GIANT CAKE — Dwight Green and Marcia Anderson of Jerry's Sweet Shop put the finishing touches on a giant cake replica of "The Plaza" in preparation for this morning's mall grand opening. The cake which is six layers thick, measures approximately 7 1/2 feet long and 4 1/2 feet wide. It took 60 sheet cakes to make and weighs in at about 600 pounds. Ms. Anderson said it took about 30 hours to construct. (Reflector Photo by Tommy Forrest)

Top Echelon' Of N.Y. Crime Mob Indicted

NEW YORK (AP) — FBI agents posed as crooked businessmen and bugged a pasta importer's offices to get indictments against the "entire top echelon" of one of the city's five major organized crime families, authorities said.

Meanwhile, hooded witnesses testifying anonymously told the President's Commission on Organized Crime on Wednesday that a new crime society, the Japanese Yakuza, is moving into the United States.

U.S. Attorney General William French Smith, who told the commission Tuesday that law enforcement efforts had traditional U.S. criminal organizations on the run, said Wednesday that organized crime had been "mortally wounded" by the indictments against the Colombo crime family.

It was one of the few times in law enforcement history "that the entire top echelon of a major organized crime family has been charged in a single federal indictment," Smith said in a news conference.

The 51-count federal racketeering indictment returned Wednesday named 11 men, including Carmine Persico, Gennaro Langella and Thomas DiBella. Federal authorities described Persico as the Colombo family boss, Langella as underboss and DiBella as adviser and a former family head.

The Colombo family "controls no fewer than seven key union organizations" in New York and "strongly influences both the construction and restaurant industries in this city," Smith said.

The indictment alleges "extortion and payoffs, mob control of labor unions, embezzlement of union funds, trafficking in heroin and other drugs, multimillion-dollar thefts, illegal gambling, loansharking and bribery."

Meanwhile, in the second day of testimony before the commission, witnesses described the Yakuza as a network of groups whose members cover their bodies with tattoos as a sign of discipline and chop off fingers to atone for mistakes.

The 100,000-member network is moving into Hawaii, California, Nevada, Colorado and New York, said James Harmon, the commission's director. Yakuza crimes include gambling, murder, extortion and gun- and drug-running, he said.

The Colombo family indictments resulted from a three-year investigation called Operation Star Quest that was conducted by a joint city-federal Organized Crime Task Force and involved two undercover operations, authorities said.

In one operation, an FBI agent posing as a buyer of stolen goods and another agent posing as his girlfriend entertained suspects aboard a yacht docked at Staten Island.

In the second operation, the FBI bugged the offices and warehouse of D&M Enterprises in New York's Little Italy, where "Colombo family people would come in, hang around and just talk," said U.S. Attorney Rudolph Giuliani.

The Colombo organization is not the biggest of New York's crime families but "it might be the one most similar to a corporate conglomerate," Giuliani said.

Persico, 51, Dominic Montemaro, 46, John J. DeRoss, 47, and Frank Melli, 42, were at large today. Vito Pitta, 57, was expected to surrender today, said Jane Parver, a spokeswoman for the U.S. Attorney's office.

Langella, 45, Anthony Scarpato, 51, Dominic Cataldo, 48, Frank Falanga, 64, and Ralph Scopo, 55, pleaded innocent Wednesday before U.S. District Judge Robert Carter.

Locals Are Hopeful Greenville Stop Might Be On Future Amtrak Schedule

By JANE WELBORN
Reflector Staff Writer

The idea for the new passenger train that will run from Charlotte to Raleigh and on to New York originated with the Pitt-Greenville Chamber of Commerce, according to Greenville resident W.C. "Bill" Cobb, founder of the Carolina Passenger Trains Advocates (CAPTA).

The new Amtrak train, "The Carolinian," will be christened and will have its inaugural run Friday at 9 a.m. The first public run will be Sunday.

If the train is successful, and Amtrak expects it to be, Greenville may become a stop for the train, as Cobb and the Pitt-Greenville Chamber of Commerce had envisioned several years ago.

A passenger train to run from Norfolk through Greenville to the western part of North Carolina to Tennessee was Cobb's brainchild. In 1979, a task force chaired by Cobb was formed by the chamber to study the feasibility of such a service for eastern North Carolina and the state. A progress report was completed in May of 1980. The feasibility study was done by the North Carolina Department of Transportation.

Cobb said the task force was formed to find a solution to eastern North Carolina's transportation problems.

"I worked on a railroad 25 years and I know the importance of railroads," Cobb said in an interview. "The highways are saturated right now. Amtrak trains have only killed 20 people in the entire time they have been in operation, excluding highway crossing accidents. The railroad tracks are already there, they do not have to be built. It is the most economical and safest way to travel."

"It (traveling by rail) might not be quite as quick, but it is comfortable and safe," Cobb added. "And the pollution in the air is almost down to zero. Amtrak can haul 400 people 20 miles on one gallon of fuel."

The task force lobbied in the state legislature for a passenger train. When the task force was disbanded in 1980, CAPTA and the People's Advocates, primarily financed by the Z. Smith Reynolds Foundation, continued the effort, successfully lobbying for the train in the last General Assembly.

People's Advocate Consultant Doug Lowe of Durham said in an interview that the People's Alliance and CAPTA are now working to halt the destruction of a bridge trestle in the Plymouth area which spans the Albemarle Sound and connects it to the Norfolk area.

"The trestle is crucial or else the train will have to go 400 miles out of its way to get around the sound," Lowe said. If the trestle is torn down, the train cannot run from Norfolk to Greenville.

The consultant thinks the new train will be successful and Greenville will have passenger service at a later date.

Cobb said that plans to complete the train hooking "the Atlantic Ocean with the Mississippi River ... are on the drawing table ... and they all originated in the Greenville Chamber of Commerce in 1979."

"Mr. W. Graham Clayton, president of Amtrak, told me personally that this train has the potential to be the best paying train in the nation," Cobb said. "If the train is successful, the rest of the line will be completed."

The inaugural ceremonies will begin Friday at 9 a.m. and the train will leave Raleigh at 9:30 a.m. Twenty minute stops will be made at the six stations along the line and the train will arrive in Charlotte at 3:45 p.m. The train will leave Charlotte at 4:45 p.m., arriving back in Raleigh at 9:45 p.m.

The train will begin running on its regular schedule Sunday.

Water Request Is Turned Down

FARMVILLE — The Town of Farmville has declined to furnish water for a steam generation industry which had considered locating in Farmville.

The industry, Cogentrix Inc. of Charlotte, had asked the town to provide the 1.2 million gallons of water it would need per day. The firm would have located near the Collins and Aikman textile plant here and provided steam for C&A and electrical energy for Carolina Power & Light Company.

There has been extensive discussion among the commissioners and the citizens of Farmville in recent weeks, with consultants and citizens voicing concern that tapping underground water supplies in the amount required by Cogentrix might jeopardize water supplies for the future. The board members in a statement said, "because the impact of drawing ground water in the amount necessary for Cogentrix's operation cannot be fully evaluated at this time (we believe) it is in the interest of the residents and the existing industry using Farmville's water supply...not to commit water service to serve Cogentrix in the foreseeable future."

Barfield Opts For Injection

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Velma Margie Barfield, convicted of poisoning her boyfriend, has selected lethal injection as her method of execution, which is scheduled for Nov. 2, a state official said today.

Mrs. Barfield made her choice Tuesday night, said Patty McQuillan, spokeswoman for the North Carolina Department of Correction.

Jenkins Endorses Hunt

Dr. Leo W. Jenkins, chancellor emeritus of East Carolina University, endorsed the election of Gov. Jim Hunt to the U.S. Senate at a morning news conference attended by more than 20 teachers, retired teachers and administrators from Pitt, Beaufort, Martin and Bertie Counties and from East Carolina University.

"Because of Jim Hunt's personal drive and commitment, North Carolina has gained national recognition as a progressive leader in education," he said.

Jenkins also said that Hunt played "a very significant part" in the establishment of the school of medicine at ECU and in helping East Carolina College become East Carolina University.

Jenkins has worked as a consultant to Hunt since retiring as chancellor of ECU in 1978.

He noted that the press conference here was similar to five others scheduled across the state today, at which educators would voice support for Hunt's candidacy.

The other news conferences, according to Jenkins, were scheduled for Asheville, Charlotte, Greensboro, Wilmington and Raleigh.

CHILD BELIEVED DEAD ... firemen search the smoldering rubble of the Irvin and Diane May residence in Bell Arthur, following a fire which was reported shortly after 11 a.m. A two-year-old daughter of the Mays was missing following the fire. Mrs. May and three other children were not injured when fire destroyed the two-story house located on an unpaved road which parallels the railroad tracks in Bell Arthur. Firemen from Bell Arthur, Red Oak and Farmville who fought the blaze, said the house, owned by George Sutton of Bell Arthur, was completely involved in fire when they arrived. Sisters Open Homes For Three Weeks To Show Various Crafts

By CAROL TYER
Reflector Staff Writer

Tony Banks goes like a house-afire at everything she does. She gives her utmost to teaching special education classes at A.G. Cox School. She throws yard sales any time she hears of a good cause. She supports her friends through whatever difficulties they have. Now she's going to have a baby and she and her husband are planning a house they will soon start building.

But all that's not enough — she also likes making money and she loves crafts. Her sister, Pat Rice, also a school teacher, does, too.

The two of them decided a few years ago that they'd like to sell well-made craft items for other people on consignment. They started thinking about opening a shop.

But when they started going with realtors to look at sites, they were appalled by the rents they'd have to pay.

"Pat informed me," Tony said, "that we were just going to have to do it at home."

"At home? Are you kidding?" I said.

"Yes, at home," Pat said, "— at your house and at my house."

Tony shows half their wares at her house. And Pat shows the other half at her house near Kinston. Twice a year each of the sisters and their families move practically all of their furniture into storage, bring in tables and fill up every available surface, every inch of floor space not needed for walking and every parcel of wall space with crafts. Then for three weeks they throw open their homes weekends and weekday evenings.

During the rest of the year, they visit craft shows and craftsmen and add to their roster of carefully selected clients.

Tony's husband, Ellis, a high school chemistry teacher, has joined her in the enterprise they call Santa's Helpers. "People ask me how I got into this," Ellis said as he sat cross-legged on the floor pricing items, "and I tell them 'When you get too close to a tornado, you get sucked in.'"

The Banks' house, located at the intersection of Reedy Branch Road and State Road 1126, will be open through Saturday, Oct. 27. Hours are 7 to 9 each evening and Saturday 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.

ARTHRITIS WARNING
ATLANTA, Ga. (AP) — The worst thing people can do for their arthritis is to ignore it, cautions the Arthritis Foundation.

Ignoring the symptoms won't make your arthritis go away, it says, and could lead to very serious joint damage, crippling or even permanent disability.

Treatment for arthritis can help prevent disability and crippling if begun early, according to a spokesman.

But studies have shown most people wait an average of 4½ years before seeking medical care for their symptoms. During that time, irreversible joint damage can occur.

Dressing Room Policy Gets Dressing-Down From Shopper

DEAR ABBY: A friend told me that the best department stores in Boston have installed two-way mirrors in their dressing rooms so they can watch for shoplifters.

I think this is terrible! I would feel very uncomfortable undressing to try on clothes knowing that a detective (male or female) was watching me. And when I think of trying on bathing suits and lingerie, it really disturbs me.

Is this practice legal? I can't believe it's really going on in Boston. APPALLED IN BOSTON

DEAR APPALLED: I checked with the best department stores in Boston and was assured that there are no two-way mirrors in their dressing rooms. Your friend is full of beans.

four years! They had three children — the baby was 3 months old.

She told me her husband had a bad drinking problem and she was seeking help for him and their family. It was very plain to me that she really loved this man.

The next time my "boyfriend" called me, I told him I had met his wife and saw his children and he never should come near me again. I also told him what I thought of him for cheating on a beautiful family like his.

I am very thankful to Diane for inviting me over and opening my eyes.

NEVER AGAIN

DEAR ABBY: So "Celeste, Texas" thinks that only virgins have a right to wear white wedding gowns and marry in a church. Who gave "Celeste" the right to act as God's judge on earth?

If women are expected to save themselves for marriage, so should men. In fact, if men would try to save themselves for marriage, then more women would be able to!

As for wearing white, if a bride wants to wear purple and a bone in her nose, and walk up the aisle to "Shake Your Booty," that's her business. And whether she's a virgin or not is strictly between her, her husband and God.

At Wits End

By Erma Bombeck

Anyone can intimidate me. I'm easy.

You show me an opponent who meets me on the tennis court wearing a sweatband on his wrist and it's all over for me. I'll lie down on the court, roll over and throw in a can of new balls to boot.

Sometimes the people don't even mean to unsettle my insecurities. It's just the way I am.

For years, I have considered people who write poetry. "deep." The more of it I don't understand, the deeper I think they are. For all I know they could be people who are candidates for paper bedroom slippers, but I will go to my grave saying, "She was just too cerebral for us."

I'm also in awe of people who order artichokes in public. Oh sure, I cook them at home and go through the whole ritual of pulling off the petals and dragging them through sauce and then pulling them through my teeth, but in public? Never! I think people who eat artichokes in public are the same ones who park in front of a concert hall and leave their keys in their car, and send wine back after they've sampled it. They defy traditions and thumb their noses at rules.

Probably the bravest woman I ever met was a friend of mine who walked into a shoestore one day right off the street, sat down and said, "I want to try on boots."

Now that takes courage. She didn't ask if they had zippers, gussets, velcro, or a razor blade, she just said, "I want to try on boots." I still cannot show my calves to anyone to whom I am not currently married.

But the person who really makes me feel inadequate is the man or woman who can introduce eight people to one another without grabbing them by the chest and reading off their name tags. I would give anything to be able to retain names like that.

For years I whined around that it was sorority training and I was too poor to fraternize, but it isn't true. It's just a superior human being who can say, "Armit Tragiano, I want you to meet Murcantile Zolheize, Myelcanot Armageddon, Bonsai Schlorofite, Dick Dyjust and Carlyle Mohad. But we're all friends, so let's just make it Smitty, Bud, Myo, Bruijer, Dickie and Tom."

I went blank last week while introducing my mother.

Someone once asked me if you could die from intimidation.

Having just returned, the answer is yes.

TOTS INCREASE

WASHINGTON (AP) — There are more preschool-aged Americans now than there have been in the past 15 years, according to Pediatric News.

The publication reports that the post-World War II baby boom generation is reaching childbearing age and is producing a record number of births. The number of Americans 5 years of age or younger reached 17.8 million last year, up from the 16.3 million in 1980, says the News, reporting on a Census Bureau survey.

It adds that the increase is due almost entirely to the rise in the number of women reaching childbearing age, for the total fertility rate has changed little since 1975.

A Program We Like

It is good to know the extent of success the Pitt-Greenville Crime Stoppers program has enjoyed. It is also reassuring to know others feel that way and contribute toward its continuation.

Veterans of Foreign Wars Post 7032 backed its endorsement of the program with $1,000 to assist payment of rewards for information leading to arrests and convictions. In some instances those rewards could go to as high as $1,000.

How valuable has Crime Stoppers been in the community?

Its coordinator says thus far this year the program has resulted in arrest of 38 persons and $112,000 worth of drugs and stolen property recovered. A total of $3,815 has been paid since January as rewards for information. That's a pretty good return.

There are hidden benefits, too. The program may act as a deterrent for some; and for others who are caught it might be a future preventive.

Callers who have information they think may be helpful are not required to identify themselves. (The Crime Stopper telephone number is 758-7777.) The program is funded by interested citizens and groups.

We like it.

The Plaza Is Here

We never cease to be amazed at the growth of business in our community. New retail businesses seem to open every week.

Nothing tells us more about the robustness of the local economy than the knowledge that those who make the decisions see this area as an opportune one in which to do business.

Today one of the older shopping areas, which was known as Pitt Plaza, opens as The Plaza. It is far more than a name change. The shopping center was originally built as an open mall. Now it has been enclosed, stores have been added and others expanded. Its interior is as well planned and decorated as any mall in the state.

Many of the stores located in The Plaza have been there since its beginning, so visitors should feel at home. The developers have taken what was already there and developed a modern, enclosed shopping mall. The Plaza is a welcome addition to Pitt County.

Rallies Touch Social Issues

WASHINGTON — This has been an unusually riotous month on some college campuses. It suggests there is something rebellious about a new generation of college Babbitts that should give pause to students and alumni alike.

Consider the following outbursts in America's heartland:

•NORMAN, Ill., Oct. 3 — Angered by new town laws designed to temper campus parties, about 1,000 Illinois State University students engaged in a violent protest that ultimately lead to a fracas with police. Tear gas was used to disperse the crowd. There were at least two arrests and five people injured.

Lloyd Watkins, the ISU president, termed the outburst a "frightening display of mob violence that will drive deeper the wedge of distrust and dislike between town and gown."

•LAFAYETTE, Ind., Oct. 6 — A block gathering of about 1,000 students near the campus of Purdue University, once called the "hotbed of social unrest," erupted into a confrontation with police in riot gear. No injuries were reported, yet there were 21 arrests. Revelers threw rocks and bottles at passing cars, including police vehicles; about 300 students subsequently broke into the student union, smashing a window and furniture.

•MANHATTAN, Kans., Oct. 13 — Thousands of Kansas State University football fans, most of them celebrating the school's gridiron victory over arch rival Kansas, attacked police officers called in to disperse the crowd. Six police officers had to be treated for injuries (one was stabbed in the arm with a knife), and at least 80 people were arrested. The night before, a police officer had been beaten up in the same vicinity, a two-block area of night spots called "Aggieville."

No one has suggested that the three closely-timed incidents were connected. This story isn't about conspiracy.

Yet they share several elements: students, alcohol and a violent defiance of authority that contradicts the placid public image of today's undergraduates.

Little more than a decade ago, students were also skirmishing with police. The Vietnam War provoked visceral outbursts on both sides of the issue. The nadir of campus-based violence came on May 4, 1970, when four students died of gunshot wounds inflicted by Ohio national guardsmen at Kent State University.

Nowadays, injustices and outrages elicit barely a peep. But when there's an attempt to break up or curb social frolics, the response is passionate. As Stephen Arney, editor of the Daily Vidette at Illinois State conceded, "When you start taking away their (students') beer, then you've got problems."

Federal and state legislators, town councils and college administrators may have invited harsh reactions the moment they began cracking down on student drinkers. Even in jurisdictions where the 21-year-old drinking age prevails (almost half the states), beer parties have been an almost inviolate college campus tradition. Frustration belonged to the campus cop who crossed a fraternity or dormitory threshold in the hope of turning down the volume or muzzling underage revelers.

But the violence at Illinois State, Kansas State and Purdue — three institutions that otherwise typify the quiet nature of today's campuses — not only suggests that new and forthcoming drinking curbs may become an emotional student issue of national scale, it might also have revealed latent frustrations in need of venting.

How else can one explain the broken windows in Normal's City Hall, the smashed windows of Indiana state highway patrol cars, or the knife wound and other injuries suffered by police officers in Manhattan? These are hardly the symbols of reasoned, let alone peaceful, disagreement.

This was supposed to be a collegiate generation that didn't question authority. Lawmakers and school administrators have undoubtedly relied on that supposition in enacting new rules that bear most heavily on the college-age population.

But this month's outbreaks indicate that college students won't bend to every order. If they value highly one thing more than money, it is their social life. And when that's threatened, they can rebel like the most ardent counter-revolutionaries.

GOP Challenge Poses Key Question

RALEIGH — Could a mixed political marriage work in North Carolina? That is, could North Carolina state government operate smoothly if the Legislature continues to be predominantly Democratic — as it will be — and the governor is a Republican — as he may be?

That question becomes important for the first time in eight years as the Republican Party has put forth a solid challenge to the governor's seat which they have won only once in this century. Republican Jim Martin may be trailing Democrat Rufus Edmisten in the polls but the gap is not wide enough to say that Edmisten is a sure bet.

During the campaign, the question of a Republican governor's ability to do his job when the Legislature is overwhelmingly Democratic has been raised repeatedly. In the term of Gov. Jim Holshouser, 1973-77, the Republican chief executive found himself constantly at odds with the Democratic Legislature. Friction led to a number of legislative power-grabs which the N.C. Supreme Court eventually ruled unconstitutional in that they violated the doctrine of separation of powers.

Democrats have said that no matter how attractive Martin's program, he'll have no chance of getting it through a Legislature that will be controlled by his opposition. Since the North Carolina governor has no veto, he can't flex his muscles on legislation unless he also heads the political party which controls the Legislature, they say.

Martin has countered that he can work with Democrats and that he trusts that Democratic legislators will put partisan politics aside to work for the state's common good.

Such power sharing is not unusual in the United States. The National Conference of State Legislatures (NCSL) recently released a report showing that states currently have such mixed marriages. In some states, things work well. In others, the government is a mess.

Tennessee is our closest neighbor with such an arrangement. Republican Gov. Lamar Alexander pushed through a comprehensive education reform package last year, but only after he'd come to the realization that he needed to work with the leaders of the Democratic legislature. House Speaker Ned McWherter said, "Each party has to work on a bipartisan basis for the good of the state."

Out west, in Utah, the situation is much different. Gov. Scott Matheson, a Democrat, complains: "In the five years when the Republicans have had total control, I've never been consulted as a governor in the solution to one single public policy question." He added that "a lot of valuable recommendations (have gone) down the tubes without even the benefit of discussion."

NCSL says three factors contribute to the success or failure of a mixed marriage. The first is the size of the opposition's legislative majority. This is more important in other states because the governor has a veto. It would still be important in North Carolina if a Republican governor had a strong base in his own party to which he could add defecting Democrats.

The second factor is personal style. Is the governor amenable to compromise? Ronald Reagan was, as governor of California, but current Gov. George Deukmejian apparently is not. Their records show the difference, NCSL says.

The third factor is proximity to an election. A recent bitter election may sour the chances for compromise. NCSL says. An upcoming election often creates the mood for compromise as politicians seek to accomplish something they can show to the voters as they seek re-election.

Public Forum

To the editor:

Your pseudo defense of "Freedom of the Press" in Sunday's editorial left much to be desired. Although not mentioned by name, you were obviously referring to the Westmoreland vs. CBS case now being tried in New York City.

Should not the ones who report the news have a standard of conduct to follow, as well as those who make it? Legal minds and the press have long understood that they had a complete defense to libel if they could show that reporters had carefully gathered information that supported their conclusions; however, if they edit and cut with a reckless disregard and purposely fail to show the other side's view, why shouldn't a jury decide if someone is libeled rather than have the accused — the press — make that decision!

Did I miss something in the news recently, or is this another example of the Republican tendency to mispeak opinions in the guise of "facts" in this campaign? I'm referring to the remark reported in the Reflector by Herb Lee, who said his opponent was "against aid to stop Soviet Cuban, Libyan and PLO takeovers in Central America." The Soviets and the Cubans are involved down there, and I wouldn't put it past the Libyans to snoop around down there — but I certainly hadn't heard about it. As for the PLO — when did they get so successful in the Middle East that they got the spare arms and cash and other support to cross over to Central America? Or did they go there when Israel ran them out of Lebanon?

C'mon, this guy wants to deal with foreign affairs in the U.S. Congress?

Judgeships Are Key Issues

WASHINGTON — Little by little attention seems to be focusing on the most important issue in the presidential campaign. It's not the deficit; it's not a budget for defense; it's not a resumption of arms control talks with the Soviet Union. It's the power to appoint federal judges over the next four years.

I have harped on this theme before, and I will keep harping. The Mondale camp has come to life on the prospect of what a Reagan victory would mean: "Do you want Jerry Falwell to name the next members of the U.S. Supreme Court?" It's a dumb question, the Reagan camp might as stupidly insinuate that Jane Fonda would name Mondale's choices, but it gets to the heart of the matter.

The point quite simply is at Reagan would nominate jurists of one cast of mind. Mondale would nominate jurists of precisely the opposite cast of mind. Because five members of the Supreme Court are more than 75 years of age, we can expect vacancies to develop between 1985 and 1989. Who will make the nominations?

The meaning of the Constitution (and of key statutes as well) will depend upon the answer to that question. Reagan's appointees, or Mondale's, will serve until well into the next century. The court is now closely divided in terms of judicial philosophy. Two or three consistent conservatives, in the pattern of William Rehnquist and Sandra Day O'Connor, would take the law in one direction. Two or three consistent liberals, in the pattern of William Brennan and Thurgood Marshall, would take the law in another direction. Where do we want the law to go?

Think for a moment about the 1983-84 term. It saw 26 cases decided by votes of 5-4. In six of these cases, no pattern could be perceived. O'Connor jumped her traces and joined the liberals in a case involving the Miranda rule; Blackmun uncharacteristically joined the conservatives in a case involving the right of firemen to search for evidence of arson. The views of the justices are not cast in stone.

But in the other 20 cases the conservative and liberal blocs could be plainly seen. The conservatives prevailed on 14, the liberals on six. Not all the cases, of course, were of equal importance; no great divisions of judicial philosophy can be read in to an opinion construing the oil depletion allowance. Yet most of the 5-4 decisions were significant.

For example, the conservatives came together in the case of the Pawtucket creche; the opinion by Chief Justice Burger moved the court one more step away from the supposed "wall of separation" of church and state. They came together in the case of the Pennhurst Hospital in Pennsylvania; the opinion by Justice Powell curbed the power of federal courts over state officials.

The conservative bloc shaped the exclusionary rule, which governs the admissibility of evidence in contested criminal cases. The result is that some measure of common sense is being restored to a judge-made rule that was making a travesty of justice. In the Quarles case, the conservatives similarly shaped the Miranda Rule. Over a passionate dissent from the liberal wing, the conservatives were able to impose Burger's reading of the Fourth Amendment on the rights of prison inmates. In a statutory case, the conservatives upheld the power of the president to restrict travel to Cuba.

In each of these cases one vote made all the difference.

It is not only the nomination of Supreme Court justices that matters; the naming of federal circuit and district court judges is also of great importance. Jimmy Carter was lucky in this regard. Under one bill alone, he was able to nominate 117 district and 35 circuit judges. By the time he left office, Carter had put on the bench almost half of all active circuit judges. Nine of every 10 of his appointees were liberal Democrats. The next president, either Reagan or Mondale, will have an opportunity to nominate another 24 circuit judges. This is how the law is shaped.

The next few years will see the federal courts involved in issues of grave concern — equal pay for equal jobs, the accommodation of religion in public life, a continuing definition of the rights of an accused to due process of law, the power of the states to manage their own interests without interference from federal courts. The judges of Walter Mondale predictably would rule one way, the judges of Ronald Reagan a different way. On Nov. 6, as the saying goes, you pays your money and you takes your choice.

Strength For Today

The mortgage is an interesting document which often represents hope or failure. Probably in a majority of cases it represents the former. Two young people starting out want to make a home. They cannot possibly raise immediately the money necessary for that purpose, however. They buy a house, therefore, subject to mortgage and this they amortize by payments over a stated number of years. This represents hope.

But sometimes the mortgage is a sign of failure. A person has started to slip, slip, slip, and at last a mortgage is clapped on his property to try to forestall further slipping. This is the mortgage in its saddest aspect.

The mortgage ought to be — and in most cases is — a challenge, a spur, an ambition to be filled. It is the symbol of hope, the growing family, the vision of better things. We need to snap to solemn attention if it is anything else;

AIDS Cure Not Expected Soon, Doctor Hints

By STEPHEN J. SIMURDA
Associated Press Writer
SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — It may be 10 years or more before a cure for AIDS is found, and evidence is growing that the disease can be spread through vaginal intercourse, a researcher says.

A panel of doctors at the 70th annual congress of the American College of Surgeons also said Wednesday that more prudent use of blood transfusions would minimize the risk of AIDS, and that doctors who treat AIDS patients are not in danger of catching the disease.

"For the person with AIDS now, we're no more likely to be able to cure him than we were three years ago," said Dr. Paul A. Volberding of San Francisco General Hospital, a center of AIDS treatment.

Acquired immune deficiency syndrome will persist as a "major clinical problem for the next 10 or more years," Volberding said.

The panel's statements coincided with publication of a study in the New England Journal of Medicine that said efforts to rebuild AIDS victims' wrecked immune systems will probably be futile until doctors find a way to kill the virus that causes the disease.

The disease attacks the body's immune system, rendering its victim susceptible to a variety of fatal diseases. It is most common among homosexual or bisexual men, but intravenous drug users, Haitian immigrants and hemophiliacs also have been identified as high-risk groups.

The doctors whose study was published in today's New England Journal of Medicine found they could partially restore a patient's disease-fighting blood cells, but he still died — apparently because the virus attacked the new cells. According to the Centers for Disease Control, more than 6,300 AIDS cases have been reported in the United States since 1981. Nearly three-quarters of the victims are male homosexuals, and experts believe the disease is spread through intimate contact with body fluids, such as blood and semen.

But the surgeons here said recent studies in Africa and Haiti show that the disease is predominant among heterosexual men and women in roughly equal numbers, causing them to question theories about the spread of the disease.

"The suspicion previously has been that it's easier to spread through anal intercourse," said Volberding.

But now, he said, doctors are questioning whether the disease can spread through vaginal intercourse as well, adding that the disease has begun appearing in prostitutes. Men catching it from prostitutes may eventually spread it to heterosexual women.

"I think what matters is how many partners you have and their exposure, not the type of sex you have," Volberding said.

Dr. Charles E. Huggins, director of blood transfusion services at Massachusetts General Hospital in Boston, said that of the 81 AIDS patients who are believed to have gotten the disease from transfusions, half are women.

Huggins says doctors should avoid blood transfusions for patients whenever possible. "That's good medicine," he said, adding that the procedure has become routine in many cases where it is not needed.

On another matter, Dr. Donald A. Trunkey of San Francisco General Hospital said that despite the concerns of some doctors, "it's an unreasonable fear that they might get AIDS" from treating a patient with the disease.

Meanwhile, the U.S. Food and Drug Administration approved on Wednesday a drug for treating a rare and usually fatal kind of pneumonia that frequently strikes AIDS victims.

The drug, pentamidine, is used to treat Pneumocystis carinii and will be sold under the brand name Pentam 300 by LyphoMed Inc. of Melrose Park, Ill.

Victims of AIDS suffer a breakdown of their immune systems that makes them susceptible to a host of opportunistic diseases, including Pneumocystis carinii.

Pentamidine is administered directly into muscles or veins, usually in a hospital. Adverse reactions from this potent drug include severe low blood pressure, decrease in blood sugar, irregular heartbeats and kidney impairment.

Asheville Man Convicted In 1981 Mineshaft Murder

ASHEVILLE (AP) — After 9½ hours of deliberations and four requests for more information on the possible convictions, a Buncombe County jury found Joseph Vines guilty of first-degree murder and kidnapping in the 1981 death of Lonnie Gamboa.

The jury will begin hearing evidence today to decide whether Vines should be sentenced to death or life in prison. District Attorney Ronald C. Brown told Judge Robert D. Lewis that the state would seek the death penalty on the grounds that the murder was especially heinous, atrocious and cruel.

Lewis had Vines and the jury of nine men and three women stand when jurors returned with their decisions Wednesday. Vines, 33, shook his head slowly as jury foreman John Shackles announced the verdicts.

Vines faces up to 40 years in prison on the kidnapping conviction.

Testimony showed that Gamboa was abducted from Asheville on Dec. 23, 1981, blindfolded, put in into the trunk of a car and driven more than 140 miles to the abandoned Ore Knob Mine in Ashe County where Vines pushed him to his death.

Vines testified that he pushed Gamboa down the mineshaft at gunpoint, on orders from Gary H. Miller and Paul W. Bare. Based on Vines' testimony in 1982, Bare was convicted of first-degree murder and kidnapping.

Miller and Alan Ray Hattaway pleaded guilty in February to kidnapping and second-degree murder in the deaths of Gamboa and another man whose body was recovered from the mine.

Vines, who was scheduled to testify against Miller and Hattaway, was under the federal witness protection program and failed to appear for the trial. Without his chief witness, Brown accepted the second-degree murder plea, but began to investigate bringing charges against Vines.

The jury deliberated for more than 9½ hours Tuesday and Wednesday before convicting Vines.

Shackles told Lewis that the first-degree murder conviction was reached under the state's felony murder rule. That means that the jury found Vines guilty of capital murder because Vines pushed Gamboa into the mine during the kidnapping.

In its two days of deliberation, the jury seemed to be split over whether the threat to Vines' life was sufficient evidence to reduce Vines' culpability to voluntary manslaughter — the only lesser verdict that Lewis said could be returned in the case.

Four times the jury asked Lewis for additional further instructions on what it had to find to convict Vines of felony murder or voluntary manslaughter.

The last request came 20 minutes before the verdict was returned at 4 p.m. Shackles said that the jury wanted to know whether Vines, to be guilty of murder, had to know from the start of the abduction that his co-defendants intended to kill Gamboa.

Chamber Meet Is This Weekend

The Pitt-Greenville Chamber of Commerce will hold its annual out-of-town planning conference Friday through Sunday in Columbia, S.C.

According to Ray Boleman, 1985 chairman of the chamber, the theme of the conference will be "Where Do We Go From Here?"

Addressing the topic "A Look at the Future" will be Bob Martin, Reginald Gray, Bill Nobles, Sam Carson, Mike Phillips, Jack Farrior, Gail Meeks, Dr. Charles Russell, Dick Blake, Jack Richardson and John Chaffee. On Sunday morning, Phil Dixon, PGCC's vice chairman of the Economic and Industrial Development Division, will moderate a panel discussion.

The purpose of the conference is to discuss and exchange ideas for future plans for Pitt County. The chamber's 1985 Program of Work will be developed from these sessions and discussions.

The attendees also plan to attend the ECU-USC football game, and a mystery dinner will be held Saturday night.

Economist Questions Recruitment Tactics

DURHAM (AP) — North Carolina is spending too much time in developing high-technology industries and not enough time on the traditional industries, which employ about a third of the state's workers, a Duke University economist says.

About 7 percent of the state's workers are in industries classified as high-tech, Dr. Michael I. Luger said. About a third of all workers are in the traditional textile, furniture and agricultural industries, which lost about 13,000 jobs between 1978 and 1982.

"The state has not done enough to help stabilize its declining industries," Luger said. "Increases in competitiveness that have occurred have resulted, in large part, from private sector initiatives."

The state's current development strategy relies too much on recruitment programs for high-tech firms and "too little on programs for existing traditional and emerging resident businesses," Luger said.

Luger said in a study for Duke's Institute of Policy Sciences and Public Affairs that the state "has shown considerable initiative in its high-tech development policy. But the few visible programs for which it has received recognition are not likely, by themselves, to fulfill the promise of economic prosperity for all state citizens."

Luger also said the state is undermining its goal of balanced industrial growth by fostering growth of high-tech in the Research Triangle Park.

He said the recruitment practices may also be jeopardizing the goal of job security, since high-tech industries being recruited are branches of large firms headquartered in other states.

"These firms typically search beyond the border of North Carolina for future profit opportunities," he said. "A high-tech company headquartered in California, for example, may decide to use the profits from a North Carolina plant to finance the construction of new high-tech plants in Mississippi or Thailand."

Luger recommended the state broaden its range of development programs to include existing businesses, consider guaranteeing loans for industrial development and re-evaluate its historic opposition to unions.

He said planners in Southern states have a problem in trying to raise average wages without stifling business investment. If wages are raised uniformly, the prospects of new firms for the state will be reduced and the health of old-line industries that rely on low-wage workers will be reduced, he said.

"The strategy policymakers in North Carolina have adopted gets around this dilemma, unwittingly or otherwise," Luger said. "As a consequence of high-tech firms moving into the state, the average manufacturing wage rate for the state will rise. But because those wage increases will not be spread uniformly to workers of all skills and in all locations, low-wage workers will remain for employment in traditional low-skilled industries."

11 Die In Wreck

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil (AP) — At least 11 people were killed in central Brazil when a bus went out of control and flipped over, police said.

Divino Batista de Paulo, a state police trooper, said in a telephone interview that the bus overturned outside the farming town of Itumbiara, 700 miles northwest of Rio. The cause of the crash was not known.

The bus had been en route from Santo Andre, a southeastern industrial suburb of Sao Paulo, to the resort town of Caldas Novas, 91 miles from Itumbiara.

Wildflower Project

HOUSTON (AP) — Lady Bird Johnson, who helped start the National Wildflower Center, says the world is "filling up with folks" who have replaced fields with "grids of houses, shopping centers and lots and lots of highways."

The widow of President Lyndon B. Johnson said at a fund-raiser Wednesday that the Austin-based research center will distribute information on the 25,000 U.S. varieties of wildflowers "so they'll still be with us in our world."

NEARLY $2 MILLION IN BRONZE — This bronze statue portrait "Mile Pogany," one of four by sculptor Brancusi, is expected to sell for between $1.5 million and $2 million when it comes to auction Nov. 14 at Sotheby's in New York. The 1913 work, part of the collection of Mr. and Mrs. David Bakalar of Boston, measures 17½ inches high and is the only one of the four remaining in private hands. (AP Laserphoto)

FHA Offices Will Have Credit Initiatives Data

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Final regulations for the operation of President Reagan's farm credit initiatives have been completed and published and will be distributed to Farmers Home Administration (FmHA) field offices during the next few days.

Regulations governing the one-time debt set-aside program were published in the Federal Register Oct. 19. Those rule instructions covering contracts for special farm management and financing counseling at the county level will be in the hands of FmHA loan specialists this week.

Under the plan announced recently by the president for farmers experiencing serious financial difficulty, FmHA can set aside up to 25 percent, to a maximum of $200,000, of an FmHA's debt for five years without interest.

For non-FmHA borrowers, the agency can guarantee up to 90 percent of a loan if the lender is willing to write off a minimum of 10 percent of the debt. In both cases, the goal is to restore the farmer to a positive cash flow position.

The contract assistance offered at the county level will be available to both FmHA and non-FmHA borrowers in an effort to find viable alternatives so they can continue their operations.

Seminar Scheduled For Nov. 9 At ECU

"Death and Dying: The Impact of Technology on Tradition," a public program examining moral and ethical questions about health, death, life support systems and prolonged care for the terminally ill, will be held at East Carolina University Nov. 9.

Sessions, all to be held in the Carol Belk building auditorium, are scheduled from 2-5 p.m. with a major address at 7:15 p.m. All sessions are open to the public.

The event is sponsored by the ECU Regional Development Institute with funding from the N.C. Board of Science and Technology and is designed to be of particular interest to medical and health care professionals, clergy and counselors.

The featured address will be "Philosopher in the Hospital," by Dr. John Lincourt, professor of philosophy at UNC-Charlotte.

Further information about the program is available from the Regional Development Institute, 757-6650.

Child's Mummified Body Is Found

NEW YORK (AP) — The mummified body of a 3-year-old child was found lying face-up on a bed in a Bronx apartment a week after his emotionally disturbed mother was hospitalized, police said today.

The dead child's 11-year-old brother, who had been alone with his 13-year-old deaf-mute sister and the body since Oct. 18, called neighbors around 8:15 p.m. Wednesday, said police spokesman Sgt. Tony Vallelong.

Neighbors noticed an odor in the apartment, found the body and summoned police.

"The child was in a mummified condition, lying in a bed on its back," Vallelong said. "We have no idea how long the child had been there."

An autopsy was to be performed, said Vallelong, who added there were no outward signs of child abuse or injuries.

"There are no apparent indications of cause of death," he said. "It could be malnutrition, natural causes, anything."

The child's mother was hospitalized as an "emotionally disturbed person" in New Jersey on Oct. 18, and the children had been alone in the apartment since then, said Vallelong. The circumstances surrounding her hospitalization were not immediately clear, he said.

The surviving brother and his sister were examined by doctors, who found no problems, said Vallelong.

Police were withholding the names of everyone involved until relatives of the family could be located, he said.

Court Testing Arbitration

GREENSBORO (AP) — U.S. Middle District Court in Greensboro will become part of an experimental arbitration program in an effort to find quicker, less expensive alternatives to an already overworked court system.

Under the program, which begins Jan. 1, the court will submit certain federal lawsuits to arbitrators for disposition, according to Wednesday's announcement.

It will be operated by the court in conjunction with the Private Adjudication Center Inc., a nonprofit dispute resolution agency affiliated with Duke University Law School and headed by former 6th District Rep. Richardson Preyer of Greensboro, who also is a former judge in the Middle District court.

One of approximately 10 court approved arbitration programs being tested in the nation's federal courts, it is the only one associated with a major law school, court officials said Wednesday.

"The whole idea is to create a proceeding that keeps cases that qualify out of the federal court docket," said Benjamin Foster, vice president and executive director of the center. But organizers hope for other benefits as well. "This should provide a quicker and less expensive means for resolving disputes than is normally associated with trials," said J.P. Creekmore, clerk of Middle District Court.

Creekmore said the new program should be able to handle cases in a maximum of six months rather than the average time of two years or more. It also will cut down the amount of documents usually filed in lawsuits.

The program, which has been under consideration for two years, will not be voluntary, however.

Eligible cases — primarily those involving contract or negligence suits — will be submitted to the adjudication center by the court. Parties will be given 120 days for discovery and another 60 days to present the case to the arbitrator. The parties will be able to select an arbitrator from names submitted by the center.

If either party does not accept the arbitrator's award, he or she may demand a traditional trial, said Creekmore.

However, if that person fails to get a more favorable award in the trial process, they will be required to pay the cost of arbitration.

"It's a special kind of arbitration," said Foster. "If your case qualifies, then the court says you must go to arbitration, but the opinion is an advisory opinion rather than binding."

"Once we get a track record, I think the number of cases appealed will decrease," said Creekmore, who added that the program has worked well in other courts.

The court will bear the cost of the program, paying Duke Law School to train a pool about 30 arbitrators and providing each arbitrator a maximum of $690 per case. No court reporters or clerks will be required.

After 30 months, the program will be evaluated by the court and either continued, modified or terminated.

Creekmore said the program should handle up to 125 cases a year, or about one-third of the private, civil cases filed annually. The remainder of the courts' workload involves government contracts or prisoner complaints, which will not be submitted for arbitration.

Creekmore said civil filings in the Middle District increased by 14.9 percent in 1983 over 1982, while the courts four judges handled 11.1 percent more cases.

Official Is Arrested In Priest Kidnapping

By MATTHEW C. VITA

Associated Press Writer
WARSAW, Poland (AP) — The government said today it will charge an Interior Ministry official in connection with the abduction of a Roman Catholic priest six days ago. The priest's whereabouts remained unknown.

The arrested man was identified by the official Polish news agency PAP only as Grzegorz P., a functionary of the Interior Ministry, which controls the nation's police and internal security. His rank and duties were not disclosed by the news agency.

"It may be expected he will be charged and arrested on the basis of investigation materials," government spokesman Jerzy Urban said in remarks broadcast on Warsaw Radio.

He said there was no information on the whereabouts of the priest, the Rev. Jerzy Popieluszko of Warsaw, 37, a frequent target of government criticism for his sermons defending the ideals of the outlawed Solidarity movement.

Urban said investigators had found hair matching that of the missing priest in the trunk of a car driven by the Interior Ministry official, who had been placed under provisional arrest Wednesday.

Urban said there were other "suspected culprits" in the kidnapping and that authorities had found fingerprints in the priest's car similar to "fingerprints of one of those suspected."

"Since it is not known how many people took part in the abduction, I cannot reveal what other people are suspected," Urban said. He did not say whether the other suspects had been detained.

Urban said police dogs given the scent of the priest's clothes had led authorities to the car in which the hair sample was found.

"I'd like to state once again in the name of the government that the Polish authorities had nothing to do with this abduction," Urban said.

The Interior Ministry worker had been "placed under provisional arrest for willfully absenting himself from his job ... for falsifying an entry in the record book of his official car, and for failing to provide an alibi" for missing work last Friday, the day Popieluszko disappeared, state-run television said.

Cardinal Josef Glemp, issued his first public comment today on the abduction, demanding a full explanation "about the reasons, conditions and culprits of this shameful act."

"We are afraid that also in Poland a homicide could happen," Glemp said. "We will demand that everything be explained ... about the reasons, conditions and culprits of this shameful act."

He also appealed for calm, asking that prayers be said following all Roman Catholic Masses in the Warsaw diocese for "saving" the priest and "for peace in the fatherland."

Popieluszko was kidnapped Friday night on a highway in northern Poland by a group of unidentified men, one of whom was wearing a police uniform, according to the priest's driver, Waldemar Chrostowski. He said they pulled the car over under the pretext of administering a sobriety test.

The driver said he was forced into the kidnappers' car and he believed Popieluszko was put in the trunk. Chrostowski said he escaped by jumping out of the car.

Urban said Chrostowski identified the Interior Ministry employee's car Wednesday night as "similar or identical to the one in which he was carried." The news agency PAP also reported that two militiamen from the Baltic port of Gdansk were arrested for providing "information on Poland's security" to "underground structures."

The report did not indicate whether the underground was affiliated with Solidarity, the outlawed trade union; whether the arrests were connected to the investigation into Popieluszko's kidnapping; or some other organization was involved.

Arrest of the Interior Ministry employee came as Solidarity leader Lech Walesa and Solidarity's underground leadership issued a statement condemning the Polish police.

"A state in which law and order is commonly broken, in which security forces serve only the interests of the authorities and are not submitted to any social control" may lead to "unpredictable results," said the statement which was issued Wednesday.

The Solidarity statement said Communist authorities bear responsibility for the priest's abduction.

Polls Say Reagan Maintaining Lead

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two new public opinion polls suggest President Reagan is maintaining or even expanding an already big lead over challenger Walter Mondale with less than two weeks left in the 1984 campaign.

Mondale, declining comment, says ideas, not polls, are the issue, while his own pollster says the challenge is to convert "weak Reagan voters" in the short time remaining.

In new figures announced Wednesday:

—An ABC News-Washington Post poll said Reagan is leading Mondale by 12 percentage points, 54 percent to 42 percent, the same margin as last week before the second presidential debate.

—A new Harris Survey showed Reagan leading 56 percent to 42 percent, an increase over last week's 9-point margin in the same poll.

Mondale, asked about such figures, said Wednesday, "I'm announcing a new plan tonight. I'm not going to comment on any polls between now and the election. The question is not polls, the question is ideas, the question is of the future and of who can best lead us forward."

His pollster, Peter D. Hart, said his own polling results were "similar to the ABC-Post numbers." He added that what "amazes me is the remarkable consistency in Reagan's numbers over the last five months. Our challenge remains to convert some of those weak Reagan voters, and we have less time."

Other national polls, taken before Sunday night's debate, have shown Reagan with about the same or even bigger leads.

Gas Sales Cut

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Mexico has announced that it has suspended its sales of natural gas to the United States because of lower demand and an expected drop in prices.

A statement from Pemex, the state oil monopoly, confirmed an earlier report Wednesday by the Houston-based Border Gas Inc. that it would halt its purchases of Mexican natural gas on Nov. 1.

Mario Ramon Beteta, the general director of Pemex, said Wednesday night that Mexico had decided to halt exports of natural gas to the United States because it expects prices to drop in January when the U.S. government lifts price controls on more than half of the natural gas produced in the United States.

The U.S. Department of Energy said Mexican shipments accounted for just 0.3 percent of all natural gas consumption in the United States in the first eight months of this year.

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market was mixed again today, still stuck in neutral after the indecisive showings of the past several sessions.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials dropped 2.43 to 1,214.00 in the first half hour.

Gainers and losers were evenly balanced in the early tally of New York Stock Exchange-listed issues.

Interest rates have declined substantially in recent days, reducing the competitive appeal of bonds, bank certificates of deposit and other interest-bearing investments in comparison to stocks.

The news on inflation has been upbeat as well. The consumer price index rose a moderate 0.4 percent in September.

But the stock market has been unresponsive to such news since it staged a strong but brief rally a week ago.

Analysts say investors remain concerned that the recent slowing of the economy might be the precursor of a significant business slump in the months ahead.

Dun & Bradstreet Corp. said a survey of more than 1,400 business executives found a decline in optimism among those officials for the first time in more than two years.

Chrysler rose 1/4 to 31 1/2. On Wednesday the company reported record third-quarter earnings.

Among today's other volume leaders, Eastman Kodak dropped 1 1/4 to 71; General Mills fell 1/4 to 57 1/2; American Home Products lost 1/4 to 49 1/2, and Southern Co. was unchanged at 18 1/4.

On Wednesday the Dow Jones industrial average rose 3.42 to 1,216.43.

But declines slightly outnumbered advances on the NYSE.

Big Board volume totaled 91.62 million shares, against 92.26 million in the previous session.

The NYSE's composite index gained .02 to 96.40. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was up .59 at 210.41.

Innovative Projects

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — Class projects are common nowadays, but they were rather innovative eight decades ago when education stressed basic skills. Surprisingly, therefore, the Trinity College project involved a community survey titled "Art in Negro Homes."

Under the direction of sociology professor Jerome Dowd, three young men — James Robert Poole of Chapel's Mill, Augustus Joseph Rosser of Jonesboro and John Council Wooten of Speight's Bridge — spread out through the black settlement of Durham called Hayti.

Their object was to inventory the art and literature of 25 homes of blacks. Their report was published by Dowd three years later in the "Southern Workman."

After describing the buildings and their setting, the article summarized the group's findings in terms of objects of art and literature. For instance, five homes had an organ and one a piano, but not a single banjo or fiddle was found.

All but one of the homes had one or more pictures on the wall, most of them of a religious nature. There were, however, pictures of noted men, among them — not surprisingly — Abraham Lincoln, Fredrick Douglass, William McKinley, Booker T. Washington and Bishop James W. Hood. There was only one portrait of George Washington.

Resignation In Payoffs

BONN, West Germany (AP) — Rainer Barzel, president of the West German Parliament, resigned today following allegations that he accepted $566,000 in payoffs from the Flick industrial concern.

Alfred Dregger, parliamentary leader of Barzel's Christian Democratic Union party, officially announced the resignation at a special caucus of the party's members in Bonn.

Party officials had earlier leaked word of the resignation after an emergency meeting of the party leadership, including Chancellor Helmut Kohl.

Barzel once led the Christian Democratic Union and was the party's candidate for chancellor in 1972. He was defeated by Willy Brandt of the Social Democratic Party. He later resigned as head of the party, but made a comeback in 1983 when he was named president of the Bundestag, the lower house of Parliament.

Barzel's resignation letter said political and psychological pressures on him had become "unbearable" and that Parliament should select a new president so that it could resume normal duties, Dregger told reporters. Barzel has denied taking any payoffs.

The letter also was read at a caucus of the centrist Free Democratic Party, the Christian Democrats' junior coalition partner in the government.

The 60-year-old Barzel did not immediately release any statement to the press, and it was not clear whether he would retain the Bundestag seat he has held since 1957.

"Mr. Barzel is sick, and I cannot imagine that he will make a statement soon," a spokeswoman at his office said.

Barzel did not attend today's leadership meeting.

Barzel underwent four hours of questioning by a parliamentary subcommittee Wednesday about a prosecutor's document that says he received $566,000 from Flick, a Duesseldorf holding company, and that the money was laundered through a Frankfurt legal firm for which he worked between 1973 and 1982.

Although Barzel is not suspected of breaking the law, the committee is investigating how much influence Flick may have been able to buy in Bonn over the years through cash payoffs to all political parties.

Flick obtained a $150 million tax break from the Bonn government in the 1970s. The Bonn prosecutor has charged two former economics ministers with corruption and former Flick manager Eberhard von Brauchitsch with bribing them to get the tax break.

Barzel denied he had ever tried to influence the government on Flick's behalf. He confirmed that Flick had been a client of the Frankfurt legal firm he worked for, but said there was no connection between the fees paid by Flick to the legal firm and the salary he received.

The legal firm where Barzel worked is headed by lawyer Albert Paul, who in 1974 became Flick's top economic and tax adviser.

Barzel, 60, read a long list of legal topics he said he had worked on for Paul. But when asked if he was prepared to present the committee with proof of his work, he said that would be up to Paul.

Under questioning by Greens deputy Otto Schily, Barzel said he did not know where he could find his working contract with the legal firm, although he said he had had it in front of him when he prepared the opening statement he made to the committee Wednesday.

Rose Hosts Unbeaten Fike Club

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

With a healthy team, Rose High School might be going into Friday's Homecoming game unbeaten, and the result could be to decide the Big East Conference football championship for 1984.

But what might have been is not. Instead key injuries have reduced the Rampants to less than even an also-ran, mired in the basement of the league with three games left to play.

Meanwhile, this week's opponent, Wilson Fike, comes in with a perfect record and a firm grip on second place both in the Associated Press and Daily Reflector prep rankings.

The Golden Demons have been in high gear since the season opener, when they rolled to a 27-0 victory over Goldsboro. That was followed by a 42-6 romp over Athens Drive and a 21-14 win over Garner.

Since those non-conference games, Fike has continued on without a blemish, winning four league contests. They downed pre-season favorite Northeastern — on the road — 19-7, and then rolled over Kinston, 40-6. That was followed by a 21-14 win over Hunt and a 33-6 run past Beddingfield.

Now only Rose, Northern Nash and Rocky Mount stand in the way of the Demons on their quest for a perfect season and a second straight Big East Championship.

The Demons have been strong both on offense and defense, and Rose Coach Chip Williams says that he's really not sure how the Rampants can attack them.

"There's only so much you can do when you take the pass away," he said. "And that's what we look for them to concentrate on."

Rose, since a third-game injury to sophomore tailback Anthony Cobb, hasn't been able to put together any kind of a running game. Cobb, through three games, rushed for 463 yards. Only one other back, Tom Moore, has rushed for more than 100, and he, too, has played in but three games. Most of his yardage, too, came prior to his injury when Cobb was in the backfield with him. Together, they account for nearly all of the Rampant rushing on the year. Since Cobb's injury, Rose has not rushed for 100 yards in any one game.

Too, Rose has not scored a rushing touchdown since Cobb's injury either.

That's put a great deal of pressure on the passing game, and to some extent, it has come through. The Rampants, however, were shut out against Rocky Mount before going to a double wing formation to open the attack more. Against Kinston, Rose ran a number of reverses, yet the longest run from scrimmage since Cobb's injury was a 19-yarder by wingback Clay Young.

And Cobb still remains in limbo, recovering from strained ligaments in his knee. A brace has been ordered for him, but has not yet arrived. And even then, Williams says now he doesn't think he'll return this season — and if he does, he won't be the same Cobb as in the first three games.

"Last week (against Kinston), we saw some holes the line was making, but our backs are still not running to them, or if they are, they are still making a misread. For instance, on the first misdirection play (reverse), we had a wall to the outside, but the back ran inside instead.

"This week is going to be a real challenge for us, but I'm wondering if the Kinston game didn't take too much out of us and if we'll recover. We came so close to winning."

Kinston and Rose both scored on long pass plays late in the game to force a 20-20 tie at the end of regulation play. Both teams kicked field goals in the first overtime and Rose had taken a 26-23 lead on another field goal in the second overtime.

Kinston, facing third and goal from the 16 on its series, saw quarterback Junior Simms scramble around in an attempt to pass, then throw an incompletion. Rose was called for pass interference, giving Kinston a first and goal from the eight. Simms scored on a roll-out on the next play.

The Rampant coaching staff questioned the officials on whether Simms was over the line when he threw the ball, but nothing was called. Films of the game showed Simms was, indeed, past the line when he threw the ball — thus an illegal pass. That would have nullified the pass interference call, been a loss of down and left Kinston facing fourth and at least 19.

"It just took a lot out of us to lose that way," Williams said. "But that didn't worry me nearly as much as not scoring a touchdown when we had second and goal from the one (on Rose's second series). I think we called the safest play (quarterback sneak), and I think we would have scored on the second play had not the center snapped the ball early." That resulted in a procedure penalty, setting up the field goal. "He (the center) was just overanxious to make his block," the coach said.

"Also, what bothers me is that we still are giving up the big play, letting them score there at the end to take the lead again. The big play has been our Achilles' heel. Also, when we get close, we're not putting the ball into the end zone. Those are two

Bubba Bunn Overcomes Adversity To Be Winner

By JIMMY DuPREE
Reflector Sports Writer

When East Carolina found itself mired in a scoreless deadlock in the second quarter Saturday against NCAA Division I-AA East Tennessee State, the impatient Homecoming crowd was anxious to see an indication that the Pirates could salvage something of what had proved a disappointing — if not embarrassing — 1-6 start.

Bubba Bunn was that indication.

Bunn came off the bench to replace hobbled fullback Anthony Simpson and finished with 161 yards rushing with two touchdowns — including a 42-yard run late in the fourth quarter for the Pirates' longest TD run of the season.

"It was 'Bubba Bunn Week' except for two fumbles and we threatened his life on those," ECU Coach Ed Emory said. "Bubba is a great example of why you should not give up on a player."

It was a winding path brought Bunn to the limelight of Saturday's game — a path that included two years away from the ECU squad after a promising freshman season.

As a freshman in 1981, Bunn rushed 21 times for 100 yards in the Pirate wishbone attack playing behind tailbacks Harold Blue — now with now with the USFL Arizona Wranglers — and current ECU starter Jimmy Walden.

Bunn sat out the 1982 campaign in Goldsboro but returned to the ECU campus in the spring of 1983 with hopes of returning to the squad. But after regaining a spot on the team,

Some people never get a chance to find out what their capabilities are, and others don't know what to do when they get the opportunity.

— Anonymous

academic deficiencies which began in Bunn's freshman year caught up with the Goldsboro native.

"Last year, I pulled myself up — but not enough," Bunn said. "I went home again to gain. I guess you would say, maturity. My momma told me to stick with it; to finish what I had started."

Bunn returned to East Carolina for the second session of summer school in July and established a sufficient grade point average to return in the fall.

"My grades are fine now, and they will stay that way — I promise!" Bunn declared with satisfaction. "It wasn't that I couldn't do the work, it's just that I got down on myself about football and let that affect my schoolwork."

"I tended to do things you shouldn't do while you're in school. You have to go to class; that's not just for me but for anybody in college."

"I have my priorities in order now."

But while Bunn worked with his mother at a Goldsboro restaurant, Walden and Tony Baker took control of the tailback slot in the Pirates' new "freeze-option I" offense. Bunn was relegated to third team duty, and Emory offered to move him to fullback where he may have a chance to play sooner.

Bunn declined the offer in the spring and again in the fall. But when starting fullback Reggie Branch and reserves Bobby Clair and Simpson suffered ankle injuries, Bunn asked the coaches if they would give him a chance at fullback.

His performance against East Tennessee earned "King of the Gridiron" honors selected by the media covering the game, but Bunn is realistic about his role with the Pirates.

Branch returned to practice Monday running "to tolerance."

"Reggie's the starting fullback," Bunn said after the game. "When he's healthy, he'll play. He's a senior and has worked hard and played well. Reggie is a much better blocker than I am; running always came easy for me — it was natural."

"I'd rather played tailback, but if I can help out at fullback that's where I want to play. But there are other things more important."

Bunn has decided to major in corrections, a decision influenced by his background.

"My mother raised five kids as a single parent," Bunn said. "We always had a lot of time on our hands. If I can help a young person and keep him out of trouble, then my life will be all right."

What compliment would be the most satisfying to Bubba Bunn?

"For someone to tell me I wasn't a quitter; that I never gave up, and I was always in the fight."

Whether it's on the football field or in the classroom, Bubba Bunn's made himself a winner through perseverance.

Williams Has No-Hit Victory

HAVANA — Former Rose High School hurler Roger Williams tossed a no-hitter at Taiwan in the World Amateur Baseball Championships last night. The tournament, involving teams from 16 countries, is now going on in Havana.

Williams, a junior at the University of North Carolina, made his second start in the tournament. He threw a one-hitter last week against the Dominican Republic. In that game, he had a no-hitter for eight and a third innings.

The United States is now 2-0 in medal round play, along with the hosting Cuban team, the only other unbeaten team. The United States and Cuba are expected to meet on Sunday, and there is a possibility that Williams may get the nod for that game.

Florida Hopes To Erase 1 Year

GAINESVILLE, Fla. (AP) — Firing former Coach Charley Pell was not the only corrective action initiated by the University of Florida in an effort to clean up its football program and impress upon NCAA investigators that the Gators intend to play by the rules in the future.

The NCAA, in a 16-page confidential report received by the Southeastern Conference school this week, cited several reasons why its Committee on Infractions has recommended the final year of a three-year probation be suspended.

The suspension is contingent upon

Florida complying with terms set forth for the first two years of the penalty — which includes a ban on post-season and live television appearances as well as loss of scholarships — and passing on "on-site inspection" of the program after the second year of probation.

Still, there were many who felt the National Collegiate Athletic Association was too harsh, despite finding 59 violations of various rules that occurred during Pell's five-year tenure.

"Apparently, we got nothing for cooperating," one person close to the investigation told the Tampa Tribune. "The truth is they haven't hit anyone any harder than they hit us."

University President Marshall Criser, who replaced Robert Marston on Sept. 1 and inherited the probe as it entered its final stages, led the crusade to show that Florida wanted to put its program back on the right track.

He fired Pell on Sept. 16, three weeks after the ex-coach had submitted his resignation while at the same time asking to remain in his job until the end of the 1984 season.

Galen Hall, an assistant at Oklahoma for 18 years before coming to Florida as offensive coordinator this year, was named interim coach and has led the Gators to a 4-0 record after a 1-1-1 start under Pell.

Other corrective action included plans to terminate two long-time Pell assistants, Joe Kines and Dwight Adams, after this season and revamping the administrative structure of the athletic program.

Criser said last month that a number of violations occurred because the football program had become "a power unto itself" and Pell had been allowed to run it without outside supervision.

The department has since been restructured to make the head football coach directly responsible to Athletic Director Bill Carr, whom Criser also asked to draw up a set of recruiting and program-operation guidelines that all Florida coaches will be required to follow.

The NCAA, meanwhile, noted in its report that the school had taken action to disassociate the athletic program from seven boosters and had sent letters to 12 others "strongly urging them to take every precaution to avoid even minor violations of NCAA rules."

Still other "remedial actions that have or will be taken by the university," and cited by the NCAA included:

—Adoption of a complimentary ticket policy more strict than NCAA legislation requires.

—Tightening procedures to ensure control over athletic department vouchers.

—Placing the athletic dormitory and dining room under the control of the business office rather than the coaching staff.

—Giving the athletic director and faculty athletics representative more clearly defined responsibilities to ensure proper monitoring of the athletic program.

Meanwhile, there was no word Wednesday on whether Criser plans to appeal the penalty proposed Tuesday by the Committee on Infractions.

Florida has until Nov. 7 to make a decision and could delay the sanctions until the NCAA hears its appeal in January 1985. That would mean the 1984 team could remain eligible to be in a postseason game.

The 5-1-1 Gators have made four straight bowl appearances and are hoping for their first SEC title ever, an achievement that would give the team a berth in the Sugar Bowl.

However, SEC Commissioner Boyd McWhorter said by telephone from Birmingham, Ala., that appealing the NCAA action would not automatically assure Florida's eligibility to win the SEC crown.

McWhorter said the conference executive committee has the authority to impose additional sanctions on league members slapped with NCAA probation. However, he emphasized that he was not suggesting the SEC planned to do so in the Florida case.

One option open to the committee, McWhorter acknowledged, would be to place the Gators on probation within the SEC immediately — before the NCAA council considers any appeal.

Octoberun Set For Saturday

The Third Annual Greater Greenville Octoberun will be held Saturday, starting in the parking lot behind Carolina East Mall.

A two-mile fun run will be held at 9 a.m., with a ten-kilometer event getting underway at 9:30 a.m.

The route of the 10-K event goes out of the mall's rear parking lot, onto Highway 11 and to Reedy Branch Church Road to Route 903 and then back to the mall parking lot.

The two mile run will begin at the same spot, to the corner of Highway 11 and Reedy Branch Church Road and back.

The Octoberun is open to all runners over 12 years old and carries a $5 entry fee, if paid in advance. On race day, the entry fee is $6. The fun run is open to all ages and carries a $4 entry fee.

Both runs are sanctioned by the N.C. Association of Athletics Congress of the U.S.A.

For the Octoberun, age group competition will be held by sexes, including 12-19, 20-29, 30-39, and over 40.

Registration may be done at Belk-Tyler at Carolina East Mall, sponsor of the event. Mail registration and checks may be sent to Octoberun, Att. Pete Hambidge, Belk-Tyler Co., Carolina East Mall, Greenville, N.C. 27834.

Entrants will receive a race packet with Octoberun T-shirt and competitors number when they register, while mail entrants may pick up their packets between 7:30 and 8:30 a.m. on race day.

The overall winner will receive a pair of Converse running shoes. Prizes will also be awarded to the top three winners in each age/sex group. Prizes will be awarded to the first place male and female over 20 years old and under 20 years old in the fun run.

For further information contact Pete Hambidge at Belk-Tyler.

TV Director Knows Route Better Than The Runners

By TERRY TAYLOR
AP Sports Writer

Craig Janoff has driven over the New York City Marathon course more times than he can count.

He knows the merger points, where the crowds thicken, where the road inclines.

Janoff has made it his business to understand every dip and curve of the 26.2-mile course that winds through the city's five boroughs — Staten Island, Brooklyn, Queens, Manhattan and the Bronx.

A runner? No. A television director. Janoff, 35, has called the shots during ABC's start-to-finish coverage of the marathon since it began its live presentation in 1981. This year's marathon, which goes off Sunday at 10:30 a.m. EDT, will be Janoff's fourth as director, and he hopes, the best so far.

"This year, production comes of age," he said of the only annual marathon that is covered live in its entirety on network TV. "This will be our best effort as far as production, barring a disaster with the weather."

Last year it rained, one of the worst things that can happen as far as Janoff is concerned.

The National Weather Service forecast partly cloudy skies and temperatures in the 70s for race day.

"We need it to get cold. Cooler air would blow out a lot of the haze," Janoff said.

Rain or shine, viewers will see a field of 18,365 — the largest ever for a U.S. marathon — up close and at a distance through the eyes of 28 cameras.

One is attached to a stanchion on the Verrazano-Narrows Bridge, where the race begins. Others sit atop a high-rise apartment complex, Veterans Hospital and the Williamsburg Bank building in Brooklyn; along the East River at Sutton Place; along First Avenue; and atop a high-rise in the Bronx; and the Mount Sinai complex on Fifth Avenue for an overview of Central Park, where the race ends.

There are more cameras — aboard helicopters, attached to vans and ladder trucks and hand-held by cameramen on the street and on motorcycles.

Not only will they show bobbing heads and pounding feet, but — again weather permitting — one of the true stars of the 15-year-old event: New York City.

"We have a couple of cameras that we use specifically for beauty shots. Helicopters do most of those shots. But if it's a hazy day and we can't use the 'copters, we have other cameras as backups for views of New York."

"After all, she's part of the race," Janoff said.

There are many parts to this race, and producer Curt Gowdy Jr. knows it.

Cameras, of course, will keep up with both the men's and women's leaders throughout the race. The event, after all, comes down to two people — the men's and women's winners.

"But in addition what we're attempting to do is place more emphasis on the back-of-the-pack human interest stories," said

Gowdy, who, after producing both the men's and women's Olympic marathon trials this year, is working on his first New York City Marathon.

"What's so great about this marathon is that we have leading runners from all over the world and just ordinary people."

Woven into the telecast, he said, will be topical features such as runners in their first marathon; marathons as big business; medicine and running; and pre-recorded interviews with some of the better known names in the race, such as defending champions Rod Dixon and Grete Waitz.

Gowdy calls the marathon "one of the more expensive shows we do," but declined to say exactly how much it costs to produce.

No Choice In Breakers' Move

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — New Orleans Breakers owner Joe Canizaro says it looks like the United States Football League team has "no choice" but to relocate, saying "we're going to make way for the (New Orleans) Saints and move on to another area."

Breakers' officials say they are mailing refunds to season-ticket holders.

Canizaro said Wednesday, "It seems as as though we have no choice at this point ... excepting a miracle. We'll need to move and or merge."

He added: "We, a long time ago, said we wouldn't compete heads up with the Saints. The Saints have been here a long time, and we don't think the market can handle two teams, and the Saints were here first.

"So we're going to make way for the Saints, and move on to another area."

Canizaro said the "miracle" would be for the National Football League Saints to move out of New Orleans.

Canizaro said selling the Breakers to Portland, Ore., investors "looks as though that's probably our most likely move."

Uncertainty concerning the Breakers future in New Orleans stems from the USFL's vote two months ago to switch from a spring and summer format to a fall season, setting up a confrontation with the rival National Football League.

"I wanted to have a team in New Orleans and it doesn't look like that's possible," Canizaro said Tuesday night, confirming for the first time that a sale was possible.

"If a deal can be done, I'll sell it all. If I have to maintain part ownership, I'll do it."

Canizaro has said repeatedly he didn't want to challenge the NFL New Orleans Saints or the Louisiana Superdome, which has refused fall dates for the Breakers in the indoor stadium.

He said Breakers' representatives have talked to Portland Mayor Frank Ivancie about leasing the 30,000-seat Civic Stadium, and planned to talk with a group of Portland investors later this week.

Ivancie said earlier: "Some of his people have talked with us about the stadium ... They talked to us a couple of weeks ago."

He said he didn't know the investors considering buying the team, "but we'd be willing to listen to anything realistic" on leasing the stadium.

Canizaro, a real estate developer, bought the Breakers last December for $8 million, moving the team from Boston. But he said the investment soured.

"I got into pro football because I thought it could be an economically sound proposition," he said. "Now it doesn't look that way for this city for a lot of reasons."

"I guess if nothing changes that it has been a waste of time, energy and money," he added.

things we've got to correct against Fike if we want to have any chance to win. We have to execute well. It's a challenge, but I love a challenge. I just hope the kids love one. And I guess it's somewhat my responsibility to make sure they do."

Williams said the big key for Fike has been the fact that they've stayed healthy this year. They've also gotten good yardage from Greene Central transfer Anthony Thompson, who is their leading rusher and also plays inside linebacker on defense.

"I don't really think he comes out. He goes all the way," Williams said.

Fike is a ground oriented team, according to Williams, but they can throw well. "They have a good tight end in Earnest Williams and a good split end in Archie Pender. Both have caught the ball well." The Fike quarterback is Mark Silverthorn, who likes to roll out and throw.

"Their defense is not big but quick. They've had the best defensive team in the conference so far in terms of points allowed, and one of the big reasons is that their offense is controlling the ball so well."

Fike may be number two in the state, but Williams warns that teams come up and beat the number one and two teams, year-after-year. "I just hope that we're up to the challenge."

Kickoff in Ficklen Stadium is at 8 p.m. Friday night.

Trammell Hasn't Forgotten Youth

By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer

There is no loyalty like the loyalty of an 11-year-old baseball fan.

And so, on the day he was honored as the World Series' Most Valuable Player, Alan Trammell remembered Jose Arcia ... and Nate Colbert and Downtown Ollie Brown and Cito Gaston — all vital cogs in the operation of the expansion San Diego Padres.

In 1969 the Padres were admitted to the National League along with the Montreal Expos, an idea that absolutely enchanted 11-year-old Alan Trammell, who spent all of his idle time at the ballpark.

The Padres weren't very good in those early years. In fact, they were pretty bad. They lost no fewer than 95 games in each of their first six seasons. Alan Trammell, however, was hardly disturbed by those details. San Diego was his town and the Padres were his team and that was all that mattered.

"They weren't that good, I guess, never contenders," Trammell said after picking up the MVP Trophy at a ceremony in New York. "But I rooted for them. I snuck into the park and hounded the players for bats and balls. I'll never forget guys like Jose Arcia and the others."

Arcia was a nondescript Cuban infielder who played just three major league seasons and batted an

In the 9-11 flight, first was won by Dick Reddick, 75-9-55; second by Al Piland, 77-10-67, and third by Orren Babcock, 80-10-70. The 12-14 flight was won by Tommy Jordan, 80-14-66, with Gary Sumrell, 79-12-67, taking second. Third went to Gene Hemby, 81-13-68.

The 15-and-up flight was won by Cecil Hinnant, 83-16-67, followed by Bruce Wade, 87-15-72 and Thomas Butts, 97-22-75.

Patriots Fire Ron Meyer

FOXBORO, Mass. (AP) — Ron Meyer was fired this morning as coach of the New England Patriots and will be replaced immediately by former Baltimore Colts receiver Raymond Barry, a former assistant coach of the football team, Patriots spokesman Tom Hoffman said.

A news conference was scheduled for 11:30 a.m. to formally announce the action.

Barry, a member of the NFL Hall of Fame since 1973, was an assistant coach for the Patriots from 1978 to 1981. He earned his place in the Hall of Fame as a receiver for 13 years with the Baltimore Colts.

Meyer was hired as head coach in 1982, replacing Ron Erhardt.

Meyer's firing came the day after the coach stunned his team and defensive coordinator, Rod Rust, by firing the popular assistant in an unexpected move, citing "unreconcilable differences" in defensive philosophies.

It was not immediately clear if Meyer's unilateral decision had any bearing on his own ouster. Meyer said Wednesday that he had not discussed his move with General Manager Pat Sullivan or Player Development Director Dick Steinberg.

Meyer said he told Sullivan of his decision Wednesday morning and Sullivan interrupted his trip to National Football League meetings in New Orleans and rushed back to meet with Meyer Wednesday night. Sullivan refused comment at that time.

The firings of Rust and Meyer follows Sunday's 44-24 loss to Miami, which dropped the Patriots' ranking to 5-3.

The move also came 19 days after Sullivan met with players who spent part of the session complaining about Meyer. On Wednesday, players flocked to the defense of Rust, praising him as a coach and a person.

Meyer came to the Patriots after six years as head coach of Southern Methodist University, where he had turned a losing program into a consistent winner. He orchestrated a similar turnaround in his three years as head coach of Nevada-Las Vegas from 1973-1975.

In his first season with the Patriots, Meyer assumed control of a team that had gone 2-14 the previous year and led them into the playoffs with a 5-4 record in a strike-shortened season.

New England was 8-8 last year and was eliminated from playoff contention on the final day of the regular season.

Former East Carolina running back Tony Collins had been a starter for the Patriots until several weeks ago when he complained about the one-back offense used by Meyer. Since then, he has seen little action and has not started.

Maryland Has Chance To Open Up Its ACC Lead

By TOM FOREMAN Jr.
AP Sports Writer

With Virginia taking the weekend off, Maryland has a chance to take a more comfortable lead in the Atlantic Coast Conference football title chase as the Terrapins travel to Duke.

Maryland's record evened out at 3-3 two weeks ago when it downed North Carolina State. That victory raised the Terrapin conference record to 2-0, while Virginia's tie with Georgia Tech that same weekend dropped them to 1-0-1 before last Saturday's victory over Wake Forest.

In other action Saturday, Clemson, 4-2, visits North Carolina State, 3-4 and 1-3. Georgia Tech, 3-2-1, meets Tennessee, Wake Forest, 4-3, is at home to William & Mary and North Carolina, 2-4, is at Memphis State.

Although Frank Reich has been cleared for action, Coach Bobby Ross says Stan Gelbaugh will start against the Blue Devils. In replacing Reich, Gelbaugh has hit 44 of 80 passes for 612 yards. He helped produce the victory over the Wolfpack and nearly pulled off an upset of Penn State.

"We'd really like to play both quarterbacks Saturday," Ross said, "but we'd like to establish our starter early in the week, and we feel Stan is healthier at this time."

Health is something Duke could use plenty of. Although Coach Steve Sloan announced that tailback Julius Grantham would be ready for the Terrapins, quarterback Ron Sally and wide receiver Doug Green will be out for the rest of the season.

"But getting Julius back will mean a lot to our offense," Sloan said. "I think we showed some signs of jelling at Clemson and this should only help us in that regard."

Clemson ran up a 41-0 halftime edge on the Blue Devils, but Coach Danny Ford isn't expecting the same this weekend as the Wolfpack tries to bounce back from a loss at North Carolina.

"You can look at last year's film and see that N.C. State whipped us up front," Ford said. "They have two or three guys in their offensive line who are capable of being first team all-conference and they hurt us last season."

N.C. State absorbed a 27-17 loss and Coach Tom Reed is concerned about the Tiger defense, much of which contributed to that defeat.

"William Perry is practically a whole defense within himself," Reed said of the Clemson nose guard. "He just raises havoc, but I don't want to slight any of their players."

"To sum it up, Clemson is a very, very talented football team, head and shoulders above anybody else we've faced," Reed added.

Meeting Tennessee will mark the third contest between the Yellow Jackets and a Southeastern Conference opponent. After shocking Alabama in the season opener, Auburn raced away with a 48-34 victory last weekend.

William & Mary enters this week's action tied for 18th in the latest NCAA Division I-AA poll. It was the Indian passing attack that got them into the poll and Coach Al Groh has warned his team to expect more of the same.

"Our secondary had a lot of activity last season with some of the quarterbacks in the league," Groh said. "But William & Mary brings in an excellent passing scheme, one of the most creative we have seen all year."

North Carolina broke a two-game losing streak with a victory over the Wolfpack, thanks in large part to sophomore William Humes, who rushed for 156 yards and three touchdowns, including the game-winner. Senior Ethan Horton rushed for 112 yards and Coach Dick Crum isn't sure just how he'll use the duo.

"I don't really plan to make a decision on whether to alternate Ethan and William," Crum said. "I am sure, based on their past performances, they will both play a lot."

Crum said Memphis State's 5-1-1 record will give the Tigers more of a reason to avenge last season's 24-10 loss at Chapel Hill, the first time the teams had ever met.

"They are pretty much in the bowl pictures," Crum said, "and that will give them more incentive."

Blue Devils Learning About Heat They're Going To Face

By TOM FOREMAN Jr.
AP Sports Writer

It's been so hot in Cameron Indoor Stadium that Duke basketball coach Mike Krzyzewski has had to change his pre-season practice sessions, just an example of the heat the Blue Devils will encounter for this Atlantic Coast Conference season.

The unusually warm October has raised the humidity inside the arena and Krzyzewski said it has caused problems.

"It's been amazing," Krzyzewski said. "The floor keeps getting wet. We can't keep it dry. We've had to adjust our practices because of it."

"Every step Todd Anderson took, he squirted out sweat," he continued. "His shoes were completely soaked. It's amazing how hard they're working. I'm very pleased with the way our young men have worked."

Krzyzewski has most of the performers that reached the finals of the ACC tournament and into the first round of the NCAA tournament, where the Blue Devils lost to Washington. While the season is about one month away, there has been talk that Duke could be among the top teams in the nation.

"My first reaction to that is that it's nice to see Duke ranked so high — in anything — so I like that to begin with," Krzyzewski said. "Secondly, I know that is a rating ... based on what you think is going to happen. The people who are making those ratings ... don't know my team as well as I do."

"I think we can be in the thick of things all season. Just how we handle that stuff will be a key point," he added.

Duke is held in high esteem by the experts because of the returning backcourt of junior Johnny Dawkins and sophomore Tommy Amaker. Dawkins contended with North Carolina's Michael Jordan for the ACC scoring title, finishing second with 19.4 points per game. Amaker overcame his inexperience and passed out 163 assists, 25 ahead of Dawkins.

Along the front line, Mark Alarie, Jay Bilas and Dan Meagher are back. Alarie, a junior, was the most productive of the three with 17.5 points per game and 7.2 rebounds a contest. The 6-foot-7 Meagher, a senior who played on the Canadian Olympic basketball squad, was Duke's enforcer, willing to swing elbows with anyone regardless of size.

David Henderson was the team's sixth man, but his effort was of starting-five caliber. The 6-5 junior forward averaged 13.5 points and 3.3 rebounds and added 76 assists.

With the addition of freshman Billy King and Kevin Strickland, Krzyzewski thinks he can alter his strategy from last year, when lack of depth was a major factor.

"The main thing is that we'll be able to play the way we want for 40 minutes. At times last year, because of foul trouble or just being tired, we had to change some things offensively and defensively to get over those two obstacles," Krzyzewski said. "This year, maybe by playing a few more people, we'll be able to stay at a higher level of performance both offensively and defensively."

Also helping Duke, Krzyzewski said, is the spirit of togetherness which is a carryover from the post-season trip last March.

"Anybody who watched us play last year knows, when or lose, that Duke is a close-knit group," he said. "They worked hard and they had fun playing. I hope we're the same team."

Radio-Equipped Helmets May Get Exhibition Tryout

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — The National Football League may try out radio-equipped helmets to help quarterbacks communicate with wide receivers in noisy stadiums, Commissioner Pete Rozelle says.

He said the league may experiment with such helmets during the 1985 preseason games.

The proposal for radio-equipped helmets was made by the Competition Committee at the urging of players concerned over penalties and blown signals because of problems hearing the quarterback, he said.

"We'll have a demonstration at our March meeting," Rozelle said Wednesday as NFL owners wound up their two-day fall meeting in New Orleans.

"We don't want to curb the enthusiasm of our crowds, but when you get the wave going it gets pretty hard to hear out there," Rozelle said.

"It's a competitive disadvantage for the teams — especially the visiting team, because it seems to happen most often when they have the ball," he said.

He said it was suggested that quarterbacks might be able to give directions to receivers downfield, steering them to open areas via their radio hookup.

He said the Competition Committee considered that. "They felt it would be pretty hard to do in 4.5 seconds," he said.

It's been tried before, he said. About 30 years ago, Paul Brown, then of the Cleveland Browns, wired his quarterback to receive instructions from the sidelines. That was ruled out the next year, Rozelle said.

He said the committee also had considered the possibility that teams might steal signals and jam radio frequencies, but the owners still felt it's worth making the experiment.

Another type of stolen signals also came up for discussion, he said — pirating satellite relays of league games for showing in commercial establishments.

He said NFL security investigators will spot check bars and restaurants and remind pirates that Congress recently enacted a law making it illegal to steal satellite signals.

The owners voted to standardize Super Bowl rings, he said, putting a $3,000 limit on the cost and setting certain standards for diamonds and gold to be used in them, he said.

"It's just a case of trying to eliminate one-upmanship," Rozelle said.

A rough draft of a preseason schedule was put together Wednesday, he said, with the possibility that one of the exhibition games will be played in either Germany or England.

Brad Bryant Is Another Focus Of Golf Attention

PENSACOLA, Fla. (AP) — Tom Watson is the target for the men who are struggling for some of golf's most prestigious honors this week in the season-concluding $300,000 Pensacola Open.

But, while Denis Watson, Andy Bean and Mark O'Meara are involved in the last-gasp race for such honors as leading money-winner, the Vardon Trophy and Player of the Year, there's another, equally-intense struggle in progress.

He's No. 125 on the year's money-winning list. And, that's the cutoff position for touring pros to retain their full playing rights for next year. It's a simple formula: complete the year in the top 125 and your playing rights are assured. Finish below that position and it's a choice between dropping off the Tour or returning to the qualifying school.

The key figures in that race are Tommy Valentine (No. 123, with $39,850), Brett Upper (No. 124, $36,849), Bryant (No. 125, $36,805), Bill Sander (No. 128, $35,697) and Steve Liebler (No. 130, $35,172).

Depending on their performances in the tournament that began today — the last event on the 10-month PGA Tour schedule — three of them will make it and be eligible to play next year. Two will drop out.

At the other end of the golfing spectrum, Mark O'Meara has an opportunity to win all three of the major seasonal honors. He leads in none of them, but has an outside chance of winning all three.

Tom Watson, who is not competing in this event, leads the money-winning race with $476,260. O'Meara is second with $465,873.

Tom Watson is tied for the lead with Denis Watson in the complicated point standings that determine the Player of the Year, each with 54 points. O'Meara is next with 46. Calvin Peete, also among the missing in the 156-man field here, leads the Vardon Trophy (stroke average) race at 70.56. O'Meara, the only man with a chance to catch him, is second at 70.71.

O'Meara needs only a finish of sixth or better to overtake Tom Watson on the money-winning list. To win Player of the Year, O'Meara must win this tournament. Nothing else would do it. And, to beat Peete in stroke average, O'Meara must have a score of 266 (18 under par) or better.

Bean's only hope of taking the money-winning title is a victory here, worth $54,000.

Watson cannot win the money-title, but could clinch Player of the Year with a victory here, or any movement (there are more than a dozen possibilities) involving Tom Watson's position among the top 10 money-winners and/or the top 10 in stroke average.

"Quality Is Savings"

YOU CAN'T HAVE IT BOTH WAYS MR. TAFT!

TOM TAFT...LIBERAL, CONSERVATIVE, OR MODERATE?

On May 30, 1984, my opponent, Tom Taft, speaking to the Beaufort County Democratic Women said he was a "moderate" and even admitted he was "liberal on some issues". (Washington Daily News May 31, 1984)

Taft is passing out literature and information saying he is conservative.

TOM TAFT...A COG IN THE HUNT MACHINE

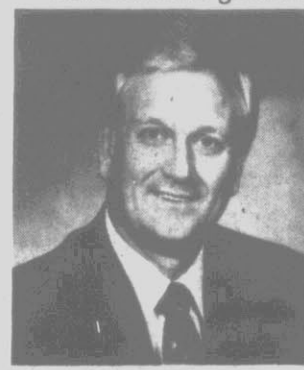

Tom Taft has long been closely allied with Jim Hunt. Taft's political resume consists almost entirely of political plums he received as a loyal foot soldier in the Hunt organization. The connection goes back to Hunt's term as Lieutenant Governor, when Taft was employed in Hunt's office. That has long been Hunt's so-called "KEY" (Key Supporter) in Pitt County.

Jim Hunt is certainly no conservative. And Tom Taft isn't either!

MAYNARD WATERS...A MAN WHO KNOWS WHERE HE STANDS

Maynard Waters doesn't have to put his finger in the air to see which way the wind is blowing to know what his political philosophy is. He is a conservative. He has always been a conservative. He aligns himself with Ronald Reagan, Jesse Helms and Jim Martin, not Walter Mondale, Jim Hunt, and Rufus Edmisten.

Let's elect a genuine conservative!

Braniff Inc. Planning Major Cutbacks In Effort To Counter Financial Woes

By CANDICE HUGHES
Associated Press Writer
DALLAS (AP) — Huge losses are forcing struggling Braniff Inc., born of the 1982 bankruptcy of its predecessor, to eliminate service to 10 cities, sell 20 of its 30 airplanes, and lay off employees, airline officials say.

In addition, Braniff president William D. Slattery has resigned, and Braniff will sell nine of its twelve gates at its home base, Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport, to rival American Airlines.

"We really have no alternative at this point but to implement these changes," Chairman Jay Pritzker and vice chairman Patrick Foley told Braniff employees Wednesday night.

The executives said Braniff has lost more than $80 million since resuming service in March. They said the austerity measures are designed to head off additional losses of $4 million to $7 million a month.

"Obviously, that level of loss cannot be sustained indefinitely by anyone, no matter how committed," Foley and Pritzker said.

They made the announcements at a hastily-called meeting of Braniff employees, many of them veterans of the 1982 bankruptcy of Braniff's predecessor, Braniff International.

The meeting at Dallas Love Field was closed to news media and the public, but copies of an announcement and a joint letter from Pritzker and Foley were obtained by The Associated Press.

The gate transfer, which Braniff officials described as a key element in their plan to save the troubled airline, raises $20.5 million in cash, officials said.

Effective Nov. 5, Braniff will suspend service to Austin, Texas; Detroit; Houston; Kansas City, Mo.; Miami; Newark, N.J.; New Orleans; Oklahoma City; Philadelphia; and San Antonio, Texas, said the statement, prepared for release today to the general public.

"We are hopeful our actions will enable Braniff to survive and succeed," the announcement said.

Braniff will reduce its fleet from 30 to 10 airplanes and reduce the work force "consistent with the overall reduction in our operations," the statement said. No specifics on the number of workers to be laid off were given.

An agreement with American will let Braniff passengers who bought tickets on or before Wednesday fly on American without paying additional charges, officials said.

Financial health has proved elusive for Braniff. Braniff International folded on May 12, 1982, under a $1 billion debt.

At that time, the airline grounded its fleet, laid off its 7,000 employees and filed for protection from creditors under Chapter 11 of the U.S. Bankruptcy Code.

A $70 million bailout by the Hyatt Hotel chain enabled a resurrected Braniff to inaugurate service out of Gate 13 at Dallas-Fort Worth International in March as a premium carrier aiming at business travelers.

Under mounting losses, Braniff last month became a discount airline, a move that required bare-bones fare cuts, layoffs among its 2,500 employees and reductions in in-flight services.

Foley and Pritzker said even those steps "have not brought us to a level of losses that we can continue to sustain."

"We tried, we all tried, but even our best efforts never brought our load factor within 10 percent of breakeven," they said.

Most of the Braniff employees leaving Wednesday night's meeting refused comment. Those who did were doubtful about the airline's future.

A 10-year employee of the airline, who declined to give his name, said there were "several hundred" people at the meeting, which he described as "somber."

The man, a flight attendant, said: "You walked in and they gave you a sheet of paper, a press release, and then they started answering questions."

Foley and Pritzker left through a back entrance and were not immediately available for comment.

But in the statement released to employees and in the joint letter, the two executives said the plan "should keep our planes flying, should assure the continued employment of Braniff flight and other personnel, and should provide the company with a steady stream of revenue and income. Equally important, this action buys us time to analyze various options for the best deployment of our assets and resources."

Chrysler Reports Record Profits For Third Period

By EDWARD MILLER
AP Auto Writer
DETROIT (AP) — A "nice, clean quarter" without "foreign entanglements" helped Chrysler Corp. to a record third-quarter profit of $261.6 million, more than 2½ times the profit of the comparable period last year, analysts say.

The No. 3 U.S. automaker's third-quarter earnings, announced Wednesday, brought year-to-date profit to $1.77 billion, putting Chrysler in a position to triple its record 1983 earnings of $701 million.

"It seems to have been a nice, clean quarter for them, without the foreign entanglements like at GM and Ford," said David Healy, an automotive analyst with Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc. in New York.

GM's third-quarter earnings of $416.8 million could have been $200 million higher without last summer's labor unrest in West Germany and six days of U.S. spot strikes in September, GM said.

Ford Motor Co., which also has major investments in West Germany, has not reported its third-quarter figures, which also are expected to reflect German losses. Ford and American Motors Corp. say they expect to release their earnings by Friday.

Chrysler's quarterly result compared with a profit of $100.2 million in July-September 1983. Per-share earnings jumped to $1.88 from 72 cents a share.

Chrysler topped its 1983 profits in each of the first two quarters this year, earning $705.8 million in the first three-month period and $803 million in the second quarter.

The third quarter traditionally yields the smallest profits in the U.S. car industry because of heavy spending on new models for fall introduction.

Chairman Lee Iacocca said the company spent $650 million to launch twin 1985 sports sedan models — the Chrysler LeBaron GTS and Dodge Lancer — and $100 million on the first extensive facelift given the compact K-cars, Plymouth Reliant and Dodge Aries.

David Bloom, analyst with First Boston Corp. in New York, said the figures showed that Chrysler's car and truck lineup had improved, "mostly because of the minivans," the hot-selling Dodge Caravan-Plymouth Voyager models.

Car and truck sales in the quarter were up about 32 percent from the same period last year.

Tour Controversy

ATLANTA (AP) — Responding to a lawmaker's criticism that inner-city youths were being left out of Victory Tour concerts, superstar Michael Jackson and his brothers have spent $30,000 to buy tickets for 1,000 poor children.

State Rep. Hosea Williams blasted the tour Tuesday for neglecting poor youths and not bringing business to black promoters.

But the Rev. Al Sharpton, chairman of the Jacksons' traveling community relations committee, said Wednesday the tour was left open to criticism because Mayor Andrew Young had failed to announce the ticket giveaway.

'Great Strategist'

LEXINGTON, Va. (AP) — Former President Richard M. Nixon "was a great strategist" in foreign policy, but "leadership has decreased a little" since then, says former West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt.

"The world needs some more leadership. I very much hope it will be brought about by your country next year, after the election," Schmidt said Wednesday in a lecture at Virginia Military Institute.

However, Schmidt, 66, a member of the West German Parliament and co-editor of a weekly news magazine, wouldn't say whether he thinks President Reagan or Democratic candidate Walter Mondale could best provide that leadership.

Foremen's Strike Avoided In Britain

By MICHAEL WEST
Associated Press Writer
LONDON (AP) — Mediators persuaded coal mine foremen to call off their planned strike today, dealing a severe setback to the coalminers whose seven-month walkout has closed 75 percent of Britain's 175 mines.

A foremen's strike would have shut down all of the country's state-run mines because the foremen perform mandatory safety checks. But the 17,000-member National Association of Colliery Overmen, Deputies and Shotfirers decided Wednesday to call off the strike they had planned to begin today.

The National Coal Board and leaders of the 183,000-man National Union of Mineworkers resumed negotiations today, but union president Arthur Scargill said he saw little prospect of the talks succeeding.

"I'm not coming here to offer anything," Scargill said prior to the beginning of the negotiating session. "I hope there's a sensible and positive approach from the coal board in an effort to try to solve this costly and damaging dispute."

In West Yorkshire, police reported seven miners were arrested today outside the Denby Grange mine during a clash between 3,500 pickets and police who were escorting four miners in to work.

A police spokesman said mounted police and a riot squad with "protective equipment" charged strikers throwing rocks and lengths of timber.

At the Bullcliffe mine strikers carpeted roads with nails to puncture tires of police cars. Stone-throwing pickets damaged five police vehicles at a mine in nearby Derbyshire, police said. Three other police vehicles were damaged in another attack a few miles away, police said.

Scargill boasted that time was on the miners' side because the cold winter weather ahead would drive up demand for coal.

Peter McNestry, general secretary of the foremen's union said Wednesday his union had accepted a peace formula hammered out with the coal board and the independent Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service.

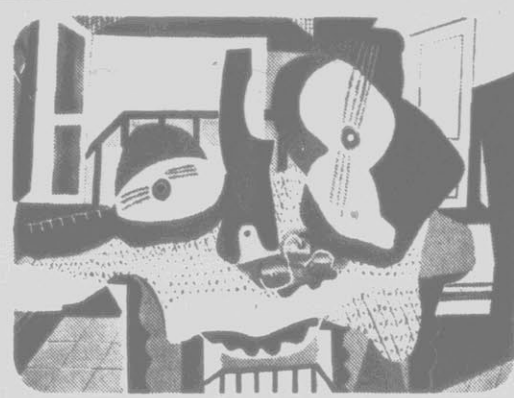

James O'Connor, Scottish general secretary of the foremen's union, said the agreement reached by the foremen was "exactly what Arthur Scargill is wanting to achieve, although perhaps not in the same words."

O'Connor said the board under its chairman Ian MacGregor had met every request of the foremen's union, including setting up an independent review body to adjudicate on major issues in the coal industry, including mine closures.

"There is no doubt in my mind that if they (the mineworkers) look at our achievement, then a settlement can be reached," O'Connor said.

The mineworkers' union called the strike March 12 over MacGregor's plans to close 20 money-losing mines with loss of 20,000 jobs within 12 months to cut massive losses in the heavily subsidized industry.

Whale Hunters Wait On Japan-U.S. Talks

TOKYO (AP) — Four Japanese ships which set sail last week to hunt sperm whales in the Pacific Ocean have returned to port to await the outcome of U.S.-Japanese whaling talks in Washington, a Fishery Agency official said today.

A second round of talks on commercial whaling between Japan and the United States, after the first round Oct. 15-16, will be held Nov. 1-2, said the official, who spoke only on condition he not be identified.

Two ships of Nitto Hoge Co., a major whaling company, sailed back to Misaki port, south of Tokyo on Wednesday, and two others belonging to Nippon Hoge Co. steamed back to Shioyama port in northern Japan, the official said.

The agency official declined to comment on whether the four whaling boats actually killed any sperm whales. Officials of the two whaling companies have refused to speak to reporters.

Takehiro Takayama, spokesman of the Japan Whaling Association, said the Japanese whaling industries would wait for the outcome of the next U.S.-Japan talks because they would not want to spoil the efforts by the Japanese government which is "trying very hard" to negotiate with the U.S. for their terms.

"But if the next talks fail, we will go ahead and start hunting (sperm whales). There is a limit to our perseverance," Takayama added.

Despite a ban on whale hunting by the International Whaling Commission, the four boats left port last week after the United States and Japan failed to reach agreement during the first round of talks in Washington. The whalers had postponed starting operations for the October-March season, originally scheduled for Oct. 1, to await the outcome of the first round of talks.

The United States has threatened to slash Japanese fishing quotas in its 200-mile economic zone if Japan does not abide by the international commission's decision, which was adopted last June at a meeting in Buenos Aires.

Japan, Norway and the Soviet Union have filed formal objections to the decision. That action exempts them from the ban, but they have come under increasing pressure from ecology groups and other countries, including the United States, to withdraw the objection.

Japan has maintained that hunting sperm whales is not a violation of international treaties and the Japanese government issued the companies permits to hunt sperm whales earlier this year.

Local opponents of the ban note that whale meat is a traditional part of the Japanese diet. Japanese whalers usually catch about 400 sperm whales each winter, officials of the Japan Whaling Association said.

Mrs. Luce Retains Sharp Wit, Views

By JOAN MOWER
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — What, Clare Boothe Luce was asked, should a woman do if she wants to be powerful? Run for Congress? Be an ambassador? Work at the White House? Or marry a rich man?

"All," Mrs. Luce replied firmly as her audience roared with laughter.

The white-haired octogenarian, long known for her acid tongue, proved before a packed luncheon at the National Press Club on Wednesday that time hasn't dulled her wit — or mellowed her conservative views.

Mrs. Luce, former Republican congresswoman from Connecticut, former ambassador to Italy, playwright and widow of Time magazine founder Henry Luce, started by saying it's impossible to separate politics and religion in America because "religion is the foundation of our Constitution."

Before she had finished an hour later, Mrs. Luce had given opinions on a variety of subjects and provided humorous anecdotes about people she'd known.

Mrs. Luce lives alone in the nation's capital, where she is a member of President Reagan's Foreign Intelligence Advisory Board, which is designed to assess American foreign intelligence abroad. Her husband died in 1967.

On the upcoming presidential election, she said she thinks it's "highly unlikely" that Walter F. Mondale, the Democratic presidential nominee, will defeat Reagan Nov. 6. But "anything is possible," she added.

As an aside, Mrs. Luce said she tends to be a pessimist, and noted: "The difference between a pessimist and an optimist is that a pessimist has more experience."

Mrs. Luce wouldn't comment directly on the selection of New York Rep. Geraldine Ferraro as Mondale's running mate and the first women on a major party ticket.

"I don't think I would have been a suitable candidate," said Mrs. Luce, an ex-congresswoman herself. "Draw your own conclusions."

Among Mrs. Luce's other observations:

—Asked if there was anything she'd learned from her work on the intelligence board that would "astonish the American public," she said: "Yes, of course there are."

—She said when Democratic President Roosevelt was elected in 1932, he promised to do away with the deficit, cut the budget and trim the bureaucracy.

"That was when I was a Democrat, by the way ... Now you see how I became a Republican," she said, referring to Roosevelt's "New Deal" policies.

—One questioner, described as a former Time magazine reporter, inquired about the truth of rumors that Mrs. Luce used to stand on her head at Time cocktail parties.

"Well, I think that Time reporters should go a little deeper into rumors than that," said Mrs. Luce, adding the questioner may have confused her with the late Alice Roosevelt Longworth, daughter of President Theodore Roosevelt and long a grande dame of the nation's capital.

"What she could do was to wrap both her legs around her neck ... until she was well into her 70s she would sit on the sofa and amuse her friends ... even if they didn't have a cocktail, they would reach for one."

"To my knowledge the only place where I can stand on my head and walk on my hands, and I can do that, is in a swimming pool," Mrs. Luce said.

Fares Decrease

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — One-way fares on four East Coast routes drop to as low as $19 today, People Express Airlines Inc. has announced.

One-way fares between Newark International Airport and Baltimore, Boston, Hartford, Conn., and Washington's Dulles Airport will be $29 during peak hours and $19 in off-peak periods. The fares were $45 peak and $29 off-peak.

The decrease is a response to lower fuel costs and a bid to spur air travel during the slow winter months, the no-frills carrier said Wednesday.

EDMISTEN RESPONDS — Attorney Rufus Edmisten, Democratic gubernatorial candidate, with his wife Linda looking on, holds up what he calls a "smut sheet" during a news conference Wednesday in Raleigh.

The letter addressed to Guilford County supporters of his GOP opponent Jim Martin makes negative statements about Edmisten. (AP Laserphoto)

Edmisten Calls For Apology From Martin On 'Smut Sheet'

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — Attorney General Rufus Edmisten says there's no proof that Rep. Jim Martin was behind a "smut sheet" attacking Edmisten's character, but says his Republican rival for the governorship still owes him an apology.

"You have your surrogates go out and they stand up and say that you're a public drunk, that you won't make a good governor because you're divorced," said Edmisten. "That's getting pretty low. And I think he ought to tell all his people to stop that garbage ... right now."

Edmisten distributed at a news conference Wednesday photocopies of what aides said was the only page they had seen of a letter that begins, "Dear Guilford County Supporter: There's only a few days left to get Jim Martin into the governor's mansion."

The letter urges Martin backers to spread the word about things that "you can't say ... in ads."

"You can't talk about (Edmisten's) boozing and womanizing," the letter says. It says Edmisten cheated on his taxes, let "fat cat bid riggers off without getting in a lick," and "crucified" Lt. Gov. Jimmy Green.

"The worst part is his personal life," says the letter, adding that Edmisten "made the court seal his divorce papers."

The unsigned letter says "turn over" at the bottom, but there's nothing on back.

"Mr. Martin has become personal and dirty," said Edmisten. "He has lied on the political questions and he has hurt my family and my wife on a very personal level." He demanded that Martin apologize.

Linda Edmisten, the attorney general's second wife whom he married last year, called the letter "absolute nonsense" and "terribly vulgar."

Martin, whose statewide whistlestop train tour reached Raleigh Wednesday afternoon, said he was sorry about the letter but that neither he nor anyone in his organization was behind it.

"He's got a lot of enemies around the state from the primary, and I don't know who would be engaged in any of that, but it's not us," said Martin. "We don't do that."

Martin said that Edmisten had "engaged in a lot of gossip and rumors" about his Democratic runoff opponent, former Charlotte Mayor Eddie Knox. Edmisten denied it.

Supporters of Green, who also sought the gubernatorial nomination, have said privately that they suspected Edmisten was responsible for Green's prosecution last year on bribery charges. Edmisten also denied that, and a jury acquitted Green.

Edmisten also complained Wednesday that Martin had lied repeatedly about Edmisten's record as attorney general in television commercials.

Martin campaign manager Jack Hawke said he stood by the criticisms in the ad, which he said also had been made by newspaper editorials and public officials.

But Hawke said that "nobody in our campaign has even seen" the letter. "The only one who's seen it has been Rufus Edmisten."

At a campaign rally in Lenoir

County Wednesday night, Edmisten attacked Martin's advertising strategy saying, "You don't raise your character by attacking someone else's."

Edmisten, speaking at the High-Dollar Warehouse outside Kinston, said he wants to call a "tobacco summit" if elected to discuss ways to help the state's tobacco industry.

He also distanced himself from the national Democratic ticket, saying drug dealers imprisoned while he has been attorney general do not consider him a liberal.

"This is not a referendum on national politics," Edmisten said of the governor's race. "I stand on my own two feet."

Money Hoarder

RALEIGH (AP) — A U.S. District Court jury decided Leo Shaheen Jr. was clean after his attorney brought a washing machine to court as evidence in his trial on tax evasion charges.

The U.S. Justice Department took Shaheen to court last week accusing him of four counts of evading $34,000 worth of federal income taxes for the years 1979 through 1981.

Shaheen, of Raleigh, said he drives a 1965 pickup truck with more than 512,000 miles on it, eats beans for dinner and buys lunch for $1.

Appeals Body Overturns Club Probe Court Order

By MARY ANNE RHYNE
Associated Press Writer

A National Congressional Club official says a court order about a probe into the club and Jefferson Marketing Inc. is a victory, but a lawyer for U.S. Rep. Charlie Rose says it lets him try to have the issue resolved before Election Day.

The U.S. Court of Appeals in Washington overturned an order by U.S. District Court Judge Louis F. Oberdorfer that the Federal Election Commission finish its probe of the club and Jefferson Marketing before the Nov. 6 election, Carter Wrenn, executive director of the club, said Wednesday.

But the appeals court, in reversing the order, also sent the case back to Oberdorfer, saying it was "appropriate for summary disposition at this time because there is a need for speedy resolution."

Wrenn said his Washington attorneys informed him that the court "granted our appeal in essence."

William C. Oldaker, Rose's attorney, said the reversal would give him another opportunity to try to resolve the issue before the election.

Rose told the New York Times that he had expected the case to be settled months ago. "It would be poetic justice if this whole matter came to rest on their doorstep precisely before Nov. 6," Rose said.

The ruling was sealed but the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia decided to open it at 5 p.m. Wednesday after Rose joined state and national newspaper groups in fighting to make the rulings public.

The FEC has for two years been considering a complaint from Rose charging that the club and Jefferson Marketing violated election laws banning corporate contributions and requiring limits on campaign contributions and financial disclosure when they backed Rose's Republican and Democratic foes in 1982.

The club was formed to retire the 1972 campaign debts of Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C. Jefferson Marketing is directed by Helms' allies. The organizations operate out of the same Raleigh office building.

Oberdorfer on Oct. 4 ordered the FEC to decide by last Friday whether election laws had been violated. Legal action since then has remained under a seal imposed by the appeals court.

"We said that ruling, in our opinion, violated the regulations of the FEC and would have, in essence, railroad us out of a fair hearing," Wrenn said. "The court in essence granted our appeal... They summarily reversed Oberdorfer's order and said it did violate the regulations of the FEC and would cause us to get unfair treatment."

He said the Appeals Court decided that Oberdorfer misinterpreted the Federal Election Campaign Act, applying an erroneous standard of legal review.

Wrenn said the ruling leaves the FEC free to act when it desires.

State Democratic Party Chairman David Price said he was disappointed with the court's ruling and said the Rose case was only "the tip of the iceberg" in dealings of the Helms' organizations.

"Of course, we do not know at what point they (the FEC) are in their investigations, so there's still some hope it could be revealed before the election," Price said.

Robinson Convicted Of Murders

ELIZABETHTOWN, N.C. (AP) — The same jury of Duplin County residents that convicted Eddie Carson Robinson of three counts of first-degree murder must now decide whether he should be sentenced to life in prison or executed.

The jury deliberated less than an hour Wednesday before convicting Robinson in the deaths of a Bladen County man, his wife and stepdaughter.

Robinson, 36, and Elton O. McLaughlin, 33, were arrested May 9 and charged in the deaths of James Worley, 50; his wife, Shelia, 21, and her 5-year-old daughter, Psoma Baggett.

At a separate trial, McLaughlin was found guilty of first-degree murder in all three killings. He is on death row at Central Prison in Raleigh.

After the verdict was delivered Wednesday and the sentencing phase of the trial began, Robinson, dressed in a black two-piece suit, light blue shirt and blue tie, took the stand to tell the story of his childhood and to recount his 1969 murder conviction in Colorado.

Robinson testified that he was unemployed on April 11, 1969 when he walked into a convenience store and shot and killed the clerk, a 35-year-old woman, with a .38-caliber pistol he had stolen in the robbery of a Colorado liquor store.

"I went in the place with the intention of robbing the place but with no intention of killing anyone," Robinson said. "I had somehow cocked the gun and it went off."

Robinson pleaded guilty to first-degree murder in El Paso County, Colo., and was sentenced to life imprisonment. He served nearly 11 years in prison before being released in 1980.

Following his release, Robinson flew back to Bladen County, where he had been raised with his first cousin. His mother worked as a maid in New York City and "I never knew my father," Robinson testified.

Robinson said he met McLaughlin a few weeks before the March 26 murder of James Worley and that McLaughlin "knew I had a conviction of first-degree murder and I would be dumb enough and stupid enough to go with him."

Dr. Patricia Lara, a forensic psychiatrist with Dorothea Dix Hospital in Raleigh, testified that Robinson has an IQ of 82, 10 points above McLaughlin's but still "borderline" between normal intelligence and mental retardation. Lara said Robinson can distinguish right from wrong and can read on a ninth-grade level.

Robinson testified that he had been laid off from two jobs and agreed to help McLaughlin in exchange for part of $3,000 McLaughlin was to be paid for driving Worley's body away from the house. In a confession statement, Robinson said Mrs. Worley offered to pay the money.

Robinson testified that he drove Worley's body away from the house, doused it with gasoline and set it afire on March 26. Later that day, Worley's body was found in flames inside his car on a dirt road near Lisbon.

Reagan And Nixon Masks Are Favorites

By SUZANNE SPRING
Associated Press Writer
BOSTON (AP) — Forget ghouls and goblins. This Halloween, the owner of the country's largest costume shop says Reagan and Nixon masks are selling like crazy, along with Michael Jackson gloves at $14.95 a shot.

Mr. T and his gold chains are very popular, but remarkably few customers want to look like Walter Mondale or Geraldine Ferraro.
"Reagan is a very, very big seller.
I say we sell about 12 a day, even more than that," David Bertolino said Wednesday at his store, Little Jack Horner, Inc. "The other day someone from Mondale headquarters came down and bought a Reagan mask. Don't know what they plan to do with it."

"And Nixon is hot. Easily as popular as Reagan," Bertolino continued. "I guess people still love to hate him. Sometimes they come in and buy the Nixon mask and then buy handcuffs or a ball-and-chain to go with it."

This year is Little Jack Horner's
50th year in business in downtown
Boston. As usual, says Bertolino, political costumes are making him money. The masks of President Reagan and former President Nixon sell for $25 to $40, depending on the amount of detail in the disguise.

The store has sold out its 1,200 masks of Massachusetts Sen.
Edward Kennedy, but still has a few
John F. Kennedy masks available.

On Wednesday, one went to a professional-looking young man who refused to identify himself. He told Bertolino he planned to spend Halloween as "Jack Kennedy for Reagan."

"I got the idea while I was watching the news last night," the man said, referring to a recently publicized letter from Reagan to Nixon written in 1960. In the letter, Reagan compared Kennedy's ideas to those of Karl Marx and Adolf Hitler.

"I'm going with two friends who are dressing up as Marx and Hitler," said the man. "It's a joke — get it? Kennedy for Reagan."

"Oh, yes, I see. Very funny," said Bertolino with a shrug. A Republican himself, he has grown accustomed to the gamut of political persuasions.

He was prepared to order 5,000 masks of Democratic presidential challenger Walter Mondale several months ago, but then decided against it. "If he doesn't win, I'm stuck with thousands of Mondales staring at me. Then I've got to hope then that someone down the line looks like him," he said.

"You have to stick by the numbers and the polls," he said. "We don't take any party lines. We just order what they are asking for."

So far, he says, only a few people have sought a Mondale mask or one of his running mate.

Upstairs in the store's costume shop, saleswoman Donna Dauria noted that religious costumes are extremely popular this Halloween, with nun habits renting for $30 and priest robes $20.

An outfit modeled on "Elvira" — a late-night TV hostess who dresses as a sexy vampire — is probably the biggest selling costume, she says,
"for both men and women."

Shiny, decorated Michael Jackson jackets, epaulets and all, are selling fast among teen-agers, Ms. Dauria added. And college students frequently request costumes based on the hit movie "Ghostbusters."

"I notice a lot of people come in asking to see our Boy George costume," she said of the English pop singer who dresses like a woman, "but no one wants to rent it."

AFM President Dies

CHICAGO (AP) — James Caesar
Petrillo, 92, the longtime head of the American Federation of Musicians, died Tuesday after suffering a stroke.

Petrillo was president of the

from 1940 to 1958, and of the Chicago Federation of Musicians from 1922 to 1962.

see what he could do if the diamond finesse were going to fail.

He won the queen of trumps and, with no pause for thought, he led the eight of diamonds from hand.
West, a player who liked to boast that he played "by the seat of my pants," followed with the seven, the card nearest his thumb. Declarer rose with the ace and returned a low diamond from the table.

East was in a quandary. After stewing for a few minutes, he elected to play a low diamond.

Declarer's jack won the trick and the contract was home. Note that if West had the king of diamonds, the contract was still safe. West could not attack hearts without setting up declarer's king, and if he didn't lead a heart declarer would get rid of two of his hearts on dummy's good diamonds.

Good defenders would know what to do when declarer led a low diamond from the table. On the first diamond lead, it was West's duty to give his partner a count of the diamond suit. With an odd number of cards, West should play his lowest;
with an even number, he should start an echo by playing the highest he can spare. On this hand he should have followed with the deuce, and East would know that declarer had to have a second diamond. Therefore, he could rise with the king and shift to a heart to defeat the contract.

'Chronicles' Airs Sunday On Public TV

By TOM JORY
Associated Press Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — "The Barchester Chronicles," starting Sunday night on public TV's "Masterpiece Theater," is a regrettably uneven adaptation, in a single story, of two 19th-century novels by Anthony Trollope.

The 1982 British Broadcasting Corp. production, completed a century after Trollope's death, was drawn from "The Warden" and "Barchester Towers," the first two of six novels set in Barchester, a fictitious cathedral community in the west of England.

Though Trollope's own inclination was satiric, "The Barchester Chronicles" seems reluctant to exploit that comedic objective. It is not until the third or fourth of seven episodes that the author's biting wit is allowed to flourish.

Until then, the story relies heavily, sometimes excessively, on the Rev. Septimus Harding's vulnerable goodness for a momentum that is sluggish at best.

Donald Pleasance plays Harding, the honest and gentle warden of Hiram's Hospital, and the series' slow start should not detract from the delightful characterization.

Harding is a man who suffers, his bishop says, from "persistent bouts of Christianity." Rather than challenge John Bold, a successful surgeon and passionate reformer who complains that Harding is being overpaid for his limited responsibilities, the meek churchman tends to agree, and resigns.

Harding is defended vehemently by his son-in-law, the Rev. Dr. Grantly, archdeacon of Barchester (Nigel Hawthorne), who sees his own standing in the church threatened, and emotionally by his daughter, Eleanor (Janet Maw), who is in love with Bold (David Gwillim).

All of this takes the better part of three episodes, but hang on. The action picks up in the fourth, and "The Barchester Chronicles" becomes a new, and thoroughly entertaining, tale of ecclesiastical intrigue.

The old bishop is dying, and Dr. Proudie (Clive Swift) is appointed by the new government to take his place. But who really runs the diocese, Proudie's wife (Geraldine McEwan) or Slope (Alan Rickman), the bishop's ambitious and devious chaplain?

"Doesn't all the world know Mrs. Proudie is the bishop of Barchester, and Mr. Slope is her creature?" inquires Mrs. Quiverful, who is in for a rude awakening.

No wonder the good woman is confused. No one in this show, with the possible exception of Harding, is precisely what he or she seems to be. All protest noble intention, but few are above scheming for money and power.

Slope, for instance, decides on his own that Quiverful would make a fine warden of Hiram's Hospital, at half the price, despite sentiment in the community that Harding should have his old job back. He offers the job to Quiverful, and the poverty stricken pastor's children are lined up to thank the bishop's factotum.

"Thank you, Mr. God," says one, confusing Slope's authority with someone higher in the church. "Suffer the little children, Mrs. Quiverful," Slope reassures when the woman steps forward to correct the youngster.

Mrs. Proudie is outraged when she overhears Slope giving the bishop orders. "Mr. Slope, your conduct toward the bishop is not what I want it to be," she informs the oily character through clenched teeth.

"Oh, isn't it?" Proudie inquires in obvious wonder.

Slope, meantime, falls in love with Signora Vesey-Neroni (Susan Hampshire), and pursues the woman shamelessly — until he learns that Harding's daughter, Eleanor, has been left a healthy inheritance by her late husband, Bold.

"The Barchester Chronicles" might have been better confined to four hours — the last four — but no matter. There is enough blistering sarcasm in the caricatures to redeem the longer version.

'AfterMASH' Is A Victim

LOS ANGELES (AP) — "AfterMASH," a postscript to television's long-running, popular comedy about the Korean War, is a casualty of TV's ratings war.

The show, which followed the characters of "MASH" after the war ended, was canceled by CBS in its second season, with four of this year's nine episodes yet to air, executive producer Burt Metcalfe said Wednesday.

"I think ultimately there was this inevitable comparison with 'MASH,' and, naturally, by those standards, we were going to suffer," Metcalfe said.

"MASH," a sardonic situation comedy set in a Korean War Army hospital base, ran for 11 years.

The final 2½-hour episode on Feb. 23, 1983, was one of the most widely viewed television shows in history, with CBS estimating the audience at 125 million people.

"AfterMASH" was the first show canceled this season by CBS, which did not immediately announce a replacement.

A Valuable Ticket

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Rocker Bruce Springsteen's seven-night stand beginning today at the Sports Arena could "double the volume ... that we did for the Olympics," says a ticket broker who sold ducats for as high as $400.

"The demand for tickets is unprecedented," and much of it is from those who want to see "The Boss" more than once, said Fred Ross of Front Row Center Ticket Service. "At least 50 percent of the people who bought tickets for us were going for more than one night."

Queen Mother Visit

VENICE, Italy (AP) — The first visit ever by Britain's Queen Mother Elizabeth to this northern Italian city and her first trip to the boot-shaped country in 25 years will probably not include a gondola ride.

A ride on one of Venice's famed canals had been planned, but was ruled out "mainly for security reasons" because "a gondola trip is a slow, exposed kind of thing," Gordon Pirie of the British Embassy said Wednesday.

The 84-year-old mother of Queen Elizabeth II plans to visit several monuments restored with the help of the British-backed Venice in Peril Fund, including the Church of Saint Nicholas of the Mendicoli and the Church of Sts. John and Paul.

The Queen Mother set sail Wednesday for her four-day Italian visit.

CONTEST FINALIST ... Evan Griffin of Williamston is shown during the 1984 World Tobacco Auctioneering Championship in Danville, Va., where he was a finalist. Griffin has been a professional auctioneer for 35 years.

Finals Gained In Auctioneering Event

Evan Griffin, 60, of Williamston was a finalist in the 1984 World Tobacco Auctioneering Championship held recently in Auctioneer's Park in Danville, Va. Griffin, a professional tobacco auctioneer for 35 years, finished in the top 11 of 64 competitors in the annual contest sponsored by R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. as a part of its "Pride in Tobacco" program. Griffin has sold tobacco on the Whiteville and Greensburg, Murray and Mayfield, Ky., markets. "This is a great contest," Griffin said. "It helps counteract negative feelings about tobacco and is great for the professional auctioneer to receive this kind of recognition." The contest was organized by Reynolds Tobacco and the Danville

Harvest Jubilee Committee as a way to recognize professional auctioneers. This was the fourth year of competition held in Auctioneer's Park, an outdoor amphitheater built specifically for the event.

As a finalist Griffin won a sterling silver belt buckle bearing the "Pride in Tobacco" symbol.

Prince Orsini Dies

ROME (AP) — Prince Filippo Orsini, whose widely publicized romance with a British actress in the 1950s cost him his hereditary title at the Vatican, has died at age 64, relatives reported Wednesday. The prince, a member of one of Rome's oldest families, died Monday night in a Rome clinic after a brief illness, relatives said. His illness was not disclosed.

Another Good Reason to Vote for...

Jim Martin
GOVERNOR

Did you know the state taxes money you put into savings? It's true, and because of it, older people living off savings and other retirement shy away from North Carolina.

The same is true of inventory taxes on business. The big manufacturers put their new plants just outside our borders, so they can avoid the tax. Jim Martin wants to change that, so more and better jobs will come to North Carolina as new plants move in.

He wants to help older people, too, by cutting the tax on their food and medicine. It's the least we can do for the people who nurtured and raised us.

He Wants to Cut your Taxes.
