children from having injury ... and then to ignore something like this," Luckstead said.

Many youngsters, he said, are misled into thinking boxing can be their "way out of a poor life — that all you have to do is become a world champion."

"There's a lot of kids who get this false dream and maybe end up brain damaged. They are being used" by those who make money off the sport, he said.

Studies using a new scanning test have detected injuries previously missed by neurological and other testing procedures, the article said.

Until recently, Luckstead said, people thought if they didn't box too many years, they might not be hurt. But now, he said, "The information is that some of the young people can be in their teen-age years and (if) they've had a lot of fights ... that person may be a greater risk than someone who is older."

Luckstead said the pediatrics group would like to see boxing outlawed for adolescents.

"We feel there is no place for it," he said. "The other alternative would be to change the rule, to prohibit head blows. And you know how that's going to turn out."

Ironically, he said some British physicians now think protective headgear may increase brain injuries.

"You're putting the head in sort of a rigid frame and then you're striking it," he explained. "I don't want people to think that just because they have headgear on, they're protected, because that may not be the case."

Soviets, East Germans Battle

MOSCOW (AP) — The swimming and cycling competitions at the Friendship '84 games have developed into an inevitable battle between the host nation and East Germany, the two East bloc sports giants.

Both nations have been overpowering in the water and on the cycling track, and have shared most top places between them, leaving third place to other participants.

So far the East Germans have won five out of nine swimming events while the Soviets have dominated the cycling oval.

East German athletes can be expected to widen the margin in swimming as the competition progresses Tuesday.

The Cubans, however, have dominated boxing, with six quarterfinal victories in Havana Monday, four of them against Soviet opponents.

The Soviet Union led a 14-nation boycott of the Los Angeles Summer Olympics, citing unsatisfactory security arrangements and fear of harassment as the main reason for staying away.

But in Europe it was speculated that the powerful Soviet team was afraid of being embarrassed by the possibility of its tiny East German ally finishing ahead on the medals table.

Jens-Peter Berndt of East Germany turned in the day's top performance Monday, setting a European record in the men's 400-meter individual medley in four minutes, 18.29 seconds.

In all, five Olympic medal-winning times were beaten on the second day of swimming competition.

Berndt's time would have been only good for a silver medal at Los Angeles, where Alex Baumann of Canada won in a world record time of 4:17.41.

Larissa Belokon of the Soviet Union and Sylvia Gerasch of East Germany both stayed within the Olympic gold-medal time in the women's 200-meter breaststroke.

In the women's 200-meter freestyle event, East German world record-holder Kristin Otto finished in 1:59.48, a time that would have netted her the silver medal at the Summer Olympics behind American Mary Wayne.

In cycling, the Soviet Union's Nikolai Kopylov is looking for his second victory after having won the opening 1,000-meter time trials on Saturday.

He reached the semifinal stage Monday and headed for a showdown with East Germany's Lutz Hesslich, the 1980 Olympic gold medalist in this event.

Kopylov's countryman, Gintautas Umaras, surprised Berndt Ditter of East Germany in the individual pursuit finals, beating him to the line by more than a second.

Ditter set an indoor world record while qualifying against the clock on Sunday.

In Havana, Cuba, Angel Herrera, a two-time gold medalist and the current world amateur lightweight champion, took a 4-1 decision over Nurland Abdulkalikov of the Soviet Union.

Another Cuban, bantamweight Ramon Ledon, won an easy 5-0 decision over Jon Men Son of North Korea, and Angel Espinosa edged Andrei Akulov of the Soviet Union, 3-2, in the light middleweight division.

Cuba's Bernardo Comas, the world amateur middleweight boxing champion, and Pedro Reyes, winner of the Rome Boxing Cup's flyweight division last year, both won questionable decisions against their Soviet opponents.

Adolfo Horta, another Cuban world champion in the featherweight division, scored a convincing victory over Francis Rauschnig of East Germany.

While the swimmers contest five finals on Tuesday, the cyclists continue their qualification rounds without a title being decided.

The field hockey tournament saw the Soviet Union's "A" and "B" teams continue their way to a showdown in the final.

The "A" squad, which was qualified for the Los Angeles Olympics, routed Zimbabwe 9-1, and the "B" side edged East Germany 1-0.

In Olomouc, Czechoslovakia, Yuri Balabanov scored a perfect 10 on the rings to lead the Soviet Union into first place after the men's team compulsories in gymnastics. U.S. men won the team competition in Los Angeles.

USFL Targets NFL

NEW YORK (AP) — The United States Football League, after suffering lower television ratings in its second season, may move to more direct competition with the National Football League.

Donald Trump, owner of the New Jersey Generals, said Monday he will propose at this week's league meetings that the USFL switch at least partially to a fall schedule in 1986.

The New York Times reported in Tuesday's edition that a proposal is expected to meet with the approval of fellow owners at the meetings, which begin Wednesday in Chicago.

The newspaper reported that league operations director Peter Hadhazy expects ratification by the USFL's 18 owners, two-thirds of whom must support the move to approve it.

Trump has been said to be seeking such a schedule change since he bought the Generals last year.

"We're going to ask for the switch to the fall," he was quoted as saying, "and I think we'll get it."

According to the proposal, the switch could be achieved by splitting the 1986 season. The schedule would begin in March, but the league would go on hiatus over the summer and finish in the fall.

1984-85 Bus Schedules For City Schools

A new plan for bus transportation effective for school year 1984-85 was approved by the Greenville City Board of Education in April. The plan entails a change of times from previous years when schools commence and dismiss. The new time plan applicable to schools with starting and dismissal times is:

- Eastern, Elmhurst, Sadie Saulter, Third Street, 8 a.m. — 2:15 p.m.
- Rose High School, 8 a.m. — 2:45 p.m.
- South Greenville, Wahl-Coates, 8:30 a.m. — 2:45 p.m.
- Aycock Jr. High School, Middle School, 9:00 a.m. — 3:45 p.m.

In the past, it was permissible to load buses up to 125 percent of their seating capacity — i.e., a bus designed to seat 44 students could carry 55 students, 44 seated and 11 standing. This practice is no longer allowed.

The North Carolina statutes require that each student passenger be provided a seat while being transported on a school bus. In order to comply with this legal requirement, the board approved the above schedule.

This schedule also allows for better utilization of buses. The bus schedule for this school year has been prepared to accommodate the new school schedules.

Since the plan is new, it is possible some adjustments may have to be made after school begins.

Agnes Fullilove students will be notified of their transportation arrangements when their school schedules have been completed.

By FRED ROTHENBERG
AP Television Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — NBC News anchor Tom Brokaw went out on a limb, sawed it off, but still managed to land smartly on his feet.

At the synchronized pep rally that is the Republican convention, Brokaw found one way to get news out of a news-less convention. He invented it.

Brokaw, in billing U.N. Ambassador Jeane Kirkpatrick's upcoming speech Monday night, said there was "some indication" that she would switch her party affiliation from Democratic to Republican at the podium. She didn't.

But Brokaw remained cool, calm and comical, adroitly correcting his bum steer. It was damage control at its prime-time best. "So much for hot tips, Brokaw," he said, chiding himself in front of millions of viewers.

NBC apparently was prepared to pounce on Ms. Kirkpatrick's label-switch, which Brokaw said others were reporting earlier. (ABC and CBS did not do so Monday night.) Immediately following the speech, NBC floor reporter Bob Oliver did an interview with Tampa Mayor Bob Martinez, who had changed from Democrat to Republican a year ago.

Brokaw turned the egg on his face into an omelet. It might have been a soufflé had NBC managed to get an interview with Ms. Kirkpatrick to determine how close she had come to changing banners. CBS got her after her speech, but NBC spokesman Bill McAndrew said she slipped past NBC. He also said she canceled a scheduled appearance on the "Today" show today. NBC, although overeager in this case, still gets high marks for aggressiveness Monday night. In a convention that was a surprise only in that it lasted several minutes past the appointed prime-time witching hour of 11 p.m. EDT, NBC's floor reporters beat ABC's at every turn.

The Associated Press monitored ABC and NBC Monday night. NBC had Ken Bode, Chris Wallace, Don Oliver and Connie Chung — the same foursome from the Democratic convention. ABC had Lynn Sherr and Richard Threlkeld, cutting its floor cast from four to two because of less news among the delegates.

Nobody at NBC or ABC uncovered any hard news, but for information and insight, NBC had better anti-Reagan interviews, better interviews with women and better cracks at starting the 1988 campaign four years early.

At this Reagan coronation, the major news slants are Republican dissidents, women in this year of a woman vice presidential nominee and at a convention that has a platform opposing the equal-rights amendment, and how presidential prospects are positioning themselves toward '88.

NBC interviewed Susan Catania from Illinois, one of the Republicans' two uncommitted delegates. Ms. Catania explained that her district in Chicago has "desperate social problems. She's also opposed to Reagan's anti-ERA stand.

Oliver interviewed Kathy Wilson, chairman of the National Women's Political Caucus. She's a Republican who doesn't support Reagan. For balance, Bode spoke to Anne Armstrong, a Reagan-Bush cheerleader who was considered by Gerald Ford as his running mate in 1976.

In addition, NBC had liberal Connecticut Sen. Lowell Weicker say that the Republicans' conservative platform was "a pain in the ass to explain" and "a stinkeroo" on women's issues. NBC also talked to Republican campaign chairman Paul Laxalt, the senator from Nevada who is Reagan's close friend.

ABC's pro and con interviews weren't as strong, except for an outspoken Maureen Reagan, the president's daughter. She called the right-wing platform "inadequate." Another ABC anti-platform interview was with a non-descript Connecticut delegate, Julie Belaga. That was offset by Rep. Vin Weber of Minnesota, a conservative on the platform committee who wore a Reagan-Bush baseball cap.

ABC did have a terrific location shot of cattle grazing against a backdrop of dusk and the Dallas skyline.

It was as memorable as Brokaw's bum steer.

Opening lead: Jack of ♠.

We all tend to make plays instinctively. As a result, when this hand was dealt in a tournament that included a liberal sprinkling of experts, not one managed to make 13 tricks.

Slams in spades were rife, with several pairs reaching a grand slam on an auction such as the above. Note that it does not require any gadget to get to a grand slam — just good common sense bidding.

The jack of hearts was a popular lead, and the declarers were all relieved to find, after winning the ace of hearts, that they were able to draw trumps in two rounds. Now it is natural to try to set up the suit in which you have the most cards, so to a man the declarers continued with the ace-king of clubs, discard a diamond from hand, and then ruff a club. Now declarer tries two rounds of diamonds, and if both defenders follow, it is an easy task to set up and run the diamonds.

But when East shows out on the second diamond, declarer can still try to establish a long club on the table. He continues with a diamond ruff on the board and a club ruff in hand. When both defenders follow, declarer has just enough tricks — five spades in hand, a heart and two diamonds, and three clubs and two ruffs on the table.

Bolivians Open Drive On Cocaine

COCHABAMBA, Bolivia (AP) — The government has opened a major attack on the multibillion-dollar cocaine industry with police raids that have destroyed two big drug factories and confiscated 836 pounds of the drug, law enforcement agents say.

Drug enforcement sources said Monday that police commandos attacked the Cotoca ranch 300 miles north of Cochabamba on Saturday night and came under fire from traffickers before destroying a cocaine-producing plant and seizing weapons, cocaine base and money.

On Sunday, police raiders discovered a 1,000-foot airstrip and three airplanes on a ranch belonging to Jose Ali Parada, considered by drug enforcement officials to be a top trafficker, the sources said.

But they said Ali Parada and a Colombian pilot escaped into nearby woods minutes before the police arrived.

The sources said the police were led by Interior Undersecretary Gustavo Sanchez.

The raids came two weeks after hundreds of soldiers entered the nearby Chapare — Bolivia's main coca leaf-producing region — to "restore the rule of law" and reduce the production of coca, the principal ingredient in cocaine production.

Greece Bans U.S. Troop Exercises

ATHENS, Greece (AP) — The government says it has banned American troop exercises in Greece because of disputes with NATO over the role of Turkey, which Greece regards as a bigger military threat than the Soviet bloc.

"There is no point in maneuvers on Greek soil which don't contribute any experience concerning the perceived danger our country faces," government spokesman Dimitri Maroudas told reporters Monday.

He said Socialist Premier Andreas Papandreu who also serves as defense minister, had called off planned U.S.-Greek commando exercises planned to take place Sept. 1-16 in northern Greece.

"These maneuvers are definitively canceled and there are not going to be any more military exercises on Greek soil with the participation of American troops," Maroudas said.

The cancellation was the latest in a series of jolts to U.S.-Greek relations. Greece claims the Americans have tilted their military aid in favor of Turkey, and Papandreu recently described the United States as "the Mecca of imperialism."

Papandreu last year signed a pact extending permission for four U.S. military bases in Greece until at least 1990. But he has said he will close them if he is still in power when the pact expires.

The cancellation of the exercises was the first in the 14-year history of the joint maneuvers, which were designed to update the training of Greek military personnel.

Aquino's Statue Draws Throng To Street March

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Hundreds of thousands of Filipinos marched into the heart of Manila today to mark the first anniversary of Benigno Aquino's assassination — the 'largest turnout in the capital since the opposition leader's burial.

Most businesses and schools closed, despite government appeals to stay open, and downtown streets were blocked for hours as throngs of marchers filled more than two miles of a major boulevard en route to a rally at a city park.

Thousands of others accompanied a bronze statue of Aquino from the airport where he was killed. The statue had been held by customs officials pending payment of duties, but President Ferdinand E. Marcos ordered its release.

Many marchers waved yellow and red banners with anti-Marcos and anti-American slogans.

Manila's police chief, Gen. Narciso Cabrera, estimated the number of marchers at 450,000, while rally organizers claimed up to 1 million participants.

Office workers rained confetti on the marchers from high-rise windows, and soldiers stood on alert in a city bedecked with yellow ribbons.

Military authorities said they had intelligence reports that subversives would sabotage the events, but there were no reports of trouble.

More than 500 soldiers guarded the airport, and hundreds were stationed around Marcos' Malacanang Palace. But police and soldiers, who were put on special alert for the occasion, stayed clear of the marchers in line with a Supreme Court order Saturday allowing the demonstrations and warning police not to interfere.

The crowd was bigger than any in Manila since more than 1 million people lined an 18-mile route on the day of Aquino's burial.

Long lines of marchers passed the U.S. Embassy, chanting "Marcos, U.S. falling down... And First Lady," a reference to Imelda Marcos, to the tune of "London Bridge Is Falling Down."

Throughout the city, vendors were selling yellow ribbons, hats, pins, and T-shirts with Aquino's portrait.

Manila Cardinal Jaime L. Sin, during a memorial service prior to the march, thanked Aquino's widow, Corazon, for not encouraging a violent revolt following her husband's assassination. Aquino, at the time the chief political opponent of Marcos, was shot to death as soldiers led him from the plane that brought him back to Manila from three year's voluntary exile in the United States.

Ferraro Releases Family Financial Data

By GARY LANGER
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — With Walter F. Mondale signaling support, Democratic vice presidential candidate Geraldine Ferraro reached today to turn controversy over her finances into approval for the detailed disclosures of her family's millions.

Hoping to quell the uproar over family finances that has been building since her nomination last month at the Democratic convention, the New York congresswoman and her husband, real estate dealer John Zaccaro, released on Monday a detailed accounting of their income, assets and taxes. It put her net worth at $760,000 and that of her husband at $3,020,000.

Ms. Ferraro remained at home in Queens, N.Y., during the daylong accounting but scheduled a news conference today to discuss the disclosures, which included:

— The couple paid about 40 percent of their income in taxes, more than many Americans in similar financial circumstances. They didn't have extensive tax shelters.

— They claimed to have inadvertently underpaid their 1978 federal taxes, and said they made the debt good Monday with a $53,459 check to the Internal Revenue Service.

— Their combined income from 1979 to 1983 was $866,443, about 60 percent of it from Zaccaro's businesses. Last year, he made $203,039 and she made $70,474.

— Apparently unbeknown to his wife, Zaccaro bought back the half-interest in a Manhattan building that she sold to repay illegal family loans made to her 1978 campaign for Congress. A statement said the transaction was proper, but needlessly complex.

Monday's disclosures, which exceeded the legal requirement, stood in a stack 1 1/2 inches high: a 27-page report to the Federal Election Commission, the couple's separate federal income tax returns from 1979 to 1983, their 1978 joint return and four explanatory statements.

Delayed by reproduction problems and last-minute review by accountants, the release at a Georgetown hotel followed a week of intense speculation on the family's finances and debate over the issue's political impact.

The interest was piqued by Zaccaro's initial refusal to release his tax forms, despite his wife's July 24 pledge that he would. He relented after a nine-hour meeting with accountants and lawyers in New York on Friday.

"No spouse (of a national candidate) has ever disclosed that type of information before," declared Francis O'Brien, a campaign spokesman.

Zaccaro's financial position was detailed further in the FEC report, which was filed just 11 minutes before the deadline. In it, Ms. Ferraro dropped the claim she made in her disclosures as a congresswoman that she was exempt from reporting her husband's assets, liabilities and transactions.

The exemption, which Ms. Ferraro took in all her five years in Congress, requires that she have no knowledge of her husband's finances and derive no benefit from them. Apparently to back that claim, she issued a five-page statement explaining her role in his real estate management firm.

"They have withstood the test of public trust and public integrity," Jim Johnson, campaign director for Mondale, the Democratic presidential nominee, said of the couple's disclosure.

Johnson said Mondale had been fully informed of the contents of the financial disclosure reports and had no regrets about having selected Ms. Ferraro as his running mate. "There is nothing that has come out that undermines that choice," Johnson said.

Vice President George Bush, who last week reported his assets at $2.1 million, directed his attention to his challenger's wealth.

"It takes a little of the elitist pressure off me, I guess, in terms of net worth and all that," he said in Dallas, where the Republican convention opened Monday. "But that's not the thing that determines elections."

The disclosure said 90 percent of Zaccaro's worth is in company-owned real estate — six buildings in Manhattan, a condominium in Manhattan, one in the Virgin Islands, and three lots next to a family vacation home on Fire Island.

His personal property includes half interest in family houses in New York City and on Fire Island and half of a second condominium in the Virgin Islands.

Ms. Ferraro owns the other half of those properties, plus four additional lots on Fire Island — holdings that account for two-thirds of her wealth.

The documents said Zaccaro owns his property through Frajo Associates Inc., of which he owns 30 percent and his mother owns 70 percent, and through a partnership called Second Grand Co. He also owns two-thirds of P. Zaccaro Co. Inc., the management firm founded by his father in 1935.

As well as managing buildings, that company is a real estate and insurance broker, a statement said. Zaccaro also is identified as a bankruptcy trustee and a conservator, or estate manager.

Ms. Ferraro owns the other third of P. Zaccaro Co. and is vice president of the company, which manages "approximately 22 buildings," most of them commercial and all but one in Manhattan, the campaign said in a statement.

Ms. Ferraro, a lawyer, maintained an office in the company building from 1971 to 1974 and "occasionally represented buyers and sellers of property" brokered by the company or by Zaccaro, the statement said.

But it said she was not the firm's attorney and "has never drawn a salary from the company nor received any fees for services from the company."

She gave up the office after becoming a city prosecutor in 1974, but she retained her position as a company officer "so that, should anything happen to her husband, she would be qualified to take immediately whatever steps were necessary to maintain the company as a going concern," it said.

The couple's 1978 tax problem stemmed from her first run for Congress that year. Notified that the FEC was questioning $134,000 in family loans to her campaign, Ms. Ferraro quickly repaid the loans — raising most of the money by selling her half interest in a two-story commercial building for $100,000 in cash and release from a $62,250 mortgage.

The FEC eventually ruled that $109,000 of the loans were illegal —

Ms. Ferraro said they were made on faulty legal advice — and required Zaccaro and the campaign to pay $750 in fines.

A campaign statement said an accountant reviewing the building sale listed Ms. Ferraro's cash gain but failed to include her additional gain of $62,250 from having the buyer assume her half share of the building's mortgage.

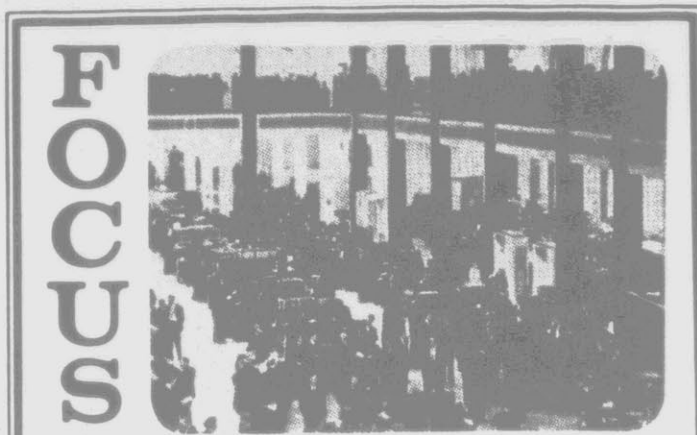

Accountants reviewing the 1978 return for Monday's disclosure found the error and determined that the couple owed $29,709 in additional income tax for the year and $23,750 in interest. O'Brien said the Zaccaros sent a check for the total to the Internal Revenue Service on Monday, with an amended return.

A statement on Ms. Ferraro's sale of her half interest in that building, at 231 Centre St. in Manhattan, said the transaction was set up by her husband with the buyer, Manny Lerman, a business associate of Zaccaro's who already owned the other half of the building.

Without telling his wife, Zaccaro at the same time arranged to buy back her half interest from Lerman later, at the same price he paid, $100,000, the statement said.

It said Zaccaro did that because "he had been disturbed at the prospect of the family losing an interest in the ... property, which he regarded as a good investment. The statement added that Zaccaro could legally have bought the half interest directly from Ms. Ferraro, but mistakenly thought that would appear improper to the FEC.

Lerman and Ms. Ferraro paid $175,000 when they bought the building in May 1978; when Zaccaro and Lerman arranged the sale and buyback five months later, they valued it at $325,000. That higher value was confirmed in November 1980, when Zaccaro and Lerman sold the building for $375,000, the statement said.

FOCUS

Lloyd's Coffee House

Lloyd's of London — busy these days insuring crippled ships in the Persian Gulf and the Red Sea — began as a 17th-century coffee house. Prospective financial risk-takers met at Lloyd's to sip imported coffee and trade shipping information gathered from sailors and London dock workers. Proprietor Edward Lloyd began to organize policy bidding, turning his coffee concern into the insurance business that would later underwrite Jimmy Durante's nose and Liberace's fingers.
