After Showdown Debate

Reagan Camp Confident; Mondale Still Trails

By DONALD M. ROTHBERG
AP Political Writer

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — President Reagan and Democratic challenger Walter F. Mondale, attacking each other's judgment and competence in a showdown debate, were heading into the campaign's closing two weeks with Mondale still playing catch-up and Reagan's supporters confident his victory was secure.

Mondale stopped short of claiming victory, but at a post-debate rally he repeated the leadership theme he stressed during their 90-minute televised confrontation Sunday night on defense and foreign policy.

"Tonight, despite all the tragedy in Lebanon, I think I heard the president, the commander in chief, blame it on somebody else," Mondale told about 1,500 people in a downtown hotel.

"Tonight, despite all the embarrassment of that covert action in Nicaragua, which has strengthened our enemies, I think I heard the president, the commander in chief, blame somebody else," he added.

But Vice President George Bush was jubilant. "I think we just wrapped up four more years," he declared after the debate.

A panel of seven scholastic and collegiate debate judges called Mondale the winner by an even wider margin than in the first debate in Louisville, Ky. They gave the Democrat 187 points to 168 for the president. The same panel declared Mondale the winner by a margin of 174 to 157 after the Louisville debate.

"It was a decisive victory for Mondale," said James M. Copeland, president of the National Forensic League and debate coach at Marquette University High School in Milwaukee.

But voters often have far different standards for evaluating political debaters than the technical points used by debate coaches.

An ABC News poll of 695 people who watched the debate said that a narrow margin thought Reagan was the winner. The network reported that 39 percent called Reagan the winner, 36 percent said it was Mondale and 25 percent said there was no clear victor. The margin of error was 4.5 percent, which meant that statistically it was a virtual tie.

Another poll taken for USA Today had a larger percentage calling Reagan the winner. The newspaper's poll of 850 registered voters had 44 percent saying Reagan won, 27 percent saying Mondale won and 21 percent saying they tied. The poll by Gordon S. Black Corp. had a margin of error of plus or minus 3.5 percent.

With 14 days left before Election Day, national polls are saying Reagan's lead is anywhere from 9 to 25 points or more.

Mondale, who got a boost in the polls from his strong showing in the domestic policy debate two weeks ago, was hoping for a similar result from their second and final debate to help him close that gap.

Sen. Paul Laxalt, R-Nev., the Reagan campaign chairman who was clearly upset two weeks ago after Reagan's subpar performance in the first debate in Louisville, Ky., was obviously relieved after this one.

"In the worst case scenario, I think it was a draw and in that case ... it was a Ronald Reagan victory," said Laxalt. "Mondale needed a knockout tonight and it was far from that."

Even some Mondale supporters gave the president credit for a far stronger performance than two weeks ago.

"It was less one-sided than the last time, and the president was good on themes," said Democratic Gov. Charles Robb of Virginia. "I'm not sure it will move public opinion very much." Former Democratic Party chairman Robert Strauss said Mondale "eliminated the question of is he tough enough." But Strauss acknowledged "the president was better tonight than he was two weeks ago."

Reagan was flying to the West Coast today for campaign appearances in California and Oregon. Mondale was heading in the opposite direction for appearances in Philadelphia, northern New Jersey, New York and Ohio.

The opening question of their debate dealt with Central America, and Mondale moved quickly to put the president on the defensive.

Widening Proposal

The state Department of Transportation held a public hearing last week in Williamston to discuss a federal-aid proposal to widen a 1.6 mile section of U.S. 64-13.

The project, estimated to cost $510,000, would involve adding a continuous left turn lane to the section stretching from SR 1428 to SR 1445.

The proposal was initiated, DOT officials said, because of the number of accidents that have occurred on the section of highway being considered for improvement. Ninety-eight traffic accidents reportedly occurred on US 64-13 between Jan. 1, 1979, and Jan. 31, 1984.

If approved, the expansion would begin sometime before the end of the current fiscal year in June, 1985.

GOP Candidate Claims Jones' Record Liberal

By CAROL TYER
Reflector Staff Writer

Republican 1st District Congressional candidate Herb Lee called a news conference this morning "to refute Congressman Walter B. Jones Sr.'s statement that he is not a Tip O'Neill liberal."

Lee said Jones has said recently that he is a moderate conservative. "It would be unseemly of me to call the Congressman a liar, but I understand that, after 18 years in Congress you get adept at half-truths," Lee said.

He said that, since 1979, Congressman Jones' voting record has been liberal. "Mrs. Geraldine Ferraro is an outstanding liberal," Lee said, "and Congressman Jones has voted right along with Mrs. Ferraro 78 percent of the time."

He said Jones has voted against Pres. Reagan's efforts to reduce wasteful domestic spending and in support of efforts to restore cuts made in 1981.

He pointed out that Congressman Jones is against the President's "High Frontier" program to put weaponry in space and against the MX missile program, against aid to stop Soviet, Cuban, Libyan and PLO takeover of Central America. The Congressman's vote that prompted (Please turn to page 2)

Paper Reveals Hinckley Notes

DURHAM (AP) — Notes allegedly written by John W. Hinckley Jr., saying he was involved in a conspiracy to kill Jimmy Carter and Ronald Reagan, gained some weight in light of plots later uncovered, the Durham Morning Herald said today.

The newspaper said it had copies of notes Hinckley wrote at the Federal Correctional Institute at Butner before he was found innocent by reason of insanity in the 1981 shooting of President Reagan. It quoted Hinckley as saying he knew of plots that would make the assassination of President John F. Kennedy "look like child's play" and hinting bombs would be used sometime in September.

On Sept. 8, 1981, federal officials said, Palestinian extremists hid plastic explosives and remote-controlled detonators in a Washington suburb in preparation for a September meeting at the White House between President Reagan and Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin. Authorities said the plan was aborted and not discovered until eight months later.

The Herald said it was unable to determine whether Hinckley was involved or made a lucky guess.

The newspaper said Abdul-Hafiz Mohammed Nasser, a Jordanian refugee linked to the explosives, associated with some of the same extremist groups as Hinckley. Nasser pleaded guilty in November 1982 to a federal charge of conspiracy to illegally possess and transport explosives across state lines and is serving five years in the LaTuna Federal Corrections Institute near El Paso, Texas.

Harold Eugene McDowell, who pleaded guilty to unlawfully possessing the explosives, was placed on four years' probation. A third party not identified in federal court records was granted immunity from prosecution in exchange for testimony against Nasser and McDowell. The Secret Service has declined to comment on any possible connection with Hinckley.

Hinckley, who is confined indefinitely at St. Elizabeths Hospital in Washington, was quoted in Sunday's Herald as having written that he concocted the insanity defense after his arrest March 30.

"It now seems obvious that I'll have to settle for life in prison if I continue with the one gunman story much longer," Hinckley said in the documents. "After March 30 I decided to go the insanity route and hope for an acquittal. Little did I know that even acquittal meant years in St. Elizabeths."

Prices Reverse Trends

LOS ANGELES (AP) — As cold weather sets in and people prefer staying home to driving, petroleum prices have dropped for heating fuel while increasing for gasoline, oil industry analyst Dan Lundberg says.

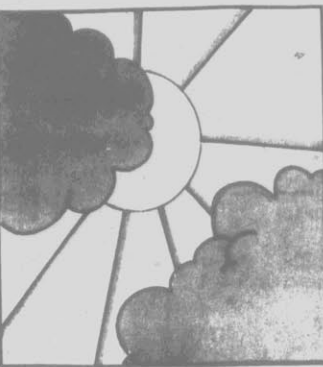

In a reversal of the seasonal pattern, average domestic gasoline prices have risen 2 cents a gallon since Labor day while heating oil costs declined about the same amount, Lundberg said Sunday.

Despite recent oil price cuts of 40 cents to $2 a barrel by Norway, Britain, the United Arab Emirates and Nigeria, gasoline prices kept rising unseasonably because of continuing strong demand by U.S. motorists plus "disappointing" third-quarter refinery profits, Lundberg said.

For the two weeks ending last Friday, Lundberg's survey of about 17,500 gas stations in all 50 states showed the average price of all grades of gasoline — taxes included — rose more than a tenth of a cent to $1.194 a gallon. The price increase was sharpest for premium leaded gasoline, he said.

Last June, Lundberg estimated that about 15,000 of the nation's 138,000 gas stations sold regular leaded at self-serve pumps for $1 per gallon or less.

Secretary Calls For 'Action'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Education Secretary T.H. Bell, releasing a new report criticizing the quality of undergraduate education in America, said today that prompt action is needed "to maintain the traditional excellence in our higher education system."

But Bell, at a briefing for educators on the study commissioned by his National Institute of Education, said that colleges have not fallen as far behind as elementary and secondary schools.

"We have the finest and the most advanced and emulated system of higher education in the world," Bell told 150 people gathered at George Washington University. "Our justifiable pride ought to be tempered with a bit of apprehension."

But he said, "No one should conclude we are poorly served" by the nation's nearly 3,300 colleges and universities.

The report, "Involvement in Learning: Realizing the Potential of American Higher Education," was written by a panel of seven scholars chaired by Penn State University professor and administrator Kenneth P. Mortimer. It makes 27 recommendations to improve undergraduate education, including the proposal that all students take at least two years of liberal arts courses, even if that forces them to spend more than four years getting a bachelor's degree in business, nursing or other fields.

Mortimer called it "a report written by insiders about the enterprise to which they have all devoted their lives." He said the nation's debate about educational excellence has now advanced to colleges.

Alzheimer's Workshop Set

CERT Is Organized In Martin County

WILLIAMSTON — Concern generated by the March tornadoes that swept through Pitt County leaving a path of death and devastation prompted Martin County officials to organize a county emergency repose team— CERT — whose members recently completed their first training session. A second will be held in November.

Modeled after SERT, the State Emergency Response Team, CERT will not replace or duplicate the services of existing emergency personnel. Rather, CERT members will provide support for existing emergency squads.

What CERT is all about, Dale Lilley (emergency management coordinator for Martin County) said, is planning and preparing for those things that might happen that are out of the ordinary. For example, the team's first training session dealt with damage assessment, a skill that is desperately needed during a disaster, but a skill that is scarce, Lilley said.

The group is made up of volunteers from all areas of Martin County and is drawn from, but not limited to, fire and rescue departments in the county. CERT now has 18 members personnel, include a pilot and a chemist.

Currently no funds of any kind have been committed to the team and none have been requested, Lilley said. "It is conceivable that in some instances we would ask the county to pay for materials for a clean-up . . . but in terms of operation we are not funded by anyone."

For further information about CERT, contact Lilley at (919) 792-5670.

him (Lee) to run against him, he said, was Jones' vote for a nuclear arms agreement with the Soviet Union.

He said his campaign manager went to Farmville Friday to ask Congressman Jones to debate him and that Congressman Jones refused. Lee will continue to push for a debate, he said.

He said he feels Congressman Jones left the Agriculture Committee because "it's a hot potato right now."

Lee said he fears that, if re-elected, Congressman Jones will work to have his son, North Carolina State Representative Walter B. Jones Jr., succeed him in office.

Asked what he'd do for North Carolina farmers in Congress, Lee said, "Everything I could, though I'm not sure what right now. No two farmers I've talked to yet agree on the Tobacco Program."

Lee said he believes he will garner some of the votes that went for John Gilliam, Jones' opponent in the primary election. When it was pointed out that Democrats outnumber Republicans 5 to 1 in Pitt County, he said recent registrations have decreased the margin to 4 to 1. Margins in the First District have recently been reduced from 8 to 1 to 7 to 1, he added.

Views On Dental Health

Kenneth T. Perkins, D.D.S.P.A

DENTAL DISEASE NOT INHERITED

We can break the chain of tooth decay. Today, dental disease is totally preventable. Bad teeth don't "run in the family". There is just no hereditary excuse for cavities and crooked teeth. What we do pass down from generation to generation are eating habits, muscular patterns, attitudes toward oral cleanliness, etc.

If grandmother had a history of dental problems, maybe it was because she nor her parents knew how to take care of her teeth. If grandfather wore dentures, it may be because he lived at a time when teeth were extracted to "cure" all kinds of ailments from rheumatism to poor eyesight. But your own child has been born in an age of prevention. If he or she has eight cavities by age five, it will be because somebody has failed to do something.

Today's preventive dental knowledge calls for a three-way effort to break the chain of decay through new approaches to diet, oral hygiene, and strengthening the resistance of teeth to decay. It will take time, caring and effort, but we can defeat dental decay in children if we really work at it.

Prepared as a public service to promote better dental health. From the offices of: Kenneth T. Perkins, D.D.S.P.A. Evans St., Phone: 752-5126. Vanceboro 244-1179 waistline. The fitted bodice featured a Victorian neckline with an illusion yoke accented with French dotted net embossed with floral Venise lace and double tiered caplet sleeves of matching net. She wore an apricot wreath of silk petals and leaves. She carried a cascade bouquet of peach lilies with variegated nephthytis leaves and flowering miniature ivy. Kathy Williams of Fayetteville, sister of the bridegroom, was matron of honor. Bridesmaids were Cindy McLawhorn, sister of the bridegroom, Shirley Jones, sister-in-law of the bride, Melanie Jolly and Beth Norris. They wore dresses like the honor attendant and carried similar bouquets.

Brandy Williams, niece of the bridegroom, was flower girl and wore a white organza gown accented with an apricot taffeta sash. She wore an apricot wreath of silk petals and leaves and carried a lace basket filled with peach flowers.

The father of the bridegroom was best man and ushers were Darren Prince, brother of the bridegroom, Kenneth Jones, brother of the bride, Clinton Williams and David McLawhorn, brothers-in-law of the bridegroom, and Billy Shephard McLawhorn. David Williams, nephew of the bridegroom, was junior usher.

The wedding was directed by Mrs. Jack Dail.

The mother of the bride wore a formal gown of peach and the mother of the bridegroom wore a formal gown of burgundy. Each wore a corsage of phalaenopsis orchids and white stephanotis.

Following the ceremony the bride's mother and grandparents entertained a reception in the church fellowship hall.

The couple will live in Fayetteville after a wedding trip to the mountains.

The bride attended Atlantic Christian College and Pitt Community College. The bridegroom graduated from Cape Fear Technical Institute and Lenoir Community. He is self-employed.

An after-rehearsal party was held at the home of the bride and a bridesmaids luncheon was given Saturday. The bride was entertained at several luncheons and showers prior to the wedding.

Dear Abby

By Abigail Van Buren

Second Opinion Was Of Primary Importance

DEAR ABBY: I am a healthy, active, 46-year-old man whose doctor told me I needed a triple (and possibly a quadruple) bypass heart operation immediately! It came as a shock to me because I had never had heart trouble of any kind. This news came to me on May 2, 1983. On the following day, I read something in your column that I believe was more than just a coincidence. It was as though the good Lord had sent a message to me through you.

I acted on your recommendation and got not only a second opinion, but a third, and both doctors told me I did not need heart surgery. When I told my first doctor about the opinions of the other two doctors, he suggested that since I had so little confidence in his professional judgment, I should find another doctor. I did.

Please run the enclosed column again. And run it every year. Sign me ...

ALSO WISED UP

DEAR ALSO: I will. And here it is:

DEAR ABBY: Thank you so much for printing the government's Second Surgical Opinion Hotline. (The toll-free number is 1-800-638-6833; in Maryland, it's 1-800-492-6603.) It's easy to see why you titled your column "Second Opinion Likely to Offend Doctor." It's been my experience that asking your original doctor for the name of a second-opinion specialist poses no problem for him. He will simply refer you to someone down the hall, in the same building or belonging to the same country club who will invariably corroborate his own opinion.

I cannot stress enough the importance of seeking out specialists totally independent from one another for second (and third and fourth) opinions in surgical or medical matters. Find a different doctor who will really take an objective look at your case, without regard to ego, fear of loss of control over a patient, his wallet, or any other irrelevant (to you) issues.

You can also receive the brochure by calling the hotline number and requesting a copy.

Knowing

Astronomers are elated by discovery of a smidgen of blurred light around a distant star as the first direct evidence some of the material around that star has coalesced to create planets.

Of course it's been long assumed our own planetary system was not unique. In the vastness of the heavens it was an inescapable probability that the processes which produced our system had been duplicated time and time again. As one astronomer observes, "if one extends that (proof of other planets) even further, then you get to the question of life on other worlds. That's the next step."

What makes the sighting of planets so difficult is they do not emit light, and in comparison with their suns, they are pitifully small pieces of matter.

To us laymen, the size of the universe is beyond imagining. The star Beta Pictoris which has been identified as having planet-potential, is regarded as "relatively nearby" ... only 293 trillion miles from our sun.

With an established target for continuing study it is a near certainty observatories and a space-born telescope will strive to confirm what has already been seen as convincing evidence of a planetary system. Some 40 other stars identified as having orbital probabilities will be given closer scrutiny.

The more humans learn, the more they want to know.

Market

The tobacco season is once again over for the Greenville Tobacco Market and the growers it serves.

Sales for the big market ended Thursday after 44 days of auction. Sales Supervisor J.N. Bryan reported that the market averaged $180.78 in selling 34,911,070 pounds for $63,112,605. Though the average was lower than last year's $185.10, total money was higher because more tobacco was sold on the local market this year.

Of the 34,911,070 sold on the Greenville market this year 14.61 percent or 5,100,265 pounds went to Stabilization Corp. under the price support program. That is an industry-wide trend that concerns everybody. Nevertheless, in an industry which is constantly in turmoil it was not a bad year on the Greenville market.

Waiting For The Eggs To Hatch

STATESVILLE — Bob Jordan put most of his eggs in one basket and things appear to have worked out for him.

Jordan, the Democratic candidate for lieutenant governor, enters the final weeks of the campaign appearing to be far ahead of his Republican opponent, John Carrington of Raleigh.

Democratic fears that President Ronald Reagan's coattails would be long enough to sweep Republicans into the lieutenant governor's office and into Council of State offices are beginning to subside. Private polls conducted by candidates show Jordan maintaining a comfortable lead, sources say. Traveling with Jordan during a campaign sweep through Iredell, Burke and Gaston counties, the reasons for Jordan's success to date are apparent.

Jordan had a hard-fought primary battle with Gastonia's Carl Stewart. Both come from the party's progressive wing but Jordan was perceived as more of a businessman's candidate than was Stewart. The race got testy near the end but many Democrats had viewed the race as one between two good Democrats, either one of whom they'd be happy to support.

At a restaurant here in Statesville, the coming together of the Democratic Party with regard to the lieutenant governor's race was evident. Several Democrats eating lunch at a Jordan fund-raiser were former Stewart supporters. Later in the day, in Gastonia, Stewart's hometown, Jordan was given a standing ovation after delivering a short stump speech. Stewart himself endorsed Jordan shortly after the primary and gave him a rousing endorsement at Asheville's Vance-Aycock Dinner.

While Stewart's more liberal supporters show a willingness to support Jordan, the Mount Gilead lumberman has also shown an ability to attract the party's more conservative elements. At a fundraiser held in a private Gaston County home, textile industry leaders who plan to vote for Reagan and GOP gubernatorial candidate Jim Martin were handing over the checks to support Jordan in his race.

And that money is essential to Jordan who spent almost all he had against Stewart. After spending $850,000 for the first primary, he had to scale his expenditures back for the general election. Several paid staffers were kept on the payroll but advertising stopped. While Carrington put a quarter million dollars of advertising on the air in a desperate bid to match Jordan's name identification — and damage Jordan's reputation — Jordan had to hold his fire.

Now Jordan is back on the air, planning to spend $125,000 in the final two weeks. "Because I've not been on TV, I've just been sitting there," in the polls, Jordan says. His polls show him with 48 percent of the vote, Carrington with 24 percent and the rest undecided.

In his stump speeches, Jordan stressed his business and state government experience and his four terms in the state Senate. But, unlike his campaign against Stewart where he avoided direct criticism of his opponent, Jordan does lash out against Carrington. "He's a different kind of person," he says of Carrington. "Here's a man who had been in North Carolina for nine years and had not registered to vote." (Carrington came here from New Jersey and says he never got around to registering.)

Jordan is also drawing Republican support. A business lobbyist in Raleigh says Jordan understands his problems and is willing to listen whereas Carrington has no experience in the legislative process. A textiles company president in Gastonia says the same thing. Carrington may be a member of Ronald Reagan's party, he says, but that party won't run the 1985 North Carolina General Assembly.

The President's Age Factor Comes To A Head

I was at a dinner party the other evening and as is my custom after champagne is poured, I raised my glass and said, "To the president's good health."

The guests, predominantly Republicans, looked at me as if I had spit on the floor.

"What the hell does that mean?" the host said angrily.

"It doesn't mean anything except I was proposing a toast to the health of the president of the United States."

"The president is in very good health," a White House aide said. "And no one has to toast it."

"I didn't say he wasn't. I was just wishing him more of the same."

"I'll bet," a rich lawyer said. "Reagan is the youngest 73-year-old man I know. You ought to see him on his ranch when he's chopping wood and riding a horse. It's just like the Democrats to bring up the age issue at this time since they have nothing else to talk about."

"I assure you my toast had nothing to do with politics. I didn't even how old Mr. Reagan was until the debate. I thought he was still in his 50s. To me he'll always be 'The Gipper.'"

"You never would have thought to toast the president's health," a member of Reagan's kitchen cabinet said, "if the president hadn't agreed to lock horns with Mondale against everyone's better judgement."

"The debate had nothing to do with raising my glass to Mr. Reagan," I protested. "Although I'll admit he did look a little tired after 30 minutes."

"If Mondale didn't have so much makeup on he would have looked twice as old as Reagan," someone said.

"Look, I had no intention of bringing up the age issue on this campaign. If you want to know, the Wall Street Journal was the first one to make a big deal of it after the debate. Since the Journal is to the Republican Party what the L'Osservatore Ramano is to the Vatican, I don't see why you people are so upset with me."

"The president's performance in the debate had nothing to do with his age. His staff just stuffed him so many statistics that Reagan couldn't be Reagan."

"I agree," I said. "Mr. Reagan is always at his best when he's himself, reading from a teleprompter, or if his helicopter engines are going full blast as he's leaving for Camp David. The president was in an impossible position standing at a podium for 90 minutes, without his press secretary Larry Speakes to cut off the questions."

"The Russian leaders are far older than Reagan," the rich lawyer's wife said. "And they seem to be doing a pretty good job of running the Soviet Union."

"I don't understand why everyone is so mad because I want to drink to the health of the president," I said.

"Why don't you propose a toast to Mondale's good health? It's a known fact he takes pills for hypertension."

"Because, frankly, I didn't think anyone at this table would join me in a toast to Mondale."

"Reagan would beat Mondale in an arm-wrestling contest any time he wanted to," my host said.

"That's probably true," I said. "But I doubt if he could beat Geraldine Ferraro. Gosh, I'm just a guest here, and I certainly didn't want to ruin the party by suggesting we raise our glasses to the health of the leader of the free world. I'll be glad to withdraw my toast if it will make you all happy. The bubbles are out of my glass anyway."

"You've ruined the party already," the hostess said. "It was the most malicious and rude thing anyone could do. Fortunately you're not going to change anybody's mind in this room. I never thought anyone would have the bad taste to bring up the president's health at a dinner party of mine. Shall we all go into the living room for coffee?"

New Generation Looks At Welfare With Sharp Eyes

WASHINGTON — Put aside the stories about welfare cheaters that one is accustomed to hearing at country clubs. An even deeper, almost mean-spirited, tone emanates from the younger generation.

America's emerging upper crust is terribly insecure about its status. It's as if the working and welfare poor are directly responsible.

Unfortunately, the contempt isn't limited to what are called "yuppies." It's expressed by various segments of the baby-boom generation. Union organizers see and hear it among young tradesmen. It even surfaces in punk rock music, in songs such as the Dead Kennedys' "Kill the Poor."

There's a temptation to downplay this hostility as misguided innocence. Yet relatively few young people work on behalf of the less privileged these days. A future generation of leaders, socialized in the Reagan era, could well become that which forgot the poor.

Diane Sawyer, the CBS television starlet and former Nixon aide, alluded to that possibility during the first presidential debate Oct. 7. She asked Walter Mondale if Americans hadn't lost interest in social programs for the poor. Even Mondale could only answer that "the American people want to make certain that their dollar is wisely spent."

Polls, in fact, seem to suggest that younger Americans are growing intolerant. In each of the last three years, the ABC/Washington Post poll has asked citizens whether the federal government should reduce social programs in order to trim the deficit. Each year, a larger percentage of Americans under 30 has advocated cutting those programs to achieve that goal.

A Gallup Poll in 1983 found that 40 percent of all Americans under 30 favored further cuts in government social programs to reduce the federal deficit; for Americans over 30, the share was only three points higher. Similar polls by the Yankelovich and Roper organizations suggest more and more young Americans want social programs returned to state governments or volunteer organizations.

The hostile undercurrents are a symptom of economic insecurity. Young Americans who joined the labor force in their late teens and early 20s have fared less well than rosy economic news would suggest. Households headed by those under 35, for instance, have seen their real income drop by 8 percent since 1980; for households headed by 25-year-olds and under, there's been a 10 percent decline. One major explanation is the decline in basic industries: Young people have been excluded from the higher-paying jobs that their parents enjoyed and have been forced to accept lower pay in the private sector.

The major effect is that they feel squeezed — a condition that tends to wring the compassion out of one's soul.

"I think the major difference between a generation that embraced the Peace Corps and one that has no time to worry about their brothers and sisters has a lot to do with the economic crisis of the 1970s," says Michael Harrington, whose 1962 book, "The Other America," is said to have awakened President Kennedy to poverty in this country. "Young people in the '70s ... were forced to practice a certain cynicism and opportunism."

—Elisha Douglass—

Strength For Today

What is worship?

Worship is anything which makes it easy to find God and difficult to forget him. It may be the singing of hymns or the offering of prayers, the reading of scripture, quiet meditation in some holy shrine or the proclamation of the gospel. Any circumstance which leads us naturally into a sense of the divine presence or makes it difficult to satisfy ourselves with anything but the Spirit of the Living God is an element of worship.

People sometimes say that they can worship God on the golf course or on the beach as effectively as in church. But they are deceiving themselves. They are substituting their enjoyment of nature for real worship. Most, if not all of us, have to set aside certain periods of worship in surroundings specifically designed to promote it before we can really be said to have brought our hearts into contact with the unseen things which are eternal.

Savitch's Death Spurred New Protection Measures

By LEE LINDER
Associated Press Writer
NEW HOPE, Pa. (AP) — The canal where NBC-TV anchorwoman Jessica Savitch drowned is dry now, and a new barrier protects others from taking the wrong turn that led to her death a year ago.

"It is protected now," Bruce Dallas, spokesman for the state Department of Environmental Resources, said of the site where the 35-year-old rising network star and her friend, a newspaper executive, died as they left a fog-shrouded restaurant parking lot.

A three-foot wooden fence, reinforced with steel beams, was completed last week around the lot of the Chez Odette Restaurant, where the car mistakenly exited the night of Oct. 23, 1983, and plunged into the 153-year-old Delaware Canal.

A wood-and-steel gate bars the entrance to the towpath along the canal where the car tumbled over. The gate is padlocked with access only to residents on the other side of the lot, who use it to reach their private driveways.

"This fence effectively prevents any vehicle from either using the towpath or going over the bank around the parking lot," said Dallas. "This is now well fortified and it is marked cautioning drivers."

The canal itself, part of Roosevelt State Park, is dry and weed-filled, the water drained for construction of a Delaware River pumping station at nearby Point Pleasant.

"The fence will save lives," said Paul Raywood, a contractor who lives nearby. "You'd have to hit it with a tractor-trailer going 40 miles an hour to even dent it."

But, looking back, he and others ask why it took so long to put up the fence, noting that in 1977 a man was killed when his car plunged into the canal during a rainstorm.

Also, Raywood added, "The canal is 60 miles long and there isn't any other fence and people drive into the canal all the time."

"Somebody will have to get killed first, I guess, somebody famous like Jessica Savitch, before something will be done," he said.

The question is also raised in three unsettled lawsuits filed by the estates of Ms. Savitch and her friend Martin Fischbein, 34. The suits seek millions of dollars in damages from the Department of Environmental Resources, which owns the parking lot and canal, and from the owners of the restaurant and the property adjoining the canal towpath.

Also named in the suits are News America Publishing Co., owner of the New York Post, which leased the station wagon, and General Motors Corp., which built it.

In the 1977 accident the victim's family won a $1.05 million damage award against the state.

Fischbein, of Woodmere, N.Y., was vice president and assistant general manager of the Post and also served as its personnel and circulation manager.

He had taken Ms. Savitch, who lived in New York City, to the 190-year-old restaurant for Sunday dinner and apparently became disoriented while driving out of the lot, missing small warning signs in the fog, rain and darkness.

Investigators believe Fischbein mistook the towpath for River Road, which runs parallel to the canal. The station wagon swung onto the towpath, swerved and then flipped over as it fell into 5 feet of water, mud and silt.

"The mud made the doors impossible to open," said Walter Everett, police chief of this scenic town that faces Washington's Crossing on the New Jersey side.

Ms. Savitch, born in Kennett Square, Pa., and raised in Margate, N.J., was an anchorwoman on a Philadelphia television station before joining NBC in 1977, where she became a prime-time newscaster.

Researchers Look For Improved Versions Of New Artificial Gill

BEAUFORT, N.C. (AP) — The development of an artificial gill capable of letting divers stay underwater without tanks or hoses is similar to the first steps of aviation, researchers at the Duke University Marine Laboratory say.

"We've gone from the artificial gill to the artificial fish," said Dr. Joseph Bonaventura. "The first system, the one last November, you might consider like the Wright Brothers' first airplane. The system now is like a World War I plane, a Red Baron. What we're looking for now is a 747."

Once perfected, the artificial gill could let divers stay under water for days on end, extracting oxygen from the water instead of lugging compressed-air tanks or relying on cumbersome air hoses. The gill could also permit submarines using oxygen-consuming engines to stay underwater longer.

In medicine, a gill might provide oxygen-enriched air for victims of emphysema or could extract oxygen from food and beverages to increase shelf life.

The gill is based on a hemosponge developed by Bonaventura and his wife, Celia, both biochemists at the Duke Marine Biomedical Center in Beaufort. The hemosponge combines hemoglobin — the substance that carries oxygen in blood — with a plastic compound.

When seawater is passed through a container holding the sponge, oxygen is extracted and can be freed by subjecting the container to a vacuum or an electrical charge.

The latest designs pump gas continuously away from sea water in a system similar to the circulation in a fish. The "blood" is routed past an electrode that releases the oxygen, which passes through a second membrane array to strain it from circulating fluid and goes into a collection tank.

Farm Scene

By Mitch Smith
Asst. Agricultural Extension Agent

According to the 1983 soil sample summary of Pitt County, 94 percent of all wheat fields were low in copper. Copper is a very essential element in the production of small grains. Its primary role is that of chlorophyll composition. As growers fertilize for their 1985 wheat crops, copper applications should be considered.

Copper deficiencies usually occur in soils which are slightly high in pH and are sandy in texture. These soils contain low levels of organic matter and thus are unable to hold essential nutrients. Land which has been cleared and brought under cultivation may also be deficient in copper.

Fall is the best time to correct a copper problem. Farmers should examine the copper index (Cu-I) on the soil sample sheets to determine whether or not an application of copper is needed. An application of three to five pounds of actual copper in the fall is usually sufficient for three years. It is recommended that farmers broadcast this application due to the fact that tests have proven banding to be ineffective.

Farmers who have decided to apply copper may find several sources available. Copper sulfate is probably the most popular material containing 25 percent actual copper. This requires that from 8-20 pounds of this material be applied per acre to reach sufficient levels. Other forms of copper include a tri-basic copper sulfate (53 percent), copper oxides (50 percent) and copper chelates (8-13 percent). Chelated forms of copper are generally more expensive than sulfates. Growers who are going to apply manufactured fertilizers should be sure that they contain suitable levels to correct a deficiency problem.

Applying the right amount is crucial to the correction of a deficiency. Too much copper can cause toxic levels and optimum growth may be hurt. The response to copper applications vary with the crop to be planted. Wheat gives a good response, barley and oats provide medium responses and rye will rarely respond at all.

Killing Probed

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Federal and city investigators probing the explosion that killed a security guard Saturday morning have learned a metal box possibly containing dynamite lay near the victim's front door since before midnight Friday.

Police identified the man as Jesus "Jesse" Escontrias, 49, a former Green Beret who was chief security officer at Spirit Square for Security Forces Inc., a Charlotte-based contract security business.

Escontrias' next-door neighbor, Gladys Nespori, said she first noticed a shallow, rectangular brown box on his sidewalk about midnight Friday.

Neighbors and some police officers had said earlier the explosive may have been concealed in a newspaper that lay torn and rumpled near the porch.

Police said they were treating the death as a homicide and members of the bomb squad were trying to identify the type of explosive.

Larry Hale, who rented Escontrias the garage of his home, identified the body for police. The blast shook homes three blocks away.

Reagan Blasts Mondale's Defense Record

By MICHAEL PUTZEL
Associated Press Writer
PALMDALE, Calif. (AP) — President Reagan, keying his campaign offense to tough defense talk, toured an assembly plant for the B-1 bomber today and said Walter F. Mondale has "made a career out of weakening America's armed forces."

In a campaign stop designed to underscore the differences outlined in their Sunday debate in Kansas City, Reagan hammered at his opponent's record in the Senate and as Jimmy Carter's vice president.

In remarks prepared for employees of defense contractors Rockwell International, Lockheed and Northrop at Rockwell's B1-B production site, Reagan kept up the attack line he used in the debate, saying Mondale "has a record of weakness with regard to our national defense that is second to none."

"I do not question my opponent's patriotism and love of country," Reagan said today. "I only question his philosophy. ... If it were up to my opponent, I'm afraid Rockwell might still be building the (World War II vintage) B-25 — that is, if you were building anything at all."

"The truth is, if all his no votes had prevailed, America would barely have any defense, any real means to protect the peace, any chance to preserve freedom — and we can't afford that kind of protection."

Reagan said, "Mr. Mondale made a career out of weakening America's armed forces" and labeled as nonsense Mondale's proposals to bring the Soviets into a new peace agreement by not building the B-1 and some other weapons.

Mondale was vice president to Jimmy Carter, who tried to kill the B-1. Reagan made sure it was resurrected after he took office in 1980.

"As long as I'm president, we will not shortchange the security needs of America," Reagan said. "Those who have no vision of America have no business leading America. And those who believe a weaker America is a safer America have no business guiding the destiny of our nation."

"It's always easy to argue for reductions in defense spending, just as it's easy to pretend that one can call the Soviet leaders, as my opponent has proposed, and persuade them in a moment to alter the course they have followed for decades," Reagan said. "It's also nonsense, and the American people should know it."

Mondale argued during the debate that he remains committed to a strong defense and a military budget "which would increase our nation's strength by — in real terms — by double that of the Soviet Union."

But he acknowledged he has opposed the B-1 long-range bomber, saying, "for 15 years the Soviet Union has been preparing to meet the B-1. The secretary of defense himself said it would be a suicide mission if it were built."

Speechwriter Ken Khachigian said the president would keep attacking on defense — "laying out the record in a way that makes it stick on Mondale" — as he attempts to convert a big lead in the polls into an Election Day victory.

After the stop here, Reagan was heading for campaign appearances in Oregon, Washington state and Ohio.

Mondale has been making a concerted effort in the Northwest while Reagan has concentrated lately on the Midwest.

Reagan aides, who quickly proclaimed a Reagan victory in the first debate two weeks ago only to soften their assessment as other reviews came in, followed a similar tack Sunday night.

But their judgment that Reagan had avoided the kind of politically damaging lapses that plagued him in the first encounter was shared to some extent by some Democrats and the Reagan camp mood was broadly upbeat.

"The president was much better than he was in the first debate," said Democratic Sen. Frank Lautenberg of New Jersey.

Even Mondale's foreign policy advisor, David Aaron, offered a grudging, half-compliment: "The president, while he was this week in command of himself, he was not in command of the facts or the situation on the issues."

Despite his generally polished performance, the confrontation started with Reagan correcting himself to say he did not mean to say there was a CIA agent in Nicaragua and ended awkwardly when his closing statement was cut off by moderator Edwin Newman because the president ran over his allotted time.

Reagan had spoken first about his attempt to write a letter that would be sealed in a time capsule and wondering how those who lived in the 1980s would be viewed 100 years hence.

He went on to talk about having "met young America" during his campaign and was cut short at that point.

Khachigian said Reagan had finished most of what he intended to say but had wanted to make one more point he often makes at campaign rallies across the country.

Mondale: President 'Dodged Responsibility'

By MIKE SHANAHAN
Associated Press Writer
KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Walter F. Mondale said today the second presidential debate revealed big gaps in President Reagan's knowledge of foreign policy and charged that the president dodged responsibility for a number of major mistakes in his four years in office.

Rating his opponent's performance, Mondale said, "In one sense, he didn't do as poorly as he did last time. But, on the central question of command, knowledge, of taking responsibility, I think he did worse."

"When this record is debated over the next two weeks," Mondale said, "it's clear he didn't know what a president must know, he didn't take responsibility where a president must. And, when things went wrong, he tried to run away from them."

At a brief news conference before he left for Philadelphia, the Democratic challenger said that in their nationally televised debate, Reagan declined to take responsibility for the deaths of Americans in Lebanon and, instead, blamed them on "some local commander even though he is the commander in chief."

Mondale also said that, to Reagan, "If the illegal war in Nicaragua becomes embarrassing, it is some minor employee even though it is the president who ordered that illegal war."

As the debate is analyzed by the American people, Mondale said, "We are going to gain a lot of support."

Campaign manager Robert G. Beckel, meanwhile, maintained today that Mondale is leading Reagan in the Northeast while "closing the gap" in the Midwest. He offered to specifics to back up those claims, which contradict several recent polls.

Campaign chairman James Johnson also said Mondale had scored a "very decisive victory" in the debate.

After Sunday's debate, a feisty Mondale told a rally of about 1,500 cheering supporters:

"Tonight, despite all the tragedy in Lebanon," Mondale said, "I think I heard the president, the commander in chief, blame it on somebody else."

"Tonight, despite all the embarrassment of that covert action in Nicaragua which has strengthened our opponents and weakened ourselves, I think I heard him blame somebody else," Mondale added.

Today, Mondale planned to capitalize on the attention given the debate by campaigning for 16 hours through Pennsylvania, New Jersey, New York and Ohio, all states he must carry in the Nov. 6 election to even challenge Reagan's lead.

Aides said Mondale will hit hard on the issue of presidential leadership as demonstrated by his and Reagan's comparative debate performances.

Privately, Mondale's senior advisers conceded that the incumbent put in a much stronger performance than in the first presidential debate two weeks ago in Louisville.

But they also believe that Reagan's statements on a number of issues will provide ammunition for Mondale to challenge Reagan's ability to govern in a second term. They cited statements of whether missiles from submarines can be recalled, the president's explanation of the Star Wars satellite weapons system, that the location of the Marine barracks in Lebanon was not decided in Washington, and his description of how a CIA manual describing political assassinations in Nicaragua came to be published.

"We had a test tonight of who has mastered what's needed to be known, of who knows what's really going on ... of who is ready to be commander in chief, who is ready to run the government. ..." Mondale said.

On specific issues, Mondale recalled Reagan's denial that the president ever suggested that missiles from submarines and long-range bombers could be called back.

Seminar Set At ECU

ECU News Bureau
"Death and Dying: The Impact of Technology on Tradition," a public program examining moral and ethical questions about health, death, life support systems and prolonged care for the terminally ill, will be held at East Carolina University Nov. 9.

Sessions, all to be held in the Carol Belk Building auditorium, are scheduled from 2-5 p.m. with a major address at 7:15 p.m. All sessions are open to the public.

The event is sponsored by the ECU Regional Development Institute with funding from the N.C. Board of Science and Technology and is designed to be of particular interest to medical and health care professionals, clergy and counselors.

The featured address will be "Philosophers in the Hospital," by Dr. John Lincourt, professor of philosophy at UNC-Charlotte.

Other sessions will include panel presentations on philosophical and technical aspects of death by Dr. James LeRoy Smith, chairman of the ECU Department of Philosophy; Dr. Elizabeth Welch, adjunct professor of gerontology at Wake Forest University; Dr. James Mitchell, assistant professor of sociology at ECU, and Dr. Loretta Kopelman, director of the ECU School of Medicine's humanities program.

An open discussion will be moderated by Gene Percell, professor emeritus at Atlantic Christian College.

The program "examines some of the issues related to the application of life sustaining technology to terminal illness, to 'brain death' and to irreversible retardation and deformity," said Janice Faulkner, director of the ECU Regional Development Institute. "It seeks to explore and to raise questions about death and dying and how decisions about these phenomena are made in relation to modern medical technology."

Further information about the program is available from the Regional Development Institute, 757-6650.

Maybe you should consider where you'll be in 150 years.

The thought of it isn't pleasant. But your own bodily mortality is something somebody's going to have to deal with sooner or later.

So, instead of putting on blinders, why don't you consider the options? Find out a little about what happens after you pass away. The laws and the facts that govern the cemetery business. When you do, we're certain you'll see the advantages that Pinewood Memorial Park, managed by S.G. Wilkerson and Sons, offers over new, private ventures.

Just what is 'Perpetual Care'?

The State of North Carolina requires privately-owned cemeteries to meet certain requirements in order to call themselves 'Perpetual Care' cemeteries.

The law requires that a certain amount from the sale of each grave be set aside in a fund. Interest earned from the dollars in that fund is required to be used for upkeep in the cemetery.

However, S.G. Wilkerson and Sons, has never considered the required amount to be sufficient. Therefore, over the years, the contributions to the fund have been much larger than the amount required.

The results are obvious. With a 25-year growth of mature centipede sod, the cemetery grounds are now beautiful. The infrequent maintenance problems are quickly attended to. Plot buyers in Pinewood select from the grounds themselves, not from a notebook of what cemetery owners hope the grounds will look like years from now. Fact is, it takes years of careful maintenance for a cemetery to really look groomed and cared for.

And all Pinewood graves have the low profile and dignity of a flat bronze marker — better for everyone. What may surprise you the most is the fact that the total Pinewood Memorial Park costs are less, not more, than "package deals".

Let us tell you more. We'd like to explain more. Because we'd like you to make an informed decision about this matter which you and your family should take seriously.

The Wilkerson family has been in this business for many years. So talk to us before you buy anything. We'll respect your decision. But we want you to be sure you know what you're doing.

Candidates Agree That Diversification Needed By North Carolina Leaf Growers

By The Associated Press
Although they say emphasis on the tobacco program should not be lessened, both the Republican and Democratic candidates for governor are encouraging North Carolina's 45,000 flue-cured growers to diversify.
"If you have a farm and are barely about to eke out a favorable income because of tobacco, just think how much better you can do if, in addition to that, you've got some other crops you can raise," Republican gubernatorial candidate U.S. Rep. Jim Martin said recently.
Democratic candidate and Attorney General Rufus Edmisten agreed, but said that "land used to grow tobacco does not lend itself to other crops immediately. Farmers need time to plant it out."
Tobacco has been under attack recently and farmers are worried. Production of flue-cured tobacco in North Carolina has decreased, and there has been a steady stream of imports and a decline in exports.

"We're worried like hell," said F.H. Shackelford, the president of the 4,000-member North Carolina Tobacco Growers Association. "Nobody's got anything to look forward to. It's time for the leadership of this state to say, 'Hey, wait a minute, our farmers are farmers too and they shouldn't be discriminated against.'"
Martin said it would be "a serious mistake for the state to do anything that would move away from supporting the tobacco program, or to imply that we're moving away." Edmisten described tobacco as "still the number one cash crop in North Carolina" and said it has "put food on the table for thousands of children."

Edmisten, who grew up on a farm in Boone where his family grew burley tobacco, says he understands the plight of the tobacco farmer.
"The most significant thing is that I have been working with tobacco farmers all my life," Edmisten said.
But Martin, a former Davidson College chemistry professor, dismissed his opponent's tobacco-growing experience.
"So what?" Martin said. "I was not born on a tobacco farm, and I'm not an expert on how to plant and tend and prime tobacco. But I can tell you this. I've supported the tobacco farmers and the tobacco industry."
Martin, a member of Congress representing the 9th District since 1972, has voted with other North Carolina congressmen on the tobacco issue.

"Congressman Martin did vote right on down the line with the North Carolina delegation on tobacco," said W.B. Jenkins, the assistant to the president of the N.C. Farm Bureau Federation. "He's an easy congressman to talk to and has always been receptive to the needs of agriculture."
Edmisten has proposed that as governor he would call a "tobacco summit conference" where growers, producers, politicians and others involved in the program would develop a more unified, directed approach to their problems.
"The trouble right now is there are too many people on different levels trying to speak for tobacco," Edmisten said in the debate between the gubernatorial candidates.

IN THE STATE

Officials Hint Fear Of DWI Is Declining

By The Associated Press
Increases in the number of drunken driving arrests and alcohol-related deaths indicate the public's attitude about the Safe Driving Act may be changing, state officials say.
Drunken driving arrests and deaths from alcohol-related accidents fell dramatically in the first six months after the October 1983 enactment of the law, which mandated stiffer punishments for drunk drivers.
Since then, arrests and deaths have been creeping steadily up. In August, for the first time since the law took effect, more people were arrested for drunken driving than during the same month of the previous year.

55.8 percent of those arrested from January to June 1983 under the old law. But the conviction rate rose to 69.3 percent from January to June 1984. For people who registered a 0.10 or higher blood-alcohol level, the conviction rate soared to 94 percent from 79 percent under the old law.

A study of the first six months under the new law released in June by the crime commission showed that 32 percent of DWI offenders were sentenced to active time in jail. There was no comparable figure for 1983.

"My gut reaction is that it's much higher under the new law," Jones said. "Many more people are getting active jail time, but they're getting shorter sentences."

Offenders can also be sentenced to do community service, which is a benefit. But a negative side effect of the law is the clogging of the court system. Isaac T. Avery III, an assistant district attorney who specializes in the DWI law, says the state's courts are falling behind in processing DWI cases at the rate of about 1,200 a month.

Market Provides Economic Boost

By The Associated Press
The success of the twice-yearly spectacle known as the Southern Furniture Market largely dictates the hours and the raises of more than 80,000 North Carolinians employed in the furniture market.
So some furniture officials say it's unfortunate that the market is not widely understood or appreciated because it is mainly a private party to which only industry and media personnel are invited.
During the market, more than 1,300 manufacturers of furniture and accessories display their products in elaborately designed showrooms to the nation's furniture retailers.
In more than 5 million square feet of floor space in dozens of exhibition buildings, furniture is displayed in showrooms like stage settings.
"It's just like a Broadway production. It's showtime every six months," said Walter E. Bahno, vice president in charge of designing showroom space in Thomasville Furniture's eight-floor exhibition building. "There's competition out there. We've got to look as good as the competitor, so we go first-class and maintain it that way. Our primary purpose is to make the dealer feel we've got what he wants."

The market itself is a potent economic force for the state, especially for the Piedmont. It begins weeks before the market opens when hundreds of carpenters, painters, wallpaper hangers and electricians begin clambering about the exhibition buildings, creating rooms and installing lighting to blueprints drawn in exacting detail by designers.

Several days before the buyers arrive, the manufacturers bring in their sales representatives for intense sales promotion sessions. Credit officers and advertising and promotion staffs are also brought in.
The sponsoring Furniture Factories' Marketing Association estimates market participants will spend $65 million, primarily for lodging, food, transportation and entertainment during the market's eight-day run.
It is a boon to the area transportation industry. Paul Korry, Triad sales manager for Eastern Airlines, estimates Eastern will carry 3,500 to 4,000 additional passengers for each market.
The market also gives a boost to catering services and restaurants. Even doughnuts are hot items. At the Krispy Creme doughnut shop in High Point, manager Steve Hawks estimates he will sell about 10,000 additional doughnuts and more than 1,000 extra cups of coffee.

Liquor sales also go up. According to George Humble, general manager of the High Point Alcoholic Beverage Congrol system, said liquor sales rise about 16 percent during the market. In quantity, that represents about 5,000 gallons, he said.
The florist business also flourishes.
There was no estimate on the cost of the lives plants used to decorate the showrooms during the market, but some market officials say it is a large sum.
"It's nothing at all for showrooms to spend $1,000 and up for plants," said Greensboro interior decorator Kathy Joyce.

State Rep. Phil Berry Succumbs To Cancer

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Rep. Phillip O. "Phil" Berry, D-Mecklenburg, who would have been North Carolina's fourth black senator since Reconstruction, has died at a Charlotte hospital of cancer.
Berry, 44, an unopposed candidate for the N.C. Senate in the Nov. 6 election, died Sunday at Mercy Hospital.
The Charlotte native was the second black elected to the state legislature from Mecklenburg County.
State Sen. Ben Tison, D-

Mecklenburg, said Tison would have done a "fine job" in the state Senate "not only in representing the black community but the entire community."
"He deserved the public office he was seeking," Tison said.
In 1970, Berry, then 30, became the first black branch manager of a white-owned Charlotte bank.
Tison, who knew Berry for 15 years, said Berry was an outstanding banking and political leader.
"He did a good job for the bank," said Tison, who worked with Berry at NCNB. "He was a faithful public servant."

Berry was orphaned at 14 and went to live with his grandmother. He was one of seven children.
He was class valedictorian at the former Plato Price High School and then studied at Howard University in Washington. At Howard, he said, he decided to become a businessman.
After two years, Berry left Howard, saying he couldn't afford to finish. He joined the Air Force and served from 1960 to 1968.

Debate ...

the region "brings up the whole question of what presidential leadership is all about."

Mondale referred to the CIA manual revealed last week that advocated terrorist actions against the Sandinista government in Nicaragua and called covert action against that country "a classic example of a strategy that's embarrassed us, strengthened our opposition and undermined the moral authority of our people and our country in the region."

Reagan repudiated the manual as a contrary to an executive order he signed directing that "we would have nothing to say with regard to political assassinations."

The president referred to the Democratic administration of Jimmy Carter, in which Mondale was vice president, as pursuing "the policy of unilateral disarmament, of weakness, if you will."

A short time later, Reagan said that Mondale while in the Senate had "a record of weakness with regard to our national defense that is second to none."

Mondale retorted, "Mr. President, I accept your commitment to peace, but I want you to accept my commitment to a strong national defense."

Reagan was clearly prepared for a question about his age. When the 73-year-old president was asked if he were concerned whether he could hold up in a crisis in which he might get little chance for sleep, Reagan replied, "Not at all."

Then, referring to his 56-year-old opponent, he added: "I will not make age an issue of this campaign. I am not going to exploit for political purposes my opponent's youth and inexperience."

In their closing statements, both candidates stayed with the themes they had pursued throughout the debate.

Mondale said that viewers should try to imagine the nation under nuclear attack and urged them to "pick a president that you know will know — if that tragic moment ever comes — what he must know. Because there will be no time for staffing, committees of advisers, a president must know right then."

Reagan ended the debate awkwardly, his closing statement cut off by moderator Edwin Newman because he had run over his allotted four minutes. He began by talking about his attempt to write a letter that would be sealed in a time capsule to be opened in 100 years.

Cardinals Continue To Reverse Trend

By The Associated Press

The St. Louis Cardinals, who have had more failure than success in recent years, definitely seem to be reversing the trend.

However, the jury is still out on their 6-foot-6 kicker, Neil O'Donoghue.

Before the season, the Cardinals had lost 20 of 23 games to division rivals Dallas and Washington since 1978, but they have beaten both teams in the last three weeks to pull into a tie with the Cowboys and Redskins for the NFL East lead, each with a 5-3 record.

Sunday's 26-24 victory over the Redskins saw the Cardinals outgain Washington 456 yards to 296, but in part because of O'Donoghue's missed extra point and missed field goals of 34 and 40 yards, victory or defeat rested on the accuracy of one last kick in the final seconds.

"I just tried to relax, not to think about anything, really," said O'Donoghue after his chip-shot 21-

THE DAILY REFLECTOR

MONDAY AFTERNOON, OCTOBER 22, 1984

yarder with three seconds left gave St. Louis the victory. "You just concentrate on your mechanics and your form. If there was anything I was thinking about, it was last year's game against the Giants, when I missed from 18 yards. I just told myself, 'Don't put yourself through that again.'"

"We've come through before. We did it again today," Cards' quarterback Neil Lomax said after passing for 361 yards. "This one took some character. It may have been our biggest win yet."

In other NFL games, it was Miami

44, New England 24; Indianapolis 17, Pittsburgh 16; Chicago 44, Tampa Bay 9; Philadelphia 24, New York Giants 10; Detroit 16, Minnesota 14; Denver 37, Buffalo 7; Cincinnati 12, Cleveland 9; Seattle 30, Green Bay 24; San Francisco 34, Houston 21; New York Jets 28, Kansas City 7; Los Angeles Raiders 44, San Diego Chargers 37, and Dallas 30, New Orleans 27 in overtime.

Tonight, the Los Angeles Rams are at Atlanta.

A 2-yard scoring plunge by John Riggins and Rick Walker's TD reception of a 7-yard Joe Theismann pass following a fumble put the Redskins ahead 21-10 late in the third quarter.

Lomax rallied St. Louis with an 84-yard drive, climaxed by his scoring pass of 19 yards to Doug Marsh, but Washington made it 24-17 with 11:51 left on Mark Moseley's 39-yard field goal.

Lomax again brought the Cardinals back on an 83-yard touchdown pass play with Roy Green, but O'Donoghue missed the extra point to keep the Redskins ahead 24-23 and then missed a 40-yarder with 2:53 left that would have put St. Louis ahead.

"The Lord doesn't give you anything in life you can't handle," O'Donoghue said. "As bad as it gets, there's always a little light at the end of the tunnel."

St. Louis held Washington again after the missed field goal, giving it one last try.

"If I've got two minutes left and one timeout, there's enough time," said Lomax of the 63-yard drive, including a key 21-yard pass to Pat Tilley, which set up O'Donoghue's winning field goal.

"He came through, but the whole doggoned ballclub came through against adversity," said St. Louis Coach Jim Hanifan. "It's a compliment, both to the guys and the coaches."

"They played very aggressive," said Redskins Coach Joe Gibbs. "It's their day, and they deserve it."

Dolphins 44, Patriots 24

Dan Marino threw four touchdown passes, giving him 24 for the season and leaving him just 12 short of the NFL record with eight games left, to engineer a 552-yard offensive by Miami at New England.

The Dolphins, the NFL's only unbeaten team at the season's midway point, scored touchdowns on seven of nine possessions, but didn't clinch the victory until the fourth quarter as Tony Eason kept the Patriots in the game with three TD passes.

Marino, who completed 24 of 39 passes for 316 yards, needed just a half-season to break Bob Griese's club record of 22 scoring passes. His TD passes, which came on four consecutive Miami possessions, covered 19 and 15 yards to Nat Moore, 5 yards to Dan Johnson and 15 yards to Mark Clayton.

Bears 44, Buccaneers 9

Jim McMahon passed for 219 yards and three touchdowns and Walter Payton rushed for a pair of TDs to lead the Bears' rout of Tampa Bay, giving them a two-game lead in the NFC Central.

Payton, who failed in his attempt to become the third runner in NFL history to top the century mark in a record seven straight games, was limited to 72 yards on 20 carries, but he scored touchdowns on runs of 3 and 8 yards.

McMahon's touchdown tosses went

Elliott Edges Harry Gant

ROCKINGHAM, N.C. (AP) — Bill Elliott outdueled Harry Gant on the final lap to score a two-foot victory in the Warner W. Hodgdon American 500 NASCAR Grand National race at the North Carolina Motor Speedway.

Elliott, driving a Ford, had taken the lead from Gant on lap 438, but had to fight back on the last circuit Sunday to take his third super-speedway victory of 1984. Elliott had earlier victories at Brooklyn, Mich., and Charlotte, N.C.

Gant drove his green-and-white Chevrolet past Elliott on lap 491, one lap before the end, but Elliott passed him and took the checkered flag by the distance of his front fender.

"I don't know what I could have done differently on the final lap," said Elliott, a Dawsonville, Ga., native.

Neither Elliott or Gant appeared to be bothered by slower traffic as they traversed the 1.017-mile oval. Gant led the race eight times for 166, while Elliott led three times for 133 laps.

Also finishing in the lead lap were Winston Cup point leader Terry Labonte and Darrell Waltrip, trying desperately to catch Labonte in the point race. One lap back in fifth place was Neil Bonnett, who was driving Bobby Allison's Buick.

Labonte continues to hold on to his Winston Cup point lead with 4,260 points. Gant, who gained 10 points, has 4,211. Elliott is third at 4,042. Two races remain on the schedule. Next is the Atlanta Journal 500 in Georgia on Nov. 4, followed by the Winston Western 500 at Riverside, Calif.

"At least we didn't lose as many points as we did last week," said Labonte, who lost 27 points to Gant last week.

Allison, suffering from a shoulder injury, gave up his seat to Bonnett on lap 185 after Bonnett's Chevrolet was sidelined in an eight-car accident on lap 171. That accident involved pole sitter Geoff Bodine, whose car spent too much time in the pits for him to challenge the leaders.

The race was halted for one hour, 15 minutes because of rain. At the time, 35 laps had been completed with Labonte in the lead. The caution was out for 15 minutes at lap 273 because of more showers.

Caution flags slowed the average speed to 112.617 mph and the race took four hours, 26 minutes to complete. Ten caution flags were issued for 91 laps.

North Korea Urges Move

TOKYO (AP) — North Korea, despite recent conciliatory gestures to South Korea, said today that it wants the 1988 Summer Olympics moved from that nation to Yugoslavia.

Pyongyang's official Korean Central News Agency said its correspondent interviewed Caslav Veljic, general secretary of the Yugoslav Olympic Committee, in Belgrade last Thursday, and that Veljic offered Belgrade as the site of the 1988 Games.

The agency, monitored in Tokyo, quoted Veljic as saying: "At present, many countries of the world have no diplomatic relations with South Korea and many countries have already expressed their opposition to the holding of the Olympic Games in Seoul. . . . Complex problems like those at the time of the Los Angeles Olympic Games have been raised again at this time."

North Korea was among nations that joined a Soviet-led boycott of the 1984 Los Angeles Olympics. The Soviets said they feared for the security of their athletes in Los Angeles.

North Korea all along has opposed holding the 1988 Olympics in Seoul, capital of the anti-communist South Korean government. The South and the communist North have been divided since after World War II, and fought a bloody war in 1950-53.

But the North earlier this year sent sports officials to the truce village of Panmunjom to talk with South Korean officials about forming joint Korean teams for the Olympics and other international sports events. The talks made no progress.

The North Korean news agency quoted Veljic as saying that if the International Olympic Committee takes up the question of the 1988 Games site, "We will support the proposal on moving the venue and declare that we are ready to offer Belgrade as a site."

Yugoslavia was host to the 1984 Winter Olympics at Sarajevo.

How sweet it is to be at home!

Ed Emory and his Pirates are — or should we say were — glad to be at home. Emory bemoaned the fact that playing on the road so much was not conducive to winning. He pointed out that South Carolina — sure to be in the Top Ten this week after its win over Notre Dame — played its first five games at home this season and ventured out of Williams-Brice Stadium only this past weekend for the first time. In addition to this Saturday's game with East Carolina, the Gamecocks have one more home contest, playing but four of their 11 games on turf not their own.

Of such stuff, Emory says, is winning and ranking born.

East Carolina is not in the same situation the Gamecocks enjoy. While both are independents in football, the Pirates do not come from the same background. South Carolina has long been an "established" program, while that of the Pirates is viewed, in many areas, as a "Johnny-Come-Lately."

Being able to attract the same quality teams into Ficklen Stadium is no easy task. First off, there is the fact that the Pirates have never filled their 35,000-seat stadium. And until they do so on a regular basis, those teams that could be attracted are going to shun the eastern North Carolina sod — at least on a regular home-and-home basis. Right now, two-for-one is about the best the Pirates are able to hope for — if that.

The schedule does get sweeter at home next year, but the Pirates are going to have to improve a lot to fill the stands even then. While folks from their area will troop in from miles around to watch ECU and N.C. State at Carter-Finley Stadium, they haven't shown the willingness to cross the street to see such games as ECU and East Tennessee, regardless of published crowd figures.

It is developing, though. There is a hard-core that wasn't there a few years back, and it's growing. Hopefully, the Pirates will be improved enough next year to increase this hard-core. From them will come — eventually — those sellouts that will make Ficklen more attractive.

Getting back to Saturday, however, the Pirates still have a ways to go. There was a great deal of improvement in the ECU defense. While they gave up a lot of yardage and stayed on the field a lot — nearly twice as long as the offense — they never broke.

There were some personnel changes in the defense, and that could have contributed to some of it.

The Pirate offense, too, found new life with the running of Bubba Bunn and the guidance of Ron Jones, who played his best game in purple.

Things were still far from perfect, however, but they are looking up.

Beating East Tennessee, however, despite their ranking among Division I-AA teams, isn't a cure-all however. The Pirates still face a tough schedule the rest of the way.

There's South Carolina next Saturday, and a trip to Southwestern Louisiana the following week. The Pirates then close out the year against Southern Mississippi here in three weeks. In each of those games, the Pirates will be the underdog — decidedly in two of them.

Whether they can improve enough in the remaining weeks is the question.

One thing for sure, the spring should be an interesting one for the Pirates.

Disney Winner

Larry Nelson holds his game-winning ball in the air after taking the $400,000 Walt Disney World Golf Classic championship Sunday in Lake Buena Vista, Fla. Nelson successfully held off Hubert Green and finished 22-under for the four rounds. (AP Laserphoto)

Nelson Takes Disney Title

LAKE BUENA VISTA, Fla. (AP) — Larry Nelson, battling a protracted and deepening slump, admitted that he had thought he may never win again.

"You never know when it's the last one. Yes, I guess you could say I'd thought I might not win again," Nelson said.

Those thoughts were erased and the slump ended when he held off a challenging Hubert Green over the wildly-erratic finishing holes and scored a one-stroke victory Sunday in the Walt Disney World Golf Classic.

"When you win the last tournament you're going to play for the season, that makes it a much better year," said Nelson, whose last previous victory had come in the 1983 U.S. Open.

"I'm very excited about 1985," he said.

Nelson acquired his seventh career title with a spectacular 266 total, 22 shots under par. That's the greatest subpar total of the season and broke Jack Nicklaus' tournament scoring record of 267 set in 1972.

The victory was worth $72,000 from the total purse of $400,000 and enabled Nelson to complete the season with $154,689.

Of more importance, he said, is the boost in confidence he receives going into next season.

"It's kind of like making birdie on the last hole of the third round," Nelson said.

"I expect to play better golf next year than I have in the last three or four years. And, I expect to play more, maybe 25 or 26 tournaments," Nelson said.

Although he has won both the U.S. Open and the PGA in the last three seasons, Nelson said "I didn't really play well, not consistently, for the last three years."

"My game slowly deteriorated. It hit rock bottom this year. I think I've found the problem. It involves the position of my left arm on my set-up. I'm very encouraged about the way I'm striking the ball now. And I'm really looking forward to next year."

Green, another veteran who wrote an end to his three-year non-winning streak a week earlier, also said he has his sights set on the 1985 campaign.

"I expect to play better next year than I have in a long time — but I'm not through yet. I've got next week (the Pensacola Open) to go," Green said.

He added a runner-up finish to his victory in the Southern Open with a closing 68 and a 267 total.

Although he once tied the front-running Nelson with a two-shot swing on the 14th hole, Green said Nelson "was in control all the way."

Nelson was not so sure.

"Hubert made it exciting," he said. There were two-stroke swings on three of four holes beginning on the 14th, but Green's three-putt bogey on the 16th proved to be the decisive factor.

It was three strokes back to Jay Haas, Chip Beck and Brad Faxon, tied for third at 270. Haas had a closing 68, Faxon 69 and Beck 72.

With one official event to go, the standing in both the Player of the Year race and money-winnings remained unchanged. Tom Watson and South African Denis Watson remained tied for leading in the Player of the Year standings with 54 points each. Mark O'Meara closed to within less than $11,000 of Tom Watson on the money-winning list with $465,873. Watson has $476,260.

Notre Dame, Alabama Fall From Grace

By The Associated Press

How the mighty have fallen.

Item: Notre Dame blew a 26-14 lead and lost to No. 11 South Carolina 36-32, the first time since 1956 the Irish, 3-4, have dropped three straight home games.

Item: Alabama slipped to 2-5 after Tennessee scored twice in the final five minutes to erase a 27-13 deficit and pull out a 28-27 victory that probably put the kiss of death on the Crimson Tide's hopes for a 26th consecutive bowl trip.

Item: Pitt, No. 3 in the preseason ratings, lost for the sixth time in seven games, bowing to ninth-ranked Miami 27-7 as Bernie Kosar passed for 351 yards and one touchdown.

None of this should come as much of a surprise — "The NCAA has legislated mediocrity (with the 30-95 rule)," says one veteran college football watcher — and not one of the first eight teams in last week's Associated Press poll had an easy game, with fourth-ranked Boston College and No. 6 Southern Methodist joining No. 16 Kentucky as first-time losers.

"I told my players that this points out there isn't much difference between teams," Oklahoma Coach Barry Switzer said after the Sooners, 27-point favorites, had to come from behind with a field goal and touchdown in the final period to nip Iowa State 12-10.

The list of unbeaten-untied major-college teams was pared to four — No. 1 Washington, a hard-pressed 17-10 winner over Oregon; seventh-ranked Brigham Young, which needed four touchdowns and 484 aerial yards from Robbie Bosco to nose out Air Force 30-25; South Carolina, which is 6-0 for the first time ever, and Fullerton State, 8-0 after whipping Nevada-Reno 36-14 as Damon Allen scored one touchdown and passed for another.

Elsewhere, third-ranked Texas surrendered 15 points in the final five minutes but held on to beat Arkansas 24-18 when time ran out with the Razorbacks on the three-yard line, Boston College blew a 20-6 halftime lead and lost to No. 20 West Virginia 21-20, fifth-ranked Nebraska scored three touchdowns in the last period to defeat Colorado 24-7, SMU was upset by Houston 29-20, No. 8 Ohio State held off Michigan State 23-20 when the losers' Ralf Mojsiejenko shanked a 43-yard field goal attempt with three seconds left and No. 10 LSU took advantage of nine turnovers and trimmed Kentucky 36-10.

In the Second Ten, No. 12 Oklahoma State crushed Kansas 47-10, No. 13 Auburn outlasted Georgia Tech 48-34, No. 14 Georgia mauled Vanderbilt 62-35, No. 15 Florida State defeated Tulane 27-6, No. 17 Florida belted Cincinnati 41-17, No. 18 Iowa trounced Michigan 26-0 and No. 19 Penn State turned back Syracuse 21-3.

Washington managed just 73 yards on 28 rushes and 36 yards through the air against Oregon. But Ron Milus returned a punt 42 yards for a 7-0 first-period lead, Jeff Jaeger kicked a tie-breaking 32-yard field goal in the third quarter after Tim Meamber's 31-yard interception return and Tim Peoples blocked a punt 2½ minutes later and Mike Gaffney recovered it in the end zone for the clinching score.

"This was by far our worst offensive game, but I don't know of too many 7-0 teams," said Coach Don James. "We had horrendous field position all day and we were unable to generate any running offense. I was not willing to open it up because we may have dug ourselves a hole we might not have been able to get out of."

Spencer Tillman's 7-yard touchdown run with 3½ minutes left capped a 40-yard drive that lifted Oklahoma over Iowa State, which hasn't beaten the Sooners since 1961 (0-22-1).

Texas' Todd Dodge threw touchdown passes of 22 yards to Brent Duhon and 5 to William Harris, while Longhorn defenders intercepted five Arkansas passes. Trailing 24-3, the Razorbacks scored twice in the final five minutes and reached the Texas three-yard line before time ran out.

Boston College lost to West Virginia when John Gay scored on a 5-yard run with 4:53 remaining to cap a second-half rally. Gay's touchdown ended a 10-play, 80-yard drive and linebacker Fred Smalls sacked BC's Doug Flutie (21-of-42 for 299 yards and one TD) for an 11-yard loss with just under three minutes left after the Eagles reached the West Virginia 38.

"They were coming on everything," Flutie said. "We moved the ball good, 30 or 40 yards at a time, but they'd get a big play and push us back."

Lethargic Nebraska trailed Colorado 7-3 after three periods. But Travis Turner scored twice on short runs and flipped an 11-yard TD pass to Brian Hiemer as the Cornhuskers pulled it out.

Mike Clendenen kicked five field goals and Gerald Landry threw a 68-yard scoring pass to Carl Hilton as Houston upset SMU. The Cougars lead the Southwest Conference with a 3-0 record.

BYU survived its second straight scare thanks to Bosco's touchdown passes of 52 yards to Mark Bellini, 22 to Glen Kozlowski, 56 to Kelly Smith and 54 to David Mills. Bosco was 28-of-41.

Ohio State opened a 16-0 lead over Michigan State on three field goals by Rich Spangler and a 1-yard run by Keith Byars, who finished with 121. But the Buckeyes needed Mike Tomczak's 1-yard run to withstand a rally by the Spartans, which included two scoring passes by Dave Yarema and a 93-yard kickoff return by Larry Jackson.

Miami's Kosar, nursing a sprained ankle, completed a school record 29 passes in 42 attempts against Pitt and Alonzo Highsmith scored twice.

Dalton Hilliard rushed for 164 yards and an LSU record-tying four touchdowns as the Tigers won a battle of turnovers from Kentucky, which committed nine of the 15 giveaways.

Gymnasts Attract Followers

By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer

The way the teeny boppers were carrying on, you'd have thought Michael Jackson or at least Boy George was performing at Madison Square Garden.

But the modern music set was convening elsewhere Sunday and these Garden squeals were reserved instead for America's newest pinup kings — the gold medal men's Olympic gymnastic team.

"Bronxville loves Mitch!" read one poster. "Marry me, Bart!" implored another.

Mitch Gaylord and Bart Conner grinned impishly and waved to the crowd, the way gymnasts routinely wave, to no one in particular, to everyone in general. Their responses just raised the Garden's squeal level several decibels higher.

"The little girls love to scream," shrugged Tim Daggett. "Before this, though, the response had been small. On this tour, they've been louder. It's kind of nice."

"It's good for the sport and it's good for little boys and little girls. We're good role models for them. We're clean cut. We're like All-American boys."

Indeed.

Not only that, but they also are a new commodity for the sport which, until they won their gold, had gained most of its attention from the Olympic achievements of Nadia Comaneci and Olga Korbut.

Nadia and Olga were adorable, talented athletes but it was a trifle difficult for American teen-agers to relate with them since they don't even speak English.

Not only do Gaylord, Daggett and the others speak the language, but they have boyish good looks. And muscles, too. So, the kids scream.

The well-scrubbed Olympians were in the third stop of 10-city tour that began in Hartford, Conn., last Friday night. They'll be in Philadelphia Tuesday, then move on to Pittsburgh, Detroit, Cincinnati, Champaign, Ill., and Chicago before winding up Nov. 4 in Los Angeles, at the Pauley Pavilion on the campus of UCLA, where the Olympic competition was held last August.

There is no comparison between the medal competition pressure of the Olympics and this exhibition swing. Most importantly, there are no frowning, stern-faced judges sitting on the sidelines, assessing the athletes' performances. Here, the gymnasts can relax and have some fun.

Jim Hartung, a master of the pommel horse, slipped off during his routine, causing the Garden crowd to gasp at the error. At another time and place, the slip would have been grievous. Here, however, Hartung was hardly nonplussed by the mistake, choosing to clown it up by crawling under the apparatus and covering his head in mock horror.

The fans loved it.

"The response of the people has been fantastic," Gaylord said. "Since the Olympics, gymnastic clubs have doubled and tripled in size. It's great. This sort of thing has never happened before. I hope we've been responsible for it."

The fact of the matter is the Olympians have provided heroes for young gymnasts. And that's something the sport has never had before in this country.

Gaylord exchanged high fives with Peter Vidmar, Conner and Daggett after accomplishing difficult routines. And throughout, there were broad grins, the smiles of athletes thoroughly enjoying themselves.

"There's no comparison with a medal competition," Gaylord said. "Here, there's almost zero pressure. You're out to have a good time and there's a lot of room for error. You can joke about a mistake, fool around a little."

And, Daggett said, the Olympians are having every bit as much fun as they seem to be, especially when the kids start screaming at them.

"We're all performers," he said, "To get where we're at in the sport, you've got to learn how to influence people — judges. We've been actors and actresses all our lives, influencing people. After a while, it's easy."

Redskins Fall, Cowboys Dodge Bullet...

32 yards to Dennis McKinnon on a flea-flicker play, 10 yards to Willie Gault and 49 yards to Brad Anderson.

Colts 17, Steelers 16

The Steelers, who lead the AFC Central by two games despite a lackluster 4-4 record, lost to Indianapolis on a play reminiscent of Franco Harris' Immaculate Reception in the playoffs 12 years ago.

Ray Butler grabbed a deflected pass on the run and completed a 54-yard touchdown on a third-and-24 play with 34 seconds remaining.

Quarterback Mike Pagel hurled a pass that was almost picked off by Pittsburgh's Sam Washington, who bobbed the ball into the air and into the hands of Butler at the Steelers' 40.

He raced into the end zone to tie the game, and Raul Allegre's extra-point kick put the Colts ahead to stay.

Raiders 44, Chargers 37

Marc Wilson threw for 332 yards and five touchdowns for Los Angeles to outduel San Diego's sharp-shooting Dan Fouts.

The Raiders, 7-1 and tied with Denver in the AFC West, had two touchdowns and two field goals in a seven-minute span of the third quarter and then withstood a 17-point fourth quarter by the Chargers.

Wilson's touchdown passes went 51 and 45 yards to Malcolm Barnwell, 20 yards to Dokie Williams, 10 yards to Marcus Allen and 1 yard to Derrick Jensen. Fouts threw for 410 yards and three touchdowns and was intercepted three times, including one by Ted Watts in the final minute after an apparent San Diego touchdown was nullified by a holding penalty.

San Diego tight end Kellen Winslow suffered torn knee ligaments and will be lost for the season.

Broncos 37, Bills 7

John Elway fired two touchdown passes for Denver before being sidelined with a bruised shoulder in the second quarter at Buffalo.

Gary Kubiak came in for Elway to run 3 yards for one touchdown and pass to Sammy Winder for another, while the winless Bills didn't score until halfway through the fourth quarter on a 70-yard pass play from Matt Kofler to Mitchell Brookins.

Seahawks 30, Packers 24

Dave Krieg riddled Green Bay for 310 passing yards, including a pair of touchdowns, but Seattle had to hold off a late rally to hand the Packers their seventh straight loss.

Cornerback Terry Jackson intercepted a Lynn Dickey pass in the end zone with 24 seconds left in the game after the Packers moved to the Seahawks 10 in the final seconds.

Krieg passed 25 yards to Daryl Turner for one touchdown and 31 yards to Steve Largent for another. James Lofton caught two TD passes from Dickey, including a 79 yarder.

Jets 28, Chiefs 7

Pat Ryan hurled three touchdown passes and Mark Gastineau recovered a fumble for a touchdown and recorded two sacks as New York mauled Kansas City.

Gastineau's sacks represented half the total by the Jets against Bill Kenney, who was making his return as a starter for the Chiefs after he suffered a broken thumb.

Ryan completed 21 of 31 passes for the Jets, who improved their record to 6-2, still two games behind Miami in the AFC East.

49ers 34, Oilers 21

Joe Montana completed three touchdown passes to lead San Francisco over winless Houston.

The 49ers, 7-1, led only 27-21 when Oilers quarterback Warren Moon hit Jamie Williams with a 29-yard touchdown pass, but Montana came back with an 80-yard bomb to Dwight Clark with five minutes left.

Eagles 24, Giants 10

Ron Jaworski threw three touchdown passes for Philadelphia, including two in the decisive fourth quarter to break up a tough defensive battle with New York.

With the game tied 10-10, Giants quarterback Phil Simms fumbled while being sacked by Eagles defensive end Greg Brown. Jerry Robinson recovered on the 8 and on third down, Jaworski hit Mel Hoover for an 11-yard TD.

Jaworski clinched the game with a 37-yard scoring pass to Tony Woodruff with a minute to go. Kenny Jackson scored on an 88-yard pass play in the first quarter.

Lions 16, Vikings 14

Eddie Murray's three second-half field goals, including a 41-yard game-winner with 49 seconds left, and the running of Billy Sims gave Detroit a narrow triumph at Minnesota, which lost for the fourth straight week.

Sims, despite missing the last 21 minutes of the game with a sprained knee, rushed 22 times for 103 yards, including an 18-yarder on his first carry that made him the Lions' all-time leading rusher.

Sims dove 1 yard for Detroit's touchdown, while Murray's field goals went 44, 41 and 41 yards.

Bengals 12, Browns 9

Jim Breech kicked a 33-yard field goal as time ran out as Cincinnati kicked four three-pointers to three for Cleveland in a battle of 1-6 teams.

One of the Browns' field goals was a 60-yarder by Steve Cox, the second-longest in NFL history. Cox normally handles only kickoffs and punts for the Browns.

Cowboys 30, Saints 27

New Orleans rolled to a 27-6 lead after three periods when Dallas quarterback Gary Hogeboom went to the sidelines with an injury. His replacement, Danny White, guided the Cowboys to a pair of fourth-quarter touchdowns on a 3-yard run by Tony Dorsett and a 12-yard pass from White to Mike Renfro. The Cowboys tied to 27-27 when Jim Jeffcoat flopped on a New Orleans fumble in the Saint end zone with but 2:53 left in regulation.

Rafael Septien, whose two field goals had accounted for all the Dallas scoring before the fourth-quarter explosion, won the game with a 41-yarder 3:42 into the overtime period.

NEW YORK — "The old man's not doing badly," said Mickey Taylor.

'The Fonz' Is Star Of Videocassette On Child Abuse

By FRED ROTHENBERG
AP Television Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Henry Winkler, whose famous character, the Fonz, told kids it was cool to go to the library, wear glasses and even cry now and then, has created an honest, entertaining and non-threatening videocassette designed to teach young children basic skills for preventing sexual abuse and abduction.

The enormous behavioral influence TV's heroes exert on America's youth is beyond dispute. In the weeks after the Fonz took out a library card on "Happy Days," for instance, educational officials said applications for the cards shot up 500 percent around the country.

Only once before has Winkler given the popular Fonzie a forum outside the "Happy Days" set. That was when the tough-talking biker, who sported a leather jacket but had the right stuff inside, appeared on "Sesame Street" for a lesson in the art of tooth brushing.

"Children love TV, and the Fonz is a direct communicator to these young people," said Winkler, adding that he produced and starred in the home video "Strong Kids, Safe Kids" for his daughter and millions of children like her.

"If we can teach children not to play in traffic, why can't we present information about the possibility of abduction and how to respond if an adult tries to use kids in a sexual way?" he asked.

One of the cassette's best segments details the tricks that child abductors sometimes use. "We hope kids will know something is up if they've heard it before," said Winkler.

One ruse is that someone with an official-looking badge or identification card asks a child to help crack a police case. "We say that that could never happen, and that kids have the right to say 'no,'" said Winkler.

"There was a case in Los Angeles where four kids were abducted, and three were raped. When the guy was asked why, he said the fourth girl said 'no.'"

The need for the video came to Winkler when he was playing a puppet game with his then 3-year-old daughter. Winkler's puppet told Zoe if she came to the car, she'd get a kitten. She agreed, which was contrary to everything the Winklers had taught her.

"She thought she could get the cat and then get out of the car," said Winkler. "Kids figure they have that kind of control."

Winkler said he's not concerned that all this precautionary education might create a generation of kids suspicious of adults. "After (Zoe) spends time with them, she warms up," he said. "I'd rather take away a little innocence than see what Kee MacFarlane has seen."

Ms. MacFarlane, director of the Child Sexual Abuse Diagnostic Center in Los Angeles, and Dr. Sol Gordon, director of the Institute for Family Research and Education, served as consultants with on-camera roles on the cassette.

To convey its messages, the cassette also uses actors John Ritter and Mariette Hartley, concerned parents in their own right, as well as such animated characters as the Smurfs, Pac-Man and the Flintstones.

Winkler, who has three children, said he decided to do a cassette rather than a TV program because "this needs to be seen at home with parents. I think every home should have a dictionary, thesaurus and this tape."

The reality, though, is most families don't have videocassette recorders, and this may turn out to be an elitist cassette. Winkler said "Strong Kids, Safe Kids" would be available to schools and music libraries.

Even without a VCR, TV audiences can still see Winkler in syndicated reruns of "Happy Days." ABC canceled the show last spring.

Winkler said he had been approached to star in several projected series, but nothing appealing enough to return him to the grind of daily TV production.

"With a 30-minute sitcom, I was able to go home and have dinner with my family every night," he said.

And sleep well, too.

"Some 'Happy Days' shows were silly," he said, "but I never thought we did a bad role-model show."

French Director Truffaut Dies

FRANCOIS TRUFFAUT

By ELAINE GANLEY
Associated Press Writer

PARIS (AP) — Francois Truffaut, the eminent French director whose revolt against "factory films" produced many of the most acclaimed and popular works of New Wave cinema, has died of cancer. He was 52.

Truffaut, who learned last year that he had a brain tumor, died Sunday at the American Hospital in the Paris suburb of Neuilly, where he had been admitted about 10 days ago. Hospital sources said he spent his final days in a coma.

The short, dark-haired Paris native wrote as well as directed most of his 25 major films and short works, and acted in some of them.

He had been a major force in the film world since the release of his first major picture, "The 400 Blows," in 1959, and was a leader of the group of French directors who revolutionized modern cinema with their more spontaneous and personalized New Wave style.

"Francois Truffaut entered the cinema as one enters the religious life," Lang said. "He chose his family."

Truffaut's 1973 film "Day for Night" earned him an Academy Award for best foreign film.

Among his other well-known works are "The Last Metro" starring Catherine Deneuve and Gerard Depardieu, which won a record 10

Cesar awards, France's equivalent of the Oscar; "Shoot the Piano Player," a tragicomic story of gangsters and star-crossed lovers; "Jules and Jim," a lyrical tale of best friends in love with the same woman, played by Jeanne Moreau; and "The Story of Adele H," about Victor Hugo's insane, love-sick daughter, played by Isabelle Adjani.

His last film, "Confidentially Yours," starring Fanny Ardant and Jean-Louis Trintignant, was completed in 1983 and released in the United States early this year.

Truffaut was born in Paris on Feb. 6, 1932, the son of an architect. At 14, enchanted by the cinema and in conflict with his family, he abandoned his studies and did odd jobs such as stock boy, office boy and welder. His series of false starts included a stint in the army, from which he deserted.

Truffaut was often his own leading man — a movie maker in "Day for Night," a benevolent doctor trying to socialize a mute child found in the jungle in the 1970 work "The Wild Child."

In 1977, he did his first acting job for another director — Steven Spielberg — playing a French UFO expert in "Close Encounters of the Third Kind."

Film critics regarded Truffaut as the uncontested master of the "film d'auteur" — the highly personal film written and directed by the same individual.

Truffaut and his contemporaries like Claude Chabrol, Jean-Luc Godard and Eric Rohmer believed in authenticity and spontaneity, seeking to make their movies reflect real life.

Truffaut was the author of three books, and one of them, "The Cinema According to Alfred Hitchcock," is considered the authoritative book about Hitchcock.

Officials Feel Reagan Improved

By The Associated Press
The chairmen of North Carolina's Democratic and Republican parties agreed that President Reagan performed better in the second presidential debate than in the first.

But state GOP chairman David Flaherty called Reagan's performance "super," while state Democratic chairman David Price said Reagan "didn't appear quite as confused" in his second debate with Democratic challenger Walter Mondale on Sunday.

"I thought Reagan came across as very confident," Flaherty said in a telephone interview from his Raleigh home following the debate between Reagan and his Democratic opponent.

"I thought Mondale was stiff and not as relaxed as he was at the first debate," Flaherty said. "I thought President Reagan did super. I thought he was very positive and upbeat...."

Asked if he thought Reagan won, Flaherty said: "Who knows who wins these things? I don't think there was a clear winner...."

Price said he thought Mondale did just as well in both debates and "was very, very impressive," and that he "built on his performance in the first debate."

"He showed he was equally articulate and knowledgeable and balanced on questions on foreign policy," Price said in a telephone interview from his Chapel Hill home.

The first debate centered on domestic issues while the second debate was on foreign policy matters.

"Reagan didn't appear quite as confused" in Sunday's debate as he was in the first debate, Price said. "But I thought he really still seemed less then in command."

"For example, the whole discussion of the star wars technology. He simply didn't seem to have the knowledge to discuss that intelligently ... it seemed to be sort of a pipe dream," Price said.

But Flaherty said that he was surprised Mondale opposed the "star wars" defense system.

"I can't believe he wouldn't support that," he said.

Price said "on the surface, Reagan was less confused and disoriented" than in the first debate.

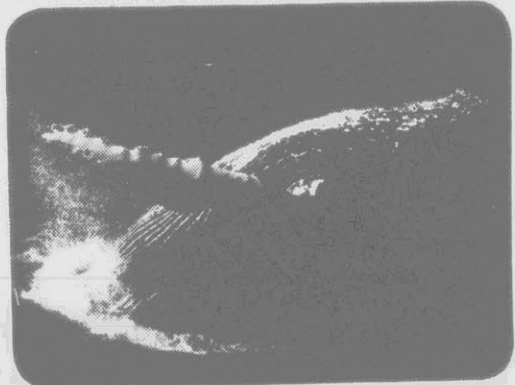

But, he added, "if one listens to the answers, if anything, he was even less in command...."

"As president, he hasn't really mastered what he needs to know to handle these terribly complex issues

... matters of life and death," he said. "I don't know anyone could watch (the debate) and be assured .. that the country was in good hands."

FOCUS

Thar She Blows!

The recent mass beaching of pilot whales at Cape Cod has again drawn attention to these marvelous and mysterious animals. Whales are the largest animals that ever lived. The head of an adult sperm whale makes up a quarter of the animal's length and a third of its weight. The blue whale can go up to half a year without eating, thanks to its life-sustaining blubber. Because its eyeballs are fixed, the whale must move its whole body to shift its line of sight.

DO YOU KNOW — What is the largest type of whale?

Mack Strike

ALLENTOWN, Pa. (AP) — U.S. production by the nation's No. 2 heavy-duty truck manufacturer ground to a halt as 9,200 United Auto Workers, fearing layoffs, staged their first strike against Mack Trucks Inc. in two decades.

"The big issue is job security," said Jim Alles, president of UAW Local 229 in Bridgewater, N.J., and a member of the union's negotiating committee. "We're losing many jobs throughout these plants. ... There's no use negotiating all the benefits in the world if you don't have a job."

The walkout in three states began at 12:01 a.m. Sunday, two hours after negotiations that began Aug. 13 broke off without an agreement and one minute after the old two-year contract expired. No new talks were scheduled.

The strike affects plants in Hagerstown, Md.; Bridgewater, N.J.; Macungie, Pa.; and Allentown, where Mack is based.

"Our truck production is closed down in the United States," said William McCullough, Mack vice president for corporate affairs.

McCullough said the strike was the first authorized union walkout against Mack since 1964.

Today's Cryptiquip clue: X equals W

The Cryptiquip is a simple substitution cipher in which each letter used stands for another. If you think that X equals O, it will equal O throughout the puzzle. Q.1—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♦7 ♥KQ83 ♦A7643 ♠A94

The bidding has proceeded:
East South West North
1 ♦ Dble Pass 2 ♥

What action do you take?
A.—In terms of high cards you are close to a minimum double, but your points are all prime. To pass and hope partner can act again might put too much pressure on him. Raise to three hearts. Partner will bear in mind that you bid competitively.

Q.2—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♦95 ♥KQJ1062 ♦9 ♠A754

The bidding has proceeded:
South West North East
1 ♥ 2 ♦ Dble Pass

What action do you take?
A.—Low-level penalty doubles are not fiats — they suggest that, because of a misfit, it might be wiser to play for penalties than to bid on. However, your hand is offensively oriented and is bound to be a defensive disappointment to partner. Pull to two hearts.

Q.3—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♦9 ♥AQJ1063 ♦7 ♠AKJ95

The bidding has proceeded:
South West North East
1 ♥ 2 ♦ Dble Pass

What action do you take?
A.—This time no one can quibble about your defensive strength. However, the offensive potential of your hand is almost unlimited. Do you want to defeat two diamonds doubled two tricks and then find out that your side can make seven clubs? Show your powerful distribution by jumping to four clubs.

1 ♥ 2 ♦ Dble Pass

What action do you take?
A.—There is no question that you have your share of defensive values. Offensively, however, you can't even be sure of a part score, let alone game, if partner, as expected, is short in hearts. Pass, and collect your penalty.

Q.5—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♦AQ85 ♥KQ976 ♠AJ82

The bidding has proceeded:
South West North East
1 ♥ Pass 2 ♦ Pass 3 ♦ Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—You have already shown a good hand with your reverse bid. Now you can give partner a complete picture of your holding by simply raising to four clubs. Since you would not raise partner's second suit without four-card support and your reverse promises at least five hearts and four spades, partner should know that your shape is 4-5-0-4.

Q.6—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♦KJ76 ♥95 ♦A8762 ♠83

The bidding has proceeded:
West North East South
1 ♥ Pass Pass ?

What action do you take?
A.—If you chose to pass, you make life too easy for the opponents. You should not allow them to buy hands at the one-level unless there is nothing you can do about it. Here, you should certainly offer some competition, and we recommend you bid one spade. Since you are in the balancing position and did not double, partner will not play you for a strong hand and will allow for the possibility that you are competing on a four-card suit.

State Official Knocks Salt In Campbell Soup

NEW YORK (AP) — The Campbell Soup Co. has agreed to change an advertising campaign suggesting that eating its soup promotes good health, when in fact it has too much salt, the state attorney general's office said Sunday.

A single serving of Campbell's soup contains more salt than recommended for one day, according to Attorney General Robert Abrams, who said Campbell's also agreed to pay his office $25,000 in expenses.

Abrams said the Campbell ads, which use the slogans "Health Insurance" and "Soup is Good Food," make misleading comparisons between the product and other foods and fail to mention the soup's sodium content.

A 10-ounce serving of the soup contains as much as 1,500 milligrams of sodium, Abrams said, noting that the National Academy of Sciences recommends a daily intake of between 1,100 and 1,300 milligrams as safe and adequate. Salt contributes to high blood pressure.

"Failing to mention the sodium content in an advertising campaign geared to promote the soup as a component of a healthy diet is dangerously misleading," Abrams said. "Excessive salt production may have especially serious health consequences for ... senior citizens and pregnant women, because many of them must limit the salt in their diets."

In making the agreement with Abrams' office, Campbell denied its advertising campaign was misleading.

The company agreed to stop using the phrase "health insurance" in its New York ads. It also promised to include in any "soup is good" ads over the next three years a statement noting that Campbell has a line of low-sodium soups for people who are on a salt-restricted diet.

Campbell also agreed to stop comparing the content of certain nutrients in its soups with the content of the same nutrients in foods that are not good sources of the nutrients. One ad had claimed that tomato soup has more Vitamin C than carrots or apricots, which are only fair sources of the vitamin.

A telephone call by The Associated Press to Campbell's headquarters in Camden, N.J., was answered Sunday by an employee who said he would try to reach a public relations executive for comment.

Flirting Cost Job

DALLAS (AP) — An investigation sparked by two complaining motorists led to the firing of a police officer for flirting with women to whom he gave traffic tickets, police say.

Three-year force veteran Dannie Lawson, 27, was dismissed Friday for "regularly using his job to try and pick up girls," said police chief Billy Prince.

Investigators who talked with 20 women ticketed by Lawson found no evidence of any sexual contact, said internal affairs Lt. Richard Hatler.
