Space Shuttle Blows Tire, Lands Safely

By HOWARD BENEDICT
AP Aerospace Writer

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Discovery's astronauts, their homecoming delayed 98 minutes by rain, glided safely back to Earth today at the end of a bittersweet journey that astronaut-Sen. Jake Garn hailed as proof that "man is needed in space."

The 103-ton space plane blew one of its six tires as it rolled to a stop, but the astronauts were not aware of it and the rupture did not divert the craft from its center-line touchdown.

Fifty-five minutes after the landing, the crew left the shuttle for medical exams and showers. Garn walked unsteadily down the stairs, and waved and smiled weakly as he was helped into the astronauts' van.

During seven days in space the crew of six men and one woman logged many accomplishments and one big disappointment: the failure, despite a valiant effort and through no fault of their own, to revive the $85 million Syncom communications satellite.

Discovery, its final dash across central Florida heralded by sonic booms, dropped out of a clear sky and onto a 15,000-foot runway three miles from the launch pad it left a week ago and where shuttle Challenger is perched, 10 days from liftoff. Like the landing, Discovery's launch was delayed by rain.

With commander Karol Bobko at the controls, the shuttle touched down at 8:54 a.m. EST, swooping in from the south after making a series of wide circles above this spaceport. The ship had traveled 2.5 million miles.

"The Swat Team is home," said Mission Control, referring to the makeshift, flyswatter-like tools the astronauts used in an unsuccessful attempt to repair a satellite.

As the shuttle neared the end of its rollout, Mission Control told the astronauts, "I think you blew a right-hand outboard tire." Inspection later showed that it was an inboard tire that had blown, and television pictures showed it to be frayed.

Thousands of spectators at the landing strip and along nearby rivers and highways cheered the landing, the fifth here in 16 shuttle flights and fourth in succession.

An hour before touchdown, Bobko and pilot Don Williams fired braking rockets more than 200 miles above the Indian Ocean to slow the shuttle's speed and start it on a supersonic dive through the atmosphere.

The astronauts were to have landed at 7:16 a.m., but (Please turn to page 14)

County's Budget Workshops Begin

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

The Pitt County Board of Commissioners Thursday began a series of workshop sessions that will lead to the formation of a budget for the coming fiscal year.

While most of the department requests heard Thursday — health and mental health, solid waste-landfill, agricultural extension, Sheppard Memorial Library, county planning — were in line with their present operating budgets, requests for county funds by the Department of Social Services were up some $224,093, and requests by buildings and grounds showed an increase of some $183,937.

DDS Director Ed Garrison, who told commissioners some $29.2 million in federal, state, county and contract revenue is expected to flow through the department in 1985-1986, said the department is requesting $5.2 million from the county for the coming fiscal year, as compared with a county appropriation of $4.98 million this year.

The biggest portion of the increase — $150,726 — Garrison told the board, is in the area of public assistance programs mandated by the state, over which the county has little or no control — Aid to Families with Dependent Children (AFDC), Medicaid and other assistance programs.

Medicaid alone, according to Garrison, accounts for more than $58,000 of the increase — $24,445 for 1985-86 as compared to $63,142 this year — while a request for five new positions account for most of the rest of the increase.

Garrison noted that three of the five new employees would be used to implement a community work experience or workfare program in Food Stamps, similar to the present AFDC workfare program which cuts benefits for people who are able to work and do not.

Although the county would have to appropriate the $5.2 million in requests, reimbursement for some of the expenditures and other revenues would result in a net investment of only $2.02 million in county tax revenue in 1985-86, which represents $117,843 more than the $1.77 million investment for the current fiscal year.

The Mental Health Department's proposed budget of $2.11 million for 1985-86 is less than the $2.44 million this year, but includes the same amount of county tax revenue — $241,922.

Dr. Steve Creech, director of the mental health center, told commissioners that a federal operations block grant program, which began in 1976, has ended, resulting in "a total loss of $165,347." As a result, he said, cuts have been made across the board and nine full-time-equivalent positions included in the present budget have been dropped from the proposed 1985-86 budget.

"We're not asking for any increase," Creech said. Requests from the Health Department for 1985-86 total $1.68 million, including $738,027 in county funds, as compared with a budget this year of $1.69 million ($660,683 in county money), while the Agricultural Extension Service requested $114,937 from commissioners, compared with $111,242 in county funds appropriated this year.

The tax supervisor's office is requesting $294,325 for 1985-86, compared (Please turn to page 14)

Sisters, 6 and 3, Get Help For Mom

WOOD LAKE, Minn. (AP) — Two sisters aged 6 and 3 ran a half-mile to get help for their mother, who was pinned under their car when it overturned on a gravel road, relatives and rescuers said.

"I tried to get the car off of Mommy, but I can't lift it up," Sarah Ellingson, 6, told Deb and David DeVlieger, who opened the door of their rural home Wednesday and saw the exhausted children.

"Come and help me, come and help me," pleaded Sarah.

DeVlieger said her sister, Bonnie, 3, was bleeding from the mouth. Sarah had stuffed a tissue into Bonnie's mouth and told her to bite down to stop the bleeding, he said.

DeVlieger called an ambulance, left the girls with his wife and went to the accident scene with a neighbor. They found the girls' mother, Geryl Ellingson, unconscious.

"The car was tipped on its side on the driver's side and the lady's head was on the outside of the car and her body on the inside," DeVlieger said.

He and the neighbor tried to lift the car but failed. An ambulance arrived and six men were able to lift the car.

The Ellingsons were taken to a Granite Falls hospital. Mrs. Ellingson was transferred to University of Minnesota Hospitals, where her condition was listed as critical today. Sarah and Bonnie were treated at the Granite Falls hospital and released.

Mrs. DeVlieger said the girls had crawled out a window to escape from the car after it rolled. "The youngest girl was pretty shook up, but the oldest girl really kept herself together for as young as she is," Mrs. DeVlieger said.

Mrs. DeVlieger said she talked to her own daughter, 5, afterward "about what to do if something like that happened."

Mrs. Ellingson's nephew, Kenneth Ellingson of Wood Lake, said Sarah and Bonnie had been taught to be responsible. "After the accident they said that when they were running to the DeVliegers' house for help, they ran along the ditch and not in the road so they would be safe," he said.

Annual Health Fair Offers Health Education, Testing

By SUSAN TACKER

As part of a national effort of health promotion and disease prevention, the ECU School of Medicine is sponsoring the fifth annual WRAL/Winn-Dixie Health Fair Saturday from 10 a.m. until 6 p.m. at The Plaza.

The Health Fair will provide health education, individualized health assessments, screening tests and referral services for participants. Almost all of the screening tests are free of charge, and according to an ECU School of Medicine publication, WRAL estimates the value of the free services to be $150.

According to the N.C. Division of Health Services, it is recognized that 50 percent of deaths are related to lifestyle factors such as obesity, lack of exercise, stress, and injury-conducive behavior, such as smoking. Rather than communicable diseases, the leading causes of death and sickness today are self-imposed risks, and largely preventable. The Health Fair provides the information participants need to make intelligent and informed decisions about their health, according to Karen Vail-Smith, coordinator of community health services for the ECU School of Medicine's Office of Health Services Research and Development.

More than 20 exhibitors including the American Lung Association, the American Cancer Society, Hospice, and the Diabetes Association will have educational booths at the fair, and a large group of health profession volunteers will hold health screenings. The screenings will be offered for height and weight, percentage of body fat, blood pressure, anemia, sickle cell anemia, oral cancer, hearing, vision, glaucoma, computerized nutritional analysis, computerized health risk appraisals, and podiatry. Physicians from the Pitt County Medical Society will review results of the screenings.

One of the most popular exhibits last year was the computerized nutrition analysis. According to Janet Bryan, nutrition program consultant for the Division of Health Services, the computerized nutrition analysis offers a "good review of the nutrient, vitamin, and mineral intake for the day." The participant records what and how much they have eaten during the day, and the information is coded into the computer. The computer then gives a nutrient analysis for each meal and snack. It also lists calories, protein, vitamins and minerals, cholesterol, and sodium. It tells how much of the total recommended dietary allowance the participant is receiving from the foods he has eaten, and gives suggestions to improve the diet. A registered dietician from the Eastern North Carolina District Dietetic Association will review the participant. "It really gives practical information," says Ms. Bryan.

Students from the department of medical technology in the ECU School of Allied Health and Social Work and students from the associate degree nursing program at Pitt Community College will screen (Please turn to page 14)

SCLC Session Opens Tonight

Dr. Joseph E. Lowery, national president of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, and the Rev. C.T. Vivian, executive director of the National Klan Watch, will be the keynote speakers during the SCLC state convention to be held here tonight and Saturday.

Dr. Lowery will be featured during a mass rally at Mount Calvary Free Will Baptist Church, corner of Hudson and Ward streets, tonight at 8 p.m. A staff and board meeting will precede the meeting at 5 p.m. at the church.

A state president's breakfast will be held at 8 a.m. Saturday. Lunch will be served at noon at the church. Informational and planning workshops will be held from 1 to 5 p.m. at the church.

Vivian will speak during a banquet Saturday at 7 p.m. at the Moose Lodge on Dickinson Avenue. An awards presentation honoring state and local persons will be held during the banquet.

Aaron Johnson, who heads the State Department of Corrections, will be in attendance. Melvin McLawhorn, coordinator of the meeting, said.

According to Golden Frinks, field secretary of the SCLC, "the SCLC will push for more jobs in the black sector, stress the need for the black student to carefully select the college or university they attend, call for upgrading blacks in existing businesses, seek a state civil rights bill and call on city officials to upgrade the city's Affirmative Action Program."

TELL SIZES

I have a suggestion for people giving yard sales. Clothes usually sell slowly at yard sales, yet they are so expensive in the stores. Tell in your advertisements prior to the yard sale what size clothes you have. I'm a tall big person and I won't go look at clothes unless I know they're my size because there seldom are any to fit me. If I know they're there, I'll go. The ad won't cost you much more listing sizes and I think it will make a big difference in your sales. H.P.

Josephine Twilley Gets Service Award

By ROSALIE TROTMAN
Reflector Lifestyle Editor

This year's service award given by Pitt Memorial Hospital Foundation Inc. went to Josephine Gray Twilley. The presentation was made at the annual awards benefit dinner held at the Greenville Country Club Thursday night.

In making the announcement Kenneth Dews said, "Tonight's recipient of the Pitt Memorial Hospital Foundation Annual Service Award has been a resident of Pitt County for the past 33 years. The life of the recipient has been full of opportunities to serve the people of the community. Dedication to service and compassionate understanding are two hallmarks of our award winner's life and personality."

"Thirty years ago our recipient graduated as a registered nurse from Peninsula General Hospital in Salisbury, Maryland. She has experience as a staff nurse in surgery, pediatrics, psychiatry, OB, emergency service and critical care units. She has been a clinical instructor at East Carolina University School of Nursing and was the first registered nurse to defibrillate a patient in the emergency room of the old hospital," Dews continued.

"She has been active in women's activities of the Methodist church, has been a volunteer and assisted with the Pitt County Bloodmobile and works with the Pitt County Shrinettes. When asked about her interests she says her commitments are to her husband, her children and to Pitt County Memorial Hospital. She is fond of dancing and with her husband belongs to four dance clubs where they enjoy ballroom dancing," he added.

"We are proud to recognize Josephine Gray Twilley for her unique service to the hospital, community of Ayden and the patients of eastern North Carolina," concluded Dews.

"The people that I work with aren't going to believe this, but I'm at a loss for words. . . I thank you," said Mrs. Twilley. Her current position is coordinator and patient representative for the hospital.

In closing the presentation, G. Henry Leslie said, "We salute you. You are Pitt County Memorial Hospital's Florence Nightingale."

Dews is treasurer of the hospital's foundation and Leslie is a member of the hospital's gifts committee.

Entertainment for the evening was presented by Carol-Ann Tucker accompanied by Jimmy Aycock. Joe O. Clark, a member of the gift committee, introduced Ms. Tucker. Betty S. Speir, a member of the gift

Prior award recipients have been Ed Waldrop, Dr. Ray Minges, Dr. Fred Haar and Charles Gaskins.

Sharing The Credit

NEW YORK (AP) — Kentucky Gov. Martha Layne Collins, the state's first female chief executive, gave credit where it was due when she received her award as a "role model American mother."

"Without them, I couldn't have made it," said Mrs. Collins, 48, of her son, Steve, 24, and daughter, Marla, 21. "They started traveling with me at ages 6 and 9."

Mrs. Collins was among eight women honored Thursday by the non-profit National Mother's Day Committee, most of whom also were successful in a career.

They included soap opera star Susan Lucci, who plays Erica Kane on "All My Children," mezzo-soprano Frederica Von Stade of the Metropolitan Opera, and astronaut Anna Fisher, who in November became the first American woman to walk in space.

Also receiving awards were Louisa Kennedy, wife of an American who was held hostage in Iran; Sarah Palfrey, former world-class tennis player; Midge Sinclair, TV actress on "Trapper John, M.D."; and Clara Hale, who runs a home for children of drug-addicted mothers.

Senators Propose Farm Transition Payments To Smooth Export Losses

By JIM DRINKARD
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — As the search goes on in Congress for a formula to rescue U.S. agriculture from its economic doldrums, two farm-state senators are proposing an idea guaranteed to at least get noticed.

Sens. Rudy Boschwitz, R-Minn., and David Boren, D-Okla., say they will introduce legislation that includes something called "transition payments" to farmers, to help them survive until their export markets rebound from the current slump.

The payments would be substantial — up to $63,000 per farmer in 1986, declining to a maximum of $31,500 in 1990. And the sponsors conceded that their bill "is not the cheapest farm plan coming down the pike by any means."

The transition payments would be based on a farmer's production of wheat, corn, cotton or rice in the 1984-85 crop year and would use a sliding scale that diminishes the payment rate on larger farms.

Farmers would collect their payments regardless of what they do with their land. If the payment is based on past corn production, for example, a farmer could switch to growing soybeans or even leave it idle and still receive the money each year, Boschwitz said. "It's an up-front, straight cash payment for them to use however they see fit," he said.

The payments represent the most unusual and perhaps the most generous safety net offered in any comprehensive legislation advanced so far in the 1985 farm bill debate.

But like other alternatives before Congress as it labors to draw up a new generation of agriculture policy, the goal of the Boschwitz-Boren plan is to dramatically cut price supports to the point where U.S. farm goods can again compete in world markets. The income guarantee payments would shelter farmers from the initial shock of lower price supports.

"Our farmers want to produce. They want to be competitive, and they can be competitive," Boschwitz said Thursday at a news conference called to outline what he said is the first bipartisan farm bill to be drawn up in the Senate.

Boschwitz said substantial cuts in price-support loan rates would offset the increase in the value of the dollar relative to other world currencies since 1981. That increase has had the effect of hidden tax on U.S. farm exports and has contributed to a marked slide in world market share for major grains.

"Even the Agriculture Department says this would do more to increase farm prices and net farm income than their own proposal," Boren told reporters.

But whether such a plan can work, or any of the other legislation that vests its hope in export recovery, remains an open question. Leading farm economists have been telling policy-makers that the strong dollar and the high support prices are only part of the story. Residual weakness in the world economy and import barriers in many countries make sudden upsurges in exports unlikely, they say.

Neither sponsor could come up with firm cost estimates, although Boschwitz said he had seen figures ranging from around $14.5 billion up to about $18 billion for its 1986 cost. An administration agreement with Senate leaders would allocate about $14.6 billion for price-support programs that year, although that number is far from final.

Consumer Representative Gives Soybean Info

By ROSALIE TROTMAN
Reflector Lifestyle Editor

Linda Behrends travels around the country helping to communicate consumer information and nutrition regarding soybean oil, soybean oil products and consumer food information in general.

Based in St. Louis, Mo., Mrs. Behrends is a consumer representative, American Soybean Association. She shares information through talking with newspapers, food editors, extension home economics and homemakers and also gives food demonstrations. Among her audiences are consumer affairs representatives of grocery chains and food companies.

In addition she edits a newsletter for food communicators and has developed and published numerous recipes.

"I think there is a lot of confusion about oils. Even though we love fried foods, many people avoid frying foods at home because they think that fried foods are greasy and unhealthy. Or they never seem to be able to produce the same tasty results as restaurants and fast food chains. There are a few secrets that once learned will help keep the excess fat in fried foods down and make your foods look and taste just like the ones the pros serve. For instance, choose a bland tasting oil with a high smoke point, fry foods at the correct temperature and be sure that foods are dry and at room temperature," she said.

"We encourage the consumer to read labels — for instance it will enable you to make educated consumer decisions. For example cereal — read the ingredients. You can get a better nutrition buy for your money. If they realize soybean oil is an oil that can be used in making a salad dressing and for frying — they can make one purchase of a product that can be used for the way they prepare food," she said.

"Being an educated consumer benefits you, your family and your pocketbook. The better or nutritional choice isn't necessarily the most expensive product or food. Soybean oil has no cholesterol, it's high in polyunsaturates, light in taste and economical. Today more than 23 percent of the edible oil used in the world is soy oil with the U.S. the principal producer — Brazil is second. Soybeans are a member of the legume family and among the first crops grown by man. Most are grown in the Eastern two-thirds of the U.S. with greatest concentration in the north central states and the Mississippi Delta Region," said Mrs. Behrends.

"There are many ways to use the whole soybean. They can be used as snacks or toppings, sprouted or cooked in the tender green stage. The soybean is an efficient means of producing a low cost, high quality protein. Of the many protein food products made from the soybean, soy flour is the most widely used by the food industry," she added.

"For those calorie conscious individuals, you will be relieved to know that soy oil based salad dressings are calories well spent. Soy oil dressing helps the body utilize Vitamins A, D, E and K and supplies some essential polyunsaturated fatty acids. Like all vegetables, soy oil contains no cholesterol," she said.

"A commonly misunderstood fact is that cholesterol is a necessary nutrient. However, it's important to remember that there are two types of cholesterol. Dietary cholesterol is one kind found in certain animal foods we eat such as meat chicken, fish, eggs, cheese, mild and butter. The second type is the cholesterol made in almost all the tissues of the body, especially in the liver. Cholesterol is related to fat but is not specifically a fat, so its function and excretion from the body are different from fat," she continued. "People over and over ask about cholesterol and where I can get soybean oil — not realizing that it is already on the grocery shelf or at home on the pantry shelf — not realizing that some of their favorite brands most likely are made with soybean oil," she concluded.

Cooking Is Fun

DEAR CECILY: A few years ago you used a recipe for Orange Bread with raisins in it. The recipe called for mixing by hand. I tried adapting it to the food processor, but wasn't successful. The dough was sticky and I ended up kneading it by hand, adding more flour. Have you a food processor recipe for this bread that works? — QUICK AND EASY.

DEAR QUICK AND EASY: We tried the Orange Bread recipe in our food processor and found we needed to reduce the amount of water given in the original recipe. The only hand method we used was to knead in the raisins called for after we took the dough out of the processor. Our processor loaf was more compact than our hand-method one, but it had delicious flavor. I hope you, too, will have success with the following processor recipe. — C.B.

DEAR ABBY: I'm getting married next month to a man who's in the Navy. Three months ago "Charlie" sent me a letter he had received from his mother in which she bad-mouthed my mother something terrible! Our families are worlds apart, and I think Charlie's mother feels inferior and insecure, and has a chip on her shoulder.

I was so shaken when I read that awful letter downgrading my mother, I read it to my parents. Now my mother says that she will not attend my wedding unless Charlie's mother apologizes to her. Charlie's mother says no apology is necessary because she didn't say anything to my mother's face.

I got along fine with Charlie's mother before this happened. Whose fault was it? And what should I do?

IN THE MIDDLE

DEAR IN: If you're looking for someone else to blame, start with Charlie's mother who wrote the letter downgrading your mother. Then blame Charlie for his poor judgment in sending that letter to you. Next blame yourself for reading it to your parents. What should you do? Try to get this family feud resolved so that at the sound of the (church) bell, everybody doesn't come out swinging.

DEAR ABBY: My wife is a fine-looking woman with an outstanding figure. She has never owned a bra and probably never will. She says bras are uncomfortable, she's proud of her figure, and she has nothing to hide. In fact, she wears as little as possible.

I am proud of the way she looks, but my family is not. They have called her a "loose" woman. Well, she is not loose. I like the way she dresses and have personally bought her blouses and sweaters that show off her full figure because I think a little jiggle and bounce under her clothes looks nice.

Tell me the truth, do you think a woman who wears no bra is loose — or is it just my family?

PROUD OF MY WIFE

DEAR PROUD: A "loose" woman is one who is lacking in moral restraint. One who flaunts her full figure is merely lacking in judgment. You obviously care what your family thinks or you wouldn't have written, so to minimize family criticism, minimize the "jiggle and bounce" in the presence of family.

DEAR ABBY: Some years ago I was very much in love with a man who didn't like my youngest son, so I stopped seeing him. Now I have met another man I like very much. He is good to my child, and we have a lot in common.

My problem now is that my older son joined the Navy and left me with Attila, his Great Dane. I live in a small apartment with no fenced yard. Since this Great Dane is little more than a puppy, he can be quite irritating. He's too strong and undisciplined for me to take for walks. My new friend dislikes dogs.

It's almost impossible to find a home for Attila — no one wants such a big animal. Having him put to sleep would make me feel guilty; he's a very sweet-tempered animal.

What on earth should I do? Shall I just wait until my son returns on leave, and let him remove the dog as he sees fit? If I keep him, it will be the end of my romance.

WORRIED SICK
IN SUBURBIA

DEAR WORRIED: Check with your vet about obedience classes for Attila (he's old enough). And try to persuade your friend to go along. Observing how he handles frustration could give you valuable insight into what kind of husband he'll be.

Use The Health Fair

It isn't often this space has an opportunity to do a favor for readers. Today marks one of those infrequent occasions.

We advise ... even urge ... taking advantage of the Health Fair in Greenville on Saturday. It's smart if you think you might have a health problem; and it's just as smart if you think you don't have a health problem. A warning signal apparent only to the trained observer might be there. You can't lose.

The Health Fair is no substitute for a complete physical checkup, but the assembled doctors, nurses and technicians can give (yes, it's free) one a professional health risk appraisal of considerable value.

"Stations" for specific evaluations of potential symptoms make it easier for the visitor to seek out assurance, information or basic advice in a number of targeted concerns. One does not have to run through the entire galaxy of specialized "stations", though we suspect in most cases it's advisable.

There is an optional blood chemistry examination which carries with it a small laboratory fee. This is worth every penny, and perhaps more. If a more thorough level of examination and diagnosis is indicated, the subject will be told.

The beauty of it is that if there are risk signs apparent in the screening process, the individual is provided with an early warning that makes treatment and deterrence of what might become a very serious condition much easier to treat (and cheaper).

It's quite probable there'll be a large turnout; so be prepared to spend some time waiting in line. When one is mentally prepared for that possibility, acceptance is often easier.

Passing the word and encouraging others to share in a good thing is a very small "favor" compared to what people can do for themselves. That is, simply be there and use a good service that is made available to all. You're doing the biggest kind of favor to yourself.

Logical Safeguard

The Supreme Court, at least, recognizes the practical necessities of modern intelligence gathering ... and resultant requirements of preserving a high degree of secrecy in the field.

It runs counter to ideals so many people hold in the principles of an open society. Practicalities carry weight in the American Constitution as well as in the minds of our highest court.

On that basis, 7 of the 9 Justices endorsed the Central Intelligence Agency's powers to keep its intelligence sources secret and free from disclosure under the Freedom of Information Act.

Chief Justice Warren Burger reminded in his opinion that Congress "pointedly protected all sources of intelligence that provide, or are engaged to provide, the information the agency needs to perform its statutory duties with respect to foreign intelligence".

Rather than undermining the public's interests, it appears to us a logical safeguarding of the public's interests.

Plaque Reads: Look Ahead

WASHINGTON (AP) — John Cornelius Stennis sits in a wheel chair, his left leg lost to cancer, his body still bearing the scars of the bullets that nearly killed him a dozen years ago.

Lifting his head like an aging lion, he points to a small plaque in his Senate office that reads, "LOOK AHEAD."

"That's part of my philosophy there. Look ahead," says Stennis, who at 83 is the oldest senator and the most senior, a pillar of military preparedness under eight presidents.

"As a young lawyer I used to have to listen to people lamenting the past. You can't do that. You have to look ahead. ... I realize life's not altogether what you make it. But that's a good part of it. What you make yourself."

The Stennis voice is strong and booms off walls bearing the trophies of a life in politics. It is a voice that has roared countless times in defense of the nation's military budgets.

Stennis was chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee from 1969 until the Republicans took control of the Senate in 1980. He now is the ranking Democrat of the Appropriations committee, serving on its defense subcommittee.

"He's the president's man on defense, always has been, regardless of which party is in power," says a Senate aide. "He always went with the president. He'll always be associated with defense."

In the past, the Stennis voice also was raised vigorously, some would say stridently, in defense of the traditions and institutions of a segregated South.

Stennis was one of the authors of the Southern Manifesto, which condemned the Supreme Court's 1954 school desegregation decision. He voted against civil rights legislation.

But in 1983, Stennis broke the pattern, voting for an extension of the Voting Rights Act.

"I didn't want to go back to all the days of misunderstanding," he said afterward. "I didn't want to turn around and go back."

Today he says he was never against opportunity for anyone, even though he thought his region was being treated unfairly.

"I always rejoiced to see blacks or anyone else have better opportunities," he said. "And I think we've made progress, even though it's not perfect."

A lawyer and a former Mississippi circuit court judge, Stennis has built a reputation for fair mindedness and fair play that transcended political and policy differences with his colleagues. He was the first Democrat to publicly denounce Sen. Joseph R. McCarthy, R-Wis., saying if the Senate failed to censure the Wisconsin Republican "something big and fine will have gone from this chamber."

Stennis had celebrated a quarter century in the Senate when, in the winter of 1973, he was robbed by three men as he returned home from a reception. After taking his wallet, his gold pocket watch and his Phi Beta Kappa key, the robbers pumped two bullets into the 71-year-old senator's stomach and thigh, leaving him bleeding on the sidewalk.

Five hours of surgery were needed to repair a "slivered" pancreas. Full recovery took more than a year.

Senate Democratic leader Robert C. Byrd of West Virginia, who calls Stennis "a senator's senator," recalls turning to a colleague one day and saying, "I'm afraid we've lost John."

President Richard Nixon, emerging from Stennis hospital room, said the senator would survive because, "He's got the will to live in spades."

After his recovery, Stennis said: "It seemed to me I had to make a special effort if I was to survive. I deliberately considered the matter of living or dying. And I made up my mind if I could be useful, I wanted to make the fight to survive, to overcome this thing."

About 12 years later, on Nov. 30, 1984, surgeons at Walter Reed Hospital amputated Stennis' cancer-ridden left leg.

For the first few weeks after the operation, Stennis spent his days in the Senate and his nights in the hospital. Senate carpenters have built a platform to enable Stennis to roll his wheelchair to his desk in the rear of the Senate chamber.

"Discouraged? I suppose everybody's had his ups and downs. But I've never surrendered," Stennis said.

"In many degrees, it's a different world for me," he said. "But people are the same and friends are the same and there are just as many things to be interested in as before."

"Not as much physical activity. But leaving that out, all things are rather much the same. I'm gradually getting back my capacity for work. ... I get physically tired, but I mean, I don't want to throw in the sponge as to facing the problems, and all."

A Stennis spokesman, Rex Buffington, says the senator is increasingly "really back to his old self, really back in the middle of every issue," and that he has moved back to his Capitol Hill apartment full-time.

Buffington says the senator's doctors have assured him that he's "completely clear" of cancer.

Coy Hines Stennis, his wife of 52 years, died two years ago. Associates say that was a harder blow to Stennis than being shot.

But as he sits in his wheel chair, a pile of papers on the table before him, a leather folder in his lap and his aluminum walker on the floor by his side, Stennis wants to talk about the present — and the future.

"I'm just like a wound-up clock," he says, grinning over an expanse of white starched shirt front. His cufflinks display the Great Seal of the United States. His gold lapel pin bears the single word, "Mississippi."

"Things are boiling up here," he tells an interviewer. "We're a long ways from home on this financial thing, these deficits. We've got to change our ways. Keep that money more in balance."

"Yes, going to be a lot of hair pulling here this year. It's hard going."

The conversation ranges from his parents' childhood memories of the Civil War — "they helped bury the family silver" — to the Depression — "every time you saw a line of people on the street you knew another bank had failed, banks were popping all over the country."

"How would I like to be remembered? I haven't thought about that a whole lot," Stennis says. "You couldn't give me a finer compliment than to just say, 'He did his best.' I get satisfaction about doing the best I can, and if that best doesn't turn out well enough, you still have that personal satisfaction."

Grassley had almost nothing good to say about Reagan (save for one fleeting acknowledgement that his policies had brought the Soviets back to the nuclear bargaining table) and absolutely nothing bad whatever to say about Democrats. That song elicits bravos, not boos, in Iowa today — not even a hint of disapproval during continuous contact with voters here.

Grassley's rising popularity as the president's falls in the state of his young manhood spells the folly of the threatened White House reprisals against the senator's re-election campaign next year. But more significantly, it points to the political futility of the administration's semi-austerity program designed by budget director David Stockman.

Stockman's attempt to cut farm price supports in the midst of rural deflation only drove erstwhile strong (78 percent) Reagan-backer Grassley into near-total opposition on budget votes from defense to school loans. When White House aides threatened political reprisals, the senator responded with what Meredith Wilson called "Iowa stubborn" in "The Music Man."

Since the threats, Grassley has not flinched and nobody at the White House has tried to make up. He broke party lines to oppose the MX missile, may vote against aid to the Nicaraguan freedom fighters and, as a Finance Committee member, exhibits precious little enthusiasm for the Reagan tax reform.

"I have had no trouble with the president," he told the Sioux City Press Club. "The people in the White House have had trouble with me." But not much about Reagan satisfies him. "The president has been part of the problem up to now, because he didn't have the guts to take on Social Security and thinks defense is a sacred cow."

The Pentagon's cutoff of payments to General Dynamics, long a Grassley target, won faint praise. In an interview with KCAU-TV, he called it "two years too late" and expressed doubt "there will be adequate follow-up."

Singles Gipper-bashing became doubles when Gov. Terry Branstad, another conservative Republican whose political stock has risen since he broke with the administration, testified before Grassley's one-man Senate Judiciary Subcommittee hearing here. Thousands of financially ruined Iowa farmers "would have made it if the administration had kept its word" about guaranteeing farm credit, the governor testified. "I urge you, Chuck, to build pressure in Congress to force the administration to keep its word."

Nobody came to the administration's defense. Instead, as the subcommittee hearing began, Grassley was presented with a hand-written letter signed by 56 voters urging him not to bow to "political pressure ... from the president to change your views." He is not about to. The procession of voters who volunteered to him that they will vote for him in 1986 for the first time suggests Grassley will surmount Iowa's economic misery to become one of the state's infrequent two-term senators.

Grassley's Gipper-bashing permits him to steer clear of the debris from Republican political deterioration in the Farm Belt. "These are people I voted for," a distraught Jim Sheehan, president of the Farmers Savings Bank in Pierson and a self-described Republican, testified at Grassley's hearing in expressing his dismay over the Reagan administration.

—Elisha Douglas— Strength For Today

Suicide!
This is a most disagreeable subject, but one which needs to be discussed because it is a daily occurrence, a great national problem.

The temptation to "end it all" has a fascinating appeal for many people when they confront situations which appear too horrifying, sorrowful or burdensome to be endured. But every life has its troubles, and it is largely by the trial and frustration of these that God is preparing us for fellowship with him in an eternal and cosmic enterprise. So don't spoil it. "Eye hath not seen, neither hath ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him" (1 Corinthians 2:9).

And remember, you did not create life and you have no right to destroy it. It is God's gift to be cherished and to be given to him again with increase and improvement.

—Art Buchwald—

Rejection Was Hasty

I had no objection to President Reagan turning down Mikhail Gorbachev's suggestion that the West join the Soviets in a freeze on medium-range nuclear weapons. What did bother me was the haste in which it was done.

The words were hardly out of Gorbachev's mouth when the Western White House rejected it as a dirty commie trick. One got the impression the Reagan administration was more furious with the freeze than if the Soviet premier had announced he was going to double the number of SS-20s on the Soviet border.

There is no question in my mind that Mikhail was making a grandstand play for the benefit of the NATO countries.

Yet if disarmament is a game — and everyone knows it is — it would have been much better for our side if Mr. Reagan did not react so predictably.

Had the president responded immediately that he was "very interested" in the Gorbachev proposal and wanted to "fine-tune" it, this is what probably would have happened in the Kremlin.

"Comrade Number One — this just in from Santa Barbara. President Reagan thinks your offer to freeze the SS-20s is a very generous one and he is glad you put it on the table."

"What are you saying, Marshal Potemkin? If Reagan likes my plan there must be something wrong with it."

"Our intelligence people have come to same conclusion. They are perplexed that Reagan would jump at it so fast. Our scenario was that the president would dismiss your proposal and attack us for maintaining a 10-to-1 missile superiority. Then we would attack him for wanting to keep the arms race going, thereby winning the hearts and minds of the West European population."

"I'm aware of what our scenario was, Marshal. What I want to know is why Reagan is in favor of it."

"Our people now have theory that there are a lot more Pershing missiles in Europe than the United States will admit to, and if the Americans agreed to a freeze at this time it would give them an 8-to-1 advantage over us."

"Now you tell me. Why didn't you know this before I made an offer to freeze our missiles?"

"Our KGB people in Washington assured us that the White House would denounce your offer because it would endanger their request for an increased military budget. The fact the president didn't can only mean we've underestimated number of nuclear weapons United States has aimed at us. It shows you why we can't trust the Americans. They're always crying they are behind in missiles — when the true fact is they are ahead."

"What do I do if Reagan agrees to freeze his weapons? Should I say our freeze is off?"

"No, Comrade Number One. That would make it appear we believe the Americans are stronger than we are. What you must do is to improve on your offer of a freeze by making a unilateral reduction in weapons. This will scare the West. They will be certain the only reason we're doing it is that we have so many missiles we can afford to reduce our nuclear arsenal without endangering our defense. Reagan will have to publicly say it's a trip and denounce us for it. And then we'll be known in Western Europe as the peacemakers."

"That's what you said before my freeze speech. Suppose he doesn't denounce me and says he's glad to see my offer on the table? How long do I have to keep disarming Mother Russia to show how strong we really are?"

"Until Reagan cries 'Uncle.'"

Three students at East Carolina University are the recipients of 1985 Ledonia Wright Scholarships, which are provided from a fund established in honor of a deceased member of the social work faculty.

The scholarships are awarded on the basis of academic achievement and financial need. Each recipient was given $200.

Recipients were Caroline Haynes of Fayetteville, a junior nursing major; Darlene Jacqueline Keene of Ahoskie, a first-year medical student, and Alisa Tjuan Boykin of Clinton, a graduate student in speech, language and auditory pathology.

Funds for the scholarships are raised at an annual scholarship benefit sponsored by the Organization of Black Faculty and Staff and the Black Alumni Association in cooperation with local citizens.

Man Found Fatally Ill In Commons Area

Theodore Richard Lites, 30, of 107 Raleigh Ave. died about 8:50 p.m. Thursday in Pitt County Memorial Hospital after being found unconscious on the Town Common about 5:30 p.m. Police said Lites died of cardiac arrest possibly caused by an overdose of prescription drugs.

Officer B.D. Dobbs said police, responding to a call reporting a man lying under a bush at the Town Common between First Street and the Tar River, found Lites "in a standing position ... leaning into the bushes ... unconscious." According to Dobbs, the limbs of the bush were supporting Lites.

Lites' "pulse stopped as the rescue truck pulled up," Dobbs said, and Greenville Fire-Rescue Department employees began cardiopulmonary resuscitation and took Lites to the hospital.

Dobbs said Lites' roommate reported him missing shortly after police arrived at the hospital to continue their investigation. The roommate told police officials that he feared Lites had taken an overdose of prescription drugs because two empty pill bottles had been found in the house.

Dobbs said physicians who treated Dobbs in the hospital's emergency department listed the cause of death as cardiac arrest as a result of a suspected overdose, but the officer said tests were being performed to confirm the diagnosis.

RAPTOR HELPS TEACH — East Carolina University senior Nancy Rogers and her friend, Sigmund, above, prepare for a senior seminar given as part of the resource management curriculum in ECU's Leisure Systems studies program. The sight of a student walking through hallways with a huge raptor — better known as a bird of prey — perched on her wrist is not a common sight. But the resource management major, whose minor is biology, is doing an internship with the Carolina Raptor Center located near Charlotte. As part of her job, the Bristol, Tenn., native takes Sigmund to classrooms throughout the state teaching students the value of conservation of birds of prey. Sigmund, a 2-year-old Red Tail Hawk, was taken to the center after having been shot in its right wing. If it had fully recovered, it would have been released back into the wild, as is the policy of the center. Since it can no longer fly, however, it is content to do its traveling in an automobile with Ms. Rogers — as long as a squirt bottle of water is nearby (right). LBJ Aides Say 'Great Society' Worked

By MICHAEL HOLMES
 Associated Press Writer
 AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Millions of Americans gained from the Great Society, and the current criticism of the efficiency of Lyndon Johnson's anti-poverty programs is unearned, former federal officials said at a symposium on its accomplishments.

"What Lyndon Johnson did to his great, I think imperishable, credit was to get the majority to discriminate on behalf of the minority," said R. Sargent Shriver, one-time Johnson aide and 1972 Democratic vice presidential candidate.

"The minority were human beings just like the majority, and this country can only prevail when we're united — rich and poor. He stood for that," said Shriver, who spoke Thursday at the two-day meeting looking at the Great Society 20 years later.

Participants were examining the War on Poverty and the civil rights, education and health legislation passed during Johnson's administration, some of which now is being criticized as costly and ineffective. The sessions are sponsored by the University of Texas and its Lyndon B. Johnson School of Public Affairs.

Shriver said today's "Reagan Revolution" is different from the social change wrought under Johnson's leadership: "What President Reagan is doing is catering to the majority, who are well-to-do, at the expense of the minority who are poor."

Since 1979, he said, the number of poor people in this country has increased by 9 million. To reverse the trend, many people must be convinced that the rugged individualist doesn't have all the answers, he said.

"I think that we've got, somehow or other, to convince Americans that John Wayne and individualism are not the only symbols of our society," Shriver said.

While some conservative critics now say the Great Society cost too much and did too little, proof of its success easily can be found in the achievements of young people who were helped by the programs, said former U.S. Rep. Barbara Jordan, who also spoke at the symposium.

"These programs were not mere words, friends; there are flesh-and-blood examples of what these programs meant. The legacy of Lyndon Johnson continues to enrich our lives," she said.

"He saw the enemy, and the enemy was not government. The enemy was ignorance, poverty, disease, ugliness, injustice, discrimination. He believed that it was the duty of government to defeat the enemy."

The Great Society was the benchmark of Johnson's presidency, Ms. Jordan said, adding that Head Start, for preschoolers, and the Job Corps training programs were sparkling high points.

"Even though the Job Corps right now is being threatened by the budget ax, we cannot ignore that many who otherwise would not have been helped were helped," she said.

"He did not simply say, 'Let's provide children with better education and the unemployed with jobs.' Lyndon Johnson wanted to prepare children to receive an education. He wanted to provide those without work (with) employability."

James Farmer, founder of the Congress of Racial Equality, said Johnson's presidency improved the self-image of millions of people and gave them hope because "there was a man in the White House who really cared."

Reagan Sticking To Proposal To Visit German Cemetery

By W. DALE NELSON
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, saying he will not cave in and cancel a visit to a German cemetery where Nazi SS soldiers are buried, is preparing to meet face to face with a Jewish leader who says the president has brought "pain and shame" to Americans.

Reagan was scheduled to present the Congressional Gold Medal today to Elie Wiesel, a survivor of two Nazi concentration camps and chairman of the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Commission. The White House ceremony was arranged before the uproar about Reagan's planned cemetery visit.

At a ceremony at the Capitol on Thursday marking the 40th anniversary of the liberation of Jews from concentration camps at the end of World War II, Wiesel said he understood the administration's efforts to "deal delicately with German sensitivities."

"But what about American sensibility?" he asked "Did no one consider the pain and the shame some, if not most Americans, would feel upon learning that the president of the United States, for whom we have genuine admiration and affection, plans to visit a cemetery in which there are a good number of SS graves?"

Wiesel said in an interview Thursday that he had been weighing whether to have the event postponed or to go ahead with it and use the occasion to reiterate his opposition of the cemetery visit in person.

But this morning, on the "CBS Morning News," Wiesel said he would attend the ceremony.

"I will accept with gratitude the medal given to me by the American people, by the Congress, and I will express that gratitude."

He also said he would have other remarks to make in accepting the award, but did not say what they would be.

The White House said Reagan would use the ceremony to call for observance of Jewish Heritage Week.

Reagan, speaking to editors and broadcasters at a White House luncheon, said he had no plans to cancel the visit to the small military cemetery in the southwestern German town of Bitburg.

"I think that it would be very hurtful and all it would do is leave me looking as if I caved in on the face of some unfavorable attention," the president said.

He conceded that some of the 2,000 or so graves in the cemetery are those of SS troops — "the villains, as we know, that conducted the persecutions and all."

But he said most of them were youths about 18 of age "drafted into service to carry out the hateful wishes of the Nazis." In a dispatch from Bitburg, Associated Press Writer Mark Heinrich said examination of the gravestones showed that 47 carried SS markings but many of the other soldiers were teen-agers.

Speaking of the young draftees, Reagan said, "They were victims, just as surely as the victims in the concentration camps."

His remark touched off a new wave of protest.

"For the president of the United States to equate the soldiers who died in an attempt to subjugate the world to an unconscionable ideology with those who were the tragic victims of the implementation of that ideology is morally unconscionable and politically outrageous," said Rabbi David Saperstein, director of the Religious Action Center of Reform Judaism.

"I am flabbergasted at the continued insensitivity and shocked at the lack of historical perspective," said Abraham H. Foxman, associate national director of the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith.

Wiesel and the Holocaust commission, appointed by Reagan, sent the president a telegram expressing shock and adding, "If no immediate correction is offered by you, it will mean you see no difference between war and genocide."

In Los Angeles, the Simon Wiesenthal Center issued a statement saying it was "an unmitigated moral outrage" for West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl to suggest a visit to Bitburg, where many veterans of the Battle of the Bulge are buried.

"It is inconceivable why a man of President Reagan's proven commitment and sensitivity continues to fail to recognize this gross error in judgment," the statement said.

The president said Bitburg was picked because it is near a U.S. base, at which the president plans to attend church service with the troops.

Democrats in both houses of Congress introduced resolutions urging Reagan to drop the cemetery stop from his schedule. Rep. Dick Gephardt, D-Mo., called it "an affront to all Americans."

The furor over his planned Bitburg visit compelled Reagan to announce this week that he would visit a concentration camp site also, despite previous statements that he thought doing so would unnecessarily open old wounds.

Reagan aides Michael K. Deaver and William Henkel were returning from Germany and meeting today with the president to decide whether Reagan will visit Dachau or some other concentration camp site.

In Bonn as in Washington, opposition party spokesmen criticized the cemetery visit.

Annemarie Renger, a Social Democrat who is vice president of the lower house of the West German Parliament, called the affair "a disgraceful spectacle."

In Bitburg, however, Mayor Theo Hallet said: "I don't see why people should be upset if the president comes. Our people say, let the dead lie in peace."

Mayor Says 'Astonished At Protest

BITBURG, West Germany (AP) — The mayor says he is mystified by international criticism of President Reagan's plans to lay a wreath at Bitburg's military cemetery, where American military officers have attended memorial services for years.

"I don't see why people should be upset if the president comes," Mayor Theo Hallet said Thursday.

Reagan has been criticized in the United States and other countries for planning to lay a wreath at the cemetery, which contains 47 graves of Nazi SS elite guards, during a visit to West Germany May 1-6.

The president initially decided not to visit a former Nazi concentration camp to pay tribute to Nazi victims. But after an outburst of criticism, Reagan is expected to visit Dachau or some other concentration camp.

"Our people cannot comprehend this macabre row over the soldiers who fell 40 years ago," Hallet has written in a letter to U.S. Ambassador Arthur Burns.

About 2,000 German soldiers are buried in the cemetery. Most of them died fighting the Americans and their allies in World War II, but there are graves of 100 soldiers killed in World War I.

Hallet, 63, said he has written to Burns twice in the past week to encourage Reagan to proceed with his plans to visit the cemetery.

The cemetery is in a residential area of the southwestern West German town of 25,000. Four-thousand airmen are stationed at the nearby U.S. Air Force base and 11,000 Americans live in the town.

"Our people say, let the dead lie in peace. After 40 years, one can't X-ray the graves to distinguish whether they were fanatic defenders of the Third Reich or just defenders of the fatherland," Hallet said.

Most of the graves are of German soldiers killed in the December 1944 Battle of the Bulge, the last major German assault of World War II. The gravestones, which carry the names, companies, and dates of birth and death, indicate many of the soldiers were teen-agers.

Nineteen-thousand Americans were killed in the fighting, which leveled Bitburg and damaged other cities in the area.

Hallet, who served on the Russian Front in World War II, said American, French and West German military officers have held a memorial service at the cemetery annually since 1959 to pay respects to the dead of both world wars, as well as victims of Nazism.

"The SS symbol makes us remember the horrors of the war, and causes the sensitivities, I know," he said. "But these people were soldiers, not concentration camp guards. In addition, most of them were pulled into service at the end of the war and were just children."

In Bonn, Annemarie Renger, vice president of the lower house of Parliament and a member of the opposition Social Democratic Party, on Thursday called the controversy over the visit a "disgraceful spectacle."

Reagan aides Michael K. Deaver and William Henkel were meeting today with the president in Washington to decide which of several sites of concentration camps will be included on Reagan's schedule.

West German government sources said Deaver this week visited the site of the Dachau concentration camp, near Munich; the site of the Flossenbuerg concentration camp, not far from the East German border in Bavaria; and the Jewish synagogue in Worms, south of Frankfurt.

Franz Schoenhuber, a deputy chairman of the small Republican Party and a former Nazi SS sergeant, praised Reagan's plans to visit the cemetery and said the trip will honor SS soldiers who died in action.

Bonn government officials said the German Republican Party was "not representative" of the government or the German people.

Polish Policemen File New Appeals

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Lawyers for four secret policemen found guilty in connection with the kidnaping and murder of a pro-Solidarity priest appealed to the Supreme Court for new trials today, blaming each other's clients for the incident. The opening day of the appeal, which is expected to take two or three days to hear, was marked by sharp verbal clashes among lawyers for the officers found guilty in connection with the abduction and killing last October of the Rev. Jerzy Popieluszko. Polish authorities issued three passes to Western correspondents to attend the Supreme Court session, but denied access to The Associated Press. Reporters in the courtroom provided the AP with their notes. A lawyer for Col. Adam Pietruszka, who received a 25-year prison for aiding and abetting his three subordinates, said his client was innocent and asked the judges to overturn the Feb. 7 verdict by a court in the northern city of Torun. Lawyers for the other three officers — Capt. Grzegorz Piotrowski, and Lts. Leszek Pekala and Waldemar Chmielewski — claiming their clients killed Popieluszko unintentionally, and that they wrongly were convicted of premeditated murder.

Mantegna Work Sells For Record

LONDON (AP) — The J. Paul Getty Museum of Malibu, Calif., has paid a world record price of $10.45 million for "The Adoration of the Magi," a painting by Italian Renaissance artist Andrea Mantegna.

But Timothy Clifford, director of the National Gallery of Scotland in Edinburgh, said after the Thursday bidding that he would try to block the necessary export license and start a fund-raising effort because he thought the almost-500-year-old painting was part of Britain's heritage.

"That is my opportunity to come in and match the sum of money the Getty Museum has paid," said Clifford.

The work, painted around the year 1500 in tempera and oil on linen laid on canvas, is 21½ inches high and 27¾ inches wide. Its subtle brown and gold colors show the three wise men bringing gifts to the Christ child, with Mary holding the infant and Joseph standing behind her.

It had been on loan to the National Museum of Wales in Cardiff since 1980.

Tim Bathurst of Artemis Fine Arts Ltd., a London gallery, represented the Getty museum in the bidding at the London auction house Christie's.

Bathurst said he expected the export license to be delayed. But he defended the sale by saying, "I don't think it is necessary for England. We have four Mantegnas, and the ones in Hampton Court (palace, on the River Thames west of London) are marvelous."

The auction in a salesroom packed with 250 people was seen by bidders in New York via a satellite television link.

The previous record auction price for a painting was $10.023 million for British artist J.M.W. Turner's "Seascape: Folkestone." It sold at Sotheby's in London on July 5, 1984.

Auctioneer Patrick Lindsay predicted that the export license for the Mantegna painting would be held up by three to six months. But he said he was not upset about the painting leaving Britain.

"People talk about our heritage, and I am all for protecting it. We were very rich once and were able to get things from all over the world," Lindsay said. "Now the United States is richer, and now they have got it, an Italian painting we have had for 100 years. If it can't stay here, it has gone to a very good home."

There were no British bidders, he said.

The Getty museum was heavily endowed by the late oil magnate J. Paul Getty.

Thursday's bidding opened at the equivalent of $3.87 million and went up by leaps of $258,000 and $387,000 to the final price, which includes an 8 percent buyer's commission.

The Marquess of Northampton, Spencer D.D. Compton, sold the painting to raise money for repairs on his two Tudor mansions.

Democrats Force Vote

WASHINGTON (AP) — House Democrats, confident they can defeat President Reagan's plan for $14 million in aid to Nicaraguan rebels, are spurning a proposed Republican compromise and forcing a showdown vote next week.

The Democratic leadership Thursday rejected a GOP concession that would have limited the $14 million to non-lethal supplies, but would still have funneled the assistance through the CIA, which has aided the Contras in their war against Nicaragua's leftist government since 1981.

White House spokesman Larry Speakes said today Reagan has agreed in principle to legislation limiting aid to non-lethal supplies for the balance of this fiscal year, ending Sept. 30. He said details had not been worked out but "we have agreed in principle with members of the Senate and with individuals with whom we have talked in the House."

"The CIA is not a humanitarian outfit," said Christopher Matthews, a spokesman for House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr. Matthews added that the proposed aid would amount to military logistical support.

The Democratic alternative, which was slated for a vote after action on Reagan's plan Tuesday, would provide $5 million for humanitarian aid for the Contras and other Nicaraguan exiles, but distribute the assistance through the Red Cross or some other independent refugee relief agency.

The plan, sponsored by Reps. Michael Barnes, D-Md., and Lee Hamilton, D-Ind., also would set aside $9 million for use by Latin American nations to implement a possible peace settlement in Nicaragua.

"We're trying to put the United States firmly in support of the peace efforts of the Latin Americans themselves," Barnes told the House Rules Committee before the panel decided to ship the competing proposals to the House floor. House Republicans also will be given a chance to propose an alternative plan.

Facts About The BIBLE BY JOHN LEHTI

THE EVIL OF BLASPHEMY!

BLASPHEMY, THE INTENTIONAL REVILING AND CURSING OF GOD, OR THE KING, WHO WAS GOD'S REPRESENTATIVE, WAS PUNISHABLE BY MANDATORY DEATH IN BIBLE TIMES! UNDER THE OLD MOSAIC LAW, DEATH WAS ACCOMPLISHED BY STONING THE MISCREANT! (LEV. 24:16) IN THE OLD TESTAMENT, THERE IS ONLY ONE ACCOUNT OF A CASE OF BLASPHEMY--AND THAT INVOLVED A MAN WHO WAS ONLY PART ISRAELITE, FOR HIS FATHER WAS AN EGYPTIAN (LEV. 24:10-16) THERE WERE SAFEGUARDS IN THE LAW SO THAT ONE COULDN'T BE WRONGLY CHARGED OF THIS CRIME. BLASPHEMY HAD TO BE WITNESSED BY MORE THAN ONE ACCUSER! NEVERTHELESS, FALSE ACCUSATIONS WERE MADE AGAINST NABOTH IN THE OLD TESTAMENT (1 KINGS 21:1-13) AND STEPHEN IN THE NEW TESTAMENT (ACTS 6:8-14) AND JESUS OF NAZARETH ON MANY OCCASIONS (MATT. 9:3, 26:65-66) (JOHN 10:36) IN THE CASES OF NABOTH AND STEPHEN, THE VILLAINOUS FALSE ACCUSERS WERE SUCCESSFUL IN THEIR CLAIMS AND BOTH MEN WERE PUT TO DEATH BY STONING! IN THE CASE OF JESUS, ALTHOUGH THE PRIESTS AND THE PHARISEES AND SADDUCEES CHARGED HIM WITH BLASPHEMY, AND ON SEVERAL OCCASIONS LARGE CROWDS PICKED UP STONES, INTENDING TO KILL HIM, HE ALWAYS ESCAPED THIS FATE--"THAT THE SCRIPTURES MIGHT BE FULFILLED"!

Catholics Protest 'Hostile' Posters

NEW YORK (AP) — Workers linked to an Arkansas evangelist have hung thousands of "hostile anti-Catholic" posters in more than 18 states in the past month, according to Catholic and Jewish anti-defamation groups.

The poster distributors — including 13 people arrested in five communities — work for evangelist Tony Alamo, who says the pope is behind a Nazi conspiracy, according to the Catholic League for Religious and Civil Rights.

The posters express "as vicious and hostile anti-Catholic sentiments as we have seen," said Carol Lister of the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith.

In a telephone interview, Alamo refused to say whether the distributors were following his orders, but added: "I agree with the posters 100 percent" and said he would help the alleged distributors pay court costs.

"The Vatican is trying to make a federal case out of people putting these things up on walls," he said. The men were "supposed to just pass them out by hand ... but they got overzealous."

Four teams of two or three men each were arrested last month for illegally hanging posters on buildings in Chattanooga, Tenn., Jefferson City, Mo., Portsmouth, Va., and Wildwood, N.J., police said.

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market was narrowly mixed today as traders cautiously evaluated the economic outlook.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials crept ahead .33 to 1,265.46 in the first half hour.

Losers took an 8-7 lead over gainers in the early tally of New York Stock Exchange-listed issues.

The market got off to a strong start Thursday, but then retreated to finish with its first clear-cut loss in more than a week. Analysts said the downturn appeared to signal increasing concern that the economy was losing momentum.

The government's report that the gross national product grew at an unexpectedly low 1.3 percent inflation-adjusted annual rate in the first quarter sent interest rates tumbling, and thus drew a brief favorable response from stock traders.

But their enthusiasm soon gave way to worries that the pace of growth in business activity and corporate profits would remain subpar in the months ahead.

Brokers also noted that investors were proceeding cautiously today with some options and futures on stock indexes reaching their expiration date. In some recent months, complex maneuvers by professional traders involving the options and futures and the big-name blue chip stocks have touched off sharp swings in the stocks' prices as the options and futures approached expiration.

Among actively traded blue chips, American Telephone & Telegraph rose 1/8 to 21 1/8; International Business Machines was unchanged at 127 1/2, and General Motors dropped 3/8 to 70 1/2.

On Thursday the Dow Jones industrial average fell 7.18 to 1,265.13.

Declines outpaced advances by about 6 to 5 on the NYSE.

Big Board volume totaled 100.64 million shares, up from 96.02 million in the previous session.

for anemia and sickle cell anemia. For a fee, another station offers an optional blood chemistry exam which screens for diabetes, kidney and liver disease, triglycerides, cholesterol and other blood components. A coronary risk profile is also available for a fee.

Those who wish the blood chemistry exam should not eat for four hours before the test to insure accurate results. Those who want a coronary risk profile screening should not eat for 12 hours prior to the test.

"The Health Fair is a quick way to get screened for a lot of common health problems," says Madge McGrath, assistant professor in Medical Technology, whose students are among the volunteers. "Screening procedures are set up to let people know if they need further testing."

"We're not saying come out here instead of going to the doctor," says Ms. Vail-Smith. "The Health Fair is set up to make people more aware of their health and how they can assume more responsibility for taking care of themselves." One of the goals of the Health Fair is to reinforce the need for a regular physical exam. Physicians at the Fair will refer individuals to local health, social and community resources if needed.

Ms. Vail-Smith believes that through the health education exhibits offered at the Fair and the screenings for various risk factors, participants can be motivated to make positive lifestyle changes that will lead to a healthier life.

rain clouds near the landing strip prompted Mission Control to instruct them to stay up one extra circuit of the globe. The clouds moved away and Discovery was told to come home.

President Reagan and Garn, who was aboard as a congressional observer, had high praise Thursday for the astronauts' efforts.

Reagan, speaking to Discovery from the White House, told the crew it had "demonstrated a lot of ingenuity" in constructing makeshift tools, taking an unplanned space walk and flying to a rendezvous to try saving the powerless satellite launched from the ship's cargo bay Saturday.

Syncom could not be fixed because a switch which ground engineers thought was in the wrong position was not at fault. The astronauts had concentrated on moving that switch after tracking down the satellite in space.

"We know you had some frustrations up there, but overall I think we can be proud of the fourth mission of Discovery and all that you've accomplished," Reagan said.

Among the accomplishments: successful deployment of a second communications satellite, for Telesat of Canada; medical experiments which could provide insights into why many astronauts suffer space motion sickness; production of an undisclosed drug that could benefit millions of people; and a demonstration of the flexibility of the shuttle system.

Garn, a Utah Republican and chairman of an appropriations subcommittee that oversees the budget with a budget this year of $299,166; County Planning and Engineering is asking for $57,466 compared with $58,720 this year; and buildings and grounds is asking for $701,890 in the coming year — including six new positions (more than $78,900) and $70,000 more for the cost of electricity — which is $182,937 more than the present budget of $518,953.

Walter Gould, superintendent of buildings and grounds, told the board that the new employees are necessary if his department is to continue its involvement in construction projects.

The proposed solid waste budget for 1985-86 of $761,214 is $10,800 less than the present $775,746 budget, although two new employees were requested — a master equipment operator and a site patrol officer to help enforce the county's solid waste ordinance. The requested budget also includes $90,000 for a track loader and $75,000 to install compactors at the Farmville, Ayden-Grifton and Bethel container sites.

County money requested to help fund Sheppard Memorial Library's 1985-86 proposed budget of $686,368 ($599,107 this year) amount to $164,958 ($145,380 this year).

Library director Willie Nelms, reminding the board that the library budget is funded one-third by the county and two-thirds by the city, said the requests for 1985-86 includes money for three new full-time-equivalent positions, as well as $23,600 for anti-theft equipment.

Nelms said the anti-theft equipment would help prevent "shrinkage" in the library's book inventory, which he estimated at about $10,000 a year.

Another budget workshop session has been scheduled for 10 a.m. April 24.

of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, said in a news conference from space Thursday that his months of training and week in space had given him a unique insight into the workings of the agency.

"I have gained knowledge that not only will be invaluable to me but to the Congress as well," he said. "I have watched a fantastic crew do an incredibly good job under difficult circumstances."

Garn said the crew "never gave up trying to save that satellite," and praised astronauts Dave Griggs and Jeff Hoffman for their spacewalk to rig the robot arm with the makeshift tools and Margaret Rhea Seddon for manipulating the robot arm to snag Syncom's power switch.

"I am certainly sorry that the Syncom did not work, but it certainly has shown me a side of NASA and what these professional crews can do under very unusual circumstances," Garn said. "It proves to me that man is needed in space and has a great role to play in the future."

Tulane Board Votes To End Cage Program

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — A member of Tulane University's Board of Administrators said basketball may not be forever dead at the school, despite the unanimous vote by the group Thursday to end the program.

Tulane President Eamon Kelly called for the abolition of the 72-year-old basketball program in the wake of a point-shaving scandal and the admission by Coach Ned Fowler that he had paid at least one player on a fairly regular basis, in violation of NCAA rules.

Two players are under indictment on sports bribery charges. Another has pleaded guilty to a gambling conspiracy, and two more are testifying against their former teammates. Five others were indicted in the alleged point-shaving scheme — three students, a convicted book-maker and an alleged courier for bribe money.

Fowler, Athletic Director Hindman Wall and two assistant basketball coaches resigned. None was implicated in the point-shaving scandal, and Wall has denied knowledge of any of the infractions.

Kelly said he wanted basketball dropped permanently to show how strongly Tulane is committed to academic excellence and athletic integrity.

But board member W. Kennon "Kent" McWilliams said Thursday that he feels Kelly may reconsider his stance and reinstate basketball, if stringent guidelines can be established and followed.

"My only disagreement with him was when he attached that 'permanent' to it and didn't leave us any room to correct a mistake," McWilliams said.

He said he voted for dropping the sport, but only after he felt that Kelly and the other board members might consider reviving it later.

He said he voted more happily on Kelly's request for a special blue-ribbon panel to study whether Tulane should continue in Division I-A athletics and under what terms. That request also passed by a unanimous vote on Thursday.

"I told them that after the studies and all — everything — we are going to double our efforts and we are going to end up with a program that suits the academic program at Tulane," McWilliams said.

"We are going to re-earn our credibility and we'll be back to them."

He said he doesn't feel Kelly would be in favor of dropping down to a lower NCAA classification to ease pressure on admission standards and recruiting.

"I believe that what he has in mind is something more on the order of Stanford, or Vanderbilt or Duke, and they're all fine schools that have been pretty successful," he said.

He said it was a good sign that Kelly announced his intention to ask the Division I-A basketball-centered Metro Conference to permit Tulane to remain a member despite its lack of a basketball program.

Meanwhile, Metro Conference Commissioner Steve Hatchell, in an interview with ABC radio sports, indicated that nothing has been decided.

"The thing at this point is that the conference has not had the chance to sit down and say 'what do we want to do,'" Hatchell said. "And one of the real viable possibilities that is being overlooked tremendously is the fact that the conference may very well not expand."

McWilliams is chairman of Tulane's committee on intercollegiate athletics and one of the biggest financial backers of the school's sports program.

He said Thursday that Fowler gave players small sums of money out of compassion and not out of any desire to buy a winning team. One of the players who got money from Fowler, McWilliams said, was star center John "Hot Rod" Williams, who is accused of point shaving along with point guard David Dominique.

"He (Fowler) told me, 'Mr. Mac, I got involved. John had a baby; he is from a welfare family, in terrible shape, and his house burned down,'" McWilliams said.

He said that Fowler admitted helping players survive emergencies by dipping into his pockets for small sums, but denied making any regular payments to any of them until Williams got into trouble.

He said Fowler also denied ever paying Williams or anyone else to sign with Tulane. McWilliams said he could not estimate how much money Williams got and didn't know what other players might have been paid. He also said he didn't know whether there had been payments to players from other sources.

Some, he said, got money from Fowler to tide them over a holiday period when the dormitories and cafeterias were closed and they had to stay on campus.

"Take it from Fowler's point of view: it would be hard not to help a kid with a $10 or $20 bill under those circumstances," McWilliams said.

The NCAA forbids such payments, and Fowler knew it, he said.

"I told him, 'You meant well, but you did wrong, and you've got to pay the piper.' But the rules need to be changed," McWilliams said. "They (such payments) should be a regular part of a scholarship."

"The school owes these kids some way to get over these impossible NCAA rules," he said.

Showboats Worried About Generals' Walker, Flutie

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — Coach Pepper Rodgers says his Memphis Showboats were worried about more than quarterback Doug Flutie as they prepared for tonight's meeting with the New Jersey Generals.

"We have to stop Herschel Walker before we worry about Flutie," Rodgers said. "We have to stop Herschel from pounding us in the dirt."

Flutie won the Heisman Trophy because of his passing ability, but Rodgers said he wanted the 5-foot-9 quarterback to pass.

If Flutie passes often, that means Walker is being contained, Rodgers said.

The game will be Flutie's second appearance in Memphis, but his first as a pro.

And tonight's reception at Liberty Bowl Memorial Stadium is bound to be decidedly warmer than it was when Flutie and Boston College lost to Notre Dame in the 1983 Liberty Bowl.

During a telephone interview with Memphis sports writers this week, Flutie recalled that frigid Liberty Bowl night when the temperature plummeted toward zero and fans built fires in the stands.

Tonight's weather forecast called for 75-degree temperatures at game time, and the fans will be welcoming the Generals' quarterback with 10,000 kazooos.

"We're calling them 'magic fluties,' and we want the fans to play for Flutie when he comes out on the field and at appropriate times during the game," said Showboats public relations director Rudi Schiffer.

The kazooos were provided by a Memphis bank which is also buying a large block of tickets for resale to its customers.

The Showboats, 4-4, are coming off a 13-10 overtime upset of Baltimore while the Generals are 5-3, following a 34-7 trouncing of Portland.

The game will be the USFL debut for Luis Sharpe, a former St. Louis Cardinals offensive tackle, who signed with the Showboats this week.

Sharpe, a 6-foot-4, 260-pounder from UCLA, was a first-round draft choice in 1982 and was an alternate to the NFL's All-Pro team for two years before becoming a free agent at the end of the 1984 season.

In other USFL action this week, it's Jacksonville at Orlando and Los Angeles at Denver on Saturday night. On Sunday, Houston visits Arizona, Portland is at Baltimore and Tampa Bay plays at Birmingham. In the Monday night game, Oakland hosts San Antonio.

In an earlier meeting this year, Jacksonville beat Orlando 34-31 in overtime. Both Jacksonville and Orlando are coming off victories — the Bulls 28-17 winners over San Antonio last week and the Renegades 24-19 winners over Arizona.

Last week, Larry Mason became the second Jacksonville player to ever rush for 100 yards when he gained 100 on 16 carries, including a 2-yard TD run, against the Gunslingers. Orlando quarterback Reggie Collier completed his final nine passes of the game last week and 12 of 23 overall against Arizona.

Cleveland Hangs On For 11-5 Win Over Baltimore

By The Associated Press
The Cleveland Indians had it, lost it, and had it again. They finally kept it at the end — because Joe Carter had it all the way.

Breaking out of a 3-for-24 slump with a vengeance, Carter hit a single, double and home run and drove in two runs to lead the Indians to an 11-5 victory over the Baltimore Orioles Thursday.

The Indians had to battle for this one, squandering a 5-0 lead after three innings.

"But it had to be frustrating for (Baltimore Manager) Joe Altobelli, too — coming back from five down and then losing," said Cleveland Manager Pat Corrales after the up-and-down victory. "They're the kind of club you can never have too many runs against."

Orioles starter Storm Davis, who admitted, "I stink now," allowed the Indians to get away to a 5-0 lead after three innings.

In other AL action, New York tripped Chicago 3-2; California edged Minnesota 9-8; Toronto stopped Texas 4-2, and Boston nipped Kansas City 4-3 in 14 innings.

Baltimore shortstop Cal Ripken made two errors as the Indians scored three unearned runs to break a 5-5 tie in the fifth as Carter contributed a double to the rally.

Carter homered in the seventh against Tippy Martinez, and Pat Tabler, who knocked in four runs for Cleveland, tagged a two-run shot in the eighth against Don Aase. Rick Dempsey slugged two homers for the Orioles, playing without first baseman Eddie Murray, who returned to his home in Los Angeles because of the death of his sister.

Yankees 3, White Sox 2

Ken Griffey made a strong defensive play in the sixth inning that saved two runs and drove in the go-ahead tally with a single in the seventh to lead New York over Chicago.

The Yankees' winning rally came against White Sox left-hander Floyd Bannister, 0-2, who had won his previous eight decisions over New York dating back to 1982. The winner was Rich Bordi, 1-0, who relieved Dennis Rasmussen in the sixth. Dave Righetti worked the last 1 2-3 innings for his third save, getting out of a two-on, none-out jam in the ninth.

With runners at first and second and one out in the White Sox sixth, Griffey snared a drive into the left-field corner by Carlton Fisk, slammed into the wall in foul territory, then spun and rifled the ball to the infield. Second baseman Willie Randolph's relay to first doubled off Tom Paciorek.

Angels 9, Twins 8

Doug DeCinces hit a three-run homer and Rod Carew drove in two runs with two singles and a suicide-squeeze bunt, leading California over Minnesota.

The sweep of the three-game set gave the Angels their first series sweep at Minnesota in the 25-year history of the two clubs. It was California's fifth straight victory and the Twins' seventh straight loss.

"It was my first (homer) of the year — that's always special," said DeCinces, who raised his average from .167 to .200 with his 2-for-5 performance. "Things haven't gone well for me. I've been battling myself."

Blue Jays 4, Rangers 2

Lloyd Moseby hit a two-run homer in the third inning and Damaso Garcia smashed three doubles as Toronto beat Texas, handing the Rangers their seventh loss in eight games.

Dave Stieb, 1-1, was the winner, pitching 6 1-3 innings, giving up two runs on six hits while walking five and striking out two. Bill Caudill, the third Toronto pitcher, earned his first save.

"It's about time we put something together," said Toronto Manager Bobby Cox. "We've been hitting all right and we got some outstanding defense today as well."

Red Sox 4, Royals 3

Jim Rice's long home run off Mike Jones in the 14th inning powered Boston over Kansas City.

Rice's blast, estimated at 440 feet, gave the victory to Bob Ojeda, 1-0, who entered the game in the 12th. Jones, 0-1, the fourth Kansas City pitcher, started the 13th.

Dodgers Down Padres

By The Associated Press
After a lack of hitting support last year, Fernando Valenzuela seems to be taking matters into his own hands this season.

Looking as good as he did in his rookie season in 1981, when he won the Cy Young Award, the Los Angeles pitcher hurled a 5-0, two-hit beauty over the San Diego Padres Thursday.

The shutout was the second straight for the left-hander, who stopped the San Francisco Giants 1-0 on five hits last Saturday and hasn't allowed an earned run in 25 innings this season.

"There's no trend," said Dodger catcher Mike Scioscia. "He's going out there and pitching the same way he always has. He pitched about as well as a guy can pitch today. He used all of his pitches and they were all working today."

In other National League action, Montreal routed St. Louis 7-1 and Cincinnati edged San Francisco 4-3 in 10 innings.

Last year, Valenzuela had a 12-17 record, and rarely got any runs from the weak-hitting Dodgers, who averaged only 3.12 runs per game, fourth lowest in the National League.

On Thursday, however, he got four runs in the first off Padres left-hander Mark Thurmond, 0-1, on an RBI single by Mike Marshall, a two-run double by Candy Maldonado and a sacrifice fly by Scioscia. The Dodgers got their final run in the eighth on Marshall's RBI single.

Valenzuela, 2-1, allowed only a first-inning single by Tony Gwynn, last year's National League batting champion, and an eighth-inning single by pinch-hitter Kurt Bevacqua. It was the 20th shutout of his career and his third two-hitter.

Expos 7, Cardinals 1

Mike Fitzgerald's two-run double keyed a four-run uprising in the fourth inning, helping Montreal roll past St. Louis behind Steve Rogers' five-hitter.

Rogers, battling back from an injury-plagued 1984 season, walked four and struck out four. A 15-hit attack, Montreal's biggest in eight games, insured the 35-year-old right-hander his first triumph in three decisions.

In addition to Fitzgerald's double, the Expos' offense featured three hits and two RBIs by Vance Law and two hits and two RBIs by rookie Herm Winningham.

"He really pitched after the sixth," said Montreal Manager Buck Rodgers. "He made all of his pitches count. He was super."

Rogers said the hot day in St. Louis helped him go the distance.

Reds 4, Giants 3

Cesar Cedeño's bases-loaded single drove in two runs in the bottom of the 10th to give Cincinnati a comeback victory over San Francisco. The Giants twice failed to hold one-run leads, in the ninth and 10th innings, when they went ahead 3-2 on Chris Brown's RBI single.

After Tony Perez led off the Cincinnati 10th with a single off Greg Minton, 0-1, and was forced at second by Eric Davis, Pete Rose drew a walk and a double steal put both runners in scoring position. Gary Redus drew an intentional walk to set up Cedeño's single, which gave reliever Carl Willis, 1-0, his first major-league victory.

Rose had a single in four at-bats, leaving him just 85 hits away from breaking Ty Cobb's record of 4,191 hits.

McLain Faces Sentencing

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — Fifteen years after his once glorious major league baseball career took a turn for the worse, Denny McLain's off-the-field problems carried him to yet another crossroad.

But unlike 1970 when a pair of Bowie Kuhn-imposed suspensions merely sidelined him for most of the season, the former Detroit Tigers star faced a fate much worse, a prison term.

McLain, 41, was convicted March 16 of racketeering, conspiracy, extortion and drug dealing.

Sentencing was set today before U.S. District Judge Elizabeth A. Kovachevich.

The maximum penalty for the last pitcher to win 30 games in a season is 75 years in prison and an $85,000 fine. The government said it would be satisfied with a 35-year term. McLain's attorney, however, sought probation with a stipulation for community service.

Co-defendants Seymour Sher and Frank Cocchiari, who is already serving a prison term for mail fraud, were also scheduled for sentencing for racketeering, conspiracy and extortion.

Federal prosecutors said McLain charged loan-shark victims up to 150 percent interest; booked illegal bets on sports events and used threats to collect debts. A jury agreed after hearing testimony from 67 government witnesses, as well as McLain, during a 14-week trial.

McLain, who posted a 31-6 record to win the American League's Cy Young Award and helped the Tigers to the world championship in 1968, testified that arm trouble contributed to the collapse of his career.

He fashioned a 24-9 record to share the Cy Young Award with Baltimore's Mike Cuellar in 1969, but dropped to 3-5 during the suspension-filled 1970 campaign that saw then commissioner Kuhn sideline him — first for involvement with gamblers and later for carrying a gun on the team plane.

McLain, who was also suspended for seven days that season for pouring water on two Detroit sportswriters, was traded to the Washington Senators in October 1970.

The right-hander was 10-22 with the Senators in 1971 and left baseball at the age of 28 after appearing in a total of 20 games with the Oakland Athletics and Atlanta Braves in 1972. He compiled a lifetime record of 131-91.

McLain, whose wife Sharon is the daughter of baseball Hall of Fame member Lou Boudreau, testified that at times he had been involved in bookmaking. However, he denied the charges returned in the five-count indictment that led to his conviction.

"I still say I have gambled all my life. I have booked from time to time, but extortion? No way," McLain, whose weight of 186 pounds in the early 1970s has ballooned toward 300 pounds, told the Tampa Tribune in a jail interview last month.

"Criminal enterprise? No way," the ex-pitcher added. "I've been around a lot of elements in my life, but being around and participating are two different things."

Martin Says Sorry To Solons

RALEIGH (AP) — Gov. Jim Martin has apologized to two Democratic legislators, saying he mistakenly asked a Republican to introduce a bill eliminating 42 boards and commissions they had sent to him for suggestions.

"Egg on our face, we apologize to them," Martin said Thursday in his weekly news conference. "Clearly it was not an attempt to pre-empt them because the bill that was introduced still included ... boards and commissions that I would not recommend that we abolish."

The bill introduced Tuesday by Senate Minority Leader Bill Redman, R-Iredell, was one of two measures Sen. Tony Rand, D-Cumberland, and Rep. Bobby Etheridge, D-Harnett, plan to sponsor.

The two Democrats announced April 9 that they would recommend abolishing or consolidating obsolete boards, commissions and councils, some of which they said had been inactive for years.

Martin said Rand and Etheridge sent him a draft copy of a bill they were planning to introduce, but he disagreed with some of their recommendations and told them he would make a counter-proposal.

The bill mistakenly was included in a batch of administration proposals introduced earlier this week by Redman, the Senate Minority Leader, Martin said.

Rand said in an interview he wasn't convinced that Martin and legislative Republicans weren't trying to steal the issue from Democrats.

"I'm sure it was done intentionally, but whether it was done to embarrass anyone is the question," said Rand. "If he says it was a mistake, I'll take him at his word."

He said he intended to introduce his own versions of the bills and have the one with Redman's name on it killed. Martin and Redman said they had no objection.

"I don't have any pride of authorship," said Redman. "I just want results."

Redman corroborated Martin's account in an interview, saying he filed the Democrats' bill "in the heat of trying to meet last-minute deadlines."

"It was not my intention to usurp or one-up anybody," said Redman. "I think getting rid of these needless boards and commissions is so important that it should be a bipartisan initiative."

Rand and Etheridge, co-chairmen of the Appropriations Base Budget Committee, said it costs the state $4.7 million a year to fund 320 panels. They said their plan to eliminate 87 groups, based on a study by the N.C. Center for Public Policy Research, would save $1.3 million annually.

Tax Plan Draws Tentative House OK

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — Gov. Jim Martin says he hopes voters remember how the predominantly Democratic House watered down his tax-cut package, while his Republican allies are hoping for better luck in the Senate.

"I hope they'll be called on by the people to explain those votes," said Martin after the House rejected amendments that would have restored parts of his plan to a Democratic alternative that was approved tentatively Thursday, 110-0.

A final vote was scheduled for today. If approved, the bill goes to the Senate, where a finance subcommittee met Thursday to begin studying Martin's bill and other tax-relief measures.

"It's not over," said Martin. "It now goes to the Senate and I hope we get a fair hearing there."

Martin joined his wife, brother Joe and top aides in the balcony toward the end of a two-hour debate in which Democrats praised their plan as fairer and more responsible.

The House package would cut taxes by $375 million over three years, while Martin's would cost $690 million during the same period. Martin wants to repeal the intangibles tax, the sales tax on food and non-prescription medicines and the inventory tax.

The House plan would lift the intangibles tax on bank deposits, cash and insurance holdings only, and would exempt food-stamp purchases from the food tax. It would grant a partial repeal of the inventory tax and repeal taxes on inheritances, gifts and funerals.

Martin arrived after a stinging blast was leveled at him by Rep. Martin Lancaster, D-Wayne, after House Minority Leader Betsy Cochrane urged that the bill be returned to the Finance Committee for further study.

"If I only had one bill to work on, you may rest assured it would not take me 10 weeks to get the blame thing drafted ...," said Lancaster. "The governor and his lobbyists have not done one thing ... except talk to the press about his major legislative package for this session."

"We have a different ball game ... where the governor says, 'I don't care what the Legislature thinks. I'm going to talk to the press. I'm going to talk to the people. I'm going over your heads, and in 1986 we're going to elect Republicans and replace all of you."

"I'm here to tell you, it may defeat a few Democrats but it's not the way to get legislation passed," said Lancaster. He said Martin had "sat in his office and talked ... only to himself, God and the press. I don't know about you, but I'm getting tired of it."

Asked later to comment, Martin acknowledged he hadn't made a call on Lancaster to request his support. "I probably won't make one," he said.

Martin said the tax bill, introduced in the Senate several weeks ago, wasn't filed in the House until last Friday because "reliable" lawmakers had warned that "It absolutely would have been summarily killed."

House Finance Committee chairman Dwight Quinn, D-Cabarrus, denied that would have happened.

Rep. George Miller, D-Durham, chairman of the House Finance subcommittee that crafted the Democratic package, said it "will touch every tax-paying citizen of our state. It recognizes that each has carried a burden of tax and each should, therefore, share in the relief."

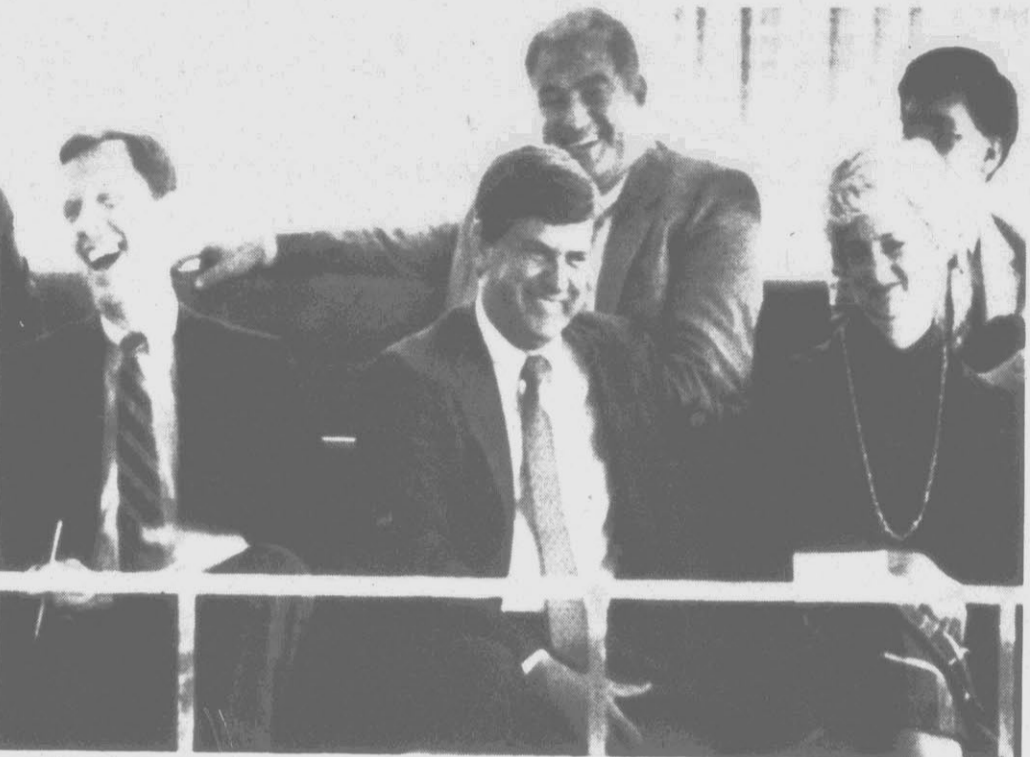

Warning that federal budget cuts and an economic downturn could create a need for surplus state funds, Miller said the Democrats' bill would "form a framework" that could lead to deeper cuts in the future.

Ms. Cochrane called the Democrats' bill a "first step" toward responding to the voters' "mandate for tax relief. ... Unfortunately, it is like a banking bill, not a people's bill ... it doesn't go far enough."

Her motion to return the bill to committee was tabled, 74-38. The House then rejected 62-45 an amendment offered by Rep. Ray Warren, R-Mecklenburg, to exempt people age 65 and older from the food tax. An amendment by Rep. Frank "Trip" Sizemore, R-Guilford, to abolish the inventory tax was tabled 72-38, and the House then voted by the same margin to stop debate.

Several Democratic amendments were accepted — including one that would grant a 15 percent inventory tax cut to retailers and wholesalers. The bill already contained a 25 percent cut on manufacturers.

House Considers The Source

RALEIGH (AP) — No matter how loud the opposition, Rep. Pap Creecy's motion to suspend the rules so House members can have refreshments at their desks wins approval. But a Republican had no such luck with the motion Thursday.

In what has become a light-hearted tradition over the years, Creecy's motion is met with a muted chorus of "ayes." While the "nays" rise to the ceiling, House Speaker Liston Ramsey pauses and says, "The ayes have it."

But when Rep. Ivan Mothershead, R-Mecklenburg, moved to suspend Rule 12-D, the motion failed.

"(Rep.) Howard Chapin told me I was the only one in 12 years to ever have had it voted down," said Mothershead. "We're talking power, awesome power."

The unusual outcome caused a stir in the House and, when Creecy arose to make the same motion minutes later, the "nays" were unusually loud.

"The ayes have it," deadpanned Ramsey.

Republicans immediately called for a vote count.

Martin And Public Debate Veto Plan

By F. ALAN BOYCE
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — The strength of North Carolina's governor and whether voters should have a voice in awarding veto power were major issues in a public hearing on the issue.

The governor has the strongest appointive powers in the nation and "commands the power of the media," said former Rep. Al Adams of Wake County at the Thursday hearing. "If he calls a news conference, you all come. He has five people on the state payroll who can interpret what he's doing ... in the best light."

But Gov. Jim Martin said the veto is needed to "halt careless legislation slipped through near adjournment that would injure the interests of the people." And he said it also might curb the use of pork-barrel appropriations to punish independent-minded lawmakers.

He said the Legislature "did not have a pattern of intruding into executive branch responsibilities until 12 years ago. And that has worsened with moves against the governor's office under Governor (Jim) Holshouser and Governor (Jim) Hunt."

However, Abraham Holtzman, a political scientist at North Carolina State University, said veto power was adopted by states in the 19th century when lawmakers were corrupt and "legislatures were bought and sold."

"The legislature of North Carolina has been a very responsible legislature," he said, adding that those backing veto power "would prefer the foolishness of the governor to prevail over the foolishness of the Legislature at times."

"Basically, the veto is an instrument of warfare between the governor and the Legislature," Holtzman said. "The best way for the governor to be involved in the Legislature is through persuasion."

Adams added that North Carolina's government has been "remarkably free of corruption and challenged anyone to trade that for the governments of the 49 states with veto power."

While supporters unanimously said the public deserves to vote on the measure, Adams and Holtzman, the only opponents to speak at the hearing, disagreed.

"You don't throw a bad law to the people of North Carolina," said Holtzman. "The responsibility of the Legislature is to make decisions in the name of the people. Tough decisions."

Martin, a Republican, acknowledged the bill might not make it out of the Democrat-controlled House Constitutional Amendment Committee, noting that a similar measure was killed in a Senate committee earlier this session.

"It is possible, once again in history, to thwart this issue from being decided by the people," he said. "But that will not be a victory, for the people will have lost."

Former Govs. Bob Scott and Holshouser joined 19 people speaking in favor of the bill while Hunt added his support in a prepared statement.

"Without gubernatorial veto, no one government official can answer to the people for legislative actions," said Hunt. "I do not share the fear that such gubernatorial power will return to North Carolina the arbitrary power of royal governors. The power of the legislature to override gubernatorial vetoes would protect against such arrogant abuses."

Hunt, a Democrat, said the issue "transcends the passing partisan differences of this or any other legislative session. It should not be decided on the basis of relations between this Legislature and this governor."

"The governor is naturally more concerned about the effect of legislation on the whole state, while the legislator is naturally more interested in the effect on his or her district," added Holshouser. "This statewide approach is most valuable."

Fund-Raising Set For Study Of Baldness

By ALAN BOYCE
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — Finding the cause of a rare form of hair loss could help research into rheumatoid arthritis and diabetes, says the president of a new national effort to raise $5 million for alopecia areata.

"There's so many related illnesses," said Whitfield Lee, whose Alopecia Areata Research Foundation will have a kick-off meeting April 27. "Rheumatoid arthritis, childhood onset diabetes, many eye diseases are autoimmune in nature. If we can unlock some clues as to what is causing alopecia, we may unlock some clues as to what is causing these other problems."

Lee, whose son lost all of his body hair to the disease at age 4½, said there has been little research on alopecia because it is not life threatening. But he said the Mayo Clinic estimates about 2 million Americans have the disease and 1 percent are at risk of contracting it.

Seen under a microscope, a victim's hair follicle is attacked by white blood cells and other parts of the body's natural defense systems.

"They recognize hair as a foreign body and attack it like a splinter," Lee said. "It would appear as a swarm of bees ... attacking the hair follicle itself."

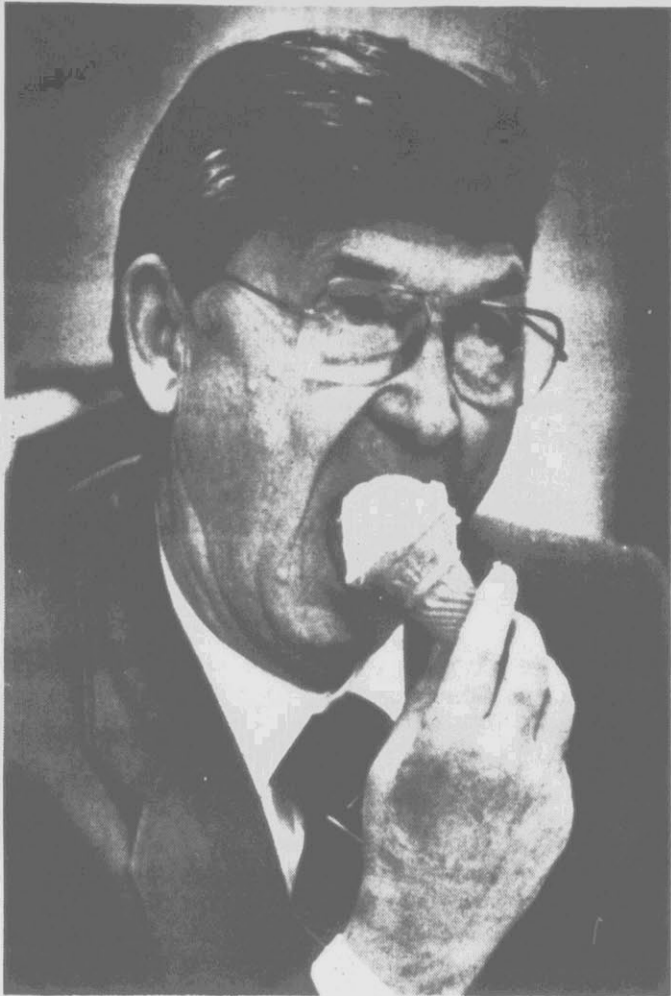

Proper research into alopecia areata also could keep doctors from prescribing potentially dangerous treatments for the little-known affliction, he said.

"Doctors were recommending steroids and ultraviolet light and other potions, if you will, to relieve the problem without any real consideration as to what it might do to the child long term," he said. "Steroids can cause problems and we don't know that ultraviolet light might not, down the road, cause the problems that lead to skin cancer."

Lee said alopecia areata appears to be partly hereditary, although it may take stress or chemical exposure to trigger actual hair loss. He said some of his son's hair grows back in the summertime, possibly because ultraviolet light in the sun suppresses the immune system.

Burroughs Wellcome Co., a pharmaceutical firm in Research Triangle Park, is helping to compile research literature seeking corporate contributions, Lee said, while a network of volunteers will funnel individual donations into the Raleigh office.

Lee said the foundation will advertise through dermatology literature for research proposals and will award grants to the best ideas.

Virginia Executes Smiling Briley

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — A smiling James D. Briley followed his brother to death in the electric chair, less than a year after they led the nation's largest death-row escape and just hours after fellow inmates staged an uprising to block his execution.

JAMES D. BRILEY

Briley, who got married in a prison wedding three weeks ago, "had no final statement" before he was executed for the slayings of a pregnant woman and her young son.

He smiled, and "asked the witnesses twice, 'Are you happy?'" He told the chaplain "I love you," said Kathi King, operations officer for the State Penitentiary.

He was pronounced dead at 11:07 p.m. Thursday, Ms. King said.

Earlier in the day inmates at the prison rioted to try to block the electrocution, injuring nine guards and a prisoner. The disturbance prompted an indefinite lockdown at the 800-inmate institution.

Briley was the 42nd person executed in the United States since the Supreme Court reinstated the death penalty in 1976 and the third person in Virginia. The last execution in the state was that of Linwood Briley, on Oct. 12.

The two brothers led the largest escape of death row inmates in U.S. history last May 31 when they and four other condemned murderers broke out of the correctional center in Mecklenburg. All six were recaptured by June 19.

Briley received two death sentences for the slayings of Judy Barton and her 5-year-old son, Harvey Barton. He also was convicted of raping Ms. Barton, who was eight months pregnant, and killing her common-law husband.

A third Briley brother, Anthony, is serving multiple life sentences on murder convictions stemming from the same crime spree.

The execution followed the failure of two last-ditch appeals and came two hours after James Briley's lawyer, Gerald Zerkin, ruled out further appeals for the convict.

"He's handling it better than I would have," Zerkin said after a brief visit with Briley. J.L. Reamy, one of the nine witnesses to the execution, described Briley as "more nervous than terrified."

Briley spent most of his last day talking on the telephone with his family, who spent Thursday night at his father's Richmond home.

Thornberg Seeks Protection For Borrowers

RALEIGH (AP) — Attorney General Lacy Thornburg has asked for more protections for poor, uneducated borrowers who would be affected by a bill to help small finance companies compete with other lenders.

Thornburg told the House Committee on Banks and Thrift Institutions Thursday that the bill would increase available money but doesn't do enough to protect unsophisticated borrowers.

But Rep. Paul Pulley, D-Durham, who sponsored a House version of the bill, said a committee substitute drafted over two weeks of negotiations would answer concerns that the bill could "cause some misfortune on those who are less able to care for themselves."

"If this isn't acceptable, I just don't know how to do it," he said.

The original bill as amended by the Senate would eliminate the ban on small loan companies making first mortgage loans from the same office as other loans. What had been unlimited interest was amended to allow no more than 16 percent or 6 percent above the rate for U.S. Treasury bill for loans above $10,000. Pulley agreed to a July 31, 1987 sunset on first mortgages and a provision for reports to the attorney general on the number and amounts of loans under the measure plus refinancing of loans and foreclosures.

The substitute also would extend the interest cap to loans of less than $10,000 and would prohibit turning outstanding unsecured loans of less than $3,000 into first-mortgage loans secured by a home or property.

Schools Will Use Writing Test

RALEIGH (AP) — A writing competency test will join the mathematics and reading tests that North Carolina students must pass to graduate from high school, the State Board of Education has decided.

The board also has approved a resolution that would reschedule all competency tests from fall of the 11th grade to the 10th grade to allow more time for remedial work. Legislation allowing the move is pending in the General Assembly.

"There is a clear advantage because students will know before they complete 10th grade whether they have to be scheduled for remediation the next year," William J. Brown, special assistant for research.

The writing test had a trial run in the fall of 1984, when it was given to 82,000 10th graders. The test includes required essay and some multiple-choice questions on grammar and language use.

Essay questions will be on "point of view" issues that require students to take a stand.

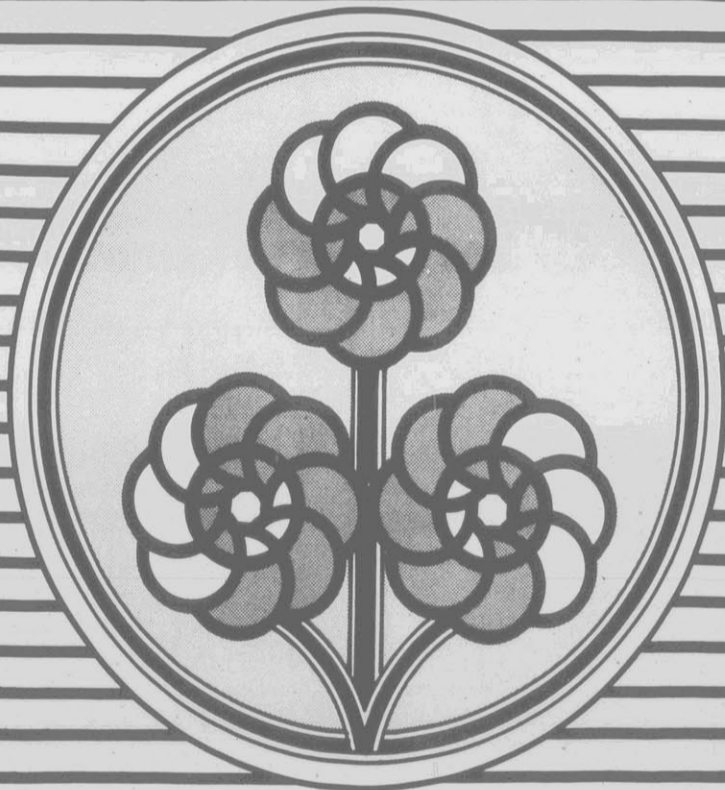

"It's a real-life topic that will require them to express a clear point of view," Brown said. "They should give two clear reasons to support their position and give elaboration on each reason."

Multiple-choice question will be on topics such as punctuation, capitalization and the proper use of nouns as subjects. Students will also be asked to recognize the proper way of addressing business letter and other technical writing points.

Last fall, sixth- and ninth-graders began taking writing tests as part of the North Carolina annual achievement test program.

Star's Special Draws Protests

PARIS (AP) — Yves Montand, a onetime peace activist and one of France's best-known entertainers, drew denunciations from the Soviet Union and some peace groups after backing a strong defense and President Reagan's "Star Wars" plan in a TV special.

The Thursday night program, "Facing War," succeeded in bringing the subject forcefully before the French public, just what Montand wanted.

"A country, a continent that is no longer capable of assuring its own defense, quickly and automatically becomes dependent," Montand said at the end of the program.

"To the slogan 'Better red than dead' of today's young Germans tempted by pacifism, I prefer mine: 'Neither red nor dead — free.'"

Montand said Reagan's plan to spend $26 billion over the next five years in research into the Strategic Defense Initiative could change the strategy of mutual assured destruction, or "balance of terror," to mutual assured protection.

The program explained how the space defense plan, known as "Star Wars," might work, using an animated film that looked much like a Space Invaders video game. "If a system like that could be built, dissuasion no longer would make any sense," said Montand.

The Soviet Embassy issued a strong protest to the Foreign Ministry about the "broadcast frankly hostile to the Soviet Union," calling it "this sordid calumny against the Soviet people ... broadcast on a French public service television channel."

The broadcast was a combination of interviews, old films, reports and fictional scenarios.

There were several basic messages:

— Europe has lived in prosperity, liberty and peace for the past 40 years, a period during which more than 150 wars have raged around the planet. "Will it last yet longer? That is the question," Montand said.

— The situation is changing. What protected Europe once may not do so in the future. "The rules of the game were at once simple and cynical ... mutual assured destruction," Montand said. There are new technologies and conventional war again is possible, he said.

Theater Group Will Stage 'Murder' For Hotel Guests

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sixty guests will register for the weekend at the Jefferson Hotel tonight. One of them will be "killed" almost immediately.

And, to the delight of the others, more deaths will follow.

It's what the amateur sleuths from around the country are paying $375 to $395 each to witness — a murder mystery in which they are participants.

The 60-year-old, European-style luxury hotel, just four blocks from the White House, is being enshrined in fantasy by actors from Washington's Source Theater, a professional acting company, which has developed an intricate murder plot for the guests to unravel.

"The story revolves around the re-opening of a quasi-governmental think-tank called the Center for Alternative Defense," said Larry Redmond, who wrote the drama along with Stephen Hayes.

"The guests will come as reporters or friends of the think-tank officials," he said.

According to Redmond's story, the research center was closed originally because its director of analysis was killed. A scientist at the center, a Russian defector, was accused of the murder, but he accidentally died, allegedly trying to get rid of the murder weapon.

With the scandal in the past, the center — which was established to devise a new ultimate weapon to rid the world of the nuclear threat — has called a press conference to announce its re-opening.

"But what happens, is that someone is killed at the press conference, and the trouble for the center starts all over again," said Redmond.

Among the guests will be 12 actors, disguised as a Southern Republican senator, an ex-CIA agent, a private detective, a suspicious Cuban colonel, a bereaved widow, angry stepsons, a mistress, policemen and a Pentagon liaison, said Redmond. They won't immediately reveal themselves as actors, however, and the paying guests will have until Sunday at 10 a.m. to figure out which is the "murderer." The author promises that it won't be easy. "We've boosted the difficulty level this time" said Redmond, who helped produce the hotel's first mystery weekend last September. "We've realized these people are not only mystery buffs, they're fanatics."

Gillian Rudd, spokeswoman for the hotel, said some of the guests last fall were particularly enthusiastic in their efforts to determine the killer.

"Everybody was acting. As soon as you step in the door the play starts," Ms. Rudd said. After a "murder" occurred in the presidential suite of the hotel and the room was locked following the "preliminary investigation," a couple that was staying in the room directly above tied bedsheets together and lowered themselves through the window to see if any more clues were left, she said.

The room was actually being prepared for another guest and some food had been put out.

The couple didn't find any clues, but when they found the food, they called some of the other mystery-lovers up for a party, she said.

ASHEVILLE (AP) — An Asheville performing arts theater has been told it is staging an unauthorized version of the play "Amadeus" and that it must pay a $500 fine each performance.

Greg Morell, director of New Arts Theater, said Thursday the theater was given amateur rights for the show, had them revoked, applied for professional rights, was denied them and has now the matter over to an attorney.

"The show will go on as planned this weekend," Morell said.

Sentenced

CHARLOTTE (AP) — A 16-year-old who said he set fire to a Charlotte elementary school has been put on probation for one year and ordered to undergo treatment at a juvenile diagnostic center for emotionally disturbed children.

Mecklenburg Juvenile Court Judge Resa Harris ordered Thursday that the eighth-grader not be released from secured custody at the diagnostic center without the court's approval.

The 16-year-old boy said in March that he set the fire at Albemarle Road Elementary School. The Feb. 8 fire burned 12 kindergarten and second-grade classrooms, causing about $600,000 in damage and forcing 300 of the school's 650 students to attend another school for the rest of the school year.

President Sued

WENTWORTH, N.C. (AP) — A former Stoneville Furniture Co. employee who says the company president threatened him and caused him emotional stress and to drink too much has filed a $10 million lawsuit against the president.

Kenneth R. Farmer of Mayodan filed the suit April 10 in Rockingham County Superior Court against furniture company president Jack Louza. The suit charges Louza with slandering Farmer and interfering with his peace of mind.

Farmer contends he was terminated from the company in May 1982 out of "sheer spite and dislike with deliberate intent and without justification."

He says in the lawsuit that Louza told a company vice president about 50 times to fire him in the less than four years Farmer worked at Stoneville.

Furniture Mart

HIGH POINT (AP) — Attendance at the spring Southern Furniture Market on opening day was well ahead of last year's, officials said, but it was unknown whether that would translate into higher sales.

Robert Gruenberg, executive director of the 2.5 million-square-foot Southern Furniture Market Center, said registrations Thursday were up 14 percent over opening day last year.

The higher attendance partly reflected the rapid movement in the past two years of company showrooms from such western North Carolina cities as Lenoir and Hickory to the High Point area, officials said.

Dean Named

DURHAM (AP) — North Carolina Central University's board of trustees has appointed T. M. Ringer as interim dean of the NCCU law school.

Ringer, who is now associate dean of the law school, will assume the interim position July 1. He will head the law school temporarily while the university seeks a permanent replacement for the current dean, Charles Daye, who has resigned.

Ringer, a graduate of Morehouse College, has a law degree from Harvard University. He has been a member of the NCCU faculty since 1979.

Daye, the law school dean since 1981, will step down June 30. Daye announced his resignation last December, a month after telling the board of trustees that he had difficulty dealing with some administrative policies.

Film Site

MONROE, N.C. (AP) — Steven Spielberg's production company is scouting sites in Union and Anson counties, and at least one source said filming was expected to begin in the area June 24, a Charlotte newspaper reported.

The movie will be based on the Pulitzer Prize-winning book "The Color Purple" by Alice Walker.

Though most local, state and movie officials refused to comment, several sources who did not want to be named said movie scouts have looked at sites in Waxhaw, Wingate, Marshville and near Lilesville, The Charlotte Observer reported Thursday.

Officials of the N.C. Film Commission refused to comment on whether sites are being considered in North Carolina. Paula Wyrick said film commission policy is not to discuss projects under consideration.

Smith Cited

GREENSBORO (AP) — Greensboro attorney McNeill Smith is included with people such as Edwin Meese III and Joseph Califano Jr. as among the 100 most powerful attorneys in the country in the April 15 issue of The National Law Journal.

Smith, 67, is the only North Carolina attorney among those listed by the weekly journal, and Smith said he can't figure out how he made the list.

Smith's name is misspelled and his age is listed incorrectly, but he's listed right above former U.S. Attorney William French Smith.

His caption reads, "(Smith) has acquired a melange of influence in the state; a former legislator who didn't fall in line with any party discipline, but had feet in both liberal and mainline conservative camps..."

Nakasone Sets Up Body To Push Imports

TOKYO (AP) — Saying there will be no exceptions to the principle of free trade, Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone set up a commission of top officials today to open the Japanese market to foreign products.

Nakasone, who will himself head the new External Economy Policy Promotion Headquarters, said in the first meeting that "no sanctuaries will be accepted."

"This is our last chance to promote external economic policies. If we fail this time, our international reputation would suffer greatly," Nakasone was quoted as saying in Japanese news reports of the meeting.

Meanwhile, U.S. trade officials said that congressional resolutions seeking retaliatory trade measures against Japan helped U.S. negotiators get significant compromises from Japan in five days of talks on telecommunications equipment which ended today.

Donald Abelson, director of technical trade barriers at the office of the U.S. Special Trade Representative, told a news conference the Ministry of Post and Telecommunications agreed to delete 10 of 30 remaining technical standards required of telephones and other telecommunications terminal equipment. Until April 1, there were 53 items on the list of standards.

He said that he and his group of technical experts also successfully negotiated the modification of two more standards. Abelson said six more items will be further clarified in ministerial circulars. He said 12 will remain unchanged.

Asked if he thought the non-binding resolutions against Japan in both houses of Congress have helped U.S. negotiations, Clyde V. Prestowitz, counselor to U.S. Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige, said "Yes."

On April 9 Nakasone announced a three-year "action program" to lower tariffs, simplify import procedures and increase imports of manufactured products.

Nakasone also made a televised appeal to the nation to buy more foreign goods to defuse friction resulting from Japan's huge trade surpluses — $44 billion worldwide and $36.8 billion with the United States last year.

The new commission, consisting of all Cabinet members and leading officials from Nakasone's Liberal Democratic Party, will draw up details of the program this summer after receiving reports from government ministries. The outline of the "action program" will be completed in July.

Nakasone promised on April 9 that Japan would abide by a trade policy of "freedom in principle, and restrictions as exceptions."

When Agriculture, Forestry and Fisheries Minister Moriyoichi Sato said today that farm products should be among protected items, Nakasone responded, "There will be no exception to the principle of free trade. No sanctuaries will be allowed."

The commissioners agreed that a decision on lowering tariffs on plywood and boneless chicken will be made in June. The United States has pressed for lower levies on forestry products, while Thailand has demanded lower rates on boneless chicken.

On Monday, International Trade and Industry Minister Keiichi Murata plans to meet leading industrialists to enlist their aid in increasing imports.

The United States, Japan's main trading partner, is urging Japan to buy more telecommunications, electronics and pharmaceutical products as well as forestry products.

The semi-governmental Japan External Trade Organization announced today that in 1984, Japan purchased $40.6 billion worth of foreign manufactured goods, up 18.2 percent from the previous year. The manufactured goods accounted for 29.8 percent of total imports for the year, the organizations said.

According to figures of the Organization of Economic Cooperation and Development, an international group, in 1982 manufactured goods accounted for 22.7 percent of Japan's imports, compared to 59.5 percent in the United States, 55.2 percent in West Germany and 65.5 percent in Britain.

ORANGES FOR SALE — American saleswomen give away imported oranges as a sale promotion at a Tokyo department store Thursday. The promotion came as a result of Japanese Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone's "buy more foreign goods" campaign. The store expects to sell about $2 million worth of foreign products during the 20-day promotion. (AP Laserphoto)

U.S. Scientists Considered Poison To Kill Half-Million

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — Scientists considered using radioactive food to poison 500,000 of the enemy during World War II, according to a newly declassified letter from J. Robert Oppenheimer to Dr. Enrico Fermi, two pioneers of the atomic bomb.

The proposal, which apparently was never fully developed, was disclosed in an article in the May-June issue of Technology Review, a magazine published by the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Oppenheimer, who directed the building of the atom bomb in the Los Alamos laboratory in New Mexico, suggested in the letter dated May 25, 1943, that a plan to contaminate food be delayed until there was enough radioactive poison to kill a half million people, the article said.

The letter, sent from Oppenheimer in Santa Fe, N.M., to Fermi in Chicago, did not say how the poison would be administered or indicate the enemy against which the poison would be directed.

Fermi, an Italian-born physicist who produced the first nuclear chain reaction in 1942, worked with Oppenheimer on the Manhattan Project that built the bomb. A winner of the Nobel Prize in physics in 1938, he died in 1954. Oppenheimer died in 1967.

The author of the article, Stanford University history professor Barton J. Bernstein, wrote that he found the letter in the Library of Congress. He said the project "probably founded on substantial technical problems and the reluctance of top military personnel to divert resources from the A-bomb."

"It illustrates an important fact: amid the horror of World War II, including German concentration camps and the mass killing of Jews, many U.S. scientists, like rank-and-file civilians, were willing to devise new ways to kill the enemy by the thousands and even hundreds of thousands," Bernstein wrote.

The atomic bomb was first successfully tested in July 1945 and was dropped on Japan twice in August of that year.

"I think we should not attempt a plan," Oppenheimer wrote, according to the letter reproduced in the magazine, "unless we can poison food sufficient to kill a half a million men, since there is no doubt that the actual amount will, because of non-uniform distribution, be much smaller than this."

Mentioned in the Oppenheimer letter as being aware of the plan were Edward Teller, known as father of the hydrogen bomb; James Bryant Conant, president of Harvard University and chairman of the National Defense Research Committee during World War II; Gen. Leslie Groves, commander of the Manhattan Project; Gen. George C. Marshall, Army chief of staff; and Dr. Joseph Hamilton, a physician and associate professor of medicine at the University of California at Berkeley's Radiation Laboratory.

Bernstein said that none of the 16 Manhattan Project scientists he queried, including Teller, Hans Bethe, Frank Oppenheimer, Robert R. Wilson, Philip Morrison, Robert Serber, Eugene Wigner and Richard Feynman, recalled the poison plan.

"Most were shocked when they saw the declassified document," the historian reported.

Blacks Ignite White Man In New Wave Of Violence

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — A black mob entered a white suburb of Port Elizabeth and set a white man afire, seriously injuring him, and five blacks were killed in unrest near the city — two burned by blacks and three shot by police, police said.

The Thursday evening attack on the white man, Erasmus Jacobs, was the first on a white in a white area during the current agitation against apartheid, South Africa's system of racial segregation.

It was the second attack by blacks against whites in nine months of violence that has left more than 300 blacks dead.

Jacobs was in a parked car waiting for a friend in the suburb Uitenhage who was in a cafe to buy a loaf of bread when he was dragged from the car and set alight, The Port Elizabeth Evening Post said.

The paper quoted Jacobs' companion, Carel van der Mescht, as saying that when he emerged from the shop, Jacobs was in flames on the sidewalk and shouted, "Go away, you can't help, there are too many of them."

Van der Mescht said he fled in his car as the mob threw bricks at him. A police patrol rescued Jacobs before Van der Mescht returned 10 minutes later, police said.

Dr. Leon Cilliers, chief superintendent of Port Elizabeth Provincial Hospital, said Jacobs had second-degree burns over more than 80 percent of his body. He said Jacobs was in stable condition today, but his life was in danger. Cilliers said Jacobs told him the crowd poured kerosene on him and set him on fire.

Such attacks by black mobs have become common in recent weeks, but the targets have always been other blacks regarded as collaborators with the white-minority government. The only other white victim of the unrest, a 3-week-old boy, was killed in October when blacks stoned a car traveling through a black township.

Two U.S. Airmen Missing In Crash

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras (AP) — A U.S. Air Force jet crashed at sea Thursday on a routine training mission in northern Honduras and the fate of the two crew members on board was unknown, the U.S. Embassy said.

The two crew members, both Americans, were believed to be dead, but U.S. soldiers continued searching for them, said an embassy spokesman, who spoke on condition he not be identified.

The names of the missing crew members were not released.

Wreckage of the OA-37 training bomber was found 15 miles northeast of Punta Sal, a port 217 miles north of Tegucigalpa, the spokesman said. The site is near Honduras' northeast coast, south of Belize, far from the Nicaraguan border.

The men were reported to be flying a routine training mission in connection with Big Pine III, the third in a series of major military exercises conducted by the United States in Honduras. The exercise, which has included tank deployments for the first time, is scheduled to end Sunday.

The bidding:

Opening lead: Jack of ♣.

We are unhappy at the lack of organized bridge activity on college campuses. Not too long ago, more than 400 schools took part in an annual Intercollegiate Pair Championship. And back in the 1960s, there was a collegiate par tournament. This hand, composed by Larry Rosler and Jeff Rubens, is from the 1967 event.

Note the suggested response to South's opening one no trump bid, which might raise some eyebrows. How can North possibly invite game with 6 points? The action is justified because North has a source of tricks. Although the hand is not good enough to consider game in clubs, we think it is simply a matter of whether North should respond two or three no trump, and we have a slight preference for the latter. The contract will depend not so much on whether South has 16 or 18 points, but on how many tricks the club suit will provide.

Against three no trump, West leads the top of his spade sequence, and East produces the king. There is no point to holding up the ace of spades for a round—declarer can always duck a club into the "safe" hand, and a diamond shift at trick two could be dangerous.

After winning the ace of spades, declarer should start on clubs. West produces the king and declarer must duck in dummy—he has no outside entry to the clubs. West continues with a spade, declarer wins and leads a second club.

When West fails to follow to this trick, declarer must again play low from the table and concede a second club trick. Since he has five winners outside of clubs, he needs only four tricks from that suit for his contract. The defense has no counter. No matter what East returns after winning the queen of clubs, declarer wins, crosses to the ace of clubs and cashes out his nine tricks.

Avalanche

SAMNAUN, Switzerland (AP) — An avalanche in the Swiss Alps has killed six Swiss skiers and injured three others, the Swiss Air Rescue Service said.

The victims were buried by snow on the a slope of 9,840 foot-high Mount Pischahorn, the service said. Rescuers found one body and freed seven of the skiers, but four of them died shortly afterwards despite attempts to resuscitate them. The body of another skier was found more than five hours later.

The three survivors were hospitalized for minor injuries.

Girl's Body Discovered

DALLAS (AP) — A badly decomposed body found in a lake has been identified as that of a 5-year-old girl whose disappearance three months ago made her one of the most publicized missing children in the country, authorities said.

Investigators at the Dallas County medical examiner's office on Thursday confirmed through dental records that the body found in Lake Texoma is that of Christi Lynn Meeks of Mesquite.

Grayson County Justice of the Peace Charles Odle said the child, whose body was so badly decomposed it was officially listed as that of a boy when it was found April 3 ago, died of an apparent drowning.

"It has definitely been determined off the dental examination that it is Christi Lynn Meeks," said Odle. "As far as we know, it was death by drowning, but she has been identified by dental records.

Since the blond, freckle-faced child disappeared, her picture has been plastered on billboards, milk cartons, movie theater screens, posters and on television during an intensive search effort by police and relatives in Mesquite, a Dallas suburb.

The girl was one of about two dozen missing children whose picture was shown on a national cable television system just before her body was found.

School Class Holds Reunion For Crash Crew

By ROGER MUNNS
Associated Press Writer

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — Detective work by a group of sixth-graders has reunited Navy rescuers with three of the World War II aviators lost for two weeks in the Pacific Ocean with air ace Eddie Rickenbacker.

The 20 sixth graders at the Meeker School in Ames took on the sleuthing and the reunion as a class project, inspired by a 1943 book, "We Thought We Heard the Angels Sing," by James Whittaker, co-pilot of the ill-fated plane.

"Why don't the rest of the schools do the same kind of thing?" said John Bartek, 68, flight engineer of the crew assigned to fly World War I ace Rickenbacker to a secret meeting in the South Pacific with Gen. Douglas MacArthur in 1942.

But the crew of the B-17 Flying Fortress was forced to ditch after they overshot a refueling island. Adrift for two weeks, they were given up for dead until Navy Lt.

Lester Boutte, aboard a patrol plane, spotted pilot William Cherry, who had fallen asleep, naked and exhausted, in his raft.

"I thought of it over the years, but I never expected to see these guys again," said William Wepner of Ripon, Wis., a crew member aboard a PT boat that helped with the rescue. The men have not seen each other since then.

Seven of the eight passengers aboard the plane survived. Four are still alive and three of them, plus two rescuers, arrived in Des Moines Thursday to meet the sixth graders who reunited them.

The fliers and members of their families hugged the rescuers at an airport concourse.

"These kids are something, aren't they?" Cherry said.

"Aw, it wasn't as hard as all that," allowed 11-year-old Ben Jackson.

Hard or not, it took work, with the children sending scores of letters to libraries, newspapers and military agencies to find traces of the men.

Their teacher, Suzanne Kelly, 41, first heard of Whittaker's book when she was in sixth grade. She has read the out-of-print book to her classes, but it was this class that demanded to know what happened to the survivors.

"This class is not interested in just doing worksheets," she said. "And so I thought this may be the year we actually tracked them down."

As clues dribbled in, the class was motivated for more research.

"It really makes history come alive," said Erik Smedal, 12. "People send me newspaper clippings about 'Rickenbacker Lost At Sea.' It's exciting."

Rickenbacker was easy to trace. He went on to become chairman of Eastern Airlines and died in 1973 at age of 82. One crewman died at sea and two others, including the author, Whittaker, have died since.

Of the four remaining airmen, the students had little to go on save brief descriptions in the book.

The book said Cherry once lived in Fort Worth, Texas, so pupil Christy Scott copied out the names and addresses of 53 Cherrys from the Fort Worth telephone book at the Ames library. As an afterthought, she also found a Cherry in nearby Grapevine, Texas, to send a query letter.

"As it turns out, Captain Cherry, who lives in California, was visiting his son in (Grapevine) when the letter arrived," Mrs. Kelly said.

Radioman James Reynolds was found via the library in Oakland. John DeAngelis, the navigator, was found in Allentown, Pa., but he did not attend the reunion because of ill health, Mrs. Kelly said.

They also found several of the rescuers, including Boutte, who now lives in Abbeville, La., and Wepner.

Bartek, it turns out, lives in Mercerville, N.J. and is a forensics photographer for the New Jersey State Police.

"You did a good job of finding me — I can say much better than they did in 1942," he wrote to the class.

Education Aides Resign Under Pressure By Bennett

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two aides to Education Secretary William J. Bennett, under fire in Congress for opposing federal aid for the handicapped, have resigned after losing the public support of their boss.

The resignations of Eileen M. Gardner and Lawrence A. Uzzell were announced Thursday a few hours after Bennett branded as "insensitive and repugnant" some of Ms. Gardner's writings on handicapped issues.

Sen. Lowell P. Weicker Jr., R-Conn., chairman of the Senate Appropriations subcommittee that holds the Education Department's purse strings, warned Bennett a day earlier that he would try to block money for the salaries of Uzzell and Ms. Gardner.

Bennett, in a written reply, stopped short of bowing to demands from Weicker and others that he fire the pair. "I have traditionally tolerated a wide variety of views among my employees and associates," he said.

But later, his assistant secretary for public affairs and legislation, Anne Graham, announced that the pair "have voluntarily submitted their resignations and Secretary Bennett has accepted them."

After learning of the resignations, Weicker said, "This matter has been resolved to the benefit of education in our country." There was no comment from Ms. Gardner or Uzzell.

Ms. Gardner is a former education analyst for the Heritage Foundation who holds a doctorate in education from Harvard. She wrote in 1983 that spending on education for the handicapped has "selfishly drained resources from the normal school population and most probably weakened the quality of teaching."

Ms. Gardner also wrote that a person's "external circumstances" — such as a physical handicap — are not "his level of inner spiritual development."

Fifteen disability rights organizations and Rep. Tony Coelho, D-Calif., who has epilepsy, had called for her ouster.

Bennett wrote Weicker that Ms. Gardner's comments on handicapped issues "strike me personally as insensitive and repugnant."

Bennett said neither Ms. Gardner nor Uzzell had any responsibility for programs for the handicapped. He said their views were "totally out of line with those of the administration."

Uzzell was hired as a $52,262-a-year aide to promote tuition tax credits and vouchers. Bennett brought Ms. Gardner on board as a $37,599-a-year "junior member" of a new office on educational philosophy and practice.

Bennett on Tuesday had accused Weicker of engaging in "character assassination" of Ms. Gardner over her religious views.

Time Is On Network's Side

Analysts Say Turner's Bid For CBS Faces Uphill Fight

By COTTEN TIMBERLAKE
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — A multibillion-dollar takeover bid by a "confident, brash" Ted Turner faces an uphill battle because CBS has both the time and money to defend against the media maverick's unfriendly effort, analysts said.

The stock-swap plan announced Thursday is a complex package involving no cash and will be difficult to sell to CBS shareholders since its exact value is uncertain, the analysts added.

"It's a bewildering, confusing package. It's a challenge to investors, it's a challenge to analysts to figure out what it's worth," said Fred Anshel, who works for Dean Witter Reynolds Inc.

Another stumbling block is the lengthy procedure needed to obtain regulatory approval, which analysts say will discourage CBS stockholders from offering up their shares.

And the biggest obstacle to the offer may be the top-rated network's off-expressed determination to remain independent.

Indicative of the deal's lukewarm reception was the performance of CBS stock on Wall Street after Turner announced his offer. It initially rose $5.25 a share but then retreated and ended the day at $106.12½, down $3.62½ from Wednesday's close on the New York Stock Exchange.

Turner Broadcasting's common stock was unchanged at $24 in over-the-counter trading. Turner is offering a package of stocks, bonds and notes in his own Atlanta-based Turner Broadcasting for each of CBS's 29.7 million shares outstanding.

Turner's Cable News Network valued those securities at $175 a share, which would make the whole deal worth about $5.2 billion. But one Wall Street analyst valued the offer as low as $120 a share, or about $3.6 billion.

CBS had little to say about the offer Thursday. Spokeswoman Anne Luzzatto said, "Once we have evaluated the material, CBS will inform its shareholders of the merits of Turner's proposal."

At the CBS stockholders' annual meeting on Wednesday, CBS chairman Thomas Wyman said the network would fight an unfriendly takeover attempt.

"We are quite clear that the integrity of CBS News and the independence of CBS News are inextricably linked," he said. "Those who seek to gain control of CBS in order to gain control of CBS News threaten that independence and integrity and this country."

Turner said that if he obtained 67 percent of CBS's stock, he would take control of the board and merge his company with the network, with the same terms offered to shareholders who had not tendered their shares.

Anshel valued the deal at $150 a share and rated Turner's chances of success at 50 percent or less.

"What he's doing is a leveraged buyout and he's asking the shareholders to pay for it," said Anshel.

In a leveraged buyout, a company is bought largely with borrowed funds that are paid off with the earnings of that company or through the sale of its assets. Turner did say he would sell some CBS assets.

Citing the various regulatory and legal hurdles, John Reidy, an analyst with Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc., said, "I cannot see an ultimate Turner victory."

"It's going to take at least six to 12 months to get approval," Anshel said. "Obviously that gives CBS ample time to represent its side and mount any counter moves it deems necessary."

Turner met with the analysts for about an hour Thursday to outline his deal.

"He was forceful, typical Ted Turner, confident, brash," said Ed Atorino, an analyst at the securities firm of Smith Barney, Harris Upham & Co.

Atorino estimated Turner's offer would have a market value of $120 a share. He said he believed Turner had a 60 percent chance of succeeding.

Turner, who refused to answer questions, said, "I want to make it very clear that Turner Broadcasting is acting on its own and has no connection with any ideology or other group in this transaction."

A conservative group, Fairness in Media, which is affiliated with Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., has urged its supporters to buy CBS stock to end a perceived liberal bias in CBS News' reporting. It said Thursday it would urge its supporters to back Turner.

Ivan Boesky, a New York financier whose 8.7 percent stake in CBS makes him the company's largest individual stockholder, declined to comment on Turner's proposal.

Also on Thursday, Turner filed lawsuits in federal courts in Atlanta, New York, Oklahoma City, South Carolina and Nebraska, seeking to make the takeover attempt easier.

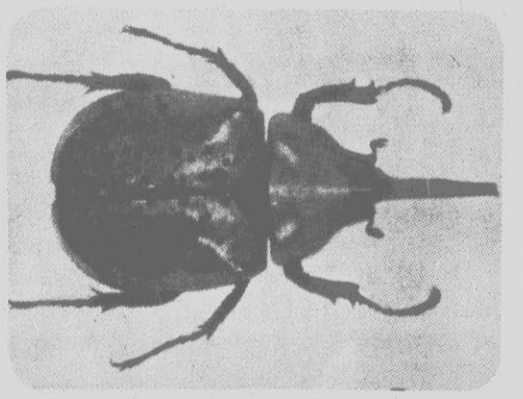

Undercover

FAYETTEVILLE (AP) — Two undercover agents were forced to bail out of their car when the vehicle caught fire as they conducted surveillance at a suspected drug dealer's home.

The agents, Jose L. Ortiz and Phillip Watson of the City-County Bureau of Narcotics, bailed out when they discovered flames underneath the vehicle and in the engine afternoon. Neither of the officers was injured.

The 1984 Mustang was gutted by the fire, which officials believe started when an overheated catalytic converter ignited pine straw underneath the vehicle, according to a report filed at the Cumberland County Sheriff's Department.

How Boring!

Female ambrosia beetles bore into and kill the trees that produce cocoa beans. A researcher in Wisconsin has found that they also mate with their own sons and brothers, and then eat many of them. About 220,000 species of beetles are known. The Grant's Rhinoceros beetle, shown here, is an example of snout beetles, a type whose head sticks far out to form a snout or beak. Museum beetles live under glass cases in museums and chew on the preserved bodies of specimens.
