ACCIDENT INJURES FIREMAN — A Winterville fireman was injured Tuesday afternoon when the fire truck he was driving overturned, striking a house. According to firemen at the scene, Joe Green was test driving a converted Army surplus Jeep "brush" truck when he approached the intersection of Main Street and the Old Tar Road, and the brakes apparently failed.

Officers said Green tried to turn right but lost control of the vehicle and it overturned in the yard, striking the carport of a house owned by Mrs. Lubie Williams. There were no other persons injured, and no estimates of damage were available. (Reflector Photo by Tommy Forrest)

Richardson Says Hospital May See More Expansion

By CAROL TYER
Reflector Staff Writer

"Capital commitments for further enlargement of the work of Pitt County Memorial Hospital will be significant over the next three or four years if we assume that PCMH is the hospital of preference in eastern North Carolina," Jack Richardson, hospital president, told the hospital board of trustees Tuesday night.

Richardson said use patterns of hospitals throughout the eastern part of the state seem to be indicating that PCMH is becoming "the hospital of preference."

Two volunteers and the volunteer director of the hospital were honored by the board for having received Governor's Awards for their volunteer work at the hospital. Honored were Mary Page Craft, a volunteer in the psychiatric unit; Mavis Hall, a volunteer in the intensive care unit, and Etsil Mason, hospital volunteer director.

Capital expenditures of $201,380 were approved. Approved for purchase was a motorized film view for radiology at $25,000; two intra-aortic balloon pumps with recorders for the operating room at $48,200; an acquisition processing station for radiology at $95,000, and an evoked potential system for special medical services at $33,180.

Approved for provisional active staff privileges were Dr. James G. Peden in psychiatric medicine; Dr. Lawrence M. Moher in family practice with Type II obstetrics; Dr. Christopher Bremer in Type II obstetrics; and Dr. David A. Walker in ophthalmology. Dr. Walter R. Sabviston was approved for consulting staff privileges in otolaryngology; and Dr. Pamela Pappas-Ferris was approved for courtesy staff privileges in psychiatric medicine.

Dr. William E. Laupus, ECU School of Medicine dean, was cheered when he announced that a person has been picked as the medical director of the rehabilitation center. The center has been many months without a director, but will have one beginning in January. He said searches continue for persons to head the microbiology and radiation therapy programs of the medical school.

The trustees were reminded of a planning retreat to be held Oct. 23.

Roy Clark, vice president for financial services, reported that Blue Cross Blue Shield has approved the hospital rates set by the board. These went into effect Oct. 1.

City Panel Accepts Executive Park Plat

By SUE HINSON
Reflector Staff Writer

The Greenville Planning and Zoning Commission, upon recommendation of Assistant City Attorney Mac McCarley, rescinded a September decision rejecting a revised preliminary plat of the proposed Executive Park office complex by a vote of 4-2 in regular session Thursday.

The commission's action gave approval to the preliminary plat as it was originally presented.

The commission's previous decision to block expansion of the original development from five to eight lots on the medical district property fronting Stantonsburg Road was, McCarley said, in conflict with a state Supreme Court decision.

Commissioners voting against revision of the board's decision included Dr. Wallace Woole and Danny Jacobson. Members approving the change included Rufus Keel, Willie Pate, Jim Ward and Leslie Turner. Commissioner Burney Warren abstained from voting because of a conflict of interest.

According to McCarley, the commission's previous decision was in conflict with a precedent set in a Nags Head case in which the state Supreme Court ruled that if a preliminary plat met all development criteria it must be passed. The court's ruling further stated that concerns of commissions and boards outside the criteria are not valid points on which to base rejection.

The board rejected the plat in its September meeting by a vote of 4-3 with those voting against the plat citing concern over the potential number of driveway cuts that could be made along property fronting the proposed Executive Park office development.

Any lot under present ordinances may have a maximum of two drive cuts depending on location of the lot. In the medical arts district lots can be a minimum of 70 feet wide. The Executive Park property has approximately 2,650 feet of frontage along Stantonsburg Road, and theoretically, according to the ordinance, the property could be developed into approximately 37 lots and each lot would be entitled to direct access to the highway. Executive Park developers plan to place only eight lots on the acreage.

Following approval of the preliminary plat, the commission requested that the city engineering office come up with recommendations on how to control driveway entrances and exits.

In other business, the board voted to send an annexation request concerning a 4.779 acre portion of Heritage Village (located on the east side of NCSR 1704, along portions of Buxton Road, Wellons Drive and White Hollow Drive) to the city council with the recommendation that the annexation be accepted.

The area is abutts existing city limits and if annexed would create $6,713.68 in real and personal tax revenues for the city. Annual city

Officer Says He Saw Boy Kicked

An East Carolina University policeman testified today he saw a Pitt County deputy kick a teenager following a high speed chase in February.

ECU Police Sgt. Kelly L. Jackson, who said he had changed his testimony since a District Court trial earlier this year, testified that the youth's eye was swelling and discolored when he was placed in an officer's car.

The testimony came during the second day of evidence in Pitt County Superior Court of an appeal filed by Sheriff's Deputy James M. Evans, who had been convicted in the lower court of simple assault on 15-year-old James William Gwin, an Alabama youth who claims Evans kicked him in the head following the chase. Gwin was a passenger in the car, which was driven by juvenile Russell Toney of Alabama.

Gwin took the stand Tuesday. He said he recognized the man who had assaulted him by the brown slacks and tan jacket he was wearing. He said he saw Evans wearing those clothes.

Jackson testified today that he saw Evans kick Gwin around the eye once with his foot. He added that when Gwin was being taken to the patrol car, Gwin's right eye was swelling and discolored. Jackson said he saw no injuries when he saw Gwin in the passenger side of the vehicle.

Under cross-examination by defense attorney James Roberts, Jackson stated that he had changed his testimony since the first trial.

Roberts read from the court transcripts of the District Court trial that Jackson had been asked, "Did you see anyone kick Mr. Gwin?" and Jackson had replied, "Not actually kick him, no."

Jackson testified that he changed his testimony because he "had time to think about it."

Highway Patrolman Ron Mills also testified today that when he was handcuffing the driver of the car, he "heard scuffling and obscenities" and turned around to see "Gwin on the ground being kicked in the back" by several people. He said that Evans was one of the people kicking Gwin.

1st District House Race

Jones, Lee Waging Campaign

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — Walter B. Jones is as much an institution in North Carolina's 1st Congressional District as the tobacco that's the economic lifeblood of its 21 rural, flat and sparsely populated counties.

But Republican Herbert Lee, a Greenville businessman, is challenging Jones' re-election to the seat he has held since 1966. The race is not seen as one of the state's most hotly contested despite spirited Republican opposition and criticism from within his own party.

Jones won the right to represent the Northeast by defeating Republican John East. He withstood what some observers called his toughest challenge earlier this year when state Rep. John Gillam, D-Bertie, tried to take the Democratic nomination.

Gillam, vice chairman of four General Assembly committees, accused the 72-year-old Jones of being out of touch with his district and of trying to create a political dynasty by clinging to his seat until his son, state Rep. Walter Jones Jr., D-Pitt, could take over. Jones denied the charges.

Jones swamped Gillam in the Democratic primary, getting 62 percent of the vote to 38 percent for Gillam. Gillam immediately pledged his support to Jones, and the primary battle appears to have left no significant wounds.

"I was very grateful ... and pleasantly surprised (to have won so overwhelmingly)," said Jones. "I based my campaign on my seniority, voting record and reputation of responding quickly to people who come to us with problems. That will be my theme this fall."

Jones, a businessman from Farmville in Pitt County, was named chairman of the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee in 1981. He's proud of the position, which he says demonstrates his clout, but his opponent hopes to turn it against him.

"Since he got that job, he's become a Tip O'Neill Democrat, taking the liberal side of everything," Lee said. "He's voted to decrease (spending on) national defense, to increase spending on welfare. He fits the pattern beautifully."

Lee, 61, defeated Emerald Isle businessman Gene Leggett in the Republican primary with about 58 percent of the vote. He lost his only other race for political office, a campaign for the state Senate in 1980.

Lee says Jones voted for federally funded abortions, for the Martin Luther King Jr. national holiday, for a nuclear weapons freeze, against the MX missile, against aid to "contras" fighting the leftist government of Nicaragua and against President Reagan's tax cut package.

The problem, Lee said, is convincing the voters that Jones is out of step with their political beliefs.

"I'm getting a tremendous reception," he said. "As I go throughout the district handing out my brochures, people will look at how he's voted and say, 'I didn't know this about Walter.' It's really just a question of can I talk to enough people."

Jones denies that he's a liberal. "I'd call myself a moderate conservative," he said. "I'm in no way bound to Tip (O'Neill) or anybody else. I cast votes that I believe are in the best interests of the district."

Lee criticizes Jones for accepting the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee chairmanship because it meant relinquishing his leadership of the House Agriculture Committee's subcommittee on tobacco and peanuts, now headed by Rep. Charles Rose, D-N.C.

"I know (the committee chairmanship) gives him more prestige and power, but I'm not sure it's done anything for a district where tobacco's so important," said Lee.

Jones responded saying, "I'm in a better position now to protect the tobacco program than I was as subcommittee chairman. The point is, a committee chairman can usually bring in the majority of votes on both sides of the aisle."

Lee repeats Gillam's charge that Jones plans to serve only a few months after winning re-election and then give way to his son. Jones, pointing out that his successor would have to win a special election, insists he has no such plans.

"The Lord being willing, I will be here two more years at least," Jones said.

Physical Fitness Aids Interest In Quality Baths

By BARBARA MAYER

AP Newsfeatures
"Visit any plumbing showroom in the country and you will see the most upscale bathroom designs imaginable," says Florence Perchuk, an interior designer who specializes in bathrooms and kitchens.

Even showrooms catering to do-it-yourselfers are upgrading with luxury products such as whirlpool baths, gold-plated faucets and fittings for sinks and tubs, oversize pedestal sinks and sleeker toilets.

One reason for the growth is escalation of housing costs, which has persuaded people it is worth putting the money into quality bathrooms, according to Mrs. Perchuk.

On the other hand, she and others in the field agree that the resale-value argument alone would not account for the emergence of the luxury bath.

A growing interest in physical fitness, and health and beauty regimens is also behind the development.

Right now, the product most in demand is the whirlpool bathtub, according to bath industry executives. Also popular are separate steam and sauna areas and space for exercise equipment such as stationary bicycles or rowing machines, ballet barres and full-length mirrors, adds Mrs. Perchuk.

To fit in all the extra gear often means a complete remodeling job and enlarging the bath or creating a separate area in the house for the relaxation and exercise space.

Some families elect to add on to the house. Others enlarge the bath area by taking space formerly occupied by a closet or a bedroom.

Mrs. Perchuk's advice to those who wish to upgrade the bath comes in two installments — one for those with a limited budget and limited space and the other for those who are planning a complete overhaul.

To make a start, at a cost of between $2,000 and $4,000 in most areas, one might consider the addition of a portable whirlpool unit in an existing tub, she says. It is also possible to convert a stall shower to a steam shower with an add-on steam unit.

"Then, they could deal with the esthetics. Perhaps they could mirror one or two walls, put in new faucets, install a pedestal sink or a custom vanity for an existing sink," according to Mrs. Perchuk.

New paint, new lighting fixtures, wallpaper and a new floor — either hard-surface or bathroom carpeting — will also work wonders, says the designer.

The family that has decided to replace an existing tub with a permanent whirlpool will probably be spending quite a bit more. One manufacturer's least expensive whirlpool, for example, is about $700. Prices escalate sharply for larger models with more features.

Mrs. Perchuk recommends ripping out everything and starting from scratch if you are putting a new tub in place, perhaps expanding into new space taken from a nearby room or hallway.

Redoing the bath, putting in a whirlpool and other new fixtures, and enlarging the space, might cost $18,000 to $20,000, or more, depending on the cost of the surfacing materials selected.

Those planning a complete redo should seek professional guidance from an architect, interior designer, contractor or kitchen-bath designer, she says. Even if you will be doing the work yourself, advice from a qualified individual familiar with the plumbing and electrical requirements is important.

Mrs. Perchuk says that there are many choices to be made today not only in new equipment but also in materials that were not available some years ago.

Besides the traditional bathroom fixture materials — porcelain enameled cast iron or steel, tile, marble and natural stone, there is synthetic marble, vinyl, acrylic and fiberglass.

While American companies continue to use porcelain enameling for tubs and sinks, in other countries the use of acrylic and fiberglass fixtures has overtaken and surpassed the traditional materials, she says.

The use of acrylics is at least partly responsible for the many configurations and sizes of whirlpool tubs now available, she says. Acrylic can be bent into virtually any shape and is lighter and easier to work with than enameled cast iron.

Furthermore, acrylic can be easily colored in a great variety of shades ranging from very light to very dark. Its use is leading to a much larger number of available sizes and shapes for tubs and sinks and shower enclosures.

Whirlpool baths come with four, six or eight jets, depending on the size of the tub, according to John Hansen, a vice president at American Standard. "Many people think the idea is to have the direct impact of a jet of water on a part of the body that may be sore or aching," says Hansen. However, he adds, while this may feel good for a few minutes, it is not necessarily very good for you.

In the early 1930s, Raymond L. Smith of Harold's Club fame, started his Reno operation with a stake of $600, and in 1962 cashed in for $16.67 million, according to the Almanac of Investments.

You don't have to visit the Rocky Mountains to get Rocky Mountain spotted fever, says Health Insurance News. Cases have been reported in every state in the union, with the highest incidence in the Appalachian states.

Relief for the Elderly Homeowner

Many elderly homeowners face a problem. They own their home free and clear, yet Social Security and other retirement funds don't provide enough money to pay grocery bills, utility bills, medical bills and necessary repairs and maintenance on the house. One option is to sell the house but many elderly homeowners are reluctant to leave the home they've lived in for years. They'd rather skimp on food and medical care and remain in their home.

Yet the prospect of an elderly person or couple owning a valuable asset such as a house and yet not having enough monthly income to meet necessary expenditures is incredible. Wouldn't it be nice if the elderly homeowner could convert some of the value of the house to cash to help meet living expenses and yet remain in the house? Fortunately, according to Dr. Mike Walden, extension specialist in consumer economics, there are some ways to do this.

The basic idea is for the elderly homeowner to promise to sell the house in the future. Based on that promise and based on the expected future value of the house, the future buyer of the house or other third party agrees to pay the elderly homeowner a certain amount of money per month for as long as the homeowner lives. In addition the elderly homeowner is able to remain living in the house for life. In essence the elderly homeowner is slowly selling the house over time. But rather than selling the house and receiving the value all in one payment, the elderly homeowner is receiving small parts of the payment over many months.

The benefit of a plan like this, says Dr. Walden, is that the elderly homeowner can convert the value of his/her house to cash and use the cash to meet other expenses, yet the elderly homeowner can remain living in the house. The obvious disadvantage of the plan is that the elderly homeowner will not have the house in his/her estate as death and thus the elderly homeowner will lose the opportunity to will the house to descendants.

If you are an elderly homeowner and are interested in a plan like this to help you convert your home to cash, Dr. Walden suggests that you talk to local bankers, stock brokers and individuals at other financial institutions. You should also be aware that the brokerage house Prudential-Bache may be offering such plans nationwide next year under the general name of reverse annuity mortgage.

NEW YORK (AP) — Overpacking checked luggage is the most frequent cause of luggage damage, according to airport baggage handlers.

In a national survey of 1,000 handlers, some 72 percent blamed overstuffed baggage for most damage, 19 percent also noted that poor quality luggage, either hard or softside, is most vulnerable to damage caused by normal wear and tear of handling.

The survey, conducted by Samsonite Luggage, found 27 percent of the baggage handlers recommended the 24- or 26-inch suitcase as the most functional size to check when traveling. Sixty percent said they preferred hardside luggage with molded shell exteriors when they themselves travel.

Flux

There is a natural state of flux in the North Carolina political picture as part of the national elections upheaval. It happens to a greater or lesser degree every four years and reflects a rekindling of popular interest in issues and personalities involved.

We witness shifts in viewpoint and emphasis among individuals as well as within political parties and among certain categories of the population ... groupings whether by gender, age, education, wealth, and other diverse segmemts.

The period is also marked by an increase in number of registered voters (North Carolina Elections Director Alex Brock looks for 75 percent of all eligible North Carolinians to be registered for the Nov. 6 election.) That registered share of eligible voters is seen as "phenomenal" for our state.

As is usually the case, there is a strong undercurrent of anticipation as well as speculation as to its significance. Nobody has a real answer to that, because opinions are too frequently shaped by still other opinions and hopes — neither of which carry the weight of fact. Some realignments within the voting public are inescapable.

Americans are going to understand much more about themselves within a few days after November 6. Then, hopefully, we'll begin pulling together again.

Grant

There will be a new experience for fifth graders at South Greenville Elementary school. This year and for the next two years they will be able to take trips to Virginia.

The trips will be made possible by a $50,000 grant from the Atlantic Richfield Foundation and a check for that amount was presented at the Greenville Board of Education meeting Tuesday.

Several South Greenville teachers, with the support of school and city administrators, made the request for the grant. It was approved and as a result all fifth graders will be able to make a three-day two-night "experience" trip to Tidewater Virginia. There will be visits to Yorktown, Jamestown and Williamsburg with all expenses paid except for meals.

There can be no better learning experience than to actually visit historic sites. The fifth grade students of South Greenville School will gain much from the Atlantic Richfield Foundation grant and it is a generosity which is appreciated.

A Time For Paying Tribute

WASHINGTON (AP) — In the closing hours of the 98th Congress, lawmakers put aside the nation's business to spend some time paying tributes — to each other.

Retiring Senate Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr., R-Tenn., received the most accolades. The Senate even voted to name a room after him, the one in the Capitol he presently occupies.

Senate Minority Leader Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., who made the motion, noted that a Senate office building already had been named after Baker's father-in-law, Everett Dirksen, who represented Illinois in the Senate and, like Baker, was the chamber's Republican leader.

Since buildings are named after deceased senators, Baker had to settle for a room. He thanked the Senate for the honor, but later told Byrd he'd give back the room name if Byrd would agree to vote for a bill Baker was trying to get through the Senate — extension of the federal debt limit.

Byrd didn't. And Baker still has the room named after him.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., was one who joined in the tributes to Baker. But Kennedy jokingly told colleagues that Baker had gotten his start in politics primarily because of his father-in-law.

"And I for one have always been a little wary of anyone who tries to get ahead on the basis of a famous family connection," Kennedy said.

To honor retiring Sen. Jennings Randolph, who began his congressional career in 1932, the Senate agreed unanimously to go along with a rule change long advocated by the 83-year-old West Virginia Democrat: a requirement that senators vote from their desks.

Randolph has contended that Senate decorum has suffered with members milling around and shouting their votes from the floor. He said senators in bygone days voted in an orderly fashion from their desks, and his proposed change would just bring back some of that old-fashioned civility.

In the past, colleagues had re-

MACON, Ga. (AP) — John F. Kennedy and Jefferson Davis may seem an unlikely pair to some people, but not to Ronald Reagan.

When the president is out campaigning, no politician's memory is safe from being summoned as a Reagan ally. He is an incorrigible name-dropper.

In this Deep South city, Reagan mixed heroes the way other speakers mix metaphors as he delivered a speech filled with references to politicians living and dead, hardly any of whom would have supported the president.

The most unlikely hero in the Reagan Pantheon was Davis, president of the Confederate States of America, a man rarely if ever evoked in a post-Civil War presidential campaign.

Reagan's name-dropping is a practice he acknowledged drives his Democratic opponents up the wall and causes them to "start tearing their hair out."

To Walter F. Mondale, the practice is outrageous "grave robbing."

—Rowland Evans and Robert Novak—

Advice To A Candidate

WASHINGTON — Partly because of a bum knee, House Majority Leader Jim Wright has given Walter F. Mondale some radical advice: Throw away your canned television commercials and rally speeches, and instead spend money to take your campaign "direct to the people" in cozy chats with voters over network television.

Wright spent a recent weekend immobilized at home with that ailing knee and time to ponder why Mondale was doing so poorly against President Reagan. The Texas congressman's answer: Television network news shows "filter out" too much of what Mondale is saying, leaving viewers with a few seconds of the Democratic nominee.

So, on the following Monday, he advised Mondale to cancel most of his TV commercials and political rallies and buy time for special interviews with one or two voters. That way, Wright said, the "real Mondale" would come through. Mondale sent the idea to his staff for a full study.

Sen. Robert Dole seriously hurt his chances for majority leader when he took the Senate floor last week to make a final attempt at a compromise civil rights bill, thereby sabotaging the nearly completed effort to break the session-end congressional deadlock.

Dole's move undercut retiring Majority Leader Howard Baker. It was even rougher on one of Dole's closest allies, Oregon's Sen. Robert Packwood, who had just taken the floor to express his "heartbreak" at having to abandon the civil rights bill. Several Republican senators commented in the cloakroom that they had just seen history made, whereby Bob Dole had eliminated himself from the leadership fight.

As masterful chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, Dole is considered by lobbyists and the news media as the favorite to succeed Baker. But Senate insiders predict a showdown between conservative Sen. James McClure of Idaho and Sen. Richard Lugar of Indiana, a moderate conservative.

Gov. Bob Graham of Florida has quietly begun meeting with other key Democrats to talk about restructuring the primaries for 1988, part of a general Democratic housecleaning likely after the Nov. 6 election.

Graham, expected to run for the Senate in 1986, believes the present primary system is biased toward nominating candidates who do not represent the mainstream of the Democratic Party, much less the nation. He favors a regional primary

His complaints are more likely to encourage than deter Reagan.

Even the president's Southern audience seemed a little startled when he cited Davis as an early advocate of giving presidents authority to veto individual items in appropriations bills.

Moments later, it was Kennedy being cited as a tax cut advocate.

When he turned to foreign policy, the president once again turned to Kennedy for support.

"He understood the Soviets," said Reagan. "He understood Castro. ...

Were he alive today, I believe he would be ashamed of those in the liberal Democratic leadership who would weaken our defenses, endanger our security and sell out the cause of freedom in Latin America."

Mondale likes to point out that when Kennedy was running for president in 1960, Reagan was chairman of Democrats for Nixon.

But Reagan appears so convinced he is right he can't believe that, were they alive today, Kennedy, Harry Truman, Franklin D. Roosevelt and even Jefferson Davis would not be among his supporters.

There's also a political reason for evoking all these names from the past.

It's the same reason Democratic names were mentioned reverently more often than Republican heroes when the GOP held its national convention last August.

Reagan and the Republican Party want this election to be a true watershed in American politics, a contest that will be cited as the time the GOP became the majority party.

The only way that will come about is if many wavering Democrats shift their allegiance to the Republicans.

It was ironic that Reagan dropped so many Democratic names in a speech in the South. In presidential politics that region has undergone the kind of change the Republicans want to see occur nationwide.

The once solidly Democratic South is now becoming dependably Republican in presidential elections, a trend that dates back to 1948 and was interrupted only in 1976 when Georgian Jimmy Carter was the Democratic presidential candidate and carried 10 of 11 Southern states.

Four years later, Reagan beat Carter in every Southern state but Georgia.

Public Forum

To the editor:

I listened with amazement to Rufus Edmisten during the debate between him and Jim Martin.

Rufus spoke of his proposal for roads in North Carolina, and the fact that he would be fair with all the people of North Carolina. This is not what he is saying in the West. In a quote in the Hickory Daily Record Sept. 19, 1983, Rufus said, "The eastern portion of the state in the past has been favored financially ..."

"If elected governor, I will favor my local area ... so we get our fair share and more."

On taxes, Rufus stated during the debate that he would not recommend raising taxes. He would propose stiffer penalties for those who choose not to pay their taxes. "Instead of a simple misdemeanor, we could impose stiffer penalties."

Well, folks, Rufus better thank God that it is a simple misdemeanor, because if it wasn't he would not be able to run for governor now, because he was convicted of not paying his in the early 1970s.

Strength For Today

Someone once defined prepositions as little words with big meanings. Let us examine this conclusion in connection with "on," "for" and "by."

Most of us have enough to live on. And if we do not, we are fortunate to be in a country where it is comparatively easy for an ambitious person to get enough to live on.

Most of us have something to live for. Goals are important, and the person who really has nothing to live for might stop bothering about what he has to live on, for truly, he is hardly living at all.

Sometimes we forget about what we live by. The standards we live by make all the difference as to whether our life is a blessing or a curse to those around us. To justify what we live on and what we live for, we must never live by anything but the very best.

—Paul O'Connor—

Children's Lobby Smells Success

RALEIGH — Buoyed by success during the 1984 legislative session and by higher than anticipated membership recruitment, North Carolina's newly formed children's lobby has prepared an ambitious 12-point agenda for 1985.

The N.C. Child Advocacy Institute was formed early in 1984, rising from the ashes of Child Watch, a three-year-old child advocacy group which ran out of money and steam in 1983. At the institute's first statewide legislative conference in Raleigh in early October, turnout exceeded anticipation and new memberships brought the institute's roster to nearly 400, that's 100 members more than the target set for the end of 1984.

Of the three top priorities set by the conference, John Niblock, executive director of the institute, says it is reasonable to expect that two will be approved by the legislature. Major changes can be expected in day care laws during 1985, he said, and new tougher provisions for the collection of delinquent child support should also be adopted.

The institute wants the staff-to-child ration lowered at day care centers. Currently, one staff member is required for every nine children under the age of two. The institute recommends one staff member to every six infants and one to every seven children between ages one and two.

As part of the same recommendation, the institute asks the Legislature to create standards for day care workers. Now, anyone over 18 who does not have a felony conviction can run, or be hired to work at, a day care center. The institute recommends that no one under 21 be allowed to run a center and that all employees be required to have a high school diploma or equivalent and either training or experience in child development.

Legislators working on day care legislation say such changes will be difficult to get enacted but Niblock is very optimistic. "This year, there's strong support from parents, professionals (in the day care industry) and even the legislature which previously has been very reluctant to get into regulation."

In 1983, the legislature enacted an automatic child support collection system that has gotten rave reviews so far. Niblock says the changes weren't enough, however. Some federal funding for child support collection will be lost if the state doesn't adopt two more procedures for collecting delinquent child support payments. The feds want the state to garnish the wages of delinquents and to deduct arrearages in child support accounts from any income tax refund due to a delinquent parent.

Niblock is also optimistic about the institute's sixth priority recommendation — increased funding for subsidized day care. The state currently runs a $24 million a year program of subsidized day care for the children of working poor parents. The program serves 14,000 children and there are another 2,300 on the waiting list. Federal funds pay for a bit more than half the total budget but are scheduled to be cut by 20 percent.

Mondale Says Reagan Confused

By WILLIAM M. WELCH
Associated Press Writer

President Reagan and Walter F. Mondale are turning their attention to preparations for their final debate this weekend after the challenger accused Reagan of "profound confusion" and with being "out of touch with reality" on defense and arms control.

The Democrats were raising the issue of Reagan's age, 73, too — an issue that until this week was considered taboo for the candidates themselves to mention.

Democratic vice presidential candidate Geraldine Ferraro raised the issue of Reagan's age Tuesday, saying "it is something to be considered" by voters.

Mondale has avoided direct mention of the age issue. But traveling with him Tuesday night, Colorado Sen. Gary Hart, suggested that Reagan's age was responsible for his occasionally halting performance during the first debate a week and a half ago.

Hart, who is spending 17 of the next 21 days campaigning for his one-time rival for the Democratic nomination, mocked the explanation given by Reagan's campaign manager, Sen. Paul Laxalt, that the president was "brutalized" by his staff's debate briefings.

"That's the new wimp factor," said Hart. "If his staff could brutalize him, think of what (Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei) Gromyko could do to him."

Campaigning among college and vocational students in Illinois on Tuesday, Reagan faced the age issue — a student asked if he'd be able to serve a second term.

"Well, the way I put it is: I'm not really this old," replied the oldest man ever to be president. "They mixed up the babies in the hospital."

Reagan was back in Washington today studying for Sunday's debate in Kansas City, with only one political event — the Al Smith Memorial Dinner in New York on Thursday night — left this week.

Mondale, after a fund-raising bash with movie stars in Los Angeles Tuesday night, was taking a red-eye flight back to Washington early today to ready himself for the debate.

He was skipping the Smith dinner, and the Catholic Archdiocese of New York — sponsors of the traditional event — turned down his offer to have Ms. Ferraro go in his place.

In a foreign-policy speech at Stanford University, Mondale called Reagan's defense policies "a record of profound confusion."

"For 30 years, Mr. Reagan has had a naive and primitive notion of national strength," he said.

Replying to Reagan's comments on Monday that Mondale was confused about the Soviets, he said: "Mr. President ... if you want a debate about who's confused and who's baffled, if you want this campaign to turn on the question of who's out of touch with reality, you will have that debate, and it begins this morning."

Reagan, at College of DuPage in Glen Ellyn, Ill., chastized Mondale for failing to repudiate the Rev. Jesse Jackson's pro-Castro statements during his trip to Cuba earlier this year.

Reagan said, "My opponent failed to repudiate the Rev. Jesse Jackson when he went to Havana, stood with Fidel Castro and cried, 'Long live Cuba ... long live Castro.'" Spokesman Larry Speakes later acknowledged that Reagan, too, had had avoided a frontal attack on Jackson for his Cuba trip from which he returned with some political prisoners freed by Castro.

Ms. Ferraro joined Mondale in Los Angeles and was heading up the coast for more campaign stops today.

Vice President George Bush, meanwhile, found himself still on the defensive over his accusation last week that the Democrats had said the more than 250 U.S. soldiers killed in Beirut during the Reagan administration had died "in shame."

Mondale and Ms. Ferraro have strongly denied making such a statement and demanded an apology for Bush.

Bush defended the accuracy of his remark by arguing that Mondale has said the United States has been humiliated in Lebanon, producing dictionary definitions likening "humiliate" with "shame."

"Mr. Mondale and Mrs. Ferraro can argue all they want, they can demand apologies every day," Bush said. "But the fact of the matter is — accusing young men of dying without a purpose and for no reason is, in the lexicon of the American people, a shame."

Mondale responded: "He doesn't have an answer and he doesn't have the manhood to apologize."

Ms. Ferraro, meantime, charged that the Bush campaign planned a series of comments directed at her candidacy over the last week. Bush was overheard as saying the day after their debate that he had tried to "kick a little ass," and before that both his wife and press secretary had been quoted making derogatory remarks about Ms. Ferraro.

"I think that those comments were planned. The Bushes are not the type of people who would accidentally let something like that slip out," she said.

Mondale's Health 'Good'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Walter F. Mondale suffers from tennis elbow and moderately high blood pressure — controlled by daily medication — but is otherwise in excellent health, according to his doctor for 20 years.

"I can only describe him as bouncy," Dr. Milton M. Hurwitz said. "He looks great and he feels good."

Hurwitz said in an interview that there are no physical limitations.

Reagan Gives 'Recess' Job At NLRB To Original Choice

WASHINGTON (AP) — Undaunted by its failure to win Senate confirmation of Rosemary M. Collyer as general counsel to the National Labor Relations Board, the Reagan administration has given her the job on a temporary basis.

The White House on Tuesday announced that Ms. Collyer, a lawyer, has been named to the post with a "recess appointment," pending her renomination by President Reagan next January.

The administration resorted to the recess appointment, under which presidents may temporarily fill jobs requiring Senate nomination while Congress is either in recess or adjournment, to restore normal case-handling operations to the board.

The National Labor Relations Board was created in the 1930s to process and decide disputes between employers and workers in private business, and much of its work involves the processing of unfair labor practice complaints brought by either side.

Because a recess appointment given to California lawyer Wilford W. Johansen expired last Friday, when Congress adjourned its 98th session, the post of general counsel was left vacant.

Because the general counsel oversees the NLRB lawyers and regional officials who process unfair labor practice complaints, and decides whether to deny or recommend further hearings on these complaints, this activity came to a stop when the job fell vacant.

Ms. Collyer, who has been serving as head of the Federal Mine Safety and Health Review Commission, had been nominated early this year to succeed William A. Lubbers, a Democrat, whose term expired on April 23.

The AFL-CIO opposed Ms. Collyer's confirmation when the matter came before the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee last

May, taking the position that she was not qualified for the job.

At a hearing before the Senate committee last May 23, AFL-CIO Secretary-Treasurer Thomas R. Donahue testified that "the Collyer nomination is consistent with the Reagan administration's contempt for employee rights in general and the right to organize in particular, and is equally consistent with the background and habits of the administration's first three appointees to the NLRB."

Her nomination was never cleared by that committee.

The absence of a general counsel had forced the NLRB here to instruct the regional heads of the agency across the country to cease issuing — or denying — unfair labor practice complaints sought by labor and business.

Without the normal processing of these complaints, much of the business of the National Labor Relations Board comes to a halt.

An identical situation had developed last April, at the time of Lubbers' retirement, and that had led to the temporary appointment of Johansen as general counsel.

Study Unit Urges National Health Insurance Program

By BETTY ANNE WILLIAMS
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — A citizens committee whose members include three former Cabinet secretaries today recommended adoption of national health insurance as a more efficient and fair method of providing health care to all Americans.

The National Citizens' Board of Inquiry into Health in America released a two-volume report that proposed, for the interim, expansion of Medicare coverage and health insurance for unemployed workers.

But the report titled "Health Care USA: 1984" focused on making the case for a universal comprehensive national health care plan similar to those in Canada, Great Britain and other industrial nations.

The group, whose members included former Labor Secretary Ray Marshall and former Health, Education and Welfare secretaries Wilbur Cohen and Arthur S. Flemming, did not make specific proposals for financing national health insurance. But it advanced the proposal as a general concept, arguing that health care could be provided more cheaply and efficiently under national health insurance.

The report noted that in Canada, which has national health insurance, the cost of medical care accounts for 8.5 percent of the gross national product while health costs account for more than 10 percent of the GNP in this country.

Even though medical care accounts for a big share of the nation's economic output, 33 million Americans have no health insurance protection, the report said.

Budget cuts during the Reagan administration reduced Medicaid spending by $5 billion and Medicare spending by $13 billion below what they otherwise would have been, the report said.

About 700,000 children were removed from the Medicaid program in 1982 and 567,000 senior citizens lost their Medicaid since 1981; and about 725,000 Americans no longer have access to community health centers because of budget cuts, the report said.

"The citizens' board found a widespread pattern of deterioration in health care coverage and services, brought on in part by soaring costs and in part by plummeting federal and state benefits," the report said.

"The board is united in its belief that the Reagan administration policies have contributed to the deficiencies in the health care system — by shifting costs to the backs of the poor, minorities and other vulnerable groups; by trying to shift unjustifiable cost burdens to the states for health programs; and by moving the nation backward in terms of the federal government's accepting responsibility for American health policy."

The board also proposed cost-containment measures that would encourage states to establish their own cost control plans under broad federal guidelines.

'Campaigning In The Dumps'

By HARRY F. ROSENTHAL
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) —
Vaudeville joke:
She: "Whenever I'm down in the dumps I get myself a new hat."
He: "I wondered where you got them."

When Walter Mondale needs an issue, he goes to the dumps too. So does Geraldine Ferraro. So did Gary Hart.

Democrats have been drawn to toxic waste sites this campaign year to rail against the Reagan administration's record on the environment.

They obviously like talking about Ronald Reagan's inaction on toxic waste, they do so much of it. Republicans don't talk about it at all.

The president has been content to be photographed in happy settings with race car drivers, country-and-western singers, Ukrainians, choirs and American flags of stupendous sizes.

But at a toxic dump, with barrels floating in the ominous goop? Never.

When Mondale goes to a dump, reporters always write that he "inspected" it or "toured" it, but it is not in the way others might inspect a child's new school or tour the hog pavilion at the county fairgrounds.

Toxic waste sites are photo opportunities, as shipyards were in Franklin D. Roosevelt's time. Harry Truman's whistlestops have become pitstops.

During the primary season, Mondale and Hart were in New Jersey the same day making the rounds of poison dumps to capitalize on New Jersey's concern about pollution. Hart then went to California and made a disparaging remark about New Jersey that undoubtedly cost him votes. Did he have toxic dumps on his mind? New Jersey leads the nation in poisoned sites.

Mondale got off one of his best lines during a visit to the Stringfellow Acid Pits in California, the notorious dump that figured in the resignation of Anne Gorsuch Burford as administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency. He said the Reagan administration "would rather take a polluter to lunch than to court."

And at Pt. Isabella Regional Shoreline in California, a park built on a toxic waste dump, Mondale denounced Reagan's "inexcusable, cynical unwillingness" to clean up the sites.

That sort of thing has been going on the entire election year. There's little rebuttal because it's difficult to say you're in the polluters' corner and proud of it.

For a clue of how the Republicans feel about such a pitstop campaign, one has to go back to June 1 when EPA chief William D. Ruckelshaus predicted the Democrats would make an issue of administration environmental policies.

Ruckelshaus said that he, certainly, would not appear at some dump to defend his record. "I don't really think it's legitimate," he said.

"I think those people around the sites are very sympathetic people, and they are being exploited in this process."

If that be exploitation, Geraldine Ferraro is exploiting, too. Earlier this month she campaigned at the Powell Street Landfill in Hubert Heights, Ohio.

"It's not a problem just for you in this locality," she said. "It's a problem for the state of Ohio. It's a problem for the nation. There are thousands of Hubert Heights suffering throughout the country."

Mondale upped the ante on Monday when, visiting a Missouri site filled with radioactive material, he declared a "National Toxic Waste Day." It is not destined to rank with Thanksgiving.

But candidates Mondale, Ferraro, their children and Hart used the day to train their guns on Reagan environmental policies. "We are visiting twice as many toxic waste sites in one day than the administration has cleaned up in four years," said Ms. Ferraro.

For the record, Ferraro aides said Democrats had visited 15 such sites that day.

At Weldon Spring, Mo., Mondale noted his publicized visit caused the Reagan administration to announce it would seek $22 million for cleanup, "just by magic, three days before I arrived."

Mondale said the same thing had happened in Los Angeles earlier and that "If I only had 761 days in this campaign, I'd go to a dump every day and clean them all up."

Close, but no cigar. EPA has 786 sites on its National Priority List. And the election is Nov. 6.

Haitian Family Reunited

MIAMI (AP) — Yolande Jean cried, "Thank you, Jesus," and embraced her 8-year-old son for the first time in four years as he arrived here a week after immigration officials refused the boy entry and returned him to Haiti.

"I feel very good right now," round-faced, wide-eyed Ricardo Max Devil said Tuesday night through a Creole interpreter after he walked through Customs at Miami International Airport.

"I see the children here," the boy told about 20 members of Miami's Haitian community and a group of reporters, "but I also saw the children in Haiti who are suffering."

Ricardo was returned alone last week to the Caribbean nation's capital, Port-au-Prince, but the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service decided it had erred and the boy was brought back to be reunited with his mother, who left her children in Haiti to find work in the U.S.

"We're just happy to bring this to a very successful conclusion," said Dwayne Peterson, acting district director of the INS in Florida.

Ricardo arrived about 7 p.m. A dozen Haitian children held red and white carnations and sang a song that said, "When Haiti becomes free, the children will have a lot of food to eat."

Haiti shares the island of Hispaniola with the Dominican Republic and is the poorest nation in the Western Hemisphere. Thousands of Haitians have embarked in flimsy vessels for the United States.

Mrs. Jean, with a Haitian community leader, the Rev. Gerard Jean-Juste, acting as interpreter, asked "God to give courage to all the mothers and fathers so there would be no more problems with children."

Mrs. Jean, who still has three children living in Haiti, said she wanted "to thank everyone, all the mothers and fathers" for their support.

Ricardo arrived in Miami Oct. 9, accompanied by a Haitian-American woman identified by the INS as Sandra Francois. When INS officials were not satisfied with the child's documents, Ms. Francois offered to take him back, but she failed to appear when it was time for Ricardo to leave.

INS officials sent the boy back to Haiti unaccompanied, an action that outraged community leaders.

Peterson said INS agents are investigating the chance Ricardo was brought here initially through an attempted smuggling, but he would not comment, other than to say an investigation was under way.

REUNION — Eight-year-old Ricardo Max Devil was reunited with his mother, Yolande Jean, at Miami International Airport Tuesday after not seeing each other for four years. Ricardo returned to Miami after having been sent to Haiti last week because he did not have proper legal documentation. (AP Laserphoto)

Jane's Says Soviets May Be Hiding ICBMs In Rockets

LONDON (AP) — The Soviet Union may be trying to hide intercontinental nuclear missiles among the medium-range SS-20 rockets it is stationing in Eastern bloc nations, according to Jane's Defense Weekly.

If the report in the highly respected publication is correct, it would mean the Soviets are not complying with the strategic arms limitation treaty known as SALT I, which limits the number of nuclear weapons deployed by both the Soviet Union and the United States.

The treaty expired in October 1977, but both sides agreed to honor it until a new treaty replaces it.

The magazine, quoting unidentified U.S. officials in Washington, said Tuesday that the experimental SS-25 intercontinental ballistic missiles, or ICBMs, were designed for mobile deployment.

Western defense analysts were unable to confirm the Jane's report.

The magazine is published by Jane's Publishing Co., whose yearbooks on military hardware are considered authoritative by the defense establishment.

Jane's said most of the new single-warhead missiles deployed so far apparently are around the Yoshkar Ola area west of Moscow. It did not say which Eastern European countries might be receiving the mix of SS-20s and SS-25s.

"Concern for mixing SS-20s and SS-25s is caused by the complications it raises in targeting, especially in regard to a theater-level conflict involving western regions of the USSR," the magazine said.

Jane's said a U.S. strike against SS-20 sites would run the risk of hitting the new ICBMs, "which in turn might precipitate ICBM exchanges between the superpowers."

The magazine said suspicion grew that the Soviets were using existing missile batteries to hide the new weapons when Western intelligence reports noted that "support equipment and buildings at some SS-20 sites were significantly different from structures and equipment at most earlier sites."

Jane's news editor, Bob Hutchinson, said: "It's very difficult to tell from satellite photos what's in the missile tubes that are detected."

The magazine quoted unidentified U.S. officials as confirming that the Soviets have carried out engineering work at "two dozen new sites...although clearly all are not intended for SS-X-25s."

Contradicting U.S. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger's contention last week that the Soviets are deploying new batteries of SS-20s in eastern Europe, the magazine said no additional SS-20s are reported to have been deployed since January.

The magazine said the Soviets have 378 SS-20s, and 243 of them are aimed at Western European targets.

Unarmed B-52 Bomber Crashes

KAYENTA, Ariz. (AP) — An unarmed B-52 bomber on a low-level training flight with seven people aboard crashed in remote Monument Valley, leaving one person dead and another briefly missing in windblown snow that hampered rescue efforts, authorities said today.

"We don't even know if they made a forced landing or if they bailed out," said Maj. David MacNamee at Strategic Air Command headquarters in Omaha, Neb. "I would assume that they bailed out," he added.

A second B-52 trailing the jet picked up radio signals from survivors, MacNamee said. He said there were conflicting reports about whether the bomber had crashed into a mesa or a valley in the rugged Navajo Indian reservation terrain in northeastern Arizona.

"There is one deceased," said John Boylan, spokesman for the Arizona Department of Public Safety.

"One was missing. He has since been found. No report on his injuries. There were two injured, one of them being a head injury, the other being a broken leg and the remaining three were treated for shock," he said.

He confirmed a report by Capt. Robert Ballew at Fairchild Air Force Base in Spokane that a helicopter from Kirtland Air Force Base in Albuquerque, N.M., picked up the crash victims early today.

A civilian spokesman at Kirtland, George Pierce, said they could not say how many survivors were aboard the helicopter or what their condition was. Boylan said all seven aboard the plane had been picked up.

Pierce said the helicopter took the survivors to San Juan Regional Medical Center in Farmington, N.M.

Train Collision Injures Five, Halts Rail Traffic

STAMFORD, Conn. (AP) — A 20-car eastbound Amtrak work train rear-ended a Conrail freight car, injuring at least five crew members, sending two derailed engines across four tracks and bringing all rail traffic to a halt this morning, Amtrak officials said.

"At 4:35 a.m. an Amtrak maintenance-of-way train hit a Conrail freight train approximately two miles east of Stamford," said John Jacobson, director of public affairs for Amtrak.

The five injured crew members were brought to Stamford area hospitals, where three were treated and released. The conditions of the other two was unknown, officials said.

Both trains were eastbound on track 2 when the Amtrak train, which was traveling slightly faster than the Conrail freight, rammed it, Jacobson said. Two tracks are known to be damaged and further damage is likely, he said.

One track was reopened about two hours after the crash, said Metro North spokesman Danny O'Connell, adding that 90-minute delays were expected throughout the morning.

Buses were being sent to New Haven to take rush-hour commuters to New York, Jacobson said. Stamford is a major transfer point for commuters from other Connecticut communities coming into New York City.

Ira Furman, a spokesman for the National Transportation Safety Board in Washington, said an official from the NTSB's New York field office would be sent to the scene "to see if there are any problem areas we would want to address."

Prosecutor Told To Explain Why He Dropped Sex Charges

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) — State Attorney General Hubert H. Humphrey III has asked the prosecutor who dropped charges against 22 people accused of sexually abusing children to publicly explain what went wrong with the case.

"The citizens of Minnesota deserve to know that we live in a state where justice guides the actions of government," Humphrey said at a news conference Tuesday. "Those who commit crimes should be punished and those who do not should not live in fear of abusive government action."

Meanwhile, police confirmed Tuesday they are investigating reports from children that children were murdered in Scott County after appearing in pornographic photos.

And two former defendants in the case, Greg and Jane Myers of Jordan, filed a $34 million lawsuit Tuesday against Scott County Attorney Kathleen Morris and others in U.S. District Court in Minneapolis.

The suit claims that Ms. Morris violated the Myers' rights by intimidating and coercing child witnesses, including two Myers children, to testify against the couple.

Ms. Morris told WCCO-TV she would have no comment on the suit filed by the Myers. A spokesperson at her office said she was unavailable to comment on Humphrey's request for an explanation.

Humphrey said he had no authority to investigate Ms. Morris' conduct as prosecutor, as some of the 50 residents who called his office had asked.

But he said he had written to her seeking an explanation and her cooperation in a statewide survey of how allegations of sexual abuse of children are handled, with an eye toward recommending changes to the 1985 Legislature.

Ms. Morris announced Monday that charges were being dropped against all defendants, in part because of a judge's order that the prosecution turn over 126 pages of notes from an ongoing investigation. She refused to discuss the notes, saying only that the investigation was of "great magnitude."

"The recent events in Scott County have cast a dark shadow on our criminal justice system," Humphrey said. "Clearly, the public has a right to know if our system is functioning properly, if there are shortcomings and, if so, how those shortcomings can be resolved."

He released a copy of his letter to Ms. Morris, which suggested a news conference as a forum to explain why the charges were dropped.

Humphrey said he spoke briefly with her and that she agreed to cooperate with his review, but he said there was no discussion of whether she would provide more details of why the cases were dismissed.

"I would like to make it clear that I am not investigating Kathleen Morris," he said.

Jordan Deputy Police Chief Dean

Johnson and Minnesota Bureau of Criminal Apprehension Director Jack Erskine confirmed separately that their departments were investigating murder allegations.

"The information was given by some of the children to police investigators and in turn we're reviewing it," Johnson said.

American Winner Of Prize

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — American biochemist R. Bruce Merrifield was awarded the 1984 Nobel Prize in chemistry and an Italian-Dutch team of nuclear physicists shared the Nobel Prize in physics today.

The award to Merrifield, 63, of Crestfield, N.J., for developing a method for synthesizing peptides gave the United States a Nobelist for a 26th consecutive year. His work, done in the 1960s, facilitated the manufacture of drugs such as high blood pressure medicine, insulin and other hormone medications, and also was used in gene technology.

"I found out about it when I walked onto the floor at work this morning," Merrifield said from his office at New York's Rockefeller University. "I wasn't sure whether people were kidding or what." He was late for work at his laboratory and the cleaning woman broke the news to him, said Merrifield's secretary.

The Royal Swedish Academy of Sciences honored Carlo Rubbia, 50, of Italy, a professor at Harvard University, and Simon van der Meer, 59, of the Netherlands for isolating two previously undiscovered particles of matter called W and Z field particles.

Herwig Schopper, the director of CERN, the European nuclear research organization at Geneva, Switzerland, where they did their research, has called their discovery the most important since solid state transistors were invented — in 1948.

The Rubbia-van der Meer work culminated last year in their finding of particles believed to carry the "weak interaction force," one of the four basic forces of nature.

Merrifield first developed his synthesizing technique in the late 1950s, said Swedish Academy Professor Bengt Lindberg. It came into use in the 1960s but it was not until the last decade that it became "a basic tool that all laboratories use," Lindberg said.

The procedure entails attaching a protein to a polymer, or plastic, matrix. It then develops itself into a chain of peptide molecules. Proteins are basic to all living matter, and peptides are another organic substance containing amino acids.

The academy said his "simple and ingenious" method of obtaining peptides and proteins has been applied by other researchers to the field of nucleic acid chemistry.

Merrifield, a native of Fort Worth, Texas, described his prize-winning work as "an idea I had 25 years ago on how we can do chemical synthesis of compounds, particularly peptides, by anchoring them to some insoluble support.

Ramsey Speaks

A small group of supporters gathered Tuesday at the Pitt-Greenville Airport to hear Rufus Edmisten supporter House Speaker Liston Ramsey, who was introduced by Edmisten's brother David.

Ramsey said, "I'm traveling around the state by air on behalf of Democratic candidate Rufus Edmisten and defending the General Assembly which has come under attack by Congressman (Jim) Martin."

"Congressman Jim Martin had a lot to say in his campaign advertisements and press releases about doing away with certain state taxes," Ramsey continued.

"If he is talking about doing away with the portion of the inventory tax that applies to manufacture, he's talking about reducing revenues by $80 million a year," the speaker said.

Ramsey continued that it should be up to the local counties to keep the tax or abolish it.

Ramsey defended the $600 million increase in the state budget in July. Ramsey said Martin's proposal would have taken $200 million and used it to reduce taxes on big business in this state.

Small Businessmen Meet Agents Here

Small business representatives met with North Carolina industrial firm agents at a buying-selling conference held at the Greenville Sheraton today.

According to Pitt County Industrial Commission Executive Director John Chaffee, the meeting gave small business representatives the chance to meet directly with purchasing agents of some of the major corporations to establish new and to expand existing accounts. "This conference allowed the small business representatives to do something they couldn't do over the telephone," Chaffee said. "It allowed them to meet face to face with buyers and get a foot in the door so to speak."

The conference, being held in eastern North Carolina for the first time this year, is an annual event now in its 11th year. Meetings have traditionally been held in Piedmont and western cities including Raleigh, Charlotte, Asheville and Greensboro.

Holding the conference in Greenville has done several things for the area, Chaffee said. "It brought in a fairly large group of people and exposed them to what we have here," and also brought in business in the form of a small convention, he explained.

Buyers from R.J. Reynolds, Northern Telecom, Corning Electronics, Burlington Industries, Ingersoll-Rand, Barco Lounger, Burroughs Wellcome, Carolina Power and Light, Glaxo, Hackney Industries, Raychem Corp., Square D, IBM, Allied Bendix, Baker Perkins, Dupont, Phillip Morris, Weyerhaeuser, Outboard Marine Corp., W.R. Grace and the N.C. Department of Purchasing and Contracts attended the conference.

Stock And Market Reports

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market gave ground today, continuing Tuesday's re-treat.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials slipped .44 to 1,197.33 in the first half hour.

Losers outnumbered gainers by nearly 2 to 1 in the early tally of New York Stock Exchange-listed issues.

Analysts said the market was weighed down by confusion and uncertainty over the future course of the economy.

On Tuesday the government reported the first decline in industrial production since the end of the 1981-82 recession.

Today it said that utilization of production facilities also fell last month. Industry operated at 81.9 percent of capacity, down from 82.6 percent in August.

Some observers see such developments as evidence of a healthy slowing of the economy's growth rate. But others have questioned whether they might not signal the approach of a new business slump.

In a separate report, the Commerce Department said housing starts rose 8.9 percent in September. New building permits, however, fell 5.4 percent.

The market also has apparently been unsettled by late weakness in oil prices, which prompted a drop in many energy stocks Tuesday.

In the energy group today, Exxon slipped 1/8 to 44 1/2; Texaco 1/8 to 35 1/4, and Halliburton 1/2 to 30 3/4.

Ralston Purina led the active list, up 1/8 at 33 1/2. A block of almost 3.5 million shares of the stock traded at that price.

On Tuesday the Dow Jones industrial average dropped 5.19 to 1,197.77.

Declines outpaced advances by about 8 to 7 on the NYSE.

Big Board volume totaled 82.93 million shares, against 87.59 million in the previous session.

The NYSE's composite index fell .44 to 95.16. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was down 1.02 at 211.36.

Actress Peggy Ann Garner Dies At 53

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Peggy Ann Garner, a former child actress who won a special Academy Award as a teen-ager for her role as Frankie Nolan in "A Tree Grows in Brooklyn," has died at age 53.

Miss Garner died Tuesday of undisclosed causes in the Motion Picture & Television Hospital in Woodland Hills, said a nursing supervisor who would not give her name.

Miss Garner received a special

Oscar as the outstanding child actress of 1945, but she later left show business and worked as a real estate broker in the 1960s and as an automobile sales manager during the 1970s.

But she didn't give up hope of returning to Hollywood.

"I'm not through with show business," she said eight years ago. "I have an agent who is busy scouting the right parts for me. I'm confident something will come up."

outlay for the area would total $844.80 for fire-rescue, police, sanitation, street maintenance, street sign, engineering and inspection and recreation services.

Commissioners also heard reports from the planning and zoning office on existing regulations concerning placement of television dish antennae during the meeting.

The planning office is considering an amendment to the "accessory use" provisions of the zoning ordinance in order to specifically address the placement of television dish antennae and will present several alternative proposals at the board's meeting in November.

Current regulations treat television dish antennae as "accessory uses," meaning that the dishes come under the same ruling attached to tool sheds, kennels or other detached constructions located on properties within the city limits.

In residential districts, satellite antennae must be placed in rear yards and must set back five feet from side and rear property lines if 15 feet in height or less. If over 15 feet, they must meet the side yard setback requirements of the district in which they are located. On corner lots, front yard setbacks must be met along all rights-of-way. If an applicant so desires, he may place a dish antenna on the roof and is not subject to height requirements of the zoning district in which it is located. In commercial zoning districts, television dish antennae (and all accessory uses) must meet the setback requirements established for principal uses except when the dish is used for advertising purposes as in the case of establishments selling such antennae in which a 10 foot setback is required.

The proposals to be presented at the November commission meeting will address the following questions.

•What yard should television satellite antennae be permitted in — front, side, rear?

•Should they be allowed on roof tops in residential districts and in commercial districts? If so, should they be subject to the height requirements?

•Should television dishes be painted to blend with surrounding environments if placed on a roof?

•Should television dishes placed on the ground be buffered from rights-of-way and adjoining properties?

•If a buffer is required, of what type should it be, wood or masonry fence, earth berm, vegetation?

•Should there be size limitations, and if the dishes exceed these limitations, should additional restrictions be placed on them?

Comments concerning this information should be directed to the Planning and Zoning office.

Agenda items withdrawn from consideration included discussion of preliminary plats of Lynndale Townes and Moss Creek Townhomes and a request by Jamie Taylor, agent, to rezone approximately .498 acres located on the northwest corner of the Evans and Howell streets intersection from highway commercial to unoffensive industry.

Chargers Hope To Learn Lesson

By JIMMY DuPREE
Reflector Sports Writer
The Farmville Central Jaguars learned last Friday what it's like to play Greene Central after narrowly missing an upset against top-ranked SouthWest Edgecombe the previous week — the Rams took an 11-8 victory.
Now the Ayden-Grifton Chargers hope to avoid repeating the lesson as they prepare to host Greene Central following a 14-8 loss to SouthWest Edgecombe.

“(Greene Central's) playing good football right now,” Ayden-Grifton Coach Dwight Tart said. “Our kids have got to get up for the game.”
“It's all a matter of reaching the same peak. With us lacking in size, what we have to make up for is with desire. I feel like our guys have to get emotional every week, so I'm hoping it won't be a problem for us.”

“We've pretty much taken ourselves out of the Division I race, but we still have a shot at the Division II playoffs.”
Tart's first Charger squad will be trying to improve on its 4-2 overall mark and break into the win column against Eastern Carolina Conference competition.

“It's going to be a big challenge,” Tart said. “The SouthWest Edgecombe game was very emotional. I just hope we'll be able to come back. It's tough to get on that kind of mental high again.”
Running back Jerome Staton of SouthWest Edgecombe picked up 160 yards rushing and scored both Cougar touchdowns, but Ayden-Grifton's Kelvin Harris plowed through for 117 yards on the ground.
“Kelvin Harris has developed a very determined attitude over the last few weeks,” Tart said. “He's gotten himself on the right track to where he could become a college prospect.”
“He's always been strong and fast, but at the start of the season he was trying to use his speed too much. Now he's using his legs for power to get extra yardage. Our backs have been punishing people on tackles.”
“We were trying to avoid the big run against SouthWest. Staton gained over 150 yards, but he gained 97 of that on two carries.”
Tart said he has seen improvement during the season but still regrets the lack of size across the line.

“I think we're a much better team now than we were even a couple of weeks ago,” he said. “Our offensive line has begun to gel and do some more of the kind of things they have to.”

D.H. CONLEY
The D.H. Conley Vikings opened the season with three victories, but now the Vikings find themselves 3-3 overall after a 28-15 loss to White Oak last Friday.

“We were tied 7-7 at halftime; take away one big play and it's 7-0 at the half,” Conley Coach Donnie Bunn said. “In the first half, we played the best of any game we've played this year.”
“In the second half we were still aggressive, but we had breakdowns on our punting game that gave them field position within our 25-30 yard line five times. Our best punt went for five yards.

“Statistically, we were with them all the way. We knew we had a challenge in front of us. At first they sent five people to rush the punt, then seven, then 10.”

Bunn said the Vikings have been lining up 12 yards back on punts but will increase the margin if necessary.

Bunn was impressed by the performance of offensive guard Billy Crawford who — qt 5-7, 160 pounds — “played head up on a 6-3, 250 pound tackle and whipped him all night.”

West Carteret hosts the Vikings this week, and the Patriots have had anything but the success expected of them before the season began.

“At the beginning of the season,

More To Season Than W's, L's

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

Being 1-6 and insured of a losing season is tough, East Carolina Coach Ed Emory said yesterday at his weekly press conference. "It's tough on me, it's tough on the players, it's tough on the fans and those who have faith in our program."

"I'm disappointed that we can't have a winning season, but I'm a believer, not a dreamer. And I believe that this team with the right chemistry and opportunity can turn itself around. Right now, all we've got to play for is pride. All we need right now is a win. If we had beaten Temple, I think we would have beaten Central Michigan. If we had beaten Pittsburgh, we would have beaten Tulsa. And I don't think that N.C. State would have beaten Georgia Tech if they hadn't beaten us."

Being 1-6 isn't just "L's and W's", Emory said. "There's a lot that has contributed to it." Among those things, Emory said, were schedule — both who the Pirates played and where, officials, and a great deal of inexperience and youth on the defensive unit.

Tulsa insured that the Pirates would have a losing season Saturday night when it took a 31-20 win over the Bucs. "I had all the confidence in the world that we would win. I thought we were as prepared as well as any team I've been associated with. I thought the time had come for us to come out of our losing spin.

"But Tulsa is one hell of a football team, like I said last week. Their defensive team is the best we've faced, and they have a good offensive line too. Their quarterback was exceptional in the game too."

Emory said he still thought the Pirates should have won. But there were factors that hurt them. "That field was one of the worst I've ever been on. We have a lot of injuries from it. They had only two benches for the entire team to sit on. We went and got one from their side of the field, but they came and got it back. The sidelines were narrow and we were right up against the stands. And they had a band that sat right above us and pounded on 25 drums the entire time. No one could concentrate or hear what was being said to them. They didn't have the proper number of phones and even then, we couldn't hear on them. So we had little or no communication, either on the field or from the press box."

Emory added that South Carolina, a future Pirate foe, is 5-0 and has played all its games at home. "They haven't had to face the adversity we have. They didn't have to play Georgia between the hedges (at Georgia). They didn't beat Pitt, 45-21 at Pittsburgh."

Emory said that these things don't get you beat and didn't beat ECU, but they make it more difficult to win when a team is struggling.

"We didn't get anything from the officials either. We had 16 penalties called against us, and every one of them but one was called by a Missouri Valley official." A split crew was used, but Emory said the Southern Independent Officials Association members let the MVC officials dominate them. "They accepted 11 of those penalties, and they were lousy calls. The officials didn't throw those touchdown passes, but I don't think they wanted us to win. They did all in their power to keep us from moving the football."

The coach said the Pirates had been through a lot of adversity. "No football team in the country has gone through so much in seven football games, five of them on the road. So it ain't all black and white."

Emory said the Pirates gave up the big play too often, and too many times that's come in the second quarter. "We haven't scored a touchdown in the second quarter this year. We've been outscored 65-6. We've given up four touchdowns in the second quarter in the last two games, and all came on big plays. We're not a good enough team to come back in the third and fourth quarter, but we've still been in the game nearly every time."

Emory pointed out that the Pirates were really out of only one game, at Florida State, where they were down 38-10 as the final period opened. They trailed Temple, 14-0, were down to Central Michigan, 10-7, and later tied the Chippewas, 10-10; were behind State, 20-14, and had the ball in excellent field position twice; trailed Pitt, 14-3 and later 14-10, and trailed Tulsa, 24-13.

"We just haven't been a football team that has competed in the final period."

And Emory said the problems with pass defense can't be laid totally to the secondary. "We've had only nine sacks this year. Just four of them were made by linemen and only three by the defensive ends. Two of them, I really wouldn't call sacks."

"Last year after seven games, we had 25 sacks and in 1982, we had 22. Our linebackers (including defensive ends) are not getting their hands on the ball. None of them have an interception. So it's not all the backs. The backs are only as good as the people in front of them."

Another factor which hurt the Pirates was the absence of quarterback Darrell Speed, whom Emory said was hurt and never really recovered during the game. Ron Jones came on in the second quarter and played most of the rest of the way. "He did some good things, but he's had a number of passes dropped. Saturday, they (the receivers) had three they dropped that were right in their hands."

And, Emory said, the Pirates haven't been playing patsies. "Only one team we've played (Pittsburgh) has a losing record. Schedule is why and how you get ranked. Winning isn't the big reason you get ranked, it's schedule. With the proper schedule (home games), you can be ranked. South Carolina plays eight games at home this year and that's a major factor in their ranking."

East Carolina — which has played but twice in seven games at home so far — returns home this Saturday to face East Tennessee State at 2 p.m. in Ficklen Stadium. The Buccaneers come into the game ranked 19th on the Associated Press' Division I-AA poll.

they were one of the teams picked to win the Coastal Conference championship," Bunn said. "They've changed their offense from a split back to the wishbone and had some success with that approach. We've got to go in there with our heads up."

"It's always harder to get back up after a loss, but if we win this game we'll be right back in the thick of the conference race."

NORTH PITT

Most observers considered the Panthers' matchup against C.B. Aycock their best chance for a victory in 1984, but North Pitt will have to find a win somewhere else as the Falcons took a 21-15 decision.

Aycock had scored just three points in six previous outings while the Panthers had managed a pair of touchdowns, but the Falcons held North Pitt to 148 yards total offense to improve their Eastern Carolina Conference mark to 1-2. North Pitt slipped to 0-3 in the league and 0-6 overall.

"We had a pretty good drive going for a chance to tie the score at the end but dropped the ball on second down and couldn't do anything from there," North Pitt Coach Larry Bolger said. "We had excellent field position in the first half and never took advantage of it. I expected to run the ball a little better. But if we can protect our freshman (quarterback Calvin Hunter), he can put the ball in the air."

"We tried to set up the big play, but we had a shot pattern by a receiver take us out of that situation. (Hunter) has thrown the ball well the past few games."

The Panthers have the unusual situation of playing a non-conference foe — Plymouth — after three league games. Plymouth is currently 3-2 in the Northeastern 3-A battle while 3-3 overall.

"We have a little relief from our conference schedule," Bolger admitted. "We want to try to improve. Our kids realize what's going on, and we've gotten to where we can play a good half of football. We just haven't got the strength at this point to sustain it for an entire game."

"We're young and weak; we're going to have an established weight program like other schools have — that's top priority with a fund raiser now."

FARMVILLE CENTRAL

The Jaguars held Greene Central to just 126 yards total offense, but the play of the Farmville Central offensive line contributed to the 11-8 overtime loss.

Kenneth Radford kicked a 19-yard field goal in overtime to give the Rams the winning margin. The Jaguars completed a seven-yard pass on their first play but lost yardage on a second-down running play. Quarterback Bobby Evans was sacked on third down, and a screen pass failed on Farmville's fourth try.

"I expected it to be the type of game it was defensively," Farmville Coach Dixon Sauls said. "We played well (defensively) most of the game but had some breakdowns that hurt us."

"Our offensive line play hurt us. They did not execute up to their abilities and did not play aggressively."

"They got an excellent snap (on the field goal attempt), a good spot and the kid made a tough kick under pressure. We were close to getting it, but he made it."

The Jaguars narrowly missed upsetting top-ranked SouthWest Edgecombe the week before the Greene Central game, and Sauls said that may have affected the Jags' performance.

"Overall, it was a very emotional effort; the kind of thing we were trying to guard against after playing SouthWest," Sauls said.

The Jaguars, who slipped to 0-2 in the Eastern Carolina 3-A Conference race and 2-4 overall, travels to hapless C.B. Aycock this week. The Falcons picked up their first win of the season last Friday at North Pitt.

"At times they have played very well in their games," Sauls said. "They're coming off a win, and we're not. When you're losing, it's real easy not to make the effort it takes for a win."

"Our senior leadership must rise to the forefront at this point of the season. We have lost some momentum and confidence; we have to be determined enough to turn our season around."

"A win would certainly help our morale. If we could regroup, we could still make something happen with our season."

In other area games, unbeaten Jamesville travels to Aurora and Chocowinity entertains Belhaven in a pair of Tobacco Belt games, while Tarboro visits Roanoke, Bertie is at Washington and Williamston goes to Roanoke Rapids in the Northeastern Conference.

Snow May Chill Hopes

DENVER (AP) — The Denver Broncos' white and snowy football welcome for the Green Bay Packers — broadcast for posterity on national television — may have had a chilling effect on the city's hopes to attract a major-league baseball club, officials said.

Mayor Federico Pena, the city's foremost baseball booster, thought the blizzard hurt Denver's image and, in particular, its ability to attract major-league baseball and more convention business.

"It was distressing . . . a very unfortunate set of circumstances," the mayor told the Rocky Mountain News on Tuesday. "A lot of people in this city had worked very, very hard to make sure that the national audience was left with a good impression of Denver."

The city already is battling an image that it is snowbound half the year, the mayor said, and the timing of Monday's relatively early-in-the-season storm didn't help.

From a public relations standpoint, the ABC-TV commentators' remarks during the Bronco game were a nightmare, too, officials said.

Weather conditions were described variously by Frank Gifford as "miserable," "treacherous" and "weird."

"No, folks, this is not Sarajevo," Gifford cracked after returning from a commercial break midway through the game.

Pena said he thinks Colorado's international reputation as a skiers' haven has indirectly damaged Denver's economic-development efforts.

Mauch Returns As Angel Chief

ANAHEIM, Calif. (AP) — Once certain he had put managing a baseball team behind him forever, Gene Mauch found he couldn't fight the lure of an exciting pennant race.

"For two years, I was dead-certain I would never manage again," Mauch said. "When the pennant race heated up a few weeks ago, I felt a few things going in my stomach, and I liked it."

After watching the California Angels battle for the American League's Western Division championship down to the last week before losing out to the Kansas City Royals, Mauch on Tuesday accepted the position as the Angels' manager for the second time.

The change marks the club's 10th managerial change in the past 15 years.

Mauch replaces John McNamara, who turned down the Angels' offer to return in 1983 and is considered in line for the Boston Red Sox's managing job.

He managed California for two years and led them to the AL West title in 1982. But, after the Angels built a two games to none lead on Milwaukee in the league championship series only to lose the next three contests, he quit the post.

Mauch had served as California's director of player personnel since Sept. 17, 1983 and feels that he was never really away.

"I never really wanted to leave baseball; the reasons were very personal, I've never discussed them and I don't think I ever will," Mauch said. "I don't think I've really been gone. I've been hanging around. Even in 1983, I saw, or watched on TV, every Angel game."

"I don't know what requirements there are to be a major league manager, but you can't do it without enthusiasm. I'm as excited and enthusiastic as I've ever been in my life."

Open Pay For Runners

NEW YORK (AP) — Top runners in the New York City marathon will receive open payments this year, rather than the secret payments made to some runners during the past eight years, city and race officials have announced.

The winning male and female runners will get $25,000 apiece out of total payments of $250,000, said Fred LeBow, president of the New York Road Runners Club, which stages the 26-mile race. A complete list of prizes would be released before the race, he said.

The prize money does not include appearance payments to guarantee some top runners will compete here, LeBow said Tuesday.

Organizers also will pay about $300,000 to the city to help defray an estimated $610,000 it spends on police, ambulance and other services for the race, according to Mayor Edward I. Koch and LeBow.

Sparky Wants An Encore

DETROIT (AP) — Detroit Tigers Manager Sparky Anderson wasn't satisfied with becoming the first skipper in major league history to win World Series championships in both leagues.

He wants an encore. "They will win again in 1985," Anderson told an estimated 60,000 cheering and waving baseball fans Tuesday during a downtown ticker-tape parade and rally honoring the Tigers.

"I don't think all of you realize what a great team you have," said Anderson, who won two championships with the National League Cincinnati Reds.

The downtown scene looked like the first snow of the winter season as confetti floated down from skyscrapers onto the noisy crowd along the route from Tiger Stadium to downtown Kennedy Square.

The crowd roared its approval as each car unloaded its occupants, reserving its loudest applause for pitching ace Jack Morris, outfielder Kirk Gibson and shortstop Alan Trammell, voted the series' Most Valuable Player.

Tigers owner and Domino's Pizza founder Tom Monaghan called the show of support "incredible, incredible."

"I don't think anyone went to work today — or to school," Monaghan said as he emerged from his convertible before mounting the stage to chat with Gov. James Blanchard and other waiting dignitaries.

"Bless you, boys," Blanchard said, repeating a team slogan as he presented Monaghan and former Tigers owner John Fetzer with a proclamation declaring "Detroit Tigers Week" in Michigan.

The peaceful noon rally contrasted with the violent celebration outside Tiger Stadium following the Tigers' victory over the San Diego Padres Sunday night, which left one man dead, sent at least 80 to hospital emergency rooms and led to 34 arrests.

"The scene today is a scene of the real Detroit," said City Council President Erma Henderson.

"They're peaceful, they're happy, they're Detroit," added Councilman Nicholas Hood.

Police Chief William Hart said the behavior of Tuesday's crowd was not that different from Sunday night's celebration.

"The majority of the crowd the other night was well-behaved," he said.

Hart estimated the crowd at 50,000, which did not include the 10,000 along the parade route.

"I can't remember the last time there was a ticker-tape parade," said Pat Louttit, 31, of suburban West Bloomfield Township, who came down with her husband, Doug, 31, and their 2-year-old son, Brett.

"It will probably be another 20 years before it happens again, so we brought the little one along."

"Paper, paper," Brett shouted, pointing up at the drifting confetti.

"He loves parades," Mrs. Louttit said.

"This is incredible," said Gibson, the hero of Sunday's World Series finale with two home runs and five RBI. "Detroit, the Detroit Tigers and Kirk Gibson — we've all come a long way together."

Gibson then re-enacted a nationally televised Tiger Stadium scene by thrusting clenched fists into the air as he did during one of his home-run trots.

Shortly after the parade, Gibson and teammate Dave Rozema escaped serious injury when Gibson's Jeep overturned on a downtown street after another car turned in front of it, police Sgt. Daniel Carr said.

Gibson's left shoulder was injured slightly, while Rozema bruised his right hand, police said.

"The two ballplayers and some citizens righted the Jeep and they went on their way," Carr said.

Irony In Officiating Call

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON
AP Sports Writer

It was ironic that the two officials involved in the non-interception ruling against Oklahoma that gave Texas a chance to kick a game-tying field goal on the final play last Saturday were both from the Sooners' own Big Eight Conference.

There is a growing feeling that teams are asking for trouble by using split crews such as this one, which consisted of a referee, head linesman and field judge from the Big Eight and an umpire, line judge and back judge from the Southwest Conference, of which Texas is a member.

"The feeling is, 'You've got your three and we've got our three,'" says Dave Nelson, long-time secretary of the NCAA Football Rules Committee. "The officials don't want split crews and the supervisors of officials don't want it. The only ones who want it are the coaches."

And the coaches want "their" officials to side with them. Oklahoma's Barry Switzer thought at first that the original call on the controversial end zone pass was made by an SWC official and said: "There's a Big Eight official standing there watching him (strong safety Keith Stanberry) catch the ball. He's looking at the Southwest Conference guy signal him out of bounds and he won't fight for us."

Another irony — Big Eight games have seven officials, but obviously neither Texas nor Oklahoma would have agreed to four from the other one's conference. The SWC still uses six officials.

All the hullabaloo brings to mind a Boston College-Tennessee game which had a split officiating crew. The referee, of course, was behind the offensive line and the umpire was behind the defensive line. Of the other four officials, the two from the Southeastern Conference were on one side of the field and the ECAC pair on the other side.

As the teams headed for the dressing rooms at halftime, BC Coach Jack Bicknell accosted one of the ECAC officials and asked, "When are you going to give us an interference call?"

Replied the official, "When are you going to throw a pass to our side of the field?"

With all the fuss about the officiating, overlooked was another factor that cost Oklahoma the game — college football's exciting, but ridiculous, two-point conversion.

When the Sooners scored late in the third quarter to take a 15-10 lead, they were forced to go for two points. Had they kicked the extra point for a 16-10 lead, Texas could have won with a touchdown and "automatic" extra point of its own. But a 17-10 lead would have forced Texas into the decision-making stage had the Longhorns scored a touchdown.

The two-point try failed, so when Oklahoma took a deliberate safety with 2:10 left in the game, it made the score 15-12 instead of 16-12, which would have forced the Longhorns to go for a touchdown on the last play instead of the game-tying field goal.

Ever since its inception, the two-point conversion has worked against a team that has the lead, even though barely 10 percent of all conversion tries are two-pointers. And since 94 percent of all extra-point kicks are successful, compared to around 40 percent for a two-point run or pass, the team that scores first almost invariably will kick the point for a 7-0 lead.

For example, say one team has a seven-point lead but surrenders a late touchdown and loses on a two-point conversion. It may decide a winner, but does it really prove which is the better team?

Try this on for size: Eliminate the extra-point kick and make a team run or pass on ALL conversions, regardless of whether they're worth one point or two.

"I think that's a great idea," says Nelson. "You're talking about a 94 percent rate of success on extra-point kicks. At least there's some element of chance with a two-point conversion."

"I'd like to propose that to the American Football Coaches Association's Rules Committee. But I think you'd have a tough time selling it to the coaches. Most of them think Ronald Reagan's too liberal."

It's time to lessen the impact of the foot on football. Although this next suggestion is more radical that eliminating the conversion kick, this corner also would like to see a team allowed to try a field goal only after advancing the ball a certain distance or having possession of it for a certain period of time. The numbers would have to be worked out.

In 1958, major-college teams kicked 108 field goals. The next year, the goalposts were widened. Last year, the number of successful field goals passed 1,300. Yet a field goal is still worth the same three points it was in 1958.

Toward the same end, the rulesmakers have under advisement for next year a proposal that would put the ball on the 25-yard line instead of the 15 when Division I-A, II and III playoff games go into overtime.

Presently, each side gets the same number of chances in overtime, starting with a first-and-10 at the other team's 15-yard line, until a winner emerges. If the team which has the ball first fails to score, the other team has only to kick a field goal of approximately 32 yards to win the game.

By moving the ball to the 25, it would mean a riskier 42-yard field goal and probably would force a team to run a couple of plays first.

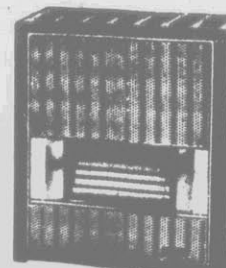

Nebraska Coach Tom Osborne has never been known as a comedian, but you can bet there was some side-splitting when he hinted that the Cornhuskers' next four games — against Colorado, Kansas State, Iowa State and Kansas — won't be as easy as they seem.

He said 5-1 Nebraska's meeting with 1-5 Colorado on Saturday "is probably the first time this year I've been concerned with complacency. Football is an emotional game and we can't go to Colorado with the idea we just have to play for awhile."

The gap between the Big Eight's "Big Four" — Nebraska, Oklahoma, Oklahoma State and Missouri — and the others is so wide it wouldn't fit into the Grand Canyon. Nebraska may not even have to show up to beat those people.

Harpsichord Maker Turns To Choirs

HENDERSON, N.C. (AP) — Realizing there wouldn't be much business for a harpsichord maker in such a small town as Henderson, Philp M. Young decided to become a choir director.

Actually, that's not quite how it happened 25 years ago. But if anyone in Henderson decides a harpsichord is a must for that empty corner in the living room, Young can likely fill the order.

It might take a while, however, there's little room for hobbies in a schedule that includes overseeing a nine-choir church music program, composing, transcribing, designing organs and leading workshops.

Young is a minister of music at the First Baptist Church in Henderson, where his wife, Mary Lou, is assistant minister of music and organist. They have been in those jobs since September of 1959, when they were hired on a trial basis after an interview that followed their wedding day by only a week.

Though no one ever told them so, they apparently passed the "trial," and they have chosen to stay on all that time despite doors that have opened to bigger cities and higher salaries through their many talents.

Young's work is recognized widely in church music circles; he's had more than 50 anthems, 20 handbell music pieces and two handbell music collections published. Those works have brought him several awards — most recent for the hymn "O Gracious Lord, Accept Our Praise." It has been selected as the Southern Baptist Convention's Hymn of the Month for October and Hymn of the Year for 1984-85.

He also was commissioned by the N.C. Baptist State Convention to write a hymn to help celebrate the convention's 150th anniversary in 1979. His "Fanfare With Alleluias" is the best-selling of all the hymns commissioned by the Southern Baptist Convention's Church Music Department, and is "my only hymn that's been performed at halftime of a football game, with the band and chorus."

The Youngs' music program at First Baptist also is well-known, featuring nine vocal and instrumental choirs. They are especially proud of the youth handbell choir, which has performed up and down the East Coast and has been invited almost annually to play at Duke University Chapel.

Much of his transcribing involves adapting work for handbells.

When he's not directing or composing, Young might be found on the job as a consultant for an organ company. He has designed organs for several N.C. churches, with his larger projects including those at St. Michael's Episcopal in Raleigh.

Hunt, Helms Camps Spar Over TV Ads

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer

Sen. Jesse Helms says his Democratic opponent has spread so many distortions it should open a "dial-a-falsehood line," but a spokesman for Gov. Jim Hunt says it's Helms who has been distorting the facts.

Hunt spokesman Will Marshall responded to Helms' charge, saying, "For 19 months of negative television ads (Helms has) been not only attacking Governor Hunt directly, but distorting his record."

But Helms said Tuesday he has had enough of Hunt's "outrageous" criticisms.

"I have reached the point that enough is enough," Helms, a Republican seeking re-election, said at a Winston-Salem rally. "We're going to talk about Mr. Hunt's record for the remainder of this campaign."

Helms repeated the claim he made during Saturday's debate that Hunt had borrowed money to keep the budget balanced and had increased the cost of running the governor's office.

Court Refuses To Halt Study

WASHINGTON (AP) — Lawyers for Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., have failed to get the U.S. Supreme Court to block the Federal Elections Commission from considering charges of election law violations.

Chief Justice Warren E. Burger on Tuesday denied the emergency request by Helms' campaign committee and two conservative groups with ties to Helms, the National Congressional Club and Jefferson Marketing Inc.

Meanwhile, Gov. Jim Hunt, who is challenging Helms' bid for a third term, called the legal maneuver an effort to stop public disclosure of the FEC's investigatory findings before the election.

"Obviously, there must be something awful big they are trying to hide," Hunt told The News and Observer of Raleigh on Tuesday. "Sounds like to me they are acting awfully guilty."

Carter Wrenn, the club's director, said, "We're back in the due process route."

He told the newspaper the action was intended to protect constitutional rights, and he hoped voters would interpret the action as "looking like we're just trying to get a fair hearing."

The court record in the case has been sealed at the request of the Helms for Senate Committee, the club and Jefferson Marketing.

Burger's action was the latest in a flurry of legal activity since U.S. District Judge Louis F. Oberdorfer ordered the FEC on Oct. 4 to show cause by this Friday why it should not make a decision before Nov. 6 on a complaint filed by Rep. Charles E. Rose, D-N.C., in 1982 about the activities of the two conservative groups.

An appeals court stayed that timetable on Monday at the request of Brice M. Clagett, an attorney for the club and the Helms campaign. He argued in papers filed last Friday that the FEC should not be forced to rule before the election.

But in staying Oberdorfer's order, the appeals court indicated the FEC was still free to proceed with its business. It also ordered the FEC to respond by noon Thursday to Clagett's arguments.

Helms' campaign committee and the two conservative groups filed the emergency request to block the investigation in addition to pursuing the appeal through normal channels.

A footnote to the appeals court order indicated that the FEC planned to take up the complaint Tuesday in an executive session. It was not known whether that happened or what the outcome was.

Entertainer Don Reno Dies

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. (AP) — Don Reno, a bluegrass pioneer who wrote more than 500 songs and recorded 60 albums during nearly a half-century career in country music, died early today at the University of Virginia Medical Center.

Reno, 58, a Haywood County, N.C., native, had been admitted to the hospital in June for treatment of a circulatory ailment. He had been a Lynchburg resident since 1976.

Best known for his distinctive style of banjo picking, Reno began his performing career at the age of 12 in Spartanburg, S.C. Later, after a stint with Arthur Smith and the Carolina Cracker Jacks, Reno was hired by Bill Monroe.

Reno's best-known tune was probably "Feuding Banjos," a duet recorded in 1955 with Arthur Smith. That song later became "Dueling Banjos," the theme for the movie "Deliverance."

In addition to his wife, Reno is survived by three sons, three daughters and two sisters. A funeral service will be conducted at 1 p.m. Thursday in Whitten Timberlake Chapel in Lynchburg. Interment will be at Spring Hill Cemetery.

State Treasurer Harlan Boyles said Monday that North Carolina's outstanding debt wasn't comparable to the federal deficit.

In Charlotte, Hunt said at a news conference that Helms "has voted for tax breaks worth hundreds of billions of dollars for oil interests, and they have returned the favor by pumping hundreds of thousands of dollars into his campaign."

Hunt said the incumbent is working for the "radical right" at the expense of North Carolinians. He said Helms' list of supporters "reads like a Who's Who of the extreme right."

"The Helms empire lies at the center of a national network of ultra-right groups," he said. "And their hero is Jesse Helms, not Ronald Reagan or George Bush."

Helms couldn't be reached for comment, but he criticized Hunt on Monday for "attacking these fine Americans who have done nothing but stand up for their God and country."

In Asheville, Hunt brought up the issue of Social Security.

"When Jim Hunt goes to the U.S. Senate, we're going to stop debating every two years whether we are going to keep Social Security," Hunt said during a rally at Asheville High School. "Our parents and grandparents have earned it and they deserve it."

Republican gubernatorial candidate Rep. Jim Martin stepped up his attacks on Democratic nominee Rufus Edmisten, whom Martin said had used his job as attorney general to protect and reward "political cronies."

Martin also asked a group of school principals and assistant principals in Raleigh to support his call for merit pay for teachers — despite what he acknowledged were unanswered questions about how to evaluate teachers fairly.

"No, it can't be done perfectly, neither can you evaluate students' work perfectly," said Martin. "But isn't it far better to evaluate the work of our students than to not evaluate it?"

Martin's proposals to eliminate the intangibles and inventory taxes drew criticism from State House Speaker Liston Ramsey, who said they were based on "third-grade arithmetic."

Ramsey said doing away with the taxes would cost the state $264 million, and that Martin's proposal for eliminating the sales tax on food and some drugs for the elderly would cost another $245 million.

"Where he would get all this money to replace the loss is a mystery to me," said Ramsey. Martin has said a $600 million surplus this year could have been used to eliminate the taxes.

State Sen. Bob Jordan, D-Montgomery, candidate for lieutenant governor, told a senior citizens' meeting at the North Carolina State Fair in Raleigh that he favored more state-funded senior centers and adult day-care programs.

The American Security Council, a Washington-based pro-defense coalition, announced the following ratings of the state's congressional delegation, with 100 a perfect score: Sens. Jesse Helms and John East, both 100; and Reps. Walter Jones, 50; Tim Valentine, 80; Charles Whitley, 90; Ike Andrews, 33; Stephen Neal, 50; Robin Britt, 40; Charles Rose, 30; Bill Hefner, 70; Jim Martin, 89; Jim Broyhill, 90; and James Clarke 30.

Phyllis George's New Role On 'CBS News' Show Reflects TV Changes

NEW YORK (AP) — Phyllis George is not Diane Sawyer, but CBS News is not apologizing for putting the former Miss America and current sidekick to Jimmy the Greek on the struggling "CBS Morning News."

Miss George, who contributes wholesomeness, chirpy banter with The Greek and celebrity profiles to CBS' "NFL Today" football show, will join the "CBS Morning News" on Monday as the probable permanent replacement for Ms. Sawyer, who makes her debut on "60 Minutes" Sunday night.

"Whether it's a tryout or permanent I don't know," said Jon Katz, executive producer of the "Morning News." "I don't make those decisions."

A source at CBS News, who spoke on the condition of anonymity, said that Ed Joyce, president of CBS News, and Howard Stringer, vice president, favored Miss George, "and barring an unforeseeable catastrophe, she's the choice."

For his part, Katz doesn't object. "I'm not the least bit embarrassed by Phyllis George, whose role will be a strong one, primarily as a feature person in the area of lifestyles," said Katz. "She brings interview skills and has TV experience. She's a warm person with a family, and the 'Morning News' desperately needs someone who relates to families and women."

Miss George is married to John Y. Brown, the former governor of Kentucky, and they have two children.

The apparent choice of Miss George is a reflection that the morning news shows, more than any other network news broadcasts, are hybrid programs that must be all things to all people. They wake up viewers with hard news about the world, as well as softer news about themselves. They also appeal to the dawn's different constituencies: the early-rising professional with a train to catch and the housebound viewer with time to kill.

Katz, a former newspaper executive who has been in charge of the "Morning News" since April, sees the broadcast emerging toward "an electronic newsmagazine." As such, there will be contributing specialists.

Business reporter Robert Krulwich of National Public Radio made his debut Tuesday by using a mound of dollar bills and a star-spangled vacuum cleaner to explain the connection between interest rates and the deficit.

"The mandate here," said Katz, "is to provide a broadcast that is distinctly different, that applies the same high journalistic standards to business, sports, popular culture, consumer affairs, health and science — the same elements that a good newspaper brings."

"The Washington Post runs horoscopes and comics. It has a style section. Why is it so controversial when TV covers the same subjects?"

"The real significance of what's happening is the fact we're breaking new ground, we're getting away from the talk-show mentality."

Steve Friedman, executive producer of NBC's rival "Today," said CBS does interviews, "more than 'GMA' and 'Today.'" "To fill two hours a day, five days a week, 52 weeks a year, the interview is the staple of the morning programs," he said.

"Contributors are important," added Friedman, "but they cannot sustain without someone to hold them together. A gaggle of contributors, to me, means one thing:

Jesse Jackson May Join Cast During 'Saturday Night' Stint

By FRED ROTHENBERG
AP Television Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — The Rev. Jesse Jackson says his appearance as host of this week's "Saturday Night Live" continues the tradition of black leaders seeking new audiences for their messages.

His mentor, the Rev. Martin Luther King, went on the "Tonight" show when Harry Belafonte was filling in for Johnny Carson. Then, Jackson said, there was hand-wringing over whether serious black ministers should do interviews in Playboy and Penthouse magazines.

"It's all about communicating," Jackson said. "If in the process of watching this show, someone is informed, or inspired, or enlightened, or made to feel good, and made to feel glad, then we will have achieved our mission."

Jackson spoke Tuesday at a news conference in the posh Rainbow Room, with its panoramic view of New York City, 65 floors above the Rockefeller Center ice rink, where the cheapest dinner entree is cornish hen at $16.75. From there, the one-time Democratic presidential candidate continued his national campaign with one-liners and inspirational phrases.

"Poor people may very well laugh more than rich people," Jackson said. "Laughter is a form of therapy. You have to be strong to laugh. You have to be strong to smile through the tears. You have to be strong to keep politics in your head, and not in your heart."

As host of NBC's late-night comedy show Saturday, Jackson said he would be offering a different audience a rerun, in effect, of the themes raised by his Rainbow Coalition's campaign for the presidency. Then and now, it touched on issues of the poor, justice and fairness in America.

When producers asked the "SNL" audience to name their preference among the half-dozen Democratic presidential candidates earlier this year, Jackson was the runaway leader of the straw poll — until the musical group ZZ Top was added to the ballot.

Dick Ebersol, the show's executive producer, said he decided to invite Jackson after hearing his inspirational speech to the Democratic convention last July. Jackson will receive the standard host's fee of $5,000.

That payment, Ebersol said, would go to Jackson the citizen, not Jackson the politician. To ensure compliance with federal guidelines on campaign fairness, NBC has assigned a lawyer to monitor the "SNL" script. But Ebersol said the show is safe as long as Jackson sticks to satire and doesn't take "a clear position in support of one candidate."

Jackson invited the Republicans to come up with a host "as talented as I am," but said that was impossible — his only challenger "is running for president."

Jackson said part of his message is to raise consciousness about the limited representation of blacks in key positions in all areas of the media, including TV. "Television is not rainbow enough," he said.

Jackson also is campaigning to have a black comic, Dwight Smith, worked into this week's script, and he's already persuaded Ebersol to give the stage to the gospel singer Andrae Crouch Saturday night.

Jackson has discussed the absence of blacks on the show's writing staff and cast. "There should be a legacy to (Eddie) Murphy," he said of the black comic who got his start on "SNL" and left for Hollywood stardom.

Jackson says he can't sing, but he knows he can be funny. He's writing some of the show's material and offering the staff humorous recollections from the campaign trail.

He said he also might trade in his traditional leading-man role for some ensemble character parts.

Charlotte Develops Unique Hospital System

By TOM MINEHART
AP Business Writer

CHARLOTTE (AP) — University Memorial Hospital will be more than a "state of the art" hospital when it opens in January — it will be a key part of a system unique in the nation and a model for hospitals of the future, officials say.

"This is the only comprehensive system of health care in the United States," said Al Pruitt, spokesman for Charlotte Memorial Hospital, the hub of the system. "This is a new concept. Inquiries are already coming in from around the nation."

The system provides varying levels of care at varying costs, depending on the patients' needs. For example, a patient who has had heart surgery at Charlotte Memorial Hospital, where room rates average $515 a day, may recuperate at University Memorial Hospital, where rates will average $310 per day.

Other patients may go to the Oaks Nursing Home, or, if they need the lowest level of care, the Magnolias Rest Home at $590 per month. Other facilities under the Charlotte-Mecklenburg Hospital Authority are the Charlotte Rehabilitation Hospital and Huntersville Hospital.

"Health care has been late in applying good business practices from the private sector," Pruitt said. "In order to compete, for some systems to survive given the reduction in payments from federal and state sources for patient care, some hospitals have to learn good management practices. Rather than being forced to do it, we are taking the lead."

The system is taking advantages of an economy of scale by pooling its best managers, by combining services like laundry, computers and telecommunications and through group purchasing.

An independent expert on hospital management said other hospitals have operated nursing homes for years, but he agreed that the Charlotte hospital system is "on the cutting edge of change."

"We're basically talking about vertical integration," said Rick Lee, public policy director for the Washington Business Group on Health, which represents large employers in health-care matters. "They've got it from birth to death, from the least intensive to the most intensive level of care. That's the kind of hospital system that's going to be profitable in the long run."

"The concept is very well known — it's just a matter of putting the rubber to the road," he said. "They (Charlotte) may be out in front there."

Since 1981, Charlotte Memorial's 3,500 patient-care employees have been under a merit pay system, which is also an unusual practice that may become commonplace, Pruitt said. Eventually, all of the system's 4,600 patient-care employees will be paid according to their performance.

University Memorial Hospital, taking shape in north-eastern Charlotte amid several other projects near the University of North Carolina at Charlotte, will be the most advanced hospital in the region, Pruitt said. The 130 beds are laid out in six corridors radiating out from nursing stations on each of six floors. Each patient room will be private and within 36 feet of a nursing station.

"It's a prototype in that it's the minimum size — 130 beds — where a hospital can operate efficiently," he said. "With anything below 130, the expenses of operating the hospital are out of proportion."

The $15 billion hospital will have all the normal hospital services, including surgery, emergency, labwork and labor and delivery. If necessary, a second patient tower of the same "snowflake" design can be added, he said.

Pruitt said the new concepts are largely the work of Dr. Harry Nurkin, who became president of the 901-bed Charlotte Memorial Hospital in 1981 and of the hospital authority in 1983.

"He knew that health care management had to change ... to produce a comprehensive system where quality care can be provided at the lowest cost," Pruitt said.

From Oct. 1, 1981 until Sept. 30 of this year, Charlotte Memorial did not raise room rates. "That is unprecedented in the United States — not to raise room rates for three years," he said.

On Oct. 1, room rates rose by 2.8 percent. That's still less than the average 12 percent increase nationwide, said Pruitt.

The hospital system, which is totally self-supported, has a long-range strategic plan that includes a new rehabilitation hospital, a women's hospital, new ambulatory care centers and programs designed to allow chronically ill people to stay at home.

The system is working partly because there are only two other major hospitals in Charlotte — Presbyterian and Mercy — while many cities have dozens of competitors.

"We have a unique opportunity in Charlotte in that we don't have the high competitive situation many cities have," Pruitt said.

IN THE STATE

No Clues In Double Death

NEW BERN, N.C. (AP) — Florida police say they have no further clues in the apparent murder-suicide of a Craven County commissioner and his wife except that the couple had marital difficulties.

Sgt. John Methvin of the Metro (Dade) County, Fla., Police Department said Tuesday Dade police knew of no history of violence or disturbances in the home of Robert and Agnes Webb although relatives indicated that Mrs. Webb was afraid of her husband.

Webb died Monday from a single shot to the head, while his wife was shot two or three times in the abdomen, neck and face, Dade Detective William Saladrigas said.

Saladrigas said Mrs. Webb, 46, left the couple's home in Havelock, N.C., about three weeks ago and that her 48-year-old husband obtained information on her whereabouts and followed her to the Miami area.

Relatives told police they heard an argument begin after arriving at the home of Mrs. Webb's aunt, Medea Calzada. They told police they heard several shots and found Webb and Mrs. Webb in another room.

Disaster Relief Supplied

WILMINGTON (AP) — State and federal officials say 82 percent of victims of Hurricane Diana from three counties who applied for housing assistance since President Reagan's disaster declaration three weeks ago have been served.

Brunswick, New Hanover and Pender counties were designated for Individual and Public Assistance which provides loans, temporary housing, and in some cases, individual grants.

The Temporary Housing Program has assisted 307 of 376 eligible applicants in the three counties.

Case Closed On Child's Death

HICKORY, N.C. (AP) — Police have closed the books on the death of Keith Purdue, but officers say people continue to call about the case.

The 3½-year-old boy was found suffocated inside his father's toolbox Saturday, more than a week after he was reported missing. The death was ruled accidental after a police investigation.

Hickory police and some city officials reported a flurry of telephone calls and direct contacts from people questioning that finding.

Lt. Robert Smith said the calls, which had slowed to a trickle by late Tuesday, didn't surprise him because of the level of community involvement in the highly publicized case. "I was expecting more calls, not that we wanted more," he said. "We're going to bear the brunt of it for a while."

Police remained emphatic in their judgment.

"There is absolutely no evidence to show anything happened other than what we concluded," said Smith, who headed a six-man investigation team that spent more than 400 man-hours on the case. "The case is closed."

East Spencer Mayor Sentenced

SALISBURY, N.C. (AP) — East Spencer Mayor Charles Ramsey has been found guilty of indecent exposure and has been ordered to undergo psychiatric evaluation.

Rowan County District Judge Bob Warren postponed sentencing the 27-year-old Ramsey until Nov. 13 to allow time for the mental examination. He could be sentenced to six months in prison and fined $500.

Ramsey was charged with one count of the misdemeanor after a service station attendant said he walked into the Shell Quality Mark in Salisbury wearing light blue, lace-trimmed, see-through women's panties.

Cashier Terry Ludwig said Ramsey stayed five minutes, requested matches and approached within 2 feet of her. She said she wrote down the license number on his pickup truck as he drove away.

Pigs Die In NCSU Research Fire

RALEIGH (AP) — More than 200 pigs that were part of a long-term genetics project at North Carolina State University died in a fire on Tuesday at the school's research farm, authorities said.

Five years of research is "down the drain," said O. Wayne Robison, an N.C. State animal science professor who was conducting research with the goal of improving reproductive capabilities in hogs.

The fire broke out about 3 p.m. in one of several barns on the farm complex, located just south of Raleigh, said L.D. Warner, chief of the Swift Creek Volunteer Fire Department.

Warner said he suspected the first, which apparently started in the attic of the barn, was sparked by an electrical malfunction. About 10 firefighters fought the blaze for about 15 minutes, he said.

Robison said 10 sows out of 28 were rescued, but only five or six young pigs survived.

High Point Men Charged

HIGH POINT, N.C. (AP) — Two High Point men, believed to be from Nigeria or Liberia, are in Guilford County jail under $100,000 bond each, charged with possessing with intent to distribute more than six pounds of marijuana and five ounces of heroin.

Ifeanyi Monu, 30, also known as Ifeanyi Moun, and Adebayo Adeniyi Euba, 27, were arrested Friday at their residence by federal Drug Enforcement Administration agents.

A search of the house turned up the heroin and marijuana, according to arrest records.

Pilot Counties Chosen

RALEIGH (AP) — Four counties have been selected to participate in a pilot project for family preservation.

If the project is successful, it will serve as model for similar programs across North Carolina, state officials say.

The counties selected are Vance, Granville, Franklin and Warren.

The Family Preservation Project, which will be patterned after a successful program in Tacoma, Wash., is designed to help prevent the separation of troubled children and adolescents from their families.

Court Upholds Ban On Hearing

RALEIGH (AP) — The state Court of Appeals has upheld an order that blocked a hearing by Insurance Commissioner John Ingram on an insurance group's plans for automobile rate increases.

Ingram wanted to hold a hearing on the plans of Insurance Services, an association of insurance companies authorized to make rate filings, to revise its automobile insurance rate tables.

Wake County Superior Court Judge James H. Pou Bailey in March issued a preliminary injunction against a rate hearing, but said Ingram could hold a hearing to determine if there was reasonable competition for automobile liability insurance.

The court said Tuesday there was no evidence that the preliminary injunction blocking the hearing had deprived a substantial right.

"Such a showing has not been made in the present and defendant's appeal is premature and is therefore dismissed," the court said.

In another case, the court upheld part of Michael Anthony Estrada's appeal in a medical negligence suit against two surgeons and two radiologists at North Carolina Memorial Hospital.

Estrada was shot in the knee May 16, 1979, at the Chapel Hill tavern where he worked. According to his suit, surgeons Thomas W. Powell and John R. Miles agreed with radiologists Paul F. Jaques and Donald G. Detweiler to treat an aneurysm in Estrada's leg by a relatively new procedure, percutaneous steel coil embolization.

Banks Lower Prime Rate

By The Associated Press
North Carolina's four largest banks have joined the nation's big banks in cutting their prime lending rates from 12.75 percent to 12.5 percent.

NCNB National Bank of Charlotte, Wachovia Bank and Trust Co. of Winston-Salem, First Union National Bank of Charlotte and Northwestern Bank of North Wilkesboro followed the trend Tuesday.

The reluctance of the other banks to match Bankers Trust Co.'s 12.25 percent rate didn't surprise some credit analysts, who noted that open-market rates had edged back up Monday just as Bankers Trust was cutting its prime rate.

But the analysts say they still expected interest rates to continue edging down over the rest of the year and for the banking industry overall to adopt a base lending rate of between 12 percent and 12.25 percent by 1985.

The drop in the prime followed declines in other money market rates that some analysts said reflected the slowing of economic growth and a subsequent easing of monetary policy by the Federal Reserve.

Weyerhaeuser Will Construct New Plant

TACOMA, Wash. (AP) — The Weyerhaeuser Co., which recently announced several lumber mill closures in Washington, announced plans Tuesday to build a $50 million Structurwood facility in Elkin, N.C.

Structurwood, a registered trademark, is a new wood building material that Weyerhaeuser calls an "oriented strandboard product," an engineered structural panel.

It is made of particles of wood held together with resin. It is stronger than particleboard or pressboard and can often be used in place of plywood, which is somewhat more expensive, said Weyerhaeuser spokesman Tom Ambrose.

The Weyerhaeuser board of directors approved the project last week, George Weyerhaeuser, president and chief executive officer, said in a statement Tuesday.

The plant will employ about 150 people and have an annual production capacity of over 200 million square feet. It is scheduled to start production in late 1986, the statement said.

Italian TV Loses Dynasty

ROME (AP) — Two million Italian TV viewers are suffering without "Dynasty," "Dallas" and other hit programs following court rulings shutting down a major private TV conglomerate in Rome and two other regions.

Judges in Rome, Turin and the mountainous Abruzzi region on Tuesday blocked broadcasts by the stations known as Canale 5, Italia Uno and Retequattro, saying they had violated the ban on private nationwide TV broadcasting.

"By order of the court of Rome, the transmission of Canale 5 programs in this city is forbidden," said a written message that appeared on Canale 5. Similar messages appeared in the other areas.

The judges' action was based on a July ruling by a Rome magistrate that the networks violate the norms limiting nationwide broadcasting to the state-run RAI TV channels.

Private television in Italy was born following a 1976 ruling of the Constitutional Court that RAI's monopoly was limited to nationwide broadcasting.

The three channels, controlled by TV tycoon Silvio Berlusconi, have distributed taped shows through an elaborate system of airplanes, couriers and 800 relay stations. The result is that TV viewers throughout Italy see the same show simultaneously, even though it is not broadcast nationwide live.

Berlusconi's three channels' combined viewership recently edged ahead of the viewership for the three channels of the state-run RAI TV network.

"This is a very grave attack on constitutional liberty, freedom of thought and exchange of ideas, which cannot be legitimately barred and obstructed," the conglomerate said in a statement Tuesday.

It said 2 million regular viewers in the Rome, Turin and central Abruzzi areas could not watch the conglomerate's programs because of the judges' action. The three stations' broadcasts in the rest of Italy were not affected.

The statement said the stations would appeal immediately in an effort to overturn the rulings.

The private conglomerate has been a hit with such Italian-dubbed American series as "Dynasty," "Dallas" and "A-Team," just to mention some Tuesday night shows. The conglomerate also serves up variety shows and movies, as well as other U.S. series including "Kojak" and "The Jeffersons."

Berlusconi, a 47-year-old Milan businessman, also has introduced American professional basketball and football to TV viewers in this soccer-crazed country.

Tough Bill

ROME (AP) — The Cabinet has approved a tough drug-fighting bill that provides 30-year prison terms for pushers whose adulterated drugs kill users and increases police power to seize property used in illegal trafficking.

A Cabinet statement said the bill would increase penalties for drug traffickers inducing others to use illegal narcotics. The statement did not specify what the new penalties would be.

Premier Bettino Craxi said that the new bill — which needs Parliament's approval before it becomes law — is designed to fight both the drug problem within Italy and international drug dealing.

Study Says Youth Too Fat

By BETTY ANNE WILLIAMS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — American school children are fatter than their 1960s counterparts and only half of them get the exercise they need for healthy bodies, a comprehensive national survey shows.

In a report Health and Human Services Secretary Margaret Heckler said "should serve as a warning," the government said children simply aren't setting the exercise patterns needed to keep them healthy as adults.

Ironically, "The adult fitness boom has affected only a small portion of the population," said James G. Ross project director of the federally-financed National Children and Youth Fitness study released Tuesday.

"The fitness boom really isn't trickling down towards kids," he said. In her accompanying warning, Mrs. Heckler said the study "shows that America's school children are not achieving the lifetime fitness skills required to promote good health."

The average student spends just over 13 hours a week in sports, active games and exercises, the report said. But it said the number of activities to which students are exposed in a year decreased with age.

For example, enrollment in physical education declined as the students got older. Some 97 percent of fifth and sixth graders took physical education while only half of the 11th and 12 graders did.

The study said the minimum requirement of vigorous physical activity is 20 minutes at 60 percent of capacity three times a week. But it said about half of the nation's students aren't meeting this standard year-round, even though more than 80 percent of students in grades five through 12 are enrolled in physical education.

The average students spent 80 percent of their exercise time not in school activities but in church, community center and youth group-sponsored activities.

About 47 percent of the time in physical education classes is spent on lifetime activities — sports and exercises that are likely to be carried over into adulthood — while 63 percent of the time spent elsewhere is used for lifetime activities.

The top 10 non-school activities for boys are bicycling, basketball, football, baseball, swimming, weightlifting or training, fishing, football, hunting and jogging or distance running.

For girls, the top 10 activities are swimming, bicycling, disco or popular dancing, rollerskating, walking quickly, baseball, basketball, calisthenics, jogging and gymnastics.

The study found that activity time peaks in the summer, falls off in the winter and resumes in the spring. "The activity patterns of girls and younger students are disproportionately affected by changes in the weather," the study said.

CP&L Plant Said To Be Safe

APEX, N.C. (AP) — An official of the company that designed Carolina Power & Light Co.'s Shearon Harris Nuclear Plant told federal regulators that CP&L's safety analysis of steam generator tubes in the plant are adequate.

Michael Hitchler, manager of plant-risk analysis in Westinghouse Electric Corp.'s nuclear safety department in Pittsburgh, told the U.S. Atomic Safety and Licensing Board Tuesday that a more vigorous analysis was not needed.

Hitchler said tube ruptures more serious than those analyzed were "not likely to occur in the (40-year) lifetime of the plant."

He was the first witness to testify at hearings on the safety of CP&L's $2.8 billion plant in southwestern Wake County, which is scheduled to begin commercial operation in 1986.

The licensing board will recommend to the Nuclear Regulatory Commission whether to issue a license to CP&L, which has obtained a permit from the NRC to build the Harris plant. But under federal law, the utility must be licensed to operate it.

Visiting Chinese Actor Is Traveling Cultural Dealer

By PETER ALAN HARPER
Associated Press Writer
KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Playing the emperor Kublai Khan on American television's "Marco Polo" or salesman Willy Loman in the Chinese premiere of "Death of a Salesman" would be highlights of any actor's career.

But Ying Roucheng, a 55-year-old Chinese actor who played both roles, sees something more important coming from the cross-cultural pollination that created those two shows.

Ying, one of the most highly acclaimed actors of the People's Republic of China, saw the tears shed by the 20 people who flew from the United States into China last year to see the Chinese version of "Salesman."

"Why were they moved?" Ying asked rhetorically, pulling on a menthol cigarette in an office at the Performing Arts Center of the University of Missouri at Kansas City.

The Americans, he said, were glad to see a production of "something from their culture being done, not haphazardly but seriously, by Chinese who were inscrutable and now were suddenly scrutable."

"When you see another people of a totally different background treating something of yours with respect," Ying said, "with understanding, with commitment, I think that is important. If you compare that with the traditional image of the Chinaman on the screen here or the traditional image of the Yankee in China, then you realize the importance of it."

Ying played Kublai Khan, a role he described as the meatiest in the 1982 production of NBC's Emmy-winning "Marco Polo." He got the 1983 role of Willy Loman after befriending the play's author, Arthur Miller, in the early 1980s when Miller toured China. In a book, "Salesman in Beijing," Miller wrote extensively about Ying and his experiences in China in staging the play.

Ying met with Miller and Dustin Hoffman, who is playing Willy Loman in a Broadway revival of "Salesman," during a recent New York trip. He and Hoffman agreed, he said, that it was impossible to do two performances a day of such a powerful play.

The actor is the Fulbright Asian scholar-in-residence at the Missouri campus until the end of the month. In 1982, he was the Edgar Snow visiting professor at the university. Last spring, 200 million Chinese saw a videotape of a University of Missouri production of "The Family," which Ying translated and directed during his 1982 stay.

Among other duties as the scholar-in-residence, Ying directed a Ming-period play, "Fifteen Strings of Cash," for the Missouri Repertory Theatre. He was inspired by "Dreamgirls" and used some of the lighting and stage techniques he saw in the New York play.

Charles Leader, who played one of the characters in the Ming-period play, said he learned a great deal from Ying about Chinese culture. "You learn how people think over there; it's not that much different," said Leader.

Ying works with his wife, Wu Shiliang, also 55. Leader said she "was a wonderful audience" and offered repertory actors constructive criticism of their work.

Ying met his wife when he began his acting career, at Tsinghua University, after World War II. After he graduated in 1950 with a degree in Western literature, Ying became a founding member of the Peking People's Art Theater.

The People's Art Theater "established a name for the acting company, but more importantly, we established an acting style," Ying said. The company became China's national theater.

From 1950 to 1966, Ying acted in plays and two movies and translated plays and theatrical theory. He also gained a reputation for "not toeing the (party) line" and became known as an "obnoxious character."

From 1966 to 1968, the first two years of the Cultural Revolution, Ying was not allowed to continue his theater work.

From 1968 to 1971, he said, "we were humiliated" by being placed in a "re-education" camp 60 miles south of Peking. He, his wife and his fellow actors grew rice and attended classes.

"The idea is, as intellectuals, we were not close to the soil, to physical labor, to the working man," Ying said. But because he was with his actor friends, they turned it into a tea-house atmosphere, sipping the liquor they had smuggled in.

"In that sense, it was a good life," he said.

In China today, there is a "total negation of the Cultural Revolution; politically, that is necessary." During those years of unrest, there "must have been a number of people who profited by it. Most of us," he said, "poking his chest with both hands, 'suffered by it.'"

As a traveling cultural salesman, Ying sees an opportunity for people to put aside their differences. He noted that every culture has a word for foreigner that does not have friendly connotations.

"I think the time has come to correct that attitude," perhaps by performances of "Death of a Salesman" in China and "Fifteen Strings of Cash" in America.

"But those are only a drop in the bucket," he said. "Well, let's get all get together and put drops in the bucket."

'Country Trapper' Does The Jobs No One Else Wants

HALIFAX, Pa. (AP) — Sometimes Bob Mayberry resorts to trickery to further his new career as "The Country Trapper."

Mayberry hung out his shingle as a wildlife pest-control trapper in February, and he has already trapped 88 squirrels that had invaded people's attics and walls.

But the easiest assignment he's handled so far was getting rid of a woodpecker that was waking up a Dauphin County man bright and early every morning.

"I stapled an inflatable vinyl snake 2 feet long on the clapboard the bird was riding," said Mayberry, "and he hasn't been back since."

Unlike the mythical Pied Piper who tootled the rats — and the children — out of Hamelin, Mayberry has to go out and tangle with his prey and usually catches them alive.

He pulled a 5-foot black snake from behind a drop ceiling by hand and had to shoot a skunk that was hiding inside a house wall with only his tail showing.

Mayberry hasn't quite figured out how to handle his biggest assignment to date — rid an attic in Perry County of more than 1,000 bats.

But he's ordered a leather suit and a hood to avoid being scratched and bitten and a heavy-duty respirator to avoid the dung-laden dust and foul smell.

"I want to catch them and remove them," he said, "otherwise they'll move into somebody else's building."

Aside from squirrels, Mayberry is called to rid properties of skunks. So far, his technique in handling them has kept him from getting sprayed, although he wears a plastic raincoat and boots to move in close.

He developed the technique in his own back yard after live-trapping a skunk that was trying to get into his pheasant pen.

"I pulled him over with a long pole, then got an old quilt and moved up on him real easy," Mayberry said. "Next, I managed to throw the quilt over him and wrap him up."

Mayberry's theory is: "If they don't see you, they won't spray."

On the other hand, he said, "If you shoot them, dart them with a tranquilizer gun or beat them with a club, they'll spray."

The Halifax resident got into the pest-control business after a career as a truck driver, when a back problem kept cropping up.

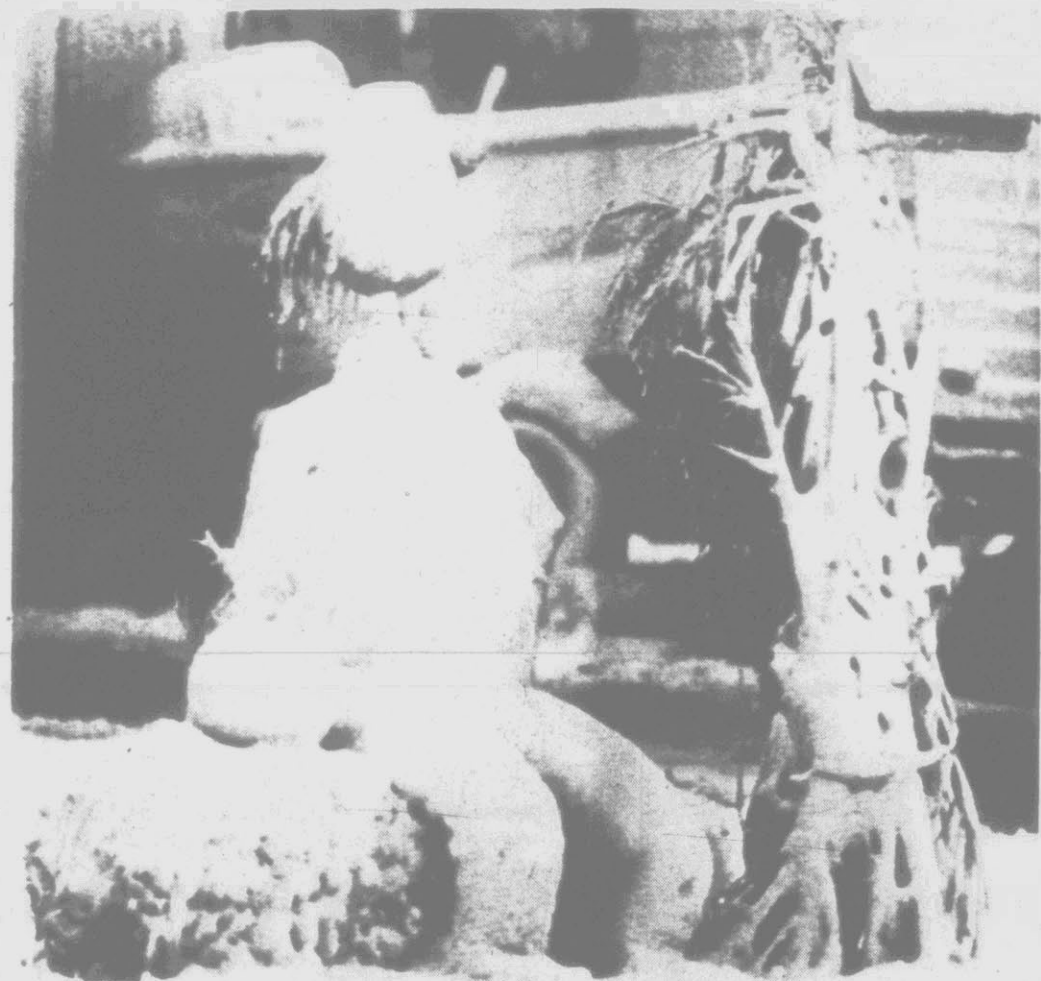

He read an article in Field and Stream magazine about a man in the Washington area who trapped and removed pests from residential areas. He called the author, bought the man's operations manual for $95 and began buying traps and other equipment.

"Most of the stuff in the manual I already knew," Mayberry said. "I used to trap muskrats as a boy. I've always been the outdoor type and hunted and fished all my life."

On his first professional call, a squirrel reported in a Penbrook attic, he failed. "I baited a trap, but ended up with no capture. Yet the woman said she never heard the scratching noises again."

WEATHER MAN — A Halloween display in Minot, N.D., became a snowman after a winter snow storm hit the Rockies and portions of the Midwest this week. The Minot area had power outages from more than 1,500 homes Tuesday. Snow accumulations from the storm ranged to more than 14 inches. (AP Laserphoto)

Beatle Brings Back Old Hits

LONDON (AP) — Paul McCartney is bringing back a little bit of "Yesterday" — along with Beatles' songs "Eleanor Rigby" and "For No One" — as part of the score for "Give My Regards to Broad Street," a musical film.

Beatle Ringo Starr, who is in the movie written and produced by McCartney, wouldn't take part in re-recording the three hits, but McCartney said, "Enough water had gone under the bridge for it to be a reminder of the wonderful days again, and not of the hell of the breakup."

"It's 20 years since we did them. So to re-sing them isn't painful like it would have been 10 years ago when the Beatles were breaking up."

George Harrison, who is no longer in the music business, is not in the film. The movie, a fantasy about the theft of rock 'n' roll master tapes, opens in London later this month.

Singer's Wife Hurt In Wreck

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Country music star Bill Anderson's wife, Becky, should make a full recovery from injuries she got in a traffic accident, her doctor says.

Mrs. Anderson, 38, was struck head-on by a truck that crossed the center lane on Sunday in the Nashville suburb of Hermitage, police say. She suffered a concussion and bruises, but already is showing progress, said Dr. William Meacham, head of neurosurgery at Metropolitan General Hospital.

Opening lead: King of ♥.

Knowing the percentages is all well and good. Applying the percentages when they cannot possibly work is foolhardy.

West had a borderline opening bid — had his side not been vulnerable, he might have ventured into the auction. Note that, even though North-South were playing four-card majors, one club is the correct opening bid on the North hand. It provides for an easy rebid no matter what responder does.

Against four spades West led the king of hearts. At trick two he slyly shifted to the three of diamonds in the hope that his partner held the queen and declarer would misguess. Declarer cleverly played the king from dummy — he wanted to force the ace from East if he held that card. When East followed low, declarer continued with a diamond to the queen and ace. West took his ace of hearts to complete the defensive book, then exited with a club.

All that remained was for declarer to bring in the trump suit without loss. Missing three cards including the king, the odds heavily favor a finesse, but the early play had made it a certainty that the finesse was destined to fail.

West, who had passed originally, had already shown up with the ace-king of hearts and the ace of diamonds. The king of spades would have given him 14 high-card points, and he would never have passed. Therefore, the only chance for the contract was to find East with the singleton king of spades. Declarer led the queen of trumps to the ace, and was suitably rewarded for listening to the auction.

Plane Sought

LISBON, Portugal (AP) — Rescue teams are searching for an Angolan troop carrier plane that has been missing since Sept. 30 with an unspecified number of military and civilian passengers aboard, the Angolan air force command said.

In a statement reported by the official Angolan news agency Angop and monitored in Lisbon, the air force command said the AN-26 aircraft was reported missing in "complex weather conditions" on a flight from the eastern town of Lwena to the capital, Luanda, 470 miles to the northwest.

The air force command said only that the aircraft was carrying a four-man military crew and "a certain number of military and civilian passengers".

Wheat Exports

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — India is likely to export about 2 million metric tons of wheat to the Soviet Union following a record harvest, the Statesman newspaper reported.

India's food grain production rose 19 percent in the year ending March 31, to total 151.5 million metric tons, the independent daily reported. The bumper harvest reportedly has created storage problems for the state-run Food Corp. of India.

India, which imported wheat from the United States and Australia last year, now has buffer stocks of 15 million metric tons of wheat and 10 million metric tons of rice. These are the largest reserves ever in this nation of 750 million people, the newspaper said.

Alaskan Support

PEKING (AP) — Alaska supports China's application for U.S. permission to take a quota of cod and other fish from the Bering Sea, Alaska Gov. Bill Sheffield says.

After a week-long visit to China, Sheffield said Alaskan fishermen would catch the cod and load some of the fish onto a large Chinese freezer ship. "We already do this with the South Koreans and the Japanese," he said.

A Chinese delegation is in Washington now applying for an international fisheries permit enabling China to take a quota of fish from Alaskan waters, Sheffield said.

Old Buggy Town Sits Quiet Now

MIFFLINBURG, Pa. (AP) — Visiting this quiet Union County town is like traveling back in time to a simpler place — to small-town America, with a narrow but bustling main street, quiet neighborhoods, a few small industries and a proud past.

It's a place with a covered bridge warning travelers that if they are riding or driving "at any other gait than a walk or driving more than 15 head of cattle or carrying fire in any way are subject to a fine of $30."

Mifflinburg, one of the smaller towns in one of Pennsylvania's smallest counties, could be considered a keystone of the Keystone State. It is in Buffalo Valley, a central part of Pennsylvania.

At the turn of the century, Mifflinburg was the center of the state's buggy-making industry and was nicknamed the "buggy capital of Pennsylvania."

Mifflinburg was incorporated in 1827, a combination of Youngmanstown and Rostown, and named after Thomas Mifflin, the state's first governor.

Through the first half of the 19th century, Mifflinburg's businesses included stores, shops and hotels. The town had foundries, a tannery, gun shop and tailors. In those days, transportation options here were simple — foot or horseback.

Between 1846-75, brothers Thomas, Jacob and John Gutelius each opened buggy shops. Later, the Hoover, Royer, Condon, Heiss and Mifflinburg Buggy Co. shops opened.

Eventually, the town had between 20 and 40 buggy-building shops, some so small that only a single buggy could be built at a time. Some shops specialized in building and painting the bodies, some in forging the axles and gears.

In the early years, the buggies were made from oak limbs that were worked into hubs and formed to hold hickory spokes. Later, iron axles were used. As buggy production increased, buggy makers marketed their products by showing them at agricultural fairs, political rallies, reunions and various exhibits. Mifflinburg buggies became status symbols.

"Mifflinburg probably built more buggies — light, horse-drawn vehicles — than any town its size in the United States during the period between 1870 and 1920," said Charles Snyder, Union County historian and member of the Mifflinburg Museum board.

"It wasn't patents or a monopoly upon raw materials that developed the industry, but rather high-quality vehicles and aggressive salesmanship."

In 1897, three businessmen formed the Mifflinburg Buggy Co. The firm employed 30 mechanics and produced 12 buggies daily.

Buggy production was strong until about 1920, when the "horseless carriage" became popular. Eventually, automobiles put the Mifflinburg buggy factories out of business.

In 1978, the Mifflinburg Buggy Museum Association was organized as a non-profit corporation to commemorate the era of buggy building. Snyder said the association had looked for a buggy factory that could serve as a museum — and found it in the William A. Heiss Coach Works.

The Heiss Coach Works, a typical family-owned small buggy shop, had employed six workers to operate the blacksmith, carpentry, stitching and paint departments. The works also had a repository, a buggy show center built in 1889, and a typical worker's house, built in 1870.

Snyder said the Heiss Coach Works had never been dismantled, so the machinery and tools remained intact.

"It looked like they locked the place 60 years before and walked out," he said. "Part of the building was off its foundation. The repository was almost empty, but we found one complete vehicle and different parts."

The museum board has restored much of the 2 1/2-story frame Heiss home, arranged a step-by-step view of buggy making in the original frame shop, and displayed several buggies and sleighs in the frame repository. Snyder said the house was typically Pennsylvania German, with a central stairway and three steps leading from the porch to the street.

The buggy works include a blacksmith shop, where blacksmiths shod horses; a wood shop, where buggy bodies were built; a paint shop, where paints were mixed from powder; and a stitching shop, where the leather or heavy canvas tops were made on a foot-operated sewing machine.

The repository features 12 buggies and sleighs that ranged in price from $65 to $150. The vehicles include a doctor's sleigh, an Albany cutter buggy with sleigh bells and buggies with fifth wheels that helped the drivers turn corners.

Many of the original buggy makers' Victorian homes remain in town. The town, two square miles and home to about 3,400 residents, seems to have changed little over the years.

New Exhibition Shows How Grandma Moses Developed

NEW YORK (AP) — An exhibition of paintings by one of America's best-loved artists, Anna Mary Robertson Moses, better known as Grandma Moses, is on view at the Museum of American Folk Art here, before beginning a six-city tour.

Titled "The World of Grandma Moses," it glows with the joyous vision of its remarkable subject, the self-taught artist whose public career as a painter began when she was over 80 and whose creative energy flowed out with scarcely diminished freshness the rest of her long life.

This is the first traveling exhibition since Grandma Moses' death in 1961 at age 101. It consists of more than 50 examples of her work, with her familiar, but never exactly repeated, themes of country life, centered on her native upstate New York: the bustling winters with their sleigh rides, the harvest and sugaring-off times, the summer activities amid verdant, rolling landscapes.

The approach of this exhibition is unusual for a folk artist. It includes source material and preliminary drawings never included in a museum show before, sheds light on her working methods and traces her development — for almost alone among 20th-century folk artists, Grandma Moses did show growth and change during those late 20 or so years of full-time painting.

"The idea of the show originated in a dream I'd had for some time, to do a study of a folk painter's work in the manner usually reserved for academic painting," said Jane Kallir, curator of the exhibition.

The two and a half years of the show's preparation had been preceded by Ms. Kallir's search for the basic source material she needed: Grandma Moses' reference collections of clippings and illustrations — Currier & Ives reproductions, greeting cards, calendars, pages from magazines and newspapers. These were eventually found in an attic in Eagle Bridge, N.Y., the town in which Grandma Moses had lived most of her later years.

Items from that rediscovered hoard, as well as Grandma Moses' preliminary sketches, are shown in the exhibition beside the finished paintings in which they are transformed into something new and personal.

"In this way, the exhibition shows part of the creative process involved in Grandma Moses' work," Robert Bishop, the museum's director, pointed out.

The exhibition includes some of her most famous paintings, but covers a wide range from her earliest experiments to her last, vividly alive works.

There are also a few family photographs and handwritten notes. Two embroidered pictures are from the 1930s, done before arthritis in her hands caused her to abandon needlework and try painting instead. What is considered to be her first real painting is on show — it's a copy of a chromolithograph, done before 1927 in oil on an old scrap of threshing-machine canvas.

The greater part of the exhibition consists of the paintings she began to do following the death of her husband in 1927, when for the first time in her life, after the busy years as "hired girl," then as farmer's wife and mother of a large family, she had time to spare — but not to remain idle.

Author's Work Reached U.S. Via Thigh

By SCOTT M. BUSHNELL
Associated Press Writer
HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) — Before winning the Nobel Prize for literature last week, Jaroslav Seifert owed his reputation in the United States to a few academics and a furtive thigh.

"He is read and loved by his countrymen, a national poet," the Swedish Academy of Letters said Friday in announcing the award to the 83-year-old author — the first Czech-language writer to be so honored.

But in the United States, the reference books list only one volume by Seifert: a collection of poetry published by a small press in Iowa.

"The Casting of Bells," as the book was translated into English by Tom O'Grady with the help of Paul Jagasich, was smuggled out of Czechoslovakia by a British embassy employee, who taped the verses to her thigh.

"We got a copy of our translation back to him via that same thigh," O'Grady said in a telephone interview from Hampden-Sydney College in Virginia. "I think he was pleased by it."

His latest collection, "The Plague Monument," was published in a limited edition by the Czechoslovak Society of Arts and Sciences, which has no formal headquarters in the United States. Serving as the distributor of the bilingual edition for the organization is Ruzena Bunza, who lives in New York City.

O'Grady, a college professor and editor of a poetry review, said a reading of his poems in New York City's Soho district in the late 1970s led to his acquaintance with Seifert's. At that reading, O'Grady met Ed Stringham, an editor at the New Yorker magazine, who later sent him a copy of Seifert's work.

Jagasich, a native of Hungary, worked with O'Grady on literal translations which O'Grady then shaped into poems. The first few were published in the Hampden-Sydney Poetry Review in 1977.

"They were really moving," O'Grady recalled. "Reading them was like meeting somebody at a bar who grabbed my lapels and said, 'Hey, listen!'"

"Through a grant from the college we were able to complete the translation project during the summer," O'Grady said.

The difficulty in translating Seifert, scholars said, is part language and part poet.

"Modern Czech poetry combines traditional folk tunes with highly sophisticated metaphysical language," said Peter Demetz, professor of German language and literature at Yale University, who has translated some of Seifert's work into German.

"It is heavily influenced by French surrealism. To hit this tone you really have to know the language," Demetz said.

"One of the difficulties is the simplicity of the language he uses," O'Grady said.

"There are clichés and random associations. It doesn't seem artful at first, but when you reach the end, you find yourself moved by it."

"What the translator has to do is keep its accessibility and bring across the grace of the striking metaphor and the poet's honest voice," he said.

When it came time to find a publisher, O'Grady looked to a one-person operation in Iowa City, Iowa, Morty Sklar.

Sklar, a former New Yorker who calls himself "editor, publisher and stamp-licker" of Spirit That Moves Us Press, published the 64-page book of poems in paperback in August 1983 because "I liked its sincerity, its subdued passion."

He learned of its prominence Friday morning when a Stockholm bookseller called for copies.

Sklar — whose press has brought out 10 books, including a well-recognized anthology of reprints from other small presses around the country — put in an order for 2,500 more copies to be printed on Friday.

Scholars agreed last week that the prize would do more than enhance Seifert's reputation alone.

Born in Prague in 1901, the son of working-class parents, Seifert has worked in obscurity because of his opposition to the Communist government in Czechoslovakia.

How They Voted Stamps Depend On Job Hunt

WASHINGTON — Here's how area members of Congress were recorded on major roll call votes Oct. 5 through Oct. 11.

HOUSE

CORPS — The House passed, 296 for and 75 against, a bill to establish an American Conservation Corps at a three-year cost of $50 million. The bill (HR 999) was sent to the White House.

Some 18,000 young persons of ages 16 to 25 would receive the minimum wage for maintenance work on Indian reservations and other public lands. They would work for state and federal agencies, which would be encouraged to hire poor youths.

Sponsor John Seiberling, D-Ohio, said "there are 1.4 million teenagers who are looking for work (and) the unemployment rate for black teenagers alone is nearly 42 percent."

Opponent Bill Frenzel, R-Minn., called it wasteful to spend taxpayers' money to fill 18,000 jobs "which might well be done by others more effectively."

Members voting yes wanted to establish an American Conservation Corps jobs program for young people.

North Carolina representatives voting yes were Walter Jones, D-1; Tim Valentine, D-2; Charles Whitley, D-3; Stephen Neal, D-5; Charles Britt, D-6, and James Clarke, D-11.

Rep. James Broyhill, R-10, voted no.

Those not voting were Ike Andrews, D-4; Charles Rose, D-7; W.G. Hefner, D-8, and James Martin, R-9.

PUBLIC BROADCASTING — By a vote of 167 for and 233 against, the House rejected an amendment to increase public broadcasting funding by 15 percent rather than 25 percent over three years.

The vote cleared the way for House approval of the 25 percent hike. The bill (S 607) was sent to the White House.

It raises fiscal 1987-89 authorizations for the Corporation for Public Broadcasting to $675 million. This essentially restores a 40 percent cut inflicted by Congress in 1981 at the Reagan Administration's request.

Sponsor Michael Oxley, R-Ohio, said "big spenders" in the House would reveal themselves by voting against his amendment.

Opponent John Dingell, D-Mich., said the higher budget would "assure high quality programming on radio and TV of the kind which is desperately necessary."

Members voting no favored a higher funding level for public broadcasting.

North Carolina representatives voting yes were Valentine, Whitley, Neal, Hefner, Broyhill and Clarke.

Those voting no were Ike Andrews, Britt and Rose.

Walter Jones and James Martin did not vote.

SENATE

FUNDING — The Senate passed, 78 for and 11 against, a $370 billion appropriations measure to partially fund the federal government in fiscal 1985, which began Oct. 1.

This cleared the bill (HJ Res 648) for President Reagan's signature. The House failed to conduct a record vote when it approved the measure.

Enactment of a catchall funding approach was necessary because the 98th Congress during two years of work was unable to pass the full complement of individual appropriations bills.

Senators voting yes supported the bill.

North Carolina Senators John East, R, and Jesse Helms, R, both voted no.

FREEZE — By a vote of 55 for and 42 against, the Senate tabled (killed) a nuclear freeze proposal urging the Administration to negotiate with the Soviet Union a mutual halt in weapons production and a mutual reduction in arsenals.

The vote occurred during debate on a debt ceiling measure (HJ Res 654) that later was approved.

John Tower, R-Tex., who voted to table the amendment, said the proposal "would freeze the Soviet Union into a position of superiority in the nuclear field."

Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., asked: "Instead of overkill upon overkill, why not start now with a (mutual) freeze?"

Senators voting no favored the nuclear freeze amendment.

Senators East and Helms both voted yes.

TRUCKS — By a vote of 75 for and 21 against, the Senate tabled (killed) an amendment to change the interstate highway funding formula to the benefit of states having the nation's heaviest snow and highest volume of truck traffic.

Currently, a state's share of federal interstate maintenance money is based only on its total interstate traffic and its "lane miles" of primary federal highways.

This amendment sought to add snowfall to the formula and substitute truck traffic for total traffic.

It set off a regional conflict, because it would have penalized about 25 states, most of them in the Sunbelt.

It was proposed to a highway bill (S 2034) that was shelved when the 98th Congress adjourned.

Steven Symms, R-Idaho, who voted to kill the amendment, called the proposed change "totally unacceptable" to states such as his.

Arlen Specter, R-Pa., said one 40-ton truck does as much road damage as 9,600 cars, and he noted that salting to melt snow also is a destructive force.

Senators voting no favored the formula change.

Senators East and Helms both voted no.

FRESNO, Calif. (AP) — Fresno County has been telling applicants they can have food stamps if they look for a job.

The requirement goes beyond federal policy, which only requires able-bodied applicants to register with public employment agencies and accept work offers in order to obtain food stamps.

The programs run by seven welfare agencies nationally, including Fresno and San Diego counties in California, are an experiment funded by the U.S. Agriculture Department.

The concept is an extension of the welfare idea in welfare programs — requiring recipients to give something in return for assistance.

Public sentiment would appear to favor the change. Voters overwhelmingly authorized San Diego County supervisors in 1980 to cut off benefits to able-bodied recipients where legally possible.

But officials note any change that would result in cutbacks also holds moral implications, especially in an aid program that deals in food for the poor.

In the Fresno experiment, the county estimated it saved almost $658,000 in a year by requiring recipients to apply for work at two places a day for two weeks and five times a week thereafter.

San Diego County recipients were required to enter a three-week "job club" with a week of classroom training and two weeks devoted to telephone job inquiries.

Fresno County projected $187 million in annual savings nationally if the federal government adopted its program. San Diego County has not calculated its savings.

The 4,717 people enrolled in Fresno already had cleared standard food stamp exemptions: people under 18 and over 59, single parents of children under 12, students, physically and mentally disabled and others.

Almost half then were excused because of problems with transportation and literacy, said county program manager Patrick Hendrix.

Another 28 percent of the applicants either failed to show up for their department interviews or did not comply with the job-search requirements.

About 26 percent, or 1,233 people from the original group, complied with the requirements, but only 368 people — less than 8 percent — actually found jobs. Overall, 72 percent received food stamps.

"You didn't deny benefits to starve anybody or to deny any food stamps," said Hendrix.

Agent Collects Insurance Signs

McPHERSON, Kan. (AP) — A buck deer looks majestically across a wrinkled and faded, framed parchment. His mountainous environment was designed for one purpose: to sell insurance.

The deer, which is a symbol of the Hartford Insurance Co., is one of many rustic insurance signs and pieces of memorabilia that greet insurance agent Warren Underwood each morning at his office.

With approximately 1,000 pieces in his insurance nostalgia collection, some of which date back into the 1870s and '80s, Underwood's is one of the most complete of its kind.

The collection, which started about 23 years ago as a practical way for Underwood and his wife to decorate their home, has turned into much more than that for the McPherson insurance agent.

"We just wanted to pick up some antiques for our home," he said. "Like country store advertising pieces. Then one day at a WaKeeney antique store I ran across seven insurance signs for $75."

Needless to say, Underwood bought the signs, but little did he know that those signs would eventually lead to his extensive collection.

"It's kind of an interesting hobby," Underwood said. "I like all the old stuff. It's fun to research it all."

And research is exactly what he does.

"I've bought books and studied and read," he said. "But I don't think I've ever bought a book about antiques that didn't pay for itself in three months."

Along the way his hobby has evolved into a sort of investment. Even though he doesn't really know how much money he has wrapped up in the investment, he does have his pieces insured.

"I've had chances to sell some to insurance company museums," he said. "To tell you the truth, I couldn't afford to start my collection today. I'm still able to pick up some signs, but they're much, much harder to find."

Feeding a Sweet Tooth

The corner candy store may be gone, but Americans apparently have not lost their sweet teeth. A recent report said Americans bought almost $111 million worth of "Snickers" bars in 1983, making "Snickers" tops in total U.S. sales. Last year Americans spent $428 million on just their 10 favorite candies. The term "sugar candy" derives from the Italian "zucchero candi," which came from "sarkara khanda," which is Sanskrit for a piece of something, or lump sugar.

DO YOU KNOW — What word for a sweet substance derives from the Aztec word for "bitter water"?
TUESDAY'S ANSWER — The popular nickname for nitrous oxide is "laughing gas."

Bomb Defused

PORTSMOUTH, England (AP) — Police have defused a World War II-era German bomb that forced comedian Bob Hope to cancel a show at a Portsmouth theater.
The 550-pound bomb was unearthed Friday by a construction workman at a site adjacent to the Guildhall Theater where Hope, 81, was due to perform as part of a six-city tour of Britain.
The show was called off as police cordoned off the street in this area that was heavily bombed by Germany during World War II. It took 19 hours for police to defuse the bomb.

Society's Pet Program Brings Cheer to Nursing Homes

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — Neither could talk. The elderly woman had a severe speech problem. And he was just a friendly little ferret. Yet, for a few moments in a world of sound, silence said more than words.

Hilda De'Abreu, an 82-year-old nursing home patient, gently stroked and hugged the furry animal named Ollie.

And the raccoon-like creature loved it. Ollie cuddled up to the white-haired woman until they were nestled cheek-to-cheek. Then, Mrs. De'Abreu laughed and rocked in her chair at Tampa Health Care Center, where she lives.

And Ollie, who lives at the local Humane Society, stayed put in her arms.

Their brief visit was part of a humane society program called "pet therapy." It's a concept designed to bring cast-off or homeless animals from the shelter to nursing homes wrestling to shed a similar last-stop image.

"Nursing homes should not be a place to come to die. That's the way people traditionally regard them," said William "Dan" McGuinness, administrator for the past two years.

"I am very much pro pet therapy. For the people here, it increases their quality of life. It helps ward off depression, keeps them mentally alert and oriented. And it brings in others from the community," McGuinness added.

Margaret "Meg" Mason, acting director of the Hillsborough County Humane Society, visits at least 10 nursing homes in Tampa regularly, packing along Ollie or Inky, a pet skunk, kittens and puppies that spend a few hours going from lap to lap among the elderly, the infirm, the lonely, and the convalescents.

"I've had animals all my life and I love people," said Ms. Mason, from Garden City, N.Y. She came to Florida a year ago after two years with the humane society in Spartanburg, S.C.

"In one way or another I've always been associated with both — through volunteer work or jobs. Most people had a pet at one time or another and this brings back warm memories, something to relate to. To see them smile, that's what it's all about."

Her only helper in this 10-month-old time-consuming endeavor has been Jason Arbeiter, 13, who came on as a volunteer to earn credit toward a Boy Scout badge. He did that in two days but stayed the summer. "I like older people. And I like to see them happy," said the eighth-grader.

"I'm here to spread a little sunshine. All I want is a smile," said Ms. Mason as she handed Ollie to Mrs. De'Abreu, a resident since June 1983. She suffers from an articulation disorder and for many years has had severely impaired speech. It makes forming words difficult.

"When Meg first talked about pet therapy, I thought the idea was fabulous," said McGuinness. He was so enthused that now the center has a backyard pen of four bunnies, and a resident cat.

He gave a special dispensation to the no-pet rule to an alert 90-year-old widow who desperately wanted a cat. Hester Williams had had to give up her pets seven years ago when she entered the nursing home. Now, Stevie Franklin roams the center, purring. "I talk to him. He follows me. He understands me so well," said the one-time beautician from Reading, Pa.

Activities director Sandra Parker accompanied Ms. Mason among the 150 patients, 80 percent of them permanent residents.

An 18-month-old no-name Siberian husky bounded up on Edith Sullivan's chair to give her a great big sloppy slurp. "It's a wonderful thing. It does us a lot of good," said the spry 78-year-old. "You just want to squeeze them and hug them."

Survey Offers Clues on Why Kids Reject Science, Math Programs

WASHINGTON (AP) — Both educational inadequacies and budgetary deficiencies could be factors in teachers' inability to spark science study enthusiasm among capable students, a survey on why talented youngsters shun science and math indicates.

To learn more about such students, a detailed questionnaire was sent to 1,918 high school educators nationwide by Westinghouse Electric Corp. and Science Service. This non-profit, Washington-based organization, which seeks to further public understanding of science, administers the Westinghouse Science Talent Search, a scholarship competition open to all high school seniors.

"With the scientific talent shortfall not lessening — and the projected need for qualified scientists expected to remain high into the 21st century — it's becoming increasingly important for more capable students to 'turn on' to the sciences and to develop their scientific career capabilities," E.G. Sherburne Jr., director of Science Service, said.

Of the 612 educators who responded to the survey, 75 percent have master's degrees and 8 percent have doctorates.

While academic reforms relating to methodology and teacher proficiency were viewed as important, the majority of respondents — 80 percent — believe that more outstanding high school students would be encouraged to pursue science studies if they could have laboratory research experience.

Seventy percent feel that students would be more motivated if they were permitted independent study and-or research. Sixty-five percent believe it necessary to revise existing elementary school curricula at the earliest grade levels for greater emphasis on math and science education.

Inadequate funding for junior and senior high school science laboratories was cited as a major obstacle by 62 percent of the respondents.

"To expect a teacher to demonstrate and inspire students with the wonders of science without fully equipped, well-maintained laboratories is akin to expecting a chef to teach cooking when the cupboard is bare and the stove needs repair," Sherburne said.

Joel Littman, biology-chemistry science curriculum coordinator at Tottenville High School, Staten Island, N.Y., expressed it this way in his survey comment: "The problems faced in science education are the results of irrational budget cuts that (a) prevented science departments from purchasing supplies; (b) reduced the number of laboratory assistants; (c) prevented new infusions of life into tired curricula and (d) prevented the retention of top-flight instructors."

Fifty-seven percent of the respondents cited inadequate preparation by elementary school teachers. A typical comment was the view expressed by Elizabeth Smith, chemistry and physics teacher, Dixon High School, Dixon, Calif.: "Education in science and math at elementary levels is still very poor or non-existent."

HOME AGAIN — Britain's Queen Elizabeth II steps down from an RAF VC10 at London's Heathrow Airport on Tuesday, ending her visit to Canada and the United States. Security at the airport was tight following last week's bombing attack in Brighton, England, at the hotel where Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher was staying. (AP Laserphoto)

Difficult Tasks

OVERLAND PARK, Kan. (AP) — Talking on the new cellular mobile phones is harder than talking with other occupants of a car but easier than looking for a landmark along the road, according to a study reported in a recent issue of Cellular Business magazine.

In a study conducted by Bell Labs and MB Associates, drivers rated the difficulty of various tasks on a scale from 1 to 10, with 1 defined as "no difficulty at all" and 10 as "so difficult I would never do it while driving."

Reading a map rated an 8.75 on the scale, followed in descending order of difficulty by: lighting and smoking a cigarette (5.5); getting change from pocket or purse to pay toll (5.25); dialing the mobile telephone (4.5); tuning a car radio (3.5); looking for a landmark along the road (2.5); conversing on the mobile telephone (1.5); and conversing with other persons in the car (1.25).

Cellular telephone systems are operating now in more than a dozen cities and have recently been switched on at a rate of almost one a week, reports Tom Brooksher, publisher of Cellular Business, which began monthly publication in August in Overland Park, a suburb of Kansas City, Mo.

He predicts that by year-end cellular systems will be available in most of the nation's top 30 cities. According to some predictions, cellular telephones will be a $12 billion-a-year industry within a decade.

Low Payment Credit Terms are outlined below. So apply today. You may qualify for up to $1,000 instant credit when you present your Visa, American Express, MasterCard, Sears or Lowe's card!

*Lowe's Low Payment Credit Terms: Your credit must be satisfactory. Our cash price does not include sales tax. The monthly payment price may be slightly lower, depending upon state law. The monthly payment price includes sales tax of 5%. If sales tax differs in your area, the monthly payment will vary slightly. Credit Life and Disability Insurance is available upon request. Delivery charges are excluded.

We Also Honor American Express, Visa & MasterCard.

Lowe's Raincheck Policy: If we sell out of an advertised item, we'll issue you a raincheck. When we restock, you'll be notified so you can buy at the previously advertised price (except for products marked "Limited Quantities"). Our smaller stores may not stock all advertised items. But every item shown here can be ordered for you.

Lowe's Pricing Policy: Many items in this tabloid carry a reference retail price. The reference is intended to provide a guide to the range of retail selling prices in our area and may be useful in identifying different units of the same manufacturer. An item's reference retail price is either the manufacturer's suggested retail price or our determination of specialty shops and other non-discount retailers in our selling area. While we believe our reference retail price does not appreciably exceed the highest retail prices at which sales are made in our selling area, we cannot assure you that our reference retail prices as described above represent the prices in every community on any given day. Some items in this advertisement are listed at "regular" selling prices. The merchandise is offered at this price except during a special sale. The purpose of showing a reference retail price (or a regular price) is to assist you, our customer, in making a knowledgeable and better informed buying decision. We suggest that you also do comparative shopping and compare our prices. (Prices in this tabloid do not include delivery charges. Ask us about delivery rates.)
