Deadly Tornado Of March 1984 Struck Pitt Without Warning

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

The National Weather Service had issued a severe thunderstorm watch for the Pitt County area at 2:46 p.m. on March 28, 1984. Then a severe thunderstorm warning for Pitt, Green, and Lenoir counties was issued at 8:58 p.m.

A tornado warning — when people should take shelter immediately — as is standard procedure, would be issued only after a tornado had actually been sighted or indicated on radar.

"We updated the severe thunderstorm warning to a tornado warning ... at 9:26 p.m." after a "radar hook" was seen at 9:22 p.m. indicating a tornado had formed, Bob Muller, meterologist in charge of the weather service's Raleigh office said several days later.

But the tornado warning was too late for Pitt County residents. The first call reporting damage from the storm was received by the Pitt County communications center "about 8:40 p.m." Bobby Joyner, county fire marshal and emergency management coordinator said. "It was to a house in the Bell Arthur area blown down" by high winds from the thunderstorm; "an old house they were tearing down.

"Then from that, calls started coming in from the Ayden area. It was about 9:10 p.m. when I realized it was so extensive. I had started to Ayden when they (the dispatchers at the communications center) said (N.C.) 43 was hit. I said I'd go there, then just went to the communications center" to set up a command post, Joyner recalled. "About 9:30, we started calling in out-of-county rescue units to help."

Thursday will be the first anniversary of that killer tornado, which left nine persons dead, injured at least 148 others, and caused millions of dollars damage in Pitt County.

In all, the tornadoes spawned by the "'supercell" that day took 44 lives in North Carolina and injured 928 people.

A weather service report on the March 28 storms said the location of the outbreak, away from "Tornado Alley" — the Great Plains and the Mississippi Valley — was "unusual." The same report said the tornado with the longest track that day "began in Lenoir County ... traveled 38 miles through Lenoir, Green and Pitt counties" and "killed 16 — the largest single death toll of any of the tornadoes"

In Pitt County the tornado stayed on or near the ground, cutting a path of destruction a quarter to a half-mile wide and 22.5 miles long. More than 450 dwelling units were damaged in one way or another — 92 houses were destroyed, 88 mobile homes destroyed, major damage to another 77 houses and 26 house trailers was reported.

The tornado tore down trees, utility lines and damaged houses in the Pines subdivision at Ayden, where it also damaged an apartment building, a supermarket, a school, destroyed a funeral home.

Several homes on the Tar Road, south of Winterville, were heavily damaged.

A woman died when her mobile home on the Branch Road (SR 1716) farther to the northeast, was destroyed.

The whirling winds then roared through Taylors Estates mobile home park about three miles south of Greenville, on N.C. 43, where it took away 28 of the 50 trailers in the park. The other 22 received varying amounts of damage.

More people were killed and more homes were destroyed in the Portertown and Simpson areas before the storm touched down in the Alvin community along SR 1562 east of Greenville off N.C. 33, and again along SR 1550 east of Pactolus.

UNC's Medical Center Suffers Space Woes

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the first of three articles on medical center development in North Carolina.

By SUE F.HINSON
Reflector Staff Writer

CHAPEL HILL — UNC-Chapel Hill's medical center comes alive early. By at least 8 every morning, a veritable sea of cars surrounds the complex. Inside, the halls are awash with patients, health care personnel, visitors.

By the end of each day, an estimated 15,000 people, maybe more, have passed through the front doors of the hospital. And "that's a lot of folks coming and going in a cramped area," according to North Carolina Memorial Hospital Executive Director Eric Munson.

To see what Munson means, all you have to do is look out his sixth-story office window. To the left, right, and directly ahead, as far as you can see, are more storied buildings — buildings almost within touching distance — as well as parking spaces, people and more people. Yet, the charm of the hospital-medical school campus still comes across despite the close quarters. Bricked walkways, green avenues and trees provide serenity amid the hustle and bustle.

The public four-year medical school/hospital complex is now 35 years old. Since 1950 when construction was begun to expand the center from a two-year to a four-year institution and later to a teaching/acute care (hospital) facility, the complex has evolved into an academic, clinical and research facility of "astronomical" proportions, Munson said. But it is a facility not without its problems.

The most pressing of those problems is space, according to Dr. Stuart Bondurant, dean of the University of North Carolina School of Medicine.

"This complex," he observed, "was not designed with a coherent, efficient long-term plan, and it suffers some inefficiencies and inconveniences as a consequence." For instance, he explained, the university's medical library is located immediately in front of the med school building, and therefore blocks access to the main door of the med school. In addition, he said the hospital facility itself consists of a very long spine with a bed tower rising at right angles in the middle of it — an arrangement that often makes it difficult to ensure rapid patient care. For example, Bondurant said if you had a patient in need of laboratory services, you might have to travel a quarter of a mile through the hospital to obtain that service. The teaching facility is also some distance from faculty offices and labs, and provision for parking is quite remote, Bondurant said.

Even though Bondurant criticizes some aspects of the school of medicine/ hospital facility, he added he didn't know of a place taken overall that could be used as a model. "The criticisms that I made of layout are shared by many other academic medical centers. The reason is many were built very rapidly without enough time for planning."

According to Gordon Rutherford, director of the university department of facilities planning, UNC-Chapel Hill does not have a written development plan, but is currently working on a formal plan for the whole campus including the medical center. "To say we don't have a plan is a misnomer," Rutherford said, adding the university has done work in the past to come up with direction for development, but has not printed a formal booklet.

Chapel Hill's medical center is located on approximately 70 to 80 acres, the majority of which is zoned Office and Institutional-3 — a designation with no height limitations and no setback requirements along streets within the district. There are setback provisions for areas along the edge of the medical district where university development abuts residential property. Such a zoning

Joint Calendar Marks First Step Toward Merger Of School Units

By MARY C. SCHULKEN
Reflector Staff Writer

For months, the ideological issue of consolidation of the Pitt and Greenville school systems has been explored by local officials. On the surface, it would appear to be a strictly govermental issue — one that ended in February when the lawmakers in Raleigh approved the legislation requiring merger.

In actuality, that action was only the beginning, say school officials.

Now, with the issue resolved the political fallout beginning to settle, the systems are launching the nuts-and-bolts projects that will merge the two public school units into one by the proposed date of July 1, 1986. The first such project was preparing a joint 1985-86 school year calendar for the nine city schools and the 20 county schools. A 12-member committee of representatives from both school systems worked on the calendar, which was presented to the Interim Board of Education recently and is scheduled for final consideration in April.

The calendar, a landmark project for the merger effort, say school officials, is the first task completed jointly by the school systems. Committee chairmen say the effort was successful and that committee members worked together well.

"The group was very reponsive," according to Leck Keeter, co-chairman of the committee and associate superintendent of Pitt County schools. "The members went back to their constituents and schools with the proposals and came with ideas and issues that they put on the table."

Keeter said he and co-chairman Richard Preston, superintendent of administration for Greenville schools, did the preliminary work on the calendar, then gave committee members two proposals that they used to solicit input. "We took the 1984-85 calendars from both systems and picked out the differences and similarities," Keeter said. "We then developed two calendars as models for them to begin with. The members then took them and came back with ideas."

Members decided on two options — a calendar with students starting classes before Labor day, and a calendar with students starting classes after Labor day. Option one, which requires students begin school before Labor day, is the calendar the committee preferred, Keeter said, and the one it is asking the board to adopt. "Option one was the committee's recommendation by a majority," he said.

The Labor day starting date is "always a tough issue," Keeter said, "and it was the biggest issue we discussed." Economic factors were considered, he said, "when the group planned starting times."

"Energy conservation was also considered when we recommended starting school before Labor day," Keeter said. "It costs us more to operate the air conditioning in June than the heat in the winter."

The option one calendar also provides more flexibility, Keeter said, in terms of snow make-up days.

According to the option one calendar, students will begin classes Aug. 26. Holidays (and annual leave days) are scheduled on Sept. 2 (Labor day); Nov. 28-29 (Thanksgiving); Dec. 19-Jan. 1 (Christmas and New Year's); February 14 (in lieu of

Computerized Registration Is New At ECU

By KAREN EDMISTON
ECU News Bureau

This week East Carolina University will inaugurate "on-line" registration, a computerized system that officials hope will put an end to the slow, often wet and cold, process of standing in long lines.

On-line registration, according to Registrar Gil Moore, will enable students to register for classes quickly and efficiently by programming their desired schedules into a computer. The campus mainframe Sperry-Univac computer will let the student know immediately if space is available in the desired classes.

"The majority of ECU students will be able to register in five minutes or less," Moore said.

Under the old registration system, students had to wait months while computer cards were processed to find out if they got the classes they wanted. If they didn't, it meant going from one building on campus to another to pick up appropriate cards, then wait in long drop-add lines.

The university regularly registers more than 13,500 students each semester.

With on-line registration, Moore said, students can register for classes at locations almost anywhere on campus. "This is a decentralized system," he said. "Before, every student had to go to a central site. Now a student can do it in his or her adviser's office or at any one of 54 terminals located across the campus."

ECU is the first major institution in either North or South Carolina to implement a decentralized on-line system for registration.

To register using the new system, a student will make out a schedule in his faculty adviser's office. The completed schedule will then be taken to a computer operator in that office to be entered into the mainframe computer. If any classes are filled, the student and adviser will decide on a substitute class.

If the student accepts the schedule, that is his guaranteed schedule, "as long as he pays his fees by the required date," Moore said. The student will not be allowed to make any changes in that schedule unless he has failed a course, not completed a prerequisite, or has a medical excuse.

"I think the new system is going to have a real impact," said Dr. Ernest Uhr, dean of the School of Business. "There should be very little need to go through drops and adds; that's going to be the dramatic improvement." Uhr served as chairman of the faculty committee which has

Muller said there's no way to actually measure winds in a tornado. First, measuring instruments would have to be in the path of the funnel-shaped cloud. Secondly, the instruments would probably be destroyed by the wind.

But Muller, who said the wind speed can be estimated, based on damage caused to buildings in its path, said a weather service survey of the storm's track set the severity of the tornado in Pitt County at "F3, with isolated areas of F4."

In an F3 storm, Muller said, "roofs and walls are torn off ... trees uprooted, cars overturned ..." and wind speeds range from 150 to 206 miles an hour.

The tornado rating scale ranges from F0 to F6-12. "F3" Muller said is classified as a "severe tornado ... F4 a devastating tornado," with winds of 207 to 260 miles per hour that can cause total destruction of well-built homes, toss cars around like dry leaves and uproot and carry away large trees.

Rescue workers that night found victims buried under debris, lying in ditches and fields, walking around in the rubble.

The cleanup began the following day and clothing, food and money to aid victims of the tornado, began pouring in. By weeks's end, officials were asking that no more clothing be donated.

The following week, the Federal Emergency Management Agency set up a disaster assistance center at the county office building, to provide "a one-stop service ... a supermarket" to provide assistance to the victims of the storm. And Jim Haddad, director of the center, told workers "don't forget why they are here ... to seek aid, assistance, assurance ... assurance that someone cares."

The first two days the disaster assistance center operated, 264 victims of the storm sought help.

Today there is relatively little visual evidence of the distruction the tornado caused. Aside from debris, such as tin and scraps of wood, in wooded areas thinned by the high winds, most of the wreckage has been cleared away.

There are now some vacant lots where homes once stood; some new houses replacing former homes; a few are still being repaired or replaced.

But the memory of that night in March a year ago will remain past Thursday's first anniversary. People will still bear emotional scars from the destructive storm.

Some have suffered severe depression requiring hospitalization. Others bouts of anxiety, sleeplessness and feelings of helplessness.

The Pitt County Memtal Health Center has sponsored support groups and given individual counseling to help area residents deal with the trauma of that night.

As part of the observance of the anniverary, those support groups are scheduled to meet once again Thursday. And Ayden Elementary will hold a "rededication" ceremony for the school, which was closed for several months while workers repaired damage to the building caused by the tornado.

classification, Rutherford said, allows construction of a "whole lot more on less space."

Parking facilities for the medical complex are part of the campus system which provides about 10,000 to 11,000 spaces, with about 1,400 of those spaces located in a parking deck directly across from the main hospital building. The front of the deck consists of four stories and the back, six: it is connected to the hospital complex by two overhead walkways. Both the parking deck and bus service, contracted through the City of Chapel Hill, have gone a long way in alleviating traffic problems, university officials said.

According to Rutherford, there was a time when parking decks such as the one at North Carolina Memorial Hospital required special use permits, now, however, parking decks are considered permitted accessory uses anywhere in town. Admitting parking decks are often not the most attractive avenue, Rutherford said they were certainly more effective and preferable to cutting down every tree in an area to provide for surface parking.

While opinions were mixed on availability of land for expansion, Bondurant maintained that the center is now running out of immediate space. "Expansion always takes more room than you think it will. There should be a high premium on saving room for previously unplanned expansion because it's sure to occur," he said.

According to Bondurant, the university only has 10 buildable, unoccupied acres near the hospital complex. "If over the next 50 years all we've got is 10 buildable acres, we're in trouble," he said. There is, however, Rutherford and Munson said, other land available near the complex now being used for married student housing. It is not inconceivable, Munson said, that that space would be used in the future in light of a current university practice of reallocating existing space. Officials are also beginning to recognize the merits of locating some facilities in more remote areas.

"Looking 10 to 20 years ahead," Bondurant said, "I would expect the university may need more space than is presently available on the main campus, and I suppose what one might do then would be to develop remote sites."

The university's central campus, including medical center, is approximately 745 acres. University holdings total 3,692 acres and include an airport facility, a farm and University Lake.

According to Rutherford, the university does not have any plans to pursue a major land acquisition project in the near future, but said when land is purchased, exhorbitant prices are paid. "It's a reality," he said, adding commerical interests currently do not cause problems in the medical district because land surrounding the complex is either not for sale or is taken up by residential development. The closest commercial development is located approximately a mile and a third from the medical center entrance. In that area are restaurants, a shopping center, shops and gas stations, entities that make up downtown Chapel Hill.

While hospital and medical school facilities could always stand expansion, Munson and Bondurant admit the "glorious" years of hospital expansion are nearing an end.

"The heyday of medical school and medical center expansion has peaked and is fast ebbing," Munson said. He attributes that fact to shrinkage of the research dollar as well as increasing application of leverage by society on medical centers to curtail health care costs. "There's pressure on manpower, clinical research and health care for containment and retrenchment," he said.

Shrinkage of the research dollar and current federal emphasis on less spending does not mean there will be no growth, however. "It just means the heyday is over. There are those around who don't believe that, and of course those folks are wrong," Munson said. "The pressure to cut down is a reality. That doesn't make it right though. One could argue for putting in many more dollars."

Continuing evolution of techonology will also play a role in curtailment of mass growth of medical centers, Bondurant said. For instance, once a process to dissolve clots in veins is perfected, those once in need of bypass surgery could be treated in community hospitals or in doctors' offices, Bondurant explained. "In the balance," he added, "I suspect tertiary care or acute care hospitals will not grow and may shrink a little."

Saying his observations were based on professional judgement and knowledge of ongoing research, Bondurant clarified that development of newer hospitals will probably not be affected quite as much as older, established centers like UNC. "With respect to the East Carolina University School of Medicine, I expect future development will depend more on local conditions and who else is providing health care in that region.

"I think the ECU School of Medicine has developed into a very fine academic medical center, and at this time I believe it is ahead, in terms of development, of all the schools in the country that developed when it did. That's a great tribute to its leadership."

been studying on-line registration since January.

Dr. James L. Smith, a philosophy professor who also served on the faculty committee, is excited about the new system because he says it will save the faculty time. "On-line registration will make the advising process immediate," Smith said. "During the registration process the advisor will know where the student stands."

John Rainey, student government president, said the new system is being welcomed by the students. "It's a big step," he said. "From everybody we've talked to, they're really looking forward to trying it out."

The idea of on-line registration was first discussed in 1971, Moore said, "but we didn't have the equipment or the money."

In 1978 and 1979 a task force was appointed to study the total computerization of the campus, and the data elements were established based on needs of the academic units.

All the software for the system was developed at ECU, according to Freda Pollard, manager of Student and Administrative Programming. Fifty IBM personal computers were purchased last summer, and were installed by December in all academic units. Since that time 250 employees have been attending training sessions to learn how to use the system.

Although Moore expects minor problems next week, he is confident that the system will be successful. "We have tested it to the best of our ability," he said. "It's going to help us so much that a couple of years from now people are going to say 'How did we ever live without it?'"

Memorial day, and March 31-April 4 (Easter).

Teacher workdays are scheduled for Aug. 19-23, Oct. 11, Nov. 11, Nov. 27, Jan. 23-24; March 10, April 28, May 26, June 11-17.

According to the option one calendar, the six marking periods will begin and end on the following dates: first marking period — Aug. 26-Oct. 10; second marking period — Oct. 14-Nov. 26; third marking period — Dec. 2-Jan. 22; fourth marking period — March 11-April 25; sixth marking period — April 29-June 10.

The following days are snow make-up days, in order of priority: May 26, Feb. 14, April 4, 3, 2. Designated non-vacation days for teachers include Aug. 19 and 23; Nov. 11 (parent visitation day) and June 11.

Setting a graduation date was another issue the group discussed at length and "it was not settled," Keeter said. "What we did was set the last student day. The calendar provides the flexibility to set graduation individually in the two systems."

According to the option two calendar, Sept. 3, 1985, the day after Labor day, would be the first student day. Teachers would begin work Aug. 21. The last day student day would be June 12 and the last teacher day June 19.

Snow makeup days in the option two calendar are limited, Keeter said. Snow days would have to be made up April 1-4, Easter holidays, and this lack of flexibility is the primary reason the group disliked option two, he said. "The committee recognizes the lack of flexibility in makeup days between option one and option two," Keeter said. "However, there appears to be no way to improve this flexibility."

Keeter, who has worked on calendar committees in the past, said there was "more communication from the group we selected (to compile the joint calendar) than had ever been experienced before."

"They were a group with goals and limitations and they worked as professionals and lay persons to come up with recommendations," he said. "What we worked toward was a calendar that is meangingful to the student but at the same time taking into consideration the stress and responsibilities of the teachers and administrators. We believe we were successful."

Tobacco Outcry

FRANKFORT, Ky. (AP) — A delegation of Kentucky legislators will add their voices to the outcry over the government's plan to end the tobacco price-support program during a meeting Monday with Agriculture Secretary John Block.

"Someone has to provide the spark that causes Secretary Block and the Reagan Administration to at least keep an open mind," said Sen. Joe Prather, D-Vine Grove. "It's obvious that if we sit and do nothing, that cannot possibly happen. And even with our meeting, it may not happen. But at least we feel we have a shot."

In the weeks since the Reagan Administration proposed a five-year phase out of the price-support and allotment programs, Kentucky officials have worried over what would happen to the state should the program end.

Sunday Opinion

ECU Is Moving Toward Its Goal In Medical Care

Is the ECU School of Medicine fulfilling the dreams of those who saw it as a way of providing better health care for North Carolina?

There are many who think so. It has created a regional medical referral center at Pitt County Memorial Hospital. That is serving the needs of easterners in that it puts such a facility closer to their homes which is a benefit in times of major illness in the family.

The role most envisioned for the school, however, was to train physicians who would practice in areas of North Carolina which badly need the services of family practice physicians.

It will take many years, of course, before an accurate assessment of the impact of ECU medical school graduates can be made. Already, though, seven of the students who graduated in the class of 1981 are practicing physicians in North Carolina. They are in such areas as Sea Level, Ahoskie, Shelby, Williamston and Wake Forest.

Members of more recent graduating classes are still in residency training but it is logical to assume many of them will enter practice in areas of the state where they are needed.

And there still is a need, according to the February issue of ECU Medical Review. It reports 17 practice opportunities in the western area of the state, 51 in the Piedmont and 94 in the east. It cites the need for 63 family practice physicians, 17 internal medicine specialists and 15 specialized in obstetrics. There is also opportunity in most other areas of medical specialization.

Of course, there are projections which show a surplus of physicians nationally in future years. We cannot question that, but in areas such as eastern North Carolina there is no such surplus and in fact the area can be looked upon as one of opportunity for new physicians. There is every reason to believe that the ECU School of Medicine will provide the physicians to take advantage of the opportunities.

Card Unneeded To Buy Liquor

We stand foursquare behind law enforcement efforts to halt the sale of alcoholic beverages to those who are underaged. It is illegal, and the ages were set by the state Legislature for good reason.

We have to doubt, though, that a proposal by the Wayne County ABC officials to require special identification cards for purchasing liquor is a good one.

ABC Manager Carroll Steele proposed a liquor control card which would be shown at ABC stores to purchase alcohol. He suggested they could be made at Division of Motor Vehicle offices for $4 each. The cards could be revoked for due cause.

It strikes us that most people already have driver's licenses, or they can obtain an identification license, which can be used in ABC stores. It is no more difficult for clerks to demand to see a driver's license than it would be to require the alcohol identification card.

Most citizens are now carrying around more than enough identification cards, credit cards and such. It seems that to add one more is superfluous.

Sunday Morning Notes

A coed called to say that the sinks were stopped up on the seventh floor of Fletcher Dorm.

"The water's running over and everything smells," she said. Then after a pause for breath: "I called the health department and they told us to call maintenance."

The reporter told her he sympathized but she had reached the newspaper office and that she might want to call the university maintenance staff first.

"Oh," she said. "Well, I'll try that." Then she hung up.

Here's hoping that the sinks are now draining freely in Fletcher, seventh floor.

And a lady came in to place an announcement about a chicken dinner sale at Tom Foreman Park with the proceeds going to a church fund.

Having completed her mission she invited writer Jerry Raynor to visit that day to try "some of my chicken."

Jerry declined, noting that his wife was fixing rutabagas and ham hock that day.

Well southern fried chicken is great but it is indeed difficult to turn down rutabagas and ham hock.

Southerners, poor in relation to their northern neighbors, learned to use just about everything for food.

It is well known that all parts of the hog "except the squeal" are prepared in some way for human consumption. Thus we have chitterlings, pickled pig's feet and souse.

Use of the chicken was not so efficient, but a pretty good job was done there, too. I told a member of the affluent generation about the use of chicken feet in soup. That might not seem palatable, but it sure flavored the soup.

The most efficient use of anything, however, was the saving of the rind from watermelon. Thus, we have watermelon rind pickles. I suspect that if watermelon rind pickles had not been invented in hard times, no one would think to do it today.

Fortunately they exist, however, and the delicacies can be found today on many salad bars. If you haven't tried them, do so.

One also has to wonder who was the first to figure out how to cook collards, pickle cucumbers or stew rutabagas. Who would have ever thought to bake a sweet potato, much less make a sweet potato casserole?

Some of our finest foods were the products of hard times and ingenious cooks and if food had always been as plentiful as it is today, some of our tastiest dishes might never have been created.

Then there is the famous Southern biscuit. Once the ancestors of Southern women, who now toil in the business world, sated their competitive spirits by attempting to turn out the lightest, tastiest biscuits that ever melted in the mouths of humans.

Now the art is being revived, but this time in the fast food restaurants of the nation. Biscuits made from scratch are now in and frequently the name of the biscuit maker is posted on the counter. You can get egg biscuits, or get them with ham or bacon. You can get them with cheese, or just buttered.

Myabe it's not the same as the farm wife baking biscuits on a wood cook stove, but the art survives in the fast food chains.

Media Contrasts

WASHINGTON — Back in mid-January I ventured a few observations on the matter of Sen. Jesse Helms and CBS. Since then we have had the Gelb affair at the State Department and the senator has made a speech that rattled the rafters. A few additional observations are in order.

You will recall that some months ago a group of North Carolinians, closely identified with Sen. Helms, founded Fairness in Media. Their avowed purpose was to bring pressure to bear on CBS. The senator urged his followers to buy 20 shares or more of CBS stock with a view toward gaining eventual control of the network. At that distant point, so the scenario went, a new CBS president would be able to rout out the liberal bias of CBS News. A new corps of objective reporters and editors would be brought in, and at long last conservatives would get a fair shake.

The senator's audacity set off a splendid flapping in journalistic dovecotes. Cartoonists had a great time. Dan Rather, deadpan, gravely reported the story on the CBS evening news. The flurry had just about subsided when Helms appeared on March 1 before a convention of conservative political action committees. He said that he sometimes wondered if he were on the same planet with reporters and editors who distort the news.

"How can the major media be so wrong so often? The answer is obvious: They are profoundly out of sympathy with the ideals and goals of the American people. Of course, there are sound and honest journalists in all parts of the country. But the elite media — and you know who they are — are overwhelmingly produced by men and women who, if they do not hate America first, certainly have a smug contempt for American ideals and principles."

Well, in his crack about "hating America," Helms was tossing raw meat to the assembled tigers. At that point the senator got carried away. But in the rest of that paragraph Helms was precisely, painfully, on target.

Let me cite one example only, and move on. Americans historically have admired military heroes: Washington, Lee, Grant, Pershing, Eisenhower, Halsey, MacArthur. They are thought to embody the old virtue of patriotism. But how do the liberal cartoonists perceive our military leaders? All the generals are fat; all the admirals wear swords and tricorn hats; their chests are ablaze with ribbons that would dazzle the Vegas strip. They are objects of ridicule. When Helms speaks of "smug contempt," Helms strikes home.

The Gelb affair provides a contrast. Leslie Gelb, a top reporter for The New York Times, was for two years (1977-79) director of the State Department's Bureau of Politico-Military Affairs. Last month he wrote an article about a contingent U.S. plan to deploy nuclear weapons in Canada, Bermuda and Puerto Rico. His piece was the result of fair digging; the substance already had been reported abroad. The existence of such contingency plans is a fact of life in every major nation. No security was breached.

Nevertheless, the bureau's incumbent director, Lt. Gen. John T. Chain Jr., blew his top. He declared Gelb persona non grata to his staff. In an especially childish display, he ordered Gelb's picture removed from a gallery of past directors, and he posted a notice accusing Gelb of willingly, willfully and knowingly publishing classified information "the release of which is harmful and damaging to the country."

Gelb is a major-league reporter. Chain is a bush-league bureaucrat. Chain was as wild in his accusations as Helms was accurate in his.

Both stories tell us something of the regrettable relationship that exists in the United States between so much of the government and so much of the press. It is an adversarial relationship: us against them. Here in Washington, and in state capitals as well, one finds reporters whose purpose is not simply to report the news, but rather to score points.

This hostility — the natural hostility of cats and dogs — poorly serves the public interest. In print or on the air, reporters have but one obligation — to report the news as fairly, objectively and neutrally as they can, without bias of any sort. Helms is right to object when a reporter fails, and Chain was wrong to object when a reporter succeeds.

Balancing Act

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Reagan wants it both ways.

After submitting a budget proposal that shows the government will be $180 billion further in debt next year even if Congress approves all his proposals, Reagan then urged Congress to approve a constitutional amendment to require a balanced budget.

The obvious contradiction raises two questions: if the president wants a balanced budget, why doesn't he submit one to Congress; and second, how would a constitutional amendment help the government balance its books.

On the first point, Treasury Secretary James Baker defended the president's decision not to submit a balanced budget.

Baker, testifying before House Budget Committee recently, said: "A balanced budget, if presented overnight, would result in some very difficult choices for a lot of people."

Although Reagan asked for a balanced budget amendment in his State of the Union address, Baker said the president "never thought it should be implemented cold turkey or overnight." However, he said Reagan still would "like to see the budget brought into balance someday," and called the $50 billion in proposed budget cuts a "first step" toward that end.

On the second point, supporters of the balanced budget amendment concept argue that mandating a balanced budget through a constitutional amendment would force Congress to stand up to special interest groups that demand more spending than the government can afford.

But requiring a balanced budget won't make the decisions of where to cut any easier. Just saying "you have to" doesn't make it so.

Admittedly, a balanced budget is a worthy goal and cutting federal spending is a monsterous task, but wouldn't it be better for the president to point the way with his own budget proposal rather than just blaming Congress for its excesses?

Knife

RALEIGH — It's nothing new to find the Legislature rummaging around in the citizenry's pockets. They're always looking for a little spare change. This year, however, the Legislature is probing through our pockets, debating itself blue not over money but over the length of the pocket knives we're carrying.

One legislator says the police ought not to be able to charge you with carrying a concealed weapon if all you've done is carry about a regular pocket knife. Another says a pocket knife can be a dangerous weapon and that police need the authority to call a pocketted pocket knife a concealed weapon if they see fit.

Under the bill proposed by Rep. Joe Hackney, D-Orange, you wouldn't be breaking the law by having a concealed pocket knife. The law does not change the status of the knife as a deadly weapon, it continues to be that. So, anyone involved in a fight who brandishes the pocket knife would be just as culpable for all the deadly weapons' laws as he's ever been, Hackney said.

In a recent Judiciary I Committee meeting, Rep. Dennis Wicker, D-Lee, endorsed the bill saying, "People sometimes will get stopped on some other pretext or charge, they'll get frisked and when the pocket knife is found, they get charged with carrying a concealed weapon."

Wicker said that kind of justice is wrong. A man might be coming home from fishing or from working where he needed the pocket knife. Many women carry a small pocket knife for any number of harmless reasons, he said. If they get caught for speeding, it's not right that they end up with a concealed weapons' charge tacked on.

Rep. George Miller, D-Durham, chairman of the committee, questioned the current law that allows for such arrests. "There are a whole lot of people who are walking around who are guilty of carrying a concealed weapon, including Rep. Hughes." He was speaking of Rep. Jim Hughes, R-Avery, a member of the committee, who was carrying a pocket knife.

The bill made it to the House floor but was brought back to committee after Rep. Dan DeVane, D-Hoke, got it amended to include only knives with blades under four inches in length.

DeVane doesn't like the bill much at all. "It would open it wide open for a man to carry anything around as long as he called it a pocket knife," DeVane said. "My objection is that we ought to try to deter people from carrying switch blades and large pocket knives into places of business like bars and restaurants."

DeVane also argues that police need the bill as currently written. "It gives the law enforcement officer the chance to use his discretion as to what they think is a concealed weapon." He conceded that the current law might have been abused on occasion but said the police generally won't call a pocket knife a concealed weapon unless the blade is about three inches long.

In the committee, there is considerable concern about trying to put a specific length limit on the bill. As Wicker said, "Why four inches? Aren't we going overboard? How bout the carpenter who needs a five-inch blade for wallpaper?" Hughes added that in Avery County five-inch blades are very popular with men who work trimming the area's large Christmas tree crop.

Hackney wants to use less specific language that would give authorities a chance to use their own discretion.

A Cry For National Service For Our Youth

Maxwell Glen and Cody Shearer

WASHINGTON — On the way back from Central America recently, we stopped in Fort Lauderdale for a glance at the spring-break scene.

The marked contrast between abject Nicaraguans caught in the cross fire of civil war and frat boys lewdly rating women along the sidewalks of Route 1A was almost enough for us to endorse a return of the draft.

What we saw was at least enough to justify national service, if not a tour at one of the American military bases in Honduras. Anything, we reckoned, was worth jarring the sensibilities of a one-dimensional crowd.

Now, while we might not get in line to hop off third-floor balconies into small motel swimming pools, this isn't a tirade against having fun. But were there a week of volunteer work here or abroad for every week spent on Fort Lauderdale beaches, one could assume that the schools and colleges were teaching more than the arts and sciences of self-indulgence.

OK, we'll admit it. Today's college students have a lot to worry about. By next fall, annual tuition costs are expected to rise 7 to 8 percent, with many more private institutions joining the $10,000-or-more club. What's worse is that the value of the bachelor's degree continues to plummet.

Meanwhile, the outside world isn't something to rush into or admire. One never knows how long it'll be around, for one. And the ethical standard-bearers are a sorry lot. These days, ethical lapses — whether by White House aides using their positions to obtain discounts on BMWs; federal officials who beat their wives, or professors who sell themselves to corporations — seem more the rule than the exception.

But many of today's college students are so cubic in their outlook that if some school administrator eliminated grades and substituted community service in their curriculum, they'd riot.

Polls only underscore that likelihood. Between 1973 and 1983, the percentage of students who wanted their education to help them "develop a philosophy of life" dropped from 72 percent to 45 percent, according to a survey by the American Council on Education.

Anyone familiar with colleges knows they aren't going to be the leaders in transforming and mobilizing this vapid generation into a moral vanguard. They have more or less abdicated any interest in teaching lifelong values; that, in turn, has reinforced the survivalist mentality that's encouraged college students to become self-centered and materialistic. With some exceptions, the emphasis on personal rights of success and freedom has pushed off-campus less remunerative pursuits like helping old or poor people. Altruism, of course, should have a more central role in college life.

The only hope of motivating this generation and stimulating a national consciousness of our rights and obligations as citizens is to mandate a form of national service. What manifestation that takes is up to Congress.

For those who say government doesn't have a role in teaching a larger sense of values to our young people, we say, talk and listen to this generation. Are you satisfied with what you hear?

Today, millions of college students leave school for a world of unemployment or underemployment. At the same time, our cities need repair and our elderly need people to care for them. National service would match the energy of the young with the civic and human needs.

Of course, most college students would probably oppose surrendering a year of their lives for their country. But Horace Mann once warned:

"Republics, one after another ... have perished from a want of intelligence and virtue in the masses of people ... If we do not prepare our children to become good citizens; if we do not develop their capacities; if we do not enrich their minds with knowledge, imbue their hearts with love of truth and duty ... then our republic must go down to destruction."

As corny as those words may sound, they still ring true today.

'Money Talks'

Arnold Sawislak

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Supreme Court has given a new meaning to the phrase "money talks." In a 7-2 ruling last week, it said money spent by "non-party" political committees was a form of free speech protected by the First Amendment.

The ruling means committees that operate independent of political parties and candidates can spend as much money as they can raise to support or oppose whoever or whatever they please in presidential campaigns. At the same time, the court left the official parties, presidential candidates and their supporters subject to strict limits on spending and contributions.

The decision was no real surprise. Lower federal courts had ruled the same way on the issue several times and the Supreme Court gave free speech protection to so-called independent expenditures by individuals nine years ago.

Justice William Rehnquist offered a simple analogy to back the ruling. Telling individuals they may say what they want but limiting how much they can spend to convey their message is like "allowing a speaker in a public hall to express his views while denying him the use of an amplifying system," he said.

Justice Byron White, dissenting, dismissed the free speech argument, saying the Constitution "protects the right to speak, not the right to spend," and the court's new ruling, taken together with the 1976 decision, has left the federal campaign financing law "a nonsensical, loophole-ridden patchwork."

The argument made in favor of limiting independent political action committee expenditures was the need to guard against corruption of the electoral process. The premise adopted by Congress and approved by the court was that no-limit spending gave the richest party or candidate the chance to "buy" elections.

Slow Process

Robert H. Reid

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — With the Iraq-Iran war, civil strife in Lebanon and political instability all across the region, Egypt and Jordan have begun a search for peace that has eluded the Middle East for over a generation.

The process promises to be a slow one.

The main Egyptian-Jordanian effort is to coax the United States into a new diplomatic initiative to settle the Arab-Israeli conflict on terms that would acknowledge Israel's right to exist and provide self-rule for the Palestinians in areas now held by Israel.

Opposing them are not only Arab hardliners like Syria, Libya and some factions of the Palestine Liberation Organization but also extremists in Israel who vow never to relinguish territories they believe were given by God to the Jews.

Moderate Arab governments view the "peace process" as a race against time. Years of protracted stalemate have hardened positions and deepened hatreds on both sides.

Even if the Arab-Israeli crisis is solved, the Middle East faces other flashpoints — among them the Iran-Iraq war, religious conflict in Lebanon, an uprising by Christians and animists in southern Sudan against a Moslem-dominated central government, and the growing religious fundamentalism that threatens established, secular-oriented regimes.

But a solution to the conflict with Israel, which would decide the fate of Palestinians displaced by the creation of the Jewish state in 1948, would be a major step toward regional stability.

Despite the urgency, the road to peace will be taken in slow, measured steps because none of the parties — not the Arabs, the Israelis, or the Americans — can afford to move too far, too fast.

"It is important to do things slowly," said Foreign Minister Taher al-Masri of Jordan. "There are many wild cards."

Pitfalls are many:

— PLO Chief Yasser Arafat, challenged by pro-Syrian Palestinian rebels, needs time to convince his followers that negotiation offers the best hope of retrieving the West Bank and the Gaza Strip without sacrificing Palestinian independence.

— Prime Minister Shimon Peres of Israeli cannot afford dramatic moves as long as his government is preoccupied with its security in southern Lebanon and until his Labor Party is ready for a showdown with its right-wing Likud coalition partners over trading land for peace.

— Jordan's King Hussein and President Hosni Mubarak of Egypt must build diplomatic support for their strategy within the Arab world and wait until Arafat has enough strength among Palestinians. Meanwhile, the Syrians and Libyans are reportedly working to organize opposition to the Egyptian-Jordanian moves among other Arab states.

The United States, meanwhile, is waiting for the Arabs and Israelis to sort out internal differences and make themselves ready for negotiations.

As a first step, the Egyptians and Jordanians are seeking ways of opening communication between Washington and Arafat's PLO in order to bring to the bargaining table an organization that the Arabs recognize as the only legitimate spokesman for the Palestinians.

Before launching a new peace initiative, the Reagan administration insists that the PLO accept Israel's right to exist, as outlined in U.N. Security Council resolutions 242 and 338.

On his recent visit to Washington, Mubarak asked the United States to host a delegation of Jordanians and Palestinians for a "dialogue" leading to direct negotiations between Israel and the Arabs.

Although the United States appeared at first to reject Mubarak's proposal, the deputy State Department spokesman, Edward Djerejian, said later Washington was looking into the possibility of hosting a Palestinian-Jordanian delegation.

Egypt and Jordan believe the Arabs will never accept any settlement with Israel without the approval of at least Arafat's wing of the PLO.

Finding non-PLO Palestinians to participate in a "dialogue" might bring the Palestinians into the peace process while side-stepping U.S. objections to the PLO as a negotiating partner.

Once Arafat and Hussein agreed on the delegation's makeup, the Jordanian king then could turn to the United States and seek a meeting.

Poll

George Gallup

PRINCETON, N.J. — With President Ronald Reagan now well into his second term, Americans give his administration positive ratings on its record of achievement in the key problem areas of inflation, defense, unemployment and building respect for the U.S. abroad.

The good marks given the Reagan administration on these all-important public concerns show why the president's overall job performance rating continues at a high level, with 60 percent in the current survey expressing approval.

About half (49 percent) say the unemployment situation has gotten better since Reagan's taking office in 1981, while far fewer (30 percent) see the situation as having worsened. In striking contrast, a June 1982 survey found the public leaning 81 percent to 8 percent that unemployment had gotten worse rather than better during the administration's tenure. Since that first Reagan "report card," the unemployment rate has gone from 9.5 percent, then the highest in 40 years, to 7.3 percent last month.

On inflation, 64 percent currently see an improvement while 20 percent disagree. In 1982, 37 percent said inflation was better, 48 percent worse. The inflation rate is now about half that of mid-1982.

The Reagan administration receives generally mixed reviews from the public on the energy situation, improving the chances for world peace (women's views contribute heavily to the downside on this rating) and reducing the size of government.

Negative ratings are accorded the Reagan presidency on reducing personal income taxes, despite the fact that personal income taxes have been cut by 25 percent since Reagan took office. (One explanation might be a perceived relationship between the tax cuts and the present budget defict.) The administration also scores relatively poorly on balancing the national budget, reducing environmental problems and nuclear disarmament.

Here is the question asked to determine the public's views on the Reagan administration's achievements to date:

"I am going to read off some foreign and domestic problems that the Reagan administration has been faced with since taking office. As I read off each problem, one at a time, would you tell me whether you feel it has gotten much better, somewhat better, somewhat worse, or much worse as a result of the Reagan policies. Inflation? Unemployment? The ability of the nation to defend itself militarily? Respect for the United States abroad? Chances for balancing the national budget? Chances for reducing the size of the federal government? Chances for reducing the federal taxes of the average citizen? Chances for world peace? Chances for nuclear disarmament?"

Here are the latest results, combining the "much" and "somewhat better" categories and the "much" and "somewhat worse" categories:

Reagan Report Card

	Gotten better	Gotten worse	Stayed same	No opinion
Inflation	64%	20%	13%	3%
Defense	62	10	20	8
Unemployment	49	30	17	4
Respect for U.S.	44	30	18	8
Energy situation	39	22	28	11
Chances for peach	35	29	30	6
Reduce gov't. size	29	31	26	14
Reduce personal taxes	27	43	24	6
Balance budget	23	46	23	8
Environment	22	34	33	11
Nuclear disarmament	22	38	31	9

The latest results are based on in-person interviews with 1,557 adults, 18 and older, conducted in more than 300 scientifically selected localities across the nation during the period Feb. 15-18.

For results based on samples of this size, one can say with 95 percent confidence that the error attributable to sampling and other random effects could be 3 percentage points in either direction. In addition to sampling error, the reader should bear in mind that question wording and other practical difficulties encountered in conducting surveys can introduce error or bias into the findings of opinion polls.

Fight Over Daniel Stirred Resentment

Noel Yancey

Up around Lexington in Davidson County, some folks likely are still sore with the State Historic Sites Advisory Committee. Seems the state folks insisted that something stronger than "unsupported traditional or hearsay evidence" be offered to back up the claim that Daniel Boone, his parents and his brothers and sisters once lived on the bank of the Yadkin River in what is now Davidson County.

The committee's decision meant that Daniel Boone Association Inc., which was developing a 100-acre site on the Yadkin River in Davidson County could not collect a $15,000 appropriation voted by the General Assembly to help finance the development work. The Legisature had said the association could get the money only "on condition that the Daniel Boone Homeplace ... be approved as a Historic Site by the Historic Sites Advisory Committee."

The Daniel Boone Association, quite naturally, appealed the committee's decision to the courts, and in April 1967, the issue was argued in Wake County Superior Court. The association had already spent $12,500 it had received from the state earlier to build a replica of the alleged Boone homeplace — a log cabin. It argued strenuously it needed the additional money to buy more land for the park site and to complete the development.

Judge Walter Brock knew a hot potato when he saw one. He tossed it back to the Historic Sites Advisory Committee. He ruled that the committee had not "acted arbitrarily, capriciously, nor in disregard of the law" in holding that insufficient evidence had been presented "to approve the Daniel Boone homeplace in Davidson County as a Historic Site." The judge also held that the committee's decision was not subject to judicial review.

This left the Daniel Boone Association with an almost impossible chore. It faced the task of persuading the committee, which had already ruled against it, to change its mind. One spokesman for the Davidson County group quipped he doubted the site would be approved "even if we producted the Indian that stood behind the tree and shot at Daniel."

Even so, association spokesmen went to work manfully presenting their case again. They pointed out that the old North Carolina Historical Commission, predecessor of the Department of Archives and History, had approved the erection of a plaque in Lexington which said that the Boones had settled near Boone's Fort on the Yadkin.

Dr. C.C. Crittenden, director of Archives and History, replied to this by saying that he stood "on the statement that the State Archives in Raleigh do not contain documents that prove Daniel Boone was a resident on any land in present Davidson County."

Dr. Wade Sowers of Lexington, whose father had once owned the site and gave the originial five-acre tract to the association, argued that it had been accepted for generations as the homeplace of Daniel Boone before he blazed a trail into Kentucky. Portions of the original Boone cabin were still standing when his father was a boy, Sowers testified. In addition to the replica of the Boone cabin, the site contained a cave 80 feet deep, known as Boone's cave. Legend says Daniel Boone once took refuge in it when he was being pursued by hostile Indians.

Other evidence gathered by th association included church records of Boone's Ford Baptist Church, across the river from the site, which showed members of the Boone family were members although Daniel never joined any church.

Boone married Rebecca Bryan, whose home was only four miles from the site.

Boone's father and mother, Squire and Sarah Boone are buried in the old Joppa Cemetery, just off highway U.S. 601 north of Mocksville in Davie County.

A stone with "D. Boone" carved on it was found in the basement of a nearby plantation. Unfortunately, this stone had been sent to a 1943 fair in Chicago and was never returned.

Members of the Archives and History staff had prepared a report for Crittenden to bolster the department's contention that there was no reliable, convincing evidence to justify selecting the Davidson County park as a historic site.

The report added that "there is traditional, hearsay evidence" to support the Davidson County site, but the department staff pointed out that although Daniel Boone lived in North Carolina during the 1750s and 1760s all the traditional heresay is dated from the 1880s, or later — "more than one full century after ... the fact."

None of the documentary from state archives evidence backed the Davidson County site either. There was evidence that Squire Boone had bought a 640-acre tract of land in December 1753, and sold it to Daniel Boone and his wife in February 1764. However, this land was located in what is now Davie County. Other documents included a couple of warrants charging Daniel with non-payment of debts, but these shed no light on where he lived.

The Lexington contingent returned home discouraged. It expected the sites committee to turn it down again — which it did a couple of months later.

"It is generally conceded, and the Department so conceded, that Daniel Boone did reside in one or more placed in North Carolina," said the Archives and History report. "Indeed, the Department is proud of this fact, is proud of Daniel Boone and his place in history, and is likewise proud of the fact that Daniel Boone was connected with North Carolina." But it reiterated the case for the Davidson County site had not been established.

However, the site on the beautiful bluff overlooking the Yadkin River is now operated by the state — but as a state park, not a historic site. It's called Boone's Cave and it's located off N.C. 150, 15 miles north of Salisbury. The state map says the main attraction is a scenic overlook.

U.S. Will Not Confirm Airlift

WASHINGTON (AP) — An American-sponsored airlift of hundreds of Ethiopian Jews from East Africa to Israel reportedly was completed Saturday in an operation that U.S. officials from President Reagan refused to confirm.

In the three-day airlift, 800 Ethiopian Jews were flown to Israel by C-130 Hercules, the New York Times quoted unidentified, administration officials as saying.

The Los Angeles Times reported earlier that the Jews were loaded swiftly aboard about 10 of the U.S. transports early Friday at a refugee camp in the Sudan and flown up the Red Sea and across the Mediterranean to Israel.

In Israel, they joined 7,800 other Ethiopian Jews flown secretly from the Sudan in the Israeli-financed Operation Moses from Nov. 21 to Jan. 6. That airlift was halted after it was denounced by Sudan's Arab League partners.

In Washington, State Department spokesman Brian Carlson confirmed Saturday that Sudan President Gaafar Mohamed Nimeiri would make a private visit to the United States next month. He said, however, the trip could include talks with government officials.

The New York Times reported that Nimeiri would meet with Reagan at the White House on April 1. It quoted an unidentified administration official as saying it was "obviously convenient for Nimeiri to win some points on the Falashas."

Ethiopian Jews have been called Falashas, an Amharic term that means foreigner and which they find derogatory.

Husband Charged In Mercy Killing

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. (AP) — A neighbor of a man charged with first-degree murder for shooting his terminally ill 73-year-old wife says she heard the woman "begging to die" minutes before being shot.

Roswell Ward Gilbert, who was indicted last week and remains free on $10,000 bond, says he shot his wife of 51 years, Emily, to end her seven years of suffering from Alzheimer's disease, an incurable brain disorder that results in memory loss and personality change.

Mrs. Gilbert also was afflicted with an incurable degenerative bone disease.

Her doctor, Eduardo Hidalgo, said that she was lingering in the late stages of Alzheimer's disease and could have lived five to 10 years more.

"There was no hope of recovery. I just had to end her suffering," Gilbert said Friday, after a bond hearing in Broward County Circuit Court. "I had to do it. I was the only one who could have done it."

Gilbert, a 75-year-old retired engineer, says he doesn't recall his wife outright asking to die.

But neighbor Liliane Irvin said after testifying Wednesday before the grand jury that she heard Mrs. Gilbert asking to die 15 minutes before she was shot March 4.

"She looked extremely sick, like she was 90 years of age" said Ms. Irvin, who has known the Gilberts for six years. "She was in excruciating pain crying for her husband ...

"She was begging to die, sobbing and saying, 'Ross, please let me die. Let me die. I'm so sick,'" she explained. "She was sobbing like a child, complaining about back pain with such a vivid expression in her face. He came rushing in and they walked upstairs."

Minutes later, police said, Gilbert put a 9mm Luger to the back of his wife's head and fired one shot as she sat in the living room of the couple's 10th-floor oceanfront condominium.

Gilbert then telephoned the condominium security desk and alerted them to the slaying.

Life has been "pretty terrible" since the shooting, Gilbert says. But, he said, "The real ordeal was when she was ill all those years. This ordeal is just happening to me, and I can take it.

"I'm putting my guts back together. I've been cleaning the apartment," Gilbert said. "I'll be OK on my own. I have a lot of friends here."

He has been in a community release program, which allows him to stay home but keep in touch with probation officials, since March 6. A trial date has not yet been set.

If convicted of first-degree murder Gilbert faces at least 25 years in prison or the death penalty.

Nine Are Wounded In Club Incident

By JUDIE GLAVE
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Eight people were shot and a woman was trampled early Saturday in an after-hours social club during a gunbattle between factions of immigrants from the West Indies, police said.

The wounded, including a woman who was eight months pregnant but gave birth by Caesarean section after the melee, were listed in guarded and stable condition at area hospitals.

At least two gunmen fired 28 to 30 shots about 6 a.m., causing a stampede among some 300 people packed into the Superstar Club in the Bronx, said police Lt. Michael O'Shea.

"Most of the crowd left either through the front door (and) a number of people were known to have jumped out a second story window," O'Shea said.

Two .38-caliber handguns were recovered at the scene as were shells from an automatic pistol and other shells, possibly from a rifle, said Capt. James Crean.

The pregnant woman, Sydonnie Hyatt, 21, was shot in the stomach, but the bullet missed her child, said North Central Bronx Hospital spokeswoman Patricia Irving. Ms. Hyatt was listed in guarded but stable condition, and her infant was in stable condition, said Ms. Irving.

Six other women and one man were shot in the buttocks, knees, calves, and feet. The woman who was trampled was treated at a hospital for minor cuts and bruises and released, O'Shea said. She was not identified.

O'Shea, who said the shooting apparently was a battle between factions from the West Indies, said detectives want to question Owen Drummond, 24, once he recovers from gunshot wounds to the buttocks and chin. Drummond was listed in guarded but stable condition at North Central Bronx Hospital.

O'Shea said he was sure the building owner had violated "many, many city ordinances, including serving alcohol without a license ... But that's not our major concern at the moment."

The others shot were identified as: Maria Tate, 30, shot in the left arm; Maxime Knight, 22, shot in the buttocks and knee; Sharon Cobrand, 23, shot in both feet; Carol Hamilton, 24, shot in the right calf; Sharon Ward, 23, shot in the back. All were listed in stable condition at Montefiore Hospital.

Pan Am, Workers In Tentative Pact

NEW YORK (UPI) — Negotiators for Pan American World Airways and some 5,800 striking ground crew workers reached a tentative agreement Saturday on a new contract to end the 23-day-old walkout, company and union officials said.

"We have definitely reached a tentative agreement, but we remain on strike until this agreement is ratified," said Kevin Connelly, a senior steward for for Transport Workers Union Local 504, the largest TWU local on strike.

A ratification vote was expected to take place in several days, he said.

Pan Am representatives said no details of the agreement would be released until the vote was taken.

TWU members, including mechanics and other Pan Am ground crew members, walked off the job Feb. 28, forcing the financially ailing airline to cut its service.

The union's old contract expired Jan. 1. Negotiations between the sides began March 14.

In a related development, a mediator announced that "major obstacles" in Pan Am's contract talks with the Independent Union of Flight Attendants have been overcome, enabling hard bargaining between the sides to resume.

Walter Wallace, the National Mediation Board member overseeing the IUFA-Pan Am talks, cited the union's decision to order flight attendants to return to work, as well as the airline's agreement to rehire 157 attendants fired earlier for refusing to cross picket lines set up by the TWU.

The IUFA, whose contract with Pan Am also expired Jan. 1, has set an April 1 strike deadline for its 5,000 members. Although the mediator said obstacles in the talks were lifted, union members said major disagreements remained.

Pan Am was seeking the right to hire non-IUFA members, primarily foreign nationals, for flights that originate and end in foreign countries, union and company officials said.

The proposal was "the No. 1 issue" opposed by the union because it could threaten up to 4,000 IUFA jobs, said Tim Lawler, an IUFA member.

Jeff Kriendler, a Pan Am spokesman, said the proposal called for 5 percent, about 300, of the flight attendants to be non-IUFA members. But he conceded the airline hoped to expand its service between international points.

The major issues in the TWU dispute included pay increases totaling 14.5 percent over three years the union agreed to forego in 1981 when employees accepted a 10 percent wage cut to help keep the airline afloat.

Hundreds Feared Dead In Capsizing

DHAKA, Bangladesh (UPI) — A river ferry packed with more than 500 holiday travelers capsized Saturday during a heavy storm near Dhaka and witnesses said most of those aboard were feared to have drowned.

Police and rescuers were reported to be trying to reach the site of the accident in the Sita-Lakya river near the village of Kunda, but strong winds and rains hampered their efforts.

Witnesses said at least 450 of the more than 500 passengers the ferry was carrying back to Dhaka from southern Bangladesh, where they were vacationing, were feared to have drowned.

One witness said the ferry may have collided with another ship anchored near Kunda village, about 6 miles from the capital. Unconfirmed reports also said a number of fishing boats in the Bay of Bengal sank in the storm.

Officials in Bangladesh said they were investigating the reports.

The officials said the storm killed at least five people in Dhaka, triggered fires at the city'se mills and caused property damage.

Reagan Faces Selling Job On SDI Plans

By DAVID MASON
Chief European Correspondent

LONDON (AP) — America's European allies have not said a flat "no" to President Reagan's proposed space-based defense against Soviet missiles. But neither have they signaled clear approval — and more and more pointed questions are pouring in.

Where the debate will end is unclear, but it is certain Reagan still has a lot of selling to do if he considers the backing of his allies important for his Strategic Defense Initiative, or SDI, commonly known as "Star Wars."

Reflecting uneasiness about Reagan's program, European leaders have posed searching questions about its cost, its eventual effectiveness, whether it will lead to militarization of outer space, whether it means a basic change in decades-old military strategy, and what influence it will have on the recently resumed Geneva arms talks between the United States and the Soviet Union.

The intense debate over Star Wars comes after a lengthy period in which Europeans largely ignored the issue. Reagan launched his idea for a space-based defense against nuclear missiles in a national security speech March 23, 1983.

Only now, some two years later, has the issue come clearly to the fore.

During a visit to Britain in mid-December, Mikhail S. Gorbachev, who this month became the new Soviet leader, expressed deep concern about Star Wars. He said that unless the "transfer of the arms race to outer space" could be averted, "it would be unreal to hope to stop the nuclear arms race."

Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher of Britain said she shared Gorbachev's concern, and she discussed Star Wars with Reagan in a visit to Camp David just before Christmas. The result was an agreement that space defense research should go ahead, but that any deployment would have to be negotiated with the Russians.

When she met Gorbachev in Moscow after the funeral of Konstantin U. Chernenko, Mrs. Thatcher stressed again that any deployment would have to be negotiated, she told reporters.

Her continued emphasis of this point seemed to indicate she somehow feared the United States might go ahead with deployment without talks with the Russians.

The matter was intensified by an unusually blunt speech March 15 by Mrs. Thatcher's foreign secretary, Sir Geoffrey Howe.

In his 27-page analysis of the Strategic Defense Initiative, Howe posed 22 questions about the wisdom of the project, and drew a comparison with the Maginot Line. France built the fortifications known as the Maginot Line as an imposing bulwark against Nazi Germany, but the Germans easily outflanked them.

In a London speech four days later, Richard N. Perle, the U.S. assistant defense secretary, called Howe's presentation "tendentious" and a rewrite of history.

Perle, in an extraordinary attack on a high-ranking allied minister, made no secret of his approval of a London Times editorial which said in part, "Sir Geoffrey has handed Mr. Gorbachev all the best lines with which to oppose SDI."

Last Monday, Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher of West Germany warned that "absolutely nothing must be allowed that may jeopardize" the present allied strategy of flexible response to any Soviet attack.

This long-time NATO doctrine calls for repulsing a Soviet attack with conventional forces, with nuclear weapons only used as an extreme measure.

Europeans point out that this doctrine — plus the nuclear thesis of "mutual assured destruction," which assumes that any nuclear attack launched by one superpower would be matched by a return attack — has kept the peace in Europe for 40 years. Few Europeans want to change it for a space-based defense system that is still largely hypothetical.

Chancellor Helmut Kohl of West Germany, who has never been foursquare behind Star Wars, said in a speech Wednesday that Western Europe should develop a common position on the Space Defense Initiative.

"We will continue to advocate that a common posture of the Europeans should be developed and presented to our American allies," Kohl said.

Foreign Minister Leo Tindemans of Belgium echoed this attitude Thursday. He said in an interview with the newspaper Libre Belgique that the Star Wars "problem" will overshadow all others in the coming months.

Tindemans asked, "How should we react if the United States and the U.S.S.R. agreed on the militarization of space? Could Europe become a zone of influence? What should we do to avoid a conventional war which SDI could not prevent?"

THE MIRACLE GIRL

"The Miracle Girl", Shirley J. Murphy, daughter of Annie R. Murphy and James E. Murphy, is still doing fine.

In July of 1982, Shirley was diagnosed as having systemic Lupus, an incurable disease. In January of 1983, her condition became critical and the doctors said she only had 30 minutes to live.

It has been 2 years ago today, March 24, since Shirley came out of the intensives care unit alive! On May 13, she was able to return home to Greenville alive! She was hospitalized for about 5 months in N.C. Memorial Hospital at Chapel Hill.

Shirley has recovered miraculously. All praises and honor belong to God. We realize it is a miracle.

Shirley has returned to work in Burlington, N.C. employed by Roche-BioMedical Labs, and she is living in Greensboro, N.C.

Once again, we would like to thank everyone for their prayers and support (financially, food, flowers, love and concern) that aided in the recovery of our daughter.

Programs For Exceptional Children, Recognition Highlight Observance

By MELANIE PHILLIPS
Reflector Staff Writer

Exceptional Children's Week, observed this past week in Pitt County, gives the community the opportunity to learn about programs available to the children and their families, and those who work with exceptional children the chance to be recognized.

According to Joy Webb, an East Carolina University student involved in the Student Council on Exceptional Children (SCEC), several events marked Exceptional Children's Week.

"The main thing we did was to send certificates of appreciation and an apple to the Pitt County teachers who work with exceptional children," Miss Webb said. "We also gave out flyers to schools, neighborhoods, and put them on cars to let people know about Exceptional Children's Week. Someone appeared on Carolina Today on Wednesday talking about it. We really want the public to be aware of exceptional children."

Part of the observance included the Caswell Singers and Perske Arts Collection at the Willis Building Thursday night and an outing for Adult Developmental Activity Program clients.

Public Law 9442, also called the "civil rights bill for the handicapped," in effect since 1975, requires that school systems provide services for all handicapped students between the ages of 5 and 17. Ann Harrison, director of the program for exceptional children and personnel services for Greenville schools, says that this mandate provides special education and/or related services for the children. "We try to every extent possible to keep the youngster in a natural environment — the least restrictive one. After the child is identified as exceptional, he is placed according to his needs."

Categories of exceptional children include academically gifted; learning disabled; educable, trainable, and severe and profound mentally handicapped; behaviorally and emotionally handicapped; speech and language impaired, hearing impaired, and visually impaired.

Mrs. Harrison said that because there are several categories of exceptional children, the special education program offers differing instruction for each child according to his individual needs.

"Can you serve the child in a regular class or does he need modifications in the classroom? Will he attend a regular class all the time or part of the time? Does he require a special class or a special school? We ask all these questions for the IEP (Individual Educational Program) of each child," Mrs. Harrison said.

"It used to be that exceptional children were kept at home or sent to institutions. With the law as it is, we must provide instruction for exceptional children in the school systems." She said this method places the child as near as possible to peers and allows them to function within the community. According to Mrs. Harrison, in the past exceptional children in public school systems were only instructed in self-contained classrooms but because of the law and increased funding, exceptional children are provided with more and better services.

In addition to special education, exceptional children need related services such as occupational and physical therapy, speech and audiological therapy, and transportation services.

To be eligible for special education a child must have a written referral, be identified in one of the exceptional children categories, and have an IEP decided depending on his needs. The IEP is reviewed every year and evaluated every three years.

Parents of exceptional children can appeal at any of these three steps. If the parents do not agree with the referral, for example, they may ask for a second, outside referral.

Mrs. Harrison said that 17.3 percent of the population in the Greenville schools is exceptional or handicapped.

Greenville city and Pitt County schools also cooperate with other agencies to provide services for exceptional children. Special Olympics is sponsored by the Greenville Parks and Recreation Department with teachers and students participating. The community and the schools cooperate to present the Very Special Arts Festival each fall.

"We have many volunteers helping out with exceptional children. We even have sixth graders helping with our severe and profound mentally handicapped children. We encourage volunteers and agency involvement with exceptional children," Mrs. Harrison said.

Mrs. Jean Averette, coordinator for the exceptional children program in Pitt County schools, said that area schools often contract with child developmental centers to offer additional support and instruction for exceptional children. These agencies include the Farmville Child Developmental Center, the Winterville, Ayden, Grifton Child Developmental Center at Grifton, the Remedial Education Activity Program, and the United Cerebral Palsy Center. The Boy Scouts in the area also sponsor a "Gold Rush Day" of games and activities for handicapped children.

"We (Pitt County schools) can't possibly meet all of the needs of these children. In seeing that their needs are met, we work closely with other agencies involved with exceptional children — The Pitt County Health Department, Mental Health Center, Social Services, Vocational Rehabilitation, Child Development Centers, and Eastern Teacch Center," Mrs. Averette said.

Leaf Officials Call For New Trade Policies

RALEIGH (AP) — Tobacco industry officials say that the United States needs to overhaul its trade practices and pay closer attention to the trade policies of foreign governments.

"As the economies of the world's major trading nations slipped into recession during the 1970s, government policy changes and actions triggered a chain of events that have altered demand and trade patterns for leaf tobacco," Kirk Wayne, Tobacco Associates president, said in his annual report delivered Friday at the 38th annual meeting of Tobacco Associates Inc.

Speakers at the meeting in Raleigh also urged tighter control on the federal trade and budget deficits to boost sagging agricultural exports, especially tobacco.

The organization, based in Raleigh, promotes flue-cured exports.

In response to adverse economic conditions, many foreign governments have increased taxes on cigarettes and other tobacco products, Wayne said, blunting sales that had been increasing rapidly.

Foreign competition with U.S.-grown tobacco increased as many countries began to see tobacco production as "social program" that increased employment and earned import export dollars, Wayne said.

World flue-cured tobacco production grew from 3.9 billion pounds to 6.4 billion pounds between 1970 and 1984.

"The situation in which the U.S. tobacco producers find themselves today clearly points to the fact that governments of foreign customers and competitors alike have systematically gotten into the tobacco business," Wayne said. But the "U.S. government has systematically gotten out of the tobacco business," he said.

Ferrell Delman, executive director of the Tobacco Merchants Association of the United States, said U.S. tobacco and tobacco products are increasingly being frozen out of foreign markets by restrictive trade policies and growing anti-smoking sentiments, both of which have hurt flue-cured export markets.

"We are dependent more on exports than we are on domestic disappearance (sales)," Delman told the group meeting in Raleigh. "Tobacco has more at stake than most commodities in keeping trade lanes open."

With domestic cigarette consumption peaking in 1981, the development of export markets has become important to domestic growers, he said. Delman also questioned the current free-market approach that the Reagan administration is pursuing for agriculture.

"Can Congress allow blatantly protective trade policies (in other countries) to go unanswered?" Delman asked. "Free markets demand free trade."

Dave Dorminey, senior vice president, and head of the international banking division of First Union National Bank, said changes in international money and banking policies also have hurt the export market for tobacco and tobacco products.

He said the value of the dollar, whose international strength has made U.S. tobacco increasingly expensive for foreigners, has encouraged a "grow your own" attitude worldwide, creating more competition for U.S. leaf.

Dorminey predicted that the value of the dollar eventually would be weakened, but in the meantime, growers must try to reduce their costs and prices, improve the quality of their product and "sell, sell, sell."

Ohio Savings And Loans Reopen

By DALE LEACH
Associated Press Writer

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — Most of the state's privately insured savings and loans opened for the first time Saturday after more than a week of state-imposed closure and found business heavier than normal.

"Customers are hugging each other in the lobby. They're just glad to see each other again," said Gregory Markell, director of corporate communications for Mentor Savings Bank in northeastern Ohio.

For most of the state-chartered savings and loans, it was their first day of business since Gov. Richard Celeste ordered them closed March 15.

An Associated Press survey showed 50 open for at least limited service Saturday. Sixteen remained closed, of which nine planned to reopen on Monday. There was no answer to telephone calls to three of the institutions.

Lines of customers formed at two Cincinnati-area thrifts.

At Charter Oak Savings Association, 35 to 40 people waited in line — a couple chanting "We want our money."

At Molitor Loan and Building in Delhi, a Cincinnati suburb, police kept an eye on nearly 100 people who gathered as the thrift opened its doors at 10 a.m. When officials split the group between depositors and those making withdrawals, only four lined up to make deposits.

Problems in Ohio's savings and loan industry arose after the March 4 collapse of ESM Government Securities Inc., a Fort Lauderdale, Fla., securities firm that was a major lender to Home State Savings Bank of Cincinnati. ESM held Home State securities as collateral.

Customers soon began a run on Home State that prompted the thrift to close its doors March 9. When runs were reported at some other Cincinnati-area thrifts, Celeste ordered Ohio's 69 other privately insured savings and loans closed. Savings and loans insured by federal agencies were not affected.

An emergency law signed Wednesday by Celeste allows the closed institutions to re-open if they apply for federal insurance on deposits, are owned or have agreed to merge with a company already federally insured, or demonstrate to the satisfaction of the state superintendent of savings and loans that the interests of depositors will not be jeopardized.

Of the institutions that opened Saturday, 10 had received approval from the state to offer full service — unlimited deposits and withdrawals. The rest were permitting unlimited deposits but withdrawals of no more than $750.

"As far as my knowledge right now, there have been no accounts closed, and all the withdrawals have been of a small nature of personal needs — things people have not been able to get to," said Keith Childers, assistant manager at People's Building Loan and Savings Co. of Lebanon.

"As far as I'm concerned, this outfit is in good shape, and I'm happy they are open again."

Most other thrifts had similar reports.

Among customers at Versailles Savings and Loan Co in the town of Versailles, was John Shappie, who said he opened a $5,000 savings account.

"I've never done any business here before," he said. "This is a nice organization for our city, and my wife and I talked it over last night and thought they probably needed it."

Witnesses Say Medrano Gunned Down In Ambush

By JOSEPH B. FRAZIER
Associated Press Writer

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — Three gunmen on Saturday shot and killed retired Gen. Jose Alberto Medrano, the founder of a right-wing vigilante group, witnesses said.

The gunmen were waiting in ambush, and fired on Medrano's car as it arrived in front of a theater in San Salvador, killing him instantly, said the witnesses, who asked not to be identified for fear of reprisals.

No group immediately claimed responsibility.

Medrano, 60, was a controversial figure in Salvadoran politics and was closely linked with extreme rightist groups. He retired from the army in 1972 after founding, in the mid-1960s, a vigilante group called the National Democratic Organization, also known by its Spanish acronym ORDEN, or "order."

The group's ostensible purpose was to help peasants and people in rural areas become familiar with their rights as a way of combating leftist ideologies. But it soon evolved into a group that the government allegedly used to persecute suspected leftists. A more overt death squad, now inactive, called the "White Hand" reportedly was formed by some of its members.

ORDEN was active during the military-backed rightist government of Gen. Oscar H. Romero, who was overthrown in a coup by reform-minded military officers Oct. 15, 1979. The junta that took power banned ORDEN as one of its first acts.

Medrano was a hero of a bloody 100-hour border war with Honduras in 1969.

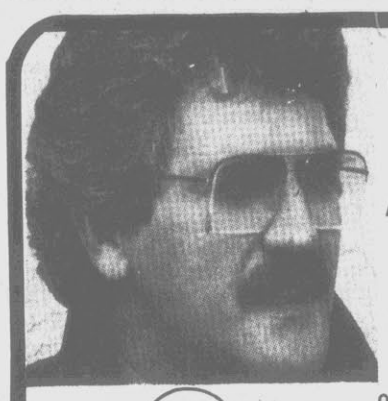

The retired general prided himself in driving around the country without security guards. He normally carried a .45-caliber pistol and kept hand grenades in his glove compartment.

He was a close friend of Roberto d'Aubuisson, a leader of the four-year-old extreme right Republican Nationalist Alliance party. Medrano also founded the Salvadoran National Security Agency, a military intelligence-gathering organization in which d'Aubuisson was the No. 2 man.

Petition Raises Separation Of Powers Issue

RALEIGH (AP) — Former U.S. Sen. Sam Ervin Jr. is among more than a dozen North Carolinians who are asking Attorney General Lacy Thornburg to initiate action to remove legislators from the Advisory Budget Commission.

In a two-page letter, Ervin and 14 other citizens petitioned Thorburg on Friday in what could become a major legal confrontation over the separation of powers between the executive and legislative branches of state government.

John Simmons, deputy attorney general for policy and planning, said Thornburg would make a decision "within a few days." Simmons indicated that Thornburg would grant the petitioners leave to file their own lawsuit.

"Acts of the General Assembly are assumed to be lawful and constitutional, and we're required by statute to defend those acts," Simmons said.

At issue is whether the Advisory Budget Commission, an executive branch commission that includes legislators, straddles the two branches of government in violation of the state constitution. The petition also asks that lawmakers be removed from 55 other state boards.

The group includes Ervin, former state Rep. Tom Gilmore of Julian, state Sen. Robert Shaw, R-Guilford, and Hugh Morton, the developer of Grandfather Mountain.

Written by Greensboro attorney Don Vaughan, the petition asks Thornburg to take action under a rarely used proceeding known as quo warranto, which challenges the right of a public official to serve.

Thornburg now has the option of pursuing the matter himself or allowing the petitioners to initiate a lawsuit against the legislators on behalf of the state of North Carolina.

Thornburg can ask the petitioners to narrow their sights, and probably will, Vaughan said. If the action is narrowed, he said, it it would probably focus solely on the Advisory Budget Commission.

A quo warranto action was last used in 1981, when the N.C. Supreme Court issued its landmark Wallace v. Bone decision. The ruling removed legislators from the Environmental Management Commission, triggered wholesale changes in the membership of other boards and led to a rewrite of the statutes governing the budget commission.

"I truly think we are embarking on one of the more important constitutional decisions that will be made in our lifetime," Vaughan said.

The petition argues that the budget commission violates the court's holding in Wallace v. Bone.

"Legislators now draft a proposed budget budget in the executive branch, act to adopt this budget in the legislative branch and then perform administrative functions regarding the budget in the executive branch," the petition states.

The state consitution directs the governor to "prepare and recommend to the General Assembly a comprehensive budget" and then to administer the budget enacted by the General Assembly. Since 1925, however, the General Statutes have given the Advisory Budget Commission wide powers to assist the governor in these roles.

The petition argues that these powers interfere with the governor's constitutional authority. The budget commission now consists of five senators appointed by the lieutenant governor, the chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, the chairman of the House Finance Committee, three other House members appointed by the speaker of the House and five people appointed by the governor.

Under state law, the governor prepares the state budget "by and with the advice of" the budget commission. The commission holds budget hearings and prepares a draft budget for the governor, who then submits it to the legislature.

But the commission also helps administer the budget once it is adopted. For example, it votes on the transfer of funds among various budgets within state agencies.

As a result of the Wallace v. Bone decision and a subsequent advisory opinion issued by the Supreme Court, the legislature modified the nature of the budget commission's authority to advisory only in most matters.

But according to an October 1984 memorandum prepared for House Speaker Liston Ramsey, the commission exercises final, not advisory, authority over at least seven functions, including the preparation and administration of the budgets of the State Auditor's Office, the State Treasurer's Office and the Administrative Office of the Courts.

In the memo, Gerry Cohen, the director of the Legislative Drafting Division, told Ramsey that "the constitutionality of those (seven) provisions remains in doubt."

Ramsey said Friday that the legislature should correct the seven functions which remain in doubt. But he said it would be a mistake to remove legislators from the commission so long as its authority is merely advisory.

"If you do away with the ABC, it will be a big loss to the governor, any governor," Ramsey said.

Ramsey acknowledged that, even if the authority remains advisory, it is a rare governor who would buck the commission.

"Anybody smart enough to be elected governor knows that he needs the legislative members of the Advisory Budget Commission to get his budget through the General Assembly. That's the practical side of it," Ramsey said.

Without legislators on the commission, the legislature would "start cold" on the budget, Ramsey said. "It would make the budget process for the Genneral Assembly take longer."

Gilmore, a Guilford County nurseryman and unsuccessful candidate for the 1984 Democratic nomination for governor, is the driving force behind the petition. He is chairman of a group called the Committee on Constitutional Integrity. All 15 of the citizens petitioning Thornburg are members of the committee's executive board, Gilmore said.

Some of the other petitioners are: Joel Fleischman, vice chancellor of Duke University; Greensboro businessman Al Lineberry Jr.; former Raleigh Mayor Isabella Cannon; and David Stedman, chairman of the Stedman Corp. of Asheboro.

Professor Cites Bad Plant Record

WILMINGTON (AP) — A Georgetown University professor says if his radiation laboratories had as bad a safety record as General Electric Co.'s nuclear fuel production plant in Wilmington the NRC "could take my license away."

But, Dr. Kenneth Mossman, director of safety for Georgetown's radiation labs, testified on Friday he could not explain why the Nuclear Regulatory Commission had failed to revoke GE's operating license based on its record of safety violations between 1982 and 1984.

Mossman's testimony came in a U.S. Department of Labor hearing on efforts of Vera P. English to receive back pay and retirement benefits from GE. Mrs. English, who was fired after she reported violations of NRC regulations at the plant, is suing the company under a federal law designed to protect nuclear industry employees who report violations.

Moosman said that General Electric apparently violated federal radiation standards consistently in the operation of its Wilmington plant. He said his testimony was based on 15 NRC reports that showed investigators had found violations or deficiencies in employee training and in the containment of radioactive material at the plant.

He said NRC investigators had found that:

— GE had misled the NRC in 1982 about the percentage of the employees who failed to check themselves for radioactivity after leaving areas where uranium was handled. Mossman said failing to check for radiation is a serious violation because it can allow radioactive contamination to be spread outside the plant.

— GE had reported that 1.5 percent of employees failed to check themselves, but an NRC inspection put the figure at 20 percent to 30 percent.

— Discarded pipes containing radioactive material were found in a trash bin by NRC inspectors in 1982.

— Radiation counts 25 times higher than allowable limits were found by NRC inspectors in one of the plant's labs in 1984. Some portions of the lab itself were found to be radioactive, Mossman said.

— Placement of airborne radiation monitors in the lab was too high to measure adequately the air workers were breathing.

— The lab's employees who conduct chemical assay of uranium are exposed unnecessarily to toxic fumes.

— GE's safety personnel appeared lax in cleaning up contaminated areas. In 1984, "certain 'hot' areas may have not been surveyed (for radioactivity) as often as they should have been," Mossman said.

Robert Torres, manager of radiation safety at the plant, testified Friday that GE and NRC inspectors in November 1984 had found widespread, visible radioactive contamination in the same lab Mossman had referred to. The contamination included a stain in the middle of the lab floor that may have been overlooked by inspectors the previous week, he said.

GE has said that Mrs. English was transferred out of the lab and subsequently fired because she deliberately left a uranium spill on her work table to test the competence of the plant's radiation technicians.

Guards Called At High School

FAIRMONT, N.C. (AP) — Fairmont city school officials are hoping uniformed guards and other security measures will help ease racial tensions following a fight between blacks and whites at Fairmont High School.

"We wanted to take procedures to assure parents that when their children went back to school, they would be in a safe environment," said Abner M. Harrington, Fairmont school board chairman.

Leon M. McLean, superintendent of the school system, said deputies would be used at the high school and a uniformed private guard would be posted at Fairmont Middle School beginning Monday.

He did not say how many deputies would be used or if they would be armed.

But Sheriff Hubert Stone said he had not talked with school officials about stationing deputies at the school.

In addition to deputies and a guard, McLean said students would be prohibited from driving cars to campus and each school would have supervised lunch periods.

Student Hurt During Victory Party

RALEIGH, N.C. (UPI) — A 19-year-old Raleigh man was in critical condition Saturday after he was hit by a police car during a massive student street celebration of North Carolina State's victory in the NCAA tournament Friday.

Brian Duane McCall was hit when he darted across the police car's path, and Officer Sandra Leigh Culpepper could not stop the car, said Lt. C.G. Diedrich.

"According to witnesses, nothing could have been done (to prevent the accident)," Diedrich said. "Evidently he did not see the police car."

About 1,000 people thronged Hillsborough Street, the drag on the north side of the N.C. State campus after the Wolfpack beat Alabama 61-55 in the Southeastern Regional semi-finals.

Students blamed police officers for the accident because they did not block off the street.

"They should have closed the street," said freshman David Overcash, who was standing across from the corner where the accident occurred. "This wouldn't have happened. You'd think with this crowd they would close off te streets. There are too many people."

Students chanted, "We want the street," but about 25 police officers directed traffic and kept the crowd off the road.

When the traffic lights on Hillsborough Street would turn red, about 100 students would move onto the road, blocking traffic. But police turned the traffic lights to yellow blinking signals at 11 p.m., keeping the traffic moving and solving that problem.

Other students threw bottles on the street, but police kicked the glass out of the way.

It was not clear whether McCall was a student, but he was not listed in the student directory.

"Students actually are not allowed to get in the street and block traffic," Diedrich said. "At the same time, we try to work with them, realizing the excitement and the part ball games play in the college atmosphere."

Two yers ago when N.C. State won the national tournament, students flocked into the street after each late victory, often building bonfires on the road.

They started their celebration Friday with a bonfire on campus, but abandonned it about 10 p.m. and headed to do battle for Hillsborough Street.

"Don't those cops have anything better to do — like catch murderers — than harass students," asked freshman Keith Harrison. "Every game, the momentum's growing. When we win it, we will own the street."

New Hearings Are Ordered

By The Associated Press

The 4th Circuit Court of Appeals has ordered new hearings for thousands of North Carolinians whose Social Security benefits have been terminated or claims denied since September 1981.

The ruling, which upholds a ruling by District Judge James McMillan, could affect more than 20,000 North Carolinians, said Charlotte attorney John Wester, whose law firm represented those challenging the Social Security Admistration's policies in a class action lawsuit.

The three-judge appeals court panel in Richmond, Va., in its 15-page ruling on Wednesday, also ordered Margaret Heckler, secretary of the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, to notify North Carolinians who have exhausted administrative appeals but still might be eligible for disability benefits.

"What we are delighted about is we may be near the day where thousands of North Carolinians will have their disability benefits restored," Wester said. "The clear majority of people we wanted to secure new hearings for will now get them."

Clara Has A Beef With Wendy's

CLARA HAS A BEEF — Clara Peller, the fiesty actress who became famous for bellowing the "where's the beef" line in television commercials for Wendy's International Inc., reads a statement to the press at her attorney's office Saturday in Chicago. Wendy's announced Friday it was terminating its relationship with Peller because of a recent commercial in which she appeared for Prego Spaghetti Sauce, a Campbell Soup product. (AP Laserphoto)

CHICAGO (UPI) — Clara Peller, the octogenarian burger huckster who asked "Where's the Beef"? in those ubiquitous TV commercials, said Saturday she will take up other offers of work now that she is free from her hamburger contract.

Wendy's International Inc. of Dublin, Ohio, said Friday it was ending its association with Peller, who shouted "Where's the Beef?" in a media blitz that made the 4-foot-11 woman, believed to be in her 80s, a media hit.

Wendy's objected to commercials Peller did for a spaghetti sauce in which she exclaimed, "I found it."

"All I said was, 'I found it.' I could have found a million dollars," Peller told a news conference outside her lawyer's office.

Peller said she has a beef with Wendy's because the company knew she was doing commercials for Campbell's Prego spaghetti sauce. But Wendy's said they had no idea Peller's lines would be linked to the burger campaign. The ads were released two weeks ago.

Peller said she was saddened by Wendy's decision to stop using her but it won't stop her from working.

"I got a lot of people (who) want me," she said.

"We are extremely sorry this happened because our company has developed a genuine love for Clara," William M. Welter, executive vice president of Wendy's International, said. "She's a fantastic lady, and we'll miss working with her."

Welter said the ads increased consumer awareness of Wendy's and contributed to increases of 31 percent and 24 percent in annual revenues and net income, respectively.

Peller's attorney, Joel Weisman, said Wendy's may have discontinued Peller's negotiations because they feared she would sue them for using her image without her permission.

"When these negotiations started they were afraid we were going to sue them for exploiting Clara," Weisman said. "They passed out masks of her at a National Football League game without her permission or payment.

"They also put up billboards showing her picture without her permission. We're investigating other violations in which they may have exploited her name and likeness."

Weisman said he wants to protect his client's rights. Weisman said a lawsuit also could result because of Wendy's announcement, which he said may have been intended to harm her.

Peller has appeared in two movies — including "Moving Violations," a sequel to "Police Academy," which will be released April 19. She is also talking to a movie producer about starring in a new movie.

Seven Die As Their Vehicle Touches Downed Power Line

JUPITER, Fla. (UPI) — Seven people trying to flee a fire touched off by a downed power line were electrocuted Saturday when 7,260 volts shot through a car as they were getting into it, authorities said.

Deputies said the four adults and three children were in a mobile home when the power line fell, causing a fire beside the structure. Bernard Johnson, a neighbor, said he warned the group of the fire and all seven fled.

A spokeswoman for the Palm Beach County Sheriff's Department said the victims died as they tried to get into a Lincoln Continental parked near the mobile home.

"One of the people was holding the steering wheel and her feet were still on the ground. Someone else opened a rear door of the Lincoln Continental and it (the door) came into contact with a Cadillac that was parked beside it," the spokeswoman said.

She said the Cadillac already was in contact with the power line and 7,260 volts of electricity shot through the Lincoln.

The victims died "in a chain-reaction as they touched each other or the car," the spokeswoman said.

The victims were Bernice Fulks, 44, James Fulks, 23, Bernett Fulks, 21, Irving Robert Fulks Sr., 26, his son, Irving Jr., 2, Gail Danielle Fulks, 7 months, and Santresa Renett Brown, 4. It was not immediately known how the victims were related.

Johnson told deputies the two cars "exploded" when the rear door of the Lincoln touched the Cadillac.

Florida Power & Light Co. spokesmen said they had "no idea" what caused the power line to fall.

"We don't know how or why it happened," FP&L spokesman Charles Sheer said. "It was just a simple feeder line that runs along the street. Lines going from the street to private homes feed off that line. We don't know why it fell."

Scheer said the accident occurred in a sparsely populated area in Jupiter, just south of the Martin County line on Florida's southeast coast.

"We're still trying to piece this thing together," Scheer said. "There was no indication of an accident involving a car that caused the line to go down."

Another FP&L spoksman, Bill Ellis, said the power company was notified of the accident about 4:30 a.m. EST and immediately sent a team of investigators to the scene.

"We feel absolutely terrible that such a tragedy could happen in our community," Ellis said.

Roller Coaster Start For Pair

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (UPI) — A North Carolina couple took their vows atop a roller coaster's highest peak Saturday then plunged 85 feet into married life with family and friends in tow in white ribbon-bedecked cars.

Although the pair had a few problems passing the ring back and forth to the minister sitting behind them, the wedding stayed right on track, said Claire Lang, spokeswoman for Carowinds theme park near Charlotte.

"It's the most unusual season kickoff we've ever had," said Lang, adding that the park opened after the ceremony.

Debbie Kuilema, 32, sat on the veil to her large white hat so it wouldn't blow away. She tossed her bouquet of red and white roses over the edge of their car to signal the end of the "I do's" and the start of the plummet down the Thunder Road roller coaster's steepest slope as wedding music played over the ride's public address system.

Her newlywed husband, Jerry Keck, 46, had attached a heart reading "Just married" and red and white balloons to the rear of the car and had made a tiny roller coaster replica complete with bride and groom to put on the wedding cake.

At the reception, the pair gave out buttons reading, "I witnessed the plunge" then headed to a brief honeymoon on Kiawah Island, S.C. They say they're saving their real honeymoon trip for warmer weather, so they can hit the nation's coaster highlights.

Keck and Kuilema say their courtship was just as unusual as their wedding. He first told her he loved her as they topped a Canadian roller coaster's highest point.

Laboratories Are Testing Sites For Lighting

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

Life on Earth would be impossible to sustain without light. Yet, an understanding of how to employ lighting for optimum visual clarity is at a rather low level in which untested observations and prejudices are the rule.

The days of guess work appear to be numbered, however, since lighting designers are beginning to systematically test their practices in the lighting laboratory. Though there are only a few such laboratories, their use is expected to grow.

One of the newest lighting laboratories is at the Fashion Institute of Technology in New York City. The lab was designed by Douglas Baker and opened in 1983. Installed in a ceiling grid in the 1,800-square-foot room are examples of many of the lighting fixtures now available. The lights are run by a computer program (also developed by Baker) and can be turned on and off by computer to demonstrate the differences between incandescent, fluorescent, and high intensity discharge lights.

A lighting laboratory is a far cry from a home or office. A stark room whose ceiling is open to reveal the type of electrical connections and mounting necessary for the various fixtures, the laboratory is an almost disturbingly ugly room. Along the sides of the large barn-like room lean panels of various textures and colors.

In one area, small boxes line a wall; each is covered with an identical piece of printed fabric, and a different type of light can be shone into each box. This makes it possible to demonstrate the effects of light on colors.

Despite its lack of visual appeal, this room helps professional designers study the effect of light, which will in turn lead to more comfortable, efficient and beautiful living and working spaces.

The lab is used to train design students at the school. It is also the setting for seminars for working professionals. Recently, for example, it accommodated working designers and architects in a two-day course presented by Alexander F. Styne, an industrial designer who is currently an instructor at the University of Miami on the subject of lighting and color.

Styne and the designers considered how to enlist what is currently known about the ways in which human beings see to improve the lighting in public and private spaces. He told the designers fluorescent lights and high intensity discharge lights (such as metal halide and high pressure sodium lamps) are likely to become the workhorses of design in the future. Incandescent light with which we are most comfortable in the home is too inefficient to continue as the lighting of choice as energy costs continue to rise.

With the resources of the laboratory, the students were able to compare the effect of incandescent light with various formulations of fluorescent lighting within the same room. The demonstration indicated that deluxe warm-white fluorescent light comes closest to reproducing the effects of incandescent light among the widely available types of fluorescent bulbs.

An even better type of fluorescent is what Styne called a triphospher bulb. It has been manufactured under different trade names, such as "Ultralume." The bulb is widely used in Western Europe, but is not well-known in the United States, according to Styne. It is quite costly compared to other fluorescent bulbs.

According to Styne, the existing lighting laboratories (often on college campuses) have already helped experts establish some general lighting principles. These include the fact that good color rendition improves vision.

Tips that may be of help to you when you're doing it yourself:

— When attempting to get rid of rust stains from a porcelain surface, why not try a rust remover? People seldom think of it in connection with a sink or tub. An excellent type is a jelly that also removes lime stains from porcelain.

— If you ever decide to fix a sagging floor with adjustable steel jack posts, remember they must be turned up very slowly — no more than half an inch every three or four days.

— When you have to repair the crumbling mortar between bricks in a wall or house exterior, be sure you get a special mortar mix which contains hydrated lime.

— Whether you use a plunger, a snake or auger, or a liquid or powdered chemical to clean a clogged drain pipe, do it as quickly as you can after the clogging is noticed. It's much easier to clear a partly clogged pipe than a completely clogged one.

— If you are putting in a new doorbell or chime at the front or rear door, it is not necessary to turn off the electricity, but if you do any work whatever on the transformer, shut off the power or call in an electrician.

— Avoid getting on a ladder to check for openings in the side of a house, by standing on the ground and using a moderate or large-sized flashlight.

— One way to be sure of using a wood putty that matches the wood on which it will be used is to get some fine sawdust from the same wood (if it is practical) and mix it with a glue that contains resin.

— When replacing an old door lock with a new one, the job will be a lot easier if you can purchase a lock of the same kind or at least with the same dimensions.

— Use cabinets with locks on the doors to keep potentially dangerous tools and chemicals away from children.

— If you ever contemplate the installation of a central air conditioner, use several thermometers to check the differences in rooms at certain times of the day. When the installer is there, show him what you have noted and see if separate controls won't save you energy and money.

— You can avoid trouble in the hammering of nails if you hold the nail with the thumb and index finger of one hand until you have tapped it gently with the hammer in the other hand. Once the nail is securely in place, go ahead with the hammering. An advantage of this practice is the lessened chance of bending the nail.

— Before attempting to add an extension to your house, check the local building codes to determine what the restrictions are. The chances are you will need a permit to begin work and a certificate of occupancy after it is finished. Many people skip this procedure and have to take down the addition, sometimes years later.

— When utilizing the space under stairways for storage, consider putting casters on large boxes or bins so that what you want can be rolled out easily.

— When you are engaged in a project in your home workshop and you spill anything on the floor (even a single drop of liquid), wipe it up or pick it up immediately. It is when you delay and forget about what was dropped that you or somebody else takes a fall.

— If you are having a problem with condensation anywhere in your home, you can figure out a solution if you remember the principle that condensation occurs when warm, moist air settles on a cold surface. Therefore, you must allow the moisture to escape or be trapped or warm the cold surface. The trouble often can be avoided in the first place by reducing the amount of moisture emanating from various sources.

— Vinegar and water sometimes will soften old glue that must be removed. The effort to remove the glue must be done quickly before the liquid dries and the glue hardens again.

— Varnish applied over lacquer will not harm the lacquer, but lacquer applied over varnish may soften the varnish.

Here's The Answer

By ANDY LANG

Q. — We were told we would have no trouble with the plumbing system in our new house because the owner had replaced the cesspool with a modern septic tank. It was important to us because we had so much trouble with the cesspool in our previous house. Now, we find we are having similar trouble and must have the septic tank pumped out, just as we did with the cesspool. Were we wrong in thinking this kind of trouble would not occur with a septic tank?

A. — Yes. Pumping out a septic tank is sometimes necessary. Waste material in a septic tank is decomposed gradually by bacteria, but solid materials which are nondegradable do not decompose. When enough accumulates, it must be pumped out professionally. You can lengthen the period between the pumpings if everyone in the household knows which materials do not belong in a toilet or sink. You can get a list of these materials by writing to the Small Homes Council, University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign, One East Saint Mary's Road, Champaign, IL 61820 or the University of Minnesota, Agricultural Extension Service, 3 Coffey Hall, University of Minnesota, St. Paul, MN 55108.

Q. — I enjoyed your article about log homes some time ago and your recent one about steel-framed houses. One thing I did not see was the kind of wood that is superior when building a log home or having it built.

A. — Different types of wood have different characteristics, so it is very difficult to select one as superior for a log home. The most common species used include cedar, pine, fir, spruce and cypress. Each can be used to construct a structurally sound log house. Most manufacturers offer the kind most plentiful in their areas.

Q. — I recently began to use shellac for the first time. I found it excellent, especially when several diluted coats are put on. A slight problem developed with the fine sandpaper I used between coats to eliminate irregularities. The paper gets very clogged and has to be discarded quickly. Is this normal?

A. — You may be using the wrong kind of sandpaper. Aluminum oxide and silicon carbide are excellent, but the important thing is that you choose an open-coated paper. The close-coated type will tend to clog quickly. If you wash the sandpaper with denatured alcohol, dry it and then put it aside for a few days, you may find it can be used again.

(The technique of using shellac, varnish, lacquer, stain, bleach, remover, etc., are detailed in Andy Lang's booklet, "Wood Finishing in the Home," which can be obtained by sending 50 cents and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to Know-How, P. O. Box 477, Huntington, NY 11743. Questions of general interest will be answered in the column.)

Garden Clinic

Q. What is a gazania?

A. Gazania is also called treasure flower. It is a daisy-like flower that has many colorful hybrids of pink, bronze, yellow, red and gold. There are usually bold contrasting markings on the flowers. The leaves of the plant are gray-green and the plants grow about eight to 11 inches tall. Gazanias like full sun and well-drained soil. They flower in summer and early autumn. They are not hardy in North Carolina. A new variety of gazania called "Mini-Star Tangerine" is a 1985 All-America Selection. The single flowers of this variety open each morning, providing a burst of tangerine — a totally new color to gazania varieties.

Q. Is it necessary to stake garden peas?

A. It is not necessary, but it is a worthwhile practice, especially if you have a tall-growing, late-maturing variety. Supporting the peas keeps them from blowing around and breaking at the soil surface. It also keeps young pods off the ground.

Q. What is a starter solution?

A. A starter solution is a fertilizer solution especially made to use on young plants in the garden to help them get a good start. Commercial starter solutions have a high percentage of phosphorus which stimulates root formation by young transplants. Gardeners can make their own starter solution by mixing one pound of 8-8-8 fertilizer in 10 gallons of water. Smaller quantities can be made by adding three to four tablespoons of fertilizer per gallon of water. Put the fertilizer in a jar, add water, and shake well to dissolve as much of the fertilizer as possible. Never use more than one cup of the solution per plant to avoid burning the roots.

Q. What shrub would you recommend as a screen for a very shady location?

A. Try Canadian hemlock (Tsuga canadensis). This is a fast-growing evergreen that can be grown as a formal or informal screen. It can also serve as a background in a natural area of rhododendron and azaleas. Canadian hemlock prefers moist, well-drained acid soil. You can find Canadian hemlock at most nurseries in North Carolina.

Teacher Turnout High For Basic Skills Exam

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (UPI) — Teachers turned out in huge numbers Saturday to take the nation's first basic skills exam required for recertification, despite dwindling threats of a boycott by those protesting the test "on principle."

"We've had a real good turnout at all the stations," state Education Department director Tommy Venters said after the morning session of the tests began. "We have no problems that are disruptive in any manner. We are very pleased with the turnout, very pleased with the attitude of the teachers."

The Arkansas Education Association, a 17,000-member teacher organization, had predicted that up to a third of Arkansas' 24,000 classroom teachers would boycott the general knowledge test, the first of its kind given to teachers already in the profession.

But Venters said Saturday that he expected about 90 percent of the teachers to take the test.

AEA president Peggy Nabors of Little Rock said Saturday she had no idea how many teachers actually would boycott the test.

"We made that an individual decision by each teacher and they're treating it as such," she said. "I think a boycott is certainly a risk and that's why we made it a personal decision rather than trying to impose an association decision."

The AEA has vowed to stand behind teachers who risk losing certification by boycotting the testing program, which the organization contends is unconstitutional. A judge in Little Rock Friday, however, ruled the testing law met constitutional standards.

Grainger Ledbetter of Little Rock, a junior high English teacher who boycotted the test, said he felt his decision was justified and he was willing to risk losing his certificate when it expires in 1988.

"It's the right thing to do," he said. "I made the decision on principle. No matter what happens, whether the test goes through and it's law, I'm still not going to take it no matter what occurs."

Under the testing program, all public school teachers and administrators on Saturday were to take the test on fundamental skills in reading, writing and mathematics. Only teachers with valid excuses were to be exempted and allowed to make it up later. All teachers will have until 1987 to pass the test and keep their certifications.

A second part of the testing program will require teachers and administrators to take and pass a subject area test or take additional college courses.

The state Legislature this year refused to repeal the testing law, despite intense lobbying by the AEA and a teacher rally that brought about 4,000 educators to the state Capitol in Little Rock.

Dick Johnson, a sociology teacher and coach at Fayetteville High School, took the test Saturday morning and described it as "junior high at most."

"They did a pretty good job of limiting the test to material that teachers run across almost on a daily basis," he said.

Mobile Home Firm Charged With Bilking Vets

ROANOKE, Va. (UPI) — A North Carolina mobile home firm was charged Friday with inflating the cost of trailers sold to veterans to get bigger government loans.

Conner Homes Corp. of Newport, N.C., was indicted on a total of 31 counts of mail fraud by a U.S. District Court grand jury meeting in Roanoke.

Seven employees in Newport News and Chesapeake, Va., and eight employees in Newport, N.C., face fines totaling $302,000 and prison sentences totaling 160 years, federal prosecutors said.

The indictments allege that Conner Homes employees added the cost of appliances and accessories the veterans never asked for or received, and failed to subtract cash down payments from the purchase price in loan papers mailed to the Veterans Administration.

"This practice had the effect of raising the loan amount the Veterans Administration guaranteed," U.S. Attorney John Perry Alderman said.

V.A. Inspector General Frank Sato said the charges resulted from a year-long investigation called Operation Protect Veterans. The "Pro-Vet" investigation has already resulted in stiff fines for mobile home companies in Georgia and Colorado.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Tom King said Guerdon Industries Inc. of Denver, Colo., paid $500,000 in fines as the result of a plea bargain. Scott Housing Systems Inc. of Waycross, Ga., paid fines of about $50,000, King said.

Conner Homes Corp. employs about 800 people and lists annual sales of about $50 million. The company manufactures trailers in Newport, N.C., and sells them at 105 lots in North Carolina, Virginia, Georgia and Texas.

Friday's indictments charge that Conner Homes salesmen and branch managers in Virginia and North Carolina routinely added imaginary accessories including washers and dryers, porches and air conditioners to the invoice prices of new mobile homes sold to veterans before submitting the loan information to the V.A.

In addition, company employees allegedly took down payments in cash, then secretly raised the purchase price so the loan amount would not be lowered. The indictments list $8,400 worth of accessories fraudulently added to loans totaling $327,000 on trailers sold to 16 veterans. At least another 17 veterans paid $9,800 in cash deposits that did not show up on the loan papers.

Prosecutors said the amount listed in the indictments were only a fraction of the violations believed to have occurred in Virginia and North Carolina and did not include similar transactions that may have occurred in other states.

The indictments were returned in Roanoke, prosecutors said, because the V.A. Regional office there processed the loan applications from both states.

Burton's Will Omits Liz

HAMILTON, Bermuda (UPI) — Elizabeth Taylor, twice the wife of Richard Burton, will not receive any of the $2.7 million estate the late actor left, the Bermuda Supreme Court decided Friday.

Burton, who died of a cerebral hemorrhage at his Swiss home last August at the age of 59, left the bulk of his estate to his fourth wife, television producer Sally Burton. Her share included the Welsh actor's homes in Switzerland and Haiti.

Burton drew up the will with a local Bermuda law firm — Conyers, Dill and Pearman — in 1983.

The will, which was settled in the Bermuda Supreme Court Friday, allocated almost $350,000 each to Katherine and Jessica Burton, the actor's daughters by his first marriage, and $279,000 to Maria Burton, adopted while he was married to actress Taylor.

Taylor, who was divorced from Burton twice and co-starred with him in a number of films, was not included in the will.

He also left $15,000 to Philip Burton, a Welsh school teacher who encouraged his interest in the theater and taught him the basics of drama. It was from him that the actor, who was born Richard Jenkins, took his stage name. The teacher is now retired and lives in Key West, Fla.

Bob Wilson, Burton's former dresser, Ron Berkeley, his make-up man, and his four surviving brothers and sisters received $15,000 each.

Memphis State Nips Sooners

DALLAS (AP) — Andre Turner, Memphis State's designated hero, came through again on Saturday although he just missed being a goat.

Turner, who beat Boston College and Alabama-Birmingham with last-second shots during the tournament, scored four points in the final 33 seconds and All-American Keith Lee had 23 points to give the No. 5 Tigers a 63-61 NCAA Midwest Regional basketball championship victory over fourth-ranked Oklahoma and their first Final Four berth since 1973.

The winner of Sunday's North Carolina-Villanova Southeast Regional Final in Birmingham, Ala. will face Memphis State next Saturday in Lexington, Ky.

However, Turner — selected the regional tournament's Most Valuable Player — missed the front end of a one-and-one with eight seconds to play and watched helplessly as a desperation Oklahoma shot bounced high off the back of the rim at the buzzer.

Turner, asked if he was worried about missing his final free throw, said "I wasn't thinking about that. I was thinking they (Oklahoma) could only go into overtime and since we still had all our players I thought we still had a chance to win."

He added "I was real glad it didn't come down to where I had to make a last second shot again."

Lee hit a basket and canned four free throws in the final 90 seconds and Turner made a layup against the Sooner press then hit two free throws with 23 seconds to go.

Oklahoma, the nation's highest scoring team which was held to its lowest point total of the season, had one last chance after Turner missed a free throw with eight seconds to play. Anthony Bowie's 24-footer at the buzzer hit the back of the rim and bounced away.

Memphis State Coach Dana Kirk said "We did what we had to do at the end of the game. We handled the pressure.

"I thought we did an excellent job of shot selection and we played great defense against Oklahoma. We got into a lot of foul trouble and fought through it. We've had to do that all year. Keith Lee and Turner were just super."

Lee, who hit only nine of 22 shots, said "When you are playing a team like Oklahoma you don't worry about it when you miss. You have to have confidence in your shot."

It will be the Tigers' first appearance in the Final Four since 1973 when they lost in the title game to UCLA.

OKlahoma Coach Billy Tubbs said he thought Turner turned the ball over before he was fouled with eight seconds to play.

"Everybody in the place knew it was a turnover," Tubbs said. "You do what you can do but there are three guys (referees) out there who determine your future. You pray they have the guts to make the call.

"I wouldn't change a lot about the way we played except making a few more shots. That last shot we missed had a chance. It just didn't go."

Oklahoma All-America Wayman Tisdale, who finished with just 11 points, said "We'll just have to come back next year and be better. We're not going to get our heads down."

Tisdale, a junior, said he would make a decision later whether to make himself available for the National Basketball Association draft in June.

"I have no comment right now," he said.

Oklahoma, the Big Eight champions who finished with a 31-6 record, were led by Darryl Kennedy with 16 points.

The Tigers, Metro Conference Champions and 31-3, got 12 points from Turner.

Turner hit two jump shots to put Memphis State ahead 53-47 but Kennedy brought the Sooners charging back. He scored four straight baskets and scored with 13 seconds to play to bring Oklahoma within two points.

Lee got into foul trouble again, just like he had in the three other playoff games. He got his first foul just 17 seconds into the game and sat down with his fourth foul at 11:48 in the second half. He came back with five minutes to play.

Turner hit a 17-foot jumper at the buzzer to tie the game 33-33 at halftime. Lee had 13 points in the first half, while Tisdale had only five in the battle of All-Americans.

Turner joined on the all-Regional team by teammates William Bedford, who had 12 points, and Lee. Kennedy and Tisdale made it for Oklahoma.

Oklahoma was attempting to make the Final Four for the first time since 1947, when the Sooners lost to Holy Cross.

The Sooners went into the game as the nation's highest-scoring team, averaging 90.8 points a game, but the Tigers' defense and patient ball-handling slowed down the Oklahoma attack.

Tim McCalister was also in double figures for Oklahoma with 14 points but didn't make a point in the last 10 minutes of the game.

Memphis State shot 51 per c from the field to only 46 per cent the Sooners.

The Tigers outrebounded Sooners 32-27, but 19 turnovers the winners helped the Sooners s in the game.

Lee had 11 rebounds while Tisd pulled down 12 for the losers.

Georgetown Slips Past Tech

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — While All-American Patrick Ewing rode the bench because of foul trouble, Georgetown rode the inside power of reserve Ralph Dalton and the free-throw shooting of Reggie Williams back into the Final Four.

The top-ranked Hoyas, with Ewing out for 12 minutes of the second half, hung on for a 60-54 victory over No. 6 Georgia Tech in the NCAA East Regional championship game Saturday.

Next Saturday's national semifinals at Lexington, Ky., will match Georgetown against the winner of Sunday's West Regional final between Georgetown's Big East rival St. John's and North Carolina State.

The Hoyas' 16th straight victory put them in the Final Four for the third time in Ewing's four years and kept them on track to become the first team to repeat as national champion since UCLA in 1972 and 1973.

For the most part, though, they did it Saturday without Ewing.

The 7-foot Ewing, who scored 12 of his team-high 14 points in the first half, collected his fourth foul with 18:02 left in the second half and Georgetown leading by one point. By the time he returned, with 5:31 left, the Hoyas were up 48-44.

"I know the team had everything under control," Ewing said. "I had confidence in them. Naturally, I wanted to get in, but I had confidence in the team."

Tech players suggested that Georgetown had more intensity with Ewing on the bench.

"We may have picked it up a little," confessed Hoya forward Bill Martin.

And Georgetown Coach John Thompson added: "Other people realize their responsibilities when Patrick is not in the game."

With Georgetown leading 56-54, Dalton hit two free throws to clinch the bruising, foul-plagued contest.

"I knew I had to hit those or I couldn't go back to the bench," Dalton said with a smile. "I knew I had to keep myself under control. I had to step to the line and hit."

"It's getting harder and harder," Thompson said of the trip to the Final Four. "The championship is easier than getting to it. Georgia Tech is one of the finer teams."

The Hoyas also benefitted from the poor outside shooting of Mark Price, who entered the game with a 49 percent field goal mark and a 16.9 average.

But Thompson didn't give his defense credit for stopping Price, who made only three of 16 shots from the field and scored 13 points.

"I don't think we did a good job on Price," Thompson said. "We chased him all over the floor. He got our big people in foul trouble, so I don't think you can really say that we did a job on him."

With Ewing out of the game, Thompson said the Hoyas tried to run time off the clock and have a better shot selection.

Georgia Tech Coach Bobby Cremins shook his head in dismay when he looked at Price's shooting figures in the statistics sheet.

"It's too bad Mark Price had a tough shooting day. We would not be here without Mark Price. It's too bad. He just missed a couple of big belts. I thought we had a shot."

Cremins also said, "One of gusty calls was Ewing's fou (foul). It got physical, but thought it would."

Williams and Martin added each for Georgetown, while 7- John Salley scored 12 of his 15 po in the second half to lead the Ye Jackets and Dalrymple added 13.

Georgia Tech, 27-8, overcam four-point deficit midway thro the game and fought the Hoyas d to the end, at one point taking a 4 lead. Dalton and reserve Ho Broadnax then combined for points as Georgetown went on a run to take a 51-46 lead.

After Dalrymple hit a jumper 3:45 remaining to cut the Hoya to 52-50, Williams tossed in two throws with 1:12 left. Scott Pet scored his only points of the gam a jumper to make it 54-52 wit seconds remaining, but Willi then connected on another pai free throws to make it a four-p Georgetown lead again.

Price finally hit a long jumpe make it 56-54, but Dalton then ac two free throws and Broadnax e it with a driving layup at the buzz

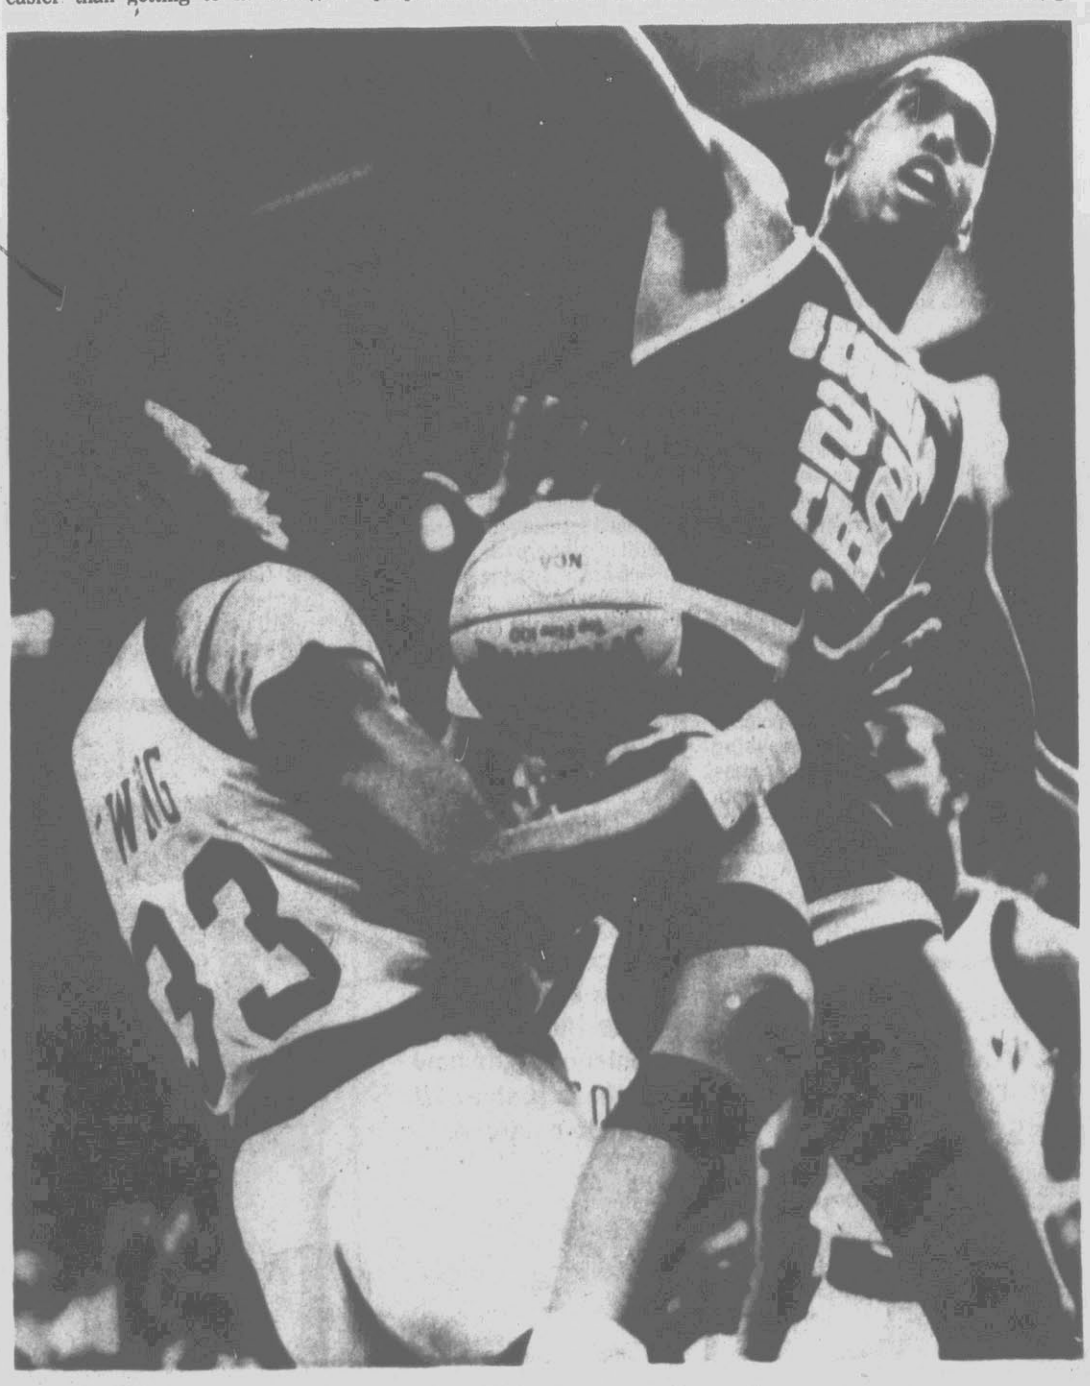

Salley crashed hard to the flo the second half when David Win drove over him attempting a la He took only a brief rest returned to the game.

With 5:23 left in the game, pers flared when 6-11 Yvon Josep Georgia Tech fouled Dalton. E motioned to Joseph to come at but no punches were exchanged.

Georgetown used both Dalton Ewing together for much of the half to combat the size of Joseph Salley and the first half ended 29-29 tie.

Ewing scored all the points in spurt which put the Hoyas up and a jumper by Wingate gav Hoyas their biggest lead of the 28-19.

The Hoyas led 29-21 before P who made one of his first s field-goal attempts, hit a jumpe 7-foot freshman Antoine Ford two baskets and two free throw Ewing's third personal foul. Hoyas, who had been playing an up tempo for most of the g then ran out the clock for almos minutes after Ewing went t bench.

McNeil Is Qualifier

ATHENS, Ga. — East Carolina's Lee McNeil captured first place in the 100-meter dash and qualified for the NCAA National Championships, to be held in June, during the running of the Georgia Relays Saturday in Athens.

McNeil finished the race with a time of 10.23 seconds to win the event and surpass the qualifying standard for the nationals.

Chris Brooks also came away with a first place finish for the Pirates, winning the long jump with a leap of 25 feet, 3 inches.

Two relay teams also placed in the meet. The 4x100 relay team took sixth place with a time of 41.00 seconds, while the mile relay team was third in 3:09.91.

UNC's Reputation Can't Be Concern For 'Cats

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (AP) — Ed Pinckney said seventh-ranked North Carolina's reputation can't be a concern for Villanova when the Wildcats tangle with the Tar Heels Sunday for a coveted berth in next week's NCAA Final Four basketball tournament.

"They have the great reputation, but the only way you can treat it is to go out and play and do the things you normally do," Pinckney said Saturday.

The Wildcats, 22-10, and Tar Heels, 27-8, meet at 1:58 p.m. EST Sunday for the Southeast Regional title with the winner heading for Lexington, Ky., and a national semifinal battle with Memphis State.

Memphis State captured the Midwest Regional crown Saturday with a 63-61 victory over Oklahoma.

North Carolina has had nine Final Four appearances in its history, including national championships in 1957 and 1982.

The Tar Heels will be attempting to move veteran Coach Dean Smith into the national semifinals for the eighth time in his 24 seasons at Chapel Hill.

"This is the third time in four years these guys have been here," said Villanova coach Rollie Massimino. "Hopefully, the third time we'll get where we want to go. We're not taking it like it's the end of the world."

After losing All-Americans Michael Jordan and Sam Perkins from last year's team that went out in the regional semifinals, few expected the Tar Heels to make a serious run at a Final Four appearance this year.

"I don't think this team is getting enough credit," Smith said. "People say we're not a good Carolina team. They should be very proud of what they've accomplished."

North Carolina has reached this point with huge front line players — 6-foot-11 Brad Daugherty and Warren Martin and 6-10 Joe Wolf and Dave Popson.

The trigger man for the Tar Heels is Kenny Smith, a quick point guard who had a career-high 22 points in a 62-56 semifinal triumph over Auburn Friday night.

Daugherty leads the team in scoring with 17.3 per game and Smith averages 12.6.

"They are awfully big," Massimino said, "but Kenny Smith is the guy we really have to try to contain. Our three inside people have been playing (big) people like that all year. We're just going to have to cope with it to the best of our ability."

While North Carolina has the size, Smith said Villanova has the inside quickness, especially in 6-9 center Pinckney, who is averaging 15.9 points a game. Pinckney is coming off a brilliant defensive effort in which he held Maryland's Len Bias to only eight points in the Wildcats' 46-43 victory over the Terps Friday night.

"I imagine the game will be very close, and we've done very well in close games, as has Villanova," Smith said.

Wolfpack's Task: To Stop St. John's Gym Rat

DENVER (AP) — You can tell by his pasty-white complexion that Chris Mullin is a true gym rat, the sort of athlete who loves the game of basketball so much that he will spend hours upon hours honing his skills in a gymnasium somewhere.

It's not uncommon to find Mullin, already the possessor of one of the game's most accurate jump shots, working on his shooting in an empty gym as late as 1 a.m.

But Mullin is not so self-absorbed that he can't laugh at his work habits. "I don't know what a gym rat is," Mullin said after the Kentucky game. "But I do know this, and this is a true story: St. John's called our hotel today and said they'd found a rat in the gym back home. And it wasn't me."

Although Mullin is averaging 20 points per game this season for third-ranked St. John's, he is more than just a scorer. He's a great passer, leading the Redmen in assists, and he is an adequate rebounder despite the fact that he's a 6-foot-6 swingman with limited jumping ability.

And then there are the intangibles. Kentucky Coach Joe B. Hall, whose Wildcat team was victimized by Mullin's 30 points in an 86-70 loss Friday night in NCAA West Regional semifinal play, said Mullin is "an intelligent player who works hard to get himself open. He's going to get his points on effort and hustle. It's kind of wishful thinking to think you're going to stop him."

The task of contending with Mullin now falls to North Carolina State, which meets the Redmen in the West Regional final here Sunday. N.C. State defeated Alabama 61-55 in Friday night's other semifinal.

"Chris Mullin is a joy to watch," said Wolfpack Coach Jim Valvano. "He's so unselfish. I don't know who will guard him."

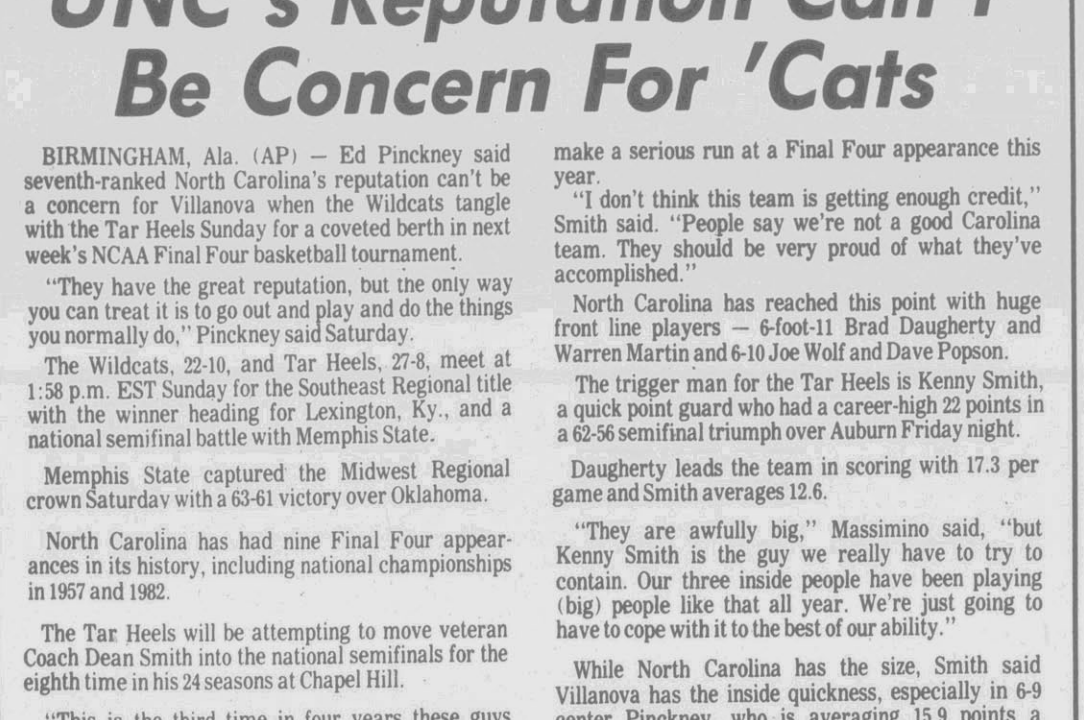

Valvano joked about two obvious mismatches. "If we start Terry Gannon (a 6-1 shooting guard with limited defensive skills), I think he might have trouble guarding Mullin. Spud Webb (a 5-7 guard) might not be a good matchup either."

Junior Nate McMillan, a 6-5 guard, probably will draw the short straw and be assigned the task of defensing Mullin.

McMillan faces other pressures as well. "We need Nate to shoot well from the perimeter," said Valvano. "All of our guards have got to shoot well from the outside. St. John's does a great job of taking away your inside game, and we won't have a chance if our backcourt doesn't shoot well."

In a previous meeting between the two teams in December, St. John's triumphed 66-56 as the Wolfpack backcourt shot a dismal 5 for 32 from the floor.

St. John's, 30-3, is looking to make the Final Four for the first time since 1952, when they bowed to Kansas in the NCAA championship game. Coach Lou Carnesecca has never been to the Final Four despite a 370-130 career coaching record. North Carolina State, 23-9, is bidding for its second Final Four appearance in three years; the Wolfpack won the NCAA title in 1983.

Bandit Defense Testing Flutie's Hot & Cold Game

By The Associated Press

Doug Flutie's slump is at one game ... and counting.

The rookie quarterback of the New Jersey Generals has been hot and cold through four games of the United States Football League season. Last Sunday was one of his coldest games — on 10 of 26 passes for 148 yards, two interceptions and three sacks in a 29-9 loss to Baltimore.

"I think you're going to see everyone start playing Flutie the way the Stars did," said Tampa Bay Coach Steve Spurrier. "You have to contain him, keep him in the pocket and make him throw from there.

On Sunday, he has to deal with the Bandits' defense, first in the East and second in the league both in total defense and rushing defense. And it leads the USFL in sacks with 18. Nose tackle Fred Nordgren has six of them, most in the league.

"We're going to have to find ourselves against a pretty good football team," Generals Coach Walt Michaels said. Tampa Bay, at 3-1, is tied with Memphis and Birmingham for first place in the East. The Generals are 2-2.

Also Sunday it's Portland at Houston, Birmingham at Baltimore and Oakland at Memphis. On Monday night it's San Antonio at Denver. Last Thursday night, Jacksonville beat winless Orlando 34-31 in overtime.

Los Angeles was at Arizona Saturday night.

For the year, Flutie has completed 40 of 96 passes — 41.7 percent — for 628 yards, six touchdowns and five interceptions and has been sacked seven times for 70 yards in losses. He ranks 10th in the league in passing.

What's wrong?

"That's a good question," he replied. "I'm not having any trouble with the reads anymore. I'm physically not throwing the ball well. I've had my slumps before."

In fact, most USFL quarterbacks are scramblers, but the Bandits' John Reaves is an old-style, in-the-pocket quarterback.

"With all these run-and-shoot guys in the league," Reaves said, "I'm starting to feel like a dinosaur. (But) I think there might still be room in the league for one or two good old dinosaurs like me."

In Houston, Breakers defensive coordinator Pokey Allen has a simple plan for Portland's game against the Gamblers and their awesome quarterback, Jim Kelly.

"All we'll really be doing is playing our third and long defense practically every play," Allen said. "Kelly may be the best quarterback I've ever seen. He's a lot like Dan Marino (of the National Football League's Miami Dolphins) but Kelly's receivers are as fast as anybody in the world." Kelly, with Richard Johnson and Clarence Verdin 1-2 among USFL receivers, has the top three passing performances in the league this season, including a record 574 yards in the season opener against Los Angeles.

"Houston's receivers not only make the catches they should make, they make great catches when Kelly's off," Allen said.

The Stars, who beat Birmingham twice last season — 43-11 duiring the season and 20-10 in the playoffs — hope their defense will be as effective against the pass this week as it was last Sunday against Flutie. Birmingham's quarterback is Cliff Stoudt, No. 2 in the East in passing with a conference-high nine touchdown passes.

He trails only Walter Lewis of Memphis — this depite Lewis' dreadful day in a 34-19 loss to Birmingham. He completed only 14 of 32 passes and was sacked 10 times. He has been sacked 19 times, tops in the league.

"When your quarterback gets sacked 10 times, it says something about what we did on offense," Showboats Coach Pepper Rodgers said. "I thought it was one of Walter Lewis' poorest days as a quarterback."

Navratilova Needs All She's Got For Victory

NEW YORK (AP) — Needing every bit of her tremendous talent and even a little luck, defending champion Martina Navratilova narrowly defeated Hana Mandlikova 7-5, 7-6 Saturday, advancing to the final of the $500,000 Virginia Slims Tennis Championships.

On Sunday, Navratilova will face another Czechoslovakian, fifth-seeded Helena Sukova, in the unique best-of-five-sets title match at Madison Square Garden. Sukova downed Kathy Rinaldi 6-4, 6-2 in their semifinal.

The winner of this 16-player, season-ending tournament will pocket $125,000, the largest purse in women's tennis, while the runnerup collects $60,000.

In a superbly contested match, with both players pulling out a dazzling display of shots, Navratilova won by the slimmest of margins. Mandlikova, who defeated the top-ranked Navratilova in their last meeting, had a set point in both sets.

But Navratilova showed the Madison Square Garden crowd of 15,786 — the largest single-session crowd ever to watch women's tennis — why she is considered one of the greatest players in the history of the game. Time and again, when it appeared Mandlikova was about to close out a set, Navratilova would somehow come up with a winner.

"I wanted it bad," Navratilova said. "I'm just happy I got through."

Actually Navratilova got the first service break in the match, breaking her right-handed opponent at 30 in the third game. But Mandlikova broke right back, at 15, grabbing the last four points in the game.

Then, after Mandlikova held in the fifth game, came a series of breaks as neither player could hold service from the sixth through the 10th games.

It was in the 10th game that Mandlikova suffered her first major setback. Serving at 30-15, she could have reached set point. Instead, she double-faulted to 30-30.

Two points later, Navratilova had the break and had pulled to 4-5.

In the next game, Mandlikova, the No. 3 seed in the tournament, did reach set point when she had the advantage. But Navratilova pulled back to deuce with a drop volley, took the ad point with a service winner and closed out the game when Mandlikova sailed a forehand service return long.

Navratilova, reaching the final here for the seventh consecutive year, then dropped only one point in the next two games, breaking Mandlikova at 15 in the 11th game and closing out the opening set with an ace.

There were only two breaks of service in the second set — in the fourth and fifth games — as both players raised the level of their games to fever pitch. It was one remarkable shot after another, one seemingly impossible "get" after another, one brilliant stroke matched by another.

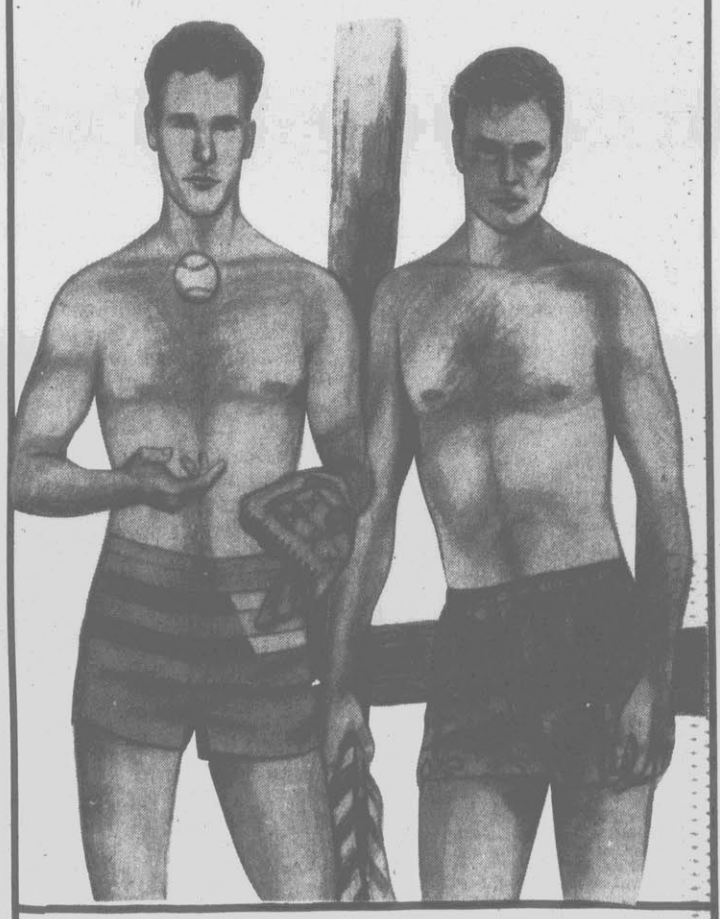

The two battled into a tiebreaker and Navratilova immediately jumped out in front. But, as they had throughout this afternoon, they fought on even terms.

Mandlikova saved a match point at 6-5 as both players, standing just feet apart at the net, traded volleys, Navratilova finally losing the point when she punched a backhand volley long. Then Mandlikova had a chance to win the set as she took a 7-6 lead and Navratilova serving. That's when luck came into it.

Mandlikova, who had been returning brilliantly the entire match, sent what appeared to be a miss-hit backhand service return cross-court, almost into the crowd.

"She broke a string on her racket then," Navratilova noted. "With a broken string, the racket is like a Trampoline."

No Excuses For Delay Game

DALLAS (AP) — Oklahoma Coach Billy Tubbs was a bit miffed, but Memphis State Coach Dana Kirk made no excuses Saturday for sending his Tigers into a delay game with a 4-point lead and more than six minutes still left on the clock.

"Believe it or not, I'm an advocate of the shot clock. But you have to do what is best for your team. We played the way we needed to play," Kirk said.

Despite early foul trouble for 7-foot, 220-pound sophomore center William Bedford and 6-10, 220-pound All-America forward Keith Lee, Memphis State held on for a 63-61 victory over Oklahoma's Sooners to advance to the final four for the second time in the school's history.

"When we went to the delay game it was to protect our foul situation. You tend to foul on defense, and we needed to keep off defense," Kirk said.

Lee missed the first three shots he took and was called for an early foul but shrugged the problems aside and finished as the game's leading scorer with 23 points and 11 rebounds, while Oklahoma's All-America forward Wayman Tisdale was held to 11 points, although he also pulled down 12 rebounds.

But Tisdale took only 10 shots in the game and was surrounded by three players most of the day.

Tubbs said he was concerned his team was unable to get the ball to Tisdale more often, but added, "How do you get it to a guy who is full nelsoned and pounded all night? He's the most abused player in the nation."

Tubbs said it was a contest between "two great teams" but said he couldn't recall his squad, the nation's top-scoring outfit, scoring so few points.

"Maybe in a half. That's why we need a 45-second clock. They ought to have a league for guys who are afraid to play, who don't want to take the ball up and down the court."

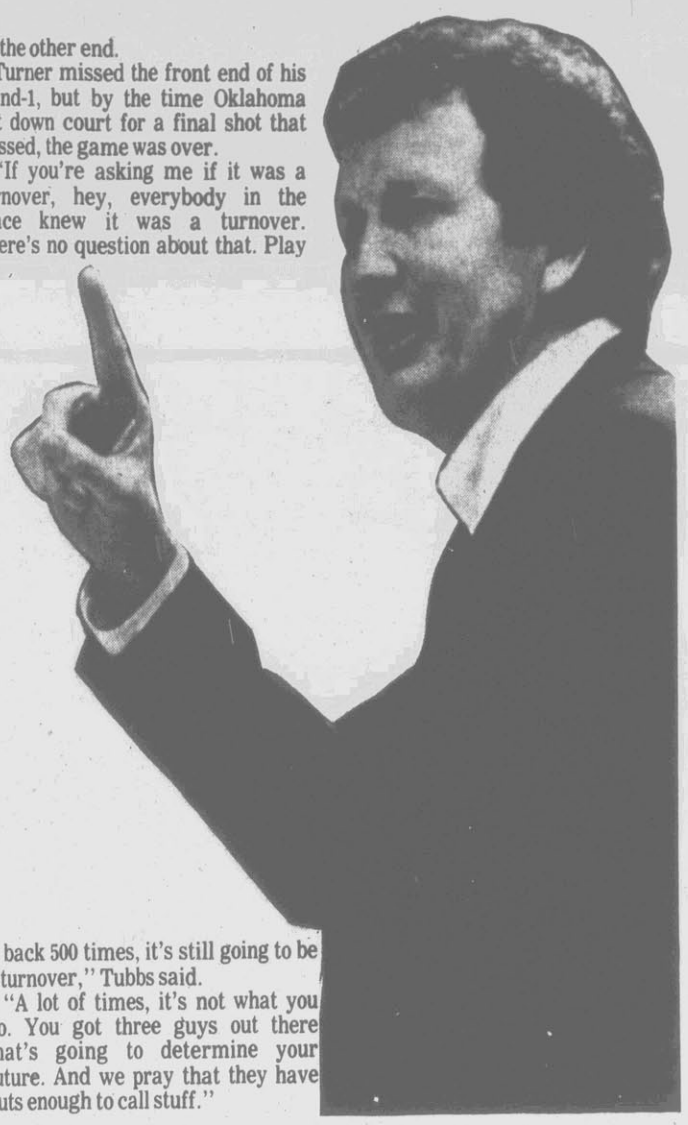

Fourteen of the points were scored in the final minute. Two goaltending calls on Bedford, a pair of free throws, and Darryl Kennedy's jumper with 14 seconds left brought Oklahoma to within 63-61 and Tubbs called his final timeout.

MSU's inbounds pass went to Turner, who appeared to palm the ball with 8 seconds left. To the rage of the Oklahoma bench and Sooner fans there was no call. Instead, Oklahoma's Linwood Davis was called for a foul a second later, sending Turner to the free-throw line on the other end.

Turner missed the front end of his 1-and-1, but by the time Oklahoma got down court for a final shot that missed, the game was over.

"If you're asking me if it was a turnover, hey, everybody in the place knew it was a turnover. There's no question about that. Play it back 500 times, it's still going to be a turnover," Tubbs said.

"A lot of times, it's not what you do. You got three guys out there that's going to determine your future. And we pray that they have guts enough to call stuff."

Stephenson Takes Lead In Glendale Tourney

GLENDALE, Calif. (AP) — Jan Stephenson, winning her daily battle with putting problems Saturday, fired an even-par 72 to take a three-shot lead after three rounds of the LPGA's $250,000 GNA tournament.

Stephenson, at 1-under-par 215, is the only player under par after 54 holes at Oakmont Country Club, where the women are playing a tournament for the first time.

Barbara Moxness, who began the third round three shots in front of Stephenson, soared to a 78, but still was tied for second place with Bonnie Lauer and Becky Pearson at 2-over-par 218.

Just another shot behind were 17-year-old high school senior Pearl Sinn, Nancy Lopez and Pat Bradley.

Stephenson, looking for her first victory in two years, had said after Thursday's opening-round 70 that gave her a share of the opening lead that she felt she was regaining her putting touch.

But after a second-round 73, she complained that her old problem — missing from four feet or so — had returned.

During the third round, she still had trouble making short putts, but did roll in a couple of long ones, including a 20-footer on No.13 as she opened up her lead.

Pearson, in her fifth year on the LPGA tour, fired a third-round 71.

Lauer, a 10-year tour veteran, shot a 70 to move into contention for just her third LPGA title — but second within two weeks. She won the women's Costa Mesa, Calif., event March 10 to snap an eight-year winless string.

Sinn, the No.1 player on the boys team at Bellflower High in suburban Los Angeles, refused to fold under the pressure of being among the frontrunners in just her second LPGA appearance, carding a 74 Saturday.

The only amateur in the field, Sinn had shot a 70 to share the first-round lead — after she barely earned one of two open spots in the tournament by shooting an 83 in qualifying.

She had a 75 the second day to remain close to the lead.

Patriots Win Crown

GREENSBORO (AP) — Center Sam Gibson scored 23 points and West Carteret held off a fourth-quarter rally to edge Statesville 66-59 for the N.C. High School Athletic Association 3-A boys basketball title Saturday night.

The Patriots, 25-5, scored eight unanswered points early in the first quarter — six of them by the 6-foot-6 Gibson — to pull out to an 11-2 lead.

West Carteret raised its lead to 38-26 at the half.

After building the lead to 55-38 with 6:12 remaining, the Greyhounds, 24-6, staged a comeback, cutting the margin to 58-56 with 1:10 left on a basket by Jimmy Roseboro.

West Carteret then got a free throw from Kelly Willis and two more from David Yancey to grab a 61-56 lead with 37 seconds left.

The Greyhounds battled back once again, however, cutting the gap to 61-59 on Todd Gabriel's basket with 26 seconds remaining.

Patriot Tim Williams then was fouled and went to the line for a one-and-one opportunity. Williams missed the front end, but Gibson snared the rebound, scored and was fouled to ice West Carteret's first state title.

Women Win One

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — East Carolina's Lady Pirates won their opening game in the Florida State Invitational Tournament Friday, but lost their next two that day.

ECU's Lady Pirates downed Michigan State, 1-0, in the opening game of the tournament, but then bowed to Bradley, 5-0, and to Southern Mississippi, 4-3.

Saturday results were not available.

Women To Wait Until Next Year

ATLANTA (AP) — What happens to a dream deferred? Well, when it's women's baseball, the answer is one of the sport's oldest cliches: Wait 'til next year.

"The status of it is, we ain't gonna do it this year," laughs Bob Hope, the former Atlanta Braves executive who brought dozens of female athletes to Georgia Tech's baseball field last fall to try out for the first professional baseball team with women in the lineup.

Hope's idea — supported by baseball home run king Hank Aaron and Tech baseball coach Jim Morris, among others — was to put together a minor league franchise that would give women a chance to play Class A baseball, three long steps below the big leagues.

The "Florida Sun Sox" took aim at Daytona Beach and the Florida State League, but the FSL rejected their franchise application. League officials said the women got "equal and due consideration," but the new Daytona Beach franchise went to a Tennessee group with 13 years in minor league baseball.

The Sun Sox' attempts to take over an existing franchise then failed, as negotiations to buy teams in Florida, California, North Carolina and elsewhere broke down.

"I've talked to virtually every minor league owner on earth," Hope said.

Several teams, he said, were willing to sell a majority interest to Hope's investors but asked "somewhat astronomical" prices, knowing the group was hungry for a franchise.

"It's not really fair for us to have to pay three or four times what a Class A team is worth," he said.

Hope, now a public relations executive in Charlotte, N.C., says he still is amazed that 55 women took off from work and school last September and came to Atlanta to try out for a baseball team that didn't exist.

In the wake of national media coverage of the tryouts, "literally hundreds" more contacted him, all with the common dream of crossing baseball's sex barrier.

"A couple of things, I'm convinced now, are facts," Hope said last week in an interview. "If Jim Morris tells me they can play (at Class A level), which he did, then that's pretty strong.... And second, the women want to play.

"The issue, to me, is much bigger than just buying a baseball team. Is there a spot where women and men can play coed sports, together, on a professional level? I think it's a meaningful human rights issue.... I'd definitely like to see it done for next season."

In the meantime, Hope keeps an active file of would-be Jacqueline Robinsons, and keeps searching for a place for them to play.

January In Senior Lead

SUN CITY WEST, Ariz. (AP) — Don January fired a 3-under-par 69 and barely held off the charges as he took a slim one-stroke lead through Saturday's second round of the 54-hole, $200,000 Senior PGA Tour Roundup.

Despite some putting problems, January, No. 6 on the current earnings with $21,200, birdied five holes and bogeyed two en route to a 134, 36-hole total on the par-72, 6,672-yard Hillcrest Golf Course.

Gene Littler and Orville Moody each shot 5-under 67s and were one stroke back at 135. Miller Barber and Doug Ford were three shots off the pace at 137.

Lionel Haberts set a course record with a 64 and was one of five players at 138. Defending champion Billy Casper was five shots behind the leader at 139.

First place is worth $30,000, while second is $18,000.

Upshaw Keys Toronto Win, 3-2

LAKELAND, Fla. (AP) — Willie Upshaw's RBI double keyed a two-run Toronto first inning and the Blue Jays went on to defeat the Detroit Tigers 3-2 in exhibition baseball Saturday.

Walt Terrell, 3-1, walked Garth Iorg, then a single by Lloyd Moseby and Moseby's double got Iorg across. Moseby scored on a grounder by George Bell to give the Blue Jays a 2-0 before the Tigers ever came to bat.

The Tigers got one back when Alan Trammell, playing in only his fourth game, belted his second homer of the spring off Toronto starter Jimmy Key, 1-1.

In the Toronto sixth, Iorg singled, went to third on Moseby's single and continued home with an unearned run when center fielder Chet Lemon threw wild to second trying to cut down Moseby, who had hesitated after rounding first.

Marv Foley homered off Jim Acker leading off the Detroit eighth.

The victory improved the Blue Jays' record to 11-3 in Grapefruit League play while the Tigers dipped to 9-6.

Cincinnati.....1

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — Von Hayes slammed a three-run homer off Cincinnati starter Mario Soto to pace the Philadelphia Phillies to an 8-1 spring-training exhibition victory Saturday over the Reds.

The Phillies roughed up Soto for seven runs, seven hits and five walks. Soto, 3-1, was forced to leave the game with none out in the fifth inning because of stiffness and pain in his right elbow.

Jerry Koosman, 1-1, allowed five hits and just one run over five innings. Larry Andersen, Bill Campbell and Don Carman blanked the Reds the rest of the way on two hits.

The Phillies improved to 5-6. The Reds fell to 8-4.

Mike Schmidt's sacrifice fly and Len Matuszek's single produced runs in the third.

Soto got into deep trouble in the fourth, giving up a pair of walks and an RBI single to Greg Gross. Hayes belted his first homer of the season to right field with two out.

Soto was removed from the game in the fifth when he threw a change-up and felt pain on the inside of his pitching elbow. Soto said he's not sure whether he'll have to miss a spring start because of the problem.

After Sanchez threw wildly to second on a pick-off attempt the runners advanced to scoring position.

Chico Walker then bounced a grounder that was booted by Gerber to allow Woods to score the winning run.

SUN CITY, Ariz. (AP) — Rookie Doug Loman had four hits, including a two-run home run in the first inning, to lead a Milwaukee Brewers split-squad to an 8-3 victory over the San Diego Padres in exhibition baseball Saturday.

Loman, who now has homered in his last three games, leads the Brewers with five homers and 11 runs batted in.

He also had a run-scoring single in the Brewers' four-run second inning, as they scored six runs off Padres starter Mark Thurmond in the first two innings.

Several Brewers attempting to come back from injuries saw action against the Padres, while another Brewer team played an away game, rallying to beat Seattle 12-9 at Tempe.

Pete Vuckovich, who missed most of the past two seasons with shoulder problems, gave up just two Padre runs in the first five innings and was the winning pitcher.

Rollie Fingers, making his second appearance of the spring, pitched the last two innings and got a save.

Robin Yount, who had shoulder surgery in November, played his first game in left field, a position the Brewers expect him to play early in the season as his shoulder continues to heal. Yount had two hits, scored twice and drove in a run.

Yutaka Enatsu, former Japanese pitching star trying to make the Brewers' roster, pitched two innings and gave up his first run of the spring on a homer by Bruce Bochy in the sixth.

One run scored on an infield out by Larry Milbourne and the other on an error by Mullins at second base.

Moses led off the 10th inning with a single against losing pitcher Jim Gott. Moses stole second and scored when Presley singled to center field.

Watson's 71 Gains Stroke Lead

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Tom Watson, struggling with his putting, shot a par-71 and managed to hold onto his lead by one stroke over surprising Billy Glasson after the fourth round Saturday of the rich Panasonic Las Vegas Invitational.

Watson, a five-time British Open champion and six-time Player of the Year, also fell victim to some putting problems "and a 71 cropped up," he said.

His round on the Las Vegas Country Club course left him with a 72-hole total of 270 going into Sunday's final round of the chase for a $171,000 first prize in the richest event on the American tour.

Glasson, who has had surgery on his knees on four occasions, wears a pair of braces on his knees and moves slowly and with obvious discomfort, was unable to maintain his fast early pace and finished with a 69.

Still, that was good enough to cut three shots off Watson's third-round lead and lift him to within a single stroke at 271.

"I really thought I was going to make a big move," after making birdie on four of his first five holes, Glasson said, "but I think I got a little tired. I wasn't concentrating. There were a couple of 3-putts, just brain cramps."

"We both let the field get close to us," Watson said.

Curtis Strange, a winner two weeks ago, and Jay Haas closed to within two strokes of the top at 272. Strange had a no-bogey 66 in the warm, sunny weather, and Haas had a 67.

Mac O'Grady, with a 65, and Mike Smith, with a 71, were another stroke back at 273. And Mike Reid and Johnny Miller, at 274, were four back and within striking range going into the final round of this five-day event that offers a total of $1,-042,000 in prize money. Reid had a 66 and Miller 68.

Mark O'Meara, needing to couple a victory here with the title he won in the Bing Crosby to claim a $250,000 bonus prize, appeared out of it. He had a 69 and was at 283, 13 strokes behind.

U.S. Open champ Fuzzy Zoeller had a 71 and was at 280.

Watson, three in front of the pack when the day's play started, was annoyed he failed to open up the margin.

"I certainly didn't play very good golf today," he said. "I didn't do anything particularly well. I couldn't get the ball close to the hole and I 3-putted a couple of times."

One of those was for a bogey on the ninth and the other was for a par-5 on the 18th.

Glasson, who hasn't finished higher than fifth in a three-year Tour career, was four under par after five holes.

But he bogeyed the seventh after driving into the trees, then sandwiched his only back-9 birdie between a pair of 3-putts.

"But he hung right in there, didn't he?" Watson said.

Fourth round scores Saturday in the $950,000 Panasonic Las Vegas Invitational Golf Tournament on the 7,077 yard, par 71 Las Vegas Country Club course:

Hall Knew He Was Going To Quit After Last Year

(See Related Story on B-7)

LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP) — Until last year's NCAA semifinals, Joe B. Hall was a tense, terse "Keeper Of The Flame" of the University of Kentucky basketball tradition.

But after one of his best teams hit a deep freeze in the tournament, the Wildcat coach thawed quite a bit.

He warmed up, relaxed and joked that some "extra-celestial" being might have been responsible for the humiliating 53-40 loss to Georgetown, the 1984 NCAA champions.

Since then, Hall has become the friendly fellow many insisted was always hiding behind the grim face of someone who grew up revering Kentucky basketball and considered his job a sacred trust.

Friday night Hall announced he was retiring after 13 seasons and later explained his personality change from a year ago.

"I knew from probably that time that this was going to be my last year," Hall said Saturday.

"I really had intended to resign after that year ... but I didn't like the situation and I violated what I set for myself," the 56-year-old coach recalled. "I said I was going to resign at 55, and I fully intended to do that. But (the Georgetown loss was such a disappointment ... I couldn't do it."

Hall, who led the Wildcats to a national championship, a National Invitation Tournament title, eight Southeastern Conference crowns and three Final Four appearances, gave it one final "fun" year. He knew the 13th season would be the last and that he wouldn't achieve his average of 23 victories, so the pressure was off.

With four starters gone, "Twin Towers" Sam Bowie and Melvin Turpin to the pros, no one expected anything, especially after the Wildcats lost four of their first five games.

Hall laughed and joked all year, and last week opened his final pregame news conference with a fishing report.

"I wanted more of a 'me' kind of year, to enjoy it," he reflected Saturday in a telephone interview from Denver. "I had the kind of team I could enjoy and the opportunity to exceed the expectations. It was more of a fun situation."

He had the joy of watching junior Kenny Walker become SEC player of the year and a second-team All-America as the Wildcats finished the season 18-13. Hall's last team won two NCAA tournament games and contended for the league championship until the final day of the season.

Hall's new attitude this year contrasted with 1978, the "Season Without Celebration," when Hall's businesslike NCAA champions chose to watch game films rather than relax with a movie during the Final Four. Just a year ago, Hall swore at a reporter who wrote a story he didn't like.

The 1978 team included several seniors who had lost the national championship to UCLA three years before in John Wooden's final game.

Wooden had announced his impending retirement before the final in San Diego, charging up his Bruins. Hall chose not to do that Friday night in Denver as his Wildcats fell to No. 3 St. John's, 86-70, and Hall closed the books with a 297-100 record at Kentucky.

"I didn't want to pull a sentimental stunt," he said. "I didn't want that to have anything to do with our game, and I don't think it did. I think they were prepared for it."

When he heard of Wooden's retirment, Hall addressed the pressure the next UCLA coach would face by joking that he ought to be a "designated legend-follower."

"They've already ruined me," he said then. "Rather than ruin another guy, they ought to send me out there."

Hall, who took over from Adolph Rupp in 1973, never escaped the shadow of the man who won four NCAA titles and 27 SEC crowns but was forced to retire at age 70 in his 42nd season.

"When I first started, I realized that, in respect to Coach Rupp, his successor should fail. That was a great tribute to Coach Rupp that the fans wanted his fame to be enhanced by the program failing," said Hall, who was head coach at Denver's Regis College and at Central Missouri before coming to Kentucky as a Rupp aide in 1965.

Hall, also a disciplinarian, recruited Kentucky's first black player in 1969 and has had a black assistant coach for 10 years.

For 396 games, Hall always wore Kentucky blue and white. But Friday night in Denver, he borrowed a page from Rupp and donned a brown jacket.

"I never wore brown because I didn't want everyone to think I was trying to live off Coach Rupp or copy him," Hall said, noting that Regis' colors are brown and gold. "But I thought that since this was Denver, and with all my Regis connections, I should go ahead and wear it."

Rupp left 23,800-seat Rupp Arena, where this year's title will be decided April 1, and Hall will leave Joe B. Hall's Wildcat Lodge, the team's plush dormitory.

Asked how he wanted to be remembered, Hall said, "Just that ... wherever I've been, I've done what's best for the kids, cared about them off the floor as well as on the floor. That I've been an educator and made them better people.

"In the big scheme of things, it really doesn't matter that much."

Shots Didn't Fall For Tech's Price

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — The shooter's credo became Georgia Tech's epitaph.

"That's my game," said Mark Price. "When they give me a shot I'll take it."

It was a sound philosophy. Georgia Tech's second-team All-American guard had made 49.3 percent of his field-goal attempts this basketball season. In the NCAA East Regional semifinal victory over Illinois Thursday night, he was a red-hot 9 for 12 with 20 points.

But in Saturday's 60-54 loss in the finals to top-ranked Georgetown, the 6-foot junior was an ice-cold 3 for 16 with 13 points.

"The second half I had my shots. They just weren't falling," said the gunslinger whose trigger finger failed him. "Coach (Bobby Cremins) said, 'keep shooting.' That's my shot."

"It doesn't do anything to our confidence" when Price is missing, said his backcourt mate, Bruce Dalrymple. "He's going to come back and stick one We rely on him, but we know he's human."

Price said he had many open shots, although Georgetown point guard Michael Jackson claimed that "on about every shot except one or two, somebody was jumping in his face."

Dalrymple said Price had played well against tight defense.

"I've seen him shoot when he can't see the basket and hit them," Dalrymple said.

"I'm a little upset because they weren't falling but the next time I went up, I went up with confidence," said Price, the Atlantic Coast Conference player of the year. "You're heroes one night, the next night you're goats."

While Price was an unlikely goat, Hoya benchwarmers Ralph Dalton and Horace Broadnax were unexpected heroes.

With Jackson and center Patrick Ewing in foul trouble for most of the second half, Broadnax and Dalton got their chances. They didn't waste them.

Georgetown outscored Georgia Tech 16-10 after the score was tied 44-44. Dalton had six of those points, including two free throws with 14 seconds left that gave Georgetown a 58-54 lead. Broadnax directed the team and scored three of his total of nine.

Has Broadnax ever thought he would be a big-game hero on the talent-laden Hoyas?

"Everybody ego trips a little bit. You think about it. If it happens, it happens," he said.

When substitutes become stars, "it gives everybody confidence," Broadnax added. "When Patrick gets on the bench, we don't say, 'Oh, my God' like it's the end of the world."

"When adversity sets in we get together and play as one," said Jackson, who missed all six of his field-goal attempts and went scoreless. "I was rushing my shots. No one was in my face."

Price may have had Hoyas in his face, but he also had some decent chances to save face.

Trailing 50-46, he missed a shot with 4:38 remaining. Trailing 52-50, he missed with 2:27 to go.

"I feel I'm the one responsible. I let my teammates down today," said Price, the leader of Georgia Tech's best team in at least 25 years. It finished its season at 27-8.

Lady Jags Fall Short In Title Bid

By JIMMY DuPREE
Reflector Sports Writer

ELON COLLEGE — Schonna Banner fired in 23 points and Chrissy Thomas posted 20 as West Caldwell overcame a shaky start and then held off Farmville Central to take a 65-54 victory for the 3-A state girls' basketball championship Friday.

For Farmville Central, sophomore Lisa Lang muscled inside for a game-high 27 points and hauled down 13 rebounds. Joy Peadon contributed 15 points and grabbed 10 rebounds for the Lady Jags.

"The biggest thing is that we just didn't shoot the ball well," Farmville Coach Hilda Worthington said after her Lady Jaguars closed the season with a 23-6 record. "We had the opportunity and just didn't take advantage of it."

Caldwell a 58-45 lead with 2:58 left.

Peadon scored inside and Lang

The opportunity came early for Farmville, as the Lady Jags raced out to a 16-8 lead at the end of the first quarter. Lang powered inside against Steed and Banner for eight poinus and hauled down six rebounds in that stretch, while West Caldwell was plagued by turnovers.

But when the teams returned to the court to open the second quarter, the roles reversed as the Lady Warriors quickly posted six unanswered points to trim the margin to 16-14 with 5:12 remaining in the half.

Lang connected on a free throw to build the lead to three, but the Warriors utilized a variety of offensive weapons to post a 6-0 scoring edge.

West Caldwell went ahead to stay with 2:38 remaining on a turnaround shot by Steed. Thomas added two free throws for a 20-17 Warriors' lead.

Lang manuevered inside with 1:06 left in the half to cut the deficit to 22-21, but a free throw by Steed with 56 seconds remaining gave West Caldwell a 23-21 halftime lead.

The Warriors opened the third quarter the same way as the second, as Banner and Thomas chipped in eight points each to lead West Caldwell through an 18-4 scoring tear for a 41-25 lead at the 3:22 mark.

Lang, Peadon and Debra Joyner connected for Farmville, and Steed closed the quarter with a field goal as West Caldwell maintained a 43-31 edge.

"They just kind of lulled around till the fourth quarter when they realized they had to do something," Worthington said. "Then they finally made up some of the ground."

The Lady Jaguars trimmed the margin to nine twice in the final period before Thomas and Mandy Forney connected to give West stole the ball after the inbounds pass and added a field goal as Farmville cut the gap to 58-49 with 1:52 remaining.

Thomas sank the front end of a one-and-one situation for West Caldwell, and Lang did the same for Farmville to maintain a nine-point spread with 1:08 on the clock.

Banner, who picked up her fourth foul with 1:49 left in the third quarter, fouled out with 1:03 left in the game. Peadon connected on both free throws to set the score at 59-52.

But the Lady Jags were unable to take advantage of the mismatch inside, as Lang picked up her fifth foul with a minute left.

Joyner connected on a corner shot to cut the margin to six with 36 seconds left, but the Lady Jaguars could come no closer as West Caldwell sank six out of 10 free throws in the final 49 seconds to seal the championship.

"I thought Lisa (Lang) did a good job on Banner, but she's a very good player inside," Worthington said. "Banner has a real soft touch and good hands.

"I'm proud of my girls for making it this far; they've been a close team. They've worked hard and been together for a long time."

Calling It Quits

Joe B. Hall Retires As Kentucky Ends Its Season

DENVER (AP) — Joe B. Hall, whose illustrious basketball coaching career began in Denver in 1959, called it quits here after his 13th Kentucky team bowed out of the NCAA basketball tournament.

Hall, 56, who had hedged on his plans after his team's first two tournament victories — saying at one point he planned to go fishing after the season before making a decision — made it official after Kentucky's 86-70 loss to St. John's in NCAA Regional semifinal action Friday night.

"This is my last game as head basketball coach at the University of Kentucky," he said only minutes after the loss, his 100th compared to 297 victories at the Lexington institution.

"It's ironic that I started and finished my college coaching career here in Denver."

Hall began coaching at Denver's Regis College in 1959-60. He coached for five years at Regis before moving to Central Missouri for one season and moving to Kentucky as an assistant to Adolph Rupp in 1965. When Rupp retired in 1972, Hall, a former Wildcat player, took over the reigns of the fabled basketball program, producing one NCAA championship, three Final Four appearances, one NIT title and eight SEC crowns in his 13 seasons.

University of Kentucky President Otis Singletary said a search committee would be formed "after the hubbub" of the Final Four, when an estimated 2,000 coaches will be in Lexington for the concurrent National Association of Basketball Coaches convention.

Hall said he didn't plan to be involved in the selection of a successor. "I don't want any input," he said.

"Several times I've said I would not coach beyond my mid-50s," Hall said. "At that time a person should get into something he'll spend the rest of his life with. I really have not had time during the past 13 years to spend with my family that I wanted to have. I intend to have that time in the years ahead.

"I have business opportunities in Lexington, and I will be doing something less stressful than coaching."

Kentucky Athletics Director Cliff Hagan said he was "truly shocked."

"His record speaks for itself, and it's going to be a tough job to replace him," Hagan said. "Joe has a lot of qualities that are important for this job. he was a UK student, a former player, an assistant coach and a head coach. He knew what Kentucky basketball is all about when he took the job and he maintained — and even enhanced — that tradition."

Hess Is Winner

HEAVENLY VALLEY, Calif. (AP) — Erika Hess of Switzerland, the last skier of the day, won a women's World Cup slalom race to clinch the season title in that discipline for the fourth time in her career.

Hess, who by virtue of being fastest in the morning run had to start last in the 30-woman field in the afternoon, had a second-run time of 44.35 seconds for an aggregate time of 1 minute, 29.87 seconds.

The victory boosted Hess' slalom total for the season to 100, seven more than runner-up Tamara McKinney of Lexington, Ky., who finished fifth in this race.

Heels Win, Terps Lose In Southeast

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (AP) — It looked like Dean Smith's 551st coaching victory was safely tucked away early, but his seventh-ranked North Carolina Tar Heels had to survive a torrid comeback to end Auburn's Cinderella role in the NCAA basketball tournament.

Carolina surged to a 15-point first-half advantage before Auburn rallied, closing the gap to two points in the final 18 seconds before dropping a 62-56 decision Friday night.

The victory in the Southeast Regional tournament set up the third showdown between Atlantic Coast and Big East conference teams in regional title games that will qualify the winners for the Final Four in Lexington, Ky., next weekend.

The Tar Heels, 27-8, tangle Sunday with 22-11 Villanova, which ousted another ACC foe by trimming Maryland 46-43 earlier Friday night.

Top-ranked Georgetown and Georgia Tech play in the first Big East-ACC regional matchup in the East today and St. John's faces the ACC's North Carolina State on Sunday.

"I think Villanova is a great team," Smith said. "Take away their games with Georgetown and St. John's and they have a great record."

Carolina, which has won seven regional titles under Smith, had 14 layups in the game with Auburn, including nine in the first half when its four inside giants accounted for 22 points.

Kenny Smith was the sparkplug, hitting a career-high 22, including seven in a 15-2 first-half run that put Carolina ahead by 14 after only 6½ minutes had elapsed.

He then hit three free throws in the final minute and closed the scoring with a break-away dunk just before the buzzer.

Ranzino Smith added two free throws with 12 seconds remaining after Auburn's Carey Holland had cut the lead to 58-56 on a layup with 18 seconds left.

Holland was fouled on the play and missed the free throw, but Auburn star Chuck Person snared the rebound in the lane. He went tumbling to the floor and was called for a walking violation.

"I thought Auburn played with a great deal of emotion," Coach Smith said. "We made foul shots when we had to, we played well, got good shots. Auburn deserves the credit for making the game like it was at the end. We didn't let them come back, they came back."

The game probably ended the coaching career of Sonny Smith, who announced in February he was stepping down as the Auburn coach.

His team, however, stormed through the Southeastern Conference tournament and extended its winning streak to seven games with a pair of National Collegiate Athletic Association upsets and vowed to reach the Final Four in an effort to have their coach change his mind.

"I made my decision not on a high or a low," Auburn's Smith said. "The only time I have second thoughts is when I look in the eyes of my players."

Frank Ford led Auburn with 17 points and Person added 15 as the Tigers ended their season at 21-12.

Warren Martin added 12 first-half points, and Brad Daugherty and Joe Wolf 10 each for Carolina, including eight big points by Wolf down the stretch when Auburn kept chopping away at the lead.

Villanova disposed of Maryland with a tenacious defense that blanked the Terps for the final 2:10 of the first half and the first 7:10 of the second to go on a 15-0 burst that turned a 20-15 deficit into a 30-20 lead.

The Terps, 25-12, never got closer than three points the rest of the way.

Ed Pinckney led the Wildcats with 16 points, 13 in the second half. He also had a game-high 13 rebounds and held Maryland star Len Bias to only eight points, the first time in 53 games that the ACC Player of the Year had been held under double figures.

"We wanted to control the tempos," Villanova Coach Rollie Massimino said. "It wasn't as pretty as we normally do it, but we still maintained our poise and hit some big fouls shots."

Adrian Branch kept the Terps in the game with a 21-point effort, but the long scoreless stretch proved to be the difference.

"We had a chance to fold ... but I thought our kids played with a lot of guts, played well," Maryland Coach Lefty Driesell said.

"I thought Villanova played hard and played well," he said. "I hope they win the national championship. I'll be pulling for them."

Rookie Making Tigers Shift

By The Associated Press

A strong spring performance by rookie Chris Pittaro is prompting Detroit Tigers Manager Sparky Anderson to move longtime standout Lou Whitaker from second base to third.

Whitaker was expected to make his debut at the hot corner today, first in an intrasquad game and later in an exhibition game against the Toronto Blue Jays.

"I don't know how it's going to work out, but it's a serious step," Anderson said Friday after the Tigers lost 8-7 to Los Angeles. "I'm not joking."

Third base has been a weak spot for the the defending World Series champions for several seasons, while Whitaker has been the starting second baseman on the American League All-Star team for the last two years. He played third base for two years in the minors before switching to second in 1977.

Pittaro, 23, who is hitting .350 in 13 spring games and has made just one error, said he expected to play for the Tigers' Class AAA team in Nashville this season.

"I never gave myself a shot," he said, "not because I doubted my ability, but because of the people ahead of me. I figured I would be in Nashville."

Ken Landreaux drove in four runs for the Dodgers in their win over the Tigers, three on a bases-loaded double in a five-run third inning.It was the seventh straight win for Los Angeles, which is now 9-3.

In other games, Darryl Strawberry and George Foster delivered run-scoring singles to break a 3-3 tie in the fifth inning, lifting the New York Mets to a 6-5 victory over the Montreal Expos. Hubie Brooks, acquired by Montreal in the Gary Carter trade, made an error to set up a three-run second for the Mets and another ex-Met, catcher Mike Fitzgerald, had a three-run homer off Dwight Gooden in the bottom of that inning to tie it.

Dave Parker slugged a three-run homer in the third inning and Nick Esasky belted a two-run homer in the fourth for Cincinnati in a 6-2 victory over the Pittsburgh Pirates, who are now 1-8.

Ozzie and Lonnie Smith each rapped RBI singles to cap a four-run fourth inning, rallying St. Louis to a 5-3 triumph over Kansas City. Joaquin Andujar, Kurt Kepshire and Neil Allen combined on a six-hitter for the Cardinals. One of the hits was a homer by Darryl Motley.

Frank Viola, the winningest left-hander in the majors last season with 18 victories, pitched seven innings of three-hit ball and his Minnesota teammates pounded 17 hits, four each by Tim Teufel and Tim Laudner, in a 10-2 rout of Philadelphia. Teufel and Gary Gaetti each homered for the Twins.

Chris Chambliss hit a two-run single to highlight a four-run fourth as Atlanta pounded Texas 9-5.Gerald Perry slugged a two-run homer, his third of the spring, for the Braves.

Harold Baines collected three hits, including a three-run homer, to lead the Chicago White Sox to an 8-2 decision over Toronto.Tom Seaver went five innings for Chicago, allowing one run to end his spring scoreless-inning string at 13 1-3.

Jim Rice had a three-run homer in the sixth inning as the Red Sox clubbed five pitchers for 12 hits in Boston's 9-3 triumph over Houston.The Red Sox blasted starter Mike Madden for five runs in the third inning and Rice's home run fueled a four-run sixth.

Jeff Leonard's two-run double in the sixth inning, one of only two San Francisco hits in the game, gave the Giants a 3-2 victory over San Diego. Eric Show pitched five hitless innings for the Padres.

State To Face St. John's In West

DENVER (AP) — While Kentucky concentrated on stacking up the inside, St. John's Chris Mullin found himself unfettered and in a whole new world.

"It was pretty nice out there, not getting bumped and double-teamed," said the hot-shooting guard, who scored 30 points Friday night to lead the No. 3 Redmen to an 86-70 triumph over Kentucky in NCAA West Regional semifinal action.

With their victory, the Redmen, now 30-3, go into Sunday's championship game against No. 16 North Carolina State, which downed Alabama 61-55 in the other semifinal Friday night.

The winner of Sunday's game goes to Lexington, Ky., as the West's representative to the Final Four.

Walter Berry pumped in 22 points for St. John's while Mark Jackson had 12 and Willie Glass and Bill Wennington chipped in 10 apiece. Berry also led the Redmen with a game-high 12 rebounds, while Glass pulled down nine.

"The second half was the finest by far that we have played this season. I think the performance by Chris Mullin and Walter Berry was just marvelous," said St. John's Coach Lou Carnesecca.

"They beat us on their offensive board in the second half. They just did a great job of going to the boards against our zone," said Kentucky Coach Joe B. Hall, who announced his retirement after the game.

Kenny Walker led the Wildcats with 23 points, despite sustaining an accidental blow to his right eye from Mullin with 11:16 left in the first half.

Walker sat out three minutes with an ice bag on his eye, and finished with eight points in the period. "I don't think he did it on purpose. He (Mullin) apologized after it happened," Walker said.

"His eye was just about shut in the huddle," Hall said. "Shut one eye and try to shoot and you lose depth perception."

While Mullin used long-range bombs to drill Kentucky, North Carolina State used a tough inside game and accurate free throw shooting late in the game to down the Crimson Tide.

Forward Lorenzo Charles and 5-foot-7 guard Anthony "Spud" Webb each tossed in 14 points mostly from short range, and reserve forward Bennie Bolton converted a pair of insurance free throws with 33 seconds left to lead the Wolfpack, now 23-9.

"I would like to say that we were very fortunate to win," said Coach Jim Valvano, who is shooting for his second trip to the national finals in three years. North Carolina State won the NCAA title in 1983.

Despite a ragged outing, Valvano said he wasn't concerned.

"It doesn't matter if you play well. I'm not concerned as long as we keep winning. You can't get alarmed by not playing very well at this time of the season," he said.

"What you concentrate on is winning, not how well you're playing. You try to do everything it takes to win."

Alabama Coach Wimp Sanderson, who saw his team finish at 23-10, agreed with Valvano.

"Our basketball team played hard, they're a fine team. And they're as good as any team here. It all boils down to one 40-minute game. Unfortunately, we didn't play well enough to win," he said.

"I'm quite naturally disappointed. We had some crucial turnovers and we didn't make our free throws," said senior center Bobby Lee Hurt, who finished with nine points, while Terry Coner led the Tide with 18.

"It's been an enjoyable four years at Alabama for me. It's too bad it had to turn out this way."

Smith, Duggins Top Scorers

Just as they had for most of the year, Ayden-Grifton's Marvin Smith and Roanoke's Gloria Duggins finished atop the Daily Reflector area scoring charts.

Smith had little trouble in claiming the boys' championship for the 1984-85 season. He finished the season with a 19.3 average, well ahead of second place Earl Randolph of Washington. Randolph came in with a 16.6 average.

Taking third place among the boys was Roanoke's James Duggins at 15.8, just nipping Dan Andrews of Greenville Christian Academy, who had a 15.7 mark. Williamston's Tony Doughty rounded out the top five with a 15.5 mark.

Washington High School ended the year as the highest scoring team, clipping the nets for 64.3 points a game. That gave the Pam Pack a sizable lead over second place Greenville Christian, which scored 60.6 points an outing. Roanoke finished third at 59.7.

Defensively, Trinity Christian led the area, holding its opponents to 44.8 points a game. Bear Grass High School took second place with a 48.5 mark, followed by Jamesville at 49.5.

Trinity was also the team with the largest winning margin for the season. The Tigers ended up with a 9.3 points per game margin over opponents. Washington was second, close behind with a 9.1 mark while Ayden-Grifton was further back at 6.0 in third place.

Duggins, who paced the girls most of the season in a battle with Greene Central's Cyndi Hicks, finished on top at the end with a 21.8 average. Hicks took second place with a 20.0 average.

Farmville Central's Lisa Lang, who led her team to a second place finish in the 3-A girls' state championship, took third place with a 19.5 avearage, just nosing out Trinity's Renee Deans, who ended the year at 19.3.

Greene Central's girls won the title as the most productive in points score, averaging 59.6 per contest. Farmville Central was second at 57.0, while Trinity hit on 48.3 per game.

Defensively, Trinity led the pack with a 33.3 average allowed. Chocowinity was second at 35.6 while Bear Grass was third at 36.2.

The Lady Rams of Greene Central also held the widest winning margin, outscoring their foes by 17.3 points per game. Trinity was second with a 15.0 point margin, followed by Chocowinity at 11.9.

USFL Move May Not Be In '85

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — United States Football League Commissioner Harry Usher said Friday that the league eventually will switch to a fall schedule, but it may not happen in 1986.

Usher, appearing at a news conference Friday as part of a tour of USFL cities, promised that the Breakers would play in Portland again next season. The team played its home games in New Orleans last year and in Boston two years ago.

"The league is here to stay. The Breakers are here to stay," said Usher, who took over the top USFL post Jan. 15 after serving as executive vice president and general manager of the Los Angeles Olympic Organizing Committee.

Usher said the league wants Portland to come up with a "game plan" within two years for building a stadium that seats at least 50,000 people. But he hinted that strong attendance at 32,500-seat Civic Stadium might buy some time.

"The Breakers were given two years to do something relative to the size of the stadium, or their continued presence would be under review," Usher said. "That does not mean the end of the Breakers in Portland. The way Portland has embraced the Breakers is a tremendous plus."

The team has drawn crowds of 25,232 and 25,885 for its first two home games in the aging facility, which has virtually no space for parking.

Fifth Time Works For Clarkton

By The Associated Press

Four times during the 1970s, Clarkton High School basketball coach Harold Ford brought his Blue Devils to the state 1-A boys championship game only to lose, but his first trip in the 1980s produced a title.

At the Greensboro Coliseum, Ford and Clarkton took a 57-47 victory over defending champ Edneyville.

"It sure seems like it's been a long time coming," Ford said. "I told the boys it looked like I had to get old to finally get this. But I tell you, it's worth it. It's worth everything."

In other action in the N.C. High School Athletic Association championships, Cherryville took an 82-75 victory over Whiteville in the 2-A championship. In girls' games, West Caldwell rallied for a 65-54 victory over Farmville Central in the 3-A title game, while Raleigh Broughton used a 14-0 run to take a 51-49 triumph over High Point Central in the 4-A championship game.

Tonight, Gastonia Huss and Fayetteville Smith battle for the 4-A boys title and Statesville and West Carteret meet in the 3-A title clash. In the girls' games, South Robeson faces Southwest Guilford in the 2-A game and undefeated Orrum, winners of 29 games, meets Edneyville.

Israel Cromartie scored 15 points, including a clutch three-point play with 50 seconds left Friday night to lead Clarkton to the crown. The Blue Devils, 22-7, grabbed a 10-4 lead in the first four minutes before reeling off 11 unanswered points in the second quarter to raise the margin to 35-20 with 1:24 left in the half.

Clarkton went to its delay game in the second half, but Edneyville, 16-12 and the defending state champions, cut the margin to 48-45 with 59 seconds remaining on a basket by Todd Moss.

Cromartie then missed the front end of a one-and-one opportunity, but stole the ball from Damon Freeman, hit a driving layup and was fouled. Cromartie sank the foul shot and added two others with 32 seconds left to seal the victory.

Jerrod Neill added 13 for Clarkton, while Sherman Ford had 10.

Larry Stepp, the game's MVP, led Edneyville with 20 points.

Senior forward Terry Whisnant scored 30 points and pulled down 11 rebounds to lead Cherryville to its victory as the Ironmen claimed their first title.

The Ironmen, 28-1, jumped out to a 27-17 lead in the first quarter and never trailed, taking a 41-35 at halftime. Cherryville led 62-54 at the end of the third quarter and gradually put the game away in the final quarter with hot shooting and free throws. The Ironmen shot 59.3 percent from the floor for the game, including 61.5 in the second half.

Whisnant, the game's MVP, hit 13 of 18 shots from the floor to lead Cherryville, while Kenny Poston added 16 points and nine rebounds. Tony Griggs chipped in with 17 points.

Tim Southern led Whiteville, 26-5, with 27 points, while Patrick Lennon and Larry McMillan added 19 apiece.

Broughton's April Mial canned an eight-foot jumper on a feed from Jill Goldberg with four seconds left to complete the run. The rally erased a 17-point third-quarter deficit.

"The kids never quit," Broughton Coach Ed Baldwin said. "It's a storybook ending."

Broughton took possession with 34 seconds left and worked the ball around to Goldberg, who dished off to the 5-10 Mial for the winning basket. High Point Central had one last chance, but committed a turnover, its seventh in the final three minutes.

"We knew we wanted Jill with the ball on the last play," Baldwin said. "We didn't diagram anything, we just got her the ball. We knew she would make something good happen."

Hawk Released

A red-tailed hawk named Mercury, thought to have recently been injured by a car, was released last week at River Park North on Mumford Road in hopes that it will stay in the area and fully recover.

"The hawk was suffering from a head concussion, was near starvation and unable to fly. It was found beside a road and taken to the Carolina Raptor Center in Charlotte for treatment," said Howard Vainwright, park supervisor.

Since the bird was released, park employees have seen a red-tailed hawk in the area, but are not sure if the bird is Mercury.

The raptor center takes in orphaned raptors (birds of prey), gives them medical treatment, restores them to health, bands them and releases them back into the wild. The center designated River Park North as a suitable location for releasing the hawk.

According to Vainwright, the hawk was the first to be released at River Park, and the raptor center is also considering releasing some recovered owls there in the future.

The Carolina Raptor Center is a non-profit, tax-exempt, public corporation dedicated to the rehabilitation, research, reproduction and conservation of birds of prey and the education of the public.

The center is one of seven regional centers for the National Raptor Rehabilitation Association.

"Since it began, the raptor center has received 800 birds with injuries from gunshot wounds, cars, traps and many other, often human-related, accidents," Vainwright said.

An injured raptor requires immediate specialized care. Any delay reduces the bird's chance for recovery. If someone finds an injured bird of prey, he should use the "cover completely technique," which can be adapted to handle most circumstances.

According to Nancy Rogers, a volunteer at the center, the following procedures should be used:

1. A towel, blanket, jacket or any other handy light-weight item large enough to cover the bird should be used.

2. Note the geographic location where the bird was found. This information will be necessary when the bird is ready for release.

3. Approach the bird from the rear if possible. If the bird is alert and can follow your movements, anticipate that it will struggle when first covered.

4. When close enough, carefully place the covering over the bird, making sure to cover it completely.

5. Quickly restrain the bird under the covering.

6. As the bird calms down, gather the covering together, being careful to get the bird's wings folded against its body.

7. If required, the covering can be made into a sack using a bootlace.

Ms. Rogers said extreme care must be used when transporting a bird in this manner. If the day is warm or the covering is made of tightly woven material, the bird can rapidly overheat. She said the bird should be transferred to a more suitable enclosure, such as a well-ventilated cardboard box, at the first opportunity.

She said the next step is to call the raptor center at 704-597-4958 or the N.C. Wildlife Resources Commission's toll-free 24-hour number at 1-800-662-7137. Arrangements will be made to pick up the bird and transport it to the center's rehabilitation facilities.

According to Ms. Rogers, the center has received "so many" birds which have been shot in the eastern part of North Carolina, including a bald eagle shot in Pitt County in December 1984. People, she said, don't understand the vital importance birds of prey play in the chain of life.

The raptor center is a complete volunteer organization. For more information, write to Carolina Raptor Center, University of North Carolina at Charlotte, P.O. Box 16443, Charlotte, N.C. 28297.

Texas Is Ousted In Women's Play

By The Associated Press

Lillie Mason's last-second shot gave No. 14 Western Kentucky a 92-90 victory over top-ranked Texas Friday night in an NCAA Mideast Regional semifinal women's basketball game.

The loss denied Texas, 28-3, a chance to play in the Final Four on its home court in Austin.

Mason had set up the winning shot when she grabbed a rebound of a missed Texas shot and led a fast break. A Texas player knocked the ball out of bounds, which gave the Lady Hilltoppers a chance to set up the final play.

Mason and Clemette Haskins each scored 26 points for Western Kentucky, 27-5, while Andrea Lloyd scored 20 for Texas.

Western Kentucky will now play No. 6 Mississippi, which advanced with a 63-60 victory over No. 13 Tennessee in the opening Mideast semifinal at Bowling Green, Ky.

Also winning Friday night were fourth-ranked Louisiana Tech, which sailed past No. 20 San Diego State, 94-64, and No. 2 Northeast Louisiana, a 76-71 winner over 10th-ranked Auburn in the Midwest Regional at Monroe, La.

Alisa Scott scored 14 of her 18 points in the second half for Mississippi, which snapped Tennessee's 10-game winning streak. Tennessee led 35-32 at intermission and stayed ahead until Deborah Temple stole the ball and hit a layup with 4:33 left to give the Lady Rebels a 54-53 lead.

Mississippi then held the Lady Vols scoreless over 3½ minutes.

Pam Gant and Tori Harrison combined for 50 points to pace Louisiana Tech. The Lady Techsters, the top Midwest seed at 29-3, got 26 from Gant and 24 from Harrison.

The loss ended the Lady Aztecs' season at 21-9 and sent Tech into the finals with a 12-game winning streak.

Lisa Ingram and Eun Jung Lee, Northeast's All-America 1-2 punch, combined for 32 of their team's 45 points in the second half to ignite the Lady Indians.

Northeast, whose 29-1 season was marred only by a loss to Louisiana Tech, had to struggle against Auburn for its 20th home victory in a row.

Ingram got 15 of her game-high 24 points in the second half, and Lee also had 17 of her 19 points in the second session to help NLU advance.

Lakers Send Message To Rockets

By WILLIAM R. BARNARD
AP Sports Writer

The Los Angeles Lakers, the Western Conference representative in the National Basketball Association Championship Series the last three years, wanted the Houston Rockets to know they intend to make it four straight.

"It bothers all of us that everyone says that Houston is the one coming out of the West in the playoffs," veteran Bob McAdoo said after the Lakers routed the Rockets 130-107 Friday night, their 13th straight triumph in Houston. "We're saying, 'show us.' They can't run with us."

In other NBA games, it was Boston 129, Cleveland 117; Denver 123, New Jersey 111; Kansas City 121, Atlanta 102; Milwaukee 131, Philadelphia 112; New York 118, Indiana 113; Dallas 123, San Antonio 114 and Utah 110, Seattle 85.

Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, who had 30 points on 13-for-17 field-goal shooting against Twin Towers Ralph Sampson and Akeem Olajuwon, conceded Houston is vastly improved this season, but said the Rockets will have to prove they can beat the Lakers, who have won nine consecutive games overall.

"We still know we're the Western champions," Abdul-Jabbar said. "We have, I think, a credible respect from them, and I think they have a reasonable chance to go a long way in the playoffs."

"I think tonight let the Rockets know we're still here," added Earvin "Magic" Johnson, who had 12 points and 16 assists for the Lakers. "We're conscious of what's been said. But my philosophy is just to take it and deal with it on the court. Then the remarks don't matter."

The Rockets, who managed to make only 12 of 31 free throws, held a 32-30 lead at the end of the first quarter, but the Lakers outscored Houston 33-24 in each of the next two quarters to take control.

Los Angeles guard Byron Scott scored 15 of his 21 points in the third quarter to give the Lakers a 96-80 advantage going into the final period.

"We had great team defense forcing them into perimeter shots," Lakers Coach Pat Riley said. "It comes down to a challenge. If they had won, it would have given them confidence the next time we meet."

Houston Coach Bill Fitch said sarcastically that it was Houston's best team effort in two seasons.

"I don't think a team could play that poorly without everyone contributing," Fitch said.

Rodney McCray scored 21 points to lead the Rockets, while Sampson added 20.

Bucks 131, 76ers 112

Milwaukee, the runaway Central Division leader, knocked Philadelphia five games behind Boston in the Atlantic Divison as reserve Charles Davis scored 23 points, all in the second and third quarters.

Terry Cummings added 21 points and Craig Hodges 20 for the Bucks, who have won eight of their last 10 games and lead Detroit by 11½ games.

Moses Malone led the 76ers with 22 points.

Celtics 129, Cavaliers 117

Boston improved its NBA-best record to 56-14 and won its seventh straight game as Larry Bird had 36 points and 15 assists against Cleveland.

The Cavaliers, who got 28 points from World B. Free, trailed only 95-90 early in the fourth period before Danny Ainge and Scott Wedman scored six points apiece to spark a 14-5 spurt. The rally gave the Celtics their biggest lead at 109-95 with 7:42 remaining and they didn't lead by less than seven thereafter.

Nuggets 123, Nets 111

Midwest Division-leading Denver got 24 points from Alex English and 23 from Calvin Natt to defeat New Jersey.

The Nuggets trailed by as many as 10 points in the first half, but a 9-1 spurt at the end of the third period gave them the lead for good at 91-87.

Mike Evans, who scored 14 of his 18 points in the second half, hit two three-point goals to help Denver pull ahead 100-90. A layup with 5:05 left by Buck Williams, who led the Nets with 27 points and 19 rebounds, cut the deficit to 107-104, but they could get no closer.

Mavericks 123, Spurs 114

Mark Aguirre, who did not start after being ejected one game earlier, scored 35 points to lead Dallas over San Antonio.

The lead changed handed 15 times before the Mavericks took the lead for good at 100-99 with 5:29 left after Spurs Coach Scotty Robertson was called for a technical foul.

George Gervin and Gene Banks led San Antonio scorers with 20 points each.

Kings 121, Hawks 102

Eddie Johnson scored 33 points, four of them during an 11-2 streak that gave Kansas City a comfortable halftime lead.

A run of 10 straight points gave the Kings a 24-15 advantage in the first quarter, and the 11-2 streak at the close of the first half gave them a 66-51 halftime lead.

Larry Drew hit 11 of 14 field-goal attempts and had 24 points for Kansas City, while Dominque Wilkins led all scorers with 34 points for the Hawks.

Jazz 110, Sonics 85

Adrian Dantley scored 13 of his game-high 27 points in the third quarter to help Utah pull away from Seattle.

The Jazz led 50-41 at halftime and turned the game into a rout in the third period by outscoring the SuperSonics 30-20.

Rookie Frank Brickowski, replacing injured All-Star Jack Sikma, led Seattle with 21 points, while Utah center Mark Eaton had four blocks to become the first NBA player to block 400 shots in one season.

Wilderness Stay Someting Special

By DAVE SKIDMORE
Associated Press Writer

For seven long weeks, Tom Nutt spent his mornings and evenings contemplating the shimmering lights of the distant Lake Superior shore, the biting wind and a hole in the ice.

Nutt lived in a 6-foot by 8-foot ice fishing shack, 2½ miles from land. It started as a publicity stunt to promote off-season recreation in northern Wisconsin's Bayfield County, but it turned into something special, something personal, for the 26-year-old.

"At night there's a quietness," he said. "You watch the lights kind of shimmer from Ashland and Washburn. You just feel you're secluded from the world. One thing is the wind. There's always a wind out there. The wind just always seems to bite you, whether it's 30 below or 20 above."

He drove across the ice to work each day, but at night, Nutt lived simply. No radio or phone. An oil heater kept the wind-driven chill at bay.

Meals were fresh trout and splake, when he could catch them. At other times it was frozen meat and his mother's homemade bread and home-canned vegetables.

"Simplicity has always been the form of my life. I grew up that way," he said. "The shack is a neat life because you kind of revert back. You just get caught up in surviving. You feel healthy. You sleep so well. You wake up excited to see if you can catch a fish before work."

The day began at 5:30, fishing with shiner minnows through the ice.

"The sunrise has a new meaning when there's nothing to block it. I see it break the horizon and I see it silhouetted against the lighthouse," he said.

"I think a lot out there. I think about where I want to be and what I will be content with. I think a lot about being married and having a happy relationship," said Nutt, who is engaged to be married in June.

The quiet, restful nights were not as common when Nutt first took up residence in the shack. Subzero temperatures and wind would cause pressure ridges in the ice, some heaved as high as six feet, to rumble and groan.

"One night when the pressure ridge cracked it was like a little earthquake," he recalled. "It woke me out of a dead sleep at 4 a.m. and I was just kind of shaking."

Report Cites 'Farm Value' Of Food

By DON KENDALL
AP Farm Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — A rise in the "farm value" of food accounted for a significant part of last year's overall 3.8 percent boost in food prices, says an Agriculture Department report.

"Most of the 1984 increase in farm value reflected higher prices for poultry eggs, fruits, vegetables and food products derived from oilseeds," it said. The farm value of red meat also was a factor.

In all, grocery store prices rose 3.7 percent last year, with the higher farm value accounting for about two-fifths of the increase. Food eaten away from home, which includes restaurant meals, was up 4.2 percent.

The analysis, which was prepared by the department's Economic Research Service as part of a regular study ordered by Congress, noted that the overall 3.8 percent increase in food prices last year was sharply more than the 2.1 percent gain posted in 1983, the smallest annual increase since 1967.

However, the report added, 1984 was the sixth consecutive year that food prices rose more slowly than consumer prices in general. Last year, for example, the Labor Department's consumer price index rose an average of 4.3 percent, compared with the 3.8 percent rise in food prices.

Barring severe weather or changes in the economy, food prices are likely to increase modestly again in 1985. Department economists project the increase within a range of 2 percent to 5 percent this year.

The farm value is the payment farmers get for the amount of raw commodities needed to produce food sold in grocery stores. For example, it takes nearly 2.4 pounds of a live animal to yield one pound of Choice-grade beef at the supermarket.

Last year, the report said, farmers received an average of 34 cents of each $1 that consumers spent on a market basket of food items produced on U.S. farms. That was up a penny from 1983 and was even with 1982. However, last year's 34 cents still trailed the farm share of 36 cents in 1981 and 37 cents in 1980.

The remainder of the food dollar goes to others in the pipeline who transport, process, package and sell food after it leaves the farm.

Farm values of food items vary greatly, depending on how much processing and other preparation is involved. Producers got 64 cents of each dollar spent on eggs in retail stores last year but only 9 cents of each dollar spent on white bread and eight cents for lettuce.

Looking at it another way, the report said that Americans spent $332 billion for food produced on U.S. farms last year, $17 billion or about 5.5 percent more than in 1983. Food bought in grocery stores accounted for roughly two-thirds of the total. It does not, however, include money spent on imported items and seafood.

Red meats account for 30 percent of consumer food spending, followed by fruits and vegetables, 21 percent; dairy products, 14 percent; bakery products, 10 percent; poultry, 5 percent; grain mill products, 3 percent; eggs, 2 percent; and other foods, 15 percent.

Counting both spending on food sold by grocery stores and in eating places outside the home, the report said that the farm share of 1984 expenditures was about $89 billion or 27 percent of the $332 billion total.

The larger share, $243 billion, was the "marketing bill" for food after leaving the farm. It was up $12.5 billion last year, thus accounting for nearly three-fourths of the $17 billion increase in consumer food spending.

About $5.5 billion of the marketing bill's 1984 increase of $12.5 billion was due to rising labor costs, the report said. Packaging and food containers added $2 billion. Industry profits, transportation and energy also rose.

"Although food costs are rising, they are not increasing as much as total consumer income," the report said. "A declining proportion of income spent for food, leaving more money for other things, is an often-used indicator of a rising standard of living."

In 1984, it said, food spending was 15.2 percent of total disposable income, down from 15.6 percent in 1983 and 16.8 percent a decade earlier. That is an average. People at the low end of the income scale would expect to pay a larger share for food, while those with larger incomes would pay a smaller share.

Siegfried Wins His Tax Case

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Siegfried St. Bernard has beaten the tax collector six years after his death, but the mystery of his dog food continues.

"There's nothing I can do with the case," Assistant Jackson County Counselor Bill Gnefkow said after a county suit seeking $7,306.02 in overdue taxes was dismissed.

A summons was sent to Siegfried, a dog that died in November 1978, and was received by the dog's former owner, William Hagel. Gnefkow said the county received Siegfried's name in 1977 from a cold storage firm, which said someone named Siegfried St. Bernard stored merchandise there and, therefore, owed a merchants' and manufacturers' inventory tax.

"There is nothing I can show that says anything was stored other than in that one year (1977)," Gnefkow said Thursday. "And that is outside of the five-year statute of limitations."

Gene Brummel, general manager of the storage firm, said records from 1977 have been destroyed.

"But I remember that we had a customer by that name, and I'm sure it was dog food that was stored there," Brummel said.

Hagel said he owned a St. Bernard registered as Siegfried Hunk. But he doesn't remember storing anything in Jackson County or with the cold storage company.

"I can almost make an affidavit to that fact," Hagel said. "What I'd like to know is who checked the dog food in and who checked it out."

The Name Is Winn-a-bagel

OSHKOSH, Wis. (AP) — Winnebago is one of Wisconsin's best-known historical words, so how can Winn-a-bagel hope to compete?

County planner David Schmidt received permission this week from the county's Board of Supervisors to proceed with a $9,500 advertising campaign.

"The purpose of the advertisement is to get the word out about Winnebago County and hope that it will catch someone's eye," Schmidt said.

The name has already been given to the huge Lake Winnebago, and is found nationwide on a brand of recreational and camping vehicles.

The ads have already appeared in business journals with such comeons as: "Winn-a-bagel County sounds like a great place to open a deli."

"Oy vey," it says. "For years you've confused us with the people who make Winnebago campers, and now this."

The ad extols the county's electricity rates, colleges, railroads and "a lake system with 84,000 acres of water."

"Maybe the next time you see a bagel you'll think of Winnebago County," it says. "Just remember, it is where Philadelphia gets most of their cream cheese."

Plants And People Grow In Greenhouse

Geraniums bloom and cauliflower and cabbage flourish in Pitt County Mental Health Center Greenhouse. And the Mental Health Center is documenting personal growth for 18 persons enrolled in the first Pitt Community College-taught greenhouse and grounds maintenance program here.

Kathy Hammond, an N.C. State University horticulture graduate, teaches the course and Rhonda Bailey, a veteran Mental Health Center counselor, directs the program for emotionally handicapped persons. The program has been in existence since last May and shows great promise, its developers say. It is being held at a specially developed greenhouse site located on county-owned land on the Old County Home Road south of Greenville.

"The premise of the program," Robert DeSoto, Partial Hospitalization Program coordinator, said, "is that meaningful, gainful employment is desirable for everyone. The people enrolled in this program are ones who haven't successfully held jobs for some time. Here we teach, not only the skills associated with helping plants grow, but also behaviors like showing up for work every day whether you feel like it or not, staying all day whether you feel like it or not, completing tasks, working closely with other people, and communicating in order to successful get a job done."

Some of the students will be able to go out and get greenhouse and groundskeeping or other jobs once they complete the year-long course. Others will not. "We're going to work to assist those who we deem able to hold a job to find one," Ms. Bailey said. "Seeing these people self-supporting will mean that the program has met its purpose and we'll continue to enroll others."

The participants are paid for their labor in the greenhouse — a very useful teaching tool — according to DeSoto. "Making one's own money is such a powerful incentive," he said. "We have a license to pay only half the minimum wage, but even this is much more money than many of these people have made in a long time."

"This is proving to be one of the best programs for the chronically mentally ill that we have had," DeSoto said. He said he sees it as one of the most valuable adjuncts to the Partial Hospitalization Program designed to keep mental health patients in the community.

Plants raised at the greenhouse are sold to help defray expenses of the program. "We're a very small operation and we're not competing with commercial nurseries in the area," Ms. Hammond said. "We'll be open at no time other than the hours we're here with the students — from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. each weekday. And we'll sell only on request, with no minimum orders, first come-first served. We won't be trying to undercut on price. We just hate to see good plants go to waste and we need whatever money we can recoup to run the program as economically as possible."

WATERING of plants is a task in which each Greenhouse Program participant must share.

GERANIUMS are favorites of the Greenhouse Program participants. These as well as other plants are available for sale to the public to help defray the cost of the program.

TENDING BEDDING PLANTS is one of the tasks of students taught at the Pitt County Mental Health Center Greenhouse.

Hot Water From The Sun Through Solar Water Heater

By Changing Times
The Kiplinger Magazine

Whether you're building a house, remodeling or replacing an aging water heater, there are at least two good reasons to consider a solar water heater.

The first: Until the end of 1985, you can deduct 40 percent of a system's cost — up to $10,000 or a maximum credit of $4,000 — from your federal tax bill.

Adding a solar water-heating system to an existing home will typically cost between $3,000 and $7,000, the Solar Energy Industries Association (SEIA) told Changing Times magazine. In warm climates, a roof-mounted batch collector costing as little as $700 ($400 if you handle the installation yourself) may do the job.

The second: In many places in the U.S. solar can furnish 50-75 percent of your needs. This is the point at which a system becomes most cost efficient.

The farther north you are and the cheaper your conventional fuel, the less you'll save with solar, especially if costly winter freeze protection is needed. Solar water heating pays off best in the Southwest, Florida, Hawaii and Southern California, except in higher elevations where freezing occurs.

Most solar water systems are relatively simple. Weathertight boxes made of insulated, glazed material or flat plates with exposed tubing collect heat in absorbent material. Liquid antifreeze, air or water that circulates through the collector picks up heat and channels it to a tank for eventual release.

Depending on your consumption and climate, relatively small collectors, averaging 40 square feet, can supply water at about 110-140 F.

Solar water systems are either open-loop (direct) or closed-loop (indirect) types, depending on whether household water is piped directly from the collector or is heated indirectly via a heat exchanger.

In cold climates the best type — called an indirect, closed-loop system — uses energy from collectors to heat water stored in a tank that usually works in tandem with a conventional water heater.

Some setups require pumps to empty and refill the systems — another operation cost.

The American Society of Heating and Refrigerating and Air-Conditioning Engineers has developed testing methods to set standards for solar equipment.

Directories of approved makers, along with ratings of their equipment, are available from the Solar Rating & Certification Corp., Suite 800, 1001 Connecticut Ave., N.W., Washington, DC 20036.

Before investing time or effort in looking at any solar system, Changing Times suggests you see what local building codes and zoning rules apply. Altering the roofline, particularly in historic neighborhoods, may require an official waiver.

Rising energy costs increase the value of a solar system to you over time. If the cost of heating water with gas or electricity rises 50 percent over the next five years, for example, then solar savings will go up proportionately. More modest increases in energy prices would have the opposite effect.

You can use the method below, worked out by Wayne Johnson, publisher and executive editor of "Solar Engineering and Contracting" magazine, to determine the pay-off of a solar system.

The method assumes that conditions are favorable enough in many areas of the U.S. to make solar hot water a better deal, say, than investing $3,000 in a long-term savings account. To keep the equation simple, the rates for inflation and rising energy costs aren't included.

You can use the system to calculate roughly not only the time it will take to get back the initial investment but also what it would cost not to go solar.

1. Enter how much you spend now to heat water. If your hot-water heat is not independently metered and the same fuel also provides space heat, use 25 percent of your annual utility bill as your annual hot-water cost.

2. A prospective contractor should provide you with the percentage of heat you could reasonably expect from the sun, as well as a list of customers who are willing to discuss their own experience with a solar system.

Generally, depending on location, you might expect an active one-panel system to provide 33-50 percent and an active two-panel system 50-75 percent of your needs.

3. Next, multiply the annual solar contribution (Step 2) by the annual household water cost (Step 1). Divide the result by 12 to give you an estimated average monthly solar savings.

4. Then, multiply the average monthly solar savings (Step 3) by 180 months, which is the industry-estimated life of a system, give or take a few years.

5. Enter the contractor's estimated price of the system, first subtracting any discounts or promotional reductions you accepted, which are not eligible as federal and state tax credits.

6. Multiply the price of the system by 40 percent to get the federal solar tax credit.

7. If your state has an additional credit (in the example it's 20 percent of the price of the system), apply the credit in accordance with instructions from your state energy or tax office.

8. Next, add the federal and state tax credits (Steps 6 and 7) and then subtract that figure from the estimated price of the system to get the adjusted system price.

9. Divide this system price by average monthly savings as calculated in Step 3. The result is the simple payback period, namely the time in months it will take you to recoup your initial investment before solar begins to pay off in reduced energy costs.

Patents Pending Booklet Printed

WASHINGTON — Both mad inventors and clever developers racing after money and glory usually end up in the same place. The U.S. Patent Office.

But getting a patent these days is not so easy.

Realizing this, the U.S. Department of Commerce has published a booklet, "General Information Concerning Patents", that provides facts and figures on different kinds of patents and how to apply for them. It also includes a list of fees, a sample application and answers to frequently asked questions.

Some pointers from those who know:

—Find out what can be patented. The law says anyone who "invents or discovers any new and useful process, machine, manufacture, or composition of matter, or any new and useful improvement thereof, may obtain a patent."

—Make sure nobody else has patented the same thing. This means searching patent records since 1836 at the U.S. Patent and Trademark office or in Patent Depository libraries around the country.

—Hire a patent attorney. Anyone can file an application, but the law is tricky and guidance is helpful. The U.S. Patent Office registers persons qualified to represent inventors.

—Do not turn over an invention to someone who is not registered with the Patent Office.

—Applications are reviewed by examiners who decide whether the invention is patentable. If rejected, a reconsideration is possible.

If a patent is granted, it's good for 17 years and excludes others from making or selling the invention in the United States.

To obtain the booklet, send $2 to the Consumer Information Center, Dept. 131N, Pueblo, Colo. 81009.

Evans-Tatum Wedding Vows Performed

MRS. EVANS

Toi Deanne Tatum and Gregory Lee Evans were united in marriage at 3 p.m. Saturday in Elm Grove Free Will Baptist Church in Ayden. Celebrant for the double ring ceremony was the Rev. Steve Hargrove.

Given in marriage by her parents and escorted by her father, the bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Marshall Tatum of Ayden. The bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Evans also of Ayden.

The bride wore a formal gown of white bridal satin over peau de soie. The gown was fashioned with an open sabrina nckline accented by an applique of scalloped re-embroidered alencon lace beaded with pearls. The lace extended over the bodice front and enhanced the dropped silhouette waistline. The long fitted Renaissance sleeves were trimmed in a floral patterned Venise lace interspersed with appliques of the imported lace. The gathered skirt and attached cathedral length train were edged at the hemline in a border of alencon lace. She carried a nosegay of white and lavender sweetheart roses with streamers of love knots highlighted with light lavender baby's breath.

The attendants wore formal gowns of violet satin designed with an open, off-shoulder neckline and elbow length French pouf sleeves accented at the shoulders with pleats. The fitted bodice featured a floral embroidered motif in matching violet. The full skirt was enhanced by a sash of matching fabric. Each carried a classic bouquet of sweetheart roses with lavender and white ribbons. Mona Gail Stokes of Ayden was maid of honor. Bridesmaids included Tracy Leigh Tatum, sister of the bride, and Lori Williams Tatum, sister-in-law of the bride, both of Ayden, and Tracey Lee Worthington of Winterville.

Danielle Ranee Smith of Grifton was flower girl and David Allen Creech of Ayden was ring bearer.

The father of the bridegroom was best man. Ushers were brothers of the bridegroom, Gary Lynn Evans of Ayden and Anthony Ray Evans of Grifton, and Dennis Deland Tatum, brother of the bride of Ayden.

W. Stoney Creech of Ayden directed the wedding. Sharon Irwin was organist and Michael O'Connor was trumpeter. Tim Parker sang "There Is Love" and "The Lord's Prayer." All are from Greenville.

Pam Evans of Grifton and Wendy Shirley of Kinston presided at the register.

The bride and bridegroom are graduates of Ayden-Grifton High School. She is employed with Foodlion of Oxford and he is employed by Northern Telecom Inc., Research Triangle Park. He also graduated from Pitt Community College.

After a wedding trip to Williamsburg, Va., and Washington the couple will live in Oxford.

A reception was held at the Ayden Community Building and was given by the parents of the bride. Wendy Shirley and Pam Evams greeted and said goodbyes. Mrs. Stanley Gaskins of Ayden assisted in serving.

An after-rehearsal dinner was given for the couple by parents of the bridegroom at the church fellowship building.

Select Child Care Carefully

By REDBOOK
A Hearst Magazine

Fifty-two percent of American mothers with children under 6 years old work at least part-time outside the home and must arrange for someone else to care for their kids.

There are four types of child care a working mother can use, according to an article in the March issue of Redbook. She can turn to relatives, older siblings, a babysitter in her home or to group care outside the home.

Relatives can be ideal for babies too young to need the company of other children, but many working women don't have this option. Older siblings are another possibility, but they are often resentful of the added responsibility.

A babysitter can be expensive, but offers the advantage of one-to-one care — important for babies less than 18 months old.

Babysitters can be found by posting notices in supermarkets and pediatrician's offices and by contacting state, college and nursing school employment offices. Figure on paying at least the minimum wage of $3.35 an hour. Interview candidates carefully. Ask what the prospective sitter would do in specific situations. Demand recent references and check them carefully.

Group care outside the home falls into three categories — profit-making day care centers, nonprofit community centers and "family day care," in which a group of children are cared for by a women in her home.

Group care advantages include reliability, increased likelihood of trained teachers who can provide valuable stimulation, and the company of peers — an important factor in children older than 18 months.

Disadvantages include exposure to more people and therefore more chance of illness, and the difficulty in finding sitters when your child is ill.

Good day care also is hard to find — there are 8.5 million preschool children of working mothers in the United States and only 2 million licensed day care places.

The younger the child, the more expensive the care. For a full day, expect to pay from $50 to $150 a week, and even more for an infant 6 months or less. Nonprofit centers may cost less — some are excellent; some are not. Only personal investigation will reveal the difference.

Recommended adult-child day care ratios are one adult for every three infants or toddlers, one adult for every four 2- to 3-year-olds, and one adult for every eight children over 3. The age spread in each group should be no more than two years. Groups should include no more than six children per group up to age 2; for 2-3 years old, 12 per group, and 3-6 year olds, 16 per group.

If choosing family day care, be sure you get at least two references from other parents and draw up a written contract to avoid misunderstandings.

The best gauge for how well your day care setup is working, according to Redbook, is the child — watch for changes in mood and behavior, listlessness or withdrawal, or reluctance to go to the day care center. If all is well, don't feel guilty. Dr. Jay Belsky, associate professor of human development at Pennsylvania State University, offered this reassurance:

"We know that when the staff ratios are reasonable, when the groups of children are not too large, and when the caregivers are well-trained and attentive to the children, the kids do fine. The outcome is strikingly consistent with what we know about the development of kids raised at home."

Sylvia Barnhill Marries Charlie Evans Jr. Saturday

The New Hope Holiness Church in Parmele was the scene of the wedding ceremony of Sylvia Barnhill and Charlie Evans Jr. Saturday at 2 o'clock in the afternoon. Bishop B.R. Barnhill and Eldress Maxine Barnhill performed the double ring ceremony.

A program of nuptial music was presented by Jimmy Barnhill, cousin of the bride. Soloists were Vanessa Barnhill, Thelma Hooks, Jessie Jones and Mary Joyner who sang "You and I," "You Brought Joy to Me," "The Lord's Prayer," "We've Only Just Begun," and "To God Be the Glory."

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Boston Vines of Greenville. The bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Charlie Evans Sr. of Greenville.

The bride was given in marriage by her parents and escorted to the altar by her brother, Johnnie Barnhill. She wore a formal gown of white silkened organza over peau de soie designed with an open Queen Anne neckline outlined in embroidered chantilly lace. The fitted bodice was overlaid in lace appliques beaded with pearls. Matching lace also accentuated the long full bishop styled sleeves. The full skirt and attached chapel length train were bordered at the hemline in an inverted V-shaped panel outlined in the scalloped embroidered lace. Matching lace extended from the waistline the entire length of the train. She wore a Juliet headpiece trimmed in chantilly lace. The walking length veil was of imported illusion edged in the chantilly lace. She carried a cascade bouquet of all white orchids, tulips and miniature carnations tied with tips of springerii and baby's breath on a shower of white satin streamers.

Rosalyn Highsmith of Greensboro was matron of honor. She wore a formal gown of ivory satin designed with an open sweetheart neckline accented with tucks of satin emphasizing the mock wrap effect. Rolled satin rosettes trimmed the bodice front. The gown was fashioned with elbow length French puff sleeves and a gathered skirt. She wore a headpiece of cloche illusion and carried a nosegay of Chinese red tulips, pixie carnations and baby's breath tied with satin with long streamers.

Bridesmaids were Lucille Vines and Robin Boyd, sister of the bride, Gloristena Barnhill and Brenda Barnhill, cousins of the bride, Sharon Barnhill, sister-in-law of the bride, Lorraine Edwards, Valene White, Lois Barrett and Robin Strong. They wore gowns and headpieces styled identically to that of the honor attendant in Chinese red. Each carried nosegays identical to that of the honor attendent.

The flower girls were Delaney and Dasha Vines, nieces of the bride. They wore white dresses of sheer chiffon with short ruffled sleeves. Layers of gathered lace accented the skirt from waist to hemline with a sash tied at the back waistline. They carried white woven baskets filled with Chinese red and white petals tied with valeria satin.

Donald Evans was best man and groomsmen were Willie and James Evans, brothers of the bridegroom, Terry Lee Moore, cousin of the bride, Linzy Blount Jr., cousin of the bridegroom, Stewart Vines, Joseph Barnhill and Allen Vines, brothers of the bride, David Earl Barnes and Jerry Edwards.

The ring bearer was Kico Vines, brother of the bride. He carried a white satin pillow with a spray of flowers tied with satin.

The mother of the bride wore a formal gown of dusty rose lustreglo designed with an open V neckline. She wore a cymbidium orchid. The mother of the bridegroom wore an emsmeble in coordinating colors with matching headpiece. She wore an orchid.

The wedding was directed by Rosa L. Harris of Greenville.

A reception was given by the parents of the bride in the fellowship hall of the church. Barbara Dupree presided at the guest register. Rosa L. Harris announced the wedding party. Punch was served by Doris Hansley after the traditional slice of the wedding cake was cut by the bridal couple. The cake was served by Ruby Taylor. Also assisting in serving was George Joyner.

After a wedding trip to unannounced points the couple will reside in Greenville.

The bride is a graduate of J.H. Rose High School and attended Pitt Community College. She is presently employed by Pitt County Memorial Hospital. The bridegroom is a graduate of C.M. Eppes High School. He also attended Pitt Community College and graduated from North Carolina Central University. He is presently employed at Procter and Gamble.

The parents of the bridegroom entertained at an after-rehearsal dinner in the fellowship hall of the church. Several showers were given for the bridal couple prior to their wedding.

On The Young Side

By CLAY DEANHARDT

Each year a student from Rose High is picked to be Greenville's Community Ambassador. This ambassador is sent to the country of his choice for a four-week homestay as a representative of the city. Upon returning he is responsible for making presentations to civic organizations, school clubs and other groups that help to sponsor his trip.

This year's choice for the honor is Judd Owen, a junior at Rose. He plans to visit French speaking Switzerland this summer.

Mary Helen Allen has won a Presidential Scholarship to Queens College in Charlotte. This is the highest award given to incoming freshmen and it is renewable for all four years of college. The award is valued at about $20,000 in total payments.

A math team from Rose recently took a trip to compete in Wilmington and they returned home with the first place award. Clay Deanhardt placed second in the invididual category and Cate Shappley placed third. Both will advance to the state math contest in May. Kevin Hewett placed sixth to round out Rose's top places. Other team members included Charles Moore and Christy Garrison.

Unfortunately the Rose Quiz Bowl team did not fare as well as the math team did. The team lost to Eastern Wayne in the semi-final round to miss returning to the state finals by one game. Eastern Wayne eventually won the district competition and they will advance along with second place Greenfield Academy to the state finals April 27 in Raleigh.

The North Carolina Scholar's Program was initiated last year as a means of recognizing students with good grades in a well rounded curriculum. Courses must be taken in all academic areas on advanced levels as well as vocational and art courses. Students awarded this distinction receive an extra seal on their diplomas signifying their accomplishments.

This year Rose will have 13 students to receive this distinction upon graduation including Valerie Chambliss, Ginny Close, Clay Deanhardt, Kara Deyton, Amy Dohm, David Ely, Ginger Galloway, Kevin Kewett, Mary Jon May, Alicia Speight, Babbi Stanley, Amy VanScoy and Rocky Ziehr.

At Wit's End

By Erma Bombeck

I was always intrigued by the story about the 71-yearold woman who, a few years ago, had her son and his family legally removed from her home.

In the suit she stated that her 34-year-old son, his girlfriend and her four children said the stay would be temporary until they could find a suitable house, but it had been over five months and they were still there. In her words, she felt "like a prisoner in my own home."

Then there was the story of the 71-year-old man who had lived with his mother all of his life and she still cooked him three meals a day. His mother was 94.

There are a lot of stories like that, giving new meaning to the phrase, "Latch-Key Children." Many latch-key kids are full-grown adults who cannot bear to turn in a key that brought them so much security, so much love, an open refrigerator door and a washer and dryer without a slot for quarters. But something strange happens to older latch-key children from the moment their keys turn in the lock. They become half adult/half child again.

They are old enough to receive mail. They are too young to toss it in the wastebasket when they don't want it. They are tall enough to reach the milk on the top shelf of the refrigerator. They are too short to put it back so they leave it by the sink. They are old enough to turn off your VCR tape and turn on MTV, but they are too young to turn it back on again. They are old enough to entertain. They are too young to write a check.

The child in them eats and walks away from the table. The adult in them comes in after 3 in the morning. The child in them still leaves wet towels on the bed. The adult in them says they had to grab a flight to St. Louis and were late.

Parents too get confused over their roles. When they wash your socks, drop off your cleaning, loan you their shampoo and take your telephone messages, they figure it gives them rights. It gives them the right to tell you how to lead your life, pick your friends, how to dress and what kind of a car to buy.

Like most parents, we've made the "Mommy-and-Daddy-love-you-very-much-and-cannot-imagine-life-without-you-but-when-are-you-checking-out" speech. But it never got to the point of legal litigation. We just started buying blue milk and seven grain natural bread and they left of their own free will.

Other parents still fight the battle of the adult latch-key child. This letter is from a 65-year-old widowed mother in Portland, Ore.

"I have one heck of a time finding a companion because if I set up a romantic setting, dinner, soft music, house spotless, waiting anxiously and with hopes, in pops one of the boys with, 'Hi, Mom, what smells good? Can I take a shower?' Oh, hell!"

Dear Abby — By Abigail Van Buren

Never Leave Children Alone In Public

DEAR ABBY: My sons, 7 and 5 years old, are asked occasionally to a movie by our next-door neighbor—who has a 6-year-old boy.

I just learned that on one occasion the neighbor took her son to the bathroom, leaving my sons alone in the theater. And another time, she sent my two boys to the bathroom alone, while she sat with her son watching the movie.

Our boys are aware that children their age have been molested and some have been kidnapped, so naturally they were frightened, but didn't want to complain.

Abby, please urge parents to question how situations will be handled before sending their children with others.

LEARNING

DEAR LEARNING: You make a very good point—one that many parents would not think of questioning, and they should.

I hope you mentioned this to your neighbor. She needs to be reminded that children should never be left alone in a public place—even for a few minutes.

* * *

DEAR ABBY: I've been married for 22 years. I've been pregnant 14 times and have nine living children. I weighed 98 pounds when we were married. My husband likes little women. He often told me that if I ever got as fat as his sister-in-law, he'd divorce me. (She weighs about 300 pounds.)

My first complaint is that this man likes sex. I like it too, but once a night is enough for me. (Not for him.) He does not allow me to use any kind of birth control—says he never has and never will.

I'm a God-fearing woman. I go to church and pray and pray at home, too, but the Lord doesn't hear my prayers. I got so fed up with my man's demands and abusive ways I started to gain weight on purpose so he would divorce me. I'm up to 207 pounds, and I still can't get rid of him.

Now what do I do? He makes good money, but he's as tight as a size 9 shoe on a size 12 foot. Help me.

SICK OF HIM IN MISSOURI

DEAR SICK: You're right, you do not have to put up with this kind of treatment. (No woman does.) You need more than prayer to solve your problem. If your minister can't do something about it, see a lawyer.

* * *

DEAR ABBY: My 20-year-old daughter is a lesbian, and I am having a tough time dealing with this. I have no one to talk to about this as she asked me not to tell her father.

I love my daughter and want her to be happy, but I worry about her future.

Also, is it possible to have two homosexuals in one family? I'm beginning to wonder about my 15-year-old son, too.

WORRIED MOM

DEAR MOM: You sound like a very loving and understanding mother. Your daughter is lucky to have a mother like you. Send a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to: Parents Flag, P.O. Box 24565, Los Angeles, Calif. 90024. They will provide you with literature that will better equip you to handle this problem.

Yes, it's possible to have two homosexuals in the family.

DEAR ABBY: In a recent column was a letter from a hurt grandmother whose grandchildren never acknowledged her gifts. Advice was offered from another reader to "gift" those grandchildren with an unsigned check the next time.

Abby, several years ago you ran a letter from a mother who offered wiser advice regarding the same problem. She said that when her children received a gift, she would not allow them to play with it, eat it, read it, wear it, spend it or bank it until they had written a thank-you letter. She said she would guide the hands of the little ones who were too small to write themselves. And this is how her children formed a valuable lifelong habit.

I am another grandmother who has been hurt many times when gifts I have sent with love were never acknowledged.

Check Gas Appliances

ST. PAUL, Minn. (UPI) — The U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission is urging owners of liquid petroleum (LP) heating systems to have a specialist check the controls on their units to prevent potential fires or explosions.

They suggest that people using LP gas furnaces, heaters or water heaters in their homes or businesses have their LP supplier, or Honeywell Inc., check the on-off gas controls on their unit.

This warning, they note, pertains only to controls on LP gas appliances, and has nothing to do with natural gas appliances.

Fun And Games In Ready-To-Wear

By SUZY PATTERSON
AP Fashion Writer

PARIS (AP) — There were some fun and games today in the winter ready-to-wear outfits shown at Chloe and Bernard Perris, while Jean-Louis Scherrer went out for severe classics in dark paisleys in a collection more glum than fanciful.

Since Karl Lagerfeld left Chloe over a year ago, the house has shown clothes designed by a committee. This year designers include Guy Paulin of France, an Irishman named Peter O'Brien and Italian stylist Luciano Soprani.

"We don't want just one star designer," said Gaby Aghion, one of Chloe's managers.

As is likely with group work, there was no strong creative personality evident in the show. But there were some lively ideas anyway, especially for daytime.

Some outfits were combinations of lighthearted layers in bright colors. The bright long or swirling shortie coats were good, especially in ochre or siren red. And a strong theme of flecked tweed combined with bright leather — say in green, in a short, narrow skirt — could be a winner.

The silk jersey shirtdresses were decorated with some appliqued spangled patterns, though sometimes this look suggests vulgarity. Otherwise the long navy pleated clerical dresses had a certain sober chic, especially when decorated with enormous strands of chunky crystals for belts or necklaces.

Some French film stars and countesses applauded Bernard Perris for his original ideas. His bright two-colored corolla jackets over many lengths of skirts and trousers made a hit, especially when topped with puffy and colorful vests of Mongolian lamb.

Not cheap but pretty, the mink or ermine shortie coats dyed indigo blue were edged with fox. Perris also used lacquered satin well in ample duffle-style long jackets. His handsomely pleated knit mini sweater-dresses with wide wrapped collars have a lot going for them, and he too dips into the priest's wardrobe for an excellent cleric look with a bouncy pleated bolero.

Naples Celebrating Golden Age In Art

By KEVIN COSTELLOE
Associated Press Writer

NAPLES, Italy (AP) — This city of songs, while coping with urban poverty after surviving plague, rebellion and the 1980 earthquake, is celebrating its 17th century Golden Age of art to revive interest in its rich past.

"The 17th Century Civilization in Naples," set in a former royal palace that now is a museum overlooking this bay city, includes a dazzling array of more than 300 paintings. Naples also is getting ready to pay homage to one of the most famous artists to live here when it puts on the Caravaggio show now at New York's Metropolitan Museum of Art.

"It's not true that Neapolitans are turned off by these types of shows," says Giuseppe Castaldo, head of the city's tourism office.

"We have a duty to make known our works of art — and I don't just mean paintings, but also castles, palaces, churches and monasteries — to an ever greater number of Italian and foreign visitors."

Officially, 363,000 people are registered as unemployed, but a thriving underground economy, plus the failure of people to report a new job and chaotic bookkeeping, make the exact number of people out of steady work impossible to determine.

Four mayors have come and gone in 13 months, while police continue to battle warring factions of mobsters seeking control of contraband and drug supplies.

Bandits routinely hit the art treasures in the city churches, prompting police to form special squads to protect the vulnerable sites.

Speaking of the need to revive interest in the city's past as a hopeful sign for the future, he added: "We must convince Neapolitans that, above all, the city is theirs."

"Scugnizzi," the street children, roam the city, turning a sleight of hand and a good idea into quick profit.

Yet, city officials anxious to promote their past have organized a series of art exhibits to relive Naples' glory in the 17th century when, with 350,000 residents, it was the second city in Europe after Paris.

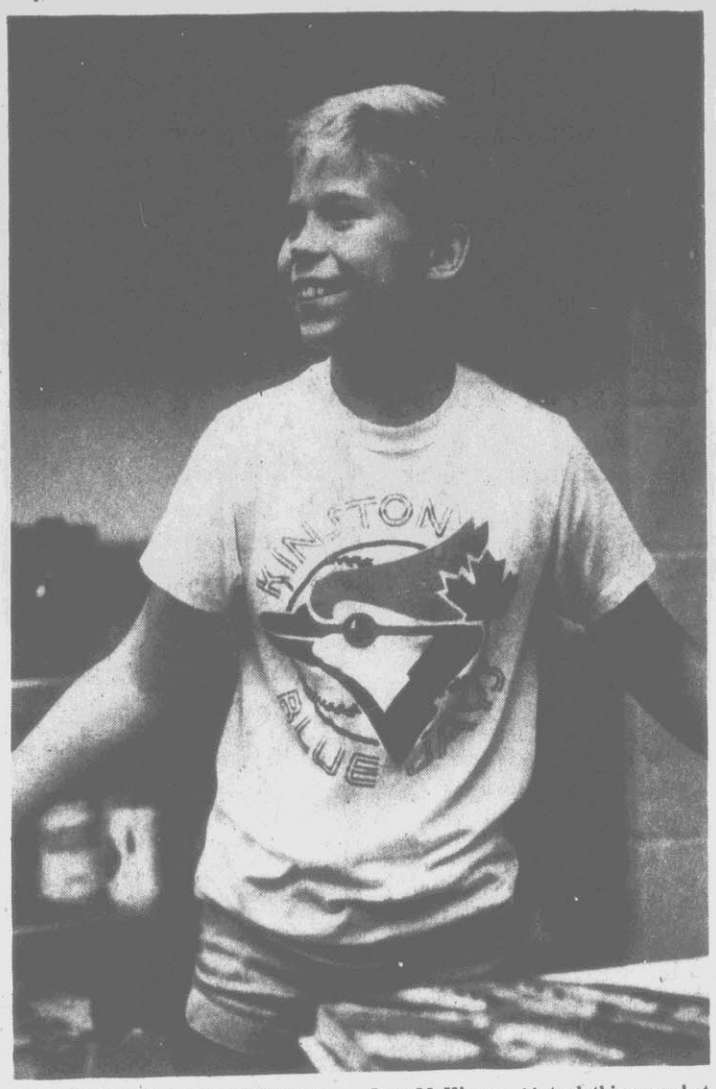

The time, known in Italian as the "seicento," also found some of Europe's finest painters and sculptors in Naples.

The 17th century show includes more than 300 works by dozens of painters, including Caravaggio. Also included are 200 objects of decorative art, 78 drawings and some 30 pieces of sculpture. Other parts, including a still-life exhibit, are scattered throughout the city.

Sprinkled among the luminous religious paintings and imposing metal sculptures are stark depictions of the dramatic events that also hit the city in the 17th century: the plague that wiped out a third of the population in 1656, and the ill-fated 1647 rebellion against the Spanish. Naples had been under Spanish rule since the 15th century.

While the show will close April 14, Naples already is gearing up for the "Age of Caravaggio" now drawing thousands of visitors a day to the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York. The show will run in Naples from May 8 to June 30.

Caravaggio, who pioneered the dramatic use of large areas of lights and darks known as "chiaroscuro" and bold dramatic gestures, fled Rome in 1606 after killing a man in a duel. He made two important stays in Naples during the last four years of his life.

PORTRAIT OF A KID BROTHER . . . Joey McKinney, 14, took this snapshot of his 12-year old brother, Jeff McKinney as "the artist," including a dab of paint on the tip of his nose. This picture won for Joey the Pitt-Greenville Boys Club award as Club Champion and a Kodak Club Award Medallion. The photographer and his subject are sons of Mr. and Mrs. Steve McKinney.

Author Charles Monagan Claims Humorists Get Shortchanged

By STEVE FEICA
Associated Press Writer

WOLCOTT, Conn. (AP) — In the literary pecking order, humorists get shortchanged. So says Charles A. Monagan, an author who likes to think that writing funny is serious business.

HUMOR WRITER...Author Charles A. Monagan was photographed in his Wolcott, Conn. home-office where he writes his slim humor books. (AP Laserphoto by Adrian Keating)

"I know that humor writers — and I'm not saying this selfishly or because I don't think I've been treated improperly or anything like that — but I think, in general, humor writers in this country are not accorded the respect that they ought to receive," he said.

"When people get together to hand out awards, they usually take themselves much more seriously than they should, and I think humorists and humor sort of get left in the dust," said Monagan, whose recent book is "The Reluctant Naturalist" (Atheneum, $10.95).

The 35-year-old Monagan, a native of nearby Waterbury, has spent many working hours in his Wolcott condominium looking through a large picture window that faces a sloping hill dotted with trees, shrubs and rocks.

"This was a great book for me to do because whenever I write, I spend a lot of time staring out the window and, in this case, staring out the window could be construed as doing research," he said.

His book is a field guide for the study of nature within the household, within the neighborhood and reluctantly, for a foray into the not-too-deep woods. But, as he says in his book, it is different from similar books: "This guide is for the far greater number of people who are convinced that nature is pursuing them."

He has warned that the primary objective of all natural creatures is to reproduce and "when they pause to take a breather, however, they like to pursue their secondary objective, which is to get into the house."

The Dartmouth graduate's career as a writer of humor came after stints as a newspaper reporter, magazine editor and author of magazine articles.

He likes what he does now and thinks it's "a respectable pursuit," but acknowledges that there are different perceptions of what is funny and what is humorous.

"The humor written in the country is pretty good. I think there are a lot of things that are not writing that pass as books," he said in referring to volumes by celebrities such as Joan Rivers or George Burns.

"They might be funny, but they're stand-up comedians, you know. It grinds me to see their books doing so well when you open them up they're just a series of one-liners, really."

He says his own style resembles that of Robert Benchley, an author of 14 books who dealt with off-the-wall observations about everyday experiences. Monagan says Benchley's material is a bit dated, but a writer such as James Thurber holds up much better over time.

Monagan, who also wrote "The Neurotic's Handbook" and collaborated on "Poodles From Hell," would like to write material other than slim books of humor. He has been researching areas of nonfiction including U.S. Route 1, which he would treat as a river because it's "the ancient roadway and it's got a wonderful history."

Does that mean "serious" writing is in the offing?

"I hate to use the word serious, because it denotes a high purpose," he said in an interview. "There's no more serious work than writing humor as far as I'm concerned."

Monagan is moving out of his rustic home in a wooded area of central Connecticut into a decades-old Tudor home in Waterbury, but there's reluctance to say farewell to his backyard woods.

"These are extensive woods that go up here and in the back, and I've spent a fair amount of time in them, usually with very little benefit and usually illness or fatigue resulting," he said.

But seriously, folks.

"You know you can't really go out here at any time of the year. I can't, anyway," he quipped.

Book News

From Sheppard Memorial Library

By Willie Mae Gibbs

The library makes available a variety of guidebooks on subjects of interest to its readers. Recent additions include three that offer a wealth of information.

"An Older Woman's Health Guide" carries an important message to women over 65 whose physical and mental health problems have seldom been considered separate from their male counterparts, and have largely been neglected. This book dispels the stereotypes society has assigned to elderly women, as it focuses on showing them how to be as well as they can be, and much better than they dreamed possible, through exercise, diet, and sound living practices. In this book Joan Mintz and the three authors who collaborated with her deal with life and health, not sickness and death, as they carefully analyze social and family relationships, educational and employment opportunities, legal resources, money management, and, of course, health care in relation to elderly women. The accessible and straightforward knowledge presented in this book is an answer to the increasingly apparent need to insure that older women, who represent the majority of people over 65 in the United States, live these vital years with as much meaning as the first twenty.

Penelope Leach, an authority on child care, has written a comprehensive guide for parents of children from birth to adolescence. In "The Child Care Encyclopedia" she discusses practically every problem a parent can face, and provides advice that reflects the practice of leading medical authorities, as well as her own expertise and experience as a child psychologist, and her understanding and sensitivity to the needs of parents and children. The A to Z format of this book makes it easy to find answers to questions that arise, and thereby enables parents to act calmly, efficiently, and confidently in caring for the health and emotional well-being of their children.

In "Consumer Advisor," the editors of Reader's Digest have provided a guide to help the consumer get extra mileage out of his hard earned dollars in every area in which money is spent. Basically this is a how-to book that tells how to save money, how to protect yourself in the marketplace, how to fight back — and win — when your rights have been abused. The expert advice and timely warnings of pitfalls from victims will make informed, prudent buyers of those who use "Consumer Advisor."

Writers Will Meet Tuesday

The second meeting in March of members of the Greenville Writers Club will be held at 8 p.m. Tuesday, March 26 at the home of Ann Tiernan, Apartment 78, Greenway Apartments, just off the Country Club Drive.

All persons interested in any form of creative writing are invited to attend the twice-monthly meetings of the club held at various homes on the second and fourth Tuesday evenings of each month.

Russia Spending Millions To Restore Catherine's Royal Palace

SWALLOWS RETURN — A young girl attempts to feed the birds outside the old Mission at San Juan Capistrano on Tuesday as the faithful birds made their annual return from Mexico to the California mission a short distance south of Los Angeles. (AP Laserphoto)

By CAROL J. WILLIAMS
Associated Press Writer

PUSHKIN, U.S.S.R. (AP) — Millions of rubles and nearly 30 years of work have been invested to restore Catherine's Palace, a rare reminder of the lifestyle enjoyed by the Russian nobility before the 1917 revolution overthrew czarist rule.

Pillaged and burned by the Nazis during World War II, the palace has been restored to its former grandeur "because it is a monument to our art history, culture and architecture," a guide explained during a recent visit to the sprawling estate.

Visitors are reminded that the renovation of this monument of imperial splendor would have the approval of the founder of the Soviet state: a silhouette of Vladimir I. Lenin hangs over a doorway to the great hall next to his words that "beauty must be preserved."

The garish opulence of the gold onion domes and the priceless artworks beneath speak of a time when the ruling elite romped through this country playground then known as Tsarskoye Selo — the czar's village.

Craftsmen have re-created the intricate wood parquet floors, wall tapestries and hand-painted fireplace tiles, and a handful of the exhibition rooms again hold their original artworks.

More than 100 paintings by 17th- and 18th-century Dutch, French, Flemish and Italian artists were evacuated from the palace by Soviets as the Nazis approached in 1941, and hidden during the occupation.

The amber room is one of several still under restoration and one of the legends of the palace most often extolled by tour guides and literature about the village.

Carved plates of Baltic amber were "purchased" by Peter the Great from the King of Prussia in 1716 in exchange for 248 soldiers. The panels were transported to the imperial capital of St. Petersburg, then to the royal family's estate at Tsarskoye Selo.

The panels were stolen from the palace during World War II and have never been found.

Guides at the palace said research was under way to create new amber panels for the room, which has been partially restored and adorned with amber carvings, mosaics and jewels.

Bitterness over the Nazi occupation and the damage done to Pushkin's cultural treasures during the war lingers heavily in the estate, just 15 miles from the "hero city" of Leningrad, where many thousands died of famine and disease in a 900-day Nazi blockade.

In nearly every exhibition room, placards display photographs of how each room looked when the Nazis were driven out in January 1944. They explain how the restoration has progressed and boast of the people's triumph over the destruction left in the war's wake.

The guided commentary refers often to the "fascist plunder" of the palace and the efforts of the socialist government to rectify the damage to the historical showcase.

The palace was first completed in 1724 on farmland Peter the Great had given to his wife, the future Empress Catherine I.

Renovations and additions were made frequently until 1752, when Catherine the Great commissioned Italian architect Bartolomeo Rastrelli to launch a full-scale rebuilding of the estate.

Furnishings and art objects from throughout the world were collected and brought to the palace, and renovations continued through the middle of the 19th century.

In 1811, the Lyceum opened in the village as a school for children of the nobility. Among the first group of 30 boys was Alexander Pushkin, later to become Russia's most renown poet. Pushkin lived in Tsarskoye Selo for six years and captured the life of the village in later verses. Statues and plaques honoring the poet are scattered throughout the grounds of the estate.

Crackdown On Gifts

By CONNOISSEUR
A Hearst Magazine

In art it is no longer more profitable to give than to receive because the IRS is cracking down on the hefty tax break art donors have been getting for years.

The crackdown comes after what many experts say has been a period of rampant overvaluation of art, according to an article in the March issue of Connoisseur, and includes stiffer penalties for overvaluation and stricter control of appraisals.

Tax deductions for art donations to museums have been under attack since they were first allowed in 1917. In 1983 a panel of IRS art advisers found that 52 percent of the pieces it examined had been overvalued.

The panel found they had been overvalued by an average 671 percent.

Most appraisers agree privately that evaluators feel pressure to keep donors happy with their evaluations.

"Art dealers who make appraisals want them because it means more sales," said William Speiller, a former IRS attorney who for many years was a professor at Rutgers University Law School.

Valuations are made, not on the price paid for a piece, but on its "fair market value."

"Everyone is cheating," Speiller siad. "It's just a question of how much."

For museums, the big question is whether the crackdown will cut off a major source of acquisitions. Lawrence Reger, director of the American Association of Museums, predicts that "those who give because they care about the community will continue to give."

He concedes some donations will be lost.

"Even for most honest donors the tax advantage in giving is very, very important," he said. "Some people will look at the increased penalties and say, 'Oh, I'll not take the chance,' and sell instead."

He added that on balance he thinks the new rules are reasonable and will help cut down on the most obvious abuses.

The new law, in effect for donations made after Jan. 1, 1985, requires written appraisals of pieces valued at more than $5,000.

Returns being audited show gifts valued at $20,000 or more are automatically assigned to the IRS art valuation group in Washington. Its permanent staff of five is augmented by an unpaid panel of experts. Ten new experts were added this year to the 12-member panel.

In cases of overvaluation, the IRS will impose a 30 percent penalty on taxpayers whose donations are overvalued by more than 50 percent — triple the old penalty.

Claims for donated objects valued at more than $5,000 must be documented on an IRS form and signed by a person who certifies that he or she is a "qualified appraiser."

The IRS will impose a penalty on appraiser as well as taxpayer in cases of overvaluation, and can bar appraisers who have made several missteps from further evaluation for tax purposes.

One thing that has not changed under the new law, according to Connoisseur, is the taxpayer's right to appeal — and to bargain with the IRS, which often will negotiate a compromise.

Archaeological Team To Probe Stone Tools Of American Indians

By RON HARRIST
Associated Press Writer

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — An archaeological team will visit the rural hills of northeast Mississippi this summer to probe the secrets of a prehistoric factory where Indians made stone tools long before the bow and arrow.

Continued erosion and vandalism threaten the area, which is located in the rugged hills which make up the west side of the Yellow Creek channel of Pickwick Lake.

Archaeologists believe that the site, near the northern end of the Tennessee-Tombigbee Waterway, was used periodically by early inhabitants to chip, beat and possibly fire-temper, pieces of stone into tools such as knives, spearheads and scrapers.

"We want to know what went on at these production sites — how they made their tools, when they made them and what was produced," explained Robert Thorne, head of the University of Mississippi's Archaeological Research Center. "We're talking about a site dating back from probably 5000 B.C. to 1500 B.C. This activity predates the Choctaw and Chickasaw indians."

The site is located in Tishomingo County on land owned and protected by the Tennessee Valley Authority. The team will be working in the area from June 3 to July 3.

"The main purpose of the work is educational," he said, "but the information that the students will recover will allow us to learn more about the people and their culture."

"Beginning in 1976, we worked on the east side of the Yellow Creek arm of Pickwick and we found major stone tool production sites," Thorne said. "But this area on the west side is completely removed from earlier excavation work."

Thorne said that the early Indians on the east side made their tools from chert (chips of rock) exposed on the rolling hillsides but those on the west side, because of the rugged terrain, were forced to collect gravel and stones from stream beds.

"The sites we will be examining are where the production sequence took place after the Indians went down to the gravel bars and creek beds and selected a piece of raw material" from which to make a tool, he said.

Thorne said the team, which will include 20 students, wants to determine if sites found about midway between the stream beds and the hills were only mid-range production points or whether the entire production process was carried out at that point.

"There is some evidence the material was heat-treated at these sites," he said. "We will be looking for pits where this heating process may have taken place."

The researchers expect to find primarily stone chips left from the production process, but "there is always the chance we may find a finished tool, either broken or lost" by one of the early craftsmen.

Thorne said the sites apparently were known to small groups of early Indians, possibly members of related families. He said probably male members of the groups would visit the area when the need for a new tool arose.

In addition to the historic value, Thorne said the research would offer the students "a better understanding of how we have arrived in the position we are in today.

"Once you recognize that the material you are taking out of the ground was actually produced by another human being, then your analysis and interpretation of what it represents takes on an entirely new meaning."

NCSU Archaeological Team Excavating Ancient Site In Jordan

By ROSALIND REID
NCSU News Bureau

An archaeological team based at North Carolina State Universtiy is working to save an important — and threatened — piece of the ancient heritage of the Middle East.

The fortress called el-Lejjun — a well-preserved, 11-acre relic of the waning days of the Roman Empire — is rich in historical treasures, among them a water-driven grain mill that may be the earliest of its kind ever found.

But another kind of treasure lies beneath Lejjun. Rich oil shale deposits have been discovered under the site, said Dr. S. Thomas Parker of NCSU, and the Jordanian government has conducted studies on the feasibility of exploiting them. Strip-mining techniques would be used to extract the material.

Parker, an assistant professor of history at NCSU, heads a team that has been excavating and studying Lejjun and nearby fortifications since 1980. The decade-long project aims to reconstruct the cultural, military and religious history of the Roman defensive frontier in Jordan.

Parker calls it "a race against time."

Thanks to rapid population and economic growth, he said, "archaeological sites in Jordan, as elsewhere, are being lost every day.

"We are trying to identify all sites (on the frontier) and come up with a plan to choose those important sites that can be saved," he said.

Parker and colleagues from nine other institutions launched the Central Limes Arabicus Project in 1980 with major funding from the National Endowment for the Humanities. Additional support has come from the NCSU Foundation, the Dumbarton Oaks Center for Byzantine Studies in Washington, D.C., the American Philosophical Society and the Jordanian Department of Antiquities.

This summer will mark the third season the multidisciplinarty faculty team, students and local laborers will excavate and survey the sites.

"Limes Arabicus" was the Latin name for the fortified frontier that extended north from the Red Sea to the Syrian border from the second to seventh centuries A.D. That time frame is crucial to understanding the history of the Middle East, Parker said.

The Roman's decision to desert the frontier during a period of economic decline opened the way for the Islamic conquest of the Mediterranean region, he said. Lejjun itself was abandoned because of an earthquake in 551 A.D. — an event that conveniently sealed and preserved its contents for the archaeologists.

The abandonment "was a costly mistake, because in the sixth century the prophet Mohammed was born," Parker siad. "Through Islam, he was able to unify all the Arab tribes and launch a program of conquest."

The Roman frontier might have turned back Mohammed's westward-riding tribesmen, ill-equipped for laying siege, he said. Instead, the Moslem conquest was one of history's major turning points. Today, religious strife continues in a region dominated by Islam.

Lejjun shows evidence of an earlier religious change, Parker said. The massive fortress located east of the Dead Sea dates back to 300 A.D.

"Lejjun was built under the Emperor Diocletian, the last great persecutor of Christianity," he said. "The first soldiers must have been overwhelmingly pagan."

But inside, he added, there is a building which appears to be a church. Oil lamps bearing Christian crosses have been found. Further digging could provide evidence about the conversion process that must have occured, since Christianity was Rome's official religion by the time the fort was abandoned, he said.

This summer, Parker hopes to complete excavation of both the churchlike building and the "aedes," or shrine, that lies in the center of Lejjun. Uncovering the floor of the pagan shrine could solve one to the site's mysteries, he said — whether money lies buried in a vault beneath the fortress.

In most Roman forts of the period, a vault under the aedes served as a bank for safe deposit of the soldier's savings.

The first two seasons of excavation have uncovered a wealth of ancient artifacts, from waterwheels to the remnants of missle-type weapons and light-infantry armor. And an experiment in 1982 showed the team how Roman military communications might have worked.

The waterwheels, Parker said, were part of an elaborate spring-fed water system that included a dam and several grain mills. The most important discovery may have been an "overshot" mill, one powered by falling water rather than by a stream flowing under the wheel.

"We have an important contribution to the history of technology," Parker said. "The earliest overshot mill known has been dated in Gaul (present-day France) to the fifth century. Our mill may be dated to the fourth century."

Architectural details will be studied to date the device, he said.

The team's 1982 communications experiment involved a network of 14 ancient watchtowers in the Lejjun area that had been identified through site surveys.

Over a six-hour period, team members experimented with mirror, flag and torch signal, transmitting from one watchtower to another messages the Romans would have sent — warning of approaching raids by desert nomads.

The pinpoints of torchlight across the valley gave the team a firsthand experience of the lives of the soldiers whose tool, pots, weapons and bones they had found, Parder said.

Nomads were the traditional threat to settled Jordan, he noted. Fortresses such as Lejjun were highly successful at repelling them, allowing Jordan to experience a golden age of growth and tranquility.

Now new prosperity threatens the remnants of that golden age.

"We're really assisting the Jordanian government by sharing our expertise in preserving their cultural heritage," Parker said. "It's an important contribution N.C. State can make."

An Intriguing View Of Bees

THE QUEEN MUST DIE: And Other Affairs of Bees & Men. By William Longgood. Norton. 234 Pages. $12.95.

There could hardly be a more fascinating creature in all creation than the bee, and particularly the honeybee. But the more humans learn about bees the more mystified they become.

"Scientists believe that bees, next to humans, have the most elaborate social structure and specialization of labor in the animal kingdom," writes author William Longgood.

Indeed. And bee society still is beyond human comprehension in many, many ways.

In a honeybee society the individual doesn't count, except to perform specific tasks for the good of all. Bees ruthlessly destroy any that cannot serve, even their queen, because of age, injury or laziness.

A hive is a female society, headed by a queen. Females do all the work of gathering nectar and pollen, housekeeping, tending young, serving as honeycomb construction engineers and making endless decisions.

They decide when to create a new queen and how many drones to produce. Queens and drones, the males, are developed from special diets. The drones live a lush life of total indolence. They do nothing but eat and loll around — until time to fertilize a new queen. One or more then succeeds in a high-flying sex fling. Consummation kills them.

Queens do nothing but lay eggs, often as many as 2,000 a day. They are constantly fed, cleaned and loved — as long as they produce.

There are literally thousands of other nuances of bee life: communication, navigation, hive operation, disaster action and human relations.

This is no dull, pedantic, scientific book. It is a lively, loving account of what seems to be known about bee life and the countless things still left to know. In many ways bees seem to be more intelligent than humans. Why?

Any reader should find this book utterly enthralling.

Australian Band Finds American Fans Waiting For Them

By JUDY CANTOR
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — They came from Sydney, Australia, to make their mark in the United States. But when they got here, the Eurogliders discovered they had already arrived.

"It's just like playing back home," said lead singer Grace Knight, resting up in her hotel room before doing a sold-out show at The Ritz. "It's been a real buzz — people right at the front of the stage singing songs on the album that we don't expect them to know."

The Eurogliders' arrival for the first few gigs of a three-month tour was preceded by the release of the album, "This Island." The six-member band was introduced to American audiences with "Heaven," a single given wide radio play after its release in the fall.

Their sound emphasizes Bernie Lynch's strong lyric writing abilities and music that steers clear of the relentless, driving beat of electronic "electropop." And the songs are infectious, encouraging the listener to sing along. This sound and Miss Knight's strong, soulful voice have prompted comparisons to Fleetwood Mac.

But Miss Knight calls that a "wimpy comparison," insisting it is only the media's temptation to "pigeonhole a band."

They are a band that "appeals to a really wide range of people," she said, noting that they have performed to audiences as young as 6 years old during "children's tours" in Australia.

A large part of Eurogliders' appeal is Miss Knight herself. She had just awakened and dashed to an interview, but her eyes sparkled. And she has the well-toned body of an aerobics instructor. Her hair was tied up with a mass of ribbons and topped with a man's fedora.

As she talked over a salad about the group and her work, she seemed to have trouble sitting still. In concert, she holds back nothing. She jumps off scaffolding, climbs around and dances with endless energy while singing. The other members of the band solidly back her, but they are the musicians. Miss Knight is pure performer.

However, she protested in her husky voice — a reminder of her former cigarette habit, she is "the showoff but not the star."

She said they are "six people with different tastes" who lend their own interpretation to Lynch's songs. This she calls the "mishmosh of Eurogliders."

A native of Scotland, Miss Knight launched her singing career while sailing from England to Perth, Australia.She was on her way to visit her sister, and found she could work her passage on the ship as a singer. Though she had no professional singing experience, she gave it a try.

"I thought yeah, I can sing. It was only a half hour a day," she said.

Once in Perth, she sang in a cabaret band. Then, in 1980, she met Bernie Lynch, keyboards player Amanda Vincent, guitarist Crispin Akerman and drummer John Bennets. Bassist Ron Francois joined the band just last year in London. The band members, who now live in Sydney, are "50 percent Australian and 50 percent British."

Eurogliders were somewhat of an oddity in Perth, an isolated city nearly 3,000 miles west of Sydney, because they performed original songs rather than covers — their versions of others' hits.

GRACE KNIGHT

"There are good musicians there, and hundreds of venues, more than anywhere else in Australia. I don't know whether it's the band or the public. They just find it very hard to listen to original music," Miss Knight said.

Eurogliders went against the trend, and made a place for themselves playing practically all originals. Their success on the Perth club circuit resulted in a contract with Polygram Records and their first LP, "Pink Suit, Blue Day." They later switched to the CBS label and recorded "This Island."

Red-haired Lynch writes all the songs for the band. Despite an upbeat sound, most deal with serious social issues, such as abortion and nuclear war.

"Basically, all our songs are very social," said Miss Knight. "They're quite sad but very well disguised with a dance beat and rhythm. ... It's sort of disguised on purpose. You have to read between the lines."

She said this is true even for the name of the album. "'This Island' doesn't mean Australia, it doesn't mean Australia or the world. It means in here," Miss Knight said thumping her chest.

After next month, the band will return to Sydney to record their next album. Miss Knight predicts it "will be really different," and she hopes it will capture more of the group's live sound — less-polished and "dirtier" — which she said is the true Eurogliders' sound.

Meanwhile, the Eurogliders' tour is, well, gliding along.

"It's fantastic. It's really good fun, cause they're giving it back," said Miss Knight.

Morita Finally Succeeds

By FREDERICK H. KATAYAMA
Associated Press Writer

TOKYO (AP) — Actor Noriyuki "Pat" Morita dropped out of college as a pre-med student, dabbled in computers and corporate life and gave it all up for comedy.

"I had no degree, no possibility of further advancement, I was overweight and pushing 30," said the 53-year-old actor who's been nominated for an Academy Award as best supporting actor for his role of Mr. Miyagi in "The Karate Kid."

Morita's career has been a rocky one, and he credits "positive thinking" with helping him to stick it out. He skyrocketed to fame with his portrayal of Arnold, the happy-go-lucky proprietor of the drive-in restaurant in "Happy Days," the hit 1970s' TV series.

That led to appearances on talk shows and a starring role in "Mr. T. and Tina." When the TV series was axed after four episodes, he slipped into obscurity.Or, as Morita puts it, "I went back to square one."

Morita grew up a Nisei, or second generation American of Japanese ancestry. The son of itinerant fruit pickers in northern California, he spent most of his childhood in hospitals, suffering from spinal tuberculosis.

When he was finally able to walk at age 11, his movement was restricted in a different way: He was surrounded by barbed wire, along with 120,000 other Japanese-Americans who were interned in relocation camps during World War II.The detention of all people of Japanese descent had been ordered by President Franklin D. Roosevelt 10 weeks after Japan's surprise attack on Pearl Harbor on Dec. 7, 1941.

After college and corporate life, Morita spent eight years on the club circuit in southern California. Then he began supporting himself by doing commercials and character roles on television, eventually snaring his role on "Happy Days."

All went well until the series ended.

"My world really dropped out from under me in 1980," he recalled in a recent interview in Tokyo, where he was promoting his latest film. A mudslide destroyed his house, his mother-in-law died and a five-month actors' strike left him "devastated."

That's when he began using positive thinking to keep him going. "Every time I began to despair ... something would always break," he said. "Everytime I bounce back, I always seem to bounce back a little bit higher. This time, I really hit the top of the yama (mountain)."

He fled to Hawaii to recover his "spiritual and emotional self" and in 1983, "along came 'The Karate Kid,' and the rest is history."

In the film, which concerns a youth's revenge on his tormentors, Miyagi teaches karate to Daniel, played by Ralph Macchio, after the boy acquires spiritual maturity to understand that fighting is the last answer to any problem.

Morita, who lives in Tarzana, a Los Angeles suburb, with his wife and two daughters, said he would eventually like to become a writer or producer. Themes that bridge the gap between East and West intrigue him, he said.

. . . Medicine in the days of the Civil War is explained and demonstrated by two encampment specialists — Dr. Mickey Lund, a surgeon from Anderson, S.C., (black vest, white shirt), and Susan Bartulis of Gastonia, as a Civil War nurse. The two tell listeners about the primitive conditions of medicine and surgery in Civil War days that resulted in intense suffering and a high death rate among those wounded.

. . . Two uniform styles are seen in those worn by Cliff Tyndall, left, and Mark Honeycutt, right. Tyndall portrays a lieutenant of the 38th Indiana Regiment and wears a stylish black hat and an elegant cape coat. Program coordinator at the Bentonville Battleground Historic Site, he is a graduate of East Carolina University with a master's degree in history. Honeycutt, in full gear including backpack and his weapon, a London Tower Enfield rifle, is a student at Faith Christian Academy, Goldsboro.

Volunteers recreate a fascinating segment of North Carolina history

120th Anniversary Of The Battle At Bentonville Battleground

. . . Bearded participant Lyle Bishop of Triplett, a small North Carolina mountain town, has the role of the first sergeant of the 58th Infantry. Here, Bishop, seated in front of the turpentine shack, makes out a duty roster. He is a veteran of Civil War encampments.

Text And Photographs By Jerry Raynor

The most admirable aspect of encampments or re-enactments of Civil War battles in North Carolina is the obvious devotion participants have for the roles they play in these events.

Cliff Tyndall, program director at Bentonville Battleground Historic Site near Newton Grove, confirmed this writer's observation. "These people are wonderful, they have a sense of really belonging, of being dedicated to these programs," he said.

On Saturday and Sunday, March 16 and 17, a two-day encampment by volunteers was held at the battleground to mark the 120th anniversary of the Battle of Bentonville, which took place on March 19, 20 and 21, 1865. It was one of the final battles of the Civil War and was the major encounter in North Carolina during the war. The three day battle was fought in a 6,000 acres site of cultivated fields and pine woods. It was a costly battle in human lives — 543 men were killed, more than 2,800 wounded, and almost 900 listed as missing.

Commenting further on today's civilians who honor the soldiers of the past — both Confederate and Union, Tyndall said: "Everyone involved do so at their own expense in time, effort and money. They purchase their own uniforms, gear, tents, everything needed to make their portrayals of men and officers authentic. All these items, particularly the weapons, are expensive. Quite often individuals spend more than a thousand dollars to outfit themselves."

They travel to events, often at considerable distances. Encampment and re-enactment volunteers come from all parts of the state — a few from outside North Carolina. "A majority belong to clubs or organizations, and are assigned as enlisted men or officers in various companies, regiments and divisions," Tyndall explained. The men range from age 16, the youngest a volunteer can carry a weapon, to men like Lyle Bishop of near Boone, and David Heiser of Raleigh. Heiser, a Union trooper, is a seven-year veteran and has taken part in encampment activities at Ft. Fisher, Ft. Macon and at Civil War forts in Virginia.

Younger volunteers, like friends Danny Davis, Mark Honeycutt and Jeff Sasser, all high school students in Goldsboro, are as enthusiastic as the seasoned volunteers. They are admirably knowledgeable about the roles they play, and eagerly impart this knowledge to visitors.

The two-day spring encampment held March 16-17 to mark the battle's 120th anniversary is one of two big events at Bentonville each year. An annual autumn re-enacement is held at the site in November.

. . . Home to the tents after a hard day out in the field, three soldiers begin to shed their uniforms and accouterments for a rest period. In most instances, simple wooden boxes placed outside tents were used to store the meager personal belongings of soldiers in a battlefield situation.

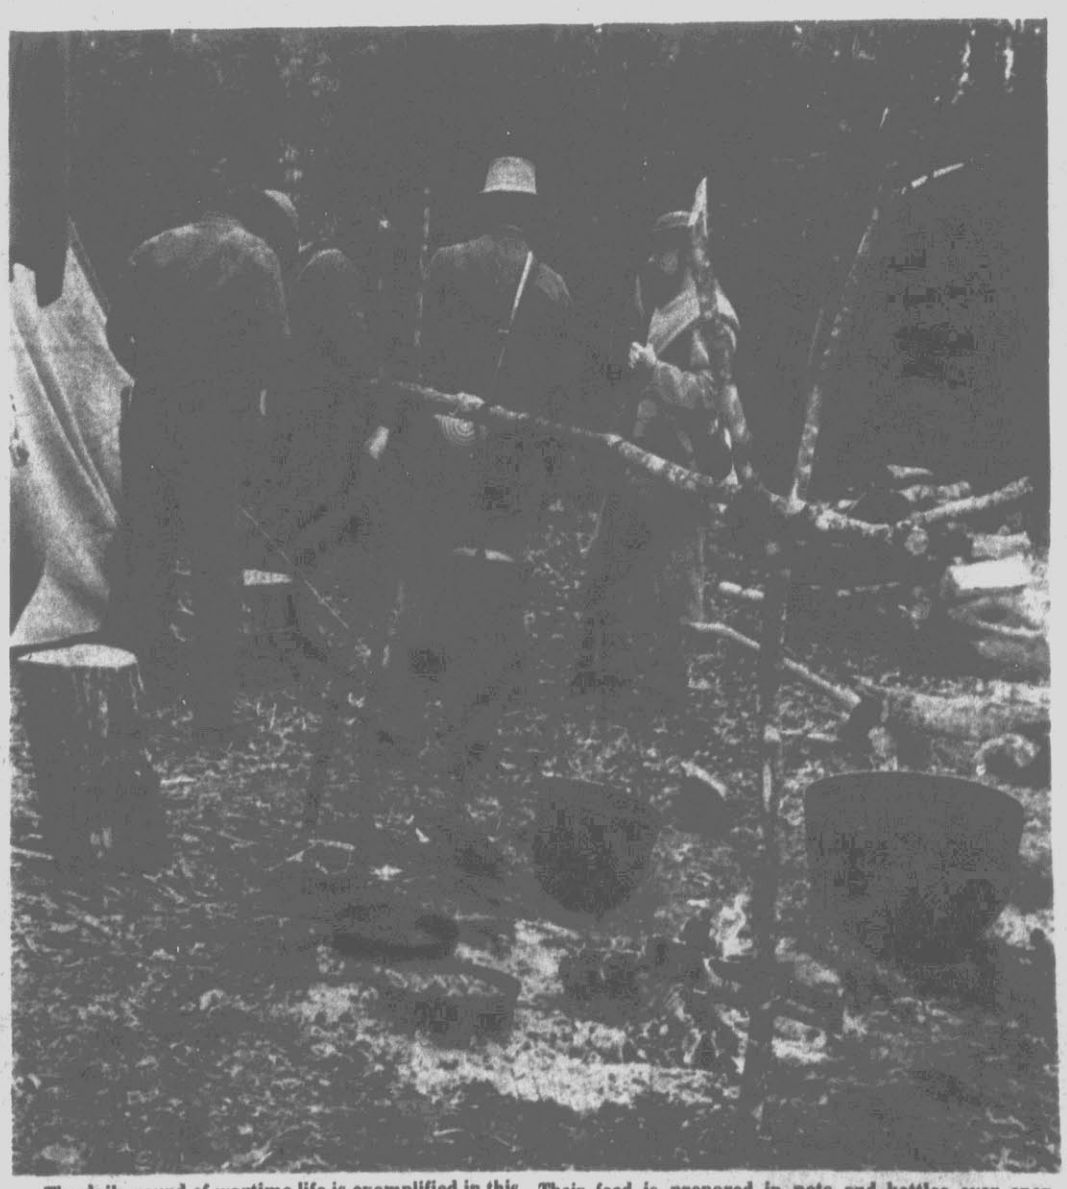

. . . Danny Davis of Goldsboro, a student at Charles Aycock High School, is proud of the old trunk he purchased and refinished to have especially for Civil War encampments. He and a friend, both members of the 23rd N.C. Regiment, have each also acquired an old patchwork quilt to spread over their tents.

Site Information

Bentonville Battleground Historic Site is about 82 miles from Greenville, located north of Newton Grove between U.S. 701 and U.S. 13. The site is open seven days weekly — 9-5 Mondays through Saturdays, 1-5 Sundays.

. . . The daily round of wartime life is exemplified in this scene of soldiers preparing for whatever the day ahead holds in store. They have just finished a campsite meal. Their food is prepared in pots and kettles over open fires. Segments of tree trunks serve as outdoor furniture.

How Jeannette Cox has become Greenville's Most Successful Relocation Specialist.

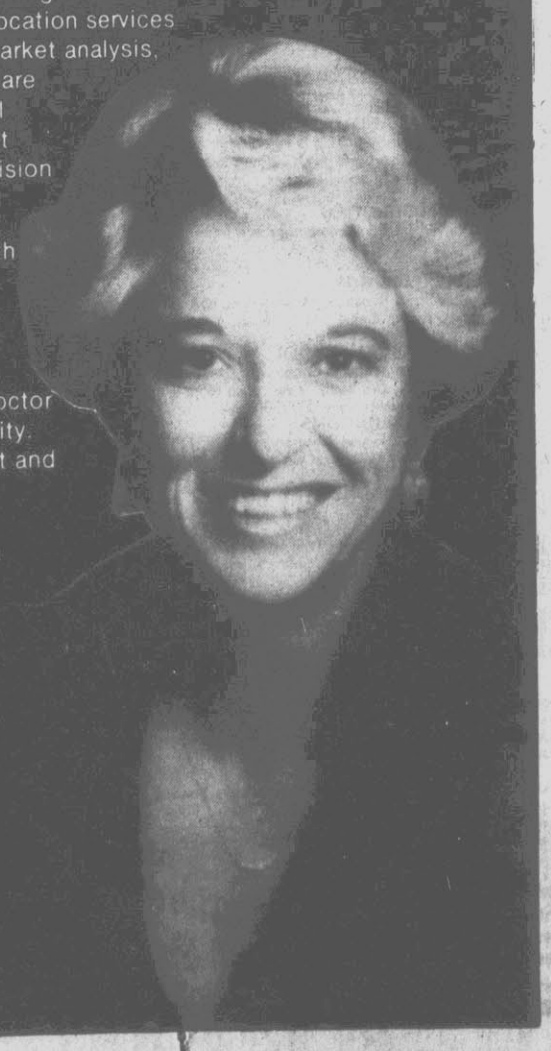

When corporations need help in the transfer and relocation of their employees in the Greenville area, more of them call Jeannette Cox than any other Realtor. Because no one equals her experience in managing residential properties. Or her success in selling them.

In addition to working directly with major corporations, Jeannette also represents relocation firms such as Equitable Relocation Management Company, Merrill Lynch Relocation management, Bank of St. Lewis, Proctor and Gamble Company and Homequity. Here, too, her property management and sales skills find a ready market.

If your company is involved in employee transfer and relocation in Greenville or the surrounding counties, call Jeannette Cox at (919) 756-1322.

Maybe you don't know about River Hills, but you should.

River Hills is a peaceful, friendly community nestled in the wooded, sloped land right outside of the city limits. Rarely, in today's housing market, can you find all the features that River Hills offers. Features such as a quiet neighborhood with well spaced lots, in a location that combines solitude with availability. You might not think you can afford an uncompromising, quality home in a well respected neighborhood, but you can. Consider cathedral ceilings, fireplaces, attached garages and decks . . . Then consider the price range, $58,000-$66,500.

Liechtenstein Royal Art Collection To Be Shown In New York

By BRYAN BRUMLEY
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The last time the prince of Liechtenstein moved his art collection was under cover of night in 1945, by bus from his palace in Vienna to his castle in the Alps to escape the advancing Soviet army.

This time, Prince Franz Josef II von und zu Liechtenstein is shipping 450 of his most prized paintings, bronzes, guns and the 18th-century "Golden Carriage," to New York's Metropolitan Museum for an unusual exhibition.

"We will send some of the largest paintings in the world to the Metropolitan, from one of the smallest countries," said Reinhold Baumstark, director of what he calls the prince's "fairy tale" collection.

Eight wall-size decorative paintings, ordered from the Bolognese master Marcantonio Franceschini (1648-1729) by Prince Johann Adam Liechtenstein, are already at the Metropolitan, undergoing restoration for the exhibition, scheduled to open Oct. 26 and run until May 1, 1986.

In contrast to similar exhibitions, the Liechtenstein collection will be shown in only one city. Afterwards, it will return to the modern, climate-controlled storerooms of the prince's medieval castle in Liechtenstein, straddling the Alps above the Rhine River between Switzerland and Austria.

The 1,400-piece collection is one of the largest in private hands, after that of the kings and queens of England, but since World War II very few people have seen more than a small sampling.

"We thought the collection was sleeping, dusty, as in a fairy tale," said Baumstark, a West German recruited as curator in 1976.

Most European royality has been driven from its thrones and watched its art either destroyed by revolution or incorporated into museums. Those museums, combining the roles of preservation and education, display a range of schools, artists and eras.

The prince of Liechtenstein, however, still reigns and his art reflects the highly individualized tastes of his ancestors, who began to collect and commission it more than 400 years ago.

If the body of the collection is its 17th and 18th-century paintings and bronzes, its heart is a magnificent array by Peter Paul Rubens, the Flemish baroque master known for his giant, turbulent scenes of warriors and fleshy damsels.

The collection also boasts what Baumstark calls the only surviving 18th-century French rococo carriage, commissioned by Prince Josef Wenzel von Liechtenstein in 1737, when he served as Paris ambassador for the Holy Roman Emperor.

"The rest were destroyed in the French Revolution. They were considered such extravagant symbols of wealth," said Baumstark in an interview.

The "Golden Carriage," said Baumstark, "will be like a jewel sitting in the middle of the exhibition," surrounded by life-size portraits of the white and black dappled Liechtenstein horses that pulled it.

Another major focus will be Rubens' "The Assumption of the Virgin," a 16-foot-tall altarpiece which barely squeezes into a Boeing 747 jumbo jet.

The best known Rubens in the collection may be a portrait of his daughter, Clara Serena. The most awesome are eight giant scenes from the life of Roman consul Decius Mus, painted as cartoons for tapestries.

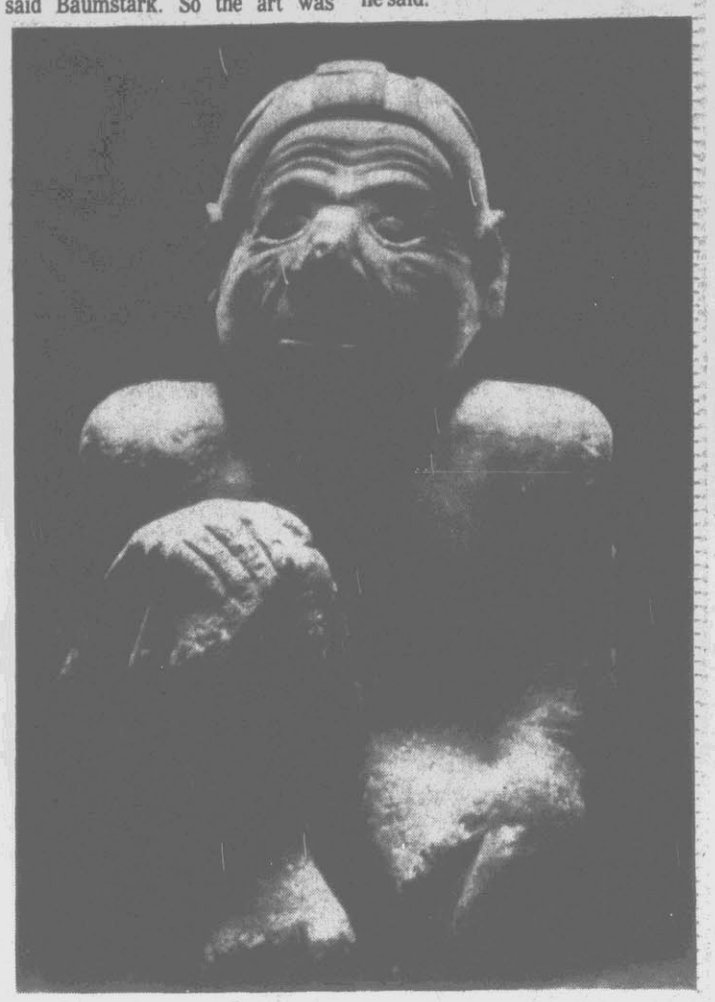

The collection has been out of sight for 40 years, but not by choice of the Liechtensteins, who plan to start work soon on a major museum in their capital, Vaduz.

Before World War II, the art was on permanent display at the family's Garden Palace in Vienna, the seat from which the prince's forebears ruled domains scattered through the Austro-Hungarian Empire. Only in 1712 did they acquire what is now the 60.6-square-mile principality of Liechtenstein.

In 1938, the year Nazi Germany absorbed Austria, the current reigning prince moved from Vienna to Vaduz, declared neutrality and waited out the war.

By early 1945, the Red Army had occupied the prince's largest holdings, in what is now Communist Czechoslovakia, and was advancing west.

"There was a risk that the Russians moving into Vienna would have claimed that the prince was Czech, and seized his collection," said Baumstark. So the art was moved by buses, "at night to avoid the danger of being hit by planes," he said.

MALE FIGURINE — This sandsone figure, found in Wilson County, Tenn., is part of a collection of 151 masterworks of prehistoric native American art, in a show titled "Ancient Art of the American Woodland Indians," from the Mississippian period, 1000 to 1500 AD that will go on display at the Smithsonian Institute's National Gallery of Art in Washington beginning March 24. Five Foreign Films Are Oscar Nominees

By BOB THOMAS
Associated Press Writer

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — When the Academy Awards are announced March 25, one prize will carry special interest for TV viewers and radio listeners in Moscow, Tel Aviv, Geneva, Madrid and Buenos Aires.

It is the award for best foreign language film.

The category is unique in the structure of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Science because the movies under consideration are not submitted by production or releasing companies; any moviemaking nation can offer one feature film for consideration.

"In most cases we recognize a specific organization or one is created for the purpose of nominating," said Robert Vogel, who heads the Academy's foreign language division. "Of course some countries, like Russia, have government control. But even if the government chooses the film, we try to encourage them in a cultural direction."

About 25 countries usually submit entries. This year, however, 32 offered works. "I think it reflects a growing awareness of the Academy and the Oscar in countries overseas," Vogel said in noting the increase.

All members vote nominees for best picture, but it would be impossible for them to judge 32 films in foreign tongues. A committee of 150 Academy members screens the entries, and each member is required to view 80 percent of them. They vote five nominees.

The Academy doesn't expect all of its members to see the five nominees. Each film is screened twice at the Academy's headquarters in Beverly Hills. To cast a vote for best foreign language film, voters must certify that they seen all five.

Since the award was first started in 1953 to recognize the growth in quality films from elsewhere in the world in the post-war period, it has been dominated by entries from the major countries of Western Europe. However, this year's nominees reflect a greater cross section. They are:

"BEYOND THE WALLS" (Israel) was produced by April Films with help from the Israeli Fund for the Promotion of Quality Films. Rudy Cohen produced and Uri Barbash directed "a story of friendship, love and compassion in a cruel and harsh world of a maximum security prison."

Critics hailed the film as a departure from the normal diet of war movies and youth comedies. The drama centers around the conflict between prisoners and jailers, as well as Jews and Arabs, and stars Arnon Zadok and Muhamad Bakri.

"CAMILA" (Argentina) is based on a true story about the rule of General Rosas in the mid-1800s. The tale has struck a familiar note with Latin Americans: Rosas was a wealthy landowner who imposed his iron rule on downtrodden Argentinians. The country is thrown into an uproar by the scandal involving a rich beauty, Camilo O'Gorman, and a Jesuit priest. The film was directed by Maria Luisa Bemberg and stars Susu Pecoraro and Imanol Arias.

"DANGEROUS MOVES" (Switzerland) was produced by Arthur Cohn ("The Garden of the Finzi-Continis," "The Sky Above, the Mud Below") and directed by Richard Dembo. The story centers on a world championship chess match in Geneva between a Russian and an exiled dissident. The leading players are Michel Piccoli, Liv Ullmann, Leslie Caron and Alexandre Arbatt.

"DOUBLE FEATURE" (Spain) is the story about the friendship of two men who spend years day dreaming at the movies. They try to live the adventures of the heros in the films but painfully realize they cannot be those characters. Adolfo Marsillach and Jesus Puente are the dreamers. Jose Luis Garci directed.

"WAR-TIME ROMANCE" (Soviet Union) begins in 1944, when a young man becomes fascinated with a young beauty who sang in the evening at the battalion commander's dugout. Years later he finds her selling hot pastries on a Moscow street, and he tries to lead her back to a better life. Nikolay Bourlayayev and Natalia Andreichenko are the leads. The director is Pyotr Todorovsky.

The best picture Oscar can mean millions to a movie. The foreign language also can help.

"A nomination can help draw attention to a foreign film," said Bob Laemmle, co-owner of the Laemmle theaters which specialize in film imports. "Winning the Oscar can bring three times the impact. If the film has been making $3,000 or $4,000 a week, the Oscar can double that. Sometimes a picture like 'Moscow Does Not Believe in Tears' can become a long-running hit."

Future Filmmaking

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Actors may never fight with directors or flub their lines on movie sets of the future, according to visionaries who contend computers can create entire films as easily as saying, "Lights! Camera! Action!"

Moviemakers of the 21st century may be able to "hire" a Robert Redford or a Meryl Streep without expensive contracts, egos or chauffeurs. Sets might be as ephemeral as lines on a TV screen, heavy cameras and sound equipment a thing of the past. Lights? Not necessary.

The only thing the inventive producer of tomorrow might need would be computers with the speed, and technician-directors with the skills, to create buildings, trees, clouds, cars and actors using silicon chips and wire.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20) Be particularly careful in driving since there is danger lurking at every post. Meditate early for inner peace.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19) Stay at home and plan improvements to the whole structure of your existence and make kin happier.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to Mar. 20) Be sure you comprehend what others are saying since there could be much confusion in the air. Read for more knowledge.

Sport Fishing Boosts State's Economy

By SARAH FRIDAY
UNC Sea Grant

To most people, big business in North Carolina means textiles, tobacco and three-piece suits. But to others, it's fishing poles and waders that are making the economy's wallet bulge. The state reeled in about $193 million from recreational fishing in 1980, says the U.S. Department of Interior. And few doubt the sport will prosper in the years to come.

Thousands of anglers travel to the Carolina coast each year to take advantage of the huge inventory of fish. They come equipped with boats and tackle, but often need food, fuel, other supplies and a place to stay. The spending quickly adds up for towns like Manteo and Hatteras and keeps North Carolina one of the nation's leading saltwater fishing states.

Despite the widespread economic impact of recreational fishing, statistics on saltwater anglers in North Carolina are sparse. The diversity and mobility make it difficult to compile reliable data.

Most of what we know comes from experts in the business. Research provides the rest. Such information would benefit the fisheries, new businesses and coastal management, says UNC Sea Grant researcher Jeff Johnson, an anthropologist at East Carolina University. Knowing how anglers spend their money could give merchants an idea of what to stock. And knowledge of incomes may help the policymaker decide if a proposed saltwater fishing license is affordable.

One widely known fact is that North Carolina shares its waters with fishermen from all directions. The majority of them are North Carolinians, but others come from Virginia, Florida, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Maryland and other eastern states.

The reasons they fish here are many, says Joel Arrington, outdoor editor of the N.C. Division of Travel and Tourism. They're lured here year-round by the Outer Banks, the closeness to the Gulf Stream and an extensive system of estuaries and sounds.

Just as the state's location entices fishermen from different areas, it attracts both northern and southern species of fish, says Arrington. In the winter, saltwater anglers put out their hooks and lines for striped bass and gray trout. During the summer, they fish for larger species like tarpon, pompano and Spanish mackerel. Flounder, perch and bass are popular game in the sounds.

To catch these fish, most fishermen in the state use small boats or fish from banks, piers and bridges, says Charles Manooch of the National Marine Fisheries Service in Beaufort. But the big money rides on the waves of the wealthy offshore fishermen.

It comes in on boats of different sizes, too, according to Jim Bahen, a Sea Grant marine advisory agent in the Wilmington area. More specifically, three types of anglers fish off our coast, he says.

The first group owns the boats you gawk at in marinas — the 30 to 60 ft. ones that cost from $30,000 to $1 million. "Somebody that could afford a boat such as that is in his late 30s or 40s, has a good income and is established," says Bahen. He or she probably makes $80,000 or more a year.

A second group includes the young executives whose annual salaries range between $50,000 and $90,000. They frequently fish in tournaments, as many are geared specifically to them.

Families with smaller boats make up the third category of sport fishermen. With salaries of $25,000 to $40,000, they use their boats to travel to the Outer Banks or teach the kids to ski, Bahen says. And when there's the chance, the fishermen in the family puts out a net or line.

The inshore fisherman has different characteristics, says Johnson. During a two-year study, he compiled information on fishermen from six regions of North Carolina's sounds. His work examines bank fishermen, who fish from banks, piers and bridges, and boat fishermen.

The typical sound fishermen are white males in their early 40s who have enjoyed recreational fishing for over half of their lives. Each year, they spend an average of 40 days on the water, waiting for croaker, trout, bass or any other edible species to bite their bait.

Of the two types of sound fishermen, those who fished from boats were most like offshore anglers. They were more educated, worked in white-collar jobs and had highter incomes. On fishing trips, boat parties of two or three people spent an average of $212 in 1982, while bank fishermen averaged $238. Most of their expenses were for lodging, food, fuel, bait and tackle and boat maintenance.

Other than expenditures for goods and services on a fishing trip, tournaments and charter boats are big moneymakers for the state. In the off-season, billfish and mackerel tournaments attract hundreds of saltwater sport fishermen anxious to hook the biggest fish or catch one of the prizes.

Tournaments "have a great economic impact in a limited area for a short period of time," says Arrington. Some effects are documented in a 1979 survey of 1,060 saltwater tournament fishermen by Sea Grant researchers Leon Abbas and Peter Fricke. They found that fishing parties spent an average of $978 for each tournament entered. This included all expenses but entry fees. They also noted that the average fisherman was 42 years old, had a college education and made about $70,000 a year.

Rich Novak, a Sea Grant marine recreation specialist, recently completed another study of participants in a drum tournamet in Hatteras last fall. From a sample of returned surveys, he found that most of the money spent by fishermen was for lodging, meals, groceries, gas and beverages. Since the event was on the Outer Banks, the men and women tended to stay in the area for a few extra days, and brought along a few friends.

North Carolina's economy also benefits from the use of 100 or more charter boats and headboats. For $300 to $550, six people can hire a large fishing vessel for day or half-day trips. But this pleasure may be on the decline, says Bahen. Many of the charter boats are staying closer inshore to save on fuel costs.

When gas is expensive, the big ticket items like charter boats do feel a pinch, syas Arrington. But he feels the greater effect is on tourism. "The fishing's not cut back, but travel is. People don't travel as far to fish."

So if you want to go offshore and don't mind fishing with a few more folks, you can take your tackle aboard a headboat. They take about 100 people, and it costs about $30 to $45 a day, says Bahen.

Although the price of saltwater fishing is rising, merchants and businesses associated with the industry need not worry. Sport fishermen will keep casting their lines as long as there are fish to catch. And that's good news for North Carolina's economy.

Jungle Harbors Insects

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (UPI) — Seventy to 100 feet above the Amazon jungle floor the tree tops are alive with insects so diverse scientists may have to revise upward by at least 15 times the estimated number of animal species in the world.

From research conducted in Brazil and Peru, Terry L. Erwin, curator of insects for the Smithsonian Institution, estimates 30 million insect species live in the jungle canopy.

Most biology textbooks say there are 1.5 million to 2 million different species of animals in the world.

"We could be talking about 30 million species in the world or, and this is way above my conservative estimates, 50 or 60 million species."

The new estimates stem from a radically different view of the jungle itself. Instead of being a homogenous expanse of dense growth extending thousands of miles, as it appears from the air, the jungle is actually a composite of as many as 200 different kinds of forests packed tightly together.

Each forest is composed of its own species of trees and plants and many insects spend either their entire life or some part of it living in a single kind of tree.

To determine how many species of insects live in the jungle, scientists must collect specimens from each forest type. Erwin has spent the last seven months in the jungle of southeastern Peru doing just that. He has collected more than 1 million insect specimens from four types of forest during four seasons.

Erwin collects his bugs by spraying a synthetic insecticide identical to an extract of the chrysanthemum flower. The chemical is lethal against all forms of insects but harmless to humans and other animals.

Today's Cryptoquip clue: X equals Z

The Cryptoquip is a simple substitution cipher in which each letter used stands for another. If you think that X equals O, it will equal O throughout the puzzle. Single letters, short words, and words using an apostrophe can give you clues to locating vowels. Solution is accomplished by trial and error.

Movie Script Is Altered

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — Hollywood director Brian DePalma turned a casino floor into a movie set, but only after tailoring the script to suit executives who worried about some references to organized crime.

"Wise Guys," DePalma's first comedy, follows the escapades of two low-level mobsters, played by Danny DeVito and Joe Piscopo, who are running from underworld hitman Frank "The Fixer" Acavano, portrayed by pro wrestler Capt. Lou Albano.

In the story, a mob boss gave DeVito and Piscopo $10,000 to bet on a long-shot horse, but they decide to play their own sure bet. The long-shot wins, pays $250,000, the mob boss wants his money, and the shenanigans begin.

DeVito and Piscopo flee to this resort and, in the original script, seek help from an old mob associate who is manager of Resorts International Hotel Casino.The manager, played by Harvey Keitel, was to help set up a scam on the casino floor that would help the two escape.

But H. Stephen Norton, executive vice president for Resorts, said he asked that the script be altered to drop the manager's mob connection and his involvement in the scam.

Mississippi Conducting Search For Newspapers

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — Mississippi is taking steps to preserve the crumbling and sometimes colorful pages of its past.

The state Department of Archives and History is trying to locate all the newspapers published in Mississippi over the years, ranging from political broadsides to dailies, and to microfilm the pages before they deteriorate any further.

"They tell more about life than any other source through editorials, advertisements, social news and happenings," said Mabel Morgan, director of the Archives and Library Division. "They're the only source you can find that really covers so much."

"We're conducting a survey first to determine where the collections are," said Mrs. Morgan. "We hope to locate newspapers held in newspaper offices and in private hands."

Julia Marks Young, director of the three-part survey project and the newly appointed editor of the "American Archivist," said survey questionnaires on publications were sent to county clerks, libraries, archives and manuscript repositories, museums, historical and geneological socieities and newspaper offices.

"The stunning thing that might happen would be finding a large collection," said Mrs. Morgan.

So far, the survey has turned up some little known or unknown publications.

"I just heard of a publication in Clarksdale called 'The Woman Voter,' said Mrs. Morgan.

Using a $10,000 grant from the National Endowment for the Humanities, the state hopes to identify Mississippi newspapers as well as out-of-state newspapers held in the state. Later phases of the newspaper project will finance publication of a guide to newspaper holdings and microfilming, as well as entering detailed information in a national newspaper database.

Mississippi is one of the first states to begin the newspaper project.

The survival of newspaper copies has been threatened by two major factors: fires and acidic paper that browns and crumbles. Fortunately, the oldest papers have held up well against aging.

"The newspapers that were published in the 1800s are in pretty good shape," said Mrs. Morgan, because of a high rag content. However, she said more recent newspapers are highly acidic.

The state archives "have never had a major disaster, she said, while "some courthouses have burned. Some libraries have burned."

Courthouses traditionally have kept newspapers because they contained legal notices, she said.

"Newspaper survival in the smaller towns depended on county advertising for legal notices and often there was stiff competition," she said.

Mrs. Morgan said the state's first newspaper, the Mississippi Gazette, began operations in 1800. She said publisher Andrew Marschalk brought the first printing press to the state around 1799.

Most of the early newspapers were published in Mississippi river cities, like Natchez and Vicksburg. Columbus, Pontotoc, Oxford and Holly Springs were also early publication sites.

Opening lead: Queen of ♡.

She was nondescript, almost mousey looking. But when she talked about bridge a light came into the eyes of the Five of Hearts that made her almost beautiful.

For the most part, her life had been uneventful. But there was that day almost 40 years ago when for a brief moment she was admired by the bridge world.

"I can remember it as if it were today," she sighed wistfully. "I was being held by a handsome young lad who did not look upon me only as something to be discarded at the first opportunity. It was his first national championship final, and he was savoring every moment and every card of it.

"Although we ended up in a contract that was distinctly second best, it was not his fault. True, he had taken a conservative position in the auction, but his partner's bullish leap to four clubs took the auction beyond the safe haven of three no trump.

"My part in the proceedings was soon over. West led the top of his heart sequence, and I later learned that the spectators, to a man, expected the young lad to lose a spade trick and two diamonds. It seemed as if declarer summed up the hand at a glance. Almost without thinking, he played low from dummy to the first trick, and then he contributed me from hand.

"I can still remember the gasp that rose in the throats of the audience. They thought they had just witnessed an enormous blunder. But from the safety of the table's edge to which I had been consigned I could appreciate the depth of the play.

"West continued with a heart. Declarer won his king and drew trumps in two rounds, ending on the table. Then he cashed the ace of hearts, discarding a spade from his hand. The king-ace of spades and a spade ruff set up a long spade when the suit divided evenly. Now declarer could cross to the board with a trump and discard a diamond loser on the good spade. As the crowd roared its approval, declarer conceded a diamond and claimed his contract."

Diana Plans Trip To U.S.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Britain's Princess Diana, who has never made a public appearance in the United States, will visit Washington with her husband Prince Charles in November — to attend a British art exhibition and dine at the White House.

The royal couple will be in Washington from Nov. 8 to Nov. 12 on their way home from a visit to Australia, said Charles Anson, a spokesman for the British Embassy in Washington. He said their two sons would remain in England.

It will be Princess Diana's second visit to the United States. She once changed planes in Los Angeles without making any public appearances.

The spokesman said the couple had accepted an invitation from President Reagan and his wife, Nancy, to have dinner at the White House on Nov. 9. The next day will visit the National Gallery of Art to see the gallery's special British art exhibition.

Anson said the prince and princess would stay in Washington for unspecified other activities.

Unusual Canopy Attracts Patrons For Store

By CHARLIE INGRAM
The Birmingham News

VINEMONT, Ala. (AP) — Nine miles north of Cullman on Eva Road, a twin-engine Beechcraft airplane looms in front of Sara's Grocery, 20 feet above the ground.

Sara Edmondson and her husband put it there, mounting it on iron beams.

The reason was practical. Four years ago, in this area noted for chicken coops, farm ponds, pastures and modest country homes, Sara and Dechard Edmondson decided the store's gas pumps needed a canopy.

Edmondson suggested they buy an old airplane — "We figured the wings would cover the pumps."

He bought the plane from a man in St. Petersburg, Fla., and he, his brother and a friend went to Florida, took the plane apart and brought it back to Vinemont.

After they put it back together and mounted it, Edmondson noticed that more customers were coming into the store and asking about the plane. And they were buying while there.

"It does draw the people in," he said. "And every now and then we'll run a special where if you come in and buy something, I'll take you up for a ride" — in another airplane of course.

Edmondson flies every chance he gets. His home behind the grocery resembles a small airport.

He keeps the plane he flies, a single-engine Taylor Craft, in a hangar next to his house. An 1,800-foot runway he bulldozed out of his 40 acres of land runs in front of his house and the hangar.

Propellers, wings, engines and other parts from four airplanes he's rebuilding clutter the hangar and the basement of his home. His current project is rebuilding an old Beechcraft Staggerwing.

Edmondson will give just about anybody a free plane trip just for coming by the store and asking to go up, especially on summer weekends. He estimates 2,500 people have flown with him. In one day alone he took 67 youngsters up for short rides, one by one.

Flying, you might say, has always been in his blood.

"I can remember when I was a 4-year-old kid carrying water barefoot to my father when he was plowing, and a twin-engine plane would go overhead," he said. "They'd be so high you could barely see 'em, but I'd pray they'd come and land in our field. I just wanted to see one up close."

The dream of flying stayed with Edmondson during his youth in Vinemont.

"When I was growing up we'd be out driving and we'd always speed up at the top of hills so that we'd leave our seats when we went over the top," he recalled. "I always wondered what flying would be like whenever we went over those hills. I was always looking for a thrill."

In 1953 Edmondson and his wife moved to Detroit, where he was employed as an ironworker. He bought his Taylor Craft in 1955 for $1,000 and still flies it.

But when he bought the plane he didn't know how to fly.

For lessons, he went to a small country airport outside Detroit. There he found a small, snuff-pinching, elderly woman sitting next to a pot-bellied stove with her back turned to him.

"Anybody around here can show me how to work a plane?" Edmondson asked.

The woman tried not to laugh, he said, but she slowly turned, looked at him, and through the giggles said, "I imagine someone can show you the controls."

Edmondson was embarrassed when he later learned that the woman was the manager of the airport.

"Shoot, it's a long way from being a poor ole country boy to learning how to fly," Edmondson said. "Can you imagine going in and asking someone if they knew how to work a plane?"

Edmondson finally learned to fly, after going through two flight instructors before he found one he felt comfortable with — a retired Army Air Corps flight instructor.

In 1967 Edmondson, Sara and their children Rex and Lori moved back to Vinemont. Eight years ago he, his brother and Sara opened Sara's Grocery.

Edmondson, an ironworker at the Browns Ferry nuclear plant, enjoys the opportunity to help work on varying projects. He took an active role in rebuilding his church when it burned.

He built his house, a spacious redwood A-frame with 44 pine rafters and oak floors. The fireplace, made with three kinds of stone, is eight feet wide, even feet deep and 40 feet high.

His home is a source of pride, but it's the flying that's his joy.

"Some people say you need to take a vacation to Hawaii every year to get away from it all," Edmondson said. "But I think you ought to break it up into about one little Hawaii a month.

"For Sara and me, driving over Red Mountain in Birmingham is a little Hawaii. It's so pretty to look down on the city.

"And the flying, well, it's just a bunch of little Hawaiis."

Folk Art Discovered In Cemetery Excursions

HAMMOND, La. (AP) — To Professor John Magee of Southeastern Louisiana University, a walk through an old cemetery is rather like looking through a museum.

Old graveyards are sprinkled with examples of folk art in the form of handmade grave markers and decorations, he said. The problem is, the ravages of time and weather is gradually wiping them out.

"I want to preserve some of it," Magee said. "Hopefully, the work I am doing will encourage other people to do the same. If it isn't preserved, it will eventually be lost forever."

So he arms himself with cameras, a note book and a golf club and prowls through old cemeteries in the Florida Parishes looking for homemade grave markings.

The parishes (counties) lie north of Lake Pontchartrain in an area once part of the old Florida held by Spain.

The golf club is useful for warding off snakes.

"Anything that is handmade, in essence, is folk art," he said. "When looking for it there's no telling what you will find."

It can be as simple as a pair of two-by-fours nailed together to form a cross with the name of the deceased carved into the wood. Or it can be as elaborate as the yard-tall concrete model of a church at the grave of a pastor from Baton Rouge.

Fortified by a $2,300 grant from the university, Magee, who is professor of education at SLU, has been checking through area cemeteries since January.

He said he has visited 50 so far and intends to tour about 80 more before completing his study in May.

Most cemeteries have just a few examples of what Magee considers folk art but he said he found a small one at Madisonville that was loaded with it.

There were handcarved cypress tombstones more than 100 years old, handmmade fences around graves, hand-cast iron fences and decorations and hand-etched drawings in soapstone.

Magee found several markers bearing the handprints of family members embossed into stone at the grave of a relative.

In Springfield, the tombstone of a child bore a detailed map of the neighborhood where the child had lived showing the location of the homes of friends.

At Independence, Magee photographed a grave marker with a child's playhouse carved in the stone.

The folk art found in the eight Florida Parishes dates from the early 1800s to the mid 1900s and differs from the art found in New Orleans cemeteries because most of the people who settled the area were Anglo-Saxon, not French or Spanish.

Magee plans to assemble a black-and-white photo essay on the subject for the SLU archives and a slide presentation for the state Department of Education.

Early Baths

MESSINA, Sicily (AP) — Archaeologists have unearthed thermal baths dating from the 14th century B.C. in the western section of the island of Lipari, off this Sicilian port city, regional officials say.

The officials said the baths, which date from the Mycenaean age, were found by archaeologists restoring the San Calogero baths, built during the later Roman epoch.

The baths — according to some experts the oldest ever found — are carved from stone and stand about 13 feet high, the officials said. Later civilizations built over them, hiding the baths until now.

The Academy Awards

By Alan W. Petrucelli

Quick! For what role did Greta Garbo win an Oscar? Was it for her sensitive portrait of Anna Karenina in the 1935 film of the same name? Was it for her tragic role, one year later, as Marguerite Gautier in "Camille"? Or was it for her role as Russian agent Lena Yakushova in the 1939 comedy "Ninotchka" that earned the legendary recluse her 13 1/2-inch, 6 3/4-pound, 10-karat gold-plated statuette? Surprise! Like Marilyn Monroe, Paul Newman, Lana Turner, Richard Burton and Ava Gardner, Miss Garbo has never won a coveted Oscar.

This year, the list of Academy Award nominees includes the young and young-at-heart, the familiar and the foreign. Will Jeff Bridges win the Best Actor Oscar for "Starman," or will the award go to Albert Finney ("Under the Volcano"), F. Murray Abraham ("Amadeus"), Tom Hulce ("Amadeus") or Sam Waterson ("The Killing Fields")? And who will win the Best Actress Oscar? Will it be Judy Davis for "A Passage to India," Sally Field for "Places in the Heart," Jessica Lange for "Country," Vanessa Redgrave for "The Bostonians" or Sissy Spacek for "The River"? The 57th Annual Tinseltown trial will be broadcast live from Los Angeles on Monday, March 25 on ABC.

Before the envelopes are opened, let us celebrate the gala occasion with a quiz, which will tease — and test — film fans. Good luck!

1. Jane Wyman has been nominated for a Best Actress Oscar three times: in 1951 for "The Blue Veil," in 1954 for "Magnificent Obsession" and in 1948 for "Johnny Belinda," for which she was awarded the Oscar. Ironically, the year Miss Wyman won was the same year she divorced Ronald Reagan. What is memorable about the actress's performance in the film?

2. When Marlon Brando was announced as Best Actor for his performance as Mafia patriarch Don Corleone in the 1972 blockbuster "The Godfather," the actor was not on hand to accept his award. Instead, Brando sent a pretty Indian woman to deliver a monologue calling attention to the plight of American Indians at Wounded Knee. Can you recall the Indian's name?

Who will win an Oscar? Will it be Albert Finney for "Under the Volcano"? Sally Field for "Places in the Heart"? David Lean for "A Passage to India"? Envelopes will be opened and Oscars presented on "The 57th Annual Academy Awards Presentation," airing Monday, March 25 on ABC.

Michele Will Tell

Dear Michele: Who chose the name George Papadopoulos for Webster's paternal guardian on "Webster"? And why? That is the name of a member of Greece's fascist junta that ruled the country from 1967-74. Among free Greeks today, his name is as hated as that of Adolf Hitler. Surely Alex Karras knows enough recent Greek history to be more sensitive to the issue. Doesn't he realize that the name is in poor taste?— S.M. PAPPAS, CHAPEL HILL, N.C.

According to an ABC representative, the name was chosen without malice. Research companies are employed to investigate names used on series television. When conflicts arise, names are spelled differently — as in this case. The junta member in question spelled his name P-a-p-a-d-o-p-o-u-l-o-s. The character's last name is spelled P-a-p-a-d-a-p-o-l-i-s. Furthermore, Papadopoulos, any way you spell it, is a very common Greek name.

Dear Michele: How was Jon-Erik Hexum eulogized on "Cover-Up" following his tragic on-set accident? — J. JONES, DANVILLE, ILL.

Hexum's co-star, Richard Anderson, delivered a tribute to the actor at the conclusion of the episode aired November 24. Anderson said: "When a star dies, its light continues to shine across the universe for milleniums. Jon-Erik Hexum died in October of this year, but the lives he touched will continue to be brightened by his light forever and ever."

Dear Michele: Who starred in the movie "The Woman in White"? I know that Eleanor Parker was in the film. — CYNTHIA SOLTESZ, AVENEL, N.J.

The 1948 movie also starred Sydney Greenstreet, Gig Young, John Emery and John Abbott.

Dear Michele: What is Prince's real first name? — KELLI FREDERICK, SHEBOYGAN, WIS.

Prince Rogers Nelson — that is his real name.

Dear Michele: To whom is Robert Urich married? I say the star of "Vega$" is married to Kil Ulrich, who plays Diana McColl on "As the World Turns." My daughter says he is married to Connie Selleca of "Hotel." Who is right? — L. HARPER, DARLINGTON, S.C.

You're both wrong! Urich is happily married to actress Heather Menzies, who appeared in the short-lived TV series "Logan's Run."

The annual awards presentation of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences — the Oscars — airs Monday, March 25 on ABC.

The Academy Awards program reaches more than 24 million homes in the United States, and millions more around the world. ABC has already sold a 90-minute international edition of the ceremonies to the People's Republic of China. Mainland China will have its first glimpse of the awards within 72 hours after the event in Hollywood.

For many years the Oscars and Bob Hope were synonymous. Then Johnny Carson took over. This year, the host will be Jack Lemmon, who has won two Oscars. Lemmon will be joined by co-hosts Steve Martin, Tom Selleck, Jeff Bridges, William Hurt, Michael Douglas, Gregory Hines, Kathleen Turner, Candice Bergen, Glenn Close and Diana Ross.

HBO subscribers will enjoy "Forbidden," a movie starring Jacqueline Bisset and Jurgen Prochnow airing Sunday, March 24. The film is based on Leonard Gross's best-selling book "The Last Jews in Berlin." It is the true story of German Countess Maria von Maltzent, who saved her Jewish lover by hiding him in her apartment during World War II. It is an extraordinarily compelling film.

Miss Bisset is also making her network television debut in "Anna Karenina," airing Tuesday, March 26 on CBS. She stars with Christopher Reeve in the new adaptation of Leo Tolstoy's timeless novel of a tragic and passionate love affair in 19th-century Russia.

Joan Collins will be in Paris in April for the filming of "Sins." Miss Collins, who stars as a fashion - magazine editor, will have no less than 80 costume changes and three leading men. The film will be produced by Steve Krantz, with Miss Collins's fiance-partner Peter Holm as executive producer. The production is budgeted at $13 million.

Producers Glen Larson and Terry Alan have signed 19 world-renowned fashion designers to display their latest designs regularly on "Cover Up." Star Anthony Hamilton and the models who appear on the series will wear the designs. Designers include: Valentino, Oleg Cassini, Geoffrey Beene, Kansai Yamamoto, Anne Klein, Perry Ellis, Guess and Norma Kamali.

Can Inday Lure Soap Game-Show Viewers?

By Connie Passalacqua

Sick of daytime soap operas and game shows? So, too, are many of the advertisers who support daytime network fare by spending hundreds of millions of dollars every year on choice commercial spots. Daytime is considered the most efficient way to reach the women's audience, who, all househusbands aside, are still the prime buyers of household goods such as soap and cake mixes. So many advertisers want and are competing for these spots that networks have driven their ad rates way up, taking advantage of their monopoly situation.

Basing their reasoning on the availability of surplus advertising dollars, LBS and Tribune Broadcasting, two well-known syndication companies, have joined to create Inday, what they call a fourth daytime network. During the last year they've sold this "network" to independent stations covering 70 percent of the country. Inday

Fletcher's Film Pays Tribute To Her Parents

By Jay Carman

During the past 50-plus years, there have been many charming moments at the Academy Awards ceremonies. But none was more captivating than what happened in 1976 when a virtually unknown actress named Louise Fletcher accepted the best supporting actress Oscar for her remarkably brave and skilled work in "One Flew over the Cuckoo's Nest."

While delivering an emotional acceptance speech, the actress translated her words into sign language. The reason, she explained, was that she wanted her parents, both deaf since birth, to share in her big moment.

While working on "A Summer to Remember," airing March 27 on CBS, Miss Fletcher says she once again had her parents in mind. "For one thing, the film is about a child who's been deaf all his life. For another, the character I play is a scientist associated with the Deafness Research Foundation and Gallaudet College in Washington, D.C., and that's where my parents first met when they were both students there.

"Another reason I'm so pleased to have been able to take part in this film is that it's going to be closed-captioned and that's something that's very dear to me and for which I've done a fair bit of work," she says. "Also my parents watch a lot of television and get so much enjoyment out of close-captioning that I'm just thrilled to be doing this."

As if all that weren't ample reason for pride, Miss Fletcher and her colleagues are certain that the story told in "A Summer to Remember" is important. Shot in Salem, Ore., it's a warm-hearted tale about a young deaf boy (played by newcomer Sean Gerlis, who's been deaf since birth) who befriends a runaway female orangutan named Casey. Everyone refuses to believe the boy's claim that he's communicating in sign language with Casey but, in fact, it's true. The orangutan is actually a valuable research animal who has been raised and trained from infancy by a scientist (Miss Fletcher) who specializes in communication for the deaf.

In a plot reminiscent of the blockbuster movie "E.T.," the dramatic conflict comes when anxious lawmen decide that Casey is too dangerous for the boy to play with. They shoot her with tranquilizer guns and deliver her to an unscrupulous circus operator (Burt Young). With the rest of the cast being rounded out by James Farentino and Tess Harper, the movie promises to be an enjoyable, as well as an informative, TV event.

Is USFL Facing 4th-and-10 Situation?

By Lorenzo Carcaterra

The numbers always tell a different story. Unlike owners, players and coaches, the numbers never lie. And the numbers thus far for this third season of spring football do not, in any way, come out on the side of the USFL. The numbers tell us that the league is in serious trouble.

The opening weekend of the USFL showed an average television rating decline of nearly two full percentage points from the previous spring — 6.9 as opposed to 8.3. The decline was equally alarming as the league moved from city to city: 9.9 in New York, down from 12.2 (this with Doug Flutie); 9.2 in Philadelphia, down from 9.9; 5.9 in Chicago, down from 6.5.

In the season opener on ABC, the New Jersey Generals and the Birmingham Stallions drew 18 percent fewer viewers this year than last and 57 percent below the league's initial weekend in 1983. Only 41 of the top 60 TV markets televised the USFL compared to 53 last year. This means trouble for a league primed to do fall battle with the NFL.

The USFL has no network television contract for the 1986 season and, in this world at least, without a TV contract it is always best to pack early. They have a $1.32 billion antitrust suit against the NFL, but that is at best a chancy dice roll. The USFL is taking on the NFL without teams in Pittsburgh, Chicago and Philadelphia.

The gimmicks will only get the league so far. The instant replays, which show the viewer whether the referee was right or wrong in tossing a yellow flag, becomes less interesting after awhile. Signing old, injury-prone NFL players must stop. It gets the league headlines for a few days, but no significant increase in ticket sales.

Another thing that must end is the reliance on the New Jersey Generals and Doug Flutie as the league's saviors. Granted, the Generals are the showcase team and granted Flutie is the showcase player but there are other players, such as Jim Kelly of Houston and Steve Young of Los Angeles, who could help the USFL draw better ratings if given proper exposure. Other teams will get the attention theydeserve, if not through ABC then through ESPN, which is slated to carry more than 50 USFL games this season. The league needs the time, the patience and the ability to develop its own stars. Flutie will grow into his role and will become the star everyone hopes he becomes.

But the numbers won't wait. The numbers tell us there is big trouble on the horizon. The move toward fall may be a disaster and bring an end to an entire league, a league which many people, despite the TV numbers, have grown fond of — in the spring. The league averaged 27,000 fans per game last year and charged $35,000 per 30-second commercial. Not bad numbers. But, not good enough. If the numbers continue to worsen, then the USFL will go the way of the World Football League rather than the American Football League.

TV's Lite Brigade Comes Out Charging

By Andrew J. Edelstein

Once upon a time — and what a time it was — actors portrayed athletes. We all fondly recall Gary Cooper as humble Lou Gehrig ("Pride of the Yankees"), Ronald Reagan as Grover Cleveland Alexander ("The Winning Team"), even Tony Perkins in a dress rehearsal for "Pyscho" as hyperneurotic baseball player Jimmy Piersall in "Fear Strikes Out."

But that was a long time ago. That's when ex-jocks gracefully retired from the playing fields to open a sporting goods store, bowling alley or bar and grill. Now they head west to Hollywood. Maybe things began changing in the late '60s when Jim Brown left the gridiron for a role in "The Dirty Dozen." Ol' Number 32 cut a swath wide enough for a slew of ex-jocks to rumble through including TV stars Merlin Olsen, Fred Dryer, Alex Karras and Ed Marinaro.

Today, TV-jocks even have their own training grounds, where they are groomed for future stardom, much the way the old Hollywood studios trained their starlets. This "school" is known as Lite Beer commercials, which as anyone who watches TV sports knows, are among the most entertaining spots on TV. The witty vignettes feature the likes of Marv Throneberry, Billy Martin and John Madden, arguing over the merits of the brew, concluding with the inevitable "less filling/more taste" showdown.

These commercials have proven so popular that a TV movie based on them is in development and two new series featuring three members of the Lite Beer Brigade debut this month.

Never substitute for the very best

The Ralph Lauren shirt is an expression of quality and integrity, from the selection of the patterns to the execution of every detail. Some of the details to look for in a Ralph Lauren shirt are: The finest single-needle tailoring; All seams have a very narrow single-stitch closing and are closed with eighteen stitches per inch; Real ocean pearl buttons; A collar and neckband that are distinctively tailored to mold comfortably around the neck; The fabric is the finest quality all-cotton made from long-staple yarns that will mellow with age and actually improve with subsequent launderings. We now have an excellent selection of solids and patterns in all our fine stores. $42.50

PERRINE: UP TO BAT

In her new film, Water, Valerie Perrine plays an ecologist attempting to save the long-eared bat from extinction. But Perrine seems relatively unconcerned about saving her career from a similar fate. "I'll make enough money from a movie to live for a couple of years," says the actress, whose credits include Lenny, Can't Stop the Music and Superman. "If there were 10 good women's roles a year, I'd do them all if I got the chance. But since there are only two, and Meryl Streep gets them both, I'll get on with something else, like bricking up the patio."

□

Flying high with the success of Penthouse and Omni, publisher Bob Guccione now has plans to launch a magazine tentatively titled Young Astronaut. Aimed at kids with an interest in space, Young Astronaut will also feature columns by Washington, D.C., muckraker Jack Anderson. The Anderson byline will appear in Penthouse as well. Strange though it may seem, Anderson and Guccione have a few things in common: They're both responsible for revealing a lot, and they've both been under surveillance by government agencies — Guccione by the FBI during the Abscam probe, Anderson by the CIA during the Nixon administration. Their deal was sealed recently at a private luncheon in the plush third-floor conference room of Penthouse headquarters in Manhattan. After Guccione made the introductions, Anderson stepped to the platform. "Bob," he said, "isn't it a pleasure to be talking into a microphone you can see?"

ANDERSON: SPACE INVADER

When Peter Graves decided to follow in the footsteps of his older brother Jim (Gunsmoke) Arness and come out to Hollywood, he was not exactly met with open arms. In fact, Jim told Peter that Hollywood was a mission impossible. "He gave me some very good advice," remembers Graves, currently hosting four 60-minute specials titled Discover: The World of Science. "He said: 'Go home! It's terrible here, especially for a newcomer. And if you don't want to go home, I'll tell you where to buy the [industry trade paper] Hollywood Reporter — and then you're on your own.'" Clearly, Graves' career didn't self-destruct in five seconds.

□

Speculation in Hollywood usually centers on whose slippers are under whose bed or who's taking a meeting with whom and who walked off the set in a huff. Lately, though, one rumor making the rounds is that Jimmy Stewart, a staunch member of the Beverly Hills Presbyterian Church, has converted to the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints. The truth: Stewart hasn't switched pews; he simply donated his memorabilia and papers to the Mormons' Brigham Young University. But why not to his alma mater, Princeton? Or to the film school at UCLA? Explains Stewart, "No one except Brigham Young ever asked me."

□

There's great comfort in having a twin, as Jean Sagal, half of the starring TV duo of Double Trouble will tell you. "You're born with an instant best friend," she says. "I can call Liz [the other half] at 3 a.m.; she's always there. Sharing the same womb can't be compared with any other relationship." Adds Liz: "You can do no wrong in your twin's eyes. Jean would never pass judgment on me." Not that there isn't a downside to the relationship: "You become comfortable and lazy because you do have that instant best friend," believes Jean. "It's harder for you to go out and make friends. You tend to lean on your twin and not develop yourself." Adds Liz: "People don't take the time to see that we are two different people. They assume we talk, walk, eat, sleep and do everything in unison." Well, the producers of Flashdance were certainly able to make a distinction when the Sagals auditioned for the same role in the hit movie. "You're wrong for the part," they told Jean. "You're perfect," they told Liz. But would they have noticed if Jean had shown up on the set?

SAGALS: JEAN ON THE FEET

STEWART: JUST ASK ME

S.J. of Burlington, Vt., writes to ask Susan Sullivan of Falcon Crest, "Are you extravagant or thrifty?" "Thrifty," replies Sullivan, "and I don't like it. It's a habit I can't break, one I developed in childhood. When I was a kid, my father was out of work. It got to the point where I had to give my parents my savings — $13 — from the bank. It went to buy us dinner. Since then, I've been a hard worker and a dedicated saver. Even though I don't have to save so much, I still go ahead. It's not essential that I be careful, but I am. Except when it comes to the market. I've had awful times with stocks and am a terrible investor."

FUTURE OSCARS

Meet America's young male cinema idols: they'll soon be taking over.

By William A. Henry III

When most people think of leading men in the movies, they call to mind mature males whose virility may be peaking or slowly going to seed but whose mental toughness and knowledge of life are surely just ripening with the years. Depending on their generation, audiences may think of the late John Wayne and Clark Gable and Spencer Tracy, or of Marlon Brando (60) and Charles Bronson (62) and Paul Newman (60), or of Robert Redford (47), Dustin Hoffman (47) and Robert DeNiro (39).

Yet not one of those American icons was nominated for an Oscar this year. Instead the nods for the best actor award to be handed out tomorrow night went to one veteran British character actor, Albert Finney, and four members of a newer generation of relatively unknown Americans. And ranking just behind them, passed over this year but surely ticketed for recognition in the next season or two or three, was a still younger generation of leading men who perhaps should be called "leading boys." These hot romantic leads of the present and especially the future are not grown-looking men but almost callow youths. Some are still teen-agers. A majority, from smoldering Matt Dillon to elfin Matthew Broderick, are under 25.

Their generation had candidates aplenty for Oscars this year, from Matthew Modine and Nicholas Cage in Birdy to Dillon in The Flamingo Kid. In release now, and conceivably slated to contend next year, are Sean Penn's The Falcon and the Snowman, Timothy Hutton's performances in that movie and Turk 182, and maybe even Emilio Estevez's work in the otherwise uneven The Breakfast Club.

These young males, and there are more than a dozen with a legitimate hope to be called stars, display a range of personality types, but they share a style that mirrors the new masculinity of the 1980s. As women have grown stronger and more self-confident, they have looked more for men who are sensitive, thoughtful, perhaps a little shy. The leading boys are more tender than tough, more vulnerable than victorious, more pretty than rugged. They do not dominate women but somewhat sheepishly win them over. They are not, for the most part, old-fashioned loners either. Their sense of maleness does not depend, as an earlier generation's heroes did, on needing nobody. The leading boys often travel in packs, or commit undying loyalty to just one friend, or risk their lives or egos for a woman's love. They are not exactly afraid to fight, but they have enough common sense to run when outnumbered, without any sense of shame. When they do venture into danger, it is with endearing innocence more often than confident virility. They do not battle to the death for mere pride, and unlike traditional tough guys, they are not afraid to look silly.

Time magazine Associate Editor William A. Henry III won a Pulitzer Prize in 1980 for his television columns. His last cover story for Family Weekly was about the Ultima II model Kim Alexis.

ABC Motion Pictures, Inc.

Matt Dillon: Star quality.

The movies they star in reflect the differences between them and leading men of the past: For the most part, they do not go out on violent crusades of vigilantism and vengeance. They do not generally try to conquer a nation, outgun a police force, outwit the KGB. They do not try to crush or humiliate rivals. Nor do they strive for genius. Although they are sometimes cast as intelligent, most of them play people who are comfortably, unashamedly ordinary. Their films are mostly light romantic comedies, and even in their dramas, the goal is to get by. They share the common victories of the common man — for them, coping successfully with life is triumph enough.

In a country that has been fretful and searching for optimism — that responded in the last election to calls by Democrats for new ideas and new fairness, and to praise from a Republican President for a new era of American self-assertion — these young actors are appropriate symbols. They, and the characters they play (with the notable exception of the leads in The Falcon and the Snowman), seem to accept their homeland's traditional values and radiate a hopeful vision of the future.

Apart from social change, there is a practical economic reason for the rise of teen or teen-seeming stars: They are their audience's age. Moviegoing used to be the great American pastime, but now, except for a few entertainment features that appeal to everyone and a few serious dramas or ultra-sophisticated comedies that draw a grown-up crowd, the typical movie viewer is of the dating age — as the film industry puts it, the 12-to-24s.

Perhaps the prototype of the new stars is Matt Dillon. Discovered in the fashion of Hollywood myth, by a casting agent who happened to see him, then interview him and recognize the magnetism of his personality, Dillon has been perhaps the hottest heartthrob of the teen fan magazines since long before he had a successful mainstream movie. He soon won the praise of critics for his portrayals of a school bully in My Bodyguard and of a boy who had to grow up too fast in Tex. Then came a string of big-name but small-bore movies (two, Rumblefish and The Outsiders, by superstar director Francis Coppola), of the kind that would kill the career of someone with less star quality. But Dillon survived to demonstrate his appeal anew in the Christmas season's comedy charmer, The Flamingo Kid. His next release is Target, a thriller that co-stars Gene Hackman.

They share a style that mirrors the 1980s, radiating a hopeful vision of the future. They seem to accept their homeland's traditional values. They want to grow up good.

If Dillon holds down the hoody end of the spectrum of "leading boys," the model for the clean-cut types at the opposite end is surely Matthew Broderick. He radiates the most intangible but marketable quality an actor can have: likability. Whether he is cast as a dangerously gifted computer whiz kid who inadvertently almost blows up the planet in War Games, or as a baseball-loving, bright Jewish boy in the play Brighton Beach Memoirs, which won him Broadway's Tony award, or as a medieval youth in the new movie Ladyhawke, or even as a cheerfully homosexual teenager in the original production of the Tony-winning play Torch Song Trilogy, Broderick seems like an idealized version of the boy next door.

Paramount Pictures

Kevin Bacon: A natural.

His cuteness may be a bit of a burden as he grows older — he may not be able to play adult roles for nearly another decade, and the parts for adolescents are limited. But he is, like his late father, James Broderick (best known for the ABC series Family), an actor of sensitivity and wit.

Another exemplar of the wholesome type of "leading boy" is already virtually an old familiar face: sad-eyed Timothy Hutton, who won a supporting actor Oscar for what was really the starring role in Ordinary People and who was a box office sensation in the military school melodrama Taps. For a few months he was perhaps the hottest star in Hollywood, eclipsing the accomplishments of his late father, the comic actor Jim Hutton. He suffered a setback caused by bad career moves: choosing the wrong scripts, biding his time for the "right" project instead of putting himself before the public when they were most eager to see him. But he is now enjoying a return to popularity with The Falcon and the Snowman and Turk 182.

There is one other established star among the under-25 men, comic cut-up Eddie Murphy. His films 48 Hrs, Trading Places and Beverly Hills Cop together made about $250 million, giving Murphy almost as good a batting average as Harrison Ford. But Murphy is outside the mainstream of leading boyhood in two ways. First, he portrays men older than himself, not younger, and radiates a more traditional kind of leading man's masculinity and cunning. Second, Hollywood is still uncomfortable with giving serious heroic, and especially romantic, parts to black actors.

Behind the big three of Dillon, Broderick and Hutton is a full roster of up-and-coming performers on the verge of joining their ranks. Some have already had major box office hits, like Tom Cruise of Risky Business and Kevin Bacon of Diner and Footloose. Others have had critical acclaim, notably Chris Collet in Firstborn and Ralph Macchio in The Karate Kid. But they have to show that they can draw enough of a following to make a movie profitable. Some potential stars have gained a reputation while appearing mostly in total

Orion Pictures Corp.

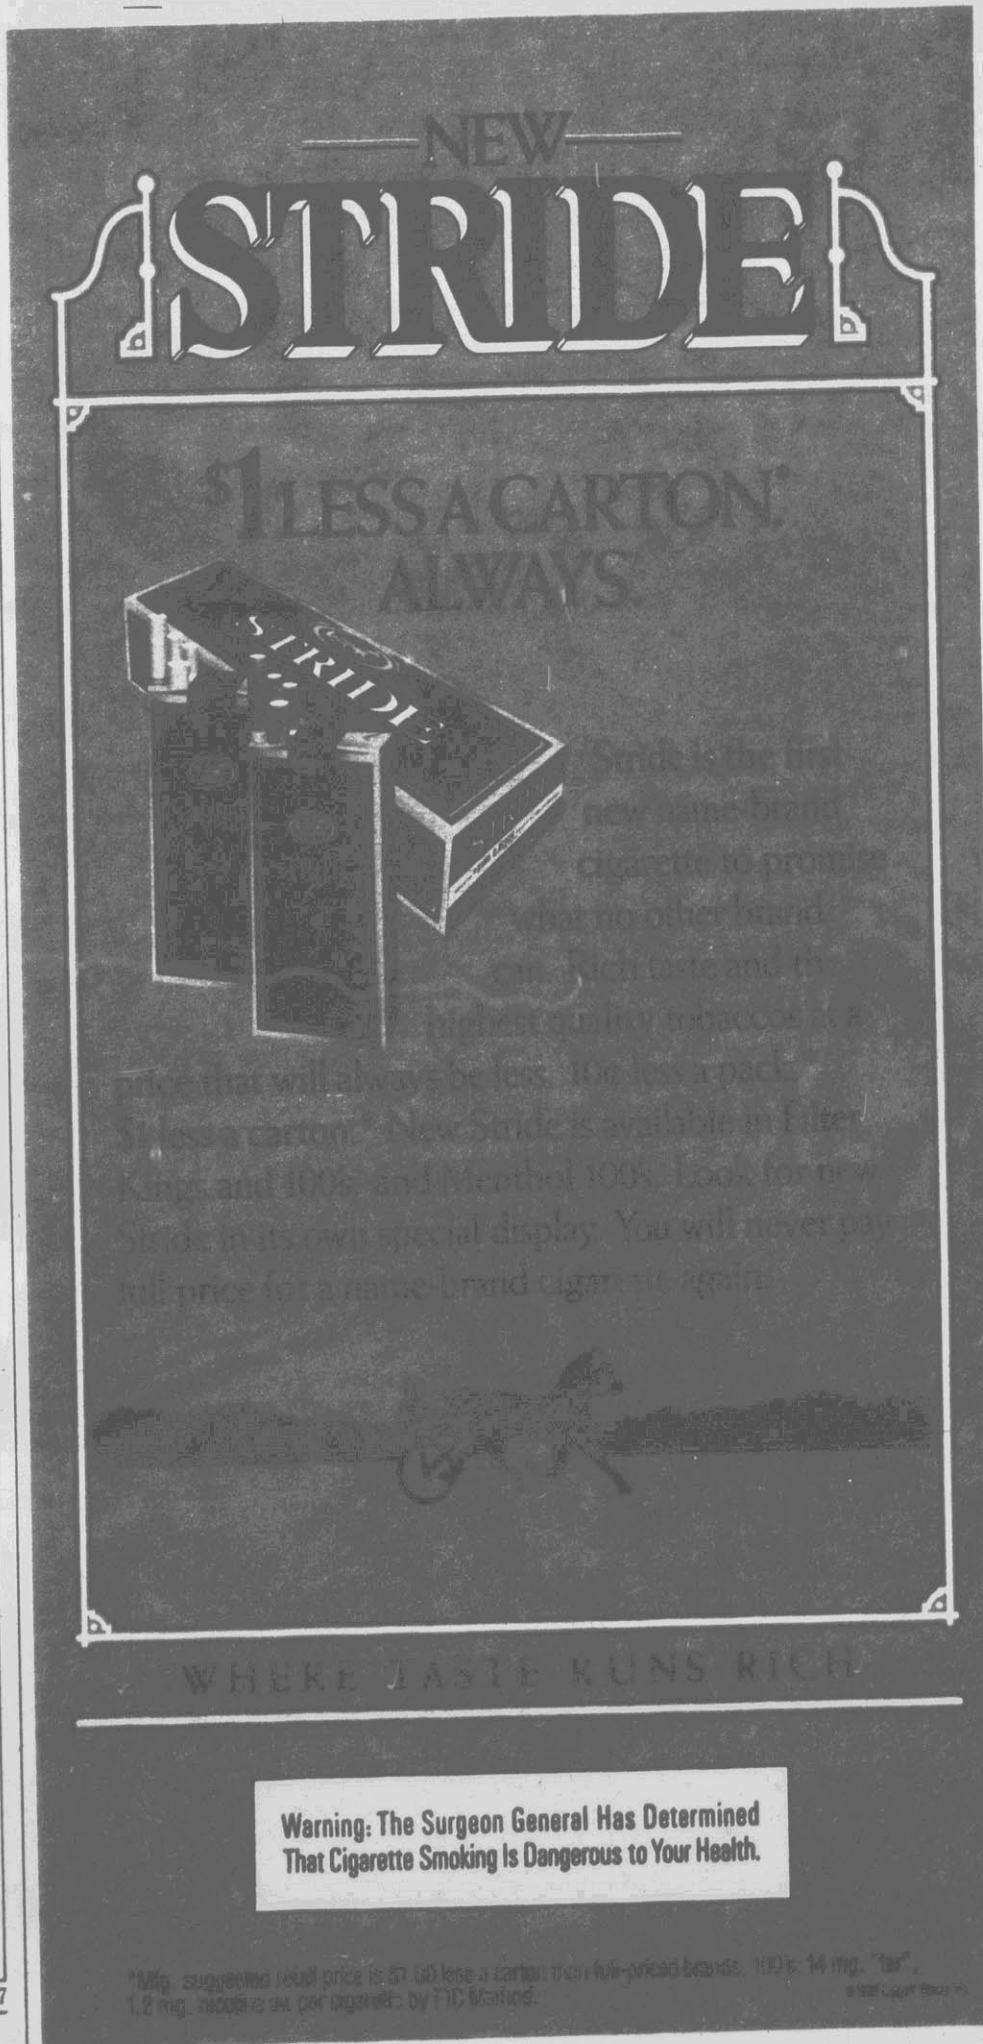

Penn and Hutton: Two of the hottest together.

failures, like Michael Pare of Eddie and the Cruisers and Streets of Fire, Rob Lowe of Oxford Blues and Hotel New Hampshire, and Val Kilmer of last summer's spy spoof Top Secret. And the list goes on: Virtually every studio has three or four names it wants to tout.

Of all the candidates, the two who are commonly judged likeliest to make it are Sean Penn and Bacon. Penn came into prominence in what might have been a throwaway role in a forgettable movie, as the perpetually stoned class clown Spicoli in Fast Times at Ridgemont High. He then found the poetry in what might have been a lumpish, self-pitying working class kid facing World War II in Racing with the Moon. Penn's face is classically right for the sort of anti-heroes he specializes in playing: At first glance, he looks homely, almost unformed, maybe a little witless. As his character unfolds, an underlying sweetness invariably begins to emerge, and the audience comes to care about him. His performance in Falcon brought him a string of raves.

Bacon has played everything from a rich kid with a drinking problem in Diner to a middle American boy possessed by the devil in a network TV movie, from an Italian-American homosexual prostitute in the Off-Broadway play Forty Deuce to one of the victims in the original Friday the Thirteenth. An actor's actor and critics' favorite, he had his first real exposure to a mass movie audience in Footloose, in which he played a city boy determined to bring music and dancing to a puritanical small town. His major shortcoming as an aspirant to stardom is that he seems to be a natural character actor, often the most interesting person in a film, but not necessarily quite right for the central role.

For some of the leading boys and their rising competitors, Hollywood may sooner or later have a sad lesson to teach. Many performers find stardom fleeting. Even long-term survivors have periods when they fall out of favor. Sometimes a promising actor flames out as a result of bad career moves. Sometimes he is cast down by the unpredictable whim of public taste, or even by sheer bad luck. Five years ago, for example, the future seemed exceedingly bright for the stars of Breaking Away. The film, an Oscar nominee for best picture and a winner for best original screenplay, dealt with leaving high school and growing up, and in its climax the working-class-kid heroes defeated stuck-up fraternity boys in a bicycle marathon. There could not have been a better showcase for its young ensemble of stars, Dennis Christopher, Dennis Quaid, and Jackie Earle Haley. But they all were unable to find the right next step. The same fate may befall a number of the current crop of apparent stars-to-be. But some of them surely will make it up to the stage on some future Monday night in spring to grasp that coveted Oscar. DOWN GO PRICES!

Jim Walter makes home ownership even more affordable

Everywhere you look, you read about the high-rising costs of building a new home. But have you looked at Jim Walter Homes lately? Instead of announcing increases, Jim Walter is SLASHING prices on certain important options to keep the cost of owning a new home within easy reach of the average family.

10% Fixed Mortgage / No Down Payment

Annual percentage rate — To qualified property owners

Example 20 And 30 Year Financing With No Down Payment

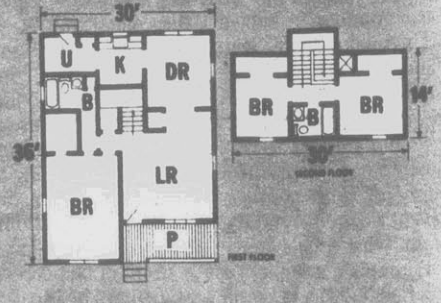

Cash Price	Jim Walter Annual Percentage Rate	240 Monthly Payments Of	Borrowed Annual Percentage Rate	360 Monthly Payments Of	Approximate Total Difference
$35,000	10%	$337.70	13%	$387.17	$58,300
$40,000	10%	$385.90	13%	$442.48	$66,600

Slashing prices isn't the only thing Jim Walter is doing to keep home ownership affordable. We're still firmly holding the line on our low, 10% annual percentage rate FIXED MORTGAGES. This means that, when compared to other financing at 11, 12 or 13 percent, you actually save thousands and thousands of dollars. If this sounds too good to be true, read on.

As an illustration of savings, compare our 20-year, 10% financing to others, even at 13% — only 3% higher — for 30 years. The difference is astonishing. In fact, on a $35,000 mortgage at 13% for 30 years, you'll pay back over $58,000 more than with Jim Walter . . . your payment will be almost $50.00 per month more . . . and you'll pay for 10 years longer than if you had built and financed with Jim Walter. And, there's NO DOWN PAYMENT to qualified property owners . . . with no "points", closing costs, balloon notes or "gimmicks". Just good, straightforward building and financing practices.

So, even if you have shopped Jim Walter Homes before, let's talk again. Let us tell you about our money-saving discounts. Let us help you choose the home or cottage that's right for you and your family. And let us show you how you can save more by doing some or all of the inside finishing yourself. We'll build almost anywhere that you own property . . . in the city or in rural America.

GETTING PERSONAL WITH

PAT BOONE

WHERE HE'S COMING FROM

Pat Boone was a singing sensation with a hit single before Elvis Presley came on the scene. He has sold more than 45 million records in his career; 13 of his singles are gold. Today he serves as the National Campaign Chairman of The Easter Seal Society, whose annual Telethon will be broadcast, with Boone as host, next Saturday and Sunday. Pat Boone U.S.A., his weekly variety/talk show, debuted on the Christian Broadcast Network last year. Boone, 50, who lives in Beverly Hills, spoke recently with FAMILY WEEKLY Reporter-Researcher Cornelia Kennedy about his family and his work.

National Easter Seal Society

Kennedy: Has your singing career suffered as a result of your volunteer commitments?

Boone: I am turning down a lot of personal career activities. Fortunately, at this stage of my life all [of my] daughters are married and they have their own families so [my wife] Shirley and I have less need to earn a lot of money and more time to do some things that we feel strongly about. But there's a natural drive that an entertainer feels to stay active in his profession.

Q: You were married very young. Did you encourage your daughters to wait a bit longer?

Boone: Shirley and I were 19 when we eloped, and our marriage survived. But we felt that our daughters would do well to wait till they were older, and they did. Looking back, we realize we could have waited two or three years and it probably would have been better. But now we wouldn't change anything.

Q: Has your image as a clean-cut performer with a perfect family ever created pressure for you or caused problems?

Boone: A lot of our tough choices came when the entertainment industry seemed to demand one thing and our priorities as a family called for something else. And usually we chose family responsibility.

Q: You and Elvis Presley were friends. When was the last time you saw each other?

Boone: Our last meeting came in Memphis about four or five months before he died. I didn't know really about his drug addiction. I was on my way to Orlando. We met at the airport and hugged and I slapped him on his stomach because he was quite bloated. I said, "What's this?" He said, "Ah, I've been eating too good but I'll sweat it off in Las Vegas." He said, "Where are you headed?" I said, "Orlando." He said, "Orlando? Man, that's the wrong way. You ought to come on to Vegas with me, but then you always were headed in the wrong way, weren't you?" When the laughter died, I said, "Well, Elvis, it depends on where you're coming from." FW

WHO ELSE WANTS TO LOOK YOUNGER WITHOUT GOING TO A DOCTOR?

Amazing New Formula From Beverly Hills Lets You Take Up To 10 Years Off Your Looks Without The Scars And Expense Of Plastic Surgery

Have you ever thought about having a face lift?

If so, perhaps you should wait. Surgery, as you know, is very expensive, and many people feel it should only be used as a last resort. Not only that, there is now a new product on the market that lets you take up to 10 years off your looks without the expense and trouble of going to a doctor.

This product was developed by Mrs. Ernest Borgnine and many of the top stars in Hollywood absolutely swear by it. In fact, Ruta Lee, Brenda Vaccaro, Connie Stevens, Maureen Dean, Jed Allen, Buck Trent and Debbie Reynolds are just a few of the important celebrities who use and enthusiastically endorse this product.

What has Tova Borgnine discovered? The answer is fascinating. It is a mysterious formula that comes from the roots of a cactus plant that was first discovered by the Aztec Indians hundreds of years ago. And, until recently, this remarkable look-young treatment was only available in certain very remote sections of Mexico.

This formula is certainly not cheap but the stars who use it say it works like magic. The entire process takes only half an hour and insiders say there is nothing like it for anybody who wants to look years younger than their actual calendar age.

It is easy to use. All you do is apply the formula to your face and wait. "The cream is pink when you apply it, and gradually turns white," says Tova. After it turns white it should be removed. One of the great things about it is that there is no guess work. It 'knows' what to do by itself!"

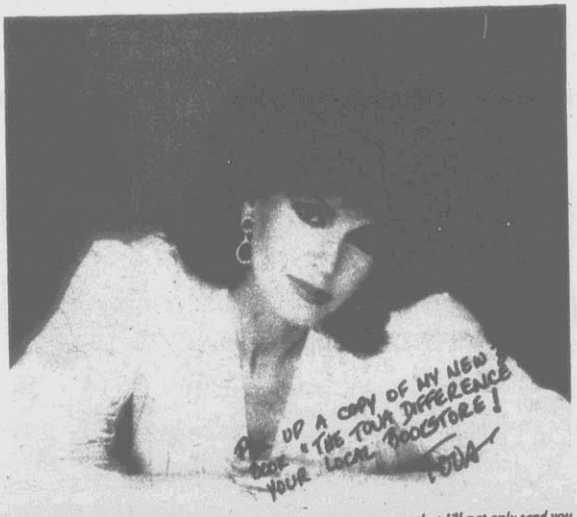

"But the best thing of all," says Tova Borgnine, "is the way it makes you look years and years younger with the very first application. In fact," she says, "this is what I call a 'no excuse' product that is backed up 100% by my personal guarantee."

Would you like to try this remarkable discovery?

"... Actually, he looks so good many of his co-stars have accused him of having a face lift!..."

And what about Ernest Borgnine? Have you seen him Saturday nights on his new hit T.V. series "AIRWOLF"? If you have, you probably noticed he looks younger now than he did 10 years ago. Actually, he looks so good many of his co-stars have accused him of having a face lift!

But Ernie swears it is not true and, at a recent press conference, he stated that the only reason he looks younger today than he did 10 years ago is because of what his wife Tova has discovered.

"I'm so positive my formula will take years off your appearance, that I'll not only send you a refund if you're not 100% satisfied, but I'll send you a free $21.00 gift immediately just for trying it." —Tova Borgnine

Would you like to have the beauty of youth without the scars and expense of surgery? If so, here's how you can try this amazing formula without any risk at all: Simply go ahead and order Mrs. Borgnine's formula by mail or telephone. Then, as soon as it arrives, try it out in the privacy of your home, and take a close look at the amazing change you will see in your mirror! After that, if you are not 100% satisfied, simply send back the empty product container and Tova will see to it that you get a complete refund with no questions asked.

Remember! You can't lose money but you can lose years off your appearance!

It's easy to order. Just complete the order form below, and send it to Tova Borgnine with your payment. Or, if you prefer to pay by credit card (Visa, MasterCard, or American Express), just call 1-800-36-TOVA-9 (1-800-368-6829) toll-free at any time (24 hours a day, 7 days a week).

Important—Free Gift: All orders mailed within 10 days will receive a free gift worth $21.00 of additional Skin Care products.

KITCHEN LIBRARY

HOT OFF THE PRESSES!

There are many new cookbooks with contemporary themes for the home chef this season. Here are just a few:

In Madeleine's Kitchen (Atheneum, 1984) by Madeleine Kamman:

Madeleine Kamman is French-born and absorbed the art of cooking at home while growing up. She is a graduate of the Sorbonne in Paris, where she majored in languages, but her great love for the culinary arts decided the direction of her life. This book is the culmination of 25 years of cooking, teaching, and running a restaurant. Kamman describes each dish thoroughly, and her detailed instructions are easy to follow.

Lee Bailey's City Food Recipes for Good Food and Easy Living (Clarkson Potter, 1984) by Lee Bailey:

A knockout of a book with charm, grace and imaginative, easy-to-make recipes that show themselves simply or elegantly as the case may be. The book is beautifully designed with lavish use of full color photographs. Helpful tips on preparation and serving suggestions are included with every menu.

Greene On Greens (Workman, 1984) by Bert Greene:

This is a chatty, informative book on the forthright, bright and beguiling inhabitants of the vegetable kingdom. Greene begins each single-vegetable chapter with notes on history, buying tips, storage guidelines and nutrition/diet information. A book that could very well become a cook's everyday ready reference on vegetables.

Make It Easy Entertaining (Jeremy P. Tarcher, 1984) by Laurie Burrows Grad:

Laurie Grad is the "Make It Easy" expert for TV's Hour Magazine. This new book contains over 40 imaginative menus and 200 new and tantalizing recipes organized into daytime entertaining, low-cost meals, low-calorie menus, holiday feasts and big splashes. Grad has planned the book for anyone — experienced entertainers or fearful novices. Each menu comes with detailed instructions for everything from sending out the invitations to arranging the table and, of course, cooking a great meal.

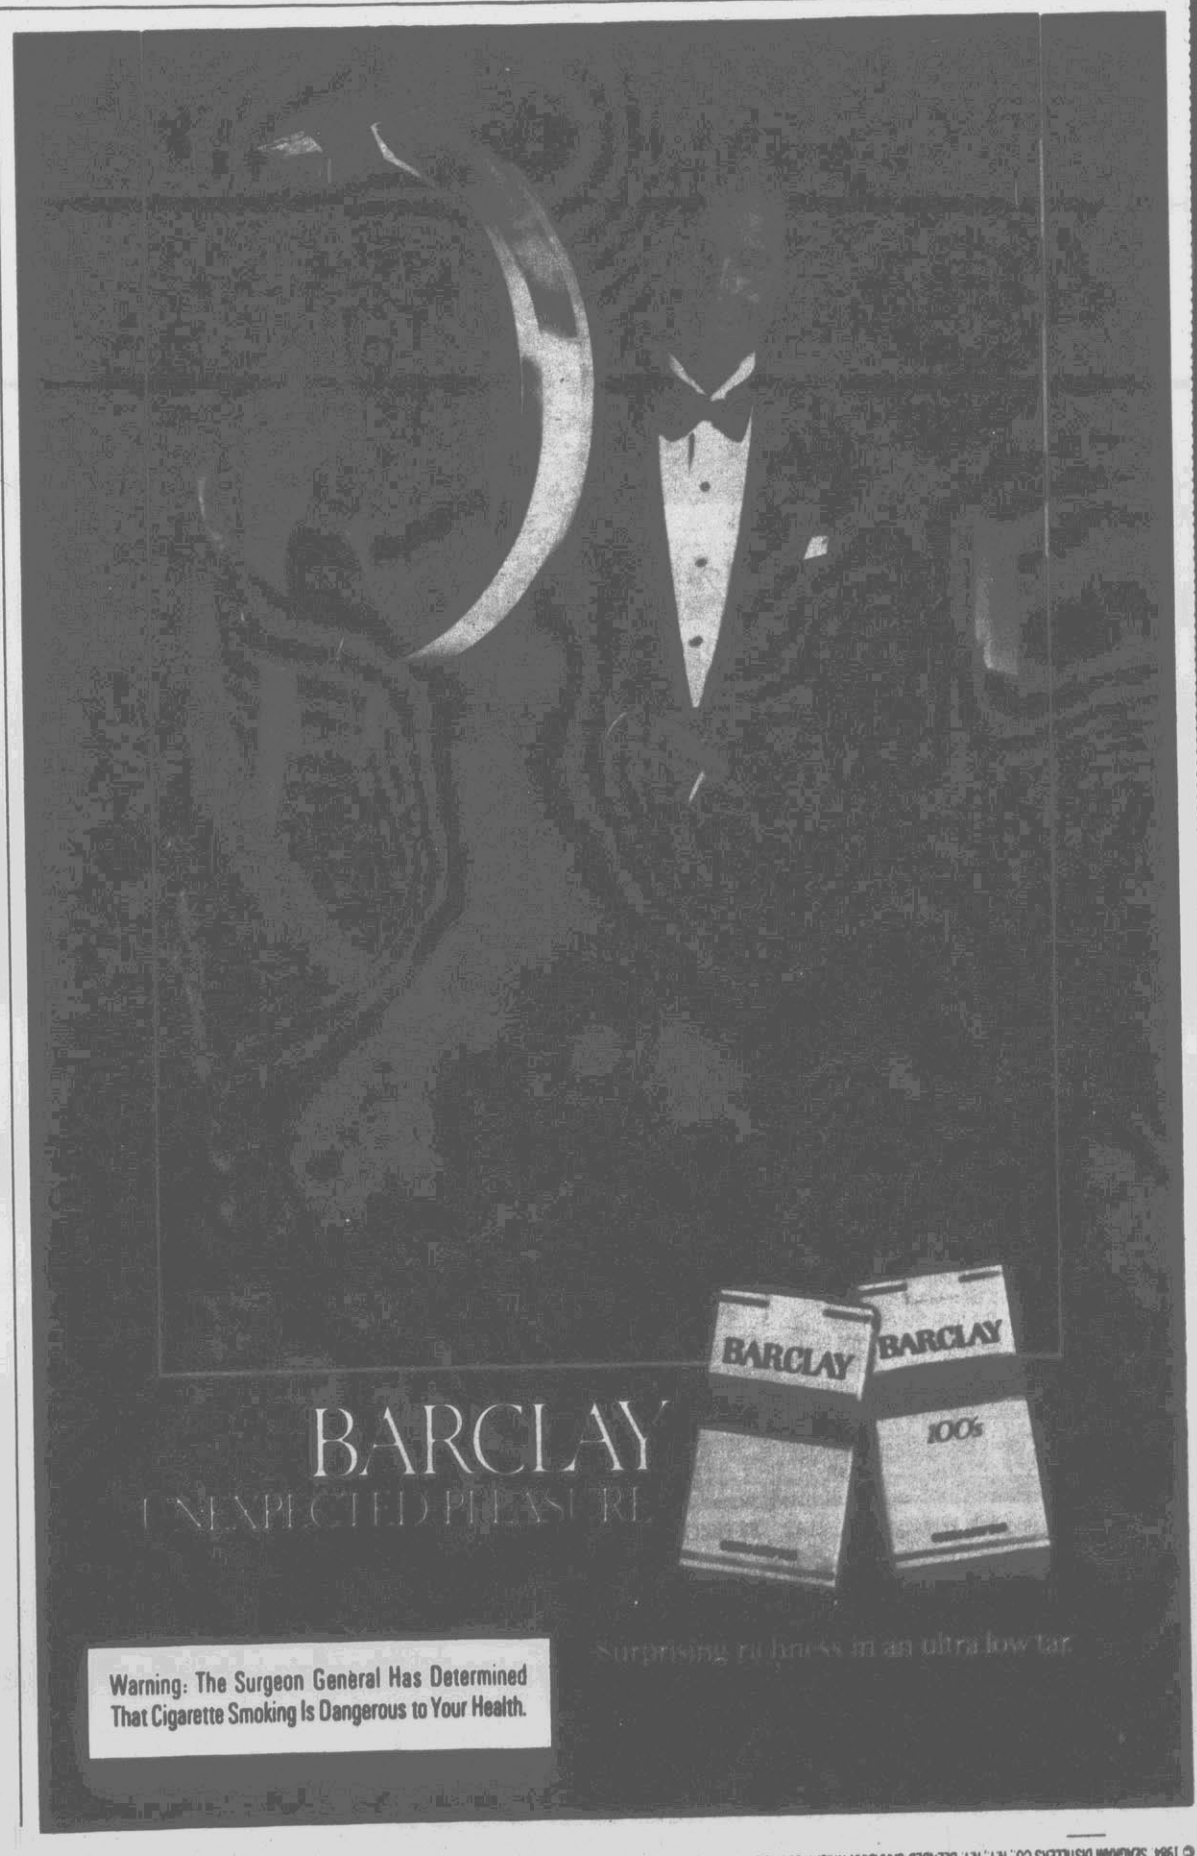

Pierre Franey's Low Calorie Gourmet (Times Books, 1984) by Pierre Franey and Richard Flaste:

Franey's weekly column in The New York Times was the inspiration for this new book. Franey takes the successful formula of the "60-Minute Gourmet" and styles it with a "lighter approach to classic cuisine." Designed to be prepared in an hour or less, the recipes use a minimum of butter, salt, sugar and oil. Franey has imaginative fun with the menus and recipes, combining flavors, textures and colors innovatively.

Fannie Farmer Baking Book (Alfred A. Knopf, 1984) by Marion Cunningham:

A brand-new, big, comprehensive book inspired by America's rediscovery of the pleasures of making the endless pies, tarts, cookies, cakes, breads, buns and muffins that are part of our baking heritage. Whether you're an eager beginner or an old pro with a stack of blue ribbons from the county-fair bake-off, this latest F.F. offering is a must. FW

Insecticide Awarded Third Patent

ROACH PRUFE, #1 in Three University Tests

The University of California and the University of Nebraska have just released two independent studies that have been published in the Entomological Society of America Journal. In the studies, thirty-one well known consumer and commercial insecticide products were tested in heavily roach infested homes and apartments. Confirming an earlier University of California published report, ROACH PRUFE's patented formula again took the #1 spot as the most effective roach killer. In the new University of California report, ROACH PRUFE was tested against the sprays and powders commonly used by the exterminators, and was the only product in the twelve-week study that showed 100% control. In the University of Nebraska study, well known consumer aerosol, fogger, and dust products were tested. Here again ROACH PRUFE provided the best results in their eight-week tests.

Disease Carriers

Odorless, Easy To Apply

Alan Brite, holder of seventeen U.S. and foreign patents, has just been awarded his third patent on ROACH PRUFE. Brite says: "Because roaches simply do not recognize ROACH PRUFE as an insecticide, they do not try to avoid it by scattering to other parts of your residence as they do with other insecticides. Plus the electrostatically charged powder sticks to the roach's body and is then carried back into the walls and spread among the other roaches. The result is you kill not only the roaches you see, but also those hiding and multiplying in the walls."

ROACH PRUFE is odorless, non-evaporating, non-staining, and non-flammable. The powder is simply applied with a teaspoon under kitchen appliances and in other hidden areas. It can be used in homes, schools, hospitals, restaurants, plus new construction.

ROACH PRUFE is available at most hardware stores or it can be ordered direct from the manufacturer by sending a check or money order for $8.90. This includes postage for the one pound container. Add tax in California. One pound covers up to a nine room residence. You'll need an extra pound for a basement or garage. Send to Copper Brite, Inc., Dept. 12 at 5147 W. Jefferson Blvd., Los Angeles, CA 90016. Copies of the 3 University tests are available by sending a self-addressed stamped envelope to Copper Brite, Inc., Dept. A.

DR. LEWIS BERMAN'S MONTHLY COLUMN

NUTRITIONAL TIPS: KEEP IT SIMPLE

Are gourmet diets and "people food" good for your pet? When Judy Mazel, author of the best-selling Beverly Hills Diet book, asked me to prescribe a special dietary program for her French poodle, Treasure, I declined. Why? If you want to keep a healthy pet healthy, feed it commercial pet food.

Judy might have been disappointed with this advice, but normal, healthy pets won't be helped by tasty all-meat or fish delicacies. Nor are prescription diets necessary, except for animals with serious health or weight problems. National brand pet foods are well designed to fulfill the nutritional needs of a healthy pet.

Tim Grejek

It is, however, easy to become confused about what to buy. Should you be giving your pet foods that are dry? Moist? Semi-moist? Specially formulated for animals that are old? Young? Middle-aged?

Your pet's condition will tell you if its diet is right. Does it have a shiny coat? Bright eyes? A stomach that is not upset after meals? These result from a proper diet. On the other hand, if your dog or cat doesn't look or act well, try a different food or consult your veterinarian, who may prescribe a diet.

Here are a few thoughts to guide you: (1) Remember that all animals have varying nutritional needs. Kittens and puppies, for example, need a higher quality protein food than adult pets. Study all ingredient labels carefully. (2) Stick to the respected national brands. Avoid generic brands that are marked simply "Dog Food" or "Cat Food," as well as packaged gourmet foods or brands with private labels prepared exclusively for your local store — unless such brands have been specifically recommended by your veterinarian or a very trusted fellow pet-owner. (3) Cats should never be given dog food. Cats require a higher protein and fat diet as well as an amino acid (taurine) that is lacking in dog food. Likewise, dogs can get diarrhea from cat food. (4) If possible, include both dry and moist foods in your animal's daily diet. Each has its advantages. Dry food will force pets to drink more water, which can help prevent the formation of bladder stones and other urinary tract disorders. Dry food also helps fight the buildup of dental plaque. Moist foods are generally lower in ash (although most dry foods today have far less ash than they once did). Ash in high concentrations can lead to urinary tract infections.

The most common cause of animal illnesses (aside from the classical diseases associated with old age) is poor nutrition. By that, I don't mean starvation. Most people overfeed their pets, and they do so with the wrong foods. The amount of food any animal eats should be carefully calibrated to its weight, age and exercise routine. Dogs lap up their food in just a few minutes, while cats generally take twenty minutes to a half hour. If you find your pet spending a longer period of time eating, or leaving food in its dish, it's time to reduce the supply.

I'm strictly against giving food from the table to a pet, particularly on a routine basis. An animal's digestive system isn't easily acclimated to sharp dietary changes. A treat of spicy meat or fish may make your animal sick. "People food" can also damage your pet's psyche — not to mention your nerves and your pocketbook. Animals are easily spoiled. Many times clients will tell me things like, "My dog will eat only medium-rare filet mignon. He won't touch other well-done cuts!" Can you blame the pampered pet?

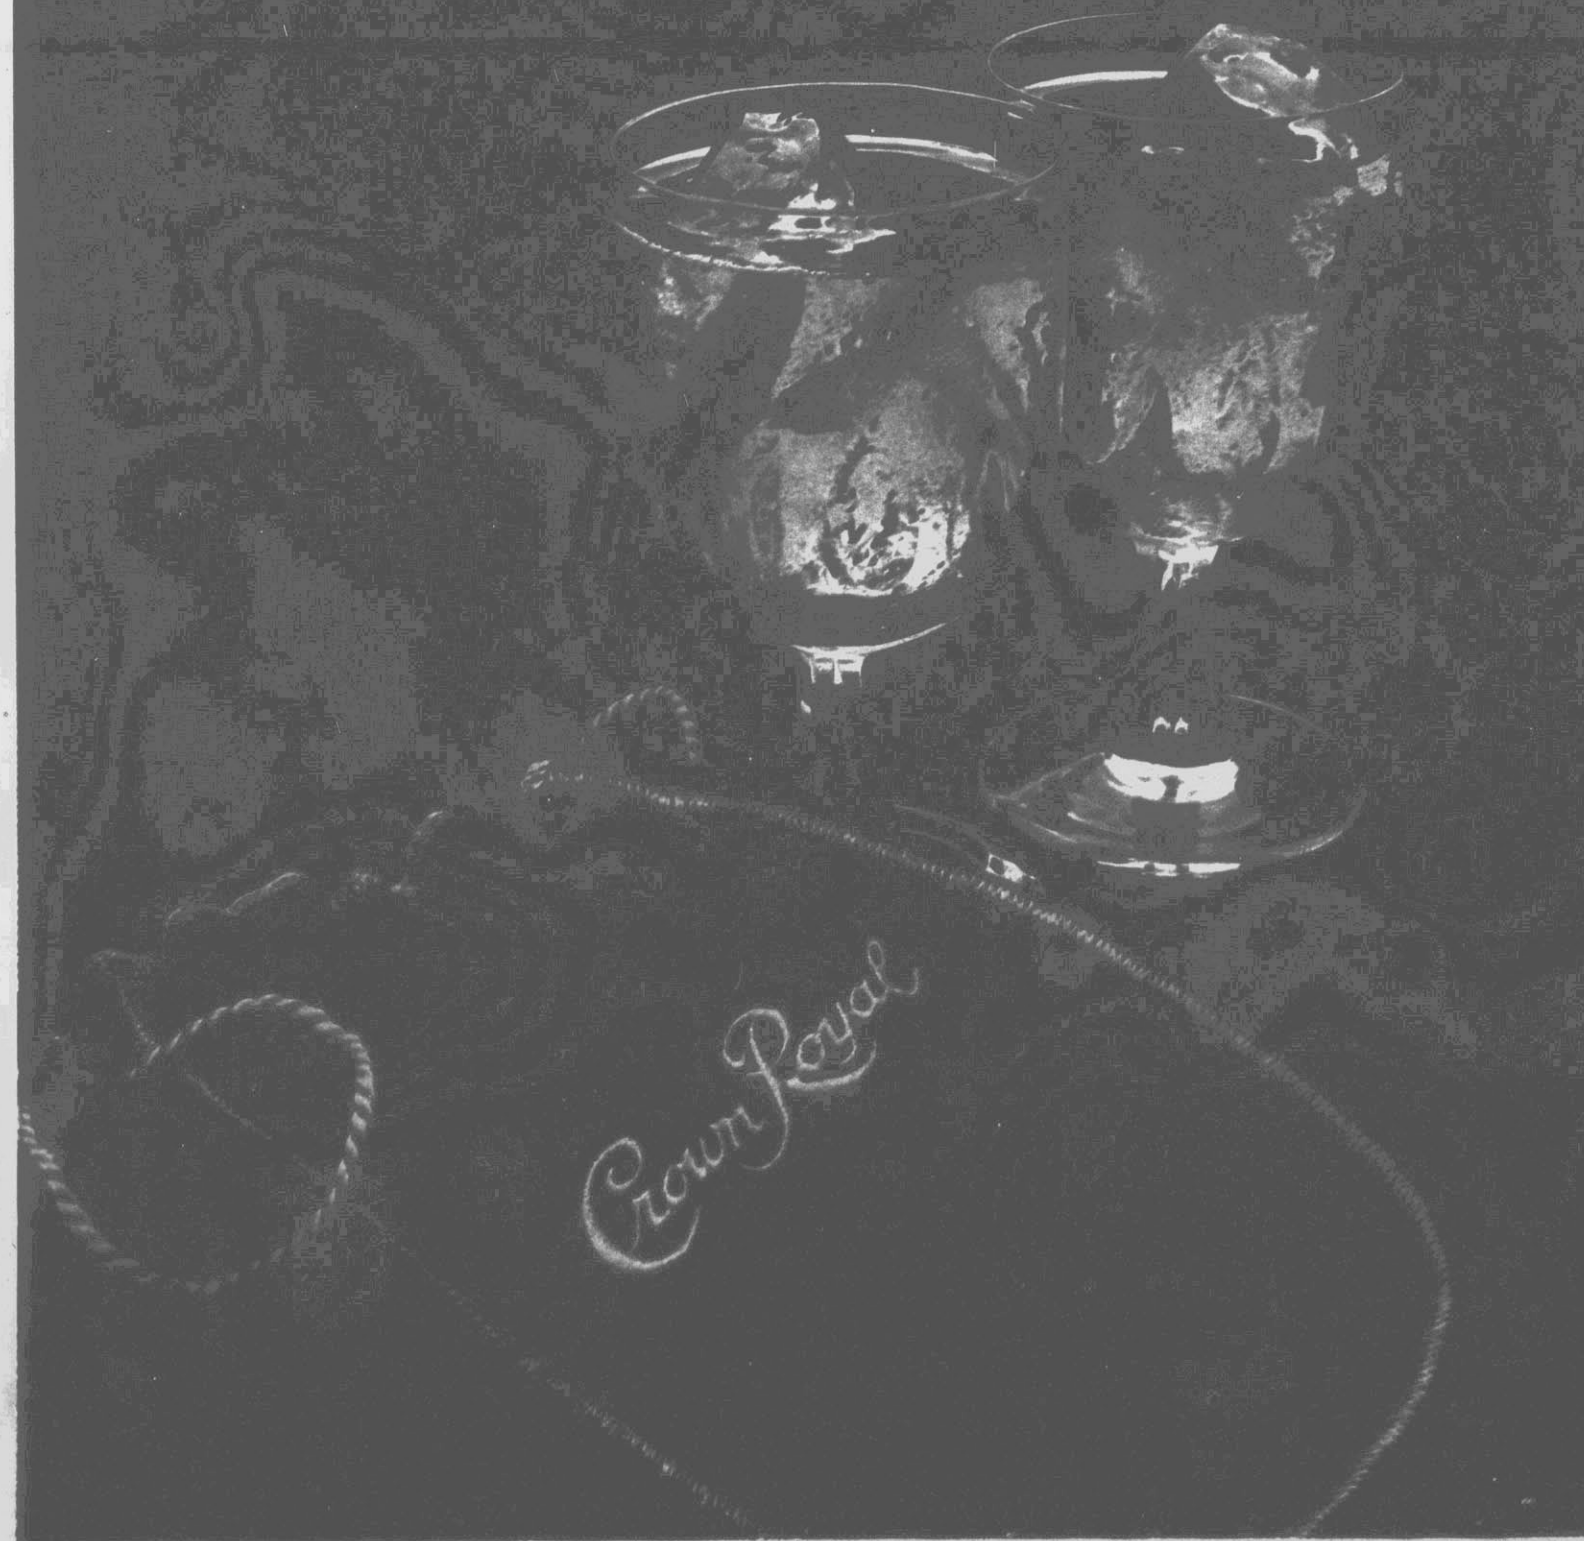

Be sensible. Feeding your pet is an act of love, of course, but you can still give amply from the heart without overdoing the food. Cats and dogs have sensitive time clocks. They should eat at the same times every day. If you insist on treating your pet to food from the table once in a while, never do so during the course of your own meal. If you slip, you'll never again eat in peace!

I realize that it isn't always pleasant or easy to follow this cautionary advice. I'm quite strict with my pets these days, but I wasn't always. Mitchell, my first fantastic cat, used to have his own place at the table. I'd fill a dish with little portions of meat, shrimp or melon rind. With his front paws on the table, Mitchell dined with me every night for 11 years. It just goes to show you: Vets are human, too. FW

FROM WISCONSIN

STICKS AND STONES AND VERBS AND NOUNS CAN HURT YOU

If you think Joan Rivers is the last word in ego-puncturing put-downs, think again. Dr. Reinhold Aman publishes Maledicta, a scholarly yearbook devoted to worldwide verbal aggression.

Aman maintains that "people are killed, injured, jailed, fined or fired every day because of insults. These words cause such misery, and [therefore] are important. I try to show how one nationality, religion, sex attacks another. In a sneaky way, I'm trying to teach tolerance."

Aman feels Americans are becoming increasingly foul-mouthed but have also "lost all creative sense of insult and invective." Next time someone cusses you out, write Maledicta, 331 S. Greenfield Ave., Waukesha, Wisc., 53186, and Aman's publication will suggest something kinder, or at least more creative, to shoot back in response.

FROM FRANCE

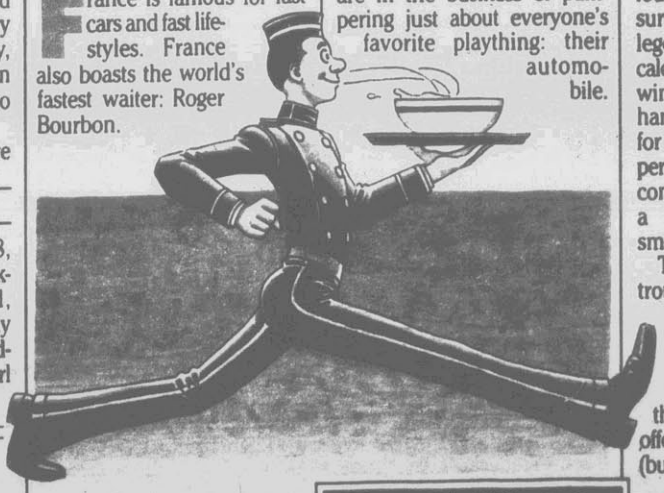

I CAN'T HEAR YOU WHEN THE WAITER'S RUNNING

France is famous for fast cars and fast lifestyles. France also boasts the world's fastest waiter: Roger Bourbon.

Bourbon recently officiated at the first annual "Souper Waiters' Race" held in New York City. In this grueling event, entrants ran half a mile in full waiter's regalia, carrying a bowl of soup on a tray.

Bourbon holds the world record for completing a marathon under these conditions — 2 hours 47 minutes in London in 1981, a fine time even in less formal attire. "The waiter's clothes get heavier and heavier as you sweat," Bourbon points out. "And the tray weighs an extra four pounds."

But there can be gains from the pain. In 1979 at the New York City marathon, Czech Olympic champion Emil Zatopek sought him out at the finish, recalls Bourbon, "with a beautiful smile in his eyes, saying: 'How do you do it? It's fantastic!' " We don't know if the track immortal gave the waiter any tips.

FROM CALIFORNIA

BABY, YOU CAN BABY MY CAR

Steve's Detailing shops — the latest California phenomenon making its way to the East Coast — are in the business of pampering just about everyone's favorite plaything: their automobile.

Gary Epstein, an architect who threw over building houses for burnishing Hudsons, owns the Eastern shops and assures all comers that "a car given our kind of care on a regular basis can look good almost indefinitely. It takes eight to ten hours to do a detailing, and your dirty old car will look like new."

Epstein says that after just one detailing, his customers are as excited "as a little kid getting a new basket for his bike." Interested? Then call (212) 868-0362, and for $145, your '64 Chevy may look like a million.

FROM DELAWARE

TERMS OF ENLARGEMENT

What do college women do when life gets heavy? Get heavier, according to the findings of a University of Delaware study. We've all heard about "The Freshman 20" (pounds), but it seems that this phenomenon is restricted, uh, largely to women.

Louise Little, associate professor of human nutrition, and grad student Christine Haar found that under the pressures of classes or exams, college men tend to burn off calories through exercise to unwind. Women, on the other hand — when they didn't opt for talking with a supportive person — derived their greatest comfort from eating, drinking a caffeinated beverage, or smoking.

The men who did eat their troubles away preferred pizza, while women overwhelmingly chose chocolate. Little says healthy foods like fruit got very few votes — "and then with men only." We offer this as food for thought (but not consumption).

BEDSIDE READING

Tom Hayden, State Rep., Santa Monica, Calif.

"I recently finished Jackie Robinson: Baseball's Great Experiment, by Jules Tygiel. And I'm now on page 308 of Iacocca. I find it very light and enjoyable. I think he's a competent salesman, but it's funny — everybody treats him as living evidence that free enterprise is well. But basically, this is a story of how the government helped out business — and the government gets no credit."

Christine M. Niedermeier, State Rep., Fairfield, Conn.

"I read the book Coming Home, by Sen. Paul Tsongas. Ultimately, he gave up everything he had worked for politically, not only because he faced a personal health question, but because of a sense of trying to establish priorities, and when it came time to do that, it was his family first, and that's a tough decision for any politician to make."

• FAST DRAW! It is easy to draw the owl at right in a few seconds. Step No. 1: Draw a heart. Step 2: Add ears, eyes, nose and feet. Step 3: Add haunches and segments of tree branch. Step 4: Fill in bolstering blacks.

Just for fun, try drawing another subject similarly.

CREATED BY HAL FOSTER

Our Story: PRINCE VALIANT AND HIS MEN REACH THE ROYAL WINTER CAMP SURROUNDING THE SKY PILLAR. SO LONG AS THE OLD KING LIVES, NEITHER OF HIS WARRING SONS WILL TRY TO SCALE THE SACRED COLUMN---AND THEREBY CLAIM THE CROWN. INSTEAD, THEY WEAR ONE ANOTHER DOWN IN FUTILE SKIRMISHES.

HOW LONG WILL KING ASLAK HOLD OUT? POISONED BY MORDRED'S AGENT, HE GROWS WEAKER DAY BY DAY.

MIKKEL'S AUNT, HETTA, TENDS THE OLD MONARCH SELFLESSLY. A YOUNG WOMAN WITH SKIN AS WHITE AS PTARMIGAN, SHE TREATS THE STRICKEN KING AS IF HE WERE HER.... "NO," VAL DECIDES, "HE IS MORE THAN A FATHER TO HER." AND SHE IS MORE THAN A DOCILE NURSE.

"MIKKEL, WHERE HAVE YOU BEEN? WHO ARE THESE PEOPLE?" EVEN THE VIKINGS SLINK FROM HER FURY. "HEAR ME, WOMAN," PRINCE VALIANT BEGINS. HER EYES WIDEN TO THE ROUNDNESS OF A DWARF-BIRCH LEAF. "DON'T 'WOMAN' ME, STRANGER. NOW OUT OF HERE, ALL OF YOU."

OUTSIDE, VAL PLACATES THIS FORMIDABLE WOMAN. "MY LADY HETTA," HE SAYS, "PARDON OUR PRESUMPTION. I PLACE MY MEN AT YOUR SERVICE. WE COME TO RESTORE PEACE AND PRESERVE THE KINGDOM. YOU CANNOT DO IT ALONE." EVEN AS HE SPEAKS, NILS AND NIILAS, THE KING'S RIVAL SONS, BLOOD THEMSELVES ONCE MORE.
