ECU Matches Doctors, Areas Of Need

A four-month-old program at East Carolina University's School of Medicine is matching young doctors with vacancies in existing medical practices, allowing the young physician to use his talents in a practice he enjoys and providing health care where it is needed.

The ECU Center for Health Services Research and Development initiated its Practice Opportunities Program — called POP for short — last fall.

Center Director Walter L. Shepherd says POP offers two key advantages: It helps the school accomplish one of its founding missions of providing physicians for the state; and, because only ECU alumni are involved, it allows the school to exercise some degree of "quality control" in linking well-trained applicants with practice opportunities.

POP began in mid-October when Shepherd first contacted eastern North Carolina physicians and hospitals about possible openings. After notifying all school of medicine alumni of the new program, a third mailing expanded POP to include hospitals throughout the state.

Shepherd said he was shocked by the magnitude of the response. By early December the center had listed over 160 openings for physicians needed either immediately or in the near future. Every specialty was represented in the listing — with family medicine accounting for about one-fourth — and the openings ranged across North Carolina in rough proportion to the state's population. Over the same period, the center received enquiries about POP from 30 alumni.

Shepherd said the response seems to confirm that the physician shortage in many areas of North Carolina is real. "I think this is a clear indication that what we perceive to be an undersupply of physicians is actually a problem," he said.

POP works to fill that physician void in a fairly straightforward way. If a physician has an opening for a partner, or a hospital administrator knows of an opening on a medical staff or in the community, they are asked to contact the center. Shepherd and his assistant, Karen Vail-Smith, then follow up with a telephone call to the source, seeking specific information about the opportunity. Among the questions asked are the location and date of availability of the opening, the specialty sought, the characteristics of the practice and the financial incentives accompanying the position.

For each of the alumni interested in the program, the center develops an individual participant profile, including such information as the specialty, date of availability, type of practice desired and general location preferred.

Shepherd then uses a microcomputer to cross-match alumni with appropriate openings. When a candidate matches, he or she is sent one-page summaries with basic information about any practice opportunities with which they appear to be compatible. This information is usually returned to the candidate within a few days.

If the candidate shows interest in a particular position, the center may send additional data about the community in question — information about population, airports, taxes, hospitals, schools and the like. It is always left up to the candidate to

Heart On Sleeve Gets Point Across

Pam Burkhart wears her heart on her sleeve when she goes to work in local schools.

Dressed in a white turtleneck and sweatpants on which she has drawn the human circulatory system in red and blue, Mrs. Burkhart, a Heart Association volunteer, visits classrooms throughout Pitt County. She discusses the heart and what children should do to remain "hearty": watch what you eat, don't overeat, exercise and don't smoke.

"The children are interested in my outfit," she said before a recent presentation to a fourth grade classroom at G.R. Whitfield School in Winterville. "It gets their attention."

Mrs. Burkhart, vice president of the Pitt County chapter of the American Heart Association, heard that a volunteer in Greensboro gives a similar presentation. "I have never seen her presentation," Mrs. Burkhart said, "but she sent me a photograph of her outfit to guide me in making mine."

Mrs. Burkhart uses no script in her 45-minute talk, because she has discovered that the children are inquisitive and ask questions. "I prepared a script and I follow guidelines, but some classes know more about the heart than others. I change my talk according to the age of the children in the class and how much they have studied about the heart," she said. "I discuss the difference between the (human) heart and a valentine when I talk to a class of 3 year olds, and I talk about the circulatory system in detail with sixth-graders. And the children ask questions, and I answer them."

In her presentation, Mrs. Burkhart uses her outfit and a model heart to explain how the heart works. She discusses the proper foods children should eat, aided by props provided by local businesses. She shows the students how to take their pulse, and discusses exercises with them.

She also shows a cartoon film, "The Tin Woodman in Search of a Heart," provided by the American Heart Association.

Mrs. Burkhart will end her presentations in February, but next year plans to continue throughout the entire school-year. Any classes interested in Mrs. Burkhart's talk should contact the Heart Association to set up a presentation.

Blount-Harvey

Blount-Harvey Co. officials have announced plans to close the company's department store on Evans Mall.

Mrs. Nelson Blount Crisp, a Blount-Harvey Co. vice president, said in an interview "our plan is to leave the downtown area" because "the economics are just not strong enough to keep us here."

"We're definitely closing this store," Mrs. Crisp said, and "plan to begin a sale very shortly. We'll close sometime in late spring."

But Mrs. Crisp said Blount-Harvey plans to keep the store at Carolina East Mall operating, although she acknowledged that "we want to hold that question open," and said that "there will be a sale there" also.

Blount-Harvey Co. has occupied the same building, at the intersection of Evans Mall and Fourth Street, since 1921. The firm was founded 65 years ago by M.O. Blount (Mrs. Crisp's grandfather), C.F. Harvey of Kinston, and E.B. Ficklen, J.H. Blount, R. R. Cotten, E.G. Flanagan, J.E. Winslow and W.H. Dale Jr., all of Greenville.

Blount-Harvey has been solely owned by the Blount family for the past 50 years.

Present officers of the company include: Mrs. M.K. (Florence) Blount, president; Mrs. Crisp as vice president; W.G. "Bill" Blount, vice president, and Marvin K. Blount Jr., secretary.

Mrs. Blount, who said Friday that the decision to close the downtown store was made "10 days ago," said Blount-Harvey Co. was started because the founders "felt Greenville and Pitt County needed a department store." She said that when the store opened, it sold farm equipment, groceries and other items, as well as clothing.

Mrs. Blount said "many of our very loyal employees are remaining with us until the sale is completed," and expressed appreciation to them and to Blount-Harvey customers.

Both Mrs. Blount and Mrs. Crisp said there have been no plans made for the land and building.

About 15 of the company's 35 employees work in the downtown store.

Reading Tests Prove Baffling

By MARY C. SCHULKEN

Johnny reads well, he spells well and he writes well. He makes A's in language arts and his teachers say he has a way with words and is creative.

When he was in ninth grade, he took North Carolina's basic skills writing test — part of the state's required annual testing program — and scored higher than most other students. You, his parents, were pleased. Your son can communicate; he has a skill, maybe even a gift.

This year, as a 10th-grader, he took North Carolina's writing competency field test and failed miserably. You, as parents, want to know why and how this is possible when Johnny has been writing so well.

This hypothetical situation may not be so unlikely when the results of the first-ever statewide writing competency field test surface this spring, according to Pitt County school officials. Because of deviations in the testing requirements and scoring, it is possible, officials say, for a student who excels in writing — even a gifted student — to fail the writing competency field test.

"North Carolina has two testing commissions and two types of testing — annual and competency," according to Tina Drye, language arts coordinator for grades 4-12 at Pitt schools. "In the annual testing program, a student's skills in each academic area are tested each year to determine progress. The competency testing is to insure that a student has reached a minimum level of performance."

The writing competency field test — purely an experimental exam at this point — was given to 10th-graders in North Carolina for the first time in December 1984. School officials stress that it is a field test designed to determine the "reliability of the test and prompts and the validity of the scoring system," Ms. Drye said. A prompt, she explained, is a statement a student is required to prove or disprove through persuasive writing.

Tar River Group Seeking New Zoning Designation

By SUE HINSON
Reflector Staff Writer

Members of one of eastern North Carolina's largest neighborhood associations are hoping elected city officials have their hearts in the right place Valentine's Day when they address an association proposal to rezone a portion of the Tar River neighborhood.

The Tar River Neighborhood Association, which boasts a membership of 200, has requested that the City Council rezone a 93.6-acre section of the community located between the Tar River and Fifth Street to R-6N — a designation that would limit duplex, multifamily and rooming-boarding house composition of the neighborhood to 14 percent. The council will consider the city-sponsored TRNA proposal Feb. 14 during its regular monthly session.

The object of revitalization efforts for some time, the Tar River neighborhood is now composed to a large extent of privately owned and occupied single-family homes with an average price range of $30,000 to $60,000. But in 1980, when TRNA was just forming, rental properties accounted for over half of neighborhood composition, association president Inez Fridley said. "It's routine now for a house in our area to sell in the $50,000 to $60,000 range. That kind of price was unheard of, in fact it would have been a joke, when we first began the neighborhood association," she said. Approximately 69 percent of single-family homes in the area are now owner-occupied.

"About the time we organized," Ms. Fridley continued, "the neighborhood was really on the

Rose Tells Farmers To Plant

By ERICA JOHNSTON
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — North Carolina tobacco farmers should be getting ready to plant next year's crop despite concerns for the leaf's future brought on by proposals to phase out tobacco allotments, U.S. Rep. Charlie Rose said.

"What I think should be happening now is, you ought to assume you'll be growing tobacco in 1985," Rose reassured about 300 tobacco growers at the Southern Farm Show in Raleigh. "Get those (plant) beds ready and figure out what you're going to grow."

Rose advised the farmers to work with tobacco companies to defeat the proposals to phase out tobacco allotments that were suggested by U.S. Agriculture Secretary John Block.

"I think we're going to be all right," Rose told the farmers. "We can't live with any one of these proposals (by the Reagan administration) ... and I don't think anyone will have to."

Rose said proposals made earlier last week by the R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. to sharply cut tobacco price supports in exchange for a five-year manufacturers' buyout of more than 800 million pounds of flue-cured tobacco surpluses "show us that these people are serious about dealing with problems we must address."

"I have confidence that (the North Carolina Flue-Cured) Stabilization (Corp.) and these companies will negotiate as best they can in the next week and come up with a proposal," Rose said. "In a small family like the tobacco family, we can't afford much bickering amongst ourselves."

East Has Surgery

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. John P. East, R-N.C., has undergone surgery to remove a benign obstruction in his urinary tract, according to the senator's office.

"Everything went well," said Jerry Woodruff, East's press secretary.

Friday's operation was described in a statement as "common surgery" by Dr. Kevin O'Connell, the chief of urology at Bethesda Naval Hospital outside Washington.

East, 53, was admitted to the hospital Wednesday night on an emergency basis after complaining of discomfort.

Woodruff said the operation was "to remove a benign obstruction in the urinary tract." He said the operation will have "no effect" on East's plans to seek re-election in 1986.

East will likely be in the hospital for several days and then spend a week or two recuperating at home, Woodruff said.

Ethiopia Blocks Red Cross Efforts To Take Food Into Rebel-Held Area

ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia (AP) — Ethiopia's Marxist government has refused to let the Red Cross take famine relief into rebel-held areas, saying it would organize armed convoys to get supplies into those zones, Western aid officials said Saturday.

They said Kurt Jansson, a U.N. assistant secretary-general, asked Mengistu Haile Mariam, Ethiopia's head of state, to let the International Committee of the Red Cross take food to guerrilla-controlled areas of Tigre and Eritrea provinces.

Jansson's request followed protests from Western donors that the government was blocking food shipments to an estimated 2.3 million people in famine-hit areas outside its control, said the officials, who spoke on condition they not be identified.

They said Mengistu turned down the request, but told Jansson his government would step up armed relief convoys to Ethiopia's northern regions, where his and previous governments have been battling Eritrean secessionists since 1962 and Tigreans demanding autonomy since the late 1970s.

Jansson confirmed that Mengistu made the assurances at their meeting Wednesday.

"I suggested a formula, but was assured by the chairman that the government can reach all people in need in any part of the country," Jansson said. "He (Mengistu) said he would increase food convoys, with security escorts, into these areas."

Jansson, a Finn appointed to head U.N. emergency operations in Ethiopia, declined further comment.

Some relief officials interviewed Saturday remained skeptical about the effectiveness of relief convoys protected by the military.

"Who would the food be reaching?" one official asked. "They can only leave it at government-controlled centers, hoping people will come there to collect it. But this would not get food to the people in ... (rebel-held) areas."

On Saturday, Mengistu accused Ethiopia's "class enemies" of exploiting the famine to hinder the nation's socialism.

Zoning ...

skids. Fifty percent or more of the houses in the area were being rented out. So rather than let the standard of living fall any further, a few of us got together and decided to do something about it.

The first TRNA meeting, held "in a living room over a pot of coffee" in 1980, was attended by 10 people who "thought theirs was a quaint, charming neighborhood worth saving," Ms. Fridley said. "After that first meeting, we sent out letters asking if others were interested in a neighborhood association. Within a two-month period, membership escalated to 75."

"Today," she added, "approximately 200 families belong to TRNA making it one of the largest neighborhood associations (in North Carolina). Most associations usually top out at 100."

Since its inception, TRNA has made a number of requests that resulted in stiffening of city policy regarding the number of non-related people allowed to live in the same household, permit parking on residential streets and neighborhood noise controls.

TRNA's newest proposal to rezone from R-6 (a designation allowing location of single family, duplex, multifamily, and boarding-rooming house structures in residential areas) to R-6N is being sponsored by the city. According to Mayor Janice Buck, the proposal received sponsorship because officials are in favor of preserving Greenville's older neighborhoods. State statues as well as a local ordinance, Mayor Buck added, give governmental agencies the right sponsor requests for zoning changes.

Council approval of the TRNA R-6N rezoning request would, city planning officials said, not pose the kind of problems passage of a previous TRNA proposal would have. Passage of the prior request to rezone the same neighborhood portion to R-6S would have made duplex, multifamily and rooming-boarding houses non-conforming uses. Area developers and neighborhood rental property owners opposed the R-6S rezoning request, because its passage would have created a situation disallowing reconstruction of structures destroyed by fire or other disaster.

After hearing opposition to the request in December session, council members directed the city's Planning Department to research zoning alternatives. The Planning Department in turn came up with the R-6N option — an option that has been touted as a piece of creative zoning not seen anywhere else in North Carolina.

R-6N designation is based on percentage composition of neighborhoods. In the Tar River neighborhood case, if passed, that designation will limit development other than single family to 14 percent. Structures not classified as single-family already constitute approximately 13.7 percent of neighborhood composition.

While Ford (Mac) McGowan Jr., who owns and operates several rental concerns in or near the Tar River neighborhood, said he is more in favor of the R-6N proposal than its R-6S predecessor, he indicated in an interview that rezoning the neighborhood to R-6N still is not in the best interests of Greenville's population. "Of course I'm a developer and my views may be a little prejudiced," he noted.

"Allowing multifamily and duplex development in the area fulfills a need that is being demanded by the student and regular population ... I'd hate to see that kind of situation or option erased even though most of the land in the area is already developed," he said. Only a few vacant parcels are left in the Tar River neighborhood area designated in the rezoning proposal.

"What we have to realize in all this," McGowan added, "is that there is a real need for student housing. East Carolina University's population is expected to grow within the next 10 years. As a result, there's going to be a need for housing adjacent to the university. That's where it needs to be."

John S. Melvin, another owner of Tar River area rental properties, said he, too, favors R-6N designation over R-6S. "I certainly would go along with the new proposal because if one of my places burned down under the old proposal I'd be left, in some cases, with a little 50-foot-wide lot that I couldn't redevelop. Nobody's going to buy a lot of that size and construct a single-family home.

They're going to go out to Lynndale or somewhere like that and build their home. Under this new proposal, I can rebuild as long as I meet development standards."

Melvin added he "certainly can understand people that own homes in the area wanting to keep up the quality of the neighborhood," but that he feels they're "bucking up against reality."

According to Ms. Fridley, TRNA is "satisfied" with the R-6N proposal and hopes the council will give its nod of approval, because its passage "will be of landmark importance for the city as well as other older neighborhoods in Greenville."

"Approval of this rezoning request," she said, "could be very important to a number of Greenville neighborhoods, because it will address the issue of saving a neighborhood before it gets past help."

Reagan Sends '86 Budget To Congress

By DAVID ESPO
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan sent advance copies of his 1986 budget to an already skeptical Congress on Saturday and said his plan — which would cut domestic spending by nearly $40 billion next year — is "the most exhaustive effort ever made to rein in government's chronic overspending."
Reagan defended his call for increasing defense spending even while cutting or eliminating many popular domestic programs. "Every proposal is based on a careful review of what government should and should not do, what's worked and what hasn't, what we can and can no longer afford," he said of his $974 billion plan.

Under the proposed budget, defense spending would grow by nearly $30 billion.
Reagan used his weekly radio address to urge Congress to join in a "strong bipartisan effort" to enact his budget. House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., replying for Democrats an hour later, pledged a "respectful" hearing for the recommendations of the newly re-elected president. But other Democrats made it clear they will seek additions for domestic programs while trying to reduce the president's proposed $277.5 billion Pentagon budget.

"It just isn't realistic at all to think that you can get your total savings, or make substantial reductions in these enormous deficits solely from domestic..." programs, said House Democratic Leader James Wright of Texas.
In the Senate, GOP leaders said they would push for a quick vote on a round of budget cuts, even while repeating their view that chances for passage were reduced by Reagan's refusal to accept reductions in the defense buildup.
Majority Leader Bob Dole of Kansas and Sen. Pete Domenici of New Mexico met with Budget Director David Stockman, who expressed optimism that the bulk of the president's proposals would be accepted.

"The initial reading is that a great majority of the freezes and cuts that we have in the budget will be acceptable," Stockman said.
"There are some problem areas," he added. "I'm not going to list them... We're aware of defense."
The president's budget was due out formally Monday, and copies of the plan were distributed to Congress and to reporters on Saturday with the understanding that the material not be made public until 1:30 p.m. EST Monday. Even so, most budget details — ranging from a wage cut for federal workers to reductions in mass transit aid — were leaked well in advance. And Friday night, some reporters obtained access to an administration summary.

The summary obtained by reporters was not among the five books with gray covers containing Reagan's official fiscal 1986 budget presentation. Those gray-covered books were for formal release Monday.
Sources who asked not to be identified by name said overall spending for the year was pegged at $973.7 billion, with revenues of $793.7 billion and a deficit of $180 billion.

In all, Reagan's budget calls for a reduction of $50.1 billion in the deficit — nearly $9 billion from the Pentagon's original request for the year, $3.1 billion in savings from interest on the debt and the balance, nearly $39 billion, from domestic programs.
Reagan recommended no tax increase, and said he would submit legislation to Congress to simplify the income tax code.
Under the president's proposals, spending would rise above $1 trillion in 1987 for the first time, to $1,026.6 trillion.
For the 1986 fiscal year, White House officials said the spending figure would be only 1.5 percent above estimated spending for the current year. Most of that hike would be due to the increased cost of maintaining the national debt, in keeping with the president's wishes for an overall spending freeze.
Administration and congressional sources said many domestic programs would be frozen at current levels, but others would be cut sharply or terminated as part of an overall reduction in an effort to save nearly $39 billion.

Study Says Early Release Of Felons Creates Serious Threat To Society

SANTA MONICA, Calif. (AP) — A study of felons who were placed on probation rather than sentenced to prison found that a majority pose a serious threat to society, with almost two-thirds re-arrested and 51 percent convicted of other crimes, the Rand Corp. said Saturday.
The 40-month study of 1,672 men convicted of felonies and sentenced to probation in Los Angeles and Alameda counties found that 1,087 were re-arrested, 853 were convicted and 538, or 34 percent, wound up in jail or prison, according to the report by the research group.
The repeaters "concentrate on serious property and violent crimes — the crimes that society considers most threatening," the report said.

finding that 18 percent of the 1,672 were convicted of violent crimes following re-arrest.
"We do not mean this as an indictment of probation departments," the study said. "With their reduced budgets and mountainous caseloads, they cannot be expected to supervise probationers more closely."
To combat the high recidivism rate of people on probation, the study suggests an intensive surveillance program in which released convicts' actions are supervised much more closely than under standard probation. It would be more expensive than current methods, but much less expensive than imprisonment, the study says.

The public's demand that criminals be treated more harshly has in recent years sent more convicted felons to prison than ever before in the nation's history. The country's prison and probation populations have increased about 38 percent in the past five years, according to the study.
But budget limitations have prevented the prison system from keeping pace with the inmate population.
"The nation's prisons have become so critically overcrowded that the courts now must consider alternative sentences for an increasing number of convicted felons," the report said.
"Probation has become the predominant sentencing alternative across the country," the report said. "The courts impose this sanction in 60 to 80 percent of all criminal convictions."

In 1983, growth in the number of prisoners slowed from 12 to 6 percent, but the number of adults on probation increased 11 percent, according to the study, which was financed by the National Institute of Justice.

Bomb Blast At Greek Bar Near U.S. Base Injures 34

ATHENS, Greece (AP) — An explosion ripped through a crowded bar Saturday night in a seaside suburb near the U.S. military base at the Athens airport and wounded 34 Americans, seven seriously, a base spokeswoman said.
She said 27 Americans were taken to the base hospital, mainly for treatment of cuts from flying debris. The seriously injured victims were moved to local Greek hospitals.
"Fortunately no one was critically hurt. But we don't yet know how many of the injured are servicemen or dependents," said the spokeswoman, who asked that her name not be used in keeping with base policy.
More than 1,500 U.S. servicemen are stationed with the 7206th Air Force Support Group at the airport, one of four U.S. military installations in Greece.
The blast occurred shortly before midnight at Bobby's Bar on the main square in the Glyfada suburb of the Greek capital.
A police spokesman said "It appears to have been a bomb."

But a senior Athens security officer said that could not immediately be confirmed.
"We won't be able to tell until the experts start investigating by daylight. It could have been a gas container that exploded," the senior officers said. Both policemen declined to be identified further.
More than 2,000 Americans are stationed at the U.S. Air Force support base at the airport, one of four U.S. military installations in Greece.
No individual or group asserted responsibility for the blast, the first ever in a Glyfada bar.
The police spokesman said about 200 people, almost all foreigners and including "quite a number of American servicemen," were in the bar when the explosion occurred. Many were injured in the stampede to get out of the building.
"It was a really powerful explosion. We felt the floor rocking underneath our feet, and rushed out to see what was happening," said a British tourist who said he was drinking in a bar next door bar when the explosion occurred.

Commissioners Should Proceed With Merger

A small group of Pitt County citizens gathered at the County Commissioners meeting Wednesday to express its desire for a referendum on the planned merger of Greenville city and Pitt County school systems.

They were joined in calling for a referendum by Eugene James, the newly sworn commissioner from the 2nd District. That is their right and these people no doubt have their reasons for opposing merger; but we have to ask, why did the County Commissioners delay in taking positive action on this project?

Contrary to what some of the opponents say, the movement toward merger has been under way for years. Nothing of its nature that we recall has been more open to the public. It has been clear for years that appropriation of funds for two independent school systems created an impossible situation for the county government. Now after all the explaining and planning, a little group wants to hold up the entire procedure. They are joined by one County Commissioner who was only recently elected to office, we would have presumed, to make decisions but who is now calling for a referendum on the first important issue he faces.

Of course a minority of opponents would want a referendum at this point. That is the oldest move in the book for small groups who oppose change. What would they have to lose? Calling a referendum would gain time. The taxpayers would be the ones to pay for it and the cost of delaying a merger plan which is already under way.

There has never been anything of importance in government that was not opposed by some, but a few should not be allowed to delay governmental processes which have been carried out with maximum public exposure.

The County Commissioners very properly were early exponents of merger because they recognized that they had an impossible budgeting situation. The matter came down Tuesday to their time to act, but because a few people showed up in opposition, they delayed. That was unwise and the commissioners should promptly go on and approve a plan of merger.

The Metric System Gets Deadly Blow From The Canadians

Conversion to the metric system in Canada has been dealt a deadly blow.

After 10 years of trying to force Canadians to think in terms of meters, liters and millimeters, the government has thrown in the towel. It will no longer enforce laws and regulations punishing merchants who have clung to the old system of weights and measures.

The highway signs informing motorists of "kms" to their destination will remain. As time and the wear of weather wreak their inevitable havoc, there is a chance even those signs will be replaced by accustomed mileage figures.

It just goes to show our neighbors to the north share much in common with us in the United States. We, too, were raised on pounds, ounces, quarts, pints, inches and a 100-more-miles to go.

We were half-persuaded metrics were best; but habit and familiarity with the old ways kept decimal points out of our measuring. Washington never did try to enforce metric use... which is just as well.

Lawmakers have lost their jobs for less than that.

Sunday Morning Notes

Why would a cow bell bring kids running from all houses within earshot?

These days it wouldn't, but there was a time when the ringing of a cow bell was the most exciting sound on any local block. It meant the man with the push cart from People's Bakery had arrived. The man pushing it would open a gabled roof to show off cream doughnuts, plain doughnuts, iced buns and lots of other bakery goodies. Of course, on a lower shelf there were such things as loaves of bread and rolls which the housewives purchased, but the kids didn't care about that.

What happened to the carts? Well, Frank Diener, who is now proprietor of the bakery which has become known as Diener's Bakery, says World War II did them in. The men who pushed them got drafted or went off to war industries. Then, too, sugar was rationed and the bakery, which was then operated by Diener's father, could sell all it could bake from the store location on Dickinson Avenue.

The outside selling started with baskets which were taken to the tobacco warehouses that then thrived in the area. Later the carts were devised which were pushed on buggy wheels. Toward the end there were five carts, which had assigned areas of towns, and bicycle wheels were used to roll them around. "We kept a set (of bicycle wheels) at Mr. Skittlethorps all the time," Diener recalls. (Mr. Skittlethorp operated a bicycle repair shop on East Fourth Street.)

Diener said the bakery "put a little of everything we made in them." The items were wrapped two, three or four to a package in wax paper. Cream-filled doughnuts, which can still be purchased at the bakery, were three for a nickel, cinnamon buns four for a nickel. Rolls were eight cents a pack and bread a dime a loaf.

How could the baker sell such items at those prices, pay the man to push the cart and still make a profit? Times were hard. There were many men more than willing to work for whatever they could get.

Diener's father bought People's Bakery in 1919 after military duty. The bakery gradually was called Diener's Bakery, but the People's sign remained. Someone asked him why he didn't change it, and he replied, "I didn't have $10 to change the sign on the window."

The sign has been changed now and the present proprietor commented, "I think the window got broke."

It's not likely that the push carts will ever return. Diener says he recently read an article about a Holland bakery which has over 100 carts that are serviced by trucks. Here, though, the push carts just wouldn't fit our fast-paced way of living. Diener said he wouldn't put a man out with one of the old push carts. "It would be more humane just to shoot him, rather than to put him in the traffic."

Time For Satisfaction?

WASHINGTON — In the bright light of the recent economic figures, members of the Eastern Establishment must be asking themselves a terrifying question: Is it possible, is it conceivable, that Ronald Reagan has been right all along?

Egad! It is a most unthinkable thought. The Establishment, as you know, includes the foremost economists of business and academia; it includes columnists and editorial writers who together constitute the fount of all wisdom. It includes leading Democrats (and a few Republicans) on Capitol Hill. These are the experts.

For the past four years the experts have been telling us that Reagan's supply-side theories wouldn't work. In a phrase that has been much repeated, the Establishment scoffed at "voodoo economics." The president's ideas were "simplistic," said one authority. There was unanimous agreement that federal deficits would crowd private borrowers out of the capital market. Interest rates accordingly would climb, and the rate of inflation would climb with them. The cartoonists have had a wonderful time. Let us laugh at that drawing of an addelepted president about to be inundated by waves of bad news.

Well, heh-heh-heh. This was The Washington Post's front-page headline: "U.S. Economy Stages Best Year Since '51; Inflation Put at 3.7 Percent."

The president is entitled to a moment or two of quiet satisfaction. When he took office four years ago, the rate of inflation had just passed 13 percent. The prime rate of interest was above 20 percent. In an effort to keep up with these runaway forces, labor unions were demanding — and getting — hefty new contracts. Higher personal incomes were ratcheting millions of families into higher tax brackets. The economy was careening out of control.

Reagan's leadership turned things around. Congress cut the basic rates of income tax, adopted an indexing plan to stop the ratcheting, and curbed the rate of growth of costly entitlement programs. As the government's revenues declined, creating those awesome deficits, economic activity in the private sector began to grow. Four years after Reagan took office, we have that cheerful headline in the Post.

To be sure, these years have not been a tale of roses, roses, roses all the way. The shake-out saw massive unemployment. Falling commodity prices sent many farmers into bankruptcy. Bank failures mounted. Some of the changes in entitlement programs caused human misery. A nation that had grown bloated on big government and paper dollars paid a price for Reagan's austerity diet.

This should be said also: Reagan is the luckiest president since Eisenhower. He is entitled to much credit for selling his program to Congress, but he has had help — help, for example, in the falling price of oil, help in good weather that produced such bountiful crops that food prices held stable. He has been lucky to have Paul Volcker as the imperturbable chairman of the Federal Reserve.

The President's triumph, sweet as it is, will not stay sweet forever. Truly the deficits have not produced the economic calamities the Establishment predicted, but the experts — despite all that egg on their faces — are not imbeciles. Even the president's own man, Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige, coupled his announcement of the good news with a warning that prospective deficits must be significantly reduced.

Within the next week or so, we will be awash in budget proposals for the fiscal year that begins in October. The president's budget will float along with the Republican senators' budget. We will hear more about a "freeze" of spending at present levels. We will hear a good deal about "tax reform," but you are not likely to hear even a peep about a major increase in taxes. The 1984 figures made some believers.

This columnist happened to be in Oklahoma last week, talking to a Town Hall audience in Bartlesville. A question floated up from the crowd. It was to this effect: When will all you Eastern wise guys get off the President's back? My guess is that the prophets of impending doom will subside for a time, but they have been forecasting rain too long to notice the sunshine. Reagan has been generally right, and they have been generally wrong, and it hurts. If they would now be generally silent, it would help.

MX Still Has A Chance

WASHINGTON — Mouth-to-mouth resuscitation may yet save the deficit-threatened MX missile for use as a bargaining counter in arms control haggling with the Soviet Union with Rep. Les Aspin, surprise new Democratic chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, playing the central MX role.

The key to resuscitation is the bipartisan deal by the "Gang of Six" who saved the MX two years ago when President Reagan asked retired Gen. Brent Scowcroft (Ford administration national security adviser) to mold a promise. The most important part of that compromise was voting MX money in return for Reagan's pledge of serious new arms control talks; and the most important member of the "Gang of Six" was Aspin, who has vaulted over six senior colleagues to become head of Armed Services.

The MX now faces new peril thanks to the obsession with deficit reduction afflicting Republicans no less than Democrats. But if the White House plays its cards well, that risk is minimized by Reagan's success in enticing Moscow back to the negotiating table. It may be further eased by Democratic fear of being labeled "soft" on defense in the wake of Reagan's 49-state election sweep.

The central player is Aspin, the Pentagon systems-analysis whiz kid of the 1960s who at age 46 is an expert on defense policies and congressional politics. Rare, indeed, is the low-ranking member of any committee with chutzpah enough to run for chairman — and make it.

When Aspin and his fellow House Democrat, now Sen. Al Gore, signed on to Scowcroft's baling-wire plan to save the MX in March 1983, the wrath of the liberal arms controllers was unleashed upon them. But the fragile plan to save the MX held together. Moreover, at this juncture neither Aspin nor Gore intends to sell out the Republican president for an arms-control ideology repudiated by the voters three months ago and, whether they admit it or not, by themselves two years ago.

Gore told us he considers himself bound to the 1983 accord, despite major changes in the new arms-control negotiating format, so long as the Reagan administration "continues serious" about arms control. The negotiating package at talks starting in the spring will be along lines agreed to by Secretary of State George Shultz and Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko in early January in Geneva.

Gore went further. The strong feeling of many Democrats, including some who oppose the MX, he told us, is that "it would be contrary to the best interests of the U.S. to kill the MX at the start of the new talks." The words might have come from the mouth of George Shultz or Reagan's national security adviser, Robert McFarlane.

Aspin is more cautious, perhaps to blunt liberal backers in the chairmanship fight who hint he agreed not to lead the battle for the MX this year. Capitol Hill insiders say that is a case of the wish fathering the thought. They say Aspin made no commitment about his 1985 conduct on the MX and, in particular, did not promise to moderate his position of 1983. To the contrary, Aspin's friends privately depict him as committed to continuing the MX program, though not necessarily giving the president all 100 missiles he wants.

That outcome was previewed by Aspin in an unpublished section of a speech he gave to the Carnegie Endowment recently. He warned Congress not to interfere "too heavily" in Reagan's negotiating plans and not to destroy "any bargaining leverage" on the eve of arms talks.

Meese Pinpoints Question Of Ethics For All

WASHINGTON (AP) — The senators who will vote on Edwin Meese III's fitness to serve as attorney general this week may find themselves agonizing over what might be called the people-in-glass-houses dilemma.

Do the things that they do look improper to others? That subplot developed during Meese's confirmation hearings before the Senate Judiciary Committee last week.

If Tuesday's committee vote were to go strictly along party lines, approval of Meese's nomination would be recommended to the Senate by a 10-8 vote; there are 10 Republicans and eight Democrats.

Meese's chances remain uncertain, however. The two possible swing votes are among Republicans who have not made a decision. But one Democratic senator, who declined to be named, indicated he's leaning in favor of Meese.

On Saturday, Sen. Max Baucus, D-Montana, said he will vote against the nomination. "In my judgment, Mr. Meese does not measure up to the high ethical standards that the nation's chief law enforcement officer should possess," he said.

The spotlight swung to the senators themselves as they questioned witnesses — and sometimes themselves — about the ethical implications of donations from political action committees, speakers fees from special interest groups and congressional pay raises from themselves.

"I do think people have problems," said Sen. Orrin G. Hatch, R-Utah, a staunch Meese supporter. "It may be iconoclastic to say, but (they have them) even in the United States Senate."

All week long, senators critical of Meese pounded away at one point: Meese's financial dealings with associates who later landed positions in the Reagan administration had the appearance of impropriety, even if they were not criminal violations.

Hatch broached the potential for senatorial hypocrisy after getting David H. Martin, director of the Office of Government Ethics, to acknowledge that a number of congressional activities pose at least a potential appearance of conflict-of-interest.

The Utah senator did all he could to make that an issue.

"If you receive a PAC contribution and then vote a certain way, couldn't that be seen as having the appearance of conflict?" he asked Martin.

"In my view it would," the ethics director replied, "even if the vote was honest and well-intentioned."

Sen. Joseph R. Biden Jr., D-Del., reminded Hatch that "there is public disclosure of PAC contributions."

"Even with all of that, there is an appearance problem," Hatch shot back. "What about a (gift) Christmas basket. ... Pretty hard to disclose all of that."

He continued to grill Martin.

Hatch: "What if a member of Congress accepted a job on the outside from someone who had given him PAC money?"

Martin: "Yes, and maybe a criminal violation."

Hatch: "What about an honorarium from a trade association (which has an interest in legislation a lawmaker is mulling)?"

Martin: "That clearly raises an appearance of impropriety."

Hatch: "And if a member of Congress assists a constituent in getting a public job or secures an ambassadorship? ... All of these things happen around here. ... It's nice to sit here and find fault ... but you could do that with anybody."

No new charges against Meese surfaced and the hearings focused on allegations dismissed last fall by an independent counsel as unworthy of prosecution. Still, he was questioned sharply about his ethics — a separate matter that independent counsel Jacob A. Stein said was not in his power to consider.

In particular, Meese was questioned about his participation in a White House personnel meeting involving discussion of a government job for John R. McKean, a San Francisco accountant who arranged $60,000 in loans for Meese and was named to the Postal Service Board of Governors.

He also was quizzed about his relationship to Thomas Barrack, a California real estate agent who contributed over $80,000 of his own money to help sell Meese's house in La Mesa — and subsequently got a non-presidential position at the Interior Department.

Meese testified that if he could relive the last four years, he would have done some things differently. He promised if he is confirmed he will devote "every ounce of my energy and every moment of my time" to living up to the high ethical standards expected of an attorney general.

Sen. Arlen Specter of Pennsylvania, one of the wavering Republicans, said he will not make a decision until Tuesday. Specter said he has been discussing the nomination with Republican Sen. Charles McC. Mathias of Maryland — also considered a swing vote. According to Specter, Mathias also has not committed himself.

"I intend to discuss it with Senator Mathias," Specter said. "I'm going to think it all through before the vote comes."

Specter said some Republicans believe the president should get the nominee he wants.

"That's a factor to be considered," he said. "The election does resolve some issues, but it does not resolve the ethical issues."

Sen. Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz., said while he has not decided finally how to vote, "I have to give Meese credit. His own testimony and Martin's testimony enhanced his possibility of getting my vote. It resolves some questions that were lingering in my mind."

DeConcini acknowledged he's "getting a lot of pressure from Democrats to vote against him. But I have a greater charge. I haven't been convinced he's done anything unethical. He exercised some bad judgment."

Proof Is In The Scalps

WASHINGTON (UPI) — When George Shultz replaced the combative and volatile Alexander Haig as secretary of state in 1982, it was common knowledge the soft-spoken former economics professor would go about his job quietly without bruising anyone.

He has gone about his job quietly, and the heads have rolled.

Thomas Enders, an intelligent and ambitious career diplomat, had seized operational control of policy for Central America as an assistant secretary under Haig and guarded his turf under Shultz.

But Enders' support for the administration's hard-line policies toward Nicaragua was questioned at the National Security Council and his aristocratic bearing earned him no deep personal support.

In less than a year, mild-mannered George Shultz had elbowed Enders aside, sending him to Spain as ambassador while establishing himself as the real operational boss for Central America.

In Enders' place came a political appointee, Langhorne Motley, who knows not to crowd the boss.

Eugene Rostow was director of the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency under Haig and, hungry for greater influence, appeared too open with his advice to Shultz and others.

In six months Shultz fired him. In his place came Kenneth Adelman, a young man with no arms control credentials but strong support among conservatives — he had served as a deputy representative under Jeane Kirkpatrick at the United Nations.

Shultz accepted and fought for Adelman's contested confirmation, earning the gratitude of conservatives. But Shultz has essentially shut out Adelman as an inside player in the arms negotiations with the Soviet Union.

Securing an equitable and effective arms control agreement with the Kremlin is the chief foreign policy goal of the administration and Shultz is the lead figure. Edward Rowny knows it.

The retired general was the chief negotiator on strategic weapons in the unsuccessful talks with the Soviets in Reagan's first term, and he expected to be at the table again in the new round arranged this month by Shultz.

Rowny resigned from President Carter's negotiating team on the abortive SALT 2 arms treaty because he thought it was too favorable to the Soviets. He is highly regarded by conservatives but is perhaps too well known for his independence.

With secrecy and then swiftness that caught potential critics off-guard, Shultz dumped Rowny and replaced him with the recently retired Sen. John Tower.

The Texas Republican has unquestioned conservative credentials, takes a hard line towards the Soviets, and is an expert on defense issues. His political connections in the Senate, where he had served since 1961, will help ensure a possible arms treaty can be ratified. He is a team player.

Shultz earlier brought Paul Nitze, Rowny's counterpart in Geneva as negotiator on medium range missiles, out of Adelman's agency, gave him an office near his own, and had Reagan name him a special adviser on arms talks.

And as head of the new negotiating team, Shultz grabbed Max Kampelman, a Democrat who won the praise of conservatives for his tough bargaining with the Soviets in the Madrid security and human rights conference.

A year before, Shultz brought Kampelman along to Stockholm for the talks with Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko that began a reconciliation process and helped produce the agreement to begin new arms negotiations.

George Shultz served in two Cabinet posts under Richard Nixon and avoided being mugged by the hard political operatives in the White House. He is no softy.

Now he has quietly attained the undisputed foreign policy leadership role Haig so ambitiously and loudly sought.

Shultz has the political scalps to prove it.

Tower Is No Surprise

WASHINGTON (UPI) — When John Tower, the ambitious vest pocket Texan, announced he would not seek another Senate term, he stunned the political world.

And when Tower said he would return to his native state and resume his career as a professor — interrupted for more than 20 years — nobody really believed him. And no one should have.

After all, an achiever, which Tower certainly is, does not surrender willingly the power he has amassed.

On his departure at noon Jan. 3, the Texan was chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee and chairman of the Senate Republican Policy Committee. By any standard, he had reached the top.

And in fairness to him, Tower never closed any doors to a future in public life. In fact, under questioning from reporters, he kept himself at all times openly available.

It didn't take President Reagan and Secretary of State Shultz long to take advantage. They never really let him get to the campus.

In a surprise appointment, Reagan named Tower as one of the negotiators for an arms control agreement with the Soviet Union — putting him in charge of working out an agreement on strategic weapons.

Maybe the biggest surprise was that Tower had never figured in speculation, at least publicly, for a negotiator's job. But there is no question that the Texas dandy has all the qualifications.

The Soviets will find Tower a tough, feisty negotiator — perhaps as knowing as any about the military and strategic strengths of the United States as well as the Soviet Union.

Tower is a card-carrying conservative, very security conscious, a longtime friend of the military and like any true "hawk" does not trust the Soviets.

Yet, Tower's main strength may not be as one of the principal negotiators of an arms control agreement but in selling the pact to the Senate if a settlement is reached and accepted by the administration.

It was the Senate's obvious unwillingness to ratify SALT 2 that forced the withdrawal of that agreement with the Soviet Union. The rejection of any new agreement — even one accepted by a conservative Reagan administration — always is a possibility.

The selling of an agreement to the Senate is the area where Tower may give Reagan the most help — although the brunt of that task will fall on Reagan himself and his legendary powers of persuasion.

But there are conservatives in the Senate, more than enough to swing a close vote, who are increasingly skeptical of Reagan, the foreign policies he is pursuing and the people he has named to top posts.

Although Tower is far more pragmatic than members of this wing, assurances from him will have a greater impact with them than possibly even Reagan and certainly far more than Shultz or chief negotiator Max Kampelman.

Once his current endeavor is over, will Tower then quietly retreat to the peaceful environs of academia? Probably not.

There is no question that Tower would like to serve as secretary of state, should Shultz decide to step down. Nor would Tower turn down secretary of defense or an ambassadorship, perhaps to West Germany.

A sting as an arms control negotiator, especially if it results in a ratified treaty, can only enhance Tower's stature and keep him in public life, certainly as long as Reagan is in the White House and perhaps beyond.

To the editor:

Just imagine. It's late one night and you're snuggled safely in bed. The odor of smoke drifts past your nose. But you remember turning everything off. The thought of fire crosses your mind. But then you think, "No, that couldn't happen to me."

As the odor grows stronger and smoke starts to drift under your bedroom door, you quickly realize you do have a FIRE! You jump out of bed and are overcome with smoke, because you didn't know to crawl and stay low in smoke. Coughing and gagging, you crawl to the door and open the door. The flames leap in and burn you, but you manage to get the door shut. You should have felt the door before opening to see if it was hot.

You crawl to the window of your two-story house only to find that the windows are painted shut — a problem that could have been resolved with prefire planning. You turn, but can't see a chair or drawer to break the window, so you burst it with your hand and the blood starts to flow. You crawl out onto an outside roof, but can't go any farther because you didn't preplan and have a way down. So you jump to escape the flames.

You suffer a broken leg and broken arm, in addition to cuts and burns you have received. You are safe from the fire, but in addition to loss of your home, you will be in the hospital for two weeks while your broken bones and burns are healing. On top of all this, your two favorite dogs were killed in the fire. Just think, these could have been children who didn't know how to escape!

Help us to help you by coming out to Carolina East Mall and see what you can learn about fire safety in your home. The fire departments of Pitt County will have displays on fire prevention and what to do in case of a fire there all week. Remember the life you save may be your own or one of your children's.

To the editor:

Believing it is better to be late than never, I raise my voice in opposition to the proposed merger of the Greenville City Schools and the Pitt County School Boards. When a youngster, I attended several one- and two-room schools. These are places in my heart and I recall them ever so fondly. Those schools were mine! The communities and their schools were inseparable for when the schools merged (through real necessity) with larger units, the communities died. Now I am not saying Greenville will die if the power over the city schools is transferred to the Pitt County Board of Education. I am saying the idea of merger just should not have come up for discussion in the first place.

We are told the city schools have funding problems. So be it. Problems exist in all our lives and in every organization and are to be solved, but not at the price of losing control. The fine people of Greenville have much to be proud of, not the least of which is the city school system! We should be trying to improve our schools from within, rather than looking outside for a miracle. There is plenty of money in Greenville. We just need to be willing to use some of it in support of our schools.

There is no need to worry about taxes. You know they will go up, merger or not. So that is not an issue. What really bothers me is the "give up" attitude that I perceive. Also, I wish for all Greenville youngsters the same experiences and opportunities my two have had. We are a community and I really believe we can serve this community best by keeping control over our city schools and working to improve them. I shall be sorry if we don't.

To the editor:

A letter written by Mike Van Duke published on Jan. 30 states, in part, "Nothing fans the fervor of aggressive nations as signs of weakness and lack of will to defend oneself."

Certainly both America and the Soviet Union would like to control international events. Americans must understand, however, that U.S. military arms stretching around the globe and our headline rhetoric are two of the many reasons for the recent Soviet military buildup. Russian leaders see aggression by capitalist countries as a real threat to world stability and they are frightened by American power. They remember that the U.S. along with other Western Nations invaded the U.S.S.R. in 1920 in a futile attempt to crush their new revolution. They know the U.S. has 540,000 troops stationed in over 200 bases around the world.

The U.S. supplies military aid, training and advisers to at least 61 countries. For example, in 1982, one out of every 10 El Salvadoran troops was trained inside the U.S. The Russians are aware that 350,000 American troops are stationed just across their border in Europe. How would Americans react if the Soviets had 350,000 troops stationed in Cuba?

The Soviets see $168 billion in U.S. foreign investments, and they know that American military power is primarily designed to protect U.S. economic interests overseas rather than to defend American shores. Only about 20 percent of the total military budget goes for actual defense of the U.S. mainland.

If the Soviets had been far ahead of the U.S. in the arms race for the past 30 years, and had over half a million troops stationed around the world, I'm sure most Americans would be crying for enormous military buildup. Can we understand how American military power frightens the Soviets and pushes them to build their forces even more? Mr. Van Dyke makes the fatal mistake of comparing pre-nuclear conflict to that of today. The only reliable defense we now have is elimination of those weapons which make any war unwinnable. Our missiles have not stopped the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. Their missiles did not halt our invasion of Grenada. Does that suggest a failure of the deterrence principle? Indeed, does that suggest a necessary change?

Gallup

Poll

PRINCETON, N.J. — President Ronald Reagan begins his second term in office with the public's mood far more upbeat than it was when he began his first term in January 1981.

Fifty-two percent of Americans currently express satisfaction with "the way things are going in the nation," three times the 17 percent who did so four years ago — and higher than at any time since the measurement was started in 1979.

The low point in the six-year trend was recorded in August 1979, during President Jimmy Carter's administration, when only 12 percent of survey respondents expressed satisfaction with the national status quo.

Other findings from the latest survey suggest that the current high level of optimism may be leveling out, with 48 percent expecting to be satisfied one year from now.

Although satisfaction with the national state of affairs has grown among all population groups during President Reagan's tenure, there are marked differences between certain groups. For example, only 20 percent of blacks, compared to 56 percent of whites, say they are satisfied with the way things are going in the country today. Among people whose family income is less than $10,000 per year, only 34 percent express satisfaction with the direction the nation is taking, compared to 59 percent of those whose income is $10,000 or more.

A slightly lower proportion of women (48 percent) than men (55 percent) express satisfaction. As might be expected the findings divide sharply along political lines, with the far higher proportion of Republicans (74 percent) than Democrats (34 percent) saying they are satisfied with the way things are going.

The latest survey also indicates that 59 percent of the public is satisfied with the way democracy is working in the U.S., and 54 percent express satisfaction with the way the nation is governed. Far fewer (33 percent) say they are satisfied with the ability of the U.S. to care for the poor.

These findings help explain why some groups, including blacks and persons from low-income households, are not optimistic about the overall course the nation is taking.

Much smaller proportions of blacks than whites, for example, express satisfaction with the way democracy is working in the U.S., the way the nation is governed, and the ability of the U.S. to care for the poor. Pronounced differences are also found on the basis of income.

Scientist Challenges Ape-Man Tale

MMABATHO, South Africa (AP) — A South African anthropologist said Saturday that famed Kenyan researcher Mary Leakey mistakenly chiseled an "artificial heel" into the first-discovered, ape-man fossil footprints because her eyesight was failing.

This led Mrs. Leakey to believe she had uncovered prints of three ape-men in 1977, while there were only two, said Ronald Clarke, senior researcher of anatomy at the University of the Witwatersrand in Johannesburg.

The declaration produced heated dispute among over 250 early-man specialists from more than 10 countries celebrating the 60th anniversary of the news that the first discovery of an African ape-man had been made. Anatomy Professor Michael Day of St. Thomas's Hospital, London, called the charges "outrageous accusations."

Beyond the flare-up of personal and professional differences, the dispute has significant scientific implications.

Clarke said Mrs. Leakey mistakenly chiseled the heel into the footprint in attempting to excavate it, and this contributed to her published contention that three ape-men had walked together 3.6 million years ago at Laetoli near Olduvai Gorge in Tanzania.

Clarke, who performed much of the site excavation under Mrs. Leakey's direction, said there were footprints of only two individuals.

Mrs. Leakey, now 71, belongs to the Kenyan family of archaeologists and anthropologists who contributed much of present knowledge of human origins in eastern Africa. Her late husband, Louis, pioneered discovery of early-human fossils, and her son, Richard, has added significant discoveries in remote parts of Kenya.

contact the source of the practice opportunity; persons listing the openings are not notified of the match.

Until POP, Shepherd said, it has been hard to get young physicians together with practice opportunities in a systematic way. Medical students and residents are usually too busy working and studying to spend much time researching career options.

"When someone finishes residency they really don't have a very good idea of what opportunities are available," observed Shepherd. "At the same time, hospitals and private physicians don't have many places they can turn to find young doctors."

For the residents, scanning advertisements in medical journals can be haphazard as well as time-consuming. Personal referrals are often effective, but not everyone has those kinds of contacts.

On the other hand, a resident may get so many "opportunities" that he finds it difficult to identify the one that best suits his needs.

As far as Shepherd knows, ECU is the only North Carolina medical school with a formal matching program. The state medical society and the N.C. Office of Rural Health provide placement assistance, but Shepherd thinks POP only augments those efforts.

"We're not trying to duplicate what they have been doing," he said. "We share the same objective of distributing good, competent physicians throughout North Carolina."

Federal census data show that the ratio of physicians to population in eastern North Carolina is about one-half the national average.

Moreover, Shepherd says that while a large number of the state's older physicians are approaching retirement, the number of doctors in the generation immediately following theirs is unaccountably small. That gap will have to be filled by doctors just entering practice.

"The next five to 10 years are going to be rather critical in terms of physician manpower," said Shepherd. "In spite of what some people see as a 'doctor glut' at the national level, for a number of years North Carolina is going to have a lot of opportunities for young physicians."

And what are these younger physicians looking for in a practice? Shepherd says most express an interest in group practice, with the security and backup that a group provides. Though a number of solo practice opportunities have been listed in POP, Shepherd says few candidates have much enthusiasm for that arrangement.

Other interests of the alumni are obvious: quality of the practice, good patient mix, affiliation with a hospital, and a community that's "a decent place to live and raise children." Shepherd finds one trend particularly encouraging: "Our ECU graduates don't seem to be afraid of small communities."

As POP continues to develop, Shepherd foresees regular contact with each group of students at some point during their residency. Other candidates on file with POP will be updated periodically, perhaps by means of a program newsletter.

Shepherd stresses that he wants to maintain an active program to keep up with the constantly changing — and expanding — opportunities for physicians in the state.

"I know there are opportunities for physicians in North Carolina," he said. "This new program offers a systematic way to identify them."

Clinic Set To Explain How To Stop Smoking

By MELANIE PHILLIPS
Reflector Staff Writer

If you are a smoker, do you know why you smoke? What triggers your urge for a cigarette? Waking up? Eating a meal? And if you smoke, do you want to quit?

The American Lung Association's Freedom From Smoking clinic will hold its orientation session on Monday. This 20-day method allows the smoker to ask himself these questions and begin a six-week plan to quit smoking forever.

Joan Boudreaux, clinic instructor, is also a lecturer of English at East Carolina University. According to Ms. Boudreaux, the 20-day plan is not a method of tapering off, but of postponement. "Studies show that it takes 21 days to break a habit. In this program during the first 21 days the smoker replaces his habit with another more healthy one. We teach the smoker that he is not giving something up, he is replacing it — he is gaining his freedom from the cigarette habit."

Ms. Boudreaux's clinic, which will be held at the American Lung Association building at 112 Pitt St., uses both Dr. Arthur King's system based on medical and psychological advances, outlined in "The Cigarette Habit: A Scientific Cure" and the American Lung Association's "Freedom From Smoking in 20 Days." She says that if a person wants to begin this program he must be committed to kicking the habit and it should be a time in his life when things are running "fairly smoothly."

The program is broken down into two blocks of time: the first three weeks the smoker learns about his habit, but continues to smoke. During this week, the smoker changes to a brand of cigarettes that he likes the least. He must not smoke for an hour upon getting up in the morning, an hour after each meal, or an hour before bedtime. At any other time, he may smoke as much as he chooses.

During the second week, the smoker changes to an unfiltered brand of cigarettes and smokes at any time except those particular times mentioned above. In the last week of the three-week block, the smoker changes to the weakest brand of cigarette available. At the end of the third week, on the 20th day, the smoker quits cold turkey.

During the remainder of the six-week program, the clinic continues to meet once a week and serves as a support for the now non-smokers.

According to Ms. Boudreaux, this postponement method breaks the strongest part of a smoker's habit by the end of the third week. A year after her last clinic, she reported an 80 percent success rate. She said this is a high percentage to quit smoking compared to other methods.

She attributed the success of the program to learning about the smoking pattern, learning specific methods by which to change the smoking pattern, learning about a system that is designed to reinforce the new habit, and learning the value of having supportive classmates.

"Smoking is a habit. Smokers link smoking with certain activities. It is hard to 'unlink,'" Ms. Boudreaux said. She added, "If the program is followed exactly, smokers will not have too hard of a time with it. Of course, it is not pain-free, but it is the most painless method. Within six months after quitting, they will actually have an aversion to cigarettes."

She said that the biggest factor in quitting the cigarette habit is the psychology of deprivation. "Tell someone that he can't have something and what does he want? Exactly what he can't have!" She added that in this aspect the support group is a great asset. "Having a support group is half the battle."

Special Observance

The Greenville school system will take part in the sixth annual observance of National School Guidance and Counseling Week Monday through Friday.

"School Counseling: The Human Connection" is the theme of this year's observance sponsored by the American School Counselor Association (ASCA). Members of the association are committed to fostering and promoting guidance and counseling programs in schools nationally.

The purpose of designating one week for special emphasis on counseling is to help people in schools and communities to understand the role of the counselor. Focus this year will be on the significance of the counselor in promoting educational, social and personal development in students in all grade levels.

Counselors today work with teachers, administrators and with special services personnel to provide academic assistance to students in selection of study programs.

Career education guidance is a major component of programs with tie-in liaison service between the business community and the schools.

Counselors work with support personnel and parents to provide social skills through classroom and small group work as well as through individual counseling.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to Jul. 21) Concentrate on those changes you want to make in your life that will make it more as you wish it to be.

LEO (Jul. 22 to Aug. 21) Early plan activities that can make you feel more contented and happy in the future. Get together with good friends.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19) Stick to the work you have taken on and later study the over-all picture well and become more enthused.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to Mar. 20) Know what it is that those who dwell with you desire in your relationship, and then come to a better understanding.

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY ... he or she will be very capable at getting things in order and should have a chance to help in property matters, housework and decorating, etc. Be sure to give a good education and to slant it along lines of merchandising and the like at which a good salary can be assured.

FORECAST FOR MONDAY, FEB. 4, 1985

GENERAL TENDENCIES: The early part of the day is a good time to devise a well considered course of action taking in all possible contingencies for the future while later you should reexamine any decisions made.

ARIES (Mar. 21 to Apr. 19) Morning is fine for getting home affairs in better order, but don't make any changes in the evening. Drive with care.

TAURUS (Apr. 20 to May 20) You can communicate well in the morning, and know what your true position is with others, especially bigwigs.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21) Your judgment about money is good in the morning, so get your problematical affairs well handled.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to Jul. 21) Get in touch with good friends and plan entertainment for the evening, but stay within your budget.

LEO (Jul. 22 to Aug. 21) Make sure that you keep private whatever is of a confidential nature, and tonight avoid a pal who can be upsetting to you.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22) String along with a good friend who comprehends your desires and you get ahead much faster but don't feel imposed upon in the evening.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22) A good day to garner information you need from the right source, but later avoid seeing friends for the time being.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21) Delving into some new interest can assist you in advancing other projects now, but don't take it to a bigwig as yet.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21) Your intuition is working fine in the morning, so make notes of ideas you get for later use. But don't start new plans.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20) An associate can bring fine benefits in the morning particularly if you do something kind for this person.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19) Get your environment in better condition in the morning, but later steer clear of irate associates.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to Mar. 20) Morning is fine for putting your finest talents to work and getting good results. Then later work on details.

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY ... he or she is apt to have every advantage during adolescence and could become quite lazy unless taught early that happiness comes from work and gets a fine education as well. Your progeny will then not find it difficult to make a living.

Taxes And Budget Top Assembly Issues

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer
RALEIGH (AP) — A proposed $16.8 billion state budget and Gov.

Jim Martin's $443.5 million tax-cut package will confront the 1985 General Assembly, which convenes Tuesday for its first extended session in two years. It's a Legislature that, despite a doubling of GOP ranks in the Nov. 6 election, remains predominantly Democratic — and will be dealing with a Republican governor for only the second time this century. The 120-member House of Representatives has 82 Democrats and 38 Republicans; in the Senate, the Democrats hold a 38-12 edge.

Partisan skirmishes are likely, despite the "united state" theme of Martin's inaugural address and his conciliatory gestures to the majority party — including placing two Democrats on his Cabinet.

Even so, Martin thinks he can win approval of the tax cuts that are the cornerstone of his legislative program.

"The legislative leaders have publicly declared they would give my proposals a fair hearing and fair consideration," Martin told reporters last week.

At the helm will be two powerful

Democrats — Liston B. Ramsey, recently elected to an unprecedented third term as House speaker, and Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan, who's new to the job but may wield even more influence than usual as titular leader of the state Democratic Party.

Both have pledged to cooperate with Martin, but can be expected to advance their own agendas as they try to blunt his political initiative in anticipation of the 1986 election.

"I think the most important thing that happens for the Democratic Party in the next six months will be what happens right here in the Legislature," said Jordan.

There will be other leadership changes due to the defection or defeat of other key Democrats, but most committee chairmanships remain to be announced.

Jordan has appointed Sen. Charles Hipps, D-Haywood, as chairman of a new Senate committee on children and youth, before which some of the most controversial issues may arise — including day care, child pornography and child abuse.

Sens. Tony Rand, D-Cleveland, and Aaron Plyler, D-Union, are expected to assume important roles in the budget writing process. Both are close to Jordan.

In the House, Ramsey's two closest lieutenants — Reps. Billy Watkins, D-Granville, and Jack Hunt, D-Cleveland — will have important posts. Watkins probably will retain the chairmanship of the Appropriations Expansion Budget Committee; Hunt unseated Rep. Allen Barbee, D-Nash, as speaker pro tem.

Rep. Bobby Etheridge, D-Harnett, is widely expected to be chairman of the House Appropriations Base Budget Committee, replacing retired Rep. Al Adams, D-Wake. Rep. Dan Lilley, D-Lenoir, will replace Hunt as Rules Committee chairman.

Martin will devote most of his time and energy to his tax and budget proposals. But the Legislature will deal with issues on topics as diverse as crime victims' compensation, troubled insurance companies, water pollution and — as always — education.

The new governor will ask the lawmakers to repeal the 3 percent sales tax on food and non-prescription drugs, effective Jan. 1, 1986. His plan calls for elimination of the property tax on intangible assets July 1, 1986. The property tax on business inventories would be phased out over two years, beginning July 1, 1986, and ending July 1, 1988.

Administration and legislative analysts agree that, based on 1985-86 revenue estimates, the plan would cost the state $400 million to $450 million when fully implemented. The Legislature's fiscal research staff has put the figure at $443.5 million.

An Associated Press survey of incoming legislators detected skepticism about Martin's claim that he can balance the budget, fund essential programs, improve education and cut taxes as deeply as he wishes.

However, there also is widespread support of some form of tax relief — if for no other reason than Martin's election with 54 percent of the vote, which his friends and foes alike say indicates solid public backing.

The reception that Martin's tax plan receives will depend largely on the changes he proposes in the $16.8 billion 1985-87 budget submitted by former Gov. Jim Hunt.

IN THE STATE

Taylor Marries

RALEIGH (AP) — Former state Rep. Ron Taylor, imprisoned in 1982 for the burning of some Bladen County warehouses, was married at McCain Prison Unit in Hoke County, records show.

A marriage license shows Taylor was married last Saturday to Victoria Lee Dailey, 27, of Elizabethtown.

Taylor, who pleaded guilty to conspiracy and unlawful burning in the FBI's probe of corruption in Columbus County, is scheduled for release in May 1990, said Patty McQuillan, spokeswoman for the Department of Correction. He was sentenced to three years on the conspiracy charge and 20 years for the unlawful burning count, she said.

Ms. McQuillan said Taylor may be promoted from medium to minimum custody within four years of his scheduled release date and may go on work release two years after that, subject to department approval.

Inexpensive Colleges

ELON COLLEGE, N.C. (AP) — Mount Olive Collee, Wingate College and Elon College are the least expensive colleges in North Carolina, according to a recent issue of The Chronicle of Higher Education.

Mount Olive cost $2,800 a year, while Wingate cost $2,950 and Elon $3,290 for the 1984-85 school year, according to figures compiled by the College Board, Elon officials said.

Dismissals Upheld

RALEIGH (AP) — Superior Court Judge Robert Hobgood has upheld the dismissal of three drunken driving cases on grounds that the defendants were kept in jail after their arrests when they should have been allowed to post bond.

"It appeared from the record that the defendants in those cases had adequate cash or means to secure their release immediately," Hobgood said.

The ruling came in the cases of Fred Ferguson of Raleigh, Willia Johnson of Wilson and Dannie Lin Tew of Raleigh. All three cases had been dismissed in Wake County District Court but the state had appealed the rulings.

Extortion Charge

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — A federal grand jury had indicted a Clemmons man on charges that he mailed threatening letters or postcards to Wake Forest University students, officials and staff members.

Warren B. Brooks, 60, was arrested on a 13-count indictment and was released on $10,000 bond. He was indicted on Monday by a Forsyth County grand jury on an extortion charge alleging he threatened the life of Wake Forest basketball player Tyrone Bogues in a telephone call to Pat Pfaff, secretary to the Winston-Salem Board of Aldermen.

The federal indictment says Brooks threatened Bogues or other, unidentified black athletes in letters or cards mailed to Dr. Thomas Hearn, the university president, and others.

Roads Chief Named

RALEIGH (AP) — A 25-year veteran of state highway work was appointed on Friday highway administrator, the top job in the Division of Highways in the state.

George E. Wells, manager of the division's highway design branch since 1974, replaces Billy Rose, who was promoted this month to deputy transportation secretary.

Wells' salary will increase to $55,368 from $53,004.

Deaf Man Convicted

CHARLOTTE (AP) — A deaf Charlotte man who says he took undelivered postal samples of sanitary napkins to help poor deaf women, says he will appeal his embezzling conviction and try to win back his job as a postal clerk.

"I'm not going to give up," said James David Dollard, who was fined $500 and given a suspended sentence after a federal jury convicted him Friday.

"I'm going to keep on fighting until we win." Dollard, communicating by sign language and through interpreters, told jurors that he took the 86 packages of sanitary napkins from the downtown post office. Dollard had said earlier that postal workers had told him to throw away the samples because they had wrong addresses and could not be delivered. Postal inspectors said Friday, however, that the samples were intended for downtown delivery.

State Panel Recommends Vote On Financing Parks

RALEIGH (AP) — The State Park Study Commission is recommending a $50 million bond referendum to fund the completion of the state park system and has asked the General Assembly to consider higher salaries for park ranger.

The recommendations approved Friday also suggest the Legislature provide $43 million for capital improvements and the purchase of at least 9,500 acres to protect existing state parks.

The commission also recommends the Horsepasture River in Transylvania County be protected under the North Carolina Natural and Scenic Rivers Act, prohibiting the development of a hydroelectric dam project there.

Commission members suggested the Horsepasture River area would be a good location for a new state park as the park system currently ends at Mount Mitchell, about 150 miles from the state line.

Sen. Dennis Winner, D-Buncombe, suggested the bond referendum because the park system's land needs would require more money than the General Assembly could appropriate.

"There are unique areas — mountains create unique areas — that are unprotected by anybody and probably too small that the national park system would want to fool with them," Winner said.

"I think it is an excellent idea and will be cost effective," said Rep.

N.J. Crawford, D-Buncombe. "It is a now-or-never proposition."

Winner said in an interview that he hoped the referendum would allow for new parks in addition to completing the present system.

The report recommends upgrading salaries for the 100 state park employees.

Better Prenatal Care Suggested

WILMINGTON (AP) — Money spent on saving premature babies would be better spent on improving prenatal care, a move that could reduce North Carolina's infant death rate, an internationally known consultant says.

"We let the baby be born and then we spend $150,000 to help it survive," Dr. Stanley Graven, chairman of the National Conference on Perinatal Programs, said Friday. "That's applying money at the wrong place."

Graven, a consultant to Egypt's neonatal care program and is a professor of maternal and child care at the University of South Florida, was in Wilmington to address the New Hanover County Perinatal Committee.

North Carolina's infant death rate in 1983 was 13.2 per 1,000 live births, higher than the national average of about 11 per 1,000 live births, according to the North Carolina Department of Human Resources. Columbus County leads the region in deaths of babies less than 1 year old with 15.6 deaths per 1,000 live births.

New Hanover is second with 14.6 deaths.

Pope Urges Peruvians To Shun Marxists

LIMA, Peru (AP) — Pope John Paul II told tens of thousands of youths Saturday to shun violence and not follow the Marxist ideologies of guerrillas waging war against Peru's elected government.

He told the young people gathered at a Lima race track to build a more just society, but "don't follow those who claim that social injustices can disappear only through class hatred or the recourse to violence and other anti-Christian means."

Peru has been torn by four years of violence by a Maoist group called the Shining Path movement that has its strongholds in south-central Ayacucho province. At least 4,000 people have been killed in attacks or in fighting between troops and the guerrillas, and another 1,000 have been reported missing.

The pope will fly Sunday to Ayacucho city, the provincial capital 350 miles southeast of Lima, for a religious service.

John Paul, speaking from a blue-carpeted stage at the race track, told the young people, "Violence generates violence and degrades man." He urged them to "Build a Peru without violence, which is always anti-Christian. Build a Peru where honesty, truth and peace reign."

The throngs waved flags, sang and chanted, "Long live the pope."

Fire fighters sprayed water on the crowd standing in the packed race track in the late afternoon heat. Several people were treated for heat prostration at first aid stands.

Meanwhile, the state-run Andina news agency reported that 1,000 people — terrorist suspects, prostitutes, beggars and violators of the "dry law" prohibiting alcohol sales during the pope's visit — have been detained in "Operation Saturation."

The police roundup was started last week to clear the capital of delinquents, the agency said.

Earlier Saturday, John Paul went to the southern desert city of Are-quipa to beatify a 17th-century nun and say an outdoor Mass at the foot of a dormant volcano.

About 200,000 people from Peru and from neighboring Chile and Bolivia cheered, sang and hurled flower petals when the pontiff arrived.

"John Paul, our friend, Arequipa is with you!" throngs chanted as the pope rode through the streets. The 64-year-old pontiff appeared tired on the eighth day of his 12-day, four-nation journey.

Beatification of the cloistered nun, Sister Ana de Los Angeles Montegudo, represents the last step before she could be made a saint.

According to historians, her body was intact and the coffin smelled of roses when it was exhumed in 1686, the year after her death.

In Ayacucho, security measures were being reinforced for the pope's visit on his sixth tour of South America. The government prohibited the wearing of traditional Andean ponchos or hats, saying terrorists frequently use both to conceal weapons and explosives. Cameras also were to be banned Sunday.

The newspaper El Comercio reported Saturday that two bombs exploded but caused no damage Friday night in Ayacucho. A source in the city told The Associated Press by telephone that the blasts were fireworks, which have been allowed by the military in some areas in honor of the pontiff's visit.

Police on Friday blamed the Shining Path for dynamiting two power pylons in the interior.

After the pope arrived in Peru Friday night, he addressed the issue of bloodshed by calling on Peruvians to seek peace through "dialogue instead of violence."

Throughout John Paul's trip, he has cautioned clergy against "alien ideologies" and urged the faithful not to be swayed away from traditional church doctrine.

FAST TRY — Pope John Paul II puts on, then quickly removes a straw hat that was given to him Saturday after his arrival in Arequipa, Peru. The pope later spoke to thousands of young Peruvians, urging them to shun Marxist ideologies of the guerrillas waging war against their government. (AP Laserphoto)

Tass Says U.S. Diverting Attention From Its Plans

MOSCOW (AP) — Tass charged Saturday that the United States was trying to draw attention away from what it said were U.S. plans for "a crash militarization of outer space" by accusing the Soviets of arms control violations.

In a report to Congress on Friday, President Reagan accused the Soviet Union of three violations of arms control treaties, including construction of a radar system in Krasnoyarsk in central Siberia.

The two other violations were underground test explosions that Reagan said sent radioactive debris outside Soviet territory, violating a 1963 treaty, and changes in an intercontinental ballistic missile. He said the alterations created a second missile, called the SS-X-25, in violation of the 1979 Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty, or SALT II.

Reagan said the United States would go ahead with new arms control negotiations set to begin March 12 in Geneva, but that he expected the Soviet Union to correct what he said were its violations of existing treaties.

Tass, the official Soviet news agency, said Saturday: "The Washington administration has floated another anti-Soviet falsehood in advance of Soviet-American talks on nuclear and space weapons." It said the United States has no facts to back up the accusations.

The Tass article, parts of which were read over Radio Moscow on Saturday night, made no mention of the Krasnoyarsk project, which Reagan said violates the 1972 U.S.-Soviet anti-ballistic missile treaty.

In a separate news analysis issued later, Tass military writer Vladimir Bogachev said Moscow "refutes most categorically these fantastic contentions made by Washington."

He said Reagan's report made it clear that the United States plans to violate the 1972 treaty by developing a space-based anti-missile system, dubbed the "Star Wars" defense.

"Each time Washington is going to derail another international agreement limiting the risk of outbreak of a nuclear war or to undertake military actions that would sap such accords, which has been happening too often of late, public opinion is offered another presidential report on 'the Soviet Union's violations of its arms control commitments,'" Bogachev wrote.

"It is usually possible to deduce unmistakably from the nature and contents of the charges against the Soviet Union which of the still-valid agreements Washington intends to sacrifice to the fulfillment of its militarist plans," he wrote.

The previous Tass report said Reagan's report to Congress was "clearly designed for 'public consumption.'"

Utah Town Hits Nearly 70 Below

PETER SINK, Utah (AP) — Peter Sink may have carved out a place in the record books with a knee-numbing temperature of minus 69.2 degrees, but the weather service said Saturday that the unofficial reading still has to be confirmed.

The biting cold was recorded early Friday on automatic recording equipment in this depression where cool air pools in the mountains 25 miles east of Logan.

If confirmed on an alcohol thermometer at the site, said Salt Lake City meteorologist Jim Pringle, the temperature would be slightly chillier than the record low for the 48 contiguous states — 69.7 below zero, set in 1954 at Rogers Pass, Mont.

The weather equipment at Peter Sink is operated by Campbell Scientific and Salt Lake television station KUTV.

Trade Commission Rejects Leaf Curbs

By The Associated Press
A decision by the U.S. International Trade Commission not to recommend that President Reagan limit leaf imports was greeted with both cheers and jeers from the tobacco community.
Most farmers and their representatives cried foul about Friday's decision, but cigarette manufacturers, leaf dealers, importers and at least one farmer said they agreed with the decision.
"I don't feel like their should be any restrictions on imports," Guilford County farmer Rick Apple said. "Where we should address that is by becoming more competitive in the world market. If we do that, the companies are going to make more purchases," said Apple, who's also vice president of the Tobacco Growers Association of North Carolina.

Hugh Kiger of Raleigh, executive vice president of the Leaf Tobacco Exporters Association and the Tobacco Association of the United States, said in Washington that the ITC had "made a judgement based on economics rather than politics."
Others, however, said they were disappointed and angered by the ITC decision.
"We highly disagree with the decision," said John Parker, commodities director for the N.C. Farm Bureau Federation. "We are extremely disappointed. This demonstrates again that farmers are poorly served by the system."

U.S. Sen. Jesse Helms issued a statement saying he "obviously disagrees" with the ITC decision. "The surge of imports since 1981 has interfered with the (tobacco) program," Helms said. "All we asked for and all we expected was a little elbow room. Now there is no alternative to making U.S. tobacco competitive in the world market."
The commission can only advise the president. State leaders, including Agriculture Commissioner Jim Graham and aides to U.S. Reps. Charlie Rose and Charles Whitley said they will ask Reagan to impose import restrictions in spite of the ITC decision.

Rep. Tim Valentine, D-N.C., said "farmers in North Carolina and other tobacco states will suffer continued financial hardships as a result."
"This decision coupled with administration plans to strike down tobacco price support programs over the next five years could not have come at a worse time," he said.
"The fight is not over," Valentine said. "We will attempt to reverse this decision through every channel available to us. This is a battle we have to win."
Farm and tobacco organization leaders had asked Helms to push for tobacco import restrictions. They claimed that a flood of cheap foreign tobacco is ruining the tobacco farmer and the federal price support program, and causing a huge and costly surplus of unsold tobacco.

The five-member ITC panel concluded after a 4-1 vote that "tobacco imports were not materially interfering" with the federal tobacco program.
In a statement after the decision, ITC Chairwoman Paula Stern said there is no question that the U.S. tobacco industry faces serious problems. But she said "Everyone acknowledges there are factors other than imports at work."
"Demand for cigarettes has fallen considerably since 1982 and exports over the past few years have been a disappointment," she wrote. "Competitive conditions have made new tobacco less expensive than that in stocks and manufacturers and dealers have in the past found it to their advantage to use the stocks of their program as their inventories."

The vote pleased the nation's second-largest cigarette manufacturer.
"We think it supports what we saying all the time," about tobacco imports not seriously affecting domestic production, said David Fishel, vice president for public relations at R.J. Reynolds Co.
But Surry County farmer Gray Wolfe described tobacco growers as "about half mad and half broke."
And Wake County farmer Jim Woodall said "it seems a shame that folks sit in Washington regulating the profits of the tobacco industry. They've let imports in at the expense of the American farmer. And the farmer has to take it."

Rose ...

Rose, chairman of the House Tobacco and Peanuts Subcommittee of the agriculture committee, said cigarette manufacturers are concerned about a possible extension of the 16-cent excise tax, which currently is to drop to 8 cents a pack in October.
"We've told the companies that we don't believe in any excise tax on tobacco ... but before we get real hot on helping (tobacco manufacturers), we could say, 'You help us first on stabilization, and then we'll do everything we can to help you,'" he said.
If such cooperative attempts to reconcile tobacco industry problems internally fail, a legislative approach should be attempted, Rose said.
"It's going to be tough to get any legislation (to defeat Block's proposals) that quickly, but if we have to, we'll go at it," he said.
Rose said Block's proposal, made last week, intends to "do away with any subsidies, allotments or price supports" for all farm products.

"But every country in the world ... subsidizes the grower to some extent," he said.
He also said North Carolina tobacco farmers, who have been aided by Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C. and Rose, D-N.C., should not expect to be exempted from a uniform farm program.
"If we get an exemption in tobacco and peanuts and everybody else gets stuck ... then when this comes to the floor of Congress, we'd be in deep trouble," Rose said. "The Reagan administration is going to have to moderate its proposals."
Rose quipped to an appreciative audience that he and other tobacco-state legislators would write Reagan suggesting further cabinet shuffles — that "Mr. Block ... who is so good at making cuts ... ought to go to the defense department, and that Mr. Weinburger could come to Agriculture."
Also at the meeting of the Tobacco Growers Association of North Carolina, Executive Director Carlton T. Blalock said "the time of putting band aids on the (tobacco) program are over," and condemned Block's proposals as "disastrous."
Forthcoming changes in the tobacco program

"are going to be tough" for North Carolina leaf growers, he said. "There are some folks who are going to get hurt, and some are going to go out of business."
Blalock praised most parts of the Reynolds plan, but said the association set a $1.35 per pound price support figure rather than $1.30.
"With one possible exception, we find these (recommendations) in line," he said. "Other than that, our board is prepared to move ahead and request legislation to gain these things."
Wayne Oakes, a past president of the Leaf Tobacco Exporters' Association, agreed that recent legislation extending the tobacco program was "a band-aid, quick-fix solution," but prescribed a different solution to farmers' problems.
Citing a study by a North Carolina State University researcher who concluded in a study that the elimination of the federal tobacco program would bring about increased tobacco production, Oakes said he favored legislation that would bring about a "market-oriented program."
"We have the most to gain from the free market, and the most to lose from protectionism," said Oakes, adding that the United States is the world's largest tobacco exporter.

Groundhog Phil Sees His Shadow

PUNXSUTAWNEY, Pa. (AP) — Punxsutawney Phil is just a groundhog 364 days of the year. But at daybreak Saturday, he enthralled hundreds of spectators as he spotted his shadow and sentenced the crowd to six more weeks of winter.
"At 30, you can't believe in Santa Claus, but you can believe in Punxsutawney Phil," said Mark Appler, a Penn Hills doctor who drove two hours with his wife and infant son to see the critter at the Gobbler's Knob zoo.
"Like at Times Square on New Year's Eve, you need to be at Gobbler's Knob at least once in your life to see Punxsy Phil come out," Appler said.
The steel door to Phil's electrically heated burrow was opened around 7:20 a.m., and the pampered groundhog peered through the cloudy dawn at the falling snow, sniffed the 20-degree air and drew back.
So Bud Dunkel, Phil's official handler, lifted the 10-pound groundhog and held him high, legs splayed, for everyone to see.
The crowd went wild, chanting "We want Phil!" and snapping pictures.
Dunkel held Phil close to the ears of James H. Means, president of the Groundhog Club and reportedly the only human who can understand the furry forecaster.
"Punxsutawney Phil declares there will be six more weeks of winter," Means proclaimed as the crowd boomed.
According to folklore, if a groundhog — which is actually a woodchuck — sees his shadow on Feb. 2, there will be six more weeks of cold weather. If he doesn't, there will be an early spring.
Although Phil appears to be America's premier groundhog, similar rituals were held elsewhere in the country, with some results at odds with Phil's forecast.
Octorara Orphie of Quarryville, Pa., Peanuts of the Philadelphia Zoo, Chuck of the Staten Island Zoo in New York, Dunkirk Dave of the Dunkirk, N.Y., middle school and Chuckles of the Lutz Children's Museum in Manchester, Conn., all poked their heads out of their respective burrows Saturday and did not see their shadows, according to their keepers.
In Chicago, it was so cold outside that not even a banana cake could lure groundhogs Chipper and Sunshine from their burrows at the Brookfield Zoo.
General Lee of Snellville, Ga., trotted out under overcast skies and couldn't find his shadow at the Yellow River Wildlife Game Ranch. His sweetheart, Scarlett, stayed inside.
North of the border, Canada's grand old weather forecaster, Wiarton Willie of Ontario, saw no shadow and decided it will be an early spring.

Chile Is Hit By Extension Of Siege

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) — Ignoring U.S. pressure and objections by some advisers, President Augusto Pinochet decreed a 90-day extension of the state of siege Saturday to stifle opposition political activity throughout Chile.

The decree, published without comment in the Official Bulletin, maintained special curbs on the press and on public gatherings until May 6 because of what it called a "state of internal convulsion" in Chile.

Pinochet, an army general who toppled the Marxist government of Salvador Allende in a 1973 coup, imposed the clampdown last Nov. 6 to combat a surge of terrorism and mass demonstrations for a swift return to democracy. He has insisted on adherence to a constitution that prolongs his authoritarian rule at least until 1989.

No government official would comment on the state of siege Saturday. Pinochet was away at his summer home.

A broad coalition of non-Marxist parties make up the main opposition to Pinochet. The Marxist opposition is led by the illegal Communist Party, the strongest in Latin America outside Cuba.

A debate inside the government over the crackdown coincided with pressure by the Reagan administration to lift the siege. The United States has twice delayed an Inter-American Development Bank vote on a $130 million loan sought by Chile. The vote by the bank, based in Washington, is now set for Wednesday.

Banking sources here said Finance Minister Luis Escobar argued within the government that such political pressure might discourage private U.S. banks from lending their share of the $1 billion in loans he is seeking this year for Chile's troubled economy.

But according to a rightist party leader with access to the president, Pinochet was told by Justice Minister Hugo Rosende that Chile should resist foreign economic pressure at any cost. The party leader spoke on condition he not be named.

With three months of repressive measures, Pinochet has weakened his foes to the inconspicuous role they played before big protests flared up in May 1983. Public criticism once permitted by the regime has been muffled, leftist movements have gone underground, and attempts to organize new protests have failed.

Under the current competency testing program in North Carolina, in order to earn a diploma, a student must meet minimum requirements in reading and mathematics. Writing competency may also be added, possibly as early as academic year 1986-87. The 1984 North Carolina Field Test of Writing, Grade 10, as the trial exam is officially called, "will help determine the feasibility of adding writing standards to the competency program," according to a state publication.

"The scores of these 10th graders will be used for research only, not for a pass/fail determination," Ms. Drye said. "They will be analyzed to determine where the pass/fail cut-off will be should the writing competency test be implemented."

Ms. Drye said the variance between the scoring on the annual and the competency testing "is a concern." The test includes an objective section consisting of questions on punctuation, capitalization, word usage and forms, a section where the student must respond in writing to an oral question and an essay section which tests persuasive writing skills. Persuasive writing, also called point-of-view writing, takes one side of an issue, develops the argument for that side and backs up the argument with facts.

"Basically, the annual testing does not penalize a child if he writes well even if he does not follow instructions completely," she said. "In contrast, because of the scoring requirements on the competency field test, it does not make any difference how well a child develops his answer. If he doesn't follow the test instructions to a letter, he fails under the present criteria."

"That, said Ms. Drye, "is the most blatant way" a good writer could fail the competency field test.

To pass the writing field test, a student must meet the following four criteria for persuasive writing, according to guidelines set by the North Carolina Competency Testing Commission:

- The student's writing must establish a dominant position — a single opinion on an issue. Students that argue equally for both sides of the issue will not pass.

- A student must provide two reasons to support his position. If a student presents only one reason, "no matter how good the thought or his ability to express that thought," he fails the test, Ms. Drye said.

- Each of the two reasons must be accompanied by supporting detail. The student must answer the question "What do you mean?" according to test guidelines.

- Students must use what the test guidelines call "Standard Edited American English Usage." The guidelines define this language as "a reasonable command of standard American English usage and grammar constructs (sic) such that someone reading the essay did not have great difficulty understanding the message."

In contrast, according to Ms. Drye, the scoring for annual testing for persuasive writing utilizes the following four criteria:

- The writer must identify a main idea that "focuses on" ... and "takes a position" on the subject matter, according to the test guidelines.

- The writer must provide supporting details for his main idea that contain "sufficient and appropriate information to persuade the reader," say the guidelines. The writer may present only one piece of information in support of the position, but if this information is presented with sufficient "power," the test guidelines say it is acceptable.

- The writer's composition must have organization, which the guidelines define as "a sense of beginning, development and ending" which shows "evidence of an organizational strategy."

- A composition must have coherence. The sentences should be "logically connected" and should have "relationships between and among ideas," according to test guidelines. The writer can use devices such as repetition, pronouns, synonyms and parallel structure to achieve coherence.

Ms. Drye said testing officials she has contacted around the state say they are not currently concerned or familiar with the discrepancies between the scoring and requirements of the two types of testing. "I have been in touch with other language arts coordinators across the state but have not found a high level of concern," she said. "To me, the varying scoring procedures prompt confusion, especially when a good writer can fail the competency field test and a less talented writer can pass, if the present criteria are adopted."

Statewide tests and scoring criteria on the same subject should be more uniform, she suggested, since differing requirements may confuse educators, parents and students. Her real beef with the writing competency field test, she said, is that in the scoring, "it does not make any difference how well a child develops his answer."

"He must give an arbitrary two reasons to back it (his argument) up — one reason won't do," Ms. Drye said. "If he only gives one but gives it eloquently, he fails."

Legislators Agree To Request Farm Aid

CHICAGO (AP) — Lawmakers from a dozen Farm Belt states on Saturday asked for $3 billion in immediate federal farm aid to end what one Iowa senator called an ever-increasing credit "nightmare."

They also agreed to ask Congress to "seriously consider" a four-year, $10 billion program to lower farm interest rates, but dodged the issue of banning farm foreclosure sales.

More than 50 state legislators met at a Chicago hotel to work out a unified strategy to lobby Congress.

Because of the farm credit crunch, which has resulted from low crop prices and high interest rates, President Reagan has announced a $650 million loan guarantee program. The lawmakers on Saturday, by a voice vote, said that needs to be boosted to $3 billion.

"Iowa's worst fears have turned into an ever-increasing nightmare," said Iowa Senate Majority Leader Lowell Junkins, a Democrat.

The lawmakers also asked for speeded processing of federal loan applications, and said Congress should consider setting up the $10 billion interest rate reduction program.

Much of the debate centered on whether the lawmakers should call for a moratorium on foreclosures.

Minnesota state Sen. Charles Berg, who introduced a resolution calling for a halt to farm foreclosures, conceded a moratorium wouldn't solve the credit problem but said it would "send a message" that might force federal officials to change policies.

"If this administration doesn't change its policies, we're dead," Berg said.

But Junkins said, "I think you've got us in a pickle. If we today try to pass this resolution and fail, we send a bad message."

Berg conceded his effort would fail, and withdrew it before it came to a vote.

Forty-two percent of the farmers in the Midwest are "sliding toward insolvency," said Neil Harl, an Iowa State University farm economist. "We're losing some of our better managers... That is grim in any language."

Harl has estimated that between 10 percent and 15 percent of Iowa's farmers won't get operating loans for this year's crop, and could be forced out of business.

In addition to Iowa and Minnesota, the states participating in the conference were Illinois, Nebraska, South Dakota, Wisconsin, North Dakota, Michigan, Kansas, Missouri, Indiana and Michigan.

Six Injured As Indiana Inmates Hold Guards Hostage

PENDLETON, Ind. (AP) — Authorities kept inmates in small groups and searched for weapons Saturday after regaining control of a maximum-security prison where armed inmates held two guards hostage for more than 15 hours to protest their treatment.

Five other guards from the Indiana Reformatory and one inmate remained hospitalized with stab wounds Saturday, but all were reported to be out of danger and stable.

Orr said. Orr said that his last four years in office have been "most difficult" regarding prison funding.

"The Legislature is fully knowledgeable of the need for expansion, and I'm confident they will continue to recognize their responsibility," he said.

The prison holds about 1,650 inmates but is under a U.S. District Court order to reduce its population and improve conditions. An appeal of the order is pending before the 7th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

In the agreement worked out between inmates and corrections officials, Faulkner will ask the U.S. Justice Department to have the FBI investigate alleged violations of inmates' rights. Faulkner also will ask state police to investigate alleged crimes by the prison staff and request members of the state General Assembly to hear the inmates' grievances.

Authorities said they did not grant the inmates' request for amnesty. They said three inmates were directly involved in the takeover, and about 100 prisoners were in J cellblock during the disturbance.

The guard injured most seriously, Harold Delph, 39, of Knightstown, was upgraded from critical to very serious but stable condition Saturday at St. John's Medical Center in Anderson. The other guards and the inmate were in satisfactory condition.

The inmates freed the hostages unharmed shortly before midnight Friday after prison officials agreed to investigate conditions at the prison. A third hostage had been freed after 5 1/2 hours in return for officials allowing an inmate to go to an infirmary.

The Indiana Reformatory has returned to a more normal but still limited operating schedule. The inmates in J cellhouse are secured and their meals are being served in the cells," prison Superintendent Norman Owens said in a statement released Saturday afternoon.

Inmates in J cellhouse, where the disturbance occurred, were being searched for weapons, he said.

"All other housing units are being fed in the dining hall in smaller groups than usual," Owens said.

A woman who identified herself only as Officer Jackson read the statement by telephone and said she was not authorized to elaborate. Owens was unavailable for further comment, she said.

The disturbance began about 8:30 a.m. Friday during a weapons shakedown when inmates armed with knives grabbed three guards as hostages.

It ended with the release of the last two hostages after State Correction Commissioner Gordon Faulkner agreed to the inmates' demand for FBI and state police investigations of conditions at the prison about 35 miles northeast of Indianapolis.

Gov. Robert D. Orr said shortly after the hostages had been released that he was satisfied with the performance of Faulkner and other corrections officials.

"I'm grateful that there appears to have been no loss of life and that correction officers that were wounded seem to be out of danger."

DALLAS (AP) — A city police officer's large Western belt buckle stopped a bullet and probably saved his life after a drug raid turned into a shootout that left one man dead, a police spokesman said.

The bullet caught Sgt. Don Woods "square in the belt buckle," knocking him down, but left only a large bruise after lodging in the buckle, Sgt. Harold Rice said Friday.

Jose Luis Rubalcaba, the alleged assailant, died after being struck by four bullets fired by police, said a Dallas County medical examiner's spokeswoman.

Woods, a plainclothes vice sergeant, was one of nine plainclothes and uniformed officers who used a search warrant to search Rubalcaba's apartment for heroin on Friday.

Shouting "police," they forced open the door to the apartment, and within moments, shooting began, police said. Woods was carrying a shotgun but did not fire his weapon, police said.

"Without the buckle, he would have been gut-shot with a .45," said Capt. Donald Milliken of police internal affairs. "The bullet hit him right smack on the seam between the top and bottom of the bulletproof vest."

Police Chief Billy Price agreed, saying, "It would have gone right through him."

The buckle was a prize Woods won in a 1983 police rodeo to benefit crippled and burned children, another officer said.

"He wore it all the time," Lt. David Davis said. "Don's extremely proud of that belt buckle because that's an outward sign of the things he's interested in — doing charity work with the rodeo."

A second armed man hiding behind a shower curtain in Rubalcaba surrendered without firing and was uninjured, police said. He was identified by police as Jamie Ray Gonzales and was taken into custody for investigation of narcotics charges.

Yates Powers Mason By Pirates

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor
FAIRFAX, Va. — Carlos Yates scored 20 of his 28 points in the first half and led Goerge Mason University to an 86-59 ECAC-South victory over East Carolina last night.

The loss was the eighth in a row for the Pirates this year, their 16th straight against ECAC-South opponents on the road and their 11th straight in the league.

There were several reasons for the loss, and Mason's play "in the paint" was the biggest factor. Mason ruled that area. The Patriots sank 18 of their 34 baskets from that vital area, while ECU made only 14 of their baskets in the lane, and many of those came late in the contest.

And at the same time, Mason completely ruled the boards, out-pulling the Pirates 50-21. Of those, the Patriots yanked 20 from their own offensive boards, while ECU had only seven. Rob Rose set a new single game Mason record, snatching away 18 of the loose balls.

East Carolina never led and tied it only at 2-2. Yates then put the Patriots up, 4-2, and they were never caught again.

From that 4-2 lead, Yates paced a pull-away to a nine-point edge, 14-5, scoring four points in that string. He later scored eight straight to run the lead to 10 at 20-10.

East Carolina rallied to cut the lead to five, 23-18, behind four points by Keith Sledge, but the Patriots scored eight straight points after that to up their lead to 16, the biggest of the half, 35-19.

In the final 2:10, however, the Pirates had their chance at a rally, scoring the final seven points of the period, three of them by Scott Hardy, to trim the lead to 39-30.

But after that, it was all Mason's game. The Patriots came out after the break and cashed in on the first four baskets to run the lead out to 47-30. After the Pirates broke the ice, Mason added six more points for a 53-32 lead, as they began to connect from the outside as well as the inside.

The Pirates hung around at that level for the next few minutes, but were unable to make any dent in the lead. Finally, Mason pulled away once more to take the final 27 point margin of victory.

"I'm very embarrassed by the way they kicked our butts on the boards," Coach Charlie Harrison said afterwards. "I thought we had three people who came out to play," he added, without naming names. Herb Dixon added 12. William Grady had a 15-game double figure scoring streak ended as he scored only seven points.

Harrison said he thought the Pirates had a chance to put it out after their flurry at the end of the half. "But they hit their first three shots of the second half and our guys walked around like, 'let's go home.'"

Yates hit on 11 of 15 shots from the floor adding six of nine at the line for his 28. Rose added 14 points while Ricky Wilson had 12 and Brian Miller had 11.

East Carolina's scoring was led by Bass, who scored a career high 20 points. However, he pulled only two rebounds, as he, too, contributed to the Pirates weakness in that area.

The Pirates' weakness in that area, Herb Dixon added 12. William Grady had a 15-game double figure scoring streak ended as he scored only seven points.

The loss leaves ECU with a 5-12 overall and 0-6 league record. Mason is now 10-8 in overall and 5-3 in the league.

East Carolina continues on the road Thursday, traveling to UNC-Wilmington.

Bogues, Deacons Torment NCSU

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — Tyrone Bogues scored a career-high 20 points, handed out 10 assists and had four steals to lead Wake Forest to a 91-64 victory over North Carolina State Saturday in Atlantic Coast Conference basketball.

The 5-foot-3 sophomore tormented N.C. State for all 20 minutes of the first half, scoring 10 points and helping the Wolfpack commit 10 turnovers.

The Demon Deacons, 13-6 and 4-3 in the ACC, scored 10 straight points to take a 34-14 lead with 6:22 left in the first half. Wake Forest, which never trailed, led 46-25 at the half.

North Carolina State, 12-7 and 4-4, came no closer than 21 points in the second half. Wake Forest succeeded in taking forward Lorenzo Charles out of the Wolfpack's offensive picture. Charles, who averages more than 19 points a game, was held to 11 points.

N.C. State was forced to shoot from the outside during the early moments of the second half. Terry Gannon hit eight points from 18 feet or more during a two minute stretch of the second half, but that spurt, making it 64-42 at the 9:12 mark, proved the Wolfpack's most successful comeback attempt.

Kenny Green led Wake Forest with 21 points and Delaney Rudd added 16.

Anthony "Spud" Webb scored 18 points for the Wolfpack while Gannon added 14.

"Tyrone is a star now, simply because he is scoring more," Wake Forest coach Carl Tacy said. "We have encouraged him to shoot more and I think this game will certainly give him confidence in that part of his game."

"He wasn't as sharp in the Virginia and Duke games but he played his game today," Tacy said.

Tacy said he thought his team would have its "hands full trying to match up against their size."

"I thought we did a tremendous job controlling the boards and running the break. We got some easy baskets and were content to let them score from the outside and not allow them the inside power moves. That was the difference in the game," Tacy said.

The Demon Deacons out rebounded the Wolfpack 48-26.

"They were as ready as they could be to play the game," N.C. State coach Jim Valvano said. "They were really up ... Bogues was super and Kenny Green was great."

"We have more trouble against a soft packed-in zone than we do against a team that comes out after us," he said. "They were inspired and they played like they were on a mission."

Heels Top Furman, Talk Of Cavaliers

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — After 11th-ranked North Carolina defeated Furman 77-55 in college basketball Saturday night, Tar Heel coach Dean Smith was more interested in talking about his team's upcoming opponents.

"Next is Virginia," Smith said after center Brad Daugherty scored 15 points to led the Tar Heel romp. "We were fortunate to beat them in Charlottesville. Then, there is LSU. There are no easy ones left."

Guard Steve Hale chipped in with 14 points and Kenny Smith added 13, and Smith praised both.

"Hale and Kenny Smith were great defensively and really played good all-around games," Smith said. "We had too much size. I liked our fast break with Kenny and Steve running it. But you have to have rebounds to get it started."

Furman coach Jene Davis said he thought his team did as well as it could against a much taller opponent.

"I think our kids did a great job defensively," Davis said. "North Carolina, I'm sure feels they didn't play that well in the first half. But I think it was due to our defensive effort."

The Tar Heels, 16-5, didn't gain control until the 8:04 mark of the first half when Warren Martin broke a 12-12 tie with a free throw. With the Paladins controlling tempo, North Carolina held a 28-23 halftime lead.

North Carolina outscored the Paladins 34-18 for a 21-point lead at 66-45 with 3:35 left on two free throws by Dave Popson. From there, the Tar Heels used their fast break offense to put Furman out of reach.

The Tar Heels hit 27 of 34 free throws, including 21 of 24 in the second half. By contrast, Furman hit 1 of 5. From the field, North Carolina shot 54.3 percent while Furman connected on 40.9 percent.

Herman Sims led the Paladins, 5-16, with a game-high 23 points, while Kevin Bryant added 10 points.

Ga. Tech Pounds Terps

COLLEGE PARK, Md. (AP) — If Georgia Tech learns how to win at home, the Yellow Jackets figure to be a key factor in the tight Atlantic Coast Conference.

Continuing to sparkle on the road, the eighth-ranked Georgia Tech held off a mild second half rally by Maryland and defeated the 17th-ranked Terps 72-60 Saturday as Yvon Joseph scored 20 points.

The victory was the fourth in five ACC road games for the Yellow Jackets, who snapped Maryland's 16-game home winning streak and moved into a virtual three-way tie for first place.

The Terps stayed on top with a 4-2 record, but Tech and Duke are 5-3 and only one game separates the top six teams in the eight-team league.

"I can't figure it out," Georgia Tech Coach Bobby Cremins said of the topsy-turvy ACC. "I've given up. Now we have to go back home and play Duke."

"That's the best game Joseph has played," Cremins said of the 6-foot-11 senior who had averaged only seven points in five previous games after visiting his sick mother in Haiti.

"Joseph killed us," Maryland Coach Lefty Driesell of a familiar nemesis of the Terps. "If he played us every game, he'd be the No. 1 draft pick in the country."

"We lost the game in the last minute of the first half," Driesell said of mistakes which gave Tech some openings after the Terps had pulled to within 30-26.

The Yellow Jackets, 16-4 overall, scored the last seven points of the first half and the first four after intermission to take a 41-26 lead. The Terps, now 17-6, rallied to within six points, the last time 66-60 before Georgia Tech closed out the game with six successful foul shots.

Foster's 20 Leads ECU Past SFU

Loraine Foster fired in 20 points and Anita Anderson added 14 as the Lady Pirates of East Carolina defeated South Florida 76-56 for their 10th straight win Saturday at Minges Coliseum.

"I think our transition game went for us," ECU Coach Emily Manwaring said. "We had 30 fast break opportunities and scored on 18 of them."

"I think (South Florida) is a better team than they showed, but it may be due to the type of defense we played. I think we forced them into the poor shooting percentage (34.7)."

The Lady Pirates, meanwhile, shot 46.7 percent from the floor and connected on 20 out of 26 free throw attempts. South Florida managed just four out of 11 from the line.

Cards Upset DePaul

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Junior guard Jeff Hall, shut down most of the game, hit eight of nine free throws in the final minute and a half as Louisville held on for a 77-73 victory over No. 13 DePaul in a nationally televised college basketball game Saturday.

The victory boosted Louisville's record to 11-9 overall, while DePaul fell to 14-5.

Mark McSwain led Louisville with 17 points and his two free throws ignited a 7-0 spurt midway through the second half that gave Louisville the lead for good at 53-45 with 10:26 to play.

DePaul came back behind senior forward Tyrone Corbin, who did not start the second half because of a blow he received to his broken nose, to cut the lead to 65-63.

The two teams exchanged baskets before DePaul began to foul intentionally with 1:49 left to play. Louisville made 10 of 11 free throws in the final minutes to seal the victory.

DePaul's final chance to preserve at least a tie was foiled when, after Dallas Comegys converted a missed shot with four seconds left to cut the lead to 75-73, the Blue Demons were whistled for a technical foul for calling a timeout they didn't have.

Hall sank the two free throws for the final margin.

Center Barry Sumpter added 13 points for Louisville, while Billy Thompson and Herbert Crook added 11. Hall, Louisville's second leading scorer, finished with 10 points.

Comegys had 18 points for DePaul, while Kenny Patterson and Lawrence West added 12 points.

Bob Gibson, a member of the Baseball Hall of Fame, stole 13 bases during his career, a record for a pitcher.

Michigan (10).....94 Wisconsin.....81

MADISON, Wis. (AP) — Tenth-ranked Michigan, led by Antoine Joubert's 24 points, stormed past outmanned Wisconsin 94-81 Saturday to retain at least a share of first place in the Big Ten basketball race.

Combining hot shooting and superior rebounding, the Wolverines roared to a 50-30 halftime advantage and coasted to their seventh consecutive victory before 7,106 Wisconsin Fieldhouse fans.

Michigan boosted its record to 7-2 in the conference and 16-3 overall. Iowa, 6-2, and tied with Michigan at the day's outset, played at Ohio State Saturday night.

The defeat was the eighth in a row for Steve Yoder's slumping Wisconsin Badgers, whose record slipped to 1-8 in conference play and 10-9 for the season.

Roy Tarpley, a 6-for-11 center, chipped in with 22 points for the Wolverines and managed to keep the Badgers in check in the rebounding department under both boards.

The Wolverines left no doubt who was in command from the outset, jumping to an 8-0 lead before Wisconsin got on the board with a five-footer by Scott Roth with 3:16 gone.

Led by Joubert and Tarpley, the Wolverines took leads of 20-10 and 31-16 on their way to their 20-point lead at the half.

Wisconsin fought back to narrow the gap to 92-79 late in the game.

Roth, held to six points in the first half, finally got on track and led the Badgers with 22. Center John Ploss, who entered the contest with a mere 4.3 average, tallied a career-high 21.

Rick Olson managed only four points.

Kevin Kaut, Scotia Miller and Caycee Poust took three first place finishes each to lead the East Carolina men's and women's swim teams to victory over Duke University Saturday at Minges Natatorium.

The Pirate men defeated the Blue Devils 73-35, while the Lady Pirates took a 63-48 win over Duke.

Kaut teamed with Kevin Hidalgo, Lee Hicks and Bruce Brockschmidt to win the 400 medley relay, then won the 50 and 100 freestyle races.

Poust, Scotia Miller, Ellen McPherson and Chris Holman won the 200 medley relay in the women's meet. Miller also took first in the 200 and 1,000 freestyle races, while Poust won the 200 individual medley and the 100 backstroke.

"We completely dominated a good (Atlantic Coast Conference) team," ECU Coach Rick Kobe said. "The outstanding swimmer of the meet was probably Stratton Smith and Scott Eagle on the boards."

"Scotia Miller led the girls, and Lori Miller did real well in the diving. We really rose to the occasion."

The Pirate men are now 6-4 on the season, while the Lady Pirates are 4-5. East Carolina hosts Richmond Wednesday.

Barnhill, Kelly Lead Rose High Tankers

DURHAM — Paul Mark Kelly and Kelly Barnhill each took first place in three events to lead the Rose High School swimmers to a second place finish in a quad meet at Duke University Saturday.

Conley Grapplers Take Coastal Title

MOREHEAD CITY — D.H. Conley claimed championships in five weight classes to come from behind to win the Coastal Conference wrestling tournament Saturday at West Carteret High School.

Conley finished the day with 143½ points, while West Carteret was second at 137. Havelock followed at 134, White Oak 129 and West Craven 38.

The Vikings won seven out of 10 semifinal matches but trailed by nine points going into the championship round.

David Farris won the 101-pound class with a 6-4 decision over Dan McCormick of West Carteret. Jackie King claimed the 122-pound title with a 6-5 decision over Havelock's Eric Broadway.

In the 135-pound group, Joel Maye decided Pat Rook of Havelock 17-1. Gerald Harper pinned Levon Morris of Havelock to win the heavyweight championship.

But the most impressive victory, according to veteran Conley Coach Milt Sherman, was Martin Anderson's 23-8 victory over previously-unbeaten Jeff Peay of Havelock. Peay finished third in the state a year ago and beat Anderson twice in the process.

"Martin Anderson just had an outstanding tournament," Sherman said. "He had a quick pin the semifinals, but he was even more impressive beating Peay.

"We were handicapped as usual by only filling 10 out of 13 weights, but fortunately we had an outstanding finals round winning five of our seven matches to come from behind and win the title."

All five Coastal schools open the state playoffs at the sectionals to be held at D.H. Conley this Friday and Saturday, Feb. 8-9.

"It doesn't get any easier," Sherman said. "A kid can wrestle five matches in two days or just one and be finished from the start."

O'Meara Leads Field

PEBBLE BEACH, Calif. (AP) — Perhaps more so than at any time in recent years, the luck of the draw came into play in the 44th Bing Crosby National Pro-Am.

"Golf," Jack Nicklaus is fond of saying, "was never meant to be a fair game."

"Luck," said George Archer, "always has been a part of it — being at the right place at the right time."

And, as the scoreboard indicated through three rounds of this event, the right place to be very definitely was not at Cypress Point on Thursday.

Being at Cypress Point on Saturday, however, was the right place.

"There's no question about it. We had the best draw," Mark O'Meara said after his fast finish. Birdies on three of his last four produced a 68 for O'Meara and a 2-shot lead going into Sunday's final round.

The format for this unique event calls for the pros to play one round on each of three courses before the field is cut for the final round Sunday at Pebble Beach.

The group that started play Thursday at Cypress Point — in what Greg Norman called "the worst conditions I've every played in, in Ireland, in Scotland, wherever" — got the worst of it.

Those who played at Cypress Point, particularly those, like O'Meara, who started from the 10th tee, got the best of it.

And it was that group that produced the men with the four best scores through the first 54 holes.

O'Meara, No. 2 on last year's money-winning list, led the list at 210, six under par.

Curtis Strange, who got off to an eagle-birdie start, had a 68 and a 212 total.

He was followed by Kikuo Arai of Japan and Jay Haas, each at 213. Haas had a third-round 70, Arai 71, both at Cypress.

It was two strokes back to the group at 215 that included Australian Greg Norman, who four-putted in his round of 73 at Pebble Beach, West German Bernhard Langer, Lanny Wadkins, D.A. Weibring, George Archer and Larry Rinker.

O'Meara's effort came in something approaching privacy. Most of the merry-making gallery, as well as the national television cameras, were concentrated at Pebble Beach where the celebrity field was on display beneath bright, sunny skies.

There they were treated to: Tom Watson, playing on the course where he won the U.S. Open, going from a contending position to the ranks of the also-rans with a 40 on the back nine;

Jack Nicklaus agonizing over a putt that wouldn't fall and shouting to the ball "You can't do that to me;"

And defending champion Hale Irwin picking the ball out of the rocks on the beach on No. 18, rocks that returned his ball to the fairway on the 72nd hole last year and set up his victory.

None of them, however, really were in the hunt.

Almost all the contenders came from the group that played the rotation of Spyglass Hill, Pebble Beach and Cypress Point and got the best of the weather.

Third round scores Saturday in the $500,000 Bing Crosby National Pro-Am Golf Tournament.

Cieplicki Lifts W&M By Madison 78-70

HARRISONBURG, Va. (AP) — Guard Keith Cieplicki scored 20 points and William & Mary sank 19 of 20 free throws in the final six minutes to upend James Madison 78-70 in an ECAC South college basketball game Saturday night.

The victory boosted the Indians to 10-7 overall and 4-3 in the league, while the Dukes fell to 10-10 and 4-4.

William & Mary led 39-33 at intermission, and James Madison could get no closer than three points in the second half.

George Kingland's driving jumper with 13 minutes left to play pulled James Madison to within 49-46, but the Indians reeled off six unanswered points to pull away.

The Indians' last field goal came with 9:19 to play and gave them a 59-50 lead. Free throws sealed the victory for William & Mary, which connected on 34 of 39 free throw attempts for the game.

Kevin Richardson chipped in 17 points for William & Mary, while Darrell Jackson led the Dukes with 19. Forward John Newman, James Madison's leading scorer, was held to six points on 2 for 11 shooting from the field.

Fla. State.....77

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — Linwood Moye scored 21 points and Keith James added 20 to lead South Carolina to a 92-77 Metro Conference victory over Florida State here Saturday night.

South Carolina jumped to an early 8-0 lead and held the advantage 48-35 at the half, keyed by the play of Moye and James.

The Gamecocks got a strong supporting role out of Jimmy Hawthorne, who scored 14 points and dished out 11 assists. Michael Foster added 14 points for the home team.

The leading scorer for Florida State was Randy Allen with 20, and four other players were in double figures. Alton Lee Gipson had 14, Joe Ferrar had 14, Dean Shaffer had 13 and Maurice Myrick had 10 points.

South Carolina improved its record to 11-6 overall, and 4-3 in league play. Florida State fell to 7-11, and 0-8 in the Metro Conference.

Squirewell added 10 points each for the Lady Pirates. Point guard Sylvia Bragg pulled down 13 rebounds and handed out nine assists to lead ECU.

"I think we ran a variety of things at them," Manwaring said. "We hit with the long pass a couple of times, but we hit some jumpers from outside as well."

"One of reasons we are a good team is we have a strong bench. We had four in double figures tonight; anybody can produce. We don't really rely on one person; that makes us hard to beat."

The Lady Pirates, now 12-8 overall and 6-0 atop the ECAC-South standings, hosts Hampton Institute Tuesday. Hampton, which feature former ECU center Darlene Chaney, is ranked second in the NCAA Division II poll.

"That's going to be a tough game," Manwaring said. "They're obviously strong, and Chaney's very talented from what I've heard."

Over The Defense

Virginia Tech's Perry Young (22) shoots over Baskerville Holmes (43) and William Bedford (50) of Memphis State Saturday. Memphis State defeated the Hokies 91-82. (AP Laserphoto)

NEW YORK (AP) — His team is ranked No. 1 in the nation, he scored a career-high 29 points and his team won by 33 points. What could be better for Walter Berry?

He says he could be better. Berry, the junior college player of the year last season at San Jacinto College in Texas, admitted that his performance in St. John's '97-64 victory over Connecticut Saturday was his best so far.

"That is the best I've played all year," Berry said. "I know I can do a lot better. I can block a couple more shots and I can do a better job of rebounding."

Berry grabbed six rebounds and had 20 second-half points as the Redmen cruised from a 40-30 halftime lead to the convincing final margin.

"I told him to play hard, play smart and it would come," St. John's Coach Lou Carnesecca said. "Our guys gave themselves up and Walter didn't force any. He took excellent shots."

Berry, who played only 29 minutes, made 9 of 12 field goal attempts and 11 of 14 shots from the free throw line. All-American Chris Mullin added 20 points.

"Walter made it look easy, it was a lot of fun," Mullin said. "Today we were just unselfish and we played a good game. We had a good game, but it won't be like this every night. You have to take the good with the bad."

Connecticut pulled to 42-34, 1 minute, 45 seconds into the second half on a bank shot by Earl Kelley, who led the Huskies with 21 points, including the 1,000th of his career. But with the 6-foot-8 Berry scoring at will underneath, the Redmen gradually pulled away.

The victory improved St. John's record to 17-1 and was its 12th straight. The Redmen are undefeated in nine Big East games.

Connecticut fell to 8-10 overall and 3-6 in the conference.

St. John's, ahead 75-60 with 5:35 left, outscored Connecticut 22-4 the rest of the way as the Huskies managed only one field goal in that span, a short jumper by John Shea with 45 seconds remaining. Berry scored St. John's first five points after Alvin Frederick had made it 75-60, then Carnesecca inserted his reserves.

Bill Wenington and Willie Glass scored 12 each for St. John's, all of Glass' points coming in the first half. Frederick had 16 points for the Huskies.

STILLWATER, Okla. (AP) — Tim McCalister hit a 20-foot jumper with two seconds remaining to give seventh-ranked Oklahoma an 83-81 come-from-behind Big Eight Conference basketball victory over Oklahoma State Saturday.

McCalister — who made all seven of his field-goal attempts in the second half and finished with 20 points — had 12 of his points during a 10-minute span that saw Oklahoma erase a 58-48 deficit and take its first lead of the second half, 72-70, with 5:40 remaining.

Oklahoma State was led by Joe Atkinson, who tied his career high with 30 points. That total was set last year against Oklahoma.

Oklahoma remained atop the Big Eight standings with a 6-0 record and is now 17-4 overall. Oklahoma State fell to 11-8 and 2-4.

Oklahoma State took a 47-42 lead at halftime, as Atkinson had 19 points and three blocked shots.

The Sooners never had more than a five-point lead in the game's closing minutes and Oklahoma State tied the score on a shot by Winfred Case following a technical foul called on Oklahoma's David Johnson and a 20-foot shot by Case with 16 seconds remaining.

Two-time All-American Wayman Tisdale led Oklahoma's scoring with 27 points. Johnson had 12 and Anthony Bowie 10.

Ray Alford had 12 points for Oklahoma State.

ANNAPOLIS, Md. (AP) — Junior forward Vernon Butler fired in 24 points and grabbed 13 rebounds to lead Navy past Richmond 80-55 in an Eastern College Athletic Conference Southern Division basketball game Saturday.

The victory gave Navy sole possession of first place in the conference with an 8-1 record and improved its overall mark to 15-3. Richmond, which entered the contest on a seven-game winning streak, fell to 7-2 and 11-6.

Navy led 40-35 early in the second half, but Richmond managed just two points over the next eight minutes and fell behind 59-37, never recovering.

John Newman, a junior forward, pumped in 21 points for Richmond, which led only once at 13-12.

Sophomore center David Robinson added 19 points for Navy. Robinson scored five points during an 11-point offensive surge that saw Navy jump to a 23-15 lead with 8:42 left in the first half.

Richmond rallied to bring the game to its seventh tie, 23-23, but Navy scored six unmatched points and went on to a 33-29 halftime advantage.

NOT ON THE HEAD

WASHINGTON, D.C. (AP) — Burlly Jeff Ruland of the Washington Bullets — he's 6-10 and 240 pounds — is rated one of the roughest men in the National Basketball Association.

He is in his element in the shoving and elbowing that go on under the boards in every game. He says he doesn't even notice it.

But Jeff does admit to one sensitive contact. "Unless I'm hit on the head I really don't feel any of it. But I must admit, if I'm hit on the skull I usually notice it."

Memphis St. Holds Off VPI

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — Third-ranked Memphis State held on to the lead in the Metro Conference with a 91-82 victory over Virginia Tech, but Tiger coach Dana Kirk said Saturday he was worried early in the contest.

"I never thought they were going to miss," Kirk said.

Virginia Tech jumped to a 10-4 lead early in the first half, as Memphis State was having trouble hitting the basket.

But the Tigers came back late in the half to overtake the Hokies and build a 42-35 edge at the half.

Kirk said he was pleased that his Tigers held their cool under Virginia Tech's pressure.

"Our players held their composure early when we fell behind and really fought hard to get back on top," Kirk said. "It is very important for our team to get back on defense against Virginia Tech. If you let Perry Young, Del Curry and (Keith) Colbert get their shots you can count on them hurting you."

Virginia Tech coach Charles Moir said his team played well despite the loss.

"We don't have anything to be ashamed of. We played about as well here not to win as possible," Moir said. "If we played them again, we would play more full-court presses and try to force the turnovers."

The victory was the second in seven days for the Tigers over the Hokies, but Moir said he hopes to meet Memphis State again this season.

"I think we're capable of beating MSU. I hope we met them in the (Metro) tournament," he said.

Senior forward Keith Lee scored 25 points and grabbed 12 rebounds as the Tigers improved to 17-1 overall and 7-1 conference play. Memphis State also got 18 points each from sophomore center William Bedford and freshman guard Vincent Askew. Junior forward Baskerville Holmes contributed 12 points for Memphis State and also collected 13 rebounds.

Memphis State started slow as Virginia Tech, now 14-5 overall and 5-2 in the league, took its 10-4 edge at the 17:31 mark on two free throws by junior center Bobby Beecher.

Virginia Tech held a 6-point advantage two other times in the first half before Memphis State assumed command late in the period.

The Tigers came out after the intermission and took a 59-49 with 12:50 remaining on a jumper by junior guard Andre Turner.

Tech was led by Young and Curry with 24 points each.

Young also had 11 rebounds for the Hokies while Beecher chipped in with eight rebounds and 17 points. Colbert also contributed 17 points to the Tech cause.

Memphis State dominated the boards with 47 rebounds to 33 for Virginia Tech.

Minnesota.....66

BLOOMINGTON, Ind. (AP) — Uwe Blab scored 26 points and Steve Alford 24 as Indiana broke its four-game Big Ten Conference basketball losing streak Saturday, crushing Minnesota 89-66.

The Hoosiers, with a blistering 84 percent field goal percentage in the first half, boosted their record to 12-7 and 4-5 in the conference. The Gophers, losing their third straight and sixth in a row to Indiana, dropped to 11-8, 4-5.

Blab, a 7-foot-2 senior, was a dominating force inside in the first half when the Hoosiers took the lead early. He scored 22 points, hitting all 10 field goal attempts, before intermission, collecting 16 of Indiana's first 26 points.

The Hoosiers outscored the Gophers 20-4 to grab a 34-11 lead with 8:23 left in the first half and kept pouring it on to lead 57-24 at halftime.

Alford, a sophomore guard, scored 12 points in each half. In the second half, the Hoosiers led by as many as 37 points before Coach Bobby Knight emptied his bench.

Blab sat out the last 9:20 and Alford the last 8:48.

Denny McLain Sells Cy Young Awards

DETROIT (AP) — Dennis McLain, facing racketeering, extortion and other federal charges, has paid for part of his defense by selling the Cy Young awards he earned while pitching for the Detroit Tigers, according to a report published Saturday.

"I didn't get very much" for the awards, which honored him as the American League's top pitcher in 1968 and 1969, McLain told the Detroit Free Press during an interview in Tampa, Fla.

The awards, replicas of those lost in a 1979 fire that destroyed McLain's Lakeland, Fla., home, were presented to him in 1982 during ceremonies at Tiger Stadium.

"I'm devastated," McLain told the newspaper, "I'm busted."

He said he planned to sell his 1982 Mercury station wagon next week, calling it "about the last thing we have to sell."

McLain, 40, went on trial Oct. 29 in U.S. District Court in Tampa on federal charges of racketeering, drug dealing, extortion, usury and bookmaking. Conviction on all the charges would be punishable by up to 90 years in prison and fines totaling $110,000.

Three other men are on trial with McLain, the last major league pitcher to win 30 games in one season. Another three charged in the case have pleaded guilty and have agreed to testify against McLain and his co-defendants.

Hamilton Powers Clemson Victory

CLEMSON, S.C. (AP) — Senior guard Vince Hamilton scored 23 points to lead Clemson to a 96-65 non-conference basketball win over Delaware State here Saturday.

Hamilton moved into fourth place on the Clemson all-time scoring list with 1,377 points. He scored seven of the Tigers' first 11 points as they took an 11-2 lead. In the second half Hamilton scored four baskets in 2:40 to fuel the win.

Clemson of the Atlantic Coast Conference is now 12-7, while Delaware State of the Mid-East Athletic Conference is 4-12.

Forward Horace Grant added 19 points and guard Glenn Corbit had 18 for Clemson.

Clemson's tough inside defense limited Delaware's high-scoring duo of center Dominic Snowden and Bernard Campbell to a combined 23 points until the final three minutes.

Snowden scored seven points in the closing minutes for a 19-point game and Campbell had 13. They average nearly 37 points a game together.

Clemson also dominated the boards, outrebounding Delaware State 59-41.

After Hamilton had helped Clemson to its early lead, Corbit went on a hot streak, scoring 12 points in six minutes to stretch the Tiger lead to 35-16 with 5:48 to play in the first half.

Two free throws by point guard Grayson Marshall just before the buzzer gave Clemson a 44-26 lead at halftime.

Hamilton's eight-point binge gave Clemson a 56-34 lead with 13:52 to play.

The victory came at a good time for Clemson, Coach Cliff Ellis said. "We've been sick for a long time," he said, referring to a virus that has been with players since the Virginia game two weeks ago.

"It was not one of our better games, but we were aggressive and that paid off," Ellis said. "We didn't shoot the ball as well as I would have liked, but we got a lot of scoring off second shots."

Clemson returns to ACC action Wednesday against North Carolina State. Ellis noted that the Tigers are nearing the Wolfpack, which lost to Wake Forest Saturday, in the conference standings.

"This will be the second time that we catch them coming off a loss," he said. "We have caught several teams like that and we have had trouble."

Delaware State Coach Joe Davidson said, "I'm not disappointed with the way our guys played. Our two big guys (Snowden and Campbell) got into foul trouble and were not able to play until the later stages when the game had been decided."

"We allowed ourselves to get into a running game with Clemson and that is what you don't want to do," Davidson said.

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — Freshman Cedric Henderson pumped in 21 points, including a field goal with no time showing, to lead the Georgia Bulldogs to a 59-58 triumph Saturday over Louisiana State in a Southeastern Conference basketball game.

Henderson's 10-footer came after Melvin Howard rebounded the ball from the underneath the Georgia basket.

Derrick Taylor sank two free throws with :32 remaining to give Louisiana State a 58-57 lead. With a second remaining, LSU had possession of the ball out of bounds. Freshman John Williams' inbound pass went the length of the court and out of bounds before the buzzer. Howard then rebounded the ball to set up Henderson's shot.

The win improved the Bulldog's record to 14-5 overall and 6-4 in the SEC. The Bengals dropped to 13-6 and 7-5.

Williams, who had 13 points in the second half, and Nikita Wilson led LSU scorers with 17. Wilson had 14 points in the first half. Derrick Taylor had 12 for the Tigers.

Georgia led 31-28 at the half.

A tenacious Bulldog defense stymied the Tigers in the second half. And LSU hit less than 50 percent of their field goal attempts in the second frame.

The lead see-sawed throughout the second stanza as neither team had more than a three point advantage.

Henderson was the only Bulldog in double figures. He also grabbed nine rebounds to lead all players. Howard and senior center Richard Corhen both had 8 for Georgia.

Auburn.....47 (OT)

AUBURN, Ala. (AP) — Kenny Walker hit both ends of a one-and-one at the foul line with five seconds left in overtime to give Kentucky a 49-47 victory over Auburn in Southeastern Conference college basketball Saturday.

Auburn Coach Sonny Smith contended his team was robbed of a chance for a winning shot in regulation because officials failed to stop the clock when Kentucky's Roger Harden fouled Gerald White moments before the buzzer.

Shinn Optimistic After Charlotte USFL Game

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Businessman George Shinn said the turnout for Saturday's United States Football League exhibition game in soggy Memorial Stadium was a "pleasant surprise" that bodes well for his efforts to bring a USFL team to Charlotte.

Some 13,500 enthusiastic fans braved the drizzle in the 24,500-seat stadium to watch the New Jersey Generals beat the Memphis Showboats, 16-3.

Although most of the rain had stopped by kickoff, skies were still so dark that the stadium lights were turned on. But fans applauded in waves several times and many chanted "We want a team!"

"Quite frankly, this morning when I got up I didn't expect half these people because of the weather," said Shinn. "It's a pleasant surprise. I'm really pleased."

Enthusiasm among fans, the media and the business community all indicate Charlotte can support a professional team, he said, adding that he is "shooting for '86."

"Charlotte will support a team —

I'm convinced they will," he said. "We've got 6 million people in a 100-mile radius and no professional sports."

Shinn said he's already overspent his $400,000 budget for this game and another USFL exhibition game Feb. 16 between the Baltimore Stars and the Tampa Bay Bandits. But he said if there's a good showing for the second game, he could "come close to breaking even."

"My purpose is not to make money on these games — I'm not a promoter," he said. "I admit there are questions about the ability of this area to support a pro team and whether it would survive. This is an opportunity to test both."

"I've been involved in businesses where I stand to lose more money, but there's so much public attention on this that I'm going to do my best," said Shinn, who operates a chain of business schools. "I'd rather lose some money now than lose a whole lot of money later."

Shinn said he and his staff have learned from minor mistakes on this game, and that "next game we're going to do a better job and be better organized."

But the biggest hurdle to bringing a USFL team to Charlotte now is the lack of a large stadium, Shinn said.

"I need help — I'm not (Generals owner) Donald Trump; I'm not that rich," he said. "I'm going to have to ask the mayor and everyone else 'What do you think?'"

Some USFL owners have said a Charlotte franchise would require a 45,000-seat stadium. Shinn said talks with some owners indicate that if he moved a team to Charlotte, it could play in Memorial Stadium for two years. If Charlotte did not have a larger stadium by then, he would either have to sell the franchise or move it.

The annual budget for an average USFL team is between $7 million and $9 million, and Shinn said he would lose money even with a television contract if his team were still playing to sellout crowds in the small stadium.

"1985 is going to be critical for the league," he said. "I have an opportunity to see what happens."

Shinn said if the league does not get a television contract, it might be wise to maintain its spring schedule instead of moving to the fall, as some owners have proposed.

"I don't want to get a franchise, move it here and then see the league fold," he said. "It's not just the money, it would be embarrassing."

Oregon St. (14).....83
Stanford.....73

STANFORD, Calif. (AP) — Forward A.C. Green scored a career-high 39 points for Oregon State, and the 14th-ranked Beavers moved into a tie for first place in the Pacific-10 basketball race by defeating Stanford 83-73 Saturday.

Green, held to just 8 points two nights earlier in a loss to California, scored 22 points against Stanford in the second half of the regionally televised game. The 6-foot-9 senior, Pac-10 Player of the Year in 1984, topped his previous scoring high of 33 garnered against Boise State early this season.

Oregon State led Stanford 20-6 early in the game and was up 37-24 at halftime, but the Cardinals fought back to within eight points, 53-45, with 11:18 remaining.

Green made a three-point play and two free throws as OSU pulled into a commanding 60-45 lead with 9:29 left. He made 16 of 23 shots from the field, seven of eight free throws, and was the game's top rebounder, with 11.

The Beavers made their Pac-10 record 6-2, matching Southern Cal's, and improved their overall mark to 16-3. Stanford is 2-7 and 10-9.

Carner Slips, Holds Arden LPGA Lead

NORTH MIAMI BEACH, Fla. (AP) — JoAnne Carner slipped to a 2-over-par 74 Saturday but still managed to stretch her lead in the $200,000 Elizabeth Arden LPGA Classic to five strokes as the rest of the leaders also faltered.

Carner stood at 6-under-par 210 with one round to go. She enters Sunday's final round with a hefty lead over the foursome of Janet Coles, Jane Blalock, Alice Miller and Pat Bradley, who are all tied at 215.

Coles, with a 70, was one of only five players to better par on the 6,092-yard course. Patti Rizzo turned in the only sub-70 round, firing a 68 to put her at 218 for the tournament.

While many of the golfers has trouble with high winds Friday, the weather conditions were perfect Saturday. But Carner said the greens were set up much tougher.

"I think one of the differences (Saturday) was that the pins were all the way back," said Carner, who has won 40 Ladies Professional Golf Association tournaments during her career. "You couldn't get the ball as close and the rough is tough around the greens. Everybody else shot as bad as I did."

The pin placement didn't seem to bother Carner at first, as she ripped off three straight birdies to start the day. But her game did a quick turnaround at that point and she suffered through five bogeys and one double bogey the rest of the way.

"I started so hot, hitting and putting well," Carner said, 45. "Then I started relaxing unintentionally and I couldn't get going. In our group, everybody lost concentration. I was trying to get geared up, but I couldn't."

Carner shot a dismal 41 on the back side, double bogeying the 14th hole.

But the round didn't hurt Carner's standing on the leader board as Miller, her closest competitor after three rounds, skied to a 76. Blalock shot a 72 Saturday and Bradley equalled Carner's 74.

Defending champion Patty Sheehan carded a 74 to fall nine strokes off the pace.

Other than Rizzo and Coles, only Donna White, Lori Garbacz and Japan's Ayako Okamoto beat par. White had a 70, while Garbacz and Okamoto were at 71.

Saturday's third-round scores in the $200,000 Elizabeth Arden LPGA Classic on the 6,092-yard, par-72 Turnberry Isle Country Club golf course:

JoAnne Carner	70-66-74-210
Jane Blalock	67-76-72-215
Pat Bradley	70-71-74-215
Alice Miller	70-69-76-215

Wilson Leads Rose Past Knights, 55-44

Carlton Wilson pumped in 18 points and grabbed 10 rebounds as the Rose Rampants rode a third-quarter scoring blitz to a 55-44 victory over Northern Nash in Big East 4-A high school basketball action Friday.

In the girls game, Kim Dupree fired in 21 points and Chris Holec added 13 as the Rampettes trounced Northern Nash 63-38.

Dwight Smith and Tyrone Smith added nine points each for the Rampants, now 4-4 in the Big East and 9-7 overall. Ricky Thompson paced the Knights, now 3-5 in the conference and 9-7 overall, with eight points.

"I thought Carlton Wilson played his best overall ballgame of the year," Rose Coach Jim Brewington said. "He can get up there and rebound when he wants to. We need him hitting the boards hard."

"This was a big win because it puts us up there where if we can win two or three more (conference) games, we can have that home berth in the tournament. A win like this against a top-quality team gives us confidence."

Reggie Ricks fired in and 18-footer for the Knights to cut the margin to four points, but Mike Hathaway connected on a follow shot with two seconds left in the second quarter to give the Rampants a 31-25 halftime lead.

The Rampants came out hot in the third quarter, scoring the first six points to spread the margin to 37-25 as Wilson and Martin Norville had three points each. Wilson connected on two free throws with 3:35 left in the period to give the Rampants a 39-26 lead, and Rose finished the quarter holding a 43-32 advantage after Julius Jones drove inside for a Northern Nash bucket with eight seconds left.

Tyrone Smith posted four points and Wilson added a free throw as the Rampants built the lead to 48-34 at the 3:49 mark of the fourth quarter.

Ricky Thompson posted six points in the final 2:34 of the game as the Knights trimmed the margin to nine three times, only to have Rose maintain the advantage at the free throw line. Tyrone Smith sank three free throws and Wilson added a pair in the last minute of the game to insure the victory.

"I thought everybody played well," Brewington said. "We started out slow rebounding, but then we came back and took the lead."

"Lenny Langley is going to help us a lot; he makes the other kids play better."

The Rampants return to Big East action on the road Tuesday against the Rocky Mount Gryphons, who beat Rose in the first meeting.

"Now we have to get ready for Rocky Mount," Brewington added. "We should be looking for revenge; that should be motivation enough."

RAMPETTES-LADY KNIGHTS

The Rose girls team held a 26-20 lead at halftime, then posted a 14-9 scoring advantage in the third quarter to expand the margin to 40-29.

In the final period, the Rampettes built the lead to 46-32 on a field goal by Kim Bridges. After Barbara Pittman sank a free throw for Northern Nash, Holec scored inside to give the Rampettes a 48-33 edge with 4:48 remaining.

With Rose leading 50-35, Pittman added a free throw with 4:08 left to trim the margin to 14. But the Rampettes posted 11 unanswered points through the 1:31 mark to seal the victory.

Bridges and Pam Smith added eight points each for Rose, now 3-5 in the Big East and 7-10 overall. Teresa May paced Northern Nash, now 3-5 in the league and 7-9 overall, with 11 points, while Pittman added 10.

Sneed's Free Throws Lift Panthers By Rams 57-46

SNOW HILL — Gentry Sneed connected on seven out of eight free throw attempts in the last three minutes to lead the North Pitt Panthers to a 57-46 victory over Greene Central in Eastern Carolina 3-A high school basketball action Friday.

Levon Shaw led the Panthers with 14 points, while Clifton Williams and Paul Streeter chipped in 13 each.

Maurice Edwards fired in 16 points and Anthony Artis added 15 to lead the Rams, now 3-5 in the ECC and 6-12 overall.

North Pitt improved its record to 9-0 atop the Eastern Carolina standings and 18-1 overall.

"My guys played a great ballgame; it was close all the way," Greene Central Coach Gregg Ashorn said. "They hit 11 out of 12 free throws in the last three minutes; what can you say?"

"I thought we showed a lot of poise this time against North Pitt. We were never in the game the first time we played, but we're 16 games older now. It takes a long time to develop, and we're getting to where we need to be to be competitive."

North Pitt maintained a 31-25 halftime edge, but the Rams trimmed the margin to 40-39 with a 13-9 advantage in the third quarter.

North Pitt travels to Farmville Central Tuesday night, while the Rams host Ayden-Grifton in Eastern Carolina Conference action.

Cynthia Jones pumped in 21 points and Cyndi Hicks added 18 to lead Greene Central's Lady Rams to a 66-40 thrashing of North Pitt in the girls game. Regina Cox paced the Pant-HERS with 18 points, while Bernice Teen Wilkins added 11.

The Lady Rams improved their ECC record to 7-1 with an overall mark of 17-1. The Pant-HERS slipped to 3-6 in the league and 9-11 overall with the loss.

Chargers Top Knights

STANHOPE — Marvin Smith pumped in 25 points and Doug Anderson added 14 as the Ayden-Grifton Chargers slipped past Southern Nash 69-56 Friday in Eastern Carolina 3-A high school basketball.

Mike Dixon chipped in 10 for the Chargers, now 8-1 in the ECC and 14-4 overall. Phil Bryant led the Firebirds with 16 points, and Wilbert Powell contributed 14.

The Chargers raced out to a 24-12 lead at the end of the first quarter, but Southern Nash rebounded to cut the gap to 33-32 at halftime.

"We jumped off to a big lead, but we got careless and they cut it to two," Ayden-Grifton Coach Bob Murphrey said. "They were really fired up."

"We played pretty good again in the third quarter, but it's hard to win down there. They're a different team at home than they are on the road."

The Chargers increased the lead to 49-40 going into the final period, then sealed the victory with a 20-16 scoring edge.

Connors Sweeps Curren

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — Second-ranked Jimmy Connors says he's not sure what's going to happen next.

"I'm just trying to get through the week without losing my sanity," Connors said Friday night after defeating Kevin Curren to progress to the semifinal round of the $315,000 U.S. National Indoor Tennis Championships.

For the first time in three matches this week, Connors put his opponent away in straight sets. He was plagued by inconsistent play as he eliminated Sweden's Jan Gunnarson and Leif Shiras in the second and third rounds.

Connors, the top seed and defending champion, was matched against ninth-seeded Stefan Edberg of Sweden in Saturday's semifinals.

In the other semifinal match, second-seeded Eliot Teltscher opposed No. 3 Yannick Noah. Noah, however, faced the possibility of having to withdraw because of a sprained ankle.

Connors disposed of Curren, the tournament's sixth seed, 7-6 (7-3), 6-4.

Earlier in the week, Connors, having problems with a new racket, admitted that he was struggling. Friday night, he said he was making progress.

"I struggled a little bit," Connors said after the Curren match. "I'm struggling, but I'm not out. I'm hitting the ball solid. It's just a matter of where I want it to go."

Connors is after his third straight title at Memphis.

Heels Pound The Citadel

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — North Carolina, struggling after two consecutive defeats, was mad — fighting mad.

The No. 11 Tar Heels took their frustration out on The Citadel, downing the Bulldogs 83-62 in a non-conference basketball game Friday night.

"I knew they would come out really mad, ready to play, and they were," The Citadel coach Les Robinson said after seeing his team fall to 11-8 after hitting just 38.6 percent of its shots.

Junior center Brad Daugherty scored 18 points and grabbed 12 rebounds as the Tar Heels ran their record to 15-5.

"We're just happy to have won a basketball game," said Smith, whose Tar Heels had lost two straight Atlantic Coast Conference games before beating The Citadel.

"The fast break was probably our best offense tonight and you would think our set offense would be good against The Citadel because of our size," Smith said.

North Carolina led by as many as 19 points in the first half and was up 45-27 at the half. Joe Wolf scored nine of his 13 points in the first half to key the Tar Heels.

North Carolina upped its lead to 22 points at 56-34 with 13:31 left before The Citadel, 11-8, rallied to within 67-55 with 4:52 left. But, the Tar Heels went into their delay game with 4:10 remaining and hit several key free throws to seal the victory.

North Carolina sank 29 of 39 free throws and hit 50 percent of its field goals, while The Citadel hit eight of 11 from the foul line.

"I felt we outplayed them in the second half, but they were the far superior team in the first half," Robinson said. "The game kinda got away from us early in the second half when they got a 21 or 22 point lead.

"But we got back into it, strangely due to our press," he said. "It worked for us because they had their big men in there and we like for that situation to occur."

Buzz Peterson added 15 points for the Tar Heels. Warren Martin scored nine points and grabbed seven rebounds. Kenny Smith had a career-high 13 assists.

"Kenny was sensational. The way we keep assists, he had 22 with just one turnover," Smith said. "On our charts, we give an assist when he passes the ball and someone is fouled shooting a layup. It's not his fault the guy got fouled, is it."

Guard Curtis Hunter, who injured his knee on Jan. 13 against Southern Methodist, returned to the Tar Heels lineup Friday evening, scoring seven points.

The Citadel was led by Regan Truesdale with 24 points, while John Hartwell had 12.

Johnson Confident In Men's Downhill

BORMIO, Italy (AP) — American star Bill Johnson says he is fit and confident for the men's downhill in the World Alpine Ski Championships despite a bout of intestinal flu.

"I am eating again and I expect to be really fit for Sunday's downhill," said the 24-year-old Olympic champion from Malibu, Calif. "It was just a big scare, but really nothing more."

With women's and men's downhills for the combined in the books, the championship schedule was dealt a setback today when the women's championship downhill at nearby Santa Caterina was postponed because of blowing snow. Twelve skiers who managed to complete the 2,523-meter Cevadale course complained to race officials that their performances were hampered by the blizzard-like conditions.

Organizers had tentatively rescheduled the race for Sunday, then decided to wait until after the men's race on Sunday to set a new date for women's event.

At the time of the suspension, Sylvia Eder of Austria was leading with a time of 1 minute, 28.42 seconds. Olympic champion Michela Figini was second in 1:28.46, West Germany's Traudi Haecher was third in 1:28.47 and her teammate, Marina Kiehl, was fourth in 1:28.53.

Johnson was bedridden on Thursday, and he was forced to skip the last two trial runs for Friday's combination downhill.

YOU NOW CAN HAVE A REWARDING FUTURE!!

Utah Defeats Dallas Without Dantley

By The Associated Press
 Adrian Dantley, the National Basketball Association's third-leading scorer, spent the entire game on the bench because of disciplinary reasons as his Utah Jazz took on Dallas.

And Mavericks Coach Dick Motta was sorry to see Dantley there.

"I hate to play a team with a disciplinary problem. You have a tendency to relax," Motta said Friday night after Utah beat Dallas 121-109.

Utah Coach Frank Layden benched Dantley, who is averaging 27.6 points per game, because he missed two practices and a team public appearance in the last week. Dantley did not reveal the reason for the absences, and Layden said he expected the star forward to be back in the starting lineup tonight against San Antonio.

Darrell Griffith took over the scoring slack for Utah, tallying 30 points. Utah also made all 21 of its free throws.

In other NBA games, Boston beat

Kansas City 142-123. Philadelphia tripped Chicago 121-110. Atlanta downed Cleveland 126-108. Indiana stopped Washington 102-95, the Los Angeles Lakers nipped New York 105-104. San Antonio defeated Portland 104-93, and Milwaukee halted Seattle 109-91.

"When you've got a guy like Adrian out of the lineup, you've got to compensate," Griffith said. "We've been beaten by other teams missing their best player. In the NBA, everybody is paid to contribute. When someone goes out, someone else steps in."

Griffith made 13 of 22 tries from the floor, and sank four three-point shots.

"When you see the defense sagging, you just hang around in the (three-point) area and call for the ball," he said.

Rickey Green added 24 points and 17 assists and Mark Eaton blocked 10 shots for Utah. That was enough to offset a 38-point performance by Mark Aguirre of the Mavericks.

A snowstorm held the crowd to an estimated 7,000 fans in Dallas.

Celtics 142, Kings 123

Larry Bird scored 38 points and Danny Ainge had a career-high 26 as Boston exploded for 78 points in the first half to beat Kansas City.

The victory improved the Celtics' record to 38-9, best in the NBA, and 22-2 at the Boston Garden. The triumph was the 100th for Coach K.C. Jones in less than two seasons with the Celtics.

Ainge got 12 points and Bird 11 as Boston rushed to a 40-29 lead after the first quarter. The Celtics increased their margin to 78-65 at halftime before Kansas City got within 111-100 after three periods.

Eddie Johnson scored 27 and Mike Woodson 20 for the Kings.

76ers 121, Bulls 110

Philadelphia's front line of Moses Malone, Julius Erving and rookie Charles Barkley proved a little too tough for visiting Chicago.

Malone scored 23 points and grabbed nine rebounds, Erving scored 19 points and Barkley got 15 points and 11 rebounds. The Bulls, meanwhile, played without high-scoring forward Orlando Woolridge, who is suffering from back spasms.

Rookie Michael Jordan sparked the Bulls with 31 points. He led a charge that sliced the 76ers' lead from 99-84 to 107-104 with 3:50 left in the game.

But a basket by Maurice Cheeks keyed an eight-point spree that put Philadelphia in command.

Lakers 105, Knicks 104

Michael Cooper made two foul shots with 42 seconds remaining as Los Angeles spoiled the return to action of New York's Bernard King.

King, the NBA's leading scorer, had missed eight games since spraining his ankle against Chicago Jan. 11. King finished with 23 points.

The visiting Knicks led 102-97 with 2:04 left, but Los Angeles rallied and then took the lead when New York's Darrell Walker committed a turnover and teammate Rory Sparrow fouled Cooper.

With eight seconds left, Kareem Abdul-Jabbar of the Lakers missed a sky hook, but Walker's shot at the buzzer was short.

Abdul-Jabbar finished with 26 points and 13 rebounds.

Pacers 102, Bullets 95

Clark Kellogg scored 29 points and Herb Williams sparked with a fine offensive and defensive sequence in the fourth quarter to help Indiana hold off visiting Washington.

The Pacers were leading by 14 points early in the final period before the Bullets rallied within three points on a basket and foul shot by Jeff Malone. But Williams, a 6-foot-11 power forward, connected on a three-point play to put Indiana ahead 96-90, and then blocked consecutive shots by Washington's Gus Williams and Jeff Ruland with 1:30 left in the game.

Kellogg followed with a pair of rebound baskets and Williams passed to Vern Fleming for a basket that capped a nine-point run.

Gus Williams had 23 for the Bullets.

Hawks 126, Cavaliers 108

Dominique Wilkins scored 34 points and Antoine Carr contributed a fourth-quarter burst as Atlanta tripped Cleveland.

The Hawks led 88-83 after three quarters before Carr scored eight of his 10 points in the next five minutes as Atlanta took a 106-92 lead.

Eddie Johnson chipped in 23 points and Doc Rivers 19 for Atlanta. World B. Free scored 27 points while Mel Turpin and Roy Hinson had 17 apiece for visiting Cleveland.

Bucks 109, SuperSonics 91

Sidney Moncrief scored 21 points, had 11 rebounds and 11 assists to lead Milwaukee to its 10th straight victory.

Terry Cummings scored 32 points for the Bucks. His jump shot with 3:08 left in the third quarter put Milwaukee ahead for good at 62-60.

Tom Chambers topped host Seattle with 22 points.

San Antonio's Mike Mitchell scored 40 points and the Spurs took advantage of atrocious foul shooting by Portland.

The host Trail Blazers made just 15 of their 33 free-throw attempts. Mychal Thompson, who finished with 18 points and 10 rebounds for the Trail Blazers, made only six of 20 foul shots.

Artis Gilmore had 20 points and 10 rebounds and Johnny Moore had 16 points and 16 assists for Spurs.

Peele Shoots, Rebounds Bullets Past Bath 80-47

JAMESVILLE — Tracy Peele fired in 22 points and pulled down 20 rebounds to lead the Jamesville Bullets to an 80-47 thrashing of Bath in Tobacco Belt 1-A high school basketball Friday.

Robbie Harris and Richie Ange tallied 11 points each for the Bullets, while Kevin Perry added 10.

Steven Braddy paced Bath with 12 points.

After leading 13-10 after the first quarter, Jamesville pulled away for a 33-19 halftime lead. The Bullets held a 17-9 scoring edge in the third quarter, and the reserves carried the load in the final period outscoring Bath 30-19.

"I thought we might be a little down after losing last night (to Creswell)," Jamesville Coach Bill

Johnson said. "But they bounced back tonight and really played good ball."

"(Bath) was kind of small and weak, but they were really scrappy in the first quarter. Then we just kind of wore them down."

Alice Warren tallied 18 points as the Bath girls rallied in the fourth quarter to take a 36-35 win over Jamesville's Lady Bullets.

The Lady Bullets dropped to 3-8 in the Tobacco Belt standings while 3-10 overall.

Jamesville, now 7-4 in the league and 7-6 overall, hosts Bear Grass Tuesday.

Syracuse Tops Villanova

By The Associated Press
 The count in the Carrier Dome was a record 32,520. The count for Dwayne "Pearl" Washington was 25. The count on the scoreboard was Syracuse 92, Villanova 79. And the count for the Orangemen was two in a row.

Washington, Syracuse's sophomore guard, led six teammates in double figures as the Orangemen won for the second straight time over a ranked team.

The ninth-ranked Orangemen, who beat No. 2 Georgetown 65-63 Monday night at the Carrier Dome, played before the largest crowd ever to witness a basketball game on a college campus. The attendance figure broke a two-year-old record of 32,382.

"Obviously, they got their transition game going, and the Pearl once again was just fabulous," Coach Rollie Massimino of 18th-ranked Villanova said.

The victory gave Syracuse a 14-3 record, while Villanova was 14-5. Both clubs are 6-3 in the Big East Conference, led by top-ranked St. John's with an 8-0 mark.

Syracuse used a fastbreak offense to go on a 14-8 run that gave the Orange a 55-40 lead with 13:36 to play. Villanova cut the lead to five points with 6:40 left on a pair of free throws by Ed Pinckney, but that was as close as the Wildcats could get.

Rafael Addison added 21 points for Syracuse, and center Rony Seikaly, a freshman from Greece, had 10 points, 10 rebounds and two blocks. Pinckney had 23 points.

In the only other game Friday night involving a ranked team, No. 11 North Carolina defeated The Citadel 83-62 in Charlotte, N.C.

Second Ten

Center Brad Daugherty scored 18 points and had 12 rebounds, and North Carolina led by as many as 22 points in easily beating The Citadel. The Tar Heels, 15-5, led 45-27 at halftime.

North Carolina's biggest lead came at 56-34 with 13:31 to play. The Citadel cut it to 67-55 with 4:52 to go, but the Tar Heels then went into a delay. Regan Truesdale led The Citadel with 24 points.

OUTDOORS

Angela Lingerfelt

New "Outdoorsman" — As hunting season draws to a close and the fish still aren't biting, a new writer takes over the old column that once used this space, the one called "Outdoors with Joe Albea."

The new writer is Angela Lingerfelt. Yes, that's a female. But don't stop reading just because "girls ain't got no knowledge about outside stuff." I've heard that a lot since I started hunting and fishing, but it hasn't bothered me yet.

I've always loved being outdoors, and I especially enjoy hunting, fishing and wildlife photography. But, just to set the record straight, I admit I'm still a novice compared to all the old-time outdoorsmen in this area. Truth is, I just got my own gun last year.

But since I bought that little 20-gauge single shot, I've spent my share of time sweating in fields of cut corn waiting on doves to fly by. And I've crouched in the bottom of many a ditch, my face biting the dirt, while flocks of geese flew overhead.

I like watching and listening to wildlife so much that it seldom matters if I can bring an animal home. If I shoot (or catch) one, great. I can brag about it, clean it and try a tasty new recipe on it. If I don't get one, that's fine, too, because I had a good time trying.

But I never really come home from hunting or fishing empty handed because I at least bring back some great pictures: a sunset or flock of ducks along the skyline, or even a picture of a bored hunter sitting in a blind nibbling on nabs.

A friend of mine introduced me to fishing and hunting, and I still go with him more than anyone else. Yet, being a girl has its disadvantages when it comes to these traditional male sports. For instance, I'm not allowed to go hunting with him and his buddies on opening day of any season.

"Boy, I wish I could go with you tomorrow," I told him the day before dove season opened this year.

"Look," he said, "The same guys go every year together and girls just aren't allowed. I would love for you to go, but you're supposed to help the girls get everything ready for the dove cookout when we get back."

So I went by myself.

But to make a long story short, I hope to keep this column appealing to local outdoorsmen and outdoorswomen. It will keep you informed of the dates and regulations of hunting and fishing seasons, new laws affecting wildlife and any other information pertinent to local outdoors enthusiasts.

If you've caught an eight-pound bass, brought home a trophy buck or done anything else you think deserves recognition in this column, call me at 752-4886, or at The Daily Reflector at 752-6166, and leave a message. My camera's always loaded and I love to listen to the tales.

Alston, Fulcher Spark Cape Hatteras Win

CHOCOWINITY — Bacy Alston and Jurue Fulcher fired in 14 points each to lead Cape Hatteras to a 55-53 victory over Chocowinity Friday in 1-A non-conference high school basketball action.

Buter Barnette added 10 points for Cape Hatteras, while Roy Hooker, Anthony Garris and Henry Harris paced Chocowinity with 12 points each. Curtis Myers chipped in 11 points for the Tribe, now 7-11 overall.

Chocowinity outscored Cape Hatteras 18-10 in the fourth quarter to trim the margin to two points on a bank shot by Garris. Cape Hatteras missed a pair of free throws with three seconds left, but the ball rolled around and time expired before the Tribe could attempt a final shot.

Kim Green posted 20 points and Tawanda Gerald added 13 as the Lady Tribe defeated Cape Hatteras 59-31 in the girls game.

Green hauled down 14 rebounds and took eight steals, while Zina Warren dished out eight assists.

The Lady Tribe is now 9-4 in the Tobacco Belt and 12-4 overall.

Chocowinity returns to Tobacco Belt action Tuesday hosting Columbia.

Cherry Heads List Of NFL Free Agents

By The Associated Press
All-Pro safety Deron Cherry of the Kansas City Chiefs, one of 269 National Football League players now a free agent, was talking recently about his impending negotiations.

"I want to go back to the Chiefs. We have a good nucleus, particularly on defense and we're a young team," he said. "But if I can't get a good contract from them, I know I'll be playing somewhere."

Actually, for Cherry and the other NFL free agents, the options are limited by a combination of the NFL's restrictive free agent rules and the United States Football League's financial problems. Chances are, that most will be back with their current teams next season.

Cherry, who intercepted a pass in last Sunday's Pro Bowl, is one of four first-team All Pros on the free agent list. The others are Dallas defensive tackle Randy White, linebacker E.J. Junior of the St. Louis Cardinals, and cornerback Mark Haynes of the New York Giants. White was included on the list released by the NFL office although he signed a five-year contract a week before the 1984 season started.

But the free agents also include a number of other key players, including John Riggins, the 35-year-old Washington fullback who was the Most Valuable Player in the Super Bowl two years ago and his Redskins teammates, defensive tackle Dave Butz, guard Mark May and kicker Mark Moseley.

The list also included quarterbacks Steve Bartkowski of the Atlanta Falcons and Phil Simms of the Giants; Simms' teammate, wide receiver Earnest Gray; safety Todd Bell of the Chicago Bears, wide receiver John Jefferson of the Green Bay Packers; tight end Doug Marsh and tackle Luis Sharpe of the Cardinals, and three of Miami's "Killer B's" — defensive backs Glenn and Lyle Blackwood and linebacker Bob Brudzinski.

The other name of note is wide receiver Cris Collinsworth of the Cincinnati Bengals, who two years ago signed a futures contract with the USFL's Tampa Bay Bandits. On Thursday, Bandits owner John Bassett said that if Collinsworth wished, he could return to the Bengals in return for his $500,000 signing bonus.

That was only one reflection that the USFL's financial pinch had closed what once had been a wedge in negotiations for NFL players. For NFL teams almost never sign free agents because of prohibitive compensation requirements — only one player — Norm Thompson — has jumped from one team to another in the more than a decade the rules have been in effect. Thompson, a defensive back, went from the St. Louis Cardinals to the Baltimore Colts after the 1976 season.

Those rules specify that if a team signs a player entering his third year for $280,000 or up, it owes his old team two No.1 draft picks; from $230,000 to $280,000, a first and a second pick; from $180,000 to $230,000, a first and a third; from $140,000 to $180,000, a first; from $120,000 to $140,000, a second, and from $100,000 to $120,000, a third. From $80,000 to $100,000, a team gets a chance to match the salary.

Moreover, the USFL, having lost more than $100 million in its two years, is now more interested in saving money than spending it.

"The USFL has not been aggressive in signing NFL players this year," says Cherry's agent, Leigh Steinberg, who last year negotiated quarterback Steve Young's $40 million contract with the Los Angeles Express and just re-signed Kenny Easley, the NFL's Defensive Player of the Year, with the Seattle Seahawks.

Stern Begins Second Year At NBA Helm

NEW YORK (AP) — On a roll. That describes both the National Basketball Association and David Stern, who this weekend begins his second year as the league's commissioner.

Attendance is up 7.5 percent from last season's record pace; the league's television picture is brighter; labor problems have been solved, and a majority of the teams are expected to make money this season.

Some problems remain. One team, the Clippers, switched cities this season and is facing a league-filed lawsuit because of the move, while a second, the Kings, wants to move from Kansas City to Sacramento, Calif. And, while the NBA's anti-drug program generally seems to be working, veteran stars John Drew and John Lucas suddenly quit their teams this season after a relapse of cocaine abuse.

Yet Stern, 42, whose glasses, 5-foot-10 frame and slight paunch is in marked contrast to the giants he supervises, is unshakably upbeat about the NBA's progress and future.

"The things we have worked on over the years are beginning to pay dividends," said Stern, who joined the NBA as general counsel in 1978. "Those things that occupied our time a few years ago are being replaced by our ability to focus on more constructive things, like great players and games. This year, for the first time, we can sit back and appreciate how far we've come."

To stress the point, Stern said that there were 100 more requests for media credentials for the Feb. 10 All-Star game in Indianapolis than for last year's game.

"Cities once thought of the All-Star game as a burden," Stern said. "Now it's a major showcase for the league."

Three years ago, then-Commissioner Larry O'Brien shook his head over a laundry list of NBA woes — labor strife, drug problems, tottering franchises and dwindling television ratings.

O'Brien said it sometimes was appropriate to glance across the street from the 15th-floor NBA offices to St. Patrick's Cathedral and say a little prayer for the future of the league.

The spires of St. Pat's still cast shadows on the league headquarters, but the outlook is decidedly more sunny.

Average attendance through the first 507 of 943 scheduled games this season was 10,873, up 7.5 percent from a year ago. Thirteen of the 23 teams showed attendance increases, compared with nine clubs averaging fewer fans. Portland, which sells out Memorial Coliseum for every home game, was unchanged.

More people are watching at home, too. Lured by rookies such as Michael Jordan of Chicago and Akeem Olajuwon of Houston, and established stars such as Julius Erving of Philadelphia, Larry Bird of Boston and Kareem Abdul-Jabbar of the Los Angeles Lakers, ratings for the NBA on CBS are up 4.8 percent from 1984.

A precedent-setting contract with the players' union that avoided a strike on the eve of the 1983 playoffs now is in full effect, including testing for drug use. Those spot checks led to Lucas and Drew leaving their teams, but they also have been credited with helping several other stars, including Micheal Ray Richardson, stay away from the drugs that once threatened their careers.

Things already were turning around when Stern took over on Feb. 1, 1984.

"My first priority was to make work the programs already in place," said Stern, who was O'Brien's right-hand man in formulating those policies. "A year later that judgment has been borne

NORFOLK, Va. (AP) — Linda Page scored 21 of her 36 points in a first-half explosion that lifted North Carolina State to an 82-71 women's college basketball victory Friday over No. 2 Old Dominion.

Page, a senior forward, gave N.C. State the lead for good at 6-4 on a five-foot jumper with 18:29 remaining in the first half. A 16-foot jumper by Page at the 4:41 mark of the half gave the Wolfpack a 41-22 lead, its largest margin of the game.

Junior forward Teresa Rouse added 16 points for the Wolfpack and reserve forward Trena Trice contributed 10. The Wolfpack, connecting on 29 of 58 field goal attempts, improved to 14-5.

Old Dominion, which shot 43.3 percent from the floor in falling to 18-2, had four players in double figures. Medina Dixon scored 18, Adrienne Goodson had 14, Lisa Blais added 12 and Tracy Claxton chipped in 11 for the Lady Monarchs.

Mullin's Shot Finds Mark With Practice

NEW YORK (AP) — When Chris Mullin struggled with his outside shot earlier this season, St. John's basketball Coach Lou Carnesecca was far from worried.

"Even Joe DiMaggio had slumps," Carnesecca said, while Mullin was in the midst of shooting 39 percent from the field over a six-game stretch. "It'll come. Besides, he does so many other things."

Mullin brushed off talk of a slump. "I'm not throwing the ball over the backboard and I feel good when I shoot. The shots just are not dropping," the 6-foot-6 senior swingman said at the time.

All kinds of reasons for Mullin's troubles were offered:

—Olympic burnout.
—Distractions from the media, where stories ranged from vehemently denied rumors of illegal payments for Redmen players to one profile that mocked Mullin's Brooklyn accent.

—The problem of working new players, like 6-8 junior college hotshot Walter Berry, into the St. John's system.

Picked as the No. 1 team in at least one preseason poll, St. John's survived early season scares against St. Bonaventure and Fordham and lost at Niagara.

"We're just not playing as good as we're capable of," Mullin said at one point.

Whatever the reasons, both Mullin and the Redmen have weathered the storm.

St. John's catapulted into the top spot in the rankings after its 66-65 Big East Conference victory over defending NCAA champion Georgetown Jan. 26, ending the Hoyas' 29-game winning streak. With Wednesday night's 77-60 victory over Providence, the Redmen were 16-1 overall and 8-0 atop the Big East.

And Mullin's left-handed shots, from the 15-to-20-foot range, have been falling with more accuracy since the Redmen won the Holiday Festival in December. In the process, Mullin, a self-styled gym rat, broke the all-time St. John's record of 1,826 points set by Bob Zawoluk from 1949-52.

Mullin, at home at either guard or forward, broke the renowned Georgetown press with his smart ballhandling. He got strong support from 7-0 Bill Wennington and Berry, who has emerged as an inside force. Mullin also sagged on defense to help Wennington contain All-American Patrick Ewing.

"He doesn't beat you with speed," Georgetown swingman Reggie Williams said of Mullin, who had a fine all-around game with eight rebounds, three assists and two blocked shots against the Hoyas. "He beats you with calm."

A perfect example came as the game neared its end.

After Michael Jackson's driving shot reduced a one-time 18-point Redmen margin to one point, Mullin let the clock tick off while he held the ball. He inbounded it with one second left, giving the Hoyas no chance for another shot.

"You do that on purpose?" a sports writer asked him.

"Oh, yeah," Mullin said matter-of-factly with a smile. "I knew the clock was running."

"He's another coach out there," said Carnesecca, who had wooed Mullin since his star was in grade school. Carnesecca beat out Duke and Virginia in the long run, selling Mullin on staying home at the Queens school that has no dormitories.

Through the victory over Providence, Mullin had 2,048 career points and was leading the Redmen with a 17.8 scoring average. He was third in rebounding with a 5.1 average, first in assists at 3.9 per game and first in steals with 41.

He plays the entire game, too. Carnesecca rarely rests Mullin unless the game is out of reach.

"The only thing wrong with Mullin that I can see is that he doesn't shoot enough," said Frank McGuire, the former college and pro coach who now is the head of college basketball at Madison Square Garden. "But they'll set more screens for him in the pros and he'll get his shots."

Dick McGuire, the New York Knicks' chief scout and a former St. John's star, has high praise for Mullin's shooting, passing and ability to get free.

"They say he's a step slow," McGuire said, "but I've never seen anybody blow by him. I'm not saying he's going to turn around a franchise, but he's going to play in the NBA for 10 years."

"And he's a gym rat. This guy can't get enough. Everybody says, 'Stop Mullin and you stop St. John's.' No one has done that yet."

Sutton Returns After Off Year

PEBBLE BEACH, Calif. (AP) — Hal Sutton had the golf world in the palm of his hand that autumn day in Los Angeles.

He was awaiting his turn on the interview stand and heard Jack Nicklaus, the man he had just beaten for the 1983 PGA Championship, predict that Sutton would "win many, many more championships, and he will win many major championships."

Headly stuff for a 25-year-old. Sutton, then in his second season on the PGA Tour, had become accustomed to achievement, success, triumph.

He had just won his first major tournament, following an earlier victory in the Tournament Players Championship. He had just locked up leading money winner and Player of the Year honors. And he was being praised by the great Nicklaus.

It was no surprise. It was just what Sutton had planned, just what he had expected.

"His future," Nicklaus said that day, "is unlimited."

And that's when it stopped. Sutton can pinpoint the moment.

"It was at the PGA," he said. "I'd done everything I'd wanted to do at that point. I just quit. I forgot all about how to play golf. It's easy to give up. And that's what happened. I quit. I made a big mistake."

By most standards, Sutton's 1984 campaign was far from a disaster. He won $227,949. He finished in the top 10 in 11 of 23 starts. He was ninth in scoring average with a 70.9 mark.

But Sutton, a former national amateur champion and the tour's record-setting Rookie of the Year in 1982, had higher standards.

"It was mortal hell," he said.

He didn't win in 1984. He achieved none of the goals he set for himself. He picked up some bad habits with his swing. Most importantly, his desire had waned.

"I'd be standing over a three-foot putt, and I didn't want to putt it," he said. "I didn't even want to be playing golf. I wanted to be somewhere else, doing something else. I was just going through the motions. And it's better to totally quit than just go through the motions."

"It was a matter of priorities. I didn't set any real goals for myself. I had some kind of half-hearted targets, but no real goals. I kind of let up. I was having trouble with my swing, and I'd never had that kind of trouble in my life."

For 1985, Sutton insisted, the situation had changed.

He said he's made "a little swing change," and gone to a new putter. The swing change, he said, came after he had viewed some old films of himself. Asked for a layman's description of the change, he smiled and said:

"It's simple: Keep your head down. I wasn't. And I wasn't releasing on the shot."

The changes have worked wonders, he said.

"I've been searching for a lot of things," he said. "And I think I've found some of them. I feel comfortable on the golf course. I can't tell you how long it's been since that happened. I'm playing aggressive. I have confidence again."

"You know, I can kid everybody but myself about my golf game. I know when I'm playing well and when I'm just going through the motions, and I can't kid myself about that. Last year, I may have fooled other people, but I knew I was just going through the motions."

"Now, I feel good about my game. I think my new confidence, my newfound confidence, is going to take me where I want to go."

Sutton said his goals for 1985 were: "Win a golf tournament on the West Coast. Make the Ryder Cup team. Win four tournaments, with one of them a major."

"That's kind of lofty," he said. "And maybe I'm being outspoken in telling you that. But that's what I'm working for. I'm confident I can do it."

"I may not win this week. But if I don't, maybe I'll win next week, or the week after that. I will win. I will be a factor. I expect to be a factor any time I play."

Race Jockeys Subpoenaed

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — Numerous jockeys have been subpoenaed to appear Feb. 13 before a federal grand jury here as part of an investigation into allegations of horse race fixing that a racing official says may extend into three states and Canada.

Ten jockeys have been subpoenaed, The Cincinnati Enquirer reported in Saturday's editions. The inquiry has focused on races at River Downs in Cincinnati and Darby Downs in Columbus, track officials said.

Thomas F. Becker, a special agent in the FBI's Louisville, Ky., office, said subpoenas have been served by the agency's Cincinnati and Louisville offices. He would not say how many subpoenas there were or what tracks were involved.

Auto Rate Hike OK'd

RALEIGH (AP) — Insurance Commissioner Jim Long said he simply made the best of a bad situation by accepting a 4.4 percent increase in automobile liability rates when a blunder by his predecessor could have cost North Carolina drivers $25 million.

But that predecessor, former Insurance Commissioner John Ingram, said in a prepared statement Friday that the rate increase that goes into effect March 1 shows "the sellout of Jim Long to the insurance industry that bankrolled his campaign."

Despite the increase, most drivers will not pay more for auto insurance this year because industry officials agreed Jan. 3 to a 6.6 percent decrease in collision and comprehensive coverage, Long said Friday.

"It's one of Mr. Ingram's last gifts to the consumers," said Long in a news conference about what he called a defective rate hearing notice. "What we did was take a very bad situation that we walked into and tried to come out in as good a posture as we could."

Under a settlement between the Insurance Department and the industry, no additional rate increases will be sought in 1985, he added.

Long said his office entered negotiations with the industry after learning that former Commissioner John Ingram had issued a defective notice of a Monday hearing on a North Carolina Rate Bureau request for an 11.8 percent liability policy increase.

Under state law, requested insurance rate increases take effect automatically if the commissioner doesn't issue a proper hearing notice, Long said.

He said Ingram issued a notice, but the Attorney General's Office said it wasn't specific enough. "There was a strong possibility that the full 11.8 percent increase might have gone into effect" because "a defective notice is no notice at all," said Long.

Ingram, in the prepared statement, defended the notice and said it was prepared by an attorney who represents Long.

On Thursday, Ingram accused Long of switching government witnesses for the upcoming hearing in deference to the industry. Long denied it.

Wachovia BankLineSM

The prime-based line of credit up to $50,000 or more that's as easy to use as writing a check.

There's no easier way to borrow in North Carolina than Wachovia BankLine, a prearranged line of credit up to $50,000. Simply write a check — at any time, for any amount up to your credit limit.

BankLine is inexpensive, too. The interest you pay is tied to Wachovia's Prime Rate.* And unlike most banks, Wachovia bases your interest rate on your credit line, not the amount you borrow.

Wachovia also offers Equity BankLine, a line of credit of $10,000 or more based on the equity you have in your home. There are no loan origination fees, although the normal mortgage loan closing expenses apply when the line is established and at every 10-year anniversary.

BankLine	Your credit line:	Your interest rate:	APR for January was:
(unsecured or secured with liquid assets)	$10,000 or more	Prime + 1%	11.75%
	$ 5,000 to $9,999	Prime + 1 1/2%	12.25%
	$ 2,500 to $4,999	Prime + 2 1/2%	13.25%
Equity BankLine (secured by real estate)	$10,000 or more	Prime + 2%	12.75%

Your rate may vary monthly. If the Prime Rate goes down, so does your interest rate. But no matter how high the Prime Rate should go, under present North Carolina law the maximum Annual Percentage Rate (APR) you will be charged on unsecured lines is 18%; on secured lines, 15%. The minimum rate is 8% APR.

Talk to a Personal BankerSM soon about BankLine. Find out how easy and inexpensive borrowing can be.

*"Prime Rate" refers to that interest rate set by the Bank from time to time as an interest rate basis for commercial and consumer borrowings. The Prime Rate is one of several interest rate bases used by the Bank. The Bank lends at interest rates above and below the Prime Rate.

Chemical Firms Expecting Slow Earnings In '85

By JAMES F. PELTZ
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The financial performance of the nation's major chemical companies generally improved in 1984 despite mixed showings in the fourth quarter. But the earnings gains likely will moderate in 1985 as the companies' strong cyclical upturn from the 1982 recession loses steam, industry observers say.

Analysts attribute the income slowdown to a U.S. economy that will be less robust than in 1984; the continued strength of the dollar, which curbs the level of foreign sales translated into dollars and generates additional imports to the United States; and continued price weakness and excess capacity in certain chemicals caused in part by those imports.

Assuming the economy remains relatively healthy in 1985 despite a slower rate of growth, operating earnings in the chemical industry should climb about 15 percent, down from a 40 percent increase last year, estimates William R. Young, head of research for basic industries and technology at the investment firm Dean Witter Reynolds Inc.

On the plus side, declines in oil prices and other raw materials used in making chemicals have improved the companies' cost structures, although the declines make it harder for the companies to rationalize higher prices for their products.

Break-even points were lowered via productivity gains that stemmed from the 1981-82 recession, allowing the companies to make money at lower rates of factory utilization. And consolidation efforts to further improve productivity are continuing.

Du Pont Co., for example, offered a voluntary early retirement plan this past week that could affect as many as 6,500 employees, or 4 percent of its workforce.

The plan, aimed at saving the Wilmington, Del.-based concern $225 million by 1986, is largely meant to further streamline the company after its 1981 acquisition of Conoco Inc., an oil company.

Reminders Of Spanish Past Remain In Old Town

WHALEY HOUSE

San Diego is often called "the place where California began" — when the Portuguese Conquistador Cabrillo landed there in 1542.

The Mission of California was built in San Diego in 1769. The city has grown under Spanish, Mexican and American rule. Visible reminders of a Spanish past remain.

Old Town and the Presidio mark the site of the first white settlement on the west coast. The city stretches from the Pacific Ocean eastward over rolling hills.

Old Town has dozens of quaint shops, boutiques and restaurants spotted around the fringes of the state historic park that preserves several of the city's earliest buildings. Several of the historic landmarks in Old Town are Serra Cross which marks the site of the first mission in California, Casa De Bandini which was built as a one-story house with a ballroom, once the center for community social life, the Mason Street School was the first public school in San Diego.

Whaley House was built of hand-made bricks by Thomas Whaley, a merchant, in 1857. It was Old Town's first two-story mansion and once housed "the Tanner Troupe" theater company and later served as the San Diego County Court House until records were transferred to New Town March 31, 1871. Restored and refurbished on the grounds are relics of Old Town drugstore, herb and rose gardens.

Casa De Estudillo, 1827-30, was one of the finer homes of early San Diego and a center of community life for many years. Helen Hunt Jackson's novel Ramona, became associated romantically with this house. The house has been restored and furnished and is part of Old Town San Diego State Park.

Squibob Square was named for humorist George Horatio Derby. He is known as one of the foremost and earliest writers of "Western style of humor." Derby is known for his Stetches and Burlesques and The Squibob Papers.

Candle Carver, Margaret Drake, Works In Old Town

Eight years ago when her son was 14, Margaret Drake of San Diego wanted some type of work which could be done at home and she thought of painting.

"A friend came over and suggested I carve candles. He later came back with a tank. After many pounds of wax later and finding out about different waxes and dyes, I taught myself carving on trial and error. Candles can't be patented, so no one will tell you anything about the procedure," said Mrs. Drake.

Her tools include kitchen knives bent to various shapes and an electric frying pan with a hole drilled in it — to level the bottoms of the candles. She makes the candle bases at home using metal molds. She works in a candle shop in Old Town part time and demonstrates candle carving.

"I dip each candle 30 times to get the different variety and depths of color," she said. Mrs. Drake dips each one in colored wax and then in water. After the dipping is finished, she has approximately eight minutes to carve while the candle is still warm. After the candle is carved, it is dipped in a glaze solution which protects it from dust. She creates candles in basket weave, turn overs and twists, candle cane and bows designs. Her wedding candles (to be burned at the altar) are sometimes done in colors to match the colors of bridesmaids dresses. The bottoms of the candles are cut off and made into mushrooms by Mrs. Drake. The mushrooms are then given to children who come into the shop.

"When I started carving the candles, I told my son, Brett, that I was going to do this to put him through college. He is now finishing his master's in social welfare," she said.

Mrs. Drake grew up in London, England, and trained to be a nannie. This involved a two-year course with intensive training. "I worked three and a half days a week at a nursery and went to college two days a week where we studied everything from health, nutrition, psychology — to how to make toys — we studied what ever you needed to know about kids.

The exams we had to take were given for two days and were oral and written. It was stiff course," she said.

She met her husband in England at a holiday camp that catered to 6,000 people a week who stayed there. "I was a nannie and he was a host. He first saw me in a room of 200 babies," she said.

The candle shop is one of many located in Old Town. The picture to the right of the one of Mrs. Drake shows the entrance to the area where she works.

Johnson-Meadows Vows Solemnized Saturday

Natalie Lynn Meadows, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jimmie Davis Meadows of Route 1, Ayden, became the bride of Scott Faulkner Johnson, son of Mr. and Mrs. James Elton Johnson Jr. of Route 1, Ayden, Saturday at 3 p.m.

The double ring ceremony was performed in the Ormondville Free Will Baptist Church by the Rev. Jack Mayo.

A program of music was presented by Emily Jones, pianist, and Brenda Shirley sang "More," "One Hand, One Heart" and "Wedding Prayer."

The bride was given in marriage by her parents. Her maid of honor was Elizabeth Meadows of Ayden, sister-in-law of the bride. Taking Stock Of Your Career

By CHANGING TIMES
The Kiplinger Magazine

Money isn't the only thing you expect to get from your job, but for most people it's one of the most important things.

Whether or not you're earning "enough" depends in part on your own particular wants and needs, but there are a few objective yardsticks you can use to measure your progress.

If your career is on the right track financially, it will stand up well to these tests:

— Your raises have been more than enough to keep you ahead of inflation.

— Your pay is in line with that of others in your field.

— Your employer's fringe benefit package is at least as good as that offered by most other companies.

— You are in a field that has bright prospects for future employment — a field that is growing rather than stagnating or shrinking.

The beginning of the year is a good time to check on how you're doing.

Compare your salary increase with the rise in inflation. That will give you a rough accounting of whether you had a net gain or loss over a period of time.

The general consumer price level has more than doubled since 1974 (up 103.5 percent), and the rise was 22.4 percent from 1980 through the end of 1984. Have your earnings risen by as much?

Company-paid benefits, tax-free, shield you at least partially from a fast-rising cost of living. Fringes such as health insurance, free parking, use of a company car, van pool rides, low-priced meals in a company lunchroom, free job training or funds for outside education, and payment of your dues in professional associations or social clubs, free up cash you can use for other things.

If your employer offers fringe benefits on the cafeteria plan, you can put together a package tailor-made for your personal circumstances.

For instance, if you don't need a parking space, you could use the credits to increase the contribution going into a thrift plan or some other benefit that is more valuable to you.

When you take into account the dollar value of the total compensation from your job — cash income plus fringes — you may find that even though your salary increases have barely kept pace with rising prices, you are better off than you thought because various fringe benefits have been protecting you against certain price increases.

The total dollar value of fringes as a percent of payroll varied widely in a Chamber of Commerce survey, but the fringe benefits received by the average American worker amounted to over a third of annual salary.

Keep in mind that your employer considers as fringe benefits everything paid in addition to your salary for time on the job — not only your vacation time and insurance but also sick leave, pension, lunch and coffee breaks, even what the company pays for you into government-required unemployment and workers' compensation funds and the employer share of your Social Security contributions.

One of the easiest ways to boost your earnings in a hurry is to change employers — that is, if you're in a field for which there is a strong demand for labor.

In the years between 1982 and 1995, the following occupations will experience the strongest growth in employment, with probable strong demand for services and ease of job advancement to increase earnings: chemical and industrial engineers, computer programmers, accountants and auditors, legal assistants, and registered nurses.

Of course, median earnings among these occupations vary greatly, with the 1983 median for legal assistants being $16,400, nurses $21,000, computer programmers $24,500, and chemical engineers $32,500.

The fields of college teachers and typesetters-compositors are shrinking, and some occupations — such as clergy, law enforcement personnel, and file clerks — will experience very little growth.

If you are not satisfied with your career progress, you need to plan what you are going to do about it. If your company is a good one but your out how you can apply your career skills to a job in a more promising industry.

At Wits End
By Erma Bombeck

I know you're all familiar with the woman at the party who gets attention by saying outrageous things. The one who, if Mary announced, "I'm expecting a savior," would say, "Me too!" Well, this person proclaimed the other night that by this March everyone would be wearing miniskirts again.

Can you imagine what it's like to have 50 women suck in their breaths at the same time? All the hors d'oeuvres were airborne for a full three minutes.

One woman in a baggy jacket that hung loosely over eight yards of skirt with an elastic waistband asked for a stronger drink. Another one went to the phone with tears in her eyes and said she was getting a second opinion.

For awhile, we talked among ourselves of what it was like when miniskirts lived among us.

You could never pick up an object that had fallen on the floor unless you (a) were in the room alone (b) were closely surrounded by three walls (c) had been married to the other occupant for at least ten years.

When you were offered a chair, you had to turn up the thermostat on your underwear, slide onto it from front to back and make sure there was always a napkin, handbag, or pillow nearby to cover your knees.

Finding your eight-inch slip was an exercise in aerobics. Once I remembered going through an entire afternoon, only to be told in a whisper, "Your blouse is hanging out from under your skirt."

Getting into a car and driving in a miniskirt would have gotten most of us arrested, had we not been home room mothers, car-pooling children to a bible study meeting.

We all sat there and numbly looked forward to a future where everyone backed out of a room.

After all, if Mary Tyler Moore and Marlo Thomas had rotten back-of-the-knees, who were all of us to try to pull it off? The back-of-the-knee certainly isn't the best part of a human body I've ever seen.

"You have to admit," I said, "For the last couple of years, it's been good. Sweaters with sleeves that would have slipcovered Iowa. Overblouses with belts that no one ever saw. Full skirts that swirled around our ankles and baggy jackets that gave no hint of what was hidden underneath."

One woman giggled, "Last year, I even told my Jane Fonda video to stick it in her ear."

"Why don't they want us to be happy?" said one of my friends. There was a moment of silence when one of the women said, "How about crossing our legs once more in comfort for old times' sake?"

Everyone in the room crossed their legs. We would have to remember it for a long time.

Preschool Is Good Investment Says Educator

ECU News Bureau

"Good preschool programs are one of the best investments the public can make," according to Dr. Peggy Koonce of the ECU early childhood education faculty.

Expansion of school readiness programs in order to reach small children from low-level socioeconomic backgrounds has become "increasingly important" as the percentage of small children from poor homes has risen, she said.

"Educators can cite case after case of children in need, but at state level, the figures are staggering," Dr. Koonce explained.

"In North Carolina about 79,000 children under five live in poverty, and 220,000 between five and 18 are poor."

"Of female-headed households with children under six (56,696), more than half live in poverty. It has been estimated that 283,000 'latchkey' children between the ages of five and 11 are at home alone after school every day, but one state official has said that figure is too conservative," she said.

Three-fifths of the 15,000 four-year-olds in the state who live in poverty are not being served by preschool programs, Dr. Koonce said. "The need for programs for these children is evident."

"Several follow-up studies have shown that high-risk children who were enrolled in quality early educational programs are less likely to repeat a grade or be referred for special education. They were also shown to be more likely to feel positively about education."

Research has also indicated that good preschool programs are "one of the best investments the public can make," she said. "They can reduce the arrest rate among teenagers, and the high school dropout rate. They make it more likely that young people will be able to hold down jobs and stay off the welfare rolls."

"By making preschool opportunities available to the children in desperate need of them, we can help children break the poverty cycle," she added.

Dr. Koonce addressed an appeal recently to members of Delta Kappa Gamma society for women educators, urging them to become advocates for early intervention programs.

"An effort is being made to begin programs for three- and four-year-olds as a part of the public schools. This effort will need our active support," she said.

"Early childhood education for learners at risk is essential, since the early years of life are important ones in the full development of a child's potential. Intelligence is not fixed at birth, but may be altered by environmental conditions," said Dr. Koonce.

"Promoting early childhood programs is cost effective. These programs create benefits to society as a whole. Children are not just 30 percent of our population; they are 100 percent of our future," she stated.

Dr. Koonce, a Washington, N.C., native who holds degrees from ECU and UNC-Chapel Hill, has been a classroom teacher in Beaufort County and an early childhood education staff development coordinator for the Department of Public Instruction. In addition, she has lectured widely to groups of educators and is an active member of professional educators' organizations.

Producing Rosebushes Is Intensive Work

By GUY WEBSTER
The Arizona Republic
EL MIRAGE, Ariz. (AP) — With 2 million rosebushes blooming on his farm near El Mirage, Leyton Woolf Jr. doesn't keep any cut roses in his home.

"I guess it's like the native Arizonan who never sees the Grand Canyon," he said.

Woolf appreciates roses, though, and can name by sight most of the 105 varieties on the farm.

Rows and rows of roses on four farms between El Mirage and Litchfield Park display their colors and fragrance to passers-by. With about 800 acres used for the two-year crop, the locale ranks in the top three rosebush-growing areas in the nation, Woolf said. The others are near Wasco, Calif., and Tyler, Texas.

Leyton Woolf Farms, run by Woolf and his father, Leyton Woolf Sr., had about 105 acres of rosebushes ready for December-January harvests. The crop was sold to wholesale nurseries even before it was planted two years ago.

Retail nurseries will offer his rosebushes for sale to backyard gardeners all over the nation in the spring.

"Rosebushes will live a long time, but in certain parts of the country, they'll die when the winters are bad," Woolf said. "When we see that Buffalo's had a hard winter, we know there'll be good sales there the next spring."

Roses have been a sideline at the Woolf farm for six years. The farm's major crops are cotton, wheat and citrus. An occasional rosebush sprouting on its own in a cotton field gives the farm some of the prettiest weeds in the state. A number of nearby farms also raise rosebushes.

The rosebushes get about 7 feet of irrigation water each year, Woolf said. That is more than cotton because the roses are watered for more months of the year than cotton.

Woolf's production costs total about 40 cents for each rosebush. The prices paid and charged by wholesalers vary depending on the grade of the bush, whether the bush is a patented rose variety, and other factors.

Woolf explained that growing a rosebush is really like growing two plants. The rootstock must be established the first season. Then the blossoming stock, which is grafted on as a single bud during the first season, grows out during the second year.

All 105 varieties of roses on Woolf's farm are growing on the same type of rootstock, named Dr. Huey. Branches of Dr. Huey are gangly and leafy with few blossoms, but Dr. Huey roots have been selected for the vigor they give to grafted-on branches of other varieties.

The planting, grafting and most other jobs in rosebush farming are done by hand. Three-fourths of the total production costs are for labor.

With approximately 240 acres in various stages of the two-year crop, Woolf's farm employs about 25 people in year-round rose jobs, and many more seasonally between October and June.

Branches of Dr. Huey rootstock from 1-year-old bushes on the farm are cut into 9-inch lengths. Indoor workers trim most buds off these sticks, tie them in bundles of 200 and dip them in chlorine and a fungicide to prevent plant diseases. Paid at a piece rate of less than a penny a stick, a fast worker can earn up to $350 per week, employee Diane Mejia said.

Field workers poke these sticks a few inches deep into moist soil. The sticks are irrigated soon after planting, and 95 percent of them will take root to become bushes the next season, Woolf said.

Each quarter-mile row gets 2,500 to 2,800 sticks. Workers receive $10 for each row they plant, and a fast worker can plant four to five rows per day, Woolf said. He prefers paying on a piece rate to encourage productivity.

Meanwhile, in fields of 2-year-old rosebushes, other workers collect branches from each variety so that buds from those varieties will be available for grafting next spring. Bundles of these branches will be kept in cold storage until then. The 2-year-old bushes are cut back to two or three stems a few inches long, then dug out of the ground, roots and all.

The sticks each receive a single bud of a flowering rose variety in the spring, inserted under a T-shaped slit in the bark about an inch above the soil surface. Most of their growth next summer will be branches of Dr. Huey, however.

In February 1986, these bushes will be cut back to about 2 inches above the ground. That year, the summer's growth will come from the grafted-on varieties. The bushes will be harvested the next winter and sold by retailers in the spring of 1987.

Artist Says Touching Adds Enjoyment Of Sculpture

By DENNIS GILDEA
Centre Daily Times

CENTRE, Pa. (AP) — As Leonard Scott talks, he runs his fingers over the dark, bluntly angular face of the West Indies Man.

Over and over, he traces the same rhythmic, soul-satisfying pattern from forehead to chin and back again. He occasionally looks at the face; he never stops caressing it.

"You can't look at sculpture without feeling it," he says, "and they don't let you do it in museums."

"Feel this," he says, offering the West Indies Man. "It's green serpentine stone. Easy to carve, nice to feel."

Friend and poet Jack McManis of State College said, "Leonard goes to Philadelphia (Art) Museum, and he always touches the sculpture when he thinks the guard isn't looking. Of course, he always get reprimanded."

But recently in the Ross Library in Lock Haven, nobody was reprimanding the Mill Hill man for touching the sculpture. After all, they were his pieces of sculpture and his one-man exhibit, and he could do with them what he wanted.

Leonard Scott is 72, a lifelong resident of Clinton County and a retired house painter and stone mason who turned to sculpting 17 years ago. The Lock Haven exhibit is his first.

"It's something I wanted to do all my life," he says of sculpture. "I always thought I could do it, but I was always too busy. Didn't have the time. I told myself. And I didn't know anything about it."

He also spent, by his own estimate, the first half of his life in alcoholism.

"I was self-employed in the painting and decorating business, but I wasn't working a whole lot and the work I did was not the best quality," says Scott, who has been sober now for 31 years.

"I used to think of those 25 or 30 years as wasted, but I don't think that anymore. It took that long for me to decide I couldn't live that way any longer."

Sculpting did not turn his life around. It's something he worked on only after developing the strength of will even to begin working.

"I consider my recovery mostly spiritual," Scott says. "Sculpting helps me have a good sense of spiritual awareness, but I can't explain how or why. Sculpting seems to fulfill some deep personal need I have, but I don't think if I quit (sculpting), I'd start (drinking) again."

Scott insists he doesn't believe in talent.

"People say, 'I wish I had your talent,' but I don't think that way. Anybody could do it if they wanted to. I just have the desire to do it."

"And people talk about how much patience it takes. But I'm very impatient. If I have any patience at all, it's because I want to do it so badly."

"If I have any talent, it's God given, and I'd better do something with it."

"When I go to museums and see the stuff the great ones have done, I think I never want to work again. Then I go back home and get going."

Scott is famous in Clinton County for being the man who sculpted the panthers for Bald Eagle-Nittany High School in Mill Hill. They are his largest works.

"I started with pieces of limestone that were 1,000 pounds and 850 pounds and ended up with pieces of about 200 to 250 pounds," he says.

He did two panthers because the first was vandalized. "It was easier to make another one than to patch it up," he said.

Seattle Area Brides Rarely Opt For Really Luxurious Wedding

By KATIA BLACKBURN
Associated Press Writer
SEATTLE (AP) — Getting married in Seattle can be simple and inexpensive or elaborate and outrageously spendy, though the high ceiling may not sound high to some Easterners.

Salli Harris has been a wedding consultant for brides in the greater Seattle area for 15 years. The most expensive local wedding she has ever heard of cost $50,000. Conversely, there are those couples who spend a grand total of $40 — for the required tests and licenses.

A true wedding with about 100 guests has a less dramatic, though still significant, price range.

Ms. Harris says the cost can go from $1,200 to $20,000, depending on where and how the wedding is done.

The $1,200 wedding, she says, takes place at home with minimal decoration, simple invitations, rented tux for the bride's father and simple gowns for the bride and her mother, two attendants, taped music, friends or relatives taking pictures, punch with no alcohol and the family providing simple foods such as salads, meats, cheeses, bread and modest white wedding cake. "It would be a lot of work, but you'd be using what you've got," says Ms. Harris. "It can be a really nice, in-home thing."

A middle-range wedding, Ms. Harris says, can be put together for $3,100 to $3,800. This means renting a church hall or mansion for the reception, four to six attendants, more elaborate flower arrangements, champagne and beer, a catered meal which family members help put together and serve, a fancier cake, a small musical group at the reception, a simple package of professional photos, and finer clothing for the bride and her family.

"That's the one the girls are going for now," Ms. Harris says.

Seattle area brides rarely opt for the really luxurious weddings, Ms. Harris says, though she's helped organize many of what she calls middle-of-the-road fancy weddings for $6,000 to $8,000.

Such an affair includes six to 10 attendants, many more flowers, a reception in a private club or hotel, engraved invitations, a string quartet at the church and a band at the reception, a fancier chocolate or carrot wedding cake, refined purchased clothing for the bride and her family, and champagne, wine and beer.

Much of the cost in this caliber wedding lies in having selected a club or hotel, which invariably insists upon providing expensive food and alcohol for a cost of up to $30 a head, Ms. Harris says. A taxed gratuity automatically is tacked on.

"Even families with a great deal of money like it if I hold it to under $10,000," Ms. Harris says.

"You can have a really nice function for this kind of money. Twenty-thousand dollars is a lot of money. I would work hard, because I'd want it to have elegance and simplicity, and not be overbearing. But it's not necessary. A great deal of money doesn't mean it's the best.

People often spend too much money because they don't have the experience or knowledge."

Ms. Harris says she often advises clients to hold their reception in a mansion, where they can bring their own alcohol and select their own food caterer.

"It pays off to do it where you can control it," she says.

June Weddings Last Year Ranked High

By RANDOLPH E. SCHMID
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — Americans marched to the altar last June at the highest rate in years, government statistics indicate.

Some 306,000 American couples tied the knot in June, according to figures collected by the National Center for Health Statistics.

That's a rate of 15.8 marriages per 1,000 Americans — the highest level for any one month since June 1978, when the rate was 16.0.

But despite the surge in June — traditionally the most popular month for weddings — the national marriage rate remained relatively level on an annual basis.

Barbara Wilson of the statistics center suggested two factors may have resulted in the jump in marriages in June:

There were five Saturdays in June, she pointed out, which increases the likelihood of weddings in the month because half of all weddings are held on Saturday.

But, she added, the increase in the June marriage rate, without a corresponding hike in the annual rate, may also show that people are being more deliberate in their wedding plans.

Couples who plan to marry may increasingly be choosing the time when vacations are easier to schedule and the weather may be better for outdoor parties, she suggested.

For the 12 months ending June 1984, the marriage rate was 10.5 per 1,000, close to the 10.6 recorded in the year that ended with June 1983.

The number of marriages in the United States has been increasing in recent years, but only enough to keep pace with the growth of the population, causing the rate to remain relatively steady, Ms. Wilson observed.

The nation's annual marriage rate peaked at 12.2 per 1,000 persons in 1945 with the end of World War II, a time when young men were returning from the service, forming families and launching the subsequent Baby Boom generation.

But the rate dropped to 9.3 a decade later — the first time it fell below 10 since the hard economic times of the Depression — and bottomed at 8.5 in 1960.

After that low, the rate began climbing steadily again, reaching 10.6 in 1970, and the annual rate has remained in that general area since then.

June's 15.8 per 1,000 marriage rate

Dear Abby

By Abigail Van Buren
1983 by Universal Press Syndicate

Ex-Wife's Offer To Talk Intrigues Man's Fiancee

DEAR ABBY: I am very much in love with a man I've known about a year. We have plans to marry soon. "Joe" is 41 and I am 29. This will be my first marriage and Joe's third. Yesterday I received a letter from Joe's second wife, whom I had never met. She said, "If you want to meet me, I will be glad to tell you about my marriage to the man you hope to spend the rest of your life with. This letter comes from someone who wants only to help you. I am sorry that Joe's first wife didn't offer to meet with me before I married him." Abby, her letter had a sincere and benevolent ring to it, and I want very much to meet this woman, but I don't want to be disloyal to Joe.

TEMPTED

DEAR ABBY: What do you do when the grandparents forget their grandson's birthday?

WABASH, IND.

DEAR WABASH: Gently "re-mind" them of the oversight. (Better late than never.) And next year remind them about two weeks in advance of the date.

(Getting married? Send for Abby's new, updated, expanded booklet, "How to Have a Lovely Wedding." Send your name and address clearly printed with a check or money order for $2.50 (this includes postage) to: Dear Abby, Wedding Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

DEAR TEMPTED: Don't be disloyal to Joe. Tell him about the letter from Wife No. 2, but don't expect him to be overjoyed. Should you see her? You have nothing to lose—except some illusions, perhaps.

Bridal Policy

A black and white glossy five by seven photograph is requested for engagement announcements in The Daily Reflector. For publication in a Sunday edition, the information must be submitted by 12 noon on the preceding Wednesday. Engagement pictures must be released at least three weeks prior to the wedding date. After three weeks, only an announcement will be printed. Wedding write-ups will be printed through the first week with a one column picture. During the second week, a one column picture will be used with a write-up giving less description and after the second week, just as an announcement. Wedding forms and pictures should be returned to The Daily Reflector one week prior to the date of the wedding. All information should be typed or written neatly.

DEAR ABBY: I am an attractive 26-year-old female. I've never been married, but I probably will marry when I fall in love.

My mother is pressuring me to get married and let a man take care of me. I have a college degree, a good position and am perfectly capable of taking care of myself. My father keeps reminding me that I am not getting any younger.

The guy I'm currently dating is considered a "good catch," but I don't love him. He's serious about me, but I like him as a friend. I'm not in love with him and I told him so.

My mom says I'm being foolish—that 99 percent of the women who marry don't marry for love, and it's time I grew up and faced reality.

Please give me your opinion.

OLD MAID AT 26

DEAR 26: You are not an "old maid." And you appear to be sufficiently grown up to chart your own course. I'm sure your parents mean well, but you're wiser than they are. Tune them out.

Lost Micronesian City Of Nan Madol Is 'Place Of The Gods'

By CHARLES J. HANLEY
Associated Press Writer
POHNPEI, Micronesia (AP) — The lost city of Nan Madol is finally surrendering its secrets — clues to the long-distance voyagers who paddled out to people the Pacific centuries before Europeans dared cross the great sea.
Westerners first saw Nan Madol in the 1820s. But only recently have archaeologists discovered that the abandoned royal settlement, built on 92 artificial islets in a crystal-blue South Seas lagoon, is rooted much more deeply in antiquity, 1,500 years ago, than previously thought.

"Nan Madol represents one of the earliest political centers we can document anywhere in the Pacific," says William Ayres, a University of Oregon anthropologist whose 1984 research at the site was sponsored by the National Geographic Society.

Island legend holds that Nan Madol was built in a "place of the gods." And the setting could indeed be divine.
The mile-by-half-mile complex sits atop a coral reef that fringes this lushly mountainous island, midway between Hawaii and the Philippines.
At 130 square miles Pohnpei, formerly called Ponape, is one of the largest of the more than 2,000 islands that make up Micronesia, an ocean territory the United States has administered since 1947 under a U.N. trusteeship.
Nan Madol's surrounding lagoon, shallow, calmer waters between the outermost reef and the Pohnpei shore, teems with iridescent fish, giant mangrove crabs and bright-feathered seabirds, flashes of color in the brilliant tropical sun.
Local Pohnpeians in needle-like outrigger canoes glide across the lagoon, headed for favored fishing grounds. But few other visitors to remote Pohnpei ever venture down its jungle-covered east coast to Nan Madol.
In the Pohnpeian tongue, "nan madol" means "between the spaces," a reference to the lacework of twisting channels that separate the little isles.
To withstand time and the sea, the artificial platforms were built in a staggeringly laborious process.
Multi-ton basalt columns, naturally formed by volcanic activity, were stacked horizontally, log cabin-style, to form outer walls. The inside then was filled with coral rubble to form a dry surface several feet above high-tide level.
Radiocarbon testing finds signs of human habitation at Nan Madol as early as 500 A.D., and the megalithic construction was completed by about 1500, Ayres said in an interview in the United States.
The largest of the islands are 100 yards long. The most impressive, the fortress and burial site Nan Dawas, is ringed by basalt walls rising 25 feet above the water.
Except for a few small stone structures, whatever buildings stood on Nan Madol — probably wood or thatch — vanished long ago. But archaeologists have pieced together its story from excavations and from the oral history handed down through generations of Pohnpeians.

They say Nan Madol was a residential area for the island elite and a sacred site for the ancient people's rituals — including the annual feeding of turtle to the "holy" eel, the open-air burial of the "saudeleus," the royal rulers, and the making of "sakau," a root-derived narcotic beverage.
"Nan Madol was filled with magic" local guide Peter Arthur explained. "One island had a reflecting pool in which they say the king could look and see his enemies coming."
At its height, Nan Madol was believed to have housed 1,000 people, Ayres said. It apparently was abandoned in the 18th century, for reasons now lost in time. Today, coconut palms and tenacious mangrove trees lord over much of Nan Madol.
The organizational prowess demonstrated by the lagoon city is what most impresses the experts.
"I was shocked when I first saw Nan Madol 15 years ago," said one of the deans of Pacific archeology, 60-year-old Dr. Yoshihiko Sinoto of Hawaii's Bishop Museum.
"Such huge stone structures in the middle of nowhere — it was a tremendous achievement requiring a great social system to mobilize the population over such a long period."
The professionals, citing the lack of hard evidence, disparage speculation that outsiders inspired the building of Nan Madol.
Arthur, a 24-year-old American who was reared in Pohnpei and is close to the native oral historians, says one tale, about two brothers who came here from a distant land and ordered Nan Madol built, points to a possible ancient connection with Japan, 2,400 miles to the northwest.
A finding that does excite the professionals is the ancient pottery uncovered at Nan Madol, the easternmost such discovery in Micronesia.
It is similar to ancient pottery of eastern Melanesian islands north of Australia, archaeologists say, and may help trace the migratory patterns of the people who first paddled out into the Pacific some 5,000 years ago, relying on an uncanny ability to steer by wave, current and star patterns.

"The discovery of pottery gives us a new picture of early settlement," Ayres said.
But major questions remain about Nan Madol and the ancient Pacific voyagers: How did they quarry and transport the huge rocks? What motivated them to build Nan Madol?

And why did they become island-locked about 1400 A.D., able no longer to build massive ocean-going canoes?
"We've only begun to scratch the surface," said Sinoto.

India Currently In Cultural Spotlight

By JOAN MOWER
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — India is definitely in this year, and the rage has Americans transfixed by a movie and a television series and awaiting a multimillion-dollar nationwide "Festival of India."
"There's been a climactic sort of change in our understanding of India and our enthusiasm for the place," said S. Dillon Ripley, a longtime India-ophile, secretary-emeritus of the Smithsonian Institution and festival co-chairman.
The renewed interest is ascribed to a confluence of events: movies, news stories and a steady improvement in U.S.-India diplomatic relations over the last couple of years.
The opening this summer of the $12 million "Festival of India," conceived during the late Prime Minister Indira Gandhi's 1982 visit with President Reagan, should boost the India mania sweeping the country.
The year-long festival, subsidized by the Indian and U.S. governments and private groups, will bring a vast and dazzling variety of cultural and social events.
"Americans will have a unique opportunity to learn about the culture, music, dance, science, art, history and life of the world's largest democracy," the Smithsonian said in a statement promoting the festival.
The Washington opening in June is set to coincide with a planned visit to the United States by Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi, who succeeded his mother after her assassination last October.

Gandhi and First Lady Nancy Reagan are the festival's honorary patrons.
Highlights of the festival are a "living exhibition" of musicians, painters, potters and others at Washington's National Museum of Natural History; an Indian fair at the Smithsonian's annual folklife festival; exhibits of Indian art at New York's Metropolitan Museum of Art, Cleveland's Museum of Art and San Francisco's Asian Art Museum; and dance and musical performances at New York's Lincoln Center and Washington's Kennedy Center.
That's just the tip of the iceberg, says Joan Sands, the festival's publicist.
"At the current moment, 42 cities are involved and that's not counting the touring exhibits," she said.
In New York, she said, the yearning for things Indian has embraced fashions, cuisine, decorative arts, furniture and fabrics.
At least one department store, trend-setting Bloomingdale's, will have an India theme throughout the store in early 1986.
Although India, with its famed sites like the Taj Mahal and fabled Himalayan mountains in Kashmir, is considered by some a tourist and shopping mecca, recent violence in certain may have served as a brake on travel.
"Our general feeling is there was a dropoff in travel" late last year, said State Department spokesman Richard Weeks.
Last November, the department urged Americans to avoid areas where anti-Sikh rioting had occurred, but that advisory has been relaxed, Weeks said, adding that tourists now are told to use ordinary caution.

The latest Transportation Department figures show about 5,200 India-bound departures last August, roughly the same as the August 1983.
Part of the India fad stems no doubt from a critically acclaimed television mini-series now unfolding on Mobil's "Masterpiece Theatre" — the "Jewel in the Crown."
Based on four novels by Paul Scott, commonly called "The Raj Quartet," the television series depicts life in the waning days of British rule over India.
The series is such a success that some Washington hostesses have planned dinner parties so as not to interfere with the Sunday-night viewing, and some local stores have sold out of Scott's books.
Also showing to packed movie houses in several cities is David Lean's "Passage To India," a film based on E.M. Forster's 1924 novel about two British women who visit India.
The movie, featured with Lean on the front of Time magazine, is doing "extremely well," said Dan Gilroy at Variety, an entertainment weekly.
The blockbuster, which recreates the halcyon days of the British raj, premiered in the nation's capital at a fund-raiser arranged by socialite Evangeline Bruce, the widow of diplomat David K. Bruce.

"It seems to be a year of India," said Lady Marjory Wright, the wife of Britain's ambassador to the United States.
"Passage to India" follows on the heels of several other movies about the country, including the successful "Gandhi," and "Heat and Dust."
"Some people say this interest in India is cyclical," said Deepak Vohra, press attache at the Indian Embassy, noting there seems to be a "certain raj nostalgia."
Besides emotional feelings for India, Vohra said there are substantive reasons for improved U.S.-India relations. Trade, for instance, is about $4 billion between the two countries, having trebled over the last five years.
And he predicted the December disaster at Bhopal, in which more than 2,000 people were killed by a gas leak at a Union Carbide plant, would not have a long-term effect on U.S.-India relations because "the people of India don't blame the people of the United States."
At the State Department, an official who asked to remain anonymous said tensions between the two countries have existed over the amount of U.S. aid to Pakistan and India's tilt toward the Soviet Union.

Revised Book About Andy Griffith Show

By STEVE BAKER
Associated Press Writer

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — More about the fictional town of Mayberry, N.C., is on the way from a university professor whose first book on Andy, Barney, Opie and Aunt Bee has sold out three printings.

Richard Kelly, who teaches English to University of Tennessee undergraduates, said "The Andy Griffith Show" is one subject of which he never tires.

Instead of a fourth printing, Kelly decided to rewrite the 1981 edition of "The Andy Griffith Show" (John F. Blair, $8.95) and add a new chapter on the writers who spun the tales of small-town life in the South.

"I made a few slips in plot summaries," Kelly said of his first effort. "I remember one story where I said Andy went fishing and caught a bass. People really watch the show closely. I found out from many letters that it was a silver carp."

In addition to the new chapter on the series' writers, Kelly is including the script of a show that was never produced and a short trivia section.

"The Andy Griffith Show" was produced by CBS from 1960-68 and starred Andy Griffith as Sheriff Andy Taylor. Don Knotts played his deputy, Barney Fife, while Ron Howard played Opie, Sheriff Taylor's son, and Frances Bavier played Aunt Bee, Taylor's aunt.

Kelly, a New York native, was first exposed to life in North Carolina when he taught at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. He began research on the book in 1975 after being encouraged by colleagues at the University of Tennessee and his publisher.

Letters from all types of people and from all parts of the world have found their way to Kelly who says lawyers and students are his most frequent correspondents.

"It's a most appealing fantasy," Kelly said. "Mayberry is a place where people care, where they have an identity, where things don't change."

"All problems are resolved by the end of the show and problems with death, decay and morality just aren't there. In current comedies no one really cares about each other."

Other new material in the second edition deals with such issues as the effort to rename a North Carolina town Mayberry and the current lives of the series' actors and actresses.

Miss Bouvier lives in Siler City, N.C., a town often mentioned in the series. It's near Mount Airy, the hometown of Andy Griffith and the model for Mayberry.

George Lindsey, who played a gas station attendant named Goober, still portrays the same character on the syndicated "Hee Haw" television show. Knotts kept many of Fife's mannerisms in his later characters, including the landlord in "Three's Company."

Kelly once wanted "The Andy Griffith Show" revived, but now he doesn't think so. "I think it would be a disaster to bring all those people together again," he said. "The Andy Griffith Show" was good because all of the right people were at the right place at the right time. That mix only happens once every 50 years."

Acquires A Whistler

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Fifty-three etchings by the 19th-century American expatriate artist James Abbott McNeill Whistler have been acquired by the Los Angeles County Museum of Art as a gift from Julius L. and Anita Zelman.

The museum says that with the Zelman gift it will "have one of the finest collections of Whistler etchings in this country." It says the works "include the major phases of the artist's graphic oeuvre, including Whistler's celebrated themes of the London wharves, atmospheric Venetian views, and the streets of Amsterdam and Brussels, as well as genre scenes, portraits, and other landscapes."

Hillsborough Man Maintains A Museum Of Musical Instruments

By LAURIE KIRKLAND
Durham Morning Herald

HILLSBOROUGH, N.C. (AP) — Everybody knows Thomas Edison invented the light bulb. But how many people are aware of the brainstorm Edison had in 1887? That was the gramophone. Edison's records were grooved around the size of a soup can. The cylinders were used in the first jukeboxes, invented in 1905. There are probably only six or seven of those jukeboxes left now, according to Doyle Lane, one of a handful of people in the country who restore old musical machines. Near his home in Hillsborough,

Lane has put together a museum of antique machines that serenade visitors with musical selections ranging from delicate Christmas carols to bawdy circus tunes. Lane said he always wanted a player piano, but wasn't seriously interested in antique musical machines until he bought a player piano from a friend about 15 years ago. He discovered he liked working with old machines and started fixing other people's machines as a hobby. Eventually, he quit his job as a salesman to restore old machines full time and to set up a museum. Lane and his wife, Priscilla, moved to Hillsborough about six years ago. Mrs. Lane operates a small restaurant beside the museum.

All of Lane's musical machines play by themselves — the only thing the operator needs to know is how to turn them on. They range in size and complexity from a whistler, a 1915 carved wooden man that whistles a tune, to giant orchestrions that can reproduce the sounds of a 25-piece orchestra. People don't usually think about music when someone mentions the Industrial Revolution. But Lane's museum is filled with the enthusiasm for invention that broke out in the middle and late 1800s and spilled over into this century.

"In the early days, of course, they prided themselves in being able to make anything play by itself," Lane said. Most people have heard about player pianos, but Lane's collection includes a violin, an organ, a banjo and a dulcimer that play by themselves. The violin was called the "Violano-Virtuoso" and is accompanied by a certificate that says it was designated by the U.S. government as "one of the eight greatest inventions of the decade."

The machine was invented by the Mills Novelty Co. in Chicago and was exhibited in San Diego in 1908 at a U.S. Patent Office display of great inventions. A set of knobs alternately press down on the strings to create different pitches, while a small wheel vibrates over the strings like a bow. The player banjo was invented by the American Automatic Banjo Co. in 1896. The banjos only lasted about 10 years, however, Lane said, "because they sounded so bad."

One of the most beautiful of the player instruments is a 1927 Steinway "reproducing player piano" that plays back the notes of a song and the expression, such as loudness or softness, with which the notes were played by a particular person. The piano has a ghostly effect, because the keys appear to dance up and down by themselves. Lane said his favorites are probably the orchestrions — the giant machines that may produce sounds of an organ, tambourine, drums, triangle, accordion and xylophone. One of his orchestrions was built for James Packard, who founded the Packard Automobile Co. The machine is about 10 feet long and high, about 5 feet wide and probably cost about $20,000 when it was built in 1912, Lane said.

Like the player piano, the orchestrion plays songs on paper rolls that have been punched with a pattern of holes that the machine reads as notes, and, in the case of an orchestrion, notes to be played by a particular instrument.

Lane has bought an orchestrion from someone in California, he has bought home music boxes from England and he has a coin-operated piano that used to be in the Bucket of Blood Saloon in Virginia City, Nev.

He works on his own and his customers' machines in a large room adjacent to the museum. There he disassembles the machines and reconstructs bellows, strings, valves or other parts that have deteriorated.

Lane said he has always enjoyed music, but was never particularly talented. He still likes to play the piano. "I'm not much good at it anymore, because I never practice," he said, looking around at his collection of machines. "I spend all my time working on these things."

LOTS OF POPPING — Actor Gabe Jarret lies on a pile of popcorn spilling out of a house after a recent shooting scene for a new film, "Real Genius" on a lot near Los Angeles. A press release claimed over 190,000 lbs — 95 tons — of raw popcorn was converted to 90,000 cubic feet of popped corn, which was used in the scene in which a laser is supposedly aimed at a house filled with unpopped corn, causing it to explode. (AP Laserphoto)

FROM SHEPPARD MEMORIAL LIBRARY

By WILLIE MAE GIBBS

Two very practical and helpful guidebooks for parents of school-aged children are among the new books at the library.

Linda Albert, who has been professionally advising parents for fifteen years, shares her expertise on all aspects of child rearing in her most recent book, "Coping With Kids and School." Parents concerned about budget cutbacks and changing priorities in the schools will find her advice essential in their efforts to make a difference in the quality of their children's education. Responding to questions frequently asked, she addresses such diverse subjects as building a supportive home environment, creating a more effective parent-teacher relationship, overcoming academic problems, getting support for non-traditional families, and seeking help from the school specialists.

Mrs. Albert assures parents that having a busy lifestyle does not mean sacrificing full participation in their children's academic well-being. Her book shows parents ways to encourage children to take charge of their school experience. It also includes many supportive suggestions for improving communication between parents and children. "Coping With Kids and School" puts important information at parents' disposal that can be referred to again and again as they face the difficult but rewarding job of parenting.

"Help Your Child Succeed With a Computer" by Carol and Hebert Klitzner is another timely guide for parents. It presents all the information parents need to answer the numerous questions that arise in regards to purchasing a computer for children to use at home. The authors indicate that the key to the decision of whether to buy a computer or what kind to buy is understanding the child's skills and personality and knowing what he or she wants to do — and can do with a computer. They explain what to look for in children and how to discuss computer activities with them. They show the wide variety of activities available to the child with a computer — learning activities, creative activities, and numerous other activities that spring from the child's own interests and abilities.

Information is included in this book to help parents understand how computers can help with homework and hobbies, how to try out a computer before buying it and what to look for and where to buy it. The book discusses specific brands of software and computers, with charts comparing 17 different computers, ranging in price from under $100 to over $2,000. An extra bonus that the Klitzners offer in this book is a crash course in computer basics, so that the parent who knows little about computers can educate himself before helping to educate his child.

New Art Show At Pitt Hospital

A new show of art, including paintings by a Greenville man and calligraphic copies of poems by his wife, plus paintings by a Louisburg artist, is currently on view along ground floor corridors at Pitt Memorial Hospital.

The show is being presented in two corridor areas just behind the central elevator behind the lobby of the main building of the hospital complex.

Bob Pittman, a Greenville artist, is showing a selection of watercolors. In conjunction with his paintings, his wife Claire is displaying copies of some of her poems in framed pages of calligraphic script.

The third artist with work in the show, Ralph Ihrle of Louisburg, include paintings based on a trip he made to Russia recently. Ihrle was formerly an art student at East Carolina University.

The hospital is sponsoring a changing exhibit of art each month with the assistance of persons in the hospital's volunteer services. The Pittman-Ihrle show succeeds a loan exhibition from the Greenville Museum of Art which included shadow boxes by Vincent Smith.

The public is welcome to visit these shows.

Winterville Native To Lecture On Famed Judicial Case

A historical case which changed the norms of the Southern judicial system will be presented in a lecture entitled "Justice Vindicated: The Case of William L. Harper, 1930-1932," to be given by Dr. H. Lewis Suggs on Monday, Feb. 4, at 8 p.m. in Mendenhall Student Center's Auditorium 244 on the ECU campus in Greenville.

The lecture is free, open to the public, and is sponsored by the Student Union Minority Arts Committee and the ECU Department of History's Richard C. Todd — Phi Alph Theta Series.

Dr. Suggs, assistant professor of history at Clemson University, was born and raised in the Pitt County town of Winterville. After graduating from W.H. Robinson High School in 1959, he attended North Carolina Central University to begin his undergraduate work. He received his bachelor's and master's degrees from NCCU, and his PhD from the University of Virginia.

Dr. Suggs believes his rural background had a great deal to do with his academic success. According to Dr. Suggs, "When you emanate from the soil, you work harder." His area of specialization is southern and black history.

Dr. Suggs' latest research has been on the case of William L. Harper, a case that in 1932 began the change of race relations in the southern judicial system.

The case involved a white woman, Dorothy Skaggs, who accused Harper, an indigent black man, of raping her in Norfolk, Virginia. In his first trial, Harper was convicted of the crime. But the white community of Norfolk demanded a retrial for the black man. He was then acquitted of the crime, and in an unprecedented act in southern history, Dorothy Skaggs was convicted of perjury. It was the first time a white woman's word was disallowed in court.

The importance of this case, Suggs believes, is that "there is a larger issue here. The entire judicial system was at stake. The issue of law and racial relations in the south was forever changed."

Gray Gallery Shows

Three new shows are opening on Thursday, Feb. 8 at The Gray Art Gallery on the East Carolina University campus. The gallery is open to the public without charge. Gallery hours are 10-5 weekdays, 1-4 Sundays, closed Saturdays.

The three shows to be on view are:
• Edward Reep, Selected Works: 1970-1985. Reep, artist-in-residence at the School of Art, ECU for the past 15 years, will show representative works of this time period. The showing is in honor of Reep's retirement, and will be on view through March 2.

The catalog and reception for the Reep exhibition are funded through the courtesy of North Carolina National Bank which owns a number of Reep's paintings which it is lending to the exhibition. Other Reep paintings are being borrowed from museums and private collections.

• "Tri-State Sculptors — Small Works and Drawings." is an exhibition of small scale sculpture by members of the Tri-State Sculpture Guild including artists from Virginia and the two Carolinas. The show was selected by Norman Keller, professor of sculpture at East Carolina University and president of Tri-State Sculptors. It is designed to illustrate the scope of work by sculptors in the three-state area. The show will travel to art centers and galleries throughout the Southeast.

Three New Shows Opening At GMA

Three new art shows are opening this week at the Greenville Museum of Art, 802 South Evans Street. A reception, open to the public, will be held from 7 to 9 p.m. Tuesday.

Director Peter Weir Making A Film On America's Amish Sect

By BOB THOMAS
Associated Press Writer
LOS ANGELES (AP) — For Australian director Peter Weir to make a film about such a uniquely American phenomenon as the Amish sect of Pennsylvania, he had to immerse himself in that way of life.

"I did seven weeks of physical scouting and six weeks of research and casting," Weir said. "During that time my life was Amish, Amish, Amish, and I had known nothing about them before. I learned that their customs were not a one-day ritual but something they observed all year around."

"I was profoundly affected by what I saw. The life the Amish lead is the same as in early Australia. I could identify with how my great grandparents and my grandparents lived on the farm."

"Witness," which Paramount Pictures will release Feb. 8, is the result of the Australian filmmaker's months in Pennsylvania. He describes it as "a chance to revisit the past," both for the audience and for Harrison Ford, who plays a Philadelphia detective hiding out from killer cops.

Ford takes refuge with an Amish family and learns their austere ways: no autos, electricity, radios, not even buttons on their plain clothing, since buttons are considered vain.

Weir, 40, is one of the principal figures in the creative explosion of Australian films during the past decade. Like George Lucas, Steven Spielberg and other young American filmmakers, Weir was profoundly affected by the Saturday matinee movies.

"How fondly I recall coming out of the hot, stinking Australian summer into the cool darkness of a movie house," he said. "How much I enjoyed the bang-crash-shooting of the action and booted the love scenes. Even when we got our first TV set in 1958, I wanted to turn off all the lights and watch it in the dark. But my father read somewhere that it was bad for the eyes."

Television brought other pleasures — Annette Funicello and the Mickey Mouse Club. Also the "adult" westerns like "Tombstone Territory" and my favorite, "Have Gun, Will Travel." All of the boys tried to imitate Richard Boone.

While a stagehand at a TV station, Weir made his first film — a 15-minute subject — "with a borrowed camera and stolen film." He soon was winning awards with his short films.

His first major feature, "Picnic at Hanging Rock," brought him to the attention of the world's film critics. Weir became a leader of the Australian film renaissance with "The Last Wave," "Gallipoli" and "The Year of Living Dangerously."

A year ago Weir was in Hollywood preparing his first American film. It fell through. He told his agent: "Get me a picture that is ready to go."

Producer Edward S. Feldman had prepared "Witness" as a vehicle for Harrison Ford, and Weir was on the list of directors Ford would approve.

"Witness" was filmed in and around Lancaster, Penn., and Weir had concern about how the Amish would accept the invasion of a film company with all its new-fangled ways. He soon learned that the Amish would simply go their own way, as they have for centuries.

Something To Savor

By MICHAEL KUCHWARA
AP Drama Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — They are husband and wife, father and mother and now star and co-star.

Sandy Duncan and Don Correia are getting equal billing in "My One and Only," having recently replaced Tommy Tune and Twigg as the leads in the long-running musical built around classic Gershwin melodies.

Miss Duncan has had her name above the title before, most prominently in the 1978 revival of "Peter Pan," and it won her a third Tony nomination. But despite his extensive credits, this is Correia's first starring role in New York. It's something both can savor.

But at the moment, they are prouder of their two other productions — Jeffrey, who arrived in 1982, and Mikey, who first made his appearance in early 1984.

Parents and children are now settling into backstage routine at the St. James Theater, where "My One and Only" is playing. The boys have a nursery next to Miss Duncan's dressing room. Dad's space, complete with a barber chair to entice the children, is located one floor below. Adjusting to their new family life — revolving around eight performances a week — has taken some accommodation.

"Actually, it's a combined effort," says Miss Duncan, a spritely but determined woman who appears to have a handle on motherhood. You would not expect anything less from someone who was Peter Pan on Broadway and the road for two years without missing a performance.

"I didn't want to get up at eight this morning to eat, but we got up," she says. "We adapt to the children's schedule, and they adapt to ours. It's a lot of cooperation and good humor."

The adjustment is especially difficult when you're jumping into a show that has been running for a long time.

"My One and Only," which is set in the 1920s, focuses on the romance of a barnstorming Texas pilot named Billy Buck Chandler, now played by Correia, and an English swimmer called Edith Herbert. Miss Duncan's role. Such Gershwin standards as "'s Wonderful," "Strike Up the Band," "Funny Face" and "Soon" are introduced into the proceedings before the inevitable happy ending.

Some minor changes in the musical had to be made. For one, with Tune tapping in at 6 foot 6 and Correia at 5 foot 10, the height jokes had to go. But with Miss Duncan a more accomplished dancer than Twigg, some movement could be added.

"Twigg was very stylized in the way she approached the part. It was almost a comment on the period and style," Miss Duncan says. "I don't do it that way. We do the book and the songs more realistically. The whole thing has been changed in attitude as far as the way we play it."

But Miss Duncan has kept Edith's English accent, submerging her own soft Texas twang.

"I tried the role with an American accent, and it just didn't work," says Miss Duncan. She says her other two big Broadway parts — "Canterbury Tales" in 1969 and the 1970 revival of "The Boy Friend" — also required English accents.

Mrs. Pierce, a local composer and music teacher, wrote the piece as a commission from marimbist Mark Shelton, who will be the artist playing the premiere of the work, titled "Four Things Which Are Very Wise." He will be assisted by Becky Tyndall.

The title of the four-movements in the composition is taken from verses 24-28 of chapter 30 of Proverbs. Each movement represents a different animal or insect.

Other works to be performed on the program will be Gaetano's "Prelude No. 1," Gordon Stout's "Etudes for Marimba," "Three Technic Sketches for Marimba," by Margolis; Christopher Deane's "Etude for a Quiet Hall," and "Three Pieces for Delicate Landscape" by Kunugiya.

Mrs. Pierce is a graduate of Greensboro College and East Carolina University, where she received the M.M. degree in composition.

Shelton, now visiting artist at Wayne Community College, Goldsboro, is a graduate of Louisiana Tech University and ECU, where he received the M. M. degree in percussion performance.

Panama suspended diplomatic relations with the United States in 1964 after clashes between Panamanian students and U.S. troops in the Canal Zone.

The Count Basie Orchestra will appear in Wright Auditorium at East Carolina University on Tuesday, February 12.

The concert, under the sponsorship of the Student Union Special Concerts Committee, will begin at 8:00 p.m. Tickets are on sale in the Central Ticket Office and are priced at $7.00. A special rate is available for groups of 20 or more purchased in advance. For reserved tickets call the Central Ticket Office, 757-6611, ext. 266.

The Count Basie Orchestra is a legend in its own time, and the band's popularity has continued to rise since the death of Count Basie. When it was decided to keep his band going, there was widespread feeling that this would be a futile effort. Basie's minimalist piano and the subtle direction he brought to the band were essential, the reasoning went, and without him the band, which had become a polished but predictable machine, would have no distinction. This has not been the case.

The band is under the musical direction of Eric Dixon, a Basie saxophonist for most of the last 23 years. The musicians, all but a few of whom played under Basie, include soloist saxophonist Kenny Hing, trombonist Dennis Wilson, and trumpeters Sonny Cohn and Johnny Coles.

The band is directed by Freddie Green, the guitarist who joined Basie in 1937 and has been in the band ever since. Green describes his role as "spiritual director."

The pianist who has taken Count Basie's place is Tee Carson.

Free Tickets Now Available For Feb. 23 Air Force Concert

MARK PETERSON

LOWELL GRAHAM

TERRY VOSBEIN

The fourth Saturday night in February is the scheduled date of the arrival in Greenville of the United State Air Force Tactical Air Command (TAC) Band from Langley Air Force Base, Virginia.

At 8:00 p.m. Saturday, Feb. 23, the full complement of the TAC Band will present a concert for the public in Wright Auditorium on the East Carolina University campus.

This year's Air Force concert is again co-sponsored by the Air Force Reserve Officer's Training Corps (AFROTC) at East Carolina University and The Daily Reflector.

There is no admission to be charged for attending the concert; however, those planning to attend will be required to secure tickets in advance.

Several points of ticket distribution have been arranged. They can be picked up at the AFROTC office on campus, at The Daily Reflector, at Sheppard Memorial Library, and at the Record Bars at both The Plaza and Carolina East Mall.

Tickets will also be available from The Daily Reflector by mail using the order coupons to appear in the Monday, Feb. 4 edition. Persons wanting to order by mail are to send in the coupon accompanied by a stamped, self-addressed envelope for mail return of the tickets.

The tour program scheduled for the Feb. 23 performance at Wright represents a wide range of styles and time periods.

Among compositions slated for the program are ones by Leonard Bernstein, Hector Berlioz, Charles Griffé, Johannes Brahms and Igor Stravinsky on the first part of the program. Following an intermission, music to be performed will include pieces by Henry Fillmore, Johann Strauss, Glenn Miller, Floyd E. Werle, Edwin Goldman, and Samuel Ward's "America the Beautiful."

SSgt Donald W. Hedrick is to be the flute soloist for Griffé's "Poem for Flute."

The Tactical Air Command Band is conducted by Captain Lowell E. Graham, a native of Greeley, Colorado. A clarinet major, he is a graduate of the University of Northern Colorado with a master's degree in clarinet performance. In 1971 he became director of instrumental music at Colby Community College in Colby, Kansas, and in 1974 auditioned for the U.S. Air Force Band Commander Program and was immediately accepted.

Captain Graham's assignments to date have been ones as assistant director of the Air Force Band at Lackland AFB, Texas, and conductor and director of the U.S. Air Force String Orchestra and Strolling Strings at Bolling AFB, Washington, D.C. In 1977, he became the first person to be awarded the doctor of musical arts degree in orchestral conducting from Catholic University. In 1981 he became commander of the Air Force Band of the Golden Gate at Travis AFB, Calif., and has commanded the TAC Band since July, 1984.

Deputy commander and assistant conductor is 2nd Lt. Mark R. Peterson, a native of Joliet, Ill. who was commissioned in 1983. Prior to entering the Air Force, he served as director of bands at a high school in Illinois. He holds undergraduate and graduate degrees from the Northwestern University School of Music, Evanston, Illinois and is a woodwind major.

Airman First Class Terry Vosbein of Decatur, Ga. is the arranger for the band. Before joining the Air Force in 1983, he played bass guitar and arranged for the Terry Bosbein Trio and other groups in Georgia, Florida and Arizona, including work for cabaret theatres in Atlanta. He attended North Texas State University, the University of Miami and Austin Peay State University.

Oboist Hawkins, Guest Artists Mathew And Martin Faculty Trio Recital Monday

A faculty recital featuring oboist David Hawkins with guest musicians Jane K. Mathew, soprano and Sherrill V. Martin, pianist, will be presented at 8:15 p.m. Monday, Feb. 4 in the A. J. Fletcher Recital Hall on the East Carolina University campus.

The recital is free and open to the public on a first-come, first-seated basis.

Hawkins is a faculty member of the ECU School of Music. The two guests, Ms. Mathew and Martin, are faculty members at UNC-Wilmington.

For their program, the trio has chosen compositions by five composers. The program will open with four pieces by J. S. Bach — "Gott versorget alles leben," from "Cantata 187," "Herr, der du sark und nachtig bist," from "Cantata 10," "Sinfonia," and "Seufzer, Tranen, Kummer, Not," both from Cantata 21.

The Bach pieces will be followed by Vivaldi's "Domine Deus, Gloria;" Handel's "Chi t'intende, Berenice;" and pieces from F.D.A. Philidor's "Le Marechal Ferrant" and "Sancho Panca dans son ile.

The final selection on the program are five songs from R. Vaughan Williams' "Ten Blake Songs for Voice and Oboe," — "Infant Joy," "The Shepherd," "Eternity," "The Divine Image," and "The Piper."

Guest soprano Jane Mathew is an assistant professor of voice and piano at UNC-Wilmington. She holds degrees from the University of Nebraska, the University of Iowa, and Indiana University. Ms. Mathew has performed extensively in solo recitals and with orchestras.

Monday's recital program was also presented Friday in the King Hall Auditorium at UNC-Wilmington.

Served As Judges

CHARLOTTE — Two members of the faculty of the East Carolina University School of Music, Dr. Charles Bath, professor and chairman of the keyboard faculty at ECU, and David Hawkins, assistant professor, were two of a panel of three judges serving on the 30th Annual Young Artists Auditions held in Charlotte recently, sponsored by the Charlotte Symphony Women's Association.

Students competed in two divisions, junior and senior.

In addition to Bath and Hawkins, the other judge was Dr. Peter Paul Fuchs of the Greensboro Symphony Orchestra.

New Breed Of British Actors

By MATT WOLF

Associated Press Writer

LONDON (AP) — A Richard III on crutches? A Hamlet who encounters the ghost inside himself, changing voice and demeanor to summon up a phantom within?

These performances by Antony Sher and Jonathan Pryce are more experimental and physical approaches to stage acting. They represent a new breed of British actor, one who is more socially committed than his or her genteel forbears.

"The modern British actor works harder, takes more risks and really wants to find out what the play means," said Sir Peter Hall, director of the National Theater, in a recent lecture.

"When I started out (in the 1950s), the norm was a well-bred and gentlemanly caution," said the 54-year-old Hall, who stages as many as four productions a year.

"Now, the actors say to the director, 'What are you bringing to us? What can you say to us?' They argue and take risks, which they didn't do 30 years ago."

Hall said this argumentative grappling with a text does not exist in a vacuum, but "reflects a society that embraces tumults, conflicts, contradictions."

"The actor is, like any of us, very much of his time," said Hall.

"In a tough, post-punk era like ours, you're going to get actors who reflect that," agreed Michael Billington, theater critic of London's Guardian newspaper.

"The drawing room plays of the '50s demanded gentlemanly actors," Billington said in an interview. "Now, we have a much tougher, proletarian play which requires actors who are less physically inhibited."

Billington praised Sher's "powerful physical image" as Shakespeare's villainous Richard, currently in the Royal Shakespeare Company's repertory at Stratford-Upon-Avon.

Calling the crutch-wielding, spidery Sher "the fastest thing on four legs," Billington said the actor "uses the disability to become more athletic than anyone on the stage. He shows the things that handicap Richard not as minuses, but as pluses."

Billington said Sher managed the "seemingly impossible," and cast off the shadow which Laurence Olivier threw over the role both on stage and in the 1955 film with Claire Bloom.

John Peter, theater critic for The Sunday Times of London, said Olivier is largely responsible for the current freedom of actors.

"He brought a terrific physical agility and athletic and animal magnetism to playing classical roles," said Peter, arguing that "Olivier's personal influence is as important as any impact made by foreign acting and directing styles."

Peter cited the influence of the late acting coach Lee Strasberg, the Russian teacher and theoretician Stanislavski and the Marxist German playwright Bertolt Brecht in "opening the British theater up to outside influences."

"Brecht hit all of us in England like a thunderbolt," added Hall. "In the post-World War II decorated theater, he gave us an undecorated theater allied with a great sense of social responsibility."

Peter said "a strong social context" is seen in actors such as Sher and Pryce — the celebrated Royal Court Theater "Hamlet" of 1980 who starred on Broadway in "Accidental Death of an Anarchist," by Italian leftist Dario Fo.

"Actors are prepared to get involved in a production where their earnings will be lower in order to work with the Royal Court and the (Royal Shakespeare Company) and satisfy their social commitment," Peter said.

With the shifting theatrical emphasis on actors' social and physical awareness, common concern was expressed that long honored vocal skills not get lost in the process.

"There's a feeling now that craft and technique are in some way an imposition because you're not using yourself," said Hall, aware of a threat to the classical tradition embodied by such actors as the late Ralph Richardson.

"Actors in their 20s seem to be quite apprehensive about speaking verse. They don't know what the rules are," said Billington. "You don't actually hear as many memorable, aesthetically beautiful speaking voices (as you used to)."

Richard O'Donoghue, administrator-registrar at the Royal Academy of Dramatic Art, London's prestigious acting school, saw a "danger of the actor's voice being neglected in favor of other aspects. We're making a particular effort to make sure we don't lose it."

"The object is to expose an actor in his training to all kinds of styles," said O'Donoghue. The Royal Academy's graduates include Glenda Jackson, and, more recently, Lisa Eichhorn, Ben Cross and Pryce.

"The Edwardian, gentlemanly period (of acting) persisted up to the beginning of World War II (after which) further education grants became available, opening the doors to all walks of life," said O'Donoghue, adding that the Royal Academy never resisted the changes that began in the '50s and exist today.

"Everybody was suddenly thinking, 'Now we've got the freedom, we might as well use it,'" he said.

"The truth inside the actor has not changed and does not change," said Hall. "What changes is the means of expression."

Iron Gates For Jacksons
LOS ANGELES (AP) — No more peeping at Michael Jackson's house.

For several years the main tourist attraction in suburban Encino has been the compound of singer Michael Jackson and his family on Hayvenhurst Avenue. As many as 30 fans stand across the street each day, gazing through iron grille gates at a long driveway leading to the residence.

Last week, the Jacksons erected a solid iron gate with no view of what's behind. That hasn't stopped the fans from congregating, ever hopeful of seeing their idol depart in his limousine.

Ava Makes TV Debut
LOS ANGELES (AP) — Ava Gardner has become the latest screen legend to make her television series debut.

Miss Gardner joins CBS' "Knots Landing" as William Devane's mother and Howard Duff's wife. She will make the first of about seven appearances on the series on Thursday, Feb. 28.

The actress, who starred in such films as "Once Touch of Venus," "Show Boat," "Mogambo" and "Night of the Iguana," will also be seen this spring in the NBC miniseries, "A.D."

Orchestra Debuts
PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Soprano Renata Scott and tenor Lando Bartolini will make their Philadelphia Orchestra debuts Jan. 26 at the Academy of Music's 128th anniversary concert.

Philadelphia music director-conductor Riccardo Muti will also be rejoining the orchestra after a series of conducting engagements in Europe.

Also making his Philadelphia debut will be violinist Eugene Fodor, the first American violinist to win a top prize in Moscow's Tchaikovsky Competition in 1974.

Bartolini and Miss Scott will sing arias of Verdi, Giordano and Puccini.

Shore Travels Around A Country Pond

Country ponds are restful places for casual, slow-paced exploration. The smooth-water surface of a pond mirror images the structures of trees, vines and shrubs growing at water's edge, the larger ones leaning out toward the morning or afternoon light. The stillness is periodically broken by the splash of a fish breaking the surface in pursuit of food; the notes of a hidden bird bursting into song, sometimes followed by a brief glimpse of the bird as he flashes into view and then is gone.

The photographs on this page were made during an hour's walk around the shores of Murray's Mill Pond, located in a rural area near the village of Samaria in Nash County. The pond is one of eastern North Carolina's oldest, and was created by the construction of a dam that once provided power for the operation of a grist mill, a mill no longer in use.

... long extended limbs of a shore-side tree hangs well out over the pond's water surface, creating a horizontal arrangement.

... the bark of a beech tree bears the notation of two 1984 visitors. This painted-on graffiti is a contemporary departure from the traditional method of carving into the tree's bark.

THE TALE OF THE TEN OF SPADES

DEAR READERS: We have had many requests over the years for those hands we consider to be our favorites. That makes quite a list. For the time being, therefore, we are devoting the Sunday column to a series of famous hands. At the end of the series we will go back to our weekly question and answer column.

Both vulnerable. South deals.

NORTH		EAST
♠ 754		♠ 109
♥ KQ9		♥ 75432
♦ AKQJ6		♦ 1083
♣ 63		♣ 1072
WEST		SOUTH
♠ A82		♠ KQJ63
♥ 86		♥ A J 10
♣ AKJ985		♣ Q4

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	2 ♠	2 ♦	Pass
2 ♠	3 ♠	4 ♠	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: King of ♠.

The Ten of Spades was appearing before the Adjudication Board of the Association of Playing Cards. It was his contention that he was being unfairly treated by another member of the Association, the Eight of Spades.

In an impassioned plea to the Board, the Ten stated his case. "It is seldom that we tens, the lowest of the honor cards, achieve something noteworthy in our own right. And I consider it unethical of my associate, the Eight, to claim credit for my play.

"Not that he and his owner did not play their part in the scheme of things. Indeed, I am prepared to admit that it was brilliant defense on the part of West that allowed me to play my role. Nevertheless, without me, there would have been no dazzling defense.

"Our opponents had reached four spades on the auction shown. There was nothing unusual about the auction—it would have occurred at most bridge tables. West realized that his partner was not going to produce anything in the way of high cards, so the only place to establish the setting trick was in the trump suit.

"Accordingly, West cashed his two top clubs and then did what many might consider a bridge crime—he gave declarer a ruff-and-sluff by leading a third club. Declarer ruffed on the table and led a trump to the nine, jack and ace. West continued with his brilliantly conceived plan by giving declarer another ruff-sluff, only this time my owner also ruffed with me—a classic up-percut. Declarer was forced to over-ruff with the queen, and now the Eight of Spades was promoted to the setting trick.

"After the game, the reporters hovered around the Eight's locker. The next day, the newspapers were full of his exploits—and not even so much as a passing mention of me.

"I do not begrudge the Eight his moment of glory. I only feel that he could at least have acknowledged my part in this affair, and I think a public apology is in order."

Switching Home Fuels May Be Costly

By CHANGING TIMES
The Kiplinger Magazine

Your latest heating bill, and ads trumpeting super-efficient high-tech home heating equipment may have you thinking of switching fuels.

But before you do, remember that behind all the advertising hoopla is competition for your dollar, since deregulation and abundant supplies have narrowed the price gaps between gas, oil and electricity, making the choice between them harder.

Also, consider this: the Consumer Energy Council of America has called fuel switching one of the least effective ways to reduce consumer energy bills.

The council's 1980 report insists that setting back the thermostat, caulking, adding insulation, storm doors and windows, and other energy savers will probably return the investment twice as fast as switching from oil to gas.

As for current gas systems, the Illinois Department of Commerce and Community Affairs found in 1984 that most gas furnaces can be upgraded to 75 percent efficiency with a tune-up costing under $40, and the cost will be recovered in just six months of savings.

Cleaning and adjusting the pilot assembly, tuning the thermostat, lubricating moving parts, replacing dirty filters and vacuuming up debris were among 15 steps homeowners could take to save without trading in their furnace.

Besides the relative cost of fuel, convenience and perceptions of safety, cleanliness and efficiency bear on the decision to switch, as do type, size and location of your house. You would also have to look at the cost of installing and running compatible equipment such as blowers or ducts for a forced-air system, and the cost of maintenance and repair.

Switching or replacement might make sense in the case of older furnaces, which are likelier to be oversized and inefficient and in need of replacement. Another reason might be the condition of the heat exchanger, a vital component of a gas or oil furnace. Over time the exchanger's walls may corrode or crack, perhaps allowing smoke or carbon monoxide to leak inside the house.

For around $500, you can rev up an aging system in the 55-65 percent range by 15 percent or so with a retrofit job and an upgraded heat exchanger, but replacing the heat exchanger is usually impractical. Another dubious choice is sticking with an aging system converted a while back from oil to gas.

You could replace your present forced-air furnace with one of the new high-tech models, but Changing Times suggests that you be sure to match capacity to your needs in order to avoid paying too much for efficiency.

The most accurate method of rating furnaces is called the annual fuel utilization efficiency (AFUE) percentage. A system rated 93 percent AFUE converts 93 cents of your fuel dollar into heat. The seller must make available details of performance and figures for comparing one maker's efficiency rating with another's.

You can get an estimate of your home's heat loss from a contractor or utility. By law, utilities must do comprehensive energy audits, with cost-efficient suggestions, for homeowners who want them. They can tell you if an energy improvement will get you a federal or state tax credit.

Use their figures with the energy-guide data supplied by the dealer (this may already be done for you on the product label) and you can get a good idea of annual operating costs and about how long it will take to recoup the price of a new system.

As a rule of thumb, an investment in efficiency taking seven years or longer to get back is no bargain, says the New Jersey Department of Energy, which uses factors applicable to the Mid-Atlantic states.

Buying 90 percent-plus efficiency could pay off for families that plan to stay in their home for many years ahead.

Where winter temperatures often hover between 30-40 degrees Fahrenheit, a heat pump — a combination heating-cooling system — may be your best bet electrically. It collects heat outdoors and pumps it into the house. The heat pump delivers double or triple the amounts of energy it uses. It is always less expensive to operate than electric-resistance heat and frequently costs less than gas or oil. In colder climates heat pumps are installed with conventional backup heat.

If you decide to upgrade or switch systems, deal only with a licensed contractor (where licensing is required), and get several bids. A contractor serious about his good name may belong to the Air Conditioning Contractors of America or organizations representing local heating installers. You may want a contractor who has had experience with houses similar to yours.

Get the details of the proposed work in writing. Have the terms of the warranty spelled out, usually one year for labor and varying periods for parts. The relative newness of the super-efficient, high tech equipment makes it all the more important to ask about the warranty.

Be wary of a dealer who wants to install equipment of identical capacity, and especially without a check of alterations or energy savers already added. A bid several hundred dollars under other proposals on a furnace or off by half a ton on a heat-pump system's capacity (not yet AFUE rated) might warrant a call to the local Better Business Bureau or consumer protection office.

ON THE HOUSE

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

No matter how skilled you are as a do-it-yourselfer, you must be very wary about doing electrical work. Not only is electricity dangerous if you do not know what you are doing, but working with it is often forbidden by local or national codes.

The No. 1 rule, therefore, in contemplating an electrical installation or repair is whether it is permitted by law. If you ignore that rule, you may void your home insurance or you may start a fire or you may be injured or killed.

What you should do, whether or not you plan any electrical work, is to know something about it; most especially, something about the safety measures necessary to keep you out of trouble. Here are some things to remember to keep you from getting a shock:

Before you begin working on any electrical line, be sure to halt the flow of electricity going through it. This means removing the fuse that controls that circuit or, if your house has circuit breakers, pushing the breaker to the "off" position. There are two ways to do this. One is to kill the electricity to the line you are planning to work on. The other is kill the electricity to the entire house. Shut off the electricity to the whole house if you have any doubt as to which fuse or breaker controls which line. Better yet, get a voltage tester you can use just before you start the electrical repair. It will tell you whether that particular line is alive or what is called "hot." A double precaution is to tape a note to the fuse or circuit box warning anybody else in the house not to replace the fuse or reset the breaker.

No matter what you are doing, even removing a fuse or shutting off a circuit breaker, never stand on a damp floor. If necessary, stand on a dry wooden board.

Do not use an aluminum ladder, especially near entrance wires.

Don't touch anything that can be a ground for electricity, such as a water or gas pipe.

See that everyone in the house knows how to pull a plug from an outlet. It is done by pulling outward on the plug, not by holding on to the wire and tugging.

If you see any damage to an electric cord or plug, remove it from the outlet and replace or repair it. Don't plan to fix it later. If you can't do it right away, get the cord and whatever it is connected to out of sight so no one can plug it in again.

Do not use a radio or any other electric appliance in the bathroom or near a sink or tub or wherever there is water.

When a fuse blows or a circuit breaker trips, it is usually because there is too much power being drawn from one circuit. Whatever the reason, you have to replace the fuse or reset the breaker. These are things you should practice (replacing and resetting) when there is no electrical trouble. Once you have corrected the condition that caused the trouble, you have no problem with the breaker, which merely has to be moved to the "on" position.

Q. — I soon will be putting down a concrete patio at the rear of my house. I have worked with concrete before, but this time I want to try something I have never done. I want to make the concrete a grayish color. I have heard there are nts and is there some special way I can avoid any trouble?

A. — Everything you have heard is correct. But you should not have a problem because you have chosen gray as the color of the concrete. All you have to do is to be sure you purchase the kind of portland cement for your mixture which will produce a gray color. Usually it is marked "gray," but to be sure, confirm it with your dealer. Sometimes, if you do not check the writing on the bag or ask, you will get a white portland cement and sometimes the gray. If you want the concrete to come out white or you intend to add a mineral oxide pigment to give it a color, you need the white portland cement.

tobacco particles. It can then be used just as a regular stain. Sounds a bit messy, but I knew a man who swore by it. Nevertheless, test it first.

(The techniques of using varnish, lacquer, shellac, stain, bleach remover, etc., are detailed in Andy Lang's booklet, "Wood Finishing in the Home," which can be obtained

Q. — My grandfather used to tell me about getting an especially good stain on pine wood with tobacco. I have some staining to do on pine, and I have been wondering about what he told me. Have you ever heard about a tobacco stain?

A. — Yes, but never having tried it, I can only tell you what I know without making any recommendation. A plug of chewing tobacco is placed in a one-quart bottle along with a pint of ammonia. Forget about it for 10 days, then take it outside, remove the cover and let the ammonia fumes escape. As I understand it, it is ready to use in a few hours, but the liquid must be strained through cheesecloth or something similar to get rid of any

Organization Keys Kitchen

By The Associated Press

Organization is the key to efficiency in the kitchen, says Ann Guilfoyle, author of "Home Free: The No-Nonsense Guide to House Care."

Miss Guilfoyle offers the following kitchen storage guidelines to help you cut down on time spent in kitchen chores.

— If something is used in only one place, keep it there. A colander, for example, is generally related to water. Store it by the sink.

— Keep movable objects close to where they are used first in food preparation. Some pots and pans should find a home by the stove, but the coffee pot and vegetable steamer are needed first at the sink. Casseroles and baking tins belong near the work counter where ingredients are assembled.

— When placement is optional, store objects where they are used most frequently. When something always seems to be needed in two places, get a duplicate of that item.

— Things used together should go together. When the coffee pot is stored with the coffee and its measurer, coffee-making becomes a simple, one-step operation.

— Frequently used utensils should be accessible. If you need the big bowl every day, don't stack it with a number of smaller bowls that must be removed before you can get at the big bowl. Save convenient hanging space for tools that are in constant demand. If you are short of hanging space, consider the new plastic-covered wire grids that offer flexible storage advantages and are easily washed, unlike pegboard, which is a grease trap.

Garden Clinic

Q. What are winter injury and sunscald? (K.P., Raleigh)

A. Winter injury occurs during sub-freezing temperatures, especially when water in the soil is frozen, making it unavailable for the roots to absorb. Plants continue to transpire water from their leaves, especially if it is sunny and windy. When more water is transpired than the plant can absorb, desiccation — the drying up of leaves and plant parts — occurs. This is winter injury. It is more common on broad-leaved evergreens than on conifers or deciduous plants. Preventive measures include watering the plants well before the ground freezes, mulching, and protecting the plants from drying winds and bright sun while the ground is frozen. Sunscald is a form of injury that occurs in winter. It is particularly noticeable on young trees planted where daytime heat is high, such as beside a wall that reflects sun. Tender bark on a southern surface warms much more than on a northern surface, and when freezing temperatures occur in the evening, the bark on the trees may split. Insects and diseases may then enter these splits and cause further trouble. Sunscald on trees can be prevented by wrapping the trunks with a commercially available tree wrap obtainable at garden stores.

Q. When is Arbor Day in North Carolina? (K.T., Gastonia)

A. Arbor Day in North Carolina has been designated as the first Friday following March 15. In 1965 that falls on March 22. Arbor Day was legally established by the state legislature in 1967.

Astronauts To Try Toys

WASHINGTON (AP) — During the long hours aloft on the next space shuttle flight, crew member David Griggs will while away the time with a yo-yo, presumably doing walking the dog and sleepers and, of course, round the world. Commander Karol J. Bobko will occupy himself with a spinning top and a gyroscope. Rhea Seddon likes Slinky and jacks. Jeffrey Hoffman will play with magnetic marbles, a little red car and he'll try juggling whatever's handy. And pilot Donald E. Williams has chosen a toy mouse, named "The Rat Stuff." This may serve to shore up a popular perception that astronauts are just grown-up kids. But it's all in the name of science. Kid science. Dr. Carolyn Sumners, director of astronomy and physics of the University of Houston museum, has been looking for ways to help young people understand an environment without gravity. Or, for that matter, to help them understand gravity.

Vietnam Legacy

By LEON DANIEL
UPI National Reporter

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A decade after the fall of Indochina to communist forces, there are Americans who believe some of their countrymen still are prisoners of the Vietnam War.

The sharp debate over the fate of 2,483 men missing and unaccounted for in Southeast Asia is one of the lingering legacies of that divisive war.

The status of the missing men has been reviewed periodically by the U.S. government, which has listed all but one of them "presumed dead." A 1976 congressional committee investigated the issue and concluded that no American prisoners survive.

Still, there are Americans — some of them related to the missing men — who believe otherwise.

They have taken heart from recent statements by President Reagan, as well as unsubstantiated evidence, that prompts them to believe that some of the missing are alive in captivity.

The president, at the Dec. 13 ceremony to light the national Christmas tree, said, "There is no one we hold in our hearts more closely than those MIAs — those missing in action in Southeast Asia, some of whom may be serving our country still."

The United States contends the communist victors in Vietnam, Laos and Kampuchea have withheld a great deal of information on the missing servicemen and civilians.

Reagan has set as "the highest national priority" the release of prisoners who may be held, the fullest possible accounting for those missing and the repatriation of the remains of those who died.

Those who believe communist statements that no American prisoners are held in Southeast Asia argue that keeping the issue alive gives false hope to the families of dead men.

They deplore, as does the U.S. government, the unsuccessful and highly publicized cross-border forays by private individuals bent on rescuing the missing men. The government contends such operations have interfered with and damaged legitimate official efforts to resolve the issue.

When the United States pulled its troops out of Vietnam in 1973, the Hanoi government released 591 American POWs under the terms of the Paris Peace Accords. To date, the Vietnamese have returned the remains of 95 Americans. They also have provided a list of 47 people — 40 of them Americans reported to have died in captivity — but have not returned their remains.

Nearly 600 men are still listed as missing in Laos. In August 1976, the Laotian government returned the remains of two people, one identified as an American.

Continuing military activity and political upheaval in Kampuchea have precluded accounting for Americans, but some were known to have been captured there when it was known as Cambodia.

The evidence that Americans are held in Southeast Asia comes from 694 unconfirmed sightings of U.S. POWs since 1975, mostly by Indochinese refugees.

The Defense Intelligence Agency has investigated and rejected most of these reports, but it still is evaluating 175 of what it calls "first-hand live sightings" that remain unresolved.

Reagan has pledged that confirmation will result in decisive action to ensure the return of any men held prisoner.

The sighting reports often include graphic detail.

One, for example, received after the 1973 POW release, stated that about 30 Americans were held at Thanh Hoa, Vietnam.

"The POWs I saw were thin and covered with scabies," the source said. "They were just skin and bones. The Americans were forced to carry wood from the forests and they often fell down. Sometimes they were beaten by the guards."

Another refugee provided detailed descriptions of five men he was told were American pilots. He said they were held in a cave near Vieng Xai in Laos, which released no POWs in 1973.

"My personal belief is that prisoners are still being held," said Ann Mills Griffiths, executive director of the League of Families of American Prisoners and Missing in Southeast Asia, in an interview in her office in downtown Washington. "There is enough substantial evidence to believe that."

The League, founded in 1970 as a network for information and contact, has been effective in keeping the issue of the missing before the public.

Mrs. Griffiths, whose brother, Lt. Cmdr. James Mills, is a Navy pilot missing since 1966, scoffs at the charge that the League's activities encourage false hope.

"We have legitimate hope, realistic hope," she said, "but that doesn't give me the expectation that my brother is alive."

Few have been more outspoken in discounting the alleged POW sightings than Rep. G.V. "Sonny" Montgomery, D-Miss., former chairman of the House Select Committee on Missing Persons in Southeast Asia.

"My main concern is that we do not give the families of the missing servicemen false hope based on rumors and secondhand information," he wrote in a letter to his congressional colleagues.

John LeBoutillier, a former congressman from New York, on the other hand, is a true believer.

In a newspaper article last August, the Long Island Republican who served on the House Task Force on Prisoners of War in Southeast Asia, wrote that "privately, Defense Intelligence Agency analysts concede that POWs are still alive there, differing only in how many there are. The most recent estimates range from 20 to 253."

For the record, the agency says only that it does not rule out the possibility that some POWs are still held.

David Evans, 32, a former Marine from Charleston, W. Va., who lost his legs in Vietnam, returned recently from a visit to Vietnam as part of a group representing Vietnam Veterans of America.

"I've never seen any evidence that there are American prisoners in Vietnam," Evans said in a telephone interview, expressing the view of his organization, which has had several contacts over the post-war years with Vietnamese officials.

As for the League, Evans said, "They're using this POW issue to keep themselves in business."

In November, 1982, Gordon "Bo" Gritz, a highly decorated former Green Beret lieutenant colonel, led a ragtag band of three Americans and 15 Laotians on a mission into Laos to rescue POWs. They were ambushed by guerrillas who routed the raiders, killing two of the Laotians and capturing one of the Americans, who later was released when Gritz paid a $17,000 ransom.

What's The Fate Of Those 2,483 GIs Still Missing?

The mission was bankrolled by some League members and Litton Industries Inc., which was reported to have provided $800,000 worth of radio equipment. Time magazine reported that actor William Shatner paid the charismatic colonel almost $15,000 for his life story.

After the debacle, Gritz appeared before the House Foreign Affairs Subcommittee to reaffirm his conviction that at least 50 American servicemen were held in Indochina.

He could offer no concrete evidence for his claim and other witnesses further damaged his credibility.

Gritz claimed CIA and Pentagon support but the U.S. government insists it does not associate itself with such adventurism, relying instead on a policy of seeking the return of any missing men through diplomatic pressure.

There have been several meetings since February, 1982, between representatives of Washington and Hanoi who held discussions on the MIA-POW issue. The Vietnamese turned over the remains of eight persons last July. Six were identified as those of American servicemen. Laotian and U.S. officials have agreed to jointly excavate a crash site in hopes of recovering remains.

Governments friendly to the United States have agreed to raise the POW-MIA issue in their contacts with Vietnam, Laos and Kampuchea.

At League headquarters, a few blocks from the White House, Griffiths said her organization has been much encouraged by the support of the Reagan administration.

"There is no reluctance on the part of this administration to take whatever action is necessary," she said.

She emphasized, however, "This is not a partisan issue. It's an American issue."

Robert Garwood, a former Marine court-martialed after he came home in 1979 and convicted of collaborating with the Vietnamese, told The Wall Street Journal he knows of at least 70 Americans held prisoner in Vietnam as of the late 1970s — long after the 1973 POW release.

In a story published in the Journal last Dec. 4, Garwood described in considerable detail his own sightings of men he said were POWs.

The U.S. Government has sought to interview Garwood about his 14 years in Vietnam but he has declined, evidently on the advice of his attorneys.

Some government analysts, as well as Griffiths of the League, would like to interview Garwood, although they doubt he is a credible witness. They point out that when Garwood was released he denied having firsthand information about any Americans still held captive. He did not write about POWs still living in Vietnam in his 1983 biography, "Conversations with the Enemy."

Garwood spoke to the Journal, he said, because he wanted to clear his conscience.

At the ceremony at Arlington National Cemetery last Memorial Day to honor the Vietnam Unknown Soldier, Reagan made a solemn pledge to the families of the men still missing in Southeast Asia a decade after war.

"We write no last chapters," he said. "We close no books. We put away no final memories. An end to America's involvement in Vietnam cannot come until there is the fullest possible accounting of those missing in action."

Then, in the name of the nation, the president called upon Hanoi to "return our sons to America."

Marlo Thomas Stars In 'Consenting Adult'

By Andrew J. Edelstein

"Consenting Adult," an ABC movie airing Monday, Feb. 4, attempts to grapple with a delicate issue — what happens when a seemingly normal college student confronts his parents with the painful revelation that he is a homosexual. The movie, based on Laura Z. Hobson's novel, stars Marlo Thomas and Martin Sheen as the parents, and newcomer Barry Tubb as the son.

"The story is about unconditional love as much as it's about homosexuality," says Miss Thomas, speaking from her New York City apartment where she lives with her husband, talk-show host Phil Donahue. "Do we really love our children when they do things that aren't up to our expectations? How deep is love? After all, it's my characters' love for her son that helped her get to the end of her journey, to accept him.

"All the characters in the movie take a journey, the mother, the father, the son — and the audience," Miss Thomas adds.

"Consenting Adult" marks another step in Miss Thomas's journey to establish herself as a dramatic actress. The 45-year-old Miss Thomas, the daughter of comedian Danny Thomas, first gained widespread recognition as Anne Marie, the aspiring actress star of the late-1960s sitcom "That Girl." "Anne Marie was really a part of that generation — someone who said 'I can make it on my own, I don't want to get married.' The older people who ran the networks saw 'That Girl' as something revolutionary — they thought a girl on TV without husband or parents just wouldn't make it."

During the 1970s, she dropped out of show business and studied dramatic acting for four years with Lee Strasberg. She earned praise for her role in last year's TV movie, "The Lost Honor of Kathryn Beck," which she also produced.

Now, she says she doesn't want to do anymore TV comedy, either a series or a TV movie ("Have you ever seen a funny TV movie?" she asks). Miss Thomas says she'd love to do a comedy on Broadway.

But she would never consider doing a 20-years-later sequel to "That Girl."

Michele Will Tell

Dear Michele: I recently saw Steve Reeves appearing on CBN's "Pat Boone USA." I thought that Reeves committed suicide after playing Superman many years ago. Am I incorrect? — BETTY WOOLWINE, SHEBOYGAN, WIS.

You must be confusing muscleman Steve Reeves with George Reeves. Steve, 59, was born in Glasgow, Mont. A former Mr. America, Mr. World and Mr. Universe, he gained popularity as a star of many spaghetti-Westerns that featured him as Hercules and various other heroes of mythology. George Reeves, born George Bessolo on April 6, 1914 in Woodstock, Iowa, achieved stardom as TV's Superman. In the early-morning hours of June 16, 1959, two days before his impending marriage to Lenore Lemmon, George apparently committed suicide with a gunshot wound to the head. But friends and family maintain that George did not commit suicide. Reeves' mother, Mrs. Bessolo, was convinced that her son was the victim of foul play. She launched a private investigation with a noted Hollywood barrister, but both she and the attorney died of natural causes before the results of their investigation were made public. Moreover, none of their research was ever located. The Los Angeles coroner's report still lists suicide as the cause of death.

Dear Michele: I am a great fan of Barbara Mandrell and her sisters. I think it is amazing that they play so many instruments so well! How many instruments does each sister play? — TANISIA YATES, RALEIGH, N.C.

Mother Mary Mandrell, a music teacher, plays both piano and bass guitar. Father Irby plays guitar and is currently the family business manager. Barbara learned to read music at age 5, and is proficient on the steel guitar, saxophone, five-string banjo, electric bass and accordion. Louise plays the fiddle, bass guitar, banjo, piano and drums. The cacophony of sibling sounds may have led Irlene to pursue her one and only instrument: the drums.

For Bailey, Daytime Is The Right Time

By Connie Passalacqua
 Since the networks began to cast former soap stars as regulars in nighttime shows, talented New York-based daytime performers can hardly wait to bolt to Hollywood as soon as their contracts are up. Not Hilary Bailey of "As the World Turns," who proclaims "there's nothing like daytime drama." She has proven that by logging 162,000 miles in the air since she assumed the role of policewoman Margo Hughes a year and a half ago.
 Miss Bailey, who lives in Boston with her husband, investment banker Kip Smith, commutes on the Eastern Airlines shuttle to New York two-to-four days a week when she's taping "ATWT."

 "My husband's a country boy, and he'd just curl up and die if he had to live in New York," she says. "We both love Boston. My commute takes about three hours, and I share an apartment with my sister in New York when I absolutely have to stay."
 Miss Bailey admits the commuting tires her, yet she points out that all those hours in the air have won her two round-trip, first-class tickets to Europe because of an airline travel-incentive plan. "I'd like to get in touch with Frank Borman, the president of Eastern Airlines, and have him put me in one of his commercials," she jokes.

TV Chatter

George C. Scott is in Yugoslavia filming "Mussolini: The Untold Story," a six-hour miniseries for NBC. He has hired a linguist to find Benito Mussolini's "right" voice and has shaved his head to get the "right" look.

Scott has been reading and watching films about the dictator to prepare for the part. In a recent interview, he said that though there was something pathetic about the life of Mussolini, Mussolini was not a buffoon, but a masterful hustler. At least that is the way Scott plans to portray him.

Upon completion of the Mussolini miniseries, Scott will prepare for his role as Gen. George Patton in "The Last Days of Patton," a three-hour film for CBS. "It won't be about the swaggering general or about war," Scott said. "It will be a more personalized story dealing with the last 40 days of his life, when he was paralyzed from the neck down." Scott helped develop the screenplay for the film.

Elizabeth Taylor will play Madame Conti, the proprietor of a New Orleans bordello, in "North and South," a 10-hour ABC miniseries based on John Jakos's best-selling novel of the same name. Robert Mitchum has been added to the cast, which already includes Lesley-Anne Down, Genie Francis and Kirstie Alley.

The Hallmark Hall of Fame presents "The Corsican Brothers" on Tuesday, Feb. 5 on CBS. Don't miss this swashbuckling tale of revenge and love based on the book by Alexandre Dumas. Filmed in southern France, the cast includes Geraldine Chaplin, Olivia Hussey, Jean Marsh, Simon Ward and Donald Pleasence.

If you have a fear of heights or any other phobia, you're not alone. Many famous people have phobias. Here's a rundown on a few:

Dean Martin suffers from both acrophobia (fear of heights) and claustrophobia (fear of being in confined places.) He avoids elevators like the plague.

Hugh O'Brian is also terrified of heights. "A plane is fine, but I can't take a terrace on top of a building, with just a railing between the ground and me," O'Brian said.

Even though former film star Ruth Roman was a passenger on the Andrea Doria when it sank in the Atlantic on July 26, 1956, she still prefers ships to planes. Her fear of flying (aviophobia) is the most common phobia.

Borgnine Learns To Fly His Own Chopper

By Tim Boxer

Now that CBS has reved up "Airwolf" from 18 episodes to a full season of 22 episodes, Ernest Borgnine can stop worrying about unemployment and get back to work. He and Jan-Michael Vincent will be busy until April.

Borgnine is becoming a seasoned helicopter pilot. He does not have a license, but once he is taken up in the air he can take over and handle the controls like a pro. "I'm an honorary skipper with the Navy Blue Angels," he says. "They had me up in a helicopter and challenged me to fly it. I flew it. After five minutes in the air, you learn fast."

Borgnine is always conscious of potential danger. "Working with a helicopter is not like working with an actor. Sometimes it's hard to get in the air and do what the director wants."

Boxleitner Sounds Off On The Keach Question

By Ian Harmer

HOLLYWOOD — The network (and Nielsen) juries are still out on the long-term prospects of "Mickey Spillane's Mike Hammer" as title star Stacy Keach does time in an English jail. But it already looks as if Hollywood won't be giving a hero's welcome when Keach comes home.

Actor Bruce Boxleitner has been peripherally affected by Keach's incarceration for drug smuggling, since "Hammer" producer Jay Bernstein is also Boxleitner's manager and mentor. And if the rest of the showbiz community feels as Boxleitner does, Keach may, in effect, be serving a longer sentence than he anticipated.

"I think Mike Hammer's credibility has been shot," says Boxleitner. "You can't do something like this and then come home and pretend you're an American hero. The man did what he did and he paid the price, and I think that's fair — when you commit a crime, you don't get paid off or bought off."

I don't believe in that stuff.

Pro Bowling Keeps On Rolling Along

By Lorenzo Carcaterra
The round black ball hits the polished wood with a thud. The power of the throw and the force of the rotation propels it with an incredible energy. The pins, lying in wait in an angular pattern of 10, are sent smashing and flying in the air as soon as contact is made. A big red "X" signals that a strike has just been struck.

Each Saturday afternoon for the past 24 years viewers have been watching the Professional Bowlers Tour on ABC with a regularity that rivals only church-going. It is not in the slightest sense, exciting television. It is certainly far from gripping. But in its own fashion, pro bowling is as truly American as any sport on the air. That fact alone may attest to its popularity.

It began on Jan. 6, 1962, and is the second-longest continually running sports series on ABC

(after "Wide World of Sports"). Nothing about the program seems to have changed in all those years — not the hosts, not the sponsors, and in an eerie sense, not even the players. Chris Schenkel, a voice as good as any on network TV, has hosted the show and probably watched more bowling tournaments than any grown man should. Eleven years ago, he was joined in the hushed booth by Nelson Burton Jr., a Professional Bowling Hall of Famer, who acts as the color commentator. Burton functions as sort of a John Madden of pro bowling — minus the diagrams.

This year, for 16 consecutive Saturdays (it began Jan. 5 and ends April 20), pro bowlers will spin for nearly $2.5 million in prize money, with a weekly average take coming in at about $150,000. There are other incentives for the pro bowler. Anyone who bowls a 300 game during a nationally televised final picks up an extra check worth $100,000. At the True Value open in Peoria, Ill. (Feb. 23), a $200,000 prize will be awarded for a perfect game.

The finals are reached after a full week of competition. In the finals, the fifth-place tournament qualifier goes up against the fourth and the winner of that one goes against the third-place finisher. The procedure is repeated until someone takes on the No. 1 guy and a winner is found.

Some may think that no one stays home on Saturday afternoons to watch bowlers compete against one another. These doubters have not considered the 20 million who do tune in, giving the program an exceptionally high rating of 7.2., topping college football, tennis, pro and college basketball and golf.

'Corsican Brothers' Is Good Family Fare

By Bob D. Matteo

This week's motley assortment of movies includes a "Hallmark Hall of Fame" family vehicle, one of Paul Newman's best recent roles, another "socially relevant" TV movie and an update of a classic '60s war film.

'Seeing Things' Is Back For A New Season

By Jay Carman

For better or worse, people all over the world hold clear-cut images of what the average American or Englishman is like. But ask those same folks to describe a typical Canadian and you would probably elicit little more than shrugged shoulders. That is until CBC's hit series "Seeing Things" hit the international airwaves three years ago. Now viewers in such far-flung places as Australia, Spain and the Middle East will assure you that Canadians are klutzy, frantic wisecrackers who speak with strong New Jersey accents.

For this dubious — not to mention hilarious — favor, we have to thank the series' co-creator and star, Louis Del Grande. By contrast with too many stodgy CBC-produced stereotypes, the talented actor is the quintessential screwball, sort of a Dom DeLuise on uppers, both on-and-off screen.

Given the American-born (but now proudly Canadian) actor's hyperactive personality, it's somehow logical that the intriguing premise of "Seeing Things" is based on his own life. Del Grande plays Louie Ciccone, a lovable-loser journalist who is clairvoyant — an ability that usually lands him in hot water when he can't prove the veracity of his visions.

On Feb. 5, CBS offers a "Hallmark Hall of Fame" presentation, "The Corsican Brothers" (Feb. 5), an adventure tale based on the Alexandre Dumas novel. Trevor Eve stars in one of those dual roles that children seem particularly intrigued by. He plays twin brothers who share a sensitivity to pain — even when separated, they experience each other's pain. The 19th-century tale involves rival families consumed by a vendetta that reaches back to another century. The cast includes Geraldine Chaplin, Olivia Hussey, Jean Marsh and Simon Ward. It's colorful, diverting entertainment for the whole family.

In 1982 film "The Verdict" (NBC, Feb. 3), Newman plays Frank Galvin, a down-on-his-heels Boston ambulance chaser. He gets a chance to revitalize his career by taking on the powerful Archdiocese of Boston in a malpractice suit. The film also includes memorable performances by James Mason as a malicious attorney, and by Milo O'Shea as a corrupt judge.

ABC's problem-of-the-week movie, "Consenting Adult" (Feb. 4), stars Mario Thomas and Martin Sheen as a couple who must come to terms with a gay son (Barry Tubb). It's the kind of well-meaning, sugar-coated message movie that always wins attention — and usually acclaim. But one can applaud the desire to deal with serious subjects and still note that the result is barely worth the effort.

"The Dirty Dozen: Next Mission" (NBC, Feb. 4) brings us more adventures from the World War II suicide-mission commandos who originally blazed their way across the big screen in 1967. Among those on hand reprising their roles are Lee Marvin and Ernest Borgnine.

Another revival is a new version of "The Bad Seed" (ABC, Feb. 7), that little movie from the 1950s about a real devil of a kid. Certainly, in the era of "The Exorcist" and "The Omen," evil-kid movies are a good bet. This remake stars Carrie Wells in the role Patty McCormack made infamous.

Lately, there's been a Clint Eastwood movie on the schedule every week. This week's picture is "Firefox" (ABC, Feb. 3), the spy thriller that Eastwood both directed and starred in. He plays a pilot who tries to steal a Soviet supersonic plane.

HEADLINERS

Anita Summer, our correspondent in New York, started her career as a reporter at the London Daily Mirror. She recently went home for a visit, and we asked her to survey matters at Buckingham Palace to see how motherhood agrees with the Princess of Wales:

WILL'S PRINCELY POSE

In the four years since Prince Charles, 37, abdicated as the world's most eligible bachelor by choosing Lady Diana Spencer as his wife and future queen, the girl once known as shy Di has metamorphosed from a chubby-cheeked teenager with badly nibbled fingernails into a sartorial trendsetter par excellence. (She likes clothes.) Initially, the princess seemed to embrace the notion of spending large quantities of time in maternity wear; before the birth of her first son, Prince William, she confided that she wanted to outdo Queen Victoria, who had nine children. But before the birth of number-two son Prince Henry, Diana sighed, "I haven't felt well since day one. I don't think I'm made for the production line."

None of this is to suggest that Diana is anything but the most devoted mother. "When we go out, I miss William terribly, but he never misses me," the princess has said. When the royal couple is away from home — their nine-room flat at Buckingham Palace — for longer than two days, the family is asked to take copious photos of the young heirs to the throne "so we don't miss one day" of their lives, Mama once explained.

And what's one day of Diana's life like? At 7 a.m. she joins her husband for breakfast (half a grapefruit, a boiled egg, toast and marmalade, if you must know).

Then off to the nurseries. Household matters are dealt with next, followed by exercise and appointments with dressmakers. Then bath time (average soaking time: one hour). If Diana is free of engagements — for which she has a tendency to be tardy — she takes care of her correspondence or (surprise) goes shopping.

Lunch with Charles or friends is light. Afterward, more shopping or an airing in the park with Will. Most evenings are official occasions (when else to show off her wardrobe?). On their rare free nights, Charles and Diana give small dinner parties or curl up with the video cassette player.

What about the sporadic reports that there's a rift almost as wide as the Thames between Diana and Charles? Much ado about nothing, though the two do argue in the manner of most newlyweds, and Diana does, indeed, have a hot temper. And what about Diana's post-wedding comment about "the agonies of being a princess"? From the look of things after three years of marriage, it's ecstasy.

THE ROYAL COUPLE, BABES IN ARMS

According to Gene Simmons, being a rock star in a heavy-metal rock group is not exactly a heavyweight credential for winning a film role; apparently, it was no help to Gene in landing a role in the Tom Selleck vehicle Run- away. "There are no free rides in life," he says. "Certainly success will open doors, but you have to be what people want. Bozo the Clown is famous, but he couldn't have gotten the part." Well, we won't argue the point. So how did the creature he doctor who performed a baboon heart transplant on 13-day-old Baby Fae in California last October showed great courage.

Actually, that was the 1983 figure. The 1984 deficit figure, recently released, was $35 billion. We regret the editing error in the article by Secretary of State Shultz.

The British surgeon who last August decided to make Baby Hollie the youngest ever heart transplant was also brave. It takes strength of conviction to operate, especially with the world's press looking over your shoulder.

But I would not have undertaken those procedures. Not because of the press, but because I don't have enough information to go on. For me, information is the basic criterion for surgical work. Courageous leaps in the dark are not the stuff of successful surgery and are likely to add more to the surgeon's mortality rate than to his reputation.

It is 17 years since my patient Louis Washkansky showed his courage in agreeing to undergo the world's first human-to-human heart transplant. Since then, dozens of people have benefited from his pioneering decision. Many have gained years of useful life as a result of heart transplants, and the operation has become almost routine. Yet the world still has a fascination with the human heart and its ailments, as I found when my telephone overheated with calls from around the globe querying my views on the death of Baby Fae in November.

Baby Fae was born last October 14 with a defect known as hypoplastic left heart syndrome, in which the left side of the heart is severely underdeveloped. On October 26, Dr. Leonard Bailey of the Loma Linda University Medical Center replaced Fae's defective organ with a heart from a female baboon between 7 and 8 months old. Baby Fae died November 15 of heart failure, kidney failure and other complications, all of which were related to her body's rejection of the transplanted organ. In the case of Baby Hollie, born in England last July 20, the left side of the heart was missing, due to a rare congenital disease. On July 30, Dr. Magdi Yacoub of the National Heart Hospital in London performed a heart transplant operation on Hollie, using the organ of a 3-day-old baby. Hollie died on August 17 of heart failure.

Operations such as those performed on Hollie and Fae are a long way from being as routine as the transplants now carried out on adults. The reaction of in-

DO SURGEONS PLAY GOD?

The first surgeon to perform a human heart transplant writes from Cape Town, South Africa, about the controversial Baby Fae case in California and the disputed Baby Hollie case in England.

A FAMILY WEEKLY exclusive:

By Dr. Christiaan Barnard

strongly the body regards the donor tissue as foreign. For example, between identical twins there is no problem of rejection. Organs may be swapped with little difficulty other than the threat of normal infection. Between children with the same parents there is a noticeable degree of rejection. Between strangers the rejection rate increases. Between species, as from one animal to another or from an animal to a human, as in Baby Fae's case, the rejection rate is fierce and virtually uncontrollable.

In the case of the first adult heart transplant, however, we had medications (known as immuno-suppressive drugs) to deal with the rejection problem. Trials on animals showed these drugs to be effective. We knew they would work on humans. Our only remaining concern was that their side effects were a danger.

Such drugs have been greatly refined since then. Some questions remain, however, about whether their use is safe in infants. On the eighth day after her transplant, Baby Hollie showed one of the side effects of immuno-suppressive drugs: severe kidney malfunction. In an adult this can be tolerated, but in an infant it throws a major load on the immature organs.

Transplant patients must also be monitored for rejection, a process that appears to be trickier in infants than in adults. Monitoring of rejection requires cell samples from the transplanted organ, achieved by means of snipping off a piece of tissue, which is then examined under a microscope. Such work, carried out in the space available in tiny infant vessels, is both intricate and risky — and in Baby Hollie's case it had no precedent.

Another unknown factor in an infant transplant case is the potential for organ growth. In an adult, because the donor heart is already full size, this is not a concern. In Hollie's case, the new heart was about the size of a plum. There was doubt that the transplanted organ would grow at the same rate as the recipient, if at all.

Hollie's father told critics that he believed his child did not die in vain. I agree, with the proviso that much more elaborate work is required before the next such operation is planned. Medical frontiers are not advanced without casualties. Hollie and Baby Fae were two of them. Hollie lived and died, as did Baby Fae, virtually under the eyes ants to this type of surgery still has many mysterious aspects.

At the time of the Hollie procedure, I said that I did not believe Dr. Yacoub should have operated. I still see no reason for changing my view. Dr. Yacoub later agreed, but defended his decision on the grounds that all advances are experimental.

He was only half right. All laboratory advances are experimental, if an experiment is defined as an informed step into the unknown. However, there is a vast gap between the lab and the clinical situation. Experiments have no place in clinical work. Unless the theory and the technique have been tested thoroughly elsewhere, the doctor who plows ahead is seriously endangering his ethical code — not to mention the patient's life.

When I made that statement at a press conference, newsmen bounced back with the charge that the first heart transplant was an experiment. That claim couldn't be further from reality. There was nothing experimental about the heart transplant received by Louis Washkansky back in 1967. The procedure had been carried out about 100 times in the laboratory. Results showed that it worked.

At the time of the first heart transplant, the most worrisome factor was rejection, the process whereby the body attacks anything it recognizes as foreign. Rejection increases according to how of millions. The lives of these two infants united people in a wealth of caring. Their deaths held lessons for all surgeons.

HEART TRANSPLANTS

Predictably, I was asked if I would have transplanted an animal heart into an infant with the hope of its becoming the baby's permanent heart. The short answer is no, but it is not as simple as that. Every surgeon decides on the merits of the case. I came across many "Baby Fae" cases in my career. Surgery was never considered, on the grounds that there was no hope for success.

I did, however, transplant animal hearts into adults on two occasions. One patient was given a baboon heart and another the heart of a chimpanzee. In these cases, however, the animal hearts were intended as stopgaps to assist the work of the patient's own heart until it recovered. They were intended to add to, not replace, the human heart. However, in both cases the patient's own heart proved too weak to take over from the assist heart before rejection occurred.

Afterward I resolved never to use a chimpanzee heart again. Not because it was unsuccessful (it worked well), but because chimpanzees are an endangered species and uncomfortably close to humankind in their conscious behavior.

I have no moral objection to the use of baboon hearts. But from the tissue reaction to each type of animal transplant, we concluded that we would not have been able to control rejection for the period required.

Because control of rejection requires very invasive diagnostic techniques, the surgeon is often forced to play guessing games using other methods. For example, it is possible to guess about rejection by looking at an electrocardiogram, but this is not a very dependable method. For all these reasons, I would not have considered an animal heart transplant on an infant in the absence of either the possibility of the baby's own heart being repairable, or another infant heart being at the ready.

The problem faced by Baby Fae's surgeons is that her situation was desperate.

Adults may be aggressively kept alive until a suitable donor is found. The situation with an infant is much different; death is often only a heartbeat away. Adult donor hearts usually come from brain-injured persons. Such injuries occur seldom in infants, hence the prospect of a suitable donor organ for Baby Fae was remote. Baby Fae's doctors did their skillful best with the odds given them. It is lonely out there at the edge of human knowledge. And there are no prizes for losing.

For that reason, gentlemen, despite all my reservations, I salute you. FW

WHY HAVE A RETIREMENT PLAN THAT'S SPECULATIVE, WHEN YOU CAN HAVE ONE THAT'S GUARANTEED?

If your IRA is in a mutual fund, you might actually end up with less than you put in. That's because most mutual funds are based on the performance of the stock market. In other words, on speculation. But the IRA's we offer are based on something stronger. Not only do we offer a guaranteed rate of return, but your IRA is federally insured up to $100,000. So when you're opening a new IRA, or thinking about switching your current one, take the speculation out of your retirement with an IRA that's guaranteed. After all, the date of your retirement is set. The performance of a mutual fund isn't.

Announcing an original porcelain sculpture by one of America's most talented portraitists of animals

SLOWPOKE

BY DEBBIE BELL JARRATT

First in a new collection of delightful baby animal sculptures—available exclusively from The Franklin Mint.

Finely crafted and individually hand-painted.

Imaginative, charming art at the attractive price of $45.

For the first time, the celebrated nature artist Debbie Bell Jarratt has accepted the commission to create a collection of porcelain sculptures of baby animals.

Slowpoke!, portraying a mischievous rabbit and a funny little snail, is the first work in this enchanting collection. It is crafted in fine porcelain, painted by hand, and is being offered at the attractive price of $45—which may be paid in three convenient monthly installments of $15 each.

With her unique ability at capturing whimsy, Debbie Bell Jarratt portrays the pink-nosed rabbit in a situation that's quite amusing. He's just finished romping across the fields where he passed a tiny snail (with no trouble!) along the way. Confident that he's left the snail far, far behind, the rabbit turns to look back. But lo and behold, there's the snail right next to him—looking him square in the eye as if to say "Who's calling who a slowpoke!"

This charming porcelain sculpture will be created to the highest standards of workmanship under the supervision of Franklin

GORDON WILLIAMS' MONTHLY COLUMN

COMPUTER ACCESSORIES YOU NEED

Buying a computer is easy. The hard part is deciding what else to buy to turn a bare-bones computer into a useful device for writing, record-keeping, and all the other things that computers do so well.

With the right accessories, your computer will become the all-around helper you hoped it would be. Without them, your computer won't ever be much more than a costly paperweight.

Disk drive. It feeds programs to your computer quickly and stores heaps of the material you develop. It's a must for word-processing, for record-keeping, and for any sort of budgeting or financial planning. Even if you just play games on your computer, the best games today are only on disk.

Prices for a disk drive start at around $250, and boxed disks start at $20 or so.

Printers. You can save your work on a disk. But if you want a written record, you need a printer.

Letter-quality printers usually cost more ($500 and up), run more slowly (15 or 20 characters per second, until you get into the big bucks), and can't print the fancy graphics that computers can create. Dot-matrix printers start at $300, run faster (60 to 80 characters per second is common), and can put wondrous things on the printed page, from italics to double-wide characters to charts and graphs.

Modem. One thing a computer does best is communicate with other computers. You can get the latest news, delve into encyclopedias and other data sources, and use your computer to "talk" with other computer owners.

A modem makes that possible by linking your computer to the telephone. A few modems still use rubber cups in which you actually place your telephone receiver. More common now — and far better — is the direct connect modem, which plugs directly via a jack into your phone line. Prices start at $100.

Monitors. Most computers connect to a television set, providing a modestly priced way of displaying what you've done. For a clearer, sharper display, you can replace the TV set with a monitor. Monochrome monitors (usually green on black) start at $100, and full-color monitors start at $250.

"Creative" software. Educational software is getting better — everything from the alphabet and basic math to programs to help your youngsters prepare for the Scholastic Aptitude Test (SAT). There are programs and devices that let you compose fairly serious music on your computer, and light pens and graphic tablets that let you create original works of art on the computer screen. Just be sure you know how it works before you buy — and that it's meant for the ages and experiences of whomever you're buying for. FW

WHIZ QUIZ

WHAT'S IN A BIRTHDAY?

TRUE OR FALSE?

1. Your personality type is influenced by whether you are a first, last or "in-between" child.
2. Creative writers tend to be firstborns.
3. If you have a famous brother or sister, this will probably lessen your own chances of success.

ANSWERS

1. True. In a University of Florida study, the clearest personality differences observed were between oldest (firstborn) and youngest (lastborn) children. The oldest "is best described as an individual who strives for power and recognition." On the other hand, "youngest children tend to exhibit charming, sociable, and dependent behavior patterns." Descriptions of middle children emphasize "the development of skills in compromise and diplomacy resulting from being caught between older and younger siblings."

2. True, if you come from a large family. A University of North Alabama survey indicated that in small-to-average-sized families, creative writers tended to be evenly spread out across the various birth order positions. However, it was found that "creative writers from very large families (8 or more offspring) were highly likely to be firstborns."

3. False. A team of University of Cincinnati specialists asked brothers and sisters of the famous to indicate how their illustrious siblings had affected their own lives. The team discovered that "for the most part, respondents were proud of their siblings' successes." Although none considered themselves famous, two-thirds were successful and thought they had a potential for fame.

How can I owe $400.00 for just one day in the hospital...doesn't Medicare pay everything?

Too many Americans are finding out the hard way that Medicare doesn't pay all the bills. YOU must pay the difference!

In 1985 You May Pay More Than Ever
With the ever increasing cost of the Medicare program, the bills you are left to pay are becoming more and more of a financial burden. And that includes the $400.00 deductible—the amount you could pay even if you're hospitalized just one day.
If you're hospitalized—with ONLY Medicare coverage—you may be forced to dig deeper into your pocket than ever before to cover what Medicare doesn't pay.

MATURITY CARE 65
Designed To Help Pay What Medicare Does NOT!
A hospital stay of up to 150 days could cost as much as $15,400.00. So, it's important to have good, solid protection in addition to Medicare.

MATURITY CARE 65 is just that—protection designed to help pay the hundreds, even thousands of dollars in bills that Medicare leaves you to pay.
including . . .

100% of your hospital co-payments for days 91 to 150, at $200.00 a day, totaling $12,000.00.
100% of all necessary hospital expenses for as long as ONE FULL YEAR after Medicare Part A hospital benefits stop!
plus . . .
Helps pay for Doctor, Surgical and Medical expenses—in or out of the hospital.
Helps pay for in-hospital Private-Duty Nursing Care (not covered by Medicare at all).

* Helps pay for Skilled Nursing Facility Care after you're released from the hospital.
Your Acceptance Is GUARANTEED
If you're age 65 or older and covered by Medicare Parts A & B, your acceptance for MATURITY CARE 65 is guaranteed.

NEIGHBORS' RECIPE EXCHANGE

By Marilyn Hansen

If you have a recipe to share, write Marilyn Hansen, Neighbors' Recipe Exchange, FAMILY WEEKLY, 1515 Broadway, New York, N.Y. 10036. For each recipe published, FAMILY WEEKLY will pay $10. Recipes must be accompanied by your name, address, telephone number and the name of the newspaper in which you read FAMILY WEEKLY. Recipes with the earliest postmark will be used. We cannot answer letters or return recipes. All recipes become the property of FAMILY WEEKLY.

From Morrow Bay, Calif., Mrs. Betty B. Millar sends a hearty soup recipe. Betty writes: "A couple of years ago, my husband asked if we couldn't have clam chowder for dinner. Since I didn't have any clams, but had a leftover ham, I decided to try ham chowder. Since then, he no longer asks for clam chowder, but ham chowder, instead."

So, from Betty's kitchen, we present Ham Chowder for your enjoyment.

HAM CHOWDER

4 large carrots, diced
4 stalks celery, diced
1 small onion
4 large potatoes
5 cups water
2-3 cups diced ham
2 tablespoons unsalted butter or margarine
Salt, to taste
Freshly ground black pepper, to taste
6 tablespoons flour
2½ cups milk
Garnish: paprika and chopped parsley

1. In stock pot or soup kettle, cook carrots, celery, onion and potatoes in 5 cups water until tender, about 20 minutes.

2. Add ham, butter, salt and pepper. Blend flour into milk smoothly, stir into soup, heat, stirring constantly, until mixture boils. Turn heat to low and allow to simmer, partially covered, 10-20 minutes to develop flavor.

3. Pour soup into large bowl or soup tureen, sprinkle top with paprika and chopped parsley. Serve with hot garlic bread and a tossed green salad for a complete meal.

Makes 6 generous servings.

The Millars read FAMILY WEEKLY in the Telegram-Tribune, San Luis Obispo, Calif.

This recipe was sent in by one of our male readers, and it surely is a tasty dish, excellent served with baked ham, frankfurters, knockwurst or pork chops. It is also a fine casserole to bring to a covered dish supper. Mr. Leon Drew of Egg Harbor, N.J., writes: "This cabbage recipe from Trainerville, Pa., has a hearty, sweet-and-sour, smokey flavor and has been enjoyed by our family for the last several years. I think your readers will really like it. It's especially good this time of year." Without further ado...

FINER THAN FINE PENNSYLVANIA DUTCH CABBAGE

5 cups shredded cabbage
4 slices bacon, diced
2 tablespoons brown sugar
2 tablespoons flour
2 cups boiling water
½ teaspoon salt, or to taste
¼ cup cider vinegar
¼ cup finely chopped onion
Freshly ground black pepper

1. Cook cabbage in 2 quarts boiling water for 7 minutes; drain.

2. Meanwhile, fry bacon pieces in large skillet until crisp, lift out onto paper towels; set aside.

3. Add brown sugar and flour to bacon fat, blending until smooth over low heat.

4. Add 2 cups boiling water, salt, vinegar, onion, pepper and the reserved bacon. Heat to boiling, stirring constantly. Taste; if too sour for your taste, stir in an additional ½ cup water.

5. Turn cabbage into a serving dish, pour the hot dressing over, and mix well. Serve hot.

WHAT IN THE WORLD

BY MARION LONG

FROM CALIFORNIA

THIS IS ONLY A TRIVIAL MATTER

Ever play one of those trivia games? Ever wonder where all those questions come from? More and more — now that the “easy” trivia questions have been used up — the queries come from folks like you. Recently, when Axlon Games of Sunnysvale, Calif., was working on a couple of new games, they solicited trivia questions from the general public and got more than 80,000 submissions from San Francisco alone.

How to write a trivia question? Jim Simmons of Axlon offered these guidelines: Be factual, be interesting, and avoid obscure people, unpronounceable diseases, and Latin names for plants and animals.

He offered this example:

BIRTHDAYS

(All Aquarius) Sunday: Joey Bishop 67, Fran Tarkenton 45. Monday: Betty Friedan 64, Alice Cooper 37. Tuesday: Hank Aaron 51, Red Buttons 66. Wednesday: Ronald Reagan 74, Tom Brokaw 45. Friday: Jack Lemmon 60, Lana Turner 65, Ted Koppel 45, Gary Coleman 17. Saturday: Mia Farrow 40, Roger Mudd 57.

Everyone knows that Columbus' three ships were the Nina, the Santa Maria, and the Pinta. “So that’s not a great trivia question. A better one would be: ‘Which of the three ships was under Columbus’ command?’”

However, if you were thinking that trivia questions might be a good way to supplement your income, think again. Axlon pays $1 per question they accept. Apparently the fee matches the subject.

FROM WASHINGTON, D.C.

FOOL'S GOLD?

Though this past summer saw several new events added to the Olympics, there is much human endeavor left unrecognized.

To correct this, Noah Adams, co-host of National Public Radio's All Things Considered, invited listeners to write in and describe what they do best. Adams happens to be the world's best at driving a car while holding a full cup of coffee. He wondered what other skills were being underappreciated.

Letters poured in, and Adams crowned champions. Among them: Anthony Scarfi of Nokonis, Fla., who is unchallenged in making the sound of three cats meowing. And Bev Cowdrick and Anne Zak, of Wendell, Mass., the best at loading five 300-pound pigs into a pickup without getting dirty. And Richard Stewart of Fullerton, Calif., is the premier dishwasher loader.

We understand that the culture of singing Gilbert and Sullivan tunes with a mouth full of oatmeal is still pretty much open.

FROM MARYLAND

THOSE HOT BEDROOM EYES

Your eyelids are getting heavier, heavier; your head is nodding; you are dropping off into slumberland. Doctors Ernst Nieder-meyer and William Jankel, neurologists at Johns Hopkins Hospital in Baltimore, say that those bedroom eyes are the result of a rise in their temperature. Dr. Niedermeyer explains that when we tire, there is “an increase in circulation around the eyes. Circulation increases, the eyes get heavier, the lids start falling.” (Wake up! We've got more to tell you!)

Says Niedermeyer: “The feeling of heaviness in the entire eye and nose area is a physiological indicator of the need to sleep, the same way hunger pangs are an indicator of the desire to eat.”

So next time you see Rhett Butler aiming his heavy-lidded gaze at Scarlett O'Hara, it may be that Gable is feeling more lazy than lusty.

FROM LONG ISLAND

BARKING UP THE WRONG TREE IN SMITHTOWN

Do you know what it's like to be kept awake by the yapping of the neighbors' skittish cocker spaniel? Residents of Smithtown, Long Island, don't have to know. Chapter 26 of the Town Code, entitled “Noise Ordinance,” deems the noise “created by a dog barking for 15 continuous minutes” unhealthy.

So if a Smithtownian is tossing and turning to the tune of bow-wow-wow, he can sic the law on the clamorous canine's owner. Fines for the offense range from $50 to $500 and a possible 15-day jail sentence. We just wonder who's going to keep Rover quiet while his owner's doing time in the slammer.

NEXT WEEK IN FW

• For Valentine's Day, an essay on the True Meaning of Love by Richard Bach.

WHERE THE HEART IS

Why do people live where they live? Here are two answers:

Judy Collins, singer, Denver, Colo.

“I grew up in Denver, but the mountains lured me. When I married, my husband and I ran a lodge in Rocky Mountain National Park. It was so beautiful. We had no electricity, my husband chopped the wood, our water was piped in from the spring nearby. In the afternoons, I would play my guitar and sing.

“I have a very strong spiritual center in the mountains. What can I say? I'm a Colorado girl — it's always been my home.”

Frank Macri, actor, Little Kingdom Players, Century City, Colo.

“I was an executive in Detroit when I first visited this little town. I decided to chuck it all and came to live in the mountains. Life here is about evenings when the snowflakes are as big as pancakes and we're sitting with our feet up on the old potbelly stove in the corner tavern, swapping stories. The history of this place has swallowed me up, and I'm a willing part of it.”
