Q. Is it possible that if George Bush is elected President in 1988, his first move will be to pull a Gerald Ford and pardon ex-President Ronald Reagan for any of the crimes he may have committed in office?—J.B., National City, Calif.

A. "Possible" is an adjective that offers virtually endless hypotheses. The move you suggest is highly improbable. Ronald Reagan is no Richard Nixon, and George Bush is no Gerald Ford.

Photorparters

The Lloyds during 1985 reunion: They've parted again

Q. After seven years, is the marriage of tennis star Chrissie Evert to John Lloyd over? If it is, whom will she wind up with: singer Adam Faith, actor Malcolm McDowell or actor Warren Beatty? —Maybellene Smith, Indianapolis, Ind.

A. At this writing, Chris Evert Lloyd and her husband, the British tennis pro John Lloyd, are said to have agreed to a trial separation. Obviously, their marriage is rocky. They previously went their separate ways for about six months in 1984, during which Chrissie and Adam Faith, a British show-biz entrepreneur and singer, dated in various cities around the world. Faith, however, is happily reconciled to his wife, and Chrissie—who reportedly has dated actor Judd Nelson and others since her fling with Faith—is seemingly too intelligent to marry on the rebound. It may well be that she will remain married to her tennis until someone or something more exciting comes along.

Q. When I was in Paris last summer, everyone was raving about the performance as a grandfather given by Yves Montand in the film "Jean de Florette." At the same time, it was being said of Montand, who had been married for years to the late Simone Signoret, that politically he had crossed from the left to the right and was planning to run as a possible candidate for president of the French Republic. How old is Montand? Does he intend to quit acting for politics? Has he really moved from the far left to the far right?—A.F., New Paltz, N.Y.

Pecroux/Gamma-Liaison

Actor Yves Montand

A. Italian-born Yves Montand, 65, is not abandoning the notable career he has fashioned in France as an actor and singer. He has, however, altered what once were considered his pro-Soviet leanings for a more conservative political stance. He says he has no intention of trying to succeed François Mitterrand, current president of France, but he would like his political voice to be heard.

Q. The world of fashion seethes with the rumor that Nancy Reagan has dropped her longtime favorite, Jimmy Galanos, for gowns designed by Valentino. True?—Susan G., New York, N.Y.

A. The word in New York fashion circles is that Mrs. Reagan is not dropping Jimmy Galanos but rather including in her wardrobe the creations of Valentino and other designers.

Pictorial Parade

Paget at peak in 1950s

Q. In the 1950s, there was a beautiful brunette at 20th Century-Fox named Debra Paget. What's happened to her?—Eloise McManus, Denver, Colo.

A. In 1962, Debra Paget married L.C. Kung, a Houston oilman of Chinese descent, and retired from the screen at 29. They later divorced.

Q. Big John Connally—former governor of Texas and Treasury Secretary under Richard Nixon, who wanted him to succeed to the Presidency—is supposed to be broke and down on his luck. I thought he was close to being a billionaire and was financially one of the sharpest men in the U.S. What's the story?—F.D., New Orleans, La.

A. Connally and former Lt. Gov. Ben Barnes of Texas are real-estate partners, reportedly $170 million in debt. Connally, also chairman of Chapman Energy in Dallas, has explained: "It's a difficult time for anybody who's in the oil business, the real-estate business or agriculture, and I'm in all three." Connally is a brainy, resourceful man of 69 who may be foundering financially at this writing, but no one should count him out.

AP/Wide World

Q. Priscilla Presley recently announced that she was pregnant by her Brazilian boyfriend, Marco Garibaldi, who is 10 years younger than she is and with whom she has been living. Is Elvis' onetime wife married to Garibaldi, or is she not? And how does Lisa Marie, Priscilla's 18-year-old daughter, feel about her mother's pregnancy?—Jane M., Knoxville, Tenn.

A. Priscilla Presley, 41, is not married to Marco Garibaldi as we go to press, but she may be shortly. Lisa Marie, who was on hand for her mother's announcement of her out-of-wedlock pregnancy, says, "I'm very excited and happy for both my mother and Marco."

How she's managed to succeed

SOPHIA LOREN HAS A SECRET

Deborah Feingold

When Sophia Loren was only 26, she played a mother in Two Women. She was childless at the time, and to flesh out her performance, for which she was to win an Academy Award, she drew on her experiences as a child in war-torn Italy. What she remembered most vividly was her mother's valiant efforts to protect her. Twenty-six years later, now that she herself is the mother of two teenage boys, she appreciates her mother even more. "Now I understand what she went through," the actress said. "And the worries that she had. I have it now. The fear of what's going to happen when a child leaves home and goes into the world."

One of Sophia Loren's worries is about her sons becoming involved with drugs. "It's a problem that every mother should be concerned about," she said. "Because it's not an exception nowadays to have a son who is a drug addict. And it does not only apply to children who have a famous mother or father. It's all over the world, in every kind of society. This was not so when I was a kid, because there were no drugs or alcohol at hand. My mother never had this kind of problem with me or my sister."

It's this maternal concern that inspired Sophia Loren to make her recent TV movie, Courage, which was based on the true story of a New York City mother who became an undercover operative to help bust a cocaine ring. "What's special about this story is the woman," she explained. "When they asked her, 'Why do you do this? Is it for the money?' she said, 'No, it's for my son. Because of these people, because of their drugs, he has become a vegetable.' And that's what struck me. Her obligation, her love as a mother. I could relate to that."

Of course, in real life it would be virtually impossible for Sophia Loren to go undercover. For more than 30 years, she has been one of the most admired and recognized women in the world. And at the age of 52, she remains as stunning in person as on the screen. I met her in Miami, on the last day of shooting Courage. Though she'd been working 12 hours a day for five weeks, the strain did not show. Her distinctive high cheeks were unlined, and those huge hazel eyes were bright and warm. What surprised me, however, was how, when we first talked in her trailer, her eyes kept darting away. Sophia Loren actually seemed shy.

"I have always been shy," she confided. "When I first meet somebody, I don't feel very at ease. It's always difficult for me. You know, journalists always ask me how I can be so calm and sure of myself in front of the camera. They don't know what I have to go through to appear like that. It's only because I know people think of me as sure of myself that I'm reassured enough to actually feel that way."

It was because of her shyness that, as a child, she never thought of becoming an actress. "I was also not very beautiful, as I thought an actress should be," she said. "I was very skinny. My nickname was Toothpick. I knew I wanted to do something in life. I didn't want to be anonymous. But it was my mother who decided I should be an actress. She gave me the strength and energy I needed. If it hadn't been for her, I don't think I could have made it all by myself."

Her mother, Romilda Villani, who lived in Pozzuoli, a town near Naples, had wanted to be an actress herself. She even won a Greta Garbo look-alike contest at 17. The prize was a screen test and a first-class ticket to Hollywood. However, Sophia's grandmother wouldn't let her go, and in rebellion she ran off to Rome, where she met the man—Riccardo Scicolone—who became Sophia's father. Scicolone, who didn't meet Sophia until she was 5, never married Romilda, leaving his daughter with the stigma of illegitimacy.

"I always felt I had no father," Sophia recalled evenly, the hurt she had suffered long since healed. "Even when you're young, you get accustomed to the negative things in life. You say to yourself, 'Maybe it has to be like this.' But at the same time, you don't consider yourself like the other children, because they have a father and a mother. I don't talk like this about my father because I have a feeling of hatred. Hatred is something I don't know of. Besides, I had a lot of love around me. My grandmother and grandfather—they loved my sister and me very much."

Sophia's sister, Maria, is four years younger. She too was the illegitimate daughter of Scicolone. However, while Sophia at least was legally recognized and given his last name, Scicolone refused to make this concession for Maria. It was not until Sophia began making money as an actress and could afford to meet what amounted to her father's demands for blackmail that she was able to buy her sister her name. "She had suffered so much that she didn't want to go to school anymore," Sophia explained.

It's this same kind of loyalty that she now tries to instill in her sons, who are themselves four years apart: Carlo, 18, and Edoardo, 14. "I always tell Edoardo, 'You should love your brother,'" she said. "I say the same thing to Carlo, because I like it when brothers are really close to each other. For after all, what else do we have in life but family? When you leave home and go out . . . God!" She shook her head, looking very much the worried mother.

There was a knock on the door. Sophia was needed on the set. They were filming at a Spanish-style mansion on Star Island, a privately guarded bayfront community where Al Capone once spent his winters. I watched as she headed into the house. Trim and erect, dressed in a brown suit and orange ruffled blouse, she moved with the kind of serene dignity one normally associates with royalty. It was easy to see that the other cast members and crew treated her with utmost respect. Yet she is no demanding, self-centered star. Shooting a scene that required countless takes, she remained patient and composed.

During a break, we sat on the porch. She seemed more relaxed and comfortable than before. Commenting on her congenial nature on the set, I asked if she ever gets angry.

"I do, but I don't really show it," she said. "I try to swallow as much as I can and try to kid about things. If you see me laugh and joke a lot, it means I'm very angry. I turn things around completely."

"So if you slug me, that's a compliment?" I asked.

"Yes, as a matter of fact, I do this with my sister," she replied, smiling. "But you never can tell. I'm a very easy person to know, as you see."

While Sophia kept an eye on the two daughters of a friend who were visiting the set, we talked about her career. Though her original ambition was to be a schoolteacher, her plans changed at the age of 15. Learning that an American film company was scouting extras for Quo Vadis, her mother bundled her off to Rome, intent on helping her daughter achieve what she herself had been denied. "It was quite scary," Sophia recalled, "starting in this business. But my mother was very supportive. She was always there with me."

Sophia was still only 15, and competing in a Rome beauty contest, when she met Carlo Ponti, a producer 22 years older, who has been a fixture in her life ever since. I asked what she thought Ponti had seen in her, both as a budding actress and a woman.

"I don't think that a man, when he sees a girl for the first time, really knows who she is," she said. "I don't think that he felt anything special in me." She paused, reconsidering. "Maybe because I didn't look like a banal girl 15 years old. Maybe I had a sadness in my look that struck him. I don't know."

Whatever it was Ponti saw in her was not shared by the many cameramen to whom he brought Sophia for screen tests. They invariably complained about her unusual features and suggested she get her prominent nose fixed, a proposition she steadfastly turned down. "I was not about to change my nose because some cameraman didn't like the way the light falls on my face," she recalled. "I realized that if I looked different from others, that was a wonderful thing. I don't have a pretty face. I have a particular face."

"They just had to learn how to photograph me," she added. "And I had to learn how to get made up and adjust my hair so my nose would look a little shorter. It was all part of establishing myself as an actress. You see, though it had been my mother's dream for me, I started to have a kind of appetite for it. I liked the people and the creative side of it, and I began to fall in love with this profession."

During the 1950s and '60s, Sophia worked nonstop, making 10 films in one year alone. Over the years, she has developed a range of screen identities, but it was her voluptuous sexuality that was often emphasized early in her career, as in Boy on a Dolphin. I asked if she was comfortable being thought of as a sex symbol.

"I liked it because I was doing it in a joking kind of way," she said directly. "And I knew that it was a preparation for what I would do later on. It's impossible to be a sex symbol all your life. You have to be terribly young, and then your career is very short. So at a certain point, you have to choose roles that you can go further with. That's what I did when I made Two Women. I really established myself as an actress with that, and since then I've had wonderful roles."

Besides Two Women, for which she became the only Italian actress to win an Oscar for an Italian movie—her favorite films are A Special Day and Marriage Italian Style. Her co-star in the last two was Marcello Mastroianni, with whom she has been paired so often that some filmgoers actually thought they were married. "We complete each other very well," she said, explaining their unusual screen chemistry. "It's like a marriage."

Sophia's own marriage to Carlo Ponti could itself be the subject of a film. Though they've been together for 36 years, Ponti was married when they met; and since Italy didn't recognize divorce, it required a Mexican divorce and a marriage by proxy in 1957 for them to be legally bound. In her autobiography, Sophia referred to that day as "the grandest, happiest moment of my life." However, the Catholic Church didn't recognize his divorce, and she and Ponti were branded "public sinners" and threatened with arrest for bigamy. They didn't visit Italy as a couple for several years. It wasn't until 1966, when Ponti became a French citizen and got a French divorce, that their marriage was legally resolved.

Perhaps because of their age difference, or because they spend a lot of time apart, journalists have for years hinted at problems between them. I asked Sophia if she resented the effort to pry her marriage apart.

"No," she said matter-of-factly. "But I don't even like to talk about it. Because it seems to me so natural to be married and to stay married. I think if you find the right person to be with, you have to stick to it, even though sometimes you may have moments of depression and unhappiness. But that all passes. What stays is the affection that you have. I think you have to try to swallow sometimes the bitter things."

She is similarly philosophical about the way she has been treated by her home country. Returning to Italy in 1982 to see her mother, she was forced to spend 17 days in prison because of an old tax-evasion charge. "When something like that hurts me," she confided, "at the moment, I may suffer very much. But then I forgive. Sometimes. Most of the time I don't forget, but I do forgive. I am quite a fatalist. I am Neapolitan, and I look at life with a kind of optimistic eye."

Nowhere was this optimism more evident than in her effort to become a mother. After suffering two miscarriages, she received little hope from her doctors about her chances. "Everybody said, 'You will never have children,'" she recalled. "But I was convinced that it was not true. Because I believe that if I really put my energies into something, it happens." When she became pregnant again, both times she spent the entire nine-month term in bed. "Maybe that's my strength," she said. "I really go all the way." She smiled more broadly than she had all day. "And now I have two wonderful boys."

Sophia is devoted to her children. It's because she likes to spend so much time with them that in recent years she has curtailed making films, concentrating much of her energy on promoting a line of eyeglasses, a perfume and a Florida luxury development called Williams Island, where she maintains an apartment overlooking the Intracoastal Waterway. Her other homes include a 40-acre ranch outside Los Angeles and a home in Geneva, where her sons are in school.

"As a mother, I feel very vulnerable," she said softly. "We live in a dangerous world. But I try to keep my fears to myself. I never show them to my children, because that's not the right attitude. I think you have to give your children confidence in life, in people, society, and in the world of today."

I asked her if, having been such a glamorous lady for so long, she is bothered by getting older.

"No, absolutely not," she said. "Aging is very relative. I try to keep myself in shape as much as I can, but getting older is wonderful. You mature. You experience so many things. Joy. Sorrow sometimes. But I've had a wonderful life. I have a wonderful life, and I will have a wonderful life. My life has been almost completely fulfilled."

"So there's very little you'd do differently?"

She laughed. "I said 'almost.' But I have no regrets. I'm proud of what I've done with myself. And I'm very proud of my children."

Sophia was being called back to work. But before she left, she wished to share the credit for all that she is. "There's no question that I took from my mother a kind of strength and dignity in looking at life," she said. "Now everything sounds very easy. Like I've done everything with a magic stick. But there were lots of sacrifices and risks that we went through. I never thought, and she never thought, that I was going to be as successful as I am. When I go to see her in Rome, we talk about what's happening and what's going to happen, and she tells me, 'My God, it still works. This dream never ends.'"

"I don't know if I deserve what I have," she added. "It's much more than I ever expected. But what makes me especially happy is that my mother has fulfilled all her dreams." Winking, she got up to go. "She is the real Sophia Loren. Not me."

SHIRLEY MacLAINE Goes Out on a Limb

Shirley MacLaine and John Heard in Peruvian market in Out on a Limb

How you feel about Out on a Limb, Shirley MacLaine's autobiographical story of her spiritual adventures (starring MacLaine), will depend greatly on what you think of reincarnation, out-of-body experiences, trance channelers and extraterrestrials—the subjects, along with MacLaine's peripatetic romance with a married British politician, of this two-part movie. Shirley playing Shirley in London, Stockholm, Hawaii, California and Peru does get to seem a bit much, but she is a believer who wants passionately to share her vision of life's possibilities. Take a look and make up your own mind. Tonight, 8-11 p.m. EST, and tomorrow, 9-11, on ABC.

Civil Rights Makes A Prize Documentary

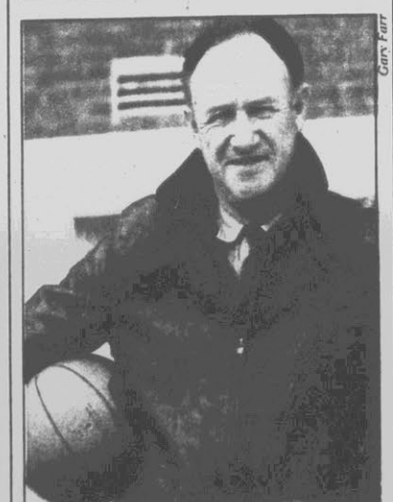

Eyes on the Prize, a six-part documentary of the civil rights movement from 1954 to 1965, is threaded with scenes of simple courage and deepened by new interviews with people whose young faces we see in the newsreel footage. Director Makes It Big With Karate Kid Sequel

A box-office take of $110 million for The Karate Kid II made an especially sweet sound for the director, John Avildsen, who also made The Karate Kid—and Rocky. Avildsen said last spring that he regretted having turned down the chance to direct the big-bucks Rocky sequel. Life rarely offers the opportunity to replay one's mistakes, but Avildsen had a chance of sorts with KK II and grabbed it. His smash-hit sequel—in which the teenage boy, Daniel (Ralph Macchio), and his mentor, Miyagi (Noriyuki "Pat" Morita), take on bad guys in Okinawa—is available this month on videocassette.

How one school straightens out

STUDENTS WHO ACT UP

BOB BROWNING spent a day at Wilson Junior High School in Hamilton, Ohio, some time ago. That in itself is unremarkable: Browning, after all, is president of the city's board of education. As he moved from class to class, taking his seat at student desks and quietly sitting through each period, some of the teachers got nervous. "They had no reason to," Browning says, "but it was understandable." Yet the most uncomfortable person in any of those classes was Browning's son, Sam, an eighth-grader, because Bob Browning wasn't in class in his official capacity. He was there in a more important role, as Sam's father, and he was taking part in a program that subjects kids who break school rules to an ingenious—and devilishly effective—deterrent: bringing Mom or Dad to school.

"I got the idea accidentally," remembers John Lazares, Wilson's 37-year-old principal. "A kid came into my office whom I had seen a number of times for minor discipline problems—talking in class, being late, not bringing materials, driving the teachers crazy. I just got fed up and said, 'The next time I see you, we're going to have your mother come in and see what we have to put up with all day.' The reaction I got from him was, 'Do anything you want, but don't have my mother come in.' I'd never had this reaction from a kid before—and we've had kids arrested for drugs, suspended and expelled. He begged me not to have his mother come in. Something lit up in my head."

Situated in an industrial city midway between Cincinnati and Dayton, Wilson has a student body that reflects the city's racial, economic and ethnic diversity—and divisions. Until nine years ago, when a controversial new school superintendent began a citywide disciplinary crackdown, Hamilton's schools were scarred by violence, tension and drug use. By the time Lazares became principal last January, the school had a functioning code of conduct and an improving reputation. But up to 60 of Wilson's 860 students were still being expelled every semester, and dozens more were being suspended for everything from tardiness to fighting in school.

Bob Browning sits beside his son, Sam, in eighth-grade classroom.

"When one boy said, 'Do anything, but don't have my mother come in,' something lit up in my head," recalls the principal

"One of the worst things that can happen to a child is to be suspended from school," says Lazares. "It's a waste. He spends three days at home for some little misdemeanor, and it makes him happy to be out of class. I decided to tell parents, 'Okay, if you'll come in and spend one day in class with that kid, I'll take the suspension away.'"

So far, about 60 parents have put in their time at Wilson. "I thought it was great that I could come down and eliminate a little trouble for my son," Bob Browning says gamely. Sam was in trouble for missing detention. "I enjoyed it," says Ella Neal. "It helped me a lot to understand what the teachers had to go through and to understand my child much better." Her son, Jafes, had been disrupting his seventh-grade class. Kids seem to improve dramatically when their parents come to Wilson. After-school detentions are down from 20 a day to zero on some days; expulsions have dropped to 11 since the program began. Only a handful of parents have refused to join what Lazares calls his Parent Involvement Program; many are eager to come. "For a lot of them, it's their first time in a school building since they graduated," he says.

On a recent morning, a few "veterans" discussed the program. "I was embarrassed," said Sam Browning. "One kid cried all day," said Shane Isaacs. Shane cleaned up his act when his parents simply met with the principal and threatened to go to class with him. "This is a tool for preventive discipline," says Lazares. "Kids who have seen other kids' parents in school stop causing problems, because they don't want their own parents to sit with them all day."

Punishment is only one aspect of the Wilson program. "In education, we're only as effective as the parents," says Lazares, "and now we have parents who call us once a week to check up on their kids' progress. If a child has been a discipline problem and goes for a while without causing trouble, I call them up and say, 'You're doing something right.'" Each teacher now makes five phone calls—positive or negative—to students' homes every week. Lazares personally calls the parents of every child who makes the honor roll: 200 phone calls one week. "I want to notice those kids who do a good job," he says.

The grandson of Greek immigrants, Lazares brings his energetic approach to extracurricular activities as well. Not long ago, he took a few days off from his work to attend a Hellenic convention in Boston. At a party there, a young woman had just told him that she worked for the city's largest department store when a friend came to give her a ride home. He never got her name, but the next morning, Lazares took a taxi to the store and combed through it until he found her working in the advertising department. Within weeks, they were engaged. Last June, John Lazares and Patricia Patsios were married.

Not many adolescent miscreants are the equal of a principal with that kind of determination.

He Put Words In Our Mouths

IN THIS SMALL HOUSE, THE vocabulary of a nation was born. The words traveled over the plains, down the rivers, through the tall grass of the prairies and across the flat turmoil of the deserts to the Pacific. We think of pioneers pushing Westward to open the wilderness, but our words blazed trails far more important. People settled the land, but the words we chose settled who we were and what we wanted to become. A mishmash of immigrants breaking free from tyranny, we spoke dozens of languages, had our own Pidgin English, could rarely read and spelled according to whim. But, as Noah Webster knew, America's conscience spoke a single dialect, and that was the one he wanted for his monumental dictionary.

G. & C. Merriam Co.

Thomas Victor

Noah Webster in his 70s. Right: The house where he was born.

Webster was an ardent nationalist, and it jarred him to think of our sounding chaotic and confused. How could we present a divided sound to the world? Anyway, Europe was old news. Why speak a language littered with European customs and names when Americans were minting new words each day for their fresh country, habits and predicaments? The last vestige of authority England held over America was its language. Control the words a people use, and you control the people. In post-Revolution America, language would have to change, and those who changed it would soar in influence and even shape the nation. Vain, ambitious and always on the make, Noah Webster decided early on to be one of those shapers.

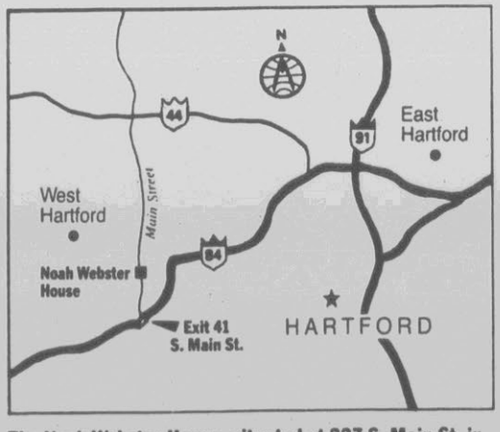

Webster yearned to create a national language that would unite all the melting-pot differences in the 13 Colonies. "America must be as independent in literature as she is in politics," he wrote, "as famous for arts as for arms." So he began at the beginning, with children learning to spell. His 15-cent Blue-Back Speller may be the most famous American schoolbook. Seventeen million copies were printed in his lifetime, and eventually up to 100 million appeared. It did teach children to spell and read, but it specialized in moralistic fables about honesty, thrift, patriotism and hard work. In a sense, it was the Chairman Mao's Little Red Book of its day. It not only regularized spelling, grammar and usage but also gave American children a shared ethic and heritage. Through it, Webster became the schoolmaster to a nation.

In his long lifetime (he died in 1843 at age 84), Webster published many other textbooks and wrote about history, economics, geography, politics, linguistics and medicine. He edited two newspapers. He fathered the copyright laws. He helped to found Amherst College. He mastered 20 languages. He practiced law. But his greatest achievement, the one that wears his name, is the dictionary he spent 20 years compiling. There have been eight editions (the most recent with 470,000 words) in a series dating back to 1828, each one attended by enormous controversy, since new words may appear that seem trendy to some, while older words suddenly disappear like great uncles or aunts we rarely saw but were fond of.

Webster's original dictionary contained 70,000 entries, all carefully defined in his own hand. It introduced thousands of new words—"Americanisms"—missing from English dictionaries. It stressed the vitality of a living language. Selling only 2500 copies in its first year, it standardized pronunciation and simplified spelling. Webster was the one who removed the u from words like errour and colour, changed plough to plow and reversed the final letters in words like theatre. He was a terrible prude and a religious fanatic, and both qualities show up in his dictionary and edition of the Bible, from which he removed "offensive words." Farmers must have laughed to read breasts instead of teats, for instance.

In the dictionary, under the verb form of love, the example of usage is solely religious. His definition of duty is a small, stern primer on citizenship. In truth, Webster used the dictionary as his private pulpit from which to subtly preach to his countrymen about civics, religion and the raising of children.

Because his dictionary standardized American English, it was invaluable. When he compiled it in his later years, he was a man greatly changed from the Connecticut farmboy full of vim and vigor who was a revolutionary, a progressive, a diehard Yankee. The best way to know that Noah Webster is to return to the house where he was born, in West Hartford. Today, it has been meticulously restored to capture daily life in Colonial America in 1774, when Webster was a teenager getting ready to go off to Yale, and the Revolution was building. A red wood house on a 90-acre farm, it was a center for raising corn, barley, wheat, sheep, fruit and various staples. Noah's father was a farmer, weaver and a deacon who raised five children in four small rooms.

The house is built around a massive brick fireplace, the source of heat and light, just as language is built around the working forge of a vocabulary. Drying herbs, vegetables and fruits hang from the walls. There are barrels everywhere of dry goods and grains, cheesecloth sacks of salt from the West Indies and costly cones of sugar. They combine to give the house an aromatic, festive flavor, a rich sensuous aroma, which makes stark contrast with Noah's rigid Calvinistic upbringing. The plain lines of his life are everywhere visible—in the stolid furniture, whitewashed walls and straw-filled mattresses, in the chilly bedroom he shared with two brothers. Raw wood floors are punctuated by gleaming nails. Exposed beams make long, hard sentences of wood. Behind the door of the grandfather clock, which stands in one corner of the parlor where Noah was born, a brass pendulum swings between two large weights.

In the kitchen, a central fire burns all the time. Eighteenth-century hearths were enormous and dangerous. You walk right into them and must climb over the fire to reach the bread ovens set into the brick on either side, or tend the meat roasting on a spit or the bacon being smoked. (Sand covered the floor, to catch grease from the roasting meat and reduce the fire hazard.) Knives and other utensils stay sharp in a bucket of sand kept by the fireplace. Dried apples and pumpkins hang in garlands over the fireplace, their wizened flesh twisting like the faces of children who are spelling. As the single-edged razor lying on a side table tells us, Noah's father, like other 18th-century men, may have shaved his head and worn wigs smeared with axle grease and dusted with talcum powder. Around the house, he probably went bald and wore a cap against the cold.

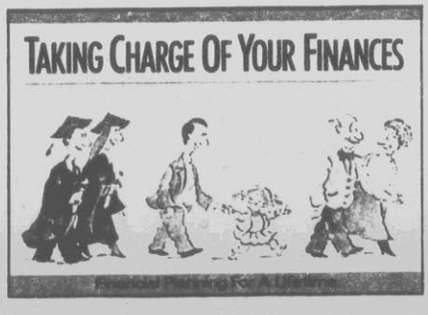

Thomas Victor

The author in parlor of Webster House, a model of Colonial life.

A thin draft of air eddies through the large keyhole on the kitchen door, high enough for a boy to peep out of at the lilacs that grew beside the house, at the maple tree fine for climbing in warm weather and the herb-and-flower garden his mother and two sisters tended when they weren't cooking or spinning. Brass and pewter candle holders, which have caught the fallen wax of untold hours, burn lard or tallow and sometimes pine knots, though that is extremely messy. Daily life on a farm in Colonial America was full of wonders, but also chastening and hard.

Formal portraits of Webster as an adult show a sour-faced man with hooded brown eyes and upswept hair. Those who knew him said he was pompous and austere, a tightwad who prized industry above all. There are many legends about him, but my favorite recalls when his wife caught him kissing the chambermaid. "Why, Noah, I'm surprised!" she is supposed to have said. To which he replied, like the bona fide schoolmaster he was, "Madame, you are astonished; I am surprised."

Spicebush Swallowtail

One of the greatest delights of a summer day is seeing a colorful butterfly fluttering from flower to flower, light as a breeze and bright as the midday sun. We're fascinated as they rest in a pretty garden displaying the intricate patterns on their lovely wings.

Famed naturalist artist Paul J. Sweany captures perhaps the most striking of all butterflies in his masterwork, "Spicebush Swallowtail." In this vibrant scene, Sweany chose to depict two of them resting on large, peach-colored roses in a misty summer garden.

"Spicebush Swallowtail" represents Sweany's first limited-edition collector plate. And, as experienced collectors are aware, premiere offerings by talented new plate artists can create great demand that may lead to secondary market appreciation, after the edition is closed.

"Spicebush Swallowtail" premieres an elegant collection of eight plates entitled the Butterfly Garden Plate Collection. As an owner of "Spicebush Swallowtail," you will have the right—but never the obligation—to acquire all plates in the series.

In addition, under our 100% Buy-Back Guarantee, you may return any plate within 30 days of receipt for a full refund, releasing your series rights for availability to another collector.

Each issue in this magnificent collection will feature a different butterfly species in a lush garden setting from an original painting by Paul J. Sweany. Each plate will be priced at just $29.50 and will be strictly limited to a 14-day firing period. Furthermore, each plate will be hand-numbered and accompanied by a Certificate of Authenticity.

This important introduction by Paul J. Sweany is expected to attract immediate attention and praise from nature lovers and collectors alike. So, to assure a priority reservation for "Spicebush Swallowtail," you should return your order form promptly!

Recent discoveries bring new hope

WHEN YOUR IMMUNE SYSTEM FAILS

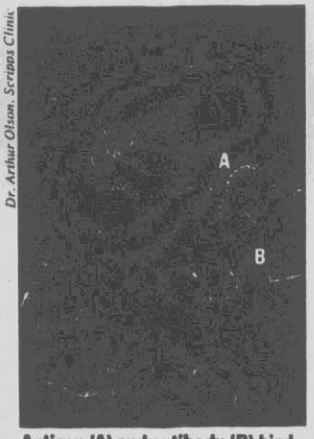

Dolores King: An experimental vaccine helps her fight cancer.

Randy Taylor

Uncovering the body's protective secrets, we get closer to curing AIDS and other ills

When a physician or a nurse injects a few drops of measles vaccine into a child, the particles in that liquid set off an incredible chain of events within the child's body. And at the end of that sequence, the child is immune to any live, disease-causing measles virus.

The vaccine triggers the child's immune system. And what a marvel that system is. Millions of microscopic blood cells, each smaller than a dust particle, swing into action. They create chemicals designed specifically to knock out the measles virus. They marshal the aid of scavenger cells to chew up the attackers.

Dr. Arthur Olson, Scripps Clinic

Antigen (A) and antibody (B) bind, triggering immune system.

Scientists recently have learned how immunity works and how it fights invading bacteria, viruses, parasites and pieces of these, called antigens. Or how it sometimes turns against the body itself, causing diseases like arthritis, rheumatic fever, perhaps even diabetes. Or how it safeguards you from cancer. Measles, influenza and polio no longer level large segments of the world's populace, thanks to vaccines. New medications and treatments are coming from research in medicine, chemistry and genetic engineering.

Scientists today feel overwhelmingly that they have passed the threshold of major discoveries. The way is open to find the causes of cancer and a dozen other diseases, how to treat them and, possibly, how to prevent them.

"We are dealing with an unparalleled explosion of information on cancer biology," says Dr. Steven Rosenberg, chief of the surgery branch of the National Cancer Institute.

Sara Brooks, 4, of Sacramento, Calif., owes her life to this new knowledge. She inherited a defective immune system and had no protection against invading germs from the day she was born. Doctors kept Sara alive for five months in a little three-sided box with air filters. Her parents, Steve and Sheryl Brooks, could not touch or cuddle her. A single stray germ could have killed her.

"Sara was pretty sick for a while," says her mother, "but now the doctors consider her cured. Sara is so outspoken. She cracks you up—makes you happy. We call her a miracle baby."

Dr. Morton J. Cowan of the University of California at San Francisco gave Sara a defect-free immune system by transplanting bone marrow from her father into her body. His healthy bone marrow contained all the cells Sara needed.

Bone-marrow transplantation also has been successful in fighting leukemia. It replaces the diseased immune system by producing healthy red cells and platelets, as well as the immune system's white cells. This transplanting occurs after the leukemia is blasted with X-rays and chemicals that destroy both the cancer and the patient's bone marrow.

In this same way, bone-marrow transplants have helped several workers who received deadly doses of radiation at the nuclear accident at Chernobyl in the Soviet Union. The radiation had destroyed their immune systems.

Although babies born with defective immune systems are rare, the world is experiencing the horror of defective immunity in thousands of people who have AIDS (Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome). They acquired this condition from infection with a virus that knocks out a key white blood cell in the body's delicate immune system.

Without effective immunity, AIDS victims fall prey to bacteria and fungi that live harmlessly on the skin or inside healthy persons. Resultant infections ravage the body. AIDS kills almost all who contract it, making it the most deadly illness of modern times.

The new knowledge about immunity allowed scientists to move fast against AIDS. The first cases in the U.S. were reported in 1981 as a strange pneumonia. But, in a year or two, scientists had pinpointed the defect in immunity. In 1984, they isolated the killer virus. Now they are hard at work on an AIDS vaccine.

Herpes viruses live forever in nerve cells. Some scientists believe they are triggered by cold, heat, fever, chemicals or menstruation. The virus grows out of the affected nerve cells and attacks other tissues. Shingles is really the reactivation of an old chickenpox virus, responding, some theorize, to the same triggers listed above. If scientists can solve the riddle of AIDS, they will be one step up on herpes and shingles.

Four major discoveries have brightened the promise of immunology:

- The unraveling of the complex way in which the different types of white blood cells cooperate to attack foreign substances that get into the body.
- The discovery of chemicals released by the cells that give signals for white-cell action. You've probably heard of interferon and interleukin. Both are promising cancer treatments. Interferon has been considered as a promising preventive for the common cold.
- The development of genetic engineering. (See PARADE, Jan. 27, 1985.) Scientists now know how to alter the biology of common sewage bacteria so that the germs can create unlimited amounts of human chemicals like insulin, interferon and interleukin.
- The creation of a strange and wonderful cell called a hybridoma. These hybrid cells can produce boundless amounts of antibodies—chemicals that attack invading viruses, bacteria or fungi. Hybridoma antibodies also hold promise against cancer.

Let's see what these historic advances mean for you.

The white-cell network. Your blood contains red cells, which carry oxygen, as well as a clear yellow fluid called plasma that transports chemicals and "food" for the rest of the body, plus several kinds of white cells. The white cells control the immune system.

One species of white cell, called a B-cell, manufactures the antibodies. Another, a macrophage (meaning "big-eater"), actually devours germs and cancer cells. Natural killer cells are believed to hunt down and kill cancer cells or normal cells infected with a virus. Another white cell, called a T-cell, also issues chemical signals.

Memory cells, which last for life, remember the various germs that have attacked. These cells trigger the immune system quickly if the same germ attacks again. A vaccine is made of a weakened or dead germ, or a part of a germ that "fools" the memory cell into "believing" the live virus has attacked. The memory cell is primed into action by the vaccine without the body experiencing the actual disease.

It would take a much longer article to describe in detail how all these cells act to protect you against infection. The action has been compared to an army in battle. But this tells only part of the complex story.

Doctors are putting the vaccine reaction to work against cancer, particularly melanoma, a skin cancer that is hopeless once it has metastasized, or spread. Dr. Jean-Claude Bystryn, director of the melanoma program at the Kaplan Cancer Center of the New York University Medical Center in Manhattan, has created a vaccine against melanoma. It is made from extracts of cancer cells, which are supposed to "fool" the immune system, stimulating it to spring into action and kill live cancer cells that have spread. Dr. Bystryn has tried the vaccine with 60 patients.

In 1970, surgeons cut a malignant melanoma from the back of Dolores King, 57, a housewife from Fort Lauderdale, Fla. The cancer returned in 1983, and Dr. Bystryn gave Mrs. King injections of vaccine. Her skin turned red—a good sign. Though Mrs. King says she feels fine now, she adds: "My prognosis is very bad. But I have faith."

"We still don't know if we have cured the melanoma," says Dr. Bystryn. "Now we need to see if the vaccine is safe."

Study of white cells also has led to the idea that many couples are infertile because the wife's immune system destroys the husband's sperm. Worse, the pregnant woman's body may reject the baby in her womb.

Sometimes the white cells attack normal body cells. Growing evidence suggests that this happens in the pancreas, which makes insulin. If our insulin-making cells die, we develop severe diabetes. As we reported (PARADE, April 21, 1985), doctors now give patients cyclosporine, a drug that slows down the immune system. It seems to work in some diabetics. They start producing insulin again.

Dr. H. Peter Chase of the Barbara Davis Center for Childhood Diabetes in Denver says that for cyclosporine to stop diabetes, a patient would have to take it a long time, perhaps for life. The drug is expensive ($6000 a year) and—among other negative side effects—could harm the patient's kidneys.

Other diseases caused by white cells that attack healthy cells include rheumatic fever, rheumatoid arthritis, a strange disease called lupus and, perhaps, multiple sclerosis.

However, with cyclosporine, doctors have had great success in slowing down the immune system's reaction against transplants of organs from other individuals. So now kidney transplants from unrelated individuals have success rates as high as 95 percent, heart transplants as high as 85 percent and liver transplants as high as 70 percent.

Immune chemicals. Interferon, one of the substances secreted by various virally infected cells, has been approved by the Food and Drug Administration for the treatment of a rare cancer called hairy-cell leukemia, a disease that until recently had no treatment. Interferon also has been found in clinical tests to effectively fight chronic leukemia, kidney cancer and Kaposi's sarcoma, the cancer peculiar to AIDS victims.

Another T-cell substance, interleukin, was said by the National Cancer Institute to be one of the major advances against cancer in a decade. The institute's Dr. Steven Rosenberg reported in December 1985 that, with interleukin, advanced cancers in one patient had retreated completely and 11 patients had at least a 50 percent reduction in tumor size. "Here, really for the first time, we can use the immune system to attack a broad array of cancer," he says.

Besides interferon and interleukin, scientists have identified other powerful immune-system chemicals. One, tumor necrosis factor, seems to destroy cancer cells without hurting normal cells.

Genetic engineering. Interleukin and interferon are available in large amounts because scientists now "grow" them, using bacteria or yeast. Your white cells form interleukin, for example, under the control of your genes. A gene is another bit of chemical called DNA, containing the information the white cell needs to form interleukin. Through genetic engineering, scientists can take the gene for interleukin from a human cell and put it into a common germ that grows in a vat much as yeast grows in a beer vat, and the germ then makes interleukin. Scientists also are commercially manufacturing tumor necrosis factor and other T-cell substances that control the immune system.

Hybridoma. This hybrid is perhaps the most bizarre creature ever created. It is made up of two cells—the B-cell, which provides antibodies, and a white-cell cancer called myeloma. By fusing two cells, you get a hybrid that produces antibodies and lives forever. And the hybrid can be made to produce antibodies to any virus or germ—even to a cancer. These are called monoclonal antibodies because they are specific to one particular germ or cancer. Hybridomas have produced antibodies to melanomas and to colon and pancreatic cancers.

Norman J. Arnold, 57, of Columbia, S.C., was diagnosed as having incurable pancreatic cancer in July 1982. He went to the Wistar Institute, a biological research institution in Philadelphia. There, the director, Dr. Hilary Koprowski, injected him with monoclonal antibodies against the cancer. His cancer receded. Norman Arnold says he feels fine and that there has been no sign of the disease for 2½ years.

"The future of immunotherapy is bright," says Dr. Koprowski. "Monoclonal antibodies are the greatest medical tools developed in the last 50 years. They are in everybody's lab."

And as research into the marvelous immune system continues, every scientist I spoke with expressed the same optimism. Immunology will lift much of man's burden of disease.

How to become a Straight-A Student

REGARDLESS OF YOUR PAST PERFORMANCE IN SCHOOL

All of us are capable of much more than we achieve. I learned this lesson the hard way—through my own experiences as a student. My grades in high school were so poor that I had to go through a special remedial program to get into college, and once in college I received several D's in my freshman year. But things changed. I went on to get a Ph.D. in Economics, and in the process I made an A in every course I took—in fact, I made an A on every test in every course I took! At the time I was attending classes at night, working at a full-time job, and taking care of home and family responsibilities—but I still had plenty of time left over for leisure activities.

How to Improve Your Grades

What was my secret for success? I knew exactly what to study for a test, when to study it, and how much to study. I have developed a complete system that turns studying into something you can excel at. It took me more than twenty years to develop my system but now it is available to you in just a few hours by reading my new book, GETTING STRAIGHT A's. I start out by teaching you the basic skills, such as how to read books more effectively, and how to write term papers. You will learn how to plan a course of study, how to select an instructor, where to sit in class, secrets of good note-taking, and what to do to successfully complete assignments at home. You will also learn how to efficiently prepare for tests and strategies for taking different types of tests—because performing successfully on tests is an acquired skill, not an innate ability. In my book I teach you the skills to become a test-wise student. I show you study tips that work, and the secrets of time management, so you will have more time to enjoy the good life. And I present all of this in a format that is easy-to-follow and enjoyable to read.

Become A Better Student or Your Money Back

You don't have to be a bookworm or genius to go to the head of the class. I have helped many other students reach the top—including those who previously had serious difficulties with their studies. Whether you are in high school, an undergraduate, or a graduate student, my book has something important to offer you. In fact, it may be one of the most important books you ever read! Let's face it: The grades you receive now will help you get into the college of your choice, and beyond that, perhaps the job of your choice.

I'll make you this guarantee: If you practice my techniques and don't see a significant improvement in your grades in just one semester, I'll give you your money back. No questions asked. You risk nothing. So why settle for less than your best? Aim for the top and you will see that it can change your life, as it changed mine. If you're a student or know one, help him or her start GETTING STRAIGHT A's now. Order your copy today!

Cary Grant Remembered

Were he alive, Cary Grant would be celebrating his 83rd birthday today—no doubt with his fifth wife, Barbara Harris, 36, a former press agent for London's Royal Lancaster Hotel, and his only child, Jennifer Diane, 20, a senior at Stanford University majoring in American Studies.

Unfortunately, Grant died last Nov. 29 in Davenport, Iowa, of a massive stroke after first stubbornly ignoring the advice of two physicians (he had little faith in doctors) that he desperately belonged in a hospital.

Obituaries are characterized by a necessary sameness, and that is certainly true of those written about this superstar of yesteryear. In practically every one I've read on the actor, he is described as having been handsome, debonair, jaunty, smooth, breezy, animated and high-spirited. Certainly he was all of these, and certainly he was married five times, acted in 72 films and retired in 1966 at age 62. But that's not the Cary Grant I remember interviewing intermittently from 1943 to 1966 and beyond. The Cary Grant I remember was rather an insecure, tentative man in search of an identity he could be comfortable with; a man fearful of returning to the poverty into which he'd been born, and therefore ever tight with a buck; an actor of talent, ambition, courage and financial acumen who managed his career with exemplary care and foresight.

Few movie fans knew it, but Grant was that rare leading man in the Depression days of the 1930s who decided he could do better as a free-lance than as a contract player (with Paramount). He was also one of the first actors to accept a minimal salary plus 10% of the gross for starring in a film—which is what he got in 1958 for acting opposite Sophia Loren in Houseboat. It was Grant who introduced the practice of using his own clothes in a film and then charging the studio a hefty wardrobe fee. With a managerial shrewdness second to none, he advanced to a position in Hollywood where he had approval not only of script, director and cast of his films but also of the publicity releases and still photos.

He was also a litigious actor who sued or threatened to sue over alleged breaches of contract and aspersions cast on his sexual behavior. In the 1970s, for example, Grant sued 20th Century-Fox for using without remuneration a 30-second film clip of him from Monkey Business in its movie Myra Breckinridge. The court awarded him $10. Grant also sued Chevy Chase after the actor questioned his masculinity on a TV show—a slander for which Grant reportedly accepted a handsome out-of-court settlement.

From the cold waters of the north: a lesson about heart disease.

On the coast of Greenland, studies were done that fascinated researchers. They involved the Eskimos whose traditional high fat diet of seal, whale and walrus looked like an open door to coronary heart disease. Yet, researchers found little sign of it.

They concluded the reason lies in EPA and DHA. Known scientifically as omega-3 fatty acids, EPA and DHA are found in certain marine animals and cold water, oily fish that the Eskimos ate almost every day—fish such as mackerel, herring and salmon.

These studies were corroborated by 20 years of studies with the Dutch and Japanese. What's more, numerous clinical studies pointed to the fact that EPA and DHA may be important links in reducing cholesterol and the risk of harmful fatty deposits from building up in your arteries. You can see how fatty deposits can clog your arteries and may over time lead to a heart attack or stroke.

Here in America, a high fat diet is just as traditional as it is with the Eskimos. But, because our diet is low in oily, cold water fish, many of us don't always get the heart health benefits of EPA and DHA.

Now, you can get these omega-3 fatty acids in a safe, all-natural fish oil supplement called PROMEGA™.

PROMEGA is intended to be part of your total dietary plan to help reduce the risk of coronary heart disease—a plan that should include eating more fish, reducing total fat and substituting polyunsaturated for saturated fat. Of course, you should still follow other sensible steps like regular exercise, no smoking and weight control.

PROMEGA from Parke-Davis. Ask your doctor or pharmacist about it. Or for more information and a $3.00 Cash/Coupon Offer call 1-800-524-2624 weekdays 8AM to 5PM EST. In New Jersey, call collect 201-540-2306.

In the early 1930s, Grant quickly recognized that film was a directors' medium. From the time he left Paramount, he made it a point to establish friendly working relationships with such outstanding directors as Howard Hawks, George Stevens, Alfred Hitchcock, George Cukor and Leo McCarey. He made five films with Hawks, four with Hitchcock, and three each with Stevens, Cukor and McCarey.

Once, on a 12-hour flight from Los Angeles to London, I asked Grant why he did so well in selecting scripts and so poorly in choosing wives. He was married at the time to actress Dyan Cannon, who gave him his only offspring, Jennifer. Cannon was 33 years younger than Grant, and their marriage was foundering. "In a script," he said, "I know what I'm looking for. In a wife, I guess, I don't."

In 1981, the actor married British publicist Barbara Harris, 46 years his junior. Despite the age-differential, she developed into an understanding wife of whom Grant said, "She keeps me happy, healthy and hopping." It is to his widow and his daughter that he bequeathed most of his estate, estimated to be worth $20 million. To the rest of us, he left a treasure-trove of films, many of which are truly pleasure-giving and unforgettable. Off the screen, however, he was not the bon vivant he played on it. He was, until his final years, a complex, intricate and emotionally embroiled man.

Jackie Onassis and Dr. George Hatem, whose life story she'd like to get into print

Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis, who works as an editor at Doubleday in New York, is trying to line up a biography or autobiography of Dr. George Hatem, 76. Hatem is the physician from Buffalo, N.Y., and Greenville, N.C., who won the Lasker Public Service Award last year for his major role in the virtual eradication of venereal disease in China during the Mao regime.

A resident of China for 53 years, Dr. Hatem (known to the Chinese as Ma Haide, or "Virtue from Overseas") currently is hard at work in Beijing, trying to cure the Chinese leper population of 100,000. As a physician who treated the late Mao Zedong, Zhou Enlai and many other Communist leaders, "Dr. Ma" is venerated in China, where he became a citizen in 1949. He is married to Chou Su-fei, a former child actress who today is a leading film director.

When this reporter wrote the first article on Hatem to appear in this country (PARADE, Aug. 12, 1973), the good doctor was besieged with offers from 15 publishers eager to commission a book on him. We forwarded all the offers and various propositions to Hatem, who several weeks later responded from China with a brief note: "Too busy treating the sick to toot my horn."

Emanuel Ungaro

PEOPLE HAVE THE WRONG idea about fashion designers. Take Emanuel Ungaro.

He is a short, tough Frenchman who lives and works in Paris and who designs some of the loveliest clothes in the world. When I saw him in New York a few weeks ago, he was wearing a sort of Don Johnson five-day beard and putting on a fashion show to raise money for cancer research. This was a quick trip—all business and little pleasure—and his girlfriend was not with him. His girlfriend these days is Anouk Aimée, a startlingly beautiful woman who starred in La Dolce Vita and A Man and a Woman and who has the best cheekbones you have ever seen.

I first got to know Ungaro about 20 years ago. I was hanging around Paris and writing about fashion for the newspapers. The big designers then were Coco Chanel and Cristobal Balenciaga, both of them now dead, and someone told me, "There's this young guy who works for Balenciaga. He's a tailor. Maybe the best tailor in the world. And now he's going out on his own and opening his own fashion studio."

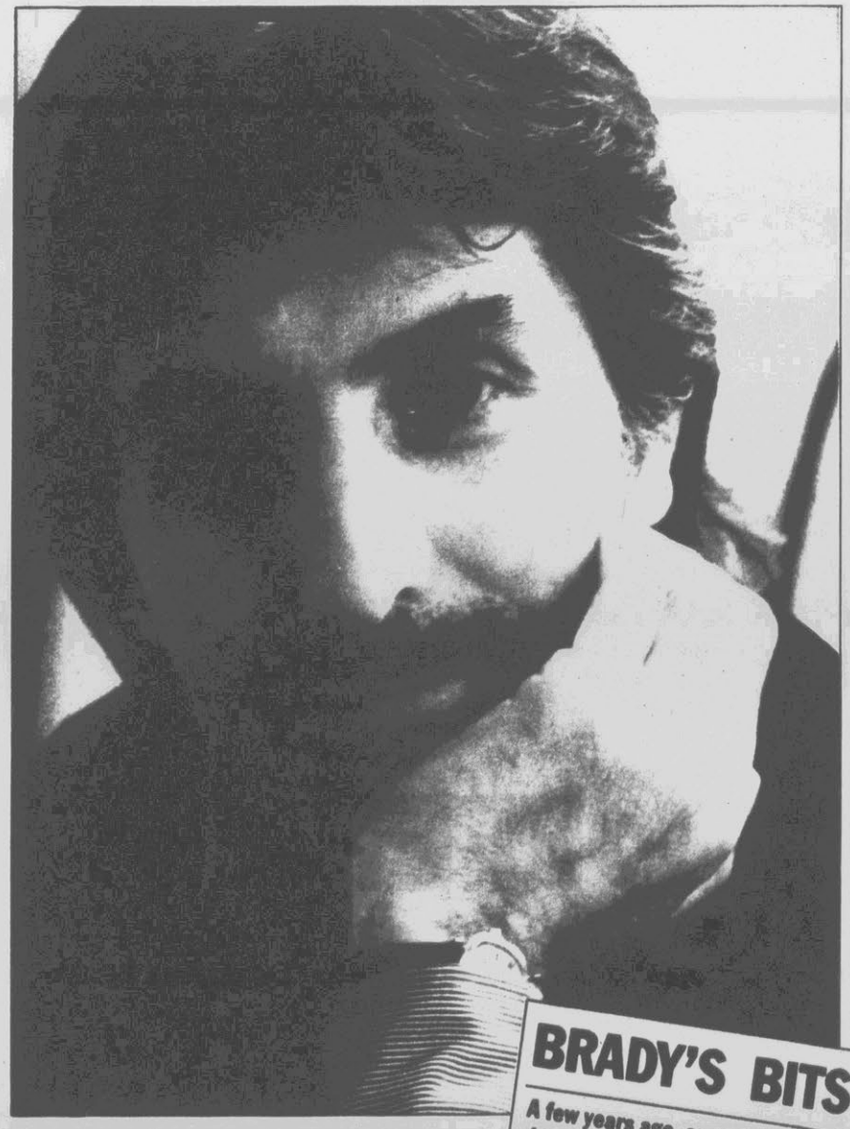

I went to his first fashion collection, in a Paris apartment so tiny that people were sitting on the balconies looking in through the French windows to see the clothes. Emanuel said he raised the money for that first show by getting a loan on his girlfriend's Porsche. The girlfriend then was not Anouk, but someone else. What is important to the story is that he raised the cash and soon was in a bigger establishment which, unfortunately, had a lot of small rooms: To show the collection to the fashion editors all at the same time, Emanuel came up with the clever idea of having closed-circuit TV sets installed, so wherever the model wandered among the small rooms, everyone could see her at once.

That was all a long time ago. Today, when Ungaro comes to America, he goes up to see Jackie Onassis, some of whose clothes he makes.

He has a place in Paris, a chalet in the Swiss ski resort of Klosters, where he does cross-country skiing, and he is driving his own sports car these days. Going out to dinner with Emanuel in Paris is an adventure. He drives the sports car very fast, and you hope you get there—and when you do, he parks on the sidewalk, where most Parisians park, because there is no room at the curb. His new perfume is called "Diva," and it is making him another fortune. Emanuel knows he is a fortunate man and, unlike some of the fashion people I know, he is always grinning. He is very serious and professional about his trade—which is to make women even more beautiful than they are already—but he is not serious about himself.

Most designers can't stand one another. It is too tough a business, too competitive. It says something about Ungaro that even his rivals like him.

BORN: Feb. 13, 1933, in Aix-en-Provence, France.
CAREER HIGHLIGHTS: Collaboration with the couturier Balenciaga, 1956; first couture house in Paris, 1965; first licensing agreement, for scarves (he now has 50 licensing agreements), 1968; expansion to U.S. and Japan, 1970s; creation of perfume, 1983.
FILM WARDROBES: Le Sauvage (for Catherine Deneuve), 1975; Gloria (for Gena Rowlands), 1979; La Truite (for Isabelle Huppert), 1981; Viva la Vie (for Anouk Aimée), 1983.

The French fashion collections for spring will be shown next week in Paris. No designer is more important now than Emanuel Ungaro, who hocked his girlfriend's sports car for the money to get started.

BRADY'S BITS

A few years ago, one of my daughters went to Paris for a term to study at the Sorbonne, and, naturally, I wrote to some French friends to keep an eye on her. Some did, some didn't. Ungaro showed her the town, cooked pasta for her in his apartment, taught her about fashion and worked with her on her French. Susan and I saw Emanuel recently. "Your French is terrible!" he shouted in mock anger. "You must come back to Paris." To study? "No," said Emanuel, "I need a housekeeper."

WORLD WAR II WITH WALTER CRONKITE

Narrated by Walter Cronkite

World War II. You've seen the Hollywood version a hundred times over. Now prepare for all the action and drama of the real thing. In "Air War Over Europe," your introduction to the landmark series, WORLD WAR II WITH WALTER CRONKITE, you'll join Allied flyers on some of the roughest bombing missions ever flown.

Through graphic combat footage taken by both sides, you'll follow them every step of the way, from the briefing room to the target and back. You'll see and hear just what the pilots, gunners and bombardiers did, as German fighters attack from all sides ...bursts of flak shatter the sky...the ground below erupts in flames.

Actual gun-camera footage taken by ME-109 fighters completes the picture, as you see air combat from the enemy's point of view.

And each mission is all the more involving when you realize the special planning that went into it.

IN EPISODE I, "TARGET: PLOESTI", the plan called for a surprise attack by 177 B-24 bombers. They would avoid German radar by flying all 1,200 miles to the oil refineries at Ploesti, Rumania at tree-top level. But a navigational error takes them directly over Bucharest, headquarters of the German Air Defense Command. And what could have been a brilliant lightning strike turns into one of the most costly air battles of the war.

IN EPISODE II, "RAID ON SCHWEINFURT", you'll witness the first major American air strike deep inside Germany. Since the target was far beyond the range of Allied fighter protection, these B-17 "Flying Fortresses" had to rely on tight formation flying and combined firepower for survival. 28 are shot down before they even reach the target. And before it's over, this air battle tests the limits of human endurance.

IN EPISODE III, "COUNTERBLAST: HAMBURG", you'll board a U-boat on the attack and understand first-hand why the destruction of the U-boat manufacturing plants at Hamburg was so vital. In a single night raid, the RAF put up 800 bombers. How this huge force managed to jam German radar, get the Luftwaffe to defend the wrong city and hit the target with such deadly accuracy is one of the war's great success stories.

AND IN EPISODE IV, "GUIDED MISSILE", the Luftwaffe's painful defeat in The Battle of Britain sets the stage for Hitler's "vengeance weapons," the V-1 and V-2 rockets. You'll watch them being launched at his secret base in Peenemunde...go on the massive air raid that forces their redeployment at hidden launching sites...view the onslaught as RAF Spitfires shoot down V-1s while supersonic V-2s rain down, one by one, on London. And rare footage reveals the long-range V-9 being test-launched in the final days of the war. Its proposed target: The United States!

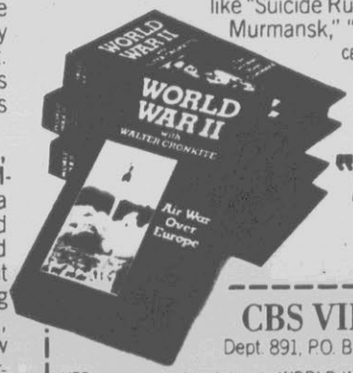

In all, "Air War Over Europe" adds up to 90 minutes of excitement no movie can imitate. And it's yours for just $4.95 plus shipping and handling, a full $45 off its regular price with your subscription to the series.

As a subscriber, you'll receive future videocassettes, one every other month, always for 10-day, risk-free examination. Each shows you a new and exciting side of the war—in episodes like "Suicide Run To Murmansk," "The Doolittle Raid," "Sabotage," "Typhoon At Okinawa" and "The Plots Against Hitler." Each videocassette is $49.95 plus shipping and handling. There is no minimum number you must buy, and you can cancel your subscription at any time.

(Multi-unit sets, special and classical selections may be somewhat higher.) And if you continue as a member after completing your enrollment agreement, you'll be eligible for our "buy one—get one free" bonus plan.

Pointer Sisters Star In First Special

By Wendy Wallace

"I'm really excited about it. It's like a dream come true," says June Pointer, the youngest member of the singing Pointer Sisters, rounded out by Ruth and Anita.

"Our first network special is getting to know the Pointer Sisters; it's a lot of our own personalities coming out. And that's what the special is built around. It's our time and we want to make sure everyone else has a good time, too."

Pointer is describing the sisters' first special, "Pointer Sisters...Up All Nite," airing Friday, Jan. 23 on NBC. The special features the Pointers in an all-night musical tour of Los Angeles after they miss the last plance home.

Included are appearances at some of the city's top clubs, such as the Palace and Scream, as well as musical numbers from their latest album "Hot Together."

"We're night people and we work mostly at night. For the title, it was a toss up between 'Up All Nite' or 'Out All Nite,'" the singer says. "Up All Nite' was more realistic, more like what we're really like. Once you see the special, you'll realize that you can be 'Up All Nite' and still have a good time."

Joining the Pointers are guest stars Whoopi Goldberg and Bruce Willis, who makes his singing debut with songs from his upcoming debut album. The McGuire also make an appearance, which, according to Pointer, was "in itself a rare treat."

"Whoopi Goldberg was definitely our choice. We asked her and she made time to do it," Pointer says. "And in the middle of her honeymoon, too. We really appreciated that. And Bruce Willis, we're singing on his latest single. So everything clicked, everything fell into place. It was a group effort."

That the Pointer Sisters have been a dynamic presence in the music industry for over 12 years is quite evident by the number of awards they've claimed — three Grammy Awards — and endless gold and platinum albums.

"We're hard workers and we like to do the best we can possibly do. And we do it well, that's what we go for.

"We'll wait and see what will come out of this and we'll take it from there," the singer responds when asked about doing another special.

"We have the bait and everything's out there. We're just waiting for the fish to take it. Let's hope they'll bite and everything will work out for us."

The Soap Dope

Some soap operas pin their story lines on a conventional setting. "General Hospital" and "The Doctors" dramatized hospital hokum, "Texas" thrashed around themes of the antebellum South and the recently canceled "Capitol" had Washington intrigue to fuel its plots. CBS's newest soap, the half-hour "The Bold and the Beautiful," premieres on March 23. The new daytime drama traces the exploits and intrigues of two Chicago families in the glamorous world of fashion.

WEDDING GOWN CARE

With all the excitement following the wedding, was your wedding gown put away and forgotten? Your bridal gown is a priceless investment. Proper care is important if you want to preserve it for sentimental enjoyment or perhaps for a daughter's wedding.

All fabrics are susceptible to deterioration over a period of time. The delicate lace and satin of a wedding gown is particularly fragile, so it should be cared for with special handling procedures. Many stains set very quickly and turn brown with age.

Come by A CLEANER WORLD and find out about the service available to brides by which wedding gowns and accessories are restored and packaged for long time storage in a beautiful bridal chest.

If the Shoe Fits

Tony- and Emmy-winner Colleen Dewhurst stalking Bigfoot? Disney has Dewhurst, as anthropologist Gladys Samco, stalking the half-ape, half-human Sasquatch in California's San Bernardino Mountains in "Bigfoot." The "Disney Sunday Movie" is being directed by Dan Huston, son of director-dad John, and will air sometime this season on ABC.

Wait No More

Production has been completed in Vancouver, British Columbia, on the CBS telefilm "A Stranger Waits." Suzanne Pleshette stars as a widow who is imperiled by her passion for a mysterious young man. Tom Atkins, Justin Deas, Paul Benjamin, Ann Wedgeworth and Kenneth Welsh co-star.

Newcomer Landry Perks Up 'AW'

By Connie Passalacqua

One of the beauties of daytime soaps (oh, yes, there are some!) is that it is a self-renewing medium. Just as popular young talents bolt for the world of nighttime TV and films as soon as their initial contracts expire, a tide of even newer, younger actors rushes in to take their places. One of the most promising and refreshing of the new crop is Lauri Landry, who has just joined "Another World" as Nicole Love.

Although this is her first contract role, Landry is no stranger to soaps. She has played recurring roles on both the New York-based "Guiding Light" (as the one woman who could resist Josh Lewis's charms) and the Hollywood-based "Capitol" (as Trey Clegg's bedmate).

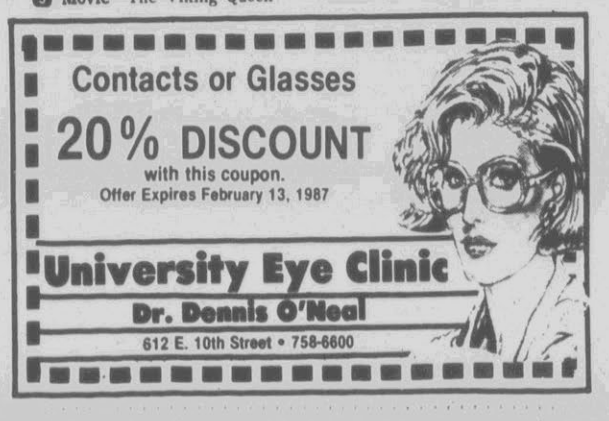

"It's interesting," says Landry, who has also done guest spots on such prime-time shows as "T.J. Hooker," "in New York I'm always cast as the poor, little wife and in California, I'm always cast as a bitch. I'm a brunette, so it's funny to see how I'm perceived on both coasts."

Landry says she is excited to return to New York to do "Another World" after two years in California.

"I've always wanted to do daytime and I've always watched it," she says. "It gives you the chance to work every day, instead of only two days a week doing guest shots. And I couldn't ask for abetter situation, with all the story lines coming together. The first week Nicole came home, her sister went into a coma, her brother was shot and her father was stabbed."

Landry is also happy because Nicole will get to sing regularly on the show in her father Reginald's (John Considine) new nightclub. She says her Nicole will be different than her first incarnation — a coke freak played by Kim Morgan Greene (now seen on "The Colbys" as Channing Colby).

"She'll be frivolous now, but she has a dark past and I hope there's darkness about her," she says. "And the Love family could use at least one sane member."

CINDY SAYS

Film title needs spice; Cosby plays Mr. Nice

By Cindy Adams

Jacqueline Bisset has made a movie in Greece. It was titled "High Season." Too bland. "Sounds like a sitcom," gurgled one genius. It was retitled "Taramo Salata." "Too confusing, sounds like nothin'," gurgled another genius who didn't know that taramo salata is a caviar spread. Claire Peplo, Bernardo Bertolucci's wife, is directing. Irene Papasis co-starring. Somebody else is researching a title. How's "Highly Seasoned"? THAT won't be too bland.

Jacqueline Bisset

Lynn Redgrave and Mary Tyler Moore were in Boston on the pre-Broadway run of "Sweet Sue." The only family member with Lynn was Teddy. As in bear. Teddy was a gift from her nanny and the now-grown Miss Redgrave has had him for over 40 years. Lynn might occasionally travel without husband John, occasionally without kiddies Ben, Kelly and Annabel, but never without Teddy.

In the early '60s Engelbert Humperdinck and Tom Jones were pals. In 1966 they MADE IT. In 1973 they fell out. They didn't speak for 13 years. Recently, reminiscing backstage in Vegas, they couldn't remember what they'd been sore about. ... Rod Steiger's playing King Lear in Jean Luc Godard's film version.

Bill Cosby

"Anything Goes" was going into the Vivian Beaumont in Lincoln Center but was postponed until fall. The producers and MVP Jerry Zaks — the semi-resident director who brought us "The Front Page" and won a Tony for "House of Blue Leaves" — want either Bernadette Peters or Bette Midler for the Ethel Merman role.

Bill Cosby will head the 175th birthday of the New York City Mission Society, Lincoln Center. Pat Kluge, Caroll Petrie and Dina Merrill are the chair leaders. ... Diana Ross' childhood was spent in a low-income housing project. Her three daughters go to private school in Switzerland. Monthy tab? Ten thou.

TV Chatter

"Weekend Update," the network news-show spoof that airs each week on "Saturday Night Live," has had a lot of top comedians as its anchor, most notably Chevy Chase and Dan Aykroyd. The current occupant of the chair is Dennis Miller, a 33-year-old standup comedian from Pittsburgh who has been holding down the job for the last two seasons. Although he pokes fun at politicians, Miller, unlike Will Rogers, doesn't consider any of them amusing. "I don't find any politicians funny, except maybe George Bush," he says. "To rise that high and have no power — it's a funny quandary for a man. It's like being assistant manager at Zody's. He seems completely neutered." Despite all his jabs at the Oval Office, Miller attended a Christmas party at the White House as a guest of the Washington press corps. "I got to meet the president. I don't think he knew who I was. I think his wife did. She looked at me and laughed a little. They watched the show when their son was on, but people that age just don't care or know about our show."

At last, Isabel Sanford is getting her lifelong dream: performing pratfalls on TV. "Honeymoon Hotel," which had a one-week tryout earlier this month in syndication, stars Sanford as the hapless manager of a rundown resort near San Diego. The five-day-a-week series is tentatively set to resume airing in the fall. Sanford agreed to the grind of taping five shows a week because the sitcom finally allows her to do something she never got to do as the upper-class wife of Sherman Hemsley on "The Jeffersons" — fall on her face. "I've always wanted to do shtick," Sanford says, "and they always denied me that on 'The Jeffersons' because I was too dignified."

Although his previous series, "Masquerade" and "Bearcats," quickly disappeared from the small screen, Rod Taylor is optimistic about "Outlaws," his new fantasy-adventure series airing Saturdays on CBS. In the series, Taylor portrays a sheriff from the Old West who is transported — along with the desperadoes he is chasing — to modern-day Houston by a freak lightning accident. "For a change, we're not in the suicide slot," says the Australian actor. "I've never been so lucky before. I've had one disaster after another on TV. Network executives said, 'Oh, "Masquerade" is going to be a hit, let's put it on against "Dynasty"!' Smart thinking. Or with 'Bearcats,' it was 'Hey, this is the greatest show in the world! It'll knock "Dallas" — or whatever was hot at the time — off the air.' Whatever was really hot on TV, they always put my series up against." At last Taylor may be in luck. "Outlaws" airs against NBC's "Facts of Life" and "227" and ABC's "Sidekicks" and "Sledge Hammer!"

Carrie Fisher, Princess Leia in all those "Star Wars" movies, is happy George Lucas has decided not to make any more films about the adventures of Luke Skywalker. Says Fisher, "A dream project for me would be about an over-the-hill surfer chick in 'Gidget Goes to Hell.'" ... Everyone should have such problems. Tony Perkins thinks his youthful looks have hurt his acting career. "I couldn't play 40-year-olds when I was 45. But what could I do to make myself look older? I wasn't so dedicated to my craft that I was willing to undergo plastic surgery." ... Tony O'Dell, the preppie high school genius on ABC's "Head of the Class," doesn't like it when people complain that he's just a clone of Alex Keaton, played by Michael J. Fox on "Family Ties." "The only thing we have in common is that we're both Republicans," says O'Dell.

BEHIND THE SCENES

Alan Zweibel thrives on anti-TV

By Frank Lovece

Alan Zweibel is a not-ready-for-prime-time player — small letters. He used to write for the Not Ready for Prime-Time Players — capital letters — back in the glory days of "Saturday Night Live," helping John Belushi define his Samurai character and winning three Emmys in the process.

Alan Zweibel

Now, as producer and co-creator of Showtime's "It's Garry Shandling's Show," Zweibel continues to prove that some of the best TV happens when you don't expect it.

"It's Garry Shandling's Show" is a successful example of "anti-television". After a nighttime scene, the lights go on above the deliberately phony-looking set. Shandling says, "See that? That's a transition. It's supposed to be morning now." He yawns and stretches. "I sure am refreshed!"

Instead of smooth dissolves, Shandling and his cast go from set to set in a golf cart. They can't decide whether to walk in through the door of the set, real-lifelike, or just walk onto it and start the scene. Stuff like this hasn't been done on a sitcom since the days of George Burns and Gracie Allen.

"We acknowledge the fact we're on TV," says Zweibel, who was plucked, fairy-tale style, from the stage of "Catch a Rising Star" to the writing staff of "Saturday Night Live."

"We originally wanted 'Garry Shandling' to have an 'Our Town' feeling," he adds, alluding to the Thornton Wilder play where the narrator steps in and out of the drama to address the audience.

As for the positive reaction to the show, Zweibel is only a little surprised.

"I don't believe anybody thinks, 'Let's do our best and see what happens.' They say they do, but you want people to like it. I thought people might spark to this because it's different.

"On cable there are no commercials to worry about, the rhythm is more like a one-act play than a normal sitcom."

Zweibel, who has written plays and a book and co-scripted the upcoming film "Dragnet," is still committed to cable.

"I have very little expectations when it comes to prime-time. And anyway, as a writer-producer I'm not steeped in the form."

Which suits him — and "Garry Shandling's" viewers — just fine.

MacLaine Takes On Offbeat Spiritual Trip

By Ian Harmer

HOLLYWOOD — Veteran actress Shirley MacLaine had plans to make a new feature film early in 1987, one which she says offered the prospect of an Academy Award to match the one she collected in 1984 for her performance in "Terms of Endearment."

She decided not to sign on,opting instead for a grueling few months of city-hopping across the United States, hosting $300-a-pop seminars at which she expounded her theories on reincarnation and extraterrestrial meddling in our daily lives.

Her off-the-wall beliefs get massive exposure this week in "Out on a Limb," ABC's miniseries adaptation of the 1983 best seller in which MacLaine first went public with the conclusions she reached after a long spiritual quest.

Only good news comes out of it, because while a significant percentage of the audience may be inclined to sign up MacLaine for a long spell in a rubber room, most viewers will recognize it as an involving and thought-provoking few hours of entertainment.

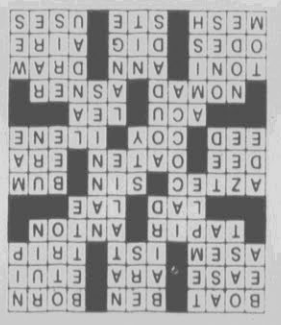

"That word — entertainment — was uppermost in my mind as I wrote the script with my good friend Colin Higgins," says MacLaine as we sit in her vista-windowed beachfront apartment in Malibu,Calif.

"Obviously, I don't expect everyone who sees it to accept what I believe, any more than I did when I wrote the book," she says. "It was ABC's idea to turn the book into a miniseries, not mine, and what everyone wanted was a movie that would attract and hold an audience."

Two important ingredients make the project a success — MacLaine's intelligence, which makes it hard to dismiss her ideas as mere looniness, and her shrewd decision to dress up her thesis as areal-life love story.

She has a great sense of humor about her beliefs: When a wayward police helicopter swooped low over the surf outside her window, drowning out our conversation, she laughsand says: "Don't worry — it's just a grounded UFO!"

MacLaine sees herself as the bearer of glad tidings of a sort. The good news is that we have all lived before, and will again, over and over, on this and other planets throughout the universe.

Michele Will Tell

Dear Michele: I watch NBC's Tom Brokaw every night, but I know nothing about his off-camera life. Please tell me all about him. — KIRA KNIGHT, PITTSBURGH, PENN.

Tom Brokaw was born Feb. 6, 1940, in Yankton, S.D. In 1962, he graduated from the University of South Dakota with a degree in political science. Brokaw has been married for 23 years to his high school sweetheart, Melinda Auld (a former Miss South Dakota). The couple have three daughters: Jennifer, 20, Andrea, 18, and Sarah, 16. As managing editor and anchor of NBC News' evening newscast, Brokaw earns $1.7 million a year. That's a long way from his broadcast beginnings at KMTV in Omaha, Neb., in 1962, where he earned $100 per week. Brokaw enjoys mountain climbing and white-water rafting in his spare time.

Dear Michele: Please help our aging memories. Who played the veterinarian in the series "Gloria," which starred Sally Struthers? I can see his face, but I can't recall his name. — ELIZABETH TEUFEL, YONKERS, N.Y.

Veteran actor Burgess Meredith portrayed the crochety Dr. Willard Adams on the short-lived series "Gloria," which aired during the 1982-83 season on CBS. The series also starred Jo de Winter as his partner Dr. Maggie Lawrence and Lou Richards as his assistant Clark Uhley.

Dear Michele: What has Catherine Bach been up to since the cancellation of "The Dukes of Hazzard"? — JOHN OLIVER, BRISTOL, VA.

Seven years in Daisy Dukes' hot pants have enabled Bach to become financially independent, but she is still working. She made her stage debut last season in "Extremities" at the Burt Reynolds Theater in Jupiter, Fla. Bach says she's out to prove she's an actress, not just a pair of sexy gams in tight shorts.

Take the Clara Johnson Test.

In Alamance County, North Carolina, Honda lawn mowers are assembled from the wheels up. Then each mower must pass rigid quality control standards before we ship it.

The final test is a critical performance check to ensure easy starting. We call it the Clara Johnson Test. At the end of the assembly line, each mower is started or it doesn't ship.

Come in and give the whole line of Honda mowers the Clara Johnson Test yourself. Each one will start easily, or it wouldn't be a Honda.

It's Happy Trails For Ex-Cowboy Hewitt

By Jay Carman

George Hewitt likes to refer to himself as "the old cowboy," and his status as a former rodeo champ certainly entitles him to the status.

He's a rancher with a huge spread near Owen Sound, Ont., and he's got hundreds of ridin', ropin' and trail-ridin' stories in his memory banks.

But don't let that fool you. Hewitt is as sophisticated a showman as they come and his "Open Roads" series is devoted to a lot more than bucking broncos and herding cattle.

In fact, the show's breadth is precisely the reason that it has become one of the least-sung successes in the Canadian television industry. Virtually unassisted, the 50-year-old "cowboy" has rustled himself up personal syndication that now extends to 21 major TV channels and 50 repeater stations from coast to coast.

"Open Roads" is just the sort of success story that TV insiders will swear is impossible in this day and age. But then, of course, they would also have you believe that a budget of a measly $10,000 per episode is as viable as wings on pigs.

Hewitt just laughs at them He knows better. He has known it since back in 1976, when "Open Roads" first hit the airwaves on a single station in Kitchener, Ont. And 11 years later, he and his partner, John Peterson, who also serves as director and camera operator, are still going strong.

At this writing, they have about 350 half-hour episodes under their ornate belt buckles. Each show is similar as far as intent goes, and completely different when it comes to content.

Hewitt is fond of saying his show is "a window on Canada" and that all he wants "is to show neighbors to each other." To that end, he and Peterson spend much of the year hitching up the modern-day equivalent of the Wild West wagon train — a well-equipped, well-stocked mobile home that has so far logged half a million miles.

Hewitt's beloved trailer has lumbered all the way from northern Ontario for stories about shipwrecks off Tobermory Island up to the Yukon to catch dangerous white-water rafting competitions.

Yes, the dynamic duo has done its share of rodeo stories. But Hewitt says he's just as interested in city folks and how they live their lives. Hewitt has tried both ways of living himself.

He grew up in the auto-manufacturing city of Windsor, Ont., dreaming of being a cowboy. At 18, he ran away to the rodeo and became a champion bronc and bull rider on the Canadian and American circuits.

But when the inevitable broken bones and assorted other injuries finally caught up with him, Hewitt went into rodeo and sports announcing. After a brief interval as a singing cowboy, which, incredibly enough, included being on the same bill as the Rolling Stones in an English concert hall, Hewitt figured out what he really wanted to do.

He's been doing it ever since with "Open Roads."

SOAP OPERA WEEK

Hopes to see more of 'GH' star

By Kimberly Redmond

Please tell me all about Ian Buchanan, the actor who portrays Duke Lavery on "General Hospital." I hope he will be on the show for a very long time. I'd also like his address. — P.B., Far Rockaway, NY.

Ian Buchanan

Buchanan was born in East Kilbridge, Scotland, and grew up in the Scottish countryside. His Scottish burr was a bit of a problem when he first came to the United States, but now Buchanan says that when he returns home his family has a hard time understanding his "American accent." A former model, his modeling jobs took him to Japan, Italy and France. He was dubbed "Mr. Walkman" in Japanese TV commercials that introduced the walkman radios to the Orient. Despite the traveling and the glamour his modeling jobs brought him, Buchanan longed to embark on a serious acting career. He came to New York City three years ago when he joined the Ford Modeling Agency. Soon after his arrival, Buchanan began studying acting at the Strasberg Theater Institute. Buchanan's role on "GH" is his first professional acting job. You can write to Buchanan c/o "General Hospital," ABC-TV, 4151 Prospect Avenue, Hollywood, CA 90067.

I've been watching "Another World" for many years. I'm quite puzzled by the fact that Matthew Cory, who is really about five years old, has suddenly been aged to about nine years old. He used to be several years younger than his sister, Amanda, who when I last saw her on screen appeared to be younger than Matthew. Can you explain this? — A.B., Prince Albert Island, Sask. Canada.

It's true that Matthew is several years younger than his half-sister, Amanda. Matthew, now played by Daniel Dale, was aged for plot-line purposes when his father, Mitch Blake (played by William Gray Espy), returned to the story line. We haven't seen Amanda for many moons, but if, and when, she does reappear, she'll no doubt have blossomed into a teenager.

(Have a question about soap operas? Write Kimberly Redmond at 200 Park Ave., Room 602, New York, NY 10166. Questions cannot be answered personally, but those of general interest will be answered in future columns.)

ROCK VIEW

Hot rockers burn their way to the top

By Marianne Meyer

Take it literally that the Vinnie Vincent Invasion is a hot new band — in their premiere video clip "Boys Are Gonna Rock," the heavy-metal quartet plays on through a pyrotechnic onslaught — the most lavish attempted in a music video to date. Bassist Dana Strum's description: "I felt like a piece of toast!"

Vinnie Vincent

Fire marshals watched as amplifiers exploded, instruments burst into flame and a stuntman did a "full burn" — catching fire in an asbestos suit — for the rowdy finale.

Meanwhile, an anxious aide stood by former Kiss member Vinnie Vincent with a wet blanket should the new guitar star suddenly burst into flame, too. A technician explained: "He's wearing one of the most flammable substances known — hairspray!"

The band spent over 20 hours destroying $16,000 worth of equipment for the clip. Vincent admits, "It's a little heavy, but we do it in the name of rock 'n' roll."

The equipment-bashing may recall The Who in their early destructo days; the clip was directed by Jeff Stein, who put together The Who's feature film "The Kids Are Alright."

The performance is representative of the Invasion's live show, though they're not allowed to use the pyro effects as an opening act (they're on the road now with Iron Maiden).

But when the group headlines, they do burn things up above and beyond Vincent's scorching solos.

The band is being highly touted in the metal arena for Vincent's unique three-finger picking style, which gives him speed far beyond most metalmen. It's a technique he learned from his father's pedal-steel country band, and the Guitar Institute of Technology wants to put it on videotape for posterity.

Though Vincent might easily have honed his craft to a mainstream edge, he swears that "heavy metal is the stage setting for great guitar playing."

Not a bad place to meet women, either. The Invasion's latest mission is to assemble the first all-female road crew for their next tour; they're accepting applications from women who are "photogenic, sociable, have musical experience, a knowledge of electronics, and can lift heavy weights."

Watch out, women — it could get hot!

College Hoops Action Fills Football Void

By Adam Beckerman

You can turn to CBS, NBC or even ABC on Sunday, Jan. 18, and you won't find a single NFL game to watch. This week's hiatus between the conference championships and the Super Bowl is intended to get the United States of America frothing in anticipation of what annually degenerates into the largest mass anti-climax on network television.

Hence, the football void will be filled by these offerings:

* ABC trots out its college basketball shoes. A doubleheader, no less: defending NCAA champ Louisville at Purdue, and LSU at Kentucky. Al Michaels will do play-by-play of the premiere game along with former University of Kentucky coach Joe B. Hall, who at one time was the most hated man in the Bluegrass State because he only won one national title. As usual, the Cardinals are struggling inthe early going, while coach Gene Keady's Boilermakers are acting like legitimate Final Four participants.

In the thoroughly entertaining Dick Vitale's "Basketball '86-87 Guide," Coach V writes: "If everything goes right for Keady, his Boilermakers could win it all." Vitale will be doing color beside Keith Jackson courtside at the Tiger-Wildcat game. If you don't have cable and haven't ever heard this bald, nearsighted used-car dealer-type B-ball cheerleader, please, be patient. He has got asgood a court sense as Billy Packer and as eclectic a hoops lexicon as Al McGuire. Plus, he's the only one of the three with his own sneaker contract.

Also on Sunday, CBS has Syracuse vs. Michigan, two schools that always tease their faithful into thinking this could be the year, only to go belly up at tournament time; and NBC gives us North Carolina State vs. North Carolina.

* Over in Palm Springs, Calif., financially gifted amateurs have been golfing on the four magnificent courses that comprise the Bob Hope Chrysler Classic for four days now, along with the pros who are trying to win the event. NBC airs the fifth round of play on Sunday.

* By Monday night, the big game is only six days away. Wouldn't watching a fan chosen from the stands win $1 million be a satisfying way to end the first day of the work week? At halftime of the CBA Topeka Sizzler-Wyoming Wildcatter game on ESPN (the third in a season of 11 telecasts), one hopeful will stand at the foul line, aim for the basket above the opposite end line some 70 feet away,and heave-ho. In the four seasons of the Wilson $1 Million CBA Supershot, the fans have been held scoreless.

Python's Madness Flies On To Home Video

By Frank Lovece

There really is no person named Monty Python. But there really were six guys called, collectively, Monty Python – as in "Monty Python's Flying Circus," the absurd, abstract and abundantly funny British TV series that often air on PBS. Now, at last, not only has "Monty Python" come to video, but so have two other hilarious half-hour series by Python alumni: John Cleese's "Fawlty Towers" and Michael Palin and Terry Jones' "Ripping Yarns."

While "Fawlty Towers" was inspired farce – a universally popular form of comedy – "Monty Python" and "Ripping Yarns" dealt in parody and satire that often sprang from what to American viewers might have been obscure references: boarding schools, British folk hero Dennis Moore, the novel "Wuthering Heights." Yet somehow, the humorous elements translate. "So long as there's any convention," says Palin, "it doesn't matter if it's a Jackie Collins story or an old British schoolboy's adventure. Once it has a certain style, it becomes a target for parody."

Palin and Jones' "Ripping Yarns" skewers those targets in a more straightforward fashion than did the free-form Monty Python. Each of the nine episodes takes and twists a familiar "young man's adventure tale," similar to the Hardy Boys.

"We wanted them to be funny on their own, so that even if you don't know the antecedents, you can still enjoy the story," Palin says.

Simply divide Roman letters LV (55) by V (5) to arrive at 11.

SUM MAGICAL NUMBERS

Our magician friend above is toying with nine magical numbers. It is possible to insert these numbers in the small diagram in such a way that each row of three numbers — across, down and diagonally — will total exactly 33.

For starters, let it be known that the unlucky number 13 occupies one of the diagram's four corners.

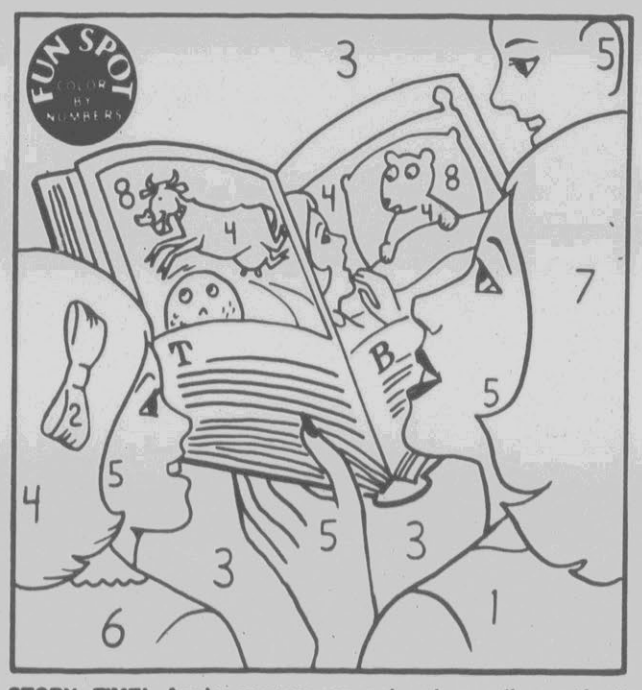

Remember, the sum to be attained in each three-square row in all directions is 33.

Can you achieve it?

Top row across: 13, 3, 17; middle row: 15, 11, 7; bottom: 5, 19, 9 will do it.

Deputies Charge 15 Marchers During Protest In Grimesland

By DON REUTER
Reflector Staff Writer

Pitt County deputies charged 15 people Sunday with parading without a permit after they demonstrated in Grimesland over the Jan. 4 shooting of a black youth by a white resident, Sheriff Ralph Tyson said.

Approximately 35 marchers were arrested at about 3 p.m. Sunday, Tyson said today. The 15 participants who were charged were released hours later without bond.

The demonstrators were trying to make Grimesland residents aware of the Jan. 4 incident, according to Bennie Rountree, president of the Pitt County Southern Christian Leadership Conference.

Daniel Lee Williams, 21, of P.O. Box 28, Grimesland, was arrested and charged with assault with a deadly weapon inflicting serious injury in connection with the shooting, Tyson said.

Tyson said breaking and entering charges were brought against Jimmy Simmons, 16, of 404 Smith St., Bethel, today in connection with the shooting incident. The Bethel youth had been recovering from injuries sustained in the shooting.

"We went into Grimesland to raise the consciousness of the system there," said Rountree, who was among those demonstrators arrested and charged.

"We didn't go to Grimesland to start trouble, but we had to say no one has the right to shoot down a person in the back," he said. "We would come to the aid of white man or a black man."

Confusion with Grimesland town officials over the necessity of a permit to parade led to the mix-up, according to Rountree, who said the group planned to apply for a permit today.

Rountree said arrest procedures went without incident.

"They didn't handcuff us. They didn't push us," Rountree said. "They only had a job to do. They made sure everyone had transportation home when it was over."

Meanwhile, Howard Simmons, 17, of P.O. Box 40, Bethel, and Bobby Simmons, 16, of 8 Lancelot St., Grimesland, have also been charged with breaking and entering a motor vehicle in connection with the incident, Tyson said.

School Absences Minimal

Few Pitt County students participated in the school boycott school planned for Martin Luther King Jr.'s birthday, according to school officials who reported attendance was normal.

Area Southern Christian Leadership Conference officials planned the boycott to protest the lack of a paid holiday for Pitt County workers.

"A survey of several schools showed that there hasn't been any abnormal absences," said Barry Gaskins, public information officer for the schools.

The Southern Christian Leadership Conference called for a boycott of the schools because a holiday had not been set aside for the King birthday.

"Some parents called the schools saying that their children would be absent because of the holiday, but not many," Gaskins said.

"Although there is a high instance of absence during the last several weeks, most is attributable to the colds and flu," he said. "Due to the bad weather and the flu season, it really is hard to determine" the reason for the absences today.

"Later in the week when we get the (attendance) tally we will be able to determine how many were out because of the holiday," Gaskins said.

Students boycotting school today will receive an unexcused absence, he said.

School Superintendent Eddie West was out of town today. Bennie Rountree, president of the local chapter of the SCLC, could not be reached for comment.

Nation Recalls King As Racial Violence Stirs Old Memories

By PETE BROWN
Associated Press Writer

Federal and many state workers got the day off today as Americans observed Martin Luther King Day, their memories of the slain civil rights leader stirred by recent outbreaks of racial violence in the North and South.

"We cannot just remember the dream and the dreamer, we must implement the dream," the Rev. Jesse L. Jackson said Sunday in New York, urging listeners to march to protest an attack by a white mob Dec. 20 that left a black man dead.

Civil rights leaders in Georgia on Sunday said they would march again through an all-white county where a biracial brotherhood march Saturday was met by rock- and bottle-weilding protesters, including members of the Ku Klux Klan.

Today is a holiday for federal workers around the country, and for employees of the District of Columbia and most of the 40 states that have a public holiday for King. Some states honor King on his birthday, Jan. 15.

Events scheduled for the day included the ringing of bells in state capitol buildings, churches and schools across the nation, a ceremony at the Liberty Bell in Philadelphia, and marches in King's native Atlanta.

Financial markets stayed open, but schools, banks and government offices in some states were closed.

Secretary of State George Schulz joined black leaders in Atlanta for an observance today. Schulz stood with King's widow, Coretta Scott King, at a wreath-laying ceremony at the slain civil rights leader's grave prior to an ecumenical service at Ebenezer Baptist Church, where King and his father once were co-pastors.

After a guard placed the yellow and red wreath at King's crypt, the Rev. Hosea Williams prayed that he and other King followers would "rededicate ourselves ... until the dream becomes a living reality."

Skies were cold and gray as hundreds crowded around the gravesite for the ceremony. Among those joining Schulz and Mrs. King were Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga.; civil rights leader Jesse Jackson; King's sister, Christine King Farris; and his son, Martin Luther King III.

The ecumenical service included awarding of the Martin Luther King Jr. Nonviolent Peace Prize to Philippine President Corazon Aquino, whose husband also was slain for his beliefs. A representative was to accept the award for Mrs. Aquino.

King, a Baptist preacher awarded the 1964 Nobel Peace Prize for his leadership of the civil rights move-

Iranian Forces Near Iraqi City

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Iran said its forces today smashed through enemy defenses to push toward Iraq's No. 2 city of Basra and were poised to take four more islands in the Shatt-al-Arab waterway on the southern front.

Iraq reported its warplanes today attacked four Iranian cities, including the holy city of Qom, and a missile battery in "destructive raids."

Iraqi President Saddam Hussein called a meeting in which political leaders praised their army for "foiling the enemy's evil intentions against great Basra," Iraq's official Baghdad radio reported.

Western correspondents who visited Basra last week said Iranian shells were landing at a rate of one per minute and many people were leaving the southern port city, which has a population of 1 million.

The fall of Basra would be a major blow to Hussein's government. Iran has claimed steady progress toward the city since it launched a major attack across the southern border Jan. 9.

Iran's official Islamic Republic News Agency, monitored in Nicosia, said Iranian forces overnight crossed the Jasim River 6 miles east of Basra.

"Moslem combatants of Iran smashed through the Iraqi defense line east of Basra in heavy fighting," killing or wounding 2,000 Iraqis since late Sunday, the agency reported.

The report said Iranian troops in a "lightning attack" surrounded an Iraqi mechanized division in the area, inflicting heavy losses and damage.

"The smoke of destroyed enemy tanks and various military vehicles could be seen billowing into the sky of the region," the Iranian agency said.

Iran said the number of Iraqis killed or wounded in 11 days of fighting on the southern front had reached 29,000.

Most claims regarding casualties and attacks cannot be independently verified. Iraq and Iran rarely allow foreign journalists to visit the battle areas.

IRNA said capture of the Iraqi islands of Umm al-Rassas, Beljanieh, and East and West Sindbad in the Shatt-al-Arab waterway was "imminent."

Iran claimed over the weekend that it captured three other islands in the waterway.

Dollar Hits Lowest Japanese Level Since Post-WWII Years

TOKYO (AP) — The U.S. dollar plunged to a record low against the Japanese yen today in Tokyo, tumbling to its lowest level since the late 1940s in heavy trading despite renewed intervention by the Bank of Japan.

With Japanese industry already suffering from the high yen, which makes its goods more expensive overseas, government officials spoke of a concerted international effort to check the yen.

Japanese news reports said Finance Minister Kiichi Miyazawa had sent senior Finance Ministry officials to the United States to explore the possibility of a meeting of the "Group of Five" nations in an attempt to stem the yen's rise.

The dollar closed at a record 150.45 yen today in Tokyo, compared with Friday's closing 153.10 yen, after briefly dipping below 150 yen for the first time since 1949. Later in London, where trading begins after Japan's business day is over, the dollar traded at 150.90 yen in early activity.

Chinese Communists Oust Intellectual

PEKING (AP) — The Communist Party has expelled the most prominent of a group of intellectuals accused of inciting student protests and spreading Western liberal ideas, the official Xinhua News Agency said today.

Premier Zhao Ziyang meanwhile was quoted as saying China's commitment to reform and increased international contacts has not been shaken by its leadership change last week, in which Zhao replaced the disgraced Hu Yaobang as party chief.

Hu also was an apparent victim of the current campaign against Western liberal ideas because he had defended intellectuals with unorthodox views.

Xinhua today quoted Zhao as assuring intellectuals they will not be victimized in the campaign.

But in a later dispatch, the agency said Fang Lizhi, an astrophysicist who was fired last week as vice president of the China Science and Technology University in Hefei, was expelled from the party because he "attempted to incite intellectuals against the party and students to make trouble."

Xinhua said Fang incited people to change the true colors of the party and claimed Marxism no longer has meaning as a science. The agency quoted Fang as saying that "if judged from the point of view of the socialist system, what we have done over the past three decades is nothing but failure."

The China Science and Technology University in Hefei, the capital of eastern Anhui province, was the scene Dec. 5 of the first of a series of pro-democracy student demonstrations that eventually spread to at least 11 cities. The demonstrators praised Fang for supporting greater democracy.

He was the second intellectual known to have been purged from the party in the crackdown on liberalism that followed the demonstrations. Xinhua said last week that Shanghai writer Wang Ruowang was expelled from the party.

Chinese sources say well-known investigative journalist Liu Binyan also has been expelled, but there has been no official word.

There have been reports that other individuals are being criticized for "bourgeois liberalism," or anti-party, anti-socialist attitudes.

Hu resigned Friday. He reportedly was forced out because top leader Deng Xiaoping was unhappy with his handling of the student protests and

Soviet Industry Falls Short

MOSCOW (AP) — The government said Kremlin leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev's program for stimulating economic growth had some impact last year, triggering an increase in overall production but not enough to satisfy consumer demand.

The Central Statistical Board on Economic Growth said in its annual report, however, that industry in general fell short of government-set production targets by 1.4 percent.

"Violations of contractual obligations occurred at one in four enterprises," the report said.

The report, published Sunday in the Communist Party daily Pravda, said factories failed to produce enough of many consumer items, including clothing, shoes, watches, glassware, television sets, refrigerators, washing machines, cars and motorcycles.

The official Tass news agency complained that not all branches of industry are heeding the party's call for a decisive turn away from economic stagnation that marked the late 1970s and early 1980s.

Since becoming Communist Party chief in March 1985, Gorbachev has called for a complete overhaul of the economy, from more efficiency on the part of workers to broader application of high technology.

Campaigns for "uskoreniye" (acceleration) and "perestroika" (restructuring) have been the rallying cries of media and officialdom for nearly two years.

Pravda declared Sunday that "last year restructuring in Soviet society gained momentum."

Electricity production was up 4 percent over 1985, according to the figures, but still short of the 1986 target.

The report blamed the shortfall on "difficulties that arose as a result of the accident at the Chernobyl nuclear power station and shortage of water in rivers."

Yegor K. Ligachev, a member of the ruling Politburo and reputed No. 2 man in the Kremlin, told industry and party leaders Friday that the cold wave that hit the Soviet Union this month has seriously threatened economic progress.

He gave no details, but also blamed power-production difficulties on mismanagement.

The slaying appeared to be spurred by a domestic dispute, according to Emerald Isle police chief Mark D. Wilson, who said Pulley had been shot with a .44-caliber pistol.

The incident occurred in the Emerald Isle home of Helen Freuler, Freuler's former wife, Wilson said.

Georgia Official Promises Protection If Civil Rights Marchers Come Back

By DAVID SIMPSON
Associated Press Writer

CUMMING, Ga. (AP) — Forsyth County Commissioner James Harrington Jr. vowed civil rights marchers who were pelted with rocks and bottles Saturday will get more help from authorities if they return to the all-white county.

Also Sunday, the pastors of two of Cumming's largest churches used their pulpits to denounce the violence. But both ministers said they would not support a second march.

In Atlanta, civil rights leaders, including Coretta Scott King and Southern Christian Leadership Conference President Joseph Lowery, called on supporters to prepare for a second march. They did not set a date, but Mrs. King called a news conference with other march organizers later today to announce specific plans.

Lowery said he hopes to organize a huge march.

Eight people were arrested Saturday after about 400 counter-demonstrators, including members of the Ku Klux Klan, interrupted a "brotherhood anti-intimidation" march. Police in riot gear could not control the crowd, and several of the 90 marchers were slightly injured.

Finally, the marchers were placed on a bus to complete their march out of range of the counter-demonstrators.

The Klan then led a large rally at the county courthouse, with speakers saying whites will not tolerate blacks in the north Georgia county.

Harrington said advance publicity about the march, originally suggested by a Hall County man, drew outiders into Forsyth County for Saturday's confrontation.

"It was on-again and off-again, and it gave the Klan and the other people the chance to choose our fair county as a battleground," said Harrington, one of five county commissioners.

Harrington said in a telephone interview he wants those arrested Saturday "prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law. And I think they should probably receive with a fine, a jail sentence."

"The other thing is we need to assure ... (march leader the Rev. Hosea) Williams and the others that if they did intend to march again that we would do our best (to protect them)," he said.

At the First Baptist Church, the Rev. B.V. Franklin told about 550 worshipers he was saddened by the violence and said the news media unfairly portrayed Forsyth County as a bastion of racism because of a dispute waged largely by outsiders.

"Certainly our county has not been represented (accurately), and I think you would agree with me. Amen?" he said.

The reponse was a chorus of "Amen," followed by another when Franklin called on the congregation to set an example "by our love."

Asked in an interview how he would respond if leaders of a future march asked for aid from local clergy, Franklin said, "I would not want to participate personally. ... I think that integration is going to come and I think the way to handle it is not to make a show and to accept what comes."

The Rev. Harold Lawrence, pastor of Cumming United Methodist Church, said another march would only deepen divisions.

"I'm not interested in being a participant in anybody's crusade," Lawrence said.

Four Zoning Changes Up For Consideration

Four rezoning requests are among the items scheduled for consideration by the Greenville Planning and Zoning Commission at its monthly meeting Tuesday at 7:30 p.m. in the council chambers of City Hall.

The board will consider a request by Bill Clark to rezone 26.51 acres located east of Westhaven subdivision and south of Whichport subdivision from residential/agricultural to medium density single-family residential.

The commissioners also will hear a request by the city of Greenville to rezone a 1.78-acre tract from downtown commercial fringe to office and institutional. The property is located off the northern right-of-way of 14th Street between Clarke and Greene streets and is a portion of the South Evans Redevelopment area.

The board will discuss a request by Joe T. Wright to rezone 18.28 acres located off the western right-of-way of State Road 1440 and north of N.C. 33 west from residential/agricultural to highway commercial.

The panel will hear a request by Warren Street property owners to rezone their properties to a neighborhood revitalization area. The property is zoned for high density residential uses.

Commissioners will consider preliminary plats of Whichport and Paramore Farms subdivisions, and Bedford devlopment.

Whichport subdivision is located off the southern right-of-way of U.S. 264 By-Pass and east of proposed Hooker Road Extension.

Paramore Farms subdivision is located off the western right-of-way of 14th Street Extension and north of Windy Ridge. The plat involves 70 lots and 3,420 linear feet of street on a 24.97-acre tract.

Bedford development, which is located off the eastern right-of-way of Evans Street Extension, north of Fork Swamp Canal and west of Bedford subdivision, involves seven lots and 3,100 linear feet of street on a 59-acre lot.

Other items to be addressed include bufferyards, a proposed amendment to the Zoning Ordinance to allow radio and television studios and transmission facilities as a special use in the MD-7 zoning classification, and a proposed amendment to the Subdivision Ordinance concerning required improvement performance guarantees.

Hawkins Ready To Leave Duke

DURHAM (AP) — Former Sen. Paula Hawkins of Florida is scheduled to leave Duke University Medical Center Tuesday and return home, two weeks after she came to North Carolina for back surgery, her husband said Monday.

Mrs. Hawkins was expected to arrive at a private airport in Florida around 2:30 p.m. to 3 p.m., Hawkins said in a telephone interview. He declined to specify which airport she'd use.

Hawkins said his wife still experienced pain from a back injury, but the latest surgery at Duke had helped fuse to spinal discs in her lower back.

"I think she's progressing very well," he said. "It will take quite a few weeks of convalescing. We hope the surgery will prove to be entirely successful."

In previous operations, Mrs. Hawkins had surgery on her lower and upper back, Hawkins said. Those operations occurred during the Republican's unsuccessful Senate re-election campaign last year.

Her future will include serving on a three-person commission to advise President Reagan on drug abuse, he said.

GETTING RID OF YELLOW STAINS

If you have a youngster with yellow stains on his teeth, this condition may have been caused by a tetracycline antibiotic or other medication prescribed for an illness. The tetracycline family of drugs is known to sometimes cause staining in children's teeth. The resulting stain may be yellow, yellowish-gray, or gray-brown. Even though the stain is permanent, it doesn't have to stay on the teeth. Dentists have a good "cover up" technique that can restore the affected teeth to their natural color.

One option is to use a resin material or opaque veneer that can be applied to the surface of the teeth to hide the stain. The color of the veneer will be selected to match the natural color of the child's teeth.

There may be other options that I may suggest. The important thing to keep in mind is that unsightly stains do not have to stay on anyone's teeth, whether child or adult.

Call my office for an appointment. Let's talk about what can be done to cover-up the stains. These procedures are painless and can really improve the appearance of an individual.

Prepared as a public service to promote better dental health. From the office of Kenneth T. Perkins, D.D.S., P.A., Evans St., Family and General Dentistry.

Liberals Ran Last

By SANDY JOHNSON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — In the politics of the far right and left, staunchly conservative Senate and House members far outnumbered the true-blue liberals in Congress last year, according to Americans for Democratic Action.

While most members of Congress fell somewhere in the middle in 1986 — the average ADA rating was 46 in the House (with 100 being most liberal) and 43.7 in the Senate — there was no shortage of strict conservatives and liberals, based upon the ADA's analysis of voting records.

Three senators and 12 representatives voted in line with the liberal ADA position 100 percent of the time on 20 key issues, according to figures released Saturday. On the opposite end of the political spectrum, 15 senators and 48 representatives scored zero with the ADA.

ADA based its annual House and Senate ratings on 20 votes, ranging from aid to Contra rebels in Nicaragua to spending for the "Star Wars" anti-missile defense proposal.

The ADA said it was disappointed in the 1986 voting record of Congress, but found solace in the November election results which shored up the Democratic majority in the House and put Democrats in control of the Senate for the first time since 1980.

"The message of the voters was clear," ADA Director Ann Lewis said. "Candidates with higher ADA voting records did much better at the polls than lower rated opponents."

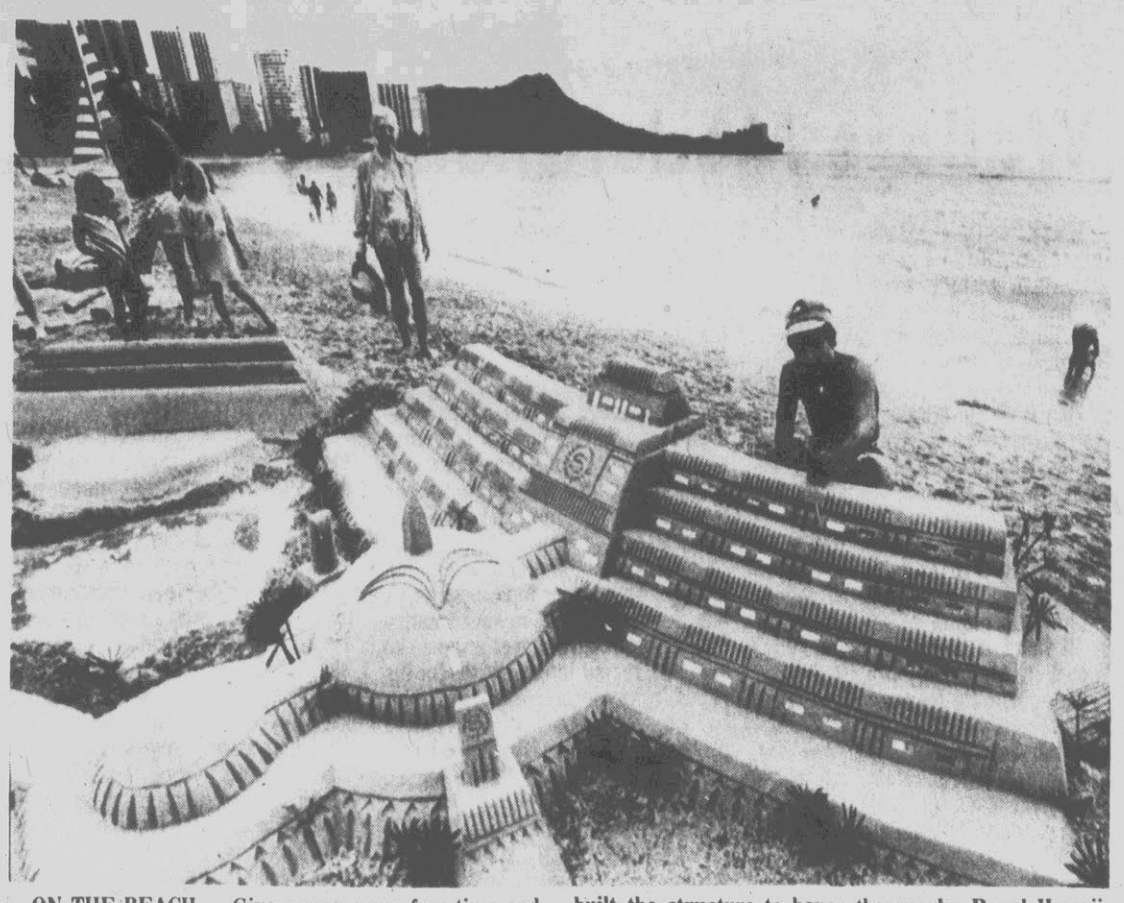

Six of the seven GOP incumbent senators who were defeated had low ADA ratings: Jeremiah Denton of Alabama, 10 percent; Paula Hawkins of Florida, 5 percent; Mack Mattingly of Georgia, zero; James Broyhill of North Carolina, zero; James Abdnor of South Dakota, 5 percent; Slade Gorton of Washington, 35 percent; Mark Andrews of North Dakota, 65 percent.

Conversely, some of the newly elected senators did well on the ADA scale, including three House members who moved up to the Senate: Tim Wirth, D-Colo., 75 percent; Tom Daschle, D-S.D., 80 percent; and Barbara Mikulski, D-Md., 90 percent.

The perfect ADA scores in the Senate were Paul Sarbanes of Maryland, Quentin Burdick of North Dakota and Howard Metzenbaum of Ohio.

In the House, they were Ron Dellums, Don Edwards, Mervyn Dymally, all of California; William Lehman of Florida; Lane Evans of Illinois; Barney Frank of Massachusetts; Peter Rodino of New Jersey; Charles Rangel of New York; Louis Stokes of Ohio; Harold Ford of Tennessee; Mickey Leland of Texas; and Robert Kastenmeier of Wisconsin.

Ms. Lewis noted the change in Senate control put Democrats with high ADA ratings in the top three leadership positions: Senate Majority Leader Robert C. Byrd of West Virginia, 75 percent; Alan Cranston of California, 95; and Daniel Inouye of Hawaii, 90, for an average of 86.6 percent. That compares with an average of 20 percent for the GOP leadership in 1986: Robert Dole of Kansas, zero; Alan Simpson of Wyoming, 10; and John Chafee of Rhode Island, 60.

Revolutionary Convicted In Death Of N.J. Trooper

SOMERVILLE, N.J. (AP) — An avowed revolutionary was convicted in the slaying of a state trooper, but the identity of the actual killer was left in doubt as prosecutors failed to prove that a co-defendant was the triggerman.

Both sides claimed partial victory after the jury Sunday declined to conclude that either defendant pumped nine bullets into the highly decorated trooper, and a mistrial was declared for one defendant.

The jury convicted Thomas W. Manning of felony murder, which is homicide during commission of a felony, but acquitted him of the separate charge of murder. The two felonies he was found guilty of were robbery and escape.

Superior Court Judge Michael Imbriani declared a mistrial for Manning's compatriot, Richard C. Williams, after the jury, which deliberated for 45 hours over five days, said it was deadlocked in regard to him.

Attorneys on both sides said the verdict appeared to mean that the jury agreed Manning was at the scene, took back a gun the trooper had confiscated and fled, but was not the triggerman.

Imbriani had instructed the jurors that if they determined either defendant had fired the fatal shots, they could convict him of murder.

One juror, who spoke on the condition of anonymity, said seven members of the panel "did not believe that there was proof enough that Williams was in the car. ... We searched out every piece of evidence we could get our hands on."

As the verdict was read, Manning, who with Williams already faces a lengthy prison term for bombing convictions, shouted "Venceremos!" — Spanish for "We will conquer."

Deputy Attorney General Anthony Simonetti said he will recommend that Williams be retried.

Defense attorney William Kunstler said he would appeal Manning's conviction.

Philip Lamonaco, who was named Trooper of the Year in 1979, was shot nine times Dec. 21, 1981, and left to die face down in a snowbank after stopping a car for a traffic violation on an isolated stretch of Interstate 80 in northwestern New Jersey.

The state alleged that Williams shot Lamonaco and that Manning was the driver of the car.

Defense attorneys maintained, however, that Williams, who did not testify, was not present when Lamonaco was gunned down. Manning admitted shooting the officer but said it was in self-defense.

Lamonaco's widow, Donna, stood shaking next to state police Superintendent Col. Clinton Pagano after the jury returned.

"I am completely confident that both men are guilty," she said. "I know Richard Williams was in the car and shot my husband. My husband was and is a hero unlike these self-important, so-called revolutionaries."

Pagano characterized the defense case as "an insult to us and to the intelligence of the people of this state."

He called the defendants communists, socialists and terrorists and said he favored a retrial for Williams. "Terrorism is today's form of warfare, but terrorism can't exist when you have a stable government and a police force willing to pursue it, and that means pursue it through to this trial," he said.

Lamonaco's slaying triggered the largest manhunt in New Jersey history since the 1932 kidnapping of aviator Charles Lindbergh's infant son. Manning, 40, was on the lam for nearly 3½ years; Williams, 39, for almost three.

The men call themselves "anti-imperialist freedom fighters" and soldiers in the armed struggle to establish a socialist state. They and Manning's wife, Carol, are alleged members of the United Freedom Front and the Sam Melville-Jonathan Jackson Unit, which have claimed responsibility for bombing East Coast offices and military installations and are accused of bank robberies.

Manning and Williams await trial in Boston on charges of sedition and trying to overthrow the federal government.

Williams called Sunday's verdict a victory for the "armed clandestine movement."

Manning, who faces up to life in prison plus 30 years when sentenced, said in a statement:

"This is a victory in that we put forward to a large segment of the people a position of revolutionary resistance and ... that revolutionaries are not extraordinary but only those who see the truth and act on it.

Storms Spreading Snow And Ice Across Country

By PETE BROWN
Associated Press Writer

A stubborn winter storm blamed for 27 deaths socked the Plains with more snow and ice today after stranding hundreds of travelers, stopping the mail in Texas, glazing roads in the Northeast and swelling streams in the South.

Will Rogers World Airport in Oklahoma City remained closed this morning because of snow and ice. Some schools were closed in New Mexico, where four counties were declared disaster areas because of snow.

Snow fell from Kansas and Oklahoma into New England. Freezing rain fell in Arkansas, Missouri, Illinois, Pennsylvania and Maine.

Flood warnings were up in Alabama and Louisiana and advisories were posted from Georgia and Tennessee into New Jersey and New York.

As one end of the slow-moving storm knocked out power Sunday to thousands in Oklahoma and brought travel to a near standstill in the Southwest, the other end dumped snow, sleet and freezing rain in Pennsylvania and New York.

Two 17-car chain-reaction collisions on Interstate 87 north of Albany, N.Y., injured 23 people, three seriously, police said.

"By the time we got to this bridge, there was a wall of cars all the way across, and we had no place to go," said motorist Jim DeVoe. "So we hit a couple of cars, and we were hit by two more, from behind and the side."

Streets in Oklahoma City, shrouded by the state's worst snowstorm in at least four decades, were dotted with cars abandoned by motorists who couldn't get through drifts of at least 3 feet. By nightfall, Oklahoma City had 9 inches on the ground, the heaviest snowfall since 1944. Gage had 13 inches.

Nearly 200 landings and takeoffs at Will Rogers had been canceled by late Sunday. Runway crews had been working since Friday to clear a sheet of ice when the snow hit. "It was just so awesome that they couldn't stay up with it," said airport spokesman Tom Morton.

An estimated 11,000 people were without electricity Sunday in the Tulsa area. Utility crews on loan from three states worked today to repair lines.

Kansas had received up to 14 inches of snow by Sunday. Illinois got up to 6 inches.

The 15-mile stretch of Interstate 95 inside Philadelphia closed for nearly 3½ hours Sunday because of ice, and 20 miles of the New York State Thruway closed for about two hours to allow police to clear away cars.

Ice and snow in West Texas glazed highways, halted mail delivery in Odessa and Midland and stranded scores of motorists and bus riders who had to take refuge in churches and motels.

At one point Sunday night, traffic was backed up 20 miles on Interstate 20 near Abilene, Texas, when truckers refused to navigate an icy hill, said Department of Public Safety spokesman Wendell Rheem.

"It took us seven hours to come the last nine miles on Interstate 20," said Mike Golembieski of Phoenix, Ariz., who was stopped at an Abilene motel.

The storm was blamed for 10 deaths since Thursday in Texas; five in New Mexico; two each in Arizona, Missouri, Oklahoma and Kansas; and one each in Pennsylvania, New York, California and Colorado.

In Alabama, where storms unloaded more than 7 inches of rain, authorities in Sumter County evacuated about 20 people from their homes in low-lying areas near the rain-swelled Sucarnoochee River on Sunday because of rising water.

Hot Dog 'Bomber'

CLEVELAND HEIGHTS, Ohio (AP) — A 37-year-old man was charged with aggravated robbery after he allegedly held up a savings and loan using a package of hot dogs.

Murshin A. Rahman, 37, of University Heights, was held without bond pending an appearance Tuesday in Municipal Court.

According to police, a man took a cab to a branch of Broadview Savings and Loan on Saturday and told the driver to wait while he went inside.

The man told a teller that the brown leather attache case he was holding contained a bomb, authorities said. The teller gave him an estimated $2,400, police said.

The man got back into the cab, and police pulled it over minutes later. But when members of the bomb squad went to dismantle the bomb,, they found hot dogs wrapped in foil, with wires leading to a wad of putty, said Detective Paul Bell.

Lost Link

Clearly it is too late to save from being closed the Norfolk Southern railroad bridge across the Albemarle Sound. It is, in fact, already closed after railroad officials said it needed major repairs to make it safe.

They had earlier said that the bridge needed extensive repairs at a cost of $19 million. Since it is not economically feasible to pay that much for replacing the five mile bridge the decision was made to close it down. Now that has happened.

The bridge closing has caused concern in northeastern North Carolina where it was used for transporting grain, fertilizer, pulp wood, chemicals and lumber to market.

Pitt County officials say its use has diminished for our area. Most Norfolk Southern trains coming through the county are headed for Texasgulf phosphate mining operations and return.

We should not forget, however that this was once the main line of the old Norfolk and Southern from Norfolk to Charlotte. It was, and still is, the shortest rail route through eastern North Carolina to the Tidewater metropolitan area and the major ports there.

Eastern North Carolina is losing forever its direct rail link to Norfolk. True the present effect on Pitt County will be minimal. In the future, who knows? The loss could be a serious deterrent to the location of an industry for which such rail availability might be essential.

Enough Warning

The battered cigarette industry obtained a U.S. Supreme Court ruling which makes it more difficult to sue cigarette manufacturers over the health effects of smoking.

The court left intact a decision which shields the manufacturers from legal liability for allegedly failing to provide adequate warning concerning smoking dangers.

The case was brought on behalf of a woman who charged lack of adequate warning on cigarette health hazards and because of the alleged undermining of the effectiveness of health warnings later required by federal law.

The 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ruled that federal law "pre-empts those state law damage actions relating to smoking and health that challenge either the adequacy of the warning on cigarette packages or the propriety of a party's actions with respect to the advertising and promotion of cigarettes."

The Supreme Court ruling is seen as a significant victory for the cigarette industry, although it is expected that actions will continue against cigarette manufacturers.

It would appear that the health warnings currently required on cigarette packages and in advertising are clear enough. Those who purchase cigarettes can hardly avoid those warnings. From that point on it is the individual's choice as whether or not to smoke. If that is the effect of the Supreme Court ruling, it seems reasonable.

Tax Cheats

It has to be discouraging for conscientious taxpayers who sweat over their annual 1040 forms to read the Internal Revenue Service estimates that about 3 million people who are required to file returns do not file each year.

The agency is working to change that picture and results are already being felt.

A pilot test last year, which ferreted out 55,000 delinquent taxpayers, is expected to bring in more than $2 billion in taxes (plus penalties and interest) this year.

An assistant commissioner of the IRS says the tax cheats are made up of those who decided to drop out of the system and for the most part are driven by greed, not by ideology.

Computerization of the tax-filing system has made tracking down the delinquents much easier just as it has made it possible for Uncle Sam to collect money owed the government by "collecting" debts from tax refunds that may be due.

Overall, the American taxpayer is widely regarded as the most conscientious in the world. Still, we do have our bad apples and finding them is an obligation owed those taxpayers who take their role seriously.

Today's Thought

Iran and Iraq, Lebanon, Afghanistan, Nicaragua ... these are countries where the killing goes on endlessly. We should not forget that the people involved bleed and suffer equally as they have in all previous wars.

Wallace Moderation Shows King's Impact

WASHINGTON (AP) — It is an ironic footnote to a painful period in American history that George C. Wallace Jr. is leaving public life on the same day tht the nation commemorates the birth of Martin Luther King Jr.

One final time their paths cross, these two men who symbolized black aspirations and white intransigence during the struggle to integrate American society.

It was on Aug. 28, 1963, that King, addressing a mass rally in front of the Lincoln Memorial, proclaimed, "I have a dream ..'

"I have a dream that one day, down in Alabama, with its vicious racists, with its governor having his lips dripping with the words of interposition and nullification, one day right there in Alabama, little black boys and black girls will be able to join hands with little white boys and white girls as sisters and brothers."

Words spoken by Wallace also are remembered decades later.

"Segregation now! Segregation tomorrow! Segregation forever!" he proclaimed when he took office as governor of Alabama in January 1963.

Those words and the memory of the governor standing defiantly in the doorway of the administration building of the University of Alabama in a futile effort to block integration are indelible parts of the Wallace image.

One measure of the impact of King's movement is the fact that Wallace now claims the support of many blacks in Alabama and seeks to moderate the image he earned in the 1960s.

"I think the thing of 'segregation forever' should not have been said, but I was aiming my vengeance toward the federal government," he said in a recent interview. As for his stand in the schoolhouse door, that, he said, was not a racial matter but a protest against the federal government and "omnipotent guideline writers."

Elements of King's dream have become reality in Alabama and elsewhere in the South.

And how better to demonstrate that than by knowing that Wallace courted black votes in his last campaign for governor and Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., was a sponsor of the legislation creating a federal holiday honoring King.

Or by the fact that Mike Espy, a black lawyer, took office this month as a congressman from Mississippi.

Or by the fact that blacks are a major political force in the South, their votes earned in the turbulent 1960s when King and Wallace came to prominence.

The Baptist minister and the governor inspired fervent loyalty. Masses of Americans, black and white, marched with King and joined his demand for an end to segregation.

Millions also marched with Wallace when he took his protest outside the South and ran for president. He stunned Democrats with strong showings in primaries in Wisconsin, Michigan, Maryland and Indiana. In 1972, he received 3.75 million votes in the Democratic primaries, nearly as many as Sen. George McGovern of South Dakota, who ended up as the party's presidential nominee.

It was a tragic parallel that King and Wallace also inspired fear and hatred and both were victims of gunmen.

King was assassinated in Memphis, Tenn., in 1968, and Wallace was crippled by a gunman in Maryland while campaigning for president in 1972.

Wallace would never walk again. But he would campaign, running again for president in 1976, and serving two more terms as governor.

By the time of his death, King had won the Nobel Peace Prize and was revered as a voice for peace and racial justice. A statue of the civil rights leaders stands in the U.S. Capitol.

President Reagan used the occasion of King's actual birthday, Jan. 15, to strive for a land "free of bigotry, intolerance and discrimination."

As he leaves office, Wallace is confined to a wheelchair, his hearing is failing, the bite is gone from his voice.

He sees hope in how history treated other Southern politicians — Lyndon B. Johnson and Justice Hugo Black — who supported segregation early in their careers.

"They've been rehabilitated," he said. "You don't refer to them as building their careers on racial hatred, but they all stood for it."

Decision Reinforces Laws Of Nature

It is difficult for me to believe now, but a scant three years ago I was of the firm opinion that working women who became pregnant had something to prove. I thought they — I mean we — had some kind of political obligation to ignore our obvious physical burdens and, once having given birth, to return to our jobs just as soon as we could hobble to our desks.

'Have I regressed? Have I surrendered to the forces of chauvinism? Has the Supreme Court effectively sanctioned sex discrimination in the work place? The National Organization for Women and some other women's rights groups fear so.'

I thought we needed to demonstrate that childbearing was as inconsequential as, say, a bout of flu. I thought we needed to show that we could attend to the minor matter of perpetuating the human race without causing our employers or our careers any major disruption.

Oh, but how time — and experience — change us.

And how I rejoiced last week when the U.S. Supreme Court upheld the right of Lillian Garland to a four-month, job-protected pregnancy leave from the California Federal Savings and Loan Association. How I delighted in the court's finding that states may require employers to make special accommodations for pregnant workers. How I applauded the implied but resounding declaration that men and women are different.

Have I regressed? Have I surrendered to the forces of chauvinism? Has the Supreme Court effectively sanctioned sex discrimination in the work place?

The National Organization for Women and some other women's rights groups fear so. In the Garland case, NOW agreed with Cal Fed that a California law requiring employers to provide up to four months of unpaid disability leave to pregnant employees is discriminatory because it doesn't require the same benefits for men and non-pregnant women.

The opponents of the California law, including the Reagan administration, say it violates a 1978 federal law requiring employers to treat pregnancy the same way as any other temporary medical disability. Some women's rights groups fear that the California law could open the door to other forms of unequal treatment of women in the work force.

But other women's advocates disagree. "This is not preferential treatment because only women, obviously, get pregnant," says Fredrica Gray, director of Connecticut's Permanent Commission on the Status of Women, which filed an amicus brief in support of Garland. "This is a very, very important victory for working women," especially in Connecticut and in the handful of other states whose laws on pregnancy leave are similar to California's, Gray said.

The whole issue of equal vs. preferential treatment goes well beyond the Garland case and, in fact, has sparked a small-scale civil war within the women's movement. At the crux of the conflict is the prickly question of whether we, as a society, ought to be gender-blind, or whether we ought to recognize gender differences and seek to accommodate them.

Having once held the former view and having since embraced the latter, my own conclusion is that equality between the sexes doesn't mean sameness. Nor does different treatment of men and women necessarily mean "preferential" treatment.

Nowhere is this more clear than in the area of pregnancy and childbearing. Enduring on-the-job gestation and returning to work two months after my son was born led me to the startling discovery that men and women are indeed different, and that the more women downplay the demands of childbearing, the more we increase the disproportionate burden biology has given us.

Attempting to deny the law of nature is not only futile, it is self-defeating.

Accommodating nature is not discrimination, it is recognizing reality.

If reality were different, if men could bear children, I would be perfectly happy for them to be given the same benefits as women who bear children. On the issue of child-rearing leaves, the reality is that men and women are equally capable of nurturing newborn or sick children and, therefore, should be accorded equal benefits.

It all seems quite simple to me now. It is amazing what a difference three years — and personal experience — can make. Working women who get pregnant and have children do have something to prove. Lillian Garland proved it to the Supreme Court.

Strength For Today

We go out on a clear, starry night and look up at the heavens. What we see is exactly what our primitive forebears saw 15,000 years ago. But something we cannot see makes it quite different. The air waves are alive with broadcast messages from radio, television and satellite stations.

This example of our limitations shows how thoroughly inadequate our five senses are to comprehend the whole universe. But modern science has revealed so many wonders that man need not be overwhelmed with doubt as he reads in the Bible about great spiritual powers.

Science should strengthen rather than destroy religious faith. If what we apprehend with our limited senses is so marvelous, how great may be the things which a good God has laid up for those who trust him!

South African Rebels Change Approach

Analysis

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — After 2½ years of blood and fury, the insurrection in South Africa's black townships is beginning to subside, while the end of white-minority rule is not yet in sight.

As this becomes apparent to the outlawed African National Congress, the leading antiapartheid group in exile, there are signs that it is adjusting its strategy for a longer haul, with greater emphasis on reaching out to South Africa's whites and the nations of the West.

Pretoria's massive crackdown under the state of emergency declared last June is at last restoring a sullen quiet to the rebellious townships. Thousands of community leaders are in detention. Some have left the country. Many are in hiding.

A mood of battle-weariness has settled over those who are left. Incidents still occur, but despite tight restrictions on news coverage it is clear that the number has declined sharply over the past month.

Tom Lodge, a political scientist at Johannesburg's Witwatersrand University who is acknowledged as South Africa's leading specialist on black politics, said recently he thinks the conflict is entering a lull that could last a year or more until the next crisis sends it to new heights.

Black leaders here and in Lusaka, Zambia, where the ANC is headquartered, are reassessing the situation, Lodge said. There is a less-euphoric mood, and it is recognized that a popular insurrection leading to a seizure of power is unlikely.

Lodge said he believes the ANC is broadening its strategy in light of this reassessment, placing more emphasis on political and diplomatic initiatives.

"They may continue to use the rhetoric of the seizure of power and the military struggle will still play a role, but I think they have recognized that in the end the ANC's victory is going to come as a result of shifts of mood which will affect people in decision-making positions within South Africa," he said.

Recent statements by ANC leaders reinforce this view. They have openly acknowledged that there has been a setback, that it is more difficult now to organize resistance in the townships, that their guerrilla arm, Umkhonto we Sizwe (Spear of the Nation), did not manage to escalate the war as much as they had hoped last year, and that they are now making a strong pitch to South African whites and to the West.

Pretoria is responding to the ANC's pitch to whites with apparent alarm. There is little likelihood that many whites will become committed supporters of the ANC, but the government of President Pieter W. Botha seems worried that significant numbers, particularly of Afrikaner intellectuals, may begin to recognize it as a force to be reckoned with and start pressing the government to legalize and begin negotiating with it. This, Botha does not want to do.

The government is going to extraordinary lengths to prevent the ANC from having direct access to local whites with its message of conciliation, while it launches a propaganda campaign of unprecedented intensity to portray the organization as a bunch of duplicitous communist extremists.

Internally, Lodge believes the ANC and activist groups that support it will go in for a "holding operation," trying to prevent the kind of organizational collapse that followed the Sharpeville crisis of 1960, when South African police opened fire on black demonstrators, killing 69 people, and the 1976 uprising in Soweto, the black township outside Johannesburg, in which several hundred were killed.

"Black politics is going to become a business of survival and consolidation," said Lodge. He said he expects the ANC to try to extend its underground structures and perhaps try to launch some more spectacular guerrilla attacks to boost black morale and make a psychological impact on the whites.

"My feeling is that if there is going to be any action this year it will be on the shop floors and through the union movement rather than the political bodies," he added. Thabo Mbeki, the ANC's director of information, tended to confirm this prognosis in a recent interview in Lusaka. "There has been a definite setback, but we think it is temporary," Mbeki said. "The basis is there for us to recover from it quickly."

Mbeki said he felt the organizational structures established during the period of insurrection reached deeply into the communities and would survive the government crackdown. But there would have to be adjustments to a new style of operating.

"Lots of people are underground, but now they will have to understand that they are not just lying low for a few months but that they are underground permanently and they will have to learn how to work from there," Mbeki added.

At the same time, there are indications of growing Afrikaner interest in the black nationalist organization. The chairman of the white, politically influential Broederbond secret society, Prof. Pieter de Lange, met last June with Mbeki, a rising star in the ANC. They had lunch in New York when both were attending a conference there.

But at least eight groups of Afrikaners who wanted to visit the ANC in Lusaka have come under pressure to cancel their trips in recent months. The latest press restrictions prohibit any reporting that reflects favorably on the ANC or even explains its policies.

Meanwhile, scarcely a day passes without a ministerial speech, a major program on the state-controlled radio and television services or an article in the pro-government Afrikaans press denigrating the organization.

"In the past, the threat to the country was always described in fairly general terms," said Lodge. "Now the ANC is specifically named day after day. Clearly they (the government) are worried and feel they have to confront it."

A State Department report recently said the ANC has been influenced significantly by communism and "is deeply beholden" to the South African Communist Party and the Soviet Union for arms and training.

The report said roughly half of the ANC's 30-member governing committee are "known or suspected SACP members" but the 11-page study did not deal with whether the ANC is motivated primarily by communist ideology or black African nationalism.

Mbeki stressed the importance the ANC leadership places on its appeal to whites.

Bookstore Killings May Have Been Execution Job

SHELBY, N.C. (AP) — Authorities say they are investigating the background of an adult bookstore in Shelby where three men were killed and two others wounded by armed men wearing ski masks.

"The business history of that particular business and other businesses in North Carolina have some documentary evidence to suggest they are financed by people involved in shady businesses," Cleveland County Chief Deputy Ron McKinney said Sunday.

Three bodies were found early Sunday morning in the Shelby III Bookstore, which had been set on fire after the shootings. The two men who survived apparently crawled from the building to their cars. The shootings occurred between 11:30 p.m. and midnight Saturday.

The Greensboro News & Record reported that unnamed law enforcement sources said Shelby III Bookstore was one of 13 adult bookstores linked to a company called Direct Retail Associates by documents found in a 1984 raid of several bookstores by Charlotte police officers.

The sources said Direct Retail is linked to Reuben Sturman, who federal and state authorities believe has dealings with organized crime, the newspaper reported. Sturman has denied any links with organized crime.

"My information is all third hand. It's from the police, but third hand and it is that it was an organized hit," Charlotte city attorney Robert Thomas told the Greensboro News & Record.

"That doesn't mean it was the Mafia. We don't know who organized the hit," Thomas said. "But it does not appear that robbery was the motive, there does not appear to be any motive for the shooting other than to go in and kill somebody. And there is speculation about whether they got the person they were looking for."

"To me it's plain out-and-out execution," said Edward Weston, the father of victim Paul Weston. "I feel it's plain cold-blooded execution."

Weston, 26, of Forest City was one of the three men killed. The other victims were identified by Sheriff Buddy McKinney as Travis Don Melton, 19, of Ellenboro, an employee, and Kenneth Ray Godfrey, 29, of Forest City.

The names, condition and location of the two men injured in the shooting were withheld for security reasons, McKinney said. He said one survivor lives in Cleveland County, the other in South Carolina.

"It has been determined that three, possibly four, men entered the bookstore at closing time," Sheriff McKinney said in a prepared statement at a news conference Sunday. "These men were all dressed alike and were wearing brownish-gold ski masks and large brown corduroy coats. They were armed with various types of weapons. Upon entry, those in the store were ordered to lay face down on the floor, where they were each shot in the head."

The information was based on statements from one of the survivors, he said.

No money was found in the cash register, which was empty, Sheriff McKinney said.

The Lattimore No. 7 Volunteer Fire Department received a call at 12:03 a.m. Sunday saying the bookstore was on fire, the sheriff said. Sheriff McKinney said containers of gasoline were used to start fires in the rear of the building where there were about a dozen booths for movie viewing. Fire damage was concentrated there.

When firefighters arrived on the scene, they found two people shot in the head in two cars outside of the bookstore.

After entering the burning one-story concrete structure, firefighters found three more bodies lying face down with wounds to the head, Sheriff McKinney said. One body was found behind the counter, one in the aisle and one in the building doorway, he said.

"There was a good bit of blood," said one firefighter who asked not to be identified. "I have never seen murder at a fire, but that's what this was. It was a mess in there."

Sheriff McKinney said people in the area didn't hear any shots.

Aurora Residents' Attitudes Changing Toward Texasgulf

AURORA, N.C. (AP) — As both the largest employer and taxpayer in Aurora, Texasgulf Chemicals Co. has long been considered a generous corporate citizen, but residents say that perception is now grudgingly changing.

Last month, state officials imposed a $5.7 million fine on the phosphate company for polluting the air, the largest penalty of its kind in North Carolina.

Trust in Texasgulf, expressed by both state inspectors and local residents, has diminished. And although all of the state charges refer only to air pollution, critics now question the company's commitment to protecting the Pamlico River.

"I don't want this to be a barren wasteland," Etles Henries Sr., a retired fisherman who lives near the river, said in an interview.

"People are having a little bit of an attitude change," said Etles Henries Jr., president of Carolina Seafood, a commerical fishing firm not far from the phosphate plant. "It's a very small change, very subtle. It's a touchy suituation here in Aurora. You've got everybody afraid to say anything."

That fear, is based, residents say, on economics.

Since 1966, when Texasgulf began mining phosphate in Aurora for use as a farm fertilizer, the company has held a unique postion in Beaufort County.

Texasgulf pays $1.5 million in property taxes, or roughly a third of the total in the county. It contributes about $40 million a year into the local economy, employing about 1,230 people at its plant.

"We're a rural area," said Merril Bynum, office manager of the Wachovia Bank and Trust Co. in Aurora, a town of about 700 people. "The majority of my customers are employed at Texasgulf. If they were not here, a lot of people would move."

Texasgulf has retained the Greensboro law firm of Brooks, Pierce McLendon, Humphrey & Leonard to respond to the fine. A lawyer with the firm, George House, filed a legal brief Friday that denied that any of the pollution violations were willful. The company acknowledged only two violations — that fluoride emissions exceeded limits at one plant structure, and that high sulfur dioxide readings were not on a company monitoring device last Jan. 19 and July 17.

Some area residents say problems at Texasgulf worsened when a firm controlled by the French government bought the company five years ago. The buyer was Societe Nationale Elf Acquitaine, a billion-dollar oil company that owns scores of chemical, asphalt, petroleum and soda ash plants throughout this county and overseas.

"You've got a company run by the French," complained Etles, the wholesale fisherman. "Are they going to run it as a clean, environmentally safe company, or are they going to have a tendency to worry about profits?"

Fishermen complain that the phosphate byproducts that end up in the river are deadly to the area's multimillion dollar seafood industry.

"You can't eat the crabs that come from over there," said fisherman Willie Phillips, pointing to the plant. "They have a high sulfur content. The smell is terrible. At times, it burns as it comes across the river."

State inspectors also say they don't trust the plant anymore.

"They do have a history of noncompliance and a history of spills and violations of various sorts," said R. Paul Wilms, director of the state Division of Environmental Management. "We've seen a pattern of violations."

Asked if he trusts Texasgulf and its efforts to protect the environment, Wilms said: "We don't, not any more than we trust anyone else."

"All my neighbors are Texasgulf employees," Phillips said. "It's one of the biggest tightropes we walk across. It's very frustrating as individuals to try to react to a giant like that. No one wants to fight Texasgulf. It's a no-win situation."

"My Mother Gave Me The Best Wedding A Parent Could Give Her Child. And Perdue Was Responsible For That."

Suzie Holley and daughter Vivian Drake, Colerain, NC

Vivian: "I just got married last December. Without these chicken houses I wouldn't have had the kind of wedding I did.

"Perdue is a great business for my mother. It gives her more time to work at home, and more spending money for things like my wedding."

Suzie: "Before I had these two chicken houses there would have been no way possible for me to give her the kind of wedding she had.

"I worked at the Perdue plant in Lewiston for nine years before I started growing for Perdue. I started the day the plant opened and liked the job there. But now I'm my own boss. I can attend to business on my own schedule.

"I'm making more money now than I ever made before, and I'm able to have a lot of things now I wouldn't have been able to do before—like the wedding.

"I started out with one Perdue broiler house and then put up a second one a few months later. Two houses aren't really two times the work. I've gotten where I can work more efficiently and do two just about as fast as one.

"The hardest part is when the birds first come in. But that part's over in about two weeks. Sometimes my sons come in to hang the fans or help clean up after a flock goes out. Otherwise, it's work a woman can do by herself.

"The money is good, and it's not hard work at all. Growing with Perdue is my best job yet."

Vivian: "And it's a good investment for the future. My brothers and I have all worked in the chicken houses, and we know the business pretty well. So if she should ever want to retire, the business is something she can pass down to her children."

Give yourself a raise—raisin' with Perdue.

Fewer Blacks Becoming Involved In Farming

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — The days of the black farmer may be numbered, agricultural officials say, in part because of the same problems that are affecting all farmers — scarcity of credit and a dwindling number of young people willing to take over family farms.

"Even if we don't stop the trend of loss of land, we want to at least slow it down," said Samuel J. Cornelius, who was appointed in 1984 to oversee civil rights issues in the U.S. Department of Agriculture. "But when the black farmer dies or sells the farm, no one comes to replace him."

Other officials of the agriculture department say the decline of black farmers is not due to discrimination within the agency.

They attribute blacks leaving the land to a historical distaste for farming.

Vance L. Clark, the administrator of Farmers Home Administration, said that the agency has made an extra effort this year to erase any perception of discrimination. The agency has made strides in that area, he added, but it has done a poor job of public relations.

"Young blacks just don't have the interest in farming that they used to," he said. "The numbers we're hearing now are not startling. But everything we do clicks into a commitment to do anything extra for the black farming community."

The statistics show a steady downward spiral of blacks involved in agriculture.

In 1920, one of every seven farmers was black. Today, that ratio is one in 67. In 1910, blacks owned 15.6 million acres; in 1982, 33,000 blacks were farming 3.1 million acres, mostly in the Deep South.

The most recent North Carolina statistics show that, although they owned 1.2 million acres in 1950, black farmers now own less than 400,000 acres.

Until 1982, when the U.S. Civil Rights Commission released its benchmark report, "The Decline of Black Farming in America," the loss of land by black farmers went almost unnoticed.

In its report, the commission urged the FmHA to increase black representation within its management, field operations and loan policies. The basis for those recommendations, the report said, was the FmHA's involvement in the "very kind of racial discrimination that it should be seeking to correct."

Five years after the commission issued its report, there is no sign that the trend has changed.

George Ammons is a black farmer who farms 175 acres of cleared land and raises 100,000 turkeys a year in the piney woods about 70 miles east of Fayetteville.

"If I could get the interest rates lower and pay off on my turkey houses, I could stay in business," Ammons said. "Hell, I could pay off some bills and start thinking about getting ahead, about making a profit."

He says the commission "could have saved money on the report because it hasn't made a difference."

Betty Bailey, the director of the Farm Survival Project in Pittsboro, said: "The Department of Agriculture hasn't done anything to correct discrimination. In fact, it's probably gotten worse."

Clark criticized programs within the department for failing to keep up their end, and singled out the nation's land-grant colleges, which provide agricultural education. He said that these colleges are squandering money given to them by the FmHA to assist blacks.

Bankers Say Farm Foreclosures Take Emotional Toll On Everyone

By KAREN BENNETT
Associated Press Writer

ATLANTA (AP) — The economic troubles that brought farm foreclosures have emotionally drained not only the rural people who lost their land, but the bankers who made the unpopular decision to auction off the property as well.

"When loans fail, especially loans you're involved in making, you do have a certain sense of failure," said David Morgan, president of the Federal Land Bank of Central Georgia.

"A lot of loan officers have blamed themselves too hard. They need to remember that they're in a risky business, and in these times are simply experiencing more of a downside risk than ever before."

Morgan faced the harsh glare of national publicity when one of his customers, Lenard Hill III of Burke County, shot himself 20 minutes before his farm was to be sold at auction in February 1986.

Hill apparently believed a life insurance policy would provide funds to save his three-generations-old farm. The policy did not but Atlanta businessman Frank Argenbright and New York developer Donald Trump helped his widow, Annabell Hill, raise the needed $187,000 months later.

Morgan said he received hate letters from as far away as Iowa and Minnesota after the incident. He said he's considering leaving his job of 13 years, partly because of the emotional toll of foreclosures.

Hill's death "brings home that decisions you make affect people in very strong and emotional ways. It doesn't mean you made the wrong decisions, but it's still decisions about peoples' lives," Morgan said. "We're looking across the desk at real people, with real hearts and real feelings."

The financial crisis facing many farmers is causing deep rifts in some small towns, said the Rev. Bill Dupree of Thomasville, who supervises United Methodist Church activities in 13 southwest Georgia counties.

"There are (farmers) in small towns who ... feel their close friends have let them down and misled them," he said. "Some feel their friends encouraged them to make considerable loans that they discovered a couple years later they can't pay."

But Dupree said he sympathized with the lenders.

"I'm certain that people lay awake at night, wrestling with (foreclosure) decisions. To put a family off a farm that their grandfather owned is very difficult," he said.

The federal Farmers Home Administration said Georgia led the nation in the number of farmers in danger of foreclosure in the fiscal year that ended Sept. 30.

During that period, 862 farmers, or 10.5 percent of the FmHA borrowers in the state, either had received letters demanding repayment or had sold some assets to meet the payments.

The FmHA is one of the state's largest agricultural lenders, said Jimmy Payne, a farm programs specialist with the federal agency.

In Georgia, the FmHA foreclosed on five farms in 1986, said the agency's state farm programs director, Raymond Bryant.

Morgan said many farmers' woes have not come from bankers, but from a combination of spiraling interest rates, rising operating costs and sliding commodities prices.

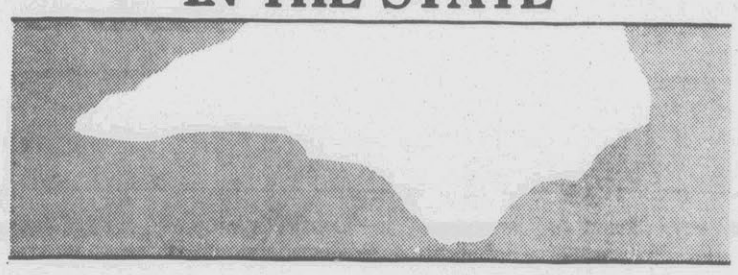

"We're all suffering from changed circumstances that make past decisions not work out," Morgan said, adding that farmers whose land is repossessed seldom confront him about the decision.

"Most of the complaints have been 'you should never have loaned me this much money,'" he said. "In hindsight, that proves to be true. But we never made a loan that someone didn't ask for."

Farmer Lee Webster of Burke County, who was working with Hill when he committed suicide and who has since lost his own farm at auction, thinks lenders may shoulder more of the blame.

Webster said an auction has a ripple effect that lowers the value of land in the community and possibly leads to more foreclosures.

IN THE STATE

Charged

EMERALD ISLE, N.C. (AP) — A Swansboro man has been charged with first-degree murder in the shooting death of a Virginia man, Emerald Isle police said.

Authorities said William R. Freuler, 42, was charged in the death of Charlie Ray Pulley, 46, of Hampton, Va., said Mark Wilson, Emerald Isle chief of police.

Wilson said the slaying appeared to be spurred by a domestic dispute. Wilson said Pulley had been shot with a .44-caliber pisto'.

Dix Passes

RALEIGH (AP) — Mental hospitals should consult family members before allowing patients with histories of violent behavior to leave hospital grounds on unsupervised passes, an advocate for the mentally ills says.

Laurie Flynn, executive director for the National Alliance for the Mentally Ill, said Saturday that Dorothea Dix Hosptial officials should supplement clinical judgment with advice from family members "who are bound to know more about a mentally-ill loved one."

Ms. Flynn, of Arlington, Va., was in Raleigh to attend a regional conference of the alliance.

Her comments come in the wake of incidents in which patients from Dorothea Dix who are considered dangerous have escaped or failed to return from permitted leaves. The incidents have led to debates about whether the pass system needs to be tightened.

Pro-Buchanan

RALEIGH (AP) — The two chief strategists of Sen. Jesse Helms' political organization, the National Congressional Club, were in Washington recently trying to persuade White House communications director Pat Buchanan to run for president next year.

Tom Ellis and Carter Wrenn, the chairman and executive director of the Raleigh-based club, attended a meeting at Buchanan's home in McLean, Va.

"I feel that is is fairly likely he will run," Wrenn said. "A lot of people there encouraged him to run."

Buchanan has said he will make a decision by Feb. 1.

McMillan Trip

CHARLOTTE (AP) — U.S. Rep. Alex McMillan, R-N.C., returned from a fact-finding trip to Nicaragua convinced that President Daniel Ortega's Sandinista government is bent on destroying freedom.

Since last Saturday, McMillan, and Republican Reps. Frank Wolf of Virginia, Daniel Coats of Indiana and Guy Mollinari of New York have visited the Central American countries of Nicaragua, El Salvador, Honduras and Costa Rica.

"All of us have a deep concern about the issues of Central America that relate to U.S. positions of policy," McMillan said. "We were most concerned about the issue of U.S. policy towards Nicaragua. It has an effect upon the whole region and, of course, U.S. security."

McMillan said he was concerned about Ortega's increasingly Marxist government in Nicaragua and how to continue aid to the contra forces fighting that government.

Successor

STATESVILLE, N.C. (AP) — GOP officials say there's no favorite among the five people jockeying to succeed Sen. Bill Redman, but they say the district could lost some influence no matter who is selected.

The district has lost Redman, R-Iredell, who was elected to a fifth term Nov. 4 and nominated by Gov. Jim Martin to the N.C. Utilities Commission Jan. 5, and former five-term Sen. Cass Ballenger, now 10th District U.S. representative. They were the last two Senate minority leaders.

Victims' Assistance Program Available

CHARLOTTE (AP) — For more than a year, Mecklenburg Chief District Judge James Lanning has lobbied for a service to help victims of misdemeanor crimes.

The result — the misdemeanor unit of Mecklenburg County's Victim Assistance program — opened in the county courthouse this month.

"They had needs particularly for information about their cases, about how they're processed, for support services," Lanning said. "And nobody was doing this."

Funded with a federal grant of $104,900 and matching money from the city of Charlotte, the program provides counseling, information about support services and volunteers who accompany victims to court.

It has been offering services since September from a temporary office and has served more than 200 clients. This month, it moved into a permanent home, in the courthouse.

Victim Assistance has operated since 1976, but its focus has been on helping felony crime victims, misdemeanor unit coordinator Annette Morrison said.

Victims of domestic violence — offenses such as assault, property damage and threats — will be a priority, she said. The program is coordinating its efforts with the Shelter for Battered Women.

"We can tell the people there is a shelter available and talk to them about different alternatives. We can refer them to various community services," Ms. Morrison said.

The staff consists of Ms. Morrison, three counselors and a secretary. The program also will train volunteers to explain the court system and accompany victims to court.

How does that help victims?

One 35-year-old client, who asked not to be identified, offers her situation as an example.

Two years ago, she took her husband to court for assaulting her. He received a suspended sentence and eventually persuaded her to return to him. She didn't go to Victim Assistance for help.

In October, he assaulted her again by kicking her and later stabbing her. She left him and stayed at the shelter, then rented an apartment.

Appetite Stimulus Seems To Affect Mood Changes

By JAMIE TALAN
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Researchers placed a tiny electrical device in the brain of an obese woman to help curb her appetite. But while it worked to cut calories — by as much as 25 percent — the patient complained of feeling anxious, depressed and tired.

The abrupt and unpleasant mood changes may inevitably make use of this technique impractical. But the findings, reported by researchers at the University of Chicago, suggest that electrical stimulation of certain brain areas, in particular the ventral medial hypothalamus, can control food intake. If they could obtain similar weight loss — without the mood alterations — researchers say this could be a last resort for grossly obese people who fail at normal dieting.

"We honestly don't know what caused the patient to be so depressed," said psychologist John Metz. "It could be that not eating brought about these feelings. On the other hand, the feelings could have affected her appetite." The findings were presented recently at the annual meeting of the Society for Neuroscience.

The patient, a 32-year-old mother of two, underwent surgery in November 1985. The brain electrodes were connected to a battery-powered stimulator implanted under the skin in the patient's chest. She weighed 405 pounds.

When the machine is turned on, small bursts of electricity are sent to the hypothalamus. Stimulation to this area seems to regulate food intake, allowing the person to consume less.

According to Dr. Frederick Brown, the surgeon who developed the procedure, the patient lost 32 pounds in the four months following surgery.

She returned to the hospital during the fifth month to undergo a series of studies to see exactly how much food was eaten while the machine was activated. Researchers also tested metabolic brain activity during such times to better understand the relationship between brain and behavior.

Brain-imaging techniques showed that both low and high levels of electrical stimulation produced dramatic increases in brain metabolism. The hypothalamus was highly charged.

Behavioral changes — mood and food — were noticeable only following levels of high stimulation. During these times, the patient reduced her caloric intake by 25 percent, and also reported feeling anxious, unfriendly, lethargic and slightly depressed.

According to the Chicago researchers, this human study offers the first hint that feelings might also be mediated through this brain site. It has been known for decades that the hypothalamus controls food intake in animals.

The researchers have yet to explain whether the high stimulation produced such unhappiness that the patient didn't feel like eating, or the decreased appetite lead to unhappiness. "We just don't know," Metz said.

On a practical level, the procedure was a failure. The patient does not like the device and has opted not to continue using it. "Theoretically, if it were a pleasant experience," Metz said, "she might use it every day. Now, she is well aware of the sad feelings produced when the device is on." The electrodes will remain in her brain forever.

Metz said the behavioral feelings may be nothing more than normal irritability that stems from dieting. "Most people who go on any kind of diet experience irritable feelings," he said. "This procedure was not that different from other techniques of weight loss."

According to Dr. Robert G. Heath, professor emeritus of psychiatry and neurology at Tulane University School of Medicine, there are other areas of the hypothalamus that have been shown to produce feelings of pleasure. "Maybe they need to go back and tap these areas," Heath said.

Similar procedures by Heath, Brown and others have been used in other parts of the brain for control of chronic pain, schizophrenia and some forms of epilepsy. It is generally done on patients for whom nothing else works. (Distributed by the Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service)

Dinner Clean-Up Was Alone

Dear Abby

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I had my entire family over for Christmas dinner again this year. I've had it here for years because I have the largest house. Everyone brings an appetizer or a side dish, and I cook the turkey.

Well, everything went great until it came time to do the dishes and clean up. Abby, no one moved — except to the couches and chairs. I did dishes for 16 people!

Someone said, "Why don't you sit down for a while?" My response, "I'd love to if only someone would give me a hand in the kitchen." Nobody offered, so I went ahead and did it myself. When I finished, I was exhausted.

This is not the first time they have done this to me. Am I being unfair to expect their help? — DISHPAN HANDS IN MASS.

DEAR DISH: You are not being unfair to expect their help, but you are being foolish to depend on volunteers. DRAFT as many hands as you need, saying, "Many hands make light work," or however that corny (but effective) phrase goes, but whatever you do — don't go it alone next year.

DEAR ABBY: In a recent column you indicated that when a child ends a marriage, the legal relationship between the parent and the child's spouse ends.

I take issue with this and believe the rule to be that these spouses continue to be daughters-in-law or sons-in-law.

For one thing, the relationship is recognized by the Internal Revenue Service. Suppose, for instance, I am providing over one-half of the support for a daughter-in-law. I can claim her as an exemption because a relationship exists. The regulations provide, I believe, that the relationship once existing is not destroyed for income tax purposes by divorce or by the death of a spouse.

Based on this and the lack of any other legal authority, I suggest that the legal relationship continues. "Wondering," the lady who wrote you about this, will no doubt be relieved to get all of her relatives back! — GEORGE E. McINTOSH, ATTORNEY, MOUNT VERNON, WASH.

DEAR MR. McINTOSH: "Wondering" will undoubtedly be about as "relieved" to get all her in-laws back as you (or I) would. I can readily understand that some in-laws do need financial protection under the law, but these days when marriages stand a 50-50 chance of ending in divorce, law or no law, the in-law who is out can properly be referred to as a "former" in-law.

How do you like them apples, Mr. McIntosh? (Forgive me, the juicy tie-in was too appealing.)

DEAR ABBY: Mike and I have been married for 14 years and have two wonderful children, but life has not been easy for me with this man. Along the way he picked up a lot of bad habits such as drinking, smoking four packs a day, gambling and staying out all night.

About a year ago he became a "new" man. He quit drinking, smoking, gambling, and he stays out only one night a week — on Saturdays.

He finally broke down and confessed that he's been seeing another woman, and he owes it all to her! He was honest enough to confess, but how can I tell him not to see her any more when she did more to make a man out of him than I did? — ON THE SPOT

DEAR ON: Once you give your husband permission to "see" another woman, you can say goodbye to your marriage. Regardless of what your husband "owes" her, he shouldn't be paying it off with what belongs exclusively to you.

(For Abby's booklet, "How to Have a Lovely Wedding," send a check or money order for $2.50 and a long, stamped (39 cents), self-addressed envelope to: Dear Abby, Wedding Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054.)

Double Ring Vows Performed Saturday

ORIENTAL — The wedding ceremony of Susan Lee Thompson and David Robert Maier took place Saturday at 4:30 p.m. in the Oriental First Baptist Church. The Rev. James Oliver conducted the double ring ceremony.

Parents of the couple are Mr. and Mrs. Edward D. Thompson of Oriental and Dr. and Mrs. Robert H. Maier of Greenville.

Charlyn DeHart presented a program of organ music.

The bride was given in marriage by her parents. Her honor attendant was her sister, Cheryl Thompson of Fairfax, Va.

The bridegroom's father served as best man.

The bride wore a gown of knit chiffon over taffeta styled with a sweetheart neckline accented with Venise lace. It had short sleeves and the full skirt was accented with Venise lace which extended into a chapel length train. Her walking length veil extended from a cap of Venise lace and was edged in matching lace. She carried a sheaf bouquet of a dozen American beauty roses.

The honor attendant wore a floor length gown of teal bridal satin designed with a scooped neck and long puffed sleeves. She carried a bouquet of three long-stemmed American beauty roses.

Space Enthusiast Starts Program For Youngsters

By EILEEN A. FERENCHAK
The Mesa Tribune

MESA, Ariz. (AP) — Roy Enders was one of those kids who used to make balsa-tree wings and jump off barnyard roofs. His love for space and science has expanded to the formation of a worldwide, 3,000-member Junior Shuttle Pilot Program.

The 29-year-old Mesa man plans to deliver his club's space science-high technology newspapers to schools throughout the state. He has orders for about 20,000 papers to go to such districts as those in Mesa, Scottsdale, Yuma, Kingman and Payson.

The 12-page broadsheet newspaper is written at a fifth-grade level with information on such topics as computers, robotics, aerospace and science and technology.

"We take information from the brightest minds in industry, government and the private sector and pass it along to the children in a fun and rewarding fashion," he said.

The paper includes stories, photographs, games, contests and experiments. The last page of each paper serves as a poster to encourage children to keep the issues, Enders said.

More than 15,000 youngsters have written for newspapers and information from the Junior Shuttle Pilot News.

Stock Market Reports Growing Numbers Of New, Small Investors

By MARYBETH NIBLEY
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The boom on Wall Street that has pushed stock values about $200 billion higher since the first of the year is attracting growing numbers of ordinary people eager to get in on the rally.

The market's almost relentless surge since New Year's Day has astounded some seasoned veterans of the financial community, who say the buying binge approaches unprecedented proportions.

"I think people want to jump aboard the rising bull market," said Ben Laden, chief economist of T. Rowe Price Associates Inc. in Baltimore. "They're hearing terrific tales about stocks."

At the market's open today, the Dow Jones average of 30 blue-chip stocks was up 180 points this year and the Whilshire Associates' 5,000 Equity Index put the dollar value of the boom since New Year's at about $200 billion.

"Brokers are getting calls from clients they haven't heard from in years," Peter DaPuzzo, the director of retail equity trading at Shearson Lehman Brothers Inc., said during the height of trading Friday afternoon. "We probably have had a record month in over-the-counter transactions."

Hugh Johnson, senior vice president at First Albany Corp., said: "I'm getting calls saying 'Darn it, I missed it! Get me in at any cost.'"

But, he said probably a larger number of clients are cautious, asking whether racing stock prices have gotten ahead of themselves and wondering when the rally will run out of steam.

"It takes an awful lot to get an individual investor into this market and there's still a good deal of recalcitrance," he said, recalling clients questioning how stock prices can climb in the face of a dubious economic expansion, huge U.S. trade and budget deficits and the dollar's decline.

In many cases, smaller investors have "turned the driving over to somebody else, so to speak, and bought mutual funds," Johnson said. Mutual funds pool money and invest in stocks or bonds.

Big-name mutual funds have been doing brisk business.

Vanguard Group's headquarters in Valley Forge, Pa., is getting several thousand more calls a day than usual from customers, said Vice President Brian Mattes.

Vanguard's gross sales in the first 10 trading days this year were four times larger than in the same period last year, Mattes said. Total sales, including both stock and bond funds, topped $1 billion in the 10 days.

"I don't think we've ever seen a billion dollars come in in 10 days." Mattes said.

John Butler, president of Financial Programs Inc. in Denver, said: "We're pretty much swamped ... I think everyone is right now."

"People are becoming more aware of investment opportunities," he added.

Smaller, less well-known funds, however, reported less spectacular volume.

David Straus, a vice president at American Investment Managers Inc. in Rockville, Md., said some people are taken aback by the stock market's behavior and lack confidence that the rally will endure.

"I think the individual investor is pretty stunned by it all," Straus said. "I think they are just beginning to buy aggressively."

Beef Industry Launches Attack

WASHINGTON (AP) — America's beef industry is blanketing the nation with a $29 million advertising campaign designed to reverse a trend away from red meat among cholesterol-conscious consumers.

Bankrolled by a $1-a-head fee on cattle sent to market, the radio, television and newspaper ads launched last week by the Beef Industry Council extol beef as "real food for real people."

This time the Chicago-based council and its advertising agency, Ketchum Communications Co., aim to avoid any recurrence of a dispute two years ago that swirled around a similar campaign, "Beef Gives Strength."

Consumer and nutrition groups have thus far not fully digested the latest campaign. But already some critics chortle that revealing shots of actress Cybill Shepherd in one TV ad recall the Madison Avenue adage that "you sell the sizzle, not the steak."

Leggy shots of Ms. Shepherd are backed by singers who swear off low-cholesterol nouvelle cuisine and don't care "what they eat in San Francisco" because they would "rather be in Amarillo," in the heart of cattle country.

Two of the four television ads feature Ms. Shepherd and the others actor James Garner. The council has budgeted $19.6 million for 28 weeks of network television, $6 million for print ads and $3.4 million for radio.

Consumer use of beef reached a record 94 pounds per capita in 1976 and then fell through 1980, when it hit 76 pounds. Since then it has shown a slight upturn and reached 86 pounds last year, the highest level since 1978, according to Agriculture Department figures.

Soviets Fall Short

Oil production has been restored to its previous level, Tass said, referring to the volume produced in 1983 and 1984, before a two-year decline in oil output began.

Pravda said the nation produced 4.304 billion barrels of oil last year, about 3 percent more than in 1985.

Targets have been scaled back, and the party has set a goal of 4.374 billion barrels to 4.479 billion barrels by 1990. Economic plans for the first half of this decade predicted annual output of oil would reach 4.479 billion barrels by 1985.

Natural gas production was up 7 percent over 1985 at 24 trillion cubic feet, 490 billion more than the previous year.

The Soviet Union is the world's largest producer of oil and natural gas, and exports are believed to provide as much as 70 percent of the hard-currency earnings the country needs to buy grain and implement Gorbachev's broad "restructuring" program.

National income, which is believed to be the total value of goods and services produced in the country, was reported at $892 billion, up 4.1 percent from last year.

Industrial output grew by 4.9 percent and agricultural production by 5.1 percent, the media said.

The 1986 grain harvest was 210.1 million metric tons, up about 1 percent from the previous year but still far short of the party's goal.

his failure to crack down on intellectuals critical of the party.

The party Politburo appointed the 67-year-old Zhao as acting general secretary of the 44-million member party, pending ratification by the larger Central Committee.

Xinhua today quoted Zhao as saying that intellectuals, who have borne the brunt of ideological campaigns in the past, will not be mistreated in the current campaign.

"We will not change our policy of respecting knowledge, treasuring talented people and giving full play to the enthusiasm and creativeness of intellectuals in socialist construction," he was quoted as saying.

"China will not launch a political movement, still less resort to the 'left' practice in the past."

During the 1966-76 Cultural Revolution, leftists incited by Mao purged and persecuted millions of people for ideological impurities. Torture and killings were widespread. Intellectuals were among the worst sufferers.

Xinhua said Zhao made the comments Sunday at a meeting with the secretary of the Hungarian Socialist Workers Party, Ferenc Havasi. They were the first reported statements by a senior official since Hu's resignation.

Zhao also was quoted as saying that "the personnel change will not affect our line and policies, but will enable us to implement them more correctly." He did not mention Hu.

"We will continue the policy of opening to the outside world. We will expand instead of reducing our cooperation with foreign countries in trade, economic technical, monetary and other fields. This cooperation will be expanded in width and depth," Zhao said.

Zhao supports the economic reforms Deng initiated when he took power in 1978 to modernize this still underdeveloped nation of 1 billion people.

Elevations in Pitt County range from approximately 10 to 75 feet above mean sea level with the highest elevations occuring along the extreme western boundary of the county.

ment, was born in 1929. He was shot to death by a sniper in Memphis, Tenn., in 1968.

On Sunday, a Milwaukee postal statton was named in King's honor and a bronze sculpture of him was unveiled outside. In Birmingham, Ala., about 250 people Sunday night took part in a candlelight march.

Memories of King were stirred Saturday when a group of civil rights marchers on a "brotherhood anti-intimidation" walk through an all-white Georgia county were pelted with rocks and bottles. Eight people were arrested and several marchers were injured.

Civil rights leaders vowed Sunday to march again some day through the county, where blacks were terrorized and driven out in 1912.

"We feel very strongly about the right to make a non-violent march, as we did throughout the '60s. We have a right to march without being beaten up," said Coretta Scott King, the slain civil rights leaders's widow.

Two of King's lieutenants, the Rev. Ralph David Abernathy, former head of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, and the Rev. Hosea Williams, an Atlanta councilman, were to lead an afternoon parade followed by a march led by the King family.

In Selma, Ala., a parade retracing part of a bloody 1965 civil rights march was planned along with a prayer and candlelight vigil at Edmund Pettus Bridge, site of a violent clash between marchers and law enforcement officrs.

In New York, the lawyers for two victims of the racial attack in the Howard Beach section of Queens planned a memorial service and a march today in memory of King and Michael Griffith, who was chased to his death in front of a car during the attack.

"The point of the march is to show that there is a connection from Montgomery to Johannesburg to Howard Beach to Georgia," said lawyer C. Vernon Mason. "Those connections are still there representing what he (King) fought for and what he would still be fighting for."

Dollar

Today's close in Tokyo was the dollar's lowest level against the yen since the Japanese government set an official exchange rate of 360 yen to the dollar in April 1949, ending a period of post-war fluctuation.

The dollar's previous closing low was 153.05 yen last Aug. 20. But the dollar recovered from that low point and closed at 163.75 yen last Dec. 17 before starting its current decline, in which it has plunged more than 2 yen on three of the last four trading days.

Spot trading today in Tokyo totaled a record $10.2 billion, up sharply from last Friday's $5.54 billion.

Dealers said the Bank of Japan bought between $1 billion and $2 billion in efforts to support the dollar, although central bank intervention has had little effect in recent days.

East Carolina Seeks To Bounce Back At Central Connecticut On Tuesday

East Carolina's Pirates will try to get back on the winning side of the ledger Tuesday night as they visit Central Connecticut State for a non-conference basketballo game.

The Pirates go into the contest following an 85-70 loss to Colonial Athletic Association rival UNC Wilmington on Saturday night. That dropped their record to 9-6 on the season and to 2-3 in CAA action. Brian Rowsom scored a school-record 39 points and pulled down 15 rebounds in leading the Seahawks to the win, their fourth in five CAA outings.

Central Connecticut, however, will present a different sort of problem. The Blue Devils are only 3-13 on the year, having lost twice in the past week — once to another CAA team, James Madison.

The Dukes downed the Devils, 75-62, in an overtime game early in the week, while Central lost to Maryland-Baltimore on Saturday, 87-61.

The Pirates have won both of the previous games with Central, taking last year's meeting in Greenville, 97-68. Of those returning this year, William Grady led the Pirates in that game with 18 points while Marchell Henry had 14 and Leon Bass had 11.

Center Bryan Heron led the Blue Devils with 19 while Keith Coeman, a forward had 10.

Heron, a 6-7 sophomore now playing at forward, is the leading scorer for the Blue Devils with a 12.5 averaage. Guard Dwayne Jones, a 5-9 senior, is the only other player in double figures at 10.2.

The other starters include 6-6 senior forward Keith Coleman, 6-9 junior center John Wilgus, and 6-5 junior guard Brian Devlin. Wilgus averages 9.7 points a game, while Coleman had a 7.1 mark and Devlin is hitting 6.9 per game.

Heron is the leading rebounder at 5.8 per game, just ahead of Wiglus, 5.7 and Coleman, 5.5.

The game is the start of a four-game road swing by the Pirates. They will next be in action against CAA foe George Mason on Saturday, travel to James Madison on next Monday, then go outside the league for a game at Virginia Commonwealth on Jan. 28. They return home on Jan. 31 to host American.

Meanwhile, East Carolina's Lady Pirates, after suffering their first CAA loss of the year at UNC Wilmington Saturday, 87-77, continues its road trip with a game at UNC Charlotte tonight.

The Lady Pirates then return home to host George Mason on Saturday and nationally-ranked James Madison on Monday.

J.R. Reid Hits 31 As Tar Heels Skin Wolfpack

CHAPEL HILL (AP) — North Carolina basketball coach Dean Smith has tried to minimize his expectations of J.R. Reid, but Smith couldn't hide his pleasure after the freshman's 31-point performance in a 96-78 victory over North Carolina State.

"Recently, he's really coming on," Smith said after the third-ranked Tar Heels took their 13th straight victory. "He's getting confidence. He's learning, but he's already a man when he gets the ball in low."

Reid was 13 of 14 from the field and grabbed 13 rebounds to lead the Tar Heels. North Carolina is now 15-1, including a 4-0 mark in the Atlantic Coast Conference.

"Coach Smith sat down with me this summer and talked to me. He said he wasn't really expecting that much because he knows how hard it is on freshmen," Reid said. "He said it would depend on how well I picked up and adapted to the system here as to how much playing time I get."

Although he said he is still trying to learn, Reid has played in all 16 Tar Heel games and is averaging 11.2 points per game, one of six North Carolina players averaging in double figures.

As late as last week, Smith was criticizing Reid for his lack of defensive skills. Against N.C. State, the coach's assessment paid a lot of attention to Reid's offense, but gave more credit where it was due.

"If I were him, I would try to carry Kenny Smith's and Jeff Lebo's bags for the passes they gave him," Smith said. "Curtis Hunter also did a good job of getting him the ball, but he still had to score."

Reid's performance was aided by the absence of two key N.C. State performers, 6-foot-10 center Charles Shackleford and 6-9 reserve forward Chucky Brown, both of whom are ill. Without them to counter the 6-9 Reid, 6-9 Dave Popson and 6-10 Joe Wolf, North Carolina took control on the boards at both ends.

Reid said, however, that it wasn't in the plans to exploit the Wolfpack problem.

"Coach Smith said just play the game we always play, don't change anything, play the same way as if Shackleford was playing," Reid said. "He didn't change anything at all."

Teviin Biins, a 6-10 senior starting in place of Shackleford, scored on a follow shot with 11:06 remaining in the first half to give the Wolfpack a 25-23 edge, but Reid scored on an alley-oop and tied the score again.

The Wolfpack hit only one of its next 12 shots as the Tar Heels gained the lead for good.

Six quick points, four by Reid, broke the tie. N.C. State got within 35-31 after a pair of free throws by Mike Giomi with 5:11 left before halftime, but another North Carolina run of eight points — six by Kenny Smith and two free throws by Reid — expanded the Tar Heel lead to 43-31 at the 4:10 mark.

Stars & Stripes Advances To America's Cup Finals

FREMANTLE, Australia (AP) — Stars & Stripes, the yacht skipper Dennis Conner hopes to sail to an America's Cup victory, returned to shore today to a trumpeter playing "God Bless America" in celebration of its elimination of New Zealand.

And Conner, who lost the Cup four years ago, felt he had been blessed with some luck when New Zealand hit a buoy just as it was threatening to overtake his San Diego-based 12-meter one turn from the finish.

"It was a bit of relief," he said follwing a one-minute, 29-second victory that put Stars & Stripes into the finals against an Australian defender.

"They are a very scrappy bunch," Conner said of the Kiwis, who entered the best-of-seven series under skipper Chris Dickson with one just loss in the three-month-long challenger series.

The victory by Stars & Stripes, which won four of five races against New Zealand, puts Conner in the finals for the third time. He defended the Cup aboard Freedom in 1980 and lost it at the helm of Liberty in 1983.

Stars & Stripes will open the final series Jan. 31. Its probable opponent is Kookaburra III, which overcame a broken backstay on the fifth leg of its race to defeat Australia IV by one minute, 13 seconds to move within a victory of a showdown with Stars & Stripes. Kookaburra III leads the best-of-nine defender finals 4-0.

Both Australian boats flew protest flags, however.

Another Kookaburra III victory would bring to an end the hopes of Australia IV's syndicate for a successful defense of sailing's oldest prize. Headed by Alan Bond, the syndicate ended 132 years of American domination of the event when Australia II came from a 3-1 deficit to beat Liberty in 1983.

The 44-year-old Conner and his crew staged a typical locker room celebration, pouring champagne over each other as they whooped it up aboard Stars & Stripes. Wives and girl friends, standing out in stars and stripes rugby shirts of red, white and blue, also were doused.

Stars & Stripes led by 36 seconds after the sixth leg of the eight-leg, 24.5-mile race in the Indian Ocean. But the next leg was downwind and New Zealand was close enough to steal the powerful breeze from the leader.

Dickson steered his boat into position to cause the spinnaker on Stars & Stripes to flutter toward the end of the seventh leg. Conner's lead was cut to just nine seconds as Dickson appeared ready to round the buoy.

But New Zealand banged into the mark. That required the boat to re-round the mark, costing it all the ground it had gained on that downwind run.

By the time New Zealand could get around the mark again, it was behind by 39 seconds and Conner was home free.

Stars & Stripes had lost the start by one second, but charged to a 42-second advantage on the first beat to windward. But on the second beat, a powerful 28-knot wind ripped Conner's genoa and New Zealand cut the margin to 14 seconds by the end of that leg.

It was down to eight seconds after the first reach, but back up to 16 seconds at the next rounding as New Zealand had problems attempting to change a spinnaker.

In the defenders' race, Kookaburra III's lead was just six seconds after the second leg. Then it boosted the advantage to 53 seconds on the third leg, heading into the wind, and it never dropped below 50 seconds at any of the remaining marks.

New Format Announced For Running Of Winston

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Sponsors of The Winston have developed a new format for the race that will include three segments of 75 laps, 50 laps and 10 laps, with the winning driver taking as much as $300,000 of the $600,000 purse.

"We wanted a format that rewards drivers for hard racing at the front of the field," said Gerald H. Long, R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co.'s president and chief executive officer. "We feel we have done that with this new three-part concept for The Winston."

The payoff plan was announced Sunday at the National Motorsports Press Association annual convention.

The third annual running of the event at Charlotte Motor Speedway May 17 will use the format, with a 10-minute breaks between the three legs.

The starting order for the event's 75-lap first leg will be determined at qualifying May 16.

In the race's first two years, the defending national champion started on the pole and the event was reserved for the previous season's winners. This year, in order to get a 20-car field, winners through the May 3 Winston 500 at Talladega, Ala., also will be eligible. If the 20-car minimum is not met by 1986 and 1987 winners, the most recent previous victors on the circuit will complete the field.

The winner of The Winston Open, the event preceding The Winston, also will compete in the event. Fifteen drivers already have qualified for the race.

The leader at the end of the first 75 laps will receive $25,000.

The starting order for the race's second segment will be determined by the number of times a driver assumed the lead in the first part, Long said at a news conference. The driver leading at the end of the 50-lap segment will win $50,000. A $25,000 bonus also will be paid to the driver leading the most times during the first 125 laps.

The driver who leads the most times in the first 125 laps will have the pole for the 10-lap shootout, followed by the driver who has led the second-most times. The remainder of the lineup will be determined by a driver's finishing position from the second segment.

The driver leading at the end of 10 green-flag laps will win The Winston and $200,000. The event's last-place finisher is guaranteed $10,000.

Darrell Waltrip won the inaugural The Winston in 1985 at Charlotte, while Bill Elliott claimed the event last year at Atlanta International Raceway.

Boosters Angered Over Loss Of Coach

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — Two sports boosters say Wake Forest should have begged head football coach Al Groh to stay because he has brought the Demon Deacon program "light years" during his tenure.

Groh resigned Friday after six seasons, saying he felt the progress of the program should have generated a vote of confidence in a contract extension from the school and Athletic Director Dr. Gene Hooks.

"I don't know all the facts, or all that transpired from Dr. Hooks' standpoint," said Ken Crutchfield, a past president of the Deacon Club told the Winston-Salem Journal. "But having served on the (Wake Forest) athletic council, I know the ins and outs of the athletic department. Wake Forest lost the best damn coach we've had here."

Crutchfield said in traveling around the country, he's heard nothing but praise for Groh.

"The way he ran the program, the way he treated his players and his standing in the community was excellent," he said.

"I'll be frank — I'm bitterly disappointed," Crutchfield said. "(Al) Groh is a good friend of Wake Forest and a good friend of mine. In my opinion, we should have begged him to stay."

Jerry Francis, the president of Winston-Salem's Sportsman's Club, said that he was also sorry to see Groh leave.

Giants Discover Quickly Not Just Another Game

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — Using the "Ho, hum, it's just another game," approach, the New York Giants settled into their Super Bowl hotel Sunday and quickly discovered that it most certainly isn't just another football game.

Hordes of fans were waiting for the team and the players who ventured into the lobby were mobbed.

The Broncos gave the Giants a one-day head start on the annual mayhem, preferring to fly to their headquarters today after a sendoff party Sunday at Denver's Mile High Stadium.

While the AFC champs were partying, the Giants journeyed west. As their chartered jet flew over Denver, a Colorado-based air traffic controller learned who was aboard the plane he was guiding.

"Maybe," he said kiddingly to the pilot, "I ought to change vectors on you."

Thg Giants remained nine-point favorites for the game, but that hardly disturbed the Broncos.

"I hope it goes up to 20," kicker Rich Karlis said. "Let the pressure be on them."

"So much of this game is mental," wide receiver Vance Johnson said. "Maybe they'll be overconfident."

Johnson and Mark Jackson said Denver's dramatic 98-yard march to the tying touchdown in the final minutes of the AFC title game against Cleveland could give the team momentum for the Super Bowl.

Jackson also pointed out that the Broncos have lost just one game all year on grass, the surface at the Rose Bowl where the game will be played. The Giants, on the other hand, flourish on artificial surfaces like their home field.

The first exposure to the Super Bowl scene was disquieting for some of the Giants.

Reserve defensive lineman Jerome Sally took two steps out of his hotel elevator and found himself surrounded by perhaps 50 fans. He looked around, then took two steps back into the elevator and beat a strategic retreat to his room.

Running back Joe Morris nearly was cornered but avoided the crowd, accelerating as he slipped away. "Nice cut on the rug," one fan shouted after him.

The players seemed to understand the situation.

"Everyone is ready to play right now," linebacker Harry Carson, the Giants' captain, said. "I'm pretty sure the Broncos feel the same way. Let's get out there, play the game and get it over with."

The game, however, is a week away. Defensive back Kenny Hill, a veteran of two Super Bowls, tried to prepare his teammates for what they will face this week.

"After two days," Hill told some reporters, "you guys become less and ess imaginative and start focusing on things that have less and less relevance and are not germaine."

Such as?

"What's my favorite color and what gum do I chew?"

When the question was directed at him, Hill responded, "I'm not saying."

Top Bear Denies Ditka Will Quit

CHICAGO (AP) — The president of the Chicago Bears is denying reports that head Coach Mike Ditka has vowed to quit the team after the 1987 season.

Bears President Michael McCaskey said Sunday he had not been told of any such deadline by Ditka, according to Brian Harlan, a Bears spokesman.

Harlan quoted McCaskey as saying Ditka has not resigned.

Ditka reportedly was on vacation and not available for comment.

The Boston Sunday Globe reported that Ditka had told his bosses he would leave after the remaining year on his contract is over due to a dispute over the NFL team's firing last week of General Manager Jerry Vainisi.

The newspaper said Ditka told McCaskey of his intentions after McCaskey refused to rehire Vainisi.

"Then this season is my last," Ditka is reported as saying. "Don't even bother to ask me about signing an extension of my contract, because I won't do it."

After the conversation, Ditka reportedly told his assistant coaches that 1987 would be his last season with the Bears and they were free to start looking for new jobs immediately.

The Globe said Ditka was "fuming" because Vainisi is his best friend and Ditka's strongest ally in Chicago's front office.

"Ditka and Jerry are best of friends," according to an unidentified source quoted by the newspaper. "When the 'big four' (Ditka, McCaskey, Vainisi and personnel director Bill Tobin) got together, Jerry usually backed Ditka."

Tip From Caddy Helped Pavin Capture Hope Golf

LA QUINTA, Calif. (AP) — Upon returning to earth after a soaring victory leap, Corey Pavin listed a fortunate pairing and a tip from his caddy as key factors in his one-shot triumph in the Bob Hope Classic.

"It was a lot of fun out there. A nice little Sunday game. We're friends, and we happened to be playing together," Pavin said of Bernhard Langer, the West German who was beaten by Pavin's decisive birdie putt on the 90th hole.

"And I think that made it easier for me, easier for me to win," Pavin said. "I'm a little more relaxed playing with someone I like. It's easy to be relaxed playing with a friend.

"If it's someone I don't know, or someone I've had problems with in the past, I think I tend to try too hard, to maybe takes chances I shouldn't, things like that."

There was little doubt of the friendship of the two central figures as they played the closing holes Sunday on the controversial PGA West course.

Tied for the lead, with $65,000 (the difference between the winner's $162,000 and the runnerup check) at stake, Pavin and Langer draped their arms over each other's shoulders on the march up the 18th fairway and, when the gallery began to cheer, lifted their clasped hands in a joint salute.

"Let's make it an exciting finish," Pavin said as they neared the green and separated to mark their balls. Langer eventually missed a difficult 30-foot birdie attempt and Pavin rolled in the winner from about 20 feet.

Then he went leaping high in the air in sheer joy, and Langer smiled broadly at the antics.

"At other times, I've been disappointed when I felt I had lost the tournament with a bad shot or a bogey or a mistake. But I don't feel that way today," Langer said. "I don't feel I lost the golf tournament. It's just that someone played better than I did.

"Corey was just outstanding. To shoot a 67 on this golf course is incredible," Langer said.

It was the best round of the week on the PGA West course that was being played in this tournament for the first time. It finished off Pavin's 90-hole total of 341, 19 under par, and provided his fifth victory in four years on the PGA Tour.

The round also served as a climax to a rally that was touched off by a tip from Pavin's caddy.

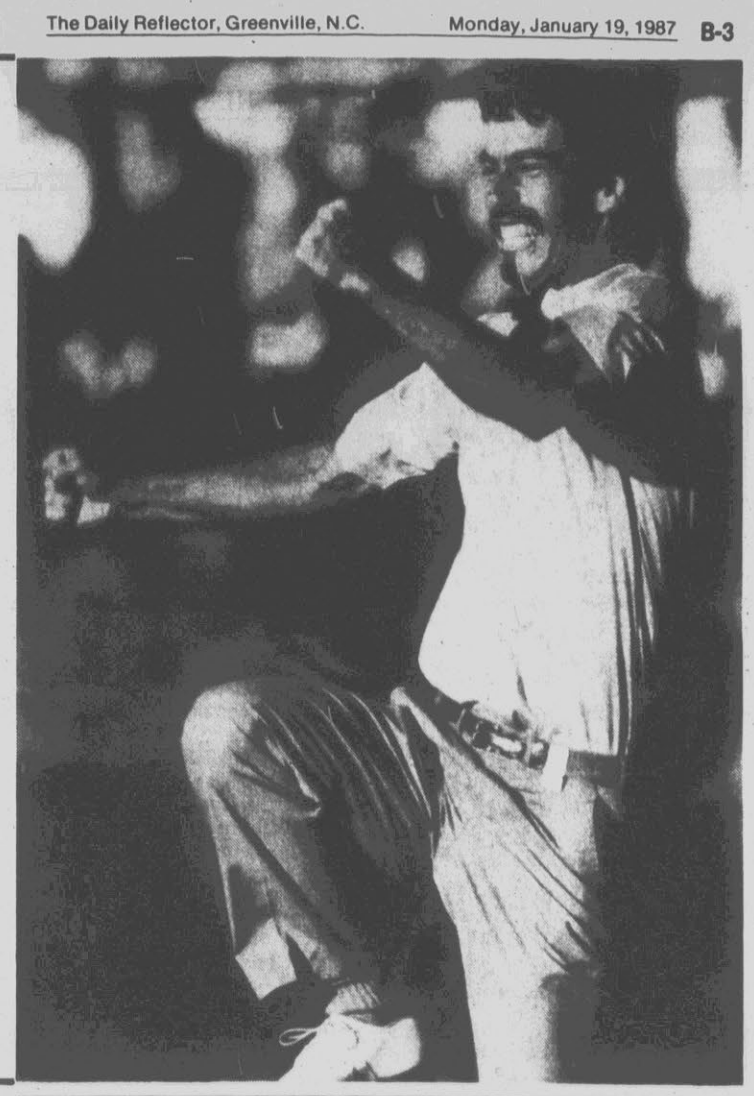

"He told me I was opening the putter (blade) just a little," Pavin said. "I worked very hard on it. It felt a little strange at first, but Friday, something clicked."

From that point on, he did not make a bogey and played the last 54 holes of the tournament 18 under par.

Langer simply couldn't match it. He had a final-round 70 and finished one back of Pavin at 342.

Mark Calcavecchia finished third for the second week in a row. He matched par 72 over the final 18 holes, despite hitting two balls in the water, and finished at 345.

South African David Frost and Andy Bean were next at 348 and were the only others with eight shots of the lead. Frost had a 68 and Bean a 70.

Sooners Bask In Glory After Stopping Las Vegas

By DICK JOYCE
AP Basketball Writer

"They'd been No. 1 long enough," was the message from Oklahoma's Darryl Kennedy after his jump shot with 12 seconds left beat top-ranked Nevada-Las Vegas.

While Saturday's loss may knock the Runnin' Rebels out of the nation's top spot, the No. 16 Sooners' 89-88 victory at Norman, Okla., also stirred more controversy over the three-point goal and involved the CBS broadcasting crew.

A disputed shot by Nevada-Las Vegas' Gary Graham just before halftime apparently cost the Rebels one point, according to one of the TV replays.

Officials ruled Graham's goal a two-pointer — instead of a three-pointer from beyond the 19-foot, 9-inch range as UNLV Coach Jerry Tarkanian claimed. That left the game tied at halftime at 48.

A horn was blown from the stands just as Graham launched his shot, causing confusion and prompting officials to look at the replay to determine whether the shot had been taken before time expired.

The NCAA allows use of TV replays to correct the game clock, but not to correct "judgment" calls. The replay rule went into the books after last season's clock malfunction in an NCAA tournament game allowed Kansas more time to pull out a victory over Michigan State.

But a story in the Los Angeles Times quoted one of the officials as telling CBS broadcaster Brent Musburger: "We're also trying to determine if the player shot from behind the three-point line."

Musburger replied, "Our replay is inconclusive."

"If you say it is inconclusive, then the basket remains a two-pointer," the Times quoted the official as telling Musburger.

However, after the officials left for the locker room, CBS came up with a replay from a different angle, apparently showing the goal was indeed a three-pointer. CBS commentator Billy Packer said it should have been called a three-pointer.

"What should we do?" Musburger said on the air. "Should we get the officials back here?"

Official Rick Wulkow denied that he or any other official attempted to use the replay to determine whether Graham's shot was a three-pointer.

"We looked at the replay to determine whether any time was left in the half," Wulkow said. "We can only use the instant replay for time.

"We made the decision of two (points) on the court. I and the other official (Mike Tanco) came together and the decision was made."

After Kennedy's final basket, Nevada-Las Vegas' Armon Gilliam missed a jump shot and Jarvis Basnight missed a tip-in try.

Tarkanian, whose team won its first 15 games, said the controversial call "had nothing to do" with outcome. "I told them (officials) to watch the replay. It's clear it was a three-point play but there's nothing I can do about it."

"I think we should be No. 1 or leave Vegas there," said Oklahoma Coach Billy Tubbs, whose Sooners are now 12-3.

Harvey Grant had 23 points and 16 rebounds for Oklahoma, while Gilliam scored 23 points for Nevada-Las Vegas.

No. 5 Syracuse also fell from the unbeaten ranks, losing 91-88 at Michigan on Sunday. That left only No. 2 Iowa, which was idle this weekend, DePaul and Clemson as the only undefeated Division I teams.

In other Sunday games involving the Top Twenty, No. 3 North Carolina defeated North Carolina State 96-78;, No. 6 Purdue rolled over Louisville 88-73; and No. 11 Temple edged St. Joseph's 70-69. Also on Sunday, Louisiana State crushed Kentucky 76-41, the Wildcats' worst defeat in 37 years and the worst at home in 60 years.

In other Saturday games, it was No. 4 Indiana 95, Northwestern 43; No. 7 DePaul 81, South Florida 55; No. 8 Illinois 80, Minnesota 58; Seton Hall 66, No. 9 Georgetown 65; Vanderbilt 91, No. 10 Auburn 75; No. 12 Clemson 72, Maryland 64; No. 13 St. John's 69, Connecticut 54; No. 14 Duke 69, Wake Forest 49; No. 15 Alabama 71, Mississippi 62; No. 18 Pittsburgh 112, Chicago State 70; No. 19 Navy 96, American 60, and No. 20 Kansas 82, Miami, Fla. 47.

No. 3 North Carolina 96, N.C. State 78

J.R. Reid tied Mike O'Koren's 10-year-old school mark for points by a freshman by scoring 31 on 13-of-14 shooting from the field. He also grabbed 13 rebounds.

Kenny Smith added 22 points and Joe Wolf 20 in the Tar Heels' 13th straight win. North Carolina raised its Atlantic Coast Conference mark to 5-0 and its overall mark to 15-1. Bennie Bolton's 22 points topped N.C. State, 11-4 overall and 3-2 in the ACC.

No. 4 Indiana 95 Northwestern 43

Led by Daryl Thomas' 18 points, Indiana won its 11th straight, scoring 20 straight points in the first half to turn the game into a rout. The Hoosiers, 14-1, raised their Big Ten record to 5-0.

Northwestern, 5-11 and 0-6, dropped its ninth consecutive game.

Michigan 91, No. 5 Syracuse 88

Gary Grant and Garde Thompson scored 23 points each and Michigan held off a late Syracuse charge.

Thompson's three-point basket with 2:26 remaining gave the Wolverines an 86-77 advantage, but Syracuse, 15-1, scored six points in 29 seconds to get within three with 1:57 remaining. A pair of free throws by Rony Seikaly, who scored 25 points, got Syracuse within two with 1:15 left, but the Orangemen got no closer despite two Michigan turnovers.

Grant scored 17 of his points in the second half.

No. 6 Purdue 88, Louisville 73

Doug Lee scored 23 points and Todd Mitchell added 22 as Purdue improved to 14-1, its best start in 49 years.

The Boilermakers, trailing by eight points in the first half, rallied to a 40-38 lead at halftime. The Cardinals trailed by three in the second half before Troy Lewis scored five straight points to start a 19-6 streak that gave Purdue an 81-65 lead.

No. 7 DePaul 81, South Florida 55

Kevin Edwards scored 18 points and Rod Strickland and Dallas Comegys 14 apiece for DePaul, 14-0. Darrell Coleman's 16 points paced South Florida, 6-7.

No. 8 Illinois 80, Minnesota 58

Illinois, 13-3, boosted its Big Ten mark to 5-1 behind Ken Norman, who scored 27 points and grabbed 12 rebounds, and Doug Altenberger, who had 18 points. Minnesota, 9-6 and 2-3, got 16 points from Terrence Woods.

Seton Hall 66, No. 9 Georgetown 65

Seton Hall upset Georgetown for the second time in two weeks, but this time it wasn't a 21-point laugher. The Pirates got 22 points from Mark Bryant, including two decisive free throws with 22 seconds left.

Reggie Williams' 28 points led the Hoyas, who are 12-2 overall and 3-2 in the Big East. The Pirates are 11-4 and 2-4.

Vanderbilt 91, No. 10 Auburn 75

Freshman Scott Draud scored 23 points and Will Perdue added 22 in leading Vanderbilt to a Southeastern Conference upset. The Commodores advanced to 11-6 overall and 3-3 in the SEC, while Auburn fell to 10-3 and 3-2.

The Commodores hit 16 of 20 free throws over the last 8½ minutes to hold off a Tiger rally.

No. 11 Temple 70, St. Joseph's 69

Tim Perry and Mike Vreeswyk each had 18 points as Temple survived a six-minute scoreless stretch against St. Joseph's.

Temple, 16-2, took a 70-62 lead on a jump shot by Nate Blackwell with 5:58 to play. While the Owls failed to score again, the Hawks scored six straight points, pulling within 70-68 on a jumper by Rodney Blake with 3:18 to play. Blake scored the last point of the game on a free throw with three seconds to go, but he missed the second attempt.

No. 12 Clemson 72, Maryland 64

Guards Michael Tait and Michael Brown each scored 16 points as Clemson raised its record to 16-0 overall and 3-0 in the ACC. It's the best start ever for the Tigers in the ACC.

Steve Hood, a freshman, scored 20 points for Maryland, 3-6 and 0-5.

No. 13 St. John's 69, Connecticut 54

St. John's, 12-2, raised its Big East record to 3-2 behind Shelton Jones' 18 points and Mark Jackson's 15, while Connecticut's Phil Robinson was held to five points before fouling out. Phil Gamble led the Huskies, 6-8 and 1-4, with 16 points.

The Middle East today is the scene of ancient conflicts fought with modern weapons. But even some of the weaponry is not that modern. As early as the tenth century, Arab armies used primitive hand grenades. According to David Louis's 2201 Fascinating Facts, the "grenades were made of terra cotta shaped to fit the contours of the hand, filled with inflammable naphtha and covered with relief designs to prevent them from slipping when being thrown."

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AK ♡AK1063 ◇AK852 ♣6
The bidding has proceeded:

West	North	East	South
3 ♠	Pass	Pass	Dble
Pass	3 ♠	Pass	?

What action do you take?

A.—You have been placed in an almost untenable situation by West's opening preempt. You have an enormous hand but here you are at the three-level with no fit uncovered. We suggest a cue-bid of four clubs. If North rebids spades, we will pass and hope he has a five-card suit. If he has only four spades and no four-card holding in a red suit, perhaps he might be inspired to bid a three-card fragment in one of our suits.

Q.2—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠95 ♡KJ982 ◇A1063 ♣74
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	1 ♡	Pass
2 NT	Pass	?

What do you bid now?

A.—Since you have an unbalanced hand, a suit contract might be preferable should partner have three-card heart support. The way to find out is to bid three diamonds. If partner prefers to three hearts, go on to game. If he bids three no trump, that will surely be the best contract.

Q.3—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠K106 ♡AK985 ◇73 ♣KJ6
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	1 ♡	Pass
2 ♠	Pass	?

What do you bid now?

A.—You have at least one game, perhaps more, but you can't yet be sure of the final strain. You need to make a forcing bid to give partner the opportunity to describe his hand further. Two spades fits the bill perfectly. You don't have to fear a raise. If partner held four spades he would have shown them over one heart.

Q.4—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠9872 ♡8 ◇10532 ♣AK62
The bidding has proceeded:

West	North	East	South
1 ◇	Dble	Pass	?

What do you bid now?

A.—You have two problems: Which suit should you show, and at what level? Obviously, you should bid spades before clubs, despite the disparity in suit quality, because partner virtually guarantees four spades on this auction. And while you are on the borderline for a jump to two spades, the flimsiness of the suit suggests a conservative one spade.

Q.5—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠A1065 ♡J752 ◇10643 ♣K
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	East
1 ♠	Dble	?

What action do you take?

A.—We don't think you should introduce a suit out of fear that one club doubled will get passed out and killed. CBS Official Says 'Morning' Will Find Spot By Mid-Year

By MORGAN GENDEL
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

REDONDO BEACH, Calif. — CBS' "The Morning Program," the week-old Monday-through-Friday replacement for the beleaguered "CBS Morning News," will successfully find its audience by mid-year, its executive producer predicts.

What is more, CBS' commitment to the show "is open-ended," Bob Shanks assured, speaking before TV critics gathered here.

"I may get a call 13 weeks from now saying 'pack up and get out of here,' but that's not my sense of it," Shanks said. At a recent meeting with CBS chairman William Paley, he said, he was told to "fine-tune" the show and "keep on doing what you're doing."

Shanks, appearing alongside the show's stars, Mariette Hartley and Rolland Smith, said: "I think within three to six months the show will be very comfortable and people will begin to accept it and it won't be so startling to see a comedian in the morning."

The latter comment referred to the presence of comic Bob Saget on the 7:30-to-9 a.m. show and the stand-up comedy routines performed by other comedians in the first half hour. Saget, along with videotaped "personals" and a live studio audience, have set "The Morning Program" distinctly apart from its predecessor as well as from its competition, ABC's "Good Morning America" and NBC's "Today."

The perceived softness has made "The Morning Program" a tough sell with critics, too, but Shanks and company gamely faced the press on the next-to-last day of the two-week-long series of network presentations.

Hartley had given blood on the show that morning and seemed ready to have the critics go after more. Responding to charges that she repeatedly interrupted co-host Smith during Week One, she said, "He steps on me as much as I do on him, isn't that right, Rolland?"

"Absolutely," Smith readily replied. "As much as I possibly can."

The trio acknowledged some mistakes. Hartley said that, at Shanks' suggestion, she will back off from her role as "the Gracie Allen of sports," a reference to her exaggerated non-knowledge of football during an interview with former Oakland Raiders coach John Madden and Pat Summerall, both of whom will be Super Bowl sportscasters.

Shanks, for his part, admitted that, in his nervousness about the new show, he had booked too many guests, forcing many of the interview segments to be overly brief. "I take full blame for that," he said. "We are loosening the format so that doesn't happen again."

But Shanks defended some of the show's perceived gaffes with a sweeping call for "some reality on TV." He said he hoped the show would have some moments "when you're sitting at home and say, 'I can't believe I saw that!' "

Shanks and Smith, a former news anchor at the CBS-owned New York station, WCBS, also insisted that the presence of a studio audience did not compromise their ability to present newsworthy interviews. They both referred to Friday morning's interview with David Jacobsen, whose 17 months of captivity in Lebanon ended last November, and his son, Eric. "The audience didn't hoot and holler," Shanks pointed out.

He added that when breaking news warrants, the telecast would shift to coverage by CBS' news division, which relinquished control of the morning slot when low ratings forced the morning news effort off the air after 23 years.

Shanks, a veteran producer who helped launch "Good Morning America" and "20-20" at ABC, cleverly defused some of the negative reviews of "The Morning Program" by reading two typically scathing critiques. They lambasted everything from the "corny and dull" content to the "impractical central set" to the "self-conscious" hosts.

Shanks then disclosed that the two reviews were not about "The Morning Program" at all. They were written in 1975 about "Good Morning America," now in its 12th year, and in 1952 at the start of "Today." Unkind reviews, he noted, "are in the grand tradition" of morning shows, even the long-lasting ones.

McEuen Shakes Dirt Bank

By PAT MCGRAW
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

DENVER — "Perhaps the easiest way to say it," John McEuen remarked of his departure from the Nitty Gritty Dirt Band, "is that the 'Partners, Brothers and Friends' had a good time but, for me, things got a little weary."

The announcement earlier this month that the multi-instrumentalist was leaving the quintet was not a complete surprise, since the 41-year-old Colorado resident had already embarked on some solo projects, including a moderately successful record album.

But to many, the Dirt Band without its banjo and mandolin player will never be the "real" group.

Describing himself as "the Jerry Garcia of the Dirt Band," McEuen said his affiliation with the group will prove beneficial in his future projects. "The Dirt Heads are similar to the (Grateful) Dead Heads. If Jerry Garcia goes out to do something by himself, he attracts a following."

And so, of course, will McEuen, who was clearly the most tradition-oriented member of the group. When it was observed that the band was moving increasingly toward country-rock, leaving the hillbilly behind, McEuen had only a single correction: "Make that 'country-pop.' "

In reality, though, McEuen is a product of the folk-music boom of the '60s — fueled with the enthusiasm and dollars of urban young people — and not of Appalachian tradition. He was born and raised in California, where a teen-age fascination with the banjo inspired by bluegrass practitioner Doug Dillard led to a comedic association with a high school classmate, comedian Steve Martin. The two worked together at Disneyland.

While McEuen was starting college, guitarists Jeff Kunkel and Jeff Hanna were forming a folkish music group in their nearby Long Beach high school. The group, originally dubbed the Illegitimate Jug Band, had changed its name to the Nitty Gritty Dirt Band by 1966, when McEuen joined to replace a dropout named Jackson Browne.

The group first hit nationally in 1967 with "Buy for Me the Rain" and has been at it ever since, with varying degrees of success.

By 1970, partly because of the Los Angeles smog, the band risked moving to Colorado. Several band members now reside outside the state, but McEuen is happy in the mountains west of Denver. But two decades of show biz and its attendant demands are not without some personal cost. "After 20 years of seeing 200 cities a year, I feel that's a lot," McEuen said.

Though he remains on good terms with the other members of the band, he said, in recent years, "I felt like our divergent interests were creating a split. Things I wanted to do musically, the rest of the band didn't want to do, and the band has been using me less and less.... My input had been diluted in the last couple of years."

One manifestation of his desire to do material that didn't interest the rest of the band was McEuen's solo album, titled simply "John McEuen," released about 18 months ago. The album included such things as McEuen's musically backed version of Stephen Benet's "Mountain Whippoorwill," the kind of cut that wins critical acclaim but is far too cerebral for anyone's Top 40 chart.

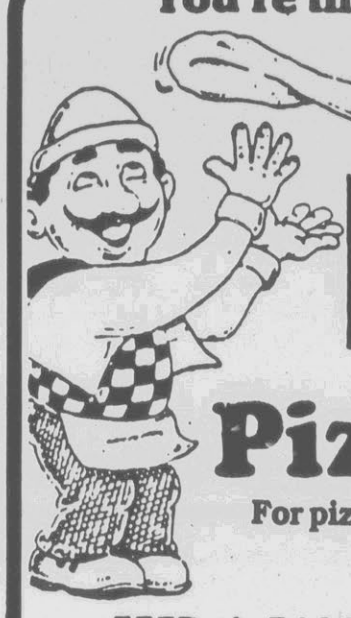

But he intends to do more work of that sort. "Part of what I'm doing is taking more time to see what there is to do," McEuen said. "One thing about the Dirt Band is that we worked an awful lot, and sometimes it would be numbing, with no time for recharging or reflecting."

U.S. Waives Death Penalty To Get Hijack Suspect

By TIM AHERN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Justice Department plans this week to formally ask West Germany to turn over a man charged in the 1985 hijacking of a TWA jetliner, even though the suspect won't be sentenced to death if convicted.

The department announced Sunday it wouldn't seek the death penalty against Mohammad Ali Hamadi, a decision which clears the way for Hamadi to be sent to the United States.

West Germany has no death penalty and its laws bar extradition of people to countries which have capital punishment.

Justice Department spokesman Patrick Korten said, "We have concluded that the only way we can get him back is through the use of the formal extradition process and that extradition process requires that we agree not to impose the death penalty if the suspect is convicted of capital crimes here in the U.S."

Hamadi is charged with air piracy, which carries the death penalty, and murder.

The department said Sunday it was preparing a formal extradition request to be presented to the West German government within the week.

In Bonn, Juergen Schmid, a spokesman for the West German Justice Department, indicated that Hamadi could be extradited to the United States "relatively soon" now that U.S. officials have pledged not to seek the death penalty.

The "absence of the pledge has been the main obstacle," Schmid said. "If this main obstacle is removed, the process could theoretically go fairly quickly. ... In theory at least, he could be extradited relatively soon."

Hamadi, 22, was arrested last Tuesday at the Frankfurt airport after he arrived from Beirut. West German officials said customs agents searching Hamadi's luggage found three wine bottles full of methyl nitrate, which can be used to make explosives. The officials said they thought he was planning a bomb attack, although they were unsure of his target.

The Justice Department asked the West Germans for Hamadi, but German officials said they wouldn't turn him over if he could be sentenced to death after a U.S. conviction.

Hamadi and three other men are wanted by the United States in connection with the June 1985 hijacking of TWA flight 847 en route from Athens to Rome. The plane was flown to Beirut, where U.S. Navy diver Robert Stethem was shot to death and 39 Americans were held hostage.

One of those hostages, Jimmie Dell Palmer of Little Rock, Ark., said Sunday he thinks Hamadi "deserves the death penalty."

"I am certainly disappointed we have taken this route to get him back," Palmer said, "but if that's the only way to get him to the United States, we don't have much choice."

In related news, the West German Foreign Ministry said Sunday a West German businessman was kidnapped in Beirut. Newspapers in Hamburg and Bonn said the kidnappers apparently hope to trade him for Hamadi.

But West German authorities said it was too early to say if Saturday's abduction of Rudolf Cordes, 53, was linked to Hamadi's arrest.

The United States derives its authority to prosecute crimes against U.S. citizens overseas from several sections of law enacted by Congress in response to a wave of international terrorism in the past few years.

One provision signed into law last year gives the government jurisdiction when terrorist assaults are committed against U.S. nationals in foreign countries. Another U.S. law which went into effect in January 1985 gives jurisdiction to the federal government for the taking of U.S. hostages overseas. A third U.S. law on aircraft piracy provides for up to the death penalty on conviction if someone dies during the attempted piracy of an aircraft. A fourth law provides for federal jurisdiction and terms of up to 20 years imprisonment when a U.S. aircraft is damaged overseas.

Germany Fears Kidnapping Linked To Hijacking Arrest

BONN, West Germany (AP) — Officials said it was not clear if the kidnapping of a West German businessman in Beirut was aimed at forcing Bonn to release a Lebanese man accused of hijacking a TWA jetliner in 1985.

Two West German newspapers Sunday quoted unnamed government officials as saying they feared the two cases were linked.

Foreign Ministry spokesman Reinhard Bettzuege said the kidnappers have not identified themselves or made demands. "It could be a criminal act, or someone looking for ransom money," Bettzuege said.

Ministry officials said Rudolf Cordes, 53, was kidnapped Saturday evening after arriving in Beirut from Frankfurt.

Cordes is the Beirut manager for Hoechst AG, one of West Germany's largest chemical companies. He is based in Frankfurt and travels frequently to Lebanon on business, a company official said Sunday.

The kidnapping brings to 19 the number of foreigners missing in Lebanon, including six Americans. A Frenchman and a Saudi Arabian also were kidnapped in the past week.

Ministry sources, speaking on condition of anonymity, said Bonn authorities had warned the approximately 200 West Germans living in Beirut to take extra precautions following the arrest in Frankfurt last Tuesday of Lebanese Mohammad Ali Hamadi.

Hamadi, a suspect in the June 1985 hijacking of a TWA jetliner, was arrested after arriving in Frankfurt from Beirut. Customs agents found he was carrying methyl nitrate, a fluid sometimes used in making explosives.

Authorities said he was identified by fingerprints as one of the hijackers who seized the TWA aircraft, shot to death U.S. Navy diver Robert Dean Stethem and held 39 American passengers hostage for 17 days.

American officials are seeking Hamadi's extradition to try him in the United States on air piracy and murder charges.

In Washington, Justice Department spokesman Pat Korten said Sunday that U.S. officials have agreed to West Germany's condition that if convicted, Hamadi will not be sentenced to death. A U.S.-West German extradition treaty requires such a pledge because West Germany does not have the death penalty.

Korten's West German counterpart, Juergen Schmid, said Bonn has not yet received the necessary documents. The Bonn Foreign Ministry, meanwhile, said it set up a crisis team to find Cordes. Officials said late Sunday there were no new developments.

PRESIDENT RETURNS — President Leon Frebres Cordero, left with glasses, is greeted Sunday by Ecuadoran officials upon his arrival at Quito's international airport. Cordero, who was kidnapped by air force commandos Friday, was released after 11 hours of captivity. (AP Laserphoto)

Ecuadoran President Freed, Faces Impeachment Fight

QUITO, Ecuador (AP) — President Leon Febres Cordero was back in the government palace today facing a tough fight against political enemies who seek to impeach him following his 11-hour kidnapping by renegade air force commandos.

Many Ecuadorans said the conservative president was weakened politically by his decision to grant the kidnappers' demand and release former air force commander Gen. Frank Vargas Pazzos, who was jailed after leading a failed rebellion last March.

Febres Cordero rested two days in his native city of Guayaquil to recover from the beating and death threats he received while held captive at an air base there Friday. He flew back to Quito on Sunday afternoon.

Except for a bruise on his left forehead, the president showed few signs of physical mistreatment.

Febres Cordero of the Social Christian Party, who has projected an image as a tough leader since taking office in 1984, said after his release that he intended to complete his four-year term.

But Congress President Andres Vallejo of the opposition Social Democrat Party scheduled a special legislative session for Tuesday to discuss the president's conduct in office.

At least some members of an opposition coalition of leftist and center-right parties want Febres Cordero impeached, claiming he has violated the constitution on numerous occasions by ignoring the powers granted to Congress.

In the most recent clash, he blocked an amnesty for Vargas Pazzos approved by Congress in September by refusing to publish it in the official gazette. That kept it from becoming law.

The constitution says a majority in Congress can impeach a president for treason, corruption or "any infraction that gravely affects the national honor." That last provision appears applicable if the legislature chooses to invoke it.

If the special session of Congress decides to impeach Febres Cordero, Vallejo will have to call another special session, known as a "political trial," during which evidence would be presented and Febres Cordero would be called to defend himself.

The opposition controls 41 seats in the 71-seat body, enough to impeach him. But it needs two-thirds majority — 47 seats — to convict him and force him from office.

Many Ecuadorans said Febres Cordero's decision to acede to the kidnappers' demands dealt a crippling blow to his image as a tough leader and weakened his credibility.

In other kidnappings, including the abduction of a federal judge last May and that of a banker in September 1985, he refused to negotiate with kidnappers. The judge's captors freed him unharmed, but the banker and his kidnappers died when security forces raided the house where he was being held.

Febres Cordero said he agreed to the demands of those holding him in order to protect the lives of about 25 people seized with him. He also signed a pledge not to prosecute or discipline those who took part in the kidnapping, which was staged as the president took part in a ceremony at the air base.

Febres Cordero's term ends in August 1988, and he cannot run for re-election. But campaigning has already begun for the first round of presidential elections set for next January.

Political analysts and foreign diplomats in Quito said they doubted the opposition parties would vote to impeach Febres Cordero because it would weaken the country's fragile democracy and because they are practically guaranteed of winning the upcoming elections.

Febres Cordero is Ecuador's first elected president after seven years of military dictatorship.

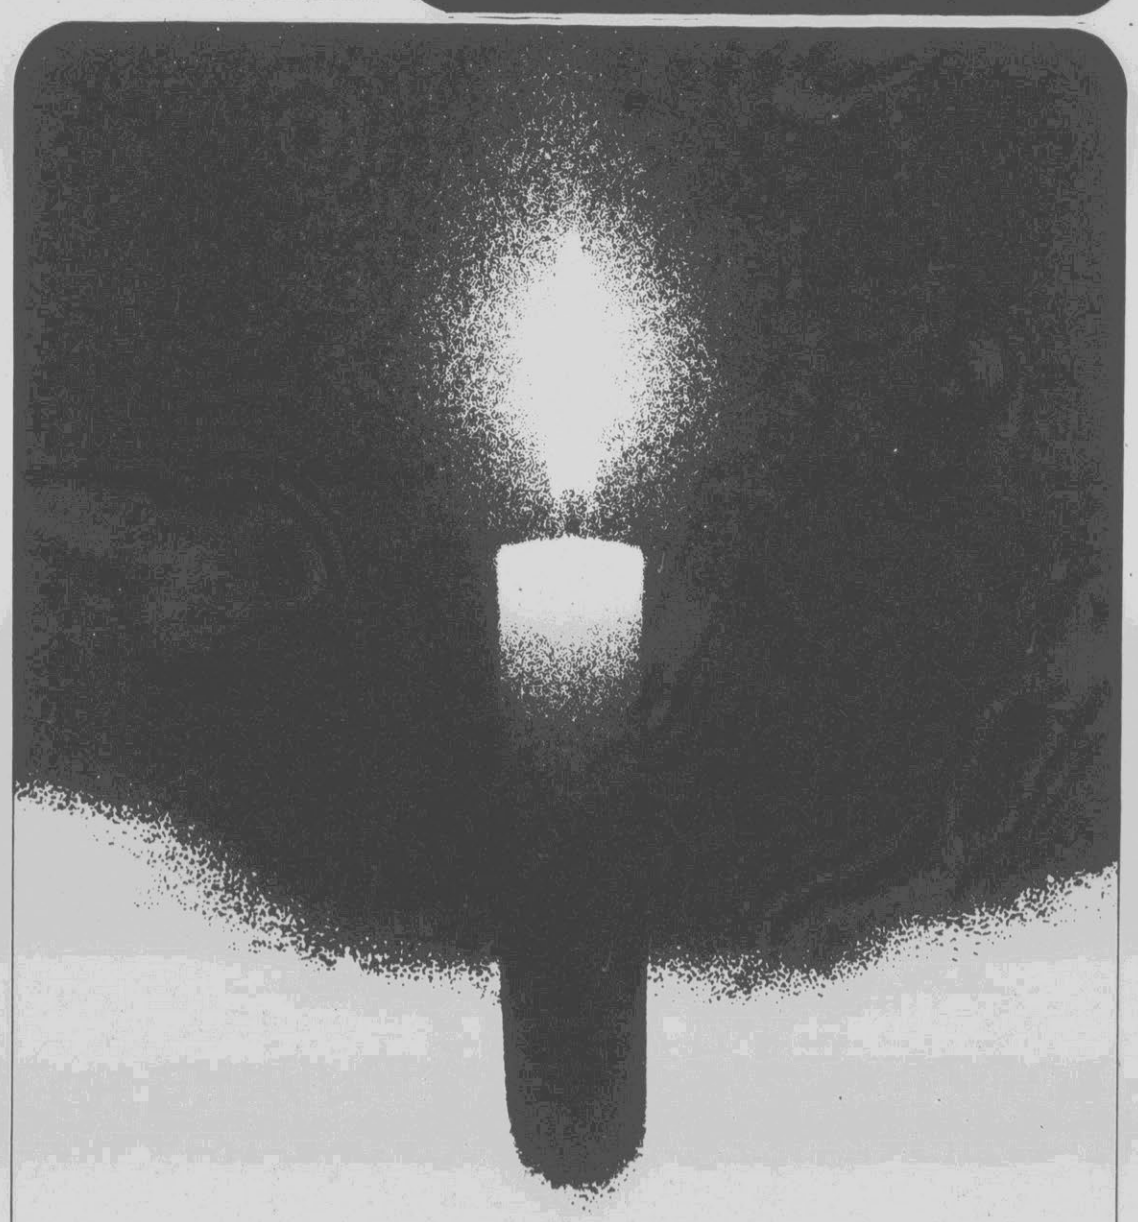

His popularity has tumbled with voters because of austerity measures his government imposed following a collapse in world prices of oil, the country's main export.

SHE'S HAPPY — Maria Serrao, left, applauds along with other contestnts during the finals of the Miss Solano County pageant Sunday in Fairfield, Calif. Miss Serrao, 23, a model and actress who was paralyzed in a car accident 18 years ago, was the first wheelchair-bound contestant to compete in a local pageant leading to the Miss USA contests. Wheelchair Beauty Happy To Compete FAIRFIELD, Calif. (AP) — A wheelchair-bound woman who danced and modeled a swimsuit and nightgown in a local beauty pageant says she it was a rewarding experience even though she lost.

"I've had a really good time here and I think that we've realized that there are more important things than winning," said Maria Serrao, 23. "We all feel pretty good about ourselves right now. I think that's the most important thing."

The title of Miss Solano went to 18-year-old Terri Zorn of Suisun City, who won out over 21 other contestants Sunday night.

Miss Serrao, paralyzed in a car accident when she was 5 years old, was the first wheelchair-bound woman to enter a local beauty contest leading to the Miss USA and Miss Universe pageants.

The movie and TV actress participated in the program's opening production, swinging her arms and spinning her wheelchair in a dance number that featured the contestants in a Las Vegas-style chorus line in feather headdresses and sequined costumes.

Miss Serrao received enthusiastic applause during the number, and in the evening gown and swimsuit competitions.

"If somebody looks to me as an inspiration, that's great," she said. "People can do a lot of things they think they can't. If I could be a role model for someone to help overcome their obstacles, then I'd feel good."

Miss Serrao has appeared on television's "Cagney and Lacey," "Trapper John, M.D." and "General Hospital," and in the film "The Falcon and the Snowman."

Evangelist's Money-Or-Death Plea For Donations Stirs His Followers

By GIL BROYLES
Associated Press Writer

TULSA, Okla. (AP) — Oral Roberts was the object of jokes in 1980 when he based a fund-raising campaign on a vision of a 900-foot-tall Jesus.

Four years later, the evangelist's ministry asked for donations while offering a 7-inch-tall replica of an angel Roberts said visited him.

This year, with his following dropping off, his City of Faith Medical Center unable to fill its beds and the university named after him struggling, Roberts told viewers he will die in March unless he raises $4.5 million for medical missionary scholarships.

A spokeswoman says the evangelist means what he says and that his supporters have no reason to question his methods.

Roberts said God gave him the ultimatum in March, warning that he had to raise a total of $8 million or "I'm going to call you home in one year." The money, $3.5 million of which already had been raised, is to allow Oral Roberts University medical students to graduate debt-free and become missionaries.

Roberts' latest appeal has been criticized by some religious leaders and a few of the 200 television stations that broadcast his program. One station said it would not run Roberts' message, while others said they will screen programs for such appeals before broadcasting them.

"The danger is not so much in the way funds are raised, but in that it can lead people to believe in a God that is manipulative," said the Rev. Kent Ingram of the Boston Avenue Methodist Church, where Roberts is a registered member. "He may not mean that, but that's what frightens me."

The ministry said $1.6 million in cash and pledges poured in within two weeks of Roberts' remarks Jan. 4.

Roberts rarely grants interviews and has been out of state since he reported his conversation with God.

Jan Dargatz, the ministry's vice president for creative development, said she believes the goal will be reached and that Roberts will live.

"He firmly believes that this is a mandate of God on his life, something that he must do. This is his next project for God, and his life is on the line about it. It's not atypical for him to do this," Dargatz said.

Roberts, 68, entered the spotlight 40 years ago with fiery sermons and faith healing that drew thousands to huge tents erected across the South.

Today, he heads a $500 million empire that includes the university named after him, a huge medical complex in Tulsa and an evangelistic association that has offices in seven countries. His syndicated TV specials began 30 years ago and his weekly "Expect A Miracle" program has been on for 20 years.

The number of households watching the 30-minute show, however, has dropped in the last eight years from 2.5 million to 1 million, ministry officials say.

In 1981, Roberts opened his medical center next to the campus, featuring three gleaming towers 20-, 30- and 60-stories high.

But followers failed to flock to the City of Faith despite his warnings that the devil was trying to close it. The hospital was built to accommodate 777 beds but was allotted 294 by planning officials and has treated an average of only 120 at a time.

Last year, he gave employees prizes for bringing patients and offered free airline tickets to followers who would fly to Tulsa for medical treatment.

Ms. Dargatz said the hospital broke even last month. "We feel like we have that ship righted," she said.

Ministry officials also say that Oral Roberts University is now self-sufficient, but only after the dental school was closed and the law school was conveyed to fellow evangelist Pat Robertson.

Income has also been dropping. The Tulsa Tribune reported last year that Roberts received $58 million in contributions in fiscal 1985, a drop of nearly $30 million from five years before.

In 1980, as funds for completing the City of Faith lagged, Roberts told followers he had had a vision of a 900-foot Jesus standing above the hospital and lifting it with his hands.

"I felt an overwhelming holy presence all around me," Roberts wrote to supporters. "When I opened my eyes, there He stood ... some 900 feet tall, looking at me. His eyes ... Oh! His eyes! He stood a full 300 feet taller than the 600-foot-tall City of Faith."

Study Shows Energy Audits Accomplishing Little

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal requirements that utilities must offer energy audits to their customers — a major conservation initiative of the late 1970s — do not seem to have saved much energy, congressional investigators say.

It is possible that more energy was spent doing the audits than was saved, according to the analyst in charge of a report from the General Accounting Office.

Few homeowners participated. Those who did probably cut their household energy use by 4 percent at most.

Blacks Urged To 'Live Dream'

By CHERIE EVANS
Reflector Staff Writer

Local minority leaders who gathered at Sycamore Hill Baptist Church Monday night to commemorate the birthday of Martin Luther King Jr. spoke on a common theme — "Live the Dream."

"You can kill the dreamer, but you can't kill the dream," said Dr. Howard W. Parker to about 100 people who attended the service. Parker, the pastor of Sycamore Church, was the keynote speaker for the service.

He told a story of how author Howard Thurman was helped by a black man who bought his bus ticket when going to college. Years later, Thurman dedicated a book to "the stranger at the bus station," Parker said.

"Now to him that is able, find that person and restore their dream," he said, like the stranger in the bus station had done.

Other speakers during the program reflected on King's contributions to society, and they discussed where blacks should be focusing their attention this year.

The year "1987 will be a crucial year for black people," said Willie Mae Carney of the Pitt County Caucus. "For many of us the dream has gone," she said, explaining that many blacks had dreamed of voting, sitting at all-white lunch counters and using public restrooms.

"Begin dreaming again," Mrs. Carney said. Challenge racism and discrimination wherever it exists. "We must not let go of that dream," she said.

King "learned to deal with fear," said Ernest Brown of the Pitt County Concerned Citizens for Justice. "Being afraid would not have allowed him to be free."

Concerned Citizens for Justice are "all about doing the things we were afraid to do," he said. "Power is never given up voluntarily. You have to take it," Brown said, paraphrasing the words of Fredrick Douglas.

"We (blacks) are the only people in this country that don't have an economic base," he said. "We're the only people that when they pay us on Friday the man's got it all back on Monday."

Blacks must develop an economic base, Brown said, expressing support for a six-district plan being reviewed by the Pitt County Board of Commissioners and the Board of Education.

"Out of six districts, we can get one-third of the districts predominantly black — that's two of the six," he said.

County Board Extends Deadline For Tax Lists

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

Property owners in Pitt County were given a reprieve of sorts by the Board of County Commissioners Monday.

Since Jan. 31 falls on a Saturday this year, the board voted to extend the deadline for listing property for tax purposes until Feb. 2. In doing so, commissioners are giving property owners an extra workday to list their property before a late listing penalty is charged.

But people who fail to list their property before the close of business on Feb. 2, or those persons who list by mail and fail to have their mail abstracts postmarked before midnight Feb. 2, will face the late-listing charge.

Ccommissioners approved the purchase of an ultra high frequency advanced life support radio — at a cost of $7,760 — for a Greenville Fire-Rescue Department rescue truck.

Bobby Joyner, the county's emergency services coordinator, reported that Greenville rescue workers are the only rescue squad members in the county who are certified to use defibrillators on cardiac patients in the field and said the radio is mandatory to provide the communications link with doctors in the hospital's emergency department.

Joyner said the new radio will give the city three vehicles equipped to send telemetry signals to the hospital.

The board also approved a 5 percent increase — $950 a year — in payments to Crothall American for such supplies as toilet tissue, paper towels, wastebasket liners, drinking cups, lightbulbs, soap, which are used in county office buildings. Crothall American provides housekeeping services and supplies to the county under contract.

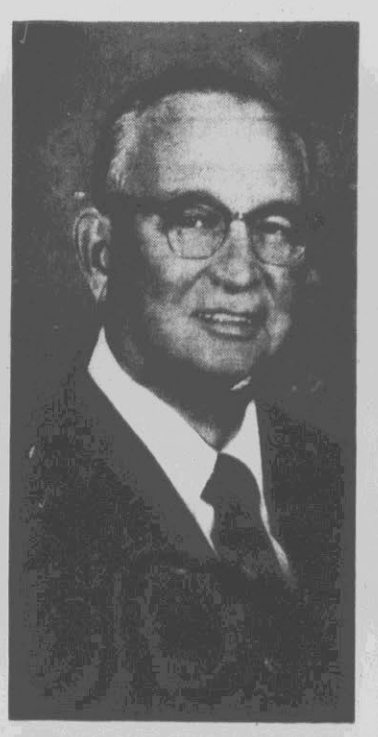

In other business, commissioners adopted a resolution endorsing and asking that the county be included in the N.C. Agriculture Cost Share Program and approved a letter endorsing a proposed research and demonstration farm and farm show.

The purpose of the cost share program is to help protect the water quality in the state by reducing the amount of agricultural pollutants (sediment, nutrients, animal wastes, pesticides) that enter streams and rivers, and to assist farmers in making their production operations more efficient by increasing the level of on-farm management.

Administered by soil and water conservation district offices in the state, the program — at no cost to the county — can provide up to 75 percent of the average cost of such projects as conservation tillage, field borders, sediment control structures, grassed waterways, stripcropping and animal waste management systems.

The board agreed to endorse a proposed research and demonstration farm and farm show after Clifton

Expo '87 To Be Held April 2-4

By JANE WELBORN
Reflector Staff Writer

Greenville's third annual trade Show, Expo '87, will be held April 2-4 at the New Greenville Warehouse on highway 33, Pitt-Greenville Chamber of Commerce officials announced today.

Chamber officials said the trade show is expected to attract over 150 exhibitors spotlighting local business and industry, agriculture, education and home and garden products. Both large and small companies from eastern North Carolina will participate.

The chamber is sponsoring the event, which is organized by the Special Projects Division.

Expo co-chairman Wayne Dempsey said the attendance goal is 25,000. Last year's trade fair attracted 20,000 people during the three-day event.

"People have come in not only from Pitt County but from all over eastern North Carolina," said chamber president Ed Walker. "It has been a healthy situation both for business and for customers and consumers in the area to come in and see what is offered."

"Just about everything you can imagine will be on sale" during the trade fair, Dempsey said. "Both large and small items will be sold, and a wide range will be displayed."

Walker said the space has been added for 20 exhibits this year by tightening up the booth arrangement. A concession stand will be located in the rear of the warehouse, in addition to the food booths near the front entrance.

Entertainment for the trade show will include the Embers, Super Grit Cowboy Band and Atlantis.

Hours for Expo '87 are from 10 a.m. until 9 p.m. April 2 and April 3 and from 10 a.m. until 6 p.m. April 4. An admission fee will be charged.

Applications for exhibits must be completed by March 13. For information call the chamber at 752-4101.

Waite Prolongs Stay In Beirut

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Hostage negotiator Terry Waite met with Shiite Moslems holding American hostages and then decided today to prolong his stay in Lebanon, sources close to the Anglican Church envoy said.

"It looked like he has had a breakthrough," said one source, speaking on condition of anonymity. "He will have further meetings with the captors."

Waite had planned to take a morning flight to London. The sources said he canceled his plans after returning to his hotel from a late-night meeting with Islamic Jihad, the pro-Iranian Shiite Moslem group which says it holds two American captives.

This morning, Waite appeared in the lobby of his seaside hotel in Moslem west Beirut's Druse-controlled Ein Mreisseh district at 9:20 a.m. He and three Druse bodyguards then drove off to an unknown destination.

The envoy returned two hours later and went straight to his room, refusing to answer questions about his activities and plans.

Waite said Monday he had established contact with Islamic Jihad, or Islamic Holy War, and had received assurances that kidnapped Americans Terry A. Anderson and Thomas Sutherland were "well looked after."

"Their condition is generally good," he said.

Peggy Say, Anderson's sister, said today from her home in Batavia, N.Y. that she was encouraged by Waite's assessment that the hostages are healthy.

"I'm just waiting it out," said Mrs. Say. "I don't know anything more than what's in the media."

In an interview Monday with The Associated Press, Waite also said he feared he might be kidnapped himself. Attempts were made to kidnap him during four previous negotiating trips to Beirut, he said.

He said the danger that a terrorist group would abduct him during a negotiating session was made "increasingly dangerous" by the arrests in Europe of two Lebanese suspected of terrorism.

Civil Rights Marchers Stage Grimesland Walk

About 50 people sang civil rights hymns and called for justice during a march through Grimesland Monday afternoon to protest the Jan. 4 shooting of a black youth.

On Sunday, 15 marchers were arrested for parading without a license in a similar demonstration. Demonstrators had a valid permit for Monday's march.

"We have come here to serve notice on Grimesland that racism has no part in North Carolina," Bennie Rountree, president of the Pitt County Southern Leadership Conference, told demonstrators during a stop at Grimesland Town Hall.

Rountree was among those arrested Sunday.

Participants, who were led by Rountree and civil rights activist Golden Frinks on the one-mile march, began their journey on Lancelot Street and walked down Pitt Street to Town Hall before returning on the same route.

Daniel Lee Williams, 21, of P.O. Box 28, Grimesland, was arrested and charged with assault with a deadly weapon inflicting serious injury in connection with the shooting, according to Pitt County Sheriff Ralph Tyson.

Meamwhile, three youths, including Jimmy Simmons, 16, of 404 Smith St., Bethel, who was injured in the shooting, have been charged with breaking and entering a motor vehicle in connection with the incident, Tyson said.

Board Proposes Joint Meeting

Members of the Pitt County Board of Commissioners agreed Monday to ask representatives of the Board of Education to meet to discuss using coterminus boundries for new election districts for both boards.

The commissioners will begin a series of public hearings Wednesday night on a proposed new method of electing members of the board.

Commissioners in the past have voiced support for having the same district boundries, but the board has never met with the school board to discuss district lines.

The school board, as well as the Board of Commissioners, is in the process of establishing a new method of electing members to insure black representation.

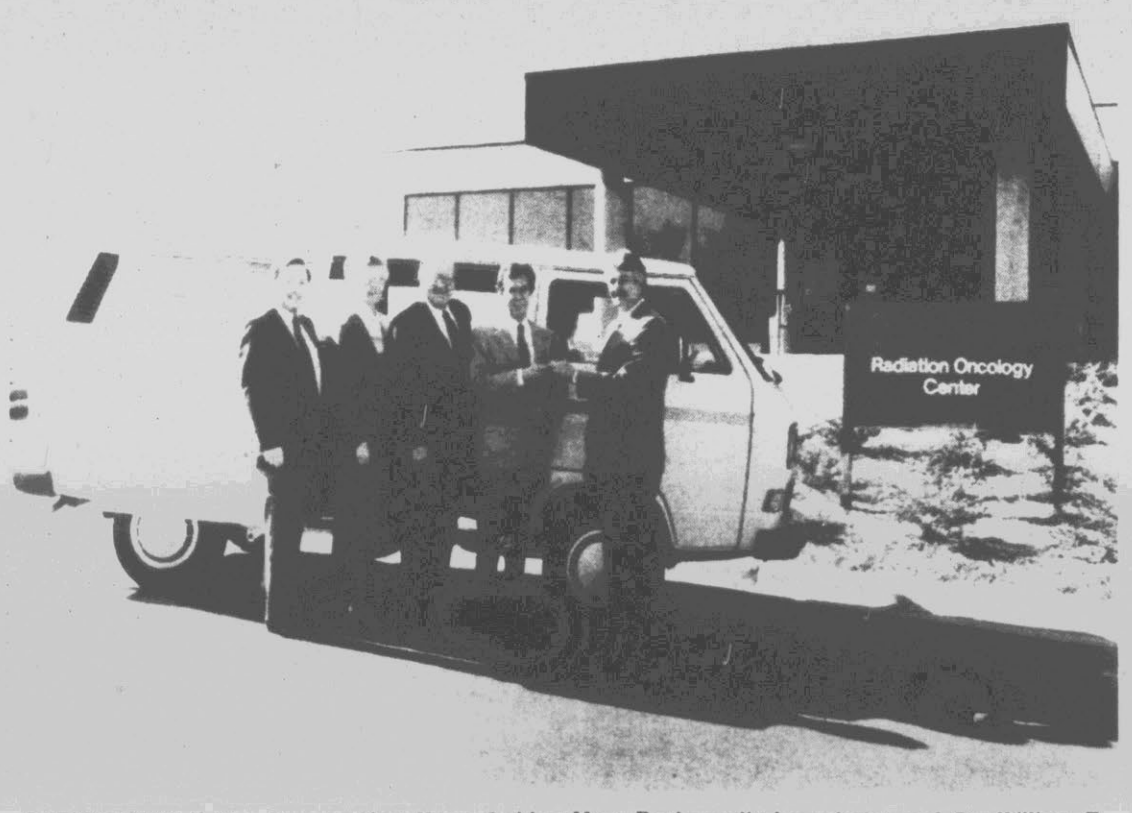

At a public hearing last week, speakers urged members of the Board of Education to adopt a six-district plan similar to one commissioners will present at six public hearings over the next three weeks — one in each of the proposed six districts.

The county elections board has also recommended that the school board and commissioners use the same district lines.

Commissioner Tom Johnson said people attending the hearings should be encouraged to have "input on any ... districting plan," not just the proposed six-district plan, and on the question of at-large representation.

All of the public hearings on proposed changes in the method of electing commissioners will be at 7 p.m. The one Wednesday will be at North Pitt High School while one Thursday will be at Ayden-Grifton High School.

Other hearings are scheduled for Jan. 22 at Farmville Central High School, Jan. 29 at Pactolus School, Feb. 4 at Wahl-Coates School in Greenville, and Feb. 5 at A.G. Cox School in Winterville.

TS STUDY

Duke University is seeking families having more than one person with tuberous sclerosis. Dr. Raymond S. Kandt of Duke is doing research on how the disease is inherited. He described it as affecting the skin with light-colored patches, bumps on the face, around fingernails and toenails, thickened skin on the lower back, and sometimes cysts and benign tumors of the kidneys, eyes, brain, heart tumors in babies and lung problems in women. Mental retardation and seizures can be a part of it.

TS is an autosomal dominant disease. When a person has it, half of his or her children are likely to develop it. However, some cases appear to have begun by mutation.

Any family which can help is asked to call Dr. Kandt at 684-3219. To obtain more information about TS, call collect, Debbie Murphy, 747-8592.

THREE INJURED IN ACCIDENT — Three people were injured Monday when a vehicle driven by Norma Jean Bunch of Chocowinity collided with another vehicle driven by Joseph Lancaster III of 107 Lakewood Drive, Greenville, on N.C. 33 1.4 miles east of Greenville. Josephine Lancaster, a passenger in the second auto, was listed in critical condition early today at Pitt County Memorial Hospital. Joseph Lancaster and Ms. Bunch were also injured in the accident. Witness Says Conrail Crew Was Violating Rules Before Crash

By H. JOSEF HEBERT
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The operators of the Conrail locomotive that collided with an Amtrak passenger plane violated at least a half-dozen operating rules and actually were increasing speed when a signal told them to slow down, a congressional hearing was told today.

John Riley, head of the Federal Railroad Administration, testified that if the Conrail crew had "observed and responded in a timely manner to any of six warning signals," the locomotive would have stopped short of the track intersection where the collision took place.

Riley was the leadoff witness in the first of a series of congressional hearings planned in the aftermath of the Jan. 4 rail accident near Baltimore in which 16 people were killed and 175 were injured. It was the worst accident in Amtrak's history.

In opening remarks, Sen. Frank Lautenberg, D-N.J., said the accident makes clear that train engineers should be licensed and that the railroad industry should be required to comply with a broader drug- and alcohol-testing program.

"Today (train engineers) don't even need a (automobile) driver's license," said Lautenberg, the chairman of the Senate transportation appropriation subcommittee.

Riley said the signal system at the accident site apparently was operating properly and told the Conrail train operators to slow to no more than 20 miles per hour nearly a mile from the track junction. That signal, he said, should also have flashed in the cab and triggered a warning whistle, but both of those devices were malfunctioning.

As the train was being told to slow, Riley said, "The Conrail freight actually accelerated through this point to a maximum speed of 62 mph."

In separate testimony prepared for the subcommittee, W. Graham Claytor Jr., president and chairman of Amtrak, said that the Conrail crew violated at least six safety operating rules from the time they left the freight yard in Baltimore to when the collision occurred.

"Compliance with any one of (these rules) ... could have avoided the accident," Claytor testified.

He said operating rules were violated when the Conrail engineer and brakeman did not properly inspect the cab signal system and pulled out even though it was not working properly. Investigators have found that the warning whistle had been taped over and muffled and that a light bulb was apparently missing on a critical signal device.

Claytor said other violations included not taking care to observe signals, passing a speed signal without communications between the brakeman and engineer, failure to slow when a cab signal malfunction was noticed, failure to respond to a speed restriction signal and running through a stop signal.

Among the issues of concern to members of Congress are the question of freight trains using the same track as high-speed passenger trains in the Northeast corridor.

Lautenberg suggested that freight traffic could not economically be barred from the corridor and Riley said, "There is nothing inherently unsafe about

But Sen. Claiborne Pell, R-R.I., said in a recent letter to Lautenberg that the accident "underscores the need to expedite the removal of all freight service from the corridor." He said Congress ought to begin a study of the issue and make recommendations by the end of the year.

An average of 24 Conrail freight trains a day use the Amtrak tracks between Washington and Philadelphia, with about 70 percent of them operating between 10 p.m. and 6 a.m. when there are few passenger trains, according to industry officials.

On Thursday, the House government activities and transportation subcommittee holds a session to examine the adequacy of drug testing and other efforts to ensure that railroad workers are not under the influence of drugs.

Among the questions is whether federal regulations that went into force less than a year ago are adequate to curb the use of alcohol and drugs by railroad employees.

Blood and urine tests have showed marijuana use by both the Conrail engineer and brakeman, though it has not been determined whether the two were impaired to the point at which drug use contributed to the accident.

Federal safety officials for years have complained about alcohol — and more recently drug — involvement in railroad accidents. According to the Transportation Department, there were 48 train wrecks between 1975 and 1985 resulting from drug or alcohol impairment. In those accidents 37 people died and 80 were injured.

ECU Fund Established To Honor Dead Nurses

The faculty of the school of nursing at East Carolina University has established a memorial scholarship fund to honor the memory of nurses Pamela Demaree and Mike McGinnis, who were killed in the crash of the EastCare helicopter ambulance in Jones County Jan. 8.

In addition to Miss Demaree and McGinnis, pilot Perry Reynolds and a 3-month-old infant being transported from Camp Lejeune Naval Hospital to Pitt County Memorial Hospital in Greenville were killed.

Pam Demaree, of Raleigh, was a 1981 graduate of the ECU School of Nursing and was a part-time graduate student in nursing at ECU. McGinnis was the chief flight nurse for EastCare and had been an emergency care nurse in Chapel Hill and Durham prior to employment at PCMH. He was a resource person for the ECU Senior Leadership Course and had worked in the clinical setting with faculty and students.

The nursing school faculty contributed $200 to initiate the scholarship. Additional gifts have been made by individual nursing faculty members, students and alumni.

Mike Ball of the ECU Office of Institutional Advancement said the Demaree-McGinnis scholarship will be awarded annually to deserving nursing students selected by the school's scholarship committee.

Persons interested in making contributions to the scholarship fund should contact the ECU Foundation Inc., Taylor/Slaughter Alumni Center, ECU. Contributions should be designated for the Pam Demaree and Mike McGinnis Memorial Scholarship Fund in Nursing, Ball said.

Japan Schedules Talks On Dollar

TOKYO (AP) — Finance Minister Kiichi Miyazawa said today that he plans an emergency meeting with U.S. Treasury Secretary James Baker to discuss the surge of the yen against the dollar.

"Though we cannot write any scenario, we just can't sit here and waste time," Miyazawa told a news conference after today's Cabinet meeting.

Yuko Kurihara, director general of the Defense Agency, said Miyazawa would leave Wednesday for the United States to discuss the soaring yen, which closed at a post-1949 low of 150.45 yen to the dollar on Monday.

Miyazawa said the currency market situation was "serious enough to require a meeting" with Baker as stipulated in an agreement between the two officials announced last October.

In that agreement, issued after the Bank of Japan cut its official discount rate to a record low of 3 percent, Miyazawa and Baker pledged to cooperate in keeping the two currencies stable.

The discount rate is the interest rate charged by the central bank in its loans to commercial banks.

But the Miyazawa-Baker accord did not specify what level the two countries considered appropriate for the dollar and the yen. It generally was believed that they had an exchange rate of about 160 yen to the dollar in mind.

Miyazawa declined to confirm local news reports there would be a meeting of the Group of Five — the United States, Japan, Britain, West Germany and France — in an attempt to stop the yen's surge, which is causing export and employment problems in Japan.

A stronger yen makes Japanese products more expensive overseas.

At a meeting in New York in September 1985, the Group of Five agreed under U.S. pressure to decrease the dollar's value from its rate at the time of 242 yen per dollar because of America's huge trade deficit with Japan.

The U.S. dollar plunged by 2.65 yen Monday on the Tokyo Foreign Exchange Market, closing at 150.45 yen, compared with its Friday closing of 153.10 yen. Today, the dollar rebounded to close at 152.25 yen in Tokyo.

Monday's dollar closing was the lowest since the Japanese government set an official exchange rate of 360 yen to the dollar in April 1949 following a period of post-World War II fluctuations.

The dollar's previous post-1949 low was 153.05 yen per dollar, reached last Aug. 20.

The high yen has slowed Japanese exports, eroded corporate earnings and forced many manufacturers to cut production and investments.

Some Military Dependants Will Pay For Medical Care

By NORMAN BLACK
AP Military Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Some military dependents and retirees will have to begin paying for outpatient medical care at military hospitals next year, and Pentagon officials say they don't like it any more than the patients will.

The charges are part of a test program ordered by the White House Office of Management and Budget to reduce what a spokesman for the OMB said might be called the "frivolous" use of free government hospitals and to save taxpayers' money. It would not apply to personnel on active-duty.

"This is rather obscurely buried in the budget and the word is only now starting to seep out," said one top Pentagon official who spoke Monday only on condition of anonymity.

"But it's already sending people up the walls. The general public might view this as reasonable. But it's an incredibly emotional thing to the military. Rational people get unrational on this," he said.

Ed Dale, spokesman for OMB, acknowledged "there was some back-and-forth" internally between his agency and the Pentagon over the idea.

"But its purpose is fairly obvious," he said. "As with other user fees, its purpose is to reduce marginal — some might say frivolous — utilization of health care facilities."

"You can understand the genesis of it," one Pentagon official said, also speaking on condition he not be identified. "But," the official added, "the military has certain obligations to its people. For example, the sailor goes off to sea, leaving behind a teen-age wife and new baby. The wife doesn't know how to take the baby's temperature so she brings him to a clinic. It happens. So how are you going to charge her for that?"

"We're very concerned about this," agreed Chapman Cox, the Pentagon's top official for personnel issues.

Military authorities are worried that the test could lead to a permanent system of outpatient fees, reducing a key military benefit, undermining morale and damaging recruiting and retention efforts.

The size and location of the experiment have yet to be determined. Pentagon officials say they will, however, keep it small and have proceeds from fees plowed back to military personnel as contributions to the morale and recreation fund or use it for improvement of medical facilities.

All told, 7 million retirees and military dependents are eligible to use military hospitals and clinics without charge if space is available. Active-duty personnel are guaranteed free medical care at all times.

Military medical facilities handle some 50 million outpatient visits every year.

Crash House

SANTA ROSA, Calif. (AP) — The sound of a car passing Bill and Elizabeth Russells' home might make them cringe these days, because six vehicles have careened off a narrow road and crashed into their yard in a year.

The last was a tanker truck carrying 1,000 gallons of old motor oil. The truck crashed as workers were repairing $15,000 in damage to the Russells' fence and garage from a New Year's Day car accident.

The truck hit a ditch, went out of control and overturned a few yards from the master bedroom.

Russell said the problem started when the county repaved the road, an old stagecoach route.

"For as long as I can remember, the road was full of potholes and for years we kept after the county to fix it," he said. "Well, they did and now people speed where before they had to drive slow to avoid blowing a tire.

"I wish we'd left well enough alone."

Government, wholesale/retail and manufacturing each account for 25 percent of total employment in Pitt County.

Administration Proposes Immigration Rules Change

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration proposed today tentative immigration rules requiring every citizen or alien hired for a new job to prove residency and eligibility to work in the United States.

The rules would, for the first time, require all U.S. citizens to prove their legal status when applying for a job.

The rules, released today by the Immigration and Naturalization Service, provide the first glimpse into administration plans for enforcement of the landmark immigration law passed by Congress in 1986 after years of unsuccessful efforts.

Under the proposed rules, evidence of eligibility for work could be shown with a passport or a naturalization certificate or a combination of documents such as a Social Security card and a driver's license with a photo.

These would have to be shown to an employer within 24 hours of employment, said the source, who spoke Monday only on condition of anonymity. Forms showing the employer has verified eligibility must be available in the workplace in case of an inspection by immigration agents.

The INS is following an unusual procedure that makes the tentative rules public before they normally would be released. Formal release usually comes when rules are printed in the Federal Register — a procedure which is scheduled for Feb. 25. A 30-day period for public comment begins on that day.

The immigration service decided to circulate in advance what amounts to a draft copy to Congress, other government agencies and interest groups that have been following the immigration law.

"This is a unique opportunity to solicit a broad range of public comment by allowing working drafts" to be distributed, said Mark W. Everson, executive associate INS commissioner.

INS Commissioner Alan C. Nelson said, "We are taking this unprecedented step to permit as much public input as possible to ensure that the new legislation will be implemented effectively, fairly and in an orderly manner."

Nelson said comments on the tentative rules should be received by the agency by Feb. 5. After publication in the Federal Register at the end of February, further responses should be received by the end of March, with final rules to be issued in mid-April, Nelson said.

Coastal Resources Hearings Scheduled

RALEIGH — The Coastal Resources Commission will receive public comments on two proposed rule changes at hearings during its meeting Thursday and Friday in Beaufort.

The hearings Thursday will begin at 10 a.m. A proposed change in marina standards would make it possible for a marina to be built in areas without existing shellfish resources if the project would not violate water quality standards. The rules for pier construction would be revised so that only private, non-commercial activities would be exempt from obtaining a major development permit.

At 1:30 p.m. Thursday concurrent committee meetings will begin. Land use plan updates for Emerald Isle, Plymouth, Havelock, Elizabeth City and Chowan County will be reviewed and a report on coastal water quality will be discussed.

The committee will also reveiw the report on the nomination of Buxton Woods as an area of environmental concern and consider guidelines for establishing beach access areas.

On Friday, the CRC will hear various reports from the committee meetings and consider requests for a declaratory ruling.

The meeting will be held at Duke University Marine Laboratory in Beaufort, will all sessions to begin at 9 a.m. and to be open to the public.

Sound Plan

The Pitt County Commissioners appear to have done their homework before they proposed a new election plan for the board.

The plan is a sound one because it incorporates members elected by both residency district and at-large. It provides for minority representation on the board by creating two predominantly black districts but it protects the one-man, one-vote stipulation.

The plan also keeps the board to a reasonable number — nine members — a most important measure.

As public hearings on the issue get under way Wednesday and Thursday, the citizens should carefully consider these merits.

Given the variables and the population distribution of Pitt County, the proposal is in the best interest of the county. Minorities should recognize the potential it affords them and other citizens should appreciate the protection it gives their concerns.

By providing both at-large and residency district voting, the plan ensures that the county commission will remain balanced. The three at-large members — politically responsible to all the voters in the county — will keep the board from becoming a panel serving only the interests of their individual districts.

On the other hand, by creating predominantly minority districts, the plan assures that minorities will have a visible voting voice when it comes to electing commissioners.

Objections by local civil rights advocates to including some students from East Carolina University in one of the predominantly black districts is a non-issue. Students rarely, if ever, vote in local elections, and it is doubtful they could sway the outcome if they did. Further carving of election districts could destroy the integrity of the individual vote — a point which cannot be compromised.

The county commission should proceed with its proposal. It must be thoroughly explained and defended at the six public hearings across the county.

Public input, always important, should be considered, but commissioners should not abandon their pledge to a combination of at-large and residency voting. Nor should they increase the the number of representatives on the board.

Those two changes could plunge the county back into provincialism that spells regression.

More Awareness

Former National Security Adviser Robert McFarlane, himself a key figure in the Iran-Contra arms dealings, claims to be especially concerned about public interest in American foreign policy. He wants more.

As a speaker at the Rochester Institute of Technology, McFarlane welcomed appearance of demonstrators at his lecture because it was a show of student interest in the shaping of foreign policy. One aspect of his address was the listing of three conditions that should be met before the United States backed groups to change their government by revolutionary means.

The country must be vital to U.S. interests; the planned change must have support of the country's population; and the attempt should have a good chance of success.

He acknowledged those conditions were hard to meet, but the point was that there ought to be a list on how to deal with the problem. He had a good point.

Our government looks with favor on some revolutionary movements and shuns others; sometimes we become involved and often do not. Still, a broad awareness as to how those decisions are reached is often absent. It is a shortcoming that should be remedied.

New Ideas For An Old Problem

BOSTON — Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis' soul-searching ruminations over the "awesome task" he faces in deciding whether to seek the 1988 Democratic presidential nomination have been tantamount to an announcement of candidacy. Tired of New York neighbor Mario Cuomo's flirtations with the race, Dukakis turned his recent inaugural into a bid for the status of "Democratic governor to watch."

The clearest sign was that the theme of the Duke's speech, "bringing down the barriers" to economic opportunity — drug abuse, teen pregnancy, school dropouts, illiteracy and delinquent child support — was lifted straight from the National Governors Association's latest platform. The group meets in Washington, D.C., next month to discuss economic strategy and welfare reform. Dukakis plainly hopes that he, not Mario Cuomo, will appear the standardbearer.

Dukakis, 53, is among a group of neoliberal Democratic governors who stress fiscal responsibility, economic expansion — especially in high-tech industries — and public-private sector cooperation, "leavened," as Boston Globe columnist Bob Kuttner dryly puts it, "with a pinch of social justice." Massachusetts' Employment Training (ET) program, which helps welfare mothers find work, has gotten national attention. Dukakis would be a "new ideas" candidate in 1988.

To some, the governor's leadership on the poverty issue seems ironic: Massachusetts is now contesting a court order which would require higher benefit levels for its 85,000 families on AFDC (Aid to Families With Dependent Children). The new-liberal recipe of budget balancing and compassion can be hard to follow. But, in fact, it's precisely Dukakis' problem with AFDC that should give us hope. Here's why.

Look back at the five barriers to success that the National Governors Association and Dukakis cite. Which has the largest direct impact on poverty? School dropouts? Drugs, so much shouted over recently? Not even close.

The biggest short-term source of poverty in the United States is lack of child support. According to my reporter Kyle Chadwick, the numbers are surprising.

The fraction of American kids living in poverty, about one-fourth, is higher than that for any other group, including the elderly. It's often due to family composition. Seventy-three percent of all poor black families in 1985 were female-headed. And among all children who are stuck in poverty, about half are in single-parent families.

"The current system of providing financial support for these children," says Tom Corbett of the University of Wisconsin Institute for Research on Poverty, "is not doing the job."

Recent academic estimates say up to 75 percent of single mothers receive less than adequate child support. Women who have never married have it worst: 83 percent have no court-ordered settlements at all; 91 percent don't get a cent from the dad, settlement or no. Rich fathers are just as likely to welch as poor ones. But a Massachusetts study concluded last year found that nine out of 10 families on AFDC in that state would not be if child support were forthcoming.

Now, none of this is new to policymakers. In 1984, Congress unanimously ordered states to impound the wages and tax refunds of absent parents who fell more than a month behind in child-support payments. Last year, such collections are estimated to have transferred $3.2 billion to single-headed families of all income levels. In liberal Wisconsin, grandparents are liable for support; Massachusetts and New York also have particularly tough laws.

But it's still not enough. State collection bureaus are swamped with work. The irony is that experts agree if enough effort were expended on child-support collection, states could actually save millions of dollars on AFDC.

Cambodians Still Forgotten People

The world's attention span for disasters is usually not of much longer duration than the headlines that generated the sympathetic interest in the first place.

Cambodia is one of those major disasters that has just about fallen from public view.

In truth, the small Southeast Asian nation was always an afterthought for all the great powers, which have been waging war there in one form or another — through surrogate armies — since 1970. Vietnam was the priority, Cambodia the country that was pulled into its wake.

And, now, we have another demonstration of the Cambodians as a forgotten people. Thailand has decided to close down the refugee camp that represented a last hope of resettlement abroad for Cambodians who had escaped their country's misery and turmoil.

It isn't that the camp, called Khao I Dang, is empty. There are still 26,000 Cambodian refugees in it. But Thailand has decided that it has waited long enough for Western nations to accept them and that it can no longer bear the burden of having a large, long-term refugee population on its soil.

"So many have only promised and have taken no action," said Prasong Soonsiri, the senior Thai official announced recently that Khao I Dang would soon be shut down.

Unless something happens to alter this decision, the 26,000 people in this camp not far from the border with Cambodia, including many infants born there, will lose their legal status as refugees and become "displaced persons" — vulnerable pawns once again.

Initially, these people will be moved even closer to the border to camps that are administered not by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees but by the resistance groups that have been waging guerrilla war against the Vietnamese army and the client government it installed in Cambodia in 1979.

The new arrivals will join 250,000 Cambodians who are already classified as "displaced persons." These are people who have fled into Thailand in the last couple of years to escape the stepped-up fighting. (In addition to these Cambodians-without-a-country, there are perhaps 100,000 similarly displaced Laotians and a small number of Vietnamese.)

The rose-colored notion behind the denial of refugee status is that these victims of the Indochina war can be returned to their nations of origin when conditions permit. That would require the restoration of something approaching normalcy in Cambodia. And that, in turn, would require all three great powers — China, the Soviet Union and the United States — to agree to make Cambodia a priority, something they have never done.

So these hundreds of thousands of people will likely remain in wretched limbo for years, maybe decades.

The people of Khao I Dang were the last large group to have special status, protection from the "displaced" label. This was because these Cambodians, or at least most of them, had escaped into Thailand before August 1984 — a deadline set by the Thai government, after which no one could be a legal refugee.

Of the 26,000 in Khao I Dang, about 16,000 are legal refugees. There is an in-between group of some 6,000 who were allowed in and given ration cards but did not qualify for full refugee status. And then there are about 4,000 who are listed as having slipped into the camp illegally.

Masked by these cold bureaucratic labels is the fact that many of these people have relatives in the United States, France and other countries — family members who escaped to Thailand before them and achieved resettlement when the regulations were more relaxed — and therefore have legitimate claims to get out of the camps and rejoin them now. Legitimate, that is, unless you determine a person's right to freedom by the date of his escape from oppression.

No one has precise figures, but responsible relief officials estimate that perhaps 30,000 of the Cambodians in Khao I Dang and other camps qualify, through family connections and other rational criteria, for resettlement.

To the editor:

The movie "Mercy or Murder?" aired Jan. 11 raises several important issues.

It is the story of Roswell Gilbert, 71, who was convicted of killing his terminally ill wife. Gilbert is serving a life sentence for the March, 1985, shooting death of Emily, his wife of 51 years. She suffered from Alzheimer's disease and osteoporosis.

As a chapter of Alzheimer's Disease and Related Disorders Association (ADRDA), a national not-for-profit health organization dedicated to "easing the burden and finding the cure" for Alzheimer's disease, we recognize and are sensitive to the sometimes overwhelming emotional burdens AD families face each day. However, the association must also affirm the dignity and worth of all individuals. We recognize that the taking of another person's life, whether premeditated or otherwise, is against the law and cannot be condoned.

We suggest that actions like Gilbert's do not have to happen. Today, the 2.5 million families of Alzheimer's disease have a choice between coping alone or learning to live with the disease — ADRDA. What started six years ago with a small group, today is 159 chapters and more than 1,000 support groups strong nationwide.

We are a network of 30,000 volunteers. We provide information and support to those who care for a loved one with AD.

Yet a broader issue is the need for establishing a system to provide for the long-term care of the people in our area and nationwide who are part of the "Graying of America." By the year 2000, more than 17 million people over 75 will need some form of long-term care.

I hope you will join us in communicating to your readers that there is a resource in our community for those having a loved one with Alzheimer's disease.

To the editor:

As a Sadie Saulter parent, I cannot stay silent. In my son's three years at Sadie Saulter, our experience has been very positive. We have been very impressed with the fine teachers, support staff and principal. They are a very qualified, dedicated and caring faculty. And this is truly a compliment to Sadie Saulter.

Sadie Saulter parents care — and are concerned. We care that inequalities exist at our school (and Third Street School) that do not exist elsewhere in our "merged" school system. How can our school board and school system allow such inequality to continue?

Point No. 1. Racial Inbalance. Our son's classes at Sadie Saulter are now 75 percent black, 25 percent white. With the new school lines, four new classrooms are earmarked for Sadie Saulter, six new classrooms at Third Street, six new at Eastern and four new at Elmhurst. They propose, however, that construction at Eastern and Elmhurst begin in this new year, while they do not recommend the construction at Sadie Saulter and Third Street until the following year. Why so? Presently, expansion has begun at W.H. Robinson and the new school is to open in the fall.

Again, why are we treated differently? If we are the most crowded, why are we not the first building priority?

We parents of Sadie Saulter only ask to be treated fairly and equitably. We ask our school board, superintendent of schools and all Pitt County citizens to address — and correct — these inequalities.

Strength For Today

A little girl, who was asked to describe the Bible, said it begins with Genesis and ends with revolutions.

This answer is much more accurate than might at first seem to be the case. Religion that does not produce some kind of revolution is a poor kind of religion.

If the religion we profess does not bring about a revolution in our lives, then it is not worth professing. The gospel of Christ sets worldly ideals on their heads. True Christianity not only turns the world upside down; it turns the person upside down who practices it.

What a person held before as the most important things in life now seem valueless. The Christian then begins to live in a different world.

If people read their Bibles in the hope that the Word of God would produce a revolution, they would derive more inspiration from them.

Tough Choices For The Nation On Defense

Analysis

Just how much money is enough for the nation's defense? The answer depends on your view of the world and of the role of military power in maintaining peace and protecting U.S. interests and democratic values. It also depends on the political popularity of other, non-military, demands on the Treasury's piggy bank.

From where military planners sit, the defense budget is never large enough. But if the world was really as benign a place as many Pentagon critics seem to think, we wouldn't need a military establishment at all. Public and congressional perceptions as to the appropriate balance have varied wildly over the years.

President Reagan's proposed new defense budget is $312 billion — a 3 percent increase after inflation over the amount approved by Congress last year. That's a tall pile of money no matter how you count it, and there is little question that most members of the Democratic-run 100th Congress are in a mood to cut it.

It's worth noting, however, that Chairman Sam Nunn, D-Ga., of the Senate Armed Services Committee has pointedly refrained from joining them.

Nunn is the most knowledgeable and influential Democrat on military issues on Capitol Hill. He is also a possible contender for the presidency in 1988.

The Georgian recognizes that the defense budget cannot be sacrosanct in an era of huge federal budget deficits. But in a recent television interview he made it clear that he finds more fault with how the Pentagon proposes to spend the money than with the bottom-line total.

"I think the president and secretary of defense have presented a legitimate defense budget this year," he said. "It will be taken seriously by our committee."

It will be interesting to see whether Nunn's calm, nonpartisan approach prevails with his fellow Democrats.

A little perspective is in order.

Defense budgets during the last years of the Eisenhower administration, well after the Korean War ended, averaged close to 10 percent of gross national product. The figure was still more than 7 percent in 1965, before the massive U.S. involvement in Vietnam.

In the post-Vietnam atmosphere, military spending steadily declined until, in 1979, it bottomed out below 5 percent of GNP. During the late 1970s, however, the impression grew both at home and abroad that the pendulum had swung too far, that America was projecting an image of weakness that was tempting the Soviets to do things like invade Afghanistan and use surrogate Cuban troops to promote Marxist governments in Africa.

Reagan entered office promising to restore a favorable U.S.-Soviet balance of power. Congress, reading the election returns, voted double-digit increases in military spending for the first couple of years, and imposed only modest restraint for a time thereafter.

Even so, it is important to understand that military spending during the Reagan administration has never gone much over 6 percent of GNP — a respectably low level, by historical standards.

Under the effect of a frightening budget deficit and horror stories about waste in defense procurement, public enthusiasm for military spending has waned. In the last two years Congress hacked about $50 billion from his defense-budget requests in order to allow much smaller cuts in domestic spending programs.

This year the administration finally bowed to political reality. The new budget request is $8 billion less than what the Pentagon wanted last year, and is actually smaller than the request for fiscal 1985.

Many congressional Democrats are talking in terms of cutting the defense budget back to zero growth in real, inflation-adjusted terms, or perhaps even lower. It may happen, but no one should imagine that there won't be real consequences. Each services would have to choose between investment in new weapons and readiness for combat with the weapons that it already has.

Either way, the power and effectiveness of the U.S. armed forces would unavoidably deteriorate over time — especially if the Pentagon isn't forced to make the kind of choices that Nunn insists it should make.

Haig's Tracks Are All Over U.S. Policy

There is a specter hanging over the Iran-contras affair, a familiar apparition of gravel voice and craggy good looks whose haunting significance in the scandal has scarcely been noticed. The ghost in the Reagan rafters is Alexander Meigs Haig Jr. — one-time National Security Council staff deputy to Henry A. Kissinger, White House chief of staff for Richard M. Nixon and, in 1981-82, Ronald Reagan's first secretary of state.

Haig apparently played no direct role in the seamy sale of weapons to the Iranians and the raking off of the deal's excess profits to arm the Nicaraguan rebels. Having resigned from the administration in a huff more than four years ago after a stormy tenure in the State Department, he is busily running for the GOP presidential nomination in 1988 and solemnly deploring what he calls a lack of foreign-policy "discipline."

Yet to look beneath the public surface of the scandal is to find Haig as an early co-conspirator at almost every turn. The outspoken, ever-ambitious general accounts for much of the personnel, the bureaucratic style and the dubious policy behind the debacle. Understanding the connection ought to raise questions not only about Haig's presidential candidacy but also about the deeper history and meaning of the unfolding crisis.

To begin with, Haig is the patron, in spirit and in fact, of the can-do, tragically uninformed military officers who have been at the center of the Iran-contra imbroglio. In 1969-70 Al Haig was another obscure military officer in the bowels of the NSC. In rising shrewdly from intelligence briefer and clerk to become Kissinger's deputy and Nixon's favorite house soldier, from colonel to four-star general, he paved the way, made the White House West Wing safe, for the military caste that has so largely usurped civilian authority and dominated the NSC's crucial advisory role ever since.

Haig brought Marine Col. Robert C. McFarlane into the inner circle of Reagan's foreign policy — first as counselor at the State Department, then as NSC deputy. From there McFarlane went on to be the president's national-security adviser and an author and emissary of the Iranian arms deal. McFarlane's successor at the NSC, Vice Adm. John M. Poindexter, was another shadow protege of the general, with ties dating back to Poindexter's tenure in the Pentagon during the Nixon years, and Haig's still unexcavated role with the White House Plumbers.

Even the ubiquitous Lt. Col. Oliver L. North owes his now-tarnished celebrity in part to Haig, whose ally and confidant, Navy Secretary John Lehman, snatched the zealous North out of Marine staff obscurity in 1981 and arranged his assignment to the NSC staff. Not least, there is a key civilian in the story, Georgetown academic Michael Ledeen, who played a crucial and yet-to-be-explored role in the disastrous overtures to Tehran. Ledeen first came into the drama under the cachet of — you guessed it — Alexander Haig.

Haig's influence hardly stops with the new old-boy network of former cadets running the Reagan foreign policy, important as that society has become in Washington. The very style of the scandal is vintage Haig as well. If there were ever a prototype for the escapades of Ollie North, it was Alexander Haig in the 1970s, sallying forth from the NSC to help select targets for the bombing of Cambodia, dispense military aid and other largess to foreign governments, and alternately mollify or bully troublesome clients like South Vietnam's President Nguyen Van Thieu.

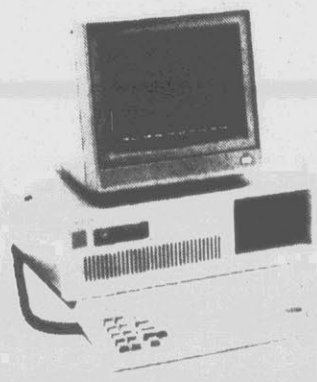

At home, Haig — along with Kissinger — was an architect and expert practitioner of the bureaucratic furtiveness and rivalry that long ago poisoned the relationship between the NSC and the rest of government. And as Reagan's secretary of state he brought to the administration of this genial if distracted president the added in-fighting and back-biting that finally propelled the NSC out of control. In very real ways the structure of foreign policy now collapsing around Reagan's head was built by Haig.

Finally, and more subtly, we also are witnessing the awful toll of Haig's own policies in the Middle East and Central America. His approving wink if not active connivance in the Israeli invasion of Lebanon in 1982, his willingness to leave U.S. diplomacy and intelligence hostage to Israeli policy and perspective, set in motion the whole tragic sequence from the dispatch of the Marines to Beirut to the catastrophic attack on their barracks, the U.S. shelling of Moslem positions in the city, the seizure of American hostages, the weapons ransom to Iran, and on and on. It was Haig who in 1981 reportedly gave the first green light for the Israeli shipment of military parts to the government of the Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini.

Meanwhile, back in this hemisphere, it was Haig who at the outset formed and fixed the administration's obsessive hostility to the Sandinistas and the Salvadoran rebels, instigating the CIA proxy wars that the Iranian arms deal was to bankroll.

Roger Morris worked on the senior staff of the National Security Council under presidents Johnson and Nixon, and is the author of books on Henry A. Kissinger and Alexander M. Haig Jr. He is completing the first of a two-volume biography of Richard M. Nixon.

Economic Study Cites Funding Need For Development Of Rural Counties

By The Associated Press

Rural counties are often hamstrung in economic development by a lack of start-up money, a shortage of information for entrepreneurs and a reliance on outmoded industrial recruiting techniques, a new study says.

The report, based on case studies of Hertford, Richmond and Jackson counties in North Carolina, points out some of the problems that are producing economic stagnation throughout the South, said George Autry, president of MDC in Chapel Hill, the company that produced the study.

"The three counties are neither unusually blessed or depressed," Autry said in an interview. "They are relatively typical for their areas of the state.

"The report identifies the scope of the problem in North Carolina, the barriers to economic growth in our rural areas, and what can be done to overcome those barriers," he said.

The full report, prepared for the North Carolina Commission on Jobs and Economic Growth, also examines the role of political and business leaders in helping or hindering economic growth, Autry said. The full report is scheduled to be released next week.

Autry has argued for more than a year against attempts to recruit manufacturing companies with large work forces from outside a county or state.

The case studies show ways local leaders can work together to strengthen a county's economy.

In Hertford County, for example, officials have formed a "business incubator" that provides support services for new businesses that have little money of their own.

In Jackson County, local officials are trying to revitalize the small town of Dillsboro by creating a marketing center for area craftsmen.

In Richmond County, local officials successfully promoted a bond issue to pay for new library and computer facilities for the local community college — a necessary step to prepare the work force for the future.

Autry said his researchers found that existing resources, particularly state programs, were not being used as they could by business people in small towns and rural areas.

"We think the state needs to find ways to take the resources it already has and make them available to rural areas," he said.

Martin, Jordan Differ On Plans For Naming School Superintendent

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — The state's two highest elected officials agree that the state school superintendent needs to be appointed rather than elected, but disagree on how that change should take place.

Gov. Jim Martin, Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan and state school Superintendent Craig Phillips were in Winston-Salem Monday as part of the three-day 1987 Winter Leadership Conference for local school superintendents and school board chairmen.

Jordan, a Democrat, said he supports a Senate plan that calls for the superintendent to be appointed by the State Board of Education, which in turn would be appointed by the governor and General Assembly.

According to the proposed constitutional amendment, which died in the House in 1985 after being passed by the Senate, eight members of the board would be appointed by the governor, four by the General Assembly and two — the lieutenant governor and state treasurer — would serve by virtue of their office.

Phillips was elected in 1984 and already has said he would not seek re-election next year. Since there will be no incumbent, Jordan said now is the time to make the change. "If we're ever going to change the system during my lifetime, it will be in 1987," he said.

Martin, a Republican, told the Greensboro News & Record he agrees with the concept of an appointed superintendent, but said the Senate plant does not allow the governor enough influence.

"People expect the governor to be an educational leader," Martin said, "someone who can get things done." By allowing the governor to appoint only eight of the 14 school board members, the governor's influence is diminished considerably, he said.

The governor must be able to appoint a "clear majority," Martin said.

Under the current system, the governor appoints 11 of 13 members of the State Board of Education, and the superintendent is elected by a statewide vote. The board then appoints a controller to handle the system's finances.

Jordan said the superintendent needs to be insulated from the governor's office. Allowing the governor eight appointments — a slim majority — would help protect future superintendents who would be in danger of losing their jobs every time a new governor comes to office and appoints board members.

Sperm Whale Found Dead At Hatteras

HATTERAS, N.C. (AP) — A 55-foot, 50-ton sperm whale found dead in Hatteras Inlet over the weekend will be examined by scientists from the Smithsonian Institution, who say this is the first time a mature whale has washed up on the North Carolina shores.

"It's a very rare occurrence. When they die, they usually just disappear," said Jim Mead, curator of the Smithsonian's marine mammals division. Mead and three other researchers hope to preserve the entire skeleton for future study.

"Several of them have washed ashore in the last 20 years, but they've all been calves or females," Mead said. "This is the first record we have of a fully mature male washing up in North Carolina."

The only other male sperm whale to wash up in the state was in 1928 at Wrightsville Beach, Mead said. Its skeleton hangs in the state's Museum of Natural History in Raleigh.

The animal was spotted about 12:30 p.m. Sunday as it rolled through Hatteras Inlet, said Petty Officer D.F. O'Neal of the Cape Hatteras Coast Guard Station. Crewmen on the ferry "Ocracoke" reported it as looking ill and moving sluggishly Sunday.

The whale was dead by the time rescuers reached it. Scientists say the animal probably died of natural causes since it was fully mature, probably 20 to 40 years old, and had no visible wounds.

"We took it to the station because it was both an unusual occurrence and because we knew there were Smithsonian people in the area," said Daniel Picciotto, a Coast Guard first mate and officer of the day at Hatteras Inlet. A Smithsonian researcher had been on Hatteras Island Sunday studying porpoises and examined the whale before alerting others in Washington.

Some 500 people came to the tip of Hatteras Island Monday to gaze at the creature.

"Moby Dick was a sperm whale," Mead said. "The shape has always impressed me as an animated boxcar, square and chunky. The skin is wrinkled, and it's the only whale that has teeth."

The sperm whale, which feeds on squid, also has a heart that weighs nearly half a ton.

Deterioration already has begun inside the whale and will probably render the carcass unusable for research, Mead said. Parasites and other organisms that would have given clues about how the whale died will probably be gone, he said.

Most male whales are found in New England, and few venture closer than 40 miles to shore. Mead speculates it died at sea and drifted in on the currents and tides.

Task Force Says Schools For Deaf Should Merge

RALEIGH (AP) — A state task force has recommended that high school programs for the deaf should be eliminated at Wilson and Morganton by 1991, and all residential education for the deaf should be consolidated in Greensboro by the end of the century.

By an 18-3 vote Monday, the task force recommended that Central North Carolina School for the Deaf in Greensboro become the state's only residential high school for the deaf in July 1991. The task force said a single residential school should be developed byu 2000.

The Greensboro school currently offers classes in preschool through eighth grade, and its high school students go to Wilson or Morganton.

The consolidation will require about $7.3 million in extra buildings to house about 170 high school students on the 75-acre Greensboro campus, and $150,000 for vans to transport students.

But state officials say it would save the state about $600,000 a year in operating costs.

"I think it's a step forward for providing top-notch education to our hearing-impaired students," said state Sen. James Ezzell, D-Nash, one of the 23 members on the task force.

Robeson Schools Consider Merger

LUMBERTON, N.C. (AP) — Three of the five school boards in Robeson County have agreed to send representatives to the first meeting of a committee designed to draw up plans to merge the county's school systems.

The Robeson County Board of Commissioners set up the committee last week and asked chairmen of the five school boards and five county commissioners to participate.

The Robeson County system and the city school systems in Fairmont and Red Springs have agreed to attend. The St. Pauls Board of Education on Saturday rejected participation on the committee.

The Lumberton Board of Education has not acted on the matter, but school officials say its chairman is likely to attend.

Plans drawn up by the committee would be submitted to the General Assembly, which would, in turn, be asked to set up a countywide referendum on the merger question.

The Robeson County school system has endorsed merging the five school systems in the county, while the city systems have traditionally opposed merger.

County Commissioner Jack Morgan, chairman of the merger committee, said the city systems are now more willing to participate because commissioners have made clear their determination to settle the merger question.

The commissioners voted not to approve additional funds for school construction and repair until the merger question was settled.

Nuclear Plant Is Operational

NEW HILL, N.C. (AP) — The Shearon Harris Nuclear Power Plant began operating for the first time Monday night but was to be shut down hours later as part of ongoing testing at the plant.

The plant began producing electricity for Carolina Power & Light Co. customers at 9:47 p.m., CP&L spokesman Mac Harris said. During the initial power production, the plant will produce between 50,000 and 100,000 kilowatts, or 5 to 10 percent of the unit's capacity of 900,000 kilowatts.

"The milestone of this is that it's the first time that electricity has been produced from nuclear fuel at the Harris plant," Harris said.

During the testing, the plant will be brought up to various power levels, tested at those levels and shut down, Harris said.

When the testing is completed, the unitwill become part of the CP&L generating system that supplies power to more than 860,000 customers in North Carolina and South Carolina.

CP&L owns 83 percent of the plant and the Eastern N.C. Municipal Power Agency owns 17 percent.

CP&L received the full-power license from the Nuclear Regulatory Commission last week but delayed starting the $3.8 billion reactor after problems were discovered with an emergency cooling system for heating and ventilation equipment and with a backup water pump for one of the plant's three steam generators.

The cooling system for the heating and ventilation equipment was fixed Tuesday, and Harris said the emergency water pump for the generator was fixed Saturday.

Drug Raid

NEWTON, N.C. (AP) — Catawba County authorities arrested more than three dozen suspected drug dealers Monday after a 10-month undercover operation targeted at higher-level traffickers.

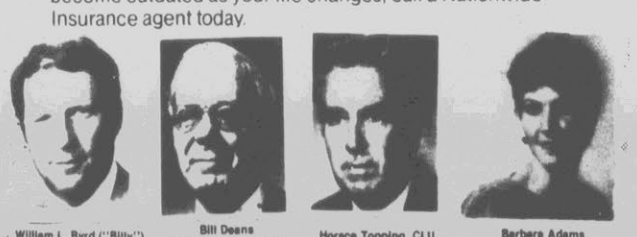

A Catawba County Grand Jury last week indicted 52 alleged drug dealers on 206 charges of drug trafficking, drug possession with intent to sell and conspiracy after the investigation by the Catawba County Sheriff's Department and State Bureau of Investigation narcotics agents.

Authorities began arrests at 6 a.m. By 4:30 p.m. Monday, authorities had rounded up 37 of the suspects. During the arrests, made without incident, authorities seized drug paraphernalia and some weapons.

In the operation, code-named Operation Wipe Out, agents spent more than $75,000 on purchases of cocaine, LSD and marijuana, said sheriff's Maj. Richard Cannon. The drugs have a street value of more than $225,000, he said.

CHARLOTTE (AP) — For West Charlotte High School, glory arrived in a 40-second segment on a network news show that used the integrated school as an example of a place where the teachings of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. are being practiced.

ABC News Monday selected Charlotte as a city where the desegregation of public schools has been peaceful and fruitful.

In a report on racial attitudes in the 1980s, ABC's "World News Tonight" contrasted West Charlotte with a predominantly white high school in Dearborn, Mich., and a predominantly black high school in Detroit.

Fire Rescue

BURLINGTON (AP) — Police and fire officials say some of the nine residents saved from a burning Burlington boarding house probably would have died if two police officers and another resident had not fought their way into the blaze.

No one died in the fire, but five people were injured including resident Walter Edwards, 29, and Officers Joe King and Bennie Bradley. Others injured were Joseph B. Poston, 67, and Howard Barnes, 41, also residents of the house.

All were treated for injuries including cuts, bruises and smoke inhalation and released from the two Alamance County hospitals. Poston suffered from second- and third-degree burns.

Ten residents lived at the house and were left homeless after the fire Sunday.

Missing Plane

WASHINGTON (AP) — Military officials at the Cherry Point Marine base have identified a marine who died and another who was listed as missing after their jet crashed into the Mediterranean Sea over the weekend.

Pilot Capt. Miguel I. Gonzalez Jr. of Laredo, Texas, was recovered about 12 hours after the A-6 Intruder crashed into the sea, said Maj. Dennis Brooks, a public affairs officer at Cherry Point. Gonzalez was "suffering from severe hypothermia and other injuries" and died after extensive medical efforts, said Capt. Craig Fisher, a Marine Corps spokesman.

The search is continuing for the bombardier navigator, 1st Lt. Robert J. Cox, Brooks said.

The plane was from Marine Attack Squadron 533, based in Cherry Point, and was on a training mission in the western Mediterranean with the USS John F. Kennedy aircraft carrier.

Hydro Plant

GREENSBORO (AP) — A hydroelectric plant will be built at the B. Everett Jordan Lake in Chatham County by late 1988, and will sell the energy it generates to Carolina Power & Light Co. for more than $1 million a year, according to a spokesman for a New York company.

Catalyst Energy Corp. also hopes to renovate a facility at the Eury Dam in Montgomery County to generate hydroelectric power, said Christopher Kysar, associate development principal for the firm.

The Jordan Lake plant, expected to be a 10-megawatt facility, would generate about 40 million kilowatt hours of electricity a year, Kysar said. That is enough to provide power for about 4,000 homes annually, he said.

The much smaller Montgomery County plant would generate about 2.3 million kilowatt hours a year, he said.

Tainted Hams

RALEIGH (AP) — Consumers should make sure that any hams they buy are properly labeled, packaged and packed after 471 hams being held due to possible contamination were stolen, state Agriculture Department officials said Monday.

Dr. Claud Carraway, director of the meat and poultry inspection service, said the hams were removed from Simmons Country Hams, where they were being retained because of an anonymous telephone call concerning possible adulteration.

Randomly selected hams were analyzed by health officials, but because the safety of all the hams could not be guaranteed, the hams were condemned and scheduled for disposal.

Food Bank

WILMINGTON (AP) — The New Hanover County Board of Commissioners gave the Food Bank of the Lower Cape Fear a one-time allocation of $5,000 to administer a distribution program for surplus commodities, only to find that there may be no program to administer.

The N.C. Department of Agriculture announced that President Reagan has ordered funds for administering the program — which provides free cheese, butter, cornmeal and other commodities to needy families — be cut off in April. Unless the order is changed, North Carolina will not accept shipments of the surplus food after Jan. 31, said Bill Ray, director of the distribution program for the state Agriculture Department.

Ray said he received word of the presidential directive late last week. The New Hanover County Commissioners didn't know that Monday when they turned the program over to the food bank, nor did officials of the Department of Social Services, which had previously been responsible for distribution.

Bus Wreck

WILKESBORO, N.C. (AP) — A chartered bus lost its brakes on a mountain near here and plowed into an emergency sandpile, injuring 12 members of a church youth group returning to Florida, authorities said.

The group of teen-agers from Grace Episcopal Church in Ocala, Fla., was returning Sunday on U.S. 421 from a ski trip at Ski Hawksnest in Watauga County, said Edward D'Avi, a leader of the group.

David W. Gould, 28, of Cocoa, Fla., the driver for the charter company, Christian Fellowship in Action Inc. of Titusville, Fla., has been charged with exceeding a safe speed, authorities said.

Panel Backs Cap On Jury Award

RALEIGH (AP) — A legislative panel studying liability insurance has agreed on a split vote to seek a limit of $250,000 on jury awards for noneconomic damages like pain and suffering.

The Liability and Property Insurance Markets Study Commission agreed to the cap on a 5-4 vote Monday despite complaints by representatives of the North Carolina State Bar Association that such limits would be unfair.

In a 5-4 vote, the Liability and Property Insurance Markets Study Commission agreed to urge the 1987 General Assembly to prohibit damages of more than $250,000 for noneconomic damages such as pain and suffering.

In addition to the cap, the panel also tentatively agreed to seek legislation that would make local governments immune to claims for punitive damages and would limit to $100,000 the total damages juries could assess against. Other proposed legislation would abolish the principal of joint and several liability for non-economic and economic damages in cases where the defendant was less than 25 percent responsible for the damages, and allow courts to spread out damage payments of $250,000 or more.

Some lawmakers remained doubtful about whether lawmakers will look favorably on major changes in the legal system unless there is some guarantee that insurance rates will fall.

"I would want to know if it would lower the rates," House Speaker Liston Ramsey said. "If it is not going to lower the rates, there is no use doing it. But if it will lower the rates, it is certainly worth considering."

Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan has previously said he does not see a major coalition forming to push for the reforms.

Monday's committee action came after a debate in which some bar association officials said lawmakers should not approve damage caps because the state's civil justice system is operating fairly and no major changes are needed.

The bar association overwhelmingly believes it is "absolutely and totally unfair to impose arbitrarily a limit on the amount of damages that someone could recover for pain and suffering, simply because it's only in the most egregious cases, where severe bodily injury is incurred, that those caps were likely to approach," John Beard, association president, told the panel.

Most committee members agreed that plaintiffs still could recover economic damages for injuries and loss of wages and that a non-economic limit of $250,000 would be fair.

The $250,000 limit would apply to any civil action to recover damages for noneconomic losses to compensate for pain and suffering, physical impairment, mental anguish, loss of capacity for enjoyment of life, and other damages that cannot be proven to have specific economic value, the committee decided.

Louisburg College To Mark Bicentennial

LOUISBURG, N.C. (AP) — Louisburg College officials are planning a big celebration when the nation's oldest church-related junior college has its 200th birthday. In fact, they've been planning for the bicentennial since Louisburg had its 175th anniversary.

"We observed Founder's Day back then, but nothing like what we're doing for the bicentennial," says Sarah E. Foster, a former instructor who came out of retirement to organize a Founder's Day convocation to be held Saturday.

The college will be celebrating the 200th birthday of the charter of Franklin Men's Academy, Franklin County's first school, and the start of what eventually became Louisburg College.

On a tract of land that was once the town commons, four schools have stood. Franklin Men's Academy, originally chartered in 1787, was so successful when it held its first classes in 1805 or 1806 that a Women's Academy later opened across the street. The schools coexisted for several years, but the women's branch enjoyed higher attendance and eventually became Louisburg Female College. The men's academy closed around 1900.

To survive the grip of the Depression, the women's college started accepting men in 1931 and changed its name to Louisburg College. Today the school consists of about 25 buildings and has about 800 male and female students.

Ms. Foster said there have been a few changes at the private, two-year college supported by the United Methodist Church since she came there in 1945 to teach music.

For instance, as a leftover from the days when the college was Louisburg Female College, female students in the mid-1940s weren't allowed to travel into town unchaperoned. Today, students keep cars on the oak-shaded campus, coming and going as they please. More than 600 live in the five dorms scattered over the grounds, which sit squarely in the middle of a state-designated historic district.

Officials say Louisburg, whose tuition is about $6,000 a year including housing, has something special to offer.

"Students can expect some attention here," said Allen de Hart, the school's director of public affairs. "The classes are small, averaging about 22 to 24 per class. The ratio of students to teachers is about 20 to one. That statistic alone says students here can get special help if they need it."

The strength of a junior college is that it's designed for the student who wants a four-year degree but needs a bridge between high school and a large university, de Hart said.

The Thing You'll Like Most About Our Home Equity Loan Is Having To Pay The Interest.

Because the interest is all you have to pay until a home equity loan from NCNB reaches maturity.

LineOne® Equity is a revolving line of credit based on the equity in a home. And it's one of the few consumer loans for which interest deductions may still be allowable under the new tax law. But it's different from most other home equity loans in that it allows you to pay as little or as much of the principal each month as you choose. You even have the option of only paying the interest each month.

Line Of Credit Monthly Repayment Schedule.

Credit Amount	NCNB	Bank A	Bank B	Bank C
$10,000	$71	$150	$170	$300
$20,000	$142	$300	$340	$600
$50,000	$354	$750	$850	$1500
$100,000	$708	$1500	$1700	$3000

Assumes an 8½% rate and an outstanding balance equal to the credit amount shown, 15 yr. term. [1]Interest-only payment option. Required payments as a percentage of outstanding balance (interest and principal payment).

What's more, LineOne Equity from NCNB can offer you advantages that home equity loans from most banks across the state just don't. Which include: 1) No origination fees; 2) A fast closing of usually 10 to 15 business days after you apply; 3) No fees for unused credit; and 4) A credit line of up to $100,000 or more, or up to 100% of the equity in your home.

But best of all, LineOne Equity allows you to use your credit anytime, anywhere, just by writing a check.

So visit your local NCNB office or call Phone-A-Loan at 1-800-342-9701 (in Greensboro, 855-NCNB), and ask about LineOne Equity.

Then, compare it to other home equity loans. We think that you'll find LineOne Equity to be an item of interest. NCNB

*Example is based on NCNB's Prime Rate plus 1%. NCNB's Prime Rate is the rate announced by NCNB from time to time as its Prime Rate. Although the Annual Percentage Rate may vary, on December 10, 1986 the Annual Percentage Rate was 8½%.

Home Care Is Alternative To Hospital Rehabilitation

By LAWRENCE KILMAN
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Jo-Ann Friedman left the hospital in a wheelchair, her arms, legs and eyes paralyzed. A year later, she was atop Buttermilk Mountain in Colorado, skiing for the first time in her life.

Ms. Friedman said she recovered quickly because she fled the hospital to recuperate at home.

"What drove me home was I knew that the worst thing I could do was sit still," she said. She had a rare nerve disorder called Guillain-Barre syndrome, characterized by muscular weakness that generally takes many months to subside.

By leaving the hospital after 2½ weeks, Ms. Friedman became one of a growing number of Americans who choose home care. Other people are forced home by high hospital costs.

Going home has its rewards, but it isn't easy. For Ms. Friedman, getting out of bed, taking a shower and pulling on clothes took 3½ hours. Fetching mail from the lobby of her New York high-rise was a major trek.

For such people, help is essential. Some people need physical therapy, or other medical supervision. Some may require someone to cook, or clean, or watch the children. Others need just an arm to lean on.

The home health care business is booming, with various organizations providing aid. Searching for the right one can be confusing.

There are 6,005 Medicare certified home health care agencies, up from 1,275 20 years ago. From 1982 to 1984, the number increased by more than 50 percent.

The House Select Committee on Aging estimates that $2 billion is spent each year on home care and for home medical equipment. It is a lucrative business: The for-profit segment of the home care industry grew 300 percent from 1982 through 1984.

This success comes partly because costs are pushing people out of hospitals faster than ever before, said Gary Christopherson, director of health legislation for the congressional committee. Home care is often less expensive than hospital care.

Ms. Friedman left the hospital for another reason — she was having trouble arranging for her needs. At home, she received twice-a-day visits from a physical therapist; a housekeeper and friends helped, too.

"I did more entertaining in those few months than I have in the years since," she said. "I realized how important it was for me to have all that socialization, something that wouldn't have happened in the hospital. ... I think that being out of the place where illness is treated, and being in my own home, had me thinking of the things you do when you're well."

Before she became ill five years ago, Ms. Friedman was a speech therapist in a hospital, and she knew about nerve and sensory diseases. Today, at 40, she is a health care consultant.

In her college training, she had been required to sit in a wheelchair to feel how it was to be handicapped. Later the handicap, although temporary, was real.

The experience led Ms. Friedman to write a book, "Home Health Care," a guide for those who need help while recuperating at home.

"You need to be an educated consumer," she said. "Even though I had all this experience, I had a fairly tough time. And all I could think of was, my God, what does a regular person do who doesn't know they need occupational therapy, who didn't know, as I did, that if I had a particular kind of wheelchair that I'd be able to take a shower?"

Home care patients range from people like Ms. Friedman, who need help for only a few months, to people who need long-term help, like elderly stroke victims or those who suffer from Parkinson's disease.

While home care can be beneficial, it is not for everyone.

"Any recovery of any illness, most often, is better taking place at home," said Ms. Friedman. "But there are a lot of qualifiers. It depends on the person. It depends on the home. If you're recovering from a broken leg and you live on the fourth floor of a walk-up apartment, home care can be a challenge."

Ms. Friedman's book provides a directory of social, legal and medical associations that can help in finding home care. They include the American Association of Retired Persons, the Arthritis Foundation, American Council of the Blind, and the American Cancer Society.

Ms. Friedman recommends people investigate several agencies. At a minimum, the agency should be Medicare-certified. But the best bet is to choose an agency that is accredited by the National League for Nursing, which requires an extensive quality assurance procedure.

Ms. Friedman's book also provides details on how to outfit and pay for a home care environment and what consumers should be prepared to face.

"Most people don't know what to expect from a home care aide. They really don't know what the job description is of this person who is going to come in and be helpful," said Ms. Friedman. "I spend a lot of time in my book explaining what an aide does, that she isn't supposed to sit and watch soap operas. ...

"I've heard stories of aides who have no training ... stories where the aide wouldn't show up ... stories where aides would in fact rob, take jewelry or valuables," she said.

Congress is also concerned that consumers may not be adequately protected. The House Select Committee on Aging held a hearing last year on home care quality assurance.

"The purpose was to take a look at what's going on out there in an industry that is expanding just incredibly fast," said Christopherson. "There's very little monitoring going on in terms of quality of the care."

"A lot of people are very vulnerable," Christopherson said. "They need these services when they're very vulnerable."

Legislation that would improve the monitoring of home care and provide consumer protection is to be introduced in Congress next month.

"Let's propose some changes in the law so that quality is what we're paying for," Christopherson said. "So we can feel that the care for our parents, our grandparents, ourselves, is good."

Costume Design Program Set

The North Carolina Museum of Art will present a symposium on "The Art of Fashion" Saturday from 10:15 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. The program will explore costume design, both traditional and contemporary, as an art form.

Opening the symposium will be Jean Druesedow, associate curator of the Costume Institute at the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York. She will compare 18th-and early 19th-century garments in the Costume Institute with those in portraits in the North Carolina Museum of Art.

Richard Martin of the Fashion Institute of Technology in New York will discuss the impact of several elements on "Postmodern" fashion design, including nostalgia, new configurations of clothing in relation to the body and the innovative use of colors.

The work of renowned Japanese-born designer Issey Miyake will be discussed by his spokesperson, Jun Kanai. Miyake has commented that his challenge is "to create something different, not traditional Japan nor pure western, something which has the best of both." Ms. Kanai will show a videotape of a recent Miyake collection to illustrate his adventurous designs.

Registration for the symposium will begin at 9:45 a.m. A two-hour break from 12:30-2:30 p.m. will permit time for lunch and viewing of the museum galleries.

For information, call the museum at 833-1935.

Dear Abby

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I am married to a man who has two children by a previous marriage. The children are 13 and 16 years old, and live with their mother in another state.

Here's the problem: My husband is quite remiss about sending gifts to his children on their birthdays and holidays, so I have always done the shopping. I try to select tasteful, appropriate gifts for each child. I even buy lovely cards that my husband signs: "With love from Dad."

I find myself feeling very resentful when the children write and express thanks to him, seldom thanking me unless instructed to do so — which is even worse.

Should I quit spending my time selecting gifts for them? Or do you think I am being selfish and expecting too much? I should add that my relationship with his children is an amiable one. — RESENTFUL IN TEXAS

DEAR RESENTFUL: His children have no way of knowing their gifts were selected by you when the cards are signed, "With love from Dad" — unless, that is, "Dad" tells them. You say the children seldom thank you unless instructed to do so. Who instructs them? If the "instructor" is Dad, then it would be much more generous and straightforward if the cards read: "With love from Dad and ( )" (whatever they call you). Settle this now to ensure that the relationship with your husband is also an amiable one.

DEAR ABBY: Your advice to "Heidi in Paulding, Ohio" brought back some precious memories. Heidi complained that nobody ever answered her letters, so you advised her to send a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

I had a younger brother I used to write to, but he would never answer my letters, so I sent him an SASE and even enclosed some paper to write on. With it I sent a note: "Please write back and at least say 'Hi'!"

Well, he did. His letter read: "Dear Sis: Hi. I'm fine. Bye, Love, Wayne."

Eighteen months ago, the day before his 29th birthday, my beloved brother died of cancer.

My little joke of sending him an SASE envelope worked because after that he wrote more often and we talked on the phone a lot. But that first letter is one of my most cherished possessions.

By the way I tried the same thing with my older brother, but it didn't work. He still writes only once a year — at Christmastime. — SUSAN IN GOSHEN, CALIF.

DEAR SUSAN: I send my heartfelt sympathy at the loss of your beloved brother. Maybe your older brother will see this and send you a Valentine.

DEAR ABBY: After you printed that letter from "Paul in La Mirada," who enrolled in law school at age 42 and is soon to graduate, I had to write.

I served 30 years as a naval officer. After that I had two businesses — real estate in Florida and buffalo raising in South Dakota.

Then I entered law school at age 61. I am now 70 and have a thriving law practice. — E.K. HALSEY, VERO BEACH, FLA.

DEAR MR. HALSEY: Congratulations. It's too late to fulfill your dream only if you THINK it is.

Now for an encouraging word from a neighboring state:

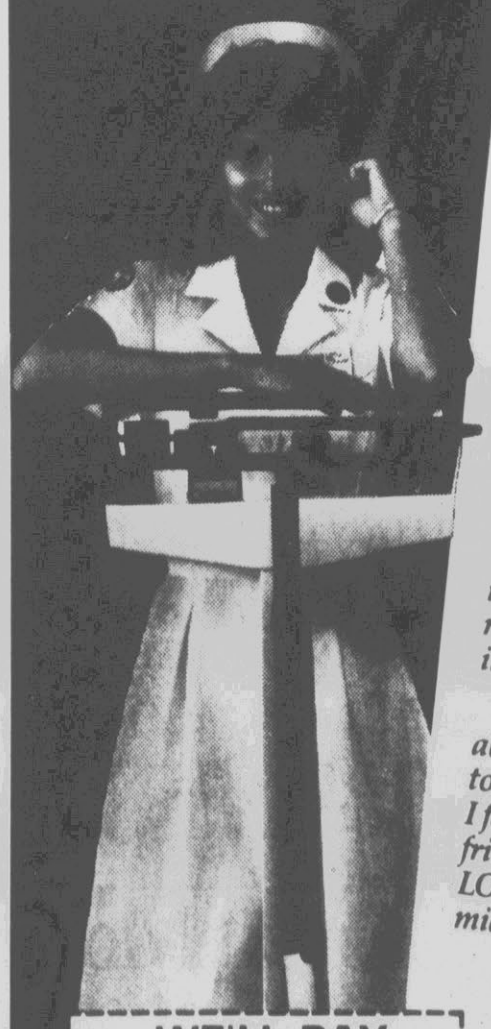

DEAR ABBY: Thanks for the boost to older college students. At Kennesaw College in Marietta, Ga., there is even a name, SOTA (Students Over the Traditional Age), for students who are over 25 years old.

With a fall quarter enrollment of 7,297, 1,712 students were 30 or over. Of these, 526 were 40 or over; 92 were 50 or over; and 14 were between 65 and 72!

With such a dynamic campus, there's certainly no generation gap here! — A HAPPY SOTA

More Chinese Are Buying Homes

By JIM ABRAMS
Associated Press Writer

SHANGHAI, China (AP) — In their old rented home, Wu Huiding's family of four slept in one bed, a common plight of residents here in the most crowded city of this crowded country. Now they have two rooms with two beds in an apartment they own.

The 57-year-old construction worker is a pioneer in China's experiment with private home ownership, a concept the Communist government hopes eventually will improve living conditions and relieve serious housing shortages.

Shanghai, with an average of only 55 square feet of living space for each of its 12 million people, has been a leader in private housing, building 2,904 units in 1985 and perhaps twice that number in 1986, said Xu Rending of the Shanghai Housing Administration Bureau.

"The demand is so great that even those who don't get subsidies buy homes," Xu said.

Wu was one of the fortunate who had to pay for only one-third of his apartment, the rest being subsidized by the government and his work unit. He said the apartment cost 13,740 yuan ($3,713), for which he provided a 2,000-yuan ($540) down payment and pays 50 yuan ($13.50) a month for the balance.

He said it is an easy burden to carry. With income from his wife and 20-year-old daughter, the family brings in 400 yuan ($108) a month.

The apartment, on the sixth floor of a building with no elevator, has two small rooms, each filled to capacity with a bed, sofa or chair and table.

The floors are concrete, there is no hot water and no heat, which is common in Shanghai even though temperatures in winter drop to freezing. The kitchen consists of a one-pot coal burner and a cold water sink in the hallway. The closet-size bathroom has a toilet and a small tub with a shower.

On the first floor of the next building, Wang Mingli, 54, a retired teacher, told how she, her husband and her brother bought their large unsubsidized apartment for 22,000 yuan ($5,946).

She said her brother received compensation from the government for money taken from the family, former capitalists who ran a large wheat mill, in the early days of Communist rule.

"If we rented, we'd get less space and worse quality," said Mrs. Wang, who proudly showed off her small garden and the interior she decorated herself. She complained, however, that the apartment, in a southwest Shanghai suburb, still had no gas, that public transporation was poor and shopping was inconvenient.

Still, the Wu and Wang homes are plush compared to the average urban residence.

A recent nationwide survey showed that 30 percent had no kitchens, 27 percent no running water and two-thirds no toilets. In many cities, people must wait as long as 10 years to receive new housing.

The situation is particularly acute in Shanghai, which is densely populated and has few high-rise buildings in the central city area. Much of the city is occupied by once-stately European-style two-story homes built in the 1920s and 1930s when Shanghai was still an enclave of European business interests.

Today, the old homes are crumbling and overflowing with several families each, but people's attachment to them has blocked urban renewal projects.

Hu Sisheng of the China State Building Development Corp. in Peking said private housing was seen as a key way to raise the capital needed to build more apartments. In 1985, he said, 160 Chinese cities were selling homes.

"This is a major policy change," Hu said. "Now individuals can buy homes from the state, just like they buy refrigerators or fans."

The effort to make housing a commodity, however, has been stymied by artificially low rents. Housing is heavily subsidized, and most urban Chinese, who earn about 100 yuan ($27) a month, pay only 2 percent or 3 percent of their wages in rent.

In 1983, Hu said, the state took in 450 million yuan ($122 million) in rent, not even enough to pay for half the sum spent in building upkeep.

He said the government, to bring in more money and make private housing more attractive, is going to have to raise rents, a highly sensitive issue in a nation where subsidies long have been a way of life.

Shanghai's Xu agreed that reform of the rental system was crucial to creating a real private housing market. Meanwhile, the city is arranging low-interest bank loans to home buyers and encouraging housing enterprises to build more commercial units.

"I'm very satisfied," said homeowner Wu. In his last cramped quarters, he added, he was asked to leave by the renter who was subletting the room to him.

"It gives me a sense of security to own my own home," he said.

What Will Children Remember?

At Wits End

By ERMA BOMBECK

In 1955 I lived in a suburb I have since renamed Mother Walton Village. Every house had an Olivia at the door waving good-bye to the school bus, spending hours ironing shoelaces and color coding meals.

I had a small child at home and was offered a publishing job that took me out of the home one day a month. When I shared this with one of the Olivias she said to me, "If you can stand to see your daughter run to the arms of a baby-sitter when she is hurt, you can be a career woman."

That was the first shot of guilt I ever had, administered by needle directly into my vein.

There was no doubt in my mind that from that day forward, Sara Lee would get the Mother's Day cards ... my child's acceptance speech for the Oscar would be the shortest one in history as there would be no one to thank ... and unlike Citizen Kane her last gasping breath would not be for a sentimental sled called "Rosebud," but "Latchkey."

Mothers today are consumed with world-class guilt. The battle cry among women working outside the home is, "Don't start the crisis without me. I'll be home at 6:30."

It has always been. I'll never forget being at that infamous one-day-a-month job when my daughter fell and cut her lip. For days I went around beating myself to death with snow chains, saying, "I should have been playing bridge when it happened instead of working."

The key seems to be what DO kids remember about their childhood and what is unimportant enough to forget.

They don't remember the yellow-wax build-up that you made disappear from behind the toilet bowl that took half a day and three scouring pads to pull off and how great the floor looked after that.

They do remember the afternoon when there was "nothing to do" and you hosted a "taffy pull" for the neighborhood kids and Mike got his retainer caught in the taffy and they never had such a fun time.

They don't remember that you served on a committee that was instrumental in keeping a sonic hamburger drive-in from building on the site of the town's first cemetery.

They do remember the night you sat in the rain to watch them play for 36 seconds in a football game.

They rarely remember the mundane events that seem so important to adults, like ironed T-shirts, order, daily crises, routine tears, disagreements and decisions. They are taken for granted.

They do remember moments. They recall rare flashes when you did something different, fun, risky, unexpected. They remember the times when you looked at them and didn't see something that needed washing or fixing. If a child never receives that part of you, then you deserve guilt for the rest of your life.

Textured Walls Making Comeback

ATLANTA (AP) — Painting, wallpapering and paneling are the most popular ways of covering gypsum wallboard.

Texturing, however, is coming into its own.

Textured walls once were the province of highly paid artisans. With the aid of wall texturizers and joint compound, the competent do-it-yourselfer can evoke patterns, swirls and other designs with a trowel, sponge and brush.

Georgia-Pacific, a maker of building products, attributes the increased popularity of texturized walls to "a sense of individuality, originality and custom design."

Child Selling

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. (AP) — A pregnant woman who allegedly offered to sell her baby for $15,000 so she could buy a car and pay off debts has been charged with child selling, authorities said.

Joi E. Silverthorne, 27, of Tampa was arrested after the Jacksonville couple, whom authorities would not identify, met her at Jacksonville International Airport.

They were to give $3,500 to Ms. Silverthorne as a first payment for her baby, authorities said. Instead, they turned her over to investigators who were nearby and recording the conversation, according to a police report.

Child selling is a felony punishable by up to five years in prison, said Assistant State Attorney E. McRae Mathis. Ms. Silverthorne was released on $5,000 bond and is to appear in court Jan. 28, a jail official said.

Deadline Extended

Dixon of Route 1, Grimesland, explained tentative plans for the project.

Dixon said the projects include using the Oakland Grove Farm near Grimesland as a site for "a year-long show, from planting to harvest" for various crops and equipment.

"Farmers need diversity in Pitt County," Dixon said, suggesting that "we'd like to do a pilot vegetable market show" this year to "show farmers how to grow it," how to care for vegetables and to "develop a pilot market."

"This could help Pitt County and surrounding counties with diversity," Dixon said.

Commissioners also agreed to hold public hearings on proposed noise control, dog leash and massage control ordinances once a series of public hearings on proposed changes in the method of electing commissioners ends in early February.

King

Blacks represent one-third of the population in Pitt County, Brown said. "There's no reason why we shouldn't be a third on the Pitt County Board of Commissioners."

Greenville City Council member Ed Carter said "In 1987, we will be able to get more blacks on the City Council, that is, if we don't have too many running for the same seat."

Carter said blacks should concern themselves with electing more black public officials in Pitt County, with the black prison population, and with what he called unjust fees levied against the poor such as garbage fees.

King "loved his fellow man, and he laid down his life for his friends," said D.D. Garrett, president of the Pitt County Chapter of the NAACP.

"As black people, we need to start doing what's right for us. You've got to stand up for something," he said.

The program, sponsored by the Pitt County Chapter of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, also included speakers from the Old North State Medical Society, National Medical Association; the Pitt County chapter of North Carolina Association of Educators; the Eastern North Carolina Regional Association of Black Social Workers, and National Civil Rights Activity.

The commemoration service also included congregational singing of "Lift Every Voice and Sing" and "We Shall Overcome." Other music was performed by the Revelations and the Amazing Gospel Choir.

Treatment

ROCHESTER, Minn. (AP) — Tammy Wynette is being treated for an undisclosed ailment, and reportedly is keeping up with her music practice in the hospital.

The Rochester Post-Bulletin quoted friends as saying Ms. Wynette leased a $1,000 electric piano keyboard from a music company to use while at St. Marys Hospital.

A Mayo Clinic spokesman confirmed the 44-year-old country-western singer was a patient at the clinic-affiliated hospital. She was hospitalized for X-rays and tests at St. Marys in 1977 after complaining of abdominal pains while on a concert tour.

More Beer

PEKING (AP) — China produced more beer than hard liquor in 1986 for the first time, the official China Daily said.

The English-language daily said the nation made about 1 billion gallons of beer last year, topping liquor by 21.6 million gallons. Beer production has been increasing at a rate of 30 percent a year since 1981.

Wind Gusts To 50 MPH Knock Out Power Across N. Carolina

By The Associated Press

Winds that gusted near 50 mph knocked limbs and trees onto power lines across North Carolina, causing power outages for several thousand residents along the coast and in the mountains.

More than 3,350 homes and businesses in southeastern North Carolina were without power part of Monday, and service was cut to over 2,600 customers in the mountains for periods ranging from 20 minutes to several hours.

Wind gusts reached 49 mph at the New Hanover County Airport and 46 mph at New Bern, according to the National Weather Service in Wilmington. Winds gusted up to 46 mph, according to National Weather Service reports from Asheville Regional Airport.

In the mountains, damage to a transmission line that feeds an area from Elk Mountain to Canton created power problems for 1,182 Carolina Power & Light Co. customers in the Leicester area and 1,452 customers in the Erwin region for about 20 minutes Monday.

Charles Horton, a division dispatch supervisor with CP&L, said about 1,200 customers in Castle Hayne and along Carolina Beach Road were without power Monday. About 800 people in Beulaville and 400 customers in Wallace also lost electricity when trees and limbs fell on CP&L's power lines, he said.

A pine tree fell on a primary line along U.S. 117 in Wallace, knocking out power for about an hour.

Four County Electric Membership Corp. employees were busy Monday restoring power. Bryant Herring, a district manager in Elizabethtown, said he was still trying to determine how many customers lost power. Workers "are still writing up orders," he said. Herring estimated that 480 customers in Bladen County and 70 in Sampson County were without power. The high winds seemed to hit in streaks, primarily east and west of Elizabethtown, he said.

"We had a real bad start this morning," Herring said. He said CP&L lost power in parts of Elizabethtown, and Four County's office was unable to communicate by radio with the main office in Burgaw or with repair trucks. Power was off 20 to 25 minutes, he said. Herring said they improvised radio communications by hooking a vehicle to a main tower and walking back and forth from the telephone to the radio to report customers' calls.

T.R. Vick, a district manager with Four County in Burgaw, said about 400 of the 6,000 customers served in Pender lost power briefly Monday.

Power outages were reported across the mountains throughout the day and into the evening hours, officials said, and all available electrical crews were called in to restore power.

Nearly 800 CP&L customers in the Candler School Road area of Buncombe County, including Candler Elementary School, were without power after a tree fell across a feeder line about 1:30 p.m., said George Treadyway, Carolina Power & Light Co. dispatcher.

"It was pretty bad over there," he said, adding that power had been restored to most customers in that area by 8 p.m.

A 35-foot power pole holding a transformer was broken around noon near n Candler when winds toppled a tree there, Treadway said. About 30 customers in that area were without power for a couple of hours.

The majority of major outages had been cleared up by 8 p.m., another CP&L spokesman said.

Fallen limbs and trees blown by the wind also knocked out numerous distribution lines in the five-county area served by Nantahala Power & Light Co., said George Barrett, superintendent of transmission and distribution for the firm.

When I Made Funeral & Burial Pre-Arrangements!"

"They really kidded me — until one of our friends died unexpectedly. They quickly learned about the difficult decisions...the paperwork...and the costs survivors must struggle with.

Pre-Arrangement could have spared the family most of those anxious decisions, and so much of the paperwork and expense involved — all at a time of deep emotional stress.

My friends don't laugh about pre-arrangement anymore — they've learned what a caring, comforting thing it can be for families."

Iowa Moves To No. 1; Heels 2nd

By The Associated Press

About five hours after moving into the No. 1 spot in the Associated Press college basketball poll, Iowa proved it belonged there.

With leading scorer Roy Marble missing all but nine minutes because of an eye injury, Iowa nonetheless pulled out a 70-67 victory over fifth-ranked Purdue, a club whose only previous defeat had been to No. 2 North Carolina.

"The combination of losing Roy and playing on the road in a tough arena and overcoming those things is the greatest tribute you can give this ballclub," Iowa Coach Tom Davis said. "The effort these kids put out after Roy Marble went out of the game is incredible. I even got a little emotional in the second half seeing how hard they were working."

The news that Iowa had supplanted Nevada-Las Vegas atop the poll came to Davis as he and his players prepared to leave their hotel for Monday night's game.

"They (the players) all had their televisions on before the game. I'm sure it was something they were aware of," Davis said. "We never really talked about it when we were No. 2 or No. 6."

It was the first time in its history that Iowa has been ranked No. 1.

"It would be nice if we had about a week or so to celebrate," Davis said. "But it's going to be that way for everybody throughout the country, regardless of who's No. 1. We all have a lot of tough games in our respective leagues."

Iowa has another test coming up Thursday, at Iowa City against third-ranked Indiana.

Iowa, now 17-0, was the beneficiary of UNLV's one-point loss at Oklahoma, this week's No. 11 team.

The Hawkeyes received 34 first-place votes from a nationwide panel of sportswriters and broadcasters to 28 for North Carolina. The Hawkeyes accumulated 1,263 points, 11 more than the Tar Heels, 15-1.

Indiana, 14-1, was next with 1,133 points while UNLV, ranked first for six weeks, slipped to fourth with three first-place votes and 1,088 points.

The Runnin' Rebels bounced back to beat Fullerton State 73-65 Monday night to improve their record to 16-1.

Iowa's only game last week was an impressive 91-88 overtime victory at Illinois — in which the Hawkeyes erased a 22-point deficit with 16 minutes left.

Nevada-Las Vegas lost at Oklahoma 89-88 in a nationally televised game on Saturday. UNLV had a chance to pull out a victory in that game, but two shots in the final seconds wouldn't fall and Oklahoma avenged a loss to UNLV earlier in the season.

After Purdue, the rest of the Top 10 included DePaul, Syracuse, Temple, Illinois and Clemson.

Oklahoma led the Second Ten, followed by Duke, Alabama, St. John's, Georgetown, Pittsburgh, Auburn, Navy, Texas Christian and North Carolina State.

Last week's Second Ten was Temple, Clemson, St. John's, Duke, Alabama, Oklahoma, North Carolina State, Pittsburgh, Navy and Kansas.

Illinois, 13-3, bounced back from its loss to Iowa to beat Minnesota 80-58 and slipped only one spot in the poll.

Purdue, now 14-2, and DePaul, 15-0 after a 61-49 victory Monday night over Indiana State, each improved one spot from last week.

Syracuse, last week's No. 5, dropped two spots after a 91-88 loss to Michigan, the fifth-place team in the Big Ten.

Georgetown, 12-2, fell from ninth to 15th after losing — for the second time this season — to fellow Big East member Seton Hall. The Hoyas, who lost by 21 at home earlier in the season, were beaten 66-65 by the Pirates last Saturday.

Auburn, blitzed 91-75 by Vanderbilt at Nashville, Tenn., dropped from 10th to 17th. It was the second major scalp for Vanderbilt, the only team to beat Indiana this season.

Kansas, 10-5, fell from the Top Twenty after losing to Oklahoma 76-74. The Jayhawks came back to beat Miami, Fla., 82-47 on Saturday.

Texas Christian, making its first-ever appearance in the poll, improved to 14-3 with a 52-37 thumping of Texas Monday night. The Horned Frogs are now 5-0 in the Southwest Conference.

UNC Charlotte Edges EC Women

CHARLOTTE — Kristin Wilson scored 27 points and snatched away 16 rebounds to lead UNC Charlotte to a 71-66 basketball victory over East Carolina's Lady Pirates Monday night.

The loss was the third straight for the Lady Pirates, who drop to 10-6 on the season. The Lady Niners climb to 11-1 on the year.

Monique Pompili scored a career high of 28 points in the game, but got little help from her teammates. Chris O'Connor was the only other Lady Pirate to surpass single figure scoring, hitting 12.

The Lady Pirates had the opportunity, and led for much of the game.

"We showed a lot of composure in the first half," Coach Emily Manwaring said. "But with 5:33 left in the game, we had unforced turnovers and came down the court and gave the ball away three straight times.

"Our team captains are not providing the leadership that we need right now," the coach added. "We will start electing new team captains each week now."

Manwaring added that the Lady Pirates much work on being more patient against a pressure defense. "We are not together as a team right now," she said.

The Lady Pirates were outshot in the game, 44.4 percent to 37.3 percent, as the Lady 49ers scored only one less field goal. But Charlotte made up big ground by hitting 23 of 32 at the free throw line. East Carolina got only 10 of 17 — the second straight night they have been badly hurt by fouls. ECU outfouled the Niners, 23 to 14.

Charlotte also held a firm rebounding edge, 49-32, led by Wilson and Francine Benson, who pulled down 10. East Carolina's effort on the boards was led by Pompili with nine.

In addition to Wilson's scoring, UNCC got 13 from Benson, 12 from Tolanda Rose and 10 more from Elizabeth Walker.

The Lady Pirates return home and reenter the Colonial Athletic Association wars on Saturday, playing host to George Mason in a 7:30 p.m. game. Then, on Monday, they host nationally ranked James Madison, the CAA leader and defending champion.

Ditka Statement In Fit Of Anger

CHICAGO (AP) — Mike Ditka says his statement that he would quit as head coach of the Chicago Bears after the 1987 season was made only to his assistants in a fit of anger.

"I did mention that to them, but of course I mention a lot of things in the heat of anger. I'm not sure everything I say would stay that way," Ditka said Monday in an interview with WBBM-TV in Chicago. "I said nothing to the management of this organization, or to any reporter," Ditka added.

The Boston Globe reported Sunday that Ditka, upset over the firing of his friend Jerry Vainisi as Bears general manager, had told his bosses he would leave after the remaining year on his contract is over.

Vainisi, who remains a team consultant, was dismissed because of "philosophical differences," according to Bears President Michael McCaskey. The Globe reported that Ditka was "fuming" over the dismissal of Vainisi, a friend and ally.

Ditka, who also has been rumored to be among several coaches being considered by the Altanta Falcons, told WBBM Monday that leaving the Bears would not be easy.

"If I did leave, a very big part of my life would leave also," he said. "You kind of get to love it. You don't just want to walk away from it.

"But I've learned to walk away from other things in life, and if it came down to that, I probably could do it."

For now, Ditka says, his only sure job commitment is the job of giving Bears fans something to be proud of in 1987.

"I don't know what I'm going to do," he told WBBM. "But I know one thing we are going to do: we're going to play great football in 1987 ... and try to keep all the other stuff out of the newspapers."

Giants, Denver Deny Odds

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — The oddsmakers aren't sure the Denver Broncos belong on the same field as the New York Giants for the Super Bowl. Both teams claim otherwise.

The point spread for Sunday's game at the Rose Bowl has gone from 8 immediately following the conference championship games to 9½ and even 10. Considering the number of New York fans with added interest in the game this year, the spread could go higher.

"It's ludicrous," Giants Coach Bill Parcells said Monday as the teams began final preparations for the National Football League championship game. "We only beat them by three points in New York. It's ridiculous. The teams are more even than that."

The Giants edged the Broncos 19-16 on a last-minute, 34-yard field goal by Raul Allegre on Nov. 23. The Broncos outgained the Giants 405 yards to 262, rallied to tie the score 16-16, then fell victim to an eight-play, 55-yard drive that led to the winning kick.

"The spread is exaggerated, badly exaggerated," Giants linebacker Carl Banks said. "We may have beaten them but we can't be overconfident with Denver. These guys are very good. They are a lot better than what the oddsmakers are making them."

The Broncos struggled to an 11-5 finish after starting 6-0, while the Giants won their final nine regular-season games. Denver was routed 41-16 in its season finale by Seattle.

The Giants have continued their overwhelming play in the playoffs, routing San Francisco 49-3 and Washington 17-0. The Broncos had close victories of 22-17 against New England and 23-20 in overtime at Cleveland.

"How we got here shouldn't matter as much as our being here," Broncos linebacker Tom Jackson said. "The Giants are a much better football team than the one we played in November. Maybe that's why" the betting line is so high.

"But we feel we're better, too. We didn't give up a touchdown to them offensively in the last game."

Denver Coach Dan Reeves also claimed both teams are better now than in November.

"They had been playing very well then," Reeves said, "but right now, they have not been in a lot of close football games and that's impressed a lot of people."

Giants quarterback Phil Simms, who completed 11 of 20 passes for 148 yards — half of that in the last drive, including a 46-yard pass to Phil McConkey — doesn't have fond memories of the previous game with Denver. And he expressed "shock" that the Giants are so heavily favored.

"I don't understand why we are a big favorite," Simms said. "The game was as tough as any we've had.

"I know a little about betting and it means the New York bettors are betting the Giants and there are more New York bettors than Denver bettors.

"They did such a good job of covering our receivers that I didn't want to see that confrontation again. They won that battle in New York, I thought."

The Giants held a full-scale practice Monday, while the Broncos, who arrived on Monday, scheduled their first practice today. The intensity and interest in those sessions is, according to Reeves, "extremely important, the most important days for us."

But Reeves thinks his team is ready now.

"The players were ready to play after the pep rally," Reeves said of the sendoff by 63,257 fans who went to Mile High Stadium to do nothing more than cheer their heroes as they were introduced. "From an emotional standpoint, we would've been ready to play it then and there."

Emotionally, according to Banks, the Giants can get a lift simply from listening to the radio.

"We were driving to practice and I heard on this radio station about the 'Criminal of the Week,'" Banks said. "They gave it to LT (Lawrence Taylor) and the Giants defense for having a bounty on quarterbacks.

"We don't have any bounty on quarterbacks. We play hard, tough, clean football. I told LT about it. He was flabbergasted."

Which is precisely how Parcells said he felt when he heard about the point spread for the first Giants appearance in a Super Bowl. Denver lost in 1978 to Dallas.

"It's a product of the way we played the last two wins," Parcells said. "People think we're that good. I can assure you we're not."

Rampants Run Past Hunt, 77-60

WILSON — Rose High School continued its unbeaten march through the first half of the Big East basketball season, downing Wilson Hunt Monday night, 77-60.

Rose's girls also came away with another victory, downing Hunt 37-30, to maintain their first place standing also.

Both Rose's boys and girls are 6-0 in the conference, one game shy of the half-way point in the conference season.

The Rampants missed on their first three shots in the game allowing Hunt to grab the opening lead on a basket by John Finch with 7:03 remaining. Then, after another Rose miss, Anthony Howard hit on a breakaway for a 4-0 lead before Keyford Langley finally broke the ice for the Rampants with 6:00 showing.

Thirty seconds later Melvin Jenkins hit to tie it up, but Brad Neal scored and added a free-throw to give Hunt a 7-4 lead.

Earrol Wooten hit the next two baskets for Rose pushing the Rampants back into the lead, 8-7, but Neal countered to give Hunt the lead once more. Wooten hit once more to return the lead to Rose and the Rampants never trailed again.

Langley scored with 3:35 left to open up a 12-9 lead. Finch countered, but baskets by Jenkins and Wooten ran the Rose lead to 16-13 by the time the period ended.

Kevin Cobb and Wooten combined to open up a 10-point lead for the Rampants early in the second quarter, 23-13. Then, after Finch hit with 4:10 left, Curtis Perkins and Wooten scored to run the lead to 29-15. After another basket by Neal, Langley and Jenkins both hit baskets and Wooten made a three-point play to open up a 38-23 lead with 56 seconds left in the half.

Johnny Ebron closed out the half to give Rose a 40-25 lead.

Jenkins, Terry Warren and Wooten each hit baskets in the opening seconds of the second half to open up a 46-25 lead. Wooten then added a basket and a three-point play to run it out to 52-29 with 2:12 remaining.

By the end of the period, Rose held a comfortable 57-34 lead.

After pushing the lead out to 69-43 in the early going of the fourth quarter, Rose went to its bench to polish off the game.

Wooten poured in 26 points to lead Rose while Warren added 12 and Jenkins had 10. Neal scored 24 for Hunt while Finch had 22.

The Rampants are now 12-2 overall.

In the girls' contest, Rose scored the first nine points of the game and was never in any danger after that, despite a slow-paced game. The Rampants held a 9-4 lead after one period and extended that to 19-9 at intermission.

Rose continued to pull away in the third period, 10-7, running its lead out to 29-16. During the fourth period, Rose doubled the scored on the Lady Warriors, 34-17 near the halfway point in the frame, and went to its bench to finish out the contest.

Kim Dupree led Rose with 21 points while Jackie Rogers paced Hunt with 19.

"We were a little flat after our big win on Friday (over Wilson Fike)," Coach Bill Kuykendall said. "Having two big games last week and no practice between Friday and last night hurt us somewhat. But we played well, considering the circumstances."

The Rampettes are now 10-2 on the year overall.

Rose will play host to Elizabeth City Northeastern on Friday, reaching the halfway point in the Big East season.

Cavs, Terrapins Post Wins

By The Associated Press

Virginia used two clutch free throws by John Johnson to end Jacksonville's eight-game winning streak in non-conference college basketball.

Johnson hit on the front end of a one-and-one free throw situation with 21 seconds left and repeated it again with 7 seconds left to give Virginia the 82-81 victory Monday night.

In the only other game involving an Atlantic Coast Conference team, Maryland defeated Bucknell 77-68. Clemson faces Georgia Tech tonight in the only ACC action on the schedule.

Johnson led Virginia's scoring with 20 points, followed by Andrew Kennedy, who contributed 19 points and 10 rebounds. Tom Sheehey added 13 points and Mel Kennedy 12.

Jacksonville's Ronnie Murphy scored for 31 points, including seven of 11 shooting from three-point range. Pat Laguerre had 18 points and Willie McDuffie had 15.

Virginia outrebounded the Dolphins 40-29, but Jacksonville compensated by making 12 of 22 three-pointers while the Cavaliers missed their only three-point attempt.

Jacksonville fell to 10-6, while Virginia is at 11-4.

In College Park, Maryland took the lead over Bucknell with 3:43 left and went on to forge a 9-point victory.

The Terps, 4-6, sank their last 16 free throw attempts, and scored only one field goal after Bucknell went ahead 59-58 on a basket by Mark Atkinson with 6:20 left.

A field goal by freshman Steve Hood, scoreless until that point, launched Maryland's comeback with the Terps trailing 55-49.

Derrick Lewis had 22 points, nine rebounds and six blocked shots for Maryland, which had lost six of its last seven including the last four to Atlantic Coast Conference foes.

Bucknell, 9-7, was led by Chris Seneca with 16 points.

Iowa, Newly Elected #1, Subdues Purdue By 70-67

By The Associated Press

The Iowa Hawkeyes, the newest No. 1 kids on the college basketball block, were determined not to get knocked off.

"The most humiliating thing is (if) we got No. 1 today and then we'd go out a couple hours later and we're not No. 1. The whole team's worked three years to get to this place where we are. Eight hours, what does that mean?" Jeff Moe said after undefeated Iowa averted that possibility Monday night by beating No. 5 Purdue 70-67 in a tough Big Ten game.

Iowa, 17-0, moved into the top spot Monday, replacing Nevada-Las Vegas, which lost to Oklahoma 89-88 on Saturday. The Hawkeyes showed they belonged there when they rallied to win on the road despite playing without their top scorer, Roy Marble, for most of the game.

Kevin Gamble led Iowa with 19 points, Ed Horton had 14 and Moe added 11.

In other Top Twenty games, No. 4 UNLV beat Fullerton State 73-65, No. 6 DePaul defeated Indiana State 61-49, No. 14 St. John's downed No. 16 Pittsburgh 63-62, No. 18 Navy routed Delaware 84-60 and No. 19 Texas Christian beat Texas 52-37.

Iowa trailed 48-40 with 18 minutes remaining. Yet even without Marble, who leads the team with a 15.5 scoring average but was sidelined after he suffered a scratched eye midway through the first half, the Hawkeyes came back.

Gamble's basket with 3:58 left broke a 65-65 tie and, after Purdue missed a pair of three-point shots, a three-point play by Horton made it 70-65.

Melvin McCants' basket pulled the Boilermakers within three points, and Iowa's B.J. Armstrong missed the first foul shot in a one-and-one situation with 12 seconds to go.

But Troy Lewis, who led Purdue with 20 points, missed a three-point try with three seconds remaining. Iowa was called for traveling with one second left, but Lewis missed again on a desperation three-point attempt at the buzzer. The Boilermakers made just four of 17 three-point shots.

Iowa Coach Tom Davis said his team knew it was ranked No. 1 going into the game.

"I think they were rattled a bit but I think they hid it," Davis said. "As we get more experience, we're doing a better job of handling things that might have disrupted us before."

Purdue, 14-2, led 42-38 at halftime, helped by 18 Iowa turnovers. The Hawkeyes committed 30 turnovers overall, but outrebounded Purdue 43-24.

"If we're going to stay in the upper division we've got to get some help from our big men," Purdue Coach Gene Keady said. "I'm not going to tolerate them standing around and watching the game."

No. 4 UN-LV 73, Fullerton State 65

Freddie Banks scored 22 points and Armon Gilliam 18 as UNLV surged past Fullerton State in the second half in their Pacific Coast Athletic Association game.

UNLV, 16-1, led 44-34 at halftime before Fullerton State came back and eventually took a 57-56 lead with 8:41 remaining. The Runnin' Rebels then scored eight straight points and stayed ahead the rest of the way.

Gerald Paddio added 16 points for UNLV. Herman Webster scored 18 for host Fullerton State.

No. 6 DePaul 61, Indiana State 49

Dallas Comegys scored 19 points and sparked unbeaten DePaul past visiting Indiana State.

The Blue Demons, 15-0, trailed 38-34 early in the second half before running off 11 straight points, four by Comegys.

Rod Strickland added 18 for DePaul. Darrion Applewhite scored 12 for the Sycamores, who made nine of their first 11 shots from the field and led 21-10 midway through the first half.

No 14 St. John's 63, No. 16 Pitt 62

Shelton Jones scored 23 points, including two free throws with 21 seconds left that lifted St. John's over host Pitt in the Big East.

After Jones gave the Redmen the lead, Charles Smith had a chance to win it for Pitt, but his eight-foot shot missed with three seconds left.

Mark Jackson added 16 points as St. John's, 13-2, won its fourth straight game. Mike Goodson led the Panthers, 13-4, with 15 points and Curtis Aiken had 13.

No. 18 Navy 84, Delaware 60

David Robinson scored 32 points and became Navy's all-time rebounding leader as the Midshipmen trounced visiting Delaware.

Robinson, a 7-foot-1 senior, grabbed eight rebounds, giving him a total of 1,122. The All-America center scored 11 points during a 25-4 burst in the first half that turned a seven-point deficit into a 32-20 lead.

Carl Liebert scored 12 points for Navy, 12-3. Barry Berger had 14 for the Blue Hens.

No. 19 Texas Christian 52, Texas 37

TCU celebrated its first-ever appearance in the Top Twenty by beating Texas as Carven Holcombe scored 15 points and Jamie Dixon had 13.

The Horned Frogs, 14-3, won their 10th straight game, their longest winning streak in 35 years. TCU leads the Southwest Conference with a 5-0 record.

TCU outscored the visiting Longhorns 18-4 to close the first half and led 28-14 at the break. Texas did not get a field goal in the final 16½ minutes of the first half, missing 17 straight shots, before ending their slump early in the second half.

Texas' 37 points were the fewest allowed by TCU in a conference game since 1956.

Trophy To Honor Petty

CHARLOTTE (AP) — John Carrington, an unsuccessful Republican candidate for lieutenant governor in 1984, will be listed as the owner of Richard Petty's Pontiac on NASCAR's Winston Cup circuit this year, Petty announced Monday.

Petty, a seven-time NASCAR national champion, said the 2+2 Pontiac will still be from Petty Enterprises and STP will be his sponsor with Prestone as an associate sponsor.

Meanwhile, officials at the National Motorsport Press Association's annual convention announced that beginning in 1988, the organization's Driver of the Year will receive a special award called the Richard Petty trophy.

"I guess they did this because they felt like I wouldn't win another one of these," Petty said. "To me, it is a super, super big honor. Being named Driver of the Year is the ultimate. I can't think of any other trophy I would rather have named after me."

Carrington, who said he plans to run for lieutenant governor again in 1988, said he believed the ownership arrangement would benefit both men.

"I think racing is pretty strong in North Carolina," said Carrington, whose name will appear on Petty's car.

"As the sport gets more and more expensive, you need more people involved," said Petty, a Republican and a former Randolph County commissioner.

Conley Dumps East Carteret

HOLLYWOOD — D.H. Conley's Vikings got away to an early lead and powered their way to a 58-40 Coastal Conference basketball victory over East Carteret High School Monday night.

Conley's boys pushed their way out to a 17-8 lead in the opening quarter of the game and were never in trouble after that. East Carteret did outscore the Vikings, 13-10, in the second quarter, but Conley still led at the half, 27-21.

Kookaburra III To Defend Cup

FREMANTLE, Australia (AP) — Kookaburra III won the America's Cup defender trials Tuesday, eliminating Australia IV and ending owner Alan Bond's hopes of defending the trophy he won in 1983.

Kookaburra III beat Bond's yacht for the fifth straight time after a bungled start by Australia IV's skipper, Colin Beashel. Iain Murray forced Beashel to circle to avoid hitting the committee boat just before the start.

The final margin of victory was 55 seconds.

Kookaburra III won the best-of-nine competition 5-0, but her place in the decisive series against Stars & Stripes and skipper Dennis Conner starting Jan. 31 isn't assured.

Trials with stablemate Kookaburra II, eliminated in the previous round, are planned to see which of those boats would have a better chance of beating the U.S. challenger in the best-of-seven series.

In 1983, the Bond Syndicate's Australia II rode her innovative winged keel to an America's Cup victory over Conner and Liberty. It was the first time since the competition began in 1851 that a U.S. boat didn't win the Cup.

Conner earned a chance to avenge his 1983 loss Monday when Stars & Stripes completed a 4-1 victory over New Zealand in the challenger finals.

Conner saw his fulfilled as he survived a torn jib to defeat New Zealand by 1:29, earning the chance to get the trophy back.

New Zealand skipper Chris Dickson, 25, and his small nation saw their last hopes dim when his Kiwi Magic hit the seventh — and last — mark and had to re-round it. Dickson had pulled his yacht within two boat lengths of the Americans with one leg left.

"Thirteen years experience beat 13 months," Dickson said at a news conference after a race that had mixed tension with disaster.

Conner won, but another possible contest still remained to be resolved. Conner would like to tune his boat for the Jan. 31 opening of the Cup finals by practicing against New Zealand. Traditionally, the challengers gang together against the Cup defender. Before 1983, the defender was always the United States.

But tradition was shattered in 1983 when Conner lost the Cup to Australia, and it may take another beating because of New Zealand's regional tie with the Australian defenders.

Conner didn't help himself overcome the Down Under brotherhood when, last month, he said that any challenger that built a fiberglass yacht did so with the intention of cheating. New Zealand's yacht is a plastic 12-meter while all the rest are built of aluminum.

Earlier in the three-month-long elimination process, Conner's syndicate pressured to have New Zealand's subjected to extensive analysis. finals.

Dickson has said he would prefer to support the Australian defender rather than the U.S. yacht because it would be easier to enter the 1990 America's Cup if it is held in Fremantle rather than in the United States. Fay indicated after Monday's loss that no decision had been made.

"It is something that, up until last night, was not at the top of our priority list," he said today. "It wasn't when I woke up this morning but it's quickly getting to the top.

"To my surprise, there already have been a number of things happen from some unexpected quarters that would indicate that this is fast becoming an issue."

Fay said he and Malin Burnham, head of the San Diego-based Stars & Stripes syndicate, will meet "quite soon."

Disaster struck Conner and his crew during Monday's race when their tautly trimmed jib tore from top to bottom on the third of eight legs in winds that reached a high of 28 knots.

Conner said nothing when left alone at the helm while his 10 shipmates raced forward to repair the damage. They had a new jib up and flying in 2 minutes, 52 seconds. But the mishap cost Stars & Stripes two-thirds of what had been a nine-boat-length lead.

Conner just managed to fight off Dickson on the next reaching leg. New Zealand was foaming in her wake and threatening to overtake Stars & Stripes when the Kiwis experienced trouble of their own.

The New Zealanders were changing spinnakers and the sails became entangled in a billowing confusion of cloth. The mixup allowed Conner to double his lead, to 16 seconds, around the fifth mark as the Kiwis slowed to about nine knots.

Dickson charged back and, coming around the seventh buoy at the top of the home stretch, was only two lengths astern. But Dickson, who has only been sailing Cup 12-meter yachts since late 1984, hit the inflated orange bouy. Racing rules dictated that he go around it again and Conner was left with an easy lead to the finish, crossing the finish line with a lead of 1 minute, 29 seconds.

In football terms, Dickson's mistake was like fumbling on the goal line with the game on the line.

"We'll be back," said Fay. "Unfortunately, we've caught the America's Cup bug."

"It's great to be back in the finals," Conner said as he came ashore. He has been working for three years to regain the trophy he lost at Newport, R.I.

On Monday, Kookaburra III defeated Australia IV for the fourth straight time in the best-of-nine defender finals, winning by 1:13.

A protest lodged by Australia IV charging Kookaburra III with sailing below its proper course was dismissed. Two protests by Kookaburra III were then withdrawn.

John Marshall, a coordinator of the Stars & Stripes campaign, said Kookaburra III "is a fast boat, and it's going to be a real fight."

Mike Tyson Doll: Wind It Up And It Intimidates

By ED SCHUYLER JR.
AP Boxing Writer

A plan is in place to market Mike Tyson, the unbeaten and exciting heavyweight champion.

Look for a movie and a book, and expect to see Tyson selling products on television.

And a man who will be involved in the promotion said, "I'd expect a toy company would be interested in doing something."

Can you picture a Mike Tyson Doll? Wind it up and it intimidates other dolls.

Jimmy Jacobs, who manages Tyson along with his business partner, Bill Cayton, laughed at the doll suggestion. He knew it was joke. But the selling of the youngest man to win a heavyweight title is serious business. Con men and cranks need not apply.

Jacobs and Cayton, equal partners in Reel Sports Inc., which has a personal services contract with Tyson, have signed an agreement with Ohlmeyer Communications Co. for the marketing and licensing of the fighter.

Ohlmeyer Communications will "differentiate between various deals offered to us," Jacobs said. "They will make recommendations, then we'll decide."

These two men mapped a campaign of 28 fights in a little more than 20 months that resulted in Tyson becoming a champion at age 20.

"They tell me who to fight and I fight them," Tyson has said.

Selection of marketing and licensing deals will reflect that the hard-punching but soft-spoken Tyson is "going to be a very important role model," John Martin, president of Ohlmeyer Communications, said.

Among the transactions to be looked into, Cayton said, are "sponsorship deals, a film deal and a book deal. We've had offers from three motion picture companies."

Martin feels a movie wouldn't be so much "The Mike Tyson Story" as it would be "Cus and The Kid."

Cus D'Amato, the late boxing teacher who guided the careers of heavyweight champion Floyd Patterson and light heavyweight champion Jose Torres, first saw Tyson spar when Tyson was 13 or 14 and an inmate of an upstate New York reform school.

The rise of Tyson from a tough kid off the streets of Brooklyn to the heavyweight championship under the tutelage of D'Amato, who died in 1985, and the guidance of Cayton and Jacobs would seem to be a sure-shot storyline.

The first time D'Amato watched Tyson, he told him that, if he listened and worked hard, he could become heavyweight champion.

"I thought he was a crazy old white dude," Tyson said after winning the World Boxing Council title on a second-round knockout of Trevor Berbick last Nov. 22.

That would be a good place to end a movie or a book.

But Cayton thinks a better ending would be Tyson "winning the undisputed championship." That could happen this year.

Tyson is scheduled to take a step toward that goal with a March 7 fight at Las Vegas against James "Bonecrusher" Smith, the World Boxing Association champion.

Jacobs, Cayton and Martin all said that, while deals will be discussed, none probably will be made until after the Smith fight.

Yesterday's Cryptoquip: DENTIST'S PUBLISHED PLEDGE: "NOTHING BUT THE TOOTH."

Today's Cryptoquip clue: O equals R

The Cryptoquip is a simple substitution cipher in which each letter used stands for another. If you think that X equals O, it will equal O throughout the puzzle. Single letters, short words, and words using an apostrophe can give you clues to locating vowels. Solution is accomplished by trial and error.

Traditionalists?

Youthful punk styles may shock you, but many of the details of such fads are far from new. The fashionable Renaissance woman shaved her hair several inches back from her natural hairline. In Alexander the Great's time, Greeks had a penchant for blond hair, and both men and women bleached their locks. But in ancient Egypt, beautiful woman had to have bald heads. Women used tweezers to remove every hair and then polished their scalps to a glossy sheen.

Opening lead: King of ♥ That extra chance which ensures a contract is often concealed. Can you spot the winning line on today's hand?

North-South bid intelligently to an excellent spade slam.

North chose to play in spades rather than hearts because the former might be able to withstand a bad heart break, and in spades an extra trick or two might be developed by diamond ruffs.

West led the king of diamonds, and declarer saw immediately that his slam was on ice if either major suit broke 3-2. Could he protect against a 4-1 break in both suits?

It did not take South long to realize that it would be fatal to cash the king of hearts because the opening lead had removed a key dummy entry. The campaign he adopted could not be improved upon.

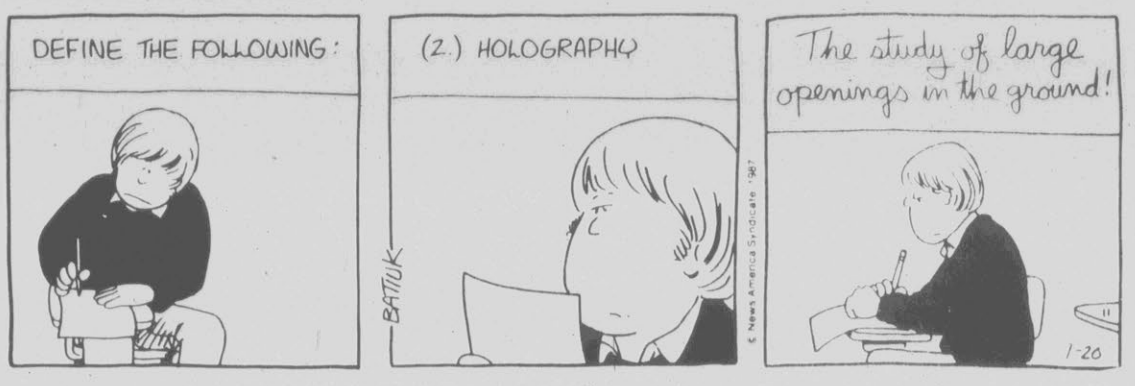

After winning the ace of diamonds, he cashed the king and queen of spades. Had both defenders followed, declarer would have cashed the king of hearts before drawing the last trump, and a heart ruff would then have set up that suit even if it divided 4-1. But when East showed out on the second trump, declarer fell back on his alternative line.

He cashed the ace of trumps, came to hand with the ace of clubs and drew the last trump. Next, he overtook the king of hearts with the ace and cashed the queen. Had both defenders followed, a ruff would have set up the suit while the king of clubs was there as an entry; and the suit would have been good had the jack dropped. But declarer was still in command when West showed out. He led the 10 for the marked ruffing finesse, and whether or not East covered, the heart suit could be brought in and the grand slam was made.

Baryshnikov Asked To Dance At Home

NEW YORK (AP) — Ballet virtuoso Mikhail Baryshnikov is considering an invitation from the Soviet Union to dance at Moscow's famed Bolshoi Theater some 13 years after defecting from his native land, his manager says.

"Misha (Baryshnikov) said, 'Let me think me about that'" after receiving the invitation from Bolshoi artistic director Yuri Grigorovich, said manager Edgar Vincent.

Grigorovich disclosed the invitation to Baryshnikov, 38, during a news conference Monday outlining the Bolshoi's four-city U.S. tour.

"I've met with Baryshnikov and Misha will be dancing at the Bolshoi Theater," Grigorovich said through an interpreter. "I'll be very happy on that occasion."

However, Vincent said the dancer has not made a decision.

Asked under what conditions Baryshnikov might return, the manager replied: "I don't think that was even discussed. Grigorovich wanted Baryshnikov to know the Russian government would not frown about him coming, that detente is on, and they are trying to get some of the great Russian artists to reappear in Russia."

Baryshnikov, who was trained at the Kirov Ballet in Leningrad, has not performed in the Soviet Union since defecting in 1974.

Since 1980, Baryshnikov has been artistic director of the American Ballet Theater. Before that, he was a dancer in the company.

Grigorovich announced that the Bolshoi Ballet will be at the Metropolitan Opera in New York from June 30 to July 18; at the Opera House in Washington's Kennedy Center July 21 to Aug. 1; at the War Memorial Opera House in San Francisco, Aug. 4-9; and at the Dorothy Chandler Pavilion in Los Angeles Aug. 11-30.

It last toured the United States in 1979, shortly before the cultural exchange agreement between the two countries lapsed. A new agreement was signed in November 1985.

Grigorovich, 60, choreographs all the ballets on the U.S. tour. They are "The Golden Age," to music by Shostakovich; a revised version of Marius Petipa's "Raymonda," to music of Glazunov; a new production of "Giselle" to music by Adam, and a mixed bill.

Oscar-Winning Producer Turns Out Documentary On American POWs

By JERRY BUCK
AP Television Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Producer Arnold Shapiro says the toughest part of making a documentary on American prisoners of war was that he was nearly overwhelmed by stories of heroism and survival in enemy hands.

Shapiro picked nine men to tell the story in the two-hour documentary "P.O.W. — Americans in Enemy Hands: World War II, Korea and Vietnam." The program, narrated by Robert Wagner, will be seen across the country between now and Feb. 10.

"We began by talking to more than 100 former POWs and each had great stories to tell," said Shapiro. "We wanted to get it down to nine men. It was the toughest selection process I've ever been involved in. It's a tribute to all POWs because these nine men together are representative of all the things that happened."

Shapiro says "P.O.W." rounds out a trilogy saluting American servicemen that began with "Return to Iwo Jima" and "The Unknown Soldier." He won an Oscar for his 1978 documentary "Scared Straight!" and has won 12 Emmys for various documentaries.

"More than 130,000 Americans were taken prisoner in all three wars," said Shapiro. "Most people here have no idea what these men endured and what physical and emotional scars they were left with.

ARNOLD SHAPIRO

"If you think about it, young people's knowledge about prisoners in World War II is limited to 'Hogan's Heroes.' Their knowledge of the Korean War is non-existent or limited to 'M-A-S-H.' And for Vietnam, they have 'Rambo' to look to. This documentary is the first TV special to deal accurately and factually with the POW experience."

The nine former prisoners are Daniel Steckler, Ralph Levenberg, Morris and David Shoss from World War II, Davy Booker and Robert Fletcher from Korea, and Everett Alvarez Jr., Nick Rowe and Richard Stratton from Vietnam.

The Shoss brothers were prisoners on opposite sides of the world. David was captured by the Germans in Europe and Morris was taken prisoner by the Japanese after his ship was torpedoed in the Pacific. Both escaped and returned home within one day of each other.

"I think the experiences of these nine men give a pretty complete picture of what our prisoners endured," he said. "We deal not only with their survival but the humor that kept them going. You wouldn't think so, but there was a lot of humor. There was also a lot of heroism. It took a tremendous amount of courage and stamina to survive."

The special examines how the prisoners were captured, their day-to-day existence, torture and brainwashing, great escapes, the waiting families at home and the homecomings.

It points out that survival often depended on who the captors were. For instance, only 1 percent died in German prison camps, but 35 percent died in Japanese camps. Shapiro said the Germans separated Jewish POWs and sent them to forced labor camps where the survival rate was very low.

"We took one former prisoner back to the camp, which was in East Germany," he said. "To say it was an emotional experience for him is an understatement. He cried. He took the crew to the spot where he was beaten and whipped and tortured."

He said the Veterans Administration hospitals have therapy groups for former World War II prisoners who still find it difficult to talk about their experiences.

Carol L. Fleisher was producer-director-writer for the special, which she called "the most emotionally difficult project" she had ever worked on. She added it was also extremely gratifying because it "gives me great hope for the resiliency of the human spirit."

Shapiro also returned to New Jersey to interview all the youths who appeared in "Scared Straight!" for a follow-up documentary called "Scared Straight! — 10 Years Later." The original show, narrated by Peter Falk, will be re-released, followed by the new documentary narrated by Whoopi Goldberg.

He is also at work on a documentary called "Future Flight," which will create 10 flights of the future both on Earth and in space.

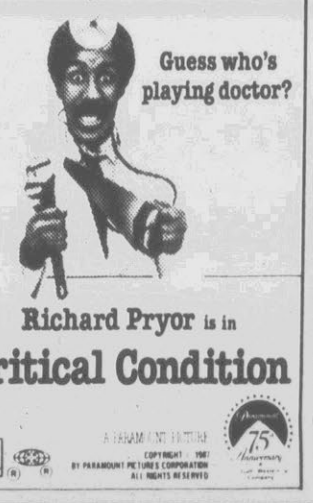

Another show, "Hiroshima Maidens," an hour-long drama, is being prepared for PBS' "Wonderworks."

PBS To Air Sympathetic Portrayal Of Conservative Movement's Birth

By EVANS WITT
AP Political Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — At the very least, no one is going to accuse the Public Broadcasting Service of liberal bias for presenting "The Conservatives."

The 90-minute documentary, which airs tonight, is a portrait from within the conservative movement, which grew from the anti-communist activism after World War II to the Goldwater campaign of 1964, the New Right of the 1970s and the election of Ronald Reagan as president in 1980.

The documentary is dotted with rarely seen film from the early events that shaped the movement. The dark, grainy shots of confessed former Soviet spy Whittaker Chambers at a congressional hearing fingering Alger Hiss as a fellow traitor are a particular highlight, as is the "class picture" of the 22 young conservatives who met in a the Avenue Motel in Chicago on Oct. 8, 1961, to plot the conservative takeover of the Republican Party three years later.

It is structured around interviews with many of the players in the movement, including an Oval Office chat with Reagan; former Sen. Barry Goldwater of Arizona; long conversations with Clifton White, architect of the Goldwater campaign; and repeated clips of William F. Buckley Jr. and William Rusher, both of National Review, the movement's journal.

Lest anyone be misled, this is a sympathetic history of the conservative movement, not a critical one.

It was produced by Neal B. Freeman, the first producer of Buckley's "Firing Line," a program that has showcased the conservative view as espoused by Buckley. Funds for the program were provided by the Lynde and Harry Bradley Foundation, the John M. Olin Foundation and the J.M. Foundation.

Some conservatives might be surprised to see this show on PBS, which has often been accused from the right of exhibiting a "liberal bias."

In September last year, 57 House members called for a study of the "apparent political imbalance" of PBS shows. And Reed Irvine, head of Accuracy in Media, a private, conservative group which judges news coverage, called one PBS presentation in 1986 "a sleazy, dishonest, inaccurate pro-communist propaganda film." That criticism was leveled at "When the Mountains Tremble," a documentary about guerrillas in Guatemala.

Largely in response to criticism, PBS last year set up a panel of outsiders to study its programs and policies to make certain they "reflect the great diversity of human thought, expression and experience."

And the Corporation for Public Broadcasting, the conduit for federal funds to PBS, sent out a proposal last fall for a study into the "objectivity and balance" of the programs it funds. A key advocate of the CPB study is board member Richard Brookhiser, managing editor of National Review. When those studies get around to reviewing "The Conservatives" there will be no doubt as to the point of view of the program.

There can be no doubt as well that the show tells the story well from the conservative perspective, marking clearly the steps along the road that eventually led Reagan to the White House.

Literature Awards Presented

CHICAGO (AP) — A book about discovering friendship and illustrations for the story of a janitor's tropical fantasy won the 1987 Newbery and Caldecott medals Monday, awards considered the Pulitzer Prizes of children's literature.

Sid Fleischman won the John Newbery Medal, honoring distinguished writing for children, for "The Whipping Boy," about the adventures of Prince Brat and Gemmy.

Richard Egielski, an illustrator, was awarded the Randolph Caldecott Medal for excellence in children's picture books for his work in the book, "Hey Al," in which a janitor's drab existence is transformed by a tropical bird.

The awards, given annually by the Association for Library Service to Children, were announced Monday at the American Library Association's winter convention.

"The competition was very stiff," said Kay E. Vandergrift, chairwoman of the 15-member Caldecott awards committee.

Trevelyn Jones, who chaired the 15-member Newbery awards panel, said the two medals are the most prestigious honors in children's literature and compare with the Pulitzers for journalism and literature.

The committees also selected runners-up, or "honor books," in each category. Named Newbery honor books were "On My Honor" by Marion Bauer; "Volcano" by Patricia Lauber; and "A Fine White Dust" by Cynthia Rylant.

Selected as Caldecott honor books were "Village of Round and Square Houses," illustrated by Ann Grifalconi; "Alphabatics," illustrated by Suse MacDonald; and "Rumpelstiltskin," illustrated by Paul Zelinsky.

In a separate announcement, Mildred Pitts Walter, a writer, and Jerry Pinkney, an illustrator, were named winners of the 1987 Coretta Scott King awards for excellence in children's literature by a black author and artist.

The awards are given by the association's Social Responsibilities Round Table to commemorate the life and works of the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., the slain civil rights leader, and his wife.

Ms. Walter won the award for her book, "Justin and the Best Biscuits in the World." Pinkney was honored for his illustrations in the book, "Half a Moon and One Whole Star."

This year's Newbery medal, established in 1922, honors Fleischman's book for children in grades 4-7, said Ms. Jones, book review editor of the School Library Journal in New York.

"The book is a very funny story of mistaken identities and of friendship," she said.

Republican Takes Over Alabama's State Reins From George Wallace

By DAVID TREADWELL
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — Guy Hunt, a northern Alabama cattleman, Amway distributor and lay Primitive Baptist minister, was sworn in Monday as Alabama's first Republican governor since Reconstruction, bringing to an end the often turbulent era of George C. Wallace, the one-time arch-segregationist governor.

"This is, indeed, a new day in Alabama," Hunt, 53, declared in his inaugural address to thousands of Alabamians who braved chilling winds and overcast skies to attend the ceremony in front of the white-domed state Capitol.

"Now, today have we come full circle," he said. "Now today have we arrived at that long awaited moment in Alabama history, the moment when we finally put to rest the forces that have divided us ...."

Hunt, whose only previous experience in elected office was as a two-term county probate judge, pledged to fight for unity, equality and economic opportunity for all Alabamians.

He also vowed to run an administration "dedicated to honesty and integrity so that, in the future, not only will we Alabamians be able to say we're proud to be from Alabama but people everywhere, when they meet an Alabamian, will say: 'You must be proud to be from Alabama.'"

The new governor delivered his remarks near the spot on the west steps of the Capitol where Jefferson Davis was sworn in as president of the Confederacy in 1861 and where Wallace proclaimed "Segregation now! Segregation forever!" in his first inaugural address in 1963.

Hunt, who had been considered a "sacrificial lamb" when he entered the gubernatorial race in this heavily Democratic state, pulled off a surprise victory last November after a prolonged and bitter primary election feud among Democrats led to massive voter defections to the Republican column.

Hunt outpolled former Lt. Gov. Bill Baxley, his Democratic challenger, by more than 170,000 of the total 1.3 million votes cast in the general election.

As the first GOP governor in this "Heart of Dixie" state since 1874, Hunt faces an uphill struggle in his attempt to move Alabama out of nearly a quarter-century of Wallace's domination. The state is plagued by staggering state budget deficits, lagging economic development and still deep racial divisions.

At the same time, Hunt also must contend with a state Legislature dominated by Democrats, many of them still smarting from his gubernatorial victory.

"He's going to have to be Merlin the Magician to work with that crowd," said Wayne Greenhaw of Montgomery, editor of Alabama magazine.

In a pre-inaugural interview, Hunt said that he looked forward to the challenges of his new office. "I hope it will be said of our administration that ... we restored honest government, created jobs for all Alabamians who really want to work and brought Alabama together instead of tearing it apart."

He said that he had met with 135 of the 140 Alabama House members and has received pledges from them to work together with him on critical state issues. "In Alabama, elected Democrats have the same philosophy as Republicans in a lot of areas — education, economic development and crime," he said.

Hunt also has said that he wants a "colorblind" administration. But of 20 persons named as Cabinet officers or as heads of state government agencies in recent weeks, all but one are white men.

Hunt's inauguration fell on the same day that Alabama observed a holiday for both Confederate Gen. Robert E. Lee and martyred civil rights leader Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., who once served as pastor of the Dexter Ave. Baptist Church, one block west of the Capitol.

Hunt paid homage to these Southern heroes, saying of King that he "paid the supreme sacrifice" in his struggle for racial equality.

And, he said, turning to Wallace who has been confined to a wheelchair in almost constant pain since an assassination attempt in 1972 left him paralyzed below the waist: "Gov. Wallace, your sacrifice will be forever remembered by all Alabamians."

Wallace, 67, announced last year that he would not run for an unprecedented fifth term because of ill health, declaring: "I have climbed my last political mountain."

New Air Force One Sits Unmarked On Boeing Plant's Assembly Line

By NORMAN BLACK
AP Military Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Somewhere on the production line of the Boeing Co.'s manufacturing plant in Everett, Wash., a collection of 747 aircraft parts is moving toward the "body join" area, waiting to be assembled into the next Air Force One.

By May, the parts will have been fashioned into what Boeing calls a "green" plane: flyable, but without any interior. It will then be flown to the Boeing Military Airplane Co. in Wichita, Kan., for outfitting, where it will begin its life as one of the most closely guarded airplanes in the world.

Until May, though, there is no overt security to mark the new presidential plane: no guards standing by, no security clearances for workers, no special inspectors constantly standing watch.

Rather, Boeing and the Air Force are relying on anonymity.

"The airframes are going down the production line in an unidentified manner," explains Boeing spokesman Pete Dakan, noting a second, backup Air Force One will emerge as a green plane in March 1988.

"The first Air Force One replacement is now mixed in among other unidentified planes moving down the line. That airplane is on the line and probably next month will go into body join (for the attachment of the wings to the fuselage) and then into final assembly."

There are normally 12 fledgling 747s on the line at any one time, and Boeing has limited the number of employees who actually know which plane will be turned into Air Force One, Dakan says.

"But there are no other special Air Force-requested security requirements at this stage beyond not identifying which one it is on the line," the spokesman added.

All that will change in May when the newly minted plane arrives in Wichita.

"It will become secure when it goes to Wichita," says Dakan. "Everyone will be required to have a scurity clearance and everything will be in a guarded area."

Boeing's facility in Wichita, because it already works on military planes, has long been physically secured by a guard force. To outfit the new plane with office and sleeping spaces, communications gear and all the trappings of the presidency, Boeing will use only employees with military clearances and pay special attention to their work.

Boeing has experience in the process — but it's dated experience. The primary and backup planes now used by the president are Boeing 707s, manufactured 14 and 24 years ago, respectively.

Boeing won a $249.8 million contract to build the two planes last summer, beating out the McDonnell Douglas Corp. and its DC-10. Boeing is expected to begin flight testing the first replacement in summer 1988 and deliver it to the Air Force by November 1988. It should be available to ferry President Reagan home to California and retirement two months later.

The second plane is scheduled to be delivered in May 1989.

The Air Force also is planning construction of a new hangar for the huge 747s at Andrews Air Force Base, Md., and sometime closer to the first delivery date, Boeing will begin flight training for presidential air crews.

The term Air Force One actually is a radio call sign applied to any airplane that is carrying a president. But the term has become synonymous with the two Boeing 707s maintained by the 89th Military Airlift Wing at Andrews.

The planes, with their distinctive striping and American flag on their tails, are recognizable around the world. According to the Air Force, however, they are also of such a vintage that it is becoming increasingly difficult to support them with spare parts.

The new 747s are being constructed in such a way as to carry about 70 passengers and 23 crew members, compared with the 400 passengers that can be carried by the commercial version of the four-engine jet.

The Air Force has said the new planes will have state-of-the-art communications equipment, an emergency medical facility and special work and rest areas for the president, his staff, the Secret Service and the news media.

Congress Ready, Willing To Begin Revamping New Tax Reform Law

By JIM LUTHER
AP Tax Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — If you really believed the 879-page "Tax Reform Act of 1986" was the tax bill to end all tax bills and that Congress was going to enact the landmark measure and leave the tax code alone for awhile, well, you'd better think again.

The Congressional Record for the first few days of the 1987 session shows that more than 100 tax bills have been introduced, many of them proposing to undo provisions that were approved barely three months ago.

Some of the bills seek to plow new ground. Some are introduced routinely, year after year. Most reflect concern about safety, education, home ownership, the economy — and, of course, the folks back home.

Following is a sampling of the proposals and their sponsors. They would:

—Grant a tax credit for the cost of buying child-restraint systems used in cars. Sen. Daniel Inouye, D-Hawaii.

—Repeal the income tax on Social Security pensions. Rep Stephen Neal, D-N.C.

—Allow homeowners who refinance their mortgages a full deduction for "points" in the year they are paid. Rep. Sherwood Boehlert, R-N.Y.

—Restore the deduction for state and local sales taxes. Rep. Stewart McKinney, R-Conn.

—Allow all homeowners a once-a-lifetime tax exemption for up to $125,000 in profits from the sale of their principal home; present law limits the benefit to those 55 or older. Rep. Benjamin Gilman, R-N.Y.

—Exclude tips from taxation. Rep. Phil Crane, R-Ill.

—Permit deduction of expenses of higher education. Rep. James Quillen, R-Tenn.

—Deny deductions for contributions to the athletic program of any college that does not meet certain academic requirements. Rep. James Howard, D-N.J.

—Prevent giant food-processing companies from taking advantage of an accounting system meant for "family farms." Sen. Edward Zorinsky, D-Neb.

—Permit taxpayers to earmark their taxes for a fund to fight hunger. Rep. Bob Carr, D-Mich.

—Put the Senate on record against raising the reduced income-tax rates in the new law. Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan.

—Require that any tax increase be subject to approval by two-thirds majorities in the House and Senate. Rep. Robert Lagomarsino, R-Calif.

—Permit tax-free withdrawal from Individual Retirement Accounts to purchase a first home. Sen. Donald Riegle, D-Mich.

—Impose a new tax on imported oil. Sen. Don Nickles, D-Okla.

—Permit a deduction for commuting by mass transit. Rep. Norman Lent, R-N.Y.

—Allow low- and middle-income renters to deduct part of their rent. Lent.

—Allow full deduction of interest paid on student loans. Rep. Thomas Tauke, R-Iowa.

—Authorize a one-time amnesty from criminal and civil penalties for a tax cheat who settles accounts with the IRS. Sen. Alan Dixon, D-Ill.

—Permit a $500-a-year tax credit for any taxpayer maintaining in the household a dependent over the age of 65. Rep. Mario Biaggi, D-N.Y.

—Grant taxpayers a "bill of rights" to assure fair treatment by the IRS. Sen. Harry Reid, D-Nev.

—Deny a tax exemption to any hospital or organization that performs or finances abortions. Sen. Gordon Humphrey, R-N.H.

—Exempt unemployment compensation from taxation. Rep. Dale Kildee, D-Mich.

Sweden Arrests Trio In Prime Minister's Death

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — Police arrested three suspects in last February's assassination of Prime Minister Olof Palme, and suggested today that the killing was linked to a government crackdown on a leftist Kurdish group.

The three were "informed of suspicion of complicity in the murder of Olof Palme," said the statement from Stockholm Police Chief Hans Holmer and Chief Prosecutor Claes Zeime, who have led the investigation.

Palme, 59, a four-term Socialist prime minister, was shot in the back last Feb. 28 while walking with his wife down a busy Stockholm thoroughfare.

The statement did not say when the three were arrested, give their identities or say where they were being held. Police spokeswoman Carin Brange said a news conference would be held this afternoon on the arrests, but refused to give further details.

Security was increased around police headquarters and the building was surrounded by armed police.

The police statement also said three people were arrested on suspicion of taking part in the November 1985 slaying of a Kurdish immigrant in Stockholm, but did not make clear whether they were the same three suspected in the Palme slaying.

The national news agency Tidningarnas Telegrambyra said 20 people, including the three Palme suspects, were picked up early today.

The police statement said "several of the persons affected" by the police measures were Kurds with ties to the Kurdish Workers Party, a Marxist organization that seeks to set up a separate Kurdish state in Turkey. Palme's government declared the party a terrorist organizaton in 1984.

The Kurdish immigrant shot in November 1985, Cetin Gungor, was a defector from the Kurdish Workers Party.

Palme, a champion of disarmament and Third World causes, was shot at point-blank range with a .357-caliber Magnum. He and his wife, Lisbet, had just left a movie theater and were walking down a main street in central Stockholm.

The killer fled on foot down a darkened street and has been the object of Sweden's most intense manhunt.

Two defectors from the Kurdish Workers Party were assassinated in Sweden in 1984 and 1985, and the Palme government sentenced the killers to life in prison. It placed nine party members suspected of complicity in the slayings under "district arrest," meaning they were confined to the area of their homes.

National news media have speculated that the Kurdish Workers Party was involved in Palme's slaying out of revenge, but party spokesmen repeatedly have denied any involvement.

Several west European countries have sizeable communities of Kurds, most of them refugees from war or repression in their home region, which includes parts of Iraq, Iran and eastern Turkey.

The goverment keeps no official records on the number of Kurds in Sweden, listing them instead by country of origin. However, the Swedish Communist Party last year estimated that there were 7,000 to 8,000 Kurds in Sweden, most of them from Turkey.

The Kurdish Workers Party was founded in Turkey in the 1970s and later expanded its organization to Western Europe. It has been torn by internal strife and has been accused of killing defectors and detractors.

Prime Minister Ingvar Carlsson's Social Democratic government was informed of the arrests and the interrogations "with a number of other persons in connection to the investigation of the murder in Medborgarhuset in November 1985 and the murder of Olof Palme," a government statement said.

Gungor was shot in a public building in Stockholm called Medborgarhuset.

Latin American Diplomats Seek Proposals For Peace

GUATEMALA CITY (AP) — Ten Latin American diplomats seeking to resume talks for a Central American peace treaty heard a Costa Rican proposal for a cease-fire and free elections in Nicaragua and a Nicaraguan call for bilateral talks with Washington.

The diplomats travel today to El Salvador and Honduras.

The delegation is made up of U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar, who is from Peru, Secretary-General Joao Baena Soares of the Organization of American States, who is Brazilian, and foreign ministers of the four Contadora nations and their four support nations.

They began their mission Monday, meeting in quick succession with Costa Rican President Oscar Arias in San Jose, Nicaraguan President Daniel Ortega in Managua and Guatamalan President Vinicio Cerezo in Guatamala City.

Ortega told the diplomats "not to spare efforts" in trying to bring the United States and Nicaragua together in bilateral talks with the aim of normalizing relations.

He said Nicaragua wants "to arrive at bilateral accords that guarantee the legitimate security concerns of the United States in the region."

Nicaragua's leftist government and the United States held nine rounds of talks before President Reagan suspended them in January 1985.

Washington wants the Sandinista government to talk with the U.S.-backed Nicaraguan opposition. However, Nicaragua insists any peace talks be held directly with Washington, which it considers the real aggressor because the United States aids the Nicaraguan rebels, called Contras.

Ortega told reporters later that the diplomats' mission was fruitful but was only a step toward "containing escalation of the conflicts and opening space for peace."

"While this mission travels in Central America, the North American government continues its policy of terror aginst Nicaragua, continues disregarding the sentence of the International Court of Justice," Ortega said.

West Germans Expected To Extradite Hijack Suspect

BONN, West Germany (AP) — Officials said a Lebanese man charged in the United States with air piracy and murder in a 1985 TWA hijacking could be extradited very quickly now that Washington has pledged he will not face the death penalty.

Justice Ministry spokesman Juergen Schmid said Monday that the need for such a pledge had been the main obstacle to extraditing Mohammed Ali Hamadi, who was arrested in Frankfurt a week ago.

Today, the government for the first time linked Hamadi's arrest to the subsequent kidnapping in Lebanon of a West German business.

U.S. Justice Department officials said Sunday they would comply with the West German demand that Hamadi not face the death penalty, and Schmid said West Germany now is waiting to receive the promise in writing.

Once the required papers arrive, he said, they will be sent to a Frankfurt court for a ruling on whether the terms of the 1978 U.S.-West German extradition treaty have been fulfilled.

The treaty requires U.S. officials to promise criminal suspects will not be sentenced to death if convicted. West Germany does not have the death penalty. "When we do get the documents, then it can go very fast," Schmid said, but refused to predict when the process might be completed.

"It is in our interest to do it as fast as possible. We are under obligation to fulfill the terms of the treaty ... as quickly as possible," he said.

U.S. Justice Department spokesman Patrick Korten said in Washington that the department will file its formal extradition request in the next few days.

Hamadi, 22, is charged in the United States with air piracy, murder and more than a dozen other crimes. West German authorities said he was identified by fingerprints as one of the hijackers who seized a TWA jetliner June 14, 1985, on a flight from Rome to Athens.

The hijackers shot U.S. Navy diver Robert Stethem to death at Beirut airport and held 39 American passengers hostage for 17 days.

In Washington, Associate Attorney General Stephen Trott said Monday that if convicted, Hamadi faces "approximately life sentence, although we're studying the possibility of even asking for more."

Trott noted that former Navy communications specialist Jerry Whitworth was sentenced in San Francisco last August to 365 years in prison.

Military Supports Ecuadoran Leader

QUITO, Ecuador (AP) — The joint military command expressed support for President Leon Febres Cordero and criticized attempts by opposition parties to condemn him following his 11-hour kidnapping by disgruntled paratroopers.

A special session of the opposition-controlled Congress was called today to review Febres Cordero's conduct in office. Some leftist and center-left lawmakers said they would seek to impeach him if he does not resign.

But Defense Minister Medardo Salazar read a brief communique over national television Monday night saying the armed forces "reject the attempt of those who are trying to exploit unfortunate events to put on trial the actions of those who were offended instead of judging those who promoted and carried out this criminal attempt."

The nation's top military court on Monday dropped a rebellion charge against renegade air force commander Gen. Frank Vargas Pazzos, in keeping with an amnesty Febres Cordero signed while held captive last Friday.

The president was held by a small group of air force paratroopers loyal to Vargas Pazzos. They freed him in return for the release of Vargas Pazzos from jail and a promise that the former general would not be prosecuted for leading a failed rebellion last March.

EastCare Authorized To Resume Service

By CAROL TYER
Reflector Staff Writer

Pitt County Memorial Hospital's EastCare air ambulance service can resume operation, hospital trustees agreed Tuesday night.

The trustees said the helicopter emergency transportation service may get back under way as soon as flight personnel training is completed to the vice president for nursing service's satisfaction. OmniFlight, the supplier of helicopters, pilots and mechanics for EastCare, has said that it can supply what is needed to start up whenever the EastCare staff is ready.

Hospital administrators earlier had said that, with the trustees' approval, the startup could occur within three to six weeks.

The vote to resume EastCare, which shut down after a Jan. 8 helicopter crash in which four people were killed, was unanimous and there was little discussion.

During an earlier executive committee meeting, the riskiness of helicopter operation, especially in emergency rescue situations, was discussed. But the concensus was that EastCare administrators and crew want to continue, the public wants the service, other tertiary care hospitals offer it, and so should Pitt Memorial. A report from the National Transportation Safety Board on the possible cause of the Jan. 8 crash may be six months away, board members were told.

Approval was given for the hiring of the accounting firm of Ernst and Whinney of Raleigh to conduct a long-range financial plan for the hospital. The cost of the service is not to exceed $48,000.

Kathryn Lewis, chairman of the guest relations committee, reported that the list of candidates for the newly created vice president for guest relations position has been narrowed from 80 to five. Interviewing will be held next Monday and Thursday.

Charles Gaskins reported that the laboratory addition construction project is about 10 days behind schedule, mostly because of weather. He said bids on the neonatal unit addition will be received Feb. 10.

A nominating committee was appointed. Norman Van Veld is chairman and Arlee Griffin and Bill Flowers are committee members.

Hospital President Jack Richardson reported that Pitt Memorial is the state's eighth largest hospital, tied with Wake Medical Center with 560 beds. He said utilization of beds in this hospital often equals utilization in much larger hospitals like Presbyterian in Charlotte with 642 beds.

Unlike many other hospitals in the country, utilization at PCMH continues to grow. In December, the hospital had 14,444 patient days, in contrast to 13,053 the previous December.

Resolutions of respect were approved both for the EastCare crew members killed in the Jan. 8 crash and for Dr. Ray Minges, long a surgeon and a former hospital chief of the medical staff, who died Monday. A copy of the appropriate resolution will be sent to the family of each.

City Considers Plan To Develop Difficult Tracts

By DON REUTER
Reflector Staff Writer

A proposed Planned Unit Development Ordinance will facilitate compromises between developers and surrounding landowners on controversial projects by establishing new requirements, according to Greenville planning officials.

The ordinance, which establishes a new zoning classification, can be requested by developers.

"The purpose of developing a planned unit development concept is to allow the development of politically and geographically hard-to-build parcels through the conditional use process and the cluster development," City Planner Harry Hamilton told City Council members at a workshop meeting Tuesday.

Problems with developing land in odd-shaped parcels and flood zones or near single-family residential zones would be alleviated under the PUD plan, Hamilton said.

"They (geographically hard to develop areas) may be very expensive properties, but they are very hard to build under conventional standards," Hamilton said. "An example of politically hard-to-build parcels would be an area, perhaps any development, that is located adjacent to single-family residential or single-family zoning district."

The PUD ordinance will allow developers to present plans at an earlier date than is presently permitted, according to Bobby Roberson, director of Planning and Community Development, who said an eight-member committee began work on the proposal about 16 months ago.

"It means they would have the opportunity to show how they are going to develop property," Roberson said. "It also gives residents the opportunity to see exactly where single-family, multifamily and and duplexes will be placed on a tract.

"It guarantees the planning commission (the power) to require the developer to actually show what he's going to do. The proposal would, in reality, be part of the rezoning request."

"Under this district concept, the Zoning Ordinance specs would have to be amended to provide a new zoning district like one of the medical districts," Hamilton said. "Within that district, we would have some specific use and dimensional standards listed right in the text of the ordinance.

"Prior to any type of development, a special use permit for a specific development or a land use plan would have to be presented and approved."

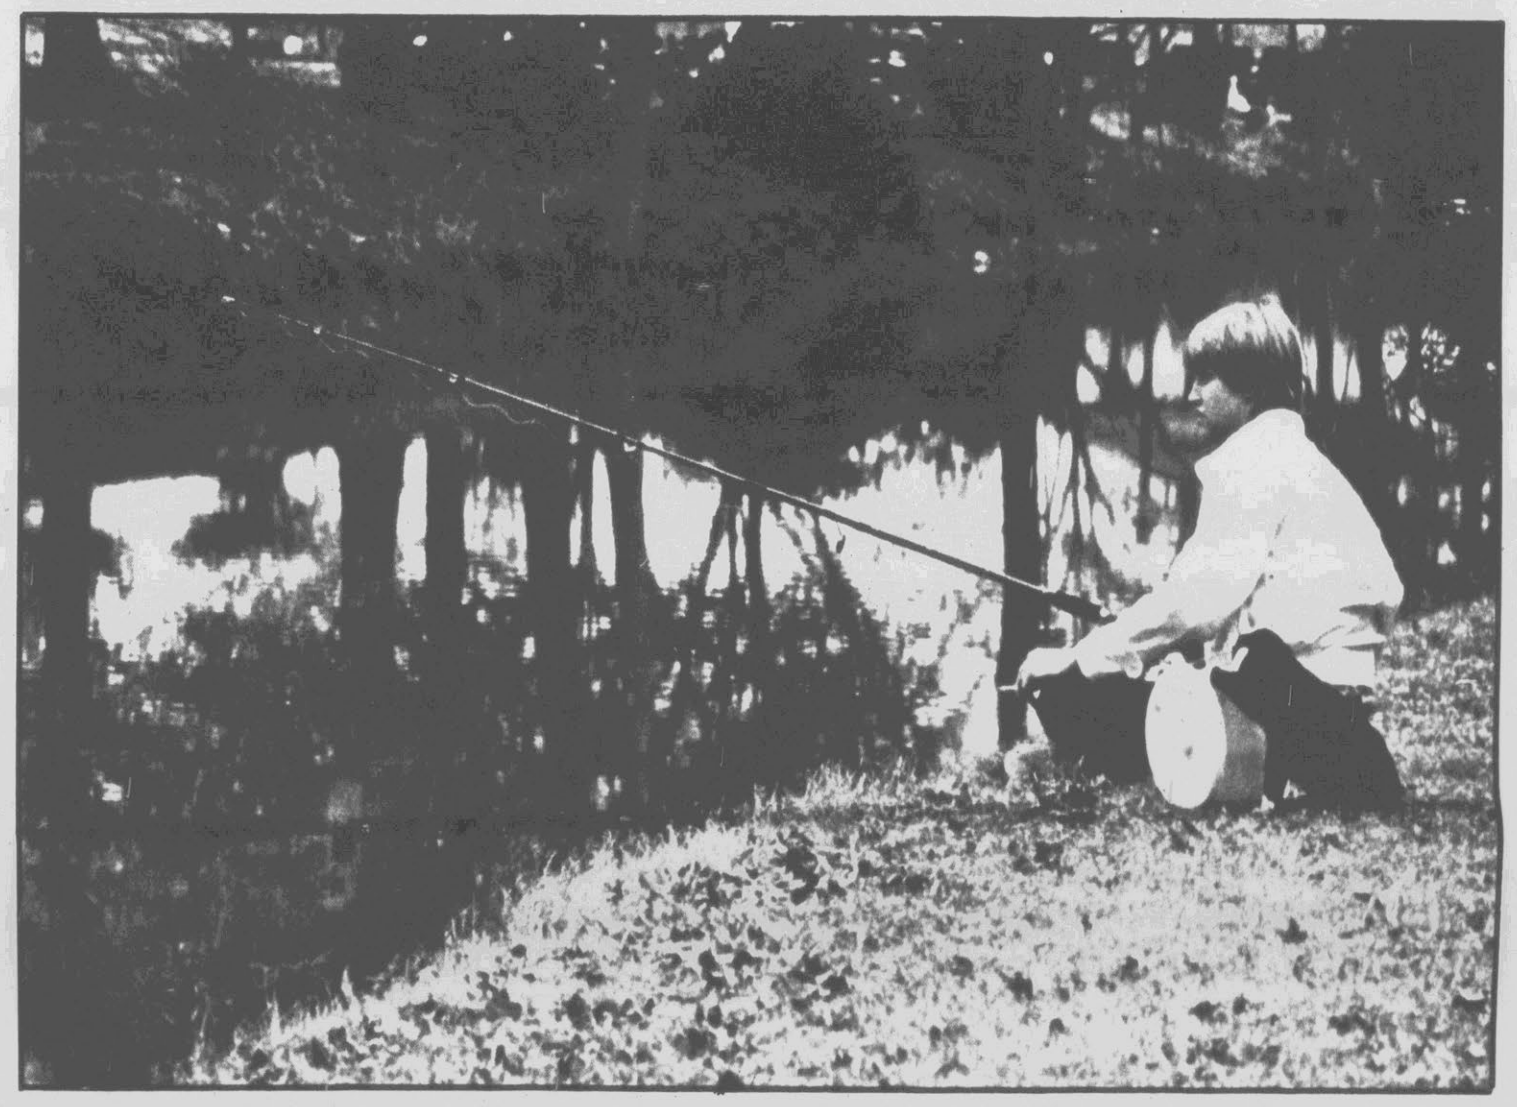

In other business, Bob Paciocco, executive director of the Mid-East Commission, presented the regional economic development and planning organizations annual report for 1985-86.

"Serving the counties of Beaufort, Bertie, Hertford, Martin and Pitt, the cities of Greenville and Washington, and 31 towns, the areas of responsibility have expanded to include such programs as aging, emergency medical services and manpower," Paciacco said in the report.

The region covers almost 3,000 square miles — 6 percent of the total land area for the state — and is inhabited by more than 210,000 people, Paciocco said.

"The land is basically rural with

WINTER FISHING — Even though the weather may be dull and cool, it doesn't stop the avid fisherman from finding a favorite pond and a little extra time for bass fishing. Donny Dunbar of Greenville found his favorite spot Tuesday at a pond near Winterville. Dunbar said he had a few bites but no fish when the photo was made, although a farm cat was finding his own catch of the day as he discovered the bait bucket that contained Dunbar's live minnows. After repeated tries, the cat was treated to a minnow snack. (Reflector Photo by Tommy Forrest)

Bedford Proposal Rejected

By DON REUTER
Reflector Staff Writer

The Greenville Planning and Zoning Commission has rejected a revised preliminary plat of Bedford development after hearing objections from nearby homeowners, who said the plan would have a negative impact on their neighborhood.

The proposed plat, which was denied by the panel at its monthly meeting Tuesday night, called for an extension of Bremerton Drive to Evans Street. Commissioners cited increased traffic as the reason for the ruling.

"I speak for the residents of Grayleigh, Bedford and Lynndale subdivisions in saying we oppose the extension of Bremerton to connect with Evans Street," said Dr. Henry Stone of 310 Dupont Circle.

The extension of the road will change the complexion of surrounding neighborhoods, according to Stone, an associate professor of

Waite Holds All-Night Negotiation As 2nd German Reported Missing

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — An anonymous caller said today a West German was kidnapped overnight, the second German adbucted in Beirut since the arrest in Frankfurt of a Lebanese on charges of hijacking a TWA jetliner in 1985.

Anglican Church envoy Terry Waite met with pro-Iranian Shiite Moslem extremists in what was apparently an all-night negotiating session aimed at freeing U.S. hostages Terry Anderson and Thomas Sutherland, who were kidnapped in 1985.

Jihad Zohairi, a spokesman for the Druse militia that has escorted Waite in Beirut, told reporters: "Mr. Waite is having a meeting with the hostage-holders. We're waiting for a phone call from him to go and pick him up."

The anonymous caller to a Western news agency office in west Beirut said, "We kidnapped yesterday night German national Alfred Schmidt in the vicinity of the Summerland hotel." The caller, who spoke Arabic, hung up without saying what group he represented.

The claim, if genuine, would bring to 19 the number of foreigners missing and believed kidnapped in Lebanon.

Schmidt, 46, is an engineer with the Siemens company and was in charge of installing equipment for the new 9-story Middle East Hospital, about half a mile from the hotel.

The hospital manager, Dr. Adel Alyeh, said Schmidt "was kidnapped from his hotel room," but did not elaborate.

A Summerland hotel spokesman, however, said Schmidt left the hotel Tuesday morning "and has not returned." The spokesman said Schmidt checked into the seaside hotel in the Jnah district on Thursday.

Another Summerland employee denied Schmidt was kidnapped from his room.

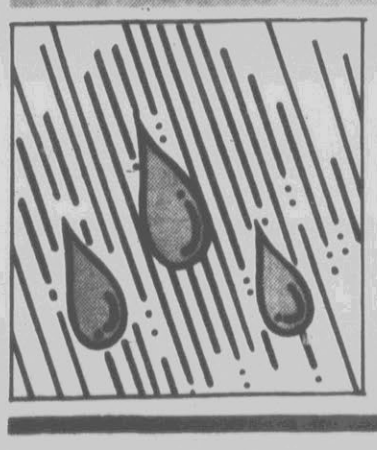

"I saw him Tuesday morning. He told me 'bye' and left the hotel," said the employee, who also spoke on condition of anonymity.

A Siemens company source in Christian east Beirut, who also spoke on condition of anonymity, said, "We have no information about Mr. Schmidt."

In Bonn, West German government spokesman Juergen Findeisen refused to comment, saying officials did not have any information on Schmidt.

West German businessman Rudolf Cordes was kidnapped Saturday shortly after arriving at Beirut airport. No group has claimed responsibility for his abduction, but West German security sources said he was being held by Hezbollah, a Shiite group loyal to Iran.

King's Fraternity Honors Three

By CHERIE EVANS
Reflector Staff Writer

Three people were honored Tuesday night at East Carolina University as outstanding minority leaders of the community in recognition of Martin Luther King Jr.'s birthday.

The Eta Nu chapter of Alpha Phi Alpha Fraternity at ECU named Raymond Carney as the outstanding minority keader in the community; Lisa Reddick received the outstanding Greek award, and Stephen Pierce was presented the Martin Luther King Jr. Student Leadership Award.

The third annual ceremony, held in Mendenhall Student Center, was a tribute to King, who pledged the fraternity at Morehouse College.

The chapter chooses the individual in the community "who we feel has supported the minority students on campus," said Anthony Jackson, a member of the fraternity.

"We also recognize all leaders of minority organizations" during the ceremony and choose the students of the year, he said.

The students chosen have "gone beyond the call of duty in their organizations and in helping other organizations ... He does those things necessary to bring the black community together as well as keep up with the academics," Jackson said.

Carney is a fireman-rescuer with the Greenville Fire-Rescue Department, said Ralph Meachum, a member of the fraternity. "He owns the Unlimited Touch and Flamingo Records."

ECU doesn't provide adequate social facilities for blacks on campus, Meachum said, so Carney allows black organizations to use his club and keep any profits they make.

"He's putting a lot back into the community," he said.

Ms. Reddick is a senior at ECU who exemplifies hard work in her organization and tries to pull together the black Greek structure and blacks overall, Meachum said.

Meachum said that many blacks at ECU are apathetic about things. People such as Ms. Reddick "try to break that down."

Pierce is a member of the ECU Student Government Association, president of the Christian Fellowship, a member of the campus branch of the NAACP and a member of the Gospel Choir.

A junior at ECU, Pierce is a Marine veteran and is an associate minister at a local church, Meachum said.

The fraternity also solicited signatures supporting King's holiday as a state holiday in a petition to be sent to university officials.

"We feel that the state as well as the campus of East Carolina should take into consideration the contribution this man (King) has given the United States," Meachum said.

Jackson said, "We would like the university to observe the day as a true holiday."

Gold ribbons, symbolizing a color of the fraternity, were given to those who signed the petition. "They're (the ribbons) just an outward expression of being aware of a holiday," Meachum said.

A candlelight vigil also was held Monday evening "to allow a period of reflection for the students," Jackson said.

Songs of the civil rights movement were sung during the vigil and a campus minister made remarks, Meachum said.

East Carolina University placed first among choices of students in populous northern Virginia who go to out-of-state colleges and universities.

The statistic was revealed in a survey by the Fairfax County, Va., school system which showed that 86.7 percent of Fairfax's high school graduates planned to go to college. Two-thirds planned to go to four-year colleges and universities.

In out-of-state college destinations, ECU ranked first, ahead of Penn State and West Virginia University which tied for second place. Elon College was fourth, followed by Florida State University, Brigham Young University, N.C. State University and Duke.

Fairfax County turned out nearly 5,000 college-bound high shool graduates last spring.

Farm Life Hearing Scheduled

WILLIAMSTON — Parents of students attending Farm Life School will have another chance to voice opposition to tentative plans to close the school at the end of the current school year.

A public hearing will be held Feb. 2 at 7:30 p.m. at the Martin County Board of Education offices.

After school board members recently expressed the hope the meeting will not become a long, heated discussion such as occurred last July, school board attorney Dan Manning said the board could legally control the hearing. With that assurance, the board has decided to limit the Feb. 2 hearing to one hour. Anyone not part of the Farm Life School group who wants to speak will be allowed only three minutes.

Several board members said they think the hearing might be a waste of time. "Why should they accept our reasons for wanting to close the school this time any more than they did the last time," said Associate Superintendent Comer Griffin. Other board members agreed with Griffin, but board member Wayne Peel, a Farm Life resident, said the hearing is necessary.

"Several questions have come up within the community since the last hearing," Peel said, "and there's lot of misinformation being spread around because people don't have all the facts."

Peel said several issues should be addressed at the hearing, such as the fate of school personnel, what to do with the building, how student travel will be affected, and other issues.

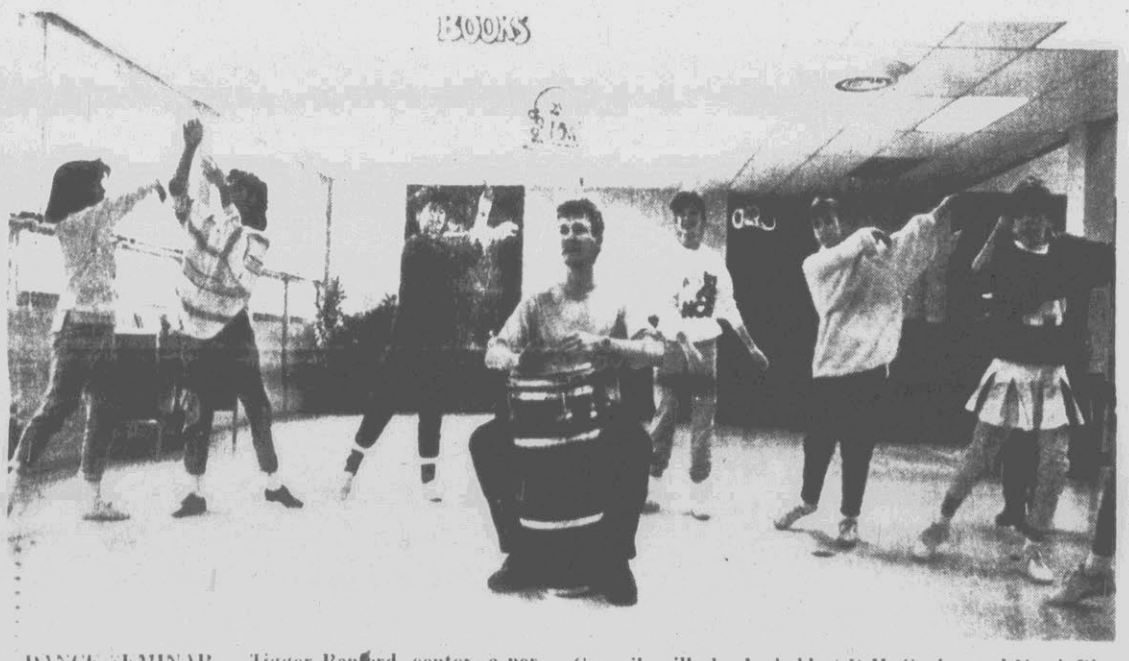

The initial decision two years ago to close the school was based on the fact that attendance at the country school has fallen to below 100 students. State officials have estimated that about $80,000 to $120,000 can be saved annually by the closure of the school and reassigning students to larger schools in the county.

Ruling

RALEIGH (AP) — Questions about a Davidson County man's participation in devil worship and his son's attempt to smuggle marijuana to him in jail should not have been allowed, but the mistakes were not serious enough to overturn his conviction for aiding a double murder, a state appeals court has ruled.

In a 2-1 decision, a panel of the North Carolina Court of Appeals ruled Tuesday that the improper questions were not decisive factors in Charles Ray Kimbrell's 1985 trial.

"We hold ... that there is no reasonable possibility that had these errors not been committed, a different result would have been reached at trial and that the error was harmless in the light of the other evidence properly admitted at the trial," Judge Hugh Wells wrote in the majority opinion.

DANCE SEMINAR — Tigger Benford, center, a percussionist composer, conducted a dance seminar Tuesday at E.B. Aycock Junior High School. The seminar, sponsored by East Carolina University and the Pitt County Community Schools through a grant from the N.C. Arts Council, will also be held at D.H. Conley and North Pitt high schools this week. Benford was assisted by dance choreographer Martha Partridge. (Photo By Barry Gaskins)

Two ECU Projects Funded

Two projects by East Carolina University educators to strengthen science and math teaching in the public schools have been funded by the University of North Carolina's Math and Science Education Network.

A $14,970 award was approved for Dr. Donald L. Spence, coordinator of middle grades education in the school of education, to carry out a project to strengthen teacher knowledge and proficiency in math and science in the Craven County middle schools.

The Craven middle school science math staff development project is designed to strengthen teachers' ability to manage instruction in science and math on multiple levels, including increased use of manipulative and experiential activities in the classroom. The project will also use instruction in math, science and instructional technology to strengthen teacher understanding of the middle school concept, Spence said.

Dr. Michael Lee Jones of the department of science education was awarded a $10,000 grant to expand a pilot program, called Foundational Approaches in Science Teaching (FAST), to additional middle grades in eastern North Carolina.

The FAST program was begun on a pilot basis in 1985 and 1986 by the Science Math Education Center at ECU in selected school districts. It is an interdisciplinary, environmental science program emphasizing foundational concepts and methods of the physical, biological earth sciences and relates them to practical issues of human uses of environments. Students are directly involved in typical processes of inquiry and research, Jones said.

In the FAST program, teachers are required to complete a 10-day training program to become certified FAST teachers. Follow-up sessions and on site visitations are part of the on going teacher training, he said.

Under the new award, a FAST 1 and FAST 2 teacher training workshop would be scheduled at ECU this summer. The project seeks to train additional middle grades teachers to implement the first phase of the program and to provide previously certified FAST teachers the necessary training to implement the second phase of the curriculum.

State Agency Lists 139 Potential Waste Sites

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — The North Carolina Hazardous Waste Treatment Commission today released a list of 139 potential sites — including one in Pitt County — for a state hazardous waste treatment facility.

The counties with the most sites are Mecklenburg and Rowan, with 13 each. Another 11 are located in Edgecombe County. Forty-one of the state's 100 counties have at least one site on the list.

Specific location of the sites was not available.

The sites meet only the most general guidelines for a hazardous waste incinerator, such as nearness to interstate highways, a minimum of 50 acres and being at least a mile from institutions such as schools or hospitals, according to commission Chairman Deborah Parker.

The commission is considering stricter criteria for paring the list to 10 to 15 sites when the panel meets Feb. 12.

The General Assembly has ordered the commission to select a site — or two in case the incinerator is separate from a treatment facility — by April 1. But Ms. Parker said the commission plans to seek an extension.

The list does not rank the 139 sites, said Dave Dunbar, branch manager for PEI Associates, a Cincinnati-based environmental consulting company that compiled the report.

The list consists of 131 industrial sites and eight owned by the state.

The facility, on which construction is expected to start in 1988, will consist of a rotary kiln incinerator, a distillation unit, and several batch chemical treatment units. It will not include a landfill.

Hazardous waste consists of spent chemicals and other toxics and does not include radioactive materials or polychlorinated biphenyls.

Ms. Parker said some counties have expressed interest in the facility because of the jobs it would create, although others are leary of such an operation.

Among the counties with more than one potential site are Johnston with seven; Scotland and Randolph with six; Forsyth, Nash and Wilson with five; and Chatham, Davidson, Guilford, Harnett, Iredell and Lincoln with four; Cabarrus, Northampton, Person, Robeson, Rutherford and Wake with three; and Burke, Catawba, Durham, Hoke and Polk with two.

Alamance, Bladen, Brunswick, Cumberland, Davie, Gaston, Halifax, Henderson, Orange, Pitt, Rockingham, Sampson, Stokes, Union and Wayne counties have one potential site each.

One additional site was offered by the owner of the property and its county was not disclosed.

Congress Moves Ahead On Road Bills

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House and Senate are moving ahead with multibillion-dollar highway bills amid warnings from the secretary of transportation that the measures had better conform with Reagan administration policy.

The Senate Environment and Public Works Committee began writing its version of a four-year, $54 billion highway bill today.

"Reauthorization of the federal-aid highway program is essential to everyone who depends on our highway system for business travel, personal travel and movement of goods," said Sen. Quentin Burdick, D-N.D., chairman of the committee. "Let us move quickly."

The full House also was set to debate and perhaps vote on a five-year, $91 billion highway and mass transit bill.

Construction industry and state officials have been calling for quick passage of transportation spending bills since Congress deadlocked on legislation last fall and provided no new money for the fiscal year that began Oct. 1.

There was support in both chambers for several controversial amendments, but it was unclear which of the measures would be introduced or approved.

In the Senate, an amendment was expected to be introduced during committee debate by Sens. Robert Stafford, R-Vt., and Daniel Moynihan, D-N.Y., that would allow states gradually to remove billboards near interstates and other federal roads and ban new signs.

The House was expected to permit no amendments to its bill, although there was a possibility that supporters of a measure to allow states to raise speed limits above the federally mandated 55 mph would try to force consideration of their measure.

Late Monday, Transportation Secretary Elizabeth Dole served notice on the legislators that their bills would receive administration support — if they reflected administration desires.

In a letter to Burdick, Mrs. Dole said she would urge President Reagan to sign the Senate bill "in its current form."

But she warned, "I urge you to oppose any amendments ... that further increase the authorization or obligation levels in the bill for highway programs or that will slow the reauthorization process down."

Gunmen Kill 12 South African Blacks

By JAMES F. SMITH
Associated Press Writer

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Attackers gunned down 12 blacks, seven of them children, in an assault early today on a home in a black township south of Durban, authorities said.

The assailants burst into the house of Willie Ntuli, 50, and opened fire on the occupants with AK-47 assault rifles at about 2 a.m., said Maj. Charl du Toit, the Durban police spokesman.

Ntuli and 11 others who were in the house were killed, including six children aged between 3 and 7 and another who was 17, du Toit said. Two other people were wounded.

Only one person escaped unhurt, a 10-year-old boy who evaded the attackers by hiding in a closet. Four of his brothers and sisters were killed.

Members of the United Democratic Front, the nation's largest legal anti-apartheid coalition, accused Inkatha, a political and tribal organization led by Zulu chief Mangosuthu Buthelezi, of staging the attack against the home of a UDF member. The groups differ over how to oppose apartheid.

The attack in Kwa-Makhuta township near Amanzimtoti, 15 miles south of Durban, was one of the worst reported incidents of violence in South Africa in months.

More than 2,200 people have been killed in political unrest since September 1984. Last June, the government declared a state of emergency and limited press reporting in many areas. The limits later were broadened to ban or restrict reporting about unrest, security force actions, treatment of detainees, most forms of peaceful protest and statements the government considers subversive.

Du Toit said officials initially reported incorrectly that the attackers firebombed Ntuli's house and then shot the victims as they fled.

Police with tracker dogs scoured the area around the house, which was sealed off and under guard, residents said.

The victims included two brothers, Mavoko Ntuzhini, 5, and Bashi Ntuzhini, 3, and their sisters, Savile Ntuzhini, 4, and Phumsele Ntuzhini, 7, according to a police statement, as well as two 50-year-old women, Mbusu Ndwalani and Isabel Khubeka. The others were Nunu Ntuli, 7, Jabu Ndlovu, 17, Phumale Ndlovu, 22, and two unidentified people.

A 10-year-old girl was wounded along with a Mrs. A. Khumalo, while another child from the Ntuzhini family, Ernest, 10, escaped unharmed.

Kwa-Makhuta and other townships in Natal province have been wracked by fighting between Inkatha the United Democratic Front.

Ntuli's son, Victor, is a leading member of a United Democratic Front affiliate, according to Joseph Gumbi, a coalition official in Durban. Victor Ntuli probably was the main target but he went into hiding last week and was not at home during the attack, Gumbi said.

"There is no doubt at all, from what we have gathered from people in that area" that the attack was launched by Inkatha, Gumbi said.

Buthelezi said in a statement that the killings were "probably a continuation of the internecine clashes" between rival black groups. He said he was "shocked by the dimensions which the violence ... is assuming."

The front and the African National Congress, an outlawed guerrilla group, criticize Buthelezi for his willingness to work within structures created by the South African government. Buthelezi is a critic of apartheid but differs with the two groups on how to oppose it.

Under apartheid, South Africa's system of forced racial segregation, the country's 24 million blacks are denied a voice in national affairs. The 5 million white control the government and economy and maintain separate residential districts, health facilities and schools.

Two members of Inkatha have been killed in Kwa-Makhuta in attacks since New Year's Eve, and a third badly wounded.

Court Clarifies Pregnancy Ruling

WASHINGTON (AP) — States are under no special legal obligation to pay unemployment benefits to women who lose their jobs after taking maternity leave, the Supreme Court ruled today.

The court said a federal law barring discrimination based on pregnancy in unemployment benefit payments bans states from singling out pregnancy for unfavorable treatment only. The law does not mandate preferential treatment for pregnant workers, the court said.

The 8-0 decision is a defeat for a woman refused unemployment benefits after being denied reinstatement as a Kansas City, Mo., department store cashier when she wanted to return from maternity leave.

Just last week the court, in interpreting a separate federal law, ruled that states may require employers to give pregnant workers job protections not available to other employees.

The justices in that decision upheld a California law requiring employers to grant unpaid leaves of absence and insure reinstatement for women whose pregnancies leave them unable to work — even if leaves are not granted for any other disability.

But today the court said no such special protection was intended by Congress when it passed the Federal Unemployment Tax Act of 1978.

Justice Sandra Day O'Connor, writing for the court, said, "Congress intended only to prohibit states from singling out pregnancy for unfavorable treatment ... If a state adopts a neutral rule that incidentally disqualifies pregnant or formerly pregnant claimants as part of a larger group, the neutral application of that rule" is legal.

Missouri law disqualifies anyone from collecting unemployment benefits for leaving work "voluntarily" for reasons not job-related.

According to court documents, similar policies are enforced in Minnesota, North Dakota, Vermont and the District of Columbia.

The practical impact of today's ruling likely will be limited because most states include leaves of absence taken because of pregnancy in those "good cause" leaves that do not disqualify a worker from collecting unemployment if later denied reinstatement.

When Linda Wimberly tried to collect unemployment benefits in 1983 she was turned down because of the Missouri law.

Mrs. Wimberly had been granted a maternity leave of absence from her job at J.C. Penney Co. in August 1980. Her child was born Nov. 5 of that year, and on Dec. 1 Mrs. Wimberly notified her employer that she was ready to return to work.

At the time, however, no cashier positions were available.

After unsuccessfully applying for unemployment compensation, Mrs. Wimberly sued. She won in two state courts but the Missouri Supreme Court ruled against her.

Today's decision upheld the state Supreme Court ruling.

In finding that the Missouri law does not conflict with the 1978 federal law, O'Connor noted that "all persons who leave work for reasons not causally connected to the work or the employer are disqualified from receiving benefits."

"To apply this law, it is not necessary to know (Mrs. Wimberly) left because of pregnancy; all that is relevant is that she stopped work for a reason bearing no causal connection to her work or her employer."

Justice Harry A. Blackmun did not participate in the case.

The case is Wimberly vs. Labor and Industrial Relations Commission, 85-129.

Drug Program

RALEIGH (AP) — Fifth- and sixth-graders will be taught how to resist peer pressure that leads to drug use under a program unveiled by state officials today.

State school Superintendent Craig Phillips said the new program will be called DARE, which stands for Drug Abuse Resistance Education. He said the semester-long program will be implemented this spring in at least one pilot site to be selected in each of the eight educational regions.

Phillips said the program, first used in Los Angeles in an effort to curb the supply of drugs by reducing demand, could be aided by nearly $2.8 million in federal funds through the Drug Free Schools and Community Act of 1986.

Shifting Resource

It is seldom that a state can watch a portion of one of its ports crumble into the sea.

That was what happened at the Morehead City State Port last weekend.

Granted it was the old Berth 1 and the North Carolina State Ports Authority had said it should spend $800,000 to rebuild the 350-foot berth, which the authority said was over 50 years old and structurally unsafe. Nevertheless its collapse, along with adjacent paving and structures made spectacular pictures. There was real danger as nearby oil tanks were threatened by crumbling ground. Over 130 truckloads of rock were hauled in to end the threat to the tanks.

Shoreline erosion is usually seen as a slow process. In this case, however, the visible deterioration occurred rapidly. Authorities said that the sea breached a protective bulkhead and the erosion had moved at the rate of 5 to 10 miles per hour toward the storage tanks. Much of the oil was pumped out of the tanks as a precautionary measure.

The problem did not affect the newer, adjoining berth and most of the Morehead City port was unaffected.

The problem does illlustrate again the unique conditions of North Carolina's coastal areas. Our coast is sand based and sand is subject to shift. There are methods to protect something so important to us as a state port but other areas can't be protected.

Some coastlines are rocky and they resist the ravages of the sea. North Carolina's coast is constantly moving. It is a great natural resource, but it resists man's construction efforts.

Time To Fill In The Price Tag

RALEIGH — For the past six months, the many different professional organizations which comprise the education lobby have waged an unusual peace with each other. They've cooperated to draft a salary schedule for certified educators upon which they can all agree.

But that peace may not last much longer. The time has come to fix a price tag to that salary schedule, and in a year of limited funds for new state spending, the various lobbies may try to implement the schedule in ways that best serve their self interests at budget time.

In 1986, the legislature told a study commission to draft a fair salary schedule for certified educators. The current schedule is wrought with inequities and inconsistencies.

The commission passed the job to the various professional educator groups, and they devised a wonderfully neat plan. Their schedule aligns every professional educator, from beginning teacher to superintendent of the biggest school system, in 17 different pay classifications with as many as 10 different steps in each classification.

While that job may have been hard enough, the fixing of actual salary levels to those various classifications poses an even bigger task. There are several different views of how that should be done, with each view favoring a different segment of the education world.

Gene Causby, executive director of the N.C. School Boards Association, has been the spokesman for the coalition of education groups. He told the legislative commission that by the end of January, or early February, he can have present an affordable plan for implementing the pay scale. He estimated a total cost of between $6 million and $10 million.

Rep. Billy Watkins, D-Granville, committee co-chairman, was doubtful. "They were talking about $6 million to $8 million and I knew they didn't know what they were talking about," Watkins said. He predicts a price tag more in the range of that foreseen by Patric Mullen, lobbyist for the N.C. Association of Educators: $200 million.

How could the two estimates be so far apart? It's a matter of vertical and horizontal lines.

Causby says the commission's job is to get the various education jobs in proper alignment with each other, For example, the commission should determine the proper relationship of teacher salaries to principal salaries. This is called the vertical schedule. Under this reasoning, the commission would create an algebraic formula that would set all salaries by using teacher salaries as a starting point. If teacher salaries aren't increased, then the amount of money involved remains relatively low because teachers are by far the largest group involved.

Sen. Marvin Warad, D-Forsyth, warned the educators that they should not recommend a pay scale which will prove overly expensive "because two or three years down the road we'll have to freeze things again because it costs too much." That's what got the state in its current mess, he said.

Bridging A Gap

Sooner or later the United States has to bridge the gap between it and Iran.

It is also certain the longer this country nourishes the anger stirred up by Khomeini's revolutionary fanatics of a few years ago, the more difficult it will be for an American government to bring about any kind of normalcy in relations with Iran.

Each additional month or year of prolonging the emotionally-charged adversarial role makes it more difficult to achieve any semblance of a dispassionate relationship.

Iran wants and needs return of the several hundreds of millions of dollars that are tied up by the U.S. for weaponry that was paid for (but not delivered) during the Shah of Iran's regime. The Ayatollah is said to recognize the need for some made-in-America economic, political and social incentives. That necessity could, in due course, produce compromises.

There is a major rebuilding job to be done inside Iran and U.S. talents could be a mighty inducement to reasonable relationships between the two countries. There are signs the Moslem revolution is settling down. If that is truly the case, our government should waste no time in seizing whatever opportunities there may be for coexistence.

There is just enough truth in the "fallback alibi" charted by the Reagan administration in its hostage ransom scheme to justify a major policy effort along those lines.

Public Forum

To the editor:

I am concerned that inequalities exist at Sadie Saulter and Third Street Schools that do not exist elsewhere in our "merged" school system. How can our school board and school system allow such inequality to continue?

Point No. 1. Racial Inbalance. Our son's classes at Sadie Saulter are now 75 percent black, 25 percent white. With the new school lines proposed, the ratio next year would be 67 percent black/ 33 percent white. (Likewise, Third Street School would be 73 percent black/ 27 percent white.)

This is a step in a balanced direction — a very small step, however. We can — and must — do better. The ratios proposed at the other schools are: Elmhurst 55 percent black/45 percent white; Eastern 44 percent black, 56 percent white; Robinson 28 percent black, 72 percent white; new school 26 percent black, 74 percent white.

Why are we treated so differently? Was not one of the primary goals of our school merger defined to be racial balance in all our schools?

Point No. 2 — Proposed renovations and appropriations. The "Facilities Survey Analyses of Recommendations" report stated that Sadie Saulter is and will be the most overcrowded elementary school over the next five years. They recommended four new classrooms for Sadie Saulter, six new classrooms at Third Street, six new at Eastern and four new at Elmhurst. They propose, however, that construction at Eastern and Elmhurst begin in this new year, while they do not recommend the construction at Sadie Saulter and Third Street until the following year. Why so? Presently, expansion has begun at Robinson and the new school is to open in the fall.

Again, why are we treated differently? If we are the most crowded, why are we not the first building priority? It is time to remedy these inequalities.

To the editor:

Your "Public Forum" recently included several letters addressing the Westhaven 3-7 position statement made at the school board hearing on school lines. These writers have misinterpreted our position. Our position statement reflects favorably on teachers and administration at Sadie Saulter: "We found that the faculty and staff of Sadie Saulter have been highly recommended."

The average test scores in reading and math of third graders at Robinson are approximately 1½ years higher than these averages at Sadie Saulter. This disparity is not a result of differences in staffing between the two schools. We feel it is fair to compare the averages of the total groups because a student's motivation to learn is influenced, not only by teachers, but also by peers. Our purpose in quoting these statistics was not to attack any group or school, but to emphasize the inequities of the current system and the staff's proposal, which does little to change it.

Our written statement emphasizes the need for racial balance in individual schools throughout the entire system. This point has been ignored in news accounts, editorials and public statements. The staff's proposal nurtures an "inner city" school system in Greenville. Sadie Saulter and Third Street are to remain about 70 percent black, while the new school and Robinson remain over 70 percent white. Over the next five years, Rose is projected to go from 51 percent white to 58 percent black. Conley is projected to go from 63 percent white to 73 percent white! We find these projections unacceptable and so should the entire county.

The major issue for everyone is one of "reasonable racial balance" within all schools. The school board must use its power to equalize the educational experiences of children throughout the county. This racial balance will lead to better educational opportunities for all children, both black and white.

In reference to the editorial, "Well Equipped."

You mention East Carolina University as an institution that can take its place among the outstanding of the nation and that ECU can be a catalyst for an improved way of life in the east, that it will be Dr. Eakin's challenge to do so. Why Pat Buchanan Won't Run

WASHINGTON — Patrick J. Buchanan, in five days of introspection, reversed two months of escalation toward a presidential candidacy and decided not to run — partly for personal reasons but mainly because of apprehension over damage to the conservative movement.

Just when conservatives were all but unanimous in guessing he would run, sober second thoughts intervened. Buchanan wondered whether he wanted to buy fishbowl scrutiny of him and his family. He also started thinking hard on the unliklihood of becoming the Republican nominee.

But the tipping factor was the argument by Rep. Jack Kemp's supporters. He did not want to go down in history as the wrecker of Kemp's chances who opened the way for a non-conservative presidential nominee. In effect, Buchanan at some time over last weekend made a decision enabling Kemp to mobilize the conservative movement if he can.

That was scarcely Buchanan's thinking on Wednesday evening, Jan. 14, when right-wingers gathered at his northern Virginia home to discuss his imminent run for president. They included his most ardent supporters: his sister, Angela (Bay) Jackson; Howard Phillips of the Conservative Caucus; Tom Ellis and Carter Wrenn of the Congressional Club of North Carolina; Wall Street fund-raiser Harlan Schlicher; Washington Times columnist John Lofton.

It was not a happy evening. Supporters ready to get the campaign rolling were disturbed by lack of organization and the presence of conservatives who preferred Kemp to Buchanan (notably Tom Winter and Allan Ryskind of Human Events). What bothered them most was their prospective champion's newly-appeared indecision.

That evening began Buchanan's serious second thoughts. He always had flinched from intense personal scrutiny, pondering the impact on his aged father of his campaign's treatment in his hometown newspaper, the Washington Post. What made it seem worthwhile was the impossible dream, his actual nomination.

But polls showing remarkable name recogniton (higher than Kemp's) also showed huge negative ratings. To lower them, Buchanan would have to appeal to centrist Republicans and independents. But how then could he continue to preach the East-West struggle, support for contras and traditional social values — messages that had generated a presidential groundswell?

Then there was the Kemp question. Kemp's deputy campaign manager, Jeff Bell, had predicted his old comrade on the Right would think long and hard before splitting the movement. Indeed, while Buchanan abjured criticism of Kemp, he began to accept Bell's prediction that his campaign naturally must turn against Kemp.

Buchanan's worst-case scenario had him blamed by the Right for crippling chances for Kemp and Pat Robertson, while George Bush or Robert J. Dole was nominated. His best case was not much better. Buchanan would become the Republican Gary Hart of 1988, going all the way to the convention but unable to win there. That would dictate a conservative selected as Bush's or Dole's vice president: anybody but Buchanan.

All this invited Buchanan to consider an alternative scenario. While foregoing a presidential run and playing the good solider, he could spread the conservative gospel just as well. If a conservative (probably Kemp) were nominated and elected, he would get credit. If not, then maybe the party would look more seriously at Buchanan in 1992.

On Thursday, the day after his meeting, Buchanan did not personally visit his old chief, Richard M. Nixon, as planned, but did talk to him on the telephone. Whether or not he said so, the former president does not think Buchanan should run. On Friday, Buchanan's growing doubts were deepened by a Human Events article. Disinterested friends committed to no presidential candidate urged him not to run. By Monday morning, he had decided.

Buchanan's days at the White House are at an end. He knows he cannot have flirted with scaling the mountaintop and then descend to his windowless White House communications director's office. He also is tired after two years of promoting the conserative cause and has no more zest to battle what he calls the "mice," chief of staff Donald T. Regan's subalterns. He will soon leave the president's staff, just as he would have had he decided to run.

What he does next is unknown. On Sunday night, he talked with Kemp and suggested they meet before he announced anything, but on reflection decided that might look like cutting a deal. Kemp is the only candidate Buchanan might endorse. Whether he does or not, he already has conveyed inestimable service to Kemp. Amid the Buchanan furor, Sen. Bill Armstrong of Colorado — long feared by Kemp forces — said he would not run. Right field is now Kemp's to roam alone, save for Robertson. This was not only the result but the intent of Buchanan's decision that so disappoints his followers.

Strength For Today

The Bible has a great deal to say about hypocrites and everything it says is loaded with condemnation. Many people today are so afraid of being called hypocrites that they actually practice a form of hypocrisy by refusing to acknowledge their religious beliefs.

Yet this reaction is at best overcompensation and at worst cowardice. The devout Christian, if he is entirely honest with himself and others, does not claim to be a Christian — he aims to be a Christian. He may believe everything a Christian is supposed to believe, but he realizes, with sorrow, that he is fallible and will not be able to achieve his highest religious ideals.

This is not an excuse by which we are to comfort ourselves in our failings. It is a realistic facing of the facts. God does not expect us to be perfect, but he expects us to aim for perfection.

TAKES POST — Sen. Jesse Helms of North Carolina meets reporters on Capitol Hill Tuesday after Senate Republicans named him to the top GOP post on the Foreign Relations Committee. Helms ousted Sen. Richard Lugar of Indiana, who had served as chairman while Republicans dominated the Senate. (AP Laserphoto)

Helms Grabs Top GOP Post On Foreign Relations Panel

By SARA FRITZ
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Maverick conservative Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., was chosen Tuesday as the ranking GOP member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee in a move that signaled a more combative approach by Senate Republicans to foreign policy matters.

By a secret vote of 24-17, the Senate Republican caucus voted to install Helms as the committee's ranking member over Sen. Richard G. Lugar of Indiana, who had earned a reputation as a compromiser while serving as chairman of the panel during the last two years.

The position gives greater influence over foreign policy to Helms, who in the past has used his position as a member of the committee to promote conservative ideology, frequently differing with policies of the Reagan administration.

For that reason, Helms said, State Department officials tried unsuccessfully to encourage Republicans to vote against him. Many State Department officials refused to comment publicly on that charge, but one acknowledged that they viewed Helms' ascension "with horror."

Although a few GOP liberals and moderates supported Helms on grounds that they were upholding the Senate's sacred seniority system, the vote was widely interpreted as a Republican rebuke of Lugar for his moderate approach as committee chairman — particularly his support for sanctions against South Africa and his efforts backing the ouster of Philippines President Ferdinand E. Marcos.

Unlike Lugar, Helms is expected to adopt a more confrontational style in dealing with the Senate's Democratic leadership. As a result of Helms' new position, Sen. Alan K. Simpson, R-Wyo., predicted, the debate over foreign policy "might be slightly more spirited on the floor than it would have been otherwise."

Conservatives viewed the choice of Helms and his fierce opposition to Democratic legislation as a boon for GOP fund raising for the election in 1988, when Republicans will be seeking to regain a majority in the Senate and retain control of the White House.

Yet supporters of the Reagan administration feared that Helms' combativeness would further complicate efforts to win needed Democratic support for continued U.S. funding of Nicaraguan rebels. In addition, he is expected to use his position to insist on changes in the administration's foreign aid budget and, as he has done in the past, block any ambassadorial nominess that he views as not sufficiently conservative.

Emerging from the closed meeting in which he was chosen, Helms, 65, immediately provided a demonstration of the feisty style for which he has become famous by telling representatives of the news media: "I'm sorry to disappoint you folks, but you lost." It was an apparent reference to a New York Times editorial endorsing Lugar.

Lugar, 54, was clearly stunned and shaken by the defeat. "I am disappointed that I lost," he said, adding: "It was a responsibility that I had hoped to attain." By default, Lugar will inherit the position of ranking Republican on the Agriculture Committee that Helms is relinquishing.

Although Lugar during his two years as chairman had forced the administration to accept a number of compromises that Reagan opposed — such as his South African sanctions legislation approved over a presidential veto — he generally has been a Reagan loyalist and a close ally of Secretary of State George P. Shultz.

Lugar, saying the he feared that Helms' style would hurt the Republicans, maintained that his approach to foreign policy would be better for the party.

First elected to the Senate in 1972, Helms, 65, has a reputation for using his position as senator to dabble in U.S. foreign relations, always intervening in support of staunch anti-communists, such Roberto D'Aubuisson in El Salvador. The Department of Justice is known to be investigating the alleged role that Helms played in tipping off President Augusto Pinochet of Chile to a U.S. intelligence-gathering operation in that country.

By seniority rights, Helms would have become chairmain of the Foreign Relations Committee two years ago after the defeat of the former chairman, Charles Percy. But Helms gave up the position two years ago to fulfill a promise that he had made to his constituients during a hard-fought re-election campaign to protect North Carolina tobacco interests by accepting the chairmanship of the Agriculture Committee instead.

But, clearly, Helms never lost his interest in foreign policy. As chairman of the Agriculture Committee, he sought unsuccessfully to subpoena a Soviet sailor who jumped ship in New Orleans in 1985 and was returned to his ship by U.S. officials. During Senate consideration of the South African sanctions, which he opposed, Helms arranged for two senators to be lobbied by telephone in the Senate cloakroom by Pretoria's foreign minister.

After the Republicans lost control of the Senate in last November's election, Helms announced that he had decided to reclaim his ranking position on the Foreign Relations Committee. But Lugar refused to give it up voluntarily, forcing a showdown vote.

Helms' bid to regain his Foreign Relations position received support from many of his ideological opponents, like liberal Republican Sen. Lowell P. Weicker of Conneticut, who viewed the Lugar challenge as a precedent-setting attack on the seniority system. Weicker and others reasoned that the seniority system protects all ideologies equally.

By voting for Helms, the Republican caucus overturned a 7-0 vote of the Republican members of the Foreign Relations Committee in favor of Lugar.

The influence of Helms, as ranking minority member of the committee, is expected to be enhanced because Chairman Claiborne Pell, D-R.I., is viewed as a much weaker personality than Lugar.

Company Donates Seed To Farmers

FAYETTEVILLE (AP) — Drought-stricken farmers in four Southeastern states will be getting about $5 million worth of donated corn seed next month, officials of the Church World Services Organization say.

About 100,000 50-pound bags of seed will be distributed in North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia and Alabama, according to Tom Trantham, regional field coordinator for the program in the Carolinas.

Trantham and Church World Services officials in New York said the company donating the seed had asked to remain anonymous.

Each state will receive about 25,000 bags of corn seed, Trantham said.

"People will say, big deal ... 'I may only get one bag of seed.' But we hope to be able to supply a large number of farmers with all the seed they'll need," Trantham said.

"That is not a lot statewide, but it is enough to have an impact on the corn market in the region," said John Anderson of the N.C. Agricultural Extension Service. He said the 25,000 bags represent about 7 percent to 8 percent of the state's corn crop.

North Carolina farmers plant about 1.8 million acres of corn per year, Anderson said. About 54,000 of the state's 73,000 farms grow some corn, he said.

Trantham said more than 600 North Carolina farmers and 200 farmers in South Carolina already have submitted requests for a share of the seed. He said he expects to have requests from about 1,400 farmers from both states by Friday, the deadline for applications.

In early December, the seed company contacted Church World Services after learning of the plight of southern farmers at a Thanksgiving dinner held at Trantham's farm in Pelzer, S.C.

Church World Services is a division of the National Council of Churches and handles relief work, developement and refugee assistance for the parent organization.

Since mid-August, Church World Services has maintained distribution centers throughout the Southeast to distribute hay and feed grain. There are four centers in North Carolina at Harmony, Siler City, Oak Ridge and Cedar Grove; two in South Carolina at Pelzer and Manning, one in Atlanta and one in Epes, Ala.

Martin Endorses Jack Hawke For GOP State Chairmanship

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — R. Jack Hawke, Gov. Jim Martin's choice as interim chairman of the state Republican Party, says he will work for party unity, but the GOP conservative wing says it will field its own candidate against him.

Hawke, 45, managed Martin's 1984 campaign and is director of policy and planning in the state Department of Administration. He vowed Tuesday to build the GOP's grassroots organization and said he would extend to the party's New Right wing "an open hand to join with me ... to bring about victory in North Carolina."

But Carter Wrenn, executive director of the National Congressional Club, called Hawke "a Martin partisan who's been closely associated with the country-club wing of the Republican Party. I think you can see why he wouldn't be viewed by conservatives as a compromise candidate."

Wrenn called Hawke "a nice guy" and said a battle over the chairmanship would not hurt the party.

"I don't think there's going to be a bloodletting," Wrenn said. "I do think there are real differences between the conservative wing of the Republican Party and the country-club wing ... that need to be debated."

However, tension between the two sides was evident. Hawke said he earned his conservative credentials as an aide to former GOP Chairman Jim Gardner in the late 1960s "when there was no such thing as a Congressional Club, and the leaders of the Congressional Club were still registered Democrats, I believe."

Wrenn called the remark "unfortunate."

"That sort of denigrates people who've switched over to the Republican Party," Wrenn said. "If it hadn't been for those people, you wouldn't have had a Ronald Reagan or a Jesse Helms."

Martin had negotiated with Helms and Wrenn in an attempt to find a compromise chairman, but said Tuesday in announcing his endorsement of Hawke that the negotiations had failed.

"I of course am disappointed that we were not able to reach an agreement so that we would be able to have a combined endorsement," Martin said in a crowded news conference at state GOP headquarters.

Martin said he would recommend that the state Republican Executive Committee elect Hawke interim chairman at its Jan. 31 meeting in Winston-Salem.

The new chairman will complete the unexpired term of Bob Bradshaw, who is stepping down to return to his Charlotte law practice. Hawke said he also intended to seek a full two-year term at the GOP state convention in May.

Both sides said they did not expect the squabble to plunge the state GOP into a repeat of its mid-1970s civil war, when allies of Helms and former Gov. Jim Holshouser battled for supremacy in the party.

"I don't think there's any rancor that would lead to any rupture or rift in the party," Martin said. He acknowledged there were differences, but described them as normal in a growing organization and said his talks with Helms and Club leaders had been cordial.

The conversion of many conservative Democrats to the GOP in the 1960s and 1970s led to conflict between the newcomers and traditional Republicans, who generally are less dogmatic than Helms and his allies.

The two sides reached an uneasy truce after the mid-70s, but the feud was rekindled last year in the U.S. Senate primary race between former Sen. Jim Broyhill, a leader of the party's traditional wing, and David Funderburk, former U.S. ambassador to Romania and the Congressional Club's handpicked candidate to succeed the late Sen. John East.

Wrenn said the Broyhill wing of the party bases its appeal on "mush-ball politics" and pragmatism, downplaying ideology. The Helms wing emphasizes staunch conservatism popular with right-wing Democrats from eastern North Carolina whose support Republicans must have to win, Wrenn said.

Spangler Proposes Special Plan To Boost Elizabeth City State

ELIZABETH CITY, N.C. (AP) — University of North Carolina President C.D. Spangler Jr. says he hopes to persuade the General Assembly to finance a new scholarship program for Elizabeth City State University that would help the school attract top-quality students.

Spangler announced a $1 million plan to upgrade the school Tuesday during a special meeting of the ECSU trustees.

University officials have agreed, Spangler told The Virginian-Pilot and The Ledger-Star of Norfolk, Va., that "a new course of action is necessary" for ECSU, which has struggled to attract quality students in recent years.

If the legislature agrees to provide $225,000 in initial funding, ECSU will award as many as 250 full scholarships this fall to high school or community college graduates from 16 northeastern counties, Spangler said.

The scholarship program — for freshmen and transfer students — would provide $3,000 a year, enough to cover the $834 annual tuition and fees to help defray costs of housing, food and books.

To qualify, students must rank in the top half of their high school graduating class and earn a B average in college by their junior year. The same number of scholarship recipients will be sought the following year.

To be eligible for the scholarship program, freshmen must be graduates of high schools in one of the following counties: Beaufort, Bertie, Camden, Chowan, Currituck, Dare, Gates, Halifax, Hertford, Hyde, Martin, Northampton, Pasquotank, Perquimans, Tyrrell and Washington.

In addition, they must agree to carry 15 semester hours each semester, to give eight hours to public service activities and to undergo standardized assessments periodically to assist in evaluating how well they are being educated.

Transfer students must have completed one or two years of study at one of the following institutions: the College of Albemarle, Halifax Community College, Martin Community College and Roanoke-Chowan Technical College. Transfer students must also meet requirements regarding coursework and grade-point averages prior to admittance. Other eligibility requirements are similar to those for freshmen scholarship students.

University officials devised the plan during a marathon two-day session in September, said Lloyd V. Hackley, the system's vice president for student services. No similar plans are being made for the system's four other predominantly black universities, he said.

The officials focused on ECSU for a variety of reasons, he said. Since the university, with about 1,600 students, is the smallest university in the system, "we felt we could get the best benefit from the smallest amount of money," he said.

IN THE STATE

Insurance

RALEIGH (AP) — Nearly a half-million of the state's working poor — from shop clerks to gas station attendants — have no health insurance coverage, a legislative panel has been told.

A Duke University study shows many of them do not make enough money to pay all their medical bills. The working poor, along with the unemployed poor, left North Carolina hospitals with an unpaid medical bill of $242 million last year.

Duke researcher C. Johnston Conover told a subcommmittee of the Indigent Care Study Commission Tuesday that 55.6 percent of the 872,000 state residents with no health insurance had full-time jobs.

The same group, he said, also tends to have more need for medical care than people with health insurance.

Charged

FORT BRAGG, N.C. (AP) — Three Fort Bragg soldiers have been charged in connection with a theft of two submachine guns that led authorities to confine 590 soldiers to the base, officials said Tuesday.

Army specialist Michael R. Hofbauer of the 18th Airborne Corps public affairs office said Pfc. Adam L. Berman, 19, was charged with conspiracy to commit larceny, two counts of larceny and one count of possession of an unregistered machine gun.

Pfc. David K. Wimbish, 21, was charged with one count of conspiracy to commit larceny, one count of larceny, one count of wrongfully receiving stolen property and one count of possessing an unregistered machine gun, Hofbauer said.

Pfc. Larry McKenzie, 19, was charged with one count of accessory after the fact of larceny, one count of receiving stolen property and one count of possessing an unregistered machine gun.

All three were assigned to Company E, 407th Supply and Service Batallion of the 82nd Airborne Division, Hofbauer said.

Twice Burned

MOUNTAIN PARK, N.C. (AP) — Frankie S. Jenkins had been released from the burn center at Baptist Hospital for only a few hours when she was a victim of a second fire early Tuesday morning.

Mrs. Jenkins' trailer was destroyed by fire on Dec. 31, and she suffered smoke inhalation and second-degree burns over 20 percent of her body. She was in critical condition for several days at the burn center.

Mrs. Jenkins wasn't burned in the fire Tuesday, but she got so upset that she hyperventilated. The fire did about $23,000 damage to the home of Mrs. Jenkins' grandmother.

Murder Plea

ELIZABETH CITY, N.C. (AP) — A former Fort Bragg soldier charged with hiring another man to kill a woman who spurned him pleaded guilty Tuesday to first-degree murder in the case, officials said.

Latchmie Toolasprashad, 23, faces a mandatory sentence of life imprisonment, but had several related federal firearms charges dismissed in exchange for his plea. No sentencing date was scheduled.

Judge Terrence Boyle in U.S. District Court ordered Toolasprashad held at the Federal Correctional Center in Butner pending completion of a pre-sentencing report.

The defendant was charged in the December 1985 shotgun slaying of Spec. 4 Beverly Ann Dozler. In a recent hearing, Toolasprashad had pleaded not guilty by reason of insanity.

Dormitory

RALEIGH (AP) — A Tennessee company wants to build a 14-story privately owned dormitory near N.C. State University that would house 949 students.

Allen & O'Hara Inc. of Memphis has filed plans to build the $15 million dormitory on 1.61 acres owned by Raleigh developer and real estate broke M.E. Valentine.

The site also is where N.C. State University officials announced earlier this month they want to build a $7 million, 1,200-space parking deck with three or four stories.

Agency Awarded

RALEIGH (AP) — The administration of Republican Gov. Jim Martin, which recently canceled the contract of a Democratic businessman to run a license plate office in Cary, has awarded the job to a Republican with party ties.

The Division of Motor Vehicles gave the new contract to Marla Ann Pearson, a Raleigh loan processor and wife of Ernest C. Pearson, who is chairman of the 4th Congressional District Republican Party and a former chairman of the Wake GOP.

"As far as politics being involved ... the division acknowledges that political connections exist with this selection," James E. Rhodes, director of vehicle registration for the state, said Monday. "But politics was not the determining factor in the selection of Mrs. Pearce for this position, though it certainly did not hurt."

Hotline

GREENSBORO (AP) — Telephone hotlines in North Carolina and Ohio have been launched to help older people confused by changes in Medicare payment.

The hotlines have been started by the American Association of Retired Persons, a nonprofit, nonpartisan group with some 24.5 million members.

John Denning of Clinton, president of the association, toured the Triad Monday to promote the new hotline, whose toll-free number is 1-800-527-5226.

Denning, 75, the former superintendent of the Sampson County Schools, said trained operators are on hand from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. to answer questions about Medicare's payment schedules by "diagnosis-related groups."

Conference

DURHAM (AP) — To help doctors and family care-givers identify and cope with Alzheimer's Disease, the Joseph and Kathleen Bryant Alzheimer's Disease Research Center at Duke University Medical Center is sponsoring the first of what will be a series of annual conferences on the disease.

The conference will be held Feb. 10 and 11. On the first day, neuroscientists from across the country will report on work in progress. On the second day, a talk titled "Bridging Research and Practice" will introduce a series of presentations on new diagnostic, treatment and coping strategies for Alzheimer's patients and their families.

Parents Upset Over Proposals To Consolidate Schools For Deaf

By The Associated Press

Parents of children at schools for the deaf in Wilson and Morganton say they may be forced to enroll their children in public schools if a state task force recommendation to consolidate high school programs in Greensboro is approved.

Wanda Griffin, who drives her son from North Wilkesboro to Morganton each day for a preschool program, says she eventually will have to enroll him in public school if the high school program leaves Morganton.

"We cannot uproot and move to Greensboro," she said. "A lot of these parents are not going to uproot their families."

Mainstreaming is difficult for any deaf child, Mrs. Griffin said.

"Cause up there (at the school for the deaf) they are all alike," she said. "They've got their friends. They can talk to each other. You throw them in public school, no one can talk to them. They're going to feel like outsiders."

A 23-member task force set up to study what could be done to improve the state's schools for the deaf and make them more cost-efficient announced Monday that it would recommend that the two high schools be consolidated by the fall of 1991. The task force also recommended studying a consolidation of all residential education programs at one school by 2000.

Officials from the state Division of Human Resources have estimated the cost of establishing a new high school in Greensboro at around $7.3 million but say it would save about $600,000 in annual operating costs.

Brenda Patton, a member of the task force and the mother of a student at the Morganton school, said her family moved to Morganton five years ago because they like the school and the community. She said many other parents of deaf children have relocated for the same reason.

"Where do you draw the line on education and family life?" she said. "Most of these parents are very concerned about their children and are very involved in their education. They're not willing to bus their children to Greensboro or anywhere else for that matter."

Mrs. Patton said she thinks that parents of children at the schools in Morganton and Wilson will join efforts to maintain the high school programs at both schools.

"East and west historically have fought over high school programming, but now the lines of communication are wide open to maintain their high school programs," she said.

"I agree something needs to be done, but I don't agree that consolidating and building a new $7 million school is the answer," said Natalie W. McKeel, whose 9-year-old son attends the school in Wilson. "We moved here a year ago to be closer to the school, and now they're talking about closing it.

"We have given up so much, it seems, and we're continuing asked to give up more," Mrs. McKeel said. "it's like we asked to have handicapped children. We didn't. We're just trying to do the best we can for them."

Human Resources Secretary Phil Kirk said Tuesday he understands parents' concerns and said he is not ready to endorse the recommendation or dismiss t without further study.

"These are monumental decisions," Kirk said. "I feel as strongly as anyone that families should not be disrupted any more than absolutely necessary."

Reagan Offers To Appear Before Iran-Contra Panel

By W. DALE NELSON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan has a date to be interviewed by the panel he named to review operations of the National Security Council, a spokesman for the panel says.

Spokesman Herbert E. Hetu said the White House proposed a date for such a meeting on Tuesday and the three-member panel accepted. Neither Hetu nor White House spokesman Albert R. Brashear would disclose the date.

The White House counsellor on the Iran-Contra issue, David Abshire, said the interview with Reagan would be "in the very near future" but not until after the president's State of the Union message to Congress on Jan. 27.

Abshire, speaking to reporters as he emerged from a Senate hearing on the affairs of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, where he is winding up his service as ambassador, said "there is absolutely no stonewalling" by the White House on the Iran-Contra issue.

Three hearings on the Iran controversy were scheduled in Congress today.

Secretary of State George P. Shultz was to appear before the House Foreign Affairs Committee to testify about the administration's Iran policy. The Senate Foreign Relations Committee was meeting across Capitol Hill at the same time and on the same subject. And later in the day, the House Select Committee on Iran was holding a closed-door organizational meeting.

Meanwhile, former National Security Adviser Robert McFarlane said he was told by the White House last May that a deal had been worked out, with Reagan's approval, to release all four U.S. hostages in Lebanon before McFarlane made his May 1986 trip to Iran with a planeload of weapons for the Iranians. He said the White House had instructed him not to negotiate while in Iran.

McFarlane, in an interview that lasted into the early morning on ABC's "Nightline," said if any laws were broken in the affair, the president "certainly didn't do it and didn't authorize anyone else to."

A White House official, who declined to be identified, confirmed Tuesday that Reagan was briefed in the Oval Office on Dec. 19 by Sen. David Durenberger, R-Minn., then chairman of the Senate Intelligence Committee which had been investigating the Iran affair, including the alleged diversion of profits to Nicaragua's Contra rebels.

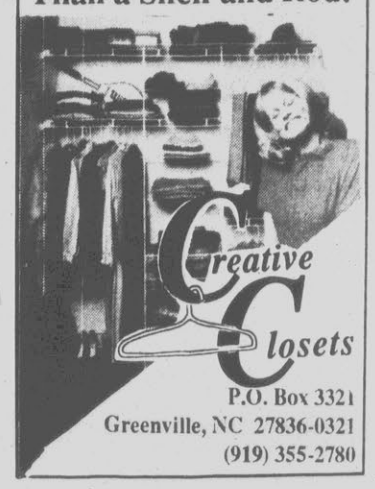

The official called the meeting "a very brief update on what happened, a discussion of (the fact that) we wanted to get the story out but that there were problems" due to the refusal of fired National Security Adviser Adviser Vice Adm. John Poindexter and staff member Lt. Col. Oliver North to testify.

"In our minds, it was not highly irregular," said the official, adding that Durenberger also briefed Vice President George Bush the next day.

Brashear said that Reagan has met twice with Chief of Staff Donald T. Regan for lengthy discussions touching on the president's recollection of events chronicling the clandestine sales of U.S. arms to Iran.

Brashear told reporters in the White House briefing room that the president's orders from his doctors to take it easy for awhile impeded his ability "to come down here, or in any other forum, and take individual questions" on the issue.

The president has been spending part of each day in the Oval Office, and Brashear said his work time in the office will be gradually increased this week. No public appearances have been scheduled, however.

Bush Confirms That Captors Tortured, Then Killed CIA's Chief In Lebanon

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. officials believe hostage William Buckley was tortured and then killed in 1985 by his captors in Lebanon, according to Vice President George Bush.

Buckley, identified in published reports as CIA station chief in Beirut when he was kidnapped on March 16, 1984, has been believed dead since the Islamic Jihad terrorist organization announced in October 1985 that it had executed him.

But U.S. officials had not confirmed it untl Bush's statement Tuesday. Former National Security Adviser Robert McFarlane said in an interview on ABC's "Nightline" that he was told of a deal whereby Buckley's body would be returned in Lebanon just after four living U.S. hostages were to be released. Only one hostage, David Jacobsen, was freed, however.

Bush said the administration "will explore every channel, run down every lead. We will go the extra mile to free those hostages."

Bush, who is a former CIA director, did not specify which government agency Buckley worked for and did not say how he was sure that Buckley was dead.

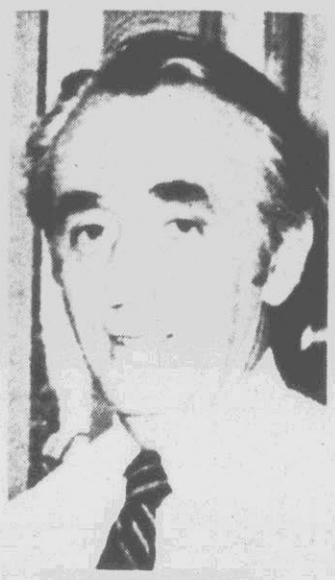

Saying that Reagan did not try to trade arms for hostages, Bush added, "At the same time, you should know the concern that the president feels when an American in terrorist hands is tortured, and in the case of William Buckley, killed."

The vice president's press secretary, Marlin Fitzwater, said the statement on Buckley's death "reflects an acceptance of the situation as we know it. The problem is Mr. Buckley's body has not been recovered. It has been difficult to acknowledge his death in the past," he added.

Bush, who headed a presidential task force on terrorism in 1985-86, drew the distinction between contacting terrorists and bargaining with them, a point that has been made by other administration officials.

"I believe we must reaffirm our policy with a better understanding that there is a very thin and delicate line between talking with terrorists and negotiating with terrorists," Bush said.

"We do not make concessions to terrorists," Bush said. "We do not pay ransoms. We do not release prisoners. We do not encourage other countries to give in to terrorists. And we do not agree to other acts that might encourage future terrorism."

Iraq Claims Bomb Attacks On Four Cities, Says Ground Assault Halted

By ED BLANCHE
Associated Press Writer

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Iraq said today its jet fighters bombed four Iranian cities, including the holy city of Qom, after its ground forces halted an Iranian advance on the southern Iraqi provincial capital of Basra.

Iran meanwhile said overnight fighting east of Basra left 1,500 more Iraqi troops killed or injured, bringing to 33,000 the number of Iraqi casualties Iran has claimed since beginning its push toward Basra on Jan. 9.

Iran's official Islamic Republic News Agency, monitored in Nicosia, did not report major new advances toward the city overnight.

Iran had claimed Tuesday to have ambushed Iraqi troops less than 6 miles east of Basra, also killing or wounding 1,500 enemy soldiers. Iraq denied the claim and said the city, its second largest, was in no danger of falling into enemy hands.

An Iraqi military spokesman told state-run Baghdad Radio that fighter-jets launched a "devastating raid" at 4:45 a.m. on Qom, about 60 miles south of the Iranian capital of Tehran.

He said other jets simultaneously bombed Hamadan and Dezful in western Iran and Isfahan in the south, reducing their targets to rubble.

Qom and Hamadan were among five Iranian cities bombed by Iraqi planes on Tuesday, and Iran said 157 civilians were killed in those raids. Iran did not immediately respond to the latest Iraqi claim.

The Iraqi military spokesman, who was not identified by the broadcast monitored in Nicosia, said the air strikes were designed "to punish the criminal enemy for its recent ugly crimes."

His remark apparently was a reference to Iran's firing of a surface-to-surface missile at Baghdad on Monday. Iran said the target was the headquarters of Iraq's ruling Ba'ath Party, but Iraq said it crashed in a residential neighborhood and killed an unspecified number of civilians.

The Iraqi air force has maintained air supremacy since the two countries began fighting in September 1980. The military spokesman said today's raids "should have taught the charlatans in Qom a real lesson."

Most of Iran's ruling clergymen have homes in Qom. But revolutionary patriarch Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, according to Tehran sources, has been spending most of his time at his residence in Jamaran, north of the capital.

Iran has claimed its forces broke through Iraqi defenses and are inching toward Basra. IRNA said Tuesday that Iranian forces ambushed Iraqi troops west of the Jasim River, less than 6 miles east of Basra.

Iranian warplanes bombed Iraqi positions and troop concentrations in the region five times Tuesday, inflicting substantial casualties and losses, IRNA claimed.

But an Iraqi military communique said Iraqi troops fought off three Iranian ground attacks in the area Tuesday night and the corpses of Iranian fighters were "littering the battlefield."

The fall of Basra, a city of 1 million people, would be a major blow to the government of Iraqi President Saddam Hussein.

In Washington, Pentagon spokesman Robert Sims said Tuesday that talk of the city's fall was premature.

"Contrary to some reports and some claims, I have nothing to indicate that Basra is in imminent danger of falling, although their (Iranian) shelling there has been intense at times in the past few weeks," he said.

A foreign military analyst in Iraq' capital of Baghdad, speaking on condition of anonymity, said he was reasonably confident the main Iraqi defense line east of Basra could stop an Iranian assault.

Dry terrain replaces the border marshes on the approaches to Basra, giving Iraq's highly mechanized army an advantage over the "human wave" infantry assaults favored by Iran.

Court To Rule On Freedoms For High School Papers

By DAVID G. SAVAGE
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court agreed Tuesday to decide whether the Constitution's guarantee of freedom of the press extends to a high school newspaper.

The case poses the right of students to report on subjects of interest to their readers — in this instance, on teen-age pregnancies and divorce by their parents — against the responsibility of school officials to control the curriculum.

In July, an appeals court ruled that the First Amendment covered high school newspapers and declared that students could publish what they wished, as long as the stories would not "materially disrupt" the school atmosphere or lead to a lawsuit against school officials.

But, in appealing to the Supreme Court, officials argued that the school — not the students — publishes the paper and that the principal has the final authority over what is printed.

In a 1969 case involving students wearing black armbands to protest the Vietnam War, the Supreme Court said young people "do not shed their constitutional rights to freedom of speech or expression at the schoolhouse door."

Recently, however, the justices have appeared to be backing away from that broad declaration.

Two years ago, for example, in a case involving a New Jersey school girl with drugs in her purse, the Supreme Court said students do not have the same rights as adults to be free from "unreasonable searches and seizures" without search warrants. Instead, it ruled, school officials need only a reasonable suspicion of wrongdoing to search students.

And last July, the justices ruled that a high school student has no right to make a "lewd and offensive" speech in a school assembly.

Despite a host of lower court rulings on school newspapers, the Supreme Ccourt has not ruled on the subject.

"We're not too confident they (the justices) appreciate the right to student free speech," said Mark Goodman, director of the Student Press Law Center in Washington. "These were well-written newspaper stories about topics that are of vital interest to high school students," he said.

On the other side, Gwendolyn Gregory, counsel for the National School Boards Association, said it "trivializes the First Amendment" to suggest that student reporters have the full right to freedom of the press. "This was not a state censoring a privately owned newspaper. This was a part of the school curriculum," said Gregory, who had urged the court to hear this case.

The case arose in 1983 when the principal of the Hazelwood East High School, near St. Louis, deleted two pages of the student newspaper that contained "personal accounts" of students who had become pregnant or whose parents had been divorced.

Three reporters, include Cathy Kuhlmeier, filed suit, alleging that their First Amendment rights had been violated. A District Court dismissed the suit, concluding that the principal had acted correctly to protect the privacy of students and parents named in the stories. The U.S. 8th Circuit Court of Appeals reversed that ruling on a 2-1 vote and said the lower court should consider awarding damages to the students.

The justices will hear arguments in the case of Hazelwood School District vs. Kuhlmeier, 86-836, in the fall.

Five Killed As Aircraft Hit, Crash

INDEPENDENCE, Mo. (AP) — A private plane and military aircraft collided over one of the Army's largest munitions plant, killing a brigadier general and the four other people on the planes, authorities said.

Debris from the U-21 twin-engine turbo-prop military plane burst into flames Tuesday as it fell near buildings at the 3,900-acre Lake City Army Ammunition Plant 20 miles east of Kansas City. There was no danger of explosions.

"The worst case would have been a small fire," said safety specialist Ken Roggenkamp.

Bill Melton, the Army's chief engineer at the plant, said the buildings were reinforced and materials such as gunpowder and propellants were stored separately. He said the only damage was a brief power failure.

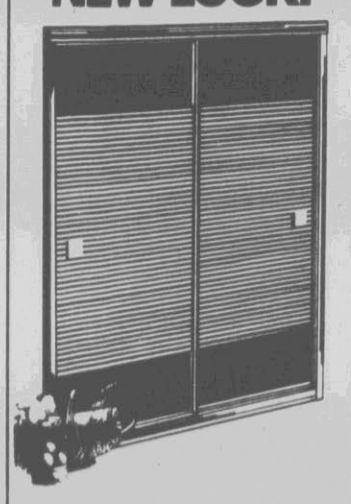

Lt. Col. John Garlinger, public affairs officer at Fort Leavenworth, Kan., said the military plane and twin-engine Piper Navajo collided at 7,000 feet, killing all aboard both aircraft.

Brig. Gen. David H. Stem, commandant of the military police school and deputy commandant general at Fort McClellan, Ala., was presumed dead pending positive identification of the remains, the Army said in statement from Washington.

Army spokesman Maj. Bill Auer identified the dead pilot of the U-21 as Maj. Michael G. Johnston of Alexandria, Ala.

The identities of the civilian copilot of the military plane and the two people aboard the private aircraft were withheld pending positive identification.

DEBRIS STORED — Workmen at Cape Canaveral Air Force Station continue the process of storing debris recovered from the space shuttle Challenger accident. Next Shuttle May Have Escape Hatch But Still No Way To Ferry Astronauts

By HARRY F. ROSENTHAL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — When the space shuttle Discovery lifts off on the first post-Challenger mission next year, it may have an emergency escape hatch but not a rocket system to blast astronauts away from the ship if they need to leave in a hurry.

"We do not feel comfortable at this time in committing to that part of the system because we do not think studies of all the pros and cons and the balance between risk and gain have been completed," Richard Truly, the head of the shuttle program, said Tuesday in a year-after-Challenger review.

He said, however, the agency will design and install explosives in the hatch doors of the three ships in the fleet and in the replacement for the Challenger, which was destroyed on liftoff a year ago.

Modification work on Discovery will have to start before mid-April if it is to be completed in time for the scheduled Feb. 18, 1988, liftoff, but the shuttle will fly even if the work is not done, Truly said.

The modifications will cost $45 million.

Such an escape system would not have saved the seven astronauts who died in the Challenger explosion on Jan. 28 last year. It would be useful only when a shuttle is in level, gliding flight below 20,000 feet — such as an emergency ditching at sea. Individual parachutes and survival equipment will also be put on the shuttles.

"After a long study, it's clear this hatch-jettison modification to the orbiter will be a true enhancement to safety not only with the very far-out potential of providing a bail-out capability from stable flight, but also will have advantages in incidents that might occur on the runway," Truly said.

A crew member bailing out of the shuttle could smash against the craft's wing or tail unless pulled clear by rockets, according to a study at the Johnson Space Center in Houston.

"We just do not understand the risk versus gains," Truly said. "We intend to do some wind tunnel experiments."

At least 200 changes are being made on the shuttles. Twenty are on the shuttle engines, and 13 to 15 modifications are involved in the booster rocket joints and seals, said Arnold Aldrich, who was appointed director of the space transportation system in a space agency management shakeup.

In the investigation that followed the Jan. 28 explosion, it was learned that waivers had been issued on the last six flights of the reusable space plane — including Challenger's — to ignore problems with the solid rocket boosters that otherwise would have grounded the ships.

All such waivers have been canceled, Aldrich said, and none will be issued in the future unless the decision is made at headquarters. There is also a complete revamping of how launch commitments are made and for flight procedures.

Cropland Bonus Is Available

WASHINGTON (AP) — Farmers will have a fourth — and sweeter — opportunity to deposit highly erodible cropland in the Conservation Reserve Program during a Feb. 9-27 signup period, Agriculture Secretary Richard E. Lyng says.

The sweetener is a one-time, one-year bonus that will be available to get vulnerable corn land out of production, he said. The bonuses will be paid in the form of generic certificates redeemable in surplus government-owned commodities at the rate of $2 for each bushel of normal yield on land put into the program, referred to as the CRP.

"Since a paid land diversion is in effect under the 1987 feed grain program to restrain further buildup of corn stocks, this rental payment is being offered to encourage highly erodible, excess corn acreage into long-term conservation use," Lyng said.

The bonus offer is limited to new CRP contracts beginning with the 1987 crop year, he said. It is not retroactive for corn base acreage under CRP contracts already signed. The payments will be made at the time new 1987 contracts are signed.

More than 8.9 million acres of highly erodible cropland were accepted for retirement under the CRP during three signup periods last year. The goal, as spelled out by Congress in the Food Security Act of 1985, is to remove 40 million to 45 million acres of highly erodible cropland from production.

Under the program, farmers agree to take their land out of production for 10 years. In return, based on bids they submit, farmers get annual rental payments from the government and one-time assistance pay for half the cost of planting trees and grass to guard against erosion.

In the three previous signups, the annual bids accepted for the program ranged from $42.82 per acre to $46.94 per acre.

Buchanan Bows Out Of GOP Race

By ROBERT SHOGAN
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — White House communications director Patrick Buchanan, who had been considering running for the GOP presidential nomination, said Tuesday he had decided not to make the race to avoid splitting the conservative movement and hurting the prospects of New York Rep. Jack Kemp.

"Many conservatives have urged me to enter the race," Buchanan said in a statement issued by the White House. But he also acknowledged that others advised him that his campaign would amount to "the Pickett's charge of the American right" and "that its only certain and predictable consequence would be to 'mortally wound' the campaign of Congressman Jack Kemp, whose service to the cause has earned him an unimpeded shot at the nomination."

A hard-line conservative with a belligerent style, Buchanan was a long time aide to former President Nixon and then a newspaper columnist and broadcast commentator before joining the Reagan White House early in the president's second term. Interest in his presidential candidacy among conservatives was sparked by his defense of Reagan against criticism of his handling of the Iran arms scandal.

In characteristic fashion, Buchanan took the offensive against the president's critics. In a newspaper column he excoriated Republicans who "headed for the tall grass" rather than support Reagan. At a rally for conservatives here earlier this month, he charged that critics of the Iran-contra affair "are not after the truth — they're after Ronald Reagan."

Some conservatives thought Buchanan would make a stronger candidate than either Kemp or television evangelist Pat Robertson, the two GOP prospects with the most claim on right-wing support. And even Buchanan's adversaries conceded that he would make a forceful advocate of conservative beliefs as a presidential candidate.

But political professionals pointed out that he had never sought elective office before and some thought voters might find his style abrasive.

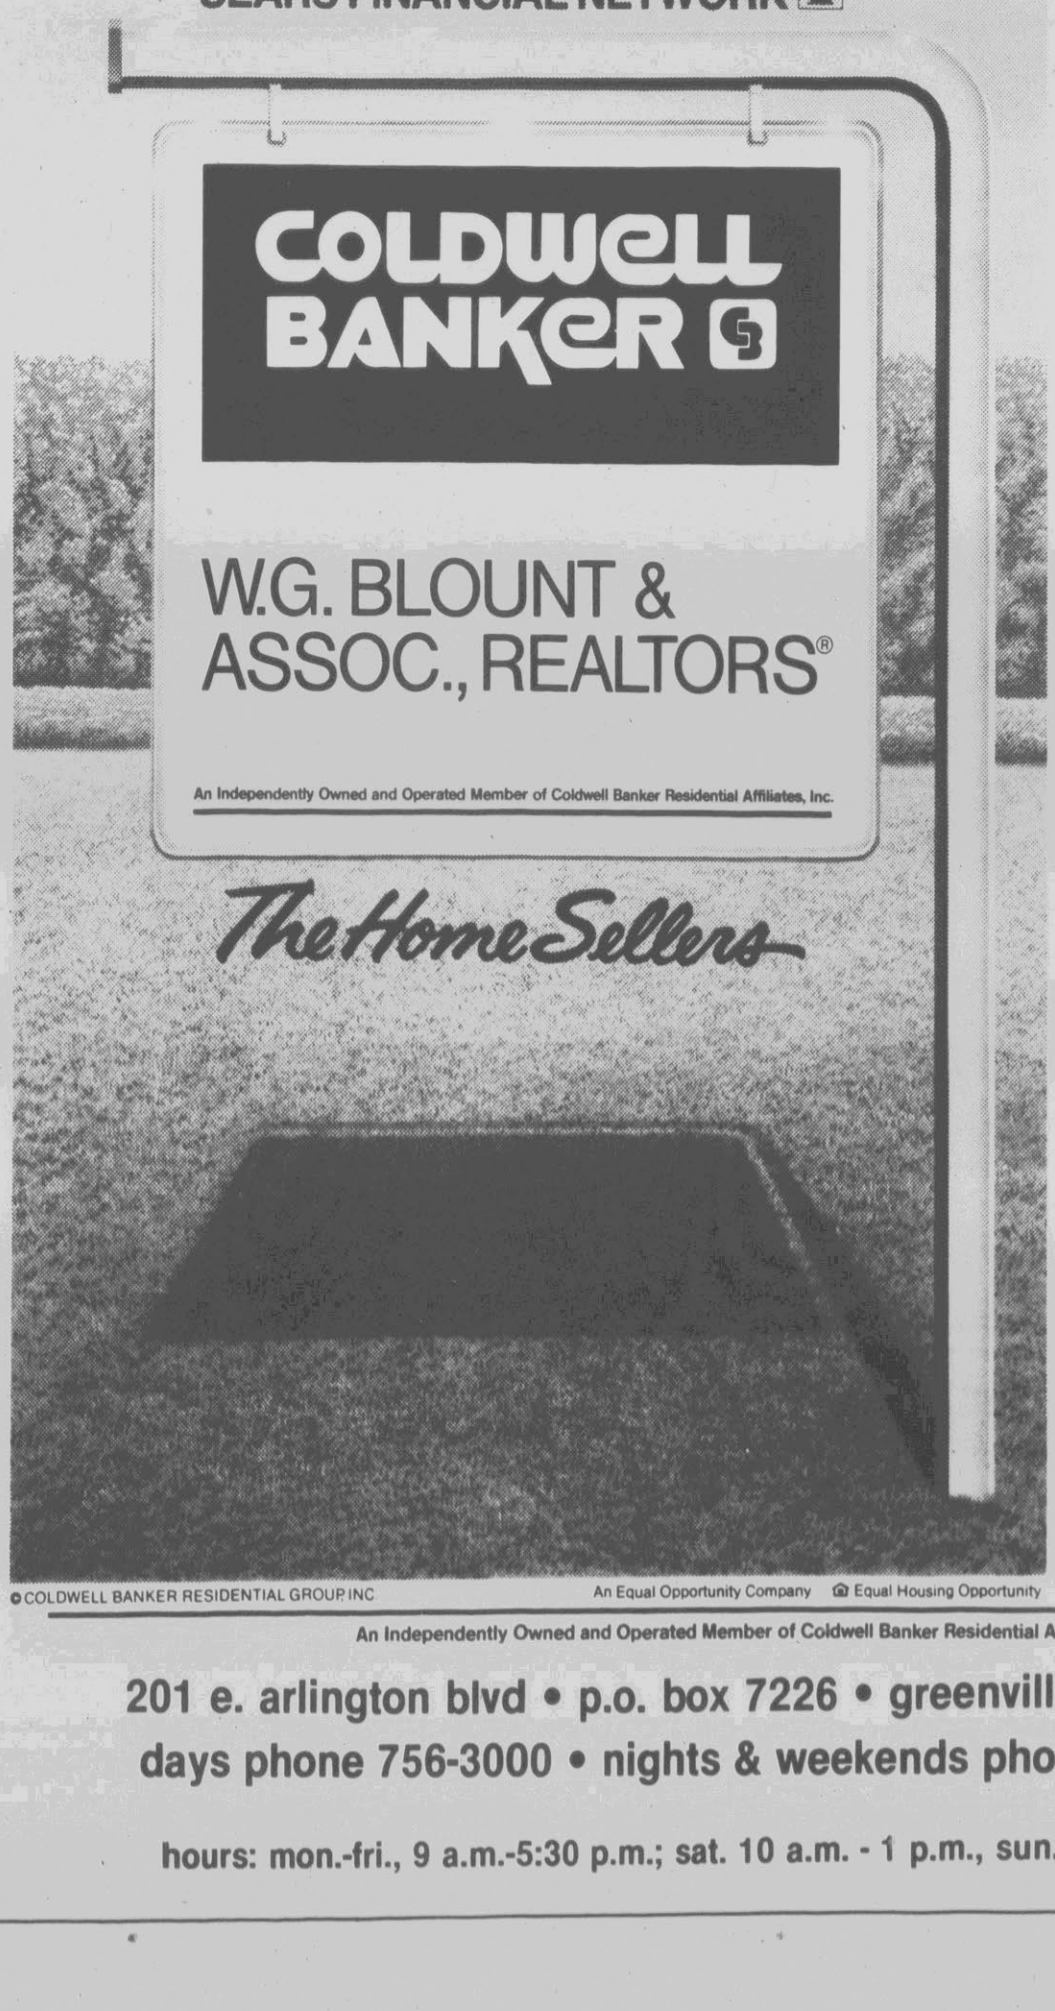

In withdrawing Buchanan said: "I reluctantly yield to the argument that a Buchanan candidacy, launched in the near future would fractionate — and embitter — not unite the leaderhsip and rank-and-file of the conservative cause."

In a statement of his own on Buchanan's decision, Kemp hailed him as "a great leader of the conservative movement and the pro-Reagan agenda," adding: "I hope to work with him and other conservatives to advance the cause in which we both believe."

DIVIDED TOWN — Climax, Mich., residents Kyle and Anita Smith engage in horseplay near the water tower in the town, where residents will vote Thursday on whether to dissolve the village. Smith says he'll vote to end the village, while his wife says she'll vote to keep it. (AP Laserphoto)

Village Of Climax May Be Near End

By MARK FRITZ
Associated Press Writer

CLIMAX, Mich. (AP) — The sign for this historic little village often draws double takes from motorists on Interstate 94. Some even try to steal it.

"It's tough keeping signs around here," said hardware store owner Al Hoover.

However, replacements might not be necessary soon, as residents vote Thursday whether the village of Climax should cease to exist.

Some residents say merging the one-stoplight village with rural Climax Township would lower the cost of local services. Others say it would mean a loss of control and identity.

"I had a great-great-grandfather who helped settle this land in 1836," said Maxine McNutt, who has lived in the village all of her 69 years. "It took 150 years to get this far and it'd be a shame if we got rid of the village."

Former village President Steve Johnson, who collected the 102 petition signatures to put the issue to a vote, said Tuesday that disincorporation would lower taxes and make services more efficient.

"I just think the village form of government is obsolete and the township form of government has the power," he said. "We have so many duplications."

The move to disincorporate must be approved by at least two-thirds of the village's 370 registered voters, or 247 people. The Kalamazoo County Board of Commissioners would have the final say at its annual meeting in October.

Climax is about 15 miles from both Kalamazoo and Battle Creek and almost midway between Detroit and Chicago.

The area encompassed by Climax Township was founded in 1835 and the population center within it was incorporated as a separate village in 1899. The township has 1,978 residents, while 1,619 live in the village.

In 1896, Congress singled out the area for an experiment with rural free delivery. Today, a monument stands in the village center, built with stones from each of the 300 farms on America's first RFD route.

The area also is known for its unusual name and the tongue-in-cheek comments it provokes. A village store sells souvenir t-shirts trading on the moniker's off-color connotations.

Residents are good-natured about the occasional ribbing about the town, which got its name because it climaxed the original inhabitants' search for a place to settle.

"I never heard jokes about it until I went to orientation at college and learned to be embarrassed," said Marilyn Woodman.

Except for lower taxes, little would change in Climax if it were to cease being a village, said Township Supervisor Allan Hayward, who is tax assessor for the township and the village.

The village's mystique could be preserved while getting rid of its cumbersome form of government, Hayward said. Michigan is divided into townships, which sometimes overlap with villages or, as in the case of Climax Township, contain them.

Among those against disincorporation is Village Clerk Lucille Betz, who lives in the house she was born in 69 years ago and said she doubts county road crews could remove snow as quickly as village plows.

"I'm kind of supposed to sit on the fence, but I have lived here all my life and would hate to see the village go," she said.

Gun Crackdown

DETROIT (AP) — The number of guns found in and near public schools has been cut in half due to a crackdown by police, prosecutors and school officials on students and parents, a spokeswoman said.

Twenty-three students have been caught with guns this school year, compared with 47 during the same period last school year, Detroit School District spokeswoman Marie Furcron said.

During the 1985-86 school year, 106 guns were taken from public school students, she said.

Under the district's policy, students caught with guns are expelled but often allowed to attend special night or day classes, Furcron said.

Mother And Daughter Recognized Nationally

By JANE WELBORN
Reflector Staff Writer

Successful women abound in the 1980s, but it is unusual to find two nationally recognized females in the same family in the same year.

A mother and daughter from Burlington each have received countrywide acclaim — the mother for her teaching ability and the daughter for her beauty and intelligence.

Donna Oliver, the North Carolina Teacher of the Year, has been selected as one of four finalists in national competition for the best teacher. Her 21-year-old daughter, Rachel, recently was crowned Miss Black USA.

Mrs. Oliver was in Greenville Tuesday to speak to education majors at East Carolina University. She was accompanied by her daughter, who happened to be in Burlington for a short visit.

The Olivers said their time together this year has been limited because each of them has such a hectic schedule.

Mrs. Oliver will leave Monday for New York, where she will be interviewed by Good Housekeeping magazine. She will then go to Washington for the national Teacher of the Year competition. The award will be presented in April by President Ronald Reagan.

"I am serving as an ambassador for education," she said. "I spread the gospel of education" throughout the state. She has taken a year's leave of absence from teaching biology at Cummings High School in Burlington, a job she has had for 13 years. She was named Teacher of the Year for her school, the school system, the region and the state before being considered for the national award.

Miss Oliver, a student at Emerson College in Boston, has taken a break from school in order to travel the country as the winner of the Miss Black USA pageant. She has had television appearances and newspaper and magazine interviews throughout the country. She was named Miss Black Massachusetts before winning the national title in October.

"The sad part is, I would love to travel with Rachel, but we have to go our separate ways," Mrs. Oliver said.

Both mother and daughter expressed support and pride for the other. They said they have encouraged each other to reach for their dreams.

"Since the age of 15, I have always liked the platform pageants offered," said Miss Oliver. She entered her first pageant at her high school, and won the title of Miss Cummings High School.

She said that in pageants, "I can show my talent. I can get up there and be an actress — be the star I always wanted to be and I am trying to be."

Miss Oliver sang the ballad "Too Shy to Say" by Stevie Wonder in the Miss Black USA competition. She said she has had one year of formal voice training, but has been singing "since I was 4 years old in the church, thanks to my mom, who directed the choir or accompanied me."

Miss Oliver said she plays the piano and guitar and has been in the recording studio singing background vocals for recordings. She is a radio broadcasting major who hopes to try her luck in Hollywood after she completes her degree. She has participated in musicals and plays while in school.

She said that although her mother had never entered pageants, she encouraged her to do so.

"My big dream at age 14 was to become the first black Miss America," Miss Oliver said. "Vanessa Williams beat me to it, but I still may enter the pageant."

She said that she and her mother have worked hard for the titles they have received.

"I just thank God," Miss Oliver said. "It has taken a lot of hard work. It is so wonderful that my mother and I both, after working so hard, have found success."

Miss Oliver said she has enjoyed traveling the country and speaking to school groups. She said her message has been against taking illegal drugs and in support of students reaching for their dreams.

"I tell them that through faith and a lot of hard work they can do whatever they want," she said.

Mrs. Oliver said that at her speaking engagements, she tries to raise the morale of teachers throughout the state.

"I have been concerned with the low morale among teachers," she said. "For a while there was a real negativism. All we heard about were the bad things in the schools. I want to help restore the public's confidence in education and educators.

"Right now, teacher salaries are a concern. Teacher salaries always have been low in North Carolina, but some things are being done to change that," she said. "And the Basic Education Plan is bringing a parity to the schools that has been needed.

"If the teachers in the state feel better about themselves, the children will be the benefactors," she said. "We are out here for what we can do for the young people."

She said that when teachers are singled out and rewarded as Teacher of the Year, it raises their morales.

She said that she and her daughter both are keeping journals of their adventures this year, and they may write a book about their experiences.

"My husband is a part of this team," Mrs. Oliver added. "He is staying there (in Burlington) and keeping our feet on the ground."

Stitches Add Spark To Sleeves

You'll make a fashion statement when you wear this designer sweater created especially for the woman who demands style and flair from her wardrobe. A flattering diagonal slash across the front is created with a shiny acrylic and mohair blend yarn. Modern but feminine, this sweater can be worn or weekends with pants or to work with a smart skirt. An exciting mix of patterns and stitches accentuate the rolled neckline and full dolman sleeves, creating the perfect loose-fitting top.

For textured impact, the Point Ottoman pattern stitch used on the sleeves and left side of the sweater front is hard to beat. To work it, you purl all stitches on the first two rows and knit all stitches on the third and fourth rows. These four rows are repeated throughout wherever this pattern stitch is used.

Easy-to-follow directions are written for small/medium and large/extra-large sizes with finished bust measurements of 40 and 42 inches respectively. The gauge is five stitches per inch.

Pat's Pointers

By PAT TREXLER

To obtain directions for making the Delicate Diagonal sweater, send your request for Leaflet No. z-01187 with $2 and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to : Pat Trexler Crafts, The Daily Reflector, P.O. Box 419148, Kansas City , Mo. 64141.

Or you may order Kit no. k-011887 by sending a check or money order for $17.95 to Pat Trexler Crafts at the same address. The kit price includes shipping charges, full instructions and yarn in your choice of ecru with peach blush or lavender with orchid.

Dear Pat: I have a complaint to air. Why don't you tell us the needle or hood size needed for the knit and crochet leaflets you offer? This would really help us decide if we want to make the item.--A Sometimes Disgruntled Fan.

There is a good reason why this particular information is not included unless the item is worked on the "giant" implements, such as size 50 needles or size Q crochet hook, for which there is no similar sized tool.

For almost any knit or crochet patterns, you can--and should--use any size needle or hook that will give you the gauge specified in the directions. Gauge is the key work, and the one most often overlooked by the average person. This is the reason that so many are disillusioned by a poor fit. Let's take a simple example to show you how this works.

For a finished bust measurement of 40 inches and a gauge of five stitches per inch, you will work on a total of 200 stitches or 100 stitches each for the back and front. The number of stitches necessary for the desired finished width is determined by multiplying the inches by the gauge -- in this instance, 40 times five equals 200.

If your gauge is just slightly off, you will never achieve the planned width or circumference. If you knit more loosely than the designer and your true gauge is 4 1/2 stitches per inch, your garment will be almost 44 1/2 inches. Or if you are a tight knitter and your true gauge is 5 1/2 stitches to the inch, your garment will measure only 36 1/3 inches. The same is just as true in crochet.

To most needlecrafters, it is hard to believe how much difference even a half stitch per inch makes, and most of them ignore the gauge information and select the suggested needle or hook size. But even if you think you work to an average tension, sooner or later you are almost certain to follow directions from a designer whose idea of "average" differs from yours.

I speak from sad experience. As a self-taught knitter, many years ago, I had no idea what was meant by gauge, so I just ignored that part of the instructions. My first three sweaters fit well, so I had no qualms about starting a Christmas gift sweater for my husband.

It is surprising, but true, that you can't detect the finished size of a garment while it is on your needles. After weeks of secret knitting, I bound off the stitches of the back and front, which had been done in one piece on circular needles, and saw that I had a sweater that would have fit a small giant.

This has been a long explanation to answer a short question, but I think you will see why I don't mention needle size.

(Because of the large volume of mail she receives, Pat is unable to answer your letters personally. However, she welcomes all questions and hints and will use those of general interest in the column whenever possible.)

DIAGONAL SLASH — Shimmering acrylic-mohair yarn makes the slash stand out on this sweater.

Inner Clock Gets Disoriented

NEW YORK (AP) — Why does it seem so difficult to get started for work on Monday mornings? Scientists think it has to do with sleeping patterns.

According to research, humans have biological inner clocks which try to regulate sleep patterns. When people keep regular sleeping schedules during the week and then stay up late and sleep late on weekends, the inner clock is disoriented. The result is Blue Mondays.

Jet lag, insomnia and shift work also throw off the inner clock. When schedules go against the body clock, serious physical problems can develop, including ulcers, heart problems and sleeping disorders.

Scientists recommend maintaining a regular schedule of meals, work and exercise. When you stay up later than usual, try to wake within an hour of your regular rising time.

REMODELING PROBLEMS

WASHINGTON (AP) — The path to successful home remodeling isn't always a smooth one. Now, however, if problems do arise between homeowners and contractors, they may be settled by a disinterested third party under a program called Remodelcare.

The National Council of Better Business Bureaus and the National Association of the Remodeling Industry put the pro-consumer program together.

The service is being implemented through 172 Better Business Bureaus and 55 national chapters of NARI, a trade association of more than 3,500 home improvement and remodeling contractors.

'Working Together' Is Success Of 58 Years

By ROSALIE TROTMAN
Reflector Lifestyle Editor

The success of 58 years is working together, according to Kathleen Manning Woolard. She and her husband, Eugene (Red) Murray Sr., are celebrating their 58th wedding anniversary today.

"Show your love and work together," is Mrs. Woolard's advice to young people getting married today.

The Woolards have been residents at Carolina Care Rest Home in Greenville since March 5, 1986. "We lived in Greenville about 45 years. We had to make a change because we couldn't take care of each other," she said.

"Red enjoys television, visiting up and down the hallways and talking. He enjoys a good joke. I participate in the center's activities when I feel like it. When you reach 80 and 90, you slow down a little bit," she said.

Mrs. Woolard was in nurse's training at Parrott Hospital in Kinston when she met her future husband. "I was standing on the porch with another off-duty nurse when Red and his roommate rode by. His roommate, whom I knew, waved and we waved back. They came back and started talking. I didn't like Red at first but he didn't give up. After about two months, we started dating and were married about 10 months later. He was 31 and I was 21 — it was about time we got married," she said.

Mrs. Woolard didn't work after her marriage. "He said he wanted me to work for him — keeping house and cooking would be enough for me to do," she said.

Woolard was working for the N.C. Department of Transportation in maintenance when the couple met and was later transferred to Greenville.

In telling about his nickname of 'Red,' Woolard said, "I was working in a garage in Virginia and the owner called me 'Jack.' I told him my name was Murray, which he couldn't remember. He finally started calling me 'Red' because of my red hair. Of course, there's not much red up there now — it's all white," said Woolard.

Red and Kathleen Woolard

Woolard enjoyed attending baseball games. Mrs. Woolard and their son, Eugene, enjoyed fishing. "Red was raised on the water (in Bath) but didn't like fishing. He was always tinkering and talking to people," she said.

The Woolards' son died in October 1985.

The couple also enjoyed playing cards. She was an active member of the First Christian Church, White Shrine and VFW Auxiliary. She is a former member of the Greenville Woman's Club and is a past Great Pocahontas of North Carolina. "We both go riding and I enjoy going to Bum's Restaurant in Ayden and getting collards to eat," she said.

Mrs. Woolard has two sisters, Sudie M. Wright and Dicy M. Pittman, both of Clinton. Her sister-in-law, Estelle Reel, lives in Greenville. Woolard has a half-sister, Alice Mercer of Benson.

Young Careerist Selected

Debra Meadows Williams has been named Young Careerist by the Greenville Business and Professional Women's Club.

Mrs. Williams is a registered nurse at Pitt County Memorial Hospital. She is a graduate of East Carolina University with a B.S.N. degree. She is married to Fred L. Williams Jr. of Greenville and daughter of Harry Meadows Jr. of Route 7, Henderson.

She was awarded first place for "her significant achievements in her career area and outstanding contributions to her community," said Patrice Alexander, president of the club.

DEBRA WILLIAMS

Belinda Kay Foster, a junior in the ECU School of Business, was runner-up. She is the daughter of Charlie F. Foster of Belhaven.

Judges for the local competition were Dick Flye, Florence Holt and Laura Sweet.

Mrs. Williams will compete at the District X level in Tarboro in March. The district winner will compete at the N.C. State Convention in June in Charlotte.

The Young Career Women program is BPW's way of highlighting the significant achievements of young business and professional women.

For further information about BPW call Ann Harper at 830-0089.

According to the last decennial census, 45.5 percent of Pitt County's labor force was composed of females; roughly 12 percent of workers belonged to minority groups.

March Observance Planned Thursday

Plans for World Day of Prayer were discussed at the Thursday meeting of Church Women United.

The observance will be held March 6 starting at 11 a.m. at The Memorial Baptist Church. The 100th anniversary will be celebrated. Dr. Richard H. Crapps will be keynote speaker. The report was given by Mrs. Herbert Paschal.

Plans were also announced for May Fellowship Day on May 1 at the First Presbyterian Church.

Freda Steinbeck reported on UNICEF, migrant kit collection and Church World Service blanket and clothes drive.

A donation was made to N.C. Church Women project CO-OP.

Mrs. W.H. Taft, president, conducted the meeting and 19 churches were represented.

Smoking Gets Big Kick

DEAR READERS: The Great American Smokeout of 1986 broke all records for participation, with an unprecedented 23.8 million smokers trying to kick the habit for 24 hours.

Through a Gallup survey, it was learned that 43.7 percent of the nation's 54.5 million smokers took part in the 10th annual Smokeout on Nov. 20, either by avoiding cigarettes completely or by cutting down.

Of the participants, 7 million smokers were able to make it through the day without lighting up, and another 16.8 million cut down. The survey findings confirm that smokers want to quit.

For smokers who need help quitting, the American Cancer Society offers the quit-smoking course, "FreshStart," through its local divisions and units. The course is also available on audio and videocassette, as well as in paperback. If you need help quitting but can't find the time to attend a course, the tapes and book give you the freedom to take advantage of FreshStart at your own leisure. The tapes, produced by Simon and Schuster, are sold at many bookstores and retail outlets.

For more information on FreshStart classes, call your local American Cancer Society. To order the FreshStart audio and videocassettes, call (800) 445-3800, operator 866.

Smoking is hell,
Quitting is heaven,
Yours for a healthier '87.

DEAR ABBY: Thank you for printing the list of questions thoughtless and insensitive people should not ask the parents of internationally adopted children.

Dear Abby

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

I, too, am the mother of two beautiful children (a boy and girl) adopted from Korea.

Please add one more question to that list: "Are your children sister and brother?"

I have been asked this question many times, and I always respond emphatically, "Yes, they are!" and would you believe that some people have had the nerve to continue probing further with "... but I mean, are they REAL brother and sister?" — LUCKY MOTHER IN CANADA

DEAR LUCKY: Read on. You may even want to clip it and carry the next letter with you. It speaks volumes:

DEAR ABBY: We have eight children, five domestically adopted. They don't look like us (there are four races among us), but some people do ask the cruelest questions.

Here are a few definitions for people who ask questions about adopted children who look Chinese, Korean or whatever:

Natural child: Any child who is not artificial.

Real parent: Any parent who is not imaginary.

Your own child: Any child who is not someone else's.

Adopted child: A natural child, whose parents are not imaginary, chosen by us and is now ours. — RITA LAWS, HARRAH, OKLA.

The dollar rose on foreign exchange markets early today as traders awaited the outcome of U.S.-Japanese talks on stabilizing the dollar-yen exchange rate. Gold bullion fell to around $408.50.

Navistar led the NYSE most active list, unchanged at 6 3/8 in early trading.

IBM, off 2 1/2 on Tuesday, was down another 1/2 to 122 1/4.

On the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was down 1.91 to 292.57.

On Tuesday, the Dow Jones industrial average closed 1.97 points higher at 2,104.47, a record 13th straight gain for the index, after a volatile sesion which saw the average down by as many as 10 points at one time.

Big Board volume totaled 224.79 million shares, against 162.83 million in Monday's session.

The exchange's composite index was off 0.09, at 153.62.

Panel Rejects Revised Bedford Proposal

microbiology at East Carolina University.

"We are particularly concerned for the safety of our children," he said. "In the past 12 months, two children have been injured by cars on Queen Anne's Road. This proposal will increase traffic on Bremerton. There are 28 children within the very first block of Bremerton.

"There are no playgrounds and sidewalks in Grayleigh, Bedford and Lynndale. The streets are in fact pedestrian walks. Pedestrian use of the streets is a characteristic use of our neighborhood."

Under the original plat, which is still valid following the denial of the proposed plat, Bremerton and another proposed road connect with Evan Street. Residents at the meeting said they didn't expect developers to use the original plat.

Meanwhile, city officials had recommended approval of the revised plat.

"The city's position is that once the subdivision is built about 200 lots in back of Bedford will need more than one access road to Evans Street," said Bobby Roberson, director of Planning and Community Development.

Presently, Martinborough Road and Pinewood Road connect the development with Evans Street.

The Bedford development included in the plat is located off the eastern right-of-way of Evans Street extension, north of Fork Swamp Canal and west of Bedford subdivision.

In other business, commissioners approved a preliminary plat of Whichport subdivision. The subdivision is located off the southern right-of-way of U.S. 264 and east of proposed Hooker Road extension.

Under the newly-approved plat, a private drive would be extended between the adjoining owners of Nichols Discount City and the Hilton, according to Roberson.

"The private drive would be built to N.C. Department of Transportation street designs and would be signalized," Roberson said. "In addition, the intersection of Landmark Street and Greenville Boulevard will be signalized."

According to the original plat, streets at the Hooker intersection would not line up, Roberson said.

"The DOT would not allow a signal to occur at the Hooker Road intersection because of the offset," he said.

Opponents to the proposed plat argued that property was sold based on the road construction plans in the original preliminary subdivision plat.

Meanwhile, the panel agreed to review a request by Warren Street property owners to rezone their properties to a high-density single family residential use in a future meeting.

The property owners, who originally requested that the Warren Street land and property on Fourth Street be rezoned to a neighborhood revitalization area, revised their request after planning staff members told them they didn't qualify for the change.

"In R6-N zoning classifications, only 14 percent of the property can be used for duplexes and multifamily. The remaining 86 percent has to be used for single-family development," Roberson said. "Under the proposal suggested, Fourth Street would exceed 14 percent."

The board approved a request by Bill Clark to rezone 26.51 acres located east of Westhaven subdivision and south of Whichport subdivision from residential/agricultural to medium density single-family residential.

The commissioners also approved a request by the city of Greenville to rezone a 1.78-acre tract from downtown commercial fringe to office and institutional. The property is located off the northern right-of-way of 14th Street between Clarke and Greene streets and is a portion of the South Evans Redevelopment area.

The commission approved a preliminary plat for Paramore Farms subdivision, located off the western right-of-way of 14th Street extension and north of Windy Ridge. The plat involves 70 lots and 3,420 linear feet of street on a 24.97-acre tract.

The board denied a request by Joe T. Wright to rezone 18.28 acres located off the western right-of-way of State Road 1440 and north of N.C. 33 west from residential/agricultural to highway commercial.

Owners of adjacent properties told the board the zoning change would depreciate the value of their homes.

Commissioners recommended approval of a proposed amendment to the Subdivision Ordinance concerning required improvement performance guarantees which will eliminate second deeds of trust as forms of security.

"Because of what we learned when the Radisson project failed, we knew that second deeds of trust were going to be unacceptable as forms of security for subdivision improvements," said City Attorney Mac McCarley.

"The amendment provides that first deeds of trust will be acceptable because they are not subject to the same risk of being extinguished by a senior lien the second deed of trust is exposed to."

The board approved an amendment to the Zoning Ordinance to allow radio and television studios and transmission facilities as a special use in the MD-7 zoning classification.

agriculture, forestry, fishing and mining composing the bulk of the economic base," he said. "Industry and commercial development are on the increase.

Paciocco said other notable characteristics of the region are the significant historical sites and the higher education institutions, including four community colleges and East Carolina University and Medical Center.

"The purpose of the commission is to provide a strong organization and a well qualified staff that can serve the needs of the member jurisdictions," Paciocco said. "Another purpose is to provide a vehicle for all localities, large and small, voice their opinions and suggestions on issues with regional impacts."

At the conclusion of the meeting, Council member Ed Carter expressed gratitude to fellow members for their efforts in establishing a holiday to celebrate the birthday of Dr. Martin Luther King.

" I feel extremely proud to be a part of the City Council that has the foresight to do what it did," Carter said. "I know it cost the city money in terms of closing down, but I don't know that we can assess the return on the investment that we get from all this.

Black parents face a difficult decision on the question of school attendance on the day, according to Carter.

"We blacks are facing a situation where we're having a hard decision to make even relative to our children on whether to take them out of school on that date because we do want to honor Dr. Martin Luther King, but we are also concerned about the educational progress of our kids," he said.

"Of course, we understand, too, the positions that some other agencies have taken including the county and the state."

North Carolina and Pitt County governments have not established a legal holiday for Dr. King.

NCSU March

RALEIGH (AP) — About 75 students marched across the campus of North Carolina State University to demand that the school divest all its holdings in U.S. companies conducting business in South Africa.

"It's about time State students took the initiative, let it be known that we don't want to be affiliated with those companies," marcher Sandra F. McManus said.

The march Monday came on the second national observance of the birthday of Martin Luther King Jr., the civil rights leader murdered in 1968.

Protesters and university officials said they did not know how much money N.C. State has invested in companies that do business in South Africa.

CCSU Stuns East Carolina, 81-64

By TOM MORRIS
Reflector Sports Writer

NEW BRITAIN, Conn. — Central Connecticut broke open a tight ball game in the second half and cruised to a 81-64 win over East Carolina Tuesday night in college basketball action.

"I think CCSU deserves a lot of credit," said ECU coach Charlie Harrison. "I think they went out and saw that they could win the ball game.... They got enough confidence and took control of the ball game."

The Pirates trailed 54-49 with ten minutes remaining when the Blue Devils ran off a 9-2 streak that put them up 63-51 with 5:08 left.

"We had to shut down the inside and we had to stop them on the break," said CCSU coach Bill Detrick. "I don't think they got too many easy baskets."

Detrick said it is hard to win on the road and used his two previous losses to ECU in Greenville as an example.

"The more I've been around, it is so difficult to travel," Detrick said.

Derrick Scurry began the Blue Devils' key second half run with a jumper from the corner to bring it to 56-49.

Keith Sledge then turned the ball over and Bryan Heron hit a bank shot to make it 58-49. Marchell Henry countered for ECU to bring it to 58-51.

Scott Bosley then drove the lane and hit a bucket to bring the CCSU lead to 60-51. Heron then slammed one home on the fast break and drew the foul to put the Blue Devils up 63-51 with 5:08 remaining.

"I think the biggest thing that hurt us was we that we came out thinking that things were going to happen and they didn't happen," said Harrison. "All of a sudden we got ourselves into a bind where they got a rhythm, they got to wanting it. They got to thinking they were going to be able to take us one-on-one. They got every loose ball rebound. They shot the ball extremely well under pressure.

"That's what happens when you come in here and you play in a way that you think all of a sudden everything is going to be all right and then you find out that things aren't going to be all right. They just didn't work their way through adversity at times."

Heron led the Blue Devil scoring with 28 points while Dwayne Jones added 17 and Scott Bosley had 12 off the bench, along with starter John Wilgus.

After falling behind by 11, the Pirates were never able to challenge again as the Blue Devils were able to maintain as much as an 11-point lead the rest of the way.

"We got good shots, but (after falling behind) then you have to start going for those bombs (three-point baskets)," Harrison said.

The Pirates had chances to pull within three early in the second half but failed to capitalize as they suffered through 35 percent shooting in the final period.

"In the second half we had the ball six times with a chance to cut it to three and we did not. We had six shots in those possessions," Harrison said. "We had one shot in those six possessions. The others were either turnovers or fouls."

CCSU came into the game with a 3-13 record while the Pirates sported a 9-6 mark. For most of the second half, the teams looked as if they had exchanged records.

"You don't come on the road and just let them completely take (the) tempo,' Harrison said. "You have to work your way through sometimes. There are two things that should be constant in the game of basketball. That's defense and rebounding, because you don't know when you are going to get a good whistle. You don't know when the ball isn't going to be in the hole and you don't know when you are going to have three thumbs. I think it was a combination of those three things here tonight."

The Blue Devils led 38-33 at the half, paced by 11 points from Herron.

CCSU edged out to a a 26-22 lead with 7:08 left on a three point play by Herron following a Blue Devil steal.

The Pirates pulled back within two points on three separate occasions on two jumpers by Jeff Kelly and one by John Williams.

CCSU's Jones then connected on a jumper to give the Blue Devils a 34-28 advantage.

Henry pulled the Pirates back within 34-30 before Keith Coleman hit a layup to bring it to 36-30. Reed Lose then hit a three pointer with nine seconds left to pull ECU within 36-33.

Jones followed with a jumper from the corner as the first half expired to give the Blue Devils a 38-33 lead.

"I thought we got good bench performance in the first half," Harrison said.

With the loss, ECU falls to 9-7. The Pirates return to action Saturday when they travel to George Mason for a Colonial Athletic Association contest.

Central Connecticut improved to 4-13.

"They shot the lights out of the ball and we gave them too many second chances," said ECU guard Reed Lose. "When they made mistakes, we didn't capitalize."

Chargers Outlast Jaguars

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

FARMVILLE — Even though Farmville Central had been defeated for the first time in Eastern Plains Conference basketball play Friday night by Pamlico, Tuesday night's meeting with Ayden-Grifton had quite a bit of significance.

The Jaguars, with a victory, could draw the EPC race back into a tie for first place, while the Chargers, with a win, could consolidate their hold on first place and remain unbeaten in league play.

The Chargers didn't play all that well — but the Jags were hampered by the loss of two of their starters and Ayden-Grifton managed to pull it out, 50-46, in an overtime.

Then, in the meeting of the girls' teams — both unbeaten in league play — Farmville Central prevailed, 68-56, to take over first alone.

"I thought we stole one tonight," Ayden-Grifton coach Bob Murphrey said. "We didn't play very well and they were at a disadvantage."

That disadvantage was the loss of starter Reggie Miller and the absence of another starter, James Reid. "There was a disagreement about we is in charge here," Coach Mike Terrell said. "Mitchell will not be back, nor will (reserve) Tim Dupree. James will return, but was suspended for this week."

That put the Jaguars into a situation where it was starting two players who had not started before. "One of them probably had not been playing 30 seconds a game."

The game was tied 10 times along the way with 10 lead changes. Five of those ties and three lead changes came in the final period, which ended in a 42-42 tie.

Ronnell Peterson tied it up for Ayden-Grifton with 1:42 left, and the Chargers got the ball back with 1:10 remaining and called time out. They moved the ball around until 13 seconds remained, then called time again to set up the final play.

Peterson again took the shot, with four seconds left, but it bounced away and Farmville came up with the rebound with one second left. Following a time out, the Jaguars were unable to get the ball past midcourt and get off a shot.

In the overtime, Peterson hit with 1:13 left, then added two free throws with 55 seconds left for a 46-42 lead. The two teams then exchanged points the rest of the way as the Chargers kept the Jaguars from having a chance to tie it up again.

Neither team shot well. Ayden-Grifton made 17 of 46 shots from the floor, 37.0 percent. Farmville canned 23 of 53 for a slightly better 43.4 percent.

The difference came at the free throw line, where the Chargers made 16 of 22 as compared to none of two for the Jags, who had a 35-28 rebounding edge.

"Our perimeter people played poorly on offense," Murphrey said. "(Farmville) did a good job of clogging up the middle and keeping the ball away from our inside men. That was the best zone defense I've seen this year.

"I'm just happy to win. Peterson hit some big baskets for us and I thought Shawn Farmer did a good job of running the team. But we were fortunate to win even though they were handicapped. I thought Farmville showed a lot of courage."

Terrell said he was proud of the effort his team gave in the game. "Our inexperience was what beat us at the end. I think we got a little complacent with our offense and made a couple of key turnovers when we had the chance to pull away."

Early on, it looked like Ayden-Grifton might cruise. The Chargers too the opening lead and scored the first five points in the game, moving out to a 10-4 lead in the first four-plus minutes. But Kennedy Williams sparked a comeback by the Jaguars, including a buzzer basket that finally put the Jaguars up, 14-13.

From there on out, it was nip-and-tuck. The lead changed four times in the second period, with Ayden-Grifton holding a 20-16 lead at one time before two baskets by Tyrone Joyner tied it up again and then put Farmville ahead, 22-20. Leon Dixon, however, scored with five seconds to go to tie it at 22-22 at the half.

Farmville maintained the lead throughout much of the third period although the Chargers tied it on three occasions before taking a 31-30 lead on a shot from underneath by Peterson. Ayden-Grifton opened up a 34-30 lead before taking a 34-32 edge into the final quarter.

Williams scored twice to put Farmville back up, 36-34, but James Woods and Hilton Ellison came back to return the lead to A-G, 38-36. Alexander Daniels canned a baseline jumper and Joyner scored from underneath to again put the Jags on top, 40-38, but two baskets by Peterson around one by Joyner tied it again at 42 and forced the overtime.

Peterson finished the game with 18 to lead Ayden-Grifton while Woods added 16. Williams had 18 and Joyner had 12 for Farmville.

The win leaves Ayden-Grifton with a 10-3 overall and 4-0 conference record. Farmville drops to 10-4 overall and 3-2 in the league.

The girls' game was a battle for outright possession of first place in the league, both coming in with perfect records.

Both teams swapped baskets early before Ayden-Grifton took an 10-6 lead on a basket by Karen Edmonds with 3:41 left in the first period. But two baskets by Liesa Lang tied it up before the Lady Chargers inched back out into a 14-13 lead after one period.

Lang's follow shot with 5:37 left put Farmville ahead in the second period, 15-14 and both Vickie Best and Kim Harrison followed to open up a 19-14 advantage. Helped by a three-point play by Felica Barrett, Farmville opened up a 10-point lead, 26-16 before Ayden-Grifton began to get moving again.

Farmville led, 34-28, at the half.

In the third period, Ayden-Grifton, led by two baskets each from Carole Stokes and Kim Barfield, tied it up at 40-40 with 4:06 left to go. But Farmville regained the lead on a basket by Harrison with 3:51 showing, and Lang hit on a turnaround jumper to open up a four-point lead again.

Farmville never trailed again, moving out to a 48-45 lead by the end of the quarter.

In the final period, Ayden-Grifton cut the lead to three once more, but Farmville pulled away after that, led by Harrison and Lang, leading by as much as 16, 66-50, before it finally ended.

"We worked hard against the press to be ready for them," Coach Hilda Worthington of Farmville said. "But in the first quarter, we stood back too much instead of using our own press against them. I think we were nervous to begin with and that hurt for a while. But it was a great team effort.

"I think we got the heebie-jeebies again in the third period, but they know what they had to do to win and did it."

Ayden-Grifton coach Kathy Frazier said getting both Edmonds and Juanita Murphy in early foul trouble — both collecting their first three early) hurt the A-G effort. "We couldn't be as effective as we wanted to be with them on the bench," she said. "Farmville has a good team, but I think we did more to beat ourselves than they did. We missed a couple of assignments at key times in the game that hurt us. They shot well from the line too, (14-18) and we made only six of 13.

"It's hard to stop them too with their size in the half-court game. I think we got a little tired in the fourth quarter. We just couldn't get that spurt of energy."

Lang poured in 26 to lead Farmville while Harrison added 14. Michele Whitfield led Ayden-Grifton with 16 while Edmonds had 14 and Barfield had 10.

Farmville Central is now 9-3 overall, 5-0 in the conference. Ayden-Grifton drops to 10-3, 3-1.

The Chargers play host to C.B. Aycock on Friday, while Farmville is idle until next Jan. 29 when it visits Aycock.

Robinson Again CAA Top Player

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — Navy senior center David Robinson on Tuesday became the first player in the Colonial Athletic Association to receive the league's basketball player-of-the-week honors for the second time this season.

In the last week, Robinson scored at least 30 points in three games. On Jan. 14, the 7-foot-1 Robinson scored 30 points and grabbed 15 rebounds in a 75-71 Navy win over Lafayette. Three days later, he had 31 points and 12 rebounds in the Midshipmen's 96-60 conference win over American, and on Monday, he collected 32 points and eight rebounds as Navy posted an 84-60 victory over Delaware.

For the week, Robinson shot 62 percent from the floor and 74 percent from the free-throw line. He also blocked 14 shots — seven against Delaware — and made six steals.

Robinson leads the CAA in scoring, rebounding and blocked shots.

Tait's Late Basket Allows Tigers To Stay Unbeaten

ATLANTA (AP) — Georgia Tech Coach Bobby Cremins knew what to expect, but 10th-ranked Clemson didn't follow the script.

"We triple-teamed (Horace) Grant," Cremins said. "We knew they were going to him."

The Tigers did go to Grant, who quickly whipped a pass to Michael Tait in the right corner, and Tait drilled an 18-footer with four seconds left to give unbeaten Clemson a 67-66 victory in an Atlantic Coast Conference basketball game Tuesday night.

It was the 17th victory in a row this season for the unbeaten Tigers, who went to 4-0 in the ACC for the first time in their history.

"It's a win I'll cherish for a long time," Tiger Coach Cliff Ellis said. "This is early in the ACC season and it's still a long ways to go. We're not made up of a bunch of superstars, but I think the chemistry on this club is good."

Tait's game-winner on the pass from Grant came after Tech had taken a 66-65 lead on Tom Hammonds' basket with 1:55 to play.

Clemson failed to score on its possession and Tech had a chance to build a three-point lead before Bruce Dalrymple was called for charging with 49 seconds to go.

The Tigers ran down the clock, hit Grant on the inside before the Tiger center found Tait alone in the right corner.

"The play was designed to go to me but three guys collapsed on me," Grant said. "I feel anybody with any basketball knowledge isn't going to take the shot with three guys on him. I saw Michael and kicked it out to him."

"I was looking to go backdoor to get the rebound," Tait said. "When I saw the three guys on him, I stepped back out so he could have a passing lane. I was wide open."

"It was a great win for Clemson," Cremins said. "It was a very tough, very disappointing loss for us."

"Now we really have our backs against the wall because we have Virginia (Thursday night) and North Carolina (Saturday) coming up," he said. "Now we're going to have to suck it up."

Grant, who sat out 11 minutes of the first half with two fouls, led the Tigers with 16 points, Jerry Pryor had 14 and Tait 12.

Duane Ferrell of Tech had 21 and Hammonds 20, including 10 in the final 6:05.

On Monday, Thorpe won his first NBA Player of the Week award. He followed it up by scoring 19 points and grabbing 11 rebounds Tuesday night as the Kings beat the Golden State Warriors 123-114.

"It's a great feeling to be recognized by your peers and those who vote on the award," Thorpe said.

Guard Reggie Theus scored 31 points and guard Derek Smith added 27 as the Kings improved their record to 12-26.

Golden State, which fell to 23-18, was led by guard Eric "Sleepy" Floyd with 24 points and by center Joe Barry Carroll with 22.

In the only other NBA game Tuesday, Chicago beat Milwaukee 103-90.

Thorpe, the Kings' first-round pick in 1984, had double figures in both points and rebounds for the ninth time in 10 games.

"Things are definitely looking up for us now that we've finally three games in a row," Thorpe said.

Despite the loss, Golden State coach George Karl said his team is "play extremely good ball."

"I have a lot of confidence in them," he said. "Normally you wouldn't feel that way just three months into a campaign with a new team."

"I thought both teams came out and shot well," said Sacramento coach Phil Johnson. "The big difference was our big guys did a good job. We wanted to concentrate on not letting their other guys (other than Carroll) free up for the long shots."

Johnson was pleased with what he called Smith's "aggressive offensive and defensive" play.

Smith credited speculation by teammates that he was on the brink of losing his starting assignment due to what they perceived as poor play with inspiring him Tuesday night. "I play better when I'm angry," he said.

Sacramento point guard Franklin Edwards, who came to the Kings with Smith in a trade with the Los Angeles Clippers last summer, credited the Kings' improved play to a strong team effort.

"When we run, it makes us a good team ... The last three games prove that," Edwards said.

Thorpe hit six free throws in a 2½-minute stretch late in the fourth quarter to assure the Kings' victory.

The Warriors were trailing 110-102 when they attempted to make a run at the Kings with 3:59 left. Thorpe hit his first pair of free throws with 3:46 remaining and capped a nine-point Kings scoring effort with another set at 1:29 left to keep Sacramento on top, 119-111.

During the stretch, Floyd hit his third three-point basket in an attempt to get the Warriors back in the game, but Golden State was unable to get closer than six points after Thorpe's final free throws.

Bulls 103, Bucks 90

Michael Jordan scored 31 points, 14 in the final quarter, as the NBA's leading scorer shook off some stitches in the mouth to lead the Bulls.

Jordan needed the medical attention after being elbowed in the first quarter by Bucks center Paul Mokeski.

"They gave me stitches and novocaine and told me it wouldn't hurt," Jordan said. "I was a little tentative getting back into the game, which is not unusual right after something like that happens."

Gene Banks wasn't tentative for Chicago, as the reserve forward scored a season-high 18 points.

Duke And State Tangle In ACC

By TOM FOREMAN Jr.
AP Sports Writer

No. 12 Duke, beset by two cases of the flu and other assorted ailments, meets a 20th ranked North Carolina State team which is hoping to get at least one its key performers back into action tonight.

The Blue Devils went into practice Tuesday without guard Tommy Amaker and reserve George Burgin, both of whom checked into the school infirmary. Kevin Strickland was recovering from a lymph node infection and Robert Brickey looked as though he was about to come down with the flu and did not practice.

John Smith, a sophomore averaging 10 points per game, returned to practice after sitting out last weekend's Wake Forest contest with a strained back.

Sophomore Danny Ferry, one of the healthy ones, said the game would hinge on who showed up for the 7:30 start at Reynolds Coliseum.

"It's going to be a hard played game, no doubt," Ferry said. "It's just who's going to be in there ready to go."

The Wolfpack missed 6-foot-10 center Charles Shackleford and 6-9 forward Chucky Brown in last Sunday's 96-78 loss to second-ranked North Carolina. Shackleford returned to practice Tuesday, but is still listed as questionable. Brown did not work out and is not likely to play against the Blue Devils.

"If they are missing Chucky Brown and Shack, it's going to be something we're really going to have to try and take advantage of," Ferry added.

N.C. State coach Jim Valvano called the meeting with Duke "another in a very diificult stretch of games for us."

Duke beat N.C. State twice last season by scores of 74-64 and 72-70, the latter coming on a late pair of Johnny Dawkins free throws.

Maryland goes against West Virginia in the only other contest involving an ACC school. The Terrapins stopped Bucknell 77-68 Monday night, while West Virginia trounced Massachusetts 67-45.

Havelock Tops Pam Pack

WASHINGTON — Havelock held off a Washington rally in the final quarter to take a 65-58 Coastal Conference basketball victory Tuesday night.

Havelock's girls made it a sweep with a 53-50 win in their outing.

Havelock held a slim 14-12 lead after the first quarter, and managed to outhit the Pam Pack, 15-12, in the second. That gave the Rams a 29-24 halftime lead.

The Rams pulled away in the third period, 20-15, running their lead to 49-39. Then, in the final quarter, Washington rallied, 19-16, but fell short.

Alvin West led Havelock with 20 points while Al McCabe had 12 and Napoleon Simmons had 11. Ryan Dixon led Washington with 20 while Joe Daniels hit 15 and Tyron Lodge added 11.

The loss dropped Washington to 2-11 overall and 0-4 in Coastal play.

Havelock held a 10-8 lead after one quarter, but increased that to 24-18 by the end of the half. In the third quarter, Washington came back to trail by only 39-35.

In the final quarter, Washington outhit Havelock, 15-14, but could not pull out the win.

Laura Maxwell poured in 30 points to lead the Lady Rams while Michele Barrett added 11. Tonya Holley paced Washington with 25 while Angela Holley had 10.

The loss leaves Washington at 7-4 overall, 2-2 in the Coastal.

The Pam Pack will play host to West Craven on Friday.

Plymouth Sweep Tigers In Two NEAC Contests

PLYMOUTH — Hosting Plymouth High School swept a pair of Northeastern Conference basketball games from Williamston Tuesday night.

Plymouth took the boys' game, 81-52, and squeezed past the Lady Tigers, 47-45.

Plymouth held only a 15-13 lead after one period of the boys' game and was able to increase that to just 31-24 by halftime. But in the third period, the Vikings began to roll, outscoring the Tigers, 26-13. That pushed them into a 57-37 lead going into the last stanza. Plymouth outhit Williamston, 24-15, in that quarter.

Robert Chesson led Plymouth with 16 points while James Carter had 15 and Johnny Young had 14. Guy Spruill led the Tigers with 16 while Reggie Randolph and Boris Brown each added 10.

Williamston drops to 5-9 overall and 1-4 in Northeastern play.

Williamston jumped out to a 10-4 lead in the first quarter of the girls' game, but was unable to hold on. Plymouth came back with an 11-7 advantage in the second quarter to cut the lead to 17-15 at halftime.

Williamston pulled away again in the third period, running out to a 32-24 lead. But Plymouth rushed back, 23-13, and got two free throws from Patricia Boston with nine seconds left to pull out the victory.

Boston led Plymouth with 16 points while Tracy Hyman added 10 and Shawn McCray had 10. Monique Pou led Williamston with 15 while Dana Hardison and Kim Hawkins each hit 10.

The Lady Tigers drop to 7-7 overall, 2-3 in the conference.

Knights Capture Two From Bethel

KINSTON — Greenville Christian Academy took a pair of basketball games from hosting Bethel Christian Tuesday night.

Greenville won the boys' game, 56-52, and the girls came away with a 77-52 victory.

In the boys' game, Greenville eased out into a 15-12 lead in the opening quarter. Bethel came back, however, with a 20-18 advantage, and trailed by only 33-32 at intermission.

In the third period, Greenville held off any further advances by Bethel and eased out to a 42-40 lead going into the final quarter. The Knights then outhit Bethel, 14-12, to hold on for the win.

"I don't feel like we're playing real sharp at times," Coach Dale Thatcher said. "The game was closer than it should have been. But we played heads up at the end and were able to pull it out."

Robin House led Greenville with 22 points while Paul Hollingsworth added 12. Lewis Deaver led Bethel with 15 while Barry Deaver had 13 and Doug Moody and Jesse Harrison had 10 each.

Greenville's girls eased to an 18-12 lead in the first quarter of their game. Both teams hit 10 in the second period, leaving the Lady Knights up at intermission, 28-22.

In the third quarter, Greenville burned the nets for 30 points while allowing 11. That pushed them out to a 58-33 lead going into the final period. Both teams scored 19 points in that.

Amber Tripp and Kim Faulkner each had 14 to lead Greenville, while Stephanie Stevens added 13 and Sandy Johnston and Tammy Huggins each had 10. Kim Jones had 32 and Sheila Shiver had 10 for Bethel.

"Once our defense and fast break took over, we had the game well in hand," Thatcher said.

Greenville's boys are now 10-3 while the girls are 7-1. GCA travels to Friendship Academy of Raleigh on Friday.

U.S. Foe Set — Well, Maybe

FREMANTLE, Australia (AP) — It will be Stars & Stripes of the United States against Kookaburra III of Australia for the America's Cup — maybe.

Kookaburra III made Alan Bond a one-term Cup holder Tuesday by completing a 5-0 sweep of Bond's Australia IV in the defender finals. Bond is the Perth wheeler-dealer who in 1983 broke the New York Yacht Club's 132-year hold on the trophy.

Kevin Parry, another Perth tycoon, now will defend the Cup with a Kookaburra against America's Stars & Stripes. Whether he will use Kookaburra II or III is to be decided in some as yet unspecified runoff.

Kookaburra II was eliminated earlier in the defender series. But Bond and Parry settled a protest war 10 days ago by agreeing with the Royal Perth Yacht Club, the official holder of the Cup, to give Kookaburra II another chance.

The truce terms were not detailed. The ill feeeling between the Bond and Parry camps surfaced, however, at a news conference after Tuesday's race.

"The fact that you weren't good enough is a fact of life," Parry said to Bond, sitting some 10 feet away.

He said Bond had been "childish" in saying that if Parry lost the Cup, Bond would "have to get the Cup back."

Parry admitted he might have been behaving like an ungracious winner, but that internal squabbling was damaging Australia's effort to retain yachting's most coveted prize.

The bickering between the two syndicates is making headlines in Australia's sports-loving press, even to the point that the Jan. 31 opening of the America's Cup championship series is sometimes overlooked.

Iain Murray, Kookaburra III's victorious skipper — and who may or not be the defending helmsman, depending on which Kookaburra is selected — said of his certain rival, Dennis Conner: "I've never met big, bad Dennis. I'm an admirer of his sailing skills. He has tremendous upwind sailing skills, but we've done the same the past week."

Colin Beashel, skipper of the ousted Australia IV called the two Kookaburra's "very competitive. I wouldn't want to say which is the better."

The challengers also have something to resolve. Stars & Stripes has asked New Zealand to provide its Kiwi Magic, which lost four of fives races to the American boat in the challenger finals, to help the Americans train for the Kookaburra contest. Although it lost to Stars & Stripes, New Zealand possesses the same swift maneuvering abilities as the Kookaburras.

Such cooperation among challengers was commonplace in past America's Cup tournaments, but each time the defender was the United States.

This time, however, the defender is Australia, and New Zealand has a natural affinity for its Southern Hemisphere neighbor. And the Kiwis also have a selfish motive.

A victory by Conner, who is trying to regain the Cup he lost to Australia in 1983, means the next series would be held off the coast of California. Those are home waters for Conner, whose yacht is sponsored by the San Diego Yacht Club of which he is a member. A victory by the Australians would keep the competition in the Indian Ocean, familiar waters for the New Zealanders, and far less expensive than a trek to California.

Conner didn't help himself when, last month, he said no one would build a Cup 12-meter yacht out of fiberglass, as the new zealanders did, "unless they intend to cheat."

Conner unsuccessfully campaigned to have "Plastic Fantastic," the nickname given New Zealand's boat, extensively surveyed to determine whether she was legal. He claimed the weight of her hull was concentrated amidships instead of being of uniform thickness as are the other 12s, all built of aluminum.

Despite the various barriers, the Americans held hopes of negotiating New Zealand syndicate head Michael Fay over to their side.

Kookaburra III won her decisive race Tuesday even before it started. Peter Gilmour was forcing Australia's Colin Beashel into the path of the committee boat prior to the gun.

Beashel jibed away too late and gave Gilmour a killing 36-second starting margin. The rest of the race was a parade for Murray, Kookaburra III's other helmsman. He won by 55 seconds and set off a celebration back in port.

The lemon-colored Kookaburra sailed into the Royal Perth Yacht Club dock where Bond congratulated Parry as the crews exchanged sporting handshakes and champagne toasts.

"We won the Cup," Bond said. "Don't you lose it, Kevin."

Then Bond told the crowd: "If Kevin doesn't defend it, we'll go and get it back for you."

Referring to Bond's racing symbol, a kangaroo brandishing boxing gloves, Parry said: "I don't think the kangaroo belongs to you or the kookaburras (an Australian bird) to us." Instead, he added, both syndicates were racing in the interests of retaining the Cup for Australia.

Warren Jones, Bond's spokesman through five Cup campaigns, said of Kookaburra's victory: "It takes a tough syndicate to roll over us and Task Force (Kookaburra) rolled over us fair and square. We'll take it on the chin."

Spying Nothing Special In America's Cup Races

FREMANTLE, Australia (AP) — The sailors were in the sky. The big yellow bird was in the water.

In this Southern Hemisphere port, where it's day at the same time that it's night in the United States, the high-tech era of America's Cup yacht racing has spawned some strange activities.

Aerial surveillance of the enemy, for one.

While Kookaburra III, the yellow-hulled yacht named for an Australian bird, was sailing against Australia IV on Tuesday, two members of the Stars & Stripes team were spying from a helicopter.

"It's nothing very special. We do a fair amount of that," said John Marshall, coordinator for the American syndicate which is trying to regain possession of the Cup lost to Austrtalia in 1983.

The American boat, which ousted New Zealand on Monday in the finals of challenger series, will race for the Cup in a best-of-seven series starting Jan. 31. Marshall and tactician Tom Whidden took to the air to study Kookaburra III, the probable defender.

She beat Australia IV by 55 seconds Tuesday to sweep the best-of-nine defender finals 5-0. Unless Kookaburra II, eliminated earlier, appears better in speed trials, Kookaburra III will be the defender against the Americans. And the challengers want to find out as much as they can about her.

Until 1983, all 12-meter yachts were basically the same, Marshall said. In that year, Australia II showed up with a winged keel and won the Cup. This time, New Zealand featured a fiberglass hull, and it won 28 straight races at one point.

"The rate of change is greater," Marshall said. "People are willing to take bigger risks and make changes to make progress. The boat you might have been looking at a month ago is different than the one you're looking at now."

The sailors take to the skies to keep up with those changes.

"We have to assume we're also being watched," Marshall said. "New Zealand had a helicopter up every single day of the entire season. They own the helicopter. We rent ours."

Marshall said there's not much a crew can do about spies.

"It's pretty much part of doing business," he said. "The sky up there is pretty much anyone's who wants to use it within the limits of aviation safety."

Tuesday's mission, he admitted, wasn't especially fruitful. Kookaburra III took a huge 36-second lead at the start and sailed defensively the rest of the way.

"We got some ideas. We always do," Marshall said. "We got a look at Kookaburra's sail trim that you couldn't see from the ground.

"The fact that Australia IV lost the start made it not so interesting to us tactically," he added. "Additionally, today's (calm) weather conditions were unusual. ... Every day is valuable in some fashion or other and no single day is complete so I guess it was probably as good as any."

Will there be better days? Will the Stars & Stripes reconnaissance team be watching the two Kookaburras working against each other in the days leading to the final?

"We'll be around," Marshall said.

Lendl, Edberg Battle Way Into Semifinals

MELBOURNE, Australia (AP) — A confident Ivan Lendl and defending champion Stefan Edberg of Sweden blasted their way today into the semifinals of the $1.65 million Australian Open tennis championships at Kooyong.

Lendl, seeking his first Grand Slam title on grass, scored a crushing 7-6, 6-1, 6-3 triumph over ninth-seeded Anders Jarryd of Sweden, while Edberg, seeded fourth, completely outplayed No. 6 Miloslav Mecir of Czechoslovakia 6-1, 6-4, 6-4.

"I'm confident as I'm playing better than I was at the end of Wimbledon last year," said Lendl, who reached the final at the All-England Club before falling to West Germany's Boris Becker.

Australians Pat Cash and unseeded Wally Masur clinched the other semifinal spots, with the 11th-seeded Cash ousting No. 3 Yannick Noah of France 6-4, 6-2, 2-6, 6-0 with some impressive pressure tennis.

Cash now faces Lendl, who has won all four of their previous meetings, while Masur kept up his sensational run in the tournament by downing unseeded New Zealander Kelly Evernden 6-3, 7-5, 6-4.

Masur, 23 and ranked just 71st in the world, upset Becker in five sets in Tuesday's fourth round and will play Edberg. Masur held two match points against Edberg in the last Australian Open, in December 1985, before losing that match.

Both women's singles semifinals are scheduled for Thursday.

Defending champion Martina Navratilova of Fort Worth, Texas, faces Sweden's Catarina Lindqvist and Hana Mandlikova of Czechoslovakia meets West Germany's Claudia Kohde-Kilsch.

Cash, the 21-year-old hero of Australia's Davis Cup final victory over Sweden at Kooyong last month, was cheered on by a sellout center court crowd as he downed Noah, who is making his first serious assault at grass court tournaments.

The Australian kept the pressure on Noah at every opportunity, never allcwing the Frenchman to settle into a rhythm.

"I didn't serve well enough to be a threat to him," Noah admitted. "I was serving so badly it killed my confidence, while he was playing well."

Cash played down his chances of upsetting Lendl when they meet Friday.

"I'm playing the No. 1 player in the world," Cash said. "I can't be super-confident, but I'll be giving it all I've got."

The fiery Cash was given a warning for ball abuse in the first set, but otherwise kept his temper in check against Noah.

Lendl stretched his career record to seven wins in eight matches against Jarryd. And, after criticizing the scheduling, which has seen him play two matches on outside courts, said he was pleased with his form.

"I'm winning and not making too many errors," he said.

Edberg was the most impressive victor today, serving with tremendous power and precision against the tricky Mecir.

Dooley Named As Wake Coach

By TOM FOREMAN Jr.
AP Sports Writer

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — Former Virginia Tech coach Bill Dooley was named head football coach at Wake Forest today, the school's 10th football coach since it joined the Atlantic Coast Conference in 1953.

Dooley's new job will mark his second stint in the ACC. Dooley previously served at North Carolina, where he won conference titles in 1971, 1972 and 1977. He finished with an overall record of 69-53-2. His Tar Heel teams played in the Peach Bowl in 1970 and 1976, the Gator Bowl in 1971, the Sun Bowl in 1972 and 1974 and the Liberty Bowl in 1977.

In January 1978, Dooley accepted the dual position of head football coach and athletic director at Virginia Tech. His 63 victories at the Blacksburg, Va., school made him the winningest coach in the school's history. He closed his career at Virginia Tech with a 25-24 victory over North Carolina State in the Peach Bowl. Virginia Tech also was 20th in the final Associated Press college football poll for 1986.

Gene Hooks, Wake Forest's athletic director, declined Monday to reveal the identities of the primary candidates to replace Al Groh, who announced Friday he was leaving the program after he and Hooks were unable to agree on furture contractual terms.

Dooley, coach at North Carolina for 11 years, has spent the last nine seasons as Virginia Tech's head coach. He left on Jan. 1 in the aftermath of a contractual disagreement with the university's administration.

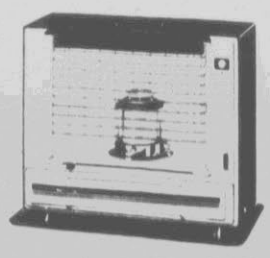

Dooley has won 131 games, lost 91 and has three ties during his 20-year coaching career. He is the brother of Georgia head coach Vince Dooley.

He ranks 11th among the nation's active football coaches in victories and is 17th among active coaches in winning percentage.

All Come To Praise Giant Defense

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — Like Marc Antony, everyone seems to have come to the Super Bowl to praise the New York Giants defense. After all, it has buried just about everyone this season.

Even the Denver Broncos, who will play the Giants in Sunday's Super Bowl, have nothing but nice things to say about New York's overpowering defense.

Still, there is this little matter of the Giant secondary, which supposedly is the vulnerable part of a unit that ranked second in the National Football League in total defense and first against the run.

"They say we're the weak link?" cornerback Elvis Patterson said with a look filled with doubt. "If we're the weak link, then go ahead and expose us. Nobody has done it yet.

"We will scratch and claw and kick and fight and do whatever it takes to win. This is the biggest game of our careers."

Patterson clearly recalls that Denver quarterback John Elway threw for 336 yards against New York on Nov. 23. He also remembers that the Giants won the game 19-16.

"Elway presents every problem in the world," Patterson said. "He can do it all. He can even throw the ball 50 yards in the air when he is laying down. He's very mobile or he can sit in the pocket and he is a very accurate passer.

"When he is rolling or scrambling, he causes a problem. Their guys can get behind you. But we didn't let it happen last time. Their receivers know that they will be hit when he gets out of protection because the rules let us. They are live game when he is scrambling and we will be hitting them."

New York's defensive record is built mainly on its sensational linebackers and strong front line, which applies extreme pressure on quarterbacks and shuts down rushing games. The Broncos don't run very well, anyway, which means Elway often will be testing Patterson, fellow cornerbacks Perry Williams and Mark Collins and safeties Kenny Hill and Herb Welch.

"We're confident in ourselves and in the guys surrounding us," Williams said. "We know if we are one step off of their receivers, we are in for a long day. When most quarterbacks start to scramble, the receivers cut off their routes and come back to help out. Denver's guys go deep. If we take a nap for even a second, they can hurt you."

Denver's Mark Jackson, a rookie from Purdue who has joined Steve Watson and Vance Johnson as Elway's favorite receivers, knows the Giants won't throw anything fancy at his team.

"They are a basic, hard-hitting, hustling defense and their defensive backs let you know you're going to be hit and they try to strip the ball," Jackson said. "I don't know if they have the talent of the Chiefs or Raiders in one-on-one coverage, but they spread it out so you can't pick on one person.

"I like our chances with a John Elway. He adds another dimension with his arm. All receivers have a scramble rule that they stay deep if they are on the side of the scramble, cut short or go across when they're on the other side.

"With John, if I see him scramble right and I'm left, I feel comfortable going deep because he can get it there."

While there are questions being raised about New York's defensive backs, the Broncos' secondary is one of the strengths of a quick defense which also is stingy against the run. New York's wide receivers aren't outstanding and quarterback Phil Simms isn't as explosive as Elway. But this is anything but a mismatch.

"They know how to get open," free safety Steve Foley said. "They're good even if they're not known. They have a great tight end who catches the ball, is strong and a great blocker in (Mark) Bavaro. Simms' strengths are on play-action because he is so good at looking off the receiver and he has a strong arm.

"We would like to be in a position where the passing game must win it, where they must rely on the pass, since they're not used to it."

Calcavecchia Is A Contender

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — In less than a year, Mark Calcavecchia has gone from caddy to contender.

"This is a lot more fun," he said before a practice round for the $600,000 Phoenix Open golf tournament.

Last year at this time, Calcavecchia, who had been stripped of his playing rights on the PGA Tour, was playing in some mini-tour events in the area. Since he was in the neighborhood, he took to hanging around the Phoenix Open press tent "just seeing what was going on," he said.

This year, he's been hanging around the lead in a couple of prestige-laden tournaments. He had a chance to win both and is a factor to be considered in this event, which gets underway Thursday.

It's been storybook stuff for the husky Calcavecchia.

After playing the tour without appreciable success for four full seasons, he lost his playing card at the end of the 1985 season.

He became a golfing nomad, looking for a game anywhere he could find one. He played the mini-tours and from time to time caddied on the PGA Tour for his friend, Ken Green.

One of those occasions was at the Honda Classic last spring. The following week, he won his way through the open qualifying round and got a spot in the Doral Open. He had a first-round 65 and went on to finish eighth, good for $13,000.

A little later, he got into the U.S. Open, matched the course record with another 65 and won $11,028.

Shortly after that, another strong finish at Hartford gave him another $13,300 and, more importantly, his playing rights.

Calcavecchia took full advantage of the reinstatement. He had top-10 finishes at Milwaukee and in the Bank of Boston Classic in September and then won the Southwest Classic at Abilene, Texas in October.

From $15,957 in 1985 earnings, he went to $155,012 in 1986.

Only two tournaments into the 1987 season, he's well on his way to surpassing that figure.

He finished third in both the Tournament of Champions and the Bob Hope Classic and has won $91,000. He leads the Tour in birdies, eagles and putting.

"I'm playing real well right now," Calcavecchia said. "I'm a streak player, but most everybody is. It's a game of streaks, and I'm on one. I'll just ride it as far as I can.

"It's fun to be playing well, and be up there around the lead. It's something you have to do. You can't win every time. But the more times you're up in contention, the more you're going to win.

"I've been there several times, and I've won once. I'm more comfortable up there now, kind of feel more like I know what I'm doing.

"The more you get close, the more you're going to win."

The two men who beat him in the Hope last week, winner Corey Pavin and runnerup Bernhard Langer of West Germany, also are among the 144 players who are chasing a $108,000 first prize on the new TPC course in suburban Scottsdale.

ECU Gospel Choir Is Ready For 1st Album

By CHERIE EVANS
Reflector Staff Writer

Coughs and sneezes, heard from several places in the paneled room with hard-wood floors, may have been a result of sweating and then cooling off in the winter air.

But, those affected by the winter "bug" did not seem concerned with the opened doors of the rectangular building though it was mid January.

It was hot.

Several people were fanning, and others could be heard clearing their throats above a hum of chatter.

These were stirrings of people in the Ledona S. Wright Building at East Carolina University who had met to work on a common goal — "Making Dreams a Reality."

"Pardon me, please!" said Karen Malone, the sergeant of arms in the group. People adjusted their chairs and straightened their backs, preparing to sing.

It was time to practice.

The ECU Gospel Choir was practicing to record its first album Saturday in Wright Auditorium at 6 p.m.

The album has a trifold purpose, said Shelia Wooten, president of the choir.

"First, choir members have had that dream even before us," she said, so it has been a challenge to make the album a reality.

"We want to reach people to let them see what they're supporting," Ms. Wooten said, defining the second purpose.

The third purpose is just "to show that students on a college university campus could actually do it," she said.

"We started planning in August to do the album," said Gregory Horton, director and trainer for the choir. He also wrote the eight songs to be featured on the album. The choir has to vote on a name for the album, he said.

The songs are written to project an atmosphere of unity and love, Horton said. "With songs, we encourage and let people know you're not alone in this world.

"We are not a religious organization but a student-functioning organization," he said, explaining that the almost 100 members in the choir stem from different religious backgrounds.

The album will cost about $5,000 to record and produce with Mega Sound Studios of Bailey, Horton said.

The university gave the choir $2,000 for the album, Ms. Wooten

TO THE BEAT — Members of the East Carolina University Gospel Choir often clap to the rhythm of the songs they sing, said director Gregory Horton, standing. Individuals in the choir also improvise on some songs, creating a natural mood in the music. (Reflector Photo by Cliff Hollis).

This Salesman Knows The Problem

By SUSAN OKULA
Associated Press Writer

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (AP) — When Joseph P. Genera makes a sales call, he and his customer usually come to more than a business understanding.

Genera has lost the use of his legs, and he is in the business of modifying vans and cars for the disabled. He started his company, Independence Van Inc., in September.

"As much as I hate being in a wheelchair, it gives me insight as to what (disabled) people go through and what people need," says the 29-year-old businessman.

In November 1982, a car being serviced in his father's North Branford garage fell off a lift and struck Genera, breaking his back.

In a recent interview, Genera said little more about his personal experiences as he talked about the company that he and his wife own.

About two years after his accident, he went to work for Trans Vans, a Danbury company that also modifies vans for the disabled. The only other similar firm in Connecticut then was Target Industries in East Windsor, and Genera felt another such company in New Haven would fill a geographical gap in the market.

Through personal financing and loans from a bank and the New Haven Community Investment Corp., Genera raised $60,000 and set up shop in a concrete 6,000-square-foot garage on New Haven's Columbus Avenue.

The company, with four full-time employees and one who works part time, has serviced or modified about 20 vans so far. The company alters vans and cars for disabled people who want to drive them or just ride in them. It also installs luxury items in vans for anyone.

Genera demonstrated some of the specialized equipment. A lift that gets the wheelchair-bound in and out of the vehicle can be activated magnetically. A special floor section in the driving area can be raised or lowered to give a driver in a wheelchair a good line of vision.

Other equipment includes hand or arm controls for the brake and accelerator, as well as modified steering systems. Controls are available for drivers who might not necessarily use a wheelchair but have a disability of an arm or leg.

Genera's company usually purchases the equipment from factories and then installs it in the car or van that the customer provides.

"The biggest thing that people need to know ... is what avenues are open to them," Genera said. "There are lots of people out there who can drive even though they don't."

Genera recently outfitted a van with a lift for a wheelchair-bound man from northern Connecticut.

"He hadn't been out of the house for seven years. His wife couldn't handle getting him and his chair in and out of a car anymore," Genera said. "He has a whole new sense of freedom ... It gave him back a sense of normalcy."

Genera said he advises potential customers to check first with the state Department of Motor Vehicles, which helps disabled people determine whether they can drive, provides driving lessons and licenses them.

But even if those requirements are met, the cost of a vehicle can be a stumbling block for a potential driver, Genera said. He said new van prces can climb well above $10,000,

The Zip And The Zap Are Returning

By NANCY MILLER
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — It was an overnight sensation 50 years ago — a thin, smallish magazine with cartoon drawings and men of steel. But the zowie and the zap somehow zoomed out of comic books and they became a business nightmare.

Today, comic books are booming once again, with contemporary stories about real people as well as the engaging innocence of the cartoon animals of the 1930s.

"It's reminiscent of the Golden Age period when comic books were really big," said Robert M. Overstreet, publisher of "The Comic Book Price Guide," the industry bible. "We have new publishers coming into the market every week now and about 300 different new titles every month."

The value of old comic books also is steadily rising, averaging 20 percent a year, he said.

Some books appreciate even more dramatically. In August, a mint condition DC's Action Comics No. 1, the 1938 premier Superman issue, sold for $30,000 at the comic book convention in San Diego. Earlier in the year, it had been valued at $18,500.

But what's hot this year may not be hot next year. "It's like the stock market. It's real volatile and prices can jump up and down," Overstreet said.

For publishers of new comic books, the news is equally upbeat, says Steve Geppi, owner and president of Geppi's Comics World, a national distributor.

The reason for their new strength in the $120 million-a-year industry can partly be found in the comic book specialty store and a new distribution system which enables publishers to sell their books to retailers on a non-returnable basis.

News carriers and supermarket owners, the original comic book distributors, don't understand the high return comic books offer, Geppi said. Comic books have bigger sales per square foot than the costlier adult magazines because people tend to buy more than one comic book at a time.

"It's the existence of the comic book shop that saved the comic book market. It opened a new avenue," Overstreet said.

Nostalgia is another element in the comic book renaissance.

"Baby boomers have finally reached a point in life where they can have nostalgia and also share that experience with their kids," said Michael Usland, producer of "Swamp Thing," and an upcoming Batman movie.

Adults also collect them for their value as an art form and introduce the books to their children, who enjoy them for different reasons.

"On a psychological level, it's all about power, taking off those glasses," Usland said. "Suddenly, you're no longer a weakling or a kid who has to do everything your parents tell you to.

"I actually learned to read when I was 3 years old from comic books. ... Unlike other parents, they let me read them. They didn't believe they were a communist plot." Usland was referring to the parental concern during the 1950s McCarthy Era that led to the creation of a self-censoring comic book board. It marked the beginning of a serious decline in the industry, which had been launched in 1933.

But according to child psychologist Jonathan Kellerman, comics can be good for youngsters. "For kids who don't like to read, comics provides a good entree. It is hard to know what will stimulate a child's creativity," he said.

According to "The Comic Book Buyers Guide," the first comic book was issued by Eastern Color Printing Company as a premium for Procter

Carolina Events

Student Recitals Scheduled

Recitals by two students in the school of music at East Carolina University have been scheduled for Thursday and Friday in the A.J. Fletcher Recital Hall on the ECU campus. Admission is free and the events are open to the public.

•At 7 p.m. Thursday, Neville E. Curtis of Elon College, a student of Harold A. Jones, will present his senior recital in percussion, assisted by percussionists Steve Amowitz, Dan Davis, Chris Holliday and Chris Moore.

For his program, Curtis has listed four compositions: "Images" by William Kraft; "Three Technical Sketches for Marimba" by Bob Margolis; "Three Pieces for the Winter Solstice" by John Bergamo, and "Back Talk" by Harry Brever.

•Joseph Glen Buck of Winterville, a student of James A. Searl, will present his junior trumpet recital at 7 p.m. Friday, assisted by Alisa Weatherington, piano; Anthony Jackson, tenor; Mark Ganso, organ, and Katherine Jetter, cello.

Buck has chosen four compositions for his recital: "Sound The Trumpet" by Henry Purcell; "Suite for Trumpet" by Alec Wilder; "Caprice" by Eugene Bozza, and "Der Mystiche Trompeter" by Friedrich Wildgans.

Opera Set In Kinston

KINSTON — Opera Carolina, the Southeast's largest musical theater touring company, will present "School for Lovers," an English adaptation of Mozart's opera, at 8:15 p.m. Monday at the Kinston Airport Theater.

The performance is the second of five events in the Community Council for the Arts' 1986-87 season.

"School for Lovers," the English version of Mozart's comic opera, "Cosi Fan Tutte," is set in the South following the Civil War. Two young men make a wager about their sweethearts' faithfulness with an old friend that the girls would remain faithful even if they return home as carpetbaggers. From there the situation becomes comically confusing and complex.

In the Kinston production, the roles of Freddy and William will be played, respectively by Steve Hamilton and Gregg Lauterbach. Their lady loves, Lily and Dorabella, will feature Beth Schwartz and Karen Nestvold. Alfonso, the buddy, will be played by Sam Stevenson.

For ticket information call the arts council at 527-2517. Tickets will also be available at the door prior to curtain time.

PBS Radio To Carry BBC

NEW BERN — Beginning in February, WTEB-FM will carry BBC news programs three times per day with a 10-minute newscast at each top of the hour. WTEB will broadcast the BBC news at 10 a.m., 3 p.m. and 10 p.m.

The BBC news is being underwritten by Burroughs-Wellcome through a $3,000 grant to the public radio station which serves 17 counties in eastern North Carolina.

WTEB also broadcasts news on "Morning Edition" for two hours from 6 a.m. until 8 a.m. and "All Things Considered" in the afternoon.

Comics Collector Makes Childhood Hobby Pay

By DEBBIE NEWBY
Associated Press Writer

DENVER (AP) — Chuck Rozanski began reading comic books when he was 5 years old. By his 12th birthday he was collecting his favorites. Seven years later, he opened his first shop in the back of a basement science fiction bookstore.

Rozanski quickly moved from the basement to the big time. He now owns Mile High Comics, a mail-order business which he advertises as "America's Largest Comics Dealer."

At any one time, he stores 3 million collector comics. His business generates annual sales of $4 million, counting a distribution firm run by his wife and the five stores he started.

Success has come as no surprise to the 31-year-old Rozanski, who still loves Disney comics best. In fact, his role model is Uncle Scrooge, Donald Duck's uncle who owned 2 cubic acres of money.

"I've given my whole life to comics, and I always knew I would make it," Rozanski said. "I've always been able to survive my mistakes. I've known people who were much smarter, but for some reason they couldn't turn that into anything. You've got to have the capacity to capitalize on luck and the capacity to survive bad luck."

Born in Bavaria, Rozanski was adopted when he was 4 years old by an American soldier who married his mother. He entered the business world at age 6, going from door to door in Michigan offering to shovel snow for neighbors. He also sold pop bottles and fruit.

"I still have some of the coins I made when I was 6," he said. "I've always been big on savings and big on investment. I was in elementary school when I put together my first financial portfolio."

At 14, Rozanski realized his friends were willing to pay top prices for certain old comics, and he began selling them.

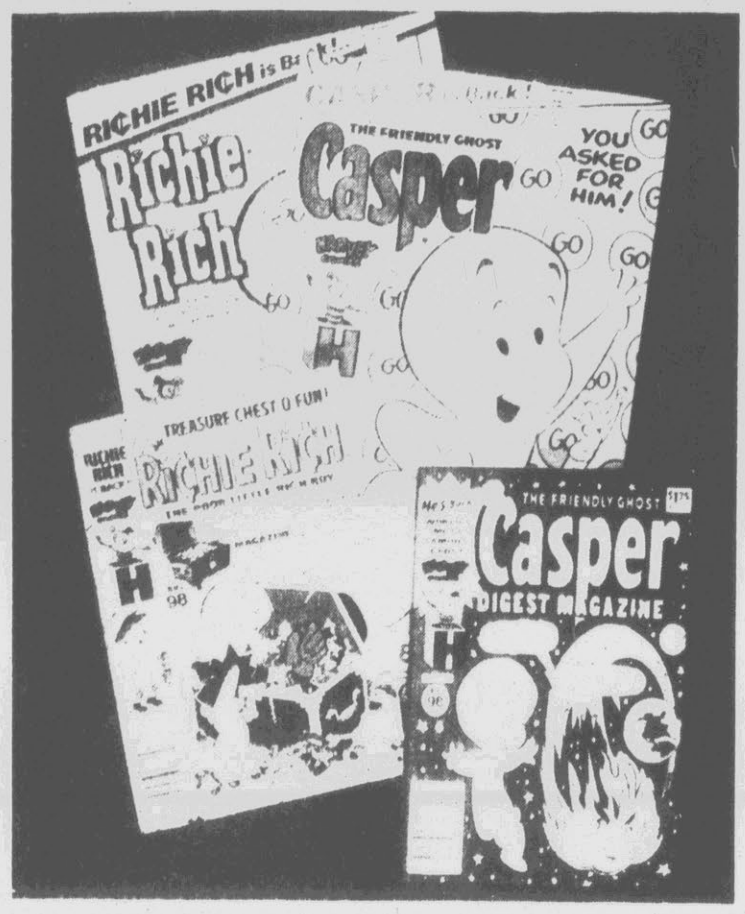

By the time he entered junior high school, his father had retired and moved the family to Colorado Springs, where Rozanski sold comics at flea markets. At 17, he attended his first comics convention.

"Before I opened my first store, I spent the summer living in my mother's car and driving from comic convention to convention," Rozanski said. "I'd use the money I made at one convention to get a money order and send it on to the next convention to rent booth space. I'd sleep on someone's floor or on a picnic bench or in the car."

By summer's end, Rozanski had accumulated $800, which he used to open his first shop in Boulder in September 1974.

Rozanski studied finance at the University of Colorado but dropped out in his senior year when he realized he was making more money than his professors.

Ask a classic bookseller about the money he's made, and he might quote Tolstoy. Ask Rozanski, and he quotes Uncle Scrooge: "I made it by being tougher than the toughies and smarter than the smarties, and I made it SQUARE!"

HARVEY COMICS — Harvey Publications Inc., publisher of "Richie Rich," "Casper" and other comic classics, has gone back to the presses after a four-year hiatus. The company is printing half a million books per month, half what it published in 1982. (AP Laserphoto)

New Cajun Hero 'Crawfish-Man'

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Look! Out in the swamp! It's a fish! It's a boat! It's Crawfish-Man!

Out of the way Superman. Enter Louisiana's caped crustacean, a Super Hereaux who can stop speeding bullets with his steely shell and leap tall cypress trees at a single bound.

Inspired by the swamps and bayous of his native Louisiana, author and illustrator Tim Edler has created a Cajun comic book hero that youngsters here can call their own.

"In 1979, I was watching the Incredible Hulk on TV and I said to myself, 'Why don't we have a super hero in Louisiana?' I just sat down at a table and drew Crawfish-Man," the 38-year-old cartoonist said.

From a pile of Spanish moss, Crawfish-Man leaped into print with giant claws to snare Dark Gator, and a powerful tail to speed across dank swamps to Cypress Castle, home of the big fat Swamp Witch.

Edler's books, at least 15 now in the series, catch the magical lilt of Cajun French, which has been passed down over two centuries.

He spins his yarns and distributes the books by mail order. For publicity, he shrouds himself in mystery, refusing photographs except when he's in costume as Crawfish-Man.

Edler has financed and published approximately 100,000 copies of his books and tries to break even. He sells insurance and helps his wife in the jewelry business on the side.

Here is a sample from Crawfish-Man's Christmas tale:

"Santa Clause has been captured by Dark Gator an' his pals. Dey tryin' to stop Christmas. All duh' children of Cajunland are dependin' on us fuh a happy Christmas," says one of the characters.

"We muss' all join togetha' an' attack Cypress Castle an' save Santa," Crawfish-Man says.

The plot unfolds. Crawfish-Man and all the animals march on Cypress Castle and battle the Po-Chems, nasty winged alligators that do the bidding of the wicked witch. But the witch's army is outnumbered and no match for the entire swamp. Saint Nick is out in a jiffy.

Comic Books Are Staging A Comeback

and Gamble Co. Although it contained no new comics — only Sunday cartoon strip reprints — the 10,000 copies of "Funnies on Parade" were a big hit.

In 1934, the first 10 cent comic book, Famous Funnies, Series 1, was sold in chain stores. Others followed, including Superman, Batman, Casper, Archie and Porky Pig. The first comic book convention was held in 1964 coinciding with a renewed popularity among college students.

Today, the industry issues detective, superhero, horror, romance, political, science fiction and many other types of comic books.

About 130 million comic books are sold annually, according to Maggie Thompson, co-editor of Comics Buyer Guide. They range in price from 75 cents to $2 and from $4.95 to $14.95 for comic book novels.

Comic book manufacturers are refining, experimenting and honing their skills and artwork.

At DC, Batman and Superman have been revamped. The "Dark Knight" series looks at Batman as "dark, realistic, violent," says Peggy May, DC's publicity manager. Superman has become more vulnerable, she said.

To celebrate its 25th anniversary last year, Marvel introduced "New Universe" titles, featuring "characters who exist in the real world, age in actual time and affect the lives of others."

In the past two years, black and white comic books have grabbed 8 percent to 9 percent of the business, says Rick Obadiah, president and publisher of First Comics, Inc., in Chicago.

"There were (almost) no black and white comics from about 1975 on," he said.

Then "Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles" hit the specialty stores two years ago. The Ninja spoof debuted with 3,000 issues at $1.75 a shot. Those early issues now fetch $75. In November, Obadiah's company reprinted those early editions as a $9.95 color graphic novel.

But the boom period for comic books won't last forever, many in the industry say.

"With the flood of product that is entering the market today . .. we are going to see a settling out," Overstreet said. "Some of the publishers will make it and some won't. I think comic fandom will become jaded, tired of all the black and white comic books coming out."

But for now, those in the industry agree: It's up, up and away.

said. "And we fund raised to get the other support."

After the recording Saturday, it will take about a month before the album will be distributed, she said. There will be 1,500 albums in the first bulk to be sold at $8 each by choir members.

The choir, organized in 1976 at ECU, was listed in the top seven choirs competing during the 1986 Carolina Gospelfest, sponsored by McDonald's, Ms. Wooten said.

The choir won second place in the 1985 contest and is now using the prize, a public address system, to record the album. The choir also is accompanied by a synthesizer, lead guitar, bass guitar, drums and piano.

Singer Robert Cray Shows Surge As Black Bluesman

By JIM KELTON
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

Already 1987 looks like it is going to be Robert Cray's year.

With two classy albums behind him and a third ("Strong Persuader") generating extraordinary interest, Cray is in a position to become one of the most popular young black bluesman in the world.

He has never sounded better, and he has the international promotion and distribution of the Polygram organization on his new album. Interest in the blues also seems to be on the rise.

Still, Cray's case is unique — more unusual than most people imagine.

He is, to begin with, one of the few young black bluesmen working anywhere. The blues have largely been given over in the past two decades to veteran black musicians or to their young white followers. Most of the leading blues stars, with the exception of B.B. King and Albert King, have died off, leaving a lot of empty shoes that have not been filled. Lost are such giants of the art as Muddy Waters, Howlin' Wolf, Magic Sam, Freddie King and Lightnin' Hopkins.

Second, when Cray got his start in the mid-1970s, the blues were in a state of steep decline. Their value to the rock audience had been amply demonstrated and they were perhaps falling out of fashion.

In any case, along came Cray, and he hung on through mostly tough times until the end of the decade. He landed a recording contract at that point with the Tomato label and made an album that was released sparingly.

Next, Tomato rather abruptly went out of business. As a result, most of the company's performers went unpaid and Tomato records (which were no longer in production) quickly became collectors' items.

Cray had to wait until the mid-'80s before a similar opportunity arrived. At that time he signed with Hightone, a small California label. His first two LPs for that outfit, "False Accusations" and "Bad Influence," were regular smashes in blues terms and modest though noteworthy pop breakthroughs.

Neither of those records captured Cray's raw, in-person energy, though.

What the first two Hightone albums proved, on the other hand, was that he was a solid studio craftsman with a good head for writing original tunes. His arrangements were tight, and his songs were varied, strangely enthralling and slightly eerie.

With "Strange Persuader," the live Cray and the studio Cray met in a manner that added up to nothing more or less than a low-keyed blockbuster.

Cray sounded as though he were holding back a hurricane.

And by achieving that, by paring down his style to its minimum and then rebuilding it not in imitation of his blues mentors but in his style's own best interest, he created an original voice, one that was entirely his own.

And that is the most important thing that a bluesman must do if he is ever to gain the respect of his peers. Otherwise, he is forever (as many are) referred to as "B.B. Jr." or "Little Wolf."

No, the element of originality is everything in the blues, and the delightful thing in Cray's case is that it has brought him fame and (hopefully) some degree of fortune.

It most certainly has established him as the foremost young bluesman of his day and as his musical form's greatest hope.

A Movie Review

'Wanted' Is Dead On Arrival

By MICHAEL HEALY
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

"Wanted: Dead or Alive" is a bit of despicable nonsense ripped off from the old Wild West TV show that starred Steve McQueen. The only connection between the movie and the TV series is some absolutely hideous harmonica playing on the sound track that is supposed to give the present-day setting in Los Angeles an old-timey feel. It does not.

Bounty hunter Nick Randall (Rutger Hauer) is supposed to be the grandson of Josh Randall, another bounty hunter, as if hunting down wanted men for a reward were some kind of genetically inherited gift. Nick does not like his work any more than he liked working for the CIA. He wants to refinish his boat, the H.M.S. Bounty (get it?) and sail off with his new-found love, Terry (Mel Harris), who is not only a stewardess but also a Ph.D. candidate in anthropology. This is not enough to make her interesting, but Randall does not mind. She gives him an antique harmonica, which he plays even worse than the guy on the sound track.

Meanwhile, an Arab terrorist has snuck into America and blown up a movie house where "Rambo" is playing. Perhaps Malak Al Rahim (Gene Simmons) has a background in film criticism. At any rate, we are supposed to think of this as a dastardly crime, which brings Malak to the attention of the CIA, and Randall's old Company buddy Phil Walker (Robert Guillaume) talks him into taking on the Malak case. If he can capture the terrorist in a week, he will be paid $250,000. If captured alive, Malak is worth another $50,000. Nice work if you can get it.

The problem is that Malak and Randall are old enemies, and the CIA is using our boy as bait to bring the terrorist out in the open. The CIA has contacts in the Arab community who inform Malak of Randall's every move.

This is one of those deeply stupid and racist movies that sees every owner of a falafel stand as a potential mass murderer. If any other ethnic or religious group were subjected to the kind of mindless hatred this movie directs at the Arabs, people would scream. But hating Arabs en masse is treated as just good clean shoot-em-up fun in "Wanted: Dead or Alive."

The committee that wrote this sucker tried desperately to come up with some kind of plot to keep Hauer blasting away at the "rag heads" (can you believe it?) for as long as possible, torturing and killing and being righteously brutal. What the geniuses came up with is the attempt to cause a Bhopal-style industrial accident, which fizzles out rather than coming to a conclusion. No matter.

Handsome Hauer totes many handsome weapons and gives line readings that are so strange and wimpery that he might easily be mistaken for a Martian. Hauer was most impressive as the man-made replicant in "Blade Runner," but he seems to have skipped his last few 50,000 mile check-ups. Get thee back to the factory for a tune up, Rut.

The action sequences, the only reason for this film's existence, are ineptly staged and shot, and they are separated by long stretches of wasted film in which nothing happens. Actually, the whole film is just a shaggy dog story that builds up to one sadistic punch line, the utter destruction of the villain, that will appeal to the beast in us all.

There is no earthly reason to see this film.

Married

NEW YORK (AP) — Singer-composer Steve Winwood will divide his time between England and Tennessee now that he's married to a Nashville native, Warner Bros. Records says.

Winwood, from Birmingham, England, married Eugenia Crafton last weekend at the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church during a private ceremony, the record company said in a statement.

Winwood was recently nominated for five Grammys, including best pop vocalist and producer of the year, for his album "Back in the High Life."

His wife is a recent graduate of Nashville's Belmont College.

Minnie's TV

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Grand Ole Opry comedian Minnie Pearl says she's taken to watching cable television and isn't always thrilled by what she sees, especially when she's watching herself.

"It has what you might call, extended my TV world," said the 74-year-old star, whose real name is Sarah Cannon and is known for her flowered hat with its dangling price tag.

"It has been extremely embarrassing for me to watch myself. 'Why did I do or say that?' I ask myself again and again. My appearance bugs me, too," she said. "I keep hoping to look different on a live concert stage in costume, with the help of makeup professionals and soft lighting. But I've come to the conclusion I look the same silly way no matter how experienced the lighting technicians are."

Airline Lost-Found Has Everything From Key To Teeth

By SHARON DIRLAM
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

After a flight from Paris to New York, and a layover at John F. Kennedy Airport, and halfway through the five-hour flight from New York to Los Angeles, a traveler's new dentures were giving him a big pain. He groggily took out the partial plate and slipped it into the seat pocket in front of him. Then he could nap more comfortably.

His wife picked him up at the airport and drove him home. In the car, Pierre Venant remembered that he had left his dentures in the seat pocket.

It was late when Venant called American Airlines and reported the loss. He was told that they would phone him in the morning if the teeth were found.

Nobody phoned, so he called the next day. This time he was told that the plane he was on had gone on to Dallas and had not been cleaned during its stop in Los Angeles, and that furthermore from Dallas it went on to Honolulu. In any case, his teeth didn't show up in any of those destinations.

Next, Venant decided to confront someone at American Airlines in person at Los Angeles International Airport. This time he was told that there was no way to trace the missing dentures.

After three weeks and several more phone calls, Venant decided to file a claim against American Airlines for $5,000 to pay for a new partial plate. The claim was denied.

Airlines report that they generally don't take the blame for items lost by the traveler. Their main concern is the luggage that is tagged and transported by the airline.

The loss of carry-on items are treated as "an inconvenience for the person that we do try to deal with," said Larry Gottardi, spokesman for American Airlines. "If they leave behind something worth less than $10, even, we'll keep it around for 15 days. Something expensive, cameras or jewelry, for instance, we'll keep for 60 days. Cash, we'll keep for six months."

"Basically, if an item is not tendered to us, we don't take responsibility for it," explained Jerry Trop, manager of consumer affairs for United Airlines.

The story of the missing dentures didn't surprise Trop. "We get two or three a month," he said. "And recently someone left behind an artificial leg. If people call us and identify their item, we'll return it."

Other things that passengers have left behind on airplanes include wheelchairs, movie scripts, briefcases, cameras, jewelry, coats, car keys, eyeglasses, film, even money.

"We may have 40 or 50 London Fog topcoats," Trop said, "but usually there's no way to match them with a caller. The same with prescription eyeglasses. How do you know whose they are?"

Generally, each airline has its own method of dealing with lost and found, and airports have their own system as well. There's not necessarily much coordination between the two, and there's really no standard procedure.

"If something is lost in an airport's main terminal, we encourage the finder to turn it in to the local airport authority," Trop said. "But if it's left at the gate, then we'll take custody of it."

Lost and found, according to Trop, is dealt with as "a service to the customer, but at the bottom line it's really not a high priority."

Yet, as James A. Arey, spokesman for Pan American World Airways, noted, "The transportation industry has a pretty good record on getting lost items back to people. Your chances of getting something back are certainly better than things that you lose in a department store or a sports stadium or even city hall."

The best advice is to hang on to your belongings. And the next best advice is to label the things you might lose so that you can identify them if someone turns them in.

Tear-gas canisters, knives, scissors and plastic guns that security personnel confiscate from boarding passengers also make their way to lost and found.

Cleanup crews around the airport report finding such stuff in the trash cans as dynamite, batteries, weapons and illegal drugs, often dumped just outside a security checkpoint.

Drugs are not infrequently left aboard planes, too, noted Arey, spokesman for Pan Am. "Probably by people who planned to smuggle them in to the U.S., and decided it was too risky. People do get cold feet. Or they'll find out halfway across the ocean that they're not allowed to bring in that salami or those fresh flowers, so they leave them on the plane."

Pan Am has its own lost and found at each terminal, but like the other airlines it only wants to handle items left in its own areas. "If a passenger has been in and out of our area and doesn't know where the item was lost, that does compound the problem," he said.

While other airlines keep lost and found items at the individual airports, United ships unclaimed articles to a central warehouse at O'Hare International Airport in Chicago after three days.

"We try to find the owner," Trop said. "But it is time-consuming and we can only do so much, particularly with things that aren't labeled with the owner's name." Only a small percentage of the property is ever claimed, he said.

Of 50 cartons of materials that come in to the Chicago clearinghouse, maybe 50 to 70 items a week, or 8 percent to 10 percent, find their way back to their owner, Trop estimated. They're kept for 90 days and then given to charity.

American Airlines is still waiting for someone to call in and prove they lost a pair of moose antlers or a complete set of sails for a 12-meter racing yacht. They also have a harpooner's pulpit and an artificial leg.

United Airlines has a book of baby pictures dated 1955, a play book for a football team, and a script for the ABC soap opera, "Ryan's Hope."

Author Picks 'Best' Retirement Locations

WASHINGTON (AP) — Would you retire to New Jersey? Or Oklahoma? Or Wisconsin?

Not all of the best retirement havens are in the Sun Belt, which has attracted so many elderly Americans, reports the author of a new book on the subject.

Peter A. Dickinson, who wrote "Sunbelt Retirement" a few years ago, has now addressed the rest of the nation — and finds plenty more places to settle down in the golden years.

Comedians may make light of New Jersey, for example, but Dickinson says that "if you avoid the ugly cities and seek the lovely countryside and seashore, you'll know why this is called the 'Garden State.'"

The Jersey shore rates "excellent" in his new book, "Retirement Edens: Outside the Sunbelt." He cites the beautiful shore and countryside and closeness to the attractions of major cities.

Turning attention westward, Oklahoma "is more than just OK," says Dickinson. "It's on its way to becoming a new retirement mecca as more people discover it as a great place to visit and a better place to stay."

Both Muskogee and Miami, Okla., rate excellent in his listing. He cites the variable climate, low-cost health care and housing and a low cost of living in general, as well as lots of recreation and services for seniors.

Wisconsin's sometimes stern winters don't dissuade Dickinson, who gives his top retirement recommendation to both Green Bay and Madison.

The Great Lakes help moderate the climate, he points out, while medical care facilities are excellent, there is a wide choice of recreational opportunities and plenty of specialized services for seniors. One note of caution though — "taxes are tough," he comments.

States where Dickinson found communities he considers "excellent" choices for retirement were Colorado, Connecticut, Illinois, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Missouri, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, northern California, Oklahoma, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Tennessee, Utah, Vermont, Virginia, Washington and Wisconsin.

What makes a retirement "eden?"

Dickinson observes that no one place is right for everyone — if it were, everyone would go there.

So he assesses the features of the 37 states he considers to be outside the Sun Belt.

Not all of them rate good or excellent as retirement places, and he bases his choices on a variety of criteria including climate, cost of living, housing variety and cost, medical facilities, recreational and cultural activities and special services for senior citizes.

Climate likely has been a major factor in the movement to Sun Belt states in recent years, as many elderly persons sought to avoid extreme winters by heading South and West.

Yet not everyone wants a warm even climate, and even the perpetual moderation of San Francisco may not suit people accustomed to the challenge of four seasons. Millions remain retired in Northern states, enjoying their weather for the most part.

Have A Tadpole

Some American companies have learned that it can be treacherous to translate some brand names and slogans into certain foreign languages. In Chinese, the word "Coca-Cola" means "Bite the wax tadpole." Coke has adopted a new name, which translates as "May the mouth rejoice." Pepsi has also had its troubles in Asia. In Thailand, the slogan "Come alive, you're in the Pepsi generation" means "Pepsi brings your ancestors back from the dead."

DO YOU KNOW — What is the official language of Canada?

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
2 ♣	Pass	2 ◇	Pass
3 NT	Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Ten of ♡

When planning your play, take into account that your opponents are likely to come up with the most effective defense. Then see if you can put that fact to good use.

South's opening bid was artificial and forcing, and his rebid showed a balanced hand of 25-27 points. North was delighted to pass.

West's lead of the top of his sequence is better than a spade away from the queen, which might cost a trick. Declarer could count eight fast tricks and, although he could set up a ninth trick in diamonds, it was odds-against his ever being able to use it—as long as the defender with the ace in the suit had it guarded at least twice, a holdup play would thwart use of the extra trick.

However, the fact that the opponents would have to hold up the ace for one round meant that declarer could force an entry to dummy in diamonds. He could use that to cash a long spade if that suit split evenly. But declarer saw that playing on clubs offered a much better chance for the game-going trick.

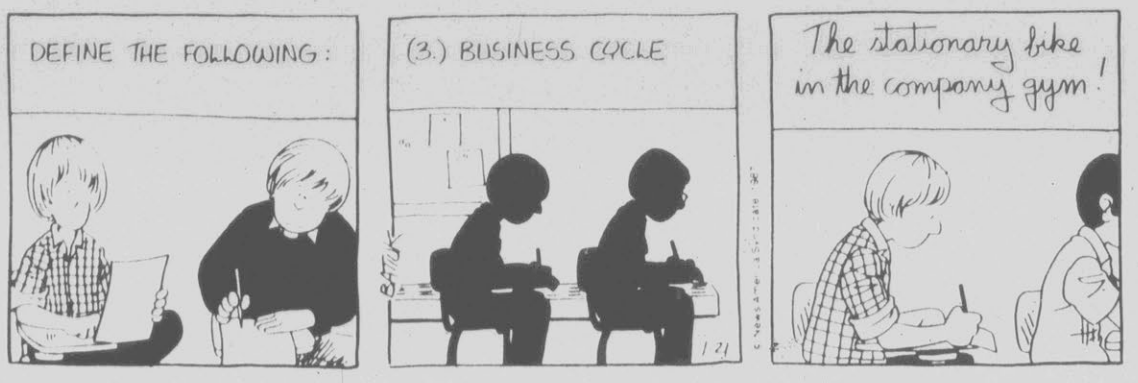

After winning the opening lead, declarer immediately ducked a club. West's nine won and he did as well as he could by continuing with a heart, declarer continued with the ace of clubs and then overtook the jack of diamonds with the table's queen. East could not afford to win that trick, so declarer used his entry to dummy to lead a club toward the jack. The defenders had no recourse.

Observe that declarer's line would succeed not only as the cards lie, but also if clubs were 3-3 or if either defender held a doubleton K-Q. Or if the ace of diamonds were singleton or doubleton.

Jack And Jill

By Janelle Moore

Two children,
I'd say only five years of life to each,
are playing in the sandbox.
A sandcastle,
Almost finished is now given another tower made from a cup.
What a pretty blue pail,
Jack has found,
That Jill now wants.
What a big four-letter vocabulary,
That Jill has learned,
In only five years of life.
How proud her parents must be.
Now a cup,
filled with sand,
Is dumped over Jill's head.
Now that pretty blue pail, filled with a present left by a dog,
Is dumped over Jack's head.
And now,
two extremely intelligent children of five,
have turned on the
waterhose.
And now,
both are drenched.
And here comes mom.

Janelle Moore, 14, a student at J.H. Rose High School wins this week's writing contest.

I'm Frosty the snowman. I like boys and girls. Look at my earmuffs. Aren't they pretty? I don't like the sun! It makes me melt. I come in winter. I have a hat. Don't you like me? I like winter!

Being A Working Woman Is Rewarding But Tiring

By Marc Swanner

I am tired and I want to give up. I have been standing here for 99 long years. What reward do I get? None! People don't seem to like me anymore.

I have been standing on this pedestal for 99 long years, proudly shining,"The American Promise"... the hope for a better life in a new land. I have given all I can, and asked for nothing in return.

They came, I welcomed them, and they went on to live their lives with a new freedom. From the day they first set foot on Ellis Island, they were given the chance to make all their dreams come true ... they were given EVERYTHING.

The water is starting to splash up on my banks. The water is blue and warm. I would love to go for a swim, but I can't. I can only look at other people go swimming.

As I look at New York and the other states, I see many people whom I have welcomed. Hey! Could it be? Yes, it is David.

I remember when David's family first came to Ellis Island. They came with very little money and a few prized possesions. His father was only 22 years old. He was a man of tall stature, about six foot. David's mother was a beautiful woman. She had long blonde hair that looked like gold. David was their only child, the son that both parents were very proud of.

David's father became a farmer. He grew corn and wheat and raised cows. The farm did very well for several years, but then things began to change. Four years of failing crops put David's father in deep debt. So, being a very proud man, it was hard for David's father to admit he needed help. It took a lot for his father to go to the bank and request a loan to save his farm.He told the banker he needed money to feed his cows and pay his workers, the few he had managed to keep. So when the banker told Mr. Roberts, David's father, that he couldn't give him the loan, he left the bank very discouraged.

So, that night not knowing which way to turn, Mr. Roberts decided the only thing he could do was rob a bank.

It was about 1:35 a.m. Everybody was asleep. The wind was blowing slow and the air was cool. Even the cats and dogs were asleep. The wind knocked over a trash can. It made David's father think someone was watching him. Little did he know, I was watching him. I had to stop him. I climbed down off my pedestal and went over to him.

Mr Roberts could not believe his eyes. He said,"Is it you? Is it Ms. Liberty?" I said, "Yes. But do you know what you are doing? You cannot rob the bank. It is not the right thing to do. You could be put in jail, and then what would become of your family?" Mr. Roberts said,"But what do I do? If I do not get more money, I will lose my farm." I said,"You need to go to other banks." He said,"But I thought if one bank wouldn't lend me money, then none of the other banks would either." I said, " Just because one bank does not have the money, it does not mean that another bank would not give you the money.It could have been that the other banks did not have the money to lend you. Do not give up hope. You can make your farm work. If you were to be put in jail, then your farm and family would suffer."

The next day he went to a new bank and got the sum of $5,600.00. That is what makes America great. It's the land of promise, where dreams come true.

That is my reward. To see people come from everywhere with nothing but dreams and the promise that their dreams come true. Yes, that's the reason I must continue to hold my torch high for all to see. It is a symbol for their hope for the future. A great future.

Marc Swanner, 15, a student at D.H. Conley School receives special mention.

COWBOY CHILI — Cowboy chili may satisfy a hearty appetite with the half-inch cubes of boneless chuck used in the dish along with the traditional chili herbs and spices. It is among other chili recipes listed on this page. (Reflector Photo by Cliff Hollis).

Easy-To-Make Chili 'Perfect' For Hard Day

After a long, hard day at work, a spicy bowl of chili may be the perfect meal for someone who doesn't want to spend hours over the stove. Just chop the ingredients, mix them together and let it simmer until dinner time. Try the variety of chili recipes listed below.

COWBOY CHILI

1 pound dried pinto beans
48 ounces canned pint beans
3 cups chopped onion
1/2 cup plus 4 tablespoons chili powder
16 cloves garlic, minced
1/4 cup vegetable oil
3 pounds boneless chuck, cut into 1/2-inch cubes
Shredded cheddar cheese

Sort and wash beans; place in Dutch oven. Cover with water 2 inches above beans; cover and let soak overnight. Drain beans; cover with water. Add 3/4 cup chopped onion, 1/4 cup plus 2 tablespoons chili powder and 8 cloves garlic

Cover and simmer 1 hour or until tender, adding more water if necessary. Heat oil in large Dutch oven. Add beef, 1 1/2 cup chopped onion, green pepper and 8 cloves of garlic. Cook over medium heat until beef is browned.

Add beans and 1/4 cup plus 2 tablespoons chili powder; cover and simmer 1 hour. Serve and sprinkle with extra onion and cheese.

Yield: 2 1/2 quarts.

VENISON CHILI

1/2 pound salt pork, cut into 4 pieces
2 pounds venison, coarsely ground
2 medium onions, chopped
16 ounces canned tomatoes, undrained
1 cup water
3/4 cup red wine
2-3 large green chiles, diced
1 clove garlic, minced
3 tablespoons chili powder
3/4 teaspoons oregano
1/2 teaspoon cumin seeds, crushed

Cook salt pork in Dutch oven over medium heat until brown. Add venison and onion; cook, stirring frequently, until meat is browned. Stir in remaining ingredients. Reduce heat and simmer uncovered 1 hour; stir occasionally. Remove salt pork before serving. Yield: 2 quarts.

CHILI CON CARNE

4 tablespoons butter
2 tablespoons salad oil
2 large onions, finely chopped
2 cloves garlic, minced
2 pounds ground beef
2 or 3 tablespoons chili powder
1 1/2 cups beef broth
4 to 5 fresh tomatoes, peeled and coarsely chopped (or 3 cups canned tomatoes)
2 15-ounce cans kidney beans, drained
1 teaspoon celery seed
1 1/2 teaspoons cumin seed
1 good pinch of oregano
1 good pinch of cayenne pepper
Salt to taste

Heat butter and salad oil in a large, heavy pan. Add the onions and garlic, and cook over moderate heat until onions are soft, but not brown. Add beef and continue to cook until meat lost its color. Stir in the chili powder (more, if you like it hot), tomatoes, beef broth, kidney beans and all the seasonings. Continue cooking over very low heat for 1 1/2 to 2 hours. Stir occassionally. If moisture dries out, add more broth. Chili con Carne should be wet, but not soupy. Taste for seasoning. Serve with tortillas, which should be browned on a hot griddle on both sides. Serves 8.

QUICK CHILI

1 tablespoon shortening
1/2 cup chopped onions
1 pound ground beef
1 green pepper, chopped
1 10 1/2-ounce can tomato soup
1 teaspoon salt
4 teaspoons (or more) chili powder
1/8 teaspoon pepper
Dash ground red pepper
1 or 2 16-ounce cans red kidney beans

Melt shortening in a heavy skillet. Add onions and cook until brown. Add ground beef and brown. Stir frequently so that there will be no lumps of meat. Add remaining ingredients. Heat mixture thoroughly and serve hot. Serves 6.

Pizza

Light, Heavy, Medium, They Come With Plenty Of Options

Pizza is one food with plenty of options. It can come in a cardboard box from the corner pizzeria with your choice of three toppings or from stylish Hollywood restaurants with ingredients ranging from caviar to clams. From coast to coast and in all its forms, pizza remains an American favorite.

Pizza prepared at home can also suit any taste, from light "California fare" to a substantial food fit for the meat-and-potatoes crowd. Pizzas are easy to make at home, especially when hot roll mix with quick-rising yeast is substituted for traditional crust recipes.

California Cashew Pizza conforms to the current culinary trend of "light foods." But light doesn't mean bland. Far from it, this pizza starts with a crust seasoned with oregano, basil and onions.

Top the crust first with tomato sauce, shredded Monterey jack and Cheddar cheeses, then with a variety of colorful vegetables, including red and green bell peppers, sliced black olives and fresh mushrooms. On top of the vegetables, add this pizza's main attraction, cashews. After baking, top the dish with the hallmark of light eating — alfalfa sprouts. Let stand for five minutes, then enjoy.

CALIFORNIA CASHEW PIZZA
Crust:

1 package Pillsbury Hot Roll Mix
2 teaspoons oregano leaves
1 teaspoon basil leaves
1 cup finely chopped onions
1 1/4 cups hot water (110 to 120 degrees)
2 tablespoons oil
Topping:
8-ounce can tomato sauce
12 ounces (3 cups) shredded Monterey jack cheese
4 ounces (1 cup) shredded Cheddar cheese
1/2 medium red bell pepper, cut into strips
1/2 medium green pepper, cut into strips
1/3 cup sliced black olives
1 cup sliced fresh mushrooms
1/2 cup cashews
Alfalfa sprouts, optional

Heat oven to 425 degrees. Place rack at lowest position. Grease 14-inch pizza pan or 15x10-inch jelly roll pan. In large bowl, combine flour mixture, yeast from foil packet, oregano, basil and onions; mix well. Stir in hot water and oil until dry particles are moistened. Turn dough out onto lightly floured surface. With greased or floured hands, shape dough into ball. Knead dough fo r 2 or 3 minutes or until smooth and no longer sticky. With greased hands, pat dough into prepared pan forming a 1/2-inch rim around edges. Spread tomato sauce over dough. Sprinkle with cheeses. Top with red and green peppers, olives, mushrooms and cashews. Bake at 425 degrees on lowest oven rack for 25 to 35 minutes or until crust is deep golden brown. Arrange alfalfa sprouts on top. Let stand 5 minutes before serving. Makes 6 to 8 servings.

Peasant Loaf Pizza is for those who like a substantial, meaty pizza. The pizza actually looks like a crusty round loaf of bread, but concealed inside is a hearty filling of sausage, green pepper, onion and more.

To make the pizza loaf, roll the crust into an 18-inch circle. The large circle of dough will drape over the edge when you transfer the crust to a 9-inch round pan. Next, spoon the filling into the pan. Then bring the excess dough up over the filling, forming pleats, and twist the pleats at the center top to make a "topknot" that seals the dough.

For delicious flavor and texture, wheat germ is added to the hot roll mix as you make the dough. Experiment with adding other seasonings, like basil or oregano, to your pizza crusts by combining them with the flour and yeast mixture.

PEASANT LOAF PIZZA
1 package Pillsbury Hot Roll Mix
1/2 cup wheat germ
1 1/3 cups hot water (110 to 120 degrees)
2 tablespoons oil
1 pound bulk Italian sausage
2 medium green peppers, cut into strips
1 large onion, sliced
2 garlic cloves, minced
1 teaspoon oregano leaves
1/4 teaspoon pepper
6-ounce can tomato paste

Grease 9-inch round pan. In large bowl, combine flour mixture, yeast from foil packet and wheat germ; mix well. Stir in hot water and oil until dry particles are moistened. Turn dough out onto lightly floured surface. With greased or floured hands, shape dough into ball. Knead dough for 2 to 3 minutes or until smoth and no longer sticky. Cover loosely with plastic wrap or towel while preparing filling.

In large skillet, brown sausage, green pepper, onion and garlic; drain well. Stir in oregano, pepper and tomato paste. On lightly floured surface, roll dough into 18-inch circle; fold into quarters. Unfold in prepared pan, letting excess dough hang over edge. Spoon sausage mixture onto dough in pan. Bring dough up over filling, folding to form pleats.

Bring ends of pleats to center; twist to form a knob. Cover dough with plastic wrap or towel. Let rise on countertop 15 minutes. Heat oven to 375 degrees. Uncover dough. Bake at 375 degrees for 35 to 45 minutes or until deep golden brown. Let stand 10 minutes before serving. Makes 6 servings.

LIGHT, TASTY TREAT — California cashew pizza, above, starts with a crust seasoned with oregano, basil and onions. So much for the notion that "light foods," as this pizza is, must be bland. The addition of cashews gives the pizza its main attraction. And a touch of alfalfa spouts, added after baking, gives it the final touch.

Students Learn By Trying

KANKAKEE, Ill. (AP) — A lesson in consumer education turned into a physics "eggs-periment" for 111 Kankakee students, who watched as boxes of raw eggs they had packaged were dropped from a plane 200 feet high.

The students, in third- through fifth-grade academically talented classes of Kankakee School District 111, took part in what they called "The Great American Egg Drop" at the Greater Kankakee Airport.

Students designed the packages to prevent the eggs from breaking, and the drop was arranged to test the designs.

Amazingly, 56 students engineered packages that protected all three of their eggs from breaking, and all of the participants will receive recognition for their efforts.

Teachers Linda Beck, Paula Brigham and Debra Brooks planned the event after discussing the topic of packaging in industry as part of a consumer education unit.

After learning how manufacturers design packages to be cheap, effective and tamper-proof, the children were asked to design egg containers and given a limit of $1 to spend on packaging materials.

The packages were dropped to a grassy area at the airport, the boxes were opened, and judges determined winners on several criteria — the number of surviving eggs and the creativity and construction of the containers.

School administrators and teachers served as judges, a Midway Airlines pilot flew the plane and a catering company donated hot chocolate sold to help defray the cost of the flight.

Little Is Big In Vegetables

By KATHLEEN BOHLAND
Associated Press Writer

SOMIS, Calif. (AP) — Don't be afraid to buck popular opinion by admitting an affinity for vegetables, those healthy things that made you gag as a child. In this state where living is defined by the latest trend, baby carrots are in.

Conventional vegetables haven't lost their flavor; the babies just have that much more, grower Craig Underwood says.

"It's sort of like comparing veal to beef," Underwood noted from his office in this Ventura County town. "Part of it is what your eyes tell you and part of it is what your nose and mouth tell you."

Although Underwood maintains baby carrots are the hottest of the little vegetables, he's not averse to raising baby Japanese eggplant, baby gold turnips or baby red pear tomatoes, among others.

California growers have been raising specialty crops only within the last 10 years or so in the face of increased foreign and domestic competition with conventional fruits and vegetables.

Specialty crops are unusual fruits and vegetables, such as a cherimoya, a baby kohlrabi or fuyu fruit, items which haven't been produced and sold in mass quantities. The crops require intensive hand labor and shrewd marketing skills, Underwood said.

Underwood's family has been farming in Ventura County since the late 1800s. In his great-grandfather's time, farming was a romantic avocation. Today it's big business.

"It isn't enough to till the soil anymore," Underwood said. "You have to know how and where you're going to sell your crops."

Before Underwood entered the baby vegetable business three years ago, he tested the market in the microcosm of the family produce stand.

Apple And Crumbs Yield Fancy Bread

By Nancy Byal
Better Homes and Gardens

Voila! Spicy apple filling and a crumb topping transform white yeast bread dough into a fancy breakfast or brunch bread.

For the filling, choose a tart apple that holds its shape well when cooked, such as Jonathan, Granny Smith or Winesap. A medium size apple makes about ½ cup of chopped apple.

APPLE STREUSEL COFFEE BREAD

16 ounce loaf frozen white bread dough
2 tablespoons margarine or butter, softened
1½ cups finely chopped peeled apples
½ cup packed brown sugar
1 teaspoon ground cinnamon
1 tablespoon margarine or butter, melted
2 tablespoons all-purpose flour
2 tablespoons granulated sugar
1 tablespoon margarine or butter
½ cup slivered almonds (optional)

Thaw dough according to package directions. Divide dough in half; let rest 10 minutes. On floured surface roll each dough half into an 8-inch square. Spread each with half the softened butter. Arrange half the apples down the center of each dough square. Combine brown sugar and cinnamon; sprinkle over apples. Cutting toward filling, make 2-inch-long cuts in dough at 1 inch intervals on both sides of apples. Fold strips alternately over apples; fold under ends of loaf.

Place loaves on a greased 15 by 10 by 1-inch baking pan. Brush with melted butter. Stir together flour and granulated sugar. Cut in the 1 tablespoon margarine until mixture resembles coarse crumbs. Sprinkle half the crumb mixture over each loaf; top with almonds, if desired. Cover; let rise until nearly double (45 to 60 minutes). Bake in a 350-degree oven 30 minutes or until brown. Serve warm. Makes 2 coffee breads, 24 servings.

Souffles Rise To The Occasion

By BERNADETTE WHEELER
L.A. Times Washington Post News Service

More years ago than one would care to count, a young woman watched agog as her roommate whipped up a superb cheese souffle without benefit of recipe. It was the young woman's first encounter with this ethereal dish, and it was, the roommate confessed, the only thing she knew how to make.

When the woman, no longer young but still enthralled by the magical chemistry of these airy egg dishes, attempted her first souffle, a recipe was needed and followed faithfully.

But that's no crime. (It's easy to triumph at cooking anything without a recipe when it's the only procedure you have memorized.)

So if you have never made a successful souffle, pay close attention to the recipe and some important tips and you, too, can be a winner.

A successful souffle depends chiefly on how the egg whites are treated. They should be at room temperature, the beating equipment and bowl scrupulously clean, and not a speck of yolk may be allowed.

The whites must be beaten to their greatest volume and to the shiny, stiff peak stage, but not to the point of looking dull and granular. Then they are quickly and lightly folded into the base sauce.

In whipping the whites, cream of tartar is used as a stabilizer; this isn't necessary if they are beaten in an unlined copper bowl (the metal has an acidic reaction with the whites).

Dessert souffles can be a little runny in the middle, in which case the runny portion is used as a sauce for the other parts; main dish souffles are usually firmer, but still moist and airy. If you don't like a "wet" souffle, just bake it a little longer than the recipe calls for.

Usually, souffles are started at a high temperature and then the heat is reduced, but they seem to hold up longer if they are baked entirely at a low temperature.

LEMON SOUFFLE

6 egg whites at room temperature
4 egg yolks, lightly beaten together
½ tablespoon soft sweet butter
1 tablespoon granulated sugar
¼ cup all-purpose flour
1-3 cup granulated sugar
½ cup milk
4 tablespoons lemon juice
2 tablespoons grated lemon peel
2 tablespoons soft sweet butter
¼ teaspoon cream of tartar
Confectioners' sugar

1. Place egg whites in large bowl of electric mixer (or unlined copper bowl), yolks in a small bowl. Butter 1½ quart, straight-sided souffle dish and sprinkle thoroughly and evenly with granulated sugar. Turn out excess.

2. In a medium saucepan, combine flour, 1-3 cup granulated sugar and milk and stir until smooth. Cook over medium heat, stirring constantly (be sure to reach all surfaces of the pan bottom), until mixture is thickened and comes to a boil. Remove from heat.

3. Stir a little of the cooked mixture into egg yolks. Gradually stir yolk mixture into rest of mixture in the saucepan. Cook, stirring, until mixture begins to bubble. Remove from heat.

4. Add lemon juice, peel and 2 tablespoons butter, and whisk until well blended. Turn into a large mixing bowl and cool about 5 minutes before starting next step.

5. Beat egg whites slowly until foamy, then add cream of tartar. Gradually increase beating speed (use highest speed on electric mixer) until stiff peaks form when beater is slowly raised. Fold ¼ of the egg whites into lemon mixture until well combined. Carefully fold in remaining whites until just combined, taking no more than 1 minute (some white streaks may show).

6. Scoop souffle mixture gently into prepared souffle dish and smooth top lightly. At this point, souffle may be baked immediately, or refrigerated for up to 3½ hours.

7. About 1¼ hours before serving, place cookie sheet on lower shelf of oven and preheat oven to 350 degrees. Place souffle dish on cookie sheet and bake 40 minutes — 45 to 50 minutes if it has been refrigerated (baking time may vary according to oven). Souffle should be nicely browned and quiver just slightly when dish is shaken gently. Dust with confectioners' sugar and serve immediately. Makes 4 to 6 servings.

BROCCOLI-CHEESE SOUFFLE

½ tablespoon soft butter
½ cup walnuts, chopped fine
¼ cup onions, chopped fine
5 tablespoons butter
¾ cup cooked broccoli, chopped fine
½ cup grated parmesan cheese
½ cup grated cheddar cheese
¼ teaspoon hot-red-pepper flakes
Salt and pepper to taste
3 tablespoons all-purpose flour
1 cup milk, scalded
4 egg yolks
5 egg whites
¼ teaspoon cream of tartar

1. Spread bottom and sides of a 1½ quart souffle dish with ½ tablespoon butter; coat with walnuts. Turn out excess. Set aside.

2. In skillet, cook onions in 1 tablespoon of the butter over low heat, stirring until onions are soft. Put onions in large bowl, add broccoli, cheeses, red-pepper flakes, salt, pepper. Set aside.

3. In a medium saucepan, melt remaining butter over moderately low heat, whisk in flour and cook, stirring, for 3 minutes. Add scalded milk (which has been heated until small bubbles form around edges) in a steady stream, whisking, and bring mixture to a boil. Simmer for 5 minutes, stirring constantly (be sure spoon reaches entire bottom of the pan). Whisk in yolks and bring to a boil while stirring. Fold thoroughly into broccoli mixture.

4. Beat egg whites slowly until foamy, then add cream of tartar; gradually increase speed to high and beat until stiff peaks form when beater is slowly lifted.

5. Stir 1-3 of the egg whites into broccoli mixture until blended. Gently but quickly fold in remaining egg whites, taking no more than 50 seconds (some white streaks may show). Gently scoop the mixture into the prepared souffle dish. At this point, the souffle may be baked immediately, or refrigerated for up to 3½ hours.

6. About 1¼ hours before serving, preheat oven to 350 degrees. Place souffle dish in a pan with enough hot water to come halfway up the sides of the dish, and bake until souffle is puffed and golden brown and does not quiver when the dish is shaken. This should take about 45 minutes (about an hour if the souffle has been refrigerated). Serve at once. Makes 6 servings.

Little Is Big

On a given day, locals have their pick of purple and pink Easter egg radishes, baby french carrots, baby leeks, and baby white Japanese turnips piled high in baskets at the roadside stand.

"They saw baby vegetables have really good flavor and really good looks, and it wasn't something you could find in normal channels," Underwood said.

The 36 commodities since developed by the ranch are sold most often in metropolitan areas, including Los Angeles, New York, Dallas, Washington, New Orleans and Montreal.

Restaurants are the biggest buyers of baby vegetables, although supermarket chains have picked up on the trend, said Jefferson Lowe, Underwood's marketing director.

Metropolitan area residents are more likely than those who live elsewhere in the country to cook with baby vegetables, but the majority of shoppers would have no idea what to do with a baby kohlrabi if they saw one, Lowe said. A baby kohlrabi is a small cabbage that looks like a turnip.

"Everyone looks at a baby turnip and they think it's from outer space," he said. "Curiosity will take you only so far, then you have to figure out what to do with it."

Lowe has tried to interest stores in supplying recipes at baby vegetable displays. The company has promoted baby vegetables as snacks, salads or hors d'oevres, such as baby Easter egg radishes garnished with black and golden caviar.

Underwood Ranches often fills custom orders, hand-picked at the buyer's request.

Lowe won't reveal any of the company's growing techniques, calling them trade secrets.

"It's like going to a defense contractor and asking how to build an F-16," he said.

Some growers plant baby vegetables close together, which forces them to compete for nutrients, and they grow smaller as a result, said Ron Voss, director of the cooperative extension program at the University of California at Davis.

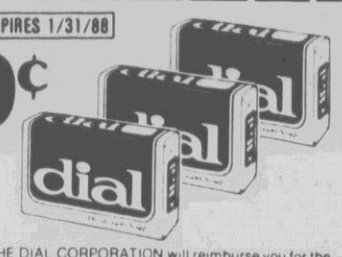

Growers also plant seeds that produce smaller vegetables and tend to harvest them early before they're fully grown, he said.

Ice Cream Has Been Favorite For Years

Americans did not invent ice cream although one might think so, judging from the quantities consumed. Actually ice cream and its "relatives" have been favorite foods of famous people and commoners alike for many centuries.

In the days of Julius Caesar, swift-running slaves were dispatched to the highest mountain peaks to fetch snow and carry it back to Rome. There it was mixed with fruit juices to be enjoyed by the royalty.

From the Orient, Marco Polo brought recipes for flavored milk ice desserts. Italians loved the new food and soon after its introduction, milk ice was being served throughout Europe.

When Charles I reigned in England, the food was known as "cream ice." The king was so fond of this sweet treat that he hired a French chef who was famed for his skill in preparing cream ice.

Recipes for cream ice traveled to America in the bags and trunks of early settlers. And it was Dolly Madison who renamed the food. The words "Ice Cream" first appeared on a White House menu during her term as first lady.

In the early days of homemade ice cream, it was prepared in a pewter pot. The pot of ingredients was jiggled inside a larger pot of ice and salt. The mixture was beaten vigorously until it froze. This method continued until 1846 when an American woman invented the hand-cranked freezer.

Americans continued to make ice cream at home even with the first commercial production of ice cream in 1851. Some time after the advent of electricity in the early 1900s, electric-powered ice cream makers were introduced.

Today both crank and electric ice cream makers can be found in homes across America. But most get little use. During the "dog days" of summer, they are dusted off for the annual work-out.

The results are enjoyed by all, but everyone knows that it will probably be another year before they taste homemade ice cream again. And that is because making ice cream at home has traditionally been a big, messy production. Until now ...

Today there is a new, easy way to enjoy the old-fashioned goodness of fresh, homemade ice cream. Contemporary ice cream makers eliminate the fuss and mess of rock salt and ice that are traditionally associated with preparing ice cream at home.

The freeze chamber of modern ice cream makers, which contains a refrigerant, is simply placed in the freezer overnight or for about eight hours. A temperature-sensitive color indicator, which is affixed to the exterior of the chamber, tells the consumer when it is at an "ideal" temperature for ice cream preparation.

To make the ice cream, the chamber is removed from the freezer, ingredients are added, and the crank is turned a few minutes until the ice cream is ready to serve. Total preparation time is about five minutes per 1/2 cup servings.

With such easy, no-mess preparation, Americans can enjoy fresh, homemade ice cream any day of the week, any time of the year. If there is space available, the freeze chamber of the ice cream maker can be stored in the freezer so that it is ready for action whenever there is a request for ice cream.

Contemporary ice cream makers are specially sized for today's smaller households. Some, for example, make 1 1/2 pints ... just enough fresh ice cream for dessert and perhaps a midnight snack.

In addition to making ice cream, these convenient new freezers can turn out delicious ice milk, sherbet, sorbets, slushes, exotic drinks and more. A variety of dessert recipes are available, such as the one below.

This simple combination of ingredients makes ice cream that is wonderfully rich and creamy-smooth ... like the commercially made premium-style ice creams.

RICH VANILLA ICE CREAM

1/2-2/3 cup sugar
2 eggs
2 cups heavy cream*
2 teaspoons vanilla

Mix sugar and eggs until light in color. Blend in cream and vanilla; mix well. Chill. Follow directions with your ice cream maker.

*Use whipping cream or gourmet whipping cream.

For the same rich goodness but a slightly less sweet taste, use the lesser amount of sugar noted in the recipe.

Marco Polo brought the noodle to the Western world from China in the late 13th century. However, chow mein, stir-fried noodles, did not reach the shores of America until the 19th century. The popular Oriental dish was introduced here by Chinese laborers building the transcontinental railroad.

Coffee Doesn't Muzzle Alcohol

By NYU MEDICAL CENTER

Making that "one for the road" a steaming cup of coffee to dispel the effects of alcohol doesn't work, warns a specialist at New York University Medical Center. In fact, driving under the dual influence may be even more dangerous.

"Remember caffeine is also a mind-affecting drug," cautions Dr. Robert A. Maslansky, instructor in clinical medicine and director of the substance-abuse program at Bellevue Hospital Center. "And it can be quite deceptive."

Caffeine's effect is to speed and heighten reactions, he notes. "We don't have exact words to describe fully the ways in which drugs affect the mind. But the poet Robert Lowell once described the state of mania as 'irritable enthusiasm.' That is a good capsule characterization of the effect of caffeine: putting an 'edge' on responses, subjectively countering the dulled state of having had a few drinks."

But that effect is strictly subjective. While caffeine will probably make you move faster, it will not enable you to move more skillfully. Caffeine may improve performance of a simple, routine task, but not such a complex one as operating a motor vehicle. And it does not cancel out alcohol's effects.

"Alcohol," Maslansky points out, "impairs motor skills. It impairs judgment. It impairs such key visual abilities as dark-adaptation, for example, the ability to readjust after passing a pair of high-beam headlights. No matter how capable and alert one may feel, as long as the alcohol remains in the bloodstream, caffeine will not counter these impairments."

Further, he observes, a second effect of a stimulant such as caffeine is to increase both self-confidence and aggression. When these are coupled with alcohol's effects, "the result may well be even more destructive behavior. Behind the wheel of a car, that can add up to disaster."

In short, the safety advisories are right: coffee or no coffee, if you've been drinking, don't drive.

Newcomers Influence Cookbooks

ATLANTA (AP) — Newcomers to the South's booming Sun Belt are crowding schools and highways, bringing more dollars to the region's economy — and adding whipped cream to grits.

But Nathalie Dupree, a former Social Circle, Ga., restaurant owner who hosts a half-hour cooking show on 160 public television stations, said the changes instigated by immigrants are being matched by innovative natives.

One native-inspired twist on a staple was to cook butterbeans in champagne, said the Atlanta cooking teacher, whose show is called "New Southern Cooking With Nathalie Dupree."

"Accommodations are being made here (for the people moving South from other regions of the country)," she said in a recent telephone interview. "People don't want everything fried with fatback ... (but) there's definitely an interest in Southern cooking."

She said some of the changes also are being made to lower the calorie content of Southern food, much of which is fried or served with heavy sauces.

Georgia's population has grown by nearly 12 percent since 1980 to slightly over 6 million, according to the U.S. Census Bureau. Many of the new residents may be learning for the first time of the thousands of uses Georgia homemakers have developed for peaches, peanuts and poultry, she said.

Ms. Dupree added that cooks nationwide are developing an interest in Southern cuisine, and that New Yorkers recently gave her rave reviews for cheese grits.

The interest in Southern food will not be a short-term fad, she said.

"People are tired of French and that precious California food," she said. "They want real food. I think it (the interest in Southern food) will continue to grow."

Southern cuisine is made special by the use of ingredients indigenous to the area, she said, adding "we're the only real cuisine except New Orleans."

Ms. Dupree, who was raised in Virginia, said she opened a restaurant in the small Walton County town of Social Circle in 1972, and soon began substituting area products in her French recipes.

"I stopped using veal and started using more pork. It was a natural evolution," she said. "And why get proscuitto when you can use a good Georgia or Virginia ham?"

Pork Ribs Are Right Any Day Of The Year

Here is a microwave oven recipe that is certain to be a great family pleaser. Pork ribs are a mouth-watering and filling dish that can be enjoyed any day of the year. This complete meat dish can be quickly and easily prepared in your microwave in less than an hour.

And for dessert, try the tasty, nutritious whole grain apple crisp topped with ice cream.

COUNTRY PORK RIBS

1 cup catsup
1 tablespoon Worcestershire sauce
2 or 3 dashes bottled hot pepper sauce
1 cup water
1/4 cup vinegara
1 tablespoon sugar
1 teaspoonsalt
1 teaspoon celery seed
4 pounds pork loin back ribs

In bowl combine catsup, Worcestershire, pepper sauce, water, vinegar, sugar, salt, and celery seed. Place in microwave oven.

Cook sauce on medium (50% power) for 10 minutes, stirring occasionally; set aside. Cut ribs into serving size pieces. Arrange in 13x9x2-inch baking dish, overlapping slightly. Place in microwave oven.

Cook ribs, uncovered, on medium high (70% power), for 20 minutes, rearranging once. Drain off juices and rearrange ribs in dish. Pour barbecue sauce over ribs. Return to microwave oven.

Cook ribs, uncovered, on medium high, for 25 minutes till thoroughly cooked (adding more cooking time if necessary), basting and rearranging after 15 minutes. Remove ribs to platter. Skim off fat; spoon sauce over ribs. Garnish with lemon slices if desired. Makes 4 to 6 servings.

WHOLE GRAIN APPLE CRISP

8 cups sliced, peeled tart apples
3/4 cup apple juice
1/2 cup raisins
1/3 cup honey
1/4 cup packed brown sugar
3 tablespoons all-purpose flour
1 teaspoon ground cinnamon
1/2 cup quick-cooking rolled oats
1/2 cup whole wheat flour
1/2 cup wheat germ
1/2 cup sunflower nuts
1/4 cup honey
1/4 cup butter or margarine, melted vanilla ice cream (optional)

In 13x9x2-inch baking dish combine apples, apple juice, raisins, 1/3 cup honey, brown sugar, all-purpose flour, and cinnamon; mix well. In medium bowl combine oats, whole wheat flour, wheat germ, sunflower nuts, 1/4 cup honey, and melted butter; mix well and spread over apple mixture. Place in microwave oven.

Cook apple mixture on high for 6 minutes. Give dish a half turn and cook on High for an additional 6 minutes till apples are tender. Serve warm. If desired, top each serving with vanilla ice cream. Makes 10 servings.

Something Just For Tea In Afternoon

By NINA KILLHAM
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

It is not unusual, these days, to walk past the lobby of a grand hotel at midafternoon and spy businessmen sipping a pot of orange pekoe.

Afternoon tea is popular for a reason. It represents all the elegance and decorum of the past, simply wrapped in a pale cucumber sandwich.

According to Michael Smith's "The Afternoon Tea Book" (Atheneum, 1986), the English would never have started this between-meal tradition if it were not for the greed of Anna, seventh duchess of Bedford (1783-1857).

It seems this duchess grew very hungry between lunch and dinner. To appease her stomach, but save her face, she would retire to her boudoir and order from her servants plenty of sandwiches, cakes and cookies, or rather, biscuits. Soon discovered, her pigginess caught on and became a symbol of class.

"The Afternoon Tea Book" is a highly researched and entertaining account of what seems at first to be a trivial pastime. Yet few meals evoke such preconceived notions as tea — from representing the very worst of class pomp to symbolizing the very core of a nurturing family.

Half history, half recipes, "The Afternoon Tea Book" offers recipes for sandwiches, breads, patties, potted meats, cakes and biscuits.

Smith also includes 23 recipes for butters such as walnut, brandy and lemon, even the inspiring foie gras and artichoke, and tomato curry and orange.

There are recipes for teas and tea punches, including one Loving Cup with madeira, brandy and champagne that in some circles would give a whole new meaning to the hour of tea.

Laced throughout the history and recipes are invaluable lessons for the novice for an authentic tea.

When eating a scone, Smith explains, one does not spread a whole half with the butter and jam at a time. Instead, one spreads on the size one might expect to bite elegantly. The English, he says, have an experienced eye for gauging just the right amount of butter and jam to put on so that there are not leftovers after the last bite of scone.

To make the perfect cup of tea, Smith insists that you use the finest tea you can afford, warm the teapot by rinsing with boiling water and use one teaspoon per person, plus "one for the pot."

In fact, Smith notes everything you need to know to enjoy a tea: lore, categories and even paraphernalia. To read this book is to reminisce about a time that, while not socially sound, was really so "civilized."

Staples of the English tea are the potted meats and fish; coarse-textured, they are scooped into sturdy pots and sealed under a thick layer of clarified (so it won't become rancid) butter to give them an extended storage life. Below is a creamy version from the book that would be a treat at your next tea party.

Express-lane List: smoked trout, cream cheese, sour cream, lemon, hot pepper sauce, mace, bread or crackers

POTTED SMOKED TROUT
(Makes about 3/4 pound)

10 ounces smoked trout, skinned and boned
1/4 cup (1/2 stick) sweet butter plus 1/4 cup clarified butter
1/2 cup cream cheese
2 tablespoons sour cream
Juice of 1/2 small lemon
2 to 3 dashes hot-pepper sauce
1/2 teaspoon mace
Salt and freshly ground pepper to taste
Toasted fingers of bread or crackers for serving

Puree the fish in a blender or food processor.

Mix in all the remaining ingredients except the clarified butter. Spoon into a pretty pot or dish. Pour over a thin film of clarified butter. Refrigerate to set. Remove from the refrigerator one hour before serving. Serve on toasted bread or crackers.

Sen. Robert F. Kennedy was born in 1925 in Brookline, Mass.

Kids Can Be Helped In Avoiding Fast-Food Hazards

By ROSE DOSTI
L.A. Times-Washington PostC News Service

The road to most fast-food dining is paved with health hazards, especially if you do not know how to control or modify what and how much your children eat.

Many fast-food meals may be made up of 40 percent to 60 percent fat. Most of them also contain far more sodium than is considered safe while the amount of vitamins A and C and fiber may be seriously lacking.

Those could be dangerous signs if your children eat fast foods on a regular basis, according to Evelyn Tribole, M.S., R.D., consulting nutritionist for Consulting Nutrition Services in Irvine, Calif.

"There has been a staggering 52 percent increase in obesity among children and 39 percent among adolescents in the last 15 years. And that's only part of the picture. The New England Journal of Medicine reported that fatty streaks in the blood stream which may lead to heart disease in later years are starting to show up among children as young as 7 years old," Ms. Tribole said.

Ms. Tribole points out that while snack foods cannot be blamed solely for increases in obesity and early signs of heart disease, parents would be wise to teach children how to modify their intake of snack foods because of their excessively high fat and sodium content.

"We say this in light of the fact that with hectic family schedules and dual working parents who have little time to prepare healthful home meals, it's estimated that one-third of all meals are eaten away from home. That's a 300 percent increase in 10 years, and the trend is here to stay," Ms. Tribole said.

She also pointed out that because most fast-food hamburger outlets offer little or no choice of vegetables, parents who rely heavily on fast-foods meals for their children should also consciously include fruits and vegetables in the diet of their children every day, whether at home or carried to the fast-food place. "Although some fast-food chains boast about including lettuce and tomatoes on the hamburger, one could hardly consider a lettuce leaf a serving of vegetable," Ms. Tribole said.

Most nutritionists would agree that the bulk of responsibility in feeding children rests with parents. However, dietitians also urge the industry to help parents do their jobs better by offering more fruits and vegetables with the fast food, because that fast food may be the only food eaten by youngsters for dinner or lunch.

Some members of industry have attempted to include salad bars, Ms. Tribole said. "That's good, and we hope the trend continues," she said. However, salad bars, too, are fraught with danger if a heavy hand is applied to dressings and cheese sauces, which add excess fat calories to the meal, Ms. Tribole said.

Chicken outlets often include side dishes such as corn, potatoes and coleslaw that provide necessary nutritional balance to the meal. Pizza, too, may contain vegetables and cheese, making it a self-contained, balanced meal-in-a-dish.

"Watch the fats," Ms. Tribole said. More calories are derived from fat than those from any other food. Fats contain 9 calories per gram compared with 4 calories per gram for fruits, vegetables and grains (carbohydrates).

Cholesterol content may be higher in some fats than others, as well. Some fast-food outlets fry foods in coconut oil, which contains 92 percent saturated fat compared to 41 percent saturated fat for animal lard. "Even though coconut oil is derived from plant and not animal, which one usually associates with high saturated fat content, it is extremely high in saturated fat," Ms. Tribole said.

Many non-dairy creamers and other products, incidentally, are made with coconut oil, so it is wise to check labels before buying, Ms. Tribole said. Also watch for products made with palm oil, which contain about the same amount of saturated fat as coconut oil.

Most of the calories in a baked potato topped with cheese can come from the cheese alone, so hold the cheese if you are concerned about calories, Ms. Tribole said.

Fast-food milk shakes are high in calories, about 300 to 400 calories per serving. "That's too many calories when you add them to calories consumed at breakfast, lunch and dinner. In light of increasing obesity in children, it would be better if the child substituted fruit juice or nonfat milk," Ms. Tribole said.

What should the fast-food diner do to curb intake of excessive fats and sodium and increase intake of fiber, vitamin A and C?

Here are Tibole's fast-food guidelines for parents and children:

— Drink orange juice instead of malts. A glass of orange juice will provide 100 percent of the RDAs for vitamin C.

— Choose whole-grain buns when possible. The whole grain will provide extra dietary fiber.

— Watch out for greasy buns, such as biscuits and croissants, which are higher in fat content than regular breads.

— Choose the salad bar if available. Stick to "nutritionally dense" vegetables, such as broccoli, cauliflower, celery, zucchini, tomatoes, spinach, beets and carrots because they contain high levels of nutrients for the amount eaten. Go lighter on lettuce. If you use lettuce, use the dark green varieties such as Romaine, which contain higher amounts of iron and other vitamins and minerals than pale lettuces.

— Add beans, garbanzo beans, kidney beans and white beans to the salad for an extra protein lift.

— Go light on bacon bits or skip them all together because they are loaded with sodium and fat.

— Choose vinegar or lemon and go lightly on oil.

— Avoid heavy creamy dressings, which are more caloric than lighter oil-vinegar dressings.

— Choose low-fat or nonfat milk over milk shakes. Nonfat milk is relatively low in calories yet high in calcium, protein and other vitamins and minerals.

— For adults, diet beverages, tea or coffee have less fat and calories than regular sodas and milk shakes.

— Go for charbroiled meats. Griddled, pan-fried or fried meats require fat for cooking, thus adding calories and cholesterol to the diet.

— Go for the smallest hamburger size to save on calories, fat and cholesterol.

— Avoid heavily battered fried chicken, which increases surface area of meat and absorbs more fat.

— Choose baked potatoes over French fried potatoes. Eat the baked potatoes plain — without excessive butter, cheese or sour-cream toppings that add fat and calories.

— Supplement fast foods with fruits and vegetables. Bring the fast food home and add your own salad and fruit to the menu. Or carry a bag of fruit and vegetables to the restaurant.
