VOA Sets Greenville Expansion

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

A spokesman for the Voice of America says that installation of four new 500,000 watt transmitters at sites near Greenville is planned as the first phase of a modernization program for VOA facilities around the world.

Dr. Robert Frese, VOA's director of engineering, said in Washington the new transmitters will replace four 50kw transmitters now in use — two at site A and two at site B.

Although negotiations on price are still under way with suppliers, Frese said transmitters similar to the ones to be installed at Greenville sell for about $3 million each.

The Greenville facilities — a receiving station on 644 acres west of the city on Secondary Road 1212, and transmitting sites A, on 2,821 acres at Leggetts Crossroads in Beaufort County, and B, on 2715 acres near Black Jack — began operations in 1963. Total cost of the three sites was $23.34 million.

Frese said the new transmitters will be the first major improvement at the transmitting sites since they began operations.

Each of the two transmitting stations is now equipped with 11 short wave transmitters — three 500kw transmitters (each consists of two 250kw units operated in tandem), three 250kw transmitters, three 50kw units, and two 40kw transmitters — with a combined output of nearly 2.5 million watts for each of the two sites.

The 500kw transmitters are 10 times as powerful as the largest allowed for commercial AM radio stations and five times as powerful as the largest FM stations in the U.S.

According to Frese, contracts for the new transmitters are expected to be awarded in January. He said it would take about 14 months for the units to be delivered, installed and operating.

The installation of the new units at Greenville will give VOA workers "hands-on experience with the latest, state-of-the-art" transmitters before other such units are purchased under a "future quantity buy."

Frese said 100 new 500kw transmitters are expected to be installed "world-wide" under the modernization program over the next "five or six years," including the replacement of the six older 500kw units at Greenville.

Other work at Greenville, before the modernization program ends, will include the installation of new switching equipment, new antennas, and a computer system which will allow VOA employees in Washington to monitor Greenville transmitters and antennas and allow switching of transmitters and antennas from Washington in emergency situations.

Frese said that in addition to the new equipment, "manpower planning" has resulted in the allocation of an additional "10 spaces at Greenville" for a continuing program, set to begin in January, to train new employees for assignment at VOA facilities around the world. He said the training would include "classroom and on-the-job training ... to fully qualify them to work on their own."

There are "about 80 spaces" at Greenville, mostly technicians to keep the transmitters running, Frese said. However, the Greenville facility is "about 20 people short" at the present time and has openings for qualified electronic technicians.

Frese said the Greenville transmitters beam VOA programs primarily to Central and South America, although the sites are capable of broadcasting to eastern Europe, the Mediterranean and Africa.

In addition to VOA programs, the Greenville facility transmits programing for Armed Forces Radio, the Organization of American States and the United Nations.

In addition to Greenville, VOA has sites at Bethany, Ohio, Delano and Dixon, Calif. and at Marathon, Fla., although the VOA will give up the Florida site to another agency in January, according to Frese.

Overseas stations include sites in Thailand, SirLank, Liberia, Botswana, Germany, the Philippines, Greece, Morocco, Antiqua (operated by the Department of Defense) and England (operated by the British Broadcasting System).

Panel Cites Huge Loss In Royalties For Government

WASHINGTON (AP) — A House committee says the federal government could be losing millions of dollars in minerals royalty payments because the program to collect and account for the money is plagued by inefficiency, inadequate management and general ineffectiveness.

A report released Saturday by the Interior and Insular Affairs Committee outlines 19 problem areas in the program, ranging from failure to collect interest owed the government for late payments to poor communications with states and Indian tribes.

Other problems included royalty payments being unaccounted for, no on-site production verification and inadequate planning for equipment requirements.

The states receive 50 percent of the collected royalties for oil and gas removed from federal land within their borders, with the exception of Alaska, which receives 90 percent.

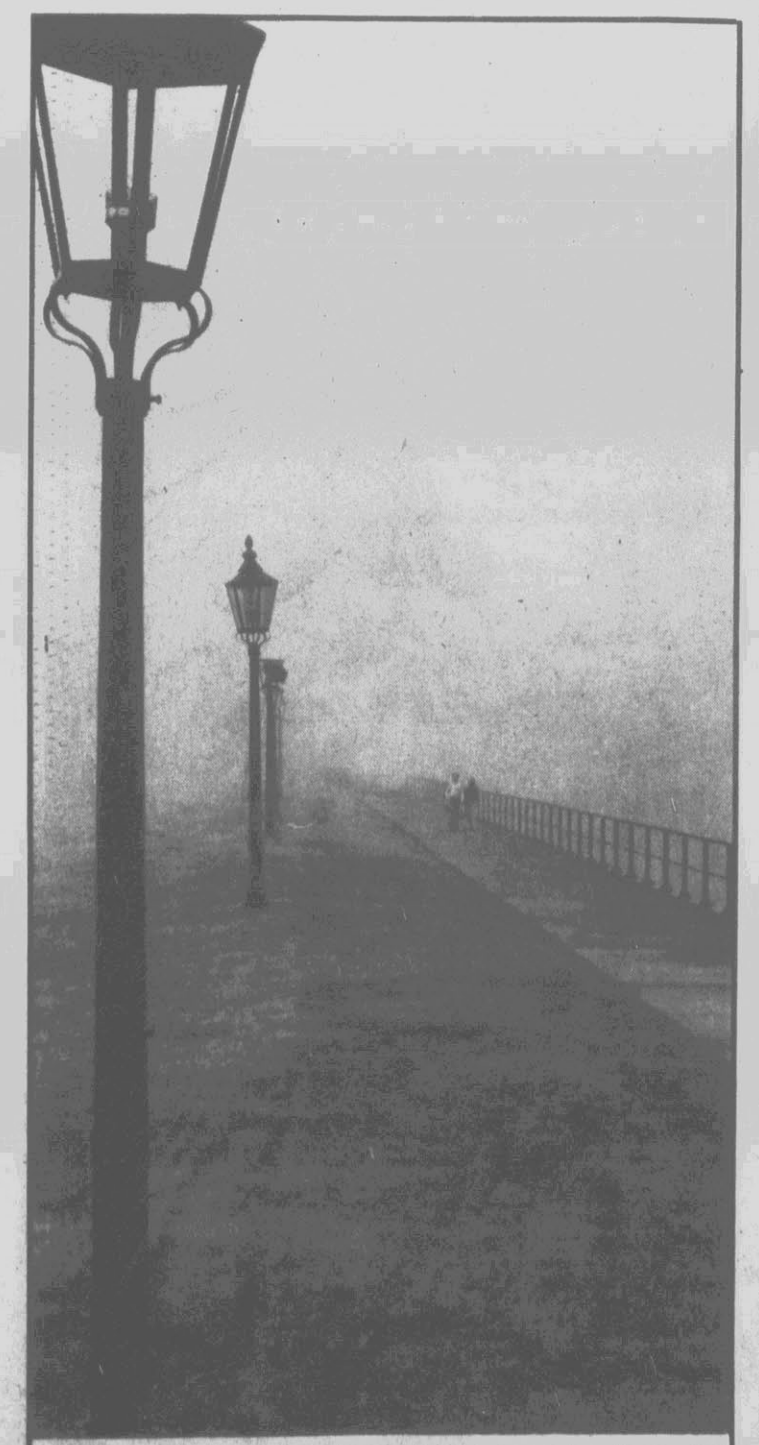

The Indian tribes and individual allottees receive all collected royalties on gas, oil and minerals removed from their lands. Collections for royalties, rents, and bonuses totaled nearly $11.5 billion during 1983.

Rep. Morris K. Udall, D-Ariz., chairman of the committee, said he ordered the report because of many complaints about mismanagement of the program. He said the document was compiled by a bipartisan task force of

"PEA SOUP" — Heavy fog and early morning seem to have become fast companions in recent weeks. Most mornings the fog has lifted to let an unusually warm December sun shine through. Schroeder's Stroke Likely Caused By Artificial Heart

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — The stroke suffered by artificial heart recipient William J. Schroeder was caused by a blood clot that probably formed in or around the plastic pump and moved to his head, his surgeon said Saturday.

Schroeder, 52, who is entering his fourth week of life with the artificial heart, was frustrated with the pace of his recovery from Thursday's stroke, a process that's "like being on a roller coaster," said Dr. William C. DeVries, who implanted the device in Schroeder's chest.

"I would say there's probably about a 95 percent chance that it (the clot) came from the device, the valves, or his natural atrium (heart chamber)," although test results have not determined the cause, DeVries said at a news conference at Humana Hospital Audubon.

He also said the clot could have formed in surrounding tissues and migrated to a blood vessel in his head, DeVries said.

But the doctor said he was "still optimistic" about Schroeder's chances with the artificial heart.

"I think he can do well. I think he can get out of here and get out of the hospital and live a good life," DeVries said.

Schroeder was "doing very, very well" for a stroke victim, but "he is still in bed, he's bedridden, if you wanted to get him up in a chair you would have to lift him," he said.

"All in all he appears like a normal patient who had a stroke," he said.

Despite the liklihood that the stroke was caused by a clot "from the device, the valves, or his natural atrium (heart chamber)," there are other possibilities, DeVries said.

He said it was normal for a stroke victim to be irritated about his condition. "He's frustrated with the fact that he can't get up and move around and do what he was doing," DeVries said.

Computer Failure

A computer failure at the local Carolina Telephone and Telegraph office caused temporary losses of telephone service throughout Pitt County, CT&T Commerical Manager Dick Flye said Saturday.

Flye said the computer breakdown did not stop all telephone activity, but did limit calls over an hour-and-a-half afternoon period within the area. "Each 752 customer could call another 752 customer and 758 customers could call other 758 customers, but those people could not make calls to other exchanges," Flye said. He added that some incoming long-distance calls were also blocked.

Computer problems of this nature, Flye said, are infrequent.

'Hot' Toys Difficult To Find

By JANE WELBORN
Reflector Staff Writer

When Mary sits on Santa's lap to tell him what presents she wants this Christmas, she will most likely mention a Cabbage Patch doll. And John will probably tell the bearded man in red that he has been a good boy and deserves a Transformer or a Masters of the Universe action figure.

These toys are three of the hottest selling items in the Greenville area this Christmas season. A check with local toy departments found that these playthings are sold out at many of the stores.

Once again this year, Cabbage Patch dolls are sought-after gifts. The yarn-haired cloth dolls made by Coleco, each one supposedly different and given an originial name, are selling as fast as toy stores receive shipments of them.

"Cabbage Patch dolls are the biggest sellers, when we can get them," said Jim Ensor, a clerk at K and K Toys at The Plaza mall. "We were expecting Cabbage Patch dolls to be big again this year because the demand was never satisfied last year. We just can't get enough of them in."

Ensor said K and K Toys does not expect to have any more of the dolls until after Christmas.

Roses' toy department manager Lisa Mercer said her store is sold out of the dolls as well. "We got about 60 Cabbage Patch dolls in and we decided to put out half one day and half the next," she related. "The first day, we opened the store at 9:30 and by (9:50) they were all gone. The second day word must have gotten around, because they sold out in five minutes."

"If we put out 200 Cabbage Patch dolls, they would be gone in 15 minutes," said Tom Buonocore, assistant manager at Nichols. He said he has seen people fight to purchase one of the dolls, which sell for $34.96 at Nichols when they are in stock.

"People get vicious and they will fight for these dolls," Buonocore said. "I saw a man take a doll from

Study Shows 1 In 5 Children Need Emergency Aid For Injuries Yearly

BOSTON (AP) — At least one in every five children is taken to a hospital each year for treatment of injuries suffered in bicycle spills, kitchen burns and other accidental tumbles and mishaps, a new study indicates.

The research, described as the largest of its kind ever conducted, surveyed all emergency room visits by youngsters in 14 Massachusetts communities.

The "impact of injuries is staggering" when the findings are used to calculate the number of mishaps on a statewide basis, the study said. The researchers estimated that Massachusetts' 1.7 million children and teen-agers can be expected to suffer 377,000 injuries requiring hospital treatment annually.

"The number is not surprising to people who are in the field, but I'm sure it would be a surprise to the average public," said Susan S. Gallagher of the state Department of Public Health. "The things that get the attention are child abuse and lost children. They are important, but this is a much larger problem."

The study, directed by Ms. Gallagher, was published in the December issue of the American Journal of Public Health.

Ms. Gallagher said the kinds of injuries that befall youngsters probably vary from place to place, depending in part on whether they live in urban or rural areas.

In the communities studied, the researchers found that falls — often down stairs — were the most common accidents, followed by sports injuries, being struck by an object and being cut or jabbed by instruments or machinery.

Infants and older teen-agers are the most injury prone, and boys have more mishaps than girls.

The statistics were based on a survey of all emergency room visits over one year at 23 hospitals in 14 cities and towns around Massachusetts, chosen to represent rural and urban areas where there were 87,022 children ranging up to age 19. The researchers found that 2,239 of every 10,000 youngsters needed hospital treatment for injuries.

Ms. Gallagher said the findings provide a glimpse of the magnitude of the childhood injury problem nationwide, although the actual incidence of these accidents is probably higher.

"It's an understatement of the problem," she said. "We know we missed some cases."

Visits to private doctors' offices, dentists and health maintenance organizations were not included, and the researchers also didn't include dog bites in their figures.

Among their findings:

—One of every 12 children under age 6 required treatment for a fall. Stairs, furniture, playground equipment and baby carriages were usually involved.

—Burns, though relatively rare, were most frequent among the pre-schoolers. Most happened in the kitchen and resulted from scalds or contact with hot stoves, radiators and irons.

—More than one of every 80 elementary school children required treatment for a bicycle accident.

—One of every 14 teen-agers was treated for a sports injury. The largest number of sports-related injuries resulted from football, followed by basketball, roller skating and baseball.

—One of every 50 teen-agers was hurt while riding in a motor vehicle. These accidents accounted for most of the serious head injuries.

Ms. Gallagher said she hoped the figures will encourage efforts to improve childhood safety.

"People think these things aren't going to happen to them, and there's no way to prevent them when, indeed, we feel there are in a lot of cases," she said.

the committee's staff, in conjunction with the General Accounting Office and an Interior Department consultant on the issue.

Udall praised Interior Secretary William Clark for his commitment and effort to correct longstanding problems within the royalty management program, which Udall said have persisted through several administrations.

"We are aware we have considerable problems in the royalty management area and we are spending a great deal of time and effort to improve the situation," said Harmon Kallman, an Interior Department spokesman.

"Over the past 12 months, the committee has received an increasing number of complaints and concerns expressed by governors of Western oil-producing states, state auditors, state attorneys general representatives, Indian tribes, industry, and Department of Interior personnel regarding the failure of the department's mineral management service to design, develop and properly manage the federal government's minerals royalty management program," the report said.

"In general, poor project management of the design, development, and implementation effort has resulted in an overly complex system that is not working well, and does not adequately satisfy the information needs of either internal or external users after the expenditure of substantial funds," it said.

"There have been and still are, therefore, numerous problems within the royalty and management program which have adversely affected the Department of the Interior's ability to manage efficiently and effectively the collection and accounting of federal mineral royalties."

a women, and she punched him right in the face."

He said he doubts Nichols will receive another shipment of Cabbage Patch dolls before Christmas.

The management at K-Mart discount store decided to help the people who aren't heavyweight boxers purchase the sought-after dolls.

"Since there has been a mad rush and people have been getting hurt, people (who want to buy a Cabbage Patch doll) put their names in a box and we pick one name per hour and contact that person so he can buy a doll," said Kenny Hyman, a clerk in the K-Mart toy department. "We haven't put the dolls on the shelves. The only way you can buy one is to have your name picked."

Transformers, described by one clerk as "little trucks, cars or airplanes that change into a robot and back again with a few twists," are hard to find in the Greenville area. Most stores reported that these robot figures by Hasbro, as well as the similar Gobots made by Tonka, are sold out. Prices for the Transformers ranged from $10 to $40, depending on the type of figure.

Ms. Mercer said Roses does not have any Transformers in stock. "We really weren't expecting them to sell as well as they did," she said. K-Mart also is attempting to get some more Transformers, and Nichols received a shipment this week.

Masters of the Universe action figures, modeled after the Saturday morning cartoon characters, are in demand in this area as well, clerks reported. The science fiction action figures made by Mattel are sold out in most stores, as are the accessories, such as Castle Grayskull and Snake Mountain.

Several perennial favorites are popular gifts this year. Easy-Bake Ovens are selling well at K and K Toys, as well as G.I. Joe action dolls. Bicycles were reported as selling well at local stores.

Local stores stocked up on Trivial Pursuit board games and Michael Jackson dolls, but these two items — which were expected to sell well this Christmas season — are not as popular as had been anticipated.

Marrow Transplant Patient Recovers

BALTIMORE (AP) — An 11-year-old girl who received a rare bone marrow transplant from an unrelated Englishwoman who just wanted "to care and help" was in good spirits Saturday as she recovered from the 6½-hour procedure, John Hopkins Hospital said.

Nicole Cerchio, of Wilmington, Del., was in satisfactory condition and experiencing no adverse effects from the procedure performed Friday in what doctors said was a last-ditch effort to the life of the aplastic anemia victim.

The disease is an unexplained failure of bone marrow to produce blood-clotting platelet cells, infection-fighting white blood cells and oxygen-carrying red blood cells.Without these cells a patient can suffer uncontrolled bleeding and infection. Without treatment, the condition quickly results in death.

"She had a restful night," hospital spokeswoman Elaine Freeman said Saturday afternoon while Nicole watched television, played games and visited with her sister Kirsten and parents, Marjorie and Nicholas Cerchio.

Doctors said it would be two weeks before they know if Nicole's transplant succeeded and three months before they could be satisfied the marrow would continue working.

The marrow donor, 41-year-old Londoner Carole Lohmann, was released from the hospital Saturday, Ms. Freeman said. Mrs. Lohmann underwent a two-hour operation Friday to withdraw two pints of blood and marrow from the center of her pelvis.

She stopped by Nicole's room before leaving, giving the girl a picture of her family in Britain.

"If my child was that ill, I would like someone to care and help them," Mrs. Lohmann had said, explaining why she volunteered to fly to Baltimore for the operation.

Mrs. Lohmann, mother of two daughters, said she had waited six years for the opportunity to be a marrow donor. Her tissue had been typed six years ago and recorded with on a British registry.

A perfect match could not be found for Nicole, so doctors decided to try what is called a one-antigen mismatch. Since there is no aplastic anemia donor registry in this country, doctors turned to Britain for help.

There have only been seven to 10 transplants in the world from people who were not relatives of aplastic anemia patients, said Dr. Robert Stuart, one of two physicians handling Nicole's transfusion. Half or more of the recipients are still alive, he said.

Mrs. Lohmann, who planned to fly home to London on Sunday or Monday, said she was suffering mild muscle aches, "like the day after starting an exercise class."

– Discussion of "A Plan of Revitalization, Conservation and Development in the Greenville North Carolina Central City Area – The Heart of the City". A resolution designating this area as a rehabilitation, conservation and reconditioning area will also be discussed.

– Discussion of zoning ordinance update.

Legislators Due Thanks For Work On Road Projects

The N.C. Board of Transportation has approved a new Transportation Improvement Program (TIP) that advances the beginning of work on the U.S. 264 Farmville bypass and on the northeast bypass of Greenville.

The Farmville bypass, to cost $12 million is now scheduled to begin in the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1987. The multilaned bypass from Stantonsburg Road north to U.S. 13 is now scheduled for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1988. It will cost $17.7 million.

The TIP also calls for widening to four lanes Evans Street from 10th to Greenville Boulevard with the work scheduled in the fiscal year starting July 1, 1989. Also widening of N.C. 903 from N.C. 11 to the Martin County line, to cost $3.3 million, was put in the plan for fiscal year 1986-87.

These projects are to be welcomed by Pitt County. The Farmville bypass and the Greenville bypass had been scheduled for the 1990s, far too distant to handle the increasing traffic load that can be predicted. It is clear that these two projects are necessary to make the new multilaned U.S. 264 now under construction an adequate highway to the west, and it is important to Pitt and other eastern counties that this highway be up to interstate standards.

In addition the Evans Street project is badly needed to handle present traffic and the traffic situation will only become worse in the future.

The N.C. 903 project will give an improved route between Greenville and Williamston.

Our Legislative representatives and local officials have worked diligently to have these projects included in the new TIP. They had the best interest of Pitt County at heart and are to be commended for the success of their efforts.

Horne's Service Sets Good Trend

Charles Horne, general manager of Greenville Utilities Commission, will be retiring from his position next year, he has announced to the board.

Horne has been serving as general manager since September 1968 and it is been a period of unprecedented growth for the utilities.

He did important work on the negotiations that led to the Eastern Municipal Power Agency negotiating the purchase of generating capacity from Carolina Power and Light Co.

A new water treatment facility has been competed and was named in his honor. Work is also nearing completion on a new waste water treatment facility currently being constructed north of the Tar River. The waste treatment facility will replace a plant which now operates on the south side of the river near Greenwood Cemetery.

Horne has been an effective manager for Greenville Utilities. When he retires he will leave the Utilities Commission in fine shape to meet present and future needs.

Sunday Morning Notes

Mrs. Clayton A. Whitehurst Jr. called to say that she had a scene of Three Wise Men at her home.

She noted that The Daily Reflector did a picture of these very same wise men 21 years ago. "Since they are of voting age now I thought you might want to do it again," she laughed.

It depends on how they voted.

It all served to remind that Christmas decorations are rapidly going up throughout Pitt County. Homes are decorated ranging from simple lights in the windows to lighted trees on the lawns and elaborate Christmas trees inside the homes. There are manger scenes, Santa scenes, snow scenes ... you name it ... on various lawns throughout the area.

It caused one observer to chuckle, "What do you think space observers would think of all this."

If they came in their flying saucers with the blinking lights of movie fame, they might believe they had found a fleet of space ships.

Roy Taylor, editor of the Wilson Daily Times, visited the other day to discuss his book "The Sharecroppers." It is about life on the tobacco farm in eastern North Carolina and it was reviewed by Jerry Raynor in last Sunday's Daily Reflector.

Taylor is excited about the book. He says it is a compilation of columns he did on Saturdays for about two years. It covers the years from the 1920s through World War II and he has found it has appeal all over the country.

Someone called from Butte, Mont., to inquire about additional copies. The caller noted that, while Taylor was writing about tobacco farming, it was the same where the caller grew up.

The book would make a good Christmas gift for anyone with roots on the farm. Copies are short, however.

Some 3,400 copies have been sold and Taylor has ordered an additional printing which will be delivered in late January.

Most people who grew up in eastern North Carolina can hardly fail to get nostalgic about life on the farm. Many of us have left it for other pursuits but there are few who grew up here who didn't live on the farm, visit one, or work on one occasionally.

And working on a tobacco farm is unlike any other form of work. There was the back ache of breaking tobacco in the fields, placing the leaves in tobacco trucks pulled by mules. The kids had to hand tobacco, three leaves at a time, to the loopers. Finally the tobacco-laden sticks were placed in the old curing barns, which can still be seen about. After the tobacco was cured came the job of removing the sticks from the barns. The guy on the bottom wound up covered with sand.

Anyway, Roy Taylor can tell it better than I.

On The Other Side

WASHINGTON — On Oct. 29 Time magazine carried a little item, only two paragraphs long, about the sad plight of Jeffrey Peters. I am minded to retell the story, partly for the benefit of my colleagues in the news business and partly for everyone else, because there is a moral to it. We all can profit from moral instruction.

This was the gist of the piece as Time ran it: Peters was identified as a high school biology teacher in Columbia, Mo., a Cub Scout leader, and "an internationally respected researcher whose specialty is birds of prey." Two years ago, it appeared from Time's account, Peters heard that some hunters had trapped a rare merlin falcon, and "he went to Utah to pick it up." But he did not obtain a permit to transport the rare bird across a state line, and as a result, "he was in a sting operation aimed at poachers." For this crime, Time reported, Peters recently had arrived at the federal prison in Leavenworth, Kan., there to begin serving an 18-month sentence.

I reacted to that sympathetic account as thousands of other readers must have reacted. The poor young teacher! The hanging judge! What a cruel and unwarranted sentence! To put a Cub Scout leader in prison for 18 months, just because he transported a bird across a state line without a permit, appeared to smack of bureaucracy at its worst. The Peters case struck me as a splendid example of what ails our system of criminal justice, in which burglars go free while a wildlife conservationist goes to prison. A column of outrage began to take shape in my mind.

The years teach us something. An inquiry to the Department of Justice produced some information that Time somehow had failed to report. Young Peters, this respected researcher and Cub Scout leader, wasn't found guilty. He pleaded guilty. This past September he entered into a plead bargain with the U.S. attorney for the Western District of Missouri.

Peters agreed to testify for the government in falconry cases of which he as knowledge: he agreed to surrender his propagation permits and not to apply for such permits again; he agreed to forfeit all the birds that last June were seized under a search warrant from his home. He agreed to plead guilty "to the charges contained in said information because I am guilty as charged of the crimes alleged therein."

For its party, the government agreed to drop prosecution of nine other charges involving the purchase and possession of illegally obtained raptors, the making of false statements, and complicity in a conspiracy to violate fedeal laws having to do with preservation of the merlin falcon.

The plea bargain was accompanied by release of a long affidavit prepared by Robert G. Leapley, special agent for the Fish and Wildlife Service, recounted some of the evidence that led to Peters' arrest and conviction. The affidavit explains one more element necessary for understanding of the case: At the time he plea-bargained for a prison term of one year, Peters already was on probation from a six-month sentenced imposed upon him in 1981 for a previous falconry offense. The court revoked his probation and gave him the whole 18 months in prison.

In brief, Peters was not exactly the blue-eyed innocent of Time's bleeding-heart account. Reportedly he is an able and dedicated teacher, but this was his second offense under federal laws that were well known to him. These laws have as their purpose the preservation of rare and beautiful birds — birds that command prices from falconers ranging into many thousands of dollars.

And the moral? I would hang it large upon the wall of every newsroom in the land: Audi alteram partem! Hear the other side! To the extent that those of us in the new business fail to report both sides of a controversial issue, we do our job poorly. The same stricture applies in family life and in the office or factory also. It is so very easy, once our sympathies are engaged, to leap to conclusions that A is in the wrong and B is in the right, that C has behaved badly to D, that black is black and white is white.

The passing years tend to improve one's eyesight. The images that seem to be so obviously black or so clearly white, on cose examination, often turn out to be a halftone gray.

Response

WASHINGTON (AP) — Anger, frustration, indecision and division.

All these are apparent as the Reagan administration tries to frame a response to the slaying of two American officials in the hijacking of a Kuwaiti airliner.

"The fact of the matter," said Larry Speakes, the White House press spokesman, "is that two passengers were murdered by the hijackers, more were tortured and many were brutalized for an extended period of time without any effective measures being taken by the government of Iran."

Speakes described President Reagan as outraged.

But anger isn't a policy, although it may act as a catalyst for whatever is finally decided.

Secretary of State George P. Shultz has declared the United States must be ready to use its power against terrorists, even at the risk of public disapproval.

Secretary of Defense Caspar W. Weinberger, with whom he is in friendly disagreement on a number of issues, takes a more cautious stance. He would like to have public and congressional support lined up before military action is taken.

An expert on terrorism, Robert H. Kupperman of the Center for Strategic Studies at Georgetown University, says finding a solution is difficult for several reasons.

"Everyone is concerned that terrorism is going to migrate here and that military action of any nature is going to bring about a tit-for-tat, action-reaction cycle," he said.

On top of that, Kupperman said, "the military, I think, is terrified that it cannot pull clandestine operations off successfully. And Secretary Shultz is viewing the use of military force as a near-religious action — as a solution. It's at best a tool."

In this particular case, Kupperman said, there is nothing practical the United States can do. He gave two reasons: It was not an American plane and "without being callous, we suffered little loss." Also, Kupperman said, an assault force would have been killed by the Iranians.

But, he said, when it is clear that a country was directly responsible for acts of terrorism a number of options are open: economic, such as stopping bank transfers and air traffic, and the use of force.

Kupperman specified "overt force against small groups of terrorists that can be located in given villages, and covert force — which you always deny — such as by taking out an oil refinery or some other installation."

The United States has felt the sting of terrorism many times. Embassies have been destroyed, diplomats killed or taken hostage. U.S. officials vowed retribution after the Marines were killed last year in Lebanon, but there was none.

Shultz clearly is hinting that once it marshals the facts the United States may strike back. "One way or another," he said in a speech last Sunday in New York, "the law-abiding nations of the world will put an end to terrorism and to the barbarism that threatens the very foundations of civilized life."

Obviously, there is no disagreement within the administration that terrorism is repulsive. But that does not mean the president and his senior advisers will be able to agree on a response — or whether to retaliate.

Energy Revolution Fades

WASHINGTON — A decade ago, Gov. Ronald Reagan of California described the tinkerers and visionaries who believed in renewable energy sources as true romantics. In response, the advocates of passive solar designs and solar photovoltaic cells characterized Reagan as narrow-minded and predicted an alternative energy renaissance in America.

In retrospect, both sides were right. Renewable energy sources do work. There are, for example, well over 50,000 passive solar buildings in the United States. Yet, the use of wood alcohol, windmills and other renewable solar energy sources hasn't infiltrated the consciousness of most American households as some proponents anticipated. Furthermore, their prospects for doing so in the future are less than encouraging.

This was evident earlier this month when the Grumman Corp., 167th among the Fortune 500, announced that it was getting out of the solar energy business. Company Chairman John Bierwirth blamed his company's departure from solar on the "de-emphasis of the energy crisis." Oil and gas prices weren't expected to rise soon, he added, making consumer investment in solar products less certain. Moreover, the government's indecision regarding the extension of solar tax credits — now slated to expire at the end of 1985 — adds further uncertainty to the marketplace.

When Grumman officially leaves the solar industry next year, it will find itself with lots of company. During the mid-'70s, several major oil companies purchased many shares in solar collector firms, among other renewable-energy outfits. Today, many of those large energy conglomerates have left the field. In 1981, Exxon set the trend when it sold its solar hot water subsidiary (Daystar) to an independent solar company (American Solar King).

In general, most large companies have recognized that marketing solar water heaters requires a semi-skilled work force, attention to individual markets and accepting profits akin to small businesses. With the majors now evacuating the solar market and no energy crisis at the doorstep, non-polluting, self-sufficient energy sources seem not so important.

Thomas R. Pickering, U.S. ambassador to El Salvador, has asked the Pentagon to improve the stability and effectiveness of the small force of American trainers and advisers there by extending the military tours of all U.S. personnel.

What's the most cost-effective method of educating kids? Getting older children to tutor younger ones. Cross-age tutoring, according to research conducted at Stanford University, is far more effective than introducing computers, reducing class sizes or lengthening the school day.

Who says it pays to challenge power? Enis Pinar, 31, a GS-5 former traffic cop at Washington's National Airport, has spent the last three years financing a lawsuit to get his street job back. Pinar's crime: refusing to fix tickets he wrote to illegally parked congressmen.

The drive to reduce alcohol consumption is spreading. Last week Massachusetts became the first state to prohibit bar owners from offering free or reduced-priced drinks, the well-known happy hour. Meanwhile, the Swedish government is being lobbied by its medical community to prohibit adults from purchasing more than six bottles of wine and a single bottle of hard liquor each month.

Gen. Bennie L. Davis, commander in chief of the Strategic Air Command (SAC), has told the Omaha World-Herald, that some Soviet warheads should reach the United States before SAC's forces retaliate. An opponent of the launch-on-warning doctrine, Davis said the United States should have a "prompt launch strategy only when the first enemy missiles reach the U.S. Davis acknowledged that he was speaking for himself and not the U.S. government.

To the editor:
Congratulations to the newly elected legislators on their recent victories and the opportunity to serve the people of North Carolina in a leadership role. Many people have felt for some time that a handful of powerful people have controlled the General Assembly — at last, hopefully, a new day has dawned.

Mothers Against Drinking Drivers (MADD) solicits our legislators' help in making our roads safer for North Carolina citizens by tightening and amending the Safe Roads Act. As we understand it, the powerful liquor and trial lawyer lobbies are trying to weaken this act.

MADD (Mothers Against Drunk Drivers) would like to see the list of priorities written below implemented in 1985 and would appreciate working with our legislators to meet this goal:
1. Age 21 drinking age.
2. Open container law.
3. Victim restitution legislation.
4. Increasing all fine, court costs, bail limits, etc., in DWI cases.
5. Decriminalization of minor traffic offenses, with use of magistrates in appropriate categories.
6. Mandatory increases of financial liability insurance of convicted DWIs.
7. More interest in "dram shop" liability, including doubling limit set by law to $1 million.
8. Mandatory safety restraints for children under 5.

There is grass root support of all the items and MADD looks forward to working with you to make North Carolin a safer place to live.

To the editor:
In this busy season and time of momentous events, I'd like to take a moment to make a small somewhat trivial request, which could make a lot of folks happy if acted upon.

In the past month or so, several very worthy but commercially small movies have come through town, such as "Little Drummer Girl," "Places in the Heart," and "Country." With the exception of "Places in the Heart," which stayed for two or three weeks, these and other good movies have come and gone in a week. Their audiences didn't know they were coming, and didn't know they'd be gone so soon.

Please, theater owners and managers, give us a chance to get there! Those who go to these movies are grownups with busy schedules. Let us know in advance they're coming, and how long they're staying. It shouldn't be difficult to put in your ads something like this: "Coming December 3, for one week only 'Country" with Sam Shepard and Jessica Lange." And how about letting us know the ending date of every movie ("must end Thursday") rather than just a few of them? Those of us who are grownup movie nuts would be able to make our plans and get to see these movies before they go. Lots of people would be seeing lots more movies, and you may even discover that (given some advance notice) you have a large audience for smaller, less commercial — and even foreign — films. Isn't it worth a try?

To the editor:
The headline in your 12th of December edition announcing the early retirement of Charles Horne, I am sure was read with mixed emotions by many Greenville citizens. Mixed I say because of the desire to see a man who has given so much to the public service of this community step aside and enjoy a well-deserved retirement. Mixed becasue we all know that no one is irreplaceable; but that this man stands so high that he leaves a challenge of service to community that requires a complete, all incompassing dedication from the individual who steps into his shoes.

As a former member of the Greenville Utility Commission, I can personally attest to the unselfish, dedicated, personal involvement that Charles Horne has always felt for his job. The basis of his work creed has always revolved around the word "excellence." No amount of wages or other compensation could ever repay the conscientious service that Charles has rendered to the City of Greenville. It would not be possible to recount in the space allotted the work, effort, long hours, and personal input that Charles Horne has poured into his life long love — The Greenville Utilities Commission. I am sure that I speak representing many voices in saying: "God Speed, Charles, and may your retirement years be filled with much joy." You have our heartfelt thanks for your many years of service to Greenville.

To the editor:
The segregation cells in the Atlanta Federal Penitentiary are about 8 by 4 feet. Inmates are let out one hour a day to watch TV and are allowed three showers per week. So it was with great joy that I reached my hand out through my cell bars to receive my daily mail from the guard. Included was the Oct. 31 edition of "The Daily Reflector."

At the time I was feeling quite a bit of self-pity over my plight. Then I turned to page 38 and read the banner headline: "No End in Sight for African Famine."

The story stated that "over 35 million people are in desperate need of help," and despite massive relief efforts "there is no end in sight" to the problem.

Even in solitary confinement, I received three meals a day, a warm bed and fresh water. Yet here I was in perhaps the worst situation I've ever experienced and compared to the average East African my "problems" were of little consequence — a mere inconvenience.

I felt like people everywhere should stop what they were doing and devote all of their energy to helping these starving people, like so many Pitt County folks did after the tornadoes hit us last spring.

Hunger is a preventable problem and we must not dismiss this situation lightly and go one with our lives. We will never eliminate hunger until we make it a priority to do so.

There is no greater blight against American citizens than the terrible insensitivity we exhibit toward the poor of the world. We view East Africans as statistics, nameless masses of less-than-human beings.

This year the U.S. plans to spend $333 billion on the military, yet we haggle over a few million in aid to a starving nation. Have we become so morally and spiritually bankrupt?

We must harness the spirit of compassion and love exhibited by so many after the tornadoes' destruction and apply those merciful qualities to the entire world. The spirit is already there with all of us, but it must be nurtured.

New Test Of Dole's Stance

WASHINGTON — An attempt by Sen. David Durenberger of Minnesota to take control of the Senate Intelligence Committee, a move regarded by the Reagan administration as a threat to policies, poses the first test of how friendly to the White House Sen. Robert J. Dole will be in his new role as majority leader.

Durenberger, normally a mild-mannered moderate, called and held a meeting of the committee on Dec. 3 even though he has not been named chairman. Only two members attended: Durenberger and his fellow moderate Republican ally, Sen. William Cohen of Maine. The remarks of the outgoing chairman, Sen. Barry Goldwater, when told of Durenberger's action, were unprintable. He and several other Republicans were livid.

Angry though they are, the question whether Durenberger in fact becomes chairman in the new Congress rests not with them but with Dole. Consequently, the president's ability to have his national security policies generally backed in the Senate controlled by his own party are enmeshed in tribal relationships and backroom dealings of the world's most exclusive club.

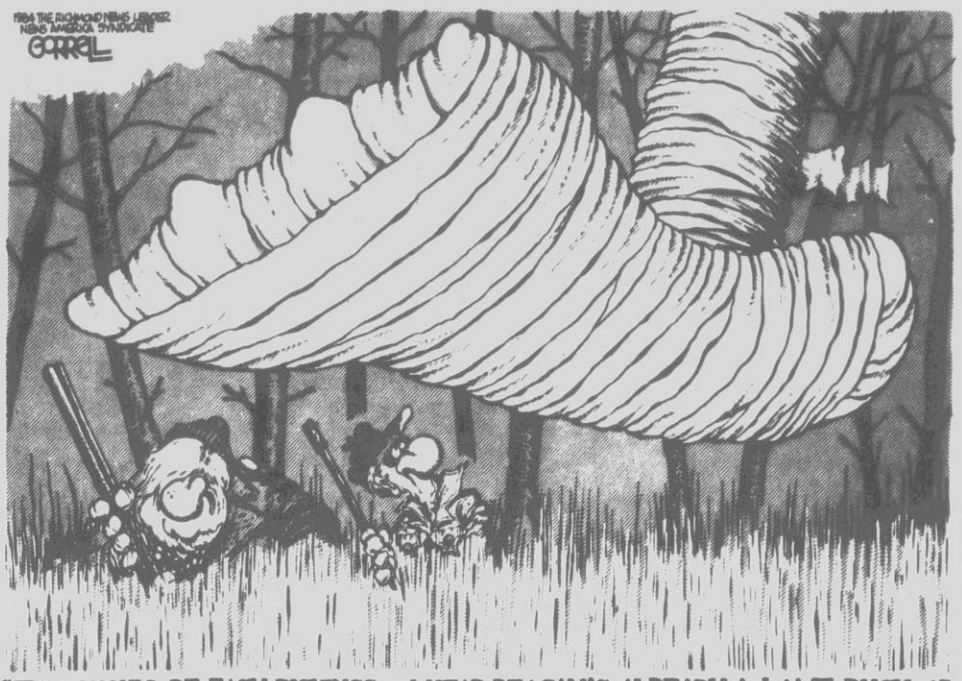

Neither the White House nor conservative Republican senators, including four on the Intelligence Committee in addition to Goldwater, want Durenberger as chairman. They fear his hostility to Reagan's Nicaraguan policy, particularly his contempt for the contra guerrillas fighting the Sandinista government. They suspect that he takes a benign view of Soviet SALT compliance.

The decision to fight his claim as heir apparent came when Durenberger, speaking as though he were already chairman, told the Washington Post Nov. 29 he will oppose all aid for the contras. The conservatives' alternative to him is quite a surprise: Sen. John Chafee.

Overall, Chafee is one of the least conservative Republicans in the Senate and a member of the liberal "Group of Six." But he supports Reagan on Nicaragua and most other national security issues over which the Intelligence Committee exerts extraordinary influence. He might become even more a Reagan loyalist as the just-elected chairman of the Senate Republican Conference and a key lieutenant to his good friend Bob Dole.

The new, uncontested grandee of the Senate has said nothing publicly about how he things Durenberger's claim to the chairmanship should be handled. Goldwater bitterly complained to Dole on Dec. 5 about Durenberger's takeover attempt. Dole replied he had given Durenberger no reason to hope for the chairmanship.

But Dole is correctly known as the most skilled cloakroom maneuverer and deal-maker in the Senate. Nobody could be privy to all the arrangements he may have engineered in his unexpected election as Republican leader. Durenberger's obvious self-confidence about becoming chairman has evoked vague suspicion in the Republican cloakroom that he may have some sort of encouragement from Dole.

"THIS SHOULD BE EASY PICKINGS.... I HEAR REAGAN'S ALREADY A LAME DUCK...!"

Currency Tells A Story

If you have a revolution to sell, an ego to glority or bad news to break to the locals, the perfect little propaganda tool may be riding around in people's pockets.

"Money is the best messenger," says an old Yiddish proverb. And governments know it better than anyone — especially in today's tumultuous world.

That's why Nicaraguan coins now feature an hombre in a 10-gallon hat; why a mosque, not a monarch, graces Iranian banknotes, and why Israel's treasurers reached back into the Bible for an inspiring new name for their fast-expiring old currency.

For politicians, the coin of the realm is not just a medium of exchange. It's also a medium of communication.

"It's almost a subliminal form of advertising," says historian Richard Doty of the American Numismatic Society, an expert on currency as propaganda.

The artwork on the peso, pound, rupee or rand can announce that new leadership has arrived, make clear the old leadership is here to stay, or even seek to rewrite history. A banknote is a mobile billboard, passed hand to hand.

"Money is tied up in sovereignty, in nation," Doty said in a New York interview. "You can see it in a place like Africa — lousy communications, rival tribal units, but your currency says, 'This is one nation, and we are the government.'"

Argentina's government recently sent a message through money.

On Nov. 28, the year-old civilian administration issued a new 5,000-peso note bearing the image of Juan Bautista Alberdi, a 19th-century lawyer and champion of civilian rule. Alberdi now breaks the ranks of the stern old generals who have dominated peso bills in recent decades, just as the military has dominated the country.

The signal was unmistakable — Argentina is serious about "civilianization."

The Argentine peso may be the latest example, but dozens of other currencies offer a panorama of a changing world.

In Iran, where the Persians first put royal portraits on coins 2,400 years ago, Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi's imperial visage was blotted out by crude overprints on rial notes soon after the 1979 revolution. Now the bills bear sedate scenes of mosques, symbols of the Islamic uprising.

The man in the cowboy hat on Nicaragua's new coins is not Tom Mix but Augusto Cesar Sandino, 1920s nationalist and inspiration for the 1979 Sandinista revolution. But the leftist Sandinistas, ever mindful of their country's Roman Catholicism, kept the old coins' motto — "En Dios Confiamos." "In God We Trust."

Currency revolutions take many forms.

In Libya, where ruler Col. Moammar Khadafy extols a kind of mass participatory democracy, huge crowds of Libyans now parade across the face of dinar notes.

In Chile, where right-wing generals took power 11 years ago, peso coins depict a figure breaking her chains, proclaiming "Liberty" above the inscription "11-IX-1973," date of the military's anti-Marxist coup. It is a version of recent history Chile's political dissidents would dispute.

And revolutions can be economic, as in Israel.

In 1980, after monumental inflation devastated the value of the Israeli pound, the government had to take action. But it tried to make the best of the bad news, knocking some zeroes off the currency and giving it a new and venerable name — the shekel, a biblical coin. The change was meant to bolster the image of Israel's battered legal tender.

Change can also be subtle, as in Japan, where new yen notes introduced Nov. 1 finally recognize a central fact of Japanese life — Westernization. In place of a feudal prince, the new bills bear a portrait of a cravat-wearing Inazo Nitobe, a 19th-century educator who promoted Japan's opening to the West.

In the United States, paper money has not changed since 1928. But political concerns sometimes intrude on the currency system, as they did in 1979, when the Carter administration issued the Susan B. Anthony one-dollar coin — a nod to the feminist movement.

"A lot of coin collectors — they tend to be middle-aged males — thought it was an act of propaganda," Doty said. The general public also disdained the strange new coins.

Doty noted one surprising historical fact: Few political leaders put their own portraits on banknotes. "Not even Hitler or Mussolini did that," he said.

From the numismatic society's vaults — where history lies among the centimes and centavos — the currency curator pulled out one exception, a 1973 Uganda 20-shilling note bearing the smiling face of Idi Amin. Within a few years of its issue that eccentric, bloody dictator had been driven from his country.

"It's almost a superstition. Putting yourself on a note is like asking for trouble," said Doty.

"Not even the Somoza family in Nicaragua did that," he added with a laugh. "And that's sort of a shame — they owned the national bank."

Election Character Changes

PRINCETON, N.J. — The pro-Reagan character of the president's landslide 1984 victory Nov. 6 was markedly different than the character of his support in 1980.

President Reagan's vote in 1984 was a decidedly pro-Reagan rather than an anti-Mondale vote, with many voters naming Reagan's economic policies and leadership as reasons for their choice. By a 6-to-1 ratio, Reagan supporters said their vote was more for Reagan than against Mondale, while Mondale voters were about equally divided between those who said their vote was for their candidate and those who described theirs as an anti-Reagan vote.

By contrast, 1980 Reagan voters gave anti-Carter reasons rather than pro-Reagan reasons for their selection, with Carter's perceived lack of leadership a major reason for rejecting the incumbent.

This post-election analysis examined the nature of the vote give the major party candidates on Nov. 6, and explored the reasons voters supported each candidate, as well as the reasons for non-voting.

Reagan backers this year most often cited his economic policies as their main reason for choosing him. Also mentioned frequently were his leadership abilities and his policies in general.

Those who pulled the lever for Mondale most often named dissatisfaction with Reagan, approval of Mondale's policies in general, the belief that he was for the poor and the working man, and party loyalty.

The vote was far more committed this year than in 1980. Four years ago, 27 percent of voters said that at one point in the campaign they had intended to vote for another candidate. This year only 16 percent did so.

Ticket-splitting — that is, voting for candidates of different parties — was less common this year than in 1980. In the latest survey, 54 percent of voters said they split their vote in choosing candidates for the various political offices, while 43 percent voted a straight party ticket.

One of the ironies of this year's presidential election was that despite the recent significant increases in the number of Americans registered to vote, turnout was only marginally higher than in 1980.

The findings report today are based on in-person interviews with 1,509 adults, 18 and older, conducted in more than 300 scientifically selected localities across the nation during the period Nov. 9-12.

For results based on samples of this size, one can say with 95 percent confidence that the error attributable to sampling and other random effects could be three percentage points in either direction.

POWs Had An Impact ... And So Did The U.S.

When a 10-year-old boy experienced difficulty while swimming in a pond near Cary in the summer of 1945, the 7-year-old cousin ran for help. He appealed to a group of men who were at work clearing a woods nearby. Although the men were German POWs, six of them threw down their axes and saws and ran to the scene at Jones' Pond, about five miles west of Raleigh, and plunged into the water.

But the drowning youth, Edward Jeffreys Jr., son of a farmer, had stepped off into deep water, and his body was hard to find. Despite calls from their guards ordering them to come out of the water, the young Germans pressed their search until they located the boy and hauled him up on the bank. Then they began applying artificial respiration. However, their efforts were in vain, and Coroner Roy M. Banks gave a ruling of accidental drowning.

Although the six men failed in their effort to save the boy's life, the incident typified that attitudes — especially after V-E Day — of many of the thousands of POWs who were brought to North Carolina and other states during World War II and put to work on farms and in factories. They were thankful they had escaped from the miseries, the dangers and the horrors of war — especially after the possibility of an Axis defeat became a certainty — and they welcomed the opportunity to work instead of fight. Their efforts saved the government much of the costs of feeding, housing and guarding the POWs and helped ease an acute labor shortage resulting from the war.

The POWs who fought vainly to save the life of the Jeffreys boy were sent out to work daily from a stockade at Camp Butner. Their employers paid the government for the work they did. At Wilmington, a POW camp was set up at the old Marine Hospital and some of the men were put to work in the pulpwood industry in the area. Other POW camps were established at other military bases and at other places including Williamston, Whiteville, Tarboro, Ahoskie, Edenton, New Bern and Roanoke Rapids. The camp at Tarboro was set up at the town's baseball park where the floodlights, formerly used for night baseball, eased the task of the camp guards. At Williamston, the POW camp was located near the Roanoke River on property of the Standard Fertilizer Co. which later became a unit of Olin Mathieson Chemical Corp.

Onward Robertson, a labor foreman for the fertilizer company, said the first contingent of prisoners received there were Italian. He recalled later that there was dissension in the camp until the cultural differences between Northern Italians and Southern Italians were realized. Harmony was restored after the two groups were segregated.

The prisoners at several of the camps were put to work on nearby farms. After rising at 5 a.m., shaving, breakfasting and cleaning their barracks, the men were loaded on trucks and hauled out to the farms. Each truck was followed by a Jeep loaded with armed GIs who guarded the prisoners. After returning to the camp at the end of the day and eating their evening meal, the prisoners had a recreation period. Frequently this took the form of singing to the accompaniment of an accordian, and often the songs were operatic pieces.

Once at the Tarboro camp, an Italian mess sergeant was heard to protest to Capt. W.R. Vivian that he could not prepare the evening meal because there was no salt. When Vivian asked what had happened to the day's salt ration, the Italian said he had used it all for breakfast.

"Our greatest difficulty is to get them enough condiments," said Vivian. "They ... require an enormous amount of seasonings." They also ate about twice as much bread as the American soldiers. Their cooks baked bread on a gas stove along with a variety of pastries.

After a relatively short period, the Italians at Williamston and other North Carolina camps were replaced by Germans. Robertson recalled that their ranks included men from all walks of life — lawyers and plumbers, doctors and carpenters, artists and musicians, actors and tailors.

"You just had to name the skill, and you could find it among them," Robertson said. They demonstrated their mechanical aptitude in many ways. They cooled their tents in summer with fans powered by water falling from open spigots. In winter, they devised gadgets to fit on the flues of their tent heaters to divert the hot air to the floors. They also developed self-flushing equipment for the camp latrines.

In their spare time, the prisoners built their own recreation building from materials they obtained on their own initiative. From farmers for whom they worked, they obtained scrub pine logs and from sawmills they brought rejected planks back to camp. To cut timbers from their logs they set up a sawmill at the camp, a crude affair powered by a Model "A" Ford engine. But it worked.

Robertson recalled that the recreation building was 110 feet by 30 feet. It had areas for games and a stage at one end on which the prisoners presented theatrical productions each weekend. He remembered a Christmas play which was one of the best he ever saw.

In 1944, according to the Williamston Enterprise, the POWs stacked 71,245 stacks of peanuts which cost the farmers $8,193.17, or about 1 1/2 cents per stack. They also helped in the harvest of tobacco.

Down at Wilmington, Lt. R.H. Hazel, POW camp commanding officer, said that everyone working the Germans had described them as superior workers, and Otto Leewenberg, whose parents came to this country from Holland, put it this way:

"They're Germans, and I hate them. But I have to admit they're the best help I ever had."

ECU Electron Microscope Aids In Diagnoses

By Beth Nelson
PCMH Medical Writer

A variety of tumors, kidney diseases and viruses can now be diagnosed much faster and with greater precision thanks to a new electron microscope on use at Pitt County Memorial Hospital.

"It is a tool we have at our disposal that can aid substantially in diagnosis," said Dr. David J. Dabbs, an assistant professor in the department of Clinical Pathology and Diagnostic Medicine at the East Carolina University School of Medicine.

This diagnostic tool has far greater powers of magnification than the conventional light microscope, said Dabbs, principal user of the microscope. For example, most light microscopes can magnify up to 1,000 times, compared with the electron microscope, which has magnification of up to 250,000. Such high quality resolution makes it possible to bring into focus objects that could never be seen before, he said.

Nevertheless, the electron microscope does not take the place of the light microscope, Dabbs said, which is still an effective diagnostic tool. Instead it serves as an adjunct to the light microscope, he said. "It is the ultimate quality control for the light microscope," he explained, often providing a definitive diagnosis when the conventional microscope is unable to do so.

Its most significant use is in diagnosing nearly any kind of tumor, said Dabbs, who came to Greenville in February to set up the electron microscopy service. But it is especially effective in identifying primitive tumors afflicting children, he said.

Because the diagnosis can now be made here, physicians can get results quicker and share their findings with their patients sooner. In fact, Dabbs said he can receive a biopsied tissue on a Wednesday morning, for example, report his results to the physician by Thursday afternoon and be available for consultation if needed.

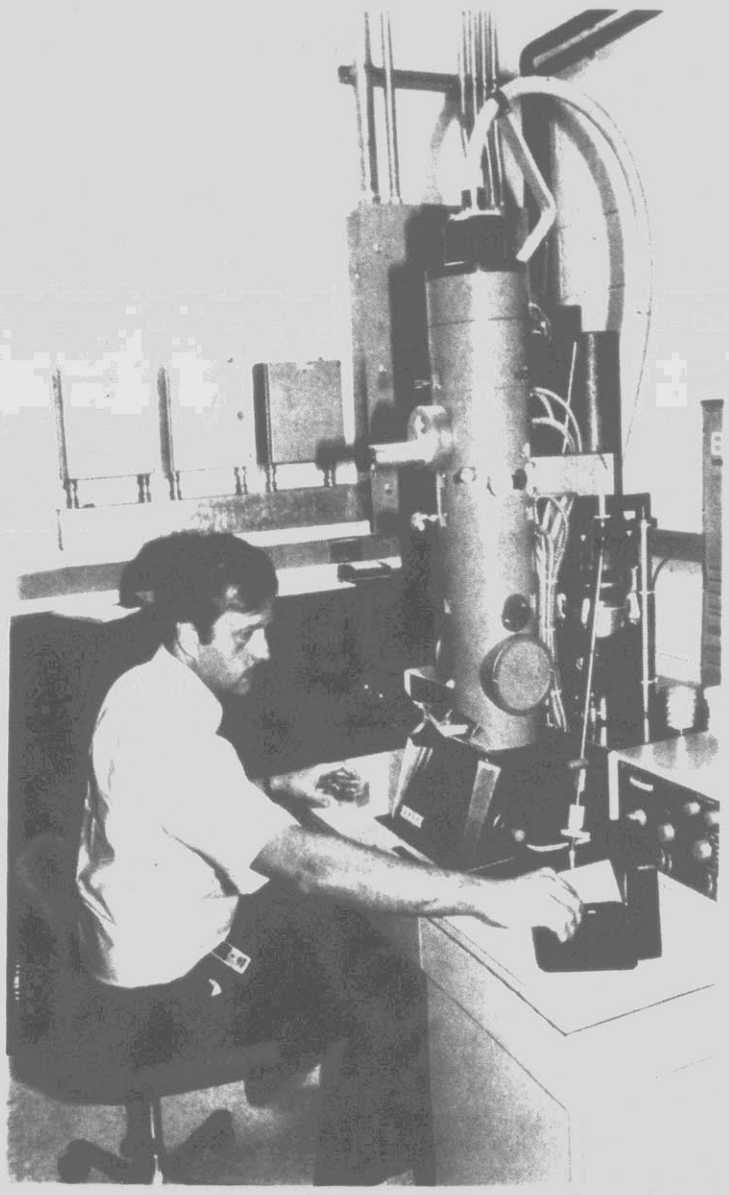

Quick diagnosis means that patients can often avoid additional diagnostic tests required when illnesses are difficult to pinpoint. For example, a tumor was recently detected in the lung of a young woman. With the electron microscope, Dabbs determined that the tumor had originated in the lung rather that having migrated there from some other part of the body. That definitive diagnosis spared the woman the procedures of other diagnostic work-ups, Dabbs said.

The microscope is effective in kidney biopsies as well, he said. It can help determine whether disease was caused by immune, nonimmune or hereditary factors, thus pointing the way to the best method of treatment and prognosis.

The electron microscope also makes it possible to diagnose infectious diseases because its power is strong enough to bring even the most obscure viruses into focus. For instance, it can diagnose cytomegalovirus, which is quite common among patients undergoing chemotherapy. Infectious social diseases such as herpes can be detected as well.

The electron microscope, housed in the medical school's Brody Medical Sciences Building has been handling an average of one speciman a day. "That's a fairly good clip," said Dabbs, especially for a new service. But he hopes its use will continue to increase. Once his slide preparation area is completed, he expects to begin accepting specimans for diagnosis from throughout Eastern North Carolina, he said.

Dabbs said this microscope, manufactured by Zeiss, is one of only about six of its type now in operation in the country. Its turbo-molecular pump enables it to start faster than many other models thus saving the pathologist's time. It is also capable of photographing tissue, once it is magnified, for documentation and review later, if needed.

MICROSCOPE — Dr. David J. Dabbs, an associated professor in the East Carolina University School of Medicine, sits at an electron microscope that he says speeds up diagnostic work. The microscope is one of only six of its type in the United States.

Alaska Issues First Smog Alert

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) — Carbon monoxide-laden air prompted Anchorage's first-ever smog alert, but breezes on Saturday blew the threat away, officials said.

People with heart and lung ailments were warned Friday to avoid the midtown area because of excessive concentrations of carbon monoxide. The condition abated by midnight as gentle breezes and light snow moved in, and the alert ws called off at 8 a.m. Saturday.

Federal clean air standards set a limit on carbon monoxide concentrations of 9 parts per million in an eight-hour period. Midtown measurements Friday exceeded 15 ppm.

The municipal health director said the pollution has reached higher levels in previous years, but Friday was the first time the city had the equipment needed to trigger an immediate alert.

Despite Technology, Train In Night Still Holds Comforting Mystique

By MIKE HUGHES
Washington Daily News

CHOCOWINITY, N.C. (AP) — At one time or another, we've all heard it — the horn in the distance, the rumbling of the engine, the shrill cries of steel bracing steel — and wondered where it comes from and where it's going.

Loud as it is, there's something comforting about the sounds of a train in the night. Even in this age of high technology and streamlined transporation, the bulky freight railroad has shown no sign of losing its mystique, its age-old romanticism.

That's not to say the industry hasn't kept pace with the changing world. Today's engines can pull more cargo farther, faster and safer than ever. But despite the advent of the diesel electric engine, radio communications and automated loading systems, railroading remains a hard job.

The four-man crew arrives at the Chocowinity yard at 3 p.m. An hour later they begin the long process of switching freight and tanker cars behind the two General Electric U23-B engines. The switching tracks branch out like an oak tree. They pick up 10 empty cars here, five more there. There'll be 51 cars this night, the conductor says.

The train makes the 31.5-mile trek to and from Texasgulf's Lee Creek operation nightly. The round trip takes about nine hours, with the cars empty on the way down. They carry phosphate products back.

After about an hour's worth of switching back and forth, engineer Phil Whitaker, conductor Joe Morgan and brakeman J.H. "Harley" Furman and J.L. Daniel are ready to make the hour's trip to Lee Creek.

Once past the Chocowinity yard, the train is stopped again for about 15 minutes for a visual check of the brakes on each car. Even empty, the train weighs hundreds of tons, and every ounce of braking power is necessary.

Up the rail a bit, Furman exits the engine to switch the track route eastward toward Aurora. As with many operations, this procedure is still done by hand.

It is now dusk. The sun's last rays bounce off the back of the train as it slowly winds around the first of many turns. About a mile or two up the track is the first grade crossing.

Whitaker blows the horn as a car nears the intersection. The car stops.

Whitaker recalls a few years back when a vehicle didn't stop. He was on a train traveling through Wadeville, a small town south of Asheboro, when the engine struck a log truck whose driver took a chance on beating the train across the intersection.

Whitaker remembers how the impact of the crash sent the logs through the glass at the front of the engine. He holds his hands about a foot apart and recalls how close the logs came to hitting him. Fortunately, tonight's trip is without incident.

Down the track, three pairs of eyes glisten in the headbeam, oblivious to the oncoming train. Then, in a flash, three deer scamper into the brush.

At about mile 28, the lights from the Texasgulf operation illuminate the sky.

The train slows to yard speed, about 10 mph. This section of track is under repairs. The cement crossties are being replaced by wood, which doesn't crack and chip as easily. The wooden ties line both sides for the last few miles.

Once at Lee Creek, Furman is back outside switching the incoming and outgoing tracks. Then it's time to switch the freight and tanker cars back onto separate tracks. The brakemen stand outside in the cool air night, radios in hand, and direct the engines back and forth.

The sounds of the engine are drowned out by the phosphate operation. Smoke pours into the lighted sky, then vanishes into the darkness. For the trainmen, the night has just begun.

Driver Charged

Greenville Police charged Carla Lee Darden of Walstonburg with a safe movement violation Friday in connection with a Dickinson Avenue traffic accident involving cars operated by Ms. Darden and Pamela Lee Fahnestock of Raleigh. Damages resulting from the accident were estimated at $1,300 to the Fahnestock car and $500 to the Darden vehicle.

Also reported Friday was a hit-and-run accident involving an unidentified vehicle and a car driven by Cecil Jay Hardy of Route 6, Greenville. Damages to the Hardy car were estimated at $500.

No one was charged and no serious injuries resulted from a Greenville Boulevard accident Friday involving cars operated by Constance Midyette Cuthrell of Washington and Elizabeth Carolyn Leggett of Suite 1-A Pirate's Landing. Police estimated damages at $350 to the Cuthrell car and $400 to the Leggett vehicle.

Police also investigated a North Pitt Street accident Saturday involving cars driven by Olivia Kelly Evans of Winterville and Jackie Robinson Daniel of 129 Trent Circle. No one was seriously injured and no charges were preferred in the accident. Damages totaled $500 — $200 to the Evans car and $300 to the Daniel vehicle.

Hamer Joins Witness Group In Nicaragua

By CAROL TYER
Reflector Staff Writer

Greenville resident Mike Hamer will leave Monday to begin training for a six-month stay as a "Witness for Peace" in Nicaragua. While there, he will work with other volunteers in an attempt to reduce violence and change U.S. policy toward that country.

He leaves Greenville Monday for Arizona to spend Christmas with his mother and sister, and then he'll move on to Mexico City where he'll take an intensive course in Spanish before meeting other participants in Managua, Nicaragua, in February.

The Witness for Peace program is sponsored by a coalition of religious, civil rights and private agencies opposed to U.S. policy in Nicaragua. A brochure distributed by the program describes its participants as "United States citizens who stand with the Nicaraguan people by acting in continuous non-violent resistance to U.S. covert or overt intervention in their country." Their aim, according to the brochure, is "to mobilize public opinion and help change U.S. foreign policy to one which fosters justice, peace and friendship."

Hamer applied last summer for the six-month program and was accepted as one of about 15 American participants.

The idea of Witness for Peace was born in 1983 after Nicaraguan leaders and clergy observed that attacks on villages near the Honduran-Nicaraguan border decreased drastically during times when it was known that there were Americans in the area. Now Americans stay in the area as "witnesses," some for six months, some for two weeks.

Hamer, a member of St. Gabriel Catholic Church, said he will pay his own way to Nicaragua with assistance through the giving of fellow church members and fellow members of the Greenville Peace Committee, and through concerts given by a local swing-blues band — the Rutabega Brothers and the Lemon Sisters of which Hamer has been a singer and bass guitarist for some time.

MIKE HAMER

Hamer, 36, has some knowledge of Spanish already. He took five semesters of Spanish in college and hitchhiked around Mexico for several months prior to moving to Greenville 10 years ago. He said he first came here as a VISTA volunteer and later returned to work at the Greenville Boys' Club, Agnes Fullilove Community School, and at East Carolina University where he is now a graduate student teaching freshman composition. Hamer also said he has been actively involved in fighting world hunger through the Greenville Walk for Humanity and the Oxfam Fast for a World Harvest.

He said he sees the effort on behalf of the people of Nicaragua as an extension of his work in Greenville, because he strongly believes that hunger is preventable and that much of its existence today is directly related to using resources on arms instead of food.

Hamer plans to keep a journal while he is in Nicaragua and said he will share his experiences in written and spoken form with Greenville citizens once he returns.

He said a North Carolina group of Witnesses for Peace will go to Nicaragua in March. Hamer said anyone who wishes to take part may contact Witnesses for Peace, 1414 Woodland Drive, Durham, N.C. 27701.

Attempted Theft Of Plane Foiled

CLIMAX, N.C. (AP) — An attempt to steal an airplane and smuggle automatic weapons to Central America to barter for drugs was thwarted early Saturday, but the would-be thieves escaped on foot after hurling tear gas at pursuing agents, an official said.

Local, state and federal agents had been tipped and were waiting around 6 a.m. when the suspects arrived at Southeast Airport, a small, rural facility about 15 miles south of Greensboro, said Ken McAllister, U.S. attorney for North Carolina's Middle District.

"As they (the suspects) approached the plane, the agents identified themselves," said McAllister. "The suspects ran ... and threw tear gas canisters. It was very foggy and dark and they got away."

McAllister would not say how many suspects there were, but said their identities were known and that arrest warrants had been issued. No one was hurt and no shots were fired, he said.

Authorities found on the ground a loaded Mac-11 machine gun, a large suitcase, several boxes, a duffle bag and a back pack. Warrants to examine the containers were being sought Saturday, McAllister said.

"Our information leads us to believe that they contain automatic weapons," he said.

The attempted arrest came after an investigation involving the U.S. Customs Service, the federal Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms Eepartment, the U.S. Drug Enforcement Agency, the State Bureau of Investigation and the Guilford County Sheriff's Department, McAllister said.

Vaccine Shortage May Be Short-Lived

RADNOR, Pa. (AP) — A pharmaceutical laboratory here will supply 8.4 million doses of a whooping-cough vaccine next year to the nation's only marketer of the drug, a lab spokesman said Saturday after federal health officials reported that spot shortages of the drug could worsen.

The lab, Wyeth Laboratories, had announced in June that it had suspended distribution because of the threat of liability claims over injuries suffered by recipients. But the firm said Saturday it had continued manufacturing the drug and selling it to Lederle Laboratories of Wayne, N.J., which assumed liability.

Dr. Daniel Shaw, Wyeth's spokesman, said in a statement that the 8.4 million doses of vaccine will be sent to Lederle, adding Wyeth will ship that firm an additional 9.4 million doses in 1986.

Lederle is the only U.S. firm still fully active in the unrestricted manufacture, distribution and sales of the vaccine.

Spot shortages of the vaccine developed in the fall, and the federal Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta on Thursday urged that doctors delay giving children their last two booster shots until supplies can be restored.

Dr. Walter Orenstein of the CDC's Division of Immunization said the shortages could last through the first quarter of 1985 but would ease if physicians conserved supplies.

On Saturday, Orenstein said Wyeth's supplies would head off a problem after the first few months of next year. "Certainly if Wyeth produces as much as they did before, the long-term problem shouldn't be a problem," he said.

Shaw said the lag time between production and shipment was created by regulations requiring the Federal Drug Administration to test each batch.

Two other factors shrank the supply of vaccine.

Orenstein said the spot shortages primarily were caused by a Connaught Laboratories' decision earlier this year to limit its production to existing contracts. The decision by Connaught, which has laboratories in Swiftwater, Pa., was based on "difficulty in obtaining full product liability insurance coverage," according to a company statement.

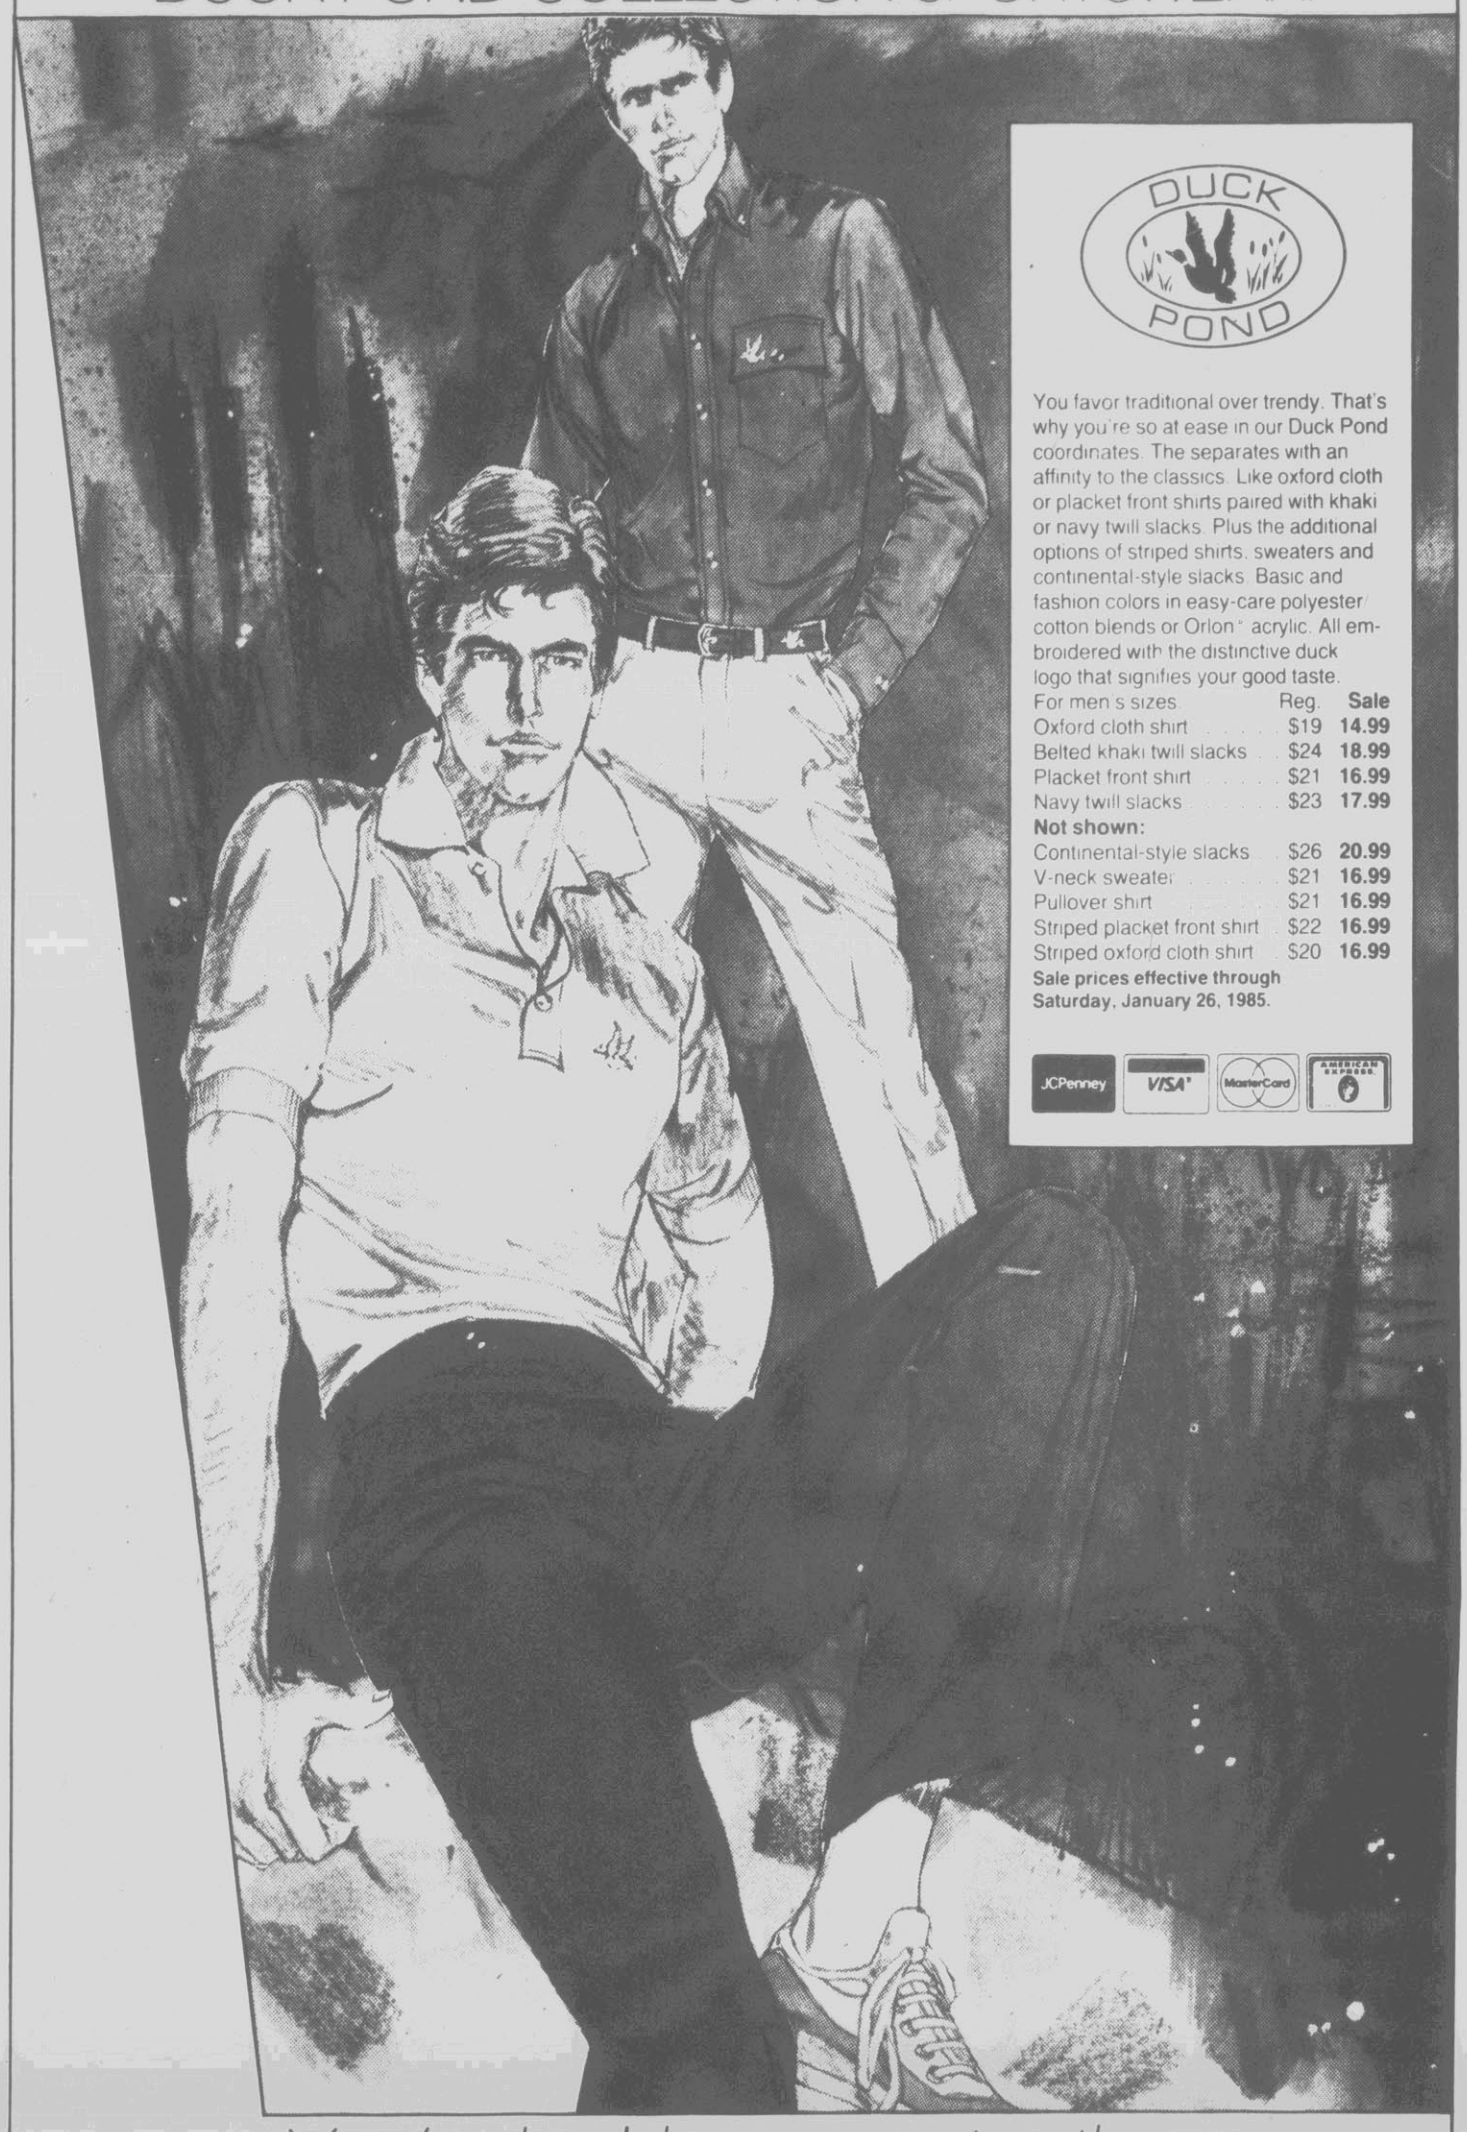

Two lots of DPT made by Lederle failed to pass the firm's quality tests and were not distributed, he added.

Dr. Martin Smith of Gainesville, Ga., vice president of the American Academy of Pediatrics, said in November that he had heard of shortages in Cleveland, Philadelphia, Roanoke, Va., and Palo Alto, Calif.

Whooping cough, or pertussis, is a "very devastating" disease that can cause pneumonia, seizures and even death, said CDC researcher Phil Horn. About 18 million to 20 million doses of the vaccine are administered yearly.

Robert Schwadron, spokesman for Lederle, said in November that company was estimating that 1984 production would be 7 million doses.

Scientist Reports Union Carbide Plant Emits Cancer-Causing Agents

By STRAT DOUTHAT
Associated Press Writer

INSTITUTE, W.Va. (AP) — A government scientist says Union Carbide's Institute plant, the only U.S. producer of the chemical involved in the Bhopal, India, disaster, spews tons of cancer-causing chemicals into the air each day.

"This amounts to almost 2,000 tons a year from the plant's process vents," Dr. Peter Infante, an Occupational Safety and Health Administration scientist, said at a congressional hearing.

He said many of the some 60 emitted chemicals, such as benzene, ethylene oxide and formaldehyde, are known cancer-causing agents.

Union Carbide's Institute plant emits 72 pounds of benzene (10 tons a year) and 443 pounds of ethylene oxide (110 tons a year) during each hour those chemicals are being processed, Infante said.

"And that's not the worst of it," he said. "That's just the emissions from the process vents and does not include the combustion products such as carbon monoxide, methane, sulfur dioxide and hydrogen chloride."

When those products are added to the total, Infante said, the plant emits more than 11,000 tons of toxic matter each year.

"The sad thing," said Dr. Greg Wagner, head of the occupational health and safety center at Marshall University, "is that Union Carbide is one of the good guys as far as chemical companies go."

Warren Anderson, the company's chief executive, echoed Wagner, telling Friday's hearing of the congressional Subcommittee on Health and the Environment: "We rank near the top, in fact we're at the very top."

The committee members were at West Virginia State College in Institute to take testimony on how to prevent a tragedy such as the one at Bhopal, India, in which more than 2,000 people were killed in a gas leak from a Union Carbide plant.

The subcommittee chairman, U.S. Rep. Henry Waxman, D-Calif., told Anderson Union Carbide must be held responsible for what happened at Bhopal. He also said Infante's testimony showed the need for more stringent chemical plant emission laws in the United States.

Even if there is no Bhopal-type tragedy in this country, Waxman said, the health of thousands of Americans is being eroded by the daily emissions of poison gases and toxic chemicals.

Illustrative of the problem, he said, was testimony from an EPA official who acknowldeged that methyl isocyanate, the chemical that killed residents of Bhopal, was not even on a priority list of chemicals to be regulated under the Clean Air Act.

Joseph Cannon, the EPA's assistant administrator for air, noise and radiation, said currently only five of the some 600 toxic chemicals on the priority list are regulated under the act.

Anderson said the Bhopal disaster pointed out the need for a thorough reevaluation of the chemical industry, here and abroad. He told Waxman he would be willing to sit down with the subcommittee and help formulate new legislation for chemical emissions.

Indian Plant Covered With Tarps

BHOPAL, India (AP) — Workers took elaborate precautions at the Union Carbide pesticide plant Saturday against another deadly gas leak when operations resume there. But nothing stopped the flood of frightened people pouring out of Bhopal.

The plant was shrouded in huge brown tarpaulins Saturday and helicopters doused it with water cannon. A government scientist said the facility was being made "super safe."

Residents remained unconvinced by government assurances. They fled by bus, train and truck, as they have every day since Wednesday, when authorities announced that the safest way to rid the plant of methyl isocyanate was to start the plant up and process the chemical into pesticides, as originally intended.

A gas leak Dec. 3 killed more than 2,000 people as they slept in the slums surrounding the plant. City medical authorities say 60,000 injured have been treated.

The plant was immediately shut down, but 15 tons of the chemical remained in other underground tanks. A program called "Operation Faith" is designed to convert the methyl isocyanate into pesticide, starting at 9 a.m. Sunday (10:30 p.m. EST Saturday). The process is expected to take four to five days.

Workers on the ground fitted tarpaulins over the plant Saturday. Scientists said air force helicopters would spray the plant with water again Sunday during processing of the gas to combat any that might form. They said water would be sprayed from the ground as well.

"We have made it super safe," said Srinivasan Varadarajan, a scientist sent by the government to direct the operation. He said "chances are now very low" for a new gas leak.

But buses and trains left Bhopal jammed full of people, others riding on the roofs. Many carried quilts and cooking utensils and said they did not plan to return until Operation Faith was over.

No one knows exactly how many people have left Bhopal, capital of Madhya Pradesh state. A local government spokesman has put the number at 70,000 but the United News of India said at least 250,000 of the 900,000 residents had fled. The news agency did not give a source for its report.

The city's commercial activity came to a virtual halt with the shutdown of most shops and businesses.

"I bet the only people in Bhopal tomorrow would be the officials and the press," said an unidentified senior government official, according to UNI.

The news agency said several hotels near the factory planned to shut down Sunday and asked their guests to move elsewhere.

Ten relief camps have been set up in the city, far from the chemical plant, to house people living next to it. But only an estimated 5,000 people had gone to the centers, which can accommodate 50,000.

"I am confused and scared about the future," said Hukum Chand, one of 154 people who moved into a refugee center set up in a sports stadium. Chand, 25, dressed in tattered shirt and trousers, said: "I am feeling very scared about tomorrow, but I am too poor to go elsewhere."

"Because of the terror, they don't think they are safe in these camps. Most people fled to other cities," said Dr. N.K. Gour, a volunteer at one of the camps.

Space Probe Off To Meet 1985 Comet

MOSCOW (UPI) — The Soviet Union launched the first of two space probes Saturday in a historic international mission to rendezvous with Halley's Comet as the glowing mass streaks past the Earth in 15 months on its 76-year cycle.

National television showed the white Vega 1 rocket blasting off in a cloud of dust against a brilliant blue sky from the Baikonur cosmodrome in the Central Asian desert Saturday morning.

Tass gave no time for the liftoff but said all systems on board were functioning normally.

Izvestia said Vega 1's sister space probe Vega 2 is scheduled to lift off next Friday.

The $117 million Vega (Venus-Halley) mission will be man's first contact with Halley's Comet, named for British astronomer Edmund Halley, who first calculated that the glowing body swings past the Earth every 76 years.

The Vega spacecraft, equipped with television cameras and spectrometers, will also drop weather balloons and robot landers into the atmosphere of Venus as they fly to meet the comet.

Information provided by three deep space antennas of the U.S. National Aeronautics and Space Administration will help the Soviets position the Vega ships within 6,210 miles of Halley.

Vega 1 and 2 are scheduled to rendezvous with the comet for three hours on March 6 and March 9. Halley will proceed on its elliptical trek through our solar system while the two Soviet spacecraft fly into deep space after relaying information back to earth.

Data from the Vega mission will be collected by the Soviet Space Research Institute and passed on to international groups that also plan to study the comet from Earth and in space.

Countries participating in the Halley project include the Soviet Union, U.S., Japan, West Germany, Hungary, East Germany, France, Czechoslovakia and Austria.

The European Space Agency, Intercosmos, will launch another mission to intercept Halley's Comet in July 1985. Its Giotto probe will hover 62 to 310 miles from the comet about a week after Vega monitors it.

The Soviet Space Research Institute agreed in 1981 to provide data on the comet's nucleus to help improve the accuracy of Giotto's targeting.

Japan's Institute of Space and Astronautical Science will launch one Halley-bound spacecraft in January and another in March, 1985.

NASA's contribution will be the ISEE-3 spacecraft, which will be launched from the space shuttle in September 1985. It will rendezvous with the Giacobini-Zinner Comet, and, if it survives, with Halley in March 1986.

Belize Picks New Leader

BELIZE CITY, Belize (AP) — Prime Minister George Price, who dominated politics in this English-speaking Central American country for a quarter century, suffered a landslide loss in election returns announced Saturday.

Price, 65, was soundly defeated in his own district by a 25-year-old political newcomer in Friday's parliamentary elections, the first since the Union Jack was lowered in Belize three years ago.

Price's center-left People's United Party won only seven seats in the 28-member House of Representatives, the government's Radio Belize said.

In Belize City's Freetown, Price's home district, he was defeated by Derek Aikman, a political novice, by 876 to 570 votes.

The total national vote tally was not released Saturday, but Radio Belize, which provided the official election results, said about 48,000 of the estimated 64,000 eligible voters, or 74 percent, cast ballots.

Opposition leader Manuel Esquivel, a U.S.-educated mathematics and physics teacher, is expected to become the new prime minister. Under the British-style parliamentary system, his conservative United Democratic Party names the new Cabinet.

Esquivel has 30 days to set up a new government.

Many people who stood in voting lines around this city of 45,000 said they were going to cast ballots for the opposition because they were tired of Price and wanted a change.

Price was first elected prime minister when Britain granted Belize home rule in 1964. Before that he was chief minister in the colonial administration.

Price led Belize, known as British Honduras until 1973, to independence on Sept. 21, 1981, and has been labeled "father of the nation" by his followers.

But reflecting the feeling of many on election day, a burly cab driver said: "That cat's been there almost 30 years telling people what to do and now the people going to tell him, man, you had your day."

Reagan Reportedly Will Support Smaller Cuts In Defense Spending

By HELEN THOMAS
UPI White House Reporter

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Reagan, deserting his fiscal advisers, thinks Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger has made a big enough contribution to the deficit-cutting drive by shaving $6 billion from the Pentagon budget next year, officials said Saturday.

Budget director David Stockman had urged an $8 billion slash in military spending for the 1986 fiscal year: $20 billion in 1987 and $30 billion in 1988, as part of Reagan's goal of cutting the deficit in half, to $100 billion in 1988.

In addition to the $6 billion next year, Weinberger has offered to slow down defense spending $7 billion in 1987 and $6 billion in 1988.

Reagan's decision to back smaller defense cuts at Weinberger's behest will put him in confrontation with Congress. Republican leaders have warned him that the Pentagon must bear part of the burden of reducing the deficit to justify domestic cuts.

The president told reporters Friday that he was still committed to that goal with indications that he may have to ax more domestic spending programs to reach his objective.

Officials said that during meetings earlier this week, Reagan told his Cabinet-level fiscal advisers that Weinberger had made "a contribution" to reducing the deficit in the fiscal 1986 budget and appeared satisfied with the proposed Pentagon cuts.

The officials were not certain whether Reagan was backing Weinberger in his rejection of the bigger cuts in 1987 and 1988.

Reagan was expected to announce his decision next week. He has already approved $34 billion in sweeping cuts in domestic programs and proposed the elimination of some agencies such as the Small Business Administration and the Legal Services Corp. which has long been an anathema to him.

The bulk of Weinberger's proposed cut will come from pay, not from programs to modernize strategic weapons. Stockman wanted to slow down military procurement and a pay freeze for military and civilian workers in the Pentagon.

In an interview with Human Events last week, Reagan said he was not going to make any cuts in defense spending "that are going to drive us backward" in his military buildup.

He repeated that the Pentagon has shaved $116 billion from its projected 5-year program, and revealed how he advised Weinberger on the strategy to use with Congress.

In the interview, Reagan said: "I sometimes used to chide Cap (Weinberger) and say, 'look, Cap, why don't you leave this stuff in here to let the Congress find it and they'll be happy, because whetever you go up there with, they'll try to reuce it further.'"

Reagan decided to forego a weekend at Camp David and remained at the White House to drop in on Christmas gatherings for his staff.

Governors' Fail To Agree On Chairman

WASHINGTON (AP) — A bid by Democratic governors to come up with their own candidate for national party chairman appeared to be foundering on the eve of a meeting that the governors hoped would produce agreement on who could rebuild the party after its 1984 election defeat.

Eight governors and about 35 state party leaders will meet Sunday in Kansas City, Mo., to discuss who should succeed Charles T. Manatt as party chairman.

"There's no way, shape or form that the State Chairs Association as a group will endorse anybody," said Kathy Vick of Louisiana, president of the association.

There are six announced candidates for the job which will be filled Feb. 1 by a vote of the Democratic National Committee.

While those six have campaigned for support over the past several weeks, Govs. Bruce Babbitt of Arizona and Charles Robb of Virginia and Rep. Richard Gephardt of Missouri have led a search for someone governors and state party leaders could unite behind.

So far, their search has been fruitless.

They tried and failed to convince outgoing Govs. James Hunt of North Carolina and Scott Matheson of Utah to enter the race. Also declining was former Transportation Secretary Neil Goldschmidt.

Some southerners were pushing former Gov. Terry Sanford of North Carolina as their favorite for the job, but it was questionable whether he could muster the widespread support it would take to win a majority of the 369 votes on the national committee.

The six active candidates were Paul Kirk, a close ally of Sen. Edward M. Kennedy; Duane Garrett, a co-chairman of Walter F. Mondale's presidential campaign; Nancy Pelosi, a former California party chairman; Robert Keete, a Washington political consultant; former Rep. John Cavanaugh of Nebraska; and Sharon Pratt Dixon, a national committeewoman from Washington, D.C.

Kirk announced Friday he had the support of four Western state party chairmen — Bob Williams of South Dakota, Pat Shea of Utah, Bruce Nelson of Montana and Bea Castellano of New Mexico.

The eight governors who said they would attend the Kansas City meeting were Babbitt, Robb, Matheson, George Nigh of Oklahoma, Robert Kerrey of Nebraska, John Carlin of Kansas, Michael Dukakis of Massachusetts and Ted Schwinden of Montana.

Kirk has the overt support of his home state governor, Dukakis, and the backing of party chairmen from Utah and Montana would indicate he also might have support at Sunday's meeting from Matheson and Schwinden.

Ms. Pelosi has strong support in the two biggest states, her home base of California and New York where Gov. Mario Cuomo appeared inclined to back her.

Disgraced Soviet Police Head Dies

MOSCOW (UPI) — Nikolai Schelokov, the disgraced former head of the Soviet police, has died and was buried in a brief ceremony Saturday that fueled speculation he committed suicide, well-informed sources said.

The former general, who was 74, was removed from his post in 1982 and stripped of his rank last month in what was widely rumored to be a preparation for trial on charges of corruption.

The sources said Schelokov's closed coffin was buried in Moscow's Vakhtangov cemetery in a hasty ceremony attended by few mourners but with a heavy police presence.

They said a metal plaque on the grave bore Schelokov's name and gave the date of his death as Dec. 13.

The official media has made no mention of the death.

High Soviet Official Says Ready To 'Eventually Ban' Armaments

By DAVID MASON
Chief European Correspondent

LONDON (AP) — Mikhail S. Gorbachev, widely believed to be second man in the Kremlin hierarchy, said in London on Saturday that the Soviet Union stood ready to "eventually ban" all types of armaments and would never "start any new round in the arms race."

Gorbachev, in Britain for a week during which he will confer with Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, said upon his arrival Saturday that he hoped his visit would contribute "to the betterment of the international situation."

Anti-Soviet demonstrators shouted slogans and held banners as Gorbachev arrived at the Soviet Embassy and when he toured London Saturday evening.

Scotland Yard said Zenko Diduch, a 32-year-old Ukranian printer from Bradford, was arrested and charged with threatening behavior after an empty beer can was thrown at a bus carrying Gorbachev. The can bounced off the vehicle and did no damage.

Two men were hustled away after shouting, in German, "Peace in the Ukraine" inside the British Museum, where Gorbachev and his delegation were shown the reading room where Marx and Lenin studied.

Outside the museum about 40 protesters chanted and held banners to show support for the banned Polish trade union movement Solidarity, for Soviet Jews, and for people in the Ukraine. Some banners read, in Russian, "For oppressed Soviet Jews, Stalin lives" and "Gorbachev, where is Sakharov?" — a reference to dissident physicist Andrei Sakharov, who was exiled from Moscow to Gorky.

British officials have said that during Gorbachev's trip they hope to glean some idea of the Soviet position prior to the Jan. 7-8 talks in Geneva between U.S. Secretary of State George P. Shultz and Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko. The talks may set up a new phase in nuclear arms talks following the Soviet walkout from missile talks in November last year.

Gorbachev, smooth and smiling, spoke briefly to about 100 reporters at Heathrow Airport. He was closely guarded by strong police details.

His remarks, made in Russian, and a separate press statement in English, appeared to set an upbeat tone for the visit of the eight-man Soviet parliamentary delegation, plus about 20 aides.

The statement said, "Our country has never sought, nor is it seeking military superiority. It has never been, nor will it ever be the one to start any new round in the arms race. There are no types of armaments that the U.S.S.R. would not agree to see limited and eventually banned in agreement with other states on a reciprocal basis."

While the statement cut no new ground in Soviet arms policy, it had added signficance in the context of the approaching Shultz-Gromyko talks.

On the eve of Gorbachev's arrival here, Shultz and other North Atlantic Treaty Organization foreign ministers meeting in Brussels said that "nuclear weapons should be substantially reduced" in U.S.-Soviet arms negotiations.

The Gorbachev delegation came at the invitation of the British group of the Inter-Parliamentary Union. It said it intended "to have a frank exchange of opinion" with British government leaders and parliamentarians "on ways to overcome the present dangerous development of the international situation and make things in the world healthier again."

The word "frank" is often a diplomatic euphemism for tough talking.

The visit is important, the statment said, "especially now that the world situation has become seriously complicated ... Opportunities for the prevention of nuclear war exist. And these opportunities must be used to the full, not missed."

Gorbachev is due to talk with Mrs. Thatcher at lunchtime Sunday at her secluded country home Chequers, northwest of London.

On Monday, he will meet Foreign Secretary Sir Geoffrey Howe before Howe and Mrs. Thatcher fly to China for the signing of an agreement on the future of the British colony of Hong Kong. Mrs. Thatcher will go on to the United States for talks with President Reagan Dec. 22 at Camp David where she is expected to report on her impressions of Gorbachev.

Gorbachev is accompanied by his wife, Raisa.

He will visit British industrial complexes and a farm and will call on British agriculture and trade and industry ministers.

Gorbachev, at 53 the youngest member of the ruling Politburo, is responsible for agriculture and some overview of economic and ideological affairs. Most Western Soviet specialists feel he is in line to succeed Soviet President Konstantin U. Chernenko, 73.

Gorbachev's delegation is diverse, indicating the scope of the visit.

It includes Evgeni P. Velikhov, a top official in Soviet science who is believed to be an expert on space technology; Nikolai D. Komarov, first deputy foreign trade minister; parliamentary officials dealing with the writers' union, housing, vegetable growing and world economy, and Leonid M. Zamyatin, head of the international information department of the Communist Party Central Committee.

"Accompanying persons" with the delegation include A.G. Kovalev, a deputy foreign minister, and Gen. N.F. Chervov, an expert in strategic arms.

Oklahoma Manhunt Spreading

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Law officers armed with a composite drawing of a suspect in the killings of four people during a bank robbery fanned out over three southwestern Oklahoma counties Saturday in search of the lone gunman.

The killings tood place in the back room of the First Bank of Chattanooga branch in the farming community of Geronimo, about 100 miles southwest of Oklahoma City. Three other people were wounded Friday but an infant was unharmed, apparently because the gunman ran out of ammunition.

The gunman herded the group into a back room, forced them to lie on the floor and then shot them in the head and back, according to City Marshal Tommy Dale.

The search was expanded Saturday from Comanche County into Stephens and Cotton counties, and alerts were sent to Texas authorities, the highway patrol said.

FBI spokesman Dan Vogel said authorities were limited to ground searches early Saturday because of heavy fog and rainy skies.

The composite drawing is a major lead for authorities, FBI agent Tony Daniels told The Lawton Constitution.

The FBI described the gunman as a white male, 19-20 years old, 5-foot-9 inches tall, with shoulder-length blond hair and bad acne. He was wearing blue jeans and glasses with gold metal frames, and had a thin mustache and green eyes, they said.

Daniels said the bank did not have any cameras or an alarm.

"It would certainly have been a benefit to us if the bank had had a camera," he said. "We're trying to develop potential suspects through prior arrest records and what we can pick up. We're trying to identify suspects as far as propensity for violent crime, and we're interviewing people in the area."

Daniels said the weapon used was believed to be a .32-caliber revolver. Three of the victims were also attacked with what authorities suspect was a hunting knife.

The gunman took only the money that was in the teller's drawers, but it was not known how much, Daniels said.

Jose Robles said his son Reuben and his wife Bellen and their daughter Juanita walked into the bank while the robbery was in progress.

"He said he saw a lot of people lying down, shot. The gunman told him to lie face down and face away from him, and my daughter-in-law grabbed the baby.

"He ordered my daughter-in-law to lie down and asked 'Do you want me to shoot the baby?' Then he shot them. ... My son told me he also pulled the trigger on the baby but the gun was out of bullets," the elder Robles said.

Mrs. Robles, 15, was listed in good condition in Comanche County Hospital. Her 20-year-old husband also was wounded but was released from the hospital Friday night.

Tobacco Session Falls Short Of Solution

By MIKE McLAUGHLIN

RALEIGH, N.C. (UPI) — The five-state "tobacco family," meeting behind closed doors, failed to settle disputes over how to rescue the federal tobacco program from rising cheaper imports.

Some 50 farm representatives from the flue-cured tobacco producing states gathered in Raleigh Friday and barred reporters from the meeting, saying they wanted to promote a more open debate. Afterward, the representatives acknowledged they failed to reach an agreement.

"There was very little accomplished," said Pat Stocks, a Greene County tobacco farmer who attended the meeting. "Nobody had an answer. This program's in serious trouble. As long as there's friction, we'll get nothing solved."

The groups agreed to appoint a committee to try to iron out differences between the organizations. But no date was set for a new meeting.

Some farmers were angry because the meeting was closed. "Why hide it?" Stocks asked. "It's time the farmers know where we're going to stand for next year's crop. I was just surprised nobody had a solution."

Before the meeting started, Rep. Charlie Rose, D-N.C., expressed optimism the groups would reach a consensus.

Rose maintained there is "more unity among the tobacco family and the people in the family than what is painted" and predicted the tobacco program will survive.

"I think it's a long way from being dead because I think people are a long way from giving up the habit of smoking cigarettes," Rose said.

Flue-cured tobacco growers are reeling from Wednesday's announcement that the Agriculture Department will cut the amount of crop they can grow next year. The 1985 quota was set 3.7 percent lower than this year for what officials called the smallest tobacco crop in history.

Farmers and agriculture officials said many growers in the flue-cured tobacco producing states of the Carolinas, Virginia, Georgia and Florida will be forced out of business because they will be unable to grow enough tobacco to make ends meet.

Agriculture officials also expect the federal government to raise 1985 assessment charged growers to maintain an 800 million pound glut of surplus leaf stored in warehouses under the federal tobacco program.

Tobacco groups disagree on how to solve the problems. Some farmers are willing to accept a cut in the $1.70 a pound tobacco support price while others are calling for federal restrictions to curtail imports.

The groups agree, however, that a consensus is needed to push improvements in the tobacco program through Congress. Without a consensus, there also is the risk that tobacco opponents would call for an amendment to kill the program.

Friday's meeting was expected to be a candid airing of differences among tobacco leaders from the five states. Rose said the meeting was closed because of "a reluctance to talk openly about the deeper feelings of the program."

Growers need to send a "strong message to the tobacco companies that we need you to help us" by buying more domestic tobacco, Rose said. "I'm not sure will ever be competitive Brazil as growers."

Brazil is expected to surpass the United States this year as the leading exporter of flue-cured leaf. Cheaper production costs in the South American nation has swamped the United States tobacco markets with imports.

North Carolina holds a dominant role in negotiations on the tobacco program because the state produces more than half of the nation's flue-cured leaf.

The North Carolina Farm Bureau, the largest of the state's farm organizations with more than 220,000 members, has called for a package of import restrictions to keep out foreign tobacco.

The state Grange and the North Carolina Tobacco Grower's Association have called for a rollback in the federal price support.

Farm Bureau legislative assistant Bob Jenkins said wholesale price support cuts could spark a price war with foreign growers that domestic farmers could not win.

All three groups wanted the 1985 quota to stay the same as in 1984.

Helms Says New Farm Bill Needed

By The Associated Press

Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., has outlined the likely agenda of agricultural legislation for the first session of the 99th Congress, starting with a new basic farm bill.

"Obviously, 1985 will be a crucial year for farm policy in this country, given the fact the existing farm policy is both counterproductive and far too costly," Helms said in a prepared statement issued in Washington. "This indicates the necessity for a major reform in farm policy.

"It won't be easy, but it will be in the best interest of both farmers and taxpayers if Congress approves farm legislation that is market-oriented, flexible, internally consistent, long-term in design and sensitive to all elements of the production system."

Helms, chairman of the Senate Agriculture Committee, said export programs will also be a major part of the farm bill to help ensure farmers "they are getting a fair shake in world markets."

He added that other priorities are soil conservation and amending the Rural Electrification Act.

Mortician Released On Bond

HILLSBOROUGH, N.C. (AP) — A University of North Carolina mortician accused of stealing 25 cadavers and defrauding the school and the Veterans Administration has surrendered to authorities and was released on $10,000 bond.

Lester Sutton Sandlin was indicted last week by an Orange County grand jury on 25 counts of embezzling UNC-Chapel Hill medical school cadavers, 18 counts of cheating the VA of $6,377 in burial fees and seven counts of using his state job to earn $26,000 for his private mortuary business.

Sandlin denied wrongdoing in a newspaper interview last week, saying his dealings were legitimate. He has been suspended from his UNC job without pay pending the outcome of his case.

Sandlin, the administrator in charge of anatomical remains at UNC-CH, was discharged Thursday from Lenoir Memorial Hospital in Kinston. He had been admitted there Monday afternoon for treatment of a pancreas disorder.

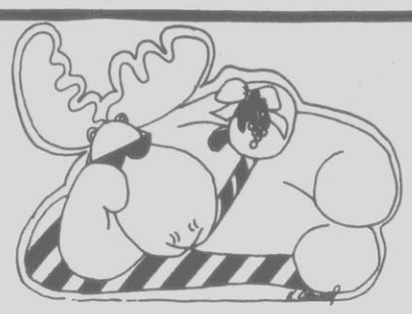

W.E. Weis, a State Bureau of Investigation agent, recommended Friday that Sandlin's bond be set at $15,000. But Ann Loflin, a Durham lawyer representing Sandlin, told District Judge Donald Paschal that her client would have difficulty getting out of jail if the bond was that high.

Mrs. Loflin argued unsuccessfully for an unsecured bond, which would not involve cash or property, or hiring a professional bondsman at a fee of about 15 percent of the bond. She said Sandlin had not tried to avoid prosecution on 11 counts of embezzling cadavers handed down by a grand jury in August.

But Paschal told Mrs. Loflin that the large number of indictments returned earlier this week increased the danger of flight.

Arraignment on the charges is scheduled for Jan. 7 in Orange County Superior Court. Mrs. Loflin said the case might be tried in February.

Six indictments handed down Monday accuse Sandlin of concealing his ownership of Professional Mortuary Services to obtain $24,748 from UNC for the transportation and embalming of cadavers 250 times between March 8, 1982, and May 10, 1984.

Fatal Explosion

ASHEVILLE (AP) — A 23-year-old man was killed Saturday morning when explosions tore through his Asheville house, engulfing it in flames, firefighters said.

The identity of the victim was withheld until relatives could be notified.

A neighbor said she heard an explosion around 7:15 a.m. As she telephoned the Fire Department, another explosion shook the house, which was burning beyond control when firefighters arrived.

The cause of the explosions was under investigation, authorities said.

Judge Named

RALEIGH (AP) — Gov. Jim Hunt has named Fred J. Williams of Durham as a special Superior Court judge to succeed Judge Arthur Lane, who is retiring at the end of the year.

Williams, 33, is an assistant professor of law at North Carolina Central University and has served as an assistant public defender in Fayetteville. He is the 22nd black appointed by Hunt to the judiciary in North Carolina.

Williams was among five attorneys nominated by the Judicial Nominating Committee for Superior Court Judges and will serve a term expiring June 30, 1987.

Packer Charged

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. Department of Agriculture has charged Gothan Provision Co. Inc., a meat packer in Swannanoa, N.C., and its owner, Warren B. Mooore, with writing bad checks and failing to pay promptly for more than $90,000 worth of livestock.

B.H. Jones, director of USDA's Packers and Stockyards Administration, said Moore has signed personal notes to secure the bad checks after buying stock from suppliers in North Carolina, Talladega, Calif., and Maysville, Ky.

Gothan Provision and Mooore have a right to a hearing on the administrative charges filed by USDA. If the charges are proven, the company and Moore will be placed under a cease and desist order and could be ordered to pay a civil fine.

Gothan Provision is not operating at this time, officials said.

Increase Sought

RALEIGH (AP) — Carolina Power & Light Co. has filed with the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission for a 15.6 percent increase in its wholesale rates.

Company spokesman Tom Phillips said the Raleigh utility wants a $22 million increase to go into effect as early as Feb. 14, followed by an $11.5 million increase to begin sometime after Feb. 15.

Phillips said CP&L wants to increase prices electric companies pay the utility for power in order to pay for ongoing construction. CP&L needs to recover its investment in Unit 2 of the Shearon Harris nuclear power plant in Wake County that was scrapped, he said.

Sentenced

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Two men who "overcame any sense of decency" have been sentenced to lengthy prison terms in connection with a conspiracy to distribute in North Carolina heroin smuggled from Mexico.

U.S. District Judge Robert Potter sentenced Jorge Ortega-Benitez, 35, of Santa Barbara, Calif., to 30 years' imprisonment and gave Roberto Mendoza Angeles, 42, of Mexico City, a 20-year sentence. Both could have been sentenced to 35 years in prison.

A federal jury deliberated about an hour Friday before convicting the defendants on charges of conspiring to distribute heroin, traveling in interstate commerce to distribute heroin and possession of heroin with intent to distribute.

In sentencing Angeles, Potter said, "His greed overcame any sense of decency that he had. ... The most important thing for him was easy money, and he's going to have to suffer the consequences."

Aides Appointed

RALEIGH (AP) — Gov.-elect Jim Martin has announced the appointments of four aides to his staff.

R. Jack Hawke, Martin's campaign manager and a former deputy secretary of the state Department of Transportation, will serve as special assistant for policy and will supervise communications and special events.

James S. Lofton of Charlotte, Martin's congressional assistant since 1973, will be executive assistant and staff director, coordinating all operations pertaining to the Governor's Office.

Attorney James R. Trotter of Salisbury will serve as special counsel and will be responsible for legislative affairs, research and personnel appointments and legal counsel for the Governor's Office.

Wilma M. Sherrill of Asheville will be director of personnel appointments.

Robbery Capital

CHARLOTTE (UPI) — Charlotte has become the bank robbery capital of the state with an outbreak of 39 holdups in 1984 — the most ever to strike a single North Carolina city in a year, the FBI says.

Charlotte had averaged just eight bank robberies each year since 1980 but this year, "things went bananas," said Robert Pence, chief of the FBI in North Carolina.

Law enforcement officials blamed the dramatic increase on an unusual rash of crafty robbers who hit several banks before the FBI could catch them.

ECU Coach Art Baker

New Pirate Coach Art Baker

Made Quick Decision On Job

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

"I set some goals for myself several years ago," Art Baker told a crowded press conference in the Pirate Club building Saturday morning. "Among the Division I-A schools, East Carolina was one of the few schools that I would have considered going to."

Friday morning, Baker had seen that goal come to fruition as he was named to replace Ed Emory as the head football coach at East Carolina. Emory was fired by the school on Monday.

"Greenville has been one of the favorite places I've lived and the East Carolina people among the finest I've been around, too," Baker said. "I'm just really excited about coming here."

For Baker, it will be a return. Two seasons ago, he served as the offensive coordinator under Emory when the Pirates posted an 8-3 record and were ranked 20th on the final Associated Press poll. The Pirates lost only three games that year — to Florida State, Florida and national champion Miami — and were in all three until the final play.

With the sudden firing of Emory, there were questions as to whether it was all pre-arranged that Baker would get the job. He denied it.

"I had no idea the job was coming open," he said. "I just visited with some of the East Carolina people at the Shrine Bowl (in Charlotte) last weekend. I was in Atlanta Monday to interview for the James Madison job and to set up an on-campus visit with them. I heard about (Emory's firing) on Monday night and had my first conversation with Dr. (Ken) Karr (ECU athletic director) on Tuesday.

"It was the second quickest job decision I've ever made," Baker continued, citing a decision to move from Clemson to Texas Tech as an assistant as a 15-minute judgement.

"I've always felt that the Lord has a plan for all of us," Baker said, "and this is his plan for me."

Baker paused and one writer posed a question along those lines: "Did the Lord go over the schedule with you?"

I've always felt that the Lord has a plan for all of us and this is his plan for me.

ART BAKER

After the laughter subsided, Baker smiled and said, "I neglected to mention that Dr. Karr had gone over the schedule with me. And I've decided that I'm going to need His help."

The Pirates face four teams in the coming season that will appear in bowl games this year, and ECU has tough schedules in future years.

Baker said he hated to be coming to East Carolina under the circumstances. "I would have much preferred it if Ed had been named coach of the Atlanta Falcons or something like that," he said. Baker said he had talked briefly with Emory. "I have concern for him and his family. Usually you get over these feelings in a hurry, and I hope he does."

Baker should know. He went through a similar situation when he was abruptly fired by The Citadel in 1982 after his team recorded a 5-6 year.

Emory, who had three years to go on his $50,000 a year contract, is expected to meet with Karr and Howell Monday to go over the settlement of his contract. Emory has said that he had retained a lawyer to help him in the discussions, and wants the full payoff of his contract. Emory reportedly has been offered a $50,000 payoff, continued salary until he gets a new job and a supplement if the new salary is below $50,000 annually.

Terms of Baker's contract are said to be for five years at $60,000 annually.

Baker said that having been at East Carolina two years ago will be a benefit for him and the team. He would have less adjustment to make. "There's not a great deal of difference between East Carolina and Florida State," he said of his previous school — which he will continue to aid through Saturday's Citrus Bowl. "I'm not quite up to date with the players here, but I feel sure there is good talent. The biggest job right now is to fill the vacancies that have occurred."

Baker said he was not prepared to talk about the present staff. "I'm going to meet with them today, and I'll have to make some decisions soon." He said he planned to return to FSU tonight and join the team in its final week before the bowl. "I'm going to spend Christmas in South Carolina with my children and expect to be in the office on December 27."

He added that he expected to have his staff lined up by January 1 so that they could return to the recruiting trails. "Some of them will be asked to remain on," Baker said, "perhaps all of them."

Asked if he would take an active role on the on-field coaching, Baker said he expected to. "All head coaches like to stick their noses into the offensive field," he joked. "(Bobby) Bowden (FSU coach) let go of the play-calling for the first time in nine years to let me do it this year, but he would occasionally want to call one himself, usually a reverse. So if you see any reverses called, you can probably blame them on me.

"I try to hire people that I have confidence in but hate to throw all my experience down the drain. I'm an option coach and I will continue to be one. I have learned a lot more about the passing game this year, and I hope that will be a part of it too."

Baker said he thinks East Carolina is somewhere along the path Florida State began treading nine or 10 years ago when it began to build its program. "They went 8-3 not long afterwards and they were overlooked like we were two years ago. But they played six home games this year and had six sellouts. The boosters give more and they demand more. Realistically they can compete for the national championship, and people never thought that possible.

"One of the nice things is that people know who East Carolina is and that it has a good football program," Baker said.

Baker feels that the Pirates can still have a successful recruiting year, despite the change in coaches. "I've been recruiting North and South Carolina and Atlanta, so I'm pretty familiar with the people in this area. I know a lot of coaches, when they move on, promise not to talk with the same kids, but I told Bobby that this was 'my' territory now."

Baker and his wife, Edie, have four children, Artie, Kim, Ryan and Curtis.

"I'm really looking forward to being with them over Christmas," Baker said. "My daughter is going to present us with our first grandchild in January, and I'm almost as excited about that as to get the job here."

As head coach of ECU, Baker will be holding that position for the third time. He has previous been head coach at Furman and The Citadel. A graduate of Presbyterian, he served as an assistant at Clemson and Texas Tech before moving to the head job at Furman. His overall record is 57-48-5. He is the 15th head coach in the 49-year history of ECU football.

Woody Peele

Five years ago, Pat Dye suddenly and abruptly resigned from the head coaching job at East Carolina Univeristy, citing his inability to get along with the administration. Among the big problems were the lack of money for the program.

The attitude of Pirate football fans was that the world had suddenly dropped out from underneath them. It was all over: there was no future for the ECU program.

Today, the situation is much the same, although the circumstances are different. East Carolina University fired Ed Emory Monday and many people are still trying to figure out why. Dr. John Howell told us that Emory was given "some reasons" for the firing. Emory says he was not. It remains for the individual to decide who to believe.

The decision, nevertheless, has been made and will not be changed.

Five years ago, we heard Pirate Club members say they wouldn't be putting money into the program "until this new guy proves something." A year later, many of them were screaming for that new guy's scalp.

Two years later, he was their hero, the Pirate program was on a roll and everybody appeared happy.

So a lot has changed over those five years. For some, Emory is — like Pat Dye was then — the good guy and the administration is the villain.

The reasons? We understand there were a number of them, and in the eyes of the university, justified. We are told that Dr. Howell struggled with the decision for several weeks. If he had made a snap judgement, it could well have come quickly after the end of the regular season. But he did not. He wanted to be sure that he was making the best possible move for the university. And only time will tell if that decision was correct.

During the coming weeks, those reasons will probably begin to leak out to the fans. Word of mouth will pass them along, and while those who are angered may continued to be angry, hopefully they will begin to understand and accept things as they are.

No one can take away the good things that Ed Emory did for East Carolina in his five years as head coach. Those things are embedded in the record books and the hearts of his supporters — and detractors.

But the Emory era is over and that must be accepted by all. Divisiveness can only serve to hurt the school that Emory says he loves.

The anger will die, slowly, as it did when Pat Dye left. The world will continue to revolve.

The fans and supporters now must rally around Art Baker and drive the program onward. It would be a disservice to Emory and those who came before him to toss the program aside. What they worked for will then be meaningless.

It is best to wish, as we do, Coach Emory and his family, our best. As we said before, we believe Emory tried his hardest to get the job done. We believe he was very sincere in his wanting to make East Carolina the best.

That can still happen, despite his absence. But it will take the support of all.

Tech Tops State On Price's Shot

RALEIGH (AP) — Mark Price hit a 20-foot jumper with two seconds left to lift No. 12 Georgia Tech to a 66-64 Atlantic Coast Conference basketball victory over ninth-ranked North Carolina State Saturday.

The loss was the first for the Wolfpack in six games, while Georgia Tech improved to 4-1. It was the ACC opener for both schools.

The Yellow Jackets, which trailed by as many as 13 in the first half, pulled to within 37-30 at intermission. With less than three minutes gone in the second half Georgia Tech had tied the score at 39.

No more than three points seperated the teams thereafter and the score was tied a dozen times.

Forward John Salley and Price fueled the comeback, scoring nine straight points between them in the early moments of the second half.

N.C. State tied the score for the final time on Terry Gannon's long jumper with 1:30 left. The Wolfpack grabbbed the rebound on a missed shot by Price and had the opportunity to take the lead at 1:08.

North Carolina State held the ball until there was four seconds left on the 45-second shot clock and a hurried attempt at a shot failed.

The Yellow Jackets took possession with 24 seconds left and held the ball until Price took his jumper just beyond the top of the key.

By TOM FOREMAN Jr.
AP Sports Writer

GREENSBORO — Dean Smith would like his team to gain some more maturity, but for now his 13th-ranked Tar Heels share first place in the Atlantic Coast Conference with Duke after a 79-73 victory over Wake Forest.

Junior center Brad Daugherty scored 19 points, 15 of them in the second half as the Tar Heels rallied to take the lead in the first half, then held off two Demon Deacon threats in the second half.

"I thought we played like an inexperienced team in the first half," Smith said. "When we got up by 10 in the second half, we played like an inexperienced team again, but our players have to be pleased with being 1-0 in the ACC."

Team fouls were almost even — North Carolina was called for 22 fouls and Wake Forest for 23, but while the Tar Heels cashed in on their opportunities, Wake Forest squandered several chances to close the gap on their opponents.

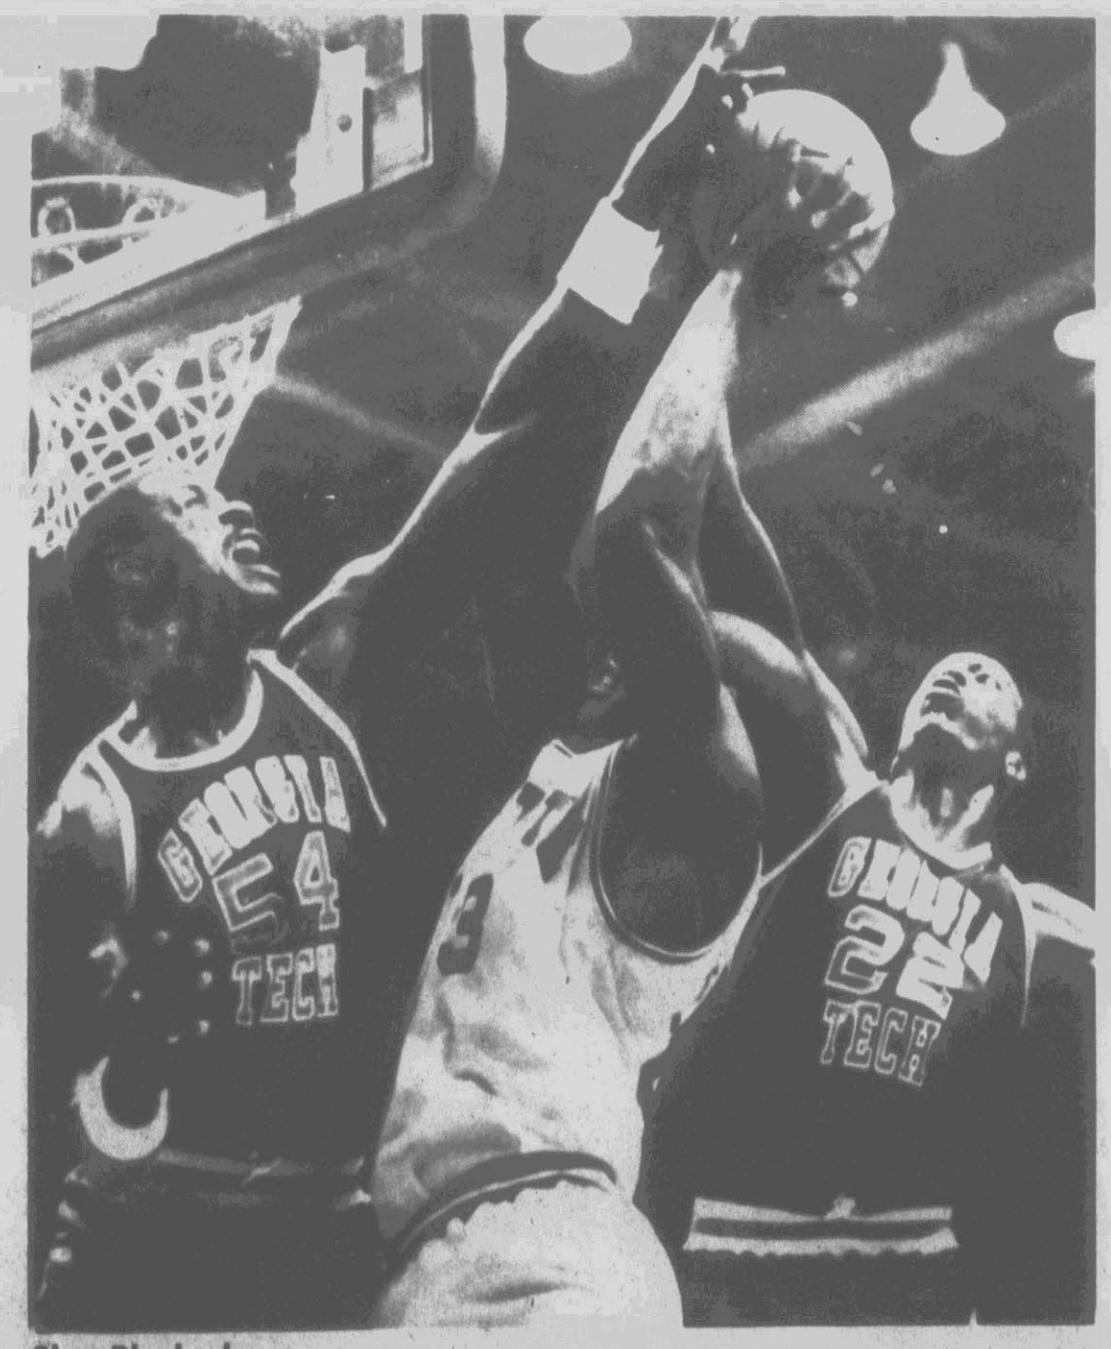

"We are a better foul shooting team than we showed tonight," Wake Forest coach Carl Tacy said. "North Carolina always does that well. But as in previous North Carolina games, the fouls seemed to make the difference."

Missed free throws plagued the Demon Deacons as they tried to catch the Tar Heels in the second half. Shooting 68 percent from the line, Wake Forest missed three straight one-and-one opportunities. Overall, Wake Forest was 7 of 17 from the free throw line.

Southers Leads USC Women Past East Carolina, 68-54

COLUMBIA, S.C. — Brantley Southers fired in 17 points and Renee Najarian added 16 as the Lady Gamecocks of South Carolina outran East Carolina 68-54 Saturday in NCAA women's basketball.

Mindy Ballou chipped in 12 points and Monica Williams 11 for the Lady Gamecocks, now 3-2 on the season. Anita Anderson maneuvered inside for 12 points to lead the Lady Pirates.

The Lady Gamecocks hit on 28 out of 60 field goal attempts for 47 percent, while East Carolina connected on 24 out of 68 shots from the floor for a disappointing 35 percent. The Lady Pirates, now 2-5, held a 52-41 rebounding edge over South Carolina, but 25 turnovers sealed ECU's fate.

"We're doing well on the boards, but we have too many turnovers," ECU Coach Emily Manwaring said. "The biggest factor was our shooting percentage. We were behind 31-25 at halftime, and we just couldn't cut it any closer than seven in the second half.

"They beat us down the court several times, and that's supposed to be our strong point. We said before that our game plan was to attack and be strong, and we just didn't do that.

"It was an aggressive team game, and they out-pushed and out-shoved us. If we allow that to happen, we're in trouble. That's not the way I like to play and not the way I like to coach. It's too bad when it's no longer a finesse game."

ECU's Monique Pompili and USC's Marsi McAlister grabbed 11 rebounds each, while Southers had eight for the Lady Gamecocks.

The Lady Pirates continue on to Morehead State Tuesday for the second game of their pre-Christmas tour, then venture to Huntington, W. Va., to face Marshall University Wednesday.

New Orleans Tops Slumping Giants

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — The New York Giants knew that Saturday's game against the New Orleans Saints meant nothing to their playoff chances, and they certainly played it that way.

Dave Wilson threw a touchdown pass, Morten Anderson kicked a field goal and the New Orleans defense sacked quarterback Phil Simms seven times as the Saints downed the playoff-hopeful Giants 10-3 in the National Football League regular-season finale for both clubs.

"Some people don't realize you can't switch it on and off. You have to play for 60 minutes," said Giants linebacker Harry Carson. "We've been told by some people we play our best when we are scared.

"I don't think too many people were scared today," he said. "When we are not scared we don't play well."

The Giants made plenty of mistakes against the Saints, committing six penalties, most at critical times, while giving up the ball twice on interceptions.

The defeat assured Washington of at least a wild-card playoff berth, and the Redskins can clinch the National Football Conference East title by defeating St. Louis Sunday.

New York, now 9-7, will back into a wild-card spot only if Washington defeats St. Louis Sunday and Miami downs Dallas Monday night.

"We weren't really looking at the playoff possibilities. We had more to gain by winning 10 games, something we had not done in a long while," said Carson. "New Orleans was not going any place, they had nothing to lose so they just opened it up. They made the plays when they had to."

Carson was not optimistic about the Giants' playoff chances.

"I am not thinking about the variables. We blew it last week in St. Louis. Right now, the way I look at it our season is over. I don't know what is going to happen in the other games. If it happens, it happens. I'm not holding my breath," Carson said.

New Orleans Coach Bum Phillips said the game was the Saints' best on defense all year and he was happy his players did not just go through the motions in their final game.

"I don't think the playoffs had anything to do with the way the Giants played," Phillips said. "You are paid as a pro to play football and you sign up for the war and not just one battle. I'm proud of the way our guys played. Everybody had to play for pride."

Wilson, who became the Saints' starting quarterback last week, tossed a 2-yard touchdown pass to fullback Hokie Gajan on the team's first possession, capping 13-play, 72-yard drive.

Andersen kicked a 37-yard field goal with 13:55 left in the game, and defensive backs Bobby Johnson and Frank Wattelet intercepted passes in the final 2:12 to kill the Giants' final drives.

Ali Haji-Sheikh booted a 37-yard field goal early in the second quarter for New York after a touchdown run by Joe Morris was nullified by a holding penalty.

It was one of several penalties the Giants committed to slow their offense, and the Saints' defense did the rest, nailing Simms behind the line seven times for 51 yards in losses. Linebacker Whitney Paul and nose tackle Frank Warren each had two sacks.

Simms, who finished the season with 4,044 yards passing, became the eighth player in NFL history to break the 4,000-yard mark. Dan Marino of Miami and Neil Lomax of St. Louis also did it this year.

The victory gave the Saints a seasonending record of 7-9.

LANDOVER, Md. (AP) — All-American Patrick Ewing, scored 15 points and grabbed 15 rebounds to key a second-half spurt that carried undefeated Georgetown past No.2 DePaul 77-57 Saturday to solidify the Hoyas claim as the nation's top team.

Georgetown, nursing a 53-51 lead with 11 minutes to play, scored 18 unanswered points to take a commanding 71-51 lead with four minutes remaining.

Ewing, Georgetown's 7-foot center, dominated play at both ends of the court, scoring seven points and blocking three shots during the Hoyas' run.

Perry McDonald, a freshman out of New Orleans, La., scored four points and stole two passes during the streak as the defending national champions raced to their seventh straigt win of the season and 18th in a row dating back to last year.

DePaul, 6-1, which had handed Georgetown one of only three defeats last year, trailed by as many as 18 in the first half before staging a comeback that saw them pull to within one, at 50-49, with 12 minutes to play. It was close as they would come, however, as the Georgetown defense, ranked No.1 in the nation choked off the rally by shutting out DePaul without a field goal for the final 13 minutes.

DePaul was a loser for the first time in seven games this year.

Georgetown looked to be in control early, scoring nine unanswered points to take a 17-7 lead seven minutes into the game.

Guard Michael Jackson, with 14 points and 12 assists, proved too fast for the DePaul defense, keying the Georgetown fast break, either penetrating for short jumpers or passing off to Patrick Ewing and Bill Martin for open shots.

The Blue Demons, missing 12 of their first 17 shots from the field were unable to keep pace with the home team, as Georgetown's lead ballooned to 36-18 with 5:31 remaining in the half.

DePaul closed the gap to 45-38 at the half, as Ewing, saddled with two early fouls, remained on the Georgetown bench for the final five minutes of the half.

Tyron Corbin and Dallas Comegys, with six points apiece, led the Blue Demons as they outscored Georgetown 20-7 to close out the half.

Corbin led the Blue Demons with 13, all coming in the first half.

Broncos Take AFC West, Pound Seahawks 31-14

SEATTLE (AP) — The Denver Broncos didn't need their custom-fitted earplugs Saturday in the Kingdome.

Instead, they pulled the plug on the noise from Seattle Seahawks fans as they wrapped up the AFC West title 31-14. Denver quarterback John Elway passed for a touchdown and ran for another in the National Football League regular season finale for both playoff-bound teams.

"A lot of the guys took their earplugs out after the first series," Elway said.

The Broncos scored on their first series and never looked back.

"It never got too loud," added running back Sammy Winder of the Broncos.

"The earplugs helped during the week at practice, but the noise never bothered us today," said Denver Coach Dan Reeves.

The Broncos were fitted with special $100-a-pair earplugs and practiced with turned-up crowd noise in anticipation of a roaring welcome at one of the NFL's most boisterous stadiums. Instead, they quieted the Kingdome crowd of 64,411 in a hurry.

"They just made the plays," said Seahawks' Coach Chuck Knox after his team's first home defeat this season. "They deserve to be the champs."

"We were ready to play," said Seattle quarterback Dave Krieg. "That's what hurts the most."

"My hat's off to them," said Seahawks' ace wide receiver Steve Largent. "They came into our place, where we've been playing so well and where we've got the crowd on our side, and they beat us."

Elway had a one-yard touchdown run in the first quarter and a 14-yard scoring pass to Jim Wright in the third period.

He was intercepted four times by the Seahawks in the first half, but it was the Broncos who made two key takeaways in a pivotal third quarter to wrap up their third AFC West crown. Denver also won the division in 1977 and 1978.

Special teams' player Tony Lilly and free safety Steve Foley made Denver's big plays in the third quarter as the Broncos went from a 10-7 halftime edge to a 24-7 lead.

Lilly recovered Randall Morris' fumble on the opening second-half kickoff and Denver went 34 yards in four plays for a touchdown with 2:24 gone in the second half. The Elway-Wright score capped the 34-yard drive. Foley ran back a Dave Krieg interception 40 yards for a score with 10:35 gone in the third quarter.

Denver, which lost to Seattle at home 27-24 three weeks ago, finished its regular season at 13-3. The Broncos play the AFC Central winner, to be decided Sunday — either Cincinnati or Pittsburgh — in Denver in two weeks.

Seattle, 12-4 after losing its final two regular-season games, is in the playoffs as an AFC wild-card team.

If the defending Super Bowl champion Los Angeles Raiders win Sunday at home against Pittsburgh, the Seahawks play in Los Angeles next weekend. If the Raiders lose, the game will be in Seattle.

Rick Parros scored on a 4-yard run in the fourth quarter and Rich Karlis kicked a 34-yard field goal in the opening period for the Broncos.

Krieg passed 4 yards to Dan Doornink in the second quarter and 14 to Charle Young in the third period for Seattle's touchdowns.

Montana State, 1-10 Last Year Is I-AA Champion

CHARLESTON, S.C. (AP) — Montana State culminated the biggest turnaround in NCAA history Saturday with a 19-6 victory over Louisiana Tech for the Division I-AA national championship. And Coach Dave Arnold says it was a long time coming.

Last year at this time, the Bobcats were 1-10. Now they're 12-2 and division champs "because of a great group of players who wanted to prove something. These kids have deserved everything we've gotten. This is the greatest coaching staff in the nation," he said.

Moments earlier, his team was presented the division championship trophy amid joyous fans at Johnson Hagood Stadium.

The Bobcats won the crown on the passing arm of quarterback Kelly Bradley who threw for 334 yards against the division's stingiest pass defense. Meanwhile, the swarming Bobcat defense kept Tech's own passing attack from getting untracked.

Bradley, who fired two touchdown strikes to tight end Joe Bignell, completed 32 passes in 57 attempts and one interception. Louisiana Tech, which had been giving up only 105.5 yards a game through the air, surrendered 234 in the first half alone.

Meanwhile the Montana State defense sacked Tech quarterback Kyle Gandy 11 times for a loss of 95 yards, snared four pass interceptions and recovered three fumbles.

"Our defense was the key today," Arnold said, and that view was seconded by Tech Coach A.L. Williams whose Bulldogs ended the season with a 10-5 mark.

"We just couldn't hold them out. Our defense did a good job. Before the game if you had told me we could hold them to 19 points I would have taken it," Williams said.

Bradley hit Bignell on touchdown strikes of 17 and 33 yards in the first half while Mike Carter added two field goals. Bignell finished the game with 10 receptions for 130 yards.

Tech didn't score again but the first-half points were enough. Tech's touchdown came with only 48 seconds remaining in the contest as Gandy hit split end Michael Sherman with a 10-yard touchdown strike to cap an eight play, 67-yard drive. Gandy's conversion pass fell incomplete.

"This wasn't our best offensive effort of the season but we played good enough to win," Bradley said.

A stadium crowd of 9,125 and a nationwide cable television audience watched the contest.

The Bobcats got on the scoreboard early in the first period when Mark Carter nailed a 32-year field goal after cornerback Derrick Abell intercepted a Gandy pass at the Tech 29 on the Bulldog's first possession.

After an exchange of possessions in which neither club moved the ball, the Montana State defense partially blocked a Barry Bowman punt, recovering at the Tech 31.

Five plays later, Bradley hit Bignell with a 17-yard touchdown strike.

With 4:54 remaining in the half, Bradley again found Bignell open in a seam of the Tech defense and connected for a 33-yard touchdown.

Carter added a 48-yard field goal with 6 seconds remaining in the half to give the Bobcats a 19-0 halftime lead. He missed two other field goal attempts in the second half.

The Bobcat defense didn't allow the Bulldogs across midfield or give up a first down until the second quarter.

Defensive end Mark Fellows tallied five quarterback sacks, five tackles for losses and recovered a fumble while four other Tech defenders recorded pass interceptions.

Bradley's 57 pass attempts is a division playoff record.

For Louisiana Tech, Gandy completed 24 of 38 for 287 yards. Sherman led the Bulldog receivers with four receptions for 77 yards.

Neither team was successful moving the ball on the ground. Louisiana State finished with minus 25 yards rushing while Montana State rushed for only 6.

Nevada-Las Vegas Wins California Bowl, 30-13

FRESNO, Calif. (AP) — Quarterback Randall Cunningham passed for two touchdowns and ran for a third to lead Nevada-Las Vegas to a 30-13 victory over Toledo in the California Bowl Saturday.

It was the most one-sided margin in the bowl's short history as all three earlier games were decided by one touchdown or less.

And the Rebels' victory allowed the Pacific Coast Athletic Association to get even in its rivalry with the Mid-American Conference at two victories apiece.

Despite a Cal Bowl record 154 yards running by Steve Morgan, Toledo was unable to generate enough offense on key third-and fourth-down plays.

The Rockets did close the gap to 16-13 in the third quarter on a 38-yard touchdown pass from quarterback A.J. Sager to wide receiver Bill Poure.

But the Rebels came back with two quick scores to run the margin to 30-13 by the end of the period.

Reserve running back Elbert "Ickey" Woods, a freshman from Fresno, thrilled local fans by bursting through the middle for a 16-yard score after wide receiver George Thomas made a diving catch for a 48-yard gain.

On UNLV's next possession, Cunningham, who passed for 270 yards on the day, faked a handoff, then scampered to the right on a 10-yard TD run.

Toledo moved deep into UNLV territory twice in the fourth quarter but was unable to score.

The Rebels exploded on their first offensive play of the game as wide receiver Michael McDade took a short pass from Cunningham, then scooted across the field before turning downfield behind several blockers for a 56-yard gain.

That set up a 19-yard touchdown pass from Cunningham to wide receiver Tony Gladney.

Cunningham engineered the Rebels' second touchdown with five completions for 53 yards, the last a seven-yard scoring strike to Kirk Jones.

The Rockets got two first half field goals, of 22 and 36, from Dave Walker.

Mayor Threatens Eagles With Suit

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Negotiations continued Saturday to keep the Eagles, football team in Philadelphia, and Mayor W. Wilson Goode warned owner Leonard Tose the city was prepared to go to court "to enforce the terms of our lease."

Goode, trying to prevent the National Football League team from moving to Phoenix, said the Veteran Stadium lease signed by the Eagles in 1970 runs through the year 2001 "and we have the right to keep the team here until then."

Tose, who bought the Eagles 15 years ago for $16.6 million, is said to have personal debts of more than $40 million and reportedly has agreed to sell 25 percent of his club to Phoenix businessman James Managhan to refinance his loan.

The Arizona Board of Regents, meanwhile, gave Arizona State University the green light Saturday to consider leasing its stadium to the Eagles if the team moves to Phoenix.

Goode, who has been involved in day-and-night negotiations since Tuesday, said Tose wants to keep the Eagles in Philadelphia "and the next 24 to 48 hours will tell us more than we know now."

"I think the odds are now 7 to 3 in favor of the team staying in the city," Goode said. "I think we're at fourth down and 1 yard to go, and we're at the 1-yard line. We need to push it over the goal line and we're there. My job is to keep the football team here in this city, and I feel I'm making progress doing that."

But then Goode said, if negotiations fail, "we are prepared to go to court whenever he tells us he is going to leave."

Goode also said he thought the NFL and Congress "ought to put into place some kind of rule or law where there would have to be some kind of process" before a franchise could leave a city.

"I shouldn't have to wake up at 6:30 in the morning and have the radio tell me that a football team that has been here for 51 years intends to leave the city," Goode said.

Court action already has begun. The NFL on Friday, saying Tose had acted "secretly and in bad faith," sought a federal injunction to block an Eagle move.

The suit said neither Tose nor the Eagles had any "contract right, or any other right, to purport to operate an NFL team in Phoenix."

Action might also be taken on Tuesday when the NFL owners meet in New York, probably with Tose, to discuss the Eagles situation.

A consortium of Philadelphia banks and insurance companies matched the Phoenix offer, which Goode put at around $42 million, but it was temporarily withdrawn when Tose refused to reliquish management control.

"The investors wanted to have some input, a major input, over who would manage the team in the long term," Goode said. "Basically, they wanted more control than Mr. Tose was willing to give.

"We are back talking about other alternatives at this time, but he said to me in no uncertain terms that 'I want to keep the team here.' We are trying to find a way to do it. We are working with him, we're talking with him, we're talking with his people, and I think it could be worked out. I don't know," Goode said.

Rodger Hillas, chairman of the Provident National Bank who represented the proposed lenders, said the loan offer included a $30 million "responsibility package" from the financial institutions and a $12 million "responsibility package" from the city.

City Solicitor Barbara Mather said all the cash would come from the lenders, but $12 million would be backed by deposits the city has in Philadelphia banks. Interest payments on the $12 million would be made to the city by Tose, not the banks, as part of the loan repayment plan.

In Tempe, Ariz., Regent A.J. "Jack" Pfister, who acted as spokesman for the board, said the next move was up to Tose.

"It's up to the Eagles to decide whether or not they're going to move to Phoenix," he said.

Asked whether the board would grant the Eagles a lease, Pfister declined to speculate. He said the board's decision would depend on "what kind of public support is there for an NFL team using Sun Devil Stadium."

Another regent, Donald G. Shropshire of Tucson, said he was opposed to allowing the Eagles to use the stadium. "Such a contract is not in the best interests of ASU," he said.

The 70,0210-seat stadium on the Arizona State campus is used by ASU's football team and the Arizona Outlaws of the United States Football League.

Hancock, Streck Hold Shot Lead Over Pohl, Powers

BOCA RATON, Fla. (AP) — Phil Hancock and Ron Streck held onto the lead in the $450,000 Chrysler PGA Team Championship despite a bogey on the final hole of the third round Saturday.

Hancock and Streck turned in a 9-under-par 63 to move to 29-under 187 after 54 holes. That left them one stroke in front of the team of Dan Pohl and Greg Powers, who shared the lead after each of the first two rounds, and four shots ahead of Gary Hallberg and Scott Hoch at 191.

Mark Hayes and Doug Tewell are at 192, with Hal Sutton and Ray Floyd right behind them at 193.

The leaders combined for 10 birdies in the first 17 holes, but the luster was taken off a near-perfect day when they both missed the green on No.18 and had to settle for a bogey.

"We would have liked a bird or par on the last hole, but we're still leading," said Hancock.

"It would be fun to win especially since we haven't won in quite a while," Streck added.

Streck has two career wins on the PGA Tour, the last coming in 1981, and Hancock's only PGA victory was in 1980.

That puts them three titles ahead of the second place team of Pohl and Powers, who rallied within a stroke of the leaders with back-to-back birdies on the final two holes and then complained about the "unheralded" tag laid on them during the first two days.

Johnny Miller and Jack Nicklaus, the defending champions in this event, continued to slip toward the bottom of the field with a 69 Saturday to fall to 197. They started with a 62 in the opening round and fired a 66 Friday.

Ueberroth Is Honored

ST. LOUIS (AP) — The Sporting News, citing the business acumen he demonstrated during the Los Angeles Olympics, has named baseball Commissioner Peter Ueberroth its Man of the Year for 1984.

Ueberroth, 47, is the 17th recipient of the TSN award. Bowie Kuhn, whom Ueberroth succeeded as commissioner in October, was 1983 recipient of the award.

Dick Kaegel, editor, said the selection of Ueberroth by the weekly publication was based solely on his role as chairman of the Los Angeles Olympic Organizing Committee.

Ueberroth's efforts helped produce a $155 million Olympics surplus.

Other finalists for the TSN award included Olympians Carl Lewis and Mary Lou Retton, football standouts Walter Payton, Doug Flutie and Dan Marino, tennis stars Martina Navratilova and John McEnroe, basketball Coach John Thompson, baseball Manager Sparky Anderson, and hockey star Wayne Gretzky, 1981 winner of the award.

Iavaroni Trade

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The Philadlephia 76ers traded forward Marc Iavaroni to the San Antonio Spurs Saturday in exchange for a third-round pick in 1986, according to a spokesperson for the National Basketball Association team.

Arguments Rage Over Who's #1

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON
AP Sports Writer

"I do not think that you are a very nice person," the letter, which The Associated Press received in December 1979, began.

"You should not even be allowed to sit on the AP Pole (sic)," it continued. "Even Santa Claus should be mad at you. I hope on Christmas Eve that you have nightmares and all you can see is Roll Tide."

It is five years this month since anyone lost his temper over where his favorite college football team was ranked — and that happened AFTER Alabama slipped behind Ohio State in The AP's final regular-season poll, ending a seven-week stay at the top. Alabama did, however, regain its No. 1 ranking after the bowl games and, along with it, the national championship.

It was AFTER the bowl games that Notre Dame won the 1977 national championship, trouncing No. 1 Texas 38-10 in the Cotton Bowl and vaulting from fifth place to No. 1, while Alabama routed Ohio State 35-6 in the Sugar Bowl but could do no better than climb from third to second.

Now there is a new twist to this familiar debate. The controversy is brewing BEFORE the bowl games — before Brigham Young becomes the first No. 1 team in the 49 years of the AP poll to play in a bowl other than the Rose, Cotton, Orange or Sugar.

The last time this much controversy arose before a bowl was 1966 when 11-0 Alabama finished third behind Notre Dame AND Michigan State, both 9-0-1. At least then the national champion was decided on the basis of the regular season, a system that was changed for good two years later.

And this year the debate is not just who should be No. 1, but what makes a No. 1.

Some members of the college football community seem upset over Brigham Young's lofty status even though the 12-0 Cougars are the nation's only undefeated team.

An ABC-TV telephone poll on Dec. 1 attracted 191,336 callers who thought BYU should not be No. 1 as opposed to 166,590 who thought the Cougars should. And the New York Times' computer rankings lists BYU no better than No. 20.

And then there is the Orange Bowl.

"Brigham Young's opponents as a group have a losing record; how can a team like that be the national champion?" said Nick Crane, chairman of the team selection committee. "As far as the Orange Bowl is concerned, we think ours is a national championship game (between No. 2 Oklahoma and No. 4 Washington)."

"I think it's fun," replied John Reid, executive director of the Holiday Bowl, where BYU, as champion of the Western Athletic Conference for the ninth year in a row, will meet Michigan on Friday night. "It's creating a lot of attention for our game, and that's great. Being an advocate of the bowl system, the more argument and controversy you have over who's No. 1, the more interest you create."

Controversy is nothing new where No. 1 is concerned. In the early 1930s, AP sports editor Alan J. Gould was a one-man college football poll. To cap the 1935 season, he ranked 8-0 Minnesota, 9-0 Princeton and 12-0 Southern Methodist as co-No. 1 teams.

"It created a storm in the Big Ten, in general, and Minneapolis-St. Paul, in particular," Gould recalled recently. "They thought theirs was the dominant team. There were some cases where agitated Minnesota followers wrote the general manager of AP telling him he should get rid of me because I couldn't tell one top team from another. There was one little town in Minnesota where they hung me in effigy.

"It was," he added, "the kind of controversy I had in mind for the appeal of the poll."

"Opinions are like noses — everybody's got one," former Texas Coach Darrell Royal once said.

The opinions went against the WAC in 1975, the last time one of its teams completed a season unbeaten and untied. Arizona State, 12-0 following a 17-14 Fiesta Bowl victory over Nebraska, finished a distant second in the final rankings to 11-1 Oklahoma.

Had Arizona State been in the Pacific-10 Conference then — it switched allegiances in 1978 — it is likely the Sun Devils would have been voted No. 1 with a perfect record. "Sure," concedes Oklahoma Coach Barry Switzer.

SPORT LINE

To The Sports Editor:

No man in the state pays less attention to the sports arena than I do. As a high school student, I was not the material for football, but I asked for a suit. In the original practice everyone lined up and the coach was passing the football to each player. When my turn came, he stopped, made a hiss and sarcastically said, "Next." I walked off the field and said, "To hell with this crap." I never changed my mind.

I went to Duke in 1930 as a pre-medical student and it was the year of the great Wallace Wade introduction in the football arena. I attended the games because I had to buy a season ticket. I had no feeling for these activities.

I have noticed the tremendous mental stain and the stress on the faces of practically all coaches shown on television. They know it is not how they play the game nor the sportsmanship involved. They know it is their necks and jobs if they don't consistently WIN. It is not how they build minds and bodies because they are not futuristically involved. It is how the score board looks when the games are over. To me, this is the fallacy of the whole thing. Look how close and how hard Ed Emory came to total victory. He really deserves as much credit as the winners. I hope he pushes for every cent that he can possibly get.

If I could be their attorney I would suggest in every contract. I will do my best for team and school, so help me, but you will pay me ten fold when and if any person, group or association tries to put the cap on my can. Good luck, Mr. Ed Emory.

Dr. Ralph Schell

To The Sports Editor

Several questions need to be addressed by the ECU administration.

If a University head coach of a major sports program can be terminated at the whim of an administrator, the successor of such a position should consider his/her future as insecure at best. If aforementioned administrator has valid reasons for dismissing a head coach, why does he hide behind the perverbial "catchall" excuse that University personnel matters are not for public record? After all, the public supports University programs and, in fact, the public pays his salary and therefore should be entitled to an explaination. Even if we, as ECU supporters and/or alumni do not deserve an explaination, Coach Emory does. Otherwise, couldn't the paying of salary without services for the next 3 years be considered misuse or mishandling of University funds?

If Coach Emory knows the reason(s) for his termination and is not fighting the issue, could it be that the University is justified? In either case, we should not continue to support such a system that keeps its tax-supported business "hush-hush" as Watergate or Abscam. We should know who and what we are supporting.

Smith's Free Throws Lift Rose

By WOODY PEELE

Tyrone Smith must love pressure. At least he seemed to thrive on it Friday night as Rose High School was taken to overtime for the second straight game.

The Rampants, up by 17 points midway through the third period, saw their magic disappear as Jacksonville stormed back to twice take a two-point lead in the late stages of regulation before Melvin Jenkins forced the extra period with a jumper with 46 seconds left.

After the two teams exchanged points in the opening minute of the overtime, Smith was fouled and calmly canned both free throws. After a Jacksonville miss, the Cardinals again fouled Smith — and again, he tossed them both through for a four-point lead.

The Cardinals scored and, drawn like a magnet, fouled Smith once more. And once more he knocked in both shots to pad the lead to four again. Following a turnover, Smith scored on the fast break — and again was fouled, completing the three-point play for a 63-56 lead with 16 seconds to play.

Carlton Wilson banged through one last basket with four seconds left to give Rose a 65-56 victory over the previously unbeaten Cardinals.

Rose's girls, after an early lead over the Lady Cardinals, succumbed, 50-32, in their game.

Rose scored the first six points of the boys' game, while Jacksonville was missing its first seven shots on the goal. Jenkins put Rose up, 2-0 and Dwight Smith and Wilson followed before Rodney Anderson broke the ice for the Cards two and a half minutes into the contest.

Rose continued to pull away, however, using a stiff man-to-man defense that helped force seven turnovers and 4-for-15 shooting by the Cards in the period. Rose upped the lead to as much as 10, 16-6 on a basket by Dwight Smith with 2:52 left.

However, the Rampants didn't score again in the period while Jacksonville got but one basket, leaving it at 16-8 as the second quarter opened.

Rose inched its lead back out by 11 three mintues into the period as Wilson drove in for a 24-13 lead. Jacksonville again cut it to eight, but trailed by ten, 30-20, at the half.

Wilson opened the second half with a three-point play and Martin Norville tossed back a missed shot for a 35-20 lead after just a minute. That was finally stretched to 17 on a rebounding shot by Jenkins at the 3:56 mark.

But Rose went cold right there, failing to score again in the quarter, and Benjy Taylor led a Jacksonville rebellion the rest of the way.

With Taylor hitting seven points, the Cardinals pushed through 14 points in the time left in the quarter, cutting the Rampant lead to only 41-38 as the period ended.

The Rampant drought continued early in the final frame as they twice missed at the line, while Taylor was hitting two free throws and Deano Venter struck from the lane for a 42-41 lead, Jacksonville's first. Jesse Pratt returned the lead to Rose, but Anderson got it back for the Cards.

A three-point play by Wilson with six minutes left pushed Rose back up, 46-44, but Jacksonville tied it up twice more before taking the lead on a Taylor drive with 2:25 left, 50-48. Jenkins hit two free throws to tie it, and Anderson hit for the Cards with 1:10 to go for another Jacksonville lead. Jenkins tied it at 52-all, however, and Jacksonville, working for the final shot of the game, took a bad one as missed, bringing on the overtime.

"Tyrone came through under a lot of pressure," Coach Jim Brewington said. "He really did the job for us.

"Jacksonville has a good club. We tried to put a lot of pressure on Taylor and force him to make turnovers. It paid off right there at the end when he turned the ball over a couple of times for us to win it. I think we gained a little respect from the win."

Brewington bemoaned the third period, however. "I just don't understand it. I've never had a team that played well consistantly in the third period."

Wilson led Rose with 22 points while Jenkins added 12. Smith had 11; nine in the overtime. Jacksonville was paced by Taylor with 17 while Anderson had 13 and Thomas Turner had 10.

Rose's girls held the lead — or were tied — most of the first period. Jacksonville led briefly at 9-8, but Pam Smith put the Rampettes back up with 12 seconds left and two free throws after the horn by Sherri Clark missed, leaving it at 10-8.

But Jacksonville, led by four points each by Cathy Borden and Tracy Green, hit the first eight points of the second period and forged a 16-10 lead. That was quickly pushed out to nine at 21-12. Rose cut it back to four, but trailed at the half, 23-17.

Jacksonville again struck quickly at the start of the third period, scoring the first eight points once more, with Lisa Simpson accounting for half of those. That ran the lead to 31-17. It finally reached 15 at the end of the period, 40-25.

A basket by Borden and two by Sheila Green upped the lead to 45-25 before Rose cut it to as little at 16 before the end.

"We played a team that was a lot better than we are, and quicker than we are, but I thought we played well considering the difference in talent. We didn't quit and I liked that. I think Kim Bridges has made a lot of progress and Margaret Koontz came off the bench to play well. I thought Kim Dupree did a good defensive job on Borden."

Tracy Green led Jacksonville with 15 points while Borden had 13 as did Simpson. Rose was led by Dupree witgh eight.

Rose is now 4-2 while the girls fall to 2-4. Jacksonville's boys, suffering their first loss drop to 3-1, while the girls are 4-0.

The Rampants return to action on Friday in the Pitt Holiday Tournament, facing D.H. Conley in the first round.

Smith's 27 Leads Chargers By Rams

HAVELOCK — Marvin Smith pumped in 27 points including a field goal and a pair of free throws in the second overtime to lead Ayden Gritton to a 60-56 vicotry over Havelock Friday in 3-A non-conference high school basketball.

Karen Johnson fired in 19 points and Laura Maxwell added 11 to lead the Lady Rams to a 51-34 win over Ayden-Grifton. The loss dropped the Lady Chargers to 0-6 on the season.

Doug Anderson added 12 points for the Chargers, including a field goal in the decisive overtime. Alvin West paced Havelock with 15 points and Duane Rose added 13.

Havelock held a 23-19 lead at halftime, but the Chargers rebounded to take a 32-30 advantage after the third quarter. But the Rams outscored Ayden-Grifton 18-16 in the final period to send the game to overtime on a last-second field goal.

The Chargers took the lead with seven seconds left on two free throws, then added a pair with one second left for the final margin.

The Chargers, now 4-2 on the season, remain idle until they open play Thursday in the Tri-County Invitational Tournament at North Lenoir High School.

Cowboys 'Snubbed' In Pro Bowl Voting

DALLAS (AP) — Several Dallas Cowboys are convinced their team was snubbed by voters picking players to compete in the National Football League Pro Bowl, and contended that "people in the league don't like the Cowboys."

Dallas had only three players selected to the National Football Conference team, none as starters.

"It's quite obvious to me that people in the league don't like the Cowboys," said running back Tony Dorsett. "The voting this year was amazing. It really makes you think about it."

Safety Michael Downs was outraged to learn that, despite his six interceptions and a team-leading 93 solo tackles, he had not been selected to the team.

He said he was surprised that San Francisco's Carlton Williamson, a cornerback most of the season, made the team as a safety. The 49ers' Ronnie Lott, injured for four games, and Dwight Hicks were each selected at cornerback, even though both have played safety this year.

The three 49ers were selected despite their team's ranking of 17th in pass defense in the league.

BECAUSE SO MUCH IS RIDING ON YOUR TIRES

YOU DECIDE - IT'S YOUR TEAM - YOUR ATHLETIC PROGRAM - YOUR UNIVERSITY

Alumni and Friends of East Carolina University

On December 10, 1984, Head Football Coach Edward H. Emory, was abruptly and unexpectedly fired without explanation by the Chancellor and Athletic Director of East Carolina University. This action was a result of the work of a very small group of people whose knowledge of the situations involved in college athletics appears to be limited. Coach Emory was given no explanation and no warning of his termination. We feel that this is unfair to him as an individual and it represents a black mark against East Carolina University.

It may be that there are valid reasons to have dismissed Coach Emory, but we feel that there were not any. We are unable to understand why he has not been given any reason for his termination. Being fired from a job is a difficult proposition under the best of circumstances but it appears that any person should be entitled to know the reasons why. It is very difficult to deal with the consequences of firing even when it is not made a public issue, but it is even more difficult when it is made a public issue and you do not know or understand why it happened.

This matter has been handled with no class. The reaction of the news media and the general public is that no one can understand it. How can a coach who, one year ago, had a team which was the only East Carolina University football team to end in a final Top Twenty poll, be deemed to be so bad after going to two and nine the next season after significant personnel losses. It may be that Ed Emory was guilty of being too optimistic for the 1984 season., but you don't get fired for that reason. It appears to us that the select few who terminated Coach Emory quickly forgot the results created in 1983 and were only concerned with "What have you done for me lately?"

It makes no sense to give a coach a four-year contract as a sign of confidence, and then to fire him at the end of one year and not have a legitimate reason. As members of the Pirate's Club and loyal supporters of East Carolina University we fail to understand why or how this could have happened without any input from the Pirate's Club. Further, we don't know how it could have happened without a general feeling among the alumni and supporters of East Carolina University that there needed to be a coaching change. If there were some particular reason which constituted a breach of the contract on Ed Emory's part, we could understand that there would be a reason for his termination. This reason could have been told to him.

Among the basic concepts of our American system are the sense of fairness, the ability to face your accuser and to answer those accusations. It appears that the group of people who fired Coach Emory were neither willing to face him with the reasons nor give him a chance to answer the accusations against him. We ask you to put yourselves in his place. How would you like to be treated the way he has been treated? Somehow it doesn't seem possible that a public institution, which has to answer to the citizens of this state, could take the action that they have taken. We therefore ask you to raise a hue and cry. Do not let this injustice go unrighted! Make that select few tell Coach Emory why he was fired. If there was a legitimate reason, then I think he and all other of his friends and supporters could understand what has happened. If there was no legitimate reason, should he not be rehired? We ask you to stop by and sign a petition at one of the locations listed below. In addition, we request and suggest that you both call and write Chancellor John Howell, Athletic Director Ken Karr, the members of the Board of Trustees of East Carolina University and the Pirate's Club. No one has ever given to East Carolina University what Coach Emory has given in terms of time and effort and sacrifice. We cannot let this injustice happen.

FRIENDS OF ECU

1) He chose to stand by East Carolina University at a time when he was being considered by a top ten University - a job change which would have given him a much better salary than his salary at East Carolina, and which contained many other fringe benefits for him and for his family.

2) He took a team of talented yet young and inexperienced players and made them into a winning football team- the 1983 team which gained nationwide publicity and was ranked number twenty on the polls. (the publicity included coverage by Sport's Illustrated)

3) During his leadership at East Carolina, the school has had its most successful recruiting years, and has witnessed an increase in the Pirate's Club membership and in the amount of money put into the athletic program. (especially in the football department)

4) More of East Carolina's football players have gone on to play professional football during Ed Emory's five years as coach than in the history of East Carolina University.

5) During his five years at East Carolina, more changes have occurred to help the football team than ever before-this includes the Strength Complex and an improvement in the locker room and fieldhouse facilities.

6) He is by far the most out-going of the many headcoaches East Carolina has had through the years and is obviously the most loved - What more can you ask of a man?

North Pitt Holds Off Conley Rally

By JIMMY DuPREE
Reflector Sports Writer

BETHEL — Clifton Williams chipped in 14 points to lead a balanced North Pitt attack, but the Panthers had to rally on defense in the final seconds of the game to hold off D.H. Conley 41-40 Friday in 3-A non-conference high school basketball action.

In the girls game, Regina Cox sank a free throw with seven seconds remaining to lift the Pant-HERS to a 40-39 victory over Conley, which did not score in the final 2:35 of the contest. North Pitt had tied the score on a free throw by Myra Moore with 33 seconds left, capping a five-point rally.

Ricky Farrow led the Vikings with 17 points, while Jett Wright added 13 as Conley rallied in the final period.

"We wanted to play a lot of people, but I'm sure glad we didn't blow it in the last 30 seconds," North Pitt Coach Cobby Deans said. "I thought Conley did a good job of controlling the tempo. They had a few streaks on us, especially at the end."

The Panthers took a 10-point lead on a field goal by Williams with 3:48 left in the game. But the Vikings retaliated with a 20-footer by Joel Cox, then added a follow shot by Farrow and free throw to trim the margin to 38-35 with 2:09 remaining.

Levon Shaw sank a pair of free throws for the Panthers, but Wright responded with two for Conley. Shaw connected on the first of a one-and-one free throw situation to close out the North Pitt scoring with 1:09 remaining.

Farrow swished a shot from the corner with 28 seconds left to cut the gap to 41-37, but he missed two free throws 13 seconds later. Wright controlled the rebound over the North Pitt reserves and drew a foul with 12 seconds on the clock.

After Wright made the first to trim the score to 41-38, Farrow grabbed the rebound and was fouled. Farrow sank both attempts this time to set the final margin.

But Conley was not out of the game yet. Steve Mills fouled Gentry Sneed with six seconds remaining, and Sneed missed the first free throw. Wright grabbed the rebound for the Vikings but fell out of bounds as he attempted to signal for a timeout.

"I think there were some very positive things to come out of this game," Conley Coach Walter Claybrook said. "North Pitt is probably the favorite in the Eastern Carolina Conference, and I think our guys saw — even if it was maybe a little late in the game — that they could compete with them.

"We didn't fold late in the game and came back and made a run at North Pitt. It looks like we're beginning to get a little consistency on the front line. Farrow's put together about three consistent games in a row, and he's just a sophomore.

"Wright had a broken nose, and we weren't sure up until game time if he'd be able to play. He only knows one speed and that's wide open.

"Right now, we just need a little more consistent play from our guards. We're getting better in a lot of areas."

The Panthers broke out to a 7-2 lead with less than three minutes elapsed in the first quarter, but the Vikings scored the next six points to take the lead before North Pitt closed the quarter with a 20-footer by Sneed at the buzzer to cap a four-point spurt.

North Pitt took its biggest lead of the half at 21-19 on a layup by Tracy Cherry with 3:48 till intermission. The Vikings cut the deficit to 24-20 as Wright came off the bench to post six points in the final 3:14.

Both teams sagged on offense in the third quarter, with North Pitt holding an 8-4 scoring edge.

"I thought our hustle on the boards made a big difference," Deans said. "We can jump, but when it comes to a jumping contest it depends on where the ball bounces off the board.

"We're young; we've got some bench strength that I think is going to help us in the conference race."

North Pitt improved its overall mark to 4-1 on the season, while Conley slipped to 1-5.

Pant-HERS—VALKYRIES

Cox paced the North Pitt girls with 26 points, while Trellaney Boyd led the Valkyries with 15 and Angela Smith added 12.

The Pant-HERS scored the first bucket of the night, but Conley led most of the way.

The Valkyries took a 30-27 lead into the final period, but Cox quickly put North Pitt ahead 31-30 with a pair of field goals inside. Karen Credle and Boyd posted field goals as Conley regained the lead with 5:42 left, but Cox and Myra Moore provided muscle inside to teeter the score 35-34 in favor of the Pant-HERS.

Angela Smith sank a 17-footer and added a free throw, then Credle connected from the floor to give the Valkyries a 39-35 margin with 2:35 remaining.

Cox completed a three-point play before Myra Moore's free throw knotted the score with 33 seconds left. Cox missed on her first free throw attempt with seven seconds on the clock, then sank the second for the final margin.

The Valkyries drove down the floor but missed on a desperation shot.

The Pant-HERS, ironically, connected on just eight out of 26 free throw attempts, while Conley made three out of eight.

"(Free throw shooting) has haunted us the last three or four ballgames," North Pitt Coach Randy Avery said. "We had a talk about that yesterday. Foul shooting is just a discipline part of the game. I guess I'm most excited because we had to come from behind."

North Pitt's girls improved their record to 3-2, while the Valkyries dropped to 2-4. North Pitt travels to D.H. Conley next Tuesday for a rematch.

Redskins Sweep Ahoskie

AHOSKIE — Roanoke High School swept a pair of Northeastern Conference basketball games from Ahoskie Friday night. The boys took a 66-42 decision, while the girls had a tougher time, winning 49-47 in overtime.

Ahoskie pushed out into a 12-8 lead in the first period of the girls' contest, but Roanoke took control in the second period, 16-8, That pushed Roanoke into a 24-20 lead at intermission.

Ahoskie again moved ahead in the third period with a 19-14 advantage, 39-38. Roanoke stayed close, however, and Gloria Duggins finally tied it at 47-47 with about 50 seconds left to play. Both teams had the chance to score after that and failed.

In the overtime, Duggins hit two free throws early in the frame, and then got the ball back with about a minute left when Ahoskie failed to hit. Although the Lady Redskins lost the ball in the final seconds, Ahoskie again failed to connect, giving Roanoke the win.

Duggins led Roanoke with 24 points, while Vickie Bracy had 20 and Anita Harrell had 11 for Ahoskie.

The win gives the Roanoke girls a 1-2 league mark and a 4-2 overall record.

Roanoke's boys roared out to a 20-9 lead in the first period and were never in trouble. They outscored Ahoskie, 10-4, in the second quarter to take a comfortable 30-13 lead into the second half.

Ahoskie was allowed a 15-12 rally in the third period, while the Redskins polished the Cougars off, 24-14, in the last frame.

Derrick Boyd led Roanoke with 16 points, while James Duggins had 10. No one scored in double figures for Ahoskie.

Barnes, Vines Lead Jaguars Past Rams

SNOW HILL — Ronnie Barnes fired in 16 points and Andre Vines added 11 to lead the Farmville Central Jaguars to a 55-41 victory over Greene Central in the opening Eastern Carolina 3-A high school basketball contest for both Friday.

Cyndi Hicks pumped in 20 points and Cynthia Jones added 17 to lead the Lady Rams to a 69-58 win over Farmville Central. Anntionnette Wilkes added 13 points and Dalen Herring 11 for Greene Central. Lisa Lang contributed 19 points, Stephanie Newton 15 and Joy Peaden 13 for the Lady Jaguars.

The Lady Rams trailed by a point going into the second quarter but managed a 29-26 halftime edge, then outran the Lady Jags 18-9 in the third quarter to put the game out of reach. The Lady Rams are now 5-0 overall, while Farmville Central slipped to 5-1.

Maurice Edwards paced Greene Central with 18 points.

The Rams jumped out to a 15-8 lead after the first quarter, but the Jags evened the score at halftime. Farmville held a one-point lead after three quarters, then outgunned the Rams 20-7 in the final period.

"We got a lead early — that's a position we've never been in before," Greene Central Coach Gregg Ashorn said. "We got out of our game plan and didn't handle the lead well.

"They got hot and shot real well in the fourth quarter, and we didn't play well in our man-to-man offense. We made too many turnovers."

Greene Central, now 0-5, hosts Wilson Beddingfield Tuesday in a non-conference matchup. Farmville Central, 2-4, travels to West Craven Tuesday.

Belhaven Downs Chocowinity Twice

CHOCOWINITY — Belhaven High School swept a pair of Tobacco Belt basketball games from Chocowinity Friday night. The Bulldogs won the boys' game, 51-42, and gained a 58-47 decision in the girls' contest.

Belhaven's boys inched out into a 13-9 lead in the first quarter of the game, and continued to inch away in the second quarter. They outscored the Indians, 11-7 and took a 24-16 lead into the dressing rooms.

Chocowinity came back with a 14-10 rally in the third period, trimming the Bulldog lead to 34-30. But Belhaven outscored the Tribe to the line, 17-12, to claim the win.

Wayne Moore led Belhaven with 20 points, while Brady Cox added 13 and Ed Burrus picked up 10. Roy Hooker led Chocowinity with 11.

The loss dropped the boys to 1-1 in the league and 2-2 overall.

Belhaven also eased out into a slim first period lead in the girls game, 14-11, but they began to really pull away in the second period. A 19-11 advantage in that gave the Lady Bulldogs a 33-23 edge at the half. They tacked one more point to the lead — in the third period — outhitting the Tribe 13-12, and matched Chocowinity in the final quarter, 12-12.

Vanessa Rodmon led Belhaven with 17 points while Sally Cotton and Tara Brewington each had 12. Zena Warren had 13, Tawanda Geraldn 12 and Kim Green, 10, for the Indians.

The girls are now 0-2 in the league and 2-2 overall.

Watkins' 25 Paces Friendship By GCA

Steve Watkins poured in 25 points and led Friendship Christian Academy to a 68-65 victory over Greenville Christian Academy Friday night.

Greenville's girls rolled up a 38-28 win in their contest.

Greenville did well early, moving out to an 18-13 lead in the first period. Friendship kept pace and erased much of the lead in the second period, trailing 35-33 at intermission.

In the third period, however, Friendship took control with a 22-14 margin. That pushed them ahead, 55-49. Greenville tried to rally, but fell short, 16-13.

"We played a good first half," Coach Dale Thatcher said. "We've just got to learn how to win a ball game. Free throws hurt us as well, although it wasn't the factor at the end. We played a good team and could have looked bad. We just have to be patient with ourselves."

In addition to Watkins' points, Shawn Kurdys added 18 for Friendship. Dan Andrews led Greenville with 19, while Paul Hollingsworth had 15 and Robin House had 10.

Greenville's girls -rushed away from Friendship in the opening quarter, 15-8, and then outscored them in the second period, 10-8, to hold a 25-16 lead at the half. Greenville again outscored their foe, 9-2, to up the lead to 34-18 going into the final period. Friendship was allowed a 10-4 rally in that frame, to no avail.

Patti Carr led Greenville with nine points, while Kelly Vinson had 10 for Friendship.

Greenville's boys are now 3-5 while the girls are 5-2. Greenville returns to action on Tuesday, traveling to Bethel Academy in Kinston.

Rodney Brown led Trinity with 21 points and he also pulled 16 rebounds. Jimmy Powers added 13 points and Kyler Welch and Edward Everett each had 12. A.J. Outlaw led Bethel with 21, while Dave Davis had 12 and David Smith had 10.

Trinity's girls outscored Bethel in the first period 16-10. The action slowed in the second quarter, with Trinity getting only four points, but Bethel failed to score, leaving Trinity up, 20-10 at intermission.

Bethel cut one point off the lead in the third quarter, but still trailed, 29-20. Trinity outhit Bethel, 7-6, in the final quarter to wrap it up.

Renee Deans led Trinity with 20 points, while Bobbie Harrold had 18 to pace Bethel.

Trinity is now 4-2, while the girls are 2-2. Trinity returns to action on January 4, traveling to Grace Christian of Rocky Mount.

Hope For Black Ducks — Is it a black duck or a hen mallard? If you're not sure when the regular waterfowl season opens, don't shoot. The regular duck season runs from Dec. 2 through Jan. 19. However, in an effort to halt a decline in the black duck population, the season for this species will open later — from Dec. 27 through Jan. 19 — and hunters will be allowed to take only one black duck daily.

"The shorter season and reduced bag limit is part of a three-year effort to reduce the harvest of black ducks by 25 percent throughout the Atlantic Flyway," said Grady Barnes, section manager for research and regulations for the division of wildlife management of the North Carolina Wildlife Resources Commission. "Last year, in the first year of this program, the flyway harvest of black ducks was reduced by 37 percent over the average annual harvest for the previous five years. In North Carolina, the harvest was reduced by 31 percent over the previous season. At the end of the three-year program, these chages in regulations will be evaluated. We also commend hunters throughout the flyway for adhering to the new regulations and helping us achieve the reduction."

Biologists are concerned about a steady decline in the black duck population. The number of black ducks in the United States and Canada dropped from five million to less than two million in the past three decades. The factors affecting black ducks are complex and not fully understood. However, biologists believe that three factors have each played a part.

Acid rain may be hurting black duck numbers by lowering the productivity of marshes in Canada and the northeast — the prime breeding habitat for the species. Also, hybridization of black ducks with mallards is a problem. Black ducks are traditionally a bird of the coastal marshes and forested swamps while mallards inhabited the prairie. As forests were cleared for agriculture and development, mallards have extended their range and the two species have readily hybridized.

Finally, heavy hunting pressure has taken its toll. The black duck is the leading bird in the waterfowl harvest in most northeastern states, and usually ranks fourth or fifth in North Carolina. By reducing the harvest of young black ducks — especially breeding age females — biologists hope t stabilize the population.

"We hope that the reduction of the black ducks harvest in the Atlantic Flyway will halt their continued decline," Barnes said. "Problems with hybridization and acid rain will continue, but hunting is the only factor over which we have any control. If the decline continues at the current rate, further cutbacks in hunting seasons and bag limits may be necessary in the future."

Barnes says that one problem is that it is easy to confuse a hen mallard with a black duck. He offers the following tips for differentiating between the two:

- The black duck is uniformly dark. The only noticeable white on its body is on the undersides of its wings, which contrast sharply with its darker body.
- The belly of the hen mallard is light colored while the belly of the black duck is dark.
- The hen mallard has distinctive white borders along the upper and lower edges of the blue patch (speculum) on each wing.

Give A Gift Of Wildlife — Are you looking for a unique Christmas gift? Anyone who likes the outdoors would enjoy a 1985 North Carolina Wildlife Calendar, a subscription to Wildlife in North Carolina magazine, or better yet — both!

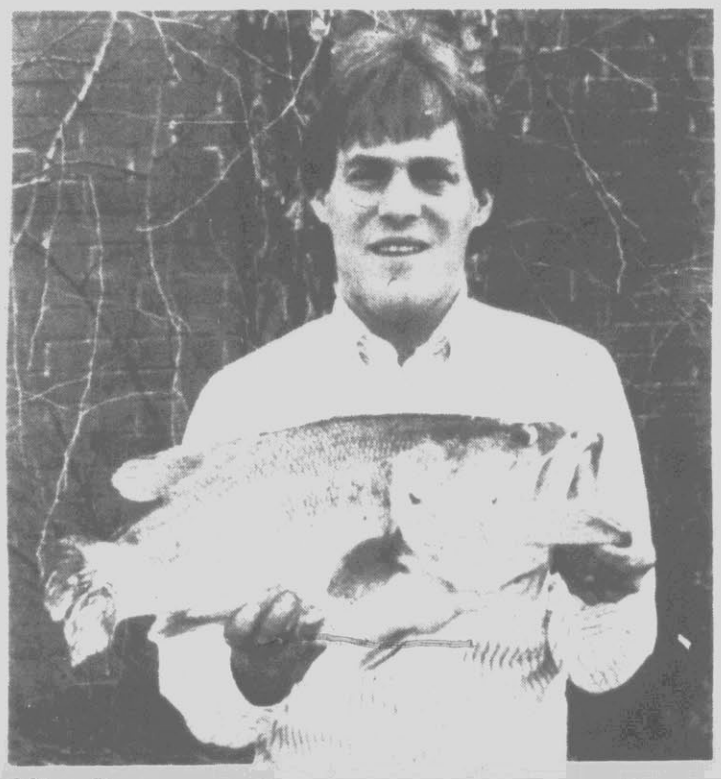

The 1985 North Carolina Wildlife Calendar is the third state wildlife calendar to be produced. However, unlike the previous calendars which ran from September through August, this year's calendar follows a standard calendar year — from January through December of 1985. The new calendar features the works of eight nationally known wildlife artists including Duane Raver, Sallie Middleton, Bob Dance, Larry Barton, Bob Herr, Joe Seme, Jake Taylor and Harry Antis. In addition, pencil sketches by David Williams, director of Wildlife in North Carolina magazine, accompany the painting. Also, the Almanac Section — which includes a potpourri of useful information for the outdoorsman and nature lover — has been expanded to eight pages. Sportsmen will also enjoy the phases of the moon and good and bad fishing days shown for each month.

The 1985 North Carolina Wildlife Calendar may be ordered for $6.18 (includes tax and shipping for $6.27 for Wake County residents only) from Calendar, N.C. Wildlife Resources Commission, 512 N. Salisbury St., Raleigh, N.C. 27611.

A subscription to Wildlife in North Carolina magazine is also always a welcome gift. This award-winning monthly magazine features informative articles and beautiful color photographs dealing with North Carolina hunting and fishing, boating, natural history, environmental issues, wildlife management, non-game and endangered species, travel and history, outdoor sports such as hiking, camping and canoeing and other subjects.

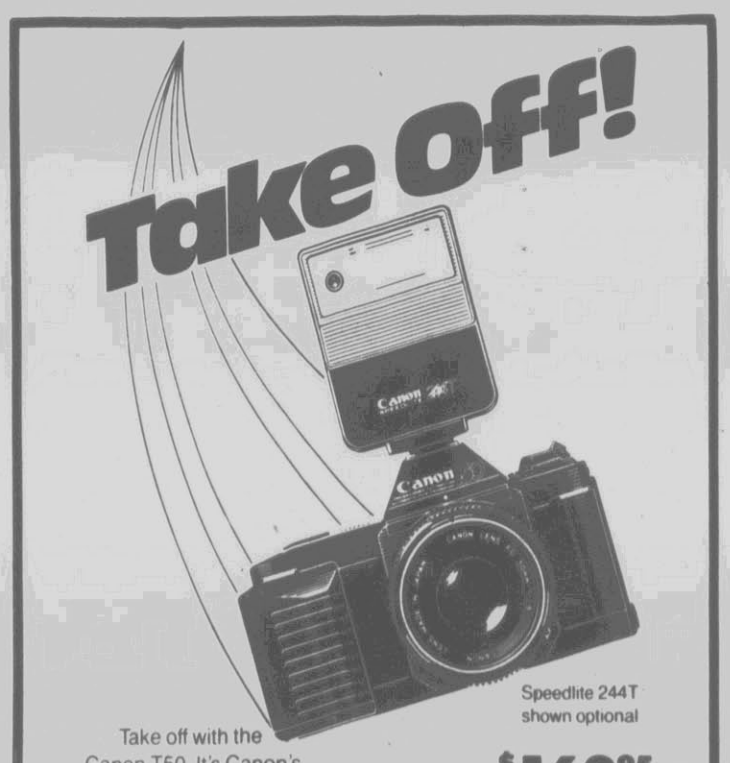

Subscriptions to Wildlife in North Carolina are available for $5 for one year or $12 for three years. A special lifetime subscription (proceeds are placed in the Wildlife Endowment Fund) is also available for $100. Order blanks for gift subscriptions (a card will be sent to the recipient) and regular subscriptions are available from Wildlife in North Carolina magazine, 512 N. Salisbury St., Raleigh, N.C. 27611.

Potential Records — Two fly rod world records for bluefish may tumble following an early December blitz of the big choppers at Oregon Inlet on the North Carolina outer banks. Monday, Dec. 3 proved an eventful day for Garry Oliver of Nags Head, N.C. who reported landing, with current International Game Fish Association records in parentheses, a 16-pound, nine ounce blue on eight-pound test fly rod (15 pounds, three ounces, Shark Bay, W.A. Australia, Oct. 2, 1981) and a 19-pound, seven-ounce blue on 16-pound test fly rod (16 pounds, eight ounces, Virginia Beach, Nov. 16, 1968).

Conley's Vikings Take On New Look

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

HOLLYWOOD — There's a lot new about the D.H. Conley basketball program this fall. Not only do the Vikings have a new head coach in Walter Claybrook, there are is only one player on the team who has varsity experience.

Claybrook, who moved up from the assistant's job after Shelly Marsh left Conley for Havelock, found two experienced players when practice opened, but one of them has been suspended. That leaves only Steve Mills, a 5-10 senior guard, with any varsity experience.

The Vikes, 14-11 last year and 7-3 in Coastal Conference play, not only are lacking in experience, they also are lacking in height, and that makes chances for an upper division finish this year doubtful.

"We don't have anyone over 6-2 who is playing a lot now. Paul Hill (a 6-3 senior center) is the tallest player on the team, but so far he hasn't played much," Claybrook said.

Currently, Claybrook is starting Jeff Wright, a 6-1½ junior, at center; and Ricky Farrow, a 6-1 sophomre, and Fred Bryant, a 5-11 junior at the forwards. Up until last Tuesday, Joel Cox, a 6-0 junior, had played in the backcourt with Mills. But he suffered a stretched ligament in his knee against Ayden-Grifton and will miss the next several weeks.

In the meantime, Claybrook has several options. First, he intends to try to bring Hill in at center, move Wright to forward and Bryant to guard. If that doesn't pan out, he'll try Ken Hadnott, a 6-1 senior, at the guard slot. "He could be our best outside threat," Claybrook said. "Either way, both of them will see a lot of action."

A couple of juniors, 5-9 Mitch Phillips and 5-11 Steve Vines will be the backups at guards, while Roy Lewis and Arthur Best, both 6-1 juniors, will spell the frontcourt people.

Rounding out the team are Tonnette Carr, a 5-11 senior, and Shane Adams, a 5-9 junior.

There is still a chance that Reggie Smith, a 6-4 senior, could rejoin the team. Claybrook said that he was currently under suspension, but would be given the opportunity to rejoin the squad after Christmas. "It all depends on his attitude," Claybrook said.

With the lack of height and experience, Claybrook feels that the team must make up for it with hustle and desire. "We've been in every game, and for the most part we've outplayed our opponents in the first half, only to have things go bad for us in the second. It seems like we fall apart and don't ever recover. I'm hoping that with experience, things will come together."

While the offense is struggling now, Claybrook hopes too that that will come along. "We're not blessed with real good outside shooters. But if we take good shots, I think we'll be all right. We've been able to get the ball inside, but they act like they're afraid to put it up for fear it'll be blocked. They've got to learn to power it up."

Defense has been aggressive and the hustle has paid off for the most part, despite the fact that the Vikes have yet to win. "We've played mainly zone defense so far. Once we get it down better, we'll start pressing more and putting in some traps."

Most observers feel the conference race will be between West Carteret and West Craven. "Havelock and North Lenoir appear to be in the middle, with us and White Oak in the rear. But we can get some things going I think we could slip up in the pack.

"The biggest problem right now is to keep our confidence up. After losing three in a row, it's hard to keep your head up, but we've got to keep trying so that we won't miss the opportunity when it comes."

VALKYRIES

Coach Joy Riddick has three starters back from last year's team that went 19-8 and finished third in the Coastal Conference standings. However, the two biggest guns on that team, Karen Barrett and Mechio Kornegay, are no longer around.

Returning are 5-11 senior forward Lisa Mills, 5-8 senior center Debbie Patrick and 5-5 sophomore guard Trellany Boyd.

Joining those three in the starting lineup is Angela Smith, a 5-6 senior guard. The other starting position, according to Riddick, is still up for grabs with no one gaining that spot as yet.

Other veterans on the team include Sheila Dixon, a 5-9 senior; Rhonda Jackson, a 5-7 sophomore and Karen Credle, a 5-3 junior.

Newcomers to the team include Casey Chapin, 5-10; Kim Smith, 5-8; Susan Manning, 5-4; Michelle Hall, 5-6; and Sywanda Carr, 5-0, all freshmen, and Terri Spencer, a 5-7 senior who did not play last season.

"Basically, I've been pleased with the way things have gone," Riddick said. The Valkyries were 2-3 going into Friday night's action against North Pitt.

"We do have three people back, but two of them are playing in different positions this year," Riddick said. "I've moved Lisa and Debbie inside to a double post and made some other changes in the offense."

Injuries have also caused some problems so far. "Against Rose, we had to play three freshmen throughout most of the game we lost. I knew this would be a rebuilding year but our young girls have a lot of talent. If it comes together, we will be okay and for next year."

Riddick said her seniors are doing a good jop in leadership, and were also accepting their new positions. "I knew that we wouldn't dominate like we have in the past, but the girls are taking the challenge to take each game one at a time."

One of the good things, according to the coach, is that the Valkyries play no conference games until after the Christmas holidays. "That should help us quite a bit — getting our experience in non-conference games."

In the conference race, Riddick feels that North Lenoir, despite some serious losses, should again be strong. "West Carteret has a lot of people back and should be strong too. Havelock lost some key people, but they have good experience.

"I really look for us to be in the top four. That's our goal — to make it back to the district tournament. I hope we finish there, and I can see no reason why we can't. I don't see us winning the title, but we could challenge with a few breaks."

Bears Down Columbia

BEAR GRASS — Bear Grass built up an early lead and rode that to a 61-48 Tobacco Belt Conference basketball victory over Columbia Friday night.

The Columbia girls, however, handed the Lady Bears their first loss of the year, 46-39.

In the boys' game, the Bears pushed out to a 19-8 lead in the opening quarter of play. Columbia put on a rally in the second period, 12-8, but still was down at the half, 27-20.

The Bears outscored Columbia, 14-11, in the third period and again in the final frame, 20-17, to come away with the victory.

Darryl Brown led Bear Grass with 14 points whil Larry Sheppard added 10. No one scored in double figures for Columbia.

Bear Grass' girls pushed out to a 12-8 lead in the first period and outscored Columbia in the second frame, 11-10, to hold a 23-18 lead at the half.

But in the third period, the Bears were held to only three points, while Columbia picked up 11 for a 29-26 lead. Columbia outhit the Bears, 17-13, in the final period to claim the win.

Tasha Clegg led Columbia with 23 points, while Joyce Hassell added 12. Amy Lilly had 14 points to lead the Bears.

Bear Grass' boys are now 1-1 in league play and 3-2 overall, while the girls fall to 1-1 in the league and 4-1 overall.

Bear Grass plays host to Creswell on Tuesday.

Bulldogs Set For Citrus

ATHENS, Ga. (AP) — The Georgia football team travels to Orlando Sunday to complete preparations for the Dec. 22 Citrus Bowl date with Florida State.

Only light running was planned for today, a break for the players who had been put through a grinding week of work by Coach Vince Dooley.

"After three days like we've had, I'm sure they are ready for a break," Dooley said after Friday's session. "We just had to get out here today and try to recapture some things that are basic and fundamental about the game of football."

During Friday's workout, freshman tailback Cleveland Gary showed he is back at full speed.

The speedster from Indian Town, Fla., was hurt Oct. 13 against Mississippi and has seen only limited action since. He opened Friday's scrimmage with a 30-yard run on his first carry.

"Gary ran strong all day. We like the way he looks now," Dooley said.

Another freshman tailback, Lars Tate, broke a 70-yard touchdown run against the No. 2 defense.

"I thought Lars Tate, Cleveland Gary and Andre Smith all looked good, especially Gary, who continues to show his strength," Dooley said.

All three quarterbacks were used Friday and will play against the Seminoles "in situations we feel will be right for them," Dooley said. "We can't expect them to do things they aren't capable of."

Dickerson Denies Report

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Running back Eric Dickerson has denied a published report that he intended to ask for a new contract after breaking O.J. Simpson's single-season National Football League rushing record.

"I'm very upset about that, especially this close to the game," Dickerson told sportscaster Ted Dawson of KABC-TV. "I'm very disgusted, and when I get back, there's gonna be something done about that article."

Dickerson was quoted as saying in Saturday's editions of the Los Angeles Times that his quotes in the Los Angeles Herald Examiner published Friday "came out of a lackadaisical conversation.

"The guy asked me about my conract, and I said it was a good contract, but we may have to talk about it after the season," Dickerson said. "That was all that was said.

"I feel sick about it, to be honest. It makes me seem like I'm money-hungry, and I'm not a money-hungry person. I'm just looking for the best deal that I can get. But right now that's not in my future. I just want to finish the season."

Dickerson is reportedly earning $175,000 in salary and a $225,000 reporting bonus this season, the second year of a four-year contract that totals $2.2 million.

Dickerson's lawyer, Jack Mills of Boulder, Colo., was in the visiting owner's suite at Candlestick Park in San Francisco with Rams' owner Georgia Frontiere Friday night, according to the Times.

The Rams dropped a 19-16 decision to the 49ers in the regular-season finale for both teams. Dickerson gained 98 yards to finish the year with 2,105 yards. Simpson held the record of 2,003 yards set in 1973 until Dickerson broke it last Sunday.

"I can't confirm there are any negotiations," Mills was quoted as saying. "I can only say this is very upsetting to Eric. He was embarrassed about it. It was untimely.

"There are absolutely no demands or no threats, and there will be none. Eric is willing to consider an extension of his contract, but he will honor his contract."

Conley Pins Havelock

HOLLYWOOD — D.H. Conley's wrestling team won the final three weight classes to gain a 37-28 wrestling victory over Havelock Friday night. It marked the first Coastal Conference action for the Vikings, who are now 7-0 overall.

Havelock held the lead in the match, 27-21, after the 167-pound match, but Clifton Clemons came away with a pin, tying the meet. Ricky Rice followed with a superior decision to put Conley up by five, leaving the door open for Havelock to win with a pin at heavyweight.

But — as he has done several times this year — Gerald Harper came up with the decisive win, gaining a pin to clinch the victory.

David Farris, Jackie King, Kerry Farris, Joel Maye and Harper are all 7-0 so far and David Farris and Harper lead the team in pins with six each.

Conley travels to Raleigh next Friday and Saturday for the WRAL Invitational Tournament.

Summary:

98 — David Farris (C) p. Sam Bennett, 1:07.
105 — Mike O'Shaunessey (H) won by forfeit.
112 — Dennis Fleming (H) p. Sherman Anderson, 0:52.
119 — Jackie King (C) d. Brad Lanto, 19-13.
126 — Troy Neberger (H) d. Carter Atkins, 5-4.
132 — Kerry Farris (C) d. Barry McKnight, 13-5.
138 — Joel Maye (C) d. Jeff Hawker, 22-7.
145 — Jeff Peay (H) p. Curtis Williams, 1:30.
155 — Martin Anderson (C) d. Bill Clark, 8-1.

185 — Clifton Clemons (C) p. Chris Mendis, 1:25.

Blab Shakes Slow Start

By The Associated Press

Indiana's Ewe Blab has had a slow start this season, but he didn't waste any time showing who's boss in the Indiana basketball classic.

Benched after a disappointing performance in Indiana's season opener and trying to work out of Coach Bobby Knight's doghouse ever since, Blab scored 21 of his career-high 29 points in the first half to spark the No. 16 Hoosiers to an 80-57 rout of Western Kentucky Friday night.

The victory was the 300th for Knight in 14 seasons at Indiana. Knight, who also coached at Army, became the youngest college coach to score 400 victories in a career earlier this month.

Blab, most valuable player in this tournament last year, did eventually sit down when Knight pulled him with the outcome no longer in doubt. Blab played 29 minutes.

"Blab was a real force inside, along with moving the basketball around well," Knight said. "It was to our advantage to have him in the post. Blab has had a different mental approach to the game this year and has really worked hard. Not only is he working hard, but he mentally knows where the other players are all the time, more than a year ago."

Indiana won a spot in Saturday night's finals against St. Joseph's, which edged Stetson 57-55. Bob Lojewski and Rodney Blake each scored 19 points for the winners with Lojewski hitting two key free throws in the final five seconds.

In other action involving the nation's ranked teams, No. 7 Southern Methodist defeated Idaho 90-71 in the opening round of the Dallas Morning News Classic, and No. 11 Virginia Tech walloped Iowa State 80-53 in the opening round of the Volunteer Classic.

Jon Koncak and Carl Wright each scored 19 points night to lead SMU's victory. The Vandals of the Big Sky Conference surprised the Southwest Conference Mustangs early in the first half with an aggressive, swarming defense and jumped to a nine-point lead behind the shooting of forward Ulf Spears.

But the cold-shooting Mustangs soon recovered behind the jump shots of Butch Moore and Wright and the inside play of Koncak.

"We just decided we had to start playing tough inside," said SMU Coach Dave Bliss. "Jon is not the most ballyhooed center in the country, but he just keeps getting better. He is able to do a lot more things physically this season than he was last year."

In the other opening game of the Dallas tournament, Mitch Jones came off the bench to score a career-high 19 points and lead Oklahoma State to a 62-52 win over the University of San Diego.

Perry Young's 28 points led Virginia Tech over Iowa State.

BB&T Executive Admits Embezzling

WILSON, N.C. (UPI) — A Branch Banking & Trust Co. senior vice president surrendered to the FBI and admitted embezzling several hundred thousand dollars, a bank official says.

"It's certainly a sad occasion, not a happy thing to come about around Christmas time," said Russell Thompson, BB&T senior vice president for corporate communications.

Thomas Riley of Wilson turned himself in to the FBI Wednesday and the bank fired him the same day, Thompson said. Riley had worked with the bank 14 years and had been a Wilson Chamber of Commerce president.

No charges have been fied against Riley and Thompson said the FBI had told bank officials only that Riley admitted embezzling funds from the bank.

Officials checked the bank's funds and found several hundred thousand dollars missing, Thompson said, and Assistant U.S. Attorney Douglas McCullough confirmed the embezzlement was large.

"I can confirm there is an embezzlement investigation into BB&T in Wilson and that the scope of that investigation involves an investigation of hundreds of thousands of dollars," McCullough said.

Authorities said the investigation could take several months.

"I can confirm that we are conducting an investigation based on an approach made to us by an individual connected with the bank," said Robert Pence, chief of the FBI in North Carolina. "We see no urgency in this. We're going to take our time."

Riley's father, Bruce Riley, is a retired First Union National Bank executive. He said he talked to his son briefly by phone since Wednesday and did not discuss the matter in detail with him.

"I felt like I didn't want to discuss that with him until I can see him in person," Riley said.

Riley said he thought his son would return to Wilson Saturday after spending two or three days in Raleigh.

GM-Toyota Plant Is Combining Old, New

FREMONT, Calif. (AP) — Workers don't punch clocks at the new General Motors-Toyota auto factory here and office-less executives hunt for parking space like everybody else, while inside the work-force does voluntary calisthenics.

The new Toyota-run plant is a trial marriage of Japanese techniques and American union labor, possibly foreshadowing changes over the horizon for American industry.

The company, which employs more than 3,000, is called the New United Motor Manufacturing Inc. Its first car will roll off the line Tuesday.

In the place of the customary hierarchy of a U.S. factory operation are so-called team members, team leaders, teamwork discussions, early morning exercises, in-plant basketball courts and, soon to come, voluntary uniforms.

Many workers adjusting to the new plant's ways are veterans of the former Fremont GM plant which was known for low morale and high absenteeism. That plant closed in March 1982.

Years ago, one malcontented worker once bragged that he dumped ball bearings in the door assemblies so the door would rattle when it was closed.

Now, Tony De Jesus, former president of the United Auto Workers Fremont local, conducts orientation programs for new employees.

"Six months ago I was very skeptical," said the 41-year-old De Jesus, adding he now has come to feel "very positively" about the experiment.

The new company's managers have lived up to their promises, he said. "When you work with them on a daily basis you see what they mean by mutual trust. We have a lot of input."

The trust is illustrated by the disappeance of the time clocks, replaced by weekly time cards filled out by workers. The operation is described as among the most egalitarian plants in the country, with executives lunching at the same tables with assembly workers, and parking their cars on an equal basis: no reserved spaces.

De Jesus said that under the Japanese system, employees perform multiple jobs as an alternative to assembly-line boredom.

If the experiment succeeds, GM is expected to transplant some of the innovations to other plants in an attempt to improve the U.S. auto industry's damaged quality image.

Only about 30 of some 3,300 union members who had worked at the Fremont GM plant have been refused jobs at the new factory, said William Childs, the company's top personnel official. They were rejected, he said, mostly for "poor work records," including attendance, discipline and alcohol-abuse problems.

State Balks At Sale Plan

RALEIGH (AP) — State Agriculture Commissioner Jim Graham says he's urged a Minnesota-based firm not to buy a local soybean processing facility, saying Cargill Inc. shouldn't dominate the state's soybean market.

Graham said he had written a letter to Cargill chairman Whitney McMillan asking that he drop plans to acquire the Ralston Purina Co. plant in Raleigh.

"I have taken this action on behalf of the many North Carolina soybean producers and soybean meal users who have expressed their concern over the potential anti-competitive effect of the proposed acquisition," said Graham in a prepared statement Friday.

The purchase, if carried out, "would give Cargill more than 75 percent of the (soybean) crushing capacity in the state," said Graham. Cargill already operates a Fayetteville plant that's the only other major crushing operation in North Carolina.

Purina wants to sell soybean processing plants in six states to Cargill Inc., a Minnesota-based company that may be the world's largest agribusiness company.

Purina, based in St. Louis, says it's selling the plants because it wants to focus more on consumer products such as pet food.

The Purina plant in Raleigh, built in the 1940s, makes soybean meal for poultry and livestock feed and employs 59 people.

Graham said the state attorney general's office had contacted the Anti-Trust Division of the U.S. Department of Justice and the Federal Trade Commission, and asked them to investigate and "intervene if necessary to prevent the proposed acquisition."

Real Estate Industry Rejects Tax Plan

By MARY BETH FRANKLIN

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Treasury Department's tax reform proposal has drawn sharp opposition within the real estate business and warnings that it will increase the cost of owning a home, depress the building industry and push rents higher.

The sweeping proposal would eliminate most deductions, credits and exemptions in exchange for lower tax rates and a simpler system of only three tax brackets — 15, 25 and 35 percent, depending on income level.

Treasury Secretary Donald Regan, who outlined the plan a few weeks ago, estimated that 78 percent of all taxpayers will pay the same amount of taxes or less under the new proposal.

But, he said, they would save time by filling out less complicated tax returns and the system would be perceived as fairer since many loopholes would be eliminated.

The remaining 22 percent of the nation's taxpayers would face higher taxes, particularly those who receive hefty fringe benefits from their employers, who take a large number of deductions or who invest heavily in tax shelters.

The Treasury Department views many of the current tax deductions that affect real estate as a haven for tax shelters that should be eliminated. The real estate industry, however, claims they are necessary to attract investors needed to finance affordable housing.

The various real estate trade associations immediately told President Reagan that the proposal has some serious flaws. Reagan is studying the Treasury plan and promises to send his own proposal to Congress early next year.

"The available supply of affordable housing for people who cannot afford to buy their own home will be in severe jeopardy if the Treasury Department's flat tax reform proposal is enacted into law," Roland Freeman, president of the National Apartment Association, warned in a letter to Reagan.

The National Apartment Association represents over 45,000 owners, builders, managers and developers of over two million apartment and condominium units around the country.

The members object to several of the Treasury's proposals, including its plans to scale back the depreciation schedule for buildings, eliminate the special tax treatment for capital gains, crack down on the use of tax-deferred installment sales for builder bonds, tighten tax rules for limited partnerships with more than 35 members, eliminate the deductibility of state and local taxes, and ban the issue of tax-exempt industrial development bonds.

"(The) tax reform proposal, because of its clear intent to wipe out the incentives needed to attract investors to the relatively high-risk field of rental housing would seriously decrease capital formation in multi-family housing," Freeman wrote.

Although the proposal retains the deductibility for mortgage interest paid on a primary residence — a tax break generally considered sacrosanct — the National Association of Realtors said the plan would still hurt the housing market.

The realtors argue that the after-tax cost of owning a home would increase signficantly because property taxes would no longer be deductible and generally lower tax rates would mean the interest deduction would be less valuable.

The result would be that home ownership would be less attractive, which would dampen the demand for housing and force sellers to lower their prices in order to try to attract buyers.

The builders warned that uncertainty in the housing industry "could have a ripple effect on the economy."

Shares Story Of Volunteer Cook In Togo

Suzanne Allred of Greenville is eager to tell her story — of spending three months in Togo, West Africa, as a volunteer cook.

"The trip was part of the Baptist State Convention's 'Partners in Wholeness.' The three and a half year project involves N.C. Baptists, Baptist missionaries and the people of Togo. It is located outside the village of Moretan, some 150 miles inland from the capital city of Lome. Togo is less than half the size of North Carolina and is one of the most densely populated countries in Africa," Mrs. Allred said.

"I went to a World Missions Conference and heard a speaker tell of the need of carpenters, cooks, assistant cooks, nurses, water well drilling supervisor, water well driller and dozer operators for the Togo project. I went up and talked with him and told him I would like to go — but what could I do? He said, 'I need a cook to be there in July and don't worry about the money.'"

The trip was financed by The Memorial Baptist Church, where Mrs. Allred is a member, friends and the South Roanoke Baptist Association.

Mrs. Allred traveled on an airplane with Walter and Jacquelyn Ford, project coordinators, who will be there three years. "John and Julia Moore, formerly of Greenville, met us in Lome at the airport. They are host and hostess at the N.C. House in Lome at the Baptist Mission. The house gives volunteers a place to stay and meals," said Mrs. Allred.

The project is a five-hour drive from Lome and is located approximately in the center of Togo.

Mrs. Allred cooked for project volunteers. She planned a month of meals with the coordinator's wife and missionary.

"Supplies were ordered and delivered to us by John Moore. We ate all American food. We did try to eat an African meal two times a month. The Togolese have marvelous fruits — cassaba, bananas, pineapples and mangoes. Papayas are the best you ever put in your mouth. Another of their food is ingyums, which takes nine months to grow. They are similar to a potato but are rather bland," said Mrs. Allred.

TOGOLESE DOLLS...were purchased by Suzanne Allred as being symbolic of the way the women dress and carry their children. The hand-carved antelope and elephants were bought in Pirates Alley in Lome.

Mrs. Allred cooked in a mud hut, one of 10 built during the dry season. They are constructed of mud blocks covered with stucco and house the volunteers. "The Togolese thought it was wonderful to have screens on the windows and to feel the breeze without bugs," she said.

"My cooking was on a gas range which used bottled gas. If I boiled anthing I used an African pot on a charcoal stove under the dining shelter. I did needlepoint while the food boiled.

"The people there eat a lot of dried fish, corn, millet, tomatoes and onions. They sell most of their chickens and eggs to have money for other things such as clothes," said Mrs. Allred.

"Daniel was my kitchen aid and cooked the African meals. Daniel and his wife, Esther, have twin daughters, named Praise and Thanksgiving. His African bush dog is named Repent. The couple has a son, Jacob, and the two older girls live with Daniel's mother. In Togo, it is customary that the second daughter goes to live with the grandmother to help care for her. The other girl was there to go to a better school," she said.

"The responsibilities of the women are raising children, growing vegetables and carrying water. When a well is dug, the women want it away from the village — it gives them a chance to socialize with each other. The men have more than one wife. One keeps the children and cooks while the other one raises food — they take turns doing this. Half of the children die before they reach the age of 6 and 60 percent of those deaths are from diarrhea. As soon as the children are old enough they help carry water, food and wood (on their heads). Probably by the age of 4 or younger they are carrying their food bowl and plate on their heads. They find some time to play — with the goats and dogs. They came to the project asking for our leftover tin cans and boxes," she added.

"Most of the women wear two meters of material wrapped around their hips for a skirt and about the same amount of material is used to tie their infant babies to their backs," she said.

Mrs. Allred has a native dress which is typical of those worn by the more affluent people there and tourists.

"The Baptist project will build and help run a community learning center. It is aimed at teaching the Togolese people to take better care of their needs, not at making them dependent on outside help. At the center, the Togolese will learn better agricultural techniques, improved health education and better nutritional practices. Two or three people from surrounding villages will be educated in these new methods. At the end of the partnership the facilities will be turned back to trained Togolese and the missionaries will will remain in an advisory capacity," she said.

"In addition deep wells will be drilled in many villages and small farm ponds will be constructed. There are now nine deep wells and in January, a new bridge construction over the Mono River will be started. During the rainy season villages in this area are isolated because the river crests at 16-19 feet over the old rock bridge. Men will be needed to help with the new construction.

"As Americans, we are so blessed and the Togolese have so little. They are really survivors — they know how to make do," said Mrs. Allred.

'Crushing Creatures' Add Fun To Recycling Machines Made Lovable With Paint

TOLEDO, Ohio (AP) — Casey the Dragon has strong steel jaws, a long snout, a voracious appetite for metal — and kids love him.

Casey, a can-crushing machine, shares the spotlight with "Greta the Glasshopper," "Count Crackula," and "Chewliette" — to name a few — in a menagerie of recycling machines made lovable with paint and spare parts at Recycling Station Inc.

Jim Stolz, director of the non-profit station, dreamed up the crushing creatures to make recycling fun and to convert a new generation of children into avid recyclers.

"For the recycling idea to get going, you have to get the family going," Stolz said. "What really happens is three kids come out, they've done the recycling and they get the $7.50. They're all excited. They're back next month. That was the idea of naming the machines after animals and painting them and everything."

Stolz said the idea of a theme recycling center — a utilitarian theme park — had originated in Toledo three years ago and was now used in 30 to 40 recycling centers' nationwide.

Such "theme" recycling centers have been developed in several other Ohio cities over the past year, some using old railroad cars and fire trucks as the nucleus for a theme. The idea is to make saving recyclable material a family affair.

So far the centers salvage aluminum cans, bottles and newspapers but center operators hope that mechanization will allow them to expand to salvage other material.

The Recycling Station looks like a railroad depot. A steamboat theme is used at a St. Louis recycling center and is being considered for one in Cincinnati, Stolz said.

The Recycling Station's two centers, one owned by the firm and one operated in conjunction with the city's Community Development Department, have collected 24 million pounds of recyclable refuse since they first opened three years ago — about 10 times the volume of any similar center, Stolz said.

They are part of "Toledo Clean" — a four-point anti-litter project partially funded by the Office of Litter Control in the state Department of Natural Resources, said Sharon L. Griffin, local coordinator for the grant.

Stolz said the family-oriented center was a change of pace from the junkyards of the past or volunteer dropoffs where newspapers, bottles or cans are left for civic and charitable organizations to sell.

It's an idea Stolz believes is bound to grow as the economy and environment help turn wasters into recyclers.

"Americans have had very low-cost commodities, (so) that until the oil embargo, we never thought about running out of things. I think that, probably, has changed the ideas of a lot of people," Stolz said.

"The other thing is, we've always had the room to bury our garbage ... but now, landfills are becoming more and more difficult to set up and more expensive."

A third factor encouraging recycling is the bad image that waste dumps have gotten from mishaps at those which store toxic chemicals, he said.

Stolz is counting on children to bring about the recycling revolution.

"I hope the tack we're taking, showing it to more and more kids, will have quicker results than showing it to adults," he said.

Children are happy with the 23 cents per pound they get for aluminum cans and the penny-a-pound payoff for newspapers and glass, he said.

One recycling campaign at a surburban Toledo school raised enough money for the school to rent a hot air balloon, which was tethered near the playground while each student got a short ride, he said.

Ms. Griffin said publicizing the need for recycling was one of the most important jobs of "Toledo Clean." Project officials conduct public awareness programs in schools, and Stolz runs promotions for the Recycling Station — promotions which he said seemed to be giving the recycling effort momentum.

"It's catching on," Stolz said. "More and more people just hate like heck to throw the stuff away."

SOUVENIR DRESS...is modeled by Mrs. Allred. It is the type worn by the more affluent people and tourists in Togo.

Couple Marries In Evening Ceremony

Kimberly Ann Cottle and Keith Howard O'Mary were married Saturday evening at six o'clock in the Immanuel Baptist Church. The double ring ceremony was conducted by the Rev. Hugh Burlington.

Parents of the couple are Dr. and Mrs. Hubert Burden of Greenville and the late Lt. Clarence Cottle and Mr. and Mrs. James S. Jackson of Washington, N.C.

Dr. Burden gave his daughter in marriage. Sarah Burden of Greenville was honor attendant for her sister and bridesmaids included Anne Williamson of Greenville and Lori Jackson of Washington, N.C., sister of the bridegroom.

The best man was Donald Blanchard of Greenville and ushers included Steven Fisher of Greenville and Alston Daniel of Chapel Hill.

A program of wedding music was presented by Sylvia McCreary, organist, and the bride's sister sang "Song of Ruth" and "Doubly Good to You." Dr. Charles Bath played the piano and Shelia Pearson, Amy Moore and Andrea Bath were violinists.

The bride wore a formal gown of schiffli embroidered English net over bridal taffeta fashioned with a high neckline encircled with re-embroidered alencon lace etched in seed pearls. The fitted bodice was overlaid in embroidered alencon lace accented with seed pearls and oak pearls. The bodice featured a sheer yoke of English net centered by a key-hole opening effect enhanced with appliques of beaded lace interspersed with schiffli embroidered florets trimmed with pearls. The full bishop styled sleeves were fashioned in the English net embellished in the beaded lace appliques and embroidery. The beaded lace cuffs were finsihed with calla points over the hands. The full skirt and attached chapel length train featured appliques of lace and embroidery with a scalloped border edging the hemline. She wore a cloche hat appliqued with embroidered English net and accented with sparkle illusion with a pouf bow and streamers trimmed in lace motifs. She carried a cascade of white and red sweetheart roses.

The attendants wore formal gowns of royal blue taille taffeta. The slip styled gowns featured rolled fabric straps with a wide ruffle encircling the bodice. The fitted torso bodice and basque waistline were enhanced with a sash of black taille taffeta. Each carried a cascade of white stephanotis, red roses and royal blue statice.

The mother of the bride wore a street length mauve colored dress of georgette with tulip sleeves edged with pearls. The mother of the bridegroom selected a long sleeved sapphire blue street length dress of georgette crepe.

The couple will live in Greenville after a wedding trip to the mountains and Boone.

The bride graduated from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill and is a M.B.A. student at the East Carolina University School of Business. The bridegroom is a graduate of ECU and is a sales representative for Philip Morris, USA, Inc.

Mr. and Mrs. Donald Walter greeted guests attending the reception held in the fellowship hall. It was given by Mrs. Mills Pruden, Mrs. Max Burden, Mrs. Baxter Richardson, Mrs. Jim Harris, Mrs. Curtis Howell and Mrs. Alex White.

Mrs. Jim McGee poured punch and Mrs. Dixie McGlohon served cake. Kathryn A. House of Bethel presided at the register.

Perfectionists Vulnerable To Parent Burnout

WASHINGTON (AP) — Do the children make you feel irritable, tense, detached or withdrawn? If so, you could be approaching parent burnout, says therapist Marilyn Lammert.

A symptom of this affliction is the difficulty in carrying out your expectations of what a parent should be and do, says Ms. Lammert, a professor at The Catholic University of America's National Catholic School of Social Service.

"Burnout, or emotional depletion, occurs when your own demands and those from others exceed your resources to carry out what needs to be done," she explains.

The constant demand by young children for attention and caretaking are what gets most parents down, but living with adolescents can also be stressful, she says.

Also wearisome for parents are other requirements such as working as nursery school volunteers and taking children for regular medical checkups and providing proper nutrition, Ms. Lammert adds.

"A person's internal demands can contribute to burnout. Perfectionists may be especially vulnerable," she points out. "A perfectionist mother, for example, might worry excessively that her child will fall down the steps, and she will spend much time and effort buying and installing secure gates for stairways."

Maintaining a neat house can also be stressful for perfectionist parents who may be worried about their reputations as poor housekeepers or infections their children may get from a dirty house.

"Some people replicate the ways they were mothered," says Ms. Lammert. "Some girls become little women by incorporating their mother's personal style of mothering. Even when an adult woman decides she will do things differently, she may not be aware that she has internalized her mother's style."

Ms. Lammert is concerned that some mothers with high career expectations may feel extraordinary amounts of stress.

The potential for burnout is greater for women than for men because women are still primarily responsible for children, she says.

Also stressful for some women is the public's focus on careers and motherhood, says the educator. "One who adequately combines a career and motherhood is considered a good woman by society, but isn't a good woman also someone who maintains a good relationship with her husband?"

She points out that a person's irritability or withdrawal will usually affect his or her spouse. "Often in cases of mother burnout the father is ignored and neither he nor the mother receives the nourishment needed in the marriage relationship."

Important for parents who feel overloaded is to recognize the problem, develop solutions such as carving out time for themselves, and create situations without demands, she advises.

One problem to overcome is a reluctance to seek help, she notes. Parents should seek support from others experiencing similar problems. Sharing concrete ideas about coping with children and burnout is both helpful and reassuring, she says. Individual and family therapy can also help parents develop new resources and cope better.

It's also vital, Ms. Lammert says, for parents to recognize their limitations and realize they can do more if they are willing to do things less well. That applies to careers, marriage and parenthood.

"Burning-out is not a completely negative thing," she says. "From the pressures and stresses, people can grow, change and develop new potential and internal resources to be better parents and be prepared for life crises."

Candlelight Wedding Performed

Kathryn Benita Stallings and John William Mattheis were united in marriage in a private ceremony Friday evening at 8:30. The double ring ceremony was performed in Our Redeemer Lutheran Church by the Rev. R. Graham Nahouse.

Parents of the couple are Mr. and Mrs. Graham C. Stallings of Raleigh and Dr. and Mrs. Floyd E. Mattheis of Greenville.

The bride was given in marriage by her father. Ammie S. Edmondson of Tarboro was matron of honor for her sister. The father of the bridegroom was best man.

MRS. MATTHEIS

Ushers were John and David Mattheis of Greenville, brothers of the bridegroom, and Wesley C. Stallings of Raleigh, brother of the bride.

Krzysztos Gawlik was organist and Derek Martin played the violin.

The bride wore a full white taffeta gown with a chapel train. The bodice of embroidered sposabella lace was styled with a dropped waistline and scoop neckline. The long, puffed sleeves were of sposabella lace. She wore a white pillbox hat covered with silk Venise lace. It had a fingertip veil and short blusher edged in lace. She carried a bouquet of white and red roses with stephanotis, baby's breath and ivy.

The honor attendant wore a full length teal taffeta gown with an off-shoulder neckline and lace bordered bodice. She carried an arm bouquet of red roses, stephanotis and ivy.

A reception followed the candlelight ceremony in the reception hall at the church.

The bride is attending East Carolina University and is majoring in early childhood education. The bridegroom is a graduate of East Carolina University with a degree in industrial technology.

A wedding supper hosted by the parents of the bride was given in honor of the bridal couple. It was attended by all wedding guests and preceded the ceremony. Marge Harme was soloist and Suzanne Dixon played the piano. A rehearsal dinner was given by the parents of the bridegroom at the Golden Corral following the rehearsal Thursday.

Lord Horatio Nelson, Britain's naval hero, was born in 1758.

First Lady Nancy Reagan Lights National Christmas Tree Thursday

By GENE GRABOWSKI
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) – Lighted in a yuletide ritual that has involved every president since Calvin Coolidge, the National Christmas Tree is shining once more as the capital's yearly tribute to the holiday spirit.

"It always seems to me that Christmas is a time of magic," President Reagan said Thursday evening as he prepared to flip a White House switch to light the tree a quarter of a mile away. Then he stopped.

"I've talked myself into the Christmas spirit. I'm going to give a gift right now," he said. "I'm not going to light the tree. I'm going to let Nancy do it."

With that, the first lady pushed the button and the lights on the live 30-foot-tall Colorado Blue Spruce and 57 smaller trees around it burst into color. Some 15,000 people at the "Pageant of Peace" ceremony cheered.

"One of the great messages of this season is that it's never too late to touch a life and maybe change the world forever for someone," said Reagan, who was visible to the crowd on a huge television screen.

"Well, this is only the 13th day of December, we still have a dozen days to answer the letter of a child who wrote to Santa at the Post Office, or to buy an extra gift for a Toys for Tots campaign, or whatever," he said. "So if you have forgotten to do it: Do it, do it tonight or tomorrow."

Reagan asked the nation to remember the country's 800,000 men and women in the military, the members of the foreign service and other Americans around the world.

"Let me add, there is no one we hold in our hearts more closely than those MIAs, those missing in action in southeast Asia, some of whom may be serving our country still," he said. "They too are absent at the table and the gathering will never be complete until they return or are accounted for."

The national tree is decorated with a foundation of 1,600 translucent green lights. In addition, 50 red poinsettia-shaped ornaments and 50 white ones studded with either red or clear Christmas bulbs, change the color scheme at night from a brilliant red to a sparkling star white.

The ornament on top of the tree is about three feet wide, outlined by 72 bulbs, with one gold bulb in the center.

Visitors can view the lighted trees representing all states and territories until Jan. 1 at the Ellipse, south of the White House.

For the first time since 1973 a nativity scene was on display inside the Christmas tree grounds. Nine reindeer representing the animals that by legend pull Santa's sleigh are inside a pen on one side of the creche and a bonfire blazes for the comfort of tourists on the other side.

Before Reagan spoke, singer Shirley Jones, the U.S. Navy Band and the 60-voice Milwaukee Choristers were featured in an entertainment program. Other programs will take place nightly until Christmas.

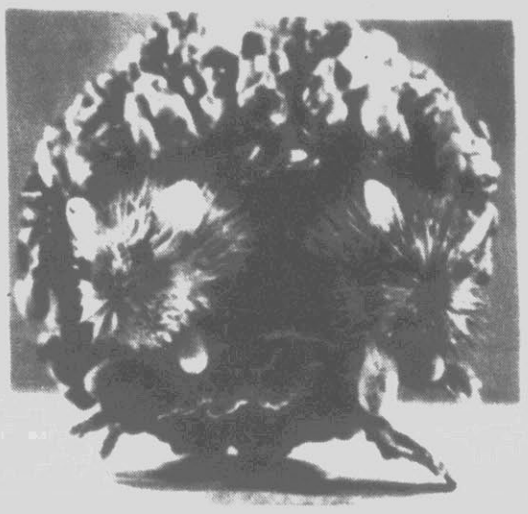

Every president since Coolidge has taken part in one or more such tree lighting ceremonies, although in some years vice presidents have taken over the task.

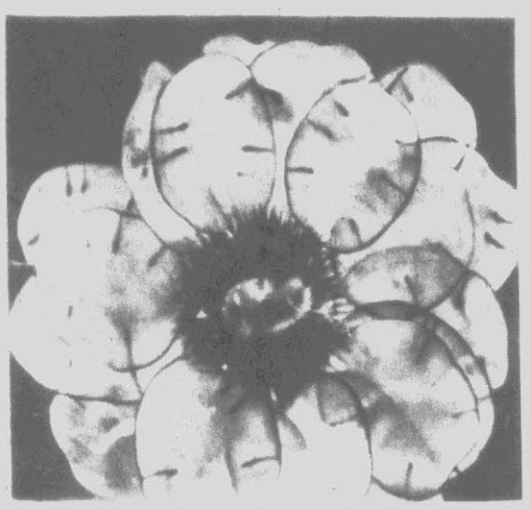

Reagan lighted the tree from the White House in the first three years of his administration.

FINISHED PRODUCT – These are five of the some 2,800 natural ornaments made by volunteers in Chadds Ford, Pa., which are now hung of the Christmas tree in the Blue Room of the White House. The ornaments made by hand are of materials gathered in the woods and fields of Chadds Ford.

MRS. STARNES

Performing the ceremony in Our Redeemer Lutheran Church was the Rev. Buford Kaylor.

The bride was given in marriage by her father. Her honor attendant was Diane Ingenito of Greenville. Suzanne Starnes of Charlotte, sister of the bridegroom, Michelle Dew of Raleigh, cousin of the bride, and AnaRita Weber of Greenville.

Havilan Sherrill of Hendersonville, niece of the bridegroom, was flower girl. Micah Sherrill of Hendersonville was acolyte and David Dew of Wilson was crucifer. The father of the bridegroom was best man and ushers were Robbie Brooks, cousin of the bridegroom, Wade Starnes, brother of the bridegroom, both of Gastonia and Darin Dew of Greeenville, brother of the bride.

Terry Moore of Greenville was organist and Wade Starnes of Gastonia was guitarist. Holly Sherrill of Hendersonville was vocalist.

The bride wore a formal gown of white silkened bridal chiffon over peau de soie styled with a fitted bodice overlaid in imported alencon lace with an open neckline. The elasticized shoulders were enhanced by a chiffon ruffle giving an off-shoulder effect. The short pouf sleeves were fashioned in alencon lace appliqued on English net. Seed pearls and sequins embellished the bodice and the gathered skirt of chiffon fell from a natural waistline and extended into a chapel length train. She wore a headpiece containing a spray of silk roses and organza flowers. A fingertip length veil of illusion was attached. She carried a bouquet of white roses and greenery.

Each of the attendants wore a formal gown of red taffeta styled with a full skirt and pouf sleeves. They carried nosegays in Christmas colors.

The flower girl wore a long white dress fashioned similar to those of the other attendants and carried a basket of flowers in Christmas colors.

The parents of the bride entertained at a reception following the ceremony.

The parents of the bridegroom entertained at a dinner Friday following the wedding rehearsal at the Sheraton-Greenville.

The bridegroom is a commercial lending officer for Branch Banking and Trust in New Bern. He is a graduate of Ashbrook High School in Gatonia and the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. The bride is a graduate of Rose High School and East Carolina University.

Italian Church Are Favorite Targets Of Art Thieves

By SAMUEL KOO
Associated Press Writer

ROME (AP) — Thefts from Italy's churches, most of them unguarded and filled with art treasures, have reached what police call epidemic proportions.

"It's an extremely grave situation and we are not quite sure how to deal with this sacrilegious phenomenon, short of turning churches into bank vaults," says Col. Gerardo De Donno, who directs a special police branch investigating art thefts.

Police figures show there have been 5,331 thefts in Italian churches over the past 14 years, more than one a day. The thieves stole at least 53,762 items of art and religious works worth hundreds of millions of dollars.

The stolen objects range from a priceless painting by Caravaggio, precious old documents and gold and silver trays and candlesticks to bulky marble sculptures and wooden furniture.

Thieves apparently well versed in art broke into the Basilica of San Barnaba in Marino, south of Rome, in mid-November and stole an 18th century painting of the Virgin, a bronze statue of Christ and a fine silver reliquary. A few days later in central Rome, four burglars were foiled in their attempt to remove four large 17th century paintings from the church of San Luigi dei Francesi.

De Donno said only one out of 10 churches has a burglar alarm "most of them not very sophiscated." The rest are virtually unguarded, often without a custodian or a night watchman, he said.

Churches in most cases cannot afford to install expensive security systems or hire full-time guards.

Experts say church thefts have increased in recent years because antique religious art works have become popular and increased in market value.

"Until some time ago, a kind of religious culture prevailed — and that meant you don't steal from the church," says Andrea Emiliani, a museum superintendent in Bologna. "But things have changed and it now appears that the concept has changed to 'If I don't steal, somebody else will.'"

Many of the stolen works are smuggled abroad, past careless or dishonet customs officials, and into the hands of unscrupulous or unsuspecting dealers, mostly in the United States and Western Europe, De Donno says.

Customs officials say the smuggled art works, in many cases, are first sent to neighboring European countries, often Switzerland, which have not signed the 1970 treaty designed to curb art smuggling.

A pact drafted by the United Nation Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization calls for "exporting" countries such as Italy to crack down on smuggling and issue export certificates for art objects. It also asks "importing" countries to make sure that the art pieces they buy have been legally exported.

Another article calls for joint action to stem imports of art works from clandestine archaeological excavations.

The United States, Canada and Italy have signed and ratified the treaty and passed national legislation to back it up. France and Australia also ratified it and have legislation in the works.

Police figures show that since 1970, a total of 189,780 art objects were reported stolen in Italy — 96,651 from private homes and collections, 53,762 from churches and 39,367 from museums and galleries.

The stolen items include 51,295 paintings, 15,301 sculptures, 13,064 archeological pieces, more than 38,000 ancient coins, over 24,000 objects used in church services and nearly 9,000 old books and documents.

Of these, according to De Donno, Italian police have recovered nearly 100,000 items and arrested some 2,000 people.

Dear Abby

Customer Discovers A Beauty Shop That's Gone To The Dogs

DEAR ABBY: I'm new in town. I went to the neighborhood beauty parlor near my house because it was handy. It looked pretty nice from the outside, but when I got inside I noticed the floor needed a good scrubbing. Before my beauty operator put me in her chair, she went to the hamper and picked out a dirty towel and wiped the chair with it!

I noticed two dogs sitting in the drying chairs, scratching to beat the band—both of them. I asked if they had fleas, and the operator said, "No, my dogs are cleaner than most of my customers."

She owns the shop, and there was a sign on her mirror, big as life, that said, "Yes, you may tip the owner"!

Before she set my hair she said, "Who gave you this miserable haircut?" Then she reached for her scissors and said, "I'll see what I can do—it's the worst botched-up mess I've ever seen."

I told her not to cut anything, then I started to cough and asked for a glass of water. She brought me some water in a dirty glass with lipstick on the rim.

Abby, don't beauty shops have to pass some kind of inspection? I hate to be a stool pigeon, but who should I report her to? This place was so filthy, I went home and took a bath.

DISSATISFIED CUSTOMER

DEAR DISSATISFIED: All licensed beauty shops are inspected regularly to ensure that they meet the sanitation standards required by law.

You would be doing the community a service by reporting that shop to your county board of health, or write to the Board of Cosmetology in care of your state capital.

DEAR ABBY: I am a gentleman, middle-aged, refined, always well-dressed and better looking than most men. My problem is women. When I'm in a restaurant, whether I'm alone or with a lady, women give me the eye.

I wouldn't mind if they were young and beautiful, but all the fat old ladies stare at me, trying to make eye contact. I try to ignore them in an effort to discourage them, but in a minute or two, they are at it again, trying to catch my eye.

I would appreciate any advice you can give me.

EYED IN IDAHO

DEAR EYED: Buy yourself some blinders—the kind horses wear. I'm sure they'd fit a jackass.

* * *

DEAR ABBY: I realize that my problem is minor compared to many that appear in your column, but I have a gripe that I would like to get off my chest.

Why do so many men assume that when a woman reads the newspaper she has no interest in looking at the sports page? I am a big football fan who enjoys reading about the trials and tribulations of my favorite team, and I'm sure I am not the only woman who likes sports.

Numerous times when I am reading the newspaper in a public place (a coffee shop or on a bus), I've been approached by men who wish to relieve me of the sports section. (One man actually reached over from the next table, picked up the sports section and said, "You won't be needing this.")

There, I said it! Thanks for listening.

FEMALE 49ER FAN

DEAR FAN: While "many" men may assume that women have no interest in sports, dedicated sports fans know better.

What women lack in numbers they more than make up for in enthusiasm and loyalty. Ask the male football fan who was cheering wildly for USC while sitting in the Stanford section. Some female seated in front of him turned around and broke his nose.

Japan's YMCA Emphasizes Education Over Exercise

By FREDERICK H. KATAYAMA
Associated Press Writer

TOKYO (AP) — If someone in Japan tells you he's heading over to the YMCA, chances are he's not going swimming or camping. He's probably off for school.

The three sides of the triangular YMCA emblem represent spirit, mind and body. Whereas the body seems to take precedence in the United States and spirit in West Germany, Japanese are more concerned with developing the mind. That's not surprising, given Japan's fascination with and devotion to education.

Established in Tokyo in 1880, the Japanese Young Men's Christian Association Union of Japan, now called the National Council of the YMCAs of Japan, promotes sports and physical education, outdoor recreation and citizenship as well as education.

But education consumes a little more than half its annual budget, with physical education and outdoor activities getting about one-fifth, says Michihiko Kobayashi, general secretary of the Tokyo Metropolitan YMCA and head of its school system.

Mention YMCA in Tokyo and the first thing people think of is the English-language school. English classes offered by the YMCA began in 1890. Books preceded barbells, as the Y opened its first gym and swimming pool 27 years later.

It now has 27 city and 29 campus chapters across the nation, and operates two hotels, in Tokyo and Kobe. It ranks fifth in size in the world alliance of YMCAs based in Geneva, Kobayashi said.

With a student enrollment of more than 2,000, the Tokyo YMCA offers more than just English. It operates several vocational schools: the International Hotel School, Institute of Design and Architecture and, of course, the College of Physical Education.

But that's not all. Ask a young Japanese in Osaka in western Japan about the YMCA and the first image that probably comes to mind is "yobiko" — cram schools that many students attend after school to prepare for the competitive high school and college entrance examinations.

Scattered throughout the country, the Y's 19 cram schools are among Japan's oldest. Established in 1905, they have an enrollment of more than 10,000 students.

The Y's schools are well-regarded. Its "yobiko" are especially advanced in English-language instruction, says Taeko Yoshizaki, vice principal of Yoshizaki Juku, a cram school in Osaka. In terms of reputation, the Y ranks in the top five in western Japan, she added.

"Most of their graduates get into good schools," observed Keizo Yoshino, vice president of the prestigious Kawai Juku.

The Y's vocational schools have an equally high reputation but attract a different crowd. Unlike the highly motivated cram school pupils, their vocational school counterparts want to finish schooling and enter the work force right away, Kobayashi said. They don't have the patience to spend four years in college.

"They make their students study hard, and their graduates succeed in finding employment," commented Shigeru Yokoyama, spokesman for the National Organization of Vocational Schools. "They have a long history in vocational education, and they're a solid institution."

Since Japan does not offer tax deductions that would encourage corporations to donate to non-profit organizations, the Japanese Y has no option but to offer income-generating programs, Kobayashi said.

But an education at the YMCA isn't necessarily cheap. Tuition charged at its schools is competitive with that of other institutions, Kobayashi said, because Japan's YMCA, unlike its foreign counterparts, is virtually self-supporting.

The Y's vocational schools do not qualify for government subsidies, which, Kobayashi said, are limited to colleges.

Also, although Japanese in general are not as religion-conscious as Westerners and therefore don't think twice about participating in the Y's programs, many have reservations about donating to the YMCA, which was founded by a Protestant layman in 1844 and since has become interdenominational.

The Y does no evangelical work in this largely Buddhist nation, although, with its stress on education, it does offer Bible studies, Kobayashi said.

At Wits End

By Erma Bombeck

When you think about it, we've all raised our kids using a minimum of three exclamatory sentences: No! Don't! and Stop!

Used unsparingly, they can take a parent through 20 or 30 years of living.

No TV until you've done your homework. No dessert until you've cleaned up your plate. No hurry because you're not going. No way. No sense in pleading. No nonsense when I leave. No allowance until you've cleaned the driveway. No dishes, no movie. No driving a car until you're 18. No soap. No nothing until you bring those grades up. No sweets before dinner. No sassing. No need to be rude. No is my final answer. No time for your mother anymore. No friends in the house while I'm at work.

No puppy until you can take care of yourself. No more arguing with your brother. No more new cereal until you finish off that box. No one needs a shirt that cost $30. No sense in wasting all that food. No . . . and that's the last time I say it!

Just when you think there are no more ways to say No, along comes Don't.

Don't screw up. Don't be selfish. Don't overeat. Don't starve yourself. Don't forget your sweater. Don't do as I do, do as I say. Don't forget to say thank you. Don't you dare talk with food in your mouth. Don't slouch. Don't run. Don't think it. Don't just sit there.

Don't you hear what I'm saying? Don't raise your voice with me. Don't say I didn't warn you. Don't see her again. Don't bring that into the kitchen. Don't you see that rug? Don't leave your room in such a mess. Don't lose your glasses. Don't miss your bus. Don't hang your head out the window. Don't leave the cap off the shampoo. Don't make me say it again.

For sheer drama, there is nothing like Stop!

Stop humming. Stop when you see a red light. Stop driving me crazy. Stop or you'll kill us all. Stop dating that creep. Stop snapping your gum. Stop punishing your mother. Stop what you're doing right now. Stop school and you'll regret it for the rest of your life. Stop acting like you're a big shot. Stop pretending you don't know what I'm talking about. Stop horsing around or you'll break something. Stop that noise or I'm coming up. Stop dawdling. Stop playing with your food. Stop trying to find yourself and get a job. Stop trying to be something you're not. Stop being so negative.

They're all familiar. We couldn't have survived without them. But wouldn't it be sad if No! Don't! and Stop! were the only things they learned from us . . . and those three little words shaped their lives?

On The Young Side

By CLAY DEANHARDT

Each year Rose nominates several of its top students to be considered for a spot at the Governor's School. This is a program held each summer for six weeks for gifted students and it is a great honor to be nominated.

This year's nominees and their areas of nomination are: academics — Jeff Bray; William Brewer; Nancy Johnson; Charlotte Proctor; and Carl Wille; art — Mark Elmore; Lee Lewis; Vickie Parrott; Ian Smith; and Lisa Quinn; drama — Robin Bolande; Glenye Cain; and Mike Garris; instrumental music — Jon Jolley; Kelly Jones; Andrea Bath; Kendra Harris; Josh Hickman; Amy Moore; and Aaron Nieman.

Each of the students will be in competition with other top students from throughout the state for only a few spots in the program.

At Rose High, it is a commonly know fact that Jean Creech, senior guidance counselor, is outstanding. Recently the rest of the state found out the same thing when she was named the Secondary School Guidance Counselor of the Year. For the honor she will receive a plaque, to be officially presented in February, and recognition by the local school board.

Also out this final week before Christmas vacation is the list of students who made all A's for the second term. On the honor roll are Mary Helen Allen, Trey Arthur, John Cameron, Anne-Lynne Davis, Clay Deanhardt, Christy Garrison, Gita Gulati, Robert Haggard, Kendra Harris, Evan Hause, Tracey Heath, Kevin Hewett, Michelle Hunt, Kelly Jones, Nancy Johnson, Becky Kirkland, Leigh Lanier; Douglas Martocia; Kim May; Mary Jon May; Melinda McGlohon; Amy Moore; Charles Moore; Jamie Moore, Marshall Moore; Claudia Mosely; Rebecca Murphy; Jeff Parsley; Susan Pennington; Larisa Perry; Valerie Person; Jody Ross; Sara Scott; Cate Shappley; Alicia Speight; Becky Thompson; Amy VanScoy; Marty Welch; Alexis White; Carl Wille; and Lynn Worley.

Special congratulations are also in order for Anne-Lynne Davis, who has advanced to the state level of the competition for the John Motley Morehead scholarship to UNC-Chapel Hill.

Faye Dunaway Feels She's At A New Beginning In Her Career

By DOLORES BARCLAY
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Seventeen years ago, a lithe, naked blonde swayed before a window, spied a rakish Warren Beatty trying to steal her mother's car and yelled, "Hey, boy!"

A star was born.

Faye Dunaway has that way about her — that way of punctuating a scene and grabbing an audience. She did it then in "Bonnie and Clyde," and she's doing it now as the villainous sorceress in "Supergirl."

She was the "with-it" girl of the '60s, Miss Thing of the '70s and frothy Faye in the '80s. She kissed Steve McQueen in "The Thomas Crown Affair," bathed Dustin Hoffman in "Little Big Man," pushed Peter Finch toward madness in "Network" and brutalized babies in "Mommie Dearest."

Recently, comedy beckoned and she played the rollicking, racy Maud in CBS' sprawling miniseries, "Ellis Island."

"I feel I'm at a new beginning," Miss Dunaway said in an interview on a recent visit to New York. Though she has an apartment overlooking Central Park, she has been living in London for two years with her husband, British photographer Terry O'Neill, and their 4-year-old son, Liam.

"It's all come together — my professional and personal growth."

She lived with O'Neill and had the baby before marrying him. The product of a broken home, Miss Dunaway had been married before, in 1975 to Peter Wolf of the J. Geils rock band.

Faye Dunaway will portray Queen Isabella of Spain in the miniseries "Christopher Columbus" in CBS' 1984-85 season.

She is no stranger to historical figures, having also played Eva Peron. But she refers to her character, Selena, in "Supergirl" as larger than life. But she had fun doing a villain. She also enjoyed Maud — "an absolutely delicious, lucious creature."

"I hadn't done much comedy," she said. "I wasn't in touch with my ability to laugh. ... By nature, I was intense and serious."

Though her role as the thrill-hungry gun moll Bonnie Parker was her second screen part, it remains Miss Dunaway's most memorable portrayal. Hers was a cinematic tour de force and earned an Academy Award nomination for best actress. She lost to Katharine Hepburn, who won for her role of the bride's mother in "Guess Who's Coming to Dinner."

Nine years later, in 1976, Miss Dunaway won the Oscar for playing a conniving, viperish TV executive in "Network."

"I was very determined," Miss Dunaway said. "I had an early success, but I guess a late success is worse because you can be bitter. But you do have to go through growing pains."

She was born Dorothy Faye Dunaway in Bascom, Fla., on Jan. 14, 1941. Her father was a career Army man. "I had a Southern mother who wanted me to be better than she. She wanted me to finish college and have things she didn't have," said the actress.

As a child playing games, she pantomimed country and western songs with her friends. She inherited the storytelling techniques of her grandfather who was "very colorful," and recognized her mother's "histrionics."

GRABS YOUR ATTENTION . . . Actress Faye Dunaway has a way of punctuating a scene and grabbing an audience. She did in in "Bonnie And Clyde," and she's doing it now as the villainous sorceress in "Supergirl." (AP Laserphoto by Marty Lederhandler)

But it wasn't until her sophomore year at the University of Florida that she seriously considered acting. She went on to the Boston University School of Fine and Applied Arts. But she turned down a Fulbright scholarship to study acting in London in order to join a new actors' training program at the Lincoln Center Repertory Theater in New York.

About the same time, in 1962, she replaced an actress playing Sir Thomas More's daughter in "A Man for All Seasons" on Broadway. Three years later, she had a part in an off-Broadway production of William Alfred's "Hogan's Goat." It was that portrayal of Kathleen Stanton, the wife of an Irish politician, that led to "Bonnie and Clyde."

"I would have been destroyed if I had gone into film before theater," Miss Dunaway said. "There are so many techniques to learn. ... I always felt as I act, to illuminate human behavior, to show people who we are. That's my obligation. It's exactly what I want to do."

Miss Dunaway's sights are on producing her first film, "Duet." It's low budget, she said. But she has no desire to direct. "That's not where my talent is. I want to play roles. I want to act."

Old Papers Reveal Role of Germans In The American Revolution

By TERRENCE PETTY
Associated Press Writer

STILLWATER, N.Y. (AP) — A German surgeon born more than 200 years ago has been Helga Doblin's guest in her backroad cape house near this eastern New York town for better than two years now, but she has not grown tired of having him around.

Mrs. Doblin has been enraptured by Dr. J.F. Wasmus and other Germans hired out to the British in the American Revolutionary War ever since she began translating newly found journals, letters, diaries and military documents written by them.

"I live with Wasmus. I expect him to appear to me. I really conjure him up," jokes the lively, 73-year-old Mrs. Doblin, emeritus professor of languages at Skidmore College in nearby Saratoga Springs with degrees from the University of Berlin and Harvard.

Mrs. Doblin, who was born in Freiburg, Germany, and emigrated in 1939, herself comes from a military family.

The papers were tracked down by National Park Service employee Stephen Strach, a voracious reader of early American history since his childhood in Buffalo. He followed a trail of obscure printed clues that led to the Library of Congress, where he found long-forgotten microfilm and photostat copies of the German documents.

Mrs. Doblin's translations of the papers give a colorful and human dimension to the often-maligned German mercenaries; they also alter and correct some long-standing perceptions.

Some 200 German troops died in the Aug. 16, 1777, Battle of Bennington which was fought on and around an open-topped hill in Walloomsac, N.Y., 35 miles east of Stillwater and five miles from the southwestern Vermont border. The remaining 400 or so were taken prisoner, including Wasmus.

Wasmus and his comrades have been telling their versions of the war to Mrs. Doblin in her and her husband's home in Stillwater, the town where thousands more soldiers hired out by the independent German states of Brunswick and Hesse died or were taken prisoner in the Battle of Saratoga.

They communicate to her through a microfilm reader. Since 1982 she has spent long hours at this machine, creating English sentences out of 18th-century German ones. Their handwriting is often difficult to read because of personalized flourishes, and sometimes the letters are so small Mrs. Doblin has to resort to a magnifiying glass.

Translating obscure currencies, weights and measures is not easily accomplished. But Mrs. Doblin's knowledge of languages helps her translate French, Italian and Latin words mixed in with the German.

The copies of the papers have been stored at the Library of Congress since the 1920s, when the originals were photographed at archives in Germany. There's no telling how many documents are in that still uncataloged chaos of German writings in Washington, D.C., says Strach.

Mrs. Doblin calculates that if she lives to be 126 she'll have finished translating the 52 microfilm reels purchased by the National Park Service's office at the Saratoga Battlefield.

Mrs. Doblin has been receiving an annual $4,000 federal grant for her labors, but her primary compensation is the thrill of mentally accompanying these often overlooked warriors on their adventures in North America.

"I started just with translating. I was not interested in the subject matter, just in translating. And then I really got fascinated by it," she says.

The history of mercenaries from Hesse and Brunswick — two of several German states — fighting for the British two centuries ago is not something even Germans have looked very closely at, says Mrs. Doblin.

When Mrs. Doblin began traveling to Germany for further research she found the archives where the original papers are kept "in disarray. But interest is mounting."

The translations by Mrs. Doblin detail the mercenaries' lives from their march to troop ships on the Elbe River in Germany and their arduous voyage to Canada to their return in 1783.

The seven-year journal of Wasmus is especially Homeric, telling of long, deadly winters in Canada, desertions, executions, scalpings, his new life as a country doctor in New England following his dramatic capture and his apparently hesitant return to Wolfenbuettel, Brunswick.

Wasmus was with the mostly German force sent to Bennington to capture rebel supplies needed to enable the British to continue their siege at Stillwater. But the Germans were met by a surprisingly large force of Americans in Walloomsac, five miles short of their destination.

Some of Mrs. Doblin's translations will appear in Brown University's "Military Collector and Historian" journal next year, and she and Strach are researching other routes to get more of the papers published.

Strach, who was the director of the translation program while employed at the Saratoga Battlefield, now works for the National Park Service at Jamestown, Va.

Registering Cow Brands

By JEANNE GRIMES
Daily Ardmoreite

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — In cow country, there's a lot to be said for a good, legible brand. But only if it's duly registered and recorded.

The Oklahoma Cattlemen's Association has mailed out five-year renewal notices to the owners of 16,000-plus registered brands in the state.

Keeping track of all those brands is the task of Rhonda Rhines, who for nearly five years has worked as the state brand registrar.

She does it with a system she calls brand-abetical.

The OCA will publish a 1985 Oklahoma Brand Book containing all the registered brands, as well as annual supplements of new registrations during the five years. New registrations also are published monthly in The Oklahoma Cowman, the association's magazine.

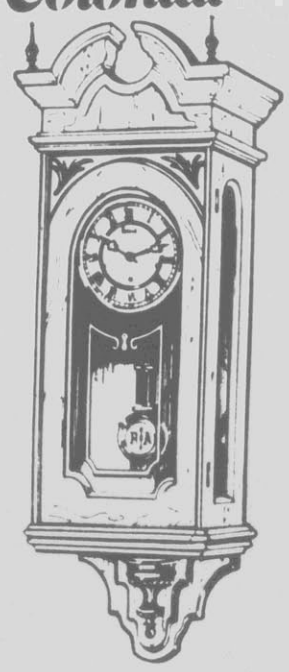

In the brand book, Ms. Rhines first lists brands utilizing initials A to Z and then starts in on the numerals (1 through 9), the bars, slashes, rockers, boxes and diamonds, flying brands, hearts, crosses, triangles and, finally, the symbols.

"It takes a little while to learn the brand-abetical alphabet," she said. "Brands are read left to right and top to bottom. Initials are probably the best brand you can have."

Nearly all of the 16,000-plus registered brands are used on livestock, Ms. Rhines said a few were registered simply as a novelty and something new to spruce up stationery and personalized checks.

Digs For De Mille's Biblical City

By CONNOISSEUR
A Hearst Magazine

A pair of amateur archaeologists are working to dig up the Biblical wonders of the City of the Pharaoh, California-style.

The architect of this latter-day Biblical city was movie creative genius Cecil B. De Mille, according to the December issue of Connoisseur. The ruins are buried beneath the sand — not of some mid-East desert, but under the dunes of a desolate stretch of California coast.

Husky Oil had just completed five years of negotiations to drill on the site when a pair of Hollywood upstarts insisted the area held ruins more precious than oil.

Cinematographer Bruce Cardozo, 31, and documentarian Peter Brosnan, 32, said the area held the long-forgotten and supposedly dismantled site of De Mill's 1923 epic, "The Ten Commandments."

After months of gathering the necessary permission to dig into the dunes, the movie duo won the support of archaeologist Larry Wilcoxen of the University of California, Santa Barbara.

Next step was to raise $50,000 so they could attempt to raise and restore the entire last remaining "great set" of the silent screen era. Husky Oil has agreed to work around their dig.

The set supposedly was dismantled years ago, the largest of a genre of behemoths that included De Mille's City of Jerusalem that was set afire in 1938 for the burning of Atlanta in "Gone With The Wind," and D.W. Griffith's Babylon for the 1946 "Intolerance," also torn down in 1938, to make way for urban sprawl.

De Mille had trucked his City of the Pharaoh, piece by piece, from Hollywood to the Guadalupe Dunes four hours away.

There 1,000 workmen labored for more than a month to erect the 120-foot high, 800-foot wide gates to the city, decorated with bas-relief chariot warriors, plumed horses and hieroglyphs. In front of the gates stood four 35-foot-high black statues of Rameses II, modeled after those at Abu Simbel.

An avenue of 21 white sphinxes flanked the route of the exodus from the city. When filming was finished, De Mille ordered all 250 tons of plaster, lumber and clay buried on-site, rather than having it lugged back to Hollywood.

Brosnan and Cardozo have formed Lost City Productions and are shooting their own film of the excavation of the site. The resulting documentary is scheduled for broadcast in 1986, reacquainting the world with film pharaoh De Mille.

The two film amateur archaeologists plan to donate their finds to the Smithsonian Institution in Washington and the newly opened Hollywood Studio Museum.

China Considering Restoration Of Yuanmingyuan Royal Garden

EDITOR'S NOTE —Inspired by ancient poems and scrolls, Yuanmingyuan was the largest royal garden in the world when completed in 1772. But later it fell victim to the torch of European troops and was allowed to go to seed. Now China wants to restore "the Garden of Perfection and Light."

By JEFF BRADLEY
Associated Press Writer

PEKING (AP) — Elegant, classical columns rise up from the ruins as if transplanted from Versailles. Nearby, peasants harvest lotus and hoe winter cabbage.

Oriental splendor, imperialist shame and China's ageless rhythm evocatively merge at Yuanmingyuan, "the Garden of Perfection and Light," on the northwest outskirts of Peking.

The legendary imperial garden was devastated by European troops in 1860 and 1900 and for generations was abused and neglected by the Chinese. But the government now plans to restore it as a park and money-making tourist attraction.

"The time is ripe for repairing the Yuanmingyuan," a Communist Party gathering declared in October on the 124th anniversary of the destruction of the old summer palace.

Gordon of Khartoum, then a young captain in the British Royal Engineers, helped torch the 850-acre wonderland when an Anglo-French force plundered the site in 1860, one of the darkest moments of the Opium Wars.

"We went out and, after pillaging it, burned the whole place, destroying in a vandal-like manner most valuable property which could not be replaced for four millions," Gordon wrote his mother. "Although I have not as much as many, I have done well."

The fire that gutted the 110 clusters of wooden buildings, leaving only a few foundations, darkened the Peking sky for three days. "Only the courtyard of a Lama temple survived the plunder," says garden administrator Li Xin.

Inspired by ancient poems and scrolls, Yuanmingyuan was the largest royal garden in the world when completed in 1772.

A graceful retreat of manmade hills, artificial lakes fed by natural springs, and 200 pavilions and temples, it became known as the "Garden of Ten Thousand Gardens." An emperor could chance upon such small scenes as the "Vista of the Square Teapot" or the "fairyland" islands.

Originally in three parts — Yuanmingyuan, Changchunyuan ("the Garden of Eternal Spring") and Wanchunyuan ("the Garden of 10,000 Springtimes") — the overgrown site is now home to farmers, goats and pigs and a few spectacular echoes of things past.

Located near the "new" summer palace built by the empress dowager Cixi in 1888, Yuanmingyuan is a favorite haunt of picnickers and art students.

Most startling are the remnants of marble fountains, rookeries and two six-story Western buildings, including a "Hall of Tranquility" once decorated with the finest baroque art.

Emperor Qianlong brought in Jesuit architects to build the complex in 1746, basing it on the French palace at Versailles.

The courtly European architecture still draws wondering glances from the Chinese, whose children love playing on the stone turtles and horses that survived the pillage.

Weeping willows and arched bridges still evoke vistas designed to symbolize timeless China.

As a Peking guidebook says, "It takes a lot of imagination to stand amid the ruins of Yuanmingyuan and picture one of the most magnificent gardens ever built."

In the second Opium War of 1857-60, the colonial powers pressed the Qing (Ching) court for trade rights and were incensed when members of a British expedition to Peking were executed.

After the Yuanmingyuan was leveled, the emperor agreed to legalize opium trading and ceded to Britain the Kowloon Peninsula, now part of Hong Kong.

Before reducing the garden to ashes, British and French troops spent 12 days plundering the emperor's treasurehouse of jewels, gold, porcelain, bronzes, silks and sculptures. Some of the riches were sent to Queen Victoria and Napoleon III.

"What they could not carry away, they smashed to atoms," a British interpreter said in his journal.

The forces of eight allied nations returned to loot and burn what was left of Yuanmingyuan during the Boxer Rebellion in 1900, avenging the 55-day siege of their embassies in Peking.

Officials of the waning Manchu court plundered what valuables remained, and in the early republican era warlords took away wood, stones, bricks and tiles for their mansions.

Gradually, peasants unaware of the glorious past drifted into the ravaged garden, using wreckage to assemble makeshift homes. Some still use imperial artifacts as doorstops.

They fished streams once filled with golden carp. Lakes formerly used for dragon boat races became paddy fields and lotus ponds. Trees were felled for fuel and hills leveled for crops.

When the People's Republic of China was founded in 1949, Premier Chou En-lai urged preservation of the ruins. But in the next three decades of political upheaval, the old stone wall was dismantled and used for an air raid shelter, and a school and boiler factory were built on the grounds.

Now, China has decided to turn the garden into a "heritage park," restoring some sections, leaving others in ruins, and erecting a stone wall six miles long around the perimeter.

"The first step is to dredge and restore the lake," says Xiao Yinxin, deputy administrator.

Some of the 3,000 peasants on the weed-grown site will remain as caretakers but others will be evacuated.

"I came 60 years ago with my parents, my wife and a younger brother," says 82-year-old Li Yong, who migrated from poor Hebei Province. "We made ends meet by selling grasses to a camel dealer as fodder and by catching fish and shrimp."

"The lakes and streams teemed with fish in those days. Shrimps were like ants and in the winter, you dug a hole in the ice and fish jumped out.

"There were piles of stones here and there, they were nobody's property, just yours to pick up. The land was free and you could settle anywhere, nobody challenged you."

Of the 230 original artificial hills, 150 remain, while stone pillars and carvings taken from Yuanmingyuan have been found at Peking University and elsewhere in the capital.

Restoration started in 1976 with a caretakers' office. In 1979, the garden was listed as a historical relic and a small museum opened. In 1980, the project drew support from Soong Ching ling, widow of Sun Yat-sen, the father of the Chinese revolution.

"We estimate that to build a complete park on the ruins by the end of the century we need $38.5 million," says Xiao, the deputy administrator.

Total restoration is out of the question, Xiao says. The ruins will be kept "as a lesson for the Chinese people."

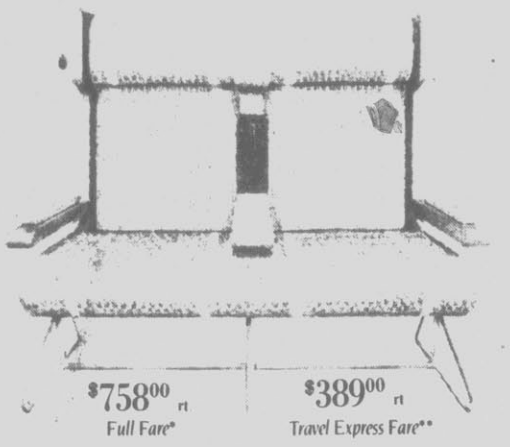

"Personally, I think all looted historical relics should be returned to China, but that's an international issue."

China has not yet asked Britain or France to return the stolen treasures.

"When we see these ruins, our hearts are heavy," says Zhang Jianming, a Peking worker on a tour of the site.

"History is history and you cannot change it."

Looking For Relics Of Ancient Paris In The Louvre Courtyard

By MARILYN AUGUST
Associated Press Writer

PARIS (AP) — Silver hairpins that once swept up royal curls. Bronze crowns encrusted with golden fleurs de lys. Centuries-old apple seeds, insect wings and clay spoons.

The secrets of old Paris, long buried beneath tons of earth, are being recovered from two courtyards of the Louvre museum where archaeologists are undertaking the city's largest-ever excavations.

The Louvre has long been regarded as the world's leading museum. But it was also a sumptuous palace that housed French kings until the mid 1600s, when Louis XIV moved his court and the royal family to Versailles.

A century later, the Louvre and its surrounding areas had become part of downtown Paris, a bustling center of commerce and trade for France's burgeoning middle class.

Precious findings from the digs illustrate all this, and more. Experts say they provide a rare, inside look at the everyday lives of both royalty and commoners from the middle ages to the late 19th century.

Both courtyards are familiar to Louvre visitors, though they are currently off limits for security reasons. The Cour Carre, where archaeologists are uncovering the foundations of the fortress built by Philippe Auguste in 1200, is the small, interior courtyard visible from musuem galleries.

The Cour Napoleon, which has already yielded a wide array of relics — from Turkish pipes to Venetian glass wine decanters — is the vast square of the main entrance to the museum between the north and south wings.

"We can trace the evolution of Paris, from a rural area where animals grazed and farmers worked the land to a real city complete with hospitals and brothels," said Pierre-Jean Trombetta, assistant director of the excavation at the Cour Napoleon. "We see how the people lived, what they ate and wore, and how they made their living over a six hundred-year period."

"This is a unique opportunity for urban archaeologists. Usually findings of this sort have long been buried under concrete," he added.

In the neighboring Cour Carre, another team is at work laying bare the Louvre's origins as a military stronghold complete with dungeons, towers and turrets which Philippe Auguste constructed outside city limits to protect it from invaders.

Headed by Michel Fleury, a veteran archaeologist best-known for his work on the crypts of Notre Dame and Saint-Denis churches, workers have unearthed earrings, hairpins, the remains of jousting equipment dating from the 15th century and a priceless silver buckle probably from a sword scabbard, in near-perfect condition.

Digging began in both courtyards last summer, after President Francois Mitterrand gave the government's green light to plans to renovate the Louvre Museum.

Besides approving a controversial project by Chinese-American architect I.M. Pei to erect a 90-foot glass pyramid as the museum entrance, Mitterrand allocated nearly 50 million francs (around $5 million) for the archaeologists.

Some 150 workers — volunteers and untrained youths led by professional archaeologists — will continue excavation until 1986, when the Cour Napoleon will be plowed under to make way for the pyramid.

In the Cour Carre, the imposing base to the central keep of Philippe Auguste's fortress, almost 50 feet wide, will be preserved in an underground entrance to the museum's Egyptian section.

"The keep symbolizes the state," said Venceslas Kruta, Fleury's second-in-command. "It's where the king guarded everything valuable to him, from his treasury and crown jewels to his important prisoners of war, such as the Count of Flanders. Since we have no overview of the Louvre fortress, and very few archives, the dig is of great historical value."

Archaeologists have long been eager to excavate the Cour Napoleon, once a crowded, working class neighborhood that grew up outside the palace walls after the Sun King left Paris for Versailles in 1682. Artists and artisans occupied the palatial apartments and entertainers moved into taverns and shanties built up along the walls.

Among the most unexpected treasures taken from the Cour Napoleon is a rare collection of 200 silver coins found hidden in what Trombetta thinks was a public latrine. The coins are in generally excellent condition. Each one bears one of the three official portraits of Louis XV stamped on coins during his 18th century reign.

Taken individually, the coins are now worth about $200. Studied as an ensemble, Trombetta says, they will furnish invaluable proof of how money circulated in 18th century France.

"It's hard to know precisely who their owner was, or why he hid them where he did, but it's clear that he was in danger," Trombetta said. "He may have been an aristocrat beheaded during the revolution."

Dozens of identical porcelain dinner plates, some still in very good condition, were found in the Cour Napoleon. Experts believe they are part of the dinner service from the town house of a coutier who moved back near the Louvre Palace when the king returned from Versailles.

In the Cour Carre, apart from the bases of the keep and walls, little is left of the original fortress. Succeeding monarchs renovated it according to prevailing architectural tastes. In the 1400s, Charles V converted the stronghold into a palatial residence, installing his famous library in one of the towers.

This second Louvre, with dozens of chimneys, high-pitched roofs and pinnacles, has also disappeared, though it was immortalized by the Limbourg brothers in "The Book of Hours of the Duke de Berry" (Les Tres Riches Heures du Duc de Berry).

Then in 1528, Francis I razed the keep, filled in the moat, knocked down the defensive outer walls and put a garden in their place.

"Francis I wanted to entertain more lavishly, but the atmosphere of a military compound wasn't conducive to grandeur," Kruta explained. "Besides, I think the keep stirred up bad memories, because he spent some time himself in dungeons."

Kruta is optimistic about reconstituting the original layout of both the fortress and first palace.

"We can determine the location of windows, doors, even the functions of specific rooms such as Charles V's kitchen by analyzing the fragments of metal, porcelain and glass taken from the bottom of the surrounding moat, and by seeing how certain kinds of debris piled up," he said.

Creates Theatrical Concerts

By MICHAEL KUCHWARA
AP Drama Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Andre De Shields calls his creations "theatrical concerts," naughty but nice entertainments where people "can come together and experience good, and sometimes illicit, fun."

De Shields talked recently about these endeavors as he surveyed the chaos that was occurring during the last-minute renovation of the Latin Quarter, an old nightclub that is being restored for his latest creative effort, a nearly two-hour journey called "Haarlem Nocturne." De Shields stars in the show and also helped write and direct it.

The Latin Quarter site on West 48th Street was once the home of the Cotton Club, the mecca of black entertainment, and later became the famed night spot operated by Lou Walters, Barbara's father. Its most recent incarnation was as a legitimate theater called the Princess.

Now with a new coat of black and silver paint, mirrored walls and the addition of tables and chairs, the new Latin Quarter is attempting to recreate the ambiance of the old days when Walters ran one of the hottest spots in town. And "Haarlem Nocturne" was chosen as the club's first attraction.

"The show is really about the ability to transport the audience to a different state of mind we call 'Haarlem.' It's not the neighborhood that exists north of 110th Street, which is why we've chosen to spell it with the two a's," says De Shields, his feline frame draped over a chair in his all-white dressing room located above the Latin Quarter stage.

He says the songs in "Haarlem Nocturne" borrow from a variety of sources and times — vaudeville, minstrel shows, musical comedy, drama and even the recording industry of the '60s, '70s and '80s.

"They are little plays within themselves," he says. "Each song has a plot, character delineation, and a climax. You sew them together and what you come up with is a tapestry, an odyssey that we take the audience on. By the end of the journey, the audience has been incredibly entertained and we like to think that they come away from the experience a little smarter than they were when they arrived."

De Shields has created seven different theatrical concerts over the years. He worked on them in between his two big Broadway successes. He was the Wizard of Oz in the original production of "The Wiz" in 1975 and three years later starred in "Ain't Misbehavin'," the Fats Waller musical revue that won him an Emmy when it was televised on NBC.

De Shields was born in Baltimore 38 years ago, the ninth of 11 children. He ended up in Madison, Wis., where he got a degree in English at the University of Wisconsin. But his first theatrical experience was in the Chicago company of "Hair," and he stayed in the city, eventually joining the Organic Theater Company, one of Chicago's home-grown theatrical troupes that flourished along Lincoln Avenue.

It began when De Shields was asked by Ellen Stewart, the high priestess of New York's avant-garde theatrical community, to create something for her theater space in the East Village.

De Shields already had his collaborators and out of their team effort came "Haarlem Nocturne." Among them were the three women who appear in the show — Debra Byrd, Ellia English and Freida Williams — as well as "Haarlem Nocturne's" musical director Marc Shaiman and several other songwriters. They gathered around a piano in Shaiman's living room to work out the details.

"We were relentless in our discipline. 'Haarlem Nocturne' was created in 10 days. And I don't mean to say it was 10 days of panic," says De Shields. "It was 10 days of hard, focused work."

The title came from the old standard, "Harlem Nocturne," written by Earl Hagen and Dick Rogers. The song has lasted over the years and even today is used as the theme on the Mike Hammer television series starring Stacy Keach. De Shields had used the song in one of his other concerts more than a half dozen years ago, and the melody had haunted him since then.

But about 80 percent of the music is new material, written by De Shields, Shaiman and others, songs, he says, that will help unlock memories of experiences long past.

"I don't feel complete as a singer or a dancer or an actor or a director. I wanted to put all of these aspects together into one giant artist," says De Shields. "I know this sounds corny, but I always wanted to be a renaissance man. In renaissance terms, a soldier should be able to win any battle and then be able to read poetry or paint or sculpt or design a costume. That's what I want to do."

'Gone The Dreams And Dancing

GONE THE DREAMS & DANCING. By Douglas C. Jones. Holt, Rinehart & Winston. 323 Pages. $15.95.

Douglas C. Jones easily ranks among the most gifted American writers today. Excellent past novels include "Season of Yellow Leaf," "Elkhorn Tavern" and "The Court-Martial of George Armstrong Custer."

Jones has an uncommon ability to portray people, places and life-ways of the past in a very real manner. The reader soon feels involved in the events being chronicled.

This latest novel is a story of one of the last Indian tribes conquered by the white man and made to live on a reservation near Fort Sill, Indian Territory.

Slowly the small, tattered tribe is forced into a demeaning, sedentary and half-starved existence that it cannot comprehend. The change is all but shattering.

Two men seek to help ease the heart-touching Indian plight. One is the tribe's chief, Kwahadi, son of an Indian father and a white woman captive of former years. The other is Liverpool Morgan, a white tribal friend who narrates events in a rather low-key, offhand fashion.

Kwahadi proves to be an outstanding leader — intelligent, deeply thoughtful and at times a crafty figure indeed.

These and other assets enable him to cope in some measure with tragic events — a tribe dissolving into lassitude and hopelessness, and the ravages of evil practices learned from "civilized" whites.

All, however, is not an endlessly dreary, sad story. There are many fine touches of wry humor, plus even a few hilarious episodes.

And praise be to the publisher! Here is one book the author wasn't forced to lard with sex.

Protesting

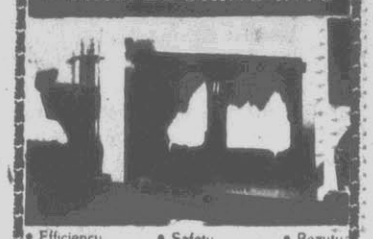

BOSTON (AP) — Author Samuel Beckett will air his differences with the American Repertory Theater over the company's setting of his 1956 play "Endgame" in a printed disclaimer inserted into the program instead of in court.

"He's disgusted by it," the Nobel Prize winner's attorney, Martin Garbus of New York, said of the production, which sets the play in a subway tunnel instead of in a bare room and adds music.

"But he doesn't have funds to take on Harvard, the Mellon Foundation and all the other people behind the American Repertory Theater. He feels he doesn't have any choice."

Beckett, 78, had promised a federal lawsuit to block Wednesday's opening of the play. Instead, he won agreement by the company to slip a mimeographed disclaimer into each program, along with a copy of his original stage directions.

Hitler's Final Offensive Left 80,000 Americans Dead, Wounded Or Captured

'Battle Of The Bulge' Launched 40 Years Ago

EDITOR'S NOTE — At 5:30 a.m. on Dec. 16, precisely 40 years ago, Hitler's final furious offensive began. It roared through the snowy forests of Belgium and Luxembourg and left 80,000 Americans dead, wounded or captured. The first unit hit and virtually wiped out in the so-called Battle of the Bulge was the 106th Division. An AP reporter who joined the outfit as a rifleman replacement after the battle links up with thousands of veterans searching for the snows of yesterday.

By HUGH A. MULLIGAN
AP Special Correspondent

BASTOGNE, Belgium (AP) — They got off a tour bus in Place McAuliffe and posed for pictures beside the bust of the American general who said "Nuts" to a German invitation to surrender and ruined Adolf Hitler's Christmas 40 years ago.

Veterans of the 101st Airborne Division, they were graying, balding, mostly fit, but a few wheezing or fitted out with Pacemakers. The "Battered Bastards of the Bastion at Bastogne," as they called themselves, had lived to tell about being the "hole in the doughnut" when Bastogne was encircled by elite Panzer divisions.

They visited the "Nuts Museum" across from the "Nuts" garage and climbed aboard one of the Sherman tanks that seem to decorate every town square in Belgium and Luxembourg.

The "Screaming Eagles," as the division emblem on their caps and the side of the bus proudly identified them, were escorted around town by a convoy of vintage American jeeps lovingly restored and driven by young Belgians wearing authentic GI uniforms, a fantasy game of dress-up that has become even more popular than dude ranches in Belgium.

Some remembered that four decades ago, crouched in the snow by the railroad tracks, they were shooting at Germans dressed as GIs who tried to bust into town in a column of captured Sherman tanks, playing a winner-take-all game of make-believe to deliver Bastogne to the Fuhrer as a Christmas present.

Now, laughing at the obstinate courage that upset the timetable of three Panzer armies racing to cross the Meuse River and reach the port of Antwerp before fuel and ammo ran out, they hunted up their old foxhole locations on the outskirts of town, recalling how each man was issued a block of TNT to blast those foxholes in the frozen ground of Europe's coldest winter in 25 years.

Solemn faced, some in tears, they filed silently through the star-shaped Memorial to the Battle of the Bulge, which draws 1,500,000 tourists a year. At the nearby historical center they relived World War II's greatest pitched battle in films, slideshows and a wax museum featuring Gen. Dwight Eisenhower in his jeep and George Patton with his pearl-handled pistols.

With wives and grown-up kids in tow, the returning veterans bought postcards and Belgian lace in the shops around the square, where its namesake, Brig. Gen. Anthony McAuliffe, borrowed tablecloths and bedsheets from the merchants to camouflage his guns and troops.

But in the 40th anniversary year, the Bulge survivors were unable to go down into the dank coal cellar beneath the administration building of the former German barracks, where on Dec. 22, 1944, a sergeant typed McAuliffe's reply to the surrender ultimatum:

"To the German Commander,

"NUTS

"The American Commander."

Now home base for a Belgian artillery unit, the barracks was closed to visitors during the summer after a nocturnal raiding party, believed to be a terrorist group, made off with machine guns and explosives from the arsenal.

So the 101st tour bus rolled on into the hauntingly familiar countryside, criss-crossed with the pig pens that produce the famous sausage and jambon des Ardennes and where the Germans advancing without wire cutters across the fog-shrouded fields were caught in the barbed wire by murderous mortar and machine gun fire from the defenders of Bastogne. Their corpses hung frozen for days like ghost scarecrows in their white snowsuits.

Hardly a day and never a weekend goes by without some U.S. veterans group — the 10th Armored, the 28th Infantry, the 17th Airborne, etc. — invading the towering pine forests of the Ardennes by the busload and occupying the old inns and fishing hotels, flanked often by a waterfall or a trout stream but more often by a Sherman tank and a long-barreled German .88 gun.

"Business is always good. God bless General Patton," says Franco, the young Italian waiter at the Claravallis hotel in Clervaux, where like every place else in Luxembourg the Third Army commander is a national hero for liberating the tiny duchy. Four decades ago, when the bulge erupted along what was supposed to have been a quiet front, this hotel was the command post for a regiment of the U.S. 28th Division, defended by a single tank destroyer in the parking lot and a platoon of riflemen who were burned out of the chateau on the hill by the flame-spouting German Tiger tanks.

The restored chateau, which serves as the "mairie" or town hall, now houses a museum to the Battle of the Bulge. Waiting tourists spoon their ice cream in a pleasant courtyard decorated with flower beds, a fountain and the inevitable Sherman tank and German .88 anti-tank gun, now as much a part of the scenery as gothic cathedrals and medieval castles.

In a small park near the crossroads of Ettelbruck, a twice life-sized General Patton, in helmet, tank jacket and holstered twin .38-caliber pistols, seems to be peering through field glasses across the valley at the old Diekirch brewery, which survived the battle and now also has become a museum of the Bulge.

The bronze statue, flanked by a Sherman tank, is inscribed "In memory of George Patton Jr., commanding general of the 3rd U.S. Army, whose forces liberated Ettelbruck on the 27 December, 1944, during the Ardennes counteroffensive. Presented by his son, George S. Patton, Capt. U.S. Army."

To take advantage of the better weather, the Belgian government set the official celebration of the 40th anniversary of the Bulge for the weekend of Sept. 22-23. The long line of graying vets however will keep coming right through the Christmas holidays, the time of year when the surrounding pine forests are hip-deep in snow.

Field Marshal Ger von Rundstedt's last-ditch counteroffensive broke out at 5:30 a.m. on Saturday, Dec. 16. Some 220,000 German troops organized in 22 divisions with 980 tanks and 2,000 big guns came thundering out of the mountains and swept along a 65-mile front through the Ardennes forest. The strategy was to split the American and British lines in half and capture much-needed fuel and ammunition at the harbor of Antwerp.

By the time it was all over on Jan. 4, a week after Patton had raced his skidding tanks across the frozen roads to relieve Bastogne, 76,890 Americans were dead, wounded or prisoners of war.

First hit and first to surrender or disperse in a panicky retreat was the raw, green 106th Division, a draftee outfit that had entered the line only two days earlier. They left the roads cluttered with abandoned trucks, artillery pieces, burning kitchen equipment and a litter of overcoats and gas masks.

The previous Fourth of July, the division had proudly paraded down North Pennsylvania Street in Indianapolis in brand new uniforms.

"Panic, sheer panic flamed that road all day and into the night," concluded the historian of the embarrassed division. Its commander, Maj. Gen. Alan Jones, toppled over with a heart attack when Gen. Matthew Ridgeway relieved him of his command.

Of the 16,000 "Golden Lions" — so named for the lion's head on their shoulder patch — who took up positions in the old Siegfried Line bunkers, only 4,000 came out, some to fight bravely in small leaderless groups.

Lt. Eric Wood, a Princeton football star who was determined to fight his own "private little war" after his regiment fled, is remembered by a crossroads marker near the village of Meyerode.

His body was found among 200 German corpses near the command post of Sepp Dietrich, commander of the Sixth SS Panzer Army, who denounced "Ami criminals and scoundrels" for ambushing German supply columns and slowing the breakthrough.

There is a monument to the hapless 106th in St. Vith, which was division headquarters during its brief combat history. The town, which was German until the end of World War I, is still spelled the German way, Sankt Vith, on the highway markers on the outskirts. Now teen-agers in punk hairdos speak German over their Star Wars games on the video machines in the local cafe, one of only three buildings which survived the Panzer onslaught four decades ago. Survivors of the 106th always maintained that the townspeople, while pretending to be friendly, were for the most part pro-Hitler and knew in advance that the counteroffensive was under way.

Ten miles north of St. Vith is another museum to the Bulge, just opened across from the saddest and starkest of all the monuments in the Ardennes, the low stone wall bearing the names of the 84 victims of the Malmedy massacre.

It happened on Dec. 17, the second day of the battle. A convoy of the combat reserve of the U.S. Seventh Armored Division, on its way to help out the decimated 106th, and a field artillery observation battalion came down the road from Malmedy just as the lead tanks of Obersturmbannfuehrer Jochen Peiper's 1st Panzer Regiment topped the rise of the crossroads at Baugnez. The quickly captured Americans — about 100 of them — were herded into the open field beside the cafe, searched and relieved of weapons, compasses, maps, cigarettes, wallets, watches and rings.

"It's a long way to Tipperary, boys," taunted Peiper, who was proud of his English, as he hurried by in his captured American jeep. Peiper, in command of what was called the "Leibstandarte," Hitler's personal SS bodyguard, was a hardened veteran of the Russian front, where taking prisoners was not always a recognized nicety of warfare. As the main body of Peiper's battle group disappeared around the bend with their commander, a German soldier in the back of one of the troop-carrying trucks rose up and fired his pistol into the crowd of unarmed prisoners. "Stand fast," ordered a U.S. Army surgeon, as a medic wearing a red cross armband fell. Then a second shot rang out from an armored car, the next vehicle in the passing line, and another medic toppled over.

Either from savagery or under the impression that a fire fight had erupted, the two tanks at each end of the field guarding the prisoners suddenly opened up with their machine guns. Other passing tanks joined in firing on the prisoners now hugging the ground amid the tangle of bodies. SS troopers with pistols finished off most of those who tried to crawl away. A medical corps major was allowed to dress the wounds of a badly hit comrade before the guards killed them both.

Somehow, a half-dozen Americans managed to escape into the woods and lived to testify against Peiper at a war crimes trial that sentenced him to be hanged. His sentence was commuted to life and in 1957 he was released from prison. Peiper went to live in France, hoping to find seclusion and escape from his past by translating military books from English into German.

On July 14, 1976, Bastille Day in France the charred body of Jochen Peiper was found next to his hunting rifle and several empty clips in the smoking ruins of his Bavarian-style chalet. A group calling itself "The Avengers" telephoned the Paris newspaper L'Aurore claiming responsibility for the assassination.

More than any monuments, the grim statistics written in stone in the two military cemeteries near the Luxembourg airport attest to the outcome of the Battle of the Bulge. On the beautifully kept grounds at Hamm, 5,075 soldiers are buried under individual crosses and some Stars of David. Out front, under an identically sized cross, as if reviewing his Third Army troops, lies General Patton, who was killed in a jeep accident after the war.

Less than a quarter of a mile away in a woodland grove visited by an occasional weeping widow or stooped old father, 10,913 German soldiers are buried in the Sandweiler military cemetery.

Most graves are dated between Dec. 20 and Jan. 4, when the tide began to turn in the Ardennes. Christmas Day, 1944, seems to have been the most frequent date for death's rendezvous with the no longer advancing Panzer armies.

That was the day when General McAuliffe and his aides were dining on K-ration salmon and lemon meringue pie that got squashed in the stampede for the basement when Luftwaffe bombs rocked their Bastogne headquarters.

A few days before the Germans launched their last offensive, Dwight Eisenhower had bet British Field Marshall Barnard Montgomery that the war would be over by Christmas.

It wasn't, but the Battle of the Bulge sealed the Germans' fate.

Soviet Center Near The U.S.-Mexican Border Seeks To Promote Cultural Ties

By CAM ROSSIE
Associated Press Writer

MEXICALI, Mexico (AP) — Among the literature found in a tiny office in this city just across the U.S. border is a booklet titled "Nicaragua: The United States' Undeclared War."

For the equivalent of a quarter or less, visitors can buy the booklet or select from about 35 others — most of them published in Spanish by the official Soviet Union news agency Novosti — that outline Mexican-Soviet cultural and political ties and describe life in the Soviet Union.

They also criticize U.S. involvement in Central America, its position on nuclear arms and what they describe as its "imperialist" aggression and support of international terrorism.

The Mexico-Soviet Union Institute of Friendship and Cultural Exchange in Mexicali, which disseminates the information, is the newest of seven such centers in Mexico and the only one within walking distance of the the United States. Mexicali is just across the border from Calexico, Calif.

There are 15 U.S.-Mexican national centers throughout Mexico, but none here. They are independent cultural institutes that raise most of their own funds by teaching English, but they also receive some funding from the U.S. Information Service.

The U.S. Embassy in Mexico City operates the Benjamin Franklin Library, which is open to the public there. It was founded in the 1940s by the American Library Association and then turned over to the U.S. government to operate.

The Mexico-Soviet Institute in Mexicali — inaugurated in August — aims to strengthen relations and promote cultural understanding between Mexico and the Soviet Union, according to Martha Garcia, its public relations director. The other branches, which have the same goal, are in Mexico City, Puebla, Toluca, Guadalajara, Morelia and Jalapa.

U.S.-Mexican cultural centers are in Mexico City's Zona Rosa and another is in the middle-class Del Valle area to the south. There are two in Monterrey and one each in Chihuahua, Guadalajara, Hermosillo, Merida, Morelia, Saltillo, San Luis Potosi, Tampico, Torreon, Veracruz and Zacatecas.

Ms. Garcia said in an interview that membership in the Mexico-Soviet civic association, founded in Mexico City in 1944, includes Mexico's socialist parties, labor unions and citizens from all walks of life.

"The only requirement is that the members be friends of the Soviet Union," she said.

The institute's local president, Sergio Quiroz Miranda, is the federal representative in Mexicali of Mexico's Popular Socialist Party.

Through its sponsorship of cultural exchange programs, scholarships for study in the Soviet Union, symposiums and lectures, the institute "tries to show what Russia is," Ms. Garcia said. "Then the people can decide."

Although the institute focuses on cultural matters, among its objectives is to teach members Soviet history, similarities between Mexico and the Soviet Union, and what the Soviet Union "has done and is doing for the stuggle for peace," Ms. Garcia said.

"The Soviet Union is the bastion in the struggle for peace in the world. The United States is promoting war. One of the most worrisome points in the world is Central America," she added.

"How can we not believe that the United States is going to invade Nicaragua?"

Although fostering anti-U.S. sentiment is not listed as an institute objective, much of the literature and symposium is critical of U.S. foreign policy.

The 29-page booklet on Nicaragua says "the Reagan team opted for force, the politics of the 'big stick' and cannon dipomacy" in Nicaragua following the Sandinista government's rise to power in 1979.

"The peace initiatives of Nicaragua and other countries are supported and understood by the USSR," says the booklet, published this year.

"The shameless agression of the largest imperialist power in the world against Grenada, a tiny Caribbean state, is considered by many observers a military test by Washington of its imperialist objectives. ... It's happening today in Grenada and Lebanon; who will be the victims tomorrow of the terrorism that the White House has elevated to the rank of official policy? El Salvador, Nicaragua or Cuba?"

Said Ms. Garcia: "Never have we been against the United States, because it's a marvelous country, but we're against the imperialism of the United States."

She criticized U.S.-based multinational companies that she said "invade Mexico, Latin American and many underdeveloped countries with their products and take out cheap labor and prime materials."

But, she added, "The best business of imperialism is war because the industry of war brings the most riches. The production of arms brings money."

A symposium in Mexico City in March to celebrate the institute's 40th anniversary included a presentation by Rostislav Sergueev, Soviet ambassador to Mexico.

"Our countries have an ancient and strong history that gives them a rich experience in understanding life and the importance of conserving cultural values and civilization, whose expression in international relations is the struggle against all the enemies of sovereignty and independence," the institute's magazine quoted Sergueev as saying.

Irish Struggle To Keep Its Ancient Gaelic Identity

By MARCUS ELIASON
Associated Press Writer

DUBLIN, Ireland (AP) — The Irish prime minister's official title is Taoiseach, an ancient Gaelic word meaning clan leader. His political party is called Fine Gael, the Tribe of Ireland.

Such titles tell much about a land struggling to preserve its identity under the shadow of Britain just across the Irish Sea. They imply a sense of family, proud of its history and determined to remain a family in the age of European supranationalism and the global village.

Ireland is to Britain what Belgium is to France, or Canada to the United States — the weaker, less populous but occasionally wiser next-door neighbor.

The word often used for Ireland is soft — soft rain, soft voices, soft green land. People are warm and welcoming. They go straight to first-name terms, even with the Taoiseach, pronounced TEE'-shuck.

Part of the family atmosphere is linked to the fact that Ireland, 97-percent Roman Catholic, is the most church-bound country in Europe. Divorce and abortion are banned. The sale of contraceptives is severely restricted. The indirect result, thanks to modern medicine, is a baby boom that has made it Europe's youngest country. Half its 3.5 million people are under 25.

The Irish freely admit to having an inferiority complex.

In the Dail (Parliament) recently, the opposition was lambasting the government over the fact that Britain had congratulated Ireland on its handling of the search for an Irish Republican Army suspect.

"A patronizing pat on the head," complained opposition leader Charles J. Haughey.

"I think it is part of our national inferiority complex to miscontrue compliments and take them as insults," retorted Justice Minister Michael Noonan.

Ireland won its independence in 1921 after centuries of British rule stained by massacres, persecution and campaigns to stamp out the Irish identity. English became the official language. Irishmen were forced to trim their beards to English norms, and take English surnames.

Something of the ancient British contempt for the Irish lives on in the "Irish jokes" which are a staple of comic routines in Britain, and the so-called "Paddy Factor," which British troops in Northern Ireland mention whenever an IRA operation goes awry.

Independent Ireland went through a severe anti-British backlash. Ireland left the British Commonwealth, stayed neutral in World War II, and just two years ago managed to annoy Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher by refusing to give full support to Britain's war with Argentina over the Falkland Islands.

Ireland still maintains Gaelic — it is called Irish here — as an official language alongside English, and it is compulsory in schools and on government signs and documents.

"12 uair a chloig — 5p," say the signs on Dublin parking meters. Half an hour costs five pence.

But it is spoken less and less. The state radio and television broadcast mostly in English. Parliament conducts its business in English. Civil servants are required to have taken a course in Irish but only an estimated 5 percent of the people speak it well.

"When my country takes her place among the nations of the earth, then and not until then, let my epitaph be written," declared the Irish freedom fighter Robert Emmet before the English hanged him in 1803.

That place among nations still seems to elude the Irish. They refuse to join the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and declare themselves neutral in the East-West conflict, but are ardent members of the European Common Market. They are a liberal Western democracy where hundreds of women and men, deserted by their spouses, can never remarry because the church so decrees.

They have a modern industrial state, yet on the main bridges across Dublin's Liffey River sit women with infants, Irish citizens wrapped in blankets, begging.

Their constitution commits them to seek unity of Ireland and the British-ruled province of Ulster. Yet none but the most diehard nationalists — and they are dwindling in number — still imagines regaining sovereignty over Ulster. It has become something of a national myth.

The Irish memory of past injustice remains strong. No country responded faster and more generously than Ireland to the Ethiopian famine. The national trauma of Ireland's own famine in the mid-19th century, in which an estimated 1 million died, lingers on.

On a recent TV talk show, the host signed off by reminding viewers of "Clogs" Gallagher, an old man who traveled around the island playing the fiddle and dancing a jig. He had recently appeared on the show.

"I thought, just to remember him, you might want to know that he died on Thursday," said the host, Gay Byrnes. "All right? Well, there you are. Sad note to end on, but you would think it peculiar if I didn't mention it."

After all, a member of the Irish family had died.

THROUGH A GLASS — UNCLEARLY — Like time lost or a place vaguely remembered, this once white-painted window in an abandoned store in the Martin County village of Everetts is an object that conveys a confusion of dust, shadows and scattered clingings of a former pristine coat of white. Today's Young Turn To '50s-Era Relics

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

The post World War II years between 1946 and 1960 may be receding from memory, but they are growing in importance as style setters, as people too young to recall them indulge in nostalgia for a period they never knew.

Sharing in the general nostalgia for postwar music and clothing are furniture and decorative objects. Some indications of growing decorative interest in the period include recent publication of a book about furniture of the '50s, the opening of a number of retail galleries specializing in '50s furnishings and even new interest by museums in acquiring and exhibiting the era's styles.

According to Cara Greenberg, author of "Mid-Century Modern: Furniture of the 1950s," (Harmony Books), collectors are snapping up examples of '50s furniture, lamps and other items.

The most desirable pieces are those designed by well-known architects and industrial designers such as Charles and Ray Eames, George Nelson, Harry Bertoia, Isamu Noguchi and Eero Saarinen. However, pieces by lesser names as well as anonymous examples are also being sought.

Prices for the better-known names are rising, but it's still possible to find an attractive and good quality chair for $150, says Mrs. Greenberg. One New York retailer noted that prices at his shop range from a few hundred dollars to $10,000, depending on the piece, its rarity, historic importance and condition.

Mrs. Greenberg advises those interested in the period to check second-hand stores, tag sales and even Salvation Army stores first. However, she adds, the best of the '50s furnishings were never produced in quantity and are likely to be rare. The designs of individuals such as Noguchi and Nelson were produced in the hundreds, not thousands. They were always expensive and still are. Since these pieces were in demand mainly in urban areas of the country, finds are not likely to turn up in the backwaters of America.

An option still available is to select currently-produced examples of great pieces. Designs by Charles Eames, Noguchi and Nelson are still made by Herman Miller, while Knoll International continues to produce pieces by Saarinen, Bertoia, Marcel Breuer and Mies van der Rohe, she says.

Another idea is to shop for the pieces in specialty outlets which have opened recently in Los Angeles, San Francisco and New York. Mark Isaacson, 30, one of three co-owners of Fifty-50 in New York, says there has been a more receptive public recently than when he began selling '50s furnishings about four years ago.

"When I began selling this stuff, people said I was nuts. We still get those who say they prefer the Salvation Army." Yet, he adds, the Bass Museum in Miami recently borrowed 15 pieces from the shop for an exhibition detailing the decorative arts of the period.

Those who appreciate the furniture tend to be young, urban trendy individuals in their 20s and 30s, according to Isaacson. They often work in design and allied fields and, thus, are familiar with the names of the leading designers, and recognize their contribution to the development of modern design.

Some collectors, including both Mrs. Greenberg and Isaacson, began by buying Art Deco furniture. Then, as those pieces became rare and costly, they looked for something else that was distinctive—and affordable.

Her first find was a molded plastic dining chair. "My husband and I saw it for $15 at a tag sale in Brooklyn. We bought it and later discovered it was by Charles Eames," she said.

What she likes about '50s furnishings is its vitality. "It is outrageous furniture, but there is a great sense of exuberance, which is in keeping with a period when the American dream of the good life for everyone seemed to be just around the corner and everything was in an expanding upward pattern."

The most distinctive '50s style is the "biomorphic" or "organic" style which emphasizes amoeba-like shapes. An example is the walnut-based glass-topped coffee table created by Noguchi. Saarinen's womb chair is an example of the organic style of upholstered furniture.

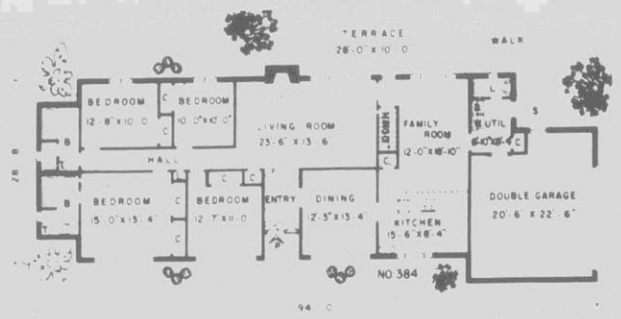

This type of furniture became unfashionable in the 1960s when it was replaced by a hard-edged, right-angled type of furniture. But now that softer, more ornamented designs are gaining in favor, the '50s designs are beginning to look right again.

Is '50s furniture just a fad? Absolutely not, says Mrs. Greenberg. "This furniture will become a classic," she said.

Cathedral ceilings crown the array of windows that marks the Cayman, a generously proportioned contemporary plan with an interior bursting with light and space.

Four full-sized bedrooms, a handy utility room, two and one half baths, and well-defined living areas meld to create this airy plan.

Fronted by a small covered porch, entry is into the foyer, open to the formal dining room at right and formal living room ahead. Carefully placed to offer a cozy welcome is the wood-burning fireplace, clearly visible from the foyer. The living and dining room, both private and sizable, promise a natural setting for entertaining, while the sprawling and casual family room-kitchen sparks informality. With access to the basement and terrace, the family room is a hub of family activity and is linked to the kitchen by a useful breakfast bar.

Q. — I haven't yet straightened out in my mind which paints a synthetic brush can best handle. Can you tell me and also give me some hints about buying both the synthetic and natural bristle brushes?

A. — Brushes with synthetic bristles work especially well with latex paints. The synthetics can also be used with oil-based paints, but most professionals prefer brushes with natural bristles. Some of the pros who do excellent work with oil-base paints use very high quality brushes. The do-it-yourselfer can get by without the best brushes on the market, but should not settle for the inexpensive synthetics which have the ends chopped off in an even line. Good synthetic bristles have a mixture of bristle sizes. The ends are tapered and appear split or flagged.

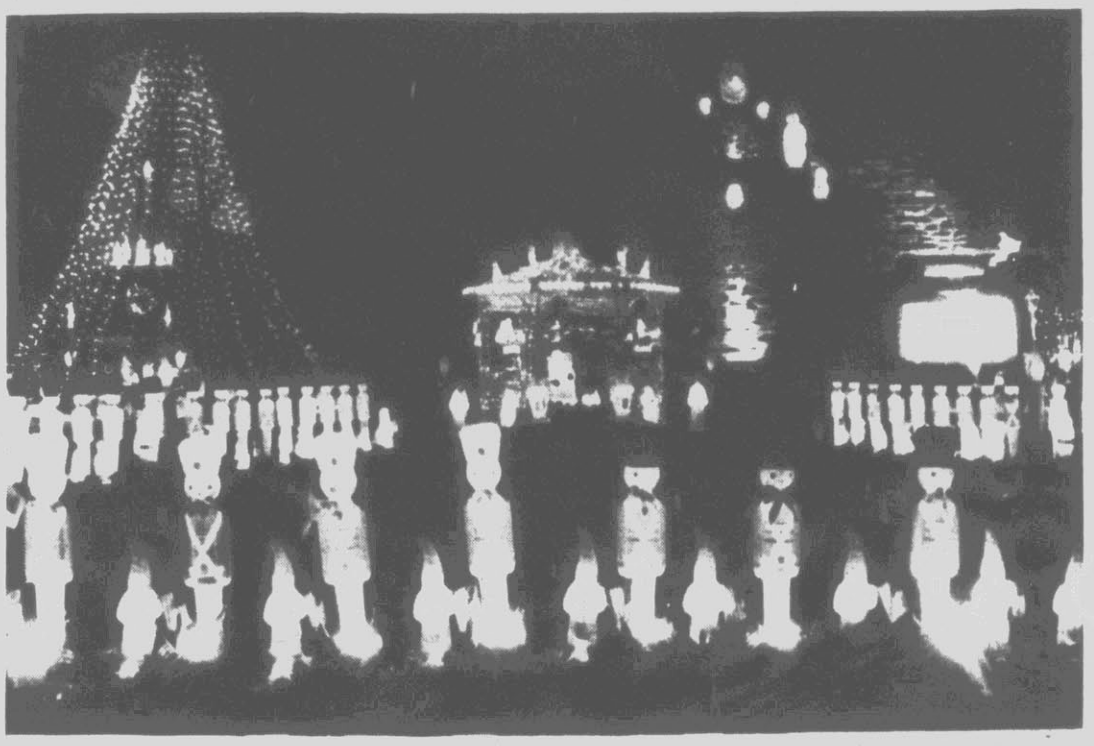

Q. — I have to repaint our house on the outside. There are a lot of cracks on some parts of the surface. Do these have to be removed with a paint remover or scraper or both before repainting? It seems that would be an impossible task.

A. — Not impossible, since it is done all the time, but it does require some hard work. Your situation may not be either impossible or difficult if the cracks you mentioned are of the very fine hairline types. In that case, cleaning and sanding the surface may be all that is needed before repainting.

Q. — You once wrote a story telling how color can be used to make rooms appear smaller or larger or whatever you want. Can you give me a smaller version of the story, since I plan on painting three rooms and all of them have certain problems?

A. — Here are some tips along that line. If a room is long and narrow, paint the end walls a deeper shade than the others. In a room that is too small, use light colors. If a ceiling is too high, make it appear lower with a slightly deeper shade than the walls. In choosing a color for a large room, remember it will appear more intense after it has been applied. Use warm colors — such as reds, oranges and yellows, in rooms that receive a minimum amount of sunlight or have no windows in them. Use cool colors — such as grays, blues and bluish greens — in rooms that will be bright and sunny most of the time.

(Surface preparation, kinds of paint, brushes, rollers, etc., are discussed in Andy Lang's booklet, "Paint Your House Inside and Out," which can be obtained by sending 50 cents and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to Know-How, P.O. Box 477, Huntington, NY 11743. Questions of general interest will be answered in the column.)

What's new on the market?

THE PRODUCT — A combination wheelbarrow and cart.

Manufacturer's claim — That it looks like a wheelbarrow, but is unlike any other because it has only one handle ... That it is balanced like a cart for easier hauling ... that it dumps like a wheelbarrow ... that its two 12-inch spoked wheels make it easier to push and roll over curbs and steps ... that its tray has a heavy duty rolled edge for added body strength ... and that is has a sloped front edge and large flat bottom, making it ideal for dumping and for carrying such things as potted flowers.

THE PRODUCT — A chimney cap that eliminates downdrafts.

Manufacturer's claim — That, by eliminating downdrafts, the chimney cap assures effective burning of oil, natural gas and solid fuel in furnaces and stoves and protects against smoke and carbon monoxide fumes entering the house ... that it will fit chimneys from 5 to 8 inches in diameter and adapt to rectangular chimney flues ... that it doubles as a rain cap to prevent the entry of moisture ... that tests show it will have an average lifespan of 10 years ... and that it uses the same airfoil principle that enables airplanes to fly.

THE PRODUCT — A two-part liquid modified acrylic adhesive.

Manufacturer's claim — That this product glues almost anything and comes closest to being a universal bonding material ... that this adhesive can bond such previously difficult things as oily metals, metal to glass, and glass to glass ... that it bonds in seconds and retains its flexibility, thus surviving wide variations in temperature and humidity ... that it bonds both porous and non-porous materials ... that it achieves its success by the application of an adhesive on one surface and an activator on the other ... and that the adhesive is housed in a plastic syringe, the activator in a spillproof bottle.

THE PRODUCT — A saw set that makes it easier to set saw teeth.

Manufacturer's claim — That the saw set magnifies the user's view of the teeth, making possible a greater degree of accuracy in setting teeth to the correct angle ... that this extra visibility is provided by a magnifying lens over the setting area ... that it has an adjustable knob that makes it easier to dial the appropriate settings for saws with 4 to 12 teeth per inch ... that a contoured pistol grip allows for greater comfort and leverage in setting ... and that it can be used on ordinary hand saws, both crosscut and rip, on back saws, and on panel saws.

Q. Are poinsettias poisonous? (R.M., Williamston)

A. This false rumor raises its ugly head every year. Research has proven that poinsettias are not harmful to human or animal health if eaten.

Q. I want to use some old railroad ties to make a raised bed. Will the creosote in the ties harm the plants? (R.E., Charlotte)

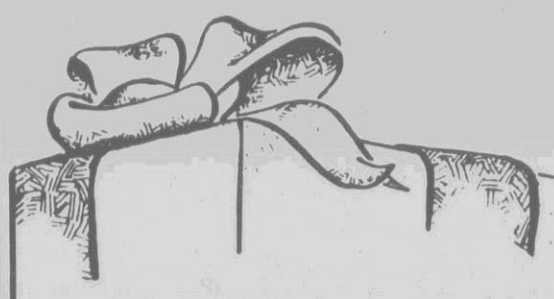

A. The creosote in old ties will not cause problems to nearby plants, but timber freshly treated with creosote should be allowed to dry for several months before using it in the landscape.

Q. What are some houseplants for a window facing west? (M.R., Southern Pines)

Some of the plants suitable for western exposure are croton, aluminum plant, artillery plant, many species of bromeliads, nerve plant, snake plant, spider plant, avocado, African violets and many species of cacti and succulents.

Navy Plans New Brigs

SAN DIEGO (AP) — The Navy is building new brigs, ending the discrimination caused by a lack of short-term holding facilities for women, who now are sent to federal prisons where they get a prison record, a newspaper reported today.

The construction is included in Navy planning for fiscal 1985 in San Francisco and fiscal 1988 in San Diego, the San Diego Union reported, quoting an unidentified Pentagon spokesman.

The spokesman said the brig here, which currently can hold 187 men, will be replaced by a facility to house 300 men and seven women. The brig at Treasure Island, San Francisco, which now can confine 148 men and 12 women, will be replaced by one to hold 305 men and 40 women.

A new brig will be built at Long Beach in fiscal year 1987 that will house 134 men and seven women, the spokesman said.

The Navy's brig construction program will end years of discrimination toward women who have been confined in federal prisons for minor offenses for which male sailors would have been sent to a brig or placed on restriction.

Women in federal prisons typically are booked, fingerprinted, photographed and have a rap sheet sent to the Federal Bureau of Investigation's National Identification Center in Washington, giving them a federal record.

The plans were announced in response to questions from U.S. Rep. Patricia Schroeder, D-Colo., and Carolyn Becraft of the Women's Equity Action League.

Ms. Schroeder is a member of the House Armed Services Committee and co-chairman of the Congressional Caucus for Women's Issues.

A brig is intended for short-term confinement only.

Chinese In America Send Money Back To Homeland

By RICK GLADSTONE
Associated Press Writer

TAISHAN, China (AP) — When a new school or hospital goes up in the peasant villages of Taishan, chances are the construction money comes from a Chinatown in the United States.

Ever since thousands of Taishanese journeyed to America in the last century to mine gold and build railroads, they and their descendants have sent money back to this picturesque southern rural county, ancestral homeland of most Chinese-Americans.

"Seven out of 10 people in Taishan have family members overseas, mostly in the United States. Even I have relatives there," says Huang Pan, chief of the Overseas Chinese Department of Taishan County, population 950,000.

Taishan's local hero is a native son who returned in 1904 with enough cash to build the county's own railroad line, which prospered until wrecked by Japanese bombs in World War II.

A statue of railroad builder Chen Yixi, who died in 1930 at age 85, adorns Taishan City's central square. But all that remains of his project is a dirt embankment and a few pilings.

When the Communist Party took power in 1949, it banned open contact between local people and Chinese-American relatives. Now the Communists encourage Chinese-Americans to return for family reunions, part of a growing U.S.-China relationship.

Visitors are encouraged to spend money and bring gifts to raise living standards in undeveloped Taishan, where the biggest industry is a wall-clock factory.

Photographs of well-dressed American relatives, formerly used by the Communists as evidence of spying, now hang in many homes, along with appliances, jars of American instant coffee and other gift items only foreign money can buy.

Huang said Taishan is negotiating to form a sister relationship with Mendocino County in northern California, which has many Chinese-Americans with Taishan roots.

Overseas donations are seen everywhere, from inscribed benches around Taishan City's lake to a new school dedicated to a New York Chinatown restaurateur named Chen Zichao, also known as T.C. "Eddie" Chan, who gave $50,000 to build it.

Nobody in Taishan seems to know or care that he recently was identified by a U.S. presidential commission as having ties to organized crime, a connection Chen has denied.

Chinese-Americans have financed more than 100 schools, said Pan Zhejun, a local Taishan guide. In early November, Taishan dedicated a hospital built almost entirely with overseas money.

Other signs of generosity include the 92-room Taishan Garden Hotel, a joint venture partly financed by overseas Chinese. It has a color television in every room and a restaurant that serves specialties such as crispy-skin chicken and spicy steamed crabs.

Signs of American culture are increasingly common, from stylish jeans and jerseys with "U.S. Navy" emblems, to hawkers peddling American cigarettes and soda pop. It's all imported from Hong Kong, 93 miles east across the Pearl River delta.

Many locals wear their hair in California-style shags, flips and perms crafted in dozens of storefront beauty parlors that have sprung up recently.

Most Taishan peasants plow paddies with water buffalo and thresh rice with foot-pumped machines, as they have done for centuries. But when they go home, they can turn on the television and watch "The A-Team" and "Magnum, P.I," pulled in from Hong Kong by tall antennas on nearly every roof.

Huang said nearly 1 million people of local origin live in 78 countries, most of them in the United States. He said about 300 Chinese-Americans have visited every year since the end of the 1966-76 Cultural Revolution, when relations with the United States improved dramatically.

"Most of the older ones want to talk with friends and relatives. The younger ones want to see their origins," he said.

The local government has built a compound of modest $10,000 apartments for overseas Chinese who wish to retire in Taishan. Huang said about 40 families have done so.

It was Taishan's poverty, a devastating flood and China's crushing defeat in the 1840 opium war with Britain, which drove thousands of men overseas to seek their fortunes, hoping to return eventually. Many later sent for wives and children.

Outwardly, much of Taishan remains as it was then. Rice paddies ring clusters of peasant houses, with the biggest signifying what used to be a landlord's residence.

Pigs, chickens, mangy dogs and barefoot children roam village alleys, their commotion mixed with the thud of rice-threshers and the occasional beep-beep of a truck or tractor horn.

Taishan is hard to reach, with no air or train service. Public transportation is a fleet of rusty buses, some windowless.

Most visitors go first to Canton, 87 miles northeast, hire a taxi, bounce over bad roads clogged with trucks and bicycles and cross two rivers by ferry. The journey can take all day, but for most returnees, it's worth the effort.

"This is our first trip back, and we're really enjoying it," said one middle-aged man and his wife from Detroit.

For 85-year-old retired engineer Huang Zaihua, the trip back to Taishan from Buffalo, N.Y., 60 years ago was permanent. He emigrated in 1915, attended Columbia University in New York, became a U.S. citizen, returned in 1924 and started a mechanics school.

Huang was imprisoned twice after the Communist takeover, accused of spying for the United States in the late 1950s and again during the Cultural Revolution.

"They said it was an American conspiracy to start a technical school. They put me in jail for 12 years," he said.

Now Huang now is honorary head of the local Returned Overseas Chinese Association.

"I am an American. I love the U.S.," he said. "But I have my old country here. That's why I came back."

Lab Uses Snakes, Horses To Help Save Human Lives

By STAN LEHMAN
Associated Press Writer

SAO PAULO, Brazil (AP) — The 6,000 to 7,000 poisonous snakes in a building on a hill in this bustling city combine with 600 horses in stables 25 miles away to save people's lives.

The reptiles and horses belong to Sao Paulo's Butantan Institute, which uses snake poison and blood from the horses to produce the antivenins needed to save the lives of people bitten by rattlesnakes, coral snakes and other specimens with exotic-sounding names such as "jararaca," "surucucu" and "urutu."

The institute has been operating for more than 80 years and is considered by one of its directors, Dr. Persio de Biasi, as "a pioneer in its field and the largest center of its kind in the world."

It also produces antitoxins for victims of spider and scorpion bites.

The institute, one of the few tourist attractions in this industrial city, is operated by the Sao Paulo State Health Department.

Its other activities include genetic research and the production of vaccines for such diseases as smallpox, cholera, rabies, whooping cough, tetanus, tuberculosis and diphtheria. It has a hospital on its grounds here.

"But we concentrate most of our efforts on snakes and on the production of antivenin," de Biasi, head of the institute's poisonous animal division, said in an interview.

Butantan's output is chiefly for Brazilian snake-bite victims, but de Biasi said that if an emergency request for a rare antidote comes from abroad, the institute will rush out a shipment.

To produce antivenin, the snake's venom is extracted by lab technicians, who carefully squeeze the snake's poison-containing glands. The venom then is injected in one of the 600 horses owned by the institute.

When the horse has produced enough antibodies, 5 percent of its blood is extracted and sent to the institute's laboratories where the antivenin is made.

"There is no such thing as an all-purpose antivenin," de Biasi said. "For each poison there is only one specific antidote produced from the venom of the species which the snake, that did the biting, belongs to," de Biasi said.

Asked why horses and not other animals are used, de Biasi said "because horses are stronger than most animals and their blood has been found to be ideal for the production of antibodies."

He said that the entire antivenin production process takes six months.

The poison of each of the 6,000 to 7,000 snakes the institute receives from around the country each year is extracted once a month for three or four months.

Afterwards, because its protein level drops with each extraction and because it cannot live very long in captivity, "the snake dies," de Biasi said.

Most of the snakes are donated by individuals who capture them on farms or in wooded areas in the state of Sao Paulo, in Brazil's southeast region.

Snakes from more remote regions such as the Amazon are flown in "courtesy of our domestic airlines."

For each snake, the institute gives the donor five 10-milliliter vials of antivenin, "the minimum needed to save a snake bite victim," de Biasi said.

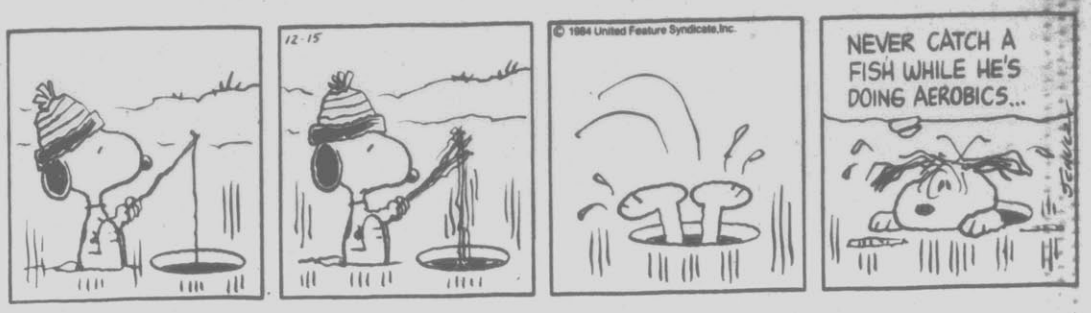

He said there were no exact figures on how many people are bitten by poisonous snakes each year in Brazil "but the number is definitely in the thousands."

According to de Biasi the institute's 16-bed Vital Brazil Hospital "the only one in the world exclusively dedicated to snake, scorpion and spider bite victims" treats about 4,000 people a year, "most of them after being bitten by snakes."

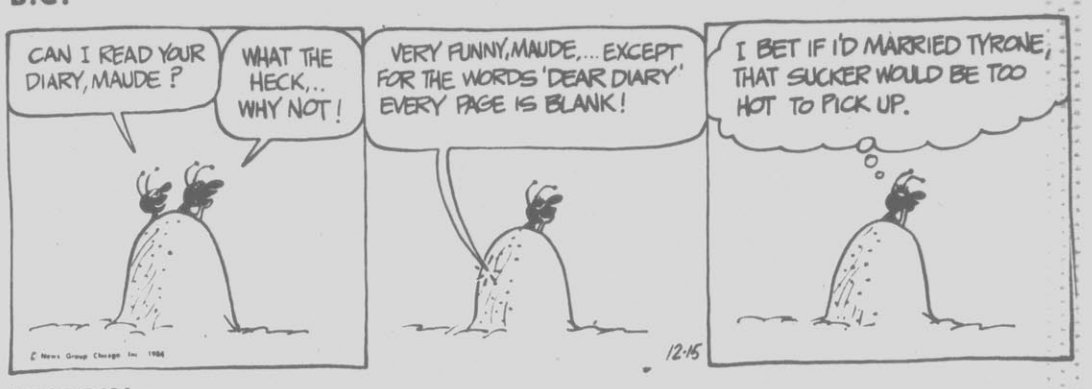

Antivenin is also stored in medical outposts in regions where the frequency of snake bites is higher and in emergency cases the institute uses the Brazilian air force to fly the medicine to remote areas.

De Biasi explained that the "number of snake bite victims tends to rise" with the increase in land clearing for farming, roads and large projects such as hydroelectric dams.

Dead Sea's Mud Is Big Business For Israeli Area

By EARLEEN F. TATRO
Associated Press Writer

EIN GEDI, Israel (AP) — Along the shores of the Dead Sea, the ancient haunt of biblical heroes and villains, tourists slather their bodies with gooey black mud.

In modern resort hotels, the mud churns and gurgles in steamy vats.

Young back-packers pick it up at will along the shores.

Rheumatic oldsters fly in from abroad on health-and-holiday tours to bask in the sun, soak in the sea, and apply the mud at private health spas.

Mud is big business at the Dead Sea, which at 1,290 feet below sea level is the lowest spot on earth.

Kibbutz Ein Gedi, an Israeli collective farm 25 miles southeast of Jerusalem, earned $250,000 last year selling the black mud in foreign countries, according to Tami Yankelevitz, who is the kibbutz's marketing manager for Dead Sea health products.

"We used to sell only 100 percent mud, shipping it in barrels to South America and South Korea," she said. "In January 1984 we started working with an Italian company. We sell them the mud and they make products that are based on Dead Sea mud, and we're in contact with a U.S. company to start selling in the American market."

Like the Dead Sea from which it comes, the mud has a foul, sulphurous smell. Once you have put it on, it takes a lot of scrubbing to get it off. At the Moriah Dead Sea Spa Hotel, guests pay $9 for the experience.

"In Israel, even the mud you have to pay for," joked Uri Unger, the hotel's general manager. "It's a natural material, millions of years rich with minerals."

The idea is that Dead Sea water is good for you because of its high content of chloride, magnesium, sodium and other minerals that enter the body through pores in the skin. A dip in the sea is popular with visitors with skin diseases and the mud baths are said to help rheumatism and arthritis.

"People come by word of mouth — not because doctors recommend it. Doctors are not recommending it because up until this point there has not been solid medical research," said Dr. David Abels, a dermatologist who immigrated to Israel four years ago from Santa Barbara, Calif., and works at a medical clinic on the Dead Sea.

Abels, who specializes in psoriasis, said research is under way in an effort to document the validity of the treatment.

The mud is also marketed as a beauty product.

Kibbutz Ein Gedi has printed a brochure that includes a strategically cropped photograph of an attractive young man and woman sensually applying mud to each other's shoulders. It also produces plastic tubes of Dead Sea mud with instructions that promise "when used regularly, your skin will be deeply cleansed, smooth and beautifully supple."

There's a more ominous side to the Dead Sea, which got its name because no fish or plants can live in the water. It's 10 times saltier than any ocean, giving it a natural buoyancy that means even non-swimmers cannot sink.

"You can't drown in the Dead Sea, but you can die in it. Drink half a glass and you're dead," said Shlomo Goren, head of the information department at the Dead Sea Works, an industrial complex that extracts raw materials for pesticides and fertilizers.

Tourist officials estimated about 790,000 Israelis and foreigners visited the Dead Sea last year.

The area is rich in history, but there's not much to do except take the cure.

The Lot Hotel has the "Sodom Disco," named for the Old Testament city destroyed by fire and brimstone for its sins. Tradition places Sodom and its sister city Gomorrah along the Dead Sea, near the place where Lot's wife was turned into a pillar of salt.

According to the Book of I Samuel, the young David hid in the caves of Ein Gedi to escape the wrath of King Saul. Just up the road, the Dead Sea Scrolls were found in the Qumran Caves.

Hawaiian Bunny Is Best In U.S.A.

HONOLULU (AP) — The Best Bunny in the U.S.A. lives right here at Haiku Plantations.

Utrecht II, which is her name, recently won Best in Show at the American Rabbit Breeders Association national competition in Orlando, Fla. This is comparable to a dog winning the American Kennel Club championships. It's the Miss America of rabbits.

Utrecht II was bred by Ruth Terna, who has been raising rabbits for the past eight years.

"I started with two pets at Easter, and now I have 80 or 85, all Netherland Dwarfs," she said. "I took 17 of them with me to the show in Orlando, figuring that if I placed any of them in the top 10 it would be a good trip. I won three first-place ribbons and one second, as well as Best in Show for fancy rabbits. It was remarkable."

Rabbit shows have two divisions: fancy rabbits like Utrecht that are raised as pets and commercial rabbits that are raised as menu items and raincoat linings.

"People who raise animals for meat or fur are interested in size," Ms. Terna said. "New Zealand whites and Florida whites get up to 16 or 18 pounds. A Netherland Dwarf should never go over about 2½ pounds, with 2½-inch ears. The ears must stand close together, and the eyes should be round, open and of good color."

When Peugeot designed a sedan suited for long distance driving, they kept one thing in mind. The driver.

Only the Peugeot 505 STI comes with a complete package of performance features you might look for, but not find, on the Audi, Volvo, or even BMW. A package that includes four-wheel independent suspension. Limited slip differential. Peugeot provides one additional comfort the others don't: orthopedically inspired full foam seating. To fully appreciate the true comfort of these cars, visit us for a short test drive. And recognize the Peugeot's long-range possibilities.

The stamps are being offered as Christmas gift items and are priced at $45 each. Stamp News

By SYD KRONISH
AP Newsfeatures

Three women of the Bible and a female martyr of World War II are honored on the latest stamps from Israel. The biblical heroines — Ruth, Huldah and Hannah appear on the 1984 Festival Series.

Ruth exemplifies love of family. She remained loyal and devoted to her mother-in-law following the death of her husband. Ruth, according to the biblical text, eventually remarried and gave birth to Obedd, father of Jesse, whose son became King David.

Huldah was a prophetess living in the 7th century. Her wisdom and counseling were recognized throughout the land.

Hannah, one of seven biblical prophetesses, is remembered for her long, sad period of barrenness. However, she later bore Samuel and eventually became the mother of three sons.

Contrasting with ancient lore are other new stamps. One marks the establishment of Israel's first free-enterprise farm cooperative, the Nahalal Moshav. Another is a tribute to David Wolfssohn who followed Theodore Herzel as President of the World Zionist Organization.

Hannah Szenes is honored on a commemorative envelope for her World War II bravery. As a volunteer for the British Army, she spent three months in Nazi-occupied Yugoslavia during 1944. She later crossed the border into Hungary to help the Jews of Europe but was arrested by the Germans and executed.

These stamps as well as all Israeli stamps issued since independence in 1948 are available from the Israel Stamp Collectors Society, PO Box 854, Van Nuys, CA 91408.

Next year, the U.S. Postal Service will issue a commemorative stamp honoring the veterans of World War I. Of the 4.3 million Americans to serve in that conflict, more than 360,000 were killed or wounded. Disease alone took the lives of more than 60,000 American soldiers, sailors, Marines and Coast Guard personnel. The United States entered the War April 6, 1917.

The design for the 1985 adhesive was unveiled at the recently held ceremonies on Veterans Day in Arlington National Cemetery. The stamp features a group of doughboys attacking a position against the Germans in France.

Jacky Larriviere may not be a household world in the American design field, but he is well known throughout Europe as a top-notch designer of postage stamps. During the past 12 years, Larriviere, who lives in France, has designed stamps for Laos, Tunisia, Monaco, French Polynesia and many of the French-speaking countries of Africa.

In a competition of international scope, Larriviere was the winner to design the Europa stamps for the 26 member nations on the 25th anniversary of its inception.

The last edition of Scott's Volume IV Standard Postage Stamp Catalogue (1985) covering non-British countries from Panama to Zambezia is now available to collectors. It is priced at $20. Over 31,000 prices have been changed in this new edition. Most of them, unfortunately, have been downward.

Post Cards Can Provide Historic Data

By CHESTER A. MOORE
Reading Eagle

SUNBURY, Pa. (AP) — Post cards are not only associated with vacation periods and the usual messages of "having a good time: wish you here." They can also provide historical data and a look at another era.

J. Lester Marshall Jr., a resident of this Northumberland County seat, can attest to that. He is a deltiologist, the technical name for a post-card collector.

Marshall has thousands of post cards that portray the history of central Pennsylvania, depicting current events sometimes in a rare and amusing manner.

Starting his collection in 1976, Marshall began with cards from only the Sunbury area. Then he widened his collection to show towns in Snyder, Montour and Union counties.

Some of his older cards show the dirt streets in towns of the Susquehanna Valley. Horses and buggies in use at the turn of the century are pictured on cards in his collection.

"Most of the older cards were printed in Germany before World War I," Marshall said. "After the First World War, post cards sort of disappeared. A short time later, the U.S. Postal Department offered cards for messages only, a pattern which began around 1880. There were no pictures on the cards."

Marshall said the first cards did not have the vertical line dividing the card into two equal parts. One side was used for a message and the other side for the address, he said. There were no pictures of particular spots or events. The concept behind today's picture post cards began in 1893 with lithographed post cards sold as souvenirs of the Columbian Exposition in Chicago.

Marshall has a set of the first picture cards. A set of 10 cards sold for 25 cents at the exposition.

The format of the early picture post card differed from that of the modern post cards used by vacationers and travelers. Originally, both the picture and the message appeared on the front of the card, and only the name and address were written on the back.

The standard post card in use today made its debut around 1907 or 1908, Marshall said.

In the early 1900s, Americans were using the cards to advertise their products and businesses. As the popularity of photography increased, the use of the picture post card increased correspondingly.

Marshall has some cards in his collection which he considers extremely rare.

One set of his cards shows President Reagan and Vice President George Bush taking the oaths of office on Inauguration Day. The one card shows Reagan apparently raising his left hand while he was taking the oath.

The same thing is shown on the card with Bush raising his left hand while taking the oath. Marshall believes the person who processed the film reversed the negative, and the maker of the post card did not detect the mistake until he had many of the cards made.

Cards in Marshall's collection not only provide a valuable resource for persons interested in the history of an area, but provide a quick look at current events.

Marshall is a member and founder of the 25-member Susquehanna Valley Post Card Club. He says there are many collectors and dealers throughout central Pennsylvania. The idea of the club is to meet and exchange items as well as ideas.

Important Event

One of the single most important improvements in the history of the Postal Service in America occurred in 1847 when adhesive stamps were adopted for use as prepayment of postage.

Prior to that time, letters accepted by postmasters for dispatch were marked "paid" by means of pen and ink or hand stamps of various designs. Such letters usually contained the town postmark and the mailing date.

Some postmasters, in order to facilitate the handling of mail, provided special stamps or other devices for use on letters as evidence of the prepayment of postage. These local stamps become known as "Postmasters' Provisionals."

On Jan. 1, 1856, the use of adhesive stamps issued by the Government became mandatory, and it wasn't long afterward that the hobby of stamp collecting began.

America's first adhesive stamps, issued on July 1, 1847, featured a portrait of Benjamin Franklin on a five-center and one of George Washington on a 10-cent stamp.

Since those first two postage stamps were issued, Franklin and Washington have appeared on more U.S. stamps than any other persons.

Issues bearing the likeness of these two prominent Americans can be found in most stamp collections. Today, there are more than 22 million stamp collectors in the United States alone.

PLAYWRIGHT CRAIG DAVID CALMAN . . . is the author of "Icy Waters," the play chosen for the December presentation sponsored by the Playwright Fund of North Carolina. The first presentation will be at noon at the Greenville Museum of Art, with the second presentation at 8 p.m. in the Humber House.

Calman's 'Icy Waters' To Be Presented Here

"Icy Waters," a one-act play by Craig David Calman is the December selection of The Playwrights Fund of North Carolina, Inc. to be given in two staged readings in Greenville on Dec. 19.

The first reading will be at noon Wednesday at The Best Lunch Theater at the Greenville Museum of Art, 802 South Evans Street. The evening reading will be held at Downtown Downstairs, the office of the Playwrights Fund in the basement of the Humber House, 117 West Fifth Street.

Both presentations are free and open to the public. Members of the staff of the museum will serve refreshments at the noon performance, and those attending can bring bag lunches.

At the evening presentation, an audience discussion with the author will follow the staged reading performance. The theme of the discussion of these plays is "Human Values in New Works for the Stage." Dr. Ted Ellis, professor of contemporary drama at East Carolina University, will coordinate the discussion.

Calman is the author of a sizeable body of work that includes two screenplays, three full-length stage plays, and six one-act plays. A former student of the University of California, Los Angeles, Film School, Calman describes himself as a "writer for actors and an actor for writers."

As an actor, Calman first appeared as a teenager in "Dark Doings in the Corral." He has since performed in productions of the Los Angeles Shakespeare Society of America, the Old Globe Theater, the National Shakespeare Festival, and the Boston Shakespere Company.

A brief biographical sketch of the playwright's life shows that "as a result of my grandparents migraton from the post-revolutionary upheavals of old Mexico to the peace and tranquility of California, I was born and raised there. My first vivid memory is of Rosemary Clooney singing 'Mambo Italiano' on television with a potted palm screen left, a heavily folded curtain behind her . . . video gray."

He notes that among his favorite 20th century writers are Henry Miller, Flannery O'Conner and William Shakespeare.

Playwright Albee Feels The World Would Be Better Without Critics

By GEORGE JAHN
Associated Press Writer

VIENNA (AP) — The man once hailed by the late Tennessee Williams as America's "only great playwright" scowled when talk turned recently to two pillars of American theater: critics and Broadway.

Of critics, Edward Albee said "the world would be a better place without them." And as for Broadway, the award-winning dramatist said it's turning into the staged equivalent of television.

The 56-year-old dramatist recently was interviewed during a break from directing two of his classics, "The Zoo Story," and "Counting the Ways," at Vienna's English Theater.

Bundled up and battling the flu, he spoke in the theater bar between sips of orange juice. Many of his observations dealt with his adversary relationship with the Broadway theater establishment.

It was not always so for Albee, whose numerous distinctions include two Pulitzer Prizes for drama and the 1962 New York Drama Critics Award for "Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf." The play had Broadway and its reviewers at Albee's feet and went on to more success with the 1966 screen version starring Elizabeth Taylor and the late Richard Burton in the epic marital battle that many thought reflected their own tempestous marriage.

But New York productions of Albee's later plays were often panned.

In January 1983, "The Man Who Had Three Arms" opened on Broadway and closed less than three weeks later. The play, in part an attack on the critics, had come from a successful run at Chicago's Goodman Theater.

Albee hasn't had a New York performance since, concentrating on regional and college theaters. He staged two short new pieces, "Walking" for the University of California at Irvine, and "Finding the Sun" at the University of Colorado in Boulder, before coming to Vienna.

"'The Man Who Had Three Arms' is the play where more than any other I've written ... my peers have liked a great deal," Albee mused. "Fellow playwrights, composers, painters, sculptors — people who think — they like it enormously, and it was destroyed by the New York critics."

"That tells you something," he said. "Either intellectuals in the United States are completely out of touch with reality, or our critical circus has as its standard something other than absolute excellence, giving the public the half truths and simple answers that it wants."

Several of those who've worked with Albee say his New York troubles actually began with "Virginia Woolf," suggesting he reacted badly to pressure from the critics to match that success. Some say he consciously changed his style shortly afterward and began moving toward abstraction.

Albee downplayed the significance of "Virginia Woolf" as a yardstick of his later development.

"Everybody has one play, or one novel, or one poem ... one thing that is more popular than everything else," said Albee.

He was not pleased with the film version, though, and had wanted Bette Davis and the late James Mason to play Martha and George. Miss Taylor won an Academy Award for the role.

Though he thought Miss Taylor had done "her best acting" in the film, "she was 20 years too young for that role. That made for a distortion."

A choice of Mason and Miss Davis "wouldn't have dragged with it all the personal stuff of the Burtons and their marriage and all the rest of it," he added.

Albee plays do generally well abroad. Both "The Zoo Story" and "Counting the Ways" received sparkling notices here. A Czech version of "Seascapes," which opened in repertory about a year ago in Prague, is sold out there for 1985.

"The Man With Three Arms" is to be produced this season in three West German cities.

Albee drew parallels between European and American productions of his works.

"I consider this off-off Broadway," he said of Vienna's 250-seat theater. "There is no commercial pressure on me."

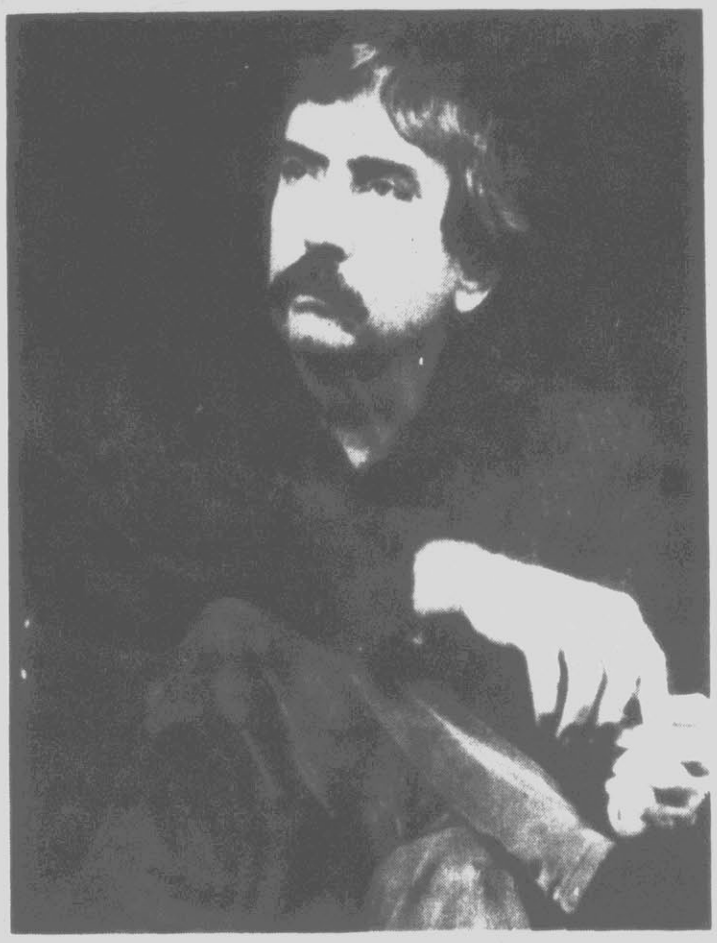

"It's easier to have it the further you get away from commerce," he said. "Everybody has a better time, the smaller the theater gets, the younger the audience gets, the cheaper the prices get. I spend most of my time having good theater experiences in the smaller theaters."

Albee said he has recently finished three one-act plays collectively entitled "Sand" which he hopes to debut in Vienna. Despite the smoother ride, he rejected a suggestion that he would be better off concentrating on projects abroad.

"I'm an American playwright," he said. "I would rather have work of mine ... have a chance to affect people in my own country.

"While it's lovely to have plays done in Vienna, if I have to make a choice between this lovely theater in Vienna and the Broadhurst theater in New York City for an eight-week run, I'd take New York."

"I would never expatriate myself," he said. "I'd rather battle it out back home."

BETTER WITHOUT CRITICS . . . American playwright Edward Albee, currently directing two of his works in Vienna's English Theater, expressed the opinion of critis: that "the world would be a better place without them." The 57-year-old dramatist has developed an adversary relationship with the Broadway theater establishment. (AP Laserphoto)

'Pale Horse' Is Exciting

RIDE A PALE HORSE. By Helen MacInnes. Harcourt Brace Jovanovich. 355 Pages. $15.95.

"Ride a Pale Horse," Helen MacInnes' 21st novel, is a story of espionage, terrorism and political intrigue.

As the story opens, a woman journalist, attending a peace conference in Prague, is approached by a high-level communist official who plans to defect to the United States. She agrees to help him, and follows his instructions to contact a man named Peter Bristow of the CIA upon her return to the United States.

The journalist, Karen Cornell, hopes her efforts will be rewarded by an exclusive interview for her magazine, the "Washington Spectator." But from the moment she agrees to help Josef Vasek, her life is in danger. Luckily for Miss Cornell, Bristow is experienced and skilled when it comes to dangerous situations, and it becomes his job to insure her safety.

Basek reveals to Miss Cornell that there is a "mole" operating in Bristow's section of the CIA. And Bristow must determine which of his colleagues has been feeding information to the communists. Bristow must also make sure Vasek is not killed, if he is indeed able to leave Czechoslovakia and successfully make his way to the United States.

Meanwhile, a romance develops between Bristow and Miss Cornell. And it is the stuff marriages are made of. Bristow is a wonderful hero and Miss Cornell is an equally wonderful heroine.

Miss MacInnes knows how to tell a good story. She keeps the reader guessing as to the identity of the "mole," and also throws in a little surprise involving Vasek and his true motives for wanting to defect.

Some readers may argue whether it is proper for a journalist to become involved in international affairs, but that shouldn't spoil the fun of reading "Ride a Pale Horse." Miss MacInnes has written a very exciting story.

Fine Roles In Film

By BOB THOMAS
Associated Press Writer

"MASS APPEAL" is the story of an older priest and his younger assistant who share a parish church. The comparison to "Going My Way" ends there.

Mark Dolson is a seminarian with a penchant for asking uncomfortable questions, such as: Did Jesus have a sex life? He becomes a problem to the head of the seminary, Monsignor Burke, especially when he challenges the expulsion of two candidates for priesthood suspected of homosexual relations.

Dolson turns up in the congregation of Father Tim Farley, whose one-liners and comforting homilies have made him immensely popular with his affluent parisioners. Father Farley is irritated, then intrigued by the outspoken young man. With considerable misgivings, the priest agrees to accept Dolson as his temporary assistant, especially since the seminarian faces imminent expulsion.

The young man accuses Father Farley of trying to play "Father Bojangles." When Farley claims a faleshood he told a parisioner was "a harmless lie," the young man comments, "I didn't know there was such a thing."

An exasperating young man, certainly. But his nagging questions cause Father Farley to examine his own values, including his concept of the Sunday collection as the "Nielsen rating" of reception to the sermon.

"Mass Appeal" is based on the Bill C. Davis play which graduated from off-Broadway to Broadway. Davis has done a splendid job of transforming his two-character play to a full-cast movie, and director Glenn Jordan ("Only When I Laugh") has made good use of outdoor locations. And he happily has concentrated on the lively exchange of ideas — a rarity in today's film world.

The role of Father Farley requires an actor with magnetism and fallability, and it's hard to imagine anyone better than Jack Lemmon. Whether cracking jokes in the pulpit or struggling with self-doubt over too many glasses of wine, he remains in total charge of the character. Add another Oscar-worthy performance to his long string.

Zeljko Ivanek, born in Yugoslavia and Broadway-trained, plays the younger churchman with uncanny accuracy, capturing his intellectual curiosity as well as his priggish self-assurance. Monsignor Burke, who was only talked about in the play, is portrayed by the ever-reliable Charles Durning, who may well be the screen's best character actor.

"Mass Appeal" deals with contemporary issues of the Catholic church, but it is not a religious film. Rated PG for occasional swearing.

The USO Still On The Job

By BOB THOMAS
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The USO, which provided entertainment for two generations of Americans in such places as Iwo Jima, Seoul and Saigon, is still on the job.

It's not quite like the years when Bing Crosby, Fred Astaire, Marilyn Monroe, Joe E. Brown and Bob Hope toured the battlefields of the world. But the USO, which will mark its 44th year next February, has adjusted to today's military and today's world.

Over the Thanksgiving holiday, men and women aboard aircraft carriers in the Mediterranean were treated to a show headed by Anson Williams, formerly of TV's "Happy Days." He was joined by two alumni of the series, Marion Ross and Lorrie Mahaffey, plus Jon Walmsley and Lisa Harrison of "The Waltons" and Brian Mitchell of "Trapper John."

For the Christmas holidays, three NFL cheerleader troupes will be dispatched to Alaska, the Pacific and Europe. Marques Haynes, former Harlem Globetrotter and now with the Harlem Magicians, will take a comedy basketball show to the Caribbean.

In January, Mickey Gilley will take his country music to bases in the Pacific. In March, Navy personnel in the Mediterranean will be entertained by a rock group composed of members from Kansas, Cheap Trick, Pablo Cruise and the Doobie Brothers.

President Franklin D. Roosevelt ordered the founding of United Service Organizations on Feb. 4, 1941, while the nation was mobilizing for World War II. A single organization was needed to handle the personal and morale needs of millions of servicemen and women, hence the USO was formed. The components were YMCA, YWCA, Salvation Army, Travelers Aid, National Catholic Community Organization and National Jewish Welfare Board.

Today's USO includes none of those founders and does not receive government support. The $15 million annual budget is derived from "private contributions, direct mail, corporate donations, the United Way, the Combined Federal Campaign, and special events," according to Paul Rogoski, information officer at the Washington headquarters.

"The USO receives no government funds, but the Defense Department does provide in-kind support, such as on-base facilities, travel and lodging for entertainers," he said.

The main function of the USO is providing family services, giving advice and counsel, affording a haven in the 160 centers throughout the United States and the world. As always, the most visible activities are the overseas tours by entertainers.

"We had a very successful trip," said Kevin McCarty, director of USO Celebrity Entertainment, who recently returned from the Mediterranean with the troupe of young TV performers.

"The best time was Thanksgiving Day aboard the aircraft carrier Eisenhower off Athens," he said. "We did shows before audiences of 2,500-3,000 at a time, and the response was tremendous.

"Ships at sea are one of our principal targets for entertainment. Even though the Navy personnel get shore leave, they also spend long periods at sea, and they're hungry for familiar entertainment from home."

Evancho Named For 2nd Year To PCC Visiting Artist Program

Singer Philip Evancho has been named for a second year to fill the position of Visiting Artist at Pitt Community College.

PCC officials have praised Evancho for his dedicated approach to the work of a visiting artist — citing his many appearances in schools, churches, clubs and in special projects before audiences of children, young adults, and older persons.

One of his favorite — and most successful projects — has been the formation of the Pitt Community Singers. This chorus meets at 7 p.m. Tuesdays evenings.

A native of Ohio, Evancho, a bass-baritone, was educated at Baldwin-Wallace Conservatory of Music in Berea, Ohio, at the University of Akron and the Boston Conservatory of Music. He taught vocal and choral music in Ohio for five years.

He has performed with the Boston Concert Opera, the Boston Lyric Opera, and the Opera Company of Boston. His selection as a finalist in the New England Regional Metropolitan Opera Auditions led to his appointment with the National Opera Company in Raleigh in 1981. He sang major roles in over 200 performances thoughout the U.S. during his two years with the National Opera Company before coming to Greenville in 1983 as PCC's Visiting Artist.

Clubs, schools, churches and other groups can schedule a program by Evancho by contacting the Office of Continuing Education at PCC, 756-3130, extension 266.

Several Rock Groups Recorded Benefit Record

Jeff Harris, program director at WOOW Radio, Greenville, has announced that the station is now in receipt of a special record by several well known rock singers and rock groups with proceeds from the sale of the record going to famine relief.

The record is also now available at Apple Records and at Record Bars, both at Carolina East Mall and at the Plaza, according to spokesmen at these two outlets.

"The record, with the overall title 'Band Aid,' Harris explained, "is centered on the theme 'Do They Know It's Christmas'" Proceeds from sale of the record will go the the African Relief Fund, which includes aid to the famine-stricken in Ethiopia.

"The record is coordinated by Bob Geldof, who is also one of the performers," Harris said. "Among groups and individuals performing are Shalamar, Phil Collins, Duran-Duran, the Culture Club, Spandau Ballet, and U-2."

Radio station WOOW will be playing the record periodically for listeners. The station, at 1340 on the radio dial, operates daily from 6 a.m. until midnight.

J. Geils Band Doing All Right Without Lead Singer Peter Wolf

By MARY CAMPBELL
AP Newsfeatures Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — When lead singer Peter Wolf departed the J. Geils Band, the remaining five members didn't exactly line up and audition for each other.

"We already had a pretty good idea who could sing and who couldn't," smiles guitarist Geils.

Before the split last year, the J. Geils Band had been together without a personnel change since they first formed in Boston in the late 1960s.

On the first album without Wolf, "You're Gettin' Even While I'm Gettin' Odd," keyboard player Seth Justman and drummer Stephen Jo Bladd sing most of the leads. On next year's tour, harmonica player Magic Dick also will do a few. Bassist Danny Klein rounds out the group.

"We're very pleased with the album," said Justman, long-time composer and arranger for the band, in an interview with fellow band members at the office of EMI America Records. "It turned out exactly the way we wanted it to. We wanted to make a strong musical statement. It seems to be striking a chord with everybody."

When Wolf, an energetic front man, first left, things weren't quite so cheery. The last LP, "Freeze Frame," in 1982, was the band's biggest seller. "It became very clear when the reality of the dust settling hit us, the thing to do is to make this record," Geils said. "We started Oct. 21, 1983, and worked virtually nonstop. We finished in September 1984."

When Wolf left, word went around that the J. Geils Band had fired him. The band denies it and presents a chronology.

After "Freeze Frame," the band toured for 15 months. Then Wolf left.

"We got him to come back. He said he would sing on the next album," Justman said. "He didn't want to participate much in anything else — song writing, business, rehearsals. He had been having a block in terms of song writing for about three albums.

"In July 1983, we went in the studio and got seven instrumental tracks down. After that session, I got together with Peter. He said he had things he wanted me to hear. He played me a tape that had six songs on it, with synthesizer, background singers, bass, drums, pretty extensive harmonies.

"I suggested we play it for the whole band which we did a few days later. It was troubling to everybody that he hadn't told anybody in the band he was writing and working with musicians we didn't know."

Said Geils: "We had been so close and self-contained for so long it was like out of the blue. We're friends and real tight. If Dick or I would get a call to come play on somebody's album ... we wouldn't think of doing that without asking if the guys thought we should."

Justman said Wolf wanted the Geils band to play five or six of the songs on the album. "They'd be on or he was going to leave. A lot of them have ended up on his solo album ('Lights Out')," he said.

"We felt we needed assurance Peter wasn't going to say on some other issue, 'I want this or I'm going to leave.' It became apparent it was going to be impossible to continue together. It was agreed at a meeting of the six of us in September 1983 to part ways," Justman said.

The band agreed not to talk to the press and to issue a press release on which they all agreed. "The five of us said nothing in terms of us kicking Peter out, which is the story that circulated," he said.

"It made us feel lousy, the perception of us as the bad guys. Logically, we thought it would be very foolish for five guys to kick out their lead singer just when success was ours. Businesswise, we were left without a focal point."

It was "scary" after the break, Justman said. "We didn't know where things would lead. As the album developed, comradeship stablized us. It became clear a real positive thing was going on."

Magic Dick, given that name by Klein, is working with the Huang Company in Taiwan, maker of harmonicas. He has thousands of harmonicas and has devised retuning harmonicas to get new sounds. Justman also tries to create new keyboards sounds.

"We're delving into synthesizing the harmonica itself," Justman said. "On the album, 'Concealed Weapons' and 'Wasted Youth' have synthesized harmonica. You interface the harp with the synthesizer. It can be done on stage."

Bach Music To Air

CHAPEL HILL — The pageantry and color of the nativity will come to life in Johann Sebastian Bach's "Christmas Oratorio," airing in two parts Friday, Dec. 22, and Friday, Dec. 29 from 9-10:30 p.m., over the nine channels of The UNC Center for Public Television.

The "Great Performances" special not only celebrates the holiday season, but also launches the worldwide tricentennial of the birth of Johann Sebastian Bach (1685-1750). "Bach's Christmas Oratorio, Part I: The Nativity," featuring the first three of the six cantatas that comprise the oratorio, airs Dec. 22. "Bach's Christmas Oratorio, Part II: The Epiphany," featuring Cantatas Four, Five and Six," airs Dec. 29. The work is sung in the original German and supplemented by English subtitles.

The two-part telecast features the Concentus Musicus of Vienna under the direction of its conductor, Nikolaus Harnoncourt. The Concentus Musicus performs on antique Baroque instruments to closely recreate the sounds as Bach would have heard them. Soloists are tenor Peter Schreier and bass Robert Holl. Also featured is the Tolzer Boys Choir of Munich.

An added highlight of the program will be the retelling of the nativity story with the hard-carved figures of Josef Thaddaus Stammel and Johann Giner the Elder. The two were master wood-carvers of the Baroque period from upper Austria, who often used local citizens as their models.

Engineer Charged

LONDON (AP) — A British engineer detained in Libya for six months appeared in a Tripoli court and was charged with carrying letters containing defamatory information about Libya, the BBC reported.

"It's hideous. I haven't done anything. I am completely innocent," Malcolm Anderson said in an interview outside the court with a British Broadcasting Corp. television reporter.

Anderson, employed by the Arabian Gulf Oil Co., was one of four Britons detained in Libya following the 11-day police siege of the Libyan Embassy in London last April.

'The Jewel In The Crown' Was Filmed Mostly In India

By JERRY BUCK
AP Television Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The exterior scenes of the miniseries "The Jewel in the Crown" all were filmed in India, except for one crucial sequence they dared not stage in that volatile atmosphere.

The 15-hour series, taken from the "Raj Quartet" of novels by Paul Scott, tells the story of India's birth as a nation through the eyes of several Englishmen and Indians who lived through that tumultuous period from 1942-47. India is the "jewel" in Britain's "crown."

"We worked in India for four weeks, but the train riot and massacre were filmed on sets built in England in Manchester and Buckinghamshire," said Tim Pigott-Smith, who stars in the "Masterpiece Theatre" presentation. The British-made series opens with a two-hour episode on public television Dec. 16 and will continue in one-hour episodes after that.

"It was felt the religious temperature in India was currently too inflammatory to film there," Pigott-Smith said. "In view of the current state of affairs, I think it was a wise move."

Novelist Scott grew to love India when he served there in World War II as a British officer. His duties took him all over India and in and out of all levels of Anglo-Indian society. He was a colonel by 1945, in the last days of "The Raj" — British rule. His final assignment was to turn over the Royal Military College to the Indian government. He returned to India three times from 1964 to 1972 while writing the four novels.

Pigott-Smith stars as Capt. Ronald Merrick, the sadistic police superintendent who directs his fury against Hari Kumar (Art Malik). Hari not only has attended the best English schools, a privilege denied the lower-class Merrick, but he is also preferred by the woman Merrick loves (Daphne, played by Susan Wooldridge).

"If you have to find a villain in the piece, Merrick is the man," said Pigott-Smith. "But he's more than that. He's not just a baddie in a melodrama. He is a tragic figure. He is a victim caught in a web. Daphne, Hari, Merrick, they're all caught in a web. It's that historic perspective that catches them and crushes them and makes them tragic figures."

Pigott-Smith describes Merrick as a man who deeply wanted to be in the army. "But he was just a grammar school boy," he said. "He was middle class so he couldn't get a commission. So he became a policeman.

"Once in India he is the victim of snobbery. His dream is to be accepted by the class that despises him. And, as a policeman, he deals with the worst class of Indians. He despises them as the upper class despises him. When he meets Hari, here is a black who is in many ways his superior. He went to the best public school."

Actors often rationalize the behavior of their characters, searching for motivations for their actions. Pigott-Smith spent time thinking as Merrick would think. "I used to fantasize in character that Daphne had accepted him," he said, "It would have changed his whole life.

"By the end of the story he has become a respected member of the community, but by then we know that he's corrupted and twisted and perverted. It upset me a little in England that he was always written off as a villain. That's just one way of looking at him. He's a man who makes you uncomfortable. He often does the right thing, but for the wrong reason."

Pigott-Smith recalls that the first time someone mentioned "The Raj Quartet" to him he quipped, "What kind of music do they play?"

But over the next few years as it was being readied for production he read the four books and knew that he wanted to play the role of the policeman. The series was an enormous hit in England.

Pigott-Smith lives in London with his actress-wife, Pamela Miles, who is currently doing "Animal Farm" for the National Theatre, and their 8-year-old son. He said he met his wife in a play.

"We were one of the few good things to come out of a lousy production of 'Much Ado About Nothing,'" said Pigott-Smith.

Actress Leaving Hollywood

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Phyllis Kirk, who is best remembered as television's Nora Charles on "The Thin Man" in the 1950s, is leaving Hollywood and her role as spokeswoman for CBS News to join her husband, producer Warren Bush, in Florida.

Miss Kirk was forced to give up acting about 10 years ago when a viral infection weakened muscles previously affected by a childhood bout of polio and meningitis.

"I think the last acting I did was on 'The Name of The Game' and I was having difficulty walking then," she said. "It's really more of a nuisance because my head is 90 miles ahead of my crumbling bones."

For the past six years Miss Kirk has been a public relations representative for CBS, first with the network's Los Angeles station (KCBS) and later with CBS News.

Bush, a former CBS news producer and writer who originated "The National Driver's Test" with Walter Cronkite, is moving a major portion of his production company to Boca Raton, Fla.

Miss Kirk starred as Nora Charles from 1957-59 on the TV version of "The Thin Man."

Hard Work, Fear Led Ingmar Bergman To Quit Making Films

By LARS FOYEN
Associated Press Writer

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — To Ingmar Bergman, the creative genius that goes into award-winning art films can mean using a vacuum cleaner to create a desert sandstorm or even making a pact with the devil.

It was hard, draining work, made more so by a lingering fear that the next film would't be as good as the last, and that's why Ingmar Bergman quit.

"Fanny and Alexander" was the last cinematic effort for the 66-year-old Swedish filmmaker, though his stage and TV work continues as prodigiously as ever.

"I don't want to go through the physical and mental strain (of movie making) again," he said in an interview. "With advancing age, I find I'm demanding more and more of myself and becoming increasingly fearful that I won't live up to my own high standards."

Bergman, whose "Fanny and Alexander" won the Academy Award as best foreign film of 1983 and three other Oscars — unprecedented for a foreign-language movie — recently screened a documentary at the Swedish Film Institute on the shooting of his $4 million epic, by far the most expensive project of his four decades-long film career.

"Fanny and Alexander," which was produced in three-hour and five-hour versions and as a TV miniseries, is a rich, colorful fresco with motifs from the Swedish upper classes in the years preceding World War I.

Bertil Guve, the boy who starred as 10-year-old Alexander, once said with youthful perceptiveness: "It's a film where a lot of bad things happen. People die — and they get married."

Critics generally considered the film an upbeat crowning of a career comprising mostly introverted and pessimistic works. Two of his films — "The Virgin Spring" and "Through a Glass Darkly" — made Bergman a darling of the intellectual elite and won him best foreign film Oscars in the early '60s.

Dressed in his customary slightly baggy leisure wear, the notoriously shy director seemed relaxed and in a humorous mood as his associate Arne Carlsson's two-hour-plus documentary was screened.

He drew laughs as he ad-libbed about the nuts and bolts problems of filmmaking. They included instructing a black cat to cross a road at precisely the right moment — that didn't work; keeping a Christmas smorgasbord photogenic during four days of shooting; and reversing a regular vacuum cleaner to blow whirling sand over desert wanderers in a Hebrew legend included in the long version of the film.

Bergman, a son of a Lutheran priest, said he made a pact with the devil while shooting exterior scenes for "Wild Strawberries" in 1957.

"I had 16 actors waiting for the sky to clear up, so I tapped the ground and offered my soul to the devil if he would give me sun," Bergman said. "Would you believe it, 10 minutes later there was glaring sunshine."

While the seven-month shooting of "Fanny and Alexander" had its share of laughs, he said there were some strong emotional moments, too.

The documentary shows an infinitely patient Bergman directing actor Gunnar Bjornstrand, 75, in a scene he wrote especially for his old friend who starred in such movies as "The Seventh Seal." Bjornstrand had suffered brain damage following an illness some years ago.

"Actors sometimes represent the human race at its greatest," a visibly moved Bergman said about Bjornstrand's courage as he tried to remember his lines during a number of retakes.

Bergman has always had a reputation for being an actor's director, but he reportedly does not practice democracy on the set.

Nevertheless, cinematographer Sven Nykvist, a two-time Oscar winner who worked with Bergman on two dozen films, clearly emerges in the documentary as the second powerhouse of the production — the person who will argue with the master and sometimes win.

"Our relationship is like an excellent old marriage, with arguments and occasional bursts of bad temper," Bergman said.

Many cinema enthusiasts have speculated that "Fanny and Alexander" was the director's final effort to exorcise a traumatic childhood. And in his commentary, Bergman did in fact point to an autobiographical background for several scenes.

In one chilling episode of the documentary, Bergman instructs Guve and Permilla Allwin, the film's Fanny, in a scene where they try to use mental willpower to invoke the death of their stepfather and tormentor.

"I know exactly how you feel," Bergman encouraged his young stars. "At your age, my sister and I used to do that a lot."

"But you were joking, then," Guve said.

"On the contrary," Bergman replied solemnly. "We were dead serious."

The Charm Remains

By MATT WOLF
Associated Press Writer

LONDON (AP) — He might be 74 years old, but Douglas Fairbanks Jr., once one of Hollywood's most prestigious stars, still has that Fairbanks charm.

He's silver-haired and tanned, and recently recalled an era of Hollywood glamor and allure in a lecture at the National Film Theater during a special screening of "The Thief of Baghdad" — the 1924 silent film starring his father, Douglas Fairbanks Sr.

"The likes of 'The Thief of Baghdad' had never been seen before or since," Fairbanks said of the Raoul Walsh film whose locations include the Valley of the Monsters, the Cave of the Enchanted Trees and the Citadel of the Moon.

Fairbanks said the film, made for under $2 million, employed 2,000-3,000 extras a day.

"If it were made in black-and-white today with the same quality of casting and the same number of workers and sets, it would cost $30 million," he said. The film consolidated the romantic appeal of its bare-chested leading man, though Fairbanks said his father's success was never in doubt.

"My father was one of those lucky people who began to be successful the day he was born," said Fairbanks, who grew up surrounded by stardom in "Pickfair" — the Hollywood mansion named in honor of his father and his stepmother, Mary Pickford, the golden-haired silent film star.

Fairbanks married Joan Crawford when he was 19 and appeared a year later opposite Greta Garbo in "A Woman of Affairs."

Of Miss Crawford, whose dubious child-rearing tactics turned her daughter Christina's book, "Mommie Dearest," into a best seller, Fairbanks said: "I have the happiest memories of her; it's just that we didn't get on, and the marriage didn't last long." They divorced after three years.

Fairbanks called Miss Garbo, whose notorious elusiveness is the basis for Sidney Lumet's new film "Garbo Talks," "terribly nice, unlike the legend."

"She was shy then as she still is, but the legend has been built out of proportion," Fairbanks said. "She probably enjoys the legend."

In a film career that included "Loose Ankles," "Stella Dallas," "Gunga Din," "The Dawn Patrol" and "The Prisoner of Zenda," Fairbanks worked with many of the top directors of the day — Henry King, Clarence Brown, King Vidor, John Cromwell.

Pointing out that "directors are often dominated by stars," Fairbanks distinguished between people such as his father, who "bent over backwards to take credit for very little," and others who took credit for everything.

Fairbanks remembered Charlie Chaplin, the great comedian, who frequently visited Pickfair, as "a wonderful friend."

"Chaplin was one of my great encouragers and boosters," he said, admitting that the Fairbanks family name was not always a blessing.

"My name was a help insofar as people were polite and I'd be allowed into the office. It was a hindrance in that I wasn't allowed into the office for very long," Fairbanks said.

"I had to work twice as hard and prove myself twice as long," he said.

New Colonial Records Book

RALEIGH — The ongoing program of printing North Carolina's colonial records has resulted in the addition of a new volume, "Records of the Executive Council, 1664-1734," recently published by the Historical Publications Section of the Department of Cultural Resources. It is the seventh volume of "The Colonial Records of North Carolina (Second Series)."

Edited by Robert J. Cain, the 763-page volume contains minutes and other miscellaneous papers, such as petitions, correspondence and depositions, of the colony's executive council during the proprietary and early royal eras.

A substantial introduction by the edcitor describes the documents, discusses the historical background of the proprietary and royal councils, and describes the editorial method used in preparing the volume.

A chronological listing of all the minutes and papers and an index to cases, proper names and subjects make these documents even more useful.

Volume VII is the first in the series to contain executive council records; previously published volumes printed charters, constitutions and higher court records of the period 1578-1730. It is projected that there will be two additional volumes of council records.

The N. C. Colonial Records Project was established in 1961 by the Carolina Charter Tercentenary Commission as an ongoing commemoration of the state's colonial heritage. Now an agency of the Division of Archives and History, the Colonial Records Project has had a constant goal of making available the documents of that heritage to a wide audience — college and high school students, amateur historians and other interested citizens.

This goal has been pursued in two ways — (1) through publishing the documents in this continuing series; and (2) through the search for documents in archives and librariers throughout the United States and the British Isles.

In both these programs the project has been actively assisted by a private support group, the Carolina Charter Corporation, currently headed by George E. London of Raleigh.

The N. C. Colonial Records Project has received national recognition. In 1975 it received from the American Association for State and Local History that organization's highest honor, the "Award of Merit." In 1976 and 1979 the project received grants from the National Endowment for the Humanities.

Dr. Cain, editor of Volume VII of the "Colonial Records of North Carolina," received his undergraduate degree at Wake Forest University and his doctorate from Duke University. After teaching at Wake Forst and at Acadia University, he becme resident researcher in London for the British Records Program of the Colonial Records Project. Since 1975 he has edited the volumes of the second series.

Volume VII of "The Colonial Records of North Carolina" is available at the N. C. Museum of History Gift Shop in Raleigh, at some state historic sites, and at selected commercial bookstores.

The book may also be ordered at $25 per copy plus $1.50 or postage and handling from: Historical Publications Section, Division of Archives and History, 109 East Jones Street, Raleigh, N. C., 27611. Make checks payable to: Department of Cultural Resources.

Book News

FROM SHEPPARD MEMORIAL LIBRARY

By WILLIE NELMS

During recent years, various biographies and autobiographies of rock and roll stars have appeared. These books have provided much-needed perspective on the lives of popular figures who often seem larger than life to their fans.

A new book, "The Life and Times of Little Richard: The Quasar of Rock," by Charles White, joins this growing body of writing. For anyone who remembers the early days of rock and roll, the name Little Richard is synonymous with energy and excitement.

Anyone who ever ssaw Richard perform or heard his music will be well aware of the driving intensity of each song he performed. Born Richard Penniman in Macon, Ga., Little Richard experienced a meteoric rise to popularity in the 1950s. His style included a hard-driving back-beating sound which appealed to youngsters across the United States.

This book describes a rock career which spanned 25 years. Unlike other early rock performers such as Elvis Presley, Richard's style never mellowed. Instead, he held to the frantic piano-pounding which first brought him prominence. The result of this failure to change was an act which seemed increasingly out of step with the times.

"The Life and Times..." shows that this hard-driving style was also reflected in the way of life Richard lived off the stage. His bi-sexuality is described, along with various scenes from parties in which he participated. That he was able to survive the style of life described in this book for so long is amazing.

Finally, in the 1980s, Richard became a born-again Christian evangelist, telling his story to audiences around the country. Author White has conducted extensive research in preparing this volume. His book is a mosaic of interview fragments which chronologically tell the life story of Little Richard.

Emerging from this effort is a rich tapestry of impressions and recollections describing one of the most spectacular stars in the rock firmament. Readers interested in popular culture will enjoy this book; aficinadoes of early rock and roll will love it.

Electronic Sculpture

An electronic sound sculpture created by Dr. Wayne Kirby of UNC-Asheville has been installed in the Nancy Susan Reynolds Education Wing of the North Carolina Museum of Art, where it will remain on exhibition for about 10 months.

Titled "Ground Round Sound," the work comprises a 5-foot tall column which contains two speakers, surrounded by a 15-foot wide octagonal carpet which covers eight "touchplates." When a visitor walks across the carpet, the hidden plates activate a series of eight sounds that rotate around the column at 20-second intervals.

Kirby is director of the Center for New Music at UNC-Asheville, where he is developing one of the nation's few academic programs based on digital signal processing. A graduate of the Juilliard School in New York City, Kirby studied electronic music composition at Yale University and received a doctoral degree in environmental sound from New York University.

For more information on the show, call the museum at (919) 833-1935.

Religious Jews Study To Prepare For The Messiah's Coming

IN PREPARATION . . . Students at the Ateret Kohanim religious seminary study ancient priestly rites to prepare for the day when the Messiah comes to rebuild the Jewish Temple. (AP Laserphoto by Heidi Levin)

By ALLYN FISHER
Associated Press Writer

JERUSALEM (AP) — In Jerusalem's Old City, religious Jews study ancient priestly rites to prepare for the day when the Messiah comes to rebuild King Solomon's Temple.

Near the site of the temple, the seminary of Ateret Kohanim (Glory of the Priests) seeks to revive an extinct class of Jewish priests and their servants, the Levites, so they will be ready when the ancient prophesies come true of the reconstruction of the temple, twice destroyed in biblical times.

Jewish tradition says the temple must be rebuilt on the site of the ruined temples. But the Temple Mount, the original site, is now occupied by two of Islam's holiest shrines, the Dome of the Rock and the Al Aqsa Mosque.

Ateret Kohanim's director, Rabbi Shlomo Aviner, is convinced that one day the third temple will rise but says he has no solution for the mosques.

"That is a problem we leave for God to handle," he said.

Ateret Kohanim also operates a small real estate office that has moved more than 100 Jews into former Palestinian homes with donations from U.S. and British Jews and Christians, according to seminary spokesman Menachem Bar-Shalom.

Fundamentalist Christians in the United States contribute in the belief that rebuilding the temple will herald the Second Coming of Christ.

"What we are doing is related to their beliefs, but we don't seek out their business," said Bar-Shalom. He added that the seminary had recently received an $1,800 check from the Jerusalem Temple Foundation, a predominantly Jewish organization with offices in Denver and Los Angeles as well as Jerusalem.

Ateret Kohanim is a mystic offshoot of the Gush Emunim (Bloc of the Faithful), a grass-roots movement that seeks to reclaim biblical title deeds for Jews in the "land of Israel." It has spearheaded Jewish settlement building in the West Bank and Gaza Strip that Israel occupied in 1967.

Twenty-five men, mostly Gush Emunim activists, are standing trial in connection with a series of attacks and attempted assaults on Palestinians. The alleged Jewish underground group is also accused of a plot to blow up the Moslem shrines to make way for Jewish redemption by forcibly retaking the Temple Mount.

But Aviner condemns such violence as a breach of faith.

The plot against the shrines "was a mistake that was harmful to the Temple Mount and to our people," he said in an interview. "It is bothersome that the Arabs are defiling the Temple Mount, but we must sit and wait.

"Messianism is a belief in a better

'Crucible' Competition Rules For 1985 Listed

WILSON — Details on the annual Crucible Writer's Competition of Atlantic Christian College have been announced for 1985.

Permission to publish material is implied by submission. Entries without the above information will not be considered.

Manuscripts will be accepted only through Jan. 18, 1985. Late arrivals will be rejected. "Crucible" receives first rights, after which rights will revert to the author. Winning entries will be published in the spring issue of "Crucible," the arts and literary publication of Atlantic Christian College.

Categories, limitations, and prizes are:

- Poetry — limitation of five poems per poet — $150 first prize, $100 second prize.
- Fiction — must be limited to 8,000 words or less — $150 first prize, $100 second prize.

No prizes to be given in other categories. Persons wanting manuscripts returned must send a stamped, self-addressed envelope with sufficient return postage.

Send all entries to: Agnes McDonald, Editor, Crucible, Atlantic Christian College, Wilson, N.C. 27893.

Crafts Exhibition Details

RALEIGH — The second Juried Exhibition of North Carolina Crafts will open at the State Museum of History in Raleigh on April 3, 1986, and remain on display through June 30, 1986. The competition, which is open to North Carolina natives and current or former residents, will offer five best-in-show awards of $1,000 each. Major funding for the exhibition will come from the Museum Associates.

According to Museum Director John Ellington, the Museum is seeking the best contemporary products — clay, leather, fiber, metal, wood, glass, mixed media — in order to reflect the creative abilities of North Carolinians. The museum's first Juried Craft Exhibition was held in the spring of 1983.

Entry forms will be mailed to craftsmen in the Spring of 1985. For intersted persons who do not receive entry forms, they can be obtained by writing to: The North Carolina Museum of History Associates, 109 East Jones Street, Raleigh, N.C., 27611, telephone 733-3894.

COMPUTER CALLS ABSENT STUDENTS

WASHINGTON (AP) — Suburban high schools in Arlington County, Va., are using computers to record and try to remedy the problem of truancy.

NCMA Reaccredited

RALEIGH — The North Carolina Museum of Art has been reaccredited by the American Association of Museums following a study of the museum's operations by the AAM Accreditation Commission.

First accredited in 1971, the museum is one of 595 institutions to receive this recognition out of nearly 7,000 museums nationwide.

In his report on the North Carolina Museum of Art, Townsend Wolfe, AAM senior examiner, observed that the museum "is fulfilling a statewide function through setting a standard in exhibitions, education activities and conservation which would benefit and be reflected in the growth of quality throughout the state of North Carolina."

Wolfe commented that the new museum building "is impressive, not only in aesthetics, but in function. The exhibitions are extremely well-hung and arranged in a logical, rational sequence ... The collections are outstanding and well-displayed, both aesthetically and educationally."

In his review of museum educational activities, Wolfe concluded, "It is my feeling that the educational effort has just begun to touch the surface of its potential ... (It) is already meeting its obligation as a statewide museum and will become one of the primary educational museums in the country."

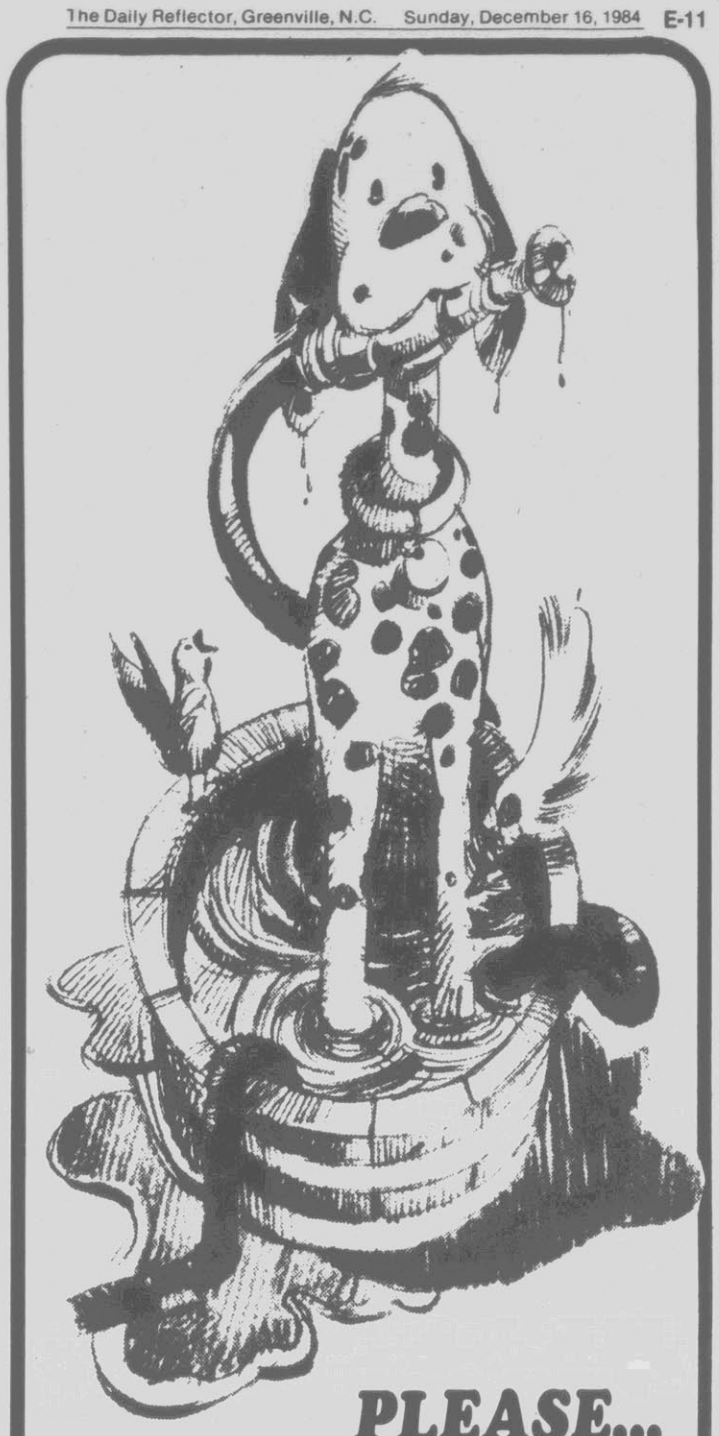

The AAM established its accreditation program in 1970 and periodically reviews institutions for reaccreditation.

Report Denied

PEKING (AP) — China has denied a Vietnamese report that its border forces have reached the levels of early 1979 when the Chinese invaded Vietnam and fought a bloody month-long war.

A Defense Ministry spokesman also dismissed as "a sheer fabrication" a Vietnam News Agency claim that more than 100 Chinese troops were killed and 40 wounded in a battle inside Vietnam on Nov. 28.

Diplomatic sources in Peking estimate Chinese military strength of 100,000 along the Vietnamese border. That compares with about 25 divisions, or 320,000 men, reportedly deployed in the February 1979 invasion.

A Fine Chalet In Florida

By JOHN PLATERO
Associated Press Writer

LAKE WALES, Fla. (AP) — Hugging a picturesque lake off a hyway of this Central Florida rural community is Chalet Suzanne, a unique country inn that seems to transport its guests to a European fantasyland of a half century ago.

Started in 1931 by the late Bertha Hinshaw after her husband died and the family fortune was lost in the 1929 stock market crash, the chalet's attractions were Mrs. Hinshaw's gourmet cooking, antiques she had collected from around the world and, to a degree, her artistic eccentricity.

She died in 1973, but the chalet's tradition has been continued by her son, Carl, and his wife, Vita.

From the red brick driveway and courtyard, visitors encounter what appears to be a small village of tiny pastel-colre alike in shape, nor are their furnishings. Colorful tiles from a number of European countries are found everywhere.

Turrets, balconies, patios, iron work, flower gardens and stained glass windows give the place a storybook effect.

Hinshaw remembers his mother's creative instincts.

"She would get up in the morning and decide to build something. She never put anything down on paper. She simply told the workers what to build. When they finished and if she didn't like it, she would have them tear it down and start again."

When a 1944 fire destroyed the family home where the business had begun, Mrs. Hinshaw used her ingenuity to stay in business.

What had been the family game room on the hill leading down to the lake was converted to a dining room. Other remnants from the 70-acre estate were added on until there were five attached dining rooms.

The restaurant's foyer was once part of the hen house and is connected to what used to be a wing of the stable.

Objets d'art are everywhere, along with family memorabilia. In the dining rooms, no two tables are alike. Each is set with different china and glassware gathered in Europe. Soup bowls are replicas of a large ashtray Mrs. Hinshaw admired during a visit to Oslo, Norway.

Four honeymoon suites are available, including one that has an inside balcony overlooking one of the dining rooms. Meals are delivered via a glass dumb-waiter.

A 2,450-foot grass airstrip is located behind the lodge for visitors who come by private aircraft.

Vita Hinshaw, a former airline stewardess, is the chalet's hostess and oversees the restaurant, wine cellar, gift shops and office.

"Food is the thing," she says to explain the chalet's success, "and the place has personality."

The kitchen is Hinshaw's responsibility. He learned to cook as a teen-ager, helping his mother provide for him and his sister, Suzanne, for whom the place and an adjoining lake are named.

Following his discharge from the Air Force after World War II, Hinshaw returned here to help his mother. His wife ran the dining room.

Hinshaw says he's no chef. "A chef means you've been through cooking school. If you have a talent and originality, you can be a good cook."

Helps Hmong Refugees

By THERESA MONSOUR
St. Paul Pioneer Press

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) — When a fellow priest learned the Rev. Daniel Taillez was headed for Laos in 1964 to do missionary work during the Vietnam War, he asked Taillez, "Hey, Daniel, do you plan to be a martyr?"

"I told him, 'No, don't worry. I can take care of myself,' " Taillez recalled during a recent interview in his small office at St. Mary's Church in St. Paul. "Nothing bad will happen over there."

Taillez was right. For 11 years, without incident, Taillez taught Hmong about Christianity at the Catechist Center in Vientiane. But the French priest was ordered home by his bishop after the Pathet Lao tried to blackmail him.

Nearly 10 years later, Taillez, 48, finds himself again working with the Hmong people he grew to love and admire in Southeast Asia.

As one of three priests in the United States who can speak Hmong, Taillez works with the 800 Hmong parishioners at St. Mary's. He teaches catechism classes, baptizes Hmong adults and children, and has made 30 religious instruction tapes in Hmong. He has visited Hmong communities across the country, helping them establish catechism classes with Hmong instructors.

"It's a ministry we could have never covered had he not come to the United States," said the Rev. David Kalert, vicar provincial in the central U.S. province of Taillez's order, the Missionary Oblates of Mary Immaculate. "His knowledge of the Hmong culture and language is very important. And he has a real warmth for the Hmong people."

Taillez came to Minnesota in 1981 after a Hmong man he had worked with in Laos moved to Minneapolis and recommended Taillez to Twin Cities church officials.

"When he got to know the language, he liked Hmong people and liked to help the Hmong everywhere," said Vang Thait Lo, 39, who in September became the second Hmong ordained a deacon in the United States. "Sometimes he visited Hmong villages far from the city. Sometimes he helped them go to the hospital if they were sick. He did everything he could to help the Hmong people."

When Taillez talked about the Hmong people and his work with them in St. Paul and in Southeast Asia, his eyes sparkled with enthusiasm and excitement. Sometimes the English words couldn't come fast enough and with his blue shirtsleeves rolled up, he quickly flipped through a thick French-English, English-French dictionary to find the right phrase.

While Taillez' words are filled with optimism, he is a realist who sees the poverty and hardship the Hmong face in their new country.

"Their faith may help them not to get rid of their current poverty, but to bear that peacefully," he said.

He also acknowledges that many Hmong, especially older ones, still cling to their shamanistic religion.

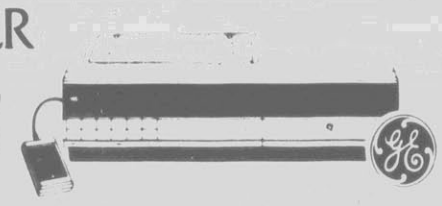

One Hmong widow about to be baptized, for example, feared when she met her husband in the afterlife he would be angry at her for converting to Catholicism.

Multimedia Show Of Rauschenberg Work On View At NCMA

RALEIGH — A multi-media exhibition opening Tuesday at the North Carolina Museum of Art will illustrate the involvement of Robert Rauschenberg, one of the most influential visual artists working today in the world of the performing arts. Known primarly for his paintings, prints and collages, Rauschenberg has also been prolific over the past 30 years as a costume and set designer, choreographer and performer.

Organized by Nina Sundell of New York City, a longtime friend of the artist, "Rauschenberg/Performance" draws from Rauschenberg's personal collection of photographs and objects that relate to his work in the performing arts, especially dance. It will remain on view through Feb. 17.

The exhibition incorporates photographs and videotapes of the performances in which the artist has been involved, with sound provided by audiotapes and headphones to give the viewer a sense of participation in these events. Sets and props from a number of performances are included and some objects in the exhibition can be handled by visitors.

Rauschenberg, whose works are in the collections of major musuems throughout the world, first became involved in performance in 1952, during a summer at Black Mountain College near Asheville. There he worked with experimental composer John Cage on a piece in which one of the performers was Merce Cunningham, a premier figure in modern dance. From 1954 to 1964, Rauschenberg and Cunningham collaborated on 20 dances, many of them with music by Cage. Rauschenberg also worked with choreographer Paul Taylor on some of his most radical pieces.

Rauschenberg's contributions have ranged from relatively traditional work, such as the spotted leotards for "Summerspace" (1958), to the extremely unconventional rolling chicken coop for "Linoleum" (1966), in which dancer Steve Paxton propelled himself across the stage in the company of live chickens. In 1963, Rauschenberg choreographed and performed in the legendary "Pelican," appearing on roller skates with a parachute on his back.

The most recent works documented in the exhibition are the costumes and set designs for Trisha Brown's "Set and Reset" (1983).

As with Rauschberg's painting and collages, his work with the performing arts reflects his belief that beauty and meaning can be found in commonplace objects that most people ignore. This approach is seen in a work by Rauschenberg in the museum's collection, "Credit Blossom" (1978), an assemblage that combines fabric, a handmade quilt and photographs from newspapers and magazines.

In conjunction with the exhibition, Nina Sundell will present a free lecture in the museum auditorium Sunday, Jan. 27 at 3 p.m. A 38-page catalogue of the exhibition, written by Sundell and published by the Cleveland Center for Contemporary Art, where the show has also been seen, will be available in the Museum Shop.

"Rauschenberg/Performance" is supported by a grant from the National Endowment for the Arts, a federal agency.

Museum hours are 10 a.m.-5 p.m. Tuesday through Saturday, 1-5 p.m. Sundays. There is no admission charge. For information, call (919) 833-1935.

WINSTON-SALEM — The world of photography will find its focal point in Winston-Salem, when the city hosts National Aperture 85, The Jurored Exhibition of the Photographic Arts. This will be the first time that a broad spectrum of photographic art will be jurored with cumulative cash awards and purchase prized exceeding $10,000.

National Aperture 85 is under the co-sponsorship of Associated Artists, Inc. with the support of the Arts Council, Inc. This effort by Associated Artists is also co-sponsored by Gallimore Computer Consultants, the Journal/Sentinel newspapers, Hunter Publishing Company and Piedmont Airlines. Ten other firms in the region are participating with additional awards and purchases.

Jack M. Gallimore, president of Gallimore Computer Consultants, explained that "we are addressing the need to attract, identify and reward photographic artists who have demonstrated both a high degree of creativity and technical skills in the photographic medium. National Aperture 85 is designed to reward those photographers regardless of the direction they have elected to express themselves artistically." The exhibition was spearheaded by Gallimore with his company's co-sponsorship of $2,000 in awards.

Vonda Blackburn, executive director of Associated Artists, added that seeking sponsors had a snowball effect. "We sought sponsor firms with interest in photography and photographic themes. Piedmont Publishing Company's interest is photojournalism. Piedmont Airlines is directly concerned with travel photography. Hunter Publishing sought to reward technical excellence. Associated Artists will reward creative excellence. Other sponsors have interest in sports, studio and other creative forms of photography. All sponsoring companies visualize the benefits of the exhibition to the artists, the community and to their business.

world. It won't happen in one day. First we have to build the land of Israel, reach a higher level of morality and justice."

Many Jews viewed Israel's conquest of Jerusalem's holy sites 17 years ago as the first step toward reconstruction of the temple.

Ateret Kohanim is one of three controversial seminaries in the old walled city's Moslem quarter, established there because of its proximity to the Temple Mount and the Wailing Wall, last remnant of the temple.

"Historically, Jews always lived first and foremost near the Temple Mount," explained Bar-Shalom. He said Palestinians were offered as much as twice the value of their homes to reclaim houses where 30,000 Jews lived before being expelled by Arab riots in 1936.

"Building the land of Israel is a crucial stage toward redemption," said Aviner. "Once we finish building the state of Israel, and we turn it into an ideal society, then we can continue onwards. It could take another several hundred years."

From religious conviction, Aviner believes Jerusalem ultimately will have no room for the Arabs.

When the Messiah comes, he said, "the Arabs will learn that they have a role to play, a special place in history, and a place to live, but not in Israel. They will realize that Israel belongs to the Jewish people."

Ateret Kohanim's 60 students are mostly Israelis who have recently completed compulsory military service. Several students are Americans.

During a reporter's recent visit, Rabbi Yosef Soleveitchik, an immigrant from Chicago, huddled with three students in a corner, teaching priestly rituals. The lesson included texts on sacrificing animals on the altar, a practice that disappeared from Judaism after the Romans razed the second temple in 70 A.D.

On a shelf near their table was a polished wooden model of an ancient altar. Priestly robes were also being woven for the students.

"The Jewish people has always yearned to rebuild the holy temple. By studying it we are helping to make it reality," the rabbi said.

Papal Trip

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Pope John Paul II told a Peruvian envoy his forthcoming visit to the Latin American country can contribute to "greater justice, peace and fraternity among all the Peruvians."

Receiving credentials from Peru's new ambassador to the Holy See, Hugo de Zela Hurtado, the pontiff said he hoped Peru will continue to develop "social love and respect for the rights of neighbors."

Speaking in Spanish, John Paul said Peruvians should reject "temptations to resort to violence" and pursue "more peaceful coexistence, based on justice and through dialogue."

The pope is scheduled to visit Peru, Venezuela, Ecuador and Trinidad and Tobago from Jan. 26 to Feb. 6, 1985.

Would Breed Better Race Of People

By BRYNA BRENNAN
Associated Press Writer

GOIANIA, Brazil (AP) — The idea that Brazilians should procreate to populate the nation's vast interior has been set aside by the military-backed government in favor of family-planning programs aimed at producing people of quality.

"Physical and mental quality are an important factor for national security," Gen. Danilo Venturini, a special Cabinet minister, recently told the Senate in Brasilia. The armed forces have reported that 47 percent of their male applicants were rejected for reason of poor health.

"The Brazilian male is degenerating," said the head of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, Gen. Waldir de Vasconcelos, adding that the military rejected 360,000 18-year-old men last year "because of problems such as undernourishment, underweight."

The Roman Catholic Church is outspokenly against the family-planning programs, one of which is under way here in the interior state of Goias.

"We need more bread on the table instead of cutting the number that plan to eat," said Bishop Ivo Lorscheiter, president of the National Council of Brazilian Bishops.

Abortions are illegal in Brazil but officials and medical doctors estimate that 5 million of them are performed annually, with an unknown number of women dying from them.

During the early 1970s, the military government of then-President Emilio Medici, urged Brazilians to have children to help develop the country's sparsely populated interior. But now the population, which is growing annually at a rate of almost 3 percent, is 134 million, up from about 92 million in 1970. At the same time, the country is enmeshed in economic problems, which in turn breed crime, unemployment and misery.

The state of Goias, with federal government backing, started earlier this year a family-planning program "aimed at orienting people to their rights," Secretary of Health Ronei Edmar Ribeiro said in an interview at his office in Goiania, the state capital.

"I think it is a crime not to let the poor have the same rights as the rich, who do seek family planning," he said. "A couple has the right to decide if they do not want children."

Dr. Ana Maria Costa, the program's director, said doctors and nurses at the state's 400 health care centers are attempting to educate women about planning methods that are available and to spread the word.

Movies and comic books outlining everything from basic health care to all manner of birth control measures are available.

"In general, most women do not know and are surprised at what methods are available," Dr. Costa said.

All conventional birth control methods are legal and readily available in Brazil, usually without a medical prescription. Sterilization and tubal ligation — described in the comic books as anti-conception procedures — are illegal, along with abortion.

The church, condemning family planning as an imposition on the freedom of couples to decide how many children they want, has said that "sterilization and abortion constitute preventive genocide, which Brazil is committing against the poor, who make up a majority of the population."

Memelia Moreira, a 36-year-old journalist and mother of two, said she has undergone five abortions "because I didn't want any more children."

"I am a Catholic, but it doesn't enter my mind that this is something immoral," she added.

Ms. Moreira said she had her abortions at a clinic in a classy section of Rio de Janeiro, where she was asked only her first name and charged the equivalent of about $100, which would be a sizable sum for Brazil's poor.

"I know it's not fair that the poor can't do this. They will die from illegal abortions, I won't," she said.

Dr. Rosaly Ferreira Ruilly Costa, who works in Brasilia, said hundreds of abortion clinics operate in each of the large cities.

"The poor die because of inadequate abortions, infections and hemorrhages, sometimes because they would rather die than go to a hospital and admit (they had) an illegal abortion."

Ms. Ferreira, who endorses legalized abortions as "a woman's right," said she is skeptical, however, about government-run family planning programs.

"They are not going to reach the women in the poor areas, where it is common to have 11 children," she said. "That woman is going to think about a child to carry water; not malnutrition, not education, but survival."

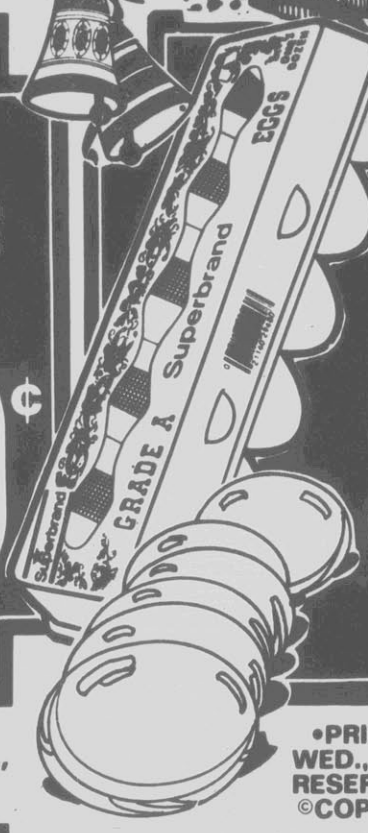

Be aware of what's going on in your City's government! Attend the City Council meeting! Regular Council meetings are held on the second Thursday of each month, at 7:30 p.m., in the City Council Chamber.

Chinese News Service Seeks Serious Image

By RON REDMOND

PEKING (UPI) — Back in the bad old days, when America was still a "paper tiger" and its allies "running dogs," China's Xinhua News Agency was often heavy on hyperbole but short on substance.

It was Xinhua, for example, that in 1966 first told the world of 72-year-old Mao Tse-tung's famous 9-mile swim in the Yangtze River.

"People made pledges to raise the great red banner of Mao Tse-tung's thought still higher and not only swim in the rivers and seas to temper themselves but follow Chairman Mao and forge ahead amid the storm of class struggle and carry on the Great Proletarian Cultural Revolution to completion," gushed Xinhua at the time. "Long live Chairman Mao."

The Great Helmsman is long gone and with him went the old Xinhua.

"Before, we were following the leftist line, presenting all these things as true," acknowledged Ding Yangyan, Xinhua's director of foreign affairs.

"But now we stick to the facts. So far as the news is concerned, we're more factual, we're more objective and sometimes we're more balanced."

In place of the bombast and Maoist rhetoric, the state news agency now churns out 150,000 words daily on topics ranging from the latest foreign exchange quotations to pig farming to commentaries on space law.

There's still a smattering of leftist jargon, but nothing like the old days.

"We want to be a world news agency," Ding said during an interview in Xinhua's sprawling Peking headquarters. "We want to give more coverage to the affairs of Third World countries. Most of our 91 foreign bureaus are in Third World nations.

"Whether we can fill the gap remains to be seen."

Xinhua was founded in 1931, when it was known as the "Red China News Agency" and reported progress of the communist revolution on a captured Nationalist radio transmitter.

The agency sent its first story overseas in 1948, one year before the communist takeover, and set up its first foreign bureau, in Prague, in the early 1950s.

"Now we have about 1,000 corresondents and editors in the home news area and about 300 staff members abroad," said Ding.

"Altogether, we have more than 5,000 employees. We are not only running a news agency, but a small city. We have our own clinic, our own kindergarten and our own construction company. That's why we need a large staff."

Ding said Xinhua's foreign operations grew rapidly in the late 1950s and early '60s, but development came to a standstill during the 1966-76 Cultural Revolution.

"Not everyone, but most of our correspondents abroad were called back to participate in the Cultural Revolution," he said.

Xinhua resumed staffing its foreign bureaus in 1978.

Xinhua's international desk in Peking transmits news about China in English, French, Spanish, Russian, Arabic and Chinese to a growing number of foreign newspaper and broadcast clients.

"In the past, we had very few direct subscribers," Ding said of Xinhua's efforts to sell its service overseas. "But now we sell directly to newspapers in Asia, Latin America and Africa. Our newspaper clients are increasing every day. Now we have more than 150."

Xinhua also has exchange agreements with more than 70 news agencies around the world, many of them government information services.

Ding said Xinhua, which has an annual budget of "less than" $38.5 million is shopping for a new computerized communications system to be housed in a multi-story headquarters building now under construction.

Domestically, Xinhua has plans to form a separate economics news service next year to provide vital market information for China's newly decentralized industries.

Ding said the service will offer managers information on the latest commodity prices, new government economic policies, crop forecasts, transportation and, perhaps some day, stock market reports.

But despite all its reforms, Xinhua is still very much a government propaganda organ and is expected to consistently reflect party policy.

Mu Qing, the agency's director general, holds ministerial rank with access to the highest circles of government.

Ding, who says there is "no censorship in China," revealed that Mu gives periodic briefings on government policy to Xinhua editors, who are expected to "work in accordance with those principles."

"But sometimes there will still be some conflict, say with the Foreign Ministry or other ministries," Ding said. "You cannot exchange views every day, and we will sometimes write something with which they disagree."

Asked about the recent appearance of humorous stories, more sports news and light feature pieces on Xinhua, Ding said: "If you want to be a world news agency, you have to do that.

"In the past, we were reluctant to do that in order not to make mistakes or to make trouble.

"Some of our correspondents were afraid to raise questions because they were afraid to make mistakes — it was better not to ask.

"Now we're trying to encourage Chinese correspondents to be as competitive as any correspondents from any other country in the world."

British Isles Facing Violent Protests Over Animal Abuse

Animal Rights

By DANIELA IACONO

LONDON (UPI) — Gangs of urban guerrillas wearing ski masks and brandishing sledgehammers recently staged simultaneous raids on two research laboratories in southern England. They smashed doors and windows while a third "cell" attacked one of the laboratory directors at his home with an iron bar.

A shadowy terrorist group? Nationalist fighters?

Hardly.

The guerrillas were from the Animal Liberation Front, a group of "animal rights" supporters who believe "direct action" has become the only way to save hundreds of thousands of animals from abuse.

About 30 ALF members carried out the raids on the research laboratories, which use animals in toxicity tests, and attacked Wickham Laboratories director David Walker at his home.

"This was a highly organized, systematic attack, which was carried out in a military style," said laboratory manager Paddy Edwards.

The raids caused thousands of dollars worth of damage. Walker was shaken but not seriously hurt. Ten people were arrested.

The ALF says it's not out to hurt people, only companies that mistreat animals.

The clandestine "front" recently announced it had spiked Mars candy bars throughout Britain with rat poison to protest the makers' use of monkeys in experiments on tooth decay.

Two days later, after millions of the nation's best-selling candy bars were removed from shelves throughout the country and several people believed they had fallen ill from eating poisoned bars, the ALF announced it was all a hoax designed to tarnish Mars' reputation.

The guerrillas are now threatening to poison Christmas turkeys in protest against turkey farms where the animals are chemically fattened for quick growth and sale.

"We are against the battery system turkey farms, and to start with a demonstration is planned against one big producer of turkeys," an anonymous female front member announced.

"But I wouldn't be surprised if more direct action is taken by our cells around the country," she warned, saying "similar action" is also likely over fur coats, cosmetics and candy.

A police spokesman said that although the likelihood is that there will be no real danger — as in the Mars bar case — "we just can't take any chances."

"Imagine the outcry if someone died as a result of such scares being ignored," he said. The spokesman predicted chaos if the group claims it has contaminated turkeys just as people are stocking up for Christmas.

"It's no good, people hollering that their turkeys might be poisoned, because the birds are poisoned anyway with the drugs and hormones the producers pump into them," said ALF spokesman Ronnie Lee.

Lee, a bespectacled businessman who founded the group in 1976 and who has been jailed twice for his activities, said the ALF was forced to turn to violence to make its voice heard.

"There is a place for violence, and to deny its use to the movement when necessary is to demand that we should fight ... with one hand tied behind our backs," he said.

Thus the defense of animal rights has become a violent issue in Britain.

The ALF claims it has more than 1,200 members organized into 50 "cells," with a hard "fighting" core of 300-400 members prepared to commit illegal acts. There are no membership lists for police to find. Targets are chosen and attacks are planned locally.

In November animal rights activists attacked fishermen taking part in a contest in Lincolnshire by pelting them with bricks and stones. The attackers got away before police arrived.

Lawyer Wins Methodist Award

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Lee Tai-young, South Korea's first woman lawyer and its leading advocate for women's rights, received the World Methodist Peace award Thursday.

The 70-year-old lawyer is best known for establishing the Korean Legal Aid Center for Family Relations, which has provided free legal advice to more than 200,000 people. She was a suppporter of dissident Kim Dae-jung during is unsuccessful bid for the presidency in 1971. In 1977, she received a three-year suspended sentence and was temporarily disbarred for calling for the resignation of the president and the restoration of democracy.

A graduate of Seoul National University, she passed the national bar examination in 1951 — the first woman to do so. In the United States, she studied at Drew University in Madison, N.J., and at Southern Methodist University in Dallas.

World Methodist Council President Bishop William R. Cannon of Atlanta presented the award. He said her activities on behalf of women "have impact all over the world. ... She saw the need for this (equal rights) when few people did and had great courage in heralding a cause when it was not popular."

No Pessimism?

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan has asked Sen. Barry Goldwater, the incoming chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, to suspend his pessimism about the MX missile's chances in Congress and to support funds for the weapon.

White House spokesman Robert Sims said, after Reagan and the Arizona Republican met Wednesday for about 15 minutes, that "the president's going to fight for the MX."

"He knows we have an uphill battle on our hands and will be involved personally," Sims said. "The program is essential to our security, to negotiations with the Soviet Union and to credibility among our allies."

The meeting with Goldwater, who has told Reagan point-blank that the missile does not have sufficient support on Capitol Hill, was not listed on the president's published schedule of appointments. In response to a question, White House deputy press secretary Larry Speakes confirmed that it had occurred.

"The president expressed his views to the senator on the MX, and I'm sure the senator expressed his views to the president," Speakes said.

As for prospects for continued funding of the huge, 10-warhead weapon, Speakes said, "We're hopeful and will continue to press for the funding of the MX."

In a recent interview Goldwater said Reagan, to force the military to share in necessary budget cuts, should freeze Pentagon spending at last year's level and should give up on the MX, the centerpiece of Reagan's strategic modernization program.

Goldwater said he expects Congress, which balked at funding it last year, to kill the MX when a new vote occurs this spring.

The senator said he hopes Reagan "would not push this thing. Just let the Congress vote yes or no and then forget about it. I don't think he can win it ... You don't go out and pick a fight that you're going to lose."

Home Of Protestant Work Ethic Lies Idle

By BARRY JAMES
UPI Senior Editor

BRADFORD, England (UPI) — This one-time woolen textile capital helped give the world the Protestant work ethic. Now it is pondering a future without work.

Like most great northern English cities of the 19th century Industrial Revolution, Bradford is awash with unemployment and economic decline. The reason is a massive contraction of manufacturing output, down 10 percent nationwide in 5 years.

"I don't think there is any chance of reversing the situation in job terms," said Kevin Atkins, a city council spokesman. "And the sooner we accept this as a nation the better. We might then make some progress in solving the problem."

In the 1850s, when Bradford was reputed to be the filthiest and most ill-regulated city in the land, statesman Benjamin Disraeli wrote about "two nations" in a common country, the haves and have-nots.

Lately senior politicians and churchmen have returned to that theme. They warn unemployment is again dividing Britain into the poor north and the prosperous south.

Former Prime Minister Harold Macmillian, now the earl of Stockton, spoke of "the growing division ... in our comparatively prosperous society between the south and the north and the midlands, which are ailing."

"This cannot be allowed to continue," said the 90-year-old earl.

But most experts expect British unemployment, already among Europe's highest, will continue rising from its present 3.2 million, or 13.4 percent of the labor force, to 4 million or more.

As Macmillan pointed out, in the United States "unemployment has fallen from one in 10 to one in 17, whereas here it is one in eight and next year will be one in seven."

A high proportion of long-term unemployment arises from the problems of traditional industries such as textiles, shipbuilding, steel and heavy engineering — which are in Britain's worst and longest economic slump since the 1930s depression.

Bradford, which helped pioneer industrialization, has 18 percent unemployment — more than 50 percent in some areas — largely because of the decline of the woolen industry on which its once-mighty fortunes were built.

The city council said recently parts of Bradford "are becoming virtually 'poverty zones,' with few working people, low income and many dependents ...."

Many woolen mills succumbed to foreign competition. Remaining mills survive by sophisticated machinery that has cut the labor force to a fraction of what it was.

Unlike most other northern British cities with decaying and emptying inner areas, Bradford's population is rising. Its 62,000-member non-white community — thousands of Indians and Pakistanis brought here after World War II as a source of cheap labor — has doubled in size in a decade, and is concentrated in the inner city.

David Morton, Bradford's policy coordinator, says he looks in vain for guidance from Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's government and for a national debate on the unemployment problem in cities like his.

"The question is, how are we going to cope with a period in which we actually need less people to work?" he said.

Officials fear computers and the vaunted microchip will cut unemployment heavily at the savings and loan societies and mail order companies headquartered in the city, while presenting only limited manufacturing opportunities in return.

Many industrial cities are ruled by leftist-controlled councils. Not so Bradford. Exactly half of its councilors belong to the ruling Conservative Party. Three of its five members of parliament also are Conservatives.

Yet the city's authorities find themselves increasingly in conflict with the Thatcher government because of its attempts to control local council spending, both by limiting the amount they receive from central government and by legally curbing their ability to raise funds through property taxation.

"Central government policy is reducing the council's income and is increasingly defining how it will spend what it does have," said one official.

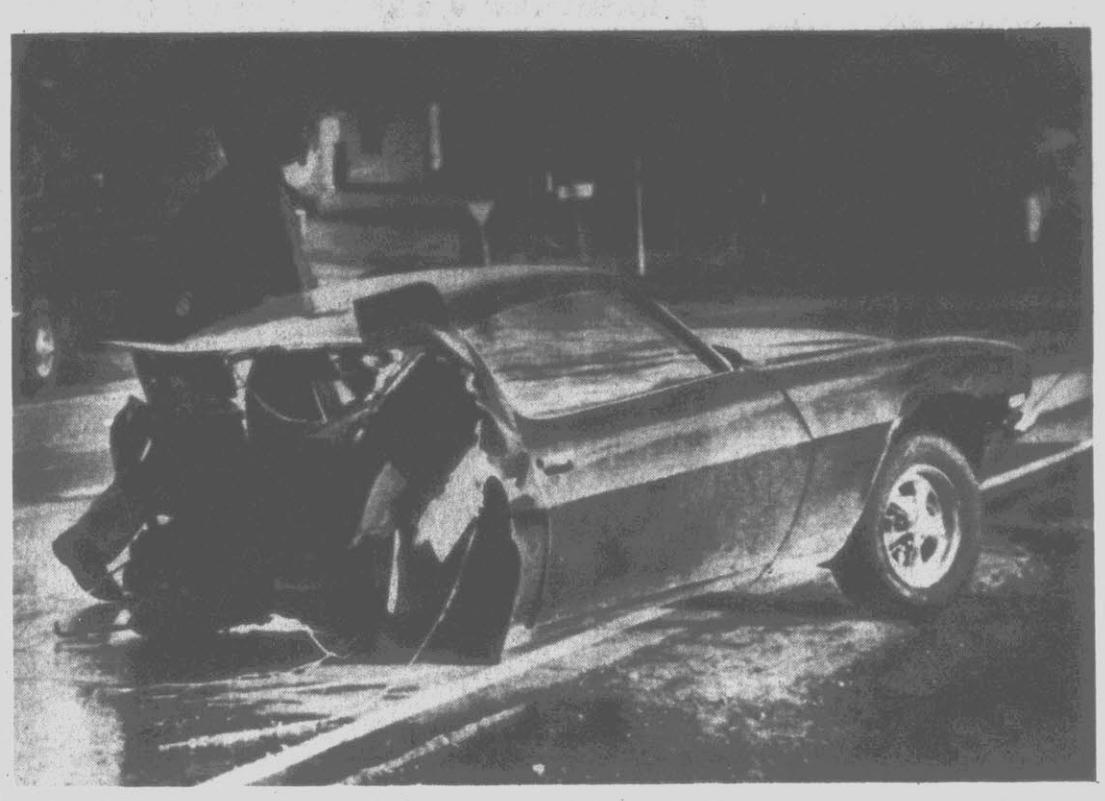

In a population of 464,000, Bradford has some 37,000 unemployed. It needs to create 5,000 new jobs in the next few years just to stay even.

Opportunities for young people are few. Graham Mahoney, a council official in charge of race relations, sees increasing signs of unrest among young Asians and blacks, half as likely as white youths to find jobs — and whites have only a 37 percent chance of work.

"Many of them face frustration and prejudice," he said. "I predict you will see a growing disillusionment, increasing crime and vandalism and the development of a gang culture. You will also see the development of an Islamic revival movement — young, born-again, zealous Moslems. It's not a very rosy picture."

Nevertheless, the work ethic survives.

"I think it must be built into us," said local official Elaine Gort. "Somehow we have got to educate people to find something to replace work, so that those who do not have a job are not stigmatized."

HALF A CAR — Scott Ribby of Chili, N.Y., lost the back of his car when it was struck by an oncoming vehicle as he attempted two cars. He was injured, but only slightly. Here a firefighter steers the car as a tow truck pulls. Ribby was given two tickets for moving violations. (AP Laserphoto)

Princes Show Royal Jealousy

LIVERPOOL, England (AP) — Prince Charles says his 2-year-old son, Prince William, is slightly jealous of his infant brother, Prince Harry, but that apart from this minor sibling rivalry, William is very generous.

The 36-year-old heir apparent talked about his sons during a visit Wednesday to Toxteth, the depressed, racially mixed neighborhood that was the scene of some of the most serious of 1981's racial riots.

He was given a tour of one housing project by resident Ann Fagan, who told reporters afterward: "I asked him whether William was jealous, and he said slightly. He said William was a marvelous child in every way. He's generous and everything.

"I said, 'How's the new baby?' He said, 'Very well.'"

Opposition Holds Lead In Brazil's Presidential Race

BRASILIA, Brazil (AP) — A series of court decisions and defections from government political ranks virtually assures that 74-year-old Tancredo Neves, the opposition candidate and a middle-roader, will become Brazil's first civilian president since 1964.

Neves led the government for nine months as prime minister 23 years ago and has served in Cabinet posts, in Congress and as a state governor.

It is now widely accepted that barring any reversal of the trend Neves will be the victor in an Electoral College vote Jan. 15 over Paulo Salim Maluf, the 53-year-old choice of the military, which has governed Brazil for nearly 21 years.

Neves moved into the forefront by virtue of three recent decisions of the Superior Electoral Court, which declared unconstitutional attempts by the government's Social Democratic Party to force its members to vote for Maluf in the Electoral College.

The court's rulings cleared the way for scores of government party members, who already had pledged support for Neves, to cast their ballots for him in the 686-member electoral body — made up of popularly elected members of the Senate, Chamber of Deputies and state officials.

The Social Democratic defectors are taking the step with an eye to their political futures and because popular opinion polls favor Neves.

Both candidates are civilians, which means an end to a string of five generals who served as president after the armed forces took power in a 1964 coup that ousted the leftist civilian government of President Joao Goulart.

Neves, candidate of his Brazilian Democratic Movement and a group of other opposition parties, has served in the Senate and Chamber of Deputies and as governor of Minas Gerais state. He was justice minister and interior minister under Getulio Vargas, the dictator and later elected president who committed suicide in 1954 after resigning under military pressure.

Chaplain Offers While-You-Wait Gospel To Motorists

By KATHY EYRE
Associated Press Writer

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — While huge tractor-trailers pass through the truck wash at one of Omaha's biggest and busiest truck stops, a retired minister offers drivers the cleansing gospel of Jesus in the 24-hour chapel upstairs.

Traffic at the chapel doesn't come close to the business at the truck wash, gas pumps, restaurant, stores and motels surrounding the Sapp Bros. Truck Plaza on Interstate 80.

But chaplain Royal Peterson says he's going to do his best to see that business picks up. And he says he hopes religious leaders in other communities will start making greater efforts to become good buddies with the men and women behind the wheels of the nation's trucks.

"We've found some real needs of these truckers. They have different needs and schedules than we do," said Peterson, who became truck stop chaplain in July upon retiring as pastor of Omaha's Bethany Baptist Church.

The chapel, open since 1976, was built by the Sapp brothers in honor of their parents and to provide a service they felt truckers needed, said Lenor Sapp, wife of Ray Sapp.

"But it should be used more than it is," she said of the red-carpeted room with chairs lined up in front of an altar and a large picture of Jesus.

The 8 a.m. Sunday service is often empty, with half a dozen truckers attending at most. Peterson also has a 7:30 a.m. Bible study class on Wednesdays and frequently stops at the chapel at various hours throughout the week. He said he has told employees at the nearby restaurant and store that they can give his home phone number to truckers who may need to talk to him at any hour of the day or night.

There's a sign pointing to the chapel under the Sapp Bros. coffee pot, a landmark as large as a water tower, and another sign can be seen from the highway. And Peterson had fliers printed up for restaurant tables to remind truckers.

Even though they know it's there, a half dozen truckers questioned at the Truck Haven Cafe said they had never visited the chapel.

"No, I just keep on trucking," Joe Campbell of Wesmont, Ill., said when asked if he ever took time for church if he was working Sunday.

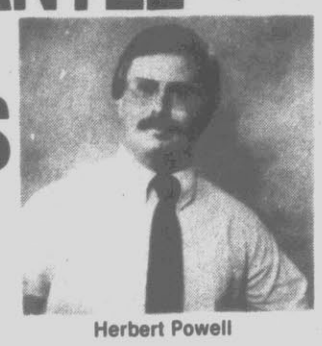

Campbell, who said he tries to attend Mass at home Saturday if he's going to be on the road Sunday, said he has never attended services at any of the roadside chapels he's passed, but added, "I think there's a need for them."

Al Klasi of Omaha, wasn't so sure truck drivers could ever be enticed to attend church.

Opening lead: Five of ♣.

The Four of Spades looked rather uncertain. "It's all fine and dandy going around carrying signs that read 'Power To The People,'" he remarked, "but I can't see it gaining us anything. After all, no matter how long I picket at the palace gate, I'll still be a fourspot and they'll still be the court cards. I just can't see myself winning many tricks by force!

"It's not that I begrudge all the attention fawned on the royal families," he continued. "I just feel that we must find some way for all of us to share the limelight.

"For example, look at that hand the other day. It was touch and go whether I would be a factor — North might easily have elected to rebid three no trump, which would have made him the declarer. However, my man's four spade contract was eminently reasonable — at least, until he found about the abominable trump split.

"West led a low club and East quickly bagged two tricks in the suit. By now he was beginning to regret that he hadn't doubled — with the ten of trumps in dummy it seemed a sure bet that he would take two trump tricks.

"His club exit was won in hand by the jack, and when declarer led a trump to the king the horrible break was revealed. Lesser men would have conceded down one, but our hero saw that, if East held four diamonds, all was not lost.

"Declarer cashed the ace of diamonds and overtook the queen on the board. He ran the rest of the suit, discarding two heart losers as East followed helplessly. Next came the ace of hearts and a low heart. East ruffed with the seven and, had declarer overruffed, he would have had to concede two trump tricks. Instead, I was underplayed to this trick, leaving East on lead. He was down to Q-9-8 of trumps, while dummy held 10-6 and declarer A-J-5. No matter what East did, declarer had the rest of the tricks.

"Naturally, I was written up in the local press. It was far more satisfying than walking around with a picket sign!"

RFK's Son Succeeds With 'Kennedy's Oil Co.'

By CAROL ROSENBERG

BOSTON (UPI) — When he's not jetting around the world striking deals with oil ministers, Joseph P. Kennedy II sits at the head of a $400 million energy company — a business that combines his slain father's idealism with 1980s entrepreneurial savvy.

The business is called the Citizens Energy Corp. But it is known to many as "Joe Kennedy's Oil Company," named for Robert F. Kennedy's eldest son, who started the firm six years ago to bring cheap home heating oil to people struggling to keep warm in New England's fierce winter.

Kennedy, 32, has succeeded even though he is neither a smooth-talking politician nor a slick businessman.

"I don't know where the heck I'm going," he says of the company that has expanded sixfold since 1979. "I just take it one step at a time."

Kennedy, wearing his all-purpose blue suit and tie, is sitting in his office on Atlantic Avenue by Boston's watertront trying to explain how at age 27 he was able to get a piece of that part of the world controlled by shieks and oil moguls. And why he does it. And why he thought he could do it in the first place.

"Basically what I'm trying to suggest is there is a phenomenal need for ..." he says, jumping up to pace back and forth.

"There are a lot of poor people in our country," he says, making another false start.

"The fact of the matter is, in peoples' minds, they think the energy crisis is over," he says in a frustrated burst.

Then he lapses into what he knows best. He rattles off facts, figures, and a short course on Congress' windfall profits tax — his attempt to explain in a flood of words how the rich won out at the expense of the poor.

"Listen carefully," he says, his voice rising. "This is how the poor people are screwed in this country."

Ten years ago, he says, 10 percent of a "poor person's" budget was spent on energy. Today it's 23 percent, shooting up to 47 percent in the winter months. His job, he says, is to help people cut those margins.

This is Joe, the $60,000-a-year businessman, talking. But ask him how he got started. Did he have a deep interest in energy and a passion to play with the system? He cracks a grin.

"It seemed pertectly reasonable to try," he says of the idea tossed around a friend's home six years ago when oil profits were soaring and the federal fuel assistance program was not yet in place.

"I saw on the news that millions and millions of dollars were being made. And people were poor. And nobody was there to help. I thought, 'I wonder if I can get in on it'"

It was early 1979, he was 26 years old, and he had just left a job in Washington with the Community Services Administration, disenchanted with the system. He was getting married, moving back to Massachusetts and fumbling around for something to do. He consulted Richard Goodwin, a family friend who had been a speechwriter for President Kennedy, Joe's uncle.

"It was the height of the energy crisis and Joe was looking for some way to direct his energy," recalls Goodwin, telling how he suggested that the young Kennedy figure out a way to sell oil to needy people at cost.

Goodwin, like Kennedy, knew nothing about the oil industry. But he saw in the sandy-haired Joe some of the qualities that drove RFK.

"Like his father, he has determination, energy and passion. That's what you need," says Goodwin.

This year, a tanker brought the Citizen Energy Corp.'s sixth shipment of refined oil to Massachusetts' needy people. It will sell at 55 cents a gallon, compared to the going rate of $1.10 to $1.15. That first shipment sold for 47 cents a gallon, 35 cents less than the retail rate in the winter of 1979.

"It is a terrific concept," says State Energy Secretary Sharon Pollard. "He basically goes off to Venezuela and other oil-producing nations and buys it and comes back to Massachusetts and sells it at a much reduced rate than you would be able to buy it on the market."

Put simply, he bought that first shipment of crude oil in Venezuela and found a refinery to process it. He sold all of the byproducts — gasoline, kerosene and sludge, everything but the home-heating oil — at a profit and used the profits to finance the heating oil.

But the process is not simple. It's a year-round commitment that requires Kennedy to watch prices and shuttle between the Middle East, Africa and South America to negotiate with oil ministers and refineries. He directs every step until the refined oil is brought to Massachusetts and turned over to the state fuel assistance project for distribution.

Oil was where CEC began, but the company has expanded with interests in natural gas and energy conservation — all part of Kennedy's search for solutions for the problem of staying warm.

The corporation's divisions now oversee conservation improvements on apartment blocks; help public buildings design systems to save energy costs; deliver cheap natural gas in six states where CEC could negotiate space on pipelines; and pick up leftover oil from private homes that have switched to another form of fuel.

A computerized conservation program at the Rhode Island Statehouse, for example, is expected to cut energy costs by 25 percent.

There is no other company quite like Citizens Energy Corp., which operates with a 35-member staff, most earning between $20,000 and $30,000 a year. Kennedy draws $60,000, but his is not the higest salary, says General Manager Steve Rothstein.

Kennedy says he's been approached by a variety of people across the country trying to emulate the CEC and he's told them he has no master plan. Just do it.

But others have not done it, a fact some attribute to Joe's influence as a Kennedy.

Joseph Fitzpatrick, state energy secretary when Kennedy was laying the groundwork to buy the first batch of oil, says he listened to Kennedy's scheme in no small measure because it came from a Kennedy. He said he agreed to help deliver the oil through an existing state program because the idea was sound.

Today, Fitzpatrick, 36, has left government and is working for Kennedy, administering the CEC's Citizens Heat and Power entity — a division which, at a profit, designs and finances conservation plans for buildings.

The entity makes its money by taking a share of energy costs saved and dumping the profits back into cutting the costs of oil for the needy. His customers include the city of Lowell, the state of Rhode Island, private and public hospitals. His prime competitor is Shell Oil Co.

"It's clearly a pretty unique place," Fitzpatrick said of his decision to join Kennedy. "It was something that was just begging for a solution." Without Kennedy, it would not be the same place, Fitzpatrick says.

"I don't think anybody's got quite the drive, and to some extent, charisma," he said.

Says Kennedy of his company's success and rapid growth: "I'm not saying there isn't a certain amount of luck — and my family name — but I did make it work."

This is one of the few times Kennedy even mentions his famous family. In recent years, through the troubles and attention that surrounded the Kennedy clan, he has demanded and received scrupulous respect for his privacy. Only once, sitting in an office covered with photographs — his twin sons, his wife Sheila, he and his father sailing, JFK — does he mention his family.

He bemoans the fact that the business, sometimes a seven-day-a-week, on-the-road commitment, takes him away from his home in Marshfield and Sheila and Joseph III and Matthew, both 4.

Kennedy, who is sometimes accused of using the business as a high-profile staging platform from which to start a political career, says he doesn't rule out the possibility of following his father and uncles into office. But he has no plans for it.

"It's good trying to get these benefits to people who might not otherwise get it. It's neat getting these deals together," he says. "I guess the problem is the amount of time it takes away from my family."

Goodwin rejects arguments that Kennedy's motives are purely political; but doesn't reject a possible political future.

"I think it's always possible. I don't think he's particularly minded to go into politics right now," says Goodwin. "Besides, I don't see any opening. I think no matter what he did, he would be positioned for a political career."

Freedom

DHAKA, Bangladesh (AP) — The government has announced it will free 242 prisoners on Sunday to mark Victory Day, the anniversary of Bangladesh's independence from Pakistan in 1971.

The announcement said those to be released include 92 people detained under the special powers act, which enables the government to hold a person without trial.

Bangladesh, once the Eastern Province of Pakistan, won independence after a nine-month war.

Ho Ho Ho, Fool: It's Mr. T As Santa

By Jay Carman

Quick now. Form a mental image of Santa Claus. Does he just happen to have a Mandinka haircut, sport a whole lot of gold chains, have biceps the size of tree trunks and a ferocious scowl?

Probably not. But that is a fairly accurate description of one of the most wildly popular of all TV stars: tough-talking Mr. T.

Even though his image may differ wildly fom the usual notion of jolly old St. Nick, that is more or less who the star of "The A-Team" will be playing in the holiday special "Mr. T and Emmanuel Lewis in a Christmas Dream," airing Dec. 16 on NBC stations.

The upbeat holiday show is aimed directly at the pre-teen fans who form the vast majority of Mr. T's following. It is also very much in line with what the idealistic Chicago-born actor has dedicated much of his time away from "The A-Team": being a good influence on children.

In the special, burly Mr. T will play a street Santa who takes pity on a pint-sized street punk, played by "Webster" star Emmanuel Lewis. In an effort to show the confused boy that life really is worth living, Mr. T leads him through a series of happy experiences. This was the story-line justification for the show's inclusion of famous New York City locations, including Radio City Music Hall and Rockefeller Center.

Mr. T says that the special is just another facet of his master plan to reach over the heads of adults and communicate directly to children. "Because they love me so much," he says, "I've got an obligation to kids, to be there and guide them whenever I can — especially if their folks are falling down on the job."

Also very much part of his plan at the moment are numerous promotional trips around the United States and Canada to meet children and autograph his autobiography, "Mr. T: The Man with the Gold," and his new videocassette, "Mr. T's Be Somebody... or Be Somebody's Fool."

If the near-riots that broke out recently when Mr. T visited Toronto and the Ontario communities of Brampton and Thornhill, are anything to go by, he will have no shortage of buyers.

Holy Smoke! Mr. T and Emmanuel Lewis dream of a T-errific Christmas in the yuletide special "A Christmas Dream," airing Sunday, Dec. 16 on NBC.

Michele Will Tell

Dear Michele: Please tell me about singer Julio Iglesias. Is he married? Does he have a family? I've heard he originally wanted to be a doctor. — HELEN ANDERS, WASHINGTON, PA.

The son of a prominent Madrid physician, Julio Iglesias was headed toward a law degree at Cambridge University when a near-fatal automobile accident injured him so severely that doctors feared he would never walk again. During his long convalescence, Iglesias began to sing and write songs. In 1968, he won a Spanish song competition for "La Vida Sique Igual." The road was paved for "Julomania."

Iglesias married his first and only wife, Isobel, in 1971. The couple have two sons and a daughter. In 1979, the Iglesias union was annulled — and Julio has remained a bachelor ever since. Although Iglesias is a relative newcomer to American music listeners (a situation changed in recent years due to a phenomenal publicity campaign and duets with several American superstars), Europeans have known about him for years. Today, anywhere he hangs his hat is home; he has residences scattered around the globe, including a $3 million estate on an island off Miami. The singer's latest album, "1100 Bel Air Place," is a big hit.

Dear Michele: Can you tell me how long "Dallas" has been on TV? Most of the people I have spoken with seem to think it's only four years, but I'm certain the show has been on longer. — CINDY HOLLOWAY, RALEIGH, N.C.

"Dallas" is now in its seventh season. The show premiered April 2, 1978, but was not an instant hit with viewers. Its popularity gained momentum, however, and by the 1980-81 season, "Dallas" was television's most popular series. Although the show was recently renewed for an additional two years, several cast members are threatening to leave the ranch. Charlene Tilton (Lucy Ewing) and Patrick Duffy (Bobby Ewing) have already announced they will not return next year.

Dear Michele: How old is Bill Bixby? When did he star on "The Courtship of Eddie's Father"? — MRS. B. PERRY, NIAGARA FALLS, N.Y.

Bixby is old enough to be Eddie's grandfather now. He was born Jan. 22, 1934, in San Francisco. "Courtship" ran from 1969-72.

It Looks Like It's Over For Turner's CMC

By E.A. Vare

At press time, it was learned that Ted Turner, president of Turner Broadcasting System, was negotiating to sell his month-old Cable Music Channel to his rival, MTV. Although Turner has been known to reverse himself on short notice in the past, it currently appears that MTV will take over his operation on Jan. 1, 1985.

TBS anticipated that the adult-oriented video music channel would reach 10 million homes when it launched in late October. At that time, Turner announced he had 2 million subscribers, but it was later revealed that the real number was closer to 400,000. The station lost millions, but Turner is expected to recoup some of that loss from the sale.

Since the odds are you never got a chance to see CMC in your neighborhood, you might be curious as to how CMC differed from the station whose initials have become synonymous with rock video.

The two big differences between CMC and MTV were that CMC aired live, and it used DJ's. MTV, of course, has on-camera VJ's and is prerecorded.

From their studios in Hollywood, CMC engineers sit behind a bank of switches and monitors, juggling a mix of 14 videos, eight commerical minutes and a clutch of in-house promotional spots per hour. The DJs complemented the videos with a basic radio rap — live, spontaneous and not read from cue cards.

TV Chatter

No matter how many times you have seen "A Christmas Carol" dramatized, you will be delighted with CBS's two-hour presentation airing Monday, Dec. 17. George C. Scott's interpretation of Ebenezer Scrooge brings a new dimension to the classic holiday tale. No one can look more sinister or foreboding than Scott — or, when jovial, look happier. Says Scott about his performance: "Obviously, I'm the fattest Scrooge there has ever been."

Scott doesn't personally care for Christmas. "When you get to be my age you sort of forebear. My father was a traveling salesman and Christmas was a rather bleak time for us, as I recall," he says. "One of the barbarisms of Christmas is children being disappointed. I prefer to go to Bermuda or some other island and be alone during the holidays."

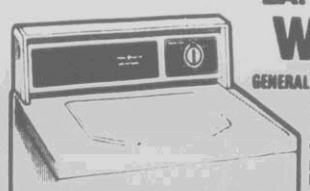

To take some of the humbug out of your Christmas, here is the 1895 Victorian punch recipe served to Scrooge at his nephew's home: "A score of lemons cut in half, three or four pounds of sugar, a kettle of boiling water, six bottles of claret, three of sherry, one gallon of whiskey, then taste and see what is wanted."

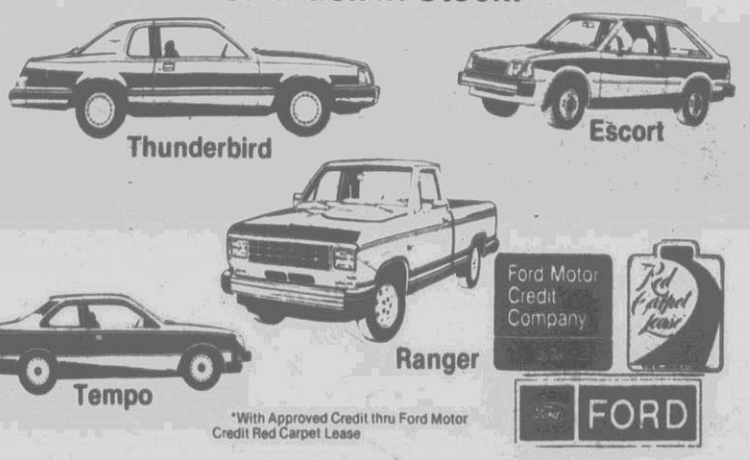

"Masterpiece Theatre" premieres the opening episode of its 14-part series "The Jewel in the Crown," Sunday, Dec. 16 on PBS. Based on Paul Scott's "The Raj Quartet," the drama focuses on the end of the British imperial presence in India during the wartime turmoil of 1942. Two years in India and the United Kingdom were spent filming the $8 million presentation.

Susan Wooldridge, Dame Peggy Ashcroft, Geraldine James, Art Malik and Tim Pigott-Smith (outstanding as Ronald Merrick) head up the cast.

During an interview, Pigott-Smith was introduced by Alistair Cook as "The man you'll love to hate. The man you'll hate to love. The J.R. of India." Merrick is sinister, guilty, repressed and compelling through all 14 episodes. This is a "Masterpiece Theatre" not to be missed.

Ever since the making of the expensive Jackson video "Torture," there has been speculation that Michael Jackson, who appears to be in it, is really not in it at all — that a wax dummy was substituted. Rumor had it that the Jacksons had a fight on the day of the shooting and Michael ran off to Disney World. Now the truth can be revealed: Michael was replaced by a dummy — when he took a much-needed week's rest at home.

No Humbug About This 'Christmas Carol'

By Addison DeWitt

A beautiful new production of "A Christmas Carol," starring George C. Scott as Ebenezer Scrooge, is CBS's Christmas present for the whole family. It arrives a little early, though — on Dec. 17. Don't let fond memories of other versions of "A Christmas Carol" — with Scrooges ranging from Alistair Sim in the 1951 movie, to Albert Finney in the musical version, to Mr. Magoo in an animated rendition — deter you from this richly atmospheric new film. Shot in sleepy old Shrewsbury, England, one of those pockets of antiquity that seem to have passed undisturbed into the 20th century, the movie is full of fog and mist and cobblestone streets. Beyond atmosphere, this retelling of the Charles Dickens classic about the comeuppance of a greedy man has surprising quantities of humor. There's something inherently funny about crabbed, miserly Ebenezer Scrooge and his Christmas Eve visits from a trio of overdressed spirits (the Ghosts of Christmas Past, Christmas Present, and Christmas Yet to Come) — the bickering and banter between Scrooge and ghosts suggesting well-timed comedy routines.

Scott is the key to this new "Christmas Carol." Over the years, Scott's majestic gruffness has spilled over into comedy; certainly, his Scrooge is a witty study of bluster and mean-spiritedness. Looking like an old turkey buzzard, and sounding like two pieces of sandpaper being rubbed together, Scott's Scrooge is a grizzled triumph — and no less believable when he turns nice than when he's being Mr. Nasty. In fact, Scott somehow manages to make Scrooge's discovery of kindheartedness a highlight of the film. The cast is full of fine actors doing good work — Susannah York, Roger Rees, Frank Finlay and Edward Woodward — but it's Scott's show all the way.

Meanwhile, ABC has a treat up its sleeve (er, in its stocking). On Dec. 16, it will present the enormously popular Paul Newman-Robert Redford vehicle, "The Sting." Coming on the heels of "Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid," "The Sting" made Newman and Redford the movie couple of the early '70s — a buddy-buddy era on screen, when women's liberation had not yet had its effect on movie roles for women. Playing cute con men in 1930s Chicago, Newman and Redford have a high ole time, accompanied by Scott Joplin's ragtime music.

Mystery on CBS

Anthony Hopkins will portray dual roles in "Guilty Conscience," a new mystery drama now in production for CBS.

Starring with Hopkins are Blythe Danner as his wife and Swoosie Kurtz as his mistress.

Marvin in reprisal

Lee Marvin will reprise his role as a renegade U.S. Army major in "The Dirty Dozen: The Next Mission," an NBC made-for-TV movie being filmed in London. Marvin leads 12 convicts on a suicide mission behind German lines to halt an assassination plot against Hitler.

'Jewel In The Crown' Has Glittering Debut

By Andrew J. Edelstein

Yeah, I know. This is the year we Americans are supposed to be gung-ho and patriotic. To proudly tell the world that everything American is the best. To pluck out the eyes of anyone who trods on the red, white and blue.

Sorry, fellows. There's no way of getting around it. When it comes to miniseries, the British do it better.

Proof can be seen this week when PBS debuts the first episode Sunday, Nov. 16 on "Masterpiece Theatre" of "The Jewel in the Crown," based on the "Raj Quartet" by Paul Scott. The drama, which explores the tinderbox of British-Indian relations on the Subcontinent in the 1940s — was created by Granada Television, who wowed Yanks with its "Brideshead Revisited" in 1982. When "Jewel" aired in the UK earlier this year, it received nearly unanimous praise and became a Sunday night ritual. A cartoon in the Sunday Mirror showed a woman plopped on a couch in front of a TV watching the final episode of "Jewel in the Crown." "Don't care if it's the Queen herself — tell her to call back at 10," she tells her son, who is summoning her with a phone call.

Browns-Oilers Clash Ends Regular Season

By Mark Nolan

Sports on television this week begins with NFL football on Sunday, Dec. 16, at 1 p.m. (EST) when CTV Sports airs the Cleveland Browns tackling the Houston Oilers, live from the Astrodome in Houston, Texas.

This is the 16th and final week of the NFL regular season schedule, and definitely the last game of the year for both the Browns and the Oilers. After a horrible start for Houston and Cleveland, both teams were quietly eliminated weeks ago from the playoffs.

Earlier this season, when the Browns and Oilers met, Cleveland came out on top, 27-10. At the outset of the NFL season, the Oilers had a new head coach in Hugh Campbell, and high hopes for a winning season. Campbell came to Houston from the USFL, and brought in former Edmonton Eskimo Warren Moon to take over as quarterback for the Oilers.

With the Oilers, Moon was given a lucrative multi-year contract. He walked into an offensive unit which previously had centered around the running game of Oiler fullback and former Heisman Trophy winner Earl Campbell.

Approximately one month into the season, Earl Campbell was traded to the New Orleans Saints, where he was reunited with former Oiler coach Bum Phillips.

That deal had Houston fans wondering how the Oilers could afford to part with Campbell. Meanwhile, New Orleans fans were curious to see where and how Campbell would be used in a backfield which already had an established ground gainer in another former Heisman Trophy winner, George Rogers.

After 10 games without a win, several members of the Houston Oilers were discussing where the blame should lie for the team's lack of success. Depending on which player one listened to, the blame for Houston's disastrous season was split between the front office and Coach Campbell.

But football fans in Houston should not give up hope. Despite all their problems, better days are surely coming for the Oilers and their fans. It is doubtful that things could get much worse.

Other televised sports on Sunday include a one-hour version of "Sportsweekend" on CBC at 4 p.m. Scheduled for this program will be another look at the Canadian Men's World Cup Downhill Ski team, as the Men's World Cup circuit moves to Val Gardena, Italy.

On "Hockey Night in Canada," airing Saturday, Dec. 22 at 8 p.m. (EST) on CBC, four games will air throughout various regions of the country.

For Ontario and the Atlantic Provinces, viewers are slated to see the Boston Bruins taking on the Maple Leafs in Toronto. The Hartford Whalers visit the Montreal Canadiens that night, and Quebec viewers will see that game from the Forum.

For the Western half of the nation, fans in Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia are scheduled to see the Edmonton Oilers hosting the Calgary Flames. For viewers in Manitoba only, the Los Angeles Kings-Winnipeg Jets game will be seen.

NBC Clones Its Shows To Boost Ratings

By Connie Passalacqua

The most prominent soap opera development of 1984 may have been CBS finally overtaking ABC's six-year hold on the Neilsen ratings crown early in the year, but an easily overlooked statistic may be even more crucial in forecasting the genre's future. NBC, long thought of as the also-ran in daytime competition, managed to up its ratings a sizable 22 percent over last year.

Why has NBC made such a determined effort in daytime? According to Brian Frons, the network's vice president for daytime, "It's because somewhere or another someone noticed the bottom line." Soaps at all three networks are highly profitable, contributing 50 percent-to-75 percent of the networks' overall yearly profits. Investment in improving the shows brings a reasonably quick payoff. So over the last year NBC Daytime itself has actively revamped and standardized its shows, so much so that its strategy has rendered them almost too similar to each other.

In revamping its shows, NBC is using the same elements that ABC innovated and which have kept its soaps on top so long: action/adventure integrated into the standard love stories between extremely young characters, complemented by lush production values using on-location shootings whenever possible.

On "Another World," convict Catlin Ewing (Thomas Ian Griffith) and Sally Frame (Mary Page Keller) are on the run in Majorca trying to find murderer Ross (Robert Phelan), whose crime Catlin is wrongfully accused of.

CHER: AFTER THE FALLS.

Cher, who used to be a regular on the best-tressed list — she now sports a spiky platinum New-Wave do — recently staged a garage sale to clean house of assorted falls and wigs at the Benedict Canyon home she has just sold. But the celebrity garage sale groupies had a few cutting remarks about the proceedings. "All I could find," groused one, "was a bunch of her old attachable ponytails from the Sonny and Cher Show." Talk about splitting hairs.

□

It was apparently impossible to bridge the troubled waters of her 14-month marriage to Paul Simon, but Carrie Fisher is not rushing off to divorce court. First she has to find new digs in Beverly Hills and finish work on Woody Allen's latest movie, Hannah and Her Sisters, which also stars Mia Farrow (as usual) and Michael Caine. The way things are going, it will be spring before Fisher is sprung.

□

George Burns, who's celebrating his 81st year as a performer with a new movie, Oh God, You Devil, and his fifth book, Dr. Burns' Prescription for Happiness, allows that he's the poster child for octogenarian chic. "I'm making old age fashionable," he says. "People like to watch someone grow old gracefully; there are a lot of comedians out there who can't wait to be 88." The notion of retiring doesn't even enter his mind. "Why should I?" he asks reasonably. "I've got it going both ways. I'm making films, and as a senior citizen I can get in and watch myself for half price."

□

There was no happier man than Jack Lord when he laid down his lei and said "aloha" to his long-running (12 years) series Hawaii Five-0. "I was on a treadmill," he groans. "Up at 3:30 a.m., 14 hours of shooting. In bed by 9. I don't know how my wife, Marie, survived it. She was always alone." Understandably, he erupts like Mauna Loa at even the thought of doing another series. "I've been asked to do some commercials, which I've not yet done and can't quite understand why — perhaps out of a sense that dramatic actors should not do them. But everyone else does without negative effect on their careers. And they do pay well."

A — pardon the expression — bumper crop of big wheels came out to herald the publication of Chrysler President Lee Iacocca's autobiography, aptly titled Iacocca. Guests at the recent celebrity cocktail party included Walter Cronkite, Tom Brokaw, baseball commissioner Peter Ueberroth, and novelist Mario Puzo, whom Iacocca greeted with the words: "It's nice to meet a real writer. I'm looking forward to [your new book] The Sicilian." But there will be no next book from Lee, even though his oeuvre soared to the top of the best-seller list. "One time and out," he insists. "I'd rather build cars. It takes the same amount of time: three years."

□

Doug Sheehan, the love interest of Joan Van Ark on Knots Landing, may have been born in Santa Monica, but his heart is clearly in the highlands. Name one other actor who regularly plays in a bagpipe band and willingly sports a kilt. Sheehan, who considers himself "on course" with his career, would like to branch out from television to movies, but unlike many of his colleagues, he firmly scotches the notion of producing, directing or writing. "I don't think that because you can act you can do those other things," he says. "A producer's workload is more frightening than Orson Welles' blood pressure."

IACOCCA: BIG WHEEL ON A ROLL.

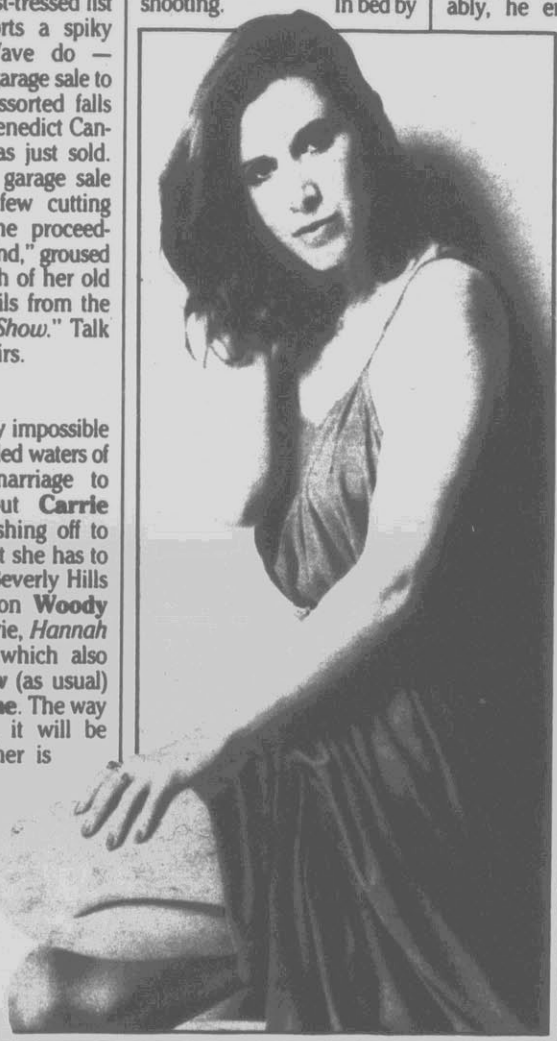

SHEEHAN: PLAYING THE PIPER.

"Are you as afraid of rejection now as when you began your career?" S.G. of Council Bluffs, Iowa, writes in to ask Tess Harper, who starred with Robert Duvall in Tender Mercies. "I've learned to deal with it better," says Harper. "Rejection is a fact of an actress's life. No matter how well established you become, there will always be something you're not right for. I tell myself that I did my best and hope the producer and director have the good taste to want me. And if I don't get it, I'll get the next thing that comes along. I'm still rejected, but at least now I'm rejected by a better class of people."

Sissy Spacek's First Priority

By Dan Yakir

On a cold November morning in 1983, at the crack of dawn, a cornfield in eastern Tennessee was abuzz with activity. The figures braving the frozen winds and the stubborn drizzle that turned the soil into mud were not the farmers who usually hurry about at that early hour. They were the cast and crew of The River, the third, and some say the best, of this season's three films about strong women holding families together in rural America.

The stars, Sissy Spacek, Mel Gibson and Scott Glenn, are knee-deep in the mud. "Not exactly glamorous," laughs Spacek, pointing at her rubber boots and raincoat. "It takes so much energy to make a film — especially in such conditions — that if it's not about something you can really believe in, it's hard to show up on the set every day."

Director Mark Rydell (On Golden Pond) turns to direct a key scene: Tom Garvey (Gibson), his wife, Mae (Spacek), and their son are facing Joe Wade (Glenn) in the muddy field. Tom points a gun at the intruder, who has an army of bulldozers ready to raze the embankment the family has built to stem the flooding river. Although there are some violent scenes in the movie, earning it a PG-13 rating, this scene has less to do with macho bravado than with the united stance taken by the family. "Cut!" yells Rydell, and the wet, mud-covered actors rush to their trailers.

The family theme of the movie transcends the script. Present on the set are Spacek's husband, director Jack Fisk; Mel Gibson's wife, Robyn, and their brood of three; and Scott Glenn's wife, Carol, with their two daughters. While it's not uncommon for movie stars to have their families join them on location, rarely do all the principal performers do it at the same time.

Before Spacek has a chance to relax, there's a knock on the door. Scott Glenn's two pre-teen daughters, Rio and Dakota, have arrived to play with Sissy's then 16-month-old daughter, Schuyler. "Take off your shoes," insists the first-time mother. "My baby likes to play on the rug."

Spacek is an actress known for taking on serious roles and for taking those roles seriously. Motherhood is no exception. She continued to breastfeed Schuyler throughout the shooting of The River, and she can't imagine leaving her at home with a nanny. "Having a baby changes everything," she says.

Of the three stars in the three "farm family" movies this year, Spacek is perhaps best suited to her part. All three are acclaimed actresses, with an Oscar apiece. Jessica Lange, who plays an Iowa woman in Country, has credits that range from King Kong to Frances. Sally Field, the lead in Places in the Heart, is best known as the "Flying Nun," and won an Academy Award for her first serious film role in Norma Rae.

Dan Yakir, who is based in New York City, writes frequently about film.

Nancy Ellison/Sygma

"Now I have a baby and there are other, more important, claims on me," says Spacek of her daughter, Schuyler.

But Spacek, wide-eyed and freckled, with long honey red-gold hair and the tinge of a drawl, fits right into the Tennessee landscape. She is the farmer's wife next door. Spacek, 35, grew up in Quiltman, a small town in northeast Texas and, after graduating from high school, packed her bags and went to visit her cousin, Rip Torn, in New York City, with hopes of becoming a country-western singer. Torn and his wife, Geraldine Page, urged her to prepare for an acting career instead. Lee Strasberg, the late acting teacher, accepted her as a student, and her career took off in 1973 with Badlands. Her credits now include three Oscar nominations (for Coal Miner's Daughter, Raggedy Man, directed by Jack Fisk, and Missing). Spacek did get to realize her musical ambition when she played Loretta Lynn in Coal Miner's Daughter — she did all the singing in that film — and won a Best Actress Oscar for that part.

Spacek and Fisk moved to a farm in Charlottesville, Va., last year. "We had a place in L.A. and the farm," she explains, "and we spent a few months there at a time. But it became harder and harder to get back. Since Jack and I rarely work [in Hollywood], it was time to take the plunge. It's nice to be plugged into real life — I need that as an actress. We have a barn, we raise horses, and we have a donkey, goats, ducks and geese and cats and dogs and cows. Even peacocks."

Spacek's co-stars have also shied away from the Hollywood life. Gibson, whose electric blue eyes and dark good looks captured American attention in The Year of Living Dangerously, lives with his family outside Sydney, Australia, near the beach. And the Glenns, who lived in Los Angeles until 1978, now live in Ketchum, Idaho.

"I needed to be around people who are outside of show business," Glenn says. "In Idaho, nobody cares that I'm an actor [best known for Urban Cowboy] — my wife is better known than I am — but what I especially like is that it's a safe, clean place for my kids to grow up."

About the demands of his work, Glenn says: "If I'm going to be far away from home, I want my family to be with me. If I'm thousands of miles away from my kids, I always have a feeling that if something should go wrong, God forbid, I couldn't get to them right away."

In the privacy of the trailers, each family carries on with its own routines. But outside, when the director calls, "Action!" the actors form their screen family. "What attracted me to the picture," explains Spacek, "is that it was about a very strong American family with basic principles and moral values. I think of Mae as glue; she's like the mortar between bricks — she keeps the family together. She keeps the home fires burning the way women did in the early days of America. Farming is a way of life that depends on the family structure, but I think Mae could live anywhere. She's happy wherever her family is happy. She doesn't want to risk losing the family to save a place, even if it represents their way of life."

Sometimes the boundaries of art and life become blurred. On the set of The River, this has become the norm. When you ask Mel Gibson about his working relationship with Spacek, he responds, "It works. We're a family." For her part, Spacek says, "I know Mel as Tom Garvey. If you ask me about Mel, I'll tell you about Tom. And I bet Mel will do the same about me. Both of us live our characters out on the set. It enables you to explore your character."

Scott Glenn and Spacek have "history," as their characters do in the film (not romantic history as Mae and Joe Wade do, however). "Carol and I have known Sissy and Jack for about 12 years," Glenn explains. "She knew my kids when they were babies. In my scenes with her, I pretty much deal with Sissy as I know her. It fits."

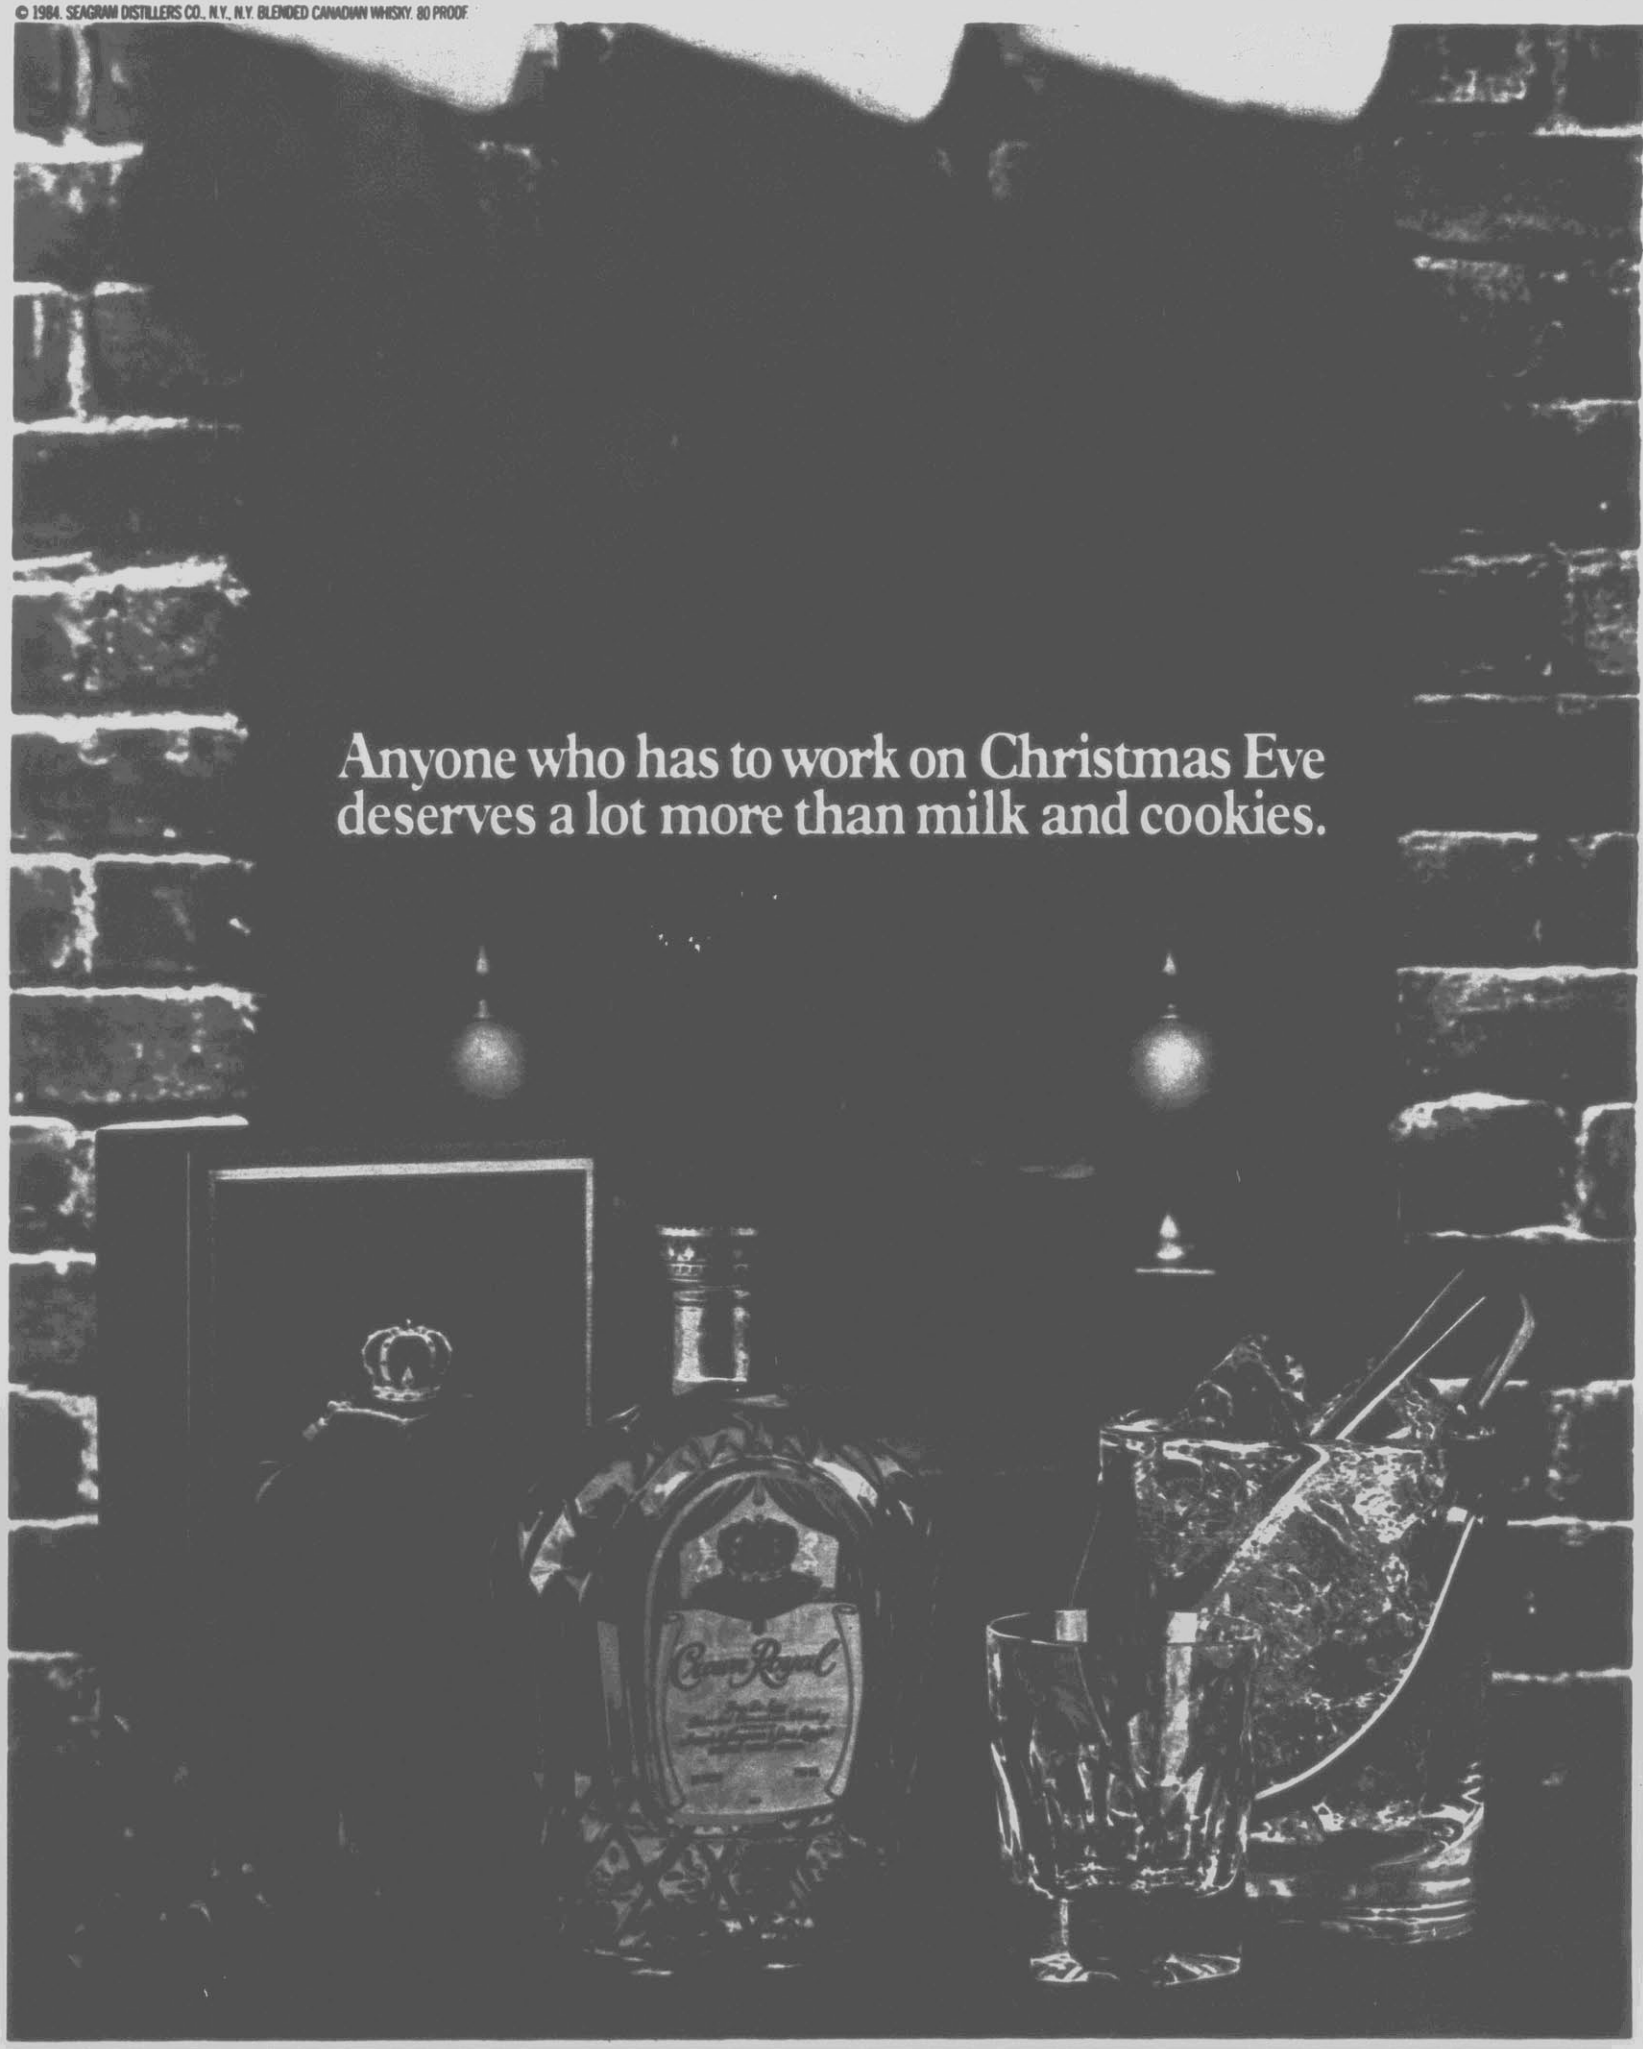

Spacek finds that her work spills over into her life as well. "In the past, if I was doing an intense thing where I was all freaked out, I'd stay like that for weeks, building up to it. That was my experience on Missing — I wanted to make sure I could sustain it all the time, and it really drained me emotionally and was hard on Jack. But now I have a baby, and there are other — more important — claims on me, though I'm just as serious about filmmaking. I find that every role you play becomes a part of you. All the ones I've played are a part of Sissy now, of who I am. So I'd rather do pictures that help me as a human being, that deal with personal growth.

"I do my best work in a happy, supportive, loving environment," she says. "Some people thrive on tension, but even as a kid I always wanted everybody to love me. I needed to win them over." Today she says she's "less that way, because I'm fulfilled creatively.

"I'm sure my life will change as Schuyler grows up, and Jack and I are flexible. We don't really know where we'll be two years from now. All we know is that we'll be together. Otherwise, we'll take it as it comes. It's nice that The River came along now, because it enables me to express what I feel in life. I played mothers before, but there's a depth of feeling to motherhood that I couldn't comprehend. I had all the moves down — I used my mother as a prototype — and now I don't have to anymore. These are such intense feelings, you can't really talk about them."

Spacek falls silent. Schuyler gurgles in the other room. "You know," she concludes, "I try not to think about career moves. I take projects that I feel are worthwhile. I'm not an actress for hire. I'm ruled by my heart. My head's close by, but I'm happiest when I let myself follow my heart." FW

FAMILY MATTERS

SONS AND THEIR MOTHERS: HOW CLOSE?

By Judith Arcana

Mothers and sons — like mother, like son — do the words ring true? Isn't it supposed to be fathers and sons, mothers and daughters? Sure, mothers are proud of their boys, maybe even brag a bit, and grown sons may turn up with fresh flowers one Sunday morning in May — but after these guys leave the Cub Scouts for the Boy Scouts, isn't Mom just a warm memory? Or do true relationships exist between men and their mothers — a bond that includes respect, intimacy, mutual understanding?

Many men are troubled by a conflict between two sets of opposing feelings: love and admiration for strong and capable women, and fear and resentment of those same women. This conflict arises primarily because the same culture that devalues women, teaching boys and men to be unlike and separate from them, also dictates that, for however short a time, every man must be intimate with and subordinate to at least one female — his mother.

A mother is expected to cuddle her infant son, protect and feed him, and serve as his interpreter of the big world. The intimacy that develops between the two is deemed appropriate, but it must be brief. Even before a male toddler is toilet trained, his mother is already being warned against close emotional bonding. Such a bond is considered a barrier to masculinity, and both individuals are made to feel guilty for even wanting it.

By adolescence most boys come to realize that they'll face social disapproval, mockery or attack if they let it be known that they actually care about their mothers. They know what will be whispered — or spoken — if they admit that they might want to go to a movie, for a walk, or to dinner with Mom. The immediate censure following such a revelation is strong, and the loss of status is great. "Spending the evening with his mother? Are you kidding me? A mama's boy! A pansy!" It's as if the value of such an experience is inconceivable.

What is conceivable? What's acceptable? It appears to be the romantic view of motherhood, in which men claim to love their mothers and grow dewy-eyed and tender-hearted at the thought of those careworn fingers and that fond heart. Given the reality of contemporary motherhood, though, men are as likely to damn mother as they are to sing her praises.

Many boys literally force themselves to "drop" their mothers because the pressure from their peers is so great. Others give way slowly, under the influence of thousands of television shows in which mothers are silly, weak, powerless and emotionally dependent; hundreds of games in which women are nonexistent or only props; and dozens of movies in which mothers are cold and disturbed, manipulative and destructive, especially to their sons and husbands.

It's no wonder men grow up wondering about the meaning of that now-sarcastic but still-repeated motto: "A boy's best friend is his mother." How can a healthy relationship be maintained against such an onslaught of mixed messages?

Some mothers give up before they begin — never even trying for a real relationship with their sons. Others feel that traditional arrangements are just fine; that is, they accept and play by the rules — boys with the boys, fathers with sons. They expect that sons will grow up and just leave them, and that's how it should be. These mothers have learned not to desire or hope for a deep personal exchange with their sons.

"You know what they say — 'A son is your son till he takes a wife; a daughter's your daughter the rest of her life.' Well, I don't expect my son to be much interested in me, whether he 'takes a wife' or not. I don't see that happening with my friends' sons. And that's natural; that's right.

"If he needs me or I need him, I hope we'll be around for each other, and I think we will. And I hope that every once in a while he'll pick up the phone and call his mother."

But many of the mothers I've talked to want friendship with their sons — as they do with their daughters. These mothers want a relationship of mutual affection and serious commitment.

"I want to keep working on a relationship with him. Just be in touch and be close. I have enough other things in my life that have priority; he's not my whole life. And I would also like him to work hard in the relationship and be available to me too."

Sadly, the typical mother-son relationship is not much like what this mother wants. Many men define "closeness" or "love" with their mothers as a scheduled phone call or visit, and rarely include such things as talking about what mother and son think or feel about specific ideas, questions or problems.

In many cases, mothers have accepted this. Boxed into that tiny corner called a "woman's place," they accept the false comfort of being only MOTHER. Both mothers and sons suffer, in fact. Men who've been served by such constrained women are handicapped in any relationship with a woman; they're likely to have unrealistic expectations and behave inappropriately, both personally and professionally.

The wives and partners of such sons also suffer from this "total motherhood" arrangement. If the emotional pact men make with their mothers is that they will give loyalty and deference in exchange for a constant flow of uncritical affection, praise and support, a spouse or lover who's working on the openness–honesty principle hasn't got much of a chance.

Only a minority of men say that they are willing to work on their relationships with their mothers, adding that this is not simple or easy.

"I finally said to her, 'Look, do you want me to be a middle-aged son who just says, "Yes, Mama" — or do you want a grown-up person you can trust, an intelligent friend in this world? I am willing to be your friend, and I think we can be good friends, but you've got to meet me at that level.' She was really hurt at first, but the relationship has gotten better and better."

For a mutually satisfying relationship to evolve, a man must learn to relate to his mother as he would to a peer. A son should be willing to hear about her problems, listen to her brag, take serious personal advice from her, or give support and praise to her for her struggles and projects. Many good things can come from a mother's friendship with her son's lover, partner or spouse. Mothers can offer greater wisdom and deeper insight where they have knowledge. Sons may benefit from commentary and criticism about themselves as fathers, gaining new perspective on their own childhood in the process. After all, the information their mothers have cannot be found elsewhere.

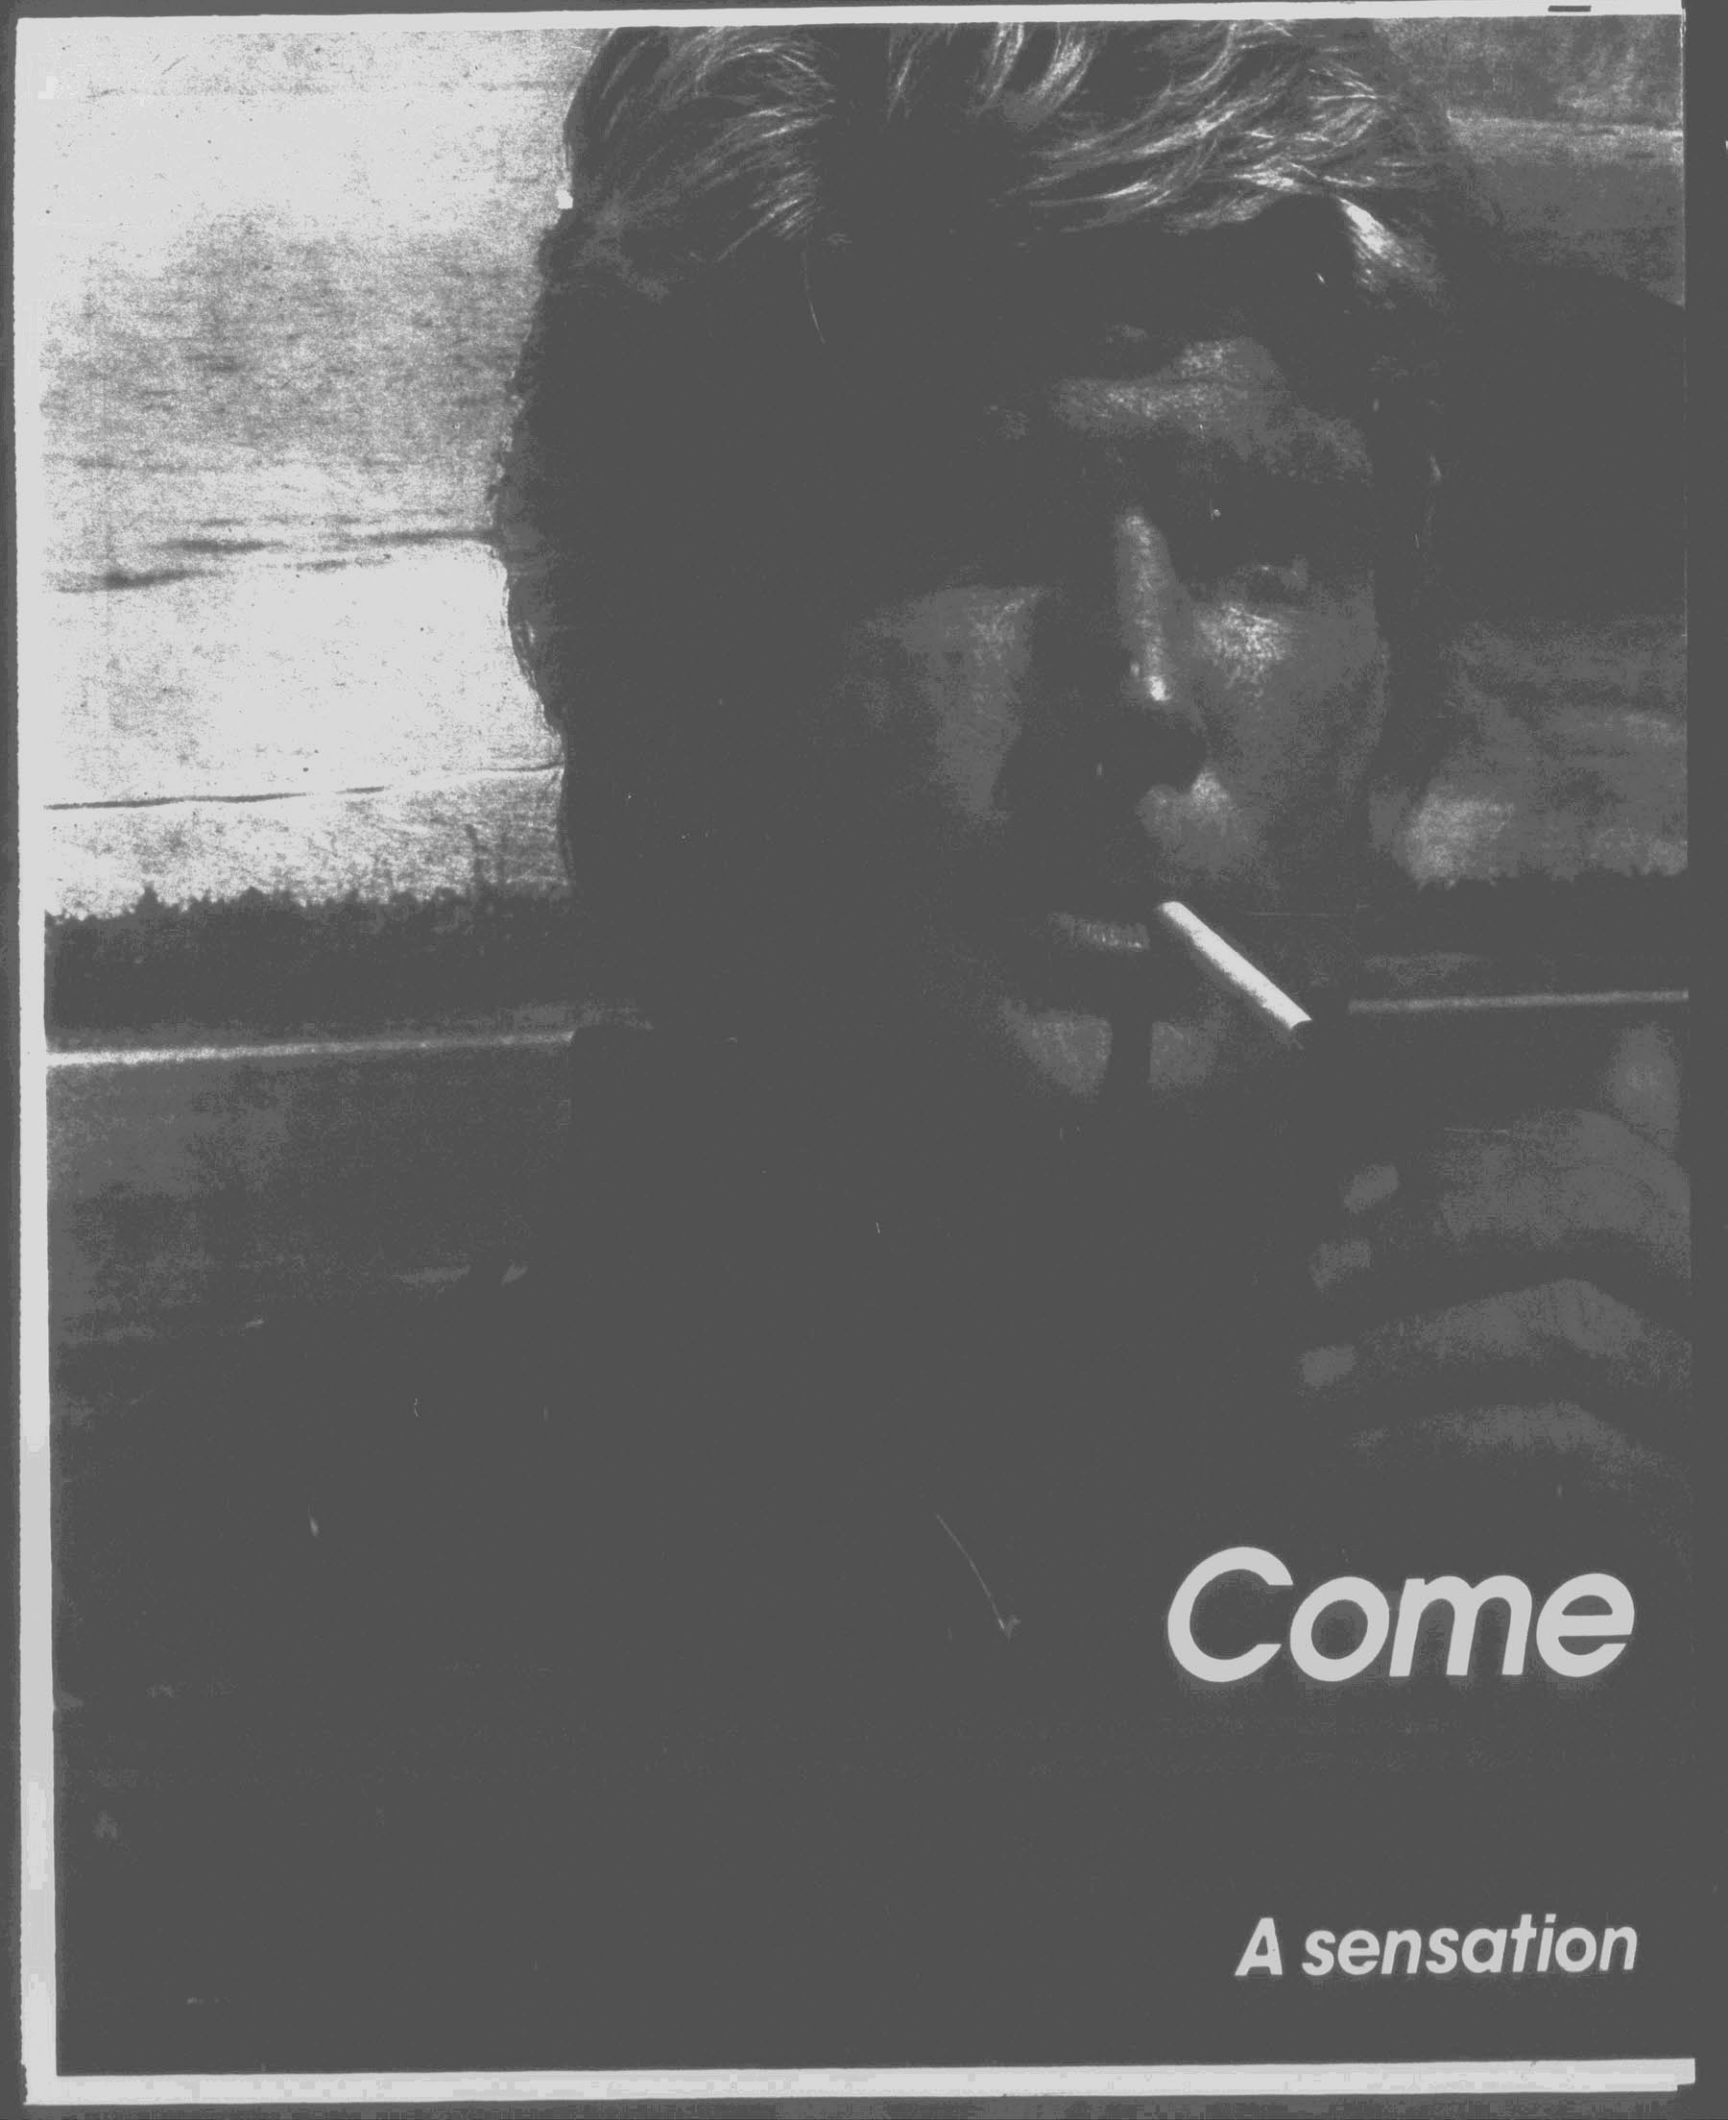

Ray Curletti

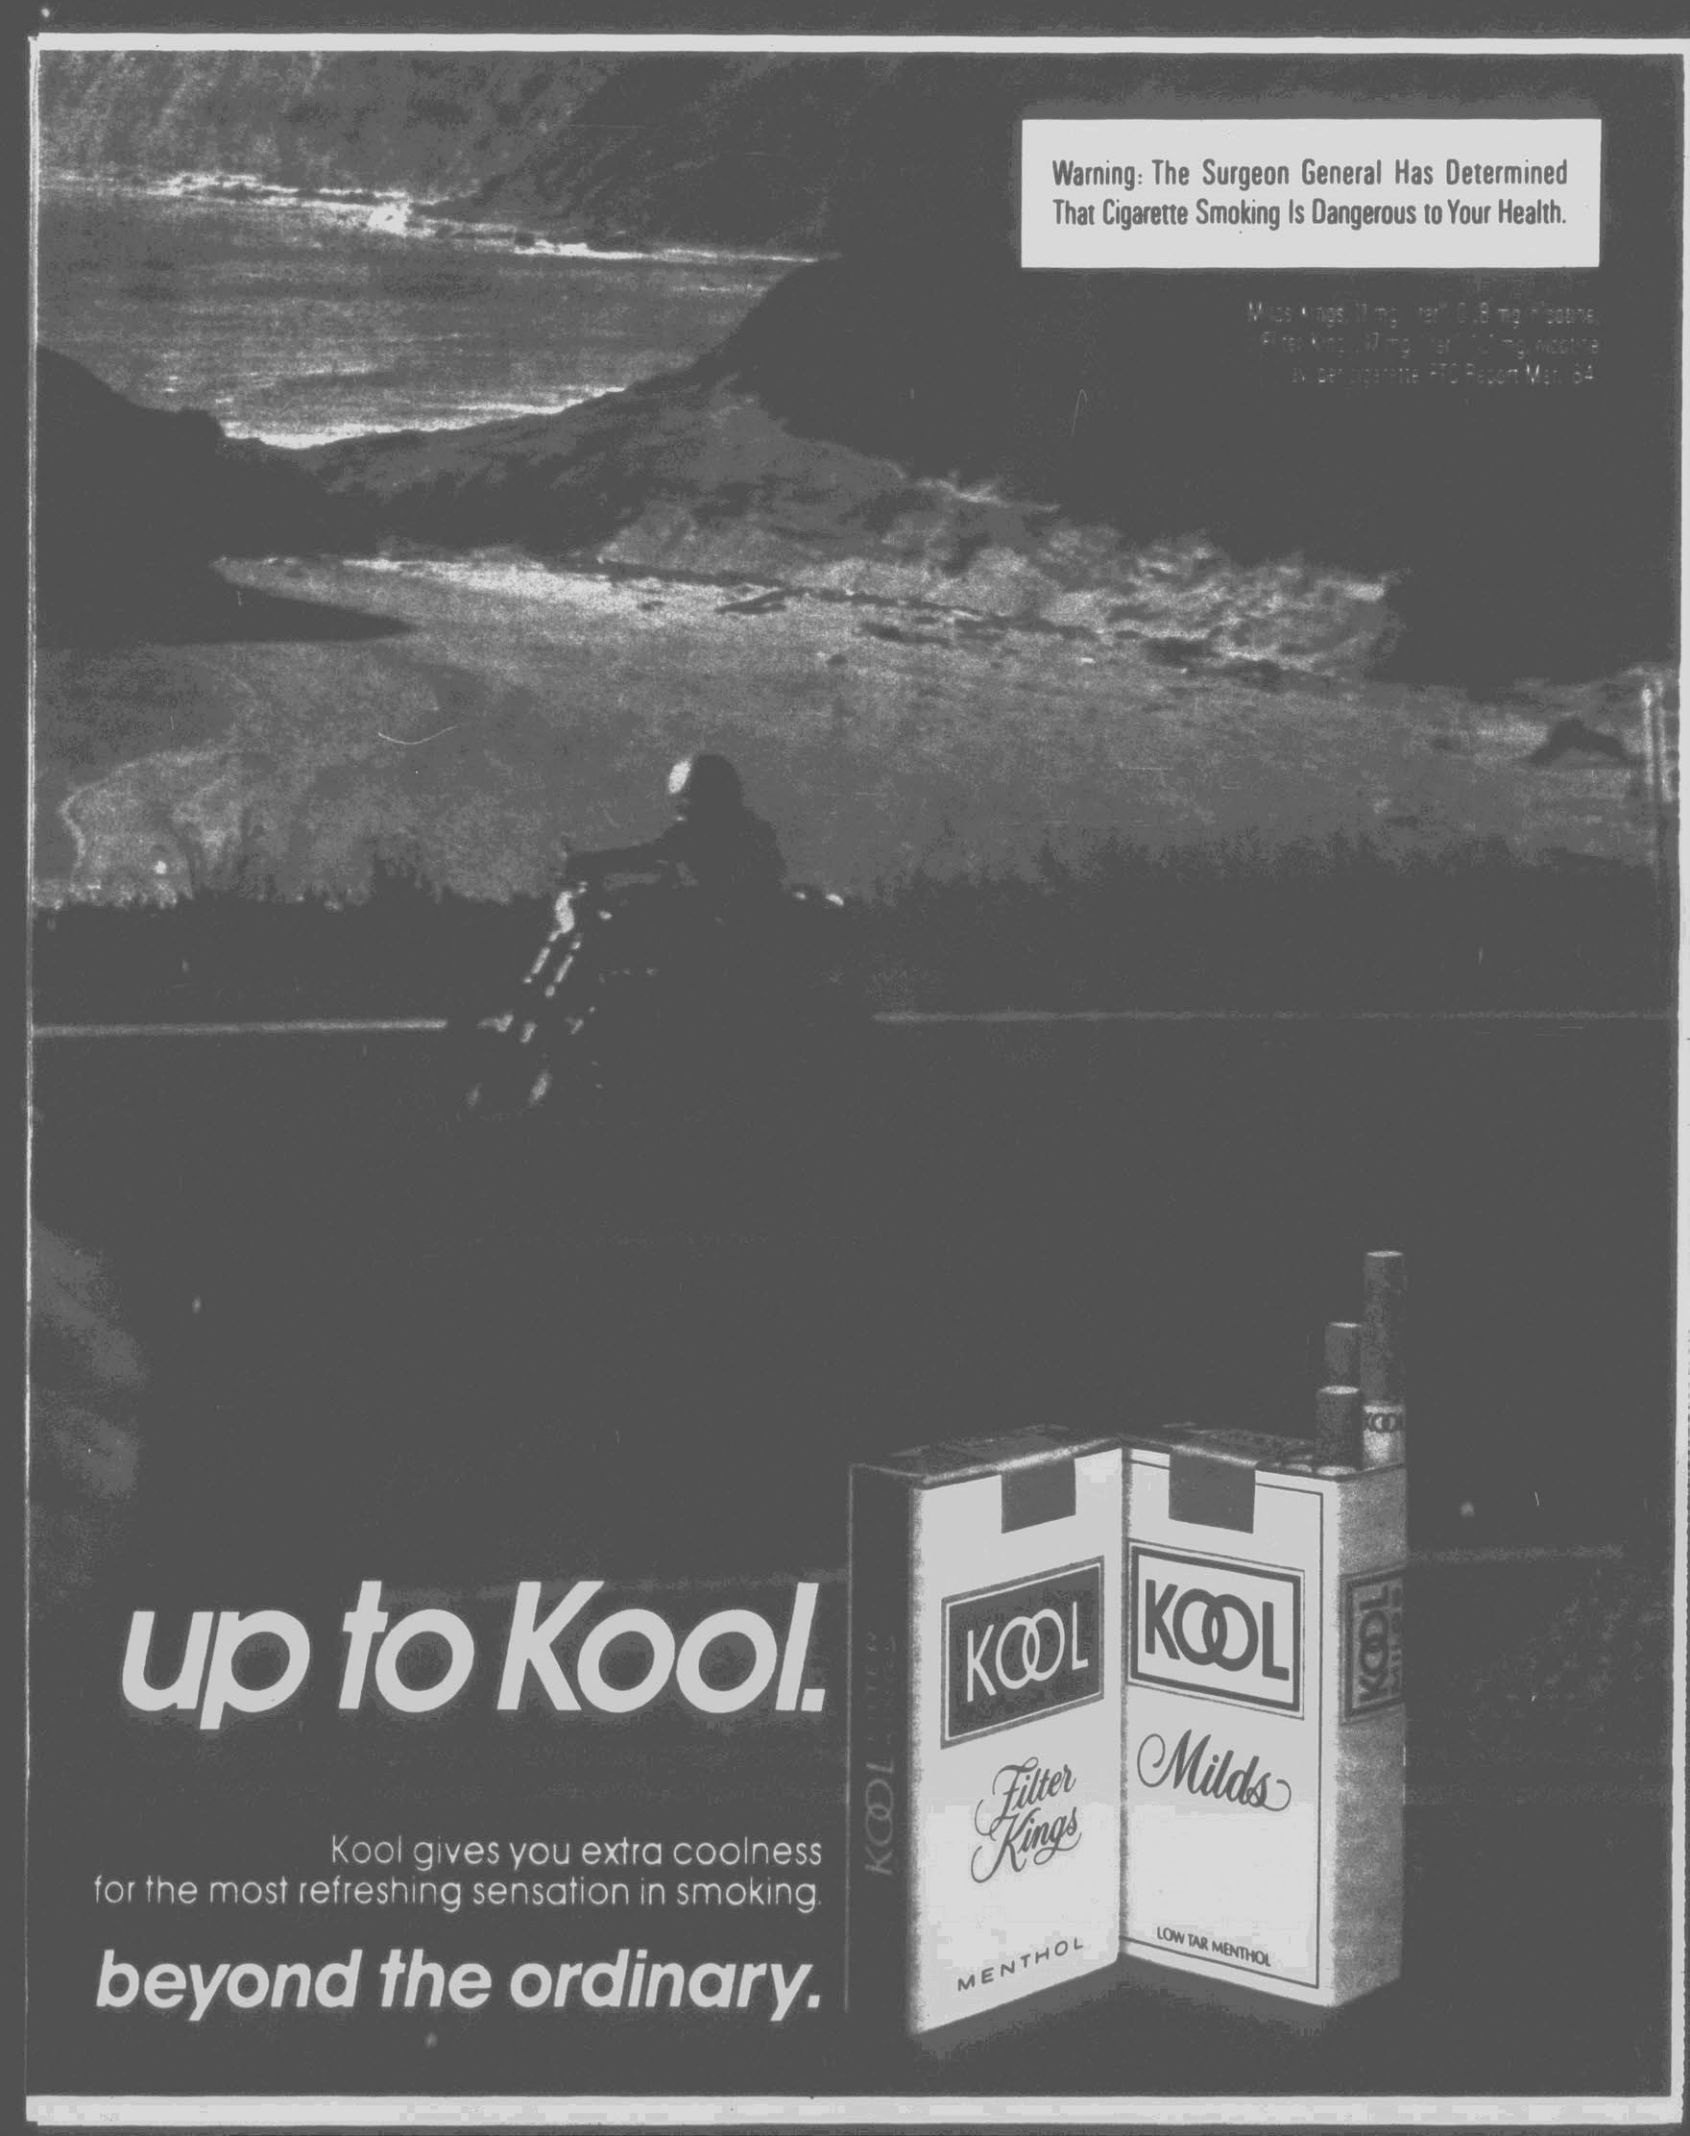

But those men who do try, who choose to break through the old patterns of Mommy and her little boy, who have the courage to challenge the traditional definitions of sons and mothers, may well be rewarded, for there's more to be gained than lost. One of the women I interviewed, asserting that she thought the mother-son relationship is "one of those social arrangements that needs to be re-examined," explained what the ideal might be.

"Mothers and sons should try to learn as much from each other as they can. . . . I know the world is changing all the time, and it's fascinating and important to me. I really want to know about it and empathize with it as much as possible. That's something I expect my son to give me; I want him to share his world view with me. At the same time I would expect that he could learn a lot from me. . . . I think mothers and sons should remain as physically close as feels natural to them. They should further each other's decisions, support each other. It should grow into an older person-younger person friendship, filled with the depth of years of intimate relationship."

My own son said something this woman would probably enjoy, when I asked him what he thought our relationship would be like in 20 years — when he'll be 32 and I'll be 60. He answered, "Well, we might not still live in the same place, so I'd expect to talk to you on the phone. Maybe we could take trips together. And I'd like to go to the movies too. And read, and talk. A lot like what we do now, I guess." FW

PARENTING

WHEN ALCOHOL PROBLEMS GET ALL BOTTLED UP

By Russ Allen

If you're the parent of a teenager, chances are that in the past month, your child has been in at least one situation involving alcohol. How well do we prepare our children for these encounters? For children to make responsible decisions about drinking, they must know the facts about alcohol — what happens when they drink, and why some people choose to drink and others do not. Equipped with this information they will be better able to make responsible decisions about their own drinking. The Gallup Organization has just completed a survey of how families treat the subject of drinking and alcohol, and the results provide some insight into areas where parental attention should be focused.

DO'S AND DON'TS

- Do discuss alcohol use with your children in a relaxed atmosphere.
- Don't wait for a problem situation that makes discussion "unavoidable."
- Don't make your child feel like he or she is "on trial" when you're talking about drinking.
- Do make your own drinking behavior consistent with the advice you give.

While the news media have given adolescent drinking more attention of late, researchers have found no significant change in the drinking habits of youth in our country in the last 20 years. Still, far too many teenagers abuse alcohol: More than three million teenagers were treated for alcohol abuse between 1980 and 1982. The vast majority of teenagers, however, don't develop anything approaching such a severe drinking problem.

According to Dr. Margaret Bean, of Cambridge Hospital, Cambridge, Mass., alcohol abuse among teenagers has now "stabilized at a high level."

In the Gallup project, which was sponsored by the Wine and Spirits Wholesalers of America Inc., well over half of the parents surveyed said that alcohol use by teenagers was a major concern to them. Encouragingly, 90 percent of the parents reported discussing this subject with their children. It was found that parents raised the subject of drinking more often than their teenagers, although these discussions were usually prompted by an incident involving drinking. It is important for parents to initiate a discussion about alcohol when the family is relaxed together rather than to wait for a problem situation to arise.

Family discussions, however, are only part of a child's early education about alcohol. The atmosphere in which a child takes his or her first drink is also important. Most teenagers drink with peers, with no adults present. Some experts believe that those who have first been exposed to alcohol in a relaxed, healthy, family atmosphere are at an advantage. The first drink, they say, should not occur in a "hurry up so we don't get caught" environment.

It was found that drinking and driving is the No. 1 focus of family talks about alcohol. "Without a doubt, drinking and driving is the worst aspect of teenager alcohol use," confirms Dr. Robert Bidler, of the University of Pennsylvania School of Social Work. "Teenagers are inexperienced at both of these activities, which makes for a dangerous combination."

Teenagers respect their parents' opinion on drinking and driving. However, the Gallup poll revealed that teenagers aren't as likely to feel that their home permits discussion of such topics and, as a result, are often dissuaded from bringing them up. That may be an important reason why peers have long been the main influence on a teenager's drinking habits. The survey, interestingly, showed that teenagers consider their parents an important source of such information also and that teenagers, not parents, are most likely to feel that more discussion of drinking is needed in the home.

During the period when children are trying out more adult behaviors and parents are naturally relaxing some controls, it's necessary to discuss drinking. When doing so, parents should remember these general points:

- Teach by example. Your own drinking behavior is one of the most important influences on your child's.
- Do not make your child feel that he is on trial. Encourage an atmosphere in which your teenager feels free to relate his or her experiences and opinions on drinking.
- It is important for non-drinking families to discuss drinking with their children and for all parents to make their children realize that they have a choice.

"Parents must provide a stable environment for their child by balancing praise and love with discipline," says Dr. Grace Barnes, a sociologist and senior scientist at the Research Institute for Alcoholism in Buffalo, N.Y., "and then, at the same time, they must serve as models for their children on behaviors like drinking."

DON SHARP'S MONTHLY CAR CARE COLUMN

DO YOU REALLY NEED THAT HOT, NEW TURBOCHARGER?

Like a fireplace, the more air an engine can get, the more fuel it can burn, and the more heat energy it can produce. Internal combustion engines that have pistons (rather than turbines, as a jet engine does) depend on the pistons to suck air into the cylinders. As the air passes through the carburetor, it picks up fuel and carries it into the cylinders, too. Fuel-injection engines have little "squirt guns" that spray fuel into the airstream or directly into the cylinders.

Tim Grajek

Air flows freely, but it is still subject to the laws of inertia. When the piston sucks in air, the air lags a bit before it gets moving. At higher engine speeds, the air lags so much that the cylinder doesn't get full of air-fuel before the inlet valve closes and shuts off the flow. The engine thus suffers a loss of volumetric efficiency; that is, its efficiency as an air pump declines, and the loss restricts its ability to burn fuel.

Given the constraints on volumetric efficiency, the easiest way to get more air-fuel into an engine is to make its pistons bigger or give it more of them. This approach, institutionalized in the wide selection of V-8 engines of a few years back, has the inescapable consequence of making the engine bigger and heavier.

Large engines give good performance, but they do not, alas, fit into smaller, lighter cars. To make little engines perform like big engines, the manufacturers simply put a bellows on them.

The bellows is a turbocharger, a device long used on aircraft and diesel engines. In a turbocharger, hot exhaust gases pass through a turbine and cause it to turn. This impeller turbine turns a shaft that has a compressor turbine at the other end, and the compressor force-feeds the engine with air. More air means more fuel, which in turn means more power — but without making the whole engine package significantly bigger.

This solution is not as simple as it seems, nor is it cheap. At retail, the turbocharger and the devices that regulate it add around $3,000 to the price of a four-cylinder car. By contrast, an optional V-8 engine would cost only $300 or so.

In automotive applications, the turbocharger logic has a serious flaw. As long as volumetric efficiency is high, a waste gate diverts the exhaust gases around the turbocharger and it does nothing. It only becomes active during extremely hard acceleration or when speed exceeds 50 mph or so. Even at 55 mph, the turbocharger hardly justifies its cost.

Once speed rises enough to compromise volumetric efficiency, the turbocharger really gets to work, and works very well indeed — unless, as often happens, the waste gate has stuck during all that city driving.

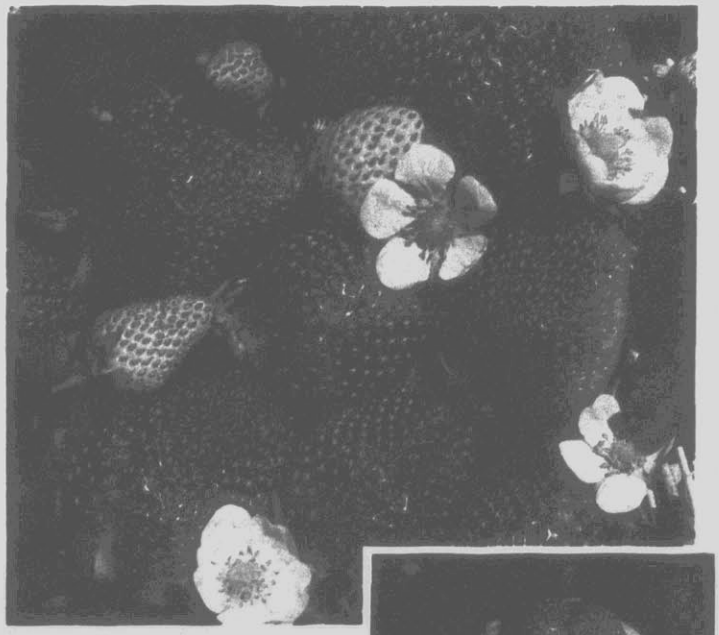

A turbocharger may also become active at high altitudes. However, all systems do not respond equally well, so the details of a particular system deserve close study.

Turbochargers also have a congenital weakness in that they continue spinning — "coasting," so to speak — for a while after the engine is shut off. Since shutting off the engine also shuts off the oil supply, the turbocharger bearings often seize up from lack of lubrication. More recent systems have an auxiliary oiler to avoid this problem, but the very existence of the oiler is a reminder of the system's vulnerability. The failure of the oiler could lead to a repair bill of over $1,000.

Turbochargers make more sense on diesels, which are notoriously sluggish in naturally aspirated (non-turbocharged) form, and they make even more sense in trucks that work hard all the time. In cars, they are an expensive way to gain a characteristic that rarely applies where 55 mph is the speed limit. FW

GETTING PERSONAL WITH

JACK LEMMON

THE POPULAR ACTOR ISN'T RESTING ON HIS MASS APPEAL

Over three decades, Jack Lemmon, 59, has established himself as one of America's most respected and versatile actors, his range extending from comedy to drama. All told, he has starred *in almost 40 films. He was the first actor to win Oscars both for Best Supporting Actor (*Mr. Roberts, *1956) and Best Actor (*Save the Tiger, 1973). This month's release of Mass Appeal marks Lemmon's first screen appearance in three years, after his acclaimed performance in Missing. Recently, he sat down with FAMILY WEEKLY Executive Editor John Tarkov and talked about his career.

Tarkov: Jack, what attracted you to Mass Appeal?
Lemmon: I had heard it was a good, literate play. Beyond that, I loved the character [of Father Tim Farley]. And it was a good, strong story that had humor in it. I immediately saw the problem with the religious background. You get a religious background in the theme, and you're really bucking the odds. I knew what was going to happen when it was submitted to the major studios. But the same thing happened with about five different films I've done. Every one of them, I treasure being part of. Missing, China Syndrome, Save the Tiger, Days of Wine and Roses, all of those films nobody wanted to do. My fear is I'm not going to be right always, and I hope this isn't the time. But when it's turned down by every major studio, I know I'm right. I've got to stick with it.

Q: What's it like between parts?
Lemmon: It drives you crazy, the long waits. And they get longer now because I really don't want to do anything that I don't want to do. I will never work for the sake of working. But I don't ever want to stop working till I'm run over by a truck or a critic.

Q: How do you pass the time in between?
Lemmon: I love to travel, and I can spend more time with my son and my daughter and my wife, Felicia, and I can go to more plays. When I was younger I'd say, "Yeah, that'll be terrific, but I've got a lot of time for that. I want to work." Now I can enjoy it more. With my daughter, Courtney, it's always been the traveling. My son, Chris, too. With Chris, also, there is a ritual we have. He's 30, and we started when he was 12, going deep into Alaska for a couple of weeks every year fishing together. There's something different about a father and son being alone somewhere. There is a deepness in that relationship that is not going to occur at home. I was very lucky. I always worried because Chris was a child of divorce. I don't know whether starting to do it was a coincidence or the higher power was saying, "I think you could lose this." Doing it has been a terrific thing. I would be tempted to blow a film if it meant that we were going to miss it entirely.

Q: Your son is an actor. Would you like to work together?
Lemmon: Now that would be terrific. One film came up recently. I was awfully tempted, but I realized that was the main reason, to work with Chris. But we will, sooner or later. We'll find the right one. It's fun. It makes me relive points I was at. Things he's getting excited about — where if you got a reading it was a tremendous thing. You're calling 15 people and saying, "I got a reading on this, and I got an appointment to see such and such. They called me." It's fun sort of going through it again.

Q: You're an environmentalist. Any projects in that area?
Lemmon: There's one thing I'm getting interested in. There's a former governor of Oregon who kept going when he was dying, plugging away on environmental issues. He was just about untouched by the political system, never bending or compromising. There's a film in that guy where I could entertain and get people thinking. He was absolutely uninvolved and not self-serving at all about impending death. A fascinating man.

Q: Where does it pay off? When do you feel good about your work?
Lemmon: The thing that I have gotten the most boot out of over the years is just somebody stopping you and saying, "I'm sorry, I don't really mean to bother you, I don't want your autograph. I just want to thank you for the pleasure that you've given me." And I tell you, I damn near cry every time. That's what it's all about. My old man, one of the last things he ever said to me — and he said things that I really treasure — he was ill for a long time before he died. One of the last things he said, one time when he could speak, I was leaving and he said, "Jack," and I turned and he said, "Spread a little sunshine." It was such a great remark, as simple as it sounds. Aw, come off it. It isn't simple. It's very important. That's the greatest joy of it all, when someone says, "Thank you." It's tremendously gratifying, more than anything. It ultimately is the reason you should be acting. FW

WHIZ QUIZ

IS YOUR LIFESTYLE GOOD FOR YOU?

By John E. Gibson

TRUE OR FALSE?

1. Your lifestyle determines to a large extent how long you will live and how much you will enjoy living.

2. "Morning" and "evening" people have different personality characteristics, different lifestyles and a different outlook on life.

3. The extent to which you believe in luck reveals a great deal about your lifestyle and personality.

ANSWERS

1. True. Researchers at the University of Michigan concluded from their studies that people can improve their health simply by improving their lifestyle. In turn, when a person feels healthier, he will perform his job better, achieve his goals sooner, and feel better about himself. Healthy individuals are also more likely to avoid bad habits — such as driving without wearing a seatbelt — and unnecessary risks. As a result, they may add several years to their lives.

2. False. Specialists from New York University, Pitzer College, and the University of Michigan had 260 undergraduate psychology students classify themselves as either "morning people" (those who function best in the morning hours) or "evening people" (those who function best in the late afternoon, evening, or wee hours of the night), and then had them fill out a personality questionnaire in an effort to test the common belief that the two types had different personality traits. Their findings: While all agreed that "morning" and "evening" people showed some personality differences, the self-perceptions of the "morning" and "evening" people did not differ, casting doubt on the validity of the popular stereotype of the two groups.

3. True. University of Colorado investigators conducted a study of two personality types: (1) those who believe their rewards are largely dependent upon their own actions (psychologists term them "internally oriented") and (2) those who believe their rewards are largely due to luck, chance, fate or the power of others (termed "externally oriented"). They found that those who relied on luck or chance rather than their own efforts were less highly regarded by others, possessed less self-confidence, and had lower levels of self-esteem than "internally oriented" people. Another study revealed that "internally oriented" individuals were better adjusted socially, cooperated more easily, had greater persuasive abilities, and were more responsible and independent in the activities they performed. BIRTHDAY CLAUS

Remember how you used to envy the kid whose birthday fell on December 25? Twice as many presents means twice as happy, right?

Wrong. Dr. Gregory W. Brock, director of the Marriage and Family Therapy Program at United States International University in San Diego, figured that since his wife was expecting in late December, he would study people's attitudes toward their holiday birthdays. "We both knew people with holiday season birthdays," he said, "and they had always complained about [the situation]. We wanted to find out what it would be like for our child."

Of the 200 undergraduates surveyed, more than 80 percent of those whose birthdays fell within three weeks of Christmas were unhappy with the timing of their nativity. Students offered these suggestions on how to minimize the problem: 1) Make sure there is a separate birthday celebration for the child. 2) Give separate Christmas and birthday gifts. 3) Be sure to have a non-Christmas theme for the birthday party. That's the best way to be a Santa Claus on your child's birthday.

FROM PENNSYLVANIA

THE TREES OF CHRISTMAS FUTURE

Here it comes: the guaranteed "perfect Christmas tree." Scientists at Pennsylvania State University are nurturing prize seedlings they have named "Pennspanish," a mixture of the finest scotch pines and seeds from central Spain.

Dr. Henry Gerhold, the forest geneticist in charge, says the tree is "darker, more bluish green, forms more branches, and has a better shape."

The tree, however, will not be available to consumers until at least 1992. If you just can't wait, think of the anticipation the scientists must feel; visions of plumb-line Christmas trees have been dancing in their heads since 1954, when they began working on the project.

But Gerhold assures us the trees will be worth the wait because they cost less to grow. Well, if they'll help fell the high price of Christmas trees a bit, Dr. Gerhold, good "fir" you!

PASS YE THE ROASTED BOAR APPETIZER

There's nothing like an afternoon of jousting on the greensward to pique one's appetite. On September 23, 1387, for example, King Richard II gave a feast that featured "14 oxen lying in salte, 120 hedes of shepe fressh, 140 piggies, 11 thousand egges . . ." and undoubtedly several industrial-strength casks of Alka-Seltzer.

If this sounds like your kind of feed, you'll want to pick up Lorna J. Sass' To the King's Taste (St. Martin's Press), which contains recipes Sass has adapted from King Richard's chef's own "Cookery Booke." She stumbled upon the ancient tome while working in the Columbia University library.

It turns out that 90 percent of the ingredients called for are readily available. And the recipes really work. They were all tested in the "closet-sized kitchen" of Sass' studio apartment.

This cookbook is the perfect answer for the next time you want a meal fit for a king with leftovers for a couple of knights.

RESUME ENCLOSED, VIAL OF BLOOD UPON REQUEST

In Japan, reports Psychology Today, some people rely on blood-type evaluation for insight into behavioral traits the way a lot of us in the West rely on astrology.

Toshitaka Nomi, who has written more than 25 books on the subject, claims that people with blood type A are perfectionists and susceptible to stress. People with type B blood are independent and often creative. AB types are objective and tend to be mediators. And type O's are cautious and discriminating.

But do the Japanese really take all this to heart? Apparently. Some businessmen have begun to use blood-typing as a guide in hiring and handling employees. A Tokyo restaurant manager believes business has improved since he stopped scolding Type A workers. "Before, things didn't go well," he says. "Since I've begun dealing with workers according to their blood type, things are going great." Now there's a sanguine attitude for you!

BEDSIDE READING

What are people reading before they retire for the night? Here are two reports:

Vidal Sassoon:

"The book I've read most recently that made a great impression on me was Gore Vidal's Lincoln. For one whole week, I became so submerged in this book that I did not talk to anyone until someone called me 'Abe.' "

Margaret Potter, stylist and owner of Romeo's Landing, Asbury Park, N.J.

"I'm not a great reader, because of an eye problem, but A Woman of Substance by Barbara Taylor Bradford was such an excellent book that I made it through the 650 pages in no time. I identified with the heroine; she's a young servant girl determined to make something of her life, and she becomes a grand success. She stuck to her guns, worked very hard, did all the things that were necessary to reach her goals, and she made it."

● KNOT SO! A baffling trick is performed with a piece of string about two feet long. Hold the ends between thumb and forefinger, swing the string into a loop on the table, as shown in figure 1 above. Now, invite someone to place a finger in the opening indicated by the star. Alakazam — pull both ends and the finger is free.

Now, turn your hand and swing the loop as shown in figure 2. This time when you pull the ends the finger will be caught up in the stirring. • • •

● HAIR THIS! If Santy's beard grows 4/3rds of an inch in 3 months, how many months will it take to grow 4 inches?

It will take 12 months.

● MEN OF LETTERS! Each of the animated letters above is shown in a pose denoting an individual descriptive word. A's word is synonymous with entertaining, N's word with bewitching, D's word with giving pleasure. What are the words?

P.S. All three words end in "ing."

The three words are amusing, enchanting, and delighting.

WHAT HO! What can you draw to complete the scene above? To find out, insert missing lines from dot to dot.

PIPE THAT! Simply apply colored pencils or crayons neatly to the winter scene above: 1—Red. 2—Lt. purple. 3—Yellow. 4—Lt. brown. 5—Flesh tones. 6—Lt. green. 7—Dk. brown. 8—Orange.

THEN score 2 points each for all words of four letters or more found among the letters.

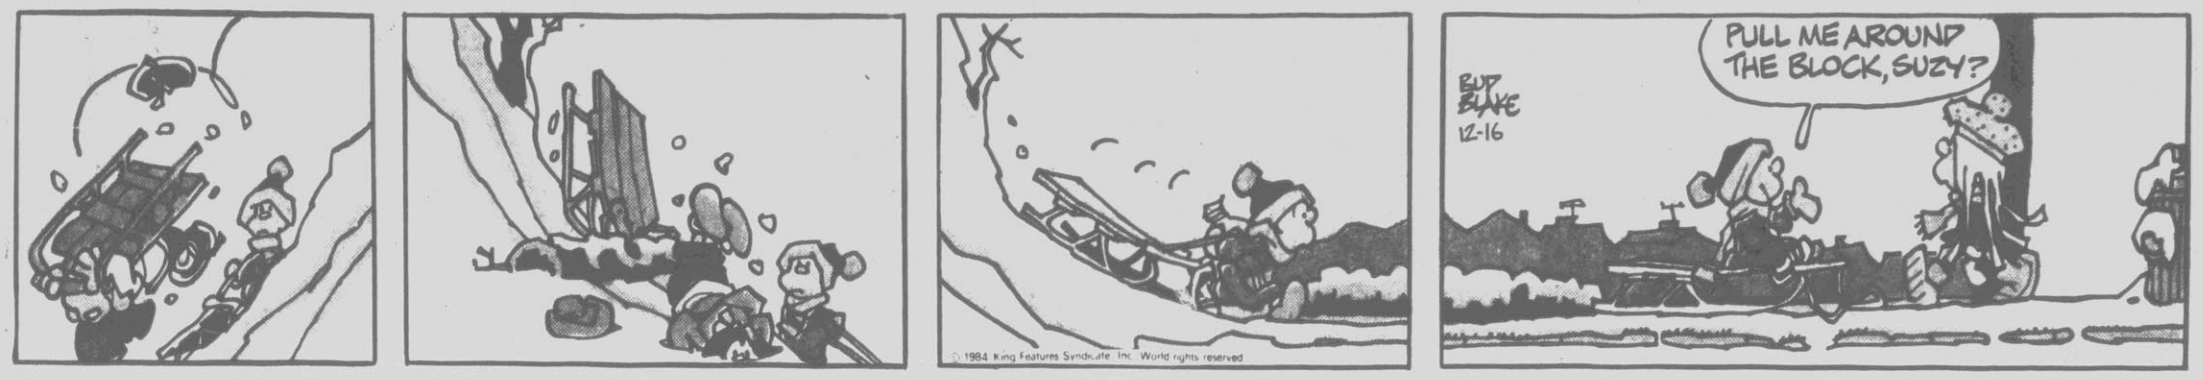

Try to score at least 50 points.

CREATED BY HAL FOSTER

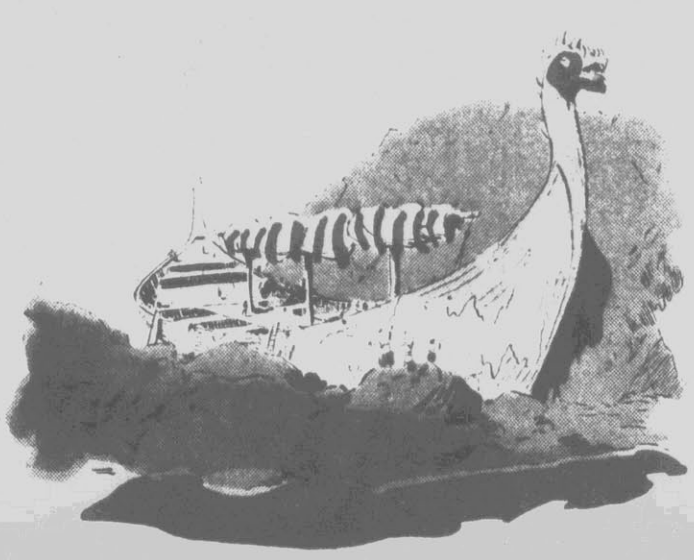

Our Story: IN THE MEAD-HALL AT VIKINGSHOLM, BOLTAR TAUNTS THE KNIGHTS OF THE ROUND TABLE, EMBOLDENED BY EACH NEW QUAFF. "YOU PRISSY KNIGHTS," HE CHALLENGES, "WHICH OF YOU HAS BEEN SO CLEVER AS THE GREAT VIKING CAPTAIN I SING OF NOW?

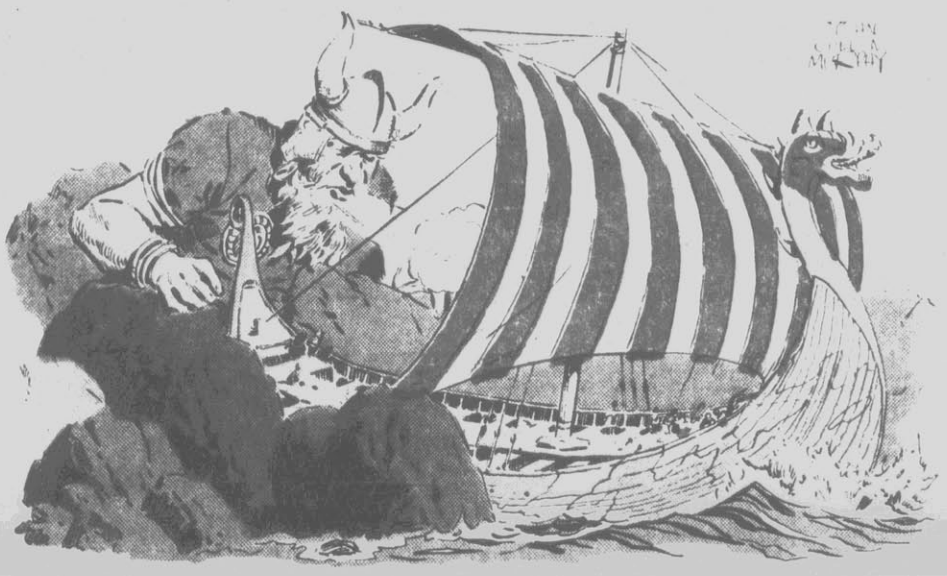

"SO BIG WAS HIS SHIP THAT ONLY GODS COULD PULL IT OUT TO SEA. SO BIG IT WAS THAT ONLY THE GODS COULD BLOW IT FROM PORT.

"WHY," SAYS BOLTAR, "IT WAS SO BIG THAT IT NEEDED THE WHOLE UNKNOWN SEA TO TURN AROUND IN. BUT ONCE, ODIN GOT SOME PEPPER UP HIS NOSE. HE SNEEZED AND BLEW THE SHIP INTO THE NORTH SEA. IT GOT STUCK BETWEEN BRITAIN AND GAUL.

"WHAT WAS TO BE DONE? THE CLEVER VIKING CAPTAIN ORDERED SOAP BROUGHT FROM BELOW. THE VIKING SAILORS SOAPED THE SIDES OF THE SHIP. AND WHEN THE HULL WAS GOOD AND SLICK, THE MEN LASHED THEMSELVES TO THEIR PLACES, FOR SNEEZES ALWAYS COME IN TWOS.

"SURE ENOUGH, ODIN SNEEZED AGAIN, AND JUST BARELY THE SHIP SQUEEZED THROUGH. BUT THE SOAP RUBBED OFF, AND THAT IS WHY THE CLIFFS OF DOVER ARE WHITE. THE CAPTAIN," BOLTAR CONCLUDES, "WAS ME. THIS PROVES I AM MORE CLEVER BY FAR THAN ANY OF YOU KNIGHTS WHO LET WOMEN CURL YOUR HAIR."

"AND THAT," PRINCE VALIANT CHIMES IN, "WAS THE ONLY TIME BOLTAR EVER USED SOAP. NOW LISTEN, VIKINGS, LISTEN TO MY TALE."
