O'Neill Virtually Concedes MX Victory

By LAWRENCE L. KNUTSON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill, all but conceding defeat, said today he expects President Reagan to win in the last of four congressional votes crucial to the MX missile.

With the vote schedule this afternoon, O'Neill said he continued to "hope against hope" that the $1.5 billion appropriation would be defeated. But he conceded that two Democrats who voted against the MX on Tuesday would not be on hand today.

"So we lose two votes," O'Neill said. He did not name the two Democrats or give their reasons for not attending the fourth and final congressional MX vote.

The speaker said that while he had some hope of convincing three Republicans to vote against the appropriation, "I would have to assume the White House has those three pretty well in line," he said.

Sixty-one Democrats voted with the 219-213 majority in the initial House test on MX and O'Neill indicated he has little chance of turning any of them around.

Using an MX analogy, O'Neill joked that those votes "have been hardened in the silo."

He was asked directly if he saw any prospects for a reversal.

"I always hate to declare against myself," he replied. "I hope against

But he added that, "I don't anticipate any changes."

On Wednesday, O'Neill said he was making "an all-out effort" to orchestrate an upset to stop the release of the money to build a second installment of 21 of the intercontinental nuclear weapons.

But House Majority Leader Jim Wright of Texas said Reagan clearly has the support he needs in the narrowly divided House to slip the MX money past its final legislative roadblock.

Reagan was expected to continue lobbying by telephone even though he was scheduled to be in New York City at the time of the vote.

"There is a chance, but it's a hard chance," for the House to reverse itself, said Fred Wertheimer, president of Common Cause and a leading anti-MX lobbyist.

The House voted 219 to 213 Tuesday night to authorize the MX spending, a step some House members contended is sufficient to show American resolve and to maintain the weapon as a bargaining chip at U.S.-Soviet arms control talks in Geneva.

They urged the House to bar actual appropriations for the weapon.

But Wright said, "I don't know any reason to believe that the vote would be substantially different on appro-

Pitt's First Trade Fair

Expo '85 Set May 2-4

By JANE WELBORN
Reflector Staff Writer

The Pitt-Greenville Chamber of Commerce announced today that Pitt County's first trade fair, Expo '85, will be sponsored by the chamber in Greenville May 2-4.

At a press conference this morning, chamber of commerce President Ed Walker said the fair will represent the growth in Pitt County and will allow exhibitors to "show their stuff." Booths will be set up by area participants involved in business, industry, agriculture, education and home and garden in the New Greenville Warehouse on the Pactolus Highway. Exhibitors will be able to sell their goods and services at the fair.

"Eastern North Carolina has grown and it is sometimes kept a secret," Walker said. "We want to pull the curtain up on this area and show what makes Pitt County great."

Walker said an estimated 20,000 people from eastern North Carolina communities will attend the fair, giving exhibitors an opportunity to reach many visitors.

Besides booths and exhibitions, Expo '85 will include entertainment by The Band of Oz, Super Grit Cowboy Band and Archie Campbell, star of "Hee Haw."

"We live in a great community and we have a lot of great businesses," said John Williams, chairman of the chamber's Small Business Council. "This is a time to show our stuff."

Twenty percent of the booths available at "Expo '85" have been reserved. Any member of the Pitt-Greenville Chamber of Commerce is eligible to exhibit and the deadline for exhibitors is April 15. Other businesses selling products or services will be allowed to have a booth if space remains.

"Many people do not realize that 98 percent of the Pitt-Greenville Chamber of Commerce membership is comprised of small businesses offering specialized goods and services," said chamber Board Chairman Ray Boleman. "We are excited about the prospect of bringing business, industry, agriculture, education, home and garden together under one roof at Expo '85."

Howell Says More Funds Asked For Indigents' Care

RALEIGH — East Carolina University officials told the General Assembly's Joint Base Budget Committee on Education Wednesday that the school needs more money to pay for indigent patients admitted to Pitt County Memorial Hospital by the ECU medical school faculty.

ECU Chancellor John Howell told the committee — presided over Wednesday by Rep. Ed Warren of Greenville — that PCMH "is rapidly becoming a regional medical center" serving patients from a wide area of eastern North Carolina.

ECU needs more money to pay the hospital for non-Pitt patients admitted by the medical school faculty because many of those patients are unable to pay their bills themselves, Howell said.

Pitt County Memorial Hospital is the prime clinical teaching facility for the medical school, and faculty members admit patients to PCMH for treatment and to teach students. The hospital pays for indigent patients from Pitt County, but the university must pay for indigent patients from other counties.

Medical School Dean William Laupus told the legislators "for this year, we will be short about $700,000" in payments for indigent patients. If the state also picks up the cost of neonatal intensive care patients, Laupus said the school would need another $800,000 a year.

ECU's request, Laupus said, is for $1.5 million for 1985-1986 and for $2 million for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1986.

Laupus told the lawmakers that another reason more indigent patients are coming to PCMH is that for-profit hospitals are replacing county hospitals in the area and are refusing to admit poor patients.

Howell said this morning that the university had already presented its budget in written form and "what we did was simply support, in a general way, all the things that had been presented. Our approach to them was to describe what East Carolina University does for the region and the state."

The additional money to cover the costs of indigent patients, Howell said, "an expense placed on Pitt County Memorial Hospital because the medical school is here and using the hospital as a teaching hospital ... is the result of expanded use of the medical school and the hospital."

Warren said today that Howell and Laupus "did an excellent job on their presentation and it was well received."

Warren expressed the hope that

Teen Dems Plan Meet

The election of state officers will highlight the Teen Dems state convention to be held here this weekend.

Participants in the teen Democrats session will begin registering Friday afternoon and county caucuses, where candidates will outline their programs, will begin at 9:30 p.m.

Saturday's schedule includes a general business session for the election of state officers and debates on resolutions, including such issues as patronage jobs in state government (patronage or professionalism), abortion, the Supreme Court decision on search and seizure in schools, driving while impaired laws, day care and the public schools and the environment.

Officers will be installed at a 4 p.m. pig-picking at the Blount Farm on the Old River Road, where Wade M. Smith of Raleigh, chairman of the North Carolina Democratic Party, will be the keynote speaker.

The convention will end Sunday morning following a breakfast.

TORNADO ANNIVERSARY — Today marks the first anniversary of a killer tornado that struck Pitt County on the evening of March 28, 1984, killing at least nine persons and injuring 148 others. The storm, classified as a "super cell," took a heavy toll in North Carolina, causing at least 44 deaths and injuring a total of 928 persons. The Portertown community in the Eastern

Pines section of Pitt County was one of the hardest hit areas. Today only a few vacant lots and some debris linger as reminders of that night when the whirling winds roared through the county, demolishing homes, uprooting trees and tossing vehicles over the farm area. Most areas have been rebuilt. (Reflector Photo by Tommy Forrest)

Creegan Memorial Fund Nearing Goal Of $10,000

By JANE WELBORN
Reflector Staff Writer

When the tornado ripped through Pitt County on March 28, 1984, the storm took with it the life of a teacher "beloved by her students and respected by her colleagues." A scholarship was set up in the memory of Faye M. Creegan, and a year after the disaster, the endowment fund will reach its initial goal of helping a teacher follow in Miss Creegan's footsteps.

The Faye M. Creegan Scholarship, established following her death, will be awarded annually to a rising senior woman at East Carolina University who is preparing to teach history and social studies in the middle and secondary grades (grades six-12). The endowment's initial goal of $10,000 will be met by the end of this month.

Miss Creegan, 40, was a social studies teacher at E.B. Aycock Junior High School at the time of her death. A native of Raleigh, she graduated from East Carolina College in 1965 with a bachelor's degree in social studies and a minor in English. She participated in the history honors program.

Following her graduation, Miss Creegan taught at Greenville Junior High School and then at the new E.B. Aycock Junior High School.

Dr. John Howell, East Carolina University chancellor, said he knew Miss Creegan when she was a student, and continued his association with her when his sons attended E.B. Aycock Junior High School.

"Faye Creegan stands out among the people who have gone through the ECU teacher training program as a teacher who knew her subject

Story-Song Approach Teaches Kids About 'Women Of Courage'

By JEFF STRICKLER
Minneapolis Star and Tribune
ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) — Move over, Paul Revere. Sybil Ludington is charging through.

The 16-year-old Ludington is one of the historical figures featured in an educational reading-listening series called "Women of Courage" being produced by the Eclectic Co. in St. Paul.

The series, aimed at giving children a better perspective of women's contributions to history, is beginning its second year atop a wave of success that has far exceeded anybody's expectations.

"When we started this series, we planned for regional distribution," said Jeanne Junge, executive director of the non-profit organization dedicated to the preservation of folk arts. "But we sent a preview issue to Ms. magazine, a small article ran and — wham! — we had a national market."

The endorsements started coming — from Ed Asner and Marlo Thomas, from the National Library Association and the United Nations School in New York City. And the orders started coming, from Maine and Florida, from Bermuda and Alaska, more orders than the tiny St. Paul office was ready to handle.

"I didn't know anything about purchase orders or packing slips or any of that stuff," admitted Ms. Junge, a folk singer. "We were literally downstairs, taking cardboard out of the garbage and cutting it up for our mailings."

Each "Women of Courage" issue consists of a record and a booklet. On one side of the record a storyteller describes the subject's courageous deeds, while on the other side is a song about the woman and her achievements.

The booklet provides background information about why the contributions were so important and has a list of "things to do" to better understand the magnitude of the accomplishments.

In the case of Sybil Ludington — the daughter of a Revolutionary War commander who rode 40 miles on horseback to alert her father's troops that British soldiers were attacking Danbury, Conn. — the children are supposed to use a map to plot a 40-mile round trip from their home through neighboring communities.

The idea for the program crystallized while Ms. Junge and Paula Brandes, the organization's director of educational services and outreach, were creatively kicking around the lyrics of a song that became "Ride, Sybil, Ride." At the time they were thinking of producing a series of songs tentatively titled "Women's Notes." But then Ms. Junge made a discovery.

"I couldn't help but notice that there were no songs about special women," she said. "I had to conclude that either the women involved in history had never been written about or they had been forgotten. That's when we decided to do this as an educational series. We decided to put women back in their place in history."

They used the story-song approach because they considered it a medium that would be more interesting to youngsters than the traditional textbook.

"I love making history come alive for kids, especially dealing with the folk arts in such a wonderful way," Ms. Junge said. "We wanted to make the kids understand that these were real people — they were not cardboard cutouts. And we wanted them to recognize the courage in themselves, to make them realize that they are as capable of making history as anyone else."

"We also did not want boys to grow up believing that women's accomplishments are important just to women. We wanted them to know that they are important to all of us."

Skit Given For Credit-Women

The Greenville Credit-Women International held its meeting Tuesday at the Three Steers. A skit "Let's Begin" was presented.

The purpose of the skit was to emphasize the importance of duties of club officers. Participating were Mildred Porter, Debbie Johnston, Sandy Simmons, Doris Price, Ellen Ramacorti, Pearl Hartsell and Carol Hardee.

Mrs. Hardee was recognized for heading up the spring board meeting which was held in Greenville.

Angeline Ventgers gave a report on the state president's project "Building a Better You."

Marian Hardee, president, conducted the meeting.

Fresh Strawberries Top This Cheesecake

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
Associated Press Food Editor

In the 1940s a well-known Broadway restaurant in New York City became famous for its cheesecake. The dessert was described by restaurant critics of the day as "high and handsome ... with great flavor and lightness ... the finest in town." Since then, from all signs, cheesecake mania has gradually overtaken America.

At the moment, on my bookshelves, are three hardbound books and an equal number of booklets given over entirely to cheesecake recipes. And I doubt there are any regional cookbooks, assembled by various groups for charitable purposes, that do not include at least one cheesecake recipe.

For some time I have been looking for a cheesecake recipe that would produce the "flavor and lightness" of the old Broadway restaurant variety. Finally, a friend found it for us.

At a recent bridal shower for her daughter, this paragon of cheesecakes was served — and the recipe freely given. The favorite topping for the old Broadway restaurant's cheesecake was fresh strawberries. This recipe follows suit.

STRAWBERRY CHEESECAKE

- 1/4 cup butter
- 1 1/2 cups finely crushed graham cracker crumbs
- 1 1/4 cups sugar
- Two 8-ounce packages cream cheese, at room temperature
- 1 1/2 tablespoons all-purpose flour
- 2 teaspoons grated orange rind
- 1/4 teaspoon salt
- 1 teaspoon vanilla
- 3 large eggs
- 2 tablespoons sour cream
- 1 pint strawberries
- 1/4 cup currant jelly

1 teaspoon water

In an 8-inch skillet, over low heat, melt butter; off heat thoroughly stir in graham cracker crumbs and 1/4 cup of the sugar. Press crumb mixture, with the back of a spoon, over the bottom and 1 1/2 inches up the sides of an 8-inch springform pan. Set aside.

In a medium bowl beat together cream cheese and remaining 1 cup sugar. Beat in flour, orange rind, salt and vanilla. Beat in eggs, one at a time, until blended after each addition. Beat in sour cream until blended. Pour into prepared springform pan.

Bake in a preheated 350-degree oven for 5 minutes. Reduce heat to 200 degrees. Continue baking until a knife inserted 2 inches from edge of pan comes out clean — 25 to 30 minutes. Cool completely.

With a small metal spatula and an up-and-down movement, loosen sides. Remove rim.

Hull and cut strawberries in halves. Arrange, cut side down, in any pattern you like over the top of the cake.

In a 6-inch skillet over low heat stir together currant jelly and water until jelly melts; spoon over strawberries. Refrigerate until serving time.

Makes 8 servings.

Note: The unusual oven temperatures given in the recipe are correct.

At Wits End

By Erma Bombeck

You have a cold.

Your eyes feel like round razor blades. Your lips are feverish and dry. Your chest sounds like the wind rushing through a cracked car window. Every time you swallow, it's as if you're trying to force down a velcro tennis ball.

No one seems to know or to care that these are your last hours on earth. They say, "You want coffee?" "Can you get that phone?" "Where do you want to have lunch?"

I don't understand it. Colds used to command a certain amount of respect in this country. It used to be if my head felt warm and I didn't eat all of my breakfast, my mother would put me to bed for three days. She called the doctor, brought trays and read stories to me. People would ask where I got it and what I was taking for it. It was important.

Then I got married and my colds changed. They felt the same, but no one got too excited about them. My husband said they were my own fault. Anyone who was crazy enough to wear a bathing suit in April just to be the first one on the block to get a tan deserved to be sick.

After the children came, everyone called my cold a "no surprise" cold. After all, what did you expect when sick children coughed in your face and handed you their dirty nose tissue to dispose of? The cure for it was to walk it to death and be careful you didn't pass it on to the rest of the family.

I didn't get a generic cold until I was in my 30s. A generic cold is one of those no personality-ordinary-garden variety-one-size-fits-all colds that "is going around" and everyone in town has one just like it. Same symptoms, same medication, same prognosis. You know you're not going to get any sympathy with it when you see your doctor and he has one just like it.

Even if you stay at home for a day with a generic cold, when you go to work the next morning someone will snipe, "Enjoy your day off!"

This leads us to the cold of the '80s. No one fights it anymore. They just "go public" with it. They sneeze on your hymnal, they cough on your food, they kiss you hello with germ-ridden lips. They hand you a phone that they've infected. They blow their noses on a crowded elevator. Their white faces and feverish bodies remind you hourly that life does not go on forever.

It's as if everyone has given up. Take your honey and vinegar and shove it! Go suck a lozenge for all the good it will do! I had a good night's sleep. It's still here! Tough it out like the rest of us!

I had a cold of the '80s last week and casually mentioned to my husband, "I think I'll knock off work early and die." He said, "Good, you can get gas before the rush hour."

Spring Fashions Bring Changes In Hairstyles

CHICAGO (AP) — As the fashion pendulum swings away from the man-tailored, oversized looks of previous seasons to a renewed awareness of the feminine form, hairstyles, too, will change to complement spring's new short skirts, soft-shaped shirts and flashy floral prints.

According to the members of the Helene Curtis Hairstylists Advisory Board, the sheared, mannish cuts of last fall will make way for softer, sensuous designs that move forward to flatter the face.

"The forward movement of hair is the big message for spring," notes board member Victor Figueroa of

New York City. "Spiky wisps that curl around cheeks and brows will frame the face with a totally feminine, gamine look."

Rocco Altobelli of Minneapolis adds, "There's a new shaggy texture, almost like macrame, that's cut into the hair and enhanced with a soft perm for gentle lift. Perm techniques that use a mix of rods and rollers to achieve several different wave patterns within the style are favored by fashion-aware stylists for today's soft looks."

Short hair is still the preferred length because of its versatility and adaptability to the busy, active lives of working women, board members say. But they add that there may be several lengths of hair in each style — from super-short at the nape with longer lengths on top, to looks that feature a very short, feathery crown graduating to shaggy chin-length layers.

"Along with the support of a perm, we're adding color to the hair to give a multidimensional illusion," says Darleen Hakola of Portland, Ore. "We often emphasize a wave in the hair with color or lighten only the tips of an airy, wispy style to add interest."

"And, while the colors we will be using this spring are vivid tones, they have none of the hardness of the neon colors used last fall. The overall effect should be soft and easy on the eye."

The versatility of spring hair fashions can be seen in the differences between day and evening looks. Geri Mataya of Pittsburgh feels that daytime looks "will rely on the support of perms, mousses and styling gels for lift and all-day support with a soft feeling. But at night, the influence of the '60s comes into play as lots of back-brushing adds more volume and moves hair up and out in any direction."

Douglas Marvaldi of Winter Park, Fla., sums up the spring hair fashion statement of the advisory board in one word: unconstructed.

"Spring looks are much easier for everyone to wear and to style at home," he says. "There is a softness to the styles that is flattering to every woman. After a good professional cut, perm and color, achieving the look at home is a simple matter of foaming in a bit of mousse, then 'squishing' the hair with the hands as it dries into a natural, crinkled, textured line."

Write Nothing Incriminating In Your Recycled Letters

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: It happened again, and I am furious! Someone with whom I correspond sent my letter on for others to read without asking my permission to do so. Would you call that ethical?

Is it necessary for a person to state in so many words that the writer does not want his/her letter sent to another? Or shouldn't that be assumed?

I would appreciate your printing this. I think I know what you will say, but some people need to see it in black and white.

FUMING IN BURLINGTON, IOWA

DEAR FUMING: Is it ethical? No. Don't assume anything. Remember, the pen is not only mightier than the sword, it can be equally dangerous. So if you're concerned about your letters being recycled, write nothing incriminating, or write nothing at all.

DEAR ABBY: I am 46 years old and my husband is 44. We have been married two years—his third, my second. My problem is that this man is insatiable in the bedroom! He's been this way ever since we were married. He wants sex at least three times a day. On weekends we spend the whole day in bed. I thought he would eventually slow down, but his sex drive is as strong as ever.

He's a model husband in every other way, but I am exhausted from all this lovemaking. I feel like a prostitute who has to deliver on demand, only I'm not getting paid for it.

Once a day would be plenty for me, but he insists it's not enough for him. I want to be a good wife, and I'm afraid if I deny him he will go elsewhere to satisfy himself. What can I do? I don't want to lose him.

EXHAUSTED IN PALO ALTO

DEAR EXHAUSTED: Look at the facts: Your husband's sexual appetite far exceeds yours, but you continue to deliver on demand like an unpaid prostitute for fear you'll lose him. Meanwhile, you're exhausted.

My dear lady, you must tell your "model husband" exactly how you feel. If you lack the courage, see a counselor who will surely call your husband in, since he is part of the problem. You need to be assured that your feelings are every bit as important as his. And he needs to know it, too. If you married for love, perhaps you have the wrong man. And if he married for sex, perhaps he has the wrong woman.

Coping

Today's anniversary of the 1984 tornados which roared through eastern North Carolina, and particularly Pitt and Greene counties, brings back varied memories for us all.

Most were spared the worst of the damage that night, although all who were in Pitt County recall it as a dark and stormy night, one which was punctuated by howling winds.

For those in the path there are memories of their homes being ripped away. Some were left in fields, pelted by rains and without sense of direction. There were deaths and injuries as a result of the storm. At Pitt County Memorial Hospital emergency medicine personnel soon recognized they had a major catastrophe and they organized to handle the injured. Those who could pitched in to help and they were soon joined by many trained rescue people. That spirit carried over into the following days with contributions pouring in and friends helping in the stricken areas to clear away the damage.

It was a tragic night for Pitt and area counties, and also a proud one.

It is a night such as we never wish to see again, but we take comfort in the knowledge that we can cope.

Change

It's disheartening to reflect upon significance of the Sharpeville anniversary killings in South Africa. Anniversary marchers, numbering more than 3,000, refused to disperse on orders of police and 19 people were killed, another 20-plus wounded.

Subsequent demonstrations have been reduced to confrontations with more deaths resulting.

There were "mind-sets" involved. The marchers were aware if they did not disband there was a probability they would be fired upon. They made their choice.

The heavily outnumbered police must have been similarly aware a dispersal order would be ignored, but they were committed to their orders and the world well knows the outcome. Both sides had closed doors to avoiding the bloodstained confrontation.

Could the United States play an influential role to end apartheid? Or, maybe the question is, should the United States play an influential role. It concerns a lot of people. History tells us something about that choice.

Early European settlers created an agricultural economy in southern Africa that expanded into trade. Later more resources of the land were developed and industrialization and banking became part of the picture.

That economic wealth was a magnet to more people living outside the developing area, and the established settlers imported some Asians to help augment their labor supply. Their numbers, coupled with a very large native population in the area, almost required a practice of separate societies as a means of self-preservation. At first it was understandable; subsequently, abuses made it repugnant, but by that time the practice had become cemented into law.

Again, can outsiders change attitudes held by generations of South Africa's European element?

It seems unlikely. Changes of that nature come from within. Truth to tell, outside pressures appear more likely to raise intransigence with an even higher price to be eventually paid.

The immediate prospect is not good, and long-range prospects are not much better.

President Exposes A Hidden Role

WASHINGTON — The hidden hand of Ronald Reagan in the Mideast was briefly exposed to White House insiders when he reacted with instinctive enthusiasm to the pact between Jordan's King Hussein and the PLO's Yasir Arafat as a possible breakthrough for settling the Palestinian question.

Sensing that the long stalemate might be breaking, the president revealed an enthusiasm and an understanding of the West Bank that surprised his aides — and momentarily shocked Secretary of State George Shultz. Shultz wanted more from Hussein and Arafat than they could offer in their Feb. 11 agreement. He wanted the United States to react to it with restraint, not exuberance. He wanted to pressure Hussein to pressure Arafat for more concessions.

This contrast between the president and his chief diplomat over how to solve the Palestine question is not a policy crisis and represents no split between Reagan and Shultz. But it does send a signal to pro-American, moderate Arabs: Shultz's skepticism is not shared by that consummate politician in the Oval Office. That should be appreciated by Hussein, for whom Reagan has a special affection, when he visits the White House later this year.

Again demonstrating his influence, Shultz persuaded Reagan and like-minded White House aides, for the present at least, to restrain their exuberance for the Hussein-Arafat pact. He got the president to embrace arm's-length coolness to the pact, the policy advocated by Israel. Still, Reagan's instinct to actively support and advance Hussein's initiative warns Shultz that the president will not permit the Hussein-Arafat agreement to hang out to dry.

Shultz's policy of restrain pervaded Hosni Mubarak's visit to WASHINGTON — Philosophers teach us that for many of the most abiding questions of mankind, no definitive answers exist. What is truth? What is justice? What is beauty? Lately we have been hearing a great deal about "worth." What is "worth"?

People magazine recently reported the 1984 incomes of 57 celebrities. In Atlanta, the Constitution rounded up the salaries of the city's professional athletes. In Washington, the Post published the reflections of a physician who inquired, "Do doctors deserve what they earn?"

Consider a few figures. People magazine reported that Clint Eastwood earned $5 million for his role in "City Heat." Sally Field got $1.5 million for playing in "Places in the Heart." Tom Selleck is paid $220,000 for each episode of "Magnum, P.I.," or $4.8 million for the season. Geraldine Ferraro has received a $1 million advance to write an autobiography; she was paid a half a million for a 30-second Pepsi-Cola commercial.

Gavin MacLeod, captain of the Love Boat, sails along at nearly $1.4 million a year. Bill Cosby earns $1.1 million for his show. Other TV salaries: Brent Musburger, $2 million; Bryant Gumbel, "more than $1 million," and Diane Sawyer, $800,000. Alex, the dog that does commercials for Stroh's beer, takes home $317 a day.

Down in Atlanta, home of the Braves, outfielder Dale Murphy tops the club payroll at $1.6 million. Third baseman Bob Horner scoops up $1.5 million. Pitcher Bruce Sutter threw for $1,125,000 last season. On the gridiron, the Falcons' running back William Andrews runs for $655,000. On the basketball court, the Hawks' center Tree Rollins dribbles along at $678,000.

The Washington doctor, a woman internist, provided some figures from the American Medical Association. In 1983, on the average, a practicing physician earned $106,000. A few specialists, chiefly surgeons, earned in excess of $250,000. The typical pediatrician takes in $61,500 after expenses. A family doctor might charge $35 for half an hour of consultation.

The doctrine of comparable worth is a hot topic here and in the state capitals. If roughly the same levels of education and stamina are required for (1) driving a truck and (2) running a laundry machine, are not the jobs of comparable worth? Shouldn't the wages therefore be roughly the same? What is the job of a trash collector worth? Are quarterbacks, rock stars, doctors and truck drivers "worth" what they earn?

Publius Syrus, who spent much of his life writing maxims, provided the best of all answers 2,000 years ago. "Everything," said this philosopher in his Maxim 847, "is worth what its purchaser will pay for it."

Precisely. I have a friend, Dr. Lois DeBaKey of Houston, who rumbles and growls incessantly at the injustice of an economic system that pays a rock star more than it pays a neurosurgeon. The rock star may not be able to write a coherent sentence; he may be a high school dropout; his social responsibility is zero. His take, after expenses, is $2 million a year. Is he worth it?

Obviously the rock star is worth it. The free market says so. There is only one Michael Jackson, and thanks to a benign God, only one person called Prince, but evidently there are enough neurosurgeons to meet the demand. Geraldine Ferraro would not be getting that advance if her publisher didn't expect to make it back. As custom in the marketplace yields to laws against sexual discrimination, more women are driving trucks, and more men are becoming flight attendants.

Dr. DeBaKey insists that something is all wrong — something is woefully false — in the way society fixes its values. Ray Marshall, who served as Jimmy Carter's secretary of labor, says that theories of the marketplace break down when it comes to comparable worth: Adam Smith's "invisible hand," he remarks, gets to be all thumbs. But the alternative in a free society is not to have a free society. The alternative is to have government fix wages, so that one neurosurgeon is officially worth four nose tackles. Maybe such decrees would work in a totalitarian state. They would never work here.

Examining The Value Of 'Worth'

—Paul T. O'Connor

Equity And The Arguments

RALEIGH — The legislative battle over repeal of the comparable worth salary study can be compared with the battle over the Equal Rights Amendment. The faces and arguments look quite similar on both sides.

But there's one big difference in 1985 as comparable worth comes before the General Assembly. This time, liberals appear to be in the driver's seat.

Comparable worth — it's officially called "pay equity" in state government — calls for a re-ordering of state salaries along a point system. The idea is to eliminate any bias created in the past because some jobs were traditionally held by women. The classic example is the highly educated librarian who makes no more than a janitor.

In 1984, comparable worth proponents slipped $600,000 into the budget to study state salaries. Now conservatives are rallying to repeal the appropriation and stop the study. Repeal looks likely in the House. But in the Senate the leadership is on record supporting comparable worth.

"I think it's a giant step backwards for pay equity," Sen. Wilma Woodard, D-Wake, says of the repeal effort. She is a leading proponent of comparable worth and a co-chairman of a special committee overseeing the study.

Mrs. Woodard says this is an issue of basic fairness. Some salaries have been artificially held down for a long time, she says, and they're not just the salaries of women. Prison guards and highway patrolmen, she says, are the most woefully underpaid people in state government. A study of their comparable value to state government would almost certainly bring those people raises, she claims.

But generally, she concedes, comparable worth is an idea aimed at eliminating pay discrimination towards women. "Discrimination in pay is not good for any party," she says. "Certainly the people of North Carolina do not want their tax money used for discrimination in wages."

Mrs. Woodard has been barraged with the arguments of Rep. Richard Wright, D-Columbus, sponsor of a bill to stop the study. She says those arguments have been used before.

Wright argues that a point value system created by private analysts is artificial and subjective and that the market place ought to determine salaries. Mrs. Woodard responds that the state has had private analysts setting state salaries since the 1940s. "There's subjectivity in every single evaluation system we've got."

Mrs. Woodard says Wright's argument "was used against equal pay for equal work," a doctrine that says men and women doing the same job ought to be paid equally. "The same argument was made against the minimum wage, child labor laws, bail-outs of corporations that have been in trouble. All of that has been called interfering with the free enterprise system," she said.

Wright says the Legislature didn't debate the study in 1984. Mrs. Woodard counters that it did, that the bill was even amended on the House floor.

Wright argues that adjusting salaries could cost a fortune. Mrs. Woodard counters that no one will know the cost until the study is complete. Other states have phased in their adjustments, she says.

Mrs. Woodard needs only to stop Wright's bill in the Senate. Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan campaigned on comparable worth in 1984. Sen. Ken Royall, D-Durham, the Senate's most powerful member, originally put the study in the budget. Both men repeated their support of the study, but did say they'd consider adjustments if it is being done improperly.

Needing to win in only one chamber, and having the Senate leadership's support, proponents of the study appear to have the upper hand. It's easier to stop a bill than pass one. ERA opponents know that strategy well.

Strength For Today

We often hear the expression, "The grace of God." The Bible speaks much of God's grace. What it really means is God's graciousness.

God's grace is his willingness to forgive us our sins entirely apart from our deserts and to save us, not because we deserve to be saved, but because He loves us and wants to save us.

Certainly nothing in our lives — evil as well as good — escapes God's scrutiny. Then should we fear God? Yes, if we deliberately practice evil and refuse to turn away from these evils. But most of us are not vicious and determined sinners; we are weak sinners. In this case what we should fear is our weak and indulgent nature. What we should rely upon is God's grace and his willingness to forgive, help and redeem us.

U.S. Eyeing Protests Of Shooting

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration, reacting to the killing of an American Army officer by a Soviet soldier in East Germany, has canceled the California trip of a Soviet admiral and says it is considering further protests "involving U.S.-Soviet relations."

Rear Adm. Ivan P. Sakul'kin, the Soviet Embassy's naval attache, was summoned back to Washington for a formal protest of the shooting last Sunday of Army Maj. Arthur D. Nicholson Jr., White House spokesman Robert Sims said Wednesday.

Asked what impact Nicholson's death would have on relations between the two countries, White House spokesman Larry Speakes replied, "We are considering some steps involving U.S.-Soviet relations, but until they are finalized I can't be specific."

But another U.S. official said other steps under consideration include expelling at least one Soviet military officer on duty in West Germany.

A request that Soviet military commanders in Europe meet with their U.S. counterparts also is being considered, said the official, who spoke on condition he not be identified.

Sakul'kin was called back from California, where he had been on a U.S.-approved tour with other foreign embassy attaches, and the Soviet Embassy's No. 2 official, Oleg M. Sokolov, was summoned to the State Department twice Wednesday.

One of Sokolov's State Department visits was an evening meeting with Richard R. Burt, assistant secretary of state for European affairs.

"I will not discuss the meeting," Sokolov told reporters following the half-hour session with Burt, who is head of a panel of State Department, Pentagon and National Security Council staff members weighing actions to be taken in retaliation.

State Department spokesman Brian Carlson also refused to discuss the meeting.

Although the Soviets have called the episode regrettable, they have maintained Nicholson was taking photographs through the window of a storage building on a restricted Soviet military installation. They also said he ignored orders to halt.

But Pentagon officials rejected that account, carried by the Soviet news agency Tass, as "designed to justify the killing of Major Nicholson." They said the area was not restricted and "he had the right of access, of free transit."

Burt told a House subcommittee that the Soviet version "in some cases ... is distorted, in other cases it is deceptive and in other cases it is just flatly wrong."

Speaking of the prospects of improved U.S.-Soviet relations under the reign of new Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev, Burt told the committee: "If Gorbachev wanted to send a signal to the United States that the Soviet Union is ready for an improved relationship, this would be one area for a signal to be heard loud and clear."

The diplomatic strain resulting from the shooting won't have a direct effect on the U.S.-Soviet arms talks in Geneva, Switzerland, U.S. arms control director Kenneth L. Adelman said Wednesday.

"But it does have the effect of reminding us, once again, the nature of the Soviet Union and the way it has a fundamentally different kind of society and country than the United States," he said in an interview with The Associated Press.

Carter Aides Gather For Harris Funeral

WASHINGTON (AP) — Patricia Roberts Harris was eulogized as a leader who struggled against a "double dose of prejudice" during her lifetime before becoming the only black woman ever to hold a Cabinet post.

Mrs. Harris was buried here Wednesday following a funeral service that brought together many former Carter administration officials, including former President Carter.

Mrs. Harris, 60, died Saturday of cancer. She served as secretary of Housing and Urban Development and then of Health, Education and Welfare in the Carter administration.

"She was strong, competent and tough, but obsessed with concern for the poor, the oppressed, the inarticulate, the elderly, the homeless and the weak," Carter told 1,200 people

Williams Star

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — The day may have been rainy, but for film and television star Billy Dee Williams the 1,801st star on Hollywood's Walk of Fame shone brightly.

Williams, who appears as Brady Lloyd on the prime-time soap opera "Dynasty" was joined by about 200 people Wednesday, including his wife, children, twin sister and mother, as his star was unveiled just off Sunset Boulevard.

The 47-year-old actor won star status as Louis McKay in "Lady Sings the Blues," opposite Diana Ross' Billie Holiday and also appeared in "Return of the Jedi" and "The Empire Strikes Back."

Williams' first television role was on "The FBI," and in 1971, he received an Emmy nomination and national recognition for his work on ABC's award-winning production, "Brian's Song."

Law Officers Agree With Court's Ruling On Limits Of Deadly Force

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Supreme Court ruling limiting police authority to shoot unarmed, fleeing suspects is attracting support from many law enforcement officials who say they already abide by the new guidelines.

The ruling is "just and proper," said Robert Angrisani, spokesman for the International Association of Chiefs of Police in Gaithersburg, Md.

Association members approved the guidelines two years ago "and now the Supreme Court has agreed with us," he said.

The court ruled, 6-3, Wednesday that police may not shoot unarmed, fleeing criminal suspects who pose no apparent threat to the officers or the public. The court said a Tennessee law that allowed unrestrained use of deadly force violated the constitutional rights of suspects.

Nearly half the states in the nation have laws similar to Tennessee. But in many of those states, local police departments for years have banned shooting of fleeing suspects who are not considered dangerous.

Support for the court's ruling was not unanimous.

Tennessee State Rep. Joe Kent, a Memphis police lieutenant, said, "It's a black day for your police officers and it's a blacker day for your law-abiding citizens."

But Assistant City Attorney Charles V. Holmes of Memphis said the local police department had been abiding by the new strictures prior to the ruling. The city's previously revised deadly force policy "is consistent with today's ruling," he said.

The decision stems from a 1974 incident in Memphis in which police shot and killed Edward Garner, 15, as the boy was fleeing from a house burglary.

Wednesday's ruling means the city of Memphis may be forced to pay damages to the boy's father, Cleamtee Garner, whose 1975 lawsuit charged police with violating the boy's rights.

The policeman who shot young Garner in the back of the head said the boy, who appeared to be unarmed, would have escaped if the officer did not fire.

The Supreme Court decision upheld a 1983 federal appeals court ruling that said Tennessee's law on deadly force was unconstitutional.

The high court rejected arguments by Tennessee law enforcement officials that police will be hampered unnecessarily if they are forced to make split-second decisions on when it is permissible to shoot an escaping suspect.

States still may authorize police to shoot to kill armed suspects or those suspected of crimes involving "serious physical harm."

The American Civil Liberties Union said the ruling was overdue.

"The court avoided ruling on this subject for many years," ACLU lawyer Charles Sims said. "We couldn't be more pleased that the court finally bit the bullet and ruled that police officers cannot execute people prior to trial."

Justice Byron R. White, writing for the court, said a state's interest in capturing criminals is outweighed in this case by the suspect's rights.

"It is not better that all felony suspects die than that they escape," he said.

In a dissenting opinion joined by Chief Justice Warren E. Burger and Justice William H. Rehnquist, Justice Sandra Day O'Connor said the decision will allow burglary suspects "to flee unimpeded from a police officer ... who has no means short of firing his weapon to prevent escape."

Reagan Visits Wall Street

NEW YORK (AP) — President Reagan, appealing for support for his embattled budget plan, told Wall Street leaders today that congressional approval of his economic program would "turn the bull loose," unleashing the full power of the economy.

Reagan, the first sitting president ever to visit the 193-year-old New York Stock Exchange, rang the bell opening the day's trading precisely on time at 3 second before 10 a.m. EST.

The packed trading floor burst into shouts of "Ronnie, Ronnie, Ronnie" as the president appeared at a marble rostrum above and, later, when he rang the bell.

Reagan noted the thunderous ovations and told his audience as he ended his brief speech:

"What you've done for me is better than a hot tip."

In his address to some 1,700 members of the exchange on the floor beforehand, Reagan put in a plug for his budget and spending cuts while lauding the U.S. economic boom that has marked his term in office.

"With tax reform and budget control, our economy will be free to expand to its full potential, driving the bears back into permanent hibernation," Reagan said. "That's our economic program for the next four years — we're going to turn the bull loose."

In Wall Street jargon, a "bull" market is upbeat, while a "bear" market is in decline.

Reagan did not mention, however, that the Republican-led Senate Budget Committee recently rejected his budget plan.

In Memoriam

Faye Marie Creegan
(July 14, 1943 - March 28, 1984)

In our prayers, we asked "Why"? Eventually, we were comforted by the understanding that it was not our place to ask "Why"? Instead we were given the realization that the tragic event on March 28, 1984, was but one very brief and insignificant part of a joyous and successful life. At the same time we realized and have continued to realize that Faye will be a part of our lives as long as our hearts and minds remember the privilege and joy of having known and loved her.

As long as dedicated teachers offer knowledge to eager young minds, she is a part of us. As long as parents and teachers seek to help mold the character of young people by instilling worthy values and uncompromising integrity, she is with us. As long as people, young and old alike, respond to the challenge of being the best that they can be, she is a part of us.

Memories of her love of animals will vividly linger whenever we see a precious pet dog wag its tail at a kind, loving word. We will remember her dedicated horsemanship as well as her criterion of excellence whenever we see a proud horse, especially a three-gaited horse enter a show ring and perform with beauty, motion, and animation.

There are many other ways in which she will remain with us. Each of us has his/her own special memories of her. The legacy she left us is rich indeed—perhaps the most wonderful part of this legacy is the meaning of "friend".

Foreign Trade Deficit Hits Worst Level In 6 Months

By MARTIN CRUTSINGER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States' foreign trade deficit climbed to $11.4 billion last month, the worst showing since September, as export sales fell by 7.7 percent, the government reported today.

The Commerce Department said the February deficit was 11 percent higher than the $10.3 billion deficit recorded in January and was the biggest monthly imbalance since an $11.5 billion deficit last September.

Last year, the United States recorded a record $123.3 billion merchandise trade deficit and Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige has predicted the deficit this year will climb to $140 billion.

The country's poor trading performance has been blamed in part on the high value of the dollar, which makes U.S. goods more expensive and harder to sell overseas while whetting Americans' appetite for a flood of cheaper imports.

The department's report said imports actually dropped a slight 1.3 percent in February, falling to $29.3 billion compared to $29.7 billion in January.

The drop came from an 11.8 percent decline in petroleum imports. An average of 4.78 million barrels a day of oil were imported in February, down from 4.86 million barrels daily in January. The price also dropped from $28.25 per barrel in January to $28.02 per barrel in February.

The drop in oil shipments offset increases in imports of Japanese cars, clothing, and motor vehicle and tractor parts. Imports of cars from Japan rose 47 percent in February to a total of $1.56 billion.

The huge jump in imports has triggered a variety of protectionist moves in Congress. The Senate Finance Committee on Wednesday unanimously approved a resolution calling for trade retaliation against Japan and the full Senate was scheduled to take up the measure today.

The February decline in exports reflected decreases in sales of a variety of manufactured goods and agricultural commodities.

Sales of aircraft, electrical machinery, office equipment, automobiles and fertilizers were all down from their January levels, the department reported. U.S. sales of manufactured goods totaled $12 billion in February, down 9.9 percent from the January level.

Agricultural sales totaled $17.9 billion in February, a 7.9 percent decline from the January levels. Sales of corn, wheat, animal feeds and cotton suffered declines in February.

As usual, the United States sustained its largest trade deficit with the Japanese, a $4.2 billion imbalance, 15.2 percent above the $3.7 billion imbalance in January. The trade deficit with Canada was $1.8 billion while the deficit with Taiwan was $1.1 billion and the deficit with Western Europe was $1.9 billion.

Japan Raising U.S. Car Imports

TOKYO (AP) — Japan announced today that it would export 2.3 million cars and trucks to the United States in fiscal 1985, 25 percent more than in fiscal 1984.

Japanese automakers criticized the new government ceiling announced by International Trade and Industry Minister Keiichi Murata as a restraint on free trade.

The anticipated increase had drawn fire from members of Congress. Officials from the Ford Motor Co., General Motors Corp. and Chrysler Corp. had no comment on the announcement today.

Fiscal 1985 begins next Monday, April 1.

An International Trade and Industry Ministry statement said the government had decided "to ask the individual Japanese automobile manufacturers to conduct their exports in a prudent manner in fiscal 1985 in order to ensure moderation in Japanese passenger car exports to the United States."

The ministry presented the new ceiling in an effort to prevent an export free-for-all by Japanese automakers that could further strain trade relations with the United States.

Since 1981, Japan had limited exports at U.S. request. President Reagan announced March 1 that he would not ask for a fifth year of "voluntary restraints."

But Reagan urged Japan to take other steps to help pare its giant trade surplus with the United States. The surplus rose to $36.8 billion last year from $21 billion in 1983.

The Japanese press already had reported the government plans to set a 2.3 million vehicle limit, and the Senate Finance Committee reacted Wednesday by voting for retaliation against Japan unless new markets are opened to offset the expected increase in auto sales.

White House spokesman Larry Speakes said, "Export restraints are no substitute for market opening."

Speakes said the United States still wants to see progress in the current negotiations on opening the Japanese market to telecommunications equipment, electronics, forest products and pharmaceutical and medical equipment.

Sen. Carl Levin, D-Mich., termed the 25 percent export increase "no restraint at all."

Sen. John Danforth, R-Mo., blamed the Reagan administration for the increase.

"No matter what the Japanese do, we're just going to be punching bags in this country," Danforth said.

Lawmaker Challenges Use Of Federal Disaster Course

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Wisconsin lawmaker says he wants to know why the Federal Emergency Management Agency was anxious to buy a course on rescuing radiation accident victims despite warnings it was scientifically unsound.

Rep. Gerald D. Kleczka, D-Wis., said the disaster relief agency "put the health and safety of my constituents in jeopardy" by distributing the course in Wisconsin as part of a pilot program.

The course was quickly recalled from Wisconsin and plans to distribute it nationwide were scrapped after FEMA decided it was too controversial. But by then, FEMA had already paid $90,000 for the course even though federal scientists warned beforehand that it could kill rather than save victims of radiation accidents.

A House Government Operations subcommittee opened three days of hearings Wednesday into the non-competitive contract award to Bradford Communications Corp. of Greenbelt, Md. in October 1983.

A number of FEMA officials were scheduled to testify today, while Director Louis O. Giuffrida was scheduled to appear next week. The agency said it was confident its witnesses would satisfy the committee's concerns.

In the first day of hearings: —The federal scientists, the same officials who warned FEMA about the course, testified it would increase fatalities because it was overly cautious in protecting the rescuer at the expense of the victim.

—Lawmakers cited memos indicating that at least four other courses were available to FEMA, despite the agency's contention that no other firm had such a course available.

—Officials of Bradford acknowledged two politically influential Republicans contacted FEMA on the firm's behalf, but the executives said they did not authorize political contacts.

—The Bradford officials said FEMA never passed on to them the scientists' warnings and contended they would have changed the content if requested.

"Why was FEMA hell bent on awarding this defective contract to the Bradford corporation?" Kleczka asked several witnesses at the hearing. "It not only was questionable contracting, but it put the health and safety of my constituents in jeopardy."

The witnesses all said FEMA officials would have to answer that questions.

Thomas P. Reutershan, emergency coordinator for the U.S. Public Health Service, pointed out flaws in the content while showing slides that were part of the course. He was accompanied by radiation experts from the Centers for Disease Control, the Food and Drug Administration and the Department of Transportation.

Referring to a slide depicting a plane crashing with a nuclear weapon, Reutershan said, "The manual tells the firemen to determine whether the weapon is burning, and if not, to put out the surrounding fire and cool the weapon. The thermal shock, from heating or cooling, could detonate the high explosive component of the weapon."

Reutershan said the text "wisely adds a note advising against this."

Bradford President Robert J. Brady Jr., said the firm sent the course to rescue units across the country on its own, and has received favorable responses.

Brady said he hired Michael Gill, the District of Columbia's Re-

Leaving Bar

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Shelley Long will be allowed out from behind the bar on the set of television's "Cheers." She gave birth to the baby that caused producers to hide her condition.

Miss Long, who plays cocktail waitress Diane Chambers in the NBC comedy, gave birth Wednesday to a 6-pound, 14-ounce girl named Juliana, spokeswoman Lisa Kasteler said.

The baby is the first child for Ms. Long and her husband, Bruce Tyson, Ms. Kasteler said.

In filming recent episodes of "Cheers," set in a cozy Boston bar, Miss Long's pregnancy was disguised by shooting her either from above the waist or while standing behind the bar.

House May Boost Jobless Benefits By Three Months

WASHINGTON (AP) — With 330,000 unemployed workers facing a cutoff of federal jobless benefits, House Democrats are preparing to defy President Reagan and vote to extend payments for three months.

A House Ways and Means subcommittee was to start work today on a proposal that would give new life to a $2 billion-a-year program the president says is unnecessary now that the nation's economy is growing.

The House Democratic caucus voted Wednesday to schedule the bill for House floor action as soon as possible.

"This is not an attempt to embarrass the president, this is something minimal and do-able," said Rep. James Oberstar, D-Minn., a caucus leader and author of the resolution to continue the program beyond the week of March 31.

"A three-month proposal is simply an expression of realism," Oberstar said. "It's what a president with any modicum of compassion should sign. We're not throwing down any gauntlet toward him ..., but we cannot allow this (Democratic) party to be Reaganized."

The federal supplemental compensation program, known as FSC, now provides up to 14 weeks of payments to some 330,000 jobless workers who have exhausted state benefits. State benefits run for 26 weeks.

The federal program is scheduled to expire next week, but the president said last week he will not ask Congress to renew it because government figures show the economy is generating 300,000 new jobs a month.

Asked Wednesday if Reagan might be softening his position, White House spokesman Larry Speakes responded: "We still oppose it, but we'll take a hard look at what they (Congress) send us."

Believing that opposition from Reagan and the Republican-controlled Senate would doom any hope of extending FSC, Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, has argued against submitting an extension bill.

Instead, Rostenkowski, D-Ill., favors a modified proposal that would allow payments to continue for unemployed workers already in the program until their benefits are exhausted.

Under such a compromise, an unemployed worker eligible for 12 weeks of benefits would receive his full allotment.

U.S. Holds Honduran Games

CHOLUTECA, Honduras (AP) — U.S. troops on maneuvers in Honduras have moved armored vehicles to within four miles of the Nicaraguan border to repel a mock attack by Soviet-made tanks like those used by Nicaragua.

U.S. Army Col. James Witte said the troops will battle a hypothetical invasion of Honduras in the maneuvers, which begin April 8. They are part of the Big Pine III exercises that began Feb. 11 and are to last until May 3.

Anti-Sandinista rebels fighting to oust the leftist government in Nicaragua have used southern Honduras as a base. The Nicaraguan regime has repeatedly said it fears a U.S. invasion.

But U.S. Army Capt. Milford Guttridge said American troops would get no closer than three miles from the Nicaraguan border on land and no closer than six miles by air.

"The Hondurans didn't tell us to do it," Guttridge said of the limits. "It's something we imposed on ourselves for our safety. . . . We don't want to cross someone's border and create an international incident."

U.S. forces on Wednesday drove their vehicles into the border area. The American and Honduran forces involved in the maneuvers have a total of 42 tanks and armored personnel carriers, and U.S. combat aircraft also will be used.

They also brought a Soviet-made T-55 tank, a PT76 amphibious tank and two armored personnel carriers. Nicaragua has T-55 tanks.

It is the first time U.S. troops in Honduras have used tanks and other armored vehicles.

About 2,300 U.S. and 5,500 Honduran troops will take part in the six days of maneuvers at Las Hormigas, south of Choluteca. The U.S. force includes 450 members of the Texas National Guard.

Honduras has been the key to a U.S. military buildup in Central America since the leftist Sandinistas came to power in Nicaragua in July 1979 with a coup that ousted the pro-U.S. regime of Anastasio Somoza.

In January 1984, a U.S. helicopter was shot down and its pilot killed by Nicaraguan troops who said they fired after the craft crossed the border. U.S. officials said the aircraft was off course but did not say whether it had strayed into Nicaraguan air space before landing on the Honduran road, where the pilot was shot.

Between 20 and 24 tanks and personnel carriers were unloaded from a U.S. Navy ship Monday for the exercise.

"All the military materials used here will be returned to the United States once the activity is concluded," said Witte, a military spokesman, on Tuesday.

To prepare for the maneuvers, 1,200 U.S. army engineers are digging trenches, clearing the path for armored vehicles and improving two landing strips near the border with El Salvador.

In another phase of Big Pine III, from April 15 to 21, the troops will take part in a counterinsurgency exercise in jungles in north central Honduras.

One week after the end of Big Pine III, another military exercise called Universal Trek-85 is scheduled to start. Pentagon sources have said that will feature amphibious landings and air assaults.

Senate Panel Backs Ban On Funds For Contra Rebels In Nicaragua

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan's proposal to send $908 million in aid to four key Central American countries has been left intact by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, but the panel upheld a ban on covert funds for U.S.-backed rebels in Nicaragua.

In an amendment to its $12.8 billion foreign aid package for the coming year, the committee voted 9-8 Wednesday night to ban covert aid to "contras" trying to overthrow the Sandinista government of Nicaragua.

The amendment included assurances by the Reagan administration that it would not try to find other sources for covert funds to help the guerrillas in violation of ongoing congressional strictures against the spending.

Langhorne Motley, the assistant secretary of state for Inter-American affairs, said earlier in the week the administration was not searching for "loopholes," but Sen. Christopher Dodd, D-Conn., proposed that the foreign aid bill contain similar prohibitions.

At the same time, the Republican-dominated committee rejected a proposal by Dodd to cut economic and military assistance to El Salvador, Honduras, Costa Rica and Guatemala from $908 million to $750 million.

It voted against a proposal to put tighter limits on the number of U.S. personnel in El Salvador and declined to direct the Reagan administration to increase its support for a Central American peace process organized by the Contadora group of nations in the region.

And finally, it rejected an amendment to divide a special $3.6 billion, three-year, economic aid program for Central America into one-year slices to give Congress more control over the spending.

Similar amendments are given a better chance of passage in the foreign aid bill still under consideration in the Democrat-controlled House Foreign Affairs Committee.

Central American issues were among the most hotly debated proposals during two days of deliberations that ended with 15-1 passage of the Senate aid bill, which committee chairman Richard G. Lugar, R-Ind., gave a high chance of passage in the full Senate.

Since it is roughly the same size as last year's foreign aid spending, "it meets the requirements" of congressional determination to keep a lid on spending, Lugar said.

Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., a longtime critic of many State Department programs, cast the dissenting vote.

In passing the aid package, the committee:

—Adopted Helms' amendment — aimed mostly at China — to bar aid for family planning programs in any country that permits infanticide or coerced abortion.

—In a pro-Greek vote, cut the administration's aid for Turkey from $785 million to $715 million and eased credit terms for Greece's purchase of U.S. weapons.

—In a pro-Israel move, voted to order the Reagan administration to certify that Saudi Arabia is playing a helpful role in the Mideast peace process before proceeding with the scheduled delivery of sophisticated AWACS radar planes to the Saudis next year.

School Bus Crash Kills 42 Children

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Survivors of a school bus crash that killed 42 children described today the horror of fighting to escape from the double-decker bus as it sank into the murky waters near the Westdene dam.

"Most of the girls went hysterical and panicked," said Marcelle Wilsnach, 14. "There was a turmoil of bodies, of people trying to get out as the bus sank underwater. I'm lucky I'm so small, I could get through a window. But there were a lot of people who couldn't."

Meanwhile, police said five people were killed in another bus crash this morning near the Natal Province city of Pietermaritzburg when the bus went off a road and rolled down an embankment.

The death toll in the Wednesday crash near Johannesburg, in which the bus plunged 12 feet into the water, rose to 42 following the deaths of four more children overnight.

Twenty-eight children remained hospitalized today and seven escaped unhurt.

The passengers ranged in age from 13 to 17 and attended a white Afrikaans-language high school in the Johannesburg suburb of Rossmore. They were on their way home to suburbs in western Johannesburg when the accident occurred.

Medium-Range Missiles Take Focus Of Arms Talks

GENEVA, Switzerland (AP) — U.S. and Soviet negotiators today open talks on medium-range missiles — the issue that led the Soviets to walk out of the arms talks 15 months ago.

The talks are part of the three-tiered superpower arms reduction negotiations that also cover long-range missiles and outer space and other defensive weapons.

The talks revive the Strategic Arms Reduction Talks that were halted in December 1983 when the Soviets walked out to protest NATO's deployment of the first of 572 U.S.-built Pershings and cruise medium-range missiles.

NATO said the missiles were needed to counter Soviet SS-20 missiles aimed at Europe.

On Wednesday, the Soviet delegation issued a formal statement saying they were discussing with the United States methods of keeping outer space free of all weapons — not President Reagan's Star Wars defense plan.

The Soviets were denying a newspaper article published earlier in the day that quoted a U.S. spokesman as saying Tuesday's arms control meeting between the two superpowers "discussed possible anti-missile systems in space."

"This report is not based on facts," the Soviet statement said. "What was discussed was not possible anti-missile systems in space but the question of the need for strict compliance with the agreement reached on Jan. 7-8 in Geneva concerning the elaboration of effective measures to prevent an arms race in space."

The Soviets were referring to the meeting between Secretary of State George P. Shultz and Andrei A. Gromyko, the Soviet foreign minister, that led to the current arms talks in Geneva.

Reagan claims the Star Wars idea is purely defensive and aimed at the elimination of all nuclear weapons.

The Soviet Union has called Star Wars a U.S. attempt to gain a nuclear first-strike capability.

A U.S. spokesman, who spoke on condition of anonymity, acknowledged the newspaper report did "not reflect what the spokesman of the U.S. delegation to these arms talks actually said."

Reading a statement over the telephone, he said, "In keeping with the principle of confidentiality that has been agreed between the U.S. and Soviet delegations, we will have nothing further to say on this question."

A Soviet official read the statement to about a dozen Western and East European reporters invited to the Soviet mission on short notice for what a mission spokesman, Vladimir Evdokushin, said was a "clarification briefing."

The first subgroup meeting took place Tuesday between teams led by the chief U.S. delegate, Max M. Kampelman, and Yuli A. Kvitsinsky.

South African Officer Testifies He Feared Rush By Chanting Blacks

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — A member of the police unit that shot and killed 19 blacks last week testified today that his men opened fire after a mob surrounded them and chanted that it wanted to kill whites.

"I thought we would be overrun and killed," Warrant Officer Jacobus W. Pentz told the one-man inquiry into the killings.

Donald Kannemeyer, a Supreme Court justice in the eastern Cape Province, is conducting the proceedings.

Pentz was testifying about events on March 21 in the black settlement of Langa, near the industrial town of Uitenhage, north of Port Elizabeth. The killings have led to days of rioting.

News reports said that one of three blacks shot dead by police on Wednesday outside Port Elizabeth was Xolile Kani, brother of actor John Kani.

John Kani was hailed in the United States last year for his Broadway performance in Athol Fugard's anti-apartheid play, "Master Harold ... and the Boys."

The government appointed Kannemeyer after survivors and witnesses at Langa challenged police claims that they ordered the crowd to disperse and fired warning shots.

Pentz said the crowd of approximately 4,000 blacks ignored his orders to scatter. He said the crowd was throwing stones, "coming from all directions" toward the armored personnel carrier containing himself and six other police, and chanting, "Today we are going to kill the white people in the town."

By this time, he said, another armored personnel carrier with reinforcements had arrived.

"If we had not fired, we would have been killed. I don't believe there was any alternative but to shoot to defend ourselves," Pentz said. He did not say he personally killed anyone.

Police have said the blacks were marching on a whites-only township.

At the request of Peter Gastrow, lawyer for six opposition members of Parliament who collected evidence against police, Kannemeyer suspended the inquiry until Friday morning. Gastrow said he needed time to prepare a cross-examination and to locate witnesses.

Chris Jansen, representing the police, agreed to a request that all police communications and photographs relating to the shooting be shared.

The nation's largest anti-apartheid movement, the United Democratic Front coalition, declared today a time of mourning for the 19 Langa victims.

A Front rally, attended by about 2,000 people in Cape Town on Wednesday night, urged shops to close from 1-3 p.m. and for prayer vigils in churches around the country. Some 3,500 people attended a service today at the University of the Western Cape outside Cape Town.

The three Wednesday deaths reported today brought the death toll to at least 35 blacks in a week, including last Thursday's victims, and to well over 250 in a year of unrest aimed at South Africa's racial segregation policies.

In the capital Pretoria, Deputy Foreign Minister Louis Nel told reporters that the outlawed African National Congress, which operates from exile, was stirring up unrest in the townships.

Nel said political forces outside the country want first to "make South Africa ungovernable, and second, to bring about a revolutionary situation."

In Parliament, opposition legislators ignored President P.W. Botha's appeal to members not to debate the shootings until the judicial inquiry issues its findings.

Helen Suzman, veteran member of the white opposition Progressive Federal Party in Parliament, told the chamber soon after Botha's remarks that her party could not accept a ban on a debate about the police shootings.

Chinese Thank Korea For Boat

PEKING (AP) — China today thanked its political adversary South Korea for returning a torpedo boat, 13 sailors and the bodies of six crewmen who reportedly were killed in a mutiny six days ago.

In a statement from the Foreign Ministry, the Communist government said: "The South Korean side handed over to our side on the high seas on March 28 the Chinese naval torpedo boat and all its crew members, with which contact had been lost."

The Chinese foreign ministry statement added "Chinese departments concerned expressed their thanks to the South Korean side for its assistance."

It was the second comment from China, which has no diplomatic relations with anti-communist South Korea, since the drama in the Yellow Sea began last Friday, creating a delicate diplomatic problem for the two countries.

Initially, there was speculation the boat's crew might want to defect to the Nationalist Chinese government on Taiwan, a bitter foe of the Communist government in China. South Korea is the only Asian nation with diplomatic ties with Taiwan, and both nations are strongly anti-communist.

BERNHARD GOETZ

Jury Files Four-Count Indictment For Goetz

NEW YORK (AP) — Bernhard Goetz says he hopes his indictment on four counts of attempted murder will help bring out the full story of why he shot four teen-agers on a subway train and end the controversy that caused worldwide debate on vigilantism and self-defense.

Goetz was to be arraigned today in Manhattan Criminal Court following his indictment Wednesday by the second of two grand juries to investigate the Dec. 22 shootings.

The first grand jury indicted Goetz, 37, only for felony weapons possession charges. He did not testify before either panel.

In addition to attempted murder, the second grand jury charged Goetz with four counts of fourth-degree assault, one count of first-degree reckless endangerment and one count of second-degree criminal possession of a weapon.

Goetz said he shot the youths in self-defense after one of them "demanded" $5. One of the teen-agers said he told the second grand jury he was merely trying to panhandle Goetz.

"It's probably all for the best. Everything now should come out in the open, with time, and that will end the controversy," Goetz said.

An attorney for Goetz, Barry Slotnick, said he would immediately move to dismiss the new indictment "because it was brought improvidentially by the district attorney for partisan reasons."

"The chief judge has said a grand jury will indict a ham sandwich if the district attorney wants it to," Slotnick said Wednesday. "Bernie Goetz today turned out to be a ham sandwich."

Attempted murder is a felony with a maximum penalty of up to 25 years in prison. The assault and weapons possession charges carry up to 15 years, and the reckless endangerment charge carries up to seven years in prison.

Goetz faced up to seven years in prison on the felony gun possession indictment handed up by the first grand jury.

Prosecutors were expected to ask for an increase in his $5,000 bail. "As soon as the first grand jury action came down, we started to review the case," District Attorney Robert Morgenthau said. "Our job here was to do what we thought was right."

Morgenthau announced March 15 that he would seek the new charges, saying he had a new witness that had not been available to the first grand jury. He refused to identify the witness.

The indictment was issued one day after Goetz refused to address the second grand jury because prosecutors wanted him to waive immunity from prosecution. Goetz wanted only to waive immunity for acts he committed on Dec. 22, the day of the shootings, and Dec. 31, the day he surrendered to police in Concord, N.H.

Goetz said Wednesday that he did not regret not testifying, but added, "I was willing to testify before the grand jury and tell them everything about the subway shootings, but evidently that wasn't enough for the prosecutor."

Randolph Scott-McLaughlin, a lawyer for Darrell Cabey, the most seriously injured of the four, said the first grand jury had sent out a message that "you would not have to answer in a court of law" to actions such as those taken by Goetz.

"However," he said, "the new grand jury, listening to new evidence, has clearly sent an alternative message: If you choose to use deadly force against another, you will have to answer to that in a court of law."

Cabey's mother, Shirley Cabey, said: "I feel great. I'm very glad that the grand jury decided to indict him. This time, I hope that justice will be done."

Two of the four victims testified before the second grand jury, while none had testified before the first. One of the passengers on the train reportedly also testified for the first time before the second jury.

The two youths, Troy Canty and James Ramseur, said they testified that Canty approached Goetz alone and asked him for $5. Goetz has said that all four youths surrounded him in a threatening manner while Canty demanded $5.

Officer D.C. Johnson said the theft of the necklace, valued at $540, from 309 Ringgold Towers was reported at 4:50 p.m.

Robbery Charges

Greenville police early today arrested three people in connection with a robbery on Bonner's Lane that was reported about 11:40 p.m. Wednesday.

Officer C.R. Anderson said Jimmy Moore, 37, of 405 Bonners Lane said he was beaten by three men and robbed of $80 in cash as he walked near the intersection of Bonner's Lane and the Seaboard Coast Line railroad.

Anderson said Willie David Dudley, 18, of 420 W. Third St., Craig Aubrey Taylor, 19, of 423 W. Third St., and a 15-year-old juvenile were taken into custody near the intersection of 14th and Fifth streets about 1:20 a.m. today and charged with common law robbery in connection with the incident.

Drug Count

Moses Williams Jr. of Washington was arrested by Greenville police on a drug charge about 9:23 p.m. Thursday.

Officer L.E. White said Williams was charged with possession of drug paraphernalia following a traffic stop in the 1400 block of West Sixth Street.

White said Williams was also charged with driving while his license was revoked.

Allen Honored

W.A. Allen of Farmville has been honored by the Pitt County Farm Bureau for his 50 years of service to the farmers of Pitt County and North Carolina.

The award was presented to Allen by Atlas Wooten of Pitt County and W.B. Jenkins, assistant to the president of the North Carolina Farm Bureau, at the monthly board of directors meeting Tuesday.

Allen is one of the original organizers of the Pitt County Farm Bureau in 1936 and the N.C. Farm Bureau. He has served as a director and president of the county organization and as a director of the state bureau.

A film entitled "50 Years of Soil Conservation in America" was shown to the group by Albert Coffey, district soil conservationist.

Education Program

Spring will mark the beginning of River Park North's city/county education program, said Jerry Everhart, director of the science program for the schools.

Everhart said 30 activities are available to students from kindergarten through grade six at the park. Materials used in the activities are provided without charge and equipment such as seines, insect nets, compasses, and plant/ animal identification manuals are available on a loan basis, he said. A volunteer organization composed of community members and East Carolina University students will help instruct student groups.

"The aims of the program are to enhance on-going classroom instruction, to raise a sense of awareness in students relating to the environment, and to provide not only recreational, but educational field trips," Everhart said.

Defaults Riddling Medical Loan Plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — Medical and dental students have received a half-billion dollars in government-backed education loans with little concern for whether they need the money, what they're spending it on — or whether it will ever be repaid, a new audit contends.

Besides the repayment problems, the program has faced abuse at the borrowing end as well, the audit says. Students have borrowed thousands under the program for such non-educational purposes as airline tickets to Europe, new cars, car repairs, divorce lawyers and traffic tickets.

Emergency management reforms have eased the immediate possibility that the loan program will go bankrupt this year, according to the internal audit released Wednesday by the Health and Human Services Department. But further reforms are needed by Congress and by the department to ensure the program's solvency, the audit says.

The audit by HHS Inspector General Richard P. Kusserow covers the Health Education Assistance Loan (HEAL) program of the Public Health Service, under which the government guarantees up to $80,000 in education loans for students in the health professions. That means the government promises to repay the money if the student does not.

College financial officers have shown little concern for whether the money is needed or whether it will be repaid, treating a loan as virtually an absolute right of medical students, Kusserow said.

"Our work showed that students generally could get a HEAL loan in any amount up to $20,000 at any time," Kusserow said. "Financial aid officers told us they felt they did not have the legal right to deny a loan if a student requested it."

Loan officers also take little interest in whether the loan is likely to be repaid, Kusserow claimed. The application process does not consider the student's total indebtedness or how much the student might earn following graduation, he said.

For instance, the audit said, a student borrowing $80,000 at 12 percent interest and deferring payment for a year of medical residency after graduation would face 25 years of payments of $1,526 a month.

But in addition, many students in the program carry $30,000 or more in government loans from undergraduate school as well, loans that were not even questioned when the medical loan was sought, making it questionable whether payments can be handled.

Loans are being approved even as students are ready to graduate, the audit said. At one school, 74 of 529 borrowers obtained their loans within three months of graduation and when all their school bills were paid. Of the $560,000 borrowed by those students, the audit said, only $280,000 was owed the university.

In another case, the audit said, a student was given a $10,000 loan only two weeks before he dropped out of school — and subsequently defaulted on repayment.

Loans bear little relation to costs, the audit said. At one school, a check of 50 borrowers showed that 29 borrowed more than they spent and pocketed $151,000 at the end of the school year, after their tuition, fees and living expenses were deducted.

Loans were approved regardless of the academic status of the borrower, the audit said. Of 50 loans checked at one school, the audit said, 20 students got loans of $307,000 even though they carried less than a "C" average and were attending only part-time.

In one case, the audit said, a fifth-year "sophomore" borrowed $10,000 to repeat his only course — one he had failed the previous year. The same student received $14,507 in loans the following year to repeat two courses he had flunked.

After 7½ years of flunking courses, the student was dismissed from medical school. He now refuses to repay the loan, the audit said.

Schools checked in the audit were George Washington University in Washington, D.C.; Meharry Medical College, Nashville, Tenn.; Chicago Medical College, Chicago; Wayne State University, Detroit; Kirksville College of Osteopathic Medicine, Kirksville, Mo.; California College of Podiatric Medicine, San Francisco, and Loma Linda University, Loma Linda, Calif.

The audit did not attribute individual cases of abuse to particular institutions, however.

Plan Rejected

LONDON (AP) — Britain's coal miners have voted down a proposal by union leaders for a small weekly levy on their paychecks to help 500 miners who were fired during a recent 51-week strike.

The levy — which would have been equivalent to 60 cents a week — was opposed Tuesday by 54 percent of the 109,150 miners who voted. An additional 77,000 miners did not vote, many in response to a boycott organized in regions where most miners had worked throughout the strike.

The 500 miners were fired for offenses ranging from stealing coal to violence against working miners and mine property.

Correction

The names of two officers of First Citizens Bank — Jacqueline Arnold and Patticia West — were omitted from a story about the merger of First State Bank and First Citizens published in Wednesday's edition of The Daily Reflector.

Ms. Arnold and Ms. West, formerly officers First State, were both named assistant vice presidents of First Citizens.

ACT OF 1974, AMENDED 1983

Notice is hereby given that the Winterville Board of Aldermen will conduct a public hearing on April 8, 1985, at 7:00 p.m., in the Town Hall, Winterville, N.C., relative to the intention of the Town of Winterville to apply for funding under Title I of the Housing and Community Development Act. The Town of Winterville intends to submit an application for a grant of up to $750,000 to conduct improvements to substandard housing, streets and water lines in two separate project areas within the Town of Winterville. The first project area includes dwellings located along Jones, Kennedy, Hammond, Gardner, and East Railroad Streets. The second area includes dwellings along Main, Chapman, Cross, Cooper, Blount and West Railroad Streets.

The following is a tentative list of proposed activities and an estimated budget based on the initial survey of the project areas. The final application will be reviewed at the Public Hearing.

Activity	Funds Requested
1. Rehabilitation of privately-owned dwellings	$560,500
2. Demolition and clearance of dilapidated structures	2,000
3. Waterline improvements	20,500
4. Street improvements	55,000
5. Administration	89,320
TOTAL	$727,320

The purpose of the public hearing is to obtain the views and proposals of the citizens of Winterville with regard to the determination of priorities for the Community Development and housing needs of the Town of Winterville. All citizens are requested and encouraged to attend the public hearing and make comments and suggestions.

If additional information is needed, please contact the Winterville Town Clerk's Office.

ECU Faculty Delays Action On SAT Score For Athletes

The East Carolina University Faculty Senate has delayed action on a resolution that a minimum score of 700 on the Scholastic Aptitude Test be required for participation in intercollegiate athletics.

The resolution reached the Senate floor Tuesday, but was not acted upon, Dr. James L. Smith, Faculty Senate president said. He said the resolution was sent to the Senate's Educational Policies and Planning Committee with the charge to study the merits in the context of a discussion of student athlete academic standards that the university chancellors and presidents had in Miami in early March. The chancellors and presidents will meet again in June in New Orleans, he said, and it is his hope that the ECU Faculty Senate will have given ECU Chancellor John Howell a recommendation by then.

The Senate will meet again in April and may take action then, he said.

Also discussed in the recent meeting, according to Dr. Smith, was the proposal that athletes not be allowed to compete on an intercollegiate basis during their freshman years. "I believe it's the thinking of those making this proposal," Dr. Smith said, "that this would give the student athletes time to acclimate themselves to their academic life, that they could practice if they wished, but not have to have time away from class as they do when they're competing and traveling with the team."

Similar discussions are underway all over the country, Dr. Smith said.

It's pretty much agreed that all universities should have virtually the same standards for athletes so one would not have a recruiting advantage by being more lenient.

Smith said he thinks some sort of formula that would bring into play grades, class standing and other factors besides the SAT score might be more appropriate than the 700 SAT minimum standard only. This, too, is being discussed throughout the country, he said he understands.

He said he sees the national attention to uniform academic standards for student athletics as being for the good of the future of higher education, both for upholding the standards of our universities and colleges and for the futures of the young men and women who participate in collegiate athletics.

"Nobody likes to change their vote, and no Democrat wants to be painted as weak on defense," Glenn said in a letter to the 61 House Democrats who voted for the MX system on Tuesday.

But he said new Air Force figures indicate that each MX missile will cost at least $254 million when the price is adjusted to include the "super hardening" of the protective silos they will be placed in.

MX is not a deterrent to Soviet attack because it is vulnerable to such a strike, Glenn said.

priations than on authorization."

Meanwhile, Sen. John Glenn, D-Ohio, urged House members to defeat an MX system he said is too expensive and neither an effective deterrent to a Soviet attack nor an important bargaining chip at arms control talks.

matter completely and was devoted in getting her students interested in the material and in helping them master it," Howell said. "If all our teachers were like Faye Creegan, we wouldn't be having any crisis in education."

In recognition and in memory of Miss Creegan's contributions as a teacher, a 17-member committee of friends, colleagues and students was formed to establish a scholarship endowment fund in her memory.

"I think all of us on the committee thought of Faye and her career as outstanding," said Dr. Betty Congleton of the ECU history faculty, chairperson of the scholarship endowment committee. "She was beloved by her students and respected by her colleagues. The goal of this scholarship is to inspire other young women to follow in her footsteps and become excellent school teachers."

"We were all happy to establish an endowment in Faye's memory," said Dr. Tinsley E. Yarbrough of the political science department at ECU. "She was an excellent teacher and she needs to be remembered in that way."

Yarbrough, a member of the scholarship endowment committee, said he has been "impressed with the large amount of contributions from a variety of people. There have been a large number of $10 and $20 contributions."

A total of 204 gifts have been received for the scholarship, according to Dr. Congleton, and donations have been made to the endowment by individuals, civic groups, civic clubs, book clubs and students.

"The person who gave our largest gift, $500, was someone who didn't know Faye," Dr. Congleton said. "He was inspired when he heard that one of the students in her class at the time she died had given money out of her savings to the scholarship."

Glenye Cain, a student of Miss Creegan's in 1981 and and member of the endowment committee, said "Miss Creegan was an extraordinary teacher. Her energy made history come alive. The scholarship fund continues her legacy and helps to ensure that we will never be without fine teachers."

the "base budget will stay intact," and said "if it does" the money "is in there."

"Everything looks extremely well for the university and the medical school, Warren suggested. "There is good support here on what's going on there."

Paper Says India Blames U. Carbide

DANBURY, Conn. (AP) — A published report says an Indian inquiry has placed "direct responsibility" on Union Carbide Corp. and its Indian subsidiary for a gas leak that killed more than 2,000 people, but the company says it is standing by its own investigation.

A report by the Indian government that has not been released "places responsibility for the leak on a combination of design flaws, operating errors, defective systems, and managerial mistakes," The Christian Science Monitor reported Tuesday.

The newspaper said sources close to the investigation, who were not identified further, disclosed some of the report's main conclusions.

The Indian report, the result of a seven-week investigation into the leak that killed more than 2,000 people in Bhopal, was prepared by a team of Indian government officials, the newspaper said.

"We know the Indian government has been investigating, but as far as a report goes, we have no knowledge of its existence," Union Carbide spokesman Tom Failla said Wednesday in a telephone interview from company headquarters in Danbury.

Last week, Union Carbide released its own report blaming workers at Union Carbide India Ltd.'s pesticide plant in Bhopal for one of the worst industrial accidents in history. The leak of methyl isocyanate gas on Dec. 3 injured tens of thousands of people.

Lawsuits stemming from the leak are seeking billions of dollars in damages from Union Carbide, which owns 50.9 percent of Union Carbide India.

Ronald Van Mynen, Carbide's chief investigator of the leak, has said the company's report was based on two months of investigation, including the review of plant records and other documents, interviews with factory workers, inspection of parts at the plant and more than 500 laboratory experiments.

"We stand by our report," Failla said. "We made a detailed scientific investigation of the situation, we conducted more than 500 experiments to replicate the accident to determine what happened in the tank."

WE'VE CHANGED OUR MIDDLE NAME, NOT OUR COMMITMENT TO YOU.

The sign says First Citizens Bank. But inside, you'll find the same people who served this community for First State Bank.

You see, before the merger of First Citizens and First State, both banks were committed to giving customers personal attention, honest advice, and efficient service they could always count on. Because of our similar banking philosophies, we were able to merge without any shakeups or major changes.

And if you bank at First State Bank, in either Greenville or Winterville, you're now a customer of First Citizens Bank statewide. That puts more than 270 banking offices across North Carolina at your service.

FIRST

A BANK YOU CAN COUNT ON WITH PEOPLE YOU TRUST.

Need to cash a check in Asheville or make a deposit in Wilmington? No problem. Just look for a First Citizens Bank.

For most First State Bank customers, banking will continue unchanged. But for customers who may need specialized services, First Citizens can, we believe, provide any banking service that a person or company may need. That's a benefit of banking with First Citizens, one of the soundest two billion-dollar banks in the United States.

So drop by your nearest First Citizens Bank and talk with the friendly people. They'll be the same people you knew before the sign changed.

BROILERS: The North Carolina f.o.b. dock quoted price on broilers for this week's trading was 41.75 cents, based on full truck load lots of ice pack USDA Grade A sized 2½ to 3 pound birds. Too few percent on loads offered have been confirmed. The market is steady and the live supply is adequate for a moderate demand. Average weights mostly desirable. Estimated slaughter of broilers and fryers in North Carolina Thursday was 1,816,000, compared to 1,834,000 last Thursday.

GRAIN: No. 2 yellow shelled corn 2 cents higher at mostly 2.96-3.10 in East and mostly 3.09-3.20 in the Piedmont; No. 1 yellow soybeans 1 cent higher at mostly 6.12-6.28 in the East and mostly 6.00-6.18 in the Piedmont; wheat mostly 3.34-3.49; (new crop corn 2.50-2.61, soybeans 5.74-5.99, wheat 2.95-3.15)

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market pushed ahead today, following through on Wednesday's broad advance.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials climbed 5.08 to 1,269.99 in the first half hour.

Gainers took a 5-3 lead over losers in the early tally of New York Stock Exchange-listed issues.

Stock traders have responded favorably, on balance, to the recent fall of the dollar in the foreign exchange markets.

The dollar's decline has prompted buying of multinational issues like the drug and soft drink stocks, on the expectation that their foreign earnings will be enhanced.

Along with its favorable effects, analysts say the high level of the dollar has been a drag on many sectors of the economy by making U.S. goods uncompetitive in the world marketplace.

That problem was underscored this morning when the Commerce Department reported another large trade deficit for February, with imports exceeding exports by a seasonally adjusted $11.45 billion.

The day began with what was billed as the first visit ever to the NYSE trading floor by an American president in office. President Reagan called for support for his budget plan, and then rang the bell marking the start of trading.

AMR led the active list, up ¾ at 41. A 500,000-share block of the stock traded at that price.

Pirates Rally, Sweep Doubleheader

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

Mike Sullivan got a one-out single through the middle to score Greg Hardison from second base in the 13th inning as East Carolina completed a rally and gained a 7-6 baseball victory over Ohio University yesterday in the opening game of a doubleheader.

The Pirates took the second game behind Chubby Butler's best pitching effort of his career, 9-1, to complete the sweep.

The twin wins moved the Pirates to 15-5 on the year, while Ohio is still looking for a win after five games this spring.

"Our pitchers did a good job," Coach Gary Overton said afterwards. "(Danny) Culpepper and Butler both did a very good job." Culpepper came on in relief in the first game, getting the win. He tossed four complete innings, allowing only one baserunner, that one reaching on a walk.

"We finally got our offense on track in the middle of the second game," Overton continued. "We played with little intensity and emotion until that point. If we had had the same intensity that we finished with, we could have won the first game in regulation and put the second one away earlier than we did."

"I'm not complaining about winning two, but I do think we could have done better. It made for a long day."

The Bobcats, who have now lost 11 straight games to the Pirates, threatened to break that string in the first game, powering out to a 5-0 lead before the Pirates got moving.

Wes Harrington was the man of the hour for the Bobcats during those early innings. In the second, he hit a solo homer to right field that stake them to a 1-0 lead.

In the third, Marc Whaley led off with a walk and after a sacrifice, Brian Ritter also walked. Mark Adams singled and that loaded the bases for Harrington, who swatted the ball out of the park in straight-away center for a grand slam and a 5-0 lead.

The Pirates began to rally in the bottom of the inning. Robert Langston singled and Mark Shank walked. Greg Hardison doubled to left, scoring Langston. Chris Bradberry's sacrifice fly brought Shank in and another sacrifice fly, by Mike Sullivan, scored Hardison.

A fourth run came in the fourth. Mark Cockrell reached on a two-base error and he moved up on an infield out, scoring on a wild pitch.

The sixth saw the Pirates score the tying run. Jay McGraw singled and was sacrificed up. Jim Riley followed with a double to right center, scoring McGraw for a 5-5 tie.

But Ohio came right back with one in the top of the seventh. With one away, Ritter singled and Adams followed with a double to center, scoring Ritter to make it 6-6.

The Pirates, however, wouldn't be denied, coming back to tie it again in the bottom of the inning. With one down, Bradberry walked and stole up. He scored on a single by Sullivan.

Over the next six innings, the Pirates shut Ohio down. Mike Christopher went two frames before giving way to Culpepper, and no one got past first base during those frames.

The Pirates, meanwhile, had runners in scoring position in the ninth and tenth, and then loaded the bases in the 11th with none out.

However, two infield grounders resulted in force plays at the plate, and a strikeout ended that threat.

"I was really worried at that point," Overton said. "I thought we lost a lot of momentum there."

The Pirates went down in order in the 12th but Hardison got them going again in the 13th with a leadoff single to left. He was sacrificed up and Winfred Johnson was intentionally walked to set up a force.

Sullivan, with two runs-batted-in to his credit, didn't shrink from his responsibility, however, coming up with a single to center, scoring Hardison with the game-winning run.

Sullivan, Hardison and Riley each had three hits to lead the Pirates, while Langston had two. Adams and Harrington each had three for Ohio and Kevin Granader added two.

Ohio also grabbed the initial lead in the second game, pushing over a run in the top of the third. Ritter opened the innig with a single and stole second. He moved on to third on an overthrow of the base on the throwdown. Adams followed with a single off the glove of Mark Cockrell at third, and when Hardison overthrew first on the attempt to get Adams, Ritter trotted home for a 1-0 lead.

It was the only tally the Bobcats got in the game and only one other runner got as far as second base off Butler.

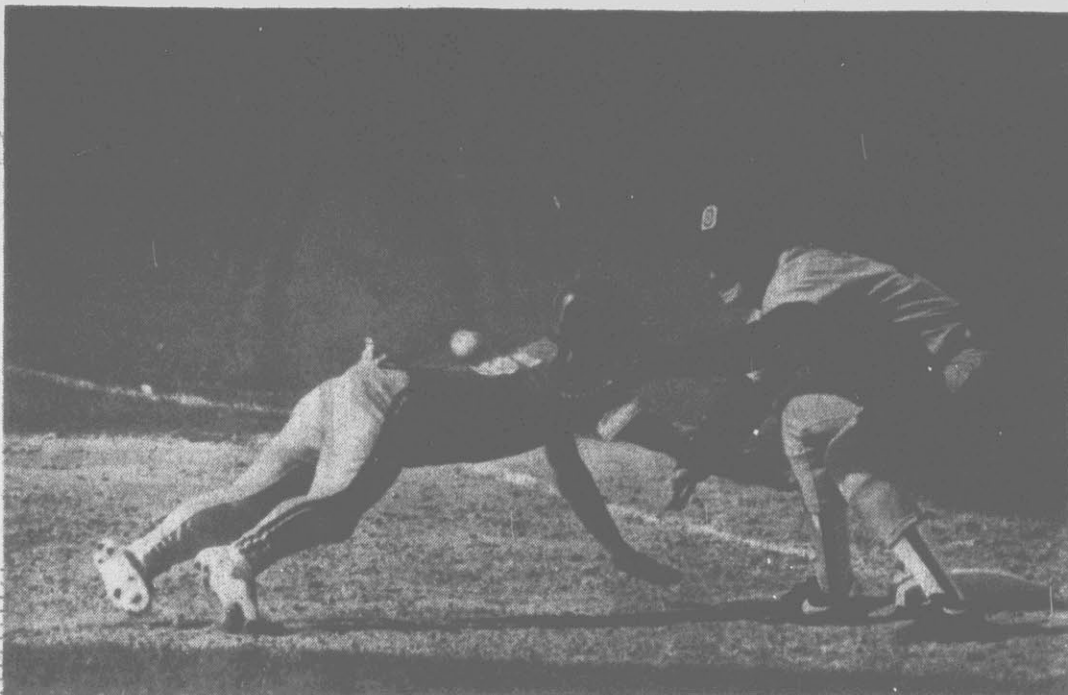

The Pirates quickly took charge in the bottom of the third, scoring three times. Shank led off with a walk and stole second, moving on to third on a passed ball. With one away, Bradberry walked and attempted to steal second, getting himself caught in a rundown. As Shank stole home, Bradberry slide safely back into first and later stole second on his own, scoring when Sullivan reached on an error. Sullivan stole second and scored on Mont Carter's single.

Another three scored in the fourth. Shank and Hardison both walked and scored on a double by Bradberry. Winfred Johnson followed with a single, scoring Bradberry for a 6-1 edge.

The final three came in the sixth. With one away, Bradberry reached on an error. Johnson, who had been riding a slump, broke it with his 12th homer of the season, a two-run blast to right. Sullivan followed with a walk and Carter was hit by a pitch. Two passed balls let Sullivan score.

Johnson and Carter each add two hits to lead the Pirates in the second game. Adams had three to pace Ohio.

The two teams were scheduled to meet again today at 3 p.m. The Pirates return to ECAC-South action on Saturday, hosting James Madison in a doubleheader at 1 p.m. The Dukes are here Sunday for a 2 p.m. single game also.

Sports Medicine Conference Scheduled For April 12-13

East Carolina University will hold its 15th annual Sports Medicine Conference on Friday and Saturday, April 12-13, at the Allied Health Building on Charles Blvd.

The conference is open to certified athletic trainers, teacher-trainers, coaches, student trainers and team physicians in schools with or without a sports medicine program.

Registration begins at 8 a.m. on April 12 and sessions last until 5 p.m. Saturday's schedule is from 8:30 until 5:15 p.m.

Tuition for the conference is $45 per person and includes lectures, labs, materials, notebooks, refreshments and a pig pickin'. It does not include other meals or overnight lodgings. Registration is limited and will be accepted in order of being received prior to an April 2 deadline.

The Friday program includes a "Review of Shoulder Anatomy" by ECU assistant Ro Rittgers; "Immediate Care of Shoulder Injuries" by Rod Compton, ECU Director of Sports Medicine; "Shoulder Rehabilitation" by ECU assistant Greg Beres; "Fundamentals of Weight Training," by ECU strength coach Mike Gentry.

Following lunch, Dr. James Bowman will discuss "Orthopaedic Considerations of Shoulder Injuries," after which several skills labs will be held.

Dr. Edwin Bartlett will then discuss "Arthroscopic Shoulder Surgery," while trainer Robbie Lester will give an "N.C. Trainer Update."

A pig pickin' will be held at 7:30 p.m. for participants at the Pirate Club.

On Saturday, Dr. William Monroe will open the conference with "Eye Problems in Athletics," followed by several skills labs. The morning session will conclude with Dr. James McCallum discussing "Drugs and the Trainer."

The afternoon program includes trainer John Blake discussing "A Model High School Sports Medicine Program." More labs followed, winding up with "Drugs and the Trainer: A Rx for Risk Management," by Laurence Graham, and "To Tape or Not To Tape" by Dr. Phil Callicutt.

The program is sponsored by the Sports Medicine Division of the Athletic Department, the Health, Physical Education, Recreation and Safety Division of Continuing Education, and the School of Allied Health and Social Work. It is fully sanctioned by the Sports Medicine Division of the N.C. State Department of Public Instruction.

For further information, contact the Sports Medicine Department, or the Division of Continuing Education at East Carolina.

Couples Playing Like Year Ago

PONTE VEDRA, Fla. (AP) — Fred Couples finds himself in a familiar, enviable position.

"I'm playing now just about like I was this time last year," Couples said.

And that was good enough to make him the winner of the 1984 Tournament Players Championship.

"I'm really looking forward to it. I'm excited about it," Couples said before teeing off today as the defending title-holder in the annual championship of golf's touring pros. "Last year, coming in, I'd been in the top 10 four times in a row. This time, coming in, I've been in the top 10 in five of my last six."

"I feel like I'm starting to play pretty good, that it's all coming together," said Couples, who has been in title-contention in two of the last three weeks.

"I can't say I expect to win this week," he said. "But I do expect to play pretty well. All I can hope is that I'm in contention sometime in the last round, get in contention and then try to make the most of it."

Among his chief challengers are three men who have scored multiple victories already this season — Curtis Strange, Lanny Wadkins and Mark O'Meara.

"I'm starting to feel pretty sharp again," said Wadkins, who complained of "being a little rusty" following a one-month break earlier this year.

"We'll just have to wait and see what comes out. Sometimes, the difference between first and 20th can be be your putting, or one shot. Or it can be no difference at all, just depending on whether it's your week or not," he said.

Strange, who has finished first, fourth and first in his last three starts, currently leads the Tour in money-winnings with a whopping $322,344 and ranked as a leading contender for the $162,000 first prize here.

O'Meara has gone into a slump since scoring consecutive triumphs in the Crosby and Hawaii.

Fuzzy Zoeller, the U.S. Open title-holder, and British Open champ Seve Ballesteros each has won in recent weeks and must be considered a threat here. Masters king Ben Crenshaw and PGA champ Lee Trevino also are in the 144-man field that will be chasing a total of $900,000 in prizes.

Indiana, UCLA In NIT Finals

By KEN RAPPOPORT
AP Sports Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Uwe Blab and Brad Wright were the two tallest basketball players on the court in the semifinals of the National Invitation Tournament, and each clearly was the most visible in more ways than one.

The centers for Indiana and UCLA, respectively, each was instrumental in helping his team win Wednesday night as Indiana defeated Tennessee 74-67 and UCLA stopped Louisville 75-66.

Blab scored 24 points and grabbed 10 rebounds and Wright had 23 points and 12 rebounds, along with four blocked shots as the tradition-rich Bruins and Hoosiers headed for a summit meeting in the NIT championship game Friday night at Madison Square Garden.

"Blab and (Steve) Alford sustained their attack," Tennessee Coach Don DeVoe said, "and we didn't play great basketball in the last five minutes."

The 7-foot-2 Blab, the "Mr. Inside" of the Indiana attack, and Alford, "Mr. Outside," teamed up for 47 points and generally controlled things in the late going when Tennessee made its patented run.

Earlier in this tournament, the NIT's "Comeback Kids" wiped out a five-point deficit in the last 19 seconds to beat Southwestern Louisiana and otherwise have made a habit of thrilling comebacks.

Wednesday night, the Volunteers just ran out of gas, thanks to the omnipresent Blab inside.

The Hoosiers had a 13-point lead in the first half and 10 at intermission before the Vols rallied behind Tony White, who scored 22 points overall. It wasn't until the last two minutes when Blab hit two key foul shots and blocked a Tennessee shot and Alford hit some crucial free throws that the game was in hand for Indiana.

"We have a tendency to let up with a lead - that happened tonight," Blab said. "But we were lucky to turn it back on."

Except for Blab and Alford, Indiana Coach Bobby Knight was not at all happy with his team's play.

"Alford and Blab are the whole offense," he said. "If they're off, we're in trouble."

He also said he "wanted to see the ball flying around the perimeter a little more. We're not doing that well yet."

Knight added that the Hoosiers "were not an overly endowed team. We can blow leads - which we did tonight."

UCLA was in the same boat against Louisville, losing a nine-point lead and then having to scrap at the end to beat the Cardinals for the Bruins' 11th victory in the last 12 games.

Wright contributed six of his points during an 11-2 run that triggered the Bruins into a 67-58 lead with 1:06 remaining in the game.

Then Nigel Miguel, who was second in scoring for the Bruins with 20 points, nailed it down four free throws in the final 24 seconds.

"I thought the difference in the game was Brad Wright," said Louisville Coach Denny Crum. "He shot the ball well, got good shots and intimidated people."

As for his own team, Crum said,

ECU Men Top Pfeiffer

East Carolina's men's tennis team rolled over Pfeiffer, 9-0 yesterday.

The Pirates had little trouble with the match after the first two singles, one of which went split sets.

The win boosts the men to 4-3 on the year. They return to action on Thursday, traveling to Guilford College.

Summary:

Galen Treble (EC) d. Brent Elwood, 3-6, 6-1, 6-1.
Greg Loyd (EC) d. David Smith, 6-3, 7-5.
Greg Willis (EC) d. Chris Griffin, 6-2, 6-3.
Dan Lamont (EC) d. Jay Wroe, 6-2, 6-0.
Davis Bagley (EC) d. Scott Hopkins, 6-1, 6-3.
David Turner (EC) d. Hugh Gray, 6-0, 6-2.
Treble-Willis (EC) d. Elwood-Smith, 6-4, 6-1.
Pat Campanero-Bagley (EC) d. Griffin-Wroe, 6-0, 6-0.
John Anthony-Turner (EC) d. Hopkins-Gray, 6-1, 6-0.

"We're still a player or two short, and we don't have the senior leadership that UCLA has."

For UCLA Coach Walt Hazzard, the victory was a vindication of sorts for a poor showing last December in the Garden, when his Bruins were routed by St. John's.

"December was a Death March for us," Hazzard said. "I said after that, we'd be either dead or good. I guess we're good. When we were here to play St. John's, we were boys. Now, we're men."

The loss dropped Louisville's record to 19-17, leaving them it last chance in the Third Place Game Friday night against Tennessee to salvage a 20-victory season. They have had 14 straight, including 13 under Crum.

With Wednesday night's victory, UCLA hit the 20-win mark, with a 20-12 record. Indiana will carry a 19-13 mark into Friday night's championship game as Knight seeks to win his second NIT title.

No Change Seen In Travel Policy

By The Associated Press

East Carolina has no plans to change its policy on travel by athletic teams, despite criticism stemming from a wreck in which a track team member was killed, a spokesman for the ECU Athletic Department said Wednesday.

S.H. "Bob" Helmick, ECU associate athletic director, said school officials were reviewing policies concerning students who drive university vehicles in the wake of Sunday's wreck of a van carrying nine members of the Pirate track team back to ECU from a meet in Georgia. He said the team was following routine procedure and state law by allowing a student to drive the van.

"If we see a need for a change, we will make a change," Helmick said. "However, we do not see a need for a change at this time."

Two members of the ECU track team, Rubin Pierce and Phillip Estes, said this week that team members had complained about having to drive after out-of-state competition.

Erskine Evans of Greenville, a junior sprinter on the team, died of head injuries in the wreck on U.S. 264 in Nash County about 1:50 a.m. Sunday.

A trooper for the N.C. Highway Patrol said the driver, team member Kevin Daughtry, apparently fell asleep and lost control of the vehicle. Daughtry, 21, and four other team members were still hospitalized Wednesday, an ECU spokesman said.

A funeral service for Evans is scheduled for 3:30 p.m. Thursday at Mendenhall Student Center on the ECU campus.

Helmick said the university policy gives a coach discretion to determine who should drive and how far the time should travel between stops. He said the track team had switched drivers in Asheboro, about an hour before the wreck.

Duo Combines For No-Hitter

Stacey Boyette and Pam Young combined for a no-hitter as East Carolina swept a doubleheader from the N.C. Wesleyan women's softball team yesterday.

The Lady Pirates got the no-hitter in the opening game as they rolled up an 8-0 win. In the second game, Young and Robin Graves combined for a one-hitter in a 6-0 win.

The Lady Pirates got two runs in the second inning of the opener for all they needed. They added four in the fourth and two in the fifth.

Susie Pierce had two hits, one of them a triple, and she drove in three runs to lead the ECU hitting in the first game. Sandy Kee also had two hits, one a double. Suzanne Martin had one hit in one appearance, with two runs batted in.

In the second game, ECU scored three runs in the third adding two in the fifth and one in the sixth.

Lisa Zmuda had a triple, driving in two runs, while Graves had two hits with two runs batted in. Boyette had one in one official appearance and drove in a run.

The sweep lifts the Lady Pirates to 17-7-1. They play host to Ohio today in a doubleheader.

Aurora Crushes Chocowinity

AURORA — Aurora High School exploded for 19 runs in the second and third innings of the game Wednesday and took a 23-4 baseball victory over Chocowinity in Tobacco Belt Conference action.

The Indians scored first, getting a run in the opening inning. Patrick Wells walked and stole both second and third. Larry Harding then doubled him in.

In the second, however, Aurora put the game away with eight runs. Mike Kinnion singled and Sartin walked. Scott reached on an error and Barnett walked, forcing in Kinnion. Eddie Kinnion reached on an error, scoring Sartin and Scott. Anderson walked and a pickoff error allowed Barnett to score. Asby reached on another misplay, scoring Eddie Kinnion, and Mike Kinnion singled in Anderson. Sartin followed with a double, driving in the final two runners.

Aurora added 11 runs in the third and four in the fourth. Chocowinity's other three came in the fourth.

Mike Kinnion led the Aurora hitting with four.

Chocowinity walked 16 batters and committed nine errors to help the Aurora drive along.

Now 1-4 overall and 1-3 in league play, the Tribe plays host to Bath on Monday.

Lee Makes A Matchup

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Coach Marianne Stanley of Old Dominion says among the "exciting matchups" at the NCAA Women's Final Four in basketball, Eun Jung Lee of Northeast Louisiana would be a good match "against all of Old Dominion."

"When you've got a point guard (Lee) that makes lob passes from halfcourt . . . and when you've got some big kids that can catch those kinds of passes, it's tough," says Stanley.

"E.J. just does some great, great things," Stanley said of the 5-foot-6 junior guard from Seoul, Korea, who averages 18 points a game. "I told my kids, don't be surprised if she dropkicks one into the basket."

Fifth-ranked Old Dominion, 29-3, opens the tournament Friday night against No. 2 Northeast Louisiana, 30-1, which has a 15-game winning streak.

Western Kentucky, which upset No. 1 Texas 92-90 in the Midwest Regional semifinals at Bowling Green, Ky., plays Georgia in the second game Friday night.

Coach Paul Sanderford of Western Kentucky, 28-5, was asked at a Wednesday news conference with the other coaches if his No. 14 Lady Toppers were in a "no-lose situation."

"I feel like we're the underdog. I kind of like being the underdog. The pressure's on Andy," Sanderford said of Georgia Coach Andy Landers, whose Lady Bulldogs, 28-4, are ranked No. 8.

Hawks Take Meet; Rose Tops Vikes

DEEP RUN — Larry Johnson of North Lenoir won three events and anchored a leg on the winning 440-yard relay team to pace his team to victory in the annual South Lenoir Invitational Track Meet yesterday.

The Hawks finished the meet with 118 points, well ahead of second place Clinton, which finished with 72. Greene Central came in third with 69, while Farmville Central was fourth with 69. Midway took fifth with 56.

The second five in the ten-team field included South Lenoir at 47, Wallace-Rose Hill at 40, Pender at 27, Lakewood at 22 and Hobbs at 8.

Johnson on the high jump, the 100-meters and the 220-yard dashes to be the only triple winner in the field. South Lenoir's Jeff Miller was a double winner, taking the mile and two mile.

Gym Events Set Here

The Greenville Gymnastics Club will host the USFG State Gymnastics Championships for Class I, advanced options, intermediate options and Class III on Friday through Sunday at Memorial Gymnasium on the East Carolina University campus.

Six gymnasts from the Greenville club qualified during sectional meets earlier in the year. They include Peggy Ann Becker, Susan Grimsley, Nancy Johnson, Kim Moreno, Dana White and Kim Wiles.

Friday's session starts at 6:45 and lasts until 10 p.m. and will consist of compulsory routines.

Saturday, from 8:30 until 11 a.m., option routines will be performed, with a second session from 12:15 to 2:45 p.m. Advanced optional routines will be held in sessions from 4 to 6:30 p.m. and from 7:15 to 9:30 p.m.

Sunday, intermediate optional routines will be performed in two sessions, one from 10 a.m. to 1:45 p.m. and the other from 3:30 to 7:15 p.m.

Baker Is Happy With Workout

East Carolina University head coach Art Baker was generally pleased Wednesday after putting his Pirates through their first full-scale football scrimmage of the spring.

The Pirates worked for almost two hours in Ficklen Stadium as ECU has now completed eight days of spring practice. The Pirates have 12 days of spring football remaining with the annual spring game set for April 20.

"It was ragged plus a lot of missed little things, not big things, just little things," Baker said. "Defensively some people really looked good. Robert Washington (linebacker), Bubba Waters (linebacker), Kevin Walker and Ellis Dillahunt (defensive backs) all looked good. We're getting better."

"Today was the first time we had to defend the whole field. Our lack of experience showed up defensively."

Offensively, Baker said the Pirates showed him some things that led him to be very encouraged. "Offensively I thought we looked good," Baker said. "The offensive line showed me some things, especially Shawn Brady (tackle, filling in for the injured Tim Dumas). And the two fullbacks (Anthony Simpson and Tim James) looked very good. Simpson was awesome and James ran well."

"The quarterbacks played well also, but they still have so much work to do on the passing game. I thought the receivers played well too, but we've got a lot of people bruised up so we're not playing with a full deck. But that gives the young kids a chance to see what they can do."

The Pirates will take Thursday off with a light workout scheduled Friday before scrimmaging again Saturday in Ficklen Stadium.

Next week's schedule will be Monday through Thursday, with a scrimmage on Thursday to give the players Easter weekend off.

Shot Clock Seen Almost As Certainty For 1985-86

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (AP) — The men who write the rules for college basketball are considering putting in a 45 second shot clock, cutting off the bottom of the backboard and various plans to end the parade to the foul line at the end of games.

The shot clock is the surest bet, according to Dr. Edward Steitz, athletic director at Springfield College, who has been the NCAA's national editor and interpreter for basketball rules since 1966.

"The 45-second clock has gotten very strong support from the 19 conferences that experimented with it this season and in our annual poll. It looks like its time has come," Steitz said before leaving for the Rules Committee's meetings in Lexington, Ky., this week.

He said 62 percent of the 700 college coaches and 87 percent of the 660 college referees who answered his annual poll favored using a 45-second clock. Statistics on shots taken and made show that it has had little effect on the flow of the game, except to prevent an outright stall.

If adopted, the shot clock would be put into effect for all NCAA games at all levels, including the championship tournament, he said.

For the past three years, conferences have been allowed to experiment with the clock during the regular season, but not during the tournament. With the expansion of the Division I tournament to 64 teams, slow-down tactics have become especially controversial this year.

In contrast, little interest remains in the three-point shot, and with less than one-third of the coaches backing the proposal it appears "dead for now," Steitz said.

Besides the clock, Steitz said the "primary consideration" of the Rules Committee is finding a ways to prevent the team that's behind from fouling in hopes of getting another possession in the closing minutes of the game.

"We want to get rid of fouling for profit. Not only is there the potential for injury to the players, but the image of the game is at stake," Steitz said. "Basketball is now the only sport where you can be rewarded for committing a foul."

A proposal to change the college rule to give the team fouled the option of either taking the free throws or getting the ball out of bounds received the backing of 44 percent of the coaches and 45 percent of the referees polled, he said.

But Steitz said he questioned whether that proposal, similar to the international rule that will be in effect for the 1988 Olympics, is enough to discourage coaches.

"Personally, I don't think it is enough," he said, suggesting instead that from the time a team goes into the 1-and-1 it have the option of getting the ball out of bounds after taking the first shot of the 1-and-1 or two-shot foul.

"We've got to make the penalty so severe coaches won't consider ordering their players to commit a foul," he said. "If the other team just gets the option of taking the ball out of bounds, the team that's behind can still look to steal the inbound pass without falling further behind."

He would also like to see a player who is deliberately grabbed and fouled at midcourt on a break-away play, as well as one that is deliberately fouled in the act of shooting, get two shots and possession of the ball. Half of the coaches polled and 55 percent of the referees supported that proposed change.

Another proposed change that may be less noticable to fans than team doctors is a plan to cut the bottom six to eight inches off the rectangular backboards.

The change, which has also attracted the interest of the professional leagues, is aimed at protecting today's high-leaping players from smashing their heads or hands on the lower part of the rectangular backboard, Steitz said. About 12 percent of the referees polled said they had officiated games this season in which a player was injured on the backboard.

"There's no real need for the lower part of the backboard and the ordinary person wouldn't be able to notice the difference," Steitz said.

"We haven't made any changes in the backboards since the 1950's, but the players and the game have changed a great deal," he said, recalling that backboards were originally installed in the early days of the game, invented in 1891 at Springfield College, "to prevent our rowdy students from sitting behind the basket and batting the ball away before it could go in."

Another of the poll results that worries Steitz is the sharp disagreement between the referees and everyone else, including coaches, writers and administrators, about whether the officials are calling charges and blocks correctly.

Although 88 percent and 89 percent of the referees thought they were doing a better job on the simple and airborne charge-block call and 86 percent thought they were correctly interpreting "verticality," a term coined by Steitz to describe the principle that a player has possession of his spot from the floor "to the sky," the coaches disagreed by margins of 64, 66 and 75 percent.

"We've got to do a better job of getting some consistency in the charge-block call," Steitz said. "What really bothers the coaches is the inconsistency. It's being called different ways during the game and some conferences are interpreting the rule strictly and others more loosely. That has to go. There can be only one rule and one interpretation of the rule anywhere you go in the U.S.

"So much of this depends on the supervisors of officials and what they are demanding of their people," Steitz said. "But we will keep hounding them and prodding them until we get a commitment from every conference and every supervisor of officials that the rule will be interpreted the same way all the time, everywhere."

"Our basic and fundamental thesis is to maintain the delicate balance between offense and defense that has made our game the best on the street," Steitz said.

Rose Jayvees Play To Tie

Rose High School's junior varsity baseball team played to a 9-9 tie with Northern Nash yesterday.

The contest will be completed later in the season when the two teams meet again at Northern Nash.

Anthony Cobb had a home run for the Rampants, while Tim Clark, Greg Jones, Scott Davis and George Saad each had doubles.

Chicago Testing Math For Youth

CHICAGO (AP) — Kindergarteners would fiddle with calculators and grade-schoolers with "heavy topics" like geometry and statistics under a project to increase nationwide math competency, officials say.

"If you don't give (grade schoolers) a rich math experience, it's very difficult to catch up later," said Sheila Sconiers, a consultant to the $12.5 million University of Chicago project being tested at 15 Chicago-area schools.

Once the project is completed, "we're hoping it will serve as a model for the entire nation," said Izaak Wirszup, a mathematics professor helping develop the new curricula for elementary and high schools.

The project, to be detailed today at an international math conference at the University of Chicago, is designed to improve math skills for most students, not just quick or slow learners.

It draws from teaching methods of countries such as the Soviet Union and Japan and expands the range of topics taught. Statistics, geometry, computers and calculators become part of grade school math.

"Heavy topics like statistics can be introduced to first graders" by having them graph what they brought for lunch, Ms. Sconiers said. Geometric shapes can be explained in everyday objects, such as stop signs.

Calculators are good play tools because they show only one number, she said. "It's not embedded on a page of numbers. If you're six years old, your eyes go all over the place."

On the secondary level, there are courses in probability, statistics and computer science.

Deficiencies in teaching math have had severe consequences, said Zalman Usiskin, a professor of education working on the project.

"High school graduates are not learning enough mathematics," Wirszup said. "Many students lack the mathematics background necessary to succeed in college, on the job, or in daily affairs."

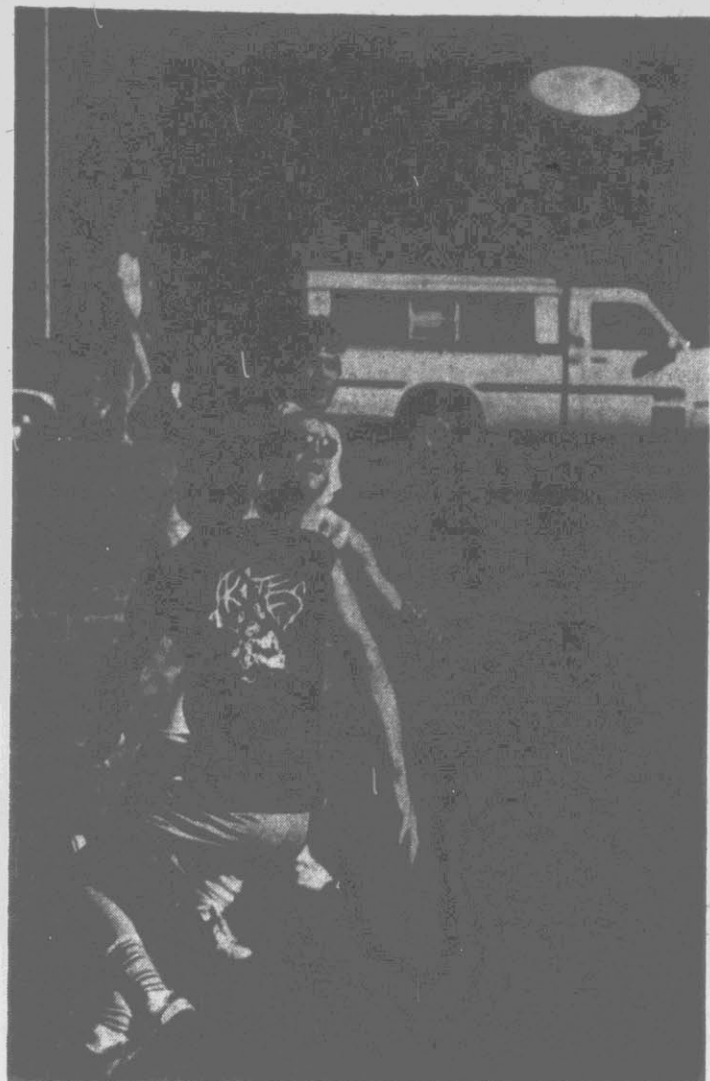

That's partly due to teaching methods, he said. "The way we teach arithmetic, geometry and physics doesn't make the slightest bit of sense."

He said physics is taught in one year, while the Soviet Union may take six years, in a step-by-step approach that makes more sense.

The project also is to provide better training for teachers, he said.

It began about two years ago and has been financed by a $2 million grant from the Amoco Foundation. Amoco intends to provide more money for the project, scheduled for completion in 1989. Other sources of funding are being sought.

Captain Kangaroo Star Has New Role

WASHINGTON (AP) — Captain Kangaroo returns to CBS television on Saturday, in the role of Bob Keeshan, host of a new 30-minute program designed to get young people interested in books.

"CBS Storybreak" will break into the cartoon ghetto of Saturday morning TV at 11 a.m. EST with original adaptations of children's literature, bringing to TV some of the books most popular with today's youngsters.

Keeshan, who played Captain Kangaroo on the long-running morning show, will play himself on "CBS Storybreak."

The show bumps "The Bugs Bunny-Road Runner" show to a new time period not yet announced.

In a briefing for educators, legislators and reporters on Wednesday, Jack Blessington, vice president of CBS for broadcast events said "This is a generation that needs print less than any other generation. But, has there ever been a generation in American life for which print has been more critical?"

CBS also announced a series of after-school mini-programs to start in the Fall entitled "American Treasury." The program will use popular personalities familiar to a young audience to highlight some of the 81 million books and other items in the collection of the Library of Congress. Each 60-second program will end with the tag "Read more about it, at your library."

The program is patterned after CBS's successful Bicentennial Minutes and Olympic Minutes and is produced by the man who prepares the weekly news vignettes for children entitled "In The News."

"American Treasury" will run between shows just before 4 p.m. Eastern Time.

"Chocolate Fever" author Robert Kimmel Smith, whose book was animated for "Storybreak," said in an interview that he finds "Children are very impressed with the tube." And, he hopes the scheme of "starting your weekend with a good book," as CBS recommends, will lead more children to reading and to libraries.

"As long as a book is central, as writers of books we have to be on that side," he said.

Al-Ling Louie, author of "Yeh-Shin, a Cinderella Story From China" said that because children are "so excited when they find out the book is going to be on TV," she is sure the series will accomplish its goal of promoting literacy. "I think the kids will take to it," she said.

Gordon Berry, professor of educational psychology at the UCLA Graduate School of Education and a consultant to CBS on children's programming that the programs will "serve as a springboard for those children who are readers and those who are not readers."

Joanne Brokaw, CBS Broadcast Group vice president education and community services said the show is "unique in that it has a central focus of using TV to get children to read."

She said that as part of the project, CBS has sent material on the programs to 45,000 schools and libraries nationwide in hopes teachers and librarians will build on the network exposure the books will get.

Students Respond To Bennett

WASHINGTON (AP) — Education Secretary William J. Bennett, who recently took a swipe at extravagant student lifestyles, is getting some funny postcards from collegians' spending spring break on Florida's beaches.

Bennett told the National Press Club on Wednesday that to date he's gotten a dozen postcards from students in Fort Lauderdale, with the typical message reading:

"Dear Mr. Secretary Bennett: Wish you were here. The sun is great. Send money, preferably not one of those things that takes six months from your department. Stereo broke; would appreciate you sending a bureaucrat down with a

That, said the education chief, shows students "not only respond to their government and are not intimidated by their government in the least — this continues to be the freest of countries — they even have a great sense of humor."

Last month, a few days after he took office, Bennett suggested some students could accommodate the $2 billion in aid cuts President Reagan is seeking by "divestiture of certain sorts: stereo divestiture, automobile divestiture, three weeks-at-the-beach divestiture."

That remark drew angry responses from scores of college presidents and students.

Klan Suit Fans Debate Over Police Informants

By TOM MINEHART
Associated Press Writer

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — A lawsuit against Klansmen and Nazis in the 1979 shooting deaths of five communist demonstrators has revived a debate over the danger that police informants and undercover agents may encourage or even commit crimes.

Law enforcement officials say some informants are hard to keep under control, but it's often the only way of finding out about potential crimes. And some say that if they'd had more informants in Greensboro on Nov. 3, 1979, the anti-Klan demonstrators might be alive today.

Widows and survivors of the Communist Workers Party's "Death to the Klan" march are suing Klansmen, Nazis, federal agents, Greensboro police and city officials for $48 million in a trial that began March 11 in U.S. District Court in Winston-Salem.

The plaintiffs charge that a police informant among the Klansmen and an undercover agent of the federal Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms among the Nazis provoked them into joining forces and attacking the demonstrators.

"It's an invitation to abuse," said Rep. Don Edwards, D-Calif., whose Subcommittee on Civil and Constitutional Rights has been probing the FBI's use of undercover agents and informants.

However, a law enforcement official in North Carolina, who spoke on the condition that he, his agency or jurisdiction remain anonymous, said the scarcity of informants among the Klansmen, Nazis and communists in 1979 "may have been one of the things that precipitated" the shootings.

Better lines of communication were established with members of North Carolina extremist groups in the wake of the slayings "to defuse any situations that could lead to violence," he said.

"Hopefully you build up rapport, influence them if they step into something that could be confrontational, and encourage them to take a different tack," he said. "I don't think we'll be caught as short as we were before."

Six Klansmen and Nazis were found innocent of state murder charges in a 1980 trial, and nine were acquitted in a federal civil rights trial last year. Both trials featured television news clips showing defendants firing on demonstrators, but the juries — both all-white — apparently concluded that the Klansmen and Nazis fired in self-defense.

A former University of North Carolina professor who wrote a book about the use of informants in the civil rights movement said he doubts there was any high-level conspiracy to have the informants provoke a battle between the extreme right and left in Greensboro.

"I think the most major mistake people at both ends of the ideological spectrum make is that police agencies are much more tightly controlled and consciously motivated than they really are," said David Garrow, author of "The FBI and Martin Luther King."

"In the last 20 years ... there have been a whole collection of cases where informants were running the agents rather than the agents running the informants," said Garrow. "Informants being out of the control of their supervising agency would be almost par for the course."

Garrow said the FBI also had an informant who embezzled money from King's organization without the knowledge of his agency supervisors. And two FBI informants in the U.S. Communist Party during the 1950s and 1960s exaggerated its activities to fuel the fears of FBI chief J. Edgar Hoover, he said.

The anonymous law enforcement official in North Carolina agreed that informants sometimes try to manipulate their supervisors.

"You've got to look at them — are you recruiting them or are they recruiting you?" he said. "In 1979, after the shootout, we looked at whether some groups were trying to infiltrate law enforcement...."

"These individuals have lives and minds of their own," said Robert Pence, agent in charge of the FBI in North Carolina. "Obviously a criminal informant is somebody knowledgeable about criminal activity or on the fringe of it."

"We don't encourage them to commit crimes — in fact we ... certainly admonish them not to get involved in criminal activities. But with people who are out there, you obviously don't have ideas about what they're doing every minute because you're not with them."

Edwards said his panel found that the FBI would allow informants and undercover agents to commit crimes to keep their cover as long as they "get permission from the highest FBI authorities first."

Sometimes the agent, in his zeal to report wrongdoings, stoops to entrapment, said George Gardner, director of the North Carolina Civil Liberties Union.

Undercover agents who are officially employed by an agency are much more reliable than informants who may have ties to the criminal community, said Gary Marx, a Massachusetts Institute of Technology sociology professor who is writing a book on undercover police. But even they may be tempted to create or exaggerate misdoings among the people they've infiltrated, he said.

"Our system doesn't really operate to reward people for findings of innocence," said Marx. "Cops and prosecutors get attention when they make arrests."

Edwards wants a law to require police to get a warrant before using undercover agents or informers.

"If properly handled with strict discipline, they (undercover agents and informers) can be a very useful law enforcement tool ... especially in organized crime and white collar crime," said Edwards. "However ... it's disturbing to think that a government employee, which an undercover agent is, would ever permit a crime to occur."

Senate Panel Accepts Core Of New Child-Care Standards For Centers

By F. ALAN BOYCE
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — A Senate committee has approved child day-care standards that will form the heart of a package to be presented to the full Senate next week.

Sen. Charles Hipps, D-Haywood, chairman of the Committee on Children and Youth, said Wednesday that he hopes to begin Senate action next Thursday.

"We've got the bills we approved last week drawn up and one more bill on reorganization (state day-care administration) was ready today, we just ran out of time," he said.

Committee action was slowed Wednesday by debate over whether church-run day care should be exempt from improved standards governing programs and education.

Sen. Ollie Harris, D-Cleveland, won the exclusion from a bill to provide minimal health and safety standards for day-care plans — those with fewer than five children. But the committee voted 8-5 against a similar amendment for day-care centers when some members objected to exemptions from nutrition standards on top of staff training and education requirements.

"I think they probably overreached," Hipps said. "If they drop the nutrition issue it will probably fly."

Tom Strickland of the North Carolina Association of Christian Schools, said a requirement for posted menus "gets into the day-to-day operations of the church ministry itself" and could violate the separation of church and state. But he said it's up to Harris whether the issue is dropped.

"He's the senator," Strickland said. "He's the one that knows how the Senate works."

Harris said he is considering changing his amendment either at next week's committee meeting or on the Senate floor.

Sens. Helen Marvin, D-Gaston, and Lura Tally, D-Cumberland, argued that all children should receive proper nutrition.

"We have many churches who do not want to be exempt from this bill," Ms. Tally said.

Strickland said church-run day care agreed to comply with provisions in the bill for greater space requirements, improved staff-to-child ratios and written disciplinary policies.

Barnes said no one knows how much the ratio change and other improvements will end up costing parents, saying estimates ranged from 99 cents a week to 23 percent.

Graham Joins Fight Against Job Freeze

RALEIGH (AP) — A legislative review of 3,087 vacant state jobs that's designed to cut unnecessary positions could disrupt some government operations, officials say.

"If we mean to weed the garden, don't pull up the vegetables along with the weeds," said Agriculture Commissioner Jim Graham, whose department has 62.5 vacancies he attributed to normal turnover.

There probably are some obsolete jobs in state government, Graham said in an interview Wednesday. But he insisted the positions in his department are vital and vowed to "fight with all my strength" to preserve them.

A legislative budget leader who announced the review and ordered a freeze on hiring for unfilled jobs without his committee's permission defended the action as necessary to eliminate wasteful spending.

"Some of these jobs have been vacant 10 years," said Rep. Bob Etheridge, D-Harnett, co-chairman of the Joint Base Budget Committee. "I think anybody who wants to keep funding them should have to justify it."

Gov. Jim Martin has condemned the freeze as an unconstitutional encroachment on his authority, but praised the search for unnecessary jobs.

Department and agency leaders will appear before budget subcommittees to defend any vacant jobs they want continued. If all the empty jobs were cut, $56.5 million in state revenues and $3.6 million in federal money would be saved, Etheridge said.

Phosphate Proposal Coming Under Fire

RALEIGH (AP) — North Carolina's bid to be more protective of the environment than the federal government is drawing less criticism than attempts to limit phosphorus in laundry detergent.

"You are hitting a gnat with an elephant gun," Rep. Robert McAlister, D-Rockingham, said of the proposed phosphate ban.

During consideration Wednesday of both bills, McAlister told the House Water and Air Resources Committee the bill was introduced "to keep the cities from putting in a high-priced removal system" that "down the line" they will need anyway.

When McAlister said the bill introduced by Rep. Joe Hackney, D-Orange, would hurt the agriculture industry, Hackney drew the line.

"You're setting up a straw man and then knocking it over," he said. "Nothing in the bill affects agriculture."

The bill would make it a $50 misdemeanor to sell household laundry detergent with more than 0.5 percent phosphorus by weight or industrial detergent with more than 8.7 percent phosphorus. It also would limit water conditioners to 20 percent phosphorus.

Environmentalists say the ban will help control phosphorus-induced algae growth that can strip oxygen from fresh water, killing fish. Opponents claim non-phosphate detergent is more expensive, cleans less effectively and contributes less to the problem than agricultural runoff containing phosphorus from pesticides and fertilizer. A public hearing on the matter is set for April 9.

Hackney said household phosphorus is the major villain and that eliminating it would reduce the removal costs at water treatment plants, which can be as high as $10 for each person in the system.

He agreed that cities might eventually have to install systems capable of removing 90 percent of phosphorus from waste water, but he said controlling it at the source is still a cheaper alternative.

Hackney's bill to repeal state laws preventing North Carolina from adopting water, air and hazardous waste regulations more strict than those at the federal level drew less attention.

McAlister questioned the need for the bill, saying, "I have had no request from any citizen of this state asking that we be more strenuous in our regulations than the federal government."

But Hackney said some state regulations may already "run afoul" of the laws, adding, "No state has the extent of handcuffing that we do."

He said state agencies may know more about toxic substances than the federal Environmental Protection Agency but there's "no way to correct it if we find a problem."

Rep. Donald Dawkins, D-Richmond, said in some instances it might be necessary for a state's regulations to be less strict than federal laws. Hackney countered that federal law already requires that states abide by federal restrictions and that there need be "no great fear of onerous environmental regulation" by state agencies if the bill is passed.

The committee has scheduled a public hearing on that bill for April 4.

Delays Frustrate Martin Lobbyist

RALEIGH (AP) — The lobbyist and the senator on whom Gov. Jim Martin is relying to help push his $489 million tax cut through the Legislature say they're unhappy with the prolonged delay in introducing the package.

"I haven't had anything to sell, and that's been frustrating to me," I. Beverly Lake Jr., Martin's legislative liaison, told reporters Wednesday.

"With every day that goes by, we lose enthusiasm," said Senate Minority Leader Bill Redman, R-Iredell. "I want to get the bill in."

Both men were interviewed as they struggled to line up bipartisan sponsorship for a 14-page bill containing Martin's plan to repeal the property taxes on intangible assets and business inventories and the sales tax on food and medicine.

Lake said the bill would be filed today — "cross my heart."

Martin outlined details of his plan during his Feb. 28 State of the State speech. But its arrival in bill form has been held up by what legislative and administration sources describe as a combination of lengthy consultations, drafting snags and in-house squabbles.

Redman, expected to be the bill's chief sponsor, expressed impatience with the administration for letting the search for Republican and Democratic co-sponsors delay the measure's introduction.

"I'm not getting across, apparently, the way I want to," he said. "I can understand the rationale for bipartisan support but ... right now that's of secondary importance."

At midafternoon, as Redman met with Lake in his office, the Senate GOP leader slipped a note reading "HELP" under the door to reporters waiting outside.

Lake said later his effectiveness had been hampered by having to attend administration strategy sessions instead of lobbying.

"I spent six and a half hours in meetings yesterday," he said. "Obviously you can't do any legislative work or lobbying when you're not in the Legislature."

Lake and Redman telephoned and visited Democrats and Republicans in the Senate, where the bill will go first. They said the measure had bipartisan support but wouldn't comment on who might sponsor it, and Lake finally said late Wednesday he didn't know.

As the 4 p.m. deadline for filing the bill passed, Redman emerged from the office of Sen. Harold Hardison, D-Lenoir. "I've missed my goal," he said. Hardison said in an interview, "I don't agree to nothing that I haven't seen."

Lake said the holdup was due partially to Martin's desire to get input from an array of interest groups — including business, industry and local governments.

The "very technical" bill was finished last week, but several "nitpicking" meetings produced further delay, Lake said. Then came discussions on "who and how many" sponsors to enlist.

Despite the problems, Lake and Redman said the bill's prospects were good.

"We've always had very good assurances of Democratic support including ... the leadership," said Lake.

Democrats in both houses have introduced over a dozen tax reform bills, ranging from partial repeal of the intangibles and inventory taxes to elimination of the inheritance tax.

Comparable Pay Study Is Debated

RALEIGH (AP) — Supporters of a comparable worth study say it would help women stuck in low-paying, dead-end jobs, but opponents say women already have the opportunity to leave those jobs for better ones.

Nearly 200 speakers and spectators Wednesday jammed into a public hearing of the House Judiciary II Committee, which is considering a bill that would end the $650,000 study by a private company.

The study was authorized by a two-paragraph section of an appropriations bill approved last year without debate.

Meredith Bacon, chairman of the Swain County Board of Commissioners, said the repeal bill introduced by Rep. Richard Wright, D-Columbus, chairman of the committee, showed a "serious and negligent insensitivity to working women."

"Lots of current studies show undervaluation of women's jobs, but not why," said Ms. Bacon, who was chairman of the Comparable Worth-Pay Equity Task Force for the state Council on the Status of Women. She said the lower pay stemmed from discrimination.

Ruby Jones of the Business and Professional Women of North Carolina said comparable worth, like slavery and child labor, is "fundamentally a moral policy decision."

"If market forces dictated salaries, then nurses would be highly paid," Ms. Jones said. "But they're not. Any surveys are hard-pressed to find a field where pay for women equals 100 percent of male pay."

Wright said last week that initial work by Psychological Associates Inc., which contracted to do the study, conflicts with a legislative mandate that market factors of supply and demand be weighed equally against all other factors to determine the value of a job.

But former Rep. Al Adams, representing the company, said it "has never been questioned that supply and demand factors are an essential and important part of the study."

"Market factors are being given an equal weight to all other factors combined."

Among women objecting to the study was a state environmental engineer who said she got an engineering degree to put herself into a better job.

"I am a woman who has faced discrimination and won," said Stephanie Richardson. "I do not want to be compared at the same level as those who've taken the easier route."

She said comparable worth would give higher salaries to some state employees "who couldn't last five minutes in the private sector."

It would equalize state government jobs, she said, "because the cream of the crop would leave."

Olga Santo Tomas, who left Cuba 25 years ago, said she saw the free enterprise system destroyed in her native country and did not want to see it weakened here.

"In 1985, we as women have all the tools needed to succeed," she said. "We should not force ourselves into jobs as women, but should earn them by our own merits as individuals."

Jane Leonard of Greensboro, director of public affairs for a textile firm, said comparable worth fails in the belief that "jobs have some intrinsic value in themselves."

"Mothering is obviously far more important than singing," Ms. Leonard said. "But mothers are paid nothing, and Michael Jackson is a millionaire."

She rejected arguments that women are consciously segregated into low-paying jobs that have no advancement potential.

"There is ample evidence that women choose so-called women's jobs," Ms. Leonard said. "Comparable worth is the worst type of protectionist action we can take. If these are truly dead-end jobs, then we should be encouraging women to leave them."

Bill Oakley Says

Chitterlings' Taste Beats Their Smell

Bill Oakley is, in my estimation, a trustworthy person. So when he told me that chitterlings (pronounced chit'lins) don't taste like they smell, I wanted to believe him. Still I couldn't, during my recent visit to the kitchen of Contentnea Creek Bar-B-Q in Farmville, try eating any of the cooked hog's intestines. I wanted to, but new spasms would begin in my digestive tract every time I considered it, just as they started every time Bill raised another forked ladle full of boiled chitterlings from the pot. That's when the odor would diffuse anew throughout the room.

Bill just chuckled at my reaction. He's used to it — the reaction of novices and the odor. He agrees with me that boiling chitterlings have a smell not unlike a pig parlor. That's why he only cooks them one day a week — Tuesdays — and serves them only from 5 to 7 p.m. It takes till sometimes Wednesday to air the kitchen out, he said. Sometimes the toughest time is early each Wednesday when he comes down to chop barbecue for the day before going to his other job as director of the Farmville Public Works Department, he said.

But chitterling cooking attracts customers for Oakley's take-out-only restaurant. He and his wife Lyda Ruth and employee Doris Shirley have been cooking them for several years and people from Farmville and from some distance away know Tuesday is chitterling day. They are sold by the tray with cornbread, by the plate with cornbread and vegetables, and by the pound.

"Chitterlings are something you usually don't like unless you grew up with them like I did," Oakley said. The son of Carlyle and Mary Oakley, who still live in the Farmville area, he said he was reared on a farm near Joyner's Crossroads and pork was a family mainstay. "We used to use most of our chitterlings to stuff sausage in," he said, "but what we didn't use that way, we cooked and ate."

Cleaning back when people prepared their meat at home was quite a chore, chitterling fan Ray Bailey, a Farmville resident, recalls. "I've toted enough water to fill Contentnea Creek two or three times for my mother, Mrs. Minnie Bailey and my grandmother, Mrs. Lula Bailey, to clean chitterlings. We'd turn them with reeds or small sticks, get all the nastiness out, and as much fat off as possible. We made lard from the fat. Then we rinse and we'd rinse and we'd rinse; let them soak overnight, and rinse some more.

I remember a prank I pulled as a boy. I slipped in where the chitterlings were soaking one night and added a grain of cracked corn. Mama and Grandma didn't get alarmed the next morning, though. They knew they'd done a good job. 'Ray Bailey, come here,' they said. 'You did this, didn't you.' I declared I didn't, but then I fell in to laughing and they knew the truth. They thought it was a good joke, too.

"After the cleaning was done, we'd boil them in a wash pot in the yard. That was a lot better than smelling up the house. Then we'd set them in the kitchen, which in the wintertime was usually cold, and refry them for breakfast.

"They were better back then than they are now, I think. They were smaller. We kept the smallest ones for eating and used the big ones for sausage stuffing. The littler ones are tastier to my way of thinking."

C.B. Baugher, assistant product manager for Gwaltney of Smithfield meat packing company in Smithfield, Va., confirmed during a telephone interview that not many "smaller ones" are being sold for chitterlings now. "Most chitterlings," he said, "are large intestines. The small intestines are used for casings for sausages."

His company does not make sausage casings, however, and channels almost all its intestines into chitterlings. There are about 3½ pounds of intestines in each hog, he said. His company, he said, processes 1,000 hogs an hour.

Most of the chitterling processing is done by a three-tier machine, he said. This machine presses out the fecal material, splits and turns the gut, then washes extensively. Inspectors are constantly checking for any that need more cleaning. Then scalding takes place, followed by packing in five-, 10-, and 40-pound containers. Chilling is done immediately and many are frozen.

Baugher agrees with Oakley that chitterlings are a nostalgia item, eaten mostly in the South or by southerners who have migrated elsewhere. "We sell most of our chitterlings from Baltimore south," he said, "though we do sell some in New York and Boston."

In Salley, S.C., each year a Chitterling Festival is held, he said, and a half-million pounds are consumed.

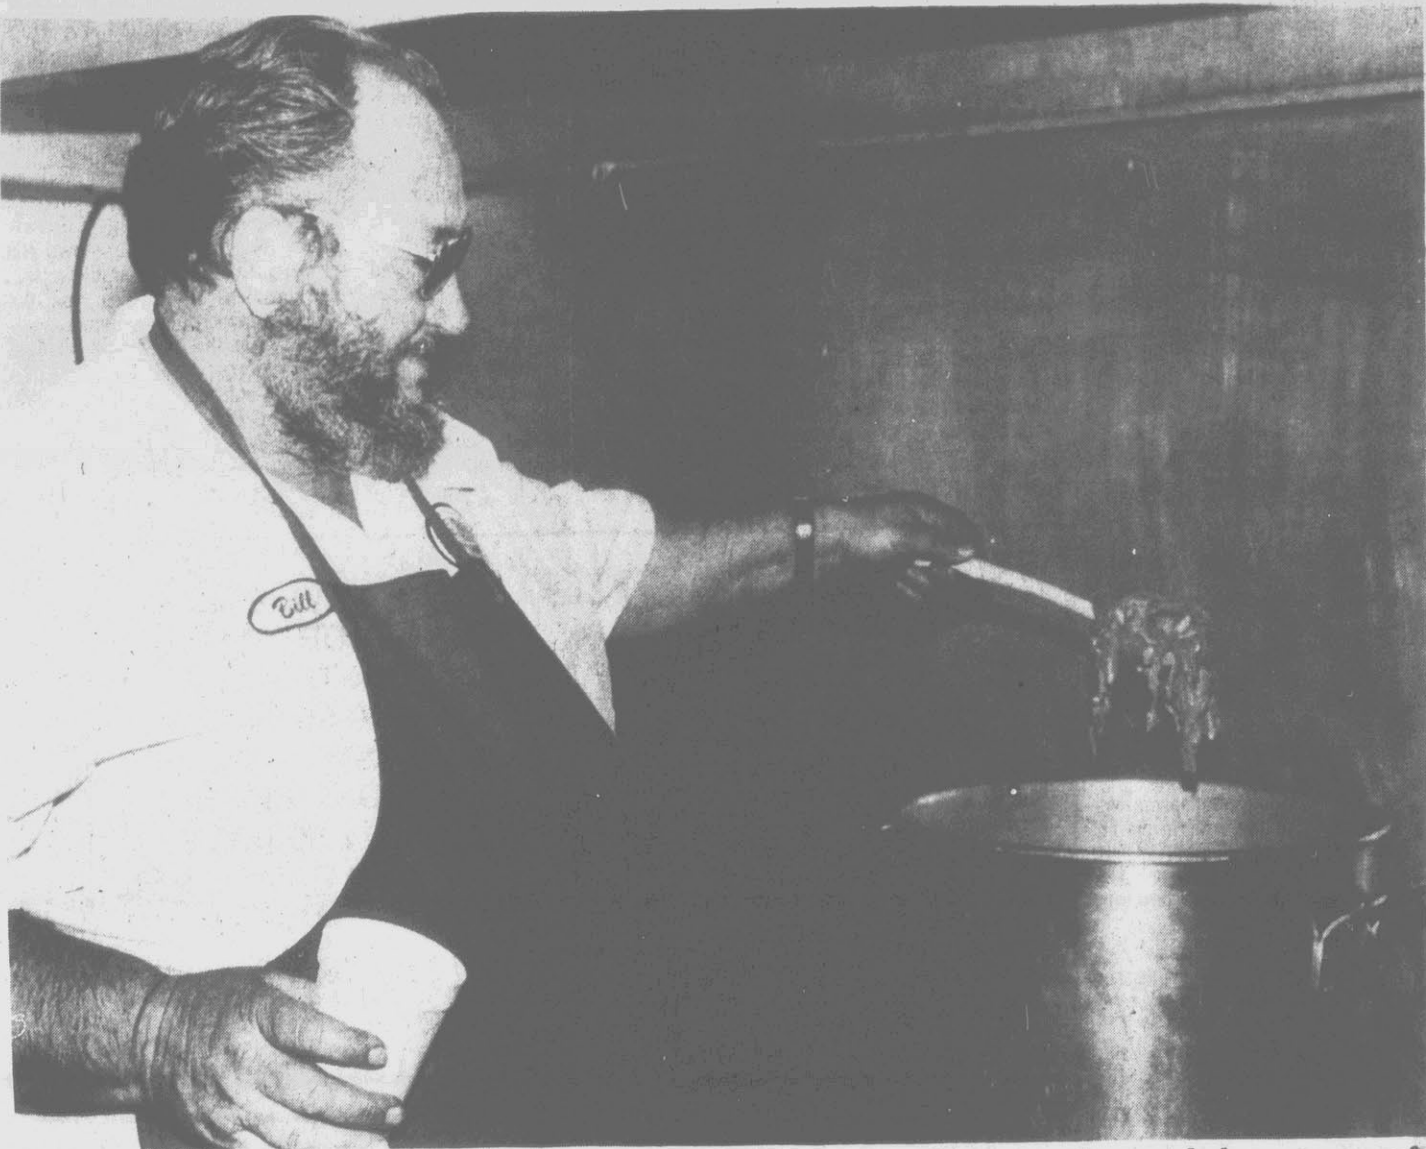

Besides fresh and frozen, some are sold by some companies, not his, as an ingredient of C-loaf, a cold cut made of chitterlings and stomachs, salt, pepper and other spices.

The chitterling season, he said, is about to end for now. It's from mid- to late September till late March or early April. Excess chit-terlings, he said, are used in a tank mixture of meats that is sold to dog food and livestock feed companies.

'Discovery Room' In Raleigh Fascinates Visitors Of All Ages

By PEGGY HOWE
N.C. Department of Cultural Resources

RALEIGH — A small visitor stretches on tiptoe to see herself in the mirror — wearing a long red velvet dress trimmed with black braid.

Her father alongside contemplates his image in a handsome outfit including a black velvet doublet trimmed with silver braid and metal buttons and full style breeches stuffed with sawdust.

Sawdust? The two are at the entrance to the "Discovery Room," a part of the international exhibit "Raleigh and Roanoke" open until June 6 at the N.C. Museum of History in downtown Raleigh.

The "Discovery Room," appealing to young and old alike, takes visitors on a 16th century hands-on mini-journey from Elizabethan England to the shores of the new world.

After seeing themselves in typical clothing worn by Queen Elizabeth's middle class subjects — who, indeed, used sawdust to puff out sleeves and breeches — visitors will try on reproduction armor. The breast plate and helmet will demonstrate how heavy a load a 16th-century soldier might have carried. Visitors may examine the reproduction weapons of the period, including a matchlock gun, to see for themselves how cumbersome and difficult they were to operate.

After trying on the armor for a journey into the unknown new world, the Discovery Room traveler moves on toward life aboard ship.

Neil Fulghum, Curator of Research and Development, explained that this section is a three-dimensional stylized recreation of a ship's deck. Visitors may handle the rigging (hoist the sail) and may leaf through a book of period drawings of shipboard life that include sailors using navigational instruments, hunting in the Arctic and being punished.

A cutaway model of the Elizabeth II accompanies a matching game listing the parts of a 16th-century sailing ship. When a visitor matches a part of the ship with its correct name, that part of the ship is illuminated.

The uncertainties of 16th-century navigation are shown in a display entitled, "Where Am I?" Visitors may stand on a raised quarterdeck and operate 16th-century navigational instruments such as a cross-staff and a knotline. Fulghum explained that the cross-staff, an instrument for measuring latitude by sighting the horizon to the base of the sun, was difficult to use on a pitching ship. "The navigator had to be a mathematician as well," he said, "to use these instruments." He also noted that usually a ship's crew included a navigator and a pilot, who depended on visual sightings.

"The Roanoke voyagers relied upon experienced pilots such as the Portuguese Simon Ferdinando, the only one of the voyagers who had been to the new world before.

"Arriving within two or three degrees of your destination was really excellent (navigation)," he said.

Fulghum explained that visitors will learn that a 16th-century compass needed regular renewal of its magnetism through the use of the lodestone, an oxide of iron.

Another device used by the 16th-century sailors was a knotline — a line tied with knots to measure distance — and the ship's speed was determined by how fast knots passed through a sailor's hand as he played out the rope. "This is the origin of today's nautical term 'knots,'" Fulghum pointed out.

As they "arrive" in the new world, visitors will learn some Algonquian words by pushing buttons on a panel that offers an illustration of each item as its Indian name appears.

The final part of the Discovery Room journey asks visitors to imagine they're among the 117 members of the "lost colony." A spinning drum lists six possible fates which might have befallen the small band of English attempting to plant a colony. Visitors try to determine if members of the lost colony were massacred by the Spanish or Indians, shipwrecked while trying to return to England, killed by a land storm, or decided to relocate near Chesapeake Bay, or with friendly Indians near present-day Ocracoke.

The Discovery Room is part of the exhibit "Raleigh and Roanoke" at the Museum of History, an agency of the Department of Cultural Resources, at 109 E. Jones St., Raleigh. It is part of America's 400th Anniversary celebration. In addition to the exhibit, a wide variety of special programs and presentations is planned throughout the three-month period. Among these are free films and live presentations, family workshops and lectures on archeology and Indian life.

Admission is free. Special museum hours for "Raleigh and Roanoke" are Monday, Tuesday, Thursday, 9 a.m. — 8 p.m.; Wednesday, Friday, Saturday, 9 a.m. — 5 p.m.; Sunday 1-6 p.m.

For details and schedules, call the museum at 733-3894 in Raleigh.

Union Officials Moving To Point Up Problems Of Textile Industry

AP Business Writer
CHARLOTTE (AP) — Rallying to the aid of the ailing U.S. textile industry, union leaders are sponsoring demonstrations to call attention to the problem and urge consumers to save their neighbors' jobs by buying American-made products.

"The crisis is getting worse, not better," said Bruce Raynor, vice president and southern region director of the Amalgamated Clothing and Textile Workers Union. "Something must be done to stop the destruction of the textile industry."

Raynor spoke at a news conference Wednesday with North Carolina AFL-CIO President Chris Scott. The audience included about 30 cheering union leaders from around the state, many holding signs saying "People Before Imports."

"Just like automobiles are to Michigan, textiles are to North Carolina," Scott said. "The erosion of the manufacturing base in the state means workers ... will suffer terribly and the North Carolina economy will suffer terribly."

The union leaders also called for legislation and administration action against an influx of textile imports.

Raynor said there are no plans now to call for a boycott of retailers that sell imported products, but he said that "we're prepared to do whatever it takes to save jobs."

"If it takes marching to Washington, we've marched to Washington before," he said.

Raynor said demonstrations were planned for Raleigh on April 10, Asheville on April 26 and Charlotte at a later date.

He said the union was lobbying for the Textile and Apparel Trade Enforcement Act of 1985. The bill, recently introduced in Congress, would slow import growth by tying it to growth in the U.S. market.

"But that's not enough," he said. "The root cause is the high level of the dollar. The U.S. administration must intervene in money markets to decrease the value of the dollar."

The high dollar value has made imported textiles cheaper for retailers and destroyed the export market for many American manufacturers.

Union and industry leaders believe the bill will pass because it has support among workers around the country, said Raynor. But he said "the most deafening silence is coming from the White House," which he said has not yet issued "marching orders" telling allied congressmen how to vote.

Raynor said North Carolina lost

17,000 textile and apparel jobs last year and 61 plants closed as apparel imports captured half of the U.S. market. He blamed the fair-trade-minded Reagan administration for failing to enforce existing import restrictions. But he placed part of the blame on U.S. companies that have moved some operations overseas or have imported textiles to sell under their own labels.

"They've been fighting along with us, but they can turn on a dime and deal with the problem of imports by becoming importers themselves," he said. "We can't move overseas to these countries that pay 30 or 40 cents an hour."

Scott has estimated that some 25,000 of North Carolina's 210,000 textile workers are unionized. Raynor said non-union workers will be invited to the demonstrations.

The crisis in textiles may have made workers less willing to join

FBI Confiscates Van Of Weapons

ATLANTA (AP) — Federal officials are trying to determine what Bruce C. Pierce, reputed head of a militant white racist organization, was doing in Georgia when he was arrested with a van full of weapons.

His wife, Julie Ann Wilson Pierce, was detained briefly Wednesday in Jasper, Ala., by FBI agents who said they confiscated a cache of weapons she was hauling in a trailer. She was not arrested.

The weapons found in the trailer included "dozens of hand grenades, explosive powder, foreign- and domestic-made automatic weapons resembling M-16 rifles, hand guns and about $7,000 in cash," special FBI Agent Tom Moore said.

Moore declined to comment on why she wasn't arrested.

The 30-year-old Pierce, appearing Wednesday before U.S. Magistrate William Harper in Atlanta, was ordered held without bond for up to 10 days.

The Metairie Falls, Wash., resident, who is said to head the group The Order, was arrested Tuesday in Rossville, a suburb of Chattanooga, Tenn.

Pierce had been living in a recreational vehicle with his wife and three children in the Atlanta area for the last two weeks, FBI agent Charles Matthews, who coordinated the arrest, said.

"I don't have any idea what he was doing here," said Matthews. "Whatever it was bad."

The FBI was seeking several people for questioning, Matthews said.

Pierce was arrested on four federal warrants for robbery, conspiracy, extortion and firearms violations in California, Washington and Montana and for failing to report last April for his two-year counterfeiting sentence in Spokane, Wash., Harper said.

Pierce requested a public defender, telling the magistrate that he had no available assets to pay a lawyer, no job and no bank account.

In Denver, Police Sgt. Tom Haney said Pierce is wanted there for questioning in the slaying of radio talk show host Alan Berg in June.

Berg, who was Jewish, was a controversial outspoken critic of anti-Semitism and racism. He was killed June 18 by machine-gun fire, and the weapon was found in an FBI raid on the Idaho home of a supporter of The Order.

Members of the group have been linked to a series of crimes in the West, including shootouts with FBI agents and robberies in Montana, Washington, Oregon and California.

Rape 'Victim' Says She Lied, Inmate Expected To Be Freed

CHICAGO (AP) — After six years in prison, Gary Dotson says the prospect of freedom is "like a dream" and that he holds no grudge against the woman who now says she lied when she accused him of rape.

Dotson could be freed within hours of a hearing next week. "If anything went wrong, it'd come close to killing me," said the slight, softspoken 28-year-old at a news conference Wednesday at the Joliet Correctional Center.

He said he was trying to control his emotions "because I believed I'd never be here in the first place, and now they tell me I'm going to go out."

"It's like a dream. I can't get over the surprise and shock ... I'm ecstatic."

Dotson, of suburban Country Club Hills, was sentenced to 25 to 50 years in 1979 after conviction on charges of rape and aggravated kidnapping.

His accuser, now a married,

23-year-old New Hampshire mother of two, recently told her minister that she lied about the attack, said her lawyer, John McLario.

In a sworn affidavit, the woman said she had sex in 1977 with a teen-age boyfriend and was "concerned about the consequences of my promiscuity and thought I was pregnant and therefore decided to claim I was raped."

McLario said investigators interviewed the old boyfriend and that he confirmed her new story.

Dotson said he harbored no bitterness toward the woman, whose name was not made public by her attorney.

"In the beginning, I was angry that I was picked out," Dotson said. "But I can't hold it against her because ... she made a mistake."

cience do bother them about things they've done in the past. I'm grateful."

The NCAA college ice hockey finals begin today in Detroit. Ice hockey is perhaps the most popular sport in Canada and in many of the northern United States. There is some evidence that an early version of the game was played on the frozen canals of the Netherlands in the 1600s. British soldiers in Canada in the 1850s and 1860s played a modified version of lacrosse on ice. The first recorded use of a puck, instead of a ball, was in Kingston, Ontario, in 1860.

Rock Stars Happy With Relief Anthem

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. (AP) — "We Are The World," the fund-raising anthem by 45 music superstars to battle hunger in Africa and the United States, is a fund-raising blockbuster despite its No. 2 rating by Billboard magazine, its promoter says.

The rating "disappointed me some, but it's hard to be disappointed when you've raised $8 million in the past two weeks," said Ken Kragen, who organized the recording.

Kragen, executive director of the United Support of Artists for Africa Foundation, had predicted the single would skyrocket to No. 1 in two weeks.

"I can't turn the radio on without hearing the song, and I haven't been in a store that hasn't said it's the fastest selling record they've ever seen," said Kragen, who manages such stars as Lionel Richie and Kenny Rogers.

"From where we sit, it's the hottest thing we've ever seen in our lives," he said Wednesday.

The record was inspired by a similar effort to aid millions of drought and famine victims in Ethiopia and other African nations by British rock stars called "Do They Know It's Christmas."

The song hit No. 21 on the ratings its first week then leaped to No. 5 its second week. The list is compiled from a national sample of stores, sales reports and radio play lists, said Carol Henderson of Billboard.

Billboard marked the record with a bullet, meaning that it's gaining popularity.

Edging out "We Are The World" for the top slot on the upcoming Hot 100 singles list is Phil Collins' "One More Night."

"World," written by Richie and Michael Jackson, was recorded in an all-night session Jan. 28. It features such stars as Richie, Jackson, Rogers, Bruce Springsteen, Tina Turner, Ray Charles, Harry Belafonte, Stevie Wonder, Bob Dylan, Smokey Robinson, Cyndi Lauper, the Pointer Sisters and Paul Simon. Quincy Jones conducted.

The USA for Africa Foundation has raised $8.7 million, Kragen said. The foundation's net from sales of 2.9 million singles is $4.1 million, with another $1.8 million from sales of 542,000 extended-play versions.

The foundation also has made $600,000 from $1 million in sales of such merchandise as sweatshirts and pins, $2 million from Home Box Office for exclusive rights to an hour-long video and $200,000 in cash donations.

"We expect our first disbursement in June, or perhaps May," foundation spokeswoman Wendy Ferris said.

An album featuring the longer version of "We Are The World" plus nine songs contributed by various top artists will be in the stores next Monday, selling for $9.98, said a Columbia Records spokeswoman who spoke only on the condition that her name not be used.

The album's songs are Steve Perry's "If Only For The Moment, Girl," the Pointer Sisters' "Just A Little Closer," Bruce Springsteen & the E Street Band's "Trapped," Northern Lights' "Tears Are Not Enough," Prince and the New Power Generation's "4 The Tears In Your Eyes," Chicago's "Good For Nothing," Tina Turner's "Total Control," Kenny Rogers' "A Little More Love," and Huey Lewis & the News' "Trouble In Paradise."

USA for Africa is trying to arrange a worldwide broadcast of "We Are The World" at 10:50 a.m. EST on Good Friday, April 5, for what Ms. Ferris called "world unity across the airwaves."

"We've gotten a lot of real positive response from Canada, England, across the United States. There's been interest all over the world," she said.

Meanwhile, House and Senate negotiators in Washington agreed Wednesday to appropriate $400 million in emergency food aid for African nations ravaged by drought and famine. The figure was a compromise between $285 million provided in a Senate bill and $600 million in a House bill. The money is to be spent by Dec. 31.

"City Hall Notes," the City's bi-weekly radio program, is aired on WOOW Radio each Tuesday and Thursday morning at 10:25 a.m.

'Today' To Broadcast From Vatican In Week-Long Show From Rome

NEW YORK (AP) — In the television business, they're called teasers, little promotional snippets that tell viewers what's coming up. Many are crass and titillating, but the one that closed the "Today" show was quite dignified.

It came from Pope John Paul II. NBC's "Today" program will emanate from Rome all next week, and the pope mentioned it Wednesday during his general audience from Nervi Hall in the Vatican: "I am particularly pleased to welcome the group from the American television network NBC, which will be broadcasting directly to the United States from the Vatican during Holy Week."

The pope, who is considered very media conscious, added, "It is my hope that your work will bear much spiritual fruit." Then he sent "warm and cordial greetings to all the people of America."

NBC didn't excessively trumpet it, but "Today" closed its Wednesday broadcast with the pope's promo.

As part of "Today's" Holy Week visit, the pope will hold a private mass for the show's staff, crew and on-air talent. It will be the pope's first televised mass out of the Pauline Chapel, where the walls are adorned by Michelangelo's last two paintings: "The Crucifixion of St. Peter" and "The Conversion of St. Paul."

"I think he believes it's an opportunity for him to communicate his message," said Timothy J. Russert, the NBC vice president who negotiated for "Today." "It's an opportunity for us to interact with him on TV. And one little prayer won't hurt any of us."

After the Mass, the pope has agreed to greet "Today" hosts Bryant Gumbel and Jane Pauley and weatherman Willard Scott. They will be allowed to wear microphones. Half the NBC contingent of 18, including Gumbel, are Catholic, Russert said.

NBC had asked for an interview with the pope, but was told that "the Holy Father does not grant sit-down interviews," Russert said.

Russert began laying the groundwork for the papal activities nearly six months ago. "My background as an altar boy helped," he said.

'Cosby' Is For Very Young

NEW YORK (AP) — There were nine kids acting silly on the couch, if you count the tall one in the corner, Bill Cosby.

Essentially, that's what NBC's "Cosby Show" tonight is all about — little kids being little kids, quite intentionally and spontaneously, while being egged on by Cosby, the program's star, co-creator and executive consultant.

The storyline is deceptively simple. Eight 5-year-olds are having a sleep-over at the Huxtable household. Cliff (Cosby) is in charge. It's impossible to have youngsters that age remember lines and stage directions, so much of the taping had Cosby ad-libbing and interacting with his little friends.

The episode, titled "Slumber Party," had two full-scale tapings in front of audiences Feb. 28. Because of all the impromptu joshing, each taping had an hour's worth of material — some tedious, some priceless — for what amounts to one 22-minute program (without commercials).

"Is this a two-parter?" kidded Cosby after the early taping.

"It was the longest pudding commercial of all time," said Joanne Alfano, an NBC publicist.

Two scenes highlighted Cosby's wonderful rapport with youngsters. In one, he asks each child his or her name and plays off their answers, their dimples, whatever. Another segment has him giving each kid a ride on his knee.

Tonight's episode was a departure for "The Cosby Show." The programs always have been for the family, but this was the first one that was designed for pre-schoolers. Keep them awake; it's worth it.

"This is a special show," said Cosby. "Sometimes we get into stories where the 5-year-old doesn't know what's going on, so we decided to turn the tables and ask the grown-ups to enjoy a show that was done for the little ones. It's a lot hipper than 'Sesame Street.'"

Child-labor restrictions for kiddie actors are looser in New York than California, so the youngsters put in a longer day. In addition to the tapings Thursday afternoon and night, the kids had a rehearsal that morning, for which the cameras were rolling, just in case something magical happened.

Cosby was the father figure on the set, too. When the kids were misbehaving, he had some strong words for his 5-year-old stage daughter, Keshia Knight Pulliam, who plays Rudy Huxtable. "You're the grown-up here," he said. "I want you to set an example."

At the tapings, the cast was introduced to the studio audience. Keshia came bounding down the stairs blowing kisses. Jamal Warner (Theo Huxtable) got a big hand. He's the only boy, and he lives in Brooklyn, where "The Cosby Show" is taped.

Of course, the loudest applause was reserved for Cosby, who tripped over the stairs on his way out. Anything for a laugh. (There's no applause sign here, and no phony laughter is added to the real audience reactions.)

The Cryptquip is a simple substitution cipher in which each letter used stands for another. If you think that X equals O, it will equal O throughout the puzzle. Single letters, short words, and words using an apostrophe can give you clues to locating vowels. Solution is accomplished by trial and error.

YOUR DAILY
Horoscope
from the Carroll Righter Institute

GENERAL TENDENCIES: Generally speaking, this is quite a difficult day as most everyone will be in a contentious mood and ready to argue at the drop of a hat, so keep tactful and diplomatic.

ARIES (Mar. 21 to Apr. 19) Show that you are an A-1 citizen and keep any promises you have made to the letter. If you irk a higher-up, you may be a whipping boy.

TAURUS (Apr. 20 to May 20) You want to get into new activities you know little about, but be wise and study into them carefully first.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21) You are eager to complete some business affairs, but don't be forceful or you could lose out where it counts the most.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to Jul. 21) Your partners may want to make revisions to several agreements you have reached, but this would be detrimental.

LEO (Jul. 22 to Aug. 21) Re-check your work today and be sure it is handled precisely, otherwise, you can get into trouble if you made any mistakes.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22) Before you get into that recreation that is appealing, be sure you count the cost well. Use control with your mate.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22) Be more considerate of the wishes of kin and help them to gain them and

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21) Plan just how to handle your outside affairs more skillfully and organize your work much better.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21) You may get a sudden idea how best to add to your abundance but don't take any risks that could prove costly.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20) You may feel disgruntled because you think your personal life is not going as you would like it to.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19) Since you are an expert, you like to make direct comments, but be careful you do not hurt others' feelings today.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to Mar. 20) You have several personal goals you want to reach, but do only the preparatory work on them now.

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY ... he or she will have to solve many a practical problem, so be sure to give an education slanted along trouble shooting lines.
Be sure to teach early that a spirit of cooperation is needed in order to get the best results when dealing with others, even if the nature is a pugnacious one.

Hijacker Overcome By Security Men

ISTANBUL, Turkey (AP) - Security men disguised as airline employees sneaked aboard a hijacked Lufthansa jet in Istanbul and overpowered a Syrian hijacker armed with a knife and a broken bottle, authorities said.

The hijacker freed the 142 other passengers and five of the eight crew members an hour after the Boeing 727 landed at Istanbul's Yesilkoy airport, but held the other three crew members hostage until his capture Wednesday.

The Istanbul public prosecutor, Nabi Koker, identified the hijacker as Marwan Hritani, 35, a Syrian geologist with a good command of German. He said none of the passengers and crew was harmed, including the three held hostage.

The state radio said authorities had rejected the hijacker's demand that the plane be refueled.

Good bridge players are usually pessimists. In planning the play, they look on the dark side of things.
Then, if nothing bad happens, they are pleasantly surprised. But if the cards aren't lying well, they are prepared.

North-South bid very well to get to an excellent heart slam. After cue-bids in the minor suits, South's jump over game showed interest in slam but no control of spades. North now knew that he had the right values for slam.

Declarer won the ace of clubs, drew trumps in three rounds and could have claimed his slam had diamonds behaved reasonably. But the 4-1 split meant that declarer had to lose a trick in the suit as well as the ace of spades. Down one.

It is unfortunate that such fine bidding was squandered by such poor play. Instead of relying on breaks in both red suits, declarer should have planned to try to protect himself against a 4-1 diamond break.

Declarer should draw only two rounds of trumps, then cash the ac-eking of diamonds. If diamonds are 3-2, nothing has been lost. Declarer draws the last trump, cashes out the diamonds and establishes a spade for his contract.

However, should diamonds break
4-1, declarer will make his slam whenever the defender with three hearts also holds the long diamonds.
Declarer can then ruff a diamond in dummy, get back to hand with a club ruff to draw the last trump, then set up a spade for his twelfth trick.

Man Finds
Two Rare
Old Teeth

REYNOLDS CREEK, Idaho (AP)
— When Mark Hoagland dug two shiny, 6-inch-long, 3-inch-wide teeth out of the dirt, he knew they were weird — but not that they were about 15 million years old.

The teeth have been identified as the oldest remains of an elephant-like animal, Gomphotherium obscurem, ever found in North America, said Ted Weasna, a Bureau of Land Management paleontology specialist.

"I knew those teeth were too large for any cow or horse," Hoagland said.

"After I found the bones, I went back to the house and told my kids they (the teeth) were probably from some prehistoric animal. They just laughed at me," Hoagland said.

That laughter spurred him to have the teeth identified, if only to prove a point.

Weasna sent one tooth for identification and dating to a paleon-tology expert in Denver who specializes in elephants. The results came back a couple of weeks ago.

The fossils are from the time period when elephant-like animals first came onto this continent, said Greg McDonald, collections manager for the Idaho State Museum of Natural History.

"Elephants first came into the New World about 15 to 16 million years ago across the Bering Strait," McDonald said. "These fossils are from that time period and are the first of their kind that have been found in this country."

Until this find, the oldest elephant remains found in North America were about 9 million years old, McDonald said. Elephants were wiped out in North America about 12,000 years ago, probably from a combination of climatic conditions and hunting by man, he said.

McDonald said the museum would go to Hoagland's ranch this summer for a preliminary dig to see how many fossil deposits might be there.

TARGETS — Mark Mendoza, front, and other members of the Paschal High School group known as "Fire It Up" gather in front of the Fort Worth, Texas, school. Members of the group have been among the targets of a group of honor students who police say formed a violent gang called "Legion of Doom" to combat crime and drugs among students. (AP Laserphoto)

Honor Students Form Terror Unit To Fight Drugs, Crime

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — A group of "kids with good intentions" formed a secret organization called the "Legion of Doom," bombed a car and killed a cat in a campaign of violence against drug use and crime at their high school, authorities said.

"This is not an ordinary situation because most of the kids are honor students and athletes who thought they were doing the right thing by the offenses they committed," said Detective Tim Ellis.

The "Legion of Doom" apparently was so secret that officials at Paschal High School knew nothing about it, Ellis said.

Police attribute 30 violent incidents since December to the group, including a spree over the weekend in which the windshield of a student's car, parked near the school, was shot out on Friday, the body of a dissected cat was put inside another on Saturday and a pipe bomb damaged a third on Sunday.

The secret organization included some students with perfect 4.0 grade-point averages — "kids with good intentions who went outside the law," said police Detective Ken Henry.

In the first weekend incident, a note was left on the car bearing a red swastika and the message, "Paschal is now Nazi territory. You are short-lived if you return. Heed our warning, there will not be another."

The pipe bomb, loaded with screws and nails, damaged the student's car, a second vehicle and a nearby house, police said. A note left at the scene said, "We do not like thieves. This is your last warning."

The students were questioned Wednesday and the case will be presented to a grand jury, police said.

Most of the violence apparently was directed at members of a rival group called "Fire It Up," officials said.

"Legion of Doom" members had become frustrated over crime and drug use in the school, Henry said. "They were told there was nothing they could do" because there were no witnesses to most of the crimes, he said.

The students had obtained books on building pipe bombs and other weapons, including a bazooka, Ellis said.

"Our current thinking is that because of the large number of offenses and length of time they covered, we're going to present it to the grand jury and let them decide," said police spokesman Doug Clarke. "The core group is seven and there are possibly as many as 10. The majority of offenses are felonies."

Police moved quickly after Sunday's bombing, saying investigators were afraid vandalism might escalate into serious violence and injury.

The Bernhard Goetz subway shooting case in New York City may have inspired the group to take action, Henry said.

Goetz, who on Dec. 22 shot four youths he said demanded $5 from him, was hailed by some after the shooting as a vigilante fighting subway crime. He was indicted Wednesday on four counts of attempted murder.

Radford Gregg, Paschal principal, said Wednesday that he was not aware of any gangs or secret societies operating on the campus.

Gregg said he first learned about the "Legion of Doom" on Tuesday when Fort Worth police and federal agents came to the school investigating last weekend's off-campus violence.

Would-Be Robbery Victim Acts On Impulse ... Wins

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) — A woman says she acted on impulse and didn't have time to be scared when she chased an intruder out of her apartment, vaulted a fence and clung to the windshield wipers of his car as he tried to speed away.

"He told me, 'All right, baby, we're going for a ride,'" Gwen Kemp said Wednesday of her wild tour on the hood of the man's car. "I said, 'Let's go.'"

Ms. Kemp, 31, said a lot of other things, too, during the course of the chase, but she declined to be specific, explaining, "You can't print it."

She said she had never thought what she might do if she found someone burglarizing her apartment, so when she came home for lunch Monday and found the door chained from the inside, "I acted strictly on impulse."

Ms. Kemp — who described her 5-foot-2 body as of "medium" build — bashed the door in. The intruder beat a hasty retreat through the patio door, with Ms. Kemp in close pursuit.

She credited her stamina to having quit smoking and begun jogging "as often as I can stand it" about a year ago.

Even so, by the time she confronted the suspect in a nearby parking lot, both of them were too out of breath to do anything but stare at each other and gasp.

Then he jumped into a car and locked the door before she could pull it open. Ms. Kemp said she beat on the windows, then leaped on the hood when he started the car.

He zig-zagged in the parking lot and tried some short stops, but Ms. Kemp hung tight. Finally, after a sudden stop about a block from the apartment complex, the suspect couldn't get the car going again.

He jumped out and took off running. This time, Ms. Kemp didn't follow.

"I decided to let it go," she said. "I figured I had the car."

Meanwhile, a neighbor had called police, who arrested the suspect a few minutes later as he walked along a nearby street. According to their report, the man was 5-foot-7 and weighed about 140 pounds. As of late Wednesday, he had not been charged.

"I don't know if I'd do it again — but I might," Ms. Kemp said Wednesday night. "I was mad."

Determined

Gwen Kemp of St. Paul had no mercy on a burglary suspect. She chased him out of her apartment, over a fence, up a bank and into a parking lot. She stayed with him, even jumping on the hood of his car. (AP Laserphoto)

Justice Seeking Study By Court

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration, continuing a legal battle related to the Baby Jane Doe case, is asking the Supreme Court to uphold regulations designed to protect babies with severe birth defects.

The Justice Department asked the high court Wednesday to review a decision by the 2nd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New York that struck down government regulations withholding financial aid to hospitals that deny treatment to handicapped infants solely because of their handicaps.

Ruling on a lawsuit by hospital groups, the appellate court had based its decision on Department of Health and Human Services regulations implementing Section 504 of the 1978 Rehabilitation Act.

The lower court said HHS rules do not prohibit a federally assisted hospital program from withholding life-saving surgery on a deformed infant, even if the hospital would not hesitate to perform the same surgery on a normal child.

But the Justice Department said the appellate court ruling was "flatly inconsistent with the language and purpose of Section 504 and with the (Health and Human Services) secretary's implementing regulations and interpretive guidelines...."

"As HHS's study of this matter demonstrates, refusals to treat even moderately handicapped newborns has been more than just a rare occurrence," it said.
