Jury Ruling Clears Way For New Trials

By DAVID G. SAVAGE
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — In a ruling that could mean new trials for hundreds of blacks convicted by all-white juries, the Supreme Court said Tuesday that a 1986 decision barring prosecutors from excluding blacks from juries must be applied retroactively to all cases on trial or under appeal at the time.

Black convicts who were tried last year or whose cases were on appeal in a federal or state court may use Tuesday's ruling to seek new trials.

The U.S. Supreme Court declared last year that it would no longer tolerate the common practice of allowing prosecutors to remove blacks from juries that were to hear cases of black defendants. Convicts were entitled to new trials unless their prosecutors could show that they removed blacks from their juries for "neutral" reasons.

"Failure to apply a newly declared constitutional rule to criminal cases pending on direct review violates the basic norms of constitutional adjudiction," said Justice Harry Blackmun for a 6-3 majority. "The new rule is to be applied retroactively to all cases, state or federal, pending on direct review or not yet final. There can be no exceptions."

The convict whose case was decided Tuesday, Randall Lamont Griffith, faced the same prosecutor in Louisville, Ky., whose actions prompted last year's decision reversing such convictions. The justices noted that the only difference between the case of James Batson, the key figure in the 1986 ruling, and Griffith's was that the court agreed to hear one before the other.

Attorneys representing black defendants said they had no idea how many cases could be affected by Tuesday's ruling but estimated that the number would be in the hundreds.

"We presume there are quite a few, but we have no accurate way of knowing," said Tanya Coke, research coordinator for the NAACP Legal Defense Fund in New York. "We do see a number of black defendants who are convicted by all-white juries, and clearly they would have a right to appeal on that basis."

In 1965, the Supreme Court ruled that prosecutors may not strike blacks from juries solely on account of their race but added that a defendant must show a "pattern" of such removals to prove racial bias. Last year's decision put the burden back on prosecutors who used their challenges to remove blacks.

Justice Byron White, joined by Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist and Justice Sandra Day O'Connor, dissented from the ruling, saying it would have the effect of "causing substantial disruption in the administration of justice." (Griffith vs. Kentucky, 85-5221.)

Reagan May Go For Partial SDI

By GEORGE C. WILSON
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — President Reagan may pick "within weeks" one of the competing anti-missile defenses so that it can be developed more aggressively for the rest of his term and deployed shortly thereafter, a senior administration official said Tuesday.

Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger, in talking repeatedly over the last several days about the possibility of deploying one part of a space-based anti-missile network rather than the whole shield at once, has been launching "trial balloons" to help assess the political opposition to the incremental approach, the official said.

Aides said Weinberger has become increasingly enthusiastic about the phased-deployment option and is expected to urge Reagan to decide soon so that research on the Strategic Defense Initiative, or SDI, can be narrowed to one system, most of it based in space.

Before the question goes before Reagan, officials said, Frank C. Carlucci, the new director of the White House National Security Council, must be briefed. Gen. James A. Abrahamson, director of the SDI office, is expected to do that soon, the officials said.

Weinberger's trial balloons have drawn fire from some arms-control specialists, which was anticipated, according to the administration official. Sen. Dan Quayle, R-Ind., typified one side of the argument on Monday when he urged Weinberger to deploy something soon. Sen. J. Bennett Johnston Jr., D-La., Tuesday opposed such a step.

"Early deployment of SDI would be a terrible idea even if you thought it would work," Johnston told Weinberger at the first Senate Budget Committee hearing of the year. If Reagan opts for early deployment, Johnston contended, the only space-based anti-missile system within easy reach is one that depends on "kinetic kill" — trying to destroy the mother missile right after launch or, failing that, shooting at its released warheads with such objects as rods or pellets.

The Air Force rejected kinetic kill in a 1960s project called Bambi, Johnston said, and an updated version called High Frontier has been found wanting. Going ahead with the variant recently advanced by a panel under the George C. Marshall Institute would be "dusting that same old tired program off again," Johnston added.

Weinberger replied that the first phase of a space-based anti-missile system would not necessarily be based on kinetic kill. According to aides, Weinberger is leaning toward recommending "the architecture" of a system featuring kinetic weapons described in the Marshall institute report. The insitute, a non-profit group headquartered here, does analyses on scientific issues.

The institute's report recommends placing kinetic-energy weapons in a three-tier defense. The first line of defense would try to destroy the enemy missile immediately after launch in the boost phase, before it had dispersed its warheads; the second layer of defense would attack the missile while it was flying through space, in the late midcourse phase; and the third obstacle, or terminal defense, would be weapons deployed to hit incoming warheads just before they are to explode in the atmosphere.

North Pitt Has Early Closing

By JANE WELBORN

Due to a problem with the water pump at North Pitt High School, students were released early Tuesday and reported to class at 11:30 a.m. today.

Principal Josh Potter said a deep well pump which provides the school facilities with water burned out Tuesday, leaving the school without water.

"We adjusted the schedule so that the students could get out as soon as possible yesterday," Potter said. The students were released from classes at 12:50 p.m.

"We didn't have any water for bathroom purposes, so it was a sanitation problem," the principal said.

"I think the wrong kind of pump was put in," Potter said this morning, "one that didn't take care of the load. We hope to have some water in here by 11 a.m., but right now it looks rather doubtful."

Deputy Superintendent John McKnight said, "We anticipate that everything will be fine" with the school's water system.

"They put in a replacement pump recently, and either part of that pump or something related to the

Business Panel Backs Room Occupancy Tax

By CHERIE EVANS
Reflector Staff Writer

The Convention and Visitors Bureau Committee, comprised of local business representatives, has agreed unanimously to support a room occupancy tax in Pitt County by sending a proposal to the Pitt-Greenville Chamber of Commerce.

About 25 people met this morning at the Holiday Inn to outline the proposal that would install a 3 percent tax on motel and hotel rooms. The tax revenue would be used to operate a tourism bureau in Pitt County.

Local travel agencies, restaurants and retail stores contacted support the tax, committee representatives said.

"At this point there is no one opposed to it," said Ruth Matous, chairman of the Visitors and Conventions Task Force. But, "smaller properties (motels and hotels) are very cautious" about the tax.

Representatives also watched two tapes that discussed the tourism business in North Carolina.

"North Carolina Travel & Tourism," sponsored by the state Travel Council, outlined the travel business as the state's "third largest industry and the state's fastest growing industry."

People are not aware of the economic impact of the travel business in the state because of the diverse group of organizations involved in the business, such as bakeries and taxicab services, the tape said.

The tape also outlined how travel bureaus in the state used their local sites to attract tourist.

For example, Asheville uses a "Biltmore at Christmas" theme; Beaufort uses the Maritime Museum; Burlington uses its retail outlets, and Charlotte uses the Charlotte Motor Speedway and its ability to host large conventions.

Geter Walker, executive director of the Greater Winston-Salem Chamber of Commerce Conventions and Visitors Bureau, was interviewed in the second tape.

A 2 percent occupancy tax was installed in Forsyth County in 1983, Walker said. The tax now is at 3 percent.

"The room tax and its receipts has been a godsend" to Forsyth County, he said. The tax has brought about $2 million and 12,000 travel-related jobs into the county.

"In 1990, travel and tourism will be in the number one employer in the state and by the turn of the century it will be number one in the nation," Walker said.

"For every $1 spent promoting our county through the room tax," $1.78 goes to Forsyth County, 72 cents goes to Winston-Salem and $2.50 goes to the state, he said.

The Forsyth County tourism bureau has a budget of about $1 million, the fourth largest tourism budget in the state, Walker said. The national average for tourism budgets is about $1.7 million. "It has grown by 28 percent each year for two years," he said.

Ayden Plant Closing

VF Corp. will close seven of 13 Wrangler plants — including the one in Ayden — in North Carolina within 90 days, putting an estimated 900 employees out of work, company officials said in Greensboro Tuesday.

The plant closings are part of a sweeping reorganization by the Pennsylvania-based VF Corp., which bought the Wrangler label when it purchased Blue Bell in November 1986.

"We did not say we want to move operations from North Carolina, it's just sort of how it happened," said Tom Collins, Wrangler's spokesman in Greensboro. "What they did was put together a plan that they thought was the best to provide the most and make us the most efficient. Those seven plants in North Carolina did not fit the restructuring plan."

Included in the latest sweep of firings are hourly and salaried employees at sewing plants in Stokesdale, Asheboro, Ayden, Ahoskie, Sanford, Newport and Morehead City. Most of the plants made women's and children's sportswear, although others made men's jeans.

Blue Bell spokesmen were not available today, but John Chaffee, director of the Pitt County Development Commission, said his office was contacted about the closing on Tuesday.

"At this point we do not have a great deal of information. We do not know if the company plans to lease or sell the property, and we have no information on what the lease or sale price might be," Chaffee said.

"But as soon as we can get this in-

New Industry

A new industry for Farmville was to be announced today at a meeting of the Farmville Economic Council.

According to information from the Economic Council and the Pitt County Development Commission, the industry has as a major component a fabric silk-screening operation that possibly will employ up to 100 people within the near future. It will be housed in an industrial building on Anderson Avenue in Farmville, formerly used by the Electric Utilities Co.

The new industry is associated with the Trocadero Products Inc., which has a division in Greenville.

Load Management Savings Reported

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

Load management operations during the month of December saved more than $149,700, the Greenville Utilities Commission was told at a meeting Tuesday night.

Roger Jones, superintendent of the commission's electric systems, said the $149,743 net billing reduction resulted from operating the load management program during Carolina Power & Light Company's peak demand period — between 8 a.m. and 9 a.m. on Dec. 22.

Jones said the reduction in wholesale power costs included a reduction of $83,785 from use of radio-controlled load management switches on domestic water heaters, $62,224 from voltage adjustments, $991 from load reduction at the commission's water plant and $2,743 from operation of emergency generators at Procter & Gamble Paper Products Co.

At the end of December, according to Jones' report, there were 8,222 load management switches in service on domestic water heaters throughout GUC's electric system and 8,468 switches on home central air conditioning units.

In personnel-related matters, commissioners Tuesday night approved an increase in the amount of life insurance for active employees — from $10,000 in case of death to one year's salary (a maximum of $50,000) for each employee.

The increase in life coverage was approved after staff members reported the increase in coverage could be had with a slight decrease in costs to the commission.

Ed Askew reported that the increased coverage is available from Protective Life Insurance Co. for $21,132 a year, compared with the present cost of $22,566 being paid the same insurance company.

The board also eliminated the compulsory retirement age — 70 years old — from GUC's personnel policies after Askew said the change was needed in order to comply with a change in the federal age discrimination in employment act which took effect Jan. 1.

The board also approved the purchase of sludge irrigation equipment for the wastewater treatment plant from Hobbs-Adams Engineering Co. for $56,211 and the purchase of a number of items for the Wellcome power substation, including: a 115,000 volt power transformer from ASEA Electric Corp. for $296,980; two 115,000 volt fault interrupter switches from Siemens Energy & Automation Inc. for $51,960; a 200 amp vacuum circuit breaker from Westinghouse Electric Corp. for $23,150; four 1,200 amp vacuum circuit breakers from Westinghouse for $72,680; two relay and control switchboards from Clark Corp. for $23,226 and substation structure and equipment from Clark for $174,640.

Bundy Convicted

A Martin County Superior Court jury has convicted Jesse Haywood Bundy of involuntary manslaughter in the July 5 shooting death of Ernie Wayne Gardner of Jamesville.

Judge James D. Llewellyn sentenced Bundy, a resident of Jamesville, to eight years in prison after the six-man, six-woman jury returned a guilty verdict.

When Bundy's trial began Thursday in Williamston, the original first degree murder charge was dropped to second degree. By the time the jury began deliberations, the verdict sheet had been written to also allow for consideration of a conviction for involuntary manslaughter.

Bundy's lawyer, Jim Vosburgh, has filed an appeal on behalf of Bundy that includes a motion for a mistrial.

Airport Boardings

The Piedmont Commuter, operated by CCAIR of Charlotte, boarded 2,638 passengers at the Pitt-Greenville Airport during December, according to Eddie Bacon, traffic director for the commuter airline.

Bacon said the 2,638 December boardings represented an 89 percent increase over the number of boardings — 1,395 — in December 1985.

However, the December boardings were down from the 2,715 boardings in November and the 3,037 boardings — an all-time Pitt-Greenville Airport record — in October.

But airport officials said 18 flights into Pitt-Greenville had to be canceled due to bad weather during November and a like number were canceled during December.

Piedmont Commuter presently serves Pitt-Greenville with 10 incoming flights and 10 departures a day.

Preacher Fined For Conduct

ELKHORN, Wis. (AP) — A sidewalk preacher who loudly recited Bible passages and blessings must tone down his messages if he wants to avoid fines for disorderly conduct, a judge says.

Walworth County Circuit Judge James Carlson fined Lester Waterstreet $195 after affirming a jury's guilty verdict against the 40-year-old Elkhorn man on two counts of disorderly conduct.

The judge on Monday stayed the fines for six months and said he would dismiss them if police gave a favorable report on Waterstreet.

"What Lester does is a very positive thing for the community, but he has gone beyond the rights of other people," said Randall Leece, assistant city attorney.

Two businesses filed complaints against Waterstreet.

Charges Filed

ROCKY MOUNT, N.C. (AP) — First-degree murder, rape, kidnapping and armed robbery charges were lodged Tuesday in Nash County District Court against the man accused of killing a Rocky Mount woman who disappeared during a shopping trip.

District attorney Howard S. Boney said he would seek the death penalty against Tommy Demetrius Arrington, 23, of Battleboro, who is charged in connection with the Dec. 18 stabbing death of Mary Nelms Viverette, 28.

Arrington was granted court-appointed lawyers. His probable cause hearing is scheduled for Jan. 27.

Investigators believe Ms. Viverette was abducted from one of two shopping malls. Her abandoned van containing blood-stained clothing was found Dec. 19. A deer hunter found her body near Red Oak on Dec. 20.

An autopsy revealed she was stabbed to death.

Bridge's Closing Has Little Effect

Pitt County probably will not be drastically affected by the closing of the railroad bridge across the Albemarle Sound, John Chaffee, Pitt County Development Commission director, said.

He said it appears that Pitt's neighboring counties to the northeast will be more greatly affected by the apparently permanent closing of the aging five-mile rail span between Chowan and Washington counties Jan. 3.

Chaffee said he understands that most of Pitt's rail shipping is done to points north and south via Greensboro, that about the only Norfolk Southern train traffic that comes through Pitt County is to and from the Texasgulf plant at Aurora.

He said Pitt sympathizes with the farmers the Northeastern counties who have used the route mainly for obtaining farm chemicals and shipping grains and other farm products through the Norfolk-Hampton Roads ports.

He said he does not believe that the Norfolk Southern Corporation's closing of the route will make any difference to industries looking at Pitt as a place to locate or expand, since there aren't many Pitt users anyway.

Norfolk Southern Corp. closed the span after engineers for the railroad found structural deficiencies.

"The bridge is out of service indefinitely," said Richard W. Harris, the railroad's public relations manager in Atlanta. "I doubt seriously if it will ever be reopened."

Officials said the bridge — one of the longest rail spans in the country — had been used to transport grain, fertilizer, pulp wood, chemicals and lumber to market.

Dennis H. Terry, director of economic development for the Albemarle Commission, a regional planning group, said the closing of the span would have an effect, particularly on the area's efforts to attract new industry.

Presbyterians Eye Hymnal Changes

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — A Presbyterian Church panel studying modern religious music for new hymnals also is looking at hymn book issues that sparked protest among United Methodists, a pastor says.

Songwriters of all denominations have written new hymns the past two decades, and many churches have been including them in revised hymnals, the Rev. Jack Rodland, a Presbyterian minister in Ridgewood, N.J. said Tuesday.

"We live in an age of an explosion of new hymns being written," he said. "Revision is needed to include new material of the last 20 years."

Rodland, a member on the hymnal revision panel of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), was invited to attend a three-day meeting of the United Methodist Hymnal Revision Committee, which ends today.

Rodland said his committee is learning about the revision process through problems the Methodists have met as they discuss whether to change language or to drop certain hymns because of connotations of war.

"We all share information from one committee to another," said Rodland, an associate pastor at West Side Presbyterian Church in Ridgewood. "I'm here as an observer.

"We are doing a lot of the same things the United Methodists are doing, but we are about a year behind them," he said.

Last year, the Methodist hymnal committee got a flood of letters and telephone calls from church members who objected to its decision to remove the songs "Onward Christian Soldier" and "Battle Hymn of the Republic" because of militaristic tones.

It later decided against the move, but its consideration of inclusive language to change many masculine pronouns still sparks protest.

Rodland said his denomination's panel, set up in 1984, will consider such matters before publication of new hymnals, targeted for 1990.

"I think every hymn book committee has to look at all the issues of the day," he said.

He added that other denominations have made changes in hymnals with less public outcry than that within the Methodist Church, which tends to release more public information on its activities than many other churches.

The Episcopal Church's revised hymnal, published in 1982, and a new hymn book published by the Church of Christ last year, prompted little public protest, Rodland said.

Methodist Church officials in 1984 decided to revise their hymnals and set up the committee, which will make recommendations to the church's General Conference in May 1988.

South Carolina Installs New Governor

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — Republican Carroll Campbell, extending an olive branch to the Democratic-dominated General Assembly, set a goal of "unparalleled opportunity for all South Carolinians" at his inauguration as governor today.

"It is a time to start building bridges that transcend political differences and personal preferences," said Campbell. "It is a time for all of us to throw away political banners and unite under the banner that reads 'South Carolina: A State of Opportunity."

Campbell was sworn in as the state's 112th governor by one of his predecessors, GOP U.S. Sen. Strom Thurmond, who was a Democrat when he served from 1947 to 1951.

The Greenville businessman, who gave up what was considered a safe seat in Congress to run for governor, is only the second Republican to hold the post since Reconstruction. Former Energy Secretary James B. Edwards, now president of the Medical University of South Carolina, was the first GOP governor in 100 years when he was elected in 1974.

The noon ceremony, which opened with a processional and included the swearing-in of Democrat Nick Theodore as lieutenant governor and the other constitutional officers, was held under sunny skies in brisk temperatures on the south steps of the Statehouse.

Campbell made economic development and education the cornerstones of his inaugural address.

Veteran Envoy May Get Moscow Post

By BARRY SCHWEID
AP Diplomatic Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan is naming Jack P. Matlock Jr., a Russian-speaking career diplomat who urged him to trim the Soviet diplomatic corps in the United States, as the new U.S. ambassador to Moscow, administration officials say.

Matlock, 57, was Reagan's special assistant for Soviet and European affairs at the National Security Council and served as deputy U.S. ambassador in Moscow from 1974 to 1978. He succeeds Arthur A. Hartman, who stepped down last month.

As a presidential adviser, Matlock was a key proponent of Reagan's decision last year to order reductions in the Soviet embassy staff in Washington, the U.N. mission in New York and the consulate in San Francisco as a precaution against espionage.

In all, 80 Soviets were sent home, and a handful of U.S. diplomats likewise were expelled from the Soviet Union, bringing the two sides down to equal diplomatic levels.

The diplomatic feud was touched off by the arrest in August in Moscow of U.S. journalist Nicholas Daniloff on espionage charges.

Tempers finally cooled in this tit-for-tat diplomacy, but a senior U.S. official speaking only on condition of anonymity said Monday the expulsions had created a "tough situation," forcing abrupt changes in routine for American diplomats in Moscow and causing "some resentment" among them.

Several Soviet specialists at the State Department had recommended a more cautious response than Matlock to the apprehension of Daniloff.

The official said Matlock apparently won out over Harry G. Barnes Jr. and Robert L. Barry, two other Russian-speaking diplomats, and other candidates to succeed Hartman in the prized assignment because his job at the National Security Council had placed him close to the White House.

Barnes is the U.S. ambassador to Chile and Barry is in charge of negotiations to reduce superpower tensions in Europe.

"He has the language and the experience. I guess Jack had the inside track because he had the access to the White House," the official said.

Matlock is fluent in Russian. He has made a hobby of reading poetry in Byelorussian, a Soviet language, at bedtime.

The Moscow post opened last month when the State Department announced Hartman would retire for "personal reasons." The department retracted the statement the next day and Hartman told reporters in Moscow he was leaving immediately so his successor could serve the full two years remaining in the Reagan administration. Speculation immediately centered on Matlock to succeed him.

Another U.S. official, also speaking on condition of anonymity, said the White House would announce Reagan's intention to nominate Matlock shortly. Approval by the Senate is required.

Hartman's assignment of more than five years in Moscow was the longest of any U.S. ambassador.

Israelis Relieved

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Foreign Minister Shimon Peres said he was relieved at reports U.S. officials have clarified that Israel did not sent arms to Iran for a five-month period without authorization from the United States.

In a related development, a Foreign Ministry official said Tuesday an Israeli envoy told American officials a year ago they had no more than a 25 percent chance of freeing U.S. hostages in Lebanon by selling arms to Iran.

The official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said Peres told a parliamentary committee that counterterrorism adviser Amiram Nir gave the pessimistic assessment to the U.S. National Security Council in Washington last January.

Peres and other Israeli leaders have expressed concern Israel may be made a scapegoat in the Iran arms affair.

One of the documents at issue was a memo in which former national security adviser Robert McFarlane said President Reagan did not authorize arms shipments to Iran until January 1986.

On Tuesday, Israeli leaders expressed satisfaction with reports of an acknowledgement by McFarlane that Reagan approved Israeli arms shipments that began in August 1985.

Israel repeatedly has denied it shipped arms to Iran for five months without U.S. approval.

"I'm relieved," Peres told reporters after briefing Parliament's Foreign Affairs and Defense Committee. He said Israel got involved in the arms deal only "as a loyal friend" to the United States.

He reiterated this in a message sent to Vice President Bush on Monday.

The Foreign Ministry official said Peres told the committee about Nir's negative assessment of chances for freeing the hostages.

Rebels Launch Attacks

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Moslem rebels attacked 14 targets throughout Mindanao island, burning bridges and buildings, setting off grenades and firing at a university campus, the military said today.

One person was reported killed and at least 13 injured in the attacks that began Tuesday night and ended before dawn today. The island, a stronghold of Moslem separatists who have fought a 14-year-old insurgency, is about 500 miles south of Manila.

Hashim Salamat, leader of the Moro Islamic Front, said in Saudi Arabia his group was responsible for the attacks. He told The Associated Press more attacks will be launched as part of a "long struggle ... which was never suspended."

The front said in an earlier statement it would resume fighting because Mrs. Aquino's government has dealt with rival Moslem rebels in its peace overtures.

Earlier this month, Nur Misuari, leader of the Moro National Liberation Front, said his group would accept regional autonomy instead of independence. The agreement was denounced by Salamat, who also wants autonomy but opposes Misuari's group for tribal and personal reasons.

High Court Allows Banks To Set Up Brokerage Units

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court, ruling in a big-stakes battle, today cleared the way for national banks to establish discount securities brokerage outlets wherever they want.

The 8-0 decision, a victory for the Reagan administration as well as the banks, overturned a federal appeals court ruling that limited bank expansion into the business of selling stocks and bonds.

Justice Byron R. White, writing for the court, said the U.S. Comptroller of the Currency may approve plans by national banks to offer customers widespread brokerage services.

A federal law that limits branch banking activities, the 1927 McFadden Act, does not apply to establishing a securities business because that is not a "core banking function," White said.

"The comptroller reasonably interprets the statute as requiring competitive equality only in core banking functions, and not in all incidental services in which national banks are authorized to engage," White said. "A discount brokerage service is not a core banking function."

The comptroller in 1982 approved plans by two national banks — Security Pacific Corp, with offices in California and elsewhere in the West, and Union Planters National Bank of Memphis, Tenn. — to enter the discount brokerage business.

The Supreme Court refused last year to hear a securities industry challenge to the comptroller's decision.

But the securities industry succeeded in preventing unlimited bank expansion into the securities business when the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ruled in its favor in 1985.

The appeals court said national banks may conduct brokerage activities only at established bank branch offices. The decision, until today, effectively prohibited banks from crossing state lines to set up new brokerage outlets or from creating new offices for selling securities within the bank's home state.

Security Pacific set up its own brokerage business and Union Planters purchased Brenner Steed and Associates Inc., a Memphis brokerage.

The banks and the administration asked the Supreme Court to overturn the appeals court ruling.

The comptroller of the currency is considering scores of applications by national banks to enter the business of discount securities trading.

The Securities Industry Association, representing more than 500 securities brokers, dealers and underwriters, led the fight to block unfettered bank expansion into the brokerage business.

The association said the brokerage services should be provided only at the banks' central offices or at licensed branches.

But the banks said the brokerage houses are trying to insulate themselves from competition.

The Supreme Court today agreed with the banking industry and the administration that the McFadden Act is intended to restrain traditional banking services — taking deposits, paying checks and lending money.

Today's ruling is in keeping with the recent trend toward deregulation, with the courts and the administration obliterating legal barriers, many erected during the Depression, between the banking industry and other forms of commerce.

The Federal Reserve Board has tried in some cases to stem the deregulatory tide.

But the Supreme Court said last year the Fed lacks power to limit the browth of so-called "non-bank banks." That ruling gave businesses such as brokerage firms, department stores and conglomerates free rein to set up banking facilities.

Justice Antonin Scalia did not take part in today's ruling.

The cases are Comptroller of the Currency vs. Securities Industry Association, 85-971, and Security Pacific National Bank vs. Securities Industry Association, 85-972.

Accept Revisions

An exercise in democracy — not a room full of smoking guns.

That's what a public hearing on revising school attendance lines in Pitt County looked like. The debate on the issue has begun in the public arena, and, predictably, the battle is centering around shifting students from one school to another.

At last week's public hearing, parents from Westhaven made it clear they object to sending children from that area to Sadie Saulter School instead of W.H. Robinson. Ayden residents feel as though they should be gaining students from the changes, rather than remaining at status quo. Residents of Clayroot, long loyal to their area schools, fear a disruption of tradition and allegiance.

The concerns expressed are proper and understandable. They should be respected and recognized. But redrawing attendance lines is necessary. It must be done with the best interest of the entire school system — not the impact on selected groups or areas — in mind.

Charges of racial imbalance created by the plan bear close inspection, but both residents and board members should take care to look at the figures as they relate to one unified system — not a city system versus a county system.

Those making the charges should be certain their objections are to the effects on racial balance of the entire school system — not just the racial balance of selected schools.

The public should also consider that perfect racial balance is unachievable. Alterations to the current situation, however, are imperative.

Claims that the revisions will disrupt the character of education in schools are superficial. The revisions are not designed to damage the quality of instruction and in the long run, they will help, not hurt.

No changes in attendance lines have been made in 10 years — a period of time in which drastic changes in growth patterns occurred. Schools in Winterville are hard-pressed by expanding pupil populations; those in Farmville suffer from shrinking student numbers. And unless adjustments are made, some Greenville schools will grow decidedly more black or more white in the coming years.

Through redrawing attendance lines, the opportunity for improvement exists. The public should accept this fact and prepare to support the concept.

Early Warning

Economists, especially those in the field of energy-watching, are warning another oil crisis is in the making. They tell us the United States will be even more vulnerable when it comes than in 1973.

They point to (a) OPEC's moves to regain control of the oil market which they expect will enjoy eventual success, and (b) the fact that the United States oil resource is in the declining years of its life cycle. Production in several of our Western states is already crippled with hard times besetting our producers who are unable to meet price levels set by Middle East producers and their allies that comprise the OPEC monopoly.

So many of our oil wells that are being shut down will be uncertain future sources of the energy fuel. Even exploration for new wells has come to a virtual halt.

Forecasters tell us the next time OPEC applies the big squeeze we will be even more dependent upon imports than in 1973. They also tell us the presently large excess capacity may be exhausted in less than a decade. We are reminded, too, the OPEC nations hold two-thirds of the world's proven oil reserves which are capable of being produced at low cost.

Americans learned much about conserving energy just a few years ago: well-insulated buildings, smaller automobiles, life with less electricity, solar heat systems — to name a few. The lessons should not be forgotten.

It may well be eventually wise for Congress to take more ambitious steps to achieve greater energy efficiency improvements than thus far made. We do have time, and there is no reason to be caught by surprise.

Independent Counsel Has A Lonely Role

Confusion about what we can expect of an independent counsel and what we can expect of congressional committees investigating the Iran-contras affair may start with the fact that both must begin from a common set of factual questions.

Two select committees will share with Lawrence E. Walsh, the newly appointed counsel, the responsibility for tracking down who did what, who knew of what was done, and what understandings created the sense of authority and approval that permitted lower-level officials to make decisions of presidential scope.

But beyond the "whodunit" stage the paths of prosecutors and congressional committees part. The country is entitled to fair but probing congressional hearings and reports dealing with the wisdom of selling arms to Iran, the propriety of administrative efforts to privatize support of the contras during a period when Congress had denied governmental support, and the adequacies of the structure that may have allowed very fundamental decisions to be made and then elaborately executed without presidential or Cabinet-level concurrence or, perhaps, knowledge. Walsh, as the independent counsel, can't have much to say about these central issues. His charge is to decide whether crimes have been committed, and even egregious improprieties and stunning follies are not criminal.

This division of roles should be simple enough. But, as a country, we have a tendency to confuse a conclusion that behavior is not criminal with a judgment that it is not immoral, not improper in terms of how governmental institutions must relate to each other, and not dangerously reckless.

Even our valued traditions of liberal tolerance conspire in the same direction. In private life we have gone far (perhaps too far) toward demanding social acceptance of whatever behavior is not forbidden criminally. And then there is the tendency of our interest in resolving a mystery to overwhelm our concern about its meaning.

What does this mean to a newly appointed independent counsel in a situation in which important congressional hearings will parallel his investigative and prosecutorial processes? Most obvious, he must expect his task to be complicated by conflicts with congressional investigations over the availability of evidence that each needs for its own purposes.

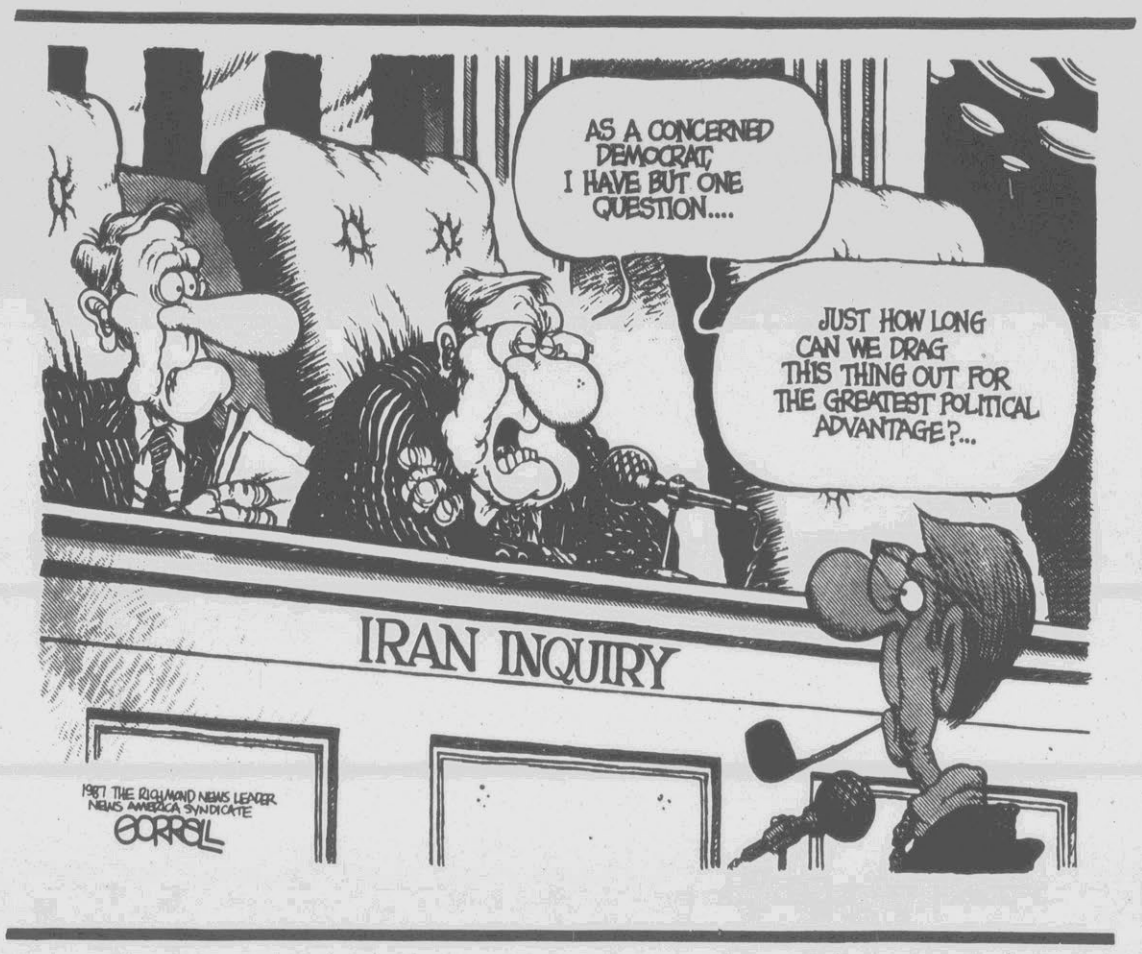

There will also be conflicts over publicity, which threatens to create prejudice in any future jury at the same time that it informs a public that needs to know what has happened. On the other hand, the independent counsel's effort to get at the facts will be aided by the parallel efforts of two other bodies.

More broadly, the independent counsel must place his responsibilities in the context of all the issues — moral, policy and structural as well as criminal — that must be explored by three bodies. In this context he has two central tasks: to find out what happened and then to decide whether anything was done that warrants prosecution. In carrying out the first task he is a valuable partner of, and check on, the new select committees whose broader judgments must start off from the same factual base. In the second task the counsel's responsibility is a lonely one.

This is more than a plateful of responsibility. If the independent counsel addresses each of these questions and when he makes his views public many months from now, we will all be the wiser for his efforts — whether he decides to prosecute anyone or not. There will be major questions that he leaves to be explored by the congressional committees.

That is as it should be in a democracy. The prosecutor's responsibility is a limited one. The independent counsel's final service to all of us, which may be more badly needed in this case than in any of the others that special prosecutors have faced, might be to remind us of the limits of his charge, to speak explicitly of the limits of criminal law itself as a device for coming to grips with issues of propriety, morality and wisdom that are central to the nation.

Partisan Bickering Will Escalate

The ongoing conflict between Republican Gov. Jim Martin and the Democratic leaders of the General Assembly will take on a new character when the legislature reconvenes next month. What has been to this point mostly a struggle for personal and partisan political power, will develop into a clash of ideologies.

When Martin took office in 1985, he was confronted by a legislature still stinging from the pounding the Democratic Party took in the 1984 Republican landslide. With confortable majorities in both houses of the assembly, legislative Democrats let Martin know immediately that they were in charge and that he didn't really matter. Thus, they acted like children in refusing to allow Martin to give his State of the State address when he wanted.

Martin came to office intent on building a Republican Party for the state. He had run for office on a skeletal platform and added little to it during his first six months in office. What he did add — the question of a gubernatorial veto — was widely perceived as a partisan run-on issue for Republican candidates in 1986 and afterwards.

To make the point that the 1985 conflicts were more personal and partisan than ideological, take the major issue of that session: a tax cut. Martin had proposed a package of cuts during the campaign. Democrats agreed with him that taxes should be cut, but they couldn't let him have a victory, so they mostly cut different taxes. (It should be noted that Martin did win some of the relief he sought in the areas of intangibles and inventory taxes.)

Another way of looking at how little ideological difference appeared between the governor and legislature is to look at the changes he made to the 1986-87 budget which former Gov. Jim Hunt had presented before leaving office.

During the 1984 U.S. Senate campaign, the Republican Party repeatedly called Hunt a liberal, while at the same time claiming that Martin was correctly conservative.

Yet, when Martin took office, he did little if anything to undo eight years of "liberal" government by Hunt. The only significant change he made in Hunt's proposed 1986-87 budget was a cut in the $1.2 million public fund for abortions. While that is a major issue, it hardly registers a blip on a nearly $9 billion state budget.

Today, halfway through Martin's term, it is still rare to find a program where Martin has replaced one of Hunt's "liberal" policies with a more "conservative" approach. Most of the significant course changes he has made defy such ideological labeling, although it certainly can be said that he has steered the Industrial Commission onto a more conservative course.

The question of a gubernatorial veto would be called ideological in almost any other setting. But in 1985, Martin picked up on the question almost as an afterthought, only beginning to push for it after the session had begun. When he started to get good press coverage with the veto issue, Martin began using it to publicly bash the legislature.

In the 1986 short session, Martin and the legislature had their first real knock down ideological dispute over the transfer of General Fund money to the Highway Fund. They compromised with Martin getting only a small piece of what he wanted.

In 1987, the personal and partisan bickering will continue. But several major ideological differences will also be on the table. They are prisons, school construction and a highway trust fund. A future column will discuss those issues in more detail.

Cap's SDI Offer

WASHINGTON — Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger has suggested early deployment of space-based missile defense in a private session with President Reagan held against the backdrop of sharpened congressional opposition to the Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI) and bureaucratic jockeying over a 1987 U.S.-Soviet arms-control summit.

The idea was put forth at the Dec. 17 White House session as something the president might or might not wish to pursue. But the wealth of evidence that deployment of an initial stage of space-based defense against Soviet attack was entirely "feasible" by 1993 or 1994 impressed Reagan. It was Weinberger's first and very secret suggestion to Reagan that the 10-year extension of the ABM treaty tentatively agreed to at Reykjavik could dangerously set back the entire SDI program.

Thus opened a new round of familiar struggle pitting the Pentagon against congressional and State Department detentists. This is a harbinger of the struggle ahead between Reagan advisers for positions to be taken at any summit later this year with Mikhail Gorbachev.

Weinberger has never sought to conceal his dismay that, in his absence from the October Reykjavik summit, Reagan agreed to a 10-year moratorium on withdrawing from the Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty (ABM). That arms control bargain, tentatively reached at the Iceland summit, collapsed not over the 10-year moratorium but over the unacceptably narrow Soviet definition of permitted research and testing during the 10 years.

What Weinberger has now offered the president is this significant but intentionally low-key warning: Progress in research and development so far shows that the proposed 10-year moratorium carries real, not just psychological, penalties for SDI, the program Reagan wants to leave as the most important legacy of his presidency.

That parallels rising demands from the president's staunchest backers on Capitol Hill. Defense-minded Sens. Pete Wilson, Jim McClure, Malcolm Wallop, Gordon Humphrey and Dan Quayle — and a GOP presidential aspirant, Rep. Jack Kemp — have repeatedly issued this warning to the administration: If SDI does not demonstrate some visible function to prove its future viability, it will be eviscerated and die on the congressional vine.

That brought Quayle's outburst on ABC's David Brinkley program: "The patience of Congress is running out on SDI .... We want to see action .... We ought to look at deploying SDI."

But for Weinberger, pressuring Reagan on early or near-term deployment of SDI is a dangerous way to proceed. It would galvanize Capitol Hill liberals and State Department detentists, led by Secretary George Shultz, who would accuse the Pentagon of brazenly undermining arms control.

The experts who accompanied Weinberger to the White House (including the SDI director, Gen. James Abrahamson, and Adm. William Crowe, chairman of the Joint Chiefs) left Reagan in no doubt. They said that deploying the first stage of an anti-missile defense system by 1993 or 1994, based not on the ground but in space, has now becomes a realistic option for the U.S.

The system, known as Space-Based Kinetic Kill Vehicles (SBKKV), would employ kinetic energy to destroy missiles in the boost phase, soon after they left the ground. That would amount to a partial defense umbrella effective not just for the protection of land-based U.S. missile silos but also population centers.

The fact Weinberger has now made the solid move that he failed to make last fall for stronger protection of Reagan's investment in SDI, whatever the cost to the ABM treaty, heralds a shift. The president's position in a third U.S.-Soviet summit is likely to be firmer on safeguarding the heavy stake he has made for himself in SDI, and less pliant in buying Soviet siren songs to neutralize it.

Strength For Today

Look forward, not backward; look out, not in; look up, not down. Here is a three-fold rule for living a happy and wholesome life.

Some people spend their whole lives looking back ruefully on things that can never be changed. Others every day miss the wholesome joys of living because they constantly center on their aches and pains. The sun shines brightly, the landscape beckons with hands of beauty, but still these two types of people remain miserable.

The most important cure is, look up, beyond the turmoil of selfish men to the justice of God. Common sense and religious faith urge us to look up from a world which would drive us to despair and to keep our eyes fixed on the eternal principles of life which God established as securely as he established the stars.

Involved In Struggle

N'DJAMENA, Chad (AP) — The United States, France and Libya are involved in a struggle over Chad, an arid and impoverished African nation that has become an unlikely arena for international conflict.

Chad produces some cotton and livestock and has few proven mineral resources. The north-central African country has an estimated 5.1 million people and has been wracked by civil war for more than two decades.

The leader of neighboring Libya, Col. Moammar Gadhafi, has been after a dusty, inhospitable stretch of northern Chad since he came to power in Libya in 1969. Gadhafi's troops occupied part of the area and President Hissene Habre of Chad devotes half of his meagre $120 million national budget trying to recover the territory.

France is spending millions of dollars and is laying its military and political prestige on the line to back the Habre government in the former French colony. France's other former African colonies, such as the Ivory Coast and the Central African Republic, have made clear that French credibility is on the line in Chad.

The United States, long at odds with Gadhafi, is providing financial and military support to Chad.

members of Habre's government also come from there.

For Gadhafi, Chad is the "natural continuation" of Libya. He began by arming and supplying the northern rebels fighting the N'Djamena government and in 1973 moved Libyan forces into the Aouzou Strip, a 44,000 square-mile stretch of land across the top of Chad.

The Aouzou is the subject of a territorial dispute dating back to pre-World War II days. Nearly every northernleader has allied himself with Gadhafi at one time or another, including Habre.

While president of Chad from 1980 to 1982, former rebel leader Goukouni Oueddei invited the Libyans into the country and they gladly accepted, sending in 7,000 men. Less than two years later, however, responding in part to international pressure over Gadhafi's plan to merge Chad and Libya, Goukouni ordered the Libyans to leave, and they withdrew to the Aouzou.

Habre ousted Goukouni in 1982, sending him fleeing to the north. The following year Goukouni started a military drive on N'Djamena. After Libyan troops became directly involved, France sent in troops and halted the advance.

President Francois Mitterrand of

'Like France, the United States is concerned about Gadhafi's expansionist plans in Africa. The Reagan administration has accused Gadhafi of fostering terrorism around the world and in April 1986 sent warplanes to bomb Libya.'

Like France, the United States is concerned about Gadhafi's expansionist plans in Africa. The Reagan administration has accused Gadhafi of fostering terrorism around the world and in April 1986 sent warplanes to bomb Libya.

French and Chadian officials say that if Gadhafi succeeds in installing a pro-Libyan regime in N'Djamena it would be a step toward threatening other countries in the region such as Sudan and Niger.

U.S. policy has been to support Chad's resistance to Libya's southern expansion and the United States has come up with $15 million in supplemental military aid to Chad, on top of the previously approved $5 million.

The struggle is over Borkou, Ennedi and Tibesti, known as BET, Chad's three northern administrative regions.

Chad was created out of what used to be French Equatorial Africa with arbitrarily drawn borders that pushed together nearly 200 distinct ethnic groups. Civil war has raged almost continuously since independence from France in 1960 and no president ever has been able to rule the whole country.

Habre wants to reconquer the north. He is from the oasis of Faya Largeau, the largest town in the BET, and most of the important France and Gadhafi signed a mutual troop withdrawal agreement in late 1984 and the French pulled out. Gadhafi, however, did not remove his troops.

The French returned now maintain 1,400 troops in Chad and have pledged to counter any Libyan military activity south of the 16th parallel.

According to French and Chadian officials, Gadhafi broke with Goukouni in October, for reasons not yet clear. Gadhafi then launched an attack on Goukouni's forces in the northern Tibesti mountains.

The rebels, later joined by government troops, appear to have held off the Libyan troops in the mountains.

Habre, taking advantage of the new situation, took the offensive and captured the northern town of Fada, defeating a large Libyan contingent.

The French have not sought a conflict with Libya, but French support for Chad is crucial if France is to retain its credibility among other Francophone African countries, where Paris long has served as the gendarme.

Charlotte-Based League Wants Public Involved In Budget Crisis

By TOM MINEHART
AP Business Writer

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Solving America's budget problem is too important to be left to politicians, says the founder of a Charlotte-based national organization formed to get citizens involved in the solution.

"Our political leaders are unable to solve the crisis because they don't understand it," said Scott Rasmussen, president of the League of Concerned Americans. "They've failed to define the crisis. The leaders right now are focusing on the ($180 billion) deficit.

"But the real budget crisis is the failure of the budget to reflect the priorities of the American people," he said. "We have to recognize that balancing the budget without increasing taxes is one priority, but so is providing funds for public investment, environmental protection ... the poor, the elderly and defense. That's a more difficult problem to solve."

Rasmussen, 30, said the 500-member league does not make a profit, lobby or support any candidate or ideology, although he called its philosophy "progressive with a commitment to limited government."

He described it as a grass-roots educational organization that develops alternative ideas on the budget through discussions among ordinary Americans. Only if the public understands and cares about the budget, he said, can Congress make the proper decisions to develop the budget.

Rasmussen founded the ESPN television sports network in 1979 with his father, William Rasmussen. He became interested in the U.S. budget when, after ESPN was sold in 1983, he looked around for a candidate to support in the 1984 presidential election and found no one was really addressing the budget problem.

"I thought Gary Hart and Ronald Reagan both had a very good intuitive sense of the need for change in the country," he said. "But I felt both failed to offer the budgetary choices to carry through on their instincts."

Rasmussen developed his own budget ideas based on the premise that true budgetary reform would require reforming the largest programs, particularly Social Security and defense. He sent his ideas to friends.

"The comments that came back were not all favorable," he said. But out of the exchange evolved the idea that the general public could and should get involved in the debate.

In 1985 Rasmussen wrote a book called "Solving the Budget Crisis: Hope for America's Future" and distributed it to every congressman and senator and other top federal officials.

Out of the original group of friends that reviewed the book grew a network that was formalized in 1985 as the League of Concerned Americans. In January 1986 the league developed an alternative U.S. budget proposal packaged and organized like the real thing, and Rasmussen plans to do the same every two years.

The league recently moved its headquarters from Greencastle, Ind., where Rasmussen graduated from DePauw University last year, to Charlotte, where he had lived earlier and gone to school.

Rasmussen said the nation could save $250 billion in Social Security taxes over five years by gradually increasing the retirement age and by stopping the government from tapping into the Social Security trust fund surplus.

He said the United States could save $50 billion a year in military spending by having European and other nations contribute, on a pro-rata basis, the costs to defend them.

He said real budgetary reform requires not just changing spending on the myriad of programs the government operates, but re-examining a system that has remained basically unchanged since President Roosevelt began the New Deal in response to the depression of the 1930s.

He said President Reagan's $1.024 trillion budget, submitted Jan. 5, failed to make the kind of changes needed to avoid tax increases in the long run.

But Rasmussen stresses that the league doesn't just push his ideas.

"I don't have the arrogance or ego to believe everything I say is the ultimate answer," he said. "But I can focus attention on (the issue) by saying here's an alternative. Hopefully that will stimulate people to think and maybe come up with something better."

As part of that effort, Rasmussen will begin soon a nationwide radio show, called "Something to Think About," that invites people to call a toll-free number with budgetary questions and ideas.

Rasmussen said his ESPN experience — particularly his association with the Getty Oil Co., which financed it — helped him develop his ideas. Not only did he gain financial experience, but he learned that "this is a great country where anything can happen. ... You never know till you try."

The league has 40 chapters in 22 states, dues of $25 a year, a staff of three and a $200,000 budget of its own. Rasmussen said it is the only organization of its kind. Other groups focus on the budget only as an aspect of another issue, such as taxes, or concentrate on lobbying public officials instead of involving people.

Rasmussen said he has no plans to run for public office himself.

Lawyers Want More Disclosures

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — Insurance companies would be forced to disclose annually to the state the outcome of malpractice claims and would be forbidden from requiring out-of-court settlements to be sealed from public view under legislative proposals being consider by an organization of trial lawyers.

"I think that our basic premise is that the more the public knows ... the better able legislators will be to assess the situation and enact needed laws," David Blackwell, executive vice president and counsel of the North Carolina Academy of Trial Lawyers, said Tuesday.

Blackwell joined the academy's president, Jim Maxwell, and its vice president for public services and information, Jim Fuller, at a seminar on liability insurance sponsored by the Southern Newspaper Publishers Association.

The insurance industry already has indicated that it will push for changes in civil liability law during this year's legislative session, which begins Feb. 9. Blackwell told the newspaper group that an Academy of Trial Lawyers committee would meet Friday to consider a package of proposed legislation on that and other matters.

Insurance lobbyists contend that an "explosion" in the number of lawsuits and the amount of money awarded by juries to victims of negligence has forced up insurance premiums. The industry is seeking an array of revisions including limits, or "caps," on damage awards.

Attorneys say the alleged growth of litigation and awards is a myth concocted by the insurance industry to mask poor business decisions that in the mid-1980s reduced its profits. Attorneys say tougher regulation of the industry is needed.

According to Blackwell, the academy committee this week will consider endorsing three disclosure-related bills, which he emphasized are still only tentative proposals. The measures, if enacted, would:

— Limit courts' authority to order that documents involved in liability cases be kept secret. Additionally, companies would be prohibited from requesting as a condition of a claim settlement that the claimant or his attorney keep the amount of the settlement secret or return or destroy related documents.

— Require that, in all liability claims involving professional malpractice that are settled out of court or moved to final judgement in the court system, be reported to the insurance commissioner.

Such reports would include the nature of the claim and the damages assessed; the amount of the settlement or judgment; any major professional and legal issues; attorneys' fees and expenses; and the specialty of each licensed professional against whom the claim is filed.

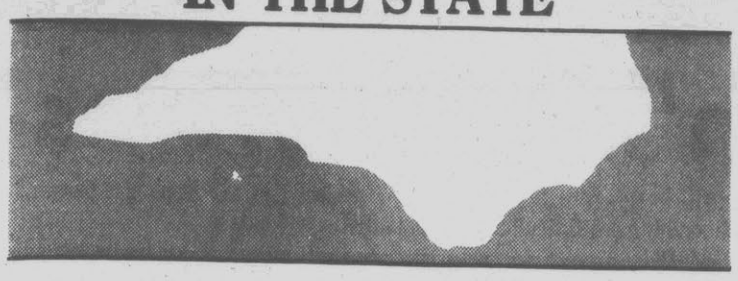

— Require that professional liability insurers disclose potential conflicts of interest of their officers and board members. For example, companies would have to report whether they insure people within the same profession and specialization as that of any officer or director of the company.

Twins Celebrate

DENTON, N.C. (AP) — Twin sisters Allie Grubb Hill and Maggie Grubb Lambeth beat the odds to celebrate their 103rd birthday together.

The Guiness Book of World Records estimated the chances of twins surviving to the age of 103 are one in 500 million. A spokeswoman for the Guiness Book said there were no older living twins listed in the latest edition.

Rep. Howard Coble, R-N.C., Tuesday brought the twins a message from President Reagan as they celebrated at Mountain Vista Health Park, a nursing home.

Gov. Jim Martin also sent his regards via letter, congratulating the twins on the comfort and security they have afforded each other for more than a century.

Even if only direct descendants of the identical twins showed up, they would have accounted for 180 servings of birthday cake. Ms. Lambeth has six living children, 18 grandchildren, 31 great-grandchildren and 11 great-great-grandchildren. Ms. Hill has 10 living children, 30 grandchildren, 54 great-grandchildren and 20 great-great-grandchildren.

Ms. Lambeth has been a resident of the nursing home since December, while Ms. Hill resists the idea. Five of her children take turns keeping her in their homes a month at a time.

Shearon Harris

NEW HILL, N.C. (AP) — One day after the Nuclear Regulatory Commission issued a full-power license for the Shearon Harris Nuclear Plant, plant officials shut down the facility to examine two problems with the emergency cooling system.

Elizabeth M. Bean, spokeswoman for Carolina Power & Light Co., said Tuesday that problems were discovered in one of three auxiliary water pump and the emergency cooling system for heating and ventilation equipment.

Ms. Bean said neither problem endangered the public and that the plant was shut down so engineers could examine the situation. She said it would take several days to locate the problems and fix them. Then, power likely would be increased gradually, she said.

NRC officials and Ms. Bean described the problems as routine. They said it was the kind of thing that testing was intended to detect.

Guard Freed

RALEIGH (AP) — A federal prison guard charged in the suffocation death of an inmate on a prison bus has been released without bond pending his March 9 trial in Raleigh.

Gerry Allison Dale, a lieutenant with the Bureau of Prisons in Talladega, Ala., made his first appearance before a federal magistrate Tuesday. He stood expressionless as U.S. Magistrate Alexander Denson explained the two counts against him and described his rights.

Dale is required to make weekly telephone contact with a federal probation officer, ask permission before changing his address and appear at all court proceedings.

He is charged in the March 1986 death of Vinson Preston Harris of Charlotte, who died on a federal prison bus in Butner. Dale, who was in charge of the bus taking Harris, 31, and other convicts to a federal jail in Lewisburg, Pa., is accused of wrapping Harris' face and head with an elastic bandage and duct tape, smothering him.

Bond Denied

FAYETTEVILLE (AP) — A federal magistrate has ruled that two white supremacists should be held in jail until their trial on conspiracy charges because they pose a threat to witnesses, including two co-defendants who have agreed to help prosecutors.

Magistrate Wallace W. Dixon Tuesday refused bond for former White Patriot Party Chaplain Stephen S. Miller and Anthony Todd Wydra, both of Fayetteville, despite the assertions of both men they would not be a threat to witnesses.

Miller told Dixon he intended to "vanquish my opponents through the legal system and not through going out and taking matters in my own hands."

Wydra said he did not have the time or money to pursue the government witnesses.

Miller, 36, and Wydra, 19, were arrested Jan. 7 after a federal grand jury indicted them and three other area men on charges of conspiring to obtain weapons and explosives to blow up the offices of an Alabama civil rights group.

Building Decline

RALEIGH (AP) — Economists say an expected 11 percent decrease in housing starts this year in North Carolina, particularly in the development of apartments, will make it difficult to continue the growth of 1986.

"Housing and retail sales are the two engines driving the recovery now," said Harry M. Davis, a professor of finance at Appalachian State University. "And both will be down in 1987."

Construction of homes and apartments is expected to drop from 67,400 in the state in 1986 to 60,300 this year. Apartments will constitute most of the drop, falling from 18,600 units last year to 12,800 this year.

Sales of existing homes are expected to grow more slowly this year in North Carolina and the nation, despite continuing low interest rates.

Soldiers

FAYETTEVILLE, N.C. (AP) — More than 500 Fort Bragg soldiers remained confined to barracks early today as an investigation continued into the apparent theft of two submachine guns on Friday.

Maj. Mike Nason, public affairs officer for the 82nd Airborne Division, said the Army's Criminal Investigation Division "was not able to give me any hope they are making progress."

The weapons apparently were removed from two Sheridan tanks during a field exercise near Orangeburg, S.C.

Former Transportation Board Member Accused Of Using Inside Info For Profit

MARSHALL, N.C. (AP) — Zeno H. Ponder, a longtime Democratic leader of Madison County, has been indicted on a charge that he conspired to profit from inside information he learned while on the state Board of Transportation.

The indictment returned by a Madison County grand jury Tuesday says that Ponder, 65, conspired to make money by secretly buying land in the path of a proposed road that the transportation board was in the process of approving.

The indictment says that Ponder "gained his knowledge of the intent of the board by virtue of his official position and then did engage in the conspiracy to place other persons at a financial disadvantage." Ponder served on the board from 1981 to 1984.

Last January, a federal judge dismissed similar charges against Ponder, saying that a federal court was not the proper forum through which to question the activities of a state highway commissioner.

Those charges said that Ponder, his wife, a nephew and a business associate used a secret trust fund in 1982 to buy more than 300 acres along the route of a proposed 15-mile road linking Marshall with the Trust community in southwest Madison County.

According to the federal indictment, Marshall Kanner (the business associate) signed a trust agreement in March 1982 with Larry Leake, an Asheville lawyer and former state senator, to speculate in real estate in Madison County. It said that, in an effort to hide Ponder's involvement from potential land sellers, the agreement was never filed with the register of deeds office. The 304 acres bought was put in the name of either Leake or Kanner.

The $15.1 million road project is under construction and is expected to be completed by 1995.

After the federal charges were dismissed, U.S. Attorney Charles R. Brewer said he would encourage the state to pursue prosecution. J.T. Rusher, the Republican district attorney of Madison County, said Tuesday he would do just that. "We are going to prosecute, and we contemplate putting the defendant on trial as early as possible," he said.

Rusher said the decision to seek an indictment was made with J.Randolph Riley, the Wake County district attorney who left office in December. Riley and Rusher were asked in August 1984 by then-Gov. James B. Hunt Jr. to investigate allegations that Ponder had misused his position on the board.

The investigation, conducted by the State Bureau of Investigation, did not uncover enough evidence to charge Ponder.

"We didn't exonerate him at the time," Rusher said. "We just said that we felt that there wasn't enough evidence to bring charges and prove guilt beyond a reasonable doubt."

Ponder said the new charges are unfounded.

"This is the most politically motivated, asinine lawsuit I've ever heard of," he said. "If they think I profited from that deal, they can have their money and land back — at a discount. This land isn't worth a thing — perhaps the best place in the county for a landfill."

Ponder said that Brewer, who was appointed by Sen. Jesse A. Helms, was carrying out a vendetta against him. "This is all politics," he said.

Brewer could not be reached for comment. Rusher said that he wouldn't discuss politics.

"I don't want to get in a public war of words with Zeno," he said. "All I can say now is that he has been indicted and that we are proceeding with the case."

Vote By GOP Caucus Delayed

WASHINGTON (AP) — A caucus of 45 Senate Republicans that was to decide whether Sen. Richard Lugar of Indiana or Sen. Jesse Helms of North Carolina will be the ranking minority member on the Foreign Relations Committee has been postponed until next week.

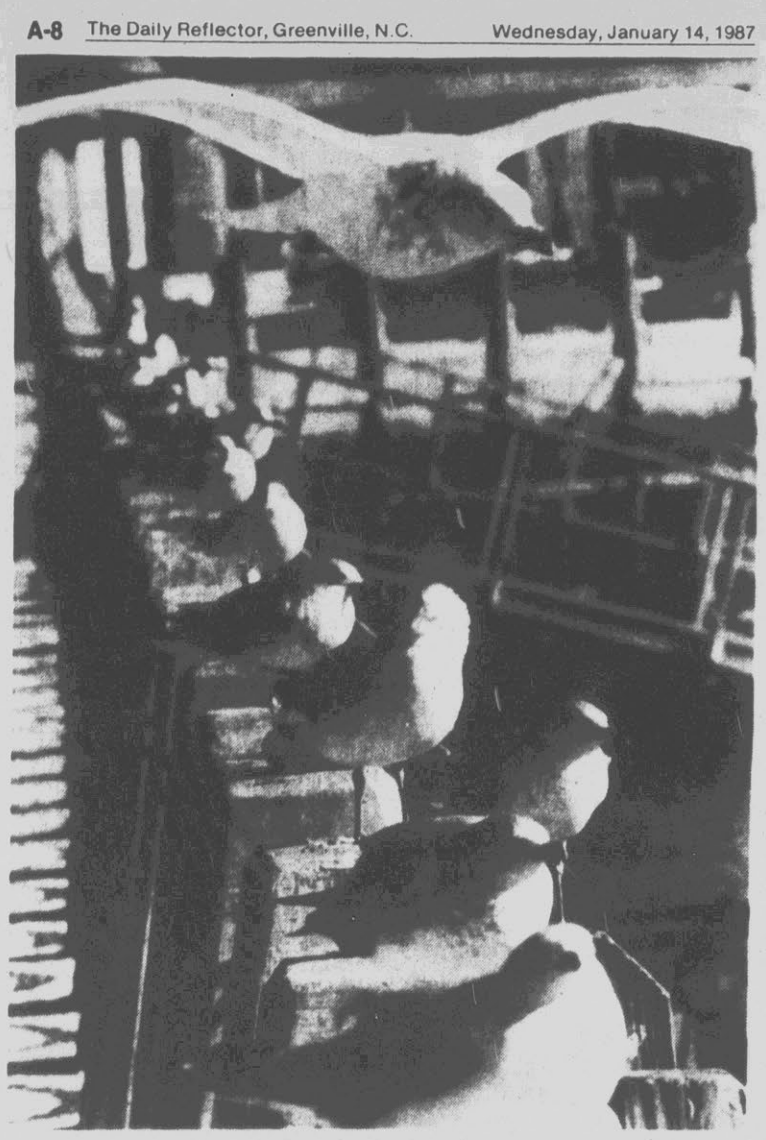

Helms has claimed he should get the top minority spot on the committee because he has served in the Senate four years longer than Lugar, who was chairman of the committee in 1984 and 1985.

Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., Tuesday asked that the Republican caucus scheduled for today be delayed so he could swear in the new governor of South Carolina.

IRS Using Computers To Track Cheats Who Don't File Returns

By JIM LUTHER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Internal Revenue Service is sicking its computers on tax cheats who don't even bother to file returns.

More than 300,000 people who failed to file tax returns for 1984 and who have ignored repeated IRS warnings can expect to be nabbed this year, the agency said. A newly expanded and computerized program will create a substitute return for them and then send them a bill for the taxes due.

The high-tech program, which ferreted out 55,000 delinquent taxpayers in a pilot test last year, is expected to bring in more than $2 billion in taxes, plus penalties and interest, this year. In 1988, the IRS projects $3.25 billion from 500,000 non-filers.

"People who have been ignoring our notices and letters are going to be in for an unpleasant surprise," William Wauben, an assistant commissioner, told reporters in outlining the program Tuesday.

These cheats are "a hard-core group of folks who have made the decision to drop out of the system," Wauben said. For the most part, he added, they are tax protesters who are driven by greed, not by ideology.

"They're all over," Wauben said. "The income levels typically are in the $18,000, perhaps $40,000 level. Income typically consists of wages. They're in a variety of occupations. ... Very few of them come back and say, 'Hey, I'm married and got nine kids and the way you tax me is excessive.' We don't get much of that."

Many such people, he said, have filed false W-4 forms with their employers, claiming 30 or 40 allowances and have no income tax withheld from their paychecks. Thus, they have no tax refund coming.

For many years, the IRS has used its authority to estimate a substitute return for those who don't file. While the process has made taxpayers out of about 100,000 non-filers each year, the effort has been costly in staff time and paperwork. Turning the program over to computers will considerably increase its efficiency, the IRS said.

The agency estimates that about 3 million people who are required to file returns do not file each year. Most of them are uncovered when the agency checks W-2 wage reports from employers and Form 1099s from interest and dividend payers. About 2 million pay up after the IRS sends them a notice.

The new computerized effort is designed to find some of the remaining 1 million.

Once the IRS determines, from W-2s and 1099 forms, that a person has received income and not filed, it sends a series of increasingly tougher letters demanding a return.

If there is still no response, the computer takes over and delinquents are sent a "last-chance" letter, explaining that the IRS is preparing to issue an assessment, spelling out the tax due and listing the penalties for failing to respond. The recipient has 30 days to pay up, file a correct return or explain why the assessment on the IRS-generated return is wrong.

If that final letter is ignored, the assessment is issued. Unless the recipient makes peace with the IRS or files suit in Tax Court within 90 days, the next step is for the agency to seize bank accounts and wages.

The program will make it considerably more difficult to avoid paying taxes.

"If we get information reporting (W-2s and 1099s) on a taxpayer and we find that taxpayer's assets, the likelihood is well in excess of 90 percent that we will compute tax and collect that tax from that person," Wauben said.

The IRS is just now uncovering non-filers for the 1984 tax year (returns due in 1985) because usually about 20 months elapse between the time a piece of information reaches the agency and the time when a problem is found.

Super-Rich Pay Less

WASHINGTON (AP) — The tax systems in most states are so unfair that the super-rich pay a significantly smaller share of their incomes than do the poorest families, according to a private study released today.

Nationwide, families earning $7,000 a year or less pay about 6.9 percent of their income in state and local taxes, says the study by Citizens for Tax Justice, a labor-financed research group.

Middle-income families, averaging about $27,000 a year, turn over 6.8 percent for taxes, while the super-rich — with incomes averaging over $500,000 — pay 5.1 percent of their money to state and local government.

Unless the states overhaul their taxes in the wake of the new federal system, the study concluded, the portion of earnings paid by the poor and middle-income will rise to 7.1 percent and the burden on the super-rich will go up to 6.5 percent.

In 15 states, the study found, the rate of taxation for the richest people is less than half the burden on the poorest.

Citizens for Tax Justice, which was in the forefront of the fight to overhaul the federal tax system, launched a campaign to make sweeping changes in the states. The liberal organization said the federal changes "provide states with a golden opportunity to close the loopholes tat have made state tax avoidance possible."

Second Arrest Reported In San Juan Hotel Fire

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico (AP) — A federal official said today a second person has been arrested in the arson fire at the Dupont Plaza Hotel that killed 96 people and injured more than 140.

The first arrest was announced Tuesday, when Hector Escudero Aponte, a 35-year-old hotel maintenance worker, was charged with arson, destruction of property and 96 counts of murder.

A federal complaint said Escudero Aponte confessed his role in the New Year's Eve blaze, but said he only intended to set a small fire. The document said he told investigators he opened a can of Sterno-type fuel, set it on a stack of new furniture in the hotel's groundfloor ballroom and then lighted it. The complaint said Escudero Aponte, a member of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, set the fire after a union meeting in the ballroom. At the meeting, the union rejected a hotel contract offer, and it planned to strike at midnight New Year's Eve.

Union leaders have denied any involvement in the blaze that raged through the mezzanine-level casino and lobby and sent dense smoke through the next four floors. Guests and staff raced to the roof to await rescue by helicopter or jumped off lower balconies to escape the heat and smoke.

The federal official who spoke on condition of anonymity told The Associated Press today, "I don't have any of the particulars, but there has been a second arrest."

The New York Times, quoting an unidentified federal official, said a bus boy for the hotel and a member of the Teamsters union was taken into custody. It quoted the official as saying the suspect provided the material to set the fire and blocked Escudero Aponte from view while it was set.

The newspaper said the bus boy would be charged today with conspiracy, aiding and abetting. It quoted the official as saying that "there is no evidence at this point" to indicate union leaders ordered or approved the arson.

Two separate indictments were filed against Escudero Aponte, a father of two who had worked at the hotel for 10 years.

A commonwealth indictment charged him with arson, destruction of property and 96 counts of murder. If convicted, he faces 99 years for each murder charge and 25 years for the remaining counts.

The indictment said Escudero Aponte, "acting in concert and in agreement with others, illegally, voluntarily, maliciously and criminally set fire with the intention of destroying the Dupont Plaza Hotel."

Judge Carlos Rivera Martinez set bail at $2 million for these charges.

A federal indictment accused Escudero Aponte of setting the fire and thus interfering with interstate and foreign commerce. U.S. Magistrate Justo Arenas ordered him held without bail until Friday. A preliminary hearing was set for next Tuesday.

U.S. Attorney Daniel Lopez Romo would not say where Escudero Aponte was being held.

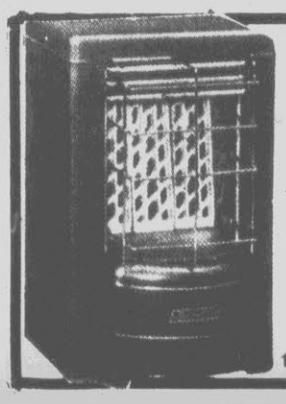

Investigators declined to say during a news conference who they suspected of working with or directing Escudero Aponte.

Jerry Rudden, spokesman of the federal Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, indicated that authorities assumed a conspiracy. Rudden noted that the commonwealth indictment said the fire was set "in agreement with others," adding that was "wordage for conspiracy."

Jorge Farinacci Garcia, a lawyer for the Teamsters union, said the fire was "an individual act of a person in the hotel." He said the Teamsters have cooperated with the government in investigating the fire.

Reagan Reportedly Authorized CIA Aid To Contras

By BOB WOODWARD
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — President Reagan on Jan. 9, 1986, signed a top secret intelligence order authorizing the Central Intelligence Agency to provide intelligence advice, training and communications equipment to the Nicaraguan "contra" rebels, according to administration and congressional sources.

Under the Reagan order — formally known as a "finding" — a total of $13 million was spent in 1986 on CIA assistance to the rebels, the sources said. The CIA moved quickly to carry out the finding since it provided an opportunity to help the contras with critical aid at a time when Congress had prohibited military assistance to the rebels in their fight against Nicaragua's Sandinista regime.

That intelligence and communications aid, which one administration source said was "like authorizing half a war," was explicitly permitted by Congress in legislative compromises made in late 1985.

At that time, the Senate was battling to expand U.S. help to the contras and the House was trying to eliminate it entirely. Rather than continuing what had been a complete cutoff of CIA assistance to the contras, Congress in November 1985 agreed to a modification that allowed the agency to provide "intelligence and counterintelligence advice ... (and) information." A staff report issued by the Senate and House said this assistance also could include "infrastructure expenditures and communications equipment."

In general, according to a variety of sources, the contra fight was kept alive in 1986 — before Congress resumed military assistance last fall — through the $13 million in CIA assistance, the $27 million in "humanitarian" aid appropriated by Congress in 1985 and the network of private fund-raising efforts tapped by former National Security Council staff member Lt. Col. Oliver L. North.

Administration sources said that in the overall conflict the intelligence and communications assistance may have been more important than weapons.

Reagan's subsequent Jan. 9 finding was reported to the congressional intelligence committees as required, unlike the finding signed eight days later by the president that authorized the sale of arms to Iran and that was deliberately kept secret from the oversight committees in Congress.

Though the finding is basically a restatement of the law, the CIA cannot undertake any covert action, including giving advice, without formal presidential approval.

Once Reagan signed the Jan. 9 order, CIA Director William J. Casey moved quickly to beef up the CIA stations in key Central American countries and to ensure that the CIA and other U.S. intelligence agencies monitored every phase of the Sandinista-contra conflict.

One well-placed source said the National Security Agency, the Pentagon's Defense Intelligence Agency and the U.S. military intelligence services were given additional tasks to ensure that "the Sandinistas and contras were covered with a blanket," as one source put it.

Another source said several dozen intelligence reports on the conflict flowed out of one major Central American CIA station each day in 1986. The sources said $10 million was spent on this stepped-up intelligence gathering, and another $3 million for communications equipment and training.

The $10 million went to pay for additional personnel, increased communications monitoring and photographic reconnaissance, the sources said.

"We gave Bill Casey the crack in the door, through which he drove some very serious aid and assistance, perhaps enough to make the difference in the half war of 1986," said one Democratic intelligence committee member who opposes contra aid. "I believe it was all done legally."

Two other members of congressional intelligence committees — one Democrat and the other Republican — disputed this and said they believed the administration and CIA exceeded the authority permitted under the law. But these members were unable to cite a specific example Tuesday of how the law might have been broken.

The question of CIA assistance is expected to be investigated by the new Senate and House committees set up to probe the Iran-contra affair. Independent counsel Lawrence E. Walsh also has authority to investigate the support given the Nicaraguan contras since 1984 by anyone in or out of government.

There have been assertions that CIA operatives in Honduras, El Salvador and Costa Rica provided the contras with considerable assistance last year in the war against the Sandinistas. There has been no conclusive evidence to date, however, that the agency gave assistance beyond the intelligence and communications help allowed by Congress.

Current and former intelligence officials said that when the CIA drafts a covert-action finding for the president's signature, it usually includes authority to provide intelligence advice and information. It is the kind of broad, umbrella authority that provides legal protection to CIA operations officers engaged in covert action, the officials said.

For example, the Jan. 17, 1986, finding allowing the arms sales to Iran included authority to provide "intelligence, counter-intelligence, training ... and communications."

Said one intelligence official, "With that kind of authority, a DO (Directorate of Operations) officer can do just about anything except pull the trigger" in supporting a covert paramilitary operation.

At the same time, the law prohibited the CIA or other U.S. government agencies from providing direct funds to the contras, or assisting in contra military actions. Transportation assistance could be given as part of the $27 million in humanitarian assistance that was authorized by Congress for the contras, as long as the transportation was not for military operations, sources said.

An administration official said this was interpreted to mean that the CIA could tell the contras where to drop weapons, but the agency could not supply the weapons or know the source of the weapons.

For example, in a statement on the intent of the 1985 law, Rep. Lee Hamilton, D-Ind., then chairman of the House Intelligence Committee, said, "There is authorization for provision of information and advice to the contras. However, training or any other activities, including advice, that amount to participation in the planning or execution of military activities by the contras, or acting as military advisers to the contras, is prohibited. A limited amount of communications equipment and related training will be provided to the contras to facilitate the exchange of information and intelligence that has been authorized."

In reality, administration and congressional sources said it is difficult to provide intelligence advice to people involved in an armed conflict and not somehow — either directly or indirectly — contribute to their capacity to conduct military operations.

Former Rep. Michael D. Barnes, D-Md., who was chairman of the House Foreign Affairs subcommittee on the Western Hemisphere and a leading opponent of contra aid, said Tuesday that "based upon what I know, I am not prepared to say that the law was violated" by the CIA in Central America.

"I understood that a compromise had been worked out so the agency could share intelligence with the contras, so we could warn them if they were about to be decimated. ... The State Department said they need a loophole to alert the contras so we wouldn't be responsible for them being wiped out.

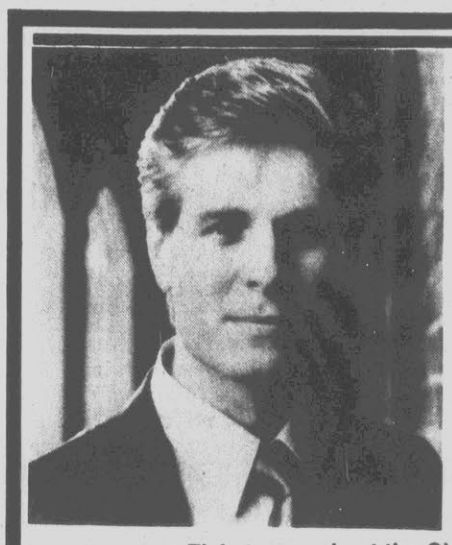

"A lot of members of Congress who voted for the compromise misunderstood what they were voting for," Barnes added. "It was a loophole through which you could drive some pretty large vehicles."

UNC Grant

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — Researchers at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill have been awarded a $450,000 grant by the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services for projects aimed at reducing the risk of major health problems.

The one-year grant to the Center for Health Promotion and Disease Prevention is part of $1.4 million being distributed to three U.S. universities to put more emphasis on health promotion, Dr. O. Dale Williams, center director, said Tuesday.

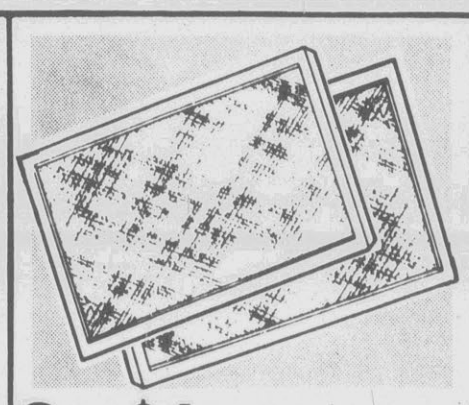

The money will be used to reduce the risk of heart disease, cancer, low-birthweight infants and injuries such as those suffered in automobile crashes.

Two More Bodies Are Discovered In Woods

SUITLAND, Md.(AP) — Prince George's County police are describing as "bizarre" the discovery of five dead women over the last month in the same 10-acre wooded area just outside Washington, D.C.

The bodies of two of the women were found Tuesday while investigators searched for clues to the death of one of the others. All of the women were black and in their 20s, police said.

All of the women except one, who died of an apparent drug overdose, appeared to have been stabbed to death, authorities said.

"It is one of the most bizarre situations," said police spokesman Bob Law. "Never in our history have we had anything where five bodies been found in one particular area."

Fifty police recruits, starting at 9 a.m., stretched out in a line and moved slowly across a wooded area behind an apartment complex, looking for evidence in the death of a woman found Sunday by children playing in the woods.

About an hour after they started, the searchers found a body, and shortly before noon they found another. The search was to resume today.

"We're going to stay here until we are satisfied that there are no more bodies in the woods," police spokesman Cpl. Bruce Gentile said.

All the bodies were found within 300 yards of each other near a county recreation center in a woods surrounded by residences about one-half mile southeast of the District of Columbia line.

The woods are frequented by playing children, and it was children who found the first three women, Law said.

Other bodies were found Dec. 13 and Dec. 27.

Law said the bodies found Tuesday were sent to the medical examiner in Baltimore to determine the exact cause and time of death.

The body found Dec. 13 was identified as Dorothy Miller, an unemployed 20-year-old woman from the District of Columbia, who had died of a drug overdose several days earlier.

Sources Say Regan Now 'Secure' In White House

By LOU CANNON and DAVID HOFFMAN
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — White House chief of staff Donald T. Regan, whose hold on his job seemed tenuous two weeks ago, is now secure in his position and moving to fill key White House vacancies with his personal choices, according to administration and Republican sources.

"Regan didn't want to make any moves while he was fighting for his own survival," a senior White House official said. "Now that he's fought off the demands for his resignation, he is putting his own stamp on the place."

On Monday, Regan's choice for White House spokesman, Marlin Fitzwater, was named to succeed Larry Speakes. Yesterday, White House sources said that, within the next several days, Regan will select a domestic policy director, filling a post vacant since Jack Svahn resigned last September.

White House sources said John Cogan, who was a Office of Management and Budget deputy under David A. Stockman and is a top official with the conservative Hoover Institution, has met with Regan and is the leading candidate for this post.

Two White House officials said they also expect White House communications director Patrick J. Buchanan to leave, possibly to launch a bid for the Republican presidential nomination. One of these officials said that Regan is displeased with Buchanan's attempt to blame the news media and Congress for damage suffered by President Reagan because of the Iran-contra controversy.

"There would certainly be no objection from Regan if Buchanan decided to leave, but no one is going to ask him to leave," a White House official said. "The timing of the depature is up to Pat."

Another White House official said of Buchanan, "We assume he's on the way out the door, but he hasn't made a move yet." If Buchanan leaves, Regan is expected to fill the vacancy with his deputy, Dennis Thomas.

White House political director Mitchell E. Daniels is also expected to leave within the next few months, although he said Tuesday that he has made no decision to quit.

Early last month, Daniels told Regan that he ought to resign in order to help give the president "a fresh start." Despite this confrontation, officials said, Regan has not pressured Daniels to depart. One official said the chief of staff "respected Daniels for saying to his face what others were saying behind his back."

Sources said that, while Reagan was hospitalized last Wednesday recuperating from prostate surgery, the president called Daniels at Regan's behest and asked him to stay on as political director. Daniels warmly thanked the president for the call but told him that his plans were undecided, the sources said.

Regan's new assertion of authority comes as doctors have put the president on a severely limited regime of physical activity while he recovers from surgery.

A White House official said the president is frustrated by the restrictions but is being given lots of reading material. "It's not hard to get through to him" with written communications, the official said, but personal contact is tightly restricted.

The president, who presided over a Cabinet meeting Tuesday, spends about 1½ hours in the Oval Office each morning and afternoon and the remainder of the day in the White House residence, officials said. He is taking frequent baths as part of his recuperative therapy, they said.

Another White House position became vacant Tuesday when Peter Roussel, a deputy press secretary under Speakes since 1981, announced that he will leave Jan. 30 to return to private employment. A source said Roussel, a former Texas public relations man, had recently turned down an offer to be director of the Houston Chamber of Commerce.

Roussel, who served as press officer for Vice President Bush when Bush was Republican national chairman during the Nixon administration, said he is "considering several possible opportunities."

In a statement he read to reporters, Roussel praised the president, Speakes and Treasury Secretary James A. Baker III, who hired him when he was White House chief of staff.

Urban League Says Gap Widening For Rich, Poor

By WILLIAM M. WELCH
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Reagan administration economic and social policies, including decreased domestic spending, have widened "a dangerous gap between the affluent and the poor," the head of a major civil rights group said today.

National Urban League President John E. Jacob, in presenting the group's annual assessment of the status of blacks in the United States, accused President Reagan's administration of waging a "disinformation campaign" on domestic issues.

That campaign "is designed to convince the public that unemployment was no longer a problem, that the poor don't want to work and that social programs simply compound social problems instead of helping resolve them," Jacob said.

The civil rights leader made the comments in a statement issued today with the release of the report, "The State of Black America — 1987." Included are chapters by 10 experts describing a "retreat from civil rights," how blacks are affected by the budget deficit and tax reform, black famililes, black economic status and other issues.

Growing disparities in wealth and income are the result of current policies encouraging unemployment and reduced levels of social spending, Jacob said. He noted that while more than 3 million new jobs were created last year, that growth was largely in low-paying retail and service jobs.

Racism, he said, has been seen again in such publicized examples as the death of a black man who was struck by a car while fleeing an attack by whites at Howard Beach in Queens, N.Y., and the harassment of a black cadet at The Citadel in South Carolina.

"The resurgence of racist feelings and continued illegal discrimination are fostered by the administration's refusal to admit that racism may still be a problem," Jacob said.

He faulted the Justice Department for a narrow interpretation of affirmative action that he said was prejudicing public attitudes and encouraging hostility toward blacks.

He said the department's view is evidence of a philosophy "uncomfortably close to the states' rights philosophy of the old-line segregationists who held that public officials may defy Supreme Court rulings they disagree with."

Rhode Island Guard Called Out To Help Hunt 'Night Sniper'

By STELLA DAWSON
Associated Press Writer

NORTH SMITHFIELD, R.I. (AP) — Roadblocks on rural roads and military police patrolling in combat fatigues were welcome sights for residents living in fear of a night sniper who has struck 11 times, seriously wounding two people.

"Anything that will catch this person will help. It's got to the point where no one wants to stand in front of their windows even in broad daylight," Karen Dellacona, a veterinary assistant in Cumberland, said Tuesday.

"It kind of gives you a feeling of more security, it's getting so dangerous now," said Mary Kennedy, co-owner of a North Smithfield diner.

"Anything, anything they can do to stop this man before someone loses a life is worth it, whatever it takes," said Dottie Carrigan, owner of a Cumberland travel agency.

A sniper has attacked 11 times since Dec. 8 in Cumberland, North Smithfield and over the border in Bellingham, Mass., prompting Rhode Island Gov. Edward D. DiPrete to take the unprecedented step Monday of calling out the National Guard to aid in a criminal investigation.

Thirty military police officers carrying rifles and dressed in fatigues studied maps at the Lincoln state police headquarters Tuesday night before piling into Army-green jeeps.

It was the second night guardsmen assisted state and local police.

National Guard Maj. Gen. John W. Kiely remained tight-lipped Tuesday about details of the operation. He told a news conference that members of the 43rd Military Police Brigade have the authority to question or arrest suspects.

But he refused to confirm or deny reports from residents that helicopters were being used as part of the Guard's effort. "Our obvious hope is we apprehend the sniper before any more hurt is done," Kiely said.

Two people have been seriously wounded, and .22-caliber bullets have grazed several other targets. In nine cases shots were fired at people through windows of their homes. A shot was fired into a garage and another hit a truck.

Police say they have no suspects but believe one person is responsible.

Ballistics tests have confirmed the same gun was involved in the seven North Smithfield shootings. The two Bellingham shootings have been linked to one of the Cumberland incidents, but evidence in those attacks has not yet been compared to the North Smithfield evidence, according to investigators.

Lt. John R. Loughlin II, a National Guard spokesman, said up to 100 guardsmen, some of whom are reserves called up for the special assignment, are at the disposal of state police. Guardsmen may shoot in self defense, he said.

Some residents said they fear the high-profile military presence in their rural communities will hinder the search by forcing the sniper to stop.

"I don't think it will solve the problems," said Doug Keene, a fireman at Primrose Fire Department in North Smithfield. "It might make the town a little safer for now, but then they will have to come back."

Labor Secretary Says Educated Workers In Short Supply

By ROBERT A. ROSENBLATT
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Secretary of Labor William Brock, warning of an impending shortage of educated workers, said Tuesday "it's an insane tragedy" that 700,000 of the nation's high school graduates each year "can't read the damned diploma."

Brock, testifying at a Senate Labor Committee hearing, noted that the nation's youthful population was declining, making literate young people a highly prized commodity for business.

"Companies, colleges and the military may find themselves competing for 18-year-olds," the scretary of labor said.

Brock said that the federal government was responding to the problem by developing special programs to teach school dropouts to read. It is joining businesses, churches and hundreds of community action groups in a national movement to wipe out illiteracy.

But Brock refused to support an increase in the federal minimum wage, now $3.35 an hour, despite prodding from committee Chairman Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass.

"The minimum wage is not a living wage, and it is not a decent society in which a full-time job means a lifetime in poverty," Kennedy said. A person working full time at the minimum wage would earn $6,700 a year, $3,000 below the poverty income standard for a family of four, Kennedy noted.

"Are you for raising the minimum wage?" he asked Brock.

"My predilection is to give people the skills they need," the secretary of labor responded. "The fundamental answer is to provide skills for individuals to earn a hell of a lot more than the minimum wage." Five million of the nation's 111 million workers earn $3.35 an hour or less.

Brock called on businesses to make changes to adapt to the changing nature of the work force.

Most of the new workers during the next 13 years will be women, members of minority groups and immigrants, those who "... have had trouble finding rewarding jobs," said the secretary of labor.

Women account for 44 percent of the labor force, but businesses have not been providing enough help for families in which parents are working outside the home, Brock said.

"Stresses on the family are not being accommodated well," he said, calling for companies to offer better day care services and flexible work schedules.

Members of the new Democratic majority on the committee challenged Brock's emphasis on limited job training and education programs rather than larger jobs' initiatives.

"Sadly," said Kennedy, "our economy does not afford enough opportunities for people to work. This country must reach for the day when there will be decent jobs for all who can work, and care for all who cannot," he said.

After verbal jousting with Brock over the availability of jobs, Sen. Tom Harkin, D-Iowa, said, "if you don't have educational skills, training and adequate nutrition ... what good does it do to say, 'You have the right to seek a job.' " Harkin said all workers should be allowed to spend one day of the working week on education, skipping their regular tasks for eight hours of training and learning.

Sen. Paul Simon, D—Ill., left his seat as a committee member and stepped down to the witness table, where he announced his intention to introduce legislation to guarantee a job for all Americans. Under Simon's plan, anyone unemployed for five weeks or more would be hired to work for 32 hours a week at projects selected by a business-labor committee.

Workers are needed in day care centers, to clean parks and plant trees, to remove graffiti from subways and perform other tasks, said Simon. Persons receiving unemployment benefits would be paid an amount 10 percent above the jobless benefits under the Simon plan. Other workers not eligible for benefits would be paid the minimum wage.

"The nation's highest commitment — our most important national goal — must be to guarantee a job opportunity for everyone who wants to work," Simon said.

Omaha Voters Recall Mayor

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — Mayor Mike Boyle began his final days in office today after voters reacting to his alleged abuse of power made him the first mayor in city history to be recalled.

With all but 334 absentee ballots counted in Tuesday's special election, 55,275 people, or 56 percent, voted for Boyle's recall, while 42,832, or 44 percent, voted to retain him.

Boyle campaign manager Jim Crounse said he had expected the mayor to lose, but by a closer vote. Crounse said the election was "more like a trial than an election, with the voters as jury. It appears they made up their minds before they had the evidence."

Boyle did not appear at his campaign headquarters Tuesday night. Telephone calls to his house were fielded by an answering service.

"We're trying not to gloat," said Jim Cleary, spokesman for the recall group Citizens for Mature Leadership. "There's a sense of sadness, but it's difficult not to be happy. All these volunteers worked so hard."

Boyle is the first mayor to be recalled in the history of Omaha, Nebraska's largest city with 340,000 residents.

He campaigned vigorously to keep his job, pointing to improvements under his administration, including better streets, a top bond rating and downtown development.

Over the weekend, he accused opponents of a "mud-slinging smear campaign — a hate campaign."

The recall grew out of a long squabble between Boyle and the police department. It began in 1981, the year he took office, when he complained about seeing police officers standing outside a go-go bar.

Last year, Boyle complained when police issued traffic citations against his 19-year-old son and when his twin 17-year-old sons were arrested for allegedly soliciting prostitution. The twins' cases went into confidential juvenile court proceedings.

The mayor fired Police Chief Rober Wadman on Oct. 3 after the chief refused to sign disciplinary papers against officers involved in a 1985 drunken driving arrest of Boyle's brother-in-law, John E. Howell. Boyle said the arrest was an attempt to lure him into interceding illegally for Howell.

Cops Con Suspects

DENVER (AP) — Donnie Chavez clutched his rabbit's foot and smiled at television cameras when he arrived at Currigan Hall to get his "free" Super Bowl tickets.

"This seems too good to be true," he said Tuesday.

It was.

Within minutes, he was handcuffed and on his way to jail in a sting that police say netted 67 fugitives Tuesday. Sixty-five were wanted on felony charges ranging from forgery to sexual assault on a child, authorities said.

"Who said police work isn't fun?" Police Chief Thomas Coogan said to 70 police officers, some dressed in tuxedos and others providing music for the event, as he congratulated them for out-conning the suspects.

Last week, police sent 1,883 letters from the fictitious Rocky Mountain Sports Federation to the last known addresses of suspects in a wide variety of felonies and misdemeanors.

The letters offered two free tickets to the Super Bowl, to be played between the Denver Broncos and the New York Giants in Pasadena, Calif., on Jan. 25, and the chance to win a drawing for free travel to the game.

The letter said all the recipients had to show positive identification.

The "winners" then were greeted by female undercover officers wearing tuxedos, black pumps and fishnet stockings, who escorted them — four and five at a time — to an elevator and the hall's second floor.

There, six uniformed officers waited.

The scam was so persuasive, it even enticed relatives, friends and strangers to pose as "winners."

College Could Improve Marriage Prospects

By RANDOLPH E. SCHMID
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Going to college may delay marriage, but seems likely to improve a woman's prospects for eventually being wed, according to a new report by a Census Bureau researcher.

The study by Jeanne E. Moorman appears to contradict a widely publicized report last year that contended women's chances of marriage diminished as they delayed matrimony to pursue higher education.

On the contrary, the new study says that an education may well give women better marriage prospects, as they combine education and a career with matrimony.

"There is no reason to expect that women can't do both, just as men have always done," said Ms. Moorman in a telephone interview.

In the past, more highly educated women have indeed proven to register a lower marriage percentage, but that seems likely to turn around, said Ms. Moorman in her report, "The History and the Future of the Relationship Between Education and Marriage."

Women now aged 30 to 35 may well be the last group for which a negative relationship between education and marriage will exist, she reports, and even for them the effect is minimal.

Higher education is becoming more usual for women, she explained, and as that occurs they are beginning to act more like men have always done — combining education with a career and marriage rather than having to choose.

Ms. Moorman launched her research last year, following a widely publicized study by a Yale University professor that said if a college woman wasn't wed by age 30, she stood little chance of ever marrying.

The Census Bureau kept getting calls about that study, she said and, in order to respond to it, she undertook the research that led to her report.

In the earlier study, Neil Bennett, an assistant professor of sociology, speculated that women had begun sacrificing marriage for a career and education. "As they defer marriage, it becomes less and less likely ... that they will ever marry," he concluded.

College-educated women who reach the age of 30 without marrying stand only a 20 percent chance of ever marrying, Bennett said.

But Ms. Moorman, also analyzing Census Bureau statistics, concluded that those same women actually have a 66 percent chance of finding a husband.

The fact that women are marrying at lower rates as they go to college and begin working has been widely documented — with many women choosing to cohabit rather than formally marrying.

The disparity between the two is over whether women are merely postponing marriage and family to pursue education and careers, or are deciding to forego marriage altogether.

Another factor some say was involved in the trend away from marriage has been the so-called "marriage squeeze."

Traditionally, women have chosen to marry men a few years older than themselves. But as the huge post-World War II Baby Boom generation entered marriage age, the women of that group greatly outnumbered the men born a few years earlier — thus reducing their chances for marriage to a slightly older man.

Many of these women will postpone marriage, adjust downward the age group from which they choose a mate, or marry a man divorced from his first wife, Ms. Moorman wrote.

As time goes on, however, women of the smaller "Baby Bust" generation, which followed the boom, will find a large number of men slightly older than themselves, eliminating this "squeeze" factor in mate-hunting.

Ms. Moorman, who is married, said that her research concentrated on women because their marriage behavior has differed depending on whether they did or did not attend college, while men married at about the same rate regardless of education.

Researchers try to find explanations for groups behaving differently, not for groups behaving the same, she commented.

Moorman compiled Census statistics for age groups, percentage married and number educated, into a table showing the likelihood of a woman marrying before age 65, according to their current age and educational attainment.

For example, 25-year-old women who have never been married, with four years of college, have an 89 percent chance of marrying before age 65.

"They have a much better chance of marrying than other women of the same age with less education (64 percent to 81 percent) and a slightly better chance than women with five or more years of college (86 percent)," she concluded.

Overall, she deduced that 92.9 percent of men and 91.5 percent of women will eventually marry.

Those with four years of college have the greatest likelihood of marriage, at 97.0 percent of men and 96.2 percent of women. Second were people with one to three years of college, 94.8 percent of men and 94.3 percent of women.

Marriage prospects for other education groups are, elementary school only, 90.6 percent of men and 82.3 percent of women; some high school, 87.5 percent of men and 84.6 percent of women; completed high school, 89.7 percent of men and 90.5 percent of women; and five or more years of college, 95.5 percent of men and 89.7 percent of women.

Should Singles Travel Solo?

Dear Abby

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I am incensed over your reply to "Likes to Travel." She, her husband and her unmarried sister, "Clara," took trips together, and always booked one hotel room with two double beds. The married couple slept in one bed and Clara and her two dogs slept in the other. The couple thought the bill should be split in half — they paying half, and Clara paying the other half. And you agreed with the couple!

Abby, if this trio went to a restaurant and all three ordered the same meal, should the single woman pay one-half of the check — or one-third? There were three people in that hotel room, so why shouldn't the rent be split three ways?

Why do married people insist on being thought of as one "couple" instead of two individuals? It's appalling that singles are treated like second-class citizens. Single women don't have the same opportunities in the work force, and are overlooked socially, too! A person living alone pays the same rent on an apartment as a couple would for two. Utilities are the same, and so are car payments, etc., and I have to make it with one paycheck.

I suspect the married couple likes the arrangement as it stands. They're giving Clara the message that she can't possibly travel alone, so she can either go with them or stay home.

Tell Clara to dump her sister and brother-in-law, and travel alone. There are many wonderful tours that cater to singles — young and old. All Clara has to do is go to a travel agency and her eyes will be opened.

Please rethink your answer, Abby. Singles who travel with a couple should pay one-third, not one-half. — ON CLARA'S SIDE

DEAR ON: Now that you've explained it, I'm on Clara's side, too.

DEAR ABBY: What do you say to a person who calls you on the telephone while she is eating an apple, potato chips or hard candy? The sound of her chewing and chomping grates on my nerves! Also it's hard for me to understand her when she talks while she's eating. — W.VA. HILLBILLY

DEAR HILLBILLY: Say: "Goodbye. Call me back when you've finished eating."

DEAR ABBY: I don't care what your survey showed, men DO prefer blondes. I am a natural brunette, now 30 years old, attractive, with a very nice figure. I attended a large high school and sat on the sidelines while the blondes got all the prize dates.

When I got out into the working world, I noticed that more heads turned when a blonde walked by, so guess what I did? I went blond!

It was a drastic change! I worked as a teller at a bank at that time and was very visible. I had been in that position for five years as a brunette, but I didn't get nearly the attention. As a blonde, I've been stopped on the street, in stores, at the movies, at church and in bars by men who wanted to make conversation with me. I was beating them off with sticks! Customers at work told me that they had never noticed me before. Some of my family didn't care for my blonde hair, but almost everybody else did.

Well, my family and a few girlfriends talked me into going back to my natural color. I kept it that way for about three months, then I realized I was no longer very "special" looking, so last Saturday I went back to being a blonde.

Volunteer Leaders Recognized

Pitt County women and men serving as volunteer leaders were recognized at a special program Tuesday night. The program theme was "Volunteers and Extension: Partners in Progress."

Lu Ann Whitaker of Beaufort County was keynote speaker. She is chairman of the N.C. Extension Advisory Council. In giving reasons for being a volunteer, she said, "I share a concern for others and gain in knowledge and personal growth. There is also personal satisfaction. Volunteers are necessary for the delivery of research. Volunteers are partners with the extension staff — they are the voice of the people and keep extension advised of needs."

"Volunteer effors will become more important in the future because of funding limitations. We must make an attempt to remain partners in progress. The supply of volunteers never exceeds the demand," Ms. Whitaker said.

The Pitt County Advisory County is a representation of county residents who work in conjunction with the Agriculture Extension staff to ascertain county needs in the areas of agriculture, 4-H, home economics and community and rural development.

Rep. Walter Jones Jr. was a special guest. "The strength of this nation is in the hearts of its people. The service we render others is the rent we pay for our space here on earth. Volunteers are invaluable," he said.

Presenting awards to approximately 164 volunteer leaders were Leroy James, county extension director, Addie R. Gore, home economics extension agent, and Dale Panaro, extension agent, 4-H.

Others participating on the program were Hattie Thompson and Frances Burns, members of the Pitt Advisory Council. An original poem was presented by Carol-Ann Tucker, council chairman.

Entertainment for the evening was presented by Henry Queen, visiting artist in residence at Pitt Community College.

Council members for this year in addition to those participating during the evening are Sylvia Wheless; Sam Winchester; Alton Cannon; Nancy Allen; Willie Mae Hawkins; J.J. Brown; Eugene James, and Carroll C. McLawhorn.

Plants, Birds Are Protected

By JAY JORDEN
Associated Press Writer

DALLAS (AP) — A pristine enclave of wilderness just 20 minutes from downtown Dallas may be the last and only hope for a variety of birds and plants that naturalists are sheltering from the stampede of urban progress.

The Greenhills Environmental Center, a 500-acre natural preserve, already is surrounded by development, and volunteers are stalking nearby fields, often just in front of bulldozers, to rescue rare plants about to be shredded into oblivion.

"We are really on the threshold of an explosion out here," said David Donohue, a Greenhills staff member. "We are surrounded by land in development."

Over the next few years, officials expect more than 15,000 acres of White Rock Escarpment lands surrounding the environmental center to be developed with houses and businesses. At that point, Greenhills will be the last significant parcel left in its natural state.

The preserve is the final retreat for rare plants like the White Troutlily, the Spring Coral-Root and the Texas Purplespike, specimens that only recently have been identified.

Greenhills also is one of the last nesting grounds for the Black-capped Vireo, a rare bird that has attracted the interest, and concern, of the Smithsonian Institution and the National Audubon Society.

But it's the still undiscovered rarities that most concern Dr. Geoffrey Stanford, the Greenhills director.

"We are literally getting out to fields to be developed just ahead of the bulldozers and saving some rare plants," said Stanford. "This year, we discovered two orchids never before described in North Texas. Before, they were known in the state only in the Big Bend. This is an important scientific discovery."

The plants are being brought into the Greenhills preserve where Stanford and others hope they will thrive.

For now, the Greenhills workers are winning the battle against progress, but Stanford said development of land around the center in the next decade would pose trespassing and noise problems.

"With the city coming in, we need more fence work," he said. "Management problems will only increase. They are happening already."

The core of Greenhills, ironically, is on 27 acres of land donated in 1975 by Dallas developer Dave Fox. That original preserve was enlarged with 300 acres purchased by the city of Dallas, and 42 acres of Dallas County land added on the south.

"The land to the south of here is original cedar breaks," said Stanford. "We also have vestiges of native tall-grass prairie here. One type of rare Indiangrass I rescued from in front of a bulldozer."

Stanford said the center's conservation activity also included teaching students from area schools about North Texas plants and animals and running a nursery for plants threatened with extinction.

Parents Buying Status Products

NEW YORK (AP) — The current trend for couples to wait until their 30s to have babies has created a highly profitable market for a brand new line of products — luxury baby items — industry officials report.

Nationwide sales of nursery and juvenile furniture rose from $700 million in 1979 to $1.5 billion in 1985, according to Harris Landman and Irv and Barry Friedberg, owners of Bellini Juvenile Designer Furniture.

They note that during 1985, more than half of all births were to first-time parents.

The city of Greenville has a 24-hour leash law. Dogs are permitted off personal property as long as they are on a leash or are restrained by some other means of physical control. Dogs found running at large will be picked up and taken to the City-County Animal Shelter on County Home Road.

Stock And Market Reports

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market declined slightly today, faced with some uncertainty about the interest-rate outlook.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials slipped .71 to 2,012.23 in the first half hour of trading.

Losers held a narrow edge on gainers in the early tally of New York Stock Exchange-listed issues, with 518 up, 559 down and 471 unchanged.

Volume on the Big Board came to 25.31 million shares as of 10 a.m. on Wall Street.

Interest rates rose moderately in the credit markets this morning, in part because of stronger-than-expected statistics on the pace of the economy. The Commerce Department reported that retail sales jumped 4.4 percent in December.

The increase was attributed largely to last-minute buying of cars by consumers aware that income-tax deductions for sales taxes would be eliminated as of Jan. 1.

Among today's early volume leaders, National Semiconductor gained ¾ to 12⅞. A trade group reported that new orders for semiconductors rose 8.8 percent in the fourth quarter.

The NYSE's composite index of all its listed common stocks was up .01 at 149.15. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index added .47 to 288.20.

On Tuesday the Dow Jones industrial average edged up 3.52 to 2,012.94, posting its seventh straight gain.

Advancing issues narrowly outpaced decliners on the NYSE, with 815 up, 794 down and 387 unchanged. Big Board volume totaled 170.94 million shares, against 184.22 million in the previous session.

Train Probers Asking Why Signal Ignored?

WASHINGTON (AP) — The investigation into the collision of an Amtrak train and three Conrail locomotives is trying to determine why the locomotives' crewmen failed to heed promptly a stop signal visible for more than a mile.

Federal investigators said Tuesday that braking and sight tests have demonstrated clearly that from the cab of the lead Conrail locomotive, the crew should have noticed the stop signal in time to halt safely.

Meanwhile, investigators also were puzzled as to why neither the engineer nor brakeman, who also is responsible for monitoring and verbally calling out speed signal changes, were not alerted by another signal light "about eye level" inside the cab that would have warned them to stop.

A backup whistle had been muffled with tape, investigators disclosed previously.

In the recent braking and sight tests, the cab signal activated at slightly less than a mile from the crash site and in time for a safe reduction in speed, investigators said. They said there is no evidence that the light was malfunctioning, though another bulb in the signal system previously had been found to be out.

The three linked-up Conrail locomotives were estimated to be traveling 63 mph to 64 mph when the brakes were applied, though an approach signal a mile or more earlier had ordered a reduction of speed, investigators said.

The locomotives skidded through a track switch into the path of a speeding Amtrak train Jan. 4, killing 16 people and injuring 175 others in Amtrak's worst accident.

Joseph Nall, the National Transportation Safety Board member in charge of the investigation, told reporters Tuesday that no evidence has been uncovered that would indicate a mechanical malfunctioning of the locomotive's brakes or of the signaling system.

In related news, the Baltimore Sun reported today that the Conrail engineer was arrested for drunken driving last month and has a 15-year record of motor vehicle violations.

The Sun, citing records dating back to 1972, said Richard L. Gates has been convicted eight times of speeding, once of improper passing and once of negligent driving, and nearly lost his driver's license twice.

In another development, the NTSB disclosed that the Amtrak train, which had the right-of-way, was exceeding speed restrictions shortly before the accident, but investigators said even at the lower speed the collision could not have been avoided.

The 12-car passenger train was traveling 128 mph even though its top speed had been restricted to 105 mph because it included some older Heritage model cars, Nall said. Normally the top speed along the stretch of track is 125 mph.

Ayden Plant Closing

formation, we will immediately take steps to decide what plans to consider for use of the building.

"It is a plant in good shape, with about 25,000 square feet of space, and should be ideal for use by some company seeking a ready space in Pitt County."

Chaffee said "We certainly hate to see Blue Bell close the plant down, but it was a corporate decision, one they think best for them. They have been a good occupant, and we regret that they are leaving."

In addition to the North Carolina plants, a Yuma, Ariz., mill will be closed, eliminating 300 more jobs.

Depending upon how many orders a plant has to finish, all operations will be phased out in three months.

Tuesday's announcement brings the number of workers fired by VF in the past three months to 1,500.

The first round of cuts began in November when the company pared 60 middle management jobs and dissolved the corporate headquarters of Blue Bell, which had been a Greensboro company for 82 years. Another 200 layoffs were made in various sales and service operations of Wrangler, the largest and best known operation under Blue Bell.

Officials at VF, which makes Lee jeans and Vanity Fair women's apparel, said the earlier cuts were made to "better address market needs and achieve cost efficiencies." The company has been identifying marginal businesses and paring operations that have duplicates at VF.

"The restructuring will significantly im prove our competitiveness in the market by focusing on our most successful products," said H. Varnell Moore, president of the Wrangler division. "The move was necessary to better serve our customer base and balance needs with capacity."

The Wrangler layoffs are the third largest announced in the state in the past several years, Sam Taylor at the N.C. Department of Commerce said. Last year, Fieldcrest Cannon pared its work force by 1,465 and before that, J.P. Stevens laid off 940 people.

In 1984, Blue Bell's top management structured a leveraged buyout that took the company private. Some of the money used to finance that buyout was from employee pension funds. In return, the employees got stock in the new, privately held company.

Blue Bell ran into financial trouble as a result of the debt from the buyout.

SDI Plan

The panel, which included Robert Jastrow, former moon-exploration executive at the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, concluded that the first part of such a layered defense could be deployed in 1994 if the decision to proceed were made this year.

"An incremental approach to deployment of the complete defense would provide the earliest possible protection against accidental or irrational launches and would also provide a useful degree of deterrence against limited attacks on key military sites," the panel said. The three-layer defense would destroy 93 percent of an invading cloud of 10,000 warheads and 100,000 decoys, and cost $121 billion, according to the report, which aides say has virtually won over Weinberger.

Johnston's warnings against rushing into an SDI deployment stood out in an unusually harmonious Budget Committee hearing. In contrast to sessions last year, there were no demands Tuesday from former Chairman Pete V. Domenici, R-N.M., that Weinberger slash the defense budget to reduce the federal deficit. Domenici said that as ranking minority member he will support the Pentagon's request for $312 billion in fiscal 1988 — a 3 percent increase, after inflation, over fiscal 1987.

pump did not work. Workers had to go back and start over again early this morning," McKnight said.

He said that if the new pump does not work, "we cannot continue to hold school without water. We would dismiss early."

McKnight said that since North Pitt has a separate set of buses, other schools in the county would not be affected by the early dismissal.

Foods that are prepared without water, such as frozen pizza, were planned for the lunch menu at North Pitt today.

Chargers Nail Pamlico

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

LITTLEFIELD — Ayden-Grifton placed five men in double figures, led by Eric Blount's 19, as the Chargers pounded Pamlico County, 84-66, in an Eastern Plains Conference basketball game Tuesday night.

Ayden-Grifton's girls — like the boys unbeaten in league play — came away with a 45-31 decision. Both Charger teams are now 3-0 in the EPC.

But despite the victory, Coach Bob Murphrey was not exactly pleased. "That was probably one of our worst defensive efforts of the year," he said afterward. "I was very disappointed with our defense. They scored mighty easy on us, and I don't know what it was. I guess the guys figured that they could just outscore them in the game."

Pamlico completed the game with an even 50 percent from the floor, just ahead of Ayden-Grifton's 45.6 percentage.

However, Ayden-Grifton made seven more baskets thanks to a 48-36 advantage in rebounding and a 15-20 turnover ratio.

"We didn't shoot well at times," Murphrey said, pointing to the first period when the Chargers made only six of 17 shots from the field. But they overcame that in the second period hitting 12 of 20 — a hot 60 percent.

"I will say that we played unselfishly tonight. The players gave up the ball to each other except for the final few minutes of the game."

After Pamlico scored the opening basket, Ayden-Grifton came back for a 4-2 lead on baskets by Ronnell Peterson and James Woods. But Stuart Squires and Jamie Gibbs put Pamlico back up on top, 6-4 with 4:01 left in the period.

Peterson made two free throws to tie it back up, and Blount hit a jumper from the top of the key for an 8-6 edge with 2:59 showing.

Ayden-Grifton held the lead the rest of the quarter, taking a 14-13 edge at the horn.

Pamlico's James Mason scored off a jumper to open the second period and give the Hurricanes a 15-14 lead — but it was to be their last of the game.

Blount again hit a jumper from the key with 7:31 remaining and two baskets by Leon Dixon opened the margin to 20-15 before Squires made a free throw. Blount again hit to make it 22-16, and the two teams swapped baskets until Peterson, Woods and Shawn Farmer all connected in the final 1:20 to up the lead to 38-28.

Pamlico got the final points of the period on a couple of free throws by Gibbs to make it 38-30 at intermission.

In the first two minutes of the second half, Ayden-Grifton ran its lead out to 13, 45-32. Neither team made much of a gain after that and the Chargers carried a 61-48 lead into the final quarter.

Pamlico made the first two baskets of the last stanza, but the Chargers hit eight unanswered points to run

Jaguars Bedevil S. Lenoir

By TOM MORRIS
Reflector Sports Writer

FARMVILLE — The Farmville Jaguars held South Lenoir without a field goal for the first seven minutes of the fourth quarter to break open a tight game en route to a 60-43 Eastern Plains Conference basketball romp Tuesday night.

The Jaguars, who improved to 10-2 and 3-0 in the EPC, led 45-37 after three quarters of play but tightened up their 1-2-2 defense and outscored the Devils 15-6 over the final period to take the win.

In the girl's game, the Lady Jaguars took a 63-48 win over the Lady Devils.

South Lenoir's Bill Wiggins opened the final quarter by hitting a free throw to narrow the gap to 45-38. From there the Jaguars ran off their 15-0 tear that buried the Devils.

"In the second half, we shot better, we played better defense and we committed less fouls," said Jaguar coach Mike Terrell. "I think those three things might have been the key to the win."

Alexander Daniels started things off with a back-door layup off a feed from Kennedy Williams. Gary Moore added a bucket off the fast break for a 49-38 lead. With 3:54 left, Tyrone Joyner connected on two foul shots for a 51-38 advantage.

Williams hit two more shots sandwiched around a follow by Daniels that stretched the lead to 57-38 with 2:29 remaining. The Jaguars completed their scoring on a free throw apiece by Mitchell and Daniels to make it 60-38.

Montez Davis finally broke the ice for the Devils when he drove the lane, hit and was fouled. His free throw provided the final margin at 60-43.

With the win, the Jaguars rebounded from a 48-44 loss to Washington Saturday night. Terrell said that because of that loss, this game took on new importance.

"I think it was very crucial," Terrell said. "I think it was one of the most important games of the season coming off the loss to Washington. I could see it in the eyes of the players, they had lost a little confidence. Tonight, they got it back. This was a big win. In basketball, anybody can give you a good game."

Farmville led most of the game but was unable to get the knockout punch on the smaller Devils, who stayed within striking distance for the first three quarters. In addition, the Devils played deliberately on offense which seemed to bother the Jaguars.

"The probably worked the ball on the half-court offense a little better than we did," Terrell said. "The weakness of this team has been impatience."

Farmville led 17-13 after the first quarter but South Lenoir kept up in the second quarter, coming within 23-22 with just under five minutes remaining on a free throw by Davis. The Jaguars were then able to edge out to a 33-29 advantage by halftime.

The Jaguars were hampered by foul problems in the first half to Joyner and James Reid. In their place came Gary Moore, Williams and Dupree.

The Jaguars picked up the pace at the start of the third quarter, scoring the first eight points of the period for a 41-29 lead. South Lenoir rallied to come within 41-35 on a basket and two free throws by Roy Williams.

Farmville expanded that to a six-point advantage at 41-37 as the quarter ended on jumpers from Williams and Tim Dupree, countered by two free throws by the Devils' Chris Patterson.

"We had some people get in foul trouble and our subs came in and did a good job. At one time, we had to move (forward) Kennedy Williams to guard," Terrell said. "Gary Moore, Alexander Williams and Tim Dupree did a real good job for us (coming off the bench). When those three went in, we began to increase the lead."

In the girl's game, the Lady Jaguars again rode the shoulders of Liesa Lang, who totaled 35 points as Farmville gradually pulled away from South Lenoir.

Farmville pulled away in the second quarter, outscoring South Lenoir 23-13 to stretch its lead from 18-11 to 41-24 at the half. Lang led the way, scoring 14 points during the stretch.

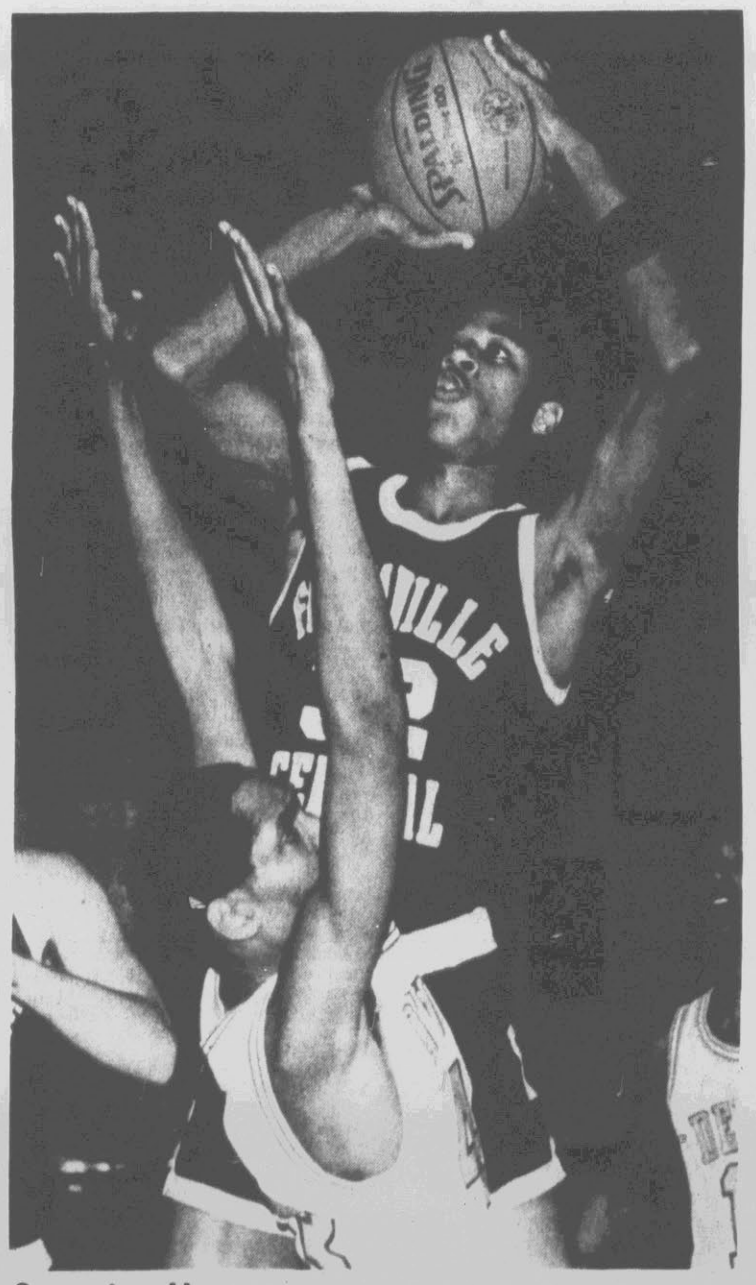

Susie Stancill opened the second period with two free throws to make it 20-11. Sonya King countered for South Lenoir. Lang then scored three straight baskets, but the Lady Devils kept right up to stay within 26-18.

Midway through the period, Brenda Reid hit a basket and Lang added two more as the Lady Jaguars stretched the lead to 36-22. Reid added a free throw and Stancill knocked in an outside shot countered only by one South Lenoir basket from Joanna Grant to make it 41-24 at the half.

From there, South Lenoir never got closer than nine points.

Still despite the lopsided margin, Farmville coach Hilda Worthington

Aycock Runs By Panthers, 73-59

PIKEVILLE — Travis Spells poured in 25 points to pace Charles B. Aycock to a 73-59 Eastern Plains Conference basketball victory over North Pitt Tuesday night.

Aycock made it a sweep of the varsity games with a 55-51 win in the girls' outing.

North Pitt pushed into a 17-14 lead in the opening quarter, but couldn't hold onto it. Aycock came back with a 15-6 advantage in the second period, pushing out to a 29-23 lead at the half.

Aycock continued to pull away in the third period, building its lead to 48-39. The Falcons then outhit the Panthers, 25-20, in the final quarter to win going away.

Dion Battle added 13 points and Corey Ruffin had 12 for Aycock. North Pitt's Maurice Jones led all scorers with 27 while Ashley Sheppard added 11.

The loss dropped North Pitt to 3-8 overall and 0-3 in EPC action.

Aycock opened up a 12-8 lead in the first quarter of the girls' game but North Pitt rallied in the second period. The Pant-HERS outhit Aycock, 21-18, and trailed by only 30-29 at intermission.

The Pant-HERS then pushed ahead with a 12-6 margin in the third period, taking a 41-36 lead. But Aycock rallied in the final quarter, 19-10, to pull out the victory.

Crystal Kennedy led Aycock with 15 points while Leslie Hamilton added 13 and Cafina Powell had 10. Keisha Pilgreen poured in 22 while Gwen Pilgreen hit 16 for North Pitt.

The defeat dropped North Pitt to 6-6, 0-3.

New ECU Aide Quits

Ben Griffin, newly appointed offensive coordinator of the East Carolina University football program, has resigned effectively immediately, the school announced Tuesday night.

Griffin will, instead, join the staff of Dick Tomey as offensive coordinator at the University of Arizona, East Carolina Director of Athletics Ken Karr announced.

"I regret the necessity to leave the East Carolina program," Griffin said. "However, my long-standing professional relationship with Coach Tomey became an intregral part of my decision."

Tomey was named Tuesday afternoon as the new head football coach at the University of Arizona after a tenure at the University of Hawaii.

Rose Nips Vikes In OT

KINSTON — Melvin Jenkins led Rose High School through an overtime Tuesday night as the Rampants slipped past Kinston, 52-49, in Big East Conference basketball action.

The contest was tied at 45-45 at the end of regulation time before Jenkins, who finished the game with 14 points, took command of the game and led Rose to its fourth straight conference win.

Rose's girls also continued unbeaten in the conference, downing Kinston, 42-37.

Kinston pushed out into an early lead in the game, building up a 17-12 lead in the first quarter of play. But the Rampants came back strong in the second quarter, outscoring the Vikings, 14-7. That allowed Rose to forge a slim 26-24 halftime lead.

The contest remained close the rest of the way. Kinston scored 11 points in the third quarter while holding Rose to eight. That put the Vikings back into the lead, 35-34. In the final quarter, Rose again pulled away, only to have Kinston rally and tie the game on a basket by J.J. Huddock with five seconds left.

In the overtime, however, Rose regained control, outhitting Kinston 7-4 behind Jenkins' effort. The other point for Rose was a free throw by Keyford Langley.

"It was a tight game all the way," Coach Jim Brewington said. "I don't know, maybe we were looking toward the Fike game (Friday). We didn't shoot well and they played us tough. We didn't play as well as we've been playing, but we've won there two years in a row and that's hard to do.

"We've won three big games on the road now, but we've got a tough game at home Friday when Fike comes in. They have one of the finest teams in the East, so we'll just have to see."

Earrol Wooten led Rose's scoring with 16 while Jenkins added 14. Huddock had 16 and Leo Lockhard added 11 for Kinston.

The Rampants raise their record to 10-2 overall and 4-0 in the league.

In the girls' game, Rose doubled the score on Kinston in the first period, taking a 12-6 lead. The Rampettes continued to totally control the game in the second quarter, outscoring Kinston, 17-9, to power out into a 29-15 halftime lead.

In the third period, however, Kinston began to close the gap, outhitting Rose, 8-6, to cut the lead to 35-23. The Valkyries then outhit the Rampettes, 14-7, in the last quarter but could never get back into it.

"The first half was probably the best half of basketball we've played all year," Coach Bill Kuykendall said. "We had a decent third quarter, but I think the girls' were a little conscious of being controlled in the final period and really didn't look to shoot. Sandra Darden got hot for Kinston and pulled them back within three before Kim Bridges and Lisa Leisten hit key baskets to sew up the win."

Bridges finished with 13 points while Kim Dupree had 12. Darden finished with 18 for Kinston while Sarah Darden added 10.

Rose is now 8-2 overall and 4-0 in league play.

The Rampants play host to Wilson Fike on Friday.

Taylor Says He Might Play For Three More Years

NEW YORK (AP) — Linebacker Lawrence Taylor has some good news for National Football League quarterbacks. The league MVP of the Super Bowl-bound New York Giants is beginning to think about retirement.

"Three more years," Taylor said as he accepted the most valuable player trophy voted to him by the Pro Football Writers Association. "I think that would be good for me. My contract will be up then. I doubt I will go in for another."

Until then, though, offenses will have to deal with Taylor, the first defensive player to capture the award in the 12 years it has been presented.

"In a league full of so many great players, like Eric Dickerson, Walter Payton and Joe Morris, it's a great honor to be considered with them," Taylor said. "Running backs, quarterbacks and wide receivers usually get the trophies but defense is a great thing and I love it."

Most of all, he said, he enjoys feeling the crunch when he makes a sack.

"There are sacks and there are sacks," said Taylor, who led the league with 20½ of them this season, second-highest total since the league began recording the statistic.

Listeners passed right by the first form of sack and asked Taylor to describe the second.

"It depends how you hit him," Taylor said. "When you run up from behind and he's not watching and you get a chance to put your helmet into him ... and the coach comes out and asks if he's all right. That's a sack.

Greene Central boosts its record to 6-7 with the win, while Roanoke falls to 4-6

The two teams swapped points throughout the first period of the girls game which ended in a 16-16 tie. But Greene Central began to pull away in the second quarter, outhitting the Lady Redskins, 17-10. That gave Greene Central a 33-26 lead at the half.

out to a 69-52 lead. Then, after several exchanges, Blount hit four straight on the line to open up an 81-62 lead, the largest of the night.

Murphrey cleared his bench after that to coast in with the win.

In addition to Blount's 19, Peterson added 16 while Woods and Dixon each had 12 and Farmer had 10.

The Hurricanes were led by Gibbs with 21 while Squires had 17.

"This was a big win for us, giving us some momentum into our next game (Farmville Central — and the chief challenge to the Chargers bid for another league championship). That will be the biggest game of the year so far. They're mighty good, and we're going to have to play well to beat them."

The win boosted Ayden-Grifton to 9-3 overall and 3-0 in league play. Pamlico dips to 4-8, 1-1.

Ayden-Grifton's girls, pressing hard on defense, scored the first 11 points of the game and were never in any great trouble in their contest.

Pamlico got its first point on a free throw by Crystal Jordan with 1:58 showing and then scored a basket — also by Jordan — at 1:25. But the Lady Hurricanes were well back, 13-3, at the horn.

Ayden-Grifton inched out to as much as 12 in the second quarter, 17-5, on a three-point play by Karen Edmonds, but had to settle for only a 19-11 edge at the half.

The two exchanged baskets through most of the third period before Edmonds hit two free throws and Kim Barfield added two baskets to run the Lady Charger lead out to 31-17 at the end of the quarter.

In the final period, it was just a question of margin as Ayden-Grifton ran out to as much as a 19-point lead, 45-26, before it was finally over.

Edmonds led Ayden-Grifton with 13 points while Michele Whitfield added 11. Jordan had 16 to pace Pamlico.

"I didn't think that we played well," Charger coach Kathy Frazier said. "That's two in a row we haven't played well in. We shot poorly against South Lenoir and we did again tonight. And I really didn't think that our press helped a great deal because when we did create a turnover, we just turned it right back over to them.

"Our rebounding was better than it's been being, however, and that did help us. But since we missed more and shot more, I guess it should be improved."

Frazier said she hoped the upcoming open date would be a help to the Lady Chargers. "We have to have a good night against Farmville Central. They'll be one of the better teams we've played."

Ayden-Grifton's girls are now 3-0 in the conference and 10-2 overall. Pamlico drops to 0-2, 0-10.

Jaguars ...

(Contined From B-1)

said the Lady Jaguars were able to get a lot out of the game, primarily getting the younger players some experience.

"One of the things you can work on is getting your whole team to play," She said. "That's the main thing. We tried to let Lisa play guard and get Brenda Reid to play center. I told them (at halftime) we had to pick up on King an the side and we have to work on what we want to do when they go to a man-to-man defense."

With the win, Farmville is 9-4 and 3-0. South Lenior drops to 3-9 and 1-2.

NBA Bars Wiggins For Drug Use

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston Rockets General Manager Ray Patterson now has seen three of his players sidelined by the NBA's stiff anti-drug policy in the past two seasons.

On Tuesday, guards Mitchell Wiggins and Lewis Lloyd were banned from the NBA for using cocaine. The move came less than 10 months after guard John Lucas was waived last March 15, after he tested positive for drug usage for the second time.

Wiggins played his high school basketball at North Lenoir High School near Kinston, N.C.

After repeating the same agonizing scene for the second year, Patterson is beginning to question the logic that regular cocaine users can be scared into complying with the league's drug policy.

"It may be based on the faulty premise that you can scare players into voluntary compliance," Patterson said. "We say you are banned for life and that hasn't helped.

"I'm not sure it's a deterrent for those already involved with cocaine. It might be for those not yet involved."

Patterson said one trait of the cocaine user is that he denies he has a problem.

"It's the only disease where the patient doesn't go for help," Patterson said. "They deny they have a disease.

"The drug is so insidious. The cases of Len Bias (former Maryland player who died of cocaine intoxication), John Lucas and more recent debacles haven't deterred or made an impact on these players."

Commissioner David Stern announced the NBA ban against Lloyd and Wiggins Tuesday.

Stern said Wiggins and Lloyd were tested Saturday after the league was presented with evidence of drug use "that would be adequate to cause a magistrate to issue a search warrant."

Lloyd and Wiggins are the third and fourth players to be banished under the league's drug testing policy.

Micheal Ray Richardson of the New Jersey Jets and John Drew, formerly of the Utah Jazz, were banned as "three-time losers" under provisions of the drug agreement that a player can be trated without penalty if he comes forward voluntarily.

Lloyd and Wiggins did not volunteer for treatment, so they do not get a second chance.

"They had plenty of chances to come forward," Stern said. "Our anti-drug program is not passive. We are constantly counseling all the players about the treatment programs available to them."

Lucas, now assisting other drug abusers here, said he felt he knew how the dismissed players felt.

"I think they are feeling a little guilt, shame ad embarrassment that they let down a lot of people that were depending on them," Lucas said. "I hope the best for them."

Lloyd had one year remaining on a contract that paid him about $225,000 and Wiggins was in the final year of a contract that also paid him $225,000.

Rockets players were shocked at the latest drug problem on the team.

"It's tragic that these athletes can't learn from past history," Rockets forward Jim Petersen said. "I just hope somehow they can learn from it and come back in two years."

Under terms of the NBA antidrug agreement signed by the league and the NBA Players Association on Sept. 28, 1983, an independent expert, R. Harcourt Dodds, a former assistant U.S. attorney and deputy police commissioner for the city of New York authorized the tests after evaluating the NBA's evidence.

Stern said "the program is working the way we expected it would and hoped it wouldn't.

"The underpinnings of the NBA's antidrug program are forceful and clearly stated. Any player voluntarily coming forward and seeking help is entitled to receive, without penalty or loss of salary, the finest rehabilitation treatment that they NBA and the Players Association can secure."

Stern said, however, that Lloyd and Wiggins will still be treated at NBA expense at a rehabilitation facility in Van Nuys, Calif.

All four players can apply for reinstatement two years following their disqualifications. Both the NBA and the players union have to approve any readmission.

The Rockets played Tuesday night's game against Phoenix with nine players. In addition to the absence of Wiggings and Lloyd, rookie Buck Johnson was sidelined for the 10th game with a hyperextended knee.

Stern said he is not concerned about how the Rockets will handle their sudden depth problem in the backcourt.

"Our drug agreement is enforced without regard to the consequences to the teams involved," Stern said.

Fitch said he did not see signs of drug usage by the banned players.

"Now you can go back and second guess just like replaying a ball game and see things you might have overlooked," Fitch said when asked if he suspected either player was using drugs.

"All I can say about Mitch and Lew is if we were able to test them we could help, sit down and talk."

Petersen said he thought Lloyd was making a good comeback from an early-season slump.

"There was innuendo that Lewis had been using drugs, but we felt he was making a great comeback," Petersen said. "They say that it (cocaine) brings on lapses and changes but Mitch and Lew were playing very well at the time."

Lloyd, who slumped in the NBA championship series against Boston last season, had averaged 20 points over Houston's last six games.

Lloyd started every game for Houston last season, but was a disappointment when the Rockets lost in the NBA finals against Boston. He averaged 16.9 points a game during the season, but only 7.7 against the Celtics.

Lloyd lost his starting spot to Wiggins at the beginning of this season, but when the Rockets and Wiggins slumped, Lloyd regained the starting spot.

Lloyd attended Drake, and was selected by Golden State in the fourth round of the 1981 draft. He was a reserve with the Warriors for two seasons before signing with Houston as a free agent in 1983.

Wiggins, 6-4, was a first-round pick of Indiana in 1983, but was traded to Chicago before the start of the season. He started 40 games for the Bulls, averaging 12.4 points a game and was traded to the Rockets the next season.

After two years in junior college, he spent one year at Clemson and one year at Florida State.

The Rockets defeated the Suns 118-100 Tuesday night but still must close ranks, Petersen said.

"This team was separated a little at the start of the season, now we have to pull together even more," Petersen said.

NASCAR Rules Anger Jackson

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Leo Jackson of the Jackson Brothers racing team says he isn't angry at veteran NASCAR driver Benny Parsons for leaving to replace Tim Richmond for Hendrick Motorsports.

But Jackson is angry at the NASCAR rules.

"I'm sure Benny was at the top of (team owner Rick) Hendrick's list 'cause he could bring along eligibility for both the Busch Class (for 1986 pole winners) and The Winston (for 1986 victors)," Jackson said.

"I'm not bitter at Benny, but I am bitter at the rules," Jackson said. "He qualified for those two very rich races in my car, but now he's going to run them for someone else."

Parsons confirmed Tuesday he will replace Richmond, who has been sick, when the NASCAR Winston Cup Series stock car racing season begins next month.

Richmond, the top winner in 1986 with seven victories and eight poles in Chevrolets fielded by Harry Hyde, is recovering from a bout with pneumonia. He is expected to be sidelined for 90 days to four months.

Parsons said in a telephone interview from his office in Ellerbe that he reached an agreement Monday with team owner Rick Hendrick to drive the No. 25, Folger Coffee-backed entry.

"That is a fact," Parsons said. "I'm going to drive until July 4. At that point and time, hopefully Tim will be back and healthy," Parsons said. "If he comes back before that, Harry Hyde will have to make a decision on what happens."

Parsons, 45, leaves the Jackson Brothers team to join Hendrick. Parsons, who drove an Oldsmobile for the Jackson Brothers, said a decision on his status once Richmond returns will be made at that time.

"We'll take a look how we've done at midseason and where we are in the Winston Cup standings and go from there," he said.

Hendrick will also field Chevrolets for Darrell Waltrip and Geoff Bodine when the NASCAR season opens at Daytona (Fla.) International Speedway in February.

Parsons, the 1973 Winston Cup champion, is a 21-time winner on the circuit. His last triumph came in Atlanta's Motorcraft 500 in 1984.

Gatlin, Long Leave School

COLLEGE PARK, Md. (AP) — Keith Gatlin and Terry Long have formally withdrawn from the University of Maryland after various academic and eligibility problems, according to a published report.

Gatlin, a starting guard on the basketball team for two seasons, would have been Maryland's only returning senior this season. But he was declared "administratively ineligible" because of unpaid parking fines, the Washington Post reported Wednesday.

Gatlin, whose home is in Grimesland, N.C., was named North Carolina's Basketball Player of the Year while a prepster at D.H. Conley High School in Greenville, N.C.

Acting athletic director Charles Sturtz said Gatlin withdrew after attending some classes, but declined to elaborate.

Neither Gatlin nor former teammate Long could immediately be reached for comment by the Associated Press.

Basketball coach Bob Wade said he was unaware Gatlin had left school.

But Wade said Long, who also had be declared academically ineligible, withdrew from school three weeks ago to play professional basketball in Belgium.

Four basketball players have become ineligible in recent months, including forward Tony Massenburg for cheating in class. Center-forwards David Gregg and Long were suspended pending an on-campus judicial inquiry resulting from their presence in the dormitory suite in which basketball star Len Bias died June 19 of cocaine intoxication.

Meanwhile, preliminary academic reports showed that Maryland football and basketball players fared well in the fall semester, Sturtz said.

Results of exams showed Maryland's basketball players did "very well," and all remained eligible. Football players' grades were "perhaps the best they've ever been," Sturtz said. He said specific grade point averages were not available.

Wade said he was encouraged by his team's grades, although he had not yet received a detailed report. Sturtz said freshman basketball players had done particularly well, and that point guard Teyon McCoy's grade-point average is above 3.0.

Chris Weller, the women's basketball coach, said starter Subrena Rivers has been suspended indefinitely from the women's team. Weller would not elaborate.

Sophomore point guard Deana Tate was ruled ineligible before this season because of alleged academic dishonesty, and all-Atlantic Coast Conference center Carolin Dehn-Duhr, a junior, quit the team in November, citing a lack of playing time.

Auburn Professor Leads Inquiry

AUBURN, Ala. (AP) — An Auburn University professor wants to turn up the heat on football Coach Pat Dye, who let tailback Brent Fullwood play in the Citrus Bowl although the senior star didn't attend classes most of fall quarter.

Ian Hardin, associate professor of consumer affairs, Tuesday said he has sponsored a University Senate reolution to censure Dye, who also serves as athletic director. The Senate is scheduled to vote on the motion next month.

"The action by the athletic director and coach was, in our judgment, irresponsible and detrimental to the maintenance of the academic integrity of college athletics," the resolution says.

Hardin said Dye's decision to allow Fullwood to play in the New Year's Day game was "completely contrary" to an academic integrity plan developed at Auburn.

Fullwood confirmed in a newspaper interview that he stopped attending classes soon after the start of fall quarter. Fullwood blamed illness and personal problems for his decision to quit school, but he did not miss any Auburn football games.

Fullwood's withdrawal from classes did not violate any rules of the National Collegiate Athletic Association and he remained eligible to play in the Citrus Bowl against Southern California. At the time, Dye said he does not hold seniors to the same academic standards as underclassmen.

George Emert, a vice president of Auburn, said school administrators did not realize Fullwood had quit attending classes until news reports surfaced. Emert said there has been "considerable discussion" about the controversy among Auburn President James Martin and others.

"It was an unfortunate set of circumstances, handled poorly, I'm sure," said Emert.

Smith, Lambiotte Send A Message

CHAPEL HILL — North Carolina guard Kenny Smith and Walker Lambiotte of North Carolina State are sending a message to high school students — the rules change both on and off the court.

In a 30-second television commercial Smith streaks down the court, stops about 23 feet from the basket and fires a jump shot.

As the film continues to roll, Smith says: "In 1986, that was two points. In 1987, it's three. Rules change."

The commercials featuring Smith and Lambiotte are intended by the UNC System to spread the message that in 1988, all students admitted to UNC schools will be subject to tougher admission standards.

The first spot aired last Thursday during the UNC-Maryland game.

The commercials point out that by 1988 incoming freshmen must have completed four English courses; three mathematics courses, including algebra I and II, geometry or a higher level course; two courses in social studies, including one in U.S. history; three science courses, including one in life science, one in physical science and one laboratory course.

What better time to talk to students and their parents than during Atlantic Coast Conference basketball games, said Wyndham Robertson, the system's acting vice president for communications.

Normally, the two ads would cost $100,000 to produce, Robertson said, but because much of the work was donated, they will cost less than $3,000.

The free ad space alone would have cost the university system in excess of $250,000, officials said.

Deng Criticizes Demonstrations By Students

By DANIEL SOUTHERLAND
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

PEKING — China's top leader Deng Xiaoping, in his first public comment since students began demonstrating for more democracy and freedom six weeks ago, Tuesday said the demonstrations had been "a very big mistake" and singled out three intellectuals for siding with the students and criticizing the leadership of the Communist Party.

At the same time, however, Deng and Premier Zhao Ziyang, in separate instances, indicated that China intends to move forward with its economic reforms despite the uncertainties created by the demonstrations, according to the official New China News Agency. Zhao told a visiting World Bank official that the country's financial reform, including changes in the banking system, will proceed faster than expected.

The comments by Deng and Zhao, among the country's top three leaders, mark the first high-level comment on the student unrest that spread to nearly two dozen cities after they began early last month. Noticeably absent so far are any public appearances or statements from Communist Party chief Hu Yaobang, fueling speculation here that Hu is in trouble in the wake of the demonstrations.

Deng made his comments in a meeting with Noboru Takeshita, secretary general of Japan's ruling Liberal Democratic Party. Hu had also been scheduled to meet with Takeshita, but Chinese officials have said the meeting had been cancelled because Hu, 71, was "exhausted" and in bad health. Asked to convey good wishes from Takeshita to Hu, Deng offered no explanation of Hu's absence but simply said "thank you."

The comments Tuesday come at a time when conservative Chinese officials, who have tended to be critical of some aspects of the economic and financial reforms, have joined in a strong ideological offensive believed to be led by Deng in reaction to the student demonstrators.

The new prominence of the conservatives, Deng's own hard line against the students, and an ideological campaign against "wholesale westernization" have raised questions about whether China might retreat from some aspects of its economic reforms and its opening to the outside world.

Deng made clear Tuesday that China will keep to its reform and open-door policy but told Takeshita that the student demonstrators had raised slogans opposed to the Communist Party and socialism, according to the Chinese news agency.

"The important matter is that we are not going to change our policy. The demonstrations do not influence our open-door policy," Deng said.

The Chinese leader said the three intellectuals had been involved in the student movement and should have known better because they were party members. He identified them as Fang Lizhi, who was fired yesterday from his job as vice president of a university in the eastern city of Hefei, Liu Binyan, an internationally known writer, and Wang Ruowang, another writer.

Fang 50, an astrophysicist, known among some students as the"Andrei Sakharov of China," has been accused of stirring up student unrest, rejecting the country's Communist Party leadership, and advocating the "complete Westernization" of China.

Liu, 60, is a journalist whose articles have exposed a number of corruption cases involving party cadres. His focus on the dark side of China's bureaucracy has landed him in trouble many times before.

It is widely believed that Liu has benefited at times from behind-the-scenes protection of party chief Hu.

The third target of Deng's criticism was Wang Ruowang, a Shanghai writer who, like Liu, has been a critic of corrupt practices in the party and government.

Odd Weather System Brings Spring To Iceland, Bitter Cold To Continent

By MICHAEL WEST
Associated Press Writer

LONDON (AP) — A weird weather cocktail has brought spring-like temperatures to Iceland and dramatically warmed up the Arctic Circle in Sweden while gripping most of the rest of Europe in the worst winter weather in 40 years.

Since the cold snap hit the continent Friday, at least 38 people have been killed in non-Soviet Europe. Some froze to death, others were burned in fires or asphyxiated by fumes from faulty home heaters.

Soviet authorities said 29 people were killed in avalanches in the Caucasus Mountains, considered the divider between the European and Soviet portions of the Soviet Union. In addition, they reported 48 deaths across the country caused by heaters and fires people were using to keep warm.

In Paris, subway stations were opened to shelter the homeless after nine deaths were blamed on the weather. Among those killed were a 28-year-old man and his 6-year-old daughter who were struck on a sidewalk by a bus that skidded on ice near Bidache on the Spanish border.

A 53-year-old Italian fell off his bicycle and into a ditch where he froze to death, the news agency ANSA reported. The snow-covered body was found by a worker spreading salt on a road in Spresiano near Venice, the agency said.

In Hungary, four people have frozen to death, the official news agency MTI reported.

In Skane province in southern Sweden, temperatures plunged to 5 degrees after a blizzard and people were warned that they risked death if they went outdoors. Sweden's weather service predicted the cold will ease in a few days.

In some areas of Sweden, above the Artic Circle, weather stations said temperatures had soared from minus 44 degrees to 32 degrees.

"We almost had a heat stroke when the thermometer shot up," Nils-Erik Vasara at the Naimakka weather station told Sweden's national news agency TT.

In Iceland, spring-like weather has produced temperatures around 50 degrees for the last week and the only snow is found in the mountains. Iceland's national weather bureau said warm spells are not unusual in winter, especially when northern Europe is gripped by cold.

In Britain, one of the worst hit areas was southeastern England, where many rail lines and roads were were blocked by snow. One train packed with passengers was trapped in a snowdrift Monday night near Maidstone and was not freed until Tuesday afternoon.

Food stores in Kent reported panic buying among shoppers. Some remote villages in the area have been without fresh milk since Saturday and some village stores have run out of food.

Bakers in Maidstone, Chatham and the Isle of Sheppey, where more than 30 inches of snow has fallen, reported lines of up to 200 people as fears grew of a breakdown in supplies and shoppers sought to stockpile food.

"People really have been panic buying," said a spokesman for Bejam's, one of Britain's largest frozen food chains.

The Royal Air Force weather station at Wittering in Cambridgeshire in eastern England said the wind chill factor would bring temperatures so low it would be cold enough to freeze human flesh.

Britain's Central Electricity Generating Board warned that power cuts could not be ruled out because of increased demand for electricity.

The Soviet news agency Tass said animals at Moscow Zoo have been put on high-calorie rations to keep them warm, while wolves from South America were moved to warmer quarters.

In West Germany, frozen switches delayed many commuter trains. Wolfgang Gehrke, spokesman for the West German railroad in Mainz, said freight trains loaded with coal "had frozen into one solid lump" and couldn't be unloaded.

The cold snap was not confined to northern Europe. The normally balmy Riviera in the south of France has been among areas plunged into the freezer, with Nice and other resort cities getting a light coat of snow.

DOUBLE COUPONS NO SUBSTITUTE FOR EXTRA LOW PRICES

The best way to compare grocery prices is to compare the prices on entire categories of groceries - - like dog foods. Any supermarket can have a weekly "special" on an item to create the impression that their prices are lower. But if you compare prices on the groceries you buy most for your family, you'll find you pay less at Food Lion. Here are the results of the price comparison on dog foods.

FARM FRESH TOTAL.....$288.95

Weekends Just Mean More Work In Class

School Of The Rising Sun

By CLAUDIA PUIG
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

LOS ANGELES — The five teenage boys were leaning against a shiny black Pontiac listening to rock music on the car's stereo when the school bell rang.

Although it was Saturday and they had already spent five days in school, the youths and about 500 other students from elementary grades through high school hurried inside Daniel Webster Junior High School for a day of no-nonsense instruction.

On Saturdays, Webster Junior High, becomes Asahi Gakuen, or "School of the Rising Sun," for children of Japanese businessmen assigned to their company's branch offices in Southern California.

The combination of American and Japanese instruction enables students to keep a foot in both cultures, helping them to return successfully to Japanese schools when their parents "get the order and have to pack up and go," said Ikuro Komoto, the school's director of administration.

At Asahi Gakuen, where respect for authority is taught along with the standard curriculum, formal bows under in a school day.

A small boy dressed in short pants stood hesitantly in the library doorway. After a quick glance around at teachers too busy to look up from their work, he bowed hurriedly to no one in particular and entered the book-filled room.

"Asahi Gakuen's main purpose is to teach the kids so they can go back to Japan and adapt themselves to the Japanese system," which typically is a year or two ahead of American schools, said Teruhiko Matsumoto, assistant principal and high school teacher.

The school's rigorous curriculum requires the Saturday students to cover in one day the mathematics, science, social studies and Japanese grammar their fellow students back in Japan have all week to learn.

"Our dilemma is (that) we have to say, "Study hard for American school, but come here on Saturday and study hard here,'" Matsumoto said.

However, Asahi Gakuen students seem to accept their dual responsibilities with relative ease.

"You get used to it, although at first it's kind of hard," said Kenji Kawahara, 16, who plans to go back to study in his native Japan.

At least a third of Asahi Gakuen students will eventually return to Japan and the highly competitive examinations that play a central role in Japanese life.

From first grade on, preparing for tests weighs heavily on students in Japan. College entrance exams may determine not just what university a student attends, but even the corporation where he will work. And the passion for testing carries over to private companies where hiring is sometimes based on a general exam.

"Japanese parents always want their children to go to better schools," said Principal Shinji Ushijima through an interpreter. "The main purpose is to be hired by a good corporation."

Founded in 1969, Asahi Gakuen developed out of Japanese parents' concerns that their children might fall behind academically after being away from Japanese schooling for a few years. They also feared that their children would become too Americanized, Matsumoto said. The school soothes the business community's fears by reinforcing the students' cultural identity as well as maintaining Japanese academic standards.

After spending weekdays in the more informal environment of American classrooms, students sometimes violate rules observed in their home country.

For example, in Japan a student would never think of getting up during class to sharpen a pencil while a teacher is speaking, Matsumoto said. But it is common practice in this country.

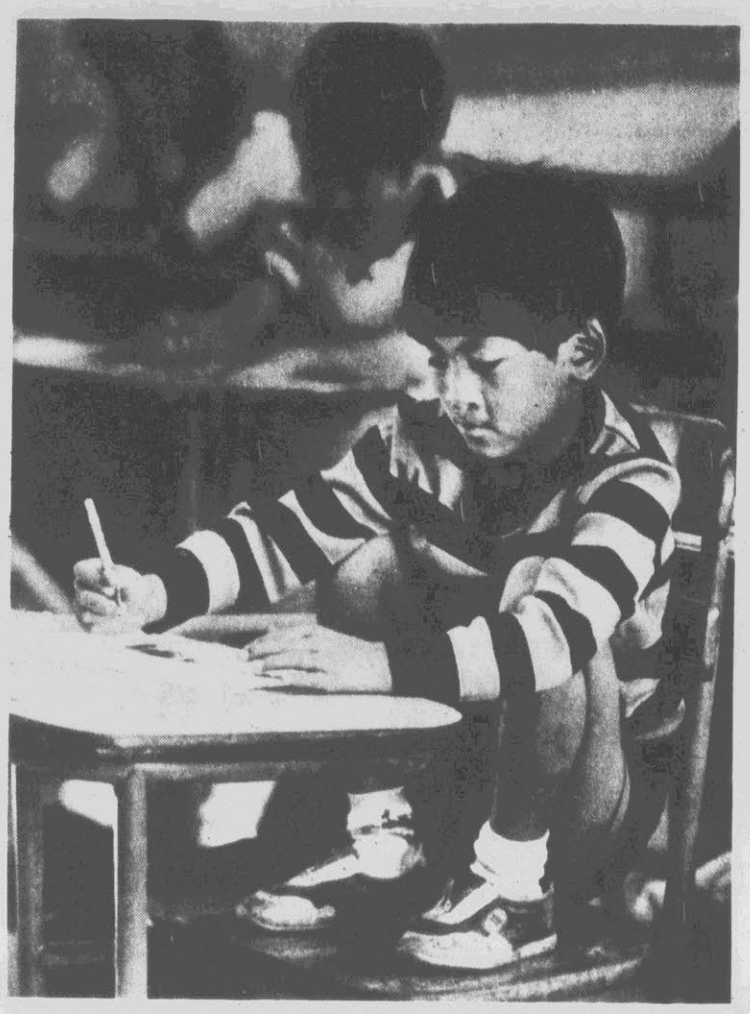

"I try to run classes more formally," Matsumoto said. "Sometimes it's very difficult after what kids experience in American schools.

Although there are Asahi Gakuen campuses in such Southern California suburban communities as Pasadena, Graden Grove and Tor-

Cleric Says British Manners Are Bad

Simply Appalling!

By MARCUS ELIASON
Associated Press Writer

LONDON (AP) — In the town of Newcastle-under-Lyme, the Rev. Ian Gregory has founded The Polite Society, dedicated to teaching the British good manners.

The mission sounds a bit like teaching the French how to cook or Garri Kasparov to play chess.

Bad manners in Britain? Where form letters are still addressed to John Doe Esquire? Where they "beg your pardon," stop their cars for pedestrians, apologize when YOU step on THEIR toes, and say "with the greatest respect" when they mean to insult you?

But Gregory isn't joking.

Indeed, the 53-year-old clergyman sounds positively apocalyptic as he rails against littered streets, vandalized payphones, cheeky teenagers, riotous soccer fans, drunken punks, men who don't offer their seats to women, and women who would regard such courtesies as sexist.

In the introduction to the inaugural newsletter of The Polite Society last year, he wrote that Britain has stood off "some of the most vicious tyrants in history" — Philip of Spain and his Armada in 1588, Napoleon Bonaparte in 1805 and Adolf Hitler 1940.

"But in 1986 the British people face national defeat at the hands of a sinister foe: our ignorant and ill-mannered selves."

British courtesy, Gregory said in a recent interview, "is a myth. It's based on foreigners' reading of romantic fiction. The reality, especially in our inner cities, is that we are heading back to the Stone Age. It's simply appalling, the way people treat each other."

Gregory's initiative has won a resounding response — admiring editorials, congratulatory messages from around the country, and a 250-strong dues-paying membership in the first month of The Polite Society's existence.

Some commentators see Gregory's complaint as symptomatic of a deeper anxiety in British society, not just about vanishing pleases and thank-yous but about youth unemployment, juvenile crime, drug addiction and random violence.

"We have suddenly taken a fierce dislike to ourselves," writes Ferdinand Mount, a former adviser to Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, in the conservative weekly Spectator.

On the liberal side, Neal Ascherson in the weekly Observer discerns among his countrymen a feeling that "England is leaving the English ... that they have become bad-tempered and unsociable and mistrustful."

"The British are more polite than Americans, and less friendly. But they have less time for a lot of the old kind of manners. They're using less formal modes of address, writing more informally, dropping the Esquires and the Right Honorables.

"It's a matter of getting the balance right. The English have been too formal and the Americans too informal, and now they're perhaps drawing together."

Ascherson argues that if the change means removing "petrified institutions," it should be welcomed, while Mount says it matters little that British behavior is no worse than elsewhere, because "politics is a drama of self-images" and the horror of the Heysel Stadium riot in Belgium in 1985 "embodied everthing that we have come to fear in England — civil disorder, social boorishness, economic decline." Thirty-nine people died in the riot in which British soccer fans went on a rampage.

Foreigners, at least until recent times, had always marveled at British manners.

"To Americans," wrote the critic Randall Jarrell, "English manners are far more frightening than none at all."

The English abroad, before the days of charter flights to overseas soccer matches, were paragons of correctness to be slavishly copied. Luigi Barzini, the late Italian writer, once recalled his grandfather, a tailor, putting an extra crease in his trousers because that's what English visitors seemed to prefer. He never realized that the creases were simply caused by the trousers being folded into suitcases.

Peter Jenkins, a British journalist, says he once heard a voice from a French hotel room shout at revelers on the street outside: "Would you please be quiet. There are English people up here trying to sleep."

British manners evolved over centuries of social stratification, reaching their apotheosis in the Victorian age with a code that provided for every conceivable situation, from leaving a calling card to crooking the little finger while sipping tea.

Now government minister Chris Patten warns that "we risk the creation of a yob society and an impoverished culture," yob being Cockney slang for a lout. The newspaper Today, meanwhile, laments the passing of "the British reputation for good manners and civilized behavior."

But a foreigner arriving here today, encountering the cheerful cab drivers, the orderly lines at bus stops, the self-effacing smiles, might wonder what the latest fuss is all about.

In reading The Times, the visitor will find a discussion in the letters column on whether "Dear Sir or Madam" is still the correct form in official correspondence.

And the British really do apologize when you step on their toes.

"I certainly do," says Charles Kidd, who works for Debrett's, the authority on royal and noble lineages. "It always strikes me afterward that it's a bit ridiculous, but it's something you're brought up with from childhood."

Elsie Burch Donald, American-born editor of "Debrett's Etiquette and Modern Manners," says British manners are "becoming more informal, which I think is great for Britain."

Mrs. Donald, whose expertise ranges from comportment on the golf course to writing to the queen, said in an interview: "The British are more polite than Americans, and less friendly. But they have less time for a lot of the old kind of manners. They're using less formal modes of address, writing more informally, dropping the Esquires and the Right Honorables.

"It's a matter of getting the balance right. The English have been too formal and the Americans too informal, and now they're perhaps drawing together."

Florence Beckons Tourists With Cultural Offerings

By JEFF GRIFFIN
Associated Press Writer

FLORENCE, Italy (AP) — Smarting from a sharp decline in tourism last year, this city renowned for its Renaissance art and architecture is beckoning visitors with a dazzling array of exhibits and special cultural events.

American desertions led an 18 percent drop in the number of tourists who visited the Tuscan capital in the first eight months of 1986 as compared to the same period in 1985.

Art treasures such as Michelangelo's "David" and Botticelli's "Birth of Venus" and architectural treasures such as the shop-lined Ponte Vecchio, a 14th-century bridge, drew just 131,000 American tourists in the first eight months of 1986 — 65 percent fewer than in the same period of 1985. Figures for the final four months were not available.

"We have lost especially the American sector, and it is a sector of quality, but tourism this year hasn't been as bad as people say," Gabrielle Mattioli, superintendent of tourism for the province of Florence, said in a recent interview.

After a series of terrorist attacks in Italy culminating in the Dec. 27, 1985, massacre at the Rome airport that claimed 16 lives, the bottom fell out of the American tourist market. Hotels in Florence were hit by a wave of reservation cancellations as wary Americans scratched Italy from their vacation plans.

"After the Rome airport attack, we registered a decline in hotel occupancy that lasted until September or October, but right now we are noticing that tourism is returning, slowly, to a normal level," Mattioli said.

A siren call of special events that run the gamut from ballet to art exhibits to sports is helping the city rebound as a mecca for tourists.

Myriad art exhibits cover such diverse subjects as "The Time of Rubens," "The Golden Age of Spanish Painting," German expressionism, "The Age of Galileo," avant-garde European sculpture and 16th-century Italian artist Andrea del Sarto.

The dance calendar this year includes performances by internationally acclaimed troupes such as the Twyla Tharp Company from the United States and the Ballet Roland Petit from France.

In January, a stage version of "Hamlet" by the Swedish filmmaker Ingmar Bergman will premiere in Florence.

Named "1986 Capital of European Culture" by the European Economic Community, Florence is benefitting from special funding for cultural events. Mattioli said the city received $5.2 million from the EEC and $8.9 million from the Italian government.

Mattioli acknowledged that Italy has an image problem with prospective American visitors who associate the country with terrorism. The plunging value of the U.S. dollar in relation to the lira — it has fallen roughly 30 percent in the past year — has also been a deterrent.

Italian tourist officials say that while 1.7 million American visitors spent $3 billion in Italy in 1985, U.S. tourism has declined this year by 40 percent nationwide and by 60 percent in Rome, Venice and Florence.

The loss of the American sector strained the local economy, which derives $593 million a year from tourism, according to Mattioli. And Florence, like other Italian cities, has launched initiatives to lure Americans back, including publicity campaigns and special package tours.

But the city has hardly become a ghost town.

"We have lost one sector, and it is a sector of quality, but we have people of other countries coming to Italy," Mattioli said. The number of Italians visiting Florence actually increased slightly, he added.

Convention tourism is being pushed as a sure-fire way to bring foreign visitors to Florence.

At the recent Exchange of Congress Tourism exposition, members of Florence's tourism industry courted convention planners from around the world and promoted the city as an attractive site for conventions. More than 400 conventions are planned in Florence for the first 11 months of 1987.

Mattioli predicts a bright future for the city as a magnet for tourists: "Florence is the only city where art, culture and life coincide and can all be experienced together."

Zoo Keepers Take Care To Primp And Pamper Their Pachyderms

By JERRY BELCHER
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

LOS ANGELES — How do you trim the toenails of a five-ton elephant?

If this was a corny elephant joke, the punch line would be: "Very, very carefully."

But to the four keepers who work with the Los Angeles Zoo's small herd, elephants are nothing to joke about, and the handlers are very careful when they are with the huge animals, especially during the pachyderms' pedicures, baths and skin moisturizing.

Pedicures? Skin moisturizing?

Such pampering has an important purpose, keeper Jeff Briscoe said.

Experience has shown that pampering is vital for creatures as intelligent, sensitive and potentially dangerous as elephants, Briscoe explained. Animals that get a lot of firm but affectionate attention are better behaved, easier to work with and much safer to be around.

So every morning, one of the zoo's two-member teams of elephant keepers spend the first 90 minutes of the day grooming the the animals for the zoo's 10 a.m. opening.

Because the work is difficult, demanding and occasionally dangerous, Briscoe and the other keepers — Gene Nada, Marilyn Fackler-Gray and George French — are volunteers, and the elephants are chained — one foreleg, one back leg.

'Any animal that weighs 10,000 pounds is dangerous," Briscoe said, "even if it doesn't want to be."

While the keepers clean up the barns, the elephants slurp up 20 to 40 gallons of water and munch on carrots, onions and a dry snack called monkey biscuits (The elephants' main meal of oats and hay is eaten at night).

Then the pampering begins.

While a pedicure for an elephant might seem excessive, Briscoe said it is a necessity for zoo elephants because they do not walk as much as as their wild relatives, who may cover more than 20 miles a day foraging for food.

Also, contrary to what one might think, Briscoe said, elephants walk on their tiptoes, which makes their big toenails quite vulnerable to tearing and cracking.

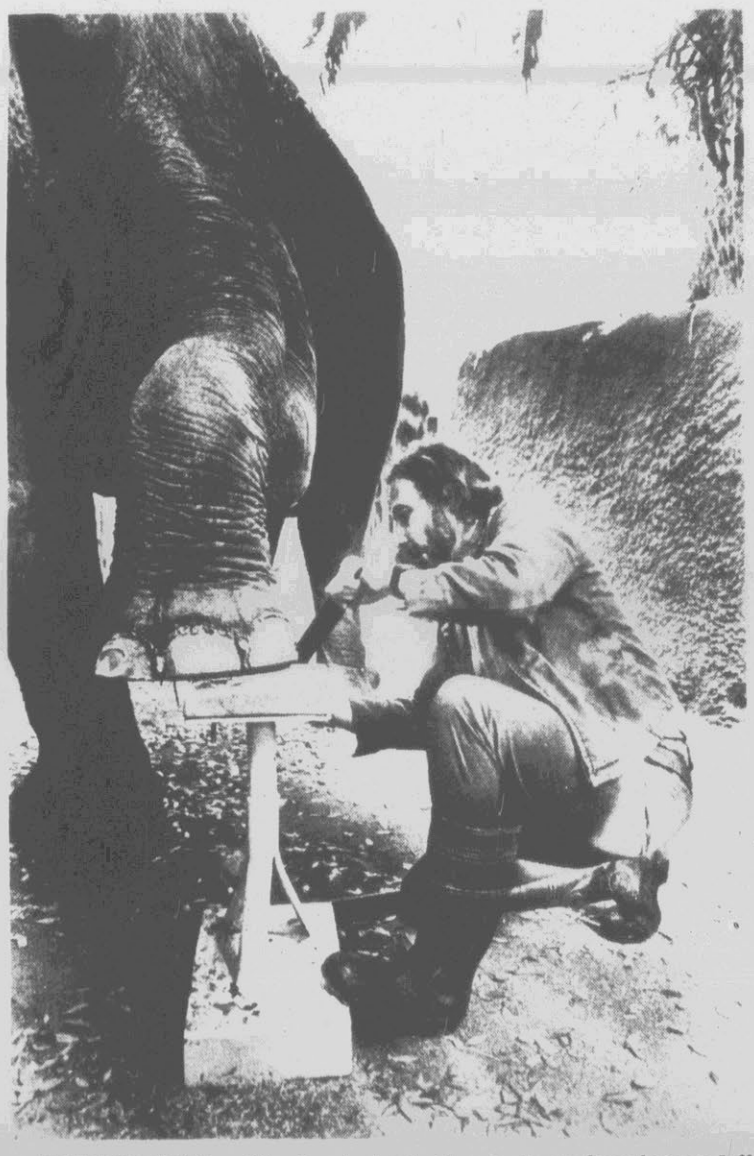

Confined elephants must have their toenails and cuticles oiled, softened, shaped and smoothed because cracks and rough edges can be as painful as a human's hangnail. They also can cause serious health hazards to the valuable animals.

The keepers use carpenter's drawknives, farrier's hoof-picks and long metal rasps to minister to the animals, who are trained to lift their feet onto a special stand for the pedicures. The older elephants require nail-trimming at least once a week.

Another essential in elephant care is the daily bath and skin moisturizing.

The bath is a must, Briscoe said, because elephants habitually toss dust, dirt and hay on their backs, and they can get pretty gritty and grimy.

In the wild, Briscoe said, this behavior is a protective measure — dirt and grass provides insulation against heat and protection from insects.

TV Producer Stephen Cannell Once Thought He Was A Loser

By KATHRYN BAKER
AP Television Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Stephen J. Cannell is one of Hollywood's most prolific television writers and producers. Since his studio was founded in 1980, it has produced a dozen prime-time series — including "The A-Team," "Hunter" and "Stingray."

So it was a surprise when Cannell said in a recent interview, "I was convinced by the time I was 11 or 12 years old that I was a loser."

Cannell said he came from an upper-middle-class family, went to private schools — and promptly flunked out of one after another, repeating three grades.

"I remember going home at night and looking up at the ceiling and going, 'Boy, I'm in trouble here,'" he said.

Cannell, 46, has dyslexia, a condition that causes him to transpose numbers and letters. He said his long-time secretary is able to decipher most of his writing, but even she sometimes has to ask him to translate.

"It's nothing you can get over. I'm as bad at spelling and sequencing and all the things that gave me trouble in high school. I'm as bad at that today as I was when I was in school," Cannell said.

He was in New York to appear on the NBC after-school news show "Main Street" to offer encouragement to kids who have the learning disability.

Before he established Stephen J. Cannell Productions, Cannell had created or produced eight prime-time series for Universal Television.

His company has two series in the works: "Starbuck," starring Dale Robertson, for NBC and "Jump Street Chapel" for the Fox Broadcasting Co. The long-running "The A-Team" was recently canceled by NBC, replaced in the schedule with another Cannell production, "Stingray."

Cannell, a bearded, friendly, third-generation Californian, went to work in his father's design company after college. Though he and wife Marcia had two young children, she encouraged him to pursue his dream of writing for a living.

"He said, 'I want to do this,' and I just thought he could do it," said Mrs. Cannell, who accompanied her husband to New York.

"She never had a moment's doubt," Cannell said. "I was scared to death."

Mrs. Cannell is now on the board of her husband's production company.

Cannell said he chose television because, "I thought to myself, where is the best opportunity for somebody with no connections to break into this field? I looked at this field of television and realized that it was consuming hundreds and hundreds of scripts annually, and I felt, that's got to be the easiest target to hit just by virtue of the fact that there are more assignments available.

"And I also like television. That's another thing. I'm not better than my audiences. I sometimes talk to people who are saying, 'Well, you know, they'll like this,' or 'They'll like that.' I always go, 'What do I like?' Then I try to write something I like, and if I'm on target it works and I'm not, it doesn't."

It's hard to imagine a television producer who wouldn't envy Cannell's track record. His first series was "The Rockford Files" in 1974. He followed with "Baretta."

Cannell credits his success to his collaborators. Casting, he says, is frequently the key, noting the way the simple "Rockford" private detective premise matched James Garner.

Failures are harder to explain. He said he sometimes knows a show isn't clicking and agrees with the network to let it end. But he thinks two of his short-lived productions, "Baa Baa Black Sheep" and "Ten Speed and Brown Shoe," should have been hits and just didn't find their audiences.

"Ten Speed" was a 1981 screwball detective comedy-drama with Ben Vereen and Jeff Goldblum as a con man and a fantasizing stockbroker who team up to solve cases. The show was liked by critics, and Cannell was nominated for a writing Emmy, but it didn't last a season.

"Black Sheep" starred Robert Conrad as leader of a squadron of misfit World War II fliers in the South Pacific. It bounced around the schedule off and on from 1976 to 1978.

"You have to look at your failures with your eyes open," Cannell said. "You can't just take a position that you're absolutely right and the network is absolutely wrong. There's too much of that that goes on anyway where we (in the creative community) blame the networks for our failures and take all the credit for our successes."

Though he runs the studio, Cannell still writes almost every day.

"I always want to maintain my identity as a writer, because that's what I started out to be," he said. "When it's all over, I hope I'll still be writing."

Mansion For Sale

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. (AP) — The pink stucco mansion bought by newspaper baron William Randolph Hearst for movie actress Marion Davies is for sale for $25 million.

Hearst bought the H-shaped home in 1947 for $120,000 and named it "Beverly House," according to the book "The Estates of Beverly Hills" by Jeff Hyland and Charles Lockwood.

Hyland's real estate firm, Alvarez, Hyland & Young, has the listing for the approximately 20,000 square-foot mansion.

Miss Davies hung a dozen, bigger-than-life paintings of herself along the first-floor walls and placed statues from Hearst's San Simeon mansion in the elaborate gardens, the book said.

Hearst died in Beverly House in 1951, at age 89. Ten weeks later, Miss Davies married Horace Brown, an ex-merchant seaman and movie extra who bore a strong resemblance to Hearst. Miss Davies died in 1961, and Brown sold the property.

Missing Dog Brings Wackos

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. (AP) — Pia Zadora got hundreds of phone calls after she advertised for the return of one of her dogs. However, most of the callers were not concerned about the dog.

"Mostly wackos are calling," said the entertainer's manager, Tino Barzie. "One guy even got on the line and started barking at me. The answering service is going crazy. Hundreds of calls have come in. We can't keep up."

Miss Zadora discovered the dog missing when she returned last week from an appearance in Las Vegas, Nev. The weekend newspaper advertisement offered a reward for the return of Toki, a white female Akita.

"Actually, Toki and the female puppy, Mika, were both gone," Miss Zadora said Sunday, blaming their disappearance on "new help in the house."

"I fired the help," she said. Actress Linda Evans found Mika.

Miss Zadora said she included her name in the ad to attract attention, and has branded her other dogs as a precaution.

Gilbert Says TV Film 'Traumatic'

AVON PARK, Fla. (AP) — Roswell Gilbert, serving a life sentence for the fatal shooting of his ailing wife, said the television movie about the case was "factual but traumatic."

"It's an odd experience," the 77-year-old retired engineer said in an interview from Avon Park Correctional Institution.

"At one part, I almost walked out. I didn't want to come unglued."

He said he watched the NBC drama "Mercy or Murder?" Sunday night with about 25 inmates at the minimum-security prison.

Scenes of his wife's bout with the degenerative diseases of Alzheimer's and osteoporosis made him cry, he said. He still maintained he did no wrong in shooting Emily Gilbert, his wife of 51, years, two years ago.

"I have no regrets about it ... I couldn't stand to see her suffering. She wanted to die," Gilbert said.

Throughout the movie, Robert Young, who portrayed Gilbert, spoke of how he wanted no sympathy for his decision. But Gilbert said after spending 18 months in prison, he just wants to get out.

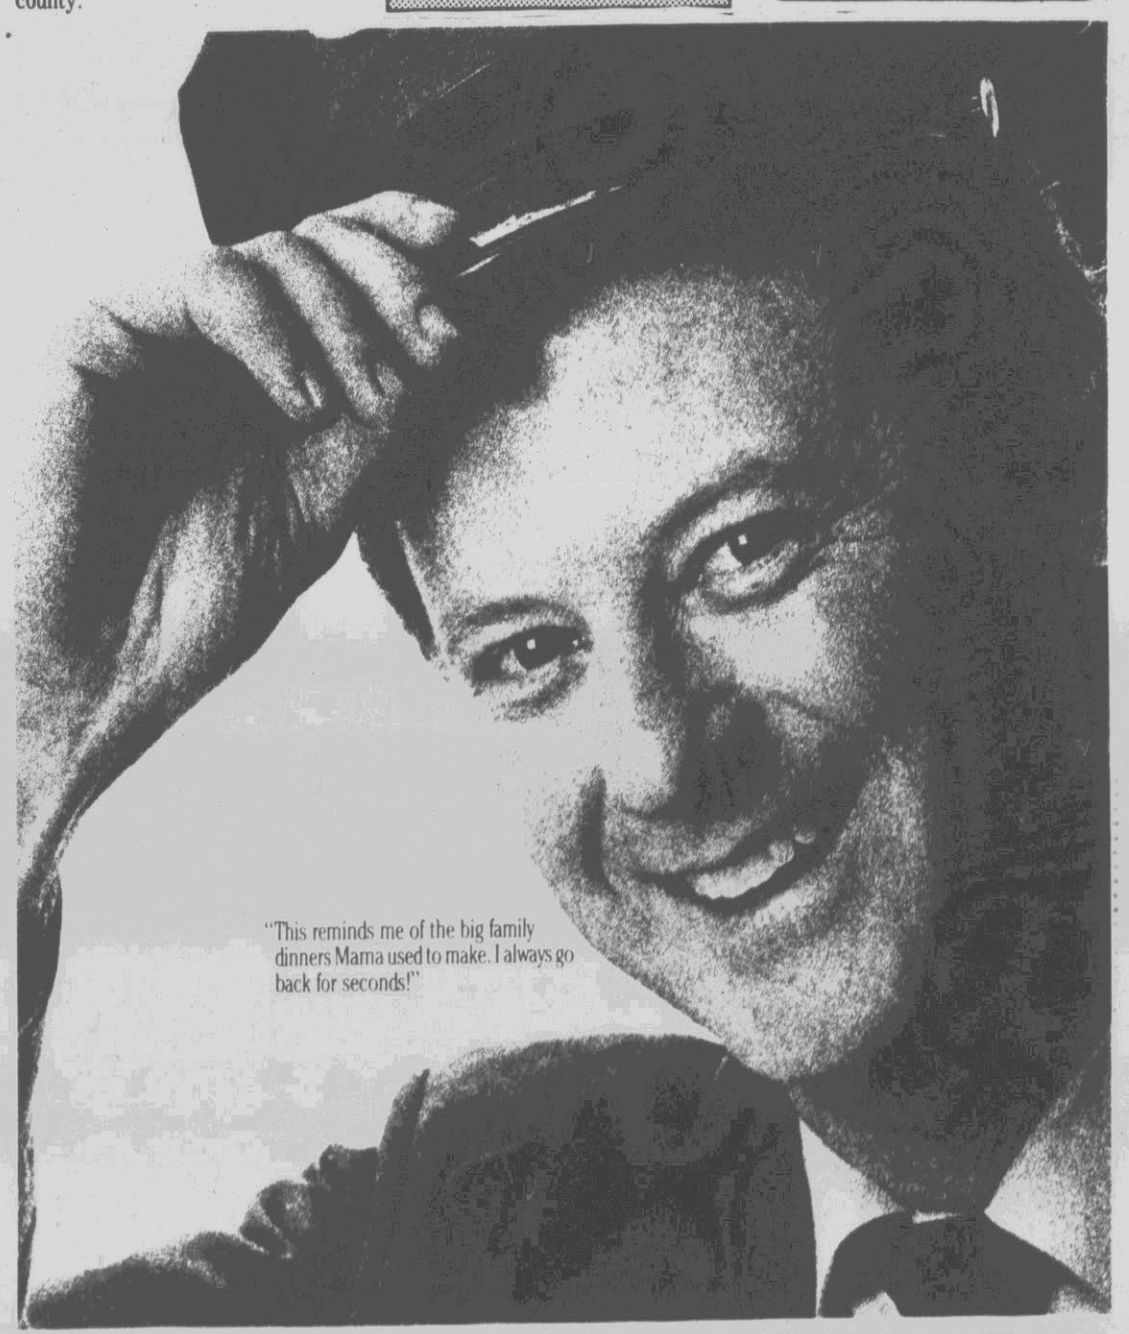

Sympathy now "might get me out of here," he said.

Gilbert said he would get 10 percent of $50,000 paid him for the movie, with the rest going to his lawyer, and said he might give the money for Alzheimer's research.

Minister Uses Pulpit Pleas To Encourage Adoptions

By STRAT DOUTHAT
Associated Press Writer

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — The Rev. Robert West has a special plea for families in his flock. He wants them to make room in their hearts, and their homes, for some of the abused and abandoned black children of Mississippi.

"I want my families, some of them, at least, to become adoptive parents," West says.

It's a request the burly Baptist preacher makes from time to time in his role as spokesman for The Ministers For Adoption, a statewide group of black clergy brought together by his wife, Linda.

Mrs. West is adoption coordinator for the Mississippi Children's Home Society, a non-profit group that helps match Mississippi families with adoptable children from throughout the country.

Since the ministers got involved two years ago, she said, they have helped her find homes for 12 of the 26 children her agency has placed in that time.

"This may not sound like a lot, but these are the kids hardest to place — black, male and school-age," she said. "The ministers have been a tremendous help."

Mrs. West said she was searching for a more effective way to place such special-needs black children when she decided to seek help from her husband and his peers.

"I believe the black church is a very important resource for the black community," she said. "I decided the black church was a place where we could recruit the kind of families who would be willing to make a commitment."

Six black ministers initially joined the group. The number has since grown to 11.

"We looked for ministers serving two or more churches in lightly populated counties," Mrs. West said. "Many of these kids have been neglected and abused and some have problems; we felt that rural families wouldn't have the same high expectations as would urban families."

West said several children had been adopted by families in his two congregations, among them two childless couples who each took four children so siblings could stay together.

Mrs. West said the 12 children adopted with the ministers' help came from Mississippi orphanages and foster homes. "There are dozens of older black children available for adoption in Mississippi and more are becoming eligible all the time," she said.

The Wests, themselves adoptive parents of a 10-year-old boy, said they see a steady stream of black children who need permanent homes.

"It's very sad," said Mrs. West.

"It's relatively easy to find permanent homes for the infants, and especially for the white babies, but the older children are a problem," said her husband. "I'm always on the lookout for families who have a lot of love to give to a child."

Patty Jones of the state Welfare Department, with whom the Mississippi Children's Home Society has a contract to find permanent placements for special-needs foster children, said Mrs. West had placed six children for the state in the past year.

Four of these children went to one family. "They went to a couple at Carthage, Frank and Maggie LeFlore," Mrs. West said. "This was our big success story of the year."

Weekend School

rance, the West Los Angeles campus houses the only high school in the system. Students are bused in from as far away as Orange County, Komoto said.

If enrollment figures are an indication, the Rising Sun school is a shining success. When Asahi Gakuen first began 17 years ago, there were 68 students on one campus. Today, 2,000 are enrolled on the four campuses. Projections for 1987, Komoto said, indicate an enrollment increase that may require the addition of a fifth school.

An estimated 3,0500 Japanese nationals work for the 530 branches of Japanese companies in the Los Angeles area, according to Hiroshi Matsuoka, executive director of the Japan Business Association of Southern California, the organization that helped Asahi Gakuen get started. About 85 percent of those executives send their children to Asahi Gakuen, Matsuoka said.

Monthly tuition — $67.50 for high school students and $49.50 for first through ninth-graders — covers the cost of textbooks, which are sent from Japan. Each school has an extensive library with volumes ranging from traditional folk tales to biographies of such Westerners as Florence Nightingale and Thomas Edison, and a dog-eared copy of John Fitzgerald Kennedy's life story. The West Los Angeles campus has 5,000 books available for weekly lending, according to librarian Fatsuko Fujita.

Students are sometimes given homework assignments, but the emphasis is placed on class work, said Assistant Principal Kimiko Lin. Teachers avoid overloading students who already have a full slate of classes during the week.

"If they just come here every Saturday, without studying, that keeps them speaking the Japanese language," Matsumoto said.

The school's informal polling of Asahi Gakuen alumni shows that those students who attend regularly through high school graduation did better when they returned to Japan than those who attended sporadically, Matsumoto said.

Although spending six days a week in school can be tough, students said that the opportunity to see their friends shored up their motivation. Many even cited their friends as the primary reason for attending.

"I have American friends and enjoy American school," said 11th-grader Aya Yamaura. "On Saturday I can come here and meet my Japanese friends."

On a recent Saturday, while other children were playing with friends or watching the Smurfs, well-behaved fourth-graders at Asahi Gakuen watched televised science experiments narrated in Japanese. Their rapt attention deteriorated into quiet fidgeting as the program came to an end. Videotaped lessons, from a library of about 70 history, geography and science cassettes, are often used in teaching younger students, Lin said.

"Most of the younger children can understand Japanese very well," said fourth-grade teacher Kuniko Seto. "But for some raised here it's a little bit hard. Students raised in Japan are a little more advanced."

Propelled by cultural pride, even parents who do not expect to return to Japan send their children to Asahi Gakuen, as Seto plans to do.

Pet Perks

Cats and dogs are the most popular pets in the nation. Unfortunately, these two animals have been all too popular in a different way in some other nations. In China, dog meat is a delicacy. During the siege of Paris in 1876, cat meat became gourmet food. However, Americans today spend about four times as much money on pet food as they do on baby food. With 23 million felines, the United States has the largest pet cat population in the world.

Rubber bridge and duplicate sometimes seem as if they are two different games. Consider this hand and decide how you would play at duplicate and whether you would follow the same line playing for money.

At duplicate, your first consideration is what the contract is likely to be at the other tables. With a combined count of 27 high-card points and an eight-card major-suit fit, you can safely assume that four hearts will be the popular contract. Thus you cannot afford to take any anti-percentage plays since, if the odds hold true, you would simply be assuring yourself of a poor score.

Therefore, what do you do after the defenders start with three rounds of spades? You ruff and cash the ace-king of trumps. If both defenders follow, or if the jack drops singleton, or if East turns up with four trumps to the jack, you can make the rest of the tricks. Unfortunately, it is West who has four trumps headed by the knave so, like everyone else, you are doomed to defeat for an average score.

At rubber bridge, you should not jeopardize your contract for an overtrick. You can make your contract even if you lose a trump trick, so the correct line after ruffing the spade is to cash the ace-queen of trumps, leaving the king in dummy as an entry. When the suit breaks 4-1, you start on diamonds. Somewhere along the line the defender with the long trumps will ruff, but that will be the third and last trick for his side. You win any return, draw the last trump by entering dummy with the king and cash whatever diamonds still remain. In all you make five trump tricks, four diamonds and the ace of clubs.

No Returns

By Susan Sayetta

can be drab
can be interesting you wonder how long it will last before it ends and it's over and side one plays sometimes it'll play and play then others it's over like the still of a night what will it be this time a long play or a series of pauses who picks these tapes for us what happens when side two falls apart and the guarantee has worn out and there is no return without proper payment unless you have the exact change and what happens to the replacement just out of the plastic holding it so innocently in place when played a defect is found maybe it's not the sound you were looking for but there's a return for the guarantee is new but how many tapes must play before the precise one is chosen for the delicately tuned ear how many returns are allowed for exchange a month
a year
a lifetime
if only you could realize that love is similar given, taken bought, sold broken but never

all's well it seems But life is dull inside the living hull only to get away

somehow, someway with tremendous might that in my dreams between twisting beams

it'll be one day

They Won't Listen

—By Brian Durham—

My teeth are crooked though I tell them to be straight
They just won't listen
they just won't obey.

I tell them
"I'll get braces!
I will! I will!"
My teeth won't listen,
They just won't obey.
So I took them to the orthodontist and told them where we were Then I felt a strange jingle
So I looked inot a mirror as a nurse called out my name
My teeth were straight!
My teeth were straight!
"I said to the nurse,"Never mind
I'm going outside to play a game.

Cork Trick

Fill a narrow drinking glass with water almost to the top. Place a cork on the water and try to make it stay in the center. You will find it impossible to do since the cork will continue to move to the edge of the glass.

Try adding water slowly from another container until the glass is so full that the water surface is actually above the rim. Carefully drop the cork in the center and it will stay there.

The surface of the water acts like an elastic membrane and takes this curved shape without running over. This is due to the attraction that water molecules have for each other, a phenomenon called surface tension.

After Holiday Stuffing Comes The Diet Season

Those visions of sugarplums that danced in your head during the holidays didn't stop there, did they? They cha-cha-ed their way onto your chin. Right? They tangoed onto your tummy and hustled onto your hips and waltzed around your waistline.

It's the same old holiday story where the turkey isn't the only thing that gets stuffed.

Chances are good that it was worth it — but if the ho-hos have made way for the oh-nos as you step on the scale in the morning, it's time to do something about it.

While dieting will never beat divinity and fudge and gumdrops in a "what's more fun" poll, at least it's not as painful as it used to be.

The supermarkets today are full of light and reduced calorie products that not only take some of the guesswork out of calorie counting, but leave in a lot of flavor.

There are light versions of cream cheese and reduced-calorie versions of bread. There are sugar substitutes that actually taste sweet, and low-calorie dinners that probably taste better than a lot of things you can cook yourself.

Meat comes in leaner cuts, fruits come packed in their own juices, and no one thinks you're a sissy if you drink lite beer.

In other words, you can have a diet and enjoy it too.

You'll have a great meal for only 430 calories, including dessert.

Szechuan Beef with Vegetables and Rice

Oriental Salad
Tart Strawberry Ice

1 package (10-ounce) unsweetened frozen strawberry pieces, partially thawed
2 cups water
1 can (8-ounce) crushed pineapple (juice packed)
1 package (.49-ounce) sugar-free lemonade flavor soft drink mix

In blender, combine all ingredients. Process until smooth. Pour into large mixing bowl. Freeze, covered, 4 hours. Spoon into blender and process until smooth but not melted. Spoon back into mixing bowl. Freeze, covered, until firm. Let stand 30 minutes before serving. Makes 6 servings.

ORIENTAL SALAD

3 cups torn spinach leaves
1 tablespoon sliced green onion
1/2 cup bean sprouts
2 tablespoons red wine vinegar
2 teaspoons vegetable oil
1 tablespoon water
1 tablespoon soy sauce
1/4 teaspoon garlic powder
Low calorie sweetner to equal 2 teaspoons sugar
1/4 cup chow mein noodles

In medium bowl, combine spinach, onion and bean sprouts. Set aside. In container with tight-fitting lid, combine vinegar, oil, water, soy sauce, garlic powder and sweetner. Pour over salad greens. Toss until greens are well coated. Sprinkle with chow mein noodles. Makes 2 servings.

IT'S LOW CALORIE TIME — When you start with a low-calorie frozen dinner, you can enjoy Szechuan Beef, vegatables, salad and even dessert for only 430 calories.

Old Tom Turkey Breaks Those Seasonal Bonds

By TOM SIETSEMA
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

Turkey, hailed as The Great American Bird and a hallowed holiday tradition, appears to be going mainstream.

Thirty years ago, 90 percent of all turkey was purchased in November and December. Today, 60 percent is bought in the first 10 months of the year.

According to the National Turkey Federation, Americans ate an estimated 13.5 pounds of turkey per person last year, with health-conscious Californians leading the flock by consuming 16 pounds per capita.

Why the increase? One reason is variety: Fresh and frozen turkey comes in the form of roasts, nuggets, hot dogs, deli meats, filets and sausages, in addition to the standard whole bird.

Moreover, given the array of turkey parts and sizes, turkey can be adapted to almost any meat dish. Try using slices or "scallops" of turkey breast in recipes calling for veal (schnitzels and roulades, for example), or in ethnic dishes calling for pork or chicken (stir-fries, sweet-and-sour preparations).

Ground turkey serves well as a pizza topping, or as the main ingredient in meat loaf, tacos, chili and lasagna. Dark turkey meat can be substituted for beef and lamb.

Tired of the usual meat filler? Consider adding turkey reubens, turkey cordon bleu, turkey salad and cream of turkey soup to your culinary repertoire.

Generally, the same rules for purchasing chicken apply to turkey: Look for smooth skin and a pale pink color. When buying frozen turkey, avoid packaging with pinkish ice inside, usually a sign that the meat has been defrosted and refrozen.

Considered a "delicate" meat, turkey, like fish, should be prepared just until it's cooked through; turkey's high protein-low fat ratio makes it sensitive to extreme heat and prolonged cooking.

As a rule, fresh cutlets should be sauteed 2 to 3 minutes per side, stew meat about 15 minutes, roast breast and breast portions 15 to 20 minutes per pound at 325 degrees. Drumsticks, wings and thighs should be cooked at 325 degrees for 1-1¾ hours.

Whatever the cooking method, remember to preheat the pan or oven before adding turkey parts to help retain juices.

Using a microwave? For best results, cook the parts in an oven cooking bag on medium-high heat or 70 percent power. (For a free brochure on microwaving turkey parts write: National Turkey Federation, 11319 Sunset Hills Rd., Reston, Va. 22090.)

Trend Toward Health-Fitness Prompts Less-For-More Cuisine

By KAREN GILLINGHAM
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

The measure of a good restaurant, not so long ago, used to be the amount of food it served. For a reasonable price, customers wanted to leave with a full stomach and a bag to bring home to doggie, too.

But today, more restaurants are serving petite portions, often with jumbo prices, to fit the public's fetish for health and fitness.

Whether called spa cuisine, fitness cuisine, cuisine "naturelle" or just plain light food, the often beautiful-to-look-at but healthful-to-eat fare once served only at the ritziest resorts is now invading the establishments where Americans are eating one of every three meals.

From the spa cuisine offered on the Four Season's menu in New York to the fitness food offered at the Polo Lounge of the Beverly Hills Hotel, low-fat, low-sodium and high-fiber cooking has changed hands from those of the health-conscious to those of the top chefs across the United States.

In place of the carrot and celery sticks that dieters have chewed (and chewed) on in the past, there is now a tender ragout of baby vegetables. And the dry tuna on dry whole wheat that once caused the calorie-conscious to pucker has been replaced by scallops and shrimp on a marmalade of leeks that is to drool for even if it will not fill you up.

As much for the well-to-do as for those who just want to be well, such well-established establishments as the Ritz-Carlton Hotels have introduced fitness cuisine menus to the privileged who can afford to pay the price to be prim.

"We're finally getting away from cottage cheese," said Christian Rassinoux, executive chef at the Ritz-Carlton Hotel in Laguna Niguel, Calif.

Herve Humler, director of food and beverage for the Ritz-Carlton Hotel Co., said, "The increased awareness of people today to maintain healthful requirements and balanced diets has challenged our chefs to prepare a complete menu of fitness cuisine."

Humler had transported five Ritz-Carlton executive chefs from across America to a "fitness cuisine cook-off" in the kitchen of one of two Ritz-Carlton hotels in Atlanta, this one in the exclusive suburb of Buckhead.

More than 60 of 100 fitness dishes created by the chefs at their individual hotels were being whipped up for a final taste test and prudently plated to achieve artistry and consistency in presentation before each chef decided which dishes to offer guests at their individual hotels.

Tethered to the American Heart Association's "Eating Away From Home" program, the chefs, most of them European trained, seemed to relish the challenge to combine their culinary standards with the associa-

ALL IN ONE DISH — Eggplant Vegetable Bake is a wholesome, flavorful combination of eggplant, cauliflowerets, green pepper and minestrone soup.

Cooking With Soup Adds Warmth To Winter Meals

You don't have to be a blizzard wizzard to understand how food needs change when severe winter weather hits. As the temperature plummets, our calorie needs increase slightly or significantly depending on an individual's activity.

During winter, stock up on nutrition with warming, hearty main dishes. Stocking up doesn't have to mean excessive calories, however. Take advantage of lean meats, poultry and fish, vegetables and fruits and milk.

Eggplant Vegetable Bake offers a flavorful combination of eggplant, cauliflowerets and green pepper. This dish has fiber and color with a Home Cookin' Italian touch. One can of minestrone soup adds chunks of additional garden vegetables, pasta shells and kidney beans in a delicately flavored broth.

Chunky Chicken Cacciatore is a tasty two-step recipe for chicken. Brown the chicken in a skillet, spoon off fat and stir in Mediterranean vegetable soup and tomato paste. It's an easy dinner for busy evenings when teamed with milk, a side-dish and salad.

The steam rising from Beef and Barley Stew almost writes out "winter warm-up." This hearty stew combines beef, onions, carrots and Brussels sprouts with barley and canned ready-to-serve beef broth.

Beef and Barley Stew is great for busy families; each member can scoop a serving anytime and heat it in the microwave oven.

Keep extra soup supplies on hand in case of winter storms. If one does hit, stay indoors and enjoy some foods to fit the season.

EGGPLANT VEGETABLE BAKE

1 medium eggplant, cut in half lengthwise and sliced
2 tablespoons olive oil
2 cups cauliflowerets
1 medium green pepper, cut into 1-inch squares
1 medium onion, sliced and separated into rings
1 can (19 ounces) minestrone soup
3 tablespoons Italian-seasoned fine dry bread crumbs
1/2 teaspoon dried oregano leaves, crushed
4 slices provolone cheese

Place eggplant slices in single layer on rack in broiler pan. Broil 4 inches from heat, 3 minutes on each side. Arrange slices on bottom and around sides of 2-quart casserole. In 10-inch skillet over medium heat, in hot oil, cook cauliflower, pepper and onion until lightly browned, stirring often.

Stir in soup, bread crumbs and oregano. Heat through. Spoon into prepared dish. Bake at 350 degrees for 20 mintues. Top with cheese. Bake 5 minutes or until cheese is melted. Makes 5 cups or 6 servings.

CHUNKY CHICKEN CACCIATORE

6 chicken legs
1 green pepper, cut into 1/2-inch strips
1 can (19 ounces) chunky vegetable soup
1 can (6 ounces) tomato paste
1/2 teaspoon dried thyme leaves, crushed

In 10-inch skillet over medium heat, in hot oil, brown chicken about 10 minutes. Spoon off fat. Stir in pepper, soup, tomato paste and thyme. Heat to boiling. Reduce heat to low. Cover; simmer 35 minutes or until chicken is fork-tender. Stir sauce before serving. Serve with grated Parmesan cheese. Makes 6 servings.

BEEF AND BARLEY STEW

2 pounds beef for stew, cut into 1 1/2-inch pieces
2 cups coarsely chopped onions
2 cans (14 1/2 ounces each) clear ready to serve beef broth
2 cups water
3/4 cup pearled barley
1 teaspoon dried oregano leaves, crushed
1/8 teaspoon pepper
2 medium carrots, cut into 1/2-inch chunks

Reliable Blender Turns Back Pretenders

By IRENE SAX
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

At the turn of the year, when everyone wants to know what's coming In, take a minute for something that's never been Out. Take a minute for the blender, the appliance that wouldn't die.

Last year we bought mini-processors. The year before it was ice-cream makers and the year before that, pasta machines. Every holiday season, housewares departments feature some new appliance that a cook has to have: a hot-air popcorn popper, a Crockpot, a carbon-monoxide decorker.

But within months, most of these brand-new items find themselves in the dusty space under the counter behind the stockpot, while the really useful appliances remain out on the counter.

That's where you find the toaster-oven, the mixer, the food processor. And in most kitchens, that's also where you find the blender. The blender has been around for more than 50 years, surviving every change in food fashion. It even survived the birth of the food processor.

Soon after the Cuisinart food processor was introduced at the 1973 Chicago Housewares Show, food writers rushed to let cooks know that the new machine had made their blenders — and probably their knives — obsolete.

That should have been that. But when Appliance Magazine took a look at blender sales of the past 15 years, they discovered that they scarcely slumped when processors came in.

Sales of food processors are increasing every year, but blenders still outsell them: 4.8 million blenders were sold in 1985, compared with 3 million processors. (No thanks, by the way, to the food establishment. Cookbook writers, who take it for granted that everyone owns a processor, seldom mention the blender except to say you can make mayonnaise in it.)

"Why does everyone assume the public isn't buying blenders?" asked Larry Herd, small-appliance buyer for Bloomingdale's department store. "My blender business is very healthy."

And Anne Seranne, the author, with Eileen Gaden, of "The Blender Cookbook" (Doubleday, out of print), said dryly, "I couldn't live without my blender. Of course, I use my food processor. I use it to make dog food."

There are good reasons for the blender's continuing popularity. Blenders are cheap, starting at $40, while processors start at $100.

Blenders are so easy to use that manufacturers don't send out demonstrators to show what they can do. ("Who needs a demo?" asked Herd. "There's no technical skill needed: You turn it on, it spins, and something happens.")

Blenders are safe; you'd have to go out of your way to cut yourself on the blades. (But there are many stories of people so nervous about their processors that it was six months before they dared unpack them.)

Blenders are easy to clean: Spin some soapy water in them, and they sparkle.

They last forever. You don't buy a blender; you have a blender, as you have a refrigerator. A spokeswoman for Oster said the company is always hearing from people who still have their 1946 machines. "They were tanks," she said. "Nothing ever happened to them."

But the real reason for the steady popularity of the blender is that it's the best tool for pureeing and emulsifying liquids. Eggs and oil turn effortlessly into mayonnaise, eggs and butter into hollandaise. Milk and fruit fluff up into fruit shakes. Soups turn into voluptuous creams, even when they start off as stringy celery, broccoli or asparagus.

That's been the case since 1922, when Sten Poplowski of Racine, Wis., invented a machine to make soda-fountain milk shakes with Horlick's, a powder made in Racine. The blender's small curved blades pulled down the liquid in the jar, smoothing and blending it.

This powerful emulsifying action makes it a cinch to make homemade mayonnaise, even for a couple of tuna-salad sandwiches. You crack an egg into the container with ½ teaspoon of dry mustard, ½ teaspoon of salt and 2 tablespoons of lemon juice or vinegar. Spin the motor briefly, then slowly drizzle in a cup of olive oil, vegetable oil or a mixture of the two until the mayonnaise is thick.

Although blenders can't slice, they can do a lot of the simple chopping and mincing that people are buying mini-processors to do. You just have to know how, according to Anne Seranne.

Start by turning on the machine. Drop in your parsley sprigs, peeled garlic or chunks of carrot, onto the spinning blades. Use the same technique to grate coconut, chop dry cheese or shred strips of frozen lemon peel.

Blenders are better than processors at any job involving a small volume. East Indian and Hispanic cooks grind spices in the blender.

"In Mexico you can't cook without a blender," said Zarella Martinez, chef at Manhattan's Cafe Marimba. "It's taken the place of the mortar and pestle. When my mother was publicizing a book on Mexican home cooking, she traveled all over with a blender in her suitcase."

Since the craze for Caribbean and Mexican food brought back crushed-ice blender drinks — the margaritas, pina coladas and daiquiris of the '50s — the blender has had a new surge of popularity.

Some restaurants, such as Amigos in Port Washington, N.Y., report that more than 90 percent of their bar sales are blender drinks. At Bridge Kitchenware in Manhattan, customers tell Fred Bridge they want blenders to make margaritas at home.

Because the blender has been pretty much ignored by the food establishment, you have to go to pre-1973 cookbooks to find blender recipes. The best sources are Junior League and ladies' auxiliary cookbooks, with page after page of shrimp pastes, clam dips and horseradish-cream mousses.

It's been the inspiration for a lot of folk recipes, the kind that get passed from one amateur cook to another.

For some reason, many of them are for low-calorie dishes, such as the mock sour cream made by pureeing a cup of cottage cheese with a teaspoon of milk and a teaspoon of lemon juice. One of the best-known blender drinks is the Weight Watchers milk shake, a (temporarily) filling slush made by blending 1-3 cup powdered skim milk with 1 cup of diet soda and 3 ice cubes.

Health-food enthusiasts make their own peanut butter by blending roasted peanuts with a little oil. Parents make additive-free baby food from home-cooked fruits and vegetables blended with water or milk.

Anne Seranne makes "creamed" soups from leftover vegetables by blending them with chicken broth, then adding cooked rice or potatoes for thickening.

Her favorite this year is made of red bell peppers, a little potato and a can of chicken broth: "No calories, and just delicious. But then I did put sour cream on the top."

Every so often a cookbook publishes a real blender recipe, probably because there's nothing else the author can find to do the job as well.

POTS DE CREME
3/4 cup semisweet chocolate bits
3/4 cup hot milk
1 egg
whipped cream

Put chocolate and hot milk in blender jar and blend until chocolate melts. Add egg, spin briefly, and pour mixture into 4 custard cups. Chill 2 to 3 hours. Serve garnished with whipped cream. (To vary flavor, add ½ teaspoon peppermint extract, 1 teaspoon powdered instant coffee or 1 tablespoon Cointreau to warm milk and chocolate.) Makes 4 servings.

CHICKEN-LIVER MOUSSE
1 pound chicken livers
2 tablespoons minced shallots
2 tablespoons butter
1/3 cup madeira or cognac
1/4 cup whipping cream
1/2 teaspoon salt
1/8 teaspoon allspice pinch of thyme
1/2 cup melted butter

Saute the liver and shallots in butter for 2 to 3 minutes. Scrape into blender jar. Pour madeira into the saute pan, boil down to make 3 tablespoonsful, and scrape into blender jar. Add cream, salt, allspice and thyme to the jar, cover and blend at top speed to a smooth paste. Add melted butter and blend several seconds more. Correct seasoning, pack into a bowl or jar and chill 2 to 3 hours. Makes 2 cups.

RICOTTA PIE
1 pound ricotta
1/2 cup sugar
3 eggs
1/2 cup cream
1 teaspoon vanilla
1/2 cup raisins chocolate crumb crust
raspberry sauce

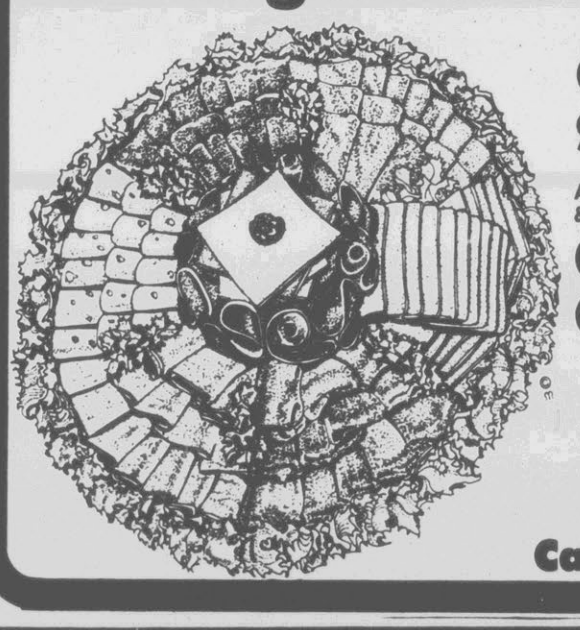

Put ricotta, sugar, eggs, cream and vanilla into blender jar and mix until smooth. Dump in raisins and whir for 1 second, just to blend. Pour mixture into a crumb crust and bake 30 minutes at 350 degrees. Do not overbake, or the mixture will crumble. Chill and serve with raspberry sauce. Makes 8 servings.

Wine Uncorks Food Flavors

By Nancy Byal
Better Homes and Gardens Food Editor

Wine makes foods such as this pasta sauce taste doubly good. It adds its own flavor as well as accenting the flavors of herbs and other ingredients.

For subtle flavor, we added the wine at the beginning of cooking. The heat evaporates the alcohol and leaves only the wine flavor and aroma. If you want a more pronounced wine taste, add it near the end of heating or stir it in just before serving.

MEATBALLS IN TOMATO-WINE SAUCE
2 small apples, peeled and shredded (1 cup)
3/4 cup finely chopped onion tion's recommendations for lower fat, sodium and cholesterol levels.

"I can still be just as creative," said Bruno Mella, executive chef at the Ritz-Carlton in Naples, Fla., as he put his final touch on a grilled "veal paillard" with a citrus sauce, referring to a chart of ingredients and a plate diagram.

Josef Lageder, executive chef of the Ritz-Carlton in downtown Atlanta said, "I'm using vegetable and fruit "coulis," no butter, just reduced stock and a lot of herbs."

Eyeballing a chilled poached salmon fillet on a turnip-sorrel "coulis" from this angle then that, the Austrian-born chef said, "I love to create light food this way. In Europe, vegetables are what fill you up, they are a stuffer. You feel like you ate, but all you ate are lots of vitamins and minerals and just a little oil."

"Health is important," Lageder said, "but really it's looks that count with most of the people who order this kind of food. Everybody wants to be slim, look great skinnier. People want to impress other people."

Becky Lankenau, Director of Nutrition Programs for American Heart Association, said that the "Eating Away From Home" program is not designed primarily for the vain or even for weight reduction.

"The menu selections are generally lower in calories because of smaller portions and modified methods of preparation," she said. "But the main purpose was to help make a positive, lasting change in the eating habits of Americans by helping food service establishments provide menu options that follow AHA's dietary guidelines."

The association has agreements with other national and regional corporations, as well as Ritz-Carlton, to offer menus following the program. In addition, heart association offices in many cities will provide local guides to restaurants that follow their recommendations to offer margarine instead of butter, skim or buttermilk instead of whole milk, to use oil in place of butter in cooking, to trim all visible fat from meat and skin from poultry before cooking, to broil, bake, steam or poach meat, fish or poultry instead of frying and to offer butter, gravy, sauces and salad dressings on the side instead of on the food.

The number of restaurants that qualify, both expensive and affordable, are growing. In fact, a study conducted for the National Restaurant Association showed that healthful menu options and alternative preparation methods are available in a majority of restaurants. Nearly 75 percent of interviewed operators said they would alter preparation methods upon request. Ninety-five percent already offer diet beverages, and more than 30 percent honor requests for reduced-calorie dressing, skim milk or salt substitutes.

Old Tom Turkey Breaks Seasonal Bonds

As agreeable as its adaptability and low cost is turkey's nutritional portfolio: A 3½-ounce serving of cooked turkey breast is a mere 157 calories. What's more, turkey is a good source of vitamins B-6 and B-12, as well as iron, zinc and riboflavin.

Plain roast turkey, move over. The following recipe, a melding of spices, turkey and yogurt, demonstrates the versatility of this quintessential American bird.

Express-lane list: turkey breast, yogurt, onion, garlic, fresh ginger, cloves, coriander, ground almonds, parsley

TURKEY BREAST COOKED IN YOGURT AND SPICES

1 1/2 pounds boned turkey breast
1 pint yogurt
1 large onion
2 large garlic cloves
1-inch piece fresh ginger
2 tablespoons oil, preferably olive oil
4 cloves
1 tablespoon ground coriander
2 tablespoons ground almonds
Salt and pepper to taste
2 tablespoons chopped parsley

Cut the turkey breast into 1-inch cubes. Place in a bowl, cover with 1/2 cup of yogurt, cover with foil and refrigerate two hours to overnight.

Peel and chop the onion and garlic cloves. Grate the ginger.

In a large skillet, heat the oil and add the onion, garlic, ginger, cloves and coriander. Cook over low heat for 5 minutes, stirring. Then add the turkey and the remaining yogurt. Stir, add the ground almonds, stir again, and correct the seasoning. Simmer over medium heat, stirring from time to time, 15 minutes.

Remove the meat and sauce to a serving bowl. Sprinkle with chopped parsley. If desired, serve over cellophane noodles or steamed rice.

Cooking

1 package (10 ounces) frozen Brussels sprouts

In 4-quart saucepan over medium heat, in hot oil, brown beef, a few pieces at a time. Remove; set aside. Spoon off all but 2 tablespoons drippings. In same saucepan over medium heat, in hot drippings, cook onions until tender.

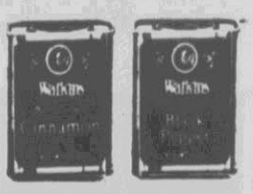

Stir in reserved beef, broth, water, barley, oregano and pepper. Heat to boiling. Reduce heat to low. Cover; simmer 1 hour. Add carrots and Brussels sprouts. Cover, simmer 30 minutes. Makes about 10 cups or 8 servings.

CONEY ISLAND CHILI

1½ pounds ground beef
2 large onions, chopped
2 cloves garlic
1 (6-ounce) can tomato paste
3 cups water
1½ tablespoons chili powder
1 tablespoon vinegar
½ teaspoon black pepper
2 teaspoons salt
1 teaspoon cumin
¼ teaspoon allspice
1 teaspoon cayenne pepper, optional
⅛ teaspoon hot pepper sauce
2 bay leaves

Brown beef and add onions and garlic. Saute until onions are tender. Add tomato paste, water, chili powder, vinegar, pepper, salt, cumin, allspice, cayenne, hot pepper sauce and bay leaves. Bring to boil. Cover and simmer 3 to 4 hours. When chili is cooked, ladle 2 cups at a time into a blender or food processor and process until finely chopped and well blended. Use as topping for frankfurters on buns. Top chili with additional chopped onion and finely shredded cheese, if desired. Makes 6 servings.

Big Demand For Cajun Cuisine Cookbooks

By TONI TIPTON
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

Has the fascination for Cajun-Creole foods become passe? One could hardly think so, given the plethora of restaurants, seafood markets, cooking classes and mail-order catalogs featuring Cajun-Creole specialties and ingredients.

Interest in this style of cookery is indicative of a much larger culinary statement in that its popularity reflects the return to favor of things American, in general, and regional fare in particular.

Paul Prudhomme, prominent Cajun chef in New Orleans, elevated the down-home style of cooking to the level of sophisticated restaurant fare nationwide nearly two years ago with the release of a cookbook on the subject.

The next step was cookbooks on the subject, which continue to flourish, as our taste buds become more and more desirous of foods that are hot and spicy. And with this has come the demand for Louisianian ingredients, most of them uncommon such as crayfish, okra and file powder, as enthusiasts attempt to re-create this sultry flavor in their own kitchens.

But even if the culinary intrigue for things Louisianian is gradually making its way up the connoisseur's list of food "outs" for the year, Cajun-Creole food is still the type of cookery that has been mysterious enough to provide mainstream audiences with an endless variety of entertaining ideas.

This popular flavor historically has been characterized mostly by the larder and the mood of the cook at the time. But the end result was always the same — delightfully savory fare that beckoned. And today's interest in fresh fare has not changed Cajun-Creole very much.

Personal preference will have to be the guideline for making purchases of cookbooks on the subject. As evidenced by the following roundup of recent releases, Cajun-Creole cookbooks all offer basically the same recipes, varying mostly by the degree of difficulty of each recipe.

The following compilation merely provides a description of the books and some sample recipes. Some authors have tried to make their works seem different from the rest by writing exclusively about either Cajun or Creole and are therefore very hard-pressed to distinguish between the two. In these cases, the recipes will separate the good from the bad, let your taste buds decide.

"Cajun-Creole Cooking," by Terry Thompson; HP Books; $9.95; softcover; 176 pages, illustrated

"Cajun-Creole foods are steadfastly un-trendy," says Terry Thompson, author of this beautiful text of recipes highlighting south Louisiana fare.

"The adherents of the cuisine could care less what color peppercorns are 'in' this year .... And now for the big jolt to the world of haughty — or haute — cuisine. It doesn't even matter if you use canned artichoke bottoms or garlic powder or premixed Cajun-Creole seasonings. The taste of the completed dish is the final judge. If it tastes wonderful, isn't that what it's all about?"

Yes, it is. And although this type of cooking fits neatly in with today's cooking priority — use the freshest ingredients available — Thompson does provide suggestions for substitutions.

This book captures the essence of what is in vogue, yet takes into consideration limited availability of ingredients in some parts of America and teaches its readers how to compensate. For example, Thompson states that the five most important ingredients in Cajun-Creole cookery are fresh ones — onions, celery, green peppers, green onions and parsley — all available just about everywhere. Yet, she continues, "if the only fresh ripe tomatoes available at the market are the cardboard-skinned, pale pink hothouse variety, then by all means, use canned tomatoes!"

Thompson's is by far the most comprehensive volume on the subject of south Louisiana cookery of the lot. She provides a detailed glossary of necessary ingredients as well as elaborating upon the correct methodology for making Cajun roux, preparing stocks and frying. Each recipe is painstakingly explained, usually separating stages into in-depth instructions.

For example, Thompson's gumbo z'herbes at first glance might seem like a monumentally difficult dish to make with more than 20 ingredients listed. However, the method is given in such clear and concise form that even the novice won't be intimidated. "Cajun-Creole Cooking" is an excellent choice for introducing this style of cooking to experienced and inexperienced cooks alike. It includes lovely color and how-to photography. Recipes for two especially trendy and popular dishes are included: Cajun popcorn (fried crawfish tails) and blackened redfish.

Lake Pontchartrain. Her cooking style, which she refers to as "haute Cajun-Creole" combines classic French with the typical Cajun-Creole style. She does restaurant consulting and teaches cooking classes and seminars throughout the United States. Following is one of the recipes in her book.

OYSTERS IN CREAM SOUP

36 shucked medium oysters, drained, liquor reserved
3 1/2 pints whipping cream
1/4 cup unsalted butter or margarine
4 green onions, minced
2 tablespoons flour
1/4 teaspoon white pepper
1/8 teaspoon cayenne pepper
Salt

Cover and refrigerate drained oysters until ready to use. Place oyster liquor and cream in 4-quart saucepan. Cook over medium-high heat until reduced by half, about 25 minutes. Set aside.

In another 4-quart saucepan, melt butter over medium heat. Add green onions and cook until slightly wilted, about 2 minutes. Stir in flour and cook 3 to 4 minutes, stirring constantly. Slowly whisk in reduced cream mixture and bring to boil to thicken. Reduce heat and add oysters, pepper, cayenne and salt to taste. Simmer just until oysters begin to curl around edges, about 5 minutes. Ladle into soup plates, dividing oysters evenly. Makes 6 servings.

"Creole Gumbo and All That Jazz," by Howard Mitcham; Addison-Wesley; $10.95; softcover; 271 pages

"It's a brazen thing for me to bring forth another Creole cookbook when there are already about 40 good ones on the market," said Howard Mitcham in the preface to this book. "However, most of them are general books that cover the whole field of Creole and Cajun cuisine from soup to nuts. I have long felt that there was need for a Creole cookbook devoted exclusively to seafood cookery."

And so it is, a book devoted exclusively to touting seafood with a Creole spice. It features chapters like "The Melting Pot," a historical look at the Creole and Cajun ways of life and their effects on the preparation of the seafood of the region; "The Appurtenances of the Art," focusing on the ingredients that make Creole seafood special, including a history of file powder and a "dissertation on roux."

The remaining chapters highlight the obvious: shrimp, crab, crawfish and swamp animals, plus "The Fishes — If It Swims, We Can Cook It," all teamed with familiar Creole ingredients in recipes that are easy to follow and delicious.

What makes this book special is its tone. When Mitcham, a practicing chef for the past 25 years, explains the habitat of red snapper or the origin of jambalaya to the uninformed it is entertaining as well as informative. Mitcham truly captures the region's "joie de vivre," which he imparts to every page of his delightful collection.

"... If a poor Cajun family had five or six kids, it's a safe bet they ate jambalaya several times a week," Mitcham writes. "Like red beans and rice, it kept people from starving during depressions and recessions.

"But the consummate artistry of Creole and Cajun cooks has lifted jambalaya above its humble beginnings to a higher plateau, and it is now served with pride and joy in the mansions of the wealthy and in high-toned restaurants ...."

The lagniappe (Creole for "little something extra") in this book includes tributes to some of the immortals of jazz. Plus, there are lyrics from famous songs of the region like "Hold Tight, Hold Tight" as well as historical tidbits sprinkled throughout that recognize famous New Orleans restaurants, people and traditions. This is a great book for lovers of the culture as well as the food. It provides some unusual treatments like fried shrimp with sesame seeds. All of the old standbys are there, too, including etouffee, bisque, gumbo and remoulade. The book has more than 300 recipes, plus black and white photographs and drawings.

CRAWFISH ETOUFFEE

1/2 cup butter
2 tablespoons flour
1 large onion, chopped
2 green onions, chopped
2 stalks celery, finely chopped
1 small green pepper, chopped
2 cloves garlic, minced
2 pounds crawfish tails, boiled, cleaned and deveined, fat reserved
2 cups water
Cayenne pepper
Salt, pepper
Hot cooked rice
Green onion tops, chopped

Melt butter in heavy saucepan. Stir in flour. Cook and stir over low heat to make light brown roux. Add onion, green onions, celery, green pepper and garlic and cook until vegetables are tender.

Add reserved crawfish fat and water and season to taste with cayenne, salt and pepper. Simmer 15 minutes, stirring occasionally. Add crawfish tails and simmer 10 minutes longer. Let rest, covered, 30 minutes before serving. Serve in preheated soup bowls over hot cooked rice. Sprinkle with chopped green onion tops. Makes 4 servings.
