MX Facing Showdown

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nuclear MX missile, survivor of more than a decade of controversy and debate, headed today for a Senate showdown with a key Republican vote-counter saying Vice President George Bush may have to cast the tie-breaking vote.

Sen. Alan K. Simpson, the assistant Republican leader, said also some hold-out senators of both parties are placing such "outrageous" price tags on their votes that he would like to ask them, "Why don't you get a mask and a gun?"

Even with President Reagan counting on an intense personal lobbying campaign to see him through "a make-or-break vote," the outcome in the Senate remained too close to call as the late afternoon vote approached.

"I think it will be a close vote, but the administration will prevail, Simpson said. "I think it could possibly even take the vice president to break the tie. No fooling."

Simpson, who has been wooing a dwindling band of uncommitted senators, expressed outrage that some "are engaging in the ancient and venerable practice of holding out for something."

"For some of them, the price isn't worth it," he said. "Some people are trying for things that are really outrageous. There have been some demands that are preposterous."

"So you say, if you're in that game, get a mask and a gun," Simpson said.

He said some hold-outs are pondering their votes "cautiously and carefully" but that others are out for what they can get. He declined to name names.

An Associated Press survey of all 100 senators showed 45 ready to vote for the MX or leaning strongly in that direction with 43 opposed and 12

City School Board Orders Work On 3 New Programs

By JERRY RAYNOR
Reflector Staff Writer

Authorization for city school staff to proceed with groundwork for three recommended new programs was given by the Greenville Board of Education Monday night.

The school staff will now formulate plans for the possible introduction of a Reserve Officers Training Corps unit at Rose High; put into effect in school year 1985-86 changes in the physical education program at Rose, and draw up a program for a girls' soccer team at Rose.

Dr. Delmar Blinson, former superintendent and now consultant to the school board, said the ROTC unit at Rose would cost a maximum of $25,000 annually — $12,000 for the salary of a commanding officer, $9,000 for a non-commissioned officer's salary, and $4,000 for supplies.

"These are top figures," Blinson said. "The actual salary figures could be much lower depending on the current retired pay status of the individuals who would be conducting the program." The $4,000 supplies figure would be primarily for rifles, with the Army to furnish uniforms and maintenance of uniforms.

In a first, little-publicized attempt to determine the extent of interest on the part of students in a ROTC program, it was noted that a few less than 100 had expressed interest.

Asked about the benefits of ROTC, Blinson cited "the tremendous potential in preparation for college ROTC," leadership training, "creating a new outlet for school spirit," and "providing a new field of interest for something like 100 students."

If the program is adopted, those taking it will receive credit for the course. Currently, there are two ROTC programs in Pitt County schools, at D. H. Conley and North Pitt.

Changes in the physical education program will constitute a pilot program for a one-year period, school year 1985-86, with the new arrangement to be evaluated at the end of that school year.

Each of the proposed five categories of physical education will be good for one-half unit of credit, and will be scheduled to permit a student to take one program one semester, another program in a second semester.

The five proposed categories are: Team Sports, to include soccer, flag football, basketball, volleyball, wrestling and track and field; Fitness and Health, which encompasses aerobics, individual exercise programs, weight control, and a number of individual sports and recreational activities; Strength and Conditioning, designed to improve power, speed, etc., through use of weights and other methods; Adaptive Physical Education, a class for students with special needs, and Athletic Training, which focuses on first aid, CPR and other elements of assisting athletic teams.

Estimated costs for a first year of soccer for girls has been set at a little over $500, including a $300 supplement for a coach. Blinson mentioned that if Rose should have a girls' soccer team, it would be the fifth team in the area eligible to play at the 4A level.

"The $500 estimate is a long way from the total cost of the program," Blinson commented. "That estimate is for the cost of getting the program started. Eventually there would be uniform costs and maintenance of a playing field."

Board members accepted the smaller of two bids for the resaturation of the roof at Eastern Elementary School. The low bid, by Service Roofing & Sheet Metal Co. of Greenville, is for $18,772.

Crop Damage May Be Slight

Local farm officials say they don't think Monday's late-season freeze heavily damaged the county's fruit and vegetable crops but add that it may take several days for all the damage to surface.

"At this point we do not think the damage is too severe but this type of damage takes a few days to occur," Pitt Extension Agent Sam Uzzell said. "We will be looking at areas in the county today trying to assess how badly fruits and shrubs are hurt."

Uzzell said pear trees, currently in full bloom across the county, may have "taken it on the chin," along with tulip trees, an early-flowering ornamental. He had no estimate of potential cold damage to the county's strawberry crop, also in a critical stage.

According to Greenville Utilities Water Plant, the temperature dipped to a low of 26 degrees early today — slightly lower than the 27-degree threshold at which officials say damage can occur to vulnerable plants and buds.

Many fruit growers in the county have irrigation systems that can be used to protect crops from sub-freezing temperatures, Uzzell said. If sprinkler systems are activated in cold weather, the water will freeze on the plants at the 32-degree mark, insulating them and protecting them from lower, more damaging temperatures.

The mercury was expected to climb to near 60 today, with winds from the southwest at 10-15 mph. The forecast for tonight calls for fair with lows in the upper 30s. Highs Wednesday will reach the upper 60s.

County Commissioners Accept Bid For New Landfill Garage Building

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

The Pitt County Board of Commissioners Monday approved bids for an addition to the garage building at the county landfill and approved the reallocation of funds to help purchase a new fire truck for the Grimesland Fire Department.

Contracts for construction of a 25-by-40-foot addition to the landfill garage building were awarded to Smithson Inc. of Rocky Mount, which submitted the low bid of $20,327. The 20-foot high metal structure will be used to service equipment at the landfill.

Commissioners gave their approval for the use of $10,000, formerly allocated to the Bell Arthur Fire Department, to help purchase a new truck for Grimesland, pending approval by the Bell Arthur Department.

Fire Marshall Bobby Joyner told the board that half of the $20,000 allocated in the present budget to help purchase fire trucks was earmarked for Ayden and half for Bell Arthur. But Joyner said the Bell Arthur department was not expected to use the funds during this fiscal year and recommended the money be allocated to Grimesland.

The board also approved a resolution asking the Department of Transportation to pave the driveway at the Pictolus Fire Department's new building a half-mile west of the present building. Joyner explained that the present fire department building is being acquired by the DOT as part of the four-laning of U.S. 264 between Greenville and Washington.

In other business the board appointed Almyra Watson to the Bethel Planning Board; approved a fireworks display requested by the East Carolina University office of athletic marketing for April 9 at 9 p.m. in Ficklen Stadium; scheduled meetings of the Board of Equalization and Review for 2 p.m. on April 15, May 6 and May 20; set public hearings on the county's application for a development planning grant under the Community Development Block Grant program for April 1 and April 15, and scheduled a workshop session for March 26 at 10 a.m.

County Engineer Phil Dickerson, reporting on a visit to New Hanover County's waste-to-energy facility, said the $13.1 million project's incinerators burn 200 tons of municipal solid waste a day. The steam produced by the plant, Dickerson said, is sold to a manufacturing plant located nearby and used to produce electricity for sale to Carolina Power & Light Co.

Dickerson said the steam is sold at 100 percent of the cost of the cheapest fuel available to the manufacturer, while the electricity is sold to CP&L for between 2.7 cents and 4.1 cents per kilowatt hour. In addition to the sale of electricity, the county receives a cogeneration capacity credit which provides an additional 2.2 to 2.4 cents per kilowatt hour of power generated.

Dickerson's report, which said the incinerators reduce the volume of the county's solid waste by at least 85 percent, was part of a continuing interest on the part of the board to find alternatives to handling the disposal of solid wastes.

Court Upholds Draft Prosecution Policy

WASHINGTON (AP) — The federal government's former policy of prosecuting only those young men who publicized their refusal to register for the military draft was valid, the Supreme Court ruled today.

By a 7-2 vote in the case of a 24-year-old former Yale philosophy student from Pasadena, Calif., the court said the former policy did not violate any constitutional rights.

The decision clears the way for the prosecution of David Alan Wayne, who had claimed his free-speech rights were violated by the government's "selective prosecution." Today's ruling also appeared to clear the way for the prosecutions of other young men who, like Wayne, publicized their resistance to the military draft registration.

Draft registration — not the military draft — was reinstated in 1980 under a law signed by then-President Jimmy Carter. Some 12 million young men, about 98 percent of those eligible, have registered since then.

The law requires all male citizens and resident aliens born after Jan. 1, 1963, and between the ages of 18 and 26 to notify the Selective Service.

Enacted in the aftermath of the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, the law is designed to make it easier to draft young men if that becomes necessary.

Wayne challenged the government's method of "deliberately selecting for investigation and prosecution only a class of vocal protesters against the law." Those prosecuted represent a tiny fraction of the more than 700,000 who have not registered.

Writing for the high court, Justice Lewis F. Powell said Wayne "has not shown that the government prosecuted him because of his protest activities."

Powell said Wayne had shown only that the government was aware that its passive enforcement policy would result in the prosecution of vocal objectors.

The government has since abandoned its policy of prosecuting only "known" non-registrants and now seeks out all eligible young men who have failed to register.

Powell said the former policy "placed no more limitation on speech than was necessary to ensure registration for the national defense."

The decision upheld a ruling by the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Supreme Court Lifts Ban On PAC Campaign Funds

WASHINGTON (AP) — Big political spenders have won a Supreme Court victory that conservative groups say means an end to "bureaucratic tyranny" in controlling presidential campaign spending.

By a 7-2 vote Monday, the court eliminated Watergate-inspired limits on what political action committees may spend on behalf of presidential candidates.

The court declared unconstitutional a federal law limiting any political committee's spending to $1,000 for a presidential candidate who accepts public financing.

The ruling was hailed by the National Conservative Political Action Committee (NCPAC) and the Fund for a Conservative Majority (FCM), two of the nation's largest political action committees.

Chairman Robert Heckman of the FCM said the ruling means the Federal Election Commission must "end, once and for all, its bureaucratic tyranny."

NCPAC Chairman Terry Dolan added, "It is our belief that the Federal Election Commission has been out to get NCPAC and other conservative organizations."

The Democratic National Committee, which defended the spending limit law, said it will keep "an even more watchful eye on NCPAC and others" to insure that campaign financing laws that remain in force are obeyed. The court decision affects only PAC funds spent independently on behalf of a presidential candidate, not direct contributions to candidates or their campaign organizations.

PACs — and individuals — still can give no more than $1,000 in any one election to a candidate running for president, the House or the Senate.

Independent expenditures by individuals or PACs in congressional elections have no legal limits.

Also, individuals can give no more than $5,000 annually to any single PAC.

Housing Starts Fall Sharply In February

WASHINGTON (AP) — Housing construction, hurt by a steep drop in apartment building, plunged 11 percent in February, the sharpest decline in almost a year, the government reported today.

The Commerce Department said that construction of new homes dropped to a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 1.64 million units last month, down from a rate of 1.84 million units in January.

The decline, the sharpest since housing starts fell 23 percent last March, came despite the fact that construction of single-family homes rose 5.3 percent during the month.

That gain was offset by a 36.7 percent drop in construction of apartment developments with five or more units. Construction of apartment projects with two to four units fell 12.4 percent.

Minnesota Growers Again Force Delay In Sale Of Activist's Farm

GLENWOOD, Minn. (AP) — Protesters who succeeded for the second time in blocking the foreclosure sale of a farm activist's property are hoping the victory will spur broader gains in state and federal farm policy.

Pope County Sheriff Gerald Moe called off the auction of a 480-acre farm owned by Jim and Gloria Langman on Monday after more than 600 farmers converged on the courthouse steps.

"I think today's action will have a significant impact by putting a lot of pressure on the Legislature, business and other farmers to join in," said Pat Schemmel, president of the Minnesota chapter of the American Agriculture Movement. "And the fact that we did it with no violence will have a big influence on getting a lot of the support."

The protest was coordinated by Groundswell, a grassroots farmers' rights organization, to support the Langmans, who grow corn, wheat, soybeans and sunflowers near Starbuck in west-central Minnesota.

Langman, the past state president of the movement, had fallen behind on payments of a mortgage he took out with the Travelers Insurance Co. of Hartford, Conn., after fire destroyed his dairy operation in 1979.

Mrs. Langman said the interest was double that of a previous loan with the Farmers Home Administration. She would not disclose the amount of either loan.

Monday's sale was scheduled after Travelers granted a 45-day reprieve to give lawmakers time to develop farm-aid legislation. Groundswell had organized 1,000 farmers to block the first sale.

With no legislative relief in sight, farmers rallied for a second time Monday and vowed to stay as long as necessary to block the sale.

"Travelers left it to my discretion whether to continue with the sale," said Moe, who was surrounded for an hour by farmers locking arms and shouting, "No sale," before he called it off. He said there were 600 to 900 protesters. Twenty-three people arrested when they joined hands to block the sheriff's path across the street from his office to the courthouse were charged with obstruction but released two hours later on their own recognizance.

"I have heard across the country we're fighting forces we can't win against," Langman said before the sale was called off. "But I truly believe that when farmers fight to stay on our farm we can succeed ...

I will not, and you should not, give up fighting for farmers rights."

The farmers, who say the current pricing system makes it impossible for them to keep up with loan payments, are seeking a moratorium on farm foreclosures until long-term legislation can be enacted.

"If we look at it as just stopping foreclosures, then it is just delaying the inevitable," said Carmen Fernholz, Groundswell co-chairman.

In N.C., It's Question Of Survival

RALEIGH (AP) — While farmers in the Midwest are worried about getting enough credit for spring planting, North Carolina farmers are just trying to stay afloat, state agriculture leaders say.

"Our problem here is the inability to make money," said W.B. Jenkins, assistant to the president of the North Carolina Farm Bureau Federation. "We need to create an economic climate in which farmers can make money. One of the big problems is this market-oriented philosophy that is being expounded upon."

"It isn't worth a flip because there is no such thing as a free market," he said, pointing to trade restrictions with other countries and foreign governments that subsidize agriculture.

Frank Bordeaux Jr., chief economist for the state Department of Agriculture, said there are farmers in North Carolina who are turning profits.

"I would characterize them as middle-aged to older farmers who have been conservative in investments in machinery and capital," he said. "And they have been very good managers in producing a product and having planned for marketing it before it's even produced."

Jenkins said many farms are still in operation because of outside incomes from off-the-farm jobs. But, eventually, he said, farmers have to be able to make a profit at their chosen profession.

"We've got to get away from thinking that John is going to be a farmer all his life because he likes it," Jenkins said. "John has got to make some money, too. That's the bottom line."

Jenkins said when one farmer goes under, that threatens the jobs of other workers.

"You can lose 200 farmers across the state and nobody pays attention because you lose two here, two there," he said. "The impact over the long run is greater with 200 farmers than 200 workers in a plant because (in the case of farmers) eventually another 1,000 will go in a related industry.

"That's something nobody ever thinks about," Jenkins said. "Every time one of those guys goes out, five other people are in jeopardy of losing their jobs."

He said prices for farm products have remained level or dropped while farmers face rising production costs and adverse weather conditions.

"We have never come out of the last recession," Jenkins said. "Our agricultural economy never boomed back up. People have been in a tight economic situation for the past four years."

Farm failures are not always as obvious as plant closing because the land frequently stays in production, Bordeaux said.

"Instead of the land being abandoned, another farmer buys it," he said. "The tolls extracted on the family are being missed because it appears to be no different."

Dear Abby — By Abigail Van Buren

Son Marches To Different Beat

DEAR ABBY: We have a family problem: In May, my stepson will be graduating from medical school, and our family is having a reception in his honor.

My husband and I have a 15-year-old son who has a spiked Mohawk haircut and wears unconventional clothes, such as orange T-shirts, army jackets and jeans. We always encouraged "Steve" to be an individual while he was growing up; for this reason he feels it's his right to look as he wishes.

My husband refuses to allow Steve to attend his stepbrother's reception with his hair in a Mohawk and punk-rock attire. He says he would be embarrassed by Steve's appearance, and others might find it offensive. Steve refuses to attend unless he can come as "himself" (especially since he's not crazy about being with all those adults anyway).

I say it's my husband's problem or that of our guests if they can't accept Steve as he is.

What do you think would be a fair solution to this problem?

CAUGHT IN THE MIDDLE

DEAR CAUGHT: Since you and your husband always encouraged Steve to be an individual as he was growing up, nobody should be surprised if he isn't conforming to convention now.

If Father won't let Steve attend the reception in his punk attire, and Steve refuses to attend unless he can be "himself," that settles it.

Since Steve isn't crazy about attending anyway, he's off the hook. If Steve isn't there, Father won't be embarrassed and the guests won't be offended. So as I see it, no solution is necessary because there's no problem.

DEAR ABBY: On St. Valentine's Day you had a whole paragraph telling people to be "sweethearts" by doing nice things for others.

It was fine until I came to the last part, which read: "Forgive an enemy. Pray for your friends. Donate some blood. Pay your doctor bill. Listen to your teen-ager. Tip the cook in addition to the waitress."

Abby, you must be kidding! Why tip the cook? Don't you know that the cook is the highest paid employee in the restaurant! In fact, in the better restaurants the cook has more money than most of the people who eat there.

BEVERLY HILLS WAITER

DEAR WAITER: Sorry. I should have said, "Compliment the cook if the food is exceptional."

DEAR ABBY: I was reared to say, "No, ma'am," "Yes, sir," etc. regardless of the person's age.

I recently made a purchase at a bookstore, and when the young lady who waited on me asked if I wanted to pay cash, I replied, "Yes, ma'am."

She jumped down my throat and said, "I'll have you know I'm younger than you, and I don't appreciate your insinuating that I am older!" I was shocked at her rudeness.

This morning on a TV game show, a young contestant was asked if he was married. He replied, "No, sir." Later on, the young man won a trip to Hawaii for two, so the host asked if he had someone to go with him, and the contestant replied, "Yes, sir."

When the host was signing off, he said, "... And please don't call me 'sir' anymore, as it makes me feel old!"

Abby, is it still correct to say ma'am and sir in today's society? Or am I out of step?

TECUMSEH, OKLA.

DEAR TECUMSEH: Yes, sir, it is still correct!

(Do you hate to write letters because you don't know what to say? Thank-you notes, sympathy letters, congratulations, how to decline and accept invitations and how to write an interesting letter are included in Abby's booklet, "How to Write Letters for All Occasions." Send your name and address clearly printed with a check or money order for $2.50 (this includes postage) to: Dear Abby, Letter Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

At Wits End

By Erma Bombeck

I've had it up to here with Linda Evans, Joan Collins, and Jane Fonda and their older-is-better routine.

Maybe if I hadn't had dolman arms ten years before dolman sleeves came into style, or if I had my own hit series, I might feel differently.

But unlike a lot of older sex symbols, I have been struck down by gravity in the prime of my life and I'm ticked off about it. You want talk burn, Jane? If I wear heels all day, I can look forward to a night of acute leg cramps. Tell me about younger men, Joan. I go to bed when my kids are going out and get up when they're coming in. Talk to me about confidence, Linda. Waiters don't even ask me anymore if I want the onions left off my hamburger. That hurts.

Is it possible that your lives have not been altered by age? That you passed GO and got an extra ten years of hormones? I notice a lot of subtle differences in my life that I cannot explain. I read Time magazine from back to front. I rarely finish a book anymore. The last story I read in its entirety was while I was checking out in the supermarket. It was about a man giving birth. I save the obituaries and wrap the garbage in the economy section.

Somehow, I am still influenced by age. When my kids tell me they're dating someone, I don't want to know what they look like or if they still have all their own teeth or how much money they have. I want to know how old they are.

I've forgotten how to flirt. Possibly because I get so few calls for it. I have lawyers who are younger than my winter coat. Doctors who carry their instruments in gym bags. Priests who fill the confessional with Clearasil. I look at them and see my sons.

Fulfillment for me is no longer standing around eating raw fish off crackers, sucking in my stomach and listening to someone tell me to burn my clothes as my coloring is "autumn" and not spring. Give me an evening with David Attenborough being accepted by a tribe of baboons.

I know what all of you are trying to do, gang, and I appreciate it. You're serving as a role model... a conscience for a generation of women who shouldn't give up on themselves just because they've passed the big 4- or 5-0.

I appreciate that, but I don't really want to be a born-again sex symbol. I don't have the parts, patience and stamina for it.

Let my body go. Let it sag, wrinkle and drop. Let me gray a little and wheeze some. Let me say dumb things and forget more than I can remember. Let my chins grow and my creases multiply.

And when I look at you, I'll tell myself that with an $800 dress, tummy-control pantyhose and a camera with cold cream on the lens, I could look like that too.

Let me lie to myself.

CELERY CHICKEN

- 2 large outer ribs celery (each about 2 ounces), thinly sliced (2 cups packed down)
- Clear fat-free chicken broth
- 4 tablespoons butter
- 4 tablespoons all-purpose flour
- 1/2 cup milk
- 3/4-pound cooked chicken white meat (2 cups cut in 1/2-inch cubes)
- 3/4 cup cornflake crumbs mixed with 2 tablespoons butter (melted)
- Salt and pepper to taste

Steam celery until tender in a steamer with a solid-bottom insert — about 10 minutes; drain, saving liquid. To liquid add enough broth to make 1 cup. In a medium saucepan over moderate heat, melt butter; stir in flour. Off heat, gradually stir in broth mixture and milk, keeping smooth. Cook over moderately low heat, stirring constantly, until thickened and boiling. Add celery, chicken and salt and pepper and mix well. Turn into a 10 by 6 by 2-inch baking dish. Sprinkle with cornflake mixture. Bake in a preheated 400-degree oven until bubbling around sides, center is hot through and top is golden brown — 20 minutes. Makes 4 servings.

Summits

There's something almost mystical about summit meetings as if by their very nature they solved problems. Of course that isn't the case.

Summitry is the capping process. Clarification of issues and groundwork for attaining agreements are painfully reached at such meetings as now going on in Geneva. The principals fully understand that; and use summit talks not only for the formal accords but to establish some kind of personal relationship with one another.

It could even be regarded as bad form for the leadership of two or more great powers to gather amid all the symbolism that prevails at summit meetings and then lay an egg.

President Reagan's personal note to President Mikhail Gorbachev served two purposes: a tacit recognition of Gorbachev as new leader of the Soviet Union, as well as an encouraging word that the United States is as interested in finding peaceful answers to shared problems as is the USSR.

The summit invitation implies attaining some degree of accord or the easing of friction is within reach. It's beyond belief the new Soviet leader is even now packing his bags. More reasonably, he would accept such a meeting at an unspecified future date.

The new chief of state for the Soviets is necessarily preoccupied with adjusting to his new status and responsibilities. Dealing with the United States is just one of them.

We'd like to think the refreshing change of image Gorbachev displays from the dour and stony appearance maintained by his predecessors signifies a shade more elasticity in his dealings. (Sometimes we have thought the Old Guard used their forbidding countenances to conceal their feelings ... rather like poker players in old movies.)

Analysts appear pretty much agreed the real power in the Kremlin remains in the hands of the Old Guard whose numbers dominate the Politburo. They'll be watching their new spokesman for any sign of deviation from their guidelines.

Any change of direction by Moscow will be slow in coming. They may not like the rut they're in, but it is the one they know best.

Value

The empire of Adolph Hitler long ago crumbled. Designed to last a thousand years, it ended with the destruction of Berlin and the dictator committing suicide at his besieged bunker.

Now his sailing yacht, the Ostwind, has been reduced to the ultimate humiliation. It has been sold for $1.

A Jacksonville, Fla., man spent much money and 12 years attempting to restore it. For health reasons and because of mounting cost he recently sold it to a Massachusetts man who wants to place it in a military museum.

The vessel was seized by the U.S. Navy after World War II and used as a training ship. It was declared surplus and went through several owners. Now its sale price has fallen to the princely sum of $1, which might bear some analogy to the value of the Hitler's Third Reich to today's world.

Biotechnology Takes A Back Seat

RALEIGH — Of the many proposals for reduced expansionary spending which Gov. Jim Martin made to the General Assembly, the one which probably surprised Democratic legislators the most involved biotechnology research.

In former Gov. Jim Hunt's budget, $1.5 million is proposed to keep the state's current biotechnology grants program going. Hunt also proposed another $5 million in new spending to expand the state's program. It was considered the first part of a major new effort akin to the state's microelectronics program. A legislative study commission had recommended spending as much as $50 million to make North Carolina a "world class" center for biotechnology research.

In an interview just before leaving office, Hunt said biotechnology could be for Martin's administration

"what microelectronics has been for mine." That is, Hunt felt the state was on the brink of taking a major step forward in this area.

But Martin, a chemistry professor before entering politics, doesn't appear that convinced. He recommended maintaining the biotechnology program at its current level and cut the $5 million in expansion out of the budget.

"Normally, you would think that a business-oriented and business-financed governor would understand the inter-relationship between research and business development," said Sen. Charlie Hips, D-Haywood, a member of the bio-tech study group. "If you want a strong business environment, you have to continue research."

Sen. Henson Barnes, D-Wayne, has followed the state's bio-tech program closely and says cutting the expansion funds "is going to be to the detriment of this state. The farmers of this country have survived simply because they have better technology than anyone else. If we take that money out, we're beginning to give up the leadership role in the world as to agricultural products."

Biotechnology is essentially gene-slicing. It aims in many directions but agriculture and medicine are seen as the two major areas of research.

The anger which Barnes and Hips expressed at the bio-tech cuts is significant because they represent following a recount.

Galling though the Indiana affair is to the COS, it is symptomatic of deeper concerns. The backbenchers are frustrated by passive leadership in the House, which they feel is squandering opportunities against a Democratic Party still groggy from the 1984 election.

The Republican split is concerned less with ideology than energy. For the past decade, the party's leaders and well-entrenched staffers have submitted to Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill's resolve. Vigorous younger Republicans have tended to seek an exit from the House morass, often by running for the Senate or governor. As an alternative to leaving, the COS was born two years ago.

But COS members have grown despondent this year. They were stunned when the party leadership turned down a serious bid for the tax-writing House Ways and Means Committee by one of the brightest junior members, Rep. Hank Brown of Colorado. That was enough to convince Brown that the good ol' boys club in the House was not for him and he ought to run for governor next year.

Word next seeped through the cloakroom that reports of Bob Michel's retirement were greatly exaggerated and he would run again in 1986. Such news ended whatever doubts House Minority Whip Trent Lott, future hope of the backbenchers, might have had about seeking the first Senate vacancy that comes along in Mississippi.

Lott is too much a party man to say anything negative about his leader either privately or publicly. But friends describe him as dispirited — particularly about the way the Indiana contest has been handled.

The backbenchers were outraged upon returning to Washington in January to read that an aide to the House Republican leadership had been quoted in the press as saying "maybe the Republican secretary of state in Indiana overstepped his ground" in certifying the Republican congressional candidate. Two months later Michel's House minority counsel, Hyde Murray, publicly scolded GOP congressmen for going to court to counter the House Democratic majority.

Such staff sentiment was accompanied by minimal passion from Michel in the Hoosier contest. "How can Bob really take after Tip in the morning when he's playing golf with him in the afternoon?" a COS member asked us.

But in the Indiana affair, Republicans confront a more relentless adversary than the lame-duck speaker. The fight against official certification in Indiana bears the unmistakable trademark of Rep. Tony Coelho, tough and tenacious chairman of the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee.

Although Coelho clearly has his party's caucus behind him, misgivings are privately voiced here and there by rank-and-file Democrats that this is no way to run a democracy. The vote by Kentucky's moderate Democratic Rep. Roman Mazzoli to seat the Indiana Republican might not have been so lonely had Republicans been screaming "vote steal" in unison ever since January.

The 32 freshmen Republican members were baffled by the leadership's indifference to the fate of their Indiana colleague. Having shunned COS as a band of troublemakers two months earlier on advice of the party elders, the first-termers now sought help from the bomb-throwers.

The result was a recent strategy session where Gingrich was summoned to duel Coelho. But it probably is too little, too late to save the Indiana seat. Nor does the late move reassure frustrated young Republicans who see a bleak future in a House where Bob Michel stays and Trent Lott leaves.

To the editor:

There is bad news for those who have been waiting for "Amadeus" to finally arrive in Greenville. Although it was scheduled to show last fall, the theater chain postponed to keep "Beverly Hills Cop" playing for over four months.

"Amadeus" was scheduled to be shown next week, but Consolidated Theatres Inc., the chain which runs the Buccaneer Theater, has again canceled the showing — in favor of "Halloween" (Part Three Million or whatever), which will open in its place this weekend.

Calling the local theater in outrage will do no good, because it is the Consolidated Theatre chain which feels that there is no market for "Amadeus" in Greenville.

The solution? Write to Consolidated Theatres, Inc., Credit Union Building, 1130 E. Third St., Charlotte, N.C. 28204, voicing your outrage that they will not bring such a fine movie to our town, especially in light of all its Academy Award nominations. Sometimes grownups have to stand up for the good movies, or the teen-age slash-and-gore movies will be all that remains in town.

Strength For Today

All through the Bible we find references to heaven, but very seldom in the Bible do we find descriptions of heaven. Of course, the Book of Revelation, known as the Apocalypse, is replete with such description, but the remainder of the Bible is not. Jesus frequently referred to heaven, but he said almost nothing which could be interpreted as a description of that divine place.

Why this omission? Probably because heaven is a reality so immeasurably exalted that the human mind cannot understand it nor can human language describe it.

But if there is one thing of which we can be absolutely sure concerning Bible teaching, it is that there is a life after death, that it involves a separation of the good from the evil, and that to those who have loved God and obeyed him, promises of the most precious variety are made. Heaven is real, and God wants us to ponder the sublime nature of this truth.

Summit Fever Takes Over

WASHINGTON (AP) — Summit fever is in the air again with White House aides hinting that Mikhail Gorbachev looks as if he might be just the Soviet leader President Reagan has been waiting to meet.

Reagan is into his fifth year as president and his fourth Soviet leader. So far, he hasn't met any of the Soviet chieftains.

If he sits down with Gorbachev, what might they accomplish? Would it be a get-acquainted session, an opportunity to exchange views and take each other's measure? Or should it be a carefully structured meeting at which the two leaders could sign an agreement already negotiated?

During this week's summit speculation, Henry A. Kissinger met with Reagan and then told reporters he thought get-acquainted summits were a "psychiatric exercise" that ought to be avoided. The former secretary of state said a Reagan-Gorbachev summit could be "useful" but he cautioned against being in a hurry to meet.

"I don't think it's so important to meet each other as to have an agenda of what to talk about," Kissinger said.

U.S.-Soviet summits for the purpose of getting acquainted have had a sour history.

Not six months after he took office, John F. Kennedy went to Vienna for a summit with Nikita Khrushchev. It was a clash of generations, of styles, of cultures, and Kennedy emerged shaken by the aggressive hostility of his Soviet counterpart.

Gerald Ford had been president a little more than three months when he met Leonid Brezhnev in Vladivostok in November 1974. The two leaders signed an agreement that limited the number of intercontinental ballistic missiles in each arsenal but did not put any restraints on the warheads each could carry.

Kissinger has defended that agreement while conceding that Soviet "deployment has reached a level far higher than what was envisaged."

That summit could be described as the last one-on-one meeting between two fully functioning superpower leaders.

Ford went to another summit the following year in Helsinki, but that was attended not only by Brezhnev but by the leaders of 33 other European and North American nations.

By the time Jimmy Carter and Brezhnev met in Vienna in 1979 to sign the SALT II treaty, the Soviet leader's health had declined markedly and at one point, Carter grabbed his arm to keep him from falling.

The possibility of a summit came up again Monday when Gorbachev swiftly assumed power a few hours after the announcement of the death of Konstantin Chernenko.

The president denied he's ever been reluctant to meet with the leader of the nation he has described as "an evil empire."

He's wanted to meet with a Soviet leader "ever since I've been here," he told reporters on Tuesday.

As if to underscore that claim, the White House disclosed that Vice President George Bush, heading the U.S. delegation to Chernenko's funeral, carried a letter from Reagan inviting Gorbachev to the United States.

There was no proposed date or suggested agenda.

When Andropov took power after Brezhnev's death, Reagan said improvement in U.S.-Soviet relations would "require some action, not just words."

After Andropov died, Reagan called upon Chernenko to "move from words to deeds."

The question now is whether the president and his Soviet counterpart think the time has come to try some face-to-face words.

Arms Negotiators Hold Third Session

GENEVA, Switzerland (AP) — U.S. and Soviet negotiators met today for their third session on reducing nuclear arms, while a Soviet newspaper accused the Reagan Administration of pursuing an MX missile "trump card" for the talks.

The American negotiators were driven through the iron gates of the Soviet mission shortly after 11 a.m. in a seven-car convoy of grey and black Ford sedans.

A U.S. spokesman, who asked not to be identified, said the meeting was a full session, with 21 delegates on each side. He said he could not comment on the meeting's agenda because he did not want to break the confidentiality rule agreed by the two sides.

"It is important that the governments are going to continue talking," he told The Associated Press by telephone. He declined substantive comment on allegations by the Soviet news agency Tass that the United States "is deliberately heading for blocking" the talks in Geneva so it can pursue plans for a space-based defense system.

Chief U.S. negotiator Max M. Kampelman, who was in the first car, did not acknowledge the handful of reporters who waited outside the mission under sunny skies and near-freezing temperatures.

It was not clear how long the U.S. team would meet with their Soviet counterparts, who are headed by veteran negotiator Victor Karpov. Reporters were not permitted to enter the Soviet grounds.

The two superpowers held their second session last Thursday and laid down opening positions. U.S. spokesman Joseph Lehman described the meeting as "a businesslike session in an atmosphere of mutual respect" and said substantive issues were discussed. However, neither side would go into detail.

In Moscow, the Communist Party daily Pravda today restated Soviet willingness to reach an arms accord but accused the Reagan administration of pursuing the MX missile to pressure the Soviet Union.

The U.S. Senate was to vote today on whether to approve President Reagan's plan to add 100 MX missiles to the U.S. nuclear arsenal.

A $1.6 billion allocation has been approved by the Senate Armed Forces Services Committee.

"Congressmen are being subjected to an intensive manipulation. They are being told that the allocation of funds will ostensibly give the U.S. delegation in Geneva a trump card for pressure on the Russians," Pravda said.

After last Thursday's talks, Lehman told a news conference the two sides agreed to divide the negotiations into three categories — one dealing with intercontinental rockets, another with intermediate-range missiles, and a third with space and defense issues.

He said the three groups would begin functioning "very shortly."

He indicated each side presented basic public positions on nuclear missile control, the subject of lengthy negotiations that broke down in late 1983 with a Soviet walkout.

Thursday's session followed a get-acquainted meeting last Tuesday that brought together U.S. and Soviet arms control negotiators for the first time in 15 months.

The issue of space weapons has caused the most stir in the months leading up to the resumption of talks.

Reagan has launched a $26 billion research program, the Strategic Defense Initiative — popularly known as "Star Wars" — to learn whether a space-based shield against incoming missiles is feasible.

Although they have a research program of their own, the Soviets have attacked the U.S. program, saying it would lead to militarization of space.

After repeating Soviet criticism of Star Wars, Pravda added today international cooperation would "benefit greatly if in Washington they followed the course of reason and realism."

For the United States, Kampelman will deal with space arms, John G. Tower, with long-range missiles and Maynard H. Glitman with medium-range missiles.

Karpov is the overall chief of the Soviet team and is heading the talks on long-range weapons. Yuli V. Kvitsinsky deals with space weapons and Alexei A. Obukhov handles talks on medium range missiles.

Iranian Missile Hits Iraqi Site

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — A pink flash lit the dawn sky in Baghdad today and seconds later a powerful blast shook buildings in the Iraqi capital. Iran reported the explosion was caused by a ground-to-ground missile that hit the industrial district of Dora.

Iraq did not comment on the cause of the blast, but announced its warplanes pounded five Iranian cities — Bushehr, Hamadan, Ardabil, Garang and Khorramabad in raids at 10 a.m., five hours after the Baghdad explosion.

Iran's Islamic Republic News Agency, monitored in Cyprus, said the missile caused "considerable losses and damage." There were no eyewitness reports from Baghdad on damage or casualties.

Iran and Iraq — at war for 4½ years — both claimed they were attacking cities to force the enemy to halt assaults on civilian targets. The two nations renewed attacks on cities more than two weeks ago. Iran also has launched a ground offensive into southern Iraq.

Starting today at 8 p.m. Baghdad time (noon EST), Iraq has said it will shoot down any aircraft in Iranian airspace. Many airlines canceled service to both Tehran and Baghdad. Iran said it protested to the International Air Transport Association and the International Civil Aviation Organization.

The blast came hours after Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak and King Hussein of Jordan departed the Iraqi capital after discussions with President Saddam Hussein of Iraq. The two Arab leaders are Iraq's closest allies.

On his return to Cairo, Mubarak told reporters: "Iraq does not need more military assistance because it is in a better military position" than Iran, Egypt's official Middle East News Agency reported.

It was the fourth explosion in five days to rock Baghdad. Reporters have been barred from the sites of previous blasts. Iran claims the blasts were caused by long range missiles. Baghdad is about 100 miles from the Iranian border.

Dutch Farmer Offers Soviets Missile Site

DRONTEN, Netherlands (AP) — A Dutch farmer who authored a political manifesto advocating non-violence has offered the Soviets his land as a site for SS-20 missiles if Holland deploys U.S.-built NATO rockets.

Leender Plaisier says he doesn't belong to any peace movement, but made the offer because he believes in balance. He said it would "even be safer if no missiles were deployed at all."

But he added: "If these 48 rockets are deployed, and I'm sure that will happen, why not counterbalance them with the same number of Soviet missiles? A nuclear equilibrium will make our country a safer place to live in."

Plaisier, 44, said he went to the Soviet Embassy in The Hague recently to offer his 109-acre plot in Dronten, a central Dutch farming community, as a deployment site.

He said he wouldn't mind giving up the crops of beets, wheat and potatoes he now grows on the land.

"Yes, it's my bread and butter now. But I'm not concerned about myself. It's future generations that count," he said.

In an interview Monday, Plaisier said Soviets officials did not make any promises but that "they agreed they did not like the nuclear buildup either."

Lebanese Mutiny Erupts In Violence

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — The Lebanese army battled today in the southern city of Sidon against Christian militiamen who declared their allegiance to the rebellion against President Amin Gemayel's Syrian-oriented leadership. Police said four people were killed and 38 wounded.

The clash was the first in the area since Christian militia garrisons near the predominantly Moslem city pledged allegiance to the week-old mutiny in Gemayel's Phalange Party militia. It was also the first serious confrontation in Sidon since the Israeli army withdrew from the area Feb. 16.

Prime Minister Rashid Karami warned Monday the rebellion might force the Christian president to step down, rekindling Lebanon's civil war.

The breakaway is led by Samir Geagea, a pro-Israeli commander, in the Christian heartland north of Beirut. It's the first time Moslems and Christians have clashed in the south since the rebels seized most of the Christian heartland in northern Lebanon a week ago.

Hostilities in Sidon first broke out shortly after noon Monday, pitting Shiite and Sunni Moslem militiamen against Christians from the Phalange militia, known as the Lebanese Forces, posted in barracks in the villages of Hlaylie, Qanaya and Qiyaa.

Police said two hours later, the Sidon army garrison sent four tanks and two truckloads of troops to break up the fighting. The battle then tapered off to sporadic sniping but it escalated again until a cease-fire was called at 8:30 p.m.

But at first light today, when the 98th army battalion sent the first armored patrol to the area, Christian militiamen were still entrenched in their positions despite the withdrawal agreement, police said.

In the fighting Monday and today, two soldiers were killed and eight were wounded. Two others killed and 30 wounded were militiamen from both sides, police said.

Gemayel talked to President Hafez Assad of Syria by telephone and reaffirmed his commitment to safeguard Lebanon's unity and territorial integrity, Syria's state radio reported today.

Gemayel also stressed he would continue trying to bring about a Moslem-Christian reconciliation to end Lebanon's almost 10-year civil war, the radio added.

It said Assad, in turn, renewed his pledge of support for Gemayel against the Geagea mutiny, saying Syria "will forcefully oppose any moves to partition Lebanon."

The radio made no comment on a report by the leftist Beirut newspaper as-Safir that said Gemayel might visit Damascus for talks with Assad Wednesday.

Mediation efforts to reconcile the mutineers and Gemayel's Phalange Party command made no headway and the party's politburo has given mediators a one-month deadline to come up with a compromise, the Phalangist al-Amal newspaper reported today.

The newspaper said the politburo also rejected the rebels' basic demand for the election of a Christian parliament to run Christian areas, al-Amal added.

Gemayel was scheduled to head an emergency Cabinet session at his presidential palace in suburban Baabda later today. But palace sources, who requested anonymity, said the meeting was canceled because most Moslem ministers called to say they would not risk the trip through areas under Christian militia control.

Mulroney Predicts New Era In U.S.-Canadian Relations

QUEBEC (AP) — Prime Minister Brian Mulroney says he hopes his successful "Shamrock Summit" with President Reagan means Canada won't be ignored any more in Washington.

Reagan flew home Monday after completing a 24-hour visit full of treaty signings, scenic backdrops and St. Patrick's Day showmanship in Quebec City, the historic capital of French Canada.

In his meetings with Mulroney, Reagan made progress on the sticky issues of acid rain and trade barriers, while signing deals on West Coast salmon fishing, legal cooperation and a new radar network in the Canadian arctic.

After seeing Reagan off at the Quebec City airport — and kissing Nancy Reagan on both cheeks — Mulroney said he made a direct appeal to the American president for sustained attention.

"I told him, I know you have a lot of fish to fry when you get back to Washington," Mulroney said. "I just want to make sure we never again get lost in the shuffle."

Mulroney's Progressive Conservative Party ousted the Liberals six months ago in a landslide election victory, largely on the promise to nurture closer ties with the United States. But not all critics have been stilled.

"It might have been called the Shamrock Shuffle," Ed Broadbent, leader of the socialist New Democratic Party, said of the meeting. "We've had President Reagan, regrettably I think, calling the tune."

Mulroney brushed aside all criticism, saying Reagan's visit "marks a new era in relations between Canada and the United States."

Every detail of the friendly encounter between the two leaders, both of Irish descent, was reported widely in Canada, often live on national television and usually favorably.

A commentator on the Canadian Broadcasting Corp. described the summit as "twenty-four hours of mutual praise and admiration."

In three speeches, Reagan even ventured brief comments in French — the majority language in Quebec — getting smoother with practice and winning applause from his audience.

For all the picturesque staging, there was enough substance to rebut criticism that the affair was all show — including a joint declaration pledging reduction in trade barriers and the appointment of high-ranking envoys to handle acid rain, often called the chief irritant in U.S.-Canada relations.

The two leaders also signed a treaty, the product of more than 15 years of negotiations, covering the salmon catch of the Pacific Coast, where many fish are spawned in one country but are caught by fishermen in the other's waters.

At the same ceremony — conducted behind the thick stone walls of a fortress built to defend Quebec from a possible American attack in the 1800s — the two sides signed an agreement to build what Mulroney called a "state-of-the-art" radar system to replace the Distant Early Warning line in northern Canada.

BALLOONS RELEASED — Students at the Ayden Elementary School released about 650 balloons Monday to see whose balloon will go the farthest distance. Members of the Ayden Middle School band and the Ayden-Grifton High School bands were also on hand for music. Weekly Reader is sponsoring a $500 national award for the school that has the balloon going to the farthest point and having the return card sent back to the school. (Photo by Barry Gaskins)

Mississippi Teachers Returning

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — More educators agreed to end illegal strikes and return to the classroom this week, leaving to the Mississippi Legislature a struggle to raise the nation's lowest teacher salaries.

Still stinging from criminal contempt citations slapped against them earlier Monday, officials of the Mississippi Association of Educators asked teachers to return to work as soon as possible.

On Monday, teachers agreed to return to work in nine of the 18 districts still closed, where 4,200 of the state's 27,000 teachers serve 96,000 of its 466,000 students.

At the height of the strike, 9,200 teachers and 172,000 students in 55 districts were idled.

The Legislature, which Sunday approved a $4,400, three-year pay plan, was forced into a fight when Gov. Bill Allain vetoed the measure Monday because it would raise taxes by $77.6 million.

The Senate planned to meet today to attempt to override the veto.

"It's unfortunate that we've come to this," said Sen. Bob Montgomery, chairman of the Finance Committee. "The governor feels strongly about his position, and I hope the Senate feels strongly about theirs."

A straw poll by Montgomery's panel showed that the Senate would be able to override the veto, but there might be difficulty in the House. A two-thirds vote would be needed of both House and Senate.

"I wouldn't have any trouble overriding, but I really don't think the votes are there on the House side right now," said Rep. Charlie Williams.

The Senate has three days to act on a veto. If it overrides, the House then gets the matter.

Teen-Ager Dies In 2-Car Wreck

HAVELOCK — The daughter of a Bear Grass native, formerly employed by Voice of America in Greenville, died Saturday night in a collision with a state trooper's vehicle.

The victim's mother is the former Elizabeth Cherry. Her father is Havelock Progress newspaper publisher, Eugene Smith, who has been Havelock's mayor.

Havelock police investigators said Margaret Elizabeth Smith, 16, died of injuries sustained in a crash on U.S. 70 East in Havelock about 11:30 p.m. when she left a convenience store parking lot and drove into the path of a N.C. Highway Patrol cruiser driven by Ted Pollard, a trooper of Greensboro. It was reportedly raining at the time of the accident.

Her passenger, Christopher Sinclair, 18, of Havelock is listed in stable condition at Craven County Hospital, New Bern. Pollard is in good condition in Carteret General Hospital, Morehead City, Capt. Zevin McKenzie of the Havelock Police Department said this morning. He said no charges have been filed.

Havelock police said Pollard was driving the Highway Patrol vehicle with permission. He had been transferred March 13 from Carteret County to Greensboro.

Hollywood Writers Vote To End Strike

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Hollywood scriptwriters who turned out in force to cast ballots on a tentative contract voted today to end their bitter two-week-old strike against producers.

"The strike is now over. Members may return to work," a tape-recorded message told members of the Writers Guild West today.

The writers voted 2,075 to 822 to end the strike, said a union source who declined to be identified.

The strike had halted taping of some popular TV shows.

About 3,000 West Coast members of the Writers Guild of America gathered late Monday at the Hollywood Palladium to debate the three-year contract offer from the Alliance of Motion Picture and Television Producers.

Union spokesman Mickey Freeman said the meeting was of "a much different tenor" than a March 12 ratification vote which was suspended after it erupted into shouting between pro- and anti-strike factions.

"It was very rational, very calm, no hostility," he said.

Those who cast ballots last week were allowed to vote again,

Freeman said.

At the March 12 meeting, the guild negotiating committee unanimously supported the contract, which Monday was endorsed by a majority and described as "adequate but not great," said guild member Jim Byrnes said.

Many writers had said they were determined to continue the strike if there was no change in the contract offer concerning the major issue: royalties from videocassette sales.

"It's selfish of them not to share some of the stuff at the top," said actor Dom DeLuise.

Producers offered a three-year contract worth more than $84 million, including a contribution totaling $1.25 million for the union's health and benefit package in return for an agreement to withdraw from arbitration the issue of percentages paid to writers from videocassette sales.

uncommitted.

A respected Senate vote counter, Assistant Democratic leader Alan Cranston of California, says the contest is even tighter with 48 probable votes for MX, 47 probable against it and five senators uncommitted.

Bush, whose vote last year broke a Senate tie and staved off an MX defeat, was prepared, if needed, for a repeat performance.

Asked this morning what he thought the outcome would be, Bush said the administration's head count showed a "very, very close" vote, but added, "I believe we can prevail."

At the White House, presidential spokesman Larry Speakes said, "We'll work right down to the wire on it."

As part of that effort, Reagan was meeting today with upwards of 12 members of Congress, Republicans and Democrats, to press his case.

Bush and Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger were tapped to make telephone calls to wavering senators, Speakes said.

Reagan called one swing Republican senator by phone Monday as Air Force One flew him home from a visit to Canada and another on Monday night, Speakes said.

On Monday, Bush repeated the theme that has had the most telling effect in the Senate, even among lawmakers who view the MX as a flawed, unneeded, and strategically destabilizing weapon:

"If Congress pulls the rug out from under our negotiators in Geneva, the damage to our hopes for successful arms talks may be irreversible."

Rhode Island Republican John Chafee, counted among the undecided until Monday, said today he would vote for the MX because of the effect the administration says the missile would have in the arms talks.

"I'm saying to the president and his negotiators, 'I don't want any excuses. I want to give you the tools to get the job done. I expect you to come back with an agreement. I don't want anybody saying you would have succeeded but for the lack of the MX.'"

Both Bush and Chafee were interviewed on the NBC-TV "Today" show.

Speakes called today's vote "absolutely ... make-or-break." He said the White House was hoping victory on the first tally will carry the MX past three remaining congressional votes on authorizing and appropriating money for it.

The Senate Armed Services Committee gave MX supporters a boost on Monday, voting 11 to 6 to recommend freeing $1.5 billion to build and install 21 additional MX missiles in underground silos in Wyoming and Nebraska.

The money was blocked by Congress last year pending the outcome of this month's Senate and House votes.

Dr. Richard Preston, superintendent of administration for the city schools, told the board that opening of bids when only two were submitted is legal when only that number of contacted firms submit bids on a second bidding procedure. The resaturation program is one carried out periodically on all the roofs of school buildings, and is designed to prolong the life span of roofs.

Authorization was given to advertise surplus equipment for public auction. The items declared surplus include manual typewriters, woodworking equipment and sewing machines.

Two budget amendments were approved. Amendment No. 5 of the local fund budget is for an increase of $17,066, primarily funds for vocational education programs. This brings the total local fund budget for the school year to $3,965,879. Amendment No. 4 to the state fund represents an increase of $7,185 in special instructional programs and pupil support services, and brings the total school year state budget to $7,844,756.

A field trip for members of the Rose High Art Club to Nags Head from April 12 to 14 was approved. The trip is for the students to continue work on a historical mural celebrating America's 400th Anniversary. Club members last year began work on the project.

In a report on suspension records for students in the Greenville schools, it was reported that the number of suspensions during February totaled 65.

Ann Harrison, director of pupil personnel, explained that the suspension numbers represent each one-time suspension with varying time spans of suspension ranging from one to several days. Many of those suspended, she noted, "remained in school under the in-school suspension program."

The bulk of suspensions occurs in grade eight (26 counts) and grade nine (21 counts). "This has been a particularly difficult group to deal with this year," Mrs. Harrison commented. "Last year it was the seventh grade group, which of course carries over to this year's eighth grade." The total suspension count for the school year to date in all grades is 263.

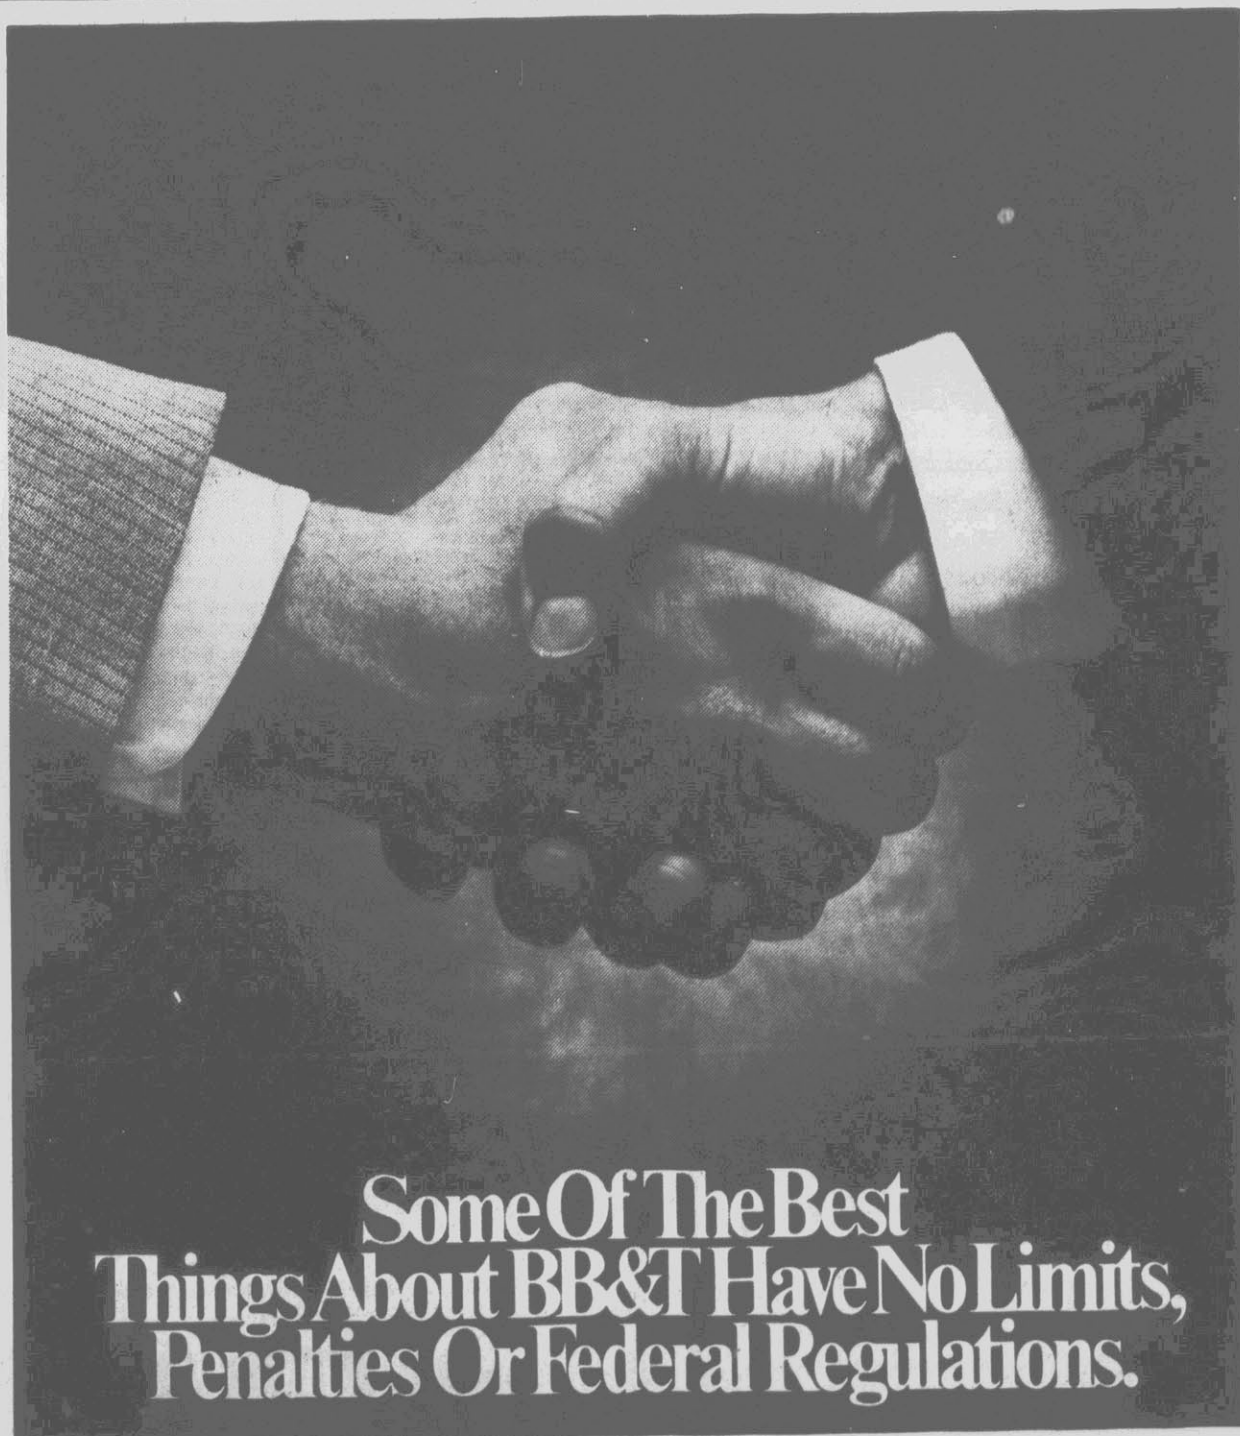

Reporting on the results of the writing assessment scores in the North Carolina Annual Testing Program for students in grades 6 and 9, Charles Ross, director of elementary education, commented, "We are pleased with the results."

Sixth graders at South Greenville and Wahl-Coates schools scored higher than students at the northeast and state levels. At the ninth grade level, students scored higher than at the northeast level, and higher than the state level except in one category of the test.

Mike Joyner of the accounting firm of John C. Proctor & Co. presented an auditor's report on the total budgets of the city school system. He told the board the accounts are in good shape and that "there are no improvements in the accounting system to be recommended." The board authorized the school staff to enter into negotiations for an audit contract with the Proctor firm for the coming school year.

In executive session, the election of four personnel was approved.

Copies of the Standard Course of Study sanctioned by the State Department of Public Instruction are now available to any interested person. A copy is on file in the city schools' administrative office building at 431 W. Fifth St. and also in the Regional Education Center in Williamston. A public hearing on the revised "North Carolina Standard Course of Study" is to be held at 9 a.m. March 29 in Raleigh.

In today's economic news, the government reported that housing construction, hurt by a steep drop in apartment building, fell 11 percent in February. That was the sharpest decline in almost a year.

Analysts, however, discounted the downturn, saying the big drop in apartment building followed an even sharper increase the month before. They said this category was often volatile and predicted the housing industry would have another good year.

On Monday, the Federal Reserve Board reported that U.S. factory use, mirroring a decline in industrial production, fell sharply in February to the lowest level in a year, the Federal Reserve said.

The most actively traded issue this morning was Commonwealth Edison, unchanged at 28 3/4.

Widow Sues State, Trooper In Death

CHARLOTTE (AP) — A Charlotte woman who contends her husband was "executed" by a state Highway Patrol trooper in October has sued the trooper, the patrol, its commander and the state of North Carolina for $5 million.

Betty Jo Belk filed the wrongful death suit Monday in U.S. District Court, claiming that Trooper C.E. Moody fatally shot her husband, Robert Dean Belk, 24, in the upper left chest without justification after stopping him on suspicion of driving while impaired.

The suit says Belk was unarmed when he was shot on Oct. 8 and that the shooting was "unwarranted, cruel, inhumane, unjustifiable and excessive." The suit says the shooting occurred either after the motorist tried to move back to the driver's side of his vehicle or when he refused to obey the trooper's order to get out of his car.

Moody and patrol commander Col. J.F. Cardwell could not be reached for comment. But Charlotte police said Moody shot Belk once in the shoulder during a DWI arrest after Belk allegedly threatened the trooper. Belk, a tractor-trailer painter, was dead on arrival at Charlotte Memorial Hospital.

Two days after the fatal shooting, Mecklenburg District Attorney Peter Gilchrist announced that Moody would not be charged. The prosecutor said he believed Moody shot in self defense.

Gilchrist said Moody instructed Belk to get out of his car but said Belk did not obey the order. Moody drew his gun and fired after Belk reached below the dashboard, he said.

But the suit contends that Belk was "the victim of summary execution at the hands of ... Moody" and that the "punishment administered was perversely disproportionate to whatever Robert Dean Belk's acts may have been, constituted cruel and unusual punishment and deprived him of his rights."

Bucs Squeeze Out Win Over Terps

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor
Mont Carter slid home on a suicide squeeze bunt laid down by Robert Langston in the bottom of the 10th inning allowing East Carolina University to nip the University of Maryland 3-2 in college baseball yesterday.

The victory got the Pirates back on the winning side of the ledger after they had seen a six-game winning streak stopped Saturday by the University of Connecticut. East Carolina is now 12-3 on the season.

Sophomore Daniel Boone, who didn't pitch at all as a freshman, made his third appearance in the contest, going the full 10 innings and scattering five hits. He walked three and struck out nine — including the side in the 10th inning.

"Daniel threw extremely well," Coach Gary Overton said. "He got stronger as the game went along and did a heck of a job. He got tougher as the game got tougher. He's a battler, and he's got what it takes to pitch and win."

The Pirates, who earlier lost two runs on an appeal play, finally struck for the win in the 10th. After one man was out, Carter doubled to center. Mark Cockrell was intentionally walked to set up the force, but Jim Riley also drew a walk, loading the bases.

That brought up Langston, who laid down a perfect bunt down the third base line, scoring Carter on the suicide.

"I told Robert to take a strike, and that on the next pitch we were going to run it," Overton said.

"This was a good college baseball game, enjoyable to watch and both teams played well," he added.

Both teams left runners in scoring position in the first half. The Terps put two on via a walk and a single with two away, while the Pirates had runners on an error and a walk with one away. ECU lost a great chance in the second. With one down, a walk, single and hit batter loaded the bases, but the next batter hit into a double play, killing the rally.

In the third, however, the Pirates struck to take the lead, scoring two runs. Greg Hardison walked and Chris Bradberry singled to center. Winfred Johnson singled to left, scoring Hardison, and both he and Bradberry moved up a base on a wild pitch. Jay McGraw grounded out, scoring Bradberry for a 2-0 lead.

Maryland struck back in the fifth. Charlie Laird singled and Mike Murphy followed with a home run to left, tying the score at 2-2.

Boone buckled down after that, however, and although five more Terps reached base, none of them advanced past first.

The Pirates, meanwhile appeared to score twice in the bottom of the sixth, only to have them erased. With one down, Cockrell walked and Riley singled, replaced by courtesy runner Mike Wells. Langston grounded back to the mound, and Cockrell was cut down at third. Mark Shank followed with an apparent single to right, scoring Wells, and when the ball got past the fielder, Langston also scored. That made it 4-2 — or so it seemed.

But Maryland appealed that Wells had missed third base and the umpire signaled "out," not only erasing the two runs, but turning Shank's single into a fielder's choice.

The Pirates also lost a chance in the eighth. Carter doubled and took third on a wild pitch with one away. But the next two batters went down on a strikeout and infield grounder, ending the inning.

Langston, up to lead off the ninth, was hit by a pitch — for the second time in the game — and sacrificed up. With two away, Bradberry was walked to set up the force, but a pop-up ended the threat.

That set the stage for the 10th inning and the winning rally.

Riley, Carter and Bradberry each had two hits to lead the Pirates, while Paul Schager had two for the Terps, now 5-7 on the year.

The Pirates return to action on Wednesday, traveling to UNC-Wilmington for a doubleheader and their first ECAC-South action of the year. They return home on Thursday at 3 p.m. to host the University of North Carolina.

Throckmorton Quits ECU Post

Defensive coordinator Tom Throckmorton has resigned his position as defensive coordinator at East Carolina to join the coaching staff at Virginia Tech, ECU football coach Art Baker announced Monday.

Baker also announced the Don Powers, who joined the ECU staff in January as defensive secondary coach, will assume Throckmorton's duties as defensive coordinator. Powers came to ECU from Western Kentucky, where he served as assistant head coach and defensive coordinator during the 1984 season.

Throckmorton has held the title of defensive coordinator for the past two years and will join Virginia Tech as a linebacker coach.

The 41-year-old Throckmorton came to ECU prior to the 1983 season, joining the Pirates after three years as defensive coach and strength coach at Virginia Military Institute. Prior to coaching at VMI, the Richmond, Va., native, also worked at North Carolina State in 1971, Randolph-Macon in 1972 and the University of Richmond in 1973-78.

Throckmorton's resignation leaves two openings on Baker's staff. Waverly Brooks, who coached defensive ends as well as holding the title of recruiting coordinator, resigned his position March 5 to enter private business.

Throckmorton will replace Dick Biddle on the Virginia Tech staff. Biddle resigned as linebacker coach last week to take a position with another school.

Cavs Playing For 'New York Gang'

By The Associated Press
In their first National Invitation Tournament game, the Virginia Cavaliers "won one for Jimmy." For the rest of the tourney, they're playing for the "New York Gang."

"If we get to New York, I know I'm gonna be about three stories high," said Mel Kennedy, a freshman guard for the Cavaliers who is a native of Long Island. "Maybe there we'll win for the New York gang."

Kennedy and the rest of the "New York gang," — 6-11 sophomore center Olden Polynice of New York City and 6-5 senior guard Tim Mullen of nearby Ridgewood, N.J. — hope to take a step in that direction tonight in a second-round NIT game against visiting St. Joseph's (Pa.).

Quarterfinals will be held this Saturday at sites to be determined with the semifinals and finals on March 27 and March 29 in New York.

In other second-round play tonight, it's Richmond at Indiana; Marquette at Cincinnati, New Mexico at Fresno State and Nebraska at UCLA. On Wednesday night, South Florida plays at Louisville, Southwestern Louisiana meets Tennessee and Tennessee-Chattanooga plays at Lamar.

The Cavaliers are still alive in the tournament by virtue of a 56-55 squeaker over West Virginia last week.

"It doesn't have to be pretty, as long as you do what it takes to win," said Jim Miller, a 6-foot-8 Virginia forward who took plenty of abuse from the Mountaineer crowd in the game at Morgantown.

Miller was the West Virginia high school player of the year four years ago as a senior at Princeton, and the crowd did not let him forget that he had left the state to play elsewhere. But the crowd's jeers motivated Miller's teammates, as well as Miller himself.

Rose Holding Barbecue Dinner

Rose High School will sponsor a barbecue luncheon on Friday, with proceeds benefiting the Rose Athletic Fund.

Plates will be sold in the school parking lot from 11 a.m. until 2 p.m. at $3 per plate.

"We got there (to Morgantown) and saw how arrogant the crowd was," said Kennedy. "That was what really got us pumped up. They were all over Jimmy from the early warmups on. We came back in the locker room, and we were really pumped up. We said, 'All right, let's play some ball for Jimmy.'"

UCLA Coach Walt Hazard, meanwhile, hopes the Bruins get more crowd support for their game against Nebraska than came to Pauley Pavilion last week to watch them beat Montana 78-47. Only 4,280 were on hand last Thursday night.

"I was disappointed," Hazzard said. "But I know we'll have a crowd (tonight). We will expect their support. The student section was filled Thursday night, and I'd like to see the rest of the building filled."

Marquette and Cincinnati advanced to the second round with overpowering victories — the Warriors stopping Bradley 77-64 and the Bearcats outscoring Kent State 77-61.

Xavier Coach Bob Staak, whose team lost twice to Marquette this season, thinks the Bearcats will have their hands full with the Warriors.

"Contrary to what is often said about them, they have very good size," Staak said of the Warriors. "They are the most physical inside team we faced all season."

Staak also rates the Marquette backcourt among the country's best.

"First, they have extreme quickness in their guards, Mandy Johnson and Robert Hall. They are the best defensive guard tandem we played all season. Loyola's Carl Golston and Andre Battle might have been a better pair of offensive guards, but Johnson and Hall were certainly the best defensive pair."

In the other games last week, New Mexico beat Texas A&M 80-67, Nebraska stopped Canisius 79-66, Louisville edged Alcorn State 77-75, Southwestern Louisiana nipped Florida 65-64, South Florida turned back Wake Forest 77-66, Tennessee whipped Tennessee Tech 65-62, St. Joseph's nipped Missouri 68-67, Fresno State defeated Santa Clara 79-76 in three overtimes, Indiana beat Butler 79-57, Tennessee-Chattanooga topped Clemson 67-65, Richmond downed Fordham 59-57 and Lamar stopped Houston 78-71.

Tar Heels Challenge Again

By TOM FOREMAN Jr.
AP Sports Writer

CHAPEL HILL — Michael Jordan left early for the pros. Sam Perkins and Matt Doherty graduated. So there is North Carolina, left with a lot of young players and still challenging for the national collegiate basketball title.

That challenge was supposed to have occurred last season, when Jordan, Perkins, Doherty and a good supporting cast were to have waltzed into Seattle's Kingdome for the NCAA Final Four. Indiana ended that march in the East Regional semifinals in Atlanta, yet Smith is convinced the No. 1 ranking at the end of the 1984 season was deserved.

"If we were not the best team, Georgetown and us were the best teams in the country," Smith said. "Although we did have some injuries at the end of last year, we hit Indiana when they played a super game."

With his three top players gone, expectations were not high for 1985. Yet, Smith and the 26-8 Tar Heels are headed into the semifinals of the Southeast Regionals, where they will face Auburn.

"We're delighted to have won 26 games," said Smith. "I think you can point to young talent which has gained experience."

Smith draws no comparison between the 1984 team that missed a chance at another national title and the 1985 team that's still in the hunt.

"We're just doing it differently," Smith said. "This team has its own chemistry."

The 1985 Tar Heels were picked to finish fourth in the Atlantic Coast Conference regular-season race and didn't draw enough points to warrant a spot in the college basketball preseason polls. All they did, however, was win 12 of their first 13 games to climb back into the top 20.

That streak stretched into January, where the Tar Heel fortunes started to skid. A loss to Southern Methodist was followed by losses in three of the next four games and indications that a string of 18 straight appearances in the NCAA tournament had come to an end.

The trend soon reversed as Smith coached the team to an 8-2 record in February. North Carolina tied for the top seed in the league tournament and got to the finals, where they lost to Georgia Tech.

"I think we became a good basketball team in February," said Smith, who had expressed fears that his team might not even make the National Invitation Tournament. "With our start, I think anything could have happened."

There are three seniors on Smith's club — one has been a spot starter, the second has played in 11 games and the third chose UNC's business school over basketball. That leaves 6-foot-11 junior center Brad Daugherty as the veteran at age 19, sophomore point guard Kenny Smith who missed the stretch run last season with a broken wrist and senior Buzz Peterson, the occasional starter who was pressed into service when Steve Hale suffered a separated shoulder against Middle Tennessee State in a first-round Southeast Regional game.

Also, Smith called on sophomore Joe Wolf and junior Curtis Hunter. Both were hurt in the midst of the January slide but have returned.

Wolf came on to play some of his best basketball in the post season. He is averaging 9.3 points per game and contributed clutch shooting in the ACC tournament and also at the Southeast Regional. Hunter has been fighting off injuries which have plagued him since he arrived at Chapel Hill and is shooting 56.1 percent from the floor.

The biggest surprise of Smith's season has been the emergence of Warren Martin, the 6-11 junior who joined Hunter on the sidelines last season. Martin is shooting 60.1 percent from the field, second best on the team, and has blocked 74 shots, a team best.

Smith said the burden of carrying the team did not fall on just one player, as it might have if Jordan had returned for his senior season.

"I think it was shared with Brad, Kenny, Steve and Buzz. Those were really the four who had ACC experience," Smith said. "The thing about it, the injuries to Wolf and Hunter hurt our progress, and then since our loss at Clemson, we really haven't played poorly."

With the juggling of lineups due to the ailments, Smith had to abandon his standard defensive strategy.

Cremins Claims He's Scared Stiff

ATLANTA (AP) — Georgia Tech basketball players are getting used to seeing their coach in a state of rigor.

"I'm scared stiff," Bobby Cremins said as he prepared his sixth-ranked Yellow Jackets for Thursday's NCAA East Regional semifinal game against No. 12 Illinois.

He's said that about a lot of teams this season and Tech, 26-7 and champions of the Atlantic Coast Conference, has beaten most of them.

"I'll be watching films on them," Cremins said Monday when asked about the Fighting Illini. "It's been so crazy around here I haven't had time for anything."

Illinois, the runner-up in the Big Ten, knocked off Georgia 74-58 Sunday before Georgia Tech eliminated No. 15 Syracuse 70-53 in the second round of the East Regional at The Omni in Atlanta.

The Fighting Illini, 26-8, will meet Tech in one semifinal Thursday night in Providence, R.I., before No. 14 Loyola, Ill., 27-5, faces top-ranked Georgetown, 32-2, in the other.

"I didn't think I'd be sitting here talking to you as a winner," Cremins said Sunday after beating Syracuse. "Now, I gotta go find out more about Illinois. I'm scared to death. I gotta do some research quick."

Cremins, who came to Tech four seasons ago and inherited a 3-23 team, has been an eternal pessimist all season despite the Yellow Jackets' success.

And nothing has changed for the Illinois game.

"I'm scared stiff. I have great respect for the Georgia team and they (the Illini) took them apart. If they could take Georgia apart like that, they are better than a good team," he said.

"In preseason they were up in the top five in the country. Right now they're playing excellent basketball and coming on strong. I just think it will be one of the toughest games we've ever played. We're going to have to play a great game."

The winner will meet either defending national champion Georgetown or Loyola.

"I can't think beyond Illinois," Cremins said. Tech will arrive in Providence tonight and will practice at 2 p.m. Wednesday.

Ueberroth Reinstates Mantle, Mays

NEW YORK (AP) — Commissioner Peter Ueberroth promised "new and stricter guidelines" for baseball's future relationship with legalized gambling after restoring Mickey Mantle and Willie Mays to the sport they starred in for so long. Mantle and Mays had been barred from baseball by Ueberroth's predecessor, Bowie Kuhn, when they accepted jobs as goodwill ambassadors with Atlantic City gambling casinos. After studying their cases for the last two months, the new commissioner on Monday moved to return them to the sport but at the same time defended Kuhn's original action. "I find no fault with the previous ruling," Ueberroth said. "Baseball must remain free from any connection between it and gambling. That is vital. I am making two exceptions for these two great players because of what they mean to our game."

"I read everything there is to read on the subject. I checked what they had been doing. They don't deserve to be out of the game if they want to be in it." Ueberroth said he had consulted with Kuhn before making the Mays-Mantle ruling. "Bowie has only been helpful. I consider him a friend. I discussed the matter with him. He spent 15 years in this job. He knows it very well." However Kuhn, now employed by a Manhattan law firm, did not agree with Ueberroth's action. "I don't know of a basis for changing my decision," he said. "I have trouble going along with it. I told him that. He expected me not to agree. He thinks this should be treated as an exception. I didn't. That is a judgment he has to make." "He says he is not changing policy, merely making an exception based on the character and conduct of Mays and Mantle. I have no question about their conduct. I never have. My problem is with their employment. "Baseball needs some definitive guidelines even tougher than the policy that exists to date." Ueberroth promised that the sport will have exactly that, probably within the next month, to tightly control future associations between baseball personnel and casinos.

"We've got to look at the subject," he said. "It's a complex issue. But I don't think we can start dictating who you can play golf with."

That, essentially, is the role Mays fills with Bally's Park Place and Mantle with Del Webb's Claridge Hotel. Both receive $100,000 a year for promotional and public relations duties and for rubbing elbows with the casinos' best customers. Kuhn, however, found that relationship dangerous for baseball even though Mantle and Mays never quite understood the former commissioner's position.

"I couldn't figure it out," Mantle said. "It was a dumbfounded feeling. I wondered why I was banned. It seemed to me I was a better guy (at that time) than I used to be (when I played)."

"I acted like it didn't bother me, but it did. You don't want to get kicked out of your favorite bar or be banned from baseball."

Mays said "I don't think I did anything wrong for baseball." Neither did George Steinbrenner, owner of the Yankees. "This was a tremendous action," Steinbrenner said. "To arbitrarily ban two of the greatest players in the history of the game because of their association with a legalized activity, while we allow fellows who were convicted of using drugs to play, I don't see the balance. I don't think justice was served. I think justice has been served now."

Players Prepared To Discuss Other Issues

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — The Major League Players Association says new financial documents regarding baseball "ask more questions than they answer."

While those questions are being answered, the union says it would like to resume discussing other issues toward reaching a new labor agreement with owners.

The owners' Player Relations Committee, headed by Lee MacPhail, on Monday provided the union with further financial information which it had requested. Among the data was a two-page schematic showing a breakdown of total industry expenses opposed to income from 1975-83. Figures for 1984 are not yet available.

The table showed total operating expenses in 1983 of $588,260,780 with income of $521,656,909, representing a net loss of $66,603,871. Of those expenses, 47.1 percent were listed as "team" expenses, 80 percent of which consists of player salaries and benefits, MacPhail said.

Those "team" expenses, by comparison, comprised 31.5 percent of industry-wide costs in 1975.

Don Fehr, acting executive director of the players association, said the union now was approaching the point where it would need more detailed information, perhaps including team-by-team breakdowns of income and expenses.

"That's a lot closer to being necessary than it was before," Fehr said after the three-hour meeting. "They have raised the issue, for example, of the risk of deferred compensation due to players. Now that requires very specific information, and we can't get that except by looking club-by-club."

"All the owners have done so far is say they're losing money," Fehr said. "They haven't said why. We've seen some gross industry figures ... eventually, we may have to get to that (team-by-team figures). Eventually we might have to get into the 'most minute detail.'"

The next session is scheduled for Thursday at Clearwater, Fla. At that time, union and management negotiators have agreed to get back to some of the original issues. The two sides began negotiating last November to replace a Basic Agreement, born of the 1981 strike, that expired Dec. 31. Two weeks ago, however, owners asked for a moratorium in discussing issues while the two sides tried to solve the game's economic problems. Since then, owners have been supplying financial information to the union to try to prove a problem exists.

Last Tuesday, owners handed over financial information for the first time in the history of collective bargaining with the union. The union then asked for more detailed information, which it received Monday.

"They have given us some more details," Fehr said, "but at this point each time they give us more data, it raises more questions than it answers."

Fehr said the process was getting "a little frustrating, but there's not much we can do except keep at it. The only thing else we could do is set a strike deadline, and the players are not ready to do that yet."

MacPhail said the union had not yet asked for team-by-team financial statements, but "if they ask, we'll probably join with them and ask the commissioner to provide it."

He said that while the union studies the information, the two sides could once again begin negotiating non-economic issues. The owners would like to negotiate some procedural changes in salary arbitration, and players have asked for some changes in free agency.

"Free agency, that relates to some extent to economics," MacPhail said, "but some of the things we can talk about — like they want to do away with the (re-entry) draft."

When and if management convinces the union that baseball's losses are real and cannot be solved without player cooperation, MacPhail said, "then the hard part begins."

"We sit down together and construct a system that comes close to the break-even point," MacPhail said. "We can't go on the way we've been going."

Gamblers Blast Denver By 36-17

HOUSTON (AP) — Denver Gold Coach Mouse Davis finally got a chance to look into the teeth of the fun-and-shoot monster he created with the Houston Gamblers a year ago.

And it bit him. The Gamblers, paced by four touchdown passes from quarterback Jim Kelly and three field goals by Toni Fritsch, blasted Davis' Gold 36-17 Monday night in a United States Football League game with the offense Davis created last season as the Gamblers' offensive coordinator.

"Mouse is just like any other coach we play against but it was sure good to beat him," Kelly said after completing 32 of 61 passes for 433 yards. "After the game he (Davis) said he couldn't believe how much punishment I could take, but he said he knew that I was a hard-nosed player."

The Gamblers fell behind 17-13 in the third quarter before Kelly and the Gamblers rallied to their fourth straight victory. The Gold dropped to 2-2.

"We did what we've been doing all year, keeping our poise and fighting back," Kelly said.

Houston started slowly against the Gold. After taking a 13-7 lead on Kelly's four-yard touchdown pass to Richard Johnson and Fritsch's field goals of 27 and 42 yards, Denver rallied to a 17-13 lead in the third quarter.

Gold running back Bill Johnson shoved off four tacklers in a 26-yard touchdown run for Denver's first score and Vince Evans hit Marc Lewis on an eight-yard touchdown pass for a 14-13 halftime lead.

Brian Speelman's 27-yard field goal made it 17-13 before the Gamblers went to work.

Fritsch kicked his third field goal, a 40-yarder, and Kelly hit touchdown passes of 40 yards to Gerald McNeil, 10-yards to Vince Courville and nine yards to Clarence Verdin to bowl over the Gold.

"Our fellows look at it like he (Davis) created a monster," Courville said. "We have a talented group of guys who know how to run the offense. It's a special rivalry, playing for a trophy and bragging rights."

Denver linebacker Jeff Delaney was a thorn in Kelly's side, marring an otherwise outstanding passing performance with three interceptions.

"We had a good game plan and we kept them confused during the first half," Delaney said. "But in the second half they started to be able to read us better. Our defense had to stay out there so much that we got tired."

Kelly's final touchdown pass was a nine yarder to Verdin in a drive that included the first official call to be overruled by an instant replay screen in the USFL.

Kelly's 53-yard pass completion to Courville was at first ruled good but an instant replay showed Courville out of bounds and the play was called back.

Referee Takes Stand In Defamation Suit

IOWA CITY, Iowa (AP) — A Big Ten basketball referee claims his reputation and career were damaged by T-shirts depicting him with a noose around his neck, but the T-shirt peddler says the trouble stems from a foul call that prompted 7,500 angry letters.

Referee Jim Bain is scheduled to take the witness stand today to tell a Johnson County District Court jury why he should be awarded damages from T-shirt producer John Gillispie and his wife, Karen.

Bain's attorney, David Dutton, said during opening arguments Monday that the shirts, which carry the slogan, "Jim Bain Fan Club," and show a puffy, red-faced Bain wearing the noose, cost the referee a promotion and caused him "embarrassment and humiliation."

But defense attorney Jay Honohan said it was a call during a 1982 basketball game, not the T-shirt, that harmed the referee's career.

"He made a call at that basketball game which to say was controversial would be an understatement," Honohan said. "Long before the T-shirts were on the street, the phone calls started and the letters started and all the devil broke loose."

During a March 1982 game between Iowa and Purdue, Bain called a shoving foul against Iowa's Kevin Boyle, giving Purdue's Dan Palombizio a turn at the foul line with the score tied and no time left. Palombizio sank one shot to give Purdue a 66-65 victory.

Enraged Iowa fans, who apparently believed there was no foul, immediately began to deluge Bain's home and the Big Ten office with angry and sometimes threatening phone calls and letters, both lawyers told the jurors.

Honohan said it was the phone calls, the 7,500 letters and extensive television, newspaper and radio commentary on the call which stopped the Big Ten from offering Bain a position as the conference's supervisor of referees.

But Dutton told the jurors that it was the T-shirt which ended the chance at the promotion and caused his client "the embarrassment and humiliation of being shown as a person who should be hanged, who should be villainized."

Dutton said that after March 1982, whenever Bain refereed, the fans would chant, "Hang Jim Bain. Iowa was right."

He said that by designing and selling the T-shirt, Gillispie had invaded Bain's privacy and libeled him. Bain's suit does not specify the amount of damages he wants.

"John Gillispie had one primary intent, and that was to use the anger and frustration that was being felt by the people of Iowa to sell his product. And in the process, he hurt Jim Bain," Dutton said.

But Honohan argued that Gillispie had every right to use Bain's name and likeness because, as a referee, Bain is a public figure. He further argued that the caricature of Bain was an expression of freedom of speech.

The Gillispies sold more than 300 of the T-shirts, which were printed in black and gold, Iowa's school colors.

The couple had earlier filed a counterclaim against Bain charging "referee malpractice," but two Iowa courts threw out the case, ruling that a referee can't be sued for a bad call.

Dutton said he believes the counterclaim "was done for the purpose of causing him (Bain) further embarrassment."

Candidates Apply For Clemson Presidency

ANDERSON, S.C. (AP) — Several candidates with "impeccable credentials" have contacted Clemson University to apply for the presidency, a university trustee has said.

In today's editions, the Anderson Independent quotes Dr. Fletcher Derrick Jr. of Charleston as saying the university already has received some unsolicited inquiries about the job.

"This is great because it occurred even before the selection process is in place and detracts from the idea that we have injured ourselves with the academic community," he said.

Derrick, a urologist and 1954 Clemson graduate, declined to identify the candidates because "to do so would jeopardize their current positions," he said.

His statement Monday followed news that the board will meet at 10 a.m. Sunday to "adopt an open, revised, up-to-date, streamlined and all-inclusive selection process" to find a new Clemson president, according to the agenda.

"The important thing there was that this be open and that it be all-inclusive, which means including faculty and students and other members of the Clemson family," said a trustee, who insisted on anonymity. "Streamlined is just that we don't have to take a year and a half to find a new president, though I don't have any time-frame in mind," the trustee said.

President Bill Atchley resigned in a March 1 board meeting, in the wake of a probe of drug use among athletes at the school. His resignation is effective July 1.

Former Athletic Director Bill McLellan also resigned at that meeting, and he will be reassigned to another post at the university.

The process for selecting a new president is "well-established" at Clemson, according to a statement issued Monday by board secretary Joseph McDevitt.

"Similar policies are recognized by all leading universities.

"This task of selecting a president will probably be the most important one for Clemson University in the lifetime of the present trustees," the statement said.

At the meeting Sunday, the board also will review results of a state Law Enforcement Division investigation into illegal distribution of prescription drugs to athletes, according to the agenda.

"Now that the case regarding (former Clemson coaches) Sam Colson and Stan Narewski have been concluded," the statement said, the board has requested a "complete briefing" by SLED on its investigation of the cases.

Colson and Narewski pleaded guilty to possessing and distributing prescription drugs last week. A judge sentenced them to probation.

Five trustees, including P.W. McAlister of Laurens, James Self of Greenwood, James Bostic of Aiken, Robert Coker of Hartsville and J.J. Britton of Sumter, requested the special meeting by sending telegrams to Chairman James Waddell Saturday, the statement said.

Another trustee, Louis Batson Jr. of Greenville, submitted a similar request Monday, according to the statement.

"We're on the road to establishing truly that academics are the first priority at Clemson University, that we are a great academic institution that has an athletic program attached to it, not vice versa," said the trustee. "We're looking to the future."

Jim Brown Determined In Rape, Battery Trial

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Jim Brown, pro football Hall of Famer, reacted to the announcement that he will face charges of rape, sexual battery and assault with same determination he showed on the gridiron.

"This is a fight that I welcome," Brown said by telephone Monday from his home in Hollywood Hills. "I am a warrior. I want the facts to come out because when they do they'll prove what I'm saying. This is most unfair situation I've known in my life."

Deputy District Attorney Sandra Buttitta said Monday one count each of rape, sexual battery and assault would be filed against Brown after Brown failed to produce two witnesses he said would clear him. Brown will be formally charged sometime today, she added.

Brown said he welcomed the announcement and was eager to bring the case to court.

"It's the greatest thing to ever happen to me," Brown said. "For the first time in my life I'll get full disclosure. They've conspired with a known liar to discredit me, and they have facts — the facts that prove the lady wasn't raped."

Brown had until Monday morning to produce two witnesses before the Los Angeles County district attorney's office would announce whether charges would be filed, Buttitta said Monday.

The county grand jury completed its investigation of the case Thursday afternoon, but Buttitta said the probe would be reopened if the two witnesses could be located.

Eddie Harris, an attorney for Brown, said the additional witnesses were not produced because Brown's innocence had been established by the two witnesses already provided by Brown.

"It was more a philosophical decision than anything else," said Harris. "We feel that we have provided witnesses that are extremely credible who told their story. We don't feel that we should produce every witness to prove that he did not commit a crime."

Brown was arrested at his Hollywood Hills home Feb. 20 after a complaint was lodged by the alleged victim, a 33-year-old teacher who said she was beaten and raped at his home the previous night, police said.

The teacher alleged she was punched repeatedly to force her to have sex with Brown and a companion, Carol Moses.

Buttitta said evidence has been uncovered that corroborates the allegations.

"We recovered certain evidence from the house and subjected it to scientific tests and we believe it corroborates the victim's story," Buttitta said.

Brown is scheduled to appear Thursday in Municipal Court.

If convicted, Brown faces a maximum prison term of 13 years, Buttitta said.

Brown said the prosecutors have given him the chance to bring out his innocence and that he has been able to expose "at every point this conspiracy against me."

"They've intimidated a witness. They asked her if she was black and they made her talk to the investigator, the district attorney and in front of a grand jury," he said. "That's three sessions of grilling she's had to go through... after asking if she's black."

Brown said the decision to press charges has racial implications.

Brown has been free on a $17,500 bond. Moses, 22, who was free on $1,000 bond after being booked for investigation of sexual battery, was not charged, Buttitta said.

YOUR DAILY Horoscope
 from the Carroll Righter Institute

GENERAL TENDENCIES: Until the sun goes down, this is a day when there can be a considerable number of upsets with much confusion about just how to reduce ideas to a workable reality.

ARIES (Mar. 21 to Apr. 19) You are flustered by private worries, so remain calm, otherwise you can make serious errors which prove to be expensive.

TAURUS (Apr. 20 to May 20) A pal who has serious worries may have little time to listen to your own, so be patient and more self-reliant.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21) Try not to let those who have power over you and be sure to handle your work carefully and get right results.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to Jul. 21) Don't jump into that new interest you know little about until you have studied every phase thoroughly.

LEO (Jul. 22 to Aug. 21) You had better study your obligations well before you try to solve them if you want to get good results.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22) Not a good day to come to an agreement with a partner, so bide your time. Study his or her side of the situation.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22) Make only wise improvements at home instead of radical ones. Study monetary statements for accuracy.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21) Be sure to stick to amusements that are not too costly otherwise you could get into trouble. Get special work completed.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21) Trying to make radical changes at home could bring you trouble there at this time. The evening is romantic.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20) You find that communicating with others is fraught with delays and problems, but you handle them easily.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19) Not a good day to delve into property or monetary matters since your thinking is not at its best now.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to Mar. 20) Although you feel discontented, persevere in what you are doing and get good results just the same.

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY... he or she will have a knack for getting into situations quite different from the norm, so early teach self-reliance in order to rise above them. Give as fine an education as you can and upon maturity, your progeny does well in real estate.

Media Chain Reaches Pact To Acquire ABC Television

NEW YORK (AP) — "Dynasty" will still be "Dynasty" and viewers probably will notice no changes after Capital Cities Communications Inc. acquires the larger American Broadcasting Cos. for $3.5 billion, say analysts who see clear sailing for the proposed deal.

The merger, announced Monday, would represent the first time ownership of a major television network has changed hands. The creation of Capital Cities-ABC Inc. must be approved by shareholders of both companies and includes participation by Warren Buffett, one of the nation's richest men.

ABC, which had been a rumored takeover target for months, had been a strong second in prime-time TV ratings in recent years, but slid into third in the current season. However, its daytime TV operations remain highly profitable, analysts say, and it has 214 affiliated stations nationwide.

"I'd be surprised if the viewer is affected at all," Susan V. Watson, a security analyst for Morgan Stanley & Co., said Monday. "This is really more a corporate question. It never shows with the viewer when the (broadcasting) stock goes up or down, and this should be no different."

ABC has television and radio operations and also is involved in publishing, video enterprises, motion pictures and scenic attractions. Capital Cities owns newspapers, TV and radio stations and cable TV systems.

"We just thought it was a natural fit between the two companies," said Thomas S. Murphy, head of Capital Cities, "and we thought we'd have an opportunity to handle the new possibilities coming up in the electronics field better together."

ABC chief Leonard Goldenson said, "I feel that the company I built from scratch is in good hands and that it will be carried on, and that's important to me." Goldenson, 79, had headed ABC since 1953 and built the network from a weak third to a challenger for the top spot.

Buffett, 54, a resident of Omaha, Neb., made his fortune, estimated at $665 million, by investing in media operations. The chairman of Berkshire Hathaway Inc., he would put up more than $500 million in exchange for an 18 percent stake in Capital Cities and a seat on its board.

Other analysts agreed that the takeover would not affect programming, which last year included heavily watched Olympic coverage.

"I think initially the operator will be run to stabilize things to keep things running successfully," said J. Kendrick Noble Jr., an analyst with PaineWebber Inc. "I don't think Capital Cities will do much to change programming at ABC."

Fred Ansel, an analyst at Dean Witter Reynolds Inc., said he thought changes would be "evolutionary."

"Remember Capital Cities has four (ABC) affiliates and their prime job is to compete with NBC and CBS," Ansel said.

Both Noble and Ansel said the deal would have little trouble gaining regulatory approval.

"The character and reputation of the parties concerned is a factor in it," said Noble.

The two companies said Goldenson would serve as chairman of the executive committee of the proposed new company.

Murphy, 59, Capital Cities' chairman and chief executive officer, would hold the same titles at the new company.

ABC and Capital Cities said shareholders of both companies would consider the deal at their annual meetings in June.

A Reflector Review

Spy Movie Excellent But Raises Questions

Sometimes a movie takes as its premise a story that is inherently unbelievable and makes it believable through good acting. Occasionally, a movie based on a true story that is unbelievable, and its success rides on the strength of the characterizations.

"The Falcon & the Snowman" (at the Buccaneer) is a disturbing true story that is initially unbelievable, but successful because of the way the story is developed and the questions the movie raises.

It's a story of international espionage, hard-core spying, the passing of top-secret classified military secrets from Americans to Russians. This differs from typical spy stories, however, in the ages, occupations and motivations of the central characters.

Chris Boyce (Timothy Hutton), a child of the upper-middle class in Southern California, trains falcons in the hills for a hobby. His father, a retired FBI agent, still maintains connections to the bureau. When Chris quits the seminary, his father lines him up a job in the mailroom of RTX, a CIA contracting agency. He decides to go to law school, but meantime, RTX gives him highest security clearance and promotes him to the room which oversees all international communications among U.S. agents. What he sees there of international intrigue and U.S. manipulation of the internal affairs of other countries disturbs him immensely.

His old friend Dalton Lee (Sean Penn) is on the run from police for multiple drug busts. Dalton, too, is a child of the upper-middle class. His parents don't know how to handle him. His drug deals are big-league, handled in Mexico, pounds of cocaine worth big money. He wants to bring his friend Chris into the action as a partner, but Chris doesn't want any part of it until he discovers CIA intrigues, that is.

At that point, he uses Dalton's inherent greed to convince him to act as a courier, passing secrets Chris steals on to Russians in Mexico. Dalton walks into the embassy, connections are made. From that moment on, the movie becomes a psychological study of motivations in conflict.

Chris is a traitor to his country, but for what he considers to be good reasons: he hopes that in passing secrets of military hardware and satellites, he can help equalize the balance of terror and bring some peace into the world. Dalton, on the other hand, essentially agrees with Chris's motives, but his main motivation is money — coupled with a fantasy that he is a real spy in a dime-store novel. As he gets deeper and deeper into the grim reality of his spying and the fantasy he builds for himself, he becomes more and more dependent on his drugs, which he is taking in large amounts. He convinces the Russians to back a heroin deal. The Russians, of course, are in it for the secrets, but they are human, too, with some of the same motivations as Chris whom they never meet until late in the movie. When Chris decides he wants out, his motivations are at cross purposes with his fears. He is in over his head, and his friend Dalton is in worse shape.

Sean Penn and Timothy Hutton are brilliant in this movie. Penn, in particular shows the range of his acting skill. Hutton is handsome, winsome, thoughtful as Chris Boyce. John Schlesinger's direction has coaxed exceptional performances from them both, and from the others in the cast. Steven Zaillian's screenplay, based on the book by Robert Lindsey, sounds right and uses the emotional resonances of its characters to bring the story to its conclusion.

Overall, this is an excellent movie. The problem is, these two young men get into the spy business all too easily. Even though this is based on a true-life story (RTX is obviously TRW, a major military information-handling and electronics contractor in the L.A. area), it's too easy for this seedy young punk to convince the Russians he's for real. If it's this easy to be a spy, it's no wonder that there are periodic reports of security breaches; since one scene deals with a potential cover-up of the spying scandal, it's possible to presume that this sort of activity does go on more often than we know about.

The movie deserves to be seen not only for the brilliance of its performances, but for the questions it raises.

For the Birds

Today, the swallows are expected to return to San Juan Capistrano, California. North American barn swallows often travel 10,000 miles in their yearly migration. In 1955, an Arctic tern which had been banded after birth was found 12,000 miles away in Australia. In 1967, an airline pilot spotted 30 whooper swans flying at 27,000 feet from Iceland to Great Britain. Before going to its breeding ground, the sooty tern remains continuously aloft for three or four years.

DO YOU KNOW — On what day do the swallows usually leave San Juan Capistrano each year?

MONDAY'S ANSWER — The walrus is the only kind of seal that has tusks.

For more than 60 years, New York's Cavendish Club has been the premier rubber bridge club in the U.S. On this hand from a recent game, the club's business manager, Tom Snow, succeeded in hoodwinking two of the country's foremost players.

After his partner had passed, the last thing that Snow, sitting South, wanted was a competitive auction on a hand where it was more than likely that the spade suit belonged to the vulnerable opponents who already had a part score toward completing the rubber. Therefore, he elected to open one no trump even though he had a five-card heart suit and only 14 points.

This tactic proved successful in the auction. Note that, as the cards lie, East-West can make three spades, yet neither of them could venture into the auction with any degree of safety.

To compound the indignity, clever play by Snow resulted in his making the contract rather than going down one. West was reluctant to lead away from any of his honors, so he chose the six of diamonds as his opening salvo. Instead of making the routine play of dummy's jack, and without a moment's hesitation, declarer won the ace as East echoed with the eight!

Now declarer ran the jack of hearts to West's king. West reverted to a diamond, and declarer was home with three diamond tricks and four hearts.

To appreciate the beauty of declarer's play at trick one, you must realize that, if the heart finesse had succeeded, declarer needed only two diamond tricks. And if the heart finesse lost, declarer wanted to offer West every inducement to continue diamonds rather than shift to a club which, as the cards lie, could lead to the contract's defeat.

Taxi Bomb

SAN SEBASTIAN, Spain (AP) — Basque separatists commandeered a taxi, then drove to a military horse-breeding establishment and set off a bomb which caused damage but no injuries, police said.

Police the gunman forced the taxi driver into the trunk before driving to the military facility.

Government 'Plum Book' Is Always A Best Seller

WASHINGTON (AP) — In a town where information translates into power, owning a book titled "Policy and Supporting Positions" is a must.

Everybody calls it the "Plum Book." The book, just off the Government Printing Office presses, is bound to be a bestseller. In 261 oversize paperback pages, it lists thousands of jobs the Reagan administration can fill with political appointments.

Lobbyists, reporters, members of Congress, federal employees and job-seekers, employed and unemployed, all want a copy. A fresh version of the Plum Book comes out every four years.

For $9, one can get detailed data — job description, location, salary and current occupant — on patronage jobs handed out to those with the right connections.

The book begins with George M. White, the architect of the Capitol who earns $71,100 in his presidentially appointed position, and winds up with the director of the Veterans Administration office in the Philippines.

In between, it covers every level of deputy assistant, staff assistant, executive assistant and plain old assistant.

The book is compiled by the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee. This year, for the first time, it lists the Senior Executive Service jobs — career positions filled and emptied at the pleasure of the president.

Those jobs pay between $61,296 and $72,300 and up to 10 percent of them can be filled with political appointees.

There are 8,000 senior executive jobs out of the 2.9 million positions in the government, including Postal Service workers.

Sen. William Roth Jr., R-Del., chairman of the Senate committee, said the book is "especially important to those of us in Congress because we can use it to keep a check on the effectiveness of the federal merit systems."

The CIA listed a number of senior positions, but listed the names of only two of the job holders: Director William Casey and the number two person, John McMahon.

An hour after the book went on sale at the Government Printing Office's main store, Yvonnizier Staley was handing over her money.

Ms. Staley, a District of Columbia employee who worked for President Reagan's re-election committee last year, said she hoped to find a federal job dealing with international relations.

"I didn't work in the campaign just to get a job," she added hastily.

The GPO printed 25,000 copies of the Plum Book. There were no lines to buy it, said bookstore manager J.B. Pearson.

But the government isn't worried. The demand is always there.

PLUM BOOK — Anne Crowell, an employee in a government book store in Washington, stacks some of the bulky 261-page paperbacks listing thousands of jobs the Reagan administration can fill with political appointees. The book, titled "Policy and Supporting Positions," is better known as the "Plum Book" and is destined to be a hot seller, at least with those suffering from the ailment known as "Potomac Fever." (AP Laserphoto)

Phone Companies Say Patrons Seeking Long-Distance Links

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's local telephone companies report that many more customers than first believed are signing up for easy-dialing long-distance service from the flood of companies now offering discount call rates.

As part of the court-supervised breakup of American Telephone and Telegraph Co., the former local Bell Telephone companies are required to connect a large percentage of their customers to the long-distance company of the customers' choosing.

Before this so-called equal access plan went into effect, only AT&T customers could pick up their telephones and call long-distance by dialing "1," an area code and a seven-digit number. Those using a competing service had to dial a computer access number and a personal code in addition to the other numbers.

The equal access system allows customers to make immediate connection not only with AT&T long-distance service, but to competitors such as MCI, GTE Sprint and hundreds of others. The customers also can choose one company as their primary long-distance service, and then have access to others by using five-digit access codes for each one.

But despite the prospect of cut-rate long-distance rates from the AT&T competitors, initial customer response to equal access, which began in some areas of the country in July 1984, appeared to be sluggish.

However, Communications Daily, a trade publication, said the low sign-up figures were misleading because they were based solely on customer choices during the 90-day "pre-subscription" periods that preceded equal access hook-up.

Subsequent filings by the seven Bell regional holding companies at the Justice Department show a significant number of customers have been signing up during the grace period that follows the pre-subscription period, the publication said.

For example, it said Bell Atlantic, operating in the Middle Atlantic states, reported that an office at Hackensack, N.J., had registered 34 percent of its customers for equal access at the 90-day mark — but the figure quickly grew to more than 53 percent.

And a central office in Janesville, Wis., reported 21 percent of the users had signed up before equal access started, but the number leaped to 41 percent in less than a month.

Pacific Bell, in the Far West, reported that 22 percent of its lines were subscribed at activation, growing to nearly 28 percent as of Feb. 25. Southwestern Bell said less than 7 percent of its lines were designated when the conversion took place.

Priest Says Bucks Are 'Heaven Sent'

NEW YORK (AP) — A priest who won $1.17 million in the New York Lotto game says it's more blessed to give than to receive — so he's giving away his winnings.

The Rev. Joseph J. Faraone said that half will help pay for his parish's new church and the rest will go to family, friends and "pet projects" such as a drive by the youth group of St. Patrick's Catholic Church in Yorktown Heights to aid the hungry in Ethiopia.

If there is any left, said the 37-year-old priest, "I'll put it aside toward my retirement, which I hope will be a long way off."

"For the whole parish, it's like Christmas all over again," Faraone said as he claimed his winnings at a news conference Monday.

But the prize actually came just days before St. Patrick's Day, which honors the saint for which the church is named. And the priest said he believed the timing was a sign from God.

"It tells me that he wanted it to happen," said Faraone, a green flower in his lapel and a smile on his face.

Faraone first played Lotto two years ago, when the parish was struggling to finance its new $2 million church. "I realized what a terrible burden and hardship it had become ... I thought, wouldn't it be nice if I could arrange for the state to help pay for the church?"

So twice a week, he bought a Lotto card from a nearby stationery store. The numbers were always the same, selected with the aid of a $1 plastic box in which six beads roll at random into 44 holes.

No holy water was sprinkled on the box, he said, no blessing was pronounced. "I'd like to say (the number selection) had to do with the seven sacraments, but it didn't," Faraone said.

At 6:30 a.m. on March 14, Faraone awoke and telephoned a taped message containing the previous night's winning numbers — 6, 7, 9, 22, 33 and 43. They sounded good, but he had no time to check them, and went to 7 a.m. Mass.

After the service, he called again, and the numbers were right. "Can you repeat those numbers again?" he asked the recording.

A third call convinced him he was a millionaire. "I was stunned, amazed, humbled by the whole thing," he said.

Faraone said he was content with his $350 monthly stipend and was determined to share his winnings "with those I love and those who have shared their love with me, my family and friends." His purpose has been accomplished, he said, and he does not plan to play Lotto again.

Study Says Aid Cuts Boosting Poverty

By The Associated Press
The latest cuts in programs for the poor proposed by the Reagan administration would double the number of people dropped from benefit programs in North Carolina and across the South, says the author of a report on poverty. "That can only deepen poverty," Steve Suits, executive director of the Southern Regional Council and author of a 40-page study on the poor, said in a telephone interview Monday.

The study released last week shows nearly 260,000 North Carolinians have been cut from federal poverty programs in the past four years, including more than 175,000 eliminated from the food stamp program.

Because North Carolina was one of several Southern states that has not increased benefits reduced by the federal government, the impact of the cuts was greater here than elsewhere in the nation, Suits said.

"In the South, there is generally a historical reluctance to support these programs," he said.

The Atlanta-based, non-profit council said nearly 4 million recipients across the nation were cut from poverty programs from 1980 through 1984.

The Reagan administration maintains that cuts in federal poverty programs have not affected the "truly needy" and have merely removed from the welfare rolls those who do not need government assistance.

State officials say fewer poor people were being served by traditional welfare programs. But during the four-year period, other programs were boosted to help the needy, said Bonnie Cramer, an assistant director in the state Department of Social Services.

For example, Ms. Cramer said, $20 million worth of surplus food — cheese, butter and powdered milk — was distributed free to the poor. The state also spent $200,000 for direct assistance to families cut from the Aid To Families With Dependent Children program.

In addition, in the past four years, more than $28 million in federal energy assistance money was distributed to help 162,000 North Carolina families pay their fuel bills.

"There have been a number of state efforts," Cramer said. "They cannot be discounted."

But Ms. Cramer said "it would be extremely expensive" for the state to pick up the total cost of federal cutbacks on food stamps, Medicaid and AFDC.

In the Medicaid program, 48,486 North Carolina residents — roughly 7 percent of those receiving benefits — were stricken from the rolls in the past four years, the council reported.

Of every six welfare recipients in the state who get AFDC money, one was cut. The food stamp reductions accounted for 25 percent of those who previously received benefits.

The other Southern states hardest hit by reductions were South Carolina, Arkansas and Tennessee.

Louisiana was one Southern state that supplemented the reductions in federal programs with money from the state treasury, Suits said. "They had an increase in revenue from oil and gas revenues."

Jury Pool Expanded

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — The federal judge in a $48 million civil suit stemming from a 1979 shootout in Greensboro has decided to cull an even larger pool of prospective jurors than he had planned.

"I'm going to get as many as I can," U.S. District Judge Robert R. Merhige Jr. said Monday, noting that two qualified jurors have filed requests to be removed from the pool. "I want to have a little bit of a cushion."

Merhige, who had sought a pool of 38, said he is now looking for a pool of at least 40 qualified jurors from which he will let attorneys choose six jurors and up to five alternates.

Six more jurors were qualified Monday as the lawsuit entered its second week of trial.

Merhige said he also was considering giving the plaintiffs one or two more opportunities to remove from the panel alternate jurors they are uncomfortable with.

The plaintiffs and defendants will each be able to cut 10 people from the pool in selecting six jurors who will hear the case. The plaintiffs will be able to strike two alternate jurors, while each of the three sets of defendants will be able to cut two.

Merhige said he was considering giving the plaintiffs more strikes after they complained about what they believed was an inequity in the way the alternate strikes have been divided.

Thirty-four of the 94 prospective jurors interviewed so far have been qualified to hear the trial.

Principal Indicted On Indecent Liberties Charge

GREENSBORO (AP) — A Guilford County grand jury has indicted Kiser Junior High School principal Barry T. Williams on charges of taking indecent liberties with a minor and assault on a female.

Williams, 32, who has taken a 90-day leave of absence with pay, is scheduled for arraignment April 15. No trial date has been set.

Williams was charged last month in connection with an alleged Feb. 7 incident at the school involving a 14-year-old Kiser student.

The felony charge of indecent liberties with a minor carries a maximum 10-year sentence. The lesser offense of assault on a female, a misdemeanor, carries a two-year sentence.

Several hundred of Williams' co-workers, former co-workers, church members and friends have formed a committee supporting him, said Helen LaVack of Greensboro, committee treasurer. Committee members wrote letters urging prosecutors to quickly resolve the case.

Williams is represented by Greensboro attorney John Kernode, who was retained by the North Carolina Association of Educators. The NCAE is assisting because Williams is an NCAE member.

Reached at home Monday, Williams said he was unaware of the grand jury's action and declined comment.

Nearly 260,000 Lose Benefits

By The Associated Press

Almost 260,000 recipients of federal assistance in North Carolina have been removed from poverty programs in the past four years, including more than 175,635 cut from the Food Stamps program, the Southern Regional Council reported.

The council, in a report released last week, said nearly 4 million recipients throughout the nation had been cut from poverty programs from 1980 through 1984.

In North Carolina, 48,486 people were taken from the Medicaid program in the four years. The council noted that the four states where recipients were most likely to be eliminated were South Carolina, North Carolina, Arkansas and Tennessee.

For example, in Arkansas, one of four recipients of Aid to Families with Dependent Children were cut, along with 15 percent of Medicaid recipients and 17 percent of Food Stamp recipients. In North Carolina, one of six AFDC recipients were deleted, along with 7 percent of Medicaid recipients and 25 percent of Food Stamp recipients.

Textile Industry Expects Shortage

RALEIGH (AP) — Schools that produce the nation's textile graduates are projecting enrollment declines that could reach a "point of crisis," possibly because of news of layoffs and plant closings, officials say.

"The industry propaganda on the trade front — the gloom and doom — may make it more difficult to recruit," said Seth Bodner, executive director of the National Knitwear and Sportswear Association.

"It's difficult to attract students when Avondale Mills has closed a plant in their hometown," said Roy Broughton Jr., associate professor of textile engineering at Auburn University.

"We see a mushrooming problem that has evolved in the past six months," said Dame Hamby, dean of the North Carolina State University School of Textiles, which produces about half of all U.S. textile graduates. "It's the first time in the 36 years I've been here we've had such a universal negative impact on freshman enrollment."
