Tentative Agreement At Ford

GM Workers OK New Three-Year Contract

By EDWARD MILLER
AP Auto Writer

DETROIT (AP) — United Auto Workers will get novel aid programs for employees who lose their jobs to robots, more efficient operations or subcontracting in both a tentative contract with Ford Motor Co. and the pact they ratified with General Motors Corp.

The Ford pact was reached Sunday morning, and Sunday night the UAW announced its 350,000 GM members in this country had ratified their new three-year contract with the nation's No. 1 automaker.

The Ford contract includes the added protection of a four-year ban on the closing of any of Ford's 17 assembly plants or 48 parts facilities.

The GM pact faced heavy initial opposition, but passed 57.4 percent to 42.6 percent, the union said. The count from 149 locals was put at 138,410 votes to 102,528 votes on a turnout of 62.2 percent.

Ford workers get their turn to vote after Wednesday, when UAW leaders representing 115,000 workers meet in Detroit to review their tentative contract.

Neither company was forced to give up its freedom to farm out work to save money and keep car prices competitive with the Japanese.

"We feel that this agreement will enable us to remain competitive in the market," Stan Surma, Ford's national negotiating committee chairman, told a news conference.

Asked if the Ford agreement would be costly, Surma replied, "I don't think so." Surma spoke for the company's chief bargainer, Peter Pestillo, who had lost his voice during the negotiating session.

UAW President Owen Bieber, emerging tired and unshaven at Ford after a bargaining session of more than 24 hours, said the accord "follows closely the pattern established at General Motors. ... Here too at Ford, job security was the key issue."

Both would return to workers much of the $3.5 billion in wage and benefit concessions granted the two companies in 1982 at the depths of the U.S. car industry's recession. Both companies now are making record profits.

They also would establish "job banks" to maintain income and provide retraining for workers who lose their jobs to subcontracting, automation or productivity gains.

GM's fund would provide up to $1 billion. Bieber said the Ford pact would provide more than $300 million.

The union set out to put strict curbs on subcontracting. Failing that, it got the companies to agree to make their best efforts to keep jobs and small-car manufacturing in the United States.

A major difference between the Ford and GM agreements is the four-year moratorium on Ford plant closings, former UAW President Douglas Fraser said.

The ban is "a very firm one," Fraser told The Associated Press at Tiger Stadium during Sunday's World Series game between Detroit and San Diego. A union source who asked not be identified confirmed that the ban covered all plants, but would not confirm the length of the ban.

The GM accord, reached Sept. 21, is to be signed Friday.

The union said the wages in the Ford agreement also follow closely the GM pact, which provides a 15-cent-an-hour pay raise to $12.82.

There would be no other base-rate raises over the three years. But that raise, plus lump-sum payments, profit-sharing and cost-of-living allowances would provide the average GM worker about $12,000 over the three years, the union says.

The GM vote took a week longer than usual to give union leaders from Detroit headquarters time to scurry from union hall to union hall lobbying for and explaining the complex agreement.

GM made a company record $3.73 billion last year and is expected to earn more than $5 billion this year.

Last-Ditch Appeals Made For Inmates

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — Lawyers today headed to federal court with appeals for two convicted murderers condemned to die in Florida's electric chair Tuesday in what could be the nation's first double execution in 19 years.

Attorneys for convicted killer Frank Smith were to present their arguments today before U.S. District Judge William Stafford in Tallahassee, said court Clerk Marvin Waits.

Lawyers for convicted murderer Charles Foster were scheduled for to appear today before U.S. District Judge Roger Vinson in Pensacola.

Defense lawyers began the federal appeals process after they failed to persuade Florida's Supreme Court to block the consecutive executions scheduled for 7 a.m. Tuesday at Florida State Prison near Starke.

If the federal court appeals fail, the cases can still be appealed to the 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals and the U.S. Supreme Court.

Smith, 28, was condemned for the Dec. 13, 1978, shooting death of convenience store clerk Sheila Porter, who was abducted from a store south of Tallahassee.

Foster, 37, was convicted of stabbing to death Julian Lanier on July 15, 1975. The victim's throat was slashed with a knife and his spine was then cut while he was still alive.

If both sentences are carried out, it would be the first double execution in the U.S. since 1965 and the first in Florida since May 12, 1964.

N.C. STATE FAIR — Crowds walk shoulder-to-shoulder at the North Carolina State Fair Sunday on the fourth day of the fair's visit. Fair officials said Sunday's attendance, estimated at 91,912, was a bit lower than last year on the fourth day. It was the smell of foot-long hot dogs smothered in chili, onions and slaw, homemade fried apple pies, fudge with nuts and, of course, the aroma of french fries that brought on the crowd. Although children and parents had to wait in rather long lines, for the most part the wait was worth it. (Reflector Photo by Tommy Forrest)

Planning Commission Will Meet

Members of the Greenville Planning and Zoning Commission will discuss the following items in regular session Tuesday at 7:30 p.m. in the third floor council chambers of City Hall.

•Preliminary plats of Lynndale Townes, located on the south side of Red Banks Road extension adjoining the Lynndale subdivision, and Moss Creek Town Homes, located on the Lake Road next to the Lake Ellsworth subdivision.

•An annexation request concerning Heritage Village section four, located on the east side of NCSR 1704 along portions of Buxton Road, Wellons Drive and White Hollow Drive.

•Placement of television satellite dishes in Greenville.

•A request by Jamie Taylor to rezone property located on the northwest corner of the Evans-Howell Street intersection from highway commercial to unoffensive industry.

•Preliminary and final plat of Executive Park

Three Researchers Share Nobel Prize In Medicine

By DICK SODERLUND
Associated Press Writer
STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) —

The 1984 Nobel Prize in medicine was awarded today to three researchers for pioneering work in immunology, including promising research into ways to manipulate the body's natural defenses to treat cancer.

London-born Niels K. Jerne, who works in Switzerland, was cited along with West German Georges J.F. Koehler and Argentine Cesar Milstein for their theories on the development and control of the immune system, and the discovery of the principle for producing monoclonal antibodies.

Monoclonal antibodies, in addition to showing promise in halting some forms of cancer, have been used to treat severe combined immune deficiency syndrome, a rare condition in which a child cannot fight off disease. An attempt to treat David, a Texas boy who spent his 12 years of life in a sterile plastic bubble, with monoclonal antibodies failed, but other children like David have been saved using monoclonal antibodies.

The Karolinska Institute medical faculty, which selects the winners for the Nobel Prize in medicine, described Jerne, 73, as "the leading theoretician in immunology during the last 30 years." Jerne's theories have shed light on how the immune system develops and outlined the development of modern immunology, they said.

Jerne, who holds British and Danish passports, is professor emeritus of the Basel Institute of Immunology in Switzerland. He lives in France.

The Karolinska Institute said Milstein and Koehler were leaders in research on the body's production of antibodies, vital to the natural ability to ward off disease.

Koehler and Milstein in 1975 produced monoclonal antibodies which could be used to fight specific cells, Karolinska experts said in a prepared statement. "They immortalized antibody-producing cells by fusing them with tumor cells," the institute said.

The researchers' so-called hybridoma technique for the production of the antibodies "represents one of the most important methodological advances in biomedicine during the 1970s, (the discovery that) an antibody-producing cell and all its daughter cells produce identical antibody molecules," the Karolinska summary said.

"The method allows unlimited production of monoclonal antibodies with predetermined specificities. This has opened up completely new fields for theoretical and applied biomedical research and allows precise diagnosis as well as treatment of disease," the summary said.

Monoclonal antibodies have been used to treat bone marrow for transplant to children with severe combined immune deficiency disease and patients with cancer such as leukemia.

In a bone marrow transplant, marrow is taken from a healthy donor and injected into the victim. In many patients, marrow-produced cells called T lymphocytes attack their new surroundings and cause a reaction called graft-versus-host disease. Despite drug treatment, this condition kills many patients. The new treatment uses monoclonal antibodies to wipe out the T lymphocytes.

Koehler, 38, is a colleague of Jerne at the institute in Basel. Milstein, 57, born in Bahia Blanca, Argentina, has worked in chemistry in Argentina. He received his doctorate at Cambridge in 1960, and now heads the university's division of protein and nucleic acid chemistry. Milstein

Open House Set

The American Red Cross Blood Services for the Tidewater Region will hold open house ceremonies Tuesday from 4 to 7 p.m. for the new Apheresis Donor Center, located in the Brody Medical Sciences Building of East Carolina University School of Medicine.

The unit was previously located at the ARC Blood Services Tar River Subcenter on Route 1, Greenville. The location of the new center reflects the cooperation of the Red Cross Blood Services, the ECU School of Medicine and Pitt County Memorial Hospital. Dr. James Finley, assistant medical director, said. The more than 100 apheresis donors of this region will be honored during the ceremony.

Apheresis is a special type of blood donation in which only certain blood components are drawn from the donors' veins. The procedure is a two-hour process. Apheresis enables the giving of components like platelets, white cells or plasma to patients who need only these.

Bankers Trust Drops Prime Lending Rate

NEW YORK (AP) — Bankers Trust Co. today reduced its prime lending rate to 12.25 percent from the 12.75 percent established by most of the banking industry last month.

The move by the nation's ninth-largest bank came at a time when business borrowers are increasingly turning to other sources for short-term loans and followed declines in the cost of raising funds for banks.

The prime rate is the base upon which banks compute interest charges on short-term business loans. The most creditworthy client often borrows at below the prime rate, while small businesses typically are charged more than the prime rate.

Candidates To Debate

Ninth district North Carolina senatorial candidates Tom Taft (Democrat) and Maynard Waters (Republican) will be featured at a Pitt-Greenville Chamber of Commerce sponsored debate at 7 p.m. tonight at the Willis building.

Debate moderator David Searce, chairman of the PGCC State Concerns Committee, will ask the candidates to voice their opinions on repeal of the intangibles tax, legislation on comparative fault, the inventory tax, environmental questions (including the banning of phosphates in laundry detergents), the federal air bag law and a possible mandatory state seat belt law.

The Willis building is located at the corner of First Street and Reade Circle.

City Education Board

The action meeting of the Board of Education of the city schools will be held at 8 p.m. tonight at Eastern Elementary School.

Action items on the agenda include a study tour, a policy paper, budget amendments and personnel action.

Other items on the agenda include reports and reviews to be presented by various administrative staff members.

Record Attendance

The American Legion Posts of Pitt County, which this year sponsored the Pitt County Fair for the 50th time, announced that this year's had the largest attendance ever — more than 75,000 persons. This attendance is a 40 percent increase, Sam Winchester, fair manager, said. Gross revenue of the midway was up 64 percent, he said. This is the 65th year the county fair has been held.

Thefts Reported

Greenville police are continuing investigation of the following break-ins and larcenies reported this weekend. Officer W.C. Widener investigated two separate thefts of dirt bikes Sunday. In the first, a turbo speed racing bike, valued at $522.45, was taken from a 203 Burrington Road home. The second bike, valued at $450, was taken from the residence of Jack Howard Cox Sr. of Apt. 96, Barnes Street, Windy Ridge.

A break-in at the residence of Thelma Daniels of 807 Douglas Road in which a television and food were taken was investigated by Officer P.W. Worthington Saturday. The items were collectively valued at $83.

Charge Brought

Greenville police officer B.M. Highland arrested Scott Ernest Tipton of Farmville at the intersection of First and Greene streets Sunday on a charge of simple possession of marijuana.

Tipton, 21, was also charged with a stop light violation, driving while impaired and not having his operator's license.

NARFE Meeting

The Pitt County Chapter No. 1530

of the National Association of Retired Federal Employees (NARFE) will meet with the Kinston Chapter Wednesday at 12:30 p.m. for a dutch luncheon business meeting at King's Restaurant on Highway 70, Kinston. All civil retirees and their spouses are invited. For further information call Steve Nobles at 746-3246, or Mayo Rogers at 752-6267.

La Leche Meeting

The La Leche League of Greenville will hold its monthly meetings Oct. 17 and 18. The meeting of the 17th will begin at 9:30 a.m. and will feature a discussion of "Nutrition and Weaning." A covered dish luncheon will follow the meeting.

The meeting of Oct. 18 will begin at 7:30 p.m. and will feature a discussion on "Baby Arrives; The Family and the Breastfed Baby."

Women interested in breastfeeding are invited to attend for information, support and encouragement on an informal mother-to-mother basis. Babies are also welcome at the meetings. For further information, call Judy Beckert at 355-7166 or Bonnie Tapscott at 756-6951.

ARC To Meet

The Association for Retarded Citizens will hold its monthly meeting Thursday at 7 p.m. in the Jaycee Park Building. Guest speakers will be Maxine O'Kelley, president of ARC/NC, and Ann Harrison, director of Exceptional Children's Programs for Greenville City Schools. The public is invited to attend.

Radio Guests

Guests with City Manager Gail Meeks on the city's weekly radio program, City Hall Notes, will be Thom Brown, a graduate student at East Carolina University completing his internship in the Human Performance Lab, and Officer James E. Tripp of the Greenville Police Department.

Brown will report on the status of the city's "Wellness for Working People" program, and Tripp will discuss the police recruitment program.

City Hall Notes is aired on WOOW Radio each Tuesday and Thursday at 10:25 a.m.

Sunday Wrecks Are Reported

Greenville police charged Ernestine Moye Williams of 114 Candlewood Dr. with a safe movement violation Sunday following a Moye Boulevard traffic accident.

Also involved in the incident was Linda Darnell Reid of 803 Ward St. who was taken to Pitt County Memorial Hospital for treatment. Ms. Reid was charged with driver's license violation.

Damages in the accident totaled $700 — $200 to the Williams car and $500 to the Reid vehicle.

No charges were pressed in an N.C. 11 traffic accident Sunday involving cars operated by Charles Marion Krautler of Cocoa Beach, Fla., and Brenda Joyce Ward of 1202 Chestnut St. Damages were estimated at $1,500 — $1,000 to the Ward car and $500 to the Krautler vehicle.

Police estimated damages in a single-car accident on Moye Boulevard Sunday involving Ronald Lee Holton of 102 Rackley Dr. at $1,500. According to police reports, the Holton car came to rest in a field after Holton swerved to avoid an animal.

VIPs Get Free Fair Passes

RALEIGH (AP) — More than 200 government officials have received passes to the North Carolina State Fair that cost the state money, according to fair and state officials.

James E. Strates Shows was asked by the Department of Agriculture to issue plastic cards to certain state government officials giving them free admission to any Strates ride or show throughout the fair.

The passes cost North Carolina money because the state gets 40 percent of all ride and show ticket sales above $125,000, said Alex M. Lewis, controller of the Department of Agriculture.

Strates Shows' gross ticket sales at last year's fair were $1.1 million.

A free gate pass is not hard to come by — more than 20,000 were issued a year ago, mostly to fair workers, according to Fair Manager Sam G. Rand. But the Strates pass is a fairly exclusive freebie — only 221 people were on the Agriculture Department's list.

The head of the show said all such requests are normally honored.

Among those on the Department of Agriculture's list were:

— Gov. Jim Hunt, his wife, four children and son-in-law; 10 members

Top Auctioneer

DANVILLE, Va. (AP) — Rattling off bids with lightning speed, Bob Cage of South Boston captured the 1984 World Tobacco Auctioneering championship.

Cage topped the field of 66 contestants who were judged on speed and sound of their chants, skill at settling disputes and handling bids from six buyers and ability to move a sale along quickly.

After he was awarded the $10,000 first prize Saturday night, Cage's first thoughts were to thank his mother.

"I love my mama," he said, asking her to stand up and take a bow.

Just after the new champion was announced, 1983 winner Walter Wilkerson of Kenbridge embraced Cage's mother and told her, "I knew he was going to win. I just knew it." The contest was started in 1980.

of his staff; and two of his campaign workers.

— Lt. Gov. Jimmy Green and his wife.

— Members of the Council of State and their wives.

— Members of the state Board of Agriculture and their spouses; and top Agriculture Department officials, their secretaries, families and friends.

N.C. Agriculture Commissioner James A. Graham said he didn't know "who all gets" a Strates pass.

"It's something that's extended to a lot of people," he said. "They've always done this; it's a prestigious thing. It's a way of rewarding people who contribute in some form or fashion to the success of this fair."

Wedding Vows Said In Ceremony Sunday

Janet Lee Meeks and Charles Lehman Thomas were united in marriage Sunday at 4 p.m. in a double ring ceremony at Fountain Baptist Church. The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Bobby Meeks of Fountain. The bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Thomas of Farmville.

The Rev. Robert White of Fountain performed the ceremony. Wedding music was provided by Emerson Hobgood of Walsenburg, soloist, Kelly Hobgood of Greenville, pianist, Terry Moore of Greenville, organist, and Brian Otter played the trumpet.

The bride was given in marriage by her parents. Escorted by her father, she wore a floor length gown with a chapel train of sata peau with re-embroidered alencon lace and schiffli embroidery over taffeta. The imported English illusion over taffeta fitted bodice featured a sabrina neckline, long tapered sleeves and torso waistline. Re-embroidered alencon lace motifs etched with seed pearls applied the bodice and sleeves. Sata peau bows and lace tea cut petals accented the shoulders. Scalloped schiffli embroidery edged the lace ruffle that bordered the hemline of the gown and train. She carried a cascade of silk stephanotis, baby's breath, sweet-heart roses, fern and spider plants.

Cara Winstead of Raleigh was matron of honor and wore a lilac matte taffeta floor length gown styled with a fitted bodice, yoke neckline outlined with a shirred double ruffle and short puff sleeves. The natural waist was sashed with matching lilac taffeta. She carried a lace fan adorned with silk lilac rosebuds and a spray of pink miniature flowers accented by baby's breath and lilac streamers.

Bridesmaids were Debra and Angela Meeks of Fountain, Lisa Meeks of Greenville, all sisters of the bride. Their gowns and fans were identical to that of the honor attendant. Honorary bridesmaids included Julie Ackley of Morganton, Amy Katterman of Kingsport, Tenn., Kim Johnson of Tarboro and Donna Tyson of Fountain.

Ashley Harris of Greenville, niece of the bridegroom, was flower girl and wore a lilac matte taffeta long gown which featured a neckline of ruffles and short puff sleeves trimmed with matching lace. A ruffle bordered the hemline and the natural waistline was sashed with matching taffeta. She carried a lace basket of silk flowers.

Ushers were George Thomas of Elizabeth City, brother of the bridegroom, Phil Evans of Farmville and Kirby Douglas Tyson of Fountain. Edgar Thomas of Farmville, father of the bridegroom, was best man and Steven Vandiford of Scuffleton, cousin of the bride, was ring bearer.

Nancy Harris of Greenville, sister of the bridegroom, presided at the registry.

The mother of the bride wore a floor length gown of wine tinesta silk knit with a jeweled neckline and a corsage of pink sweetheart roses. The mother of the bridegroom wore a floor length gown of light rose chiffon with a removable jacket of chantilly lace. She wore a corsage of pink sweetheart roses.

Margaret May of Farmville directed the ceremony.

A reception was given by the

bride's parents in the church fellowship hall. Mrs. Francis Cunningham, aunt of the bride, served cake and Mary Thomas, sister of the bridegroom, poured punch.

The parents of the bridegroom gave a rehearsal dinner at the Colonia Inn in Farmville Saturday evening. Various showers, luncheons and dinner parties were held prior to the wedding.

The couple will live in Greenville after a wedding trip to the Shenandoah Valley of Virginia.

The bride graduated from East Carolina University and received a master's from the University of North Carolina. She is associated with Pitt Memorial Hospital. The bridegroom received a B.S. degree in business administration and is associated with A.C. Monk in Farmville.

Bridal Policy

A black and white glossy five by seven photograph is requested for engagement announcements in The Daily Reflector. For publication in a Sunday edition, the information must be submitted by 12 noon on the preceding Wednesday. Engagement pictures must be released at least three weeks prior to the wedding date. After three weeks, only an announcement will be printed.

Wedding write-ups will be printed through the first week with a one column picture. During the second week, a one column picture will be used with a write-up giving less description and after the second week, just as an announcement.

Wedding forms and pictures should be returned to The Daily Reflector one week prior to the date of the wedding. All information should be typed or written neatly.

PICKING A CHAIR
NEW YORK (AP) — For relaxing comfort, the ideal chair should have a back that is slightly convex, advise furniture experts at Home magazine. It should yield, but not give way, and the front of the seat should not press against the back of the seated person's legs. Covering material should be soft, but not slippery, material that "breathes."

Dear Abby

Attitude Gives Woman More Support Than Ex

DEAR ABBY: "Mad in Dallas" complained because the court increased her husband's child support payments from $270 a month to $330. She says her husband's ex-wife lives in a $100,000 condo, drives a Mercedes and shops at Neiman's, while she, her husband and small baby are pinching pennies in a cramped trailer.

"Mad" must have known her husband was obligated to pay child support before she married him, and she certainly knew about it before she decided to have a child.

Many of my friends either pay child support or receive it, and not one thinks the amount decided by the court is fair! (Myself included.)

Let's look at the other side: I am a single working mother who receives $150 per month in child support. I pay for child care in order to go to work at a job where the government takes one-third of my salary. Sometimes I don't get child support—my "ex," who lives out of state, owes me $1,000 in back payments.

Abby, I thank God every day that I am alive, have a healthy daughter, a roof over my head, a car to drive, a job to go to, and food to eat (even if it's only beans and wieners). On my bathroom mirror I have written "COMPARED TO WHAT?"

I am grateful for what I have, instead of angry about what I don't have.

I would suggest that "Mad in Dallas" change her attitude because that's the only thing in her life she can control.

This may not help anyone else, but it makes it easier for me to sleep, and I'm the one I have to live with:

ONE DAY
AT A TIME

DEAR ONE: Your positive attitude and the absence of bitterness and anger are commendable. Your letter may help child support victims who have been dealt a raw deal. Sometimes we have to be reminded of what we already know. Thanks for writing.

DEAR ABBY: If Jesus Christ was

Dr. Sparrow To Give Talk

The Pitt County Historical Society will have meeting Oct. 22 starting at 6:30 p.m. at the Dixie Queen Restaurant in Winterville. Dr. Keats Sparrow will present the program.

He will review David Stick's "Roanoke Island: The Beginning of English America," which is one of the official books of the 400th anniversary celebration.

really the Immaculate Conception—born to the Virgin Mary—can you explain why this never happened to another human being anywhere in the world since Biblical times?

BIBLE STUDENT IN SAN JOSE

DEAR BIBLE STUDENT: The genetic rules that apply to mortals did not apply to the Christ child, who, according to the New Testament, was the son of God.

However, may I point out a common misconception (no pun intended): Jesus was not the Immaculate Conception—Mary was. Mary was born without the original sin on her soul because she was destined to be the mother of Christ.

You, like many others, are confusing the Immaculate Conception with the Virgin Birth. They are not one and the same.

CHANGING YOUR FACIAL CONTOUR

Although the human body continues to change throughout life, changes in the adult occur much more slowly than in the child and are called "maturing features". In most people, the middle, autumn and later years of life are characterized by a thinning and sharpening of the facial contours. During these years, the support provided by intact teeth is critically important in maintaining a symmetrical and pleasing facial appearance.

The teeth, especially the front teeth (incisors) and the eye teeth (canines), provide direct support to the shape of the lips, corner of the mouth, and front part of the cheeks. If these teeth are not replaced immediately, their loss can cause or accentuate folding, drooping and hollowing of the facial tissues resulting in facial features that can be unattractive and downright unpleasant.

In the older person, loss of the bicuspids and molars (back teeth) accentuates the hollow configuration of the cheeks and deepens the natural lines and wrinkles. You only have one face. Don't let negligence keep it from looking as young as you are for life. Replace any missing teeth now!

Blessings

The blessings of governmental units that work together for the common good cannot be overmeasured. Witness the plight of Goldsboro where good intentions went awry.

Two years ago the Goldsboro and surrounding Wayne County school systems were confronted by merger, although the circumstances were far different from those in Greenville and Pitt County schools.

Goldsboro, in heeding directives for the integration of its schools, has encountered over the years changes in the composition of its population. Those changes made an impact on the makeup of its school bodies. Instead of maintaining the idealized mix which integration was intended to achieve, a subtle return to segregation of pupils was manifest.

As a remedy, the city schools sought a merger with the county system. The step was refused and eventually put to the courts to decide.

Goldsboro argued the county had caused white flight from the city schools by establishing "white haven" schools and by opposing certain public housing ... which Goldsboro had welcomed ... with the result that Goldsboro schools in 1982 had a student body which was about 78 percent black.

A U.S. District judge refused to heed the plea, and the case was taken to a U.S. Court of Appeals.

This week in upholding the district judge, the Appeals Court acknowledged evidence of discriminatory intent, but said there was also evidence to the contrary, carrying equal weight, and the district court decision was upheld.

The legal process was a costly one; but perhaps the lingering scars will prove more costly.

As we said, we should count our blessings.

ASHEVILLE — Political reporters who covered the recent Vance-Aycock Dinner here heard active Democrats saying that their party's cup was either half full or half empty. That is, positive thinking Democrats of the half full mindset were optimistic that their party would win this year's statewide races. Less positive thinkers, of the half empty mindset, saw 1984 as the year they had put forth an unacceptable national ticket that had the potential to drag down state candidates.

At the dinner, some long range thinkers were expressing concern for more than the 1984 elections. The cup is either half full or half empty, they say, because the cup is cracked and it is leaking. The Democratic Party has serious problems that must be addressed regardless of the 1984 outcome.

"I think there is a one-in-three chance that the Democratic Party will be in serious trouble for the next 50 years," one liberal Durham Democrat said.

"I hate to sound like a doomsayer," a conservative Wake County Democrat and business lobbyist said, "but I don't think the Democratic Party will exist in North Carolina in 15 or 20 years."

South Carolina Sen. Fritz Hollings, main speaker at the Saturday night dinner, touched on one of the concerns voiced by the Democrats troubled by the party's long range prospects. He said the party has come to be seen as a collection of special interests all looking out for their own programs or loopholes and not worrying about the country in general.

But the conservative Wake County Democrat said the party has overlooked one group. "This party is doing nothing to win the votes of the people who wear a coat and tie to work every morning." That loss of business and professional people is leaving the party without the fundraising sources it needs and denying it a source of intellectual input, he said.

Another Democrat, a piedmont legislator, said the party is putting too much stock in a strong black vote. Many lifelong Democrats don't like black people, he said, and they're going to the Republican Party on the belief that the GOP does not cater to the black vote. If the Democrats win in 1984, he said, a large black turnout will have been instrumental, the party will have to reward black interests in 1985, and the party will be stuck with an even stronger black identity for the future.

It was this legislator's opinion that the party is beginning to be seen as a party of minorities. To maintain itself as the majority party in America, the legislator said, the Democrats must keep that minority support but also begin to win back some of its white male support.

The liberal Democrat, who has no hopes for Walter Mondale's presidential campaign even though his job requires that he visibly support the candidate, said the party must find new leadership and a more modern ideology in 1985.

"The party will go right beyond (New York Gov. Mario) Cuomo shortly after the election," he said, "and look for someone who isn't of the same old New Deal mold. What really frightens me is that young people, the 18 to 24 crowd, are flocking to the Republican Party. The yuppies are looking for something and even Gary Hart's feeble attempt with 'new ideas' that weren't really ideas attracted them, they were so desperate."

In the summer of 1980, Washington Post columnist David Broder wrote that the party which lost the presidential election that year would have a headstart in developing an ideology and candidates for the last decade of the 20th century. The Democrats in Asheville were saying that their party let the consolation prize of 1980 slip away and they'd better get started on the job in 1985.

Side Event

The Bush-Ferraro debate was a helpful sidelight to the main event. Both the vice president and N.Y. congresswoman came off well.

While there is little evidence either converted members of the audience, both deserved applause.

Of the two, it was perhaps surprising to many on seeing Mr. Bush as the more enthusiastic, the more fervent ... almost verbally stumbling in his spontaneous expounding of explanation and comparative evaluation.

Geraldine Ferraro demonstrated (as George Bush did not have to do) that she was capable of creditably fulfilling the role of vice president. She was perhaps at her best in the summation delivered in an attention-getting, low, near monotone. It compelled one to listen.

The congresswoman was relatively restrained by closely following prepared notes. Perhaps that cost her points; it was a different Ferraro than the one seen on the campaign trail.

Despite their best efforts, November's results are still up to performances by their running mates. Thursday night's show was not the main bout.

What Makes Anyone Run?

Before we continue this election campaign, I would like everyone to please rise and give the people running this year for any office a standing ovation. The majority have put their jobs, their meager finances and their reputations on the line. Their families have suffered, their egos have been bruised and their friendships have been shattered.

I can understand why someone would run for president of the United States, or even governor. But I've always been bewildered why a person would want to enter the race for city council, county supervisor, board of education, or all the other unglamorous elective offices that have to be filled to maintain our democratic form of government. I didn't realize what a burden it could be on somebody until I drove over to Maryland to see a friend of mine, Jim Colby, who was running for a seat in the state legislature. He was holding a "garage" sale.

I expected to see a lot of furniture and bric-a-brac, but the garage was empty.

"How must will you give me for it?" he asked.

"Give you for what?"

"The garage. I'm selling it as is."

"People usually think of a garage sale as a place where they can buy old books, lamps and stuff that has been in the attic for years," I said.

"I couldn't raise enough money for my campaign doing that. I have to sell the garage. I already mortgaged my house up to the hilt. I figure if I can get the money for the garage I could put three more ads in the newspaper."

"You're really determined to win, aren't you?"

"The country's future is at stake, and the people of Maryland are depending on me."

"It must be hard on the family for you to go into so much debt."

"They've been very supportive, except for my brother Al."

"What's Al's problem?"

"Well, the opposition investigated my financial situation, and although I came up clean, they found Al had been paying kickbacks for school supply contracts. So they had him indicted. He says if I hadn't been running for office they would never have found out about it."

"Al's probably just jealous of you," I said. "Your wife deserves a lot of credit for putting up with the campaign."

"She certainly does, especially after my opponent accused me of having an affair with one of my volunteers."

"She didn't believe it?"

"Oh, she believed it. But she's a good sport. She said she wouldn't file for a divorce until the campaign was over."

"I guess the one thing that makes it all worthwhile is to see how many friends you can count on when you decide to run for public office."

"What friends? They're all mad at me because after tapping them for money for my campaign I'm running 10 points behind in the polls. Most of them say if they had known how little charisma I had they would have given the money to the Reverend Moon."

"Well, you can always go back to your law firm if you don't win."

"I wish it was possible, but my partners told me they would just as soon not have me back, as they don't want to be associated with a loser."

"You really have given up a lot to run for office. If you had it to do all over again, would you still run for office?"

"Of course I would. Losing your home, your wife, your friends and your job is a small price to pay to see that the people of the state of Maryland get good government."

Stockman May Have Secret Tax Plan In The Works

WASHINGTON — While President Reagan thrashes Walter Mondale for proposing higher taxes, his budget director — David Stockman — is plotting a post-election "grand compromise" that would feature healthy tax hikes.

What seems to be percolating in Stockman's head comes mighty close to the secret plan to raise taxes that Mondale has accused Reagan of concealing. When we asked for comment, Stockman called this "a fairy tale." But in fact, the outlines of his scenario have emerged in private talks and closed-door administration meetings.

He would start with a budget next year seeking to close the deficit with spending cuts rather than tax increases. When that inevitably fails, Stockman would move for bipartisan negotiations that would produce a new deficit-reduction package sure to boost taxes.

This is so far from what Ronald Reagan is saying in both private and public that Stockman's scenario would be written off as Dave's daydream were it not for his track record. That he has lasted four years as director of the Office of Management and Budget (OMB) despite multiple policy deviations attests to his connection with James A. Baker III, the president's chief of staff.

Ever since Mondale exploded his tax bomb in San Francisco, Stockman has battled backstage at the White House with mixed success.

Painting his familiar word picture of unending budget deficits, he convinced Baker that the president should hold out for raising taxes as a "last resort." But he failed to get Reagan into a bidding war with Mondale over deficit reduction.

Beyond campaign postures are long-range plans. "You should have been a fly on the wall," one Stockman friend told us recently after lunching with the OMB director. "He is really feisty about next year. He has big, big plans." Those plans would use the "window" following Reagan's presumed reelection to assault the deficit.

Just such reports moved three conservative Republican backbenchers in the House — Reps. Newt Gingrich of Georgia, Vin Weber of Minnesota and Connie Mack of Florida — to meet privately with Stockman. They were not reassured by what they heard. On the contrary, the normally bubbly, positive-thinking Gingrich left in unaccustomed depression.

Stockman did begin by claiming he and his visitors agree on 80 percent of economic issues. If so, the remaining 20 percent embrace the most critical points of confrontation for the nation's political and economic future.

Stockman implied to his visitors certain failure of further budget-cutting early next year, followed by a "grand compromise" that once and for all would slay the deficit dragon. He did not say so specifically, but that package of necessity would increase taxes.

More disturbing than this confirmation of Mondale's secret plan, however, are its ideological predicates. Stockman privately rejects the notion publicly expounded by Reagan that sustained economic growth will cut deficits. He does so because of an inflexible model, described in his meeting with the congressmen, that demands unattainable standards of low unemployment and high productivity to achieve even modest growth paths.

As he has done frequently with his colleagues, Stockman warned the trio of a future trail of red ink that has financial markets scared stiff. When he was a 34-year-old Michigan congressman just announced as OMB director, Stockman in December 1980 was taken to Wall Street to sell the titans on supply-side growth economics. Instead, they sold him on austerity. Stockman's previous role models — Reinhold Niebuhr, Pat Moynihan and John Anderson — have been replaced by the prototypical skittish bond trader.

U.S. Wants Quality Expertise

WASHINGTON (AP) — Bolstered by $4.8 million from Congress, the government is ready to launch an unprecedented program to improve scholarship dealing with the Soviet Union and eastern Europe. If it succeeds, both scholarship and U.S. national security will benefit.

The idea is to develop expertise at the graduate level — in the languages, the economy, the geography of the Soviet Union. The emphasis is on quality, not on numbers.

The call has gone out for applications to more than 300 colleges and universities, foundations and international study groups.

Just before Christmas, an advisory committee drawn from the government and academia will meet to decide who gets the grants.

The committee is on the lookout for economists, geographers, sociologists and specialists in international relations. These fields will receive special emphasis.

Priority also will be placed on developing what is known as "secondary competences." For example, training a computer specialist in the Russian language. Or helping a third-year law student who intends to specialize in international trade to understand Russian culture.

But the search by no means will be limited to these fields.

Nor will the program aim to produce more experts of one kind or another than exist in the Soviet Union.

Paul K. Cook, the veteran U.S. Kremlinologist who is administering the program from a modest office in the State Department, says there is no point trying to compete with the Soviet Union in sheer numbers.

"We don't have the same set of national priorities as the Soviets have," he said in a recent interview. "We doubt that we should produce as many Sovietologists as they do Americanists. We think that we do better in the quality of people."

Still, there are many gaps in American knowledge.

Albania, a country that usually does not come to mind, serves as a good illustration.

The United States has no relations with the ardently independent, communist country in eastern Europe. But it cannot be totally ignored, especially since it is not in the Soviet orbit.

Last year, there were only two people engaged in Albanian studies here. That doesn't rattle U.S. security. But, Cook says, "suppose Enver Hoxha, the Albanian leader, dies. Who do you turn to for advice? Who knows the personalities involved? The system?"

The money appropriated by Congress is modest compared to the Pentagon weapons program or the national debt. But to scholars, it is a sizable sum. Even a $10,000 grant can make a big difference to an academic.

The program, established under the Soviet-Eastern European Research and Training Act, is designed for the next 10 years. Fellowships will be awarded for study here and abroad.

Hunt, Helms Repeat Familiar Themes

By MARY ANNE RHYNE
Associated Press Writer
CHARLOTTE (AP) — The series of debates between Republican Sen. Jesse Helms and Democratic Gov. Jim Hunt ended much as it began, with Helms emphasizing his ties to President Reagan and Hunt saying his opponent does not represent mainstream North Carolina.

Helms said he was unsure who won the debate but Hunt again called himself the winner.

"We did a better job of establishing how far right (Helms) is ... how out of touch with the needs of the people of North Carolina he is," Hunt said.

The candidates met for a final statewide, televised debate Saturday before almost 100 members of the North Carolina Association of Broadcasters and the Radio-Television News Directors Association of the Carolinas. It was the first confrontation before an audience.

Among the spectators for the fourth debate were Senate Majority Leader Howard Baker, R-Tenn., and Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kansas.

Baker praised Helms' performance, saying "There were strengths in his (Helms') presentation and force in his facts."

Analysts agreed that one aspect of the debate was different Saturday — the candidates' tone.

"I think the most important thing was that both conducted themselves in a very civil manner," said Jack Fleer, political science professor at Wake Forest University.

Donald Schroeder, a government professor at Campbell University, said Helms was "very different from the last two (debates) in that he was much less aggressively negative."

But Helms continued to stress his ties to President Reagan, the need for a Republican majority in the Senate to help Reagan and his importance to North Carolina as chairman of the Agriculture Committee.

Hunt repeated his unwillingness to "toe the line" for either presidential candidate and his view of Helms as the leader of "radical right-wing groups" and an opponent of some Reagan proposals.

Helms said he was, "proud of the record that Ronald Reagan and I have established" and noted that Hunt has been "sharply critical of what Ronald Reagan and I have been working together to do."

"The choices are clear," Helms said. "Will we raise taxes and spending, as the governor has done here in North Carolina, or will we continue to cut taxes and spending as President Reagan and I have done?"

Hunt agreed the choice between the candidates is clear but he denied the Helms' label of "Mondale liberal" after Democratic presidential challenger Walter Mondale.

"You know better," Hunt told viewers. "You've elected me statewide three times. I've served as your governor for eight years... I represent a tradition ... of sound progressive government that has moved this state forward over the years."

Hunt then tried to align Helms with right-wing groups.

"I do not want North Carolina to be known as the home for radical, right-wing politicians. I do not want North Carolina to be known for narrow intolerant leaders who claim that God is on their side," Hunt said.

Helms said he did not and accused of using the word "radical" to refer to "anybody and anything that's not liberal." Helms listed group from which he has received support, including the Chamber of Commerce, and asked if they were radical.

Helms then attacked Hunt's boast that he has presented balanced budgets to the Legislature. Helms said state debt has risen 540 percent, spending has doubled and taxes have increased under Hunt's leadership.

"North Carolina absolutely has a balanced budget," Hunt said, adding that Helms looked at capital projects to find debt. "Of course state spending has gone up because inflation over eight years has gone up."

Hunt said he agreed to a 3-cent per gallon increase in the gasoline tax to save roads and promote industrial growth. He said he had nothing to do with a tax increase package approved in 1983.

"The taxes that were increased in 1983 were not taxes that I favored or that I pushed for," Hunt said. "They were done by the Legislature and they of course are the ones who cast the votes."

Hunt said the need for a tax increase to balance the federal budget is one place where he disagrees with Mondale. He said he also agrees with Reagan on some issues.

"I won't go to Washington to toe anybody's line," Hunt said. "But I am also concerned about the way that Senator Helms has opposed President Reagan, opposed the Social Security rescue plan ... opposed him on the Falklands, opposed him on El Salvador."

On other subjects, Hunt said he was concerned about negative ads in the race and said if elected he would work to reform elections "so that people in other states and in the future don't have to go through what we've been going through this year."

Helms responded that a negative ad "is the other fellow's ad" and said the "governor's problem is that what we've been saying about him is true."

In response to a question from Hunt, Helms said the best thing the federal government could do for working women is to build the economy and provide jobs.

Meanwhile, Helms charged Hunt with causing the loss of textile jobs by encouraging most-favored-nation-trade status with China.

Most beef cattle herds in Pitt County are small herds with less than 50 brood cows. Small herds often do not receive the level of management that would make them profitable. Proper management of small beef herds is very similar to management of a larger herd.

Two areas of deficiency in most small beef cattle operations is the lack of a controlled breeding season and inadequate cattle handling facilities. These two deficiencies can cost the producer money. A producer that is not on a controlled breeding season probably won't be castrating and implanting calves, dehorning, worming, identifying or pregnancy testing. All of these management practices have been shown to produce heavier, more thrifty calves.

The inputs into a cattle operation with low management practices is low but so are the returns. Cattlemen with small herds need to take a long, hard look at their costs and see if they are making money. If they are not making money, an improved level of management should improve their profit potential. Establishing a controlled breeding and calving season is the first improvement in management that most producers should consider.

Initially when a controlled breeding season is started, the number of calves born can be decreased if the breeding season is narrowed too much all at once. However, within a few years, the percentage of calves born will be increased if a rigid program of culling all non-pregnant cows is practiced. This practice results in increased reproductive efficiency of the cow herd and a uniform group of calves to handle and sell.

The second problem encountered on most small beef cattle herds is inadequate cattle handling facilities. Cattle handling facilities are relatively expensive to build or buy — $2,000 to $3,000 for a purchased set of pens. Facilities built out of treated lumber are less expensive and will last up to 20 years. A set of facilities to work cattle allows a producer to deworm, dehorn, castrate, implant and identify when it needs to be done.

These times of low prices in the cattle business make it difficult for a cattle producer to get ambitions about making changes in his operation. However, certain practices will pay for themselves many times over the haul.

TO ALL TELEPHONE COMPANY SUBSCRIBERS NOTICE OF HEARING

DOCKET NO. P-100, SUB 73

BEFORE THE NORTH CAROLINA UTILITIES COMMISSION

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN that the North Carolina Utilities Commission has instituted a proceeding to investigate whether current tariff provisions prohibiting the sharing and resale of local exchange telephone service should be modified. The proceeding was undertaken in response to a June 27, 1984, tariff filing by Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Company which provides for, under certain conditions, the resale and shared use of local exchange service. The tariff would allow, for example, the owner of an office building to furnish local service to the firms occupying his offices by sharing local service furnished to him by Southern Bell for resale to the various firms.

The Commission has concluded that the filing raises basic legal and policy issues and that a general investigation involving all regulated telephone companies should be conducted. In this investigation, the Commission will consider not only the revisions proposed by Southern Bell but also whether or not similar revisions should be made in the tariffs of other telephone companies.

The Utilities Commission has suspended the proposed tariff, has set the matter for investigation and hearing, and has made all regulated telephone companies in North Carolina parties to the proceeding.

FURTHER DETAILS

The details of the proposed tariff are available at telephone company business offices or at the North Carolina Utilities Commission, Dobbs Building, 430 North Salisbury Street, Raleigh, North Carolina, where a copy of Southern Bell's tariff is available for public review in the office of the Chief Clerk. The Commission will consider additional or alternative revisions which were not included in the original tariff and may order changes which differ from those proposed by the Company. Upon request, the Commission will place copies of the tariff in centrally-located public libraries. The material may be copied without prohibition at the library.

HEARING SCHEDULE

The Commission has scheduled a hearing in Raleigh to receive testimony on this matter from the regulated telephone companies and other interested parties. The hearing is scheduled as follows:

Raleigh: Tuesday, December 4, 1984, at 9:30 a.m. in Commission Hearing Room 217, Dobbs Building, 430 North Salisbury Street, Raleigh, North Carolina.

APPEARANCES, INTERVENTIONS AND COMMENTS

The Commission requires that each telephone company operating in North Carolina inform its customers of the following procedure by which comments regarding this matter can be made part of the record of the case upon which the Commission must base its decision. Persons desiring to intervene in the matter as formal parties of record should file a petition under North Carolina Utilities Commission Rule R1-19. The testimony of formal intervenors shall be filed with the Commission on or before Wednesday, November 14, 1984.

Other persons desiring to present testimony for the record should appear at the public hearing. Persons desiring to send written statements to the Commission should submit their statements prior to the hearing and should include any information which those persons wish to be considered in the investigation of the matter. The contents of letters and petitions will be received in the official file as statements of position. Specific facts, however, will only be considered and on the basis of testimony presented at the public hearing. Interventions or statements should be addressed to the Chief Clerk, North Carolina Utilities Commission, Post Office Box 991, Raleigh, North Carolina 27602.

The Public Staff of the Utilities Commission, through its Executive Director, is authorized by statute to represent the using and consuming public in proceedings before the Commission. Statements to the Executive Director should be addressed to:

Mr. Robert P. Gruber
Executive Director
Public Staff
Post Office Box 991

The Campaign Reagan

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan was making a campaign foray into the friendly political confines of the South today, beginning the countdown week leading to his crucial second debate with Democratic challenger Walter F. Mondale.

The president's one-day swing into the region that always has given him strong support included stops in Alabama, South Carolina and Georgia. He was delivering speeches at the University of Alabama in Tuscaloosa, at Greenville, S.C., Technical College, and at a rally in Macon, Ga.

Four years ago, running against Georgian Jimmy Carter, Reagan carried every southern state except Georgia. This year, Reagan is considered the leader in every state in the South.

At Tuscaloosa, Reagan was being introduced by Sen. Jeremiah Denton of Alabama, one of the conservative Republicans elected in the Reagan landslide year of 1980.

From there he was flying to Macon for a rally hosted by Mayor George Israel, a 36-year-old Republican considered a rising star in the state GOP and chairman of the Reagan campaign in Georgia.

Democratic challenger Walter F. Mondale, meanwhile, was already pointing toward their debate this Sunday, telling a national radio audience that Reagan's "good intentions" aren't enough to ensure peace.

"Look us over closely" during the debate, Mondale said in his weekly paid radio broadcast. "Ask yourself, who has the discipline to master the facts? Who will take responsibility for his policies ... Who will keep us strong — and drive to break the deadlock with the Soviets and lead toward a safer world?"

Mondale was flying to Missouri today for a campaign stop before going on to California.

The big question in the period between the two Reagan-Mondale debates was whether their first encounter reshaped the contest from what looked like a Reagan walkaway to a potentially tight contest.

Reagan campaign officials conceded that Mondale was the winner of the first debate, although they insist that it was just an "off night" for the president and that he will be in top form when the two candidates debate foreign and defense policy in Kansas City, Mo., on Sunday.

Mondale

NORTH OAKS, Minn. (AP) — Walter F. Mondale, already pointing toward Sunday's campaign debate, says he doesn't doubt that President Reagan wants peace but that the presidency "requires a lot more than good intentions."

"Look us over closely" during the debate, Mondale said Sunday in his weekly paid radio broadcast.

"Ask yourself, who has the discipline to master the facts? Who will take responsibility for his policies ... Who will keep us strong, and drive to break the deadlock with the Soviets and lead toward a safer world?"

Mondale's radio address and a brief question-and-answer session with reporters were his only campaigning of the day, as he set aside several hours in the afternoon to prepare for next weekend's foreign policy confrontation with the president.

The Democratic presidential candidate has seen his campaign energized on the strength of last weekend's debate showing against the president, and he has rearranged his schedule for this week to give himself plenty of time to prepare for the second round.

Mondale was flying to Missouri today before going on to California, but he scrubbed a planned stop in Eugene, Ore., in between, and has decided against flying to New York on Thursday night to attend the annual Al Smith dinner, his aides said.

Mondale, still far behind the president in most public opinion polls, said the debate is "very important." But asked whether his chance of victory on Nov. 6 would be "down the tubes" if he didn't do as well as in last Sunday's debate on domestic issues, he said, "I don't look at it that way."

In his weekly radio address, Mondale said that during the debate, Reagan "will tell you he's for peace. I don't doubt him. We all want peace."

"But don't measure him — or me — by what we want," Mondale added. "When it comes to war and peace, the presidency requires a lot more than good intentions."

He launched a stinging attack on Reagan's arms control policy, which he said can be summarized this way:

"If there's an arms control agreement, oppose it. If there's a dangerous weapon, buy it. If the Pentagon wants a blank check, sign it. If there's a crucial fact, don't learn it."

Ferraro

NEW YORK (AP) — Democratic vice presidential candidate Geraldine Ferraro is predicting political problems for Vice President George Bush if he seeks higher office in 1988 because he has discarded his policy differences with President Reagan.

When Ms. Ferraro and Bush met for a debate last Thursday, the vice president said he is comfortable with all President Reagan's philosophical stands despite their earlier differences over abortion and economic policy, to name two. Bush said he would expect to continue Reagan's policies if he ever should become president.

"I think his total support of the president is going to be a bothersome thing for him in 1988," Ms. Ferraro said. "He embraced wholeheartedly the right-wing philosophy that has driven this administration for the past four years and is part of their platform."

Ms. Ferraro planned to leave New York today for an afternoon appearance in Allentown, Pa., and then was flying on to Cleveland.

She talked about Bush and about the campaign Sunday on NBC-TV's "Meet the Press."

During the interview, she referred critically to Bush's flippant remark during their debate that he would like to talk about the World Series.

"Had I said... 'let's talk about the U.S. Open today,' I would have been creamed, absolutely creamed by the press and anyone else looking at that debate. I think that hurt George Bush too," she said.

She continued to use restraint when asked about her reaction to a series of derogatory references made about her by Bush, his wife and his press secretary last week.

"Perhaps they are beginning to get a little worried when they see the polls moving. I think it might be a little bit of a statement on my candidacy, like, 'Who am I to challenge this man?'"

Bush was heard Friday describing his debate performance by saying, "We tried to kick a little ass last night." Earlier in the week, Barbara Bush told reporters Ms. Ferraro was "that $4 million — I can't say it but it rhymes with rich." And Peter Teeley, the vice president's press secretary, used the term "bitchy" in saying how he thought Ms. Ferraro might perform during the debate.

Bush

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Vice President George Bush, trying to reverse political gains by Walter Mondale in the nation's biggest state, is courting senior citizens and addressing students at the same college campus where the Democratic challenger was nearly drowned out by hecklers.

After watching 6½ innings of the World Series in Detroit, Bush flew here late Sunday night to begin a five-day western campaign swing.

With 47 electoral votes at stake, both Mondale and President Reagan are making a major effort in California. Reagan is believed to be leading in his home state, but Mondale is believed to be gaining.

Mondale and his running mate Geraldine Ferraro have made repeated trips to California and will be back again this week.

"It's had an impact, as you might expect," said Peter Teeley, press secretary to Bush. He claimed Mondale also had invested $1.5 million "in negative advertising" in California.

Bush planned to answer questions from senior citizens today at a retirement community known as Leisure World.

Later, the vice president was to address students at a noon appearance at the University of Southern California, the same site where Mondale was heckled in an appearance Sept. 18.

Mondale responded angrily to the hecklers who disrupted his speech criticizing Reagan on nuclear arms control. Later, a member of a local college Republican organization said Reagan campaign officials coached the students who heckled, a charge Reagan campaign officials denied.

Teeley, meanwhile, defended Bush's assertion during Thursday night's debate that Mondale and Ms. Ferraro had suggested that Marines killed in Lebanon had "died in shame."

Queen Ends Visit To Scenic Wyoming

By TAD BARTIMUS
Associated Press Writer

SHERIDAN, Wyo. (AP) — Queen Elizabeth II wound up her Wyoming vacation with a quiet dinner among friends as snowflakes swirled around the old ranch house where she spent the weekend in the scenic Big Horn Mountains.

The queen was scheduled to leave northcentral Wyoming about noon today aboard her Royal Air Force VC-10 jetliner.

She spent the last eight days on a private vacation in Kentucky and Wyoming following a state visit to Canada.

After a refueling stop in Omaha, Neb., the queen will fly directly to London's Heathrow Airport, where she is scheduled to arrive Tuesday morning.

On Sunday, the queen toured the Bradford Brinton Memorial at the Quarter Circle A Ranch, which is next to the spread of her host and hostess, Lord and Lady Porchester.

It was a crisp and sunny morning and she strolled the grounds, visiting with the caretaker and housekeeper before entering the museum.

Inside, she admired paintings of the Old West by Frederic Remington and Charles Russell, as well as furnishings preserved by a private trust to show the life of a country gentleman a half-century ago.

The queen was scheduled to go on a picnic in the hills above the Porchesters' Canyon Ranch, but a fast-moving storm blew in and the Porchesters and the queen opted for lunch at the Canyon Ranch house.

The queen also took a call Sunday afternoon from President and Mrs. Reagan, and they chatted for about 15 minutes.

During the conversation, the queen expressed her pleasure at the welcome she had received in Kentucky and Wyoming and also expressed her gratitude to Reagan that she had been able to make a private visit to the United States, according to her press secretary, Michael Shea.

The queen took her last private vacation outside the British Isles in 1969 when she visited Normandy in France.

Shea said the queen also spoke with Reagan about last week's bombing of the Grand Hotel in Brighton, England, which killed a member of Parliament and threatened the life of Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and members of her cabinet.

Shea declined to give specifics of that conversation. However, he said the queen "then rang the British Prime Minister to relate what had happened (with the call from Reagan) and also to talk to Mrs. Thatcher after literally the dust had settled."

It was the first time the head of state and the prime minister had spoken since the bombing, although their private secretaries had been in close communication, Shea said.

Later Sunday, before dinner, the queen took a walk in the foothills of the Big Horn Mountains behind the Canyon Ranch.

Police Point To Mercy Killing In Fatal Stabbing Of Ill Lady

WASHINGTON (AP) — Police say the fatal stabbing of a critically ill 84-year-old woman in her hospital bed may have been a mercy killing, the Washington Post reported today.

Officials at Washington Hospital Center found Selena Toye, a comatose stroke patient, with a knife in her chest Sunday soon after she was visited by a man identifying himself as a family member, police and hospital officials said. The woman died 90 minutes later in surgery.

A police spokeswoman said the patient's grandson, Cardell Shelton, 29, was arrested and charged with murder after he turned himself in to officers early today.

The Post quoted Darrena Shelton, the victim's granddaughter, as saying she and other relatives had favored removing Mrs. Toye from life-support systems.

"I'm not saying we wanted her dead," Miss Shelton said. "We know how she was ... and we just know she didn't want to be laying there ... I just don't like the way it was done. I feel it would have been easier to just pull the plug."

Hospital spokeswoman Stephanie McNeill said Mrs. Toye, who had entered the hospital with a heart ailment in July, was moved to the intensive care unit on Tuesday after suffering a stroke and lapsing into a coma.

Visiting rules for such patients are relaxed, so when a man signed in as "C. Shelton" and identified himself as a family member, he was allowed to visit Mrs. Toye in her private alcove in a ward for five minutes, the spokeswoman said.

She said the stabbing was discovered several minutes later by a nurse. Mrs. Toye was pronounced dead at 6:10 a.m.

The Post quoted an unidentified homicide detective as saying the death "is a possible mercy killing, but a pretty cold one."

Tobacco Leader Suggests Government May Be Answer

By The Associated Press

As tobacco officials discuss ways to save the industry, one suggests that the ultimate solution may lie with the federal government's willingness to pay off debts incurred from the 1982 No Net Cost Tobacco Program Act.

"Even if they have to absorb losses of this magnitude, the tobacco program would still be one of the cheapest farm programs that we have for a major commodity," said T. Carlton Blalock, executive vice president of the Tobacco Growers Association of North Carolina. "The PIK (payment-in-kind) program cost $12 billion to $20 billion. Here we're talking about half a billion at the outside."

One of the most widely discussed plans to salvage the program is one put forth by Guilford County farmer David Hopkins Jr. He suggests government price supports be lowered from $1.6999 per pound to between $1.40 and $1.50 and that growers be allowed to purchase old stabilization stocks in exchange for additional allowances to grow tobacco themselves.

"The theory behind the Hopkins plan is that if you reduce your prices, you will increase your sales," Blalock said. "Research data at N.C. State University indicates that for every 1 percent reduction in prices over a three-to-five-year period, you can expect a 3-to-5 percent expansion in sales."

However, Blalock said the plan would generate losses to the cooperative for which farmers would be held responsible under the No Net Cost Tobacco Program Act.

John Cyrus, tobacco affairs specialist for the state Agriculture Department, said the Hopkins plan could add to the tobacco glut by authorizing higher quotas. He said a better plan might be to ask the government to postpone farmers' responsibility for the program until 1985, after changes make the system healthier.

Other options being considered include lower prices for renting tobacco quotas, a rollback in federal price supports and elimination of grower fees for the federal tobacco program.

"I sense that there is a growing consensus that we have to do something drastic," Blalock said. "If we do not, at the most, some people are saying we will have a (tobacco) program for one more year. So we think it is absolutely essential that something be done in 1985."

The association's executive committee plans to suggest at an Oct. 23 meeting in Raleigh that the cost of renting quotas from allotment holders be reduced from its current range of up to 70 cents a pound. Growers contend such a reduction would let them reduce their prices, sparking more sales by making U.S. leaf more competitive with foreign tobacco.

"We'll have a proposal to put a cap of 35 to 40 cents a pound on leasing," said Blalock. But he added that the cap might not be enough to stem the flow of unsold tobacco going to the Flue-Cured Tobacco Cooperative Stabilization Corp.

Many tobacco organizations are awaiting the outcome of November elections before endorsing a plan because changes in the program must come at the congressional level.

The federal tobacco program sets the amount of leaf farmers can grow and the minimum price they can be paid for it. If growers are not offered more than the support price, the cooperative pays them the minimum and stores the tobacco for later sale.

Some $1.5 billion worth of unsold tobacco — some 879 million pounds including leaf from previous seasons — sits in warehouses because of reduced demand. And despite a price freeze, an 11 percent cut in growers' quotas and promises of increased purchases by cigarette makers, tobacco is flowing into stabilization faster this year than last.

Through last week more than three-quarters of the way into the 1984 season, stabilization has taken 16.5 percent of the crop, or about 133 million pounds, compared with 14.5 percent at the same point last season.

In July, the cooperative announced it would discount the price of stored tobacco if sales this season reached 720 million pounds. Jim Sineath, administrator of the cooperative, said even if all remaining tobacco is sold, it would fall short of the trigger level.

Blalock said the discount plan "would have moved out some of the stock in stabilization and gotten some of the burden of the program off the farmers' back."

Instead, U.S. Agriculture Secretary John Block is expected to cut the quota for next year.

Student Sues Duke

DURHAM (AP) — A former Duke University student who lost his sight in suing the school for $750,000, claiming his injury resulted from negligence by Duke officials.

The suit, filed Friday in Durham County Superior Court, says that Robert Harris suffered the eye injury on Oct. 11, 1981, when he was struck by a piece of flying glass from a fraternity house door.

The suit charges that Duke was negligent for not installing safety glass in the door and certain other doors and windows on campus.

Harris said in the suit he was approaching the Kappa Sigma fraternity house when another student, Steven Farmer, noticed that glass in the door was broken. Farmer attempted to remove a broken shard of the glass, but a piece flew off and struck Harris in the face, the suit said.

Don Etheridge, assistant university counsel, said he didn't know what the university's current policy was on safety glass, and could not discuss any policy until the lawsuit was resolved.

Hotel Bombing Prompts Tightened Security

BRIGHTON, England (AP) — Police are tightening security around Britain's top politicians to guard against the threat of more IRA attacks like the bombing at Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's convention hotel.

Police warned top political, military and judicial figures Sunday to take precautions against possible future strikes on the British mainland by the Irish Republican Army. Mrs. Thatcher and Neil Kinnock, the leader of Britain's opposition Labor Party, were given beefed-up security guards.

"We do not discount the possibility that a unit could still be in this country with the intention of causing more incidents of this nature," said Commander William Huckleby, chief of Scotland Yard's anti-terrorist branch.

The IRA took responsibility for the pre-dawn bombing Friday at the Grand Hotel in Brighton, where Mrs. Thatcher and her Cabinet were attending a Conservative Party convention. The blast killed four people, wounded 32 and narrowly missed Mrs. Thatcher, who left her bathroom only moments before it was devastated.

In Ireland, police reported today that an investigation into a IRA robbery that killed a police officer led to the discovery of sophisticated bomb-making equipment under the floorboards of a house in Lusk, a village 15 miles north of Dublin.

A police spokesman, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said police believed they had discovered a major IRA bomb-making operation. The find was made last month, and police staked out the house for weeks, but no one showed up, he said.

No clear evidence has been found to link the equipment, which included remote-control and timing devices, to the hotel bombing, the spokesman said.

Mrs. Thatcher, dressed in black and under heavy police guard, attended church services Sunday near Chequers, her country residence. Officer on surrounding hills scanning the countryside through binoculars. A sniffer dog had checked out the church.

Two men detained over the weekend under the Prevention of Terrorism Act were ruled out Sunday as suspects in the hotel bombing, but a Brighton police spokeswoman said they were still being held "and may be charged, but only with minor offenses." She did not give details.

Huckleby said the 20-pound bomb appeared to have been hidden behind paneling between the bathrooms of Rooms 628 and 629 and equipped with a microchip timing device. Detectives were reportedly combing through the hotel register for recent occupants.

Firemen on Sunday dug out the body the fourth blast fatality, Jean Shattock, wife of a Conservative politician. The other victims were a member of Parliament, Sir Anthony Berry; a politician, Eric Taylor; and Roberta Wakeham, wife of the Conservatives' chief whip, John Wakeham, who was injured.

In Dublin, the Sunday Press newspaper said the bombing was carried out by English-born men and women from Irish families who frequented the hotel, sometimes as guests, often just dropping in for a drink and maybe briefly working there.

"The strategy of avoiding any personnel who had Irish accents or any involvement in any Republican activities in Britain was one of the key elements in the operation," the paper said, without documenting its claims.

The story said the Irish Republican Army had targeted Mrs. Thatcher and her Cabinet for death after the 1981 hunger strike by IRA inmates at Belfast's Maze Prison. Ten prisoners died in an unsuccessful attempt to pressure Mrs. Thatcher into recognizing them as political detainees.

The paper said the IRA intended to bomb the 1983 Conservative Party conference in Blackpool but couldn't complete arrangements in time, so they waited for this year's conference.

Huckleby said the bombers probably fled Britain after the blast but didn't rule out that they or other terrorist bombers were still operating on the mainland.

Police said Mrs. Thatcher, who turned 59 Saturday, had been in her second-floor bathroom just two minutes before the blast. Photographs showed plaster and rubble strewn on her bathroom floor, the window shattered and fixtures torn from their fittings.

Another picture released Sunday showed a pile of boards on the floor of the room of Trade Secretary Norman Tebbit and his wife, Margaret. He suffered a broken rib and thigh wound and she may be permanently paralyzed.

Sussex Chief Constable Roger Birch said a warning received before the bombing "was of a very general nature and was not specifically directed to Brighton. It was sent to all police forces."

Gerry Adams, leader of Sinn Fein, the IRA's legal political wing, said Sunday that the bombing was "an inevitable result of Britain's interference in Irish affairs."

The almost exclusively Catholic IRA is fighting a guerrilla war to drive Britain out of Northern Ireland, a province where two-thirds of the population is Protestant, and unite it with the overwhelmingly Catholic Republic of Ireland to the south.

Zoos' Mission Is To Return Endangered Species To Wild

By PATRICIA A. PAQUETTE

Associated Press Writer

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Dozens of zoos across the country are forming a collective Noah's ark so that thousands of rare animals eventually may be returned to the wild.

The animals, whose habitats have been destroyed by encroaching humans, would become extinct without the zoos' temporary refuge.

"There will be places where certain animals' natural habitats will disappear for long periods of time. That's where the ark analogy is particularly appropriate," said Dr. Thomas J. Foose, conservation coordinator for the American Association of Zoological Parks and Aquariums.

The association is managing 34 "species survival plans," or SSPs, in which highly endangered species are selectively bred to ensure their survival for at least 200 years, when it is estimated that human population will stabilize and the animals' habitats can be restored.

Zoo managers hope that by the end of the century, 1,500 species will ride the "zoo ark," Foose said. His vision is that "virtually all species at zoos will be SSP animals in the next century."

Roughly 5,000 animals in about 100 zoos across the country are part of the species survival program, which started nearly four years ago with a pilot program to save the Siberian tiger.

The Knoxville zoo participated in the effort, and soon led the program to breed Asian lions.

Other zoos — such as the San Diego Zoo, which has 28 of the 34 species in its zoo and Wild Animal Park — joined in the breeding program.

Knoxville's zoo, which has some 750 animals and yearly expenditures of $1.1 million, coordinates the Asian lion program. It has helped make the zoo "one of the more prominent institutions" in the "ark," Foose said.

Sometimes called the Indian lion, the Asian lion is a slightly smaller cousin of the African lion and the most endangered of the big cats. Only 180 Asian lions still exist in the wild, and the only place they are found is on a peninsula in northwest India.

Guy L. Smith III, director of the Knoxville Zoological Park, said that if the program did not exist, "We wouldn't have any Asian lions here or in the wild."

The zoo owns 13 Asian lions of the estimated 250 left in the world — eight of them here and five on loan for breeding at other zoos, Smith said.

Smith's job is to ensure that there isn't too much inbreeding among the animals in the program. Animals that are too closely related often are unhealthy and sometimes won't reproduce, he said.

Breeding records kept at zoos are scrutinized, and Smith keeps a detailed computer printout that shows how inbreeding would affect offspring for each combination of the 149 captive male and female lions in the survival plan.

Smith has made several trips to Europe in an attempt to find Asian lions with bloodlines different from those in the United States.

After two years of negotiating with the East German government, Smith said he was able to get "a very important male" Asian lion to breed with one of three females in Knoxville.

But perhaps Smith's biggest victory has been getting permission from the government of India to bring in three wild male lions. The lions will come to Knoxville at the beginning of the year, he said.

Smith's personal involvement with lions dates back to 1969 when he bought Joshua, an African lion cub which soon became too large for him to keep at home. For $1 a year, Smith offered to become acting director of the zoo if he could keep his lion there.

The zoo, considered one of the worst in the country, was about to be closed in 1971. Smith asked the city for money to rehabilitate and expand the zoo; the city sold $3 million in bonds for the improvements and named Smith director.

FOCUS

An Army For Peace

"There is not enough money in all America to relieve the misery of the underdeveloped world in a giant and endless soup kitchen. But there is enough know-how and knowledgeable people to help those nations help themselves." With these words, John F. Kennedy announced the idea of the "Peace Corps" during his 1960 presidential campaign. The Peace Corps was 23 years old yesterday. Kennedy got this idea of an "army working for peace" from the writings of William James.

Peres Talks U.S. Visit

By ALLYN FISHER
Associated Press Writer
TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Prime Minister Shimon Peres convened a meeting of his coalition Cabinet today to discuss his eight-day trip to the United States and plans for withdrawing Israeli soldiers from southern Lebanon.

Israel Radio, quoting unnamed sources, said Peres intended to press the Cabinet for a quick decision on ending Israel's occupation of southern Lebanon, which began with a June 1982 invasion.

Other media reports indicated Cabinet members were likely to question Peres closely on his promise to make a decision on the occupation forces in three to four weeks.

Peres said Sunday that the Defense Ministry is drawing up plans to withdraw Israeli soldiers, regardless of what opposing Syrian forces do. Israel must make its own decisions rather than seeking promises from Syria, Peres said after returning from the United States.

Israeli officials have sought a guarantee that Syrian forces will remain behind their front line in eastern Lebanon's Bekaa Valley if Israel withdraws. They are concerned the Syrians or Palestinian guerrillas will move back into southern Lebanon and threaten northern Israel, as they did prior to the invasion.

However, Peres said: "What we need is an Israeli decision and Israel has various options. We cannot hang everything on what the Syrians do."

The Yedioth Aharonot newspaper quoted political sources today as saying the government was considering a partial pullback in southwest Lebanon if Syria did not provide guarantees in the next several weeks.

It said the plan was to hand over the western zone to the South Lebanon Army, an Israeli-supplied militia, and to concentrate Israeli forces on the eastern front facing the Syrians.

Peres reportedly is facing opposition in his government to any move toward unilateral withdrawal. The leftist newspaper Al Hamishmar quoted a rightist Cabinet member, who was not identified, as saying Syria would have little interest in indirect negotiations if it believed Israel would decide soon to withdraw.

A Foreign Ministry official, who spoke on condition he not be identified, told reporters before Peres' return that "there are differences in views" between Peres and Foreign Minister Yitzhak Shamir.

Peres heads the Labor Party and Shamir, a former prime minister, heads the right-wing Likud Party. Despite broad differences, the two sides formed a coalition government after inconclusive parliamentary elections in July.

The Foreign Ministry official said the differences between Peres and Shamir included Peres' statement last week that Israel would decide on a Lebanon pullout within four weeks.

Israel will continue to use the "good offices of the United States toward reaching a security arrangement that will insure peace for the Galilee (northern Israel) and bring our sons home," Peres said.

Peres said he and the U.S. administration saw "eye to eye" on Lebanon, and did not "put any conditions or any sort of pressure on Israel."

"Israel has proposed to Jordan joining in negotiations to open a new leaf in the Middle East and the (Israeli) government has said it will be willing to discuss any proposals from Jordan," Peres said.

In Cairo on Sunday, Egypt asked the United States to sell Jordan Stinger ground-to-air missiles. Sale of the missiles was canceled earlier this year because of opposition by Israel and members of Congress, Egyptian sources said.

The sources, who spoke on condition they not be identified, said the request was made during meetings between U.S. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger and President Hosni Mubarak and other senior Egyptian officials.

A senior adviser to Mubarak, Osama El-Baz, also told reporters that the parties involved in the Lebanon issue — Israel, Syria, and the United States — had made "significant progress" toward arranging an Israeli withdrawal from southern Lebanon. He refused to give details.

Weinberger was to visit U.S. troops today on peacekeeping duty between Israel and Egypt on the Sinai Peninsula. From there he was to fly on to Israel.

Sources said the Egyptians argued that sale of the missiles would be an incentive to bring Jordan's King Hussein into peace talks with Israel.

Egypt's request on behalf of Jordan followed Hussein's decision on Sept. 25 to restore full diplomatic relations with Egypt, severed following the 1979 Israeli-Egyptian peace treaty.

The Egyptians were believed eager to show Hussein and other Arab leaders that Cairo's status as the only Arab country with relations both with Washington and Israel gives it a special role in promoting Arab causes.

Union Bosses Urge Pact Ok

ANAHEIM, Calif. (AP) — Union leaders say they'll urge 1,800 workers on strike at Disneyland for nearly three weeks to accept a new contract reached after Disney offered a new proposal, but pickets will stay at the Magic Kingdom until the ratification vote.

Union negotiators accepted the contract offered by the amusement park's management late Sunday as the sides met for the first time since Oct. 2. Neither side would disclose terms of the settlement until the five striking unions vote on Tuesday.

Strikers will picket the park until the vote, said union spokesman Michael O'Rourke.

Union spokesman Robert Bleiweiss credited federal mediator Bonnie Castrey with bringing the sides to a settlement of the strike begun Sept. 25, saying she "had been working in the background all along."

Management had been seeking a two-year wage freeze and cuts in fringe benefits, especially for part-time workers and new employees.

The unions — representing ticket sellers, ride operators, janitors and restaurant workers — were seeking pay increases of 4 percent to 8 percent a year.

Under their old contract, the strikers earned $7 to $10 an hour.

"I can say the rank and file committee made up of striking members will recommend the contract be approved," said Bleiweiss.

In the last week, each side has escalated its actions against the other.

Disneyland on Wednesday began hiring permanent replacements for the strikers. Company spokesman Bob Roth claimed hundreds of people applied for strikers' jobs, but he said fewer than 100 jobs had actually been filled.

On Thursday, the unions filed an $18 million suit against the amusement park over the arrest of six union leaders Oct. 8 as they challenged a court order not to picket near the amusement park's ticket booths.

The state Supreme Court later overturned the temporary restraining order, and a hearing on a permanent injunction was scheduled for Wednesday.

On Friday, members of the striking unions broadened their picketing to include the gates of Walt Disney Studios in Burbank. As they have at the amusement park, Teamster truck drivers refused to cross the picket lines.

Also Friday, leaders of the striking unions called for a campaign to boycott both Disneyland and Disney World in Lake Buena Vista, Fla., just outside Orlando.

On Saturday, several strikers bought tickets to the park, and once inside, handed out leaflets urging the boycott. Park security guards took their names and escorted them off the property.

Striking unions include the Teamsters, United Food and Commercial Workers, Service Employees International Union, Hotel Employees and Restaurant Employees Union, and the Bakers, Confectioners & Tobacco Workers.

The strike is the third in the history of Disneyland, which opened in July 1955. In March 1979, about 500 maintenance workers walked off the job for 13 days, and in 1970, two dozen talent workers struck for two days.

Attendance has been declining at Disneyland in recent years and dropped sharply during the Summer Olympics.

In response to the rising cost of health care, the typical insurance carrier tends to be long on sympathy but short on substance. What you get, generally, is an outpouring of sincerity to prepare you for a rate quotation that'll render you speechless.

When the need is for some concrete ways to reduce the cost of group health care immediately, and the means to contain those costs effectively across the long term.

Here's how we can help you.

1. Put cost-containment into practice.

Owing to a literally unique knowledge of health-care costs and cost discrepancies, even at the community level, no health carrier is better equipped than we are to build workable, predictably effective, cost-containment strategies into your health benefits program.

We can show you the specific ways your group can reduce its use of hospitalization.

We can structure your program to encourage the use of the most economical care consistent with good medical practice.

The economic history of three common surgical procedures. Statistics like these argue eloquently for the concrete cost-containment strategies we offer.

General Surgeon's Median Fee	February 1966	October 1975	October 1983
Appendectomy	$175.00	275.00	551.00
Cholecystectomy (Gall Bladder)	$275.00	450.00	901.00
Inguinal hernia, Unilateral	$150.00	270.00	551.00

And by teaming such strategies with the rate-containment procedures we employ on our own initiative, we can help you make some substantial improvements in your benefit package.

2. Put cost-containment in perspective.

Important as it is, however, dealing with rising health costs at the individual group level is only a kind of symptomatic approach. You're coping with effects, when we can also help you address the causes of those dramatic cost increases.

For example, given current construction rates of more than $150,000 per bed, all of us need to support more prudent planning for new hospitals.

Where acute care isn't required, we should have alternative facilities that are appropriate in sophistication to the needs they meet.

Duplication of expensive medical services should be reduced wherever possible. And people should be encouraged to incur medical expenses more selectively—to seek outpatient treatment, for example, when hospitalization isn't needed.

To find out how the right cost-containment strategies can benefit your group and

Good planning can reduce hospitalization without cutting benefits.

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market moved ahead today amid some general optimism about the interest-rate outlook.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials rose 2.76 to 1,193.46 in the first half hour.

Gainers took a 4-3 lead over losers among New York Stock Exchange-listed issues.

As the trading week began, there was widespread talk of an impending cut in major banks' prime lending rates from the prevailing level of 12 3/4 percent.

Analysts noted that recent declines in open-market money rates have reduced the banks' own costs of money, opening up the possibility of competitive pressures for a lower prime rate.

They also noted that utility stocks have been strong for some time, suggesting optimism among investors about interest-rate prospects. The Dow Jones average of 15 utility issues reached a 16-year high last week.

Utility issues are especially sensitive to interest-rate trends because the industry has heavy and regular borrowing needs, and because the stocks are typically owned by investors who are primarily concerned with current income.

The group ran into some selling today by traders looking to cash in on their recent gains. Among the volume leaders were Orange & Rockland Utilities, unchanged at 23 3/4; Middle South Utilities, down 1/4 at 12 3/4; and Commonwealth Edison, down 1/4 at 27 1/4.

On Friday the Dow Jones industrials rose 7.62 points to 1,190.70, bringing its gain for the week to 8.17 points.

Advances outpaced declines by more than 2 to 1 on the NYSE.

Big Board volume reached 92.19 million shares, against 87.02 million Thursday.

The NYSE's composite index rose .82 to 94.79. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was up 1.41 to 211.66.

previously headed the molecular immunobiology division of Cambridge's biochemistry department.

Jerne presented the first of his three main pioneering theories into immunological research in 1955 and the last, his so-called "network theory," 10 years ago.

The Karolinska professors said the first theory, on antibody formation, "breaks with old views on the immune response and is a starting point of modern cellular immunology."

The Karolinska professors said the network theory has been applied over the years in both experimental and clinical medicine, leading to treatments for infectious diseases, allergies caused by pollen, and diseases in which antibodies attack the body's own tissues.

His research also has enhanced medicine's ability to prevent rejection of transplanted organs, and has been applied in research into insulin and other hormones and into tumors, the officials said.

"No one in the world has had such importance for stimulating research in immunology" as Jerne, Swedish immunology professor Joran Moeller said after the announcement.

The prize "was a great surprise for me," Koehler told The Associated Press. "My knees are still trembling."

"Of course, it was a surprise," Jerne said. "There are so many others who have done wonderful things."

Reached by telephone at the Institute for Immunology in Basel, both said they were very happy and that the institute workers planned to mark the day with what Jerne called "a little celebration."

"I am not so sure that much work will be done today," Koehler added. He said he will soon leave the Basel institute to become one of the three directors of the Max Planck Institute for Immune Biology in Freiburg.

Each of this year's prizes carries a stipend amounting to $196,000, which the Karolinska officials said all three laureates will share equally.

Last year's winner of the medicine prize was American geneticist Barbara McClintock of Cold Spring Harbor Laboratory in New York.

The 1984 Nobel series began Thursday with the Swedish Academy of Letters' surprise choice for the literature prize of Jaroslav Seifert, an ailing 83-year-old poet little known outside his native Czechoslovakia.

It ends Thursday with the announcement of the winner of the Alfred Nobel Memorial Prize in Economics, established by the Riksbank, Sweden's central bank, in memory of the Swedish discoverer of dynamite whose foundation set up the other five prizes.

When he died on Dec. 10, 1896, Nobel left instructions for his vast fortune to be invested. The proceeds were to finance annual awards to people or organizations judged as having done the most for mankind during the preceding year. The first prizes were awarded in 1901.

Builder Must Pay

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. (AP) — The manufacturer and the owner of a catamaran that flipped over in a sudden thunderstorm must pay $360,000 to the family of a girl who was killed by a shark after the capsizing, a jury has ruled.

The girl, Christine Wapniarski; the manufacturer, North American Catamaran Racing Association of Carpinteria, Calif.; and the sailboat's owner, Daniel Perrin, shared responsibility for the accident, the jury ruled Saturday.

Three friends aboard the boat with Miss Wapniarski, 19, survived the 1981 accident.

Boardwalk Fire Damages Stores

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — A "suspicious" fire today raced through a stretch of stores along the famed Boardwalk in this seaside resort, causing more than $2 million in damage, authorities said.

Two firefighters were injured in the blaze, which raged just a block from three casino hotels.

The fire was considered "definitely suspicious" and suspects were being sought, said Chief Fire Inspector Joseph Gaukler.

A police dispatcher had said the fire began at about 12:45 a.m. in a trash bin underneath the wooden walkway, but fire Battalion Chief William Mall said later that investigators were not sure the fire began in the bin.

The blaze raced through a block of stores, eventually engulfing eight, officials said. It was contained about four hours after it broke out, said fire Capt. Mike Skey, but firefighters were standing by to be sure the flames didn't erupt again.

One of the damaged structures was Fralinger's Original Salt-Water Taffy store, a renowned candy maker.

"Fralinger's was completely destroyed," said Skey, who said early damage estimates put the total losses at more than $2 million. The Boardwalk itself sustained minor surface damage, he said.

As all available city fire units were summoned to fight the blaze, fire companies from five neighboring communities were called in to handle other city emergencies, said police.

A spokeswoman for the Atlantic City Medical Center said both of the injured firemen were treated for smoke inhalation and released.

The fire occurred just a block from Bally's Park Place, the Sands Hotel & Casino and the Claridge Hotel and Casino.

Josephine Causes Death

NEW YORK (AP) — Hurricane Josephine was hundreds of miles offshore and moving slowly away from land today after it stalled off the coast, causing minor flooding and causing one death.

A man who fell off a boat in rough waters of the North River in Scituate, Mass., died Sunday, officials said. No other injuries were reported.

The storm, packing winds of 85 mph and pushing gales outward in a 300-mile ring, pushed tides 2 to 4 feet above normal and flooded roads in eastern Long Island and New Jersey before turning to the southeast Sunday night. It had stalled about 225 miles southeast of Atlantic City, N.J., around noon.

At 6 a.m. today, the Atlantic season's third hurricane was centered near latitude 36.5 north, longitude 66.5 west, or about 525 miles east of Norfolk, Va., the National Weather Service said.

The storm was moving to the east-northeast at about 15 mph and was expected to accelerate that movement during the day, the weather service said.

Gale warnings remained in effect today from Manasquan, N.J., to Cape Cod, Mass.

Josephine brought rain to Cape Cod and gusts of 40 mph to 45 mph on Sunday, said Tom Degregorio of the weather service in Boston.

George Boone, 38, of Wrentham, Mass., died Sunday morning after falling into the North River, officials said.

"He fell over because it was so rough," said Coast Guard Petty Officer Chris Van der Wolk. He said the winds were caused by the difference between a high pressure system northwest of the area and the low pressure of Josephine to the south.

In New York, the Coast Guard kept extra people on duty along the northeast coast, Lt. j.g. Lance Benton said.

Fog To Blame?

ERIE, Pa. (AP) — Fog may have caused a chartered jet carrying a college football team to roll off a runway upon landing and get stuck in mud, an investigator says.

No one was injured when the DC-9, carrying five crew members and 71 passengers, including the Youngstown State University football team, rolled off the runway before dawn Sunday at Erie International Airport.

"Primarily the weather conditions caused it based on the dispatching information that we have," said Stephan Corrie of the National Transportation Safety Board.

Tigers Capture 1984 World Series

Gibson, Trammell Power Detroit Past San Diego

DETROIT — The Detroit Tigers and their fans no longer have to worry about folding in 1984.

"The Detroit

Tigers have proved we are world champions from start to finish," Kirk Gibson, their slug-ging right fielder said. "After our 35-5 start, it seemed like everybody wanted us to blow the lead. But we never wilted under the pressure.

"Then everybody thought we would lose the playoffs, but we didn't.

"Then we got to the World Series and we won."

They did it with home runs from Gibson and Lance Parrish, power hitters whose bats had lain dormant through the first four games.

The Tigers did it against a San Diego bullpen which had muffled them through the first four games.

And they did it with an electricity which had been missing from the first four games.

"Today, I thought we played like we normally play," said Tigers Manager Sparky Anderson, who had complained even after three previous homer-powered victories that they weren't swinging the big bat. "I was hoping we'd start showing some firepower, and we did."

On a moody, clammy Sunday afternoon in downtown Detroit, the Tigers' sluggers pounded the Padres, California's laid-back newcomers to the World Series, all around their 72-year-old ballpark for an 8-4 victory.

And as night claimed Michigan Avenue, hard by the stadium, giving anonymity to thousands of fans who would soon celebrate in zealous fashion, the San Diego firemen who had performed so heroically in one losing cause after another finally threw gasoline on the Tigers' fire-power.

Gibson hit a two-run homer off

THE DAILY REFLECTOR

MONDAY AFTERNOON, OCTOBER 15

Mark Thurmond, the first and last starter the Padres would employ in the five-game series.

By the fourth inning, San Diego had tied the score. A momentary lapse in the field gave the Tigers a run in the fifth. But two innings later, the Padres, miracle workers in the National League playoffs, were still very much alive, trailing only by that slender run.

Then their manager, Dick Williams, turned to a strategy almost as old as the sport itself. He pulled his left-handed pitcher and put in a right-hander to face Parrish, a right-handed hitter.

It was Rich Gossage, who had signed a million-dollar free-agent contract at the start of the year and had paid dividends with 25 saves and 10 wins — who had worked seven World Series games encompassing 12 innings (one of each on Saturday) and had not allowed a run.

His first pitch to Parrish was a strike. His second one landed in the left-field seats. It was Detroit's fifth run. Although it won't officially be listed as the game-winning hit, it was the deciding run.

One inning later, after Kurt Bevacqua of the Padres had joined Reggie Jackson as a designated hitter with two home runs in one World Series, the Tiger lead was 5-4. Detroit had two runners on and Gibson up again.

Williams sent out the signal from the dugout: walk him. Suddenly he was waved to the mound. "I'd rather pitch to him," the Goose told his boss. "I can get him."

Williams acquiesced. His pitcher, he said later, had seen Gibson more

Jeers Turn Into Cheers

DETROIT (AP) — Detroit slugger Kirk Gibson and Tiger Manager Sparky Anderson both feel vindicated.

It was only a year ago that Tiger Stadium fans were booing Gibson because he was struggling both on and off the field.

For Anderson, it sweet proof that his championship seasons in Cincinnati were no fluke.

Gibson, a swift right fielder who plays with as much emotion as talent, belted two homers and drove in five runs Sunday to help the Tigers win the World Series with an 8-4 victory over the San Diego Padres in the fifth game.

Gibson silenced most of his critics by hitting .282 with 27 homers and stealing 20 bases as the Tigers won 104 games this season. He won over the rest of his critics with his World Series performance.

"After the second homer, I crossed the plate and pushed my hands in the air," Gibson said. "When I went back out to right field, people were standing and cheering. I feel very fortunate now. I'm just lucky to have come so far."

While the celebration continued in the Detroit dressing room, Anderson sat in the quiet of his office and explained why this World Series victory was so special.

Anderson said he never got the credit he deserved for building the great Cincinnati teams he managed in the National League during the 1970s.

"They called that a 'push button' team," Anderson said. "They said I inherited a team full of stars. I don't know how they could say that, but they did."

"I never felt the coaches got the credit they deserved for building those teams. But, everybody knows that this team was put together piece by piece with a great deal of

Oilers Remain Winless, Pittsburgh Tops 49ers

By The Associated Press

The Houston Oilers are still looking for a victory, thanks to the Miami Dolphins. No thanks to the Pittsburgh Steelers, the San Francisco 49ers are first-time losers.

"Super Bowl victories are great, but I've never been associated with a greater victory than this one," Pittsburgh Coach Chuck Noll said after his team's 20-17 triumph Sunday over the previously undefeated 49ers.

That result left the NFL with only one unbeaten team, the Miami Dolphins, 7-0 after a 28-10 thumping of the hapless Oilers, who lost their seventh straight.

"This was a tougher loss than the others because we played very, very hard," Houston Coach Hugh Campbell said. "We tackled well, blocked well and executed well. We just played a team that was better than us ... and I think that's an understatement."

In other NFL action, it was Washington 34, Dallas 14; Seattle 31, Buffalo 28; Los Angeles Raiders 23, Minnesota 20; New York Giants 19, Atlanta 7; Philadelphia 16, Indianapolis 7; New York Jets 24, Cleveland Browns 20; Los Angeles Rams 28, New Orleans 10; St. Louis 38, Chicago 21; Detroit 13, Tampa Bay 7 in overtime; Kansas City 31, San Diego 13 and New England 20, Cincinnati 14.

In tonight's action, Green Bay visits Denver.

The key play for the Steelers was an interception and return of 43 yards by linebacker Bryan Hinkle in the final minutes. That set up a 21-yard field goal by Gary Anderson with 1:42 remaining.

San Francisco's Ray Wersching missed a 37-yard field goal attempt with seven seconds left, after the 49ers drove 54 yards on a series of passes by Joe Montana.

"They played just like the Steelers of the mid-70s, they played us very physically," San Francisco guard Randy Cross said.

Dan Marino, the NFL's top passer, exploited Houston's porous secondary for 321 yards and three touchdowns to lead the Dolphins.

Marino, boosting his season totals to 2,074 yards and 20 TDs, completed 25 of 32 passes, including scoring strikes of 27 yards to Mark Clayton;

Waltrip Takes Holly Farms

NORTH WILKESBORO, N.C. (AP) — Darrell Waltrip did it again at the North Wilkesboro Speedway.

The Franklin, Tenn., native overcame an early spin and dodged potential disaster Sunday to win his fourth consecutive Holly Farms 400, edging Harry Gant by two car lengths.

Waltrip, who led the final 132 laps of the 400-lap race, said his No. 11 Chevrolet was "as good a car as I've ever had here."

It was Waltrip's sixth victory in the past seven races the ½-mile oval, which is just a stone's throw from the shop of his car owner, Junior Johnson, in nearby Ingles Hollow.

But Waltrip still doesn't think he's a cinch to win here.

"You never feel comfortable. You're never far enough ahead and you're never not worried," Waltrip said after winning for the seventh time on the Grand National circuit this year and taking home $38,900.

Waltrip, who has now won 64 races in his NASCAR career, had reason to feel uncomfortable early following an accident on the 78th lap in which he was hit by rookie Jeff Hooker. But Waltrip managed to keep the car moving and took control for the victory.

"I was lucky I didn't get hit by anybody else," said Waltrip, who started on the pole. "That would have been a lot to overcome. I had to keep from getting lapped and chase the leaders down."

"That was no easy task," he said. "It took a couple hundred laps for it to happen."

Waltrip said just before the wreck his car "had gotten a little loose."

"I was concerned about getting a chassis adjustment. I needed a caution flag, but I didn't need to cause one," he said.

Gant never led the race but gained ground in his effort to capture the Winston Cup championship.

"We chipped away today, but next week we might not chip away at the points," Gant said. "You can't judge the points until the last race of the season."

Gant never led but gained 27 points on Winston Cup leader Terry Labonte, who finished ninth, one lap behind the leaders. Labonte leads Gant by 59 points with three races left.

The race, held before a crowd of 24,000, was originally scheduled for Sept. 30, but rains forced postponement.

Waltrip traded the lead with Bonnett, his Junior Johnson teammate, through the first 77 laps. Running second to Bonnett on lap 78, Waltrip was hit on the back straightaway by Hooker. Waltrip, the 1981 and 1982 Winston Cup champion, recovered after spinning on the apron and stayed on the same lap with the leaders.

Waltrip, the winningest driver on the circuit this year with $602,808, worked his way back to the front, finally taking the lead from Allison on lap 269 and holding it for the remainder. He led a total of 167 laps and averaged 90.259 mph.

Rusty Wallace finished fifth, followed by Ricky Rudd and Dale Earnhardt, all on the lead lap.

Seven-time Winston Cup champion Richard Petty finished 18th. He lost seven laps early when he collided with Hooker.

There were seven caution flags for 35 laps.

Obviously Tulsa's scouting corps did their homework on the East Carolina Pirates.

Coming into Saturday night's game on the Golden Hurricane home field, the Tulsa passing attack was almost non-existent. They were passing for only 116 yards per game.

Saturday night against the Pirates, Tulsa completed 11 of 23 passes for 273 yards and three touchdowns, all three of them bombs.

It is a continued indictment of the pass defense of the Pirates — lay it to the secondary or the underneath coverage or the pass rush.

Certainly it can be said that East Carolina's defensive unit is young. There are few seniors present on the team. But there is probably no area of the Pirate game that needs more work than does the pass defense.

This may begin to sound like a broken record, because it's not just in the past five years that this has happened.

We harken again to the fact that the Pirates have not had an outstanding pass defense since the days of Sonny Randle — a passing coach. Pat Dye, who replaced Randle, saw the slippage begin, explaining that when you don't see the pass in practice, you don't learn how to protect against it. With Dye's wishbone team and an almost total ground attack, that was true — to some extent. Still the scout team should have provided enough of a passing attack to allow the defense to show some improvement.

Last year, toward the end of the season, the Pirates did improve in some areas of the pass defense, but now they are perhaps more vulnerable than ever before.

It is something that Ed Emory and his staff must work on very hard in the off-season to beef up that area before 1985.

And hasn't this been a crazy season so far?

Just look at North Carolina. Quick now, which Division I-A team in the state has the best record?

And who would believe that the answer to that one is Wake Forest. In fact, this week the Deacons are the only team with a winning record, 4-2 at this stage.

N.C. State is only break-even, having won three and lost three. Duke is 1-4, as are the Tar Heels of North Carolina. The last time the Heels were 1-4 was in 1969 when Bill Dole's third team posted a 5-5 record.

It would appear that the 30-95 rule of the NCAA is the reason for what's occurring across the nation. Recruiting now plays an even bigger role. Where teams like Ohio State, Alabama, Notre Dame, Texas, Oklahoma and the like could go out and give scholarships to 150 or more players, that practice has ended. Those coaches must be more selective and more are slipping through the net to wind up at the East Carolinas and Wake Forests.

The unfortunate part of it all is that it just increases the number of cheaters. Getting that best player now means so much more, and the likelihood of schools offering extra inducement grows all the time.

Injuries 'Slow' Trammell

By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer

DETROIT — Alan Trammell is an old fashioned guy, a family man who married his high school sweetheart on his birthday and named his first child after teammate Lance Parrish.

So it was only natural that the shortstop of the Detroit Tigers dressed up in a costume last Halloween. The problem, though, is that he tried to make his portrayal of Frankenstein a little too realistic.

"My brother-in-law had worn the outfit at a party the night before," Trammell said, sounding a little rueful about the whole thing. "The next day, I wore it. I was just showing it to a neighbor. I had on Army boots, with wooden blocks nailed to the bottom to make me taller — you know, like Frankenstein."

"One of the blocks fell off. I lost my balance and fell."

When he landed, Trammell had torn cartilage in his left knee, no way for Frankenstein or the American League's All-Star shortstop to spend so traditional a holiday. He underwent arthroscopic surgery last November.

Doctors sewed up the cartilage and sent him back to shortstop. But the knee continued aching all summer, and then to add to his woes, Trammell suffered nerve damage in his right shoulder. That put him on the disabled list in the middle of the Tigers' wire-to-wire run to the American League pennant.

He was elected the American League's starting All-Star shortstop but missed the game because of the shoulder injury. When he came off the disabled list, he was limited at first to duty as Detroit's designated hitter. Five weeks after he was disabled he finally returned to the field, but his throws to first base lacked their old zip, looking like lazy lobs instead of his customary bullets, and his knee continued to ache.

But when there are pennants to be won, you don't sit down unless you must and there was no way Trammell would ask out of Manager Sparky Anderson's lineup. For his part, Anderson wasn't offering any time off for the man he describes as "the best player in baseball."

So Trammell, complete with sore knee and sore arm, played.

"After the (record 35-5) start we had, if we had played poorly in the middle of the season and if we didn't win, we would have been called severe chokers," he said.

He needed no more reason than that to stay in the lineup, his throbbing knee and shoulder notwithstanding.

The Tigers, of course, won their division and won their pennant and then, after splitting the first two games of the World Series with San Diego, returned home last Friday night.

The team physician visited the clubhouse to examine some of the club's walking wounded and Trammell was one of his customers. The diagnosis was just what the shortstop thought it would be — torn cartilage and more surgery for the knee and maybe some repair work for the shoulder as well.

Given that grim outlook for his winter, Trammell made the most of his autumn opportunity.

He drilled two home runs the next day, accounting for all of Detroit's runs in the pivotal fourth-game victory over the Padres and finished with nine hits, tying the record for a five-game Series. Even though he was hitless in the last game, he batted .450 with six runs batted in and five runs scored. And that made him the most valuable player in the Series.

"I can't say I ever imagined I would be a World Series MVP," he said. "I realize that I am, but I'm just glad to be a winner. If Alan Trammell didn't do anything in the World Series and the Tigers won, I'd be just as happy."

Padres Stayed Behind Tigers

By BEN WALKER
AP Sports Writer

DETROIT — Tony Gwynn lost the ball in the lights. The San Diego Padres went on to lose the game and the World Series.

"When I hadn't heard anything, I knew he had lost it," second baseman Alan Wiggins said. "There's nothing we could do."

That play, and that assessment, summed up how the entire 1984 Series went for the Padres as they fell in five games to the Detroit Tigers.

The scenario was all-too-familiar for San Diego. The Padres would fall behind, try to catch up, and then watch the game slip through their fingers.

It happened again Sunday against the backdrop of a gray sky at dusk in Tiger Stadium.

After Detroit took a 3-0 lead in the first inning, the Padres scratched back to tie it entering the bottom of the fifth.

Kirk Gibson, one of the fastest players in the major leagues, singled and a pair of one-out walks loaded the bases for the Tigers.

Rusty Kuntz, pinch hitting for John Grubb, stepped in to face Craig Lefferts, the third San Diego pitcher. Kuntz lofted an opposite-field fly ball to short right. It did not look deep enough to score the run.

But there was a problem. Gwynn, in right field, didn't see it.

"I lost it as soon as it got over the stands," he said.

Gwynn was waving his arms, trying to indicate he didn't know where the ball was.

Wiggins was running back and didn't see Gwynn. Wiggins was waiting to hear from his teammate. That call never came.

"I was running back and I saw the ball," Wiggins said. "He didn't call for it. I knew he didn't see it."

The soft fly, and the game, hung in the balance.

"I had to make the catch," Wiggins said. "It's tough for me to make the throw on that play."

Wiggins caught the ball with his back to the infield, and had to spin around to make his throw to the plate. Gibson scored easily.

The sacrifice fly went into the scorebooks as "Sac Fly-Four."

Gibson and third-base coach Alex Grammas had just been talking about that kind of play.

"If I'm in a position to use my speed, I'm going to do it," Gibson said. "I was glad to see Mr. Wiggins catch the ball."

"You have to make the throw right there. That's called aggressive baseball."

Gwynn had watched Wiggins get thrown out at the plate in the first inning, trying to score from third base on a one-out grounder to second.

Gwynn would later see Wiggins make an error on a routine groundball, and watch as pinch-runner Luis Salazar got picked off first base by Willie Hernandez to end the eighth with the Padres trailing 5-4.

And in the bottom of the eighth, Gwynn would see teammate-shortstop Garry Templeton neglect to touch second base on an apparent forceout, helping open the gates to three-run homer by Gibson that made it 8-4.

Yet, as he sat on his locker stool after the final game of the season, Gwynn reflected on what he had seen — and hadn't seen.

"That was the key play in the game," said Gwynn, the leading hitter in the major leagues this season and one of the game's brightest young stars.

"If I catch the ball, maybe he still tries to score, but if he does, I throw him out."

Gwynn leaned back against his locker and smiled, the smile of someone who is able to understand the significance of what he has been involved in.

"That's the most helpless feeling in the world for an outfielder, not knowing where the ball is," Gwynn said. "If I throw him out, we're out of the inning."

And maybe the Padres would have been back in the World Series.

Jarryd Stuns Lendl In Three-Set Win

By The Associated Press

Sweden's Anders Jarryd and Michelle Torres, although on the opposite sides of the globe, found themselves on the winning side on the tennis court after upset victories.

Jarryd stunned Ivan Lendl of Czechoslovakia 6-3, 6-2, 6-4 Sunday to capture the $225,000 Australian Indoor, posting his first major victory on the Volvo Grand Prix circuit.

Torres, who was seeded seventh at the $150,000 Florida Federal Tennis Open, captured the Virginia Slims title with a 6-1, 7-6 victory over Canada's Carling Bassett, the No. 2 seed.

"I'm excited and I can't believe it," the 17-year-old Torres said of her first major title since turning pro last month during the U.S. Open. "It is the best match I have ever played," said Jarryd, who earlier this year captured a $75,000 tournament at Hilversum, the Netherlands.

Jarryd, a member of Sweden's Davis Cup squad, completely outplayed Lendl in the two-hour, two-minute match. It was his first victory over the Czech in six career meetings.

Elsewhere, fifth-seeded Lilian Drescher of Switzerland downed American Shawn Foltz 6-4, 6-3 to win the $195,000 Japan Open, third-seeded Joakim Nystrom of Sweden stopped American Tim Wilkison 6-3, 3-6, 6-4, 6-2 in the final of a $120,000 Volvo Grand Prix event in Basel, Switzerland.

Deacons' Dream Comes True

By TOM FOREMAN Jr.
AP Sports Writer

Foy White expected Wake Forest to play its best game of the season against North Carolina, but it took a scoring pass from the Wake Forest quarterback to open the way to bring that Demon Deacon dream to fruition.

White tossed a 1-yard scoring pass to David Chambers at the start of the fourth period and Stuart Stogner fell on a botched punt return to give Wake Forest a 14-3 victory over North Carolina. It was the first time since 1970 that the Demon Deacons had beaten the Tar Heels in Groves Stadium.

Maryland crushed North Carolina State 44-21, Virginia Tech pinned a 27-0 shutout on Duke and No. 20 Georgia Tech rallied for a 20-20 tie with Virginia. Clemson was off.

Wake Forest failed in three tries in the first half to score. Two Topper Clemons fumbles snuffed out scoring drives and Doug Illing missed a 30-yard field goal late in the first quarter.

"We came in at halftime a little discouraged," White said. "We just went back out in the second half and got the production we needed..."

North Carolina had taken a 3-0 lead on Ken Miller's 31-yard field goal just before halftime, and had a chance to extend that lead. Ethan Horton fumbled at the 2-yard-line, however, and linebacker Tony Scott recovered.

"I think that gave us a breath of energy," White said. "It's good to see our defense stop 'em down on the goal line. It gave them a big lift and I know it gave the offense a big lift."

Coach Al Groh said the victory wasn't pretty, but it was important. "I don't want to call this game a big win in itself, but a big win in what it leads to," Groh said. "I hope our team is anxious about winning another game."

Wake Forest is 4-2 and 2-1 in the ACC, while North Carolina dropped its second straight game in falling to 1-4 in its official league opener.

"We didn't establish a good tempo in the first half," Tar Heel coach

Dick Crum said. "We sure had some things that were there, but we didn't take advantage of them."

Maryland's Rick Badanjek scored three touchdowns on runs of 3, 2 and 2 yards, while the Terrapin defense forced three turnovers in the second quarter which the offense converted into 13 points. In all, Maryland, 3-3 and 2-0, scored 23 points in the period and put the Wolfpack out of reach.

"Offensively, we were almost flawless in the first half," Terrapin coach Bobby Ross said. "I don't think we could have played any better. When we had to play tough defensively, we played very well."

Coach Tom Reed watched the Wolfpack fall to 3-3 and 1-2.

17 yards to Mark Duper and 32 yards to Nat Moore, who tied a club record for career touchdowns.

The 7-0 start is Miami's best since Coach Don Shula's team won seven of its first eight games in 1975, three years after Miami posted a 17-0 record.

Redskins 34, Cowboys 14
Joe Theismann threw three touchdown passes and John Riggins rushed for a personal regular-season high of 165 yards and became only the fifth man in NFL history to rush over 10,000 yards as the Redskins crushed Dallas for their fifth straight victory.

The Washington defense shut down the Cowboys' running game after Tony Dorsett, who was held under 100 yards for the 10th straight game, gained 41 yards on the first series. And they completely frustrated Dallas quarterback Gary Hogeboom, who left in favor of Danny White to start the fourth period.

Riggins went over the 10,000-yard mark with a 7-yard run in the first quarter that put him in the elite company of Walter Payton, Jim Brown, Franco Harris and O.J. Simpson.

Seahawks 31, Bills 28
Dave Krieg and Steve Largent teamed on a 51-yard touchdown pass with 8:07 left to lead the Seahawks over the winless Bills. The Seahawks had to go 88 yards in six plays for their game-winning touchdown on a day when they couldn't hold leads of 17-0 after the first quarter and 24-14 in the third period.

Largent's second TD reception gave him 496 receptions for his NFL career, making him the 12th leading receiver in NFL history.

Raiders 23, Vikings 20
Chris Bahr booted a 20-yard field goal as time expired to give the Raiders a hard-fought victory. The Raiders moved from the Minnesota 36-yard line to the Vikings' 2 on six running plays before Bahr kicked his third field goal of the game.

Los Angeles quarterback Marc Wilson completed 21 of his 37 passes for 268 yards, all but 64 of them in the first half.

Giants 19, Falcons 7
Phil Simms passed for 246 yards and one touchdown and New York's defense staged one goalline stand and set up a TD with a pass interception.

Rob Carpenter scored both New York touchdowns, the first on a 1-yard plunge in the opening period and the other on a 9-yard pass from Simms in the second quarter. Ali Haji-Sheikh kicked field goals of 41 and 34 yards for the Giants.

Eagles 16, Colts 7
Quarterback Ron Jaworski played only the first half but directed a touchdown and two field goal drives that enabled Philadelphia to beat Indianapolis.

Jaworski was forced to leave with back and rib injuries, but still managed to complete 21 of 29 passes for 194 yards and a touchdown.

Jets 24, Browns 20
Freeman McNeil ran for two first-half touchdowns and Tony Paige burst into the end zone from 1 yard out for the game-winner in the fourth quarter as New York recorded its fourth straight road-game victory.

Paige's TD capped an 80-yard drive with 5:39 to go in the game. Cleveland, whose Ozzie Newsome set team records with 14 receptions for 191 yards, had led briefly at 20-17 when Matt Bahr kicked an 18-yard field goal two minutes into the fourth quarter.

Rams 28, New Orleans 10
Eric Dickerson ran for 164 yards and Jeff Kemp threw three touchdown passes as Los Angeles dominated the disorganized Saints.

Saints Coach Bum Phillips alternated quarterbacks Richard Todd and Ken Stabler as well as running backs Earl Campbell and George Rogers, series by series through the first half, and the Saints could muster no offensive spark at all through those first 30 minutes. In the second half, Phillips settled on Stabler, and the Saints began to show more consistency.

St. Louis 38, Chicago 21
Quarterback Neil Lomax hooked up with Roy Green for long gains and also scored a touchdown in the closing minutes to lead St. Louis.

Lomax, whose passes accounted for 270 yards, outdueling Chicago quarterback Jim McMahon even though he was sacked five times by the Bears' top-ranked defense. Otis Anderson scored twice for St. Louis, romping 9 yards on a run and tucking in a 1-yard pass from Lomax.

Lions 13, Buccaneers 7 (OT)
Gary Danielson fired a 37-yard TD pass to receiver Leonard Thompson 4:34 into overtime to lift the Lions over Tampa Bay.

The winning score culminated a four-play, 59-yard drive that was set up when Lions defensive lineman William Gay recovered James Wilder's second fumble on the Detroit 41. Earlier, each team's kicker missed fourth-quarter field goal attempts.

Chiefs 31, Chargers 13
Bill Kenney, moments after one of his passes was intercepted and returned 99 yards for a touchdown by cornerback Gill Byrd early in the second half, tossed a 24-yard scoring strike for the go-ahead TD.

Kenney, who threw for more than 4,000 yards last season but sat out the first six games with an injured thumb, threw for 238 yards in his 1984 debut, adding a 5-yard touchdown toss to Ed Beckman in the fourth period.

Patriots 20, Bengals 14
Quarterback Tony Eason scrambled for touchdown runs of 25 and 13 yards as New England edged Cincinnati for the Patriots' fourth come-from-behind victory this season.

Dominated early when rookie Boomer Esiason's two touchdown passes boosted Cincinnati to a 14-3 halftime lead, the Patriots surged ahead with 3:52 gone in the fourth quarter on Eason's 25-yard run, his fourth rushing touchdown of the season.

MGM Stars Of Yesteryear Team Again

By BOB THOMAS
Associated Press Writer
LOS ANGELES (AP) — For June Allyson and Van Johnson, who starred together in a number of movies in the 1940s, reunions are now a periodic thing. But to have Angela Lansbury join them is the icing on the cake.
This trio of MGM emigres recently worked on a chapter of Miss Lansbury's new series for CBS, "Murder, She Wrote." The two guest stars were playing a pair of scientists involved in a murder mystery which Miss Lansbury as Jessica Fletcher would ultimately solve.
The segment, called "Hit, Run and Homicide," will air sometime in December.

"Of course I made pictures with both Van and June," Miss Lansbury said, "but the only time we all appeared together was in something called 'Remains to Be Seen' (1953). Dreadful movie. I don't think I ever saw it."
"The only thing I can remember was coming through a bookcase that swung open. I was wearing a black dress. Mercifully, I have forgotten everything else. Shortly afterward I won my passport to freedom from MGM, and 'Remains to Be Seen' may have had something to do with that."

Miss Allyson and Johnson appeared in a "Love Boat" together six years ago, and producers often seek to reunite the lovebirds of World War II and the postwar years. Their fresh, blonde looks and buoyant personalities made them stars in 1944 with "Two Girls and a Sailor," and they continued the winning match in such films as "High Barbaree," "The Secret Heart," "Too Young to Kiss," "The Bride Goes Wild" and the unmentionable "Remains to Be Seen."

They both look great. Van Johnson should be the subject of some kind of clinical study, so youthful does he remain.

"I'll be 69 on my next birthday (Aug. 25)," he said. "This year marks my 50th anniversary in show business — I started in 1934. How do I do it? It's all up here (tapping the side of his head). If you have the right attitude, you'll stay young."
Johnson lives in New York and spends much of the year starring in plays and musicals throughout the United States.

Miss Allyson cites her mother's advice when discussing how old she is: "A lady never tells her age." But no matter. She remains a blond beauty with sparkling eyes and that distinctive, cracked voice.
"I came to MGM from Broadway first," Johnson recalled.

Commercials During Sporting Events Are Tricky

By FRED ROTHENBERG
AP Television Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — Philadelphia pitcher Steve Carlton is a television producer's nightmare. He runs to the mound, fires his warm-up pitches and glowers at the umpire to play ball — before the commercial is over.
Sometimes, the intimidation works. "You just have to pray he doesn't give up a home run on the first pitch," said Mike Weisman, executive producer of NBC's World Series coverage.

The job of a sports producer is to integrate into the game action such things as story lines, replays and interviews. Another responsibility is to get in the allotted commercials — without interfering with the flow of the game and without missing any of the action.

For the viewers, not showing a home run or a touchdown as it happens may be most noticeable this month with the baseball playoffs, World Series and "Monday Night Football" in prime time. "Commercials from a creative standpoint are frustrating," said Weisman. "But they do pay for my salary."
They also help pay the players, teams and leagues. That's why the players — Carlton's resistance aside — are becoming more savvy about TV, and why the sports themselves try to cooperate on commercial placements.

Weisman said he usually reminds pitching coaches beforehand that the game is on national TV and suggests that their pitchers could rest a little longer in the dugout between innings.
Weisman recalled how one hitter, formerly with the New York Yankees, did a taped interview that was too long to air between batters. "He said not to worry, to cue it up before his second time at bat. So we did, and he called time out and went back to the dugout for the pine tar rag," Weisman said.

In football, someone in the broadcast booth signals to the referee when the beer or spark plug ad has finished plugging. In baseball, the umpires now keep a two-minute clock on the between-innings proceedings.
"The fact is without commercials, the events wouldn't be on the air," said Dennis Lewin, the veteran ABC Sports producer. "We have to balance different needs. The client is important, but the last thing I want to do is be obtrusive to the sporting event."
The booth-to-field communication system is not foolproof. At the Orange Bowl game last New Year's night, NBC missed a key play when the official, apparently caught up in the excitement of the game, permitted play to resume prematurely. "All we could do was break into a cold sweat," said Weisman.
Baseball, with its half-inning changeovers, seems to have been invented by Madison Avenue. These natural breaks, along with an on-the-mound pitching change or two, make it relatively easy to fill a baseball broadcast's commercial load. Any commercials left over — when both starting pitchers hurl complete games, for example — would be made up in the post-game wrapup.

"Baseball and tennis are two of the easier sports for getting in a specific number of commercials," said Lewin, who produced ABC's National League playoffs two weeks ago. "You know your worst scenario in baseball; you don't know your worst scenario in football."
The National Football League restricts commercials, for the most part, to timeouts and when the teams change possession. This creates a problem in some games.
"There's a big difference between a two-minute drive and a 10-minute drive," said Lewin, who produced "Monday Night Football" for many years. "If the teams are eating up the clock with long drives, you can get in desperate shape with your commercials."

Actor Remains Critical

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Fans flooded a hospital switchboard with calls and sent flowers to actor Jon-Erik Hexum, the CBS-TV "Cover-Up" star who remained unconscious three days after accidentally shooting himself with a blank, officials said.
"People want to know how he's doing. The calls have been in the hundreds. He must be very popular," nursing supervisor Rita Gainey at Beverly Hills Medical Center said Sunday night.
Hexum, 26, remained in critical condition, she said Sunday. He underwent a five-hour operation Saturday and remained in intensive care, she said.

He was to be kept sedated until swelling subsided around his right temple, said Vince Panettiere, a publicist for 20th Century-Fox Studios.
Panettiere said the force of the blank charge fired at close range fractured the skull bone but did not penetrate it.

Police termed it an accidental shooting.
Hexum was alone on a sound stage at Fox when he shot himself Friday afternoon, and apparently no one saw the accident, said studio publicist Chuck Panama.
Hexum co-stars in "Cover-Up" with Jennifer O'Neill. She accidentally shot herself in the stomach two years ago in New York with an unlicensed .38-caliber gun at her home.

AMA Taking Risk On Medicare Freeze

By BETTY ANNE WILLIAMS

Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The American Medical Association took a public relations gamble last spring when it endorsed a one-year freeze on all doctors' fees to show it was serious about holding down health costs.

But just six months later, the association is taking a possibly greater risk by opposing in court a congressionally-mandated freeze on the Medicare payments to physicians.

It gives ammunition to skeptics who already think doctors charge too much. For instance, 65 percent of those surveyed by the American Association of Retired Persons in 1983 said excessive charges by physicians contributed greatly to health care cost increases. In addition, 72 percent said they would be willing to limit what health service providers could charge for their services.

The AMA views the mandatory freeze — which took effect Oct. 1 but is retroactive to July 1 — as unfair and claims Congress doesn't have the legal authority to impose such a measure because it only covers one federal program, albeit the largest one.

Congressional leaders describe the freeze as the latest in a series of attempts to hold down Medicare costs, this time passing on some of the burden to physicians instead of hospitals, patients or taxpayers whose steadily rising payroll tax deductions help finance Medicare.

Medicare beneficiaries probably won't see much difference in their expenses because of the freeze. It is designed to help hold down spending while Congress and the president decide to do about Medicare's impending bankruptcy, expected after 1990.

The freeze plan includes a "participating physicians" program which rewards doctors who agree to accept Medicare-set reimbursement rates as full payment for their services.

Such a physician would be agreeing not to charge the patient extra, even though Medicare rates are frequently lower than a physician's usual fee.

The participating physicians program is connected with Medicare's Part B insurance where beneficiaries pay a monthly premium in exchange for coverage of doctors' bills. Medicare pays 80 percent of what it deems the "reasonable" charge for a service and the patients pay the remaining 20 percent. With physicians who don't accept Medicare rates, patients must pay the extra costs.

The House Aging Committee has estimated that Medicare patients were charged $5.6 billion more than Medicare considered reasonable during 1983. The fee freeze is supposed to save more than $2 billion over three years.

The participating physicians program holds out the threat of monetary punishment (civil fines of up to $2,000 and suspension from Medicare) for doctors who refuse to accept the Medicare rates and ignore the fee freeze. All doctors are covered by the freeze, whether or not they accept the rates.

"We believe it is an unconstitutional act," said Dr. Joseph F. Boyle, president of the AMA, in a telephone interview from Los Angeles. "It does not provide for equal protection under the law. It exceeds the authority Congress has and interferes with the right to contract for services."

"The response among physicians has been overwhelmingly a sense of outrage that the Congress would act in this fashion," he added.

Dr. James Sammons, executive director of the AMA, said some doctors might be forced out of business, denying Medicare patients the physicians of their choice, if the cost-cutting plan is allowed to proceed.

Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., chairman of the Finance Committee, calls the participating physicians program one of Congress' attempts at balancing the spending reductions in Medicare, among hospitals, physicians and beneficiaries.

Congress had been wary of extending a cost-cutting program to doctors for fear of triggering higher fees for elderly Medicare beneficiaries, Dole said.

He argued that the plan in final form isn't exactly what either House or Senate members wanted. "The result was a compromise which produces the savings so essential to our efforts to reduce the federal deficit, and, I believe, addresses the concerns of both the physician community and this nation's elderly."

The AMA's suit was filed in U.S. District Court in Indianapolis on Sept. 21, 1984. It sought an injunction delaying the fee freeze and the participating physicians' program because of problems in relaying information doctors needed to decide whether to participate. A federal judge refused to grant the injunction.

Judith Brown of the Health Care Financing Administration, which operates Medicare, said early responses show that most of the 500,000 eligible physicians wouldn't become participating physicians. As of Sept. 26, 1984, four days before the deadline, 65,300 doctors had joined the participating physicians program. There are about 450,000 medical doctors and 15,000 to 20,000 doctors of osteopathy participating in Medicare. The rest are mostly podiatrists, optometrists and some chiropractors.

Incentives making it difficult for a doctor to say "no" to participation include:

—Listing in a directory available to Medicare beneficiaries through a toll free telephone number.

—Use of a streamlined billing system making it easier for them to collect from Medicare than for non-participating physicians.

—Identification which can be displayed in the doctor's office showing participation in the program.

—More reimbursement from Medicare than non-participants will get once the freeze ends.

Play Generates Discussion On Suicide and Epilepsy

By TARA BRADLEY-STECK

Associated Press Writer

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Suicidal adolescents often share the feelings described in a Pulitzer prize-winning play about an epileptic woman who kills herself, according to psychiatrists who joined 450 theater-goers viewing the drama.

Seeing "night Mother," by Marsha Norman, "would only catalyze the idea among a group of adolescents who were depressed and thinking about it anyway," said Dr. Joaquin Puig-Antich, a professor of psychiatry at the University of Pittsburgh School of Medicine.

"I would suggest advising parents who bring adolescents to talk to them afterward," said Puig-Antich, one of about 15 psychiatrists, therapists and clinicians who participated in a panel discussion after the play Sunday.

Their talk at the Pittsburgh Public Theater ranged from profiles of potential suicides to criticism of current medical treatment for epileptics and of societal attitudes toward the victims.

Jessie Cates is an epileptic in her late 30s who has led a hermit-like existence, afraid to meet people for fear she will have a seizure. She is determined to kill herself, after having considered the act for 10 years, because she wants some control over a life that has been filled with loneliness and disappointments.

"We're all afraid to die, Mama," she says. "I'm not."

"You can see exactly the same thing in adolescents, even more dramatically," said Puig-Antich.

"We only see the ones who, because they aren't completely certain, don't succeed. But I wouldn't be surprised if there is a group of adolescents that have such an urge to do it that there are no ambivalences," he said.

The play opens as Jessie calmly tells her mother, Thelma Cates, that she is going to shoot herself.

But Dr. Duane Spiker said that in most cases, suicide is not a decision made by a rational mind.

"It's unrealistic to be so logical," said Spiker, an associate professor of psychiatry at the University of Pittsburgh School of Medicine. "The play gives a false impression that suicide is a rational act. It's rare that a person could be so chronically miserable and so rational."

Suicide victims "almost always have some identifiable psychiatric illness which is treatable, and it's tragic that these people die," he said.

Jessie's decision comes during a year in which she has experienced no seizures. But rather than becoming happier and more contented, she becomes more determined to kill herself.

BILLY CARTER — The brother of former President Jimmy Carter and his family have "never been happier," five years after Billy Carter underwent treatment for alcoholism, his wife says. Carter and his wife entered a family-oriented treatment program in Long Beach, Calif., in 1979. Mrs. Carter said in an appearance as part of the National Alcohol Awareness Month. (AP Laserphoto)

Edmisten Revs Up Engines For Final Campaign Push

RUFUS EDMISTEN

By MARY ANNE RHYNE
Associated Press Writer

HICKORY, N.C. (AP) — The droning airplane engines force Attorney General Rufus Edmisten and his brother to shout on board as they debate how to harness public support in the home stretch of the gubernatorial campaign.

Edmisten, a Democrat, will face Republican Congressman Jim Martin in the Nov. 6 gubernatorial election. Martin wants to become North Carolina's second Republican governor this century.

Recent polls showed Edmisten leading Martin by as much as 13 percentage points, but a Martin poll showed Edmisten ahead only five points. Edmisten is spending every available minute campaigning. President Reagan's popularity is raising election hopes among Republicans, who are outregistered almost 3-to-1 in North Carolina.

Edmisten, his leather briefcase at his side, draws on his pipe and listens as older brother Dave outlines campaign decisions that must be made before they arrive in Hickory.

More than 500 people, including Edmisten's parents, are waiting.

Edmisten meets privately with campaign organizers to discuss fund raising. He said he's sure he won't have the money to buy all the advertising he would like and he questions the value of commercials.

"I don't think TV will win it for me," he said. "The hard work I've done will do it for me."

Edmisten, 43, is emphasizing his 10-year record as attorney general and his work within the Democratic Party.

The Boone native attended the University of North Carolina and then George Washington University Law School. He went to class at night and worked during the day for former Sen. Sam Ervin, a Morganton Democrat.

He was legal counsel to Ervin's Watergate Committee, whose work led to the resignation of former President Richard Nixon.

The state Democratic Party's Executive Committee selected Edmisten from a field of seven candidates in 1974 to complete the remaining two years of Attorney General Robert Morgan's term. Morgan left office to run for the U.S. Senate.

Edmisten has been re-elected every four years since then.

In Hickory, Edmisten goes to a private room to eat steak with relatives while those who paid $50 apiece eat ribs and barbecue and listen to country music.

Edmisten's father, Walter, has brought contributions from Watauga County. His mother, Nell, recounts the latest political news in the area.

The Edmisten family helps but the Democrat acknowledges that he has become more independent since his top adviser, Charlie Smith, died in March.

Smith was returning to Raleigh after a strategy session in Asheville when the plane he was in crashed in Henderson County.

The Hickory crowd gathers around the stage later for Edmisten's speech.

"This will be one of the toughest elections I have ever had in my life," he said. "It might get down to the hair of my chin, chin, chin."

"If you elect the other fella ... this state stands still," he warned.

Edmisten said Martin is a tough opponent but he believes the Republican's success rides on Reagan's coattails. He said he does not think Martin can win the confidence of voters in one year.

"He is an excellent candidate," Edmisten said. "He is sharp, smart, articulate, a likeable person."

But Edmisten criticized Martin for failing to discuss his voting record in Congress.

"It (his record) wouldn't fit in with mainstream North Carolina," Edmisten said. "He's trying to give the impression that he's a moderate and his voting record is not that way at all."

Edmisten is relying on his western North Carolina roots and appeal to rural eastern North Carolina residents to boost votes in those areas, leaving the Piedmont as a major battleground.

The race has not occupied center stage in the 1984 elections with the presidential race and Democratic Gov. Jim Hunt trying to unseat Republican Sen. Jesse Helms.

"That's why our quiet organizational work paid off during the primary and will pay off during the general election," Edmisten said. "It will boil down to organization and our proven ability to get out the vote."

RALEIGH (AP) — Although liberal churchmen may refrain from advising their congregations how to vote, they have expressed concern from the pulpit about the rise of the religious New Right.

"We've not only fumbled the ball, but it's been stolen right out of our hands and they're running down the field with it," said the Rev. Roger Jackle of Kirk of Kildaire Presbyterian Church in Cary. "We ought to feel embarrassed."

Fundamentalist ministers urge congregants to register and vote for conservative candidates, but ministers of mainstream churches say they can't risk alienating political liberals or conservatives who sit side-by-side at their services.

"I would hope everybody votes according to their conscience and also that the Christian faith informs us on the issues," said the Rev.

Louis C. Melcher Jr. of the Church of the Good Shepherd, an Episcopal parish in Raleigh.

Rabbi Martin P. Beinfeld Jr. of Temple Beth Or in Raleigh, in his Rosh Hashana sermon, described the differences he perceived between liberal and fundamentalist religions.

"A liberal religion, a term not to be confused with political labels, is one which accepts the existence of more than its own version of religious truth," Beinfeld said. "It seeks to work cooperatively for the common good. Because it accepts a basic sense of human self-worth, it therefore has a particular concern for those who are suffering and disadvantaged and seeks to ameliorate their condition."

"A conservative religion, like most Protestant fundamentalists and the Catholicism practiced by the archbishop of New York and the cardinal of Philadelphia, is one which claims sole and complete truth," Beinfeld said. "It tends to be primarily concerned with personal salvation, and its concern with others is based upon a need to save them from themselves, from their erroneous beliefs and sinful ways."

On a recent Sunday, Jackie told his congregation that too many politicians "oversimplify the depth of meaning of the Bible." After the services, he said Christians need more education about their religion so they can help work for social and political change.

But some members of mainstream churches complain they're not getting enough leadership from the clergy in addressing social concerns.

"I've been complaining for a long time that the leadership isn't there," said Catherine Watson, a Methodist laywoman from Raleigh. "I want to hear from the pulpit what Jesus did and what we can be doing."

Many ministers are turning to the basics — proclaiming the gospel and hoping the message gets through.

"If I were pastoring today, I would do all I could to stem the tide of the move to the right," said the Rev. W.W. Finlator, former minister of Pullen Memorial Baptist Church in Raleigh. "The more that happens, the more we need to proclaim the radical roots of the Gospel."

Coast Sees High Tides

KITTY HAWK, N.C. (AP) — High tides and 12-foot waves brought on by winds from Hurricane Josephine continued along the Outer Banks today, with water crossing N.C. 12 north of Pea Island and north of Rodanthe, the National Weather Service reported.

Lowland flooding was expected to be a problem until 2 p.m., with high tide at 11:37 a.m. Forecasters said the highway might be closed if conditions worsened.

Traffic was blocked for several hours by the unusually high tides Sunday.

"We were a little surprised by the force of the tide," Dare County Sheriff Bert Austin said. "We had no warning of anything unusual."

Minor damage was reported to structures along the 90-mile barrier islands.

Martin Eyes Populous 9th District To Gain Strength

By MARY ANNE RHYNE
Associated Press Writer

HARRISBURG, N.C. (AP) — Congressman Jim Martin grabs a cup of coffee, adjusts his Charlotte Motor Speedway cap and starts shaking hands with the fans waiting to buy tickets to the Miller High Life 500 stock car race.

The Republican is well known to local residents because he has represented them for 12 years in Congress.

But Martin, 48, is running for governor this year and he must build his lead over Democrat Rufus Edmisten in the populous 9th Congressional District around Charlotte as well as expand his support statewide.

"Republicans do well in the Piedmont and mountains," Martin said. "We're trailing in the East but not disastrously... We've got to do well in the Piedmont but that's where the strongest organization is."

Among the other celebrities attending the race is President Reagan's daughter, Maureen, an avid race fan. Martin joins her just long enough to watch the start of the race before he moves on to greet spectators.

He also stops to chat with some of the stock car drivers. Racing king Richard Petty's car carries a bumper sticker for Martin.

Reagan's almost 2-to-1 lead over Democrat Walter Mondale in the state has Martin encouraged that conservative voters will split their tickets and consider voting for a GOP governor.

He would be the second Republican governor this century. The first, Jim Holshouser, was elected in 1972.

"I won't get all the president's votes and I won't get all of Senator (Jesse) Helms' votes," Martin said. "The president will bring out people who otherwise would not vote at all."

North Carolina's voter registration is overwhelmingly Democratic, forcing Martin to seek support across party lines. He said that's been easy this year because of "a lot of bad will" among Democrats.

Martin said he worked to organize Republicans before the May 8 primary in which he defeated Ruby Hooper of Morganton. He said that was not as easy as it might seem because some conservatives were not satisfied with Martin.

After the Democratic runoff June 5, he moved to enlist disappointed Democrats. He said he has more than 220 Democratic campaign leaders on his side now, something he said is unprecedented.

He believes he's had the most success in attracting supporters of Lt. Gov. Jimmy Green, former Commerce Secretary D.M. "Lauch" Faircloth and former Charlotte Mayor Eddie Knox.

Recent polls have shown him trailing Edmisten but Martin is not too worried because his own surveys show him only 5 percentage points behind.

A survey of 804 voters Oct. 1-4 by The Charlotte Observer showed Edmisten with 50 percent, Martin with 37 percent and 13 percent undecided. The poll's margin of error was 3.5 percentage points.

An earlier survey Sept. 5-11 showed Edmisten with 51 percent, Martin 39 percent and 9 percent undecided. That Observer poll surveyed 796 voters and had a margin of error of 3.5 percentage points.

"You can never be sure what anybody's poll is measuring," Martin said. "I'm convinced what we mainly had to overcome was people not knowing me."

To spread his name, Martin has televised a series of advertisements in which he introduces himself and gives a brief resume. During the final weeks of the campaign he has begun airing issue-oriented ads that focus on drug abuse prevention, education and his record.

Martin was last re-elected in 1982, when he defeated Democrat Preston Cornelius with 57 percent of the vote.

New Tactics For Reagan's Next Debate

By DAVID GOELLER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Leaders of the President Reagan's campaign say things will be different Sunday when he faces Walter Mondale in their next debate: Reagan will have fewer statistics and more respect for his opponent.

For their part, the top officials for the Democratic campaign say Mondale will come out swinging for the second televised encounter and ask "hard questions" of the Republican president.

The pre-debate predictions were made Sunday as Mondale campaign chairman, James Johnson, and his Reagan counterpart, Sen. Paul Laxalt, R-Nev., appeared on ABC-TV's "This Week with David Brinkley." Discussing the debates on CBS-TV's "Face the Nation" were the respective campaign managers, Robert Beckel for Mondale and Ed Rollins for Reagan.

"We're going to go into the debate next Sunday night and have it out," Johnson said, adding that the Democrat would "confront" President Reagan over Lebanon during the 90-minute session on foreign policy.

As for Reagan, Laxalt repeated his contention that Mondale bested the Republican president in the first debate Oct. 7 because Reagan's preparers had saddled him with statistics.

"It was much too intense, much too statistical, and I think posed too much of a burden on the president, so that when he went into that debate in Louisville, his circuits literally were overloaded," Laxalt said.

"I think the greatest thing we can do, and we will do this week — believe me — is let Ronald Reagan be Ronald Reagan," Laxalt said. "He should deal as he always has on a conceptual visionary basis. That's where Ronald Reagan is best. That's the reason he is where he is. He didn't become president because he had statistical knowledge."

Johnson said Mondale would ask Reagan about Vice President George Bush's assertion during the vice presidential debate last Thursday that the Democrats have said U.S. troops died in "shame" in Lebanon.

"I think we'll have to go into that debate and discuss it," Johnson said. "Confront the president with this charge, which is not true, and ask him for his explanation and hopefully his apology."

Beckel said that for the next debate, "Mondale is going to be Mondale, the Mondale you saw (last) Sunday night. I think he's going to be in command of the issues. I think he's going to ask Reagan a lot of hard questions. And I think we're going to expect some answers."

"This one is a question that concerns the most fundamental issue of this campaign," Beckel said. "That's a question of nuclear weapons and war and peace — Ronald Reagan's greatest failing so far. I don't think he can 'Aw, shucks' himself out of this one."

Rollins said that in the Oct. 7 encounter, which most political observers and voter polls say Mondale won, "the president may have gotten caught a little off guard by Mondale's performance. But I think there's no question he himself will be performing extremely well next time."

Rollins disagreed with Laxalt's assessment that Reagan had been over-prepared for the first debate.

"I don't think that was the problem," he said. "I think there may have been a little complacency on our part. ... It's been very hard to take the Mondale campaign very seriously. I think now we're taking him seriously."

Beckel said that in the first debate, "Walter Mondale proved himself to be a leader, in command, on the same stage with the great communicator. The great communicator didn't communicate very well. Walter Mondale did a superb job."

Rollins said that although Reagan "did an effective job" in the first debate, he "wasn't Ronald Reagan."

Marines Charged

TOKYO (AP) — Two U.S. Marines have been charged with the Oct. 1 murder of a 19-year-old female Marine on the southern Japanese island of Okinawa, U.S. military officials said today.

The U.S. Navy has filed charges of pre-meditated murder against Pfc. Comrado Perez, Jr., 20, of Friota, Texas, and Cpl. Alfonso Contreras, Jr., 19, of El Paso, Texas, according to a release from the U.S. forces' Media Liaison Office.

The two suspects are being held for further investigation at a Marine Corps correctional facility, and no trial date has been set, according to the release.

Pvt. Lori Gavula, of Mahanoy City, Pa., allegedly was taken to Perez' apartment, where the murder occurred. The victim died of a massive hematoma, or swelling of the brain.

The two Marines in custody are assigned to the 3rd Landing Support Battalion, 3rd Force Service Support Group. Pvt. Gavula was a company clerk assigned to the headquarters battalion at Camp Butler on Okinawa.

Severe Drought

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Crops are dying, wells have dried up and lakes are turning into mud flats in southern India in a severe drought that reportedly has affected 50 million people.

After touring the drought area, Prime Minister Indira Gandhi said the federal government would give $20 million in aid to Andhra Pradesh and Maharashtra states, the United News of India reported Sunday.

UNI said Mrs. Gandhi walked through parched fields and inspected dried crops and empty wells in four districts.

The drought reportedly forced many Hindu villagers to kill sacred cows for food, and prompted many others to leave the state in search of a living.
