Legislators Downplay Martin-Democratic Rift

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

Pitt County's representatives in the General Assembly feel the legislative session is moving along at a normal pace, and feel the relationship between the Legislature and Gov. Jim Martin is not as bad as some have characterized it.

"I think things are going along on a normal schedule," House member Ed Warren said last week.

"You read about disagreements between the General Assembly and the governor," Warren said. But "they are not as bad as they have been portrayed. As far as I'm concerned, relations with the governor are good. The relationship is a lot better than a lot of people think it is at this time.

"I've met with him two or three times on education ... tobacco, and had good meetings," Warren said. "Normally, in each session, there's been controversy in relationship to what the governor may want and what we (General Assembly members) want. We're up here to do a job and he is our governor and we'll work with him to accomplish all we can for the state of North Carolina."

Warren said, "Looking back, there was controversy when Gov. (Jim) Hunt was trying to get the gas tax passed. There's always controversy to some degree. Controversy is not uncommon ... the DWI (driving while impaired) bill last session ... it's just tradition."

According to Rep. Walter Jones Jr., "I think that with any new administration, whether it be Democratic or Republican, the first few months the legislative body and the governor start off feeling themselves out. It's really normal. That's just part of the process.

"I really believe the meeting Martin, (House Speaker Liston) Ramsey and (Lt. Gov. Bob) Jordan had was very useful. Anytime you are able to communicate ... it helps have a better understanding," Jones suggested.

"I think a lot of times things are blown out of proportion and I don't think the differences between the governor and the Legislature were that severe. I think ... communication was most of it."

Jones continued, "I think the attitude of most people on the House side is we want to be fair and objective in our decisions. What we do we want to do in the best interest of the citizens of North Carolina, no matter what the party affiliation."

Sen. Bob Martin, too, said he feels the leadership meeting with the governor was good and that "everyone is interested in trying to work together."

But Sen. Tom Taft said, "I sincerely believe that the governor is over-reacting and over-stating any perceived conflicts between his administration and the Democratic Legislature.

"Thus far," Taft suggested, "there have been several minor matters that have upset" the governor. "But from a larger, historic perspective, they are not significant. I believe he is attempting to make a non-issue into a political issue ... to embarrass the Democratic Party.

DEMOCRATS MEET — North Carolina Commissioner of Labor John Brooks, state Reps. Ed Warren and Walter Jones Jr., and D.D. Garrett Sr., immediate past chairman of the Pitt County Democratic Party, look over the agenda of the county Democratic convention held Saturday at the courthouse.

Pitt Democrats Elect Spilman Chairman

By MELANIE PHILLIPS
Reflector Staff Writer

The Pitt County Democratic Party elected J.B. Spilman Jr. as its 1985 chairman at the party's convention in Greenville Saturday.

Spilman, a Greenville businessman, said his goals for the next 12 months are to broaden the party and encourage active participation by people who have lost interest in the party. "We are especially interested in the farmers who face difficult times under the Republican administration," Spilman said.

"We're not going to turn the clock back," Spilman said after his election. "We're not going to Republicanize the Democratic Party. Our aim is to strive for fairness and justice."

Others elected for executive offices in the county party organization were: Betty Lewis, first vice chairman; D.D. Garrett Sr., second vice chairman; Betsy Leech, third vice chairman; Tom Johnson, secretary, and John Ball, treasurer.

Keynote speaker John Brooks, the state commissioner of labor, said that what the Democratic Party does on local, state, and national levels is significant. "Our party reflects commitments to people and to issues such as public education and vocational education," he added that the party should promote "home-grown" industry and invite industry into the state.

Carl Darden, Eddie West, Willie Mae Carney, Artemis Kares and

Judy Sadler were elected to serve on the state Executive Committee.

The Pitt convention approved a resolution in support of passenger train continuation and expansion, a resolution on raising funds for the county party including that each registered Democrat should donate a minimum of $1 to be paid to the Pitt County Democratic Party through the precincts and that the political and financial responsibility of the Pitt County Democratic Party be borne by every Democrat regardless of station or class.

County Officials Say Satellite Jail May Not Solve DWI Overcrowding

By MELANIE PHILLIPS
Reflector Staff Writer

Under state DWI laws more offenders are serving time in jail, and Pitt County officials say a satellite jail may not provide relief for overcrowding brought on by enforcement of the regulations.

County Manager Reginald Gray said the 12- to 72-hour sentences that DWI offenders serve under laws that became effective Oct. 1, 1983, have had a multiplying effect. "No one dreamed or did any research as to how the new DWI laws would affect local folks and local jails," he said in an interview.

"The problem is worse on the weekends with about 50 extra offenders occupying cells," Gray said, because there are more people picked up for DWI on weekends and people already convicted are serving their time. He said a recent ruling that requires inmates with a six-month or less sentence be housed in county jails has added to the burden of overcrowding.

"All at once we've found that our jail is inadequate. We're in bad shape. We've even had to look for places outside of the county to hold the inmates," he said.

Lt. Cecil Corbett, a supervisor for officers at the Pitt County Jail, said that at one point the facility had 83 inmates — the maximum capacity. "We sent six prisoners to Bethel, six to Ayden, four to Farmville, and 12 to Edgecombe County Jail because we didn't have room for them. That's when we asked for the court order to close the jail until a satellite jail is opened."

An order has been issued by Superior Court Judge David Reid Jr. to close the jail to weekend lock-ups until the satellite jail is prepared. The old cafeteria in the basement of the county building will be equipped with 50 bunks to hold prisoners that serve weekend sentences only. The jail will be in use from 4 p.m. Fridays until late Monday mornings, according to Corbett.

The facility should be in operation by the first of May.

"We'll be going into the satellite jail overcrowded," Corbett said. "We have 50 bunks there and 68 people on the waiting list to serve weekend sentences."

Corbett said that only prisoners serving 30 days or less are sent to the Pitt County Jail and that others are moved to the Department of Corrections.

According to Gray, the number of DWI convictions and prisoner days served in Pitt County have increased. From Oct. 1, 1983, to June 30, 1984, there were 270 DWI convictions in the area and 132 prisoner days were served. From July 1, 1984, to Jan. 31, 1985, there were 211 DWI convictions and 145 prisoner days were served.

Gray attributes this increase to the number of second DWI convictions. The first time a person is convicted of DWI, he may serve time in jail depending on his Breathalyzer reading and will perform community service. The second time the sentence is stronger and he will serve a prison term.

"That's what is happening now," Gray said. "Second convictions and with the law as tight as it is they are serving prison terms and we're getting overcrowded."

'Will Put Greenville On The Right Lists'

Water Plant To Open Soon

By SUE HINSON
Reflector Staff Writer

The day Greenville's new waste water treatment plant opens will be an occasion, because it "will put Greenville on the right lists as far as industry is concerned," says John Caffee, director of the Pitt County Development Commission.

The city's new 10.5 million gallon per day capacity plant, built at a cost of $10.5 million over a two-year period, is expected to become fully operational within the next six to 10 weeks, approximately one month before the targeted deadline of Aug. 2, a Greenville Utilities official reported.

The plant, able to process approximately 2.5 million more gallons per day than the city's old waste water treatment facility, will be a boon for future development of the area's industrial community, Chaffee said, because the increase in capacity will eliminate state restrictions on development in Greenville.

According to Chaffee, the state — in an effort to prevent the city's old water treatment plant from being overtaxed — now requires all new construction in Greenville to be subjected to state approval. While the old plant was designed to handle 8 million gallons per day, that amount of waste water could not be processed to meet current local and governmental standards, placing the actual capacity of the plant at approximately 5 million gallons per day.

The state's moratorium will not be lifted until the new plant is fully operational, Chaffee said.

According to GUC Water and Sewer Director Wadie Lewis, the new treatment plant was constructed at a local cost of $1.3 million, $1 million state and $8.2 million federal. That amount of federal assistance "wasn't expected" but was "very appreciated," Lewis said. "We were fortunate to get that assistance ... projects today aren't being financed at that level."

Located on 20 fenced acres north of the Tar River, east of the eastern bypass and adjacent to county road 1534, the plant is now operating at one-third capacity, a rate that will be increased over the next six to eight weeks to full capacity, Lewis said.

Saying the processes that will be utilized at the treatment plant are based on natural methods, Lewis explained that aeration of tanks holding waste water is the principal method used to cleanse water before it is put back into the Tar River. Aeration, or pumping oxygen into tanks holding waste, aids in breakdown of organic pollutants, he said.

Another portion the treatment process involves adding a form of chlorine to neutralize pathogens (bacteriums or viruses) which if not neutralized could cause disease among consumers of city water. By

"For example," Taft said, "the veto issue has come up in nearly every modern legislature with both Democratic and Republican governors, and has received little attention and always been defeated. For the governor to charge that this is 'repulsive conduct' is like a school child over-reacting when he doesn't get his way."

"The governor has to understand," Taft said, "that every time the Legislature exercises its constitutional obligation to make an independent decision on an issue that it has not voted against the people."

"The people elect the Legislature just as they elect the governor. Unfortunately, the governor has made little or no effort to lobby or encourage the Democrats in the Legislature to support any of his programs, other than a few senior Democrats. I know of no one that has been invited for breakfast, lunch or dinner with the governor, or even had the governor's lobbyist come into his office."

"These are the traditional ways governors get their legislation passed," Taft said.

On the question of veto power for the governor, the legislators seem to agree that North Carolina has fared well under the present system.

"I have an open mind," on the veto question, Martin said. "I'm trying to find out the sentiment of the constituents. It has a lot of merit, but at the same time, there is a lot to be said for the present system. We've been having good state government. I'm just trying to get information to weigh those two factors."

"In my opinion," Warren said, "the state has ranked as one of the top in all America ... we have a balanced budget ... without veto power. Some are almost going broke, while North Carolina has been operating very successfully. I'd like to keep it on the same keel as we've been operating and don't see any need to change. Somebody has to convince me on it."

"I'm very interested in listening to both sides ... would like to hear the pros and cons," but "I feel the government has worked well in North Carolina" without the governor having veto power, Jones said.

Commenting on other Legislative matters, Taft said "East Carolina University's budget looks like it's intact" and suggested the school might even be able to get "some extra monies." Jones said while "I think things are pretty well on schedule," there is some "major legislation that hasn't been presented to committee yet ... the education package," which he said "might be the most important public bill we've had in 20 years."

Martin, saying "we're in the budget process right now," noted that "it will probably take until mid-May or June to consolidate the budget."

Saying his Appropriations committee on education has completed a review of requests from the community colleges and higher education, and is in the process of reviewing requests from the Department of Public Instruction, Warren said the next step would be to address "frozen positions" within the education system.

"As long as they can justify the need, the committee will grant that (unfreezing of positions). All appropriations chairmen will be reviewing positions that have not been filled for six months or more. If they can justify the positions and request that we review that, we'll continue to fund them."

Astronauts May Do Space Walk To Rescue Satellite

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — An electrical failure turned a multimillion-dollar satellite into a useless derelict Saturday after it was deployed from the cargo bay of the shuttle Discovery, and NASA debated having an astronaut go out and rescue it.

"If we determine that it is safe, we may attempt to have an EVA (extra vehicular activity)," said Marvin Mixon, a vice president of Hughes Communications, which was to have operated the satellite.

The astronaut, riding on the end of the shuttle's robot arm, would have to grab and pull out a four-inch lever to turn on the power of the 7,900-pound satellite, which is revolving twice a minute. The satellite's spin makes it impractical to use arm alone to pull the lever, said Steven Dorfman, Hughes president.

"It can only be performed on specific orbits, two orbits a day, and it has to be performed in a 10-minute window," Mixon said. "I don't say it's going to be a snap."

After the lever is pulled, the shuttle would rocket away as quickly as possible to avoid any danger from the satellite, which has thousands of pounds of fuel aboard.

"The evasive maneuver may not be practical in the time frame we are talking about," said Mixon.

Pulling the lever would duplicate the normal action of that handle when the satellite is ejected from the cargo bay. The lever begins a series of actions that cause power to flow to various systems in the satellite, activate its rocket, and send it towards stationary orbit 22,300 miles above Earth.

"This EVA is by no means a certainty," said Mixon. "We have to be certain it's practical and also safe." The earliest time for the space walk would be Tuesday, and that in turn would mean an extension of the flight, which is scheduled to end on Wednesday.

Meanwhile, the shuttle was flying in formation 40 miles from the Syncom, but even at that distance its bottom was turned toward the satellite to avoid any possible blast damage.

Four different task forces were assessing options for the satellite, which is insured for $80 million to $85 million.

NASA said one option that has been ruled out is to try to bring the satellite back into the cargo bay. There are no tools aboard for that.

the time water reaches consumers, chlorine is at a level of 2/10 to 3/10 per million, an amount Lewis said is not detrimental.

Solids or sludge left over from the treatment process are dried in open beds and then applied to acreage in areas designated for such purposes. Saying land application has been in use for 10 or 11 years, Lewis explained that dried sludge resembles compost. It's a dark, loamy substance that is high in fiber and low in nitrogen and when mixed with area soil the substance increases water holding capacity.

The land distribution program, implemented with the assistance of North Carolina State University and agricultural extension service representatives, has not been problematic, according to Lewis. "We've not found anything to promote extreme concern," he said, adding that farmers are urged not to plant ground contract crops such as carrots or beets in soil mixed with sludge for one year. Lewis further explained that all treatment processes are monitored and are subject to state regulations which are usually equal to or more stringent than those set out by the Environmental Protection Agency.

However, while Lewis said he believes current standards for purifying waste water are adequate and have been improving over the past 20 to 25 years, he said he didn't know what problems or horizons have yet to be explored. What people must realize, he said, "is whatever they flush has got to be dealt with at the plant one way or another."

Eastern Carolina Is Good Testing Area For Copters

Eastern North Carolina has entered a new era with the inauguration of emergency helicopter ambulance service. The service was begun Monday with the first flight to Wilmington.

The service, named EastCare, was developed by Pitt County Memorial Hospital and the ECU School of Medicine and will provide emergency transportation for major medical cases within a 120-mile radius of Greenville. It is not intended to supplement current ground emergency service but rather to complement it. In addition, it will also be of service to critical care units of area hospitals, a service Pitt Memorial Hospital President Jack Richardson sees as "an additional resource to call upon during a medical crisis."

Dr. Nicholas Benson, assistant professor of emergency medicine and director of the air ambulance program, said the service will "allow more rapid transportation of a critically ill or injured patient and provide a higher level of care during the transport."

In addition to specialized equipment on board for patient care including advanced life-support technology, the crew, made up of a pilot and two flight nurses, can be in constant contact by radio with physicians or rescue squads on the ground. And since the service is offered 24 hours a day, extensive personnel had to be hired to man the aircraft. There are three pilots and 10 flight nurses with training in critical and emergency nursing who will work rotating shifts.

War-time use of helicopters to evacuate the wounded proved the craft's worth in emergency medical situations. It was just a matter of time before civilian emergency medicine turned to the helicopter as a valuable tool in transporting critically ill or badly injured patients. What better area to institute such service than in eastern North Carolina where quick medical treatment is not available to some residents.

Proposed Credit Is Hopeful Sign

As state Rep. Ed Warren says, "We've got to do something, and this is something I think we can afford."

He was speaking of his bill that would provide a state income tax deduction on payments to finance the tobacco price support program.

The measure falls far short of making up for all the bites taken out of farm revenues, but it is a step in the right direction and represents an estimated $15 per 1,000 pounds of tobacco.

An identical measure is now before the Senate Agriculture Committee. In its original form it would have reimbursed farmers their entire assessment of $250 per 1,000. That would have cost the state about $134 million a year ... which is a sum hard to find in the budget-writing. It was quickly modified.

Other possibilities are being studied with an eye to meeting farmers' problems of falling prices, cheap imports and hostility in Washington.

Warren's legislation in the House, and Sen. Harold Hardison's measure in the Senate represent one small but significant step toward remedial action. More will have to be taken to prevent collapse of the tobacco economy. There is hope that some will be forthcoming.

Alvin
Taylor

Trying to understand the tobacco situation is virtually impossible for even those of us who deal with it every day. Attempting to explain it to anyone's satisfaction is totally impossible.

It is a farming enterprise, of course, but it involves emotional issues. In eastern North Carolina many of us kept eating through the lean years because of tobacco income. Some went to college on tobacco income. For many retired farmers, the rent from allotments still represents their main income. For many farm widows a little income from tobacco allotments is all they have. Little wonder that they protest the attacks on tobacco.

On the other hand tobacco is greatly resented by many people. They are convinced that the health cost is a burden to the nation and some resent even being in the presence of those who smoke. So, like religion, it is one subject best left alone, particularly in tobacco-growing country.

Sunday Morning Notes

Ray Shaw, president of Dow Jones Inc., which includes the prestigious Wall Street Journal, is as knowledgeable on the state of business and the economy as anyone in the nation. He was here for an ECU-BB&T Center for Leadership Development conference last week. He spoke to a chamber group and somehow got on the subject of tobacco.

Later at a dinner at Chancellor and Mrs. John Howell's home he admitted that was a mistake. He recalled he had been asked about tobacco and he commented with a chuckle, "I tried to reply, but I should have said, I don't know anything about it. It's your problem. You take care of it."

Well, like the tar baby, that's what the tobacco problem does to you.

Shaw was scheduled to meet with a group of ECU students after the dinner and answer their questions.

"I look forward to meeting with the students," he said. "There are no tests. Everybody gets an 'A' ... but you have to stay through it all."

Russell Thompson, senior vice president of BB&T, who was among those who welcomed guests, recalled visiting the chancellor's home at Fifth and Jarvis streets when he was a boy. The house was then owned by W.F. (Red) Young, a local merchant. Thompson beekoned to the twin stairways of the ornate home and said, "I slid down this banister. Now I'm over here trying to look dignified."

Mrs. Howell said, "I wish you would do it again."

Thompson knows his history. The chancellor's home wasn't always owned by the university. It was once the Young home. The chancellor's home was across the street in a house now occupied by the personnel department. The Young home was purchased by the state during the administration of John D. Messick and the chancellor's home with all its function was moved there.

RALEIGH — Something almost happened in a recent House Education Committee that unfortunately happens too much in government. A Wayne County legislator had a simple little idea for a piece of legislation and the committee gave serious consideration to bogging in down with an onerous amount of detail.

Rep. Martin Lancaster, D-Wayne, proposes that school boards be allowed to open central repositories for student records. The law currently says student records must be kept at the school where a student matriculated.

Lancaster told the committee this law is impossible to keep in some cases because old schools close down or they merge with other schools. Also, some schools are running out of space for the records.

Rep. Aaron Fussell, D-Wake, former Wake County school superintendent, said he suspected many school districts were breaking the law out of necessity. He said Wake schools long ago started moving records to a central repository.

This was the only bill on the calendar and everyone felt really good about the need for such a change. Instead of just voting and adjourning, the committee expanded its conversation. Rep. Paul Tyndall, D-Onslow, noted the need to make sure these records were kept in a fireproof place. Other legislators chipped in about their concerns that dampness and bugs would ruin records.

Lancaster kept smiling and saying he agreed on the need to protect the records. He reminded the committee, however, that his bill addressed only the possibility of central repositories.

Then Rep. Joe Mavretic, D-Edgecombe, decided Lancaster's little old bill needed to be sent to a subcommittee where the whole problem of bugs, fire and dampness could be addressed. Lancaster fumed.

Several other legislators chipped in with a few more stories about rotting school records and the committee sounded like it was going to turn Lancaster's bill into a public records revision act.

Then crusty old Rep. Chris Barker, D-Carteret, said enough is enough. He said school officials had enough sense to take care of records and didn't need the Legislature telling them how to do their jobs. "If you're going to make all these rules about fireproofing and et cetera, you're not giving them any credit for having common sense."

The committee quickly voted down Mavretic's subcommittee and sent the original bill to the full House.

North Carolina requires high school students to demonstrate basic writing skills as a condition for graduation. One has to wonder if Craig Phillips, superintendent of public instruction, could have passed the test with the speech he gave to the Senate Education Committee on April 2.

In the 25-minute speech, the normally long-winded Phillips unleashed what might be a record sentence for the Legislative Building. According to the prepared text, it was 106 words long with seven commas and seven improperly capitalized words. The word "in" was used seven times, the words "school" and "and" five times each.

Best joke of the current political season:

Gov. Jim Martin takes his cabinet to dinner at a famous Raleigh restaurant. The waitress comes to the governor first and asks what he'll have. He replies, "I'll have a steak."

"And how about your vegetables," the waitress asks.

ASHINGTON — Thomas V. Posey is a good ol' boy from Decatur, Ala. With spring here, you'd think he'd be grilling steaks on the outdoor barbecue or making trips to the nearest baseball park. But Posey has a different agenda. He's looking for American veterans to join forces with the rebel fighters opposed to Nicaragua's government.

That mission is so important to Posey that he leaves his family and grocery business every Friday and drives all night in his "Gray Ghost" van to the nearest gun show or any other event that may attract large numbers of Vietnam-era veterans and potential mercenaries. There he sets up a folding table, covers it with literature and begins answering questions of posers-by. It's a lonely job, Posey admits, but he rarely leaves one of these sessions empty-handed.

"We're getting about 15 new members into the organization a day," Posey says proudly. "and I expect if Congress rejects the president's request for money to the contras, we'll get a heck of a lot more. A lot of the Vietnam vets can't wait to get back into combat and show the American people that communism can be beaten."

Thomas Posey is no kook. He knows who he is and what he is doing. As director of the six-month-old, 3,000-member Civilian Military Association, Posey and his loyal group of former soldiers, police officers and right-wing patriots have proven that private citizens can take American foreign policy into their own hands. There are, according to Posey, an estimated 100 American veterans, almost all 30 years of age or older, fighting alongside the contras in Honduras and Nicaragua.

When Congress passed the Neutrality Act in 1794, it wanted to discourage American citizens from committing violent acts against a nation or government with which the United States was a peace. The law reflected an inherent democratic belief that Americans only engage in warfare after deliberate public debate and congressional consensus.

But congressional ideas and practice have not meshed in Central America. "It's an impossible situation," conceded a Justice Department official. "All we can do is to make sure these guys aren't sending weapons to Central America. Otherwise, they're free to travel and fight for whomever they want."

Indeed, Posey admits there's no difficulty in commuting to this backyard jungle war. "Most of our guys pay $350 for a round-trip ticket to Honduras," Posey explained to us in a telephone interview. "They'll spend the night in Tegucigalpa and the next morning we drive them into the countryside where they're fitted with arms and equipment. Nothing could be easier."

What does upset Posey, however, is the U.S. government's reluctance to embrace his efforts. Several weeks ago, with the State Department's blessing, the Honduran government asked 14 of his colleagues to leave Honduras.

"I suspect our government didn't want us to get hurt before the congressional vote on funding for the contras," he said. "Our men had been 125 miles inside Nicaragua."

The State Department, among other agencies, has good reason to worry about men like Posey. Two members of his group were killed in a helicopter accident in Nicaragua last September.

The publicity surrounding that accident led to a recent congressional proposal by Reps. Mel Levine, D-Cal., and Jim Leach, R-Iowa, that would prohibit private assistance for military acts in a foreign country if Congress forbids the use of covert assistance for such operations.

Of course, the Leach/Levine measure has little chance of success in this Congress. But it is worth serious consideration. Posey and friends now recruit in more than 20 states and would like nothing better than to march into Managua behind the contras. They seem intent on doing that, according to Posey, because the "guys in Washington can't get their pants on."

President Reagan's loose tongue has undoubtedly incited such men as Posey. When a president asks for help in aiding "freedom fighters struggling for liberty and democracy," it's no wonder some Americans want to put on the fatigues.

But in our hyper-sensitive reaction to change in Central America, we've lowered ourselves into the gutter by siding with hatchet-prone revolutionaries. We've adopted terrorism to counter terrorism, subversion to halt subversion.

When the focus of U.S. foreign policy rests on such solutions to political problems, our ideals and actions can get so twisted that the sides become indistinguishable. And that's hardly a position the leading country in the free world wants to find itself in.

'Compromiser'

President Reagan may yet wind up his second term being known as the "great compromiser," as a result of his shift on a pledge to Social Security recipients.

Under the compromise worked out with Senate Republicans, Social Security cost-of-living benefits would be limited to 2 percent for the next three years if inflation is 4 percent or less.

The pressure to reduce the deficit has been heavy on Reagan particularly from the GOP. White House Chief of Staff Donald Regan told reporters that he offered the compromise at the behest of the president.

Reagan also made concessions in cutting the defense budget, which he was loath to do.

During his debate with Democratic challenger Walter Mondale in Louisville, Ky., during the 1984 election campaign, Reagan said: "With regard to Social Security ...

I will say this: A president should never say 'never.' But I'm going to violate that rule and say 'never.' I will never stand for a reduction of the Social Security benefits to the people that are now getting them."

The president also derided Mondale's charge that he had a "secret plan" to cut Social Security benefits.

White House spokesman Larry Speakes reinforced the president's words on innumerable occasions over the past many months, saying, "The president has made it emphatic that he will not touch Social Security in any shape or fashion."

So what happened? Obviously, Reagan did not want to go back on his word. In fact, he told reporters that any of the Democrats who might accuse him of reneging on a promise are "lying in their teeth."

Social Security has haunted the president ever since 1964 when he advocated that the system be placed on a voluntary basis.

The Social Security COLA reduction to 2 percent is not a fait accompli. It has to be approved by Congress, and that may take some doing. Senior citizen groups are up in arms, charging deception on Reagan's part.

But the election is over. The president does not have to run again. He does not have to worry about particular constituencies although members of his party would just as soon he not alienate the groups whose support they will seek in 1986.

Lawmakers See Threat To Individual Freeoms

RALEIGH (AP) — Federal pressures are only partly to blame for bills that have been criticized for encroaching on life, liberty and the pursuit of happy hours, North Carolina lawmakers say.

In recent weeks, the issue of freedom has come up in everything from the drinking age and mandatory seat belts to day-care legislation and the Basic Education Plan. And lawmakers say more controversy will erupt over bills to do away with liquor promotions, control obscenity, ban phosphate detergents in the home, tighten laws governing boating, surfing and water skiing and limit a mental patient's right to refuse mind-altering drugs.

"It's a bigger issue this session than I've ever seen," said Senate Minority Leader Bill Redman of Iredell County. "We have more and more bills that are encroaching on individual freedoms and the public's right to choose."

Gov. Jim Martin said such measures as the seat-belt and drinking-age bills could be viewed as "eroding some of the freedom of choice that remains in a free society."

"I don't see some great orchestrated effort to deprive people of rights for the sake of engineering ... lives," he said. But as different issues arise, they should be "analyzed with regard to whether (they) improve ... the freedoms of a free society or not."

But Rep. George Miller, D-Durham, who introduced the anti-obscenity legislation, echoed the sentiments of most Democrats that not all government intrusion is bad.

"Any legislation affects someone in some way," he said. "It's a matter of balancing what we hear to be a problem and how to meet that problem."

After the Senate passed a bill to raise standards for day-care centers and plans in North Carolina, Republicans argued that it should be up to parents choose care for their children. GOP members and some Democrats made similar comments about a bill to let the state Board of Education establish equal educational opportunities across the state.

Redman said a basic education curriculum overlooks basic philosophical and moral differences from county to county.

"I remember several terms back there was a health education film to be shown to all schools on sex education," he said. "I was embarrassed when I previewed the film. It started right out with a man and woman on a beach completely naked and engaging in the actual act."

Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan and other Democrats soundly backed the bills.

"I don't see any further encroachment in the basic education plan," said Jordan. "As for day care, it's a recognition of the times. Twenty years ago you didn't have that many women in the workforce. It's time for the state to set some common standards."

Bipartisan objections quickly arose, however, over federal intrusions in legislation. Sen. Dennis Winner, D-Buncombe, told the Senate to "refuse to cave in" to the threatened loss of $30 million in federal highway funds that sparked a bill to raise the drinking age for beer and wine from 19 to 21.

The U.S. Department of Transportation provided impetus for mandatory seat belts by saying that it would require expensive air bags on new cars in 1989 if two-thirds of the U.S. population is not covered by restraint laws before then.

The drinking age bill has been written to be repealed if the federal mandate is lifted while the seat belt bill would be abolished if the DOT rules it does not meet department requirements. But that hasn't stopped criticism of the intrusions.

"The federal government doesn't have the guts to make these decisions and wants to pass them down to the states and let take the political heat," said Jordan, who favors seat belts but said, "I hate to have to consider the legislation for the wrong reasons."

"It's just one more encroachment by the federal government on the rights of the states," said House Speaker Liston Ramsey. "They use a threat of holding back money that we can't do anything about. The only way we could stop it would be in the federal courts."

"I've been appalled at the greater and greater federal involvement and the heavy-handed method in which their will has been imposed on the states in areas that have traditionally been the states' to regulate," said Miller. "Federal rules are the opinions of perhaps one or two individuals who have been appointed in a bureaucratic process. When we adopt laws they are pretty finely ground."

Public Forum

To the editor:

The United States, for the most part, is made up of people who pay their income taxes to the Internal Revenue Service promptly. But these "little" people are ignored and are unable to get any information about their returns from the 1-800-424-1040 number that is published to "help" them.

A person gets a busy signal or a voice saying, "All the circuits are busy." Even when a person has the operator check the line, all she gets is a busy signal!

Now what kind of government "of the people, by the people and for the people" treats these same people like dirt? It's similar to the old adage of the dog that bites the hand that feeds him. So it seems the government is doing likewise!

Can the government expect the ordinary citizen to accept such mistreatment every year and then expect to have good public relations? After all, good manners and courtesy should be practiced in every level of government. For it is the people who pay the bills!

Betty Smart
Winterville

To the editor:

The news media states the Senate committee on the drinking age, now in consideration in North Carolina, has approved for beer and wine to be raised to 21 but not unlawful to buy or possess.

For those who lived through and saw the magnificent farce concocted on the American public back in the '20s and to have noted the aftermath, the introduction of this bill seems ridiculous.

If it is not a crime to buy and possess these beverages, how do you distinguish its use? It has been about 55 years since the prohibition era and many of this generation actually think it is an original idea. It will have teeth about as difficult to bite with as the Adam and Eve apple story. It will encourage this age group to kick the bottom out of this plan by overindulging where, otherwise, they would have no reason to rebel.

The best way to attack this problem is to have a lengthy automobile license examination before issuing the license to show this age group the tragedy, grief, hurt, bodily injury and family involvement by pictures, morgues, undertaking establishments and the best that "Hollywood" can conjure to make these young people THINK before the drinking spree. Show them the mangled bodies, the bloody corpses and guts thrown far and wide. Gruesome, yes, but show and tell and we have done our best. Otherwise, we are hiding the facts and using the approach that has proven inadequate in the past.

The very word PROHIBIT is humanly repulsive because it is one faction against another and that will endure until the end of time.

I speak with authority because I have had the experiences and I certainly go along with the idea of containment, but definitely disagree with the method planned.

Unless this age group is considered adult, don't infringe on their birthrights to draft them, should the occasion arise. They won't be ripe until a full 21.

To the editor:

When did the City Council members, who were elected by the majority of the people, stop listening to the people? However, one man, Mr. Ed Carter, indeed listened and made one of the most valid observations of the meeting. Overall, I was very disappointed with the action taken by the Greenville City Council April 11. I witnessed the voices of 50 people ignored in favor of one man's desires. Our neighbor, H.D. Bradshaw, has presented numerous rezoning plan changes to the City Council about rezoning his property that joins the residents of Fairlane and St. Andrews. Repeatedly, the property owners went to the meetings and voiced opposition to changing the already zoned R-15 single dwelling property to high density zoning.

Mr. Bradshaw is well aware of the neighbors' opposition to the rezoning changes. Because so much opposition was voiced at the February meeting of the Greenville Planning and Zoning Committee, the committee recommended denial of the request. One would think the matter was settled, but last night the same plan was presented to the City Council. There was a motion made and seconded about denial of the request, but by the time action was taken, the motion was rephrased which made it confusing. Motions should be clear, decisive and written. For such an important issue, with seven of the 50 property owners present speaking against the rezoning to one for the rezoning, the voting members should have stood or raised their hands. However, a verbal vote was taken and the third vote cast for the rezoning was so weak (or undecided) that I didn't hear her. Mayor Janice Buck announced that the vote was three for rezoning and two against. I shudder to think that this is all that can be done about this situation.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Using a new budget agreement between the Reagan administration and Senate Republicans as leverage, Agriculture Secretary John Block has renewed his push to ease government out of farming.

Block has been in an uncomfortable position for months, trying to sell Congress an extremely austere long-term farm bill written more by the administration's budget officials than by his department.

But the budget agreement, which essentially halves the administration's proposed cuts in farm programs over the next three years, gives Block a little more breathing room and makes his sales pitch more palatable at a time of extreme financial crisis in rural America.

"I'm in an easier position to work from now," Block said in a brief interview. "This is a key. It breaks a lot of ice" that had kept farm bill progress to a minimum in recent weeks.

With the new budget numbers, Block and farm-state lawmakers can write a bill that offers farmers a softer financial landing and a more gradual transition to the "market-oriented" policy the administration

To the editor:

As a resident of Fairlane Road which is directly affected by the rezoning, I was disappointed in the outcome of the vote for rezoning the Bradshaw property adjoining Hooker Road at the April 11 City Council meeting. The council voted in favor of the rezoning from R-15S (low-density single family) to R-6 (high-density multifamily) in direct conflict with the Planning and Zoning Commission's unanimous recommendation for denial. To the best of my knowledge, this is a very rare occurrence.

The residents of St. Andrews Drive and Fairlane Road had submitted a petition showing 95 percent of the residents opposing the rezoning. There was also a large contingent of residents at the meeting who expressed their opposition. Only the owner spoke in favor of the rezoning. The residents present at the council meeting discussed it afterwards and could recall no new information presented that could account for the vote overriding the Planning and Zoning Commission's recommendation. It seems as if the desire of one individual has overridden the concerns of many.

To the editor:

I have no idea whether Senator John M. Jordan was quoted correctly in Paul T. O'Connor's editorial page article entitled "Is Foreign Language A Fringe?" If he indeed made the statement that "foreign language study is an unnecessary and expensive fringe" and that it will not help "95 to 99 percent make a penny more," I must vigorously protest and respectfully point out that he is wrong on both counts. To learn the mode of expression of another culture, and thereby something about that culture has become a clear necessity in today's world.

If the various reports which have come out recently, including one commissioned by President Reagan, have not convinced him that the United States can no longer afford to remain linguistically isolated, may I suggest that he read Senator Paul Simon's study: "The Tongue-tied American." It is an irrefutable fact that the knowledge of a foreign language, coupled with another skill, is highly prized on the job market and that those young people who have acquired foreign language skills advance faster once in place than their monolingual colleagues. More importantly, however, the learning of a foreign language at an early stage (which incidentally is the best time to acquire that skill) will contribute immensely to the educational process as a whole. We, in the profession, know that there can be no better way to become a truly educated individual, with a cosmopolitan outlook, a more tolerant view, a less provincial attitude, than to familiarize oneself with another culture.

No, Senator Jordan, the study of "foreign language does not take time away from the basics." It is just as important as math and science. To deprive our students, at the elementary level, of the opportunity to learn what children in Europe, the U.S.S.R. and Japan learn as a matter of course, is to deprive them of a unique and never-to-return opportunity to become well-rounded and well-educated individuals, better prepared to cope with the needs of our fast-moving world. We owe this to our children, and I would hope that Sen. Jordan will reconsider his position after a careful study of all the facts.

Martin Schwarz, Chairman
ECU Dept. of Foreign Languages and Literatures

To the editor:

During the 1984 session of the General Assembly, a bill was introduced, backed by Governor Jim Hunt, to fund a $650,000 independent study dealing with equal pay for work of comparable worth (now called the "Pay Equity Study"). As a public member of the General Assembly Study Committee on the Needs of Women 1981-84, I sent information to legislators and the public that this legislation, followed to its intended conclusion, would lead to federal wage control.

Response was immediate, but the "Comparable Worth Study Legislation" passed, supposedly limited by a "supply and demand" guideline. The pro-comparable worth Status of Women Task Force Commission on Comparable Worth recommended "avoidance of market pricing" for the study.

As information about "comparable worth" increased, so did opposition. In March a bill to repeal the Pay Equity Study was passed in the N.C. House with a similar action pending in the Senate. Repeal is a victory for free enterprise.

Unfortunately attached to the repeal bill is an amendment authorizing $75,000 for a legislative study of the same matter — to mollify supporters of comparable worth. Compromise may be the art of politics; compromise is a mistake when it leaves the door open for a bad idea described by the U.S. Civil Rights Commission report as "irretrievably flawed." Why not a clear-cut repeal?

Duarte Strengthened

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — The victory of moderates in the recent National Assembly elections is likely to strengthen President Jose Napoleon Duarte's pursuit of a centrist solution to El Salvador's 5½-year-old civil war.

It also may have defused the conservative forces that have dominated politics here for decades and possibly may spell the end of the political career of Roberto d'Aubuisson, Duarte's longtime adversary and leader of the rightist Republican Nationalist Alliance, ARENA.

The big question is whether the right wing will accept the losses it suffered in the March 31 balloting or revert to the violence and intimidation that prevailed during the early years of the civil war. A resurgence of activity by rightist death squads would smudge the country's reputation abroad at a time when it badly needs outside support.

The political center appears to have expanded at the expense of the right, part of a gradual move that began with Duarte's defeat of d'Aubuisson in the presidential race on May 6, 1984.

The official vote count of the assembly elections was put off because of the Holy Week vacation period. It is expected to be completed within a week.

But unofficial results gave Duarte's Christian Democrats a surprising 33 of the 60 seats in the assembly, with 25 going to the rightist coalition. The moderate Democratic Action got one seat as did the rightist Authentic Institutional Salvadoran Party.

The results were compiled by the Christian Democrats' own computing center, which has been accurate in the past. It was backed up by an exit poll conducted by the Spanish International Network.

The centrist party held 24 seats in the outgoing assembly, elected in March 1982, to 34 for a bloc of conservative parties that has hobbled Duarte's ability to implement his programs.

The new assembly is scheduled to convene May 1.

Gaining a majority in the assembly clears the way for Duarte to have more say over what will become law. Until now, he has faced a rightist majority that quashed his land reform plan and blocked money for a commission to investigate several well-publicized killings, including those of four American churchwomen, two American labor specialists, and Monsignor Oscar Arnulfo Romero, the Roman Catholic archbishop of San Salvador.

Even so, the attorney general's office and Supreme Court remain in conservative hands. The president also has to contend with powerful rightist elements in the military.

Still, one result of the elections could be a resumption of peace talks between the U.S.-supported government and leftist rebels. Two rounds of talks were held last fall but the conservative opposition blocked a third session.

The voting results indicated the right wing is more divided than ever.

The unofficial count showed great defections from ARENA's coalition partner, the National Conciliation Party, which ran El Salvador for 18 years until 1979 and remained a political force until the assembly vote.

Voters who gave the Conciliation Party a third-place finish in last year's presidential race appear to have gone to the Christian Democrats or stayed home this time.

In the first round of presidential voting in March 1984, the conservative party got 19.3 percent of the vote. It received only 7.8 percent in the assembly balloting. The ARENA vote was virtually unchanged at 29.7 percent.

The Conciliation Party's loss was roughly equal to the gain registered by the Christian Democrats, who got about 54 percent of the vote. The rest of the vote was for smaller parties.

The turnout, according to the Christian Democrats' computation, was about 943,000, half of what it was in other recent elections.

ARENA was formed by rightist Conciliation Party dissidents four years ago, and voters who favor ARENA have had that long to defect.

The Conciliation Party controlled the peasant vote for years. But the unofficial returns indicated that rural Salvadorans, after Duarte's win last year, may no longer have felt intimidated to vote for the party that was the vehicle for a series of military-backed governments until 1979.

The returns showed that Duarte gained in the countryside and still retained his strength in urban areas.

The rightist coalition — put in place by maneuvering in the assembly — had been expected to deliver a sure defeat to Duarte's party. Political specialists had predicted that after that electoral victory, the alliance would not hold together.

George
Gallup

Poll

PRINCETON, N.J. — Of the citizens of 17 nations surveyed, Americans are among the most optimistic in their perceptions of what the world will be like 10 years from now.

In a recent Gallup International survey, Americans are evenly divided between those who think the world will be a better place to live to (30 percent) and those who think it will be worse (also 30 percent). A 35 percent plurality thinks things will not have changed much in 10 years' time.

In terms of optimism, Americans rank fourth on the list of 17 nations, topped by the residents of only three countries: Uruguay, Greece and Argentina. In these nations, 54 percent, 46 percent and 44 percent, respectively, see the world as a better place to live 10 years from now.

At the bottom of the list, in terms of those who think the world will be worse place to live in 10 years, are the Japanese (53 percent are pessimistic), white South Africans (52 percent), Brazilians (48 percent), and the British (45 percent).

There is considerable variation in the attitude of Americans from difference backgrounds.

Men, for example, are somewhat more optimistic about the future (35 percent) than are women (25 percent). And, while blacks and whites share the same degree of optimism as found in the U.S. as a whole, blacks more often express pessimism (40 percent) than do whites (29 percent).

Americans' perceptions about the world of the future are closely related to their educational attainment and income, with greater optimism found among persons who attended college and in households with above-average family incomes.

Age does not seem to be an important factor, with persons of all ages sharing about the same point of view about the future. Similarly, persons from all regions of the nation have the same basic outlook toward the world in 10 years' time.

The international results are based on in-person interviews conducted by affiliates of Gallup International Research Institutes earlier this year with an average of over 1,000 citizens of each country.

The U.S. results are based on face-to-face interviews with 1,557 adults, 18 and older, conducted in over 300 scientifically selected localities across the nation during the period Feb. 15-18. For results based on samples of this size, one can say with 95 percent confidence that the error attributable to sampling and other random effects could be 3 percentage points in either direction.

Dr. Jack Allison, director of emergency medicine at Pitt County Memorial Hospital, appeared before the group to explain the need for trained paramedics to give advanced life support. He showed the significant positive difference in survival rates in areas where paramedic personnel is trained and working. He also explained how lives can be saved when response time is cut by the availability of an easily-remembered, easily-dialed 911 emergency assistance phone number.

Awards Benefit

Tickets are on sale for the Pitt County Memorial Hospital Foundation's awards benefit to be held Thursday at 7 p.m. at the Greenville Country Club.

A banquet dinner will be served, followed by a program by vocalist Carol-Ann Tucker and pianist Jimmy Aycock. Awards will be presented to individuals and groups who have significantly supported the hospital during the year.

Tickets are tax-deductible and may be obtained by calling the hospital's community relations office at 757-4869. All proceeds will go to the foundation made up of volunteers in support of quality health care through Pitt County Memorial Hospital.

Boldt will be formally initiated at a chapter ceremony April 23. Honorary membership in Beta Gamma Sigma is awarded to selected persons who have an outstanding record in business, active membership in professional organizations and a record of significant contributions to ECU and its school of business.

Campus X-Ray

Students attending East Carolina University next fall may no longer have to go off campus to have X-rays made.

Specifications are now being written for the purchase of an X-ray machine for the campus infirmary, according to Kay VanNortwick, manager of ECU's Student Health Services. "We're trying to offer a more complete service to the student," she said.

Students in need of C-rays currently are referred to orthopedists or emergency rooms. "A lot of students that need them don't get X-rays because of the cost," she said. "We will charge them only what it costs us."

The machine will only be used to take X-rays of the arms, legs, ankles, skull and spine to determine if bones have been fractured, and of the chest to diagnose the presence of pneumonia and other chest infections, Ms. VanNortwick said. Students needing gastrointestinal and other more complicated X-rays will continue to be sent off campus.

Skin Cancer Study Under Way Locally

Dermatologists in Greenville and eastern North Carolina are assisting Dr. Larry C. Clark of Cornell University in Ithaca, N.Y., in a study to determine whether selenium supplements stop skin cancer.

In two previous studies, Clark and Dr. Gloria Graham of the Wilson Dermatology Clinic in Wilson found that patients with low plasma selenium levels were more likely to develop skin cancer than patients with high plasma selenium levels after adjusting for other important causes of skin cancer such as excessive exposure to sunlight. Researchers are also looking at selenium's role in preventing different types of cancer.

The current study seeks to reduce the number of new skin cancer in patients with a history of skin cancer by improving the selenium status of the patients with a nutritional supplement of selenium. Half of the patients in the study will receive a selenium-enriched brewers yeast and the other half will receive an identical-looking brewer's yeast tablet — but without the selenium supplementation.

The study is designed so that neither the physician nor the patient knows which treatment the patient is receiving. When one of the groups demonstrates a significant decrease in the number of new tumors, then the code will be broken to determine which group has been receiving the selenium. To help expand the study, Clark and his associates, including Dr. C.L. Smith of Eastern Dermatology in Greenville, will be recruiting patients less than 80 years old who have a history of at least two non-melanoma skin cancers with the most recent diagnosis being within the last 12 months. Those who agree to participate will be given a supply of the daily treatment supplement and an examination for skin cancers every six months, at which time they provide blood and hair samples for analysis.

The work of Clark and the collaborating dermatologists is funded by a grant from the American Institute for Cancer Research.

Commissioners Meet

Pitt County Commissioners heard various reports at a workshop session Friday.

A representative of the North Carolina Department of Revenue's ad valorem tax division reviewed with board members various recommendations made by the Property Tax Study Commission, and county Fire Marshall Bobby Joyner discussed with commissioners various aspects of a proposed county-wide 911 emergency telephone system.

Commissioners also reviewed computer services provided the county school system with Superintendent Eddie West, who told board members that costs for the service have averaged about $3,600 a month this year. West noted that with the consolidation of the county and city systems, computer service is expected to cost from $4,500 to $5,000 a month in the coming fiscal year. West also told commissioners that attrition will "take care of any overage" of people in the merged system and that although new positions may be created by consolidation, there will be no increase in the number of employees.

Board members also discussed road projects in Pitt County and compiled a list of projects to be supported at a May 8 Transportation Improvement Program meeting, which included, among others: a speed-up of the proposed northern loop to connect the four-lane U.S. 264 to the Eastern By-pass north of the Tar River.

ECU Participates In Project Plotting Vessels Wrecked Along N.C. Coast

ECU NEWS BUREAU
MANTEO — At least 29 times during the past 40 years, the ghostly remains of wrecked vessels have appeared and disappeared in the shifting sands of the Cape Hatteras National Seashore's legendary "Graveyard of the Atlantic," according to a survey which has now been completed.

Ten of the wrecks strewn along 50 miles of windswept beach, dunes and sea oats were studied during the survey conducted by the East Carolina University program in Maritime History and Underwater Research. The officials conducted a news conference at the National Seashore headquarters here to announce completion of the three-month survey.

Each battered fragment was carefully analyzed to determine the type of ship, its age, what area of the hull the piece came from and, if possible, the identity of the lost vessel.

The survey was the first major archaeological examination of shipwreck sites on the beach to be conducted in the United States, according to spokesmen for the ECU program and the National Park Service. The study of shipwreck sites on the beach is a relatively recent aspect of maritime archaeology, which usually is conducted underwater.

The survey of Cape Hatteras National Seashore was part of an on-going program of maritime archaeological research conducted by the National Park Service in national parks throughout the country to identify and protect historically and archaeologically important shipwrecks. The survey was led by National Park Service historian James Delgado of San Francisco's Golden Gate National Recreation Area and was accomplished with Cape Hatteras National Seashore rangers and a volunteer staff of student assistants from East Carolina University.

Archaeologists studying accounts of wreck sites found on beaches have learned that many times the remains of ships which wrecked on the beach have survived time, surf, and periodic "uncovering" and are valuable archaeological repositories of information. To test theories about these beached shipwrecked sites, Cape Hatteras National Seashore was selected because of the great number of vessels lost off its shores and frequent references in newspaper clippings and local histories to the skeletons of vessels in the park's sands.

graphs, faded newspaper clippings, and the reports of other archaeologists, the survey team learned that not only pieces of ships have been exposed on the beaches of the Outer Banks. Nearly intact vessels have been uncovered, the most famous examples being the two-masted schooner Altoona. The Altoona wrecked in 1878 and was revealed by shifting sands on the beach near the Cape Hatteras Light-house in 1963, its decks in place and the ship's name carved on the stern. Another famous wreck, the four-masted schooner Laura A. Barnes, was wrecked in 1921 and the battered bones were uncovered on Bodie Island in 1955. Laura A. Barnes was later removed from the beach and can be seen on display at Coquina Beach on Bodie Island. Other near intact vessels exposed through the years include a small vessel explored by National Park Service archaeologists in 1939 which appears to have been a United States Navy gunboat lost during the War of 1812.

Most of the pieces of ships examined during the survey came from the hulls of schooners or small ships of other rigs.

Two vessels were identified as the remains of the four-masted schooners G.A. Kohler and Margaret Spencer. Margaret Spencer's remains were uncovered on Pea Island last winter by hurricane Josephine near the site where the schooner went aground and was lost on May 18, 1925. G.A. Kohler's battered hull, long a feature on the beach of Hatteras Island near the town of Avon, was again disclosed by hurricane Josephine and the identity of the ship was confirmed by the archaeological survey team.

A third vessel, a steamship whose machinery protrudes from the surf near Rodanthe on Hatteras Island, seems to be the S.S. Pocahontas, a horse and troop transport lost during the Civil War on January 18, 1862 as Federal troops moved to invade and seize the Confederate-held Outer Banks. Future archaeological work will explore this wreck and establish its identity, officials said.

The survey was part of the ECU program's on-going effort to identify and study significant maritime archaeological sites along the coast of the Southeastern United States.

Pentagon Budget Includes Extras

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Pentagon's proposed construction budget is filled with plans for "gold-plating" military bases with auto hobby shops, swimming pools, and religious education facilities, a private research group says.

Moreover, the proposed 1986 fiscal year construction budget includes requests to spend $226.6 million at 12 military bases that were recently included on a list of possible candidates for closure released by Sen. Barry Goldwater, R-Ariz.

"The military construction budget, at $6.6 billion, seldom receives the sort of public scrutiny that the much larger (weapons) procurement budget gets," said retired Rear Adm. Eugene J. Carroll Jr., the deputy director of the Center for Defense Information.

"But careful analysis of the construction budget reveals the same 'gold-plating' of military bases that drives the costs for new weapons to record amounts."

"Almost 6 percent, or $392.8 million, of the 1986 military construction budget will go for such non-essential facilities as auto hobby shops, band rooms and libraries."

The Center for Defense Information is a non-profit research institute based in Washington that specializes in the study of defense issues. The group says it derives most of its support from the sale of publications and individual contributions. Its board of directors includes several retired military officers.

The center's latest study focuses primarily on construction proposals overseas. For U.S. bases in Europe, the group says it found plans for a $340,000 auto hobby shop, a $1.2 million religious education facility, $300,000 for an arts and crafts shop, and $14.3 million for new recreation centers and gymnasiums.

The report did not identify the bases where the Pentagon sought to build these facilities.

"At U.S. bases world-wide, we find the same pattern of digging in with non-operational facilities. In Guam, there is another child-care facility for $615,000. In Panama, $6.25 million will be spent on barracks and unaccompanied enlisted housing. The U.S. will be building a new high school at Clark Air Force Base in the Philippines for $7.2 million."

Bomber Convicted

MIAMI (AP) — Anti-Castro activist Eduardo Arocena, already serving a life sentence for bombings in New York City, was convicted Saturday on 24 counts in seven bombings of businesses and Latin American consulates between 1979 and 1983.

A U.S. District Court jury deliberated nine hours over two days before finding Arocena, 42, guilty of all charges in the bombings here. He faces up to 130 years imprisonment.

Arocena, who fled Cuba in 1965, testified during his two-week trial that he condemns communism and condones violence to halt its spread, particularly from Cuba into other South and Central American countries.

He denied FBI allegations that he was the leader of Omega 7, the terrorist group that has claimed responsibility for anti-Castro acts for a decade in Florida, New Jersey and New York.

ANNA PAYTON

Anna Louise Payton was a dropout at age fourteen, a mother at fifteen and is today the mother of six. Anna had to drop out because she was the oldest of eight children and had to help her father with his farm. She has many obstacles against her, but through her persistent study and her strong belief in God, she has overcome the obstacles that faced her. This spring she will receive her GED certificate from Pitt Community College.

Mrs. Payton was encouraged by her children to return to school. Her children range in age nineteen to thirty, and they all realize the value of higher education. Her eldest daughter is a child psychologist, and her youngest will start college in fall, 1985.

Anna began attending Adult Basic Education classes in 1979, but her progress was very slow. She became discouraged and dropped out. In 1981, she was encouraged to return to school by a telephone call she received from someone at Pitt Community College. She decided to return and she is now one point from getting her GED.

Anna's life has been hard. She has raised her family primarily alone, losing two husbands, one to divorce and the other to death. Anna has put her trust in the Lord and credits Him with her success. She says, "I want everyone to know Him as I do."

She is an active member of the church and her community. She serves as the church's secretary and sings in the choir. She can often be heard encouraging people on public assistance to consider going back to school to get their GED.

Mrs. Payton is presently employed at the Sheriff's Department, but she hopes to one day own and operate her own business.

Japan Opens 'Buy Foreign' Street Drive

TOKYO (AP) — Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone's campaign to boost imports took to the streets Saturday with Japanese government officials espousing the merits of foreign-made trash cans, baby buggies and popcorn poppers.

At a busy intersection in Tokyo's crowded Ginza shopping district, a stage was set up for the foreign products, which were recommended by Japanese housewives who have lived overseas.

"People will feel closer to these products if they can see them right in front of them," said Shiro Miyamoto, executive vice president of the Japan Export Trade Organization, or Jetro.

"This is the first time we've brought goods directly to the people, instead of an organized fair or bazaar," said Miyamoto.

Four days ago, Nakasone appealed to Japanese citizens to each buy $100 worth of foreign goods a year to help soften a rising international outcry against Japan's growing surplus with its trading partners.

Uniformed girls wearing sashes that said "Manufactured Products Import Campaign" handed out leaflets with Nakasone's picture on them while officials from Jetro, the Ministry of International Trade and Industry, and the Manufactured Imports Promotion Organization took turns calling on shoppers to take a closer look at what was on hand.

Taking up half the stage was a British baby buggy, a French drop-leaf table, an Italian clothes horse and a huge West German parasol.

Representing the United States were the popcorn popper, a pineapple cutter, a sprinkler head for watering lawns, and a plastic garbage can.

Also on stage was the most popular display — Australian wines.

A huge poster overhead bore a color picture of Nakasone with the headline, "Join Hands with Countries of the World Through Imports."

Nakasone kicked off a domestic "buy foreign" campaign by announcing his new package of trade measures designed to increase access to Japanese markets of foreign products in the areas of telecommunications, electronics, pharmaceuticals and medical equipment, and wood products.

On Saturday, Lee Iacocca, chairman of Chrysler Corp., flew into Tokyo by private plane for a visit including meetings with government officials and discussion with Chrysler's Japanese affiliate, Mitsubishi Motors Corp.

His talks with Mitsubishi will reportedly revolve around a Chrysler plan for joint production of small cars in the United States with the Japanese firm, in which Chrysler has a 15 percent stake.

Soviets See UFO Report

MOSCOW (AP) — Are they flying saucers or just space rubbish? Two Soviet newspapers which rarely contradict each other are in somewhat of a disagreement about unidentified flying objects — UFOs — and other extraordinary sightings.

Three months ago, the trade union daily Trud (Labor) reported that an Aeroflot plane bound from the Georgian capital of Tbilisi to Tallinn in Estonia had a close encounter with a UFO that appeared as a bright beam of light.

The light appeared as the plane flew over the Byelorussian capital of Minsk and "escorted" the craft to its destination, according to Trud.

Earlier in January, Trud reported on other inexplicable bright lights sighted over the Baltic Republic of Latvia.

Muscovites were startled — not only by the reported UFO, but by the fact that a Soviet newspaper which normally purveys news strictly conforming to socialist realism had reported the fantastic as fact.

To set the record straight, the Soviet military daily Krasnaya Zvezda (Red Star) on Saturday dutifully debunked science fiction myths.

Flying saucers and UFOs sighted through the ages are not the spaceships of extraterrestrial beings, it said, but more likely apparitions caused by inversion and refracted light and radio waves.

Break-Ins

Greenville police are investigating the following break-ins reported this weekend.

According to Officer D.R. Wyruck, a lawnmower, cot and saw, collectively valued at $300, were taken from the garage of a 1119 S. Overlook residence Saturday.

Also Saturday, Wyruck reported a break-in at State Credit Co. in which $270 worth of firearms and $45 in currency were taken. Entry was gained to the 312 Greenville Blvd. business by kicking in the rear door.

Dobrynin Hints May OK On-Site Inspection

ATLANTA (AP) — Soviet Ambassador Anatoly Dobrynin said Saturday his country might permit on-site inspection of a radar installation to allay U.S. concerns that the device was violating an arms control agreement.

Dobrynin suggested the possibility of the inspections during a panel discussion at a policy center established by former President Jimmy Carter, who said he was amazed at Dobrynin's suggestion.

Carter called it "quite a departure" from previous Soviet positions.

Carter said he had checked with other members of the Soviet delegation to the conference and was assured that Dobrynin, who had to leave early, had intentionally raised the prospect of on-site verification.

Carter said he was "extremely gratified at the forthcoming nature of the Soviet representation. If their views mirror those that will be presented at the negotiating table at (the arms control talks in) Geneva, this will be very constructive."

Dobrynin's suggestion came in response from comments from Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., who said congressional concerns about possible Soviet violations of existing arms agreements must be addressed before Congress will accept a new treaty.

Nunn cited the Soviet radar installation at Krasnoyarsk, which intelligence analysts say may violate the anti-ballistic missile treaty between the two countries.

Dobrynin said the radar installation was being built for civilian, not military, purposes. He said U.S. concerns should be addressed through diplomatic channels, and if that failed to resolve the issue, an on-site inspection by an American delegation could be considered.

Dobrynin's remarks highlighted the four-day conference at the Carter Center at Emory University, which concluded Saturday with Carter and former President Gerald Ford summarizing a list of recommendations.

The recommendations, which Carter said were agreed to by himself, Ford, Nunn, Baker and the entire Soviet delegation, included:

- That the U.S. and the Soviet Union continue to adhere to the ABM, or anti-ballistic missile treaty.
- That the two countries continue to honor existing agreements, such as the SALT II treaty, which has no legal status. SALT II was never ratified by the U.S. Senate.

— That arms control negotiations not be held hostage by linking them to other differences between the two countries.

— That the two countries renew negotiations to ban all weapons in space.

No Improvement

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of State George P. Shultz, sizing up Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev's first month in power, sees a penchant for "propaganda ploys" and no sign of efforts to improve superpower relations.

Reflecting on the new Soviet leader in an Associated Press interview, Shultz found the same forces at work in the Kremlin that were setting policies under Gorbachev's predecessors.

"I think you have to expect continuity," Shultz said. After a long pause, he found one positive change. "I think if you compare today with a couple of years ago, yes, I think there's a better ability to discuss issues."

But, even on this point, Shultz hedged. "There are problems," he said, without going into detail.

"He offered us the sleeves from his vest," Shultz said of Gorbachev's latest statement. "We examined them carefully and found there was nothing there."

Peru Vote To Be Held Under Arms

LIMA, Peru (AP) — Peruvians vote Sunday for a new president and congress, under military guard and terrorist threats of violence and reprisals.

The armed forces took control of internal order Saturday. They sent 105,000 soldiers and police to protect polling places where 8.3 million Peruvians are eligible and required by law to vote.

Air Force Gen. Cesar Enrico Praeli, chief of the joint armed forces command, said he could not guarantee an election day free of violence.

"The calm we have now may be an indication that the guerrillas are preparing something," Praeli said, but while a guerrilla attack was always possible "we can certainly guarantee that Peruvians will be able to vote safely."

Heavily favored to make the best showing in a field of nine contenders was Alan Gabriel Garcia Perez, 35, the candidate of the Aprista Party of Peru, a social democratic organization that has been seeking power for 60 years.

Public opinion polls indicated Garcia would receive 40 percent of the vote to about 19 percent for Alfonso Barrantes, 58, the Marxist mayor of Lima and candidate of the United Left, a loose coalition of eight parties.

Other major candidates to succeed President Fernando Belaunde Terry are Luis Bedoya Reyes, 66, leader of a conservative coalition of Christian Democrats, and Javier Alva Orlandini, 57, of Belaunde's Popular Action Party.

Belaunde is barred by the constitution from seeking re-election to a second five-year term.

Analysts have predicted no candidate will obtain the simple majority required for election. In that case, a run-off would be held in June between the two top vote-getters in Sunday's poll.

The new president will take office July 28, the 164th anniversary of Peruvian independence from Spain, in the first transition of power between two democratically elected presidents in 40 years.

Sounds of machine-gun fire and explosions were heard in Ayacucho Friday night, adding to the tension in the Andean city in the heart of the Maoist Shining Path guerrilla stronghold, about 210 miles southeast of Lima.

Security forces reported calm Saturday in Ayacucho and throughout the rest of this South American republic of 19.5 million people.

Guards were posted at bridges and power stations, and at hundreds of schools and other voting places.

The two-month campaign was peaceful, though its official closing Friday saw the fatal beating and stoning of one man in a fight between rival political brigades distributing campaign materials in Lima.

Gen. Oscar Noel Brush, the interior minister, said another political activist died early Saturday, but it had not been determined whether he was killed in a clash with a rival group.

15 Americans Die In Blast Blamed On Terrorist Bomb

MADRID, Spain (UPI) — A terrorist bomb "most likely" caused the explosion that destroyed a steakhouse filled with U.S. servicemen, killing 18 Spaniards and injuring 82 other people, including 15 Americans, officials said Saturday.

Two separate groups — the Basque separatist group ETA and the pro-Iranian "Islamic Jihad — Islamic Resistance" — claimed responsibility for the blast, but neither claim could be confirmed.

The Spanish Interior Ministry said in a statement that initial results of its investigation into the Friday night blast at the Descanso restaurant, near the U.S. Air Force base at Torrejon, "permits us to suppose (it) may have been caused by an explosive device made up of chloratite."

Chloratite is a chlorate-based explosive.

The statement said security forces were still investigating other possible causes, but a bomb was the "most likely" cause of the blast.

The statement said the identity of the people responsible for the explosion has not been established and cautioned that reported claims of responsibility "should be viewed with absolute reserve."

The explosion blew out the front of the Descanso restaurant, 9 miles from Madrid, bringing the upper floors of the 3-story building crashing down on the dinner-hour crowd.

The city morgue's spokesman said 18 people were killed, most of them crushed to death by falling rubble. The dead, all Spaniards, included 14 women, according to the spokesman at the Anatomic and Forensic Institute.

Among the 82 injured were 15 Americans, but only one U.S. citizen, tentatively identified as Eugene Walden, remained hospitalized, U.S.

Embassy spokesman Robert Plotkin said.

Nearly 100 grieving relatives gathered in the entrance of the morgue, weeping and hugging each other, as they waited for officials to issue identities of the dead.

"She had her whole life ahead of her," said the mother of a 22-year-old law school graduate who was killed along with her fiancé.

"We didn't learn about it until this morning. We didn't suspect anything until they didn't come back this morning," said the brother of Pilar Harta, who was killed with her friend Maria Ruiz. Both women were 26.

At the scene of the blast, firemen searched for more buried victims, while police and army experts inspected the rubble for evidence of a bombing.

Madrid police chief Antonio Garrido ruled out the possibility of a gas explosion.

Burcham To Get Artificial Heart

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Jack C. Burcham, slated to become the world's fifth person to be given a permanent man-made heart Sunday, was joking and confident as he rested for the operation, doctors said Saturday.

Burcham, 62, will be the third person in 4½ months to receive the plastic and metal pump from the 20-member team at Humana Hospital Audubon.

"I would say he's probably healthier, in a way, than Mr. (William) Schroeder and less healthy than Mr. (Murray) Haydon," the two other people who received artificial hearts at the hospital, Dr. Allan M. Lansing said at a press conference.

Burcham spent Saturday afternoon watching the Masters golf tournament on television.

His spirits were excellent, Lansing said. "He's joking, he's confident, he has a big smile."

Burcham, of Le Roy, Ill., suffered a near-fatal heart attack in October, said Lansing, chairman of the Humana Heart Institute International. "In fact, he was given up for dead."

Tests in November showed "extensive coronary artery disease ... (and) he has been on massive doses of medication since then to try to control his heart failure and keep him comfortable," Lansing said.

Despite the treatment, Burcham has been forced to use oxygen at home at all times, can barely sit up or walk even a few steps.

He said Burcham's enlarged liver and reduced kidney output may correct themselves after the implant.

But since kidney problems are common after surgery, "his renal failure may be aggravated," Lansing said. If so, the doctors are prepared to use dialysis to assist Burcham's kidneys.

Lansing said he described Burcham as less healthy than Haydon "primarily because of the kidney problem."

All of the problems began last fall, Lansing said. "He was never really ill before his heart attack. He was an extremely active man."

Dr. William C. DeVries will lead the Humana Hospital Audubon team of surgeons, nurses and technicians. He will be performing his fourth implant, but for many members of the unit it will be the third run. All participate in the hospital's open-heart and heart transplant operations.

"The team itself is very accustomed now of working together on open-heart surgery and won't have to go through the things they've done in the past," Irvine said. "The actual dress rehearsal of moving the patient in, getting everything (ready) and moving the patient out will not be necessary. They now have that down."

Greene Teen-Agers Die In Car Wreck

By The Associated Press
Six people have died in traffic accidents on North Carolina roads this weekend, including two Snow Hill teen-agers who were killed when their speeding car ran off a Greene County road in a curve and struck a ditch Saturday, the highway patrol reported.

Kimberly Sue Stocks, 16, who was the driver, and Melissa Heath Robins, 15, a passenger, both of Snow Hill, were killed in the 12:45 a.m. accident.

Two people, including a 5-year-old girl, were killed in a single-car accident on Interstate 95, 2 miles north of Lumberton in Robeson County at 9:10 a.m. Sunday. Lauren Babain of Stormville, N.Y., and Gerald Mosessian, 61, of Worcester, Mass., were passengers in a car that ran off the highway, striking a sign and a tree.

Thomas Elliott Hill, 58, of Burlington, died when a car crossed U.S. 421, 3 miles east of Yadkinville in Yadkin County, and struck his vehicle head-on. The accident occurred at 12:40 a.m. Saturday.

Sherry Kerrin Spicer, 24, of Charlotte was killed in a 10:15 p.m. Friday wreck on U.S. 74, 5 miles east of Lumberton, when her car struck another vehicle head-on.

The deaths bring the total for the year to 323, compared with 322 on the same date last year.

Wife's Advice Helping Floyd

AUGUSTA, Ga. (AP) — In 1976, when he won the Masters with a record-matching score, Ray Floyd had a special club, a little 5-wood that helped him play the par-5 holes 13 under par for the first three rounds and sent him on to victory.

This time, the veteran who is seeking an end to a non-winning string of 2½ years, has a plan, a mysterious one suggested by his wife, Maria.

"I'm not going to tell you what it is. I don't want to help anyone else," Floyd said after an eagle — the ball jumped from the back of the cup, into the air and then settled back in the hole — helped him to a charging 69 and a one-shot lead going into Sunday's final round of the 49th Masters, the first of the year's four major tests of golfing greatness.

"Maria suggested the idea about the plan," Floyd said Saturday. "It's like a football game plan. I sat down and wrote it all out last Tuesday."

"I have a plan for all 18 holes, taking into consideration where the pins are placed," said Floyd, a non-winner since acquiring the 18th victory of his career in the 1982 PGA national championship.

"I've stuck to the plan through three days. And I'll stick to it tomorrow. Whether I make birdie or triple bogey, I'll stick to the plan," he said.

Floyd completed three trips over the hills and valleys of the Augusta National Golf Club course in 212, four under par.

The lead, he said, is not important at this stage.

"The important thing is to put yourself in position for tomorrow," he said.

Also in position to make a run at the $126,000 first prize and the famed green jacket that goes to the winner, was a man who didn't expect to be here in the first place and two days ago made plans to leave.

Curtis Strange, the season's leading money-winner on the PGA Tour, continued his comeback from an embarrassing 80 in the opening round with a 68 that placed him at 213, 3-under-par and one stroke back.

Strange's second son was due on Friday. But the baby was born more than a week prematurely, enabling him to compete here. After his opening round, however, he made plane reservations to his home in Williamsburg, Va. — then cancelled them after a brilliant 65 in Friday's second round.

"It's tough sometimes to come back after a good round like I had yesterday. But I did it, and now I'm in good shape. I'm right in there," said Strange, winner of two titles and more than $336,000 already this season.

He and Floyd moved to the front when golfing disaster in its varied forms visited the three men who shared the lead at the start of the day — Tom Watson, Craig Stadler, Payne Stewart and Gary Hallberg, who led the field by three shots at the halfway point of the round.

Stadler, a former winner here, took three from a bunker on the 12th hole and made a triple bogey that sent him reeling back in the pack, grim-faced and tight-lipped in anger. He finished with a 76 and was even par for 54 holes at 216.

Watson, the dominant force in golf over the past decade and among the game's most-envied putters, simply couldn't get the ball in the hole.

Watson 'Pretty Rotten' On Greens

AUGUSTA, Ga. (AP) — Tom Watson was frustrated.

After grabbing a share of the lead halfway through the 49th Masters golf tournament, he fell three shots off the pace in the third round Saturday with what he described as "horrendous" putting.

"Overall, it was a pretty rotten round on the greens," Watson said.

"I'll have to do a lot better tomorrow on the greens to have a chance to win," he said.

"I had four 3-putts today and I don't remember the last time I did that."

Watson's poor putting was the major reason for a 3-over-par 75 that left him with a 54-hole score of 215, three shots behind third-round leader Raymond Floyd, who had a 69.

"If I shoot a good first nine holes tomorrow — and I haven't done that yet — I'll be in good shape," he said.

Watson, who has eight major professional championships, is gunning for his third title at Augusta, having won in 1977 and 1981.

He also had five other finishes in the top five in his previous 11

Masters appearances.

His putting problems began early when he missed on a 6-footer on the second green.

"When you miss putts, it leaves a little lingering doubt in the back of your mind," Watson said.

He had struggled through the front side with three bogeys and one par, and went bogey-birdie-bogey at the start of the back nine.

"I still felt another birdie here or there would get me back in the thick of it," he said in reference to his fifth bogey of the day on No. 12.

"And, I'm still in the thick of it." He birdied both par-5s and then lost another shot to par when he missed a 4-foot putt for a bogey four on No. 16.

Watson said he had a stomach ache when he awoke Saturday morning, "but I felt better on the golf course. I'm going to lay low tonight."

He said he felt fortunate to be only three shots off the pace.

"I'm reasonably comfortable with that position," he said. "You can make up a lot of shots on the back, as long as you don't fall too far behind."

The five-time British Open champion said he was surprised that none of the leaders posted an outstanding score.

However, he added, the firming up of the greens probably left the players undecided on whether to shoot at the flag or play it safe.

"You have to pick your spots when to be aggressive and you have to know when to be defensive," he said.

Watson listened in as someone asked Seve Ballesteros whether it was true he'd bought a putter at the pro shop.

Ballesteros grinned and replied: "I never buy anything."

Then, as Watson discussed his "rotten" putting, he quipped:

Johnson's 20th Blast Lifts ECU

By JIMMY DuPREE
Reflector Sports Writer

Winfred Johnson blasted a three-run homer to center in the first inning, then settled down on the mound to hurl the Pirates of East Carolina to a 9-1 victory over Virginia Wesleyan Saturday at Harrington Field.

Johnson scattered six hits after giving up a run in the top of the first to record his seventh victory in 10 decisions. His two hits, along with a pair by Greg Hardison and Mark Cockrell, led East Carolina at the plate.

"We got an outstanding performance from Winfred Johnson again," ECU Coach Gary Overton said. "There's not a lot more you can say. I think right now we're playing as well as we have all year. We have certainly come on lately."

Daniel Boone came on in relief of Johnson in the eighth, while Chubby Butler threw the final inning and gave up one hit before retiring the side.

"I felt like they needed some work," Overton said. "Winfred was still pitching well."

Mike Mustain singled and scored on a double by Glen Pizzanella in the first inning to put the Blue Marlins on the board first, but that lead didn't last long.

After Hardison reached first on an error and went to third on a pickoff-attempt error by pitcher Chuck Kumkey, Chris Bradberry walked and Johnson followed with his 20th homer of the season for a 3-1 Pirate lead.

Johnson finished the game with 119 total bases, eclipsing his school record of 115 set last season.

Johnson reached first on a fielder's choice in the third, and courtesy runner Mont Carter stole second and scored on a two-out single by Mike Sullivan.

The Pirates added five more runs in the sixth inning. Johnson was hit by a pitch. Sullivan walked and Jay McGraw advanced the runners on a sacrifice. Jim Rilev singled in

ECU Backs Lift Offense By Defense

Tailback Tony Baker and fullback Anthony Simpson scored two touchdowns each to lead the East Carolina offense to an impressive 51-12 win over the defense Saturday afternoon at Ficklen Stadium.

Baker's scoring runs of 42 and three yards and Simpson's runs of 45 and one yard highlighted the two-hour scrimmage, the Pirates' last major scrimmage before next week's annual Purple/Gold Spring Game, which will officially conclude ECU's spring practice.

The offense led 35-10 at the halftime break on the strength of Baker's 42-yard TD run and Simpson's 45-yard scoring jaunt. The Pirates also got six points from senior placekicker Jeff Heath, who was two-for-two on attempts in the first half. Heath connected from 27 and 42 yards.

"The offense came closer to doing what we want them to do than at any other time this spring," Coach Art Baker, who is in his first spring as ECU's head coach, said. "Our spring has been one of the most unusual I've been through. Without exception from one scrimmage to the next, the offense dominates one, then the defense dominates the other."

"I do know this: this is the first scrimmage that the offense was able to execute the way we want them to," Baker said. "The offense executed the best it has all spring. We threw the ball better, and just about every phase of the offense looked better today."

"Tony Baker hasn't had a chance to break many this spring, and he had the chance to break a few today. Anthony Simpson has enough speed to break some; all that is encouraging."

Baker noted that approximately 26 players missed the Saturday scrimmage because of injury, which limited the Pirates' work in areas such as the kicking game. Baker also praised offensive tackle Tim Dumas and guard Greg Thomas for their performance.

Murphy's Homer Lifts Braves By Padres

ATLANTA (AP) — Red-hot Dale Murphy hit a two-run homer in the 10th inning Saturday to give the Atlanta Braves a 7-5 victory over the San Diego Padres after Bob Horner's first home run since last May 23 keyed a three-run ninth-inning rally.

Murphy's drive over the left-field fence came after Brad Komminsk opened the 10th with a single off reliever Tim Stoddard, 0-1. The homer was Murphy's third of the season and gave him eight RBIs in four games. He is batting .533.

Bruce Sutter picked up his first victory of the year by pitching one scoreless inning of relief.

Home runs by Terry Kennedy and Kevin McReynolds in a three-run eighth inning had given the Padres a 5-2 lead. But Murphy drew a leadoff walk off reliever Dave Dravecky to start the Braves' ninth and Horner, who missed most of last season with a broken wrist, homered to make it 5-4.

Rick Cerone greeted San Diego relief ace Rich Gossage with a pinch single and Bruce Benedict sacrificed pinch runner Paul Runge to second.

After Glenn Hubbard popped out, Craig Lefferts relieved Gossage but Gerald Perry singled to tie the score.

Kennedy's shot in the top of the eighth came off reliever Gene Garber and snapped a 2-2 tie. Padres reliever Luis DeLeon followed with a single and McReynolds connected with a two-run blast.

The Padres took a 2-0 lead in the fifth on a pair of unearned runs off Atlanta starter Steve Bedrosian. With one out, Tim Flannery singled and went to third when left fielder Komminsk dropped Garry Templeton's liner after a long run for two-base error. Pitcher Mark Thurmond drove in Flannery with a foul sacrifice fly and Al Bumby's single scored Templeton.

The Braves tied it in the bottom of the inning on Claudell Washington's two-out, two-run double, scoring Chambliss, who singled, and Hubbard, who walked.

New York.....2

NEW YORK (AP) — Darryl

Strawberry led off the bottom of the ninth inning with his first home run of the season Saturday, giving the unbeaten New York Mets their fourth straight victory, a 2-1 triumph over the Cincinnati Reds.

The Mets' 4-0 start — all decided by one run — tied the best start in the club's history in 1973.

Ed Lynch and Roger McDowell combined on a six hitter, McDowell,

2-0, giving up two of the hits in the ninth inning but escaping undamaged with the help of a double play.

The losing pitcher was John Franco, 0-1, who gave up Strawberry's homer on a 1-1 delivery. Cincinnati starter Tom Browning allowed three hits and an unearned run in seven innings before leaving for a pinch hitter.

The Mets tied the score 1-1 in the sixth without a hit. With one out, Kelvin Chapman hit a catchable fly ball to deep center field. As Eric Davis backedpedaled, he appeared to lose the ball in the sun and it dropped untouched for a three-base error. Keith Hernandez followed with a sacrifice fly.

The Reds took a 1-0 lead in the second inning on one-out doubles by Nick Esasky and Dave Concepcion off Lynch, who worked seven innings, giving up four hits.

Johnson Leads ECU...

Carter, again running for Johnson, and Cockrell drove in Sullivan with a single.

Reliever Mike Mungin walked Robert Langston to load the bases, and Mark Shank singled in two more runs. Hardison singled in the final ECU run before the Marlin defense ended the rally with a close double play — the second of four for Virginia Wesleyan.

"(Virginia Wesleyan) has a good ballclub," Overton said. "They're ranked third in the nation in Division III. They play solid defense and hit the ball well."

Pizzanella paced the Marlins with three hits along with their only RBI.

Virginia Commonwealth had runners on second and third with two out in the third before Ed Graf popped out to end the inning.

The only other threat came in the seventh when Andy Hessington walked and Tony James singled with one out, but Johnson retired David Campbell and Jeff Ashnaught to close the rally attempt.

The Pirates, now 26-9 overall and 7-3 in the ECAC-South, return to action Monday at Old Dominion and host league-rival William & Mary Wednesday in a doubleheader.

Brookens Leads Tigers Past Royals

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Tom Brookens doubled home the tying run and scored the go-ahead run on a bases-loaded walk in the eighth inning Saturday while Jack Morris fired a five-hitter and the unbeaten Detroit Tigers posted a 3-1 victory over Kansas City in a rematch of last year's American League playoff opponents.

The world champion Tigers, who made a shambles of last year's American League East race with a 35-5 start, have won all four games this season after winning their first nine a year ago.

Morris, 2-0, struck out seven and walked four in outdueling Bud Black, 1-1, who took a five-hitter and a 1-0 lead into the eighth. Rookie Chris Pittaro began the rally with a one-out single, and went to second on a wild pitch before Brookens tied it with his double.

After Alan Trammell was walked intentionally, the runners executed a double steal. Black struck out Kirk Gibson and intentionally walked Lance Parrish to load the bases. But he walked Larry Herndon on a 3-1 pitch to force Brookens home with the go-ahead run.

Bullpen ace Dan Quisenberry came in and hit Chet Lemon with a pitch to force Trammell home with the third run of the inning before Darrell Evans struck out. It was the first time since May 26, 1981, that Quisenberry had hit a batter.

Willie Wilson tripled into the right-field corner on Morris' third pitch of the game leading off the Kansas City first. One out later, George Brett singled for a 1-0 lead.

The Tigers loaded the bases without scoring in the fourth. Parrish singled with one out and two runners were on base when shortstop Onix Concepcion dropped second baseman Frank White's throw on Herndon's apparent double play grounder. Lemon singled to load the bases but Barbaro Garbey bounced into a double play.

New York.....6

CLEVELAND (AP) — Don Mattingly tripled and doubled, driving in two runs and scoring twice, and Ron Guidry pitched seven strong innings Saturday as the New York Yankees snapped their season-opening three-game losing streak with a 6-3 victory over the winless Cleveland Indians.

Guidry, 1-0, gave up two runs, one of them unearned, on six hits in his first appearance of 1985. The left-hander, who was only 10-11 last year, had been scheduled to pitch the Yankees' opener in Boston but was scratched because of a stiff neck. He struck out three and did not walk a batter.

Rich Bordi took over in the eighth and allowed a run in the ninth on Mike Hargrove's double and an error by second baseman Willie Randolph. Dave Righetti retired pinch hitter Butch Benton on a grounder with two runners on base to get the save.

The loss was the fourth straight for the Indians, disappointing a home-opener crowd of 61,978, the largest opening day crowd in the majors this season.

The Yankees, who collected 14 hits, scored twice in the first inning off Bert Blyleven, 0-1, when Mattingly doubled to score Willie Randolph, who had walked, and then came home on a bloop double by Don Baylor.

They made it 3-0 in the fourth on consecutive singles by Ken Griffey, Dale Berra and Butch Wynegar and, after Cleveland pulled within 3-2 in the bottom of the fourth, added a run in the fifth on Mattingly's triple and a sacrifice fly by Dave Winfield.

Mattingly hit a bases-loaded sacrifice fly in the sixth for the Yankees' fifth run. Bobby Meacham doubled off Dave Von Ohlen in the eighth for his fourth hit and eventually scored on a wild pitch.

Julio Franco opened the Indians' fourth with a single and went to third on Joe Carter's double. Pat Tabler hit a sacrifice fly for the first run and Carter parlayed his own Shortstop Tony Fernandez's error helped Baltimore take a 2-0 lead in the second inning off Dave Stieb, who pitched six innings. After Fernandez booted what should have been an inning-ending double play ball, Dempsey and Young drove in runs with a double and single, respectively.

Davis did not allow a hit through the first three innings but the Blue Jays reached him for a walk and five straight hits in the fourth for a 6-2 lead. Lloyd Moseby started the uprising with a one-out walk and Willie Upshaw followed with Toronto's first hit, a double off the right-field wall. Bell, Ernie Whitt and Willie Aikens all followed with RBI hits — singles by Bell and Whitt and a double by Aikens — before Barfield finished Davis with his three-run homer.

Opening Day Hectic For Commissioner

EDITOR'S NOTE: Peter Ueberroth reflects on his feelings during the first week of his first season as baseball commissioner.

By PETER UEBERROTH
For The Associated Press

It seemed like an assignment that wouldn't be too difficult. I was asked to write a few hundred words about my feelings entering this new baseball season. OK, my perspective — good or bad — might be perceived as somewhat different because I am the new commissioner of this wonderful creation called baseball. Nevertheless, I thought I could handle the task.

But as I started, the words just wouldn't come out. At least not in any satisfactory fashion.

I couldn't talk just about the things that trouble me, about the financial concerns, the struggle with eliminating drugs from society and sports. Focus should be on the players, especially at this time of year. Besides, I was supposed to be writing about this season: What do I see ahead in 1985? I don't see the other issues dominating; certainly, that's not what is really important for the fans.

And I also felt I couldn't write — no matter how honestly — about the excitement, the butterflies within me during Opening Day in Cincinnati.

What was it Roy Campanella said about "it takes a lot of little boy ..."? Could I make you understand?

I thought, with hesitancy, about going back to The Associated Press and saying maybe I'd better pass on this opportunity after all. I guess my old-fashioned stubbornness was what made me take another stab at it.

So I started back through my mind of what had taken place the first two days of the season, which, for me, were in Cincinnati and Milwaukee. Marge Schott's first-ball toss, the sprightliness of 86-year-old Happy Chandler scant weeks after serious back surgery, the enthusiasm of the record crowd at Riverfront Stadium won't soon be forgotten.

The first impression in Milwaukee was of thousands of people set up for tailgating hours before gametime. What fun those fans were having: winter must surely be behind them. The sellout crowd seemed to appreciate the fact this very classy pitcher, Tom Seaver, was starting a major league-record 15th opener. The County Stadium faithful weren't nearly as pleased with his 289th victory. When I visited the umpires, I couldn't help noticing they were as anxious as the players to get the season under way.

My recollections continued, still in search of how to get at my look into the season.

The lightbulb may have gone out! Pete Rose! Of course.

Everyone thinks about Pete. We all love his endless enthusiasm, his sheer joy of being at the ball park. I doubt there is a true baseball fan anywhere who isn't pulling for him to get 95 hits this season.

This time Pete gave me two other important reasons to think about him.

Consider for a moment the natural drama of baseball. Then throw in Opening Day and what it adds. Now put Pete Rose, player-manager Pete Rose, in the middle of it.

Head-first dives, hitting streaks, records, All-Star heroics, World Series championships. All of these say Pete Rose and they say drama.

What more would he do before the largest of 99 Opening Day crowds in Cincinnati history?

It didn't take long. We found out in the fifth inning of this festive afternoon that was an intriguing blend of heavy, wet snowflakes and sparkling sunshine.

It was a scoreless pitchers' battle between two superb veterans, Mario Soto and Montreal's Steve Rogers. After two outs, suddenly the Reds threaten by getting runners to second and third. Now the player-manager is up.

The 52,974 fans are alive. This is a spot made for Rose. Pete naturally obliges with an opposite-field double into the leftfield corner. Two runs score and not only is it hit No. 4,098 in Rose's career, but it also turns out to be the game-winner in a 4-1 Reds victory.

Baseball drama at its best. The second reason Charlie Hustle made that lightbulb in my head go on was the memory of seeing Pete Rose, the father. It was one of those little traditions that often go unnoticed in baseball. At the end of each inning of warmup in the field, the first baseman flips the ball to the dugout.

In Pete's case, he made the most of the unique opportunity by throwing the ball to 15-year-old Pete Jr., who was in uniform as a Reds batboy. That made it a special ritual between father and son. It was a warm sight to me. Add in 6-month-old Tyler Rose, who was in the row behind me with his mother, Carol, and the Rose family picture was complete.

From Rose, my thoughts jumped to the wonderful story I had just read of Chris Pittaro, the 23-year-old rookie who hadn't played a day in the major leagues. Chris Pittaro hadn't been above Double A baseball previously in his still-young career.

The Pittaro story already paralleled that of Rose in that it had a family angle. As it turned out, it also had all the drama one would ever desire.

The Pittaro saga, the newspaper had told me, started at least two generations earlier when Chris' grandfather took his son (Chris' father) to Philadelphia A's games, partly to see Joe DiMaggio and the Yankees. A generation later, Sonny Pittaro started taking his son Chris to baseball games, the first one at Yankee Stadium. All were going to games as fans at the time, mind you.

But now it was Opening Day, 1985, some 40 years after the first trip to Philadelphia, and Chris, the grandson, was about to become a major league player. He was the starting third baseman for, of all teams, the world champion Detroit Tigers.

The young man wasn't satisfied. He added frosting to the story by going three-for-four to help the world champs get the season started right.

Not everyone can be as fortunate as the Roses or the Pittaros. All dreams can't actually be played out between the white lines of a major league stadium.

But in a way, I believe this is what baseball is all about.

Fathers and sons. It could just as well be fathers and daughters, grandmothers and grandsons, any combination enjoying the hot dogs, the pace, the friendliness, the home runs, the ecstasy of victory, the drama that seems to be there every day. Family relationships have grown at ball parks for over a century.

If there is one thing I would like to have everyone share this year, it would be these experiences. Just the experiences, whether they involve Pete Rose or Chris Pittaro or some other ballplayer, veteran or rookie. And whether you are in a professional baseball stadium, a Little League park or just in an open field where you can hit and throw, the feelings always come out the same.

Joe and Keri Ueberroth shared a day at Riverfront Stadium with their mom and dad. We got a bonus from Pete Rose. But just being there together was what counted most. I don't think I could have felt better if I'd just hit a home run in the World Series. This was enough for me.

Bosox Continue Unbeaten String

BOSTON (AP) — Tony Armas, the major leagues' 1984 home run and RBI champion, belted a two-run homer Saturday as the unbeaten Boston Red Sox rolled to a 7-2 victory over the Chicago White Sox.

Dennis "Oil Can" Boyd, 2-0, scattered five hits as the Red Sox stretched their record to 4-0 for the first time since 1973.

Boyd, a 145-pound right-hander, struck out five, walked one and threw 123 pitches in 40-degree weather.

The White Sox had gone ahead 1-0 in the top of the second on Daryl Boston's RBI single. After the Red Sox took the lead on Armas' homer, Chicago tied the score in the fifth when Boston tripled and scored when the relay throw skipped through third baseman Wade Boggs for an error.

The Red Sox regained the lead in their half of the fifth on Wade Boggs' RBI double and Jim Rice's run-scoring single. Boston added two runs off Gene Nelson in the seventh on Rice's RBI single and an error by White Sox third baseman Luis Salazar. Gedman's sacrifice fly in the eighth off Juan Agosto accounted for the final run.

Bill Buckner had three hits and Armas, Rice and Marty Barrett had two apiece to lead Boston's 12-hit attack.

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — Gary Pettis went 3-for-4 with a triple, scored three runs and drove in a run Saturday to spark the California Angels to 6-1 victory over the Oakland Athletics.

Ron Romanick scattered eight hits in 8 1-3 innings in his 1985 debut, walking three and striking out two before needing help from Donnie Moore. Oakland starter Mike Warren lasted 3 1-3 innings, giving up nine hits and five runs, two of them unearned.

Pettis opened the game with a triple and scored on Rod Carew's single. Pettis' RBI single following Mike Brown's single and an error by Oakland right fielder Mike Davis made it 2-0 in the second.

Dwayne Murphy and Mike Heath singled to start the Oakland second and Davis' grounder produced the A's run.

The Angels broke the game open with three runs in the fourth, bunching together three singles, two

Connors' Forced To Retire In Buick WCT Semifinals

DALLAS (AP) — Jimmy Connors' back injury flared up again Saturday, forcing him to retire in the second set of the $500,000 Buick WCT Finals semifinals against Ivan Lendl and placing the Czechoslovakian in the Sunday championship match against Tim Mayotte.

Connors, who pulled a back muscle and defaulted last week in Chicago, hurt his back again in the first set as he tried to follow a shot to the net.

Lendl won the set 6-3 and was leading 2-1 in the second set when Connors called a halt to the proceedings.

"I just pulled something in there and couldn't make it," said Connors, a two-time WCT Finals winner who had defeated Aaron Krickstein in straight sets on Friday night.

"If somebody is hurt he shouldn't play," said Lendl, who welcomed the break after a five-set marathon on Friday against Stefan Edberg. "It will definitely help me. I only got four hours of sleep last night. Now, I can go back to sleep."

Connors, who had been wearing a back brace in practice, suffered what doctors called a "grade two strain of the lumbar muscle" and said it was probably a flare-up of an injury he suffered last week.

An hour after the match, Connors was still flat on his back. The WCT tournament physician, Dr. Phil Berry, said Connors will probably be out of action for 10 days to two weeks.

"It's a painful injury even for walking. The muscle tightens up," he said.

Mayotte's powerful serve-and-volley game claimed Joakim Nystrom of Sweden as a victim 6-4, 4-6, 6-2 and 7-5 in the other semifinal match.

The title match for the $150,000 first-place prize is scheduled for 9:30 a.m. CST on Sunday. The early hour was imposed on WCT officials by CBS-TV, who wanted to make sure plenty of time was left for the start of The Masters golf tournament.

Mayotte, ranked No. 16 in the world, drilled 10 aces past the Swede.

Plaatjes Loses Final TAC Appeal

BOSTON (AP) — Mark Plaatjes' final chance to compete in the Boston Marathon ended Saturday when an official of The Athletics Congress, the national governing body for track and field, said there was "no loophole" in the rules that would allow the 24-year-old South African to run.

Alvin Chriss, the special assistant to TAC Executive Director Ollan Cassell, said that his organization had to abide by regulations of the International Amateur Athletic Association, the world governing body for the sport, in barring Plaatjes from Monday's race.

IAAF rules forbid a South African from competing in international competition because of that country's policy of racial separation, or apartheid.

"We are in the business of seeing that applicable international rules are applied," Chriss said following a news conference for the 89th Boston Marathon.

Plaatjes, who is black, had attended the University of Georgia for two years before leaving in 1982 and had run in domestic meets — which do not fall under IAAF jurisdiction.

He had been assigned No. 5 for the Boston Marathon on the strength of his best time of 2 hours, 14 minutes, 45 seconds, the fastest ever run at altitude.

The Plaatjes situation first arose Thursday, and at that time, Chriss said, "TAC has no choice but to request the BAA (Boston Athletic Association, the race organizer) to refuse entry to Mr. Plaatjes. They agreed to do so."

Following that statement, New Zealander Kevin Ryan, a world-class marathoner and the international technical representative for New Balance Athletic Shoe, Inc., said that Plaatjes would return home Friday to get ready for next month's South African Track and Field Championships.

Michael Peart, the international business coordinator for New Balance, whose shoes Plaatjes was supposed to wear in Monday's race, reaffirmed Ryan's statement Friday.

Asked if Plaatjes was planning to stay in Boston, Peart said: "He is not going to do that. He has checked out of his hotel. He said that he just wants to put that (the furor over his entry) in the back of his mind and go home and train."

However, it was reported Saturday that the South African, who also has registered impressive times in 10-kilometer (6.2-mile) and 15-kilometer (9.3-mile) races, still was in Boston, apparently awaiting Chriss' final word on the issue.

Attempts to locate Plaatjes, however, were unsuccessful.

Chriss, meanwhile, said that a "very famous Boston runner," reportedly four-time Boston Marathon champion Bill Rodgers, had notified him earlier in the week of Plaatjes' entry in the race.

"He called me and asked me, 'What are you going to do about him?'" said Chriss.

Chriss explained Saturday that he had no alternative but to refuse Plaatjes entry into the 26-mile, 385-yard race.

"I'm sorry that a lot of people are upset that he can't run," said Chriss. "The rule hurts people that it's supposed to protect."

Plaatjes had listed his address on his entry blank — according to a BAA official — as Coastline Drive in Malibu Beach, Calif.

Chriss said that if the BAA, which had received Plaatjes' entry a few weeks ago, had notified TAC early rather than this past week, "we might have been able to find a loophole to enable him to run, and there wouldn't have been this brouhaha."

One athlete who definitely was fearful of Plaatjes competing was Britain's Geoff Smith, the defending champion and prerace favorite.

Smith's lawyer, Brian Burke, said Saturday that if Plaatjes ran, his client would have withdrawn.

"The Boston Marathon had a choice of Smith or Plaatjes and they're going to take Smith," said Chriss.

If Plaatjes, a medical student at Witwatersrand University in South Africa, had run and won, it probably would have created an international incident.

There also was the possibility that, once barred, he could have run as an unofficial entrant.

"If the runner showed up as a 'pirate,' and ran as a 'pirate,' given the history of this race, 'piracy' is allowed," Chriss said.

Team Departures Damage Economy

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — The departure of a professional sports franchise leaves behind more than bewildered fans and angry city officials. It can put a multimillion-dollar hole in the local economy.

Hotels, bars and restaurants take most of the loss through missed service to the thousands of fans drawn to arenas and stadiums. City governments lose out on stadium rents and taxes.

The loss of teams also creates an image problem for a city among the national business community, while significantly reducing the quality of life for its citizens, city officials say.

"The impact on the economy is substantial," said Robert McGregor, president of the Chamber of Commerce of Greater Kansas City. "It's substantial when you add up the salaries of the players, concessions, parking, out of town guests and all the rest.

"Some of it is intangible. It's helpful to be known as a sports town. All the teams in town are important. When you lose one, it affects your image."

Kansas City's National Basketball Association team — the Kings — have announced they'll move to Sacramento, Calif., after finishing the season Sunday. It will be the fourth city since 1948 for the Kings, who join the San Diego Clippers, the Baltimore Colts and the Oakland Raiders as franchises that have left their old home towns since 1981.

The Kings pump $6 million directly into the Kansas City economy each year, according to Bob Whitsitt, vice president for marketing for the club.

The total includes rent for Kemper Arena, user fees, earnings taxes, admission taxes, parking, concessions, advertising and various license taxes, Whitsitt said.

"That's not counting the ripple effect, which is estimated at anywhere from 3-to-1 to 10 to 1," Whitsitt said. "If you went to the chamber of commerce and said you're a business that's going to pump $1 million into the local economy, they'd be delighted. If you said you were a business that's going to put $6 million in the local economy plus bring in lots of free national publicity, they would be overwhelmed."

License-plate surveys by the Kings show they attract fans from 37 different counties outside of Missouri, including counties in Nebraska and Iowa, Whitsitt said.

Each of the Kings' 41 home games means an additional 100 to 125 people at the Golden Ox, a popular steak house near Kemper Arena, said Bill Rauschelbach, the restaurant's general manager.

"At $10 or $12 a person, we're talking about some money," he said.

Football teams can have an even larger impact.

Oakland has lost $36.9 million a year since the Raiders of the National Football League team left, said Scott Summerfield, a spokesman for the Chamber of Commerce. Retail and wholesale beverage firms absorbed $10.5 million of the loss, he said.

In Baltimore, city officials estimate a loss of $25 million to $35 million since the Colts left last March.

"That's a lot of things — the tax on tickets, the number of jobs created by concessions, real estate and out-of-town traffic," said Pat Bernstein, press secretary to Mayor Donald Schafer.

A "big league" image helps cities attract and keep businesses, Bernstein said.

"I don't think you can measure the loss of prestige when you lose that professional sports team," she said. "Professional sports, the symphony, ballet and museums — these are involved in quality-of-life decisions made by a company looking to locate in your city."

Professional sports also brings invaluable national television exposure, McGregor said.

"I was in a hotel room in San Diego and I flipped on the television and here is a basketball game on with the Kings," he said. "The name Kansas City is being repeated over and over. How important is that to a community?"

Athletics Committee To Hear Testimony

GREENSBORO (AP) — Members of the University of North Carolina's Committee on Intercollegiate Athletics agreed Friday to begin hearing testimony from athletic directors and faculty in May.

The committee is investigating the athletics policies and practices at each of the 15 UNC schools that compete. It will recommend to the UNC Board of Governors whether changes are needed to prevent scandals and abuses such as those that have surfaced recently at Tulane and Clemson.

Board of Governors Chairman Phillip Carson of Asheville created the committee in March in response to a national debate about intercollegiate athletics and whether student athletes are exploited by their colleges.

The committee last month sent out a three-part survey on athletics practices and requirements for admission of athletes to the 15 UNC schools that compete in intercollegiate athletics.

Chancellors' responses to the first section were discussed Friday and raised so many questions that committee members became confused about what to investigate first.

"Everything I read, I come up with another question and no one to ask it of," said committee chairman Samuel Poole. "Just in reading the policy statement this morning, we immediately came to some questions that are central to what we're trying to get at that we have to ask of the athletics directors."

NFL Awaits Kosar Ruling

NEW YORK (AP) — The National Football League rights to University of Miami quarterback Bernie Kosar, the most coveted player in the April 30 NFL draft, are now on hold while the league sorts out a muddle involving four teams.

The NFL eliminated one element in the confusion Friday when it lifted the April 15 deadline by which Kosar was to officially notify the league that he wants to be in the April 30 draft. It also called a meeting for Tuesday among the four teams involved in the dealing that led to the muddle — the Cleveland Browns, Houston Oilers, Buffalo Bills and Minnesota Vikings.

Commissioner Pete Rozelle said he will decide by April 23 how to settle the controversy.

"The April 15 deadline, as it may apply to Bernie Kosar, is suspended in order to afford an adequate opportunity for resolution of the dispute," Rozelle said in a statement released by the league.

Kosar, who is entering his fourth year at Miami but has two years of football eligibility left, announced last month he would complete his degree this summer and turn pro next fall. He also hired an agent, Dr. John Geletka, causing the NCAA to declare him ineligible for further college play.

Since the Bills, who pick first in the draft, have already signed de-

Fans 'Wave' Pirates Past Cardinals, 6-4

By The Associated Press
You might expect to see a wave at the confluence of the Ohio, Allegheny and Monongahela Rivers... but you wouldn't expect to see 47,335 people doing it.

At least the Pittsburgh Pirates didn't.

"Can you believe it? Who ever thought there would be a wave at a baseball game in Pittsburgh?" said Doug Frobel, whose two-run single capped a four-run first inning as the Pirates won their home opener in Three Rivers Stadium from the St. Louis Cardinals 6-4 Friday night.

"The big thing was the fans were having fun and maybe they will be back. You play before nearly 50,000 and it really gets you going."

The throng at the first night home opener in the Pirates' 109-year history also was the largest opening-game crowd since 1976 and the largest home crowd since an Aug. 17, 1980, double-header against Montreal drew 49,412.

"The fans gave us a big lift, a big, big lift," said Manager Chuck Tanner. "I haven't seen this much excitement here in a long time. When I left home today (New Castle, Pa.) I saw Pirates' helmets and signs and everybody was talking about us."

The Pirates drew only 773,500 last year en route to a last-place finish and the team is up for sale.

Two other National League clubs had their home openers end in disappointing fashion when San Francisco downed Los Angeles 4-1 and San Diego trimmed Atlanta 7-3. Elsewhere, New York blanked Cincinnati 1-0, Montreal beat Chicago 5-1 and Houston whipped Philadelphia 8-3.

After managing only two runs and nine hits in a pair of season-opening losses in Chicago, the Pirates collected 10 hits off four St. Louis pitchers. Bill Madlock drew a two-out walk off Kurt Kepshire in the first inning and Jason Thompson homered. Pittsburgh promptly made it 4-0 when former Cardinal George Hendrick singled, went to third on a single by Tony Pena, who took second on the throw to third, and Frobel delivered his two-run single.

"I like the way we did it," Tanner said. "Jason got the big home run that got us going. Frobel got the single and the bullpen did a great job. The fans don't realize what a big lift they give us when they're here. We've got to prove that Pittsburgh wants a major-league baseball team."

While the hitters came through, for a change, Don Robinson and John Candelaria checked the Cardinals on four hits over the final 4 1-3 innings in relief of a wild Larry McWilliams.

Giants 4, Dodgers 1
Jeff Leonard ripped a two-run homer in San Francisco's four-run third inning as a crowd of 46,910 watched the 500th meeting between the two former New York rivals since they moved to the West Coast in 1958. Mike Krukow checked the Dodgers on eight hits, including a Sid Bream first major-league home run. Rick Honeycutt, the Los Angeles starter, allowed five hits and four runs in 3-2-3 innings.

Dan Gladden singled with one out to start the Giants' third and Manny Trillo doubled him home. Chili Davis' single scored Trillo and Leonard's first homer of the year, a shot to deep center, made it 4-0.

Padres 7, Braves 3
Steve Garvey drilled a pair of solo homers and Kevin McReynolds and Al Bumby rapped two-run doubles to ruin the evening for a crowd of 45,389 in Atlanta. The Braves managed only three hits in seven innings off Andy Hawkins, including a Dale Murphy homer.

Garvey, who had three hits, homered in the fourth inning off starter and loser Rick Camp and in the eighth off Gene Garber. Camp was tagged for eight hits and four runs in four innings.

Mets 1, Reds 0
Gary Carter hit his second game-winning home run in three games and Bruce Berenyi allowed one hit in seven innings. The only hit off Berenyi was Pete Rose's first-inning single. Carter hit his second home run of the season to lead off the fourth inning against Mario Soto.

Berenyi retired 14 batters in a row before hitting Dann Bilardello with a pitch leading off the sixth inning.

Berenyi then walked Soto and Bilardello went to third as Eric Davis hit into a double play. Center fielder Mookie Wilson then made a diving catch of a sinking liner to left-center by Rose. The 3-0 Mets are the only unbeaten team in the NL.

Expos 5, Cubs 1
Dan Driessen slammed a two-run homer and Herm Winningham hit his first major-league home run to power Montreal. Driessen's homer triggered a four-run fourth inning and Winningham hit his solo homer in the fifth off loser Dennis Eckersley. Bryn Smith, who was winless in four lifetime decisions against the Cubs, limited Chicago to three hits through eight innings.

Driessen said his home run came on "a fast ball that didn't sink. It just stayed there."

Winningham, who came to the Expos as part of the deal for Carter, started the uprising with a single and scored on Driessen's homer. Vance Law then singled and scored on a double by Tim Wallach, who came home on Mike Fitzgerald's single.

Astros 8, Phillies 3
Houston's Terry Puhl drove in three runs with a triple and single in a seven-run sixth inning and added a fourth RBI with a sacrifice fly. The Phillies have lost all three games this year and 12 in a row dating back to last season.

Sutton, Oakland Rout Angels

By The Associated Press
The new-look Oakland A's are finally looking a little better.
Don Sutton, acquired from Milwaukee, started off his 20th major-league season with 6 1-3 fine innings Friday night as the A's routed the California Angels 15-6.
It was host Oakland's first victory of the season after three losses in Seattle.
"Don realized how important this game was," A's Manager Jackie Moore said.
Sutton got hitting support from Dusty Baker, acquired from San Francisco, along with Dave Collins and Alfredo Griffin, both acquired in a trade with Toronto.
Mike Davis, in his sixth year with Oakland, was the big hitting star, driving in five runs and scoring four times with a 4-for-5 effort that included a home run and two doubles.
In other American League games, Seattle nipped Minnesota 2-1, Milwaukee beat Texas 11-6 and Baltimore tripped Toronto 7-2.

Sutton, 40, and Baker, 35, who hit a three-run homer, were teammates for several years with the Los Angeles Dodgers.
"It sure brought back memories," Sutton said.
Another member of those Los Angeles teams was Tommy John, who started for California. He took the loss, although the Angels were trailing 2-0 when he left the game after pitching five strong innings.
"He pitched a great game. He's always given me problems, and he showed tonight he still can pitch," Collins said of the 41-year-old John.
Sutton had initially balked at pitching for Oakland after he was traded to the A's for Milwaukee's Ray Burris. Sutton had said he wanted to pitch for a team in southern California.
But he eventually relented, and his first outing of 1985 resulted in the 28th victory of his career.
"I intended to try to win anyway. It's nice to end that losing streak, but I'd rather have come in here after winning three in a row," he said.

Oakland rapped out 14 hits. Included among them were Collins' solo home run and two RBI singles, plus a two-run double and run-scoring single by Griffin.
Ruppert Jones knocked out Sutton with a two-run homer in the seventh that made it 7-2. After Oakland scored four times in the seventh off rookie Bob Kipper and Baker and Davis homered in the eighth off Pat Clements, California's Dick Schofield hit a grand-slam homer with two outs in the ninth off Keith Atherton.
Mariners 2, Twins 1
Jim Presley hit his third home run in three nights and Edwin Nunez saved his third game of the season for surprising Seattle. The Mariners now own a 4-0 record — the best start in their nine-year history — and a two-game lead in the AL West.
Matt Young, making his first 1985 appearance, took a four-hitter into the ninth. He left after giving up a one-out single to Kent Hrbek, his first hit of the season in 13 at-bats.

Nunez earned the save by getting Tom Brunansky to ground into a double play.
Presley's homer snapped a 1-1 tie in the fourth at the Kingdome in Seattle.
Minnesota's Ken Schrom lost despite pitching a three-hitter.
Brewers 11, Rangers 6
Bill Schroeder, who became Milwaukee's No. 1 catcher when Jim Sundberg was traded away, made a big impression at Texas' home opener by knocking in six runs with a grand-slam homer and a single.
Schroeder had a two-run single in the second inning as Milwaukee scored three times to take a 3-2 lead.
The next inning, the Brewers loaded the bases on a double by Cecil Cooper, a single by Mark Brouhard and Paul Householder's walk. Schroeder then belted a ball just over the left-field wall for his first career slam. Both of Schroeder's hits came off loser Frank Tanana.
Danny Darwin, who pitched last season for Texas, started for Milwaukee and lasted just 4 2-3 innings. He gave up six runs on five hits, including a two-run homer by Cliff Johnson.

Orioles 7, Blue Jays 2
Sammy Stewart continued his early-season success as Baltimore's long reliever with four hitless innings, while Gary Roenicke and Jim Dwyer took turns contributing key hits.
Stewart, who pitched three hitless innings on Wednesday against Texas in his first appearance, earned his second save of the year by shutting down visiting Toronto. The victory went to Scott McGregor, who pitched five innings and allowed solo home runs to George Bell and Willie Upshaw.
Roenicke broke a 1-1 tie in the fourth inning with a home run off loser Jimmy Key.
In the seventh inning, the left-handed Dwyer pinch hit for the right-handed Roenicke and lined a bases-loaded triple off reliever Ron Musselman. Dwyer then scored on a wild pitch.
The Orioles are 3-0 this season, tied with Detroit and Boston for the lead in the AL East.

Wall Resigns At Tulane

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Hindman Wall has resigned as athletic director at Tulane University, but says his decision was not a direct result of alleged basketball gambling schemes and payoffs that have shaken the university in recent days.
"The last several years have taken their toll," Wall said Friday. "It's best for me to step down now. This has been coming on for years."
"It has physically and mentally beaten me down and I need a fresh start," said Wall, 49, who has held the post for nine years.
He said he was not forced to quit and felt no pressure from anyone to do so. "Absolutely, I had no pressure. I was not asked to resign," he said.
Meanwhile, a second innocent plea was entered in the alleged point-shaving case in which eight people were indicted by an Orleans Parish grand jury April 4. They included three members of the basketball team, three other Tulane students, and two other men.
Mark Olensky, 21, of Fair Lawn, N.J., pleaded innocent Friday to 10 counts of sports bribery and three counts of conspiracy to commit sports bribery.
Olensky is a Tulane student but not a member of the basketball team.
Gary Kranz, 21, of New Rochelle, N.Y., also a student, has pleaded innocent to charges of sports bribery and possession and distribution of cocaine. He was accused of providing cocaine to three Tulane players in the case.
Bobby Thompson, 21, of New Orleans, a member of the team, and David Rothenberg, 22, of Wilton, Conn., a student, have pleaded guilty to sports bribery charges.
The other four indicted are to be arraigned Monday.
The indictments specifically claim point-shaving in two home games, Feb. 2 with Southern Mississippi and Feb. 20 with Memphis State.
In point-shaving, players try to control the final score as related to the official betting line. Tulane was favored to beat Southern Mississippi by 10½ points and won 64-63. Tulane was a four-point underdog in the Memphis State game but lost 60-49.

The scandal has also triggered the resignation of basketball Coach Ned Fowler and two of his assistants, and apparently will wipe out Tulane's basketball program for men.
Tulane President Eamon Kelly, who on the day of the indictments recommended abolishing the men's basketball program, said Friday he accepted Wall's resignation with appreciation for the 49-year-old athletic director's service over the past nine years.
"Tulane's ongoing internal inquiries into possible NCAA infractions have not yielded any evidence that Mr. Wall was involved in those matters under investigation," Kelly said.
District Attorney Harry Connick has said his investigation of a point-shaving plot involved five Tulane basketball players, and also turned up evidence of NCAA violations — a cash bonus given a recruit and cash payoffs being given to at least one player.
Wall denied he knew of any wrongdoing. He said his resignation, effective June 30, is linked to the scandals only by time.
"It's been coming on for a while," he said, but would not elaborate.
For at least the past three years, the athletic program has been in turmoil at Tulane, a selective, 150-year-old private university with an enrollment of just over 10,000.
The problems included the discovery of a $1 million deficit in the athletic department, allegations that former football Coach Wally English sent an assistant to spy from the bushes on a Mississippi State practice session, and a lawsuit against the school by quarterback Jon English, son of the coach.
That lawsuit challenged the NCAA's transfer rule and permitted the quarterback to play in seven games under a series of injunctions.

Wall fired Wally English after last season and hired Mack Brown.
But the rift between the coach and the athletic director had divided Tulane supporters into pro-Wall and pro-English groups, as well as a group that felt they both should be fired.
It all added up, Wall said.
"It's just one of those things. I'm just tired," Wall said Friday. "I'm looking for a job."
Kelly said he would begin an immediate search for a successor.
Wall moved to Tulane in 1976 after two years as athletic director at Cincinnati.
At Tulane, Wall raised funds and built a new administration-football complex and established an endowment fund that, by last fall, had funded 55 athletic scholarships at $50,000 each.
Ben Weiner, one of the most ardent of Tulane's financial backers, said, "This is a sad day for Tulane. In my opinion Hindman is the best athletic director in America."
"He's accomplished more since he's been here than any athletic director since Tulane's been here."

You'll Love The Money That You'll Save By Heating Your Water With Propane

Propane gas residential water heaters have four outstanding advantages over electricity. They are:

- Less costly to operate, thanks to propane's lower price!
- Heats water faster!
- Keeps heating when power's off!
- And because of electricity's inherent inefficiency, they SAVE ENERGY!

Now if this gets your attention, we'll be glad to give you more information on how heating your water with propane can keep your attention.

Howard Still Critical Following Surgery

ANDERSON, S.C. (AP) — Frank Howard, the colorful former football coach at Clemson University, remained in critical but stable condition at a local hospital today after surgeons removed a gallstone, officials said.
Howard, who coached the Tigers for 30 years, was admitted Wednesday with a blocked digestive duct, said Dan Corrigan, director of community relations for the hospital.
Doctors were conducting tests on the 76-year-old retired coach shortly after 12 p.m. Friday when they decided to perform abdominal exploratory surgery and found the gallstone, Corrigan said.
"There were no complications and he is recovering as expected," Corrigan said.

Howard, who was taken to the intensive care unit after the operation, was described by the staff early this morning as being "alert, cooperative and doing well."
Howard's son, Jimmy, said the former coach was suffering from inflammation caused by what appeared to be a stone between the liver and pancreas.
"I guess the worst thing that could happen is that they'd have to operate," the younger Howard said Thursday.
Howard, also a former Clemson athletic director, was admitted to the hospital Wednesday after complaining of fever and shakiness.

Thomas Sets New NBA Assist Mark

By The Associated Press
After getting the single-season record for assists, Isiah Thomas gave his teammates an assist for helping out along the way.

"It's a special award for me, but every guy has to share in it," Thomas said Friday night after collecting 17 points and 21 assists in a 102-96 National Basketball Association victory over Washington. "They're the same guys I've been with all year."

Thomas now has 1,110 assists with one game to go in the regular season, erasing the mark of 1,099 set by former Piston Kevin Porter during the 1978-79 season.

"It was a good feeling basically, because all of my teammates were around, the same guys we had the ups and downs with all year," Thomas said.

In other NBA games, it was Philadelphia 111, Indiana 105; Milwaukee 115, Boston 113 in overtime; Atlanta 119, Chicago 108; San Antonio 117, Kansas City 112; Los Angeles Clippers 115, Houston 110; Cleveland 109, New York 108 in overtime; Phoenix 96, Utah 92; Portland 131, Dallas 111; and Los Angeles Lakers 145, Seattle 131.

Thomas set the record with his 11th assist of the game when he fed forward Terry Tyler for a 12-foot jumper with 8:36 to play in the second quarter. Thomas was presented with the game ball and received a 50-second standing ovation from the Joe Louis Arena crowd of 17,483.

"Who deserves it more than he?" Pistons Coach Chuck Daly said. "He's a gentleman, an incredibly talented player and a class individual."

"I enjoyed every minute of it, just as much as Isiah did," said Tyler, who led the Pistons with 18 points. "He's accomplished a lot, and he still has a lot to learn. The more he matures, the better he'll get."

Tyler was a Detroit rookie when Porter set the previous record.

Washington's loss to Detroit dropped the Bullets to 39-42 and guaranteed New Jersey the fifth-best record in the Eastern Conference. Detroit, 45-36, has the fourth-best record and will have the homecourt advantage against the Nets in the first round of the NBA playoffs beginning next week.

The Pistons trailed 87-86 midway through the fourth quarter, but Dan Roundfield's jump shot capped a 12-4 spurt as the Pistons took a 98-91 lead with about 2½ minutes to go.

The Bullets shot just 41 percent from the field in the contest.

"We've been playing well, but we haven't been able to get the wins," Washington Coach Gene Shue said. "It's hard to win in the pro league with outside shooting unless your defense is great."

Cliff Robinson scored 20 points to lead the Bullets, while Gus Williams and Jeff Malone each added 19. Center Bill Laimbeer had 13 rebounds for Detroit and went over the 1,000 mark in that category for the second straight year.

Bucks 115, Celtics 113
Paul Mokeski's two free throws with no time left in overtime gave Milwaukee its victory over Boston and kept the Bucks even with Philadelphia in the race for the second-best record in the Eastern Conference.

Mokeski was fouled by Robert Parish after Larry Bird, who scored 47 points, hit a desperation three-point shot to tie the game with five seconds remaining.

Sidney Moncrief scored 25 points and Ricky Pierce 24 for the Bucks. 76ers 111, Pacers 105

Philadelphia, which hopes to have the homecourt advantage if it meets Milwaukee in the conference semifinals, defeated Indiana although center Moses Malone suffered an ankle injury in the second period.

Malone did not return to the game although the injury was not believed to be serious.

Julius Erving led the 76ers with 28 points, while Clark Kellogg and Vern Fleming had 24 each for the Pacers, who made the game close in the fourth period with a 23-10 spurt that narrowed a 16-point deficit to 102-99 with 4:01 left.

Blazers 131, Mavericks 111
Kiki Vandeweghe scored 28 of his 38 points as Portland built a big lead in the first half and beat Dallas for the first time in five games this season.

Vandeweghe, who hit 15 of 18 field-goal attempts in the game, was 12-for-13 in the first half as the Trail Blazers pulled ahead 67-50.

Jay Vincent led the Mavericks with 21 points.

Spurs 117, Kings 112
San Antonio stayed even with Portland in the race for fifth place in the Western Conference as Artis Gilmore scored 31 points against Kansas City.

The Spurs led 59-53 at halftime despite only four points by Gilmore. Then he hit 10 of 15 shots in the second half to keep the Kings from rallying.

Hawks 119, Bulls 108
Dominique Wilkins scored 11 of his 31 points as Atlanta outscored Chicago 31-15 in the fourth quarter.

The Bulls, who got 28 points from Michael Jordan, led 81-65 midway through the third quarter, but the Hawks closed the gap to eight points after three periods and then took the lead with a 14-2 run in a six-minute span. A tip-in by Wilkins put Atlanta ahead to stay at 101-99.

Lakers 145, Sonics 131
Reserve guard Mike McGee scored a career-high 41 points to lead Los Angeles over Seattle.

The Lakers led 41-22 after the first quarter and 73-60 at halftime before reserves took over in the second half.

Hearns, Hagler Set For Fight

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Hold the hype. It's almost hitting time for Marvelous Marvin Hagler and Thomas "Hit Man" Hearns.

"Finally we're going to get it on," Hagler said Friday at a news conference.

"Matter of fact, I'm ready to fight today," Hearns said. "I'm ready to get rid of all of this (news conferences, interviews, etc.)."

The two have been hyping the fight and snarling and snapping at each other for several weeks.

Monday night, in a ring at a 15,088-seat outdoor stadium at Caesars Palace, Hagler and Hearns will battle for the undisputed middleweight championship held by Hagler.

The scheduled 12-round bout will begin about 8 p.m. PST and be seen on closed-circuit television at more than 600 locations, with more than 3 million seats, in the United States and Canada and on limited pay-per-view TV.

Promoter Bob Arum said both fighters will make more than their guarantees through percentage deals. Hagler is guaranteed $5.6 million, and Hearns is guaranteed $5.4 million.

The two champions — Hearns holds the World Boxing Council super welterweight title, which is not at stake — fired their final pre-fight verbal shots at the news conference.

"I fought a light heavyweight," Hearns said referring to his 10-round decision over physically rugged Murray Sutherland July 10, 1983. Sutherland had unsuccessfully challenged undisputed light-heavyweight champion Michael Spinks for the 175-pound class title in 1982, but he weighed the middleweight limit of 160 when he fought Hearns.

"I've been fighting men, and now I'm going up against a midget," the 6-foot-1 Hearns said.

"You call somebody a midget," snapped the 5-9½ Hagler. "You're just a freak. When I get into the ring, I'm a giant."

Following the news conference, Hearns worked out in the afternoon at a ballroom at Caesars Palace, as he has since arriving here 11 days ago.

Hagler held an evening workout at Johnny Tocco's Gym where he has trained since arriving here last Monday. For the second time the workout was closed to the press and public.

"This is a big one and we owe it to the press and public to be available," said Emanuel Steward, Hearns' trainer-manager. "We're being well-paid."

In several past fights, Hagler has trained away from the fight site, often in another town, right up to fight time.

Steward acknowledged this has been the style for Goody and Pat Petronelli, who manage and train Hagler.

But, Steward said, "They're getting a little paranoid. They feel Las Vegas is a jinx. They didn't want to fight here at all. He's never felt comfortable here."

Hagler, who has a 60-2-2 record with 50 knockouts, first fought here on June 30, 1979, and failed to win the middleweight title when he fought to a 15-round draw against Vito Antuofermo.

He scored a 10-round decision over Marcos Geraldo here May 17, 1980, then in two Las Vegas appearances as champion scored a 15-round decision over Roberto Duran on Nov. 10, 1983, and stopped Juan Roldan in the 10th round on March 30, 1984.

He was criticized for looking tentative in his fight against Duran, and he was knocked down in the first round by Roldan, although Hagler claims he slipped.

But if Hagler has not sparkled in Las Vegas, it was here that Hearns suffered his only loss against 40 victories, 34 of which were by knockout.

On Sept. 16, 1981, at Caesars Palace, Hearns, then the World Boxing Association welterweight champion, was stopped in the 14th round by Sugar Ray Leonard for the undisputed 147-pound division title.

However, in his last showing here, Hearns knocked out Duran in the second round in defense of his share of the 154-pound title and set up Monday's fight.

Hearns won his four other fights here by knockout.

The Hearns-Hagler fight will be shown via closed circuit broadcast Monday at TW's Nitelife. Tickets are available at the door, and there is an admission fee.

Howard Twilley of Tulsa made 134 pass receptions in 10 games in 1965 to set an NCAA major college record.

Yarborough Ready For TranSouth

DARLINGTON, S.C. (AP) — Cale Yarborough knows it'll take more than the hometown crowd's crossed fingers to bring him the title in the 29th running of the TranSouth 500 stock car race Sunday.

Yarborough, a native of Timmonsville, S.C., about 15 miles from here, has won five Southern 500s at Darlington International Raceway but has yet to win the TranSouth.

He bowed out of the opening round of qualifying Thursday because of engine trouble but returned Friday with the fastest speed of the day and made the 40-car lineup.

With a speed of 154.778 miles per hour, Yarborough nabbed the 21st position. His time was the 10th fastest overall.

"We have a lot of extra work ahead because of that," he said. "This track is tough enough without having to pass a lot of people."

No TranSouth winner has ever started lower than 12th.

Bill Elliott posted a near-record qualifying time on Thursday and won the pole for Sunday's Grand National race.

Elliott, who earlier this year won the Daytona and Coca-Cola 500s, had a one-lap speed of 157.454 mph, just short of Tim Richmond's 1983 qualifying record of 157.818 mph.

Veteran David Pearson, who has won 10 races on the 1.366-mile Darlington oval, will be outside Elliott on the front row.

The second-fastest qualifier on Friday was Kyle Petty, followed by Bobby Allison.

Darlington, known as the "granddaddy" of all NASCAR tracks, has undergone a minor facelift since Harry Gant won the Southern 500 last September. It was repaved in turns one and two and the pit areas have been modified with new protective barriers.

The only driver to crash during qualifying was Bobby Wawak of Charlotte, N.C., who lost control of his car on the fourth turn Thursday and smacked into the wall.

Wawak, who starts in the 37th position Sunday, was uninjured but his car badly damaged.

Elliott, top money winner on the NASCAR circuit with $288,155 this year, has six Grand National wins to his career credit, winning three in 1984 and one in 1983.

The Dawsonville, Ga., native won the pole here in 1981 and finished fourth. In 1982 and 1984, he placed third in the TranSouth 500, and in 1983 he finished fifth.

Connors Tops Krickstein

DALLAS (AP) — Jimmy Connors walked off the court after his quarterfinal victory in the Buick World Championship Tennis Finals, but got a massage on his aching back before going to the press interview room where reporters were waiting.

After the world's No. 2-ranked player had to forfeit a tournament championship match last week against No. 1-ranked John McEnroe because of a torn muscle in his lower back, there was a question whether Connors would be able to compete in the WCT Finals.

But Connors was on hand for his first scheduled appearance in the competition Friday night and appeared sharp in disposing of his game teen-age opponent, Aaron Krickstein, 7-5, 6-2, 6-3.

"I'm up and around. Trying to stay loose. Trying to keep it in good enough condition to play again tomorrow and the next day if I have to," the 34-year-old Connors said.

"It's stiff, it's uncomfortable ... and it's old," he said, but added that if he hadn't felt okay, he wouldn't have played. "Every time I take the court, I either go 100 percent or I don't go at all," he said.

Connors' semifinals opponent today was Ivan Lendl of Czechoslovakia, the world's No. 3-ranked player, who had to rally late in Friday night's other contest to overtake Sweden's Stefan Edberg, 3-6, 7-6 (10-8), 3-6, 6-1, 6-2.

McEnroe and Sweden's Mats Wilander, ranked No. 4 worldwide, had been expected to join Connors and Lendl in the semifinals. But McEnroe was upset Thursday night by Joakim Nystrom of Sweden, and Wilander was derailed by Tim Mayotte. Nystrom and Mayotte were opponents in today's 10 a.m. opening semifinal match.

Connors' straight-set victory over Krickstein, who is only 17 but is already ranked No. 9 in the world, was not as easy as the score indicated. He lost his serve twice in the first set, and only a broken ball saved him from a probable first-set loss.

Behind 4-3 and serving advantage-out, Connors was wide on a backhand shot and Krickstein was announced as the winner. But Connors protested that the ball broke when he hit it. Officials retrieved the ball, concurred, and when the point was replayed, Connors prevailed and went on to win the game and set.

Duke Decision To Cut Family Medical Care Drawing Protests From Doctors

DURHAM, N.C. (UPI) — Doctors and citizens fear Duke University's plans to end its training program for family physicians could hurt rural North Carolinians who depend on the doctors for their medical care from the cradle to the grave.

"Some communities have no family physicians at all and need them," said Sue Makey, director of the 1,700-member North Carolina Academy of Family Physicians. "There probably are several hundred sites in the state where family physicians are needed."

Makey said her association would fight to save the training program, whether keeping it at Duke University or moving it to another medical facility. Makey said keeping the program is essential because there are not enough family doctors to meet the needs of North Carolinians, especially those in rural areas.

But the university will phase out its program over four years and replace it with a clinic in the departments of medicine, pediatrics and obstetrics-gynecology. Under the present program, about 23,000 people in the Durham community are treated at two clinics.

The most likely school to replace Duke University for the residency program is the University of North Carolina, which sponsors 98 residents in three-year, family practice training programs across the state.

East Carolina University also has a three-year training program with 36 residents in family practice and Bowman Gray School of Medicine in Winston-Salem is training 32 residents in a similar program.

Dr. Woody Warburton, director of the Duke-Watts Family Medicine Center, said physicians across the country have called him about the university's plans and believe "this development is a bellweather for the future."

"There is a concern that a leading medical school apparently has discarded its social and educational mission in favor of subspecialty care," Warburton said. "And if a dean or chancellor can make a decision such as the one made at Duke, what will happen to programs elsewhere?"

Warburton and other medical professionals said the university's decision could cause problems for future medical students and their patients, including lack of comprehensive community care and skyrocketing costs.

"It means future generations of Duke students will have a distorted view of community health care," Warburton said. "They will know how to give fragmented care, but not how to care for the whole person or whole family."

"Cost of care also is an important parameter in family practice," he said. "Family physicians pride themselves in providing available, affordable care. I don't believe that the new Duke clinic will be able to meet those parameters because the doctors there are not used to practicing cost-conscious medicine." Dr. James Jones, chairman of the Department of Family Medicine at East Carolina's School of Medicine, said he was disappointed by Duke University's decision because family physicians are in short supply in North Carolina. "Family physicians are best equipped to serve small communities because of the broadness of their training," Jones said. "They treat patients from the cradle to the grave."

Jackson Conducts Rally At Site Of Klan Shooting

GREENSBORO, N.C. (UPI) — The Rev. Jesse Jackson brought his message of peace and justice Saturday to a predominantly black neighborhood where five people were killed in a 1979 shootout between Ku Klux Klansmen, Nazis and communists.

"We come with a mission of justice," Jackson told a crowd of about 150 people. "Greensboro is a city that in 1960 became a beacon for the world when, in peace and with dignity, four students sat down at the lunch counter at Woolworths."

"Now, 25 years later, we return. We come back because there has been manifest here an attempt to turn back to the mean times," said Jackson, a former Democratic presidential candidate. "And we have come to say that we will not go back."

To the cheers of the predominantly black crowd, Jackson led his audience in the chant, "I am somebody." Three women whose husbands died in the shootout — Signe Waller, Marty Nathan and Dale Sampson — attended the hour-long rally, which took place where the gun battle erupted more than five years ago, at the intersection of Everitt Street and Carver Drive.

Jackson, a graduate of Greensboro A&T University and a leader of the sit-ins of the 1960s, spoke for about 20 minutes, while across town jurors heard testimony in a civil lawsuit filed on behalf of the victims, survivors and their relatives of the Nov. 3, 1979 "Death to the Klan" rally.

U.S. District Judge Robert Merhige Jr. moved Saturday's session of the trial to Greensboro after an electrical fire Friday shut off power to the federal courthouse in Winston-Salem.

It is the third trial stemming from the 88-second gun battle that left five Communist Workers Party members dead. Nazis and Klansmen were acquitted of criminal charges in a 1980 state trial and a federal trial last year.

Survivors of the slain communists are suing Klansmen, Nazis, federal agents and Greensboro officials for $48 million on charges they had prior knowledge the rally could lead to a violent confrontation, but failed to prevent it.

"We assert non-violent direct action and the full use of the judicial process. Equal protection under the law is a non-negotiable right," Jackson told the crowd. "Justice must be swift and sure to be effective."

"Death squads must not be allowed in Central America, in North Carolina, in South Africa or anywhere in the world," he said.

When asked whether anything would come from the federal lawsuit following the two unsuccessful prosecutions, Jackson said, "the courts happen to be one instrument."

"What's important now is that we not allow the system to isolate the murdered and insult the murderers," he said. "In some sense all of us died a little in 1979."

Marines Started Fire

By The Associated Press
A fire that's burned nearly 4,000 acres in a game preserve in Pender County was started accidentally by Marines from Camp Lejeune on air maneuvers in the area, a state official says.

"It is military caused," Kay Scott of the North Carolina Forest Service said Saturday. "A smoke cannister used as a marking device for air operations ... caused the fire."

Meanwhile, fires in eastern North Carolina that have burned about 144,000 acres remained contained.

Ms. Scott said the Pender County fire was contained Saturday morning after burning 3,840 acres and that 66 firefighters and 12 tractors were handling "mop up operations" near the Shaken Creek community in Pender County.

Camp Lejeune Public Affairs Officer Lance Cpl. Roger Trask said he had no information on whether or not Marines on maneuvers from the base started the fire.

Train's Travels Given Extension

RALEIGH (AP) — The Carolinian will continue to roll between Raleigh and Charlotte through Sept. 2, but Amtrak officials have said the state must increase its subsidy if it wants the rail service to continue beyond that date.

The decision comes just about a month after Amtrak notified state officials that it would shut down the line June 10, in the middle of its 11-month trial run, because of operating losses.

State Department of Transportation officials protested to Amtrak that the train should be continued through the peak summer ridership season.

In a statement released Friday, Amtrak officials said "It is expected that about one-half of the annual revenue for the train will be realized during the summer months, and that continuation of the service will enable us to offset some of the operating losses incurred since February."

Amtrak chose Sept. 2, Labor Day, as the cutoff date because the summer travel season traditionally ends that day, state officials said. The trial run originally supposed to last through September.

Amtrak did not indicate how much the state would have to pay for the service to continue next fall. The General Assembly allocated $500,000 in 1984 to pay capital expenses during the trial run. Ticket sales were expected to pay for operating expenses. Gov. Jim Martin's proposed budget includes $500,000 for each of the next two years.

Despite heavy ridership, the Carolinian has been running at a loss because passengers are taking much shorter trips than predicted. The Carolinian travels from Charlotte through Raleigh to Richmond, Washington and New York.

Lotus Takes Steps To Enhance Lead

NEW YORK (AP) — Lotus Development Corp., which in just three years emerged as perhaps the dominant force in personal-computer software, is aggressively moving to enhance its lead.

But in doing so Lotus is not relying solely on its own talent. Instead, the company is reaching out to rival software makers and independent programmers to penetrate new markets.

This past week, for example, Lotus signed a letter of intent to purchase Software Arts Inc. and to hire the company's two top officers and co-founders, Daniel S. Bricklin and Robert Frankston.

Lotus also said this past week that a co-developer of 1-2-3, Jonathan Sachs, who had left the company last January, agreed to come back and help Lotus develop new products.

And two weeks ago Lotus and Cullinet Software Inc., a leading supplier of software for IBM's large-scale computers, agreed to develop programs that link personal computers with those IBM computers — a linkage increasingly sought by businesses.

These and other moves underscore Lotus' desire to avoid being caught flat-footed with too few products as the software industry continues its rapid evolution, observers say.

"Lotus's willingness to go outside, while not necessarily material from a financial standpoint, is very material to the maturity of the company," said Harvey H. Bundy III, a partner with the investment firm William Blair & Co. in Chicago.

Lotus itself believes the only way to "move the industry quantum leaps from where it is now" is to "create an atmosphere of working together," said Lotus spokeswoman Diane Asay.

"We can't do it alone, certainly," she said. "We're building strategic alliances to solve the problems the best way possible. Even the acquisition of Software Arts has the feeling of an alliance more than an acquisition."

Lotus, headquartered in Cambridge, Mass., grew up fast on its own.

Cheer For Interest Rates

NEW YORK (AP) — As interest rates have fallen in the credit markets lately, stock traders have watched with mixed feelings.

For many reasons, just about everybody agrees, low interest rates are much to be preferred over high ones. But in the present case, some observers argue, the situation isn't quite so simple.

A drop in interest rates conjurs up many bright visions on Wall Street. For one thing, it diminishes the appeal of interest-bearing investments like bonds, money market

Garage Sale Today!

Some call them Great American Treasure Hunts, others call them stoop, porch, knickknack or rummage sales. By whatever name, garage/yard sales have become a warm weather standard. Spring just wouldn't be spring and summer wouldn't be summer without them.

By Sue Hinson
Reflector Staff Writer

Are you bored, does your life lack luster? If so, Dorothy Dollberg has a remedy.

"One Saturday when you're bored and don't feel like gardening, cleaning house or doing any of the other regular stuff, take off to a garage sale, off to the flea market, off to the auction," the Ayden resident advises. "I'd highly recommend it to anyone. Garage sales, auctions, estate sales, they all have something for everyone as far as merchandise goes. And then there's the laughter, people, and fun."

Mrs. Dollberg, a resident of the collar capital since 1983 and a New Jersey native, has been working the garage/yard sale circuit for approximately 10 years, an achievement that led her friends to dub her Bargain Hunter Extraordinaire. And while she says she doesn't actually have callouses or bunions to prove how dedicated a yard sale goer she is, she estimates she's walked thousands of miles in pursuit of the unexpected deal. "Let's put it this way, take the measurement of the Great Wall of China, I've probably walked that and back again to garage sales," she jokes.

On a more realistic note, Mrs. Dollberg says she probably attends 60 yard sales a year, give or take a few. That's 600 sales in the past 10 years, not including auctions, estate sales and other activities where Mrs. Dollberg tries out her best bargain-getting techniques. She maintains, however, that she's "just a greenhorn at this garage sale business."

"There are people who go 100, 1,000 times a year. They're like addicts. I'm just a starter, but I enjoy it and might end up like them. Who knows?"

Greenhorn or not, Mrs. Dollberg admits yard sales and the like have an enormous amount of attraction for her. "It's a mood I go through. For about a month or so, I'm kind of like an alcoholic, I can't get enough. For a while I'll go to all the garage sales, then I'll taper off and move on to the estate sales, auctions. Of course, garage sales are seasonal, so I don't go to them year round.

The garage/yard sale season is now upon us and will last throughout the summer and on into fall until the mornings start bringing frost and a chill persists throughout the day. The advent of the season means several things to avid yard sale attendees like Mrs. Dollberg, the most important of which is making sure the alarm clock is set to go off early enough. Although she says she is not an "early birder," Mrs. Dollberg does like to get to sales as near 8 a.m. as possible. "If you don't everything of value is gone."

Tolerated in Pitt County, early birders — people who show up at a yard sales several hours early or drop by the night before — are rarely endured in New Jersey, according to Mrs. Dollberg. "The way they treat those people down here is a lot different than back home," she explains. "If they take the time to specify no early birds or that the sale will begin at 8 o'clock in the paper, nine times out of 10 they mean what they're saying, otherwise why would they waste their money putting it in? But down here they're more lenient, if they say 8 in the paper, people usually show up at 6."

Although Mrs. Dollberg has not conducted a yard or garage sale since she has been in Ayden, she held several while in New Jersey. "I've had a few myself because sometimes, as you know, you buy stuff foolishly and then you have no use for it.

"For instance, you might wake up some day and tell yourself 'who am I kidding. Conscience, do something about it,' so you have a yard sale."

"Well, then you start going through your closets, garage, attic, and basement where you find Junior's roller skates. 'Why did I keep these,' you ask yourself. 'Well I had a sentimental feeling about them,' you reply. But now Junior's married and you don't think he would want them, so you add them to the pile and hope someone else can use them."

Once you've selected what you want to sell, the next step is to determine prices. According to Mrs. Dollberg, the key element in holding a yard sale is not to over charge. "Don't try to sell any kind of merchandise for top dollar or the price you feel a store would sell for. Remember you've used it or even if you didn't, you've had it in your house for a long time."

"People are looking to get something a little more reasonable than if they went to a store. If they wanted to buy new, they wouldn't be at a garage sale to begin with. Don't be greedy. Let your hair down and say this is just for fun."

Another tip for would-be yard salesmen/women is to put out only usable items. "A lot of times, people put out stuff that garbage men would balk at picking up. Then again another man's junk is another man's treasure. But if you put out quality merchandise you won't have to worry about standing in your garage or out in your yard for long. You'll be done long before noon."

Even though Mrs. Dollberg has quite a few suggestions for holding a successful garage sale, she contends that she'd rather go to one than sell. One of her favorite pastimes, she says with a gleam in her eye, is dickering.

"The basic rule on dickering," she advises, "is you never accept an item for its marked value. They give you their price, then you give them your price, which is much lower. You dicker, going up and down the ladder, and you settle somewhere in between. That way, the seller feels as if he did a good job and you feel as if you did a good job. Everyone's pleased."

What pleases Mrs. Dollberg more than dickering is attending a sale where the proceeds will be used to help the needy. "A lot of organizations use garage and yard sales to make money, but not just for the purpose of having a good time. At the Ayden VFW, we use money from such sales to help disabled children and veterans. That makes the day even better, knowing you've acquired something you want and knowing that the money will go to help someone in need."

By Erma Bombeck

With all the inanimate things nagging me like elevators, cars, clocks, greeting cards and cameras, I don't need a bathroom scale to start up with me.

Next fall, a talking scale with a vocabulary of 264 words and 150 programs built into it will go on the market. When you've been good, the scale will say something like, "Congratulations, I feel nice when you weigh less and I feel nice today."

When you've pigged out, however, it will say something unkind like, "Will one of you please get off the scale?"

If I wanted guilt, I'd call my mother.

It's probably only a matter of time before I pick a piece of chocolate out of a box and have it say, "Put me down, Bimbo. It's later than you think."

I don't like the idea of a one-side conversation on a level to which I cannot respond. It's not fair. There are a lot of inanimate things I'd like to tell off, but I wouldn't do it because they don't talk back.

The speeches I could make my car keys — if only they could communicate. "Look, I know things haven't always been great between us, but you can't keep going off like this and hiding from me. Okay, so its dark down there in the bottom of my handbag, but how do you think I feel when you just walk out of there and don't tell me where you're going?"

And just imagine the dialogue I could have with a mirror on the fitting room. "Just shut up! Do you hear me? If you start that silly laughing again, so help me I'll slap you silly. You act like you've never seen a woman with a nightgown stuck on her hips before. You've seen worse. Keep it up and I'll put a crease in your computer chip."

I've always wanted to talk back to my kids' bedrooms. "Okay, what's been going on in here? Who's going to talk first? The walls? The bed? Or the fish? I'm not going to make a scene and there will be no reprisals. I will only say if there is not an explanation within the hour, none of you will ever see the light of day again. I'll board this place up."

I don't fantasize, but it's just possible that someday there will be a husband who talks. Oh, nothing to compare to the 264-word vocabulary of a talking scale, mind you, but just a few words like "Yes," "No," "You look nice," "How are you?"

But with technology being what it is, Apple or IBM will probably come out with a more sophisticated model that says, "You're overdrawn again." "Touch that dial and I'll break your face." "You get custody of the kids."

That's the trouble when you give something a voice. It never tells you what you want to hear.

Keeping On Track In Europe

By CHANGING TIMES
The Kiplinger Magazine

Lucky you! You're taking advantage of the dollar's strength and planning a train trip around Europe using a Eurailpass. Now all you have to do is daydream about your forthcoming adventure and pack.

(A Eurailpass provides unlimited travel in first-class accommodations for certain periods of time via the rail lines of 16 Western European countries: Norway, Sweden, Finland, Denmark, the Netherlands, Belgium, Luxembourg, France, West Germany, Austria, Switzerland, Spain, Portugal, Italy, Greece and Ireland.)

But you still may be wondering how to get along on the train system.

First, don't worry about the language barrier. At most large train stations in Europe, ticket sellers, reservation clerks and other railway workers speak English.

Because you may need some assistance at the train station, plan to arrive with time to spare before your train is scheduled to depart. Make sure you're at the right station — many European cities have more than one.

Also, European trains tend to arrive and depart on time, so unless you're familiar with the layout of a station, you'll need time to find the location of your particular train.

Pay attention to which car you board at the station. A single engine may be pulling cars that are destined for different cities or towns; at various junctions specific cars are detached and routed in their different directions.

On the outside of each car near the doors is an information panel that indicates the departure city, some of the stops the car will make en route and in capital letters the city or town that is the final destination of that car.

After arriving at a train station, check the main information board in the station lobby, or ask at an information window, for the number of the track or platform your train will depart from.

Train schedules run on an international, or 24-hour, clock. After confirming the time, look for the diagram usually posted at the station end of the track that shows what the sequence of cars will be when your train pulls in.

Try to wait with your luggage at or near the spot where the car you want to board will be. Since your train may stop for only a few minutes to pick up passengers, be ready to get yourself and your luggage aboard in a hurry.

A big No. 1, located on the side, next to the steps, usually identifies the first-class coaches. As a rule, they also have an orange or yellow stripe along the roofline. A No. 2 marks second-class coaches.

Changing Times suggests you plan to move between major destinations over weekends, when shops and other attractions that you might want to visit may be closed. You can route yourself through particularly scenic areas during the day, daily at deserving spots and cover more boring geography overnight.

As you travel you could sightsee in several towns per day by getting off and on trains along the route and checking your luggage at the station while you tour the town, but don't exhaust yourself with too much of this.

Feel free to leave your train and browse in the area near the station if you're scheduled for at least an hour's layover before the train moves on. These areas in most European cities are pleasant, with shops and restaurants.

Travel light. If you limit yourself to two bags that you can carry yourself without huffing and puffing, you'll never panic if you don't find a porter at an air terminal or train station.

Porters are generally scarce in Europe. European terminals have free luggage handcars, but there's just as much a scramble for them there as here.

As a rule, European trains spend only 5-10 minutes in a station stop, unless the train originates or ends at that station, and if you're making connections to other routes your next train may be several tracks away.

Some of the scenic routes involve a number of train changes, so you might want to have your luggage shipped to your night's destination in the baggage car of a train going straight through. The cost is about $1 a bag. Inquire at the station of your departure.

If you want more reading, either for information or just to keep yourself enthused, Changing Times suggests you try the following:

— "Eurail Guide: How to Travel Europe and All the World by Train," by Kathryn Saltzman Turpin and Marvin L. Saltzman (Eurail Guide Annual; 15th edition; $10.95 paperback).

— "Europe by Eurail, 84-85," by George Ferguson, (Burt Franklin; $8.95 paperback).

You may find these helpful books, now out of print, at your library: "Enjoy Europe by Train," by William J. Dunn (1974).

"Fodor's Railways of the World," edited by Robert C. Fisher (1977).

If your itinerary will be detailed and include precise times for train connections, you may want to consult Thomas Cook's "Continental Timetable," published the first day of every month.

Couple Marries In Double Ring Ceremony

Mary Ann Cowan of Greenville and Eddie Vick Garner Jr. of Wilmington were united in marriage Saturday at 5:30 p.m. in a double ring ceremony. The Rev. Willie Shepherd performed the ceremony in Immanuel Baptist Church.

The bride was given in marriage by her son, Christopher James Cowan, of Greenville. Her parents are the late Mr. and Mrs. H.L. Byrd of Colerain. The bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Eddie Vick Garner Sr. of Wilmington.

Christine Defelici of Greenville was the matron of honor. The father of the bridegroom was best man and ushers were Neil Wayne Cowan of Greenville, son of the bride, and

MRS. GARNER

Scott Garner of Wilmington, son of the bridegroom.

A program of organ music was presented by Joe Goodwin. Kenne Garner, brother of the bridegroom, sang "A Love That Lasts A Lifetime" and "Wedding Prayer."

The bride wore an ivory tea length gown of point d'espirit and crocheted lace over satin. The gown was designed with a scalloped lace hemline and the fitted bodice featured a beau scalloped lace neckline, short lace sleeves and a natural waistline. A satin cummerbund encircled the waist accenting the back with a bow. She wore a wreath of silk flowers as a headpiece and carried a bouquet of cascading ivory roses accented with ivory poms, pink alstromeria lilies, baby's breath, greenery and ivory ribbon.

The honor attendant wore a matinee length gown of dusty rose silk crepe accented with embroidered open-work lace. She wore a pink lily with baby's breath in her hair and carried a bouquet of ivory tea roses, ivory poms, pink alstromeria lilies with baby's breath.

Iris Rochelle of Tarboro, sister of the bride, wore a corsage of ivory flowers and the mother of the bridegroom wore a corsage of ivory roses and pink alstromeria lilies.

A reception was held after the ceremony and was held in the church fellowship hall. Guests were greeted by Frances Harris.

The reception table was centered with an arrangement of ivory roses and poms, pink snapdragons and alstromeria lilies and greenery. Julia Hare of Rocky Mount and Ellen Walton of Colerain, sisters of the bride, assisted in serving.

The couple traveled to Charleston, S.C., for a wedding trip.

The bride is a graduate of Louise Obici School of Nursing in Suffolk, Va., and is a nurse at Pitt County Memorial Hospital. The bridegroom is a graduate of the University of North Carolina at Wilmington and is employed by the Wilmington Fire Department.

Cooking Is Fun

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
Associated Press Food Editor
Friends of mine sometimes collect interesting recipes to be tried in my test kitchen.

One of these recipe collectors, while on a visit to Honolulu, became acquainted with a big extended family of sisters, brothers, nieces and nephews. They often entertain one another and invite both old friends and newcomers to Hawaii to join them.

A buffet gathering, which included my friend, was casual in style and full of warmth and welcome. She also reported that an interesting offering on the buffet table was a Salmon Tofu Salad. She had a hunch the salad recipe was one I might like to pass along, and sent it to me. Here it is for your approval. Tried in our kitchen (using canned red sockeye salmon), we found it an interestingly refreshing combination.

SALMON TOFU SALAD
16 to 19 ounces tofu
2 medium tomatoes, diced (1/2 inch)
1 small onion, quartered and thinly sliced
2 cups fresh mung bean sprouts
2 cups watercress sprigs
7 1/2 or 7 3/4-ounce can salmon
Scallion Dressing, recipe follows
Thoroughly drain tofu; cut into 1-inch cubes.

Layer tofu, tomatoes, onion, bean sprouts and watercress in a shallow bowl. Drain salmon; remove skin and coarsely break up; top watercress with it.

Shortly before serving, prepare Scallion Dressing. At once pour the Dressing over the salad. Toss lightly.

Makes 8 (each about 1 cup) servings.

SCALLION DRESSING
1/4 cup vegetable oil

1 small clove garlic, crushed
1-3rd cup finely chopped scallion
1/4 cup light soy sauce
2 teaspoons white rice vinegar

In a 6-inch skillet heat oil and garlic. Stir in scallion, soy sauce and vinegar. Makes about 2-3rds cup.

Marriage Announced

Delois Pearson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Pearson of Winterville, and Larry O'Neal Williams, son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Lee Williams of Route 4, Greenville, were married Saturday at 1 p.m.

The couple will live in Winterville after a wedding trip to Manteo.

To check an insurance company's track record, look it up in Best's Insurance Reports. There should be a copy at the local library.

Dear Abby

By Abigail Van Buren

Are Hotel Supplies There To Use?

DEAR ABBY: My sister and I went on a tour through the New England states, and we got into a discussion about what is ours to take from the hotels we stayed at. Neither of us would take anything we thought we shouldn't, but we weren't sure what we were expected to take. How about the little bars of individually wrapped soap? Two new bars are left each day. Would it be all right to use only one bar for the entire stay and take the unused soap home?

We know we shouldn't take towels or washcloths, but how about the shower caps? Also, what if we don't use all the stationery? Is it all right to clean out the desk drawers daily and take the stationery home? My sister says the guests are expected to take the stationery. The management considers it good advertising for the hotel. She also said the guests are expected to take the ashtrays, too—that's why the hotel has its name on them, for advertising purposes.

Can you settle this?

SISTERS

DEAR SISTERS: You may keep the shower cap and any soap you don't use. You may use as much stationery as you like, but don't clean out the desk drawers daily and collect stationery for personal use later. Ashtrays shouldn't be removed, either.

If you want one for a souvenir, ask the manager if you may buy one, and you'll probably be offered one as a gift.

When in doubt as to what you may take, always ask.

and live with me when I turn 18, so I am writing for your opinion.

Do you think the difference in our ages matters? We really love each other. I can't talk to my parents about this because they blow up

CONFUSED AND IN LOVE

DEAR CONFUSED: You need to take a good hard look at this married man who became involved in a "love relationship" with a 14-year-old girl, and now offers to divorce his wife to live with her.

The age difference isn't as threatening as Bill's obvious lack of character. Please get professional counseling before you make any decisions.

DEAR READERS: In an effort to sharpen the creative writing skills of her students, a Louisville, Ky., school teacher asked her fifth-graders to make up some "Dear Abby" letters, complete with answers. The project turned out so well, she sent their letters to me, and I published them, knowing full well that they were meant to be funny.

Many of my readers mistakenly thought I had provided the answers to the children's questions. I did not. The students wrote their own answers.

I was severely taken to task

DEAR ABBY: Our only daughter, "Sally," lives in a beautiful home 400 miles from us, but her husband, "Joe," has forbidden us to visit her in their home.

I finally wrote Joe a long letter addressed to his office (he's a successful surgeon), telling him that I thought we were entitled to come for a visit. He returned the letter on which he had scribbled, "Tell it to Dear Abby," so that's what I'm doing.

My husband is a Christian church minister—Disciples of Christ—so we sent Sally to a good Bible college, hoping she would marry a fine ministerial student. Instead she met Joe, an Episcopalian. They fell in love, and he won her over to his church. They were secretly married after graduation and we ceased all communication with Sally for several years. Last year she let us know we were grandparents.

Abby, they had our grandson christened in the Episcopalian church, and we know from the Scriptures that all must be baptized by immersion to be saved, so my husband told them they had condemned our grandchild to hell. After that they broke off all communication with us.

In your column you have said that grandparents have the right to see their grandchildren. How do we go about enforcing those rights?

CUT OFF IN VIRGINIA

DEAR CUT OFF: There is a right that outranks grandparents' rights—it's the constitutional right under the First Amendment that grants every citizen freedom of religion. That means the right to worship (or not worship) according to one's own conscience. Your daughter, an Episcopalian, baptized her child in accordance with the rules of that church, so for you to accuse her of condemning her child to hell because your religion differs from hers is an insult.

Until you respect your daughter's right to religious freedom, forget about your for printing the following item:

"Dear Abby: I hate bombs, but I hate school more. What should I do? (signed) Confused."

The student's reply: "Dear Confused: If you feel that way about school, blow it up."

Although I knew that the young writer meant it as a joke, I printed it. I apologize for my error in judgment, but I want to make it clear that the answer was written by the student, not by me.

ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Thank-you notes, sympathy letters, congratulations, how to decline and accept invitations and how to write an interesting letter are included in Abby's booklet, "How to Write Letters for All Occasions." "rights" as a grandparent. You have none.

DEAR ABBY: Because I have had a mastectomy, I am all too familiar with the comments of insensitive people concerning breasts.

A large-breasted (and proud of 'em) friend no doubt meant to console me when she said, "Well, you didn't have too much in the first place!"

My husband of 21 years withdrew from me physically, saying, "You just have to understand; I've lost my desire."

Her head is screwed up.

His head is screwed up.

My head is on straight. And so is my prosthesis. I feel. I hurt. I care. I love. I forget. I cry.

female guest to wear black to a wedding? I know that black is "in" now, but where I come from, it simply isn't worn to a wedding.

At a recent evening wedding I couldn't believe the black outfits—even the soloist wore black! Lots of white numbers, too, which I always thought should not be worn to a wedding.

Did I miss an issue of Vogue? Tell me true, Abby.

A Welcome Now For Black Daughters, Too

By JILL LAWRENCE
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — Lena Ferguson wasn't the first black woman to join the Daughters of the American Revolution, but her prolonged battle to gain membership in a local Washington, D.C. chapter generated a revolution within the Daughters.

Nearly 50 years after refusing to let the black singer Marian Anderson perform at DAR-owned Constitution Hall, the organization has undertaken a project to call attention to the contributions of black and Indian patriots and is recruiting their descendants as members.

When representatives of the 3,160 DAR chapters gather Monday for a Continental Congress, they are expected to change their bylaws to underscore their opposition to racial discrimination and to establish an ethics committee to investigate allegations of discrimination.

Says a once-rejected Lena Ferguson: "I think the organization will be viewed in a different way. I think we're up with 1985."

DAR members often have been stereotyped as white-gloved, tea-sipping conservatives with an elitist philosophy. But DAR President General Sarah M. King calls that "a false image."

She notes that the organization runs a museum and library, helps immigrants become citizens, sponsors scholarships, supports needy schools, provides raw material for research on genetically transmitted diseases and is about to make a substantial financial contribution to the Statue of Liberty restoration.

And although Mrs. King maintains the organization has never discriminated against minorities, the Daughters, prodded by Lena Ferguson, have undertaken major initiatives in that area.

Historians estimate about 5,000 blacks fought in the Revolution, many of them slaves who substituted for their masters during the entire war in exchange for freedom afterward.

There are many blacks — and whites — descended from those men, in addition to innumerable black descendants of white patriots.

Mrs. Ferguson, an administrative secretary at a parochial school in Washington, traces her Revolutionary War ancestry to her great, great, great-grandfather, a white man from Maine.

Several years ago, despite her genealogical research and sponsorship by two members, a Washington chapter rejected her application to join. At Mrs. King's suggestion, Mrs. Ferguson became a national at-large member. But three years later, when black soprano Leontyne Price sang at Constitution Hall — a moment of high symbolism — Mrs. Ferguson decided to renew her quest for local membership.

She recalls saying to herself, "Here they are letting the public believe things are beautiful, and they aren't."

She adds, "That's when I went back to the press."

The publicity led to Mrs. Ferguson's acceptance by another Washington chapter. But now she wanted more than membership.

"There may have been other black women before me who got the same type of treatment," she says. "I wanted to be sure this didn't happen again."

Negotiations with the DAR resulted in a number of measures, among them the anti-discrimination amendments and the publication of a book called "Black Courage 1775-1783: Documentation of Black Participation In The American Revolution."

The DAR also has hired a black genealogist, James Dent Walker, to compile a book-length list of all blacks, Indians, women, Hispanics and other minorities who took part in the Revolution. Walker also has written a pamphlet advising minorities on how and where to trace their revolutionary roots.

Mrs. King notes that the DAR has had black members since 1895 and is just about to get its first full-blooded Indian member. She adds that the organization helps schools serving minority children, awards scholarships to minority students and is to receive an award from United Indians of America this month for "distinguished service to American Indians."

"I don't think anything's changed with DAR. We've been doing these things forever," says Mrs. King. "But the conception has changed. We were never what we were perceived as being. Maybe it took a traumatic experience to prove that. It was a false image, but this experience has opened the eyes of a lot of people."

Walker, who was supervisor of military records at the National Archives for 20 years, said that while the DAR has broken out of a parochial mold, the Sons of the Revolution hasn't.

"They (the Sons) are not motivated to promote research," he said. "Their only interest is to maintain the status quo."

Nolan Carson, SAR chancellor general and a member for 35 years, said the group has few black members but no restrictions on admission.

"I firmly believe there must be no discrimination, and so far as I know, I've never seen it practiced," Carson said.

Mrs. Ferguson's interest in the DAR was piqued by her nephew. He traced the family roots, became an SAR member with no problem and suggested that his aunt join the DAR.

"It took me four years," Mrs. Ferguson, now vice chairman of a scholarship committee, says without bitterness.

What made her persevere?
"I wanted to honor my ancestors, number one," she says. "And it wasn't public knowledge that blacks served in the Revolution. I thought that if I joined, it would be a reminder."

GINGER BEEF
1 pound beef flank steak
1 tablespoon minced ginger root
1 clove garlic, minced
1 tablespoon soy sauce
1 tablespoon cornstarch
1/2 cup water
3 tablespoons Chinese-style oyster-flavor sauce
1/2 teaspoon sugar

— Skipping the fine print. The federal truth-in-lending law governing consumer borrowing requires lenders to provide a clear explanation of the charges involved.

Lenders must quote your yearly borrowing cost as the annual percentage rate. That APR takes into account loan fees, finders fees and interest. It is the most accurate way to compare lending rates.

But remember: The APR doesn't include some costs, such as applications and late payment fees, although they must be itemized in the loan documents.

Truth-in-lending, and generally, state rate ceilings don't govern business loans. Thus, consumers should be on guard against lenders who encourage taking out a business loan when it's really for personal use.

FROM HONOLULU — An unusual salad starring salmon and

Honolulu Salmon Tofu Salad

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
Associated Press Food Editor
Friends of mine sometimes collect interesting recipes to be tried in my test kitchen.

One of these recipe collectors, while on a visit to Honolulu, became acquainted with a big extended family of sisters, brothers, nieces and nephews. They often entertain one another and invite both old friends and newcomers to Hawaii to join them.

A buffet gathering, which included my friend, was casual in style and full of warmth and welcome. She also reported that an interesting offering on the buffet table was a Salmon Tofu Salad. She had a hunch the salad recipe was one I might like to pass along, and sent it to me. Here it is for your approval. Tried in our kitchen (using canned red sockeye salmon), we found it an interestingly refreshing combination.

SALMON TOFU SALAD
16 to 19 ounces tofu
2 medium tomatoes, diced (1/2 inch)
1 small onion, quartered and thinly sliced
2 cups fresh mung bean sprouts
2 cups watercress sprigs
7 1/2 or 7 3/4-ounce can salmon
Scallion Dressing, recipe follows
Thoroughly drain tofu; cut into 1-inch cubes.

Layer tofu, tomatoes, onion, bean sprouts and watercress in a shallow bowl. Drain salmon; remove skin and coarsely break up; top watercress with it.

Shortly before serving, prepare Scallion Dressing. At once pour the Dressing over the salad. Toss lightly.

Makes 8 (each about 1 cup) servings.

SCALLION DRESSING

1/4 cup vegetable oil
1 small clove garlic, crushed

1-3rd cup finely chopped scallion

1/4 cup light soy sauce
2 teaspoons white rice vinegar

In a 6-inch skillet heat oil and garlic. Stir in scallion, soy sauce and vinegar. Makes about 2-3rds cup.

The wedding of Alice B. Sneed and John T. Poteat, Jr. was conducted March 23 in St. Joseph A.M.E. Church of Durham, N.C. by the Rev. William Easley. The bride was given in marriage by her father.

Parents of the couple are Mr. & Mrs. William E. Sneed of Route 6, Greenville, N.C. and the late Lillian P. Sneed; Mr. John T. Poteat, Sr. of Yanceyville, N.C. and Mrs. Annie B. Poteat of Reidsville, N.C.

The bride wore a floor-length gown of satin with stand-up Schiffler embroidered neckline, Juliet puff sleeves of satin with Schiffler braided points. The close-fitted bodice of sheer polyester with acetate satin extended into a chapel train. She chose a veil of nylon netting with flowers of polyester and simulated pearls with a blusher trimmed with Schiffler embroidery. She carried a bouquet of roses, carnations and orchids of lavender and white.

The Maid of Honor was Ms. Barbara J. Peyton, sister of the bride, from Patterson, N.J. The Matron of Honor was Mrs. Lynn Townes, sister of the groom, from Yanceyville, N.C. They wore formal gowns of orchid acetate taffeta with sweetheart necklines and puff sleeves, and carried white mums with lavender and white streamers. The bridesmaids were: Judith A. Sneed; Sandra E. Spencer, Janice P. Sneed, sisters of the bride, from Greenville, N.C.; Renee Poteat, sister of the groom, from Yanceyville, N.C.; and Kimberly Thompson from Burlington, N.C. They wore formal gowns of lilac with sweetheart necklines and puff sleeves, and carried lavender mums with lavender and white streamers. The flower girl was Tamika Townes, niece of the groom, from Yanceyville, N.C. She wore a white silk dress with ruffles and lavender satin bow, a hat of polyester lace with satin bow, and carried a basket of lavender and white mums. The ring bearer was John Brandon from Yanceyville, N.C. The best man was Harold Williams from Raleigh, N.C. The organist was Kent McNeil, the soloist was Sheila Caldwell.

A reception was held following the ceremony in the fellowship hall of the Church. After a wedding trip to Florida, the couple will reside in Chapel Hill. The bride was given several showers prior to the wedding.

The bride is a graduate of North Pitt High School and North Carolina Central University in Durham. The groom is a graduate of Burlett-Yancy High School. The bride is employed as a home teacher for Durham County. The groom is a lab technician for the town of Melbane, N.C.

Food Shop Bakery Chef Bakes Rugelach

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
Associated Press Food Editor

Tourists in New York City sometimes ask me about visiting the city's most fascinating fine food shops. These travelers may want to compare them with those in their own part of the country. Or may be contemplating opening such a shop. Or are bewitched by the glorious food to buy on the spot or order by mail.

Specialty shops such as these, but much fewer in number, have been part of New York City's food scene for a long time. Many old New York families who prided themselves on searching out gourmet foodstuffs traded there.

One of them, Fraser-Morris, was established in the 1940s and still carries on in its discriminating way — but with changes. It has kept pace with the times.

Along with the superb brands of food it has always offered, it now has a catering department, a large gift box division, a chocolate department and a bakery. The bakery turns out all sorts of take-out goodies — from delicious muffins to the individual pastries swirled with a sweet filling that are a Middle European specialty called Rugelach.

The pastry chef at Fraser-Morris is Margaret Palca, a young and pretty expert. Because her Rugelach are among the best I've ever tasted, I'm happy she was generous enough to pass along her recipe. If you try it, I hope it works as well in your kitchen as it did in mine.

RUGELACH

1/4-pound stick butter, softened
4 ounces cream cheese, softened
1-3rd cup confectioners sugar
1 1/4 cups all-purpose flour
Apricot preserves
Filling, recipe follows

In a medium bowl, with a wooden spoon, cream butter, cream cheese and sugar. Gradually stir in flour until blended. Divide into 2 equal balls. Wrap each ball in saran and chill until firm enough to roll out.

On wax paper, roll one of the balls (keeping the other chilled) into a 10-inch round. Chill the rolled-out round. Repeat with the second ball. Spread each round with 2 level measuring tablespoons apricot preserves. Sprinkle with filling. Cut each round into 16 wedges. Roll up each wedge, beginning with the wide end. place points down, slightly apart on a buttered cookie sheet.

Bake in a preheated 350-degree oven until ends are tinged golden brown — 15 minutes. At once, with a wide spatula, remove to a wire rack to cool.

Makes 32.

Filling: Stir together 1/4 cup pecans (chopped medium-fine), 1/4 cup currants and 2 tablespoons sugar.

Historic Old Knoxville Theater Still Favorite Of Actors

By PATRICIA A. PAQUETTE
Associated Press Writer
KNOXVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Through the years, the turn-of-the-century Bijou Theater has been used for everything from performances by stage greats John and Ethel Barrymore to a storage room for used cars.

Built in 1908 as a near-exact duplicate of Atlanta's Lyric Theater, which has been torn down, the Bijou remains as one of the last of its era left in the Southeast.

Its backstage facilities are outdated and even dangerous according to some stage workers.

But the gem of old-time theaters still boasts of some of the best acoustics around and a wide variety of drama, music and dance by local performers who otherwise would have no place to showcase their talents.

The building now is on its way to restoration and is listed in the National Register of Historic Places.

The Bijou originally was a "B" vaudeville house, said Dean Novelli, a student at the Bijou Theater Academy who is fighting to save the building.

"A lot of cities in the hinterlands were building their own theaters and then touring companies would stop there," he said.

Its first production was George M. Cohan's "Little Johnny Jones," which opened on March 8, 1909. Admission ranged from 15 cents to 50 cents.

The theater was built directly behind the Lamar House, another historic building that in its heyday was a center of social activity in the city. President Rutherford B. Hayes once gave a speech from a Lamar House's balcony.

Many of the Bijou's out-of-town performers stayed at the Lamar House.

In 1912, the Bijou began showing silent movies between vaudeville acts. The same year, the Marx Brothers appeared on its stage.

"They were probably the first of the big-name artists at the Bijou, although they weren't big at the time," Novelli said.

Tallulah Bankhead, Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne, Dorothy Gish and Paul Lukas all appeared on the Bijou stage.

In 1926, the fire marshal declared the Bijou a fire hazard and closed it. Its stage was planked over and used to store cars until 1932.

Wilby-Kincy Theatres, a division of Paramount, leased the Bijou from 1935 until 1964 and showed second-run movies that had been shown for the first time at the elaborate Tennessee Theater, two blocks north on Gay Street.

A church group based in Atlanta bought the building in 1965 and rented it to a firm that, unbeknown to the new owners, showed adult movies.

When the owners found out in the early 1970s about the type of movies being shown, they ordered the Bijou closed.

"The church thought (the theater) should be wiped from the face of the earth," Novelli said. "The building was going to be razed for a parking lot."

The Bijou's colorful history and its value as a performing arts center led Knoxville Heritage Inc., a non-profit group organized to save the city's historic landmarks, to begin restoring the building in 1976.

"They got the outside and the interior looking nice — new seats, new carpet," Novelli said. "So from the patron's position, it was in good shape."

But the Bijou still has its original rigging and some of the old lighting. Raising money to fix the backstage area has been more difficult than finding contributions for obvious renovations, Novelli said.

"From a technical point of view, it's like a second-hand car that stalls at the light and you need to get out and work on it before you can go again," he said.

Stage hands must pull on ropes weighted by sandbags to move sets, and always be on guard against "death from above," he said.

That the theater has no heat or air conditioning means its season can run only from September to May, and that limits revenues.

"We kid about it being climate controlled: whatever it is outside it is inside," Novelli said.

But despite its problems, the Bijou is home to many local artists and attracts some national performers.

"The Bijou is simple, almost austere by comparison (to the Tennessee Theater), but that lends to the theatrical experience," Novelli said. "It allows for the performers to show themselves."

"Acoustically it's an excellent house. Various groups who have appeared here have raved about it."

Local groups who rely on the Bijou include the Knoxville Chamber Orchestra, Knoxville Community Theater, the Bijou Theatrical Academy and several dance ensembles.

"If you took the Bijou away, there wouldn't be another house for them to do what they do," Novelli said.

Brazilian Government Restores Old Imperial Palace

By PETER MUELLO
Associated Press Writer
RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil (AP) — The government has restored a treasure from Brazil's colonial past — an 18th century imperial palace that was painted gray 95 years ago and turned into a post office with a maze of cubicles, partitions and narrow passageways.

The government's historical preservation society recently completed a two-year, $600,000 restoration of the elegant baroque palace near Guanabara Bay in downtown Rio de Janeiro. Officials hope the project will lead to the recovery of other colonial buildings, now threatened by urban development.

"The palace is the most important of a whole group of buildings from old Rio. Our work must continue," said Glauco Campello, the architect who directed the restoration.

As every Brazilian schoolchild learns, it was from a window of the palace that Crown Prince Pedro of Portugal in 1822 uttered the phrase, "I am staying," breaking with Lisbon and later making himself Emperor Pedro I of independent Brazil.

It was also at the palace that the empire fell in 1889. Emperor Pedro II and the royal family left the palace for exile in Europe, and Brazil became a republic.

But the new nation had little interest in relics of the monarchy. The palace was given to the Post and Telegraph Co., and gradually sank into neglect as Rio's banking district grew up around it.

The restoration began in 1982, when the palace was acquired by the National Pro-Memory Foundation, part of the Ministry of Education and Culture.

Campello and 20 architects, historians and archaeologists led the project. More than 200 carpenters, masons, roofing specialists and other skilled laborers were hired to do the actual work.

The first problem restorers faced, Campello said, was deciding what period represented the true face of the often-remodeled palace.

Campello said the palace probably dated from 1703, when it was a one-story building used as a royal warehouse and mint to smelt gold for the Portuguese crown. In 1763, when the capital was moved from Salvador, Bahia, to Rio de Janeiro, the palace was given a second story and enlarged to house viceroys.

More reforms came in 1808, when King Joao VI of Portugal, fleeing Napoleon, brought his court to Rio. The palace became the royal residence and gained a third story for the bedchambers — purportedly at the insistence of Queen Carlota Joaquina, who never stopped complaining about the heat.

In the imperial era, the royal family moved to another, cooler palace in Rio and a summer retreat at Petropolis in the mountains 40 miles north of the city. The imperial palace became an administrative office an underwent remodeling, in the Neo-Classical style fashionable in the mid-1800s.

In 1890 the palace became a post office, and the new republic tried hard to make it look like just another public building. The white walls were painted gray and the courtyards were filled in.

"You wouldn't believe what we found," Campello said. "Wood floors covered by linoleum. Granite window casings plastered over. Thirteen-foot ceilings lowered with false panels. Incredible."

He added that he decided to remove the excess structures accumulated over the centuries, but not to try to "reconstitute what has been lost."

The workmen ripped out the post office maze, reopened the courtyards and tore down much of the third floor, which actually had not been completed until 1929 and gave the palace a box shape. By Campello's estimate, workmen demolished more than 10,700 square feet of structure.

The result is a vast, airy building of granite, wood and tile that combines elements of the colonial and imperial eras. Only the period's rich interior decorations — arabesques, painted ceilings and tapestries — are missing.

"In the end, the palace chose its own face," Campello said.

Monastery Replica Is Museum

By RICK HAMPSON
Associated Press Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — Jacqueline Klauber, who had never been to Asia, decided to build a replica of a Tibetan Buddhist monastery to house her Tibetan art collection. She knew the kind of site she wanted: hilly, isolated, tranquil.

She found it 13 miles from Wall Street — on Staten Island.

"She wanted to create a totally self-contained Tibetan environment here on Lighthouse Hill," said Rod Preiss, assistant director of the museum Mrs. Klauber founded. "If she had her way, she probably would have had yaks meeting people at the bottom of the hill."

Yaks or no yaks, the Jacques Marchais Center for Tibetan Art remains the only museum in the Western Hemisphere devoted to Tibetan art.

Mrs. Klauber, who used the professional name Jacques Marchais, "was planning to go to Tibet herself, but she wanted to establish this museum first," Preiss said. "Then, no door would have been barred to her" in a nation closed to most Westerners.

However, she died suddenly in 1948 at age 56 — six months after her museum was finished.

Today, the museum is the Buddhist equivalent of The Cloisters in Fort Tryon Park, a museum that allows the visitor to appreciate art by stepping into a setting which evokes the work's own time and place.

The center's buildings, terrace and garden sit on the side of a steep hill, isolated from the rest of its residential neighborhood by stone walls, the incline and thick foliage. The complex offers a view, framed by pines, of lower New York Harbor.

Mrs. Klauber endowed her monastery with everything Tibetan — from orange trees to dogs, including a huge Mastiff and a tiny Lhasa Apso. The grounds contain statues of Buddha, as well as figures of elephants, carp and baboons. There is a lotus pond and several monastic meditation cells.

"She used to have parties for Asian visitors up here for days," Preiss said. "It was all very exotic for its time, especially for Staten Island. Most people thought she was eccentric."

Mrs. Klauber's choice of Staten Island was not eccentric. In the 1940s the island was largely undeveloped, and Lighthouse Hill is one of the highest points on the Eastern seaboard.

The museum's centerpiece is its replica of a Buddhist temple, or gompas, a square stone building supported by four interior columns that symbolize the four directions.

Inside, light streams down from a cupola in the 20-foot ceiling. One wall steps back to form a four-tiered altar for displaying numerous sacred objects, such as prayer wheels and gilded statues of multi-limbed religious figures. The museum's authenticity, however, is not absolute: lamps that traditionally used yak butter employ paraffin instead.

COLONIAL RESTORATION . . . The government of Brazil has restored a treasure in Rio de Janeiro — an 18th century imperial palace that was painted gray 95 years ago and turned into a post office with a maze of cubicles, partitions and narrow passageways. The $600,000 restoration was completed in two years by the government's historical society. (AP Laserphoto)

A Dream Becomes Reality: Betsy Drake Interiors Inc.

The American dream—having your own business. Virtually everyone has had the dream at one time or another, and Betsy Drake Lewis is no exception. After practicing interior design and decorating in Eastern North Carolina for the past eight years, she is seeing her dream come true in Betsy Drake Interiors, Inc.

A native of Farmville, Betsy received her B.S. degree in Interior Decorating from East Carolina University. She obtained her 4 year degree in only three years on a scholastic scholarship. While working full time in the home furnishing field, she continued attending ECU and soon added a Masters Degree to her credentials. During this time she also managed time in her busy schedule to teach interior design courses part time at surrounding Community Colleges, including Pitt, Beaufort, Lenoir and Nash.

"There has been a tremendous void in Greenville and the surrounding area since Tommy Willis Interiors closed in 1979" said Betsy "And Betsy Drake Interiors was conceived to fill that void. No longer will it be necessary for Greenville residents to travel to Zebulon, Smithfield or Raleigh in search of quality home furnishings at affordable prices."

Located at 425 Greenville Boulevard, in the same building formerly occupied by Tommy Willis Interiors, the business will offer a full range of residential and commercial interior design services which have not been available in Greenville in recent years. Betsy Drake Interiors plans to vigorously promote interior design and decorating ideas through in-store seminars, class room instruction and weekly newspaper articles.

Once again, Greenville is able to offer a graduate interior designer with a large inventory of merchandise to work with. Betsy Drake Interiors will feature brand names such as Henredon, William Alan, Statton, Gilliam, Conover and Wildwood to mention just a few. "In addition we will specialize in window treatments, wall coverings and oriental rugs with a complete library of fabrics and wallpaper samples from which to choose. On a recent trip to China, we purchased a lot of exciting new oriental accents and rugs which will certainly enhance every decor."

Betsy has developed a wide following of clients and patrons in the surrounding area in both commercial and residential design. James I. Miller Tobacco Co. of Wilson and Coastal Leasing of Greenville are two recent examples of her commercial design skills and her residential expertise is shown in the photos of her recently built home in Brook Valley.

Betsy Drake Interiors has combined buying trips to the Orient, New York, Atlanta and the High Point Furniture Mart to bring an exciting new look to Greenville. Watch for our grand opening soon. We look forward to meeting you and are especially eager to be of service to you.

BREAKFAST ROOM — The Classic Rattan dinette and ceiling fan carries through an informal motif. Track lighting accents a P. Buckley Moss painting in the family room.

FAMILY ROOM — A cozy atmosphere is created in the family room by the heavy textured sectional which is accented by a silk floor screen from China.

MASTER BEDROOM — A rice carved bed by Statton adds warmth to the master bedroom. Once again, oriental accents carry through the decorating motif.

Museum Of Art Featuring Series Of Events On African Culture

African dance and storytelling, films about Africa and lectures by distinguished scholars of African art will be presented at the North Carolina Museum of Art during the exhibition "Praise Poems: The Katherine White Collection," now on view through May 19. Most of the events are free.

Two free Sunday afternoon lectures will explore the arts of Africa. Roy Sieber, deputy director of the National Museum of African Art in Washington, D.C. and professor of fine arts at Indiana University, will speak at 3 p.m. on Sunday April 21. In his talk, "Stunning... But is it Art?" Sieber will discuss the elements of African art that many American audiences find difficult to understand. On April 28 at 3 p.m., Robert Thompson of Yale University will speak on "Divine Moves: Art and Choreography in the Black Atlantic World." Thompson will examine how art, song and dance in the New World reflect the African influences brought here by the Atlantic slave trade.

The dynamism of African culture will be apparent in a performance by Chuck Davis and the African-American Dance Ensemble today at 3 p.m. This free event is scheduled on the museum grounds, weather permitting, and will be moved to the auditorium if it rains. The performers are Artists in Residence at the American Dance Festival and appear courtesy of its Community Services Program, which is supported by a grant from the National Endowment for the Arts.

Storyteller Louise Anderson will recite traditional folktales in a free performance on Saturday, April 27 at 1 p.m. Ms. Anderson specializes in both African folklore, such as the tale of "Cow Tail Switch" from Nigeria, and in Afro-American stories such as "Nothing Uglier than a Grinning Buzzard." Her programs are designed to entertain both children and adults.

During the exhibition, the museum's free "Films at Eleven" series on Saturday mornings will be devoted to the arts and cultures of Africa. From April 13 through May 11, a series of films will explore the sculptural traditions of Africa, the relationship of the African people to nature and the ceremonies that bind them together. Many diverse peoples and nations will be represented, from the Dogon of Mali to the Bororo Fulani of the Niger Republic.

To complete the schedule of related activities, the museum is offering a number of children's programs. A free festival of animated children's films featuring "Anansi the Spider" and other African stories will be screened on Saturday, May 11 at 1 p.m. Children's workshops will include

"Art Safari" (ages 4-5), Wednesdays, April 17-May 1, at 1 p.m., and "Puppetry for Praise Poems" (ages 6-9) Saturdays, May 11-25 at 10 a.m.

For details including fees for the workshops, contact the museum education department at 833-1935.

Experts Disagree On Views Of Early Man

By ANDREW TORCHIA
Associated Press Writer
JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Ask an anthropologist to help find a stranger at a crowded buffet dinner and he gives a precise reply: "Professor So-and-So? Oh, he's wearing green jeans and has a large jaw."
Sure enough, there's the professor, near the meatballs, jaw and jeans exactly as described.
Identification is harder when the jaw is millions of years old. Some 250 early-man specialists from a dozen countries assembled recently to pay homage to one of the most significant fossil skulls ever found, and went away again still divided over its place on the human family tree.
Some, comparing shapes and angles of bones and teeth, said the 2-million-year-old child's skull is a true ancestor of man. Others, on the opposite side of the liveliest debate in early-man studies, said it represents an evolutionary failure that died out long ago.
Controversy has surrounded the skull ever since Australian Raymond Dart picked it out from bones dug up at a remote limeworks near Taung, 180 miles southwest of Johannesburg, 60 years ago. Dart, who conducted his scientific career in South Africa, called it Australopithecus (southern ape) africanus and insisted it was the missing link in the search for a common forebear of man and ape.

It took colleagues 25 years to come around to Dart's view that Africa, not Asia, was the cradle of mankind. Louis Leakey, his wife, Mary, and their son, Richard, produced Homo habilis and other early human remains in Kenya and Tanzania, and thus focused the search in eastern Africa.
Eleven years ago, Don Johanson, now president of the Institute of Human Origins in Berkeley, Calif., uncovered Lucy, a partial Australopithecus skeleton, in Ethiopia. He classified the 3.5-million-year-old find as a new species — afarensis — and contended that it — not africanus — was an ancestor of man.
A week of lectures and field trips celebrating the Taung skull and Dart's 92nd birthday did nothing to resolve disputes about how man began. But anthropologists, in interviews, said their discipline has made major strides since Dart put Africa on the map in 1925.

Among their comments:
— Johanson: "It's a more respectable and rigorous science. No longer does one person go out and find a skull and become an expert. Now there are teams in the field — geologists, dating specialists, anthropologists. There are new techniques of statistical and computerized X-ray analysis."
"Before, certain dominant individuals could make statements and not have to back them up. Now younger scientists are gaining access to study fossils and are presenting their own views. It's very healthy."
— Anatomist Bernard Wood, Middlesex Hospital Medical School, London: "There is less looking for a missing link, less compulsion to fit things into a single chain of being — ape to man. But no doubt there was one animal about 5 million years ago that was the apex of a triangle. At that time, some climatic or other event sent apes to the forests as vegetarians, while hominids — man-like creatures — branched out as scavengers."

— Anthropologist Jeffrey Schwartz, University of Pittsburgh: "We are re-assessing the relationship of humans and apes, trying to meld the comparison of bone shapes with new information from molecular and chromosomal studies. We are finding an increasingly complicated pattern."
"There is a sense that man has all kinds of cousins and aunts way back, many skeletons in his closet."
— Anthropologist Henry McHenry, University of California, Davis, Calif.: "The chain of being is an outmoded concept. The mystery is what happened in east Africa 3 to 2 million years ago. There is a big gap between Lucy and Homo habilis."

— Johanson: "Humans are the side branch in evolution. The large-brain form that led to us is an exception but a successful experiment. Bipedalism — walking on two feet — was the first thing to happen. It preceded brain expansion and tool use by at least 2 million years."

— Schwartz: "There are so many existing finds that still need to be classified. At the pace people are working, doing a good analysis on what we've already got could add more to our understanding of man than finding more field sites and specimens."

Higgins Novel Keeps You Alert

(A Review)
Penance For Jerry Kennedy. By George V. Higgins. Knopf. 321 pages. $16.95.
While one never knows what to expect next from George V. Higgins, one can be certain that it'll be an entertaining yarn.
Higgins is a master of dialogue and the creation of oddball characters. He hardly needs any introduction, having previously won readers aplenty with such novels as "The Friends of Eddie Coyle," "The Digger's Game" and "Cogan's Trade."
The chief character in this latest novel is a crafty but struggling lawyer, Jerry Kennedy, who also had the leading role in a previous book, "Kennedy for the Defense." Higgins knows law and lawyers very well indeed, since he's a Boston lawyer himself.
Lawyer Kennedy truly has his hands full in this story, among other things trying to keep a succession of beanhead third-rate crooks out of jail while striving to disengage himself from domestic troubles, political hot water and dogged pursuit by minions of the Internal Revenue Service.
The novel is a bit unusual in that it doesn't start with anything particularly special and doesn't end in any special way either.
But as it just sort of glides along between pages 1 and 321 it is delightfully humorous and invariably beguiling. Higgins knows how to keep a reader hanging on.

Sewanee College Giving Way To Social Change But Retains Old Flavor

By JEFF WILSON
Associated Press Writer
SEWANEE, Tenn. (AP) — The University of the South, once known as a bastion of hard-drinking, scholarly Southern men, is gently changing its character and image as women's ranks grow and national social trends take hold.

Known among the faithful as "Sewanee," the 128-year-old university has resolved a 1970s financial crisis, admitted its first predominantly female freshman class and seen a surge of religious activity on campus.

Yet Sewanee, located in south-central Tennessee has preserved its tradition-filled culture, its curious blend of southern charm and English intellectualism and its dedication to a liberal arts curriculum.

The university has 1,020 students in its college of arts and sciences and 82 students in its school of theology. Sewanee Academy, a preparatory school, merged with nearby St. Andrew's Academy in a 1980 economy move.

Sewanee's cornerstone continues to be its commitment to a liberal arts curriculum for undergraduates.

"Wherever you find a special vocation, underlying that is a liberal arts education," said Brown Patterson, dean of the college of arts and sciences and one of 20 alumni who were Rhodes Scholars.

Last fall, Sewanee admitted its first freshman class in which women — barred until 1968 — outnumbered men, 134-130. University officials say women have improved the social and academic climate.

New students, male and female, are met by traditions so abundant that "we always say that if we do something twice it's a tradition," said Robert Ayres, the university's vice chancellor and president.

Men wear coats and ties to class; women wear dresses. Top students wear academic gowns, as do professors. A staircase outside one classroom building is marked "down," but for practical reasons everyone goes up; the reverse occurs nearby.

In addition to his duties as vice chancellor, Ayres is mayor and landlord for the 10,000-acre domain that comprises the university campus. It includes a village, a hospital, and faculty and staff residences.

Among those mayoral responsibilities is the Sewanee Volunteer Fire Department, which is comprised of student volunteers.

The essence of Sewanee is a mood, which even the most dedicated admit difficulty in describing.

"It's like a large family. People have a concern for each other," Ayres said. "I think there is a mood of seriousness about learning."

Becca Stevens, a senior from Nashville, attributes much of the atmosphere to the university's isolated setting among the forests and gently rolling hills atop the Cumberland Plateau.

"Sometimes I feel like if an atomic bomb exploded we wouldn't know for two weeks," she said.

The environment combined with strict adherence to the sandstone and Gothic architecture of original campus buildings gives the campus an unspoiled beauty.

Fraternities, sororities and drinking societies dominate organized social activities, and much of the social life involves alcohol. "Drinking law hits Sewanee hard" was the front-page headline in The Sewanee Purple, the campus newspaper, after a recent increase in Tennessee's legal drinking age.

Ayres achieved some success in curtailing alcohol use after he arrived in 1977. "I'm anxious that our social life not be centered around alcohol," he said.

Sewanee is proud of its English heritage and sometimes describes itself as the Oxford of the South. English donors provided money for the university to open after the Civil War, and Oxford and Cambridge provided books for the library.

The heritage blends with Southern charm — 88 percent of the student body is from the South.

"There are sort of gentry qualities — courtesy, concern for others as individuals, a sense of community, friendliness," Patterson said.

Ayres has encouraged an increase in religious activity that has produced 14 prayer and Bible study groups on campus.

But, he said, "everything is a voluntary thing here," adding that he opposes mandatory chapel rules enforced at other colleges.

"I don't believe in it," he said. "If the Christian faith isn't attractive enough to attract people voluntarily, you shouldn't force them."

The same atmosphere prevails in Sewanee's sports program. The university joined other schools with a similar attitude to form the Collegiate Athletic Conference, which bans athletic scholarships, although Sewanee has a complete intercollegiate sports schedule.

Ayres, the only administrator who doesn't teach, spends most of his time tending to the university's financial affairs. He became vice chancellor at the height of a financial crisis that left Sewanee $1.2 million in debt.

The deficit has been erased, and the university has pledged for more than $36 million of a $50 million capital funds campaign.

'Godspeed' Crew To Re-Create 1607 Ocean Voyage

By JEAN McNAIR
Associated Press Writer
GLOUCESTER POINT, Va. (AP) — There'll be no toilets, no showers and little comfort, but for the dozen crewmen of the rebuilt Godspeed their re-creation of a 1607 voyage from England to Jamestown will be "the ultimate fantasy."

"If you're a sailor, you understand why we're doing this. If you're not, I don't think I could explain it," said Peter Meekins, 55, of Newport News, the assistant captain. "As a sailor, I think this is the most exciting thing that will happen to me."

"This is our 'Fantasy Island.' This is the ultimate fantasy for this bunch," said Jack Greer, 53, the ship's cook.

The crewmen have been preparing for this spring's nearly 6,000-mile trip aboard the newly built square-rigger since they were selected from more than 100 applicants last fall.

The privately funded voyage is being sponsored by the Jamestown-Yorktown Foundation to boost tourism at Jamestown, where the first permanent English colonists in the New World arrived in 1607.

After being taken by freighter to England, the ship will follow the original route of the 68-foot Godspeed — second largest of the three ships to make the voyage. But the 20th-century crew will have modern radio and navigational equipment, a diesel-powered generator and more room than the original adventurers.

Unlike the original 52 passengers, each crewman will have a small bunk and will eat a variety of food chilled in ice chests instead of the standard 17th-century fare of salted meat and dried beans.

Still, the only toilet will be a bucket, and showers will be available when it rains.

A love of sailing and adventure is the reason crewmen give for leaving behind jobs and family to make the trip.

"It's been a long-time dream of mine to take an extended blue water voyage," said Joe C. Gowdey, 49, of Gloucester, an engineer at the National Aeronautics and Space Administration's Langley Research Center.

The dream is not shared by Gowdey's wife, Anne, who has demanded that he take out $1 million in term life insurance for the two-month voyage.

Gowdey bought the ship's generator to help cover a $5,000 sponsorship required for each crewman, but others are still scrambling to come up with sponsors.

"They're asking a lot for a crew just to go over," said Greer. "This adventure is as much for the state as anything else. It's going to bring tourism into the state."

Greer expects no problems feeding the small Godspeed crew after being a cook aboard an aircraft carrier, destroyer and three submarines during 26 years in the Navy.

Robert Woollard, the assistant navigator, said he felt no qualms about the trip after tasting Greer's cooking.

Woollard, 34, a construction engineer from Surry, made his last long sail alone from Haiti to Virginia Beach in a 26-foot sloop. "The captain and the mate were okay but the cook was horrible," he joked.

Besides being goodwill ambassadors for Virginia, the crewmen hope to learn something about sailing a 17th-century vessel.

"There are a lot of things we don't know about sailing this ship," said George C. Salley, the captain. "We can make a valuable contribution to sailing lore."

Salley, 51, of Gloucester Point, is a NASA computer scientist and about the most experienced sailor on the crew after 15 years of teaching sailing at the U.S. Naval Academy and elsewhere.

"I don't really see that we're going to have any problems at all. Salley is very experienced," said Michael E. Brookman, 36, a Newport News shipyard security guard who is serving as an able-bodied seaman. "Plan for the worst and hope for the best, that's exactly what we're doing."

The crewmen are skirting one problem faced by the colonists by making the sail from late April to June. The original Jamestown voyage began in December.

"The storms were so bad they spent almost six weeks in sight of England," said Maurice Duke, 50, an English professor at Virginia Commonwealth University and the Godspeed's photojournalist.

'GODSPEED' AT IPSWICH ... 'Godspeed,' a replica of the ship of the same name which carried the first permanent English settlers to America in the voyage of 1606/7, sails into this eastern English port in its first stage of the reenactment voyage to Jamestown, Virginia. The captain of the original ship, Bartholomew Gosnold, came from near Ipswich. The replica, with its captain George Salley in command, will leave on its ten-week voyage from London's Isle of Dogs on April 30. (AP Laserphoto by John Redman)

FORECAST FOR SUNDAY, APRIL 14, 1985

YOUR DAILY Horoscope

from the Carroll Righter Institute

GENERAL TENDENCIES: A day of varying influences, for the early morning is fine for health treatments, while the afternoon brings some delays in putting vitals tasks into effect.

ARIES (Mar. 21 to Apr. 19) If you want support for a new interest, see your friends early if you can and allow for any possible delays.

TAURUS (Apr. 20 to May 20) A worldly affair can be handled well in the morning, but later a disgruntled partner can pose a problem, if you permit.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21) Take time for meditation in the morning, then forget dull chores about the house and tonight you make fine new contacts.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to Jul. 21) Do whatever will please your closest tie in the morning, and later steer clear of expensive entertainment.

LEO (Jul. 22 to Aug. 21) Being with individuals who awaken your mentality is wise in the morning, but later avoid a tense condition at home.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22) You find better ways of getting chores done early, then off to visit older individuals you like.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22) Early plan the evening's fun and then don't involve yourself in monetary matters so that the afternoon can be enjoyable.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21) Your best bet is to stay at home with your family. Show that you are clever and devoted as well. Avoid driving, if possible.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21) Forget worries and concentrate on whatever is of a constructive nature and make fine plans for the days ahead.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20) If you steer clear of a bigwig who has prejudices, you can easily see how to become more successful in the future.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19) You can have fine ideas coursing through your mind so make the most of them, and forget that outsider who is busy.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to Mar. 20) Meditate and be more in tune with the truth. Be content at home in the evening and have a delightful time with your loved one.

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY ... he or she will easily go along with highly advanced ideas and can understand them thoroughly, but if the education is more or less antiquated, the fine promise here could be greatly curtailed. Give cultural advantages.

Frozen Feelings Suppress Emotion

WASHINGTON (AP) — Frozen emotions can do as much damage to people as ice to trees, warns Charles Gravenstine, a supervisor at The Catholic University of America's Pastoral Center.

"Frozen feelings and anger can result in depression and can freeze off positive feelings," he explains. "When people can't express anger, they have trouble expressing love. That is why people should allow emotional thawing to take place."

Gravenstine first observed the "frozen emotions syndrome" when he worked as a chaplain in a federal penitentiary and at a state mental hospital. Later, when working as a parish pastor, he found that more than 75 percent of the people who sought counseling were unable to express anger and consequently suffered some form of depression.

Though the root cause is overly strict parental attitudes, the immediate cause is loss of love objects including people, beliefs, values, or material goods, Gravenstine believes. Unexpressed anger also results from deaths, marital separations, or romance breakups.

Some people have difficulty expressing anger because it is an unacceptable emotion in our society, says Gravenstine, who supervises clinical pastoral education programs at CUA.

"Parents often tell their children that good boys and girls don't get angry," he says. "Religious groups extoll the virtue of keeping one's temper. Religious education media and sermons sometimes convey the same message."

The frozen emotions syndrome manifests itself in classic symptoms of depression such as changes in sleeping and eating habits, energies and interest.

The Three of Spades was bursting with pride, but the consensus was that he had every right. Not many cards had lost a trick when they turned out to be the seventh card in a trump suit without being subject to ridicule. The Three had been cast in just that role, but his was a deliberate act of sacrifice and the result was a hand worth preserving.

"When I looked around," said the Three of Spades, "I was one of a host of spades, all of them higher than me. I never thought I would be played. I expected that, at some stage, declarer would simply claim the rest of the tricks and I would be tossed into a heap with a lot of other cards."

"West got off to the unfortunate lead of a diamond. Declarer won in dummy with the queen and made the technically sound play of a trump to the ace, although that was an unfortunate decision as the cards lay. Declarer could have recovered by playing West for both the ace and queen of hearts, which would have allowed him to avoid losing a spade. However, I don't think I can fault declarer for taking the club finesse."

"East won the king and passively returned a diamond. Declarer took full advantage. He won the ace, then crossed to dummy with the ace of clubs to bring about this position:

"Declarer led a winning club from the table, and East realized that there was no future in ruffing low — declarer would simply overruff, reach dummy by leading a heart and then lead a trump through East's K-J, limiting East to one trump trick."

"East thought he had a neat counter — he ruffed with the king of trumps. But declarer delivered an elegant coup de grace — he undertruffed with me! Now when he eventually got to the board with a heart, he could lead a trump for a finesse of the jack, and so he lost only one trump trick!"

An Associated Press Travel Feature

Hong Kong, An Eastern Jewel

By NORM GOLDSTEIN
Associated Press Writer

HONG KONG (AP) — Contrasting worlds converge in this capitalistic enclave on the coast of southeastern China.

It's still the world of Suzie Wong, but also of global banking and commerce.

It's a world of chopsticks — and luxury Western hotels; of high-rises, jet planes and, still, a few old-worldly junks and rickshaws for the tourists.

Most of all, if you're interested in eating and in shopping, it's a place to visit — if you can endure the trip. It's some 15 hours by plane from the West Coast, nonstop on some flights, and it means crossing the international date line, which causes even more confusion to the human system. Getting there is not even close to half the fun.

But, once there, it's another story. Hong Kong is a busy, bustling business city at the mouth of the Pearl River. It actually consists of three main islands, Hong Kong (meaning "fragrant harbor"), Kowloon and the New Territories, which borders on China itself, and numerous outer islands. The Star Ferry plies the harbor frequently between the Hong Kong "side" and Kowloon — a short ride for the equivalent of a dime.

That means breakfast and shopping on Hong Kong, lunch and shopping on Kowloon and back in time to shop some more before taking in the night life in the Wanchai district.

Shopping and eating are the two mainstays of Hong Kong. Ubiquitous stores offer everything from a custom-made suit to a Chinese "chop" — a carved signature seal — as well as silks, ivory and Mercedes-Benz. Restaurants abound — mostly Chinese, of course — and your chopsticks can get a tasty workout at hundreds of different places before going back to the same one twice. (Try the "beggar's chicken," a dish that comes spiced with its own legend.)

Take a ride on the Tram up the steep incline to Victoria Peak for a bird's eye view of the area. Surely, visit a Buddhist temple. And get out early to watch the Chinese do their exercises before going to work.

Hotel travel desks can also arrange a side trip to Macao, a tiny Portuguese enclave 45 minutes down the coast by hydrofoil.

They can also book a short trip into China for a day, a guided bus tour of rice paddies, fishing villages, the nation's new Special Economic Zone in Zhongshan and the ancestral home of Sun Yat-sen. (A longer trip is possible, including a stop in Canton.)

Late fall is the best time to visit Hong Kong, as it lies in a subtropical zone, roughly equivalent to Hawaii, and gets oppressively hot and humid in the summer and rainy in the spring and early autumn.

Although its crowded population is 95 percent Chinese, there is no language problem in this cosmopolitan center. British influence is everywhere, from street signs and local administration to afternoon tea.

It's been a British crown colony since 1842. Newly-signed agreements return the enclave to China in 1997.

Ideas For Water Travelers

By PRUDENCE HELLER
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — There are cruise ships, yachts and freighters. And there are ferries, the answer for the traveler with a slim wallet who wants to go to sea.

But first erase the mental image of a ferry as the boat that plies between Manhattan and Staten Island in New York Harbor, passing by the Statue of Liberty.

A traveler can spend one or more nights on a ferry, sleep in a berth, eat in a dining room, watch a movie, drink at the bar — even gamble on some ferries.

Consider the 12-hour boat trip between Portland, Maine, and Yarmouth, Nova Scotia. The boat advertises dining room, cafeteria, lounge and bar, swimming pool, cinema and casino. Basic fare, one-way, about $50 Canadian. In season, considerably less out of season. Children 5 to 14, half price. Younger, free. Cabins, from $28, Canadian.

From Nova Scotia's scenic Cape Breton Island, Newfoundland is a six-or-12-hour ferry ride from North Sydney, depending on whether you're going to Port-aux-Basques, the closer, or Argentina.

On the United States' West Coast, islands dot the waters in Washington State, only short ferry rides from the mainland. Those who want a longer ride need only look a little further. For example, it's a four-hour ride from Seattle to Victoria, on British Columbia's Vancouver Island. But then you can board a ferry to Vancouver city on the mainland, and then board still another for the 34-hour run to Port Hardy, Bella Bella and Prince Rupert. The boat has staterooms, airplane-style seats, a cafeteria and a "licensed" lounge, which means one can get a drink there.

The coast of Alaska is a maze of islands — and ferries.

Board the ferry on a Friday evening in Seattle and take a voyage to Ketchikan, Wrangell, Petersburg, Juneau-Aiuke Bay, Haines and Skagway, spending three nights at sea on a ship with food service, a solarium and cocktail lounge, and cabins and dormitory rooms. The basic price is about $200 one-way, twice that round-trip, not including berths and meals. But compared with a cruise in those parts, the sum seems small indeed. Also, on the ferry trip, you can arrange to get off at any of the stops and move on later. Or go only part of the way and back.

There are lots of boats waiting for you in Europe, too.

The sleek Brittany Ferries link Cork, Ireland, with Roscoff, on the Brittany coast, an overnight trip. Another Brittany ferry plies between Plymouth, England, and Santander, Spain — a 24-hour trip.

The English Channel has ferries spread out like cross-ties on a railroad between English ports and Scandinavia, West Germany, the Netherlands, Belgium and France. Many are overnight rides.

Exploring the Highlands of Scotland? Ferries are waiting to take you offshore, to the Hebrides. Or how about the overnight ferry from Aberdeen, Scotland, to Shetland?

The island of Corsica, with its beaches, mountains and Mediterranean sun, is just an overnight or daytime boat trip away from Nice, Marseille or Toulon.

Italy has ferries linking it with Yugoslavia and Greece across the Adriatic.

Greece and the Scandinavian countries also offer a bountiful assortment of ferries.

Even in the U.S. Midwest, one can get the feel of a ferry: just take the roundtrip from Sandusky, Ohio, to Leamington or Kingsville, Ontario, via Canada's Pelee Island. It'll keep you out on Lake Erie all day.

Grand Hotels Are Making A Comeback

By The Associated Press

Travelers yearning for the pampered life of bygone eras now can enjoy such amenities in many sections of the nation. Grand hotels have made a comeback.

In fact, so many grand hotels have been restored that their grandeur has inspired a whole new trend in interior decor for newly-built luxury urban and resort hotels.

Ornamental woodcarving, crystal chandeliers, antiques, original artwork, deep lush area rugs are among the symbols of gracious living to be found at top hotels, whether old and renovated or new and decorated.

"It's like stepping into another world," says Manfred Steinfeld, a Chicago supplier of seating furniture for hotels. He adds that his company, Shelby Williams Industries, has "revised its collections to incorporate the elegantly French and English classic designs in demand by luxury hotels."

What has inspired the renaissance of old hotels which had been fading since their 1920s heyday of catering to the rich, the famous or royalty?

While the original impetus for renovation may have been tax benefits, public acceptance accelerated the development, according to design specialists.

"The grand hotel concept is part of the nation's new conservatism, the resurgence of traditional, cultural values," says Guy Ramsey, vice president of a Los Angeles design firm.

Lynn Wilson, a design expert from Miami, Fla., credits what he terms "American maturity."

"We have a well-traveled, well-educated population with a high taste level and an appreciation for the finer things."

Different Choices For The Adventurous

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

Seeking the unusual in travel? How about a 14-day trek on the Gotthard Trail in Switzerland, through a 200-mile route that served as a link in the defense of the Roman Empire?

You might prefer a trip through France, staying at monasteries and abbeys, or a working vacation in England, helping to restore cathedrals, or a six-day-trip through the Adirondacks in a canoe.

These are only a few of the thousands of unusual and adventurous vacations available nowadays. Trips like these have helped turn leisure travel into a mind-expanding experience which may provide training in a new skill, or net a participant college credit.

Pat Dickerman, of New York, has been observing the growth of alternative travel since 1949 when she published a guide to ranch, farm and country vacations. She says the variety of trips and the number of persons interested in taking them have both grown enormously.

As an example, she cites the experience of a river outfitter who in 1978 began offering rafting trips down the Lehigh River in Pennsylvania with six rafts. "In 1983, he had 350 rafts on the river and 25,000 people took the trip in that year alone."

Vacationers seeking an adventurous rather than a traditional vacation include people of all ages and from all walks of life.

"They are outdoorsy people who enjoy a challenge and the chance to learn something new," according to Ms. Dickerman who now publishes a guide to adventure travel and another detailing farm and ranch vacations. The guides are updated every few years.

Among activities most in demand is river rafting. Other popular water-borne vacations include canoeing, kayaking, scuba diving expeditions, sailing schools, bareboat charters and windjammer cruises, she says.

Group trips offering bicycle touring, backpacking and hiking where luggage is transported separately from location to location are also more plentiful and more popular than they used to be. Exotic activities, some of which may be dangerous, she warns, include ballooning, parachuting, hang-gliding and participating in cattle roundups and covered wagon trips.

Recently she has noted a strong growth of offerings stressing wilderness travel and nature observation, such as whale watching.

Many prefer to participate in outdoor travel on their own rather than with a group. Speaking at a travel forum sponsored by the U.S. Travel Data Center in 1984, Charles McIlwaine, a vice president at the Coleman Co., reported remarkable growth in active sports and travel. He spoke of increases of 650 percent in numbers of skiers between 1969 and 1984, of 500 percent in numbers of campers, of 550 percent in bicyclists, 300 percent for boaters. He added that overnight stays in the nation's youth hostels had increased sevenfold since 1962.

Information about the unusual trips is more likely to be available through nonprofit groups and through special interest publications than through the traditional sources of travel agents.

Typical of the kind of alternative program that does not advertise through travel agents is Earthwatch, a nonprofit organization begun in 1971. Earthwatch puts academic researchers doing fieldwork together with individuals in the general public who would like to participate as helpers. The group currently offers 420 expeditions in 36 countries and 16 states. The 2,200 participants expected in the 1984-85 academic year will typically spend two to three weeks in supervised labor on a project.

Fees range from under $500 to several thousand dollars. Most cost between $1,200 and $2,000. Travel expenses to get to the site are extra. Both travel and the participation fee are tax deductible, according to Mary Blue Magruder, director of public affairs for Earthwatch.

Some examples of expeditions include excavating in England for evidence of Vikings, and digs on Majorca and on St. Catherine's Island off the coast of Georgia. So far about 13,000 projects have been completed and about a third of those who sign up each year are repeaters.

Ms. Magruder says that about 15 percent of the participants are retirees who are specially in demand since they are often free in months when students and working adults are not available.

Earthwatch, whose main office is in the Boston suburb of Belmont, Mass., will send information to those who request it. Write the organization at 10 Juniper Road, P.O. Box 127N, Belmont, Mass. 02178.

Information about Pat Dickerson's Adventure Travel and Farm and Ranch and Country Vacation guides is available from Adventure Guides, Inc., 36 East 57th Street, N.Y., 10022.

More information on the Gotthard trek and other walks in Switzerland is available from the Swiss National Tourist Office, 608 Fifth Ave., N.Y. 10020.

Adirondack Canoe Tours, McMaster Road, Saranac Lake, N.Y. 12983, runs the Adirondack canoe tour mentioned.

The British Tourist Authority, 40 West 57th St., N.Y. 10019, can supply a brochure and application form for Cathedral Camps, whose volunteers maintain and repair English churches and cathedrals.

The Librairie de France, 610 Fifth Ave., N.Y. 10020 sells copies of "Le Guide des Monastères." The guide, written in French, lists monasteries and abbeys in France, Belgium and Luxembourg, including those that accommodate overnight visitors.

Seminars and classes offered at a number of U.S. national parks often carry with them college credit. Write to the individual parks for information. Among those offering courses are Rocky Mountain National Park, Yosemite National Park and the Great Smokey Mountains National Park.

Other sources for interesting trips include college alumni groups and museums and nonprofit groups such as the Smithsonian Institution in Washington. The Museum of Natural History in New York, and the Appalachian Mountain Club, headquartered in Boston.

No. 10026 — The Tahoe Design Suggests Spanish Influence

By Jerry Bishop

Painstaking attention to detail accounts for the success of this Spanish-inspired design, which blends stucco, brick, and exposed rafters to ornament this four bedroom ranch plan.

The Tahoe, true to its Spanish heritage, features a sloping chimney, shake shingle roof, ornate garage doors and an arched entrance that exudes gracious living. Inside the tiled foyer, a high sloping ceiling, decked in exposed rafter beams, defines the theme and suggests the interior pace of the plan.

Besides its function as guest entry point, the foyer also becomes a traffic director, leading to living areas at right, kitchen ahead, and bedroom hallway at left.

The living room, accessible directly from the foyer, offers a 21-ft. expanse of space for entertaining. Side windows admit light, and wood-burning fireplace adds warmth on chilly evenings. Plentiful wall space is a plus for furniture arranging.

For family meals and activities, the family room is generously proportioned and extends further via sliding glass doors to the terrace. The room features a closet for storage of games and toys.

Here's the Answer

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

Q. — I have decided to build a workshop. I would like your opinion on the best place for it to be. Right now, I am torn between the attic, which is unfinished, or the basement, which also is unfinished. Whichever one I do not use will be kept for storage of various kinds.

A. — Nobody can give you a definite opinion without having some idea of what kind of activities will be performed there. Generally, however, a basement with a concrete floor is the better choice. It usually has some overflow of heat from the furnace and, in a hot weather area, is cooler in the summer. If the noise from power tools can be heard upstairs, it is fairly easy to keep the noise downstairs. It will support heavy tables and tools. There is usually plenty of storage space. The one thing that might cause trouble is dampness. Be sure you have a good system of gutters and downspouts so that water does not settle alongside the foundation and eventually find its way into the basement. If there is a danger of condensation or if you have had it at some time in the past, take all the necessary steps to control it, one of them being the covering of cold water pipes which attract moisture. If you expect to be working with large sheets of plywood, gypsum board or hardboard, be sure there is a way the sheets can be maneuvered into the basement — and, not so incidentally, out of it. You wouldn't be the first person who built something in a basement workshop and then found he couldn't get it out without taking it apart.

Q. — I bought a second-hand table saw and am just getting used to it. How far above the table should the blade be?

A. — It isn't how far above the table the blade should be; it's how far above the stock it should be while cutting. The answer is — the top of the blade should be one-fourth of an inch above the stock. Please try to get an instruction booklet by the manufacturer of the table saw or, at the very least, a book about table saws in general. It should be done at once, not after some trouble occurs.

Q. — We have an occasional drainage problem in our plumbing system. One of these days I will get around to finding out exactly where it is. I feel confident I will be able to handle the problem, but first I want to be sure of its location. I understand there is a simple way to determine whether the stoppage is in the main drain or in a specific place. Can you tell me?

A. — If you turn on the water at each fixture, carefully inspect each one to see which is draining and which is not. If there is a stoppage at only a single fixture, then the trouble is there and not in the main drain. If there is a stoppage at two or more fixtures, the stoppage is in the main drain.

(Do-it-yourselfers will find much helpful material in Andy Lang's handbook, "Practical Home Repairs," which can be obtained by sending $2 to this newspaper at Box 5, Teaneck, NJ 07666.)

SALES & SERVICE

"Your Something Special Store"

ON THE HOUSE

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

What's new on the market
THE PRODUCT — A portable electric circular saw with new features for the do-it-yourselfer.

Manufacturer's claim — That the saw has a lateral lock-off button that works easily for right or left-handed operators ... that it has a blade wrench storage place so the wrench stays with the tool ... that it has a 2 1/4-horsepower motor ... that it is of ball bearing construction ... that it has textured front and rear handles ... that it has die cast aluminum blade guards ... that it has a zero adjustment foot plate ... that its specially wound field coil motor provides more horsepower per cubic inch than conventional motors ... that it is double insulated ... that it is designed for continuous use by do-it-yourselfers who have a wide range of applications, including metal and masonry cutting ... and that it has a two-wire cord and plug.

THE PRODUCT: A press-in-place window glazing.

Manufacturer's claim — That it is not necessary to use a putty knife to put this glazing in place ... that it comes in rolls 3/4th of an inch in width by 17 feet long ... that it adheres securely to unpainted wood, metal, glass, vinyl and masonry ... that it is pressed into place to form a contact with the glass pane and the frame, being cut with scissors or a protected razor blade ... that there is a protective lining over the material to allow extra fingertip pressure to force the glazing firmly against the glass and frame ... that the glazing is made of a high-quality butyl that takes either oil or latex paint ... and that it stores easily and won't dry out.

THE PRODUCT: A fire extinguisher for small fires.

Manufacturer's claim — That this extinguisher will snuff out kitchen grease fires and those in electrical appliances, lawnmowers, laundry dryers, TV sets, computers, electrical outlets and many other objects and places where it is necessary to put out fires before they get out of control ... that it is only 8 1/4 inches high and operates in the same way as household spray cans ... that you pull a safety ring, hold the extinguisher upright with one hand and direct the nozzle with the other hand ... and that this UL-listed unit is safe and harmless, even around food and clothes, being non-irritating, non-staining and non-corrosive.

THE PRODUCT — An all-vinyl framed window with a wood grain finish.

Manufacturer's claim — That the wood grain is on the interior side of the window, with a smooth bronze color on the outside ... that the frames are engineered with multi-hollowed construction to trap dead air for effective insulation ... that the windows have double- or triplepaned insulating glass ... that the windows resist rotting, corroding, pitting and condensing ... and that they come in sliding, double hung and picture window styles.

(The circular saw is made by Skill
Corp., 4801 W. Peterson Ave., Chicago, IL 60646; the window glazing by 3M Center, St. Paul, MN
55144; the fire extinguisher by Fire-jet America Ltd., 250 Park Ave. S., window by Vinyl Building Products,

PERSISTANCE ...The "Magic" Ingredient

If you were to look at our top sales producers, you would find a diverse group of professionals. They do, however, share several things. They are persistent. And the best of them earn between $30,000 and $45,000 per year.

We manufacture top quality products at a competitive price. We provide expert training, a guaranteed draw, and a full package of benefits. Your territory is protected and you will be encouraged to move up to management.

For a personal and confidential interview, call Lane Berryhill, collect, Sunday, 1 P.M. to 4 P.M. only, and Monday, 9 A.M. to 1 P.M. only at (404) 892-3278, or send resume to P.O. Box 8735, Atlanta, GA 30306.

Forest Management Plan Daws Protests

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn. (AP) — Some 400 species of animals, birds and fish occupy the Cherokee National Forest, a sprawling collection of timber, steep mountain slopes and twisting river gorges in the southern Appalachian Mountains of East Tennessee.

Nine major rivers in the 623,565-acre forest form a natural habitat for trout and provide cold, clear water for Knoxville, the Tri-Cities and other communities.

The forest, divided into two sections by the Great Smoky Mountains National Park, boasts six wilderness areas and includes the Ocoee River, which draws 100,000 whitewater rafting enthusiasts annually.

But environmentalists are concerned that the forest's ecological and recreational future is being threatened by a U.S. Forest Service proposal on how to manage the forest over the next 50 years.

In January, the Forest Service released a draft statement outlining six ways to handle such concerns as wilderness, recreation, roads, soil and water, fish and wildlife, fire protection, timber harvesting, minerals and land ownership.

The public has been invited to comment on the plans until April 25. Forest Service officials will study the responses before making a recommendation to Southern Region Forester Jack Alcock, who is expected to announce the final management plan next fall.

Cherokee Forest Supervisor Donald L. Rollens said the Forest Service now favors a plan that would increase all forest resource outputs, including the number of wilderness study and recreational areas, to meet future demand.

But conservationists, led by a Washington, D.C., group called The Wilderness Society, say the Forest Service's preferred alternative would triple timber harvests and nearly double the road mileage in the Cherokee National Forest, which takes in all or part of 10 counties in East Tennessee and Ashe County, N.C.

"The big concern we have is that they have zoned 78 percent of the national forest for timber cutting. That means clearcutting," said Ron Tipton, southeast regional director of The Wilderness Society. "Now that isn't going to happen in one decade. And it isn't all going to happen in two or three decades. But it could happen over 50 or 60 years."

The Forest Service sold 38 million board feet of timber from the forest in 1984, but the preferred alternative would raise the annual harvest to 130 million board feet within 40 years. Most of the trees — primarily hardwoods but an increasing number of pines — would be harvested through clearcutting, in which virtually all trees in an area are cut.

The preferred alternative also calls for eventually adding 1,412 miles of road to the 1,540 miles already existing in the forest. The Wilderness Society, a nonprofit organization with 130,000 members, contends the road construction is also designed to make timber harvesting easier.

"We're afraid the balance is being tipped very dramatically away from the management of a forest as an attractive place to fish, to hunt, to camp, to hike ... to essentially a tree farm," said Tipton.

Conservationists claim increased timber cutting would harm the black bear by reducing the number of acorns available for food and limiting escape cover when the bears forage in the fall. It would also increase soil erosion and harm water quality in the forest's rivers, they say.

And, said Tipton, all larger timber harvests would do is cost taxpayers more money. Over the past six years, according to The Wilderness Society, the Forest Service has lost 78 cents for each dollar spent on timber production in the Cherokee National Forest.

Agencies Give Inmates Help

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — An inmate who leaves the state prison system with a bus ticket, $100 and no job prospects doesn't have the best chance of staying off the streets and out of trouble, say Salvation Army officials.

That's why the Salvation Army and other service agencies are contracting with the state for programs they believe can give inmates a better chance of keeping clean after leaving prison.

"How far will $100 get you these days? We're trying to help these people adjust," said Jim Norman, assistant director of the Salvation Army's corrections program.

Norman's agency offers a supervision program for prisoners a few months before their release dates. Inmates with good records in prison can work during the day at various jobs and return to the Salvation Army centers at night. Under the program, the prisoners can ease back into society while they are earning money. They also learn responsibility and how to live within certain rules, Norman said.

The Salvation Army and other agencies, such as Goodwill in St. Petersburg and Christian Prison Ministries in Orlando, contract with the state for 86 inmates. The state pays each agency at least $17 a day per inmate for the rehabilitation, food and lodging.

Norman said there are no statistics on whether the private rehabilitation programs are more successful than state work-release centers in reducing repeat offenders.

But he said the inmates seem more grateful for the personal attention they and their families receive from counselors, who work to fill other needs such as clothing, food and money to pay utilities.

Some inmates have to be sent back to prison because they can't live within the rules.

"Everybody is not going to make it. Some people just can't live in a community," Norman said in an interview. "Everybody can't be rehabilitated, but everybody needs to have the opportunity."

The Salvation Army's programs also include supervision of about 40,000 people who were fined and sentenced to community service on misdemeanor violations, Norman said.

"The judges are ecstatic over the programs," he said. "It's been so successful that 14 states in the last six months have contacted us and asked us to fly up and explain the program to them."

Louisville Offers More New Plays Than Seen On Broadway

By MICHAEL KUCHWARA

AP Drama Critic

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — In three days in late March, Actors Theater of Louisville offered its audiences more new American plays than Broadway has seen so far this season.

These productions, including four one-acts, were part of the theater's ninth annual festival of new plays, sponsored by the Humana Foundation Inc., the philanthropic agency set up by the people behind the recent artificial heart transplants.

Allowing for the obvious differences between Louisville and Broadway, where only seven new American plays have arrived since last June, one thing is clear: It's just as hard to find good, new American plays in Louisville as it is in New York. What sets Louisville apart is that it hasn't given up the search.

Of the 11 offerings in this year's festival, only three or four would seem strong enough to have a life after Louisville. And that doesn't necessarily mean Broadway or even off-Broadway. Regional theater would be more receptive for some of these works.

In the past, the new play festival, which began in 1976, has originated such winners as "The Gin Game," "Crimes of the Heart" and "Agnes of God." This time out, nothing galvanized the festival, but the 1985 marathon had its moments.

Two of the most interesting plays came from Atlanta, a city whose theatrical activity has never received the notice of Minneapolis, Washington or, more recently, Chicago.

The most original is "Tent Meeting," a wild, woolly and very funny foray into Southern-fried fundamentalism. The play is the creation of something called the Southern Theater Conspiracy and was written by its three stars, Rebecca Alworth, Levi Lee and Larry Larson.

It chronicles the adventures of a demented evangelist named Reverend Ed and his two off-the-wall children, Darrell and Becky Ann, as they journey from Arkansas to Moose Jaw, Saskatchewan. They are toting Becky Ann's child, who may or may not be the Messiah.

The play succeeds because of its ingratiating characters and the looney logic by which they put down and send up the more rabid of the Bible-thumping preachers. Even when the plot threatens to collapse in the second act, the inventiveness of the authors pulls them out of the hole.

Almost as entertaining is "Two Masters," a first play by Frank Manley, an English professor at Emory University. The play was originally performed at Theater Emory as part of the Atlanta New Play Project.

Masters has divided the work into two sections with the first and more promising called "The Rain of Terror." In it, Kathy Bates delivered the festival's best performance as a Coke-swilling, cigarette-smoking mountain of a woman who tells the story of how and she and her husband did in an escapee from the local work farm. Despite the laughs, it's an unnerving tale. The second, "An Errand of Mercy," also had its moments of fun, as two Baptist do-gooders try to cheer up a hospital patient who can communicate only through a Ouija board.

After the Atlanta plays, the quality wavered, but some writers demonstrated promise.

"Advice to the Players," a one-act play by Bruce Bonafede, examined the conflict between politics and art. It concerned two black South African actors whose production of "Waiting for Godot" in the United States is threatened by demonstrators protesting South Africa's policy of apartheid.

Ellen McLaughlin's "Days and Nights Within," set in an East Berlin prison, begins as a political battle between a woman charged with spying and her relentless interrogator. But the play develops into something more — an examination of a mutually dependent relationship.

Lee Blessing's "War of the Roses" was the festival's most commercial offering. It examined the collapse of a couple's marriage on the eve of their 25th wedding anniversary. With the right stars, and some fleshing out of the wife's motivations, it would seem to be a natural for future productions.

There were also some out-and-out misfires. Most disappointing was James McLure's rambling "The Very Last Lover of the River Cane," a bit of Lone Star hokum, in which a spectacular saloon fight staged by Steve Rankin camouflaged a paucity of wit, style and substance.

"The Black Branch," by Gary Leon Hill, was an incomprehensible descent into the nightmare world of a mental hospital.

Roberto Cossa Explores Dark Side Of Argentine Character

PLAYWRIGHT — Argentine playwright Roberto Cossa gestures during an interview at his home in Buenos Aires. Cossa is author of "Compadritos," a hit play dealing with politics and common greed. (AP Laserphoto)

By KEVIN NOBLET

Associated Press Writer

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — With a humor once used to outwit military censors, local playwright Roberto Cossa is keeping standing-room-only crowds in stitches while exploring the dark side of the Argentine character.

Cossa's latest work, "Los Compadritos," has become the smash hit of gaudy Corrientes Street, Buenos Aires' mile-long answer to Broadway. It will be presented in August at the Latin Theater Festival in New York by the New York Shakespeare Festival.

The play centers on an ill-fated scheme by a German naval commander and a money hungry sandwich shop owner to launch a Nazi front in Argentina during World War II.

The shop is turned into a beer hall, complete with swastikas and portraits of Hitler. When the effort flops and the Nazis are defeated in Europe, the beer hall falls into ruin and the schemers are reduced to lowly junkmen.

The allusions are obvious. Cossa admits, to the rightist armed forces leaders who seized power in 1976 and launched a "National Reorganization Process." Disgraced by military and economic debacles, the dictatorship stepped down in 1983, when civilians returned to rule.

"I wanted to present images of what happened during the Process through this Nazi commander," Cossa said in an interview.

He said the inspiration for the play, which is fictional, came while reading an article about a real event — the defeat of the German pocket battleship Graf Spee in the River Plate in 1939. The vessel's 1,000 crewmen were interned in Argentina for the duration of the war, and most of them permanently settled in the country.

"This story offered a great medium for presenting the problems of right now," Cossa said. "Then emerged old obsessions of mine ... (such as) the issue of the identity of Argentines and our country."

"It's a country that wants to be like Europe or the United States. It's insecure and has pretensions of being a great country. There's a tremendous frustration," he said.

The play's title literally means "Little Comrades," but in Argentine parlance a compadrito is a certain type of boastful and shiftless dandy who, switchblade in pocket, haunted the shadowy dancehalls of Buenos Aires during the tango's heyday in the early 1900s.

The compadrito lived for the main chance, and his philosophy of scant ethics persists as a kind of urban caginess called "viveza."

"It's a widespread concept here," Cossa said.

Despite its bleak themes of greed and totalitarianism, "Los Compadritos" is loaded with comic stereotypes, sly political allusions and a fair dose of slapstick that keep the audience laughing.

Cossa, one of Argentina's most successful playwrights, said he turned to humor when the military took over.

Censorship was fierce under the dictatorship. Artists suspected of leftist leanings were harshly persecuted or forced into exile.

"The only way to stay and survive was with humor as a defense," Cossa said. "It was a way to survive psychologically and, in addition, a way to express things that could not otherwise be said."

Cossa, identified with leftist factions of the Peronist Party, was barred from the big government-supported municipal theaters. He also could not produce his works for television or as movies — a major source of income for Argentine playwrights.

In 1981, together with other banned playwrights and actors, he organized the "Teatro Abierto," or Open Theater, which enjoyed tremendous success in small venues despite the repression.

"There were things we couldn't say straight out," Cossa recalled.

Book News

From Sheppard Memorial Library

By MEREDITH FOLTZ

"The Malling of America," by William Kowinski, reports the author's impressions after touring shopping malls across the United States. He notes both the diversity of services and products available at malls and the sameness of sanitized, synthetic mall environments.

Conversations with designers, developers, employees, and customers of malls revealed different perspectives on the mall phenomenon: the challenge to architects, the business opportunity for shopping center professionals, the coexistent freedom and security for teenage mall rats. Although the author concludes that malls represent "a simplified, cleaned-up, Disneyfied fantasy version of Main Street, U.S.A.," he does not nostalgically denounce the mall trend, and he acknowledges the allure of the form's best examples.

"The Simple Life," by David Shi, is a historical review of American attempts to live plainly and spiritually in a mostly acquisitive, materialistic society. Beginning with the Puritans and Quakers, Shi traces the interweaving of Protestant ethics and capitalistic urges.

Examples of simple-life advocates from all periods abound. The personal styles and pet programs of United States presidents are rich mines for evidence of plain living efforts in various eras. The author finds reflections of simple-life thought in political and social writings, architectural styles, works of fiction, trends in business and industry, reform movements, and philosophical currents.

Shi examines the tensions "between accumulating goods and cultivating goodness" and "between prosperity and piety" as experienced by colonists, Revolutionaries, republicans, Transcendentalists, the wealthy of the Gilded Age, turn-of-the-century progressives, back-to-the-wilderness advocates, New Dealers, 1960s commune residents, and leaders of the 1970s and 1980s. Familiar episodes from American history lessons take on new significance as Shi evaluates them according to his theme of plain living and high thinking.

Two Local Artists Have Paintings In A Kinston Show

KINSTON — Watercolors by two Greenville artists were selected for inclusion in the 25th semi-annual competition of the Watercolor Society of North Carolina.

The two from Greenville whose work was chosen are Carolyn Ross Hibbard and Bob Pittman. Each is represented by two paintings in the show.

The exhibition, which went on view recently, is being shown at the Community Council for the Arts, Caswell Street in Kinston, and will be on view through April 25.

A total of 97 paintings by 75 North Carolina artists were chosen for the spring show by the juror, William B. Lawrence of Laurel, Maryland.

This is the first time in recent years that art patrons have been able to see one of the twice-yearly watercolor shows in the Greenville area. Shows of recent years have been held mostly in the Piedmont and mountain areas of the state.

Males Needed For The Elizabeth II

MANTEO — Males are needed as Elizabethan mariners and colonists to work at the Elizabeth II State Historic Site in Manteo June 1-September 2. Requirements are: a flair for the dramatic, a vivid imagination, and the ability to work with the public. Other skills desirable, but not mandatory are: theatrical training, sailing, carpentry, rigging, and singing.

Auditions will be held during the first week of May. Those hired will work aboard the 16th century-style ship, "Elizabeth II," using first person representation to provide visitors with insights into life aboard vessels 400 years ago.

Interpreters chosen will begin employment with a training program June 1-9. Training can be scheduled evenings and weekends should an interpreter's time make weekday training impossible.

To arrange for an interview, call David Sanders no later than April 30 at 473-1144; or write: Elizabeth II State Historic Site, Box 155, Manteo, N.C. 27954.

N.C. Poetry Contests

Five contests for the Poetry Council of North Carolina, Inc., will open on April 5 and close on June 15. The contest categories include the Oscar Arnold Young Memorial Contest for the best book of poetry with more than twenty pages, published in 1984 by a writer who is, or has been, a resident of North Carolina; the Charles A. Shull Contest for any traditional form, except the sonnet, and limited to twenty-four lines; the James Larkin Pearson Contest for free verse and experimental forms and limited to twenty-two lines; the Archibald Rutledge Contest for only sonnet entries, of either Shakespearean or Italian forms; the Virginia Dare Contest for writers aged twelve to eighteen, with any verse form, preferable traditional, and limited to twenty-four lines. Each year cash prizes are awarded winners on Poetry Day, held in Asheville during October.

The winner of the Young contest for a book of original poems receives cash and a large cup to be engraved with the winner's name and to be kept by the winner for one year.

A contestant may enter only one poem in any contest. If the writer submits a poem in a second contest, he must send a different poem. Poems must be original, previously unpublished, and not offered at the time to any other contest of publication. Contestants should avoid bizarre language and pornographic words or images. Each poem submitted will be accompanied by a fee to help defray printing and mailing entries to managers and judges, and in sending cash prizes, books, and certificates of award to winners. For complete information and rules, send a self-addressed, stamped envelope to: Ms. Lucy M. Walters, P.O. Box 93, Hudson, N.C., 28638.

Toto On First U.S. Tour In Three Years

By WALTER BERRY
Associated Press Writer

TEMPE, Ariz. (AP) — Toto, the Grammy Award-winning rock band, is trying to shed its faceless image and has embarked on its first U.S. tour in three years.

"It's kind of like we're starting all over again," says guitarist Steve Lukather.

The group, which won six Grammys in 1983 for its "Toto IV" album, was on a 50-city "Isolation" tour with a new lead singer, Dennis "Fergie" Frederiksen. "Isolation" is Toto's first LP in two years.

Former frontman Bobby Kimball and bassist David Hungate left the group last year over "personal differences and reality differences," said percussionist Jeff Porcaro, 31. "David just wasn't into show biz. His priorities changed. Same thing with Kimball."

Toto took a 28-month hiatus in October 1982 following a show at London's Hammersmith Odeon.

"We had to regroup and see what we wanted to do. That's why it took so long in between albums," said Lukather. "We were looking for a sex God, someone little girls could throw their underwear at. A good frontman, that's something we never really had. Our live gigs never came up to our records. Now I think it does. The best is yet to come."

The 33-year-old Frederiksen, formerly of the heavy-metal bands "Trillion" and "Le Roux," was suggested to Porcaro by Toto's tour manager, Chris Littleton.

"He fits in like a glove," said bassist Mike Porcaro, one of three brothers in the band. "Fergie's a good looking blond guy who's a gymnast and got a great physique. If Fergie went out there in a G-string, we'd be playing stadiums now. He knows how to work a crowd. Bobby was timid on stage. We're five times the band live now."

"We've finally found our chemistry for touring," keyboardist Steve Porcaro said. "It's how we've always pictured it being. All the pieces are there now."

"This is the real Toto," said keyboard player and vocalist David Paich, 30. "I can see this lineup lasting another six to 10 years."

When Kimball and Hungate left Toto, however, there was speculation that the band was finished and they would go back to being exclusively sessionmen.

The work of Paich, Lukather and the Porcaros can be heard on albums by Michael Jackson, Paul McCartney, Eric Clapton, Boz Scaggs, Aretha Franklin, George Benson, David Gilmour, Donna

Summer, Billy Preston, the Tubes and The Brothers Johnson.

Toto also wrote the soundtrack to the movie "Dune" and the boxing theme "Moodido" for Columbia Records' "The Official Music of the XXIII Olympiad Los Angeles, 1984."

"This is the original faceless band," said Mike Porcaro, 29. "Everybody in this band has probably done 500 albums in their careers. We're double-scale studio musicians. You get $300 for a three-hour session. You don't get royalties."

"People get impressed with a salary like that — $100 an hour. They go, 'Wow, what a lucrative business you're in!' There's no mega-millionaires here," said Steve Porcaro, 27. "Session work is not a steady thing at all. You do eight of them in one week and then go three months without any. That's the way it really is."

Toto started taking shape when "Paich, Jeff and I had a band in junior high school," Mike Porcaro said. "Lukather and my brother Steve had a band right after us and they even kept the same name."

Lukather said they were "the oldest high school garage band" in Los Angeles.

Rose High Chooses A Thurber Carnival

The choice for this year's annual Rose High Thespians' spring drama production will be "A Thurber Carnival," a play based on the writings of the noted humorist, James Thurber.

Betty Topper will direct the play, which will be presented for three performances on April 19, 20 and 21. Curtain time is 8 p.m. and tickets can be purchased at a discount through the main office at Rose High, 752-3169, or at regular price at the door prior to performance.

"A Thurber Carnival" is comprised of 16 short skits, all ideal for a lighthearted springtime romp through the Thurber wit. Only one of the skits, a thoughtful piece, "The Last Flower," is not a comedy.

In his whimsical farce on life, James Thurber turns reality "topsy-turvy" and encourages his characters and his audience to run wild in his brand of fantasy. Life, the world, and history become toys.

Thurber offers storytelling in "The Night the Bed Fell on Father," and presents the funny side of red tape in pieces like "File and Forget." He modernizes old fables to make them appropriate for modern life, and reveals a mediocre man's dream of becoming a hero in "The Secret Life of Walter Mitty."

Music accompaniment will be played by Rose High senior Philippe Aronson.

Six N.C. Composers To Perform At Local Museum

Six composers, all members of the North Carolina Composers Alliance headquartered in Winston-Salem, will be in Greenville on Tuesday, April 23 to perform compositions they have composed.

The program, "Here and Now, Chamber Music of North Carolina Composers," will be presented at 8 p.m. on that date at the Greenville Museum of Art. The event is free and is open on a first-come, first-seated basis.

Earlier this year, other members of the society have made appearances in other North Carolina cities — in Raleigh on March 17 and in Charlotte April 14. Composers will also be heard in Fayetteville on April 21 and in Winston-Salem on April 28.

The six composers coming to Greenville, titles of compositions they will play and brief information about each are:

• Eddie C. Bass, "Brass Quintet." Bass is on the faculty of the School of Music, UNC-Greensboro, where he teaches theory and music literature. He is an active composer and is co-principal trumpet of the Greensboro Symphony. He received the Ph.D. in music from UNC-Chapel Hill in 1964.

• Doug Borwick, "Birds of a Feather." Borwick holds degrees from Baylor University and a Ph.D. in composition from the Eastman School of Music. He has had commissions from a number of individuals and groups, and is coordinator of the alliance. He is music director at Wake Forest Baptist Church, Winston-Salem.

• Ann Listokin's composition is "Ides of March." A recipient of composing residence grants from the Weymouth Center, she is adjunct accompanist at Salem College and Wake Forest University. She is co-founder and director of the N.C. Composers Symposium.

• Dan Locklair, "Music of Quince." A native of Charlotte, Locklair is on the music faculty of Wake Forest University. He holds a doctorate from the Eastman School of Music. Winner of the 1984 Nebraska Sinfonia New Music Competition, his chamber orchestra work, "In The Autumn Days," is being premiered in Omaha. Orion Master Recordings recently released Locklair's first record, which includes the award-winning concerto, "Constellations."

• Ilene Sears' performance piece is "Ride a Cock Horse." Sears, a graduate of Milwaukee-Dowder College of Wisconsin and Indian University, is an assistant professor at Winston-Salem State University where she has taught since 1968. She is co-founder and director of the N.C. Composers Symposium, and is adjunct accompanist at Salem College and Wake Forest University.

• "Dialogues" is the title of Robert Ward's composition. In 1962 he received the Pulitzer Prize in music for his opera, "The Crucible," which also won the New York Music Critics Circle Award. Formerly Chancellor of the North Carolina School of the Arts, Ward is presently the Mary Duke Biddle Professor of Music at Duke University.

The series as a whole is made possible through grants from the Z. Smith Reynolds Foundation, the North Carolina Arts Council, and the National Endowment for the Arts, Washington, D.C.

COMPOSER DAN LOCKLAIR... is one of six North Carolina composers to be at the Greenville Museum of Art, 802 South Evans Street, at 8 p.m. Tuesday, April 23. The six are members of the North Carolina Composers Alliance. Other composers in the alliance are performing in four other N.C. cities during the spring.

Women's Chorus Concert

The East Carolina University Women's Chorus will be in concert at 4 p.m. Wednesday in the A. J. Fletcher Recital Hall on campus. The concert is free and open to the public.

Edward Lupton, a graduate teaching assistant from Chesapeake, Va., is directing the chorus. He will be assisted by Daphne Dunston, who will direct the opening number, Martin Shaw's "With a Voice of Singing." Dunston is a senior voice major in the ECU School of Music.

Accompanists will be Nevil Curtis, Richie Tremmel, Sally Copeland, and Chris Manning. Members of the Women's Chorus are students from all areas of the university as well as music students.

This concert focuses primarily on music of the 15th and 16th centuries, mostly using instruments of that period. The Chamber Singers are best known for their performances at the Madrigal Dinners each Christmas season.

Student performers are drawn from both the ECU School of Music and the Department of Dance.

Performance of works will alternate between the two groups. The program will open with the Chamber Singers singing a 13th century anonymous song, "Sumer Is A-Cumen In," to be followed by four William Billings songs. Other Chamber Singers selections are: "Oh, My Heart;" "Non Nobis Domine;" "Tante que Vivrai" by Claude Sermisy, featuring Leslie James, soprano and the ensemble; "Amours ont Change de Facon" by Mahiet; Claudio Monteverde's

"Filli, Cara Amate;" and "O Bella Fusa" by Orlando di Lasso. Also, Francis Hopkinson's "Beneath the Weeping Willow's Shade," with Anthony Jackson, tenor and Michael Harris, harpsichord; "My Days Have Been so Wondrous Fair," with Annette Vick, mezzo-soprano and Michael Harris, harpsichord; and three additional songs by William Billings.

Luchesina."

After an intermission, the Collegium will play three 15th and 16th century pieces and two modern ones. The older pieces are: "El Grillo" by Josquin des Pres; an anonymous song, "La Spagna;" and Andra Gabriele's "Ricercar per Sonar A 8."

A composition titled "Suite," has been composed by Angela Hinton this year. Hinton, from Raleigh, is a senior music major at ECU. The concluding work on the program is a 1962 composition by Robert Dorough, "Eons Ago Blues."

East Carolina Playhouse Production Of 'Hamlet' Opens April 16

ECU'S HAMLET . . . Craig Dudley, a New York actor, has been at East Carolina University for the last month and a half preparing for his leading role in the ECU production of "Hamlet." Considered Shakespeare's greatest tragedy, it will play at 8:15 nightly in McGinnis Auditorium April 16-20. Tickets are now on sale at the box office.

Ghosts, actors, lovers, grave diggers and fools will all come alive on the stage of McGinnis Theatre April 16-20, at 8:15 p.m. as the East Carolina Playhouse presents William Shakespeare's volatile drama of revenge, "Hamlet." Representing an extraordinary effort on the part of ECU's Theatre Arts Department, this production of "Hamlet" has been in development for the greater part of the University's academic year. Almost every element from the text of the play itself and the actors, to the scenery, costumes, music and lights has been selected and developed to make this production the capstone of the theatrical season.

Produced as part of ECU's celebration of the 400th anniversary of our English heritage, "Hamlet" is considered to be the greatest tragedy in the English language. It is a high drama of murder, revenge, love and death revolving around one of Shakespeare's most complex and exciting characters. Played by an impressive list of notable actors including Edmund Dean, John Barrymore, Laurence Olivier, John Gielgud, and Richard Burton, the character of Hamlet is one of verbal magic, macabre humor, passion, violence and philosophical reflection. His is the story of a young man not able to forgive his mother and his uncle for their crimes against his father. In addition to containing some of the most magnificent of all poetry, such as the famous soliloquy "To be or not to be," "Hamlet" is a melodrama brightened with unexpected comedy.

"From the beginning, we thought of 'Hamlet' as an extraordinary event," said director Cedric Winchell. Even the text of the play is new and controversial. According to Winchell, "We are using a modern adaptation of the play as conceived by Dr. A.L. Rowse, a leading scholar of the Elizabethan age and author of more than 40 books on the period."

Rowse considers his work "revolutionary." He believes that students are "going off Shakespeare" because they can't understand the language, so he devised an edition of "Hamlet" in which outdated Elizabethan words are replaced by their modern equivalents. From the beginning however, he sought to retain the rhythm of Shakespeare's poetry.

Rowse regards his adaptation as a convenience for people who are uncomfortable with Elizabethan idioms and sentence structure.

The modern text is not the only story from the ECU Playhouse production of "Hamlet." The title character, the most coveted role in world drama, has gone to Craig Dudley, a New York-based professional actor who will be, with this production, performing the part for the second time in his career.

Selected from more than 50 actors during the New York auditions, director Winchell singled out Dudley "for his power, his intensity, and . . . well, he simply blew away all the competition." Craig Dudley is no stranger to the Bard's works, having appeared in New York productions of "Othello," "Macbeth" and "Measure for Measure." He made his debut with the Boston Herald Repertory Company as Laertes in "Hamlet." Lucius in "Julius Caesar" and later garnered a supporting role in their production of "The Taming of the Shrew." At the Stratford Shakespeare Festival in Canada, he was acclaimed for his performance as Bolingbroke in Zoe Caldwell's production of "Richard II." A graduate of the American Academy of Dramatic Art, Dudley has also been seen on the CBS-TV series "Love is a Many Splendored Thing."

The famous scenes on the battlements, the interior of Elsinore Castle and the nearby graveyard have been designed by Theatre Arts faculty member Robert Alpers. It is an unusually large set with numerous levels and playing areas that juts out into the audience some 20 feet beyond the normal curtain line. More than 3,000 feet of lumber, 500 pounds of scrap metal and 20 gallons of paint have been used in the creation of the set which measures 24 feet tall from top to bottom. "This is easily the largest set we've ever had in the newly remodeled theatre, and we've lost about 20 audience seats because of its tremendous size, but it is such a magnificent set, the trade-off is well worth it," said Playhouse General Manager Scott Parker.

The more than 40 "stylized Renaissance" costumes have been rented from the Denver Center Theatre and designed by noted Hollywood costumer Warren Travis. The ghost of Hamlet's father, at one time played by Shakespeare himself, will be 8 feet tall, covered by chain mail weighing more than 45 pounds and illuminated from within the costume by an independent power source which allows the actor to move freely about the castle set.

Original music for the production has been composed on an electronic synthesizer by Susan Baird, a graduate student in the ECU School of Music.

Lighting designer David Downing has also planned a number of special effects for the Playhouse. Using more than 175 lighting instruments, Downing will take advantage of black as well as strobe lights and three separate fog effects that range from the standard dry ice fog that hugs close to the stage floor, to a newly purchased fog machine which is identical to that used in the Broadway musical "Cats." The colors in the stage light will range from fully saturated ambers to shades of cold blue for the grave digger scene.

Stage combat for the production has been choreographed by Paris Peet, also of the ECU Theatre Arts faculty, and a specialist in staging fight scenes.

Reserved tickets to "Hamlet" are currently on sale at the McGinnis Theatre Box Office, corner of Fifth and Eastern Streets in Greenville. The box office is open Monday through Friday from 10 a.m. until 4 p.m. Reservations can be made by calling 757-6390.

Rose Senior Wins Awards

A Rose High senior, Philippe Aronson, has won four major piano competition in recent weeks and this past week accepted a scholarship from the New England Music Conservatory in Boston.

In statewide competitions, Philippe won two $1,000 scholarship awards — one from the North Carolina Music and Organ Distributors; the other is the Mary K. Paul Whitener Scholarship in Piano. He also was winner of the North Carolina Federation of Music Clubs Piano Competition and the North Carolina Federation of Women's Club Piano Competition.

He has accepted invitations to perform with two symphony orchestras in coming weeks. At the end of April he will perform Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue" with the Gardner-Webb Symphony Orchestra. In May he will perform the same piece with the Raleigh Symphony Orchestra.

Philippe has been offered scholarships from three other music institutions in addition to the Boston School — Oberlin, Eastman and Peabody. He said he accepted the conservatory in Boston in order to study with Victor Rosenbaum and to live in Boston.

He has given several performances recently, and will play the musical accompaniment for the Rose High School production of a "Thurber Carnival."

Philippe began his musical studies with Charlene Ragan and since January, 1984, has studied with Dr. Paul Tardif of the School of Music, East Carolina University.

Small Mississippi Town Has An Exceptional Art Museum

By JANE E. ALLEN
Associated Press Writer
LAUREL, Miss. (AP) — The painting "Sleeping Beauty in the Woods" has special significance for Estill Curtis Pennington III: he considers it a symbol of his undiscovered jewel of a museum in the piney woods of Mississippi.

Pennington hopes to awaken not only Mississippians, but national art figures to the Lauren Rogers Museum of Art, which he says "has the possibility of being one of the great museums of the South."

"How unexpected," says the director, that a small museum in a south Mississippi town of 22,000 is able to boast a Winslow Homer and paintings by most of the major 19th-century American landscape painters, as well as an exceptional, small collection of Georgian silver and a fine collection of North American Indian baskets.

In a time when small museums are struggling to survive, the Lauren Rogers Museum is building its holdings. Thanks to a $5 million endowment consisting of oil and gas investments and an aggressive membership drive that brought in $96,000 last year, Pennington is busy shaping the collection and acquiring new works. In addition, he oversees the museum library, which contains extensive Mississippi genealogical records.

Pennington says the museum, founded in 1921, was opened in 1923 as a memorial to Lauren Rogers by his grandparents, Lauren Chase

Eastman and Elizabeth Gardner Eastman. It began with a core of paintings Eastman had purchased. On the foundations of what was to be a family house, the Eastmans had a New Orleans architect design a library and gallery upstairs and what was the city library downstairs. It was later expanded.

On the walls of the stately, long central gallery are works by 19th- and 20th-century artists Frederick Kensett, Albert Bierstadt, John Singer Sargent, Mary Cassatt and Robert Henri. Five additional galleries hold contemporary paintings and sculpture, European art and traveling exhibits.

Pennington has been adding works with Southern themes including "Columbia Welcoming the South Back into the Union," that features the offering of the laurel sprig — the city's symbol.

All the works are displayed in a 20,000-square-foot, Georgian-style brick structure whose slim columns face a tree-lined street of stately houses, manicured lawns and sculptured gardens.

Pennington saw the "Sleeping Beauty" potential from the first time he set foot in Laurel.

In May 1983, Laurel native Jean C. Lindsey invited Pennington to stay. The director, who had been a junior curator at the Archives of American Art of the Smithsonian Institution and had been advising Southern museums on how to upgrade their American art collections, said his first impression of the museum was "enchanting. I thought the collection was very interesting."

Laurel residents had hired a director with connections to top art institutions, and Pennington has been able to get paintings on loan from major art dealers, galleries and museums around the country.

He has also set out to catalog the collection for the first time. He is keeping a hand in other research projects, and an exhibit he's mounting for the National Portrait Gallery of the Smithsonian on William Edward West will at some point travel to Laurel.

Pennington says Laurel has always been a culturally aware community, whose arts patrons launched the operatic career of diva Leontyne Price.

The seat of largely rural Jones County, Laurel was founded in 1882 by wealthy Iowa lumbermen, including the Eastmans and the Rogerses.

"They didn't cut the lumber and cut out," explained Amorita Gordon, the museum's curator, who has worked with the art museum for 25 years. Instead, they designed their city in the 1880s with the help of Frederick Law Olmstead, a city planner who designed New York's Central Park and laid out parts of Chicago.

Pennington, a native Kentuckian, literally has made his mark on the institution — with paint brush in hand. He marbled the walls downstairs

Can 'Space' Bring Minis Down To Earth?

By Andrew J. Edelstein

Watching some of this season's network miniseries such as the glitzy "Hollywood Wives," mock-epic "A.D." or melting pot-boiler "Ellis Island" has been the video equivalent of stuffing your face with a quart of Haagen Dazs chocolate chocolate chip — a sinful indulgence that you knew you shouldn't do, but couldn't resist.

CBS is hoping that you'll watch "Space" for different reasons. The network believes that the 13-hour, $30 million epic is something that has been lacking in this network season — a quality miniseries. We're not exactly talking "Jewel in the Crown" quality here, but for a network mini, "Space" seems to have the potential to go beyond recent mini's camp values.

This lavish adaptation of James A. Michener's best-selling 1982 novel, airs Sunday, April 14, Monday, April 15, Tuesday, April 16, Wednesday, April 17 and Thursday, April 18.

The miniseries stars James Garner, as a war hero, U.S. senator and space program advocate; Susan Anspach, as his wife; Beau Bridges as a Marine flier and Apollo astronaut; Blair Brown, as a career woman married to an astronaut; Bruce Dern as an engineering professor who undertakes a secret mission to recruit German rocket scientists for America; David Dukes, as a con man; Michael York, as a German scientist modeled on Werner Von Braun; and Harry Hamlin as an astronaut who makes a journey to the moon.

The miniseries, which had the full cooperation of NASA, is a fictional account of the development of the U.S. space program from the final days of World War II to the first moon landings. Although it covers some of the same ground as 1983's film "The Right Stuff," the emphasis — since this is miniseries-land — is not on action but on the romantic and family relationships of its characters.

If "Space" pulls respectable ratings, who knows what will happen to the miniseries? Maybe there will be reason again to watch them other than campiness.

Harry Hamlin (l.) and Beau Bridges travel to the moon in "Space," the 13-hour miniseries based on James Michener's best-selling saga. Part one of the star-studded five-part series airs Sunday, April 14 on CBS.

Michele Will Tell

Dear Michele: How old is Bette Davis? Does she have any children? What are their names? — SHARON GRANT, WAXHAW, N.C.

Bette Davis was born Ruth Elizabeth Davis on April 5, 1908, in Lowell, Mass., and last week celebrated her 77th birthday. She has two daughters and one son. Barbara Davis Sherry was born in 1946 when Miss Davis was married to her third husband, William Grant Sherry. Miss Davis divorced Sherry in 1950 and later that year married actor Gary Merrill. The couple adopted a girl, Margot, in 1951, and a boy, Michael, in 1952, just after the release of "Another Man's Poison." Unbeknownst to Miss Davis, Margot was born with brain damage, and later had to be institutionalized. Today, Michael is a lawyer, and Barbara is married and the mother of two children. By the way, Barbara has written "My Mother's Keeper," an account of her life with her famous mom. The book is scheduled to hit bookstores next month.

Dear Michele: Please help! I am a fan of John Wayne movies. Who is the character actor who appears with Wayne in many of these films? I can never catch his name in the credits. This particular actor appeared in "The Searchers" (1956), "The Horse Soldiers" (1959) and "McLintock" (1963). — C. UNDERWOOD, GROTON, CONN.

Numerous character actors virtually made their living in John Wayne movies. The list includes Chill Wills ("Rio Grande") and "The Alamo", for which he received an Academy Award nomination, Ward Bond ("Fort Apache" and "Rio Bravo"), Harry Carey Sr. ("Angel and the Bad Man" and "Red River") and his son, Harry Carey Jr., who can currently be seen in the critically acclaimed "Mask." The actor you refer to, however, is Hank Worden.

Dear Michele: Did Anthony Perkins make his film debut in "Friendly Persuasion"? — D. ELLIS, LEWISTON, N.Y.

No. Perkins' first movie role was in "The Actress" (1953). The son of stage-and-screen actor Osgood Perkins, Tony began his acting career in summer stock at age 15. Following his debut in "The Actress," he appeared frequently on Broadway and television. His second screen venture was in "Friendly Persuasion" (1956), for which he received an Oscar nomination for best supporting actor.

TV Chatter

"On the Road Again" may well become the theme song of television critics, who were called together for a three-day NBC press event in New York City — followed by a five-day CBS press event in Washington, D.C. We previewed numerous series and held countless interviews with their stars during this time.

One of the best — if not the best — TV shows premieres this week. "Space," CBS's 13-hour miniseries, begins Sunday, April 14 and airs for five consecutive nights. Based on James Michener's novel, "Space" takes many liberties with the original story — all with the author's approval.

Much of American society, including members of congress, scientists and the military, is portrayed as the story of our venture into space unfolds.

The families portrayed in "Space" are all imaginary, although the general activities of the astronauts in their preparation to conquer space are fairly accurate. Former astronaut Richard F. Gordon served as consultant on the film and in Part Five of the miniseries portrays the Capcom (capsule communicator) at Mission Control in Houston. His performance is noteworthy.

After a 14-year absence from TV, Bruce Dern couldn't have picked a better series or character to portray. His performance as Stanley Mott, and Michael York's performance as German scientist Dieter Kolff, are the most outstanding in the series.

In a satellite press conference from London with Stefanie Powers and Barry Bostwick, where they are filming the two-part NBC movie "Deceptions," we perceived there was more 'dissension' than 'deception' on the set. Amid much 'humming, awing and smiling,' we learned that they are now working under their fourth director. Directors have been coming and going at such a speedy rate that Bostwick admitted he never saw or worked under the second one.

The circus comes to television, Monday night on CBS, with Ben Vereen as host. A circus fan since childhood, Vereen says it is performers like animal trainer Gunther Gebel-Williams that most impress him. "If there ever was a man named Tarzan, then this must be the man. Gebel-Williams," he says, "controls his animals with love — personally watching over their care and comfort 24 hours a day."

'Foxfire' Cassidy Shapes Up Her Career

By Jay Carman

The only good aspect about the cancellation of "Buffalo Bill" last year was that it freed some of the show's brightest lights to do other series. Joanna Cassidy, who had played Bill Bittinger's long-suffering producer and lover, was snapped up for the adventure series "Code Name: Foxfire."

Miss Cassidy's TV work was good enough to garner her an Emmy nomination. The praise she received for her gritty performance as a journalist opposite Nick Nolte in the feature film "Under Fire" also added to her stature.

"Code Name: Foxfire," which is now on hiatus, centers on three women agents who carry out fast-paced derring-do. Miss Cassidy plays Foxfire, a former CIA operative who was framed by an ex-lover and served four years in prison before being hauled out by the president's brother to do cloak-and-dagger work. When they decide to make the arrangement permanent, Foxfire is installed in a penthouse that could be on the cover of Architectural Digest. At her side are two other glamorous agents, played by Sheryl Lee Ralph and Robin Johnson.

"I'm told that the sight of the three of us rushing around, outwitting all the bad guys is doing a lot of hearts good," says the New Jersey-born actress with a hearty laugh. Asked whether she's ever daunted by the extreme physical effort she has to put into every show, she laughs again.

"Ever since the Olympics last summer, I've been practically obsessed with getting in shape," she says. "I was just captivated by those wonderful strong bodies and I decided that it wasn't too late for me to look like that." Miss Cassidy started by running up and down 273 nearly vertical steps three times a week, swimming dozens of laps every day and lifting weights.

She's also happy that the slow, steady work she's put into her acting career for the past 15 years is now paying off. Her first movie role consisted of a single, blood-curdling scream in a 1970 Jason Robards film called "Fools." Since then, she has appeared in "The Laughing Policeman," "Night Games," "The Late Show" and in TV movies.

"Foxfire" is a tough grind," she says, "but I enjoy it and it means I get to stay in town to be with my children (she's divorced). But if it doesn't go, I'm sure there will be another movie along pretty soon. I'm feeling pretty secure about my career these days."

Rare appearance

"First Strike on Sycamore Lane," a new motion picture-for-television starring Margot Kidder, David Ackroyd and special guest star James Farentino, has begun production in Vancouver, British Columbia, for future broadcast on CBS.

Miss Kidder, in a rare television appearance, portrays a housewife forced to support herself and three children after her husband strips their household of all its possessions.

Don't Make Me Nice, Robin Strasser Pleads

By Connie Passalacqua

Who is the real 'Alexis of Daytime'? Almost all actresses who play villainesses on soaps aspire to that accolade. But all longtime soap enthusiasts know that all but one are pretenders to the throne. The title belongs to Robin Strasser, an expert actress whose innate understanding of the subtleties of villainy make her character, Dorian Lord Callison, on "One Life to Live," much more believable than the scenery-chewing Joan Collins on "Dynasty."

Her credentials, including a Daytime Emmy as Best Actress, should guarantee job security. Not so, says Miss Strasser. "We soap actors don't reach a plateau of merit and status and just stay there. All it takes is a new producer and a set of writers to say 'you're out.'" Indeed, "OLTL" has recently undergone such a change. Says Miss Strasser: "I have the most respect for the taste of new producer Paul Rauch, but since he's come on, Dorian hasn't been working that much."

Palmer Now Hosting 'The Sporting Life'

By Lorenzo Carcaterra

He drove Earl Weaver mad. He sent opposing batters back to their dugouts muttering and confused. He beat the teams that had to be beaten and won the crucial games that had to be won for the Baltimore Orioles: 268 of them, not including post-season. Now, Jim Palmer has entered and is succeeding in another field, TV.

This week, Palmer, a three-time Cy Young Award winner, begins hosting PBS's 10-part series, "The Sporting Life." The first episode, "Angel on Horseback," a portrait of jockey Angel Cordero, airs Tuesday, April 16.

"I did all the interviews, the introductions, most of the on-camera work," Palmer, 39, says from his Florida home. "You're always looking for new challenges and this opportunity came along. Television is not something I've done for any great length of time, so I can still approach things fresh and with a certain amount of enthusiasm. I really enjoyed working on this show."

During his baseball career, Palmer also seemed to enjoy his work. "I miss parts of the game," he says. "What I don't miss is having to wake up in the morning, on the day you're scheduled to pitch, and, despite the aches, the pains, the swelling, have to go out and do your best, go out and win. It's difficult to do under those conditions. It's like an announcer waking up every day with a sore throat. It starts to get to you after awhile."

The ex-hurler also works on ABC's Monday night baseball broadcasts. He is a model and spokesman for Jockey brand underwear. He will do some limited announcing work in cable around the Baltimore area. His off-hours are spent playing tennis and golf, meeting friends and thinking about his TV future.

"This year, 1985, will be the first full year I will be working in television," he says. "Time will tell how much I truly enjoy it. I don't know that much about the industry. I guess, in a sense, that makes me a rookie. It's so much different than baseball. There's a sameness to baseball, every day the same things are expected of you. In television, everything operates on an entirely different and varied schedule."

In the weeks ahead, "The Sporting Life" will look at basketball player Nancy Lieberman; Washington Redskins offensive lineman George Starke; umpire school; rodeo rider and practicing doctor James Allen; former big-league pitcher Jim "Catfish" Hunter; jockey Steve Cauthen; three-quarter league softball; and comics Alan King, Phil Foster and Steve Landesberg.

USA Network Marks Its Fifth Anniversary

By Andrew J. Edelstein

This month the advertiser-supported USA Network celebrates its fifth anniversary — an eon in an industry that's still very much in its infancy. USA, which was spunoff from the Madison Square Network, has broadened its programming base from a heavy sports orientation to an eclectic schedule mixing movies, children's programming, off-network series and magazine-style shows as well as sports. USA, which now reaches 28 million households, is jointly owned by Time Inc., Paramount Pictures and MCA.

"We think of ourselves as an all-entertainment network, that is the direction that we're going," says David Kenin, USA's vice president of programming. "I believe we project a coherent image. We're as easy to figure out as CBS, although our programming mix may not be as familiar."

USA's main cable competition is Superstation WTBS and CBN, channels which also offer broad programming mix. Like both, USA airs many former network series, including "Dragnet," "Alfred Hitchcock Presents" and "Peyton Place" as well as such lesser-known shows as "Toma," "Get Christie Love" and "Shannon," which USA markets as its "Crimebusters" series.

"The issue is variety and choice. It's impossible for us to acquire 'Magnum P.I.' because we would not be able to recoup the money we paid for it from advertisers," says Kenin. "But shows like 'Dragnet,' 'Hitchcock' and 'Tales of the Unexpected' have found broad audiences within USA terms. They're not going to get a 30 percent share, but they can provide a choice to the consumer. The key is whether we can provide enough of a choice."

Dear Pirate Club Member and Reader of the Greenville Daily Reflector:

Springtime is here and the Pirate Attack '85 is now under full sail. I want to invite everyone out to Picklen Stadium on April 19 and 20 for the 2nd Annual Great Pirate Purple/Gold Pigskin Pigout Party. Bring the entire family. There is something for everyone.

Spring football practice has begun, so if you are in the area stop by the Pirate Club and the practice fields. It does not take long to get the old Purple Blood flowing when the pads start popping. The players and coaches are working extremely hard preparing for the fall showdowns. As a matter of fact, there is usually something going on in Pirateland all the time, baseball, softball, tennis, etc. All of our athletes need your support.

By the time you receive this report all present Pirate Club members and season ticket holders should have received their renewal forms for 1985. I urge you to act immediately. Renew your Pirate Club commitment and buy your season tickets today.

I hope you enjoy this special edition of the Purple Report. We are again sharing this with all subscribers to the Daily Reflector as a special insert in the Sunday, April 14 edition. To all the readers of the Daily Reflector, East Carolina Athletics and the Pirate Club invite you to get involved with Pirate athletics. The success of ECU athletics is very dependent upon the support of our communities in eastern North Carolina, as well as the fine supporters we have throughout the nation.

I know the eastern part of our state is full of pride and tradition, and ECU is an important element in this pride.

We ask everyone to join the Pirate Attack '85 as we proudly proclaim, "We're Going After the BEST!"

Florida Chapter Holds First Social

The Florida Chapter of the ECU Pirate Club held its kick-off meeting on January 26, 1985, at the home of its president, Layton Getsinger ('69), in Orange Park, Florida. A core of people made it a festive occasion while chowing down on some good ole North Carolina barbecue. The ground work was laid for enlarging the numbers in the chapter. Many more than attended acknowledged that they planned to become active in the Florida Chapter. Gene Treadway, also of Orange Park and Vice President of the Florida Chapter, has agreed to host the next social. This is tentatively planned for May 15, 1985. If you know of any one living in North Florida who is unaware of the existence, or your are living in North Florida and are unaware of the existence of the Florida Chapter, please give Layton a call at (904) 272-0674 for more information.

Jack Edwards . . . President Pitt County Pirate Club

Local businessman Jack Edwards serves as president this year of the Pitt/Greenville Chapter of the Pirate Club. And with that position comes the demanding job of coordinating the fund raising efforts in the area. As the local chapter rapidly enters its primary fund raising drive, Jack Edwards addresses all citizens of Pitt County with the following letter.

Pitt/Greenville Pirate Club Fund Drive Attack Slated to Begin April 22

Dear Fellow Pitt County Citizens:

In my capacity as fund-raising chairman for Pitt County and president of the Pitt County Pirate Club, I am experiencing an amazing situation. When morale could be down for reasons that you know about, the reverse is true!

When I started to recruit team captains for the drive that we will have in late April and May, the enthusiasm demonstrated by people I called rubbed off on me and I am chomping at the bit to get going!

This is not only happening in Greenville, but elsewhere. New Bern had a spring social with 200 in attendance; Fayetteville kicked off its drive with 113, compared to 85 for the same event last year.

The Pirate Club staff and Art Baker are booked solid after the spring game for Pirate Club meetings of our other 41 chapters in North Carolina, Virginia, Georgia, Louisiana, Florida and even in Dallas, Texas. The president of our Pirate Club, national, Phil Dixon is an incredible person! The energy and dedication that he demonstrates never ceases to amaze me.

Our fund drive for the spring is being organized with the United Way concept. We have sixteen team captains and each of them will have five lieutenants, each of whom will be asked to contact twenty members for renewals and get two new members per week for four weeks. Actually, the lieutenants will not have to contact that many people because we will have twenty to thirty percent who will renew automatically. But we think it is better psychology to ask more than is required.

Our goal is $340,000 for Pitt County; the over-all Pirate Club goal is $1 million. Last year's goal was $750,000 and $830,000 was collected. The way our organization breaks down this goal should be obtained easily. IF EVERYONE WORKS. We do not have any allowance for lack of participation.

Our first meeting with our team captains and the board of directors of the Pitt County Pirate Club was extremely successful. The meeting was Thursday, March 14, and that afternoon I happened to run into Chancellor John Howell. I told him about the meeting and asked him to come. "I have another meeting at 6:00", he said, "but as soon as I get away from it I'll be there."

We met at 7:30 and John came in a little after 8:00. His speech was very short and amounted to this: "If you need my help let me know and I'll help you." John means this. I worked with him on the Chancellor's Special Athletic Fund Drive two years ago and I promise you he will make calls with virtually no notice if he can possibly do it.

While we were riding in his car on the fund drive we had a flat. Instead of calling for help which would have taken a lot of time, John and I changed the tire. It was fun getting dirty hands with the Chancellor! His presence at our meeting gave us a boost and he even stayed around afterwards for the bull session.

We are extremely proud of the team captains we have for our drive, which will begin the Monday after the Purple/Gold game on April 20. We plan to knock this drive out in the four weeks maximum, because we are getting well organized now. During the drive the team captains will meet every Thursday to give a report. The idea is that those who do not have a favorable report will be recognized as problem areas and we can help. Also, we hope these reports will create a competitive spirit.

The Greenville team captains are Al Pridgen, Jesse Tart, Dr. Jim Young, Virgil Clark, Jane Reel, Malcolm Green, Butch Talbot, Max Joyner, Jr., Janet Bowser, Edwin Clark, and Darrell Harrison.

Out-of-town captains are Ed Casey and Doug Wright, Grifton; Frank Gill, Farmville; Raymond Styons, Bethel; Marvin Baldree, Ayden; and Tim Edwards, Winterville. Notice that we have some women captains. My guess is that they will do a great job and I hope this will create more competition.

Our Pitt County Pirate Club Board consists of Bill Byrd, vice-president; Wayne Dempsey, secretary; Jimmy Nunn, treasurer, plus Gene Briley, Ed Casey, Rod Medlin, Pam Kachmer, Curtis Howell, Kenny Powell, and Darrell Harrison.

We are planning a big social in June and Rod Medlin is chairman of the committee. We think it's time for us to have a big banquet instead of just a cocktail party. You will be notified about this as plans develop.

The bottom line (how did we get along before we had that expression?) is enthusiasm! We have a great organization because of the people involved. Ficklen Stadium is going to fill up on October 26 for the South Carolina game, if not before. The Gamecocks have already ordered 8,000 tickets. Our home schedule is the greatest ever. Success is written all over the entire program. Please do not get left out of this movement!

Pirates '85 Outlook

New Head Coach; Toughest Schedule Ever

Head Coach Art Baker and his staff have a simple plan for their first spring practice at East Carolina.

"The outlook this spring will be no drastic changes on offense or defense, but every coach has his own way of doing things," Baker said. "I will try and go slow with a lot of emphasis on the fundamentals and teaching. We are going to try and get our players in the right frame of mind."

"And there will be a lot of work that will need to be done after spring practice is over," he said. "Our top priorities will be to find the top 44 players that can line up and play in the fall. We need to find our top 22 on each side of the ball."

Baker, who replaced Ed Emory as ECU's head coach last December, brings several new faces to his coaching staff this spring. The Pirates will have new faces coaching the defensive line (Wally Chambers) and quarterbacks (Mike O'Cain) while Jeff Farrington rejoins the staff as a defensive assistant. Don Powers, who joined the staff as secondary coach, has been promoted to defensive coordinator. Two other positions are to be announced later; both defensive coaches.

"We are hoping new ideas will be useful with new coaches on the defensive side of the ball," Baker said. "I think with what we're doing and with Wally Chambers' experience, that will help us. I'm also hoping Don Powers and his experience as a defensive coordinator will add a lot of experience to the staff."

OFFENSE

Quarterback will be a position Baker and O'Cain keep a close watch on this spring. A problem spot for the Pirates a year ago, both quarterbacks who played George Franklin and Terry Paige along with freshman Jarrod Moody for help. Fullback looks to be in the hands of redshirt freshman Tim James and sophomore Anthony Simpson, who rushed for 123 yards in eight games for the Pirates a year ago.

Wide receiver is a sore spot for the Pirates.

"I think we're in a critical situation here with little or no experience at all," Baker said. "Amos Adams will miss the spring. He is not in school but will have a chance to regain his eligibility this summer. Craig White has the ability to be a great receiver with speed and size. But he will miss a great deal of spring practice running track."

"The first and greatest improvement has to be made in the secondary. And the front line has to establish itself. The defense is almost a complete overhaul."

— Baker

Baker is looking to redshirt freshman William Carver to assert himself this spring along with sophomore Tony Smith. "Carver is a good looking young man and has really put on weight in the off-season," Baker said. "Tony Smith was an all-purpose player and I do know he can catch the ball. He'll figure into it."

Also back at wide receiver is Chris McLawhorn, who will get his chance this spring to prove himself. "McLawhorn certainly has the speed and has been sitting back in the shadows," Baker said. "This will be his opportunity and if he does the things he's supposed to do he'll be the answer to our prayers."

Tight end will be another question spot, with senior Scott Lewis holding down the No. 1 spot entering the spring. Lewis was moved to tight end midway through the 1984 season and responded with four catches for 46 yards in eight games. Behind Lewis is senior Jeff Patton and junior college transfer Mike Gainey.

The offensive line, Baker feels, can be strong with time and work. Back are Tim Dumas (tackle) who suffered through a disappointing 1984 season due to a leg injury, Rich Autry (guard), Robert Alexander (tackle) and David Kramer (guard). All four are experienced, but Autry will miss the spring recovering from a shoulder injury. Baker is also looking for help from Andy Schebal, Robert Radford and Mark Minshew along with Tim Orr.

With the graduation of Tim Mitchell the center spot falls into the hands of junior Stuart Ward and junior college transfer Ken Bourgeois, who redshirted the 1984 season due to knee surgery. Greg Thomas, who also can play guard, could figure in at center this spring and during the 1985 season.

The placekicking chores are in the dependable hands of senior Jeff Heath, the Pirates' leading scorer each of the last three years. Baker said Heath may also punt this spring due to the graduation of Jeff Bolch.

"The obvious weaknesses are to develop quality receivers and tight ends," Baker said. "And we need to develop strength and depth at running back and quarterback. And the quarterbacks need to develop if they are going to be better than last year. And the passing game needs to improve."

"We will sophisticate the option, perhaps a little more than in the past," Baker said. "What I want to bring to the option from my stay at Florida State is the pass. And hopefully we'll have a fine blend of the pass and option game."

DEFENSE

Strengths will be at linebacker and the secondary, while the Pirates' glaring weakness will be the defensive line.

Baker feels comfortable with the defensive ends, as Vinson Smith, Essray Taliaferro, Ron Gilliard and John Williamson all return. All four started at some point during the 1984 season.

The tackle spots are a glaring problem. Sophomore Leon Hall and junior David Plum will be the only experience there this spring as Aaron Carter will miss the spring due to academic problems. Carter could be back in the fall as he was the Pirates' sixth leading tackler in 1984 with

48. "This is a real concern," Baker said. "But we're expecting Leon Hall to have a great spring."

Noseguard belongs to redshirt sophomore Medrick Rainbow and is the lone returnee with any kind of experience. Gone is 1984 starter Chris Santa Cruz along with backup Tony Smith. Behind Rainbow this spring will be John Hamilton, moved from linebacker, and Robert Hestikind.

Linebacker is an area that could coax a smile from Baker this spring.

"(Steve) Jacobs, (Robert) Washington, (Bruce) Simpson, (John) Britt, and (Bubba) Waters all played some last year and it will be important for them to have a good spring," Baker said. "Larry Berry (knee) and Brian Saunders (back) will miss spring drills."

"In the secondary, if we get Calvin Adams back all the starters are back," Baker said. "Calvin is back, Keith Ford, Keven Walker, Vernard Wynn and Gary London all started at some point last year. And Ellis Dillahunt returns."

"The first and greatest improvement has to be made in the secondary," Baker said. "And the front line has to establish itself. The defense is almost a complete overhaul. We're going to have to work real hard to come up with the best 11 players. Aside from some secondary people, no one is really established as a starter on defense."

"I will try and go slow with a lot of emphasis on the fundamentals and teaching."

— Baker

in 1984 return this spring. Junior Darrell Speed, who started seven of ECU's 11 games, is listed No. 1 entering spring drills with sophomore Ron Jones, who saw action in seven games, and redshirt freshman Todd Abrams close behind.

"It should be an improved position," Baker said. "There were problems at quarterback as I understand last year, and we need to work hard to try and improve that. We will work very hard on the passing game in the spring."

"Abrams is well thought of as I understand it," Baker said. "Darrell and Ron shared the job last year and both seem to be working hard this spring."

Tailback can be strong with the return of three-year starter Tony Baker, rushed for 513 yards in 1984. Depth behind Baker, however, is questionable, with Coach Baker looking to sophomores

Quarterbacks Top '85 Football Recruits

The 1985 football recruiting class, the first for new head coach Art Baker, is led by quarterback prospects.

Four players that quarterbacked their high school teams will be in the Pirate fold this fall, although all four may not be playing the same position at East Carolina.

"We've helped ourselves in some other areas," said Baker. "I feel we've got two exceptional quarterback prospects."

With 21 grants available this year, Baker and company have signed 19 players thus far. Outstanding defensive linemen or wide receivers will likely fill the other two slots. Those two areas are of greatest concern for the future.

"We signed a number of quality people," continued Baker. "We just haven't had enough quality defensive linemen here, so we are still looking in that area, along with wide receivers."

The following is a short biographical sketch of each of the 19 new football recruits for East Carolina.

The second annual Great Pirate Purple/Gold Pigskin Pig-out Party is open to everyone. This is a gala spring experience at East Carolina University to offer a good time for all members of the family around the playing of the annual spring game, the Purple/Gold clash in Ficklen Stadium.

The map on pages 6-7 shows the general location of all events. The specific times for the events are listed on the back cover, page 12.

Those familiar with the annual Greenville Jaycees fireworks have an idea of what a spectacular show to expect Friday evening.

Have you ever watched forty fires start in preparation for a gigantic pig cookin'? Well, it will happen Friday night as the pig cookin' contest begins. The pigs cook all night and you can share the great eatin' on Saturday as all BBQ will be served on the grounds by the plate.

To add to your pleasure Friday night, there will be a mini-carnival operating with rides and even a calliope will provide the background music. Also, a country music band is scheduled for Friday night. Concessions will be on sale, as will various Pirate souvenirs (please see listing this page).

Saturday starts with the judging of the pig cookin' contest. And then it's carnival time again. All day Saturday the rides will run, the concessions will be sold, the BBQ plates are served for tailgating, kiddies have games, clowns will hand out purple and gold balloons, a suntan bikini contest will be held... just a great day of assorted activities for the entire family.

New Faces Among Pirate Football Assistants

A virtual revamping of the Pirate football coaching staff occurred with the naming of Art Baker as the Pirates' new head coach, thus resulting in many new faces within the athletic family. At least six new coaches will be among the nine full-time staff members on the Pirate staff.

Four of the new coaches are already involved with day-to-day operations, while two coaches are yet to be named to the staff. The coaching staff will be completed in April.

The four fulltime new coaches are Mike O'Cain, assistant head coach and quarterbacks; Don Powers, defensive coordinator; Jeff Farrington, a defensive coach; and Wally Chambers, defensive line.

The new graduate assistant coaches are Steve Milligan and Rex Sponhaltz.

"It has been my goal to try and organize the best staff possible," said Baker. "My immediate goals were to find quality, experienced people. I feel that the staff we will have when completed will be one of the best in the nation."

MIKE O'CAIN

Mike O'Cain comes to East Carolina after spending four years on the staff at Murray State. The 30-year-old native of Orangeburg, SC, served as assistant head coach and offensive coordinator for the past three years at Murray State. He started with the Racers as offensive coordinator and quarterback coach in 1981. Murray State posted a 28-16 record in O'Cain's four years, including a 9-2 finish in 1984.

Baker and O'Cain are no strangers to each other. From 1978 till his move to Murray State, O'Cain was offensive back coach for Baker at The Citadel, working with one of the nation's best running backs in Stump Mitchell.

First coaching experience came for O'Cain at his alma mater, Clemson University. After collecting most valuable player honors as a quarterback and punter from 1972-76, he served the 1977 season as a Tiger graduate assistant.

"I feel we have hired two of the top coaches in the nation in Powers and coach O'Cain."

Art Baker

"Over the years coach (Don) Powers has earned the respect of every college and high school coach he has come in contact with. He has been my right hand man for many seasons."

Bob Waters, Coach
Western Carolina University

"Jeff Farrington is one of the bright young coaches in the business."

Art Baker

"His (Wally Chambers) defensive front had 54 sacks last year, which is very impressive. I feel he is a person with great credentials."

Art Baker

Chambers, 34-year-old native of Mt. Clemens, MI, comes to ECU from Northern Iowa, where he coached the defensive line in 1983 and 1984. The '84 club won the Mid-Continent Conference behind the nation's second best defensive team against the run. And one of the major reasons for that, was a league season record 54 sacks by the Northern Iowa defense.

Seven years in the pros, Chambers was an All-Pro selection from 1973-76, captured NFC defensive most valuable player honors in both '75 and '76, while also being voted most valuable lineman those same years.

Chambers was a first round draft pick of the Bears after finishing his collegiate career at Eastern Kentucky.

STEVE MILLIGAN

Steve Milligan comes to East Carolina to serve as a graduate assistant coach after considerable high school experience. The Laurinburg native is a 1976 graduate of Elon College.

His coaching stops include Sumter, SC, 1977-78; Hillsborough, NC, 1978-81; and St. Paul's, NC, 1981-83.

REX SPONHALTZ

Rex Sponhaltz has joined the Pirate staff as a graduate assistant coach from Jewett-Scio High School in Scio, OH, where he was head football coach from 1982-84.

The Amsterdam, OH, native attended Moorhead State University of Minnesota, but was prevented from playing ball due to a high school neck injury. It did not stop his coaching however.

Following graduation in 1975, Sponhaltz coached at Jefferson Union High in Richmond, OH, from 1976-78; moved to East Liverpool High in East Liverpool, OH, from 1980-81; and then became head coach at Jewett-Scio.

Rex and his wife Tina have one son, Sean.

Married, wife is Nancy, the O'Cain's are expecting a child in late June.

DON POWERS

The name Don Powers is one that many Pirate fans will associate with another school in North Carolina, the Western Carolina Catamounts. For nine years Powers served as defensive coordinator for the Catamounts, although he totalled 16 years with Bob Waters at Western.

During the 1984 season, Powers moved from Western Carolina to Western Kentucky, where he was assistant head coach and defensive coordinator.

While at Western Carolina, Powers coached the Catamounts to the fourth best defensive squad in the nation in 1983, as WCU played in the NCAA Division I-AA championship game. In 1976 and 1979, the Catamounts had the nation's second best pass defensive team in the country.

The 40-year-old Powers was a defensive end during his college playing days at Western Carolina, graduating cum laude, and then earning his master's degree at WCU as well.

Married, wife is Jane, the Powers' have a daughter, Cassie.

JEFF FARRINGTON

Jeff Farrington has had a long association with coach Baker, and one previous year with the Pirates of ECU. His specialty is also on the defensive side of the ball.

The 24-year-old single native of Winston-Salem was a standout strong safety at The Citadel while Baker was the head coach. Following graduation there in 1981, Farrington remained as a graduate assistant in 1982. During the 1983 season, Farrington was a graduate assistant coach with East Carolina in the defensive secondary. The 1984 season, Farrington coached in the defensive secondary at Florida State.

WALLY CHAMBERS

Those who follow professional football will remember the name Wally Chambers with the Chicago Bears and the Tampa Bay Buccaneers. An outstanding defensive lineman for both clubs, Chambers is now turning his playing experience into coaching experience on the Pirate defensive line.

Spring Sports Wrapup

Junior Winfred Johnson swings away again. The power hitter has 10 home runs to date which gives him 39 for his career. Each time he belts one Johnson adds to his school record.

• BASEBALL •

The East Carolina baseball team seems to be picking up where the 1984 club left off. A third into the season, the Pirates have a record of 12-3.

The pleasant surprise is the Pirate hitting attack, which has amassed a .309 batting average, hit 24 home runs, and is averaging almost eight runs a game. When one speaks of batting usually the name of Winfred Johnson is a good reply. This year the Elizabethtown, NC native is hitting an amazing .429 (24-56), has 10 home runs, and has accumulated 22 RBIs including four game-winning hits. Johnson already owns the all-time ECU home run crown with 39 round trippers.

Another splendid suprise has been the play of freshman rightfielder Jay McGraw. McGraw, labeled by Coach Gary Overton as "the sleeper in the state last year," is hitting an impressive .333 in his first collegiate season. McGraw is quickly gaining notoriety as another future Pirate slugger.

The pitching staff received a little shot in the arm in March. One of Overton's concerns was finding a fourth starting pitcher. Since then Daniel Boone has emerged from the pack and has a 2-1 record. Boone has victories over Maryland and Purdue while losing only to N.C. State.

The remainder of the starters are off to good starts in 1985. Winfred Johnson is 4-0 along with Mike Christopher, while Jim Peterson has a record of 2-1.

Overton has also found a long relief man and a spot starter in Danny Culpepper. When the Wolfpack of N.C. State was beating the Pirates, Overton called upon the little 150 pound southpaw to stop the Pack. Culpepper not only put a halt to the rally, but totally shut down his challengers for seven innings.

"The schedule is murderous from here on out," Overton noted. In the next few weeks East Carolina will play UNC-Wilmington, North Carolina, N.C. State, James Madison and William and Mary. The Pirates will engage in conference play throughout April.

"So far I am pleased with the team's play," says Overton. "Offensively, what can I say about Winfred. I am a little suprised of our power as a team (24 home runs in 15 games). Pitching has been a bright spot since Daniel Boone has emerged as our fourth starter. Boone has alot of guts when he is pitching and that's what makes him a good pticher. It is nice to dwell on the past but we have to forget about it and concentrate on the rest of the season."

• SOFTBALL •

East Carolina Lady Pirate softball team, in only their second season of NCAA Division I fastpitch competition is off to an impressive 9-4-1 start through the season's first three weeks.

Pam Young leads the Lady Pirate pitching staff with her perfect 5-0 record on the mound and 0.38 ERA. Stacy Boyette, the school's first academic All-America a year ago, has hit on hard luck early this season. Although only 1-3, the junior from Hopewell, VA, still sports an impressive 0.53 ERA and has struck out 21 batters in 39½ innings. Boyette's three losses have been one-run affairs, losing to VCU 2-1, Wayne State 3-2 and Connecticut 1-0.

The Pirates were riding a five-game winning streak through March 18 after handing Vermont losses of 3-1 and 8-1 at Varsity Field on the ECU campus. Yet Coach Sue Manahan feels with a little luck in early games, the Pirates' record could be better.

"We beat ourselves in those early games," the coach said. "If we stop that, we'll be all right."

Lisa Zmuda leads the Pirate regulars with her .333 batting average through 11 games. The North Patchogue, NY, native leads the Lady Pirates in four hitting categories: doubles with three, triples with two, home runs with one and RBIs with nine. Zmuda also leads the Lady Pirates in total bases with 21.

Young, aside from her success on the mound, also is lending a hand from the offensive end. The Ferndale, MD, senior is hitting .323 through 12 games, second only to Zmuda among the ECU regulars.

Susie Pierce, a freshman from Sneads Ferry, NC, has filled the role Manahan expected to with her .308 batting average through seven games. That average puts her third on the team behind Zmuda and Young.

The Lady Pirates moved South to close the month of March when they played in the Florida State Tournament March 22-24 in Tallahassee, FL. The tournament was to supply the Lady Pirates with some of the toughest competition they will face during the 1985 season.

• MEN'S TRACK •

East Carolina men's track coach Bill Carson was understandably pleased with his Pirates performance in the Domino's Pizza Relays on March 15-16.

"This was the best opening meet in the history of track at East Carolina," said Carson. "We ran against excellent competition and we ran good times. The times are especially impressive considering it was our first outdoor meet of the season."

Freshman Lee Vernon McNeil bested the entire field in the 100-meter dash with a first place time of 10.39. McNeil, a native of St Pauls, North Carolina, comes off an excellent indoor season and shows signs of being ECU's greatest sprinter.

John Lee, a freshman from Fairfax, Virginia, placed sixth in the division II 100-meter dash with a 10.99 clocking.

Craig White was third in the 110-meter high hurdles with a time of 14.09. A wide receiver on the Pirate football team, White is expected to have an outstanding junior season.

East Carolina 4 x 100 relay team of Chris Brooks, Erskine Evans, Nathan McCorkle, and McNeil took second place with a time of 40.27.

"We really ran well in poor conditions," said Carson. "The cold (55°) and rain slowed everyone down. McNeil's race featured four runners that were National qualifiers and last year's number one rated high school sprinter, so it was especially impressive. I think the meet showed that we are headed for as good an outdoor season as we had indoor."

The Domino's Pizzs Relays are hosted by Florida State University and regularly draws over 100 Division I schools.

• WOMEN'S TRACK •

Although few in numbers, East Carolina's women's track team certainly made their presence known in their first outdoor meet of the season, the N.C. State Invitational held March 16.

"I was very pleased with how we ran," said first year head coach Wayne Miller. "I only took five girls to the meet and really wasn't sure how we would do, but we won two events. I was very happy with our first outdoor meet."

The Lady Pirates took another first place when freshman Carolyn Martin jumped 36'10" in the triple jump. Martin is a native of Morehead City, North Carolina.

In addition to the two first places, the Lady Pirates also scored with two fourth place finishes. Freshman Wanda Haythe was fourth in the discus with a toss of 128', while Sonya Staten took fourth in the 400-meter dash with a time of 61.0.

The Lady Pirates will be smaller than most squads they face in the outdoor meets. However, Coach Miller appears to have the women headed for a banner year.

• TENNIS •

The East Carolina tennis season is in full swing with the men at an even 2-2 record for the spring and women enjoying a 2-1 margin.

The Pirates are led by sophomore's Davis Bagley and David Turner both of whom are undefeated in four singles matches. Bagley, a native of Durham, NC, led the men with a 9-3 record during the fall season and is a tri-captain for the 1984-85 season. Turner, from Arlington, Virginia, is playing one seed behind Bagley at number six singles.

Senior Galen Treble is 2-2 on the young season from his number one single spot. Sophomore Greg Willis has an outstanding 3-1 mark playing number two while Greg Loyd has had a rough early season at number three. Dan LaMont stands even at 2-2 on the year.

Treble and Willis lead all Pirate doubles teams with an impressive 3-1 record at number one seed.

Susan Montjoy, a freshman from Robbins, NC, leads the Lady Pirate netters with a perfect 3-0 record. Top seeded Janet Russell missed the first match of the season and stands at an even 1-1, while Ann Manderfield is winless in three attempts from the number two singles position. Tyraina Myers and Susan Brown have identical 1-2 records playing numbers three and four respectfully. Karla Hoyle has a 2-1 mark playing sixth seed and teams with Myers for a team leading 2-0 doubles record.

Swimming Team Finishes Season at Easterns

The East Carolina men's swimming team placed third in the prestigious Eastern Collegiate Swimming and Diving Championships held at Cleveland State University on March 7-9.

Freshman Bruce Brockschmidt led the Pirate tankers, as he has all year, with a first place finish in the 200-yard individual medley event. His time of 1:52.79 set a new ECU school record and, a new freshman mark. Brockschmidt joined teammates Kevin Hidalgo, Lee Hicks, and Keith Kaut for a fourth place time of 3:29.40 in the 400 yard medley relay. The Winchester, Virginia native also led ECU's 400 yard freestyle relay team of Kaut, Hidalgo, and Chris Pittelli to a fourth place finish with a time of 3:04.95. The same athletes combined to take fourth in the 800 yard freestyle relay with a 6:52.24 clocking.

In addition to his relay accomplishments, ECU's Keith Kaut took first place in the 50 yard freestyle with a time of 20.97. While swimming the first leg of the 4 x 100 relay, Kaut bested the school record in the 100 free with a closing of 45.81.

Junior Chris Pittelli also had an outstanding individual meet reaching the finals in all three events in which he was entered. The Cranbury, New Jersey native has served as a Pirate team captain all season. His time of 46.10 in the 100 yard freestyle was good for fourth place. He was fifth in the 200 individual medley at 1:54.93 and sixth in the 200 free with a time of 1:41.25.

Freshmen Pat Brennan and Lee Hicks set new ECU freshman marks at Easterns. Hicks, a native of Thomasville, NC, set records in the 100 and 200 breaststroke events with times of 59.10 and 207.79 respectfully. Brennan was clocked at 409.1 in the 400 individual medley to set a new ECU mark. He is a native of Charlotte and swam for the South Mecklenburg Swim Team.

ECU Head Coach Rick Kobe was pleased with the performance. "This was our best showing ever at Easterns. We swam very well and very fast and we have done that all year. I am as proud as I can be of the team's effort."

The Pirates have put together their most successful back-to-back seasons ever and with the outstanding performances by this years freshmen, the Pirate swim program should remain one of the best on the east coast.

MARX: THE PRODIGAL NEPHEW

Gregg Marx, the handsome young actor who recently assumed the role of Tom Hughes on As the World Turns, has been getting high marks from female viewers. And while it's soap operas for Gregg Marx, it was A Night at the Opera for his late great-uncles Groucho, Chico and Harpo. "I have other starving actor?" Those identity-crisis days are over for Gregg, who "had to prove to myself that I had talent and get hired on my own. Now it doesn't bother me when I walk into a casting director's office and the first thing they mention is my family."

The first time Dyan Cannon got married — it was 19 years ago, and the groom was a fellow named Cary Grant — it was a secret ceremony in Nevada because "Cary didn't want a circus." Love may or may not be lovelier the second time around, but Cannon is determined that it's going to be louder. For her wedding on April 26 to California businessman Stanley Fimberg ("I knew the second we met that I wanted to spend the rest of my life with him"), the plan is for fanfare. "I'm getting married right here in Beverly Hills and I want all my friends to come to the reception," says Cannon. "I was alone for 15 years since my marriage to Cary ended. I hadn't lived with anyone. But that's all over now. I want to celebrate finding the right man at last."

When Marsha Mason was married to Neil Simon, she certainly didn't have to worry about what her next part would be: Chances were, Simon would write it. Mason starred in his Max Dugan Returns, Chapter Two, Only When I Laugh, and The Goodbye Girl. But since saying goodbye to Simon, Mason has moved on to a chapter three: producing her own projects, the first of which is the upcoming Harpo's impishness," believes Gregg, grandson of Gummo. "When I see pictures of him as a young man, I realize that our eyes are similar." But Marx, 29, wasn't always proud of his family ties. "I had a very strong streak of independence. People would look at me and say I was so lucky to have this heritage. All I could think was, 'Why can't I be like every ing film The Washington Project. "The movie business has changed so much, especially for women," she explains. "Today you have to go out and get your own material. People like Goldie Hawn, Sally Field and Jane Fonda have set the example, and more and more women are trying it. At least if I'm working on my own project, if things don't go well, I'll feel like I'm failing on my own two feet."

When Deborah Raffin learned that she and her Lace co-star, Phoebe Cates, would be required to sing a song in the mini-series, her first instinct was to insist on doing the crooning under an assumed name. "Wait till you hear my voice," she moaned. "You'll all cover your ears and run." Her warning fell — pardon the expression — on deaf ears; she and Cates do, indeed, cross cadenzas. But Raffin is counting on the fact that people won't associate her with the Lace warbler. "What usually happens," she explains, "is that when people see me, they say, 'You look just like that actress Deborah Raffin,' then walk away. That's because I purposely take on roles that don't reflect on me or my personality. I change my physical appearance, so offscreen there is only a glimmer of the real Debbie. I'm someone who vaguely resembles the actress."

He may be considered the natural successor to Johnny Carson as host of The Tonight Show, but David Letterman isn't particularly heir-conditioned. "It's very flattering to be considered as a replacement for Mr. Carson," says the leading light of late-night television. "But I'm not sure I want the domestic problems that go with the job and money. Also, when people come here from abroad, those who have never seen me will say, 'I don't think Letterman is as good as Carson.' I don't need that kind of pressure."

Of cigarettes and science.

This is the way science is supposed to work.

A scientist observes a certain set of facts. To explain these facts, the scientist comes up with a theory.

Then, to check the validity of the theory, the scientist performs an experiment. If the experiment yields positive results, and is duplicated by other scientists, then the theory is supported. If the experiment produces negative results, the theory is re-examined, modified or discarded.

But, to a scientist, both positive and negative results should be important. Because both produce valuable learning.

Now let's talk about cigarettes.

You probably know about research that links smoking to certain diseases. Coronary heart disease is one of them.

Much of this evidence consists of studies that show a statistical association between smoking and the disease.

But statistics themselves cannot explain why smoking and heart disease are associated. Thus, scientists have developed a theory: that heart disease is caused by smoking. Then they performed various experiments to check this theory.

A little-known study

It was called the Multiple Risk Factor Intervention Trial (MR FIT).

In the words of the Wall Street Journal, it was "one of the largest medical experiments ever attempted." Funded by the Federal government, it cost $115,000,000 and took 10 years, ending in 1982.

The subjects were over 12,000 men who were thought to have a high risk of heart disease because of three risk factors that are statistically associated with this disease: smoking, high blood pressure and high cholesterol levels.

Half of the men received no special medical intervention. The other half received medical treatment that consistently reduced all three risk factors, compared with the first group.

It was assumed that the group with lower risk factors would, over time, suffer significantly fewer deaths from heart disease than the higher risk factor group.

But that is not the way it turned out.

After 10 years, there was no statistically significant difference between the two groups in the number of heart disease deaths.

The theory persists

We at R.J. Reynolds do not claim this study proves that smoking doesn't cause heart disease. But we do wish to make a point.

Despite the results of MR FIT and other experiments like it, many scientists have not abandoned or modified their original theory, or re-examined its assumptions.

They continue to believe these factors cause heart disease. But it is important to label their belief accurately. It is an opinion. A judgment. But not scientific fact.

We believe in science. That is why we continue to provide funding for independent research into smoking and health.

But we do not believe there should be one set of scientific principles for the whole world, and a different set for experiments involving cigarettes. Science is science. Proof is proof. That is why the controversy over smoking and health remains an open one.

R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Company

It's early on a Tuesday morning in January, and Fuzzy Zoeller is on the practice tee at The Forest golf resort outside Fort Myers, Fla. He's hitting a few shag balls "so I don't fall apart when I try to swing." Everybody who was hitting balls has now stopped to watch Fuzzy warm up. He hits a few, talking all the while, then spies the two pros from local clubs he's supposed to play with. "Here come my two fish," he hollers out, starting in on them already. "Get on over here and help me get rid of some of these balls." Fuzzy's ready to have some fun. This is only the second day of golf for Zoeller since surgery to remove a bony growth on a vertebra four months and four days ago, and if golf is anything, it's fun.

Fuzzy — everybody calls him Fuzzy or Fuzz, a name that derives from his initials, FUZ, for Frank Urban Zoeller — has already said hello to what seems like the club's entire membership. He may be the most popular player on tour these days. And he's surely one of the most successful. [In March, in only his third tournament after his back surgery, he won the Bay Hill Classic, his sixth tour win, which boosted his career earnings to almost $1.5 million.] He has something to say to everybody, leaves everyone smiling. "Yeah, I'm fine. If anything, I'm a little too strong. I'm gonna start back at [the] Doral [Open]." The guy at the concession stand asks Fuzzy how he feels. "With my hands," Fuzzy answers. "How 'bout you?"

The fourth member of this morning's foursome shows up: Holly Hinkle, a waitress at a restaurant owned by a golfer Fuzz played the PGA mini-tour with about a decade ago. Holly is a good golfer who moved down to Florida to do just that: golf. Fuzzy told her, come on, play some golf with us. It doesn't matter to him whom he plays with — he's no snob. Today, as most always, Fuzz just wants to have fun.

That's the way golf has always been with him. "I don't want to play the game if I have to force myself to do it. I want to enjoy doing it." The one time it wasn't enjoyable, Fuzzy nearly gave it up. It was at the University of Houston. He'd gone to Edison Community College in Fort Myers for his first two years of college and then transferred to Houston for his third. And nearly his last year of golf.

"I don't like to make a big deal of it," he says. "The coach and I didn't get along. He tried to change my attitude toward the game. I would tell [an opposing player], 'Good shot,' and I'd get lectured. He didn't want me to say good shot. That's what the difficulty was between us. Had I stayed there the third term, I'd have quit. But I said, 'My God, this game's not like that.' And it's not. So I went pro. I went on the mini-tour."

The mini-tour was more like it. It's the minor leagues of professional golf, where you go to prepare to qualify for the PGA tour. "We had a blast," says Fuzzy. "What we'd do is — I was winning this tournament down in Savannah by seven or eight shots coming in to the 16th, and before I could get into the 18th hole, I had a $700 bar bill already. Whoever won the tournament had to buy the drinks for everybody else. And they had opened my tab up on the 16th 'cause they figured, hell, he couldn't blow it now. Here ya go! There were some good golfers came out of that mini-tour. Me, Bill Rogers, Bruce Lietzke. About 20 of us are out on the tour now."

Zoeller joined the PGA Tour in 1974, after winning that year's qualifying school tournament. And even on the big tour, playing for the large dollars, it was still fun. "There's something happens out there every week. It doesn't take much to get me tickled." Like the first time he ever played with Arnold Palmer. "It was down at the Byron Nelson [Classic] in Dallas. I think it was the seventh hole — a dogleg right. I hit a pretty good tee shot and Arnold hit a pretty good shot. We'd already played six holes, and I didn't even remember them at all — it was my first year on the tour and I was in awe. This is Arnold Palmer. This is a guy I grew up admiring, and here he is playing with me. I remember it very plainly. I got ready to hit my second shot after Arnold had put his on the green about 4 or 5 feet from the hole, and I looked up, and everybody'd left me. The whole gallery was on their way to the hole. I said this is the tour! I thought it was great."

If Palmer had Arnie's Army in those days, Fuzzy had a gallery of his own.

Zoeller has always been an artist to the gallery.

"Up at the Quad Cities Open my second year on the tour, we had 'Fuzzy's Fannies.' My mother and her friends, and believe you me, they were wide. Somebody said, 'Look at all those fannies.'"

But for Fuzzy, the real fun started in 1979. It was in that year that he won his first tournament, the San Diego Open. "That was something else I didn't think would ever happen. But I proved to myself that I could beat those guys." By winning he got himself an invitation to his first Masters. In all the years of the Masters, only three players have won it in their first crack at it. There was Horton Smith, who won the inaugural tournament. Then, the next year, 1935, there was Gene Sarazen, who took it with his now-legendary 4-wood shot that rolled in the hole for a double eagle on the 15th hole of the final round. And there was Fuzzy Zoeller in 1979. "The Masters was the most fun I ever had. Just getting to Augusta was the first thing. If there's a heaven for a golfer, that is it."

"During that week," Fuzzy remembers, "the only people telling me that I couldn't win was the press. I happened to be in a position to do it and I did it. It was fun. I just love the competition, period. That's the bottom line. Boom. I love gettin' out there, beatin' our heads against the ground. Playin' Mother Nature. Playin' the golf course. And playin' the other guys, too. At the Masters, I had my chance to make the putt that I'd been practicing all my life."

Back at The Forest, Fuzzy makes his first par at the 5th hole. In order to do so, he has to snake in a 15-foot putt that breaks about 8 inches to the left. "Ho hum," he yawns, "Tom Watson woulda done the same thing."

On the course, Fuzzy's mouth works constantly. He's having the time of his life. Singing. Whistling. His tee shot at six heads for the water. "Float, ball, float!" One of the pros blades a chip shot, sending it way across the green. Fuzzy: "Got good form, though."

On the 10th tee, a Mr. Harrington wants to show Fuzzy an invention of his. It looks like an oversized comb, but when it's unfolded it becomes the prong part of a rake that you clamp on over the grip of a golf club. "See, you just open it up like this, and you've got yourself a rake," Harrison explains. "I just need someone to help me promote it." Fuzzy is genuinely delighted, and asks if he can have one to show around at trade shows and on the tour.

Before he tees off, someone asks Fuzz, "How you hittin' 'em?" "Every time," is the answer. "Haven't whiffed one yet." Out in the fairway, he asks for the distance to the green. Two hundred and fifteen yards. "Shoot. I don't have anything that goes that far." That's one of his favorite lines. He uses it whenever he can.

A groundskeeper goes by on a lawnmower. "Hey," says Fuzzy, "I saw that guy at the 7-11 this morning buying his breakfast. Hey buddy! How ya doin'?" A few minutes later, he sees the same man sitting, talking to a friend. "Hey," he yells at them. "You guys aren't going to get this grass cut like that."

Bill Szalay shows up, Fuzzy's coach from Edison Junior College. "Fuzzy was always like this," he says. "He talks to everybody." A foursome of ladies waves at Fuzzy and his partners to play through. Fuzzy yells, "Come on, girls, we'll make it an eightsome." They smile and laugh, but decline.

On the next hole, a long par 3, the foursome on the green waves Fuzzy to hit up. Everyone misses the green, and Fuzzy's shot goes way right. A bad shot. Fuzz yells, "Is that good?" and throws his arms up in the air, as if signaling touchdown or field goal or something.

When he reaches the green, Fuzzy tells them, "We sure showed you a lot of good shots there, guys," knowing they expect miracles from the reigning U.S. Open champ. Then, as he is preparing to chip to the green, one of the men, thinking he may be in Fuzzy's line of sight, jumps back, away from the green. Fuzzy laughs, says, "I got more control than that," and drops his shot about a foot from the cup.

That's golf with Fuzzy Zoeller. It's a game, and he does his best to make it fun. "Golf needed Fuzzy," says Coach Szalay. "It needed a shot in the arm to get back on track. Fuzzy gave it that."

The shot in the arm Fuzzy gave golf — gave professional sports — was administered at the U.S. Open last year. Zoeller stood in the fairway of the 18th hole at Winged Foot in Mamaroneck, N.Y., and watched Greg Norman, playing ahead of him, drain a 40-foot downhill putt from off the green for a par that kept him in a tie for the lead with Zoeller. Fuzzy's response was to grab the white towel off the side of his golf bag and wave it, as though in surrender. "I'll be honest with you," Fuzzy recalls. "I thought he made birdie. And I'm thinkin', the man makes a putt like that he almost deserves to win. Because the 18th hole at Winged Foot is not a hole that you birdie. I figured that's the top. That's just the topper to everything."

Then Fuzzy grabbed a club and went about his business. He parred the hole, keeping himself in a tie, and won the next day in an 18-hole playoff. But his gesture out in the fairway, saluting a worthy opponent, caught the imagination of everybody who witnessed it. His show of sportsmanship was lauded in the press, and the enthusiasm of the playoff gallery was such that marshalls had trouble keeping order.

Fuzzy says now that he wasn't conscious at the time of doing anything special for golf or for sports. "We were just doin' our thing, enjoying what we do best. It could happen anywhere, but it just happened to be at the Open. But the thing is, Greg and myself, we would hope it would look like fun because we both enjoy doing what we do for a living. And we're friends. But he wants to beat me, and I want to beat him. Golf has always been called a gentleman's game. And deep down, it's still the gentleman's game."

At dinner in a Ft. Myers restaurant, after finishing his golf for the day, Fuzzy is being good, eating broiled fish, drinking light beer, sticking to his diet and talking about golf. "I don't thrive on winning. If I beat the 70th guy on the list, I've beaten somebody. I always try to be whatever I can. Do my best. Then if my score is good enough to win the tournament, then that's a big bonus."

"I'm not the best golfer out there, but the difference between who is successful on the tour and the guy who is not may be taking one shot, I'll take that chance. I might make an 8 or a 9 that'll cost me a tournament, but I'm still gonna give myself that opportunity to win. A lot of guys don't do that. There's no greater feeling than to have a 10-footer to win. Even if you miss it. Just to have the chance. You work your butt off to get there, and you just want the opportunity."

"I guess I'd like to be remembered as a guy who enjoyed his living, a guy who enjoyed being on the golf course, who enjoyed the game of golf. Now remember what I said: 'Game.' Even though I do it for a living, it's still a game."

Dinner's over and one of the restaurant's owners heads over to Fuzzy's table. He's got a parrot on his shoulder. "Fuzzy," he bellows loud enough for everybody in the place to hear. "We want you to make a lot of these this year," handing Fuzzy the birdie.

Fuzzy looks at it and says, "Is this an eagle?" FW

FOR PREGNANT TEENS, A "PROJECT CHASTITY"

By Kathleen Maxa

At 15, Deedee was barely old enough to babysit. But she was already the mother of 11-month-old Ronnie, whose hazel-colored eyes, blond hair, passive demeanor and uncertain future mirrored hers.

Becoming a mother, like becoming pregnant, was a situation that Deedee didn't give much thought to until it happened to her.

"I didn't think about doing everything I'd be doing — like feeding him breakfast at 5:30 and getting up with him in the middle of the night," says Deedee, who resides with her son in a home for unwed mothers.

She says she became pregnant during her first sexual encounter, and that she does not intend to marry Ronnie's teenage father, for whom she no longer cares.

Rose was 19 when she learned she was pregnant. "I was happy," she recalls, "but in a way I was worried because I hadn't finished school."

It's been a few years since that first pregnancy, and Rose still hasn't finished school. She became pregnant again by the same man, to whom she was not married. Rose, who is on welfare and lives with her parents, still clings to her ambition to someday complete her high school education and eventually obtain an office job.

Deedee and Rose are just two of the more than 500,000 teenagers who become mothers each year, according to estimates from the National Center for Health Statistics. They are part of a troubling trend that seems to defy advances in sex education and birth control. And if this trend continues, 4 out of 10 young girls will become pregnant as teens, and 2 in 10 will give birth before they are 20, according to The Alan Guttmacher Institute in New York.

The teen pregnancy epidemic worries more than parents, however. It's also a concern for schools, churches, communities, and even the federal government.

Says Marjorie Mecklenburg, former deputy assistant secretary for Health and Human Services: "Teenage parenthood is often associated with health problems for the mother and child, poor educational attainment and employment prospects, large families, and eventual welfare dependency." Jo Ann Gasper, the deputy assistant secretary of Population Affairs for Health and Human Services, administers a federal government program that aims through projects in some schools to prevent teen pregnancy by encouraging adolescents to postpone sexual activity. Known officially as the Adolescent Family Life program, it has been nicknamed "Project Chastity" by some because it stresses sexual abstinence over contraceptives.

The program also seeks to minimize the adverse consequences faced by already pregnant teens and their babies by stressing family involvement while providing a wide range of health, educa-

Introducing New ALPO Puppy Food.

Veterinarians prefer more than 2 to 1 over every leading brand.

Of all the leading puppy foods, there's one formula preferred by veterinarians.

New ALPO Puppy Food.

ALPO consulted with hundreds of veterinarians before making a new food for puppies. And the result — a formula that has high quality protein and is more digestible than other leading puppy foods.

So it's no wonder that veterinarians who responded to a national survey preferred the formula for new ALPO Puppy Food more than 2 to 1 over every leading brand.

It's the pick of veterinarians and the pick of the litter.

When you and your family pile into "Old Faithful" to begin your summer vacation, the best way to prevent being stranded on the side of a hot highway with the kids slowly melting into the asphalt is to know your cooling system and how it works.

Most cooling system problems are due to neglect. So before you get too buried under the hood, clean off the grille in front of the car's radiator. Remove suicidal butterflies, candy wrappers, low-flying airplanes, etc., then lift the hood and clean out all the leaves and winter refuse from the engine compartment.

An approximately 50 percent water and 50 percent antifreeze solution called the coolant is continually forced around the engine through a system of passages known as the water jacket by a belt-driven water pump, then through a rubber radiator hose into the base of the radiator, where it's cooled. Another hose carries the coolant from the top of the radiator back to the engine.

A spring-loaded thermostat acts as a temperature-controlled faucet to restrict the coolant from flowing into the radiator when the engine is cold. This allows the engine to warm up quickly.

Since water expands when heated, the cooling system needs a safety device to prevent the whole lot from bursting and ruining your day. An expansion tank, which is either part of the radiator or a separate container somewhere in the engine compartment, is fitted with a pressure-sensitive cap that allows hot coolant to escape to the outside if the pressure gets too high (thus the green puddle under your car after you've waited in line at the gas station on a particularly hot day).

Never inspect the cooling system when the engine is hot, as escaping coolant can cause a nasty burn. When the engine is cool, carefully check all the system's rubber hoses, using a screwdriver to determine the tightness of the hose clamps securing them. Squeeze the hoses to look for tears and pinhole leaks. Check the radiator and expansion tank cap(s) for tightness.

It's important that your water pump be in good working order, too. A faulty pump will squeak like baby mice at a birthday party. A binding pump causes the motor to work harder, increasing gas consumption and making the engine run hotter than is good for it.

If your engine takes a long time to warm up, or the output from the heater is poor, your water pump may be on the blink or the thermostat may be jammed open. Your mechanic or a repair manual will tell how to test the thermostat.

If you can tell your mechanic what's wrong with your car in clear, concise terms, you'll save time and money. FW

AMERICA'S "INVISIBLE" WOMEN: OPEN UP YOUR EYES, AMERICA!

By Evelyn Smart

It was 4 o'clock in the afternoon and Sarah was thirsty. She sat alone at a small table on a sunny restaurant terrace waiting to order a glass of wine. She'd been waiting five minutes. The man at the table next to her had just tossed back his second drink.

She sighed, shifted her weight, and waved again at the young waitress, who picked things up, took them inside, and brought them out, her earnest expression focusing on everything and everybody except Sarah, who was obviously invisible.

Sarah looked wistfully at the busboy orbiting around the man across from her, hoping he'd notice her plight, but they were exchanging jokes and leering at a pretty-young-thing on the other side of the terrace. Their male smugness irritated her even more, and she leaned back, pretending to relax. She was used to this sort of thing, but it still made her angry. There's no logic in it, she thought. I eat, I drink, I tip, exactly like everyone else, but I have to pound my fists or set the tablecloth on fire in order to get service.

Sarah didn't look her 50 years of age. But then, most of the women in this privileged community looked 10 years younger than they were. Some worked, some stayed home, some were married, some single. Their skin was tan, their bodies tuned, and they were always freshening up for some imagined inspection. All things considered, they were a very attractive group.

One of the fastest-growing minorities in our country is middle-aged and older women. They are quietly surfacing in huge numbers, in offices, airplanes, theaters, campsites. Yet there is no group whose presence is less visible. Unlike their younger sisters who told all in their consciousness-raising groups, this generation was taught that directness was suspect or crude, that things could be made right only by behaving in a certain manner. They are far more likely to accept neglect than to make a scene. At times it appears that some of them would rather die than call attention to themselves.

There is no arbitrary age for membership in this group, but it seems women often begin to lose their visibility at around 40. Other people tend to look above and around them and don't always hear what they have to say. This makes the social pressure to remain youthful enormous. Some middle-aged women even feel ashamed, as if gray hair and wrinkles were something only careless women got.

Their male counterparts, on the other hand, remain decidedly opaque. These debonair men with crinkly eyes and chins that melt into their necklines are positive magnets to waiters, waitresses, bartenders, bellhops, secretaries. It is arguable that more 50-year-old men are taken to dinner and the theater than their 50-year-old single female counterparts. Their most inane comments are accepted as serious statements. How can a fixed accumulation of years make spectators of one half of the population and prophets out of the other?

It misses the point to say the middle-aged woman is unhappy. She just thinks it's unfair. She sits meekly as some liberated sprite whisks her husband off to the dance floor while the girl's glassy-eyed husband says to her, "Shall we sit this one out?"

Some older women would faint from hunger rather than enter a restaurant alone, busying themselves with their homes and families, deliberately making themselves part of a closed society. They control their environments as surely as they control their bridge groups. Some of them actually believe the head waiter when he says his restaurant is all filled up, and are grateful if they're given an out-of-the-way table by the kitchen. This permits the avoidance of unpleasant encounters, but it also perpetuates the avoidance of change.

But enough is enough. We want to be part of the mainstream and believe we're entitled to be treated fairly. Who are these people, anyway, who determine our worth, who decide with a glance or a nod whether or not we even exist?

We don't all look alike, either. You can tell us apart if you try. Some of us are short and squat like fireplugs, and others tall and willowy like asparagus spears. We wear slinky crepe and old, faded jeans, have crooked noses and straight. Some of us are also in disguise. We're actually prom queens and cheerleaders testing our peers and grading them in Kindness, Attention, Avoidance and Neglect.

It takes a special presence and unusual courage to overcome the prejudice that older women suffer. Shirley MacLaine and Linda Evans would obviously have no problem, but not every woman ages gracefully. We get bumps on our backs and ripples on our thighs, and our eyes disappear into our eyelids. But that doesn't mean we should live with diminished horizons. Why should older women not get equal attention? Who made that rule? Women should be furious, not embarrassed. Even a little anarchy wouldn't hurt.

Sarah glanced at the man across from her who was signaling for another drink. She jumped out of her chair and clutched her neck. Awful, subhuman sounds were escaping from her parched throat. The waitress and busboy were at her side immediately.

"A glass of white wine and soda," she said in a dignified tone, sitting down again, "and the gentleman at the next table would like some attention."

Trust us. From the recognition of women will come the elevation of men. FW

THE SENSE AND NONSENSE OF HUMOR

of uneasiness in a specific situation.

4. False. Studies on the psychology of humor conducted at Wayne State University (Mich.) and Canada's Laurentian University have demonstrated that not only jokes but all forms of humor are received with greater laughter and more enthusiastic appreciation when the audience consists of more than one person. So, regardless of how funny your story is, it will be perceived as more humorous if you can draw a crowd to laugh along.

— John E. Gibson

TRUE OR FALSE?

1. People whose sense of humor enables them to laugh at life are likely to be emotionally immature.
2. How well you like jokes that poke fun at women or use humor to make men appear ridiculous depends on whether you're a man or a woman.
3. What you laugh at tells a lot about the way you look at life.
4. To get the most mileage out of your favorite joke, you should tell it to just one person at a time, rather than to a group of people.

ANSWERS

1. False. In a study of the dynamics of humor, Dr. Martin Grotjahn, professor of psychiatry emeritus at the University of Southern California, found that a sense of humor actually signifies emotional maturity. He observed that when the individual has mastered a peaceful relationship with himself, he then acquires a well-developed sense of humor. And, Dr. Grotjahn points out, one can then be tolerant and accepting of oneself and therefore of other people too. Humor is the final integration of the various stages of development.

2. True. In a Ball State University (Ind.) study, men and women students rated 75 humorous cartoons that fell into two categories: those that exploited or belittled women and those that put down men. Results: "The verbal ratings indicated that males preferred both types of cartoons more than females." A further finding: Both sexes rated the anti-male cartoons funnier than the anti-female cartoons.

3. True. Psychological studies at the University of Nice (France) have shown that "what makes people laugh is significant in determining their general attitude toward the world. The more one laughs, the more at ease one is likely to feel. The ability to laugh at oneself was found to be indicative of supreme self-confidence." The study showed, however, that laughter is also a defense used by many people to avoid disclosing feelings tion and social services and by promoting adoption as an alternative to abortion. Abortions specifically may not be encouraged or permitted under the program, and abortion counseling and referrals may only be offered if both the teen and her parents request it.

So far, 84 grants totaling $14.9 million have been awarded by the federal government to community-based projects throughout the country. These projects must "involve religious and charitable organizations," according to the act of Congress authorizing the program. An estimated 14,000 teens have been served by the program, which began in 1982.

While no one faults the government program's goal of reducing teen pregnancy, its implementation has sparked controversy and even a pending lawsuit by some clergymen who have joined with the American Civil Liberties Union in challenging the Adolescent Family Life act's constitutionality. The lawsuit charges that the act violates the requirement for separation of church and state by funneling federal funds to religious institutions, which then use the money to teach religious doctrines opposing birth control, premarital sex, and abortion.

Deedee and Rose are participants respectively in two such community-based projects — one administered by St. Ann's Infant and Maternity Home in Hyattsville, Md., run by the Daughters of Charity, and the other by the Washington, D.C., affiliate of Cities in Schools, a national, private, nonprofit foundation that works with inner-city youths in various educational programs. The girls credited these projects with enabling them to continue their high school educations through special classes. They also receive career counseling, day care services, and medical care for themselves and their babies.

But while the Adolescent Family Life program has helped minimize the hardships of pregnancy in the lives of these two teenagers and those of thousands of other adolescents, how effective it has been in changing their sexual attitudes or, more importantly, will be in helping them to avoid another premarital pregnancy remains unclear.

When asked about her views on premarital sex, for example, Deedee says, "Don't get pregnant unless you're married, because it's a lot easier if you're married."

Preliminary research performed at Utah State University indicates that an experimental group of students who participated in a curriculum funded by "Project Chastity" had less permissive attitudes toward premarital sex, better communications with their parents about sexual values and beliefs, and a more positive attitude about family life. But it's too early to tell whether these attitudes and initial changes will continue.

Then, too, others doubt whether promiscuity is at the root of the teen pregnancy epidemic or whether there are other reasons behind it. "For many of the girls we see," says Sister Betty Ann McNeil, a Catholic nun who heads the adolescent pregnancy program where Deedee is enrolled, "pregnancy is the only area of their life where they can point to an accomplishment. For them, sexual activity is a seeking out of acceptance and closeness that is missing from their own families."

Maurice Weir, whose Cities in Schools program serves mainly inner city teens like Rose, sees the problem of how to discourage premarital sex among teens as more of an economic one.

"Young women who see a career path or are college-bound see that pregnancy can interfere with those goals," Weir says. "Our job is to provide the missing element of hope, the missing element of real belief in attainable goals that they can see themselves achieving. Helping them to stay in school, getting them vocational training, and then helping them to find jobs is really what it is all about." FW

FROM NAPLES

NOODLE NOUVEAU-RICHE

Here in America you can get rich by designing a computer chip or a pet rock. In Italy you get rich by designing cars or pasta.

Ask industrial designer Giugiaro; he's done both: auto bodies for Maserati and Ferrari, noodles for one of Naples' leading pasta makers.

After many months and 35 sketches, Giugiaro came up with the "Marille," a noodle that looks like a butterfly in profile or the Greek letter "beta," depending on which Italian you ask.

Giugiaro isn't telling how many lire he earned for his masterpiece, but with Italians eating 60 pounds of pasta per person per year, and Americans eating close to 10 pounds per year, you might want to get to work on some of your own lucrative noodle doodles.

A SYMPATHETIC EAR FOR SINGLE PARENTS

days, they often return to a single-parent household. About 1 in 5 schoolchildren live with just one parent.

"It's tough," says Nancy Berla, a spokesperson for the National Committee for Citizens in Education (NCCE). "A single parent usually has to channel a lot of energy into supporting the family, and it's exhausting to come home from the job to find a note from the teacher."

The single parent also has to fight against stereotypes. Berla notes: "If there's anything wrong with the kid, the parent is an easy target. Parents who are really making the effort to work with their children feel discriminated against when they're automatically cited as the reason the child has problems."

To combat this, the NCCE sponsors a toll-free hotline for interested parents and teachers, supplying information on the special needs of a single-parent family. Call 1-800-638-9675 for a little education for advanced adults.

FROM FLORIDA

GROWING GOOD CITIZENS

Bill Schoffler says the best way to handle delinquent girls is to keep them down on the farm. Schoffler is program director for Outward Bound in Hurricane Island, Florida. Working with Schoffler, the state of Florida sends up to 10 girls who are juvenile offenders to work on a family farm for up to a year.

"The approach," says Schoffler, "is not punishment oriented, but it is cause-and-effect oriented. If the girls don't grow or won't cook the food, they don't get to eat it." The program is extremely successful — often over 85 percent of the participants stay out of trouble after the program. The reason, opines Schoffler, is a new environment and a new challenge. The young women are eager to change "because often the old environment was not so great. In the shade of some beautiful old oak, they learn vocational skills, like gardening, sewing, cooking, quilting and the like." We hope they have a bumper crop of program graduates this year.

BEDSIDE READING

What are Americans reading before they turn out the light and retire for the night? We asked a couple of them:

Bill Adler of New York City, book packager and literary agent. His most recent best seller is Who Killed the Robins Family?

In fiction, I am reading Sidney Sheldon's book If Tomorrow Comes. To tell you the truth, I've sort of been reluctant to read him because I wasn't sure that he had the quality of writing that would make him worth a weekend. However, I had heard so much about this book that I decided to buy it. I think it's very good. I think maybe Sidney Sheldon has come of age. This book is equal to any good fiction that I've read in a long time.

In non-fiction, I'm reading a book that I think every American should read because it has so many elements going for it: Iacocca. It's a fascinating portrait of a man many people think of as an American folk hero. I think, after you read the book, you come away with the sense that there may be some justification for that.

Humphrey A. Olsen, editor and publisher, Snowy Egret Magazine, Williamsburg, Ky.

You may be able to tell from the name I've given my press that I'm especially interested in birds. I very much enjoyed the recent book Wood Warblers' World by Hal Harrison. It treats all the warblers that are native to North America, and includes color plates of all of them. There are very few books that cover all 60 of the warblers. For me, warblers are like family because there's a number of them around here. They're very hard to track down; they like to stay in the tops of the trees and they keep flying around. You see one, and he isn't there by the time you get to him. Harrison has been interested in warblers for 30 or more years, and he tells you his experiences in dealing with them and gives you lots of good points in identifying each species.

This is because the coin, at rest, or in a state of inertia, refuses to engage in the sudden motion of the propelled card.

Our Story: NO SOONER HAS THE KING BEEN INTERRED THAN NILS AND NILAS RACE FOR THE WINTER CAMP, AND THE SACRED PILLAR ALL WOULD-BE KINGS MUST SCALE. THE TWINS DRAW BACK WHEN THEY FIND THE SETTLEMENT DEFENDED. BEFORE LONG, THEY CALL A TRUCE IN THE BITTER FEUD.

"STRANGERS GUARD THE WINTER CAMP," NILAS SAYS. "LET US JOIN FORCES AND DRIVE THESE MEDDLERS AWAY." NILS READILY AGREES.

FOR ONLY WHEN THE INTERLOPERS ARE GONE CAN THE RIVALS FIGHT FOR POSSESSION OF THE SKY PILLAR, AND THE RIGHT TO CLIMB IT. AT ONCE THEY DRAW UP THEIR MEN FOR BATTLE. THE LAPP ATTACKERS SURGE FORWARD FROM TWO SIDES...

... AND ARE BLOODIED FOR THEIR EFFORTS. PRINCE VALIANT AND HIS MEN HAVE BEEN WAITING. ON ONE SIDE, NILAS' MEN ENCOUNTER BOLTA'S VIKINGS. THE NORTHMEN HAVE PAINTED THEMSELVES RED SO THEIR WOUNDS WILL NOT SHOW. TERRIBLE IS THEIR BLOODLUST.

ON THE OTHER SIDE, THE KNIGHTS OF THE ROUND TABLE ARE MORE REFINED, BUT NO LESS DEADLY. LAPP PIKEMEN COME FORWARD AND CAST THEIR JAVELINS, THEN CROUCH AND RETREAT AS KNIGHTLY ARCHERS LET FLY. AS THE ARCHERS IN TURN FALL BACK, THE PIKEMEN STEP UP AND HURL ONCE MORE. MUCH BLOODIED, NILS AND NILAS WITHDRAW.

"WE HAVE LOST MANY MEN," SAYS NILS. "BUT WE HAVE HUNDREDS, THEY HAVE ONLY SCORES. WE WILL WEAR THEM DOWN." NEXT WEEK: Attrition
