Council, GUC Eye Increased Turnover

By SUE HINSON
Reflector Staff Writer

Greenville City Council members and Greenville Utilities Commission representatives met Wednesday to discuss a council proposition to revise the plan by which GUC turns over a percentage of citizens' equity each year — a revision that ultimately will bring the city additional money and will, council members said, simplify the turnover formula.

"We're looking at a political animal (the city of Greenville) that's gotta raise money. And I'm looking at you, brother (Greenville Utilities), and saying hey, we gotta help each other," Councilman Louis Clark told GUC representatives Bill Taft, Andy Warren and Fred Robbins who attended the meeting with other Council members Stuart Shinn and Ed Carter.

Citizens equity, a term coined in a 1979 study, describes the net value of Greenville Utilities' electric and gas systems and local taxpayers' net financial interests in those systems. "In that study," GUC Director Charles Horne explained today, "it was determined that citizens deserved some type of equity (return on their investment) from the Utilities Commission (because) the citizens of Greenville actually own the system through the city of Greenville."

At present, Greenville citizens through city government receive a 6 percent return on their investment based on the net value of Greenville Utilities' electric and gas systems, which are collectively worth about $20 million. The council's proposal to revise the current turnover formula calls for the addition of two more funds (water and sewer) to the base from which citizens' equity is draw.

Annual net revenue realized from GUC's water and sewer systems, however, comes no where near amounts produced by the commission's electic and gas operations, Horne said today. He said fiscal 1984-85 turnover from the GUC electric fund will total $1,320,000 and gas turnover will amount to $190,000. In addition, GUC committed excess sewer funds totaling $500,000, for an approximate total turnover of $2 million.

If water and sewer had been included in 1984-85 turnover at a 6 percent rate, the city would have received approximately $1.3 million more from GUC. That figure is not representative of the Greenville Utilities situation, however, Horne explained, because in order to turn that amount of money over to the city, GUC would have to raise water and sewer rates. For instance, Horne said, in 1983-84, GUC's water system only netted $280,769; the sewer system netted $564,819 — figures that are both less than the turnover rate which would be based on the net value, not actual earnings, of both systems.

In order to turn over 6 percent on both water and sewer, sewer rates would have to be increased by 38

Visits Discouraged

Due to an outbreak of flu in this region, the administration of Pitt County Memorial Hospital said today visitation of patients is being discouraged.

PCMH President Jack Richardson said the policy was designed to protect patients from visitors who might be carrying a flu-causing virus or bacteria.

Fire Hits Storage Building

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

Greenville firemen this morning were still trying to extinguish a blaze that destroyed a storage building at Keel Peanut Co. on Memorial Drive, Wednesday afternoon.

Fire-Rescue Department Chief Jenness Allen said the fire was reported at 2:35 p.m., and one end of the 100-feet by 164-feet storage warehouse, filled with dried peanuts, was ablaze when the first fire units arrived.

The chief said officers at the scene thought the spread of the fire had been controlled by about 3:30 p.m. But Allen said the fire among the peanuts "flared up" later after spreading the length of the building and destroyed the entire structure.

Firemen were "still there" at mid-morning Allen said, trying to put out the fire among the peanuts. "We're having to dig the peanuts out," he said, in order to put out the fire.

Allen said the fire apparently started around electrical connections used to supply power to a heating system used to keep the peanuts dry.

Wooten Elected To Leaf Co-Op's Board

By JERRY RAYNOR
Reflector Staff Writer

Pitt County farmer Atlas Wooten was re-elected to a third three-year term as director from District 6 of the Flue-Cured Tobacco Cooperative Stabilization Corp. at the organization's annual district meeting held Wednesday in Greenville's Moose Lodge.

The veteran farmer defeated, Jimmy Hill, a farmer from Lenoir County, in the bid for the director spot. A total of 545 eligible persons from among several hundred attending the meeting cast votes.

As District 6 director, Wooten will represent Stabilization members from a dozen eastern North Carolina counties — Beaufort, Bertie, Carteret, Craven, Dare, Jones, Lenoir, Martin, Pamlico, Pitt, Tyrrell and Washington.

An overflow attendance, mostly men but with a sizeable scattering of women, was on hand for the nearly three-hour long meeting.

Much of the discussion centered on a proposal by Stabilization's directors to increase the current 7 cents a pound marketing assessment to 25 cents per pound for the 1985 crop.

Fred Bond of Raleigh, executive director of the cooperative, outlined numerus factors that entered into the board's decision to recommend the higher assessment rate — primarily as an effort to cope with a $1.2 billion debt outstanding as of Dec. 31, 1984, with interest accruing at the rate of $10 million per month. Under the No-Net-Cost law adopted by Congress that became effective with the 1982 crop season, an assessment rate of 3 cents per pound was approved for 1982, with a 7 cents per pound rate effective for the 1983 and 1984 crops.

Bond reiterated that during that three-year period, Stabilization has purchased 600 million pounds of tobacco that failed to sell for at least one cent above the grade loan rate.

The No-Net-Cost law basically is designed to insure that funds for Stabilization are self-sustaining and are not paid for by taxpayers.

Author's Knowledge Of Detroit Provides Background For Novels

By PHIL THOMAS
AP Books Editor

NEW YORK (AP) — When the time came to stake out his literary territory, Loren D. Estleman picked Detroit.

Why Detroit?

"Why not?" says Estleman. "I don't know Los Angeles. Detroit, I know. I can drive into the city from my house in Whitmore Lake in about an hour to do physical research.

"If I'm writing about a specific area of Detroit or its suburbs I'll go there and drive around, look things over. Then, I'll get out and walk around a bit. I'll talk to people, get the feel of things. I like talking to Detroit people, they're real.

"Detroit's a city with its own personality. It has a sort of shabby nobility to it and that appeals to me. So do its people and its neighborhoods."

A resident of one of those neighborhoods is Amos Walker, a tough private detective who plays the feature role in five mysteries by Estleman, the latest being "Sugartown."

Walker's house isn't far from his shabby office. It's "just three rooms, a garage, and a dandelion patch with some grass in it," but it does hold his bed, his bottle of Scotch, and a refrigerator full of frozen dinners such as "scrod, with a side of corn ... I hate scrod, but it had been on sale and I had four more trays of it."

Walker, a Vietnam veteran, doesn't think much of being a private eye either. But every time he decides to throw it in and "get a real job with a place that has a bowling league and a company picnic and every other Friday a check you can almost raise two-point-five kids on ... the devil enters disguised as an old lady with $1,000 and a picture of a new missing face and you bite the apple. You're hooked, you're an addict. You've got the call."

Estleman, a soft-spoken 32-year-old with 18 books to his credit, says he got into writing mysteries after spending about four of his 12 years with various Michigan newspapers covering the police beat.

"I dealt with cops a lot, and I worked well with them," he says. "I got along with them and they opened up with me and told me a lot of things I now use in my fiction."

He gave up newspaper work a few years back to devote full time to fiction writing. Laughing, he adds, "I spent so much time with cops that I started thinking more like a cop than a reporter and I decided it was time to get out of newspapering. Things were lean for me for a while, but they're getting better because my books are selling well."

Estleman wrote his first novel when he was 18. "It was about the occupation of America by the Red Chinese," he recalls. "I burned it." He wrote two more which were rejected, but hit at age 24 with "The Oklahoma Punk."

"It's a gangster novel," says Estleman. "It's set in the 1930s. I reread it recently and it's better than I remember."

When he isn't writing about crime and private detectives, Estleman writes Western novels.

Estleman sees nothing odd about working in two seemingly different literary forms.

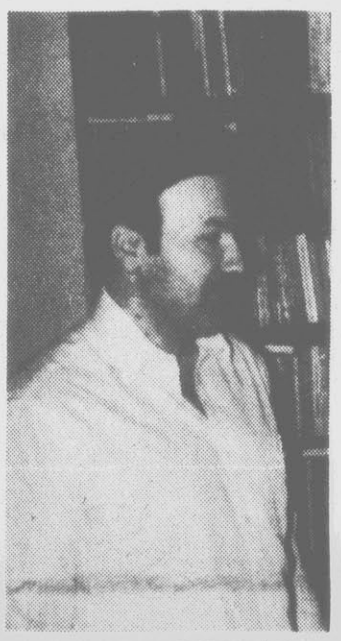

"They have basic similarities," he says. "The Western has a hero. The private eye book has a hero. Each is one man alone against evil. The private eye differs from the Western because it's harder to write. Its structure is more convoluted while the Western is more straightforward.

"When I finish a Western, then I'll write a mystery," Estleman says.

"Each refreshes me for the other. When I'm asked which form I prefer I answer with a question:

" 'Do you prefer your right arm or your left arm?' "

("Sugartown" is published by Houghton Mifflin.)

Olives Popular Delicacy For Centuries

By TOM HOGE
AP Wine and Food Writer

They say olives are an acquired taste, but I've always been fond of the little fruit and enjoy them in a variety of dishes.

I realized how versatile olives can be some years ago when I was covering news in the Mediterranean area. Olive groves thrive in that sector. The main produce is oil, but the local cooks also put the fruit to many uses besides in canapes.

I tried dozens of variations while in southern Italy, including numerous appetizers, of course, plus chicken dressed with olive stuffing and such attractions as olive bread and olive soup, both of which I liked.

Probably no fruit has been as closely linked to man's development as the olive. They are said to have been discovered around 3000 B.C. by dwellers in the Mediterranean, who came upon some gnarled trees and tried the fruit.

Olives eventually became a feature in cooking, and olive oil was used to light lamps and fuel stoves. In the days of the Caesars, Romans rubbed themselves with olive oil, which they believed contributed to longevity.

In the 18th century, Franciscan missionaries brought olives to Peru and then to California, where groves were soon developed. Today, California is a leading producer of the fruit, especially the black olive.

The olive tree is one of nature's hardiest plants, if the climate is right. It will survive in meager soil, sending its roots deep down for water so that it can withstand parching droughts.

Olives go well with chicken, as in this recipe.

- 3-pound chicken, cut in serving pieces
- Salt and pepper to taste
- 1/8 teaspoon paprika
- 1-3rd cup salad oil
- 1 cup raw rice
- 1 small clove garlic, minced
- 1 can (1 pound) tomatoes
- 1 can (8 ounces) tomato sauce
- 1 ounce white wine vinegar
- 1/2 cup sliced, stuffed olives
- 1 green pepper, cut in rings
- 1 medium onion, sliced

Season chicken with salt, pepper and half of paprika. Heat oil in large skillet. Add chicken and brown on all sides. Place chicken in shallow 2 1/2-quart baking dish or pan. Drain off all but 2 tablespoons of fat from skillet. Add rice and garlic and saute about 2 minutes. Stir in tomatoes, tomato sauce, wine vinegar and sliced olives. Pour over chicken. Add green pepper rings and onion slices. Sprinkle with salt and pepper and rest of paprika. Cover and bake in preheated 350-degree oven for 90 minutes, or until chicken is tender. Serves 4. Good with a chilled dry white wine.

I Love You

At Wits End

By Erma Bombeck

Valentine's Day seems as good a time as any to talk about that box of chocolates most of you will be receiving today.

Chocolate is an aphrodisiac, one of the love foods that supposedly has the special power to stimulate you sexually. Aphrodisiacs were never anything I planned my meals around, you understand, but I figured it was worth knowing about in the event I was in Walgreen's eating at the counter someday and Redford sat down next to me. I'd know what to suggest.

I never put a whole lot of stock in the myth until one day I was doing a cooking segment with Julia Child for "Good Morning America" when she passed me a plate of flaming bananas.

As I stuffed half of the banana into my mouth she observed, "It's an aphrodisiac, you know." When I got to thinking about the number of gorillas and monkeys and baboons out there who looked lousy, but multiplied their brains out, I became a believer.

All my life I heard whispered rumors about the powers of oysters and strawberries, but I never knew about chocolate until a few years ago. Scientists did some studies and found out it contained phenylethylamine. This is a chemical that is released by the brain when people fall in love. (For years I've been blaming my mother.) According to the studies, this would explain why, when a romance goes on the rocks, lovers will go on a chocolate binge which is the body's way of replacing phenylethylamine.

My mother didn't raise a fool. I knew that love foods would never be anything cheap . . . like hamhocks and beans or macaroni and cheese. No, we're looking at artichokes, pomegranates, asparagus, mushrooms, caviar, nuts, truffles, foie gras and ripe apricots.

Other scientists disagree. They say it isn't what you eat that arouses people sexually, but where you eat. A posh restaurant with dim lights and soft music with food served elegantly on large plates and sprinkled with a life-sized pepper mill will do as much as seven courses of figs.

In preparation for Valentine's Day, I approached my husband a few days ago and said, "Did you know that chocolate is an aphrodisiac?"

"Where did you hear that?" he asked.

"And that the Mexican Emperor Montezuma drank 50 cups of chocolate before entering his harem?"

"After what Montezuma did for me in Mazatlan a few years ago, I wouldn't believe him if he told me oranges grew on trees."

"I'd hate to think what would happen if someone gave me a three-pound box of chocolate creams."

There's no need to labor what I got for Valentine's Day, but I wonder how far Montezuma could have gotten with a bag of Trail Mix.

Dear Abby

By Abigail Van Buren

1983 by Universal Press Syndicate

'Twenty Questions' Is Serious Game For Gamblers Anonymous

DEAR ABBY: I've been married to Al (not his real name) for 16 years. I love him and I know he loves me, but I cannot stay in this marriage unless he quits gambling. Al owns his own business and we live well, but he owes money all over. He bets on football, basketball, baseball, boxing, horses and dogs. He even bets on elections, and he bets big!

I know he's won a lot of money, but he never tells me how much he loses.

Please help me to help him, Abby. Gambling is like a disease with him.

AL'S WIFE

DEAR WIFE: Compulsive gambling is a disease; it's never "cured," but it can be controlled. Gamblers Anonymous (fashioned after Alcoholics Anonymous) offers this questionnaire:

1. Do you ever lose time from work due to gambling?

2. Is gambling making your home life unhappy?

3. Is gambling affecting your reputation?

4. Have you ever felt remorse after gambling?

5. Do you ever gamble to get money with which to pay debts or otherwise solve financial problems?

6. Does gambling decrease your ambition? Efficiency?

7. After losing, do you feel you must return as soon as possible and win back your losses?

8. After a win, do you have a strong urge to return and win more?

9. Do you often gamble your last dollar?

10. Do you ever borrow to finance your gambling?

11. Have you ever sold anything to finance gambling?

12. Are you reluctant to use "gambling money" for normal expenditures?

13. Does gambling make you careless of the welfare of your family?

14. Do you ever gamble longer than you had planned?

15. Have you ever gambled to escape worry or trouble?

16. Have you ever committed, or considered committing, an illegal act to finance gambling?

17. Does gambling cause you to have difficulty in sleeping?

18. Do arguments, disappointments or frustrations create in you an urge to gamble?

19. Do you ever have an urge to celebrate any good fortune by a few hours of gambling?

20. Have you ever considered self-destruction as the result of your gambling?

Ask your husband to answer these questions honestly, and if he answers yes to seven or more questions, he is a compulsive gambler, and I strongly recommend that he get in touch with Gamblers Anonymous (it's in your phone book).

It is a non-profit fellowship of men and women who admit that gambling is not a game or a sport—it's a disease they must learn to control.

Encourage your husband to go to a meeting and learn firsthand how he can overcome the disease.

For more information about Gamblers Anonymous, write to the national office: P.O. Box 17173, Los Angeles, Calif. 90017. Please enclose a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope.

DEAR ABBY: I recently read the following in your column:

"Confidential to everybody:
"'I have learned
"'To spell hors d'oeuvres
"'Which still grates on
"'Some people's n'oeuvres.
WARREN KNOX'"

Abby, I know the phrase has been Anglicized; nevertheless diehard purists like me still consider it improper to sound the final consonant in the phrase "hors d'oeuvres," which prompts my:

Confidential to Warren Knox:
To announce in print
You can spell hors d'oeuvres
And then rhyme it wrong
Takes a lot of nerve.

BEA SHAW,
HOLLYWOOD, CALIF.

DEAR BEA: French is not my language (obviously). You might be interested to know that only two people wrote to point out my faux pas: You and Paul Ipsen of Platteville, Wis. Mon Dieu!

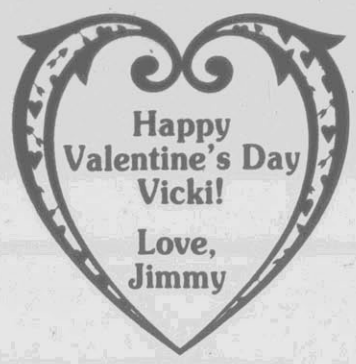

* * *

CONFIDENTIAL TO YOU: Don't tell me it's St. Valentine's Day again! Well, it is, so be a sweetheart, and call someone you love and say, "I love you." (Make two or three calls. Who said you can't love more than one person—in different ways, of course.)

Go through your closets and put all those clothes you haven't worn in a year in a box for Goodwill or your favorite charity. Take some flowers to someone in a nursing home and offer to take him or her for a little ride. Forgive an enemy. Pray for your friends. Donate some blood. Pay your doctor bill. Listen to your teen-ager. Tip the cook in addition to the waiter—or waitress. Invite a lonely lady (or gentleman) to lunch. Tell your parents you think they're wonderful. Drive carefully. If you're walking, watch where you're going.

And don't wait until next year to be a sweetheart again.

Love, ABBY

Blackmail

Raising the state's legal drinking age for beer and wine from 19 to 21 is another one of those things awaiting action by the Legislature this session.

Rep. Dan Lilley, of Lenoir County, introduced a bill in the House recently to accomplish that. The state has until October 1986 to meet a deadline set by Congress in order to keep the federal road money that is its due.

Making state receipt of federal moneys contingent upon adopting certain legislation is not new. The cause is always "worthwhile," but application of some gentle blackmail to achieve that worthy end is irritating.

Gov. Jim Martin is not in favor of raising the drinking age. He is realist enough to know the assembly will pass the required legislation. Martin does say that if North Carolina is really going to deal with drunken drivers, the state would just have to crack down regardless of their age.

Rep. Lilley concedes that if things went as planned, the congressional mandate might save lives and property and reduce the amount of alcohol consumption. But as he sees it, chances of losing North Carolina's $30 million share of extra gasoline taxes is the deciding factor.

(For the record, another piece of highway safety legislation is in the works. It would require use of seat belts under threat of fines for not doing so.)

You probably remember the previous occasion when Congress attached a condition to states receiving highway funds. That was when they demanded an enforced observance of the 55 mph speed limit ... a gas economy measure as well as a safety measure.

For awhile the scheme seemed almost working. But anyone who subsequently took to the open road knows the 55 mph driver was passed by everybody and everything except mule-drawn carts. Mandated safety measures just don't seem to have any staying power.

Research

We're inclined to go along with those who think Congress will override administration moves to trim funds going into medical research ... a field of special interest to Tar Heels who are aware of their state's involvement.

We have ongoing research in medical school centers at East Carolina, Bowman Gray, Duke and UNC-CH. There are no signals of alarm from any of them, but high hopes and reminders that a similar effort by the Office of Management and Budget last year saw resultant opposition by Congress.

The budget-cutting step is said to be intended to reduce the number of funded projects from 6,500 to around 5,000 ... hardly a death-dealing blow, but still significant. Decision as to which projects might be pared would be beyond capabilities of laymen to judge.

Research in almost any field conceivably might result in discoveries of incalculable value that is only remotely connected with the intended target. It has happened in the past.

We are told that the major fields of medical research today are related to heart disease, cancer, strokes and aging. Helpful knowledge in all four is being accrued at a continuing pace. Stopping or slowing the process would conceivably mean some people would die who don't have to.

That alone would stay our hands if we were saddled with responsibilities of deciding where budget-cuts were in order. We suspect you, too, would similarly hesitate.

All of this pretty well sums up why interested and involved observers doubt Congress will accept funds-cutting in medical research. It has a tradition of support.

States Drifting Toward Bad Law

WASHINGTON — Three states (New York, New Jersey and Illinois) already have adopted mandatory seat-belt laws. Thirty other states are actively considering such measures. Highway safety is a good cause, but it cannot justify bad law, and that is what we're drifting into here.

This sudden surge of legislative activity is not the consequence of spontaneous combustion in the several capitals. It is the direct consequence of a federal regulation handed down by the secretary of transportation in July of last year. The regulation amounts to a form of blackmail. This is how it works:

Commencing in September 1989, all cars sold in the United States must be equipped either with air bags or with automatic seat belts — unless. This is the "unless": Cars must be so equipped unless states that together contain two-thirds of the U.S. population enact mandatory seat-belt laws by April 1, 1989. If enough states fall in line, the air-bag requirement will be nullified.

What we have here is a choice of compulsions. Would you rather be compelled to buckle up, under threat of fine or imprisonment? Or would you rather be compelled to pay several hundred dollars for an air bag?

Let us make distinctions. If we accept the evidence compiled by authorities on highway safety (and I know of no reason to challenge these studies), seat belts do indeed save lives. State troopers and other officials have kept records on corpses as the bodies are dragged from wrecked vehicles. In perhaps 4 percent of the fatalities, the occupants were in fact buckled up, but these crashes were of such severity that no one would have survived anyhow. In the overwhelming majority of survivable collisions, the dead are found unbuckled. The government estimates that if even 70 percent of occupants fastened their seat belts, 6,800 lives could be saved every year.

These and other data make a compelling case in favor of buckling up. They do not make a compelling case in favor of making us buckle up. There's the difference. These laws propose one more well-intended encroachment upon the right of free citizens to make their own choices about their own lives.

There is another objection: The government's proposition amounts to heads we win, and tails we win too. It is one more manifestation of the discredited theory that Uncle knows best. Our union was founded on the federalist principle of leaving wide areas of responsibility to the states. The idea was to encourage variety in political experiment. To the extent that federal programs deny such opportunities to the states, we weaken one of the foundation stones of our system.

The people, and the states, must be permitted wide latitude. If people fail or refuse to buckle up, they may die because of their disregard for their own safety. But carry the argument a step further. Let us suppose that some harmless, non-addictive drug were discovered that would affect us in all kinds of good ways: One tablet before driving would sober the drunk, arouse the sleepy driver, heighten our reactions to traffic hazards, improve our eyesight and enhance our judgment of road conditions. Then suppose that laws were to be proposed that would require all drivers to take such a tablet twice a day. We would hear the same plausible argument: Such laws would save 20,000 lives every year! But it is unthinkable that state legislatures would enact them.

There are dangers in reducing arguments to absurdities, but the rhetorical device has its usee nonetheless. The question always must be: Where ie the line to be drawn between freedom and compulsion? Historically we have drawn the line in terms of the danger that one person causes to another. We 4o not have laws that compel people to take baths, but we have laws of quarantine against contagious diseases. In historic districts, we leave a property owner free to do what he will with the interior of his house, but we insist that he do nothing to the exterior that will harm the property value of his neighbor's house.

When we get into this business of air bags and seat belts, we are talking about preserving our lives. Fine! But we ought also to be talking about preserving our freedoms — including, if you please, the freedom to be foolish.

Congressmen Step In

WASHINGTON — A new left-wing peace offensive timed to coincide with new arms control talks was kicked off when 13 House Democrats hand-delivered a letter to Belgian Prime Minister Wilfried Martens pleading with him not to accept any new NATO missiles during U.S.-Soviet talks starting next month.

The congressmen claimed in their Jan. 11 letter that Belgium was in a "unique position" to start a fresh bandwagon rolling aginst deployment of the new NATO nuclear missiles. Although they mistakenly praised Martens for opposing the weapons, the prime minister was not the least bit happy when handed the letter during his mid-January visit with President Reagan. In fact, Martens will risk his political life if, as probably, he insists that his country stick to scheduled mid-March deployment of new ground-launched cruise missiles (GLCMs).

The repudiation by the congressmen of their own government's and NATO's policy constituted a most unusual intervention in an ally's political crisis. More disturbing, it also sent a dubious signal to Moscow, hinting at resurgence of the nuclear freeze movement in the West.

The congressional letter was a hot potato when it hit Brussels. So embarrassing to the Belgian government has it been that there has been no reply of any kind, not even a formal acknowledgement.

Martens and his Christian Democratic government strongly favor deployment of the new GLCMs, but one wing of his party is pressing for delay. Opposition parties, led by the Socialists, are committed to killing all new deployments. Their success in Belgium would trigger a crisis for all NATO.

The Belgians kept quiet about the embarrassment of the congressional letter — so quiet that senior Reagan administration officials were not even aware of it. When we informed them of its contents, they were more worried about its mischief in Moscow than in Brussels.

Martens appears to be winning his sturdy battle to keep his country on the deployment schedule. So long as the U.S. is seen to be negotiating in good faith with the Russians, the threat of a renewed peace movement in Western Europe and the nuclear freeze that is its hallmark will be contained.

But in the Kremlin, the letter from the House Democrats may carry more weight than it merits, inviting Soviet foot-dragging and intransigence. Signers included inveterate peace-bloc leaders such as Reps. Mickey Leland of Texas, Ron Dellums of California, Parren Mitchell of Maryland and John Conyers of Michigan, all members of the Congressional Black Caucus.

However, the letter was also signed by Reps. Pat Shroeder of Colorado and Nick Mavroules of Massachusetts, respected liberals on the Armed Services Committee, and two Foreign Affairs committee members, Reps. Ted Weiss of New York and George Crockett of Michigan (who is also a Black Caucus member).

What angered administration officials was the letter's claim that "grave concern" of Belgian citizens over the new missiles is "shared by many in this country, in all segments of our politics and society."

"Every poll tells us otherwise," Under Secretary of Defense Fred Ikle told us. "Of all the claims in the letter, that one is particularly untrue."

Other claims also distressed Reagan policymakers. The letter strongly indicated that the Belgian prime minister himself was against deployment, praising what it called his "recent announcemenet" that there would be a delay in accepting the new weapons. Actually, Martens is expected to approve a deployment schedule soon, despite the possibility of new elections that could throw him out of office.

The letter coincides with new anti-missile strings by peace activists seeking to revive the nuclear freeze as U.S.-Soviet talks are about to start again. These activists, as usual, ignore the nearly 400 SS-20s now deployed in the Soviet Union or Soviet-controlled territory.

Nor did the Jan. 11 letter from the congressmen dwell on the roaring train of future Soviet nuclear deployments. They suggested only that Martens "ask the Soviet Union for a similar ... restraint" on its Euromissiles. In Brussels, that scarcely seemed to be evenhanded pressure on NATO and the Kremlin.

No wonder the Belgian prime minister has yet to reply to his American congressional admirers.

Strength For Today

Somebody always has to absorb the loss of a counterfeit coin. To pass it on to others is, of course, dishonest. The honest person to whom such a coin has been passed takes the loss himself and puts the spurious coin out of circulation.

There are three things we can do with a personal injury. We can nurse a grudge. We can take out our spite on other people. Or, we can absorb the loss. The latter method is, of course, the Christian way to handle such a situation.

In the whole of his teachings Jesus constantly emphasized that somewhere in the circle of retaliation for evil, somebody has to be big enough to absorb the loss within himself and let the matter end there. Pride, jealousy, and envy generally prevent people from giving up.

Somebody, somewhere, has to be willing, at whatever cost, to forgive and forget. This is the move of bigness and love.

Legislature Loses Its Color

RALEIGH — Looking down on the House and Senate chambers from the visitors' galleries, it's fairly evident who won the 1984 elections and who lost.

No, it wasn't a big Republican victory, a great conservative sweep or a crippling loss for the Democrats and liberals. The election has to be analyzed in a more profound fashion. The grays won. The colors lost.

That's right. Sitting in the galleries, it was hard to believe that this General Assembly had any historial connection to the last. If the furniture wasn't the same, you'd have thought you were in a different building. Gone were all the flashy dressers of previous sessions. Gone were the white-shoed crowd, the leisure suits and the polyesters. Gone was color. In its place came, instead, the drab.

In the Senate, the four most outrageous dressers were all lost. In the House,the worst dresser got elevated to Congress, while a couple of flashy representatives have apparently toned down their wardrobes.

It is in the Senate where the difference is most notable. On opening day, only two female senators, one wearing a white suit and the other a pink suit, broke the blues. Everybody else was wearing a blue suit except for Sen. Cass Ballenger, R-Catawba, a millionarie, who chose to wear a cheap (he says it cost $300) brown corduroy suit that didn't fit him. He said it was the only warm suit he had and he promised to wear gray and blue for the rest of the session.

Gone were Sens. George Marion, Craig Lawing, Cecil Jenkins and Dal Alford, men of color who could overload the cameras of UNC-TV simply by walking through their pictures. Without Lawing and Marion, there are no white shoes in the upper chamber. That's just another problem for Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan to confront.

How could anyone forget the white suits Marion wore to complement his flowing locks of white hair. Then there were the checkered sports coats Sen. Alford made famous in the 1950s and which he continued to wear all through the Nehru jacket rages, past leisure suits and right into the age of the double-breasted.

Over on the House side, evernone misses former Rep. — now congressman — Howard Coble's blue and green outfit. Blue and green aren't all that rare a combination but Coble had found a jacket that made his fellow Republicans in the back row beg for sunglasses. When he combined it with a pink tie, it ruined lunch.

In the entire 1985 assembly, there appears to be only one man with the courage of his colors, that is Rep. Babe Owens, D-Rutherford. Owens came to the opening session dressed unabashedly in a red plaid jacket. It reminded veterans of another legislator, Rep. Charles Beall, D-Haywood, who came to the Legislature his first time in a red plaid suit but who has since converted to tweeds and herrinray.

Even. Rep. Mickey Michaux, D-Durham, who ran for Congress several years ago with an open shirt collar exposing chest hair and a gold chain, came to the Legislature in a lawyer's suit. It was a bit more continental than most of the other lawyers' suits, but still a piece of cloth worthy of the bar.

One bright spot is Rep. Herman Gist, D-Guilford, who combines gray suits with his mother's handmade silk ties. One is chartreuse, blue, green and yellow in a pattern he describes as "a snake's skin."

The colors took their whipping in 1984. But there's always next year.

One can have no doubts that the people of North Carolina, when informed that they've voted all the spring green and yellow striped jackets out of their Legislature, will do something to correct the situation in 1986.

Crime Spree Leaves 3 Dead In Kansas

COLBY, Kan. (AP) — Three young men and a woman apparently held up a roadside restaurant, shot the manager to death and killed two hostages "execution-style" in a crime spree that ended when one of the suspects died in a shootout with police, a sheriff said today.

An undersheriff, a grain elevator operator and two of the suspects also were wounded in the three-county rampage in rural northwest Kansas on Wednesday, said Thomas County Sheriff Tom Jones.

Larry McFarland, the manager of a Stuckey's restaurant along Interstate 70, was shot to death in an apparent robbery, Jones said. After the body was found the suspects exchanged shots with Thomas County Undersheriff Ben Albright, leaving him wounded.

Minutes later, two men were abducted and a pickup truck was stolen at a nearby grain elevator. The two abducted men were subsequently "laid down in a road" and shot in the face, said Jones. He called the crimes "needless, bloody, ruthless murders. There's just no rhyme or reason to it."

The chase ended with a gunbattle when a police roadblock forced the pickup truck off the road.

One of the three surviving suspects was hospitalized, and two others were jailed. They were being held without bail on probable cause for first-degree murder and were to be formally charged in a hearing here today, said Thomas County Deputy Sheriff Mike Bond.

Authorities identified the suspects as Mark Anthony Walter and Lisa J. Dunn of Suttons Bay, Mich.; Daniel Eugene Remeta, address unknown; and James C. Hunter of Amoret, Mo. They were estimated to be from 18 to 25 years old.

"Why in the world did they do what they did in our particular county? I just don't know," Jones said.

He said a high school student found the body of McFarland, 27, about 3:30 p.m. Wednesday inside his restaurant along the I-70 exchange at Grainfield, a Gove County town of about 400 people about 35 miles southeast of Colby.

A short time later, Albright, 27, was shot at least twice when he approached a suspicious vehicle at the I-70 exchange at Levant, an unincorporated community of about 80 people a little more than 40 miles northwest of Grainfield.

The wounded officer called in a description of the vehicle and suspects, Jones said. Albright was in serious but stable condition today following surgery at Citizens Medical Center in Colby.

The suspects then drove a short distance to the Bartlett and Co. grain elevator in Levant, where they allegedly abducted two men, stole a pickup truck and shot the elevator manager, Maurice Christie, 61, wounding him, Jones said. He was in serious but stable condition at Citizens Medical Center today.

Around 4:30 p.m., the bodies of the hostages, Glenn Moore of Colby and Rick Schroeder of Levant, were found along a road northwest of Levant. Both had been shot in the face, Jones said.

"They appeared to be execution-style killings. They were just actually laid down in a road and shot two or three times in the head," the sheriff said.

The suspects were heading north on Kansas 25 in Moore's pickup when they ran into a roadblock just north of the Thomas-Rawlins county line, forcing them to turn around and drive into the yard of an unoccupied farmhouse. They jumped out of the truck and exchanged gunfire with a Kansas Highway Patrol trooper and two Colby police officers, said Jones.

Walter was killed in the exchange, while Remeta and Ms. Dunn were wounded, the sheriff said.

Remeta was admitted to Citizens Medical Center but was expected to be transferred to jail later today, Jones said. Ms. Dunn, who was treated at the hospital and released, and Hunter were being held in the Thomas County Jail in Colby.

Authorities seized a .22-caliber handgun and .357-caliber Magnum handgun believed used in the spree, Jones said. Autopsies were being conducted on the victims.

"Everybody's pretty well shook up," said Ernie Seemann of Levant, the former manager of the grain elevator. "You just don't think it would happen in a place like this, but I guess it does."

London Turns To Eros On Valentine's

By MICHAEL WEST
Associated Press Writer

LONDON (AP) — Eros, the 92-year-old god of love, was back in London today as Bootle told Sossiewag Pooh Flibs she's the girl of his dreams and an ad in the London Times informed Little Runner: "Ooooooooooo Zooooooooo Zooooooooooo Zoooooooo."

It's Valentine's Day again, when Britons celebrate the ancient festival of love with declarations of affection that range the emotional gamut from passionate to screwball.

Fittingly, the day was enlivened this year by the unveiling of the renovated statue of Eros by Ken Livingstone, leader of the Greater London Council, at the Royal Festival Hall.

The well-loved statue, poised on one leg drawing a bow, was placed at London's Piccadilly Circus intersection in 1893. It was removed last August to a Scottish foundry to repair the ravages of time, weather and revellers who used to swing on its wings. Eros will return to Piccadilly Circus upon completion of a $10.8 million plan to improve roads, modernize the subway station and build a pedestrian piazza.

"I am delighted he is back in the capital where he belongs. He is as much a part of London as the Cockney sparrow and Big Ben," said Livingstone.

The overhaul included repairing the god of love's fractured ankle, bent thigh and cracked knee.The 400-pound, 8-foot, aluminium statue by Sir Alfred Gilbert also underwent X-ray and chemical tests and overall straightening and strengthening.

Meanwhile, romantic messages from love-smitten Britons appeared in newspaper ads. In one, Bootle told Sossiewag Pooh Flibs she's the girl of his dreams.

Another ad in the London Times informed Little Runner: "Ooooooooooo Zooooooooo Zooooooooooo Zoooooooo." At the Times, there was no precise meaning available for the anonymous message. But it was believed to convey enthusiasm.

Little Runner, Bootle and Sossiewag Pooh Flibs could not be contacted for comment. Neither could the other 3,500 or so advertisers who filled four tightly packed pages of the paper with their Valentine's Day greetings.

The fun of the thing for the senders and recipients is that they know who they are but nobody else does.

The fun of the thing for the Times is that at $4.32 a line, the ads are a paying proposition.

Here's a brief selection:

— ICKLE NICKY SNEASNAKE Mrs. Khee loves you (snots and snots and snots)

— HEFFLO PECKHAMIENSIS - Let us work a mystic wreath, unknown unto the world beneath Fosco Wellensis ecclesiasticus

— DIGI: I hope I have, and will continue to give you 'The Times' of your life

— TO DILLY DUCK from The Drake

— TO SCOOTE SHOES all my love. Banana Boots

— RITA, dearest, over ten years now and still I love you. It broke my heart to part with you, but the dice were loaded against us. Remember those gentle summer nights. Remember me now I am gone away. Farewell. Be strong. Kev.

Among other London papers, the Guardian carried three pages of similar Valentine's Day ads, the Daily Mail six, the Daily Mirror four, the Daily Express two, and the Daily Star two.

Historians say Valentine's Day has its origins in the third century, when two Christian martyrs, both named Valentine, died. They were executed during a pagan Roman erotic festival known as the Lupercalia held in the ancient equivalent of February. The early church attempted to Christianize the festival in honor of St. Valentine, but nobody knows which one of the martyrs it is intended to honor.

Radio Says American Escapes Captors

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Jeremy Levin, the Beirut bureau chief for Cable News Network who disapeared last March 7, escaped from his captors early today, the Christian Voice of Lebanon radio station said.

The report said Levin, 51, showed up at a military headquarters of the Syrian army in the eastern Lebanese city of Baalbek about 2 a.m. It gave no further details.

The office of the French news agency Agence France Presse in Beirut said an AFP correspondent in Baalbek had seen Levin, and that he appeared to be in good health, but was tired. AFP said it had a picture of Levin.

Levin failed to report for work last March 7 and was assumed by his colleagues in Beirut to have been kidnapped.

Members of Levin's family in the United States said they had no confirmation of the reports of his freedom.

His wife, Lucille, told Associated Press Radio in Washington, D.C. that she called the State Department after hearing reports of her husband's freedom. "The operations desk had not heard at first and then called back and said they'd heard something on the radio. But they had not received anything," she said.

Asked whether she now expects to hear from Syria, she said: "Well, I think that would be great. I don't know, it's hard to speculate. I think that would be wonderful."

"I did expect it. I have expected it, but a year is an awfully long time," she said. Mrs. Levin said she also was concerned about other Americans missing in Lebanon.

She said in an interview on NBC-TV's "Today" show that she was "really believing" her husband was free.

Asked if she thought he might have escaped, she said: "I don't think that's what happened. I think this is a message from the Middle East, a desire for peace, and we should answer it with our prayers and careful concentration on peace with them."

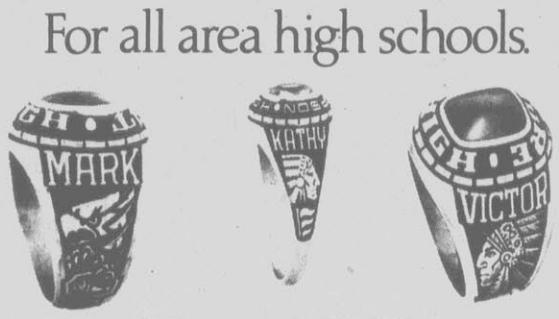

"It may be their way of making a gesture. And that's just my heart's reaction," she said.

Clare Moss, Levin's step-daughter, said from her home in suburban Washington, D.C., "I know this is it. We all feel it is."

There were reports published in the United States that the U.S. State Department last July saw a videotape showing Levin alive. He was also mentioned by William Buckley, a kidnapped U.S. Embassy political officer, who recently appeared on a videotape obtained by the British television agency Visnews.

Democrats Look South And West For Rebuilding

WASHINGTON (AP) — Paul G. Kirk Jr., the new chief of the Democratic Party, is looking to the South and the West to rebuild the national party's political fortunes after its landslide defeat by President Reagan last November.

"We have a solid base in the Northeast and Midwest," Kirk said in an interview Wednesday, "and we have a responsibility to those areas. But the South and the West are going to make the difference if we're going to be competitive."

And Kirk is wasting no time trying to woo those regions. He will start with the South on Friday when he meets in Atlanta with the 13 Southern state party chairmen and other Southern officials.

He plans to follow up the meeting in Atlanta with a visit to Plains, Ga., for talks with former President Jimmy Carter.

"I didn't wait for an invitation," said Kirk, who was elected chairman of the Democratic National Committee earlier this month, defeating the Southern candidate, former Gov. Terry Sanford of North Carolina.

"This is not just a cosmetic visit," he said. "We're going to talk about substantive issues. I don't have all the answers. I want to learn from the South and the West. I want to work with people in those regions to build a base large enough to put together a political majority and win the right to govern."

Kirk is aware that his defeat of Sanford for the party chairmanship angered many Southerners, who viewed his alliance with liberal Sen. Edward M. Kennedy of Massachusetts as a potential handicap in bringing the conservative South back into the Democratic ranks.

"In a contest like that, some people will be upset," the Massachusetts native said. "But they're being helpful and hospitable. We have the same sense of purpose."

Kirk, who served on Kennedy's Senate staff from 1969 to 1977, said he is "proud of my friendship with Senator Kennedy." But, he added, "I'm my own person, and my responsibility is to the party."

Kirk said he wants to "listen to the concerns" that Southern Democratic leaders have about the future of the party. "The party can only benefit from their views," he said.

He said he believes there are at least some areas that he and the Southern party leaders will agree on, including the image of the national party in the South.

"There's been the perception that the national party has not been in sync with progressive mainstream America," the Democratic leader said. "That image has been exaggerated for political purposes by those who don't wish us well. So, we've got to change that perception."

Beyond that, he said, the national party has "got to establish credibility on the economy and a sound and stable defense posture."

"These are the first things we've got to do, because these are the things that are important to people no matter what part of the country they live in," Kirk added. "That's where we need to direct our energies and not get caught up fighting over other issues."

PLEADING — Cathy Evelyn Smith smiles as she listens to her attorney talk with the judge during her arriangment Wednesday in Los Angeles. She pleaded innocent to murder and drug charges om connection with the death of comedian John Belushi. (AP Laserphoto)

Hearing Scheduled For Rock Singer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Canadian rock singer Cathy Evelyn Smith has pleaded innocent to murder and drug charges in the death of comedian John Belushi and was ordered back to court next month for a preliminary hearing.

In entering the plea Wednesday, Ms. Smith reneged on an involuntary manslaughter plea bargain she had agreed to last month before her extradition from Canada.

Ms. Smith's attorney, Howard Weitzman, said he would ask the court to delay the scheduled March 12 preliminary hearing because he was having trouble serving subpoenas on unidentified news reporters to testify.

Outside court, Weitzman said the reporters may include those who interviewed Ms. Smith for a controversial National Enquirer story about her alleged role in Belushi's death on March 5, 1982.

Belushi, 33, the star of television's "Saturday Night Live" and of films including "Animal House," "The Blues Brothers" and "Continental Divide," died in a rented bungalow at the Chateau Marmont hotel on the Sunset Strip. The coroner listed cause of death as acute heroin and cocaine poisoning.

Weitzman, who won acquittal for automaker John Z. De Lorean in a notorious cocaine trafficking case, took over Ms. Smith's defense after she arrived in Los Angeles and announced she would no longer cooperate with the plea bargain. He said he felt there was sufficient evidence to prove her innocence.

Ms. Smith was indicted by the Los Angeles County Grand Jury on one count of murder and 13 counts of supplying and administering drugs.

Grand jury testimony and published accounts, including Bob Woodward's book "Wired: The Short Life and Fast Times of John Belushi," said Belushi was on an extended drug spree before his death and Ms. Smith allegedly furnished and injected him with cocaine and heroin.

Inflation Still Here

WASHINGTON (AP) — A bipartisan group of former government officials said today it is too soon for President Reagan to declare he has conquered inflation.

"The reduction of inflation to the neighborhood of 4 percent is in no sense a victory," said a statement issued by Henry H. Fowler, treasury secretary under President Lyndon B. Johnson, and Herbert Stein, chairman of President Richard M. Nixon's Council of Economic Advisers.

They are co-chairmen of the Committee to Fight Inflation, a bipartisan group of 14 former government officials formed in 1980.

In his budget message to Congress on Feb. 4, Reagan, noting that consumer prices in 1984 rose 4 percent, said "inflation remains well under control."

Two days later, in his State of the Union address, the president said "the best way to reduce (budget) deficits is through economic growth."

Fowler and Stein disputed both statements, while adding that the prospect of continued high budget deficits is a major threat to reducing inflation.

The river of federal red ink, now running at more than $200 billion a year, could force the government to deal with the debt through inflationary policies, such as simply printing more money to cover the shortfall, the analysts said.

"This possibility represents the ultimate inflationary threat inherent in the federal deficit, and it alone would warrant a strenuous effort to bring the budget under control," Fowler and Stein said.

They said a 4 percent inflation rate appears low compared to the rates in the 1970s, which ranged as high as 13.3 percent in 1979. But "it is well above the average rate of 1½ percent that prevailed between the Korean War in the early 1950s and the outbreak of the Vietnam War in the middle 1960s," they said.

The analysts said a continued 4 percent inflation rate could seriously damage the economy and would cut the purchasing power of the dollar in half in less than 18 years.

The Reagan administration has projected that the inflation rate, as measured by the rise in consumer prices, will be just over 4 percent through 1987, then drop to 3.9 percent in 1988.

Flu-Like Illness Mars Schroeder's Birthday

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — William Schroeder turned 53 today, but the world's second permanent artificial heart recipient may not be well enough to celebrate his birthday or Valentine's Day, a hospital spokesman says.

Schroeder, who has survived with the plastic and metal heart since Nov. 25, continues to suffer from the flu-like symptoms that first appeared more than a week ago.

Doctors performed tests Wednesday to determine the cause of Schroeder's temperature fluctuations, said Humana spokesman Bob Irvine. His temperature was normal Wednesday, but it had ranged from 100 degrees to 105 degrees earlier this week, officials said.

His condition remains satisfactory, but his regimen of therapy has been reduced until he feels better. Schroeder has had daily sessions of physical, occupational and speech therapy to help his recovery from a series of strokes he suffered Dec. 13.

Visitors to his room at Humana Hospital Audubon must wear hospital masks and clean their hands before entering.

The way Schroeder and his family celebrate his birthday will depend on how he feels today, Irvine said.

One present Schroeder will not be receiving today is a move to a nearby apartment, which was a possibility until the Jasper, Ind., man became ill.

Doctors have not given a firm release date, but have said the move could take place late this month.

Meanwhile, in Schroeder's hometown, the City Council honored Jasper's most famous resident with a special Valentine's Day resolution for his 53rd birthday.

Schroeder was cited for his contributions to mankind and the artificial heart program. The council passed the resolution during its regular monthly meeting Wednesday night.

Drug Allows Easier Test Of Heart Damage

BOSTON (AP) — A drug that mimics the effects of hard exercise on the heart is the key to a "chemical stress test" that lets doctors evaluate bedridden patients' hearts without resorting to strenuous or invasive diagnostic tools, researchers reported today.

The new test screens people suspected of having serious heart disease, especially those who must undergo surgery. Experts who used it at Massachusetts General Hospital say it is "a safe, noninvasive and less expensive" alternative to angiography, now the standard way of examining people who cannot undergo exercise testing.

If patients are well enough, doctors can check their hearts by combining a stress test with a thallium scan. They receive injections of thallium and exercise on treadmills to increase the flow of blood to their hearts.

Healthy heart muscle quickly absorbs the thallium, but dead or diseased tissue does not. By taking a picture that reveals this absorption, doctors can judge the severity of their heart conditions. Sometimes people must undergo coronary bypass surgery to improve their cardiac blood flow before they can safely have surgery to correct other problems.

The chemical stress test allows doctors to obtain similar results when patients are too sick or crippled to walk on the treadmill.

In a report in the New England Journal of Medicine, the Boston researchers said the test accurately revealed patients who were at high risk of suffering heart attacks or other serious heart problems following vascular surgery.

Firm Opens Fur Racks To Needy

CHICAGO (AP) — When the spirit of giving hit Mel Walowitz, he came up with a novel charity idea: furs for the poor.

To celebrate his salon's 70th anniversary this year, the furrier on Wednesday gave away used fur coats to 30 needy, elderly women — to the tune of up to $35,000.

"The business has been good to us and we wanted to give something back to the people," said Robert Walowitz, the furrier's son and president of Mysels Furs. "We figured that if we could help a needy citizen stay warm, we could help the city."

The women chose from mink, fox, lynx, muskrat and raccoon coats, all of them reconditioned and in good shape. Most preferred the touch of mink.

The estimated value of the 30 coats is $25,000 to $35,000, Walowitz said.

Most of the women belong to the South Park Baptist Church and have incomes near the poverty line, said the church's pastor, the Rev. E.R. Williams. Before Wednesday, the thought of having a fur had been nothing more than a fantasy, he said.

"These people have reached the peak of their employment, others are on pensions," Williams said. "None has been able to buy a fur. To get a fur coat in the golden years is exciting, it's something every woman wants in life."

Indeed, Velma Thames said she always dreamed of owning a fur but never could afford one. She chose a light-colored mink.

"God has blessed me today," she said. "I'm going to be wearing it every day."

Others, accustomed to more practical wraps, were in awe just seeing the lush array of coats.

"Every time they bring in more coats, I'm about to have a cardiac," said Doramai Allen, 64.

The women were selected according to need. The South Side church was chosen after several local charities and public and private organizations were contacted. Some of them passed up the chance.

"Part of the problem was that nobody believed that we wanted to give away these furs for free," said Walowitz, whose father, Mel, is Mysels' board chairman.

"We wanted to find the neediest people," added Ellen Danaher, a publicist who helped arrange the giveaway. "I asked (one agency) if they could get some bag people. But they thought people would walk out of the door and get rolled."

"It's amazing," she said, "you can't just pick people off the streets and give them a mink."

Divorce Plan

LONDON (AP) — The winter synod of the Church of England has approved a plan designed to create a fairer system for divorced people wishing to remarry in the Anglican church.

In 1981, the church reversed its previous ban on remarriages and said second weddings could be permitted in some cases. The decision was left to parish priests, which led to widespread complaints of inconsistency between different regions and even neighboring parishes.

The new plan requires a parish priest to consult his bishop in each case. It does not affect a priest's legal right to marry or refuse to marry any couple.

FOUNDER — Clara Hale, the 79-year-old founder of Hale House in New York, holds one of her patients in the center, which provides a foster home for infants of drug addicts. Reagan Hero May Have Funds Frozen

By ED McCULLOUGH
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Clara Hale, the founder of a New York City foster home for children whose mothers are drug addicts, says she sees no irony in President Reagan praising her efforts while proposing to cap the federal program that helps support her work.

Mrs. Hale, 79, was called "an American hero" by Reagan in his State of the Union speech last week as she sat in the gallery of the Capitol near Nancy Reagan.

"I can't say if I feel anything," she said in a telephone interview Wednesday from Hale House in New York's Harlem section. "I don't know what he (Reagan) is doing. I only know what I'm doing."

The president's proposed 1986 budget for the Health and Human Services program that pays for foster care would be the same $485.4 million that is projected to be spent this year.

Foster care was not singled out for cutting, federal officials say.

"We've got a $200 billion deficit," said Ed Dale, spokesman for the White House Office of Management and Budget. "This program, like a lot of other social programs, is not slated for a reduction, but a freeze."

Marlin Fitzwater, a White House spokesman, added, "These are programs that have worked, but with that kind of a deficit, you have to make some decisions about what government can do."

Federal funds for foster care go to all 50 states, where the money is combined with state and local outlays for local programs. If a cap were approved by Congress, states could diminish the effects of a shortfall by reallocating the federal money that is available.

The president's 1986 budget proposes $40 billion in domestic spending cuts and $30 billion in increased military spending.

Federal funds for Hale House come from Title 4E of the Social Security Act, according to Hal Eidlin, spokesman for the HHS human development services division, which administers the program.

The HHS covers about a third of Hale House's costs to care for about a dozen infants and small children, said Jack Deacy, a spokesman for New York City's Human Resources Administration.

Most of the children are returned to their mothers after they, too, have undergone rehabilitation. Of approximately 500 children who have passed through Hale House, only a handful have been placed in foster homes.

"The mothers take them and are very glad to have them," Mrs. Hale said.

The public share — by far the largest — of Hale House's budget this year is about $189,000, of which the federal portion is approximately $64,000, Deacy said.

Private donations often are clothes or supplies, said Mrs. Hale, who started the center in her home in 1969 when she took in the infant child of a young woman who was a drug addict.

She would like to expand Hale House by moving to a larger home nearby, but lack of money is a problem.

"We don't have any," she said. The house she has in mind would allow her to take in "maybe 50" infants and children.

The federal foster care program has grown sharply since it was taken over by HHS in 1982, according to Silvia Wise, an HHS budget analyst. Program costs in 1984 were about $440.5 million, she said.

About 100,000 children are supported by the federal money.

If expenses at Hale House go up and the federal share remains the same, "someone at the agency (Human Resources Administration) then has to determine whether this is worth spending more money on," said Suzanne Trazoff, an assistant to Deacy.

The answer almost certainly would be affirmative, she said.

"I think it's probably pretty safe to assume New York City is not going to let this program go under," Ms. Trazoff said. "Before Reagan got hold of her, she (Mrs. Hale) was well known here."

Castro Overtures Called 'Rhetoric'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Dismissing overtures from Cuba's Fidel Castro as "a lot of rhetoric," Secretary of State George P. Shultz says a peaceful settlement in Nicaragua is possible only if the Sandinista government takes a democratic turn.

In an interview Wednesday in his office, Shultz adopted a tough stance toward both Cuba and Nicaragua even while defending an expanded U.S. dialogue with the Soviet Union, with which the two Marxist countries have close ties.

He called U.S. negotiations with Moscow "a damage control operation" essential to reducing tensions, but brushed aside recent statements by Castro that U.S.-Cuban relations could improve in President Reagan's second term.

"It's a lot of rhetoric," Shultz said in an interview to be broadcast Saturday by the Voice of America on its 30th anniversary. "What we look for is some change in his behavior. And his behavior is to continue to try to export revolution all over the hemisphere."

Similarly, Shultz said Nicaragua "doesn't show any signs at all of an inclination to live up to the stated aims of its own revolution." He accused Nicaragua's leftist government of holding a conscientious objector hostage and said the action "belies the words they like to use."

Shultz said the incident involving Jose Manuel Urbina Lara prompted Costa Rica, Honduras and El Salvador to refuse to attend a meeting on settling the conflicts in Central America.

"We're ready to help in the Contadora process in any way we can," Shultz said. "We tried. But we don't see the talks with Nicaragua getting any where."

The Contadora group, a collection of Latin American nations seeking a peaceful resolution to Central America's conflicts, announced cancellation of the meeting Wednesday in Mexico City. Victor Hugo Tinoco, Nicaragua's deputy foreign minister, said "the political will of the United States is behind this boycott."

Shultz said the adminstration was ready to talk to Nicaragua, "but it's a question whether Nicaragua will agree to, and live up to, the pledges it made to the OAS (Organization of American States), namely to have a country governed in a democratic way."

On another subject, Shultz said he felt King Fahd of Saudi Arabia was encouraging King Hussein of Jordan and the Palestine Liberation Organization "to find a way to move toward peace in the region."

Fahd has met with Reagan, Shultz and other U.S. officials here this week.

Ruling out a more active U.S. role in Middle East diplomacy at this point, Shultz said "drama junkies" think the only way to negotiate is to get on and off airplanes.

Real negotiations, he said, involved "putting the pieces into place that can eventually lead to a settlement."

Shultz said he did not know what Hussein had arranged with Yasser Arafat of the PLO regarding Mideast talks. "Our knowledge is kind of fuzzy," he said.

At the same time, Shultz dismissed any idea that the United States would serve as an intermediary between the Arabs and Israel. "I think the parties have to sit down and talk to each other," he said. "I am sure they will want us to be present."

Shultz Says Outspoken U.S. Diplomat Needs Tongue Tied

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of State George P. Shultz and the union of career diplomats are condemning a U.S. ambassador's assertion that the Foreign Service "takes the guts out of people."

Evan G. Galbraith, the ambassador to France and a political appointee of President Reagan's, caused a stir Wednesday with his declaration that political appointees make better ambassadors than career diplomats.

"When he says it takes the guts out of people, somebody ought to tie his tongue for him," an angry Shultz said in an interview with Voice of America.

And the American Foreign Service Association, which represents the nation's 3,700 career diplomats, denounced the "gratuitous insults (of) the very people who have done their best to keep him — and by extension the United States — out of trouble over the past several years."

Galbraith's remarks were published in Wednesday's editions of The New York Times and immediately touched off a controversy fueled by the traditional resentment career officers have toward political appointees.

Reagan has given about 40 percent of the 130 or so ambassadorial jobs to political appointees, compared with about 26 percent in the Carter administration.

"There's something about the foreign service that takes the guts out of people," the outspoken conservative banker, who is leaving his post in July, was quoted as saying in the article. "The tendency is to avoid confronting an issue."

Galbraith also contended, "Foreign policy is too important to be left up to the foreign service officers."

The ambassador was reprimanded three times by the French government during his 3½-year stint in Paris for controversial statements. In one case he said "everybody knows very well that the Soviet foreign policy is followed by the French Communist Party," referring to communists who were formerly in the Cabinet of Socialist President Francois Mitterrand.

The Times' dispatch from Paris was filled with numerous such direct quotations from Galbraith as well as the assessment that his words "contained an unusual degree of scorn for the State Department and Foreign Service career officials."

Galbraith issued a statement saying, "The New York Times article badly distorts my view of the Foreign Service. I do not hold career officers with scorn. To the contrary, they are highly dedicated, competent and often courageous. What I said was that in my opinion political ambassadors are better positioned than career officers to plead the president's case."

Attempts by The Associated Press to reach Galbraith in Paris were unsuccessful. But a U.S. Embassy official there, in a telephone interview from Washington, said it was his belief that Galbraith did not take issue with any of the quotations in the article, only with the characterization that he was scornful of the Foreign Service.

"I think it's more the tone and particularly the word 'scorn,'" the official said. He added that he did not believe a tape recording of the conversation was made.

Shultz said it was "a very distressing thing to have an Amerian ambassador assault both our military people and our foreign service people who are serving on the front lines to defend this country."

Asked whether he intended to tie Galbraith's tongue, Shultz replied: "I'm sure he'll hear about it."

Galbraith, who said his future plans remain open, told The Associated Press this week that he felt strongly that in such major posts as Paris, the ambassador's job "should be held by someone who reflects very strongly and sincerely the attitudes and policies of the president and who is prepared to speak out on behalf of those policies." He said that was much more difficult for a career officer.

Health Tax Decried

WASHINGTON (AP) — The insurance industry, backed by major businesses, labor and a consumer group, is challenging the Treasury Department's plan for taxing a portion of employer-paid health benefits as an unfair burden on Americans least able to bear it.

"Taxing employer-sponsored benefits will mean that many Americans may have great difficulty making it to the second American Revolution of fairness and opportunity" that President Reagan envisioned in his State of the Union message, said Ralph J. Eckert, chairman of Benefit Trust Life in Chicago and of the Health Insurance Association of America.

Alexander B. Trowbridge, president of the National Association of Manufacturers, joined Eckert at a news conference Wednesday to denounce the parts of the Treasury tax-overhaul plan that would tax a share of health insurance and all employer-paid group life insurance.

S.C. Court Axes Law Allowing Castration Of Rapists

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — The prosecutor in the case of three convicted rapists given the option of 30 years in prison or castration says he isn't surprised the South Carolina Supreme Court struck down the option as "mutilation."

The court unanimously ruled Wednesday that Circuit Judge Victor Pyle's sentence was void because "castration, a form of mutilation," is cruel and unusual punishment and is prohibited by the state constitution. The justices ordered the lower court to resentence the men.

"(Judges) are allowed a wide, but not unlimited discretion in imposing conditions of suspension (of sentence) or probation and they cannot impose conditions which are illegal and void as against public policy," the decision said.

Roscoe Brown, 28, of Pendleton, S.C., Michael Braxton, 21, of Sarasota, Fla., and Mark Vaughn, 23, of Clemson, S.C., were convicted in November 1983 in the brutal rape and torture of an Anderson, S.C., woman in April of that year.

"We knew there was a constitutional problem with the castration part of the sentence," said Solicitor George Ducworth, who prosecuted the case. He said he was "not surprised by the decision."

Ducworth defended Pyle for imposing the sentence that highlighted public dissatisfaction with current penalties. "Judge Pyle had the courage to hand down a sentence that was very controversial," he said. "It's very discouraging for law enforcement, prosecutors, victims of crime, to see a prisoner get a good sentence and then find out he's back on the street in practically no time."

The solicitor said he'll push for Brown, Braxton and Vaughn to be given the maximum penalty of 30 years in jail. He said the men, who are being held in Perry Correctional Institution in Greenville County, could be sentenced when the next three-week term of court begins Feb. 25.

Ducworth said he did not know if Pyle would handle the resentencing.

The men were convicted of raping an 80-pound woman in an Anderson County motel room. During the six-hour ordeal, the victim said she was cut with a broken bottle, thrown "like I was some type of rubber doll" and burned with cigarettes. Four units of blood were given to her at the hospital after the attack.

Stephen Henry, Brown's attorney, said Wednesday he was not surprised with the court's ruling. Brown may pursue the case, "depending on what the order says and what we decide," Henry said.

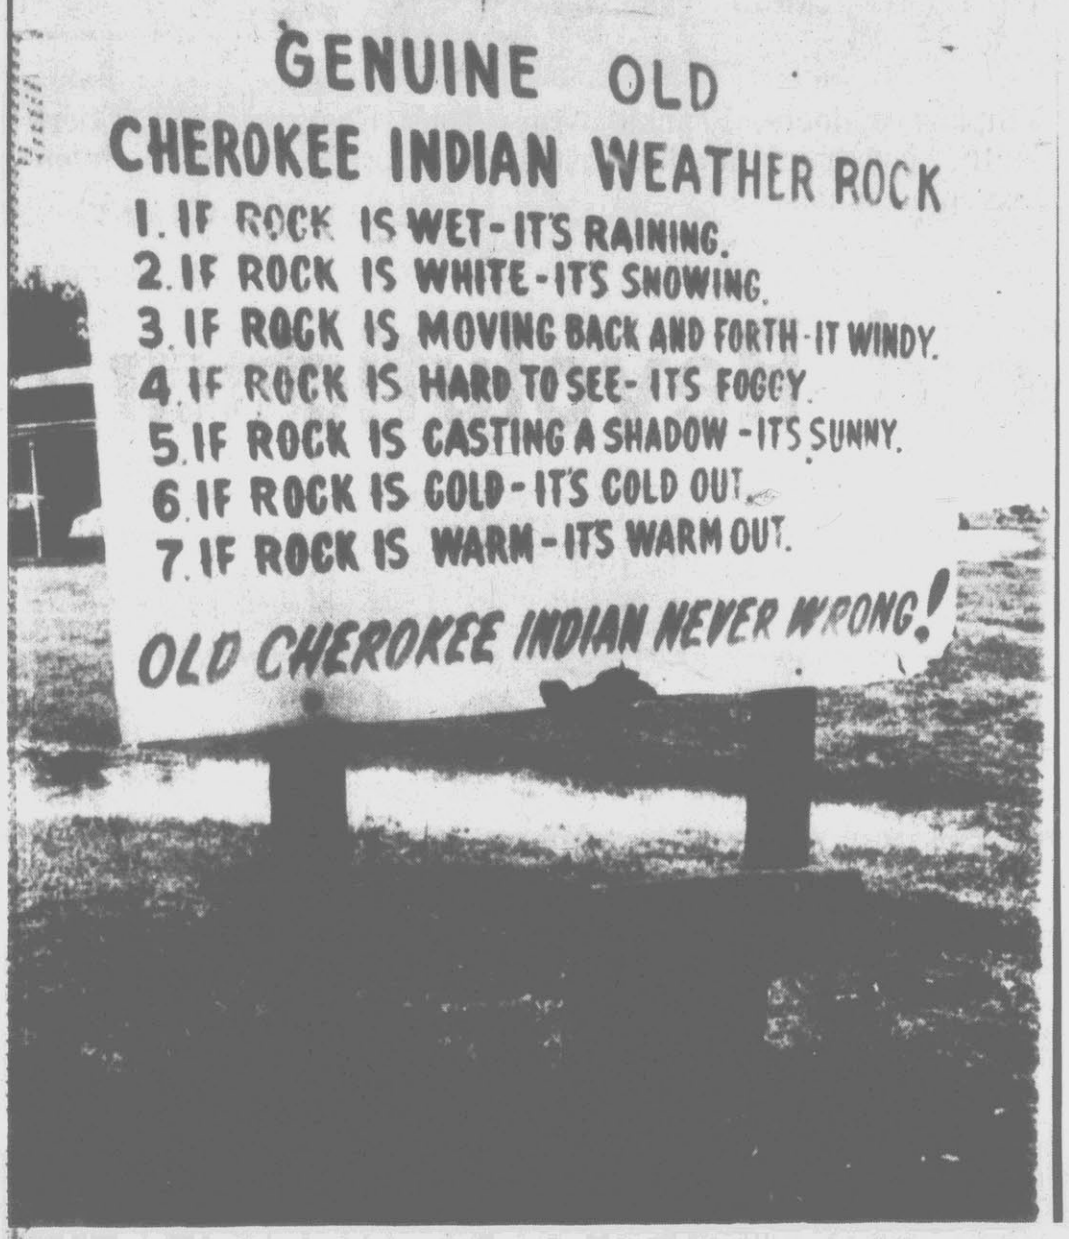

State Sen. Theo Mitchell, attorney for Braxton, said he saw "no alternative" to the ruling by the courts.

"It was an impermissible sentence," he said.

Glenn Thomason, attorney for Vaughn, said the decision "was pretty much what I had predicted it would be..."

Pyle said he would not comment on the Supreme Court's order until he had read it, and might not comment even then.

All three men appealed the option of castration and five years probation as cruel and unusual punishment, but one by one, they changed their minds, preferring to undergo surgery and be free.

Study Says Pasteurization May Not Kill All Disease

BOSTON (AP) — Pasteurizing milk is a highly effective way of protecting people from bacteria, but sometimes the process isn't totally reliable and dangerous microbes may slip through, a federal study concluded today.

Researchers who investigated an outbreak of a rare, fatal infection in Massachusetts two years ago found that the disease was probably carried by milk that had gone through the purification process.

Such instances are probably extremely uncommon, though, and the doctors said their work is the first to implicate pasteurized milk in the spread of disease.

Dr. David W. Fleming, who headed the investigation for the Centers for Disease Control, cautioned that the latest finding shouldn't lead people to think that raw milk is an acceptable alternative to the pasteurized variety. Unpasteurized milk has frequently been associated with outbreaks of food poisoning, such as salmonella infection.

"The main message that we would like to pass along is that we by no means feel that this means that raw milk is safer to drink than pasteurized milk," he said in an interview. "We have been watching Massachusetts very carefully since the outbreak and find no evidence that milk has continued to be a source of infection."

In the Massachusetts outbreak, a disease called listeriosis occurred across the state in August 1983. It struck 49 victims, including two fetuses and five newborns, killing 14 of them.

The researchers' report in the New England Journal of Medicine today said the results suggest that "although pasteurization is a highly effective method of eliminating bacterial pathogens (disease producers), it may not always be 100 percent effective."

Arsonists Blamed In Hotel Fire

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — The military today blamed arsonists for a fire that killed at least 24 people in one of Manila's largest luxury hotels and was still burning nearly two days after it broke out, the official Philippine News Agency reported.

In a typewritten note delivered to two news agencies, a previously unheard of group, The Angels, claimed responsibility for the fire as a protest of U.S. and Japanese support for President Ferdinand E. Marcos.

Firefighters battled flames, heavy smoke and intense heat to try to recover more bodies from the hotel.

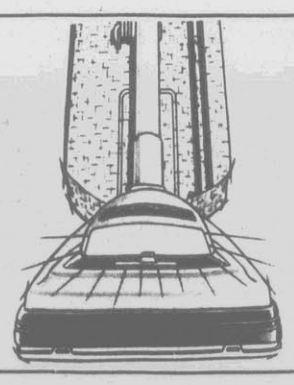

Among the identified dead were five Americans, three Britons, a Canadian and an Australian. Funeral home operators said several of the unidentified bodies were those of foreigners.

"All indications are that it was the job of arsonists," the agency quoted Brig. Gen. Victor Natividad as saying. The general heads the Philippine Constabulary's Manila command and supervises the capital's police force.

Natividad said his investigators were taking statements from witnesses who said the fire began simultaneously on the second and ninth floors of the 11-story Regent of Manila, although fire officials at the scene had earlier debunked such reports.

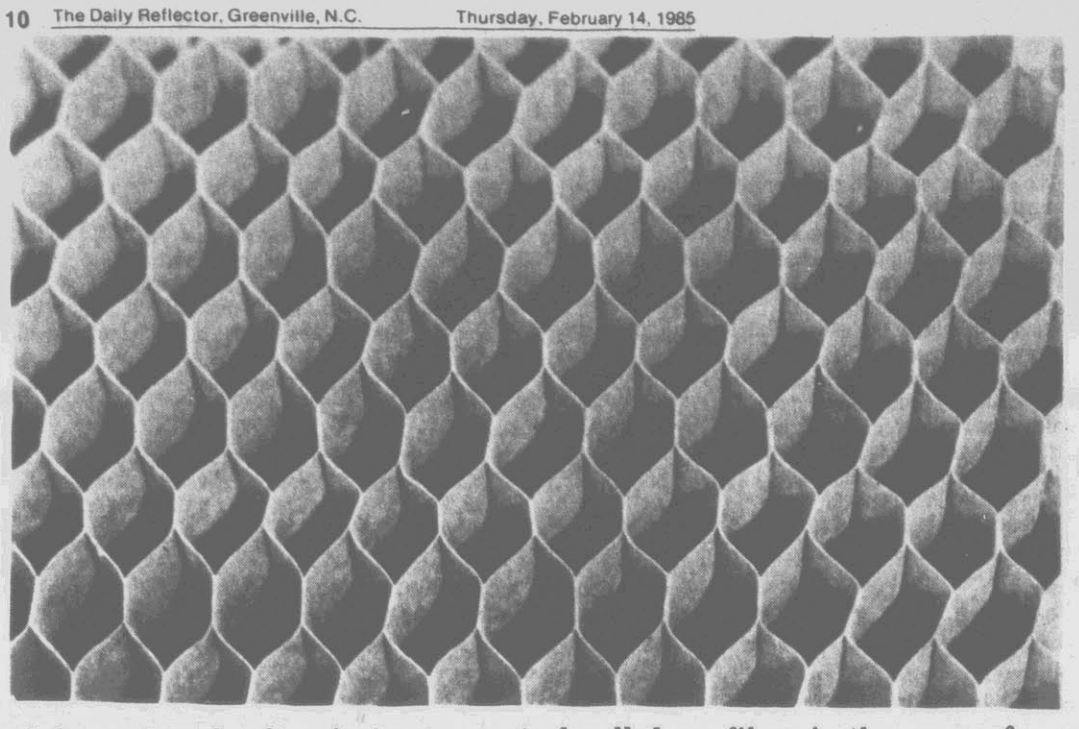

The agency also reported Natividad as saying probers were investigating reports that "subversives" had infiltrated the hotel's employees' union.

The typewritten note signed by The Angels was sent to the offices of Agence France-Presse, the French news agency, and Kyodo, the Japanese news agency. The group warned that "other forms of sabotage have to follow."

A honeycomb of resin-impregnated cellulose fiber is the core of a structurally self-contained building panel now being promoted by a Farmville company.

Company builders, Frankie Gray, Tony Eastwood and Albert Heath, construct a demonstration storage building from Hexacomb panels.

Hexacomb Panel Said Revolutionary

By CAROL BLACKLEY TYER
Reflector Staff Writer

A Farmville industry is seeking to expand its markets by introducing a 4-by-8-foot building panel that it claims will revolutionize the building industry.

The Hexagon Honeycomb Corporation, which has its research and development facility in Farmville, is holding seminars and inviting builders from all over the world to see how the three-layer structural panel can be used to produce low-cost buildings.

The firm, headquartered in St. Louis, Mo., makes "honeycomb," a structural core material manufactured from resin-impregnated cellulose fiber ribbons nested together to form hexagonal cells of various sizes. This material which looks remarkably like the comb made by bees (Nature's a marvelous engineer!) is now used to make everything from furniture and partitions for homes and offices to walls for spaceships and recreational vehicles. Within the past year the company has built adjacent to its Farmville facility several display houses designed to appeal to people from varied cultures. With guided tours of these as part of its seminars, its officials are seeking to interest builders in buying systems to mass produce housing from "sandwich panels" of the honeycomb material.

Monty Blackburn, Farmville plant manager, says the material was originally developed for the aviation and aerospace industries, but that its high strength-to-weight ratio also make it useful for all kinds of building. He maintains its use can reduce the cost of a house by 50 percent. He said the material is extremely moisture- and fire-resistant and that insulation can be added within the honeycomb cells or sandwiched on one or both sides of the honeycomb.

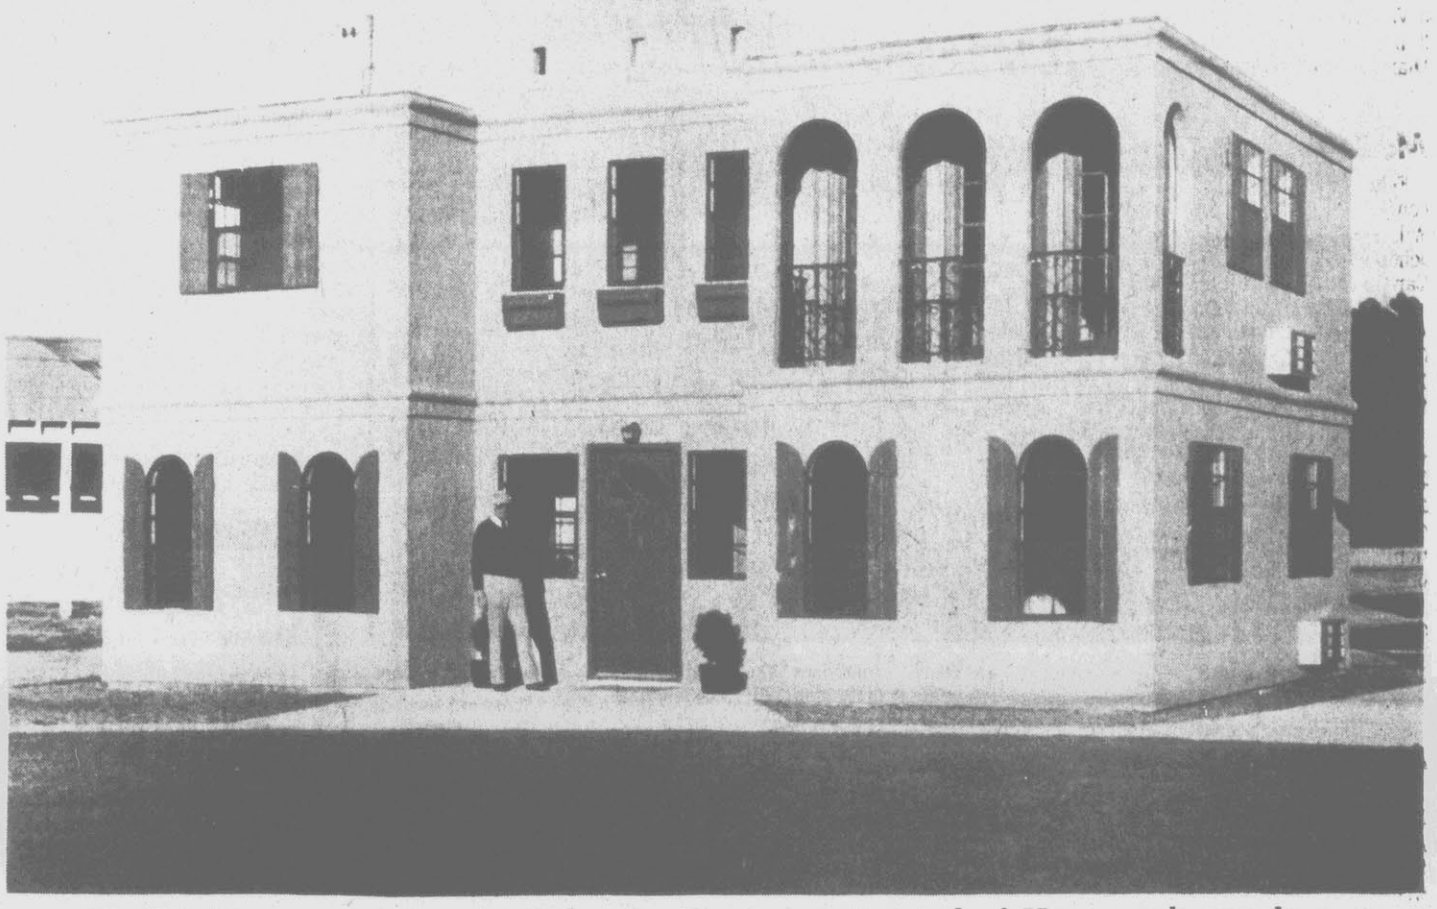

The company claims that the durability of the product has been tested by the U.S. government whose Forest Products Laboratory built houses in Wisconsin in 1946 which are still standing with no evidence of deterioration or reduction of structural integrity.

The company contends that this panel is the solution for lowering building costs on all levels. It says use of the panels eliminates the need to frame a building and that virtually any exterior material added against or bonded to the skin or the skin itself can be made from various materials from metals to wood to concrete.

Special interest has been shown by the company in making itself known to those who might seek to provide housing to the two-thirds of the world's population who live in Third World countries where shelter for the common folk is non-existent or beneath human dignity. "With two billion people being added to the world population by the year 2000, housing problems will be greatly exacerbated unless imaginative and innovative solutions are found," the company's Hexacomb Panel Systems brochure suggests, offering the panels as a solution.

The basic component of the panel, the honeycomb material can be shipped inexpensively because it is lightweight and compact, Bill Abel, the company's export manager, said, and can be expanded and made into 4x8 panels quickly and easily. Other sizes up to 24 feet in length also can be made. At or near the building site, it can be expanded and cured. The only obvious drawback seems to be that the builder is obliged to invest in the expanding, curing, skin-attaching equipment and would have to do large-volume building in order to justify the cost of the equipment. Once purchased, the equipment could turn out a panel a minute.

The company claims that a trained six-man crew can completely erect a standard panelized house on a concrete slab in less than one day using only basic hand tools. Any windows and doors and other complements can be used, though doors can also be cut from the Hexacomb material. Beams as well as walls and ceilings and floors can be made from Hexacomb panels.

The Mediterranean is one of the dwellings constructed of Hexacomb panels that is displayed at the Hexagon Honeycomb firm on Highway 264 just outside Farmville. Monty Blackburn, the plant manager, poses by the front door.

It's possible there will be marketers of the panels later on, the company says, though there are now none in this area. Blackburn says that all major U.S. building codes have either been met or are being met through proof now being provided by the company. Once these codes are met, the marketability of the product should be further enhanced, he said he believes.

The model houses on display near Farmville all were built by company crews, Abel said. These include a two-story Mediterranean, a one-story early American, a one-story Philippine, and a one-story Spanish, plus a "Plebian" ultra-low-cost shelter that the company sees as a solution to Third World housing problems. Any style of house or other building can be constructed from the panels, Blackburn emphasized.

Anyone interested in attending a seminar or otherwise learning more about the product may contact the Farmville firm.

Early 19th Century Folk Art Admired In Today's Art World

By David M. Maxfield
Smithsonian News Service

People are still talking about the Moores of Ware, Massachusetts. In their day — the early 1800s — Joseph Moore worked as a hatmaker in winter and in summer as an itinerant dentist. Joseph and his wife, Almira, had two sons, George Francis and Joseph Lauriston, and two orphan boys lived with the family in its comfortable frame house.

Today, the Moores are greatly admired across the country by American folk-art enthusiasts. The reason is the large-scale oil portrait of them, painted in 1839 by the artist Erastus Salisbury Field while visiting in-laws who lived across the street from the Moores. In this painting, family members pose in their best finery around a mahogany-veneered sewing table. Almira wears exactly the same gown, pin and belt buckle that her sister, Clarissa, wore when Field painted her portrait.

Admirers of this painting don't seem to mind at all that its patterned carpet, in tones of mustard, Indian red and dull green, seems to be sliding off the plane of the picture. And in their minds, the penetrating expressions on the Moores' faces more than compensate for the distorted look of their arms and hands. For folk-art lovers, the "flaws" of that genre are part of its charm.

Since the early decades of the 20th century, when several modern painters began collecting folk art, interest in these paintings — as well as in ceramics, quilts, furniture, toys and other objects in the folk tradition — has grown steadily. Though the trendy folk decorating wave of a few seasons back may have ebbed, attention to the art by serious collectors, as gauged by record market prices and new research, continues strong.

What appeals to us now about the visions of folk artists, National Gallery of Art Deputy Director John Wilmerding believes, "are those very qualities we might wish for our own more troubled times: their uninhibited sense of celebration, their instinct of joining the beautiful and useful, and their looking at complexities with wit and whimsy."

Once ignored and relegated to attics, American folk art also appeals aesthetically to "modern" eyes. Like much of abstract contemporary art, the older painting often is composed of flat, smooth areas of color, simple forms and lively patterns.

Folk art is valued additionally because it presents a priceless historical record of an earlier time and society, according to Mary Black, folk-art authority and guest curator of a joint exhibition of Field's work at the National Portrait Gallery and the Natoanl Museum of American Art, both Smithsonian museums in Washington, D.C. Black, who was inspired at an early age by four Field portraits — her own relatives — in her grandfather's house, feels that, "for the 20th century, Field's paintings are windows that open to the character, taste and appearance of his society in 19th-century America."

Like written documents, folk paintings offer clues to the aspirations of the nation's growing middle class. That the Moores and other families posed in elegant costumes rather than workaday clothes is telling. "Although in reality life was often arduous, most middle-classs patrons preferred to be represented stylishly in order to convey a more glamorous image to posterity," says National Gallery education staff member Donna Mann.

Folk artists were more or less self-taught and, like Field, traveled from town to town, often relying on relatives as subjects and for new business leads. Field's method was hasty , Black explains. He could complete a painting in one day and by the end of this lifetime probably had completed close to 2,000 canvases.

"One is not always sure where the folk painter learned his techniques," she says. "These artists continually painted their way out of corners — and sometimes into them."

Because they lacked formal training, the most difficult problems for the itinerant artists to resolve were perspective and depiction of the human anatomy. Yet, folk artists were free to manipulate objects in their works to convey certain information — something the trained artist would not do. In Field's portrait of "The Reverend Dyer Ball," for example, a table is tilted unnaturally so the text of a message can be read by the viewer.

The folk artist also had one up on the formally trained: His work often conveyed a freshness not disturbed by formal standards.

Myths about American folk art abound. One holds that folk paintings and objects are entirely home-grown, 100 percent American. Not so, say a number of scholars. Many of the design motifs, color tones and facial expressions represent a transference to these shores of long-established European traditions.

There's also the myth that folk art, much of which is upbeat and cheerful, comes from an artist's "conflict-free past." Yet such a past, like our own, was complicated and confusing decorative arts historian Kenneth Ames suggests. A folk sculptor's transformation of beastly animals to more benign creatures — a frequent folk subject — was one way of creating serentity in the midst of chaos.

Still another myth perpetuates the idea that folk painters worked in a virtual artistic vacuum. "But surely they saw one anothers's work while traveling," Mary Black says, pointing out similaities in paintings, "and some of them may have known each other."

Then there's the rather plausible concept that folk artists painted most of their canvases during the cold months, simply adding the heads of new clients to the ready-made bodies during summer house calls. The Moore family portrait, for one, argues against this, Black contends. The use of the family's own possessions "verifies" to her "the theory that folk portraits were painted from life."

But folk artists did know how to cut a corner here and there. As the National Gallery's Mann notes, "To increase the portrait's cost-effectiveness, they often concentrated on facial characteristics while painting bodies in a perfunctory style. Simpler backgrounds also lowered the cost for the less affluent." William Matthew Prior even advertised that he would paint "a likeness without shade or shadow at one-quarter price."

Among the most enterprising of his day was Field, "a very resourceful one for keeping solvent," Black says. Born in 1805 in Leverett, Mass., he lived until the first year of the 20th century. He saw, recorded and was affected by the great changes that transformed the nation from an agrarian republic to an industrial giant.

As the 19th-century opened, the plain along the Connecticut river where Field was raised only recently had been cleared and cultivated. Corn, cattle, dairy products, fruit — and strict Calvinist religious principles — were the staples of life. Field's community in those early years was untouched by the War of 1812 and other national events. In fact, as Black notes, few in this isolated community broke away from their homes for higher education, marriage or business. Field was one who did.

At 19, he set out for New York City, where he studied for a few months with the artist Samuel F.B. Morse, later renowned for his telegraph invention. There Field learned the technical skills of his art, such as canvas and pigment preparation, but stylistically he remained largely unaffected by his formally trained teacher.

Fields's painting of his grandmother, created soon after he returned to Massachusetts, marked the beginning of his career as a portrait artist. It "underscored the craggy planes of the 80-year-old's face," Black says, but other features, such as her body, were "unconvincing." Later, during the 1830s, a greater softness came into his work. "The draftsmanship is crisp and the painting fresh and incisive," Black notes, and "his accurate delineations of character retained their excellence." Still, he struggled with anatomy.

For Field — and for Morse — 1839 was a pivotal year. Although Morse was faring poorly in his art career, in 1837 he had successfully exhibited his telegraph, and now he was introducing the new daguerrotype process recently brought from France. The new photographs had great appeal, and "it is ironic," Black comments, "that Field's talents were soon to be outmoded in the popular demand for the reproductions of faces introduced by his teacher."

Undoubtedly because of photograph's negative impact on his portrait commissions, Field by 1860 was concentrating on historical paintings with religious and patriotic themes. The sudden death of his wife, a growing interest in history, his own Calvinist principles and anti-slavery views — and more generally, a chance to escape from everyday life in the Connecticut valley — or all combined, may have also moved Field in this new direction.

In any event, his historical paintings now are viewed as successes, especially his masterpiece, the "Historical Monument of the American Republic" — a 10-tower American ziggurat that depicts the republic's history and the bloody North-South conflict.

In the final years of Field's life change was in the air, even in the valley. His great-grand nieces and nephews came on bicycles rather than on horseback to visit the artist in his humble studio, where new paintings lined the board-and-stone walls. Like other folk artist, Field had demonstrated, Black believes, "that a life spent as a painter, even in a close-knit agrarian society, could be an enriching influence" on his own people.

For the late 20th century, it is enriching as well.

Professor Says Einstein Brain Study 'Overwhelming'

BERKELEY, Calif. (AP) — An anatomy professor who studied four small pieces of Albert Einstein's brain says she found the experience "overwhelming."

"There I was, looking at the brain that came up with the theory of relativity," Marian Diamond of the University of California said Wednesday.

Ms. Diamond thinks she knows why Einstein was so smart, but she's not sure.

She notes there are two types of brain cells — glial cells, or "support cells," which supply nourishment and do the mundane chores of the brain like running the cerebrum, and neurons, which do the thinking.

In one section of Einstein's brain, Ms. Diamond said she found more glial cells for every neuron than there are in the same section of the average brain — 73 percent more.

"No one knows how cells think," said Ms. Diamond. "It's a mystery."

She said she couldn't be sure what her findings mean because the brain is 30 years old.

"Either Einstein had larger neurons, or his neurons had more 'processes' that needed more support," the professor said.

Ms. Diamond published her study in the current issue of Science magazine. She said she chose to do the study after seeing a picture of Einstein's preserved brain in an old science magazine.

The four small parts of the brain were obtained from a Missouri pathologist who conducted the autopsy on Einstein in 1955.

It took her three years to obtain the pieces of the brain. Once she got them, Ms. Diamond said she sliced them into cross-sections and started counting cells.

Knowing that the average man has 1,936 neurons for every glial cell in Section 39 — the part of the brain that is responsible for the deepest thinking — she was surprised to find a different ratio in Einstein's brain.

The professor has studied the neuron-glial relationship in rats for many years and previously found that rats in big, roomy cages with lots of treadmills and other toys develop lower neuron-glial cell ratios.

She said, however, that any similarity between Einstein and her rats ended there.

And what did she do with the pieces of the great man's brain when she finished her study? She points to the walls of her lab, where the walls are covered with jars of human and rat brains.

"Somewhere in there," she answered. "I'm not exactly sure what we did with it."

Reynolds Has Record Earnings

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — R.J. Reynolds Industries Inc. gained 20 percent in earnings from continuing operations to $843 million and earnings per share from continuing operations up 20 percent to $7 in 1984, company officials said today.

The full-year net earnings for 1984 are an all-time record, the company said.

Consolidated sales for the year ended Dec. 31, 1984 were $12.97 billion, up $662 million, or 5.4 percent from 1983. Consolidated earnings from continuing operations were $1.62 billion, up $222 million or 16 percent.

Reynolds officials said continuing operations excluded the 1983 and 1984 results of Sea-Land Corporation and Aminoil Inc., which were divested during the year.

Reynolds officials attributed the gain to higher unit volumes and market share gains in many of its product lines and improved profits in all its major businesses.

For the 1984 fourth quarter, sales were up 7 percent, to $3.53 billion. Consolidated earnings from continuing operations were $491 million, up 21 percent. Net earnings from continuing operations were $259 million, up 30 percent, and earnings per share from continuing operations were $2.23, a gain of 37 percent from the fourth quarter of 1983.

Earnings per share including discontinued operations reached $10.27 for the full year and $4.61 for the fourth quarter, and included a gain of $275 million, or $2.45 per share, on the sale of R.J. Reynolds' energy operations recorded in the 1984 fourth quarter.

In the company's tobacco business, sales were up 4 percent for the full year and 4.1 percent for the fourth quarter. Earnings from operations registered gains of 14 percent for the full year and 10 percent for the fourth quarter.

In the domestic tobacco market, R.J. Reynolds cigarette volume rose 1.2 percent, about double the industry's 1984 growth rate. The company sold 2.2 billion more cigarettes in 1984.

Combined sales in the company's food and beverages business, which includes Del Monte, Heublein and Kentucky Fried Chicken, increased 4.6 percent for the year and rose 7.8 percent in the 1984 fourth quarter. Foods and beverages earnings from operations rose 17 percent in the full year and increased 69 percent from the comparable period in the fourth quarter.

R.J. Reynolds Industries Inc., with headquarters in Winston-Salem, is the parent company of R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., R.J. Reynolds Tobacco International Inc., Del Monte Corp, Heublein Inc., Kentucky Fried Chicken Corp., and R.J. Reynolds Development Corp.

Recreation Board Votes To Sell Elm Street House

By JERRY RAYNOR
Reflector Staff Writer

A decision for a recommendation on the disposition of a house on Elm Street given earlier to the Greenville Recreation and Parks Department was reached Wednesday night when commissioners voted to sell the house and retain the land.

A first motion made by commissioner Joseph Godette to sell both the house and land died for lack of being seconded, and was followed by Dr. Carl Wille's motion to dispose of the house by sale and to retain the small plot of land which adjoins city property at the Elm Street site.

The matter of what action to take has been discussed at several past meetings with commissioners at the January meeting opting for making a final decision in February.

Prior to the action, Recreation and Parks executive director Boyd Lee explained that the house, in poor condition, "will not bring much money. The purchaser will have to spend at least $5,000 to move it, and a considerable sum to repair it."

Lee also pointed out that if a decision had been made to sell the house and lot — "and considerable interest had been expressed by several potential buyers for that arrangement," the purchaser would have been severely restricted. Restrictions he noted were not being permitted to add to the structure, only to repair it, and in the event the house was destroyed, the purchaser "would not be permitted to rebuild on the site since it is in a designated flood plain."

The recommendation to sell the house now goes to the City Council for their action.

In another action, commissioners accepted the annual financial statement of the Little League, which operates with two funds — an All-Star account, and a permanent account.

Details on the All-Star account reveal that as of the end of the 1984 season in October, that account has a cash balance of $7,275. The cash balance at the beginning of the season was $3,166, with earnings for the 1984 season totaling $4,111. The largest single source of revenue for the All-Star account was $10,907 in donations, followed by $2,677 in travel refund.

The team traveled out of state for regional play, which accounted for $3,838 in plane fares. In addition, expenses for the state tournament were $2,500 and for the regional participation, $3,000.

The second, permanent account of the Little League shows a cash balance on hand as of Oct. 1984 of $12,911, a sum of $613 less than the 1983 balance of $13,524. Revenues during the 1984 season of $23,905 came primarily from $4,200 paid by 14 team sponsors; $8,083 earned at the annual luncheon supper; concession stand and game donations of $8,179; and parent fees of $1,680.

Major disbursements from the permanent account include $4,494 for the luncheon-expense; $4,113 for umpire and score keepers; $4,000 for the supervisor expense allowance; $2,574 for equipment; and $1,332 for uniforms.

Together, the cash balance of the two Little League accounts totals $20,186.

"You can see Little League is big business in Greenville," Lee commented after presenting the financial report. He noted that the Recreation and Parks Department provides only a place to play and maintenance as its share of expenses for the league.

Several interested persons from the Belvedere, Club Pines and Westhaven sub-divisions were present to provide suggestions for the possible use of the plot of land purchased by the city for a recreation area on Cedarhurst Street. The city recently purchased three lots comprising the 1.5 acre site at a cost of $54,000.

Lee explained that the purpose of input was the first of several steps to try to determine what the majority of families in the three sub-divisions want for the area as a recreation site. He mentioned it is a heavily wooded site and that if an open area is what the majority want, it will entail something in the neighborhood of $5,000 to $10,000 to clear the site. Currently, a sum of $17,000 is in hand for developing the area.

Opinions expressed by area residents at Wednesday night's meeting in general represented a preference for an open area in which children could play games. The idea of approaching land owners of open farmland adjacent to the wooded site for possible arrangements of land lease or loan was raised. Lee said that was one possibility that could be explored once a determination is made of the primary use of the site.

Wednesday night's discussion will be followed by a survey of more than 400 families living in the sub-divisions to get an accurate picture of a preference for use of the area. "We must first have opinions from all residents before we can go ahead with plans," Lee said.

Commission chairman Dr. Alfred King, recalling that a recreation area in the sub-divisions has been under consideration for many years, commented "you can be assured we will pursue this action immediately. It will not be put on a back burner."

Lee presented the department's annual report, a 34-page document covering all aspects of the department's operations during calendar year 1984. He also told commissioners the City Council has approved the department's recommendation to stage a fund-raising drive for $100,000 to construct an outdoor amphitheater on the Town Common. The next step will be shaping up of plans for the drive by Jeanette Cox, who has volunteered to head a fund-raising drive for construction of the facility.

A class of students from East Carolina University majoring in parks and recreation subjects attended the Feburary meeting. At the conclusion of the meeting, the students offered various comments on their reaction to the decisions and discussions carried out at the meeting.

Vietnamese Topple Khmer Rouge Base

By DENIS D. GRAY
Associated Press Writer

KHAO SARAPEE, Thailand (AP) — Vietnamese troops, in their fiercest offensive this year, toppled one major Communist Khmer Rouge base and seized part of another today in the hills of western Cambodia, Thai military officers said.

Under a heavy umbrella of artillery fire, 13,000 Vietnamese troops pushed from the south and east in a three-pronged attack that sent hundreds of Khmer Rouge guerrillas retreating to Thailand, the officers said.

The Vietnamese overran Khao Din, seven miles southeast of here, and took over half of Phnom Malai, the main Khmer Rouge headquarters eight miles to the north, the officers said.

Col. Chettha Thanajaro, deputy commander of the Eastern Border Task Force, said he expected the Vietnamese forces to complete the takeover of the Khmer Rouge headquarters by Friday.

Chettha said a rear guard Khmer Rouge force was trying to hold off the Vietnamese while the main force units retreated into the jungles with their ammunition, equipment and food supplies.

Hanoi's advances today, if verified, would be the most stunning setback yet dealt to the Khmer Rouge, hard-bitten fighters who have roamed the Cambodian countryside for the past 15 years and successfully defended their mountainous strongholds against previous bloody Vietnamese offensives.

Soldiers from Communist Vietnam invaded neighboring Cambodia in late 1978, ousted the Khmer Rouge government, and installed a pro-Hanoi regime headed by Heng Samrin. Hundreds of thousands of Cambodians died under the Khmer Rouge, who ruled Cambodia for almost four years.

The Communist Khmer Rouge are now allied against Vietnam with two non-Communist guerrilla groups, the Khmer People's National Liberation Front and a group led by former Cambodian leader Prince Norodom Sihanouk.

Vietnamese soldiers began their current offensive last November, overrunning camps of the Khmer People's National Liberation Front. They then turned on the Khmer Rouge.

Chettha said one Vietnamese column of about 6,000 soldiers pushed north and captured Khao Din. It took up positions at outposts on the high ground to thwart counter attacks.

A tank-led column of 5,000 troops drove west and took up positions east of Phnom Malai, opposite the Thai village of Non Sao-E, nine miles south of Aranyaprathet, Chettha said. That column attempted to cut off Khmer Rouge escape routes into Thailand.

A third column of 2,000 troops, moving west between the other two units, took up positions on the southeastern flank.

Maj. Gen. Salya Sriphen, commander of the Eastern Field Force, told a news conference at Aranyaprathet that the Vietnamese had penetrated the perimeter of Phnom Malai and their troops were within two miles of Phum Thmei, the guerrillas' showcase camp along the Thai-Cambodian border.

Hundreds of Khmer Rouge guerrillas fleeing the assault on the Khao Din-Phnom Chakrey stronghold trudged northward on a dirt road near this border village about 19 miles from the key Thai border town of Aranyaprathet. The guerrillas dragged with them recoilless guns, supplies, even two elephants. They told reporters the Khao Din-Phnom Chakrey area was basically under Vietnamese control.

The soldiers carried assault rifles, backpacks bristling with rockets, and rocket launchers. Two truck-drawn artillery pieces were parked off the dirt road and boxes of recoilless rifle ammunition were stacked by the roadside.

Most of the weapons were made in China, the major supplier of weapons to the Khmer Rouge and a severe critic of Vietnam's presence in Cambodia.

Bond commented, "The No-Net-Cost law is unworkable in its present framework, but it is the law, and we must operate under it until a more workable system is devised."

Charlie King of Tobacco Associates Inc. reported on efforts during 1984 made by members of his agency to seek assistance in several fields. One of these "involved the U.S. Department of Agriculture in seeking additional credit terms. We were successful in getting some additional funds."

Other efforts by Tobacco Associates included attendance at the Fourth World Tobacco Exposition, and hosting foreign delegates from 22 countries visiting the U.S. "One of our prime efforts is that of promoting wider use of light tobacco in cigarettes in foreign countries to convince them that North Carolina has quality tobacco and the best capabilities for research and development of tobacco products." Areas in which U.S. representatives are concentrating selling efforts include a large number of Third World Countries, with particular emphasis on Tunisia, Morocco, Algeria, Egypt, Iraq and Indonesia.

King reported that the top importers of American tobacco at this time are Brazil, accounting for about 50 percent of the imports, Canada 21 percent, and South Africa and Argentina at 5 percent each.

Others at the meeting presenting reports were Reggie Lester of the Tobacco Growers Information Committee and Ernest Price of the USDA Grading Service.

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market pushed ahead in heavy trading today, making another run past the 1,300 level in the Dow Jones industrial average.

Dow Jones's average of 30 blue chips, off a little more than a point in the first hour, was up 5.08 at 1,303.00 by noontime on Wall Street.

Gainers held an 8-5 lead over losers among New York Stock Exchange-listed issues.

The Dow industrials topped 1,300 in Wednesday afternoon's trading, before settling back to close at a record high of 1,297.92.

Analysts said enthusiasm remained high about the economic outlook and the stock market's rousing start on 1985. However, they said it was evident that some traders were using the 1,300 mark in the Dow as a cue to cash in some profits.

Some market-watchers say that round-number figure is less significant than it may appear, since other measures of market trends have regularly been setting new highs of late.

Still, it appeared to stand as a psychological obstacle that the market was having some trouble surmounting.

Another source of caution in today's activity was the Federal Reserve's weekly report on the money supply, due out after the close in New York. The central bank's relatively stimulative credit policy has played a major role in setting the recent ebullient mood on Wall Street.

The recently strong financial services group ran into selling. Merrill Lynch dropped ⅜ to 35⅞; Phibro-Salomon 1⅛ to 40, and PaineWebber ½ to 41½.

Among actively traded blue chips, International Business Machines gained ½ to 134¼; DuPont rose 1⅛ to 54⅛, and Ford Motor ¼ to 46⅝.

Eastern Airlines was up ⅜ at 5⅜.

Frank Borman, the company's chairman, predicted that the company would show a profit this year, for the first time since 1979.

Other airline issues were unchanged to fractionally higher. UAL added ⅜ to 47; Delta Air Lines ⅜ to 45⅝, and AMR ½ to 39⅛, while Trans World Airlines was unchanged at 12½.

American Telephone & Telegraph led the active list, unchanged at 21½ on turnover of more than 1.4 million shares.

The NYSE's composite index of all its listed common stocks picked up .35 to 106.43. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index rose 1.39 to 232.61.

Volume on the Big Board came to 69.73 million shares at noontime, against 52.46 million at the same point Wednesday.

TRYING TO EXTINGUISH PEANUTS — Firemen use a hole in the side of the Keel Peanut Warehouse in an effort to extinguish flames from a fire Wednesday. Peanuts stored in the building spilled through the hole being used by the firemen. (Reflector Photo by Tommy Forrest)

Assistant Pitt County Fire Marshall Terry Payne said firemen and a truck from the Staton House Fire Department also responded to the scene. He said, too, that a fire truck and firemen from Winterville, as well as rescue units from Winterville and Eastern Pines were called into the city to provide back-up service during the height of the fire.

Company officials could not be reached this morning for an estimate of the damage. But a spokesman for the Pitt County tax supervisor's office, who said the owner of the property is listed as Gillam Brothers Peanut Sheller Inc., said the depreciated or tax value of the building was set at $74,790, while the replacement value was estimated at more than $97,000.

percent and water rates by 25 percent, Horne said. He explained that the reason water and sewer do not realize as much profit as electric and gas is water and sewer services are traditionally offered to customers on an at-cost basis.

Utilties Commission representatives said they were not opposed to taking a look at the council plan, but declined to commit themselves until GUC knows exactly what costs will be involved in providing services to areas now under consideration for annexation.

The City Council, in coming months, will address annexation of acerage north and southeast of Greenville including: 1) an area north of the city and Greenville Terrace encompassing Colonial Mobile Home Park and Oakgrove Estates; 2) acerage north of the Tar River, located on both sides of Mumford Road, running in an easterly direction from the intersection of Drum Avenue and Mumford Road to the intersection of N.C. 33 with Mumford Road encompassing such subdivisions as Floral Gardens, Country Squire Estates and Quail Hollow Mobile Home Park; and 3) an area southeast of the city including subdivisions such as Tuckahoe, Camelot, Cherry Oaks, Holly Hills, Brook Valley, Azalea Gardens, River Hills and Oakhurst. The third area under consideration for annexation is the largest.

While the council members and utilities representatives did not reach a consensus on what should be done with citizens' opinions, they did agree further discussion and meetings were in order to explore formula alternatives and set a follow-up meeting date of Feb. 20.

Reverse Slammer

East Carolina's Herb Dixon comes down after he slammed through a reverse dunk over Winthrop's Jerome McKiver during last night's first half action in Minges Coliseum. Vanderhorst scored a game time 27 points while Dixon had 13 and 10 assists to lead the Pirates to a 74-66 win over the Eagles, snapping an 11-game losing streak. (Reflector Photo by Katie Zernhelt)

Streak Ends At 11

Pirates Top Eagles

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

It might not have been exactly what the doctor might have ordered, but Coach Charlie Harrison is hoping that a 74-66 victory by his East Carolina Pirates over Winthrop might be just the right medicine for his ailing basketball team.

The win last night in Minges Coliseum snapped an 11-game losing streak for the Pirates, giving them their first win since they topped Boston College back on January 3 in Minges. And with six more games left to play in the regular season — five of them in the league, Harrison is hopeful of a better finish than last year.

The win was only the sixth this season in 21 games for the Pirates — but it is two more than they won last year all season long. "Realistically, I thought that we could have won ten or eleven at this point," Harrison said last night. "And I thought that we would do better in some of the games that we've come up with the short end of the score. We've just got to keep working and believeing in our program."

The Pirates, who trailed by as much as five points to the NAIA team in the first half, rallied to take a ten-point lead by halftime. In the second half, they built up as much as a 15-point lead, but were never really to shake the pesky Eagles.

"Hey, they're not a bad team," Harrison said. "I think their biggest problem is that they don't believe that they can win on the road. They're not overpowering but they've got some pertty good people."

Among those, Harrison says, is forward Fred McKinnon, who kicked in 18 points for the Eagles, many of them just going up in the defender's face. "He's a good player and I was awfully worried about him," Harrison said. "I didn't know whether we could stop him or not."

"Am I happy? Hell, yes, I'm happy," Harrison said with a smile. "It wasn't very pretty, but our perimeter people bailed us out."

The outside shooters — Curt Vanderhorst (a season high 27), William Grady (15), Herb Dixon (13 — and a career high ten assists), and Keith Sledge (8) — did the job scoring for the Pirates, accounting for all but 11 points in the game. "But we can't expect (the outside shooting) to do it every time," Harrison continued.

Harrison said the Pirates came out a little lethargic, but their defense got them back on track. "We got our break going for the first time in a while and we need it to beat people."

Defense was the name of the game, however, as the Pirates stole the ball 12 times and blocked six shots. "That's 18 shots they didn't get," Harrison said.

Winthrop moved out to an 8-2 lead in the early minutes of the game before the Pirates rallied to finally tie it up on a layup by Vanderhorst. Dixon had just fired up the sparce crowd when he pulled the Pirates within two with a reverse slam-dunk. Vanderhorst's score tied it at 16.

After the Eagles regained the lead, Grady tied it up and Sledge followed to put the Pirates ahead for the first time, 20-18.

Two free throws by John Bowman tied it once more, but Vanderhorst and Sledge hit jumpers to give the Pirates a 24-20 edge.

Lenoir's Defense Proves Too Much For Paladins

WINTERVILLE — Lenoir Community College's pressure defense got to Pitt Community College last night in the second half and the Lancers pulled out a 74-68 victory over the Paladins.

Pitt took the early lead in the game, moving out by as much as nine points at 19-10 midway through the first half. "We continued to play conservative ball, working for the good shots and taking them," Coach Charles Coburn said.

The Paladins held the lead throughout most of the half and held a 39-31 lead at halftime.

In the second half, after the two traded baskets to a 41-34 margin, the Paladins went cold, failing to score for the next six minutes of play. Lenoir caught up and took the lead at 42-41 with 11:27 left, and moved on from there. The closest Pitt got after that was three points.

"I thought we played our best defensive game of the season, but free throws and turnovers hurt us and Lenoir did a good job with their full court press," Coburn said.

Thomas Beatty led Lenoir with 21 points while Darold Bryant had 18 and Scott Jones hit 16. Pitt was led by Keith Clark with 16, Andrew Edwards with 14, and Albert Brown and David Joyner with 13 each.

The game was the final regular season game for Pitt, now 18-13. Since there is no Eastern Carolina Community College Athletic Conference tournament, Pitt has set up an invitational event to be held next weekend.

Roanoke's girls took a 12-7 lead after one period and upped that to 26-18 at the end of the first half. Roanoke outhit Ayden-Grifton, 18-7, in the third period to salt away the win and allowed a 22-18 comeback by A-G in the final frame.

Gloria Duggins led Roanoke with 16 points while Cheryl Randolph hit 15 nd Robbie Harris and Sheila Carlisle each had 10. Michelle Whitfield had 17 and Karen Edmonds added 16 for Ayden-Grifton.

The game closed out the regular season for the Redskins, whose next action will come in next week's Northeastern Conference tournament. Ayden-Grifton battles at North Pitt for the ECC championship on Friday.

Maryland Coach Lefty Driesell couldn't get his 500th career coaching victory at his alma mater last weekend and his Atlantic Coast Conference nemesis didn't let him have it, either.

No. 13 North Carolina, behind 21 points from Brad Daugherty and a clutch last-minute effort from Steve Hale, knocked off the 20th-ranked Terrapins 60-54. The victory enabled the Tar Heels to move to within a half-game of sixth-ranked Georgia Tech, which had the night off.

It was Driesell's alma mater that kept him from the 500 plateau last weekend as Duke took a 70-62 triumph.

Horace Grant scored 24 points and Vincent Hamilton added 21 as Clemson knocked off Wake Forest 80-65. It was Clemson's first victory over Wake Forest in four years and it avenged a 22-point loss one month ago.

In non-conference games, North Carolina State got 31 points from Lorenzo Charles in a 90-51 romp over Maryland-Eastern Shore, while freshman Kevin Strickland scored 19 points as No. 7 Duke took a 94-51 victory over Stetson.

The Yellow Jackets are 7-3 atop the conference, while North Carolina is alone at second with 6-3. Duke is 6-4 and Maryland fell back into a tie for fourth with N.C. State at 5-4 after Wednesday night's loss.

Clemson and Wake Forest are both 4-6 while Virginia, which meets Rollins tonight, is last at 1-8.

Although he was four of 10 from the floor, Hale's all-around performance included six assists and 12 points, and a defensive job which limited Adrian Branch to a five-for-12 night.

"You know a player's tendencies going in, but it's a matter of how well you execute," Hale said of his defense. "If he (Branch) had hit his first shot, he might have had an exceptional night."

Daugherty said playing in front of hostile audiences like the Maryland crowd could hurt a young team like the Tar Heels. But he added that he and his teammates kept their cool.

"We stuck in there and played good scrappy basketball," Daugherty said. "We just tried to keep our poise. That was really a big plus for us tonight."

While Driesell's victory total remains at 499, Coach Dean Smith picked up his 543rd career triumph. Smith also has beaten Driesell 29 of 38 times.

"We were fortunate to beat them in Chapel Hill. I thought both teams played hard tonight, but we came out ahead," Smith said.

Driesell said North Carolina's height gave his club problems, but he also said his team had its chances, too. Once again, missed free throws plagued the Terrapins.

"When we had a chance to get back into the ball game at the end, we didn't play very smart," Driesell said. "We turned the ball over a couple of times, then we missed some one-and-ones."

Len Bias led Maryland with 15 points and Branch added 11.

Clemson, despite the absence of starting center Glen McCants who is out for the remainder of the season with a knee injury, pounded the smaller Demon Deacons on the frontline from the opening moments, compiling a 53-31 rebounding advantage. A huge first-half rebounding margin helped the Tigers gain a nine-point halftime lead.

Wake Forest rallied in the second half, but the Deacons could never catch the Tigers who led all the way. The smallest Tiger lead after halftime was 57-51.

"It was quite an effort, a 36-point turnaround from the first time we played them," Clemson Coach Cliff Ellis said. "You don't know how proud I am of this team."

Delaney Rudd led Wake Forest with 25 points, but Green had just 11 on five-of-13 shooting.

Charles warmed up for Saturday's contest with the Tar Heels by hitting 14 of 17 shots from the field. Coach Jim Valvano considered the game one more step toward post-season play.

Mustangs Snap Losing Streak

By The Associated Press

Butch Moore had a feeling, and it wound up making Texas A&M Coach Shelby Metcalf sick.

Moore, a junior guard, hit his first nine shots in scoring a career-high 25 points to help ninth-ranked Southern Methodist snap a three-game losing streak with an 81-79 college basketball victory Wednesday night over Texas A&M.

"I haven't had a game like this since I played against Mount Vernon in high school back at Newburgh, New York," Moore said. "I felt in the warmups like my shot was going to go. So I took it to them."

Moore's shooting helped the Mustangs overcome a furious rally by the Aggies and end a string of losses to Arkansas, North Carolina State and Baylor. Texas A&M cut a 19-point deficit to 72-71, but SMU center Jon Koncak hit four free throws and Carl Wright made both ends of a one-and-one to preserve the victory.

"I'm sick for our players because they put their hearts on the floor," Metcalf said. "It was a great comeback. All I know is that Butch Moore is the best player they have. I've said that all along."

In other games involving Top Twenty teams, No. 4 Oklahoma clobbered Iowa State 104-76, No. 5 Memphis State defeated Cindinnati 68-55, seventh-ranked Duke downed Stetson 94-51, 13th-ranked North Carolina defeated No. 20 Maryland 60-54 and Virginia Commonwealth upset No. 19 Alabama-Birmingham 67-53.

Koncak wound up with 24 points for the Mustangs, 19-5 and 9-3 in the Southwest Conference. Don Marbury had 27 points for the Aggies, 15-7 and 7-4 in the SWC.

"The team came back from three tough losses," SMU Coach Dave Bliss said. "The Aggies made a great comeback at the end, but we just gutted it out. The first half of this game showed what this team can do."

SMU hit 16 of its first 20 shots and shot 75 percent from the field to lead 52-35 at halftime.

Top Ten

Wayman Tisdale scored 33 points, and Oklahoma recorded its fourth straight 20-victory season by beating Iowa State in a Big Eight Conference game. The victory gave Oklahoma a 20-4 record, 9-0 in the Big Eight. Tisdale scored 19 of his points during an eight-minute stretch in the first half, which ended with the Sooners leading 48-32. Oklahoma led by as many as 30 points in the second half.

Keith Lee scored 18 points, and Memphis State led all the way in beating Cincinnati in a Metro Conference game. Memphis State led by as many as 21 points in the first half, and the closest Cincinnati could get in the second half was 62-52 with 2:15 to play. Memphis State now is 18-2 and 8-1 in the conference.

Duke scored the game's first eight points and never looked back in its non-conference game with Stetson. Kevin Strickland, a reserve forward, scored 13 of his team-leading 19 points in the second half. Stetson got within 50-30 with 15:05 to play but could come no closer.

Second Ten

Brad Daugherty scored 21 points and North Carolina denied Maryland Coach Lefty Dreisell his 500th coaching victory for at least one more game. Maryland, which trailed 35-32 at halftime, led 50-49 late in the second half before a basket by Warren Martin put the Tar Heels ahead for good.

North Carolina is 19-5 and 6-3 in the Atlantic Coast Conference, while Maryland fell to 19-8 and 5-4 in the ACC. Len Bias led the Terrapins with 15 points.

Rolando Lamb had 26 points and Mike Schlegel 22 as Virginia Commonwealth moved into a tie with Alabama-Birmingham at the top of the Sun Belt Conference. Both have 9-2 records. VCU led 27-23 at halftime, and upped that lead to 41-28 with 13:40 to play. James Ponder had 21 points for UAB, 21-6.

Unranked

Rutgers-Newark tied the NCAA record for consecutive losses with 46, bowing 97-65 to Ramapo. It was the last game of the season for Rutgers-Newark, a Division III school which went 0-22 this season. Cliff Owen led Ramapo with 30 points.

C.W. Post saw its 32-game Big Apple Conference winning streak ended with a 59-58 loss to Dowling. It was believed to have been the longest conference winning streak in the nation. Mike Echeandia hit a layup with 45 seconds left that gave Dowling the victory.

The Other John Newman Gets ECAC Player Honors

John Newman — the other one — was selected as this week's ECAC-South men's player of the week, joining Richmond's Karen Elsner in the weekly accolades.

This Newman is the one who plays at James Madison. He led the way in victories over Virginia Commonwealth and league-leading Navy this past week. The 6-5 sophomore forward from Greensboro, scored 37 points in the two games.

Elsner, a 6-2 senior center from Rockville, Md., won the women's honors, scoring 57 points, pulling 17 rebounds, and blocking seven shots in two losses by the Lady Spiders last week.

As earlier was announced, East Carolina's Herb Dixon won the men's Rookie of the Week honors, while ECU's Monique Pompili won the women's.

• •

Carlos Yates of George Mason continues to hold to first place in the men's scoring race with a 23.7 averge, just ahead of Navy's David Robinson, second at 23.3. Richmond's John Newman is third with a 19.1 average. Robinson led the parade until last week when Yates passed him.

Robinson, however, continues as the rebounding leader with a 10.7 average, followed by teammate Vernon Butler at 10.0. UNC-Wilmington's Brian Rowsom is third at 8.7.

Robinson is also the field goal percentage leader at 62.4, followed by Butler at 57.8.

William & Mary's Scott Coval continues to lead in free throw shooting with a 95.5 average, followed by Richmond's Kelvin Johnson at 86.7.

Robinson paces the blocked shot category with 4.4, followed by Rob Rose of George Mason at 1.2 and East Carolina's Leon Bass at 1.1.

John Davis of Richmond leads in steals with 2.0 per game while Sampson, Johnson and Frank Ross of American are tied for second with 1.9 each.

East Carolina individuals in the top tens include: William Grady, eighth in scoring at 16.2, and Curt Vanderhorst, tenth in scoring at 14.8, and fifth in free throw percentage with 78.7; and Scott Hardy, eighth in assists with 3.9 per game.

Navy tops the league in field goal percentage at 54.1, while ECU is sixth at 47.5. Mason is the free throw leader at 77.2, with ECU eighth at 58.5.

• •

UNC-Wilmington's Gwen Austin is the top women's scorer with a 19.6 average just ahead of Richmond's Karen Elsner, second with 19.5. Linda Jones of George Mason is third at 16.0.

Austin is also the leading rebounder with a 12.7 average, followed by Elsner at 9.3 and Richmond's Laurie Governor at 8.8.

UNC-W's Elizabeth Bell leads in field goal shooting at 56.0, while Austin is second at 51.1. Sue Manelski of James Madison is the top free throw shooter, hitting 84.7 percent, while Kia Cooper of American is second at 81.4.

Jody Thornton of American is the top person in assists wth 6.3 per game, while East Carolina's Sylvia Bragg has moved into second at 5.3.

Austin is the top shot blocker with 2.2 per game, followed by Elsner at 1.7.

UNC-W leads in team field goal shooting with 50.2 percent, while ECU is third at 44.9. American is tops in free throw shooting at 69.0 while ECU is fourth at 62.8.

Pirates...

Winthrop closed it back to one, 24-23, but the Pirates then reeled off nine straight points over the final 4:45 to take a 33-23 lead into intermission.

Leon Bass scored the opening basket of the second half for a 35-23 lead, but Winthrop cut it back to six after that, 35-29. East Carolina slowly built the lead back to as much as 13, 46-33 with 13:54 to go, but again Winthrop hung in there, trimming it back to nine.

Vanderhorst, Sledge and Dixon each scored after that, however, to run the lead back to 15, 54-39, with 9:31 showing. The lead was still 15 at the 5:27 mark at 64-49, but the Eagles made one last run of it, scoring seven in a row to trim it to eight, 64-56, with 3:13 to play. East Carolina countered with five straight to run it back to 13, before finally settling for the eight-point victory.

Again, the Pirates were outrebounded by a smaller club, 34-31, including a 21-12 margin in the second half. Reserve Peter Scantleberry led Winthrop with nine, while Grady had seven for East Carolina.

The Pirates shot well in the game, hitting 55.4 percent.

"I hope they get a little boost (from the win)," Harrison said. "But we still need more strength inside. Richmond (Saturday's opponent) hurt us inside with (Peter) Woolfolk and (John) Davis' play on the boards. And of course, (John) Newman is a great player."

Avoiding Foolish Daytona Key

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Running strong without doing anything foolish seems to be the major aim going into the 7-Eleven Twin 125-mile qualifying races at Daytona International Speedway.

Today's qualifiers, which determine positions 2 through 28 for Sunday's $1.2 million Daytona 500, are generally considered the most dangerous events the NASCAR Grand National drivers take part in each year.

"First of all, you've got a whole lot of guys out there who've never been in a race on a track like Daytona," explained Darrell Waltrip, who will start 11th in the first of the two 50 lap events. "They have nothing to compare it to, driving those kinds of speeds in a race.

"There's no question in my mind that this is the most dangerous race we run in. The guys who are out there all the time know to give each other a little bit of room going into the corners at 200 miles an hour. You'll back off a little bit and give the other guy enough room if he's got a fender ahead of you.

"But some of these guys forget where they are and lose their heads," the two-time Winston Cup champion added.

Bill Elliott and Cale Yarborough, the only entries who have locked in starting positions for the 500, head the 31-car fields today.

Each of the $110,000 qualifying races will pay the winner $22,000, but neither Elliott nor Yarborugh is as concerned with winning the top prize as with getting ready for Sunday, when the winner will earn about $180,000.

"We're hoping to win the 7-Eleven race, but a lot can happen in 50 laps around this place, and probably will at the speeds we're running" said Elliott, who set an all-time stock car qualifying mark Saturday and earned the 500 pole with a lap averaging 205.114 mph.

"The biggest thing we've got to do is stay out of trouble. There are a lot of fast cars out there, with drivers in them who are not used to running races at 195 (mph). Hopefully, no one will do anything foolish and take out a group of contenders, but it could happen with everyone trying to get a good starting spot in the 500."

Yarborough completed the first-ever front-row sweep here by Ford, placing his Thunderbird on the outside of the front row after qualifying at 203.814.

But the two-time defending Daytona 500 champion finds himself struggling because his team has switched over the winter to Fords from Chevrolets.

"It's a complete change of engines, parts and chassis," explained Yarborough. "It's finally show-and-tell time for us."

Elliott will be on the pole for the first race. Starting beside him will be Neil Bonnett, one of five other drivers who posted qualifying speeds over 200 in Saturday's time trials.

Bonnett will be driving a Chevrolet Monte Carlo SS, a car which has been relegated by some to playing second fiddle to the sleek Fords this season.

"That's all I've been hearing for the past couple of months is Fords, Fords, Ford," Bonnett said. "Well, I'll tell you something. The Chevy is still a pretty doggone good race car.

"Maybe Elliott will go off in turn two and leave the rest of us behind, but I wouldn't bet on it.

"I know that my car has been over 200 ever since we got down here, and I don't think that anybody can run away from us," Bonnett added.

A.J. Foyt, the 1972 Daytona 500 winner and only an occasional performer on the Grand National circuit in recent years, will start next to Yarborough in the second qualifier.

Foyt turned an impressive lap of 201.275 in an unheralded Oldsmobile, but blew an engine during practice Wednesday. "We came down here with six engines," the 50-year-old Foyt said. "The crew's gonna have to scramble some, but we'll be ready."

Also in the second race are David Pearson, Phil Parsons, Dale Earnhardt, seven-time Daytona 500 winner Richard Petty and his son Kyle, Lake Speed, 1984's top rookie Rusty Wallace, Harry Gant, Tom Sneva and Bobby Allison. Allison's 23-year-old son, Davey, also will be in that race, starting 26th in his Grand National debut.

Elliott said, "I'm a good bit interested in the qualifying races. They're going to determine how you run on Sunday. But I'll be glad when they're over. They're tough races."

The lineups for Thursday's 7-Eleven Twin qualifying races at Daytona International Speedway, with type of car and qualifying speed in mph:

Free Throws Nip Seahawks

AUGUSTA, Ga. (AP) — Marty Hunter sank four free throws in the final seconds to give Augusta a 65-63 college basketball victory over N. Carolina-Wilmington on Wednesday night.

Brian Rowson's 10-foot jumper to tie the game missed at the buzzer.

Augusta, after trailing since the opening seconds, slowly rallied in the second half to tie the Seahawks, which made only 38 percent of their shots after intermission.

Hunter's first free throw after the 61-61 tie gave Augusta its first lead since 2-0. David Gray had tied it with a pair of free throws.

Kennedy Dixon led Augusta with 28 points and Tim Robinson added 18.

Rowson scored 16 points, Bobby Jo Springer 12, Sandy Anderson 11 and George Durham 10 for the Seahawks.

NO FREE SHOES

CHICAGO (AP) — You might say the shoe didn't fit for David Greenwood, star forward for the Chicago Bulls.

Greenwood was a late signer for the 1984-85 season and because of that he did not get his usual contract with a shoe company.

"At the start of the season," he said, "all I had to wear were the summer rejects. I found out that it's tough to just go out and buy some size 14 sneakers."

Hunt's Budget Gaining Support Among Legislators

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — Gov. Jim Martin's spending proposals will get fair consideration, legislative leaders say, but some Republicans worry that his predecessor's budget may be gaining enough support to fend off cuts.

"Like it or not, a consensus is growing," Senate Minority Leader Bill Redman, R-Iredell, said Wednesday after the latest in a series of briefings on the 1985-87 budget prepared by former Gov. Jim Hunt.

Redman said some of his colleagues who attended the briefing were "sitting here and listening to what they think is gospel, and it's not."

Martin's budget director, C.C. Cameron, and legislative leaders acknowledged that the $16.8 billion Hunt budget is getting a head start because the new governor's spending proposals are still being compiled.

But that's not what the briefings, which began last week and will continue through this week, are designed to do, Democrats said.

"We've got to do something and he (Martin) is not ready," said Rep. Billy Watkins, D-Granville, chairman of the House Appropriations Expansion Budget Committee. "We've got to plow ahead."

Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan said the discussions "will not necessarily prejudice (lawmakers) against Governor Martin's proposals when we get them."

Martin said this week he will submit his spending proposals for continuing operations — the "base budget" — and details of his tax-cut plan with his State of the State address Feb. 28.

His proposals for new expenditures — the "expansion budget" — will arrive a few days afterward, he said.

Wednesday's briefing centered on Hunt's proposals for public education — including a 5 percent pay raise for teachers, reduced class sizes and implementation of a career growth program for teachers, and a basic education program expected to cost more than $690 million.

Martin says he supports higher teacher's salaries and merit pay for exceptional teachers, but hasn't unveiled detailed plans.

Sen. Cass Ballenger, R-Catawba, said senators who asked questions during the briefing didn't seem to be thinking about possible spending cuts, which Martin is likely to recommend to build a surplus for tax reductions.

"The problem is this stuff gets momentum ... and that could make it hard to make these (spending) cuts," said Redman.

Cameron, who has attended the discussions, said Redman and Ballenger have a point. But he said, "I would rather have a Legislature that's knowledgable about the budget and what's in it than the other way around.

"As they go over the items one by one, I'm sure some of them are (gaining popularity)," said Cameron. "But I'm sure (the lawmakers) are thinking 'we do need this' or 'we don't need that.'"

Martin's base budget will not differ sharply from Hunt's, Cameron said. A proposal to delete the $1.3 million abortion fund should be the most controversial item.

The most significant proposals for change will involve the expansion budget, and they should be ready in time for the Legislature to consider them on schedule, Cameron said.

"Our idea is if you reduce the base budget a little, and don't add as much to the expansion budget (as Hunt did) ... it will leave a surplus, and we can share some of it with the taxpayers in the form of tax (cuts)."

Martin wants to repeal the tax on intangible assets such as bank accounts, the proerty tax on business inventories, and the sales tax on food and non-prescription medicines. Legislative analysts say the package, when fully implemented, could cost $443.5 million.

Martin Talk Set Feb. 28

RALEIGH (AP) — A resolution asking Gov. Jim Martin to address the General Assembly and present his budget plans Feb. 28 breezed quietly through the House with none of the partisan fireworks that marked its introduction in the Senate.

"Frankly, I think we're all pretty much in agreement on this because the leadership has gotten together," said House Minority Leader Betsy Cochrane, R-Davie, who moved for its approval in the House Rules Committee Wednesday.

Martin, who wanted to deliver the speech Feb. 19 and his spending program about two weeks later, announced Monday he would heed the resolution, ending an early clash with the predominantly Democratic legislative leadership.

Republicans promptly dropped their opposition to the measure, which was approved unanimously by the House Rules Committee before going to the House floor.

The resolution won unanimous House approval later Wednesday on a voice vote after passing 95-2 on its second reading. Reps. Charles L. Cromer, R-Davidson, and Stephen Wood, R-Guilford, cast the only dissenting votes, and there was no debate.

The Senate's Democratic majority pushed the resolution through last Tuesday over the protests of Republicans, who claimed the measure insulted Martin by telling him when to submit his budget.

Snow-Tired

Sammy McKinney, 4, was tired in the snow as he visited his grandparents' house in the Jonas Ridge community of Burke County Wednesday. The area had about eight inches of snow from a storm Tuesday and early Wednesday that left up to 28 inches of snow in North Carolina's mountains. (AP Laserphoto)

Mountains Digging Out After Snow

By The Associated Press

Western North Carolina dug out from a two-day snowstorm that dumped more than two feet in some counties, cutting off electricity to thousands of residents and closing mountain roads to motorists.

No serious injuries were reported Wednesday, and most of the 9,000 customers who lost power were back on line Wednesday, utility spokesmen said.

Icy roads contributed to at least 55 wrecks in the west Wednesday, including three tractor-trailers that overturned on Interstate 40 within two hours during morning hours, said Sgt. Jeter Wilds of the state Highway Patrol.

The winter storm moved out of the state Wednesday morning after dumping another foot of snow on Avery County, bringing the accumulation there to 28 inches, the National Weather Service reported.

"Even the skiers aren't moving around," Banner Elk Police Chief Lester Buchanan said. Some Lees-McRae College students were horsing around in the knee-high snow, but most stayed in their dorm rooms, he said.

Meanwhile, an upper level disturbance passing over the state tonight will bring an increase in cloudiness and colder air to North Carolina by tonight.

Some snow will again develop across parts of the central and northern mountains early tonight. It will be generally partly cloudy tonight, but mostly sunny Friday, as some clouds linger along the coast and in the northern mountains.

A few snow flurries may also continue in the northern mountains Friday.

Highs Friday will range mostly in the upper 30s to mid 40s. Some 20s will continue in the northern mountains.

Youthful Aide Will Seek Raise

RALEIGH (AP) — Despite criticism from people who don't think a 21-year-old should make $38,500 as Gov. Jim Martin's special assistant, Thomas A. Stith plans to seek even more pay when his first review rolls around.

"I hear two grumbles about my salary for every one grumble about my age," Stith said. "As a matter of fact, I will be looking for an increase when I get my first review. If I didn't seek one, I would be discriminating against myself. If an individual performs, he should be paid accordingly."

His counterpart in former Gov. Jim Hunt's administration, Ben Ruffin, began in 1978 when he was 36 at $32,000. When he left it last month, he was making $48,216.

Stith is responsible for recruiting blacks into state government and ensuring black businesses get a fair share of state contracts. He answers directly to the governor and needs no appointment to see him.

When friends ask how he did it, Stith said it was by knowing the right people and turning out a larger-than-expected black vote for Martin during the fall campaign.

"Republican candidates usually get just a couple of percentage points in black precincts, sometimes just 1 percent," says Jack Hawke, Martin's former campaign manager and now Martin's special assistant for policy. "Well, we targeted 15 percent. In the precincts that Stith worked, we averaged 16 percent.

"He's just an outstanding young man who graduated from high school and college in three years each, the top of his class," says Hawke, who has known Stith's family for years.

Stith said he is an example of a new generation of politically independent black leaders.

THOMAS A. STITH III

"I would define us as very aggressive, very professional and very confident," he says. "They are not going to let discrimination be an excuse not to succeed. Their success or failure lies within themselves."

He said he occasionally finds himself being criticized by veteran black leaders who care nothing for the party of Ronald Reagan and Jesse Helms.

"They get real wound up emotionally," Stith says. "Once they get wound down, I say to them, 'Let's talk facts now.' The black agenda is not diametrically opposed to the Republican philosophy. In some ways they are one in the same: economic opportunity, economic progress."

He said he becomes outraged when older blacks suggest that younger blacks lack awareness of past struggles.

For the next four years, at least, his agenda will be getting blacks involved in a Republican administration. The governor's personal secretary, scheduler, and the head of the Corrections Department are black. More blacks will be coming to Raleigh as Martin continues to make appointments, Stith says.

"We will have a record that will be hard to beat," he said.

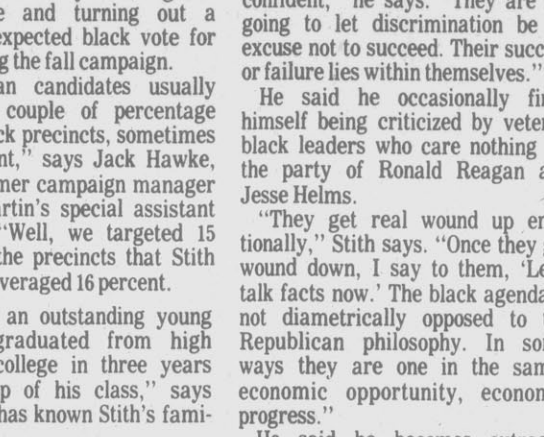

New Highway Rest Stops Open

GREENSBORO (AP) — North Carolina's largest rest stops opened Tuesday after delays of more than two months, but the state Department of Transportation hasn't decided if the project's contractor will have to pay a $450 penalty for each day of delay after Dec. 1, a DOT engineer says.

R.G.K. Inc. of Burlington was the contractor for the two new rest stops on Interstate 85 east of Greensboro on the Guilford County-Alamance County border. They replace two sets of 30-year-old rest stops, one closer to Greensboro and another near Efland in Orange County.

DOT division engineer John Watkins said the state accepted the new rest stops even though there are some minor jobs still to be done.

Grand Canyon State

Arizona, the 48th state, was admitted to the Union on this day in 1912. When it petitioned to become a territory, three names were proposed: Arizona, Pimeria and Gadsonia. President Taft vetoed Arizona's admission in 1911 because the state permitted recall of judges. Arizona eliminated recall, became a state — and then reinstituted recall. In 1934 the state almost went to war with the federal government over water rights to the Colorado River.

ABC To Start Miniseries Sunday

By FRED ROTHENBERG
AP Television Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Do lunch. Do dinner. Do anything else. But don't waste time watching "Hollywood Wives," ABC's plastic miniseries that needs a lot more than a tummy-tuck and a face-lift.

This lethargic video version of Jackie Collins' best-seller will be broadcast in three two-hour installments Sunday, Monday and Tuesday nights.

Producer Aaron Spelling ("Dynasty," "Love Boat," "Finder of Lost Loves") has turned Miss Collins' fetchingly satirical novel into his standard series glop: humorless, meaningless pap that takes refuge in glitzy costumes, lavish sets and sleek cars — all to the crescendo of sappy violins.

The shame of it is that this crass trash could have been classy trash, according to this columnist's wife who read the book, with the front cover torn off so nobody would know, and thought it was a gas, frequently laughing aloud at Miss Collins' clever writing.

Quality aside, Spelling is a proven ratings winner, and ABC is expecting a blockbuster performance from "Hollywood Wives." Of course, it has the prerequisite murders, seductions, betrayals and blackmailings.

"Hollywood Wives" ("Hollywood Whines" fits better) is about the women behind the powerful men in the movie capital, their quest for vicarious fame and fortune, and their lunches, facials and affairs, or as ABC's gushing publicity material says, "the private lives of the world's most public people."

All these public people and plot lines intersect at the third night's big bash, which Elaine Conti (Candice Bergen) throws in the hopes of resurrecting her husband's fading film career. Elaine believes that if Ross' star can rise again through a plum role in the movie "Final Reunion," he'll be more macho in bed and she'll be restored to her rightful place at Hollywood's chic spots.

Meanwhile, Ross (Steve Forrest), a former matinee idol relegated to low-budget, spaghetti Westerns, is having a torrid dalliance with Elaine's friend, Karen (Mary Crosby).

"Final Reunion" is the focal point for much of the story's scheming, jockeying and philosophizing. The "Final Reunion" script was written by Montana Gray (Stefanie Powers) whose husband, Neil (Anthony Hopkins), is a reformed alcoholic who will be directing the film.

Sexpot Gina Germaine (Suzanne Somers) is ready for a career change and the part of the innocent young thing in "Final Reunion." We learn about her new acting direction in a breathless interview with Mary Hart of "Entertainment Tonight" who plays herself quite believably.

In the one intentionally funny line in "Hollywood Wives," Gina says her latest film has her playing "an archaeologist who gets captured by a band of pygmies" but she's had enough of those sexploitation parts.

Gina ends up seducing Neil for a screen test, blackmailing him with tapes of their affair and causing him to have a heart attack in the sack. "Apparently, he's been under a lot of stress lately," the doctor who can't save him tells his wife and ex-wife (Joanna Cassidy).

Buddy Hudson (Andrew Stevens), an ex-gigolo, is also desperate for a part in "Final Reunion," but will he stoop to sexual hijinks, jeopardizing his marriage, to get his big career break? Stevens' only asset here is his upper torso, which he manages to reveal in half a dozen scenes.

Other characters include the forgettable Angie Dickinson as super agent Sadie LaSalle, Rod Steiger in a solidly offbeat performance as the unscrupulous producer of "Final Reunion," and Roddy McDowall as a Beverly Hills pimp.

The performances are uneven. Miss Bergen doesn't bring enough zest to Elaine. But Forrest is just right as the vain, immature actor who has his initials on his pajamas, reads Variety in bed and has been pampered and protected all his adult life.

After six hours of "Hollywood Wives" tedium, an eager public will know this much about the women behind the movie kings: they spend their days hopping from the best shops (some filming is done in Gucci and Neiman-Marcus) to the best eatries to the best beds — in that order.

Actress Trapped By Locked Door

BURBANK, Calif. (AP) — Jane Withers, who's better known as Josephine the plumber of television commercial fame, is getting married on Valentine's Day, but she needed some help from firefighters to get out of an alley first.

The 58-year-old actress was outside her movie production office Saturday morning when the door slammed shut, trapping her in an alley blocked by tall fences.

She said she tried to pry the hinges off the door, then piled old props against a fence.

But the props kept toppling over and Ms. Withers, clad in a blue bathrobe, got desperate. The actress, who's getting married to her business manager, Thomas Pierson, had an afternoon appointment for a wedding dress fitting.

"I kept thinking, 'Oh, God, I can't break anything, I'm getting married Thursday,'" she recalled.

Around 5 p.m., her shouts for help were heard by a businessman next door, who alerted the Fire Department. The firefighters who came to her rescue received grateful hugs from the actress.

Robbery Arrest

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Michael Anthony Galloway was arrested Wednesday and charged with the Feb. 11 robbery of a First Citizens Bank and Trust in Wilmington, according to North Carolina special FBI agent Robert Pence.

Pence said Galloway was identified through a joint investigation by the FBI and Wilmington police.

If convicted of the bank robbery charge, Galloway could receive a sentence of up to 20 years and a $10,000 fine, Pence said.

Local Band Says Name 'Is A Joke'

By JANE WELBORN
Reflector Staff Writer

A local band called The Amateurs is anything but unskilled.

"The name is a joke," said founding band member Bill (Shep) Shepherd. "The first time we played (at a nightclub) we had only been playing together a week, so we decided on that name.

"And with a name like that, people will get a whole lot more (from the group's performance) than they expected," he said with a laugh.

The Amateurs will perform tonight at the New Deli for the Roxy's Sweetheart Ball. In addition to the band's performance, a version of "The Dating Game" will be played, with prizes donated by local merchants.

The six members of The Amateurs have local ties: five are Greenville residents and one is a student at East Carolina University. In addition to Shepherd, band members are Larry Graham, Mike Davis, David Winstead, Scott Stutts and Buddy Alcorn.

Each of the band members are experienced musicians, and most perform with other bands playing a variety of music — Davis also is a member of a rhythm and blues band, Graham plays heavy metal, Stutts plays classic rock 'n' roll, Winstead is organist for the First Baptist Church in Scotland Neck.

"We met each other by talking about music and asking people to play." Shepherd said. "We like to get together and jam with different musicians, and each person in the group adds his own influences and knowledge. We learn a lot by playing with different musicians."

Half of the group's repertoire is originial music, rock and roll flavored with a reggae beat. The group's show includes a range of material from Santana's "Evil Ways" to "Love Potion No. 9."

"We do our own version of copy songs," Shepherd said. "We give the songs a general reggae feel."

YOUR DAILY Horoscope
from the Carroll Righter Institute

GENERAL TENDENCIES: Except for the early hours of the morning, today and tonight is certainly no time to engage in any risks or chances or to get involved in any sort of confrontation with any other person.

ARIES (Mar. 21 to Apr. 19) Do nothing in the outside world that can reflect on your good reputation. This is not a good day to see a bigwig for any favors.

TAURUS (Apr. 20 to May 20) Although you are all fired up to get into new ventures, this is not the right day for such and you could get into much trouble.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21) Pay your bills and don't get into any important business matters today or you could lose your shirt.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to Jul. 21) Much care in motion must be exercised today so that you do not cause damage or get into an unfortunate accident.

LEO (Jul. 22 to Aug. 21) You are hell-bent on having a good time, but this could cost you a pretty penny now in several ways. Stay on the job and make money.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22) Your mate may be irate so walk away or soothe ruffled feelings instead of responding in kind.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22) If you resent some situation at home, don't lose your temper but put up with it for the time being.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21) Take care you do not annoy associates since you are determined to get things going as you wish them to be.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21) Take care you do not act hastily and use good judgment in the handling of important business matters.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20) You are just in the mood for scrapping at every turn today, so calm down and be poised otherwise you can get into big trouble.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19) Don't do anything drastic because you think that your business affairs are not going right.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to Mar. 20) A day to do whatever will gain you the personal goals that are dear to your heart, so forget your friends awhile.

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY ... he or she will be a born trouble-shooter and should have the education slanted along such lines. Early teach to work with the hands also and to get into sports in order to have an athletic body and strong legs. Teach to have a regard for the feelings of others.

Trial Starts

FRANKFURT, West Germany (AP) — Five suspected neo-Nazis have gone on trial in a state court, charged with car-bomb attacks on three U.S. soldiers in 1982 and armed robberies of five banks.

The Federal Prosecutor's office has issued an arrest warrant for a sixth suspect who apparently fled West Germany after the bombings. All six were linked by the prosecutor to political groups that espouse neo-Nazi aims.

The five defendants are charged with forming a terrorist group, robbing five banks of the equivalent of $210,000 in 1982 and planting three car bombs that seriously injured two American soldiers in December 1982 in central West Germany. The defendants face long jail terms and heavy fines if convicted.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East

Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Four of ♣.

The name end play is terminologically inexact. While the majority of cases do occur late in the play, you might be "end played" at trick one. It happened quite early in this hand from a European tournament.

North-South were using a mini-no trump opening bid of 10-12 points. North had full value for his raise to game, and West attacked with the fourth-best of his longest and strongest suit.

Declarer won the opening lead in hand with the ten and could count seven top tricks. The obvious place to look for the two he was shy was in spades, so at trick two he led a spade to the ten, with great success.

Next came a club to the king, and West ducked. Declarer continued with a spade and, when West and dummy both played low, East found, to his surprise, that he had won a trick with the nine. However, he also found that he was end played at trick four!

He did the best he could by exiting with the ten of hearts. Dummy's king won and the ace was cashed. When declarer now led a low heart, he was reasonably sure that East held the jack. But he was dead sure that the finesse was not necessary.

He won the queen of hearts and, when West did not follow, he threw East back on lead with a heart. East's forced diamond return was run to the queen and that became the fulfilling trick.

Storm Hit Beach Town

LONG BEACH, N.C. (AP) — A powerful winter storm damaged 27 cottages, ripped away decks and stairs and carried off huge chunks of sand at Long Beach in Brunswick County earlier this week, causing an estimated $750,000 in damages, officials said.

"This is the worst winter storm I've ever seen," said James Sloop, Long Beach police chief. "I've been here 10 years and I've never seen anything that outdid this."

Officials said the erosion caused by the storm Monday and Tuesday was the worst to hit the area in more than a decade.

"For erosion, this is much more severe than (hurricane) Diana," said Troy Davis, town engineer for Long Beach, the area hardest hit by the storm.

Damage estimates for other beaches damaged by the storm were not yet available.

Brunswick County Emergency Management Coordinator Cecil Logan said 400 of the beach's 600 cottages had damage to decks and stairs while 27 had structural damages.

Logan said tides ran 15 feet above normal during the storm, which cut through 15 to 20 feet of dune.

Bob Jenski of the National Weather Service said beaches oriented east and west, such as Long Beach, were hardest hit by the storm. Other beaches, he said, were more protected from the southwesterly storm.

High waves broke away 300 to 400 feet of Caswell Beach, said Bob Jamieson of the North Carolina Department of Natural Resources and Community Development in Wilmington.

Jamieson said other coastal towns near Long Beach reported only minor damage.

State Recording Sites Of Waste Disposal Dumps

By The Associated Press

State hazardous waste officials have proposed that county register of deeds offices in North Carolina record possible toxic waste dumps to protect future property owners.

A team of geologists, engineers and chemists is documenting the 622 sites listed by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency as a result of a 1980 federal law that requires anyone with knowledge of past hazardous waste dumping to report it, said Bill Meyer, director of the Solid and Hazardous Waste Divison of the N.C. Department of Human Resources.

At the request of the General Assembly, the department on Feb. 1 proposed that records of the sites be kept in Raleigh and in the 100 counties, Meyer said.

Sites that showed a significant concentration of toxic material in monitoring wells would be assessed and remedial action taken under the department's proposal.

In Buncombe County, the EPA lists Chemtronics Inc. in Swannanoa on its Superfund list of the nation's 400 most dangerous toxic waste sites.

On its second-tier list, the agency lists eight other landfills in Buncombe County and several landfills in other Western North Carolina counties, including those in Swain, Henderson and Graham.

Under the federal law, a company that notifies the EPA of a potential hazardous waste site is subject only to damages actually caused by its dumping. Otherwise, the company faces an unlimited liability and triple punitive damages.

"A guy would be crazy not to notify the EPA," Meyer said.

He said his division is having to "weed through" the list that ranges from the "ludicrous" to the "serious."

In one instance, the EPA listed a landfill where a case of 8-ounce bottles of nose drops containing ordinary alcohol was reported to have been buried, Meyer said.

But the federal law is turning up other sites that do pose a danger.

Meyer said the state was negotiating to purchase a two-acre tract when officials learned the property was once used by an electric battery facility. The ground showed a high concentration of lead that can be deadly to small children.

Once on the EPA list, the sites never come off, even if determined to be nondangerous or after cleanup, Meyer said. Under the state program, the deeds to those properties would note the hazardous waste designation.

"The program would make sure future property owners know what they are buying and that have to be careful about putting a drinking water supply through this mess," said Meyer.

Trial Is Ordered For Quiet Man

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — A 22-year-old man in custody for nine months because he would not utter a word in his own defense will be brought to trial in Forsyth Superior Court, with or without his cooperation.

Judge Thomas W. Ross of Greensboro on Wednesday ordered that James Albert Henson Jr. be tried.

Court-appointed attorneys said Henson has not spoken to them since he was jailed last May on eight felony charges of breaking and enter-ing and larceny.

J. Archer Neal was the first attorney appointed for Henson last May. Neal said he tried unsuccessfully several times to get Henson to discuss the charges.

Last November, Neal was allowed to withdraw, and Michael A. Grace was appointed to represent Henson, but Grace has had no better luck with the defendant than Neal had.

"He hasn't spoken a single, solitary word to me in the three months since I was appointed to represent him," Grace said Wednesday. "He talks to other people, but he won't talk to me."

After several psychiatric evaluations, Ross found that Henson is able to understand the nature and object of the proceedings against him, to comprehend his own situation and to assist in his defense rationally.

Therefore, Ross concluded that "as a matter of law, this defendant is capable of proceeding to trial."

Nature Conservancy Issues Land Report

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — The North Carolina Nature Conservancy protected more than 122,000 acres of state natural areas with a fair market value of an estimated $54 million in 1984, the organization says.

The N.C. Nature Conservancy seeks to identify and protect North Carolina's most significant and irreplaceable areas. It is a state chapter of the national non-profit Nature Conservancy.

The Conservancy also transferred 11,000 acres of protected land to state and federal agencies for permanent management.

In one of the largest conservation gifts ever made in the United States, the Prudential Insurance Company donated 118,000 acres in Dare and Tyrell counties. The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service worked with the Nature Conservancy in obtaining the gift and now manages the property as the Alligator River National Wildlife Refuge.

Other protected land includes 2,875 acres in Surry and Allegheny counties, which are adjacent to the Conservancy's Saddle Mountain Reserve, and 800 acres in Pender County. In Wake County, the Conservancy received the 125-acre Bass Lake as a gift and conservation easement.

In Scotland County, the 125-acre McIntosh bay complex was purchased for nearly $100,000 from privately donated funds.

The Conservancy transferred nearly 6,000 acres to the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service for establishment of the Currituck National Wildlife Refuge and 214 acres for the Currituck component of the N.C. Natural Estuarine Sanctuary.

Another 4,881 acres at Great and Goodman Islands in Bertie County were transferred for Wildlife Resources Commission Management.

Drive the car that some believe is...

The Peugeot 505's ride is perhaps the most unruffled of any car today. Credit for this must go to the Peugeot suspension system.

At the core of this system is the Peugeot shock absorber. Not an ordinary shock absorber, but an awesome damping device fitted with four times as many valves as normal shock absorbers.

Just as crucial to the Peugeot's unflappable ride are the seats. You will find no springs in these seats. Only polymerized foam, "tuned" to work in harmony with the suspension.

Yet a few more reasons for buying a Peugeot 505S.

Pakistani Faces Deportation In Fight To Stay In N.C.

By TOM MINEHART
Associated Press Writer

CHARLOTTE (AP) — U.S. immigration officials are checking to see whether a Pakistani man who owns two stores and heads the Parent-Teacher Organization in Waynesville has exhausted his efforts to remain in the country.

"It is our intent at this time to remove this man from the United States," said Louis M. Richard, district director for the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service in Atlanta. "I have agreed to review his files (today), meet with his attorney of record, discuss the matter and see if in fact he has exhausted his administrative remedies."

Muradali Gillani, 35, said he and his family have a lot of friends on their side, but if immigration officials order them to leave, "there is nothing I can do."

"I have faith — this is a great country," Gillani said Wednesday in a telephone interview from Waynesville, a 6,8800-person town in the Blue Ridge Mountains 150 miles west of Charlotte. "I am here since 1972. I have a good business, I provide jobs. One of my kids is an American citizen and one more kid is on the way, due in May.

More than a year ago, an immigration judge ruled that Gillani did not have the proper visa to stay in the United States and ordered him excluded and deported, Richard said. The judge also ruled that his 30-year-old wife, 8-year-old daughter and 3-year-old son would have to leave.

Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., and former U.S. Rep. James Clarke, D-N.C., sponsored special bills at least three times in the past several years that would have allowed the family to remain in the country.

While the bills were pending, immigration officials could not act against them; but the bills did not pass and are now defunct.

Helms' special assistant, Debbie Yelverton, said she didn't know whether Helms would file another special bill to delay the deportation.

"We always hope there might be some administrative way Mr. Gillani could qualify for legal permanent residence under our laws," she said. "The community has been very supportive of Mr. Gillani."

"If everything is exhausted, I will issue the appropriate order to take him into custody," Richard said. "We will give him time to take care of his belongings. But he knows this has been hanging an awfully long time."

Gillani is now seeking a temporary stay to avoid deportation. Meanwhile, some 2,000 friends and neighbors have written letters in support of Gillani's struggle to remain in the United States.

"In a small area like this, that says a lot," said Reid Brown, a Waynesville attorney who helps Gillani in business matters. "Gil is humble, meek, well-mannered and all-American. He has all the qualifications for being a Ronald Reagan Republican voter."

Gillani owns a clothing outlet in Waynesville and another in nearby Candler. He's also president of the PTO at the Waynesville elementary school his daughter attends.

"The chances of that happening in a small mountain town for a young man from Pakistan are almost unbelievable," Brown said.

Martin Says Planes Only For Business

RALEIGH (AP) — State aircraft can be used only for state business and a uniform charge will be levied for all trips, according to new guidelines established by Gov. Jim Martin and Commerce Secretary Howard Haworth.

At the governor's direction, the new policy will give state economic development efforts top priority for aircraft use. The guidelines identify the provision of expedient air transportation for the governor and other top state officials as a second priority.

"These new guidelines reflect the interest I voiced during the campaign to separate state business and political travel," Martin said in a prepared statement. "With these regulations, state equipment will be used for state business.

"By charging the same rate for all aircraft users, the state has a uniform policy that applies equally to everyone," Martin said.

The Commerce Department owns two Bell 206B helicopters, a single Bell 222 jet helicopter and a single fixed-wing King Air E-90 six-passenger airplane. Under the new policy, state officials will pay $300 per hour for use of the King Air, the same amount for the Bell 222 and $200 per hour for the Bell 206B.

"We wanted to be clear from the very start that all use of these aircraft be for official state business," Haworth said. "As we have already seen, there is great potential for confusion and questionable use of these machines."

Tar Heel Saw Exile's Reception

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — R.J. Reynolds tobacco heir Smith W. Bagley says he and other prominent Americans accompanying dissident leader Kim Dae-jung were surprised and fearful when they arrived at the Seoul, Korea, airport.

"We were on our own with these henchmen," Bagley told the Winston-Salem Journal Wednesday. "When I saw all these people jump out from behind the curtain I didn't know if they were North Koreans or South Koreans."

Bagley, the head of Arca Foundation in Washington, D.C., an organization that lobbies for such causes as environmental protection and human rights, said he was walking behind Kim when a scuffle broke out last Friday.

"About six of these commando types jumped out from behind a curtain and linked arms and cut us off," he said.

Kim, who had been living in the United States, was returning to South Korea several days before the National Assembly elections. Kim's recently formed New Korea Democratic Party made significant gains in the elections held Tuesday.

Kim, 59, left South Korea after he was released from prison in 1982. He was serving a sentence on a sedition conviction.

When no one from the U.S. embassy met the American group as they left the plane and began walking down an airport corridor, Bagley said they were surprised and afraid.

He said up to 100 men in blue suits jumped out from behind curtains in the corridor and began shoving the 20 members of the group and 70 reporters who followed.

Panda Airlift

TOKYO (AP) — A sick giant panda rescued last month in the mountains of China's southern Shaanxi province was airlifted by helicopter today to an army hospital in the provincial capital of Xian, the Xinhua news agency reported.

In a report monitored in Tokyo, Xinhua said the female panda, 3 or 4 years old, was rescued on Jan. 8 with an injury to the forelimbs. Local veterinarians treated the injury and a case of enterogastritis, an intestinal ailment, Xinhua said.

China began a major panda rescue campaign last year when the animals faced starvation after their basic food, arrow bamboo, withered in a flowering cycle.
