The 1984 Pitt County United Way campaign ended Wednesday with donations totaling $745,996, exceeding its goal for this year by more than $64,000. Fund-raising volunteers celebrated with a Victory Party Wednesday night at the Greenville Country Club.

Campaign General Chairman Andy Warren said, "In our campaign there will be no losers. We will all be winners — you, the agencies and all of Pitt County."

Warren introduced the chairmen of the committees and divisions in the campaign, who in turn gave reports on their collections.

The Industrial, Commercial and Service divisions exceeded their goal, by 104 percent. The total collected by the divisions, which were headed by Gene Brown, was $611,407.

Chairman of the Industrial Division, Dick Tolmie, reported that the division collected $462,080 for 102 percent of its goal. The Commercial Division, headed by Chairman Griff Garner, reportedly amassed 111 percent of its goal by collecting $48,490. A total of $100,836 was collected by the Service Division, headed by Ray Rogers; this figure is 112 percent of the division's goal.

Vice chairman Donald Brown, who headed the Business, County and Special Gifts divisions of the campaign, reported that his divisions collected pledges amounting to $39,084; this figure is 109 percent of the goal for the divisions this year.

Dr. Edwin West, vice chairman of the Professional, Public and Academic Employees divisions, said his divisions reached 121 percent of this year's goal with a total of $95,506 pledged to date.

The highest percent of goal collected was by the town of Simpson, with 239 percent of their $70 goal being pledged, for a total of $167. The Pitt County School system employees contributed 211 percent of their goal.

Lou Folger, executive director of the Pitt County United Way, credited Procter and Gamble with the largest average gift, $150 per employee; with corporate giving included, Procter and Gamble donated a total of $89,020 to the campaign, Mrs. Folger said.

She said that 97 percent of the employees at Yale Materials Handling Corporation contributed to the total of $75,679 donated by the corporation.

"The East Carolina University Medical School and the main campus did real well," Mrs. Folger added. "And Pitt County Memorial Hospital had a 58 percent increase over last year. This year's donation was approximately $41,000; last year the hospital donated $26,000. These donations made a big difference in the campaign."

This year's goal had been set at $681,325 for the nine-week campaign which began Sept. 6.

When he was presented with the $745,996 check after the totals had been announced, Pitt County United Way President John Williams said, "The citizens of Pitt County have really come through for the citizens of Pitt County."

U.S., Nicaragua Spar Over Soviet Freighter

CORINTO, Nicaragua (AP) — The Sandinista government claims U.S. warships, aircraft and speedboats violated Nicaraguan territorial waters while shadowing a Soviet freighter that the United States said may have brought MiG warplanes to Nicaragua.

The United States declared that it would view with "utmost concern" any delivery of Soviet-made advanced MiG 21 aircraft to the leftist-ruled country.

The Soviet freighter Bakuriani docked Wednesday at Corinto, a Pacific coast port 105 miles northwest of Managua. U.S. officials have said that intelligence data suggest the ship is carrying advanced MiG 21 warplanes, but that the data is inconclusive.

A Pentagon spokesman denied that any U.S. military ships or aircraft had been deployed in Nicaraguan waters or airspace in response to the freighter's arrival.

Nicaraguan security forces kept reporters from approaching the vessel as it unloaded, but journalists saw from a distance hundreds of sacks labeled "powdered milk" being unloaded and stacked onto trucks parked near the ship.

Dock workers told reporters that the cargo included dynamite. However, that report that could not be confirmed because of the security measures.

Foreign Minister Miguel d'Escoto denied that Nicaragua had received any MiGs, but he did not say what the Soviet ship was carrying. He made public the text of a diplomatic note he sent to U.S. Secretary of State George P. Shultz protesting what he called a "flagrant violation of the national sovereignty" of Nicaragua by the United States.

The note said two U.S. Navy frigates "harassed" the Bakuriani "between 10 and 11 a.m. seven miles off the Nicaraguan coast."

Earlier, d'Escoto and Defense Ministry officials in Managua claimed that speedboats unloaded from U.S. Navy warships and North American aircraft harassed the Bakuriani and a Nicaraguan patrol boat inside territorial waters. A Nicaraguan military spokesman said a plane from a U.S. Navy warship was shadowing the Bakuriani as it neared Corinto, and was chased away by Nicaraguan gunfire but not hit. The note from d'Escoto said the aircraft was a C-130.

Townspeople, who spoke on condition that they not be identified, told an Associated Press reporter that they heard a small aircraft flying around the area and that it was fired upon by Sandinista artillery. They said the plane was not hit.

D'Escoto's note demanded "the end of these provocative acts that could bring unseen consequences for international peace and security."

Shuttle Discovery Begins New Trip

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Shuttle Discovery vaulted spectacularly into orbit today for a daring mission in which jet-propelled astronauts are to fly free of the ship to salvage two satellites adrift in space.

During eight days in orbit, the crew of four men and one woman also is to deploy two communications satellites for paying customers and conduct crystal-growing experiments that could lead to a major new industry in space.

With tens of thousands watching, Discovery roared away from this spaceport at 7:15 a.m. EST and rose swiftly through partly cloudy skies on 7 million pounds of thrust, darting eastward over the Atlantic Ocean.

Nine minutes after liftoff, mission control center in Houston reported the winged ship was in orbit 184 miles above the globe, speeding along at 17,400 mph.

"We look good," said astronaut Rick Hauck, mission commander.

Discovery was in position to start the complex series of maneuvers that would bring the shuttle close to the two wayward satellites for the

Florida Executes Palmes

STARKE, Fla. (AP) — Timothy Palmes, a jailhouse artist, was electrocuted in Florida's death chamber today for the murder of a store owner who was stabbed 18 times before his body was put in a wooden box and dumped in a river.

Palmes, 37, was put to death at 10:07 a.m. in the state's eighth execution this year.

He was convicted of killing James M. Stone of Jacksonville and dumping his body in the St. Johns River in 1976.

Palmes' latest appeal was rebuffed by the U.S. Supreme Court on Wednesday.

He ate a last meal of steak and eggs, and soon after, his head and right ankle were shaved to allow a clear path for the 2,000 volts of electricity. He was led into the death chamber at 9:57 a.m. The switch was thrown five minutes later and the electricity was turned off one minute after that.

Palmes, who during his years on death row had painted several portraits, appeared resigned to his fate, said Department of Corrections spokesman Vernon Bradford.

Palmes originally was set to die Wednesday morning, but won a temporary reprieve Tuesday from the 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Atlanta.

Festival Important Promo For Flue-Cured Industry

By SUE HINSON
Reflector Staff Writer

Coming in the wake of what Southern Flue-Cured Tobacco Festival board member Reginald Lester called one of the most damaging excise taxes passed in tobacco history and in the midst of turmoil over the price support-production control program, the Greenville-based Tobacco Festival is as important a promotional event this year as it has ever been.

"With these kinds of backdrops of problems," Lester said, "it's wonderful to have a community that is willing to show its pride in tobacco through such a marvelous outpouring of support in celebration of the conclusion of the flue-cured states' most profitable crop."

According to Lester, the annual festival "points out the significant economic contributions tobacco makes not only to eastern North Carolina and the state, but the other four states in the flue-cured region — South Carolina, Virginia, Georgia and Florida."

Now in its seventh year, the festival has become known as the second end to the Southeastern tobacco season — an event that unifies growers and manufacturers and acts as a public education medium for the tobacco industry.

Already in full-swing, the festival includes a queen's pageant, clogging and beach dance competitions, quilt and craft shows, pipe-smoking contest, tobacco grading and tying contests and end-of-the-year farming awards. The festival began Oct. 27 with a Fiddling Convention and will conclude Nov. 15 with the annual tobacco spitting contest on stage at the Farmers Tobacco Warehouse in Greenville.

Despite the usual festive atmosphere of the tobacco celebration, the future of tobacco surely will never be out of farmers' mind for a moment.

At this time, the major concern of farmers and of the Tobacco Growers Information Committee, a Raleigh-based organization of which Lester is the managing director, is finding workable solutions to problems that "tinkering and fine tuning" have not yet ironed out of the half-century-old price support-production control program.

The second issue concerning the tobacco industry is a federal excise tax passed in Janunary 1983 temporarily raising the tax on cigarettes from 8 to 16 cents per package until October 1985. According to Lester, doubling the tax has done "more damage in one year than 25 years of anti-smoking messages and campaigning."

Lester credited the tax increase with causing a 5 percent decrease in cigarette consumption and for promoting the layoffs of numerous tobacco manufacturing employees.

However, all is not bleak, as Arthur Jackson, accounting manager of the Flue-Cured Tobacco Cooperative Stabilization Corp., has reported that sales of tobacco held in storage are going "very well."

Jackson said that Stabilization

Lauren And Vittadini Unveil Spring Collections

By MARJORIE ANDERS
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — In the old-fashioned wallpaper prints and pale linens of Ralph Lauren or the new-wave knits in fiesta solids by Adrienne Vittadini, spring 1985 offers something for everyone.

There's nothing new about Lauren's spring trench coat except that it's in ivory silk charmeuse — that shiny, satiny fabric that begs to be touched.

In the new collection unveiled Wednesday at his Seventh Avenue showroom, Lauren used ivory charmeuse in trousers, sarong, pleated and dirndl skirts, camp shirts and walking shorts. But the dressy charmeuse looked odd when paired with plain white cotton lisle T-shirts or oatmeal cable-knit linen sweaters.

Lauren's clothes are more wearable when using cotton floral prints that look like grandma's dining room wallpaper.

A backless halter dress, with mid-calf circle skirt and cross front panels that tied behind the neck was especially flattering. In addition to the flower prints, the halter dress was shown in plain white cotton.

Antique rose, peach and green florals were shown with linen tweed jackets, white trousers or dirndls and madras scarves. The subtlety of the colors allowed Lauren to get away with the mix of tweed, flowers and plaid in one outfit.

Pearls, antique brooches, anklets, flat sandals and wide-brimmed straw hats pulled low on the forehead complemented his casual, but opulent, approach. His best single accessory was a two-inch wide crocodile belt that dressed up white on white tops and trousers.

Lauren also showed several versions of the ubiquitous big white shirt; one with a standard collar, another with a stand-up, single-button collar. But the best came equipped with tails that wrapped and tied at the hip.

One look paired short suede dirndl skirts in heather pink or light aqua

Pauline Comanor, known as the "world's fastest cartoonist, will be appearing here Saturday at Belk Tyler at Carolina East Mall.

She has developed a special technique in sketching cartoon scenes and caricatures. Accompanying her will be some original handmade Chunky Monkey dolls. The character first appeared in her book "The Story of Chunky Monkey."

Her visit to Greenville will also include a Chunky Monkey coloring contest. An ad in today's paper gives details of the contest.

Dear Abby

By Abigail Van Buren

Patriot Thinks It Is Time America Has A Change Of Tune

DEAR ABBY: I think it's time we changed our national anthem because "The Star-Spangled Banner" is practically unsingable. Also the tune was taken from an old English drinking song.

At the last presidential inauguration, Willie Nelson left out "the rocket's red glare, the bombs bursting in air."

Abby, if professional singers goof up, how can we expect school children to remember the words?

Some alternatives:

"America the Beautiful." But with all those references to God, I suppose the atheists would object.

"The Battle Hymn of the Republic" would be wonderful; the "Glory, glory, hallelujah" part is very inspirational. Children would love it.

"God Bless America" would be the easiest to sing, but the atheists wouldn't approve of that one either.

How did "The Star-Spangled Banner" get to be our national anthem, anyway? And what would it take to change it?

PATRIOTIC IN SAN ANGELO, TEXAS

DEAR PATRIOTIC: An act of Congress was signed into law by President Hoover in 1931 making "The Star-Spangled Banner" our national anthem.

In order to change it, that law would have to be repealed and another law passed to replace it.

In the past, attempts have been made to oust "The Star-Spangled Banner," but they fell flat, so the melody lingers on.

DEAR ABBY: As the activity director of the Hillcrest Nursing Home in Twin Lakes, Wis., it's my responsibility to provide our 84 residents with entertainment and activities to make their golden years more enjoyable.

Two years ago I started what we call the Dear Abby Hour. It is very popular among our residents since many can no longer read. I turn to your column in the Kenosha (Wis.) News, and first I read aloud the "problem" that was written in. Then the residents take turns supplying the advice.

We discuss all the subjects that come up in your column—politics, sex, marriage, free love, child abuse and whether or not there is a left sock and a right sock. Some of the answers our 80- and 90-years-olds think up are better than yours, and funnier, too.

I thought you might like to know that the attendance at our Dear Abby Hour is higher than our current events sessions.

So thank you, from all of us, for the fun and entertainment your column provides.

DEAR ABBY: This letter concerns the Pennsylvania Dutchman's 80-year-old cousin who fathered a son by his 24-year-old wife.

A rather reliable source once told me of this big-game hunter on a safari who wandered away from camp with only a walking cane. He was confronted by a huge tiger ready to pounce on him, so he raised his cane, aimed it between the tiger's eyes and the beast fell dead at his feet! There was another hunter behind him with a real gun.

Perhaps the 24-year-old wife encountered another hunter with a real gun, too.

Stepparenting Demands New Set of Rules

SAN DIEGO, Calif. (AP) — Being a stepparent is a task filled with difficulties and disappointments, and new stepparents often have unrealistic expectations which interfere with success, warns a psychologist at United States International University here.

Dr. Robert Leone, director of the psychology clinics at USIU, explains that stepparents who try to model their new relationships after typical nuclear family roles are in for some hard times.

Instead, Leone suggests, new stepparents should abandon any plans for trying to become the child's original "parent" and should try to be a caring, friendly "uncle or aunt figure" in the first two years of the new relationship.

Leone, who has compiled a wide range of advice he believes will help stepfamilies through the stages of adapting to their new relationships, is himself the stepfather of two boys.

Even the word "step" causes problems, he notes. "There haven't been, that I know of, any good stories about stepparents. The first one everyone thinks of is Cinderella's wicked stepmother who sends her own two daughters to the dance and keeps Cinderella home to clean out the fireplace. So the word 'stepchild' is almost synonymous with being a victim," Leone says.

The suggestions he offers to help stepparents through the rough times include:

— Recognize that there are three stages of a stepfamily relationship, the happy and hopeful first stage, the conflict stage in which negative feelings begin to surface, and the crisis stage in which conflicts come out in the open. Parents and stepparents need to be prepared for an average adjustment period of two years.

— Pay attention to developing a good bond with your spouse. Only with that accomplished can stepparents hope to succeed with the children. Both parents need to agree on the new family system, such as how to discipline children, how to reward them, how to show affection and how to play together as a family.

— Recognize that stepfamilies have some unique problems. Problems include coping with children's bonds to their missing parents, conflicting loyalties, and childhood fantasies that somehow their divorced parents will get back together.

— Be prepared for a magnification of common family problems. "If Johnny is failing in school in a stepfamily, the mother may feel guilty for not spending as much time with him as before her remarriage. Johnny may think that if he had his real father available he would get more help with his homework (which may or may not be true), and the new father may be feeling that he's not any good as a stepfather because his child is failing. Everybody blames each other and themselves, while in a nuclear family it's much easier to face the problem for what it really is.

— Equate the experience of becoming a new stepparent with an organ transplant into a body. Even though a new stepparent, like a new kidney, may be for the betterment of the whole system, there is likely to be an effort to reject the newcomer. Kids in stepfamilies already know that marriages don't last forever. They may think, "She got rid of the last one, so if we're outrageous enough we can get rid of this one." Stepparents need to be prepared for that very normal response from the children.

— Be aware that the acclimation process is probably most difficult with children in their middle years, and also that some emotions may be transferred. For example, the child who is angry with his father for leaving may express the anger against his new stepfather.

— If you are experiencing real problems in making the adjustment as a stepfamily, ask for help. Stepparents need to talk to their spouses and the family may need to seek outside help from an organization such as the Stepfamily Association of America Inc. which has 35 U.S. branches, or from a counselor.

"Don't wait until you are drowning to get professional help," Leone advises. "It's OK to get 'swimming lessons' (counseling) and needing them doesn't mean that you are neurotic or incompetent or not a good parent. Remember, very few people make it to the Olympics without lessons."

(Address of national headquarters of the Stepfamily Association of America Inc. is 28 Alleghany Avenue, Suite 1307, Baltimore, MD 21204.)

At Wits End

By Erma Bombeck

One of these days you're going to open your paper and the headline will read, "COLUMNIST ACCIDENTALLY SHOOTS SELF WHILE TRYING TO OPEN BACON."

Actually, a gun is the only thing I haven't used to pry open packages, but I've been close to it on several occasions. In an attempt to open various containers, I've resorted to knives (bread, paring and cleavers), razor blades, scissors, rose clippers, nail files, axes, spears, letter openers, javelins, electric saws and sabers.

At one point when I was totally out of control, I tried to puncture a package of almonds on an airline with the heel of my shoe.

There is no doubt in my mind that when I go it will be from injuries suffered as a result of breaking into a package. A box of sheets arrived from a mail order house the other day. Sheets, as we know, do not have to be hermetically sealed. Nothing happens when the air hits them. The tomb of Tutankhamen should have been so well preserved.

I put the box on the table, reached for a steak knife and waited for the voice that appears at the opening of every box.

"Don't stab yourself with that knife or you'll bleed to death," said my husband.

"You have just ruined my surprise," I said.

"I mean it. You make me very nervous when you start sawing away. Why don't you just loosen up the tape around the opening?"

Patiently, I smiled, "Remember when you tried to get a comb out of a plastic bubble and by the time you got to it, you had pulled all your hair out and didn't need it?"

"I remember," he said.

"Then you know what the odds are of loosening up the tape around the opening."

I think the mails have us so intimidated that we have overcorrected the problem. There is no reason to bury a small plastic cup in a piano box, in 10 yards of plastic bubbles, another five pounds of Styrofoam squigglies, tape on every opening and baling wire around the entire package.

My kitchen is turning into an arsenal to combat hard-to-open packages. I salvaged a piece of broken glass from the trash the other day and said, "I can use this to open my book selections each month."

Homemaking has always been a high-risk profession. Raising children, cooking, chauffeuring, caring for animals and solving disputes, all of it is life-threatening, but I truly believe if God wanted me to open packages, He'd have given me serrated fingernails that when pressure is applied will detonate.

Leadership

The 1984 election is complete and the voters of the state and nation have made their decisions.

President Ronald Reagan has been returned to office for another four years. In North Carolina the bitterest, most closely watched senatorial election in the nation has concluded with the defeat of Gov. Jim Hunt by incumbent Sen. Jesse Helms. In a startling turn around Republican Jim Martin has defeated the Democratic nominee Rufus Edmisten. That is startling because Martin at one time was well behind in the polls. His overtaking of Edminsten in the final days was rapid and complete.

Now the healing must begin. There was a record turnout of voters throughout North Carolina for this election and thus the will of the people was expressed as never before. The results can be confusing, however, in that the people voted for a Republican senator, governor and president but a Democratic Legislature and Council of State.

It falls to the winners of all the races to provide the leadership which is so necessary to provide for the best interest of our citizens. From this point on sometimes reckless commentary of the campaign is over and we must all begin to work together to build a better North Carolina and nation.

The people of our state have elected the candidates they felt were best qualified to lead. Now the winners must show they are true leaders and do all they can to work together in building a better North Carolina.

Turnout

No doubt the arguments will go on between supporters of winners and losers as to who was the best candidate. Certainly, however, there was one real winner in Tuesday's election — that was participatory democracy.

Voters came out in huge numbers locally and throughout North Carolina. Massive voter drives had been conducted and newly registered voters tend to cast ballots.

It was certainly a record turnout in Pitt County. Unofficial totals show that 33,829 ballots were cast in Pitt County. That would be 74 percent of the 45,944 registered voters in the county participating in the election.

By comparison in the 1980 presidential election 26,540 voted out of a registration of 35,147, a 75.5 percent participation. The percent voting was about the same, but total votes were higher this year because of a larger registration.

Everybody wins when the voters turn out in heavy numbers. That is, after all, what makes democracy thrive. Tuesday's vote shows Pitt County is involved in the democratic process.

Ethnic Ambitions Vs. Democracy

WASHINGTON — Prime minister Indira Gandhi's assassination has underscored how sectarian divisions threaten the so-called "world's largest democracy." But how was democracy faring in the nation that Gandhi ruled for most of the last 15 years?

India is governed under a parliamentary system in which Gandhi's Congress Party and its numerous rivals compete. Yet anyone who remembers that national "state of emergency" declared by Gandhi in 1977 knows that competition has not always been fair. Last summer, Gandhi showed her iron hand again by dissolving some of the popularly-elected state assemblies controlled by her opponents. In areas believed to harbor significant anti-government sentiment, travel restrictions have been strictly enforced, too.

Meanwhile, the violence in India has gone under-reported due to the government's tight control of the press. For example, an Indian national who recently returned from the Jammu area told us a grisly story of how Sikh gunmen held up a bus on which he was riding, ordered its 32 passengers to line up alongside the vehicle, and proceeded to shoot to death every other one. The massacre went unreported even in India.

Of course, many of her political opponents supported Gandhi's decision to send the country's army against Sikh extremists in the Golden Temple at Amritsar. Indians are generally frightened by the terrorist actions undertaken by what is essentially a separatist movement.

Efforts to contain ambitious ethnic groups may be incompatible with democratic institutions that are already under strain.

Act of contrition? The Navy says it has moved to correct a procurement practice that resulted in the purchase, for as much as $16,000, of a three-cubic-foot refrigerator for one of its aircraft. Since opening the refrigerator contract to competitive bidding, the service has agreed to acquire at least 35 units for $6,580 each.

Last month, the Air Force admitted that it had paid $7,600 for a coffee brewer installed on the C-54 transport plane. It termed that price "reasonable."

Lucky as they are, families with incomes of at least $40,000 should feel more so. In 1982, according to the Federal Reserve Board, they accounted for only 17 percent of all families in the nation, a drop from 21 percent in 1976. The share of families with incomes below $7,500 rose from 13 percent to 18 percent during the same period.

The Federal Reserve suggested that a reason for the changes might be the increase in single-person households among the oldest and youngest age groups.

Groundwater safety may become the principle environmental issue of the 1980s, according to Congress' Office of Technology Assessment (OTA). OTA points out that the federal government regulates only 22 of the 200 contaminants routinely found in groundwater. Many of those contaminants are associated with cancer, liver dysfunction and other illnesses.

Texas accounts for 1,427, or almost half, of the 3,128 Hispanics who hold elected office in the United States, according to the Washington-based National Association of Latino Elected and Appointed Official. The number of Hispanics elected to public office has doubled in the last 10 years, the group said.

The Environmental Action Foundation contends in a new report that completion of all the nuclear power plants under construction will add, during the life of the plant (about 25 or 30 years), $1,000 to the electricity bills of every residential customer. For the customers of Public Service of Indiana, the cost of each unit of the company's Marble Hill plant will increase electricity bills by $4,000.

For an insight into how utilities can maintain profits through conservation measures, we recommend a forthcoming book, "Dynamos and Virgins," by Environmental Defense Fund attorney David Roe.

Columnist Likes Crime Control Act

WASHINGTON — During the closing days of its session last month, to the great astonishment of a great many observers, Congress suddenly agreed to a comprehensive crime control act. The act is so comprehensive that it defies brief analysis, but it can be said with confidence that this is a good piece of legislation.

One part of the massive measure deals with the sentencing of convicted defendants in federal courts. The aim is to achieve some sort of rough uniformity, so that an auto thief won't get 10 years in California but only two years in South Carolina for substantially identical crimes. Over the next 18 months a blue-ribbon commission of seven members, including three active judges, will develop guidelines. Two years hence, if all goes on schedule, federal judges will have to impose sentences within those guidelines or write opinions explaining why not. It's a constructive provision. In time it should relieve the worst of the discrepancies between hanging judges on the one hand and weepeasies on the other.

Another major provision goes at last to the matter of bail reform. Back in 1966 Congress laid down the rules for federal judges. Unless it could be shown that a defendant was likely to skip town and not show up for trial, minimum bail under minimum conditions had to be granted. Was the defendant likely to commit new crimes? Was he a danger to the community? Those questions could not be examined, and the lamentable result was the revolving door. Our hypothetical auto thief stole one car, got arrested, made bail, and went out and stole another car. Then he got arrested, made bail, and so on, ad infinitum.

Such lunacies have not been unusual. A Senate committee heard that in one recent study of release practices in eight jurisdictions, one out of every six defendants in the sample was rearrested during the pretrial period. Some were arrested as many as four times. Among defendants arrested on surety bonds, the rate of pretrial arrest reached 25 percent.

The thinking behind the 1966 law was both reasoned and compassionate. To deny bail to an accused person is a serious matter. The defendant, if he has a job, loses his job; his family suffers accordingly; he cannot consult effectively with his lawyer in building his defense. The wealthy defendant can make a high cash bond; the poor man can't. For all these reasons, the 1966 law commanded wide support.

In practice it hasn't worked. Some judges, forbidden to speculate on a defendant's potential for new crimes, have evaded the law by fixing astronomical bonds.

Reagan Gets Mandate But No Blueprint For Action

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan has a mandate without a blueprint after his last, best landslide — a triumph he could not transfer to the rest of the Republican ticket.

The re-elected president vowed to extend his conservative renaissance "into the next decade and the next century," but to do it, he will have to fashion new alliances and power blocs in a divided government. That may require some compromises.

Reagan's victory over Walter F. Mondale rivaled the great runaways of American history — Roosevelt in 1936, Johnson in 1964, Nixon in 1972. But for coattails — or, rather, the lack of them — his re-election was most comparable to Nixon's.

The president carried at least 49 states, Mondale led in his Minnesota home with the outcome still in doubt, won in the District of Columbia, which never was in doubt.

Reagan was polling 59 percent of the popular vote, and had 525 electoral votes. Mondale had a maximum of 13.

Despite the Reagan sweep, Republicans faced a net loss of two of their 55 Senate seats. Their gain in the House was unlikely to reach 20 seats.

"What we've done only prepares us for what we're going to do," Reagan said in Los Angeles as he celebrated victory.

Reagan's re-election campaign was short on specifics on what it is that he's going to do. To do much, he will have to get Congress to vote his way or see his programs stalemated. And Tuesday's numbers point to continuing administration problems with the Democratic House.

When Reagan won four years ago, Republicans swelled their House minority by 33 seats, and won 12 in the Senate to take control there. Those gains made possible the tax cuts and spending reductions Reagan won during his first two years in office. On those, and on contentious defense and foreign issues, the president got his way by enlisting conservative House Democrats.

But it usually was a near thing, and the coalition lost its clout when the Republicans lost 26 House seats in 1982. Tuesday's gains did not restore it, nor did the split-ticket outcome enhance Reagan's prospects of persuading Democrats to vote his way.

Furthermore, the 1986 elections could well put Congress back in Democratic control. Republicans will have to defend 22 seats, Democrats only 12.

All of that weighs against the prospect of bold, brand-new proposals to keynote Reagan's second term. Basically, the president has promised to keep doing what he's been doing; frequently, when he did get specific it was about things he vows not to do.

He said he wouldn't raise taxes, declaring at one point that it would happen only "over my dead body." The more standard administration line is that tax increases would be sought only as a last resort, and that federal deficits will be curbed through economic expansion and spending cuts.

Mondale said he would raise taxes, and that Reagan would have to but wouldn't admit it. That issue will be around for a while. Reagan taunted Mondale all season as an habitual tax raiser. The Democrats won't forget that.

House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr. said they have no intention of raising taxes, Mondale's proposals notwithstanding. Mondale lost.

"If there's going to be any tax program that will come out, it will be asked for by the White House," O'Neill said.

There will be a tax program. Reagan has said there should be "a complete overhaul of our tax system," for clarity, simplicity and fairness, not to raise additional revenues. He avoided specifics, awaiting a Treasury study that is to be completed next month. James Baker, the White House chief of staff, said that "historic tax simplification" will be going to Congress early in the new term.

During the campaign, Reagan promised that he will not seek cuts in Social Security benefits for those now receiving him — or for future retirees. That pledge includes cost of living adjustments, an expensive, built-in spending increase that has been a target of some would-be budget cutters.

Those pledges restrict Reagan's options for dealing with the deficit, which totaled about $175 billion in the budget year ended Sept. 30, last budget year.

Again, Reagan has not been specific on his plans for dealing with the deficit. Baker said there will be more spending cuts on the administration agenda. Reagan has renewed his first-term proposal that he be given item-by-item veto power on appropriations bills, instead of signing or vetoing each bill on an all-or-nothing basis. That's something presidents long have sought, and Congress always has denied.

Baker said Reagan has no higher priority than arms control, an issue Mondale hammered fruitlessly. The president said Tuesday he expects to meet Soviet leaders at the summit during his second term. ". . . It's time for us to get together and talk about a great many things," he said.

A reshaping of the venerable Supreme Court could be a major, and lasting imprint of the second Reagan term. Five of the nine justices would reach the age of 80 before the end of that term, and there surely will be justices to appoint during the next four years.

Mondale tried to make that an issue, saying Reagan would tailor his choices to the wishes of the New Right. The president surely would choose justices who agree with his conservative philosophy, and perhaps with his views for school prayer and against abortion.

But some conservatives bristled at the one appointment he has made to the court, Justice Sandra Day O'Connor, even though she is in accord with the Reagan philosophy. The New Right wanted specific promises, not philosophy, and she wouldn't provide them. Justices are like that, and future Reagan appointees almost surely would take the same position.

Furthermore, presidents nominate justices. It takes Senate confirmation to put them on the high court. Reagan's landslide predecessors all ran into trouble over the court, Roosevelt when he tried to pack it with extra justices who would agree with his New Deal undertakings, Johnson when he tried to name an old friend and ally chief justice and the Senate balked, Nixon with two nominees who were denied confirmation.

Reagan's first term undertakings didn't always please his most ardent conservative allies. They said he was getting bad advice from aides who valued pragmatism over conservatism, and that he sometimes took it.

To the editor:

I want to congratulate the Daily Reflector for their tremendous help in getting Reagan, Helms and Martin elected. This completely unbiased reporting over the last year had left us (the poor, ignorant, uninformed public) in a quandary as to whom we should vote, until just last week when they made (in their great benevolent wisdom) their endorsements. Their endorsements of the opposition did the trick! They had a perfect record, 3 out of 3 wrong ain't bad!

I also would like to express my sympathies to W.C. Byrd and John Clark, who are going to have to agonize over Reagan's three or four appointments to the Supreme Court. Both Jesse Helms and Jerry Falwell, among others, will have a hand in making these selections. Jesse Jackson, Jane Fonda, Teddie Kennedy, Jim Hunt, Coretta King, Geo. McGovern, and the Carter-Mondale-Ferraro won't be on the selection team, for which we all can say, Thank Goodness!

Strength For Today

A woman missionary in India was speaking one day to a group of native women. She was describing the Christian life and specifying the duties involved. She noticed one woman slip out of the meeting and 10 minutes later return.

When she asked the woman why she left, the woman replied, "I went out to talk to the man who works in the garden. I came back when he told me that you really do the things you are urging us to do."

Lord Cecil once said, "People watch what I do six days so they will know what I mean on the seventh." There is a certain amount of hypocrisy both inside and outside the church. Consistency in the Christian life is a rare achievement. But Christ never said or even indicated that the discipleship to which he called men is easy. He did teach, however, that no sincere effort ever passes unnoticed before the eyes of God.

Black Group Issues Call Over School

WILLIAMSTON — The Martin County Board of Education at its November meeting heard a demand from Sandra Gray that a full-time black vice principal with a state-funded job be hired at the Jamesville School.

Mrs. Gray was spokesperson for a group of black citizens from Jamesville attending the meeting to address the board about their concern over the situation at Jamesville. This is the fourth meeting the group has had with the education board. The concern arises from the hiring of a white assistant principal for the current school year to fill the position which became vacant following the retirement at the end of the 1983-84 school year of a former black assistant principal at the school.

Board chairman Mac Holliday stated that the board does not get involved in the hiring of vice principals unless a new person is entering the Martin County school system. It was also explained to the group that principals are empowered to choose their own vice principals.

Superintendent of Martin County Schools Eugene Rogers said it is his responsibility to investigate the Jamesville situation and that he would determine what was happening there.

Mrs. Gray said that the number of complaints about the concern over not hiring a black was growing.

Town Hires Engineers

WILLIAMSTON — Williamston Town Commissioners at the November meeting of the town board agreed to have Rivers and Associates of Greenville collect data and prepare an engineeering proposal to be submitted to state officials. The action is an effort to increase the maximum flow limits at the town's sewage treatment plant.

Cost for such an effort is not to exceeed $4,000.

Much of the problem with the treatment plant comes from the large amounts of water that gets into the system through leaks, Town Administrator Assistant John Boykin told the board. Boykin aded that the plant currently processes large amounts of water over the permit limits but that state officials required the engineering information in order to allow the permit modification.

German Visit

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — West German opposition leader Hans-Jochen Vogel is in Poland for a four-day official visit that is expected to include a meeting withg Polish leader Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski

Vogel, the Social Democratic Party parliamentary leader, arrived Wednesday and is scheduled to meet Communist Party, government and Roman Catholic Church officials during his visit, a West German Embassy spokesman said.

He will hold talks with Jaruzelski on Saturday before his departure, the spokesman said.

Vogel's visit is one of a series by Western politicians signaling an end to the diplomatic quarantine of Poland imposed by the West following the December 1981 imposition of martial law that crushed Solidarity.

The West German foreign minister, Hans-Dietrich Genscher, is planning to visit Warsaw later this month, according to Western diplomats.

ECU, Firm Join In Seat Belt Test

By GEORGE THREEWITTS
ECU News Bureau

"It pays to buckle up" is an old message encouraging automobile drivers to wear seat belts, but the message has a new meaning for employees of an industrial firm here. They're buckling up to win cash.

It's part of a psychological study by Dr. John G. Cope, an industrial psychology professor at East Carolina University. Cope's study with officials of the Burroughs Wellcome Co., a pharmaceuticals firm, is seeking to determine strategies or promotional campaigns that work best in encouraging people to use seat belts.

Such campaigns can be a cost effective way of protecting employees from debilitating injury in the event of an automobile accident, Cope said. In a plan resembling a lottery, Cope's strategy introduces the element of chance combined with a changing amount of prize money.

"It works like this," Cope exlained. "Every day as employees arrive and leave the plant, someone records the license plate numbers of drivers wearing seat belts. Each week, we pull a license plate number out of the file and the owner of that plate receives a certain amount of money." The amount can vary from $30 to $100 and is determined by the overall percentage of those wearing seat belts.

"The whole company is pulling to get the level of belt wearing up so that anybody who wins is going to win a high proze. It works quite nicely," Cope said.

The lottery-type campaign was started at Burroughs Wellcome in September and the increase in the number of seat belt wearers jumped from the national average of about 14 percent to 46 percent. "We hope to be as high as 60-70 percent in the next few weeks," Cope said.

The first year of research at Burroughs Wellcome, begun in 1983, was conducted by Cope as part of a Virginia Polytechnic Institute study funded by the Department of Transportation. This year, Burroughs Wellcome is providing funds for the ECU research.

Initially, the study involved an examination of three different ways of encouraging employees to wear seat belts. One involved the use of lectures and meetings to discuss benefits of seat belts. Another consisted of asking employees for a pledge that each would wear his or her seat belt for a period of six months. The third strategy involved use of incentives. Names of regular users of seat belts were entered in a weekly raffle with the winner awarded a jacket decorated with the company logo.

Cope said that while the employees were excited about the incentive idea using the company jacket as a prize, the overall results of the three promotional campaigns showed that the lecture strategy was the most effective in increasing seat belt use.

Research this year is a variation of the incentive strategy that was studied in 1983, but so far has been much more effective than the other three promotional campaigns, Cope said.

Data gathered from the study will help Burroughs Wellcome and other industries to devise propotional campaigns encouraging use of seat belts among employees.

Graduate and undergraduate industrial psychology students are assisting Cope with the research.

Maneuvers Ends

A military spokesman said the exercises, code-named Sea Breeze, ended successfully Wednesday and participating U.S. units from the 6th Fleet, including the aircraft carrier Independence, left Egyptian waters after a mock search-and-destroy mission against an enemy submarine.

The exercises were the fourth since 1980 in steadily developing military cooperation between Egypt and the United States.

In The Area

scheduled from 11 a.m. until 2 p.m. Sunday. Activities will include a brief ceremony, a performance by the drill team, a flag ceremony, and a 21-gun salute.

Evening Classes

The University College of East Carolina University has announced the schedule of evening classes for spring semester, 1985. A schedule of undergraduate course offerings is available.

Classes generally meet one evening per week, from 6:30 p.m. until 9:30 p.m. on campus. Individuals may enroll on a part-time or full-time basis.

Various degree programs are available, with sufficient classes scheduled in the evenings for students to complete degrees in several areas.

The spring semester will begin Jan. 7. Registration is Jan. 3. For information contact the University College at Erwin Hall, or call 757-6488.

Church Meeting

A business meeting will be held Friday at 8 p.m. at Philippi Church of Christ.

Prayer Session

An all-night prayer meeting will be held at Gateway Christian Center, Depot Street in Winterville, beginning Friday at 9 p.m. and continuing until Saturday at 5 a.m.

Volunteers Gather

The regular meeting of the Ronald McDonald House volunteers will be held at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday in the auditorium at Pitt County Memorial Hospital.

Offices To Close

Greenville post offices will close Monday to observe Veterans Day.

No deliveries will be made by rural and city carriers and no window service will be provided. Mail will be delivered to post office boxes. Special delivery mail will be delivered within the city. A special 3 p.m. holiday collection will be made from all collection boxes and will be dispatched at 5:30 p.m.

The self-service postal unit in the lobby of the main post office will supply customers with most postal supplies and permit them to mail parcels.

New York Seminar

Dr Steven I. Cohen, a chiropractic physician in Winterville, and his staff recently attended an advanced nutritional seminar on blood laboratory testing, mineral analysis and nutritional analysis in New York City.

The session, which was part of a wholistic health seminar, examined health trends useful in stopping degenerative processes.

Special Olympics

The Greenville-Pitt County Special Olympics fall games, hosted by the recreation and parks department and Pitt County schools, will be held Friday from 9:45 a.m. to noon at Elm Street Gym and D. H. Conley High School.

More than 240 Special Olympic athletes representing 30 Greenville and Pitt County schools and agencies are in preparation and training for the event.

The games consist of competition in a run, dribble, and shoot basketball skills contest. Competition is divided so that half of the participants will compete at Elm Street Gym and the other half at D. H. Conley.

Opening ceremonies will begin at 9:45 a.m. Competition starts at 10 a.m.

The Greenville Special Olympics, coordinated by the recreation and parks department, is part of Special Olympics Inc., founded by the Joseph P. Kennedy Foundation.

Services Planned

Services will be held at Simpson Chapel Free Will Baptist Church, Simpson, Friday at 7:30 p.m. and Sunday at 11 a.m.

The Rev. C.R. Parker will preach the Friday night sermon and the choir and ushers of Cherry Lane FWB Church will accompany him. Sunday at 11 a.m. Eldress Velma Dixon will deliver the message.

Antioch Service

Eldress Mary Phillips will deliver the message during a service at Antioch Holiness Church Sunday at 7:30 p.m. The mother board of the church is in charge of the service.

Crew Members Cited

Tokens of appreciation were presented by Gary Ammones of Southport Utilities to 11 crew members of a Greenville Utilitites team that assisted in repairing Southport's electrical system after it was damaged by Hurricane Diana.

Short Course

Forty-five life science teachers from junior and senior high schools were at East Carolina University recently to participate in the first session of a National Science Foundation short course.

The program, a cooperative enterprise between the department of science education and the teachers' local school administrations, will allow participants an opportunity to develop materials for teaching course concepts in their classrooms.

A March session will include a workshop on microscopy designed to assist teachers in interpreting textbook photographs taken of life forms magnified under an electron microscope.

Area participants were Leslie Brinson, Glenn Cox, Nancy Evans, Mary Koonce, Ruth Riddle, Connie Bright, Ruby Jackson and Nancy Wynne, all of Greenville, and William Gray of Williamston.

Chapter Meeting

The Down East chapter of the Painting and Decorating Contractors of America will have its annual elections at the Three Steers Restaurant Tuesday. Dinner will begin at 7 p.m.

The program will be conducted by Randy Lee of Sherwin-Williams, along with Sherwin-Williams district manager Jim Faucette.

The Triangle Chapter will conduct a brief presentation on the 1985 Convention/Trade Show.

For information call 756-6108 or 756-7910.

Men Face Multiple Charges

Greenville police early today arrested two people on multiple charges after they allegedly took money from a coin-operated newspaper vending machine at the intersection of 14th Street and Greenville Boulevard.

Officer P.W. Scheutzow identified the two as Jeffrey Stewart Stocks, 17, of Route 1, Greenville, and Robert Wade Whitfield, 20, of Route 1, Grimesland.

The officer said the theft was reported at 12:42 a.m. and said Stocks and Whitfield were taken into custody a short time later on charges of breaking and entering and larceny of a coin machine.

Scheutzow said the two were also charged with possession of marijuana, and possession of burglary tools in connection with items found in their vehicle when they were stopped by officers, as well as two counts each of breaking and entering and larceny from two vehicles.

In addition, Stocks was charged with possession of drug paraphernalia.

Sgt. D.D. Heinz said as many as 20 other charges are expected to be brought against Stocks and Whitfield in connection with thefts from other coin-operated newspaper vending machines in the area.

Heinz said Stocks and Whitfield initially began taking entire machines and forcing them open. But he said the two later secured a key to the machines so they could just open the machines and remove the money.

Day For Veterans

WARSAW — The Duplin County town of Warsaw, which has a 63-year-long history of celebrating Veterans Day, will stage a two-day commemoration of the day set aside to honor American servicemen. The celebration will be on Saturday and Sunday and is being combined with a Friendship Day. Events are all open to the public.

Activities will get under way with a parade at 11 a.m. Saturday, hosted by Dick Jones of WITN-TV. H.D. Taylor, a veteran of World War I, is the honoree for the day. The Memory Window and the War Museum in the Southern Bank will be open on Saturday.

Entertainment will be provided by varous bands in the town hall parking lot from 1 to 4:30 p.m. Saturday.

A special event Sunday will be a guest talk by Dr. Ralph Steele of East Carolina University at the Warsaw Baptist Church.

Reagan Vows To Keep Course

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. (AP) — President Reagan, basking in the glow of a history-making avalanche of votes, is vowing to continue the conservative course of his first four years and says any second-term tax reform will not raise anyone's taxes.

At a post-election news conference in Los Angeles before leaving for a "wind-down" vacation Wednesday at his ranch near here, Reagan said, "I think the people made it very plain that they approved of what we're doing and approved of the fact that things are better and that the economy is expanding."

"And that's what we're going to continue to do," he added.

James Baker, the White House chief of staff, called Reagan's unprecedented capture of 525 electoral votes "a victory for his policies and a victory for his philosophy."

The campaign director, Edward Rollins, called the victory a repudiation of "old-style liberalism" that he said could lead to a fundamental realignment in American politics in the next four to eight years.

Richard Wirthlin, the Reagan campaign's chief pollster, said the smashing victory was built in part on solid gains among youthful voters, blue-collar workers and white Southerners.

The president, who will spend the next few days relaxing at his ranch in the mountains near here, said at his news conference he believes the federal government is still "larded with a lot of fat" which he intends to cut.

And he said that while no decisions have been made, the administration continues to examine possible changes in a number of traditional tax deductions together with a possible move to a fixed-across-the-board flat tax.

Reagan said any changes in deductions would be offset by lower tax rates "so that it would not result in any individual having his taxes raised by way of a tax reform."

On another subject, the president said discussions are under way with the Soviet Union on establishing "some separate informal channel so that we could keep in touch" with the aim of getting arms control negotiations started once more.

And he complained that the Democrats are guilty of "political demagoguery" in claiming that blacks, the poor and the handicapped are worse off after four years of Reagan policies.

"The truth is they aren't worse off than they were," he said. "We're going to make every effort to bring the truth and the facts to these people, but at the same time what we've called the safety net is still a top priority with us and we're going to maintain the safety net."

Reagan said his wife Nancy is "feeling much better" after experiencing dizziness following a fall in her hotel bedroom in Sacramento earlier this week.

"She had a very nasty fall in the early morning ... in the bedroom there and bumped her head quite severely, and it was afecting her for quite some time," the president said.

He said his wife "still has a pretty tender lump on the side of her head."

Mondale, Ferraro Break Loose As Campaign Ends

WASHINGTON (AP) — In the end, they kissed. They hugged. And then they kissed again. All the formality and decorum that surrounded the professional relationship of Walter F. Mondale and Geraldine Ferraro went the way of their campaign — out the window.

The defeated Democratic presidential candidate greeted the nation's first female vice presidential candidate at the steps of his chartered plane Wednesday as both returned to the capital.

Mondale, who received solmen advice from campaign aides at the Democratic National Convention last July not to get too close to his running mate in public, gave the New York congresswoman a bear hug.

And Ms. Ferraro, who had refrained from giving Mondale as much as a long handshake, returned the favor.

Campaign etiquette, cracked at last.

Until that moment, campaign protocol steadfastly forbid the two from slinging an arm over the other's shoulder or even raising clasped hands in a traditional victory salute.

Reporters and photographers who covered the campaign whistled and cheered; the candidates' families looked on in amusement and then all exchanged embraces and handshakes as well.

There were no tears.

The Mondale children — Eleanor, William and Teddy — hugged Ms. Ferraro's children — Laura, Donna and John. The kids, who all took time off from college or jobs to campaign for their parents, had grown close on the campign trail.

Joan Mondale, who has campaigned at her husband's side for more than 30 years, reached over to talk with Ms. Ferraro's husband, John Zaccaro, who wore the look of a man happy to see the campaign end.

"On behalf of myself and my family, I want to say how proud we are of Gerry Ferrraro," Mondale told several hundred staffers and fans who welcomed him back to Washington. "We are proud that she made history."

Ms. Ferraro returned the compliment: "It is not I who opened doors of opportunity for women," she said. "It was Fritz Mondale."

Chinese Seated

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — China has won a seat on the World Court for the first time since the Peking government gained admission to the United Nations 13 years ago.

American-educated Ni Zhengyu, legal council in the Chinese Foreign Ministry, was elected simultaneously by the U.N. General Assembly and Security Council to fill one of five World Court seats that become vacant on Feb. 5.

Ni, 78, becomes the first Chinese member of the World Court since Wellington Koo of Taiwan ended a decade on the bench in 1967. Taiwan was expelled from the United Nations in 1971 and the seat went to mainland China, which considers Taiwan a breakaway province.

Turnout Up, But Is No Record

WASHINGTON (AP) — Election turnout increased on Tuesday, with 52.9 percent of adult Americans casting ballots, but it wasn't the big jump both parties had hoped for.

The increase was only three-tenths of 1 percent. Nonetheless, it reversed a 20-year trend of declining participation in presidential elections, according to Curtis Gans, director of the non-partisan Committee for the Study of the American Electorate.

The 52.9 percent participation rate amounts to a turnout of 92 million of the 174 million Americans over age 18.

The rise is the first since the election of 1960, when 62.8 percent voted, marking the highest turnout since women got the vote in 1920.

Gans said television projections of a winner Tuesday night and the perception of that a landslide had occurred were responsible for low turnouts in the West. The TV projections were made while the polls were still open in Western states.

As evidence, he cited these findings:

—Where the polls had closed by 8:30 p.m. EST or earlier, 14 states and the District of Columbia had increased turnout and 10 states had decreases.

—But where the polls did not close until 9 p.m. EST or later, 19 states had turnout declines and only five had increases.

The highest turnout of any state occurred in Maine, with 64.7 percent of its adults voting.

Other states with high participation rates were Minnesota, 64.2 percent; Wisconsin 63.4 percent; South Dakota 62.9 percent and Connecticut 60.1 percent.

But the greatest increases in the turnout rates occurred in the District of Columbia, 5.8 percent; North Carolina, 3.4 percent; Virginia, 2.8 percent; Pennsylvania, 2.3 percent; Ohio 1.4 percent and New York 1.3 percent.

Although returns from some states were not complete, it appeared that the states with the greatest decreases in turnout rates were: Alaska, down 9 percent; Iowa down 9.4 percent despite a hotly contested Senate race; Idaho down 8.3 percent; Montana down 7.6 percent; Minnesota down 5.8 percent; Colorado down 4.9 percent; Oregon and Rhode Island, both down 4.6 percent.

States with low turnout rates were South Carolina, 37.2 percent; Nevada 40.1 percent; the District of Columbia 41.3 percent; Georgia 41.7 percent and Hawaii 43.7 percent.

Declines in the turnout rates occurred in Connecticut, Florida, Indiana, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, South Carolina, West Virginia, Alaska, California, Colorado, Idaho, Iowa, Kansas, Minnesota, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Utah, Washington, Wisconsin, Wyoming, Oregon and South Dakota.

Bush To Take Time To Assess '88 Bid

WASHINGTON (AP) — With "a long, long time" to decide whether to seek the presidency in 1988, Vice President George Bush says he won't be pushed by what other potential candidates might do.

Bush, the early favorite among Republicans for the GOP nomination in 1988, said Wednesday that Americans are "sick and dead tired" of presidential politics after the just-concluded campaign.

"I've really not decided whether I'm going to do it or not and I have the luxury of plenty of time to make up my mind," Bush said at an airport news conference as he stepped off Air Force II on his return to Washington.

Weary from traveling in what he called "an arduous, grueling campaign," Bush cleared his schedule and borrowed the presidential retreat at Camp David in Maryland's Catoctin Mountains for a four-or five-day rest with his wife Barbara.

In the view of many Republican political strategists, Bush's candidacy in 1988 is one of the safest bets in town.

Supreme Court To Decide On Sabbath Work Laws

WASHINGTON (AP) — In a case pitting freedom of religion against separation of church and state, the Supreme Court is being asked to uphold laws protecting workers who want to observe their religious Sabbath as a day of rest.

The court is expected to announce by July whether it will reinstate a Connecticut law that had barred businesses from demoting or firing employers who refuse to work on their Sabbath.

The case is among several on the current court agenda dealing with sensitive church-state issues.

The Reagan administration and the state of Connecticut are supporting two religious groups that on Wednesday defended a state's right to forbid on-the-job retaliation for observing the Sabbath.

"You're doing something cruel to the individual to deny him a religious day off," said Nathan Lewin, a lawyer for the National Jewish Commission on Law and Public Affairs and the American Jewish Congress.

The groups are financing a Supreme Court appeal on behalf of the estate of the late Donald E. Thornton, who was demoted by Caldor Inc., a New England department store chain, when he refused to work on Sundays.

Lewin argued that the invalidated Connecticut law imposed a legitimate economic burden on Caldor Inc. in protecting the worker's right to practice his religion.

Thornton, a Presbyterian who died in 1982 at age 41, was told in 1979 he could not be excused from working Sundays as a supervisor in the Caldor Inc. store in Torrington, Conn. The store required its managers to work one of every four Sundays, although lower-level workers were exempt from Sunday work under their union contract.

Caldor first offered to transfer Thornton to another store, an hour away in Massachusetts, that was closed on Sundays. Then it said it would demote him from his job as manager and cut his hourly pay from $6.46 to $3.50.

Thornton filed a grievance against the company with the state board of mediation, which ordered him reinstated with back pay and benefits.

But last year, the Connecticut Supreme Court said it was unconstitutional to force businesses to honor the Sabbath.

The Jewish groups that appealed to the U.S. Supreme Court are concerned that the Connecticut court ruling might threaten Jews in their traditional Saturday observance of the Sabbath.

Before 1975, Connecticut prohibited stores from being open on Sunday.

When it repealed the Sunday closing law, the Connecticut General Assembly also passed a law declaring that employees may not be forced to work on their Sabbath.

The state law goes further than the 1964 Civil Rights Act, which requires employers to make accommodations to allow workers to observe the Sabbath if it can be arranged without "undue hardship" to the business.

Paul Gewirtz of New Haven, a lawyer for Caldor, said that under the state law, the government "is going into the private market and bringing religion into it."

Gewirtz said "weekend work is the life blood" of retail stores and workers who want to observe the Sabbath should not get special consideration under the law because "everyone would like weekends off."

Justice William H. Rehnquist questioned whether that argument didn't put religious observance on the same footing, for example, with a parent's desire to take Sunday off to attend a child's baseball game.

Gewirtz said there might be other instances in which having Sunday off would mean much to a parent — for example, a divorced parent whose only opportunity to see a child is on Sunday.

The state should not give preference to religion in such cases, Gewirtz said.

Connecticut Attorney General Joseph Lieberman, in appealing for reinstatement of the law, said the Connecticut Supreme Court ruling had sent a troubling message to the state Legislature: "It cannot recognize religious observance in any way."

Other cases this term in which the Supreme Court also may provide important new guidelines on the constitutional separation of church and state involve indirect state and federal aid to religiously affiliated schools, and whether public schools may provide a "moment of silence" at the start of each day for student meditation and prayer.

The court also will decide whether a community may be forced to provide public land for the annual display of a Christmas Nativity scene. Last March, the court ruled that communities, if they choose, may sponsor Nativity scenes.

Church Council To Name Leader

NEW BRUNSWICK, N.J. (AP) — The Rev. Arie R. Brouwer, a Midwesterner nurtured in biblical piety with a passion for social justice, is the choice to become the chief executive of the National Council of Churches, the nation's largest ecumenical organization.

With nominations closed in a previous session after no rivals were proposed, Brouwer emerged as the sole candidate to become general secretary of the organization during an election today.

The council's governing board, made up of 266 representatives of 31 Protestant and Eastern Orthodox denominations with 40 million members, also named African Methodist Episcopal Bishop Philip R. Cousin as president. The board's four-day meeting opened here Wednesday.

The presidency is the top titular post, part-time and unsalaried, for a three-year term. The general secretary becomes the full-time operational head.

Brouwer, 49, has been a pastor and executive officer of the generally conservative Reformed Church in America, the nation's oldest continuous Protestant body, as well a leader in inter-church affairs.

For the last year, he was deputy general secretary of the World Council of Churches, which has offices in Geneva, Switzerland, but he was called home by a search committee to head the U.S. council.

Conservatives Say Reagan Expected To Make Changes

WASHINGTON (AP) — National conservative leaders, who often found fault with President Reagan during his first administration, are letting it be known they expect the president to hew to a more conservative line in the next four years.

At a post-election news conference Wednesday, the directors of three conservative organizations said they expected to see major changes in personnel and more attention paid to conservative social issues such as abortion and school prayer.

To start, the conservatives said, Reagan should get rid of James A. Baker III, his chief of staff, and Robert McFarlane, his national security adviser.

Howard Phillips, chairman of the Conservative Caucus, said Baker should be replaced by Interior Secretary William Clark and McFarlane should be replaced by Jeane Kirkpatrick, currently ambassador to the United Nations.

"If those two decisions are made in the next several weeks, then it will send the right signals to the Congress and to the country," Phillips said.

While Phillips would not name other officials he would like to see replaced, Richard Viguerie, the publisher of the Conservative Digest and another major fund raiser for conservative causes, said his magazine would soon publish a list of all Reagan appointees who should be fired along with recommendations on conservatives who should replace them.

Reagan should be staffing key jobs with conservatives who are not afraid to confront liberals and the establishment rather than pursue a policy of "compromise and conciliation," Viguerie said.

"Personnel is policy. Thre is no way we are going to have conservative policies and programs without conservative personnel in key positions," Viguerie said. "If you see the same people or their clones in position at the beginning of the year, you can pretty well count on business as usual."

Viguerie said conservatives would be watching to see if the president pushes such issues as constitutional amendments to ban abortions, to stop school busing, to allow prayer in the schools and to require a balanced budget.

Terry Dolan, chairman of the National Conservative Political Action Committee, said conservatives also would hold Reagan to his pledge to cut government spending rather than raising taxes. Dolan said the president could expect "millions of conservative activists coming to his support" in his battles with Congress over budget and tax issues.

Asked if he would "write off" the current administration if it did not follow his suggestions, Viguerie said he would not characterize it that way. But he said he would spend his time working to get a conservative president elected in 1988 rather than fighting to support administration programs.

Phillips expressed optimism that Reagan would pursue a more conservative course.

"I believe the president, recognizing this is his final term, will see that he has an historic opportunity to make permanent and lasting the grand coalition which has been organized behind his charismatic leadership," he said.

Pastor Defying Court

PITTSBURGH (AP) — A defrocked Lutheran minister who champions jobless steel workers, saying he was "called to be a pastor and not appear before judges," vows to stay in his church despite a court order banning him from conducting services.

Allegheny County Common Pleas Court Judge Emil Narick on Wednesday found the minister, D. Douglas Roth, guilty of contempt for defying an injunction banning him from conducting services at Trinity Lutheran Church in Clairton.

Narick ordered Roth to appear in court Friday or, "I'll have the sheriff do what it takes. This court is not powerless."

Roth was defrocked and dismissed by the Western Pennsylvania-West Virginia Synod of the Lutheran Church of America in late October after 71 of Trinity Lutheran's 190 members protested his involvement with a militant group that demands jobs for laid-off steel workers.

Narick told attorney Thomas A. Crawford that Roth could "purge himself" Friday by promising to obey the injunction, issued at the request of Lutheran authorities. Roth did not attend the two-hour hearing.

Senator To Get Ride On Shuttle

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — U.S. Sen. Jake Garn says he never unduly pressured NASA to let him ride on the space shuttle, but he admits the invitation resulted from his lobbying and the fact that he chairs the subcommittee that funds the space agency.

Garn, a Utah Republican, announced Wednesday that NASA administrator James M. Beggs asked him to consider "making an inspection tour and flight aboard the shuttle."

Garn said he has been lobbying for years for such an offer.

"But I didn't say to NASA, 'You can't have a shuttle unless you let me go,'" Garn said.

"It's a little difficult to believe," he said. "I've wanted to do this for so long, I feel like a little kid who's been waiting for Christmas."

In his acceptance letter to Beggs, Garn wrote, "My interest in making such a flight has been no secret since April 12, 1981, when Columbia made her maiden voyage. Naturally, I enthusiastically, eagerly and wholeheartedly accept your invitation."

Garn, chairman of the appropriations subcommittee that funds the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, said he has joked with NASA officials that he would consider their spending requests if they sent him into space.

A former Navy pilot and retired colonel in the Utah Air National Guard, Garn, 52, has logged more than 10,000 hours as a pilot.

Chile Prohibits Opposition Political Acts For 90 Days

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) — The military government clamped sweeping restrictions on public gatherings and the press today that effectively ban opposition political activity throughout Chile during a 90-day state of siege.

One decree banned six opposition magazines, imposed prior censorship on a seventh, and restricted political reporting and commentary by all other news media to official communiques.

Another measure outlawed all gatherings that lack previous authorization by regional governors, who are all military officers.

Public events such as movies, and family or social gatherings in private homes were exempt from the decree. But the measure said legally registered organizations were required to give five days' notice of meetings of their members.

The decrees, signed by President Augusto Pinochet and published in the Official Bulletin, marked the end of a political liberalization begun in the late 1970s and accelerated 15 months ago in response to growing opposition to his authoritarian rule. The plan called for legalization of political parties and the possible election of a congress while preserving Pinochet's constitutional tenure to rule until at least 1989.

The decrees prohibit dozens of newspaper columns and radio talk shows about politics that became popular features of the mainstream media under the liberalization.

On Wednesday, the government, operating under a state of siege declared by Pinochet the day before, raided headquarters of the Socialist Bloc and the Democratic Popular Movement, arresting 22 people. Chile's Human Rights Commission said. Leaders of the group went into hiding, members said.

Another 214 people were arrested in their homes in Santiago early Wednesday during a midnight-to-5 a.m. curfew and in the port city of Valparaiso after the state of siege was declared, newspapers reported. Defense Ministry sources were quoted in the reports as saying those arrested were "delinquents."

The government also barred the Rev. Ignacio Gutierrez, a Spanish priest who heads the Roman Catholic human rights agency, from returning to Chile.

Foreign Minister Jaime del Valle charged that Gutierrez, now traveling in Spain, made "public statements that constitute a clear intervention in the internal affairs of Chile." In Rome last week, Gutierrez condemned decrees prohibiting nearly 5,000 Chileans from coming home.

Monsignor Juan Francisco Fresno, the archbishop of Santiago and a powerful figure in this predominantly Roman Catholic country, issued a statement invoking his "moral authority" to ask that the decree against Gutierrez be lifted.

The Spanish government, in a diplomatic note made public by its embassy in Santiago, issued an "energetic protest" against the decree, demanding its revocation.

Gutierrez, a resident of Chile since 1973, was named last year to head the Santiago archdiocese Vicariate of Solidarity. That agency has monitored and denounced human rights abuses since the early years of the Pinochet regime, when thousands of leftists were killed and more than 600 disappeared.

The state of siege, reimposed Tuesday night after a six-year break, frees Pinochet's regime from judicial restraints to deal with what Pinochet called a Marxist-led insurrection.

In Washington, State Department spokesman John Hughes said Wednesday that it was not clear that the unrest in Chile warranted Pinochet's decision to reimpose a state of siege.

Israelis Discuss Retreat

NAQOURA, Lebanon (AP) — Lebanese and Israeli army officers opened negotiations in this border town today on arrangements that would allow Israel to withdraw its troops from south Lebanon after a 29-month occupation.

The talks, taking place at the headquarters of the United Nations peacekeeping force, are likely to be long and difficult.

Security was heavy as six Lebanese officers arrived by helicopter from Beirut and six Israeli officers drove up the narrow coastal highway from the Israeli border three miles to the south.

U.N. soldiers armed with rifles stood on the roofs of buildings inside the seaside compound, and metal blockades designed to stop tanks forced traffic on the road to slow down outside the fenced-in complex.

U.N. officials said a French team of explosives experts had thoroughly searched the building where the delegations are meeting around a triangular-shaped table. Besides the Israelis and Lebanese, one side of the table will be occupied by U.N. officers.

The outcome of the talks is likely to have broad political implications for the region despite the best efforts of the Syrian-backed Beirut government to avoid any suggestion that these negotiations are similar to the talks which produced the failed U.S.-mediated agreement of May 17, 1983.

For the Reagan administration, a complete Israeli withdrawal has been considered a necessary prelude for any U.S. initiative to restart the peace process in the Middle East. Jordan and Egypt, for example, have insisted on such a pullout.

Prime Minister Shimon Peres' government is seeking security arrangements that will guarantee peace along its 60-mile-long border with Lebanon which was shelled by Palestinian guerrillas before Israel's June 1982 invasion.

Lebanon is seeking an orderly withdrawal of troops that will not create a chaotic vacuum that would invite sectarian warfare similar to the Christian-Druse fighting which erupted in the wake of Israel's partial pullback in September 1983 from the Chouf mountains.

An Israeli official close to Peres who spoke on condition he not be identified said the Naqoura talks "are going to be long and difficult because of the gap between the two sides" on key issues.

Although Syria has refused to participate in any negotiations with Israel, Damascus may have a major voice in whether the talks succeed.

Indian Troops Placed On Alert

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Army units in New Delhi and troubled Punjab state were on alert against possible renewed rioting today as India's 13 million Sikhs — many mourning their dead from last week's Hindu rampage — observed their main religious holiday.

The army took over responsibility for security from police in the capital and other areas following the revenge massacre of hundreds of Sikhs triggered by the assassination of Prime Minister Indira Gandhi by two security guards identified as Sikhs.

Sikhs were subdued today as they gathered at gurdwaras — Sikh shrines — across northern India for prayers and rituals on the 515th birthday of the sect's founder, Guru Nanak Dev.

Planes ...

In Washington, Pentagon spokesman Navy Cmdr. Richard Schram denied that any U.S. military ships or aircraft were in the area or were involved in any incidents with the Nicaraguans.

"There are no United States Navy ships operating in Nicaraguan waters and any contention that ships are offloading small ships in Nicaraguan waters is totally false," he told reporters.

Schram said he was speaking only of U.S. military ships and acknowledged that his comment would not cover ships with U.S. connections operated by anti-Sandinista rebels.

President Reagan said he would regard the delivery of advanced combat aircraft to Nicaragua as a serious matter and a "threat" to Central America.

In a post-election news conference in Los Angeles, Reagan declined to say how the United States might respond if the delivery contains MiGs. Other officials said, however, that the United States is considering air strikes to destroy any such planes.

The State Department said it had sent private warnings to Moscow about the gravity with which Washington would view the introduction of advanced combat aircraft into Nicaragua.

U.S. officials in Washington who spoke on condition of anonymity said the warning was delivered through diplomatic channels on Tuesday.

D'Escoto's protest note claimed Wednesday's developments substantiated Sandinista claims that the United States planned to invade Nicaragua after Reagan's re-election. The note said such an invasion was "imminent."

Also on Wednesday, the Supreme Electoral Council announced that a "projection of final results" from Sunday's elections gave Sandinista junta coordinator Daniel Ortega the victory in the presidential race.

Council President Mariano Fiallos said results from 3,876 of the 3,892 polling places throughout the country showed that Ortega received 736,052 of the 1,099,598 valid votes counted.

Voters went to the polls for the first time in a decade to elect a president.

Shuttle ...

rescue attempts next week.

Liftoff was a day late. The flight was postponed Wednesday, just 32 minutes before the planned launch time, because of strong high-altitude crosswinds which could have severely damaged the shuttle.

Shuttle managers decided later Wednesday to proceed with a new count after analysis of balloon and radar data showed the wind threat had vanished.

The flight is the 14th in the shuttle program, the second for Discovery.

Hauck predicted in advance the flight would be one of "pure excitement."

The others in Hauck's crew are pilot David Walker and mission specialists Anna Fisher, Joe Allen and Dale Gardner. Gardner's 36th birthday is today, and Hauck said after Wednesday's scrub that the astronauts were looking forward to giving him "the biggest birthday candle of his life."

Mrs. Fisher, a physician, is the fourth American woman and first mother named to a space flight. She and her astronaut-physician husband, Bill, are parents of a 14-month-old daughter, Kristin.

The astronauts' goals during eight days in orbit are to deploy two commercial communications satellites for paying customers and to track down and capture the Palapa B2 and Westar 6 payloads, which have been drifting in useless orbits since last February.

They also will operate an experiment for 3M Company, exploring the properties and behavior of organic chemicals in space weightlessness.

3M recently signed a multimillion dollar contract with NASA to conduct experiments on 72 shuttle missions over the next decade and to develop an industrial chemical research laboratory aboard the space station planned for the early 1990s.

On Friday and Saturday, the crew is to release into separate orbits the commercial satellites for Telesat of Canada and Hughes Communications Services Inc.

Then Hauck and Walker are to guide Discovery through a series of 44 engine firings to track down the Palapa and Westar satellites, sent into off-course orbits by faulty booster rockets after being deployed successfully by a shuttle crew. They are 224 miles high, 690 miles apart.

Allen and Gardner are to make the rescue efforts during a pair of six-hour space walks Monday and Wednesday, with the shuttle flying 35 feet away in each case. To capture Palapa, Allen will fly free of the ship, propelled by a jet-powered back pack, and secure the satellite with a four-foot pole-like device, moving it close so Mrs. Fisher can grasp it with a 50-foot mechanical arm.

Gardner will wear the jet-pack for the Westar retrieval.

Insurance underwriters, who paid out $180 million in claims on the wayward satellites, are paying NASA $5.5 million to return them to Earth for renovation and resale.

The flight is to end Nov. 15 with a landing here.

Festival ...

sold approximately 70 million pounds of tobacco in the first four days of a reduced rate program. Implemented Oct. 26, the program offers buyers reduced rates on old and new crops on a 2:1 ratio. Jackson explained that if a buyer purchases two pounds of the new crop (1982-84) at a 10 percent reduction, he will receive a pound of the old crop (1976-1981) at discounts up to 90 percent.

That's the kind of news Jim Swindell says he likes to hear, "news that the tobacco industry is solid."

Swindell, the man credited with getting the Tobacco Festival off the ground in 1977, says the festival retains and has expanded upon its original values. The celebration was begun, he said, to help people to think comfortably about tobacco, help everyone realize the importance of tobacco and to unite the tobacco community. The festival has done all that and more, he asserted. "It's helped to stablize people's opinions about tobacco ... has helped people deal with the scare tactics."

Swindell is also manager of the Tobacco Farmers Show, a yearly event held in conjuction with the festival since its inception. Swindell said, however, that the name "Tobacco Farmers Show" is a misnomer, because only a third of the booth displays at the show are directly related to tobacco.

"It's more of a general farm show these days," he said, "but it began as a tobacco show and then evolved into a general farm event." That speaks well of the industry, too, according to Swindell. It shows the diversity of the people who are involved in tobacco. Most tobacco farmers, he explained, have allotments, but that same farmer might have 200 acres in corn or soybeans and 50 sows, in addition to 20 acres of tobacco.

"What all of this says, though, is that we've got a bunch of people who have pride in tobacco, who want to say raising a crop takes skill and that tobacco is important to us," Swindell said.

Lauren And...

with big white shirts and handknit crew sweaters in opposite colors.

Lauren's muted suede minis were his only concession to the Short Age in an otherwise classic collection.

Ms. Vittadini, winner of this year's Coty Award, was more enamored with dare-to-be-bare looks for spring, offering several rib-tickling and torso-hugging tops.

Fiesta colors in mixed solids and hot florals dominated her collection also shown Wednesday.

Hot pink mini skirts peeking out from big, orange cotton ribbed sweaters drew applause from the audience that packed RCA's recording studio for the runway showing.

The big tops also were shown with straight, mid-calf skirts in electrifying combinations of yellow, chartreuse, turquoise, orange and hot pink. Big bangles and disc earrings accented the mod look.

Ms. Vittadini showed two abbreviated cotton knit tops in the same five colors: a rib-tickler tank with exaggerated cut-in shoulders and a boatneck sweater with three-quarter sleeves that stopped short of the navel.

For a more sophisticated look, Ms. Vittadini offered a grouping of navy and maroon knit sweaters and vests paired with white silk safari shorts and pants.

Black and white, a perennial favorite for spring, were shown in print cardigans over a bandeau top with cotton jersey crop pants. The same print was used in a knit tank dress with cut-in shoulders.

Another grouping featured a hot pink, purple and green floral printed on bright yellow cotton jersey. Separates included a bustier with a button-up closure, a full swingy skirt and cropped pants. For mix and match, there was a smaller floral in the same colors and several cable knit sweaters in solids.

The print was too bright and too busy for some tastes. However, when the flower was blown up on big white sweaters, it was a knockout.

The Hungarian-born designer, best known for her knitwear, uses silk for some spring styles. Flared walking shorts and loose, gathered pants that stop above the ankle in white silk, were paired with tops in the same fabric, printed with a multi-colored design inspired by Calder mobiles.

Throughout the collection, shoulders were broad and padded for stature and raglan sleeves were rolled or pushed up for the casual look favored by Ms. Vittadini.

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market gave ground today, continuing the decline that set in Wednesday.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials dropped 6.74 to 1,226.48 in the first half hour.

Losers took a 5-3 lead over gainers among New York Stock Exchange-listed issues.

Analysts said the market's downturn following President Reagan's emphatic victory in the election seemed to confirm the widespread view that investors had fully anticipated the results of the voting beforehand.

Wall Streeters generally applauded the voters' choice. But they also have several other concerns on their minds at the moment.

For one thing, interest rates, which have been falling steeply of late, turned upward in the credit markets Wednesday.

Many observers still expect rates to fall further, however. They reason that the Federal Reserve, whose policy-setting Open Market Committee met this week, is likely to relax its credit policy because of the recent slowing of the economy and sluggish growth in the money supply.

Vikings Seek 1st Winning Season

By JIMMY DuPREE
Reflector Sports Writer

A possible playoff berth, the chance to have the first winning season since the school opened its doors in 1971 — that's what is on the line Friday when the Vikings of D.H. Conley visit Coastal 3-A Conference rival North Lenoir in the 1984 regular season football finale.

The Vikes had their first opportunity to clinch a winning season last Friday at league-leading West Craven, but four fumbles and a pair of interceptions helped the Eagles maintain their undefeated record with a 35-8 victory.

"I just don't believe what we did (against West Craven)," Conley Coach Donnie Bunn said. "You can't turn the ball over six times against a team like West Craven and expect to have a chance.

"We drove to the goal line twice and turned the ball over. Four of their touchdowns came directly from capitalizing on our turnovers. When you go back and look at the film, they only had one drive.

"On our opening drive we get down to the five, and they had an interception on just a fantastic catch. We drove the ball on them all night."

Despite the point margin, Conley trailed West Craven by just 70 yards rushing as Viking tailback Donald Blackwell ran for 125 yards. The Eagles completed just two passes while Conley intercepted one.

"We were very much dejected after the game," Bunn said. "But we are not a 35-8 team against them. We were not out-manned; we just made too many turnovers."

Conley dropped to 5-4 overall while 2-2 in the Coastal Conference race. West Craven its mark to 4-0 in the league, insuring the Division I playoff berth.

But the Vikes' maintain a slim chance at the Division II playoffs. If Havelock, also 2-2 in the league, can defeat White Oak, now 3-1, all three teams would draw for the other playoff slot.

"Then it's Las Vegas chance for everybody," Bunn said of the draw. "Clearly White Oak is in the best situation. They can control their fate.

"But we can't let last week destroy what we've done so far. We can accomplish the first winning season in this school's history, and we can finish second in the conference.

"(Our players) realize we have the capability of competing with West Craven; they realize we just didn't execute."

The Vikings will have to play Friday without the services of linebacker Ricky Rice who is out for the remainder of the season with a knee strain. After a rash of injuries, Rice was the only linebacker who started at that position at the beginning of the season.

The Hawks of North Lenoir have struggled for most of the year, maintaining an 0-4 record in the league cellar while 2-7 overall.

"North Lenoir has had some breakdowns," Bunn said. "We've both got a lot of injuries at this point. We've just got to remember what's on the line."

In other games around the area, Chocowinity hosts Aurora, Jamesville visits Columbia, Washington travels to Roanoke Rapids, and Williamston entertains Edenton.

Greene Central visits SouthWest Edgecombe in a game that will decide which team goes where in the playoffs along with the league title. Both are tied at 5-0 in the conference. The winner gets the Division I berth and the loser enters Division II.

CHARGERS at NORTH PITT

While Ayden-Grifton will be fighting for a 7-3 season, North Pitt's young Panthers will be attempting to avoid a winless season.

Top-ranked SouthWest Edgecombe had a field day against the Panthers last week, with Jerome Staton rolling up 221 yards rushing with three touchdowns as the Cougars pounded North Pitt 56-0.

"We ran a little scared at first," North Pitt Coach Larry Bolger said. "We were intimidated by their reputation and just didn't get ready for the game. In the second half, we played better.

"We couldn't stop (Staton). You can't arm tackle him; our tackling technique is still weak fundamentally."

Ayden-Grifton, meanwhile, rebounded from an early deficit to defeat cross-county rival Farmville Central 29-6. The victory lifted the Chargers to 7-2 overall while 2-3 in the Eastern Carolina Conference.

"I think we kind of hit a lull early in the game against Farmville and quit playing technique defense," Ayden-Grifton Coach Dwight Tart said. "They got the ball rolling and got ahead of us. We came out and did some good things after that.

"I thought we played pretty well overall. I've got to be pleased with a chance to have a 7-3 season. Everybody told me when I got here that we'd be doing good to go .500 this year."

The Chargers must avoid looking at North Pitt's 0-4 ECC record and 0-9 overall in preparation for the game. The Panthers's youth has been taken advantage of all season, but North Pitt's passing attack has become a vital segment of the offense.

"Offensively, I'm pleased with the emergence of our passing game," Bolger said. "But we don't have a running game to complement it. We've got to stick to the fundamentals; all we worked on (Tuesday) was contact drills.

"Certainly we'll have to stop to Kelvin Harris, but I don't like to tell the defense to key on one player. If you do that, they'll just go to someone else."

Harris had 112 yards rushing against Farmville Central and is looking toward a 1,000-yard season. The Panther defense has had trouble matching the size of teams, but Tart must avoid another "lull" by his Chargers.

"I've told the kids not to take North Pitt lightly," Tart said. "North Pitt will play you all four quarters. But it's tough to get up for a team that's 0-9.

"We've just got to play fundamental football. I don't think we have to do anything special."

North Pitt managed just 112 yards total offense against SouthWest Edgecombe including 76 yards passing, and the Chargers hope their defense will be the key to Friday's contest.

"Our defense has been the mainstay of this team," Tart said. "I feel like if our offense had come around and played as well as the defense, we'd have a better record.

"If we had improved on offense all along, we'd have a chance at the playoffs."

FARMVILLE CENTRAL

"Ayden-Grifton played particularly well — played with great enthusiasm," Farmville Coach Dixon Sauls said. "But we had an emotional letdown for the first time this year, and we turned the ball over in some unusual ways.

"They scored and we seemed to have an emotional letdown. The whole year, we've had difficulty after our opponents scored their first touchdown."

The Jaguars threw three interceptions and gave up all three of their fumbles, and Ayden-Grifton quickly erased an 8-0 Farmville lead.

Farmville, now 2-3 in the Eastern Carolina Conference and 4-5 overall, closes the season Friday at Southern Nash. The Firebirds hold a 3-2 league mark while 5-4 overall.

"Southern Nash is an improved football team," Sauls said. "They have an excellent tailback in Mike Jones; he's already gone over 1,000 yards rushing. They've played well the last half of the season.

"There are so many variables in high school football, but the bottom line is we haven't played well when the game is on the line. We're playing to have a break-even season

Aycock Ends Unbeaten Again

Elizabeth City Northeastern did what no other team this year has been able to do — score on E.B. Aycock Junior High School.

But just scoring wasn't enough as the Jaguars took a 15-6 victory — their seventh straight this year and their 20th in a row.

Aycock jumped into the lead in the game in the first period on an eight yard pass from Tom Moye to Jeff Mahoney. Moye added the PAT kick for a 7-0 lead.

Northeastern came back with its only score in the second period, but failed to convert and trailed 7-6.

In the final period, Axel Smith padded the Aycock lead with a five-yard scoring run. Smith also ran over the PAT to up the lead to 15-6.

Smith finished the day with 206 yards as Aycock rushed for 311.

Cited for offensive player were Adrian Barnhill, Smith, Mahoney, Wes Jackson, Moye, Jay Mattox, Tim Hines, Tony Baker and Nelson Galloway. Topping the defense were Shelton Northern, Barry Murry, Hines, Hugie Mayfield, Tim Moore and David Jones.

Northeastern snapped a ten-game string of shutouts over the past two years for Aycock, which has not lost a game since the 1981 season. Since that last lost, Aycock has put together a 22-0-2 record over 24 games.

The contest wound up the 1984 season for the Jags, 7-0 on the year.

Cavaliers Try To Close On Terps

By TOM FOREMAN Jr.
AP Sports Writer

Virginia and Maryland switch roles this week as both team try to capture the Atlantic Coast Conference football championship — the Cavaliers host league rival North Carolina State while the Terrapins travel to Miami, Fla.

Last week, Maryland downed North Carolina to put more distance between itself and Virginia. Meanwhile, the Cavaliers were knocking off then-12th-rated West Virginia in non-conference action. Entering Saturday's action, Maryland is unbeaten in four league games, while Virginia is 2-0-1. The league title is based strictly on percentage and not won-lost record.

In other games, North Carolina is at home to face Georgia Tech, Wake Forest goes to Duke and Virginia Tech is at Clemson.

Last weekend's 27-7 victory over the Mountaineers once again raised speculation that the Cavaliers might be headed for a post-season bowl. Coach George Welsh says keep it quiet.

"It doesn't mean anything now. All the bowl talk is premature," Welsh said. "You lose the next three and a bowl bid is out."

Welsh is concerned for now with the Wolfpack, which gave fifth-ranked South Carolina a battle before losing 35-28.

"I think they're a better offensive team now than they were earlier," Welsh said. "They're playing well enough on offense to win, but their defense just hasn't held up."

N.C. State coach Tom Reed said Virginia has been putting everything together — offense, defense and maturity.

The Cavaliers are "structured, disciplined, tough, smart and they enjoy playing," Reed said. "And (Welsh) has done that everywhere he has been."

Maryland travels to the Orange Bowl on the strength of a four-touchdown day by fullback Rick Badanjek against the Tar Heels. Miami, ranked sixth in this week's Associated Press college football poll, is 8-2-0 and is looking to even the series at six games apiece.

Last week, Duke football coach Steve Sloan called off a Monday practice because his team was too banged up to work. This week, North Carolina coach Dick Crum sent his players to the indoor pool at Woollen Gym.

"We're a little beat up, tired, the way any team gets after eight games," Crum said. "We thought a swim would be a good change of pace."

Once the team got back to football, Crum said the Tar Heels would have to put more stock in its passing game; this week, North Carolina is last in the league in passing.

"We're not talking about putting in a bunch of new pass plays here," Crum said. "We're talking about utilizing the pass plays we have, putting the ball up more on first and second down. We want to make the pass a more integral part of our offense."

North Carolina was a preseason pick to capture the title, while Georgia Tech's Bill Curry predicted the Yellow Jackets would win the crown. Maryland's victory eliminated both teams from the chase.

"We have managed to eliminate ourselves from the ACC race," Curry said. "... All you can do is readjust your sights and go for the next best thing."

Wake Forest was also staring at a chance to win the conference title, but it has also been mathematically eliminated from the chase. All that remains now is Coach Al Groh's first winning season at Winston-Salem. The Demon Deacons are 5-4.

"Having a winning season is very much in my mind," Groh said, "and I hope that it is very much in the minds of our players. But reaching that goal is not so much talk as it is work."

Meanwhile, Sloan said hard work would have to get Duke out of its doldrums and he had several suggestions. Among them was the institution of a red-shirt program, the establishment of training rooms and coaches offices and what he called "a real administrative commitment to excellence in football."

"Duke has the potential to compete on the national level in football, it really does," Sloan said. "This is not something I said because we're 1-7. I said this when I first came here."

Despite a 37-17 victory over Wake Forest last week, Clemson's Danny Ford wants to see improvement, especially against Virginia Tech.

"All of a sudden, we are playing the best defensive team in the country against the run and we had our worst offensive game up front last week," Ford said. "So, we have got some problems this week."

Correction

Jordan Pours In 25 For The Bulls

By WILLIAM R. BARNARD
AP Sports Writer

While Michael Jordan scored 25 points in the second half to lead Chicago to victory over Detroit, it was one three-minute stretch that showed why he is one of the most talked-about rookies in the National Basketball Association.

After sitting on the bench with three fouls for all but five minutes of the first half, the 6-foot-6 first-round draft choice of the Bulls electrified the crowd of 15,542 at Pontiac, Mich., with nine points in three minutes, including three dunks. The outburst of 11 straight points gave Chicago an 88-77 lead en route to a 122-118 victory Wednesday night.

"I try to psyche myself and hopefully the team," Jordan said. "Everyone likes to see a dunk and it kind of gives you a warm feeling whenever you're playing and it kind of spreads among the players."

In other NBA action, it was Boston 135, Los Angeles Clippers 108; New Jersey 99, Washington 88; Philadelphia 134, Indiana 113; Milwaukee 103, Atlanta 99 and Utah 136, San Antonio 124.

"I knew I had to go out there and play hard," Jordan said of his second-half effort. "I had a lot of energy to get rid of."

The Pistons fought back to lead by two points twice in the final quarter, the second time by a 96-94 margin with 7:43 remaining on two free throws by Isiah Thomas, who led all scorers with 35 points.

A layup by Caldwell Jones and two jumpers by Quintin Dailey, who led the Bulls with 29 points, put the Bulls back on top. The Pistons tied the score at 104-104 with 4:26 remaining, but two free throws by Chicago forward Steve Johnson put the Bulls ahead for good.

Thomas hit a three-pointer with 31 seconds remaining to cut Chicago's lead to 118-116 before Jordan hit two free throws with seven seconds remaining to provide the winning margin.

The Pistons were outrebounded 52-44 in the game and 16-7 in the final quarter, which Detroit Coach Chuck Daly said was the key to the game.

"We didn't stop them from getting the second shots," Daly said. "We lost two or three rebounds at a crucial time when we had a chance to get the lead."

Thomas marked a personal milestone by surpassing 5,000 career points in the game, while teammate Kelly Tripucka, who missed the last two games with a sprained right ankle, scored 29 points in the Pistons' losing effort.

Bucks 103, Hawks 99

Milwaukee, 5-1, stayed ahead of second-place Chicago in the Central Division with its fourth straight victory.

Terry Cummings scored six of his 20 points during a 13-3 Bucks spurt midway through the third period that gave them a 79-63 lead. Milwaukee then survived an 8-0 Atlanta run late in the fourth quarter.

Paul Pressey led the Bucks with a career-high 26 points, while Cummings added 20. Eddie Johnson paced Atlanta with 21 points.

76ers 134, Pacers 113

Philadelphia won its fifth straight game without a loss as Moses Malone had 10 of his 25 points and six of his 11 rebounds in the first quarter against Indiana.

The 76ers built a 34-24 lead after the first period and went on to lead by as many as 34 points in the second half.

Reserve guard Sedale Threatt scored a career-high 19 points for Philadelphia, while Tony Brown led the Pacers with 25.

Celtics 135, Clippers 108

Unbeaten Boston stayed one-half game behind the 76ers in the Atlantic Division as Larry Bird had 31 points and 14 rebounds against Los Angeles.

Danny Ainge scored 15 of his 24 points in the first period and the Celtics led by 11 points in the second quarter before an 11-0 streak by the Clippers tied the score. But Bird scored 14 points and Robert Parish 10 in the third quarter as the Celtics rolled to a 90-79 lead and coasted the rest of the way.

Parish finished with 21 points for the Celtics, while Marques Johnson led Los Angeles with 25.

Cubs Fall On Kickoff Return

ELIZABETH CITY — A long kickoff return allowed Eliazbeth City Northeastern to nip Rose High School's junior varisty football team, 20-15, yesterday.

Northeastern took a 6-0 lead in the first period and both teams scored in the second quarter, with the Eaglettes holding a 12-7 edge at intermission. Rose's score in the quarter came on a 27 yard run by Rodney Harris and an Eric Jarman PAT kick.

In the third period, Rose took the lead, 15-12, on a 35-yard pass from John Lyles to Tim Clark. Harris ran over the PAT for the three-point lead.

But Northeastern ran back the kickoff that followed and scored a two-pointer to gain the win.

"I think we beat them for three-quarters of the game," Coach James Rankins said, "but they got that big play against us and it did the trick. We played hard, however, and I'm very proud of the kids."

Rankins cited the play of receivers Melvin Jenkins (7 catches for 52 yards) and Curtis Perkins (5-44), along with Clark, Craig Butler and Wyatt Whichard on offense. He also named Jarman, Burwyn Swindell and Andre Love on defense. "Everyone really played well," he added.

The game was the final one for Rose, which finished 4-6 overall and 3-4 in the league.

To The Sports Editor:

It is now time for you to rally behind East Carolina Football. It's a shame that there are so few believers in the area. True, season ticket sales were up, yet the seats are empty and with each passing home game more seats are left vacant.

Last year's 8-3 record was not a fluke. This year the Pirates are both young and inexperienced. Are the ticket holders staying home because they feel that the team can't win? No! As it has always been there are Pirate fans and there are fair weather fans. The true Pirate fan sees or hears every game. He knows of the improvements and who's injured. The fair weather fan only reads the Sunday paper and the final outcome. As more and more losses come the less interested they become.

Some people say that the Pirates play better on the road than at home. If that really is true it's because a big crowd brings out their best.

With teams like Auburn, Miami, Fla., South Carolina, Penn State, L.S.U. and West Virginia on the upcoming schedule, one begins to wonder why people don't support the Pirates. But at this time we can't sell out the stadium, even with a car as a door prize!

Please support the Pirates this Saturday, it could be the right start for next year.

Just Misses 300 Game

Two Greenville bowlers in the Men's City League turned in 600 series last night at Hillcrest Lanes, one just missing a 300 game.

Bernie Tedesco, bowling with the Tarheel II team, rolled a 277 in the middle game of a 645 series. In that game, he recorded nine straight strikes before getting a spare in the tenth frame. His other games wre 186 and 182.

Howard Hemric, bowling with the Comedy of Errors team, rolled a 229, 245, 211 — 685 series last night also.

now.

"I felt like we were a better football team than our record showed all year. In some ways, we played better earlier in the season when we had our confidence. We had a couple of early losses and started doubting ourselves.

"Our coaches and young men have learned from this year. We're not going to change everything in one year; we just want to end the season on a positive note."

NBC Tries Long Race Coverage

By TERRY TAYLOR
AP Sports Writer

Four hours for seven horse races and John Gonzalez says he's squeezed for time.

"Believe me, I don't have enough," says the producer of NBC's live telecast Saturday of the inaugural Breeders' Cup Championship Series from Hollywood Park.

Billed as the Super Bowl of thoroughbred horse racing, seven championship races with purses totaling $10 million will be run from 2 p.m. to 6 p.m. EST.

NBC will be there from all of it — a commitment that surprised some television and racing industry observers when it was announced last year. After all, seven races with approximately two minutes of live action per race leaves more than three hours to fill.

Gonzalez, however, says he has everything down to a second-by-second schedule — barring any spot developments during the races — and the nightmare many anticipated hasn't materialized.

"At first I thought, 'Boy, we better start shooting features and hire announcers who can talk and talk and talk,'" he said. "But the time hasn't been a problem at all.

"What did ABC do with the Kentucky Derby? It was one race and they had 90 minutes to cover it. To cover seven races, I have 34 minutes per race. And the problem is getting everything into those 34 minutes," said Gonzalez, who also produced the 1984 Budweiser Arlington Million thoroughbred race and the Helsinki World Track and Field Championships for NBC.

"You have to tell what track the race is on, give the conditions, introduce the horses, give the post positions, talk about the favorites, give the morning line several times, go to a feature, note any last-minute changes, allow time for commercials. Then they run the race. After the race there are replays, order of finish, an interview with the winning owner and track payoffs.

"And if there's a controversy — and in races of such magnitude it's not uncommon — a feature will be the first thing to be cut."

So the program is filled, but will the viewer watch it all?

The first two races of this equine extravaganza are worth $1 million each and feature 2-year-olds — colts and geldings and juvenile fillies.

"Those two races are a preview of the stars in next year's classics. They're the ones who will be in the (Kentucky) Derby, the Preakness and the Belmont," Gonzalez said.

"If a viewer is interested in a fast horse, the third race is a sprint — six furlongs. In the fourth race, the mile, several top European horses are entered. The fifth race (for 3-year-old and up fillies and mares) is for top fillies, and the last two races are for $2 million and $3 million."

The Breeders' Cup has attracted the best horses in training in the United States, including Slew o' Gold, Majesty's Prince and Miss Oceana, plus top European runners.

John Henry, the 9-year-old gelding who has won more money than any other racehorse, was scratched due to a swollen left foreleg.

"We still think it will be a fantastic show without him," Gonzalez said. "That's not to minimize our depression about John Henry being scratched. I think he would have helped the show and helped the ratings, but given the magnitude of the Breeders' Cup ... I call it the Super Bowl of horse racing."

NBC still plans a taped feature on John Henry, plus fillers on breeding, the breaking of a colt, the pampered life of prized stallions and a look at thoroughbred races through movie clips, including the Marx Brothers' "A Day At The Races" and "National Velvet." Edwin Newman will narrate the piece.

Dick Enberg will host the telecast, assisted by nine others, including co-host Dave Johnson and handicappers Pete Axthelm and Harvey Pack. Former jockey Robyn Smith will be on horseback to check on developments on the track. Tom Durkin will call the race.

Not only has Enberg gotten involved by doing extra racing homework at Delmar, seven miles from his Rancho Santa Fe, Calif., home, but he now co-owns a 2-year-old filly.

Enberg purchased "Here Comes Love" in August and proudly said she has finished no worse than fourth in nine of 10 starts.

Draft Gives Free Agents Idea Of What's Wanted

NEW YORK (AP) — If all 26 teams can draft all 56 eligible free-agent players, why go through the procedure at all?

"It's easier than a player picking up the phone and making 25 calls," said Barry Rona, the counsel to major league baseball's Player Relations Committee, the owners' bargaining unit.

The re-entry draft, a procedure of about 1½ hours, beginning today with a few big names — pitchers like Bruce Sutter and Rick Sutcliffe and hitters like Fred Lynn, Andre Thornton and Dave Kingman — in the hopper.

The draft became a part of baseball in 1976. Until 1981, a player could be drafted by no more than 13 teams and could negotiate only with them and the club for whom he had last played.

But in the strike-bound year of '81, the collective bargaining agreement did away with that 13-team limitation. Any suspense, that a player might be drafted by the maximum number before some clubs got their shot, was gone.

"We responded that once you take the limit off, you make the draft unnecessary because it provides all the clubs with the opportunity to select whoever they want" Rona said. "The players association couldn't dispute that.

"But they said the draft was still a good idea because it's a barometer for the players, and the clubs, to know what interest there is any particular player," Rona said. "It's more of a convenience to the players. They don't have to call around. With the draft, they have a starting point to gauge how much interest there might be in them."

Or how little. Every year, some players are ignored. Those picked by fewer than four teams are free to negotiate with all teams. Oscar Gamble is one example.

He went through free agency in 1977, signed a hefty contract with San Diego, was traded after one year to Texas and later by the Rangers to the New York Yankees. A year ago, designated hitter and first baseman went through free agency again, went undrafted and was re-signed by the Yanks. In 54 games in 1984 he hit 10 home runs and batted in 27 runs with a .185 average.

He was in the free-agent pool again today, seeing who — if anyone — might be interested in him.

"That's really the only real remaining utility of the draft," Rona said. "In the early days, you'd find a lot of top management people and scouts heavily involved. There was a real art to drafting. Now it's come down to some administrative assistant coming in with a list of names on a piece of paper."

USC Picked To Upset Huskies

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON
AP Sports Writer

If it's true that you win football games with defense, that's where Saturday's Rose Bowl showdown in Los Angeles between top-rated Washington and No. 18 Southern California should be decided.

Washington ranks seventh nationally in total defense, 11th in rushing defense and second in scoring defense. USC is 14th, seventh and eighth, respectively, in those categories.

Obviously, the game will be won on defense.

Washington, which found an offense by switching to quarterback Paul Sicuro over the last 1½ games, is a 4-point favorite. The Cotton, Holiday, Orange and Sugar Bowls are all rooting hard against the nation's No. 1-ranked team. James notwithstanding, the pick is for this game to be decided on defense . . . Southern Cal 17-14.

Last week's prediction record was only — 33 right, 18 wrong and one tie for a percentage of .647. That dropped the season's mark to 353-129-12—.732. Against the line, last week was a disastrous 13-21-0—.382; on the year, 144-145-4—.498.

No. 11 Florida State (favored by 1) at No. 5 South Carolina: Florida State 27-17.

No. 8 Georgia vs. No. 10 Florida (by 3) at Jacksonville: Florida 24-14.

No. 2 Nebraska (by 27) at Kansas: Nebraska 42-14.

Houston at No. 3 Texas (by 14): Texas 20-14.

San Diego State at No. 4 Brigham Young (no line): BYU 35-27.

Maryland at No. 6 Miami, Fla. (by 8): Miami 28-14.

Missouri at No. 7 Oklahoma State (by 8½): Oklahoma State 27-17.

No. 9 Oklahoma (by 27) at Colorado: Oklahoma 34-13.

No. 12 LSU (by 3 1-2) at Alabama: LSU 27-14.

Angry Holmes Predicting Fifth Round KO Of Smith

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — A testy Larry Holmes, upset with knockout predictions made by James "Bonecrusher" Smith, says he'll dispose of the challenger within five rounds Friday in their scheduled 15-round heavyweight title bout.

"You'll be knocked out. I promise you," an angry Holmes told Smith during a Wednesday press conference. "You can even call the round, but make it before five because you won't last past that."

Holmes, who turned 35 last week, scoffed at Smith's claims that he was too old and would be stopped, vowing to punish the challenger for his pre-fight talk.

"I can get him drunk and dance with him and then when I want to kill him, I'll kill him," said Holmes. "I'm that good at that. I'm a real boxing champion."

Holmes' trainer, the veteran Eddie Futch, said riling up the undefeated International Boxing Federation champion is not to Smith's advantage.

"I'm with Larry every day and I know the intensity he develops when someone like Bonecrusher comes on like he's done," said Futch.

The talk didn't seem to faze Smith, who is such an underdog that bookmakers in this gambling city have refused to put up a line on the fight. The only bets being accepted on the bout are on whether or not it goes seven rounds.

"He's been a great champion but his time has come," Smith said. "When I knock him down, he won't get up."

Smith calls himself the "hardest punching heavyweight in the world" and claims Holmes is making the mistake of many veteran fighters in trying to prolong his career.

"All great champions want one more fight and it's always one too many," Smith said. "Larry should have retired. History repeats itself and it will once again in the ring Friday night."

Two other fighters also hold heavyweight titles — Gerrie Coetzee of the World Boxing Association and Pinklon Thomas of the World Boxing Council. Holmes stepped down as WBC champion last December following a dispute with promoter Don King.

Smith, a 29-year-old former prison guard who began fighting professionally only three years ago, was knocked out in his first bout against James Broad but has won 14 in a row since then, 12 by knockout.

GOP Calls Election Its 'Biggest Victory'

By MARY ANNE RHYNE
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — North Carolina Democrats say they were temporarily knocked off balance by the strength of Republican election victories ranging from President Reagan's landslide re-election to the defeat of veteran state legislators.

"The power of that national sweep was a surprise to us," state Democratic Party Chairman David Price said.

State Republican Party Chairman Dave Flaherty called it the "biggest victory this party has ever had."

Leaders of both parties say Reagan's popularity and the national debate over the need to raise taxes fueled the Republican sweep. They said the state Democratic Party has inherited many of the national party's problems.

Unofficial results from the election Tuesday showed that:

— President Reagan gathered 62 percent of the vote to 38 percent for Democrat Walter Mondale, who carried only the staunchest Democratic areas in the state.

— Republican Sen. Jesse Helms was elected to a third term when he captured 52 percent of the vote against 48 percent for Democratic Gov. Jim Hunt. The GOP incumbent carried 52 counties, many of them rural areas or manufacturing counties with blue-collar workers.

— Congressman Jim Martin defeated Democratic Attorney General Rufus Edmisten for governor, 56-46 percent. Martin carried 49 counties, picking up urban areas which Helms lost.

— The makeup of the congressional delegation went from nine Democrats and two Republicans to six Democrats and five Republicans. Longtime veteran Rep. Ike Andrews in the 4th District was among the losers.

— Republicans doubled their representation in the General Assembly. They went from six to 12 seats in the 50-member Senate and from 18 to 37 seats in the 120-member House.

Many saw the elections as a repeat of 1972, when President Nixon was re-elected, Jesse Helms was sent to Washington and Jim Holshouser was chosen the state's first GOP governor this century. They differed on whether GOP gains would more than four years this time.

"I think the 1972 victories were short-term gains," Flaherty said. "I think ... (Tuesday's) victories indicate a rejection of the Democratic Party. Democrats are saying that the Republican Party is where their philosophy is."

Price recalled, however, that, "The momentum of the landslide brought about by Nixon in 1972 vanished two years later in the disgrace of Watergate.

"I think we are riding a temporary wave. I think the people, upon reflection, are going to have cause to regret what they've done," he said.

Price said the GOP sweep is not necessarily an omen for the future because Reagan did not campaign on deep philosophical issues, choosing instead to focus on "feel good, happy talk."

Supporters of Hunt and Helms agree that the presidential race and the national parties set the agenda in North Carolina's U.S. Senate campaign.

"The fact that ... (taxes) was made the paramount issue in the presidential race sort of forced it into every race in the country," said Gary Pearce, co-director of Hunt's campaign. "The tax issue did not work for Democrats this year."

Carter Wrenn, executive director of the National Congressional Club, said the issues and resulting election victories offer Republicans a big opportunity to "build themselves into a philosophical alternative to the Democratic Party."

University of North Carolina political science professor Merle Black said Democrats have lost philosophical ground as well as a political base in North Carolina elections.

"The main vulnerability North Carolina Democrats have is the result of a lack of popularity of the national party," Black said.

He said eastern residents no longer are restrained by traditional ties to the Democratic Party.

"... The Democratic Party in North Carolina has lost its eastern base since non-Southern liberals lead the party," Black said, adding that Republicans can get "within striking range" in almost any race in North Carolina now.

He pointed to Council of State races, where Democrats were elected but without overwhelming majorities.

Both Democrats and Republicans agreed that the presidential coattails helped North Carolina candidates.

"The primary conclusion I reach is we came close to pulling off what would have been the political miracle of this year considering the strength of the Republican ticket," Pearce said. "In a normal year without Ronald Reagan and without the tremendous spread in the presidential race we would have been able to win."

Martin Says Will Request Budget That Eliminates Some Sales Taxes

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — Republican Jim Martin said he would ask outgoing Gov. Jim Hunt to submit a budget that allows for the elimination of some sales taxes as he acknowledged he couldn't succeed as governor without bipartisan support in the Legislature.

Martin, savoring his defeat of Democrat Rufus Edmisten that will make Martin the second Republican governor of North Carolina this century, said he would urge Hunt — in one of his final duties — to submit a fiscal 1985-86 budget that allows for elimination of the sales tax on food and over-the-counter drugs next year.

"That's a very important part of our agenda," Martin said Wednesday, adding that his economic advisers say his best opportunity to repeal the taxes will come within the next budget period.

Gov. Elect JIM MARTIN

Martin said his solid election victory proved the plan had widespread support.

"I wouldn't have proposed it if I didn't think I could (win General Assembly approval)," said Martin in a news conference at his campaign headquarters. He said the Legislature should "recognize that that was a very important factor in the minds of a lot of the voters."

Martin's tax proposals — he also called for elimination of the intangibles and inventory levies — came under sharp criticism during the campaign from powerful House Speaker Liston Ramsey, who said they would plunge state and local governments into debt.

Martin, however, said there had been substantial support in both houses for repeal of the intangibles and inventory taxes during this year's short session. One reason why the proposals failed, he said, was that Hunt didn't plan for them when offering budget revisions.

If the next governor's budget provides for the tax cuts, it will be "a lot easier to marshal the votes," Martin said.

Acknowledging that some Democrats might try to sabotage his programs for partisan gain, Martin said he anticipated a mostly "amicable" dealings with the predominantly Democratic Legislature. He said he would "win some and lose some."

Asked about rumors that legislative leaders might try to repeal the 1976 constitutional amendment allowing the governor to serve two consecutive terms, Martin said he wouldn't let such efforts sour his relationship with the Legislature.

Martin said the GOP took "a giant step" toward becoming a force to be reckoned with in state politics by winning the governor's race, re-electing Sen. Jesse Helms, picking up three congressional seats and making gains in both the state House and Senate.

"All that together was a sign of Republican strength," said Martin. "We're back."

Martin repeated his pledge not to fire career state employees for political reasons.

Martin, 48, a former Davidson College chemistry professor and six-term U.S. representative, rode a wave of pro-Republican sentiment en route to his surprisingly easy conquest of Edmisten, who developed a formidable political organization in his 10 years as attorney general.

With 2,350 or 99.8 percent of 2,354 precincts reporting unofficial returns, Martin had 1,192,096 votes or 54.2 percent to 1,000,356 or 45.5 percent for Edmisten. Two minor candidates shared the remaining 0.3 percent.

Martin said that while he benefited from Reagan's coattails, his margin of victory and balanced support throughout the state convinced him that "there was a strong vote for Jim Martin for governor yesterday."

New Right Wants Helms To Succeed Percy

By W. DALE NELSON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Leaders of the "New Right," rejoicing in the defeat of long-time Republican moderate Sen. Charles H. Percy of Illinois, are eager for conservative Sen. Jesse Helms to step into Percy's shoes as chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

The decision is up to Helms, who said repeatedly during his successful campaign for re-election in North Carolina that he would stay on as chairman of the Agriculture Committee instead. Helms was not available for comment Wednesday and an associate said he must be taken at his word.

Percy was one of two Republican senators defeated in Tuesday's election, as Democrats made a net gain of two seats. The GOP held onto control of the Senate by the diminished margin of 53-47.

In the House, Republicans netted 14 seats, whittling the Democratic majority to 253-182.

Helms is next to Percy in seniority among Republicans on the Foreign Relations panel, putting him in line for the chairmanship.

Sen. Richard Lugar of Indiana, a middle-of-the-road lawmaker with support among both moderates and conservatives, is second to Helms, but Lugar is a leading candidate to succeed retiring Sen. Howard Baker of Tennessee as majority leader.

John T. Dolan, chairman of the National Conservative Political Action Committee, said Helms "is going to have a tough decision to make" if Lugar is elected leader, leaving liberal GOP Sen. Charles McC. Mathias of Maryland in line for the chairmanship.

Other conservatives agreed and said they hoped Helms would reconsider.

"It is clear that I, and I think my colleagues, very much hope he will pursue this path, but his accountability is not to us, it is to the people of North Carolina, and I am sure he will decide on his own," said Howard Phillips, chairman of the Conservative Caucus.

"I would love to see him do it, but I don't want to put any pressure on him," said Paul Weyrich, chairman of the Committee for Survival of a Free Congress.

"I know of no conservatives who have spoken to him about it," Weyrich said. "A number have called me about it."

Dolan said: "We are doing nothing because we don't want it to seem like a conservative plot. It should come from within North Carolina and within the Reagan administration, and I think it will."

In response to questions in the closing days of his hard-fought campaign against Democratic Gov. James B. Hunt, Helms said over and over that he would stick to his agriculture chairmanship, important to North Carolina, a producer of tobacco, poultry and hogs.

"You have got to take him at his word on that," said Carter Wrenn, executive director of the National Congressional Club in Raleigh, N.C., a political action committee that is the basis of the Helms political organization. "He hasn't said anything at all to indicate otherwise."

Lugar, at a post-election news conference in his capacity as Republican Senate campaign chairman, discounted speculation that he would accept the Foreign Relations post.

"It's Senator Helms' call," said Mark Helmke, Lugar's press secretary. "Lugar wants to be leader."

Lugar said Dolan's National Conservative Political Action Committee contributed to the defeat of Percy by encouraging voters to back a third party candidate, helping throw the election to Democratic Rep. Paul Simon.

Dolan said, "The defeat of Charles Percy in the long term for the Republican Party will be a great victory, making it a majority party, because it gets the dinosaurs out of the way. Percy and Mathias are dinosaurs."

Conservative fund raiser Richard Viguerie said he was "very excited and enthusiastic" about Percy's defeat and believed Helms should take the Foreign Relations post "for the sake of this country and the free world."

Helms, chairman of the Foreign Relations subcommittee on the Western Hemisphere, shares President Reagan's advocacy of a militant stance against communism in Central America, but blocked recommendations of a presidential commission calling for massive economic aid to the region.

He has also held up a number of Reagan's ambassadorial appointments and stalled consideration of a treaty outlawing genocide, which the president endorsed.

Mathias also has often differed with the administration, for example opposing the confirmation of Kenneth L. Adelman as head of the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency and voting to cut off funds for the B-1 bomber. He supports the genocide treaty, has been critical of administration human rights policy in Central America and supported recommendations of the presidential commission. He is chairman of the subcommittee on international economic policy.

Besides its meaning for foreign relations, the election's impact on the taxpayer's pocketbook was being debated on Capitol Hill.

Lugar said he expected the president to propose a "restructuring" of the tax system, limiting spending and yet providing incentives for economic growth.

When asked whether the president would be able to keep his promise of no tax increases, Lugar said: "That's going to be the nature of his program. He has to work with the House and the Senate to fashion the program, but certainly the initial impetus will be precisely the rhetoric of the campaign."

Foreign Papers Eye Helms Race

By The Associated Press

A South African newspaper that often criticizes that nation's white minority government topped its front page today with a report that U.S. Sen. Jesse Helms might become chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

The newspaper described Helms, a conservative Republican from North Carolina, as "the South African government's best friend on Capitol Hill."

Helms won re-election Tuesday and became the next-in-line to take over the chairmanship because the current chairman, Sen. Charles Percy, R-Ill., lost his re-election bid.

Helms said during the campaign that he would remain as chairman of the Agriculture Committee instead of replacing Percy, and has not indicated he has changed his mind.

Nonetheless, South Africa's Rand Daily Mail, one of the nation's leading English-language dailies, gave more prominence to Helms' new options that it did to President Reagn's landslide victory.

"Senator Jesse Helms, the South African government's best friend on Capitol Hill, seemed poised to become chairman of the influential Senate Foreign Relations Committee as President Reagan scored a stunning victory in the U.S. elections,"

In Australia, the liberal Australian Financial Review featured news of Helms' possible role in foreign affairs in a news analysis that described him as an "ultra right-wing fundamentalist."

"Senator Helms may still be tempted to take on the foreign affairs position, a move which would inevitably produce a more strident, hardline voice on foreign affairs in the Senate," it said.

Growers Say No To Quota Cuts

TIFTON, Ga. (AP) — Tobacco farmers from Georgia and Florida have urged the federal government not to lower domestic tobacco quotas for 1985, saying lower quotas would only encourage more tobacco imports.

Growers met with representatives of the U.S. Department of Agriculture Wednesday at one of the two tobacco quota hearings scheduled in the South.

They warned that their foreign competitors would step up production if the USDA, as it has in the past few years, cuts the U.S. tobacco quotas that govern how much tobacco farmers may produce.

"We have cut our throats by reducing our allotments each year," said Eugene P. Bozeman, a grower from Thomas County. "Ever since the government has been cutting our quotas, foreign competitors have stepped in."

William L. Lanier, a tobacco grower from Metter said, "When you create a void, somebody's going to fill it. And once they get a taste of the profits from tobacco, it's hard to wean them."

American tobacco farmers have been concerned for years that high prices on domestic tobacco, brought about by excessive tobacco allotment rentals and unrealistic price supports, are hurting their competitve edge in world markets.

"I don't think it's fair for the leadership in Washington to come down here to cut our quota and not put a quota on imports coming in," said Frank Strickland, vice president of the Georgia Farm Bureau.

"Tobacco growers have been treated unfairly, and the government has the responsibility to help us get out of the situation we're in today," Strickland said.

"After what happened yesterday (Tuesday), with Mr. Reagan carrying all the farm states, I think you have a responsibility to agriculture this morning, I really do," he said.

Strickland joined other farmers in asking the USDA to consider lowering the support price for less desirable grades of tobacco, rather than cutting the supply of higher grade tobacco.

New Study Contends Smoking Causes Heart Failure

By DANIEL Q. HANEY
AP Science Writer

BOSTON (AP) — Nicotine or carbon monoxide in cigarette smoke may be responsible for a rare but lethal disease that weakens the heart's pumping power, a researcher says.

The study released today found that in young men, at least, smoking causes cardiomyopathy, a condition that results in heart failure and is often fatal.

Exactly how smoking, a well-known contributor to heart attacks, does this is still not clear. However, Dr. Arthur J. Hartz of the Medical College of Wisconsin speculates that the nicotine or carbon monoxide in the smoke somehow poisons the heart.

"It probably causes cardiomyopathy with a direct toxic effect on the heart muscle that weakens it," he said in an interview.

Hartz' study, conducted at St. Luke's Hospital and the Wood Veterans Administration Medical Center in Milwaukee, was published in the New England Journal of Medicine.

Other research has shown that men who smoke are two to three times more likely than non-smokers to die from heart attacks. Heart attacks usually occur when the heart's own blood supply is temporarily blocked, and a section of heart muscle dies from lack of oxygen.

The damage from cardiomyopathy, however, is spread through the heart. It is a generalized weakness, and as a result, the heart does not pump strongly enough to circulate the blood properly. The consequence is one form of heart failure.

"When you look at moving pictures of the heart, instead of having a vigorous, complete contraction, the heart contracts very weakly," Hartz said. "It does a small portion of what it would ordinarily."

To compensate for its weakness, the heart becomes enlarged. This, in turn, can eventually interfere with its function instead of improving it.

Cardiomyopathy is a poorly understood disease. In the past, some have speculated that it's caused by a virus. But most cases are termed "idiopathic," a word doctors use when they don't know the cause.

Barney Clark, the Seattle-area dentist who lived for 112 days with an artificial heart, suffered from the disease. Hartz said 9,000 to 10,000 people die of it each year.

Recent research in rabbits has shown the cigarette smoke can damage their hearts and cause cardiomyopathy.

"We think that what we found in people was the same thing they found in an experimental model," Hartz said.

The laest study was conducted on 4,763 men who entered hospitals for diagnosis of suspected heart disease. In young men — those under 55 — the doctors found that cardiomyopathy was nearly three times as common among heavy smokers as non-smokers.

The association was less clear among older men. However, the researchers speculated that the disease might already have taken its toll by the time victims reached 55.

There were not enough women with the disease to study, Hartz said.

Jordan Stresses Hard Work and Team Effort

By TOM MINEHART
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — Democratic Lt. Gov.-elect Bob Jordan says he sees no problems in working with a Republican governor but said Jim Martin's proposals to repeal the state's inventory, intangibles and sales taxes are unrealistic.

"If you did all those things at one time by 1988 that would amount to $1 billion," Jordan said Wednesday in an interview after a news conference at Democratic headquarters. "I favor phasing out the inventory and intangibles taxes. I'd love to repeal the sales tax, but I just don't see how you could run state government without it.

"Jim Martin has an educational program of his own," he said. "It'll be interesting to see how he balances his proposals."

Jordan said Martin, a Republican six-term congressman was an "intelligent person." But he said he will need hard work and a "team effort" to accomplish anything with a Republican governor, even with a mostly Democratic Legislature.

"I'm going to assume the point role, but I'm not going to take the point and run out there all by myself," Jordan said. "It's going to take a team effort.

"I'd prefer that a Democratic governor play that point role," he said. "It just means that instead of a five-day-a-week job I'm going to have a seven-day-a-week job."

Jordan, a four-term state senator and lumber executive from Montgomerty County, defeated Republican John Carrington to claim the lieutenant governor's job and become the state's top-ranking Democrat.

Jordan said that he would work with Gov. Jim Hunt and Attorney General Rufus Edmisten before they step down in January to find out why the party fared so badly in the 1984 election. Hunt lost his bid to unseat U.S. Sen. Jesse Helms and Edmisten lost the race for governor to Martin.

The lieutenant governor has a "hard role" because he doesn't have the power to appoint officials that the governor has, Jordan said. He also said he would discuss with Martin a proposal to limit governors to one term each.

Jordan's top priorities are programs to aid small business and bring in new jobs and educational opportunities, he said.

Jordan and Carrington battled to replace eight-year incumbent Jimmy Green in the state's second-ranking office. Green was the first lieutenant governor to serve two consecutive terms after a 1977 amendment to the state Constitution permitted succession.

Baby Girl Weighted, Left In Lake

PITTSBORO, N.C. (AP) — The body of a week-old girl was found Tuesday in a bag weighted with a cement block that washed ashore on an island in B. Everett Jordan Lake.

The body was discovered by Donald Bartsch of Angier, who was fishing Tuesday morning near the northwest section of the lake. Detective Wayne Wheeler said the body was stuffed inside three grocery store plastic bags that were placed in a denim tote bag along with a tote bag along. The bags contained a chunk of cement weighing about 2 pounds.

According to a preliminary report issued by the N.C. Medical Examiner's office in Chapel Hill, the body was that of a 4-pound fully mature infant girl born about a week ago. The umbilical cord was still attached. The baby's race and the length of time it had been in the lake had not been determined.

Bartsch said he was looking for fishing lures when he spotted a demin bag lying on the island's bank and partly in the water. As he pulled the bag toward him, it tore, exposing the plastic bags.

Wheeler said sheriff's department officials think the baby was dropped off the side of a nearby bridge.

Final Leaf Sales Held

By The Associated Press

Final auctions of Old & Middle Belt flue-cured tobacco were held Wednesday at Oxford and Winston-Salem, ending season sales of 1984 leaf, the Federal-State Market News Service reported.

Gross sales Wednesday of 223,480 pounds returned $166.31 per hundred, down $5.91 from Tuesday. Season totals reached 289,026,239 pounds, averaging $180.35. Total flue-cured sales (Florida through Virginia) stand at 923,847,394 gross pounds and average $180.96 per hundred.

Loan receipts made up 20.3 percent of Old and Middle Belt sales Tuesday and comprise 24.8 percent of season sales. For the flue-cured area as a whole, 159.2 million pounds or 17.2 percent of gross sales was delivered to the Flue-Cured Tobacco Cooperative Stabilization Corp.

HBO Plans To Revive Old Comedy Bits

By JERRY BUCK
AP Television Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Jack Gilford stood on the edge of the set and prepared to re-create a sketch he originated in a Broadway-bound play 34 years ago.

"We were in Boston before going to New York," he said. "We were in a revue called 'Alive and Kicking.' I joined the show late and they put me and the sketch into a matinee with 60 people in the house. It stopped the show."

That show stopper, called "I Never Felt Better," is one of about 15 blackout sketches from Broadway revues and television that are being assembled into a show for Home Box Office. Gilford will do the sketch with his wife, Madeline Lee, and James Coco. It was written by Joseph Stein and Will Glickman.

"We'd hoped to get the same straight man from the 1950 show," Gilford said, "but he wasn't available. He changed the punch line. His name is Carl Reiner."

Gilford was in Stage 9 at NBC, where the sketches were being taped before an audience over a three-day period. The show, tentatively titled "Sketches," will be broadcast on HBO sometime next year.

"Some of these sketches go back to the 1920s, and some were in the 'Ziegfeld Follies,'" said Deborah Oppenheimer, who is producing for Lorimar Productions. "We're doing this like a theater production because most of our people are stage trained."

The idea came from Iris Merlis, Lorimar's director of development for cable, who thought it would fit into HBO's "Comedy Playhouse."

"We had to track down a lot of this material," Miss Oppenheimer said. "Some of it wasn't even written down. We also had to deal with a lot of widows who are very reverential about their husband's work. We had to assure them we'd treat it with respect. Those sketches that have lasted are timeless and universal."

In the audience seats, James Coco watched as director Noam Pitlik ran some of the other performers through their paces. The show also stars Ron Leibman, Geena Davis, Joyce Van Patten, Robert Morse, Daniel Stern, and Jessica Walter.

"I haven't done this in years," said Coco. "I started my career doing a revue called 'Darwin's Theory.' Alan Alda wrote some of the sketches and he was in it, too. Halfway through, the press agent came back and said we were in trouble — all the critics had walked out. One critic wrote that 'whatever Mr. Alda and Mr. Coco were doing before they should go back to doing.' I thought my career was over.

"These are the cream of the sketches. They're great to do. In a play you have one character. Here you may do 13 characters and you really have to rev yourself up. It's like doing 13 plays. I hope the revue is coming back, both on television and on the stage."

Coco, whose first book, "The James Coco Diet," was a best seller, is bringing out a second book called "Cooking With Coco." The once-rotund Coco lost 110 pounds before writing the first book. He said the Cable Health Network has asked him to do 65 segments of a show to be called "Coco's World."

One sketch, "Yma, Ava," written by Thomas Meehan, was originated by Anne Bancroft and Lee J. Cobb on a TV special. Miss Van Patten and Gilford will do it for "Sketches."

"It's a tongue-twister on the people with unusual first names who come to a party," said Miss Oppenheimer. "Joyce introduces everyone by their first name and the people are Yma Sumac, Ava Gardner, Abba Eban, Oona O'Neill and the like. So it becomes, 'Yma, Ava. Yma, Ava, Abba. Yma, Ava, Abba, Oona,' and so on."

End Adv for Thurs PMs, Nov 8

Morton Dean Leaving CBS

NEW YORK (AP) — The rumored departure of correspondent Morton Dean from CBS became official with his signing of a multi-year contract to join the Independent Network News as co-anchor of its prime-time weeknight television newscasts.

Dean is expected to make his debut with co-anchor Pat Harper on Jan. 7. INN President John R. Corporon said Tuesday.

Dean has been with CBS since 1968.

'Dallas' Claims Top TV Rating

LOS ANGELES (AP) — CBS' "Dallas" regained first place from ABC's "Dynasty" and two compelling movies, about teen-age suicide and a nun who quits her order, were high in the Nielsen ratings for the past week.

"Dallas," knocked out of first place for two weeks by the troubles of the Carrington family on "Dynasty," came in first for the week ended Nov. 4.

CBS' "Silence of the Heart," which told of a teen-age suicide and the impact on his family, tied for fourth in the ratings. NBC's "Shattered Vows," about a young nun whose unspoken love for a priest and desire for a family drove her to quit her order before her final vows, was sixth.

CBS was first in the A.C. Nielsen Co. survey with a network average of 16.3. NBC was second with 15.7 and ABC was third with 15.3. The networks say this means that in an average prime-time minute, 16.3 percent of the audience was tuned to CBS.

It was the third straight week the networks had finished in the same order, and with very nearly the same network averages each week.

NBC, boosted by the World Series and the huge ratings of the movie "The Burning Bed," stayed ahead for the season-to-date. The ratings at the end of six weeks: NBC 17.0, CBS 16.7, ABC 15.2.

CBS had four shows in the Top 10; NBC and ABC had three each.

Here's the Top 10: "Dallas," CBS, first; "Dynasty," ABC, second; "60 Minutes," CBS, third; "Falcon Crest" and "Silence of the Heart," both CBS, tied for fourth; "Shattered Vows," NBC, sixth; "The A-Team," NBC, seventh; "The Cosby Show," NBC, eighth; "Hotel," ABC, ninth; the movie "The Best Little Whorehouse in Texas," ABC, 10th.

The NBC movie "The Cartier Affair," an original comedy up against ABC's network debut of "The Best Little Whorehouse in Texas," was 22nd. NBC's new series, "V," which made its debut last week in a tie for 34th place, was 41st.

Top Shows

Here are the top 20 shows of the week:

1. "Dallas," CBS, a rating of 27.1 or 23.0 million households.
2. "Dynasty," ABC, 24.9 or 21.1 million.
3. "60 Minutes," CBS, 22.8 or 19.3 million.
4. Tie-"Falcon Crest," 21.9 or 18.5 million.
4. Tie-Movie-"Silence of the Heart," CBS, 21.9 or 18.5 million.
6. Movie-"Shattered Vows," NBC, 21.3 or 18.0 million.
7. "The A-Team," NBC, 21.2 or 17.9 million.
8. "The Cosby Show," NBC, 20.0 or 16.9 million.
9. "Hotel," ABC, 19.9 or 16.8 million.
10. Movie-"Best Little Whorehouse in Texas," ABC, 19.6 or 16.6 million.
11. "Knots Landing," CBS, 19.2 or 16.3 million.
12. NFL Football Prime-Time Runover, NBC, 19.1 or 16.2 million.
13. "The Fall Guy," ABC, 18.9 or 16.0 million.
14. Tie-"Magnum, P.I.," CBS, 18.7 or 15.8 million.

Supreme Court Will Allow Evidence In Murder Trial

RALEIGH (AP) — The state Supreme Court has ruled that a pair of underwear and other key evidence can be used in the trial of a Mexican migrant worker accused of raping and killing a 7-year-old Taylorsville girl in 1982.

The evidence, including a photograph of 7-year-old April Leigh Sweet that was found in the wallet of her accused attacker, was suppressed during the trial of Bernardino Zuniga in Davidson County Superior Court in August 1983.

Zuniga, 29, who once worked for the child's grandfather on his farm near Taylorsville, was charged with first-degree murder and first-degree rape.

An autopsy showed the girl, whose body was found July 13, 1982, along a dead-end road near her Alexander County home, had her throat cut with a large knife and had been raped.

Trial Judge Donald L. Smith ruled that evidence taken from Zuniga the day of the slaying could not be used because it was seized illegally.

Rather than proceed with the trial, District Attorney H.W. Zimmerman Jr. decided to appeal to the state Supreme Court.

By a 6-1 vote, the court ruled Tuesday that Smith erred in suppressing the evidence taken by Knoxville, Tenn., police and ordered the case sent back to Davidson Superior Court for trial. Zimmerman said Tuesday he planned to try the case soon and that he would seek the death penalty.

In other decisions, the court ordered a new trial for one man sentenced to death on a murder charge and reduced the sentence of another condemned man to life in prison.

Stanley Sanders, 32, was sentenced to death in July 1982 in Transylvania County by Superior Court Judge Lacy Thornburg. Sanders was convicted of raping and murdering a 17-year-old high school student.

In ordering Sanders a new trial, the Supreme Court ruled that an inadequate transcript of the trial and sentencing prevented the court from reviewing a legal challenge to the judge's instructions to the jury.

The court also ruled that the trial judge in New Hanover County had erred during a sentencing hearing for Jerome Hamlet Jr. by allowing the jury to consider whether the murder was "especially heinous, atrocious and cruel." The evidence was insufficient to submit the issue to the jury, the court ruled in reducing Hamlet's sentence to life imprisonment.

Hamlet had been sentenced to death for fatally shooting in the head Asa E. Bramlett as he stood outside a Wilmington nightclub in February 1983.

Asheville Tour Director Absent, $80,000 Missing

ASHEVILLE (AP) — The disappearance of an Asheville tour director and $80,000 given to him from church members in seven states has left at least one of the ministers involved determined to see the money is returned.

According to Asheville police, George S. Kort, president of Budget Tours Inc., left his Canton home on Oct. 24, one day after he wrote a letter to 57 people who planned to make a trip to the Holy Land.

The letter stated that the money was "used in an effort to recoup that which now turns out to be irreplaceable losses to me personally and to Budget Tours Inc."

The Rev. Freddie M. Young, minister of Calvary Baptist Church in Hendersonville, said that as a pastor he had compassion for the man but as a businessman, he was obligated to seek the return of his clients' money.

Other local churches represented on the tour's passenger list were First Baptist Church in East Flat Rock and Maranatha Baptist Church in Hendersonville, Young said.

Reactions to the letters were of "unbelief ... numbness," Young said. Young, who was to host 21 Hendersonville-area people and five out-of-staters through the trip, said Kort had been an "excellent" agent during two other trips to the Middle East.

Asheville police Detective Lee Warren said Kort, his wife and young son have vacated their home and disconnected their telephone. Warren said Piedmont Airlines records indicate Kort, 41, bought a one-way ticket from Asheville to Atlantic City, N.J.

Associates of Kort have recently received phone calls from him, but have been unable to determine where he is living, Warren said.

Meanwhile, the 21 people from the three Henderson County churches, as well 36 from Georgia, Alabama, Oklahoma, New York, Colorado and South Carolina, had paid approximately $1,877 each to Budget Tours Inc. in anticipation of a trip to Holland, Jordan, Israel and Egypt.

The trip was to have begun Monday, about two weeks after the letters, supposedly signed by Kort, arrived at each household.

The letter states the money was "placed with me during a period of overbearing anxiety and financial distress" and was used "in an effort to recoup that which now turns out to be irreplaceable losses to me personally and to Budget Tours Inc."

The writer offers to pay each person within five years from the date of the letter. It states that "if God sees fit," payment will begin as soon as the writer gets back on his financial feet.

"If you choose to extract your pound of flesh," the letter concludes, "the laws of our country grant you that right ... If you elect to accept the note (of promised payment), please advise."

It is signed "with Christian love" with the purported signature of George S. Kort.

The 26 people whom Young was to host people made their last payment Oct. 16 toward the $40,000 fee, and Kort responded cordially with a thank-you note, Young said. They were to have met overseas with 31 other tour members from Georgia and Oklahoma who had paid Budget Tours Inc. a total of $40,785.

Corporate records on file at the Buncombe County Courthouse show that the two men who helped Kort establish the business in September 1978 were Jerry W. Miller, an assistant district attorney with the U.S. District attorney's office in Asheville, and Floyd Brock, an unsuccessful Democratic candidate for the Buncombe County Board of Commissioners.

"Get this straight," Brock said Wednesday. "I'm in no way actively involved with the corporation." He said he was the attorney who incorporated the business, but that other board members were elected during the first board meeting.

Miller, Brock's law partner at the time of the incorporation, also said he was not involved with the business.

Train Service Opens Slowly

RALEIGH (AP) — Off to a slow start in its first days of operation, the Carolinian passenger train service linking Raleigh to Charlotte should gather steam this month, Amtrak and state transportation officials say.

The average daily number of riders during the Carolinian's first four days in service was just more than half of what the train will need to achieve this year to be successful, Nicholas Brockunier, marketing manager for Amtrak's eastern routes, said Wednesday.

He said the train doesn't have to be full to meet costs.

"I'm not at all disappointed by the performance so far," Brockunier said. "I think the figures are pretty encouraging for us because generally these things don't take off immediately. They generally start to grow during the first month or so."

From Oct. 28 to Oct. 31, the first four days of operation and the only days for which figures have been compiled, 552 people rode the Carolinian.

Torch Ignites Fire At School

CLARKTON, N.C. (AP) — A fire sparked by a roofer's torch destroyed the oldest building on the Clarkton School campus, forcing the evacuation of teachers and 212 students, but causing no injuries.

The 60-year-old building contained 12classrooms and housed students in grades six through eight, school superintendent W.J. Hair said.

The fire started about 2:30 p.m. Tuesday when workers were putting a new roof on the building, a school employee said. Acetylene torches were being used to heat a rubber compound for the roof and a piece of it fell down a flue, igniting a bird's nest, the employee said.

Fire extinguishers could not reach the blaze, which quickly spread through the building.

School officials said plans for using temporary facilities began before the fire was brought under control. They said the gymnasium and some other buildings on campus will be used for classes.

EPA To Sample Lake Water

RALEIGH (AP) — The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency plans to sample water from 65 lakes in the western part of North Carolina and South Carolina during November as part of its national acid rain research program.

Among the lakes to be sampled are James, Nantahala and Rhodhiss in North Carolina, and Hartwell, Jocassee and Lanier in South Carolina.

Agency spokesman Bob Humphries in Atlanta said the sampling is aimed at obtaining basic conditions of mountain-area lakes that scientists think are most vulnerable to damage from acid rain.

The sampling wil take place on 47 lakes in 19 North Carolina counties, including Burke, Caldwell, McDowell and Rutherford and on 18 lakes in seven South Carolina counites, including Greenville and Spartanburg.

Farm Income Shows Diversification

RALEIGH (AP) — Enterprises other than tobacco accounted for 73.1 percent of cash receipts from farming in North Carolina last year, a North Carolina State University official says.

Tobacco brought growers $1.020 billion or 26.9 percent of the state's total cash farm income, which was $4.112 in 1983, said Dr. J.E. Legates, dean of the School of Agriculture and Life Sciences.

"The farm cash receipts figures for 1983 show that we have made tremendous progress in diversifying our agriculture," Legates said. "While tobacco brought in more than $1 billion last year, other enterprises brought in more than $3 billion."

The state's poultry industry ranks second to tobacco in farm income, combined income from turkeys, broilers, eggs and chickens was $912 million in 1983.

Forsyth Man Pleads Guilty

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — A man charged with the first-degree murder of a newspaper copy editor has pleaded guilty to contributing to the delinquency of a 15-year-old girl.

Darryl Eugene Hunt, 19, had been named on a felony charge of taking indecent liberties with a minor, but authorities accepted his plea to the misdemeanor charge and Hunt was sentenced to 60 days in jail.

Hunt was returned to Forsyth County Jail to await the outcome of the charge that he beat, raped and stabbed to death Deborah Sykes Aug. 10.

Richard R. Lyle, an assistant district attorney, told Judge W. Douglas Albright of Greensboro that the prosecution could not make the indecent liberties charge stick against Hunt.

Lyle said that Hunt is only four years older than the 15-year-old girl he was accused of having sexual relations with, and the law requires the age difference to be at least five years.

Lyle said Hunt and the girl had been engaged in sexual activity for more than a year before Hunt was arrested Sept. 11.

Ingram Seeks Rate Reduction

RALEIGH (AP) — Insurance Commissioner John Ingram has proposed a reduction in insurance rates for private passenger automobile insurance, but insurance industry officials say that the reduction was unjustified.

The industry officials also said if the reduction was ordered, the order could be appealed. If an order by Ingram is appealed, the proposed reductions would not take effect pending a court decision. A possible settlement of such an appeal would be handled by Ingram's successor as commissioner, who will take office in January.

Ingram said in a notice of hearing issued Oct. 31 that the current rates for bodily injury insurance and property damage insurance were "excessive." The hearing is scheduled for Dec. 4.

For a typical driver, Ingram's proposal could reduce to $284 from $325 the cost of auto insurance, industry officials say.

Ingram cited a series of reasons for reducing rates, including recent and anticipated data on losses and expenses incurred by insurance companies, the potential for damage from hazards and fires, industry profit margins and investment income earned or realized by insurers.

But John M. Watkins, assistant manager of the North Carolina Rate Bureau, said he expected Ingram to make the order after the Dec. 4 hearing. "At that point, the Rate Bureau would have to make the decision as to what course of action to follow and of course, we would have the right to appeal to the courts," he said.

Mother, Daughter Die In Fire

DURHAM (AP) — An amputee and her 73-year-old daughter died early Wednesday when a fire that started on a chair in a bedroom spread through their house, firefighters said.

The victims were Blanch G. Hawkins and her daughter, Blanch Parham. Mrs. Hawkins, believed to be in her mid or late 90s, had had a leg removed.

Fire investigator Milton Smith said the chair may have caught fire from a cigarette that smoldered as Mrs. Hawkins and Ms. Parham slept. Mrs. Hawkins died in bed in the room where the fire began, while her daughter's body was found in the kitchen.

Smith said both probably died from smoke inhalation.

Wilson Man Faces Campaign Charge

RALEIGH (AP) — Wilson businessman John C. Bolt Jr. has been charged with violating state campaign contribution laws by exceeding the $4,000 limit in his donations to the gubernatorial campaign of Attorney General Rufus Edmisten.

Wake County District Attorney J. Randolph Riley said Wednesday a criminal summons had been issued charging Bolt with the offenses. The misdemeanor is punishable by a fine of up to $1,000 or one year in jail or both.

Campaign records show donations of $3,000 were made to Edmisten's campaign in the names of Bolt's children. Bolt also contributed $3,000 to Edmisten's campaign and his wife donated $1,000.

About $8,000 was contributed to the gubernatorial primary campaign of Democratic Insurance Commissioner John Ingram in the names of Bolt's children.

Counselor Pleads Guilty

BEAUFORT, N.C. (AP) — A former counselor at a state-funded camp in Carteret County for youths with behavior problems has pleaded guilty to charges of engaging in illegal sex acts with six youths he supervised.

Albro Rodill Alexander, 27, entered the plea Wednesday in Carteret County Superior Court. Judge Charles B. Winberry Jr. of Rocky Mount postponed sentencing until a diagnostic evaluation could be completed by the state Department of Correction.

In a plea bargain accepted by Winberry, the maximum penalty of 90 years in prison is limited to 60 years.

Alexander has been held under $100,000 bond since August when he was arrested on 10 counts of the sex charge plus one charge of second-degree sexual offense. The other charges were dismissed Wednesday.

District Attorney W. David McFadyen said the charges stemmed from incidents at Camp E-Ma-Henwu near Newport. He told the judge that while a counselor, Alexander had engaged in sex acts with six male campers, ages 12 to 15.

The incidents involved the use of alcohol and possibly other drugs, McFadyen said.

Alexander, who had worked at the camp for three years, was dismissed in June when he was accused of giving campers beer and cigarettes, state officials said.

Researchers Claim Music Videos Stressing Sex, Violence And Race

By F. ALAN BOYCE
Associated Press Writer

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — While testimony before a U.S. Senate panel has created growing concerns about the effects of television violence on children, researchers are finding violence, sex and stereotypes pervade new and popular music videos.

"If you're a non-white in video, you're there to blow someone up or to be blown up, basically," said Barry Sherman, assistant professor in the school of journalism at the University of Georgia in Athens.

Jane Brown, director of the Center for Research in Journalism and Mass Communications at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, said videos appear to concentrate depictions of sex and violence in three-to-four minute bursts while reinforcing stereotypes about minorities and women.

"What I found most intriguing was that men are shown in social interactions — talking, dancing, whatever — and getting a reaction. The female leads, on the other hand, look at other people but don't get responded to. So it's a real subtle kind of thing where the woman doesn't have as much power in a social relationship," she said.

Thomas Radecki, president of the National Coalition Against Television Violence, said his group has monitored more than 800 videos and that nearly half had violent content.

"Thirty-nine percent contained explicit violence and another 9 percent had strong suggestions of violence," he said.

Radecki said about 5 percent "teach positive human messages" and 2 percent feature violence "used in a manner that would teach a person the reality of violence and the tragedy of violence."

The research is underscored by recent testimony before a Senate Judiciary Committee panel on juvenile justice linking TV violence with aggression in children.

Ms. Brown based her findings on 112 videos from Music Television and the Black Entertainment Network that had "at least some concept element to them" as opposed to simply showing a band performing.

She analyzed only the behavior of primary characters. Since some similar studies of prime-time TV examined the actions of all characters, "we're probably underestimating what's going on," Ms. Brown added.

Sherman, who worked with Georgia journalism professor Joseph R. Dominick on a study of 166 concept videos presented to the Speech Communication Association in Chicago, said it is not certain whether videos are more violent than prime-time television because of differences in presentation and context.

"Perhaps there is not more violence than prime-time television, but certainly there is more male-female or sexual violence," he said. "About 43 percent of the violence occurred in a sexual content. And a fair number of the videos did contain actually sadistic violence."

Sherman said violence occurs in 56.6 percent of concept videos and that older adults were twice as likely to be portrayed as aggressors than as victims.

Family Is Keeping Up Tradition

LOWES, Ky. (AP) — The Lowe family has been in the funeral blsiness in this town of 130 souls for four generations, and 78-year-old Roy Lowe is keeping up the tradition, burying the descendats of settlers buried by his great-grandfather.

He grumbles — "People don't hardly die anymore" — but gives no thought to retirement. And he's seen his daughter and granddaughter take up the business.

"My granddaughter was one of the first women to graduate from the embalming school in New Albany," he said. "They didn't used to have women in the business."

When Lowe was a child, his father sold pine caskets from the back of his general store. "He'd ask the people what color they wanted — white or black. There weren't no other colors."

When someone died, the family would measure the casket using a stick cut to the length of the body.

"They all had tape measures, but they wouldn't use them," he said. "They'd always go cut a stick. I'd see two or three men coming up to the store carrying a stick and I'd say, 'Daddy, somebody's dead.'"

That had changed by the time Lowe entered the business, but the preparation of the dead for funerals was still commonly done at home.

Lowe introduced embalming in 1926, and built the town's first funeral home in 1940. "It was a little place not big enough to whip a cat in," he said.

Some rural communities viewed the new methods with apprehension, but not the people of Lowes.

"They were tickled to death by it," he said. "It made everything so much easier on the family."

Lowe used to carry bodies from houses to the cemetery in a horse-drawn hearse built in 1890, but traded it in for a motorized model in 1928. He still keeps the horse-drawn vehicle in a nearby barn, and old-timers regularly ask if he would haul it out for their funerals.

"It's got to be pulled by horses, and nobody's got the time now to follow behind that thing. I remember you'd spend four or five hours just getting from somebody's house to the churchyard in that thing."

Lowe has kept a record of every person he's buried, but has no idea how many names are in the thick notebooks piled around his office.

"It's up into the thousands, all right," he said.

His funeral home used to handle hundreds of services a year, in the time when influenza and pneumonia were lethal diseases. Now, it's about 60 funerals a year.

"So many people used to die young that to be 40 was to be an old man," he said. "Now, most teen-agers have never seen a dead person."

His daughter, Judy Milner, owns the Milner Funeral Home in Bardwell with her husband, Billy. Lowe's granddaughter, Andrea Orr, runs the Milner Funeral Home in Wickliffe with her husband, Randy.

Mrs. Orr, 25, said her parents thought the family business had come to an end after they had four daughters.

"But my husband got interested in it and we decided to try it," she said. "So far as I know, I'm the only lady embalmer in western Kentucky."

The bidding:

South	West	North	East

2 NT	Pass	3 NT	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Queen of ♡.

Nines and tens don't have an assigned value in the point count. However, that doesn't mean you should overlook them in either the bidding or the play. Consider this hand.

North risked losing a 4-4 heart fit when he chose to show his better spade suit at his first turn — modern theory is to bid four-card suits up the line regardless of quality. He had as little as the law allows for his raise to three no trump.

West led the top of his heart sequence, and declarer did not like his chances. Even if the club finesse were to succeed, he would still need two diamond tricks for his contract.

The normal way to play this combination is to lead twice toward the king-queen, but there was only one entry in dummy and that was needed for the club finesse.

Fortunately, dummy's ten of diamonds provided an alternative. If West held the jack of diamonds, declarer could set up two tricks in the suit by force by simply leading a low diamond up to the ten. So declarer won the king of hearts and led a diamond. West was a dead duck — whether he rose with the jack of diamonds or not, declarer was sure to get two tricks in the suit. And since the club king was onside and the defenders could not get more than two tricks each in hearts and diamonds, nine tricks became a cinch.

There is another, equally common, situation for this type of play. Suppose that declarer has A-Q-x-x in a suit and dummy J-x-x, and declarer needs three tricks from the suit. If he runs the jack, he can make three tricks only if the suit divides 3-3 (East, of course, covers the jack if he has the king). But he can guarantee three tricks whenever the suit breaks 3-3 or when West has the singleton or doubleton king by simply leading low toward the knave.

Officer Elected

BONN, West Germany (AP) — A close adviser to Chancellor Helmut Kohl has been elected the president of Parliament to replace Rainer Barzel, who resigned in a widening corruption scandal that has shaken the government.

Philipp Jenninger, a 52-year-old Christian Democrat, was elected by a secret-ballot vote of 340-105.

Lawyers Scarce In Tiny Town

By MARYNELLE HARDEE
Associated Press Writer

BRISTOL, Fla. (AP) — There are signs for fishing bait and power tools. There are signs for grouper dinners and waterbeds.

But there are no lawyers' shingles hanging along the main street of this blink-and-you-miss-it Panhandle town, the government seat for what is apparently the only Florida county without a single practicing lawyer.

The Florida Bar, which has about 35,000 members, lists one lawyer in Liberty County, and Circuit Court Clerk Duncan Hosford says he can name a second.

But one of the two practices in Blountstown, just across the Apalachicola River in Calhoun County, and the other has an office in Quincy, about 25 miles north of Bristol in Gadsden County. Bristol itself is about 50 miles west of Tallahassee.

"I don't think I could live off the litigation in Liberty County," Hal Davis, the lawyer in Quincy, said. "You know, there are two sides to every lawsuit and by the time a lawyer comes down and represents one side for a while, he doesn't have any customers left. A lot of people take lawsuits seriously."

Liberty's 4,353 residents form a tightly knit community where people take an active interest in their neighbors' problems, agreed Mary Revell, a correctional officer and secretary to the sheriff, who is her distant relative by marriage.

"There are hundreds of thousands of places where you can be if you like that impersonal way of living," she said. "Some people call it nosy, but we call it concerned."

"We have a slow way of living here and you either love it or you hate it," she said. "There's no middle ground."

Bristol, which has one traffic light, is a town of frame houses with front porches; horses graze inside the city limits. The modest, red-brick courthouse, which was built in 1942 and houses all the county offices, is its most imposing structure.

Bristol, which only recently acquired a doctor, a dentist and a bank, would welcome lawyers and other professionals, Mrs. Revell said. But she acknowledged that a local attorney might find time hanging heavy on his hands.

People in Liberty County, Mrs. Revell said, go to Blountstown or Quincy for such legal matters as wills and divorces. Major crimes are rare. When the occasional midnight arrest calls for a lawyer, "it isn't anything that couldn't hold until one (lawyer) gets over here," she added.

During the summer, speeding tourists heading for Gulf of Mexico beaches fill the county court docket with traffic arrests.

The county jail, on the second floor of the sheriff's department, can hold 18 prisoners but hasn't been full in recent memory, Mrs. Revell said.

Glenn Summers, the lone county judge, holds court once a month. A circuit judge travels to Bristol from neighboring Wakulla County whenever the caseload warrants a trip.

Summers ran a rest home in St. Petersburg before donning his judge's robe, Hosford said.

"He did practice law once upon a time, but that was 20 years ago so it didn't count for anything when he got elected," Hosford said.

A Tallahassee attorney once set up shop in Bristol to campaign for a judicial post, but packed his briefcase and went home after losing the race in 1980, said County Court Clerk Debbie Sanders.

Lawyer E.E. Callaway, whose portrait hangs in the courthouse lobby, died several years ago after retiring to Bristol and practicing part time from an office in his home, Mrs. Revell said.

However, Hosford predicts that Liberty County won't remain lawyerless for long.

"We get along just fine without lawyers, but business is increasing up here. Whenever there's business, there's lawyers. We'll have them soon enough," he said.

Meanwhile, Liberty isn't the only county in Florida with a dearth of lawyers. Glades and Lafayette counties each have only two resident members of the state bar, while Baker and Dixie counties boast three apiece, according to the organization's records.

In contrast, Dade County in South Florida has more lawyers — 7,228 members in good standing — than any other county in Florida.

Catholic Group Praises Economy

NEW YORK (AP) — A group of influential Roman Catholic conservatives has led off a debate on the morality of the U.S. economy, calling the free enterprise system the best ever devised and criticizing poverty programs.

The 120-page statement was issued Tuesday by the Lay Commission on Catholic Social Teaching and the U.S. Economy. U.S. Catholic bishops on Sunday are to release a draft of a potentially controversial letter on the economy.

The free enterprise system has "unloosed upon this earth an unprecedented surge of creativity, invention and productivity," said the statement by the 29-member commission headed by former Treasury Secretary William E. Simon.

"The most powerful economic ideas of our time are the roles of incentives, enterprise, invention and profit," it said. "In the real world, attacks on profit injure ... most of all the poor, the bettering of whose condition depends on wisely used profit...

"If one is talking of systems, profit systems demonstrably raise the standards of living of the many far better than any other systems."

The group acknowledges "imperfections, vices and structural deficiencies" in the system, but is not specific in its criticisms, as the bishops' teaching letter is expected to be.

The commission was formed in March by the American Catholic Committee, an unofficial, conservative group that had been critical of the bishops' pastoral letter condemning the arms race and some nuclear plants.

Other members of the group include former Secretary of State Alexander Haig, former Ambassador Clare Boothe Luce and corporate executives, including J. Peter Grace of W.R. Grace & Co.

The bishops' forthcoming letter spurred the lay group to declare its own views, which it insists are meant to contribute toward, rather than contradict the bishops' writings.

Election Leaves Unclear Issues Dealing With Jobs

By JOHN CUNNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — The voting might be over but the issues remain. Little that occurred Tuesday has had any immediate impact on them, and there continues to be a question of whether they will be dealt with effectively.

Among the issues are three that directly affect each individual and which, for reasons that few will agree on, have persisted in spite of promises to deal with them.

There is the issue of employment, or unemployment.

Since the onset of the economic recovery total civilian employment has risen by 6.5 million workers, a remarkable figure until it is dissected.

Jane Norwood, commissioner of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, points out that in spite of job creations only 70 percent of the manufacturing jobs lost during the recession have been recovered.

Her breakdown shows that by October the fabricated metals industry had regained only 56 percent of the jobs lost in the recession, and the machinery industry had regained only 45 percent.

There are problems in other job areas too. The unemployment rate for teen-agers has remained in the 18 percent to 20 percent range all year, and the 15.4 percent jobless rate for blacks has changed little since spring.

That is, in spite of the big numbers the same old jobless problems remain. The old jobs are shrinking. The new jobs are in trades and services, many of which are in areas removed geographically from the deep pockets of unemployment, and many also are beyond the qualifications of the jobless.

In short, the economy is creating lots of jobs — 1.3 million for adult women and 1.1 million for adult men over the past year — but the distribution pattern is leaving serious social, geographic and economic problems.

The growth of government also remains an unresolved issue in spite of efforts by the nation's most powerful citizen. That is, a president who dedicated his presidency to the task but failed to accomplish it in four years.

Federal government outlays and receipts as a percent of gross national product — the total of all goods and services produced — are growing still. In 1980 the federal government's percentage was at a peactime record of 22.4.

Only during World War II, when the percentage reached 48.9 in 1944, was that level exceeded — until the Reagan administration.

In fiscal 1981 the percentage rose to 22.8, and then to 23.8 in 1982. It rose again to 24.7 percent in fiscal 1983, and remained near or exceeded that percentage in the latest fiscal year.

It evokes the question of whether Americans really want to reduce the role of government. Many people say they do, but they appear to remain as reluctant as ever to support specific cuts when the cuts apply to them.

What will be done about medical costs?

It is true that some costs haven't been rising as swiftly as before. But the fact remains that without third-party intevention in the form of insurance or outright financial assistance millions cannot afford payments.

Cutting medical costs remains as, or more, difficult than cutting the federal budget. In some instances it involves a hospital doing without life-saving technology. It involves the decision of who is to live, who to die.

While some headway has been made on the issues, a survey made recently by Medical Economics magazine showed physician fees rising at an annualized rate of 7.6 percent in the first seven months of 1984.

That percentage is about the same as that registered in 1983 and 1982, but it is still disappointing, since it follows an appeal by the American Medical Association for physicians to declare a one-year moratorium on increases.

Race On To Build Ceramics Engine

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States and Japan are in a race to produce the first engine made entirely of ceramics, says an American expert on the Far East.

Kyocera Corporation of Kyoto, the leader in Japanese research on ceramic engines, developed an all-ceramic diesel engine last year in cooperation with Isuzu Motors Ltd., but would not say when it may be marketable.

Kyocera also does a lot of work on ceramic electronic parts, and controls 70 percent of the world market for integrated circuits made of ceramic.

Ceramics, which is clay hardened by fire, no longer means ornamental pots formed on a potter's wheel.

Bighorn Sheep Pays A Visit

TROY, Mont. (AP) — A confused bighorn sheep smashed through a window into a home near here, settled in the basement for about four hours, and finally left by the back door only after encouragement by a wildlife expert.

The homeowner, Ed Bailey, said Tuesday that the ewe was one of two bighorns that stood outside his Rocky Mountain home, staring in the windows for several hours while he was watching Sunday afternoon football.

But the animals may have been staring in alarm at their own reflections because, without warning, the ewe charged at a long, narrow glass panel beside the front door, butting it three times before breaking it and leaping into the house, Bailey said.

He said the animal landed in a stairwell and continued into the basement, apparently dazed.

Bailey and his wife, Pat, themselves somewhat dazed, called the Lincoln County sheriff's office, which dispatched Jerry Brown, a biologist for the state Department of Fish, Wildlife and Parks.

When Brown arrived at the house on Angel Island in Bull Lake about three miles from Troy, he found the Baileys sitting quietly upstairs, trying not to upset the ewe, which by then was lying down.

The Baileys said that every time they tried to enter the basement, the ewe would stand up, and they were afraid it would ram through the basement glass doors.

Brown approached the ewe carefully, letting it sniff his hand.

Soviets Planning Irrigation Project

WASHINGTON (AP) — A plan by the Soviet Union for a massive irrigation project to open up millions of new acres for crops could reduce U.S. exports and raise fears that the world's environment might suffer, says an Agriculture Department report.

Involved is a Soviet think-tank proposal to divert rivers away from the Arctic Ocean to irrigate dry lands in Central Asia.

The report referred to a recent Communist Party Central Committee meeting in Moscow in which Soviet leaders outlined their nation's dependence on imports of foreign grain and called for more land to be reclaimed for farming.

President Konstantin U. Chernenko, the report said, "mirrored his government's agony of defeat in agriculture" when he presented proposals to guide Soviet food production through the year 2000. Grain, he said, is the key problem.

"American farmers are concerned about the impact Soviet success in growing more food could have on this nation's (U.S.) agricultural exports and world markets in general," the report said.

"One concern probably would be a cut in exports of U.S. farm products. However, exports of agricultural technology to Russia might result in a net gain for the United States."

The report filled the four-page issue of the latest Farm Paper Letter, which is published weekly by the department's office of information.

Clay Napier, editor of the publication, said Tuesday in a brief interview that the information in the report about the Soviet Union's agricultural problems, and its long-range plans to boost crop production was gleaned from published news stories, magazine articles and USDA reports.

The report said that some plans of the Soviets have raised environmental fears that cross national and economic lines.

Seeing Sound

An award-winning new invention uses a computer to "show" sounds to the hearing impaired. The device translates sound waves into visual patterns on a video screen. Sound travels at a little more than 700 miles an hour. Light waves travel much faster. At the speed of light, radio waves will carry a voice half way around the earth sooner than sound waves carry it to the back of the room in which it originated. Experts say hearing reaches its peak of keenness at age 10.

Dairy Products Showing Decline

WASHINGTON (AP) — The latest government figures show that milk production cutbacks have affected the output of manufactured dairy products, which the Agriculture Department buys to prop up milk prices paid to farmers.

During the dairy marketing year that ended on Sept. 30 — which is also the government's fiscal year — milk production totaled 137.4 billion pounds, a decline of 1.6 billion pounds or about 1.2 percent below the record level of 139 billion pounds in 1982-83.

The department's Commodity Credit Corp., which operates the milk support program, said this week in a monthly report that its purchases of butter, cheese and non-fat dry milk were down sharply.

Under the program, CCC buys surplus dairy items to beef up the price of milk that dealers pay farmers. The purchases are called "removals" and build up rapidly when dairy farmers produce more milk than the market can absorb.

During the year, net purchases equalled 10.2 billion pounds of milk, representing 7.6 percent of total milk sold by farmers.

New Yen Can Cut Expenses

TOKYO (AP) — Smaller is better — at least in the case of the Japanese yen.

New bills, up to 17 percent smaller than their predecessors, are expected to save printing costs for the government, foil counterfeiters and help wallet sales.

In addition, the lower left-hand corners of the new bills have raised portions for easy identification by the blind.

Officials of the Bank of Japan, the country's central bank, and the Finance Ministry spent five years studying what size the new bills should be and whose pictures they should bear.

The Bank of Japan spent $247 million to print 3.6 billion new notes with a face value totaling $91 billion, according to Hitoshi Katayama, spokesman for the bank.

The new size was intended to help economize on printing costs and make the notes easier to handle, Katayama said.

"The reduction in size kind of makes me think the value declined too. And now that the prince is replaced by a commoner...," one banker commented. "But I'll get used to it."

He referred to Prince Shotoku, the proclaimer of the nation's first constitution, whose face had appeared on the 10,000-yen ($41) bill since 1946 and had become a symbol of money in Japan.

The prince was replaced by Yukichi Fukuzawa, an educator who founded the prestigious Keio University and advocated Japan's Westernization.

Soseki Natsume, one of Japan's favorite novelists, appears on the new 1,000-yen ($4) bill and Inazo Nitobe, the first president of Tokyo Women's Christian University, appears on the new 5,000-yen ($21) note.

Both were educated abroad, and are seen as figures who promoted the internationalization of Japan.

There was talk about featuring a woman on some of the new bills, Katayama said, but none was seen as greatly influencing culture or internationalization.

The old 10,000-yen note measured 6.8 by 3.3 inches and was somewhat too big for wallets designed for American dollars measuring 6.2 by 2.6 inches.

The new 10,000-yen bill is slightly bigger than a dollar at 6.3 by 3 inches.

The reduced size of bills should stimulate about a 20 percent increase in the production and sales of wallets, estimated Hiroshi Ishii, an official of the National Purses Wholesalers Federation.

"If the notes were enlarged, that would be even better news, since everyone would have to buy a new wallet," he said.

Meanwhile, people still will have to deal with the larger old bills for about another year as the new ones gradually replace the old, the Bank of Japan estimated after the new bills' debut on Nov. 1.

This means problems both for people such as bank tellers and for the companies that make cash dispensing and vending machines.

"Rather than purchasing new machines, owners asked us to simply alter their existing ones so they would accept the new notes," said Shori Sawatari, director-general of the Japan Vending Machine Manufacturers Association.

The Bank of Japan estimates that 260,000 machines were altered. Nearly 5 million vending machines, a total second only to the United States, are scattered throughout Japan, selling everything from beer to railroad tickets.

There has been confusion already.

One banker recounted: "My colleague paid a taxi driver yesterday with the new 1,000-yen bill, but the driver complained, mistaking it for a 500-yen note." Both are printed with blue ink.

The new series does not include a 500-yen denomination since the government now is minting 500-yen coins.

Katayama said advanced technology has ensured that the color tones of the new notes cannot be reproduced by photocopiers, making things tougher for counterfeiters.

The National Police Agency said it sent samples to the International Criminal Police Organization to help in the battle against counterfeiting.

Regardless of advantages, Akiko Nakano, a 24-year-old television personality, predicts the bill won't be popular among young women.

"Its tone is rather dark, and it's not modern-looking. I wish it were more fashionable," she said.

No Party Lines

BRASILIA, Brazil (AP) — The Superior Electoral Court has ruled that delegates who will choose the next president of Brazil are not bound to vote according to party lines — a move that highly favors the opposition candidate.

The court, in a decision Tuesday night, said, "There is no existing constitutional rule that restricts the free voting of Congress and state representatives to the electoral college."

Spy Charges

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — A new group of Iranian Communist Party, or Tudeh, members are to go on trial Nov. 12 on charges of spying for the Soviet Union, the official Iranian news agency IRNA reported.

The agency, monitored in Nicosia, said the announcement was made by Iran's Islamic revolutionary prosecutor. It did not give any names, but said several Tudeh leaders, including party Secretary-General Nureddin Kianouri, party ideologue Ehsan Tabari and Mohammad Amuie — are still in detention.

Top Tudeh leaders were arrested in February 1983. An additional 1,000 members of the rank-and-file were rounded up in the following weeks.

Thousands Die In Arid Africa

By JAMES R. PEIPERT
Associated Press Writer

MEKELLE, Ethiopia (AP) — Hagass Geberzair, a dignified man despite his tattered shawl and gaunt face, stood with his family and explained what brought him to a makeshift hillside camp near an emergency feeding center.

"I had no food," Hagass, 45, said simply, speaking in Amharic through an interpreter. His wife, Nigisty Berha, and their six children looked on.

Two years in a row, Hagass' crops of barley and wheat failed to sprout for lack of rain. Two months ago he set out with his family from his small farm at Deberamara on a two-day walk to Mekelle, capital of Tigre province.

He and his family stood on the side of a parched hillside that ran down to a dry streambed, hoping for a new grain handout in the next few days.

Though her age was given as 30, the creases in his wife's face made her look more like 55.

Thousands of others in similar predicaments were gathered nearby, squatting or lying on the ground in swaths of white muslin, hoping to get food from the feeding stations at Mekelle.

Tesfay Kidane, supervisor in Mekelle for the government's Relief and Rehabilitation Commission, estimated that 36,000 people were gathered at the town and that 50 had been dying daily for the past six months.

That would mean a death toll of 9,000 at Mekelle alone, and it is only one of many places in this east African nation that have been ravaged by drought. A Western diplomat involved with an international relief effort has predicted 900,000 Ethiopians will die by the end of this year.

"They came here with nothing — no clothes, no food, no animals," Tesfay said of the influx that arrived in Mekelle — a fraction of the 6 million Ethiopians estimated by the government to be affected by the famine.

Dagne Gurmu, chief of operations for the government relief commission in Tigre, said at least 400 refugees arrive at Mekelle every day.

Some of the estimated 4,000 people who live in the hillside camp, many of whom go into Mekelle to beg during the day, have been here for as long as three months. Some trekked 90 miles to get here.

Hagus Massa, a nurse who operates a clinic at the camp, said he treats an average of 150 people per day for malnutrition, dehydration, pneumonia and measles.

Throughout the day at a nearby Ethiopian Orthodox, or Coptic, church, there are funeral services. The local cemetery is said to be full.

Relief officials say people who reached feeding centers from Ethiopia's remote mountains and vast deserts are the hardy ones. There is no way of counting how many people died along the way, they said.

Some hope has been raised at Mekelle in recent days because of an airlift of food by countries such as Britain, the United States and the Soviet Union.

One feeding center run by the International Red Cross feeds about 600 children a diet of milk, bread, rice, edible oils and high-protein biscuits. They were selected for special treatment because their malnourishment had reached a critical stage.

Among the visitors to Mekelle was Cardinal Basil Hume, archbishop of Westminster and spiritual leader of 4.7 million Roman Catholics in England and Wales.

Hume was near tears as he visited feeding centers and a clinic run by sisters of the Daughters of Charity. While the prelate was at the clinic, two children died.

"When you have seen the misery and sadness in people's eyes and the sores on such young children, what can you say?" asked Hume. "It's one thing to see it on the television screen, but to look into the eyes of a child who is hungry is a totally different experience."

STARVATION — A grandmother sits with a young child in the village of Rig Rig, Mao, in Northern Chad. Many thousands of people such as them are moving around in Africa in a desperate search for food. It is estmiated that 200,000 people have been displaced by the long drought, and several thousand have died. (AP Laserphoto)
