

High School Government

An Experience That Can Turn 'Clouds Into Stars'

By SUE HINSON
Reflector Staff Writer

They're not grade school politicians making podium promises of potato chips and chocolate milk for lunch.

Burdette Joyner, Elizabeth Warren, Lesley Thibodeaux and April DeVor are young adults who take their jobs as high school student council officers seriously.

Their talk is of student concerns, student needs, ways to increase school spirit and raise funds for charity. They work for others and for their respective schools, but the rewards are personal, according to Farmville Central Principal Charles Long.

"This is not government in the real sense of the word. They don't have the authority to make the decisions that will affect their educations," Long said. Rather, student council is more of an opportunity, an avenue through which the students can develop leadership skills and learn about themselves, he said.

In short, "student council is an education," according to Burdette Joyner, president of the D.H. Conley Student Council Association.

"It's such a growing process," one that Miss Joyner said has enhanced her ability to communicate. Student government is an experience she said has inspired her to help others, to do well. "Why be a cloud when you can be a star?" she said.

One lesson Miss Joyner said she has learned while serving as president of the Conley association is the importance of time management: "There's so much pressure, so many demands that people don't realize."

The weight of academic, cheerleading and student council responsibilities at one time were keeping her up well past 11 o'clock most nights and affecting her performance at school and at home. Eventually, she said she realized something had to be done.

Her method of coping was to develop a calendar on which she budgets her time. "It helped me so much. Now I don't forget about myself and can enjoy my activities," she said.

The rewards of student council involvement can be fun, too, Miss Joyner said, recalling an SCA-sponsored sock hop "that no one wanted to leave."

Elizabeth Warren's time spent as vice president of the Rose High SCA has been equally satisfying.

"It allows me to contribute to the school, have a say in how the school is managed and to some extent allows me to make a positive impact on the school that I hope will last for a long time."

Since Miss Warren has been part of the Rose council, she has been involved in efforts to reform the school's election policy and revise the student council constitution. "We're also trying to install an honor code to control the amount of cheating," she said.

Bringing about these kinds of change is not always easy: "You have to learn how to ask the correct way," according to North Pitt SCA Advisor Emory Davis.

"Student council gives the students who participate an opportunity to learn-first hand the nature of pressures felt by those who are actually responsible for making the decisions. It also gives them a chance to develop the skills necessary to express dissent with policy and can show them how to effectively compromise."

Davis said the need for such skills was well-illustrated during the recent controversy over dress code at North Pitt. "The students wanted to be able to wear shorts to school and at first were ready to make a big stink, make a lot of noise."

Through his capacity of advisor, however, Davis said he showed the students how to develop an argument and to assess the groups they would be addressing and the nature of their opposition. "We learned how to develop a quiet, gentle, logical procedure for reaching a goal that paid off," he said.

Ayden-Grifton High School treasurer and secretary Lesley Thibodeaux and April DeVor agreed that those kinds of skills are necessary. "You have to learn how to pull from your resources, accept the responsibility of your office. It's worth it, especially when you see something you've planned come off," according to Miss DeVor.

Taking a project through all its phases successfully isn't always easy, Thibodeaux said. "It takes some imagination and a lot of work to get the students involved and up about themselves and the school," he said.

Projects Thibodeaux and Miss DeVor have been involved in include arranging class trips to Washington and Canada. And while DeVor acknowledged that trips to such places may seem unrealistic to some, she said excursions of this type spark interest and unite class members more so than any other undertaking. "People like to do things that are different. They like to feel free," Thibodeaux added.

Davis agreed that the nature of the project can be and is an important consideration at North Pitt. If student councils are not creative and are doing things that are "essentially irrelevant," he said they can come up against that age-old political problem of apathy. But when that happens, "it tells more about what government is doing than it reflects on the students. It says that the activities aren't meaningful," Davis said.

While raising school consciousness and support number among the top activities at Rose, Conley and Ayden-Grifton, Thibodeaux, Miss DeVor, Miss Warren and Miss Joyner said students are also interested in external projects. This year, area high schools including North Pitt and Farmville Central joined to raise money to buy bricks to help construct the Ronald McDonald House, which will provide housing for families of critically ill patients at Pitt County Memorial Hospital. "We need to feel a sense of pride in our community, too, we need to be involved," Miss Warren said.

Is it a special kind of student who becomes so involved in student council, spends hours of his free time setting up projects? Yes and no, according to Long and Davis.

"Student council is there for everyone, for anyone who wants to run and is elected," Long said.

"There are no special qualifications," Davis said. "A student doesn't have to be academically gifted, he or she might be socially gifted or have some other talent or interest that can be brought to the job," Davis said.

STUDENT COUNCIL ACTIVITY — The sale of sweat shirts at J.H. Rose High School in Greenville is one of many fund-raisers being conducted by students this year at Pitt County high schools. Proceeds from sales at the county's five high schools usually is earmarked for student

Couple's Commitment To The Past Brings Historic Montana Barn Statewide Notoriety

By CHARLES HILLINGER
L.A. Times-Washington Post
News Service

SUN RIVER, Montana — The J.C. Adams Stone Barn is the only barn of its kind west of the Mississippi. It is also the best-known barn in Montana.

The gabled structure with Romanesque arched doors and windows has a life-size stallion weather vane atop its main tower. People driving by the 100-year-old barn, on seeing it for the first time, often stop to admire the architectural beauty and unusual construction of the sandstone block structure, which is 140 feet long and 40 feet wide.

That is what happened to Teresa and Michael Stuckslager shortly after they moved to Montana in 1973 from Winnetka, Ill. "We fell in love with the barn at first sight," Teresa Stuckslager recalled.

The barn was falling apart at the time. The front wall was leaning out as much as two feet from the rest of the building, roof towers had toppled and the ears and tail of the weather-vane horse had been blasted off by lightning. Windows were shattered. Most of the hand-sawed cedar shingles were missing from the roof.

"Our initial reaction was somebody better do something to save the barn before it's too late," she said.

The couple went on their way but could not get the old barn out of their minds. Both are history buffs. Michael Stuckslager, 44, a cartoonist and ad display layout man for the Chicago Tribune prior to moving to Montana, was so intrigued with the barn that he began researching its history. He was editor of two historic gun-collecting publications at the time. His wife had written commercials for TV and radio before moving to Montana.

Michael Stuckslager searched old newspapers and records at the Historical Society of Montana in Helena, tracking down the story of the J.C. Adams Stone Barn. He learned it took two Swedish stonecutters two years to construct the building for James C. Adams, a Kentuckian who moved to Montana in 1864. Adams paid $10,000 for the barn, which was completed in 1885 and is located 28 miles west of Great Falls.

Shortly after the barn was built, a story in the Sun River Press described the building as "the marvel of Montana. It looks as if the barn would stand the storms and decay of a century at least."

Adams had been a wagon boss and was in the freighting, stage coach and livestock business. He was depicted as the lead horseman in artist Charlie Russell's famous "Wagon Boss" painting.

On the main floor of the barn there were stalls for Adams' race horses, room for his wagons, coaches and buggies. The barn served as shelter for his livestock in winter. The second story, called the loft, was used to store hay and as a social gathering place for Adams' family and many friends.

In 1913 Adams died leaving his widow and nine children. The Adams family sold the barn, the family home and ranch in 1920.

To prepare a family genealogy, Teresa Stuckslager tracked down descendants of James C. Adams in Montana, Wyoming and California. Meanwhile, her husband wrote a history of Adams and his barn. Through his efforts the barn was placed on the National Register of Historic Places, making it eligible for a matching grant from the U.S. Department of Interior for preservation and restoration.

The barn's owner, Harold Poulson, agreed that it should be restored. A non-profit organization, the Draucut Junction Stone Barn Company, named after a town plotted by Adams but not developed, was formed. Poulson deeded the barn to Draucut and in return received a $79,000 tax write-off. The Stone Barn Company received a $79,000 federal grant in matching funds for the preservation project.

A new roof was installed, windows replaced, the hardwood floor in the loft reinforced. The front of the barn was realigned and strengthened, as were other walls. Some of the work was paid for with the grant money. Additional help was volunteered by farmers in the area and from people from Great Falls.

"The barn should withstand another 100 years of storms and decay," said Stuckslager, who operates a Great Falls antique gun shop with his wife.

The Stone Barn was rededicated in August 1981. All the volunteers who worked on the restoration were there. So was Montana Gov. Ted Schwinden. The Adams family had a reunion, with Alma Adams Morgan, 101, the last surviving child of J.C. Adams, in attendance.

Since that time, the descendants of J.C. Adams have held a reunion in the Stone Barn every August. This year 46 showed up — the oldest, 96.

Daisy Genger, 85, a great niece from Fairfield, Mont., and the youngest, Jacob Tyler Jourdonnais, 2 months, a great-great-grandson from Kalispell, Mont.

Part of their potluck dinner was eaten with chopsticks in memory of Wong Ching, who did the washing, cleaning and cooking for the family from 1884 to 1920. Every five years he would spend some of his earnings on a two-month visit to his wife and son in China. When he retired he returned to his homeland.

The barn is now open to the public one weekend a month and for group tours without charge the rest of the time. It is the only barn in Montana listed as a state attraction.

LEASE PRO

SPECIAL OF THE WEEK

1987 Nissan Maxima Burgundy, automatic, loaded, 9,000 miles. WAS $15,540. SALE $14,995. OR LEASE FOR $279 PER MONTH

Now that we are all becoming familiar with the new tax laws and understand how we can make them work for us, the decision to lease your new car or truck has been made a lot simpler. With no more I.T.C. and only partial interest deduction to the individual, vehicle leasing has never been more advantageous. And since maximum allowable depreciation for businesses or business use has now been stretched over five years, leasing becomes an even more attractive alternative to buying your new car or truck. Leasing allows you to deduct your true cost of depreciation annually (for business use).

So you see, leasing is really in your best interest. And at LeasePro, we like to think we're looking out for your best interest. Call the Leasing Professionals Today and start putting the new tax laws to work for you in any type or model vehicle you need.

The Volvo odometer can reach 999,999 miles which is 999,999 more than most cars.

The Volvo turning radius is a tight 32.2 ft. That turns circles inside many sedans, including the Audi 5000S.

With the rear seat down, the cargo area is more than six feet long and nearly three-and-a-half feet wide. So you can hold luggage of almost any dimension.

GET A LOT OUT OF A VOLVO WAGON.

For more reasons why you should buy the Volvo 240 wagon, stop by our show-room for a test drive.
Or you could end up with a wagon that offers a lot less.
