Farm Credit Knots Senate

By JIM DRINKARD
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Negotiations to end a paralyzing filibuster by farm-state senators resumed today as Assistant Majority Leader Alan Simpson said he is optimistic that an accord will be reached on an emergency agriculture credit package.

But the GOP leader warned that the Senate might be kept in session through the weekend to wear down those who have led the filibuster to force action on the farm issue.

Simpson told reporters he thinks an accord can be reached at a meeting today with the leaders of the filibuster to bring an end to the marathon speeches later in the day, clearing the way for a confirmation vote on Edwin Meese III for attorney general and perhaps a vote on a multibillion-dollar interstate highway bill.

The Wyoming Republican said that Sen. David Boren, D-Okla., who is leading the filibuster "sees we can get it resolved."

Boren was also optimistic late Wednesday, saying "We're getting very close to agreement" following a meeting with Senate Majority Leader Robert Dole, R-Kan., and Agriculture Secretary John Block.

But Simpson said his personal feeling is that the Senate should be held in session through the weekend to deal with the filibuster if no resolution is reached on the farm credit issue.

"I've already told my people that I will be here this weekend," Simpson added, saying he has canceled appearances in Wyoming to clear his schedule for Saturday and Sunday.

However, Simpson said Dole has not agreed to such a weekend schedule.

Dole was fairly optimistic Wednesday night after a day of meetings in which the administration promised to further liberalize its already announced credit aid program.

"I think we're finding out our differences aren't that great," Dole said.

At the same time, House Democrats were attempting to seize the initiative on the issue, pushing $1 billion in additional farm loan guarantee authority through the Appropriations Committee and taking up a more ambitious credit package in the House Agriculture Committee.

Appropriations Committee Chairman Rep. Jamie Whitten, D-Miss., called the measure "a holding action" needed to keep farmers from sliding into bankruptcy. "If we don't restore some health to agriculture, they're going to go out of business."

While the Senate meetings took place Wednesday, Boren, Sen. James Exon, D-Nebr., and others tied the Senate in knots with a filibuster that prevented consideration of other matters, including the confirmation of Edwin Meese III to be attorney general and a $7 billion highway bill.

Dole and Boren declined to discuss the emerging agreement in detail, but other participants in the meetings said it was likely to include a higher ceiling on loan guarantees — perhaps $3 billion, instead of the $650 million the administration first announced — and more liberal eligibility terms and guarantee levels.

ECU Backs Existing Zoning

By SUE HINSON
Reflector Staff Writer

The East Carolina University School of Medicine, like Pitt County Memorial Hospital, favors keeping zoning classifications in Greenville's medical district as they are, Dean William Laupus reported Wednesday.

Dr. Laupus, speaking to members of the Medical District Study Committee, urged retention of current zoning and said a move in that direction would be "meritorious" and "ought to be carefully considered" by the committee.

Laupus, the second of a series of speakers invited to address the Medical District Study Committee, added that the ECU School of Medicine would prefer that commercial development in portions of Greenville's 1,790-acre medical district surrounding the medical complex not be pursued. "We would advise a cautious and conservative approach to change ... and would recommend that the medical district be kept in (its current) sort of packaging," he said.

Information provided by speakers like Laupus and Ralph Hall, PCMH vice president of facility management who spoke to the committee in a previous meeting, will be used by Medical District Study Committee members to develop recommendations on future development of the medical district. The nine-member committee was created by the City Council in December in response to "significant controversy" over the use of land in the PCMH-ECU School of Medicine area — controversy brought about in part by local developer Guy B. Mayo's request to rezone property located directly across from the hospital to allow construction of a shopping center.

ECU and PCMH holdings now constitute approximately 100 acres of Greenville's medical district, a district that is primarily zoned for high density residential development (743 acres). ECU and PCMH acreage, however, is zoned health care — a designation which accounts for 8 percent of medical district composition. Other zoning classifications in the medical district include shopping center (CS), 36 acres; highway commercial (CH), 55 acres; downtown commercial fringe (CDF), 14 acres; office and institutional (O&I), 167 acres; medical arts (MA), 249 acres; residential/agricultural (RA-20), 300 acres; and floodway (FW), 78 acres.

The majority of acreage designated for commercial purposes (CS, CH, CDF) is located along Memorial Drive and along short strips of Fifth Street near the Pitt County Office Building and Stantonsburg Road near Doctors' Park.

Attitudes expressed by Pitt County legislators relative to a caucus proposal suggested by the Eastern North Carolina Chamber of Commerce is one of caution, a desire to further consider the proposal before taking a stand one way or the other.

In January, at a meeting held in Raleigh to which legislators were invited, the concept of forming a caucus of 43 eastern North Carolina counties that would involve the support of legislators from the eastern area of the state was put forth by members of the Eastern North Carolina Chamber of Commerce.

State Rep. Ed Warren said today that "I'm basically in support of the concept, of working with the chambers of commerce, but an effort to work within this large an area, with the number of representatives and legislators involved, is too large. It can't, I believe, work in an orderly manner."

While Laupus said he had no concrete figures on how large a buffer area around the hospital and medical school would be needed to handle traffic and growth concerns of the medical complex, he did say "there's never enough."

Asked what plans the medical school has for growth in the next 20-25 years, he said in light of ECU's and PCMH's growing role as a regional medical facility, it is "unlikely it (the growth) will ever stop. If it does, it will only be for a short period." Laupus added the medical school is expected to outgrow the Brody Building, completed in mid-

Pitt Legislators Cool To Caucus

By JERRY RAYNOR

Warren, as well as other Pitt legislators, emphasized that the suggestion is not the work of the Pitt-Greenville Chamber of Commerce, "which is already working effectively within the framework of an area organization."

Another fact that Warren emphasized is that some implication has been made about the advantages the western area of the state has in regional issues through the influence of Rep. Liston Ramsey, speaker of the state House.

"The suggestion is off-base, misleading," Warren commented. "Liston has been very supportive of all state needs, not just his area. In his five years as speaker, he has consistently tried to be fair to needs in all the state, including being a supporter of the East Carolina University School of Medicine."

State Sen. Tom Toft said that "I share Representative Warren's and Senator Harrington's (J.J. 'Monk' Harrington, D-Lewiston) view that the suggestion could very well be too large a group to be effective. I also worry that if an eastern caucus is formed, then you would see the formation of a Piedmont caucus and a western one, with no net increase in influence for any of the groups."

"I'm also not certain if it wouldn't be better to let a natural coalition take place among legislative groups rather than trying to force such a large group to organize," Taft added.

"Naturally, I'm for anything that would strengthen our area of influence in the Legislature, but it's too early for me to have formed a definite opinion about the merits of a caucus at this time."

Sen. Bob Martin, like Taft a new legislator, said "the chamber people, not anyone from the Greenville Chamber of Commerce, invited us to a meeting the other night."

"They had no specific plans to offer, but talked helter-skelter," Martin remarked. "We suggested they appoint a committee to decide what the goals and objectives of an Eastern North Carolina caucus would be. They came to us with no plan, no organization, disoriented."

"Because of this," Martin said, "I'm not in a position to say whether it's a good idea, if it has any merit, or whether it might override or duplicate efforts now being made by various chambers of commerce."

Representatives of the chambers of commerce initiating the concept of a caucus could not be reached this morning for comment.

Gross National Product (1st Revision)

Real GNP Increased By $1.7 Trillion

4.9%

4th Quarter

Fourth-Quarter Economy Grows At 4.9 Percent

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's economy rebounded in the final three months of last year at an even more vigorous pace than previously thought, the government reported today.

The Commerce Department said the gross national product, the broadest measure of economic health, grew at a robust 4.9 percent rate from October through December.

The revised figure is more than 2 percentage points above the initial estimate of 2.8 percent made in December before the quarter had ended.

That initial projection was revised upward last month to 3.9 percent and boosted again today based on more complete data for economic activity in the period.

Economic growth for all of 1984 was also revised upward today to 6.9 percent from the earlier estimate of 6.8 percent. The revision still left 1984 with the best economic growth in more than three decades — since an 8.3 percent rise in 1951.

The latest report showed that despite the rapid growth, inflation remained well under control during the year. Prices, as measured by a gauge tied to the GNP, rose 3.8 percent in 1984, the same increase as the previous year. The 3.8 percent gain was slightly higher than an original estimate last month of 3.7 percent, which would have been the best performance since 1967.

The new report painted a picture of an economy vigorously shaking off the effects of a pronounced drop in growth that occurred from July through September.

During that time, the inflation-adjusted GNP, had risen at a rate of only 1.6 percent as consumer spending, a leading force behind the recovery, slowed dramatically.

Personal consumer spending grew at a slight 0.7 percent rate in the third quarter. However, in the final three months of the year that pace had jumped to 3.6 percent.

The big rebound in activity during the final three months of 1984 has led

Antique Dolls Fetch Dear Prices At A Collectors' Fair

By MARK HEINRICH
Associated Press Writer
FRANKFURT, West Germany (AP) — Gabriele Joos will go as far as sifting through German flea markets to find suitable garb for her old dolls. But after dressing up their weatherbeaten bodies, she'll sell them for the price of a small color television set.

Her product, the porcelain and wooden playthings of children in Imperial Germany around the turn of the century, recently sold for as much as $317 each apiece at a collectors' exhibition in Frankfurt's old opera house.

Hundreds of doll buffs — from elderly men to nattily-dressed teen-age girls — crammed into a small room to view one of the approximately 15 exhibitions held yearly in West Germany, where handmade dolls have a venerable tradition.

From 1900-30, the Germans had the leading doll industry, sending them all over the world, according to Wilfried Beuth, a collector and trader with 250 dolls populating his Kassel home. The vast majority of porcelain dolls were made in Germany and France, he said.

While the French clothed their dolls in the French fashions of the day, Beuth said, the Germans garbed many dolls in costumes native to a region of the country, such as Bavaria.

Since antique porcelain dolls are "as breakable as teacups," finding specimens in good condition is increasingly difficult, said Mrs. Joos, who repairs and outfits dolls as a hobby in her Mannheim home.

Nevertheless, collectors capitalize on the dolls' fragility. Beuth was selling doll legs at the exhibition for $13 a pair, and a body of a doll with legs but no arms for $29. Doll dresses ran from $25 to $48.

Prices usually hinge on how many dolls of a kind were made. Beuth said a doll sold in England three years ago for $42,725 because only three of that model had been manufactured.

The high prices tend to limit the market, said Mrs. Joos, who started stocking every room in her house with dolls after she and her two young daughters were "fascinated" by an exhibition they visited 15 years ago.

But Mathias Wanke, director of the West German branch of the Global Doll Society, a collectors' group formed two years ago, said doll buffs are "socially very differentiated. There are collectors with very little money. They just devote all their disposable income to dolls."

Wanke, in a telephone interview from his home in Limburg, which has a doll museum, said there are about 10,000 antique doll collectors in West Germany who yearly spend about $1 million on their hobby.

Some antique dolls gained collectors-item status from their notoriety.

Around the turn of the century, the German firm Kaemmer and Reinhard made the porcelain "Kaiserbaby," named after the German ruler, Kaiser Wilhelm II, according to Claus Haehnel, a Karlsruhe doll trader who was showing his wares Sunday.

"The baby looked like Wilhelm as a child," he said. "But he was an old-looking baby; he had too many wrinkles. Wilhelm didn't like the doll and it was immediately forbidden."

A few hundred Kaiserbabys probably survive today and they sell for about $952 each, said Haehnel.

Skillful reproductions are often passed off as genuine antiques, and practiced buffs usually can tell the difference by removing the hair and checking the head construction — usually wood or porcelain, Mrs. Joos said.

She lifted the hair off several of her specimens, some dating from 1890, to show a visitor the real thing.

Cooking Is Fun

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
Associated Press Food Editor
To give substance to a meal, corn bread is often a perfect choice. Served with a hearty soup, a "vegetable plate" or simply prepared fish, it is really satisfying.

During most of America's culinary history, corn bread was made from a plain batter — cornmeal only or cornmeal plus white flour, leavening, eggs, milk or buttermilk. In the North, sugar was usually added. In the South, until recently, no sugar was allowed.

For some years now, corn bread has taken on new ways. Southwestern and West Coast cooking have made inroads. A recipe for corn bread that has become a favorite all over the country calls for cheese, chilies and corn.

DOUBLE CORN BREAD
1 cup all-purpose flour
1 cup enriched yellow cornmeal
4 teaspoons baking powder
1/2 teaspoon salt
2 tablespoons sugar, if desired
6 ounces sharp cheddar cheese, shredded medium-fine
8 1/2-ounce can cream-style corn
4-ounce can chopped green chilies, drained
1-3rd cup milk
1/4 cup vegetable oil
2 large eggs
In a medium bowl stir together flour, cornmeal, baking powder, salt and sugar. Stir in cheese, corn, chilies, milk and oil. In a small bowl beat eggs until yolks and whites are combined; add to cornmeal mixture and stir only until blended. Turn into an oiled 9-inch square baking pan and bake in a preheated 400-degree oven until golden brown — 30 to 35 minutes. Cut in squares and serve hot. Makes 9 servings.

Knit In Session Starts On Monday

Dear Abby

Helping Neighbors Move Doesn't Help Marriage

DEAR ABBY: I need an objective opinion. When we saw that new neighbors were moving in in a rental truck, my husband and I went over to help. Twice I mentioned that my husband had a bad back. After we helped move all their possessions except for a grand piano, we invited them over for a drink, and I made several suggestions for obtaining help to move the piano out of the truck and into their house.

Later I prepared some homemade soup, and delivered it with napkins, spoons, bowls and crackers.

The next day, the man came over and asked my husband to help him move the piano. Despite my objections, the two of them moved the piano down a ramp, up four steps and into the house.

The temperature was 6 degrees and the wind-chill factor was 20 below. This neighbor is about 35 and a professional body-builder. My husband is 56, 20 pounds overweight, out of shape, and has a bad back and high blood pressure. He was once hospitalized for chest pains and a suspected heart attack.

Now my husband isn't speaking to me because I "embarrassed" him when I demanded that he stop lifting that piano and come home. (He ignored my pleas.)

Was I justified in ordering my husband to come home? And while you're at it, Abby, please print what can happen to middle-aged, out-of-shape men who undertake strenuous tasks in cold weather. Thank you.

TRYING TO AVOID WIDOWHOOD

DEAR TRYING: You were justified in asking your husband to come home, but you should have done so privately, instead of "ordering" him to do so in front of the neighbors.

And what can happen to out-of-shape, middle-aged men who undertake strenuous tasks in cold weather is well-documented every winter in the obituaries.

DEAR ABBY: I had a baby recently with natural childbirth. I went through several hours of hard labor with hardly a whimper or a frown on my face. My husband was with me in the delivery room the whole time. I was really proud of myself.

Needless to say, I was baffled when my husband told my visitors that I cussed and called him names "for what he did to me." I was so hurt when he made those smart-mouthed remarks about the delivery, instead of calling it "the greatest experience a father could ever witness"—like so many other fathers do.

When I confronted him about it afterward, he said he was just kidding, but to this day he still laughs and repeats that terrible lie when someone asks if he was in the delivery room.

Why should he do this? Your answer in the newspaper would be appreciated.

HURT

DEAR HURT: Because he's an insensitive clod with a warped sense of humor and little respect for your feelings.

At Wits End

By Erma Bombeck

Just when parents thought it was safe to turn on television again, along came MTV.

I don't know about you, but if I never again see Prince look out at me like a beached porpoise with absolutely no will to live and mumble, "Purple Rain," it will be too soon for me.

It's a phenomenon I don't pretend to understand.

The same kid who dissolves into a tantrum when "Hill Street Blues" shows a rerun watches a Michael Jackson cassette so many times he can predict the exact moment his ears grow fur.

The same kid who kept a cockroach as a pet because he couldn't bear to kill it watches six hours of graves being dug, someone swinging from a guillotine, cars exploding and a child eating an ice cream cone in an electric chair.

The other day I was intrigued by the picture and the sound and said, "What is that called?"

"That's called Cyndi Lauper."

"What happened to her hair? It looks like she slept on the same side so long she went bald."

"She has it cut that way."

"Is this a telethon to help her?"

"Mom! It's her cassette. She's great."

"Greater than Marge Fexter's niece who was visiting whom we wanted you to take to a movie?"

"I told you, I don't go out with anyone with a button-down oxford cloth blouse. That's gross."

It's just a theory, but maybe parents are not supposed to understand what MTV is all about. It seems every time kids get a unique way of communicating, we break the code. Every time they embrace a new idea or trend, we crack the barrier and invade their space. It's possible they don't understand the mystique themselves, but it belongs to them and them alone. Maybe it's the only way they can rebel.

As I settled down in front of the TV the other night, I said, "Okay, one more song and then I get control of the set."

Out of the corner of my eye, I saw a singer who turned into a bumblebee and flew in pursuit of a girl. He appeared in her bath disguised as a piece of soap. He appeared in her hairbrush and in her medicine chest.

He appeared as a bug crawling under the blanket. He scaled the Empire State Building and from time to time his head left his body.

When it was over my son turned to me and said, "Now that's life. That's real!"

Forget what I said about that dumb theory that kids need their own space. The kid is just plain weird!

Pain Goes On

Year by year the impression grows that Americans remain hostage to the Indochina war. The fate of roughly 2,500 American servicemen is still unknown. They are referred to as the MIAs ... or the Missing in Action.

Rumors and whispers of rumors abound that some survive as emaciated prisoners, kept far from public view in Vietnam. The rumors are always unverifiable and always discounted by those who should know; yet, they re-emerge again and again. Each time the old wounds awoken to pain.

Periodically an American "mission" to Vietnam inquiring about the ongoing search for MIAs is notified a few more bodies of American dead have been found and will be returned. The homecoming is marked by sombre grief ... a fighting back of tears and thoughts of the unfound.

A few more droplets of pain result, memories and hurts are never allowed to completely heal.

Sometimes we are tempted to think it is contrived. Reason tells us otherwise.

The jungles, waterways and hidden valleys of Indochina could hide the fates of many thousands of warriors and the outside world would never know. Two thousand more — or less — hardly matters; except to those they left behind.

Iwo Recalled

It is not much as real estate goes, that little island of Iwo Jima which both American and Japanese veterans visited on Feb. 19.

Forty years ago, however, it was the beginning and the end for thousands of 4th and 5th Marine Division personnel. They were backed by the 3rd Division in the storming of the island in an attempt by American forces to gain a foothold to Japan during World War II. The invasion was successful but the cost in human lives was awesome.

Marines died as they hit the beaches and they fought for the territory foot-by-foot. Eventually the high ground was captured and the flag-raising photo was taken which resulted in the statue at Quantico, Va.

The survivors remember the invasion as a time of horror. Some recall it everyday. Some didn't want to return to that place which scarred them for life. Those we have seen quoted, however, seemed unanimous in one decision. They would do it again in defense of this country's freedom.

Today's generation, thankfully, has no Iwo Jima to storm. However, the defense of freedom must go on. We can erect no greater memorial to those who died at Iwo Jima than a continued vigilance against efforts to erode the unique freedoms we all enjoy.

U.S.-Soviet Compromise Likely

WASHINGTON (AP) — If both sides are to be believed, there is no chance that a comprehensive arms control agreement will emerge from the talks Moscow and Washington are to hold in Geneva beginning March 12.

On one hand, President Reagan insists his "Star Wars" defense initiative is not a bargaining chip and that he will proceed with the program no matter what happens at Geneva.

On the other, Moscow insists there can be no agreement at Geneva if curbs on Star Wars aren't part of it.

Given those intractable positions, why bother to go to Geneva at all? The answer: The positions aren't really so intractable, and compromise is likely by both sides when the tough bargaining begins in Geneva.

We are now seeing the pre-Geneva bargaining. The Reagan administration's positions changed several times in the most recent round of arms talks, which Moscow broke off in 1983. They will change again.

Does anyone really believe Moscow would agree to deep cuts in its offensive nuclear missiles at the same time Washington says it is developing a fool-proof defensive system?

It is more reasonable to expect the Soviets to increase their offensive capability, both in numbers and sophistication, to enable them to break through whatever defense the United States erects.

While it's one thing for the Reagan administration to say it is developing a perfect defensive system, it's quite another to expect Moscow to believe it. And lately Reagan has been back-tracking slightly from his earlier claim the system could be 100 percent effective.

"I want a defense that simply says that if somebody starts pushing the WASHINGTON — A full house turned out a few days ago for hearings conducted by Sen. Paula Hawkins of Florida. She posed an issue that provides an almost classic confrontation between political philosophies: Should Congress pass a law prohibiting wine and beer commercials on TV?

The crowd seemed to be about evenly divided. Spokesmen appeared for the U.S. Brewers Association and the Wine Institute, very much opposed to the proposition. The senator also heard from a gentleman representing Project SMART (Stop Marketing Alcohol on Radio and Television), who was very much in favor of the idea. Jim Miller, chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, came around to say that he doubted a ban would curb the abuse of alcohol, but if Congress wanted to prohibit these commercials, Congress itself would have to take action; the FTC wouldn't act on its own.

There was no disagreement among the witnesses on a few elementary points: They were all against alcoholism, drunk driving, and the consumption of wine and beer by children. The several spokesmen disagreed sharply on just about everything else.

Michael F. Jacobson, for SMART, spoke for the point of view that believes in pervasive regulation by government. He supported a flat prohibition of the offending commercials; as an unsatisfactory alternative, he proposed that radio and TV stations be compelled to broadcast an equal number of public service messages describing the evils of alcohol. In addition, he called for a massive educational campaign, for compulsory product labeling, for warning notices on beer and wine containers, for mandatory seat-belt laws, and for increased excise taxes to discourage consumption.

Donald B. Shea, president of the brewers' association, compared Jacobson's cohorts to turn-of-the-century Prohibitionists, unable to distinguish between the use and the abuse of alcohol. He denied that the commercials have pushed beer consumption to record levels. On the contrary, despite record outlays for advertising, beer sales have stayed level for the past three years. In this stable market, individual brewers advertise chiefly to increase their share of the market. A 1 percent change can make a difference of $380 million a year.

John A. DeLuca, for the Wine Institute, made an impressive presentation of the vintner's voluntary advertising code. He saw no justification in banning wine advertising on the air. If the wine industry's positive record is ignored, such industries as the auto, sugar and salt industries will be dissuaded from responsible self-restraint. Why not ban commercials for automobiles? Driven recklessly, he said, they too are dangerous to society.

The witnesses never got to questions of political philosophy. The key questions have to do with individual responsibility as opposed to public responsibility. At bottom of the issue is the old issue of freedom on the one hand and compulsion on the other. What is the proper role of the federal government in a free society?

More than 15 years have passed since Congress by statute prohibited the advertising of cigarettes on radio and TV. It was a bad law for this reason: Cigarettes are a legal product, and the manufacture of any legal product ought to have a right of access to the media to advertise their wares. The ban probably has contributed to a decline in cigarette consumption; higher cigarette taxes and a vigorous campaign to publicize the risk of cancer may have done as much. In any event, the bad law has worked toward a good end.

But is that enough? To the extent that we make Congress the one great nanny of us all, we are bound to surrender important virtues. The freedom to choose is vital to a free society. It is what a free society is all about. We must be free to drink or not to drink, and the wine and beer commercials are part of that freedom. Government's obligation is to curb the abuse of lawful products. Banning these commercials would do nothing of the sort.

Offended Parties Squeal

WASHINGTON (UPI) — On Monday it was the military retirees. On Tuesday, students and farmers. Even the honey producers got their licks in.

With Congress in recess and budget hearings temporarily suspended, groups that saw their benefits threatened by President Reagan's program-slashing budget, or alternative proposals, picked last week, a slow news time in Washington, to fight back.

For Budget Director David Stockman, it must have felt like being a puppeteer. He pulled all the strings in the first round budget hearings early this month — calling the generous military retirement program (which even Reagan's budget does not touch) a "scandal"; saying the country has to make a choice about supporting middle income students or poor students and labeling farm price supports a taxpayer bailout of loans entered into by "consenting adults."

The offended parties jumped. And they squealed.

The first rule of calling a press conference in Washington is do it when no one else does, thus assuring the widest coverage. The military retirees jumped right out on the Monday morning of the congressional recess to claim that the retirement benefits are second only to patriotism in drawing recruits.

The United States Student Association scheduled their retaliatory session on Tuesday. They insisted that Reagan's proposed cuts in student loans would "spell disaster" for students, parents and teachers and planned a heavy lobbying blitz to prevent it next month. They suggested the military budget, a big target at $313.7 billion, as a place to trim.

The farmers also chose Tuesday to make their point, though they did it far from Capitol Hill. About 5,000 of them rallied in Pierre, S.D., urging action to save the family farm at a time when Reagan is proposing to cut farm price supports.

All of the vociferous objections make it increasingly difficult to formulate a budget in Congress that attacks the federal deficit. Reagan's $973.7 billion fiscal 1986 budget is $180 billion in the red and cuts nearly every domestic program, but allows a hefty increase in military spending.

Senate Republicans, led by GOP leader Robert Dole, R-Kan., had hoped to put their own budget version together by Feb. 1, with a different mix of program cuts including allocating less money for the military. They missed the deadline, but still maintain they are working on an alternative.

Politically, the first few months of 1985 looked like the best time to cut the budget. It's still early in the cycle, with 1986 elections far away, giving elected officials time to recover from the bruises of hurting constituents hit by the cuts.

But the longer the congressional indecision lingers, the longer various groups have to attack the Reagan budget and any other proposals to cut programs, and the more difficult it becomes.

One Senate staffer working on the budget cutting reported seeing six representatives from the honey producers who were extremely upset at proposals to cut supports for their industry.

Public Forum

To the editor:

The roots of the word "homicide" mean 'to cut a person.' Lots of interests are complaining of budgeticide as our government tries to manage the deficit. But have you noticed how the meaning of "cut" shifts?

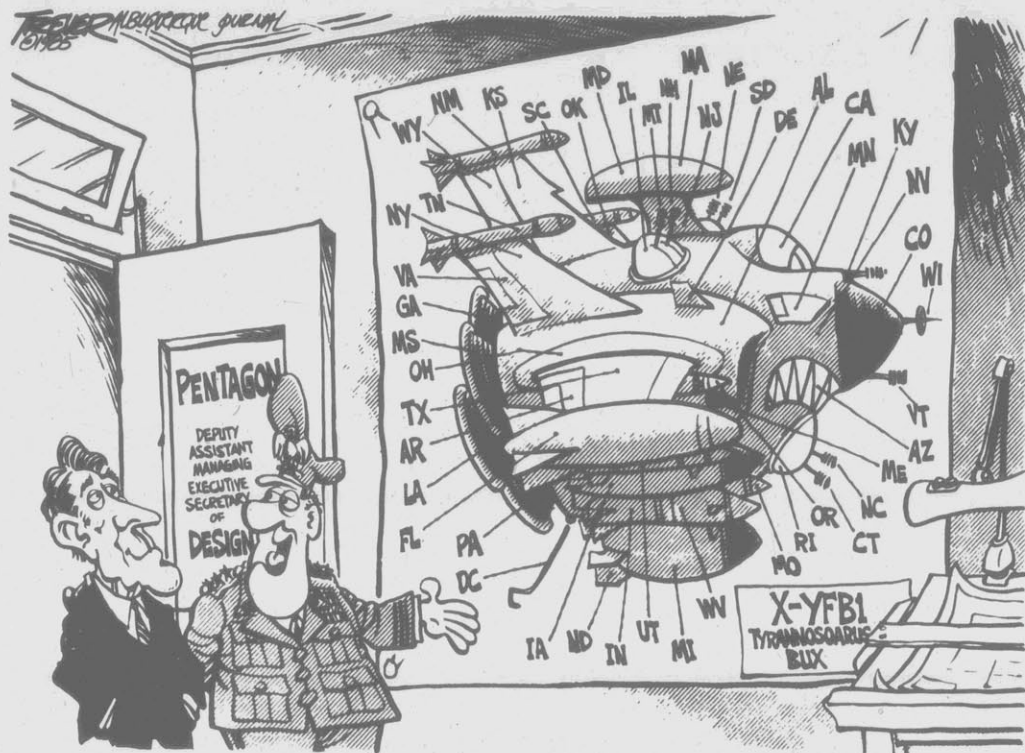

When they cut domestic programs, they mean business. When it's defense, what you read is NOT what you get. A Feb. 13 Reflector headline is typical: "Goldwater Backs $33 billion Defense Cut." Read the story carefully: you'll find he means a 4 percent INCREASE — after inflation — which means a 10 percent increase in dollars budgeted. This is a "cut" because Weinberger and Reagan asked 12.5 percent. That's for the Department of Defense, and thus doesn't count nuclear bombs (made by the Department of Energy) or the Coast Guard (Treasury) or the Veterans' Administration, which is a separate agency.

And when they do "cut" (increase less), what programs get cut? Left to make its own cuts, the military tends to chop money for services to the lower ranks and for ho-hum supplies and repairs, thus either weakening the system or paving the way for supplemental appropriations later in the year.

However, there are huge procurement expenses that can be eliminated, strengthening the economy at no cost to military defense. The most visible of these is the MX missile. It was designed originally because the fixed location of the Minuteman missiles made them too vulnerable. Now the MX is to be put into those same vulnerable silos!

We've heard too much distracting noise, crowing "Cut! Cut! Kadam Cut." Now let's have an honest budget freeze!

Strength For Today

Sometime ago a child sent his grandfather a comic postcard. It was a picture of a funny little animal, presumed in this case to be the grandchild, and above were the words, "I don't know what you see in me, but keep looking."

This is more — and better — than a laugh. It is a good philosophy of life. Sometimes we encounter people whom we are inclined to dislike at first sight. Even more often we encounter people who are drab and uninteresting. But if we do keep on looking, we frequently find qualities which amaze and please us.

So keep on looking! Frequently you will encounter some good quality far above anything you ever suspected the person of possessing. It may be hard to see anything attractive or good in that person — or in that idea or in that movement, but keep on looking and you may be pleasantly surprised.

Thatcher Emphasizes Her Support Of Arms Policy

WASHINGTON (AP) — Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, emphasizing her acceptance of President Reagan's arms control strategy, is playing down U.S.-British differences spawned by a strong dollar and a weak pound.

The British pound, along with other Western European currencies, has been driven to record lows against the strong American dollar. Mrs. Thatcher's Conservative Party has blamed America's $200 billion deficit for siphoning capital from around the world, weakening other currencies and driving up interest rates abroad.

Mrs. Thatcher, in separate private sessions planned today with Treasury Secretary James A. Baker III and Federal Reserve Board Chairman Paul A. Volcker, was to emphasize how the economic policies of one country affect another, according to a British Embassy spokesman.

In keeping with the positive, non-confrontational tone of her visit, the prime minister "does not have a shopping list of complaints," spokesman Alan Ingle said. "They are general discussions of bilateral economic issues."

Mrs. Thatcher also was to have a working breakfast with Baker and other administration officials, including Secretary of State George P. Shultz, Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige, Agriculture Secretary John R. Block and Special Trade Representative William Brock.

Later, she scheduled separate visits with Volcker and Transportation Secretary Elizabeth Dole.

The president and Mrs. Thatcher, after conferring privately in the Oval Office on Wednesday, lunched and talked for 2½ hours. Mrs. Thatcher said she and the president had "a thorough discussion" of economic problems.

Continuing her enthusiastic praise of Reagan's conservative policies, she said the record of the American economy and its success in creating new jobs is "envious." But she added the reminder that the size of the U.S. economy is such "that your decisions affect all of us."

An official familiar with the discussions who spoke on condition he not be identified quoted Mrs. Thatcher as saying that "while there are obvious concerns about the strength of the dollar, the biggest danger would be a rapid decline in the value of the dollar."

In her address Wednesday to a joint session of Congress — the first by a British prime minister since Winston Churchill in 1952 — she warned that the West should not "expect too much too soon" from the arms control talks with the Soviets.

"Let us be under no illusions: It is our strength and not their good will that has brought the Soviet Union to the negotiating table in Geneva," she said.

Mrs. Thatcher also expressed support for efforts to cut the U.S. deficit.

"No other country in the world can be immune from its effects — such is the influence of the American economy on us all," she said.

She noted that the current strength of the dollar, which makes foreign goods less expensive in the United States, poses difficulties for U.S. export industries and creates pressure for international trade barriers that would harm free trade.

"I am certain that your administration is right to resist such pressures," she said. "To give in to them would betray the millions in the developing world, to say nothing of the strains on your other trading partners."

At a formal British Embassy dinner Wednesday evening marking the 200th anniversary of Anglo-America diplomatic ties, President Reagan praised Mrs. Thatcher for the "vigor, clarity and directness" of her views.

The two nations, he said, celebrate their anniversary while "bound together by innumerable ties of ancient history and present friendship."

In the area of international commerce, Reagan said the United States is determined to "knock down barriers to trade and foreign investment, and to the free movement of capital."

Soviets Brush Off NATO Claim

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet press today dismissed as "absurd" NATO's insistence on counting British and French nuclear missiles as independent forces, and accused the White House of pressuring its allies into supporting its space weapons program.

In a commentary made public today, the Kremlin's chief spokesman accused the Reagan administration of seeking military superiority in space. On Wednesday, Mikhail S. Gorbachev, widely believed to be the Kremlin's No. 2 man, accused the United States of entering the new U.S.-Soviet arms talks without "an honest striving" for success.

The press commentary came after British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher told a joint session of Congress in Washington that she supports the so-called "Star Wars" program, expected to be a key issue at the arms talks in Geneva.

The talks, to begin March 12, also will consider long- and medium-range nuclear missiles. Those were subjects of negotiations broken off by the Soviet Union in November 1983 after the North Atlantic Treaty Organization reaffirmed its commitment to deploying U.S. Pershing 2 and cruise missiles in Western Europe.

A primary stumbling block at the old medium-range arms control talks was the U.S.-Soviet dispute over how to handle the nuclear missiles deployed by Britain and France.

The NATO allies insisted they are independent of the allied command and therefore could not be included in the talks. But the Soviets demanded they be counted, and the newspaper Sovetskaya Rossiya made it clear today that that position still holds.

"NATO is forming in the old world a kind of 'eurostrategic triad' consisting of American ground-based Pershing 2 and cruise missiles and also British and French sea-based nuclear forces," it said.

It's Official: White House Muzzles Stockman

By MICHAEL PUTZEL
AP White House Correspondent
WASHINGTON (AP) — White House officials say Budget Director David Stockman has been told to tone down his public statements or stop talking about such sensitive issues as military pensions and financially ailing farmers.

One senior administration official said Wednesday that White House chief of staff Donald T. Regan informed Stockman of his displeasure about the budget director's recent testimony before a Senate committee and about comments Stockman made to reporters.

According to the official, Regan told Stockman "that many of these statements could be left unsaid or better expressed."

The official, speaking on condition he not be identified, would not say Stockman was disciplined but made it clear the new White House staff chief gave the budget director a dressing down.

Regan, a former Marine Corps officer and Wall Street chief executive, has a reputation as a tough task master with a ready wit — and a ready temper.

But the official denied Regan had threatened the often brash young budget director with dismissal, although he indicated Stockman's behavior is being watched.

DAVID STOCKMAN

Asked what would happen to Stockman as a result of his recent unauthorized testimony, the official said, "As of the moment right now, nothing. He will continue to fight the battle of the budget."

Asked if Stockman would soon be leaving, the source replied, "I'd have to refer you to Dave on that one. ... We'll just see how things fly, play it by ear."

"Now, he was very good up on the Hill yesterday," the official said, referring to Stockman's testimony before the Senate Budget Committee.

Asked if that indicated the budget director was on some sort of probation, the official said, "No. ... That would lead to the interpretation that these were outbursts and not continuing practice."

Stockman, 38, has not set any date for his departure from the administration, but there has been recurring speculation that he would not remain through President Reagan's second term. Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige is said to be a candidate for head of the White House Office of Management and Budget should Stockman leave.

Two weeks ago, when he went to Capitol Hill to defend Reagan's fiscal 1986 budget, Stockman veered from the party line to suggest that the government shouldn't bail out the nation's financially strapped farmers. He also charged that the military brass is more concerned about its pension security than national security.

Just as the furor over those remarks was beginning to die down, Stockman reiterated his opposition to emergency credit aid for farmers — prompting one White House aide to suggest the budget director was trying to get himself fired.

"I can't imagine what else he could do, short of calling the first lady names," the aide said in amazement.

But another senior official observed that the budget director has made himself almost indispensable as the one administration official with an almost flawless command of the gargantuan federal budget.

"He carries numbers around in his head that it takes the rest of us a week to find in the (budget) book," the official said.

Criticism of Stockman continued unabated Wednesday, including harsh words from a veterans group spokesman who noted the budget director did not serve in the military during the Vietnam War.

Stockman Enters Hospital

WASHINGTON (AP) — Budget Director David Stockman was hospitalized early today after entering a Georgetown University Hospital emergency room while complaining of feeling faint, a hospital official said.

Stockman, 38, was listed in stable condition at the hospital, where he had been accompanied by his wife, hospital spokeswoman Claudia Dominitz said.

"Mr. Stockman came in at 1 a.m. and he was complaining of feeling faint," Ms. Dominitz said. "He was admitted to the hospital and is in stable condition."

She would not reveal the extent of Stockman's problem pending further discussion with his doctor and family.

Ms. Dominitz said the Stockmans told a nurse at the hospital that they had been attending a dinner party earlier.

Stockman has been the focus of considerable controversy recently because of public remarks about military pensions and aid to farmers.

Two weeks ago, in Congressional testimony on President Reagan's fiscal 1986 budget, Stockman suggested that the government shouldn't bail out the nation's financially strapped farmers.

He also charged that the military brass is more concerned about its pension security than national security.

His comments generated a storm of criticism inside and outside the government.

Stockman, who is head of the White House Office of Management and Budget, has not set any date for his departure from the administration, but there has been recurring speculation that he would not remain through President Reagan's second term.

Reagan To Hold News Conference Tonight

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan is expected to face questions about his plans for simplifying the income tax system and his proposals for massive domestic spending reductions when he holds the first news conference of his second term this evening.

The president's 28th formal question-and-answer session with reporters will be broadcast live by the major television and radio networks at 8 p.m. EST.

The session, expected to last about 30 minutes, will take place in the East Room of the White House.

Reagan's last news conference was on Jan. 9, when he reported on the successful conclusion of two days of U.S.-Soviet talks in Geneva that led to the two superpowers' agreement to begin a new round of arms control talks next month.

Since then, Reagan has proposed a fiscal 1986 budget calling for sweeping cuts in federal spending for nearly everything but defense, elimination of some programs, including the national passenger railroad Amtrak, and new limits on spending for federal health and education programs.

Two weeks ago, in his State of the Union address, Reagan outlined a plan for a new income tax program that would eliminate many of the present tax brackets, and most deductions, exemptions and credits, as well, to ensure that all but the very poor bear a share of the federal tax burden.

At the same time, however, he left open for negotiation many of the controversial areas of tax revision, such as how to deal with charitable contributions and capital gains and what corporations can write off for depreciation.

And he called for new tax breaks for some special interests, such as parents who send their children to private or parochial schools and businesses that build in depressed areas.

Reagan said he wants action on taxes this year, and administration officials have said he will send a more detailed plan to Congress next month.

However, one senior White House official said Wednesday the administration proposal might not be ready in March, and he acknowledged that many questions remain to be answered.

"We have to explain it more in detail to the president," the official said of the sweeping tax overhaul unveiled late last year by then-Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan. The official spoke on condition he not be identified by name.

Reagan has since swapped jobs with former White House Chief of Staff James A. Baker III, who now is in charge of getting a tax bill through Congress.

Reagan's budget director, David Stockman, also has touched off some controversies the president could face questions about tonight.

Sky Brings White Powder To Earth

SAN BERNARDINO, Calif. (AP) — A sticky white powder that fell in an 8,000-square-mile area of Southern California and swirled more than a mile into the air left car finishes pitted, cut pilots' visibility and left authorities baffled.

"I forecast for a living, (but) it's hard to forecast when you don't know what it is," said Staff Sgt. Raymond Moore at Norton Air Force Base, adding that the substance had no chemical taste. "What are you supposed to say, 'Isolated white showers'?"

The gritty stuff was fine dust and mineral deposits from the desert, swirled high into the atmosphere by strong winds, said the National Weather Service in Los Angeles. Northerly winds blew the substance south, where it mixed with clouds and rained down Wednesday as a milky mud.

But South Coast Air Quality Management District deputy director Jim Birakos said the substance left pits in car paint and he could not rule out an industrial source.

"It just looks dirty and mucky," said Randall Clement, warning controller for the state office of emergency services in Sacramento.

San Bernardino County environmental health services officials determined the substance was not hazardous, although they were unsure exactly what it was, Clement said. Birakos, however, said it was too soon to know if the substance was hazardous.

The perplexing powder — described as dusty, grimy, muddy and flaky — coated eyeglasses and cars as it fell intermittently throughout the afternoon.

Authorities were flooded with calls from people in San Bernardino, Riverside and northern San Diego counties, the areas affected by the downfall, all wanting to know what the substance was.

The air quality agency received more than 50 telephone calls by 5:30 p.m. Wednesday, mostly from citizens complaining that the goo left marks on their cars when they wiped it off, Birakos said. "As it wipes away (from vehicles), it leaves a little hole there (in the paint). We believe it has to be some industrial source."

Farm State Senators Using Old Tradition To Stall New Session

By TOM RAUM
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Even though Sen. Robert Dole is encountering his first filibuster as majority leader, the practice of blocking or delaying action on a bill through extended talk is an old Senate tradition.

And while current-day filibusters rarely take on the non-stop character of the around-the-clock civil rights talkathons of the 1950s and 1960s, the tactic has been used increasingly in recent years.

The first Senate filibuster of 1985 began this week as a group of farm state senators marshaled delaying tactics against the nomination of Edwin Meese III to be attorney general in hopes of getting consideration for farm aid legislation.

Dole, a Kansas Republican, accused the filibustering senators of blackmail and hinted he might force the Senate to meet continuously to break the delaying tactics.

It is because of the very nature of Senate rules — which tend to favor unlimited debate — that filibusters are difficult to break.

Dole will have to either wear out the talkers — and probably in the process wear out the rest of the Senate — or go through the so-called “cloture” process, which can tie up the Senate for several additional days and which requires votes by 60 of the Senate’s 100 members to break the filibuster.

Filibusters are frequent in the Senate, but almost never happen in the House of Representatives, which has strict rules on the length of time each bill may be debated.

In the Senate, any senator can speak for as long as he likes on any bill or any subject at all — unless there is a unanimous agreement to restrict debate or a cloture petition is invoked.

And, even with cloture, debate can still continue for an additional 100 hours.

That allows a small group of senators — or even a single member — to do considerable damage by just blabbing interminably.

The longest non-stop speech of this decade was in 1981, when Sen. William O. Proxmire, D-Wis., talked for 16 hours and 37 minutes in an outburst against raising the federal debt ceiling.

Filibuster Raises New Postponement For Road Funds

WASHINGTON (AP) — Long-delayed efforts to provide $7.25 billion to state governments for interstate highway construction have hit a new roadblock resulting from a filibuster by senators demanding emergency credit for farmers.

The delay arose Wednesday when farm-state lawmakers, seeking leverage to force action on an emergency credit measure, filibustered to block a vote to confirm Edwin Meese III as attorney general.

Even before the filibuster began, Senate Majority Leader Robert J. Dole, R-Kan., countered by serving notice that action on the highway funds would have to await a vote on the nomination of Meese, President Reagan’s counselor, as head of the Justice Department.

Following the Meese vote, however, Dole said, the Senate could make the job-generating $7.25 billion Interstate Cost Estimate its next order of business.

“They are holding up passage of a multibillion-dollar highway bill that means a lot of jobs,” Dole said. He estimated that the interstate program would create 150,000 to 200,000 jobs directly.

Under terms of 1982 highway legislation, Congress must act on the cost estimate before the money can be released from the Interstate Highway Trust Fund to begin this year’s roadbuilding efforts.

Partly because of a short construction season in the Snow Belt, state highway officials and road-builders say more than 500 projects with an estimated total price tag of $1.8 billion may have to be postponed unless Congress acts by April 1.

Senate staff members say failure to act could bring projects in as many as 45 states to a standstill.

“It is of great urgency,” Dole said.

House aides, however, speaking on condition that they not be identified, have been saying that well before April assorted disputes that already have delayed the measure for 18 months will have to be resolved or set aside because of enormous pressure from the states.

The House and Senate passed a stopgap version of the cost estimate last year after they failed to agree on conflicting measures. About half of the money was freed by the legislation.

Congress adjourned with the two houses still at odds over assorted “demonstration projects,” attached to the cost estimate by lawmakers seeking extra funds for their home states.

The House version contained 40 such projects and the Senate bill 13.

The House and Senate also failed to agree on release of mass transit funds from the Interstate Highway Trust and $2.2 billion for Boston’s Central Artery, a highway and tunnel to Logan International Airport.

That project is a favorite of House Speaker Thomas P. O’Neill Jr., D-Mass.

The measure now before the Senate is shorn of pet projects. It contains money for interstate highway construction already authorized and specified substitute projects in certain states that elect to use their share for such purposes as mass transit instead of roads.

The measure was approved Jan. 29 by the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee. The panel’s chairman, Sen. Robert T. Stafford, R-Vt., put the cost of the demonstration projects cut from the measure at $153.6 million.

Asylum Sought

TOKYO (AP) — An armed South Korean soldier crossed into North Korea Tuesday and asked for asylum, a broadcast by North Korea’s state-run radio said.

The Pyongyang Radio broadcast, monitored in Tokyo, identified the soldier as 21-year-old Ra Il-ryong, a private in the 21st Division of the South Korean army.

It said Ra crossed the border in the eastern military zone separating the two hostile Korean states.

However, the all-time record is held by Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., who spoke for 24 hours and 18 minutes in 1957 against a civil rights bill.

Oftentimes, filibusters are matters of mostly bluff — with one side or the other retreating after several days of maneuvering. And many times, even the threat of a filibuster, especially late in the session, can result in the withdrawal of legislation.

Former Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr., R-Tenn., finally gave up on his battle late last year to win a vote on a bill to allow television in the Senate, because each time it neared a vote, opponents hinted they would filibuster.

In a classic filibuster, senators not only talk and talk and talk — but they often read, sometimes from the Bible, sometimes from the Congressional Record, sometimes even from cookbooks.

A group of senators from rice-producing states waged a short filibuster last year to protest their unhappiness with the rice section of an agricultural bill by reading their favorite recipes for rice dishes.

And Sen. Bob Packwood, R-Ore., several years ago read long passages from a book on abortions in his filibuster against anti-abortion legislation.

On Wednesday, Sen. David Boren, D-Okla., one of the leaders of the stalling effort, observed this reading tradition by reading from a 385-page independent counsel’s report on Meese.

Before 1917, there was no way to cut off debate in the Senate short of wearing out those holding the floor. In that year, an earlier version of the current cloture process was instituted.

In the last session of Congress, there were literally dozens of filibusters — sometimes progressing simultaneously — although most involved procedural delays rather than marathon speechmaking.

In fact, in the last six weeks of the last Congress, the Senate voted seven times on cloture petitions. By contrast, from 1963 to 1965 — when the Senate was tied in knots for months in debates on civil rights and voting rights — only four cloture votes took place.

The Daily Reflector, Greenville, N.C. Thursday, February 21, 1985 7

The increasing use of filibusters has prompted Senate leaders of both parties to propose rules changes that would make it easier to choke off a filibuster through a variety of techniques.

However, if past history is any guide, one item almost guaranteed to generate a Senate filibuster is a proposal to change the filibuster rule.

China Airlines Pilot Says He's No Hero; Investigation Under Way

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The pilot who pulled a China Airlines jumbo jet out of a six-mile dive after all four engines failed said he handled "all procedures" properly, but federal investigators reportedly are looking into whether "human error" caused the dive.

Officials on Wednesday credited Ming Yuen Ho's cool-headed flying for averting a possible crash when the plane began its terrifying descent Tuesday morning 500 miles northwest of San Francisco.

Meanwhile, federal safety experts examined the battered Boeing 747 in an effort to determine what caused the plane with 272 people aboard to drop 32,000 feet in two minutes — recovering just 36 seconds before it would have crashed into the Pacific Ocean — while en route from Taipei, Taiwan, to Los Angeles.

Sources in Washington said they were considering the possibility that "human error in the cockpit" caused the dive, according to NBC News.

The plane made an emergency landing at San Francisco International Airport after flying 500 miles with a bent wing and a torn tail. Fifty passengers suffered mostly minor injuries, and one flight attendant remained hospitalized today in stable condition with a back injury.

Investigators from the National Transportation Safety Board plan to analyze the plane's flight data recorder in Washington, a process that could take some time, board spokesman Bob Buckhorn said Wednesday.

NBC reported Wednesday that sources in Washington said if the automatic pilot system had mistakenly been left on, it could have caused the plane to nose up and begin to stall after the plane hit some air turbulence.

Preliminary readings of the plane's flight data recorder indicate the pilot applied power as the plane stalled, and the sudden maneuver may have caused the first engine to quit, according to the network report.

With an engine out and stalling, the plane dipped sharply to the right and began falling, and the other three engines may have quit because the airflow through them was so irregular, NBC said.

Ho, 55, an airline pilot for 30 years, denied Wednesday that he had dropped the landing gear as the plane plummeted from the sky. Asked if pilot error was involved, he replied, "All procedures were correct."

Through an interpreter, he offered this account: The aircraft's No. 4 engine stopped for an unknown reason. Then the other engines stopped and the plane dropped as it hit a gust of turbulence.

"The five of us in the cockpit were trying everything to steady the plane," he said. "Miraculously, one engine started up. Then ... the other three (started)."

He said it was "wonderful" to be considered a hero, even though he didn't feel like one.

The recorder should provide such details as the plane's altitude, heading and gravitational forces it encountered during Tuesday's flight, Buckhorn said.

Those factors could help determine if wind shears — unpredictable and often violent cross-currents — played a role in the near-disaster, as some have speculated.

An NTSB team began its review Wednesday by inspecting the damaged aircraft and meeting with airline officials, including the pilot. The team planned to interview crew members today.

"We do have reports of an engine failure," Buckhorn said. "Precisely what engines failed, how they failed and, of course, why they failed, we don't know yet. They had a problem with one engine of the aircraft, and ... their other three engines ceased as they were descending."

As the plane's wheels were lowered, the 7-by-4 foot landing gear doors were ripped off, smashing the tail and tearing into the horizontal stabilizer wings. The lowered gear may have slowed the plane's descent, officials said.

"The pilot really had to do some manhandling to get that thing home," said San Francisco International Airport spokesman Ron Wilson. "He had to use real muscle" to overcome G-forces estimated at five times normal, he said.

The plane fell from 41,000 feet to 9,000 feet and was just 36 seconds from hitting the water when it leveled out, Wilson said.

Team To Inspect Remains In China

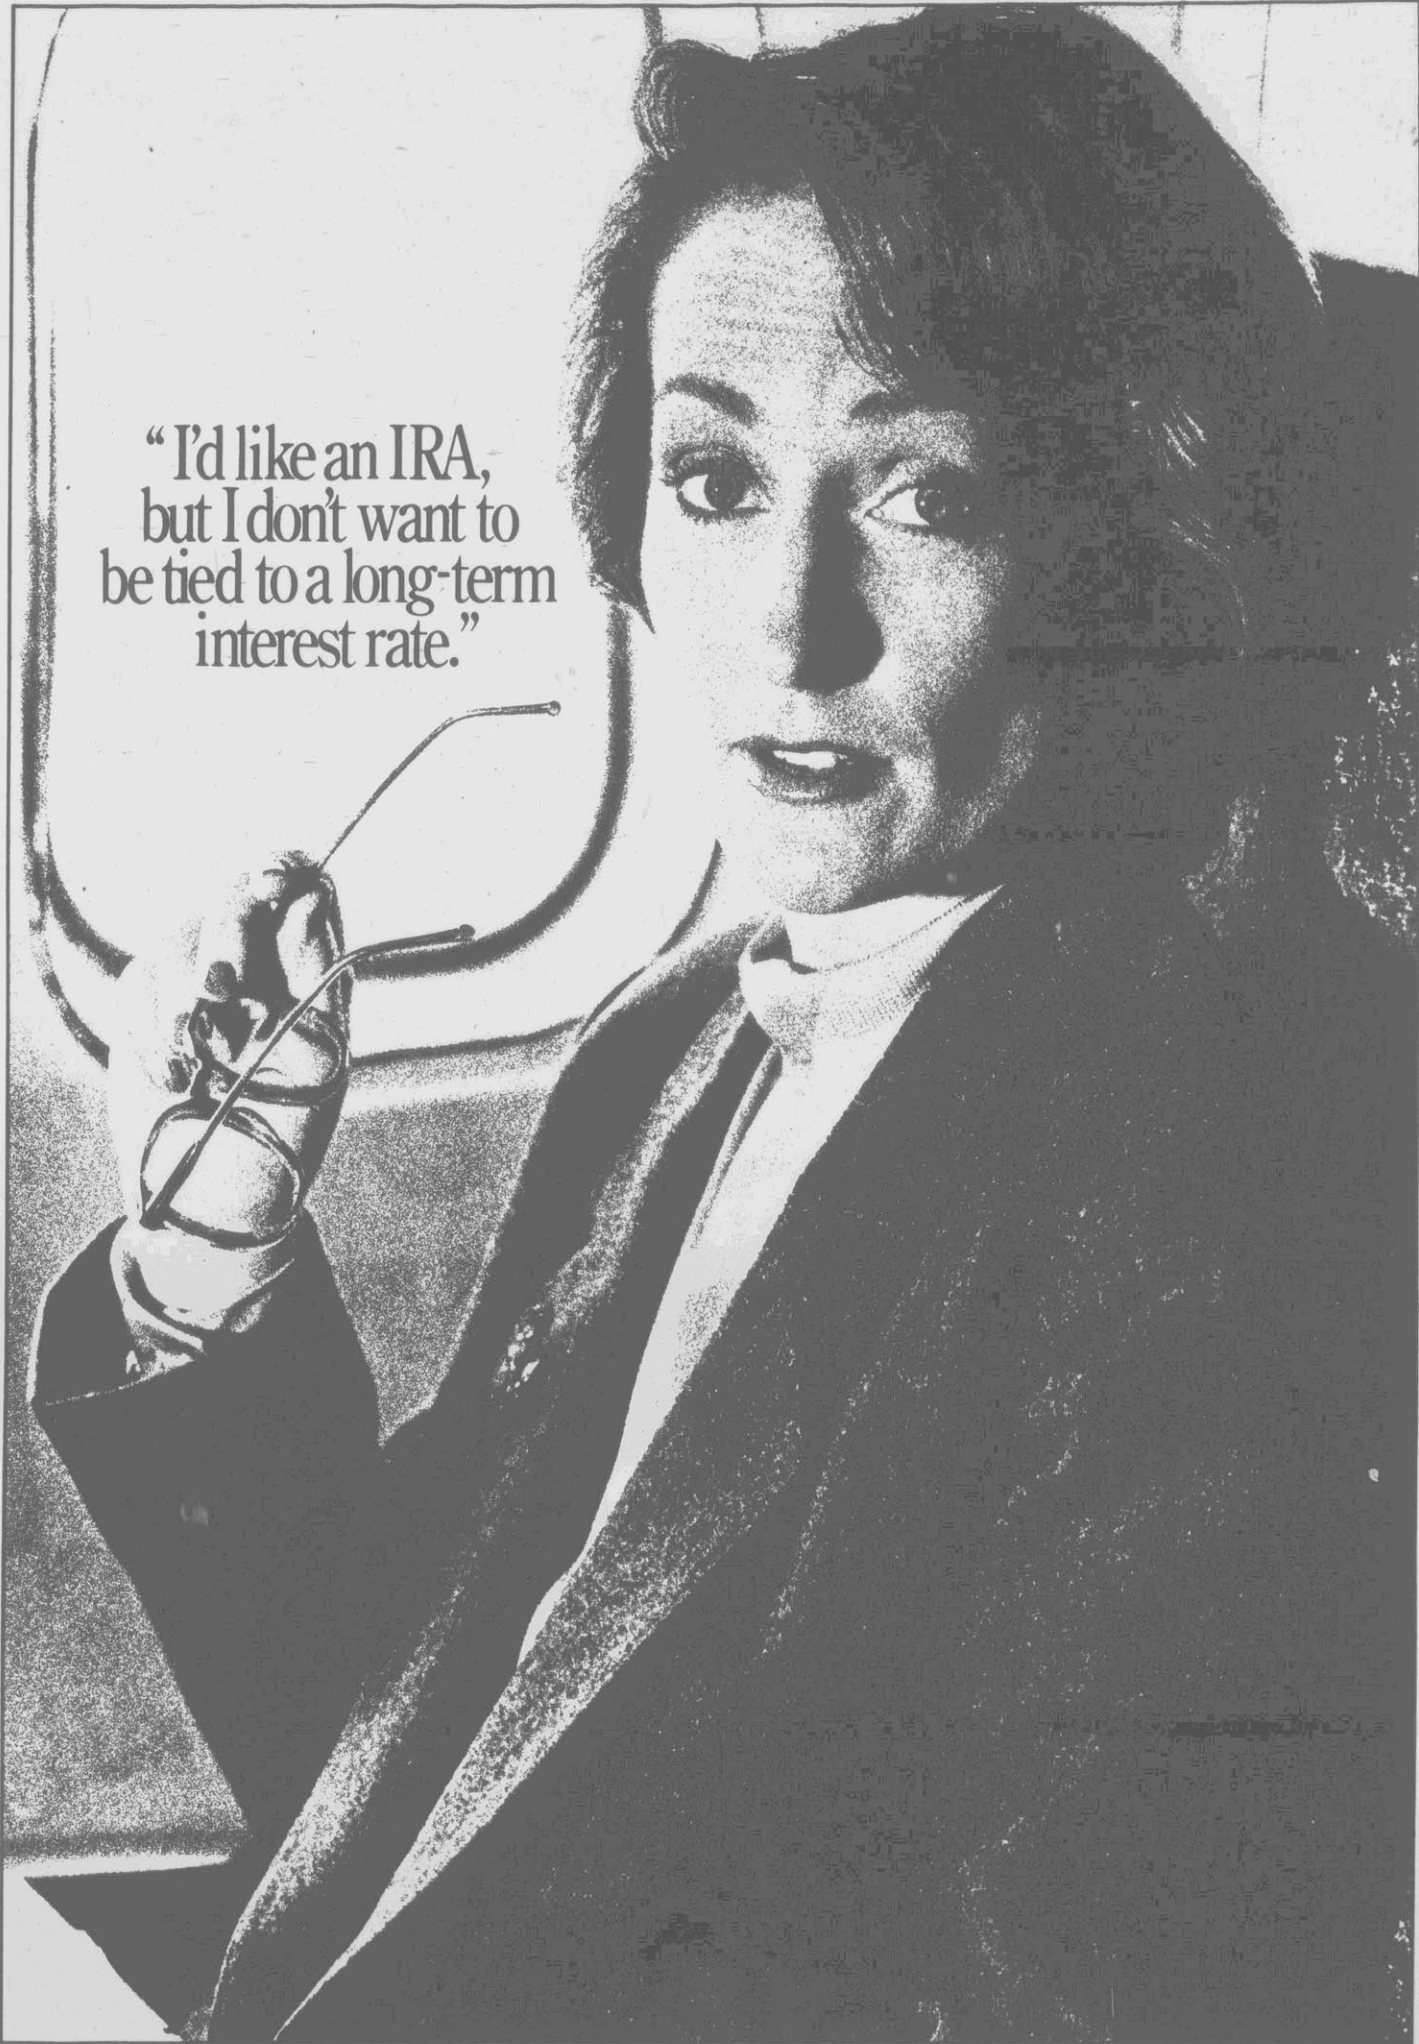

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — A team of U.S. experts will travel to China early next week to inspect what the Chinese say are the remains of an American pilot missing since World War II, a spokesman for the U.S. Pacific Command said today.

Some 78,000 Americans, both military and civilians, remain unaccounted for from World War II.

China and the United States were allies during the war.

In Laos, meanwhile, a group of Americans were winding up an unprecedented excavation with Laotians of the site where a C-130 gunship was shot down in December 1972, during the Vietnam War.

Thirteen U.S. airmen who were aboard the gunship remain missing.

Chinese Say Vietnamese Attacking Frontier Area

BEIJING (AP) — State-run television reported today that Vietnamese troops lobbed hundreds of artillery shells into Chinese territory and attacked the frontier at times over the lunar New Year holiday, but Chinese forces repulsed them. No footage of the purported fighting was shown, and a Chinese commentator did not specify whether there were any casualties in the latest confrontation in the six-year dispute between the former Communist allies. No comment was immediately available from Vietnamese authorities. The Chinese commentator said the fighting started Tuesday night when Vietnamese forces attacked Chinese positions in Yunnan province and the Guangxi autonomous region, "firing several hundred shells." "This shows the so-called New Year truce proposed by the Vietnamese authorities is a farce," said the commentator, reading from a prepared statement. Vietnam had called for a truce during the lunar New Year, which is celebrated by both the Chinese and the Vietnamese. Peking rejected the offer as a trap and said there would be no reconciliation until all Vietnamese troops withdrew from Cambodia, where they are fighting a resistance coalition backed by the Chinese.

The border attacks would have coincided with a tour of the area by Communist Party General Secretary Hu Yaobang, who was quoted by the press earlier this week as telling Chinese legions to "remove the threat" from the border.

On Wednesday, the first day of the lunar New Year, President Li Xiannian warned Vietnam to stay out of Chinese territory.

"So far the Vietnamese authorities still refuse to come to their senses, and have invaded China's border areas again and again, turning a deaf ear to the sincere advice of the Chinese government," Li told a reception in Peking.

China warred with Vietnam briefly in early 1979 following the Vietnamese 1978 invasion of Cambodia, which ousted the Chinese-backed Khmer Rouge.

Train Passenger Had No Pockets

NEW YORK (AP) — The man who walked through the gate and boarded the southbound No. 6 train had no token — but then again, had no pockets to keep one in.

"I've seen some crazy stuff before, but not like that," said token booth agent Charles Sampayo after watching a stark naked man stroll through the East 77th Street station Wednesday.

"I mean, he had nothing on. I said, 'Hey, you can't do that. You can't come in here naked.'"

But the unidentified man kept on going, walking past a violinist playing for donations and stopping to perform a little dance before boarding the Manhattan train.

"He just went dancing by to the music," said violinist James Groscek, 31, who added he then changed his selection from Bach to Tchaikovsky because it was better for dancing.

After his jig, the man boarded the first train into the station and took a seat, but Sampayo called for the train's conductor to remain there and Transit Police came quickly to place him in custody.

Lt. Ron Roland said the man was taken to Metropolitan Hospital for observation after the incident.

Pentagon Says Reserves At All-Time High

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two of the six components of the nation's military reserve forces fell short of their goals for new recruits last year, but overall reserve strength is at an all-time high, the Pentagon says.

Elaborating on a report released last month, the Defense Department said Wednesday the Army National Guard and the Army Reserve both "experienced some difficulty in enlisting new recruits."

By contrast, the Naval Reserve, the Marine Corps Reserve, the Air National Guard and the Air Force Reserve all met or exceeded their fiscal 1984 goals for enlisting recruits without prior military service.

When enlistments of men or women with prior military service are added, the Army Reserve managed to meet its overall recruiting objectives, the Pentagon added. But even with prior-service enlistments included, the Army National Guard still ended the year with only 78 percent of its total planned enlistments, the Pentagon said.

Wednesday's release of the fiscal 1984 "Selected Reserve Manpower Strength Assessment" follows a Jan. 25 report to Congress on the same subject by Assistant Defense Secretary James H. Webb Jr. He had disclosed that total reserve strength climbed to 1.045 million as of last Sept. 30, "surpassing the previous high of 1.006 million set in 1959."

It was not until Wednesday's final report, however, that the Pentagon made available its recruiting record for the reserve forces. It shows that overall, the six reserve components had hoped to recruit 247,100 people during the year from all sources, and managed to reach 90 percent of that goal for a total of 221,700 enlistments.

"Eighty-five percent of all enlistees this year were high school graduates, compared to 83 percent in fiscal 1983," the report adds. "The number of female and black enlistments increased from 11 to 12 and 19 to 21 percent, respectively."

As for the individual reserve components, the Marine Corps Reserve, Air National Guard and Air Force Reserve met or exceeded their recruiting goals in all categories, the report states.

The Army National Guard reached only about 77 percent of its objective for new recruits without previous service, or 46,200 enlistments out of a goal of 60,000. It also achieved only about 79 percent of its goal for enlistments by individuals with military experience, or 39,400 out of 50,000. That left the Army National Guard with an overall record of reaching 78 percent of its enlistment goal, or 85,500 of the hoped-for 110,000.

The Army Reserve, meantime, recruited 28,300 individuals without military experience, or 77 percent of its goal of 34,500. But it also enlisted 41,200 individuals with prior service.

'Evening Of Dance' Delights Fans

Dance fans should not miss "An Evening of Dance" now in performance in McGinnis Theater on the East Carolina University campus. Others would do well to see for themselves the exceptional array of dance talent active at ECU, integrated with contributions from student artists and musicians.

(The East Carolina Dance Theater productions has three more performances of this program, at 8:15 p.m. nightly through Saturday).

The two-hour program contains five dances ranging from nostalgically old-fashioned European to the excitement of the contemporary New York City street scene.

"The Family of Karl Larsson," by veteran choreographer Mavis Ray, is the program's opening number. Set in Sweden in 1910 to music by Dvorak, it celebrates a birthday party for a young lady, Suzanne. Miss Ray's choreography first comprises a family group scene, is then enlarged to include guests and relatives to become a cheerful stage-filled, festive event. The action later narrows to a courtship scene between Suzanne and Olof, a lovely romantic duo danced with a fine combination of tenderness and youthful verve by Jami Wilkerson and guest star Brian Frette. (Frette, a young New York professional dancer, is the only outside talent in the evening's program).

"The Family of Karl Larsson" comes full circle again in a celebration that encompasses a variety of dance forms, some obviously related to Scandinavian folk dances. Robert Alpers' turn of the century flower-filled stage set is a fitting framework for this charming piece.

Miss Ray is also the choreographer for a second dance, "The Rag Bag," with nine dancers costumed as representative personages from the world of entertainment. She uses music by Billy Joel and The Temptations, dividing the dance into two sequences — the first concentrating on tap dance routines.

Choreographer Patricia Paltan's "Haunted Shadows," a work of dark moods with the dancers clothed in ghostly white, is the most thought-provoking in the program — and perhaps the least accessible to the audience. Through expressive, at times agonized gestures, including stylized gestures similar to Egyptian tomb painting poses, Paltan creates a sense of uneasy loneliness among others. The music is by Gassman and Tangerine Dream.

ECU art student Patrick Keough's constantly shifting backdrop of sad, lost faces, of dark, dream-like scenes is an arresting visual — in fact, it demands so much attention that one's concentration is torn between the dancers and the visual.

Patricia Weeks' sparkling dance, "Sound Moves" is choreographed to a colorful score by ECU student composer David Garza, a percussion-oriented composition that echoes Oriental and Latin sounds. Garza also performs as dancer and musician in the piece. Ms. Weeks has incorporated an exceptional body play bit with Leigh Messner Albea and Ernest Miller, Jr. sinuously weaving themselves in and out of a single chair.

Miller, who also performs the solo dance in "Haunted Shadows" and the kid brother role of Esbjorn in the "Larsson" dance, is an impressive young talent.

The final dance, Jerome D. Jenkins' "Street Opera," is a non-stop, energetic depiction of life on the streets of New York, a revelation of the incredible range of humanity that populate the sidewalks of a large city. The large cast is in perfect synchronization to the demands of some intricate ensemble dancing.

Paul Baker, Connie Yoder and Anna Sistare dance the solo roles with admirable sensitivity. Music by Nick Ashford, Valerie Simpson and Coke Eskovode provide good background for the lively street scenes. This must have been a challenging work, and its success speaks volumes for choreographer Jenkins. Two thoughts — what is the purpose of the one dancer being pulled by rope to remain on a ladder high above stage during most of the action; and the second, the volume of music on opening night was a trifle loud.

In each dance, much of the visual pleasure and success of the total program is attributable to the choice of costumes by Keith Lewis, David F. Downing's lighting, and scenery designed by Robert Alpers.

It's unfortunate that the dances choreographed by faculty members at East Carolina University cannot have a much wider audience. They would certainly be well received throughout the state, and would let others know that the East Carolina Dance Theater can hold its own with any group in the state.

The good fortune is that dance fans in the Greenville and adjacent area can enjoy these excellent programs.

Ailing Town Eyes Casino Proposal

ELY, Minn. (AP) — A plan to turn this financially troubled town into a gambling mecca on the edge of a vast wilderness worries some residents and religious leaders, who fear an influx of mobsters and sin.

"We're in need of tourism, there's no doubt," said the Rev. Vince Gallinatti, associate pastor of St. Anthony's Catholic Church in this isolated town 240 miles north of Minneapolis.

"But we have a lot of resources we can tap into besides gambling," Gallinatti said. "What is it saying to our kids by saying, 'Let's try anything we can to get money up here?'"

The town is a key entry point to the state's 1.75-million-acre Boundary Waters Canoe Area, but has been hit hard by declining tourism and a depressed economy on north-eastern Minnesota's Iron Range.

Gallinatti said church officials are concerned the town's needy might lose their savings at the craps tables and that prostitution or organized crime would follow gambling into the town.

Minnesota permits only "charitable gambling," such as church bingo games.

Bills introduced in the Minnesota Legislature last week would designate Ely the site of a European-style casino offering slot machines, roulette wheels, poker, blackjack and other games of chance.

Supporters argue the casino would revitalize the town of 4,820.

"When you come up here for a week of fishing and the fishing is slow, you can come into Ely and spend $10 on blackjack," said Mayor Joe Baltich Jr., who has not taken a position yet on the gambling issue.

Gov. Rudy Perpich, who personally opposes gambling, is pushing the proposed casino as a way to stimulate Ely's economy.

"You pass this legislation or look for millions and millions and millions in state support," Perpich recently told radio station WELY after a meeting with Ely residents and officials.

Perpich's chief of staff, Terry Montgomery, said that if the legislation is approved by lawmakers and ratified by Ely residents, there would be no gambling "of this magnitude outside of Nevada or New Jersey." Nevada and Atlantic City, N.J., are the only sites in the country with legalized casino gambling.

No casino site has been designated and the logistics haven't been worked out to bring flocks of gamblers to a town less than 20 miles from the Canadian border. The nearest city is Duluth, 102 miles away by road. There are no direct roads from Ely into Canada.

Casino promoters say Ely's tourism has been hurt by restrictions on motorboats in the canoe area. The economy also has been devastated by logging controls and by high unemployment on the nearby Iron Range, where taconite mining and processing have been curtailed by low demand for steel.

"We are a very depressed area, and we are losing our population fast. We've probably got to attract anything we can to provide employment and a tax base," said City Council member Mathew L. Marolt.

Casino supporters argue that townspeople probably will not gamble often and that strict regulation would prevent mobsters from moving in.

FmHA Adjusting Loans To Farmers

The Farmers Home Administration is making changes in its regulations to encourage commercial lenders to help their farm borrowers who are having economic problems by taking advantage of the FmHA's debt adjustment program, according to Bert M. Hall, acting county supervisor.

So far in Pitt County, Hall said, FmHA has been able to adjust loans for 15 farmers. The debt adjustment program is part of the Farm Credit Initiatives announced by President Reagan last September. It is designed to assist banks and other lenders reduce the amount of loan payments down to a level farmers can afford.

The program allows FmHA to guarantee a portion of farm loans owed to banks and their lenders under certain conditions. FmHA agrees to make up part of the loss to the lender if the borrower defaults. This government guarantee makes it possible for the lenders to stay with their farm borrowers longer than they could otherwise.

The new regulations will help banks and other lenders cooperate with the program by allowing them to write down interest in exchange for government guarantees. Previously, they were required to write off a minimum of 10 percent of the principal of the loan. When the change becomes effective, they can reduce the loan through interest or principal or a combination of both.

Under another part of the president's farm credit program, FmHA is reviewing loans of its own borrowers. FmHA county supervisors will be getting additional staff help from other U.S. Department of Agriculture agencies to review FmHA loans, Hall said.

NEW YORK (AP) — Stock prices declined today amid doubts about the outlook for interest rates.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials dipped .44 to 1,282.69 in the first half hour.

Losers took a 9-5 lead over gainers among New York Stock Exchange-listed issues.

Analysts attributed the prevailing mood of caution to the statement by Paul Volcker, chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, that the Fed had stopped easing credit conditions.

In congressional testimony Wednesday, Volcker said the central bank has not switched to tightening credit, but was pursuing a policy of "a little more caution."

Nevertheless, investors seemed to interpret his remarks as a signal that the decline in interest rates since last summer was about over.

Many analysts believe the Fed is now satisfied that the possibility of any recession in the near future has been averted, and that economic growth is proceeding at a brisk pace.

Support for that view was provided this morning when the Commerce Department raised its figure for economic growth in the fourth quarter of 1984 to an annual rate of 4.9 percent from an earlier estimate of 3.9 percent.

Interest rates rose in the bond and short-term money markets this morning, adding to the increases they posted in Wednesday's activity.

Among today's early volume leaders in the stock market, General Motors dropped 1/8 to 78; Merrill Lynch lost 1/2 to 34; Humana was down 1/4 at 30 1/4, and K mart slipped 1/8 to 35 1/4.

On Wednesday the Dow Jones industrial average rose 2.54 to 1,283.13.

Advances slightly outpaced declines on the NYSE.

Big Board volume totaled 118.21 million shares, against Tuesday's six-week low of 90.40 million.

The NYSE's composite index slipped .01 to 105.11. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was up .87 at 231.20.

Jury Indicts Six Officers

NEW YORK (AP) — A Manhattan grand jury has indicted six New York City transit police officers on charges stemming from the death of a 25-year-old man who was arrested for allegedly scrawling graffiti on a subway wall, prosecutors said today.

The indictment announced by District Attorney Robert Morgenthau charged three officers — John Kostick, Anthony Piscola and Henry Boerner — with criminally negligent homicide, assault and reckless endangerment and with perjury themselves before the grand jury in an effort to cover up the circumstances surrounding Michael Stewart's death.

The indictment also charged Sgt. Henry Hassler, Sgt. James Barry and Officer Susan Teehky with perjury in the alleged cover-up attempt.

Stewart, a graffiti artist and model, was arrested Sept. 15, 1983, shortly before 3 a.m. in the subway station at 14th Street and First Avenue.

The indictment charged that as many as 11 police officers beat and kicked Stewart shortly after the arrest. Stewart was in a coma upon arrival at Bellevue Hospital, and died 13 days later without regaining consciousness.

Dixon's Buzzer Shot Boosts Chargers

By JIMMY DuPREE
Reflector Sports Writer

LITTLEFIELD
— Ayden-Grifton's Mike Dixon took the ball at mid-court, dribbled twice and fired in a 20-footer at the buzzer that gave the Chargers a 46-45 victory over SouthWest Edgecombe Wednesday in the semifinals of the Eastern Carolina Conference basketball tournament.

"The play was designed for me to look for Danny West in the corner, but he was covered," Dixon said. "Coach (Bob) Murphrey told me to try to get off a good shot if he was covered. When (the ball) got about a foot from the goal, I thought it had a pretty good chance to go in."

Marvin Smith paced Ayden-Grifton with 16 points while West added 10, but the Chargers struggled offensively throughout the game.

"Sometimes it's better to be lucky than good," Murphrey said. "The way I feel, any way you can get through the first game of a tournament is good enough."

"We missed easy shot after easy shot. Mike Dixon had a layup underneath in the fourth quarter that went in and out, but he made it when it counted."

"We were flat; SouthWest had played a game already — they were loose. SouthWest had everything to gain and nothing to lose."

The Chargers will face the winner of the tonight's Greene Central-North Pitt semifinal Friday at 8:15 p.m. for the ECC championship.

SouthWest Edgecombe's girls qualified for the championship game with a 73-27 victory over C.B. Aycock. The Lady Cougars take on the winner of the Farmville Central-Greene Central semifinal.

Ayden-Grifton held a 34-31 lead going into the fourth quarter after trailing most of the first half. SouthWest led by three at halftime after taking the game's biggest lead at 24-19 with 20 seconds left, but West connected on a follow shot with two seconds on the clock to trim the deficit.

Sometimes it's better to be lucky than good. SouthWest did everything they could; we just got lucky.

Coach BOB MURPHREY

When (the ball) got about a foot from the goal, I thought it had a pretty good chance to go in.

MIKE DIXON

Columbus Sharpe opened the fourth quarter with a drive for the Cougars, and Ayden-Grifton responded with a lone free throw from Smith. Tim Walker drove the baseline for SouthWest to knot the score at 35-35 with 6:04 left, and Billy Graya added a pair of free throws to put the Cougars ahead 37-35 at the 4:17 mark.

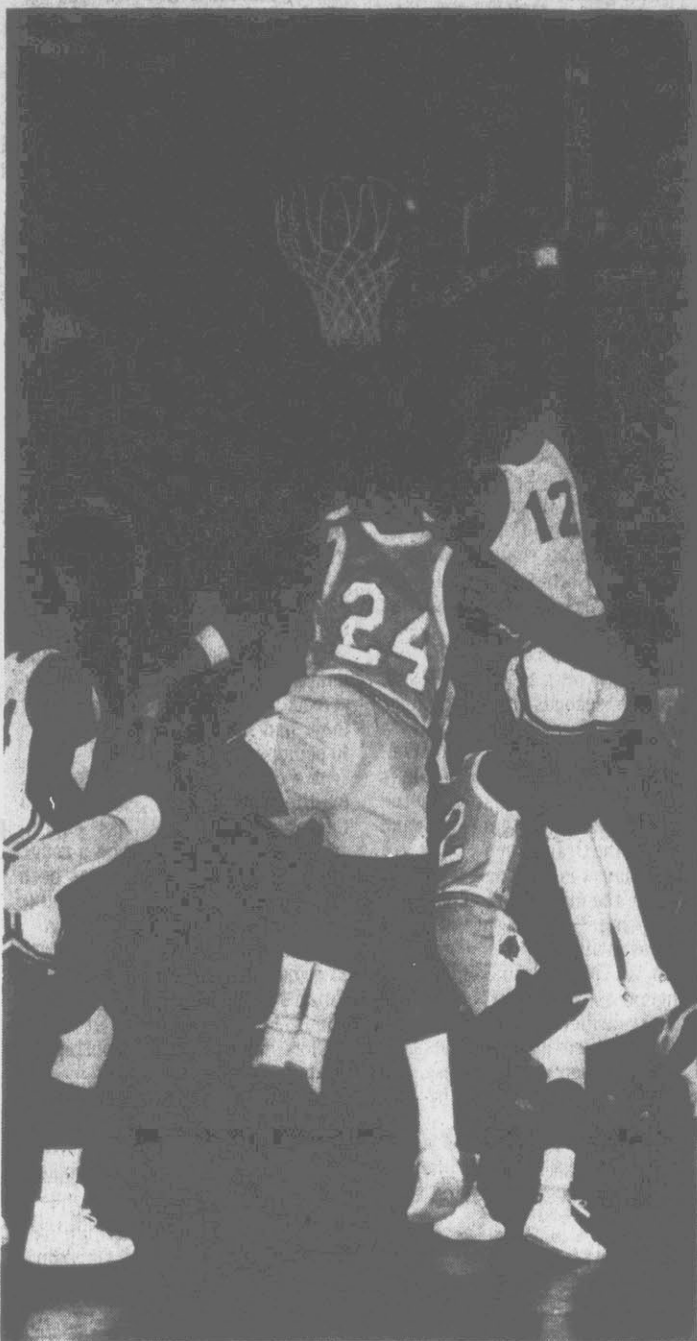

Smith scored inside for the Chargers, but Sharp put SouthWest ahead again with a 14-footer. Two free throws by Doug Anderson of Ayden-Grifton set the score at 39-39, but Earl Wooten popped in a 12-footer and Mark Pittman sank a follow shot to give the Cougars a 43-39 edge with 2:27 left.

West connected on two free throws. Maurice Berry added one and Smith sank a pair as the Chargers took a 44-43 lead with 20 seconds left on the clock.

"I told our kids a good ballclub will find a way to win," Murphrey said. "We weren't moving our feet at all on defense. We played poor defense; we wouldn't have been in that much trouble if we had taken away the middle of the floor."

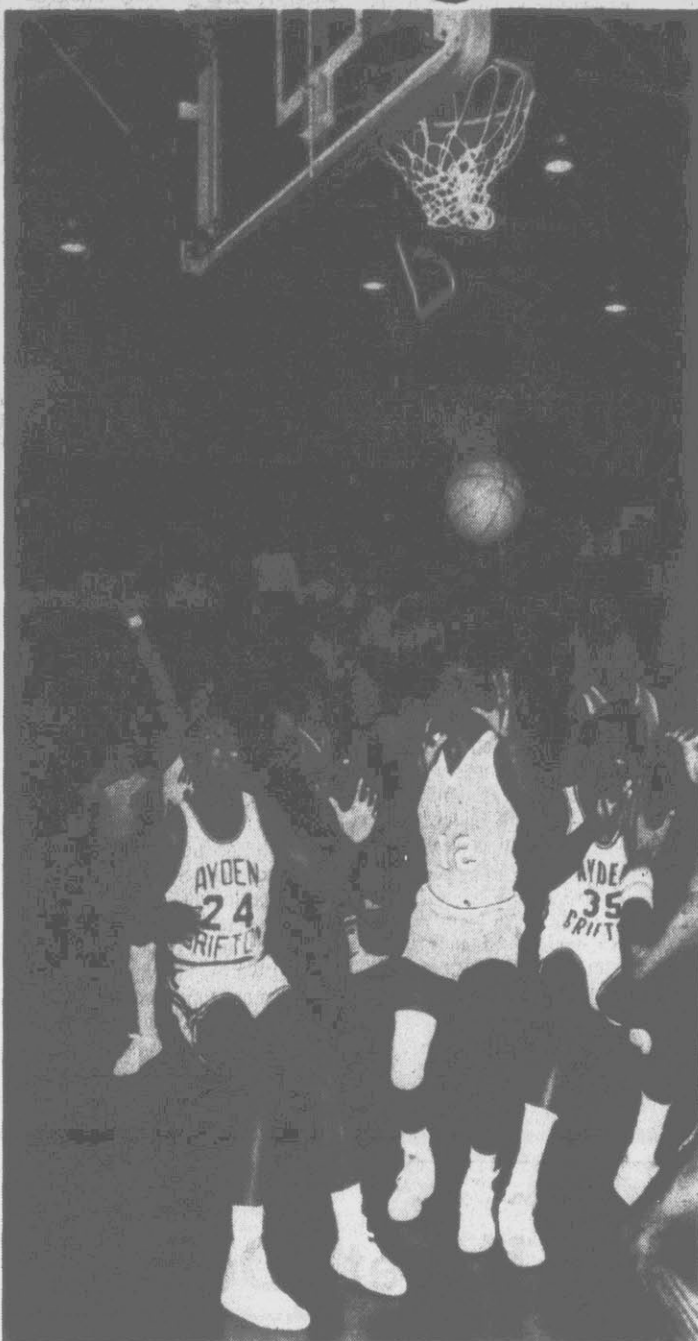

"SouthWest did everything they could; we just got lucky. I hope (our luck will) be there Friday night because we'll need it no matter who we play."

State Surprises Duke, Heels Top Wake

By TOM FOREMAN Jr.
AP Sports Writer

Once considered out of the running, North Carolina State has revived its basketball fortunes and has joined North Carolina in second place in the Atlantic Coast Conference basketball race.

The unranked Wolfpack on Wednesday pulled off a 70-66 victory over No. 6 Duke, its fifth straight victory overall and third straight league triumph. Along with 13th-ranked North Carolina's 69-59 victory over Wake Forest, the Tar Heels and the Wolfpack are tied for second place in the ACC at 7-4.

Georgia Tech, which beat Maryland Tuesday night, leads the league at 8-4.

N.C. State's triumph also was its third conquest of a top 20 team in as many outings.

Virginia took a 69-66 victory over Clemson to further raise its hopes of getting a post-season invitation to the NCAA tournament.

Tonight, Maryland goes out again to try and gain Coach Lefty Driesell his 500th career victory as the Terrapins face Towson State.

Lorenzo Charles scored 25 points to pace the Wolfpack on 12 of 17 shots from the field. Duke's David Henderson said there was only one defense for Charles.

"You would have had to tackle him. That's about the only way you could stop him," Henderson said.

Johnny Dawkins pulled the Blue Devils within one point twice in the final three minutes and Henderson's free throw tied it at 66 with 1:15 to go, but Anthony "Spud" Webb had a steal and three free throws down the stretch to hold off the Duke rally.

"Lorenzo Charles was incredible," said N.C. State coach Jim Valvano. "I'm almost speechless at the offensive performance he put on."

N.C. State, 17-7, got 15 points and five assists from Webb, the only other Wolfpack player in double figures.

Dawkins led Duke, 19-5 and 6-5, with 23 points while Mark Alarie added 14.

"We played some zone but mostly man," said Duke coach Mike Krzyzewski in reference to Charles. "We've never played so much zone in our man-to-man before, just trying to stop him."

Junior center Brad Daugherty scored a career-high 30 points as the Tar Heels, 20-6, weathered an early second-half run by the Demon Deacons to raise their record to 20-6 — the 15th straight 20-victory season for Coach Dean Smith.

Despite the achievement, Smith was not the least bit happy.

"I may have reached maturity when I can feel better after a loss on Saturday than I do after a win today," Smith said. "I'm really concerned."

Smith called the victory "a step back" from Saturday's loss to N.C. State, but he said the regression was not as bad as the troubles the Tar Heels encountered last month, when they went 5-3.

North Carolina committed 22 turnovers while Wake Forest lost the ball nine times. Daugherty said the Tar Heels were trying too hard to impress the home crowd.

"We did a lot of things really out of character," Daugherty said. "We became impatient. (Smith) really got upset with us and I don't blame him."

Wake Forest Coach Carl Tacy said his team, 14-10 and 4-7, didn't carry out his plan for stopping Daugherty and the taller Tar Heels.

"It was almost impossible to stop him tonight," Tacy said. "We didn't get the flurry of activity inside that we'd hoped to get from our defense and maybe knock the ball away a few times."

"Carolina's game was inside and they demonstrated it very well," he added.

The Cavaliers won their fourth straight and climbed to 15-11 and 3-8, but Coach Terry Holland warned that "momentum only lasts as long as the next game."

"We have to prepare hard for the next few days to be ready for North Carolina State," said Holland, whose

West Carteret Ousts Conley From Tourney

HAVELOCK — Gary McKeel fired in 12 points and Sammy Gibson added 10 as the West Carteret Patriots eliminated D.H. Conley with a 49-36 victory Wednesday in Coastal 3-A Conference tournament action.

Ricky Farrow paced Conley with 11 points, while Jeff Wright added nine.

Conley fell behind from the start, trailing 12-8 after the first quarter and 22-17 at halftime. Neither team managed much offense in the third quarter, but the Patriots held a 21-17 scoring edge in the final period to put the game away.

West Carteret will face the winner of tonight's Havelock-West Craven game Friday at 8 p.m. for the championship.

In the girls bracket, Havelock defeated North Lenoir 51-48 to advance against the winner of tonight's D.H. Conley-West Carteret semifinal.

Jamesville, Chocowinity Eliminated

JAMESVILLE — Tony Midgette fired in 29 points as Columbia jumped out to an early lead and held off the Jamesville Bullets for a 63-54 victory Wednesday in the opening round of the Tobacco Belt 1-A basketball tournament.

Horace Stotesbury paced the Bullets with 20 points, while Robert Thompson chipped in 12 for Columbia.

The Bullets were without starter Robbie Harris who got sick in school prior to the game.

"We missed his rebounding and offense," Jamesville Coach Bill Johnson said. "We just got in the hole early and couldn't work our way out. We made a pretty good representation in the second half, but that doesn't make up for the first half."

Columbia jumped out to a 14-6 lead in the first quarter and expanded the margin to 28-16 at halftime. The teams played evenly in the third quarter, and the Bullets trimmed the margin with a 22-19 edge in the final period.

Columbia plays Mattamuskeet Friday in the second round of the tournament.

Huskies Trim Syracuse

By The Associated Press

Close victories over Syracuse are getting to be a habit for Connecticut this season. So are close losses for Syracuse.

"Whether we play the number one team or the worst team in the nation, we just manage to hang in there," Syracuse Coach Jim Boheim said after his seventh-ranked Orangemen were defeated 71-69 in college basketball Wednesday night by the Huskies. "When you play like that, you allow yourself to get beat."

Prior to the upset in Hartford, Connecticut beat Syracuse 70-68 in Syracuse on Jan. 19.

"We're smelling roses a little now," said Connecticut Coach Dom Perno. "We've known the other smell too many times this season."

Four other Top Twenty teams lost Wednesday night, as No. 6 Duke lost to North Carolina State 70-66, No. 9 Southern Methodist lost to Texas Christian 54-53 and No. 14 Iowa was beaten by Wisconsin 54-53.

Elsewhere, No. 1 St. John's edged No. 20 Boston College 71-69, No. 4 Memphis State beat Tulane 60-49, No. 5 Oklahoma routed Colorado 110-80, No. 13 North Carolina stopped Wake Forest 69-59 and No. 15 Kansas hammered Kansas State 75-64.

Top Ten

Earl Kelley hit a 16-foot jump shot with four seconds remaining for Connecticut's winning points. Kelley, a junior guard, led Connecticut with a game-high 21 points and added nine assists as the Huskies broke a four-game winning streak for the Orangemen.

"The play was designed for me to penetrate the middle, but I wound up on the wing," Kelley said. "I took what was available."

With an 8-5 league record, the Orangemen have made a habit of Big East thrillers this year. They've won five of their league games on a margin of seven points or less, and they've lost four games by two points or less.

Chris Mullin scored 17 of his 26 points in the second half by connecting on eight of 11 outside shots as St. John's held on for its 18th consecutive victory. The win at St. John's tied a school single-season streak set in 1928-29.

Mullin, who uncharacteristically missed three free throws in the final two minutes, scored the clincher for St. John's when he buried a side jumper with 42 seconds remaining to give the Redmen a 70-67 lead after they had blown almost all of a 10-point advantage.

"We could have been knocked out in the first half," Coach Lou Carnesecca said. "A less experienced team would have had a tough time recovering. This club has been through it before and they were able to scrape themselves together."

In New Orleans, Keith Lee scored 23 points to lead Memphis State over Tulane in a Metro Conference game. The victory clinched at least a tie for the league championship for Memphis State.

"We left our game in the locker room in the second half," said Tulane Coach Ned Fowler, whose team led 34-28 at intermission before falling flat.

In Norman, Okla., Wayman Tisdale scored 37 points as Oklahoma routed Colorado and clinched a tie for the Big Eight Conference title. Tisdale, a 6-foot-9 junior, also grabbed 10 rebounds to become the all-time Oklahoma leader in that category. He now has 941, two more than former Sooner great Alvan Adams.

Lorenzo Charles scored 25 points, including 18 in the second half, to lead North Carolina State past Duke at Durham, N.C. The Wolfpack, trailing by as many as 17 points in the second half, rallied behind their high scorer, who continuously called for the ball and muscled the smaller Duke lineup inside.

Holley, Lee Lift Edenton

WILLIAMSTON — Lawrence Holley and Rodney Lee fired in 22 points each as Edenton took a 69-64 victory over second-seeded Plymouth Wednesday in the second upset of the Northeastern Conference high school basketball tournament.

Number eight Roanoke Rapids knocked off top-seed Roanoke Tuesday.

In the girls game, Anita Harrell posted 30 points including 26 in the second half as Ahoskie whipped Bertie 56-43.

Edenton's boys will face Washington Friday at 8 p.m., while Ahoskie's girls play Roanoke Friday at 6:30 p.m.

Washington's girls play Plymouth tonight at 6:30, and Roanoke Rapids' boys meet Williamston at 8 p.m.

Wellcome Tops Frink

KINSTON — The Wellcome Middle School girls defeated Frink 32-29 Wednesday to earn the championship of the Pitt-Lenoir-Greene junior high basketball conference.

Gwen Pilgreen paced Wellcome with 16 points, while Dawn Phillips led Frink with 11.

Wellcome, which finished the season 10-1, won the Northern Division championship, while Frink represented the Southern Division.

Cavaliers host the Wolfpack Sunday. "We've put together four straight wins. That's the first time we've done that for a long time. We played about as well as we can play tonight," Holland added. "We made clutch plays and hit some clutch free throws."

The Cavaliers, who got 17 points from Olden Polynice and 16 from Tom Sheehy, recorded their seventh victory in their last nine starts. Virginia also got 10 points each from Jim Miller, Tim Mullen and Mel Kennedy.

The Tigers, who haven't won at Virginia since 1978, had a chance to take the lead when Vincent Hamilton intercepted a Mullen pass with 1:04 remaining.

Clemson worked the ball inside to Raymond Jones, but Jones' short shot with 52 seconds left was blocked by Polynice, who also grabbed the rebound and was fouled by Jones.

Polynice converted the front end of the one-and-one to put Virginia on top 68-66 but missed his second attempt.

Clemson, 15-9 and 5-7, worked the game clock down to 10 seconds and the 45-second shot clock to 5 seconds before Chris Michael fired up a jumper from deep in the right corner.

The shot was long and Sheehy collared the rebound. Fouled with five seconds left, Sheehy hit the front end of the one-and-one to wrap up the victory for the Cavaliers.

Jim Brown Charged With Rape

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Pro Football Hall of Famer Jim Brown is free on bail after being booked for investigation of rape and sexual battery while a "complete investigation" is conducted, police say.

Brown, 49, was arrested at his home in the Hollywood Hills Wednesday morning after an alleged incident late Tuesday night, said Sgt. Richard Beardslee, reading a statement prepared by the police.

Arrested along with Brown was a woman identified as Carol Moses, 22. She was booked for sexual battery, Sgt. Charles McTeague said.

The police statement said the arrests stemmed from the complaint of a 33-year-old woman, who was not identified. She alleged that Brown, with Moses, raped her after Brown had struck her several times. Police declined to elaborate on Moses' alleged involvement.

According to the statement, a "complete investigation" is under way.

Brown was released on $17,500 bail, and Moses released on $1,000 bail, Beardslee said. A police spokesman said that charges must be filed before an arraignment date could be set, and no charges had been filed.

Beardslee said there would be no further statements at this time.

An Associated Press call to Brown's residence was answered by a woman who identified herself as Sally and said Brown was not available.

In 1965, a jury found Brown innocent of assault and battery charges following an incident in Cleveland involving an 18-year-old girl.

Brown was arrested in June, 1968, and accused of assault with intent to murder when his 22-year-old girlfriend was found semi-conscious under the balcony of his Hollywood apartment.

The charge, however, was dropped when the woman said she had fallen while trying to leave the apartment when the police appeared on the scene. Brown was charged with resisting a police officer and eventually fined $300.

In 1978, Brown sentenced to one day in jail and fined $500 for beating up a golf pro at a Los Angeles golf course in an argument over the placement of a golf ball.

Since ending his nine-year football career in 1965, Brown has appeared in a number of motion pictures, including "The Dirty Dozen" and recently was involved in a made-for-television "challenge" sporting match against Franco Harris.

The former Cleveland Browns' running back was the National Football League's all-time leading rusher until Chicago's Walter Payton topped his mark last season.

Brown holds the NFL record for most career touchdowns (126), and rushed for 12,312 on 2,881 carries in 118 games. His average of 5.2 per carry is the highest career rushing average in NFL history.

Pitt Co. Men Lead Field

WILSON — Two Pitt County men are the leaders after two weeks of competition in the 13th Annual State Farm Bowling Tournament in Wilson.

Bobby Puryear of Winterville and Jesse Averett of Greenville hold down the lead in the tournament's doubles competition. Second place is held by Diane Nicholson of Goldsboro and Jim Conde of Bethel with a 1,342 series.

Puryear turned in the high handicapped series of 724.

The final two days of the tournament will be held Saturday and Sunday.

Man Faces Decision

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — A 35-year-old Statesville man suffering from a debilitating heart disease for the past two years will try to decide next month whether to have a heart transplant.

"It's the hardest decision we've ever had to face," said the man's wife of 17 years, Jackie Burchette. "It's a scary thing to think about, but he's just not getting any better. We thought this might be a chance to let him live longer."

Johnny Burchette and his wife plan to visit Johns Hopkins Hospital in Baltimore in March to learn more about a heart transplant and determine if he must have the operation to survive.

Burchette's heart problems began in the winter of 1983, when he came down with the flu. The flu lingered, and an infection seeped into his heart, his wife said.

The infection enlarged his heart and kept it from pumping enough blood through his body. Last June, his heart pumped only 5 percent of the blood he needed. Now — with the help of nine drugs that Burchette takes each day — it's up to 23 percent.

Sewing Plant Closing

HENDERSONVILLE, N.C. (AP) — The death last year of the co-founder of Ruth Originals is being blamed for the company's shutdown next month, leaving some 225 people jobless, officials say.

Officials of the Hendersonville company announced this week that the firm would gradually cease sewing operations at the 100,000-square-foot facility, with most workers expected to be out of work by the middle of March.

The announcement follows the closing earlier this month of the company's sewing facility in Brevard where 60 workers lost their jobs.

Forestry Proposals Hit

DURHAM (AP) — Proposals to manage North Carolina's two western national forests place an unjustified stress on timber cutting, while underestimating the need for wilderness areas, critics from Duke University say.

"The Forest Service predicts that the demand for wilderness is rapidly outstripping both the current and available supply," the Public Lands Study Policy Group of Duke University said in a report released this month.

"But the proposed management alternatives do not address this need and call instead for increasing opportunities for motorized recreation."

The study group's remarks were made in response to a U.S. Forest Service draft management plan for the Pisgah and Nantahala National Forests that was released in November for public comment.

Sirens Fail Test

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Nine of 10 emergency sirens in southwestern Mecklenburg County failed to sound Wednesday during an accident drill for the Catawba nuclear power plant in York County, S.C.

But during a second test three hours later, all but one of the sirens went off. Duke Power Co. said it hadn't determined the cause of the failure.

"It appears at this point there could have been some radio frequency problems," said Duke spokeswoman Mary Boyd.

She said Duke installed and maintains the radio-controlled sirens, which are intended to alert people of an emergency at the plant so they will turn on their radio or TV for instructions.

Minister Sues Officer

CHARLOTTE (AP) — A Charlotte minister has sued a Mecklenburg County police officer for $500,000, claiming the officer hit him and falsely arrested him last February.

In a lawsuit filed Wednesday in Mecklenburg Superior Court, the Rev. Buddy Ray Moore, 52, named Mecklenburg police officer Kenneth Grier, Mecklenburg Police Chief Bruce Abercrombie and Mecklenburg County as defendants.

Moore alleges that Grier stopped him as he was trying to follow a city police officer's directions through a traffic accident scene, hit him on the head and then arrested him on four charges. Moore, whose injuries required about six stitches, was later acquitted of those charges.

Suspect Undergoes Evaluation

GASTONIA (AP) — A Gaston County man accused of shooting at police officers and motorists near Crowders Mountain in western North Carolina has been taken to a state mental hospital for evaluation.

Public Defender Chip Cloninger filed a motion last week in Gaston County District Court to have Herbert Lee Childers, 19, of Bessemer City taken to Dorothea Dix Hospital in Raleigh.

A hospital spokesman said Childers was admitted to the hospital Monday.

Childers was charged Feb. 10 with assault with a deadly weapon on a law enforcement officer, possession of a weapon for mass destruction and carrying a concealed weapon.

Lobster Has Birthday

MANTEO, N.C. (AP) — Harold the lobster, a 17-pound giant who is believed to be 90 years old, celebrated his first anniversary Wednesday at a North Carolina aquarium with balloons, an anniversary card and lobster-decorated cakes.

Harold was taken to the Dare Marine Resources Center a year ago after being plucked from three tons of seafood by Michael Hagen, a Norfolk seafood dealer.

"We thought when we found Harold that this was not one for the stewpot," said Hagen, who attended the anniversary party. "We wanted to put Harold on display."

The two dozen party-goers were greeted by a giant anniversary card that read: "Harold, You're One Shell of a Guy."

Pageant Director Named

MANTEO, N.C. (AP) — A 30-year veteran of the New York stage, Porter Van Zandt, has been named director of "The Lost Colony," according to an announcement made Wednesday by Mark Sumner, producer of the 48-year-old outdoor drama.

Van Zandt replaces Joe Layton, who resigned in December after 21 years as director-choreographer. Terms of Van Zandt's contract were not disclosed.

Van Zandt was most recently development consultant to the Mirror Theater in New York and directed the revival of "The Hasty Heart" on Broadway. He also directed an outdoor drama "Blue Jacket" in Ohio last summer.

The new director is a graduate of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill and was a 1947 performer in The Lost Colony when he played the aging priest, Father Martin, for one season. Van Zandt will be in Manteo this weekend from New York to take part in the first auditions for the cast.

Hospital Converted

WARRENTON, N.C. (AP) — Warren General Hospital, closed as a full-service hospital, is being used as an interim immediate-care center, according to officials of Healthco Inc.

Healthco is the Soul City-area health center that was developed during the unsuccessful effort by Floyd McKissick several years ago to build a new town.

Warren County manager Charles Worth said that Healthco began operating the immediate-care center Monday. Healthco officials have applied for a $109,000 federal grant to help pay for operation of the interim facility. While it hasn't received approval of the grant yet, Worth said, Healthco is confident the grant will be approved.

Proposals for future use of the hospital are being sought from health-care institutions in adjoining areas of North Carolina and Virginia.

USDA Again Delays Leaf Fee

By The Associated Press

The U.S. Department of Agriculture has delayed announcing the 1985 "No Net Cost" tobacco grower fee, allowing more time for negotiations on a buy-out of flue-cured leaf surpluses.

Tobacco officials in Washington and North Carolina said Wednesday the talks hinged on demands by cigarette manufacturers that the deal be approved by Congress and that the federal price supports be lowered to $1.35 per pound.

Jim Davis, director of the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service's tobacco division, said the department would delay until next week its announcement setting the assessment growers must pay to cover the cost of the federal program.

The postponement is designed to give the Flue-Cured Tobacco Cooperative Stabilization Corp.'s board of directors and cigarette makers one more chance in a meeting Friday to agree to a buy-out plan.

"We're approaching the conclusion of the negotiations," said Fred Bond, manager of the Raleigh-based cooperative.

Bond declined to detail the negotiations but confirmed that companies are still demanding support prices be cut to an average $1.35 per pound, while stabilization officials were committed to $1.45. The average flue-cured support price is $1.70 per pound.

In exchange for reduced price supports, tobacco companies have been asked to purchase 812 million pounds of surplus tobacco at reduced prices over the next five years.

Bond said the "consensus of the buyers is leaning" toward a demand that any buyout be contingent upon congressional passage of legislation that would affect the 1985 crop. That would require Congress to act before mid-summer when flue-cured markets open.

"That approach would take time obviously," Bond said, adding that growers need to know now what the assessment and support price will be. "A legislative approach is not accomplished overnight."

U.S. Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., Rep. Charlie Rose, D-N.C., and other tobacco leaders have said they would pursue permanent and long-term legislative changes this year after the USDA solve the problems for this year.

Bond said he demand for legislation is "still negotiable," but congressional sources told The News and Observer of Raleigh that the companies want legislation making the price support $1.35 permanently.

Atas Wooten of Greenville, a member of stabilization's board of directors, said he hoped the manufacturers would not insist on legislation.

"I'd hate for tobacco to be the first (commodity) to go to Washington," he said, adding that all farm commodities are under intense scrutiny by a budget-conscious administration.

Wooten also said he doubted a full agreement can be reached on the buyout plan unless similar provisions are made for surplus burley stocks.

Low Award

Henry Z. Spell leaves the Federal Courthouse in Fayetteville Wednesday after winning his suit against Fayetteville police. He had claimed police used excessive force that left him sterile. The jury found for Spell, but awarded him only $1,000. (AP Laserphoto)

Jury Awards $1,000 In Brutality Case

FAYETTEVILLE (AP) — An Autryville man says he's happy with a federal jury's decision in his $10 million dollar police brutality lawsuit but thinks the $1,000 award diminished the effect of the verdict.

Henry Z. Spell, 28, claimed he was left sterile following a 1983 assault by a Fayetteville police officer, which he said fit a pattern of abuse that was condoned and covered up by city and police officials.

"What really concerns me now is if the city is going to take any action against the officers themselves and the police department," Spell said after Wednesday's decision. "With the verdict we got, if nothing was done, it means all of it was for nothing. That's on my mind most right now. The amount of the award being as low as it is kind of takes away from the effect of the verdict, I do believe."

He had sought $7.5 million in compensatory damages from the defendants plus $2.5 million in punitive damages from McDaniel. But Spell noted that the amount awarded would not cover his medical expenses of about $2,700.

A juror, who asked not to be identified, said the jury agreed police were guilty of misconduct but remained divided for a long time about whether the assault occurred.

"We all wanted the citizens of Fayetteville to know from the evidence that there was a cover-up, that there was corruption and I feel like we've done all we can do," the juror said.

He said the jury limited its award to $1,000, hoping the city would not appeal the verdict. "I hope he gets $50 million if they appeal it," the juror said.

Police Chief Ronald E. Hansen said he plans no disciplinary action against the officers involved, saying they had been cleared by an FBI investigation of the incident.

In addition to Dixon, who retired in 1984, the other defendants were retired Command Sgt. Roger T. Holman, who was in charge of police training while McDaniel was a trainee in 1979; Command Sgt. William P. Dalton, the leader of McDaniel's platoon; and Capt. William C. Johnson who handled internal affairs investigations for the department.

McDaniel denied assaulting Spell. Defense attorneys contended that Spell hurt himself before the arrest.

Teachers, Take Newspapers Back To School

National Newspaper in Education (NIE) Week is coming March 4-8, 1985. The Newspaper in Education program encourages the use of newspapers for a variety of educational purposes. National NIE Week emphasizes the importance of reading and writing and is a cooperative effort of the International Reading Association and newspapers.

Teachers, use ads, maps, graphs, and schedules to teach reading and math. Show students how to write news stories, editorials, ads, and reviews. Also have them write letters to the editor and use newspapers to update research projects. Ask them to discuss the judgments that are made in interviews and editorials. Most important, have them read daily to develop the habit of reading and to keep well informed.

Use The Daily Reflector for one or more days each week. To place an order, call Margy Blount at 752-6166 or write her at P.O. Box 1967, Greenville, N.C. 27834. During NIE Week and throughout the year, classroom sets of newspapers are available at a reduced rate. Each newspaper costs 12¢. Hurry and place your order today, so your students may use The Daily Reflector during NIE Week.

A special edition of the state's Newspaper in Education newsletter, DATELINE NC, is available free of charge. The newsletter features teaching ideas for use during NIE Week. To receive the newsletter, send the coupon below to the N.C. NIE Foundation. Return the coupon before February 24.

Rauch Sees Good Chance Of Tax Cuts

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer
RALEIGH (AP) — With a willing governor and deep public support, there's no time like the present to push sweeping tax cuts through the Legislature, says the chairman of the Senate Finance Committee. "In my opinion they have the best chance of passing that they've had in my 10 terms here, and it's largely because of Governor (Jim) Martin," said Sen. Marshall Rauch, D-Gaston, after his committee's first meeting

Wednesday. Martin, a Republican, made repeal of the intangibles and inventory taxes and the sales taxes on food and medicine the centerpiece of his campaign platform. He is expected to repeat his proposals in his Feb. 28

State of the State address to a joint legislative session. Rauch said he wanted to incorporate all proposed tax legislation into a single bill with a goal of passing it by late May or early June. Traditionally, major tax legislation waits until after the state budget is passed, usually on or shortly after the new fiscal year begins July 1.

But Rauch said the process should be reversed because the voters showed by electing Martin that they want tax relief. "I think we make mistakes in taxing because so much money is taken from one authority and given to another," said Rauch.

House leaders responded coolly. Rep. Dwight Quinn, D-Cabarrus, chairman of the House Finance Committee, said he had no plans to combine tax bills. House Speaker Liston Ramsey said, "Bills like that can be broken up. All it takes is an amendment."

Although Martin supporters have yet to introduce his tax program, a number of Democrats have proposed cuts. Bills that would repeal or phase out the taxes on business inventories and intangible assets have been introduced by Rauch, Sen. Dennis Winner, D-Buncombe, and Reps. Dan Lilley, D-Lenoir, and J. Paul Tyndall, D-Onslow.

Ramsey's tax-cut package, sponsored by Speaker Pro Tem Jack Hunt, D-Cleveland, would reduce income tax rates for lowest two brackets. Rep. Joe Mavretic, D-Edgecombe, would grant an income tax credit for food-tax payments by the poor.

Senate Majority Leader Kenneth Royall, D-Durham, introduced a bill to increase the sales tax by one-half cent and exempt money in safes, safety-deposit boxes and bank accounts from the intangibles tax.

Rauch said the intangibles tax probably would be the easiest to repeal, being "a punitive tax on wealth already accumulated." The food tax punishes people who can least afford it, he said.

"A democracy is judged by the way it treats its less fortunate citizens," said Rauch.

In other legislative action: North Carolina's state parks have "reached a point of quiet desperation," say lawmakers who want a $50 million bond referendum to upgrade one of the poorest-funded park systems in the nation.

"We're trying to get a high visibility," said Sen. Henson Barnes, D-Wayne, at a news conference. "If the people know what's there and know the neglect we're allowing happen to it, then they will rise up and demand (more money) and democracy will take over from there."

Barnes and Rep. Narvel Jim Crawford, D-Buncombe, said that until recently North Carolina was 50th in the nation in funding state parks, paying only about 88 cents per citizen. Crawford said the state moved ahead of Rhode Island when funding grew to $1.09 per resident.

Barnes said the park commission wants the immediate purchase of 9,000 critical acres around the existing 41 parks and seeks 20 more parks employees — bringing to 120 the number of people entrusted with handling an estimated 5.7 million visitors each year.

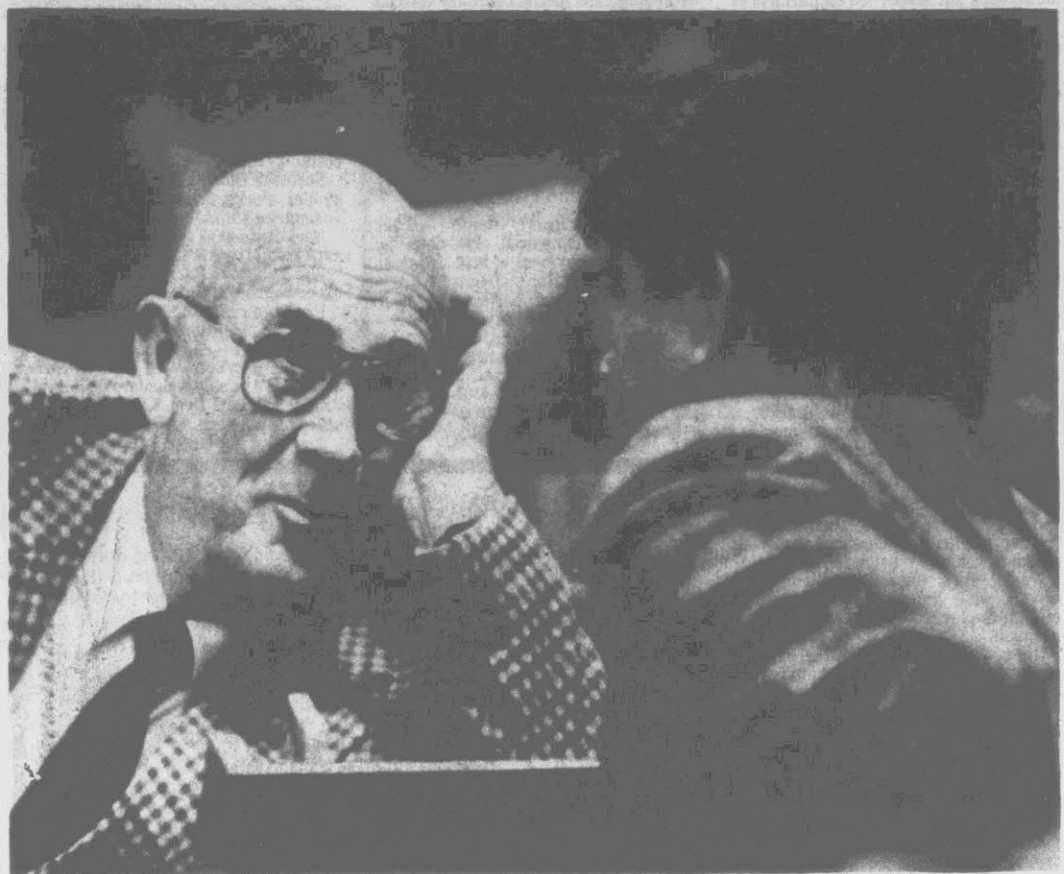

Park rangers' salaries should be increased from about $10,000 to about $12,000, and a park should be created around Horsepasture River in Transylvania County, Barnes said.

Barnes said he hoped to see a bond referendum at the next statewide elections and environmental lobbyist Bill Holman said the $50 million would be a good investment.

"Land prices have nearly doubled in the past two years," Holman said. "In the long run it will be cheaper to get the bond and pay the interest than to buy the land later."

Rep. George Miller, D-Durham, filed the latest of several bills to set a minimum age of 21 for drinking all alcoholic beverages.

Unlike the other bills that would raise the age for drinking beer and

Education Bills Flood Legislature

RALEIGH (AP) — A spate of bills proposing dramatic changes in the way North Carolina pays its teachers, picks its top education officials and judges its pupils is before the Legislature.

Legislation to implement a basic-education program for students and a $690 million career-development plan for public school teachers, both of which generated fierce debate before the State Board of Education, was filed Wednesday.

"These would mean big changes for education," said Rep. Jo Graham Foster, D-Mecklenburg, chairman of the House Education Committee. "What we're really looking for is to define quality education ... decide who would pay for what and how much, and find a flexible way to do it all."

Also Wednesday, two representatives proposed that students admitted to any of the 16 University of North Carolina schools score at least 700 on the Scholastic Aptitude Test.

Another major education bill was filed by Sen. Bob Warren, D-Johnston. It would enlarge the State Board of Education and empower the board to appoint the superintendent of public instruction, who now is elected statewide.

The basic education and career-development plans, approved by the education board under orders from the Legislature, have drawn some criticism from lawmakers for their provisions and costs.

The basic education program calls for a $627.6 million overhaul of public school programs, which would be phased in over eight years. It's designed to expose all the state's students to the same basic curricula and opportunities.

It would require uniform course offerings in each of the state's 142 school districts, add foreign language and art instruction in the elementary schools and create the first statewide promotion standards.

When fully implemented by the 1992-93 academic year, the state's schools would have an additional 31,575 public school employees. Currently, there are about 52,000 teachers and 107,000 school workers.

The career-development plan would establish a five-step advancement ladder, with promotions and higher pay given for superior work. It has drawn criticism from some lawmakers and from teachers, who say it does not address the problems of low starting salaries and poor working environment.

Ms. Foster said the plan would attract to the teaching profession top-notch students who are turned off by low pay.

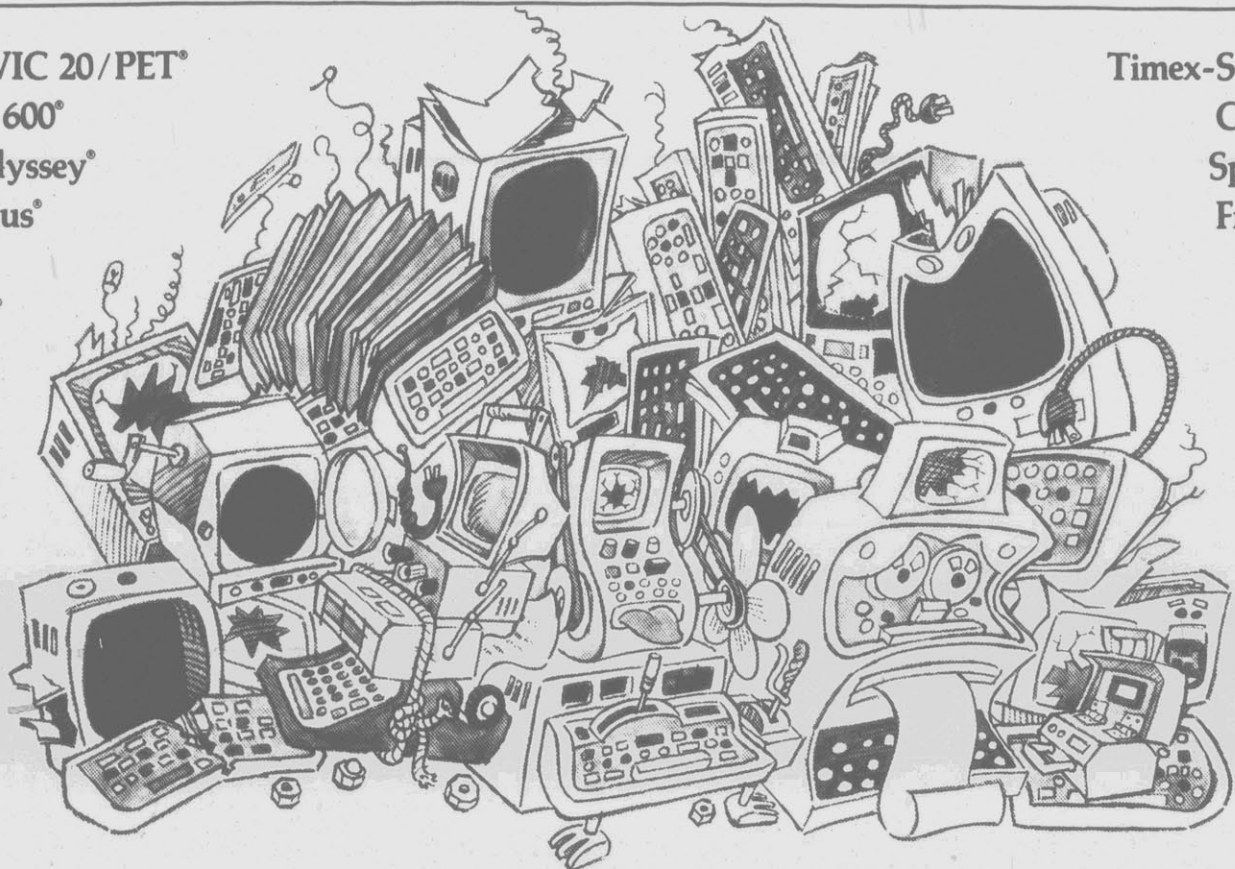

"If we're going to pay what good teachers deserve, we've got to start somewhere," she said.

Virtually identical bills to require a minimum SAT score of 700 for admission to UNC schools were filed by Reps. Howard Chapin, D-Beaufort, and Frank Rhodes, R-Forsyth.

"Anybody who can't make 700 just shouldn't be going to the university, period," said Chapin.

He said he chose 700 as a minimum after William Friday, president of the UNC system, recommended it to the House and Senate Higher Education committees.

Radio Shack wants to give your "orphaned" computer a new home—the junk pile—and give you $75 or $150 credit toward a popular Tandy or Radio Shack personal computer.

Start Again with Radio Shack and a Computer You Can Depend Upon

It's estimated there are already several million owners of orphaned computers in the U.S. And the list of orphans is a long one: Coleco Adam, Atari 400 and 600, Mattel Aquarius, Commodore VIC 20, Eagle, Franklin Ace, Osborne, SpectraVideo, Texas Instruments' TI 99/4A, Timex-Sinclair 1000 ... and maybe another in tomorrow's newspaper.

But at Radio Shack, our computers are always part of the family. We think you should be able to expect years of dependable service and support from your computer and from your computer company. So, since 1977, we've carefully designed and built computers that last. Computers with options to grow as you need.

So Here's Our Offer

Now through February 28, bring your orphan (even an old TV game)—in any condition—to your nearby Radio Shack Computer Center, Radio Shack store or participating dealer. We'll give you a credit toward the 64K Color Computer 2 (26-3127) or TRS-80 Model 4 (26-1067, 26-1068 or 26-1069). Or take your orphan to a Radio Shack Computer Center for credit to use toward our new, IBM-compatible Tandy 1000 (25-1000).

A TV game or an orphan computer without a disk drive will get you a $75 credit to use toward any of the three computers. An orphan computer with a disk drive will get you a $150 credit toward a 64K Color Computer 2 with disk drive (26-3029), a Model 4 or a Tandy 1000.

That's all there is to it, and with CitiLine financing available, you could walk out with your new Radio Shack computer today.

Legislators Quick To Break Rules

By F. ALAN BOYCE
Associated Press Writer
RALEIGH (AP) — Whether it's done to speed action on an important bill or just to help a local delegation introduce legislation late, some state lawmakers worry that the General Assembly breaks its own rules too often.

"When somebody requests to suspend the rules and we're violating the rules, it throws us all in a quandary," said Sen. Bill Redman, R-Iredell, at a recent meeting of the Senate Rules Committee. "It's always caused me a little headache. I wonder what the public thinks about it. Are we going to even have rules?"

Redman and other Republicans could do little but watch as Democrats, on the first day of the session, easily amassed the two-thirds vote needed to suspend the rules and pass a resolution pushing Gov. Jim Martin's address to the Legislature back 10 days.

On a non-partisan issue, however, Sen. Marshall Rauch, D-Gaston, led senators in preventing Sen. Charles Hipps, D-Haywood, from suspending the rules to immediately consider one of his bills.

When the Senate Rules Committee adopted the 1985 rules, there was debate over ideas to make it harder to suspend them — at least when it came to introducing late bills.

Senate Majority Leader Ken Royall, D-Durham, favored requiring four-fifths of the members vote to suspend the rules to introduce legislation late. However, committee members agreed not to change the rules unless the House adopted a similar change.

And, while both Houses have set April 15 as the deadline for local bills, the Senate is still waiting for the House to agree on a deadline for all non-emergency legislation. Senators have suggested May 1 while House members may be considering May 15.

House Speaker Pro Tem Jack Hunt said rules in the House "have been handled in a manner that was reasonable and orderly on the whole," but he admitted late bills are often an exception.

"There have been some people in the past that have held some pretty heavy bills back toward the end of the session," he said. "They might have been trying to have some advantage by not getting them in early."

Late bills, if they are important, sometimes skip through committees and avoid extensive debate in the rush toward adjournment, Hunt said.

Hunt said he knew of no attempts to raise the percentage needed to suspend the rules and introduce late bills but admitted the public might have reason to question some of the bills that slip in.

"You could think of some instances where it seems like it might not have been necessary," he said.

Democrats Citing Martin For Double-Talk In Firings

RALEIGH (AP) — Democratic leaders trying to put Gov. Jim Martin on the defensive say his administration's firings of state employees expose the Republican chief executive's "double-talk."

Martin "has refused to admit to the people of the state that he is firing large numbers of state workers," Democratic Party Chairman Wade Smith said Wednesday. "Instead, he has made high-minded pledges about bipartisanship — then proceeded to fire scores of state employees who happen to be Democrats."

Smith issued his statement after Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan, titular head of the Democratic Party, said in a news conference the dismissals show "that there is some double-talk going on."

Jack Hawke, Martin's special assistant for policy, said the critics were "entirely mistaken" and that the number of dismissals had been "extremely low."

"It sounds like ... a smoke screen, an attempt to intimidate the governor and his administration," said Hawke. "And none of it's going to work."

During his campaign, Martin criticized former Gov. Jim Hunt for enlarging the number of state employees exempt from the State Personnel Act, which protects them from politically-motivated dismissal.

Martin promised repeatedly not to fire career state workers, but said he would replace policy makers with his supporters to gain control of the executive branch.

Jordan said Wednesday that he didn't object to the spoils system, but that Martin was practicing it after renouncing it. "The thing that disturbs me the most is saying one thing and doing another," said Jordan.

He said many of the people being fired were not "political appointees," specifically mentioning three division heads or deputy secretaries dismissed recently in the Department of Human Resources and the Department of Natural and Economic Resources and Community Development.

Hawke said that of the 1,700 positions Hunt exempted from the personnel act, fewer than 200 had been filled with Martin loyalists.

"If you want to talk about heads rolling and the hatchet falling, how many members of the old lieutenant governor's staff were asked to stay even one day?" said Hawke. "We've still got some of Hunt's people in the governor's office."

Meanwhile, Republican lawmakers accused the Democrats of encroaching on Martin's authority by introducing a bill that probably would deny him the chance to appoint his Democratic supporters to the State Board of Elections.

The bill, sponsored by Rep. Charles Beall, D-Haywood, and co-signed by dozens of Democrats, would require that Martin's appointees be endorsed by chairmen of the party with which they're affiliated.

Under current law, no more than three members of any party may be on the five-member election board.

Hawke said Beall's bill, which also would extend State Elections Director Alex Brock's term until 1989, apparently was an attempt to keep Democrats in charge of the election system.

"The Legislature should be working on programs to try to make the elections process as clean as possible, not on efforts to tie the governor's hands," said Hawke.

Beall said the bill would make the state system conform with the system on the county level. There, county party chairmen submit candidates for local election boards.

"Let's give the parties a voice in the makeup of the elections board," said Beall, who serves the same district as House Speaker Liston Ramsey. "I think it's only fair."

College Officials Cool To Aid Cuts

GREENSBORO (AP) — A U.S. education official's message that families should start taking the primary responsibility for the cost of a college education drew criticism from financial aid officers from colleges across the southeast.

"The middle-class beneficiaries of this program are being supported by tax dollars from lower-class taxpayers," C. Ronald Kimberling, deputy assistant secretary for post-secondary education, said Wednesday. There are some serious philosophical doubts about how far the government is getting into middle-class subsidies.

The 300 aid officers, members of the Southern Association of Student Financial Aid Administrators, listened as Kimberling explained the Reagan administration's plans to cut student financial aid by $1.5 billion in 1986.

But when the aid officers, meeting this week in Greensboro, voiced their anger at the plan, which includes a $4,000 cap on the total amount of aid a student may receive.

"You say you want to make sure the neediest students are helped," said Eleanor Starr of Kentucky's

Spaulding University. "A $4,000 cap is not going to help our neediest students. Our tuition and books for one year is over $4,000. To say the poorest of the poor will be given a choice is just not true. The idea of demonstrated need is the underlying principle we operate on."

Another aid officer, referring to the government's bailout of the Chrysler Corp., drew loud and long applause when he said, "Chrysler turned a $1.2 billion profit last year. I would submit you would get the same return on your investment if you invested in students."

ABC's 'Bunny's Tale' Offers Glance At Playboy Club

By JERRY BUCK
AP Television Writer
LOS ANGELES (AP) — Feminist Gloria Steinem gives the Playboy Bunny's tail a tweak in an ABC movie about her undercover assignment for a magazine story.

The story of how Ms. Steinem became a Playboy Bunny for Show magazine 22 years ago is told in "A Bunny's Tale" Monday night. Kirstie Alley stars as Ms. Steinem.

Miss Steinem's bunny career in 1963 was a short one, but it produced a piece exploring the seductive fantasy of the newly opened New York Playboy Club. The experience also figured in Ms. Steinem's emergence as a forceful advocate for contemporary causes.

"Gloria's changed a lot since then," said Miss Alley. "When she was a young journalist, as most women at the time, she thought she would work for a while, then get married and just continue her writing as a hobby. The bunny incident was not a major turning point in her life, but it was a catalyst that made her see the need for it."

"Being a bunny — and this is the way she described it and the way I describe it — was shocking. I had never been put in a position before to be so humiliated. On our Playboy Club set we had about 150 men extras, and everything Gloria described went on there. The men pinched my bunny tail, they called me 'baby.' And this was all before the cameras were even turned on."

Miss Alley added, "You wonder what gives these men that right. Then you walk by a mirror and see yourself in this costume and you realize you're contributing to it."

Gloria knew this, and she'd look around and see these other women. She knew she was doing it for the story, but she wondered why the others were doing it. She talked to the other bunnies and their reasons — to meet famous people, to become a movie star or because the pay was higher than for an ordinary waitress — became part of her story."

Karen Arthur directed Deena Goldstone's screenplay for Stan Margulies Productions. Margulies was the producer of "Roots" and "The Thorn Birds." "A Bunny's Tale" also stars Cotter Smith, Deborah Van Valkenburgh, Joanna Kerns, Lisa Pelikan, Mary Woronov, Delta Burke and Diana Scarwid.

Ms. Steinem was reluctant to sell the film rights to her story. She felt her early career had been harmed because some people perceived her not as a serious journalist but as a bunny.

"She wanted to forget that she had ever been a bunny," said Miss Alley.

"But when she learned that she would have some control, that it wouldn't be done exploitatively, she agreed. She went to a lot of trouble to speak to me at great length and help me with my research for the role."

"After I got the part I flew to New York and spent four days with her. I was aware of what she had done in the past 15 years, but I didn't know what she was like. She told me it is not the goal of women to be a man. Of course, but I was complimented if somebody said, 'You did as good as a man.' After I finished this picture I realized what she meant."

Miss Alley had just completed a starring role with Tom Selleck in "Runaway" when she was cast. "I don't think I was their first choice," she said. "They were looking for a big name. But they liked my past work and my reading. I think my appearance as Maggie the Cat in 'Cat on a Hot Tin Roof' at the Mark Taper Forum had a lot to do with my selection."

Her professional film debut was as Mr. Spock's Vulcan protegee in "Star Trek II." She also starred in "Champions" and was a regular in the ABC series "Masquerade." She is married to actor Parker Stevenson, who played Frank Hardy in "The Hardy Boys."

Miss Alley grew up in Wichita, Kan., and attended Kansas State

University. "After school, I decided to drive to Hollywood and become a movie star," she said. "We made a film in drama class, and an agent saw it and signed me and got me my first job."

CBS Official Praises Flaw-Finder

NEW YORK (AP) — One day after a celebration marking the end of retired Gen. William C. Westmoreland's $120 million libel suit against the network, the CBS News president issued a memo praising the executive whose internal investigation of the documentary found 11 "principal flaws."

"Your findings were both painful to us and encouraging to us — they pointed to embarrassing transgressions of our own CBS News guidelines," CBS News President Edward M. Joyce wrote to Burton Benjamin, a CBS senior producer.

The memo, issued Wednesday, was circulated widely among the network news staff, with copies going to former defendants Mike Wallace and George Crile as well as Walter Cronkite, Charles Kuralt and Dan Rather.

Crile produced and Wallace narrated the documentary "The Uncounted Enemy: A Vietnam Deception," which alleged Westmoreland deliberately withheld enemy troop counts from his superiors to maintain public support for the war.

Both sides announced Monday the suit had been dropped after 18 weeks of testimony. CBS corporate and news personnel celebrated the settlement with a party at Regine's, the Park Avenue night spot.

"I think this is a time for us to feel relief but not jubilation," Joyce said Wednesday when asked why he had written the memo. "And I think it is a time for us to reflect, and then go about the business of good journalism."

Benjamin, who is currently in Cambodia and Vietnam preparing a documentary on the 10th anniversary of the fall of Saigon, conducted the internal investigation between May and July 1982.

He found that during the documentary's filming there were problems with "coddling sympathetic witnesses," choosing to interview mostly witnesses who supported the show's thesis and failing to demonstrate there was a "conspiracy to suppress information about enemy troop strength during the Vietnam War."

Van Gordon Sauter, then president of CBS News and now executive vice president of the CBS broadcast group, said later the network "concluded that any flaws in the preparation did not undermine the editorial integrity of the story."

PBS To Broadcast Financial Matter

NEW YORK (AP) — The Public Broadcasting Service, battling severe cuts in federal aid, will broadcast stock quotations and financial news to subscribers with personal computers in hopes of generating millions of dollars in new annual revenues, The New York Times reported today.

"This doesn't mean we won't need all sorts of other support," said Neil B. Mahner, the chief executive of PBS's new subsidiary, PBS Enterprises, which negotiated the deal. "But it helps, and it could help a lot."

PBS executives said they thought the venture could bring in tens of millions of dollars each year to the nation's public broadcasting system, the Times said.

PBS will join with International Business Machines Corp. and Merrill Lynch & Co. in the venture.

If successful, industry experts said, it could also create a new use for personal computers, combining television and computer technology, according to the Times.

The special signal would not be visible on ordinary television screens but would appear as text on the video display screens of personal computers equipped with special decoders.

PBS executives said the arrangement was unusual for the non-profit broadcasting system, but added it was only intended to provide a portion of PBS's funds, the Times reported.

Artificial Heart Patients Finding 'Bond'

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Murray Haydon's rapid recuperation seems to be a tonic for fellow artificial heart recipient William Schroeder, and their families have formed a "tremendous bond" that will help both men, a Haydon relative says.

Meanwhile, doctors said today that Haydon, who suffers from a mild kidney problem, would probably be given sedatives to help him rest. "He was a little more tired last night as a result of so much sitting up," said Dr. Allan M. Lansing.

Haydon's heart rate was increased from 60 to 65 beats per minute Wednesday, while Schroeder marked his 88th day on a Jarvik-7 heart with an Ash Wednesday blessing and by eating pizza offered by his nurses.

Schroeder was to have repeated his outdoor venture of Tuesday, but Dr. William C. DeVries, who implanted the hearts in both men, angrily canceled the trip because TV crews were impeding traffic and "creating chaos" in the parking lot.

"In retrospect, we should have set up a pool (camera) situation so everybody could have" videotape of Schroeder outdoors in his wheelchair, said hospital spokesman Robert Irvine. "My understanding is that Dr. DeVries is extremely upset right now about the media situation."

Lansing, medical director of Humana's Heart Institute, told reporters at a briefing today that Haydon "probably will be given a mild sedative" today so the 58-year-old retired autoworker can rest better.

"He continues to have mild renal failure," but Dr. Sidney Marcum, a kidney specialist "believes it is very temporary and did not recommend any medication." Lansing said Marcum examined Haydon on Wednesday and said the kidney problem was due to Haydon's condition before surgery and to the stress of the surgery.

Haydon is expelling urine in increasing amounts and "there is no unusual accumulation of fluids," Lansing said.

On Wednesday, Lansing said that Schroeder had made a "dramatic improvement" and might be well enough to leave the hospital next week. Schroeder's feeding tube was removed from his nose Wednesday.

Lansing admitted that was an about-face from Monday, when he said Schroeder was so ill and dispirited he might never leave the hospital.

Schroeder, 53, received the artificial heart on Nov. 25. The Jasper, Ind., resident had grown discouraged and listless after strokes and a persistent fever halted his progress toward recovery.

He visited Haydon on Tuesday, and although the two have not conversed, they have the common bond of being kept alive by plastic and metal man-made hearts.

In their first interview since Haydon received a Jarvik-7 on Sunday, members of Haydon's family said that Schroeder had benefitted from Haydon's swift and thus far uncomplicated recovery.

"They're going to be a big help," Keith Welsh, Haydon's son-in-law, said of the Schroeder family. "We can't say, but we feel there's a lot going for both of them now, that it was just one family and now it's a tremendous bond of two families."

The Schroeders had been alone, but "now they have us," Welsh said, "so together we can work so that, if Haydon is down one day, the Schroeders can build him up and vice versa."

Lansing said Schroeder was initiating conversations again and talking more. "He has been able to say today certain more complicated words, like Mississippi," he said.

"He is laughing more, he is inter-relating to the environment more. I think this indicates marked improvements in his spirits," Lansing said.

Welsh said the family hoped Schroeder and Haydon would become buddies, so they could "play cards or run down the hall and have races, just so they can laugh."

Also taking part in the interview were Haydon's wife, Juanita; her son Derek, 24, and daughter Diana Welsh, 30, both of Louisville; daughter Anita Daugherty, 26, and her husband, Rick, 31, of Wheatland, Calif.

Haydon, true to his introspective nature, feels little need to talk about the artificial heart that saved his life, his family said.

"He didn't care if he was the first, the fifth or the thousandth, but just that he would feel better and be with us," said Mrs. Daugherty. "I really know he's glad to be here still."

First Heart-Transplant Mother Dies

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Betsy Sneith, kept alive by a donated heart for four years, has died of cardiac arrest five months after becoming the first heart transplant recipient to give birth, doctors say. She was 24.

Ms. Sneith, of suburban Santee, died Wednesday at the University of California San Diego Medical Center, the same hospital where her daughter was delivered in September.

Because Ms. Sneith was unmarried and the infant's closest known relative, her grandmother, lives in Pennsylvania, the child is being cared for at the county Hillcrest Receiving Home, said hospital spokeswoman Pat Jacoby.

Mrs. Jacoby said Ms. Sneith's sudden death "was a surprise. There hadn't been any indication of previous problems."

Paramedics were summoned to Ms. Sneith's home shortly after noon Wednesday when she began suffering chest pains. A medical evacuation helicopter was used to transport her to the UCSD Medical Center, where she died shortly before 3 p.m.

Cardiologist Howard Dittich said death was due to cardiac arrest. He said further details would have to await an autopsy, which was scheduled to be performed today.

Ms. Sneith gave birth to a 7 pound, 1 ounce girl on Sept. 16, 1984, at the UCSD Medical Center, four years after receiving the heart of a 23-year-old man killed in an auto accident. The heart transplant operation was performed at Stanford University Hospital.

UCSD doctors said Ms. Sneith's pregnancy was the first successful, full-term pregnancy among heart transplant recipients. Other women with heart transplants have tried unsuccessfully to have children.

Ms. Sneith named her daughter Sierra Jamieson. In interviews last year after the birth of her daughter, Ms. Sneith said in the interviews that the fanfare surrounding her feat was not "important to me. I feel real glad that I had my baby."

Ms. Sneith underwent the transplant surgery in 1980 to replace her diseased heart, which was failing because of a growing tumor on the left side of the organ. Doctors at the time had given her only two months to live unless she underwent the transplant.

Study Says Cold Viruses Damage Germ Defenses

By DANIEL Q. HANEY
AP Science Writer

BOSTON (AP) — Common cold viruses damage the tiny, hair-like structures that sweep germs from children's lungs, and doctors say this may help explain why tots so often seem to fall victim to new infections while recovering from colds.

The researchers discovered that cold viruses temporarily disrupt the body's machinery for making cilia, one of the main lines of defense against respiratory diseases.

The cilia don't work properly for several weeks after a cold. They said this may leave the youngsters susceptible to repeat bouts of the same infection or to other ailments while their bodies repair the damage.

The study, directed by Dr. Johnny A. Carson at the University of North Carolina School of Medicine, was published in the New England Journal of Medicine.

Specialized cells in the body's airways are covered with the hair-like cilia. They constantly beat and push mucus out of the lungs. In the process, they gather up germs and debris and carry them away.

"When the cell becomes infected with a virus, the virus tells it to make more virus," said Dr. Albert M. Collier, another researcher. "It also seems to be able to alter the normal machinery of the cell that is making the tubular structure of the cilia. So cilia that replace those being lost are constructed improperly and are not able to beat."

Hundreds of different viruses can cause colds in children, and the researchers are currently trying to identify which ones are most damaging to the cilia.

"That way hopefully we can encourage the medical community to make vaccines against them," Collier said.

Carson added that this damage might also contribute to the cold's symptoms. Youngsters may cough and sneeze more because their cilia aren't working properly.

The researchers speculated that similar viral damage may occur in adults, but they have not investigated this yet.

The study was conducted by sampling tiny bits of tissue from the noses of 85 youngsters who attended a day care center. They used an electron microscope to compare the condition of their cilia when they were well and when they had colds. They found that the sickest youngsters had the most abnormal cilia.

Influenza viruses, which often cause cold symptoms in children, seemed most adept at disarming the youngsters' cilia. Other germs that also did this were adenoviruses, parainfluenza viruses, respiratory syncytial virus and herpes simplex virus.

"This may also have ramifications in bacterial infections," Carson said. "If the virus is able to shut down the mucus clearance system, this can predispose the respiratory tract to subsequent bacterial infection, including pneumonia and other respiratory problems."

The researchers added that similar damage to the cilia in the middle ear could leave victims susceptible to otitis media, a form of ear ache common among children.

Multiple Sclerosis Report Disputed

BOSTON (AP) — A major new study contradicts the findings of a widely publicized report two years ago that sparked a burst of demand among multiple sclerosis victims for an expensive and controversial form of treatment.

The therapy, available mostly in private clinics, uses pressurized oxygen chambers to try to relieve the effects of multiple sclerosis, a crippling nerve disorder that is difficult to treat.

Two years ago, a study in the New England Journal of Medicine compared this approach — called hyperbaric oxygen therapy — with dummy treatment and found that some patients seemed to be helped by the oxygen.

BOSTON (AP) — The medical cost of the AIDS epidemic will exceed half a billion dollars this year, and a federal fund may be necessary to pay for treatment of the catastrophic disease, researchers conclude in a report issued today.

The researchers estimate that at least 400,000 people in the United States have been infected so far with the suspected AIDS virus, HTLV-3. The disease is so new that no one knows what proportion of these people will actually get AIDS, or acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

Recent surveys show that the infection is spreading rapidly among homosexuals who live in cities other than New York and San Francisco, where the disease was first concentrated.

"Given what is already known about the high and rising seroprevalence (blood evidence) of HTLV-3 in known risk groups and the potential for spread to other populations, the implications of the presence of this virus in a community are staggering," the researchers wrote in the New England Journal of Medicine.

The report, which summarized recent findings about the scope of the epidemic, was written by Dr. Sheldon H. Landesman of Downstate Medical Center in New York City and two physicians from the National Institutes of Health.

More than 8,000 AIDS cases have been reported since 1981, and experts predict that there will be at least that many new cases during the next year alone.

They noted that the average hospital cost of a single AIDS victim is $42,000. This year, the care of newly diagnosed patients will total about $336 million. A new blood test intended to screen blood donors for the disease will cost an additional $100 million a year.

"It is not unreasonable to estimate," they wrote, "that AIDS will cost our society more than half a billion dollars during the next calendar year."

Because money spent on AIDS must be allocated at the expense of other health programs, they suggested setting up a national catastrophic fund for AIDS that would be similar to the federal End Stage Renal Disease program, which provides dialysis and transplants for victims of kidney disease.

That program guarantees 80 percent of the cost of kidney dialysis and other health care required by kidney patients will be paid for by the government through supplemental Medicare funds. In 1982 the program cost about $2 billion for kidney treatment of about 70,000 Americans receiving dialysis.

"We're dealing with a real, enormous, new human tragedy that deserves our fullest attention, regardless of our social or sexual orientation," Landesman said in an interview.

Nearly all the victims so far have been homosexual men or injectable drug abusers. The disease might also be spread by heterosexual contact, doctors believe, although there is little evidence that this has happened yet.

"One doesn't need to have heterosexual spread to have a tragedy of enormous dimensions on our hands," Landesman said.

The researchers estimated that 400,000 people in the United States have antibodies in their blood to HTLV-3. The presence of these antibodies indicates that people have been infected with the virus, but it doesn't necessarily mean that they'll get AIDS.

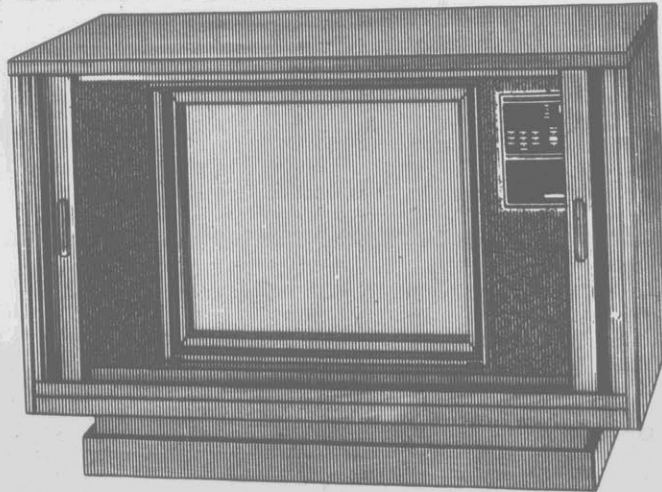

People can carry the virus in their bodies for many years before they get sick. During one five-year followup, 19 percent of the infected people developed AIDS.

AIDS is marked by the inability of the body's immune system to resist disease. Homosexuals, Haitians, abusers of injectable drugs and hemophiliacs are most likely to get AIDS.

As of Jan. 28, 1985, AIDS had struck 8,057 people and claimed 3,863 lives since June 1, 1981, in the United States, according to the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta.

Fugitive Lawyer Will Stand Trial

SAN RAFAEL, Calif. (AP) — Former fugitive lawyer Stephen Bingham, accused of triggering the bloodiest escape attempt in San Quentin prison history by smuggling a gun to black militant George Jackson, says he's not surprised a judge has ordered him to stand trial.

Bingham, scion of a prominent Connecticut family, surfaced last summer after 13 years in hiding. He said he thought the time was right to get a fair trial on five counts of murder and one of conspiracy handed down in an October 1971 grand jury indictment.

After one of California's longest and most expensive preliminary hearings ended Wednesday with a judge ordering Bingham to stand trial, the 42-year lawyer said he's more confident than ever he'll be proven innocent.

"The state's case against me is even weaker than I would have imagined," said Bingham, who is free on bail and was ordered to appear in Marin County Superior Court on March 6 for a trial that could last six months.

"There was no surprise," he said. "Throughout this long period, I was very encouraged ... and I'm very confident a jury is going to acquit me. I'm much more confident now."

Bingham, 29 when the San Quentin shootings occurred Aug. 21, 1971, was working on a class-action suit against conditions in the prison's adjustment center, where Jackson and other dangerous inmates were held. Bingham disappeared shortly afterward.

Presiding Municipal Court Judge William H. Stephens, who reduced Bingham's bail to $300,000 from $400,000 on Wednesday, called the three-month hearing "an unusual case," noting that it included 56 witnesses.

No witness during the preliminary hearing testified that he or she saw Bingham give Jackson the gun during their meeting in the prison visiting room minutes before the shooting.

Jackson brandished a 9mm automatic pistol minutes after leaving the visiting room, triggering the violence that left himself, two other inmates and three guards dead.

Weinglass argued that Bingham was being made a "scapegoat" by the state and that "there was a plot by officials to assassinate" Jackson, an author of two books on prison life and a revolutionary who tried to organize black prisoners.

Weinglass claimed the escape was set up by prison officials with the help of the FBI, and that Jackson may have taken the gun from a guard after leaving the visiting room.

Donald Duck 'Voice' Dies

BURBANK, Calif. (AP) — Clarence "Ducky" Nash, who once yearned to be a doctor but said he became the biggest "quack" around as the voice of the Donald Duck, has died at the age of 80.

Nash died Wednesday of leukemia at St. Joseph Medical Center, said hospital spokeswoman Rhoda Weiss.

The Watonga, Okla., native joined Walt Disney Pictures on Dec. 2, 1933, and retired more than 14 years ago, but he was in great demand the past few years to make personal appearances.

"I'm busier now than when I was under contract," Nash said a few years ago. "Actually, I originally wanted to be a doctor, but instead I became the biggest 'quack' in the world."

Donald was featured in more than 150 cartoon shorts and several full-length feature films.

Nash grew up in Glasgow and Fairmont, Mo. The latter is now known as Independence, and Clarence became acquainted with another resident named Harry Truman.

"My parents were very patient, and they put up with my imitations of the animals I heard," he told an interviewer in 1984. "One of my pets was a billygoat, and I tried to use his voice reciting 'Mary Had a Little Lamb.'"

His animal imitations led to a career on the stage and later in radio. In 1930, Nash and his bride, Margie, found themselves broke in San Francisco. "We wanted to come to Los Angeles, and the cheapest way was by freighter," he said. "When we arrived, I had 10 cents and Margie had 50 cents."

One of his radio appearances prompted an audition at the Disney studio. "That's our talking duck," Walt Disney declared after hearing Nash perform. Donald was born June 9, 1934.

The success of the bad-tempered duck, who made his debut in the 1934 "Wise Little Hen" cartoon, was assured from the moment Nash opened his mouth, said Frank Thomas, a longtime Disney animator.

"We had many fine actors come and do voices, but I couldn't visualize anything," Thomas said. "Clarence, with his crazy quack ... you really believed it."

"In all my years of working for Walt we had only one argument," Nash said in the 1984 interview. "My name got into print as being the voice of Donald Duck, and Walt called me into his office and bawled me out. He said it would destroy the illusion to publicize the people who did the voices."

"When RKO began distributing the pictures, the salesmen convinced Walt that it would help to have publicity about the voices. So I started doing it, and I've been doing it ever since."

Nash wasn't a one-duck man. He also provided the voices of Huey, Dewey and Louie; Daisy; Jiminy Cricket (following the death of Cliff Edwards); a bullfrog in "Bambi"; dogs in "101 Dalmatians"; birds in the Tiki Room at Disneyland; and, a few times, Mickey Mouse.

The biggest challenge, Nash found, was when Donald Duck cartoons had to be dubbed in foreign languages for distribution overseas.

"Words were written out for me phonetically," he said. "I learned to quack in French, Spanish, Portuguese, Japanese, Chinese and German."

FOCUS

New York to Dubuque

New Yorker magazine celebrates its 60th anniversary today. Its founder, Harold Ross, wanted it to have a satirical vein that would mark it as "not for the little old lady in Dubuque." The magazine receives upward of 250,000 unsolicited stories, cartoons, jokes and ideas each year. E.B. White, S. J. Perelman and Charles Addams were among the famous writers and cartoonists who contributed to the New Yorker. Rea Irvin created the magazine's trademark, the dandy "Eustace Tilley."

DO YOU KNOW — What New Yorker contributor wrote "The Secret Life of Walter Mitty?"

WEDNESDAY'S ANSWER — The Mayan civilization flourished in Central America before 900 A.D.

FORECAST FOR FRIDAY, FEB. 22, 1985

YOUR DAILY Horoscope from the Carroll Righter Institute

GENERAL TENDENCIES: The very early morning finds some confusing or muddled thinking if one strays from the path of good judgment which is particularly evident at the same time.

ARIES (Mar. 21 to Apr. 19) Plan how to go after what you desire, and avoid a higher-up who may be in a bad mood. You can then find happiness.

TAURUS (Apr. 20 to May 20) Get in touch with experts, and then go after personal aims that mean much to you, so forget about going off on any tangents.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21) Plan how to turn new acquaintances into good friends today and don't be so concerned with money matters.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to Jul. 21) Get into civic duties and add to present prestige and forget a partner who is acting strangely today.

LEO (Jul. 22 to Aug. 21) Handle only work that is important today and then be off to make calls, visit with interesting people and enrich your way of life.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22) Early get at your regular work and make it more pleasant by using mechanisms that make it easier to handle.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22) Be with a partner at some new site where you can come to a far better understanding for the future.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21) Get busy at tasks that will please kin, and make the home more comfortable instead of running off on tangents.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21) Get together with congenials and forget that monetary problem that has you upset for awhile.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20) Your hunches are not very accurate in the morning so go along with the views of others, particularly where money is concerned.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19) Don't permit a private worry to knock you for a loop and go ahead and handle business and personal affairs intelligently.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to Mar. 20) If you get the advice of a fine expert, you can handle financial affairs very effectively now. Get ahead very fast.

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY ... he or she will early comprehend practical affairs as they truly are and particularly where the modern is concerned, so don't try to confine your progeny to the antiquated. One who will want to pioneer in new activities and inventions, and become very successful thereby.

"The Stars impel; they do not compel." What you make of your life is largely up to you!

Many players do not seem to differentiate between the laws of the game and the cliches handed down as gospel. The latter govern general situations, and you have to know when to depart from them.

Since he had only a doubleton in his partner's suit North might have been wiser to bid three no trump rather than four hearts. Even so, it took expert defense to defeat the heart game.

West led his fourth-best spade, declarer won in dummy and East started an echo by playing the ten. On a trump lead from the table, East jumped in with the ace of hearts to return his remaining spade, won on the board. West won the next trump and gave his partner a spade ruff.

With three tricks in the bank, East looked round for the setting trick. The lead had marked declarer with four spades, and if he had more than five hearts the defense stood no chance — dummy's ace-king and ace would handle all of declarer's minor-suit losers. However, the major-suit attack had stripped dummy down to only minor-suit cards. East realized that, if his partner held the queen of diamonds and queen of clubs, the contract might be defeated. He returned a diamond and declarer was locked on the table. He could not get back to his hand for a club finesse, so he had to concede down one.

East shattered two of the oldest cliches in bridge: "Second hand low" and "lead through weakness and up to strength." Successful defense depended on finding West with the key cards that mattered, and then using those cards to best advantage.

Talks End

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — A meeting between Foreign Minister Leo Tindemans and NATO Secretary General Lord Carrington wrapped up a month-long round of talks with the allies about the deployment of cruise missiles in Belgium, officials said.

No details of the meeting were released but sources who asked not to be identified said Carrington told Tindemans he expects Belgium to show solidarity with its allies and deploy 48 cruise missiles.

Tindemans' findings will be presented to Prime Minister Wilfried Martens, government spokesman Christian Monnoyer said. Martens has said he will announce a decision on a timetable for the deployment of the first 16 missiles by the end of March.

Study Shows Foreign Aircraft Cutting Into U.S. Jet Market

WASHINGTON (AP) — Foreign producers are eroding the onetime dominance of the U.S. civilian aircraft industry by taking over much of the small plane market and aggressively challenging America's jetliner manufacturers, a new study concludes.

The report by the National Academy of Engineering urged a broad range of actions needed to protect U.S. manufacturers, including increased monitoring of trade agreements that involve aircraft sales and government loan support policies that "match those available to foreign competitors."

The report comes as U.S. aircraft manufacturers, ranging from the Boeing Co., which produces 60 percent of the world's jetliners, to U.S. builders of small, private planes, are increasingly complaining about foreign competition.

The Reagan administration added to the concern of aviation industry earlier this month when it proposed elimination of $3.8 billion in direct Export-Import Bank loans for U.S. products sold to foreign buyers. U.S. aircraft manufacturers are the leading beneficiaries of such loans.

The report which was conducted at the request of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, makes no direct reference to the administration proposal to end the direct loans, but criticizes the "uncertain financing" from the Ex-Im Bank that, it says, has put U.S. manufacturers at a disadvantage.

The report noted that the American civilian aviation manufacturing industry accounts for more than $17 billion in total sales annually, ranks second only to agriculture in export sales, employees more than 600,000 workers, has significant defense related importance to the country and has "become symbolic of U.S. technological leadership."

Yet, the study said that a combination of heightened international competition and the changes brought to the airline industry by deregulation have combined to erode the onetime U.S. domination of aircraft manufacturing.

The impact of foreign competition varies within the industry, the report said.

"In large transports the U.S. position of dominance has been shaken but remains strong," the study concluded, although suggesting that American manufacturers in the future will tend to seek out foreign partners. Boeing already has agreements with Japanese manufacturers in connection with the construction of some of its newest airplanes.

It notes the growth of Airbus Industrie, the European consortium which aggressively competes with Boeing around the world and hopes to gain a greater foothold among U.S. airlines with its development of the A320 aircraft in a few years.

In the manufacture of smaller planes — general aviation and business aircraft — the report said there is an "urgent" need to regain market share on the part of the U.S. builders.

In addition to the traditional competition from Europe, such countries as Japan, Indonesia, Brazil and Spain also have been very active in selling commuter and smaller, private aircraft, the study pointed out.
