FLAMES CAUSE HEAVY DAMAGE — Flames leap from the roof of a contemporary style home in the Cherry Oaks subdivision near Greenville early Sunday morning. The fire caused heavy damage. Eastern Pines Fire Chief Lyman Hardee said the call for the fire came in at 2:04 a.m. and he was the first to arrive on the scene, finding flames already breaking through the roof. Hardee said the 102 Williams Drive house is owned by Dr. Maurice Simon, a department chairman at East Carolina University, who was out of town. The chief said firemen had the blaze under control in about 15 minutes. The fire caused about $75,000 damage to the $125,000 valued house. Preliminary investigation by fire officials placed the blame in the area of a lamp in the den of the house, which had been left on. There were no injuries reported. Members of the Simpson and Winterville fire departments assisted Eastern Pines firemen in fighting the blaze, while Staton House was called to stand by in Winterville. Production Curbs Eyed By Ministers

Price War Worries Officials

By ROBERT BURNS
Associated Press Writer
GENEVA, Switzerland (AP) — OPEC oil ministers opened an emergency meeting today facing tough negotiations on how to share the sacrifices of production cuts that could help prevent a full-scale price war.

Most of the 13 ministers arriving for the closed-door meeting of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries said they supported a call for curbs on production to defend the cartel's prices.

But there were disputes on the details of such a plan, and maverick member Nigeria declared in advance of the meeting that it would reject any move to reduce its production or rescind its recent unilateral price cut.

A committee of four OPEC ministers recommended Sunday that the organization try to reach agreement on realigning prices and cutting overall OPEC production by at least 1 million barrels a day to stave off the cartel's second official price reduction in 19 months.

Britain and Norway, neither of them OPEC members, recently announced price reductions, and Nigeria promptly followed suit, breaking ranks with the rest of OPEC.

Many industry analysts have said that if OPEC fails to reach agreement on a production-cutting this week, a wave of price reductions will result, throwing the cartel into disarray and raising the prospect of a widespread oil price war.

None of the oil ministers in Geneva for the emergency meeting has said publicly how much his country would be willing to cut back to help preserve the cartel's benchmark price of $29 a barrel for Saudi light crude.

But Nigeria's oil minister, Tam David-West, Sunday ruled out joining fellow cartel members in reducing production and also said his country was not ready to rescind the $2-a-barrel price reduction he announced last Thursday.

"I did not come here to negotiate, I came here to listen," David-West said.

He said his OPEC partners understood that Nigeria had to react quickly to Britain and Norway's reductions earlier this month in order to "instill confidence" among the public. The Nigerian government took power in a New Year's Eve coup last year.

Under OPEC rules, member countries are not supposed to change prices without the cartel's unanimous approval, but in practice, several members have offered secret discounts to buyers.

On Sunday, the United Arab Emirates' oil minister, Mana Saeed Oteiba, suggested in an interview with NBC News that his country would cut the price of its oil if the price dispute was not solved during the meeting.

Oteiba said OPEC must cut production to as low as 16 million barrels a day from its current ceiling of 17.5 million. But he also (Please turn to page 12)

At Least Two Dead As Ferry Boat Sinks In Philippines; 115 Rescued

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — A ferry boat reportedly carrying about 240 people sank in the central Philippines, and at least two children drowned and 115 people were rescued, the coast guard said today. The fate of the others was not known. Coast guard officials said the 700-ton M.V. Venus sank off Marinduque Island, about 120 miles southeast of Manila, at about noon

Sunday in heavy waves. The coast guard said two navy ships were headed to the scene today to look for possible survivors.

Early today, a cargo container ship, the Lorcon 8, sank in bad weather off the coast of Batangas province, about 50 miles south of Manila, the ship's owners said. All 19 crewmen aboard were rescued, the owners said.

The sinkings occurred as heavy rains brought by tropical storm Warren lashed a wide area of Luzon Island and the central Philippine region of Visayas. Weather forecasters said Warren, which packed winds up to 59 mph, later moved out into the south China Sea and was about 285 miles northwest of Manila this afternoon.

No information was immediately available on the exact number of people aboard the Venus, which was headed from the central island of Samar to Manila when it went down. The coast guard said initial reports from its station near the scene said there were about 200 passengers and 42 crew members aboard.

Hospital Did Not Seek Human Heart

By LEE SIEGEL
AP Science Writer

LOMA LINDA, Calif. (AP) — Doctors who implanted a baboon heart in a dying infant girl did not look for a human transplant donor and were unaware that one became available the day they performed the surgery, a spokesman for the surgical team said.

The director of an agency that finds transplant organs said Sunday that a heart became available Friday, the same day doctors at Loma Linda University Medical Center put a baboon heart into a baby identified only as Baby Fae.

The 17-day-old infant, who was in critical but stable condition today, had been dying because her own heart was only partially developed.

"We have a beautiful, healthy baby," said Dr. Leonard L. Bailey on Sunday. Doctors on Sunday began giving Baby Fae doses of cyclosporine to suppress her immune system and rejection of the heart.

Outside the hospital animal rights activists picketed, holding signs that read, "Ghoulis tinkering is not science."

"I'm not surprised that they didn't look for a human heart," said Lucy Shelton of the People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals. "We can't forget about the non-human animals here. They (the scientists) are just playing around. It makes our outrage that much stronger."

Bailey, who headed the specially-assembled team that implanted the animal heart, said he could not speculate how long the animal's heart would keep Baby Fae alive, but doctors said it might grow as the girl grows. "We know we may be in for a long battle in the weeks ahead," Bailey said.

Bailey said the infant had "normal cardiac output," didn't require heart stimulants and was being weaned from a respirator that helped her breathe.

Dr. Paul I. Terasaki, professor of surgery at UCLA Medical School and director of the California Regional Organ Procurement Agency, first reported the availability of the human heart.

"Our coordinator called the Loma Linda kidney transplant people, but because they are a different team they were unaware that there was a need for a heart," Terasaki said.

Loma Linda hospital spokesman Dick Schaefer said, "We did not try to find a human heart," but added that the 2-month-old human organ may not have been compatible with Baby Fae's body, and she was so ill there would not have been enough time to check.

Schaefer said he did not know if Baby Fae's parents had agreed to their daughter receiving the ba-

Drizzle Helped

The drizzle that began in Pitt County early this morning was welcomed by Pitt County Agricultural Extension Agent Sam Uzzell who said he was "real glad to see rain finally come." The last rainfall in Pitt County occurred four days ago, but Greenville Utilities water plant officials said that the amount received was "very small."

According to Uzzell, the rain will benefit winter forage crops such as alfalfa, annual rye grass, wheat, oats and barley, and will not harm crops now in the field. "Most of the peanuts have been gotten out of the ground so we shouldn't see any harmful effects there, and there shouldn't be any effect on soybeans other than slowing down drying," Uzzell explained.

As of 8 a.m. today, approximately .05 inches of rain had fallen, a GUC water plant spokesman said. However, the rain did not bring cooler temperatures, as GUC officials reported a temperature of 72 degrees this morning. Yesterday at 4 p.m. the temperature was recorded at 83 degrees.

According to the National Weather Service, the unseasonably warm weather will continue in North Carolina for the next several days as a high pressure unit located offshore maintains the moisture and quite mild air over the region.

Partly cloudy skies will prevail tonight and Tuesday with a few showers, and afternoon temperatures will be mostly in the low and mid 80s.

Attorneys Submit Barfield Appeal

By DENNIS PATTERSON
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Attorneys seeking to halt the Friday execution of condemned killer Velma Barfield said in an appeal today she wasn't competent to stand trial in 1978 because she was withdrawing from a 10-year addiction to prescription drugs.

In a separate action, Mrs. Barfield's attorneys asked the North Carolina Supreme Court to stay her scheduled Friday execution while they seek a full hearing on the appeal.

Papers prepared for the appeal filing said Mrs. Barfield was ruled competent to stand trial in 1978, but that doctors who examined her at Dorothea Dix Hospital and Southeastern Regional Mental Health Center in Lumberton failed to take her withdrawal from drug addiction into consideration.

Mrs. Barfield began experiencing withdrawal symptoms from Valium and other drugs on March 13, 1978, the day she surrendered and confessed to poisoning St. Pauls farmer Stuart Taylor, the appeal said.

"During the eight and one-half month period between her arrest and her admission to North Carolina Correctional Center for Women, and, indeed for several months following her admission to Women's Prison, Ms. Barfield experienced bizarre and disabling psychological disorders," the appeal says.

"While it is now clear — in 1984 — that Ms. Barfield suffered severely from the symptoms of benzodiazepine withdrawal for a full year after her arrest for the homicide of (Stuart) Taylor, it would not have been clear — indeed it probably would not have been recognized — in early 1978, when Ms. Barfield was evaluated" by psychiatrists, the appeal says.

"At that point in time, the medical research had generally concluded that the drugs taken by Ms. Barfield — especially the benzodiazepines — (Please turn to page 12)

How Inflation Cuts Federal Income Taxes

By CHANGING TIMES
The Kiplinger Magazine

That old demon inflation is about to do something for us instead of to us: create a tax cut that will mostly offset all the increases Congress served up last summer.

Within a few weeks the Treasury Department's computers will begin spewing out new withholding tables to guide employers in setting aside a smaller portion of each paycheck for Uncle Sam.

Indexing has arrived. That means an end to the insidious, automatic tax hikes that have accompanied inflation for generations.

Starting with the tax year that begins Jan. 1, 1985, the Treasury Department will adjust tax brackets, zero-bracket amounts, and personal and dependent exemptions to reflect inflation. The indexing factor will be the percentage increase of the average consumer price index (CPI) during the 12 months ending Sept. 30 over the average CPI for the base 1983 period.

Although final figures won't be in until late October, Changing Times estimates that the indexing factor for this year will be 4 percent, give or take about a tenth of a percentage point.

Based on that estimate, personal exemptions and ZBAs will be 4 percent higher in 1985 than they are this year. Each exemption you claim on your 1985 return will be worth $1,040, compared with 1,000 in 1984. The ZBA on joint returns will rise to $3,540 from $3,400; on individual returns, from $2,300 to $2,390.

The top and bottom of each tax bracket will also go up 4 percent, which will permit some inflation-devalued dollars to fall into lower tax brackets.

The point is to end "taxflation," the process that pushes taxpayers into higher and higher brackets even if their incomes increase only enough to keep up with inflation. The stairway from the 11 percent to the 50 percent bracket is still in place, but indexing means you'll make the climb only if your real income — adjusted for inflation — increases.

This year, for example, a couple with taxable income of $60,000 is in the 42 percent tax bracket; next year, after 4 percent indexing, a joint return showing as much as $62,400 will fall into the 38 percent bracket. Even if your top bracket doesn't dip, you benefit because more taxable income will drop into the expanded lower brackets.

Consider a family of four with taxable income of $40,000 before the ZBA and exemptions are taken into account. Their tax bill for 1984 will be $6,538.

If the family's income increases by 4 percent to $41,600 next year — mirroring the indexing factor — federal taxes for 1985 will be $6,800. Although that's more dollars, it represents precisely the same proportion of the family's taxable income — 16.35 percent.

If the family's income doesn't rise next year, meaning its purchasing power will decline because of inflation, the adjustments to the exemption and ZBA amounts and the shift in tax brackets will produce a lower tax bill. In 1985 the tax on $40,000 would be $228 less than in 1984.

The modest adjustments due to 4 percent inflation might not have you jumping for joy, but Changing Times suggests that you take a longer-term view. Imagine where we'd be if indexing had become part of the law a decade ago.

Consider how that would have affected our family of four. Assuming it just kept up with inflation by reaching the $40,000 level this year, its income back in 1973 would have been $16,950. After allowing for the standard deductions (the forerunner of today's ZBA) and exemption allowances, its tax bill that year would have been $2,249, or 13.27 percent of its $16,950 income.

In 1984 its tax bill on $40,000 — which is merely the inflation-adjusted equivalent of $16,950 in 1973 — would amount to 16.35 percent of taxable income.

That's taxflation. All the tax "cuts" okayed by Congress since 1973 clearly have not fully compensated for it. (If the standard deductions written into the original income tax law in 1913 had been indexed for inflation, in 1984 the first $30,000 on a single return and $40,000 on a joint one would be exempt from tax.)

Another measure of the importance of indexing is the amount that taxpayers will save thanks to the change. Current estimates put that figure at just under $50 billion for the first three years of indexing, assuming inflation runs under 5 percent each year.

To keep that in perspective, you might want to consider that the tax law signed by President Reagan last summer is supposed to raise about $50 billion over the same three years.

Pat's Pointers

Cover a boutique-size tissue box in a holiday motif to brighten up your own home or to give as a welcome gift. Just in time for the Christmas season is this clever Christmas tree design. Included on the same leaflet are charts for making Valentine's Day and St. Patrick's Day covers.

All are designed to be made on easy-to-handle and easy-to-assemble 10-mesh plastic canvas. While Persian yarn is recommended, knitting yarns can be used. This "learn-a-stitch" design enables you to increase your needlepoint skills as you make the various boxes.

To obtain directions for making the Holiday Tissue Box Covers, send your request for Leaflet No. NF-1028 with $1 and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to: Pat Trexler, The Daily Reflector, P.O. Box 810, North Myrtle Beach, S.C. 29597.

Or you may order Kit No. N-1028 by sending a check or money order for $10.50 to Pat Trexler at the same address. The kit price includes shipping charges, instruction leaflet, plastic canvas, needle and sufficient pure wool Persian yarn for making one of the boxes. Please specify your choice of Christmas, Valentine's Day or St. Patrick's Day, and the appropriate colors will be sent.

Many of you may have never worked with Persian yarn for needlepoint so this seems an excellent opportunity to give some tips on using this type of yarn.

You will notice immediately that Persian yarn has three loosely twisted, rather thin strands that you can easily separate, allowing you to use whatever number of strands give you the best results for the stitch and canvas you are using.

In my opinion, Persian yarn is definitely the best choice whenever long, straight stitches are being used or when a variety of stitches are used on this same project. In the box shown today, for example, three strands worked beautifully for the straight stitches while some of the other pattern stitches did much better with only two.

There are two keys to obtaining smooth stitches with Persian yarn. First, you should always separate the strands, even when using the full three strands together. This is called "stripping" the yarn. Hold the three strands at one end between the thumb and forefinger of one hand, then run the thumbnail of the other hand down between the strands. As an alternate separation method, hold the strands in the same way, but pull out one strand at a time.

After the strands are separated, put together as many as you wish for your current project. This stripping process may seem like a nuisance, but it only takes a matter of seconds and separating the strands means smoother stitching.

It is also important to keep the strands flat and untwisted. Some people find it second nature to give the needle a little counter-clockwise twist after every stitch or two; others just drip the needle and let it dangle below their work whenever the yarn seems twisted.

It is also wise to work with the nap of the yarn. You won't be able to see the nap, but most people can train themselves to feel it. If you hold the strands as you did when stripping and just run the thumb and forefinger of your other hand down the yarn first in one direction and then in the other, you will find that it is smoother in one of the two directions. When you find the smooth way, thread the needle with the end held in your hand and you will be working "with the nap."

COMPUTERS IN, READERS OUT?

YORK, Pa. (AP) — Meter readers, the people who periodically come into houses to check water and gas meters for billing purposes — are becoming victims of the computer age.

In York, some 18,000 residential water meters are being linked to a central office computer by television cable and read electronically. In the near future the same will apply to gas meters, according to MIS Week.

Dear Abby

By Abigail Van Buren

Blackmail Has Become A Part Of Halloween

DEAR ABBY: Those who presumably worry about their children who are out trick-or-treating on Halloween should take a lesson from my mother and her friends. They never had to worry. We stayed home because she and her neighbors would toss the best party of the year—next to Christmas. They did this with little effort, permitting the children to do most of the work and planning.

Hot dogs, hamburgers, soft drinks, cookies and cakes were in bountiful supply. We played games, bobbed for apples and received prizes for our costumes.

Growing up in a small town (population about 9,000), I never heard of trick or treat until I moved to Washington, D.C. We didn't have to worry about poisoned candy, pins and razor blades in apples, or the threat of being lured into the home of a stranger to be molested.

I personally despise the custom of trick or treat and refuse to condone it by encouraging children to come to my door. Call me Scrooge.

Fortunately, more parents in my part of the country are beginning to see the sense in block parties on Halloween. I hope it catches on and replaces the deplorable custom of sending children out to beg for treats.

CONCERNED MOTHER

DEAR CONCERNED: You hit upon something that has troubled me for a number of years. The very principle of trick or treat is pure and simple blackmail: "If you don't give me a treat, I will play a trick on you"—the "trick" being anything from overturning garbage cans, soaping (or breaking) windows, or doing serious damage to property.

This kind of vicious and antisocial behavior should not be tolerated. Most police departments must call in extra hands on Halloween to patrol the streets in an effort to protect private and public property.

What began years ago as a harmless holiday, celebrated by telling children scary ghost stories about imaginary witches, goblins and spirits, has turned into legalized blackmail.

Halloween has become scarier than ever, and I vote for abolishing the custom of trick or treat. Readers?

DEAR ABBY: A woman wrote that her husband had been impotent for the last eight years due to the medication he'd been taking for high blood pressure.

I went through exactly the same thing. My doctor prescribed medication that knocked me clear out of the ballpark (sexually, I mean). When I told him how it affected me, he said, "Oh, you're just getting old."

Well, I didn't believe him, so I went to another doctor. My new doctor told me that there were different kinds of medication to bring down blood pressure—that what works for one person may not work for another.

To make a long story short, in six weeks I was back on the ball team, hitting a home run once a week and sometimes more often.

I am 81 years old and my blood pressure is 140 over 80.

HOME RUN HERBERT

DEAR HERBERT: I'm glad you wrote. Too many people are reluctant to question their doctor's pronouncements.

I have long been an advocate of getting a second opinion. And a third, and even a fourth, if necessary. Hooray for you.

DEAR ABBY: I have been a resident in a nursing home for many years. My mind is sound, but my body is badly crippled. My wife visits me every day without fail. She has never neglected me and I know she loves me very much.

I've always encouraged her to have a little social life, but every time she goes to dinner with a gentleman, and the employees here at the home see her, they think it is their "duty" to rush in and report to me that they saw my wife with another man.

I am aware of what is going on, and I do not have to be reminded of my incapability to do things for her. Why, oh why, can't these people keep their big mouths shut?

I'll bet others have this problem, too. If you print this, it will probably go up on a lot of bulletin boards. Thank you for listening.

FRUSTRATED IN FLORIDA

DEAR FRUSTRATED: Some people are more thoughtless than malicious. I hope this reminds those who carry tales to use their heads.

DEAR ABBY: Single American women shouldn't complain about the "Ms." title.

In Australia an unmarried woman—be she 18 or 80—is officially listed as a "spinster" on her passport!

AMAZED IN AMERICA

DEAR ABBY: I recently attended a large shower for a young bride-to-be.

After the bride opened all the gifts, she passed around some note-sized envelopes and asked every guest to address an envelope to herself! I had never seen this done before.

Some girls thought it was practical. Others called it tacky. What do you think?

WONDERING

DEAR WONDERING: I think it's a clever time-saver. I would not call it tacky.

New Zealand Menu Offers Tasty Dishes

By TOM HOGE AP Wine and Food Writer

I had never eaten a New Zealand dinner until recently, when that island nation exhibited the art of its Maori people at New York's Metropolitan Museum.

To launch the show, the sponsors gave a banquet at Maxwell's Plum Restaurant in New York. It was a sumptuous spread, featuring a cross section of New Zealand's finest dishes, from the island's lamb to the emerald green kiwifruit that is becoming so popular in America.

Other specialties included a kiwi clam chowder, South Sea mussels and smoked eel with a horseradish sauce. All this was washed down with some excellent New Zealand wines and an island beer.

With cocktails we had tiny lamb chops served cold with a garlic and ginger sauce. Also offered was a pate made from New Zealand venison. Both the native deer and the lamb are frozen for the export market, we were told.

For dessert, kiwifruit was the star, including dishes topped with whipped cream and tarts where the fruit was combined with custard and chocolate.

It has taken Americans some time to get used to kiwifruit, with its fuzzy brown outer covering. But once you slice through that, you discover the bright green interior and tiny black seeds that are also edible. This unusual fruit is not only a delicious dessert, but it makes a fine snack and a good accompaniment to meat dishes.

New Zealanders use their lamb in many ways, including stuffed loin and a mustard-dressed rack. They also feature a cold lamb tossed with pasta and yogurt and mint dressing. That chilled salad and the chops served with the drinks were the first cold lamb dishes I have ever eaten. I can live without either of them, but the hot dishes are great.

New Zealand cooks often get three meals out of a lamb leg by asking the butcher to cut it into four chops, two steaks and a small roast.

Here is a native recipe for stuffed lamb loins.

- 4 ounces bacon, chopped
- 1 1/2 cups chopped onion
- 10 ounces frozen chopped kale

- 10 ounces frozen chopped spinach
- 1/2 cup grated Parmesan cheese
- 2 eggs, beaten
- 1 teaspoon salt
- 1/4 teaspoon ground pepper
- 4 loins lamb, trimmed
- Beef stock

In skillet, saute bacon until almost crisp; add onion and cook until translucent. Add thawed and drained kale and spinach; cook 10 minutes over medium heat. Remove from heat; add cheese, eggs, salt and pepper, and mix well. Cool to room temperature. Flatten each loin slightly with mallet. Spread stuffing over 2 loins. Place remaining 2 loins over stuffing. Shape and tie to form 2 log-shaped rolls. Brown loins in hot butter on all sides. Bake in preheated 375-degree oven for 30 minutes or until meat is pink and stuffing heated through. Remove string and slice each roll into six 1-inch slices. Add beef stock to pan juices and pour over lamb. Serves 4 people, 3 slices each. Good with a chilled dry white wine.

STAIN-RESISTANT TEETH

If any of your teeth are so badly stained that bleaching techniques can not restore a natural look, there's another method that may work for you. It's called the plastic veneer technique.

A very thin plastic veneer can be bonded to the stained tooth. Unlike bleaching which usually involves several treatments to achieve the desired color, the plastic veneer can be applied in a single treatment.

Application of a plastic veneer to stained or discolored teeth not only provides a highly-polished and stain-resistant surface, it can protect your teeth for a long time before another treatment is needed.

Badly stained teeth not only detract from your smile, they also detract from your whole appearance. But you don't have to feel self-conscious about stained teeth any longer.

Ask your dentist about applying a plastic veneer. Then open your mouth and smile. smile. smile.

Edmisten

It is not difficult to predict what the most perplexing problem to face the next governor of North Carolina will be. Education will require as much of his time and thought as anything.

While some will say it has been ever thus, we must recognize that the problems of public education will be particularly pressing in the next four years. That is true because, first, our schools are at a time of crisis. Morale is low. Discipline is frequently lacking and sometimes parents complain about poor teaching. Teachers complain that no one cares, or that parents will not cooperate, and poor pay. On top of all that is the prediction that we are facing a dire teachers' shortage, already made apparent by the number and caliber of students enrolling in education programs.

No governor can ignore this situation. He must use his influence to help improve college education programs and attract better students. He must do all he can to retain superior teachers in our schools.

All that comes down to careful management of the state's finances since certainly anything done to improve public education is going to have to be built on better salaries for teachers.

Gubernatorial candidate Rufus Edmisten has given the problems of education careful thought. He feels that only the best should be admitted to teacher education programs and this should be the first step to improving the schools. Only the best should graduate "and then when they graduate, we know we have a good teacher, and then those teachers should be paid a good, decent wage."

Edmisten also stands on his record as an attorney general who has fought for the consumer and he has plans for a crime victim compensation fund.

Rufus Edmisten has been very much involved in state government of North Carolina for a number of years. Now he is the Democratic nominee for governor and he has clear cut plans for dealing with North Carolina's problems. He has our endorsement to be our state's next governor.

Conspiracy

An Italian judge's indictment charging the attempted assassination of Pope John Paul II was an international conspiracy and that two gunmen shot at the pope (seven people have been indicted, one is imprisoned) opens a large can of worms.

Four Turkish terrorists (guns for hire?) and three Bulgarians have been indicted.

The findings followed three years of painstaking investigation and cannot be taken lightly. Too, the evidence must have been very convincing, otherwise the charge would have carried some sort of conditional shading. News accounts carry no such taint.

Onlookers are left to speculate as to what interests would most directly benefit from the murder of John Paul, as well as who would have the resources and access to people with a demonstrated capability for carrying out such a conspiracy.

The indictment does not identify a prime mover; but the rest of the world is less inclined to such compunction; the unspoken suspicions carry a stigma that will remain alive for many years.

Economy Lands At Uncertain Intersection

NEW YORK (AP) — The economy is at one of those intersections that appears every two or three years, and that means it is the time once again when almost anything can be said and taken seriously by somebody.

Intersections, or crossroads as they used to say before there were overpasses, underpasses, cloverleaves and the like, present the possibility of change — and nobody knows much about that subject. Oddly, the lack of knowledge results not in less said, as you would expect, but instead in an outpouring of opinion. This year, with the intersection coinciding with a presidential election, the outpouring is like that from a burst pipe.

The big question is this: Will the current slowdown in economic growth lead to a soft landing, as they say, or will the economy hit hard and dig its nose into the ground?

Always, you may be sure of it, there will be those who seek to be first in declaring that a recession exists. But even if a new recession sets in, it is difficult to name a victor, since some began saying so two years ago.

"The highly touted soft landing in the economy is turning into a recession," says Roger Williams of Williams Trend Indicators, who describes himself as a "noted economist."

On one matter at least he is right on the mark. "The problem with economic turning points," he observes, "is that we are usually well into them before we realize it — before we've correctly read the signals."

In years past, most economists accepted the word of the National Bureau of Economic Research as to when a recession began, and subscribed also to the notion that a downturn wasn't a recession until it persisted for two quarters.

That's a bit late to be making preparations, of course, and most people who analyze economies, no matter how badly they do, are paid to forewarn. And so they look for omens and portents, which they call signals.

Williams, for example, cites a weak stock market and a decline in orders reported by purchasing managers. All that is needed do a confirm a recession, he says, is a decline in industrial production.

Few would subscribe to a definition so broad.

Wright Investors' Service, which watches the economy in the interest of its stock portfolios, is watching many other signs of a slowdown in growth, among them a diminishing level of growth in gross national product, a flattening in retail sales, anemic growth in personal consumption spending, a decline in durable goods spending, and what it feels is a decline in consumer confidence.

It is not so sure, however, that a recession is likely. The possibility cannot so easily be made a probability, it says, observing that "it is problematical" whether the contraction "will be of sufficient severity."

The fact is nobody knows, and that is especially true this time around. The cloverleaves are very complex things and nobody really can figure them out. At the same time, they allow for a complexity of interpretations.

The most direct of these interpretations is that we "must" be approaching a recession because everyone knows the economy is a cyclical thing that grows and contracts, and it should be about time for one of those contractions.

Adding to this feeling is some fear and guilt over some matters that haven't been attended to, such as the big budget deficit and the big bad loans of the big banks and household debt and the imbalance of trade payments.

And the most interesting of the interpretations is that there might be a situation that isn't a recession, nor an expansion either, but something called a growth recession, in which the economy moves ahead, but very sluggishly.

And the most heartening interpretation is one that you'll hear a lot of this week. It is that the decline in the prime interest rate could spread to other lending rates and, of all things, reignite the sputtering expansion.

Strength For Today

As long as we live in this trouble-infested world of ours we must confront the reality of conflict.

We should like to feel that the day will come when there will be no conflict among men. In fact that day will indeed come, but it will come not as the result of our growth and maturity but as God's gift. The new heaven and the new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness will not be a realm made perfect by our efforts, but a realm made perfect undecided will be contacted again. The party turns their names over to the individual campaigns of the Democratic candidates. Those campaigns will mail material on their candidate to the Democrat, make telephone calls to that Democrat and possibly have a local precinct worker visit him at home. The Hunt campaign identified 65,000 such Democrats months ago and, through its "neighbors" program, has been seeking to turn them into Hunt voters.

Once the party becomes fairly certain that a voter supports most of the Democratic slate, the voter's name goes onto another list. On Election Day, Democratic poll watchers will collect the names of everyone who has voted up to a certain time. If someone on their list has not voted, they'll make a call to that person's home to remind them to vote.

In the canvassing, the party also finds favorable voters who need either a ride to the polls or a babysitter and that service is offered to the voter. By mid-October, the Democrats figured they'd make 200,000 phone calls in this campaign.

While Flaherty doesn't put much stock in GOTV, the GOP is conducting three separate phone banks statewide. The party, Helms and gubernatorial candidate Jim Martin are all running separate phone banks as part of GOTV efforts, but Flaherty would not say how many people are involved.

Part of this year's GOTV apparently will involve assuring that people who get to the polls get to vote.

Democrats suspect that the GOP plans to challenge the residency of some people voting in predominantly Democratic precincts. The Helms campaign has mailed postcards to a number of Democrats, says the Hunt campaign, in an effort to find out if these people have moved. (The post office will return the cards if they have moved.)

Just in case a voter is successfully challenged, Democrats plan to have volunteer drivers at these precincts to transport challenged voters to the county elections headquarters where state law says they may vote.

Public Forum

To the editor: Roger Fischer (Today Show, Oct. 25, 1984), a professor at the Harvard Law School, spoke for a future Peace Institute when he said words to the effect: "If you go around asking people what side they are on, putting them into locked positions, you will get arguments and confrontation. If you ask people what the problem is and they can describe it, you get better results in solving the problem."

If countries continue to argue, drawing other countries into their armed camps, we are not going to be able to pay committed attention to the extremely serious problems of the pollution of our water table, the tragedy of occupational diseases like hard metal disease, the increasing deserts of the world, the killing of the rain forests, the famine in Ethiopia, the disappeared children.

We can't explore and make efficiently available the full potential of solar/wind energy, innovative housing materials and concepts, new food products from traditional or overlooked crops, fresh and better ways of teaching our youngsters how to cope in the world we have made for them.

Fewer bike paths will be made, fewer dangerous bridges rebuilt. Fewer Olympic athletes will enjoy the real chance to compete.

But there will be more nightmares for our children, more despondency and psychic numbing, more words to add to our vocabulary of fallout, burnout, overkill.

Do we wait for hope or do we work for it?

The Task Of Getting Out The Vote

—Paul O'Connor—

RALEIGH — When the polls open Nov. 6, the politicians will have talked themselves dry and it will be up to their political workers to take over. It won't matter one hoot if a candidate leads in the public opinion polls on Monday. It only matters who gets more votes on Tuesday. Making sure that a candidate's supporters get to the polls is the job of that candidate's workers.

This year, the Democratic Party is relying heavily on its sophisticated "Get Out The Vote" effort. In the 1982 congressional elections, the Democrats think their grassroots organization was the decisive factor in winning back two U.S. House seats which had been lost in 1980 and holding several others which were seriously challenged. This year, the Democrats hope "GOTV" will tip the scales to Jim Hunt in his bid to unseat Sen. Jesse Helms and to several congressional candidates in equally tight races.

The Republicans are also operating GOTV efforts but state GOP Chairman Dave Flaherty discounts their value. "They aren't going to turn out anyone if they don't want to vote. People vote when they're turned on," he said.

There are several steps to the GOTV effort, said David Price, state Democratic chairman. For months, party workers have been calling registered Democrats, asking them how they plan to vote. Their responses are coded on a computer print-out obtained from registration files.

Democrats who say they'll vote for Republicans are forgotten. "We're not trying to convert anybody. We're just trying to shore up your Democrats," Price said.

Listening Is Important

WASHINGTON — Every once in a while we'll meet an older or retired businessman at some social gathering. We'll explain that we're in business for ourselves, and the fellow will usually remark, "I'm sure glad I'm not starting out in business today."

More often than not, we hear that gloomy statement regardless of the industry or occupation at issue. It comes, in fact, from those in leadership positions who confront a myriad of daily challenges.

There was a time, they say, when fat paychecks were only one of the rewards of management. Executives drew added satisfaction from controlling their own destiny and ruling a family of loyal employees.

Nowadays, however, not only have the rules of the game become more cumbersome, but workers — even the ambitious types — are less respectful. They're beginning to understand Rodney Dangerfield's complaint.

Health plans, stock options and sports club memberships are apparently insufficient. Single employees increasingly want their live-in lovers covered under their company health plan. Last summer, the Berkeley (Calif.) school system authorized its health insurer to cover couples without regard to their marital status or sexuality. As state and local governments match Berkeley's example, the private sector will likely follow.

Meanwhile, the comparable worth movement, despite counterattacks, seems to be taking hold in the wake of its endorsement by the Washington State Supreme Court. So far, only three states have flirted with legislation that would cover private employees. But three have adopted comparable worth measures for public employees, and 17 others have considered them. Barring successful lobbying by business, the notion of equal pay for similarly demanding work is likely to become the norm.

Not surprisingly, their different perspectives on these issues have helped to polarize workers and bosses. But some researchers say that a more combative, self-destructive relationship has evolved over time.

In an on-going, 14-year study of more than 250,000 employees at 200 U.S. companies, Opinion Research Corp. has found that secretaries and clerical workers are more critical of their companies' managers than upper-level employees. The researchers found a continuing decline in the ratings given by employees to top management and supervisory personnel, and less perceived desire on the part of managers to listen to employee problems.

Opinion Research also has concluded that only 21 percent of all clerical employees believe their employers treat them fairly. Also, only 53 percent of professional employees give their companies a favorable rating, compared to 66 percent 10 years ago.

"There is a crisis of confidence in corporate leadership today," says William A. Schieman, one of the study's authors. "We find more employees questioning the actions of their senior managers all the time." Schieman contends that lower level employees — not just managers — are asking about their companies' futures.

The 1981-82 recession, Schieman adds, only aggravated the inherent friction between boss and bossed. The downturn prompted many companies to reduce overhead, including payrolls, in the hope of becoming more competitive. Unfortunately, he says, such adjustments have improved neither the lot of employees nor corporate financial prospects.

With the ever-looming prospect of outside takeovers, and increased demands from employees, it's no wonder so many CEOs are uptight. For them, management has become a seemingly no-win game of demands and ingratitude.

Book Claims Reagan Boosted By Helms, Tobacco Interests

By The Associated Press
The tobacco issue cost both former President Jimmy Carter and former U.S. Sen. Robert Morgan their jobs and, with the aid of Sen. Jesse Helms, helped put Ronald Reagan in the White House, a new book by a British author says.

"In the presidential election of November 1980, Jimmy Carter lost tobacco, North Carolina and the presidency. Jesse Helms gave Ronald Reagan the state and with $5.5 million raised by his political machine, helped put Reagan and tobacco in the White House," Peter Taylor's book, "The Smoke Ring," says.

The book, which was published this fall, said Carter's administration was perceived as generally anti-tobacco, primarily because of Joseph A. Califano's campaign against cigarettes. Taylor says the former Department of Health, Education and Welfare secretary lost his job over his anti-smoking zeal.

Taylor said Reagan's 1980 election marked a new beginning for tobacco and quoted Helms aide George Dunlop as saying, "The context of the Reagan commitment to tobacco can only really be fully understood in the context of the full-scale, anti-tobacco assault emanating from every pore and fibre of the Carter administration. It's like night and day in terms of the way tobacco's being treated now."

Morgan, whom Taylor said was a casualty of Helms' manipulation of the tobacco issue, said Helms and Reagan oppose all farm programs.

"And I'll guarantee you that if they get re-elected, you won't see any farm programs ... there will not be a tobacco farm program in another two years," he said in a telephone interview last week.

Helms has frequently said during his campaign against Gov. Jim Hunt that his position as chairman of the Senate Agriculture Committee is the only thing keeping the federal tobacco support program going.

Dunlop said last week that Helms has fought for and won on every piece of pro-tobacco legislation that has come up in the Senate since his election in 1972. Dunlop conceded that Helms has compromised at times to save tobacco from a worse fate. For example, the 1981 farm bill provides that tobacco farmers must pay the costs of running the tobacco support program.

While Dunlop said tobacco has more friends in Washington than at any time in the past 10 years, Taylor wrote that tobacco interests can take credit for building those friendships.

"The political lesson is clear: any Republican who hopes to win national office has to win over Democrats in tobacco country; and any Democrat who hopes to stay in Washington has to hold on to tobacco," Taylor wrote. "President Carter, as a Southern politician himself, knew the lesson as well as anybody. North Carolina was vital to his plans for re-election."

Carter fired Califano in 1979, but the damage had been done, Taylor notes.

Also in that election, Morgan lost his seat to Republican John East.

Jim Cain of the National Congressional Club, a political organization founded by Helms, is quoted by Taylor as saying, "That's what we beat over Jimmy Carter's head. Califano was killing tobacco and Califano was Jimmy Carter's right-hand man. We used that issue more than any other in the state to kill Carter — and we used it against Robert Morgan."

Morgan recalled that his 7,000-vote defeat came after Republicans ran a last-minute television show. "And it talked about how I was opposed to tobacco and how I had damaged the program."

Morgan said the message was grossly unfair.

Space Teacher

HUNTSVILLE, Ala. (AP) — The teacher chosen to fly aboard the space shuttle in 1986 will need at least five years of teaching experience, low blood pressure and good hearing, a NASA official says.

Alan Ladwig, director of NASA's Space Flight Participation Program, said applications from interested elementary and secondary teachers will be accepted from Dec. 1 to Feb. 1. The winner, chosen from a field of 10 finalists picked on July 4, 1985, will become the first non-astronaut in space.

He said the winning teacher must be able to adapt to flight experience and mission activities and be willing to contract with NASA for public lectures for one year following the flight.

Medical requirements include a blood pressure level less than 160 over 100 and the ability to hear whispered speech at three feet, he said.

Five Hurt In Weekend Collisions

Five persons were reported injured and an estimated $12,100 damage resulted from four traffic collisions investigated by Greenville police over the weekend.

Officers said heaviest damage resulted when cars driven by Vickie Forrest Wiggs of 105 Terrace Circle and Julia Harrison Snyder of 212 S. Pitt St., collided about 10 a.m. Sunday at the intersection of Cotanche and Tenth Streets.

Police, who said both of the drivers and two passengers in the Snyder car were injured, estimated damage at $2,000 to the Wiggs car and $5,000 to the Snyder vehicle.

Investigators said cars driven by Clifton Thomas McCall of Route 9, Kinston, and Linda Lou Smith of 102 Park Drive, collided about 1:55 a.m. Saturday at the intersection of Cotanche Street and Reade Circle, causing an estimated $1,800 damage to the McCall car and $2,400 damage to the Smith vehicle.

McCall was charged with hit and run driving and driving while impaired, while Ms. Smith was charged with driving while impaired following investigation of the mishap.

Marty Leon Swinson, 21 of Route 2, Jamesville, was reported injured when struck by a car driven by Travis Duncan of 1811 Battle Drive about 2:40 a.m. Saturday on Tenth Street, 210 feet west of the Monroe Street intersection.

No charges were made in connection with the accident and no damage resulted to the Duncan car.

A 10:02 p.m. collision Saturday on Tenth Street, 50 feet east of the Clares Street intersection involved cars driven by Anthony Glenn Staton of Route 6, Greenville, and Kerry Patrick House of Route 1, Farmville.

Police, who charged Staton with following too close, set damage at $500 to the Staton car and $400 to the House auto.

Agricultural Extension Agent
For years horticulturists have recommended the incorporation of organic matter into backfill soil when planting individual trees and shrubs. This recommendation, because of recent university research results, has been slightly changed.

Several factors will determine whether or not to add organic matter. Much information is available now on water movement in various soil structures and water relationships in soil and backfill medias. Everyone is aware of problems caused by too little or too much water and that either condition can cause plant stress and decline. The key to whether or not to amend soils with organic matter is generally determined on how the plant was grown and what type of soil is at the planting site.

Most field grown trees are dug, sold and planted as B&B (balled and burlapped). The old recommendation of digging a large hole and adding organic matter provided good results because of the large planting pit size and not the addition of organic matter. By disturbing and improving the soil structure in compacted soils, the roots are able to establish quicker. Additions of fertilizers low in nitrogen and high in phosphorus and potash to the backfill will also aid root growth. Both materials are not easily leached to the roots when applied to the soil surface while nitrogen is. By slightly raising the planting height, drainage is also improved.

Moisture relationships are very important in the first growing season of a newly planted tree or shrub. Most container grown ornamentals are produced in a loose, porous, soilless media. These mixtures where 100 percent of the roots are located, dry out very quickly. (Nurserymen find it necessary to water on a daily basis.) After being planted in the landscape, it is necessary to keep the roots from becoming too dry during the long, hot summer days. The surrounding soil in a bed could become completely saturated following irrigation and could remain wet for several days. Meanwhile the media — as it loses moisture faster than soil — could dry out. Research indicates the lack of water movement from one bulk density (soil) to another bulk density (media); that's why it is necessary to get the roots in contact with soil when planting — i.e., be sure to disturb the root system when locating the plant in the hole. Don't be misled to water only when the soil dries out — the media probably was dry long before.

Mounding a ring around the stem and root system is a good practice which will allow water to move downward to the roots and not become runoff. Azaleas are extremely sensitive to this problem of drying out during the establishment period. An appropriate watering schedule would be one which provides water often during the early establishment and growing period, thus directing the roots out into the surrounding backfill and soil. This schedule should change to allow less frequent applications as the plant becomes established.

In summary:

1) Good drainage is essential for plant growth and development; therefore, always provide adequate drainage.

2) When planting B&B material where soil is in the rootball, dig a large hole, backfill with native soil and mulch well. (In grey or white "plastic-type" soils, organic matter has proven to aid in aeration. In sandy soils, organic matter helps hold moisture.)

3) When planting container-grown plants, disturb the root system, add organic matter in the backfill, thus creating a homogeneous mix between roots and surrounding area.

4) A three- or four-inch layer of organic mulch can be applied to any newly planted tree or shrub bed area.

YOU CAN'T HAVE IT BOTH WAYS MR. TAFT!

TOM TAFT...LIBERAL, CONSERVATIVE, OR MODERATE?

On May 30, 1984, my opponent, Tom Taft, speaking to the Beaufort County Democratic Women said he was a "moderate" and even admitted he was "liberal on some issues". (Washington Daily News May 31, 1984)

Taft is passing out literature and information saying he is conservative.

TOM TAFT...A COG IN THE HUNT MACHINE

Tom Taft has long been closely allied with Jim Hunt. Taft's political resume consists almost entirely of political plums he received as a loyal foot soldier in the Hunt organization. The connection goes back to Hunt's term as Lieutenant Governor, when Taft was employed in Hunt's office. That has long been Hunt's so-called "KEY" (Key Supporter) in Pitt County.

Jim Hunt is certainly no conservative. And Tom Taft isn't either!

MAYNARD WATERS...A MAN WHO KNOWS WHERE HE STANDS

Maynard Waters doesn't have to put his finger in the air to see which way the wind is blowing to know what his political philosophy is. He is a conservative. He has always been a conservative. He aligns himself with Ronald Reagan, Jesse Helms and Jim Martin, not Walter Mondale, Jim Hunt, and Rufus Edmisten.

Let's elect a genuine conservative!

Maybe you should consider where you'll be in 150 years.

The thought of it isn't pleasant. But your own bodily mortality is something somebody's going to have to deal with sooner or later.

So, instead of putting on blinders, why don't you consider the options? Find out a little about what happens after you pass away. The laws and the facts that govern the cemetery business. When you do, we're certain you'll see the advantages that Pinewood Memorial Park, managed by S.G. Wilkerson and Sons, offers over new, private ventures.

Just what is 'Perpetual Care'?

The State of North Carolina requires privately-owned cemeteries to meet certain requirements in order to call themselves 'Perpetual Care' cemeteries.

The law requires that a certain amount from the sale of each grave be set aside in a fund. Interest earned from the dollars in that fund is required to be used for upkeep in the cemetery.

However, S.G. Wilkerson and Sons, has never considered the required amount to be sufficient. Therefore, over the years, the contributions to the fund have been much larger than the amount required.

The results are obvious. With a 25-year growth of mature centipede sod, the cemetery grounds are now beautiful. The infrequent maintenance problems are quickly attended to. Plot buyers in Pinewood select from the grounds themselves, not from a notebook of what cemetery owners hope the grounds will look like years from now. Fact is, it takes years of careful maintenance for a cemetery to really look groomed and cared for.

And all Pinewood graves have the low profile and dignity of a flat bronze marker — better for everyone. What may surprise you the most is the fact that the total Pinewood Memorial Park costs are less, not more, than "package deals".

Let us tell you more. We'd like to explain more. Because we'd like you to make an informed decision about this matter which you and your family should take seriously.

The Wilkerson family has been in this business for many years. So talk to us before you buy anything. We'll respect your decision. But we want you to be sure you know what you're doing.

Police Look For Abducted Polish Priest

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Divers were failed to find the body of a pro-Solidarity priest during a search of the Vistula River close to where the priest was abducted on Oct. 19, Warsaw Radio reported today.

An Interior Ministry communique said the search for the priest, the Rev. Jerzy Popieluszko, was continuing with "highly specialized equipment," the state-run radio said.

The Interior Ministry has said the priest was kidnapped and possibly killed by three of its own security officers but that the body has not been found.

According to the communique, one of the officers said he killed Popieluszko and threw his body into the Vistula near the northern city of Torun, where the abduction occurred. The communique said the two other men "pointed to a bay (on the river) near Wloclawek," a town about 30 miles southeast of Torun.

"The search conducted with the participation of divers brought no results and the victim hasn't been found yet," the radio report said. "According to experts at a place mentioned by the abductors there are strong currents, which make the search more difficult."

A captain and two lieutenants of the Interior Ministry have been charged in the abduction, according to Interior Minister Gen. Czeslaw Kiszczak. Kiszczak said the captain's claim that he killed Popieluszko had not been confirmed because all three officers gave conflicting testimony on the fate of the priest.

Kiszczak identified the captain as Grzegorz Piotrowski and the lieutenants as Waldemar Chmielewski and Leszek Pekala.

Solidarity leader Lech Walesa urged supporters at a Mass on Sunday to avoid being provoked into "bloody revolution" by the kidnapping of Popieluszko.

Walesa told a crowd in Gdansk, where strikes in 1980 led to the founding of Solidarity, that the kidnapping may have been an attempt to provoke the government's opponents.

The labor leader said in a telephone interview that he told the worshippers: "We won't let anybody pull us into brawls in which we will lose. We simply cannot let anybody manipulate us into any situation.

"If somebody assumed it would be a revolution, I won't give him a bloody revolution. I am for peaceful evolution," said Walesa, winner of the 1983 Nobel Peace Prize.

Church officials estimated that 50,000 people came to another Mass on Sunday, at St. Stanislaw Kostka Church in Warsaw, where Popieluszko's sermons championing Solidarity would regularly draw thousands of listeners.

The crowd was one of the largest at a Mass in Warsaw since Pope John Paul II visited his native Poland in 1983.

Police stepped up patrols in the streets of the capital, where concentrations of police vehicles, including water cannon, were stationed at at least five points.

Polish leader Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski was quoted as saying authorities would firmly deal with "anti-socialist forces" he said were stirring unrest and "trying to prey on a provocation."

The service at Popieluszko's church was a "Mass for the Homeland," which the missing priest had given on the last Sunday of each month since January 1982, one month after the imposition of martial law by the Communist regime. Solidarity was suppressed under the military crackdown.

Before the start of Sunday's service, recorded sermons by the priest were broadcast over loudspeakers.

At St. John's Cathedral in Warsaw, Cardinal Jozef Glemp, the Roman Catholic primate of Poland, compared the abduction of Popieluszko to the May 1981 shooting of John Paul, and said the priest's followers should bear their suffering as the pope bore his.

Walesa said he told the crowd in Gdansk that Popieluszko's fate was still uncertain. He said he dissuaded many who wanted to march to a monument to workers outside the gate of the Lenin Shipyard.

"I told them that we can march in a crowd of several thousand to the monument, and be beaten with clubs — and if worse comes to worse — be shot, and we have no chance," he said.

In Rome, the pope told a crowd of several thousand people: "We ask God to give peace to our country. We ask that this new suffering may serve as a spiritual renewal for our nation."

Italy's state-run RAI radio reported that John Paul heard the news about Popieluszko's possible death "with dismay and great worry" and followed reports on the case "late into the night."

Dangerous Mistake

BERWICK, Pa. (AP) — Workers at the Susquehanna nuclear power plant apparently neglected to review computer data, leaving a problem with its shutoff mechanism unnoticed; a federal official said.

The problem with the Unit 1 control rods, which first occurred in June, was not noticed until a similar problem this month, said Gary M. Holahan of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission.

The NRC's review of the equipment and reporting failures could result in a fine for Pennsylvania Power & Light Co., which operates the plant, Holahan said Sunday.

Snow Booklet Not Foolproof, Expert Warns

By TOM MINEHART
Associated Press Writer

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — The Jacobsen Snow Almanac of Charlotte, but a meteorologist at the North Carolina center says it's not an infallible forecaster for U.S. snowfall.

"I'd take it with a grain of salt," Vince Cinquemani said in a telephone interview from the Asheville center. "It's not useless, but it is useless as prediction."

The almanac, in its fifth edition, is produced by Homelite-Jacobsen Consumer Products of Charlotte, which manufactures snowblowing equipment. Consumer advertising manager Bob Rhoades, who compiled the snow predictions, said they were based on a computer analysis of National Climatic Center data.

"They give us 40 years worth of statistics on snowfall from 114 cities nationwide," he said. "Out of all these statistics, the computer spits out the first and last snowfall, total accumulations and whether this year's snowfall will be heavier than last year's."

For example, the almanac says Caribou, Maine, will lead the nation with 121 inches of accumulated snow — about 13 inches less than last year. Rhoades said the computer takes weather cycles into account, and the almanac says the average snowfall accumulation nationwide will be about 11 percent less than last year.

"They're just using past data to project what will happen this year," said Cinquemani. "You can't do that."

The National Climatic Center issues its own predictions for the winter, but they're based on observations of ongoing factors including the jet stream and ocean water temperatures, he said.

Still, Rhoades said many of the almanac's predictions have been accurate.

Last year it predicted Syracuse, N.Y., would get 110 inches of snow and it actually got 113 inches.

"We don't claim to be meteorologists here," he said. "But we do know enough that ... past forecasts, record mean annual snowfall and the accumulations of the past 40 years are of interest. There isn't anything dramatically out of line. If we say there's going to be 110 inches, we might end up with 130 or 101. We never end up with 20 if we predict 120."

The almanac lists 114 cities with the date of the last snowfall of 1983-84, record mean snowfall, the predicted dates of the first and last snowfalls of 1984-85 and predicted total accumulation.

Charlotte is predicted to get 8 inches this winter, with the first snowfall coming on Dec. 7. Greensboro is predicted to get 7.7 inches beginning on Dec. 16, Raleigh 8.7 inches beginning on Dec. 24 and Asheville 19.4 inches beginning on Nov. 25.

The almanac is given away free by Homelite-Jacobsen dealers around the nation and mailed free to people who request it from the company in Charlotte. Some 100,000 of the booklets are produced every year, and the almanacs have become so popular that the company may accept advertising and sell them, Rhoades said.

Along with snowfall predictions are stories, jokes, riddles and short articles on snow related subjects from long Johns to the Trans-Siberian Railroad written by Len Kessler, a New York-based writer of children's books.

Greenville police have arrested two men on drug possession charges. Officer R.J. Brewington said William Earl Leitch of 116B Brookwood Drive was charged about 1:47 a.m. Sunday with possession of marijuana and driving while impaired after his vehicle was stopped at the intersection of Tenth Street and Brownlea Drive. 'Healing Arts' Event Scheduled

By CAROL TYER
Reflector Staff Writer

A "Healing Arts Festival" to be held here Saturday is to be a reflection of the philosophy and purpose of the Wholistic Life Network of Greenville which is sponsoring the event. The largest single event the network has sponsored so far, the festival will be held from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. at Pitt Community College. It will be composed of 17 different workshops scheduled throughout the day so each participant can attend six different ones. Choices of topics will vary from attitudinal transformation to tai chi (an oriental exercise discipline) to dream study to journal keeping. The cost will be $10 for the day or $3 for any single session. Babysitting will be offered for 75 cents an hour. The Wholistic Life Network is composed of Greenville area people banded together to bring awareness and attainment of wholeness to themselves and to share it with who seek it. The network Greenville has as its premise: wellness of body, mind and spirit is the birthright and the personal responsibility of each of us.

The network of individuals interested in promoting personal growth and health has been formed since early last summer into a non-profit organization which has a stated philosophy, is proposing bylaws and dues, is looking at having a "wellness center" later on, and is promoting various workshops to present both conventional and alternative approaches to health enhancement.

Various approaches to optimal nutrition and exercise and tension release are taught. So are alternative healing methods like acupuncture and therapeutic touch. Guidance has been given by the Community Wholistic Health Center of Chapel Hill, already in operation for several years, and by the North Carolina Wellness Network to which many of the local participants belong.

Members of the organization come from all walks of life, but many are physical and mental health practitioners. Sam Arnett teaches architectural drafting at Pitt Community College as his vocation, but he pursues such seemingly unrelated disciplines as massage and meditation in his leisure hours. Karen Tarlo and Mary Elesha-Adams are nurses. Hazel Riddle is a housewife who says she cured herself of arthritis through nutrition. Linda O'Brien is a psychological counselor. David Baughan is a family physician. Joe Hill is a college professor. Steve Cohen is a chiropractor who encourages natural ways of healing oneself.

To preregister for the festival or obtain further information on the festival or the organization, call 758-4156 or 946-7682.

A FOOT MASSAGE WORKSHOP...is an activity that the Wholistic Health Network has offered to the community several times since its inception last summer.

Relatives Protest At Red Cross

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — About 500 relatives of Iranian prisoners of war and Iranians missing in Iraq staged a protest today outside the Tehran office of the Red Cross, the official Iranian news agency reported.

The demonstrators reportedly called on the Red Cross to remain neutral on issues involving POWs, protested what they called "the inhuman treatment" of Iranian POWs in Iraq, and demanded facilities be set up so relatives could visit the POWs.

The Islamic Republic News Agency report, monitored in Nicosia, said the demonstrators dispersed peacefully.

On Sunday, Mohammad Jaafar Mahallati, a senior official of the Iranian Foreign Ministry, accused the International Committee of the Red Cross of using reports about a riot by Iraqi prisoners of war in Iran as "a propaganda tool against Iran."

Mahallati said Iran was ready to allow the United Nations to investigate the incident if a similar inquiry was carried out on the fate of 10,000 Iranian citizens listed as missing in Iraq since the outbreak of the Iran-Iraq war four years ago.

Jean-Jacques Kurtz, a Red Cross spokesman in Geneva, Switzerland, said last week that three Red Cross representatives saw Iranian guards shoot and kill six Iraqi POWs during a riot at a northern Iranian prison camp Oct. 10. The Red Cross delegates also reported visiting 38 POWs hospitalized after being wounded by the guards' gunfire.

Mahallati said the Red Cross distorted the report on the riot. He said five POWs died in the riot, that the disturbance occurred Oct. 9, and that three of the dead were hacked to pieces by fellow prisoners, IRNA reported.

The agency quoted Mahallati as saying the riot "had been pre-planned by a group of Iraqi POWs. It started when one of the prisoners sparked off a protest by other prisoners when he gave false information to a Red Cross official on conditions in the camp."

"The camp went into chaos and a group of POWs who had prepared themselves for this riot beforehand attacked the guards to overpower them. Some of them attacked the opposing POWs, killing three of them in horrible way by slicing them into pieces."

Mahallati said guards used plastic bullets and water cannon to break up the riot, IRNA said.

In Geneva, Kurtz said he would have no comment on the Iranian claims.

British Troops Ambushed

LONDONDERRY, Northern Ireland (AP) — Guerrillas ambushed a British army patrol in Londonderry early today and bombed a car showroom in the border town of Newry, police reported.

A police spokesman, Inspector Albert Matchett, said the snipers opened up on the patrol as it moved through the staunchly Roman Catholic Bogside district of Londonderry. No casualties were reported.

Matchett said the showroom in Newry was badly damaged by the bomb blast.

Police said a passer-by spotted the bomb outside the showroom and raised an alarm. No one was hurt in the explosion.

Police blamed the outlawed Irish Republican Army for the attacks. The overwhelmingly Roman Catholic guerrillas have intensified their operations in recent weeks.

The IRA is fighting to end British rule in Protestant-dominated Northern Ireland and unite it with the Catholic Irish Republic.

Hospitalized

NUREMBERG, West Germany (AP) — Twenty-one Turks, including eight children, were hospitalized for smoke inhalation Saturday after an arsonist set fire to a four-story building where they lived, police said.

The unknown arsonist struck when most of the residents were asleep and panic-stricken people screamed for help from the windows.

When Walter Jones Asks For Your Vote...

Ask Him Why He Endorses Walter Mondale.

Walter Jones was one of the earliest and most enthusiastic supporters of Walter Mondale. Walter Jones supports the taxing and spending programs of Walter Mondale and Tip O'Neill. And, as your Congressman, he has publicly stated that the best way to trim the deficit is through defense and foreign aid cuts. It's the same old line. More for domestic programs. More taxes for you and me. $157 a month to be precise! The two Walters do not reflect the feelings of the majority of the people of the First District. The Campaign

Reagan

WASHINGTON (AP) — Opening the last full week of the 1984 campaign, President Reagan is striving today to solidify his narrow lead in Pennsylvania and to test his upbeat political style in economically troubled West Virginia.

The Reagan campaign script was taking the president first to a rally at Pennsylvania's Millersville University in Lancaster County, a Republican bastion in a region made famous by the nineteenth-century traditions of its Amish "Pennsylvania Dutch" farming community.

Lancaster County is part of the 16th Congressional District, which gave Reagan 67 percent of its presidential votes in 1980. He carried the state that year by a far slimmer 50 percent to 42 percent.

His second rally was set for the Delaware County courthouse in Media. The courthouse has been dominated by Republicans for more than a century and is part of a congressional district that gave Reagan 56 percent of its votes four years ago.

In Pennsylvania, where Reagan's opponent, Walter F. Mondale, was endorsed on Sunday by the Philadelphia Inquirer, private polls show Reagan's lead has dropped over the past month but that he still leads Mondale by a slim margin.

Republicans say they have no fears Mondale will pull ahead to capture the state's 25 electoral votes.

"I think the president's lead is documented in all of the polls as safe," said Gov. Dick Thornburg.

Reagan has campaigned in Pennsylvania only once before this year. He addressed a Polish-American picnic at a Roman Catholic shrine in Doylestown on Sept. 9.

From Pennsylvania, Reagan was flying to West Virginia for an afternoon rally at a high school in Parkersburg, in the west-central section of the state.

Mondale

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Walter F. Mondale is going for broke, spending the last week of the 1984 presidential campaign talking about higher taxes and accusing President Reagan of hiding in the White House and taking American voters for granted.

Beginning a grueling final eight days that will take him coast to coast, the Democratic presidential challenger said Sunday that Reagan has begun to isolate himself in the White House, even before next Tuesday's election.

"The administration has begun a strategy of hiding in the White House," he said at a new conference in San Francisco, taking note of the president's much more relaxed campaign schedule.

"They are taking the American people for granted," he said.

After a relaxing weekend at Camp David, the presidential retreat in the Maryland mountains, Reagan was heading out to resume campaigning today in Pennsylvania and West Virginia.

Democratic vice presidential candidate Geraldine Ferraro was campaigning today too, starting in Manhattan and Erie, Pa. Vice President George Bush was embarking on an eight-state trip, with the first stops Birmingham and Mobile, Ala.

Mondale, campaigning Sunday in California, had a text prepared for delivery at a rally at a San Jose high school in which he described his own proposal to increase income taxes for Americans earning more than $25,000 to help offset the huge federal deficit.

The text for the speech said: "I want Americans to know the truth about my plan. If you make $100,000, I'll raise your taxes by $1,800. But if you make $25,000, your taxes won't go up a dime." But on delivery to a crowd of about 1,500 people, Mondale omitted all specific references to his tax hike proposal.

Instead, he said, "I am saying I want taxes to be fair."

Bush

WASHINGTON (AP) — With just a week of campaigning remaining, Vice President George Bush is setting out on an eight-state march through territory that could yield exactly half of the votes President Reagan needs to win a second term.

In terms of electoral votes, Bush's itinerary will take him from the second largest state, New York, where the presidential race is regarded a toss-up, to one of the very smallest, Delaware, which is seen leaning toward Reagan.

The first stops were in Birmingham and Mobile, Ala., today. Peter Teeley, Bush's press secretary, said a major goal of the week was to try to help Republican congressional candidates.

"We're going to be making a concerted effort for challengers who look like they have a real chance of winning and incumbents who need a boost," Teeley said.

In terms of the president race, Teeley added, "There's probably little that can be done now in terms of us adding or subtracting a lot. The focus is on the top of the ticket, the presidential race."

Other states Bush is to visit before returning to Washington on Friday include Mississippi, Illinois, Pennsylvania, Ohio and Connecticut. Altogether, the eight states pack 135 of the 270 electoral votes needed to win the presidency.

Aside from the tight race in New York, Reagan is believed ahead in all the other states Bush will visit.

Bush took the day off from campaigning Sunday in the wake of a controversy he helped generate when he seemingly differed with Secretary of State George P. Shultz over the administration's policy against terrorism.

Trying to smooth over the dispute, Bush singled out Shultz for praise in a speech Saturday for having the State Department "focusing as never before ... on international terrorism and what can be done about it."

Even so, Bush did not specifically mention the issue of U.S. retaliation against terrorists, which had prompted the apparent disagreement earlier between him and Shultz.

Ferraro

NEW YORK (AP) — Geraldine A. Ferraro heads off today on the longest trek of her campaign for vice president — an eight-day, 14-state search for votes that will stretch right to Election Day.

The Democratic hopeful will be spending most of her time in the Northeast and Midwest, although she will again visit California for a final brief tour before the voting begins on Nov. 6.

Ms. Ferraro and running mate Walter F. Mondale are brushing aside polls saying they trail President Reagan and Vice President George Bush, with both Democrats saying the election isn't over yet as they campaign harder than ever.

The Ferraro journey begins today with stops in four states.

She was speaking to a Jewish group in Manhattan, then flying to Erie, Pa., for a rally and a news conference in a state the Democrats must win to have a chance on Election Day. Then it's on to Baltimore and Chicago before the day is over.

The rest of the eight days are similarly hectic.

On Tuesday, Ms. Ferraro opens the day with an appearance on the syndicated Donahue Show, with host Phil Donahue, from Chicago. Then she travels to southern Illinois before flying to Philadelphia. On Wednesday, she takes her campaign to Racine and Kenosha, Wis., Evanston, Ill., and Cincinnati.

On Thursday she campaigns from New York City to Los Angeles, with a stop in Cedar Rapids, Iowa. The rest of the schedule is tentative, but she plans to spend much of Friday in California, Reagan's home state, with events in both Los Angeles and San Francisco. Then she heads for Missouri, and on Saturday stops in Illinois, Tennessee and Kentucky.

On Sunday she is to be in Illinois, Michigan and Ohio, and on Monday in Ohio, Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Connecticut before returning home to Queens, N.Y.

She will await the returns in her home city with a big party for supporters scheduled at a Manhattan hotel.

A DOWN TO EARTH MESSAGE TO THE SMALL FARMER

The big advertisements on television and radio are drawing to a close in the U.S. Senate Race. Don't be taken in by camouflage...Nobody knows more about Eastern North Carolina than the people who live here.

ONE OF THE MOST IMPORTANT ISSUES IN THIS CAMPAIGN IS WHO CARES AND UNDERSTANDS THE PROBLEMS OF THE SMALL FARMER.

ABOUT 90% OF THE FARMERS IN EASTERN NORTH CAROLINA ARE SMALL...
THEY OWN 150 ACRES OR LESS.

THINK ABOUT THIS!

1. FARM FORECLOSURES HAVE TRIPLED!
2. THE AVERAGE VALUE OF FARMLAND HAS FALLEN 3 YEARS IN A ROW!
3. TOBACCO ALLOTMENTS HAVE FALLEN 57% SINCE 1975.
4. IT IS IMPOSSIBLE TO STAND MUCH MORE OF THIS!

It is unfortunate that during the 4 years that Senator Helms has been chairman of the agriculture committee that the plight of the small farmer has worsened! The above facts attest to this.

Ask yourself...what has Senator Helms done for the small farmer?

—Let's send a man with a positive attitude to Washington.

—Let's send a man who understands the needs of the small farmer.

— Let's send Jim Hunt to the U.S. Senate...he has walked in the shoes of the small farmer.

He will take the time to represent the interests of the small farmer in Eastern North Carolina!

VOTE FOR JIM HUNT!

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market headed lower today, continuing last week's retreat.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, down 20.98 last week, slumped 4.53 to 1,200.41 in the first half hour today.

Losers took a 4-3 lead over gainers in the early count of New York Stock Exchange-listed issues.

Investors were keeping a close watch on news reports from a special meeting of Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries oil ministers in Geneva.

The meeting was convened in response to recent oil price cuts by Norway and Britain, which are not OPEC members, and Nigeria, which is.

Some members of the group pushed for production cutbacks to shore up world oil prices. But analysts said there was considerable uncertainty whether any agreement on new, lower output quotas would hold.

In the U.S. economic picture, interest rates have declined markedly of late, and hopes persist for a further drop in the weeks ahead.

Analysts are divided, however, on the question of whether lower rates will translate into higher stock prices. Some argue that lower borrowing costs will give business activity a boost in the first half of 1985.

Your Social Security Disability Benefits

BENEFITS DENIED?
Have you been denied benefits under Social Security's disability benefits program? Do not be discouraged. That happens to most people who apply the first time.

Have you asked for reconsideration of your disability claim and been turned down a second time? Again, don't be discouraged or give up. That's the way the disability system works today.

Take your case one step further and go before a Social Security Administrative Law Judge for a hearing with a qualified representative to present your case. Then the chances of your winning benefits are elsewhere.

said it must agree on a realignment of some prices.

He was referring to a system in which the prices of different grades of OPEC oil are arranged around the $29 benchmark for Saudi Arabia's main grade of oil. Grades of higher quality sell for more than $29, while those of lower quality sell for less because they yield a smaller share of gasoline and other high-valued products.

Oteiba said he wanted a change in that system because his country's high-quality crudes are not selling well since they are overpriced in relation to the lower-quality oils sold by other OPEC members.

"I am coming (to Geneva) with my problem of differentials and it has to be solved, and if there is no solution I will solve it myself when I go home," Oteiba said.

He said he preferred that the price of the lower-quality crudes be raised, but indicated that the alternative would be to cut the price of his country's oil, which sells for $29.56 a barrel.

The oil minister from Egypt, which does not belong to OPEC, said Sunday his country would maintain its oil price at least through November. Many observers had expected Egypt to cut its price.

The minister, Abdel-Hadi Kandil, said he came to today's meeting as an observer. Egypt produces more oil than some member countries.

Besides Nigeria, Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates, the OPEC member countries are: Algeria, Libya, Gabon, Kuwait, Iraq, Iran, Qatar, Indonesia, Venezuela and Ecuador.

were safe drugs, upon which people would not become dependent and from which they would not suffer withdrawal," the appeal says.

The appeal says the withdrawal symptoms left her incapable of consulting with her attorney prior to her December 1978 trial and led to irrational behavior during her trial, when she argued with both the prosecutor and the judge.

The appeal also raised other issues concerning the correctness of Mrs. Barfield's sentencing and jury selection.

Mrs. Barfield, who was moved to Central Prison and put under death watch Sunday night, is scheduled to die by lethal injection at 2 a.m. Friday. She observed her 52nd birthday today on death row.

If executed, Mrs. Barfield would be the first woman put to death in the United States in 22 years.

Mrs. Barfield's case has been reviewed twice by the North Carolina Supreme Court and three times by the U.S. Supreme Court, but all her appeals have been rejected. Gov. Jim Hunt last month refused clemency for Mrs. Barfield.

"My attorneys have some issues they will be filing Monday," Mrs. Barfield said in an interview with ABC television filmed Friday night. "It would give a stay and hopefully the courts will look at the issues and study them."

Mrs. Barfield, in the television interview broadcast today, repeated her claim that she killed Taylor, her mother and two elderly people who employed her as a live-in housekeeper under the influence of drugs, saying she did not realize what she'd done until she had been in prison three months.

"It was about three months after getting here that the full impact began to hit," she said.

Heart ...

boon's heart regardless of whether a human heart was available.

However, he said: "The parents went through the most extensive informed consent (procedure) ever taken at the medical center," including signing a consent agreement twice.

"In essence, they killed a baboon to prolong the child's suffering. We feel it's just ghoulsh tinkering," said Mrs. Shelton.

"Someone obviously wanted to get Loma Linda on the map, and they obviously succeeded in doing that," said Michael Giannelli, a clinical psychologist and scientific adviser for the Fund For Animals.

Several people also demonstrated in support of the transplant. One of them, Cheryl Harrison, said the critics "are in a minority. I thought someone should represent the majority."

Schaefer said Baby Fae had nearly died twice while awaiting the new organ — once just hours before the transplant was done — and the baboon transplant was the only way to save her life.

Loma Linda researchers plan up to four more transplants of baboon hearts into human infants with fatal heart defects, then will evaluate the operation, which Bailey called "experimental surgery."

Only four ape-to-human heart transplants have been performed previously, all in adults. Only one recipient survived more than a few hours, living for 3 1/2 days.

The longest survivor of a similar procedure — a goat that received a lamb's heart — lived only 165 days before the heart was rejected and the goat died, Bailey said.

"This baby may not have been given a great deal of chance, but the alternative was certain. The alternative was death," said Dr. Jack Provonsna, director of the university's Center for Christian Bioethics. "Somewhere along the line, somebody has to take the leap."

Bailey said the infant wasn't suffering and had been "in worse shape" before the transplant, but said he "agonized a lot" about the ethical questions raised by such a transplant.

"I'm sympathetic to the animal rights groups," he said. "But I'm a member of the human species, and I have to deal with dying members of the human species every day."

Jobless Rate Rose In 61 N.C. Counties

RALEIGH (AP) — Unemployment increased in 61 North Carolina counties from August to September as the statewide jobless rate went from 6.1 percent to 6.3 percent, the state Employment Security Commission reported today.

"A slight decline in the civilian labor force between August and September coupled with a very minor increase in the number of unemployed workers resulted in a slight increase in the rate of unemployment from 6.1 percent to 6.3 percent," said Glenn Jernigan, ESC chairman.

The ESC reported unemployment declined in 31 counties and remained unchanged in eight.

Counties with the lowest unemployment in September were Dare, 2.6 percent; Orange, 3 percent; Durham 3.3 percent; Currituck 3.4 percent, Wake 3.4 percent and Transylvania, 3.9 percent. Counties with the highest rates were Bladen,

Broncos Surprise Raiders, 22-19

By The Associated Press
The last two times the Denver Broncos visited the West Coast, they weren't happy experiences.
Last year, rookie quarterback John Elway had a hard time getting started against San Diego — in fact, he lined up once behind the guard and cost his team a penalty — and the Broncos went on to lose to the Chargers, 31-7. Against the Seattle Seahawks in the National Football League playoffs, it was another blowout, also by a 31-7 score.
Sunday, however, was different, as the surprising Broncos beat the Los Angeles Raiders 22-19 in a sudden-death overtime thriller on a last-second 35-yard field goal by Rich Karlis.
"It was a great win," Denver Coach Dan Reeves said after the struggle before 91,020 roaring fans in the Los Angeles Coliseum, the largest regular-season crowd in the NFL since Oct. 3, 1954, when 93,621 saw the San Francisco 49ers and Los Angeles Rams play to a 24-24 tie.

"I don't know what more I can say about these players," Reeves added. "To beat the world champions at home is really something. It could have gone either way. To be in first place at this stage of the season is a great accomplishment."
A 41-yard pass from Marc Wilson to Malcolm Barnwell on the second play of overtime put the ball at the Denver 11. The Raiders eschewed the field goal and Frank Hawkins fumbled on the next play, with Denver recovering on its 7.

Later in OT, Roger Jackson intercepted Wilson's pass and returned it 23 yards to the Raider 22 with 38 seconds left. Karlis, who had been wide on a 42-yard attempt with 3:30 left in overtime, didn't miss this time.
The Broncos-Raiders game highlighted a day of significant action in the NFL that included Miami's 38-7 victory over Buffalo to improve the Dolphins' record to 9-0 and a 37-13 shocker by the New York Giants over the Washington Redskins.
In other action, it was San Francisco 33, Los Angeles Rams 0; New England 30, New York Jets 20; New Orleans 16, Cleveland 14; Dallas 22, Indianapolis 3; Chicago 16, Minnesota 7; St. Louis 34, Philadelphia 14; Pittsburgh 35, Atlanta 10; Cincinnati 31, Houston 13; Kansas City 24, Tampa Bay 20 and Green Bay 41, Detroit 9.

Dolphins 38, Bills 7
Dan Marino continued his assault on Miami's team record book by passing for 282 yards and three touchdowns to lead the Dolphins over the Bills.
The second-year quarterback broke Bob Griese's single-season passing yardage mark of 2,473 yards late in the first quarter and finished the day with 2,672 yards with seven regular-season games left in the 1984 campaign.
Marino, who broke Griese's single-season record for touchdown passes during a victory over New England the week before, threw all three of his TD passes in the first half when the Dolphins built a 24-0 lead. He now has 27 for the season.

Giants 37, Redskins 13
Joe Morris scored on three short runs and Phil Simms lofted two touchdown passes as the Giants overwhelmed the Redskins, who have played in the Super Bowl the last two seasons.
The victory was the Giants' first over the Redskins in seven games dating back to 1981.
49ers 33, Rams 0
Joe Montana threw for 365 yards and three touchdowns as San Francisco blanked the Rams. Montana completed 21 of his 31 attempts, including a stretch beginning in the

Kratzert Thanks Rodriguez

PENSACOLA, Fla. (AP) — Bill Kratzert, in the wake of his slump-breaking triumph in the Pensacola Open, gave thanks to his good friend Chi Chi Rodriguez.
"Chi Chi is probably my best friend. In those years when I was down — I was so down I even thought about getting out of golf — he kept telling me that everybody goes through it, to keep on striving," Kratzert said Sunday after a great rally provided him with his first victory since 1980.
And, Tom Watson, one continent and one ocean away, owes some thanks to Hal Sutton and Bruce Lietzke.
They played key roles in Watson's long-distance victory in the race for the PGA Player of the Year for 1984. He won it, by a tiny margin, over South African Denis Watson in the season-ending Pensacola tournament.
He won with 56 points, to 54 for Denis Watson. But, it was closer than that. It hinged on the fact that Hal Sutton did not manage to play one stroke better this season. It hung on Sutton playing his season in 6,814 strokes instead of 6,813. Had he played the year one stroke better, it would have resulted in a tie for Player of the Year between the two Watsons, Denis and Tom.
The award is based on a complicated point system that provides points — 20 for first, 18 for second, and so on, down to 2 for 10th — for positions in both money-winning and scoring average.
Watson, who took the money-winning title with $476,260, was ninth in scoring average (70.971, worth 4 points toward Player of the Year) when the last tournament came around. At that point, he was tied with 54 points with Denis Watson. And Tom chose not to compete.
But, Tom moved up a notch in scoring average when Lietzke played the final tournament in 288 and dropped back (from 70.95 to 71.00), giving Watson the extra points he needed to win outright. At the same time, however, Sutton played the final tournament in 281 and improved his average from 71.01 to 70.979.

Warm Temperatures Hamper Marathon

NEW YORK (AP) — Before the 1984 New York City Marathon, race director Fred Lebow had promised, "You will be surprised."
While Lebow did not predict what the surprise would be in Sunday's race, even he had to be shocked by the name of the winner — Orlando Pizzolato, a 26-year-old native of Piovone, Italy, who never had won a marathon in 12 previous races.
The race was marred by the death of a 48-year-old French runner, Jacques Bussereau, who suffered an apparent heart attack midway through the race. It was the first fatality in the 15-year history of the event.
Unseasonable warm temperatures in the mid-70s and humidity readings in the 90s contributed to a busy day for medical technicians. About 200 runners were treated at area hospitals for dehydration and cramps, compared with nine last year.
Pizzolato's best marathon time was 2 hours, 14 minutes, 42 seconds, when he finished fourth in the 1983 Rome Marathon — hardly considered a world-class clocking.
The previous eight winners of the New York City Marathon — since the race was taken strictly out of Central Park in 1976 and run through the city's five boroughs — had been Bill Rodgers (four times), Alberto Salazar (three times) and Rod Dixon of New Zealand (last year). Each was regarded as an elite marathoner.
Not Pizzolato.
Even Italian journalists here for the race were hard-pressed to come up with much significant information on him.
And, Laura Fogli, the third-place finisher in the women's race, won for the third consecutive year and the sixth time in seven years by Norway's Grete Waitz, was surprised at Pizzolato's victory.
"I thought he would lose, because he's too nervous before a race," said Fogli, who trains with Pizzolato in Ferrara, in northern Italy.
Nervousness appeared to be the least of Pizzolato's worries Sunday.
His biggest problems were severe stomach cramps and the heat and humidity which gripped the 26-mile, 385-yard course.
Pizzolato, who had surged into the lead near the halfway point of the race, began experiencing difficulty with about five miles remaining.

From that stage until he struggled across the finish line, he stopped eight times, grabbing his stomach in obvious pain, and at times, it appeared he would have to stop completely.
But after each brief respite, the gritty Pizzolato continued, and surprisingly never lost his lead.
"I had some cramps in my legs and in my stomach," said Pizzolato, whose winning time of 2:14:53 was the slowest in the New York City Marathon since Tom Fleming's 2:19:27 in 1975 and nearly seven minutes slower than the world-best of 2:08:05 set last week in the America's Marathon-Chicago by Steve Jones of Britain.
"Also, along the course, it was very hot and very hard to run."
He added that he had no intention of quitting.
"The important runners were behind me," continued Pizzolato, who had finished 27th in last year's New York City Marathon. "I had the courage to keep running."
His courage was remarkable indeed.
Cuba Takes Gold Medal
HAVANA — Cuba defeated the United States 10-1 Sunday to win the gold medal in the World Amateur Baseball Championships.
Former Rose High School pitcher Roger Williams, now at UNC-Chapel Hill, took the loss on the mound. Williams yielded seven runs in 3 1/3 innings after giving up just one hit in two previous victories.
Cuba finished the tournament with a 6-1 record in medal play, while Taiwan earned the silver with a 5-2 mark and the U.S. took the bronze at 4-3.
A total of 16 teams competed in the event.

Waitz Reaps Winner's Benefits

NEW YORK (AP) — Norway's Grete Waitz is $25,000 richer and has keys to a new Mercedes-Benz for becoming the first woman finisher in the 11th New York Marathon.
It was her seventh NYC Marathon and the sixth time she won it, but she said, "It was the worst because of the heat and humidity. I'm happy to finish and win it."
Temperatures Sunday were in the 70s and humidity was in the 90s.
Waitz, the silver medalist in the women's marathon at the Los Angeles Olympics behind Joan Benoit's world record time, didn't have (Benefit) to contend with this time and led all the way, covering the distance 2:29:30, more than four minutes head of runner-up Veronique Mart of England.
"I seriously considered dropping out around 10 miles," the 31-year-old from Oslo said. "The problem started very early and didn't disappear for a while."

Asked what the problem was, she said, "Diarrhea. I think it was obvious to people watching on TV."
"But if I quit, I would have been angry with myself. It didn't bother my running, but it bothered my concentration."
She occasionally pulled on her shorts early in the race. She said the stomach cramps went away about the 16-mile mark.

After that Waitz said she was confident she would win. "I was running without pushing too hard," Waitz said. "I knew I couldn't break the record, so I just concentrated on winning."
"It was so humid. I drank very little water (along the way) because of the problem," she said. "I reached the park very thirsty."
It was her third straight victory in the race, but her slowest since winning the inaugural race in 1978.

Woody Peele

Saturday morning dawned in Columbia, S.C., overcast and rainy. It didn't look like a good day for a football game, but it was not to be an accurate setting.

Just prior to the 1:30 p.m. kickoff between East Carolina and nationally-ranked South Carolina, the cloud cover suddenly lifted and the sun bathed Williams-Brice Stadium with sunlight. Then, just before kickoff, the Gamecock band formed a tunnel through which the South Carolina team would pass on its way to the bench.

The theme music from "2001: A Space Odyssey" began to blare from the public address system, and as the final notes were struck, the Gamecocks came charging out of the dressing room to the frenzied screams of some 70,000 anxious fans.

Tony Guyton, a defensive end, sprinted past the bench and to the middle of the field, jumping up and down, sweeping his arms up and down to egg on the crowd — and they loved it.

That's what college football is all about. The jammed stands, the build-up to the home team coming onto the field, the screams of the fans and the adrenalin pumping in the players. For many a team to walk into Williams-Brice, it probably serves as an intimidation.

Ed Emory said his Pirates would not be intimidated, and we don't think they were.

The Pirates stopped the Gamecocks cold on their first possession and had excellent field position to strike on their own first series, but failed when they were intercepted on the two yard line.

South Carolina turned that into a scoring drive — using a big play to score. The Pirates appeared to be ready to pull down quarterback Allen Mitchell for a loss, but he pitched off at the last second to Kent Hagood, who also broke a tackle at the corner and went all the way for the score.

The Pirates came back on a big play of their own, a Darrell Speed pass to Ricky Nichols, and then took a 10-7 lead on a Jeff Heath 43-yard field goal.

But from there on out, it was all South Carolina. Mike Hold, who seems to have a magic charm for the Gamecocks, came on at quarterback. On his very first play, Hold launched a 71-yard bomb to Ira Hillary that — like it has so many times this year — caught the secondary out of place.

Not that the Pirates didn't have the opportunity. They had several other scoring opportunities, but could come up with only one more touchdown — that after the matter was decided — and a field goal.

It's like the old axiom: when things go right, they go right in bunches, and when they go bad, they go bad in bunches too.

Right now, for South Carolina, things are going right in bunches. They are 7-0 and should move up in the polls prior to this coming Saturday's game with Florida State — the seventh game this year in Williams-Brice.

For the Pirates, things continue to go wrong. When they need a break, they can't seem to get it. Witness Henry Williams' 72-yard punt return for what he thought was a touchdown. Instead, the ball was called back to the midfield stripe after he brushed the sideline marker on his way downfield. Instead of taking a 14-7 lead, they settled for a 10-7 margin that vanished even before the scorekeepers had finished noting it into the books.

The Pirates have two chances left to get onto the winning side of the column this year. They travel to Southwestern Louisiana next weekend. USL defeated Southern Mississippi, 13-7, Saturday. The week before, Southern Miss upset Mississippi. The Pirates then close out the year back in Ficklen on November 10, hosting — Southern Mississippi.

Festival Expects $8 Million

Triangle Anticipates Income

By The Associated Press

Raleigh, Durham and Chapel Hill can expect to reap more than $8 million in additional revenues when the National Sports Festival visits the Triangle area in 1987, officials predict.

The executive board of the United States Olympic Committee, meeting in Orlando, Fla., voted to award the 10-day, 33-sport festival to the Triangle in the summer of 1987.

H. Hill Carrow Jr., chairman of the North Carolina Committee for the Sports Festival, said the $8 million would include food and lodging for the more than 4,000 athletes and coaches plus thousands of spectators.

"We're most delighted that our proposal has been accepted," said Asa Spaulding Jr., a member of the committee. "We think this will be a boom for the Triangle in general and sports in particular."

The festival has become a major sporting event since its beginning in 1978. It is held each summer during non-Olympic years. Last year's festival at Colorado Springs, Colo., attracted more than 200,000 spectators, 800 journalists and national television coverage.

Col. F. Don Miller, executive director of the Olympic committee, praised the facilities in the Raleigh-Durham-Chapel Hill area and said he was impressed with the work of the N.C. Committee for the Sports Festival, which sought the bid.

"We saw by our own observations the ability of the private and public sector to work together in consummating a successful program of this nature," Miller said in a telephone interview.

"(The Triangle area) has such a host of outstandingly good athletic facilities," said Sheila Walker, associate director for operations for the Olympic committee. "What most people have one of, if they are lucky, the Raleigh-Durham-Chapel Hill area has two or three — arenas, swimming pools, tracks and so on."

"Another thing was the enthusiasm of the people. They were so elated at even the thought they might have a chance to get the festival," Ms. Walker added. "It was a very community-oriented proposal."

Carrow said he would discuss the decision at a news conference in Raleigh this week.

Events at the festival would be spread throughout the Triangle, Spaulding said. Basketball and swimming would be held at the 21,200-seat Student Activities Center at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.

Carrow, a former swimmer at UNC, said track and field events would be held at Duke University's Wallace Wade Stadium.

William Neal Reynolds Coliseum at N.C. State University in Raleigh would host the boxing competition, according to the committee's original proposal. Other events would be held at various sites throughout the area.

A velodrome, a bicycle racing facility, has to be constructed, Carrow said. No site has been determined.

Exact dates for the festival will be determined before next spring, when the Triangle group is expected to sign a formal contract with the Olympic committee, Ms. Walker said.

The 1986 festival has been awarded to Houston, while Baton Rouge, La., will host the 1985 event.

'Air Coryell' Grounded

SAN DIEGO (AP) — The last time the San Diego Chargers played without All-Pro tight end Kellen Winslow, they were thrashed by the Seattle Seahawks in a game not nearly as close as the 31-17 final score suggests.

If anything, tonight's rematch of the AFC West opponents is potentially more troublesome for the Chargers, who not only have lost Winslow for the season but may take the field without their second- and third-best receivers as well.

"We'll do our best to throw the football, but we'll have to do things a little differently," said Coach Don Coryell, who grimaced from the sidelines last week as Winslow, Wes Chandler and Pete Holohan were hurt in a 44-37 loss to the Los Angeles Raiders.

Winslow's injury was the most serious; ligaments in his right knee were shredded so badly that immediate surgery was required. Chandler suffered a deep knee bruise, and Holohan sprained an ankle. Only Holohan is considered possible for tonight, and he did not practice last week.

Those are devastating losses to San Diego, a 4-4 team struggling to stay alive in the division race. With prolific Dan Fouts (2,511 passing yards this season) at quarterback, the Chargers have averaged 309 yards a game through the air.

Coach Chuck Knox's Seahawks, meanwhile, have shrugged off injuries to such key players as Curt Warner, Eric Lane and Paul Johns to record six victories in eight games, relying on an alternately sharp offense and defense and marvelous special team work.

"It's just been one of those kinds of years," Knox said. "We've been fortunate in a lot of games where we've made the plays when we needed to make them."

With Denver's 22-19 overtime defeat of the Raiders on Sunday, tonight's game is pivotal in the AFC West race. A loss likely would drop the Chargers out of playoff contention, while the Seahawks must win to remain tied with Los Angeles in second place behind the 8-1 Broncos.

Winslow, the NFL's leading receiver over the past five seasons, caught 55 passes for 663 yards this year despite missing a game because of a contract dispute.

That game was the second of the year, in Seattle, and it was a debacle. The Seahawks forced the Chargers into eight turnovers — four fumbles and four interceptions — and converted three times for 17 of their points.

"It's a habit with teams that play them," Coryell said. "It's not by accident — it's a result of their physical play."

Seattle leads the NFL in turnover ratio, having forced 34 turnovers and surrendered 21.

Nagelsen-Walts Top Rinaldi-Van Patten

HOUSTON (AP) — By the time Betsy Nagelsen and Butch Walts reached the finals of the $400,000 World Mixed Doubles Championships, they were confident they had a chance to win.

And by the time they had scored a 6-3, 4-6, 6-3, 6-2 victory Sunday over Vince Van Patten and Kathy Rinaldi, the unseeded winners weren't apologizing for accepting the $100,000 first prize.

"I have to say that we deserved to win," Walts said. "We had a tough draw and we had to work for everything we got. Noone gave us anything."

Nagelsen-Walts beat Elizabeth Sayers and Sherwood Stewart in a tough first-round match, upset fourth-seeded Billie Jean King and Peter Fleming in the quarterfinals and dispatched hometown favorites Zina Garrison and Sammy Giammalva to gain Sunday's finals.

All four seeds were eliminated before reaching the finals.

"We played our best match against Billie Jean and Peter,"

Walts said. "We practiced hard and just tried to be aggressive."

Van Patten, who was not broken throughout a three-set semifinal victory over Chris Evert Lloyd and Jimmy Connors, was broken in the first game of the match and again in the ninth game of the opening set.

"I didn't think I played as well today, I was a little nervous," Van Patten said. "I played better last night (against Lloyd-Connors). I felt like I let Kathy down tonight."

Van Patten was broken again at love in the second game of the second set and Nagelsen-Walts took a 3-0 lead.

But Van Patten-Rinaldi rallied to win the second set, breaking Walts in the fifth game and Nagelsen in the seventh.

"I had a couple of cups of coffee and we got pumped up again," said Van Patten, who revealed he drinks coffee during court changes. "I like to play hyper."

Walts hit two forehand errors in the fifth game of the second set, including the break point.

Mavericks Surprise Motta With Win Over Los Angeles

By The Associated Press

DALLAS — Dallas Maverick Coach Dick Motta had plenty of reasons to be pessimistic as his team awaited its game against the Los Angeles Lakers.

The Lakers, who fell to the Boston Celtics in last spring's National Basketball Association championship, were coming off a season-opening 113-112 loss to the San Antonio Spurs.

"We're on national television, it's a full house and Magic (Johnson) loves the big crowds," said Motta. "I thought we were in for a buzzsaw tonight."

Instead, Motta's team led from the first bucket, went up by as many as 23 points and held off a pair of Laker rallies to take a surprising 107-96 victory Sunday night.

"We just seemed to play well against this team," said Motta. "But they are not playing their best yet. They will be."

"I don't know if it's us getting up or them getting a little bit down, but we really seem to play well against the Lakers," said Dallas' Jay Vincent, who scored 16 points to support teammate Mark Aguirre's game-high 31.

"We feel confident when we play LA that we can win the basketball game," said Rolando Blackman, who added 14 points for Dallas, 1-1. "We know that if we can cut down on their fast-break points, we can win. If we don't, we're out of it."

The Lakers, who eliminated the Mavericks in the Western Conference playoffs last season, were able to fastbreak only sporadically on the Mavericks, who burst out to leads of 21-7 and 48-25. The Lakers cut the margin to 67-62 in the third quarter and, with four minutes left in the game, trimmed it to 95-90 on a Michael Cooper basket.

Aguirre responded with a 12-foot jumper and followed that with two free throws to regain control for Dallas.

"We didn't panic, especially when they had surges and came back," said Blackman. "We all knew we had to cut a little harder and go off screens a little harder. It was a feeling within us."

The Lakers, who opened the season 0-2 for the first time since the 1981-82 season, are admittedly off form.

"I'm still not in the groove," said Johnson, who scored only nine points, including only three during a first half in which Dallas built a 59-46 bulge.

"At the beginning we couldn't get anything to fall. We're not playing four quarters of basketball," he said.

Kareem Abdul-Jabbar led the Lakers with 20 points.

Suns 102, SuperSonics 87

Rod Foster scored six points during a 14-3 third-quarter spurt that allowed the Suns to overcome a 67-59 Seattle lead. The Suns led 73-70 at the quarter break and continued to pull away in the final period. Larry Nance contributed six of 26 points in the final 12 minutes and James Edwards threw in eight of his 20.

Foster added 10 points for the Suns, who are unbeaten in two starts.

Seattle, 1-1, got 25 points from Tom Chambers.

Schiess Gathers Following

By HAL BOCK AP Sports Writer

As she stood at the start of Sunday's New York Marathon, Gabriele Andersen-Schiess thought back to Los Angeles and the women's Olympic Marathon.

The thoughts weren't pleasant.

She had finished 37th in that race. The statistics were of no particular consequence, though. What mattered most was her last lap, a terribly frightening, slow motion, five-minute tour of the Los Angeles Coliseum, in which she half-staggered, half-walked her way around the track, her body bent at a grotesque angle, dehydrated by the punishing August California climate.

Now, on the last Sunday in October, autumn in New York had suddenly turned into Indian summer, with temperatures hovering in the mid-70s and the humidity pushing past 90. It was as if the weatherman was playing a cruel Halloween trick on the 18,000 or so marathoners gathered to run New York.

For Gabriele Andersen-Schiess, running her first marathon since LA, it was no treat. She was born in Switzerland and lives in Sun Valley, Idaho — ski country. This was not her kind of weather and she knew it.

"At the starting line, lingering in the back of my mind was my experience in the Olympics," she said. "Knowing it was humid, hearing the weather forecast, I was disappointed with the conditions. I need cooler weather than today."

Still, the heat and humidity notwithstanding, when Mayor Ed Koch fired the cannon to start the race, Andersen-Schiess ran.

Cautiously. "I remembered LA and I tried to be more careful, especially at the end," she said. "The last six miles, I was monitoring my body and I didn't push too hard. I felt a lot better, though. I was never feeling bad, but I was never feeling great, either."

Her time was 2:42:24, not a whole lot faster than her dehydrated

Olympic clocking. But she finished in much better shape, 11th among the women and buoyed by the fact that she was not that far behind winner Grete Waitz's time of 2:29:30. And, she was running at the end, not staggering.

She learned, too, that she has attracted a following. As she ran from the Staten Island side of the Verrazano Narrows Bridge, through the neighborhoods of Brooklyn, into Queens, over the 59th Street Bridge, up Manhattan's First Avenue into the Bronx and then back down through Central Park to the finish at the Tavern on the Green, the fans cheered her on, raring for the slender woman wearing the running hat.

"I didn't really expect to be recognized," she said. "It was nice, though. It gave me encouragement to keep going. I took a lot of water, almost every mile."

"Halfway through the race, I knew the times would not be good because of the conditions. When I heard I was 10th or 11th, that kept me going, too. It was a strong women's field. The last two or three miles, I tried to be a little more careful. I wanted to make sure I'd be able to finish."

"I'm not happy with my time, but looking at the times of the other women, I'm not too disappointed. It was a tough race."

Even after the LA experience, Andersen-Schiess knew she would continue to run, not as a symbolic gesture, but simply because she enjoys it so much.

Pats Welcome Berry With Victory

FOXBORO, Mass. (AP) — Raymond Berry had every reason to feel like a stranger in his own house. He had taken up occupancy just three days earlier. He spent that short time learning the names of his roommates. He didn't even try to learn what they did.

Yet, the New England Patriots' new boss, coaching his first National Football League game in nearly three years, felt right at home in Sunday's 30-20 victory over the New York Jets.

"I didn't feel like a stranger at all," said Berry, whose brilliant 13-year career as a receiver with the Baltimore Colts earned him a spot in the Hall of Fame. "It's been a unique experience, but I wouldn't describe myself as a stranger."

In the computerized, analytical world of pro football, where precise planning and execution are essential, the slightest glitch in the system could cause it to bomb out. The Patriots' system operated as if it hadn't been reprogrammed.

Despite the turmoil of a bizarre week in which Coach Ron Meyer fired defensive coordinator Rod Rust Wednesday, then was fired himself the next day when Rust was rehired and Berry was appointed, the players conducted their business as usual.

"Raymond said, 'head coaches don't have to know everything, the (assistant) coaches do the coaching,'" said Patriots' linebacker Steve Nelson. "They coached the way they always do on Sunday."

"There was no difference that I saw in the Patriots between Meyer and Berry," said Jets' Coach Joe Walton.

As it had in three of its previous five victories, New England trailed at halftime. The score was 20-6. Berry, a religious man, didn't preach any inspirational halftime sermon.

"All we did at halftime was eat a few oranges and drink a little water," he said. "No miracles."

Since his appointment, he had tried not to intrude too much on a team that entered the game with a 5-3 record and a solid playoff shot.

"I told the players I didn't know one play on offense or one play on defense and I wasn't going to try to learn any," said Berry, whose last coaching job was as an assistant with the Patriots from 1978 through 1981. "I just wanted to learn all the names."

If it (decision-making) is in good hands and people know what to do, I'd love to see other people do it."

His admission of ignorance about the team's game plan is a sign of security, said offensive tackle Brian Holloway.

"You know what that says? That shows strength of character," Holloway said. "When you go out in battle, courage and strength is shown by laying it all on the table...That shows a leader."

Berry's limited role in handling game strategy would indicate, as he said, that "what a (head) coach means probably is overestimated."

His players didn't think so.

Most Patriots didn't like to play for Meyer. They said he didn't communicate with them. Berry has set a different tone.

"He's just down to earth, sincere, a straight shooter," said running back Craig James, who rushed for 78 yards in his first eight games and 79 and his first NFL touchdown Sunday.

"He's not going to be a guy of a lot of words. He's going to lead with his actions," said free safety Rick Sanford.

second quarter when he hit 13 straight, accounting for 263 yards.

The victory gave the 49ers an 8-1 record and padded their NFC West lead to three games over the 5-4 Rams.

Patriots 30, Jets 20

Craig James ignited New England with a 25-yard third-quarter touchdown burst and quarterback Tony Eason threw five yards to Stephen Starring for the go-ahead score in the fourth period as the Patriots rallied from a 17-point deficit to beat the Jets and give Raymond Berry a victory in his NFL coaching debut.

The victory followed a week of upheaval in New England — Berry had replaced Ron Meyer only Thursday after Meyer precipitated a crisis on Wednesday by firing defensive coordinator Rod Rust.

Saints 16, Browns 14

Morten Andersen kicked a 53-yard field goal despite a driving rain as time expired to boost New Orleans over Cleveland and spoil the NFL debut of Browns' Coach Marty Schottenheimer, the Browns' defensive coordinator who replaced Sam Rutigliano last Monday.

Cowboys 22, Colts 3

Danny White celebrated his return as Dallas' starting quarterback by riddling Indianapolis' porous secondary with two touchdown passes and 362 yards. White, operating against the second-worst pass defense in the NFL, hit Tony Hill with a 38-yard scoring pass and drilled a 5-yarder to tight end Doug Cosbie.

Bears 16, Vikings 7

Jim McMahon passed for 180 yards and one touchdown and the Chicago defense, ranked No. 1 in the NFL, registered a club-record 11 sacks while beating Minnesota. Archie Manning, filling in for injured quarterback Tommy Kramer, was dropped for losses totaling 101 yards. The NFL record for sacks is 12, held by the Pittsburgh Steelers and the Baltimore Colts.

Cardinals 34, Eagles 14

Neil Lomax completed 20 of 26 passes for 286 yards and two touchdowns and Stump Mitchell ended long drives with a pair of 1-yard scores as St. Louis rallied to defeat Philadelphia. Lomax' game-winning touchdown of 8 yards to Pat Tilley capped a 27-yard second-period drive.

Steelers 35, Falcons 10

Mark Malone threw three touchdown passes, two to John Stallworth, and Dwayne Woodruff returned a fumble 65 yards to score on Atlanta's first play as the Steelers routed the Falcons.

Malone fired passes of 20 and 31 yards to Stallworth and 7 yards to Rich Erenberg while Frank Pollard ran for 111 yards and scored the Steelers' other touchdown.

Bengals 31, Oilers 13

Ken Anderson completed 13 passes in a row at one point, and Larry Kinnebrew scored four close-range touchdowns to lead Cincinnati over the 0-9 Oilers.

Anderson, who has beaten the Oilers six consecutive times and set an NFL record with 20 consecutive completions in a 1982 game, continued his mastery over the Oilers by hitting 18 of 24 passes for 154 yards.

Chiefs 24, Bucs 20

Bill Kenney completed 26 of 46 passes for 332 yards and two touchdowns, lifting Kansas City over Tampa Bay in a game which featured an NFL-record 100 passes.

Steve DeBerg tried 54 passes for the Bucs and coupled with Kenney to break the record of 98 set in 1969 by the Minnesota Vikings and Baltimore Colts.

Packers 41, Lions 9

Lynn Dickey fired four touchdown passes, Eddie Lee Ivey rushed for 116 yards and safety Tom Flynn intercepted two passes as Green Bay broke a seven-game losing streak with a victory over the Lions.

Dickey was especially effective in the first half, when he tossed three TD passes in staking the Packers to a 28-9 halftime lead and starting them to their first victory since the season opener.

Single letters, short words, and words using an apostrophe can give you clues to locating vowels. Solution is accomplished by trial and error.

Miss George's Journalistic Skills Need Sharpening For 'Morning News'

By FRED ROTHENBERG
 AP Television Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — For years, CBS mocked and dismissed "Good Morning America" and "Today" as lightweight celebrity talk shows. So what happens? The network goes out and hires its own celebrity, Phyllis George, and makes her the likely replacement for co-anchor Diane Sawyer on the "CBS Morning News."
 Say this for her: she's got her own style. Last Thursday, the former Miss America asked broadcasting maverick Ted Turner if he was buying up ABC's stock. He said no. "Promise?" she asked. "I promise," he said.
 Call that aggressive journalism, CBS Entertainment style.
 While watching Miss George's dry run on the "Morning News" last week, the image of Hughes Rudd came to mind. Rudd is the Oscar Grouch of broadcast journalism, an ornery cuss who tells a good story and turns a good phrase. In the mid-1970s, he was a co-anchor on the "CBS Morning News."
 His liability was that he wasn't pretty, especially for the morning.

attraction for female viewers. That's fine if, as a lifestyles contributor, she were just chatting with the world's glitterati, or doing a fashion report, as she did Wednesday, or having a discussion about the Sunday dinner tradition, as she did Friday.
 But as the co-anchor with Bill Kurtis? Talking about serious, meaty subjects? No way. She's just not right for that job.
 "There's no sacred mantra to news," said Jon Katz, the show's executive producer. "She needs to get some experience at it. That's what happened with Bryant Gumbel."
 Gumbel, the co-anchor on NBC's "Today," used to be a reporter and anchor at NBC Sports. But he had distinguished himself there with his ability to do live interviews in frenetic Super Bowl lockerrooms, to ask tough questions of the leaders of the sports world and to distill serious issues.
 So, for him, moving from the back pages to the front pages was a logical progression.
 Miss George, similarly, has worked for years on CBS Sports' "NFL Today" show. But there the similarity ends. On "NFL Today," she engaged in scripted studio chit-chat. From time to time, she interviewed sports celebrities, but that was under protected conditions. She might talk with someone 45 minutes for a 2½-minute piece.

 The irony is that at CBS Sports, she was shielded from live interview situations that might expose her weaknesses. Now, at CBS News, and in a far more serious environment, she's doing the interviews — and her deficiencies are glaring.
 Her interview technique this week resembled a hummingbird, flitting from one question to the next, rarely pausing for air or thought. CBS may think she represents what America's Average Josephine is thinking and wants asked, but in the past the network stayed on the higher road.
 In one interview that Miss George shared with science contributor Frank Field, she was intrusive, trampling on his questions. In another, with the wife of Bill Dunlop, a sailor missing in the South Pacific, she didn't set it up properly, and the result was viewers had little sense of the story.
 Granted she was nervous, and disarmingly said so on the air, but she doesn't appear to have the journalistic depth, understanding or instincts to follow in the footsteps of the intelligent, articulate Ms. Sawyer, now of "60 Minutes."
 Ms. Sawyer disagrees. "I think she's terrific. She has enormous energy, and she has a big heart," she said. "She's bright and unaffected, and all of that wears well in the morning." Ms. Sawyer said she had seen only bits of last Monday's show. She plans to have lunch with Miss George this week.

 Katz, who did not make the decision to hire Miss George, said he's been extremely pleased with her performance. "She's demonstrated that she's a TV professional," he said. He didn't know if she would take the assignment on a permanent basis, but reportedly it's her job if she wants it.
 Katz said Miss George would not read the news, but "she will be given the chance to do news stories. We have to be extremely careful that she's comfortable. There's no need for her to precisely duplicate Bill Kurtis. But she has to do serious work. The ambitions of this program depend on it."
 Katz listed some of her assets as "knowledge of TV, poise, intelligence, warmth, family, motherhood. She knows what women are going through."
 Katz and other CBS executives felt that the "Morning News" lacked the human, family element. Fine. But after they looked at tapes of hundreds of possible female co-anchors, their decision is an affront to women that a stronger journalist wasn't picked.
 Jane Wallace, who filled in admirably for Ms. Sawyer, and Meredith Vieira, another capable replacement, are respected CBS News correspondents. They might not be recognized at Elaine's or other chic restaurants, but at least they didn't embarrass the reputation and credibility of CBS News.

Rock Star Wyman, Painter Chagall Make An Odd Pair

By MARILYN AUGUST
 Associated Press Writer
ST. PAUL DE VENICE, France (AP) — They may go down in art history as one of the oddest couples of all time: a millionaire rock star and one of the world's greatest living artists.
 Bill Wyman of the Rolling Stones has produced a book of his photographs of Marc Chagall and the reclusive Russian-born French painter's works.
 Besides reproductions of nearly 50 drawings, poster colors and mosaics, "Chagall's World," published this month by Doubleday & Co., contains 20 portraits of the 97-year-old artist taken last year in his farmhouse retreat.

 The unlikely collaboration between a musician whose on-stage numbers once mirrored the discontent of a generation, and an artist famous for his green-faced fiddlers and sad-eyed rabbis, is the result of a long friendship.
 Neighbors in this tiny Provencal village for the past 10 years, Wyman and Chagall met through Andre Verdet, Chagall's friend and a French art critic. They used to sip afternoon tea with Chagall's wife, Vava.
 "For some reason, we just clicked," the 47-year-old Wyman said in an interview.
 One day he brought along his camera — he rarely goes anywhere without at least two cameras and a few lenses — and the book was born.
 "Chagall usually doesn't like having his picture taken, but I think he trusted me as a photographer," Wyman said. "He's easy to shoot because he has so many different expressions — I just stood in a corner of the room with a long lens and snapped the shutter."
 Verdet interviewed Chagall as Wyman snapped pictures and the interview, one of the latest given by the now ailing artist, is featured in the 128-page book.

wonderment.
 Wyman said his favorite shot is of "the artist and his wife. "The way she has her head on his shoulder sums up the tenderness between them," he said. "That's the one that Chagall likes the best, too."
 Wyman is the Stones' soft-spoken bass guitarist who long has preferred family life and the smell of crushed thyme and lavender to the heady, drug and alcohol-filled nights in the fast lane.
 He was a camera buff long before he became a rock star. "My uncle gave me a small box camera for my 10th birthday. I saved up — delivering papers and milk — to buy film, and I've been shooting ever since. If I hadn't gotten involved with music, I would have been a professional photographer."
 Wyman is currently preparing an anthology of the best photos by Michael Cooper, the man "who shot everybody who was anybody" in the 1960s. Cooper, who died of a drug overdose, was best known for the Beatles' "Sergeant Pepper" album cover.

Reagan Considering N.C. Trip

By The Associated Press
President Reagan may make a campaign swing through North Carolina this week to bolster the re-election chances of Republican Sen. Jesse Helms and the hopes of U.S. Rep. Jim Martin, R-N.C., in the governor's race, a campaign official says.

Meanwhile, Helms' campaign aides say they mistook a birthday greeting from the U.S. ambassador to Mexico for an endorsement and have apologized for any inconvenience their announcement of his support caused.

The most likely day for a Reagan visit is Thursday, with an outside chance of Wednesday, former Charlotte Mayor Eddie Knox told The News and Observer of Raleigh Sunday.

"There's a good chance he's coming, but I don't know for sure yet," said Knox, one of three national co-chairmen of Democrats for Reagan. "I'm going to Washington to meet with him Tuesday ... and we're going to talk about it then."

Reagan attracted about 30,000 people to a rally in Charlotte during a visit Oct. 8.

On Sunday, U.S. Ambassador John A. Gavin issued a statement from the U.S. embassy in Mexico City saying, "My support for President Reagan and his re-election is obvious, but I have not, whatever my personal preferences, endorsed any other candidate." Gavin's name was among those of 22 ambassadors said to endorse Republican Helms in his bitter battle with Democratic Gov. Jim Hunt for the Senate seat. The list was distributed by Helms's campaign aides last week.

Claude Allen, a Helms spokesman, said Sunday the Helms campaign apologized for any "inconvenience" caused by use of Gavin's name. Allen said campaign officials had assumed Gavin was endorsing Helms on the basis of a birthday greeting and other correspondence from the ambassador. Helms turned 63 on Oct. 18.

The endorsements prompted sharp criticism from a number of former ambassadors as well as the American Foreign Service Association, representing career foreign service officers, who said such direct political involvement damages the credibility of U.S. diplomatic efforts.

Helms, campaigning in tobacco-rich eastern North Carolina, warned supporters Saturday if he isn't re-elected they could "kiss the tobacco program and the peanut program goodbye."

Reminding an audience in Dunn that he was the first North Carolina senator to chair the Senate Agriculture Committee in 149 years, Helms said he attained the position because an unusual number of Republican senators with more seniority chose not to seek re-election in the late 1970s and 1980.

Hunt "says he's been 'assured' that he would be on (the Agriculture Committee)," said Helms. "There's nobody in the world can assure him of that. ... He can't even get on the Senate Agriculture Committee, and he will never live long enough to be chairman, because that cycle that occurred in my case will never happen again."

Hunt, meanwhile, told about 150 leaders of the American Legion in Greensboro Saturday that fair veterans benefits are a key to a strong national defense.

"Every weapon from an M-16 rifle to the most sophisticated system, requires men to operate or to run it," Hunt said. "That's why we must have strong and fair veterans benefits in this country."

In literature distributed at the convention, the Hunt campaign said Helms voted against nine veterans appropriation bills in 1976 and quoted him as calling veterans benefits "welfare."

"Veterans benefits are not welfare," Hunt said. "They're something that has been earned and is deserved."

Cumberland County Sheriff Otis Jones Saturday announced the formation of a statewide committee of sheriffs backing Hunt, in his Senate bid.

At a Democratic Unity Rally in Fayetteville Saturday, House Majority Leader Jim Wright, D-Tex., said the Hunt-Helms race will indicate the future of the nation.

"In this election, the eyes of the entire United States are riveted upon this state," Wright told about 1,000 people at the rally. "They're watching this state to see what the future of this nation might be."

Republican gubernatorial candidate Jim Martin said Saturday a Republican governor could serve North Carolina better than a Democratic one even with a Democratic-controlled state legislature.

"Bipartisan tension and cooperation would be better than the present situation," Martin said in Charlotte before attending a meeting of Scottish Rite Masons. "Now they just smoothly work together to raise taxes, while teacher pay has fallen to 44th in the nation."

Democratic gubernatorial candidate Rufus Edmisten promised in Greensboro Saturday that if he was elected governor, he would give military veterans extra consideration, partly by establishing a cabinet level position to work in their behalf.

Edmisten told about 150 leaders of the state American Legion that such a position would make sure "the needs of veterans are considered at the highest level."

High Point Center Of Furniture Belt

HICKORY, N.C. (AP) — As the number of manufacturers at the Southern Furniture Market in High Point has grown, the number in surrounding communities has shrunk.

High Point is the center of the market, where about 1,300 manufacturers come to show their wares. At last count, Hickory was down to about 100 showrooms, compared with the 250 it could offer several years ago.

Though fewer people came to shop at furniture showrooms in Hickory during the fall Southern Furniture Market, manufacturer migration is not yet a serious problem, officials said.

"I think Hickory is always going to have a place in the Southern Furniture Market," said Mayor William R. McDonald.

David Eidson, general manager of the Hickory Merchandizing Mart, is also optimistic. He said his 83,000-square-foot building has been filled for the past five years with manufacturers during the furniture market.

As economic conditions improve, more companies will be getting into the furniture business, some manufacturers say.

But many manufacturers are watching Broyhill Furniture, which is located on the western edge of the Hickory market in Lenoir. It is the largest company participating in the market.

"If Broyhill would move out of the Lenoir area, that probably would change our customers' patterns," said Jerome W. Bolick, president of Southern Furniture Co. of Conover, Inc. "If that were to happen, we'd have to move."

Richard Barentine, executive director of the Furniture Factories' Marketing Association of the South in High Point, said that Hickory manufacturers should be cautious. Barentine's association sponsors the semi-annual furniture markets and has watched the manufacturers' move to High Point.

"It is a delicate, fairly critical situation for the west right now," Barentine said.

Between October 1983 and this fall furniture market, 38 exhibitors moved from the Hickory area to High Point.

Glenn S. Thomas, a vice president for The Lane Company, said Lane moved five of the company's showrooms to High Point from Hickory and had more than double the traffic.

Barentine said that manufacturers of the more expensive lines of furniture are the ones who have left Hickory. That leaves the town with the lower end of the market, he said.

Va. Students Are Attracted To N.C. Community Colleges; Tuition Cited

By The Associated Press
When it comes to community college students, Virginia has a trade deficit with North Carolina, and officials say differing tuition costs are the main reason.

Only 197 North Carolina residents attended Virginia community colleges in fall 1983, according to Nancy Finch, information director for the Virginia community college system.

But more than 2,000 Virginians attended community colleges in North Carolina in the 1982-83 academic year, the last one for which statistics were available, according to Steven James, supervisor of the statistical section of the North Carolina Department of Community Colleges.

Some of the discrepancy results from non-competitive factors, primarily large out-of-state enrollments at community colleges near military bases. But in the areas along the Virginia-North Carolina line, there appears to be a large migration of Virginia students to North Carolina community colleges.

The more numerous North Carolina commuter schools often are closer or more convenient to some Virginia communities than Virginia community colleges.

And some North Carolina colleges advertise in Virginia newspapers and radio stations to attract students, a practice the Virginia schools are prohibited from even in their own communities.

But differences in tuition are cited by many students as the main reason for the southward migration.

At Danville Community College, located only a mile north of the North Carolina line, President Walter Delaney recounted the story of two local residents who had enrolled in a nursing program there earlier this fall.

A week later, the women withdrew, announcing they had decided to attend Piedmont Technical College and pay less as out-of-state students at Piedmont Tech than they could by paying in-state tuition here," Delaney said.

Virginia community colleges charge $15.25 per credit hour for in-state students and $66 per credit hour for out-of-state students.

North Carolina charges $4.25 per credit hour for state students and $21.25 per credit hour for out-of-state students. It also limits their tuition charges to the first 12 hours, the minimum course load considered to be full-time.

Full-time students at the North Carolina community colleges are charged a maximum of $51 per quarter at the rate for state students and $255 per quarter at the out-of-state rate, regardless of whether the students are enrolled for 12 credit hours or 18 hours.

For a Virginia resident planning a course load of only 12 or 15 hours, the Virginia in-state rates of $183 and $228.75 respectively are competitive with North Carolina's full-time tuition of $255.

But many curricula, such as nursing, are requiring course loads of 18 credit hours, Delaney said.

If course loads are that heavy, it becomes more economical for Virginia residents to attend community college in North Carolina.

For 18 credit hours, Virginia residents paying in-state tuition at a Virginia community college pay $274.50 per quarter. In North Carolina, paying out-of-state tuition, they are charged $255 per quarter.

Faced with a 7 percent reduction in community college enrollment in Virginia, much of it attributed to escalating tuition costs for in-state students, the State Board of Community Colleges has begun planning for a tuition decrease for the 1985-86 school year.

Delaney also said that a change in Virginia's in-state tuition residence requirements passed in the last General Assembly session has begun to increase the number of North Carolina residents attending Virginia colleges.

Now North Carolina residents who work in Virginia and pay Virginia income taxes, and their families, are eligible for in-state tuition rates at Virginia colleges, he said.

The change is significant for colleges near the state line, such as Danville Community College and Northern Virginia Community College in Annandale, that are in a position to attract out-of-state students, Delaney said.

Delaney said the Virginia restriction on advertising has not been too cumbersome in Danville.

"We are prohibited from sending out quarterly schedules," he said.

Mrs. Barfield Would Be Third N. Carolina Woman Executed

By DENNIS PATTERSON
Associated Press Writer

If Velma Barfield keeps her appointment in the state's death chamber Nov. 2, she will become only the third woman, and the first white woman, to be executed since North Carolina took over executions from the counties in 1910.

Mrs. Barfield, scheduled to die for the poisoning death of St. Pauls farmer Stuart Taylor in 1978, would be the first woman to be executed in North Carolina in 40 years and the first woman executed in the United States in 22 years.

She turns 52 just five days before her scheduled execution, making her the oldest woman to face execution by the state.

Rosana Phillips, 26, was the first woman executed by the state, and believed until she entered the gas chamber Dec. 31, 1942, that she would be given a reprieve.

Mrs. Phillips was executed 49 minutes after her husband, Daniel, was put to death in the same chamber. Both had been convicted of murder in the ax slaying of their landlord, 64-year-old Harry Watkins of Durham County, in August 1942.

To the end, each blamed the other for the killing. Prison Chaplain L.A. Watts said the couple met for a few minutes before their executions and "forgave each other."

Phillips was executed first at the request of parole officials, who believed he might make some last-minute statement that would justify a reprieve for his wife. But Daniel made no statement, except to tell 15 other prisoners on Death Row goodbye.

With no reason for a reprieve, Mrs. Phillips was strapped to the chair in the gas chamber and died 7 minutes and 20 seconds after a cloud of cyanide gas began rising in the chamber. Prison officials at the time said it was the quickest death since the state switched from the electric chair to the gas chamber in 1936.

Bessie Mae Williams, 19, entered the gas chamber Dec. 29, 1944, one of three people to be executed that day.

Ms. Williams was convicted with three others of killing Charlotte taxi driver Mack Minyard. Ralph Thompson, convicted in the same killing, was executed immediately after Ms. Williams.

Thompson admitted stabbing Minyard in a dispute over the cab fare. Ms. Williams admitted being with Thompson and the others, and taking two half-dollars from the cab.

A second woman sentenced to death the same day in the same case, 15-year-old Annie Mae Allison, had her sentence commuted to life in prison by Gov. Melville Broughton, who said he commuted her sentence "wholly on the grounds of the age of the prisoner."

News reports of Ms. Williams' execution said the woman entered the gas chamber in a blue, short-legged pajama outfit and was crying as prison officials pulled a leather hood over her face.

Before entering the chamber, Ms. Williams told Watts, "God has answered my prayers. I'm ready now."

She died eight minutes after the cyanide cloud began rising.

Spectator Credited With Saving Pope's Life

By LETTA TAYLER
Associated Press Writer
ROME (AP) — The judge who investigated the attempted assassination of Pope John Paul II says an unidentified bystander saved the pope's life by pushing a Turkish gunman just before he fired what could have been the fatal shot, according to a newspaper interview. The pope was seriously wounded by three bullets on May 13, 1981, but has since recovered. Judge Ilario Martella, who on Friday indicted three Bulgarians and four Turks for involvement in the assassination attempt, spoke about the bystander in an interview published Sunday in Turin's La Stampa newspaper. Mehmet Ali Agca, who already is serving a life sentence for the shooting, "was very clear on this point," Martella was quoted as saying. "I would have continued firing," he told us, "if someone who was next to me had not shoved me with force." The pontiff was an easy target at the point Agca was jostled, the newspaper quoted Martella as saying. One bullet had hit John Paul in the intestine, a second bullet hit him in the arm, and a third hit his finger.

He lay immobile on the seat of his open vehicle after being shot in St. Peter's Square. Martella's report on his three-year investigation charged that the shot that hit John Paul on the finger had been fired by a second gunman, a boyhood friend of Agca's named Oral Celik. Agca and Celik were members of a right-wing Turkish terrorist group known as the Gray Wolves. La Stampa quoted Martella as saying he believed the man who pushed Agca could have been the same spectator who helped capture Agca by grabbing him as he tried to flee the square. Celik was standing about 100 feet from Agca, La Stampa quoted

Martella as saying. The newspaper quoted the magistrate as saying, "The agreement was that they would fire simultaneously. (Agca) did not see Celik fire the third bullet but he believes it is possible that he did so." Martella said Friday that 20 witnesses said they heard the third bullet and that he believed ballistic tests confirmed Celik had fired one of the shots. Martella also was quoted as saying a blurred photograph taken by an American tourist of a man believed to be Celik running from the square after the attack "shows the shape of a pistol under his vest." The judge was quoted as saying Agca could not explain why two

"panic bombs" did not detonate to help them escape in the confusion. Agca "said to me, 'Even here (in prison) I ask myself this same question. Because if the bombs had gone off I would not be in this cell,'" Martella was quoted as reporting. Martella's indictments allege that two Bulgarian Embassy employees, Todor Aivazov and Maj. Zhelyo Kolev Vassilev, had promised to provide a special truck with a diplomatic seal to smuggle Agca and Celik out of the country after the shooting. The judge also said that the third Bulgarian indicted, Bulgarian Airlines employee Sergei Ivanov Antonov, was waiting with a car outside the square to help the gunmen flee. Antonov, the only one of the three Bulgarians apprehended, is under house arrest in Rome. Antonio Albano, an Italian prosecutor who reviewed Martella's evidence earlier this year, said in June that he was convinced Bulgaria, possibly with Soviet support, masterminded the assassination attempt to stop unrest in the pope's native Poland. Both Bulgaria and the Soviet Union have blasted Martella's indictments as a plot by Western nations to discredit the Eastern bloc.

Youth Dies, 21 Hurt In Hayride Accident

WILSON, N.C. (AP) — A fall festivity turned into a horror scene when a pickup truck slammed into the rear of an unlit farm trailer carrying a church group on a hayride, killing a 13-year-old boy and injuring 21 others, authorities said.

Two drivers were charged Sunday following Saturday's accident that killed Sidney Barnes of Wilson, North Carolina Highway Patrol Trooper J.T. Bradshaw said.

Troopers said 21 children from the Farmington Heights Church of God were injured in the accident, which occurred at 8:45 p.m. Saturday on a rural road 11 miles west of Wilson.

Of those, five were admitted to area hospitals. Four of the youths were still in the Wilson County Memorial Hospital on Sunday night while a fifth youngster was in Duke University Medical Center.

Trooper Bradshaw said the farm tractor was pulling a 4-foot-by-8-foot farm trailer and was traveling at about 5 mph to 7 mph when it was hit.

The driver of the pickup, traveling at about 40 mph to 45 mph, did not see the trailer until he was about 25 to 30 feet away, Bradshaw said. The driver then turned sharply to the left to avoid a collision, he said.

Floyd Graham, 39, of Kenly, the driver of the pickup truck, was charged with failing to reduce speed to avoid an accident, Bradshaw said.

The driver of the tractor, Lannis Raper, 45, of Lucama was charged with two equipment violations: one charge for failure to display a red light visible for 500 feet and one for failure to have the required reflectors on the trailer.

Bradshaw said the trailer had no lights or reflectors and the tractor had a small spotlight and a triangular reflector on the rear.

"I saw the headlights coming, and we began pulling off the side of the road," said M. Wayne Flora, who was holding a 2-year-old boy in his arms on the hayride.

"I watched the headlights as they approached and thought it might have been a friend," said Flora, director of youth and Christian education for the church. "I was praying he was going to pull up alongside us and stop. I realized right before we were hit that wasn't going to happen."

Tim White of the Wilson Rescue Squad said people were sitting in ditches and lying along the road but were surprisingly calm. "It was a whole lot calmer than I expected," he said.

Pesticide Monitoring Slack, Report Says

By ED McCULLOUGH
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — The Food and Drug Administration's delay in monitoring the pesticide EDB until after significant amounts of the suspected carcinogen were found in food indicates a more widespread failure in monitoring pesticides, according to a congressional committee.

"The committee finds that the failure of FDA's monitoring priorities to accommodate potentially hazardous pesticides is by no means limited to EDB," or ethylene dibromide, concluded the report released Sunday.

The 27-page report was based on two days of hearings last March before the House Government Operations Committee's intergovernmental relations subcommittee.

The report was approved Sept. 25 by the committee, sent to House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill, D-Mass., last Tuesday, and made public Sunday.

"FDA has failed to do its job and this has prevented other government agencies from enforcing laws meant to keep dangerous chemicals out of our food," said Rep. Ted Weiss, D-N.Y., chairman of the investigatory and oversight subcommittee.

FDA spokesman Jim Greene said Friday the agency had not seen the report and would not comment until it did.

From the 1940s until earlier this year, EDB was used as a fumigant on citrus and soils growing soybeans, cotton, nuts and other products to protect them from fruit flies and root worms, and was applied to stored grain to prevent insect infestation.

In the mid 1960s, evidence was published that linked the pesticide with reproductive damage in animals. In the 1970s, research indicated that EDB did not completely dissipate from grains while they were processed, as had been thought.

The subcommittee report criticized the FDA for delay in determining the danger of EDB, the use of which on U.S. grain and fruit has now been banned by the Environmental Protection Agency.

"It took the FDA 16 years from the time it was first advised that EDB residues may be present in the edible portions of fruit directly fumigated with EDB to complete its first survey of quarantine-fumigated fruit," the report said.

"In addition, it was not until January 1984 that FDA focused its sampling efforts on EDB on residues in imported citrus ... " the report said.

Green, the FDA spokesman, said the agency did not have the technology to accurately test for EDB residues until the 1970s, when it began to do so.

"In the 1950s and 1960s, the best technical judgment was that EDB dissipated" as grains were processed, he said.

William Ruckelshaus, administrator of the EPA, tightened restraints on EDB use last March, leading to the ban.

The subcommittee report recommended that the Food and Drug Administration establish priorities for monitoring pesticides so that resources are aimed at the most dangerous, and that the FDA and EPA coordinate efforts.

The EPA sets standards for residues of pesticides in foods, based in part on data provided by the FDA.

Falwell Urges Churches Take Active Stance

HIGH POINT (AP) — Churches must be prepared to give more than lip service to their opposition to abortion and be willing to support the mothers and their children, the Rev. Jerry Falwell told a Guilford County church congregation.

"Unless the church is willing to take care of the little girls and their babies, it has no right to oppose abortion," the founder of the Moral Majority said Sunday. "The church must put its money where its mouth is."

Although he opposes abortion except when the mother's life is in danger, Falwell said he pictured "a siege of lawlessness and back-alley abortions if we haven't done our work first."

He said that's where the Save a Baby program comes in.

Falwell came to the Piedmont of North Carolina to give the congregation a pep talk on the program, which First Wesleyan Church in High Point is contemplating. He set up the first such program in Lynchburg, Va., in 1982.

It is an alternative to abortion, offering residential care, counseling, prenatal care and adoption services in a spiritually based program. There are now 191 such programs in 49 states.

"I believe we are dealing with a crisis that can destroy us from within — the national sin of America," Falwell told the near-capacity crowd.

If the nation is brought to its knees, it will be by moral corruption, he said, rejecting the notion that it would be tumbled in a nuclear confrontation with the Soviet Union. "I don't find that in the Bible," Falwell said.

Falwell's address focused on abortion but touched on many of the problems he sees confronting the country.

"The United States," he said, "is not a perfect country. But I don't know who's second, we're so far ahead of everyone else."

Falwell, describing the abortion procedure in some detail, told how the fetus recoils in pain as it is prodded with the syringe or knife.

"I know this is cruel talk," Falwell said, "but I don't know how to change the minds of the people of the world without telling it like it is."

Following the address, a church committee voted to recommend approval of the Save a Baby program to the church's governing board, which will consider the recommendation and make its own suggestion to the congregation which has the final say.

Bargaining Continues In Mack Truck Strike

ALLENTOWN, Pa. (AP) — An official with Mack Trucks Inc. says his optimism about a quick settlement with 9,200 striking United Auto Workers union members is lessening as the two sides engage in lengthy bargaining sessions.

Weekend contract talks in the eight-day-old strike lasted from Saturday morning until 3 a.m. Sunday, and were continuing at 11:30 p.m. Sunday after having resumed Sunday morning, said William McCullough, Mack vice president for corporate affairs.

"Hope springs eternal, and I'm still an optimist," said McCullough. "But my optimism is waning a little."

The UAW struck at four plants in Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Maryland at 12:01 a.m. Oct. 21 when a two-year contract expired.

Neither Mack nor union officials have said where the negotiations are taking place, and both said they would not disclose details of the talks until a settlement is reached.

On strike are workers at Mack's production facilities in Allentown, where the firm has its headquarters, in nearby Macungie and in Hagerstown, Md. Strikers also have shut down a distribution center in Bridgewater, N.J.

Nearly 450 workers at Mack's assembly plant in Oakville, Ontario, have been laid off because of the strike, which slowed the flow of parts to the Canadian facility.

UAW officials say the major points in the dispute are job security and pay. Union negotiators have said they want layoff protection in the face of company plans to close two Allentown machine shops employing about 1,200 workers.

The company's offer when the walkout began would have increased the average pay of Mack employees by about $1.50 per hour, to about $25.50 in salary and benefits.

Anti-Deficit Action Urged

WASHINGTON (AP) — The head of the U.S. League of Savings Institutions is calling on the next president to establish a commission to attack federal red ink — even if it means new taxes or cuts in benefit programs.

"Interest rates have been rising because investors fear that if deficits aren't curbed, the government's need to borrow money will send inflation and interest rate levels through the roof," said league chairman Paul W. Prior in remarks prepared for the opening of its convention today.

The anti-deficit commission should be told to act quickly and not to fear suggesting cuts in popular programs or tax hikes, said Prior.

McDonald Houses Help Children And Parents

By ERICH SMITH
Associated Press Writer
PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Kim Hill's doctor cried when he diagnosed her leukemia. The 3-year-old girl wasn't given much hope to live.
She's 18 now and leading a normal, athletic life, but her childhood illness led her father, former professional football player Fred Hill, to begin raising funds to battle leukemia. His efforts led to the first Ronald McDonald House, a temporary home for seriously ill children and their families.

The idea caught on, and when the first house celebrated its 10th anniversary Oct. 15, there were 69 houses in other cities.
In the houses, parents of very sick children can turn to each other for support and understanding. The children have playmates who go through some of the same things they experience.
"I don't know what I would have done without this place," said Sue Wilson of Asbury Park, N.J., who has been at the McDonald House here with her son, Shaun, 9, since he came for cancer treatment at Childrens Hospital in August. "I guess I would have had to leave Shaun here, alone. That would have been terrible."

"People go with your mood swings here. They know what you're going through," Ms. Wilson said.
Another mother, Wendy Kaplan of Ventnor, N.J., lived in the hospital for two months with her 5-year-old son Adam before she heard about the local McDonald House.
"He loves it here," Ms. Kaplan said as Adam finished off a bowl of cereal and ran to a video game. "He thinks of it as home."
"It's good medicine," said Judy Blore, who has been resident manager of the Philadelphia house since it opened. "If the child is happy, it's better medicine."
In 1971, when Kim Hill was diagnosed, the excellent facilities of Childrens Hospital were close to home. But other children came much greater distances for treatment.
"The families just ended up staying in the hospital — in the hallways, and in the bedrooms, and there was barely room for the patients' beds in the bedrooms," said Dr. Audrey Evans, who heads the hospital's oncology division. "There were people all over."

Hill started raising money for the Leukemia Society of America, and his teammates on the Philadelphia Eagles joined in. Soon they were looking for other projects, and Ms. Evans offered the idea of a house for the parents sleeping on sofas.
Jim Murray, former general manager of the Eagles and now head of the International Advisory Board for the houses, thought of calling local McDonald's officials.
"It was probably the most significant phone call I ever made," he said.
He asked for a portion of the fast-food restaurants' milkshake profits and they asked that the house be named after Ronald McDonald, their red-haired clown mascot.
In a week, McDonald's raised $42,000, enough to buy a seven-room boarding house. A contractor whose daughter had been treated for leukemia renovated the building for free, Hill and his teammates donated some money, and the house opened in 90 days.

It was 2½ years before the second house opened in Chicago, where McDonald's is headquartered. Two years later, things began happening.
Ten houses opened in 1979, 20 more in the next two years. Now, says Murray, they open at a pace of about one a month. Volunteer groups are building or planning houses in about 50 areas.
All the houses are independent, funded by a combination of private donations and help from local McDonald's franchises. Nationwide, the fast food chain has raised more than $22 million to buy, renovate and operate the houses.
"The local McDonald's operators are big supporters," said Mrs. Blore. "Many of them told me, 'If you need anything, call me.'"
Families often stay at the homes for weeks or months, if the child needs treatment that long. Everyone shares bathrooms, kitchen space and TV rooms. No one is supposed to withdraw into a shell.

"That's the single most important thing that happens here," Mrs. Blore said. "The families talk to each other, and they can honestly say to each other, 'I know how you feel.'"
Often, the parents learn how to cope from their children, Mrs. Blore said.
"The kids are so remarkable and courageous. They make the most of every moment, and pretty soon the parents take their cues from their children," she said.
Many children get well and go home, but when a child dies, everybody feels it.
"One family came back after their little girl died, and we all sat in the playroom and talked and wept together for three or four hours," Mrs. Blore said. "Another couple whose only child had died stayed here all day — they just couldn't go home to an empty house."
Kim Hill has been off treatment for the past 10 years.
"I didn't enjoy being sick," she told reporters two years ago. "But if I wasn't sick, all of this might not have happened."

Man's Body Found, Kneeling With Bible, 10 Months After He Quietly Passed Away

By DAVID SEDENO
Associated Press Writer
DALLAS (AP) — Wesley Whalon was a loner who quietly left town without telling anyone. So when he disappeared 10 months ago, his sister thought he had reverted to his sinful ways after being "saved" by the Lord.
What Dorothy Williams didn't know was that her brother had died alone sometime around last Christmas. Earlier this month his decomposed body was found in his home in a kneeling position, his hands clutching a Bible, authorities said.
Mrs. Williams said she often went to her brother's house during the 10 months that he was missing. She said she peered through the windows, but could see nothing, and didn't want to break in.

"I think it was very strange they found him in the house I had been to 80 or 90 times," Mrs. Williams said Sunday, one day after her brother's funeral. "I just didn't want to break the law" by breaking into the home, she said.
Meanwhile, the grass in his front yard in suburban Oak Cliff yielded to weeds and the mail stacked up. Neighbors and friends responded to Mrs. Williams' queries by asking her if she had seen her brother.
"Nobody seemed to know where he was," said Mrs. Williams, who was in Corpus Christi in South Texas when she learned that men who worked for a mortgage company that had a lien on the house had found Whalon's body Oct. 16.
"I was just numb," she said of her initial reaction. "I said, 'Oh God I knew he must have been somewhere where he couldn't contact me.'"

Mrs. Williams, 51, last saw her brother on Christmas Eve — her birthday — when they visited her mother in a nursing home in nearby
Gunman Killed
LAWNDALE, Calif. (AP) — Police recovered two rifles and a handgun, all loaded, after shooting to death a gunman who barricaded himself in his apartment and fatally shot one bystander and wounded another.
Police fired tear gas into the building during the standoff late Saturday. When that failed to drive the gunman out, they rushed the apartment, where the man was shot to death despite his wearing a bullet-proof vest.

Pittsburg and returned to Dallas for dinner, she said.
It was the first time her brother and mother had seen each other in more than three years.
"They had a happy reunion," Mrs. Williams recalled, adding that her brother seemed like a different man that night, unlike the "know-it-all" of times past.
"He was very quiet. He didn't talk to nobody unless they said something to him first," she said.
She took him home that night and never again heard from the Dallas native, who has six children from three different marriages and was separated from his third wife.
The Dallas Medical Examiner's Office ruled that Whalon died of heart disease sometime around Christmas of last year.

Candidates Unleash TV Advertising Blitz

By JOAN MOWER
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — It's the bear vs. the red phone. The chanting Iranian students vs. the bombed Marine headquarters in Beirut. The man digging a hole vs. the welder on the job.

All of these scenes come from television advertisements aimed at attracting voters for President Reagan or Walter F. Mondale, his Democratic challenger.

Television spots for the presidential candidates will inundate the airwaves for the next 10 days as the campaigns wind up their multimillion-dollar advertising efforts.

The Reagan campaign says it will spend $25 million for advertising, more than half the $46 million total each campaign is allowed to spend. Mondale's people say they won't spend that much although they are not releasing their exact figure in advance. Industry sources say Mondale won't spend much less than Reagan.

The men have touched on many of the same issues — the economy, foreign policy and unemployment. But Reagan has tried to defend the past four years; Mondale has attacked it.

The Reagan ad that has drawn the most comment, according to Doug Watts, the campaign's media director, is the bear. "It's gotten the most cocktail talk," he said.

The ad shows a big bear wandering around the woods. "Some people say the bear is tame; others say he's vicious," says the ad. "Since no one can say who is right, isn't it smart to be as strong as the bear?"

The message is that the bear is the Soviet Union.

The advertisement was pulled off the air on Oct. 25 to make room for new advertisements, said Jim Travis, head of the Tuesday Team

Inc., the campaign's advertising arm. Another Republican source, who asked to remain anonymous, said that some members of a test audience group apparently didn't understand the meaning of the ad.

While Reagan's people had their bear, the Mondale team uses a red telephone in one of their advertisments, aimed at criticizing the president for his plan to put weapons in outer space, the so-called "star wars" plan.

With special sound effects that include a ringing and computer buzzing, the ad says:

"Ronald Reagan is determined to put killer weapons in space. The Soviets will have to match us and the arms race will rage out of control. ... With a response time to fire so short they're will be no time to wake a president. Computers will take control."

In another advertisement — "It's Morning Again in America" — the Reagan campaign announcer, against a background of soft music, talks about declining interest rates and higher unemployment.

Showing a young couple getting married, the spot says the young men and women "can look forward with confidence" to the future because of lower inflation.

Cost Only 'Modest' Factor In Making College Choice, New Study Indicates

By LEE MITGANG
AP Education Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Most four-year colleges try to lure bright students with financial aid reward academic merit, but monetary assistance is a "relatively modest" factor in the students' choice of schools, a study concludes.

An overwhelming percentage of 1,183 high-ability high school students interviewed in May tended to enroll in the school they considered their first choice, regardless of monetary inducements, according to the study sponsored by the College Board.

The survey, "The Influence of No-Need Financial Aid Awards on the College Choices of High Ability Students," was being released today at The College Board's three-day annual meeting, which concludes Tuesday.

Among those surveyed who were offered admission to two or more colleges, about 61 percent chose to attend the school they originally preferred. The remaining 39 percent chose another school, but only half did so either because of offers of better financial aid or because the college cost less, the survey found.

"The influence of money is relatively modest compared to other factors. The primary determinant of college choice is perceived college quality," said the report by Randall G. Chapman of the University of Alberta and Rex Jackson of Applied Educational Research, a Princeton, N.J. consulting firm.

The survey included students who scored at least 550 on both math and verbal sections of the Scholastic Aptitude Tests, the examination taken by nearly 2 million high school seniors. The test, sponsored by The College Board, is scored on a scale of 200 to 800.

The average scores last year were 426 on the verbal exam and 471 on the math test, thus scores of 550 on either were well above the national average.

No-need, or "merit" scholarships, have been hotly debated in academic circles recently, with a growing number of schools turning to them in hopes of inducing bright youngsters to attend at a time of declining enrollments.

Surveys have found that 85 percent of four-year private colleges and 90 percent of four-year public schools grant awards to academically superior students.

Some educators object that with college costs rising rapidly, and federal student aid falling, colleges should make financial need the most important criterion for selecting aid recipients.

This latest survey might be seen as boosting the case of merit scholarship opponents by demonstrating that such money usually fails to attract capable students who preferred other schools in the first place.

Of the 39 percent of students surveyed who decided to attend schools that weren't their original first choice, 27 percent did so because of better financial aid. Twenty-three percent chose other colleges because of lower costs, 13 percent on the basis of a campus visit, 12 percent because of the school's location, and 12 percent because of the school's academic reputation.

Royal Music

VENICE, Italy (AP) — The British Royal Marines band played waltzes, marches and excerpts from the Broadway hit "My Fair Lady" in St. Mark's Square to help mark the last day of Queen Mother Elizabeth's visit here.

Several thousand tourists and Venetians stopped to hear the marines Sunday, as the queen mother left the royal yacht Britannia to travel by motorboat to Marco Polo airport for the flight back to London.

It was her first trip to Italy since 1959. The four-day visit began on Thursday.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—As South, vulnerable, you hold:

♠AKJ83 ♥32 ♦K98 ♣KJ2

The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	1 NT	Pass

What action do you take?

A.—Many players panic because of their weak doubleton in hearts and rebid two spades. Don't do it! Partner might have only a singleton spade, and probably has no more than a doubleton. You have a minimum balanced hand, and the way to show it is to pass.

Q.2—As South, vulnerable, you hold:

♠72 ♥103 ♦872 ♣AKQ953

The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♦	Pass	2 ♣	Pass
2 NT	Pass	?	?

What do you bid now?

A.—You have an excellent six-card suit, but if you chose to rebid three clubs you do not grasp a fundamental bidding principle. A rebid of three clubs by you would say your hand is unsuited to no trump because your long suit is not solid. Here you are a strong favorite to bring partner six tricks. Bid three no trump.

Q.3—As South, vulnerable, you hold:

♠AKQ63 ♥854 ♦K92 ♣J6

The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	2 ♦	Pass
2 ♣	Pass	3 ♣	Pass
3 ♦	Pass	4 ♣	Pass

What action do you take?

A.—We know players who would reason: "I have a dead minimum opening bid and partner did not jump shift. Therefore, I should pass." Logical thinking would be: "Partner has gone out of the way to show a good hand with a singleton heart. If he has as little as the ace-queen of diamonds and ace of clubs, we have a slam." Use Blackwood to check on whether partner has two aces and, if he does, bid six spades.

Q.4—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:

♠AKQ63 ♥K92 ♦854 ♣J6

The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	2 ♦	Pass
2 ♣	Pass	3 ♣	Pass
3 ♦	Pass	4 ♣	Pass

What action do you take?

A.—No, this is not a mistake. There is one slight difference between this hand and the previous one—the red suits are reversed. This time your king is in the suit where partner is known to have a singleton, not in his suit. Since it is not a working card, pass.

Q.5—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:

♠K76 ♥A85 ♦32 ♣AKJ98

Partner opens the bidding with one diamond. What do you respond?

A.—You have a balanced hand with stoppers in the unbid suits and the point count for a jump to two no trump. However, we would not make that bid. Our points are all prime and, if partner has a club fit, we might have a slam. For the moment we would respond two clubs—we can always settle in three no trump later.

Q.6—As South, vulnerable, you hold:

♠K7652 ♥A96 ♦83 ♣AJ3

The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♦	Pass	1 ♣	Pass
3 ♣	Pass	?	?

What do you bid now?

A.—Many years ago we stated the principle: "An opening bid facing an opening bidder who has jump raised equals slam." Since partner must have at least one ace, jump to six spades. What about a grand slam? Unless partner has not bid his hand correctly, or the two hands are a magic fit, seven spades should be over-ambitious.

Hopeful Mondale Recalls Truman's Upset Of Dewey

By MIKE FEINSILBER
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — If, despite the polls and the conventional wisdom, Walter Mondale wins ...

... It'll be the greatest presidential election upset since Harry S. Truman beat Thomas Dewey to the surprise of just about everyone in America except Truman himself.

Mondale's well aware of the analogy. He keeps making it. Last week, he toured the farm states — a la HST — and said he could "smell victory in the air."

"I rode on the Truman train, even though I was too young to vote," Mondale told farm families in Burlington, Iowa. "And in that campaign, they wrote Harry Truman off. Couldn't win. It was hopeless. They stopped taking polls, he was so far behind."

And that's not the half of it. Truman inherited the presidency when Franklin D. Roosevelt died in 1945 and his nearly four years in the White House were tumultuous — inflation and labor troubles at home, the start of the Cold War abroad.

Democrats at their Philadelphia convention that summer agreed that Truman's situation was hopeless. Republicans had taken control of Congress in 1946 for the first time in 30 years. Democratic Sen. J. William Fulbright of Arkansas even suggested that Truman resign.

Some Democrats searched for an alternative candidate; the popular Dwight D. Eisenhower refused to make himself available for a draft. "I'm just mild about Harry," said signs at the convention hall.

The party split. Former Vice President Henry Wallace, in a break with Truman's anti-communism, formed the leftish Progressive Party and ran as its presidential candidate. Southerners bolted at the convention over civil rights and nominated Gov. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina — now a senior Republican, then a Democrat — as the Dixiecrat presidential candidate.

But Truman plunged into his hopeless campaign with gusto. He whistled in nearly 400 cities and towns, always introducing his wife, Bess, "the boss," and his daughter, Margaret, "the boss' boss."

A supremely confident Republican nominee Thomas E. Dewey, famed as a gang-busting prosecutor and efficient New York governor, wanted to do nothing to jeopardize a sure thing, so he didn't campaign as energetically and in his speeches offered windy platitudes about "national unity."

Truman, on the other hand, went after "that do-nothing 80th Congress" at every stop.

"These Republican gluttons of privilege want a return of the Wall Street dictatorship," he'd say. "Your typical Republican reactionary is a very shrewd man with a calculating machine where his heart ought to be."

Few helped Truman. He was so under-financed he was sometimes cut off the radio in mid-speech for non-payment. Once in Oklahoma City, his staff had to take up a collection to get the train out of the station.

His crowds were big and enthusiastic, but reporters on the train put that down to people's natural desire to see a sitting president.

Dewey, his "Victory Special" train rolling on with great efficiency, made some mistakes. At one stop, the train lurched forward before the candidate had finished speaking. "What's the matter with that idiot engineer?" Dewey asked — and the workman vote noticed.

Midwestern farm prices plummeted that fall, corn falling from $1.78 a bushel to $1 in two months, and Truman blamed the Republican Congress for failing to provide adequate storage facilities.

On election night, almost everyone in America expected a Dewey victory. Life magazine was out with his picture on its cover labeled "Our Next President." Pollsters George Gallup and Archibald Crossley each estimated Dewey's margin at 5 percent. Elmo Roper, convinced the race was over, quit polling on Sept. 9.

Election night in that pre-computer age: Truman carries Philadelphia but by less than DR's 1944 margin. Republicans rejoice; Pennsylvania's theirs. Ditto Baltimore. Truman, at a spa 32 miles northeast of Kansas City, has a ham sandwich, a glass of buttermilk and goes to bed.

Wallace wins enough votes in New York to deliver the state to Dewey. Massachusetts goes to Truman. Newspapers are in a dither. They had big Dewey layouts, but can't proclaim a winner. Truman holds the popular lead, but Dewey has won New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Connecticut, Delaware, Maine, Vermont, Indiana and Michigan, and Thurmond has deprived the Democrats of Alabama, Mississippi, South Carolina and Louisiana. Everyone is waiting for the farm vote.

By 3 a.m. EST, the outcome is still in doubt. Ohio, Illinois, and California hold the balance. Ultimately, they all go narrowly for Truman.

And so he won — with 49.5 percent of the popular vote to Dewey's 45.1 percent.

How'd he do it?

Well, Truman managed to hold together the old Roosevelt coalition. He carried 28 states, 23 of which had voted for FDR every time he ran. Truman swept the big cities, the West and the Farm Belt.

Turnout was light — only 51.1 percent of the eligible vote. Says Truman biographer Robert Donovan: "The polls doubtless misled many Republicans into thinking that it was not worth the trouble to vote since the election was already won."

In some states, like Illinois, Truman ran behind the Democratic ticket and was helped by strong local Democratic candidates, like Adlai E. Stevenson.

Underdogs ever since have been citing Truman's triumph. But for Mondale, there are some big differences. He's not the incumbent, and times are good.

A Short, Tragic Life For Tiny Abuse Victim

By STRAT DOUTHAT
Associated Press Writer

POINT PLEASANT, W.Va. (AP) — During the 23 months that tiny Tasha Kostu was alive she stayed in four separate households and was physically abused in two of them, officials say.

The child died last month in Pleasant Valley Hospital of head injuries.

Irvin Sopher, the state medical examiner, ruled last week that the girl's death was "a child abuse fatality." He said she had injuries dating from the first week she was sent by the state Department of Human Services to live with Emil and Debi Hoffman, who were in the process of adopting her.

"She had marks on her upper extremities, her head, the back of her neck and her buttocks," Sopher said. He said the nature of the fatal head injury was inconsistent with Mrs. Hoffman's statement to authorities that the child was hurt while riding a tricycle.

Contacted at her home just outside Point Pleasant, Mrs. Hoffman declined to comment.

"I've got plenty to say but I'm not talking at this time. We have an attorney who is handling this," she said.

No action has been taken in the case.

"I'm still putting together a picture of what happened," Mason County Prosecuting Attorney Damon Morgan Jr. said Thursday. "I just got the Department of Human Services report a couple of days ago and the state trooper who investigated the case won't be back from vacation until the first week of November."

He said he feels no pressure to bring charges or take any action until he has all the facts, but added that he probably will present the case to the next Mason County grand jury, which convenes in January.

Ed Burdette, commissioner of the state Department of Human Services, said the child's death indicated that his department failed, despite its best efforts to find her a safe home.

He said Tasha had been taken from her natural parents when she was four months old because they had abused her.

"After that she was in two foster homes and then was placed with the Hoffmans," he said. "A social worker visited the Hoffman home two times during the six weeks the child was with them, and our department placed 10 telephone calls to the residence," he said.

Burdette said the child had failed to warm up to Mrs. Hoffman.

"It was understandable, though," he said. "The child was in her fourth home and she wasn't yet 2 years old. That was something that shouldn't have happened."

He said the Hoffmans had just adopted a 13-month-old girl in June and then had taken Tasha and her 3-year-old brother on a pre-adoptive basis in July.

Burdette said there was no indication that Tasha's brother or the 13-month-old girl, both of whom have been removed from the Hoffmans' custody, suffered any abuse.

Burdette said his department employees knew Mrs. Hoffman was unhappy because she was unable to form a close relationship with Tasha and because there was jealousy between Tasha and the younger girl.

"The child was going through her fourth mother and it was understandable that she was withdrawn," he said. "We had called in a psychologist to help them work it out."

Sopher was quoted earlier as saying he didn't think there should be a criminal prosecution in the case.

Asked about this, he said he thought the psychological aspects of the case should be considered and that prosecuting the foster parents would serve no purpose.

Burdette said his department worked long and hard to find a good, safe home for Tasha and her brother.

"The Hoffmans are well-respected in their community and their experience with the first child was good," he said. "If the placement had worked out it would have been great, but obviously it didn't work out."

"This has been a trying time for our staff. You look back at one of these things and say, 'If only we had picked up on this or seen that ...'"

Time After Time

Standard time resumed at 2:00 a.m. yesterday. Until the 1880s, most places kept "local time" based on the sun's movement. In 1883, there were 80 different time zones in the U.S. In Dorchester, England, one man who arrived at court on time, found that the judge had already ruled against him. "Time" at the courthouse was two minutes ahead of "time" in the defendant's hometown. One hundred years ago this month, most nations adopted Greenwich Mean Time.

Times, Post Back Mondale Candidacy

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Washington Post today endorsed Walter F. Mondale for president, saying he has been "maddeningly misread and mistreated" by political trendmakers while President Reagan "has been maddeningly indulged and overpraised."

In an editorial, the Post said Reagan had improved national defense, rejected "empty sentimentality" in foreign policy and cut pointless federal spending. But it said his administration would have been "an unmitigated disaster" without the moderating influence of Democrats.

Mondale, "in contrast to his opponent ... has been serious, straightforward and genuinely engaged in issues that the next president will have to deal with," the Post said. "We say this is a serious, steady, bright, decent, qualified man who wants to be president and should be."

The New York Times on Sunday also endorsed Mondale, saying "most of all, he would bring to the White House the will to control nuclear weapons."

Mondale also was backed by the Philadelphia Inquirer, the Detroit Free Press, the Minneapolis Star and Tribune, the Milwaukee Journal and the St. Petersburg Times.

Reagan, meanwhile, picked up endorsements Sunday from several newspapers, including the Miami Herald, the Chicago Tribune, the New York Daily News, the Hartford Courant, the Omaha World-Herald, the Sunday Oklahoma in Oklahoma City, the Portland Oregonian and the Albuquerque Journal.

The San Francisco Examiner praised the economic recovery under Reagan's "magnetic leadership" while tying his opponent to the "double-digit inflation of the Carter-Mondale administration."

The Examiner criticized the president as "wrong to allow the placing of 'firecracker' mines in Nicaragua harbors," but praised his invasion that "rescued Grenada ... against the expansion of Eastern Bloc totalitarianism."

The New York Daily News said that "by almost all standards, we are better off than we were four years ago."

"Reagan's vision of an industrious, decent America embodying traditional values revived spirits bruised by years of discouragement over Vietnam, Watergate and the Iran hostage crisis," the Omaha World-Herald said.

But the Philadelphia Inquirer said Mondale's candidacy promises "a celebration of the pluralism, a nourishment of the dignity of all Americans on which the greatness of the United States has been built — and which is suffering erosion under Reagan's stewardship."

The Detroit Free Press said that "it is our belief that the Reagan prosperity is the prosperity of living on borrowed money."

In endorsing Reagan, the Miami Herald said, "In any presidential election when the United States is prosperous and at peace, voters reasonably may begin with a presumption in favor of retaining an incumbent of good character."

But alongside the endorsement ran a dissenting article by editor Jim Hampton, who wrote that most members of the Herald's editorial board supported Mondale "without enthusiasm" and were overruled by publisher Dick Capen.

The Sunday Oklahoma endorsed Reagan, crediting him for the nation's economic recovery and adding, "Once again we are respected by our allies. No longer are we pushed around by the Russians or humiliated by two-bit banana republics."

The Hartford Courant said it backed Reagan reluctantly, adding, "What disturbs us most about the Reagan presidency is its stridency in dealing with the overriding issue of our time — the maintenance of peace in a nuclear world."

Other newspapers endorsing Reagan included the Baltimore News American, the Kansas City Times, the Cincinnati Post, the Cincinnati Enquirer, the Cleveland Plain Dealer, the Hattiesburg (Miss.) American, the Clarion-Ledger-Jackson (Miss.) Daily News, The State in Columbia, S.C., and the Greenville (S.C.) News and Piedmont.

orbit around 1992. The space station, declared a national goal by President Reagan, is only in the preliminary design stage now.

Other speakers scheduled for the opening session were George Keyworth, the president's science adviser; Walter Hickel, former secretary of Interior; Harrison Schmitt, a moon-walking astronaut and former senator; and Arthur Kowert, a physicist, and professor of engineering at Dartmouth College.

Last April, a small working group met in Los Alamos, N.M., and examined the unique scientific experiments that could be carried out at a lunar base, the potential development of the moon's resources for industrial and space transportation; the problems of man's living and working on the moon; the technological and scientific requirements for a lunar base, and the economic, political and legal problems that would be faced.

The group termed industrial development "a compelling component of a lunar base."
