Ferraro Urges Voters To Remove Sen. Helms

RALEIGH (AP) — Democratic vice presidential candidate Geraldine Ferraro said the time is now to send Gov. Jim Hunt to the U.S. Senate and to elect Walter Mondale president as she urged voters to put Sen. Jesse Helms out of a job and send President Reagan "back to the ranch."

"The time to send Jim Hunt to the Senate is not later, it's now," Ms. Ferraro shouted Monday to a cheering crowd estimated by the Secret Service at 5,000 during an outdoor rally on the downtown mall in view of the state Capitol.

Evoking memories of underdog North Carolina State's 1983 national basketball championship, Ms. Ferraro said, "The Wolfpack proved that ... the ball game isn't over until the final minute. All the experts said they couldn't win, but they did."

"Now the pollsters and the pundits say we can't win," she said. But with the help of North Carolina, "we will send Fritz Mondale to the White House and Ronald Reagan back to the ranch."

In Greensboro earlier, Ms. Ferraro said Hunt's race against Helms offered the most clearly defined choice between candidates of any race in the nation.

"On the one hand you have Jim Hunt, a moderate leader in touch with the times and people of this great state," she said. "On the other hand you have an extremist right-wing ideologue out of step with North Carolina."

Ms. Ferraro said North Carolinians do not want a leader who tries to "smear the good name" of the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., who opposes the genocide treaty, who would let the Rev. Jerry Falwell help pick the next U.S. Supreme Court justices and who labels himself pro-family, while cutting day care and child nutrition programs.

"The people of North Carolina don't want to back death squads in El Salvador," Ms. Ferraro said. "You don't fight communism by helping people who repress peasants and murder nuns."

Hunt, who has put some distance between himself and the Mondale-Ferraro ticket, gave the New York congresswoman a rousing introduction in Raleigh, reminding the crowd that she and N.C. State coach Jim Valvano were both Italian-Americans from Queens, N.Y.

"I knew that Gerry Ferraro was tough," said Hunt, adding that he was "not surprised" that she had "stood up to those hecklers" who have appeared at many of her rallies. "As a matter of fact, the Republicans know they have finally met their match, and they have called off the dogs."

About 30 people bearing pro-Reagan and pro-Helms signs showed up in Raleigh, but there were only scattered derisive yells.

A number of prominent Democrats joined Ms. Ferraro and Hunt on the platform, including House Speaker Liston Ramsey; Rep. Al Adams, D-Wake; former U.S. Sen. (Please turn to page 12)

Labor Secretary Donovan Is Indicted

RAYMOND J. DONOVAN

By JOHN-THOR DAHLBURG
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Labor Secretary Raymond Donovan reasserted his innocence today as he appeared for arraignment with seven officials of his former construction company on charges of falsifying records for a $186 million subway project.

Donovan and his lawyer had called the charges politically motivated "nonsense," and as he entered the Bronx Criminal Courthouse this morning for booking, Donovan repeated the claim when questioned by reporters. He said he would fight the charges all the way and responded "that's right" when asked if he considered them political.

Donovan and other defendants were put through the standard booking procedure, which includes fingerprinting, said a prosecutor's office secretary. He was then due in a nearby state court building for arraignment.

Donovan, apparently the first sitting cabinet member to be indicted on criminal charges, went on unpaid leave Monday after learning of the sealed, 137-count Bronx county indictment. President Reagan said he retained confidence in Donovan.

The 54-year-old Donovan was cleared of wrongdoing by two previous federal probes regarding his past ties with the Schiavone Construction Co. of Secaucus, N.J.

Reagan told CBS News: "I don't have information on it yet. I trust in his integrity. I retain full confidence" in Donovan, who requested the leave.

Seven other past or present officers of Schiavone, where Donovan was executive vice president before becoming labor secretary, also were to be arraigned today, said Theodore Geiser, the company's lawyer.

Geiser told The Associated Press the indictment against the company involved "alleged false pieces of information" in 136 counts and one count of grand larceny. "It's nonsense," he said.

Grand jury proceedings are secret and it could not be learned immediately what specific charges were leveled against Donovan.

The grand jury was probing the relationship between the Schiavone Co. and the Jopel Construction and Trucking Co. of the Bronx in 1979 and 1980.

Under federal regulations, 10 percent of Schiavone's subway contract had to go to minority-owned companies. Jopel was co-owned by a black Bronx politician and a reputed organized crime figure, and Schiavone hired the company to assist in hauling dirt.

The investigation involved allegations that Schiavone overstated the amount of work that Jopel performed.

Donovan charged that the "mindless inquisition" was politically managed by Bronx County District Attorney Mario Merola, a Democrat.

"I am outraged and disgusted by the actions and the obviously partisan timing of the Bronx district attorney," Donovan said as he left his lawyer's Washington office Monday night.

Geiser said of Merola: "I can't assess his motivation. But I can characterize the indictment as nonsense, as we will shortly prove, although unhappily, probably not before the (Nov. 6 presidential) election."

Twelve messages left on the answering machine at Merola's residence and seven calls to his office and spokesman by The Associated Press were not returned Monday night.

When Donovan testified before the grand jury for 4½ hours on Sept. 24, he released the results of a lie-detector test he said cleared him of any involvement in the alleged scheme to misrepresent Jopel's work.

The expert who administered the lie detector test said Donovan had denied knowing about the circumstances of the hiring of Jopel or any illegal arrangements between the two companies. Joseph P. Buckley also said Donovan denied any participation in Jopel's hiring.

REFLECTOR HOTLINE

Hotline gets things done. Write and tell us about the problem or issue into which you'd like for Hotline to look. Enclose photostatic copies of any pertinent information. Our address is The Daily Reflector, Box 1967, Greenville, N.C., 27835. Because of the large numbers received, Hotline cannot answer or publish every item we receive, but we deal with all of those for which we have staff time. Names must be given, but only initials will be published.

CHIHUAHUA LOST

Mrs. Adelle Stocks of Falkland has asked Hotline to appeal for the safe return of a 4-year-old light tan chihuahua last seen by her last Wednesday afternoon when the dog jumped out of her car at Dr. A.G. Thompson's veterinary office, 1523 E. 14th St. The dog had a respiratory infection at the time and her owner is worried about her ability to survive on her own, especially since she's sick. She was last seen heading toward the intersection of 264 and 14th St. Anyone having seen her or knowing where she is asked to call Mrs. Stocks, 752-6094. Mrs. Stocks is offering a $100 reward for her safe return.

Pitt Board Adopts New Pay Plan

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

The Pitt County Board of Commissioners Monday adopted a new classification and pay plan, including a new pay scale for county workers, and approved increases of from $1 to $5 in fees charged for clinic services at the health department.

The board's action in adopting the new pay plan fully implements a study conducted by Municipal Advisors of Virginia Beach, Va.

Roger Scott, representing the consulting firm, reminded commissioners that part of the plan — a recommended 7½ percent pay hike for county employees — was adopted when the board approved the 1984-85 budget earlier this year.

Scott also said a 2½ percent reserve for salaries included in the 1984-85 budget would fund pay hikes for those employees reclassified under the study.

While the new pay schedule recommended by the study includes a 7½ percent increase in salaries across the board, Scott said employees will be placed on the scale at their present pay level because of the 7½ percent pay increase included in the present budget. Only those employees that were reclassified will receive pay increases because of the adoption of the new plan, Scott emphasized.

Scott said the study showed that there has been a 15 percent turnover in county personnel since 1980, and said many entry level positions have been hard to fill with qualified people because of the low starting pay. He told commissioners that the 7½ percent increase in the pay scale will help the county to be more competitive in hiring entry level workers and in keeping experienced employees.

The pay hikes resulting from reclassifications and the new health department fees approved are effective Oct. 1.

Dr. Robert Ehinger said the new fees are based on the new Medicaid reimbursement schedule.

The highest increase is in the area of family planning, where charges for an initial or annual medical increase from $72 to $77. Also included in the new schedule is a $2 charge per cycle for birth control pills given because the original ones are lost.

The board also gave formal approval to a lease of the fourth floor of the county office building A wing, and three offices on the A-wing's second floor to Burroughs Wellcome Co. for a one-year period. Based on $6.50 a square foot, Burroughs Wellcome Co. will pay $32,968 a year for the 5,072 square feet of space. The lease agreement also provides that Burroughs Wellcome will pay $750 a year for excess usage of electricity.

The pharmaceutical firm will use the fourth floor area to package products for distribution, while the offices on the second floor will be used for record-keeping and printing.

In other business Monday, commissioners awarded contracts for a new animal shelter site preparations to E.R. Lewis Construction Co. for a low bid of $7,150, and decided to award bids for a new landfill compactor following a review and

Child Safety

Dr. Juanee Surprise of Greenville, Region II director of the N.C. Child Passenger Safety Association, participated in the N.C. Child Passenger Safety Conference held in Durham recently.

State safety and health officials, educators and civic leaders discussed reinforcing the safety belt habit in nursery school children, enlisting civic groups in promoting child safety seat and seat belt use, and incentive programs to increase seat belt use. Dr. Surprise pointed out that not one child in the United States properly buckled into a child safety seat has been killed in a motor vehicle accident since use of the seats began.

Art Show

GREENSBORO — North Carolina artists who would like to submit works for possible inclusion in the annual Art on Paper Show at the Weatherspoon Art Gallery, UNC-Greensboro, can bring their art to the gallery on Saturday and Sunday, Oct. 6-7.

The show is open only to adult artists. Artists who have had works included in any of the past three shows (1981, 1982, or 1983) are not eligible. All work must be original, one-of-a-kind composed on or of paper, framed for exhibition, and priced for sale to include a 10 percent commission to be retained by the Weatherspoon in case of sale.

Further information is available by calling the gallery on weekdays at 379-5770.

UNICEF Drive Set

The Greenville area United Nations Childrens Fund (UNICEF) Drive will be held October 28. Church youth volunteers and several ECU fraternities and sororities will participate in the annual drive sponsored by the Greenville Church Women United. Collected funds are used to combat disease and malnutrition felt by millions of children worldwide.

Chief Holmes Cites Drop In Local Crime

Greenville Police Chief Ted Holmes said today that, according to the semi-annual report of crime in North Carolina, issued by the N.C. Department of Justice's Police Information Network, the city's crime rate dropped 16 percent in the first six months of 1984.

Holmes said there were 1,153 total index crimes reported from Jan. 1 to July 31, 1984, as compared to 1,365 for the same period in 1983.

Property crimes showed the largest reduction, Holmes said, with 1,054 reported during 1984 as compared to 1,265 in 1983. There was only one fewer violent crimes — 99 this year and 100 last year — reported for the period.

The two murders, seven rapes and 69 aggravated assaults reported in the first six months of this year were the same as in 1983, while the number of robberies dropped from 110 in 1983 to 82 this year. The number of burglaries decreased, from 354 in 1983 to 285 in 1984, while the number of larcenies also went down — from 866 in 1983 to 731 in the first six months of 1984.

Holmes also pointed out that while the number of crimes declined, the department's 69 sworn officers did a better job of clearing cases.

Of the 1,365 offenses reported in the first six months of 1983, only 265 or 19.41 percent were cleared, Holmes said. This year, 240 of the 1,153 cases reported — 20.82 percent — were cleared.

Road Improvements Noted By Harper

George Harper, a member of the state's Board of Transportation, told Pitt County commissioners Monday that improvements to the Bell's Fork intersection and in signs directing motorists to Pitt County Memorial Hospital are planned. But he said the Department of Transportation could not help build an access road to the site of the Ronald McDonald House.

Commissioners, over the past few weeks, had requested assistance on the projects.

Harper reported left turn lanes will be added on N.C. 43 and other improvements made to the Bell's Fork intersection within "the next few weeks." He also said DOT officials are studying ways to improve signs directing drivers to the medical center.

But Harper said of the access road to the Ronald McDonald House site — across Moye Boulevard from the hospital — "the state can't do it unless it leads into a state road."

Harper said regulations prohibit the DOT from building roads that don't connect with roads on the state system. He noted that Moye Boulevard, although built by the state when the hospital was moved, was taken off the state system several years ago at the request of the City of Greenville.

Harper explained that many roads built by the state are released to municipalities so the local governments can receive credit for Powell Bill funds.

He noted that state engineers have estimated the cost of the access road to the Ronald McDonald House site at $8,500 including curb and gutter.

Harper also gave commissioners written reports on the progress being made on U.S. 264, and on small urban road projects in the county.

According to the report on U.S. 264 between Wilson and Greenville, contracts have been let and construction started on all sections of the highway, with the exception of the northern bypass at Farmville, which is scheduled for fiscal year 1992.

Harper said the right-of-way acquisition for the completion of four-laning U.S. 264 from secondary road 1538 east of Greenville to Washington, is underway and contracts for construction may be let before the end of the year.

According to the report, drainage work on Dickinson Avenue, financed from small urban projects funds, is about 42 percent complete, while drainage improvements on secondary road 1703, off 14th Street, has been completed.

Other small urban projects include: widening .09 miles of N.C. 102 in Ayden, which is 30 percent complete; paving .1 mile of secondary road 1721 at Winterville, which is 95 percent complete; construct left turn lane on N.C. 11 at Paige St., in Greenville, complete; and widen two sections of N.C. 43 at Greenville to 64 feet with curb and gutter, submitted to Raleigh for contract.

The report indicated that construction work on two other projects — .19 mile of SR 1939 at Grifton and .23 mile of Ives Street in Bethel, has not begun.

Miss Lorri Jennette Marries On Saturday

Red Oak Christian Church was the scene of the wedding ceremony Saturday afternoon at two o'clock of Lorri Dawn Jennette and William Gregory Beard. Dr. Maurice Ankrom performed the double ring ceremony.

Daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert L. Jennette of Greensboro, the bride was given in marriage by her father. She wore a gown of ivory chiffonette and Venise lace. It was designed with a high neckline and long straight lace sleeves. The bodice was covered with silk Venise lace and embellished with seed pearls. The straight skirt extended into a demi-cathedral train which was enhanced with lace and a crystal pleated ruffle. Her fingertip veil of ivory silk Venise lace with scallops of Venise lace flowerettes was attached to a Juliet cap of matching lace and seed pearls. She carried a classic bouquet of butterfly roses, gardenias and baby's breath tied with ivory satin showered with red pixie carnations.

The bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. William D. Beard Jr. of Greensboro. His best man was his father.

Kristy Jennette of Greensboro, sister of the bride, was honor attendant and bridesmaids included Mary Grace Pate of Greenville, Brenda Parks of Faison and Bonnie Sutton of Raleigh, and Michelle Faircloth of Kinston, all cousins of the bride.

Tim Beard of Kernersville and Doug Beard of Greensboro, brothers of the bridegroom, Roger Smyth of Greensboro and Freddie Parker of Jacksonville were ushers.

Each of the attendants was dressed in a red chiffon gown with a blouson bodice and an asymmetrical draped skirt. A satin ribbon sash was caught with a matching flower. They carried nosegays of cerise red and white pixie carnations, baby's breath tied with matching satin.

The ceremony was directed by Barbara Wade of Greenville.

The mothers and grandmothers wore white carnation corsages.

A reception was held in the church fellowship hall. The refreshment table was centered with an arrangement in shades of red and pink in a silver wine cooler. Candelabra held pink candles.

The couple will live in Kernersville after a wedding trip to Atlantic Beach.

The bride graduated from J.H. Rose High School and works at First Home Federal Savings and Loan. The bridegroom graduated from Page High School and works at Covington Diesel Inc. in Greensboro.

A rehearsal dinner was held Friday night at Western Sizzlin' given by parents of the bridegroom.

Pat's Pointers

Jolly old St. Nick, snowmen, toy soldiers, bells and trees make charming tree ornaments — easy to stitch on 10-mesh plastic or cotton needlepoint canvas.

To obtain directions for making the five Merry Christmas ornaments, send your request for Leaflet No. NL-0930 with $1 and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to: Pat Trexler The Daily Reflector, P.O. Box 810, North Myrtle Beach, S.C. 29587.

Or you may order Kit No. N-0930 by sending a check or money order for $10 to Pat Trexler at the same address. The kit price includes the instruction leaflet, tapestry needle, sufficient plastic canvas, yarn and felt for all five ornaments and all shipping charges.

Graph charts for needlework can be very versatile if you understand the relationship between the graph squares and the finished size of a given design.

Just think of each graph square as one stitch—whether that stitch is done in needlepoint, counted cross stitch, crochet, knitting or latch hook. To determine the finished size, just count the maximum number of squares used in the design vertically and horizontally. Then divide each number by the number of stitches per inch you will take in your chosen craft.

To illustrate this principle, the snowman design featured today covers 26 squares horizontally and 56 squares vertically. So, on 10-mesh canvas the design area would be just a little over 2½ inches by 5½ inches. On a knitted piece with a stitch gauge of five stitches per inch, the same design would cover an area just over 5 inches by 11 inches.

To find the exact center of any charted design, first find the outside symbol on the left and right sides of the design. Draw a line on each side from top to bottom along this outer edge. Then fold the chart in half so these two lines meet.

With a pencil, draw a straight line down the resulting fold line. This will give you the vertical center. Follow the same procedure with the uppermost and the lowermost symbols to determine the horizontal center. The point where the two lines cross is your exact design center.

Once you know the design size and have found the design center, you can make your own decision on the number of stitches you will have bordering the design area. In knitting or crochet, the width of the piece is probably predetermined, so it will just be a matter of centering the design.

For example, suppose the front section of a Christmas stocking is worked on 40 stitches. If the design area covers 26 stitches at its widest point, then you know you would have to have seven stitches on each side to fill out the 40 stitches.

When you knit in stockinette stitch, you will have more rows per inch than you have stitches per inch. A five-stitch-per-inch gauge will usually have a seven-row-per-inch gauge.

Since graph paper has an equal number of squares in each direction, your design may not be correctly proportioned.

To compensate for this, repeat one of the design rows from time to time. Look at the first five rows of a graph chart. If you will work the first row once, the second row twice, the third and fourth rows once and the fifth row twice, you will have worked seven rows instead of five. Since five stitches and seven rows each equal 1 inch, you will literally be squaring up your design.

No such adjustments are needed for the other needlecrafts mentioned since they generally will have the same gauge in stitches and rows. This is even true of single crochet in most instances.

Dear Abby

Parents And Teens Split On Where To Entertain

DEAR ABBY: The letter from the 16-year-old girl signed "Nosy Mother Trouble" prompts my first letter to you. Mother insisted her daughter keep her bedroom door open when she entertained her boyfriend in her bedroom, even though all the kids did was sit on the bed and listen to the stereo.

I'm a mother of two teen-age boys, ages 15 and 17. When my sons first brought girls to the house, I was appalled when they started to walk into their respective bedrooms. That's when I explained to both of them that we have a family room and a living room for entertaining our friends.

Can you picture Mom and Dad inviting our friends over, bypassing the rest of the house to go sit on our bed and listen to the stereo?

So, here's another "Nosy Mother."

BEEN THERE
IN SACRAMENTO

DEAR BEEN: Stay tuned for a few words from a teen-ager who is there:

DEAR ABBY: Boy, did I ever relate to the teen-age girl whose mother made her keep her bedroom door open when she had her boyfriend over.

If I can't close my bedroom door when my boyfriend is over, I feel uncomfortable—like my mother is eavesdropping on me. And my boyfriend is uncomfortable, too.

Abby, if we kids were going to do something, we wouldn't do it when our parents were home. We have plenty of opportunity to do stuff like that somewhere else. Mothers who always suspect their kids of the worst can actually push their kids into doing something for spite.

SAN MATEO TEEN-AGER

DEAR BEEN THERE AND TEEN-AGER: My mail has been evenly divided. Almost without exception, teen-agers want to entertain in their bedrooms with the door closed. ("Trust us!")

And parents who allow their teen-agers to entertain in their bedrooms do so reluctantly, saying they'd rather have them at home than somewhere else. But most parents insist on the open-door policy.

DEAR ABBY: I am a full-time employed registered nurse. I love my work and make very good money.

I am married to a wonderful, gentle man who stays at home and cares for our 2-year-old son. "John" does all the housework, cooking and yard work. We are both more than satisfied with our arrangement, which is especially good for our son. Most children hardly ever get to see their fathers.

My problem is my mother. She puts John down, calling him a "sissy" and a "gigolo" to his face! She can be really vicious when she wants to be, but at times she's truly a very kind and loving person. Her moods can change in a minute!

What should I do? My efforts to communicate with Mother have been in vain.

In spite of it all, I love her. Sign me ...

Chapter Has Recent Cook-Out

The new year for Xi Gamma Xi Chapter of Beta Sigma Phi started with a cook-out held at the Windy Ridge Club House.

The first meeting of the year was held at the home of Barbara Sloan assisted by Barbara Turcotte. Plans were made for service and ways and means projects for the year.

One of the ways and means projects will be designing, constructing and decorating a large playhouse for children.

Ms. Turcotte gave the program on social services and protective services that exist to help children in the county.

Elizabeth Avery Is President

Alpha Iota Chapter of Alpha Delta Kappa International Sorority held its September meeting at the Colonial Inn in Farmville. Elizabeth Avery is serving as president for the next biennial.

She will be assisted by Sarah Allen, vice president, Linda Ferebee, recording secretary, Mena Lassiter, treasurer; Ann Davis, historian, Trilby Harris, sergeant at arms, Barbara Finch and Mary Ann Brannon, chaplains, and Faye Baker, pledge chairman.

"The Uniqueness of the Individual" was the devotional given by Mrs. Finch. The initiation ceremony for Pat Minges and Jo Ann McPherson, new members, were held.

Ms. Avery reminded members that Alpha Delta Kappa Week will be held Oct. 14-20. Oct. 23 is Founder's Day and a meeting will be held with Alpha Nu and Fidelis Beta Chapters and the craft fair will be held at Carolina East Mall Oct. 27.

Gov. Hunt Signs October Proclamation

Gov. Jim Hunt has proclaimed October as Domestic Violence Awareness Month in North Carolina. Activities planned by local domestic violence programs will be held statewide.

The events will help inform the public of the proportions domestic violence has reached not only in N.C. but nationwide.

"It is my hope that this state and national effort will help augment the raising of public awareness of this issue and deliver the message to abused women that they are not alone," Hunt said.

Teachers

Preoccupation with our children, our schools and standards of education overshadowed attention owed North Carolina's teachers. Now the N.C. Association of Educators warns a teacher shortage is knocking at the door.

NCAE President Cecil Banks says right now there are 6,000 teachers in the state eligible for immediate retirement, and if they all stepped down at the same time we wouldn't have enough teachers to replace them.

We have already been told of a scarcity of teachers in such areas as math and science, but Banks warns shortages will occur in all other areas.

Some warning signs: fewer new teachers graduated last year than in other recent years, a growing number of teachers are resigning for work in more lucrative fields (the state's school districts are hiring ever more teachers as attrition grows).

The NCAE president takes a dim view of the state school board's five-step advancement ladder, saying it fails to meet the real needs of the profession. "It looks nice to talk about a salary schedule going up to $45,000," says Banks, "but there is no one who believes that the number of positions at that top level is unlimited. So if you still start teachers at a salary of $15,600, I would argue we are not going to be competing favorably with other professions." It's a point worth thinking about.

To prevent the looming shortage, he says the General Assembly should raise starting salaries to $20,000, mandate smaller classes in all grades and give teachers clerical help. In other words, let them teach, and leave the filling out of forms, taking up of lunch money and monitoring the halls to others.

Banks makes a better case for remedial action by the General Assembly than other advocates who have stumped for solutions to North Carolina's school needs.

We hope people who share that responsibility were listening.

Decision

Every individual has to wrestle with his individual conscience over the question of whether convicted arsenic murderess Velma Barfield should die on Nov. 2.

Generally each of us will decide based on our personal feelings about capital punishment.

For Gov. Hunt the decision was far more grave, however. With the stroke of a pen he could have intervened and saved the woman from the gas chamber. It is a major responsibility made heavier by the senatorial campaign in which the governor is involved. Either way he decided, a political decision was to be suspected.

Gov. Hunt has announced well ahead of the execution date that he will not intervene. To do so would be to make an exception to the laws of the state and to override the verdict of 12 jurors.

The governor's decision should be removed from politics. It was a difficult decision and he has bravely made it early.

Putting Out The Fires Quickly

WASHINGTON (AP) — When Democrats complained that President Reagan's re-election campaign might be organizing the hecklers who keep popping up at campaign rallies held by Walter Mondale and Geraldine Ferraro, Reagan campaign advisers quickly put out their side of the story.

They said they had no role in the protests. But they added that a former White House aide, Morton Blackwell, had conducted seminars for young activists, some of whom might have been involved in the incidents along the Democratic campaign trail.

"Blackwell is out doing his own thing," said one official. Blackwell himself said the instructors at his Leadership Institute for conservative activists had sought to discourage disruptive activities, but the White House wasn't taking any chances.

The image was that of a free agent acting on his own — and a presidential campaign moving to quell potentially embarrassing news coverage by aggressively disseminating its own side of the story before things got out of hand.

"You don't want these things to linger," said one official in a classic description of political damage control.

With a re-election campaign so smooth it seemed to be on auto-pilot, the last thing the Reagan-Bush campaign needed was a string of stories about a former White House adviser contributing to the organized heckling of the political opposition.

That would only "divert our message" in the final six weeks of the campaign, said one official.

So it was in the fifth week of the general election campaign.

Not only on the hecklers, but on two other issues — responsibility for the bombing of the U.S. Embassy annex in Beirut and Vice President George Bush's tax returns — the Reagan-Bush campaign moved to head off potentially embarrassing problems before they got out of hand.

Perhaps not coincidentally, one of the problems cropped up during a week in which Reagan — hammered mercilessly by Mondale for running an isolated, "question-free" re-election effort — made himself more available to questions from the press and the public.

During one photo opportunity, Reagan compared the incomplete security in Beirut to the difficulty encountered in remodeling a kitchen.

"Anybody that's ever had their kitchen done over knows it never gets done as soon as you wish it would," he said.

That set off a predictable storm of criticism from Mondale, Ms. Ferraro and other Democrats that the White House decided to weather.

But a few days later, fielding questions from the public in Bowling Green, Ohio, Reagan seemed to blame the bombing on the policies of former President Carter.

"We're feeling the effects today of the near destruction of our intelligence capability in recent years — before we came here, the effort that somehow to say, well, spying is somehow dishonest and let's get rid of our intelligence agents, and we did that to a large extent," Reagan said.

Again Democrats reacted with outrage, and Carter himself issued a written statement saying he had "listened with disappointment and anger" for 3½ years "to a stream of false assertions made by President Reagan in his attempt to blame his every mistake and failure on me and others who served before him in the White House."

This time, Reagan telephoned Carter to assure him he was not trying to blame him for the embassy attack.

Reporters were not permitted in the room for the phone call, and no White House aide was willing to report the president's remarks on the record.

But speaking on condition he be granted anonymity, one aide said Reagan told Carter, "I certainly did not suggest" that his administration was responsible for the bombing.

As for Bush, the issue of his income tax returns has been bubbling since early in the campaign, when Ms. Ferraro told reporters she would release not only her own financial information but that of her husband, John Zaccaro.

Checking Abuse In Day Care Agencies

RALEIGH — North Carolina day care children are relatively safe from the kind of abuse that children in other parts of the country have suffered. But even the small amount of abuse which occurs in the state's day care centers and homes ought to be a major concern to the day care industry.

That's the opinion of a pair of Chapel Hill researchers, Richard Clifford and Susan Russell, who combed through the complaint files of the state's Office of Day Care Licensing. They found that between July 1, 1982, and June 30, 1983, 424 complaints were lodged against day care providers in the state. Those complaints comprised a total of 638 allegations of misconduct of some form or another.

While 638 complaints may sound like a lot, the researchers reminded the Legislature's Day Care Study Commission that there are over 2,375 licensed day care centers in the state, almost 5,000 registered day care homes and that North Carolina has the sixth largest day care population in the country.

"These figures show that to the typical parent, there is not much to be concerned about," Clifford said. "There is a relatively small number of cases here and it is very unlikely to happen at any one place. Although I'm sure that even a single case is enough to be concerned about."

The "single cases" which are cause for concern are the 82 complaints that involved what Clifford and Russell described as a "severe" allegation — that is, that the child had been abused, neglected or, in some other way, been placed in a health-threatening situation.

"As a professional working in child care, these cases are a serious problem which we must address," continued Clifford, director of evaluation at the Frank Porter Graham Child Development Center.

"In talking to parents, I'd certainly say that they need to take a good look at their day care," added Ms. Russell of the Orange County Department of Social Services.

The two worked without any funding for their study and began their research before news reports broke concerning physical and sexual abuse at a California day care center. At several points in their presentation they warned that some of their data might be questionable for reasons stemming from either their lack of resources or the public's lack of knowledge about how to complain about their day care providers.

Day care centers in North Carolina must, by law, be licensed. The two, using the complaint information, came to the conclusion that compliance with that law is very high. Not so high, however, is compliance with state law requiring day care homes — that is, places where fewer than six children are watched — to be registered.

Correcting A Mistake

WASHINGTON — Back in March I wrote a column about Ed Meese. It hurt to write it. The president had nominated Meese to become attorney general, and the nomination had been caught in a fog of suspicion and innuendo. Meese was being perceived as a wheeler-dealer who peddled federal jobs in return for personal favors.

"Because perception counts so heavily," I said then, "my unhappy thought is that Meese ought to withdraw his name. ... Reagan has enough heavy baggage to carry into the coming campaign without the burden of a long and distasteful battle for (Meese's) confirmation."

I write today's column with a lighter heart. Meese now has won vindication — vindication in every way that a court-appointed independent counsel could provide it. An exhaustive review of 11 allegations of wrongdoing failed to turn up the slightest evidence against him. With only a few days remaining before Congress adjourns on Oct. 5, it is too late to resume confirmation hearings now; but if Reagan is re-elected in November, the Senate's first order of business in January should be the speedy rectification of the injury that has been done to an honorable man.

Jacob A. Stein was appointed independent counsel on April 2. My expectation — an expectation nurtured in Washington journalism — was that we were in for a summer of leaks. I could see The Washington Post's bloodhounds sniffing on the trail of Stein's investigators. It didn't work out that way. As it now transpires, there was nothing scandalous to leak. Moreover, Stein ran a tight ship. He gave no press conferences, and he kept his crew buttoned up: "We were successful in affording confidentiality concerning the appearance of witnesses."

By the time his investigation ended, Stein and his staff had interviewed more than 200 witnesses and had pored over thousands of pages of relevant material. No witness sought immunity. No witness took the Fifth. Under the ethics statute, Stein had no authority to consider matters of propriety, appearance or judgment on Meese's part. The question was whether Meese had violated federal law. And the upshot?

"We find no basis with respect to any of the 11 allegations for the bringing of a prosecution against Mr. Meese."

One of the more serious allegations last spring had to do with a $15,000 loan from Edwin W. Thomas to Meese's wife Ursula. Meese had failed to report the indebtedness on his Form 278; the loan carried no interest; Thomas had been named to head the San Francisco office of the General Services Administration; Mrs. Thomas had become an attorney-examiner with the Merit Systems Protection Board; their son Tad Thomas held a job for 10 months with the Labor Department. It looked bad.

Stein's meticulous investigation dissipates the cloud. The two families were quite close; the loan was a friendly accommodation intended to help Mrs. Meese in the timely purchase of a promising stock. (The stock, as it turned out, was a bummer.) Thomas got his GSA job on his own. There was no evidence "that Mr. Meese was involved in or was even aware of Mr. Thomas' appointment." As for Mrs. Thomas: "No evidence of Mr. Meese's participation in her hiring was found." As for

Tad: "No evidence regarding Mr. Meese was discovered."

The same negative findings were made in the matter of Meese's real estate loans. After Reagan's victory in November 1980, it was imperative that Meese make a move to Washington in order to serve as the incoming president's chief counselor. The Meeses put their San Diego home on the market and simultaneously arranged to purchase a house in McLean, Va., a Washington suburb. The San Diego property remained unsold until September 1982. Much of the financing was through Great American First Savings Bank. Subsequently Gordon Luce, chairman of Great American's board, was appointed to a part-time position as alternate delegate to the U.N. General Assembly.

Stein's conclusion, after an exhaustive tracking of documents and testimony, is that there simply was no nexus between the bank's easygoing treatment of Meese and Luce's appointment to a largely honorary post. Luce was close to the president. If he had wanted a high-ranking job in Washington, he would not have needed Ed Meese to intercede for him. All other allegations faded away in the same fashion.

In the newspaper business, all this would add up to "no story." The media, regrettably, have treated the Stein report as such. The abbreviated coverage of Meese's vindication this month is in marked contrast to the voluminous reporting of the allegations against him last spring. This is how the system works: No story is no story. But it is pure pleasure for me to rejoice that Meese spurned my bad advice in March. He and the president stood fast, and they have come through with colors flying.

Strength For Today

Jesus declared that if one had faith as a grain of mustard seed he might say to a mountain: "Remove hence to yonder place; and it shall remove ..." And nothing is impossible to anyone possessing such faith (Matt. 17:20; Luke 17:6).

People often complain that they have very little religious faith. God is not interested in the quantity of our faith but its quality. A mustard seed is so small that one can scarcely see it as it rests in the palm of the hand. Yet that little seed has in it such vitality that it grows into a large shrub.

God is interested in whether our faith has vitality. Does it bring us closer to God and God closer to us? Does it make life round about us — with the members of our family and with our associates in general — better or worse, happy or deplorable?

Take the faith you have and start using it.

IRA Heads Arrested In Ireland

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — Gerry Adams, president of the IRA's political front, Sinn Fein, and five top aides were arrested in predawn raids today and questioned about how an American IRA sympathizer slipped into Northern Ireland.

Valerie Kincaid, a spokeswoman at police headquarters, said the six were released "after several hours with no charges preferred."

She told The Associated Press that Adams, 35, and the five others were picked up at their homes in Roman Catholic west Belfast under Britain's 1971 Immigration Act, which covers anyone who helps illegal immigrants enter the United Kingdom — including Northern Ireland. She declined to give details.

Adams was elected to the British Parliament as representative for West Belfast in June 1983, but he has refused to take his seat to protest what he calls the British occupation of Northern Ireland.

Adams said today that the Sinn Fein leaders were interrogated about how Martin Galvin, publicity director of the New York-based Irish Northern Aid Committee, or Noraid, was smuggled in and out of Northern Ireland in August.

Britain banned Galvin, 34, a lawyer, from entering the strife-torn province with a 130-member Noraid delegation, saying his presence would create trouble. Galvin defied the ban and appeared at a Sinn Fein rally in west Belfast on Aug. 12. Police firing plastic bullets charged in to grab him, killing one man and wounding more than 20 other Roman Catholics, but Galvin escaped.

Adams said today's raids made Northern Ireland's predominantly Protestant police force "look ridiculous. All of us were available for arrest, including myself, at any time in the last few days ... That we had to be arrested in dawn swoops speaks volumes for the police state we live in."

If Adams or the others are charged and convicted of "knowingly harboring" illegal immigrants, they would face seven-year prison sentences and fines under the Immigration Act.

In a statement telexed to the AP bureau in London before Adams and the others were freed, Galvin said that today's raids were "a blatant attempt at revenge for the ignominy which the British brought upon themselves by their brutal attack ... and their inability to capture me."

The British news agency Press Association said Galvin reportedly said he was prepared to fly to Belfast to testify in court that none of the Sinn Fein officials helped him get in and out of Northern Ireland.

Galvin could be jailed for six months and fined $496 if convicted for illegally entering Northern Ireland.

Sinn Fein officials identified the men arrested with Adams as Central Committee member Tom Hartley, Northern Ireland Assemblyman Joe Austin, Richard McAuley, Belfast Councilman Alex Maskie and Bob Murray.

Sinn Fein is a legal political party, but the Irish Republican Army is outlawed.

The almost exclusively Catholic underground is fighting to end British rule in Protestant-dominated Northern Ireland. It seeks to unite the province with the Catholic Irish Republic and set up an all-Ireland socialist state.

Noraid says it raises money for families of nationalists killed or jailed in Northern Ireland, but the Irish and British governments maintain the money is used to buy weapons.

Irish Justice Minister Michael Noonan said Sunday that Noraid helped finance the arms cache seized the day before aboard a trawler off the Irish coast.

Irish security sources said Monday that the cache included two powerful machine guns that can fire 200 rounds a minute of bullets capable of piercing a half-inch of steel at 1,100 yards.

Also seized, they said, were night-vision rifle sights which would have enabled snipers to pick off soldiers or policemen almost as easily at night as in daylight. The sources said they had no knowledge of such hardware being in IRA hands in the past.

Ferraro Draws Support And Opposition

By The Associated Press
When Eleanor Roosevelt visited Greensboro 40 years ago, the first lady told Aileen MacDonald that her daughter would see a woman in the Oval Office.

Ms. MacDonald, a 72-year old retired government employee, is still awaiting that day.

But Monday, as she sat in the crowd watching Geraldine Ferraro arrive in downtown Greensboro, she smiled and said she has an idea that America may soon prove Mrs. Roosevelt right.

"Women are ready to be recognized as leaders of this nation," Ms. MacDonald said. "I hope I live to see a woman president."

Ms. Ferraro, the Democratic vice presidential nominee, spoke in Greensboro at a lunchtime rally Monday before heading to Raleigh to speak at a Raleigh and a private fund-raiser and a public fund-raiser.

"I knew when I was old enough to appreciate my grandmother that one day we Italian women were going to do something big," said Tina Paul of Greensboro. "She's got a lot of spunk."

When Ms. Ferraro was first selected for the Democratic ticket, retired school teacher Mary Louise Deal was a little leery of the choice. Those fears have now passed, she says.

"There are so many foreign women that have been so successful, like Thatcher (the prime minister of Great Britain). Why can't we have a great one?" she said.

A few in the crowd came to show their displeasure with Ms. Ferraro. Bev Howarth of Winston-Salem arrived with a sign objecting to the candidate's stand on abortion.

"I wouldn't want to be in their place," Ms. Howarth said, pointing to the cheering partisan supporters.

Celeste Cochran carried a sign with a photograph of a fetus to the Raleigh rally.

"I came out to make a statement," she said. "I'm opposed to her stand on abortion."

Ms. Ferraro, a Roman Catholic, has said she personally opposes abortion but supports the nation's laws that make it legal.

Douglas Katz of Raleigh attended the rally in Raleigh with his wife, Sally Spetz. They questioned whether Gov. Jim Hunt helped his Senate campaign by appearing with Ms. Ferraro.

"I don't think it'll hurt him in Raleigh or Wake County," he said. "But I don't think it'll help him in eastern North Carolina."

Anne Normand of Durham took a day off from her job at Duke University to attend the rally in Greensboro.

"For a change, they've chosen a woman who's competent, not just a token," she said. "Not to mention that she's a dynamite candidate. I'm very particular about the candidates I support. This is a historic moment for me."

Ruling Allows Thousands Of Schools To Enter Suits

By JANAS S. MOORE
Associated Press Writer
PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Virtually every elementary and secondary school in the nation can join an almost $1 billion class-action suit against manufacturers to recover the cost of removing deadly asbestos from school buildings, a judge has ruled.

U.S. District Judge James McGirr Kelly, in a ruling released Monday, opened the way for the suit against all 55 solvent asbestos firms in the country by granting class-action status to a case brought by three Pennsylvania school districts and one in South Carolina.

The case is the first nationwide class action suit for property damages on a products liability issue, according to an attorney for the original four districts.

When inhaled, asbestos fibers have been known to cause cancer and a variety of lung problems. The federal Environmental Protection Agency estimated in August that 15 million pupils and about 1.4 million school employees were at risk.

Under Kelly's ruling, the case automatically will include 36,000 public and non-profit private schools that have been ordered by the government to test for asbestos, attorney David Berger said late Monday night. The government estimates ceiling tiles or insulation in 14,000 schools contain asbestos, Berger said.

"Instead of hundreds of thousands of school asbestos cases in separate forums, the litigation would be concentrated in a single forum, thereby economizing litigation expenses," Kelly wrote in his decision.

The suit will try to recover punitive and compensatory damages to pay for the testing and removal programs. But Berger said he hopes to negotiate a settlement of up to $900 million before the case goes to court.

"I suggested to all of the defendants to get their act together, to give me a call so we can sit down and work on a global resolution to this problem that would be in the best interest of everyone," Berger said.

Berger said the industry also will benefit by facing lower damages if the schools win, adding that he thinks the cost of compensatory damages could be cut to about one-tenth of what they might otherwise be.

The case might even accelerate the 25,000 personal injury claims now pending against asbestos firms, Berger said.

Officials of the Asbestos Information Association, a Washington-based industry group, did not answer repeated phone calls to their office late Monday.

Asbestos was commonly used as insulation and in ceiling tiles until the mid-1970s, when scientists discovered that lung cancer can result from inhaling the fine fibers that easily become airborne.

In 1980, the EPA ordered all secondary and primary schools to test for asbestos and to begin removal programs.

But some districts and private schools have balked at the cost, and the EPA has filed suit against several districts to force compliance.

In Philadelphia, where school officials have called their three-year program the largest in the country, the district will spend an estimated $17.7 million to remove the substance.

Berger said he was preparing a letter to send to all public school districts and to private institutions to inform them of the suit.

The suit by the Lancaster, Manheim Township and Lampeter-Strasberg districts in Pennsylvania and the Barnwell School District in South Carolina accuses every manufacturer and supplier of asbestos in the country except one with negligence, breach of warranty and common law conspiracy.

The Denver-based Manville Corp., which faces thousands of personal injury cases, was exempted from the decision because it has filed for reorganization under Chapter 11 of U.S. bankruptcy laws.

Kelly defined the class as entities that own or operate in whole or in part any public educational facilities as defined in the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965, as well as all entities that own or operate in whole or in part any non-public, non-profit elementary or secondary educational facilities, including those with religious affiliations.

Begin Leaves Hospital

By ARTHUR MAX
Associated Press Writer
JERUSALEM (AP) — Former Prime Minister Menachem Begin, looking thin but smiling, was released today from a hospital where he underwent surgery to remove his prostate gland.

In his second public appearance since going into seclusion after resigning in September 1983, Begin thanked doctors and nurses at Shaarei Tzedek Medical Center who he said cared for him during his three-week stay "with unbelievable dedication."

The 71-year-old Begin, accompanied by his daughter Hassia and former personal aide Yehiel Kadishai, walked by himself from the hospital and was driven to his home less than a mile away.

Begin's last public appearance was on Dec. 10, 1983, when he moved out of the premier's official residence and into his private residence overlooking the Jerusalem forest.

He has spoken occasionally to journalists over the telephone, most recently when he said last month that he supported a joint government of the left-wing Labor Party and the right-wing Likud bloc which he founded.

Begin stepped down suddenly as Israel's sixth prime minister, reportedly depressed about the death of his wife Aliza and the country's military entanglement in Lebanon.

He suffered two heart attacks during his years as premier. He also suffered from an unexplained skin rash for weeks after his resignation.

The surgery was performed under local anesthetic with a cardiac specialist at Begin's side because of his history of heart trouble.

Here's a new name that promises to generate a lot of interest.

Watchdog Group Feels A Tighter Money Grip Needed

By The Associated Press

A group of private economists that regularly monitors Federal Reserve System policymaking says the Fed should tighten its grip on the money supply next year to prevent a rekindling of high inflation.

"The inflation problem is not behind us," said the Shadow Open Market Committee, a group of leading "monetarist" economists that believes the quantity of money in circulation determines the level of economic activity and prices.

The level of new construction, meantime, edged up a slight 0.2 percent in August as a surge in apartment building overcame weakness in most other areas, the government reported Monday.

The Commerce Department said construction spending totaled $311.7 billion at a seasonally adjusted annual rate in August, up from $311.2 billion in July.

In a policy statement, the Shadow Open Market Committee predicted that the economy will grow at a real rate of about 3 percent to 4 percent in 1985, "if monetary and fiscal policies do not wrench the economy in one direction or another."

The self-appointed watchdog group derives its name from the Federal Open Market Committee, the Fed's policymaking arm. It held its semiannual meeting Sunday and issued its statement Monday.

"Despite the slower growth of money in 1984, money growth remains far above the path required for price stability. Further reductions are required," the report said.

It said money growth in 1985 should not exceed 6 percent, the mid-point of the Fed's target range of 4 percent to 8 percent from the fourth quarter of 1983 to the fourth quarter of 1984.

The nation's basic money supply has grown at an annual rate of 6.1 percent since the fourth quarter of 1983, but the rate slowed to 2.7 percent since June.

The Fed has announced a modest reduction in its M1 growth targets for 1985 — 4 percent to 7 percent.

M1 represents funds readily available for spending. It includes cash in circulation, deposits in checking accounts and non-bank travelers checks.

The August construction spending gain followed declines of 1.3 percent in July and 0.3 percent in June. The July setback was originally reported as a 0.5 percent increase.

The weak performance in recent months is a marked change from robust growth turned in during the first months of this year. Rising interest rates are blamed for the slowdown.

Construction of single-family homes dropped 3.2 percent in August, the third consecutive monthly decline. Spending on apartment construction rose, however, shooting up by 12.9 percent following a 5.1 percent gain in July.

Michael Sumichrast, chief economist for the National Association of Home Builders, said the growth in apartment building was coming in spite of considerable weakness in condominium sales and was being spurred by congressional tax benefits.

In other economic developments Monday:

—Citing fears of an international trade war, Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige said President Reagan may veto a foreign trade bill aimed at helping a variety of U.S. industries battle their overseas competitors.

—The Equal Employment Opportunity Commission said Allstate Insurance Co. agreed to give $5 million to female sales agents in one of the largest sex-discrimination awards on record. The commission said the back pay settlement affects some 3,000 women employees who were allegedly discriminated against and ends nearly 10 years of litigation.

Hunt People Hope Ruling Ends Probe

RALEIGH (AP) — Officials of Gov. Jim Hunt's U.S. Senate campaign say they hope a Federal Elections Commission ruling expected Thursday will stop a series of Republican attacks on Hunt's use of state aircraft.

In a request for an advisory opinion, Hunt attorneys Jack Cozart and David Kirby say federal regulations are vague on how a candidate who is also a public official should allocate campaign and noncampaign expenses when he travels on government aircraft or cars or uses government accommodations.

North Carolina Republicans, led by state chairman David Flaherty, have called several news conferences to charge that Hunt broke state law in using state aircraft for political purposes while campaigning against Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C.

Hunt's campaign paid the state $185,938 recently, after accountants discovered his campaign had underpaid the state for use of state transportation. A Hunt spokesman said the check was about $80,000 more than the guidelines required.

Hunt campaign officials say they think the FEC will conclude that Hunt's guidelines for reimbursing the state are more than fair.

Campaign spokesman Will Marshall said an FEC ruling would "just reinforce the point that the governor has gone the extra mile, and that the issue is settled."

Flaherty said Monday that he couldn't comment because he didn't know exactly what the FEC is supposed to consider Thursday.

Hunt's guidelines call for a basic reimbursement rate of $32 per day for the use of a state car, for trips of more than 150 miles or when the car is used more than five hours. For shorter trips the minimum would be $10.

For use of a state plane, the campaign is to base its reimbursement on comparable commercial rates.

In all cases when a helicopter is used, the guidelines say the state should be reimbursed at helicopter charter rates.

UAW Union Says Will Not Demand Ford Copy GMC Pact

By EDWARD MILLER

AP Auto Writer

DEARBORN, Mich. (AP) — The United Auto Workers union won't demand that Ford Motor Co. copy the job security provisions of the UAW's tentative contract with General Motors Corp., a top UAW official says.

Stephen Yokich, the union's chief bargainer with Ford, said that the UAW will expect job security guarantees equal to those at GM but is willing to tailor a pact to fit Ford's needs as a smaller, less-integrated company.

"What we have to do is look at what they did at GM, look at our demands that suit the Ford workers and try to tailor it," Yokich said Monday as both sides resumed contract negotiations.

"The end," Yokich added, "would be the same type of security."

The job security provisions GM agreed to call for the creation of a fund of up to $1 billion to aid workers who lose their jobs due to outside contracting, automation and productivity increases.

However, it does not cover workers laid off because of slow auto sales.

The renewal of Ford talks came after nearly a month of inactivity as the union and GM settled their contract differences.

The complex tentative GM pact, covering 350,000 workers, was reached Sept. 21 after six days of spot strikes against the company. Workers now are voting on the agreement against an Oct. 14 deadline.

The union represents 115,000 workers at Ford.

Yokich said he hoped to have an agreement at Ford by Oct. 12, but he refused to call that a strike deadline, saying, "Well, we'll see. We'll make that decision when we face it — but I'm not going to start building brick walls and try to avoid a settlement."

For now, that date is "something to work towards" to keep the talks from lagging, he said.

The Ford contract expired Sept. 14, and both sides agreed to extend it. The extension carries a three-day strike notice.

Peter Pestillo, chief negotiator for Ford, has said the company would not allow itself to be bound by a GM contract.

But he added that, "Obviously, that which took place at General Motors is of great significance and something we must deal with."

On job security, Pestillo said, "there are ways to deal with that that are not necessarily identical with the way in which GM proceeded."

"Obviously, we can't reach a settlement without some kind of job protection," he said.

Yokich said the union would seek a settlement that provides as good a wage package as does the GM agreement.

The 1982 concessions contracts at the two companies provided average hourly wages that were only a penny an hour apart — $12.67 at GM and $12.68 at Ford.

The tentative three-year GM contract would raise the total wage to $12.82 with no increases in the second and third years.

However, with profit sharing, cost of living adjustments and lump payments of more than $1,600, the average worker's pay could rise by as much as $12,000 over the three years, according to union figures based on a constant 5 percent inflation rate.

Fire Death

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — Children playing with matches started a blaze in a Winston-Salem house that killed a 2-year-old girl, fire officials said.

Battalion Chief W.S. Wadkins said Deloris Jefferson died about 9 a.m. Monday after a fire broke out in an upstairs bedroom where she and her 4-year-old brother, Tyrone, were playing.

Wadkins said it wasn't clear whether both of the children were playing with matches.

He said an adult who was upstairs resting discovered the fire after smelling smoke. Intense flames prevented the woman from reaching the 2-year-old girl, he said.

Japan's Bullet Trains Mark 20th Anniversary

TOKYO (AP) — Japan's bullet train is no longer the world's fastest, but it celebrated its 20th anniversary with its remarkable record of not having a single passenger fatality still intact.

The Shinkansen, which means New Trunk Line, has carried about 2 billion passengers since Oct. 1, 1964.

About 200 people have committed suicide either on the bullet-nosed train or its tracks, and dozens of workmen have been killed, but the Shinkansen has never had a fatal accident involving a passenger, said Y. Hayashi, a deputy director of the state-owned Japan National Railways.

The recently inaugurated French TGV runs at 162 mph, compared with the 130 mph for the Japanese train.

However, Japan plans to increase the speed of the Shinkansen's westernmost line to about 180 mph.

And next-generation trains which hover above the tracks, pulled aloft by magnetic force, will be able to exceed 300 mph, Hayashi said.

A major impact of the bullet train has been on the economies of the cities connected by the original line — Tokyo, Nagoya and Osaka.

Hirofumi Shimizu, a city employee in Osaka, recalled how it once took him eight hours to cover the 330 miles between Osaka and Tokyo.

"Now, people ... go to Tokyo in the morning, attend their meeting or whatever, and go home that same night," he said.

The Tokyo-Osaka trip can be made in three hours on a train which stops twice: in Nagoya, Japan's fourth largest city, and in the cultural center of Kyoto, near Osaka.

About 60 percent of Japan's 119 million people live in the metropolitan areas of Tokyo, Nagoya and Osaka.

The current LineOne interest rate is available at any NCNB office.

TRUCKER PREACHER — The Rev. John Ritchey of Bedford, Pa., and his wife Heidi welcome Milton Barland, a Battle Creek, Mich., truck mechanic and former truck driver to their 18-wheel custom-built chapel. With them is area resident Franklin Barkley, 9. (AP Laserphoto)

Minister Hits The Highways In 18-Wheel Traveling Chapel

BATTLE CREEK, Mich. (AP) — The Rev. John Ritchey steers the nation's truckers toward the Lord with gospel music and an 18-wheel chapel complete with hardwood pews, a donation box and citizens band radio.

From the California coast to the rolling hills of his native Bedford, Pa., Ritchey, 25, ministers to the spiritual needs of a roving flock as the Assemblies of God chaplain assigned to the trucking industry. He says his truck-borne chapel is traditional.

"We even have red carpeting," Ritchey said after Sunday services in Battle Creek. "It can hold 27 truckers or 200 kids — whoever comes first."

The chapel on wheels, a 1970 Ford rig pulling a Great Dane trailer decorated with two amber crosses on the front and inspirational messages on the back, stands out at rest stops and on highways as a symbol of peace to people who earn their living on the road, Ritchey said.

One of the messages on the back doors is "In God We Trust," painted above a sketch of World War II Marines raising the U.S. flag at Iwo Jima. The other door is inscribed with the words, "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path."

As he and his wife drive from truck stop to truck stop, Ritchey converses with his congregation on CB radio, answering to the handle "Padre."

"So many truckers we meet are on the verge of disaster," said Ritchey. "They need answers to life's problems. And I help them find those answers through the word of God."

Ritchey also gives them a chance to get away from the never-changing rest stop world of diesel pumps, video games and short-order restaurants.

A trucker who steps aboard Ritchey's rig enters a bona fide church, with one obvious difference: This chapel is very, very narrow.

The minister has equipped his chapel with wood paneling, hardwood pews, an American flag, a donation box and an amplification system from which he broadcasts recordings of gospel music. Truckers who stop in are also shown a 15-minute film on safe truck driving.

Ritchey said he and his wife, Heidi, normally take to the road in three-week stretches. Their parsonage is over the fifth wheel, affectionately called "the bunk house."

"We live in here," Mrs. Ritchey said, pointing to the door behind the pulpit. "We have water and a shower — at least we did until (the shower) broke. We've been roughing it at rest stops for a couple of days now."

Vietnamese Boat Woman Survives Savage Attacks

By PETER ENG
Associated Press Writer
PHANAT NIKHOM, Thailand (AP) — At the age of 21, Thuy is a survivor of genocide in Cambodia, a six-month forced march to Vietnam and five savage pirate attacks while adrift for seven days and nights in a boat in the Gulf of Thailand.

parents, Thuy arrived in Thailand in June 1983 on a small refugee boat whose female passengers were beaten, abducted and repeatedly raped in the pirate attacks.

She has a future now, one for which her parents in Vietnam stashed away money.

She will be resettled as a refugee in Sydney, Australia, under the sponsorship of a Roman Catholic church. Her parents remained in southern Vietnam because they didn't have the money to flee on a refugee boat as Thuy did.

Thuy is not her real name. She asked that it not be used to protect her parents, who survived the Cambodian war in the early 1970s and the emergence of the communist Khmer Rouge faction that killed 10 of Thuy's relatives as they brought a reign of terror down upon the country after their 1975 victory.

This is Thuy's story, told to a reporter recently at this camp about 55 miles from Bangkok, Thailand's capital. It cannot be confirmed independently, but her account of pirate attacks is similar to accounts given to United Nations officials by other refugees.

"They raped and then tried to kill us, but they didn't succeed," she said of the pirates who attacked her, her brother and 36 other "boat people" as they sailed in a 36-foot boat from Songdoc, on Vietnam's southern Ca Mau Peninsula, to southern Thailand.

In the first attack, the refugees were robbed of everything and the boat's 11 women were dragged onto the pirate boat, repeatedly raped for two days and returned to their boat.

Thuy was abducted by another pirate boat the next day. This time, she said, the pirates were "very cruel," and she jumped into the sea and swam back to the refugee boat.

"They threw out a rope and tried to catch me."

In the fifth attack, the pirates tried to take the refugee boat's engine, but in an ironic twist, the refugees were saved when the pirates involved in the first attack returned, took pity on them, and paid off the fifth pirate boat.

All the refugees landed June 10, 1983, in Thailand at Songkhla, "right on the beautiful beach with many beautiful trees" — the ordeal over, lucky to be alive.

According to the Thailand office of the U.N. High Commissioner For Refugees (UNHCR), pirates killed 724 refugees headed for Thai shores from 1981 to the first half of this year. In 624 recorded attacks during this period, pirates also abducted 560 refugees, most of whom were never seen alive again. Separate figures show that 882 refugee women were raped.

UNHCR officials believe most of the pirates are Thai fishermen, but they do report a few cases of Vietnamese attacking refugees.

High Commissioner Poul Hartling, in an interview with The Associated Press in Bangkok, quoted senior officials in Vietnam as conceding there were "a couple of cases involving Vietnamese pirates, and that they were 'severely punished.'"

Thuy's story continues:

She and her parents survived the fighting in Cambodia in the early 1970s, but faced a new ordeal when the Khmer Rouge carried out mass executions, emptied the cities, and forced people to work in the countryside.

Thuy's family, which ran an import-export business in Phnom Penh, the Cambodian capital, was given three days by the Khmer Rouge to move out of the city in April 1975. A six-month march to the Vietnamese border followed, and the family was forced "many times" to work in the fields along the way.

Some of her relatives too old or ill to work were killed. Others were turned back at the border by Vietnamese guards because they could not speak Vietnamese. They were shot by Khmer Rouge soldiers.

After spending some time at a border camp, the surviving family members made it to Ho Chi Minh City, once Saigon, where the father and mother saved for their children to become boat people.

Soviet Cosmonauts Back Home Following 237 Days In Space

By ALISON SMALE
Associated Press Writer
MOSCOW (AP) — Three Soviet cosmonauts who made history's longest space flight returned to Earth safely today and were pronounced well after almost eight months in weightless conditions, the official Soviet news agency Tass said.

Today marked the crew's 237th day in space, but Tass put the time as 237 full days completed.

The agency said commander Leonid Kizim, engineer Vladimir Solovyev and medical researcher Oleg Atkov returned to earth at 1:57 p.m. Moscow time (6:57 a.m. EDT). They landed 100 miles east of the city of Dzhezhgagan in the Central Asian republic of Kazakhstan, the usual landing area for Soviet manned space flights.

It is about 90 miles from Baikonur, the space base 1,560 miles southeast of Moscow from which the three spacemen blasted off aboard the Soyuz T-10 capsule on Feb. 8.

Tass said a medical checkup carried out on touchdown showed the cosmonauts to be well after their "lengthy stay in zero gravity."

The Tass report was read on national television and on Radio Moscow shortly after it was published by the news agency.

Both the radio and the Communist Party daily Pravda reported today that the record-breaking mission had produced very important research, particularly on the effects of prolonged weightlessness.

The three completed scientific and technical research on board the Soviet space station Salyut-7, which was continuing its flight in an automatic mode, Tass said.

The news agency said the cosmonauts returned to earth in the Soyuz T-11 spacecraft's descent module.

Pravda said the mission yielded almost 25,000 photos of Earth's surface for research purposes.

Besides overtaking the 211-day endurance record set by cosmonauts Valentin Lebedev and Anatoly Berezovoy in December 1982, the mission set three other firsts.

In April, Rakesh Sharma became the first Indian in space when he traveled with two cosmonauts to work aboard the Salyut-7 with Kizim, Solovyev and Atkov.

In July, Svetlana Savitskaya and two male cosmonauts docked their craft with the space station. Miss Savitskaya became the first woman to walk in space, and the first woman to go into space twice.

On Aug. 8, Kizim and Solovyev set a record for the longest time spent in space walks on one mission. They ventured outside the station six times, spending 22 hours and 50 minutes working in space. That surpassed the U.S. mark of 22 hours and 13 minutes on four space walks during the Skylab 3 mission in 1973-74.

Atkov, who conducted medical research on the mission and is a cardiologist, told Soviet television viewers in the trio's final broadcast from the space station Monday night that the space walks were "very difficult and interesting days" when Kizim and Solovyev "worked almost the whole day in open space."

He did not elaborate, but Soviet space officials have said that Kizim and Solovyev worked to repair a fuel transmission leak that caused problems for two cosmonauts aboard the Salyut-7 last fall.

Kizim, Solovyev and Atkov docked with Salyut-7 on Feb. 9, a day before the death of Soviet leader Yuri V. Andropov.

When the last endurance mission ended in December 1982, Tass said the unusual night-time landing caused problems for the cosmonauts.

Dense fog and snow hampered recovery of Lebedev and Berezovoy, who landed "several kilometers" from their planned touchdown point. Tass said. The two cosmonauts, who seemed groggy from weightlessness when first shown on television, spent their first night on earth aboard a special recovery vehicle sent overland to recover them because fog prevented a helicopter pickup.

Navy Removes USS Connable After Morning Confusion

By JIM ZARROLI
Associated Press Writer
BOSTON (AP) — The Navy began to tow a frigate from a Boston shipyard following a brief blockade by two huge cranes today, a day after a judge ordered obstructions removed in a multimillion-dollar contract dispute.

Shortly after 8 a.m., lines holding the 438-foot USS Connable to a dock at the Boston Shipyard Corporation's East Boston shipyard were cast off and two tug boats started moving the anti-submarine vessel that has been the center of controversy since last week.

Just an hour earlier, it seemed that plans to move the ship had been stymied a second time.

At 7 a.m., Navy officials said they had been forced to abandon plans to remove the ship because two cranes blocked its path. But 45 minutes later, the cranes were removed as mysteriously as they had appeared during the night and the Navy announced it was going ahead with the towing.

"They told us to disconnect the shore connections and that's exactly what we are doing," said shipyard facilities manager Bruce Duffy. He said moving the boat would take two hours.

The cranes apparently were maneuvered into place about 4 a.m. in a second effort to stop the Navy from taking back the boat in an $8.5 million contract dispute over the quality of repair work being done at the yard.

Shipyard workers had said that they will lose their jobs if the Connable leaves the shipyard. They held the boat hostage with cranes over the weekend until U.S. District Judge Robert Keeton on Monday ordered shipyard management to a contempt hearing.

Shipyard chief of security Kenneth Twombly said he did not know who put the cranes back in front of the boat Monday morning. It was also unclear who ordered them removed.

Winds up to 35 mph blocked efforts Monday when the Navy tried to remove the Connable.

The shipyard had moved two cranes blocking the boat after Keeton ordered it to do so.

Removal of the Connable's fuel for the repair work made moving the ship under tow difficult in brisk winds, said Cmdr. Dan Davidson, a Navy spokesman.

Shipyard president William Kenney, who ordered the crane blockade over the weekend, conferred Monday with Navy Department officials in Washington trying to keep his yard's overhauling contract.

Neither side announced any result in the talks.

The Navy notified the shipyard Sept. 21 that it was dissatisfied with the overhaul of the ship that began Sept. 40. The Navy canceled the contract 9 a.m. Saturday but was blocked from removing the Connable to the General Ship Corp., Davidson said.

"The work was behind schedule, there was insufficient equipment and methods used to de-fuel the ship when it first came in were unsafe," Davidson said.

Kenney had said in a statement the cancellation would put 500 people out of work.

"The Navy has the right to terminate a contract after due deliberation of the facts," he said. "Conversely, we have the right to dispute any allegations during the deliberation process..."

"There was nothing of substance noted by the Navy which would normally precipitate such a drastic action."

Judge Buys His Guns Back

STRASBURG, N.D. (AP) — A city judge, who didn't want to miss out on hunting season after his three guns were stolen from his truck, ended up buying one of the guns back at a sporting goods store a week later.

John J. Baumgartner, 43, said Monday his 12-gauge Beretta shotgun, valued at $485, had been taken from his pickup truck Sept. 22. In shopping for another gun so the theft "wouldn't ruin" his hunting season, Baumgartner said he found one at a store in Bismarck that looked similar to his shotgun, except a little more banged up.

He determined that the gun was his after checking the serial numbers.

Bismarck police are still looking for Baumgartner's 20-gauge shotgun and a .22-caliber rifle, valued at about $1,000, Baumgartner said.

The Campaign

Mondale

WASHINGTON (AP) — Walter F. Mondale, sharpening his attack on President Reagan's foreign policy in the days leading to their campaign debate, says the chief executive is well-intentioned but so out of touch that he can't "command his own government."

"In Central America there are no talks. In the Middle East there is no policy. In Lebanon there was no protection, and on earth, there is no arms control," Mondale said Monday in a brief campaign foray into New Jersey.

The Democratic candidate recited several reported Reagan misstatements on nuclear weapons, and said: "When the fates of the earth are at stake, good intentions are not enough. And good intentions are all that we have today."

He said the nation needs a president who "masters his government, the essential facts, who is in touch and in charge."

"And it requires a president who stands up and takes the responsibility of the government for which he was elected. And we do not have that today."

Mondale's trip to New Brunswick, N.J. was his only public campaign event of the day. He was making a similar out-and-back trip today to Little Rock, Ark.

Mondale will spend most of the rest of the week preparing for the first of two campaign debates scheduled with Reagan on Sunday.

Far behind in the polls with five weeks until election day, the Democratic presidential candidate is counting on the debate to narrow the race.

"I believe we're starting to gain," he told reporters. But he conceded, "We don't have any time to spare."

Mondale's New Jersey speech was another in a series of hard-hitting attacks at Reagan's foreign policy stewardship.

His advisers believe that the recent bombing of the U.S. Embassy annex in Lebanon and the president's subsequent comments on it have given them an opportunity to raise doubts about his leadership. Two Americans died in the bombing, the third against a U.S. installation in that country in 17 months.

To the cheers of a packed auditorium, Mondale renewed his charge that the bombing two weeks ago was "inexcusable," and said again the president should drop his "alibis" and accept responsibility.

But he broadened his attack well beyond the bombing.

"A president must know what he wants. But he also must be in touch and in charge," Mondale said.

"I don't doubt that the president is for peace. But he has not mastered what he must know to command his own government, and to lead."

He offered several examples of what he said were false assumptions by the president.

"You can dream (of peace) all you want," he said. "But if you believe nuclear missiles can be recalled after they've launched, as Mr. Reagan did, you won't lead toward a safer world."

"You can dream to your heart's content, but if you think that submarines and bombers don't have nuclear warheads on them, as Mr. Reagan thought, you won't move us back from the brink," Mondale added.

Reagan

BILOXI, Miss. (AP) — President Reagan, stung by the indictment of a member of his own Cabinet, is pressing his re-election campaign through the South today, undeterred by the charges coming just five weeks before Election Day.

Reagan moved swiftly Monday night to distance himself from his labor secretary, Raymond J. Donovan, accepting the indicted Cabinet officer's request for an unpaid leave of absence without speaking to the embattled secretary.

Donovan, the first member of a president's Cabinet to be indicted while in office, was indicted Monday in New York on fraud charges growing out of a subway contract his construction firm worked on before he joined the Reagan administration. He dismissed the charges without seeing them, saying they weren't worth the paper they were written on.

Presidential spokesman Larry Speakes said the indictment would not affect Reagan's campaign schedule, which was to take him to three cities in Texas today.

The president hoped to woo Mexican-Americans in the border town of Brownsville, address an airport rally in Corpus Christi and wind up the day at a $2 million fund-raising dinner in Houston being staged to finance a statewide Republican phone bank operation for the benefit of all GOP candidates on the ballot in Texas.

Speakes said White House aides first learned of the Donovan matter in mid-afternoon and told Reagan of their unconfirmed reports as the president flew from Detroit to the Mississippi gulf coast, where he addressed an outdoor rally in Gulfport.

Caught by a CBS News crew at his Biloxi hotel before the rally, Reagan expressed "complete trust in (Donovan's) integrity." But he said he didn't have enough information to discuss the indictment report.

The president went on to the waterside rally, where he suggested to an enthusiastic crowd numbering tens of thousands that the Democrats "may be ready to ignore" the South.

"Vice President (George) Bush and I happen to consider that the South is worth respecting, worth listening to and, yes, worth fighting for," Reagan said.

And between roars of approval, he announced, "We've come here for one reason and one reason only: to win. And we ain't just whistlin' Dixie."

As he made the comments about the Democrats ignoring the South, however, Democratic vice presidential candidate Geraldine Ferraro was campaigning in the region, in North Carolina. And Democratic nominee Walter F. Mondale has campaigned in the South weekly since the general election campaign began.

Shortly after Reagan returned to his hotel for the night, Donovan and his lawyer, Dean Burch, also a Bush adviser, telephoned White House chief of staff James A. Baker III to confirm that a sealed indictment would be handed up today and to formally request a leave of absence for the labor secretary.

Bush

WASHINGTON (AP) — Vice President George Bush, targeting his campaign at the South, is complaining of "continual carping" by Democratic challenger Walter F. Mondale.

Describing Mondale as "a frantic Democratic challenger," Bush on Monday counterattacked against Mondale's charge that Reagan's meeting with Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko had been a failure.

"It's just more carping, somebody telling him, come on out now and tie into Ronald Reagan again," said Bush.

After a brief foray Monday to Georgia, Bush was heading today to Texas, the first stop on a three-day tour also taking him to Arkansas and Tennessee, as well as Oklahoma.

Bush was heading first to Lubbock before joining Reagan at a huge fund-raising dinner in Houston tonight.

Meanwhile, the Federal Aviation Administration said it was investigating an incident Sunday in which a small private plane in Ohio came unusually close to the vice president's jet, Air Force Two, with the vice president aboard.

Bush's plane came within three-fourths of a mile laterally and 500 feet vertically when they passed each other, said FAA spokesman Edmund Pinto. Federal regulations require that aircraft have separations of five miles laterally and 1,000 feet vertically.

Pinto said a preliminary investigation indicated there was "a systems error" by an air traffic controller.

A spokesman for Bush, meanwhile, said Bush would disclose details of his income tax returns on Wednesday.

Peter Teeley, press secretary to the vice president, said the Wednesday release date was "pretty firm."

The vice president promised to release "essential information" about his taxes for the years since he took office with President Reagan.

Bush went to Athens, Ga., on Monday to speak at a ceremony marking the 200th anniversary of the University of Georgia.

At a news conference before his address, Bush chided Mondale for demanding that Reagan spell out details of his meeting with Gromyko, saying there would be "much less chance for progress" if the Soviets thought there was going to be a detailed disclosure.

"If they think you're going to go public and characterize, categorize everything that happens, in my judgment, they will think they are being used for domestic political reasons...." Bush added.

"And I think this relationship is too sensitive and too important to trivialize it by getting it involved five weeks before a national election in responding to a call from a frantic Democratic challenger," the vice president said.

Realtors Say More Americans Found Home Mortgages Were Out Of Reach

By BILL McCLOSKEY
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Even with lower home prices and rising income, more Americans found mortgage loans out of reach in August because of rising mortgage interest rates, the National Association of Realtors says.

The housing affordability index devised by the trade group compares median family income and median home prices each month to see if a typical family can afford a typical home.

For August, the index was 82.9, meaning a family making the median $25,727 a year could not qualify for a loan big enough to purchase the median $74,300 house.

The Federal National Mortgage

Association's qualification guidelines recommend that annual principal and interest payments total no more than 25 percent of a borrower's yearly income. By the Realtors' figures, the typical family would have spent 30.2 percent of its income on monthly mortgage payments on a typical house.

A family seeking to qualify for a mortgage on a $74,300 home with a 20 percent down payment would need $31,027 in income, under the association's formula.

The index declined for the fourth straight month, even with a $200 July-to-August drop in the median price for resale homes.

Half the homes sold in August cost less than the median and half cost more. Likewise, half of all American families made more than the median and half less.

The Realtors use the Federal Home Loan Bank Board's monthly survey of major lending institutions to get the mortgage rate used in the calculations. In early August, the effective interest rate on conventional loans for resale homes was 12.76 percent, up from a July rate of 12.53 percent.

Many home buyers are able to qualify for a larger loan by agreeing to an adjustable rate mortgage, which allows the interest rate to float up and down as other interest rates vary.

These ARMs, as they are called, usually begin with rates about two percentage points below fixed-rate mortgages, because borrowers are willing to share the risk of rising interest rates with the lender.

But even the lower rate loans would not have improved the situation enough for a typical family.

An interest rate of 10.33 percent would have been necessary to bring the affordability index to 100 for a family at the national median income, the Realtors said. The affordability index hasn't been at 100 since December 1978.

The typical family could have afforded a $61,600 home, according to the trade group's formula.

Dr. Jack Carlson, chief economist and executive officer of the association, said more than a third of the homes sold in August were priced at less than $60,000.

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — The state attorney general, stung by the U.S. Supreme Court's refusal to reinstate the attempted murder conviction against Claus von Bulow, says he will retry the New York socialite on charges he tried to kill his heiress wife.

The Supreme Court, without comment, on Monday let stand the Rhode Island Supreme Court's April decision that von Bulow's rights were violated when illegally seized evidence was used at his 1982 trial.

"We will once again afford a jury of Mr. von Bulow's peers an opportunity to decide his guilt or innocence," said Attorney General Dennis J. Roberts II.

Von Bulow, 58, was convicted of twice trying to kill Martha "Sunny" von Bulow with insulin injections during Christmas visits to their Newport mansion in 1979 and 1980. Mrs. von Bulow, 53, remains in an irreversible coma in a New York hospital.

The state alleged von Bulow injected Mrs. von Bulow with insulin, saying he was motivated by greed for her $14 million from a Pittsburgh utilities fortune and by his love for another woman.

Roberts, locked in a tight race for re-election in which his conviction record has become an issue, had repeatedly said he would prosecute von Bulow a second time if the nation's high court turned down his petition for review.

Roberts said the state is ready to begin the trial as soon as Newport County Superior Court officials tell him they are ready.

Von Bulow and his Providence attorney were elated at Monday's development and expressed confidence a second trial would "completely exonerate" the Dutch-born financier.

"I'm obviously very grateful," von Bulow said. "I think it's two down on my side and I'm very grateful. My lawyers were feeling that this was a frivolous petition" by the state. "But I've learned to live with surprises, so I was very grateful that the court ruled as it did."

The state court cited the state constitution's protection against unreasonable searches and seizures and the Fourth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution.

At issue was a black bag taken from von Bulow's closet by Prince Alexander von Auersperg, Mrs. von Bulow's son by a previous marriage, and a private investigator who had a private laboratory test its contents.

After the tests showed the presence of insulin on a needle, the tests and the bag were turned over to state police. State lab tests on the materials also turned up evidence of insulin on the needle, and von Bulow was charged.

Von Auersperg and Annie Laurie Kneissl, Mrs. von Bulow's daughter from a previous marriage, said through an attorney in New York, "We are disappointed that the United States Supreme Court chose not to consider the merits of the appeal made on behalf of our mother..."

Group Figures Women Candidates Can Be Effective In Raising Money

By CHRISTOPHER CONNELL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — A women's political group that studied congressional races over the past eight years said today that the perception that women cannot raise money is no longer true.

But the Women's Campaign Research Fund said that the "pernicious force" of that myth may be discouraging women from running and may even hurt chances of those who do throw their hat into the political ring.

The group, a non-profit research arm of the Women's Campaign Fund — a bipartisan political action committee that supports women candidates who are pro-ERA and pro-choice on abortion — said that in 1982 the average woman running for Congress raised $218,745, or 93 percent of the $234,463 the average man raises.

That was up sharply from 1976 when women raised only two-thirds as much as male candidates.

The study, based on campaign spending reports to the Federal Election Commission of all 3,271 major party candidates in the last four elections, said the reason there were not more women in Congress is that they typically run "as challengers and for seats which are more difficult to win."

The fund said that in the last election there were 762 male candidates and 55 female. The number of women in the House has increased in the past 10 years from 15 to 22, but the number of women congressional candidates has not increased significantly. There were 54 in 1976.

Jody Newman, the fund's candidate services director and author of the study, said there are 65 women on the ballot in next month's elections.

Rep. Geraldine Ferraro, D-N.Y., the Democratic vice-presidential candidate and the first woman on a major party ticket, has complained about the difficulties women face in raising money. She got in trouble with the FEC in her first congressional race in 1978 when she illegally borrowed money from her family.

"A man never finds himself in this spot..." Ms. Ferraro said at an August news conference called to explain her finances. "I can give you a speech about how hard it is for women to raise money to run for office."

The study found some cases in 1982 in which women actually outraised their male counterparts.

For instance, in races for open seats a dozen women raised an average of $335,518 or 7 percent more than the average $312,197 raised by 93 men.

Among challengers in 1982, 26 women raised an average of $140,454, just under the $141,532 raised by men candidates.

The study said that for the female challengers money from political action committees was crucial. These women were unable to raise as much from individuals as male challengers and they were able to keep up only because they received significantly more from PACs.

"The perception that women candidates cannot raise money is no longer true," the report said. "By 1982, female candidates did as well on average as male candidates in similar campaign situations. In almost every category and difficulty of race in 1982 women raised as much money as men did."

In addition to 22 women in the House, there are two women in the Senate and one woman governor.

APME Selects 20 Finalists For Public Service Awards

NEW YORK (AP) — The Associated Press Managing Editors Association has selected 20 daily newspapers as finalists for the 14th annual Public Service Awards.

APME judges chose 10 finalists in each of two circulation categories. The winner in each category will be announced in November at the APME convention in Miami.

The competition attracted 178 entries, 44 more than last year. There were 127 entries from the 50,000 and over circulation category and 51 entries from the under 50,000 circulation category. All newspaper members of the AP were eligible to compete.

Entries dealt with a wide range of subjects, including corruption in government, the environment, education, minorities and health and medicine.

"The range of issues and the thoroughness of most of them showed a continuing deep commitment by American newspapers to public service," said Joseph M. Ungaro, immediate past president of APME and chairman of the judging committee.

"The judges were impressed by the quality of the entries and the amount of resources applied to some of the projects. Especially notable was the effort by the smaller newspapers," Ungaro added.

Finalists in the category of 50,000 and over circulation, listed alphabetically, are:

The Boston Globe, for a 10-part investigative series of the Massachusetts Legislature that resulted in the first reform of Massachusetts legislative rules in the 20th century.

Dallas Times Herald, for "American Education: The ABCs of Failure." In an attempt to determine whether schooling for American youngsters was up to par, the newspaper commissioned a new test for 12-year-olds in public school systems in eight counties. A series of 55 articles pointing to student weaknesses in mathematics, science and geography spurred proposals for reform.

Detroit Free Press, for the examination of each of 205 doctors who came before the state on formal licensing charges from 1977 through 1982. The investigation led to appointment of a special committee and to more reliable medical care for Michigan residents.

Fort Worth (Texas) Star-Telegram, for "Teeter Rotor:

Deadly Blades." The series brought to light the problem of mast bumping, a design problem on the military's Huey and Cobra helicopters that led to the Army's grounding of almost 600 Bell Helicopter-built Hueys.

The Hartford (Conn.) Courant, for an investigative series on mismanagement and abuses in Connecticut's bridge-inspection program that was prompted by collapse of the Mianus River bridge a year earlier.

Los Angeles Times, for a series of articles on Southern California's Latino community, designed to promote community awareness and understanding.

The Louisville (Ky.) Courier-Journal, for "Who Cares for Kentucky's Mentally Ill?" An investigation of how the state bureaucracy responded to the needs of the mentally ill. The probe demonstrated how the sick and their families were treated by the system.

The Miami News, for an investigation of unlicensed health clinics ("Quintas") which led to reforms including state control and regulation.

The Philadelphia Inquirer, for an investigation of the Department of Housing and Urban Development's policy of selling houses for stipends to speculators who in turn sell to the poor for vastly inflated sums.

The Washington Post, for an investigation into the Bates Street housing redevelopment project. The probe revealed widespread mismanagement and probably corruption at all levels and spurred investigations and a grand jury hearing.

Finalists in the category of under 50,000 circulation, listed alphabetically, are:

Montgomery (Ala.) Advertiser, for "Alabama: The Nation's Dumping Ground." A special report on hazardous waste and toxic chemicals in Alabama.

Boulder (Colo.) Daily Camera, for a survey documenting cocaine use in Boulder, an investigation that led to the formation of a task force on cocaine abuse.

Champaign-Urbana (Ill.) News-Gazette, for a series on sexual abuse of children.

The Columbus (Ga.) Ledger, for "Why The Babies Are Dying." A series on the unusually high infant mortality rate in Georgia, Alabama and particularly the Columbus area. The series served as a foundation for efforts by various groups to improve health care delivery in the two states.

Mason City (Iowa) Globe-Gazette, for "Feminization of Poverty." A series on poverty revealed that 75 percent of victims are women and children. The series was used as a legislative and administrative tool to create programs to help people cope.

Mesa (Ariz.) Tribune, for a look at SamCor, Arizona's most powerful health care provider.

Monroe (La.) News-Star-World, for "Richwood: A Town in Turmoil." This special section followed by daily stories on mismanagement of a recently incorporated town helped bring about the defeat of the mayor, two indictments and four other felony charges.

St. Petersburg (Fla.) Evening Independent, for "The Lifeline Letter." The newspaper made a plea for readers to write to people persecuted for religious beliefs.

Salisbury (N.C.) Post, for "Cost vs. Care." Medical series included interviews with hospital administrators, doctors, insurance companies, politicians, Medicaid and Medicare officials, and others, with an eye toward making the public aware of problems involved in the cost of medicine.

West Nyack (N.Y.) Journal-News, for "No place to Go-The Agony of Aging Out." A series on young people, some physically disabled, some mentally ill and others retarded, and how they became victims of a state policy that cuts off funding for private schooling at age 21.

The judges are past presidents of APME. In addition to Ungaro, president and general manager of the Westchester Rockland Newspapers, they are: Robert Haiman, president of the Poynter Institute, St. Petersburg, Fla.; Larry Allison, senior vice president-editor of the Long Beach (Calif.) Press-Telegram; Edward R. Cony, vice president-news of The Wall Street Journal; Barclay Jameson, executive editor of The Pueblo (Colo.) Chieftain and Star-Journal; Joseph W. Shoquist, managing editor of The Milwaukee Journal, and John Leard, retired vice president and executive editor of the Richmond (Va.) Times-Dispatch and News Leader.

$65,000 Awarded In Toenail Suit

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — A Superior Court jury awarded $65,000 in malpractice damages to a teen-ager whose ingrown toenail was removed permanently by a surgeon, increasing by $5,000 a previous jury award.

The youth's lawyer had argued that the surgery, performed when the plaintiff was 14, was too drastic and had compared it to "firing a cannon to kill a fly."

But the doctor's lawyer called the sum "a whole lot for a toenail."

The Middlesex County jury on Monday told Judge Robert A. Longhi they found Dr. Sarfaraz Ahmad of Trenton negligent, and awarded $65,000 in damages and $17,000 in interest to Gerald LaForge Jr., 17, of Plainsboro.

Another jury in February awarded the youth $60,000 in damages and $12,000 in interest. The trial judge later ruled that the award was too high and the youth's family opted for a retrial rather than accepting a lower amount.

Rudolph A. Socey Jr., lawyer for the doctor, said he did not know whether his client would appeal.

Ahmad had admitted liability, leaving the jury to decide the damages.

Human Error Is Blamed In Crash Of B-1 Bomber

By LEE SIEGEL
AP Science Writer

EDWARDS AIR FORCE BASE, Calif. (AP) — B-1 bomber pilot Richard Reynolds said "we got to get out" and pulled the ejection handle only nine seconds before the jet slammed into the ground, killing the co-pilot in a crash the Air Force blamed on human error.

In a report released Monday, an Air Force investigative board said the crew failed to shift fuel among various tanks to correct the B-1's center of gravity as its movable wings were swung forward, causing the plane to tilt sharply nose-up and stall.

The board also blamed equipment failure for the co-pilot's death after the crew ejected in a parachute-equipped escape capsule during the third of three low-speed control tests of the B-1A prototype plane on Aug. 29.

Maj. Gen. Peter Odgers, test flight commander at Edwards, said he has yet to decide whether to discipline the survivors.

The plane that crashed was one of four prototypes used for tests. Rockwell rolled out the first production model of the B-1B in early September.

The B-1 is designed to penetrate enemy defenses at tree-top level, using sophisticated electronics. It can carry conventional and nuclear bombs and air-launched nuclear cruise missiles.

According to Brig. Gen. John Schoepner, who headed the investigation, the B1 prototype stalled at 4,200 feet and dropped to 1,515 feet before Reynolds ejected the capsule. The plane crashed into the Mojave Desert nine seconds later.

"It was human error. They did not shift the center of gravity,"

Schoepner said.

Reynolds and flight engineer Capt. Otto Waniczek Jr. told investigators they do not recall seeing warning lights indicating the fuel had not been shifted, Schoepner said. Two master control warning lights and a center-of-gravity warning light did function, he said.

The automatic system that normally transfers fuel was disengaged because the test flight called for manual control, Odgers said. He said the transfer was a "crew responsibility" and co-pilot T.D. "Doug" Benefield was supposed to turn a control knob.

Benefield, chief test pilot for B-1 manufacturer Rockwell International Corp., died of severe head injuries when the ejection capsule landed on the right side of its nose instead of on air bags attached to its underside, officials said.

The bad landing was caused by the failure of an explosive bolt that should have repositioned the capsule's three main parachutes, Schoepner said. Benefield's seat also failed, sliding forward uncontrollably on floor rails.

Reynolds told investigators that he and Benefield pushed the throttles full forward in an attempt to regain control as the plane's nose rose to a 70-degree angle.

Tapes show that the pilot of an F-111 chase plane radioed to Benefield: "Hey Doug, have you got it?"

Benefield replied: "No, we are trying to come out of it now, maybe."

The plane then started a dive downward to the right, and the chase pilot radioed: "How you doing Doug?"

"I don't know yet," Benefield replied. "We may have to punch it. We have to punch (eject)."

At that moment, Reynolds said he turned to Benefield and declared: "Doug, we got to get out."

Reynolds told investigators: "I just knew the ground was coming up. I reached down for the eject handle, grabbed firmly and jerked it. And I remember feeling the kick in the pants. I remember seeing a flash."

Reynolds and Waniczek said they blacked out, then awoke and found Benefield dead.

Reynolds suffered a spinal compression and Waniczek a collapsed lung, Odgers said.

Air Force Announces 6th Missile Launching

VANDENBERG AIR FORCE BASE, Calif. (AP) — The sixth airborne test of an MX missile was completed satisfactorily after all six of its unarmed warheads landed within the target area 4,100 miles from the launch site, the Air Force said.

The 71-foot intercontinental ballistic missile was launched Monday from a pad at this Southern California coastal base at 7:34 a.m. and reached its destination in the Kwajalein Mountain Test Range in the Pacific about 30 minutes later, Air Force Sgt. Laura Murphy said.

The test was one of 20 planned for the missile. The last 12 flights are to be launched from modified Minuteman test silos of the type in which the operational missile is expected to be housed.

The dummy warheads used in the test were MK-21s, the type that will be used in the operational missiles. Only one MK-21 was used in the last test launch in June, and other types of warheads were used in previous tests.

The operational missile will carry 10 MK-21s, Ms. Murphy said.

The Air Force expects the missiles to be in operation by late 1986.

Robert Morgan, now head of the Mondale-Ferraro campaign in North Carolina; and former Gov. Terry Sanford, now president of Duke University.

Ms. Ferraro attended a private fund-raiser and public dinner later in Raleigh.

More than 2,000 people came to hear Ms. Ferraro speak at a luncheon rally in front of the Guilford County Courthouse in Greensboro. She was accompanied by 6th District Congressman Robin Britt, Hunt, gubernatorial candidate Attorney General Rufus Edmisten and lieutenant governor's candidate state Sen. Bob Jordan.

Some onlookers waved pine branches and signs saying, "Our Children Deserve Mondale-Ferraro" and "Christians for Ferraro." Other signs scattered through the crowd, supported Reagan's re-election and opposed abortion.

"There are many kinds of patriotism, not just one," Ms. Ferraro said. "The least worth kind is the television commercial of swelling music and phony good cheer made on Madison Avenue."

"Tearing down the barriers of prejudice is a patriotic act," she added. "When we educate our children we build our country's future, and that is a patriotic act. When we fully stop the arms race and reduce the threat to our nation's security, that will be a patriotic act."

Ms. Ferraro said she and Democratic presidential candidate Mondale would work to bring down the deficit in a fair way, preserve Social Security, improve education and clean up toxic waste.

Hunt said the Democratic Party wants to fight for people who were "fighting hard to make it and who deserve to make it in this land of opportunity."

He said Ms. Ferraro is an example of how the party has worked to open doors for everyone.

Hunt also said the Republican administration hadn't fulfilled its promise to reduce the deficit.

"We know the days of tax and spend are over, but we can't have any more of the Republicans' borrow and spend policy in America," he said.

Commissioners reapportioned Mrs. Mary Lehman as a member of the Juvenile Task Force; Anthony D. Holland of Fountain, Milton Spain of Belvoir, Robert Drew of Falkland and Robert Wilson of Grimesland to the county planning board; reappointed Stanley Peaden to the Sediment Control Commission and appointed Dr. Lee Otte as the alternate geologist member of the commission.

The board approved an extension of the Stokes Fire Department boundaries after Fire Marshall Bobby Joyner said the department has opened a new substation on N.C. 903, and agreed to give title to a dozen brush fire trucks, given to the county by the Federal Emergency Management Administration, to the fire departments which are using them.

Joyner said restrictions on the 1-ton and 2 1/2-ton government surplus vehicles have been lifted and title to the trucks can now be given to the various departments.

Sheppard Memorial Library Director Willie Nelms told commissioners that the bookmobile schedule through June 6, 1985, will include 101 stops on a three-week route rotation.

Nelms noted that the stops are designed to be within "a five mile drive of everyone" in the county.

Jeffreys

Dr. Donald Bearss Jeffreys, 59, Professor Emeritus of the East Carolina University Biology Department, died Monday at his home in Greenville. The funeral service will be conducted at 2 p.m. Wednesday in the Wilkerson Funeral Chapel by the Revs. Caswell Shaw and Dan Earnhardt. Burial will be in Pinewood Memorial Park.

Dr. Jeffreys was born in Sackets Harbor, N.Y., and served in the United States Navy from 1943 to 1947. He earned a bachelor's degree at Roanoke College in Salem, Va., and earned his master's and doctoral degrees from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. Prior to joining ECU, he was on the faculties of Furman University in Greenville, S.C., and UNC-Chapel Hill. The author of numerous scientific publications, Dr. Jeffreys presented his work at North Carolina Academy of Science meetings and Southeastern Biologists meetings. His primary field of study was environmental microbiology. His professional memberships included Sigma Xi, N.C. Academy of Science, Botanical Society of America, Association of Southeastern Biologists, and the American Society for Microbiology. A resident of Greenville since 1960, he was a member of St. James United Methodist Church where he served on the Official Board of which he was named a permanent honorary member. He was co-leader of a Cub Scout troop and served as chairman of the Social Concerns Committee. At the time of his retirement, the title of Professor Emeritus was conferred upon Dr. Jeffreys by the ECU Board of Trustees.

Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Gayle Johnson Jeffreys; a daughter, Karen Jeffreys Akers of Greenville; a son, Michael Steven Jeffreys of Portland, Ore.; his mother, Mrs. Isabel H. Jeffreys of Salem, Va.; a sister, Mrs. Dorothy Van Valkenburg of Salem, Va.; and two brothers, Robert H. Jeffreys of Cleveland Heights, Ohio, and Keith C. Jeffreys of Salem, Va.

The family will receive friends at the funeral home tonight from 7-9. The family suggests that anyone desiring to make a memorial contribution consider the Donald B. Jeffreys Scholarship, established in 1983 by his family and friends. Donations may be sent to the ECU Financial Aid office.

Walter Alston Is Dead At 72

By The Associated Press
Walter Alston, the quiet man who guided the Dodgers to four world championships during a managing career that spanned 23 years in Brooklyn and Los Angeles, is dead at 72.

Alston, who was famed for achieving a remarkable durability for a baseball manager through a series of one-year contracts, was awarded the sport's highest honor when he was elected to the Hall of Fame in March of 1983.

The selection came while he was at the Dodgers' spring training camp in Vero Beach, Fla., but less than a month later, he suffered a heart attack and never fully recovered. He died Monday at a hospital in Oxford, Ohio.

Alston, who retired after the 1976 season and was succeeded by Tommy Lasorda, had been hospitalized for about a week, team officials said.

Alston's peers, former players and other members of the baseball fraternity reacted with words of praise upon hearing of his death, describing him as "honest," "firm," a "first-class gentleman" and a "great manager."

"Baseball has lost a first-class gentleman and all of us in the Dodger organization have lost a true friend," Dodgers' owner Peter O'Malley said. "It is men of Walt's character from which baseball legends are made."

"He meant a great deal to the National League for decades," NL President Chub Feeney said. "He combined a gentle nature with leadership capabilities. He will be missed by all who knew him."

New major league Commissioner Peter Ueberroth said "All of baseball is saddened. He was without question one of the greatest managers the game has ever known."

Lasorda, who played for Alston for six years and coached for him four, said he knew that Alston enjoyed being chosen to the Hall of Fame.

"I know he really appreciated that, and he deserved it," Lasorda said.

"Anybody who could manage the same team for 23 years, that's as difficult if not more difficult than winning 300 games as a pitcher or getting 3,000 hits as a batter."

"He was just a tremendous person. He was the kind of a guy who was a great leader and yet he was a quiet leader. I learned from him that in order to be a manager, one of the prerequisites is that you've got to be patient. That was his trademark, he was a patient man," Lasorda said.

Alston, born Walter Emmons Alston on Dec. 1, 1911 in Venice, Ohio, managed the Dodgers both in Brooklyn and Los Angeles from 1954 to 1976.

When he retired in 1976, he explained that at 64, "There comes a time when you get enough of anything."

During his career, he never strayed very far from his Ohio roots, even in the glamour years in Brooklyn and Los Angeles. Until he took over as manager in Brooklyn, he taught school during the off-season in Darrrtown, Ohio, and it was to his farm in Darrrtown that he returned after each season in the spotlight.

Alston is survived by his wife, Lela, a daughter, Dorothy Ogle, a sister, Mrs. Dorothy Tolley, and two grandchildren.

Alston summed up his managerial philosophy in the same laconic way he ambled to the mound to remove a pitcher: "Look at misfortune the same way you look at success. Don't panic. Do your best and forget the consequences."

That philosophy worked. Alston won 55 percent of the games he managed, recording 2,040 regular-season victories against 1,613 losses.

He graduated from Miami University in Ohio in 1935, and immediately signed as a first baseman with the St. Louis Cardinals for $125 a month. He barely made the big leagues, striking out in his only major league at-bat with the Cardinals in 1936, but played 12 more years in the minors, the last four of those as a playing manager.

Alston was so quiet, so colorless, that when he was named on Nov. 24, 1953 to manage the Dodgers few believed he'd be there very long. One New York newspaper displayed a headline asking "Walter Who?"

Alston succeeded the flamboyant Charlie Dressen, who was rebuffed by owner Walter O'Malley in his demand for a two-year contract.

Alston's reticence was carefully

Walter Alston

Milwaukee Braves, led by a second-year slugger named Hank Aaron.

Then — atoning for World Series losses to the Yankees in 1941, 1947, 1949, 1951 and 1952 — the Dodgers beat the Bronx Bombers in the seventh game as Sandy Amoros, an obscure left fielder on a team of stars, made a game-saving catch and Johnny Podres hurled a shutout.

But that World Series win came as the Boys of Summer were becoming the Geriatrics of Autumn. Age was eroding Alston's Dodgers. There was one more pennant left, in 1956, but another World Series lost to the Yankees in a seven-game World Series marked by Don Larsen's perfect game.

By 1958, O'Malley had moved the team to Los Angeles, installing it in the oval Coliseum, which provided a 250-foot left-field screen and vast spaces in left and center.

The team finished seventh the first year, but against all odds, Alston fashioned another World Champion in 1959 with a transitional team. It included the remnants of the Boys of Summer — Hodges, Snider, and Carl Furillo; brilliant young pitchers like Drysdale and Koufax who were to bring more championships in the '60s, and an assortment of veterans and journeymen.

There were World Championships in 1963 and 1965 and a National League pennant in 1966. This Alston team was built around pitching, speed, and defense, with Drysdale and Koufax at their best, close to unhittable, and Wills bringing the stolen base back to baseball.

Then came Alston's least productive stretch, an eighth-place finish in the 10-team National League in 1967; a seventh in 1968 with winning percentages of .451 and .468, his lowest ever.

Those teams were decimated by the retirements of Wills and Koufax, the latter at age 32 after years of elbow pain. But by the early '70s, Alston had the Dodgers back in contention with a young nucleus including Steve Garvey and Don Sutton that won Alston a pennant in 1974 and were to win three more for his successor, Lasorda.

Pringle Is Pick Winner

Lullah Pringle of 107 Avon Lane, Greenville, is the winner of last week's Daily Reflector Football Contest.

Pringle successfully picked the winners in 25 of the 32 games listed in last Tuesday's contest pages.

Second place went to Mark Crouch of 1161 Mulberry Lane, 32-A, Greenville. Crouch picked the winning team in 24 of the 32 contest games.

The tie between Toledo and Ohio was counted wrong if either team was picked since contest rules allow a tie to chosen as such.

The next contest in the series appears in today's edition of The Daily Reflector.

Akers Says Longhorns Are Deserving Of Top Ranking

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Texas, no stranger to the No. 1 spot in college football, is at the top again — for the first time since 1981 — and Coach Fred Akers says the Longhorns deserve their high ranking.

"I think we deserve it as much as anybody I've seen," Akers said Monday after the Longhorns became the fourth team this season to claim the No. 1 ranking in The Associated Press poll. "We are young and we are building, but we are making just a terrific effort and the top players are making the top plays."

Texas, which was No. 6 in the preseason ranking and has moved up one spot in each of the five regular-season polls, climbed from second to first by whipping Penn State 28-3 Saturday while top-rated Nebraska was falling to Syracuse 17-9.

While Nebraska tumbled from first place to eighth and Penn State skidded from fourth to 11th, Texas received 51 of 60 first-place votes and 1,183 of a possible 1,200 points from a nationwide panel of sports writers and sportscasters. The Longhorns were followed by Ohio State, Washington, Boston College and Oklahoma, while Vanderbilt made the Top Twenty for the first time in 26 years.

Texas, winner of national championships in 1963 and 1969, has been ranked No. 1 at some time during the season 10 times since 1961. The last time was midway in 1981 after Texas defeated Oklahoma. But the lofty ranking lasted only one week as Arkansas drubbed the Longhorns 42-11.

Akers said he would mention that to the team this week. "If you let it inflate your ego, it's just as dangerous as not being No. 1," he said.

Texas, getting a late start and with an open date, is 2-0 after victories over Auburn and Penn State, but Akers said of the long season ahead, "It's in our hands now." He told a Monday news conference that Texas' effort against Penn State was "as aggressive as I've seen a football team be for 60 minutes in every phase."

"We accomplished everything we set out to do this past week as far as that game was concerned. No. 1, we wanted to play well; we did. We wanted to improve; we did. We wanted to win; we did."

"We don't make a big thing out of it — 15th or No. 2 or No. 1 — as far as how we work. We try to always work like we're No. 1."

But Akers added: "I think it's an honor to be named No. 1. I think to say anything less than that would be dishonest . . . but . . . we don't place a whole lot of importance on it."

"There's no question that the last one (poll) is the only one that's really important. However, any time that you can get it I think you should be grateful for it because it doesn't happen that many times to too many people." Texas opens Southwest Conference play at Rice, 1-2, Saturday night and Akers was asked if the No. 1 ranking would give the Owls more incentive. "We seem to offer them enough incentive anyway," he said. "Most teams kind of consider us their big game."

Ohio State, a 35-22 winner over Minnesota received five first-place votes and 1,113 points. Washington received one first-place ballot and 1,008 points and jumped from sixth to third with a 52-7 rout of Miami of Ohio. Boston College, which was idle, inched from fifth to fourth with two firsts and 1,005 points while Oklahoma defeated Kansas State 24-6 and rose from seventh to fifth. The Sooners received the other first-place vote and 959 points.

Florida State, which trimmed Temple 44-27, jumped from ninth place to sixth with 846 points. Brigham Young did not play but rose from eighth to seventh with 836 points, followed by Nebraska with 794. Oklahoma State climbed from 10th to ninth with 751 points following a 31-7 triumph over Tulsa and Southern Methodist went from 11 to 10th with 691 points thanks to a 26-17 victory over Texas Christian.

The second Ten consists of Penn State, Georgia Tech, Michigan, Miami, LSU, Notre Dame, UCLA, Auburn, Vanderbilt and Georgia. Syracuse, which lost to Rutgers 19-0 two weeks ago, did make the Top Twenty despite its upset of Nebraska.

Last week's Second Ten was SMU, Georgia, Clemson, Michigan, Southern California, Miami, UCLA, Georgia Tech, Notre Dame and Auburn.

Clemson, which was No. 2 two weeks ago, dropped out of the Top Twenty by losing to Georgia Tech 28-21.

Steelers Use Turnovers To Win

PITTSBURGH (AP) — In the days when the Pittsburgh Steelers won the Super Bowl with almost routine regularity, their nearly penetration-proof defense was nicknamed the Steel Curtain.

Now, maybe they ought to call this latest Steelers' defense the Steel Curtain.

In an almost mirror-image performance of their 24-14 Monday night victory over Cincinnati a year ago, the Steelers used five interceptions — two of them for touchdowns by Dwayne Woodruff and Donnie Shell — to beat the winless Bengals 38-17 Monday night.

Last season, the Steelers' defense knocked Bengals' quarterback Ken Anderson from the game with a neck injury, then scored three touchdowns itself while frequently pressuring reserve quarterback Turk Schonert.

This time, the Steelers sent Anderson to the sidelines with muscle spasms in his back, recorded six quarterback sacks and harassed Schonert into throwing four interceptions while twice scoring a pair of touchdowns themselves in a minute's span.

"Defense was the real story of this game," said Steeler Coach Chuck Noll.

"This was one of the most physical games I've ever been in," said linebacker Bryan Hinkle. "We knew it was going to be physical. Their backs were to the wall, they were 0-4 and they couldn't afford to lose another one. This is the kind of defense we need to play every week."

Woodruff and Shell each had a pair of interceptions — Shell's were the 37th and 38 of his career, the most of any active National Football League player — while cornerback Sam Washington had the other interception, giving him a league-high six this season.

"This was important not only for our defense but for everybody," Washington said. "We were coming off a loss (20-10 to the Cleveland Browns) where we just kicked ourselves in the butt. Losing is contagious and bad habits are contagious."

Just ask the Bengals.

"Maybe we need an exorcist," said wide receiver Cris Collinsworth.

A victory would do just fine, said first-year Coach Sam Wyche — who has yet to enjoy his first NFL coaching victory five games into the season.

"When you're not winning, you start to ask a lot of questions," Wyche said. "You ask if you are ever going to win and if, in fact, you are good enough to win. It's going to take a lot of courage."

The Steelers led by 14-0 and 24-10, but a 1-yard scoring run by Schonert made it 24-17 early in the fourth quarter. Then Ray Griffin gave Cincinnati a chance to tie by intercepting a David Woodley pass in the end zone after Pittsburgh had marched to the Bengals' 13.

Computer Rankings Are Back Again

The annual Daily Reflector Computer Rankings make their first appearance for the 1984 football season — with some surprising results.

Miami of Florida is ranked as the top team so far this year — but having played six games and having won four of them makes the difference.

The Reflector poll works like this. Each time a team wins, it receives six points. Then, each time a team it beats wins, it gets four more. And each time a team beaten by Team A's victim wins, two more points are awarded.

For example: Georgia Tech team Clemson last Saturday, thus picking up six points. Clemson earlier beat Virginia, thus awarding Georgia Tech four more points. And Virginia beat Virginia Tech Saturday, giving Georgia Tech an additional two points. The points thus continue to accumulate throughout the season.

and teams are ranked by their success against strength of schedule.

As the season progresses, the stronger teams who are successful will move to the top. Texas, ranked first this week on the two wire service teams is ranked only 19th this week in the Reflector rankings — but the Longhorns have played but two games. They continue to be successful, they will climb providing their schedule is strong enough to warrant it.

Teams often overlooked by the wire services will also appear because of their success, such as seventh ranked Fullerton State, which currently sports a 5-0 record. The fact, too, that Fullerton has played, and won, nearly half of its schedule as compared to others with four, three and even two games, is a factor.

The computer program for the rankings was planned and is operated by Barry Adams of Greenville in conjunction with The Daily Reflector.

Here, then, are the rankings for week five of the 1984 football season.

The FG-20.
Get into the Nikon system with two modes and a beep.
It's the smartest way to start your Nikon system. The new FG-20 has a manual mode, an automatic mode and an automatic "beep" mode that audibly prevents you from making exposure mistakes. And considering the price of the FG-20, it's a mistake not to start your system with one. There's more:
• Automatic flash metering with optional Nikon SB-19 Speedlight.
• Optional MD-14 motor drive.
• Nikon Inc. USA limited warranty application included along with free Nikon USA Club membership.

WEEKLY PRIZES

1st Prize $25.00

2nd Prize $15.00

CONTEST RULES

1. Thirty-two football games are placed on these pages. Pick the winner of each game (not the score) and write the team name opposite the advertiser's name on the entry blank. The entrant picking the most correct winners each week will be awarded $25.00. Second place $15.00.

2. Pick a number which you think will be the most number of points scored by both teams in any one of the week's games listed and write your answer in the space provided on the entry blank. This will be used to break ties. In the event of a further tie the money will be equally divided between the winning entrants.

3. Only one entry per person per week. The contest is open to all except employees of The Daily Reflector and their immediate families.

4. Entries must be in The Daily Reflector office not later than 5:00 p.m. Friday or postmarked not later than Friday p.m. Address entries to: FOOTBALL CONTEST, P.O. Box 1967, Greenville, N.C. (Reasonable facsimiles also accepted).

DUNKEL COLLEGE FOOTBALL INDEX

EXPLANATION - The Dunkel system provides a continuous index to the relative strength of all teams. It reflects average scoring margin combined with average opposition rating, weighted in favor of recent performance. Example: a 50.0 team has been 10 scoring points stronger, per game, than a 40.0 team against opposition of identical strength. Originated in 1929 by Dick Dunkel.

Safe Roads Act Had Impact

By The Associated Press
Alcohol-related deaths have declined after one year of under some of the nation's toughest drunken driving laws, but some say the law has had effects far beyond simply reducing alcohol-related crashes.

William Scarborough, a Mecklenburg County district judge, said justice there may be suffering because of court dockets jammed by DWI defendants. Statewide, 1,200 cases may be backlogged, authorities estimate.

Paul Scoggins, owner of Charlotte's Palomino Club, said his alcohol sales have been cut in half since the law took effect.

Larry Donaldson, who lost his driver's license for a year and spent three days washing windows at the Mecklenburg County Courthouse, says he'll never drink and drive again.

Comparisons of the first nine months under the new law with the same nine months a year earlier show alcohol-related deaths dropped 12 percent despite a slight increase in highway deaths overall. Drunken driving arrests by the Highway Patrol fell from 33,106 under the old law to 29,009 and second-offense arrests plummeted from 2,987 to 108. Alcohol-related accidents dropped more than 16 percent, from 8,358 to 6,985.

"We're not ever going to stop people from drinking and driving," said Allen. "Now that the newness has worn off I think the arrest numbers have started to climb again."

Lt. A.W. Rector of the Highway Patrol said until August, drunken driving arrests had declined every month since January 1983 — 10 months before the new law took effect. But in August, 3,611 motorists were arrested for DWI, an increase of 311 over August 1983, Rector said.

"Some motorists — and I emphasize some — may be returning to old habits of drinking and driving," he said.

Martin Wants 2nd Debate; Edmisten Says The Public Has Had Enough

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer
RALEIGH (AP) — The gubernatorial debate between Rufus Edmisten and Jim Martin was only a few hours old when the Edmisten campaign began running commercials about his performance.

Meanwhile, Martin, a Republican congressman, wasted no time challenging the Democratic attorney general to another go-round Monday after Sunday's debate.

Edmisten campaign manager Richard Carlton said the radio advertisements were being run in Raleigh, Durham, Greensboro, Winston-Salem and Charlotte to bolster Edmisten's urban support.

They were prepared from interviews taped by an Edmisten staff member Sunday night and Monday morning in the hours after the candidates' debate on statewide television, Carlton said.

Edmisten, questioned during a news conference prior to Martin's challenge, said the public was "about debated out" after their hour-long faceoff on statewide television Sunday. His campaign manager, Dick Carlton, later said Edmisten's schedule wouldn't permit further debates.

Martin, in a news conference at his state campaign headquarters, said Sunday's debate afforded him no opportunity to discuss Edmisten's performance as attorney general or his treatment of state employees. Other issues such as education, federal-state relations and agriculture received inadequate attention, Martin said.

"I believe the people of North Carolina deserve a true debate — one in which they can compare the candidates for governor and compare our stands," said Martin. "Mr. Edmisten prefers to deal in generalities and political cliches. The people deserve more."

Martin said he privately asked Edmisten twice Sunday whether he would agree to more debates and that Edmisten "just chuckled."

Carlton said in a telephone interview that Edmisten "is not going to debate Martin any more."

"We have organizations in 100 counties and they all want to get Rufus in there, and they get upset if he's not there," said Carlton. "We plan our schedule in advance and it's booked solid. They had one good, fair debate."

Martin, a Republican, said the Democratic attorney general might change his mind if his lead in public opinion polls continues to shrink.

A Gallup Poll published in May showed Edmisten leading 63 to 26 percent with 11 percent of those surveyed undecided. Another Gallup Poll in early September showed Edmisten ahead of Martin 50.5 percent to 39.2 percent with 10.3 percent undecided.

"I'm moving up in the polls and he's moving down," said Martin. "It's just a matter of whether I catch him before or after the election."

Edmisten said during his news conference the debate had shown that he had spent 10 years as attorney general fighting for consumers, while Martin had devoted his 12 years in Congress to helping "big oil companies," and "big utilities."

Martin is "a very decent man," said Edmisten. "But if he were to conduct himself as governor as he has in Congress, he would only help ... the very wealthy."

Martin said he was glad Sunday's debate allowed him to defend his proposal to eliminate the intangibles and inventory taxes, and accused Edmisten of "demagoguing" the issue of electricity and telephone rates.

For years, Martin said, "politicians have been conditioned to think that you have to attack the utilities to get elected."

He accused Edmisten of

"politicizing" the State Bureau of Investigation, shuffling the staff to put his supporters in positions of power, and said state employees were afraid of what would happen if Edmisten became governor.

Carlton said Edmisten had assured state employees repeatedly that he would put no political pressure on them, and that "90 percent" supported him. Carlton also accused Martin of attacking Edmisten personally by airing a man-on-the-street radio commercial in which an unidentified speaker describes the attorney general as "incompetent."

Martin said the ad was "no worse than some of the things they've said about me," but acknowledged that he wouldn't have used the word "incompetent." He said he didn't know about the commercial before it was aired, and that it no longer was being used.

Martin said he had prepared a series of television and radio ads for the campaign's home stretch and that some would include endorsements by President Reagan, who will campaign in North Carolina next week.

"In 1982, the Democrats tried to saddle us with Reagan when the economy was sluggish," said Martin. "Now they don't want to talk about it any more."

Textile Merging On Rise

CHARLOTTE (AP) — The consolidation of the textile industry that has occurred over the past five years will increase in the next decade, a South Carolina economist says.

Economist Ryan Amacher, dean of Clemson University's College of Commerce and Industry, said more consolidation is likely as companies fight amid flat growth and increasing overseas competition.

"I frankly expect the trend to be speeded up in the next 10 years," he said. "The industry is going to be more concentrated. Fewer firms will produce more."

Analyses of the latest U.S. Census data show the closing of nearly 600 textile plants and the loss of 155,000 jobs between 1977 and 1982 may have left the industry healthier.

"This is a fairly significant trend over a five-year period," said Ian Brunet, vice president of Wermer Management Consultants, a New York City consulting firm to the textile and apparel industries. "The weakest fall by the wayside. There's a lot more room to breathe for the remaining companies."

The first detailed U.S. Census Bureau survey of the industry in five years, released late last month, shows the number of textile firms fell 8.3 percent from 6,221 in 1977 to 5,703 in 1982. An analysis of the reports done by The Charlotte Observer shows the surviving firms have increased their shipments 17.9 percent, their payrolls 17.3 percent and their capital spending for modernization 28.3 percent.

Peter Scotese, retired president and chairman of the executive committee of Springs Industries Inc. of Fort Mill, S.C., said the figures are part of an "inexorable trend" toward consolidation in the textile industry.

"The industry is getting much leaner: leaner in numbers of companies, in plants and equipment and in employees," he said. "There's a compression in the industry."

Imports, which totaled $6.4 billion in 1977, jumped to $11.7 billion in 1982 and rose to $13.8 billion last year.

Although some industry segments not threatened by imports have undergone consolidations, officials say imports speeded an industrywide decline.

"The industry is moving into fewer and fewer and theoretically stronger hands," said Jim Conner, executive vice president of the American Yarn Spinners Association in Gastonia, adding that owners of smaller companies "figure, 'By the time I spend this extra money (to modernize) I'd rather sell it than fight it.'"

The number of yarn companies fell from 515 in 1977 to 438 in 1982.

The number of plants also declined in hosiery, knitting, and carpet and rug industries, although some smaller manufacturers thrived in industrial fabrics by attuning to the needs of smaller customers, officials say.

'The Twilight Zone' Special Scheduled To Air This Fall

By FRED ROTHENBERG
AP Television Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Twenty-five years ago tonight, television took a turn from tedium and found itself dangling between fantasy and reality. It had landed in ... "The Twilight Zone."

Dee-dee-Dee-dee. Dee-dee-Dee-dee. Dee-dee-Dee-dee.

Rod Serling's "Twilight Zone" began its five-year run of original episodes on CBS Oct. 2, 1959. To celebrate the occasion three episodes never seen in syndication have been packaged in a two-hour special. One of the programs,

"Miniature," stars Robert Duvall — everybody has to start somewhere, right? — as a milquetoastie misfit who falls in love with a miniature doll in a museum.

Nearly 130 stations will broadcast "The Twilight Zone Silver Anniversary Special" this fall, some of them showing it tonight.

The perforated line between fantasy and reality is where TV critics think the TV's decision-makers hang out. Serling didn't necessarily disagree. In fact, the late playwright, who wrote "Requiem for a Heavyweight" and many other dramas, created "The Twilight Zone" as a way to address the social issues and concerns that he couldn't raise on television's conventional dramas.

"He had a story to tell, but there were so many taboos," said his widow, Carol. "When he wanted to do something socially relevant, the networks, sponsors and ad agencies said: 'You can't do that. You'll step on too many toes.'"

So he hit upon the idea of presenting the real world through unreal stories:

"You unlock this door with the key of imagination," Serling would say in his tight-lipped introduction to each program. "Beyond it is another dimension — a dimension of sound, a dimension of sight, a dimension of mind. You're moving into a land of both shadow and substance, things and ideas."

"You've just crossed over into ... the Twilight Zone."

In "The Twilight Zone," Serling, who died in 1975, could deal with racism, prejudice, nuclear holocaust and the like "and get away with it," his widow said.

Many viewers growing up with "The Twilight Zone" were scared away by the program's space-age music and visuals (it used floating and spinning graphics before modern-day computer graphics.) But Mrs. Serling, editor of the Twilight Zone Magazine, said that wasn't his intention.

"He didn't want to scare audiences," she said. "He wanted audiences to get a kick out of the stories. His favorite episodes weren't the scary ones. Richard Matheson wrote those. Rod's were more sentimental with an O. Henry twist."

In Serling's favorite episode, "The Eye of the Beholder," a young woman who had been born with a horrible facial deformity had just undergone the last possible attempt at corrective surgery. Her head was covered with bandages, and her doctors were vaguely seen in shadows around her bed.

When the bandages were removed, she looked beautiful — to us — but not to anybody else in the room. They all were reptiles. Her beauty was a deformity in her world. Serling again had challenged viewers to redefine "normal."

The three episodes in the special all have twists. Part of the fun is trying to predict them. Although not Serling's best, these programs are entertaining and accurately represent his work and TV approach to morality.

In his stories, evil people get punished, connivers making deals with the devil always pay in the end, and good guys ultimately get rewarded — even if their benefits don't always come in the "real" world.

The three never-before syndicated episodes, which were tied up in litigation because of rights disputes, are: the hour-long "Miniature," starring Duvall, William Windom and Barbara Barrie, "Short Drink from a Certain Fountain," with Patrick O'Neal and Ruta Lee, and "Sounds and Silence," starring John McGiver.

Besides the enjoyment from seeing Duvall's early work, "Miniature" is notable because the fantasy sequences in the dollhouse, originally filmed in black and white, have been converted into color by a computer process.

"Short Drink" is the most clever.

Congress Eyeing Auto Theft Bill

By DAVID GOELLER
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — Six years and tens of thousands of stolen vehicles after it was first introduced, legislation to attack the growing problem of auto thefts is nearing final action by Congress.

The proposal was sent to the Senate on Monday after the House passed it by a voice vote as Congress began what members hoped would be the final week of its 1984 session.

Supporters say the legislation, which has undergone heavy rewriting in six years of negotiation and compromise, is intended to launch a two-pronged attack against the $4 billion a year hot car industry.

The House bill, broadly supported by law enforcement, citizen and insurance groups, would impose stiff federal penalties for auto theft and require automakers to take steps to make their vehicles less attractive to thieves.

An automaker would have to place identification numbers on 14 major parts of its 14 car models having a higher-than-average theft rate. Currently, such numbers are required only on engines and transmissions.

The original House bill introduced in 1978 by Rep. Bill Green, R-N.Y., would have required such numbers on the major components of all new cars, but compromises, demanded principally by Detroit, limited the bill's scope.

Also added to the bill, largely at the insistence of General Motors, was language allowing automakers to exempt two auto lines a year from the 14-14 numbering requirement.

To gain the exemption, a manufacturer would have to equip a vehicle with a so-called anti-theft "black box" that has been accepted as effective by the federal Department of Transportation.

Opponents of the exemption language say such devices would add several hundred dollars to the price of a vehicle, compared to the estimated $15 to stamp numbers on parts, and would soon be outwitted by thieves.

Advocates of the legislation say that stamping numbers on a vehicle's key components will put a crimp in the operation of so-called chop shops — which steal autos and resell them part by part.

Green said that because engines and transmissions are now marked by numbers, professional car thieves discard them when stripping a vehicle.

"Auto theft is a $4 billion a year business," Green said. "It's become a professional business. Organized crime has a major stake in this business."

Another supporter, Rep. Matthew Rinaldo, R-N.J., said that auto thefts no longer are committed principally by joyriders who use a vehicle and abandon it. In 1967, he said, 86 percent of all stolen vehicles were recovered. Last year, the figure was about 53 percent.

The principal advocate of the legislation in the Senate is Donald W. Riegle Jr., D-Mich. John Graykowski, an aide to Riegle, said he thought the Senate would accept the House version and not force the measure into a conference committee as Congress headed for adjournment.

Maintaining a Chinese Tradition

On October 1, 1949, Communist party chairman Mao Tse-tung proclaimed the world's largest communist nation, the People's Republic of China. Under Mao, China rejected almost anything traditional or bourgeois. Today, Mao might be horrified to learn of China's concern about its 2,000-year-old Great Wall. The Wall is crumbling now, but the authorities have asked for donations for its repair. Donors giving $80,000 or more may have their names inscribed in the Wall.

DO YOU KNOW — Who was Premier of China while Mao was Chairman of China's Communist party?

Former Paratroopers Recreate WWII Jump

GREENSBORO (AP) — Elmo Jones says he doesn't plan to make any more parachute jumps until 1994, the 50th anniversary of his wartime descent into Holland to fight the Germans for the Nijmegen Bridge during World War II.

He'll be 72. "If I can hold it together as well as I am now," the ex-paratrooper said, "I'll do it again."

On Sept. 17, 1984, Jones and two comrades re-created their jump near Nijmegen, Holland on the bridge over the Rhine River.

That campaign was the subject of Cornelius Ryan's book, "A Bridge Too Far." It was one of the war's bloodiest encounters.

"The battle was much worse than we anticipated," recalled Jones, a West Jefferson native who won a Silver Star for gallantry in Holland and a Bronze Star in Normandy. "When we jumped we could see the Germans shooting at us. The bullets were hitting the wing of the plane. We had more killed in Holland than in Normandy."

Two weeks ago, Bill Tucker, 61 of Boston, and Allen Langdon, 63, of Los Angeles were back in Nijmegen with their parachutes.

The three had planned to parachute into France on June 6, 1984, exactly 40 years after they landed with the 82nd Airborne Division during D-Day. But bureaucrats kept them from doing that.

"It was just too much red tape," said Jones, who owns Factory Automators Inc. "We just couldn't pull it off."

Unlike the French, the Dutch were excited about the idea of three old-timers re-creating 40-year-old history.

In Holland, the trio underwent a brief refresher course on the ground and took a medical examination. Langdon, a retired Los Angeles police detective, had not jumped since World War II. The only jump by Jones and Tucker since the war was last May, after they attended a one-day refresher school in preparation for France and Holland. They found that old skills returned easily.

On the morning of the 17th, the three Americans boarded a single-engine Cessna and lifted to 2,000 feet over the Dutch countryside.

They crouched nervously in the tiny plane while jets, hot-air balloons and other aircraft performed at an air show celebrating the 40th anniversary of the Allied battle against the Germans in Holland, Jones said.

Word finally came to jump. Below, 65,000 people, including Dutch royalty, surrounded the same narrow field on which Jones, Tucker and Langdon had landed exactly 40 years before.

"Tucker went first," Jones said. "Langdon wanted to go second because he hadn't jumped in so long and didn't want to be the last one out of the plane. So I went last."

He remembers looking at Langdon and seeing "a silly weak grin" on his face the moment before he jumped.

When Jones' turn came, he looked out the door, marveled at the huge crowd looking up at him and bailed out.

He missed the field and landed in a corn patch. So did Langdon. Tucker also was off target, but avoided the corn stalks.

When the three emerged unscratched the crowd exploded. "People were going wild," Jones said.

Jones was ushered over to meet an official-looking American who declared that the jump was one of the greatest feats he had ever seen. Jones asked who he was. Someone whispered, "Sir, that is the American ambassador to Holland."

Study Says Mild Vision Problems No School Factor

By WARREN E. LEARY
AP Science Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Subtle visual abnormalities, such as crossed eyes and mild color blindness, have virtually no effect on children's school performance and special eye therapy that is supposed to improve grades often is unnecessary, an eye expert said Monday.

A study of almost 2,000 children in suburban Indianapolis found that no positive relationship exists between eye function and academic performance, Dr. Eugene M. Helveston of Indiana University Medical School said Monday.

The researcher said the results raise questions about the value of commercial eye training operations that promise better grades if parents enroll their children in treatment or exercise programs for "weak eyes."

"Parents can spend thousands of dollars for eye training for their kids that is unnecessary and will not improve academic performance," Helveston said.

"Those children tested who were doing poorly in school had the same chance of having either normal or abnormal ocular (eye) function as did children who were doing well in school," Helveston told a seminar sponsored by Research to Prevent Blindness, Inc., a national voluntary eye research group.

Helveston noted that the study dealt with subtle difficulties and not the severe problems and diseases that prevent a child from reading or seeing the blackboard. Those who need them should have glasses or contact lenses, as did many of the children in the study, he said.

The study looked at mild abnormalities such as slight color blindness, crossed eyes, odd eyeball movements, focusing problems and far- or near-sightedness that remained after correction by glasses.

The 1,910 children tested in Washington Township, Marion County, included all the first, second and third grade students in eight schools. The school system is made up of 80 percent white and 20 percent black students, and includes families with a wide range of incomes and occupations, Helveston said.

A team of ophthalmologists gave each student an extensive eye examination and a series of writing and drawing tests. The researchers also collected all available academic data on each child, including teachers' assessments of reading abilities.

The scientists found that normal versus abnormal vision were in equal proportion in the above-average, average and below-average performers. And they found that eye function had no relationship with academic performance as measured by reading ability.

"This suggests that efforts aimed specifically at modifying ocular function would not be likely to beneficially effect academic performance," Helveston said in a paper.

The results support the concept that the act of reading is a factor of higher brain functions than the mere act of vision, he said. This means that reading difficulties more often stem from problems with the brain processing what is seen than with the ability to see.

"If visual function is not a significant factor in school failure," Helveston wrote, "other causes for school failure should be identified and treated appropriately."

Scientists Defend Splicing Practice

By JIM DRINKARD
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Government scientists say their efforts to develop more productive livestock through gene splicing are safe despite charges that they invite disease and unknown complications in the animals involved.

Opponents of a two-year-old research project by the Agriculture Department and University of Pennsylvania scientists filed suit Monday in U.S. District Court to halt experiments involving introduction of a human growth hormone gene into sheep and pig embryos.

"I think most people in the country will be disturbed that human genes are being placed in the hereditary makeup of other species," said genetic engineering critic Jeremy Rifkin, who joined the Humane Society of the United States in filing the lawsuit.

But Dr. Dan Laster, a program director at the department's Agriculture Research Service in Beltsville, Md., said the suit was unwarranted because the research is carefully controlled. He said it differs primarily in sophistication from the longstanding practice of changing farm animals genetically through breeding.

He said the research proposal had been cleared through an advisory board on genetic research at the National Institutes of Health and was aimed only at producing farm livestock that will be bigger, faster growing and cheaper for farmers to raise.

"If anything were to go awry it would obviously be stopped and that would be it," added Bruce Schwartz, a research service spokesman, who said so far there are "no visible effects" on any of the animals used in the experiments.

The experiments involve transferring a chemical replica of a human gene that regulates growth into the embryos of sheep and pigs. The embryos are implanted in female sheep and pigs at the department's research center.

The technique was pioneered by Dr. Ralph Brinster, who in experiments reported last year produced "supermice" twice the normal size. They retained the human gene and passed it on to offspring.

Such experiments "are endeavoring to improve upon nature without really understanding how nature works," contended Dr. Michael Fox, a Humane Society veterinarian. He said it threatens to open "a Pandora's box" of potential disease problems. Highly inbred animals now on farms already suffer disproportionate problems with arthritis and lameness, he said.

Rifkin called the project a harbinger of "radical change in animal husbandry" and said it is "unlike any experiment in history."

The lawsuit, which alleges violations of environmental and administrative procedures laws, said: "By forcing other species to accept human genes into their hereditary blueprint, defendants demonstrate a total lack of regard for the principle of species borders, a principle woven into the very fabric of biological and ecological systems."

Fox said some genetic engineering has constructive potential.

"There are advantages to developing drought-resistant crops and new vaccines and bacteria to manufacture hormones like insulin," he said. "But we have an ethical concern about changing the basic nature of animals into becoming basically biological machines."

He said because the experiments involve animals with the capacity to suffer pain, "we are crossing the line here and violating the sanctity and dignity of life."

Laster said while the experiments are scientifically sound, "We just haven't dealt with the ethical question as it relates to the changing of farm animals. It hasn't been addressed."

Camera Views Of A Pastoral Nature From An Abandoned Homestead

OPEN WINDOWS — quite often silhouette a colorful bit of nature, such as these clusters of ripe pokeberries which photograph well against the dark interior of enclosed space.

It is quite conceivable that if the artists who were advocates of the Barbizon school in the 19th century lived today in rural eastern North Carolina, they would be enamored of the possibilities for their canvaes offered by numerous colorful abandoned homesites strung like pastoral jewels along country roadsides.

Some of these places are single small homes or isolated barns. Others are groupings of homes, barns and a scattering of small buildings. A few are large complexes of a fine old home surrounded by interesting arrangements of storage and work buildings, orchards, pastures and fenced-in yards.

All have certain characteristics in common. Years of being unoccupied result in the graying, then silvering of wood, the softening into a velvety patina of red paint on roofs; and above all, the strong hand of nature reasserting itself as weeds, vines and trees begin to take over unguarded spaces no longer under the vigilant care of human hands.

It is not unusual to discover surviving traces of things not wild, wisteria vines, roses and day lilies holding their own against native flora, adding touches of seasonal color to the site.

Often there are poignant reminders of former occupancy by those who called an abandoned place home; a faded doll lying in a pool of sunlight on an otherwise empty floor; an early model washing machine rusting on a back porch, or a tattered remnant of lace curtain ruffled by each breeze coming through a window from which all glass is long gone.

These silent places are the lonely keepers of the past, in many instances representing the final vestiges of a family whose members are dead or scattered to places far away.

Each year sees a gradual change in the nuances of pastoral beauty they provide; beauty that can be captured in photographs or paintings; or simply recorded in the memory of those who stop to linger for a time in the silence where once there were voices, music, movement and laughter.

ENCROACHMENT — Once a building is no longer tenanted, nature loses no time in its relentless encroachment of an unguarded structure on which it can spread its web of covering vines.

Gaming Cheats May Total $40 Million In Casinos

By ROBERT MACY
Associated Press Writer
LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — The decades-old battle between gaming cheats and casinos has moved from mirrors to microprocessor chips and what once was an irritation has become a $40 million annual headache for Nevada's major industry.

Gaming enforcement officials say that although the cheats sting the casinos, millions of visitors who leave billions of dollars on the tables and in the slot machines are also victimized.

"When a cheater rips off a jackpot, it hurts the tourist because the money on that slot's meter has been put in by honest players," said Billy Suggs, head of the enforcement division of the state's Gaming Control Board. "The money played on that machine is being held in escrow for that big winner. And if a cheater gets it, both the potential legitimate winner and those who put money into the machine have been victimized."

Suggs, a 10-year veteran of state gaming enforcement, remembers the mid-1970s when slots paid jackpots of $10,000 to $20,000 — sometimes soaring to $50,000. Today $1 million-plus jackpots are paid on machines run by tiny microprocessor boards that provide new challenges for a 21st century breed of cheaters.

Suggs said there is no way of telling how much cheaters harvest from Nevada casinos, but admitted that projections of $40 million annually "may be conservative."

Slots are changing — and so are their cheaters.

"Slots six or seven years ago were thought of as something in the casino to keep little old ladies happy while the gamblers went to the tables," Suggs said in a recent interview. "Now they represent nearly 50 percent of the gross gaming revenues."

Gamblers lost a record $2.99 million in Nevada the past fiscal year, with the state's 92,000 one-arm bandits taking an ever-increasing bite.

Elaborate cheating rings conduct underground schools both in and out of Nevada to train cheaters and recruit unwary "collectors," Suggs said.

"They use these clandestine schools to recruit people to participate in these scams. They charge to attend the schools and a lot of times the operators use students to perpetuate the crimes for a percentage."

"Very few times does a collector know how a crime is going to be perpetrated," Suggs explained. "They get a happy little guy, a happy little lady who's gonna stand in front of a particular machine and play it. They tell them 'Go in this casino and play this certain machine.' They're instructed only on the role they play in the scam and have no idea what else is done."

While the collector plays the machine, blockers gather around the target slot to hide it from floormen and TV surveillance cameras hidden in false ceilings that scour Nevada casinos day and night.

With blockers in place a sophisticated thief enters the slot and quickly resets the machine or replaces an intricate microprocessor chip with one that will yield a payoff. Pros make the switch in a matter of seconds.

That was apparently what happened in August 1983 when retired San Francisco warehouseman Gus Econopoulos hit a $1.7 million jackpot at Harrah's Hotel and Casino in Lake Tahoe.

As they do in all major slot payouts, casino and gaming officials checked the machine. To their chagrin they found the "tamper-proof" slot and the tiny microprocessor board that dictates the payoffs had been tampered with. Officials halted payment on the jackpot.

Econopoulos, the collector, is scheduled to be a star witness against an 11-member slot cheat ring facing trial in federal court in Reno Oct. 23.

Donald C. Hill, an assistant U.S. attorney in Reno, said authorities and gaming officials may never know how wide a swath the cheating ring cut through Nevada casinos.

The indictment of the Lake Tahoe gang indicated they had hit numerous other hotels for sums of $100,000 and more.

The arrest of the Lake Tahoe gang and the "Nikrasch gang" cut substantially into cheating activity in Nevada, Suggs said.

Terrance Nikrasch and two associates were found guilty last February and sentenced to 15 years in prison for operating what authorities described as a multi-million-dollar slot cheating ring.

Other cheats have used elaborate mini-TV cameras to signal partners in poker game scams, a far cry from the old days when cheats used mirrors to spy on the dealer's hold card.

Less sophisticated cheats still opt for one of the oldest scams since the emergence of slot machines — the slug.

"It doesn't take too much ingenuity for a cheater to do slugs," said Suggs. "You just pour the metal into a mold — you can do it on any stove. In a six-month period last year we confiscated 70,000 or 80,000 slugs. It only costs three or four cents to make a dollar slug. If some of them hit $25,000 or $50,000 jackpots, you can imagine the impact."

Det. Don Dibble of the Metro Police Special Investigations Bureau said officers shut down five slug factories in Las Vegas last year.

"Our conservative estimate was that each factory was cooking out 500 $1 slugs daily," Dibble said. "When you add it all up it came to over $900,000 a year from these five guys. These guys looked like bums. And they were making nearly $1 million a year."

Video Poker Games Seen As Problems For Children

By DAVID GOELLER
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — There's a new worry for parents concerned about children becoming addicted to video arcade games: poker could be pushing Pac Man out of the nation's pizza parlors.

Witnesses testifying before the Senate Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations say that video poker machines, using high technology to circumvent anti-gambling laws, are proliferating in stores and taverns.

"We are particularly worried about these machines in establishments where there are children," the panel was told Monday by Angelo Aponte, commissioner of New York City's consumer affairs department.

Unlike Pac Man, where monsters gobble and are gobbled, the poker devices gobble allowances and lunch money as youngsters learn the hard way that it's difficult to fill an inside straight.

"Now we have them playing five-card stud on their way home from school," Aponte said. "These machines are now being located in stationery stores and pizza parlors."

Aponte estimated that in his state alone such devices take in $750 million a year and are "an important revenue source for small shopkeepers ... particularly tavern owners or fast-food centers that rely on the after-school business of children."

"Maybe we ought to look at them as a way of solving the (federal budget) deficit," said Sen. Warren Rudman, R-N.H.

Youngsters aren't the only people playing high-tech poker, where cards are flashed on the screen and a gambler punches buttons to discard and draw new cards, hoping for a winning hand that will be rewarded in cash or drinks by a bartender or store employee.

Roger Baldwin testified that until authorities raided his truck stop in Newburg, Md., five poker machines played by adults known to him and his workers brought in $100,000 a year.

"These devices are slot machines in sheep's clothing," commented Sen. William V. Roth Jr., R-Del., the subcommittee chairman, as FBI Agent William Holmes demonstrated the devices for the senators.

"You could lose $600 in an hour if you fed a machine quick enough," said Holmes, explaining that manufacturers are using the latest computer technology to get around state laws against gambling devices.

Poker machines themselves are not new. All models, old and high-tech alike, require a manual payoff by a bartender or store employee. The amount is determined by how many games a player has won.

Winning games are recorded by a counter on the machine similar to the free game counters on pinball and arcade games. While free games on pinballs are played off by the customer, the winning games on poker devices are paid off and the counter is reset to zero for the next gambler.

Over the years, states have attacked poker machines by enacting laws stating that if a machine contains a device for clearing the counter, it is considered a gambling instrument and thus is automatically illegal.

On the older poker machines, the clearing devices were visible. But Holmes said the new high-tech models have virtually invisible clearing systems. The bartender or clerk punches a secret computer code into the machine to reset it to zero for the next gambler.

Unable to detect the so-called "knock-off" system simply by inspecting a device, law enforcement officials have to catch machine operators in the act of paying off if they want to ensure a conviction, the subcommittee was told.

193rd Almanac Says Cold Winter Can Be Expected

By ADOLPHE BERNOTAS
Associated Press Writer

DUBLIN, N.H. (AP) — The latest edition of the folk bible of weather, the Old Farmer's Almanac, says most parts of the country better bundle up for a cold winter. The 193rd edition also gives three ways to hypnotize a chicken.

The almanac, the oldest continuously published periodical in America, says this winter in most sections east of the Rockies will be "colder and drier than normal, with below average total snowfall."

Above-average snowfall is forecast for northern New England, the western Great Plains and the central Appalachians. Cold snaps are predicted for the South in November and February and in Florida in January.

The mountains west of the Rockies are promised normal snowfall but colder temperatures while the Far West and Southwest are supposed to get a mild winter.

Abe Weatherwise, the collective pseudonym for editor Jud Hale, publisher Rob Trowbridge and the almanac's weather consultants, says the rainy Northwest will get below-average precipitation and the normally dry Southwest will be above average.

Weatherwise claims 80 percent accuracy in the almanac's forecasts and takes pride in pointing out that the almanac is recognized by courts in most states, as an official list of times for tides and sunrise.

Weatherwise also notes that from 1943 to 1945 all copies of the almanac were confiscated by the government after German spies caught off Long Island were found to be using its weather tables.

Except for the date, 1985, the yellow-and-black, 8-by-5-1/2-inch periodical hasn't changed in appearance. And as in past years, the 224-page paperback has a hole in the upper left corner so it can be hung from a nail in the pantry or outhouse.

Although the almanac is full of wit, wisdom and wisecracks it is the weather — forecast nearly 15 months in advance for 16 regions — that is at the core of its popularity with more than 4 million people expected to buy a copy this year.

The forecasts use "the latest scientific technology" based on solar flare cycles, positions of the planets and moon phases. The predictions then are checked against a 193-year-old secret formula developed by the almanac's founder, Robert Thomas.

About this time each year, the publisher also goes to great pains to stress that people not to forget the "Old" in the title. The admonition comes because a relative upstart published in neighboring Maine for only 168 years calls itself the "Farmer's Almanac."

The publishers point out that the Maine publication is sold to businesses that distribute it free as an advertising tool, whereas the original costs $1.75.

In addition to puzzles, planting tables, "zodiac secrets" and other amusements, this year's almanac gives advice on "Making the Most of Your Manure Pile," cures for hiccups and three ways to hypnotize a chicken — oscillating finger, sternum stroke and chalk line methods.

It doesn't say why anybody would want to hypnotize a chicken.

The almanac also provides a list of state mottoes, arguing that "it's a safe bet that most Americans don't know their own state mottoes."

Rhode Island's "Hope" is the shortest state motto. New Mexico's "It Grows as it Goes," the almanac says, "is a bit mystifying," as is Washington's "By and By."

The almanac also offers some Rules of Thumb, defined as "a homemade recipe for making a guess" that "falls somewhere between a mathematical formula and a shot in the dark."

—People will eat 1 1/2 to two times the number of potatoes mashed than they would eat baked.

—Inviting more than 25 percent of the guests for a university dinner party from the economics department ruins the conversation.

—In half of all the cases when an employee calls in sick, he's actually sick.

—Tall candidates with short names get elected twice as often as short candidates with long names.

Injured Singer Home After Hospital Stay

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Country singer Barbara Mandrell has been released from a hospital and has gone home to recuperate from injuries suffered in a traffic accident that killed one person.

Miss Mandrell, 35, was injured Sept. 11 in a crash that occurred as she was driving home with her two children. The driver of the other car was killed, and Miss Mandrell's children also were injured.

She suffered a broken right leg and knee and a concussion and has canceled her public appearances for the rest of the year.

Officials at Baptist Hospital said

Monday that Miss Mandrell was released Saturday and went to her home at Hendersonville.

She is known for such hits as "I Was Country When Country Wasn't Cool," "Sleeping Single in a Double Bed," "In Times Like These" and "Only a Lonely Heart Knows."

She won female vocalist of the year honors from the Country Music Association in 1979 and entertainer of the year from the CMA in 1980 and 1981. This year, she is a finalist for entertainer of the year, female vocalist of the year and vocal duo of the year with Lee Greenwood.

Opening lead: Three of ♥.

An annual visitor to these shores is Martin Hoffman of London, whose new book, "More Tales of Hoffman," affords many hours of pleasure. We are indebted to him for this hand, which he has used to stump many an expert.

East-West took advantage of the vulnerability to try to talk North-South out of their game. However, South had a very fine overall, and he did not need much encouragement from his partner to go on to game.

Had East not been busy in the auction, West might have led a minor suit and declarer, after winning the ace, would have had plain sailing. The heart lead was unfortunate for declarer, for it knocked out an entry and a key stopper at the first trick. Can you see how declarer can guarantee his contract even with the 4-1 trump break?

Don't feel bad if you didn't find the winning line — you are in some of the best company in the world. Declarer must draw four rounds of trumps, and he must discard a heart from dummy! Now declarer continues with the ace-queen of diamonds.

If East holds up the king of diamonds, declarer simply continues with the jack of diamonds and he has 10 tricks. So East wins the king of diamonds and leads a heart. If declarer ruffs, he will make only nine tricks because he will be locked on the table after cashing the jack of diamonds. Therefore, he must discard a club from hand. West wins the queen of hearts and continues the suit. Declarer again sluffs a club.

Now when East leads a fourth heart, declarer ruffs and jettisons dummy's jack of diamonds! His 10-9 of diamonds and dummy's ace of clubs take the last three tricks.

Note that declarer cannot unblock a diamond honor on the fourth trump — East can counter by holding up the king of diamonds. And if declarer does not discard a heart, he won't be able to unblock the diamond honor on the fourth round of hearts.

Yesterday's Cryptoquip — OUR DAPPER PILOT DOESN'T FEEL FINE; HE HAS THE FLU.
Today's Cryptoquip clue: G equals T

The Cryptoquip is a simple substitution cipher in which each letter used stands for another. If you think that X equals O, it will equal O throughout the puzzle. Single letters, short words, and words using an apostrophe can give you clues to locating vowels. Solution is accomplished by trial and error.

FORECAST FOR WEDS., OCTOBER 3, 1984

YOUR DAILY Horoscope

from the Carroll Righter Institute

GENERAL TENDENCIES: The morning hours are not good for getting involved in any contentious arguments or discussions and for refraining from making commitments of a material nature.

ARIES (Mar. 21 to Apr. 19) Do nothing in the morning that could spoil your reputation in any way, but after lunch make real progress in gaining personal wishes.

TAURUS (Apr. 20 to May 20) If you refrain from running off on some tangent in the morning, you can later be with bigwigs and get fine results.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21) Get that responsibility handled early, and then you can run off to something more exciting. Don't do anything to irk your mate.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to Jul. 21) Keep your word with an associate though it may be boring and later you can be with a good friend at some hobby you like.

LEO (Jul. 22 to Aug. 21) Any work in the morning should meet with the approval of higher-ups. A fellow worker could prove annoying.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22) Stick to work ahead of you instead of going off on some tangent, and later you get fine benefits.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22) Don't argue with a family tie and then you can meet with those with whom you want to enjoy a good time.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21) Some missive could cause confusion in the morning, but later you find that the situation at home is apt to be very fine.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21) Don't invest too heavily in anything or you can surely regret it later on. Study reports and statements very carefully.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20) You may be discontented, but don't broadcast it around or you can lose out where it counts the most.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19) You may have to handle a task you dislike in the morning, but get it done just the same and it is soon behind you.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to Mar. 20) A demanding friend could make you look silly in the morning, if you permit, but later you make big headway toward gaining a desire.

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY ... he or she can easily get in trouble with others if not taught early to have more regard for their feelings, especially if spoiled at home. However, upon reaching maturity a fine, upstanding citizen will be in this chart and one who can achieve a good deal during the lifetime.

Burnett Suing IRS

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Entertainer Carol Burnett and her former husband are suing the Internal Revenue Service for $1.76 million in taxes they claim should have been allowed as investment tax credits.

The suit by Miss Burnett and Joseph Hamilton stems from taxes paid in their joint returns in 1977 and 1978. The complaint says investment tax credits should have been allowable as a result of Miss Burnett's ownership of Whacko Inc.

Whacko produced films and television shows, including "The Carol Burnett Show" for CBS-TV.

The suit, filed Friday, seeks a refund of nearly $604,000 they say was wrongly assessed for 1977 and nearly $1.154 million for 1978.
