If passed, all three measures will affect those on GHA's waiting list, not those already receiving assistance. "The waiting period for housing will get longer," Lane explained, adding: "But nobody knows what will come out of Congress. Whatever does, I have no doubt it will be very austere."

Kennedy Has Options Open

BOSTON (AP) — Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., says he is maintaining his political committee and contacts should he decide to run again for the presidency in 1988, when his fourth term in the Senate expires.

"I've always said I'd like to be President some day," Kennedy said in an interview published Saturday in The Boston Globe, "though my sense from my own contacts with people around the country is that they're still too exhausted from the last election to be focusing on the next one."

"I will maintain my political committee and contacts and hopefully that is something that could be readily activated should any decision come."

The Globe said Kennedy was interviewed Friday after he spoke at Hofstra University in Hempstead, Long Island, N.Y. at a conference on the presidency of John F. Kennedy.

The Globe said Kennedy emphasized that he gets more satisfaction from his role as a senator than he thought he would four years ago.

"When the Republicans took over the Senate, I thought there would be less opportunity to shape policy," he said. "But with the loss of so many able and gifted Senate members, there has been an increasing vacuum."

"I have welcomed the chance to be involved and it's become very interesting and challenging work, though I still feel the frustration in terms of taking ideas and turning them into policies."

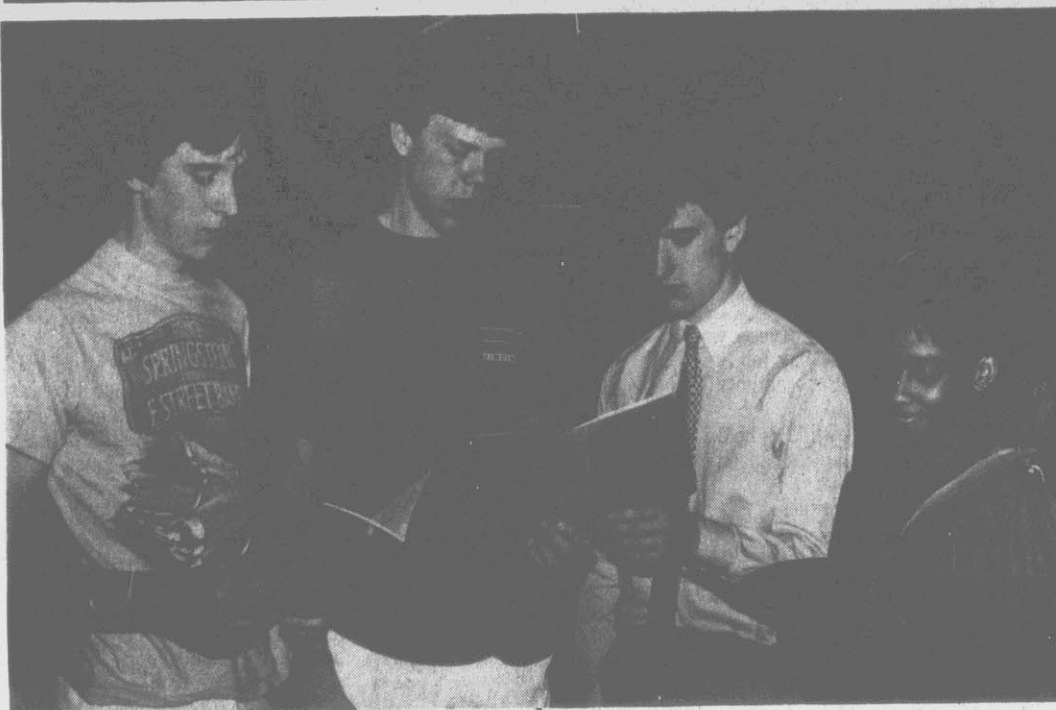

The Globe quoted unidentified senior advisers to Kennedy as saying a decision on running for president is at least a year away. The Globe said Kennedy indicated that, in contrast to previous years, he hoped to look at 1988 more in political than in personal and family terms.

Personal considerations took him out of the races 1976 and 1984. "My children and the other members of my family I feel responsible for are clearly doing very well today," said Kennedy.

Kennedy lost in a race for the Democratic presidential nomination against incumbent Jimmy Carter in 1980.

Farm Saturday evening.

Smith said before his speech that the Teen Dems can have an important impact on the Democratic Party. "If you think about it, North Carolina will change unbelievably in one decade. Studies show that the major population centers in the United States are moving east and the Raleigh area is one of them. People will move into our state in great numbers and they will support and vote in a party."

Smith said that the party is concentrating not on the past, but on the future. "The Teen Dems are our future. We may be looking at future governors, senators, representatives right here. That's why I'm here."

In his speech, Smith said that the Democratic Party has had a wonderful history and also has seen hard times. "We are not here alone. We have a purpose — to make a difference. One of the great ways to make a difference, to make the world better, is through the Democratic Party."

The "top ten" Teen Dems recognized for the past year were: Duncan McCormick, Harnett County; Bobby Hardy, Pitt; Carol Ennis, Harnett; Jerry Meek, Cumberland; Becky Elmore, Catawba; Boris Neal, Pitt; Kia Hardy, Pitt; 1972, when the governor was first elected to Congress. He was also active in East's successful bid for the Senate. Bradshaw became party chairman Jan. 26.

Randy Doub, a member of the state Board of Transportation, who introduced Bradshaw, told those gathered for the dinner that the transportation board has "reduced the paving of Democrat driveways by 100 percent since we've been in charge."

On a more serious note, Doub said, "Our governor went to Raleigh in a bipartisan spirit ... a spirit of cooperation" and has "included many Democrats in his administration." Doub added that Martin "has fired less state employees than any administration."

But Doub said "Gov. Martin needs our help in Raleigh. We need to keep the heat on our legislators," and urge them to cooperate with the governor. "All he's asking is a fair hearing. We need to come to his aid."

Pitt County Republican Party Chairman Doug Hill, who presided at the dinner, presented Andy Andrews with a plaque in recognition of his service to the party as chairman for the past two years.

Farmers Market Could Become Important Outlet

Farmers' markets have operated off and on in Pitt County for many years. At one time there was a permanent home for the operation but that was eventually converted to other uses. More recently the farmers' market has had a succession of locations where farmers could be brought together with their customers.

Now the farmers' market is to have a permanent home. The Pitt Board of Commissioners last week approved the use of a 5.19-acre site on the old County Home farm for the farmers' market. The commissioners also approved a budget of up to $11,390 as start-up funds for the market.

Gene Brown, representing the Pitt Greenville Area Chamber of Commerce, told the commissioners that the N.C. General Assembly has funded a $2,500 planning grant for the market. It will be used for design of a 50- by 150-foot permanent building. A further state grant of $120,000 would be used for construction of the building and parking.

The commission was told that the first-year budget is estimated at $25,400. Rental income is expected to be $12,210 with other income of $1,800. The balance of $11,390 would be made up by the county appropriation. Application for the building funds will now be made to the N.C. Department of Agriculture.

In these difficult agricultural times the county and state can do nothing better than to encourage markets for farm produce. Some small farms might remain in family ownership if some revenues are in sight for their products. The farmers' market can provide the customers and the revenues. Too, if more farmers can find customers for produce they will be encouraged to enter more widespread production of vegetables. Who knows where that could lead? With promotion locally grown produce could find markets in the populous areas of the eastern seaboard.

Before that can be done, however, we have to start somewhere, and the farmers' market can be an important outlet for farm products in Pitt County.

Day Care Rules Proving Complex

The shaping of standards for day-care centers is proving to be a complex chore in the Legislature.

It is a comprehensive piece of legislation ... a quality that almost guarantees the need for compromise and exceptions and flexibility. Such factors open doors to interpretation, room for tolerance and possible shortcomings. It could hardly be otherwise.

Rigidity is a luxury enjoyed only by some simple measures.

Basic standards guarding the health and safety of children entrusted to centers' care are obviously essential, and the Senate subcommittee took that into account.

The final shape of the sought-for legislation remains clouded by virtue of final processing in both houses. We continue to hope approved standards will not add so much to costs of day-care services they are put beyond reach of our low-income families. Their need ranks high in priorities for North Carolina.

There's nothing like it. Your columnist flew to Atlanta last week for a newspaper clinic. I don't travel so much by air that it ceases to be a thrill. In fact, it is still almost exciting as the first flight I ever took.

That, of course, was on a propeller-driven plane. Now what is impressive is the speed with which we are whisked from city to city. A flight from Kinston to Charlotte is less than an hour. And from Charlotte to Atlanta is not much more.

The problem is that planes aren't always able to land and take off on time, particularly in busy airports such as Atlanta. Takeoff time there on the trip back was delayed almost 30 minutes. The plane left the terminal all right but there were nine big jets waiting ahead of it for their chance at the runway.

The most vexing thing about air travel, however, is that so much time is spent in airports awaiting connections, or on the ground traveling through heavy traffic.

A shuttle bus left our hotel in the Buckhead area of Atlanta. Unfortunately I-85 on which we traveled was under heavy construction which slowed things considerably. Then there was a traffic accident ahead which brought the traffic flow to a virtual halt. There was as much time spent on the interstate in Atlanta getting to the airport than the actual flight to Charlotte.

Meals are still served on flights of some distance, but for the short hops there just isn't time. Thus the stewardess (or stewards now) come by with drinks or snacks. A snack on our flight consisted of a bagel in a cellophane wrapper enclosed in a box. Bagels are not exactly standard fare for Southerners raised on corn bread sticks and biscuits, but the doughnut-shaped rolls aren't too bad if you are hungry. Of course, a lunch steak, small salad and potato might have been better, but these are not easy times for the airlines.

How was the flight? Bumpy from Kinston to Charlotte, but smooth as glass on the trip from Atlanta back to Charlotte. The prettiest sight was the evening flight from Charlotte to Kinston. There is a sea of lights on the ground leaving Charlotte, but virtually all the way there is a sprinkling of lights, indicating that practically every farm in North Carolina now has outside lighting. And only a generation back they were still trying to get indoor plumbing.

Well, flying isn't perfect, but if you have any distance to go, and if your destination is a large city, it still beats driving.

Decisions

RALEIGH — There probably aren't too many legislators who ever gave much thought to working in a classroom, or becoming a principal. But when you look at some of the bills being proposed in the 1985 General Assembly, it's quite apparent that a lot of legislators want to run the schools.

One legislator wants to set admission policy, another wants to establish dormitory rules. A third legislator has decided that teachers can't try any new forms of teaching. A fourth wants to decide which community college will offer satellite courses in one of his district's counties.

Is this the kind of thing the Legislature should be deciding, or are these decisions best left to the administrators and governing boards hired to run our schools and universities? Talk with the legislators themselves and even they'll give you differing opinions.

Rep. Joe Mavretic, D-Edgecombe, didn't propose any of the ideas listed above. But he's proposed enough changes in public school policy to be accused of meddling more than once. Of the half-dozen legislators interviewed for this column, he best described where the Legislature should draw the line regarding education.

"The General Assembly ought to concern itself with significant policy issues — macro problems," Mavretic said. "For example, governance, curriculum, finance, the personnel system. It shouldn't concern itself with things like snow days, extra summer employment for teachers and who parks where in the parking lot."

But hasn't the assembly begun to meddle when legislators propose admission standards, like the 700 SAT score bill? Rep. Howard Chapin, D-Beaufort, sponsor of that bill and a teacher for 34 years, says no.

"The whole thing is that the university does not want to be told what to do," Chapin said. "I introduced that bill because (UNC president) Dr. (Bill) Friday said that he had been trying to do something minimum about SATs. I thought I'd help him."

But isn't an academic standard like a minimum SAT better set by professionals? Chapin said no. "The line is drawn when I don't think the (UNC) Board of Governors is doing what I think they ought to do."

Rep. Robert Brawley, R-Iredell, made headlines several weeks ago with his complaints about co-ed dormitories at state universities. He's threatened to introduce legislation to end such mixing of the sexes if university administrators don't change some rules.

Brawley says there ought to be a line between policy and administration that the Legislature doesn't cross. His problem might fall on the administrative side of the line, he admits. "I brought it up to get their attention," he conceded. He expects university administrators will move to correct the bad situations of which he was concerned and that he won't have to file a bill.

Rep. Billy Watkins, D-Granville, is always fighting the community colleges. He either wants to circumvent the college board with special money for schools in his district or to legislate which college will run satellite classes in Caswell County. He says that the Legislature created the community colleges, they can do what they wish with them.

There's a certain amount of posturing in all this. As Mavretic said of Chapin's SAT bill, "He's put his finger on a problem." A legislator, with his high public visibility, can make school administrators address a problem they had been ducking, Mavretic said. The alternative is to let the legislature act on its own. Usually, school officials would prefer to correct a problem before the legislature gets involved and makes it worse.

Boondoggles

WASHINGTON — In June 1982, President Reagan was in London to address the British Parliament. Even the best of men may come up with bad ideas, and on this occasion Mr. Reagan came up with a lulu. He grandly proposed a new effort to promote democracy around the world.

Out of that twinkle in the Presidential eye was born the National Endowment for Democracy. It is known as NED for short. You ought to get acquainted with NED. Over the past 18 months this rattlebrained outfit has frittered away $32 million of your money.

By way of background: As Mr. Reagan conceived "Project Democracy," a new federal agency would be created as the legitimate child of the U.S. Information Agency. As things turned out, a dummy private corporation was set up instead. This was NED. In November 1983, Congress authorized funding up to $31.3 million a year to keep NED going. The idea was "to encourage free and democratic institutions throughout the world by private sector initiatives." This admirable aim was to be accomplished by grants that would go "especially to the two major political parties, labor and business."

Rep. Hank Brown, R-Colo., did his best to kill this bastard child in its cradle. He lost by a vote of 194-215, but he did manage to strip the appropriation act of any specific reference to the two major political parties. In the Senate, Nebraska's Ed Zorinsky also had a go at political infanticide. He too failed, by a vote of 42-49. A lamentable fact is that some usually sound men — Hatch, Garn, Lugar, Quayle, Cochran and Tower — voted in favor of the president's baby. Thus was born the National Endowment for Democracy, and it is now doing business from a suite of offices down on 15th Street.

What kind of business? NED's annual report for 1983-84 recently came to hand. By far the largest grant, for $11 million, went to the AFL-CIO's Free Trade Union Institute. The grant covered a "media outreach campaign" in Chile, "civic education centers" in Brazil, and a regional conference on "democracy and political participation" in Peru. Thanks to the taxpayers, New England trade unionists were able to exchange visits with their brothers in Central America.

A grant of $1.7 million went to the Center for International Private Enterprise, a newborn outfit fathered by the U.S. Chamber of Commerce. Funds went for such vital projects as an examination of "constraints to entrepreneurship" in Togo and "improvement of media appreciation of the market process" in Mexico.

Despite the legislative history of opposition to grants to the political parties, both the Democrats and the Republicans created "institutes" to apply for grants from NED. Each party got $1.5 million in 1983-84. The Democrats spent their grant in part to bring 35 representatives of foreign political parties to the United States, where they observed the November presidential election. The Republicans spent theirs in part on a poll of voter attitudes in Guatemala.

Other grants have gone to private applicants. The National Council of Negro Women got $155,830 "to train women leaders in Guinea, Botswana, Swaziland and Lesotho in democratic principles, organization building, constituency outreach, private sector development, and making women's concerns known to government."

Through NED we are funding seminars in Senegal, workshops in San Juan, discussion groups in Nicaragua, programs in Portugal and conferences everywhere. We are funding junkets for labor leaders and privileged businessmen. We are funding nice trips abroad for any old plausible apostles of democracy who can work up an appealing application. We are funding words, words, words, none of them of any conceivable real effectiveness. We are funding intellectual hot tubs in which the masters of grantmanship may take their ease.

In a time of budgetary austerity, when non-essential items are being pared to the bone, it is incredible that Congress should continue this boondoggle. Out with the knives, Zorinkys! You and Hank Brown have a job yet to do.

But the dour Gromyko could not stop attacking the president's "Star Wars" program. The pope listened respectfully but, his aides confided, made no secret of his polite refusal to agree with the Soviet diplomat.

In the face of widespread speculation in New York political circles that she will not again seek elective office, Geraldine Ferraro has started sending private signals that she is still very much interested in running against Republican Sen. Alfonse D'Amato next year.

Ms. Ferraro has sought out political operatives to get advice on the race. She has told them of polling data (presumably obtained by her privately) that shows D'Amato is not nearly so impregnable as is now generally thought.

A footnote: New York Democratic insiders, doubting that either Ms. Ferraro or Brooklyn District Attorney Elizabeth Holtzman could beat D'Amato, think outgoing State Power Authority Chairman John Dyson might be the best bet. Not only is Dyson more moderate ideologically but as a multimillionaire Manhattan businessman could help finance a campaign against D'Amato's well-stocked treasury.

The openness with which Budget Director David Stockman's special counsel, Michael Horowitz, is trumpeting Jeane Kirkpatrick for the 1988 Republican presidential nomination is worrying conservatives who back Rep. Jack Kemp.

WASHINGTON — President Reagan's opening statement at a press conference earlier this month was changed at the last minute after word reached the White House that Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill had reversed his position and targeted the MX vote as a hard, party-line issue for House Democrats.

The president had decided to open his meeting with reporters with a strong upbeat statement about U.S.-Soviet relations under Mikhail Gorbachev. But a new MX head count by White House legislative strategist Mcac Friedersdorf showed a sharp decline in House support — mainly due to the speaker's lobbying.

Reagan was upset. He previously believed that O'Neill meant it when he said he would not make a partisan issue of the MX. So, instead of kicking off his press conference with U.S.-Soviet relations, he switched subjects and tried to persuade the House to uphold the pro-MX Senate vote.

Pope John Paul II could scarcely believe his ears when Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko spent the full one hour and 50 minutes of his Feb. 27 audience at the Vatican attacking President Reagan's Strategic Defense Initiative.

Gromyko had requested his first meeting with the pope in six years. Papal aides say the pontiff was prepared for wide-ranging discussions, conceivably even touching on alleged Soviet complicity in the May 1981 assassination attempt against him.

To the editor:

After considerable thought about your editorial some weeks ago concerning Senator Jesse Helms and the Columbia Broadcasting Company Inc., I have determined to reduce my thoughts to print and to pass them along to you in anticipation of some common benefit.

You and I agree when you ask, "Who knows how it all would end?" because surely we do not know what will occur if a takeover materializes or what the evening news might reveal, should the network remain in its present state. What we each do know is the obvious lack of an objective news media by the CBS Inc.

Almost from the point of identifying the day and date starts the opinion of the commentator, or his writers, and there does not appear to be any shame about not presenting varying opinions. It seems to be that CBS Inc., is correct regardless.

Senator Helms apparently lacks your support, but as President Truman said when he won over Governor Dewey that everyone was against him but the people. You have stated your preference and the choice is yours and the people have elected their choice.

No intent is inferred to mean that you should not have a critical editorial. To the contrary, I consider that to be part of your public trust, but after reviewing the facts and then being objective.

Definitely, I do not want Senator Helms managing the news for CBS Inc., but if that responsibility is to be with one person, sure he has the credibility and integrity to state his positions and to be candid. CBS Inc., apparently feels we cannot make the distinction between the news and propaganda.

I find myself with positions that are not parallel with the senator at times, yet I am fed a fairly frequent menu of nourishment of anti-Helms print from you and some other daily newspapers. It then becomes apparent to me that, since you have decided if the person is not in step with you, then it is fair game for discredit or elimination.

Your staff has more abilities than that demonstrated in your Jan. 13, 1985, editorial.

Please continue to publish your newspaper, even if the bias will not subside.

To the editor:

The press now treats us to reports concerning the physical condition of the president, including information, hardly edifying, about the contents of his stool. Well, this is a Democracy, and certainly the people have a right to know about the state of the president's health; but I'd rather that the doctors got away from the stool and report on an examination of the president's mind.

Only recently, our president declared that the Contras fighting the Sandinistas in Nicaragua "are the moral equivalent of our Founding Fathers."

Let's see now. Our Founding Fathers were, among others, Benjamin Franklin, Thomas Jefferson, Samuel Adams, Thomas Paine, George Washington, John Adams, Alexander Hamilton.

A few weeks ago, lawyers affiliated with the International Human Rights Law Group in Washington issued a report containing over 140 affidavits that the lawyers had gathered from Nicaraguan people concerning actions of the Contras. A coffee picker tells, in his affidavit, of his abduction by the Contras from a farm, along with a married couple, prominent church leaders, in 1982: "Mr. Felipe Barreda and his wife were already there. He was bleeding heavily. His wife was also heavily beaten. They tied them. I was walking ahead, and he was behind me, and she was tied farther behind. He could hardly walk. He kept slipping and falling. And every time he fell they struck him and threatened to get rid of him right there so that he would stop being a burden. Then he would kneel and ask to be allowed to pray to Our Father. But they just beat him, kicked him in the face and cursed him." The Barredas were later tortured and killed.

Other affidavits tell of beatings, torture, rape, castration, murder by the Contras.

Let's see now. Benjamin Franklin, Thomas Jefferson, Samuel Adams...

To the editor:

It is a terrible shame that it took the death of ECU track runner Erskine Evans to make the public aware of the athletic prejudices that ECU has.

The responsibility of getting to and from track meets should not have to fall on the track team members themselves. After they have competed in a track meet, they should not have to worry about how they're going to get home. Everyone is tired after a track meet. Will it really cost ECU that much for a driver to make sure that they return safely? A driver doesn't guarantee a safe return, I know, but it does not put such a burden on the track team members themselves.

Chancellor John Howell's comment, "They're adults. They have their licenses," was really in poor taste, really discriminatory and very uncalled for. Just because they're adults and have their licenses doesn't mean that they have to transport themselves to track meets. That is a school-related function and the school should be and is responsible for their getting there and their safe return. Chancellor Howell's comment does not excuse the fact that ECU is responsible.

Parents send their kids here thinking they're being cared for and then find out that the kids are running their hearts out so that ECU can get the praise and then they have to drive themselves back from a track meet.

Chancellor Howell is also an adult and I assume that he also has his license, so what is he trying to say? That just because they're adults and have their license, they're responsible. That is really something to say about a person's life.

The present track team will never be the same emotionally. Something needs to be done about the way that they travel. If they cannot travel safely, they should not go anywhere. A great person is gone and that can't be changed. But maybe if the public shows a little concern, someone else's life may be saved.

By far the oldest and by all odds the most impressive Easter service in North Carolina will be held at dawn on April 7 in Old Salem. As usual thousands of persons will mass in front of the Home Moravian Church to hear the minister proclaim, "The Lord is risen!"

"The Lord is risen indeed!" the huge throng will respond. It will mark the start of the 213th Easter sunrise service of the Moravian Church in Winston-Salem.

Many of the thousands in attendance will have awakened in time to take in another Winston-Salem tradition, that of following one of the bands from the 13 Moravian churches in the area as they go about their task of summoning worshippers to the service. Each band assembles at its respective church anywhere from 12:30 a.m. to 2 a.m. They serenade residents in their neighborhoods, stopping under streetlights to issue their call.

"Sleepers, awake for the night is flying," is the first chorale played every Easter. Then the bands board buses which travel prescribed routes throughout the city. The buses stop at designated points, the musicians get out and onto the still air they sound the brassy strains of one or more hymns or chorales. Then it's on to the next stop. The routes are fixed so that the 500 musicians will have breakfast — on country ham and eggs — at the Home Church and be ready to take part in the Sunrise Service at 5:30 a.m.

Promptly at that time, the Rev. Robert M. Rierson will appear on the steps of the 185-year-old Home Church to assure the throng massed in the square that "The Lord is risen." To which the worshippers reply in the manner of the early Christians, "The Lord is risen indeed."

Moravian Sunrise

The service is made more impressive by its simplicity. The liturgy is composed of words and music. There are no ceremonial trappings, not even a cross, for it's the day of Resurrection rather than Crucifixion. The opening hymn is sung by the choir and the congregation. Then comes the minister's declaration of Christian belief and faith, to which the congregation assents.

After the second hymn, the minister leads a procession up Church Street about a block to the Moravian cemetery, known as "God's Acre." As the pilgrimage enters the graveyard, the 13 Moravian church bands play Easter chorales antiphonally, answering each other from the points where they are stationed until the last of the procession has entered the graveyard.

The graveyard is possibly the most impressive part of the whole service. Laid out in 1770, "God's Acre" is a beautiful greensward with its thousands of graves, each marked by a flat marble slab of approximately the same size to emphasize the Moravian tenet that in God's sight everyone is equal. Sections of the graveyard are designated for married men, others for married women, single men, single women and children. It's another way of symbolizing the democracy of death, making it impossible to distinguish between rich or poor, mighty or humble.

The graveyard is beautiful in its stark simplicity every day. But the rising sun of an Easter morning reveals a beauty that it will not again possess until another Easter rolls around. Early on the day before, Moravian families had descended on their graveyard with scrub brushes and pails of water to clean the thousands of marble markers. After the stones are scrubbed white, baskets of flowers or flowering plants are MOSCOW (AP) — Mikhail S. Gorbachev's first three weeks as Communist Party chief have been marked by heavy publicity for a renewed discipline drive linked to his administration.

But in contrast to the publicity accorded his predecessors, photographs and films of the 54-year-old party general secretary have not been regular features in newspaper and television reports.

Gorbachev's name is rarely cited in editorials by the state-run dailies and his portrait has not appeared on Moscow streets.

Reasons for this restraint are hard to pinpoint, and it is still too early to determine whether it marks a permanent change of style.

A Soviet source said the Kremlin has ordered editors to avoid lionizing the new party chief — a policy that could simply be intended to paint Gorbachev as modest and hard-working.

The relatively low-key publicity may spring from a desire or need to promote the concept of collective leadership. Meanwhile, policies associated with Gorbachev are being vigorously publicized.

The party daily Pravda and regional papers have given prominent coverage over the past week to local party meetings at which warnings were made to dishonest, lax and unqualified officials.

On Friday, the official news agency Tass announced the removal from office of the third member of the party's powerful Central Committee in the past week.

In a dispatch from Minsk, capital of the Byelorussian republic, Tass said Vladimir A. Mikulich, local party chief since 1977, "was freed from responsibilities as first secretary of the regional party in connection with his transfer to other work."

Last Saturday, Tass reported that the Soviet minister of power and electrification and the head of the Kirov regional party committee had also been removed. It was not clear if the officials would keep their seats on the Central Committee.

Elsewhere, a district party boss retired in Turkmenistan without the usual note of thanks that would indicate an honorable departure, and a member of the Azerbaijan republic's Central Committee was kicked out of the party for misusing his position.

Over the past two years, Pravda said 44 party officials in the Perm region of central Russia had been relieved of all responsibilities on grounds of incompetence, and said another 312 town and district officials had been fired for "unseemly deeds."

The officials were removed before Gorbachev took office, but the Pravda report may have been intended to back the drive for tighter discipline.

Such a campaign is not new. Gorbachev's reputed mentor, Yuri V. Andropov, launched one during his 15 months as president and Communist Party leader.

But after apparently losing steam under Gorbachev's predecessor, Konstantin U. Chernenko, the discipline drive is again being prominently mentioned, and is constantly linked to the new leadership.

Speakers at local party meetings have borrowed phrases from Gorbachev's speech to the Central Committee plenum that made him general secretary on March 11, in which he called for stricter accountability by party and government officials.

These formulations, and others from Gorbachev's speech, can be found in virtually every press report on the party meetings, which began March 21.

But Gorbachev himself is rarely quoted or mentioned by name, and his activities are being given less attention than were those of past Soviet leaders.

This contrasts sharply with past practice.

Throughout the Soviet Union's 67-year history, the image of the party leader has always been closely linked with the administration. Portraits of each have adorned several prominent squares, and were removed quickly upon his death. The successor's image was then posted.

Chernenko became party chief in February 1984 following Andropov's death. Until he took seriously ill last fall, Chernenko appeared constantly in public to give out medals or meet dignitaries, and many major stories in the Soviet press contained the phrase: "as Konstantin Chernenko has noted."

Chernenko died March 10. His portraits adorned Moscow's Mayakovsky Square and the House of Unions, and were taken down within 12 hours of his funeral.

None of Gorbachev have gone up yet to replace them.

WASHINGTON (UPI) — When President Reagan went before the high-powered American Business Conference to reinforce his opposition to new taxes, the line that won the day was culled not from the political history books, but from Hollywood.

Reagan, jabbing the Republican-controlled Senate that day for what he described as a lack of political courage to come to grips with the budget, put on his best Clint Eastwood tough-guy image and challenged Congress on taxes.

"Go ahead," he said, "make my day."

The business executives applauded. Members of the Senate sneered.

But of all the rhetoric — flowery, visionary and otherwise — to emanate from the White House in the last two months, perhaps no one line better reflected the tone of the second Reagan term, now in its third month and still in a shakedown phase.

There is a strong body of evidence that the last two months have seen the emergence of a new, more confrontational Reagan — a president unencumbered by concern for his political future and more interested in the legacy he will leave behind.

The signs are plentiful, if inconclusive to come: tougher language, the aggressive public salesmanship of such controversial initiatives as the MX missile, aid to Nicaraguan rebels, and a willingness, even an eagerness, to go head to head with Congress on such issues as taxes and aid to distressed farmers.

Evidence of a different Reagan? A more conservative Reagan? A freer Reagan?

Not really. In fact, the sharper — if still unfocused — approach evident at the White House these days can, in large measure, be attributed not to Reagan, but to those around him.

A dramatic staff turnover — the result of burnout, regular attrition and flight to greener pastures — has surrounded Reagan with a leaner, meaner circle of advisers that has proved adept at reinforcing his own political instincts.

One easily could ascribe his more combative tone to the White House return of Patrick Buchanan, a strident voice of the political right who served as a speechwriter for Richard Nixon and Spiro Agnew and now serves as director of communications.

But Buchanan, while tagged as the new conservative conscience in the White House, is not the only one responsible for the more combative approach to leadership Reagan has displayed since late January.

Poll

PRINCETON, N.J. — Given the opportunity, almost half of American adults would move to towns with fewer than 10,000 inhabitants or to rural areas, according to the latest Gallup Poll. As it is, the vast majority now lives in or near cities with much larger populations.

Further, two-thirds of those expressing a preference for city life would rather live in the suburbs than within city limits.

Seven percent would prefer to live in a large city, 15 percent in a medium-sized city, 16 percent in a small city, 13 percent in a large town and 23 percent in a small town. The nostalgic appeal of life in the country still draws many, with 17 percent expressing the wish to live on a farm — in fact, only 3 percent of the populace does so — and an additional 8 percent would like to live in a rural area, but not on a farm.

Despite the lure of country living, another survey question reveals that mass migration to rural and small town America is unlikely, with only 34 percent saying they would like to move away from the cities and communities in which they now live.

The desire to "get out of town" is strongly conditioned by demographic factors such as age and race. In particular, and is also related to community size, geographic region, education and occupation.

In the survey, 44 percent of persons 18 to 29 years old say they would like to move away, with that figure dropping sharply and progressively as age increases. Among persons 65 and older, merely 17 percent say they would like to move. Similarly, almost half of blacks (49 percent) and Hispanics (47 percent), compared to 32 percent of whites, would like to move.

Residents of cities with one million population or more (41 percent) are most desirous of leaving than are those living in smaller cities and towns (30 percent). Somewhat fewer Southerners (29 percent) want to move away than do those living in other regions of the nation (36 percent).

Also, respondents from families in which the chief wage earner is employed in business or the professions (32 percent) are slightly less anxious to leave than are those working in other white-collar jobs (38 percent) or in blue-collar occupations (40 percent). Similarly, dissatisfaction with their present communities is less apt to be expressed by persons in better-educated and higher-income groups.

The results are based on in-person interviews with 1,557 adults, 18 and older, conducted in over 300 scientifically selected localities across the nation during the period Feb. 15-18. For results based on samples of this size, one can say with 95 percent confidence that the error attributable to sampling and other random effects could be 3 percentage points in either direction.

In addition to sampling error, the reader should bear in mind that question wording and other practical difficulties encountered in conducting surveys can introduce error or bias into the findings of opinion polls.

Unofficial Talks

LONDON (AP) — Five Argentine foreign affairs specialists are in London for unofficial talks on improving relations with Britain. The two countries severed diplomatic ties at the start of the 1982 Falklands war, and they have not been renewed.

The Royal Institute for International Affairs, an independent body, said it initiated the talks, which began in West Germany, and the group would be in Britain for at least two days.

A Foreign Office spokesman said the group would not meet anyone in the government. A similar group visited London earlier, he said.

The 72-day war ended with the expulsion of occupation troops from the South Atlantic islands by a British task force.

Dispute Settled

LONDON (AP) — Gilbert O'Sullivan, the 1970s pop star, has won almost $2.5 million in a settlement with his former managers after a long court battle, the managers said.

Management Agency and Music said Friday that it settled with O'Sullivan because prolonging the dispute "could only have been damaging to the interests of the company and its shareholders."

O'Sullivan, 38, wrote and sang the hit songs "Claire" and "Alone Again." His career faded amid legal battles with MAM over royalty payments.

British Hovercraft Crashes; 2 Killed

DOVER, England (AP) — A hovercraft carrying 387 people crashed into a Dover pier while trying to dock in rough seas Saturday and police said two people perished and 32 were injured.

A British girl was known missing and police said two French youths might also be missing, but it was uncertain if they had boarded the craft for the 40-minute crossing of the English Channel from the French port of Calais.

A flotilla of small boats surrounded the stricken hovercraft, The Princess Margaret, and plucked dozens of survivors from the sea. Others were removed from the craft by lifeboats.

The Princess Margaret, owned by Britain's only major commercial hovercraft operator, Hoverspeed, was hurled against the pier by a 20-foot wave, tearing a huge hole in its side, passengers said. Aboard were 370 passengers and 17 crew.

Kent County Police Chief Frank Jordan said a South American-born woman was dead on arrival at a Dover hospital. He said a man, who inhaled water and suffered hypothermia, died on a life support machine at Dover's William Harvey Hospital about seven hours after the accident at 4:15 p.m.

A third passenger was reported in critical condition. Most of the victims suffered cuts and bruises and were taken to Buckland Hospital where a "major alert" had been declared.

Shortly before midnight, rescuers abandoned the sea and air search for the missing passengers, but planned to resume the task at first light.

"We know a British child is missing, but we're not certain about the two young Frenchmen," said a Kent police spokesman.

He said it had not been confirmed that the two were in a party of about 40 French students from Paris who had made the trip.

Police said the names of the dead, injured and missing would not be released until their relatives had been notified.

"This giant wave, 20-foot high, crashed against the vessel," a passenger, Lt. Col. Tom Fraser, said in a television interview.

Fraser said most of the passengers swept overboard were in three rows of seats that collapsed from the impact. He and a companion, Maj. John Graziano, hurled lifebelts to the victims, he added. The nationalities of Fraser and Graziano were not immediately known, but it was believed they might be Americans.

It was the first major accident involving a British hovercraft since the vessels began plying the channel 18 years ago, said Peter Yerbury, technical director of Hoverspeed.

Hovercrafts are amphibious vessels that travel on a cushion of air provided by a downward jet. The official name is Air Cushion Vehicle.

"It was a rough ride over ... then there was a loud bang and the craft just sat down on the sea," passenger Gordon Graham, a 56-year-old British engineer told reporters.

Another passenger, Charles

Leroux of Brussels, Belgium, told reporters: "We were going very fast and suddenly there was a bang and a scraping noise. A big gap appeared in the side of the hovercraft. It was terrible."

Residents from apartments overlooking the harbor in southern England rushed to the pier after the sound of the crash reverberated through the port.

"The hovercraft was sitting about 100 yards out to sea from the dock with a huge gaping hole in the back big enough to drive a car through," said Dover resident David Waters.

"The sea had been rough all day and the craft was being pushed from side to side," he added.

The eight-year-old vessel, largest in the Hoverspeed fleet with a capacity of 424 passengers, is named after Queen Elizabeth II's younger sister. It was towed to the hovercraft pad in Dover harbor. Officials said there was no danger of it sinking.

Youngsters Hear Pope

ROME (AP) — Pope John Paul II, at a noisy outdoor meeting Saturday with more than 200,000 pilgrims from around the world, called on young people to be "workers of peace."

Most of those gathered in at the square outside St. John Lateran's Basilica were youngsters. They had traveled from more than 60 countries to celebrate the opening of Holy Week with John Paul, who suggested the pilgrimage as part of the United Nation's International Youth Year.

"You are called to participate in the true and authentic development that ... must become even more the progress of justice in its various ambiances and diverse profiles," he said in Italian.

"You young people are even called to participate in that great and indispensable effort of all of humanity that aims to remove the specter of war and to build peace," John Paul said.

"You must be workers of peace according to the multiple forms that terms implies, which embraces a meaning much richer than simply the absence of war," he added.

The enthusiastic crowd waved national flags and white handkerchiefs in the warm, sunny weather as the pope spoke at dusk. Some waved banners with the name of the outlawed Polish labor union Solidarity written on them.

In a separate prayer for peace to Jesus, John Paul said the young were pilgrims "in a crucial period."

John Paul also read greetings in 20 languages.

Before the pontiff spoke, several young people made brief remarks, and groups of youngsters sang and danced in native dress.

Among those who addressed the pontiff was Tom Bohlin of Chicago. He spoke about his work in an education center in the city's west side that offers vocational, academic, sports and professional programs for the children of recently arrived Hispanic families, and to inner city blacks.

MX Battle Wears Down Congress

By MIKE SHANAHAN
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — As the House debate on the MX missile wound down last week, Rep. Vic Fazio, D-Calif., said the decade-old fight over funding for the weapon "has torn this body apart as no issue has in the last decade."

"Yet we are like two tired fighters going through the motions in the late rounds," Fazio said. "We are saying our lines with less and less fervor, because I believe like those fighters hanging on kind of punch drunk, we want this all to end."

The MX battle did end with the Senate and House narrowly giving President Reagan authority to spend $1.5 billion for an additional 21 MXs, each designed to carry 10 powerful warheads against Soviet targets 6,000 miles away.

But Fazio's closing comment shortly before he cast a pro-MX vote echoed a belief held not only among Democrats, but many senior Republicans as well.

"Enough is enough," he said. While the MX gave Reagan his first major national security victory of 1985 on Capitol Hill, there is a growing belief among those on both sides of the fight that it may also be his last.

"The president spent all of his political capital on the MX and he can't get it back," said Rep. Edward J. Markey, D-Mass., a vocal foe of the missile.

Many veteran senators and House members said Reagan's full-court lobbying effort was among the most intensive they had ever seen, from personal persuasion by the president to the emergency trip by Max Kampelman, the president's chief arms control negotiator in Geneva, to help attract a handful of undecided House members to vote for the MX.

Some Senate Democrats including Minority Leader Robert C. Byrd Jr. of West Virginia and defense specialist Sam Nunn of Georgia, both of whom voted for the 21 MXs, have already moved to cap the total missile force at 40.

"I believe there are programs much more important than the MX," said Nunn.

In the House, Rep. Les Aspin, D-Wis., chairman of the Armed Services Committee, who argued that MX support was needed for success of the Geneva arms talks, said after Thursday's vote, "The Pentagon's budget position has shifted dramatically."

And House Republican Whip Rep. Trent Lott, R-Miss., a firm Reagan loyalist on almost all other issues, said from now on following the MX debate, the president's defense budget will be fair game.

Like a number of other Republicans, Lott said that once the focus has shifted away from the start of the Geneva arms control talks it is almost certain that Congress will refuse to approve the next batch of 48 MXs included in the president's 1986 defense budget proposal.

Similarly, Rep. William L. Dickenson, R-Ala., the senior Republican on the House Armed Services Committee, said if the administration "thinks it's going to get another 48 missiles to be manufactured in 1986 in one lump sum, they had better think again because it just ain't gonna happen."

One after the other, moderate Democrats and Republicans who voted for the MX this time say Reagan's 5.9 per cent proposed spending increase for the Pentagon next year will be cut to at least 3 per cent or less above inflation.

That means that such cherished programs as research for Reagan's "Star Wars" space-based strategic defense program will likely face sharp reductions.

Other big ticket strategic programs like the Trident submarine may also be built over a longer time than currently planned to lower the immediate cost in a time of $200 billion federal deficits.

Firm Indicted

NEWPORT, N.C. (AP) — A federal grand jury in Virginia has handed down indictments which claim Conner Homes Corp. and its salesmen in the Newport News, Va., area charged military customers for items they didn't receive.

Meanwhile, the company is arguing that it may have been defrauded because items that might have been paid for by some customers actually was delivered somewhere else.

The buyers were identified as military personnel who bought their homes using loans guaranteed by the Veterans Administration.

The grand jury in Roanoke, Va., indicted Conner Homes Corp. and 17 employees on 32 counts of mail fraud and conspiracy. The employees range from salesmen, branch managers and regional managers in Virginia to David M. Booth, senior vice president of marketing and the highest-ranking executive named in the indictments.

The charges could result in prison sentences and fines totaling $302,000.

Guarded Optimism As Pan Am Bargains

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Pan American World Airways, still reeling from a 29-day strike by ground workers, negotiated with flight attendants Saturday in an effort to avert another walkout. A federal mediator said there is a "glimmer of optimism" for a settlement.

The negotiations between representatives of Pan Am and 5,100 flight attendants, who have been without a contract since Jan. 1, are operating under a strike deadline of midnight Sunday.

"At this juncture, the parties are actively re-evaluating their positions and working diligently to reach an agreement in advance of the deadline," said Walter Wallace, a member of the federal National Mediation Board.

"Up to this point I've been cautious," Wallace said. "But for the first time, I have a glimmer of optimism. But remember, only a glimmer. A lot depends what happens in the next two days."

In New York, Star Hesse, a spokeswoman for the Independent Union of Flight Attendants, said her "guess is that it's going to go down to the wire."

"Pan Am is waiting to wring the last drop of blood they can get until a contract settlement, so we don't expect anything until very late Sunday afternoon," Hesse said.

"The company is just out to break the unions," she said. "Unfortunately the only option we have is a strike and we have to prepare as though that were going to happen."

Jeff Kriendler, a Pan Am vice president, said the carrier would try to continue to operate even if the flight attendants go ahead with the threatened strike.

"We've been recruiting and training people to step in in the event that the flight attendants go on strike," Kriendler said.

Kriendler said the carrier is up to 55 percent of its normal operations in the wake of the earlier strike "and we'll be at 65 percent Monday whether or not the flight attendants withdraw their services."

If the flight attendants walk out, it would be the second strike to hit the airline within six weeks. On Wednesday, the 5,800 members of the Transport Workers Union ended a 29-day walkout against the airlines by ratifying a new three-year pact.

Like other Pan Am employees, the attendants accepted a 10 percent wage cut in 1982 to help the airline stay afloat. They also agreed to forgo wage increases totaling 12 percent over three years.

The airline wants the right to hire foreign nationals to staff flights that arrive and depart outside the United States.

The IUFA members returned to work one week before the TWU strike ended, but a spokesman for TWU Local 508, representing 4,000 mechanics, baggage handlers and flight dispatchers, will honor IUFA picket lines if a strike takes place.

Jet Makes Emergency Landings

CHICAGO (AP) — An airplane with 139 people aboard was forced to make two emergency landings at O'Hare International Airport because its landing gear would not retract, and one of the passengers said "everyone was praying."

Jet America Flight 121, which had left O'Hare Friday night for Long Beach, Calif., landed safely both times Friday night, with the second landing coming more than four hours after the first takeoff.

The plane's nosegear would not retract after a takeoff at 7:55 p.m., forcing its first return to O'Hare.

Despite work by maintenance crews, the problem recurred after the second takeoff, forcing another emergency landing, said Martha Vercammen, a Federal Aviation Administration spokeswoman.

"The captain told us not to be alarmed, but everyone was praying," said Gordon Gacek of Huntington Beach, Calif.

The plane, carrying 135 passengers and four crew members, made its first emergency landing at 9:10 p.m. after circling for nearly an hour while the pilot tried to retract the landing gear, said airport police Patrolman James Grimm.

Flight 121 took off again at 10:35 p.m., but the problem developed once more. The plane, after circling again, landed the second time at 12:30 a.m. Saturday, Grimm said.

The passengers were put aboard a different plane, which took off at about 1:25 a.m. Saturday, he said.

Canadian Forces C-130s Crash Probed

EDMONTON, Alberta (AP) — The American and Canadian pilots of two C-130 military transports that collided and crashed in flames, killing all 10 men aboard, were "very experienced," Canadian Forces Col. Peter DeTracey said Saturday.

DeTracey is commander of the Canadian Forces Namao air base on the northern outskirts of Edmonton where the crash occurred Friday as the C-130 Hercules were flying in formation in an anniversary celebration of the Canadian air force.

Witnesses said the four-engine planes were going into a turn and touched wings while flying at an altitude of about 900 feet and crashed onto the air base.

One smashed into a military warehouse and exploded in a ball of flames, while the other struck the ground at the end of a runway, narrowly missing a fuel storage dump.

"Fortunately, the wind blew the flames away from the fuel storage area," said DeTracey, who called it a "black Friday" for the base.

18 Injured In Bombing

PARIS (AP) — Two obscure neo-Nazi groups claimed responsibility Saturday for bombing a movie theater that was showing Jewish films, and threatened more attacks against Jews. Eighteen people were wounded by the explosion and fire that followed.

The victims were nine members of the Canadian Forces and an exchange officer from the United States.

In Washington, Col. Richard Lake, a public affairs officer for the Pentagon, identified the U.S. pilot as Capt. Lonnie B. Register Jr., 36, of El Paso, Texas.

No one was in the warehouse struck by the plane, but the wooden sides of the building, which contained trucks and other equipment, crumpled, feeding the flames roaring up from the wreckage.

At one point Friday night, residents of northeastern Edmonton were asked to restrict water use so that pressure could be kept at a maximum for firefighters at the base.

It was the worst air crash in the history of the 34-year-old base.

Survivors Of New Deal Continue Their Support

By CHRISTOPHER CONNELL
Associated Press Writer
ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — Fifty years ago they were whiz kids, helping to carve the biggest monument of the New Deal: the Social Security Act. Today, in their 70s and 80s themselves, they remain staunch defenders of the system that has helped so many elderly and poor.

Four survivors of those New Deal days gathered this weekend at a symposium to celebrate their legacy and to defend Social Security against those who question its costs and doubt its future.

Among those at the University of New Mexico session were Thomas H. Eliot, 77, the lawyer who drafted the bill for Franklin D. Roosevelt's Cabinet-level Committee on Economic Security in 1934-35; Wilbur J. Cohen, 71, a key staff aide who became Social Security's first employee and ultimately secretary of health, education and welfare; Robert J. Myers, 72, the system's legendary actuary; and economist Eveline M. Burns, 85, another original staff member.

"I always find nowadays whenever I'm introduced, people are sort of amazed to discover I'm still alive," said the British-born Mrs. Burns, a professor-emerita at Columbia University.

But Cohen, a University of Texas professor and leader of a Social Security lobby in Washington, asked the organizers to "please stop calling us 'the old-timers.'"

Eliot said many Americans do not realize that the original act created unemployment insurance and a wide range of state welfare grants for the poor, elderly and blind, not just old-age benefits.

It was the first "massive (federal) incursion into the whole field of welfare and of help for the needy," said Eliot, who later served in Congress and became chancellor of Washington University.

Somehow, he lamented, after World War II the old-age benefits began to "monopolize" the term Social Security.

Cohen agreed that the retirement program was "a rather minor part" of the 1935 bill, and that the framers were concerned about the young as well as the old.

Originally, the old-age program was to provide benefits only for retired workers. It was amended in 1939 before the first checks went out to add spouses' and survivors' benefits. In 1956 Congress added disability benefits and in 1965 Medicare. Then, in the most far-reaching change, it voted in 1972 to raise benefits each year to match inflation.

In fiscal 1984, Social Security paid out $180 billion in retirement and disability benefits to 35.3 million people, while Medicare spent $70 billion on health care for the elderly and disabled.

To do that, it collected payroll taxes from 119 million workers and employers. Medicare beneficiaries also pay premiums and deductibles.

Fifty years from now, the system is expected to have 80 million beneficiaries supported by 157 million workers, Myers said. The ratio of workers-to-beneficiaries will drop from 3.2-to-1 to 2-to-1.

But when asked at a news conference if Social Security would survive, Cohen replied testily: "Social Security is going to be there when you people get 65. There's no question in my mind about that."

Mrs. Burns said, "We're not the only country that is facing this (demographic) problem."

"What surprises me is that the other countries are so much calmer than we are about it," she said. "They trust their government to respond reasonably."

But scholars at the conference pointed to growing concerns in many nations about the costs of caring for aging populations.

"Bureaucrats have created a system that minimizes risk, maximizes rights and that is consequently in trouble," said University of New Mexico history professor Charles E. McClelland.

But he also noted that the German insurance system — created in 1881 — has survived "two Kaisers, two republics, Hitler and even, in East Germany, communism."

Perhaps the most passionate defense of Social Security came from W. Andrew Achenbaum, 37, a historian from Carnegie-Mellon University, who called Social Security "a symbol of national community."

Best Groomed

NEW YORK (AP) — President Reagan and his wife Nancy and television star Johnny Carson made repeat appearances on the list of the nine best-groomed Americans released Saturday by the Neighborhood Cleaners' Association.

The nine on the second annual best-groomed list were chosen by a congress of dry cleaner operators on the basis of the care they take in choosing the "quality of their wardrobe," the organization said.

The six others on the list were actors Ricardo Montalban, Tom Selleck and Billy Dee Williams; singer Diannah Carroll, conductor Zubin Mehta, and journalist Barbara Walters.

The association is asking customers to come up with a 10th name for the list in a mail-in campaign.

Tobacco Bill Compromise Proposed As Committee Studies Assessments

By F. ALAN BOYCE
Associated Press Writer
RALEIGH (AP) — Faced with the uncertain prospects of action on the federal tobacco program and limited state funds, a Senate subcommittee is recommending a compromise on a bill to offset assessment fees for tobacco growers.

The bill by Sen. Harold Hardison, D-Lenoir, had suggested a tax credit equal to the assessment growers pay to support the federal tobacco program. Fiscal researchers say that could cost the state $134 million if all growers took advantage of the credit.

If North Carolina passes a bill to let growers take assessment fees as a deduction, the revenue loss would be $8.04 million, said Sen. Jim Speed, chairman of the Senate Agriculture Committee, who acknowledged that political necessities might require a compromise.

"It would help all growers," Speed said. "It would give them some little bit of relief. Any amount now is important. Then we can seek additional funds through other programs aimed at helping all farmers."

The bill has languished in an Agriculture subcommittee while R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. and other cigarette makers have jockeyed with growers over plans to purchase some of the tobacco held by the Flue-Cured Cooperative Tobacco Stabilization Corp.

The corporation buys up tobacco stocks that don't meet support prices set each year by the U.S. agriculture secretary and has a tremendous backlog. Tobacco companies have agreed to purchase some of the stocks at a discount and officials are negotiating over reducing the support prices and assessment fees in a complicated compromise.

That is another advantage of a deduction, Speed said.

"Whatever the assessment is as proposed by the subcommittee that Senator Soles is heading, I think we could afford it," he said.

In addition, Carla Peterson, a fiscal analyst, says questions remain over the legality of a tax deduction as opposed to a credit.

"The Internal Revenue Service has not ruled whether this is an acceptable business expense," she said in a note to the subcommittee chaired by Sen. R.C. Soles, D-Columbus. "Our Department of Revenue has not taken a stand on the issue. Some people may be counting this as an expense; others may not."

Speed said a positive IRS ruling could be important.

"The federal tax should definitely be removed also," he said. "There are moves in Congress to do it. I don't think there's any question the assessment is a business expense."

Doctors Eye State's First Heart Transplant

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Doctors at Sanger Clinic say that after performing kidney transplants and open-heart surgery for more than a decade they are ready to perform North Carolina's first heart transplant.

The team expects to perform its first heart transplant later this spring at Charlotte Memorial Hospital.

"This is an extension of the things we've been doing at Memorial for years," said Dr. Alan Thomley, one of clinic's 15 doctors. "As soon as a suitable candidate comes up, we'll be ready."

The nearest heart transplant programs now are in Birmingham, Ala., and Richmond, Va., he said.

The Sanger physicians, led by cardiac surgeon Dr. Francis Robicsek of Charlotte, studied heart surgery at medical centers in Pittsburgh and Richmond, Thomley said.

"We've done a lot of talking and we feel comfortable with the technique. Physicians in Pittsburgh have said they're willing to come down and help us with the first few transplants," Thomley said.

For heart patients in the Charlotte area, having the transplant operation nearby means paying less for an already expensive procedure. At Johns Hopkins Hospital in Baltimore, for example, the operation costs about $50,000. Not all insurance companies pay for heart transplants.

Charlotte Memorial, which performs more heart surgery than any other medical center in North Carolina or South Carolina, "has been in a state of readiness," hospital President Harry Nurkin said.

"We've been doing organ transplants at Memorial for some time," Nurkin said. "We already have all of the capabilities. We're now literally able to do just about anything our physicians want us to do so our patients don't have to go to far-away places for care."

To be considered for the surgery, patients must be between 20 and 55 years old and have no other medical problems, he said.

No heart transplants have been done in North Carolina, although doctors at Duke University Medical Center are capable of doing such operations. North Carolina Memorial Hospital in Chapel Hill is also expected to soon be able to perform heart transplants.

Farmers Want Lending Policies To Be Eased

ST. PAULS, N.C. (AP) — Farmers struggling to find the money to enable them to set their crops out this year say federal lending policies are too stringent and need to be relaxed.

"We heard some real horror stories," Rep. Charlie Rose, D-N.C., said after 16 farmers testified Friday at a U.S. House Agriculture subcommittee hearing.

Rose said testimony showed it is too hard for farmers to obtain government loans when economic conditions warrant an eased credit policy. Rose and Ed Jones, D-Tenn., will use the testimony to help rewrite government lending policies under the 1985 Farm Bill.

"People that are running farm programs are mainly concerned about getting that buck back into the bank, (being) very tough on those that are overdue, and making it very tough for people to even apply for loans in the first place," Rose said.

Farmers testified about the difficulty of getting loans, problems with Farmers Home Administration lending rules and county FmHA supervisors who farmers said did not treat them fairly.

Farmer Rufus Howard of Burgaw said that the way lenders treated him "made Scrooge look like a good American."

But some farmers said the economic dilemma was spurred by rising operating costs coupled with low prices for their products.

"If the farmers' situation was where every farmer had some promise of making a profit, credit wouldn't be a problem," Robeson County farmer Tommy Fumage said.

Larry Godwin, FmHA director in North Carolina, said his organization will have enough money to loan to farmers this year, and added that while the state's farmers haven't escaped economic problems, they are better off than farmers in other states.

During the last fiscal year, 27 percent of the state's farmers were delinquent paying FmHA loans, compared to the 29 percent national average, Godwin said.

Duke Program Wins Friends

DURHAM (AP) — The director of Duke University's alumni travel program says she does more than help people get where they want to go — she also helps win friends for the Durham school.

"About 40 percent of our travelers are not Duke alumni," said Barbara Booth, a Duke graduate. "We welcome anyone because we always want to make friends for Duke. It helps people become acquainted with Duke in general."

The program originated 12 years ago as a service to Duke's alumni. Mrs. Booth, who has headed the program for two years, said the program involved mostly charter trips during early on.

Since then, she said, the frequency and variety of trips has become fine tuned and has enticed a growing number of people who are not associated with Duke.

"We have couples in their early 30s, but the real bulk of the people are in the late 40s to early 60s, and some people are starting to take their children along," she said. "We also get a lot of repeat travelers who come back again and again."

Mrs. Booth said most trips combine entertainment with education, which is what sets the program apart from commercial travel agencies. Many of the Duke travel packages include a university host, usually a faculty member or an administrator.

Group Expected To Challenge Curriculum Plan

RALEIGH (AP) — The North Carolina Department of Instruction's 500-page proposed curriculum for schools has passed another hurdle but is expected to face opposition this week at legislative hearings.

"The new curriculum usurps the power of local school boards" to determine the content of courses, said Ann Frazier of the North Carolina Conservatives United. "And it says if you want to change any components, you have to approach the state level. That's wrong."

Ms. Frazier said Friday that her group would speak against the curriculum at hearings Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday on the state's Basic Education Program. She said the group didn't raise objections to the curriculum at a public hearing Friday because it wanted to wait until the more visible legislative hearings.

The proposed curriculum, called the Standard Course of Study, was unveiled at the state Board of Education's March 6 meeting. The board is expected to approve it in April.

The document is tied to the state's Basic Education Program, a proposed eight-year, $640 million plan to improve schools and equalize educational opportunity. The plan is now before the General Assembly.

The new curriculum can't be put into place unless legislators increase appropriations to hire additional teachers to implement new required courses. The Basic Education Program calls for hiring 10,197 additional teachers during eight years. But the board has asked legislators not to write curriculum details into law.

Few criticisms of the curriculum arose at Friday's hearings, and some people suggested that was because few people had read it.

"We're more frustrated at the time limit for review," said John Dorman, executive secretary to the North Carolina Association of Educators.

He said that although the NCAE endorses the concept, "it shouldn't be construed as an endorsement of the specifics."

Joseph B. Webb, assistant state superintendent for instructional services, said the major changes for school systems under the Standard Course of Study would be:

— Physical education. Schools will be required to offer a greater range of athletics. This will force many elementary schools to hire certified physical education teachers.

— Arts education. All schools must offer classes in theater arts, visual arts, music and dance.

— Foreign languages. A foreign language must be taught at all grades down to the kindergarten level.

— Social studies. The new curriculum expands the content of study for grades one through three, focusing on the family, school, neighborhood and community.

— Science. The content of science courses in grades kindergarten through three is spelled out in greater detail.

He said mathematics and communications courses remain basically the same under the new plan. But the basic knowledge and skills that students must have are spelled out in much greater detail.

The plan leaves it up to local school systems to determine the best methods of reaching the required competencies. But by determining what teachers should teach, the new curriculum gives them more freedom to develop effective methods, said Howard Maniloff, special assistant to state Superintendent A. Craig Phillips.

FIM, CBS Butt Heads In Proxy Dispute

RALEIGH (AP) — North Carolina-based Fairness in Media says that CBS's agreement to suspend action in a federal lawsuit was a victory for the conservative group, but the television network disputes that.

In a statement, James P. Cain, a spokesman for FIM, claimed "victories" that would give the group's effort to takeover CBS "new additional momentum as we plan for the next months."

The statement came after the group agreed Friday not to mount a proxy battle at CBS' shareholders meeting. The network agreed not to introduce anti-takeover resolutions and to suspend action in a federal lawsuit.

CBS denied any victory for FIM, saying the group had abandoned plans for a takeover attempt. The network also contested a FIM claim that it had won permanent custody to the network's list of shareholders.

CBS spokeswoman Mary Boies said in New York that "Fairness in Media lawyers sought a meeting with the judge at which they disclosed they would not mount a proxy fight. When they asked that in light of that CBS would agree to temporarily suspend discovery, CBS did not oppose that motion."

The agreement between the two groups came in a meeting before Judge William C. Conner in federal district court in New York.

Cain said the agreement was made after FIM "had determined that 2½ weeks was not sufficient time to wage a full-scale proxy fight, particularly in light of the fact that CBS mailed its proxy material some two weeks ago while refusing to give FIM the stockholder list."

The meeting will be held April 17 in Chicago.

CBS turned over the list of stockholders Wednesday to attorneys for North Carolina newspaper publisher Hoover Adams. Adams, who is a CBS stockholder, had sued on behalf of FIM to get the list. Adams said earlier this week he did not plan to drop his suit because of the restrictions placed on the list by CBS.

FIM is supported by Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., who has written letters to more than one million conservatives asking them to buy CBS stock so they can end the network's "liberal bias" and "become Dan Rather's boss."

Cain said FIM had been informed that CBS had plans to mail a second set of proxy materials to stockholders, "which could have given them the opportunity to implement various anti-takeover resolutions such as porcupine, poison pill, golden parachute and staggered board provisions."

CBS also agreed that FIM could keep the list of stockholders, Cain said.

But Ms. Boies said the network had no plans for a second mailing and did not agree to let FIM keep the list.

"Contrary to their statement, CBS had never planned to mail a second set of proxy materials," she said.

Cemeteries Affected By Calif. Strike

COLMA, Calif. (UPI) — Bodies began to stack up in mortuaries Saturday as a strike by graveyard employees in Alameda, Contra Costa and San Mateo counties spread to 10 graveyards in Colma.

Morticians stored bodies in sealed caskets as the Colma cemetery workers Friday joined graveyard employees who walked out the day before. A total of 19 graveyards have now been affected by the strike.

"We were about to take my brother-in-law to the cemetery and we got a call saying we could not bury him," said a woman who asked not to be identified. "This is extending our anguish."

"A brother came all the way from Miami," she said. "He is old and it was a hard trip for him to make. Now he must return without having seen it completed."

Representatives of the Cemetery Workers and Greens Attendants Union and managers of the affected memorial parks said there are no plans to resume contract negotiations, which collapsed on Thursday.

The 180 striking workers, who dig graves and tend mausoleums and grounds, pressed for a 5 to 10 percent increase in their $12.50-per-hour salary, union officials said.

Workers' wages were frozen during the past year as part of a concession package in their last contract.

Cemetery owners, who maintained that an increasing number of cremations had hurt business, offered a 3 percent pay raise and asked for a cap on contributions to health insurance plans.

The strike is the fourth to affect San Francisco Bay Area cemeteries in the past 14 years. About 1,800 coffins were piled in mortuaries in 1971 during a four-month strike by cemetery workers.

"It's very hard on families because people feel that things are not completed until the burial or cremation takes place," said funeral director Walter Foster.

Union members set up picket lines at cemeteries in Palo Alto, San Pablo, Hayward, Oakland and Colma.

At the gates of Holy Cross Cemetery in Colma, where almost all commercial activity is connected to the cemetery industry, picketing workers said they sympathized with

President Reflects On 1981 Shooting

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Reagan, shot four years ago outside a Washington hotel, said Saturday he would not be alive today had it not been for the prayers of the American people and the skill of his doctors and bodyguards.

Marking the fourth anniversary of the assassination attempt in which he was wounded by a bullet in his chest, Reagan opened his weekly Saturday radio address with words of thanks for those who saved his life.

"I wouldn't be here were it not for the great skill of the medical team at George Washington University Hospital and the bravery of heroes like special (Secret Service) agents Tim McCarthy, Jerry Parr, police officer Thomas Delahanty and Al Antonucci," said Reagan, who has fully recovered from the attack.

McCarthy and Delahanty were wounded by the bullets fired by John Hinckley Jr. as Reagan left a speaking engagement at the Washington Hilton Hotel. Parr pushed Reagan into his limousine as the shots rang out, not realizing until a short time later the president had been shot.

Antonucci, a bystander, helped wrestle Hinckley to the ground. Reagan noted Antonucci died last May and called him "a proud American who never asked a thing of others, but who willingly risked his own life to save another."

Reagan also asked for the "continued prayers and support" of the American people for his press secretary, James Brady, who suffered a near-fatal head wound in the assassination attempt. Brady continues to make what his doctors describe as a miraculous recovery from the shooting.

The State's Child Passenger Safety Law took effect July 1, 1982. Brochures on this law are available at the Police Department.

the families of the dead who cannot be buried.

"I feel sorry for them," said Neil Curran, a cemetery lawn worker. "I can imagine how they feel. But we got a bad deal with getting our wages frozen last year. I feel cheated. We're entitled to a raise and it seems this is the only way we will get it."

Georgetown Rolls Into NCAA Finals

LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP) — Top-ranked Georgetown, led by sophomore Reggie Williams and All-American Patrick Ewing, rolled into the NCAA championship game for the second straight year and the third time in four years with a 77-59 victory over No. 3 St. John's Saturday night.

The defending champion Hoyas shut down the scoring and passing game of Redmen All-American Chris Mullin with a box-and-one defense. Mullin, St. John's all-time leading scorer and the leading scorer in the tournament, was held to eight points, ending his string of 101 consecutive games scoring double figures.

An All-Big East title game Monday night was assured earlier Saturday when unranked Villanova upset No. 5 Memphis State 52-45 in the other semifinal at Rupp Arena.

The Hoyas beat the Wildcats in both of their previous meetings this season, 52-50 in overtime and 57-50.

While this is Georgetown's third trip in four years to the championship game, it marks Villanova's first visit since 1971.

Williams, a slender 6-foot-7 swingman, paced four Hoyas in double figures with 20 points, followed by Ewing with 16 and David Wingate and Bill Martin with 12 apiece.

The Hoyas, 35-2, broke the game open in the second half after leading 32-28 at halftime even though Ewing, a 7-foot, three-time All-America, played only 12 minutes and was rested after he picked up two personal fouls.

En route to its 17th straight victory and seeking to become the first team to post consecutive NCAA titles since UCLA ended its string of seven in a row in 1973, Georgetown scored the first seven points of the second half with Williams contributing two field goals for a 39-28 advantage.

Georgetown then took off, and the Redmen never got any closer than nine points, the last time at 47-38 on a Mike Moses jumper.

With about 12 minutes to play, Ewing, operating against 7-foot Bill Wennington in the Redmen's man-to-man defense, moved inside for a goal to make it 53-39.

The swarming Hoyas' defense caused 18 Redmen turnovers while committing only seven, and Georgetown dominated the boards 29-24.

Wennington and Mullin each had four turnovers for the game — equaling their number of goals. Georgetown, the Big East tournament winner, shot 51 percent from the field, while the Redmen, the regular-season Big East champion, shot 55 percent.

A goal by Howard Broadnax gave Georgetown its biggest lead at the time, 62-46. The Redmen cut it back to 62-51 on two free throws by Walter Berry and Willie Glass' three-point play.

Georgetown then went into a spread offense and St. John's only hope to get back into the game was to foul. But the Hoyas cashed in on the free throw line to end St. John's season with a 31-4 mark — the last three losses to Georgetown following an early season 66-65 victory over the Hoyas.

St. John's, which had won the West Regional, was appearing in its first Final Four since 1952, when it lost to Kansas in the championship game 80-63.

Glass, the 6-6 sophomore, paced St. John's with 13 points, while Wennington and Berry each had 12.

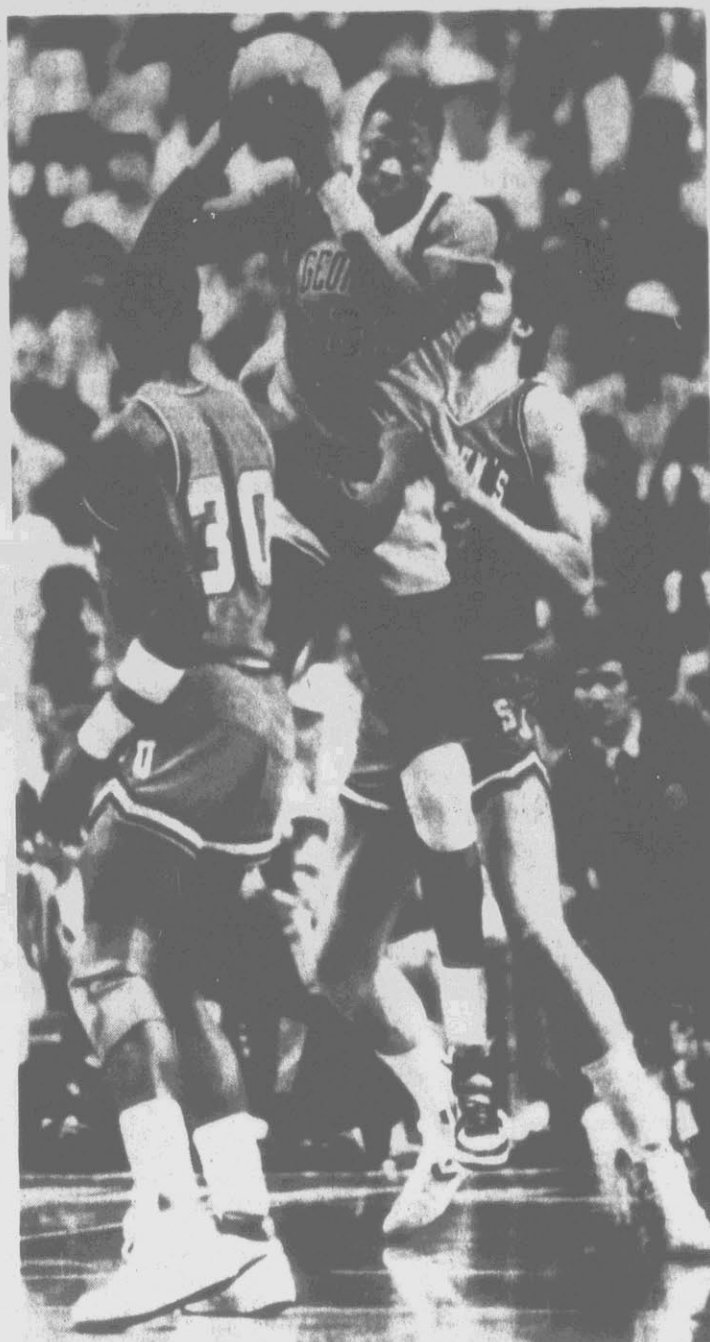

Williams scored 10 of his points in the first half and Wennington was able to take advantage of Ewing's absence by scoring 10 points.

Georgetown jumped out to 10-2 and 18-8 leads, but Mullin's jumper capped a 10-0 run that tied it at 26. Georgetown moved ahead 30-28 and the Hoyas changed the tempo from a fast-paced game to a deliberate one. The crowd booed as the Hoyas ate up most of the last two minutes of the half with a stall.

Georgetown Coach George Thompson had a heated discussion with referee Jim Burr, disputing what he was felt was the lack of a foul call at the end of the first half.

For Mullin, who ended his career with 2,500 points, the previous low-scoring game this season was 12 points against Old Dominion in the Holiday Festival last December.

He made only one of three shots in the second half, and had one of them blocked in Ewing.

THE DAILY REFLECTOR

SUNDAY MORNING, MARCH 31, 1985

Villanova Proves To Be A Different Kind Of Cat

LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP) — Villanova proved that on its road to the NCAA championship game, big means "Big East" rather than "big men."

The Wildcats drove taller Memphis State to distraction and drove two of the Tigers' big men — Keith Lee and William Bedford — to the bench with foul trouble Saturday, then took control of the boards and rode Wayne McClain's 19 points to a 52-45 victory for a spot in Monday night's title game.

"When Keith Lee fouled out," McClain said, "we stopped and took a deep breath."

Lee fouled out with 10:21 remaining and Villanova in front, while Bedford played most of the second half with four fouls.

Now, it will be an all-Big East affair for the national championship, against Georgetown, the defending champ — the first all-conference final since the 1976 meeting of two Big Ten teams, when Indiana beat Michigan 86-68.

Dana Kirk, the Memphis State coach, said he didn't want to complain about the officiating — but then he complained: "I'm not griping, I know there's no Big East intimidation, but it had an effect on the referees a little bit."

And Baskerville Holmes, Memphis State's 6-foot-7 junior forward, mused: "We didn't get the calls we felt we should have. All our big fellows had to sit down with three or four fouls and their big guys didn't get in foul trouble. They were calling a lot of 'touch' fouls."

"They say the Big East is a rough conference. If it's such a rough conference, why did they call all those little fouls?"

Five of those fouls were called against the very physical Lee, a bruising 6-10 All-American forward who blew hot and cold throughout the tournament and had been in foul trouble all along the road to Lexington.

Against Pennsylvania, he had eight points and four fouls.

Against Alabama-Birmingham, he fouled out with 28 points.

Against Boston College, he had eight points and four fouls.

Against Oklahoma, he had 23 points and four fouls.

Against Villanova, he had 10 points and fouled out with more than a quarter of the game remaining. And when he wasn't riding the bench with his fouls, Bedford was either sidelined by four or was playing gingerly under the basket.

"You keep playing," Lee said. "You go out and play your game and don't worry how many fouls you have. I don't change my game. What am I going to change it for? The refs do the best they can. They call the game."

"You go out and play. You go after the ball wherever it is."

And that's what sent Lee to the bench for the final time in his college career.

He fouled out when he made a grab for a loose ball that Harold Pressley had slapped away from him. Lee wound up hitting McClain instead. Out went Lee and in came the 7-0 Bedford and his four fouls. He had to lay back while Villanova flooded the lane with drives and passes.

"Our emphasis was to get them in as much foul trouble as possible," said center Ed Pinckney, at 6-9 Villanova's biggest starter. "We tried to take the ball to them as much as we could."

"We knew Keith Lee had been in foul trouble throughout the tournament. We tried to take the ball to him as much as we could, to keep him out of the game as

Pirates, Dukes Split Twinbill

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

Jim Riley drove in four runs on back-to-back doubles to lead East Carolina to an 11-6 victory over James Madison University in the second game of an ECAC-South baseball doubleheader Saturday afternoon.

The Dukes socked the Pirates, 9-2, in the opening game to earn a split in the twinbill, as they opened their league play for the 1985 season.

Bobby Mortimer held the Pirates in check in the opener, scattering six hits. Two of them were homers, and that accounted for all the Pirate runs.

Meanwhile, the Dukes shelled Winford Johnson, handing him his first loss in six decisions, as they banged out 12 hits off three Pirate hurlers.

In the second game, Mike Christopher suffered through some shakey moments in the first two innings as JMU scored five runs — four of them unearned — to hold a 3-0 lead and then tie it at 5-5. But he persevered and recorded his fifth win against no losses.

Oddly enough, all but one runs scored off home runs as Christopher was tagged for three.

"I think our kids deserve a lot of credit for coming back like they did in the second game," Coach Gary Overton said. "And they deserve a lot more credit for coming back after they were down 3-0."

The Pirate coach said he didn't think the Pirates played that poorly in the first game, despite the score. "They got some key hits that helped them along. The breaks seemed to go their way and against us."

An example of that came in the fifth inning when Chris Bradberry lifted a fly into short left center. Leftfielder Glen Deren called for the catch, but dropped the ball. Greg Hardison, who had walked, had to hold up for fear the ball would be caught, and before he could dart on to second, centerfielder Rich DellaValle scooped the ball up and relayed it to second in time for the force of Hardison.

"The key to the second game was that we took it to them. Even after we got behind, we took it to them," Overton said. "Our hitters came up swinging and we ran the bases well. And I thought Christopher threw well, too."

"Winford was tired in the first game. He just didn't have his stuff. The heat got to him and they hit some good pitches, too."

Madison took the initial lead in the second inning of the first game. Carey Nemeth reached on a double error — one of fielding which let him arrive, and another on the throw, allowing him to take an extra base. He then scored on Mark Brockell's single to right.

Johnson quickly tied it up for the Pirates, banging his 13th homer of the season out of the park in right for a 1-1 tie.

But the Dukes grabbed control in the third, scoring five times — but not before the Pirates had a chance to retire the side. With one away, Jeff Garber reached on an infield hit. On a three-two count against Mike Mathews, Johnson fired in a called strike for the second out, but Garber broke for second on the pitch. Catcher Jim Riley hesitated before throwing, waiting for the ump's call, and his throw, right on target, was just too late to get Garber to end the inning.

Jeff Urban followed with another infield hit and Nemeth singled in Garber. Brockell followed with a double to left center, scoring both Urban and Nemeth. Rod Boddie walked and DellaValle doubled down the right field line, scoring Brockell. Johnson then balked to score Boddie for a 6-1 lead by the Dukes.

East Carolina picked up its second run in the bottom of the frame on a homer by Greg Hardison.

Madison added two more in the fourth. Deren walked and Garber singled, both moving up on a sacrifice. Urban followed with a line drive just past first base that scored both runners.

"I thought that was a key play in the game," Overton said. "That ball could have been caught, but it put us down 9-2 instead of 6-2 and made it difficult to come back after that."

The final Duke run came in the seventh. Boddie reached on an error, moved up on an out. Rich Bralley walked and Eric Metzger singled, loading the bases. Garber followed with a sacrifice fly, scoring Boddie.

Garber led the Madison hitting with three, while Urban, Brockell, and DellaValle each had two. Mark Cockrell had two hits to pace the Pirates.

Madison appeared ready to make a sweep of it in the second game, scoring three unearned runs in the first inning. With one away, Mathews reached on an error. Then, with two away, Nemeth beat out an infield hit. Brockell followed with a three-run homer.

But the Pirates quickly bounced back, scoring five times in the bottom of the frame. Mont Carter led off with a walk and Hardison singled. Bradberry walked to load them up and Johnson batted a two-run single into left field. Both Bradberry and Johnson were sacrificed up, and both scored when Jay McGraw's chopped to the mound was overthrown at first base. McGraw ended up on third, scoring on a ground-ruled double by Riley for a 5-3 lead.

James Madison rallied to tie it with two in the top of the second. Scott Mackey hit a two-out solo homer to get it started. Garber singled, stole second and moved up on a single to center by Mathews. Garber kept coming and Bradberry's throw to the plate was in time, but kicked out of the glove of Riley as Garber slid in with the tying run.

The Pirates put a quick end to the Madison hopes right then, scoring five more runs for a 10-5 lead. With two down, Bradberry and Johnson both walked. An error on Mike Sullivan's grounder left Johnson safe at second, while Bradberry hustled all the way from second to score on the play. McGraw singled to load

Hill, Bryant Pace Conley Victory

By JIMMY DUPREE

BETHEL — Paul Hill struck out 10 and scattered six hits on the mound for D.H. Conley, while Fred Bryant sparked an 11-run rally in the fifth as the Vikings pounded North Pitt 15-3 in high school baseball Saturday.

Conley rapped 14 hits off four North Pitt pitchers, including eight in the fifth inning.

Lee Hardee paced the Vikings with three hits including a double and a triple for three runs batted in. Bryant finished with two hits and three RBI, while Steve Mills, Shane Adams and Martin Anderson added a pair of hits. Adams drove in two runs, and Todd Cochran plated three runs on a single and fielder's choice.

Conley sent 16 batters to the plate in the fifth after North Pitt starter John Hobbs had limited the Vikings to three hits and one run. Conley used five walks and eight singles to shell a pair of North Pitt pitchers.

"That's the way it's been for us so far," Conley Coach Alan Wilson said. "We have a big inning that breaks the game open for us. It took us a while, but we finally got it going."

"I think maybe their pitcher got a little tired out here in the heat, but I know Paul Hill's got the stamina to go seven innings. I feel like Hill is a top-notch pitcher, but we've got a couple of others who can get the job done as well."

Hobbs left the mound after giving up five hits, four walks and was eventually charged with surrendering six runs. Neal Everette moved from first base to the mound and gave up four runs on three hits, and Rich Grimes finally closed the inning after two more runs scored on three hits.

After one out, Anderson singled up the middle and Steve Mills was intentionally walked. Cochran walked to load the bases, and Bryant followed with a two-run single to left. A walk to Hardee ended Hobbs' stint at pitcher, and Adams followed with a two-run single to right that moved Hardee to third.

Everette was called for a balk to allow the sixth Conley run to score, and a wild pitch moved Adams to third. Amzie Hoffner walked, and Hill singled in Adams. Anderson drove in a run with his second hit of the inning, and Steve Mills was intentionally walked for the second time to fill the bases.

Cochran singled in two runs, and Bryant added an RBI single before the Panther finally got out of the inning when courtesy runner Jody Vines was thrown out attempting to take third on a single by Hardee.

"They're on a roll right now," North Pitt Coach Doug Warren said. "We're not getting the job on the mound we need at this point. Hobbs isn't strong enough to go seven innings now. Our defense has been fairly constant, but up until today our intensity level has not been what it should be."

Conley took the lead in the first inning when leadoff hitter Steve Mills singled and stole second and third before scoring on a fielder's choice by Cochran.

North Pitt rallied for two runs in the fourth, as Scott Rawls reached first on a fielder's choice and a courtesy runner scored when Greg Briley reached first on an error. Thomas Wright beat out a bunt single and later scored on an error for a 2-1 Panther lead.

North Pitt added another run in the bottom of the fifth when Jarvis Massenburg led off with a double and scored when a pop fly by Hobbs was dropped by Adams in left field.

Conley closed its offense with three runs in the seventh. Pinch hitter Ken Hadnott reached first on a fielder's choice, and Vines, batting for Cochran, singled. Hardee tripled in the two runners, and the ball went out of play past third base on the relay to the infield allowing Hardee to score for the final margin.

Hill retired the side in order in the bottom of the frame, striking out

Hobbs for the final out.

Conley, now 9-0 on the season, travels to SouthWest Edgecombe Tuesday in another non-conference battle. North Pitt slipped to 2-5 on the season and hosts Farmville Central Tuesday in an Eastern Carolina 3-A matchup.

EC, SC Women Divide Contests

East Carolina bounced back after an opening game loss to take the second game of a softball doubleheader, 8-1, yesterday against South Carolina.

The Lady Gamecocks, behind a one-hit effort by their pitcher, Lowery, gained an 8-1 victory over the Pirates in the opening game of the day.

Lisa Zmuda had the lone hit for the Pirates, that coming in the sixth inning. Susie Pierce scored the only run for the Pirates in the fourth. She reached on an error, was sacrificed up and scored on an error.

In the second game, the Pirates came back with four runs in the bottom of the fourth inning to erase a 2-0 Lady Gamecock lead and take the lead for good.

Wendy Ozment and Carla Alphin each had two hits to pace the Lady Pirates. One of Ozment's was a triple and Alphin had a run batted in. Jeannie Murray had a triple and two runs batted in while Sandy Kee equalled that feat.

The split makes the Lady Pirates 18-10-1 on the year. They play host to Caninus on Monday in a 3 p.m. contest.

Pirate Defense Sparkles As Drills Reach Halfway

East Carolina's defense asserted itself Saturday as the Pirates went through their second full-scale scrimmage of the spring in Ficklen Stadium.

The Pirates reached the halfway point of the spring with the workout, having completed ten of their allowable 20 days of work.

The Pirate defense outscored the offense, 40-30, in a complicated scoring procedure which gives points for a number of different defensive and offensive accomplishments. The two-hour scrimmage saw 120 plays run by the team.

"It was a good scrimmage until we got tired," head coach Art Baker said. "The defense is really coming along. The linebackers, kids like Robert Washington and Bubba Waters, are really playing well."

The ECU defense forced six fumbles during the day, recovering five, while cornerbacks Kevin Walker and Keith Ford each intercepted a pass. There was only one touchdown on the day, that a 65-yard scoring pass from sophomore quarterback Ron Jones to tailback Terry Paige.

Senior placekicker Jeff Heath supplied the offense with six points as he converted on two of three field goal attempts. Heath, the Pirates career record holder for field goals made, was successful from 48 and 45 yards while his 58-yard attempt in the opening plays of the scrimmage fell just short of the crossbar.

"I thought the offense did a good job until they got tired and lost their poise a little bit," Baker said. "Ron Jones played well in sports as did Darrell (Speed). But they both played poorly in spots also. We need more work in the passing game. We just don't have much consistency in our passing game right now."

Defensive coordinator Don Powers praised the defense for the way it bounced back after the offense dominated the Pirates first scrimmage of the spring earlier this week.

"We had a couple of things we wanted to see," Powers said. "The first thing was we were trying to establish an attitude, and we made some good progress toward playing with enthusiasm and toughness. You need those qualities to play defense. I felt like the defensive front made some progress, and that was supposed to be a weak spot for us."

"We were looking for the fight-back reflex (from the defense), and we saw that today," Powers said.

The Pirates suffered two injuries which may cost them in the remaining time of practice. Fullback Bobby Clair will miss the rest of spring practice with a shoulder separation, while strong safety Gary London suffered a knee injury. His injury will be assessed on Monday, sports medicine personnel said.

The Pirates will wind up spring drills on April 20 with the annual Purple-Gold game.

Weibring, Irwin, Peete Tied For Lead At TPC

PONTE VEDRA, Fla. (AP) — D.A. Weibring had a four-shot lead when he went off the 10th tee, and a two-shot advantage when television went off the air.

But a bogey-bogey finish dropped him into a three-way tie for the lead Saturday in the third round of the rich Tournament Players Championship.

"I was trying not to wake up the golf course," Weibring said after playing the front nine in a solid 32, "but the wind got up and the course kicked up its heels."

He was one victim, losing two shots on the last two holes — and nearly losing more. His second shot on the 18th flirted with a lake and forced Weibring to play his third shot "with my heels hanging over the aqua."

Calvin Peete was another casualty of the course that found its teeth in the afternoon winds. Peete, the game's most accurate player, had tied Weibring for the lead on the 16th, but then hit into the pond on the 17th when the wind let up as he was making his swing.

It led to a double bogey.

He and Hale Irwin, a two-time U.S. Open champion, playing in front of Weibring, each had a 69 and finished at 208, eight under par for three trips over the difficult Players Club at Sawgrass and two back of Weibring.

A few minutes later, Weibring limped home with a 72, including 40 on the back side, and all three were tied going into Sunday's final round of the chase for the $162,000 first prize.

"I can honestly say the money doesn't make any difference," said Weibring, whose only PGA Tour victory came six years ago.

"The money is wonderful, but I'm out to achieve something that I have worked hard for a long time. I consider the TPC a major tournament. It's something I want to win."

Irwin agreed.

"Money is just the obvious thing," he said. "The added things, the 10-year exemption and the ego trip, those things can't have a price put on them."

And the final 18 holes shapes up as much more than a three-man race, Irwin said.

"The only conclusion is that it's wide open," he said.

Gary Hallberg and Canadian Dan Hallderson shared fourth at 210, only two shots back. Hallberg closed up with a 67 and Hallderson shot a 72.

Larry Rinker was next at 71-211.

Not only did Weibring's struggling finish deprive him of sole possession of the top, it opened the way to a potential last-round challenge by Jack Nicklaus.

"Anybody within four shots has a chance," said Peete.

And Nicklaus, six strokes off the pace when he finished with a 71, suddenly found himself only four back at 212.

He was tied with Payne Stewart, Gary Twigg and Dan Forsman. Twigg had a 67, Forsman and Stewart 69s.

Takes One More To Please Thompson

LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP) — No offense to the folks of this Bluegrass town, but Georgetown Coach John Thompson says he won't be happy until he's on his way home with one more victory.

"It's a little early to be pleased," he said. "There is one more ballgame to be played. I get pleased after we are out of here. I get some rest, too."

Thompson had just watched his Hoyas destroy Big East rival St. John's 77-59 Saturday to move into the championship game of the NCAA basketball tournament — the third title-game appearance in four years for the defending champs.

On the way to Monday night's matchup with another Big East team, Villanova, Georgetown displayed a defense so ferocious that its held Chris Mullin, the Redmen's All-American forward, to just eight points — breaking a string of 101 games in which Mullin had scored in double figures.

Sophomore Reggie Williams led the Hoyas with 20 points, while Patrick Ewing scored 16 and Bill Martin and Dave Wingate chipped in 12 each.

But Wingate's biggest contribution was as the chaser on Mullin in Georgetown's box-and-one defense.

"I just tried not to let him handle the ball, just trying to deny him the ball — therefore it made a problem for them to get the ball to (Walter) Berry and (Bill) Wennington,"

Wingate said. "It was a one-on-one defense and if he goes inside, we all try to pick him up ... once you take your eyes off him, he will burn you."

Thompson was not ready to heap praise on his team, despite the lopsided victory.

"I saw a lot of things we messed up in," he said.

But the coach, whose disciplinary approach has turned Georgetown's basketball program from doormat to dominant, conceded he watched from a special perspective.

"... it is very hard for me. I tend to be very pessimistic," he said. "In the summer, when I look back at the films, I tend to appreciate my team a lot better."

"I heard Villanova was expected to get beaten very badly by Memphis," Thompson added. "Somebody forgot to tell Villanova they don't belong here. I don't expect to walk out on the floor and pick up a trophy."

Thompson did open his news conference by commenting he was "somewhat pleased" to see four of his Hoyas score in double figures.

Coach Lou Carnesecca was much more impressed.

"We've played them four times now and lost three of those, which makes me a pretty good judge," said Carnesecca. "I would have to compare them to the great teams of San Francisco with Bill Russell, the great Kentucky teams of the past with Groza and that crowd and Phillips, Robey and Macy, the UCLA clubs and, of course, the Indiana team with the five pros."

"We tried everything against them ... it just didn't work."

Carnesecca had to call a timeout with 16:21 left in the first half because the Redmen were down 10-2 and Mullin hadn't touched the ball. The Redmen started each half with three turnovers and Georgetown, which led 32-28 at halftime, raced to a 39-28 advantage by putting up seven straight points, four by Williams.

College Career Came To Frustrating End For Mullin

LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP) — Chris Mullin's outstanding career came to a frustrating end in the Final Four.

Mullin, St. John's all-time leading scorer and a unanimous All-American in his senior year, was held to eight points Saturday by a tenacious Georgetown defense as the top-ranked Hoyas defeated the third-ranked Redmen 77-59 in the NCAA semifinals.

Mullin, who was covered with a box-and-one defense, had a string of 101 consecutive double-figure games snapped and he was held to less than 10 points for just the fifth time in 125 collegiate games.

"It's the toughest defense to face and it's kind of frustrating," said Mullin, who took just three shots in the second half. "All you can do is keep moving, keep my man occupied."

"We definitely anticipated the box-and-one tonight, it's been successful for them all season and they really didn't do anything different this time. It's been a factor the last three games, that's why they've come out on top three times this season."

The Georgetown player who was assigned the task of covering Mullin was junior David Wingate, who shadowed Mullin wherever he went, even facing away from the ball when it wasn't in Mullin's hands.

A 10-2 Georgetown lead forced St. John's Coach Lou Carnesecca to call a time out with 16:21 remaining in the first half, and Mullin had not yet touched the ball.

"That's exactly why I called it," Carnesecca said of the timeout. "I wanted the ball to get in Mullin's hands. We tried to set better screens but they defend so well. Chris has had box-and-ones for four years, but they just did it so well today."

Mullin finished with four field goals in eight attempts and did not make a trip to the free throw line, just the seventh game in his career that that has happened.

"They didn't do anything different than the way they played it the last three times," Mullin said of the Redmen's previous three meetings with the Hoyas. "It's been effective the last three games. It did cut down on my scoring a whole lot and it did cut down on my passing."

Mullin, who finished with just one assist, scored 20, 21 and 25 points in the previous three meetings with Georgetown.

Georgetown Coach John Thompson praised Mullin after the game.

"Chris is one of the best players I ever had the privilege to coach against," Thompson said. "He does so much more than just his shooting."

Dinah Jus' Luvs That Swingin' Game Uv Golf

By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer

Dinah Shore was in an airport, waiting for a delayed flight, when she reached into her flight bag and produced the gadget, a sort of telescoping golf club which, when fully extended, approximates a putter.

Gary Morton, Lucille Ball's husband, rushed to her side. Musician Larry Gatlin appeared instantly. And in no time, right there in the passenger lounge, the threesome was practicing putting in the aisles.

"Golf nuts are — you know — nuts," Shore explained.

"And she includes herself in that category. Dinah is addicted to this game and takes lessons from pro Eric Monti, who developed the escalating putter for her road trips. "I am beginning to take my golf seriously," she said.

Sometimes, though, that is difficult to do.

There was, for example, the Bing Crosby National Pro-Am earlier this year. "The time," Dinah said, "I made a spectacle of myself at Pebble Beach."

"I had been perfect. I hadn't missed a trap all day. I hit every one. Lee Trevino once showed me how to get out of them, but I just got right into the one on the other side."

"We were on the third hole, a par 3. I hit a nice iron shot. All that was left was a chip and a putt. I realized I had missed the trap so I hit right into the next one. It seemed impossible, but I did it. I got out of the trap in one. Now I'm putting with a chance to be the heroine of the world."

At just about that moment, a crow and owl became involved in a loud argument over squatter's rights in a nearby tree. Each time Shore settled over the putt, the local residents' screaming resumed.

"They couldn't wait until I finished," she said, shaking her head. "I missed the putt and naturally, as soon as I left the green, they shut up."

"I figure it's a plot." Then there was the matter of the boomerang drive she hit off the first tee in the pro-am a couple of years ago at her tournament in Palm Springs.

"I decided I was going to stay calm, not be nervous," she said. "You overswing and you hit the ball 3 1/2 inches. I wouldn't want to be too good, but I overdo it."

So, equipped with a carefully calculated cool, calm approach, Dinah approached the tee and hit the ball. The result was ... well ... remarkable.

"It went straight up in the air, made an oblique right turn and then another one," she said. "It landed on Gerald Ford Drive, I think. The people I was playing with said, 'You make us feel so good.' But that's not the idea."

Such are the frustrations of this sport that has become Dinah's passion. "The idea of hitting a ball as far as you want in the same direction two times in a row is a challenge," she said.

She'll try that tricky first tee again this week when she hosts the 14th Nabisco-Dinah Shore Invitational, a $400,000 event that is one of the richest stops on the Ladies Professional Golf Association tour. The tournament at Mission Hills Country Club in Rancho Mirage, Calif., runs from April 4-7 with the final rounds to be broadcast by NBC television.

Ask her what score she shoots and Dinah smiles demurely.

"Anything I can," she said. "If I break 90, we send up a flare."

And if she happens to hit it straight and manages to stay out of the traps, well, that's really party time.

them up and Johnson scored when Cockrell walked. Riley followed with a double to right, scoring all three baserunners. Riley was cut down, however, trying to stretch it to a triple.

An 11th Pirate run crossed in the third. Carter walked and moved up on a single by Hardison. He then scored on Bradberry's infield out.

The remaining Duke run scored in the fifth on a solo homer by Nemeth. Riley led the ECU hitting with three, while Hardison had two. Mackey and Nemeth each had three for the Dukes, while Brockell added a pair.

The Pirates are now 16-7 on the season, 2-2 in ECAC-South play. The Dukes are 8-9 overall and 1-1 in conference play.

The two meet again this afternoon at 2 p.m. at Hargrain Field.

Hill, Bryant Pace Conley Victory

By JIMMY DuPREE
Reflector Sports Writer
BETHEL — Paul Hill struck out 10 and scattered six hits on the mound for D.H. Conley, while Fred Bryant sparked an 11-run rally in the fifth as the Vikings pounded North Pitt 15-3 in high school baseball Saturday.

Conley rapped 14 hits off four North Pitt pitchers, including eight in the fifth inning.

Lee Hardee paced the Vikings with three hits including a double and a triple for three runs batted in. Bryant finished with two hits and three RBI, while Steve Mills, Shane Adams and Martin Anderson added a pair of hits. Adams drove in two runs, and Todd Cochran plated three runs on a single and fielder's choice.

Conley sent 16 batters to the plate in the fifth after North Pitt starter John Hobbs had limited the Vikings to three hits and one run. Conley used five walks and eight singles to shell a pair of North Pitt pitchers.

"That's the way it's been for us so far," Conley Coach Alan Wilson said. "We have a big inning that breaks the game open for us. It took us a while, but we finally got it going."

"I think maybe their pitcher got a little tired out here in the heat, but I know Paul Hill's got the stamina to go seven innings. I feel like Hill is a top-notch pitcher, but we've got a couple of others who can get the job done as well."

Hobbs left the mound after giving up five hits, four walks and was eventually charged with surrendering six runs. Neal Everette moved from first base to the mound and gave up four runs on three hits, and Rich Grimes finally closed the inning after two more runs scored on three hits.

After one out, Anderson singled up the middle and Steve Mills was intentionally walked. Cochran walked to load the bases, and Bryant followed with a two-run single to left. A walk to Hardee ended Hobbs' stint at pitcher, and Adams followed with a two-run single to right that moved Hardee to third.

Everette was called for a balk to allow the sixth Conley run to score, and a wild pitch moved Adams to third. Amzie Hoffner walked, and Hill singled in Adams. Anderson drove in a run with his second hit of the inning, and Steve Mills was intentionally walked for the second time to fill the bases.

Cochran singled in two runs, and Bryant added an RBI single before the Panther finally got out of the inning when courtesy runner Jody Vines was thrown out attempting to take third on a single by Hardee.

"They're on a roll right now," North Pitt Coach Doug Warren said. "We're not getting the job on the mound we need at this point. Hobbs isn't strong enough to go seven innings now. Our defense has been fairly consistent, but up until today our intensity level has not been what it should be."

Conley took the lead in the first inning when leadoff hitter Steve Mills singled and stole second and third before scoring on a fielder's choice by Cochran.

North Pitt rallied for two runs in the fourth, as Scott Rawls reached first on a fielder's choice and a courtesy runner scored when Greg Briley reached first on an error. Thomas Wright beat out a bunt single and later scored on an error for a 2-1 Panther lead.

North Pitt added another run in the bottom of the fifth when Jarvis Massenburg led off with a double and scored when a pop fly by Hobbs was dropped by Adams in left field.

Conley closed its offense with three runs in the seventh. Pinch hitter Ken Hadnott reached first on a fielder's choice, and Vines, batting for Cochran, singled. Hardee tripled in the two runners, and the ball went out of play past third base on the relay to the infield allowing Hardee to score for the final margin.

Hill retired the side in order in the bottom of the frame, striking out

Hobbs for the final out.

Conley, now 9-0 on the season, travels to SouthWest Edgecombe Tuesday in another non-conference battle. North Pitt slipped to 2-5 on the season and hosts Farmville Central Tuesday in an Eastern Carolina 3-A matchup.

EC, SC Women Divide Contests

East Carolina bounced back after an opening game loss to take the second game of a softball doubleheader, 8-1, yesterday against South Carolina.

The Lady Gamecocks, behind a one-hit effort by their pitcher, Lowery, gained an 8-1 victory over the Pirates in the opening game of the day.

Lisa Zmuda had the lone hit for the Pirates, that coming in the sixth inning. Susie Pierce scored the only run for the Pirates in the fourth. She reached on an error, was sacrificed up and scored on an error.

In the second game, the Pirates came back with four runs in the bottom of the fourth inning to erase a 2-0 Lady Gamecock lead and take the lead for good.

Wendy Ozment and Carla Alphin each had two hits to pace the Lady Pirates. One of Ozment's was a triple and Alphin had a run batted in. Jeannie Murray had a triple and two runs batted in while Sandy Kee equalled that feat.

The split makes the Lady Pirates 18-10-1 on the year. They play host to Caninus on Monday in a 3 p.m. contest.

Pirate Defense Sparkles As Drills Reach Halfway

East Carolina's defense asserted itself Saturday as the Pirates went through their second full-scale scrimmage of the spring in Ficklen Stadium.

The Pirates reached the halfway point of the spring with the workout, having completed ten of their allowable 20 days of work.

The Pirate defense outscored the offense, 40-30, in a complicated scoring procedure which gives points for a number of different defensive and offensive accomplishments. The two-hour scrimmage saw 120 plays run by the team.

"It was a good scrimmage until we got tired," head coach Art Baker said. "The defense is really coming along. The linebackers, kids like Robert Washington and Bubba Waters, are really playing well."

The ECU defense forced six fumbles during the day, recovering five, while cornerbacks Kevin Walker and Keith Ford each intercepted a pass. There was only one touchdown on the day, that a 65-yard scoring pass from sophomore quarterback Ron Jones to tailback Terry Paige.

Senior placekicker Jeff Heath supplied the offense with six points as he converted on two of three field goal attempts. Heath, the Pirates career record holder for field goals made, was successful from 48 and 45 yards while his 58-yard attempt in the opening plays of the scrimmage fell just short of the crossbar.

"I thought the offense did a good job until they got tired and lost their poise a little bit," Baker said. "Ron Jones played well in sports as did Darrell (Speed). But they both played poorly in spots also. We need more work in the passing game. We just don't have much consistency in our passing game right now."

Defensive coordinator Don Powers praised the defense for the way it bounced back after the offense dominated the Pirates first scrimmage of the spring earlier this week.

"We had a couple of things we wanted to see," Powers said. "The first thing was we were trying to establish an attitude, and we made some good progress toward playing with enthusiasm and toughness. You need those qualities to play defense. I felt like the defensive front made some progress, and that was supposed to be a weak spot for us."

"We were looking for the fight-back reflex (from the defense), and we saw that today," Powers said.

The Pirates suffered two injuries which may cost them in the remaining time of practice. Fullback Bobby Clair will miss the rest of spring practice with a shoulder separation, while strong safety Gary London suffered a knee injury. His injury will be assessed on Monday, sports medicine personnel said.

The Pirates will wind up spring drills on April 20 with the annual Purple-Gold game.

Weibring, Irwin, Peete Tied For Lead At TPC

PONTE VEDRA, Fla. (AP) — D.A. Weibring had a four-shot lead when he went off the 10th tee, and a two-shot advantage when television went off the air.

But a bogey-bogey finish dropped him into a three-way tie for the lead Saturday in the third round of the rich Tournament Players Championship.

"I was trying not to wake up the golf course," Weibring said after playing the front nine in a solid 32, "but the wind got up and the course kicked up its heels."

He was one victim, losing two shots on the last two holes — and nearly losing more. His second shot on the 18th flirted with a lake and forced Weibring to play his third shot "with my heels hanging over the aqua."

Calvin Peete was another casualty of the course that found its teeth in the afternoon winds. Peete, the game's most accurate player, had tied Weibring for the lead on the 16th, but then hit into the pond on the 17th when the wind let up as he was making his swing.

It led to a double bogey.

He and Hale Irwin, a two-time U.S. Open champion, playing in front of Weibring, each had a 69 and finished at 208, eight under par for three trips over the difficult Players Club at Sawgrass and two back of Weibring.

A few minutes later, Weibring

limped home with a 72, including 40 on the back side, and all three were tied going into Sunday's final round of the chase for the $162,000 first prize.

"I can honestly say the money doesn't make any difference," said Weibring, whose only PGA Tour victory came six years ago.

"The money is wonderful, but I'm out to achieve something that I have worked hard for a long time. I consider the TPC a major tournament. It's something I want to win."

Irwin agreed.

"Money is just the obvious thing," he said. "The added things, the 10-year exemption and the ego trip, those things can't have a price put on them."

And the final 18 holes shapes up as much more than a three-man race, Irwin said.

"The only conclusion is that it's wide open," he said.

Gary Hallberg and Canadian Dan Halldorson shared fourth at 210, only two shots back. Hallberg closed up with a 67 and Halldorson shot a 72.

Larry Rinker was next at 71-211.

Not only did Weibring's struggling finish deprive him of sole possession of the top, it opened the way to a potential last-round challenge by Jack Nicklaus.

"Anybody within four shots has a chance," said Peete.

And Nicklaus, six strokes off the

pace when he finished with a 71, suddenly found himself only four back at 212.

He was tied with Payne Stewart, Gary Twigg and Dan Forsman. Twigg has a 67, Forsman and Stewart 69s.

Takes One More To Please Thompson

LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP) — No offense to the folks of this Bluegrass town, but Georgetown Coach John Thompson says he won't be happy until he's on his way home with one more victory.

"It's a little early to be pleased," he said. "There is one more ballgame to be played. I get pleased after we are out of here. I get some rest, too."

Thompson had just watched his Hoyas destroy Big East rival St. John's 77-59 Saturday to move into the championship game of the NCAA basketball tournament — the third title-game appearance in four years for the defending champs.

On the way to Monday night's matchup with another Big East team, Villanova, Georgetown displayed a defense so ferocious that it held Chris Mullin, the Redmen's All-American forward, to just eight points — breaking a string of 101 games in which Mullin had scored in double figures.

Sophomore Reggie Williams led the Hoyas with 20 points, while Patrick Ewing scored 16 and Bill Martin and Dave Wingate chipped in 12 each.

But Wingate's biggest contribution was as the chaser on Mullin in Georgetown's box-and-one defense.

"I just tried not to let him handle the ball, just trying to deny him the ball — therefore it made a problem for them to get the ball to (Walter) Berry and (Bill) Wennington,"

Wingate said. "It was a one-on-one defense and if he goes inside, we all try to pick him up ... once you take your eyes off him, he will burn you."

Thompson was not ready to heap praise on his team, despite the lopsided victory.

"I saw a lot of things we messed up in," he said.

But the coach, whose disciplinary approach has turned Georgetown's basketball program from doormat to dominant, conceded he watched from a special perspective.

"... it is very hard for me. I tend to be very pessimistic," he said. "In the summer, when I look back at the films, I tend to appreciate my teams a lot better."

"I heard Villanova was expected to get beaten very badly by Memphis," Thompson added. "Somebody forgot to tell Villanova they don't belong here. I don't expect to walk out on the floor and pick up a trophy."

Thompson did open his news conference by commenting he was "somewhat pleased" to see four of his Hoyas score in double figures.

Coach Lou Carnesecca was much more impressed.

"We've played them four times now and lost three of those, which makes me a pretty good judge," said Carnesecca. "I would have to compare them to the great teams of San Francisco with Bill Russell, the great Kentucky teams of the past with Groza and that crowd and Phillips, Robey and Macy, the UCLA clubs and, of course, the Indiana team with the five pros."

"We tried everything against them ... it just didn't work."

Carnesecca had to call a timeout with 16:21 left in the first half because the Redmen were down 10-2 and Mullin hadn't touched the ball. The Redmen started each half with three turnovers and Georgetown, which led 32-28 at halftime, raced to a 39-28 advantage by putting up seven straight points, four by Williams.

College Career Came To Frustrating End For Mullin

LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP) — Chris Mullin's outstanding career came to a frustrating end in the Final Four.

Mullin, St. John's all-time leading scorer and a unanimous All-American in his senior year, was held to eight points Saturday by a tenacious Georgetown defense as the top-ranked Hoyas defeated the third-ranked Redmen 77-59 in the NCAA semifinals.

Mullin, who was covered with a box-and-one defense, had a string of 101 consecutive double-figure games snapped and he was held to less than 10 points for just the fifth time in 125 collegiate games.

"It's the toughest defense to face and it's kind of frustrating," said Mullin, who took just three shots in the second half. "All you can do is keep moving, keep my man occupied."

"We definitely anticipated the box-and-one tonight, it's been successful for them all season and they really didn't do anything different this time. It's been a factor the last three games, that's why they've come out on top three times this season."

The Georgetown player who was assigned the task of covering Mullin was junior David Wingate, who shadowed Mullin wherever he went, even facing away from the ball when it wasn't in Mullin's hands.

A 10-2 Georgetown lead forced St. John's Coach Lou Carnesecca to call a time out with 16:21 remaining in the first half, and Mullin had not yet touched the ball.

"That's exactly why I called it," Carnesecca said of the timeout. "I wanted the ball to get in Mullin's hands. We tried to set better screens but they defend so well. Chris has had box-and-ones for four years but they just did it so well today."

Mullin finished with four field goals in eight attempts and did not make a trip to the free throw line, just the seventh game in his career that that has happened.

"They didn't do anything different than the way they played it the last three times," Mullin said of the Redmen's previous three meetings with the Hoyas. "It's been effective the last three games. It did cut down on my scoring a whole lot and it did cut down on my passing."

Mullin, who finished with just one assist, scored 20, 21 and 25 points in the previous three meetings with Georgetown.

Georgetown Coach John Thompson praised Mullin after the game.

"Chris is one of the best players I ever had the privilege to coach against," Thompson said. "He does so much more than just his shooting."

Dinah Jus' Luvs That Swingin' Game Uv Golf

By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer

Dinah Shore was in an airport, waiting for a delayed flight, when she reached into her flight bag and produced the gadget, a sort of telescoping golf club which, when fully extended, approximates a putter.

Gary Morton, Lucille Ball's husband, rushed to her side. Musician Larry Gatlin appeared instantly. And in no time, right there in the passenger lounge, the threesome was practicing putting in the aisles.

"Golf nuts are — you know — nuts," Shore explained.

"And she includes herself in that category. Dinah is addicted to this game and takes lessons from pro Eric Monti, who developed the escalating putter for her road trips. "I am beginning to take my golf seriously," she said.

Sometimes, though, that is difficult to do.

There was, for example, the Bing Crosby National Pro-Am earlier this year. "The time," Dinah said, "I made a spectacle of myself at Pebble Beach."

"I had been perfect. I hadn't missed a trap all day. I hit every one. Lee Trevino once showed me how to get out of them, but I just got right into the one on the other side."

"We were on the third hole, a par 3. I hit a nice iron shot. All that was left was a chip and a putt. I realized I had missed the trap so I hit right into the next one. It seemed impossible, but I did it. I got out of the trap in one. Now I'm putting with a chance to be the heroine of the world."

At just about that moment, a crow and owl became involved in a loud argument over squatter's rights in a nearby tree. Each time Shore settled over the putt, the local residents' screaming resumed.

"They couldn't wait until I finished," she said, shaking her head. "I missed the putt and naturally, as soon as I left the green, they shut up."

"I figure it's a plot."

Then there was the matter of the boomerang drive she hit off the first tee in the pro-am a couple of years ago at her tournament in Palm Springs.

"I decided I was going to stay calm, not be nervous," she said. "You overswing and you hit the ball 3 1/2 inches. I wouldn't want to be too good, but I overdo it."

So, equipped with a carefully calculated cool, calm approach, Dinah approached the tee and hit the ball. The result was ... well ... remarkable.

"It went straight up in the air, made an oblique right turn and then another one," she said. "It landed on Gerald Ford Drive, I think. The people I was playing with said, 'You make us feel so good.' But that's not the idea."

Such are the frustrations of this sport that has become Dinah's passion. "The idea of hitting a ball as far as you want in the same direction two times in a row is a challenge," she said.

She'll try that tricky first tee again this week when she hosts the 14th Nabisco-Dinah Shore Invitational, a $400,000 event that is one of the richest stops on the Ladies Professional Golf Association tour. The tournament at Mission Hills Country Club in Rancho Mirage, Calif., runs from April 4-7 with the final rounds to be broadcast by NBC television.

Ask her what score she shoots and Dinah smiles demurely.

them up and Johnson scored when Cockrell walked. Riley followed with a double to right, scoring all three baserunners. Riley was cut down, however, trying to stretch it to a triple.

An 11th Pirate run crossed in the third. Carter walked and moved up on a single by Hardison. He then scored on Bradberry's infield out.

The remaining Duke run scored in the fifth on a solo homer by Nemeth. Riley led the ECU hitting with three, while Hardison had two. Mackey and Nemeth each had three for the Dukes, while Brockell added a pair.

The Pirates are now 16-7 on the season, 2-2 in ECAC-South play. The Dukes are 8-9 overall and 1-1 in conference play.

The two meet again this afternoon at 2 p.m. at Harrington Field.

McClain, Wildcats Grab Opportunity

LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP) — After four years of trying, Villanova forward Dwayne McClain was only 10 minutes away from playing for the championship of college basketball. He wasn't about to let the opportunity get away.

Villanova held a 41-33 lead with 10:21 to play and got an added boost when Memphis State's All-American forward, Keith Lee, fouled out. But it took some late heroics by McClain to overcome a Memphis State rally and give Villanova a 52-45 NCAA Tournament semifinal victory Saturday.

"When Keith Lee fouled out, we stopped and took a deep breath," said McClain, who scored 10 of his 19 points down the stretch. "But we couldn't lose our poise. The seniors kept it and we looked for the good shots."

Villanova Coach Rollie Massimino said his team got a little complacent. But he said it was a tribute to seniors McClain, Ed Pinckney and Gary McLain that the Wildcats came away with the victory.

"It was such a big game, I guess they couldn't believe it (the lead)," Massimino said. "They got a little complacent, and that happens. They could have gotten very nervous and lost, but their experience came through."

"We didn't enjoy the fact we lost the lead," said McLain, the team's point guard and floor leader. "We could have gotten rattled, but this is a veteran ball club and we maintained our poise."

McClain hit a pair of free throws after Lee's fifth foul to give Villanova the eight-point lead, but the Wildcats then went seven minutes without a point. Memphis State, meanwhile, rallied to tie it on a jumper by Andre Turner with 3:27 left.

McClain hit two free throws with 3:04 left to put Villanova ahead 43-41 and then, a minute later, worked free for a slam dunk out of Villanova's stalling offense.

"They were denying the wings and leaving the baseline wide open," McClain said. "I took advantage. I knew that we needed another basket and I just took charge."

Memphis State, forced to foul in the final stages of the game, stood by as McClain hit six free throws in the final 54 seconds.

McClain's offense complemented a

Villanova defense that held Memphis State to its lowest point total of the season and to just 38 percent shooting from the field.

"We mixed up our defenses extremely well," Massimino said. "McClain and Pinckney did an excellent job inside, drawing the fouls and keeping them from getting the ball to their big men. It comes back to them playing together for so long."

Holmes Vows To Return

LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP) — Memphis State's junior forward Baskerville Holmes vowed the Tigers would return to the Final Four next year to seek retribution after Saturday's 52-45 loss to Villanova in the semifinals of the NCAA basketball championships.

"We knew we had the talent to go all the way this year, but we didn't get the calls we thought we should have," Holmes said.

All-America forward Keith Lee and Holmes both fouled out of the contest, while 7-foot-center William Bedford was saddled with four personals for the game's final 13 minutes.

"The loss hurt everyone on the team," Holmes said. "We will have a great team next year and I feel we'll be in the same spot next year in the Final Four."

Saturday's game became a case of role reversal as the smaller Wildcats were intent on pounding the basketball inside, attacking Lee, Bedford and Holmes straight-on.

In contrast, Memphis State began to rely more and more on an outside attack that left the Tigers with a 38 percent shooting performance from the field.

"We were in serious foul trouble, and that makes it hard to play the way you want to," Tiger Coach Dana Kirk said.

"You don't worry about your fouls, you go out and play the game," said the 6-10 Lee, who was 3-for-9 from the field and finished with only 10 points in 23 minutes of play.

Lee was saddled with foul trouble throughout the tournament and played only 131 of a possible 205 minutes.

Bedford and Holmes managed only eight points each against Villanova. Bedford was so upset with his performance that he draped his 7-foot frame over a stool in the Tiger dressing room and sadly shook his head.

"All our big fellows had to sit down with three or four fouls and their big guys didn't get in foul trouble," Holmes said. "I feel like the referees called a very poor game. They called a lot of touch fouls."

"They say the Big East is a rough conference. If it's so rough, why did they call all those little fouls? It didn't seem like the conference was so rough. It seems like they (referees) were protecting them," Holmes said.

The three referees who worked the game came from the Western Athletic Conference and the Atlantic Coast Conference.

"We had to hold on to one of our big guys, and that hurts you on both offense and defense," Kirk said.

"We didn't talk about foul trouble before the game, but it was soon apparent that we were going to be in serious foul trouble early."

"I'm not griping, mind you! There's no Big East intimidation to us. But it had an effect on the referees a little bit. A lot of walking (traveling violations) went on," Kirk said.

Kirk said he did not feel his Tigers, who had been slight favorites going into the game, should be referred to as upset victims, noting Villanova is appearing in NCAA postseason play for the sixth straight year.

"I don't know how you can refer to a team that's been in the NCAA playoffs as many times as Villanova as a Cinderella team. I thought a Cinderella team was one that came out of nowhere. If Villanova is a Cinderella, then Cinderella wears boots," said Kirk.

One More To Go

much as we could. We tried as much as we could to get him in foul trouble."

And it worked. "We shot 12 more field goals than they did but they shot 26 foul shots and we shot nine," Kirk said.

"We were in serious foul trouble. It's hard to play the offenses and defenses that you want to. You get into a situation where you had to take a good big player out."

"Villanova played well. They did the thing they had to."

The Wildcats also played their slowdown game so well that they held Memphis State to its lowest score all season.

"I look forward to the shot clock next year knowing have a 45-second situation," Kirk said. "No clock hurts." But after a moment's thought, he added, "They do what they want to win — and maybe if they run, they beat us worse."

Lee left with just 10 points, having shot 3-for-9 from the field with four free throws. Bedford, who finished the game, scored just eight points.

Meanwhile, McClain was the driving force as Villanova charged down the stretch, surviving a cold spell of 9:46 without a field goal. He scored the Wildcats' only four points on free throws in that stretch, while Memphis State scored eight points.

Then, McClain broke the Wildcats back into the field-goal column with a powerful slam dunk over Bedford. That gave Villanova a 45-41 lead with 2:04 to play.

McClain scored eight of nine Villanova points in one stretch and eight of the Wildcats' final 13. The remaining four came on last-minute free throws by Gary McLain, Villanova's 6-0 senior guard. McLain hit all five of his free throws and McClain hit all seven of his.

In all, Villanova hit 20 of 26 free throws, while Memphis State went to the foul line just nine times for seven points. And despite doing most of its shooting from the outside, Villanova hit 42.1 percent of its field goal attempts, while limiting Memphis State to just 38 percent.

It was McClain, McLain and 6-9 center Ed Pinckney who had made a pact four years ago that they would reach the Final Four before they were graduated. Now they have done that one better — getting Villanova to its first championship game since 1971.

Pinckney finished with 12 points and grabbed nine rebounds. He also blocked three shots for Villanova.

Memphis State, unable to play its physical game inside through most of the second half, was forced to resort to long-range shooting. Andre Turner, a 5-10 junior guard, wound up as the Tigers' leading scorer with 11 points.

Villanova was unable to penetrate the wall tossed up in the first nine minutes by the Tigers, who blew out to a 13-7 lead with Bedford jamming in a pair of baskets.

But with substitutes Harold Jensen and Mark Plansky hitting from long range, the Wildcats clawed their way back, and neither team led by more than two points for the final 9:02 of the opening half, which ended tied 23-23.

A jumper by Baskerville Holmes and a rebound follow by Bedford gave Memphis State the first two baskets of the second half, but McClain's jumper, Pinckney's jam on a follow and a foul shot on Lee's third personal put Villanova back on top 28-27 three minutes into the second half.

Baskets by Lee and Turner pushed Memphis State on top again, 31-28, then Villanova went on a tear.

McClain hit a jumper. Pinckney hit two free throws on Lee's fourth foul. Pinckney scored from the field. Then Bedford picked up a technical foul — which McLain sank — when he angrily flung the ball off the court after being called for traveling.

Bedford picked up his fourth personal with 12:52 and Lee replaced him, but the Villanova run continued on Jensen's jumper. It gave the Wildcats nine points in a row and 37-31 lead.

Olson To Take Kentucky Post

LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP) — Arizona Coach Lute Olson will be named basketball coach at the University of Kentucky on Monday, succeeding Joe B. Hall, ESPN reported Saturday.

Otis Singletary, president of the University of Kentucky, said "there is no choice at this point."

"I don't know where that came from," he said, referring to the report regarding Olson.

"I'd like to do it (name a coach) by Monday, if we have a candidate, but there's no magic in it. We are still interviewing and we are not ready to make an announcement."

Cliff Hagan, Kentucky's athletic director and chairman of its search committee, would neither confirm nor deny the report.

ESPN basketball analysts Dick Vitale and Bob Ley said Olson was offered a contract in excess of $500,000 a year, with a base salary "approaching six figures, a TV deal in the six-figure range" and a basketball camp, among other considerations.

They said Arizona was trying to put together a counteroffer, "but it might be too late." There also were reports that Olson would keep Leonard Hamilton, Hall's top assistant, ESPN said.

Hall resigned after 13 seasons last weekend after his team lost to St. John's in the final of the NCAA West Regional.

Olson was at the NCAA Final Four basketball championships and could not be reached for comment.

He told the Lexington Herald-Leader Friday that it would be premature for him to comment on his chance of being selected Kentucky's new coach.

Other finalists for the post, according to the newspaper, were Lee Rose and Dickie Parsons.

"I haven't asked the committee or Cliff Hagan how many people are still involved, nor would I. But, if they would offer that, I'd accept it. I think I'm one of three candidates for the job," Olson said.

He stressed the need to name a coach well in advance of the April 10 national signing date.

Rose, who played and coached at Transylvania University, was interviewed by the committee Thursday. He refused to discuss the matter Friday and referred all questions to Hagan. Rose currently is head coach at South Florida.

Parsons, a former Hall assistant, presently is a fund-raiser for Kentucky's development office. Parsons, who played guard at Kentucky and later coached the baseball team, spent 3½ hours with the screening committee Tuesday.

Alabama-Birmingham Coach Gene Bartow has withdrawn his

Bartow said Friday night that he did not withdraw his candidacy after a meeting with Kentucky officials.

"No, I just woke up this morning and did some thinking and decided that the best thing for me to do is to remain where I am," said Bartow, who had been a front-runner to become Kentucky's third coach in the past 55 years.

Bartow succeeded John Wooden at UCLA, but left eight years ago to begin the Alabama-Birmingham program from scratch. He has developed the Sun Belt Conference team into a national contender.

Others who have withdrawn their names from consideration are Gene Keady of Purdue, Bobby Cremins of Georgia Tech and Hugh Durham of Georgia. Vanderbilt's C.M. Newton, a former Kentucky player, also indicated he would rather stay where he is.

Auburn Switching To I-Formation In 1985

AUBURN, Ala. (AP) — Coach Pat Dye, who has run a wishbone offense since he came to Auburn in 1981, says the Tigers will be lining up in the I-formation this fall.

"I know we are going to run the I," Dye said as Auburn opened spring practice. "What I don't know is how much wishbone we'll run, if any."

The wishbone, featuring the talents of running back Bo Jackson, helped carry Auburn to the Southeastern Conference championship in 1983. But when the Tigers went 9-4 last year and frittered away a chance at a SEC championship in a 17-15 loss to struggling Alabama, Dye said it was time for a change.

The reason, Dye said, is the I-formation will allow him to capitalize on the talents of five strong and fast tight ends: Jeff Parks, Ron Middleton, Sherman Johnson, Lee Mark Sellers and Walter Reeves.

Dye said Saturday's workout, the second of the spring season, was Auburn's first chance to try the new formation out during a scrimmage.

"Today was the first time we got a look at the I-formation 11 on 11, and it wasn't too bad," the coach said Saturday. "It's all new to us and I'm sure we'll gain more confidence as we go along."

In the wishbone offense, three running backs line up in a T-formation behind the quarterback. On a typical running play, the quarterback rolls out to one side with the backs moving along with him. The quarterback then has the option of either running the ball downfield himself with blocking from the backs, or of pitching the ball to one of the backs as he is about to be tackled.

Gant Sets Track Mark, Claims Pole

BRISTOL, Tenn. (AP) — Harry Gant, driving a Chevrolet Monte Carlo SS, broke the track qualifying record at Bristol International Raceway Saturday on the way to winning the pole position for the Valleydale 500 Grand National stock car race.

He toured the .533-mile, high-banked Bristol track at an average speed of 112.778 mph. That broke the mark of 112.507 set in August 1982 by Tim Richmond.

Gant became the fifth different pole winner in as many Grand National events this season, joining Bill Elliott, Darrell Waltrip, Neil Bonnett and Terry Labonte as early qualifiers for next spring's Busch Clash at Daytona Beach, Fla.

Joining Gant on the front row for the start of Sunday's 500-lap, 266.5-mile race will be the Buick Regal of Bobby Allison, who qualified at 112.480.

For the struggling Allison, it was as close as he's come to winning a pole position since he last started from the top qualifying spot in a race at Richmond, Va. in the fall of 1982.

The race, to be televised live on ESPN beginning at 1 p.m. EST, also will be the record 400th consecutive Grand National start by seven-time Winston Cup champion Richard Petty.

Waltrip Takes Bud 200

BRISTOL, Tenn. (AP) — Darrell Waltrip pulled away at the end of the crash-filled Budweiser 200 Late Model Sportsman race for an easy victory Saturday at Bristol International Raceway.

Waltrip, a two-time champion in NASCAR's Grand National stock car division, drove his new Chevrolet to a 12.8-second triumph over the second-place Pontiac of Rick Mast, the only other car on the lead lap at the end of the 200-lap, 106.6-mile event.

The winner averaged 74.372 mph in the race, which was slowed by seven caution flags for a total of 45 laps.

Early leaders included record-setting pole winner Tommy Ellis, Geoff Bodine and Jack Ingram, all of whom were eventually knocked out of the race in accidents.

Bodine had regained the lead just a few laps before he tangled with Ingram on the main straightaway on lap 132 on the .533-mile, high-banked oval.

Waltrip, a 38-year-old from Franklin, Tenn., took the top spot from Ronnie Silver on lap 146 and steadily pulled away from the rest of the field.

Silver wound up third, a lap behind, followed by Tommy Houston and Larry Pearson.

Despite the rash of accidents, including a hard crash by Morgan Shepherd, whose car momentarily burst into flames, there were no driver injuries reported. A crewman, Brad Smith of Portsmouth, Va., was taken to a hospital by ambulance after apparently tripping over the pit wall and injuring his right ankle.

Waltrip, who will be trying to win a record ninth Grand National race on the Bristol track in Sunday's Valleydale 500, collected $7,150 for his victory Saturday.

The top 10 finishers in Saturday's Budweiser 200 Late Model Sportsman race, with type of car, laps completed and winner's average speed in mph:

1. Darrell Waltrip, Chevrolet, 200, 74.372.
2. Rick Mast, Pontiac, 200.
3. Ronnie Silver, Pontiac, 199.
4. Tommy Houston, Oldsmobile, 199.

6. Bosco Lowe, Pontiac, 199.
7. Ronnie Thomas, Pontiac, 196.

Float Tube Fishing

Last summer, I was fishing from the bank of a local pond on a scorching hot summer day, about to sweat and thirst to death. Just as I was thinking how great it would be to splash some that cool water on my face, I saw out of the corner of my eye, two guys floating around in the water in innertubes, fishing poles in hand.

"What are these fools doing?" I thought. I had never seen a float tube before.

As they came closer to where I was, one of them cast his lure beside a stump I had been trying to reach for hours. Whoosh! A five-pounder grabbed his lure and took off.

"Where did you get that thing?" I hollered to him after he had successfully reeled the fish in.

"I got it out of a fishing catalog. It's great," he said. Boy, I wish I had one right now, I thought.

Fishing from a float tube is fast becoming one of the most popular methods of fishing around. And it's one of the easiest, most economical and fun ways to catch a fish.

Float tube fishing involves fishing from a float tube, which I call a luxury innertube. Basically, it's a simple innertube, but it's usually covered with a durable canvas-type material and has a strap, or seat, across the bottom to allow a person to sit in it with his legs dangling out the bottom.

A float tube is also usually equipped with pockets for storing tackle, food or any other needed items. Most people use their legs to kick to the places they want to fish, but some tie paddles to the tube.

Float tube fishing has a lot of advantages. First, it's economical. It's free once you pay for the tube itself, which usually costs about $50. A boat motor burns expensive gas, but all you need to move a float tube is a good pair of legs. It's also much easier to haul and store than a boat.

Another advantage is that it allows a fisherman to fish places a person in a boat could not reach. For instance, if you want to fish a stump hidden behind trees or bushes, you can get there easily in a float tube. It also allows a fisherman to cast along shores that couldn't be reached if he were standing on a bank.

Still another advantage is the ease of retrieving a "hung" lure. If your favorite treble-hooked lure gets hung on a stump under water, all you have to do is kick yourself to it, reach under water, and unhook it. Then again, if you're fishing for "trees," you most likely won't be able to get your lure back.

Finally, float tube fishing is fun. It's a cool way to fish on hot summer days. Just watch out for snakes and snapping turtles.

Byrd Says 'It's All Over'

By The Associated Press
The old saying that "it ain't over til it's over" doesn't wash with Larry Bird.

"It's over with," the Boston forward said Friday night after the Celtics beat the Philadelphia 76ers 112-108 to take a six-game lead with nine to play in the National Basketball Association's Atlantic Division. "We won the division title tonight. If they had won, it would have been different."

The Celtics didn't get their 10th straight victory without a struggle.

They led by as many as 23 points before Philadelphia rallied to cut the deficit to 109-108 with 15 seconds left. Two free throws by Scott Wedman and one by Bird closed out the scoring as the 76ers were forced to foul.

"When we get a 20-point lead, sometimes we tend to let teams back in," said Bird, who led all scorers with 24 points. "They got their calls, a majority of them, going down the stretch, so I think they should be very honored that they had an opportunity to stay in the game with us."

In other NBA games, it was Washington 122, New Jersey 98; Houston 121, Golden State 116; Utah 114, San Antonio 109; Los Angeles Lakers 120, Dallas 115; and Portland 125, Seattle 99.

Both Bird and Boston Coach K.C. Jones said the 76ers rallied with the benefit of an illegal zone defense, while 76ers Coach Billy Cunningham called it a successful "gambling defense."

"You can't be embarrassed against an illegal zone defense. We never practice against it," Jones said. "We talked to the officials 1,000 times out there. I don't think they heard me."

"The only thing they got out of this was saying that they can play a zone defense better than we can beat a zone defense," Bird added.

"I'm proud of the way we came back by using a gambling defense," Cunningham said. "We have to try and play each game the way we finished the game tonight."

Philadelphia was called for playing an illegal defense once, late in the first half, which ended with the Celtics on top 62-44.

Moses Malone had 22 points and 16 rebounds to become the 16th NBA player to pass the 10,000 mark with 10,012 rebounds in his NBA career. George Johnson added a season-high 21 points, but Julius Erving, suffering from an ankle injury, didn't play for the 76ers.

Kevin McHale and Dennis Johnson had 22 points each for Boston.

Boston led 100-85 in the fourth quarter before a 9-1 streak by Philadelphia cut the deficit to 101-94 with 4:45 remaining. The Celtics extended the margin to 107-98 before the 76ers scored seven points in a row to get within two with 48 seconds left.

Bird's two free throws made it 109-105 before a three-point play by Johnson threw a final scare into the Celtics.

Bullets 122, Nets 98

Washington pulled ahead of New Jersey in the race for favorable playoff position as Jeff Malone scored 22 of his 25 points in the first half.

Malone hit nine of 10 shots from the field as the Bullets took a 61-53 lead at halftime. Then Charles Jones scored nine of his career-high 13 points as Washington outscored the Nets 32-20 in the third period for a comfortable 93-73 margin.

Jazz 114, Spurs 109

Utah got 27 points from Adrian Dantley and 22 from Darrell Griffith to defeat San Antonio and tie the Spurs for fourth place in the Midwest Division.

The Jazz led 104-95 with six minutes remaining, but a 14-4 streak put the Spurs ahead 109-108 with 1:37 remaining. The run was capped by a go-ahead jumper from Mike Mitchell, who led San Antonio with 38 points.

Utah then scored the game's final six points, including a fast-break basket by Thurl Bailey that gave the Jazz the lead for good.

Rockets 121, Warriors 116

Robert Reid scored 10 of his 20 points in the fourth quarter, including eight straight after Golden State rallied to tie Houston.

The Rockets led 57-40 in the second quarter, but the Warriors came back for a 95-95 deadlock with 10:49 left in the game. Reid then scored the next eight points to put Houston back in front to stay.

Ralph Sampson led all scorers with 26 points for Houston, while Eric Floyd paced Golden State with 19.

Blazers 125, Sonics 99

Mychal Thompson had 22 points and 15 rebounds and three of his teammates scored 20 or more points, and Portland handed Seattle its fifth consecutive loss.

The Trail Blazers, who have won seven of their last eight games to improve their record to 37-37, also got 24 points from Kiki Vandeweghe, 23 from Clyde Drexler and 21 from Jerome Kersey.

Vandeweghe and Drexler scored 11 points each in the first quarter as Portland pulled ahead 40-27. The SuperSonics got no closer than seven points the rest of the way.

Lakers 120, Mavericks 115

Los Angeles also had four players with 20 or more points against Dallas, led by Earvin "Magic" Johnson with 23 points and 13 assists.

Kareem Abdul-Jabbar and Bob McAdoo scored 22 points each and Byron Scott 20 for the Lakers, who led 77-68 with 3:49 left in the third period, only to see the Mavericks, who got 28 points from Mark Aguirre, rally for a 102-100 edge with 7:20 to go in the game.

But Abdul-Jabbar's three-point play moments later gave Los Angeles the lead for good.

ODU, Georgia Gain The Finals

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — "B.J." bested "E.J." and Teresa Edwards, salvaged the night for All-Americans to set up a NCAA women's championship basketball game between Old Dominion and Georgia.

Bridget Jenkins — "B.J." — tossed in 16 first half points, and her teammates shut down No. 2 Northeast Louisiana with a miserable 28.3 field goal percentage as Old Dominion defeated the Lady Indians 57-47 in Friday night's semifinals.

Northeast Louisiana's All-American guard Eun Jung Lee — "E.J." — was slowed by a deep thigh bruise and scored only eight points. She also had three turnovers, and only two assists.

Georgia, with Teresa Edwards, another Kodak All-American and gold medal Olympian, pitching in 29 points, broke a 34-34 halftime tie and beat Western Kentucky 91-78 in the other semifinal game.

The championship contest matching No. 5 Old Dominion and No. 8 Georgia will be nationally televised on Sunday at 12:10 p.m., CST.

Jenkins' team high of 18 points made up for a modest showing by teammate Medina Dixon, who scored only 10.

"Bridget Jenkins did a dynamite job of hitting the outside shot like I knew she could," said Old Dominion Coach Marianne Stanley. "They (Northeast) have their E.J., but we have our B.J."

Northeast Louisiana Coach Linda Harper said Lee, a junior from Seoul, Korea, was hurt last Sunday in a regional victory but did not tell anyone about her injury until Thursday night, because "she thought it would heal. She had difficulty moving today. It definitely slowed her."

Lisa Ingram was high for Northeast Louisiana with 18 points, and she grabbed 13 rebounds.

Another Kodak All-American, Janet Harris of Georgia, only had 12 points as Edwards and Katrina McClain, who scored 25, had 13 rebounds and seven blocked shots, led Georgia.

The victory avenged a 72-67 overtime loss to Western Kentucky in December, which McClain missed because of a sprained ankle.

Asked if McClain made the difference, Georgia Coach Andy Landers said, "She did. We pushed it down the floor to the baseline, then we could lob it in and she (McClain) laid it up. They have a lot of respect for Janet Harris, and they really hadn't seen Katrina. That may have thrown them off."

Lillie Mason scored 27 for Western Kentucky, which was only ranked No. 14 but had upset top-ranked Texas 92-90 in regionals at Bowling Green, Ky.

Edwards, who hit 10 of 18 field goal attempts and nine of 10 free throws, was asked how the semifinal victory compared with the United States' goal-medal effort in Olympic basketball.

UCLA Wins NIT Over Indiana

NEW YORK (AP) — The UCLA basketball team made two visits to New York this season, and the second one was better than the first — by a long shot.

With Reggie Miller's long-range shooting a big factor, the Bruins defeated the Indiana Hoosiers 65-62 in the championship game of the National Invitation Tournament Friday night and vindicated themselves in their own minds for an "embarrassing" loss to St. John's earlier in the season.

"On Dec. 22, we told you we were coming back, and we did," said

UCLA Coach Walt Hazzard, referring to an 88-69 humiliation at Madison Square Garden by the Redmen.

Friday night was different for UCLA, however, as Miller scored 18 points, including eight big ones in a 19-5 run at the start of the second half that gave the Bruins a 50-40 lead over the Hoosiers with 9 minutes remaining.

That, according to Indiana Coach Bob Knight, was the turning point.

"In the second half, it got too far away from us," Knight said. "We didn't have position. We missed shots and chances. It hurt."

Miller, a sophomore forward who had been criticized by one magazine writer who said he couldn't beat his sister, Southern Cal star Cheryl Miller, one-on-one, was up for this one.

"I felt it was my turn to give the team some life," said Miller, who won the tourney's Most Valuable Player award. "My man played off me, so I just shot it. I practice that shot all the time."

The zone-busting shots came one after another, bringing many in the crowd of 12,454 to their feet.

"Someone asked me about Reggie's range," said Hazzard, "and I said, 'Anywhere on the court.' A magazine article said Reggie couldn't beat his sister Cheryl one on one. I wish the writer would put some salt and pepper on it and eat the article. He'd kill her one on one."

Miller wasn't the whole story for UCLA, of course. The Bruins' attack was a balanced one, with Nigel Miguel tying Miller for game-high honors with 18 points and Montel Hatcher contributing 15.

Miguel also played a big role defensively, doing a strong job on Indiana guard Steve Alford, who starred on the U.S. Olympic team last summer. Alford wound up with 16 points, but scored only seven of them in the second half when the Bruins took command.

"Alford's tough, because of all the picks they set for him," Miguel said. "It wasn't an easy assignment."

The game was a heady defensive struggle in the first half, which ended in a 29-29 tie. The teams were no more than six points apart in the first 20 minutes.

When the Bruins erased a 35-31 deficit early in the second and surged into their 10-point lead, it seemed it would take a great effort by Indiana to catch up.

The Hoosiers got the effort, all right, but fell a few points short.

It was still UCLA by nine points, 61-52, with just a little over a minute left when Indiana made a terrific run at the Bruins, cutting their lead to 62-60 with 22 seconds remaining.

But after a series of turnovers, the Bruins retrieved the ball, and it was the omnipresent Miller who took a long pass at midcourt, and went in uncontested for UCLA's clinching points with 15 seconds remaining.

"We took a lot of verbal abuse and I took a lot of verbal abuse," Miller said. "This was really sweet."

For Hazzard, it might have been the sweetest of all. His Bruins had been maligned a good part of the season in his rookie year as coach, but finished on the highest of notes by winning 12 of their last 13 games, and posting a 21-12 record. The NIT win was the first for UCLA in its first time in the tourney.

"Now you know the Bruins can play basketball," said Hazzard, who once starred under John Wooden when UCLA was winning NCAA championships back in the 1960s.

"We came back to the Apple and conquered the Apple," he said. "Everybody was burying us at the beginning of the year. We just worked hard. Anytime you win a championship, you run through a test. And this was our test."

In the third place game earlier at Madison Square Garden, Tennessee was a 100-84 winner over Louisville as Anthony Richardson scored 30 points. The loss stopped a streak of 13 consecutive 20-win seasons for Louisville's Denny Crum, whose team finished the year at 19-18.

Dominique Wilkins, a star for the Atlanta Hawks of the NBA, was born in Paris, France, in 1960.

Conley Outlasts Jaguars; Tigers Slip Past Jackets

HOLLYWOOD — D.H. Conley outlasted Farmville Central, 15-10, in a non-conference high school baseball game Friday.

The victory kept the Vikings unbeaten in eight straight games this spring.

Farmville struck first, however, scoring twice in the first inning. With two away, Billy Godley singled and moved all the way to third when a pickoff attempt was overthrown at first. He scored on Greg May's double. May then scored on a hit by Brian Huber.

Conley came back to take the lead with four runs in the bottom of the second. With one away, Bronswell Patrick walked as did Martin Anderson and Jody Vines, loading the bases. Steve Mills followed with a single, scoring two runs. Todd Cochran laid down a squeeze bunt to score Vines with the go-ahead run, reaching when the ball was thrown, too late, to the plate. Mills raced all the way to third on the play, scoring on Fred Bryant's sacrifice fly.

Farmville came back with one in the top of the third, but Conley added two in the bottom of the frame for a 6-3 lead. Three more crossed in the fourth to up the lead to 9-3. Farmville struck back with three in the top of the fifth, however, to trim it to 9-6.

But then, in the bottom of the fifth, Conley broke it open with six more runs, powering out to a 15-6 lead. Mills singled and stole second, scoring on Cochran's single.

Cochran moved up on the relay home. Lee Hardee walked and Shane Adams reached on an error, loading the bases. Paul Hill walked, scoring Cochran and Patrick singled, driving in Hardee. Walks to Anderson and Jody Vines brought in Adams and Hill. Mills then reached on a fielder's choice, allowing Patrick to score with the final run.

Farmville rallied for four runs in the seventh, but could come no closer.

Mills led the Conley hitting with four while Cochran and Patrick each had two. Farmville Central was led by May with two.

Following a Saturday contest at North Pitt, the Vikings travel to SouthWest Edgecombe on Tuesday. Farmville Central travels to North Pitt on Tuesday.

ROANOKE RAPIDS — Tommy Wynne tossed a four-hit shutout at Roanoke Rapids Friday as Williamston High School won its seventh straight baseball game of the year, 3-0, yesterday.

Wynne struck out three and walked three in going the distance for the Tigers, who are now 5-0 against Northeastern Conference foes.

The game was scoreless until the fourth inning when the Tigers finally struck for a run. With two away, Mike Leggett singled and moved all the way to third when the ball got past the right fielder. Robert James then singled him in.

A second runner crossed in the fifth. Glen Hardison struck out but reached on a passed ball. He stole second and two more passed balls allowed him to come the rest of the way.

Robert James also reached on a third strike passed ball in the seventh. He took second on a passed ball, was sacrificed to third and scored on still another passed ball.

No one had more than one hit for Williamston while Ritchie Moore had two for the Yellow Jackets.

Valkyries, Tigers Post Victories

HOLLYWOOD — D.H. Conley pushed over a run in the bottom of the sixth inning to gain a 6-5 softball victory over Farmville Central Friday.

The Valkyries pushed into the lead in the first inning scoring twice, but Farmville Central matched that in the top of the fourth. Conley went back out with three in the bottom of the inning, 5-2, only to see Farmville rally to tie it with three in the top of the fifth.

In the sixth, Lisa Mills singled and Cindy Eagle was safe on a fielder's choice. Karla McLawhorn then singled to score Mills with what proved to be the game winning run.

McLawhorn and Eagle led the Conley hitting with two each, while Karen Carter and Niki Vandiford each had two for Farmville.

Conley is now 6-2 and returns to action on Tuesday at SouthWest Edgecombe. Farmville Central plays host to North Pitt on Tuesday.

Tampa Bay Downs Memphis

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — Quarterback John Reaves completed 24 of 35 passes for 307 yards and running back Gary Anderson provided three touchdowns as Tampa Bay dumped the Memphis Showboats 28-20.

"You have to give all the credit to John Reaves," said Memphis linebacker Steve Hammond. "He did an amazing job of coming up with the big play. He was awesome there in the second half."

The victory Friday night was the fourth in six games for the Bandits, while the Showboats dropped to 3-3 for the United States Football League season.

The Showboats drew first blood on quarterback Walter Lewis's 13-yard pass to wide receiver Derrick Crawford.

Crawford caught two touchdown passes while wide receiver Henry Williams caught a third.

Lewis finished the night with nine completions on 15 throws for 156 yards and three touchdown tosses.

Ahead 14-13 at the half, the Bandits saw the Showboats go ahead 20-14 early in the third period.

Then the Bandits came up with their third touchdown on Reaves' yard throw to Larry Brodsky midway in the third quarter.

The Bandits' clincher came on a 13-play, 90-yard drive that ended with Anderson's 3-yard run around left end.

"Offensively, the last drive we had to go on the field and keep the ball," Spurrier said. "It was a thing of beauty."

The Bandits compiled 382 yards on offense, while Memphis was held to 281.

Lewis led the Showboats' runners with 78 yards, most of it on scrambles after his receivers were covered by Bandit defenders.

Baseball Delays Playoff Expansion

SCOTTSDALE, Ariz. (AP) — Major-league baseball owners and players have again deferred action on a proposal to expand the American and National League playoffs to a best-of-seven series, but they say they'll settle the issue by next week.

"I think we'll definitely know, yes or no, by Tuesday," Don Fehr, acting executive director of the players' union, said Friday following 3½ hours of negotiations.

The expansion of the playoffs to seven games — two more than the best-of-five format followed since 1969 — was the chief topic during bargaining between the union and club owners on a new basic agreement. The old agreement, governing such items as free agency and the players' share of television revenues, expired at the end of last year.

"We're advised that NBC (which will televise the 1985 playoffs) wants a prompt resolution on this," Fehr said. "Otherwise, we probably wouldn't be talking about it now."

The expanded playoffs are seen by players and owners as a way of increasing revenues for the players' pension fund and for the owners, who say they are financially troubled.

The major obstacle to the playoff expansion is the method of splitting up $9 million in television revenues the extra games could generate. The players have demanded one-third of the total.

Lee MacPhail, president of the owners' Player Relations Committee, said Friday's meeting produced some progress that should lead to a resolution of the issue by Tuesday, when the two sides will meet again in Palm Springs, Calif.

"I think both sides are trying to put the problem of one-third aside and achieve a neutral format so we can tell the network now that we'll have a seven-game series, and we'll work out the money issue later," MacPhail said.

"The basic idea is this: The game is not played until after the season, and the money is not received until after the games are played," he said. "Both of us are confident we will have an overall settlement by the end of the season."

Fehr, however, said the players would not agree to putting off a decision on the playoff money unless they were certain they would not be harming their overall bargaining position.

The contract talks Friday also included preliminary discussions about the potential expansion of the major leagues by as many as six teams.

Midget Champs

The Tigers won the championship of the Greenville Recreation and Parks Department's Midget Youth League this year. Members of the team are, first row, left to

Moye Leads E.B. Aycock

NASHVILLE — Tom Moye fired a one-hitter and struck out seven as E.B. Aycock thrashed Nash Central 13-1 Friday in junior high baseball action.

Billy Carr went 3-4 at the plate with a homer and a double to drive in four runs for Aycock. Axel Smith went 2-3 with a homer and four RBI.

Aycock, now 1-0, travels J.T. Barber Junior High in New Bern Monday.

Report Sets Bribes At $18,000

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Five Tulane basketball players received a total of about $18,000 for shaving points in two games last month, and also were paid by a bookmaker who was arrested along with six students, a New Orleans newspaper reported Saturday.

The Times-Picayune, The States-Item, quoting sources identified only as close to the investigation, said prosecutors in the sports bribery case were told about the payoffs Friday.

The newspaper also said that, according to its sources, prosecutors are checking into a trip made to Las Vegas, Nev., by at least one of the arrested students to determine whether large bets were made at the time of the games in question.

Sources said convicted bookmaker Roland Ruiz paid the five players an undisclosed amount of money to hold down the number of points played in one of the two games.

So far, seven people have been arrested in the alleged point-shaving and gambling scam. Three are on the Tulane basketball team, three are Tulane students but not members of the team, and the other is Ruiz.

District Attorney Harry Connick's office said more arrests are possible, but gave no other details.

The arrest of Ruiz Friday took the investigation off campus for the first time.

David "Budda" Rothenberg, 22, a student from Wilton, Conn., also was arrested Friday and booked on one count of conspiracy to commit sports bribery. He did not respond to questions as he walked to the police station.

Ruiz, 48, whose record included a federal conviction in connection with counterfeiting and a series of state convictions for gambling, was booked on five counts of sports bribery and one count of conspiracy.

Connick said it appeared that one of the players brought Ruiz into a deal linked to an 11-point loss to Memphis State, but he did not elaborate.

"No comment," was all Ruiz said as he walked to police station.

At a news conference outside his office, Connick said he was cooperating with the FBI investigation.

Asked about a spinoff investigation which he said involves possible recruiting violations, Connick said it apparently involved only one student. He said that investigation "has always been secondary."

Tulane athletic director Hindman Wall, interviewed on the campus, was also asked about the possibility of an investigation by the National Collegiate Athletic Association into recruiting.

"I am not aware of an NCAA investigation," he said.

In addition, he said, the school's own investigation did not turn up any evidence of recruiting violations.

Connick has said that testimony of two members of the team before an Orleans Parish grand jury on Thursday had expanded the investigation. He said the two were given immunity in exchange for their testimony.

So far the scandal involves only two games, Connick said. Both were Metro Conference matches in the Tulane arena — the Feb. 20 loss to Memphis State 60-49, and the Feb. 2 victory over Southern Mississippi 64-63.

Involved are accusations that team members shaved points — helped the team win by a lower margin or lose by a greater margin than the established betting line on the game. Gambling on college sports is illegal in Louisiana.

Tulane was a 10½-point favorite over Southern Mississippi and won by one. Memphis State opened a five-point favorite and went to 6½ points in a game it won by 11.

The Times-Picayune, The States-Item said, according to its sources, prosecutors were told that five players received about $1,000 each for shaving points in the game with Southern Mississippi and about $2,500 each for holding down the score in the game with Memphis State.

Ruiz was involved only in the Memphis State game, the newspaper's sources said.

About Ruiz Connick said: "He's tied in with the gambling part of this point shaving. This is a professional bookmaker."

The New York Times reported in today's editions that Ruiz is still on probation for a misdemeanor charge of failure to file an excise-tax return. He owed taxes on wages he accepted but did not report to the Internal Revenue Service.

Three members of the team were arrested earlier this week. They were senior star John Williams, 23, of Sorrento, a 6-foot-10 all-conference center with professional aspirations; sophomore swingman David Dominique of New Iberia, and senior guard Bobby Thompson of New Orleans.

All three were booked for gambling law violation and were freed without bond.

The New Orleans newspaper reported that its sources said Thompson told Connick's investigators that he made an agreement with a middleman to shave points and get the other four players to do the same in the Memphis State game.

When the investigation started, Connick said the payoffs to players involved drugs more than money, but the newspaper's sources indicated the payoffs did not involve drugs.

The sources told the newspaper that except for the three players arrested and the two that testified, none of the other eight players on the team were involved in any way with the gambling scheme.

Orioles Pound Cards 11-0, Lacy Returns To Baltimore

By The Associated Press

The Baltimore Orioles must have mixed feelings about their latest spring training news.

On the positive side was an 11-0 exhibition blitzing of the St. Louis Cardinals in which left-handed starter Scott McGregor surrendered only three hits in seven innings. First baseman Eddie Murray drove in three runs with a pair of doubles, Cal Ripken Jr. knocked in two runs with three hits and Lenn Sakata hit a three-run homer Friday night.

Offsetting the happiness about the rout, though, was news that outfielder Lee Lacy — signed in the offseason as a free agent — was sent back to Baltimore to be examined by a hand specialist. Lacy sprained ligaments in his right thumb diving for a ball in a game against the Montreal Expos on March 12.

In the game with St. Louis, the Orioles battered Cardinals starter Danny Cox for seven runs and 10 hits in four innings. Pat Perry gave up Sakata's homer in the eighth.

In another one-sided game, the world champion Detroit Tigers slammed John Candelaria for 12 hits and 11 runs in five innings in an 18-3 romp over the Pittsburgh Pirates. Candelaria was reached for four runs in the second inning on a bases-loaded double by Pedro Chavez and a single by Leon Roberts. The Tigers picked up three runs in the fourth and, in the fifth, the Tigers scored four runs on five hits off Candelaria, highlighted by Leon Roberts' two-run homer.

Detroit picked up one run in the seventh and six runs in the ninth, off pitcher Lee Tunnell. Marty Castillo hit a grand-slam homer in the ninth.

Pirates Manager Chuck Tanner assigned the veteran Candelaria to the bullpen following the game. The two held a discussion in the dugout, after which Candelaria, heading for the clubhouse, kicked his glove over the right-field fence.

Tony Armas, whose 43 homers led the major league's in 1984, hit his first preseason home run and added a pair of singles in Boston's 6-1 win over Toronto. Rich Gedman had three singles for the Red Sox and Dennis "Oil Can" Boyd, tuning up for the season-opener, stopped the Blue Jays on five hits and one run in six innings.

Rookie Eric Davis of Cincinnati paced another rout as he returned from a pulled thigh muscle and drove in four runs with a home run and an infield single to power the Reds to an 8-1 victory over Los Angeles.

Seattle had an easy time with the Chicago Cubs, stringing together five hits in the sixth to score five runs off rookie reliever Jon Perlman en route to a 7-2 win. Mike Moore allowed only two runs on four hits in seven innings for the Mariners.

Atlanta belted the New York Mets 8-2 as Ken Oberkfell ignited a pair of four-run rallies with doubles and went 4-for-4 — three doubles and a single.

Greg Gagne had four hits, including two doubles, Kirby Puckett knocked in three runs and Kent Hrbek homered as Minnesota beat Philadelphia 7-6 after nearly blowing a 7-1 lead.

Texas nipped Kansas City 4-3 with a four-run third inning paced by Pete O'Brien's two-run double. Scott Fletcher drove in two runs with a bases-loaded single and Floyd Banister allowed one run in seven innings to lead the Chicago White Sox to a 5-1 victory over Houston.

San Diego edged San Francisco 7-6 as Alan Wiggins singled with the bases loaded and in the bottom of the 10th inning. The Padres tied the game in the bottom of the ninth on a two-run single by Kurt Bevacqua.

Jerry Willard and Brook Jacoby slammed consecutive home runs in the 10th inning to give Cleveland a 6-4 win over California. Jerry Narron drew California into a 4-4 tie with a one-out homer in the ninth.

The New York Yankees scored two runs in the ninth inning, one on a homer by Billy Sample, to down Montreal 3-2.

Remodeling Industry Sees Bright Prospects In 1985

By ROBERT WADE

Associated Press Writer

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — Home remodelers smile broadly as they swap convention tales of how high interest rates on home mortgages have driven many people to improve their houses rather than buy new ones.

The remodeling industry outpaced new home construction last year by $2 billion, said Neil Kelly, chairman of the 3,500-member National Association of the Remodeling Industry.

"It's growing faster than the construction business," said Hank Fenderbosch, president of the Arlington, Va.-based association, which opened its annual convention here Thursday.

Professional remodelers generated a record $43 billion in revenues during 1984 and expect to add an additional 20 percent to that in 1985, Kelly said.

Trade association spokesman Lynn T. McMillan said remodeling costs less and distracts families less than a complete move to another home.

If a homeowner owned his house for 15 years, he has got a whole lot of equity in it. He can take that equity and roll it over into a home improvement loan, which is a whole lot less money than building a new house," she said.

Ronald Brunner, president of the association's regional chapter in Denver, attributed the bright remodeling market to an improved economy.

"In Denver, unemployment is low, people are working and spending money," he said. "Right now we've had the busiest spring in the last five years."

Fenderbosch, a sales representative with Whirlpool Inc. in Benton Harbor, Mich., said about 33 million of the 45 million single family homes in the United States are more than two decades old and need some modifications or repair to meet modern lifestyles.

He said people prefer large, energy-efficient homes that make living convenient.

In 1984, professional remodelers reported about $43.1 billion in revenues, up from the $37.5 billion for the year before, said Ms. McMillan.

Projections for 1985 would boost those figures to about $52.1 billion, and industry officials note that those revenues do not include do-it-yourself work by homeowners, who account for an additional $12 million.

Bruce Sauer, vice president of sales and marketing for Qualified Remodeler magazine of Chicago, said the industry expects revenues to hit $73.2 billion by 1988.

Americans are concentrating improvements in energy-related and convenience areas of the home, Sauer said.

Nuzzling Whales

TACOMA, Wash. (AP) — Here's some advice from the West Coast Whale Research Foundation on what to do when a 40-foot gray whale with an itch nuzzles your boat: Let it.

Ship-rubbing once was thought to be confined to a few gray whales off the coast of Mexico but seems to be becoming more popular among the giant ocean mammals, Jim Darling of the foundation said this week at a forum sponsored by the Tacoma Zoo Society.

"We don't know what this new behavior means," he said, "but not too many wild animals have benefited from such close contact with man."

Weakened Dollar Spurs Futures Prices

By MARIO FOX
Associated Press Writer
Corn and wheat futures prices, boosted by a weakened U.S. dollar and new Soviet corn purchases, were mostly higher Friday on the Chicago Board of Trade.

Volume was light. Corn prices were supported by the Agriculture Department's announcement after trading Thursday that the Soviet Union had purchased 200,000 metric tons of U.S. corn. Corn for delivery in May rose Friday to $2.82, the contract's high since early December.

Dairy Farmers Caught In Middle Of Agriculture Department Rules

By DON KENDALL
AP Farm Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — Beginning April 1, dairy farmers will feel one hand of government relax a bit while another begins a new squeeze on their pocketbooks.

The Agriculture Department's 15-month milk diversion program ends just as another 50-cent reduction in the basic support price begins.

Financed by assessments on milk sold by all dairy producers, the diversion program provided payments to those who signed contracts to reduce milk marketings during the program's operation, Jan. 1, 1984, through March 31, 1985.

Although the merits of the program are still being analyzed by USDA experts, the paid diversion — farmers who cut back qualified for payments of $10 per hundredweight of milk they didn't market — is generally seen as a major reason for U.S. milk production declining in 1984 for the first time in six years.

The diversion program and other measures were designed in 1983 after milk production increased so much that the government had to buy record amounts of butter, cheese and non-fat dry milk to prop up market prices. Those purchases peaked at more than $2.5 billion before last year's cutback.

Even so, milk price support costs are expected to be around $1.6 billion in the fiscal year that began last Oct. 1.

Among the other actions was a reduction in the milk support level, which peaked at $13.10 per hundredweight in 1983. It was lowered to $12.60 on Dec. 1, 1983. As of April 1, it will drop another 50 cents to $12.10 per hundredweight. Because the supply is still too much for demand, the support will be reduced again on July 1 to $11.60 per hundredweight.

The reductions in supports are supposed to help discourage dairy farmers from producing so much milk, thus reducing the surpluses.

But according to the latest USDA estimates, even with lower price supports milk output in 1985 could increase 1 percent to 3 percent from last year's 135.4 billion pounds — which was down 3 percent from a record 139.9 billion pounds in 1983.

If department officials are correct in their forecast, milk production this year could return to the record level of 1983. Much will depend on what dairy producers do after April 1 — and, to some extent, what Congress does.

The Reagan administration wants to phase out the current system of milk supports by shifting to a target price concept that is used for major crops such as wheat and corn.

As called for in the administration's farm bill — the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1985 — the present dairy program would continue in fiscal year's 1986 and 1987. But if the milk supply was still too big, the bill would allow USDA to lower supports twice again to $10.60 per hundredweight.

Beginning on Oct. 1, 1987, the program would be converted to a direct payment program, with producers getting payments based on a "declining average of the market prices for the preceding three years."

No consensus has emerged on a new dairy plan, let alone on an overall farm bill. But the administration's milk formula has had little support so far.

But as dairy representatives testified recently before congressional committees on new long-term farm legislation, it appeared that milk producers are resigned to seeing further cuts in their price-support levels. And there has been a marked lack of congressional activity toward extending the current diversion program.

"It is clear the current program will not be extended," conceded longtime dairy booster Rep. Jim Jeffords, R-Vt., at a House hearing.

At that same session, a panel of farm economists specializing in the dairy industry agreed that price supports at a level of $11.60 per hundred pounds — the figure they are expected to reach in July — may be necessary for the next several years in order to help bring down overproduction.

"The market-oriented support price should be a safety net," said Robert E. Jacobson of Ohio State University. Such a price should be set at levels averaging 5 to 10 percent below the actual market price for milk, he added.

High support prices in the past few years have attracted excessive investment in dairy herds and production facilities, the group said, and many of those attracted into dairying are now in trouble.

"Easing the pain of transition out of the dairy business and farming in general should thus, in my view, be a major focus of current farm policy," said Harold M. Harris Jr. of Clemson University.

The National Milk Producers Federation, which is made up largely of dairy farmer cooperatives, testified on behalf of its own plan, acknowledging that "further steps must be taken" to curb surplus production.

Norman Barker, a Pratt, Kan., dairy farmer, who is president of the federation, said his group wants "to bring about this necessary reduction in the surplus without destroying the milk industry in the process," which he said the administration's plan would likely do.

The federation plan would use price supports at levels designed to cover farmers' costs without encouraging them to produce more than consumers would buy. A "supply-demand adjuster" would be used which, if applied under current conditions, would result in about $1 less per hundredweight of milk — reducing supports to $11.60 or the level scheduled to take effect on July 1, assuming the surplus situation is unchanged.

The federation also wants to provide for standby authority for some mandatory system of production controls similar to the recent diversion program, to be used if the price support formula does not respond rapidly enough to rising production.

But the Washington-based National Independent Dairy-Foods Association, which represents "independent processors" who buy milk from handlers and farmers, says the Reagan administration is on the right track with its plan to phase out the current dairy program.

An association official, Mike Korens, said last week that the organization is giving "qualified support" to the administration's dairy plan.

"We would like to see some amendments to the Agricultural Marketing Act to reduce the market power of agricultural cooperatives," Korens said in a telephone interview. "We're concerned that if the administration does get what it hopes for in a free market, then our independents might be thrown into a situation in which the cooperatives — with the advantages they have — might suffer. It would be a case of throwing them to the lions."

Korens said the association represents about 1,200 independent processors, a sharp decline from around 7,000 back in the 1970s.

Fairmount Hotel To Have New Home

By SHEILA ALLEE
Associated Press Writer
SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Billed "The Greatest Move On Wheels," the 79-year-old Fairmount Hotel, all 3.2 million pounds of it, will start rolling down the street Saturday to a new home four blocks away.

On its four-day journey at a stately speed of 4 mph, the three-story hotel will have to negotiate two turns and pass over a bridge spanning the San Antonio River, while perched atop an assembly of steel beams and hydraulic dollies.

The hotel, built in 1906 but vacant for some time, had to move to make room for a new downtown mall.

Once the hotel reaches its new site, it will undergo $4 million in renovations and reopen as a luxury hotel in 1986, developers announced.

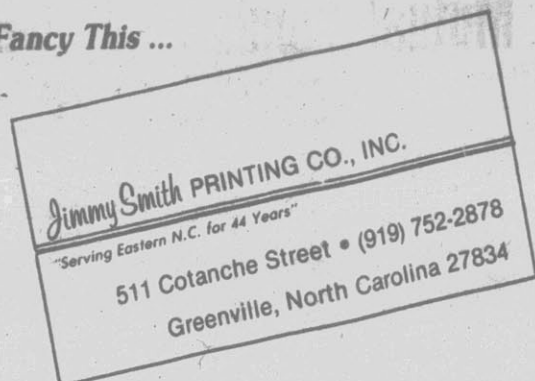

"We hope this will change the outlook across the country," said Pat Osborne, historic preservation officer for the city of San Antonio. "When extremely important buildings are about to be razed — when all else has failed — the community should go that extra mile, as San Antonio has, to find a viable alternative."

The bridge was reinforced and braces were installed inside the hotel.

Light poles and parking meters along the moving route had to be removed, and several downtown streets will have to be closed during the move.

VOTE YOURSELF

Open a Peoples Bank IRA before April 15.

The wisdom of opening a Peoples Bank Individual Retirement Account is undebatable. IRA deposits (up to $2,000 a year for an individual, $4,000 a year for working couples) can be deducted right from your taxable income.

Deposits before April 15 can be deducted on your 1984 tax return. Earnings are tax-deferred, too. An IRA can save you hundreds of dollars at tax time.

The table gives an example of how much you can save. At retirement time, when you make withdrawals, you will pay income taxes on the funds — probably at a much lower tax rate.

Assumed Tax Rate	IRA Contribution	Tax Savings If You Do Not Itemize Deductions
30%	$2,000	$ 600
40%	2,000	800
50%	2,000	1,000

You Can Open a Peoples Bank IRA with a Minimal Investment. We'll Even Lend You the Money. Visit any Peoples Bank office before April 15 to open or add to your IRA. If you don't have the cash readily available, Peoples Bank can lend it to you — a very attractive option when you consider the investment return, tax savings and retirement benefits.

At Wits End

By Erna Bombick

Something is happening on television that is so Waltonish... so Little House on the Prairie-ish... that I can't believe it myself.

It's the "Nothing Happened" sitcom.

It's the ones where eyes meet, but nothing happens. Hands touch, but nothing happens. Lips come close, but nothing happens. It's downright provocative.

Believe it or not, sparring and flirting among couples are coming back to prime time. Frankly, I had almost forgotten what the ritual dance of courtship looked like. It seems forever that instant sex (add a bed and stir) was all we ever saw. Occasionally, we'd see a scene where a couple of strangers would wake up in a bed and he'd say, "How do you spell your name again? Is it Polish?" but that's as personal as it got. They never had a dating period or a time when they discovered how they felt about broccoli, the Dolphins, or sticky children.

"Cheers" was the first sitcom to introduce a hero and a heroine who did not wake up after the first date under the sheets. Then the producers chickened out and Sam and Diane had a "relationship." It almost cost them the series. So now they are back to sparring and flirting.

Others have been more adventurous. The only time Scarecrow touches the hand of Mrs. King is when she is dangling from a helicopter in his grip.

The closest Judge Harold Stone ever got to having his public defender, Billie, in his arms was one night when a robber tied both of them up while he ransacked her apartment.

The Laura and Remington Steele relationship brings back the electricity of Scarlett fighting off Rhett with everyone knowing that someday he'll win, and it'll be Fourth of July. And the propriety between Tony and Angela on "Who's the Boss?" is reminiscent of Doris Day sleeping in Rock Hudson's pajama tops in his bed with a chair propped against the door while he sleeps on the sofa.

I have to believe it's a trend and that it will only be a matter of time before a couple comes to the captain of the Love Boat at the end of the cruise and says, "Guess what? Nothing happened." Or miracle of miracles, J.R. will come home from the office and when Sue Ellen asks, "How was your day?" he'll answer, Ushers were Wesley L. Burkett of Kinston, brother of the bridegroom, Gene P. Baker, brother of the bride, and Kevin Baker, nephew of the bride, both of Greenville.

Dear Abby — By Abigail Van Buren

Feuding Over 'Heirloom Ring'

DEAR ABBY: Two years ago my niece (by marriage) sold me a ring with a tiny diamond in it for $400. She said she "needed" the money, and although I had no use for the ring, I bought it just to help her out. Last summer, my 17-year-old granddaughter who lives out of state came to visit me. I had not seen her in four years, and was so delighted with the way she had matured, I gave her the ring. When my nephew and his wife found out about it, they hit the ceiling. You would think I had committed some kind of crime. They said it was a family heirloom—I had no right to give it away, and they demanded that I get the ring back "in case" they wanted to buy it back from me someday.

When I bought the ring, I wasn't told it was an heirloom, and I have no intention of asking my granddaughter to return it. Am I right or not?

Please settle this.

FAMILY FEUD

DEAR FEUD: When you bought the ring, it became yours to sell, give away or wear in your nose if you so chose. And since nothing was mentioned about its being a "family heirloom," you cannot be faulted for your actions.

Tell your nephew and his wife if they want to "buy" it back someday, they can make your granddaughter an offer. It's her ring now.

DEAR ABBY: Recently I found a letter my 10-year-old daughter had written to a boy at school. Giving in to sudden impulse, I read the letter, and was shocked to find that it was a love letter! When I told her that I had read it and thought we should have a talk, she was angry at me for "sticking my nose in her business." I apologized for violating her privacy, and explained that I felt that she was my business. I also told her that she was much too young for a sexual relationship, but apparently she is already sexually active.

I am worried sick! My daughter—my "baby"—may be only 10, but she could easily pass for 14.

How can I prevent her from becoming promiscuous? Her letter to that boy was unbelievable, Abby. I was an unwed mother at 16, and I don't want history to repeat itself with my daughter.

Please tell me what to do.
CONCERNED IN SACRAMENTO

DEAR CONCERNED: Now is the time to build a solid bridge instead of a fence between you and your daughter. She's angry now—and has a right to be—but she needs to know that you are prepared to answer every question (including birth control) that she asks. Share with her your own experiences—the mistakes that came from innocence, ignorance and human weakness. Don't judge her; love her enough to be there for her—no matter what.

DEAR ABBY: My doctor is always late. I have tried taking his first appointment of the day, but invariably he is at least 45 minutes late getting started.

I've tried making later appointments, but it's even worse; in addition to starting late, he falls behind. I'm a working person, and time off costs me money. Where does he get off wasting my time and costing me money?

He's a very good doctor and I like him, but I am fed up. Don't tell me he's out saving lives; he's a dermatologist! What should I do?
MAD IN MINNEAPOLIS

DEAR MAD: Knowing that the doctor is chronically late, telephone his office and ask his nurse how far behind he is before you leave for his office. If his nurse isn't cooperative, scratch this dermatologist. It appears that you're itching to change doctors, and I don't blame you.

Malaysian Government Tells Moslem Women Employees To Unveil For Rapport

By HARIS. MANIAM
Associated Press Writer
KUALA LUMPUR, Malaysia (AP) — The government has told its Moslem women employees they no longer can come to work wearing the purdah — the traditional face veil.

Khalil Yaakob, an official in the prime minister's department, said the reason is to foster closer rapport between the public and government employees.

"It would be difficult for anyone to identify another person if he or she covered the face," Khalil told reporters. "Anyone can cover the face and ... claim to be someone else."

Universities also have begun to ban the purdah.

About half of Malaysia's 14 million people are Malays and almost all of them are Moslems. About half the Malays are women.

But officials maintain that while the covering up of women is traditional for Moslems in the Middle East, the Islamic religion does not require it and they find it unsuitable to Malaysia, a former British colony where the other half of the population is mostly Chinese, Indian and non-Moslem.

Although no exact statistics are available, small groups of women in some areas have taken to covering themselves from head to toe in a black ensemble — with a purdah covering the face except for the eyes. Sociologists attribute this to what they say is a new growth of Islamic fundamentalism in Malaysia.

The government of Prime Minister Mahathir Mohamad, which is dominated by Moslem Malays, has shown displeasure with the trend.

A notice signed by Ahmad Sarji, deputy director general of the Public Service Department, has been circulated to the 500,000 government employees, many of whom are Malay Moslem women.

While the notice mentioned attire that covered the face, it also banned other work-time attire, such as jeans and shorts. Senior male officers were advised to wear a lounge suit — a bush jacket, shirt and tie. Male employees of lesser rank were told trousers and shirts are acceptable.

Rafidah Aziz, a Moslem who is minister of public enterprises and president of the Women's wing of Mahathir's United Malays National Organization, said disciplinary action would be taken against women who persist in wearing the purdah on the job. She did not specify what the action would be.

Mrs. Rafidah also said Moslem female students should leave their universities or other places of learning if they persist in wearing the purdah to class.

The vice-chancellor of the National University in Kuala Lumpur, Abdul Hamid Abdul Rahman, said a dress code drawn up by the university Senate prohibits covering the face and action would be taken against students who do.

The Science University has sent out circulars advising students not to wear such attire.

Tunku Abdul Rahman, a former prime minister and current president of the Moslem Welfare Organization, maintained that the wearing of the purdah was an Arabic tradition and not a practice for all Moslems.

The mufti of Kuala Lumpur, Sheikh Mohsein Salleh, agreed with that assessment and added that the purdah was not suitable for Malaysia.

"The dress is not important. It is the feeling toward God that is important," he said.

However, the government has so far made no move to ban private individuals from wearing the purdah.

Malaysia's Chinese and Indians normally wear Western dress.

Richard Adams Changes Directions In His Recent Writing

Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — While he's often compared to J.R.R. Tolkien and is probably best known for an adventure tale about rabbits, Richard Adams has turned to writing about bizarre sex, hunger for power and beautiful women.

The author — whose other books include the comparatively tame "Watership Down," "Shardik" and "The Plague Dogs" — offers no apologies for the change of literary course.

"The process of creative writing is not like building a bridge or planting a garden," Adams said during a recent visit to New York from his native England. "These are very deliberate creative things. ... But creative writing isn't like that."

"William Blake used to say the angels talked to him, and I'm not at all sure that it can be expressed in more accurate terms."

Adams' new book, "Maia" (Knopf, $19.95), is a fantasy-adventure set in the Beklan Empire, part of the same imaginary civilization as in his earlier book, "Shardik."

Named for its 15-year-old heroine, "Maia" chronicles the rise of a beautiful peasant girl from slavery to national heroine, before she learns, like Dorothy in Oz, there's no place like home.

Maia's mother, jealous because Maia is sleeping with her stepfather, sells the girl to flesh peddlers. While in their possession, Maia is seduced by Occula, a street-smart slave. He contrives to have them both sold to Bekla's high counselor — a repulsive libertine who is so fat he cannot walk more than a few steps at a time.

Meanwhile, there are plots and subplots afoot as various factions make war against each other.

"Maia," except that it includes a great deal of explicit sex, is really not so very different from H.G. Wells or Conan Doyle — or even "The Three Musketeers" or "The Prisoner of Zenda," Adams said. "It's very simple stuff. Apart from the fact that there's a lot of very explicit sex, it could almost be a Victorian romance. Cut out the sex and Tom Sawyer's Aunt Polly would've loved it."

Adams defends the sex, even the most degrading encounters, as necessary for the emotional growth of the heroine.

"Maia, with all the dice loaded against her, and having been dragged in and out of bed, finally realizes by nothing but the light of her own clear spirit that what she really wants to do is marry this guy and live happily ever after," Adams said. "And at the very end of the book, her friend Occula says, 'Why don't you come back to Bekla? You'd have the city at your feet.' And she thinks this over and says, 'No, I don't want to. I want to go on living with my husband.'"

"And this is my idea of true sexuality."

Adams, at 64, is so successful a writer that he admits he doesn't need any more money, and finds it rather "indecent" that he's made as much as he has. But until publication of "Watership Down" in 1972, he was a British civil servant and quite content in his work.

He wrote "Watership Down" for his daughters, who were then 9 and 7, as a kind of fairy tale about rabbits who lived in the English countryside where Adams grew up.

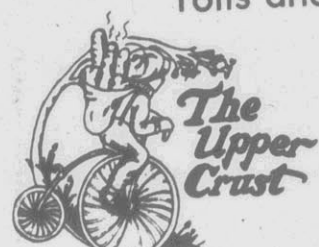

"I would have been perfectly happy with a modest hardback edition of a few thousand copies so I could give it to my daughters," Adams said. "When it took off the way it did, no one could have been more astounded than I."

While trying to get "Watership Down" published, Adams wrote "Shardik," which he considers his best work and compares to "The Rime of the Ancient Mariner" for its theme of sin and redemption. It was published in 1974.

"The Plague Dogs," published in 1977, is an anti-vivisectionist treatise disguised as fantasy in which dogs are the main characters. They escape from an animal research station where experiments of obscene cruelty are carried out.

Invites Visitors To Touch Sculpture

By STEPHANIE NANO
Associated Press Writer

PEPPER PIKE, Ohio (AP) — Sculptor William M. McVey invites spectators who stop to gaze on his stone and bronze historic figures and charming animals to "Please handle" the works.

His sculptures were never intended to be protected in museums and galleries, explains the 79-year-old McVey. Rather, they are for public display at public buildings, monuments and parks.

"If I was writing about myself, I'd say I was an architectural sculptor, not a gallery sculptor," he said. "Everyone knows who the gallery sculptors are. Nobody on (the gallery-lined) 57th Street (in New York City) knows who I am, which is fine."

Not that McVey is not nationally known or that his figures are not museum caliber. His work is included in the permanent collections of several museums, including those in Cleveland, Wichita, Kan., Houston and Syracuse, N.Y. And viewing a large representation of his work would require travel to several states to see it in churches, monuments and public buildings.

In Texas, he designed the doors and the 18-foot historic frieze around the base of the San Jacinto monument near Houston, and he did figures for monuments to James Bowie and Davy Crockett.

His 9-foot figure of U.S. Sen. Harry Flood Byrd stands in Richmond, Va. The National Cathedral in Washington holds six figures he designed for the cathedral's stone carvers.

In Cleveland, where he spent his adolescence, attended art school and has lived for the last 30 years, thousands of government employees daily stream past his 9-foot bronze of a striding George Washington as a young surveyor. A few blocks away, McVey's bronze of Olympic star Jesse Owens appears frozen in motion on the tip of a pyramid base.

Patrons of Blossom Music Center near Akron, the summer home of the Cleveland Orchestra, are greeted by a bronze B clef logo by McVey.

Many of his works were juggled between teaching duties that he assumed in the late 1920s, soon after his own student days in Paris, where he worked as a tour guide for American travelers to support himself.

From 1932 to 1967, McVey taught art at a number of institutions, including the University of Texas, Cranbrook Art Academy in suburban Detroit, and his alma mater, the Cleveland Institute of Art, where he headed the sculpture department from 1953 to 1967.

From teaching McVey said he learned that "talent is the cheapest commodity in the world ... I think the important thing is motivation."

While teaching, he accepted commissions because "I didn't want to be an art teacher. I wanted to be an artist who taught."

To achieve that goal, McVey and his late wife, Leza, an artist in ceramics and weaving, started their days at 4:30 a.m. to allow enough time for their dual roles as artists and teachers.

McVey hasn't been able to shake the habit, and today, long before daybreak, he has donned his customary fisherman's cap and wrapped his denim artist's apron around his middle and set to work in his studio of the last 30 years in east suburban Cleveland.

With his living quarters under the same roof, McVey is never more than a few steps away from his latest commissions, and projects in various stages of completion fill the studio.

"It's much better to work on three to four things," he said. "If you stay too long on one thing, you get blinded to it."

One thing that hasn't changed in his lifetime of work is the research he does on each subject.

Perhaps the best known of his works is a 9-foot bronze of Winston Churchill which was commissioned in the 1960s for the grounds of the British Embassy in Washington. McVey looked at about 300 photographs of the British statesman before executing his model, one of seven submitted to a selection committee.

Easter Egg Tradition Based On Ancient Egyptian, Roman Beliefs

By ROGERS WHITENER
ASU English Department

Superstitions always seem to abound during major seasonal observances, some of them so ancient that they are part of tradition itself.

The Easter season is no exception. For example, the practice of dyeing eggs for children is based on an ancient superstition involving the Egyptian and Roman custom of giant eggs as presents of symbols of resurrection and the continuation of life beyond the earthly span.

The dyeing aspect was added later when Christians also adopted the egg as an emblem of the resurrection of Christ, hard-boiling it, dyeing it red in memory of the blood of Christ, and giving it to their children in the belief that it would bring good health during the coming year.

Later the idea that the eggs were brought by the Easter bunny was introduced. On the surface this seems nothing more than another device for introducing play into the child's world. Actually, however, the underlying motive for the custom (recognized or not) was tied into the ancient conception of both eggs and rabbits as fertility symbols.

Eventually such eggs became a part of Easter festivities. Known as "pasch" eggs, they were associated with the Passover, but they were objects of delight for children, who made a game of rolling them down grassy hillsides, a custom still observed on the White house lawn every Easter.

As time went on, more and more secular activities became associated with the Easter egg, including egg hunts and egg-nicking or cracking, both involving a contest to see who will wind up with the greatest number of eggs.

In the first instance, of course, it is the youngster who is most adept at seeking out the logical hiding place for eggs usually hidden by an adult.

In the second it is a matter of who owns the toughest-shell eggs or who is most skilled in the cracking contest.

Generally the contestants in nicking or cracking pair off after challenges are issued, each choosing his toughest egg to begin the the fray.

Small ends (heads) are first struck; then the loser either gives up his egg to the winner or challenges with heel against head, facing almost certain defeat.

The bout goes on until one player's eggs have all been broken and are now in the possession of the winner, who presumably, will dine on them at his leisure.

At this time the winner may be challenged by another player who also has garnered the eggs of an opponent. Eventually few unborken eggs remain.

Usually these are in the possession of a lad who exposes very little of the surface of his eggs in the cracking bouts or who has sneaked in a guinea egg (especially hard-shelled) as an unlawful entry.

Which brings up another superstition, especially strong in the South: that guinea eggs must be removed from the nest by using a long-handled spoon, avoiding all human contact with the nest; otherwise the guinea will no longer use the nest but seek a more remote location.

And all those broken eggs won in cracking bouts? Probably discarded in favor of chocolate ones!

BEALE STREET . . . A jogger makes his way down Beale Street in Memphis, Tenn. where $18 million has been spent in trying to revive the entertainment district that the blues made famous. Managers acknowledge it may take several years more for the district to become an economic success. (AP Laserphoto)

Beale Street Not Meeting Hoped-For Economic Impact

By WOODY BAIRD

Associated Press Writer

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — Empty sidewalks and vacant shops still greet visitors who venture down to Beale Street to see if $18 million has revived the nightclub district the blues made famous.

Three blocks of Beale Street, where W.C. Handy wrote "Mr. Crump's Blues" in 1909 and gave birth to that original form of music, are being renovated as a nightclub and restaurant district.

The first two-block phase was finished on Oct. 8, 1983, amid glowing predictions of the imminent rebirth of Beale Street, once a bustling mecca of shops and taverns frequented by blacks from throughout the Mid-South.

But the nightclubs, taverns and restaurants that could put the glitter on the project have not yet materialized, complains Kevin Doyle, president of the Beale Street Merchant's Association.

The street, he said, doesn't offer much to attract local customers or tourists.

"If my wife and I came down here tonight, what would we do? There's nothing to do," said Doyle, who runs a pizza stand on Beale Street.

But though the district is struggling, developers say they're keeping faith it will become a success over the next three or four years.

Mike Ritz, vice president of Elkington & Keltner, a real estate management company that controls the street, said predictions of an early success may have been too optimistic.

"Maybe everybody's eyes were a little too glossed over," he said.

The first phase of the renovation cost almost $12 million in federal, state and city funds and provided space for five major restaurants, several smaller taverns and grills and more than a dozen gift shops and boutiques.

Only two major restaurants remain open, however, and a half dozen shops have closed.

"It's going to take awhile," said Dianne Glasper, owner of a Beale Street boutique called the Cotton Exchange. "Every new project has its ups and down, and we've certainly had our downs."

Private business already has invested $6.5 million in the street, and the total project when it is completed could be worth more than $50 million, Ritz said.

The completed district, with 180,000 square feet of rental space, will have room for 13 restaurants and clubs, as well as numerous small shops and business offices.

As part of urban renewal in the 1960s, the city leveled the black downtown neighborhoods that fed Beale Street. Racial tensions surrounding the assassination of civil rights leader Martin Luther King Jr., who was shot to death several blocks away, stunted downtown business for years.

Eventually, Beale Street with its old buildings in hazardous disrepair was surrounded by a high fence.

The city still owns the district, which is on the National Register of Historic Places, and a non-profit agency called the Beale Street Development Corporation was formed in 1978 to watch over the street.

The agency has a loan fund of $1 million to help businesses set up on Beale Street, but business was so bad this winter that Beale Street managers have called for a moratorium on loan payments.

Ritz said he is working with struggling Beale Street merchants to help hold down their rents, which is another oft-heard complaint.

Doyle said his business is successful because he has a phone-in delivery service, not because he's located on Beale Street. He pays $1,400 a month for his pizza stand's 366 square feet.

"We could be down on Madison Avenue (in Midtown Memphis) at one-half or one-third of the rent and be doing just as well," he said.

The second phase of the Beale Street renovation failed to open on schedule last year, but should be completed this spring, Ritz said.

That phase centers on a building with space for two restaurants, four retail shops and five offices, and Ritz said he expects to have the building filled shortly after it opens.

He said he has several new tenants lined up to fill Beale Street vacancies but declined to say who they are or when they will open for business.

"We're bullish right now," Ritz said. "Ninety days ago, we weren't so bullish."

Critics complain that Elkington & Keltner has too much control over Beale Street and has inhibited spontaneous attractions that would draw customers to the street.

Street musicians are banned from much of the district, and free shows in a Beale Street park named for W.C. Handy have been purposely limited.

Cynthia Ham, marketing director for Elkington & Keltner, said an entertainment district like Beale Street must be closely controlled or it can become trashy.

And she said the overall purpose of any free shows on the street is to get customers into the bars and restaurants.

Beale Street developers have had a hard time, she said, convincing residents of the city's well-to-do suburbs that it's safe to come downtown even though the district contains a city police substation and Elkington & Keltner employs a private security force as well.

The company plans to stage afternoon concerts in Handy Park this summer, she said, so Midtown and suburban residents can come downtown during the day, see how clean the district is and get a good feeling about Beale Street.

The free concerts will be designed, she said, so the musicians will take long breaks and listeners will go indoors to spend some money.

"The only way for Beale Street to thrive is for the restaurant folks to make money," she said.

Monks Share Meditation In South Carolina Priory

By JUMANA A. SWINDLER

The Florence Morning News

PINEVILLE, S.C. (AP) — On a plantation called Tower Hill, a group of men reside in peace and teach tranquility to those who yearn for it — for a day, or a week, or a lifetime.

The place is called Holy Savior Priory, a monastic community run by the Episcopal Church's Order of the Holy Cross. The residents are monks who invite those who are interested to share in the beauty of nature, solitude and reflection.

The priory is a retreat from a sometimes maddening real world.

"Here we offer a center for people who are looking for prayer or a time for retreat and spiritual direction," says Father Raymond Gill, one of the priests who lives there.

Holy Savior Priory is three miles west of Pineville, about 60 miles from Charleston and sits on 640 acres of pastureland and forest in Berkeley County, most of which goes all the way back to the river.

The monastery was started in 1975, although the main house served as a church retreat center for many years before. The land on which the priory rests is called Tower Hill Plantation, one of the oldest plantations in the country. The current structure built where crumbling structure of old plantation house was.

It was the home of Francis Marion, the Famous Swamp Fox of the Revolutionary War. His tomb is in the forest, near the monastery.

But the modern connection to the Swamp Fox is a near namesake, Frances Marion. She is the widow of Edward Marion — a descendant of the war hero. She gave the land to the Order of the Holy Cross for the purpose it now serves. Ms. Marion who bore no children, lives in a small cottage adjacent to the monastery, once her home.

The home, named Marion house, was built in 1963, has a living room, dining room, kitchen, office, library and bathrooms. Upstairs, there are four large bedrooms and baths in between.

And in the basement is where the residents of the priory make incense.

Holy Cross monks are involved in a small incense-making industry and it's called, quite naturally, Holy Cross Incense. The incense contains aromatic gums and resins imported from Sumatra and Ethiopia. Four varieties are made here, said Father Gill.

In addition to making these special pellets as a hobby, the monks supplement the priory's income by selling the incense to churches around the country.

The branch of Holy Cross in Pineville became the seventh, following two others established in New York, one in Toronto, Canada, two in California and another in West Africa. Last year, the order celebrated its 100th birthday.

Founded by Father Huntington, the order is Benedictine, following the rules of St. Benedict for monastic life and ministry. And, unlike the Franciscan Monks, the ones at the priory wear white robes instead of brown.

On occasion, the monks wear jeans and tee-shirts when they're not worshipping or teaching.

"We're really just like everyone else, except a few of the rules," smiles Father Gill.

"I think it's something a lot of the local people don't understand, that we wear normal clothes and we're human."

Father Gill came to the monastery after parish work in Albany, N.Y. and calls it "quite a transition. Sometimes it's traumatic to get out and face the busy city after living here in such serene surroundings."

The monks do go off the plantation, they minister in churches throughout the country, pay bills for the priory, buy groceries, have wine with a meal or two, watch television and like to go in to town sometimes for a movie.

They go to weddings, love to cook and eat good food and are especially fond of lively conversation.

The resident monks do all the work around the house, take shifts in cooking and all take part in clearing the meal tables.

Father Gill is the shopper for the monastery and has people throughout the Southeast clip coupons for him.

Father Thomas Mudge is the prior — or manager of the monastery. He's the businessman and handles the book work and office. Father Nicholas Rademiller just arrived from Ecuador and handling the bookstore. Father Anthony Gerald Stevens is a solitary who works and prays alone.

Father Thomas Schultz is working on his master's degree, and also handles much of the cooking. He loves dinner detail, is the head mechanic for the monastery and coordinates frequent equipment repairs. He also likes dabbling in the vegetable garden which supplements the priory's groceries.

"We do produce a good part of what we use. We have some beef cattle as well and we used to have chickens that laid eggs," says Father Schultz.

Although the priests take a vow of celibacy and the life can be isolated, Father Schultz explains his choice to live at Tower Hill this way:

"My aunt and uncle have been married for more than 50 years. When someone asks them why they got married or how did they know their spouse was the right one, they say the same thing I do about being a monk: 'You just know when it's right.'"

Stamps In The News

By SYD KRONISH

AP Newsfeatures

Iceboat racing — one of the fastest of all winter sports — is heralded on a new 14-cent U.S. stamp in the Transportation Series. It is the 15th issue in this series, which features early modes of transportation. The first in the series was the 18-cent Surrey stamp, issued in 1981.

Depicted on the new 14-center is an 1880s iceboat, with the bow facing right. "Iceboat 1880s," "USA," and "14" appear in three lines at the top.

The iceboat is an adaptation of the sailboat. Iceboats originated in the mid-18th century on the frozen canals of the Netherlands and were introduced in America by Dutch settlers. Many boats can exceed 100 mph.

The 14-cent denomination meets the new first-class rate for mailing postcards. First-day cancellations are available.

You may purchase the stamp at your local post office and affix to your own envelope. But, you are reminded to affix an additional 8 cents postage to meet the first-class minimum for letters. Address your envelope on the right side and use peelable return address labels. Send to: Customer-Affixed Envelopes, Postmaster, Rochester, NY 14692-9991. It must be postmarked no later than April 22.

If you prefer to have the Postal Service affix the stamp, enclose a money order of 22 cents. The USPS will affix the iceboat stamp (14 cent) plus two four-cent stagecoach coil stamps. Mail to: Iceboat Stamp, Postmaster, Rochester, NY 14692-9992. The deadline is April 22.

A block of four 22-cent U.S. stamps depicting duck decoys is now off the presses. The duck decoys are part of the Folk Art Series. Previous blocks of four in the series included Quilts in 1978 and Pennsylvania Towelware in 1979.

First-day cancellations may be obtained for either the block of four or singles.

Collectors purchasing their own stamps at the Post Office should affix them to the upper right corner. No remittance is required. Send to: Customer Affixed Envelopes, Postmaster, Shelburne, VT 05482-9991. It must be postmarked no later than April 21.

Those wishing to have the USPS affix postage should indicate whether they prefer to have single stamps or the block of four. Requests for single stamps will be filled with random designs unless the specific duck decoy is indicated. The cost is 22 cents per stamp or 88 cents for the block of four. Send to: Duck Decoys Stamps, Postmaster, Shelburne, VT 05482-9992. Orders must be postmarked no later than April 21.

A 39-cent stamp in the Great Americans Series honors Grenville Clark, one of the founders of the "Plattsburg Plan" to establish the Military Training Camps Association which gained wide appreciation during World War I and II. In 1940-41, Clark served as chairman of the National Emergency Committee for Selective Service and was one of the drafters of the Selective Service Act of 1940.

First-day cancellations are available. If you buy the stamp at your local post office, affix it to your envelope and mail to: Customer-Affixed Envelopes, Postmaster, Hanover, NH 30755-9991 prior to April 19. For the USPS to affix the stamp, enclose a money order for 39 cents and send to: Grenville Clark Stamp, Postmaster, Hanover, NH 30755-9992. Deadline is April 19.

(Any queries about gardening problems must be accompanied by a stamped, self-addressed envelope.)

Some Say Poet Is A National Treasure

By S.J. GUFFEY
Associated Press Writer
DENVER (AP) — His home is a historic landmark. To many, he himself is a national treasure.
He is Thomas Hornsby Ferril, poet laureate of Colorado. A man of 89, come Monday, of whom Robert Frost once wrote:
"A man is as tall as his height
Plus the height of his home town.
I know a Denverite
Who, measured from sea to crown,
Is one mile, five-foot ten
And he swings a commensurate pen."

Home for Ferril today is the same three-story stone, brick and gingerbread house his family moved into in 1900. The tall cottonwoods that once lined the dirt road outside are gone. The dirt road is a busy street near the heart of Denver.

Inside, steep stairs wind to the second floor, where trophies of a long life lived well surround him. A "wampum wall" bears awards, plaques, certificated honors. A bookshelf around the corner is filled with volumes he either wrote or in which he is mentioned.

Another shelf is filled with volumes he might once have read for help with the verse that is ever with him.

"Poetry is something you're stuck with," he says. "You've got to do it whether you want to or not."

In the last few years, Ferril's hearing has faded and his eyes have dimmed. He writes the poems in longhand, no longer trusting his fingers to hit the right typewriter keys.

No matter. "If you want to play a piano, you have to have a piano," says Ferril. "All that a poet needs is a pencil."

Another noted poet, John Ciardi, once said Ferril's work was so good that he had "withdrawn into his own standards." Despite the physical limits the years have imposed, Ferril doesn't seem to have withdrawn from anything else.

"Do you like what they're doing to Denver?" he asks a visitor. "I don't like it at all. This growth is malignant. We have all these skyscrapers with so much empty space in them...."

"I sometimes think that, someday, people may prowl through these skyscrapers the way we prowl through (the Indian ruins of) Mesa Verde, saying 'What sort of people built these strange buildings? Why did they do it?'"

Time is central to Ferril's work. Under the gilt rotunda of the Colorado Capitol, Ferril's poetry illuminates larger-than-life murals. One longer verse notes the importance of water in this desert clime, but most visitors remember just two lines, taken from a longer poem:

"Beyond the sunset is tomorrow's wisdom, Today is going to be long long ago."

The places he writes about can be grand, but humans center the stories, another hallmark.

"We've been corrupted by scenery," he says. "I love the mountains, but I never let them get in the way."

"Protected by the brick wall of my garden
Against the chaos of our times,
I watch conjunction of a midnight moth
With honeysuckle blossoms."

A boy named Wilbur intersects the moth,
Wilbur called the moth a hummingbird.

Tonight in some forsaken crucible
Of memory
Wilbur glows a moment and goes out.

Poet. An aura of esoterica, of something special that can belong to just a few. Ferril wears the title so easily, talks of poetry so matter-of-factly that the haze dissolves.

Former NBC correspondent and author Edwin Newman noted the clarity and precision of Ferril's work and said, "He illuminates the lives we lead, because of the way he writes."

Ferril's first poem was published in 1906, when he was 10. He had sent the verse, "A Mountain Thought," in a letter to an uncle in Auburn, N.Y. The uncle showed it to the local newspaper editor, who printed it.

Many poems later, after college, World War I service as an officer and his return to Denver, he became a newspaper reporter. An editor had spotted his work in the Literary Digest.

Ferril wound up as theater and movie critic. Local theater owners hired him away as "press agent," a move designed, he says, to halt the largely unfavorable reviews.

In 1926, Ferril went to work for the Great Western Sugar Co. Again, the title was press agent, a title he preferred to "public relations director."

He stayed with Great Western for 42 years.

"It's a good thing for a poet to be engaged in industrial life," Ferril says. "I had all the contacts of contemporary life — farmers, teachers, salesmen, factory people. I think that I was closer to what was happening than if I had gone into a library or teaching."

"The lady is sleeping longer in her chair."

Sometimes she touches her long long hair as if the girl who wore the hair were there."

Ferril once told an interviewer, "I hold that only two things are worth living for — fishing and poetry, and in wintertime you can't fish."

Fishing's out of the question now, but sometimes his secretary, Linda Artz, drives Ferril to his cabin, Brookside, for an afternoon. And with Sue, a Scottish terrier, the poet loves to walk through Denver's Washington Park.

The eye problems have eliminated another love, carpentry. "Making things" had been part of his life for almost as long as verse.

"Often when I'm working with tools, I feel a poem coming on," he used to say.

The retina problem that inhibits so many of his activities is quirky, Ms. Artz says. "The other day, he pointed out that the willows were budding; I hadn't even noticed."

Lunch is often in a corner booth at the Denver Press Club.

"You can be thinking about a poem for such a long time that you've built up a quite a reservoir and it goes very quickly," Ferril says. "Sometimes, you work a long hard time on a poem. Sometimes, you get a poem going up like the trunk of a tree and then the different branches lure you out."

"I always save the branches; sometimes they become poems in themselves."

Cherokee Indian Gives Tattoos, Tune-Ups

By ELLIOTT MINOR
Associated Press Writer
TIFTON, Ga. (AP) — Leonard

American Horse Penley pointed to the demon tattoo taking shape on his partner's back and reflected on the permanence of his artwork.

"A painter can make a mistake. He can rip off the paper and throw it away. But when I put it on, there ain't no picking up an eraser and rubbing it out," said Penley, his arms covered with examples of his work.

Penley, who goes by the name, "Horse," and Wayne St. John have opened a motorcycle shop in a ramshackle building on the western edge of this south Georgia agricultural community where bikers can get their bodies covered with skulls, dragons and other macho motifs while a mechanic tunes their Harley-Davidsons.

St. John, a soft-spoken man sporting a beard and pony tail, handles the mechanical end of the business, while his wife, Sandy, serves as a receptionist.

Penley, a Cherokee Indian from Signal Mountain, Tenn., practices his art in a small, sanitary room at the front of the building, away from the grease and grime of the repair shop. The cost of his tattoos starts at $10, depending on the intricacy of the design.

The Vietnam veteran said he began tattooing while stationed in Hawaii 12 years ago and found it a suitable outlet for his artistic skills.

"It's a whole lot different than painting," he observed with a chuckle. "I call it living color. You're alive and it's in color."

Penley said he's tattooed doctors, lawyers and women — "a lot of people you wouldn't think had a tattoo" — but most of his clientele are fellow bikers.

Men prefer skulls, dragons and eagles, and eight out of 10 will come back for another tattoo, he noted, adding, "Your guys get radical. They want anything - anywhere."

Women, on the other hand, opt for butterflies or roses, usually in places that aren't readily seen, such as backs, legs, hips or breasts, said Penley, 31.

Tattoo artists used to be limited to four colors, but with improved equipment and inks, they now can apply up to 35 colors, including some iridescent shades that show up in black light, according to Penley.

In applying an intricate tattoo to the back of St. John, which will be entered in competition, Penley noted that he works with needles having from one to 14 points, depending on job requirements.

Single-point needles are used to make fine lines, while multi-point needles are used for shading and wider lines.

Although there is some pain when the electrically operated needle enters the skin to deposit ink, "it's not a pain that you can't take," the artist said.

St. John's tattoo eventually will cover most of his back and will feature a demon holding a skull and octopus in its talons, along with the name Harley-Davidson — the only surviving American motorcycle manufacturer and the favorite of bikers like Penley and St. John.

"Being a biker is my lifestyle," said Penley in explaining the Harley motif. "Bikers are my type of people."

Handcrafts Muzzleloaders

By BILL BERGSTROM
Associated Press Writer

HYDEN, Ky. (AP) — "When I was about 6 years old, the first gun I pulled the trigger on was a muzzleloader," said Ott Bowling.

Since then, the long rifles have never lost their fascination, the 81-year-old Leslie County resident said recently.

Bowling started tinkering with guns, making triggers and locks in a friend's blacksmith shop, when he was 17, and made his first rifle about 10 years later.

Through years of farming and carpentry, the rifles remained a major interest, and Bowling still makes two or three a year in his shop perched on the bank of Hurricane Creek, about three miles east of Hyden.

"What kills many a man is just laying down when he retires. I've got to have something to do," he said.

The elderly craftsman, who stands as straight as one of his own rifle barrels, says that he has made "at least a hundred rifles. I might have made more."

"There was one 20 months about three years ago when I made and sold 15. But the next year I may have made a half dozen."

Bowling, the youngest of eight children who grew up on a Leslie County farm, said he didn't know where he got the itch to be a gunsmith.

"I did it right on my own. I guess I always liked to do something that was hard to do."

He married when he was 22. "I've got 10 children. If I'd been married younger I would have had a big family, I guess," he said, laughing. "I've got 67 offspring — children, grandchildren and their children — and not a one of them has ever died."

He raised the family on a farm "across the hill on Coon Creek. We raised hogs and chickens" and Bowling worked at a variety of jobs, mostly carpentry, "building houses, coal tipples, everything there was to do."

When he tapered off as a carpenter — "I retired when I was 62 but I've built three complete houses since then" — demand for the rifles was increasing, partly because of the popularity of muzzleloader clubs and the advent of a muzzleloader season for deer hunters.

'3 Guys Naked From The Waist Down' A Surprise Musical Hit

By MICHAEL KUCHWARA
AP Drama Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — For a while, it was called "Half-wit Dope Jokes and Slapstick." Then came "Kamikaze Kabaret." Finally the authors settled on "3 Guys Naked from the Waist Down."

"We needed a title as off-the-wall as the show," says Michael Rupert, the genial, curly-haired actor who wrote the music for what has turned out to be one of the few musical hits of a barren New York theater season.

"3 Guys," currently running at off-Broadway's Minetta Lane Theater, is the story of stand-up comics, a trio of funny men who put themselves on the line each night and how they cope and don't cope with success. It has book and lyrics by Jerry Colker who also plays one of the three guys.

The title was the brainstorm of director Andrew Cadiff.

"We were just sitting around one day, throwing out suggestions, and Andy blurted out, 'You know, we need a title like "3 Guys Naked from the Waist Down."'" We all stopped. It was like the movies," says Rupert, describing the lightbulb effect of Cadiff's proposal.

Rupert and Colker came up with the idea for the show when they were both working in "Swing," a big band musical that expired in Washington in 1980 en route to Broadway.

"I was interested in getting into producing," says Rupert who at 33 is a 21-year veteran of show business, including guest shots on scores of television shows from "Marcus Welby, M.D." to "The Waltons." "I wanted to develop a theater project, hook up with real, honest-to-God producers and learn the ropes."

What he learned was that if he wanted to get a musical about three stand-up comics together, he'd have to help write it. The effort took nearly five years.

"As a kid, I studied piano and learned it well enough to accompany myself. I started writing music when I was 12 or 13 as a hobby," says Rupert, who at 16 co-starred on Broadway with Robert Goulet and David Wayne in the Kander-Ebb musical "The Happy Time," and graduated to roles in "Pippin" and off-Broadway's "March of the Falsettos" in-between doing television work in California.

"I'd come home from the theater and just to wind down, I'd sit there with a glass of wine until two or three in the morning, playing the piano and writing songs," he recalls.

The composing partnership was cemented after Rupert set one of Colker's lyrics entitled "I Don't Believe in Heroes Anymore" to music. The song is still in the show. The rest of the musical was harder to write. With Colker in New York and Rupert in California, trying to do an occasional television guest spot to support himself, much of it was done long-distance.

"Thank God for Sprint," laughs Rupert. "Our phone bills were astronomical."

From September 1983 through the spring of last year, the musical went through two workshop productions in New York. These were small-scale, invitation-only performances that allowed the authors to put their work in front of an audience.

The workshops led to offers from four or five regional theaters around the country to produce the show. PlayMakers Repertory Company in Chapel Hill, N.C., won out, and the musical was staged there last September.

"It was a very strange thing, standing there in the theater lobby and watching people walk in who actually had paid money to hear my music. I thought, 'My God, I'm a composer now,'" says Rupert.

"We got everybody from college students to grandmas to 10-year-old kids. The audiences in Chapel Hill were very aware artistically," he adds. "And you couldn't get a seat for the show."

Two cast members were recruited from the different workshop productions. Scott Bakula, who played Joe DiMaggio in "Marilyn" last season, became a smooth-talking emcee. A second, John Kassir, the only actor in the musical with experience as a stand-up comic, recently won the $100,000 grand prize on the television show "Star Search."

Colker was thrust into the third role — Phil, an angry young comic — after the actor playing the part decided he couldn't handle it.

"Jerry knew the part because he wrote it, and if any of the characters was based on his personality, the role of Phil was. The character is a very intense, angry comic and that's who Jerry is," Rupert says.

The chemistry among the three actors worked so well that it was decided to keep Colker in the role when the musical journeyed to New York and its eventual success, a success Rupert attributes to dogged determination.

"There are a lot of talented people out there, and a lot of them can write shows. It's just getting them produced. You just have to keep at it," he says.

The difficulties haven't deterred the Rupert-Colker partnership. Last summer they were in Los Angeles to see the Summer Olympics, and to begin a second, as-yet untitled collaboration.

"We wrote the first draft of a new show that we're going to do in Chapel Hill this fall," says Rupert. "We're going to go back to North Carolina and a year from now, we hope, we'll have another show."

ECU Student Environmental Art Show Up

Eight senior students in the East Carolina University School of Art's environmental/interior design program have mounted a unique environmental installation for public viewing April 1-8.

The exhibition, assembled in the lobby of Willis Building on the corner of First and Reade Streets, Greenville, is "post-modernist" in style and composed of diverse materials.

"The show conveys a sense of a new place within the existing space," said Mindy Machanic, environmental design instructor. She said the installation features a small building within the larger space of Willis Building, with a frieze consisting of plaster casts of the faces of the student artists.

A reception, open to the public, is set for Tuesday, April 2 from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m. in Willis.

Design seniors involved in the installation are Angela Woodard and Pamela Westra Carson, both of Wake Forest, Michael Steiner of Wilmington, Patti Harrill of Thomasville, Carol Tait and Tina Benson of Raleigh, Susan Kronz of Virginia Beach and Cynthia Popatak of Pittsburgh, Pa.

THEME PARK EXPANDING

CHARLOTTE — Carowinds is spending $1 million to expand and enhance the 77-acre theme park for its 1985 season, which just recently opened.

The main focus of the expansion is a new motion illusion attraction, "Blackbeard's Revenge." Other changes include landscaping, new concession facilities, and expanded live shows.

ACCEPTS POSITION

BREVARD — Louis Hrabovsky has accepted the position of Director of Development of the Brevard Music Center. Dr. Henry Janiec, the center's director, announced the appointment. Before coming to Brevard, Hrabovsky was executive director of the Frank Holder Dance Company of North Carolina.

The celebration, now being planned by recently selected volunteer committee members, will be held on Saturday, April 27 from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. in downtown Greenville. Fifth and Evans streets will be blocked off so Springfest goers may better enjoy attractions.

Committee members include Carol Whiteford, chairperson, Dave Mosier, Billy Stinson, Alice Keene, Steve Myott, Beverly Bartik, Ann Riggs, Bill Shephard, Molly James, Susan Bizzaro and Ken Hammond.

Springfest is sponsored by the Downtown Greenville Association, East Carolina University Student Union, Greenville Recreation and Parks Department and the Pitt-Greenville Arts Council.

Brazil Pins Hope On Amazon Project

By BRUCE HANDLER
Associated Press Writer

CARAJAS, Brazil (AP) — In an Amazon jungle area the size of Texas and Kansas combined, Brazil has embarked on a mining, agricultural and ranching venture that it hopes will catapult the country out of its financial morass to prosperity.

Officials promoting the Grand Carajas project say they won't repeat mistakes of past grandiose projects — hydroelectric dams, nuclear power plants, shipyards, railroads and highways — that turned out to be too ambitious, too expensive and poorly planned, key factors in Brazil's $100 billion foreign debt.

The International Monetary Fund and foreign banks, especially those which made previous loans, are looking on the project with caution, however, raising questions on how Brazil will raise the money to finance it.

Officials talk of attracting more than $40 billion in new investments.

The new venture gets its name from a mineral-laden, tropical mountain range 2,000 miles north of Rio de Janeiro and 350 miles south of the Amazon River.

Government studies say the 345,000-square-mile jungle zone contains incredible amounts of iron, copper, nickel, manganese, tin and aluminum ore, plus silicon and gold. The studies also say the area has a vast potential for producing timber, rubber, steel-mill charcoal, fuel alcohol and tree-extracted industrial oil, plus extensive grazing lands that could yield hundreds of thousands of tons of beef.

Before he handed over the presidency to civilian Tancred Neves on March 15, Gen. Joao Figueiredo called Carajas "a tangible symbol of Brazilian progress, of enormous proportions," to be developed by "modern-day pioneers pushing back frontiers under Brazilian skies."

At news conferences before his inauguration, Neves said his government would give the "highest priority" to the development of the Amazon region. Mining industry executives believe Neves is solidly behind Carajas.

Many of the Brazilians who have already come here to work are optimistic.

The 13,000 people living in the built-from-scratch company town at a iron-mine site here talk of personal futures they say would be unattainable in southern Brazilian cities such as Rio de Janeiro, Sao Paulo, Belo Horizonte and Porto Alegre.

"I simply would not be this well off financially in the south," said Jose Edmar Pontes, 38, a mining supervisor who earns the equivalent of $575 a month. "I wouldn't be making this much somewhere else, and my living costs would be much higher." The average monthly wage in Brazil is $150.

In Santa Ines, a jungle farm outpost now on a new railway line linking Carajas to the Atlantic coast, Mayor Franklin Seba has told his people, "We're going to become a metropolis."

But Brazil still is struggling to pay its huge debt. The International Monetary Fund and foreign banks have been reluctant to invest new money here. The government has not made good on pledges to cut inflation, which has been over 200 percent for the past three years and shows no immediate signs of going down.

On the other hand, one part of the Carajas scheme, limited in scope and seemingly on sound financial ground, is about to go into operation. The World Bank has conceded $300 million in credits for the extraction of iron ore, and international economic experts are watching to see if it could be a workable model for future development of Brazil's Amazon wealth.

On Feb. 28, Figueiredo inaugurated the $1.4-billion, 550-mile railroad linking Carajas' iron ore deposits, believed to be the world's largest, to a new Atlantic port near the city of Sao Luis.

When fully completed in 1987 or 1988, the port will be able to accommodate super-freighters of up to 280,000 tons and to handle 35 million tons of ore a year, mostly to Japan and Western Europe.

Eliezer Batista, president of Companhia Vale do Rio Doce, the government-run mining company coordinating the project, said these facilities would make Brazil — already the world's No. 1 iron-ore producer and exporter — the undisputed leader of global iron ore trade "for the next 530 years."

"The iron ore project will cost $3.5 billion to set up, but it will pay for itself in four or five years," Batista said in an interview. "After that it will help pay off Brazil's debt and also serve as a base for investments in other development projects in this region."

Batista said the iron-ore undertaking should be viewed as a separate business venture from the sweeping Grand Carajas plan.

"Long-term iron-ore overseas sales contracts already are signed.

Most of the financing for the iron-ore project was domestic, not foreign," Batista said. "And instead of coming up with cost overruns that often characterize development projects in the Third World, the iron-ore project is now more than $1 billion under original estimates."

One expert said there is skepticism, however, in some areas of the steel industry.

"The Carajas iron project probably will be profitable in the long run, but there are those in the steel industry who will tell you it wasn't really needed," said Terry V. McIntyre, the mining and energy attache at the U.S. Consulate in Rio de Janeiro.

"Some knowledgeable people say steel never again will enjoy the position in the international economy it once did, because of a shift to lightweight alloys. There already is plenty of iron ore in the world," McIntyre added in an interview, "and there's basically only one thing you can use iron ore for: making steel."

"But," he said, "Brazilians are naturally optimistic, and they may be right about Carajas."

A Review The Normandy Story

'44: In Combat From Normandy To The Arednnes. By Charles Whiting. Stein & Day. 219 Pages. $18.95.

The white crosses bring tears to the eyes. There are nearly 10,000 of them, stretching, it seems, forever across the green field. The crosses, at the American cemetery at Omaha Beach in France, mark the graves of Americans who died in the great assault on Hitler's Fortress Europe during World War II.

This book by Charles Whiting tells of that monumental invasion and also of what came after. For years, the Allies had been battling the Axis forces around the globe. Now, in 1944, they were ready to do battle with the Germans in Europe itself.

The assault took place June 6. Shortly before, as a vast armada of ships jammed with soldiers left England for the beaches of France, an Englishman watched them sail away, then said to his wife, "A lot of men are going to die tonight. We should pray for them."

He was, unfortunately, right. A lot of men did die, some before they ever stepped on French soil. Others survived the invasion but died later as the Allies pressed toward Germany in a bloody campaign, highlighted by the Battle of the Bulge in the closing days of 1944.

Whiting does well in describing the big picture. His accounts of the Normandy invasion, the doomed thrust into Holland, the events that led up to the bloody fighting in the Bulge are drawn most realistically.

But his account fails on the personal level. He has a most annoying habit of failing to give the first names of many of the soldiers whose combat experiences he is retelling. There is an overabundance of immaterial quotations. And there is the failure to finish a story, such as the one about the British soldier who won the Victoria Cross for his exploits on D-Day. He was the only man in the entire British-Canadian force to win that award that day but the reader isn't told what he did to merit the honor.

The Tasty Conch Now Scarce In The Caribbean

By BARBARA S. MOFFET
National Geographic News Service

WASHINGTON — Nearly every Friday night, on the eastern Caribbean island of St. Lucia, hundreds of residents and tourists gather to dance in the streets, drink, and eat conch meat barbecued on skewers.

"Those Friday night fetes are really wiping out the island's queen conch," observes marine biologist Carl J. Berg.

To the north on Bermuda, in the Sargasso Sea, it already may be too late to save the queen conch, Berg says. A survey he made of Bermuda's waters turned up only a few young conchs.

The conch — a large marine snail with a flamboyant pearly pink shell — is growing scarce throughout its range. The shells that children lift to their ears to "hear the ocean" and tourists carry home to adorn coffee tables and mantles are sold at the estimated rate of a million a year in Florida. Caribbean people have endless purposes for the conch — arranging the shells in neat rows to mark graves, for example. Entire isles have been formed from cast-off shells.

But conch (pronounced "konk") is most important as a source of nutrition, the "hamburger of the Caribbean." The conch snail is cut from its shell and its muscle meat prepared in dozens of ways — in stews, chowders, fritters, and raw with crackers. Millions of conchs are shipped to the United States to supply Cubans, Haitians, and other Caribbean immigrants.

Overfishing, especially to support a $5-million-a-year export industry, has severely depleted the species.

Berg, of the Marine Biological Laboratory at Woods Hole, Mass., and his colleague, Katherine Orr, are trying to reverse the tide. They sailed the eastern Caribbean in 1984, gathering hundreds of conch specimens for a study. On each of the 15 islands they visited, they heard virtually the same story, as Berg recalls:

"The old folks would say, 'When I was a kid I could wade out knee-deep to catch dinner for our family. Now we have to take scuba tanks far from shore and dive as deep as 100 feet for conch.'"

A diver for 20 years, Berg often had a hard time finding conchs, especially at Dominica, where fishermen from nearby Guadeloupe and Martinique have helped decimate them. Sand and coral growth often obscured the shells from view.

The islands' fisheries officials unanimously supported Berg's goal: to determine scientifically how to ensure a permanent conch population for all of the islands. His work is partly funded by the National Geographic Society.

Ignorance ran deep. "Some of the fishermen were collecting the babies and not realizing they were conch," Katherine Orr reports. "They knew nothing about the snail's reproduction; they thought conchs just appeared." Much of her time was spent teaching islanders the facts of conch life.

The queen conch (Strombus gigas) begins life underwater as one of thousands of eggs in a sac that resembles a sand-covered wad of spaghetti. The egg develops into a "veliger," not much larger than a grain of sand, and begins to float freely, transported perhaps hundreds of miles by the sea's currents. As it floats, the tiny shell on its back grows.

After about three weeks, the conch loses its swimming lobes and settles onto the sandy bottom, where it will remain for 2½ years. At the age of three, it has a full rose-colored shell and also is ready to reproduce. Conchs remain in their shells for mating; the female is fertilized by a far-reaching male organ.

By digging its clawlike foot into the sand, a conch can propel itself forward in a series of short hops to seek food or flee enemies. Conchs are believed to live six years on the average, some of them perhaps twice that.

A goal of the scientists' project is to discover which conch populations are related and how they disperse. To determine feasibility of chemical identification, Berg and Orr collected conch samples from four widely scattered points — Bermuda, Belize, Carriacou, and the Turks and Caicos Islands. Chemical analysis of the samples showed significant genetic variety among the four sites.

Last year they zeroed in on Mexico and the Lesser Antilles Islands in the eastern Caribbean, where conch is an important resource, collecting samples from 19 populations. The samples are being analyzed by University of Colorado Professor Jeffrey Mitton to determine the interdependence of conch populations.

"Let's say all of St. Lucia's conch float there from Barbados," Berg conjectures. "St. Lucia could kill off all its conch and still have plenty coming in. The key to its supply would lie miles away on Barbados."

Even patterns within St. Lucia's waters are murky. Berg has advised islanders planning to start a conch fishery on the south end to wait for results of the specimen analysis. If the island's southern conch prove to be the parents of those in the north, a new fishery could destroy all of the island's breeders.

The decline in conch populations was first noticed more than 10 years ago on Barbados and later at two sites with large fisheries — Belize and the Turks and Caicos. Some islands now restrict conch fishing; it has been illegal in Bermuda since 1978.

To rejuvenate Bermuda's conch population, Berg has recommended moving egg cases in from a downstream site. He also has helped the Organization of Eastern Caribbean States to draw up laws regulating conch fishing. The regulations — which would bar collection of baby conch — await ratification by the islands' governments.

MAKES A CATCH . . . A successful snorkeler emerges from the waters of a St. Croix reef with a queen conch, an important source of nutrition in the Caribbean. Much in demand not only as an all-too-popular food but for colorful ornaments, the conch has been decimated in much of the Caribbean and Bermuda. A project partly sponsored by the National Geographic Society is studying reproduction and migration patterns in hopes of saving the conch. (Photo by Jodi Cobb, National Geographic Society)

Australia's Barrier Reef Being Protected

By HUGH A. MULLIGAN
AP Special Correspondent

PORT DOUGLAS, Australia (AP) — All right, trivia fans, the subject is more or less architecture.

What is the largest structure built by living creatures?

The Great Wall of China?

The Grand Coulee Dam?

The St. Lawrence Seaway?

Sorry, none of the above.

Australia's Great Barrier Reef, which is larger than England and Scotland put together, is the biggest thing put together anywhere at any time by living creatures. Infinite numbers of living coral polyps built this fantastic underwater natural wonder that stretches for 1,200 miles off the northeast coast of Australia.

And the work is still going on, although the hand of man, reaching out for oil, shells and coral souvenirs — and even the silt and chemical fertilizer runoff from farms miles inland — threatens the reef's delicate marine life.

"When I was a lad, 50-odd years ago, it was the soup canneries making a great slaughter of the green turtle population that posed the biggest threat to underwater life on the reef," says Les Donovan, a retired electrician from Adelaide, taking his two grandsons out to see Australia's and the world's greatest sunken treasure.

"Full many a gem of pure ray serene, the dark unfathomed caves of ocean bear," he quoted Thomas Gray's "Elegy" to 9-year-old Rick and 11-year-old Gordon as the M.V. Quicksilver, a 66-foot long catamaran out of Port Douglas, made fast to a mooring in the crystal clear waters washing in over Australia's continental shelf.

More interested in eyeballing a loggerhead turtle or a giant clam than the incredibly colorful coral gardens already visible just a few feet below in the glare of the noonday sun, the youngsters hurried into their flippers and masks and were soon paddling off with a school of slithering snorkelers.

Meanwhile the Quicksilver's diving master was giving final safety instructions to experienced scuba divers who had come from all over the world to explore the reef's shadowy caves and weird bottom-dwelling mollusks and crustaceans. Like skiers, they had a language and a geography all their own, and on the hour and a half journey out from the mainland had swapped anecdotes about diving off Cozumel, St. Thomas, Baja California, the Greek Isles and as a girl named Suzie from Baton Rouge, La., put it "all the great dives on Earth."

A few of the more sedate tourists and serious scholars of the deep filed down into a strange submarine-like observatory called the "Subsee Explorer," a completely glass-hulled vessel being pioneered on the reef for the first time anywhere. Except for the keel, which seemed to have been constructed entirely of huge picture windows, it looked as improbable and seaworthy as the first submarine designed by the Irish patriot John Holland to sink the British navy but used only briefly by the Union navy against the Confederates in the Civil War.

Seated several feet below the water line, the passengers have the sensation of riding on the ocean floor and along the coral encrusted walls of the continental shelf, sometimes only inches away, in a submerged sightseeing bus.

Great blizzards of sleek, needle-nosed silverfish, thousands of them, maybe millions, went streaming by the window like a finny snowstorm. "Fairer and more exotic than the royal botanical gardens at Kew," a vacationing English nanny in our midst, or rather our depth, observed, as deep sunlit valleys came into view blooming with ever-changing coral outcroppings in the shape of orchids, azalea bushes, ferns and bonsai trees in a riot of fantastic colors that changed with the light.

Like butterflies flitting over exotic sunken gardens, strange fish with strange names darted in and out: parrot fish with their beak-like jaws, prisoner fish in their convict stripes, harlequin tusk fish grinning hideously through blue buck teeth, a flat and ugly guitarfish whipping up a sandstorm with its powerful tail.

Curious at our approach in a wake of bubbles, a rock cod peered in at us with unblinking, bulgy eyes, as if to ask what sort of queer fish he these in that aluminum-glass shell, and one of those giant clams that I thought existed only in the imagination of Lloyd Bridges and his producer yawned from a coral couch upholstered in exquisite lacework. Other coral beds were as intricate with nature's geometry as snowflakes and seemed to owe their coloring to the French Impressionists.

Feathery starfish, the reef's oldest residents and leading predators, languished among giant sponges. More than a decade ago, they reached epidemic proportions and devastated portions of the reef.

Almost everyone in our motorized bathysphere was anxious to see a man-eating shark, a poisonous sea snake, a giant manta ray hovering over its prey with its 9-foot fin-span or a school of marauding barracuda, but life below on the sunny calm day we came calling was docile, non-violent and unbelievably beautiful. Even a sea cucumber called the beche-de-mer, looking like a barnacle encrusted wagon wheel with its 10 radial arms feeding a single, central, wide mouth, had a certain charm, known for centuries apparently to the Chinese, who the English lady informed me, "relish them as a great culinary delicacy like sea slugs and venomous reptiles."

"Tastier than Vegemite I've been told," laughed the electrician from Adelaide, referring to the kitchen spread made of yeast that is the jam and peanut butter of Australian children.

The Great Barrier Reef is home to 400 varieties of coral, 1,500 species of fish, and is visited by millions of sea birds as the last great feeding ground in the vast Pacific. The huge 350-pound green turtles, heartlessly hunted before World War II for their meat, skin, oil and shells, are making a strong comeback since the last of the soup canneries shut down and was converted into a resort hotel.

Before the turn of the century, the islands sprouting from the reef were shamelessly exploited by phosphate companies, which imported Chinese laborers to strip-mine the rich guano deposits. More recent predators have included oil drillers and the attendant devastating oil spills, seabed mining operations, spear fishermen, seashell collectors and tourists breaking off the coral while diving or "reef-walking" in the shallow pools.

In the last few years, the Australian federal government has moved dramatically to conserve this incomparable sanctuary of marine life. Some 8,000 square miles of reef have been set aside as Great Barrier Reef Marine Park. The area is now protected from uncontrolled development and underwater drilling and mining by tough laws that would even make a giant moray eel feel secure.

Old Tales In Easter Island Told In The Rapa Nui Tongue

By RICHARD BOUDREAUX
Associated Press Writer

HANGA ROA, Easter Island (AP) — Felipe Pakarati Tuki says his seafaring Polynesian ancestors would have been ashamed.

One day, he and his uncle Tioke ignored ancient custom and went fishing without sails or an anchor. The price they paid is the moral of the tale "Dragged by the Wind in a Boat." Pakarati's story of survival in an ocean storm with a cargo of lobsters and an outboard motor that wouldn't start.

Pakarati is one of 1,887 inhabitants of the earth's most remote settlement — a south Pacific island 1,200 miles from the nearest populated place. But the outside world is closing in, and as it does, stories like his take on new meaning.

By a people uprooted by tourist development from subsistence farming and fishing, homespun tales are told and retold to idealize the values of a simpler past. But Pakarati's tale goes a step farther because it represents the first literature in the island's rich and colorful Rapa Nui tongue.

"He Puhia 'I Ruga 'I Te Vaka," the original title, is among the short stories and poems published last July by 11 natives in an effort to save their language from extinction. It is backed by the government of Chile, which runs Easter Island as a province from 2,350 miles away.

The linguistic effort parallels archaeological digging to solve the mysteries of an earlier society that erected the hundreds of giant stone statues for which the island is famous.

Nobody knows why the ancient figures, called "moai," were built or why the sculpturing stopped with so many statues unfinished. Amid war and pestilence, the clues vanished along with all knowledge of the hieroglyphics carved here in stone tablets that are undecipherable to this day.

Linguists in the Pacific now say many of the 53 distinct Polynesian languages — from Tahiti to Hawaii to Easter Island — face eclipse by Western tongues, a threat that has grown since a Dutch sailor discovered this island on Easter Sunday in 1722.

After claiming the island in 1888 and ignoring it for decades, Chile introduced air travel, public services and large-scale tourism in 1967. But only in the past decade has it allowed Rapa Nui to be taught in the school or shown any interest in the culture of natives, who make up about half the population.

Another storyteller, Eusebio Tuki Tepano, remembers how the children of "contis," as he calls those sent from the continent to run the services, ridiculed their islander classmates as "Indians" in front of Chilean teachers in the Catholic school.

"It took us a month to figure out what the word 'Indian' meant," he wrote. "When they made fun of us again, I replied: 'You are Mapuches (a Chilean tribe) who were civilized by the Spanish.' When the nun heard this, she lined up all the island kids and beat us with a bamboo stick."

The stigma of being native and the growth of mixed marriages made Spanish dominant. By 1982, virtually every child entering school spoke it, but only half knew Rapa Nui, a government survey showed.

Bob Webber of the Summer Linguistics Institute, who devised the school's mandatory Rapa Nui course taught since 1979, says it has helped students who were weak in Spanish learn to read — first in Rapa Nui, then in Spanish. But teaching Rapa Nui from scratch has been harder, the American linguist said.

A writers' workshop was formed to create a Rapa Nui literature that would broaden incentives to learn the language. The 11 participants spent three months producing their first stories. Much of the work was just learning to write the spoken tongue.

"We're going to write the history of our island in Rapa Nui," Pakarati told a visitor to his sweet potato farm. "The stories themselves are not enough. Our language is disappearing. If we do not preserve it, nobody will believe we were part of those stories."

At 45, Pakarati is a traditional and modern man. He farms, fishes and carves wooden "moai" figures but has spent 16 years working and studying in mainland Chile. His writing achievement is all the more remarkable because he has been blind since 1969.

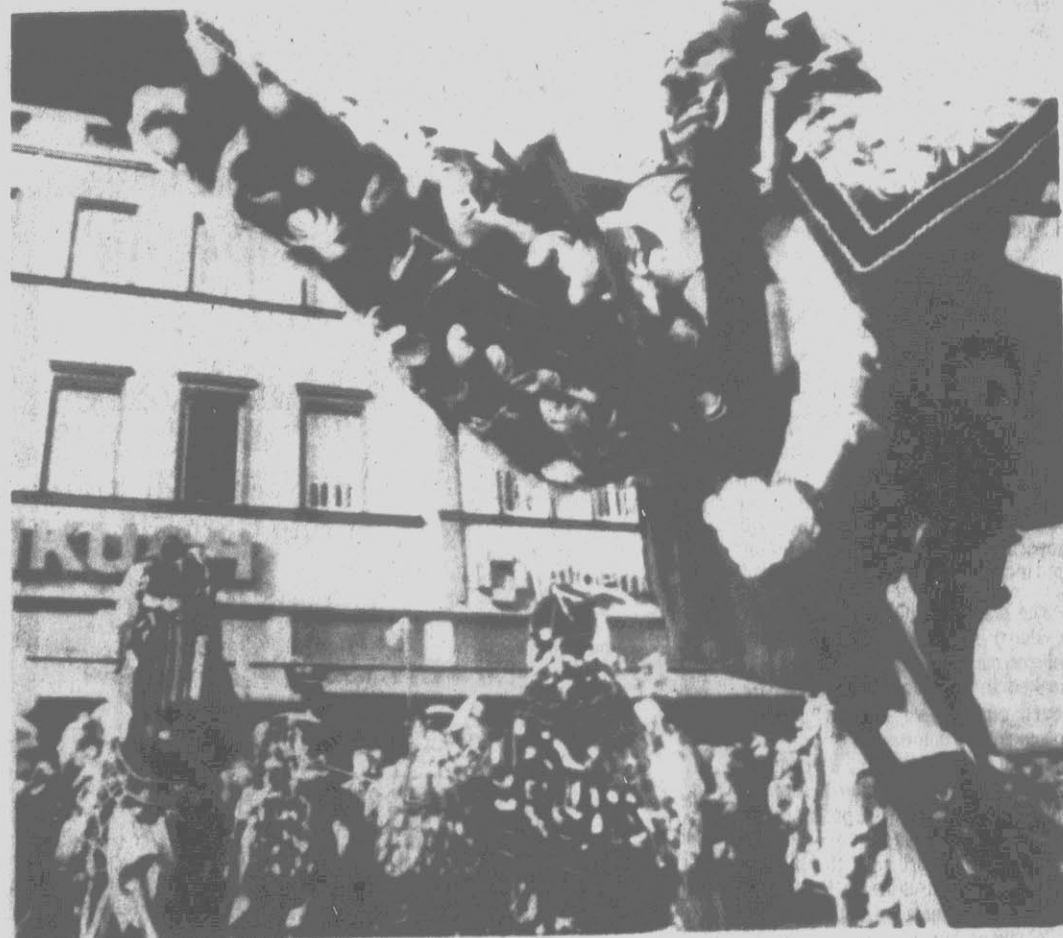

The landscape he cannot see has since changed here. The motorbike has replaced the horse as the common way of plying the rust-red dirt roads. Traditional farmers have lost out in the new cash economy based on a million-dollar-a-year tourist industry.

There is resentment over the central government's refusal to return what the natives consider their ancestral lands or give them more say in running the island. The discontent hit a peak in the early 1980s when the governor, a naval officer, tried to ban Rapa Nui at public meetings attended by mainlanders.

Some tension eased after Sergio Rapu, a U.S.-educated anthropologist, was named in January 1984 as the first islander to be governor. He has promoted limited land reform, and natives now hold eight of the island's top 18 administrative posts.

Rapu, 35, is bullish on spreading Rapa Nui language and culture over the island's television station, but his main goal is modernizing the farms and tying the economy closer to the mainland.

"The central government now understands our need to identify with the Polynesian culture," he said in an interview. "But that does not mean putting on tatoos and walking around barefoot. We have to learn to harmonize our traditions with the modern world."

action during this big carnival parade in Rottweil, a resort town in the Black Forest. The festival includes more than 3,500 "fools" taking part in the parade. (AP Laserphoto by Thomas Meyer)

Art Commands Space In Public Buildings

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

Recently, a large outdoor sculpture installed in the plaza of the Jacob Javits Federal Building in downtown New York made headlines when some protested its presence. They raised such an outcry that a special hearing was convened to consider removing the work, although it had originally been installed only after a lengthy review process.

The debate should not come as a surprise since art has often outraged public sensibilities. One authority says this debate and others like it cannot, however, disguise the fact that the use of art in public buildings is "at an unprecedented all-time high" in the United States.

Elena Canavier, executive director of the Public Art Trust, a Washington-based nonprofit organization, told an audience at the Parsons School of Design in New York recently that "percent for art" programs are partly responsible for the inclusion of art in buildings all over the country. Such programs mandate that a certain percentage of a building's cost — usually from a ½ to 1½ percent — be used to purchase art for the building.

A number of private developers, corporations, banks, artists and local groups are also involved in placing art outside where it can be seen by the public.

"We are getting calls from all over the country from towns seeking information on how to set up a public art program," she said.

The reason for the increase is, first of all, that "in every city around the country there is public support for art in public buildings. People can see what their tax money has bought." Private developers feel art is generally conducive to good public relations. Furthermore, some cities offer tax or zoning incentives for the inclusion of art within or outside commercial buildings.

Some of the best-known examples of private support for public art are the satellite museums established in corporate buildings. In New York City, for example, Phillip Morris Corp. offers free space to the Whitney Museum of American Art, and International Paper has a similar arrangement with the American Craft Council.

In Boston, Rouse Co., which developed the Faneuil Hall marketplace, has allotted space to the Boston Museum of Fine Arts, said Miss Canavier.

Other cities where public art is widely found include Los Angeles, Seattle, Chicago and Baltimore. But in many cities and towns across the country, smaller examples abound. For example, in Lewisboro, N.Y., a large sculpture now stands outside the local library. The sculpture was carved by local artist Axel Horn and town residents from an old tree which had been toppled by lightning.

According to Miss Canavier, percent-for-art programs started at the local level and then moved to larger-scale use in state and federal government. The first city to have a program was Philadelphia, which inaugurated a percent-for-art program in 1959. Approximately 50 cities, 26 to 28 states and a number of federal departments such as the General Services Administration and the Veterans Administration have public art programs.

One type of program not widely known in this country is an art bank. Canada set up an art bank 13 years ago to provide support for Canadian artists, according to William Kirby, head of the program.

On The House

From here and there come these bits of information of interest to the home owner:

See if you can guess what subject these things bring to mind: a spectrophotometer, a video terminal, a line printer and a computer. They are part of a color-matching system used to match the colors of paint chips, wallpaper samples, carpet squares, fabric swatches and almost anything else with especially mixed paint. The system is owned by Benjamin Moore Paint Co. and is being used by more than 130 dealers to do in seconds what formerly took a trained salesperson up to an hour. Some of the things dealers have been asked to match include faded boat seat cushions; shoes (for a woman who wanted her bedroom walls to match them); and melted ice cream, brought in by a customer who said the color of the ice cream was the exact shade she wanted.

Invalids and others who have a difficult time moving around the house can use a remote-control device to control lights, stereos, appliances, hot tubs and various other devices. The remote has no wires or tubes connected from it to the load control. It is powered by a 9-volt battery, is watertight and floats. All transmissions between the remote and the load control are coded to prevent interference. For more details, contact Intermatic Inc., Intermatic Plaza, Spring Grove, IL 60081.

All of us know about aluminum recycling, but we associate it mainly with the collection of beverage cans. Aluminum can be recycled repeatedly, with no loss in quality. Each time this is done, 95 percent of the energy required to make it originally is saved. What isn't generally known is that the Reynolds Recycling and Reclamation Division of the company also purchases such items as house siding, gutters, lawn-furniture tubing, storm doors and windows, aluminum pots and pans, power-mower housings and aluminum barbecue grills.

According to a national survey, many homebuilders are finally getting around to learning enough about financing to get better deals from financial institutions. In the past, a considerable percentage of homebuilders presented amateurish presentations to banks and savings and loan associations and, as a result, may have been denied legitimate loan requests or, at the least, had them delayed indefinitely. The survey, conducted by the Greenman Group of Hollywood, Fla., showed 69 percent of the builders with increased professionalism in this respect, although 26 percent reported decreased professionalism. New efforts are being made soon to increase the dialogue between the builders and the lenders, with seminars scheduled in different parts of the country.

Solar systems for mobile homes sometimes constitute a problem. The systems usually couldn't be mounted on mobile roofs because the roofs could not support their weight per se. They had to be elaborately installed with racked collectors alongside the home and additional space provided inside or under the home for drainback storage to be added. A new system especially made for mobile homes has collectors that weigh only 50 pounds each and allow greater flexibility of installation, with the drain system requiring only one domestic hot-water storage tank. For more data, contact Solar-Span International Inc., 613 Queen St., Southington, CT 06489.

Garden Clinic

Q. What are some good plants to use as bonsai?

A. A few suggested plants for bonsai culture include boxwoods, Chinese elm, almost any of the junipers, Japanese maple, azaleas, many pines, ginkgo, dwarf pomegranate, yews and many other plants. To produce a realistic illusion of a small tree, all parts of the ideal bonsai should be in scale with the size of the tree. This especially means using plants that have small leaves or leaves that become small when the plant is under bonsai culture. It is also important to choose plants which give the appearance of old age even though they are young. Textured bark, gnarled branches and exposed roots will help make the plant appear weathered and ancient.

Q. Should crepe myrtles be planted in full sun?

A. Crepe myrtles do not flower well in partial shade and not at all in heavy shade.

Q. How can I attract hummingbirds to my garden?

A. Hummingbirds prefer to feed on the nectar of tubular or deep-throated flowers and are especially attracted to bring red or orange. Some flowers, vines and shrubs that should attract hummingbirds are cannas, trumpet creeper (cow itch vine), coral honeysuckle, azalea, fuchsia, scarlet sage, gladiolus, phlox, weigela, columbine and nicotiana. Hummingbird feeders can be purchased at most garden or hardware stores. A typical mixture for the feeders consists of one-fourth cup of sugar and one cup of water.

Q. Each year my Southern peas rot off at the soil. Is there anything I can do to prevent this?

A. Yes. Delay planting until the soil has warmed thoroughly. Plant the peas in an area that has not had peas or beans for three to five years. Plant seed that has been treated with a fungicide.

Here's the Answer

Q. — I am going to make a patio cover of canvas strung on a framework of pipes. Is there some place I can find out about the different kinds of canvas and their qualities?

A. — There are some books about patio roofs that go into considerable detail about canvas coverings. Or you can write to the Canvas Products Association, 600 Endicott Building, St. Paul, MN 55101.

Q. — I plan to put down a concrete patio floor. In getting different kinds of textures on the floor, I know different techniques must be used. Can you tell me something about them?

A. — Steel trowels produce a smoother finish than floats, but there are many variations of both tools. While the steel trowel is usually used for patio floors, some people want to be sure the surface is textured enough and so follow with a float. When an even more textured finish is wanted, making the floor slip-proof, they follow a float application by brushing with a bristled broom.

Q. — How do you tell whether a finish is lacquer or shellac? I have to refinish a piece of furniture, but I do not know how to begin the removal of the old finish because I do not know whether it is lacquer or shellac.

A. — Different finishes react to different solvents. The solvent for shellac is denatured alcohol. The solvent for lacquer is lacquer thinner. To test a piece of furniture to see whether the finish is shellac, rub it in an inconspicuous place with a cloth saturated in denatured alcohol. If it is lacquer, it will not be affected by the alcohol except to clean it a bit. If it is shellac, it will start to become a little sticky and messy. On the other hand, lacquer thinner will do the same thing to both lacquer, which it softens, and shellac, which it begins to remove.

Q. — There is a small porch at the rear of our house. I have noticed a few holes in the wooden overhang there. Underneath the holes, on the ground, are tiny piles of sawdust. From what I have read, the wood has been eaten away by carpenter ants. I am sure it isn't termites because our house was inspected for termites recently and we were told there was no sign of any termites. What should I do about the ants?

A. — The fact the sawdust is there probably means you have guessed correctly — that the intruders are ants and not termites. But it also contradicts your other statement about the wood being eaten by the ants. Termites eat wood; ants merely make holes in wood to build nests. Spray the holes with the proper insecticide, then fill them. However, a word of warning. Carpenter ants like to build their nests where it is moist. See why the area is staying moist.

(The techniques of using varnish, shellac, lacquer, remover, stain, bleach, etc., are detailed in Andy Lang's booklet, "Wood Finishing in the Home," which can be obtained by sending 50 cents and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to Know-How, P.O. Box 477, Huntington, NY 11743. Questions of general interest will be answered in the column.)

Home Sales Rose

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sales of new, single-family homes climbed 6.2 percent in February following a slight drop the month before, the government reported.

The increase put sales at a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 638,000 in February, compared to a rate of 601,000 in January.

The report by the Commerce Department and the Department of Housing and Urban Development represented a downward revision for sales in January. Originally, the government said sales that month had increased 2.6 percent.

The housing industry experienced a sharp slowdown last spring as interest rates began climbing. Rates peaked in July and have fallen for seven consecutive months, leading to a pickup in home sales.

Fixed-rate conventional mortgages averaged 13.47 percent in early February, down from a high of 15.2 percent in July.

The sales report said the biggest gain last month came in the South, where sales increased 15 percent. Sales were up 1.1 percent in the Northeast and 0.6 percent in the West.

Sales dropped a sharp 10 percent in the Midwest.

Comeback For Spas

By MARK HEINRICH
Associated Press Writer
BAD HOMBURG, West Germany (AP) — The old German custom of soaking away real or imagined ailments at elegant medicinal spas is making a comeback, even though it costs more because of cutbacks in health insurance.

Taking advantage of scores of natural springs throughout the country, German physicians have long prescribed mineral water and mud baths for ailments ranging from nervous exhaustion to arthritis.

At the 150-year-old spa of Bad Homburg, ailing patients and health buffs balm their bodies in the ornate, Renaissance-style Kaiser Wilhelm bathhouse. The marble-floored building is fed by 14 natural springs scattered through a sweeping park of luxuriant lawns and gardens.

A casino sits next door to the bathhouse, but unlike the old days, spa clientele don't necessarily roll the dice or play roulette. Nowadays, most of the gambling is done by tourists.

In its halcyon days before World War I, and before the dawn of insurance-paid treatment, the Bad Homburg spa — like others in central Europe — was only for the rich and famous. Among the notables were King Edward VII of England, Kaiser Wilhelm II of Imperial Germany and the Russian novelist Feodor Dostoyevsky.

In gratitude for his convalescence at the springs, King Chulalongkorn of Siam (now Thailand) donated a Buddhist temple to the park in 1912.

The area also brought forth the Homburg, the felt hat with a top dented front to back and a brim stiff and slightly upturned.

In the late 19th century, Bad Homburg accommodated 20,000 guests annually in a town of 8,000 residents, according to Erich Gunkel, the spa's managing director.

About 10,000 people "took the waters" last year in Bad Homburg, but the resident population has soared to 55,000, including many businessmen who commute to Frankfurt, 15 miles away.

"Now we get everybody from business executives to restaurant waiters" taking cures, Gunkel said. About 95 percent are on doctor-prescribed treatment programs subsidized to varying degrees by health insurance.

West Germany's medicinal spas and hot spring centers are experiencing a business revival today, riding a wave of patrons who adhere to the old German adage, "Prevention is better than healing." But budget-cutting legislation has decreased the amounts health insurance will pay for treatment at the spas.

In 1982, the government said the national pension plan no longer would pay the cost of "preventive" spa treatment. The next year, Germans were told they would have to contribute 10 marks (about $3) a day to the cost of insured "cure" programs.

Those changes, coinciding with mounting unemployment, triggered a 25 percent plunge in German spending on spa treatment between 1980, the best postwar year, and 1983, according to Hans O. Berg, spokesman for the German Spa Association in Bonn.

"Today, we cannot call it a renaissance, and the red ink continues," he added. "But we find an improvement owing to a greater proportion of people going to spas just to stay healthy."

Gerhard Huefner, president of the national spa organization, cited a rising health consciousness and greater willingness to make personal sacrifices to get the treatments.

Whatever the precise reason, the number of patrons at the nation's 258 health spas topped 6 million last year for the first time since 1981, said Berg.

The Kaiser Wilhelm, typical of the treatment centers, has facilities for treatment of all kinds of complaints:

—Medicinal baths, using spring water with natural carbonic acid, for circulatory and heart-related ills. Saltier spring sources are used for rheumatism and nervous tension.

—Mud baths, in which sufferers of various bone ailments lie in a tub and are coated with special therapeutic muck imported from Austria. The patient is hosed off after 20 minutes and spends a half hour in a "rest room."

—"Tonschlamm-packungen," a different species of mudbath in which the patient is encased in a blond-hued goo to alleviate intestinal, liver and gall bladder problems.

—Underwater massages for arthritis and spinal pain.

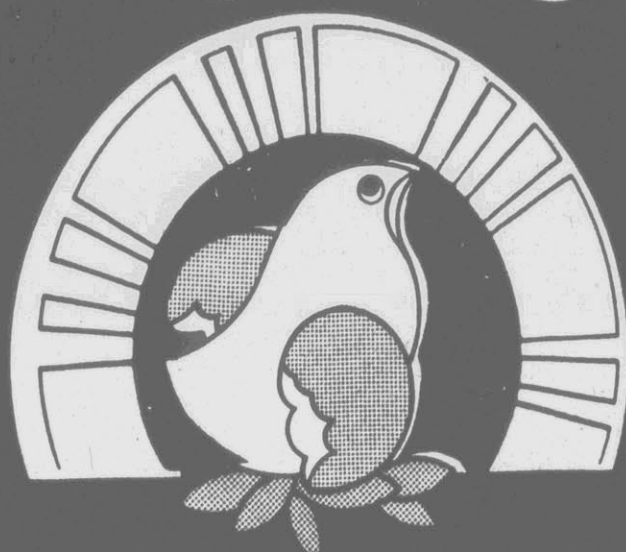

—Inhalation rooms for breathing difficulties.

A mud bath costs the equivalent of about $20, an underwater massage about half that and a medicinal bath $5.

The casino is a separate business, but about 5 percent of its taxes are rerouted by the city government as subsidies to the spa operation, said Bernhard Schorn, manager of the gaming room.

"Without the casino it would be very difficult for us to continue," said Gunkel. "We have never enjoyed a profit margin."

The Old Argument About Famed Author's Identity Again Raised

By ROBERT BARR
Associated Press Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — As the Earl of Oxford may have said: "Reputation is an idle and most false imposition; oft got without merit, and lost without deserving."
That's from "Othello." You probably think Shakespeare wrote it.
That bozo?
That ignoramus?
He could hardly write his own name, much less "Macbeth," according to Charlton Ogburn, who wants to shatter the Stratford native's pedestal once and for all.
In "The Mysterious William Shakespeare" (Dodd Mead, $25),

Ogburn has added 892 pages to literature's Hundred Years' War: Who really wrote all those plays and sonnets?
Ogburn says it was Edward de Vere, 17th Earl of Oxford, a late entrant in the Shakespeare sweepstakes along with Sir Francis Bacon and Christopher Marlowe.
Oxford had all the gifts of talent, position and education which Ogburn finds lacking in the Stratford man, and he sniffs a conspiracy which was not penetrated until the 20th century.
"Surely it is a supreme irony that the outstanding works in the English language should be attributed to a man whose record contains nothing to counter the inference ... that he was of limited literacy at best," Ogburn writes about the Stratford man.

"One particularly curious circumstance ... is the wholesale, evidently selective disappearance, hardly to be explained as accidental, of records that might be expected to throw light" on the man who wrote the plays.
There is no record that William Shakspeare — as Ogburn spells the Stratford man's name — went to school, and there was no outpouring of tributes when he died, Ogburn says.

In his will, the Stratford man makes no reference to a library or to any book. And of all the writing which supposedly flowed from his pen, Ogburn says, only six scrawled signatures survive.

Ogburn does not question that the plays and sonnets were attributed to William Shakespeare, often spelled "Shake-speare." That hyphen, Ogburn says, indicates a pseudonym.

Like most of those who look for another author, Ogburn is convinced that a nobleman adopted the pen name of William Shakespeare. To carry off the deception, a stand-in was needed, and the bumpkin from Stratford served the purpose.

Did Shakspeare go to London, Ogburn asks, endeavoring "to palm himself off as the unknown poet and dramatist, knowing that he was safe from denunciations by the lord masked behind the name?"

Shakspeare returned to Stratford a rich man in 1598 at the same time "William Shakespeare" became known as the author of several plays, Ogburn says.

Before she died in 1612, the Earl's second wife bequeathed a quarterly payment "to my dombé (dumb) man." That, Ogburn argues, was hush money for Shakspeare.

Questions about the authorship of Shakespeare's works have popped up for centuries, and the candidates include Bacon, Marlowe and William Stanley, Earle of Derby.

Oxford was the favorite of John Thomas Looney — pronounced "Low-nee" — who published his theory as "Shakespeare Identified" in 1920.

Ogburn builds on Looney's work, arguing that the identification of Shakespeare with Stratford is the fruit of an elaborate cover-up staged by Oxford's father-in-law, William Cecil Lord Burghley, First Minister and Lord Treasurer of Queen Elizabeth I.

The cover-up supposedly worked until Looney cracked the case in 1920. If you believe Ogburn, though, savants were winking and smirking about the Stratford deception "even before it surfaces."

For instance, Ogburn finds evidence that the famous Shakespeare portrait which adorns the First Folio edition of the plays depicts the face as a mask — a purposeful giveaway of the fraud.

One problem for the Earl's partisans is that he apparently did his best work in the grave. He died June 24, 1604, two years before the conventional date of "Macbeth" and three years before "King Lear." Ogburn generally dates the plays earlier.

"Prove to me that these plays were all written before 1604, and I'll change my name from a Shakespearean to an Oxfordian," said Louis Marder, editor of the Shakespeare Newsletter and professor emeritus at the University of Illinois-Chicago. He calls Ogburn's arguments "wishful thinking."

Robert Giroux, in the New York Times Book Review, called the book "long-winded and obsessive."

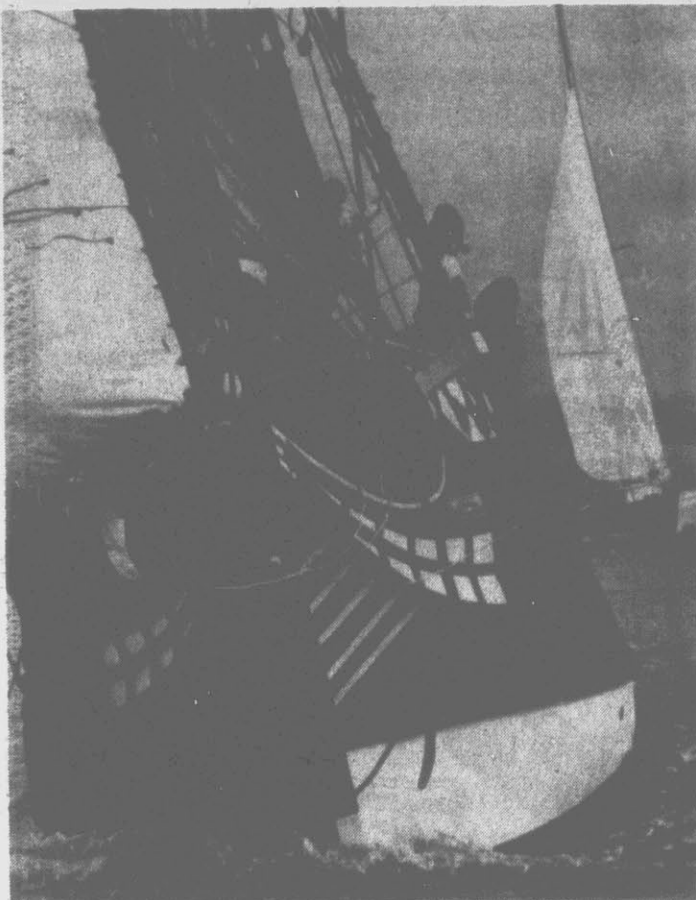

Yet much of the comment on Ogburn's book has been milder and even a bit appreciative.

"Mr. Ogburn bends the evidence and is sometimes inaccurate, but ... he asks disconcerting questions that Stratfordians have tended to shrug off as unimportant," Professor E.A.J. Honigsmann of the University of Newcastle upon Tyne wrote in the New York Review of Books.

"The reason there is a question about the authorship is that there isn't a whole lot of information available, and the information we have is teasingly quiet," said John Andrews, editor of the Shakespeare Quarterly, published by the Folger Library in Washington D.C.

"It's good to acknowledge that we don't know a lot," Andrews said, but: "I'm not persuaded that there is any serious doubt that William Shakespeare of Stratford is the author of the plays."

Family Roots Books

RALEIGH — Today many North Carolinians are interested in researching their family's roots or in learning more about the local history of their area. Newly revised editions of two useful reference tools for such study are now available from the North Carolina Division of Archives and History's Publications Section, an agency of the Department of Cultural Resources.

"North Carolina Local History: A Select Bibliography" by George Stevenson contains a listing of published sources by county and geographical area for the preparation, study and reading of local history. The volume includes social, economic, archaeological, town, county, church and institutional histories and studies. It also includes edited diaries, journals and letters; abstracts of county records; and compilations of marriage and death notices and tombstone inscriptions.

The 209-page bibliography costs $5, plus $1 for postage and handling. "Guide to Research Materials in the North Carolina State Archives, Section B: County Records" contains a summary list of records for each North Carolina county available in the State Archives as of March 31, 1982. To avoid confusion, original and microfilmed records of each county are listed separately.

With the new material that has been added, this 270-page guide replaces all earlier editions in their entirety. The volume costs $8 plus $1 postage and handling.

Both "North Carolina Local History: A Select Bibliography" and "Guide to Research Materials in the North Carolina State Archives, Section B: County Records" may be ordered from: The Historical Publications Section (N), Division of Archives and History, 109 E. Jones St., Raleigh, 27611. Checks should be made payable to the Department of Cultural Resources.

Pledges Caps Festival Goal

CHAPEL HILL — Festival '85 surpassed its goal of $400,000 with pledges for the fund drive amounting to $428,429, with the campaign shorter this year than previously.

The national Festival '85 campaign was March 9-24, but the UNC Center for Public Television in Chapel Hill used live pledge breaks for a shorter period, March 16-24. Last year's on-air campaign lasted 16 days.

The total fund raising drive for the UNC Center for Public Television for 1985 is $1.75 million. Other fund-raising techniques include a quiet campaign of taped messages at various times during the year and direct mail appeals.

Pennsylvania Caverns Are A Prime Tourist Attraction

By JANET MCKENZIE PRINCE
Reading Eagle

HELLERTOWN, Pa. (AP) — They call it the Lost River because they know where it comes from and they don't know where it goes.

What they do know is that it formed a series of caverns under which it now still flows.

These caverns, discovered in 1883, are a present-day tourist attraction, the Lost River Caverns. The Gilman family has operated the caverns as a commercial enterprise since 1930.

Visitors, about 10,000 of them a year according to Bob Gilman, grandson of the founder, enter the cave through its original opening. There was no natural opening. This one was man-made.

When the cave was discovered in 1883, it was part of a limestone quarry. Limestone was being removed for a local iron company.

Purely by accident, quarrymen found the cave when they were blasting. Up until that time, no man had seen the inside.

Since it was part of a rock quarry, the cave and the limestone hill protecting it would have been removed piece by piece. It would not have taken long for man and his machines to chip away at the cave formations that took thousands of years for nature to build.

But the iron company went out of business soon after discovery of the cave. Then commercial use of the site began. The main cavern was used as a dance hall around 1888. It was also used by geology students who climbed down to study the various mineral deposits and formations.

Today visitors see the stalactites, stalagmites, helictites, flow stone, and drip stone in forms limited only by their imaginations. Some people see animals in the mineral deposits.

Oscar the Giant sea turtle is the first formation pointed out on the tour. He rests on the floor of the chapel, which used to be the dance hall. Occasionally weddings and baptisms are held in this underground chapel.

An open Bible and a likeness of Christ are other formations found in the chapel.

Along the route, visitors are introduced to a group of cave parakeets and their nest above. Hungry visitors easily see an ear of corn, a fried egg and a strip of bacon.

As the half-hour tour progresses, guides talk of the history of the cave, how it was formed by the underground river and what types of geological formations are found here.

One interesting specimen pointed out is the cave coral, looking very much like sea coral, but created by mineral deposits.

Up above, near the entrance to the building, is a small museum featuring antique firearms and rocks.

Symphonic Ensemble Concert Tonight

The Symphonic Wind Ensemble will be in concert at 8:15 p.m. today in Wright Auditorium, with Herbert L. Carter directing, and featuring Roy C. Coates in a tuba solo.

The concert is free and open to the public.

The guest artists on the program, Coates, a former student in the East Carolina University School of Music, is presently a tuba soloist and performer in New York.

The program will open with Francis Scott Key's "The Star Spangled Banner," to be followed by Thomas Bidgood's "Sons of the Brave March" scored by J. R. Watson.

The major work on the program is Paul Hindemith's "Symphony in B-flat." Carter calls this work "a masterpiece of contrapuntal writing and is one of the most difficult pieces written for band." The work is in three movements — moderately fast, with vigor; andantino grazioso; and fugue.

The fourth work to be performed is "From the Shores of the Mighty Pacific," by Herbert L. Clark, with Roy Coates as soloist.

"Blues and Chaser," a composition by Jared Spears, will be performed by the Percussion Ensemble and will be conducted by Harold Jones.

The concert will conclude with the Erik Leidzen transcription of Johann Sebastian Bach's "Toccatina in Fugue in D minor." This work is being performed in celebration of the 300th anniversary of Bach's birth.

Bach Festival Set

In celebration of the life and work of master composer Johann Sebastian Bach on the occasion of the 300th anniversary year of his birth, the East Carolina University School of Music, under the coordination of Dr. E. Robert Irwin, professor of organ, is presenting a program of Bach's music.

The Bach Festival will be held on two days, Friday and Saturday, April 12 and 13 at the First Presbyterian Church in Greenville, corner of Elm and 14th Streets. All programs are free and open to the public.

Two internationally prominent guest artists will be here to take part in the festival — professor Peter Marshall and Peggy Marie Haas.

The Bach Festival will open at 8:15 p.m. Friday with a gala concert featuring the Bach "Magnificat"; the Cantata S.4, "Christ lag in Todesbanden"; and a Handel organ concerto played by Mark Gansor, graduate teaching assistant in organ.

These works will be conducted by Dr. Irwin and will feature a chorus, soloists, and orchestra comprised of ECU and community musicians.

The two guest artists will perform on Saturday. From 10 a.m. to noon and from 2 to 4 p.m., professor Marshall, head of the organ department of Catholic University, will conduct two master classes on the organ music of Bach. Marshall is an authority on the performance practices of Baroque music.

At 8:15 p.m. Saturday, Ms. Haas, a young American organ virtuoso from Baltimore will perform. She will play a program of Bach and composers influenced by him. She has appeared in concerts extensively in the U.S. and Europe and has recorded on Raven records.

Bach was born March 21, 1685 in the town of Eisenach, now in East Germany, and died in 1750 in Leipzig, also in East Germany.

Glee Clubs Concert

The voices of the Women's Glee Club and the Women's Glee Club of East Carolina will be heard in a Spring Concert in the A. J. Fletcher Recital Hall at 8:15 p.m. Monday, April 1.

There is no admission charged, and the concert is open to the public.

Rhonda J. Fleming is director of the Women's Glee Club, and Edward Glenn is director of the Men's Glee Club.

The concert will open with songs performed by the Women's Glee Club accompanied by Natalie Beacham, Cynthia Bullock and Jane Whitfield.

Burney's "Round for Men's Voices," to be followed by Washburn's "Let the Toast Pass."

ECU student pianist Scott Sward will play two Persichetti songs, "Jimmy's Got a Doll" and "Sam Was a Man."

BACK IN THE BUSINESS... Ava Gardner returns to Hollywood for a guest appearance as William Devane's mother in CBS-TV's "Knot's Landing" television series. Gardner says she likes to "work as little as possible, but it's good for me now and then." (AP Laserphoto)

Back In Hollywood

By BOB THOMAS
Associated Press Writer
BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. (AP) — The Polo Lounge, long accustomed to famous faces, was buzzing with excitement and it was centered on the stately brunette in the corner booth of the Beverly Hills Hotel watering place.

Waiters with glowing faces paused to pay their respects. A moneyed New Yorker said boldly: "Pardon me, but you look like a young Ava Gardner. Could I send you a drink, a bottle of wine, champagne, anything?"

She accepted the homage like a pleased Mona Lisa. Of course it was Ava Gardner, looking like her younger, glamorous self and bristling with health after playing a game of tennis.

Miss Gardner was in California from London for guest appearances as William Devane's mother in CBS's "Knot's Landing." Her husband in the series is Howard Duff, with whom she had a happy reunion. "I never worked with Howard, but he and I had a little flirt for a while," she said.

However, her main reason for doing the TV work was because of the money. "Loot — that's the main reason for working, isn't it?" she said with customary frankness. "I like to work as little as possible, but it's good for me now and then. Too much time off, and I get lazy, stale, lethargic. Work is healthy for you, I guess. Capricorns are supposed to be gifted with self-discipline, but I think I missed out somehow. It takes someone else to crack the whip. Then I jump."

"Knots Landing" has kept her jumping. She has had 4 a.m. calls, something that didn't happen during her movie days at MGM.

The series is filmed on the MGM lot, and that's cause for nostalgia. Miss Gardner arrived there in late 1940, a barefoot 18-year-old from Smithfield, North Carolina. For five years she did little but pose for cheesecake and play in B pictures. A few loanouts, "Whistle Stop" and "The Killers," finally convinced her MGM bosses that she was star material.

"It's a bit sad to go back to MGM today," she admitted. "I remember when Clark Gable would walk into the commissary and sit down at the middle table (with Spencer Tracy, Robert Taylor and others). That was sheer magic. And when Lana Turner would sweep into the office of Lillian Burns, the drama coach. Now there was a real star!"

And so was Ava Gardner, unquestionably. She was a star on screen, in such films as "The Hucksters," "One Touch of Venus," "The Snows of Kilimanjaro," "Mogambo" and "The Barefoot Contessa." And she was ever in the news with her marriages to Mickey Rooney, Artie Shaw and Frank Sinatra, and her romances with Howard Hughes, bullfighter Luis Dominguez and her other international escapades.

It wasn't always easy during the 15 years under contract to MGM. Miss Gardner recalled when she wanted to do a play at La Jolla Playhouse with Gregory Peck.

"The role isn't big enough," a studio executive told her. "You can only do a starring role."

"But I'm grateful to MGM," she added. "They made me a movie star — you notice I don't say 'actress.' Otherwise I might be a secretary, which is what I was trained for, or a housewife, or both, back in North Carolina."

For the past 20 years she has made her home in London, which she considers to be the most civilized city in the world.

"I fell in love with England the first time I saw it," she remarked. "The countryside reminded me of North Carolina — the English even sounded like people back home. Did you know there are parts of North Carolina where they talk pure Elizabethan?"

"London to me is a 'safe' city, and I don't mean just in terms of muggings," she continued. "There is a coziness to each little area, with its own neighborhood grocery stores. There have been changes, I'm sorry to say. The supermarkets are taking over. And the pubs are moving in juke boxes. Now there's a phrase that dates me — 'juke boxes.'"

She hasn't really kept away from her craft. In recent years, Miss Gardner has appeared in European films and on American television. She will be on the upcoming NBC miniseries, "A.D."

Gennaro was choreographer for the Debbie Reynolds movie, "The Unsinkable Molly Brown," and from 1971 to 1978 was producer, director and choreographer for the Radio City Music Hall.

Among his awards are the Drama Desk and Tony Awards for "Annie" in 1977, the Dance Educators Award in 1957 and 1973, the Dance Magazine Award in 1965, and the Eleanor Roosevelt Humanitarian Award in 1974.

availability from 9:30 to 10 a.m. Sunday, April 14.

WE'VE CHANGED OUR MIDDLENAME, NOT OUR COMMITMENT TO YOU.

The sign says First Citizens Bank. But inside, you'll find the same people who served this community for First State Bank.

You see, before the merger of First Citizens and First State, both banks were committed to giving customers personal attention, honest advice, and efficient service they could always count on. Because of our similar banking philosophies, we were able to merge without any shakeups or major changes.

And if you bank at First State Bank, in either Greenville or Winterville, you're now a customer of First Citizens Bank statewide. That puts more than 270 banking offices across North Carolina at your service.

Need to cash a check in Asheville or make a deposit in Wilmington? No problem. Just look for a First Citizens Bank.

For most First State Bank customers, banking will continue unchanged. But for customers who may need specialized services, First Citizens can, we believe, provide any banking service that a person or company may need. That's a benefit of banking with First Citizens, one of the soundest two billion-dollar banks in the United States.

So drop by your nearest First Citizens Bank and talk with the friendly people. They'll be the same people you knew before the sign changed.

Credit Crunch Hits Mississippi Farmers

By JOHN DINGMAN
Associated Press Writer
JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — Dr. Bob Williams says that in 21 years as an observer of the farm economy in Mississippi, he's never seen things as critical as they are now.

"The credit crunch is bad and getting worse," he said. "If the federal government follows the administration's proposals to get out of agricultural help, it would be a disaster."

Deryl Saylor of Booneville feels much the same way.

His family has been farming in Prentiss County for some 45 years, and he says, "It never has been so easy to lose so much, so quickly, as it is right now."

Saylor said his operation was typical of middle size farms across the country, trying to survive on uncertain prices, trying to outguess the Chicago Board of Trade, meeting loan payments, and coping with the weather.

His father, Archie Saylor, started the farm 45 years ago.

"But what could a 68-year-old man do" if the farm failed, Deryl Saylor asked.

A number of farmers agreed that the problem was the result of prices that have not kept pace with increasing costs; credit that has been too early for some farmers, and a fickle growing conditions.

Farm experts at the Mississippi Cooperative Extension Service note that farm prices have gone up about 41 percent in the past ten years. But in that same period, the cost of farming, including seed, equipment, labor and the like, has gone up 84 percent.

A decade ago, the experts said, a farmer could buy a tractor with the proceeds of 10 bales of cotton. Now it would take 100 bales to buy that same tractor.

In good years, the soybean crop will average about 21 bushels per acre. And, at that level, experts estimate a farmer needs to get $8 a bushel to break even. Currently, soybeans have been bringing $5.75 a bushel, for a substantial loss on every bushel.

Williams said that in 1979, Mississippi farmers had profits of around $737 million. But in the past few years, profits have dropped as low as $300 million.

Farm debt has gone just the other way.

He said in 1979, farm debt in Mississippi totaled $2.4 billion. Last year, it had soared to $4.8 billion.

And the loans are not being paid back.

In some counties, the delinquency rate on loans from the Farmers Home Administration are as high as 85 percent, records show, with some farmers having debts ranging in the millions of dollars.

Loans may not be as easy to get as they were in the days when banks threw huge picnics to lure farmers to borrow money.

But the loans, especially from the FmHA, still are available, and the government has assured farmers they will be able to get spring planting loans.

Some farmers, especially those who bank in their local communities, think the easy government loans are part of the problem.

Roger Campbell of Lee County does not resent farmers who turn to the government for financial help, but he said he does feel it can be unfair to competition.

Many of the government loans, he said, go to farmers who moved into the business for the first time in the 1970s.

Campbell said he had heard some of them say that they had nothing to lose when they started, and have nothing to lose now.

He said it may be unfair for farmers who are unable to repay loans to be competing with farmers who must pay back their commercial loans.

Campbell said if a farmer knows he can get government money and not pay it back, he takes it and buys equipment. And he says that boosts the cost of the equipment for others.

Weather has been a factor in the past year.

Heavy rain hurt the cotton crop in both quantity and quality. Abnormally warm temperatures in the fall injured soybean seed intended for spring planting. Then ice storms in February interfered with land preparation, and also hit hard at poultry growers, who lost thousands of chickens when poultry houses collapsed under the weight of the ice.

But farmers say that is part of the usual risk of agriculture, and they can cope with these situations.

Billy Davis of Lee County said that for the future, farmers must learn to diversify.

"They need to do something 365 days a year to make money, whether it is selling chemicals, storing soybeans or doing contract work," he said. "There are no more three-months-a-year farmers who can make it."

Florida Probing Mission For Data On Life In 1600s

By MARY ANNE RHYNE
Associated Press Writer
TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — The Spanish missions of California and Texas long ago earned a place in American history and a spot on the nation's four maps.

Now the state of Florida is peeling layers of earth from atop a mission that officials believe will rival those in states out West.

San Luis de Talimali was a 50-acre site where as many as 1,400 Spanish soldiers, Franciscan monks and Apalachee Indians lived side by side. It was the political and religious center for 17 other Spanish missions in northwest Florida and was seen as a food supplier for St. Augustine, the first permanent U.S. settlement.

The state acquired the Tallahassee land in September 1983 through the Conservation and Recreation Lands Trust Fund Program and a team of archaeologists began to dig for the remains of the mission. One day, the state hopes to build replicas of the original buildings on the site.

Secretary of State George Firestone dedicated the site and opened it to the public last weekend.

Gary Shapiro, who leads a team of six archaeologists working on San Luis, said the excavation is the first of its kind in the Southeast.

"Our knowledge about the way people lived in those days is really scanty," Shapiro said. "San Luis is a tremendous opportunity to go after the (details of) daily life."

But getting a picture of life in the 1600s is only a small part of the knowledge to be gained from San Luis.

Shapiro said he wants to know what happened when the Spanish and Indians lived together.

The outline of the site was sketched with the help of 30,000 topographic readings, 1,400 sample digs and several 2-meter-square excavations. The site once contained a fort with a moat, a mission church, convent, cemetery and a number of houses.

Visitors now can see the beginning of the excavation of an Indian council house that may have been 90 feet wide.

Shapiro said archaeologists found hardened clay from the walls, stains where posts of the structure rotted, Indian and Spanish pottery, glass beads and lead shot.

Spanish friars established San Luis in 1633 when they began trying to convert Apalachee Indians to Christianity. It probably was named in honor of Florida's Spanish governor of the period, Luis Horrutinez, and it became capital of the Apalachee province that is now Jefferson, Leon and Wakulla counties.

Residents abandoned San Luis in 1704 before a rumored attack by Colonel James Moore of South Carolina, who was accompanied by soldiers and Creek warriors known for burning their enemies at the stake.

New NCMA Approach

RALEIGH — "Rendezvous with Rubens," "Hobnob with Homer," "Say 'Hey' to Monet."

These and other slogans which relate to famous artists are part of a new statewide promotional campaign, "Meet a Museum," which will be launched the first week in April by the North Carolina Museum of Art. The museum, which has been located in its new building on Blue Ridge Boulevard for two years, is directing the campaign primarily toward those who have not yet visited the new institution.

While inviting potential visitors to "come and get acquainted," the campaign also reminds the public that the museum's collections include important works of art by major artists — Peter Paul Rubens, Anthony van Dyck, Thomas Gainsborough, Winslow Homer, Claude Monet, Alexander Calder and Georgia O'Keeffe. One of the slogans, "Meet our Members," is expected to be especially popular with children.

Materials related to the campaign include lapel buttons, magnets and bumper stickers, all available in the Museum Shop. The museum also plans to produce T-shirts, mugs and other items later in the spring. A free brochure which uses the "Meet a Museum" theme will be distributed throughout North Carolina. And radio audiences may be surprised to hear artists such as Monet and Rubens talk about their life and work in 30-second public service announcements.

The campaign has been developed by Sharon Broom, communications officer, and Jenny Malcolm, head graphic designer.

Wilmington's Azalea Festival April 11-14

WILMINGTON — The 38th annual North Carolina Azalea Festival at Wilmington, one of the nation's major springtime celebrations, will be held this year from Thursday, April 11 through Sunday, April 14. The festival combines a variety of entertainment and pageantry against a background of exotic floral color.

The festival is geared for all age groups and preferences, with many things to see and do, many of them free of charge, others requiring an admission fee, such as a three-ring circus under the bigtop, the Queen's Coronation and Show, and special entertainment by stars in show business.

Even more numerous are outdoor events, most of which are free to the public. These include a festival parade through downtown Wilmington, a sidewalk art show, a three-day coin show, band concerts, children's activities, a sailboat regatta, the world's largest free horse show, amateur boxing matches, etc.

Additionally, there will be tours of private gardens, tours of historic homes, special displays and showings at the New Hanover County Museum and the USS North Carolina Battleship Memorial, a volleyball tournament, a tug-of-war, and square dancing.

For nature lovers, three of the South's best-known floral showplaces are expected to have spring flowers in peak bloom during the time of the festival celebration. These are the gardens of Orton Plantation, 25 miles south of Wilmington, Airline Gardens in Wilmington, and the municipally-owned Greenfield Gardens and its five-mile scenic drive around Greenfield Lake.

Phylcia Ayers-Allen of the Bill Cosby TV show has been named Queen Azalea XXXVIII. Rich Little, an impressionist and entertainer in mimicry, will headline the show segment of the Coronation Pageant.

Entertainers scheduled to date to appear in events for which admission is being charged include: Little, in a performance at 8 p.m. Saturday, April 13 in Trask Coliseum; on the UNC-Wilmington campus; and a concert with Crystal Gayle, Donnie and Marie Osmond, Thursday, April 11 at 8 p.m. in Trask Coliseum.

Television actor Victor French, co-starring in NBC's "Highway to Heaven," will make a number of guest appearances and will be taking part in many activities.

Alex Trebek, producer and host of the TV game show, "Jeopardy," will serve as master of ceremonies for the Coronation Pageant and Show on Saturday night, April 13, also to be held in Trask Coliseum with an admission to be charged.

Persons wanting more detailed information or details on prices of shows, are to write to: N. C. Azalea Festival, P. O. Box 51, Wilmington, N.C., 28402. Enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

Battleship Light Show

WILMINGTON — A highlight of Wilmington's 1985 Azalea Festival will be two special presentations of the Sound and Light Spectacular, "The Immortal Showboat," which tells the World War II history of the USS North Carolina battleship.

The specials will be shown on Friday and Saturday nights, April 12 and 13, at 8 p.m. each evening.

Hundreds of lights and speakers give realism to the story of the USS North Carolina, which fought through every major naval campaign of the war in the Pacific. Special effects include a waterline explosion from a torpedo hit, and the firing of the big guns and anti-aircraft weapons. The recorded voices of Winston Churchill, Franklin D. Roosevelt, Harry Truman and Adolph Hitler bring history to life in the one hour 10-minute presentation.

Shad Song Tapes Now Available

GRIFTON — Song tapes of the new official "Grifton Shad Festival Song" are now available at Grifton Auto Parts.

The tape was recorded by "Silver Wings" Band for the Shad Festival. The winning song, by Don Sauls, is on one side of the tape. The second place song, "I Love Shad" by Dave Marshburn, is on the reverse.

Proceeds of the sale of tapes will go to help pay for the production costs and related expenses of the song contest.

Tapes will also be on sale during the Shad Festival weekend April 20-21 at the Souvenir/Information building.

Book News

From Sheppard Memorial Library

By WILLIE NELMS

The term "French Foreign Legion" conjures up romantic images of far away places and dashing adventurers. For Americans raised on Hollywood's view of this military organization, John Robert Young's new book "The French Foreign Legion: The Inside Story of the World-Famous Fighting Force" will provide a great deal of reading pleasure.

Since its foundation by royal decree of Louis-Philippe in 1831, the Legion has been a focus of fascination for the outside world, attracted by its unique aura of mystery and heroism. Today's Legionnaire is a direct heir to a long line of great adventurers — men whose military achievements in Europe, in Mexico, in Africa, and in Southeast Asia have indelibly associated them with danger, endurance, and comaraderie.

John Robert Young has pulled aside the curtain of secrecy to reveal the Legion's inner workings. Through fifty thousand miles of travel and three hundred rolls of film, he shared the Legionnaire's life as an unobtrusive observer.

In addition to contemporary information, the book contains a history of the Legion's early days. This section was written by Erwan Bergot, a former paratrooper officer of the Legion. Bergot served with the Legion in the Indo-China and Algerian conflicts. His section describes the origin and development of the fighting unit from its inception through 1983.

Part of the appeal of the French Foreign Legion is its color and international flavor. A wide-ranging reference section in the last portion of the book provides a wealth of information in these areas.

Significant items of uniform and equipment, special customs, and traditions are discussed. In addition, information is offered on the national origins of the 600,000 men from more than 100 countries who have filled the ranks. The book also provides a list of the campaigns in which 35,000 Legionnaires have lost their lives.

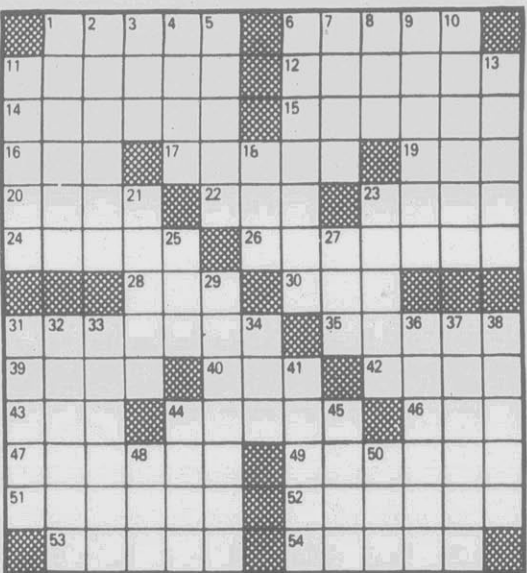

The color photography provided in this volume is one of its outstanding features. The result is a colorful work (both figuratively and literally), which will appeal to anyone interested in this unique fighting unit.

The Cryptquip is a simple substitution cipher in which each letter used stands for another. If you think that X equals O, it will equal O throughout the puzzle. Single letters, short words, and words using an apostrophe can give you clues to locating vowels. Solution is accomplished by trial and error.

Tuesday Lectures About N.C. Indians

By PALMER HILL
N.C. Department Of Cultural Resources

RALEIGH — During the eight-day "Green Corn Dance," 16th century Indians in an area near Mt. Gilead forgave unpunished crimes, paid debts, repaired houses and drank "the black drink" to cleanse themselves internally.

Town Creek Indian Mound and evidence yielded by excavations there will be among the subjects discussed by prominent North Carolina archaeologists during a series of lectures to be held each Tuesday in April from 7:30 to 8:30 p.m.

The series, free and open to the public, will be at the N. C. Museum of History Auditorium in Raleigh in conjunction with an international exhibit at the museum, "Raleigh and Roanoke." The exhibit is being held through June 6 as part of America's 400th Anniversary celebration.

Dates, speakers and subjects of the series are:

• April 2 — Dr. Joffre L. Coe will speak on "Town Creek Indian Mound State Historic Site: Archaeological Investigations Over Five Decades." Dr. Coe, professor emeritus at UNC-Chapel Hill, began excavations at Town Creek in 1937. The site was used by Indians in pre-colonial times as a tribal ceremonial center. Excavation data collected has made possible the reconstruction of buildings, including two temples, a mortuary and a palisade walls. The site is a National Historic Landmark.

• April 9 — Dr. Thomas C. Loftfield, associate professor of archaeology at UNC-Wilmington, will speak on "Prehistoric Coastal Adaptations and Survival Strategies: The Late Woodland on the Central North Carolina Coast."

Loftfield specializes in archaeology concerning the Late Woodland Indian population appearing as early as 600 to 800 A.D. These groups were strongly, if not entirely, adapted to the coastal environment. Loftfield will discuss evidence of this culture collected at four sites in Onslow County.

• April 16 — Dr. Roy S. Dickens Jr. will speak on Cherokee prehistory. Dickens is director of the Research Laboratories of Anthropology at UNC-Chapel Hill. He will use slides of sites, excavations and artifacts to illustrate the ancestors of the Cherokees, including the Pisgah culture. This group moved into the mountains of western North Carolina in A.D. 1,000 — 13,000 years after Indians had first come to the area.

Among sites Dickens has investigated is an area generally accepted as the long-lost Occaneechi Town near Hillsborough, inhabited by Indians between 1300-1720 A.D. English surveyor-historian John Lawson visited and wrote about the village in 1701, but it had eluded archaeologists since then.

• April 23 — An associate professor of anthropology at Wake Forest University, Dr. J. Ned Woodall, will lecture on "The Donaha Site and Related Villages Along the Yadkin River." In 1973 Wake Forest University began carrying out test excavations at the Donaha Site, an area of about 24 acres, inhabited by Indians of the Late Woodland period.

• April 30 — Kenneth Robinson, historic resources planner for Cumberland County Joint Planning Board, will present the final lecture in the series. He is the only archaeologist in North Carolina who works for a county planning board. He will discuss archaeological excavations in downtown Fayetteville, which in the 19th century was one of North Carolina's most important inland trade centers. Excavations have uncovered early and mid-19th century public works such as a water supply system and a plank road, as well as remnants of a 19th century commercial district.

Upcoming series in conjunction with the "Raleigh and Roanoke" exhibit will include a Tuesday series in May on American Indians.

For complete details on future programs, contact the N. C. Museum of History, 109 E. Jones Street, Raleigh, N.C., 27611, telephone 733-3894.

THE TALE OF THE FOUR OF SPADES

DEAR READERS: We have had many requests over the years for those hands we consider to be our favorites. That makes quite a list. For the time being, therefore, we are devoting the Sunday column to a series of famous hands. At the end of the series we will go back to our weekly question and answer column.

North-South vulnerable. West deals.

NORTH		EAST
♠ 9		♠ 102
♥ Q 9 5 3 2		♥ A J 6
♦ K Q 6		♦ J 10 9 8 2
♣ Q J 9 8		♣ 10 6 5
WEST		SOUTH
♠ Q J 3		♠ A K 8 7 6 5 4
♥ K		♥ 10 8 7 4
♦ A 7 5 4 3		♦ Void
♣ A 7 4 2		♣ K 3

The bidding:
West North East South
♦ Dble 3 ♦ 4 ♦
Pass Pass Pass
Opening lead: Ace of ♦.

"It just isn't fair," wailed the Four of Spades. "All my life I have wanted to win a trick through sheer power, and now, when I finally accomplish that, no one wants to speak to me. I am condemned to purgatory though no fault of my own!"

The hand that caused this anguish for the Four of Spades occurred in the trials to select his national team. We have no explanation for North's rather strange-looking takeout double. As to South's four spades, we know of many who would consider it a gross underbid. Quite probably he was used to his partner's eccentricities.

"Against our spade game West led the ace of diamonds and East followed with the jack, a suit preference signal for hearts. Declarer ruffed with the eight and, had he simply drawn two rounds of trumps and then led the king of clubs, West would have been end played and the game would have rolled home.

"Unfortunately for me, South had a larcenous streak in him, and the lure of those two high diamonds was more than he could resist. He tried to sneak an entry to the table by leading a low club from the king.

"West was not born yesterday. He hopped up with the ace of clubs, cashed the king of hearts and got off lead with a club to declarer's king. The kibitzers thought the defense was finished. Declarer would throw West in with the third trump, and West would have to put declarer on the table, thereby allowing him to get three heart discards for his contract.

"They reckoned without West. On the ace-king of trumps he unblocked the queen-jack! Now when declarer tried to end play him by leading me, West could underplay the three. South did not lose a trump trick, but he was still saddled with the lead. There was no way that he could avoid losing two heart tricks to go down one.

"I had been preparing myself for being the center of attention. Instead, I found everyone laughing at me even though I had won the trick. There's no justice!"

Wrong Tavern

HARTFORD, Wis. (AP) — Tom Masters says the beaver that wandered into his downtown tavern was friendly enough, but the furry creature was given an escort to another watering hole, a nearby river.

"I was walking across the street, and we saw this beaver coming down the middle of Main Street," Masters said. "We headed him off because we didn't want him to get hit on Highway 60, but then he turned and walked into my place."

Masters' tavern is temporarily closed for remodeling, but that didn't prevent the beaver from investigating it before Masters and his friends trapped him in a box.

Then they called two city police officers to escort the animal to the Rubicon River where he was released.

"He was either real nearsighted or frightened because he was bumping into everything," Masters said after the Tuesday evening incident. "It was a huge one, but he was actually kind of friendly."

Reading Times

READING, Pa. (AP) — At 42, Burt D. Webber Jr. remains the adventurer's adventurer.

He is the man who, in 1978, recovered $13.8 million in treasure and relics from the sunken Spanish galleon La Nuestra Senora de la Concepcion in the Silver Shoals, 80 miles north of the Dominican Republic.

But after a career that has included a brush with a Cuban gunboat, a scrape with an angry mob on Grand Cayman Island, the wear and tear of work beneath the sea, and the boom or bust of hunting shipwrecks, Webber is a man smart enough to know when it is time to give up.

"I don't think I'll ever lose the adventure lust," he said. But, he also feels he has, more or less, used up his nine lives.

"I'm the kind of person who has tremendous problems on crews," Webber said. "I can't discipline myself to stay out of the action, that's where it gets kind of dangerous."

During recent explorations of the waters off Cape Hatteras, N.C., where powerful currents tug in opposite directions and predators hunt, Webber said, he began to feel his years.

But he is not going to quit before he takes on two more operations this year.

One is a search for the remains of the Jesus Maria de la Limpia Concepcion, which went down off Punta Santa Elena, Ecuador, in 1654.

Though partially salvaged by the Spanish soon after she foundered on a coral reef, the Limpia Concepcion is still believed to contain a booty worth $15 to $16 million.

Webber said he had already obtained a salvage lease from the Ecuadorian government, and his associates have located what they believe is the remains of a camp the Spaniards used when they recovered part of the Limpia Concepcion treasure in colonial times.

The galleon, the flagship of a fleet, struck the Chanduy Reef as it was bound for Panama with precious metals from points in Peru.

According to Webber, the wreckage lies in 40 feet of cold, murky water. However, with the help of instruments, he believes the salvage job should be "relatively easy."

Webber's second project is an attempt to recover the rich cargo of the steamship Central America, which sank off Cape Hatteras in 1857.

Now lying beneath more than 100 feet of shark-infested waters, the Central America was en route from Panama to New York City, Webber said. Most of the passengers were Gold Rush miners returning from California with their new-found wealth.

"The values in gold are phenomenal. They dwarf anything I've been involved in," he said.

While these adventures await the Rebesonia native in the next few months, he's also developing Sealeather Enterprises, a business based in the Dominican Republic through which Webber and three associates will market shark leather and several byproducts.

According to Webber, shark hide is prized among bootmakers and can be used for belts, wallets, and other accessories.

Using his long-term association with the Dominican government, Webber has set up a network of 18 coastal villages where the chief fishermen have been provided with the equipment and training necessary to hunt sharks.

This will rid the villagers of a nuisance which preys on their major food supply, while yielding meat, oil, and hides, he said. But, undersea exploring remains his true calling.

SECCA's Southeast Seven 8

WINSTON-SALEM — The Southeastern Center for Contemporary Art (SECCA) will open a major exhibition, "The Southeast Seven 8" on April 6, to be on view through May 26.

"Southeast Seven 8" is an exhibition of recent work by the seven southeastern artists who were awarded fellowships in the annual regional competition sponsored by SECCA and the National Endowment for the Arts.

Over 1,100 applications from artists living and working in the 11-state area served by SECCA applied for the fellowships. Each award winner received a $2,000 grant in addition to the exhibition.

The seven chosen for the grants and who will have work in the new show are:

- Scott Duce, Macon, Ga., painting.
 - Stephen H. Fox, Richmond, Va., painting.
 - John M. Hall, Hurdles Mills, N.C., photography.
 - Robert M. Hausey, Baton Rouge, La., painting.
 - Susan L. Iverson, Richmond, Va., fiberwork.
 - Leonard Koscianski, Kensington, Md., painting.
 - Thomas M. Soumalainen, Walnut Cove, N.C., sculpture.
- After closing at SECCA, the exhibition will travel to the Hunter Museum in Chattanooga, Tenn., and then to the Gray Gallery of the School of Art, Greenville.

Three Shows Coming Up At The GMA

Art by two painters will be on view from Tuesday, April 2 through the month of April, and a show of color photography will go on view Tuesday to remain up through May at the Greenville Museum of Art, 802 South Evans Street.

In the South Gallery, painter Naomi Camnitz will show recent work. A native of New York City, she has lived in Kinston since the mid-1960s, where she began her painting career. She is a colorist working within the traditions of 19th century Romanticism.

The North Gallery is the scene of a show of recent paintings by Lew Wilson, a native of Pennsylvania who has lived in Florida since 1954. He has exhibited widely in Florida as well as in France, Colombia and in the U.S. in Arizona, California and Texas.

Dr. David M. Baughan of Greenville, will have an exhibition of color photography in the Upstairs Gallery for the two-month period of April and May. Many of the photographs are vistas of American scenes of grandeur.

A reception, free and open to the public, will be held at the museum from 7 to 9 p.m. Tuesday, April 2.

Epic 'A.D.' Is Not A Roman Holiday

By Bob D. Matteo

The week's epic — in fact, the season's epic — is A.D. (NBC, March 31-April 4). Timed to coincide with Easter, the 12-hour miniseries charts the degeneration of Imperial Rome from the crucifixion of Jesus through Nero's reign as emperor. The two currents that alternate in this lavish, far-ranging tale are those of Roman decadence and the abuses of power and the flowering of early Christianity and the gospel of "love." But "A.D." is more adept at showing us the decadence than the moral regeneration. The infighting between the Jews and the Christian zealots is confusing, and the succession of prissy, venal emperors will have viewers scratching their heads and reaching for the nearest history book. The best way to keep one's bearings while watching "A.D." is to follow the stars — movie stars, that is.

"A.D." is full of them, whether it's Ava Gardner as Nero's mother, or Anthony Andrews as Nero. Few come through with first-rate performances, but then, movie spectacles have always been infamous for turning flesh-and-blood actors into wood. There's some fun to be had watching Andrews sink his teeth into the character of Nero, or watching John McEnery camp it up as the irrepressibly vile Caligula. The late James Mason is touchingly frail as Tiberius, Amanda Pays is lovely as a Jewish slave who falls in love with a Roman soldier, and Denis Quilley makes a forceful Peter. But "A.D." is as plodding as it is overblown. You can be amused by it for a few hours, maybe, but not for the interminable length it runs.

Far briefer and more amusing is the 1967 James Bond film starring Sean Connery, You Only Live Twice (ABC, March 31) — even if it's not one of the top Bonds by any means. Now that the Cold War is back, British agent 007 seems less anachronistic — except in his attitude toward women.

The week's psychological drama is Guilt by Conscience (CBS, April 2), starring hammy Anthony Hopkins in a dual role.

Screen legend Ava Gardner, who recently made her dramatic network debut in "Knots Landing," stars as Agrippina, the scheming, ambitious mother of Nero in the 12-hour miniseries "A.D." The opus, starring an all-star cast and more than 18,000 extras, airs in five parts, beginning Sunday, March 31 on NBC.

Michele Will Tell

Dear Michele: Is Lon Chaney Jr. still alive? I know his father, Lon Chaney, was born in 1883 and died in 1930. — LEONARD LEWIS, MIDDLETOWN, CONN.

The elder Chaney, known as the man of a thousand faces because of his numerous portrayals of assorted villains, monsters and madmen, was the son of deaf-mute parents. He did indeed die in 1930. His son, Creighton Chaney, was born on Feb. 10, 1906, in Oklahoma City, Okla. Creighton began his career under his real name and then assumed the name Lon Chaney Jr. in 1935. He appeared in approximately 150 films. The younger Chaney died in 1973.

Dear Michele: Who was the actress who appeared in a number of Elvis Presley movies and then later became a nun? — MICHELLE LONG, ROCHESTER, PA.

Dolores Hart co-starred with Elvis Presley in "Loving You" (1957) and "King Creole" (1958). Miss Hart, born Dolores Hicks in 1938, abandoned her film career after appearing in "Come Fly With Me" in 1963. She spent the next seven years in a Bethlehem, Conn., convent, and in 1979 took her vows. Today, she is known as Mother Dolores, a member of the Benedictine Order of Roman Catholic nuns. By the way, do you remember "Change of Habit" (1969)? Ironically, in that Elvis Presley film, Mary Tyler Moore starred as a nun who had to choose between Presley and the church.

Dear Michele: How much does Larry Hagman earn each week for his portrayal as J.R. Ewing on "Dallas"? — ANDREA M. ASHBY, VALINDA, CALIF.

Shed no tears for ol' J.R. Ewing. Hagman recently inked a two-year contract reportedly guaranteeing him $6 million. That translates to $100,000 per episode.

Dear Michele: Who played Mike Connors' secretary on "Mannix"? I have a bet with some friends who swear it was Diahann Carroll. Please prove them wrong. — GLYNIS RATES, MICHIGAN CITY, IND.

Gail Fisher appeared as secretary Peggy Fair on "Mannix" from 1968-75. Diahann Carroll, currently co-starring as Dominique Deveraux on "Dynasty," starred as Julia Baker on "Julia" from 1968-71.

TV Chatter

Just weeks before his death last July, James Mason told an interviewer that his biggest professional regret was "that people always seem to remember me for playing cads." Ironically, Mason's last television role was the cruel Roman Emperor Tiberius in NBC's 12-hour miniseries "A.D."

Premiering March 31, the miniseries picks up where the acclaimed "Jesus of Nazareth" left off. "A.D." vividly re-creates the turbulent years following the death of Christ with a star-studded cast you will instantly recognize. Less familiar, but nonetheless prominent, are these newcomers to American TV screens: Philip Sayer, starring as Paul; Cecil Humphreys as Caleb, a gladiator; Neil Dickson as Valerius, a young Roman soldier; Amanda Pays as Sarah; Diane Venora as Corinna, a woman gladiator; and Jonathan Hyde as Tigellinus, the epicurean fish-monger.

The miniseries was filmed entirely on location in Tunisia, North Africa, during a 40-week period. The six-city-block replica of the Roman Forum took six months to construct, using 108,000 board feet of lumber, 350 tons of plaster of Paris, 20 tons of steel, 20 tons of paint, 24 tons of nails, 4,602 feet of piping and 20,000 feet of wiring. More than 200 plaster replicas of statues from the Roman period are re-created from art books and paintings. More than 150 sets were required.

Thousands of letters and telegrams have been pouring into CBS since Mandy of "Dallas" (Deborah Shelton) let J.R. (Larry Hagman) have it in the face with a glass of wine when he became too friendly on the Jan. 25 episode. Viewer comments range from, "When he was temporarily blinded, you should have hit him over the head with a lamp!" to "How could you throw wine into that beautiful man's face?"

Thrilled with the response, Miss Shelton says: "I've always appreciated strong women. I think all modern women pride themselves in being as aggressive as their male counterparts. Let's see more of them on TV."

"The Lucie Arnaz Show," filmed in New York, premieres April 2 on CBS. In the new half-hour comedy, Miss Arnaz portrays a psychologist on a radio call-in talk show. Tony Roberts co-stars as her boss. If the show is successful, it could be placed on CBS's fall schedule.

Andrews Portrays A Different Nero

By Andrew J. Edelstein

In "A.D." the five-part NBC miniseries airing this week, Anthony Andrews' portrayal of the Roman Emperor Nero will differ greatly from the familiar stereotype created by such round actors as Charles Laughton and Peter Ustinov, who have previously played the role.

"I was somewhat amused by director Stuart Cooper's suggestion that I play Nero but that was mainly because I had the popular misconception that Nero was overweight and a bit of a glutton like Henry VIII," says Andrews, the British actor who's best known to American audiences for his portrayal of Sebastian Flyte, the doomed alcoholic student in the PBS series "Brideshead Revisited."

"But as I did further research by reading the Roman historian Suetonius, I discovered he was a lot different than that. He was rather spindly, with a pot belly and curly hair and a very peculiar voice — not unlike the voice I have today," says Andrews, speaking with a touch of laryngitis, which he picked up while on holiday in the Austrian Alps.

"He was an extraordinary actor and as such was always performing publicly and straining his voice so he had a very overused kind of voice," says Andrews.

Nero is a key figure in "A.D.," which tells the story of the decadence of Rome and the confrontation between Jewish zealots and early Christians. The cast of the $30 million miniseries also includes Ava Gardner, John Houseman, Richard Kiley, Susan Sarandon, Jennifer O'Neill, Colleen Dewhurst, Jack Warden, Ian McShane, Ben Vereen and the late James Mason in his final role.

"When we meet Nero in the series, he's a good-looking personable young man," Andrews says. "But that quickly changed as a result of the depraved way he lived life. He dealt in every conceivable manner of excess."

One myth about Nero that "A.D." will debunk is that the emperor fiddled when Rome burned. "The way we have it is that we have him recite Virgil which was more in keeping with Nero, who was a man who was passionate about art," says Andrews.

The actor, whose other credits include the theatrical film "Under the Volcano" and the American TV movies "Ivanhoe" and "The Scarlet Pimpernel," says he occasionally gets criticized for "appearing too often in disguise," a reference to his penchant for taking historical roles.

"The mainstay of my career ambition is variety," he says. "It's important for me to stretch myself as an actor."

HBO's 'Laundromat' Almost Comes Clean

By Andrew J. Edelstein

"The Laundromat" is no soap opera. It's a well-meaning play about two diverse women coping with their mutual loneliness — and it almost comes clean. The play boasts impressive credentials: It stars Carol Burnett and Amy Madigan ("Places in the Heart"), was directed by Robert Altman ("Nashville") and written by Marsha Norman, although five years before her Pulitzer Prize-winning play "Night, Mother." It debuts April 1 on HBO.

Although "The Laundromat" was filmed in Paris, it recreates well the atmosphere of an all-night laundromat in a run-down part of an American industrial town. A neon sign from a tacky Mexican restaurant across the street blinks on and off all night, shedding tubular blue light on the rows of washers and dryers. A radio — left on by the sleeping attendant — plays a non-stop stream of smoky blues.

It's 3 a.m. and Alberta (Miss Burnett), a prim former school teacher, is alone in the laundromat. She's well-dressed and stately, obviously from the "other side of town." She looks uncomfortable; it's a mystery why she's here.

In bursts Dee Dee (Miss Madigan), a working-class child-woman in her early 20s, who lives in an apartment above the Mexican restaurant.

'AW' Punk Princess Is A Wild And Crazy Gal

By Connie Passalacqua

"I'm not into monotone. I don't want her to be your basically boring soap opera character. I want people to look at her and say, 'She's insane,'" says Katie Rich, 20, who joined "Another World" two months ago as Dee Evans, the punk-princess niece of loan shark Tony the Tuna (George Pentacost). Both on screen and off, the outrageous Miss Rich is a spitfire of manic energy.

Dee arrived in Bay City looking like a fugitive from MTV. She wore a black leather miniskirt, green neon stockings and a hot pink blouse accented with assorted chains. Her hair was red, blue and streaked with green. A menacing Tony ordered suave Cass Winthrop (Stephen Shnetzer), who failed to pay up on a $2,000 loan, to turn Dee into a debutante. This soap version of "My Fair Lady" has so far been charming, thanks mostly to Dee's spunkiness and originality.

Asked how she decided to become an actress, Miss Rich says, "I just came kicking and screaming out of my mother's stomach. I knew! When I was 4 years old I'd watch another child on a commercial and scream and cry 'Why isn't it me?' and I carried on that way until I got my first break. Even now a guy can't take me to a movie because I carry on and tear up the place because I want the parts."

Play Ball! '85 Season Is About To Begin

By Lorenzo Carcaterra

The kinks are gone. The weight has been lost in the Florida sun. The spikes have been polished, the uniforms cleaned, the bats un-splintered, the balls un-scarred. The 1985 baseball season is about to begin. Like all seasons it begins with questions fans have spent the winter arguing about. Will the Detroit Tigers repeat as world champs? Will the New York Mets develop into a dominant team? Will the Toronto Blue Jays finally win a division? Are the Chicago Cubs for real? Will the Texas Rangers always be that bad?

The answers won't be known until October. Until then, this much is known: The Tigers are a better team because of the acquisition of pitcher Walt Terrell, who may become a big winner in the American League. But the rest of the division has also improved. The New York Yankees with Rickey Henderson will have more speed and a much improved defensive outfield. The Baltimore Orioles have picked up more depth at key positions. The Toronto Blue Jays finally have a bullpen. The rest of the division may spend the summer just watching.

The AL West will be, as always, a state of confusion. Pick either California, Kansas City, Minnesota or Chicago and you may have found the division winner. Forget about Seattle and Texas — especially Texas.

The National League East will have a two-way fight between the Cubs and the Mets.

Both went out this winter and picked up some help. The Cubs got left-hander Ray Fontenot from the Yankees. The Mets got Gary Carter, the best catcher in baseball, from Montreal. The prospects of a lineup which will include Keith Hernandez, George Foster, Darryl Strawberry and Carter have Met fans drooling. If the pitching holds up, the bullpen stays healthy and the defense doesn't leak, then a flag will once again fly over Shea Stadium.

The San Diego Padres will find it difficult to repeat in the NL West, but not as difficult as it will be for both the Los Angeles Dodgers or the Atlanta Braves to catch them. The Cincinnati Reds may not be a better team in 1985, but they will certainly be more aggressive under player/manager Pete Rose. The Houston Astros and the San Francisco Giants may blow some smoke, but not enough to cause a fire.

A number of players are geared for excellent seasons, a few stars will fade, a couple of rookies will emerge, much like Dwight Gooden of the Mets did last season. Such is the nature of a full baseball season. The only surprise would be if none of those things happened in 1985.

Bellisario Defends Helicopter Stunts

By Ian Harmer

HOLLYWOOD. — Helicopter pilots have lost their lives in two of the action-adventure series he delivers to CBS each week, but producer Donald Bellisario has no plans to scale down the amount of stunt flying in his shows.

Said Bellisario, himself an avid helicopter pilot: "No piece of film is worth a man's life, obviously — but that's not a choice you are required to make when you set out to create an exciting piece of entertainment for television."

"It's a little like the guy who's driving to work, and hears a radio bulletin about an auto accident," he says. "It doesn't stop him from driving to work every day, and since he's already a careful driver, there's not much he can do except feel sad that someone died."

The big difference is that a pilot is always a whole lot more careful and safety-conscious than a driver down there on the ground, in part because while a car is designed to withstand an impact, helicopters have to be light and can't be built to crash.

"And we never forget that what goes up must come down, and sometimes it will come down ahead of schedule."

Bellisario became a helicopter addict when he took a germ of an idea, and developed it into "Magnum, P.I.," which became a smash. A stunt flier died during production of an early episode of the Tom Selleck series.

JUST MINDING MY OWN BUSINESS

Is He Really?
Novelist Harry Crews
Peers Into the Mysterious
World of the Gator

HEADLINERS

"Thank heaven for little girls," sang the late Maurice Chevalier about Leslie Caron in the 1958 multi-Oscar-winning film Gigi. Well, that "little girl" just became a grandmother. "Can you believe it?" asks Caron, who earned the title grandmere courtesy of her 25-year-old daughter, Jennifer. Caron herself has taken up residence in Paris after four years in Los Angeles. "In L.A. I never thought or talked about anything important," she says. "My mind had become dull. So I felt utterly stupid when I got back to Paris. It took me a year to adjust." But it wasn't just hopes says Caron, now a mature 53. "Why do you think I came back here to live?" So that's why the Louvre's Mona Lisa's been smiling all these years.

CARON, GRANDMAMA: SHE VOICES PLATON

Most parents have a standard litany to deliver as their children leave the nest to find their way in the cold, cruel world: Don't accept rides from strangers, wear your boots, button up your overcoat, eat three nourishing meals a day. Not Judd Nelson's mother. Her cheery advice as Judd went out to seek fame and fortune as an actor? "Stay hungry." It's not that Mrs. Nelson is an unfeeling woman; as her son explains, it's simply that "she feels if you get satiated or full and the refrigerator isn't empty, you get lazy, lose ambition and sight of what you want." Under the circumstances, maybe no one should tell Mom that the title of her son's new movie is The Breakfast Club.

Jackie Cooper, 62, had only three close encounters with horses in his more than 50 movies, but the television director and former child actor (he starred with Wallace Beery in The Champ) is now making up for lost time and looking for the mane chance. He's the oldest "pony boy" at Santa Anita and Hollywood Park. "I'm no Buck Jones in the saddle," admits Cooper, whose chores include riding a stable pony named, appropriately enough, Pony, and escorting race horses to the tracks for their morning gallops and workouts. Cooper isn't just a hired hand; he's also part owner of some of the horses (Pussy Cat, Proper Majesty, Harrumph and Pshaw) he shepherds for trainer George Hartstone.

"Ten years from now I can see myself as a trainer too," says Cooper. "It's not an impossibility. I'll still need that reason to get up in the morning." And who knows? Cooper may be the one to groom the next champ.

After all those years of playing Laura Ingalls on Little House on the Prairie, it hardly seems that Melissa Gilbert would need an education in small-town living. But that's precisely what she got in the tiny hamlet of Marfa, Texas, where she spent six weeks researching her role as a 16-year-old country girl in the film Sylvester. "The girls there lack sophistication and street smarts, yet there is an incredible warmth and sense of family," was the 21-year-old Gilbert's appraisal of things. Marfa nightlife is about as diverting as watching grass grow, but that was perfectly OK with Melissa. "Most nights I was so tired from working that all I wanted to do was go to bed." And as for Rob Lowe, her romantic interest for the last three years? There's no little house in the couple's foreseeable future. "Rob and I get very close and then sick of each other within two days," explains Gilbert.

"As an actor, you're like a bonsai — people try to prune and mold you," laments Stockard Channing, who feels that her attempts to cultivate an image as a serious actress keep getting nipped in the bud. But Channing, perhaps best-known as the tough-talking Rizzo in the film Grease, finally seems to be hitting pay dirt: She has received raves for her performance as the mother of a brain damaged child in the Broadway production of A Day in the Death of Joe Egg. Still, Channing thinks she has a way to go. "They once said that I was a musical comedienne," she mourns. "I was floored! Makes me feel a little schizo at times."

Being raised as I was alongside the Okefenokee Swamp in South Georgia, I came early on to respect and admire alligators. When I was a boy, I saw two men — both in their early twenties and about half drunk at the time — go into a little pond with the intention of catching a gator, one not even five feet long. God knows why they wanted to take him alive, but they did, so they backed their truck right up to the bank and went into the water. They did finally get him into the bed of the pickup, but not before he beat the clothes off both of them with his tail and marked them from head to toe with red welts.

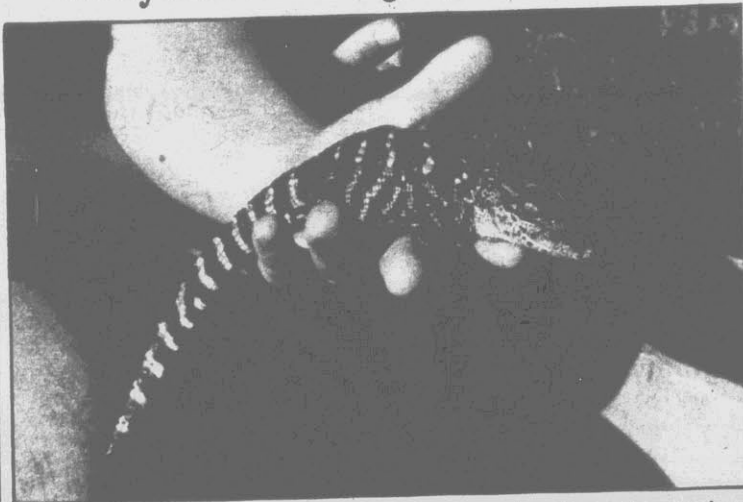

During all the thrashing and the yelling, I was rooting for the gator. Maybe it was because I was young myself, or maybe it was because I knew even then that gators only grow a foot a year from the time they are born, and so the little guy they were after wasn't even five years old, but whatever the reason, I came away from the pond that day tremendously impressed with the tenacity, the sheer toughness of the gator. I never forgot that day, nor the alligator's struggle.

And so I come these many years later to celebrate the gator, one of the most maligned and misunderstood creatures native to America. I celebrate the gator because he has my admiration, the same kind of admiration I have for anything or anybody that can take the heat and keep on keeping on. And what heat the alligator has taken over the years. Because people, for reasons best known to themselves, like to carry their clothes around in his hide, the alligator has been relentlessly hunted throughout his entire range, from the Dismal Swamp of Virginia, south to Florida, west to the Rio Grande in Texas and up to the Arkansas line. The slaughter was such that to prevent the gator's extinction, he was put on the Federal Endangered Species List, and the hides could not be shipped to foreign countries such as France, one of the biggest buyers of gator hides.

Putting the gator on the Endangered Species List, however, only made poaching a big business, worth an estimated $3 million a year in Florida alone. The poachers are simply salting the hides down or freezing them, waiting for the market to open up again. But poachers are not the only ones harassing and hounding the gator. Look at what has happened in the Everglades. Back at the turn of the century, a man named Lopez is supposed to have killed 10,000 gators in a single year around Lost Man's River alone. There are few, if any, gators around Lost Man's River today. Throughout the entire Glades, the gator population is in deep trouble. But it was not the poachers that made life intolerable for the gator in the Everglades. It was the Army Corps of Engineers. They came in and said the canals had to be ten feet deep, and they diverted the water that would ordinarily go into the swamp until they almost succeeded in drying the thing up. What caused the flood control people to do such a thing? Big ranching and big agriculture. It was the farmers and the ranchers who killed the gators out of the Everglades, not the poachers.

ARE THE GATORS OUT TO GET US?

They're no angels, but then again, as Harry Crews will argue, neither are we.

As a species, the American alligator has become as vulnerable as the one above.

But despite poaching, despite siphoning off wetlands for ranching and agriculture, despite the drain-and-fill mentality that seems to have seized the entire Southeastern United States, the alligator refuses to quit doing what he does best: surviving.

What is this swamp dweller, this survivor? For starters, he is older than you and I will ever be; the gator was in Florida 15 million years ago. The gator watched us come out of the caves, knew us before we had fire. It is for that very reason that tourists here in Florida stare at gators for so long, with such fascination and riveted attention. When they see a gator gliding through the water, entirely submerged but for its knoblike eyes that seem never to blink, it awakens something in them that is long lost but not dead.

The tourists wonder, sometimes aloud, what would happen if one of them accidentally fell into the water with the gator. The answer is probably nothing. The human is so much larger than anything he normally eats, the gator would swim away, given the opportunity. But of course anything with teeth is apt to bite. And anybody with any sense would keep a good distance between himself and anything that grows as big as a gator (males from 11 to 12 feet weigh between 450 and 550 pounds; females are rarely longer than 9 feet or weigh more than 160 pounds). For food, gators would much rather make do with frogs, fish, soft shell turtles, and, strange to say, other gators.

But gators have been known to attack humans. When it happens, it is usually because the sow, or female, gator is defending her eggs. Somebody comes walking along, sees a mound, but does not recognize it as a gator's nest. The result is a hissing gator charging out of the brush or water on her crooked feet, feet that she never uses to swim but only to walk or run. And she is surprisingly quick over a distance of 20 or 30 feet. Unless you have the speed of an NFL cornerback, she'll get you every time if she really wants you.

Before the letters come, I have not said here that a gator will never attack a human. All I am maintaining is that in every instance I know anything about, it could have been avoided with a little common sense.

Outraged and anguished citizens who lose dogs to gators are forever pointing to that fact as evidence of the inherent viciousness of gators. Inherent viciousness has nothing to do with it. It is a matter of the gator trying to stay alive, to survive. Take, as an example, what happens all too often in the canals of Miami, Hollywood and Fort Lauderdale, Florida. The canals have a lot of gators in them because the gator's natural habitat has been drained or built over. There are not enough frogs and fish and turtles in those waterways to feed the gator population. So the gator takes what he can get. I love dogs as much as anybody else, and better than some folks, but I cannot fault a gator trying to stay alive. He is only doing what you or I would do in similar circumstances.

Maybe it is because I grew up near woods and waters filled with gators, but when I'm gigging frogs on a spring night out in Cross Creek, not far from where I live, I consciously listen for the roar of the great bull gator, either fighting or mating, out in the cypress swamp. When I hear it, I am glad it is there. The absence of his voice would diminish the quality of the night for me. FW

SOME SUREFIRE WAYS TO LOSE A GATOR'S RESPECT

Alligators have been on this planet for 140 million years, and we humans still haven't reached a truce with them. Since 1948, there have been 66 reported attacks by alligators on humans, resulting in four fatalities. Don Pfitzer, of the Southwestern division of the U.S. Fish & Wildlife Service, gives this advice for avoiding close encounters of the unpleasant kind with this potentially dangerous species:

1. Don't feed alligators. "Newcomers and tourists don't realize that if you feed alligators, they lose their fear of humans and associate people with feeding time."

2. Don't let pets wander where alligators have been seen. Many people in Florida have found alligators sunning themselves right in their backyards since developers have built in areas that were formerly the habitat of alligators. Don't treat them like a zoo attraction. "The most severe loss takes place with animals, particularly small dogs," says Pfitzer.

3. Don't swim with them. With the rapidly increasing population of Florida (800-1,000 people a day), many areas that are populated by alligators have become swimming areas. Never swim where alligators have recently been spotted. "Small children," says Pfitzer, "are especially susceptible because they look just like a dog to the alligator."

Concludes Pfitzer, "Remember: An alligator commands respect!"

Hijack victim John Costa's six days of terror in Tehran

DIARY OF A HOSTAGE

By Bethany Kandel

DAY ONE: The gunshots woke John Costa. "I heard a commotion coming from the first-class cabin," he remembers. "I saw a man screaming and shooting a handgun right past me. Then a steward came down the aisle, his hands in the air and a terrified look on his face. Behind him a security guard was bleeding and being dragged by his arms."

Only 14 minutes after Kuwait Airways Flight 221 departed from Dubai, in the United Arab Emirates, Costa knew: The plane was being hijacked to Iran. "The first thing I thought was, 'This is no place for an American.'"

His ordeal had just started. For the New York businessman, the journey had begun like any of his frequent trips to the Middle East in his role as manager of a Connecticut surgical supply company. He wound up on Flight 221 from Kuwait only because there was no direct flight on Dec. 3 from Cairo to Pakistan, his last stop.

For the next six days, the world watched as once again political fanatics took hostages, this time demanding the release of 17 prisoners in Kuwait. If their demands weren't met, they warned, the 161 hostages would pay. Two people paid with their lives. Costa paid, too. The price: 150 hours of hell. "Being threatened by death concentrates your attention beautifully," says the 50-year-old bachelor. "They can terrorize you until you reach your limit. Then you figure, what's going to happen is going to happen."

The four Arabic-speaking captors, dressed in casual Western clothes, ordered the four American passengers forward. Costa obeyed. "When a guy is holding a gun to your head, you listen," he says.

After the terrorists forced the pilot to land at Tehran's airport, shots again rang out from the front cabin, and the body of the first American victim — Charles Hegna, an official with the Agency for International Development (AID) — was tossed onto the runway.

All the hostages were stunned. "We had no idea what was going to happen next," Costa says. "But we knew that if we made a wrong move, we'd have our heads blown off. We saw the guns and grenades."

As radio negotiations began, the hijackers agreed to release 46 women and children.

DAY TWO: "Things got rougher," Costa recalls. He and the other Americans — AID officials Charles Kapar and William Stanford — were taken to the curtained-off first-class cabin, which Costa describes as "the chamber of horrors."

John Costa, after his release by Arab hijackers in Tehran.

"They tied my hands very tightly and made me sit on them while they released another 23 hostages. After several hours, I lost all feeling in my hands. When they finally removed the ropes, my hands had swollen to three times normal size and were turning purple."

Then the door to the plane reopened. "One of the men grabbed Stanford and pushed him to the top of the stairs," Costa recalls. With a gun at his back, Stanford pleaded with negotiators to yield to the hijackers' demands. "Send help,' I heard him say."

Six shots rang out. Stanford was dead. "One of the hijackers — I called him the goon — looked at us and smiled. If they were going to shoot an American a day, at the most I had two days left."

DAY THREE: "I was thinking that somebody ought to be trying to rescue us, but as far as I could tell, nobody was. That day 30 people were freed, but still not me. Later, I realized two Kuwaiti diplomats who had been sitting in front of me were gone. I heard three shots and figured the worst."

An Iranian photographer came aboard to film the Kuwaitis lying in what looked like a pool of blood. In reality, they had only been doused with ketchup and forced to lie still. "Like everybody else in the world, we were supposed to think they were dead," Costa says.

Before they learned otherwise, the horror show continued. "Chuck [Kapar] and I were tied so the goon could beat us up. He hit both sides of my face, around my eyes and the top of my head. My left cheek was bleeding, but he kept coming at me. I could see in his eyes that he was enjoying every minute of it."

DAY FOUR: While Costa and Kapar recovered, eight more hostages were released. Then, suddenly, the two Kuwaitis reappeared. "The one positive happening in this whole thing was when they walked back down the aisle. I was so happy to see them — alive."

Yet this relief was short-lived. "The hijackers threatened that at the least, we'd all be blown up together. They said: 'We don't care if we live or die. We're out to accomplish a certain thing. If we die in the attempt, that's fine. And if we die, you die, too.'"

DAY FIVE: After releasing 39 more passengers, the hijackers tortured the two Americans in full view of Iranian TV cameras to emphasize their demands. "They tied us back-to-back at the top of the stairway and kicked and punched us till we screamed. Three of my ribs cracked, and he got a black eye. Once we fell over, and I was kicked in the throat.

"They wanted us to admit that we were with the CIA. I refused, because I didn't see how giving in to them would help. They thought the other two Americans had been from the CIA, and they were dead."

The interrogation moved inside. "I saw the leader light a cigarette and then felt a searing pain in my left ear. He put the lit end to my forehead, my cheek; he knocked the cinders down my back. Then he held a lighter to my hair. I could smell the stench as it burned down to my scalp. When he

YEAR

Amazon withstands active kids and cookouts. Gives you time to relax, since it needs little water and cuts mowing two-thirds.

So deep-rooted is Amazon... it grows into practically indestructible turf.

GRASS SEED WILL NEVER GROW A LAWN LIKE THIS—DROUGHT & WEAR RESISTANT!
Amazon lawns stay green right thru scorching heat and drought!

Two Grown Men Can't Pull It Apart! Zoysia Saves Time, Work & Money

Amazon is the Trade Mark Registered U.S. Patent Office for our Meyer Z-52 Zoysia Grass

By Jack T. Johnson, Agronomist

Every year I see people pour more and more money into their lawns. They dig, fertilize and lime. They rake it all in. They scatter their seed and roll and water it.

Birds love it! Seeds which aren't washed away by rain give them a feast. But some seed grows, and soon it's time to weed, water and mow, mow ... until summer comes to burn the lawn into hay, or crabgrass and diseases infest it.

That's what happens to ordinary grass, but not to Amazon Zoysia.

"MOWED IT 2 TIMES," WRITES WOMAN
For example, Mrs. M. R. Mitter writes me how her lawn "...is the envy of all who see it. When everybody's lawns around here are brown from drought ours just stays as green as ever. I've never watered it, only when I put the plugs in... Last summer we had it mowed (2) times. Another thing, we never have to pull any weeds—it's just wonderful!"

LAWN WATERED ONLY ONCE
And from Iowa came word that the state's largest Men's Garden Club picked a Zoysia lawn as the "top lawn—nearly perfect" in its area. Yet this lawn had been watered only once all summer up to August!

CHOKES OUT CRABGRASS
Thick, rich, luxurious, established Amazon grows into a carpet of grass that chokes out crabgrass and weeds all summer long.

FOR SLOPES, PLAY AREAS, BARE SPOTS
End erosion of slopes with Amazon. Perfect answer for hard-to-cover spots, play-worn areas.

NO NEED TO RIP OUT PRESENT GRASS—PLUG AMAZOY INTO OLD LAWN, NEW GROUND OR NURSERY AREA

Just set Amazon plugs into holes in ground like a cork in a bottle. Plant 1 foot apart, checkerboard style.

When planted in existing lawn areas plugs will spread to drive out old, unwanted growth including weeds—from part shade to full sun. Goes off its green color after killing frosts. Begins regaining its green color at the time when the temperature in the spring is consistently warm. This, of course, varies with climate. Easy planting instructions with order.

NO SEED, NO SOD!
There's no seed that produces winter-hardy Meyer Zoysia. Sod of ordinary grass brings with it the problems of seed: like weeds, diseases, burning out, other ills. Save time, work, money. Plug in Amazon.

FREE

PATENTED STEP-ON PLUGGER WITH ORDERS OF 1000 PLUGS OR MORE.

Amazon exclusive! No one else can offer you this patented 2-way plugger. Saves bending, time, work. Light, rugged, invaluable for transplanting. Cuts away competing growth as it digs plug holes.

WEAR RESISTANT

When America's largest University tested 13 leading grasses for wear resistance, such as foot scuffing, the Zoysia (matrella and japonica Meyer Z-52) led all others.

Your Amazon lawn takes such wear as cookouts, lawn parties, lawn furniture, etc. Grows so thick you could play football on it and not get your feet muddy. Even if children play on it, they won't hurt it—or themselves.

Amazon thrives in porous, sandy soil, "builder's soil"—even salty beach areas! Beauty is but one advantage of Zoysia Grass. It's also so vigorous and rich it thrives in soils where lesser grasses have failed you repeatedly. Start your Amazon lawn this Spring, and never re-seed your lawn again!

CUTS YOUR WORK, SAVES YOU MONEY
Your deep-rooted, established Amazon lawn saves you time and money in many ways. It never needs replacement...ends re-seeding forever. Fertilizing and watering (water costs money, too) are rarely if ever needed. It ends the need for crabgrass killers permanently. It cuts pushing a noisy mower in the blistering sun by ½.

YOUR OWN SUPPLY OF PLUG TRANSPLANTS
Established Amazon gives you Zoysia plugs to plant in other areas as desired!

Meyer Z-52 Zoysia Grass was perfected by U.S. Govt., released in cooperation with U.S. Golf Assoc. as a superior grass.

MR. HI TECH

MODERN TECHNOLOGY MADE SIMPLE (IN OUR MONTHLY COLUMN)

AND NOW: THE WORLD OF DICK TRACY

Picture yourself at the beach, when you suddenly wonder whether you unplugged the iron back home. Instead of panicking, you grab your portable telephone, dial a neighbor, and ask them to check. Within minutes the neighbor calls back to assure you that all is well.

Thanks to the cellular mobile telephone, you can do that today in a number of American cities. So far, nearly all cellular phones are in cars, but they don't have to be. By 1990, you should be able to place a call from anywhere to anywhere using a phone small enough to fit in a pocket or purse.

True, we've had portable telephones since the first phones went into cars in 1946. But mobile phone systems use one central transmitter to serve an entire city over just a few frequencies. Even in the heavily populated New York City area, only a dozen car phones can be in use at one time. And the quality of the transmission can be awful.

In a cellular phone system, the entire service area is divided into hexagon-shaped cells, from 2 to 20 miles across. Each cell has its own "cell site," with a low-power transmitter. The call goes from your phone to the nearest cell site, then to a mobile telephone switching office (MTSO), and from there to whomever you're calling.

As you move toward the edge of one cell, computers at the MTSO automatically shift your call to the transmitter in the next cell. Unlike the dozen frequencies of a mobile phone system, a cellular system offers 666 channels. Each cell can handle 666 calls at one time.

Of course, cellular telephones are still fairly young, and it will be several years before even the major metropolitan areas have cellular telephone service.

Virtually all cellular phones today are bulky, three-piece outfits (hand set, transceiver, and antenna) meant for a car. But OKI Advanced Communications has a mobile telephone that fits into a briefcase. And Motorola offers one that is smaller than a brick and weighs under two pounds. The drawback to a cellular phone for most of us isn't the size but the price. Cellular phones cost $1,800 and up. You then pay as much as $50 a month to hook up to a cellular phone system, plus a use charge that can top 50 cents a minute.

Still, it's likely that time, competition and increased usage will cut the price of both equipment and service. Anthony Russo, marketing vice president for OKI Advanced Communications, thinks consumers will pay as little as $1,000 for a cellular phone a year from now. And Martin Cooper, former research director for Motorola, thinks that the price of a cellular phone will be down to $500 within five years. Products tend to become mass-market items at prices below $500.

Competition among the providers of cellular telephone service is guaranteed, since the Federal Communications Commission is licensing two operators in each market — only one of them a telephone company. Ameritech Mobile Communications Inc. provides cellular phone service in the Midwestern states. Vice President of Public Relations Katie Boudas notes that the monthly charge for cellular service in Chicago is $15 now, compared to $50 when the service started late in 1983. All cellular systems feature lower rates in off-hours.

Cellular One is the non-wireline cellular company in Boston. A typical user, says general manager Paul Tobin, pays 44 cents a minute during business hours, and 26 cents a minute at off-hours, plus a monthly charge. But occasional users can skip the monthly charge and just pay 75 cents for each minute the phone is in use. In time, says Cooper, all cellular systems will offer rates aimed at luring casual users for the hours when business users are scarce.

Then it's only a matter of whittling down the cellular phone to something truly portable. James Caille is operations marketing manager for cellular phones at Motorola. Asked about the cellular phone of the future, Caille says, "Chester Gould gave us the ideal when he put a wrist radio on Dick Tracy." FW held it to the tip of my nose, I looked into the flame and thought, 'This must be the prelude to something worse.'

"I didn't know how bad I looked till I saw the horror on the faces of the other hostages," Costa says.

Instead of the final blow, the hijackers brought out cans of tuna fish and joined them for what Costa assumed was his last supper. "A steward made me a sandwich; the purser held my hand. Everyone was nice to me, maybe because they didn't really think I was going to live much longer either."

DAY SIX: The final day was tense as negotiations deteriorated. The hijackers released the last seven crew members, "but not before intimidating them," Costa says. "The leader played with his revolver and threatened them till the moment before they were freed. It was sadistic."

Then, unknown to Costa and the seven remaining hostages, the hijackers announced that they had wired the airliner with explosives; they set a final deadline and broadcast a last will and testament to the control tower.

"The hijackers began wreaking havoc on the plane, breaking windows, ripping up chairs and destroying overhead compartments. They set up a Pepsi bottle and took target practice," Costa recalls. "Then they tied Harry Clark [the pilot], Kapar and me together — gently, compared to usual."

As they sat knee-to-knee, Costa "made an effort to think normal thoughts and [make] light-hearted conversation. Harry and I even planned a dinner date for January, when he'd be in New York. This was our way of looking to the future."

Moments before the hijackers' deadline was to expire, a medic came aboard. "I scarcely noticed him, because medics had come on board before," Costa says. "Then we heard the sounds of a scuffle. I looked back and saw the medic having a tussle with the goon. Then tear gas began to flood the compartment."

"This must be it," Harry shouted as we loosened our ropes. Gunshots whizzed past us. Harry got free and ran for the front." Costa, with his hands still tied, and Kapar, bound by a pair of handcuffs, flew down the stairs to safety. There they learned that Iranian soldiers disguised as airport maintenance workers had captured the hijackers.

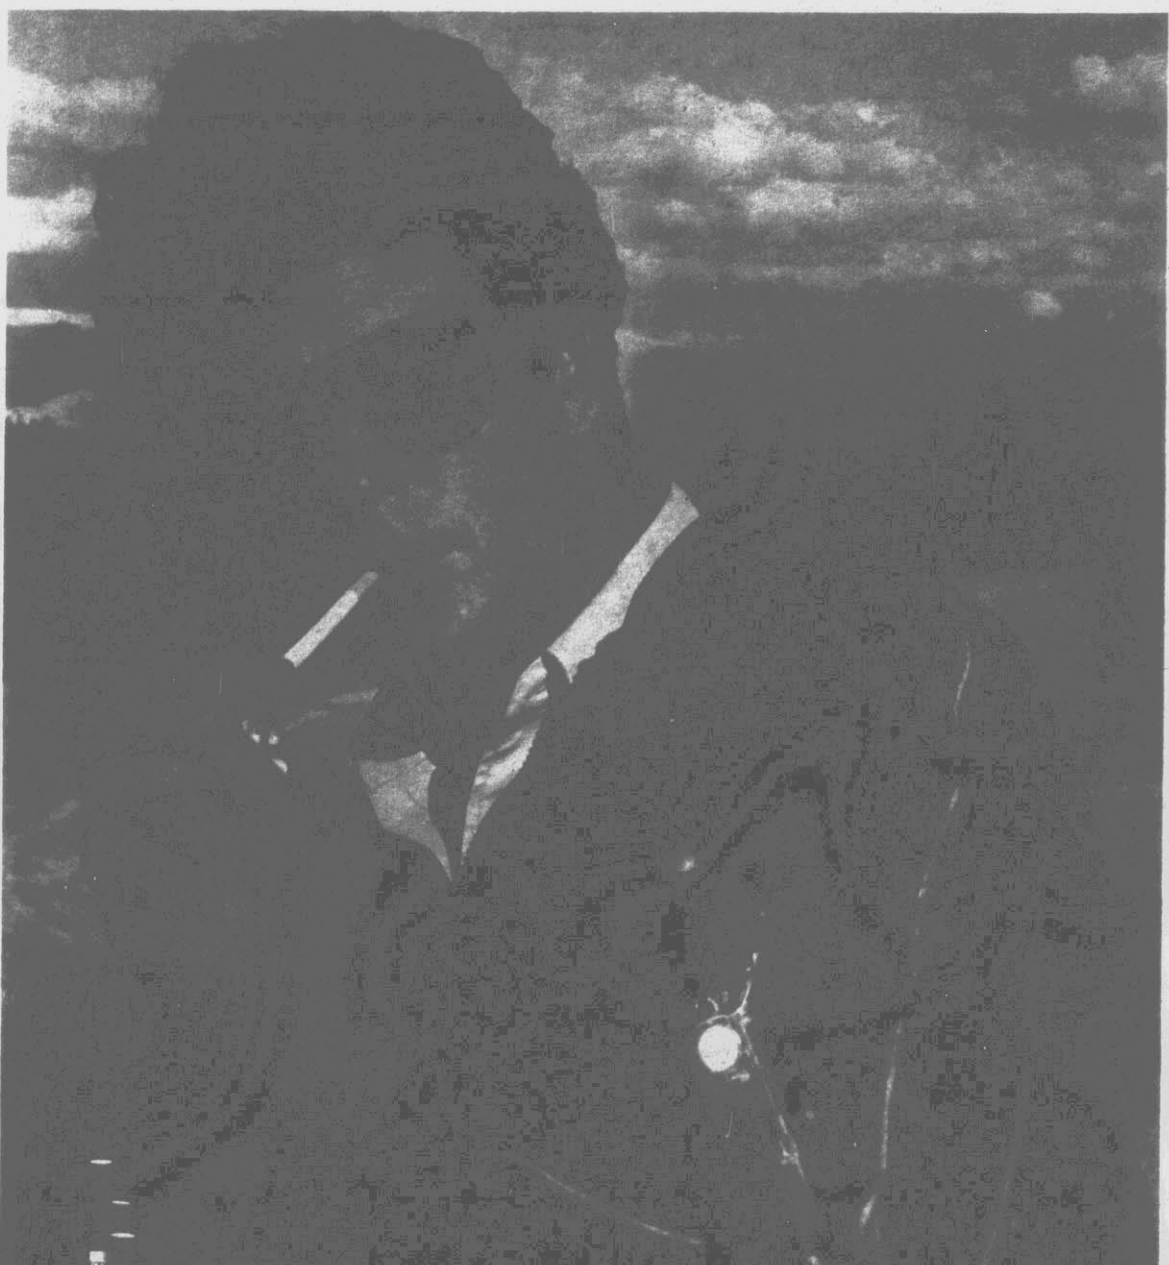

"Harry and I embraced in a big bear hug. I felt relieved, but it was still unreal, as if it had all been happening in a nightmare...but the nightmare was finally over."

EPILOGUE: In January, Costa, represented by New York personal-injury lawyer Harry Lipsig, filed a $110 million lawsuit against Iran and Kuwait Airways, charging that the Iranian government encouraged the Arab hijackers by not taking action sooner and that the airline failed to provide sufficient security.

Several questions remain about why no one responded more quickly, whether the United States did enough to protect its citizens, and whether there was any Iranian complicity in the incident. Iran has said it will try the hijackers, although nothing further has been heard about the matter.

In January, as planned, Costa and Clark met for dinner in New York. "We toasted to good health," Costa says, "for a very long time." FW

INTRODUCING THE NEW GI BILL PLUS THE NEW ARMY COLLEGE FUND.

AN INVITATION TO SERVE YOUR COUNTRY AND CAPTURE UP TO $25,200 FOR COLLEGE.

On July 1st, the Army will introduce two educational programs that could enrich your finances as well as your mind.

If you have plans for college, these programs can change the way you plan to pay; and if you hadn't planned on going, they could change your plans completely.

They're called the New GI Bill Plus the New Army College Fund. And if you think the titles are big, wait'll you see the benefits.

MONEY FOR COLLEGE

With the New GI Bill Plus the New Army College Fund, you can earn up to $25,200 while you serve. Here's how:

First, you contribute to your education—$100 per month for the first twelve months of your enlistment.

Then the government contributes—up to $9,600. That's what the New GI Bill's really all about.

Then the Army contributes up to $14,400—courtesy of the New Army College Fund.

Of course, how much you save depends on how long you serve and the specialty you qualify for; right now, there are over 80 specialties that entitle you to benefit from both programs. For maximum returns, see the chart.

GET AN EDUCATION BEFORE YOU GET TO COLLEGE

It's called the Army experience. And with every sunrise run and field exercise, night patrol and pat on the back, you'll learn about the kinds of things no one can put a price on: self-reliance and discipline. Teamwork and pride.

THE REWARDS OF BEING A SOLDIER

They go far beyond the chance to earn money for college. And include the opportunity to serve your country.

As well as the opportunity to see it—and perhaps other countries, too. For as a soldier, you'll have the chance to travel; to meet people, make new friends and visit places you may never have thought you'd see.

You'll also have the opportunity to grow before you attend college. So that you can get the most out of it when you decide to go.

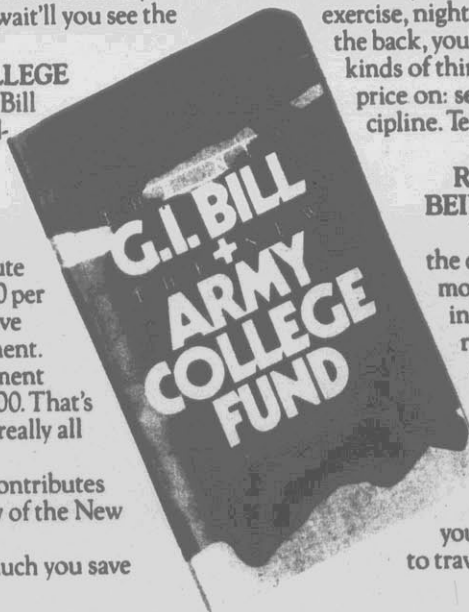

Plus, there's the opportunity to get into the best physical shape of your life—thanks to our Physical Training program.

By now you may be getting the impression that the New GI Bill Plus the New Army College Fund present all kinds of opportunities (and you're right); unfortunately, there isn't all kinds of room left to describe them.

JACQUELINE BISSET

A STRONG-WILLED HOLLYWOOD SURVIVOR

At 40, Jacqueline Bisset has appeared in 38 films, including Airport (1969), Murder on the Orient Express (1974), The Deep (1977), and last year's Under the Volcano. In the most recent, she emerged as a respected dramatic actress — a talent on display again in the TV movie of Tolstoy's Anna Karenina, which aired last week, and in this month's Forbidden. The latter is a made-for-cable movie in which Bisset plays a German woman who hides her Jewish lover in her apartment during the Nazi era. Bisset, who lives in Beverly Hills, was interviewed for FAMILY WEEKLY by writer Dan Yakir.

Yakir: What lured you to Forbidden?

Bisset: I was interested in the period and the character. I'm attracted by the single-mindedness of this woman. [But] she's not tough. I don't like these hard modern women who do their thing.

Q: How do you sustain a relationship when your work takes you all over the world?

Bisset: It's terribly tiring to try and have a relationship going at the same time. [But] I don't find it hard to follow a man at all. You take a few books. . . . Now I'm involved with a dancer [Russian emigré ballet star Alexander Godunov], and as soon as I go with him on tour, I have to be satisfied with the fact that we can only be together from 11 p.m. to 2 a.m. You have to let the person off the hook or you'll make him crazy.

Q: Are you a romantic?

Bisset: Yes, up to a point. I still have in me the images that fascinated me as a kid, images from fairy tales. . . . fantasies about men. . . . those prince images. I accept them completely.

Q: Do men live up to them?

Bisset: Some men do. I think of men as wanting to be civilized and loving and warm. There are men who make you feel like a woman and men who make you feel like a dog. . . . You have to try and reach those magic moments when you're dancing on a lawn at 3 a.m. and you're hearing this music when there isn't any.

Q: You've had long-term relationships, but you never got married.

Bisset: It's funny, but when I was doing Under the Volcano, the character I played, in order to get along with her husband [played by Albert Finney], was often forced into silence, which created a lot of tension. At times, I really felt like Albert's wife, just sitting there with him socially. Finney has an enormous personality and is very dominant, and at times I felt like the little wife. . . . I've never been the little wife, since I never got married, but I know the feeling. It's a feeling I resist.

Q: Do people take you lightly because of your beauty?

Bisset: I've never thought of myself as particularly beautiful. I know I can put it together when I need to, but people who know me well say it's the least thing about me in terms of personality. It's not something I focus on too much. I want to be attractive, but it's important to be seen for what you are. It's terribly important for people to see that underneath, I'm as complex as they are. The assumption that good-looking people don't have problems is devastating. It's disrespectful. To have respect and be respectful of others is really important to me.

Q: Have you achieved that?

Bisset: You can almost stop people from treating you badly if you just keep your clarity. I survived a lot of things in Hollywood — rather miraculously — and I just stuck to my way. You have to take the responsibility for your behavior, and that's hard. People who want to walk on you don't like it when you suddenly prick a little bit. It may be easier to go through life if you're compliant, but I realized that that's precisely what made me unhappy. . . . I have a strong personality, and when I apply it to something, I can get it done.

I recently lost my father, which was a tremendous shock for me. It was something I dreaded all my life, and I didn't think I could handle it. But I survived. I'm fine. Now I feel it's time to be an adult. FW

Satellite television is here today and the industry has matured to the point where Congress, in October of 1984, gave its whole hearted approval to home viewing of satellite TV by adding an amendment to the cable deregulation bill, in short—It's legal.

As a taxpayer each and everyone one of us financed the space technology that made home satellite TV possible. Now you can sit in your home and watch 100 plus channels of available programming and see what your investment can bring back to you in television dividends.

Home satellite television can put you in a front row seat to watch major movies, sporting events, major breaking news stories, and even a behind the scenes look at television production.

HAVE SOME CATFISH, Y'ALL!

By Marilyn Hansen

Among the restaurants that now are highlighting American regional cooking, those with a Southern slant are serving catfish in varied preparations. Catfish, raised mostly on Mississippi catfish farms and now becoming widely available, is a tasty, uniformly sized product that easily lends itself to deep-frying, baking, grilling, chowders, gum-bos and fritters.

STAN TANKURSELY'S FRIED CATFISH

4 whole butterflied catfish (see #1 below)
2 eggs
2 tablespoons milk

$\frac{1}{2}$ cup cornmeal
Vegetable oil for frying

1. Have fish vendor clean, split, remove head and filet the sides of the fish, but not completely remove from the center backbone.
2. In a shallow pan or pie pan, beat eggs lightly with a fork; add milk and beat again.
3. Dip fish into egg mixture, then roll completely in cornmeal. If desired, you may add salt to the cornmeal. Place on sheet of waxed paper or rack.
4. Pour enough oil into a deep, heavy saucepan or deep-fryer to a depth of 3-4 inches. Place deep-frying thermometer in oil; heat oil to 350° F.
5. Carefully lower fish into saucepan with a pancake turner or place in fry basket and gently lower into hot fat. Fry until golden brown, about 5 minutes. Drain on paper towels.
6. Serve hot with lemon wedges, hush-puppies, tartar sauce, sweet potato muffins, puréed yams and kale seasoned with red pepper.

Makes 4 servings

Note: Stan Tankursely is the originator of How's Bayou and Gulf Coast restaurants, two of New York's trendiest spots serving Southern cuisine. Also, if you cannot find catfish in your local market, George Morfogen, the fish buyer at the Oyster Bar at Manhattan's Grand Central Terminal, suggests you substitute yellow or white perch.

HOMETOWN'S CATFISH FINGERS WITH REMOULADE SAUCE

1 lb. catfish filets
2 eggs
3 tablespoons water
 $\frac{1}{4}$ cup cornmeal
 $\frac{1}{2}$ teaspoon salt
 $\frac{1}{4}$ teaspoon cayenne pepper
Vegetable oil for frying
Remoulade Sauce*

1. Cut catfish filets into 1 x 4-inch "fingers."

2. In shallow pan or pie pan, beat eggs and water together. On sheets of waxed paper, combine cornmeal, salt and cayenne.
3. Heat enough oil or shortening in a deep, heavy saucepan or deep-fryer to a depth of 2-3 inches and place deep-frying thermometer in oil. Heat to 350° F.
4. Carefully lower fish into oil using a pancake turner or deep-frying basket, fry for about 3 minutes or until golden brown. Serve with Remoulade Sauce (recipe follows) for dipping.

Makes 4 appetizer servings

Note: Hometown is a restaurant in New York's Greenwich Village that specializes in serving American foods with a fresh, innovative slant.

* REMOULADE SAUCE

2 cups mayonnaise
1 tablespoon paprika
1 tablespoon chopped fresh tarragon
1 tablespoon minced green onion, white and green tops
1 tablespoon minced parsley
1 tablespoon minced capers
1 tablespoon Creole mustard, or other hot mustard
1 teaspoon minced garlic

1. In medium-sized bowl, blend all ingredients together to make sauce.

Makes 2 cups

WHAT IN THE WORLD

FROM SAN DIEGO

WHAT DO YOU KNOW? AND WHEN DID YOU FIRST KNOW IT?

The medical profession keeps pushing back the starting point of human consciousness. San Diego clinical psychologist David Chamberlain has pushed it all the way back to the delivery room. He claims that children have vivid memories of their own births. Chamberlain says, "Babies are real people, trapped, as it were, in baby bodies. They are fully equipped with sensory and learning abilities."

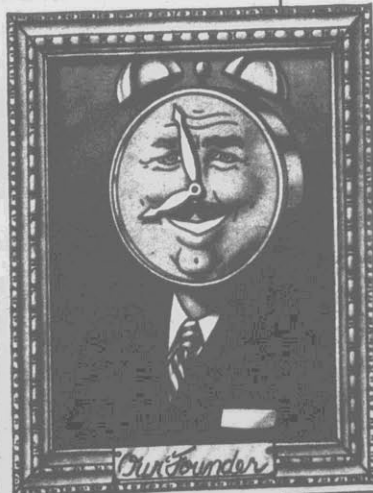

Chamberlain has asked children under hypnosis to describe their surroundings at the time of their birth. He found that their recollections included such details as mother's hairstyle, obstetric instruments used, and conversations in the delivery room. In later interviews with their mothers, Chamberlain found that the children's memories were remarkably accurate. And extremely sophisticated. He concludes that "at birth, babies note who is nervous, careless, tired, crying. They sense when fathers are uninterested, afraid or ecstatic." Maybe we should find a better welcome to the world for the little nippers than a slap on the behind.

FROM PALM BEACH

TAKE THIS JOB AND LIVE IT

"If you want the pay and prestige, the sacrifice is hours, hours, hours," says Robert Half, author of Robert Half on Hiring (Crown) and president of Robert Half International Inc., the world's largest recruiter of financial executives.

Half's company surveyed VPs and personnel directors to determine the number of hours logged each week by the top executives of leading companies. The average was 56.9 hours, but some workaholics actually had the old nose to the grindstone for up to 90 hours a week.

Half explains, "There's too many people, too many problems for it to be otherwise. A well-run business is almost a benevolent dictatorship." In other words, every dog has his day, but the top dog's day is a lot longer.

FROM MINNEAPOLIS

THE ULTIMATE BOWL GAME

What do Mary Lou Retton, Bruce Jenner, Sam Snead and Peter Gagarin have in common? They all are champions featured on boxes of Wheaties cereal. We know about the first three, but who is this Gargarin, and what is he doing on our breakfast table?

Mary E. Tickle, contest coordinator for General Mills, explains, "The company embarked on a national search for outstanding amateur athletes." They found 40-year-old Gargarin, who is a five-time U.S. orienteering (races run over rugged terrain, using maps and a compass to determine the route) champion from Sunderland, Mass. Tickle remarks, "Sometimes whole towns got behind their favorite athlete, [lobbying for him or her] to be honored.

After all, being on the Wheaties box is kind of like the ultimate."

The honor is open to competitors in any sport who can demonstrate outstanding athletic ability, strong personal character, and commitment to community service. In case there's another search next year, you'd better sharpen your skates, your crampons, your javelin, your eye-to-hand coordination, and, who knows, you too could be having breakfast with America!

BEDSIDE READING

Phillip Trager, photographer, New York City, with work on display in the Metropolitan Museum of Art, Museum of Modern Art, and the Smithsonian:

"I have Dust Bowl Descent by Bill Ganzel at my bedside. Ganzel has returned to the people and places that were the subjects of a number of photographs taken in the 1930s, when the federal government had the Farm Services Administration photographers program. He has photographed these people and places as they appear today. It is very interesting in that you are able to see what has happened to the people and to the landscape of the Great Plains area.

"Ganzel did the book on his own, and he had to have great power of will to do it. He traveled over 50,000 miles and completed it at great hardship to himself. But it was worth it; it's a wonderful book."

nalist, Burlington, Vt.

"I just finished Lisa Alther's Original Sins. I liked this book a lot, especially the way she starts out with the characters and follows them from the beginning of their lives until they're about 35 years of age. I just wanted this book to go on and on, to find out what was going to happen to them. She does a great job of what I try to do well as a photojournalist: follow a story from the time it breaks until it's over.

"I also just finished Growing Up by Russell Baker. I like the way he gives you a whole family history. Also, it's located in a part of the country — the rural South — that is 'family' to me. My mother is from North Carolina, and I used to visit a lot down there. It never seems to change. In the past 25 years, the greatest event to occur on the stretch of property my grandfather lives on is that the road finally got paved. Also, I love the way Growing Up ended — it's a real humorous look at a young person falling in love."
