Three American Teachers, Indian Professor Kidnapped In Lebanon

By RODEINA KENAAN
Associated Press Writer

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Four kidnappers disguised as police and carrying rifles seized three American teachers and an Indian professor at a west Beirut college Saturday and then fled with their hostages in a jeep, police reported.

The kidnappers duped the foreign teachers into assembling in a Beirut University College office by claiming to have been assigned to protect them, police and school sources said.

The abductions came as Anglican Church envoy Terry Waite was reported to have concluded five days of secret negotiations with Shiite Moslem captors of two Americans held captive since 1985.

U.S. Ambassador John Kelly held crisis talks with senior aides at the embassy in east Beirut's Christian suburb of Aukar to discuss the latest kidnappings. Embassy spokesmen declined to comment.

Twenty-five foreigners are reported missing and believed kidnapped in Beirut, including 10 seized since Waite arrived in Beirut on Jan. 12.

Police and university officials, all speaking on condition of anonymity, identified the Americans abducted Saturday as Alann Steen, 48, a journalism professor; Jesse Turner, assistant instructor of mathematics and computer sciences, and Robert Polhill, assistant professor of business studies.

The Indian was identified as Mithileshwar Singh, chairman of the business studies division. The college said he had an American Green card, which makes him a legal U.S. resident alien.

Four men wearing olive-green police uniforms entered the campus at 7 p.m. in a police patrol jeep and said they were assigned to provide protection for all foreign teachers, police said.

They asked that all foreign staff members assemble at the office of the campus services supervisor, Raja Nahhas, saying "We need to meet with them."

A student who was at the office said the assailants "acting perfectly as Squad 16 policemen, were armed with M-16 and AK-47 assault rifles.

N.C. Braces For Bad Weather

By DAVID DROSCHAK
Associated Press Writer
(See story on A-11)

Cold and weary North Carolinians still digging out from a mid-week snow will have to brace themselves again as a new storm system is expected to blanket the state from the mountains to the coast, the National Weather Service said Saturday.

"Yeah, it's sort of heading this way again," said John Valentine, a meteorologist with the weather service in Raleigh. "Right now we are forecasting snow all the way to the coast ... actually, the whole state except the Outer Banks."

A low pressure system moving toward North Carolina and South Carolina from the Mississippi Valley will probably start bringing snow into the state around midnight or early Sunday morning, Valentine said.

A heavy snowstorm which started Wednesday night in western North Carolina, was blamed for at least five deaths, including two people who apparently had heart attacks during or after shoveling snow.

That storm brought up to 20 inches of snow in some areas, but Valentine said he didn't think the approaching storm would bring as much precipitation.

"No, it won't be quite the same," he said. "We won't get as much snow out of this. The greatest snow will probably be in the mountains again."

A winter storm warning was issued for Saturday night and Sunday for the northwest piedmont, southern piedmont, foothills and the mountains. The weather service issued a winter storm watch for Sunday for the northeast piedmont, the sandhills, the coastal plain and the northern coastal area.

Snowfall accumulations should reach 6 to 8 inches over the state from the northwest and southern piedmont westward over the mountains. Snow accumulations of 2 to 4 inches are possible over the winter storm watch area, the weather service said. However, the snowfall totals in the watch area will depend on how much sleet or freezing rain is mixed with the snow as some warming occurs during the day.

Valentine said it was too early to predict the exact amount of snow the state will receive, but he did say temperatures would again dip into the teens and 20s throughout most of the state.

Another system, which was in the Gulf of Mexico early Saturday, could gain strength and follow the typical winter storm track through the Carolinas and up the Atlantic coast, said Ron Kuhn, chief of the weather service in Charlotte. That system could produce bad weather Sunday night and Monday, he said.

Meanwhile, in North Carolina and South Carolina, about 4,300 customers were still without electricity Saturday, said Andy Thompson, a Duke Power Co. media specialist.

"Our heaviest concentrations are in South Carolina and in western North Carolina," Thompson said. In the Rutherfordton area, 1,000 customers were without service, while

Official Sees No End To Expansion At PCMH

By CAROL TYER
Reflector Staff Writer

Pitt County Memorial Hospital is perpetually under construction, yet its service to patients is never interrupted, Ralph Hall Jr. said.

"We've been adding ever since we opened this hospital in April 1977," said Hall, the hospital's vice president for facilities management. "And we have a master facility plan that will carry us on several more years, with little or no break in sight."

"When we moved in there construction work was still going on, and it's never stopped."

At present, a new heart catherization lab has just been completed, additions to lab, medical records and admissions are under way, and a birthing center will be started soon.

To enumerate some of the more recent building activity: In 1984, work was begun on a new emergency department and expansion of the radiology and surgery departments. This project was completed in March, 1986.

The hospital, also in 1986, borrowed $10 million from the North Carolina Medical Care Commission for equipment enhancement. Five million dollars of this money was spent on a new computer system and two CT scanners were installed at a cost of $750,000 for one and $850,000 for the other.

Almost completed and ready to be put into use is a new bi-plane digital heart catherization laboratory, the equipment for which is costing $1.6 million. Once this has been put into use, the currently-used heart catherization lab will be shut down and modernized at a cost of about $600,000.

Also in the cardiology area, a digital angiography lab is being installed. This will be Pitt Memorial's first such equipment for sophisticated vascular study. The cost is about $850,000.

An 18-bed minimum care unit has opened in November, 1986. It's being used to care for patients who either are in the hospital mainly for testing or for patients who need a few more days of hospital care, but not at the same nursing level they needed in the acute-care setting of the remainder of the 560-bed hospital.

The laboratory area currently under construction will add 27,000 square feet of lab space and a total renovation of the original lab space will be done once the addition is completed.

The medical records department is being totally replaced, with the lab taking over space that has been medical records. Medical records is being doubled in size.

Once the addition under way is completed, the hospital will have a totally new and separate admissions area, with an entrance and parking lot off the Stantonsburg Road. The main lobby will then only be used by visitors.

Bids will be taken Feb. 10 for a neonatal unit expansion project that will enlarge the capacity of the unit for high-risk newborns from 24 to 29 beds. The cost will be about $650,000.

In conjunction with the East Carolina University School of Medicine, the hospital will add this year a birthing center with six labor-delivery-recovery home-like rooms and one operating room. The cost of this project, to be financed entirely by the medical school, will be about $1.2 million.

Civil Rights Activists Hold Peaceful Forsyth March

By JOHN A. BOLT
Associated Press Writer

CUMMING, Ga. (AP) — Nearly 25,000 demonstrators, led by veterans of 1960s-era protests and protected by at least 2,300 National Guardsmen and police, marched peacefully Saturday in an all-white county to protest racial intolerance.

The civil rights activists — black and white, and many with children — were met by more than 1,000 counterdemonstrators, some waving Confederate and U.S. flags and shouting "Nigger go home." Authorities reported 60 arrests but could not specify how many were part of either group of demonstrators.

The march was a response to a similar march last weekend by 75 blacks and whites that was disrupted by about 400 Ku Klux Klan members and supporters who pelted the marchers with rocks, bottles and mud.

Among the counterdemonstrators was former Gov. Lester Maddox, a one-time segregationist. The group, which planned a rally after the march, dispersed when confronted by state police.

The marchers, carrying signs such as, "Do right Forsyth County," flashed peace signs at the hecklers. The 1¼-mile march was one of the largest civil rights demonstrations in the United States since the 1960s.

"We are here to tell our brothers and sisters of Forsyth County that we have learned to love our neighbors as ourselves," Bernice King, youngest daughter of Martin Luther King Jr., shouted above the noise of circling helicopters from the Georgia State

Baby's Birth Gains Unusual Attention

By JANE WELBORN
Reflector Staff Writer

The Washington Redskins have their eye on a future Greenville football player — even though he is only 5 months old.

The Redskins organization wrote Scott Bryan Boyd a letter in December saying, "We heard of your birth on Aug. 9, 1986 ... and are expecting you to grow, work and mature into a future Washington Redskin."

The letter was signed by Redskins coach Joe Gibbs and players Art Monk, Joe Schroeder and Bobby Beathard.

Scott is the son of David and Joyce Boyd of Greenville. The couple are baseball card dealers and operate D&J Cards. Mrs. Boyd also is a nurse at Pitt County Memorial Hospital.

Scott weighed 9 pounds, 3 ounces and was 22 1/2 inches long at birth. Dr, David Ostman, who delivered Scott, told the proud father, "He's going to be a real bruiser."

"I told him I needed to go make a phone call," Boyd recalled. "He said, 'Who are you going to call, your mother?' I told him, 'No. The Redskins.'"

The letter from the Redskins states, "Right now, our biggest Redskin is Joe Jacoby (6-7, 305) but we hear your family tree indicates you might grow to fill the shoes of this Pro Bowl player."

"Now we're waiting for him to graduate from college and play for the Redskins," his father said. He hopes his son will be a linebacker.

The team also sent Scott a 50th anniversary patch like the ones worn on the shoulder of the Redskins' uniforms. It also sent decals and a bumper sticker.

The baseball card-dealer father is especially proud of a complete set of autographed cards sent by the Redskins.

"I am going to mount the cards and frame the letter and put it in his room," Boyd said. "I hope we can get a complete set of cards every year. Then when he gets ready to go to college, he ought to be able to sell the cards and pay for college."

Boyd said he has been a Redskin fan since the 1950s. He played guard and tackle on the J.H. Rose High School football team.

"Even if the Redskins never win another football game, I'll still be a fan. There's no way I'd change now," he said.

The letter from the Redskins to Scott concluded, "You can cheer for us and we'll be cheering for you to grow and grow as both a Redskin fan and potential player."

However, there is one person in the family who has other things in mind. His mother is a native of Dallas.

"She declares he's going to play for the Cowboys," Boyd said.

China Has Quake

PEKING (AP) — A strong earthquake shook a county in northwestern China's Xinjiang province on Saturday, the official Xinhua news agency reported Sunday.

Xinhua said a few buildings collapsed in the quake, which registered 6.4 on the open-ended Richter scale, but it was not known whether there were casualties.

The quake occurred in the northwestern part of Wushi County in Xinjiang at 4:09 p.m., Xinhua said.

Twenty-five aftershocks had been monitored by 5:25 p.m. Saturday, the strongest of which had a magnitude of 4.6, the report said.

An official at the State Seismological Bureau in Peking said the extent of damage still was being investigated and the bureau had no other information.

The Hong Kong Royal Observatory reported earlier that the quake's epicenter was near Wushi city.

An earthquake measuring 5.9 on the Richter scale hit Baicheng County, near Wushi County, on Jan. 6, injuring a few people and destroying some houses.

Xinjiang province borders the Soviet Union to the north and Pakistan to the west. Wushi is about 2,910 miles northwest of Hong Kong.

Three Teachers Seized

"The foreign professors along with their wives came to Nahhas' office. It was then that one gunman pointed an AK-47 to Nahhas' head and shouted, 'Don't move.'

"Another aimed his M-16 at the foreigners and said, 'All men, come with us.' The four walked out without resistence," the student said. He spoke on condition of anonymity for security reasons.

Nahhas said the kidnappers handcuffed the teachers.

"As Professor Steen walked away, he looked back and told his wife, Virginia Rose, 'Don't worry darling, it's only a demonstration,'" the student said.

The four houstages were taken about 50 yards to the jeep, "where the kidnappers bundled them in and sped off," according to the student.

A Lebanese guard at a school gate said he thought the gunmen were regular police when they entered the school. "I was astonished to see them about 10 minutes later racing out in the jeep with the professors. They were pointing guns to the professors' heads. One of them yelled at me, 'If you talk we shall finish you!'"

The identities of the kidnappers were unknown, and there was no immediate claim of responsibility.

"I have already alerted Alann's family and mine," Steen's wife said, weeping after the kidnapping. "Please, I don't feel like talking."

Mrs. Steen is the head of the Beirut college's fine arts department.

Howard Seemann, a journalism professor at Humboldt State University in Arcata, Calif., said Steen was a Boston native who taught at the northern California school in the early 1970s.

"Al was always kind of open for adventure. He wanted to do things," Seemann said.

A Beirut University College official said Turner was a graduate of the University of Idaho, Polhill of New York University and that Singh had received a diplomat from Western Colorado University.

Beirut University College, which has 3,000 Middle Eastern and African students, issued an appeal to the captors and said Polhill and Singh were diabetic and need medication.

Other information on the captives was not immediately available.

College officials said the four abducted teachers lived with their wives on campus and had not been going out because of the recent kidnappings.

The latest kidnap victims were the only foreign male professors who remained at Beirut University College, a private, American-founded college, according to college officials. Both Beirut University Collage and the American University of Beirut still have about a dozen American women working for them at their campuses in Moslem west Beirut, according to the official.

Police said Saturday's victims probably were the last American men who remained in west Beirut following an exodus of foreigners who feared they could become kidnap victims. Some went to east Beirut, which is predominantly Christian.

Steen's 24-year-old daughter, Becky Steen, of Chico, Calif., said her father had been a Marine in the late 1950s and early 60s but was never in combat.

She also said of her father: "He basically kind of went there with the idea of putting together a media department."

"He said to me that he has never been threatened," but if he was, it would make him consider leaving, she added.

In Washington, White House spokesman Roman Popadiuk said Ambassador Kelly confirmed the kidnappings and that President Reagan was notified at Camp David.

"The president is concerned. The president has requested he be notified of all information as it comes in. We hold those individuals who took the hostages responsible for the safety of the hostages and call for their immediate release," Popadiuk said.

Police meanwhile tried to establish the identity and whereabouts of two foreigners abducted Friday from west Beirut's main commercial thoroughfare.

Before Friday, 19 foreigners were missing and believed kidnapped in Lebanon — five Americans, six Frenchmen, two West Germans, two Britons, an Italian, an Irishman, a South Korean and a Saudi Arabian.

Waite, personal emissary of Archbishop of Canterbury Robert Runcie, was last seen Tuesday evening as he left his seaside hotel for talks with the hostage-takers.

Hayes Takes Office As MHA President

Myree Hayes was installed as president during the Mental Health Association in Pitt County's annual meeting recently.

Other officers include: C.G. Kledaras, president-elect; Ruth Boxberger, secretary; William B. Martin, treasurer; Dot D. Dail, assistant treasurer; Lauretta Lewis, chapter delegate, and Bernard Haselrig, alternate delegate.

Board members, class of 1988, are John Anema, John Bizzell, Nora Lee Craft, Frank G. Fuller, Leslie H. Garner, Mark Jarmel, Sandra Johnson, Jim McManus, Alton Warren and Gretchen Weeks.

Alton Warren, who was named 1986 Volunteer of the Year, was cited for his activities on behalf of the mentally ill.

David W. Hardee Scholarships were awarded to Lori Anne Vasquez, Janis Holland, Julie McIver, Peggy A. Reibling, Angela Robbins, Nita Wall Shumaker and Marie Wilder.

Others honored were committee chairmen, outgoing board members, three employees of the Mental Health Center, the music therapy program of East Carolina University's School of Music, and several groups which had made special contributions to the Mental Health Association, including The Clothesline of Jarvis Memorial United Methodist Church, Pandora's Box of First Presbyterian Church, the Greenville Service League, and Greenville Moose Lodge No. 885.

Guest speaker was Robert Rule, president of the Mental Health Association in North Carolina.

about 3,200 were without power in Spartanburg, S.C., Thompson said.

The number of Duke Power customers without power Saturday night was reduced to 3,800 by nightfall, officials said, with about 2,900 in Spartanburg.

Deborah Bailey, spokeswoman for the Emergency Management Office in Rutherfordton, said sheriff's deputies and firefighters delivered kerosene heaters and fuel to many homeowners Friday night. The Red Cross housed and fed about 15 people at the emergency shelter.

"We're working to get power back on for these customers, and then we'll see what the new storm front is going to bring," Thompson said.

While most of the major roads from Greensboro to the western mountains were open, some icy conditions were reported across the state where temperatures dipped to near 10 degrees Friday night, the weather service said.

In the east, residents along the Neuse, Tar, Cape Fear and Lumber rivers were still waiting for rivers to crest after runoff from the heavy rains Thursday produced swelled banks.

"Most of the rivers are starting to rise and will either crest Saturday night or Sunday," said weather service meteorologist Richard Jones in Raleigh.

Jones said just because those areas may get some snow Sunday morning instead of additional rain, doesn't mean residents along the rivers will be out of danger.

"The snow will have to melt sooner or later," he said. "It's just a matter of how much and when we get it."

Minor flooding was reported along the Tar River in Rocky Mount where Bob Milton's Restaurant was closed. The river was at 17½ feet Saturday, about 2 feet above flood stage, while the river is expected to crest near 25 feet on Sunday near Tarboro, Jones said.

The worst spot along the Cape Fear River was near Elizabethtown, where the river was at 27.3 feet, or more than 7 feet above flood stage, while the Lumber River was about 2 feet above flood stage Saturday afternoon.

The Neuse River was 4 to 5 feet above flood stage at most locations Saturday afternoon, Jones said.

Patrol and several television stations.

"We are ready to carry the torch forward," she said.

Sheriff Wesley Walraven said he had heard of no injuries, although there were a few reports of bottles and rocks thrown at marchers.

"This is a resurrection of the civil rights movement," said Ozell Sutton, regional director of the U.S. Justice Department's office of community relations in Atlanta. "This outpouring of black and white and all racial groups is an indication of a deep and abiding concern."

Robbie Hamrick, director of the Georgia Bureau of Investigation, estimated the number of marchers at 20,000 to 25,000.

Among those marching with the group were King's widow, Coretta Scott King, former U.S. Sen. Gary Hart, Atlanta Mayor Andrew Young, the Rev. Jesse Jackson, the Rev. Ralph David Abernathy, comedian Dick Gregory and Benjamin Hooks, executive director of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

The march was delayed for more than three hours by the huge turnout, which created a traffic jam on the state road linking Cumming with Atlanta, 40 miles miles south.

The first activists reached the Forsyth County Courthouse behind a phalanx of police cars about 2:40 p.m., where they sang and listened to speeches from a temporary stage in front of the courthouse.

It wasn't until 4:15 p.m. that the last marchers reached the courthouse square. Then they began returning to their buses and cars.

When they reached the courthouse, they were greeted with chants of "Niggers go home." One white man in the crowd was seen tossing a bottle at the marchers; another person threw a stick.

At least 14 people, four of them Klan members with weapons, were arrested before the march began, authorities said. Once the march began, the number of arrests jumped to 60, said Col. Harry Heath, spokesman for the National Guard.

Charges included public drunkenness, concealed weapons, battery of an officer, inciting riot and disorderly conduct. Those arrested were kept in a wire enclosure behind the county jail pending processing.

By nightall, none had posted bond, said Walraven. The sheriff said he expected almost all charges to be misdemeanors, but would have no breakdown of who was arrested from each side until Sunday.

He said the number of arrests was not unusual, "you would have had that many arrests anyway" in any crowd of that size.

Among those arrested was white separatist David Duke, who called conditions in the wire pen "unbelieveable. They had us up to our ankles in cold water."

Activity in the town halted for the demonstration. Most businesses were closed; police cars blocked roads to the courthouse square.

In April, it's expected that the first of three phases of expansion of the rehabilitation center of the hospital will begin. Some 8700 square feet of clinical space, mostly for the care of outpatients, will be added.

In the fall of this year, a 16-bed addition to the psychiatric unit will be made. The cost will be about $1.2 million. Capital expansion planned over the next five years will cost about $35 million. The cost of the original building housing this hospital was about $15 million.

Hall credits the designers of the hospital with how smoothly its continuous expansion projects have run. Every department was built with exterior walls, so even large projects like the addition of a medical science area at the front of the hospital and the West Bed Tower have not disrupted daily patient care.

Something To Think About

Roderick M. Phillips
DIRECTOR

SHOULD BEREAVED BE LEFT ALONE?

Should the bereaved be left alone after a death? This is a question which often perplexes people. They wish to express their sympathy, and yet they are afraid of intruding on the grief of the family.

Think of it the other way around. Rather than worrying that your short, well-meant condolence call might disturb the mourners, think how they might feel if people did not show their support and sympathy. They might well feel abandoned.

The majority of mourners feel the need for human ties and human warmth. Because the burden of grief is often carried alone, most mourners appreciate the companionship and assistance of their friends. On the other hand, a mourner who does not wish to receive callers will generally find a way to make that known. The old adage: "A friend in need is a friend indeed" is never more meaningful than during a loss.

The social hour will begin at 6:30 p.m. with the dinner and program to follow at 7:30 p.m.

Joseph W. Dean, secretary of crime control and public safety, will be the featured speaker. For reservations and fee information contact Terri Scearce at 758-6200.

Arts Society Meets

The Winterville Historical and Arts Society will meet at its museum building on Church Street in Winterville on Tuesday at 7:30 p.m. Donald R. Morgan will give a slide presentation, "Renovation of Greenwreath Plantation House."

READING DAY — The Pitt-Greenville International Reading Association sponsored "Reading Day" at Carolina East Mall Saturday. Janie Manning of Bethel Elementary School reads a story to a group of youngsters during one of the story sessions. Paula Brown, program co-chairman, said teachers and school administrators read stories to children throughout the day at different mall locations. The purpose of the program was to promote reading and to let children see that reading can be fun. (Reflector Photo by Tommy Forrest)

Quilter's Guild

The Greenville Quilter's Guild will meet Tuesday at the Community Building. Anyone wishing to quilt before the meeting can go at 10 a.m. with a bag lunch. The business meeting will begin at 12:30 p.m.

Carlene Mount from the New Bern Quilter's Guild will present the program.

Nutrition Speaker

Dr. James Cerda will speak on nutrition and inflammatory bowel disease Tuesday at 12:30 p.m. in the East Carolina University School of Medicine's Brody Building.

Cerda is professor of medicine, Division of Gastroenterology and Nutrition, associate chairman in the department of medicine, and director of the nutrition laboratory at the University of Florida at Gainesville.

Cerdas presentation is sponsored by the ECU School of Medicine's nutrition interest group.

Boys Club Campaign

The Boys Club of Pitt County has announced the launching of a communitywide program to prevent the use of drugs among young people.

The program titled "Drug Free and Proud To Be" is part of a nationwide campaign sponsored by Boys Clubs of America in response to President Reagan's challenge to collect one million pledges from young people stating that they will be drug free. The signatures will be presented to Reagan and his wife, Nancy, at a White House ceremony next fall.

The Boys Club of Pitt County has set a goal of 2,000 signatures to be collected during the project. Those interested in supporting or participating in the program can contact Lucky Harris, 355-2345.

Council Workshop

The Greenville City Council will conduct a workshop to discuss the 1987-88 budget Monday at 5:45 p.m. in the first floor conference room of City Hall, located at the corner of Fifth and Washington streets.

Library Series

The library and information studies department at East Carolina University will hold the third of its 1986-87 Library Science Saturday Series Feb. 14.

The workshop, "Networking In Libraries," will be held from 9 a.m. until 12:30 p.m. in Room 221 of old Joyner Library at ECU.

Coordinated by Jackie Beach, director of the Tarboro Memorial Library, the workshop will include a panel of experts who will discuss their experiences in library automation and networking related to the North Carolina Library Network.

There will be a fee charged for the workshop. For details or to sign up, contact the ECU Division of Continuing Education, 757-6143.

Successful UCP Event

The recent United Cerebral Palsy Radio-a-thon held at The Plaza raised more than $21,000 from the Greenville campaign area.

The radio-a-thon was held in conjunction with the annual UCP "Weekend With The Stars" Telethon. Radio station WRQR held a request-a-thon the week before the radio-a-thon and raised $9,500 for UCP. The ECU Pep Band, Susie Pair, Klee Liles, The Breeze Band, Phi Sigma Pi and The Down East Gold Wings, along with radio stations WRQR, WKTC, and WDLX participated in the event.

In May, the UCP Local Advisory Council will sponsor a car show at The Plaza.

Pastoral Program

The Rev. Greg Rogers and Guy B. Bradbury have completed a clinical pastoral education program at Pitt County Memorial Hospital.

Bradbury is a substance abuse counselor at the Mental Health Center in Greenville. Rogers is pastor of Oakmont Baptist Church in Greenville.

The program, sponsored by the department of pastoral services at PCMH, is designed to prepare clergy and laypeople for ministry in the hospital environment. Chaplain Jerry Angevine, clinical chaplain supervisor, said participants work closely with patients, hospital chaplains and members of the medical and nursing staffs.

Forum Scheduled

North Carolina leaders of the Moral Majority and the American Civil Liberties Union will speak at an East Carolina University public forum Feb. 11.

The forum on the role of religion in current politics will present contrasting points of view by four panelists: the Rev. Coy Privette (R-Cabarrus), director of the Christian Action League; Kent Kelly, head of the Moral Majority in North Carolina; George Gardner, state director of the American Civil Liberties Union, and Roger Sharpe, director of North Carolinians for First Amendment Freedoms.

Judge Gerald Arnold of the N.C. Court of Appeals will be forum moderator.

The program will begin in Room 244 in Mendenhall Student Center at 7:30 p.m. An informal reception will follow for members of the audience and panelists.

The forum is sponsored by the ECU chapter of Phi Sigma Alpha honor society in political science.

Fair Board Officers

The Pitt County American Legion Agricultural Fair Board met recently to review the results of the 1986 fair and consider improvements and expansion for the 1987 event.

Newly elected officers who will serve the fair for 1987 include: Norman W. Wilkerson, Greenville, president; Lester Turnage, Greenville, vice-president; Grimes Lewis and Gilbert Lewis, both of Farmville vice-presidents, Herman Dail, Ayden, vice-president; Oscar Moore, Greenville, secretary; Elvy Forrest, Greenville, treasurer, and Sam Winchester, Greenville, fair manager.

Scholarship Program

The North Carolina Division of Veterans Affairs administers the state's program of scholarships for children of certain veterans, according to Oscar L. Moore, district veterans service officer in Greenville.

Moore said that children of certain veterans who died or are 100 percent disabled as a result of wartime service, or children of peacetime veterans whose death or 100 percent service-connected disability was incurred as a result of armed conflict or while engaged in extra-hazardous service or children of certain veterans who were prisoners of war or listed as missing in action are eligible for the scholastic aid.

Other children may be eligible depending upon the nature of the parent's death or disability.

Scholarships, with one exception, provide free tuition, certain fees, and a room and board allowance in state owned institutions and $1,200 per academic year in private institutions. The exception is that awards under the 100 percent service-connected disability provision provide only free tuition and certain fees.

All veterans must have been a legal resident of North Carolina at the time of entry into service, or with certain exceptions, they must have been born in North Carolina and continuously resided in the state.

For more information contact Oscar L. Moore, 232 Greenville Blvd., SE, 756-4617.

Nurses' Registry

Taking calls for the Pitt County Private Duty Nurses Registry Monday through Feb. 28 are Grace Turner, R.N., 756-0375; Helen McArthur, R.N., 756-1854, and Shellie Hudson, R.N., 752-7090. The registry is closed weekends. For emergencies call either of the above.

Lecture Scheduled

Dr. Ernest L. Boyer, president of the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching, will present the fifth annual Batten-Brimley Distinguished Educator Lecture at East Carolina University on Feb. 10.

Boyer's address on "Education in the Year 2000" will be at 7:30 p.m. in Hendrix Theatre of the Mendenhall Student Center.

Boyer is senior fellow of the Woodrow Wilson School, Princeton University, and a former U.S. Commissioner of Education. He holds degrees from 73 U.S. colleges and universities. He is former chancellor of the State University of New York.

The Council for Teacher Education will present four 1987 Outstanding Educator Awards to North Carolina teachers during the Batten-Brimley lecture program.

DR. ERNEST L. BOYER

ARC Program Set

The Association for Retarded Citizens of Pitt County and the Exceptional Children's Advisory Council of the Pitt County schools will sponsor a program Tuesday at 7 p.m. at the Willis Building.

The program will be presented by Mary Shields, director of ACCEPT, a United Way-funded agency that provides through the state parent training, technical assistance, information and referrals, and parent-to-parent networking.

This is a followup meeting to an October parents and educators session.

Heart Month

Governor Jim Martin has proclaimed February as Heart Month in North Carolina and urged citizens to support the American Heart Association. Martin said that cardiovascular diseases are the number one killers in the state.

EAS To Start In July 1988

Implementation of extended area service permitting two-way telephone calling between Grifton and Ayden, and one-way calling from Grifton to Greenville, is scheduled for July 1988, according to Grady Strickland, Carolina Telephone's district commercial manager in Greenville.

With approval of the EAS by a majority of voting telephone customers, Ayden and Grifton customers will pay higher monthly local service rates instead of paying long-distance charges for calls between the two communities, he said.

The higher rate for Grifton customers also will include the additional cost for EAS to Greenville.

After Greenville customers opposed two-way EAS between Greenville and Grifton, the N.C. Utilities Commission ordered one-way EAS from Grifton to Greenville upon approval of a majority of Grifton customers.

Under an EAS arrangement, telephone users are able to dial customers in another telephone exchange on a local basis, but higher monthly local service rates apply to offset investment and expenses incurred in providing the EAS, Strickland said.

Under existing rates, when EAS goes into service, customers' monthly local service rates will increase as follows: Grifton residential one-party — $1.99; Grifton business one-party — $4.80; Ayden residential one-party — 49 cents, and Ayden business one-party — $1.16.

Area Officials Not Ready To Talk About Waste Site

FARMVILLE — The N.C. Hazardous Waste Treatment Commission last week released a list of 139 potential sites — including one in Pitt County near Farmville — for a state hazardous waste treatment facility.

But spokesmen for the town of Farmville and several county government officials said Friday that they don't know enough about the proposed location to comment on it.

The site in Pitt County was described as being 185 acres 25 miles from I-95 at U.S. 264 and 1/4 mile from Farmville.

Deborah Parker, chairman of the hazardous waste treatment commission, said the sites on the list meet only the most general guidelines for a hazardous waste incinerator, such as nearness to interstate highways, a minimum of 50 acres and being at least a mile from institutions such as schools or hospitals.

And the commission is considering stricter criteria for paring the list to 10 to 15 sites when the panel meets Feb. 12, Ms. Parker said.

The Farmville spokesman, who asked not to be identified, said there has been "no contact with the town ... from state agencies." He also said he did not know the location of the site and said since he has no detail information he has "no basis for any comment."

County Manager Kramer Jackson and County Engineer Phil Dickerson said they too don't have enough information about the proposed location to comment.

But Dickerson said the potential sites for a state hazardous waste treatement operation shouldn't be confused with possible sites for a low-level nuclear waste dump.

(Pitt County last year was included in a list of 36 North Carolina counties as a possible location for a new Southeastern Compact Commission low-level radioactive dump, but local officials say the chances are slim that the county will be selected for the site.)

Dickerson said the state hazardous waste treatment facility would not be a landfill operation. But it would include an incinerator, a distillation unit and batch chemical treatment units.

Among other counties with possible sites were: Edgecombe, with 11 potential sites; Mecklenburg and Rowan, with 13 each; Forsyth, Nash and Wilson with five each and Wayne, with one potential site.

Ms. Parker said some counties have expressed interest in the facility because of the jobs it would create, while others are leary of such an operation.

Air Ambulance Needed By Pitt, Eastern N.C.

EastCare should be operated as long as the need for it exists.

PCMH's trustees acted correctly when they voted Tuesday to keep the air ambulance service. That decision could not have been an easy one in light of the Jan. 8 crash of the helicopter. The crash took four lives — three of them highly experienced flight personnel. The tragedy could have taken the breath out of the program, but with the trustees' farsighted leadership, that won't happen.

With no ruling on the cause of the crash expected for six months, the hospital board demonstrated its faith in the program and its personnel when it voted to keep EastCare. The board also proved its dedication to providing eastern North Carolina with the best alternatives in emergency care.

A teritary care facility such as PCMH needs the ability to transport patients rapidly and with stability. It also requires sophisticated life support equipment to successfully carry critical cases. An air ambulance service provides this capability.

The hospital's neonatal unit and trauma center are two good examples of why the service is needed. Tiny babies with little chance for life are sped to help by EastCare and sustained during flight by live-giving equipment. Critically injured accident victims can be whisked from their location in remote areas by EastCare in time to save lives and limbs.

No other program has so visually personified the growth and impact of Greenville's expanding medical complex as EastCare. It is a service that has a tangible effect on health care in eastern North Carolina.

Air ambulance service is in its infancy in the health care profession. It is, however, a service vital to residents of eastern North Carolina, and should be nourished through its fledgling stage. Pitt County benefits from the program, but the advantage doesn't end here. Geographically isolated areas benefit even more. EastCare provides them with a link to help in Greenville. Without it, that line is severed.

EastCare should take to the air again as soon as equipment procurement and adequate training will allow. The trustees' decision to continue is a sound one that should be respected and applauded by the community.

Unlikely Answer

Scott Rasmussen, founder and president of the Charlotte-based League of Concerned Americans, says solving the country's budget problem is too important to be left to politicians. He has concluded political leaders are unable to solve the budget crisis because they don't understand it.

"The real budget crisis", says Rasmussen, "is failure of the budget to reflect priorities of the American people." He wrote a book on the subject in 1985 and distributed it to every congressman and senator.

That didn't light any fires.

His budget ideas are based on the premise that true reform begins with two large programs: Social Security and defense. He thinks the U.S. could save $50 billion a year in military spending by having European and other nations contribute on a pro-rata basis the costs to defend them.

There is another $250 billion to be saved in Social Security taxes over five years, he says, by increasing the retirement age and by stopping the government from tapping into the Social Security trust fund surplus.

Well, it's kind of hard for us to see how the United States can tell other countries how to handle defense programs when our own record is such a dismal example. By gradually increasing the retirement age, the nation eventually would have all its elders leaving the scene before drawing Social Security.

Returning to the basic premise: solving budget problems is too important to be left to politicians ... we are left with the inference that governing without politics is not only desirable but possible. The latter is unlikely.

To achieve a general consensus on any issue visionaries begin with organizing a group to support a philosophy; a "constituency." Rasmussen's League of Concerned Americans is such a group; thus he enters "politics."

There is a fascinating project Rasmussen's League has in mind: to organize and develop an alternative U.S. budget every two years.

The goals are great, but we see obstacles resembling that fabled Gordian Knot. Big budget-writing involves a convoluted logic that is the despair of us all.

True Love: Pound Of 'Cue, Pint Of Stew

Alvin Taylor

Sunday Morning Notes

Various communities of eastern North Carolina will squabble forever over who has the best pork barbecue. Every barbecue house has its supporters and they will stand firm against any interlopers who dare to say that there's better barbecue somewhere else.

There have been barbecue competitions and national publications have chosen barbecue houses as offering the best of this strange (to outsiders) concoction.

One thing every true easterner will agree upon, however, is that there is no real barbecue like chopped pork barbecue. Oh, there's barbecue everything — chicken in gooey scauce, beef, beef ribs. You name it, if it's meat it's been barbecued on the grill, over open camp fires, in restaurants over gas flame. Some of it is pretty good and in fact, easterners are known to barbecue and enthusiastically consume all those things.

Eastern North Carolina pork barbecue, however is as far removed from the stuff you barbecue over charcoal as collards are from radishes.

If pork barbecue is done properly it is not greasy and it is not covered with sauce. It can, in fact, be heaped on a roll with cole slaw and eaten without any messiness.

Fast foods? Eastern North Carolina barbecue houses invented the concept long before national hamburger chains thought they had discovered the idea.

As far back as depression years an individual could walk in a barbecue house, sit at a table and be served barbecue, slaw, Brunswick stew, potatoes, fried chicken and corn bread sticks, or some variation thereof. It could be ordered by the plate or served family style and it came out in a hurry. An alternative was to buy plates to take out and most barbecue houses did, and still do, more business from the take-out window than they do inside. Barbecue can also be bought in bulk and a whole family can be served with a pound of 'cue, pint of stew, quart of slaw and an assortment of fried chicken.

Most barbecue houses also offer to sell their products to satisfy the customer's needs. Thus one can buy individully a half pint of stew, some corn bread sticks, a bag of chicken, even chicken by the piece.

Any of it can be had in a hurry and the customer can be home enjoying a delectable meal within a few minutes.

I'm aware that there are some who are baffled by the love for barbecue which easterners harbor. They are offset by those who come from elsewhere and quickly grow to love our native dish.

Detractors says if chopped pork barbecue is so great, why hasn't it spread? I don't know, but it is a fact that any easterner who has left the area to seek his fortune in other parts of the country heads for the barbecue houses first thing on his visits home.

You just have to grow up with it.

Soviets Seeking Victory By Negotiation

Andrew Rosenthal

KABUL, Afghanistan (AP) — Afghan leader Najib invokes Allah in speeches and talks about allowing political activity outside his Marxist party. Kremlin officials speak increasingly of their desire to get out of Afghanistan's bloodletting.

Nearly nine years after the Marxist revolution in Afghanistan, the Soviet Union and its Kabul allies appear eager to win through negotiation what they have failed to achieve with the sword.

But their avowed flexibility seems to have strict limitations and their overtures have attracted only a small percentage of the guerrillas fighting Soviet and Afghan troops.

Najib's program of "national reconciliation," which bears the stamp of Mikhail S. Gorbachev's Kremlin, faces the same factional, tribal and religious problems that have divided Afghanistan for centuries.

As the fourth man to run this nation since an April 1978 revolution brought Marxists to power, Najib must juggle not only domestic problems, but the demands of his Kremlin allies as well.

During a visit to Kabul from Moscow, foreign reporters were carefully shepherded by Afghan officials and there was no chance to meet with guerrilla leaders. The reporters were informed that the Afghan leader, a non-practicing medical doctor who uses only one name, prefers to be called Najib, rather than Najibullah, which had been used since he took over last year.

The trip provided strong impressions of a military and political situation that has changed little since the Soviet forces moved into Afghanistan in December 1979.

Kremlin troops have scored some major victories since then, but diplomats in Kabul and guerrilla sources in neighboring Pakistan say the Moslem guerrillas are inflicting mounting casualties. In a situation reminiscent of Vietnam, the insurgents are able to deny the government control over large regions.

Western diplomats also say the Soviets appear to have a new respect for the guerrillas' anti-aircraft capabilities, which Afghan officials ascribe to the supply of sophisticated U.S. Stinger missiles and British-made Blowpipe rockets.

Kabul residents say Soviet and Afghan military flights have changed their patterns, going much higher or lower than before and using more missile-deflecting flares.

Najib's attempt to establish a cease-fire Jan. 15 was reported in ruins within 12 hours. The main guerrilla leaders vowed to fight on until the estimated 115,000 Soviet soldiers leave Afghanistan.

Government reports say about 5,000 guerrillas have surrendered since the government's call for reconciliation. But Afghan officials estimate the guerrilla force at 70,000 fighters and Western diplomats say it could be even larger.

Along with the cease-fire has come a call for internal negotiations, an attempt to enlist Islam in the government's struggle for control, and an offer of amnesty and coalition government.

These concepts are couched in language that makes it clear the Soviets and Afghans intend to maintain the ruling party's dominance, and their conditions for a negotiated settlement haven't changed.

The Soviets say they won't withdraw until the United States, Pakistan and the guerrilla leaders guarantee that the fighting will stop first.

After a recent visit, Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze said a withdrawal timetable could be negotiated. But Najib said later the timetable was already set and "is not a concrete question for negotiation."

The promised amnesty decree has yet to be issued, and it already has been limited to exclude those convicted of "terrorism" or "sabotage," categories that could be used against guerrilla leaders.

Andrew Rosenthal, chief of the Associated Press bureau in Moscow, visited Afghanistan with a group of Western correspondents also assigned to the Soviet Union.

ECU: The 'Bootstrap' University Reaches Its Time To Flourish

Jack Claiborne

A week ago, when governors of the University of North Carolina system approved the appointment of Dr. Richard Eakin of Ohio's Bowling Green State University as the new chancellor at East Carolina University, The Observer reported the fact in a four-column, 10-inch story in its state editions. But in the edition delivered in Mecklenburg County, the story was reduced to one sentence in a roundup of other state news.

The paper's intent in summarizing state developments was to open up space for stories of greater interest to local readers. It assumed that the appointment at East Carolina was of marginal significance in this region. That assumption, perhaps widely held in this area, distressed many friends of ECU, and with good reason.

Though the university is correctly portrayed as a bastion of eastern North Carolina's intellectual, cultural and economic interests, it takes great pride in the service it has rendered the rest of the state.

Consider, for instance, that 47 percent of East Carolina's 14,121 students come from Piedmont and mountain counties. Consider, too, that 363 of its students come from Mecklenburg, which ranks fifth among N.C. counties in a number of residents enrolled at ECU. Only Pitt (ECU's home), Wake (Raleigh), Wayne (Goldsboro), Cumberland (Fayetteville), and Craven (New Bern) rank higher.

The first graduate of the East Carolina Medical School, which Mecklenburg legislators (and The Observer) steadfastly opposed, was from Charlotte. Nine Mecklenburg residents are among the 279 students currently enrolled in the med school, and 10 of the school's 259 graduates are practicing in Mecklenburg County.

Several ECU faculty members have ties to Charlotte. Two deans, Donald Bailey of the General College and Charles Coble of the School of Education, previously taught in Charlotte-Mecklenburg schools.

'The school's long, up-by-the-bootstraps quest for a medical school and university status left it a reputation for exaggerated ambition and hard-nosed politics. Even at that, East Carolina was doing North Carolina great favors.'

Finally, the chairman of the ECU Board of Trustees is C. Ralph Kinsey Jr., a Charlotte lawyer who grew up in Optimist Park, played football for Garinger High's 1959 state champions, got a football grant-in-aid at East Carolina, and for three years played blocking back in the single-wing of the late coach Clarence Stasavich.

As chairman of the ECU board, Mr. Kinsey has been part of a conscious effort to raise ECU's academic standards and soften its public image. The school's long, up-by-the-bootstraps quest for a medical school and university status left it a reputation for exaggerated ambition and hard-nosed politics.

Even at that, East Carolina was doing North Carolina great favors. Before winning its own medical school, it spurred a rapid expansion of medical schools at UNC-Chapel Hill and Wake Forest and promoted the establishment of a statewide network of Area Health Education Centers for retraining practicing physicians. Out of the politics of ECU's ambitions came the move to restructure all state universities under one governing board — a reform that has since won North Carolina national acclaim.

East Carolina partisans can argue, with some justification, that since its founding as a two-year teacher-training school in 1907, their school has stirred older institutions, such as UNC-Chapel Hill, UNC-Greensboro and N.C. State at Raleigh, to broaden their curricula and respond to the needs of more N.C. students.

East Carolina is not alone in that claim. It is one of more than 200 teacher-training institutions that share a common history. Founded during a Populist campaign for literacy and public education, they grew up to challenge the more established, classical state universities and gradually, in the education boom that followed World War II, struggled to attain university status themselves.

But Ralph Kinsey and other friends of ECU contend such battles are over. In the five years that John Howell has been chancellor at East Carolina, he has focused the university's energies toward improving its faculty, raising academic standards and strengthening ties to the rest of the state. He set out to raise money for 20 scholarships that would enable ECU to compete for the brightest graduates of N.C. high schools and wound up raising enough for 40.

ECU's desire to serve eastern North Carolina and build bridges to other parts of the state were important criteria for a new chancellor. "We were looking for someone who would help us build upon our resources and proud tradition," Mr. Kinsey said. After considering more than 129 candidates, the search committee settled on Richard R. Eakin, a mathematician from Bowling Green State, a school whose rise, in the shadow of Ohio State, was much like ECU's.

Dr. Eakin's appointment is the first under Charlottean Dick Spangler, now president of the UNC system. Ralph Kinsey recalls listening to Mr. Spangler's inaugural address at Chapel Hill last fall, when he committed the university to eliminate illiteracy, strengthen teacher training, improve public health and stimulate economic development. "As I sat there, I thought to myself, no school in the system is better positioned to deliver all those services than East Carolina....This is our time to flourish."

Jack Claiborne is an associate editor with the Charlotte Observor, where this commentary appeared on the editorial page.

Public Forum

To the editor:

On behalf of the entire EastCare program, I would like to express our deep appreciation to all of the concerned citizens and organizations who have expressed their condolences to us following the crash of our aircraft on the evening of Thursday, Jan. 8, 1987. Four lives were lost in that crash; three belonged to members of our program who not only provided important leadership, but provided a source of motivation and dedication as well. The fourth life belonged to the type of person that Mike, Pam and Perry believed in the most: a critically ill patient in need.

The support that we have receive verbally and in writing from literally thousands of persons throughout eastern North Carolina and the rest of the country has touched us all very deeply. We will rely on this support heavily as we attempt to move forward from this tragedy.

We look forward to working with all of you again in the future as we continue to dedicate ourselves to putting patient care first.

Nicholas Benson, M.D.
Medical director and program director
EastCare

To the editor:

Your editorial acceptance of the supervisor's proposed school attendance lines suggests a complacent failure to do your homework or an alarming degree of shortsightedness regarding the future of inner city Greenville.

Under the present proposal, in five years, the ratio of black to white students at Rose High is projected to be approximately 60/40, while that at some of the county schools will be in the range of 30/70. Not only is this a mockery of the idea of racial equality and equal education in our schools, but it is a sure prescription for young middle class family flight to county residences. It follows that the presently proposed attendance lines guarantee us an inner city ghetto for Greenville. Is the Daily Reflector really so naive as to think this will not happen to Greenville? Greenville has avoided the inner city blight of most cities around us, not necessarily because we have superior planners, but, in large part, because we have only one junior high and high school in Greenville and because we have had no real private high school competition for Rose High.

We had better start thinking about such issues, whether we have school age children or not. Not only should we consider the social and economic advantages to all of us of equal educational treatment of all children in Pitt County, but the need to prevent the return of slums to Greenville.

It would be timely for the editor to define "Reflector," as in "Daily Reflector." Are readers to take "reflector" to mean something that "mirrors" indiscriminately whatever comes down the pike or does "reflector" mean a "thinker" who subjects information to the process of logical thought?

Billy E. Jones
Greenville

To the editor:

Twice recently, the editor has supported the present proposal for school attendance lines, a proposal doing little to unify the newly-consolidated system and doing less to alleviate problems identified in the RTI report. By ignoring these necessities, the proposal fosters an "inner city" school system which is detrimental to children, homeowners and businessmen of downtown Greenville. One can observe less-progressive cities to view the results.

We are not only addressing elementary school problems in the city, but also Rose High. Within five years, many city schools are projected to become more and more black, while schools just south of Greenville grow well over 70 percent white. In a county which is 34 percent black, why are so many schools skewed so far from 50-50? If five-year projections are realistic, where will we be in 10-15 years?

Transportation costs are cited as a reason for racial imbalances. Why then are many predominantly white neighborhoods bordering the city attendance area bused further distances south to predominantly white county schools? This inequitable busing is consuming dollars better spent on a more balanced system.

In conclusion, the proposal does not alleviate the problems which consolidation was to repair. If these problems are not addressed, our children should be allowed to attend schools closest to their homes. Of areas adjacent to Greenville's southern border, Westhaven 3-7 is furtherest from the city attendance area and closest to Winterville. If trasnportation costs are such a problem, why should we alone be chosen to change systems?

We again reiterate our opposition to the proposal and urge board members to vote against it. The children of our county are the future of our county, and a strong education for all of them is the best way to ensure a progressive future for our area.

GOP: Three Camps

Kevin Phillips

WASHINGTON — OK, most of us are bored with the Iranian arms mess. But it's more than a bunch of Central Intelligence Agency gunrunners, wild-eyed Tehran mullahs and Error Flynn characters operating out of the White House. It's also an episode that could marginally redefine American politics — not just by increasing Democratic chances to win the White House in 1988 (although it does), but also by shuffling presidential prospects and strategies within the Republican Party.

Three developments underscore the increasing impact of the Iran-contra imbroglio within the GOP: December's nose-diving poll support for Vice President George Bush, the related rise of Senate Republican Leader Bob Dole of Kansas, and mid-January's attempted New Right draft of feisty White House Communications Director Patrick J. Buchanan as a 1988 contender. Iran-linked dynamics were operating in each case.

Dole, boosted by his clever minuet of disagreement with fumbling Reaganite tactics on the Iranian-contra scandal, has to some extent become a rallying point for the critics and skeptics of the administration. Arch-loyalist Buchanan, by contrast, ignited a brush fire among Reaganite stalwarts convinced that only political recrimination and hand-to-hand ideological combat could save the Reagan Revolution. And Bush, for his part, was caught in the middle on two troubling dimensions: The faint possibility of greater-than-revealed vice presidential knowledge of the arms scandal and a loyalty to Ronald Reagan too uncritical for skeptics and too genteel for true believers.

The flurry over Buchanan was particularly revealing. In contrast to other conservative contenders looking toward 1988, fire-eater Buchanan has the temperament and capacity to resurrect a frustration politics that's been apparent twice before in post-World War II GOP politics. During the Eisenhower Era in 1959-60, and then again during the post-Watergate Ford regime in 1975-76, conservatives turned bitter as they saw a GOP administration dominated by moderates lose headway after serious election defeats (1958, 1974).

Nevertheless, conservatives now seem to have shrunk back from the idea of mounting a banzai charge replete with attacks on the liberal media, charges of betrayal in Central America and the like. Captained by someone like Buchanan, it might have won about 15 percent to 20 percent of the 1988 Republican primary vote, but probably no more. That isn't necessarily a failure, mind. In point of fact, a Buchanan-style hard-line right-wing protest candidate may have more 1988 primary vote-getting potential than the other conservative contenders seeking the nomination — Rep. Jack F. Kemp of New York and televangelist Pat Robertson. That's because the events of the last few months are changing the tenor of U.S. conservatism. For one thing, America's tenuous mid-1980s optimism has ebbed. An early December Roper poll for U.S. News & World Report and Cable News Network found that a majority of Americans once again believe that the United States is on the wrong track. A Gallup sampling found a similar result. Hostility to the media is widespread.

Concerns like these are tailor-made for a polarization-type campaign resurrecting themes from George C. Wallace, Spiro T. Agnew and even the circa 1976 Ronald Reagan. And perhaps the past tense isn't altogether appropriate. Buchanan's Jan. 20 non-candidacy announcement was vaguely hedged by statements that a declaration "in the near future" would be divisive among conservatives, and that Kemp and Robertson need "more time to prove their electability or lack thereof." Buchanan's sister and closest adviser, former U.S. Treasurer Bay Buchanan Jackson, candidly told the press that Kemp's people requested more time to show their man's viability, and that if Kemp fails to voice the right issues and continues to lag, "I will be knocking down my brother's door" to get him to change his mind and run.

On the surface, one would also expect Kemp to profit from the decline of Bush. Loss of votes by Reagan's loyal vice president ought to free up some for conservatism, like Caesar's Gaul, divides into three parts: economic, religious and the New Right mix of cultural, patriotic and social-issue anger-politics. Jack Kemp, bubbly, babbly and caught up in his economic panaceas to an extent that some call him the Hubert H. Humphrey of the Right, hasn't been able to tap the latter two. In fact, if ever Kemp had an hour in U.S. politics, it was back in 1981, when tax cuts were pushing their way through Congress and 1984 trial heats assuming Reagan's retirement gave the New Yorker 15 percent to 25 percent of the 1984 GOP primary vote against Bush. In 1986, as further tax reform has been enacted and Americans have yawned, Kemp's support in national preference polls has generally languished in the 5 percent to 9 percent range. All of which helps explain the candidacy of Robertson. Kemp advisers, aware of their man's limitations, want to try to Buchananize him a bit in coming months. But it's unlikely to work: You can't graft persimmons on a passion fruit tree.

No Peace Pipe Burning For Jesse Helms And George Schultz

Rowland Evans & Robert Novak

WASHINGTON — In a 90-second telephone conversation congratulating Sen. Jesse Helms on his election as Republican leader on the Foreign Relations Committee, Secretary of State George Shultz did not propose continuing the weekly luncheon that he had with Sen. Richard Lugar.

The omission suggested that beneath the surface cordiality, the peace pipe was certainly not burning between Shultz and Helms. The State Department was openly rooting for Lugar to keep the top GOP spot on the committee against Helms.

The luncheon invitation might yet be made, but friends of Shultz and Helms say privately that the personal animosity between them is just too great to bridge. Shultz deeply resents Helms' ferocious flanking actions against his ambassadorial choices and his ideological criticisms on South Africa, Chile and arms control.

'Shultz deeply resents Helms' ferocious flanking actions against his ambassadorial choices and his ideological criticisms ...'

HARD-NOSE BUSH

Shortly after he declared his presidential support for Rep. Jack Kemp, Rep. Beau Boulter of Texas was visited by an emissary of the vice president who strongly suggested that Boulter's choice had clouded his future in George Bush's home state.

"You owe George Bush," political operative Ron Kaufman told the congressman. "You have made enemies who will never forgive." The vice president himself called another Kemp endorser, Rep. Robert C. Smith of critically-important New Hampshire, to try to change his mind, but made no threats.

A footnote: Sponsors of Chicago's St. Patrick's parade were surprised when Senate minority leader Robert J. Dole solicited an invitation. Desiring to thwart an invasion of presidential hopefuls, the parade sponsors set to work on a soft rejection. Meanwhile, Kemp was a able to coax a South Boston St. Patrick's parade invitation from its Democratic sponsor, State Senate President William Bulger.

MISSING NEW ORLEANS

New Orleans was so much the first choice of Democratic National Chairman Paul Kirk for the 1988 national convention that he unsuccessfully tried to get site selection committee members to pick the Louisiana metropolis and preempt the Republicans.

But committee members insisted on carrying out the regular procedure previously announced, arguing it would offend other cities making a serious bid.

Rains Cure Drought, Brighten Crop Outlook

FAYETTEVILLE (AP) — Rains of the past three months have drowned last year's drought, replenishing groundwater and making the outlook for corn and soybean farmers bright for the upcoming season, state agriculture officials said.

"Basically it (the drought) is over," assistant state Climatologist David Epperson said. "Since late October, we've had pretty regular rain ... and if we keep on getting normal rainfall throughout the rest of the season, agriculture is going to be in a great position this spring."

Fred Cumbo, superintendent of the N.C. Horticultural Crops Research Station east of Clinton, said the rain is replenishing groundwater and the outlook for the farmer is considerably better this year.

"If it continues this way, definitely his groundwater ought to be in much better condition than it was last year," Cumbo said. "We'll be starting out with a good supply of water."

Rains also are refilling surface water sources such as ponds and streams for irrigation, Cumbo said.

Robeson County Agricultural Extension Chairman Everett Davis said "we're reasonably close" to seeing groundwater levels return to normal.

"Farm land benefits most from slow, soaking rains, so the value of a shower depends on when that rainfall comes and at what intensity," he said. "What would really help ... would be a 6- or 8-inch snow that would soak in as it melts."

"The surface water supplies are fine, and now the lower groundwater has returned to normal levels, and in some cases above," Epperson said.

Across the state, 1986 was the fifth-driest year since the state began keeping rainfall records in 1887, Epperson said. However, December 1985 to November 1986 was the driest 12-month period on record, he said. The 1986 average was boosted with above-normal rainfall in December, he said.

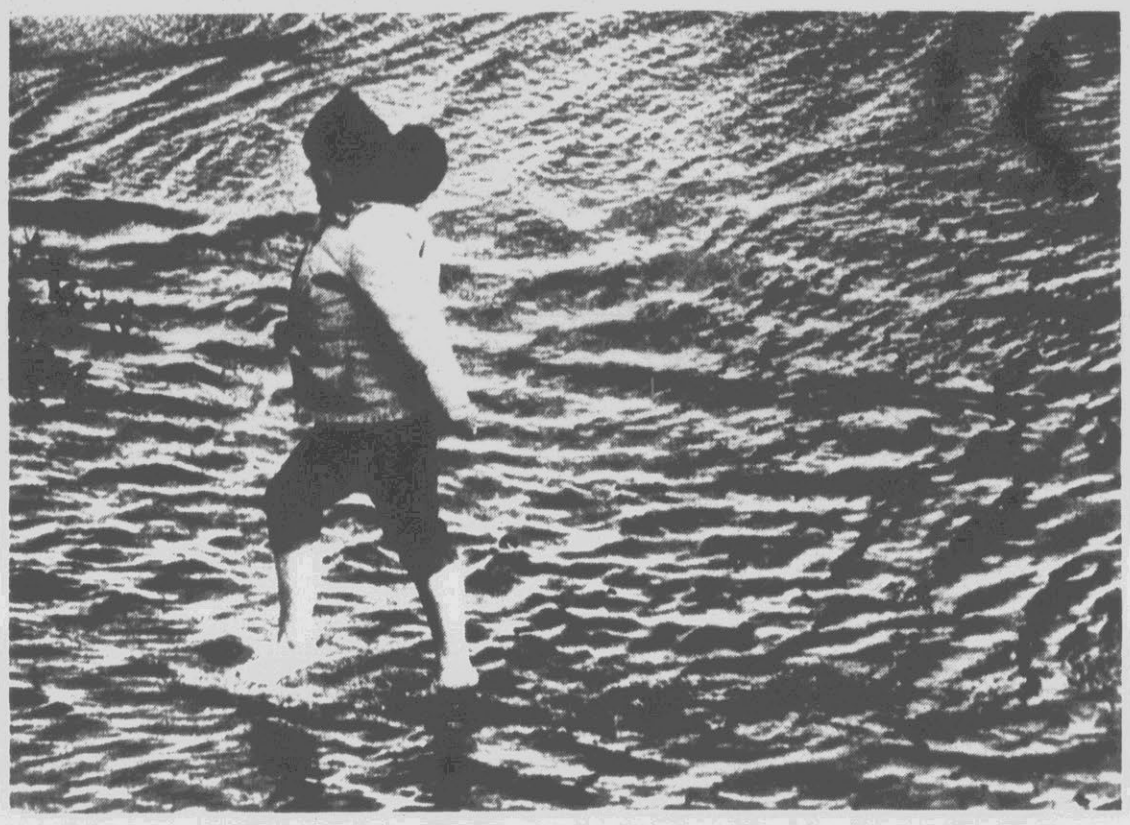
Statewide, the 1986 average rainfall was 39.17 inches, the driest year since 1941, when the average was 38.88 inches, according to Epperson's figures. The record-low state average was 38.12 inches of rain in 1925, he said. Other dry years were 1930 with 38.3 inches, 1933 with 39.01 inches and 1981 with 40.97 inches.

The wettest month in 1986 was August, when the state averaged 8.65 inches, over 2 inches above normal, Epperson said. He said the drought didn't last as long in the southeastern part of the state because of some rains in late spring and summer.

"The farther south and east in the state, the better things were," Cumbo said. He said rainfall for the Clinton area was down by about 10 inches last year, and more in northern Sampson County. But this year, rainfall totals already are above average at the research station, with over 5.7 inches measured through mid-week, above the January average of 3.88 inches.

In Robeson County, unofficial rainfall records kept by extension agents show 41.6 inches of rain for 1986, down from the average of 48 inches, Davis said. Rainfall was down slightly in 1985 and was above average in 1984, he said.

"Going into a planting season, the best (moisture) situation is a happy medium," Davis said. "Too much moisture makes hinders preparation of fields, and too little prevents seeds from germinating properly."



A CASE OF COLD FEET — An unidentified woman walks barefooted through a flooded street in downtown Manteo, one of several coastal North Carolina towns to be inundated by high tides caused by a persistent northwesterly gale Friday. Temperatures hovering around 32 degrees and snow flurries caused hazardous driving conditions for motorists. More than a mile and a half of N.C. 12 from Rodanthe to Salvo was submerged Friday afternoon. (AP Laserphoto)

Board OKs Wastewater Treatment Facilities Plan

ROBERSONVILLE — Robersonville Town Commissioners have approved a $3.5 million plan to upgrade and expand its existing wastewater treatment facilities following a public hearing.

The plan, one of three 201 wastewater facilities plans submitted by the engineering firm of L.E. Wooten, calls for construction of a new, more efficient aeration facility with the incorporation of existing facilities for sludge stabilization and storage.

The cost of another plan presented called for a capital cost of about $75,000 more than the plan approved. A land application approach, which involves pretreatment of wastes and their disposal and 500 acres of land, would cost about twice the $3.5 million figure for the approved plan.

Funding for the project is expected to come from several sources. A federal grant from the Environmental Protection Agency is expected to cover about 55 percent or about $1.8 million of the cost. However, approval of that grant is not expected until the first of April.

The town has also applied for a state grant of about $500,000. Notice of approval is due about Feb. 1.

Because of increased sewer capacity to allow for expansion of existing Perdue, Inc. facilities, that plant is expected to provide about $750,000 of the needed revenues.

Based on the grant and plant support expected, the town's share will be about $424,500, with this money to be derived from a proposed bond issue.

Notice of intent to apply for sanitary sewer bonds of $650,000 and water bonds of $200,000 has been given by the town.

Town administrator Ralph Mobley said the town is "authorized to issue up to $850,000 worth of bonds, but we will sell only what we need."

A meeting will be held Feb. 3 to discuss the bond issue. A referendum is scheduled for April 15. If the bond issue is passed and all grants approved, construction will begin in August with an estimated completion date of June 1988.

Greenville 21st In Nov. Construction

Greenville authorized more than $1.5 million in total construction in November 1986 to rank 21st among 45 Tar Heel cities, according to a report released by the N.C. Department of Labor.

Greensboro took the number one spot in value of construction authorized for the month with $36,789,927; Raleigh was second with $28,584,449; followed by Charlotte, $19,216,104; Durham, $14,357,101; Wilmington, $12,363,408; Asheville, $11,069,109; Winston-Salem, $10,488,298; High Point, $8,481,693; Garner, $ 6,186,278, and Cary, $5,501,993.

Greenville authorized $1,584,331 in total construction.

The N.C. Labor Department's Division of Research and Statistics monitors building activity in 45 select cities in North Carolina each month.

Greenville authorized $1,116,870 in residential construction in November 1986 to rank 15th.

Raleigh, which authorized $13,723,333, ranked first in residential construction; followed by Greensboro, with $10,623,561; Wilmington, $8,510,181; Durham, $6,377,496; Charlotte, $6,122,331; Winston-Salem, $5,754,254; Garner, $4,701,458; Cary, $3,886,373; High Point, $3,532,990, and Chapel Hill, $3,110,100.

Greenville ranked 26th in authorized non-residential construction for November 1986 with $467,461.

Greensboro authorized $26,166,366 to rank first in non-residential construction; followed by Raleigh, with $14,861,116; Charlotte, $13,093,773; Asheville, $9,889,838; Durham, $7,979,605; High Point, $4,948,703; Winston-Salem, $4,734,044; Monroe, $3,931,500; Wilmington, $3,853,227, and Wilson, $2,731,705.

Pitt County authorized $2,676,763 in total construction in November 1986 to rank 29th among 72 North Carolina cities, according to the report.

Guilford County took the top spot with $65,591,472 in total authorized construction for the month, while Mecklenburg was second with $59,573,337. Wake County was third with $53,334,112; followed by Durham, $40,628,058; Buncombe, $17,533,209; Forsyth, $16,554,519; New Hanover, $13,823,158; Craven, $7,983,785; Catawba, $7,952,110, and Orange, $6,563,605.

Greene County authorized 306,500 in total construction to rank 67th.

Guilford County also ranked first in total non-residential authorized construction for November 1986 with $36,377,808; followed by Mecklenburg, $33,540,643; Durham, $32,525,612; Wake, $19,321,649; Buncombe, $12,478,138; Catawba, $5,933,619; Forsyth, $5,244,524; Union, $4,259,260; New Hanover, $3,923,402, and Davidson, $2,849,380.

Pitt County authorized $533,890 in non-residential construction in November 1986 to rank 28th, while Green County ranked 41st with $301,500 in construction authorized.

Pitt County ranked 27th in residential construction authorized with $2,142,873 for the month, while Greene County authorized $5,000 to rank 72nd.

Wake County led with $34,012,672 in residential construction; followed by Guilford, with $29,213,664; Mecklenburg, $26,032,694; Forsyth, $11,309,995; New Hanover, $9,899,756; Durham, $7,510,035; Buncombe; $5,055,071; Cumberland, $5,019,808, and Union, $4,909,869.

Meanwhile, building activity in the state's 45 largest cities and towns for November 1986 dropped 14.4 percent below the activity recorded for November 1985, state Labor Commissioner John C. Brooks said.

There were permits recorded for 3,339 units in November 1986, compared to 3,899 units in November 1985. The November 1986, figure was 17.1 percent below the 4,029 units recorded in October 1986.

Estimated value of the activity in November 1986 — $194,398,162 — rose 1.3 percent above the $191,838,245 recorded in November 1985, and 9 percent above the $178,361,388 recorded in 1986.

Total residential construction (including alterations and additions), at 2,428 units, dropped 19 percent from November 1985's 2,996 units and 9.6 percent from October 1986's 2,686 units. Value, at $80,965,212, dropped 16.4 percent from November 1985's $96,831,358 and 6.6 percent from October 1986's $86,664,124.

Single-family homes, 790 units, decreased 24.1 percent from 1,041 units in November 1985. Value, $47,400,489, dropped 23.4 percent from $61,865,510 in November 1985. Units were down 17.5 percent from October 1986's 957, with value down 14 percent from October 1986's $55,112,262.

Mobile home units, 62, decreased 22.5 percent from 80 units in November 1985, and 27.1 percent from 85 units in October 1986. Mobile home value, $762,463, was down 22.2 percent from $979,588 in November 1985 and 33.3 percent from $1,142,917 a month earlier.

Multifamily units, at 958, dropped 16 percent from November 1985's 1,141, but rose 19.9 percent from October 1986's figure of 799 units. Value, at $26,722,720, dropped 4.2 percent from November 1986's $27,906,278, but increased 22.4 percent from October 1986's $21,837,666.

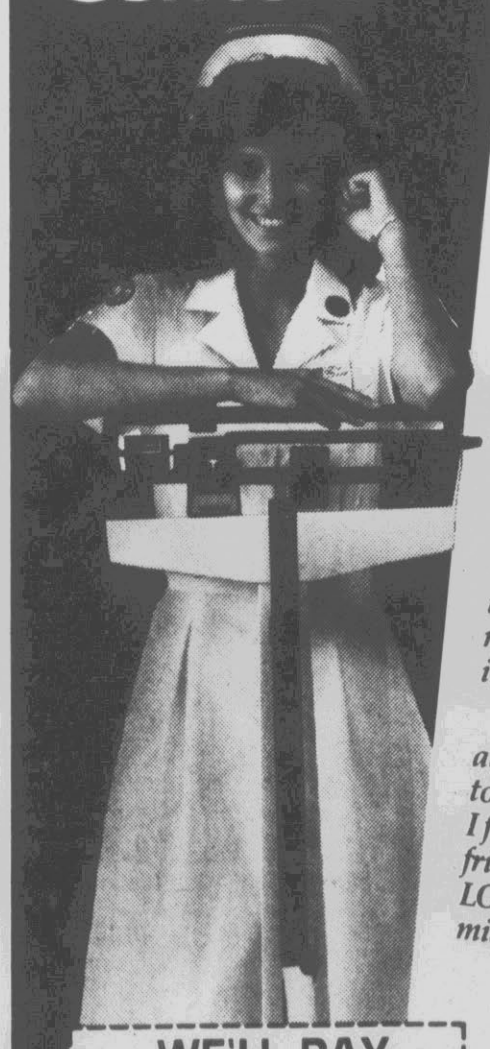
The average construction cost of a single-family home in November 1986 — $60,001 — was up 1 percent from $59,429 in November 1985 and up 4.2 percent from $57,589 in October 1986.

Residential alteration and addition unit permits, 618, dipped 15.8 percent from November 1985's 734 units and 26.9 percent from 845 in October 1986. Value, at $6,079,540, statistically was unchanged from November 1985's value of $6,079,982 but down 29.1 percent from the $8,571,279 value of a month earlier.

Total non-residential construction (including alterations and additions), at 911, increased 0.9 percent from November 1985's 903 units but down 32.2 percent from October 1986's 1,343 units. Value, at $113,432,950, increased 19.4 percent from November 1985's $95,006,887 and 23.7 percent from October 1986's $91,697,264.

Non-residential permits for totally new construction rose with permits for 444 units issued, a 12.7 percent increase from the permits for 394 units in November 1985. Value, at $74,271,241, increased 9 percent from $68,169,131. Permits were down 14.8 percent from October 1986's 521 units but value was up 61.1 percent from $46,101,612.

"My Letter to Physicians WEIGHT LOSS Centers"
—Martha Fulton



Dear Physicians WEIGHT LOSS Centers,

When I walked into Physicians WEIGHT LOSS Centers, I realized that for the first time, I was going to receive exactly what I needed to lose my weight—professional help.

Anyone can read a diet and follow it for a while, but without the guidance that inspires motivation from within, it's futile to attempt losing 20 pounds, much less 175. Physicians WEIGHT LOSS Centers' medical supervision, unceasing support and professionalism carried me through to my goal. I lost 174 pounds in 10 months—over 4 pounds a week average!

18 months ago, I could only fantasize about the confident young woman I wanted to be. Now the fantasy is a beautiful reality. I feel like Cinderella and as long as I have friends like those at Physicians WEIGHT LOSS Centers the clock will never strike midnight.

Thinserely,
Martha M. Fulton

Offshore Rumbling Puzzling To Coastal Residents

By SUSAN PRICE WILSON
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Residents of North Carolina's southeastern coast call it the "Seneca Guns" and say it's caused by chunks of the continental shelf dropping off a cliff under the Atlantic Ocean.

"You will feel the house kind of shake and windows rattle," said Walt Workman, assistant chief of police in Long Beach. "It sounds a lot like a sonic boom type of thing."

The rumbling boom with a sound like artillery fire is heard along North Carolina's southernmost beaches, sometimes as often as once or twice a week, and scientists can't explain the phenomenon. The sounds have been heard as far north as Fort Fisher, located just north of Cape Fear

Whatever it is, it's not the continental shelf breaking off, says Jim Lanier, director of the North Carolina Aquarium at Fort Fisher.

"We have heard it here several times," Lanier said."The times we heard it, it was pretty dramatic. It sounds exactly like artillery fire, artillery guns."

Susan McClain, dispatcher at the Southport Police Department, says the offshore booming has been going on since she was a youngster.

"I hear it all the time. There's no pattern. It's something between a sonic boom and an earthquake," Ms. McClain said. "We've had people call and say it shook windows and knocked things off the shelf. Some days it's heavier than others."

Roby Osborne, police chief in Long Beach, believes the same thing that causes the rumbling is also eroding the beach.

"Ever since that started, this beach has been going," Osborne said.

But Workman, who has been in Long Beach since 1984, can't decide if he thinks the rumblings are the work of nature.

"You never hear it after 6 p.m. and I don't recall that I've ever heard it on a Sunday, but the good Lord may not want to disturb things on Sunday," Workman said. "Fishermen, when they're out on the ocean and the thing goes off, say it sounds more like bombs being dropped to them."

"It seems more prevalent in the summertime. Maybe it has something to do with the tides," Workman says.

The theory about the continental shelf breaking off is "a total misconception of the shelf or the slope," Lanier said.

"It's very gradual in this area. The continental shelf and the slope are quite gradual and there's nothing there that could break off and make this kind of rumbling noise," Lanier said.

But Lanier admits that the noises are a mystery.

"We had a funny instance where they had been going off a few times, and it sounded like one morning that someone had been rolling heavy equipment over the exhibit room floor," Lanier said. "There was a rumbling and you could feel the building shake, just slightly, not alarming, but the way it would shake when a jet broke the sound barrier."

"Of course people go and check it out and no jet broke the sound barrier in the area and the military disclaims any knowledge of any explosions going on and then people start speculating about what it is," he said.

Lanier says geologist Victor Zullo at the University of North Carolina at Wilmington has told him he believes the noise is caused by naval gunfire, and that he's convinced that the military, for whatever reason, was disowning knowledge of it.

"It sounds exactly like that (artillery fire), but that doesn't mean that's what it is," Lanier said. "I know of no reason why the Navy would disavow firing offshore if they were."

"It's a little frustrating for all of us in that we don't have an explanation for it," Lanier said. "Under those circumstances, it's understandable that there's a lot of misinformation around.

"But it's NOT the continental shelf breaking off," he said.

IN THE STATE

No Recount Ordered

RALEIGH (AP) — A Superior Court judge has refused to order a recount in the 6th District congressional race, upholding the State Board of Elections' decision to declare Rep. Howard Coble, R-N.C., the winner by 79 votes.

Former Rep. Robin Britt, a Democrat who lost to Coble, had filed a lawsuit asking that all 144,579 ballots cast in the Nov. 4 election be recounted or that a new election be held. Britt charged there were massive irregularities in the vote tabulation, which showed Coble with 72,329 votes to Britt's 72,250.

But Judge Giles R. Clark, who presided over the Wake County Superior Court hearing on Britt's suit, ruled Friday that the election board was on solid legal ground when it certified Coble's victory Dec. 19.

Coble said the ruling should put the issue of his re-election to rest.

"This thing has taken a very thorough and deliberate course," he said in a telephone interview from Washington. "The Britt people have had their day in court time and time again. No one has slammed doors in their faces. ... It seems to me with clarity and conclusiveness that the race is over."

Britt was not in court and did not return telephone calls to his home and Greensboro office. His attorney, John Wallace, said he would recommend that Britt appeal Clark's ruling.

"It's always difficult for a Superior Court judge sitting in review of an administrative agency to overturn a decision of an administrative agency," Wallace said. "I feel an appeal is appropriate."

CP&L Response

DURHAM, N.C. (AP) — Published reports that low-grade anchor bolts showed up at 11 nuclear reactors, including Shearon Harris Nuclear Power plant, omit the fact that the problem was detected and resolved, a Carolina Power & Light spokesman says.

Mac Harris told The Durham Sun the issue goes back to CP&L's construction of the plant in 1983 and was resolved to the satisfaction of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission in 1985.

Harris said some substandard bolts turned up and inspectors used construction plans to verify that the proper bolts were used in each place.

"We realized that the process could allow bolts of varying strength to be substituted for each other," he said.

Harris said each bolt was tagged individually to indicate its strength to construction workers. In some cases, he said, the tags were knocked loose before the J-shaped bolts, partially imbedded in concrete to hold equipment, were installed.

Hold On To Interest Deductions At Prime Plus One.

Wachovia Equity BankLine® lets you turn the money in your home into tax-deductible credit, at low prime-based rates.

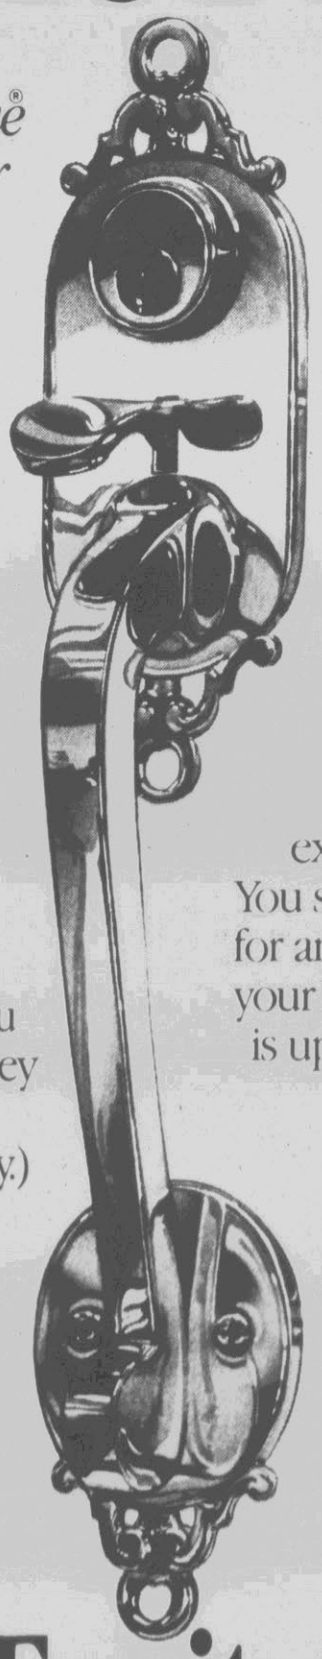
Those valuable deductions on consumer credit interest for such things as your car loan, charge cards or installment loans will soon be a thing of the past. With one main exception. Interest on credit secured by your home. Like Wachovia Equity BankLine.

Your tax advantage stays intact.

Equity BankLine is a line of credit of $10,000 to $50,000 or more that you can use to consolidate your present balances or use for future borrowing needs. If you itemize, the interest you pay for the money you borrow will, in most cases, still be deductible. (Certain limitations may apply.)

Another plus: prime-based interest.

Your interest rate is based on Wachovia's Prime Rate.* Which makes Equity BankLine a more economical way to borrow.



Your Credit Line	Your Interest Rate	Annual Percentage Rate for January, 1987*
$15,000 or more	Prime + 1%	8½%
$10,000 to $14,999	Prime + 1½%	9%

Forget the origination fee.

At Wachovia you pay no origination fee to establish your Equity BankLine. And there is no annual fee. Other mortgage loan closing costs may apply, but we'll do everything possible to help you minimize them.

Cash at your fingertips.

With Equity BankLine you have extra money available anytime, anywhere. You simply write an Equity BankLine check for any amount up to the funds available on your line. How you use the money you borrow is up to you.

MARTIN THREAT — Highway Patrol Sgt. Ronnie Hayes leads Samuel Dixon Jr., 27, of Raleigh to the magistrate's office in the Wake County Courthouse Friday after he was charged with threatening Gov. Jim Martin. Dixon was also charged with carrying a concealed weapon and two counts of assault on a police officer. (AP Laserphoto)

Raleigh Man Arrested After Threat On Martin

RALEIGH (AP) — A 27-year-old Raleigh man was taken into custody Friday after he allegedly walked into Gov. Jim Martin's offices, threatened him and several law enforcement officers, authorities said.

The Wake County Magistrate's office said Samuel Junior Dixon was charged with making a threat against an executive officer of the state, two counts of resisting arrest and two counts of communicating threats on law enforcement officers, two counts of assault on a law enforcement officer and one count of carrying a concealed weapon.

He was placed in Wake County jail under $102,000 bond.

Herb Gay, chief of the State Capitol Police, said a man walked into the Administration Building and said he was going to harm the governor. Martin, who has offices in both the Administration Building and the State Capitol, was not in the building at the time the man entered.

"He threatened bodily harm to the governor," Gay said. "He just walked in and told the receptionist that he was going to injure the governor."

Although Gay did not describe the threats, WPTF-TV reported that a man walked into the Administration Building, claimed that the governor put him in jail and that "it was time to set things straight."

According to the television reports, a struggle followed between Dixon and several law enforcement officers. He was restrained by agents of the State Bureau of Investigation and Raleigh police, according to Gay.

"They had him in the squad car in a matter of a few minutes, but when he got to the magistrate's office, he started kicking and screaming," Gay said. "He was very violent."

New Leaf Law Prompts Flurry Of Quota Buying

By DOROTHY GAST
Associated Press Writer

ROANOKE, Va. (AP) — Because of a change in federal law, Ray Emerson says he had to buy two farms and pay out thousands of dollars to maintain the right to plant the tobacco he has been growing for years.

The 49-year-old Pittsylvania County farmer, like growers throughout the Southeast, plants only as much flue-cured tobacco as the federal government will allow. He has been supplementing his own poundage quota by renting allotments from other land owners.

But starting this year, federal law prohibits the lease and transfer of quotas. Big producers like Emerson have been scrambling to buy quotas from owners unable to farm their share or whose allotments are so small they are not worth planting.

"Now I'll know how much I'm going to be able to plant every year, so I'll be able to plan better. I'll know how to line up my labor," Emerson said. "But I've socked a lot of money into buying poundage, and I could be caught owing alot of money and no way of paying it back."

Many small producers, forced to sell, are bemoaning the loss of a steady, annual lease income. For Louis and Gertrude Edwards of Johnston County, N.C., sale of their allotment also would mean the end of a way of life.

"We have a small farm, my husband is disabled and I don't work. I have to stay home with him," said Mrs. Edwards, 60. "Our only income is his Social Security, so we're living off leasing the tobacco.

"There's a man who wants it. All we have to do is say 'yes.' We've been discussing it today, but we just can't decide. It means no more tobacco on the farm, and the farm is the heritage of our kids.

"It just bothers me that we have something crammed down our throats that we just don't want. It we don't sell the allotment, we'll lose it."

Congress voted in 1982 to prohibit the lease and transfer of quotas starting this year, in part because of concerns that lease rates were driving up tobacco production prices, officials said.

Ray Fleming, chief of the tobacco program adjustment branch in the Washington office of the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service, said 143,000 land owners have allotments to grow flue-cured tobacco in six states from Virginia to Florida. The average quota is about three acres, he said, and about half of the allotment owners have been leasing their shares to someone else.

"That entire 50 percent won't be selling their allotments, but I would say this is going to cut the number of allotment owners substantially," he said by telephone.

The federal government has cut the size of quotas by about 50 percent during the past decade because of falling demand for tobacco, Fleming said. Farmers who grow more than their share are not eligible for price supports financed by assessments paid by growers, he said.

At the ASCS office in Pittsylvania County, as many as 20 people have been waiting at one time during the past week to record the sale of allotments, said Warren Price, county ASCS director. The office bulletin board is littered with the names and phone numbers of farmers wishing to buy and land owners ready to sell.

"We mailed out allotment notices the 12th of January," Price said. "Since that time our office has been chaos."

Pittsylvania County has 2,634 allotments, Price said, but half of those landowners have been leasing their quotas to someone else. Unless a property owner grows tobacco on his land two out of three years, finds someone else to grow tobacco on the owner's land or rents out his entire farm, he faces giving up his right to grow tobacco.

The atmosphere has been much quieter in Pitt County, N.C., the nation's biggest flue-cured tobacco producer. There, quotas average six acres per farm and are big enough to make it financially feasible for most owners to plant crop, said Carey Faulk, local ASCS director.

W.F. Tyson, who grows 46 acres of tobacco in Pitt County, said he was leasing allotments from neighboring farms. He plans to plant tobacco on those farms to keep up his acreage without buying quotas.

In Johnston County, N.C., grower Kenneth Talton said he bought the right to produce tobacco for as little as $1.25 a pound, but the price has risen by 25 or 30 cents. He quit buying when the price jumped.

He believes the ban on lease and transfer will help lower tobacco prices that had been inflated by the cost of renting quotas.

"It's very difficult to rent tobacco," he said. "Every year it's just a bidding war. Until a contract is signed, you really don't know what you've got."

Emerson said that since 1983, he has purchased the right to grow and sell about 100,000 pounds of tobacco a year at a cost of $1.25 to $2 a pound. Under yields considered average by the federal government, the quota would fit on 70 to 80 acres, he said.

Federal law allows farmers to purchase only half as many acres of allotment as they have in open crop land, Emerson said. He said he had to buy two farms so he would have enough land to meet the requirement.

Emerson said he purchased quotas from about 30 farmers. He bought from people he had leased allotments from and from people who had contacted him. And he put an ad in a local paper to track down more sellers. "This is definitely going to be a hardship for people who don't have the land to put the tobacco on," he said. "But I think in the long run, this will be for the best. It's giving people who want to stay in a chance to purchase that right."

Controls Urged

RALEIGH (AP) — A legislative commission has recommended controls on legal fees in court cases and felony charges for doctors who falsify patients' medical records.

But the N.C. Medical Malpractice Study Commission delayed a decision on two proposals which would have addressed liability problems of doctors who deliver babies and manufacturers who provide childhood vaccines.

Rep. George W. Miller, D-Durham, argued in favor of the measure to require judges to approve lawyers' fees at the end of a trial. It passed after sharp debate among commission members, including several doctors and lawyers.

"I'm not sure we'll not be opening a can of worms," said Sen. Thomas F. Taft, commission chairman and a lawyer in Greenville. Taft said few legal contingency fees ever reached 40 percent of the amount awarded by a jury, a level that some critics say attorneys charge. But Dr. David Bruton, a Southern Pines doctro and commission member, said the measure would ensure that patients, rather than their lawyers, got most of the compensation intended by a jury.

"The plaintiff ought to get that money," Bruton said.

Industrial Center Teaches Special People Confidence

By MIKE MANGIAMELI
The Robesonian

LUMBERTON, N.C. (AP) — Their business is people, and business has been good.

The Southeastern Industrial Center is an unusual enterprise in that it teaches skills and confidence. Not the skill needed to become an engineer, but to push a broom, do simple woodworking or packaging.

The confidence taught is not that which will enable someone to take over a big corporation, but how to wash clothes, to sew, to do those things most of us take for granted, such as basic, daily health care.

"We have a varying number of handicapped persons at the center, some with disabilities that include mental retardation, some in vocational rehabilitation, and a few from the Willie M program," said center director Becky Britt, adding that all the workers come to the center from community referral programs.

"One of the criteria for our employees is that they all have barriers against regular employment," Ms. Britt said.

Some graduates of the center take on jobs many other people avoid. The dirty, unpleasant ones, those that pay minimum wage. These graduates aren't money oriented. They're happy just to be productive, and they take a great deal of pride in what they are able to accomplish.

While some employers are reluctant to hire the handicapped, others give them preference.

"I've found that handicapped people often work harder than those people we consider 'normal,'" said Dobbs Oxendine, an entrepreneur who owns several businesses in the Lumberton area. "I think employers who overlook these people are really missing out. They have a lot to offer."

Under the direction of Ms. Britt, people at the center learn to clip and use coupons, make pallets and potato boxes and do janitorial work and assembly line work. And with a newly opened sheltered workshop, they learn to handle money, do inventory and learn customer relations.

Ms. Britt refers to her students not as "handicapped," but as clients who are learning "work adjustment."

"The clients are taught abilities through which ... they can begin to lead productive lives," she said. "We want to teach a skill, to inspire confidence. What may be a very simple thing for you or me to do could be a major accomplishment for some of our people."

In many ways, the center is self-sustaining. The products made in the center are either sold through the workshop or through contracts with companies. Some of the companies that have benefited include Campbell Soup, Boise Cascade, Faberge, Jasper Mills and Century 21.

With a staff of 17 and six full-time instructors, Ms. Britt keeps current projects going while researching for new ideas and products.

The latest is the gift shop, in which nearly every client contributes in one way or another.

"We have a mobile janitorial crew that does work throughout Robeson County," she said. "When they return to the center, they can't wait to see the gift shop and offer their services.

"Unlike some of the products made here, like the pallets which are sent to a company, our clients actually see the fruits of their labors bought by real people."

State Official Loses His Job

RALEIGH (AP) — Ray DeBruhl was removed Friday as director of the State Building Section of the Department of Administration in what a department spokesman said was an attempt to improve efficiency.

"In this particular case, a decision was made to have the head of the State Property Office and the head of the Office of State Construction report directly to the deputy secretary," said David Guff, who said DOA has been looking for ways "to improve efficiency and streamline the department" since September.

Guff said DeBruhl was not fired but was "riffed," meaning he was part of a reduction in force.

"It's my understanding he does have certain re-employment rights, certain appeal rights, certain severance rights," Guff said.

DeBruhl had been among state officials at an executive session of the Governmental Operations Committee on Thursday and was privy to discussions about prisons, Guff said. But he said there was no link between DeBruhl's severance and the committee's deliberations.

"The timing ... may look unfortunate, but it is, I believe, coincidental," he said. "The streamlining discussions we have been discussing were first brought up in September."

Guff said DeBruhl was surprised to learn of the action on Friday, when he receive two weeks written notice.

"In the final analysis, what it all comes down to is sometimes being a manager isn't easy," Guff said. "I think everyone concerned will tell you Ray did a good job, but we saw by streamlining we could do away with that position."

DeBruhl did not return phone calls to his office Friday afternoon.

Students Evacuated

RALEIGH (AP) — Articles which officials said resembled a bomb were found in a North Carolina State University dormitory Saturday afternoon, forcing the evacuation of about 750 students from their rooms, authorities said.

The items were not explosive, said Maj. Miles Heckendorn of N.C. State campus police and students were allowed back into their rooms at 6 p.m. after a one-hour investigation.

"It was certainly authentic enough to demand the attention it was given," Heckendorn said in a telephone interview Saturday night. "It was certainly a deliberate attempt to make it seem realistic."

According to Heckendorn, a residence assistant at Sullivan Dormitory was called by students who said they had found the device in the hallway outside their room. When the assistant arrived and saw the device, he activated an alarm which summoned campus police and rescue personnel.

After campus police arrived and saw the fake device, students in Sullivan and nearby Lee dorm were ordered by public address system to leave their rooms immediately.

Raleigh police and fire units were called in, as was the bomb disposal team from the State Bureau of Investigation.

Legal Assistance

CHARLESTON, S.C. (AP) — The South Carolina Bar is working to make sure the state's financially troubled farmers have access to legal help in the wake of widespread farm bankruptcies across the state.

"We all recognize farmers are in some degree of distress in South Carolina and across the nation," said W. Brantley Harvey Jr., president of the South Carolina Bar.

City-County Battling May Crush Water Pact

By BARBARA BLAKE
The Asheville Citizen

ASHEVILLE (AP) — When the city-county water agreement was signed in October of 1981, there was a sigh of relief that an accord had been reached after years of false starts, bitter stalemates and repeated bouts of miscommunication and misunderstanding.

The water agreement may be the most hard-fought and hard-won document in the history of Asheville and Buncombe County. It reflects compromise on the part of both city and county officials. It gives county residents more representation on issues involving the city-owned water system while giving city residents some relief from the burden of double taxation that existed before the agreement was signed.

But five years after its signing, the agreement may be in jeopardy — the Buncombe County Board of Commissioners has proposed substantial changes in the document, which Asheville City Council is vehemently resisting.

The views of both boards will be aired at a joint meeting Feb. 17.

Serious discussions about a water agreement began in November of 1979 in an attempt to give county residents more say in policies involving the water system, the bulk of which was built and paid for by the city but which includes some county-owned water lines.

As the talks moved toward giving the county more of a say in the system — primarily through county representation on a new city-county water authority — the city began pushing for relief from "double taxation." To the city, double taxation meant that city taxpayers were paying county taxes and city taxes, but part of the city tax went to fund countywide activities such as Recreation Park and Municipal Golf Course — while county taxpayers enjoyed those services at no cost.

The double taxation issue also involved law enforcement. The agreement includes a formula for reimbursement to the county's municipalities for sheriff's patrol, which the municipalities paid for through their county taxes but did not use because they had their own law enforcement agencies paid for entirely by the municipal taxpayers.

The focal point of the discussions was creation of a water authority and a more equitable sharing in policymaking involving the water system. But because the agreement also included substantial changes in city and county funding of services, the talks led to bitter exchanges and frequent stalemates as both governments fought to obtain or retain what money they felt was rightfully theirs.

Numerous times during the two-year period, one board or the other would snatch up its position papers during joint meetings and stalk back to City Hall or the courthouse, declaring that the water agreement was a dead issue. On at least one occasion the commissioners announced their intent to go their own way and build a separate water system for the county.

Months went by when the only communication between the governing boards was through position papers, terse memorandums or bitter statements to the news media.

At the root of that bitterness was the county's contention that the city was trying to dump its financial problems on the county, while the city's view was that city taxpayers had been supporting the county taxpayers for years through double taxation. The city's stance continued to be that the county would never have a say in the water system unless it agreed to relieve some of the city taxpayers' unfair financial burden.

From November 1979 to October 1981, the proposed agreement fell apart countless times. Among the catalysts for the disputes were issues such as annexation, funding of maintenance of water lines, and the Sullivan Act — special legislation passed by the General Assembly in 1933 forbidding Asheville to charge water customers outside the city limits higher rates than city residents pay. Asheville is the only city in the state that must abide by the Sullivan Act.

After proposals and several counter-proposals, the deal was finally made. On Oct. 29, 1981, the battle was over. The city-county water agreement was signed in a brief ceremony in City Hall with a room full of officials and civic leaders on hand to witness the historic and long-awaited moment.

And are the water wars about to begin again?

The city-county water agreement that was signed in 1981 contains a clause saying the agreement may be terminated by either the Buncombe County Board of Commissioners or Asheville City Council any time after Dec. 31, 1986, as long as one year's notice is given.

The commissioners have proposed substantial changes in the document and have indicated that they may terminate the agreement if those changes are not approved by City Council.

The commissioners say in a recent and unanimous position paper that after five years, it is "not unreasonable ... to recognize that the document has areas where actual experience differs from what the originators might have anticipated — this being the case, the board of commissioners wishes to open negotiations leading toward revision of several specific portions of the water agreement."

Mayor Louis Bissette says that both boards agreed in 1981 that the document is "fair and equitable to both parties" and that the council is highly unlikely to accept most of the proposed changes.

If the situation reaches the point that the city refuses to agree to the changes and the county decides to get out of the agreement, the results could have a major impact on water customers — particularly those living outside the city limits.

One of the provisions of the water agreement is that the city will not seek repeal of the 1933 local law prohibiting the city from charging non-city residents higher water rates than city residents pay. That provision was included in the agreement in exchange for the county's willingness to contribute substantially more funding to the city in an attempt to relieve city taxpayers of double taxation.

If the agreement is terminated, it is possible the city will seek repeal of the law. If that effort is successful, non-city residents may find themselves paying double or triple the water rates charged to city residents if City Council uses that tool to make up for the loss of the county's financial contribution.

State Residents Face Disposal Site Anxieties

By TIM BASS
The Fayetteville Times

BARNWELL, S.C. (AP) — Late afternoons here, you can find R.J. Baxley and Clyde Grubbs — fold-up chairs and fishing poles in hand — heading for Lake Edgar Brown on the edge of town.

Known for its catfish and named for the late South Carolina Senate president, the lake is about five miles from a disposal site for low-level radioactive waste — a hazardous byproduct of scientific research, medical technology and nuclear power generation.

"I wish (the disposal facility) would get slap out of the United States," Baxley, 68, said as he watched his cork bobbing in the water.

"If the thing starts leaking, it'll contaminate everything to the ocean. ... The thing about it is, no matter where you're going with it, the money man wants it. But, buddy, what good is a payroll when you've done and killed everybody around?"

Grubbs, 72, a custodian with Barnwell County schools, agreed: "If that stuff ever gets away, we're going to have to move on."

But most area residents disagree.

They tout the facility's safety record and the revenue brought into the area. A recent survey, according to Barnwell Mayor Rodman Lemon, showed that 74 percent of the county's citizens want the facility, located in the corporate limits of Snelling, to remain open.

The anxiety voiced by Baxley and Grubbs, though, is being experienced in North Carolina now that the state has been chosen to open a low-level waste facility to serve an eight-state region by 1991.

"Clearly, we're not dancing in the street," one North Carolina official said about the 1986 decision by the Southeast Compact Commission for Low-Level Radioactive Waste Management.

The Southeast Compact was one of 12 groups of states formed after Congress passed legislation in 1980 requiring states either to dispose of their own low-level waste or form regional compacts. North Carolina became a member of the Compact in 1983, joining Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Mississippi, South Carolina, Tennessee and Virginia.

The compact concept grew out of a controversy that arose soon after Richard Riley became governor of South Carolina in 1979 and warned that his state would no longer be the "nation's nuclear garbage can." That year, South Carolina's Barnwell County site would become the most heavily used facility in commercial waste disposal history, according to a report prepared for the U.S. Nuclear Regulatory Commission.

Riley, claiming that since 1971 South Carolina had been the burial ground for as much as 85 percent (actually peaking at 77 percent in 1979, according to an NRC report) of the country's low-level radioactive waste, issued an ultimatum: It will no longer be business as usual after Jan. 1, 1986.

Riley was supported by the governors of Washington state and Nevada, the homes of the other commercial low-level waste disposal facilities. Their efforts prompted Congress to enact the Low-Level Radioactive Waste Policy Act of 1980.

When Mayor Lemon learned that North Carolina had been selected to host a site to replace the one at Barnwell, he lamented the probable loss of what he calls his community's best industry

"We'd take all the waste in the country if we could," the mayor said. "It'd suit me fine."

Merchants and businesses in Barnwell County gain about $3 million a year in supply and equipment purchases by the facility's operator, Chem-Nuclear Systems Inc.

Employing 235 people, Chem-Nuclear has an annual payroll of about $3 million. In 1985, the county received $575,000 in fees and property taxes from Chem-Nuclear; the town of Snelling (population 150) gained $50,000; and the state of South Carolina put more than $9 million into its treasury.

"A lot of the community sort of laughs at the outsiders who want to say how bad it is," said Dennis Shephard of South Carolina's Department of Health and Environmental Control. "This community has no more excess deaths from cancer, leukemia, any of the normal causes of death, than any other community would have. ... There has been just absolutely, to the best of my knowledge, no major problems whatsoever."

But environmentalist David Berick, a Washington, D.C., spokesman for the Union of Concerned Scientists has another view: "The burden is there for generations to come, because those wastes are hazardous for generations to come."

There has been some discussion about North Carolina withdrawing from the Southeast Compact. But Gov. Jim Martin has stated that he thinks North Carolina should make good on its commitment to the Compact and take its turn.

A site will have to be selected even if the state withdraws. States that do not belong to compacts are legally responsible for disposing of their own waste and possibly waste from outside the state.

Thirty-eight N.C. counties were identified in a Compact study as having land potentially suitable for a facility to handle up to 32 million cubic feet of low-level waste over 20 years

The issues will be awaiting the 1987 General Assembly when it convenes Feb. 9. The lawmakers already are hearing from local government officials and citizens concerned with site selection. Most of those views are unfavorable, like that of Barbara Marsh, chairwoman of the Moore County Waste Management Board.

"We have a large tourism industry here," she said. "We don't need to advertise: 'Come to Pinehurst. It's only 20 miles from the waste dump.'"

Dog Survives 32-Day Trip

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — A black Labrador retriever named Jet who survived an estimated 32 days in a locked boxcar during a cross-country train trip will be going home next week.

The dog apparently got into the car when it was being unloaded near Shelby in mid-December and was overlooked when the doors were shut.

The weakened animal, its ribs showing beneath its curly, short-haired coat, wobbled from the boxcar Thursday morning when an employee of the Linnton Plywood Association opened the car on a railroad siding.

Jet's owner, Melinda Stroup of Waco, learned about her pet's whereabouts in a phone call from Terry Castrow, an assistant sales manager at Linnton Plywood.

The dog was identified from a tag attached to its collar.

"I can't believe it, and way up in Oregon," said Ms. Stroup.

Ms. Stroup said Jet had vanished about four weeks ago.

"He's a very lucky, lucky dog," Ms. Stroup said. "Three years ago, he got some poison, and we thought he was going to be dead then because he slept three days. Our veterinarian didn't give us any hope of being able to pull him out of it. But he got well and he's healthy, or he couldn't still be alive after this."

Partisan Split Emerging Over Immunity Issue

By BRYAN BRUMLEY
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Lawmakers said Saturday that it was too early to decide whether to honor a request from the independent counsel investigating the Iran arms affair that they not grant immunity to two former White House aides who have so far refused to answer questions.

A partisan split appeared to be developing on the issue, however, with Democrats favoring and Republicans opposing the request by independent counsel Lawrence Walsh that select House and Senate committees investigating the matter withhold immunity from former national security adviser Vice Adm. John M. Poindexter and Lt. Col. Oliver L. North.

A purely partisan split would favor the Democrats, who hold nine of 15 places on the House committee, and six of 11 spots on the Senate panel.

Rep. Henry J. Hyde, R-Ill., a member of the House panel, said he expected that both committees would ultimately grant some form of immunity to either North or Poindexter, or both, but that the timing was uncertain.

In letters to the committee chairmen, Walsh said that granting immunity could "create serious and perhaps insurmountable barriers to the prosecution of the witnesses."

President Reagan has asked Congress to grant immunity to his former aides so that the facts would be disclosed and the furor ended. Walsh's duty is to determine whether any crimes were committed and, if so, to seek indictments.

Once Congress has granted immunity, Walsh would need to prove that he had gathered evidence independently of the congressional inquiries, if he is to mount a prosecution.

"The government's burden of proving the independent nature of its evidence is so great that successful prosecution usually would be extremely difficult," Walsh said in his letter.

Poindexter and North, who left the White House in November after disclosure of the arms sales and diversion of funds to help Nicaraguan rebels, have cited their constitutional protection against self-incrimination in declining to answer questions before other congressional committees.

Attorney General Edwin Meese III has said that North handled both the arms sales and aid to the rebels, and that Poindexter knew of the actions.

Rep. Dante Fascell, D-Fla., a panel member who is also chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, said he would continue to oppose giving immunity to North or Poindexter.

"I have consistently maintained that it would be inappropriate at this time to grant immunity before the independent counsel has an opportunity to develop his case," Fascell said in a statement issued through his spokeswoman, Barabara Burris.

Two Republicans on the committee said they favored the immunity on grounds that it would speed the day when the full facts came to light. All three lawmakers said that committee members would consult among themselves and with Walsh before voting on immunity.

"I get the feeling that the Democratic leadership, in the House at least, is not terribly eager to get this behind us," said Rep. William S. Broomfield, R-Mich., a member of the House select committee.

"I am disappointed, because I think we ought to be looking at the bigger picture and be trying to get this matter behind us," Broomfield said in a telephone interview.

A request that the committees wait for 30 days before making a decision "would be reasonable," Broomfield said. But Walsh's investigation may last into next year, he said, and "I don't think the country can stand to go on that long."

Hyde said "I would like to hear Poindexter and North tell their stories."

It was too early to predict a partisan split on the issue, Hyde said, "unless the Democrats decide to stretch this out for political reasons. But that is a dangerous game"

Hyde, in a telephone interview, said "I don't see any impending conflict" with Walsh. "It is just a staking out of positions.

It was not possible Saturday to reach the chairmen of the Senate and House Committees, Sen. Daniel K. Inouye, D-Hawaii, and Rep. Lee Hamilton, D-Ind.

Aides to three lawmakers, Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., Sen. Paul S. Sarbanes, D-Md., and Sen. Warren Rudman, R-N.H., said that those senators were not commenting on the investigation or the letter.

Victim Of AIDS Dies After Crusade To Inform Others

LAFAYETTE, Ind. (AP) — A woman who got AIDS apparently from a blood transfusion and became a spokeswoman for others with the disease died Saturday at 25.

Amelia "Amy" Sloan died in her sleep with her husband and 2-year-old son at her side, said John Sanderson, spokesman at St. Elizabeth Hospital, adding that the death was caused by acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

"Amy wanted to make things easier for other people who had AIDS," said Lou Ann Baker, a State Board of Health staffer who had worked with Mrs. Sloan for a year in AIDS education programs. "Amy would provide a very open and a very personal perspective of what it was like living with AIDS."

"She was a terrific lady," said Jeanne White of Kokomo, the mother of 14-year-old AIDS victim Ryan White, whose fight to be allowed to attend public school drew wide attention. "I think Indiana can really be proud of her. A lot of people admired her."

Mrs. Sloan testified in Ryan's behalf before state officials.

A year ago, Gov. Robert D. Orr presented Mrs. Sloan and her husband, Steve, with the highest honor he can bestow, the "Sagamore of the Wabash," for their efforts in educating the public about AIDS.

Mrs. Sloan learned she was suffering from AIDS in March 1984, the same week she learned she was pregnant. She believed she contracted the disease when she received a blood transfusion in October 1982.

Mrs. Sloan, who discussed the disease on national television, before state officials and in other forums, said her goal was "to get some help for those people who are sick."

"With me speaking out, I might be able to help someone else," she said. "Talking to the media, giving all these interviews, I could do without it. It doesn't do anything for me except make people stare at me even more. But someone has got to do something.

"This is a terrible disease and we all need to work together to get some kind of cure."

The couple filed a malpractice suit against Lafayette Home Hospital and the Central Indiana Regional Blood Bank. The suit, filed in 1984, is still pending.

Services were set for Monday.

Creativity Expert Dies In California

STOCKTON, Calif. (AP) — Dr. Donald W. MacKinnon, a psychology professor who formulated controversial theories on creativity and helped select secret agents during World War II, has died. He was 84.

MacKinnon, a professor at the University of California at Berkeley and an expert on creativity, died Tuesday in a Stockton hospital. He had discovered recently that he had Alzheimer's disease.

During World War II, as director of Station S, a remote Maryland farmhouse, MacKinnon helped single out those he believed would make good spies and leaders of European resistance forces during World War II.

About 2,500 prospective members of the Office of Strategic Services went through the station.

He was a professor of psychology at Bryn Mawr College for women in Pennsylvania until joining the UC Berkeley faculty in 1947. Two years later he founded the Institute of Personality Assessment and Research with a grant from the Rockefeller Foundation.

In 1959 he announced that creative writers and scientists resembled sedate business people. Three famous writers revealed they participated in his study: Truman Capote, William Carlos Williams and McKinlay Kantor.

He issued a controversial report in 1961, saying engineering students were materialistic, power hungry and lacking in creativity.

MacKinnon wrote "In Search of Human Effectiveness" in 1978, describing the search for and identification of creative people.

He retired from the institute in 1970.

MacKinnon is survived by his daughters, Julia Roseblat of Stockton and Ann Povell of New York City and Florida; a sister, Mrs. Robert DeWick of Wiscasset, Maine; four grandchildren and two great-grandchildren.

Winter's Coldest Day Chills Eastern Section

By ROGER PETTERSON
Associated Press Writer

Temperatures crashed to a numbing 45 degrees below zero Saturday in northern Minnesota, freezing temperatures were reported in Florida and homeless people jammed shelters on what was the coldest day of the season for much of the eastern United States.

Winter storm watches were posted for parts of Georgia and the Carolinas as a new snow storm was expected, following the path taken last week by the big storm blamed for 37 deaths from Alabama to New England.

One homeless woman was found dead Saturday in a parking lot in downtown Baltimore, where the National Weather Service thermometer broke but the low was reported at 10 to 12 degrees.

The weather service reported the coldest official reading Saturday in the 48 contiguous states was 45 degrees below zero at Warroad, Minn., on Lake of the Woods near the Canadian border.

Embarrass, Minn., a town of 1,148 people about 60 miles north of Duluth, had a low of 42 below zero, but lifelong resident Adolph Johnson called that normal and said people were prepared.

"We just take everything in stride. We're nice, hardy people here," said Johnson, 56. "We've done this all our lives."

Johnson said he was happy that the cold had finally moved in, because he's leaving Tuesday for a week's vacation in Florida. "I'd have been disappointed flying out and have it 35 above," he said.

International Falls, Minn., which takes pride in being called the "nation's icebox," had a low of 35 below. Far to the west another perennial cold spot, Cut Bank, Mont., had a balmy low of 35 above zero. Juneau, Alaska, had a low of 34.

Elsewhere, lows included 16 below at Marquette, Mich.; 4 below at Chicago; 10 below at Decatur and Springfield, Ill.; 6 below at Toledo, Ohio; 13 below at Lafayette, Ind.; zero at Pittsburgh and Covington, Ky.; 27 at Jacksonville, Fla., and 24 at Tallahassee; and 25 at Huntsville, Ala.

Asheville, N.C., had a record low of 7 and Beckley, W.Va., had a record at 5.

Florida citrus growers reported no apparent damage from a light overnight freeze, said Ernie Neff of Florida Citrus Mutual, a growers' asssociation.

Gusty wind made it feel like 30 to 50 below zero from the Great Lakes to the central Appalachians, and wind chills between zero and 20 below were common across the Northeast.

The weather service posted avalanche warnings for New Hampshire's Presidential Range, where the low atop Mount Washington, tallest in the Northeast at 6,288 feet, was 23 below zero with wind averaging 60 mph. In 1934, Mount Washington recorded the world's highest non-tornado surface wind speed at 231 mph.

Philadelphia International Airport continued reporting long delays for flights Saturday with only one of three runways cleared of Thursday's 10 to 15 inches of snow.

A snow emergency remained in effect in Philadelphia, allowing people to receive emergency fuel assistance. Some 900 families had called for help, the mayor's office said.

"We'll accept as many people as will come in this weekend. We're turning no one away," said Picolla Moore, a volunteer at a Salvation Army shelter in Baltimore. Extra cots were set up in the dining room and lounge areas.

The Pine Street Inn, a private shelter in Boston, offered space to 600 people, four times its 150-bed capacity, said spokesman Randy Bailey.

No figures were available yet for New York City shelters, but 10,213 homeless people were housed Thursday night after the snow storm. The city ajgency that takes insufficient heat complaints from apartment dwellers got about 1,300 calls in 11 hours early Saturday, about average, said supervisor Perry Lindsay Jr.

Most roads were cleared of the snow dumped by last week's storm, but in North and South Carolina about 4,300 customers remained without electricity Saturday, said Andy Thompson of Duke Power Co.

The storm was blamed for 17 deaths in Pennsylvania, most from shoveling snow; five in North Carolina; three each in Tennessee, Connecticut and Maryland; two in New York; and one each in Alabama, South Carolina, Massachusetts and Delaware.

FIRST CITIZENS BANK

Resolutions of The Board of Directors
First Citizens Bank and Trust Company
Greenville and Winterville, North Carolina
January 21, 1987

Whereas, the Board of Directors of the First Citizens Bank and Trust Company, Greenville and Winterville, North Carolina, acting in formal assembly and speaking in behalf of its officers, its employees, its customers, and its friends wishes to express its profound sadness in the passing of its friend, the beloved Dr. Ray Donald Minges, and

Whereas, the fact that our city, area, and state have lost a faithful and compassionate humanitarian, a wise and understanding counselor, a devoted and able physician, a warm and hospitable neighbor and friend, an astute and upright businessman, a loving and kindly husband, father and brother, and an humble Christian, is well known and widely recognized, and

Whereas, Ray supported loyally his community, its institutions of learning and healing, its churches, its serving agencies, its wholesome development, its people, and its spiritual growth, and

Whereas, the Directors of First Citizens Bank join with the community in expressing their sorrow at the passing of Ray Minges, however with the certain knowledge that He, in whom Ray placed his faith, continues to uphold him and us by His Grace. Therein do we find comfort.

Now therefore, be it resolved that a copy of this resolution be spread upon the minutes of this Board of Directors meeting and that a copy be displayed in the Greenville newspaper.

Unanimously approved this the twenty first day of January, 1987 by the Board of Directors of the First Citizens Bank and Trust Company.

Reagan Speech Aimed At Fixing Reputation, Outlining Future Plans

By TERENCE HUNT
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, battered by the Iranian arms sale scandal, will try to reassert his leadership and repair his reputation with a State of the Union address proclaiming his desire for all the facts to come out and sketching a broad agenda for his last two years in office.

However, one of Reagan's key allies — House GOP leader Bob Michel — said "it ain't going to be that great a speech" in terms of rallying Republicans and will not answer critical questions about the secret sale of arms to Iran and the diversion of profits to Contra rebels in Nicaragua.

And Reagan's pollster, Richard Wirthlin, said, "I don't think the way he will address it (Iran) will get any headlines."

Following the tradition set in 1790 by George Washington, Reagan will report to the nation at 9 p.m. EST Tuesday in his sixth annual State of the Union Address before a joint session of Congress.

It is a nationally broadcast extravaganza featuring the president and the Congress in the cavernous chamber of the House of Representatives, with a supporting cast made up of Reagan's Cabinet, the justices of the Supreme Court, ambassadors from around the world and other dignitaries.

It will be Reagan's first major address of the year, calculated to show him strong and in command after surgery Jan. 5 and revelations about the Iran-Contra scheme.

"It can act as a bridge for us, to move from being so much entangled with Iran to establishing our own agenda and establishing the pace we want to carry," said a Reagan adviser, speaking privately.

For the first time in his presidency, Reagan will be facing Democratic majorities in both the Senate and House. White House aides say he will talk of cooperation rather than confrontation.

Reagan's remarks about the Iran-Contra deal will be a minor portion of the speech and offer no new information, according to aides, speaking privately.

Michel of Illinois, in an Associated Press interview, said, "The most pressing problem, from the standpoint of the American people, as far as the president is concerned, is 'what is it with this Iranian thing?'

"And they're not going get (that) from him, I don't think, well I just know," said Michel, who has been briefed on the speech. "The only thing, frankly, that's going to satisfy the American people is (to) lay out everything cold turkey for them and then let's get on with it."

He said the administration needs to clear the air on the Iran-Contra affair before it can get on with its agenda. Even so, Michel added, "it's just unrealistic to think ... the president's going to say, 'We blew it and let's go on from here.'"

Wirthlin said that Reagan will "restate in a little more clear terms that, one, he takes responsibility for it (the arms sales), two, that it was a great disappointment, three, that he confirms the major goal — in his mind — opening better relations with Iran, and lastly, mistakes were made."

He said Reagan would promise to "press to find out all the facts and make what corrections are deemed necessary."

Anticipation about what Reagan will say on the subject already has stolen thunder from other likely elements of the speech, such as a new strategy for the nation's welfare system and topics such as trade problems, budget reform, opposition to new taxes and a commitment to the Gramm-Rudman budget deficit targets.

Reagan himself said in his radio speech Saturday that he will reassert his longstanding commitment to provide "steady and substantial aid" to Contra rebels fighting the Nicaraguan government in his State of the Union message.

The U.S. "national experiment" with liberty is an abiding success, the president said, adding, "Now we must extend liberty to others, providing in particular steady and substantial aid to freedom fighters in Nicaragua and elsewhere around the globe."

Reagan also said he will speak Tuesday about the need to go ahead with the controversial Strategic Defense Initiative, popularly known as "Star Wars," and will announce initiatives on jobs, education and economic growth.

Michel said Republicans have been asking Reagan to touch on health care and catastrophic health insurance and take the lead on the politically popular issue. However, he said, "the president isn't going to be very specific on that."

He added that Reagan "still tends to speak and deliver in broad, general terms and I guess we're never going to change that, and it's up to us (in Congress) to put meat on the dog-gone bones and flesh it out."

Aides view the speech as crucial in beginning to get Reagan's presidency back on track.

Yet, Michel said, "A month or six weeks ago I was saying, 'Well it's got to be the most important State of the Union message of his presidency,' and I hate to be saying that today because it tends to build people's expectations too high. ... Somehow I have a visceral feeling it ain't going to be that great a speech. I don't know what tells me that."

Virtually every poll shows that Reagan has been badly damaged by the Iran-Contra affair.

A Gallup survey this month found that 42 percent of the people questioned felt that Reagan's ability to run the country had been hurt by the controversy. It found that 46 percent believed that Reagan was generally "not believable" and that 38 percent felt he was holding back information to protect himself and others.

Similarly, a Washington Post-ABC News poll found that 67 percent of the people think Reagan is not doing all he can to determine the facts about the episode, and that 56 percent believe he has not been telling the truth.

Radio Chat Provides State Of Union Peek

By RITA BEAMISH
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, giving a preview Saturday of his upcoming State of the Union address, said he will renew his pledge to bolster the Contra rebels who want to overthrow Nicaragua's leftist government.

The president, in his weekly radio address, provided a brief outline of Tuesday's speech after discussing the historical importance of past State of the Union addresses, which he called "a body of writings that show our development from a fledgling republic to a great bastion of freedom."

Reagan said he will touch on several familiar themes when he stands before the Congress on Tuesday night: national security, his Strategic Defense Initiative; economic growth and curtailment of government spending through a balanced-budget amendment to the Constitution; and the "great theme, the national experiment in human liberty," embodied in the struggles of anti-communist Nicaraguan rebels the administration calls "freedom fighters."

"In speaking about the great theme of liberty, I will state that our national experiment remains proud and successful," Reagan said in the radio address delivered from his weekend retreat at Camp David, Md.

"Now we must extend liberty to others, providing, in particular, steady and substantial aid to freedom fighters in Nicaragua and elsewhere around the globe."

The president did not mention the Iran-Contra arms affair, but White House political director Mitchell Daniels told a meeting of the Republican National Commitee on Saturday that Reagan will tackle the Iran issue in his speech, and "he will do it with truth, with candor and with forthrightness."

Daniels has been privately critical of the administration's handling of the Iran-Contra affair. He told associates in December that the White House account of the secret diplomatic initiative to Iran simply wasn't a believable story.

Reagan's pollster, Richard Wirthlin, also has said Reagan will discuss the Iran arms sales.

Reagan will "restate in a little more clear terms that, one, he takes responsibility for it (the arms sales), two, that it was a great disappointment, three, that he confirms the major goal — in his mind — opening better relations with Iran, and lastly, mistakes were made," Wirthlin said, adding that Reagan would promise to "press to find out all the facts and make what corrections are deemed necessary."

On defense, the president said Saturday, he will "reassert the "American virtues of boldness and innovation, virtues embodied in our Strategic Defense Initiative," known informally as "Star Wars."

Democrats Want A United Effort On Trade Work

By JILL LAWRENCE
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congressional Democrats on Saturday urged a bipartisan effort this year to reform the nation's trade laws, using their weekly radio speech for the second consecutive week to highlight America's enormous trade deficit.

"We must send our trading partners a message from a united America. The White House, which once stalled, now says it is ready to work with Congress. That could be a big step in the right direction," said Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., who gave the address for his party.

Rostenkowski, chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, said the panel would start work next month on an overhaul of the nation's trade laws that he compared to its massive tax reform project last year.

"That experience convinced me that our political system works, that we can reason together and compromise our partisan differences to improve things for all Americans. I hope that we can build on our tax reform experience as we do trade reform," he said.

Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, made a similar plea for cooperation last week but said the administration will have to do more than make assurances. Last year, he said, the White House "stiffed the Senate, Democrats and Republicans alike," who were pressing for a trade package.

With the 1986 trade deficit estimated at a record $170 billion, President Reagan is set to propose several "competitiveness" measures Tuesday night in his State of the Union address. The package is designed to head off growing protectionist sentiment in Congress.

Rostenkowski said some people blame the trade deficit on U.S. industry that is not sufficiently productive or aggressive; some blame the protectionist rules other nations enforce; and others say the real villains are the federal budget deficit and exchange rate imbalances.

"None of these views is the whole answer. In fact, all of them must be addressed," he said. "The time for placing blame is over."

The Illinois Democrat said American industry "must get a clear message about the need to be more competitive." He said American workers will have to accept the need for changes and will need help during the transition period."

Americans spend nearly a half-billion dollars more on foreign goods each day than foreigners spend on American goods, Rostenkowski said. "And now as a result we are the biggest debtor nation in the world," he said.

"What happens to a nation that constantly borrows to buy foreign goods? It becomes a second-rate power with a declining standard of living," Rostenkowski said. "That's not a pretty picture but that's clearly where we're headed if we don't make some big changes."

Officials Resign

PRINCETON, N.J. (AP) — The president and provost of Princeton University announced Saturday that they will leave the Ivy League school next year to join the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation in New York City.

University President William G. Bowen and Provost Neil L. Rudenstine said at a news conference that they will remain at the school for at least a year while the university searches for replacements.

Bowen, 53, who has served as Princeton's 17th president for 15 years, will be president of the foundation, and Rudenstine, 52, provost for nine years, will be executive vice president.

Justin Harmon, a university spokesman, said the Mellon Foundation has an endowment of about $1.5 billion and gives grants mainly to colleges and universities and to hospitals and environmental causes.

Disaster Marked Day NASA Postponed 25 Years

By HARRY F. ROSENTHAL
Associated Press Writer

Christa McAuliffe came to Cape Canaveral full of excitement for the adventure she called "the ultimate field trip." No teacher, she said, had ever been more prepared for just two lessons. "I just hope everyone tunes in on Day 4 to watch the teacher teaching from space," she said.

On Day 4, with the nation in mourning, Navy men were skimming the remains of space shuttle Challenger from the Atlantic Ocean and came across a few pages of the lessons the teacher never got to teach.

And, a second-grade pupil in Chevy Chase, Md., brought to school an explanation of the accident that said: "The space shuttle exploded in the sky because there was a leak and all the space people died when the space ship exploded."

And, on that day, when millions of children in classrooms all over the world had planned to tune in on the flight of Challenger, they watched instead a eulogy being delivered in Houston by President Reagan, which also was a lesson.

"The future is not free," he said. "The story of all human progress is one of struggle against all odds. We learned again that this America, which Abraham Lincoln called the last, best hope of man on Earth, was built on heroism and noble sacrifice."

It was built, he said, by the likes of Dick Scobee, Mike Smith, Ellison Onizuka, Judy Resnik, Ron McNair, Greg Jarvis and Christa McAuliffe — men and women "who answered a call beyond duty, who gave more than was expected or required and who gave it little thought of worldly reward."

When the Challenger exploded after 73 seconds of flight on the morning of Jan. 28, 1986, only a few thousand people were on hand at Cape Canaveral, Fla. But around the country, schoolchildren, gathering around TVs, cheered when the shuttle lifted off and did its majestic roll, then cried out in horror when it was engulfed in a fearsome white and orange fireball while its booster rockets, breaking free, painted a horrible V across the blue sky. Before the day was out hundreds of millions of people had seen replays of the scene.

Without the teacher from Concord, N.H., aboard, few would have paid attention to the preparations for Flight 51-L. Without her, there was nothing to distinguish this mission from the 24 that preceded it. No derring-do was planned; no spacewalks, no satellite rescues, no fancy rehearsals erecting 100-foot solar panels. Challenger was to deliver a satellite to space. Ho hum.

The three commercial television networks didn't consider the launch newsworthy enough to cut into their morning programming. Those roads in the area with a good view of launch pad 34B — in spaceport towns like Titusville, Cocoa Beach and Port Canaveral — no longer were bumper-to-bumper with cars and campers on launch day. Local sheriffs used to claim a million people watching. For recent shuttle liftoffs there were hardly enough spectators to fill a college basketball arena.

The shock that followed the explosion was not hard to explain. To Americans, space flight was a matter-of-fact. It had been going on, after all, for a quarter-century. Ninety million Americans had been born since John Glenn circled the globe; a generation had grown up knowing that people went into space, walked on the moon and returned to Earth with not so much as a scratch.

"We have allowed ourselves to be beguiled by space as a place where only beauty and mathematics worked, where there was no disease, where we listened to the music of the spheres, where it was Aristotle and Descartes and Einstein," says John Chancellor, NBC News commentator and space buff. "The idea that you could take this beautiful, pristine, icy-cold, germ-free environment and introduce death and uncertainty and destruction in it made people take it personally."

On the day of the accident, Glenn himself commented: "This is the day that NASA has been postponing for 25 years."

But was it an accident? Or was it the tragic culmination of a can-do agency gone sloppy and making compromises to meet an increasingly ambitious schedule with its four-orbiter shuttle fleet?

The Rogers Commission, investigating the tragedy for President Reagan, found troubling lapses in judgment, expertise, communications and management. It called the Challenger explosion "an accident rooted in history" and said the agency had accepted growing risks "because they got away with it the last time."

The direct cause of the explosion was a leak at a joint between segments of one of two booster rockets that provide 80 percent of the power to push the orbiter into space. Superheated gases shot through that leak toward the adjacent fuel tank and triggered the conflagration.

Some NASA managers had feared for years that trouble lurked in the huge rockets. As early as 1977, an engineer at NASA's Marshall Space Flight Center in Alabama warned superiors that the rocket designed by Morton Thiokol, Inc., was unacceptable, that two quarter-inch diameter O-rings intended to seal in the searing gases could leak under pressure. A paper trail that extended from that point until the Challenger explosion showed 17 instances where soot was found on the recovered boosters, indicating they had leaked during their two minutes of flight.

The worst case had been on a mission almost exactly a year before Challenger's when O-ring damage occurred in both rocket boosters. A backup O-ring, the last-ditch defense against burnthrough, showed the effect of heat. That Jan. 24, 1985, liftoff had taken place when the temperature was 53 degrees at the launch site, the coldest to date.

The Challenger launch was to take place after a night when temperatures were forecast to be in the low 20s and Thiokol engineers argued heatedly that it be postponed. One Marshall official, told about the concerns, responded "my God, Thiokol, when do you want me to launch — in April?" In the end, Thiokol bosses overruled their engineers and gave NASA the go-ahead. The Rogers Commission said Thiokol acted under pressure from NASA.

The men who made the final decision to launch say they knew none of this; not about the suspect O-rings, not about the history of leaks and not about the launch-eve argument. John Young, chief of the astronaut office and NASA's most experienced astronaut with six flights, referred to the O-rings as "the secret seal, which no one that we know knew about."

But the Rogers Commission disputed that. The O-ring history, presented to the top level at NASA headquarters in August 1985, "was sufficiently detailed to require corrective action prior to the next flight," the commission said. And astronaut Robert Crippen, under questioning by the panel, admitted he had been a representative of the astronauts at one meeting where the problem was discussed without grasping its significance.

The Rogers Commission concluded that:

"The space shuttle's solid rocket booster problem began with the faulty design of its joint and increased as both NASA and contractor management first failed to recognize it as a problem, then failed to fix it and finally treated it as an acceptable flight risk."

The commission also determined that NASA was under too great pressure to launch and was stretching its capabilities to the limit in scheduling 15 flights for 1986. But it found no substance to the rumor that the White House had pushed for the Jan. 28 launch so that the shuttle could be in orbit when President Reagan delivered his State of the Union speech.

While the space agency scrambled to satisfy nine major recommendations made by the commission, shuttle operations were stopped — not to resume until after a hiatus of at least two years. Not in the forseeable future would the flight rate again envision two dozen flights a year; the first post-Challenger flight is scheduled for Feb 18, 1988, with four to follow later in the year.

The agency was shaken up. A new administrator took over to replace an acting chief who had the misfortune of being at the helm at the wrong time. A new shuttle program director — an experienced astronaut — came aboard. There were wholesale resignations and shifting of duties in the top ranks at the Marshall Space Flight Center, which deals with propulsion systems, and at Morton Thiokol, Inc., which built the boosters. The directors of the Kennedy and Marshall centers retired, and the head of the Johnson Space Center — who had approved the Challenger launch — took a leave of absence.

The spouses and children of astronauts Scobee, Onizuka, Jarvis and McAuliffe made financial settlements with the government and Morton Thiokol that are reported to be at least $1 million each. The family of Smith, having been rejected in a $15.1 million claim against the government, is free to sue if current negotiations break down. The Smith and Resnik families are still talking with the Justice Department. McNair's family is suing Morton Thiokol.

After mulling it over for six months, President Reagan agreed to a $2.8 billion replacement for Challenger. At the same time, he ordered the space agency out of the business of launching commercial satellites and said private industry should be encouraged to do so. But there was almost no private launch industry left and no prospects of rockets until 1989; so, satellite owners turned to foreign firms, in Europe and China. Even the Soviet Union was offering deals for its large rockets.

Two billion dollars worth of scientific programs were put on hold, including the $1 billion Hubble Space Telescope, the most ambitious scientific space project to date, and the space probes that were to have been sent in 1986 toward Jupiter and the sun.

Ten astronauts, unwilling to wait for a renewal of fewer flights, resigned from the corps or were reassigned to other duties. NASA and its contractors laid off thousands of workers.

Has the nation learned from all this? Historian Alex Roland of Duke University, a long-time critic of the manned space program, doesn't think so.

"I thought a year ago this would have a macabre, but salutary effect on the space program," he says, "and a year later I don't think it has. We've concentrated on symptoms and ignored the disease."

The symptoms, he says, were managerial problems, procurement and quality control. What the country should do, he said, is to be "getting over our infatuation with manned space flight and deciding what we want to do in space."

John Glenn, now a United States senator from Ohio, says, "I don't think any of us had thought the emphasis on safety first — underline first six times — had slipped as much as it actually had in the intervening years. Obviously, NASA has to overhaul the program, hardware, personnel and procedures."

Beyond that, he said, this nation has gone forward because of education and basic research.

'The very thought that we would turn that kind of leadership over to some other nation and let them be the pre-eminent power, seems to me to be inconceivable," he said.

Pete Conrad, who commanded the second mission on the moon, says manned space flight is needed to prepare for a time, in the not so distant future, when mankind will run out of fuel and will look to other heavenly bodies for supplies or a place to live.

In the meantime, he said, NASA will learn from the accident and will be better than ever when flights resume. "I used to tell my crewmates that I don't worry about what has gone wrong," said Conrad. "People are focusing on that and fixing it. What I worry about is what hasn't gone wrong and what hasn't been thought of."

NASA Looking Ahead After Year Of Remorse

By HOWARD BENEDICT
AP Aerospace Writer

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — A year of remorse, retrenchment and repair is ending at Kennedy Space Center where NASA is assembling a team of veteran launch officials to prepare plans for returning the nation's surviving shuttles into space during 1988.

"People are busy, they're not marking time," says the new NASA director here, Air Force Lt. Gen. Forrest McCartney. "This time next year we'll have a bird on the pad."

Throughout the space center, technicians and engineers clamor around the shuttles — Atlantis, Discovery and Columbia — fighting to keep up morale and working to ready the ships for the post-Challenger era of spaceflight.

The man put in charge of repairing the damage revealed by last January's Challenger accident speaks with optimism for those here who believe that man's destiny is still tied to a machine like the space shuttle.

"The first, second, third, fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh, eighth, ninth and tenth priorities of this organization is to have a successful mission," the new boss says of his safety-first orientation. He emphasizes that he won't cut any corners to meet the Feb. 18, 1988, target for the next launch.

Deputy center director Thomas E. Utsman was named to head a team of veteran space workers to guide the center through the first few launches.

"The intent was to gather people who have a lot of experience and concentrate all that experience on getting those first couple launches off," says Utsman. "We call ourselves the over-the-hill gang."

Discovery, which flew six times before, is to be the first shuttle sent into space since the Challenger explosion revealed NASA's spindly safety legs, led to layoffs and put McCartney in charge of launch operations.

The memories of last January are close to the surface here.

The Challenger crew cabin is being buried in two abandoned missile silos along with tons of other shuttle wreckage. Launch pad 39A is simply on standby status; pad 39B, used just once, by Challenger, is down for repairs.

(And the Vandenburg Air Force Base launch pad, 3,000 miles away and once scheduled for its debut this year, instead has been mothballed until 1992 for use by the ship being built to replace Challenger.)

The quiet in the American space program has been practically deafening, with the shuttles awaiting improvements that begin with redesigned solid rocket boosters and end no one knows quite where.

Atlantis, attached to an external fuel tank and two solid fuel boster rockets, stands upright on a mobile launch platform in the cavernous Vehicle Assembly Building. Discovery and Columbia are surrounded by work platforms in two smaller buildings.

Workers are making modifications recommended by the Rogers Commission, which investigated the Challenger accident, for several shuttle systems besides the faulty booster rocket joint blamed for the explosion. They include changes to the main engines, external tank and launch support equipment.

"I don't think any of us really perceived the impact the loss of Challenger would have on the nation," McCartney said in an interview. "All of a sudden we realized, with the loss of the shuttle and the problems we had with the Titan and Delta rockets, that we just didn't have the strong launch program that we once perceived we had."

Now, a year later, "morale is on the upswing," he said. "The uncertainty of the layoffs is behind us, and we are getting a better fix on the modifications that will be required" to prepare the shuttles for 1988.

Rocket Test On Hold

By PAUL RECER
AP Aerospace Writer

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — Less than 13 months before the shuttle is scheduled to fly again, NASA engineers have yet to conduct a full-scale test of a new booster rocket to replace the flawed system responsible for the Challenger disaster.

Such a test was scheduled for next month, but officials at Morton Thiokol Inc., manufacturer of the rocket, said it may be at least mid-March before a test rocket engine can be fired at the firm's Brigham City, Utah, plant. At least four such tests are planned.

Though the original test schedule has slipped, NASA officials say they still expect that new boosters will be delivered to the Kennedy Space Center by next October's deadline for meeting a Feb. 18, 1988, proposed launch date.

"If nothing (unexpected) pops up, they should make it," said one shuttle program official, reflecting the agency's official optimism.

But a committee of the National Research Council, which is supervising the booster project, recently warned that questions with the new design remain and must be closely monitored before a final go-ahead is given.

The presidential commission that investigated last January's Challenger accident determined that a leaky booster rocket made by Thiokol ignited fuel in a rocket propellant tank and triggered the fireball that killed seven crew members and grounded the nation's shuttle fleet.

Hearings before the commission revealed that engineers had known of flaws in the rocket joints for more than two years, but had not considered them serious enough to stop the shuttle from flying.

Twin boosters fire at liftoff and provide most of the power needed for a shuttle to reach orbit. The basic problem with the solid rocket was in the joints formed when four 27-foot sections of the rocket are fitted together to create the 116-foot-long booster.

Thiokol manufactures the rocket sections and ships them to the Kennedy Space Center in Florida for assembly. The sections fit together in a tongue-and-groove fashion to form what are called field joints. The joints are designed to be sealed by two rubberized O rings and the use of a putty.

The commission found that 1,500-degree gases escaped from a lower joint on Challenger's right rocket and triggered the explosion.

Tests conducted as early as 1977 revealed that the tongue-and-groove design of the rocket joints tended to loosen, instead of tighten as expected, when pressure was applied. But engineers considered the problem, called "joint rotation," not significant.

But investigators also learned that the rubberized O rings lost resiliency at low temperatures, and the commission report speculated that the 28-degree temperatures on launch morning may be have kept the rings from sealing.

Following Challenger's explosion, NASA assigned a team to work with Thiokol in a $300 million redesign of the joint. John Thomas, who led the team, found that Thiokol and the Marshall Space Flight Center already had developed several new designs.

Iraq Claims Jets Struck Six Iranian Cities

By MONA ZAIDE
Associated Press Writer

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Iraq said its warplanes struck at the holy Iranian city of Qom and five other cities Saturday and warned the civilian population of Ahvaz, a southwestern Iranian oil center, to evacuate.

An Iraqi military spokesman told Baghdad's state radio that the Iraqi jets raided Qom twice and also struck Isfahan, in southern Iran, Tabriz, in the north, Dezful, in the southwest, and Shahabad and Ilam in the west.

The spokesman, whose name was not provided, was quoted by the radio as saying the Iraqi air force flew 181 combat missions Saturday.

He described the attacks on Qom, 60 miles south of Tehran, as "devastating." Qom is the seat of Iran's Shiite Moslem religious hierarchy.

Iran's official Islamic Republic News Agency (IRNA) said its forces fired at the Iraqi jets with anti-aircraft weapons and downed seven warplanes, including a Soviet-made Sukhoi-22.

There was no comment from Iraq on any warplane losses.

Iraq's air force, which in addition to the Soviet planes also has French-built Mirage and Super Etendard jets, has maintained air supremacy in the more than 6-year-old Persian Gulf war.

Baghdad usually sends its air force on bombing missions deep in Iran whenever Iraqi troops along the 730-mile-long war front launch new ground attacks.

Iraq has been bombing the same six cities regularly since Iran launched its new offensive, codenamed Karbala-5, on Jan. 9. The Iranians penetrated the border but the Iraqis claim they have halted the advance toward Basra, Iraq's second largest city and the country's only outlet to the Persian Gulf.

Ground combat east of Basra, which has a population of 1 million people, has slowed down in the past few days.

The Iraqi air force has so far spared Ahvaz, in the oil-rich southern border province of Khuzestan. The population of Ahvaz is mainly Arab, as is the population of Iraq. Most Iranians are ethnic Persians.

But an unidentified military spokesman told Baghdad Radio Saturday that Iraq would bomb that area, which he said was of great importance to Iran's oil industry. He advised the residents to leave.

Iranian President Ali Khamenei said Friday that 1,786 civilians had been killed and more than 6,000 wounded in two weeks of air raids on 29 Iranian cities. Khamenei also rejected Iraqi President Saddam Hussein's call for a negotiated peace and called him a "dirty vulture" who had to be overthrown before the conflict could end.

Following Iraqi raids on Qom and other areas Friday, worshipers at prayer meetings in the city and in Isfahan and Tabriz poured into the streets chanting "War, war until victory," said the Iranian agency.

In a related development, Syrian President Hafez Assad, who has supported Iran in the war, told a Kuwaiti newspaper his support for Iran could change if the war spilled over into other Persian Gulf nations.

Such a development would mean that the war had turned into an "Arab-Persian one ... and our sister states in the gulf being exposed to aggression, with Syria finding itself obliged to take a different stand," Assad told the Al-Qabas newspaper.

Syria and Iraq are ruled by rival wings of the Arab Baath Socialist Party.

Chancellor Favored In Voting Despite Furor Over Hostages

By SUSAN J. SMITH
Associated Press Writer

BONN, West Germany (AP) — Chancellor Helmut Kohl is expected to win a solid victory in national elections on Sunday despite the Lebanon hostage crisis that socked his government in the campaign's final week.

The dilemma over two West German hostages is one of the gravest crises to face Kohl since he took office in October 1982.

Radical Shiite Moslems seized the two in Beirut apparently in an attempt to free a Lebanese man, jailed in West Germany and sought in a 1985 TWA hijacking.

But the kidnappings appear to have occurred too close to the elections to alter Kohl's bright prospects for victory. Polls of the past week repeated earlier surveys indicating a solid win for Kohl's center-right coalition over the candidate of the left-leaning Social Democrats, Johannes Rau.

A poll published Friday in Die Welt newspaper of Bonn gave the chancellor's coalition of the Christian Democrats-Christian Social Union alliance and the liberal Free Democrats 53.5 percent of the vote, against 37 percent for the opposition Social Democrats and 8.3 percent for the radical Greens. The remainder went to other candidates.

Sunday marks the eleventh time West Germans have elected the Bundestag, the lower house of Parliament, since 1949. Voters elect Parliament members who in turn choose the chancellor.

Forty-five million West Germans are eligible to vote, slightly more than the 44.1 million who could vote in the March 1983 national election.

Just less than 90 percent of the eligible voters went to the polls in 1983 for what turned out to be Kohl's first nationwide victory, five months after he came to power on a parliamentary vote.

Kohl, a Christian Democrat whose campaign slogan has been "More of the Same," told a Bonn news conference Friday the economy has improved and West Germany has withstood a major test of its dependability in NATO by deploying new U.S. medium-range missiles as promised despite massive street demonstrations.

"No other country has done more to stabilize NATO in the last four years than (West Germany)," he said.

Rau, in his own news conference, said Kohl's government has been a "brake on detente and disarmament." He said Kohl failed to make deep cuts in the 8.9 percent unemployment rate although the country was enjoying economic growth.

Rau also reopened the debate about national identity.

He claimed Kohl's conservative party was seeking to "win voters from the right" with appeals to a "rebudding nationalism."

Kohl countered that he believed Germans must not forget their Nazi past. But, he told reporters, "Our youth have the right to enter the future with their heads high."

Both Kohl and Rau rested up Saturday after the campaigning.

The chancellor's chief of staff, Wolfgang Schaeuble, presided at another meeting of officials to discuss the two West Germans abducted in Lebanon, Rudolf Cordes and Alfred Schmidt.

The so-called "crisis staff" of top officials has met daily since Monday on the hostage situation, often under Kohl's direction. Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher scrapped some campaign dates to work on the problem.

Cordes was kidnapped Jan. 17 and Schmidt disappeared Tuesday. Their kidnappers are thought by some officials here to be Shiite Moslems seeking to stop West Germany from extraditing Mohammed Ali Hamadi to the United States to face charges of air piracy and murder in connection with the June 1985 hijack of a TWA jetliner to Beirut.

The crisis could create tension between West Germany and the United States, as well as between Bonn and Arab capitals, depending on whether the government decides in favor of the U.S. extradition request.

Bonn officials said they may seek to win time for negotiations with the kidnappers by trying Hamadi on charges of possession of explosives and forgery.

Police say Hamadi was arrested at Frankfurt airport on Jan. 13 with material for explosives in his luggage and a false passport.

But for now, the hostage crisis has given the chancellor the chance to demonstrate he is in charge.

"This is a matter in which the government has to carry the entire responsiblity. ... We inform, we keep contacts open, and we will try to do what is right and possible within our responsbility," Kohl said in a national television debate Thursday.

In the current Parliament, of the 498 voting members, the Christian Democrats and Christian Social Union hold 242 seats, the Social Democrats 193, the Free Democrats 34, the Greens 26 and independents three.

Ferries Sink

DHAKA, Bangladesh (AP) — Two ferries collided and one sank, with five people known dead and 30 unaccounted for and believed drowned, officials said Saturday.

The authorities, who spoke on condition they not be identified, said the collision took place on the Sitalakhaya River Friday night about 100 miles east of Dhaka when a ferry carrying 200 people crashed head-on with one carrying 100. The one bearing 100 passengers sank, but many aboard reportedly made it to shore.

Five bodies were found.

Newspaper reports said up to 50 people in all were feared drowned.

Last year more than 50 ferry accidents occurred in Bangladesh. More than 700 people died and 448 were listed as missing.

Unofficial death counts are usually much higher, however.

Britain Wants Probe Into Spy Satellite Leak

LONDON (AP) — The government has launched an investigation at Britain's top-secret intelligence headquarters in search of the "mole" who leaked information about the country's first spy satellite project, the Foreign Office said Saturday.

The outcome of the inquiry at the Government Communications Headquarters at Cheltenham west of London will determine if a wider investigation is needed, the Foreign Office said.

The announcement follows government action Thursday to block a private House of Commons viewing of a banned television documentary about the satellite project. The government also obtained a court order gagging journalist Duncan Campbell, a defense specialist who helped prepare the documentary.

But an article Campbell wrote that included details of the project was published Thursday by the New Statesman, a left-leaning weekly magazine, because an injunction restraining publication wasn't served in time.

The article said the government is secretly spending the equivalent of about $750 million to build and launch a signals intelligence satellite with the code name Zircon. The satellite would act as an electronic listening post, intercepting radio signals and other communications from the Soviet Union and Eastern European and Middle East countries, the magazine said.

In an affidavit used to obtain the writ against Campbell, Sir Peter Marychurch, director of the communications headquarters, said "substantial" information he obtained about the project is correct.

Marychurch said the information might be useful to hostile intelligence services and might "cause the United States to lose confidence in the United Kingdom's ability to protect highly classified information."

Security at the communications headquarters has been a major issue, especially since Geoffrey Prime, a translator of Russian at the center, was caught spying for the Soviets in April 1982. After his arrest, officials called his betrayals the most damaging penetration of Western intelligence since World War II.

Prime is serving a 35-year prison term for spying for the Soviet Union from 1968 until 1981.

Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's Conservative government banned unions at the electronic intelligence-gathering center in January 1985, saying national security requirements overrode the right of workers there to belong to a union. Thousands of protesters marched outside the center Saturday to protest the ban.

The government has announced a debate will be held Tuesday in the House of Commons on its decision to ban the British Broadcasting Corp. documentary about the spy satellite.

Newspapers reported Saturday that Attorney General Sir Michael Havers was considering whether Campbell and the New Statesman could be prosecuted under the Official Secrets Act for publishing details of the film.

N. Koreans Defect

TOKYO (AP) — North Korea asked Japan on Saturday to return a fishing boat and its 11 crew members who apparently defected from the communist nation after docking at a Japanese port.

The ship remained in Fukui prefecture, on the the Japan Sea coast, where it docked Tuesday after reportedly developing engine trouble.

"The Japanese authorities must justly dispose of our drifted ship and crew in conformity with international law and international usage, humanitarianism and reciprocity," North Korea's official Korean Central News Agency said.

"We have already created good precedences of warmly protecting in humanitarian spirit many ships of the Japanese side which request rescue or drifted to our ports ... and sending back all their crewmen in safety," KCNA said, quoting a General Bureau of Marine Transportation of the Commission of Transport statement.

"We strongly demand that the Japanese authorities must send back our ship and its crew to our republic unconditionally and without delay, from the stand of answering goodwill with goodwill," said the statement, monitored in Tokyo.

The Japanese decided Thursday to allow the ship to leave Japan.

Aquino Vows Justice For Slain Demonstrators

By EILEEN GUERRERO
Associated Press Writer

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — President Corazon Aquino pledged justice Saturday for 12 protesters killed by marines at a march near her office, and a major leftist group planned a repeat march as a test of whether she can control the military.

She addressed a crowd of about 150,000 people in Dumaguete, in the central island of Negros.

"First of all, I would like to assure families of the victims and the entire Philippine nation that justice will be given to them," the president declared. "We will not forsake them."

A highly placed source, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said Saturday that former Sen. Jose Diokno resigned as chairman of the Presidential Commission on Human Rights to protest the shootings.

Mrs. Aquino said that a presidential commission set up to investigate the killings will release its findings in two weeks.

She visited Dumaguete on a one-day, four-city tour of central islands to campaign for her proposed constitution, which goes to the voters in a Feb. 2 plebiscite crucial to her young presidency.

She was trying to repair the damage done by the shootings Thursday at Mendiola bridge near her Manila office, which has drawn fire on her government from both left and right.

Twelve people were killed and dozens were wounded when marines fired on about 10,000 demonstrators who tried to break through police cordons at the bridge leading to Malacanang presidential palace.

Bayan, a leftist organization which claims 2 million members nationwide, announced it would hold "an indignation march" to Malacanang Palace on Monday to "be a test of whether the government of President Corazon Aquino has control over her military."

The Partido ng Bayan, the largest legal left-wing party; the May 1st Movement, the largest labor union; and the Philippine Farmers Movement, which organized Thursday's march for land reform; and several student groups earlier announced similar marches for Monday.

"We will march to Mendiola ... and we are determined to be able to cross the bridge," J.V. Bautista, a senior Bayan official, told a news conference. Other Bayan officials said demonstrators would disperse peacefully if the government listened to their grievances.

Bayan, or Country, is made of peasants, urban poor, professsionals, students and other groups.

Diokno, a highly regarded human rights advocate who strongly backed Mrs. Aquino, could not be reached for comment on his reported resignation.

To protest the shootings, his daughter, Maris Diokno, resigned Friday as a member of a government panel holding peace talks with Communist rebels.

The talks all but collapsed on Thursday as both sides announced an indefinite suspension because of unspecified death threats.

A member of the commission which drafted the new constitution, meanwhile, denied allegations that Mrs. Aquino and her advisers tried to influence the commission to delete a provision from the proposal declaring the Philippines a nuclear-free nation.

A right-wing politician Friday released a text of what was described as a telephone conversation between the president and her advisers that suggested Mrs. Aquino was worried the provision would complicate efforts to retain U.S. military bases here.

"As far as I know, nobody tried to influence us on this," former Sen. Francisco Rodrigo told The Associated Press.

However, former Information Minister Francisco S. Tatad, who backed Mrs. Aquino during her successful battle to oust Ferdinand E. Marcos as president, urged her to resign. He said the Mendiola killings and the alleged tapes called into question her credibility and competence.

Tatad said he was withdrawing his Christian-Social Democratic Party from a coalition of political parties that helped sweep Mrs. Aqu power.

In Dumaguete, a crowd est by reporters to number jammed a soccer field to giv Aquino the largest show of supp any of her six weekend trips paign for the proposed constitu

"The constitution is not only government but for all of nos," she said. "We need t stitution to be ratified to sa the democracy we won in 198

The plebiscite will be the h toral test of Mrs. Aquino's pop cy and would confirm he term.

She technically has been ing a revolutionary gov since taking over when Ma into exile in Hawaii follow tary-supported public opi February.

Senator's Contra Probe Criticized

By PETE YOST
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. John Kerry is coming under increasing fire from federal law enforcement officials for last year's probe of the Contras that includes allegations of drug smuggling by the Nicaraguan rebels.

The Massachusetts Democrat, a former assistant county prosecutor, launched his investigation of possible gun-running, narcotics smuggling and other potential violations of U.S. law a year ago.

Since late last year when the senator issued a report calling for a full-scale congressional investigation, several Justice Department officials, speaking on condition that they not be identified, have criticized Kerry's probe.

The officials have said Kerry's work was based largely on unsubstantiated allegations from informants, most of whom already have been interviewed by federal law enforcement officials and some of whom have previously been found to be unreliable. A number of them are charged with various crimes or are in jail.

The latest criticism came last week in news stories by the Washington Times. The paper quoted unidentified federal law enforcement officials as saying that Kerry's staff had severely damaged a federal drug investigation last summer by interfering with an FBI informant.

One story quoted from a Justice Department letter to Kerry saying that the witness "made numerous allegations to your staff that were not previously mentioned" by the witness to the FBI.

The new allegations concerned alleged Contra drug smuggling and the story said the informant, a woman, had become "spooked" and stopped cooperating with the FBI after contact with Kerry's office. The letter said the FBI needed to re-establish contact with the witness, through Kerry's office, to assess the credibility of the new allegations.

In response, Kerry issued a statement saying he has repeatedly sought the cooperation of the Justice Department and the FBI and pointed out that some of the allegations he delved into may be considered by the independent counsel now probing the Iran-Contra affair.

"Weeks before the Iran affair, I issued a report ... that described the ... private aid network (to the Contras) that has since come to light," said Kerry's statement. "In light of recent revelations, for someone to say the report had no credibility is simply wrong."

On Friday, Justice Department spokesman Terry Eastland declined to specifically criticize the Kerry probe.

But he did say that "any time a member of Congress seeks to investigate something that the Justice Department already is investigating ... there always is the possibility that the congressional effort somehow could adversely affect the department's ability to enforce the law."

Kerry's 13-page report excised all references to specific allegations that the Contras were involved in drug smuggling, and that information now is being used as a basis for an investigation by the full Senate Foreign Relations Committee, of which Kerry is a member.

Kerry's report said "sources ... have describe an interlocking web of bank accounts, airstrips, planes, pilots and Contra bases which have been used in common by weapons smugglers, narcotics smugglers, the Contras and organizations assisting the Contras."

Dwyer's Widow Says Husband Was A Hero

By RICH KIRKPATRICK
Associated Press Writer

HERSHEY, Pa. (AP) — State Treasurer R. Budd Dwyer, who killed himself during a news conference, was praised by his widow at a Saturday memorial service as an honest, loving man betrayed by the system to which he devoted his life's work.

JoAnne Dwyer told about 500 people jammed into All Saints Episcopal Church that Dwyer felt he had lost everything following his conviction last month on charges that he took part in a bribery-conspiracy in the awarding of a state contract.

"He felt ashamed and a failure," Mrs. Dwyer said in a clear and firm voice. "But Budd was not a failure; he was a hero."

Dwyer, 47, shot himself to death during a news conference Thursday at his state office. He was to have been sentenced Friday.

Mrs. Dwyer, 47, wearing a fur coat in the bitter cold, was accompanied to the service by her children, Robert, 21, and Dyan, 18. They ignored a crowd of reporters as they walked into the small church.

In her remarks, Mrs. Dwyer thanked the mourners, who filled the main church and a social room downstairs where a picture of Dwyer surrounded by a black drape had been placed at the front of the room. The people downstairs, including reporters, listened to the service over a public address system.

Among those attending were U.S. Sen. Arlen Specter, R-Pa; Democratic Lt. Gov. Mark Singel, inaugurated Tuesday, and former Republican Lt. Gov. William W. Scranton III.

Afterward, Mrs. Dwyer and the children stood in a receiving line. A funeral service and burial is planned for Monday in Meadville, where the family formerly lived.

In a 21-page statement Dwyer gave reporters at the fatal news conference, he complained that he had been unfairly made a target by federal prosecutors, who selected a conservative judge, jury and trial site.

Dwyer was convicted after a five-week trial in federal court in Williamsport of five counts of mail fraud, four counts of interstate transportation in aid of racketeering, one count of perjury and one count of conspiracy to commit perjury.

Prosecutors alleged that Dwyer had agreed to accept $300,000 bribe in exchange for signing a state computer contract with a Newport Beach, Calif., firm. However, no money ever changed hands; the contract was canceled when the scandal came to light.

"Budd was an innocent man," his wife said. "He was the most honorable, courageous man the political scene I think has ever produced ... He felt the system that he had worked for all his life had betrayed him and that no one would listen."

Mrs. Dwyer, who arrived at the church with a police escort, told the congregation that the family had heard of the suicide on the radio and had no idea of Dwyer's plans.

"We assumed he was coping our way ... in planning his vindication, in making positive references to the future," she said. "But Budd was coping in his own way. He was making his own plans ... He left the house Thursday and we would never see him again."

No U.S., European Accord Reached On Trade Dispute

By TOM RAUM
AP Economics Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. and European negotiators failed to reach agreement Saturday to resolve a bitter trade dispute but vowed to make another effort next week, before a Jan. 30 deadline for the imposition of steep U.S. tariffs on a selected European products.

In the absence of agreement, the United States plans to slap duties as high as 200 percent on imported European cognac, white wine, specialty varieties of cheese, canned hams, celery, carrots and olives.

U.S. Trade Representative Clayton Yeutter and Willy de Clercq, top trade negotiator for the 12 nation European Economic Community, met for six hours Saturday in Yeutter's office in an unsuccessful effort to break the deadlock.

"We have been unable to reach agreement today," De Clercq said in a statement. However, he added that the positions of the two sides have moved closer together."

Peggy Bolton, a spokesman for Yeutter, agreed that the two sides had come closer together "and that's good. But we weren't able to resolve the issue and that's not good."

"A few days remain before the U.S. response will go into effect. We still hope that a resolution will be possible," Bolton added.

De Clercq said that both sides would engage in "necessary consultations" over the next few days and then "resume contact within the next few days in the light of these consultations."

President Reagan announced the tariffs last month, to take effect next Friday, in retaliation for what the United States contends is $400 million in lost grain exports to Spain.

The European Community, also known as the Common Market, has vowed to counter-retaliate with new duties on American feed grains and rice if the tariffs go into effect.

After the meeting with Yeutter, DeClercq prepared to fly back to Brussels. He will meet there Monday with representatives of the nations of the European Community, said Ella Krucoff, a spokeswoman for the trading bloc.

"Each (side) is agreed that the outstanding questions must be settled one way or the other before the end of the month," said de Clercq.

A Reagan administration official, who spoke only on the condition of anonymity, said the two sides still seemed "very far apart."

The Reagan administration contends that the European Community should compensate U.S. farmers for $400 million in grain sales lost to Spain when that nation, along with Portugal, joined the European Community last year.

Officials in both the United States and in Europe have said that failure to settle the controversy could result in an all-out trans-Atlantic trade war.

The Europeans in December had offered concessions on industrial goods that would be worth about 30 percent of the grain trade. But the United States rejected that as inadequate.

Medical Pacts Help Americans In Middle East

By NORMAN BLACK
AP Military Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Pentagon, relying upon doctor-to-doctor negotiations, has quietly reached agreement with three countries in or near the volatile Middle East to provide hospital care for Americans in the event of terrorist attacks or other disasters.

The agreements with Israel, Jordan and Tunisia are a direct outgrowth of the Oct. 23, 1983, terrorist bombing of a Marine barracks in Lebanon, in which 241 servicemen were killed.

Although no lives were lost in the course of medical evacuations after that tragedy, the Pentagon was roundly criticized at the time for flying severely wounded Marines for hours to hospitals in Europe rather than to nearby Israel.

The new agreements have been worked out slowly over the past three years, one at a time, by Dr. William Mayer, the assistant defense secretary for health affairs. Mayer agreed to break the official silence on the matter following a recent trip to the Mideast.

Mayer also disclosed he is now seeking a similar accord with Saudi Arabia, and will visit China this spring "to see if there are ways that we can assure each other of (medical) support."

"I think this serves the national interest as few things do," Mayer said.

The agreements are described by the assistant secretary as strictly medical in nature, although they have been blessed by the top political leadership of each country. Some exercises, including the airlift of simulated "patients" and "over-the-beach" evacuations, have already been staged to work out glitches, he added.

In the event of a real emergency, Mayer estimated Israel could stabilize and treat "many hundreds" of American casualties.

"Jordan could probably take a couple hundred, I would guess," and Tunisia a lesser number, he said.

"It gives us the assurance that we'll have a medical refuge in time of desperate need," he said. "We do have one-fourth of the entire military strength of this country stationed overseas. And some of them are in very vulnerable areas."

Mayer said he was driven to seek the pacts to ensure the Defense Department could respond to terrorist attacks on U.S. embassies or military facilities; major accidents aboard ships plying the Mediterranean, Persian Gulf or Red Sea, or natural catastrophes.

"We're concerned with what would happen if an embassy got blown up, for example. The State Department has medical care overseas for its people, but they don't have hospitalization facilities or evacuation facilities. They would turn to us," Mayer said.

In return for their cooperation, Mayer said the Pentagon had assured the three countries the United States would provide all the medical assistance it could if a disaster occurred.

The three countries have also been invited to send physicians to the United States to participate in ongoing military programs such as training in emergency and trauma medicine.

The 63-year-old Mayer, a medical doctor with specialized training in psychiatry, psychology, aerospace medicine, anatomy and surgery, said the agreements were reached despite some political strains because the talks were conducted by physicians and "we (stayed) away from the people who want to put missiles someplace or tanks someplace."

Jordanian officials, for example, were privately critical of the United States' decision to sell arms to arch-enemy Iran, but didn't let that stop finalization of an accord, he said.

"Even in countries with totally different political systems than ours, the medical people are concerned with the same things we are — taking care of the sick and wounded, taking care of innocent civilians who are the byproducts, victims of terrorism or natural disaster," Mayer said.

The agreements are limited in that neither side will offer medical support in the event of full-scale war, he noted.

"This isn't a medical commitment of American medical forces to support them in case of war," he said. "But everybody in the world today, in my judgement, certainly in Europe and the Middle East, is aware that they could have serious terrorist attacks."

Mayer, who assumed his current position one month after the Beirut bombing, said the tragedy had provided the impetus for his negotiations. He said he opened talks first with Israel because it had volunteered at the time of the bombing to handle casualties and because it has superb medical facilities.

Mayer said he next turned to Jordan because it, too, has modern hospitals and has long maintained friendly relations with the United States.

Tunisia was approached because of its position midway in the Mediterranean and its proximity to Libya, considered a potential trouble spot "because of the agitation with (Libyan leader Moammar) Khadafy and his threats," Mayer said.

Strikes Continue For Rail Unions

By MARJORIE ANDERS
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — One union reached agreement with the Long Island Rail Road on Friday, the sixth day of a strike, but six other unions walked out of talks and officials predicted the train stoppage will stretch into next week.

The Brotherhood of Railway Carmen, representing 879 car cleaners and maintaince personnel, announced it had settled with the nation's largest commuter railroad on all but skill differentials, which both sides agreed to submit to binding arbitration.

But that agreement had little impact on the walkout, since eight unions were still without agreements and the workers traditionally honor one another's picket lines.

Meanwhile, a snowstorm that blew through the area Thursday set the stage for greater start-up delays when the strike does end.

The LIRR said that no matter when the settlement comes, it will take at least 48 hours to clear the tracks and restore full train service because of the snow. The railroad earlier said it would take 12 hours to restore full service.

The snow apparently did keep some of the 150,000 would-be train riders home, as city officials reported lighter inbound traffic Friday morning after nearly a foot of snow fell on parts of Long Island.

The signalmen walked out of talks Friday as did the coalition of five shop craft unions, which said it did not intend to return to talks until after Sunday.

"We've reached impasse," said Robert Lampe, a representative from the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, one of the unions in the coalition.

The Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers and the Police Benevolent Association, representing the railroad's police force, had not walked out of negotiations, but no settlement was reached with either group.

So far, the Railway Carmen, track workers, machinists, boilermakers, firemen and oilers, and sheetmetal workers — altogether representing almost 70 percent of the LIRR's workforce — have accepted contracts.

Scientists Working On Diabetes Screening

By MALCOLM RITTER
AP Science Writer

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — In the next three years, scientists will greatly refine experimental tests to predict who will get the most serious form of diabetes and when, a prospect that already has raised interest and controversy; experts say.

While a battery of blood tests would be used at first in close relatives of diabetics, they could apply to the public once scientists find a treatment to prevent the disease from appearing, said Dr. Noel MacLaren, pathology professor at the University of Florida College of Medicine at Gainesville.

The prospect of such a screening test, being pursued in many laboratories, already has doctors, the public, government regulators and venture capitalists calling the American Diabetes Association for advice.

"It's an incredible amount of interest and controversy," said Richard Kahn, the association's assistant executive vice president for scientific and medical affairs.

Currently the association opposes random population screening, he said Friday. No cost-effective screening method has been found, he said, and "it's not clear that there is a safe, effective and inexpensive intervention strategy" to prevent diabetes from appearing.

One concern, he said, is that the tests might falsely predict diabetes for some people, subjecting them needlessly to the risk of serious side effects of attempts to head off the disease.

MacLaren's prediction came in an interview after he briefed science writers at a diabetes association seminar.

The work focuses on insulin-dependent diabetes, which usually appears in childhood or adolescence and afflicts about 1 million of America's 11 million diabetics. It requires daily insulin injections because the body does not generate insulin to control blood sugar levels.

That results from a misguided attack on insulin-producing cells of the pancreas by the body's immune system, scientists say.

The attack starts long before symptoms of diabetes appear. By the time the disease is diagnosed, maybe 90 percent of the insulin-producing cells are dead, MacLaren said Friday.

So he is studying blood tests to find signs of diabetes that appear before the disease itself.

In three years, enough should be known about various experimental tests under study to allow better predictions than they give now, he said.

"I think we'll pretty well have it down in three years," said MacLaren.

George Eisenbarth, immunology expert at the Joslin Diabetes Center in Boston, said researchers can already give odds on developing diabetes for some people. But unless the person shows abnormally low insulin response to an injection of sugar in the blood, indicating the disease could appear within a couple of years or sooner, the time that diabetes will appear cannot be predicted, he said.

MacLaren hopes to make the prediction before the body's attack on the pancreas has gone far enough to blunt the insulin response.

Prediction test research centers on antibodies, special proteins manufactured by the body's immune system to seek out and help destroy invading microorganisms.

In a current study of 6,000 close relatives of diabetics, MacLaren and colleagues have checked for the presence in the blood of antibodies that seek out pancreatic islet cells, which produce insulin. Their presence would suggest that the body has begun an attack.

The antibodies have appeared in 128 of the relatives, and 18 of them have developed insulin-dependent diabetes during the few years they have been followed, he said. Five relatives without antibodies have developed the disease.

Statistical analysis of the results suggests that in close relatives of diabetics, the risk of developing insulin-dependent diabetes for a person who has the antibodies is 167 times that of a relative who does not, MacLaren said.

"This number will only grow" as the relatives are watched for a longer time, he said.

MacLaren said he does not know when in life the antibodies appear, but he suspects it happens before age 5.

Noting that only 18 of 128 people with antibodies have developed diabetes, he said he believed predictions could be made more accurate by testing for other kinds of antibodies in addition and looking at the overall results.

Passengers Wanted To Stay In U.S.

HOUSTON (AP) — Passengers aboard an Aeromexico flight from Mexico City to New York balked at returning to Mexico Friday after John F. Kennedy Airport was shut down due to bad weather, authorities said.

The crew aboard Flight 404, a DC-10 traveling from Mexico City to New York, decided to return to Mexico City when told bad weather had shut down the New York airport.

The plane landed at Houston Intercontinental Airport for refueling about 2 a.m. with 278 passengers aboard, airport manager Bill Ainsworth said.

But the passengers insisted that they be let off the plane.

"All of them," Ainsworth said. "They didn't want to go back."

After being allowed to leave the jet, the passengers were told it would be several hours before Customs and immigration agents arrived to process them out of a restricted lounge and let them into the main terminal, Ainsworth said.

But the passengers still insisted on staying in the U.S. rather than returning to Mexico, Ainsworth said.

About 4:30 a.m. the passengers were processed through customs, Ainsworth said. Aeromexico paid for hotel rooms and food for most of the passengers, but others finally chose to return to Mexico City, he said.

After JFK began accepting flights Friday afternoon, the passengers completed the last leg of their trip on an Aeromexico plane, Ainsworth said.

Damaging Testimony

AGANA, Guam (AP) — An engineer testifying at the bribery trial of the former governor of this American island said Saturday that he gave the defendant $60,000 in payments.

Former Gov. Ricardo J. Bordallo is on trial in U.S. District Court on 17 counts of fraud, bribery, extortion, witness tampering, accepting an illegal gratuity and obstruction of justice.

Engineer Johnny P. Carpio said he gave Bordallo the money in three installments between 1984 and 1986 on behalf of Japanese investors, to smooth the way for establishment of a scrap metal business.

The final installment was made on Jan. 15, 1986, in the dining room of Guam's Government House, Carpio said. A few hours later, the FBI taped Carpio giving another official $8,000 to expedite an invoice on a government project.

Carpio later cooperated with the FBI, wearing a microphone during subsequent meetings with Bordallo in which the payments were allegedly discussed.

East Carolina, GMU Split A Pair

Second Half Outburst Lifts Pats Over Pirates

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

FAIRFAX, Va. — Anthony Davis' three-point basket keyed an 11-point swing by George Mason and sparked the Patriots to a 79-74 Colonial Athletic Association basketball victory over East Carolina Saturday night.

The Pirates, up by as much as seven points in the second half, saw the Patriots scramble back to tie it up before a unique four-point play by Keith Sledge put ECU back on top, 57-56.

But Davis hit with 4:26 left in the game for a 59-57 lead. Thirty seconds later, Darrin Mosley canned a jumper for a four-point lead and then the bottom fell out on the Pirates.

Blue Edwards, who had led the Pirates throughout the evening, was called for a foul on a rebound under the ECU basket and protested enough to draw a technical foul.

Darin Satterthwaite made the one-and-one on the personal, and Davis added the tech free throw, all with 3:19 left. And the Patriots got a three-point play out of the possession that followed when Kenny Sanders tossed back a missed shot and was fouled.

That pushed the Patriot lead out to 10, 67-57, with 2:24 to play.

For the rest of the way, the Patriots used the foul line to great advantage, canning 16 of 19 at the stripe. East Carolina, which trailed by 11, 71-60, made a comeback, cutting it back to as little as three, 74-71 with 38 seconds left, but was unable to come any closer as the Pats made good at the foul line.

"There were three keys to the game," Coach Charlie Harrison said. "The first was the technical, which turned the game around. It was an eight-point swing, possibly a 10-point one. I don't think the game was won right there, but it certainly turned it around.

"The other keys were the fact that we didn't shoot well from the perimeter and we didn't hit our free throws when we still had the chance."

Harrison said that Edwards said nothing to the official to provoke the foul. He did, however, throw his hand in the air and bring them down with disgust. That, apparently, was enough for Wayne Samford, who whistled the tech after calling the foul. "At that point it in the game, it wasn't the best time say or do anything," Harrison said.

Mason went into the game hitting only 65 percent at the foul line, but proved that part of the game worked for it on this night, hitting 83.3 percent.

"Mason shot well when they had to and they made their fouls when we had to go out and get 'em," Harrison added.

"I thought we played good defense, especially in the first half. But on offense a lot of little things are hurting us now, keeping us from being a good team. We played well for 35 minutes, but five minutes hurt us badly, missing the rebound, failing to hit the free throw."

Both teams had periods of hot and cold in the first half. The Patriots led on several occasions, but never by more than two points.

East Carolina, in contrast, moved out by four early, and built up as much as an eight-point lead midway through the half.

Marchell Henry gave the Pirates their first lead at 8-6 with 14:28 left and Leon Bass connected on a hook for a 10-6 edge. But Mason came back and retook the lead on a base by Tracy Battle, a former Rocky Mount High School star, 12-10.

Blue Edwards retied it, and Henry hit from the baseline to put the Pirates back up. They went on to score six more points before Mason hit again, giving East Carolina a 20-12 lead with 9:34 remaining.

But minutes later Edwards stole the ball, drove alone and missed the slam. Howard Brown picked off the rebound and missed that too, giving Mason a lift. Another minute later, Bass found himself alone under the basket and also missed on a slam.

Mason took advantage and outscored the Pirates 12-4 to move back ahead, 29-27 with 3:00 left. Neither team scored again until Edwards tapped back a miss by Henry with two seconds left, tying it at 29-29 at the half.

After the two teams swapped early baskets in the second half, Keith Sledge hit a three-pointer to put the Pirates up by 38-33 and the Pirates stretched it back out to seven, 44-37, at the halfway mark of the period.

Mabry Scores 20 Points To Pace Lady Buc Win

By TOM MORRIS
Reflector Sports Writer

East Carolina outscored George Mason 12-4 over the first eight minutes of the second half to break open a tight ball game en route to a 64-51 win in Colonial Conference Athletic Association action Saturday night.

"I think the most important part of the ball game is the first part of the second half," said ECU coach Emily Manwaring. "We decide if we are going to let them get (back) in to the ball game."

The Lady Pirates decided not to. After leading 25-23 at halftime, the Lady Pirates took control of the game in the first minutes of the second period.

Delphine Mabry, who led ECU with 20 points, hit a jumper to begin the second half. Alma Bethea then hit following a turnover by the Lady Patriots to put ECU up, 29-23.

Jody Rodriquez followed with a layup following another George Mason turnover to move the lead to 31-23.

Angie Lewis finally hit for the Lady Patriots at the 16:53 mark to make it 31-25 but ECU freshman center Sarah Gray scored six straight points on two baskets and a pair of free throws that stretched the lead to 37-25.

"We certainly didn't help ourselves by missing all those easy shots (at the beginning of the second half)," said George Mason coach Jim Lewis. "We had two problems, not running the offense and missing shots when we had them."

The Pirates were without the services of forward Monique Pompili who played only one minute. Manwaring would not comment on Pompili's status, other that to say, "Things are going to work out."

She said she was happy with the play of Gray, a former Washington player. Gray, playing in place of Pompili, scored 12 points and pulled down 10 rebounds.

"I think she rebounded well," Manwaring said. "I think she and Alma worked real well together. Sarah is getting more aggressive."

Gray's six-point string put ECU in firm control as the Lady Pirates continued to build their lead from there. They pushed out to as much as an 18-point advantage and maintained at least an 11-point bulge the rest of the way.

"I was happy with the way we got the lead and were able to maintain it," Manwaring said. "But I didn't like putting them in the bonus (in the end)."

The Lady Pirates overcame 39 percent shooting in the first half to lead 25-23 at the intermission. The shooting percentage improved to 64 percent in the second half.

Pam Williams came off the bench to hit for 11 points.

The loss broke a three-game losing streak for the Lady Pirates, who improve to 11-6 and 4-1. George Mason falls to 6-10 and 1-4.

"We just talked about wanting to win the game," Manwaring said. "It certainly is a step in the right direction. I think we made a positive step. I'm glad that we got a number of people into the game."

Next up for ECU is an encounter with nationally-ranked James Madison and Manwaring said the Lady Pirates must play better if they are to have any chance at winning.

"James Madison has got everything they need," she said. "They've got five different people that they can play at the three inside positions. It has to take a total team effort."

Lewis said Pompili's status will be a key. "Pompili's status is a big factor," he said. "They need a another inside player to match up with Madison."

The game was close throughout the first half. The Lady Pirates took the lead early at 8-6 on a layup by Mabry and never relinquished it. At one time, they stretched out to a 17-10 lead but the Lady Patriots slowly came back to tie the game at 23 with 43 seconds left in the first half.

ECU had trouble sustaining scoring streaks in the first half and Manwaring said that was because the offense was not being run properly. "The kind of offense we have been running against zones, there are times when we don't move it into the holes," she said. "That's just a matter of reacting."

Veronica Gilliard scored 10 of her 14 points in the opening half to keep the Lady Patriots close.

Duke Upsets Clemson, 105-103

CLEMSON, S.C. (AP) — Duke coach Mike Krzyzewski says there have been few games in his coaching career to compare with the 12th-ranked Blue Devils' 105-103 victory over No. 10 Clemson on Saturday.

"It was just a great, great basketball game, Krzyzewski said after his team handed Clemson its first defeat. "As long as I've been coaching, it was one of the best I've been associated with.

"We were fortunate in the last five minutes that we had excellent composure, and really in the last three minutes of regulation we did everything right," Krzyzewski said. "We were lucky they missed some free throws, and we took advantage of it."

Clemson coach Cliff Ellis said the contest was a "great spectators game" that was one of the best Atlantic Coast Conference games he's been part of.

"But it is kind of tough to accept. Duke played very well, especially down the stretch. Give them all the credit in the world," Ellis said.

Ellis said 21 turnovers by the Tigers — Duke had 19 — contributed to the loss.

"Duke created the turnovers and capitalized on our mistakes. That is how they play, a tough defensive team," Ellis said.

Reid, Lebo Pour In 16 Apiece In UNC's 92-55 Rout Over Tech

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — J.R. Reid and Jeff Lebo scored 16 points each to lead second-ranked North Carolina to its 15th consecutive victory, a 92-55 Atlantic Coast Conference basketball romp over Georgia Tech Saturday night.

The victory by the Tar Heels, combined with 10th-ranked Clemson's 105-103 overtime loss to No. 12 Duke earlier in the day, gave North Carolina a 1½-game lead over Clemson in the ACC title chase. North Carolina is 6-0 in the league, Clemson 4-1.

Georgia Tech dropped to 9-7 overall and 1-4 in the league.

North Carolina, 17-1 overall, increased a 20-point halftime lead to 31 points midway through the second half, scoring on 12 straight possessions. During the Tar Heel run, Reid scored eight points and Dave Popson added six, mostly on inside hook shots.

The Yellow Jackets' five-minute scoring drought ended when Tom Hammonds scored on a layup with 10:34 left, cutting the margin to 68-36.

Dunks by Steve Bucknall and Curtis Hunter and a Popson hook shot gave North Carolina a 74-38 bulge with 9:05 remaining.

North Carolina played without point guard Kenny Smith, who sat out the game with an inflamed left knee. Despite his absence, the Tar Heels broke out to a 9-0 lead in the first two minutes. Reid scored a pair of baskets and Lebo sank a three-point field goal during the spurt.

The Yellow Jackets finally got on the scoreboard on a Duane Ferrell layup with 16:44 left.

Popson finished with 15 points for the Tar Heels, while Williams and Joe Wolf had 10 each.

Hammonds led the Yellow Jackets with 18 points. Brian Oliver added 13.

Morgan Leads Cavs Over Wake Forest

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. (AP) — Virginia Coach Terry Holland said he was worried his team would not play well against Wake Forest Saturday after the weather delayed the Cavaliers' return from a four-day road trip.

"I like the fact that we had a lot of excuses for not playing well — with travel problems and everything — but we came through," said Holland.

Forward Andrew Kennedy scored 20 points to lead five Virginia players in double figures as the Cavaliers pulled away in the second half for a 78-63 Atlantic Coast Conference victory over the Demon Deacons.

The Cavaliers beat Georgia Tech 61-58 in Atlanta Thursday night but the team didn't get back to Charlottesville until Friday night because of the snowstorm that hit the East Coast.

"We finally got the team back together Friday night for an 8 p.m. practice," said Holland. "The travel was tough on us."

Virginia, 13-4 overall and 3-2 in the league, got only one point from its bench but the starters hit 18 of 24 shots from the floor for 75 percent in the second half to break open a close game.

Richard Morgan had 18 points for the Cavaliers followed by Mel Kennedy with 14, John Johnson with 13 and Tom Sheehey with 12.

Mel Kennedy's 16 rebounds led Virginia to a 41-20 advantage off the boards.

Wake Forest, 8-8 and winless in six ACC games, led most of the first half and was helped by hitting three of four three-point goals. The Demon Deacons took a 25-19 lead when Tyrone Bogues hit an 18-foot jumper with 5:45 left in the half.

Buckeyes Upset Iowa, 80-76

IOWA CITY, Iowa (AP) — Forward Dennis Hopson scored 36 points as Ohio State upset No. 1 Iowa 80-76 in a Big Ten college basketball game Saturday, handing the Hawkeyes their first defeat of the season.

The loss snapped Iowa's 18-game winning streak, the longest in the nation. Iowa repeatedly missed key free throws in the final three minutes of the game while Hopson, a 6-foot-5 senior from Toledo, Ohio, made six free throws and a slam dunk in the final 5:49 to lift Ohio State, 13-6 and 4-3 in the Big Ten.

Iowa fell to 18-1 on the season, 6-1 in conference play and surrendered sole possesion of the Big Ten lead with the loss, tying with Purdue.

Junior guard Curtis Wilson added 20 points for the Buckeyes, forward Jerry Francis had 12 and guard Jay Burson had 10.

Guard B.J. Armstrong led Iowa with 20 points and guard Kevin Gamble had 19. Iowa's usually-stong bench contributed only nine points.

After the game was tied at 41 at the half, Iowa went ahead 46-44 on a 3-point shot by Armstrong, but a driving lay-up at 16:00 by Francis put Ohio State ahead 49-48 and the Buckeyes, a 14-point underdog, never trailed after again.

Iowa had a chance to cut the lead to one point with 10:34 to play but center Ed Horton missed the front end of a one-and-one.

Ohio State ran out to a seven-point lead, its biggest of the game with 5:49 to play.

With 2:22 left, Iowa again had a one-and-one to cut the lead to one, but Gamble missed his first attempt.

Horton twice missed on the front end of one-and-ones and forward Roy Marble, Gamble and forward Brad Lohaus each missed foul shots.

Iowa shot 39 percent from the free-throw line in the second half and 43 percent for the game. Ohio State shot 71 percent from the line in the second half, 70 percent for the game.

Hopson was 12 of 21 and one of four from 3-point range. He shot 11 of 13 free throws.

Marble, Iowa's scoring leader with a 15-point average, was held to seven points.

Iowa outrebounded Ohio State 44-26, topping the Buckeyes 23-8 in offensive rebounds.

Iowa had success going inside early, getting 10 of its first 12 points on four layups and a dunk by Marble.

Ohio State trailed 23-17 after a layup by Gamble with 10:59 to play. But two field goals and a three-point shot by Wilson and three free throws and a jump shot by Hopson helped close the gap to 30-29. Hopson hit a 15-footer to put the Buckeyes up 31-30 with six minutes to play in the first half. It was Ohio State's first lead of the game.

The lead changed hands six times, the last time on a three-point shot by Wilson at 1:27, and the score was tied once over the next 5:56 before Armstrong hit a jump shot with four seconds remaining to tie the game 41-41 at halftime.

Horton was called for a technical foul with 55 seconds to play in the first half for shoving Buckeye center John Anderson. Hopson made the free throw to put Ohio State up 41-39.

(7)Syracuse 64
(14) St. John's..... 63

SYRACUSE, N.Y. (AP) — The ball had Rony Seikaly's name written all over it.

The Syracuse center sank one of two free throws with 36 seconds remaining, then grabbed Mark Jackson's off-target, three-point shot with six seconds left to seal the seventh-ranked Orangemen's 64-63 Big East conference victory Saturday over 14th-ranked St. John's, which rallied from a 17-point deficit in the second half.

"There was no way anybody else was going to get that ball," said Seikaly after battling with Redmen Shelton Jones and Terry Bross for what seemed like an eternity. "It was like a game of volleyball, but I didn't want them to get another chance."

"It felt good coming out of my hands and it looked good," said Jackson, who scored his team's last eight points. "If it happened again, I'd take it again."

Seikaly tipped the ball away from one of the Redmen, then had it knocked out of his hands, but finally chased it down as time expired.

"Just as I grabbed it, I was pushed out of bounds, so if there had been any time left I would have shot two free throws and iced the game," said Seikaly.

The 6-foot-11 junior said he knew his first free throw was good, but that his second was off the mark.

"I shot it too quick and I wasn't relaxed," he said. "At that point, with the 3-point shot it didn't matter anyway. I just hustled back to play tough on the defensive end."

Sherman Douglas, who paced Syracuse with 16 points, said the Orangemen might have become too confident after building their 17-point lead.

"Sometimes when you get a big lead you play not to lose rather than to win," he said. "We stopped rebounding, made some turnovers and uncharacteristic fouls and they buckled down on defense and didn't let up."

The victory left Syracuse at 17-1 and undefeated in the conference at 6-0. St. John's fell to 13-3 overall and 4-3.

Syracuse built a 46-29 advantage during the first 4½ minutes of the second half on a 12-0 spurt, keyed by six points by forward Howard Triche. The Orangemen were aided by poor shooting by St. John's, which failed to score until Willie Glass' 10-foot jumper at the 15:31 mark.

But then Syracuse went cold, scoring only eight points over the next nine minutes, while St. John's chipped away.

Glass, who finished with 25 points, scored 10 points during that nine-minute span as St. John's narrowed the Syracuse lead to 54-53 before Douglas netted a 3-pointer and Greg Monroe added a long jumper to push the Orangemen's lead back to 59-53 with 5:32 left.

St. John's outscored Syracuse 6-2 over the next two minutes and then Jackson sank his second 3-point shot of the game to tie the score at 61-61 with 2:46 to play.

The teams then exchanged a pair of free throws before Seikaly sank the winning free throw, missing the second.

Syracuse had a 34-29 halftime lead behind Monroe and Douglas, who each had nine points in the opening 20 minutes.

Monroe finished with 13 points, including three 3-pointers, and Seikaly added 11 points.

Jackson finished with 14 points for St. John's.

(11)Oklahoma.....81
Kansas St.....78

MANHATTAN, Kan. (AP) — Senior guard Tim McCalister scored 34 points and made two free throws with 16 seconds left to preserve an 81-78 victory for 11th-ranked Oklahoma over Big Eight opponent Kansas State Saturday.

The Wildcats, now 3-1 in the conference and 13-4 overall with their first loss at home this season, had a chance to tie the game on Will Scott's 3-point shot with four seconds remaining. The jumper bounced off the rim and into the hands of McCalister.

The Sooners improved their conference mark to 3-1 and their overall record to 14-3. A 3-point goal by the 6-foot-3 McCalister put the Sooners up 79-72 with 3:29 remaining.

Three straight baskets, two by center Charles Bledsoe and one by forward Norris Coleman, cut the margin to 79-78 with 1:09 left. Mitch Richmond then was called for his fifth foul, sending McCalister to the line.

After Kansas State trailed 39-36 at halftime, Coleman led a rally with 18 second-half points for a total of 24. Scott also scored 24 points, 20 in the first period.

Oklahoma's Harvey Grant, who scored 12 points, held Coleman to just six points in the first half. The Kansas State forward, who averaged 23.5 points in four previous games, hit only two of 11 field goals in the first half.

David Johnson scored 13 points and Darryl Kennedy had 11 for Oklahoma. Kansas State got 13 points from Richmond.

(19)Texas Christian...62
Houston.....56

HOUSTON (AP) — Guard Carven Holcombe says experience helped 19th-ranked Texas Christian defeat Houston and take a commanding lead in the Southwest Conference basketball standings.

"I was concerned about the closeness of the game, but every starter is a senior and we know what it takes to win," Holcombe said Saturday after scoring 24 points to lead the Horned Frogs to a 62-56 win over the Cougars.

TCU has won 12 straight games to raise its overall record to 16-3. The Horned Frogs are 7-0 in the conference.

"We control our own destiny, but we've got nine more games to go," TCU Coach Jim Killingsworth said.

It was only the second time in 18 games that TCU has beaten the Cougars at Houston. The Cougars dropped to 11-5 overall and 4-2 in the conference.

"Winning here is the big game," Holcombe said. "Houston has the toughest front line we've faced."

Houston's Tim Hobby hit five three-pointers, but scored only five of his 21 points in the second half.

"They just played a very smart game, something you'd expect from a veteran club," Hobby said. "They play together really well and came ready to play. It looks like they'll be tough to catch."

TCU limited Houston's leading scorers, Greg Anderson and Ricky Winslow, to 12 and six points, respectively, with a collapsing inside defense. There were seven ties in the second half before Holcombe gave the Horned Frogs the edge. He hit two corner jumpers and two free throws to give TCU a 54-50 lead with 2:37 left in the game.

Jaime Dixon finished with 14 for TCU, including six late free throws, and forward Norman Anderson added 12.

TCU took a 22-19 lead in the first half, but Houston came back to take a 32-31 lead at halftime.

Temple Eases Past UAB, 67-60

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (AP) — Alabama-Birmingham Coach Gene Bartow knows what a Final Four team looks like, and he said No. 8 Temple showed its championship potential with a 67-60 victory Saturday over UAB.

"What's impressive about Temple is that they could take the ball to the blocks and score against us anytime they wanted to," said Bartow, who took both UCLA and Memphis State to the NCAA semifinals.

"They are extremely smart and they don't turn it over," he said. "They're the type of team that can make it to the Final Four."

The game was close in the second half until guard Nate Blackwell hit a key 3-point shot with 1:40 left to give Temple their biggest lead at 60-55.

After UAB missed a shot, forward Mike Vreeswyk, who led all scorers with 26 points, was fouled but missed two free throws. UAB guards Tracy Foster and James Ponder then missed consecutive 3-point attempts, and Vreeswyk was fouled again as he grabbed a rebound with 40 seconds left. This time, he hit both shots.

Temple improved its record to 18-2 with the victory in the regionally televised game. Alabama-Birmingham, a member of the Sun Belt Conference, fell to 12-6 on the season.

Owl Coach John Chaney said his team was lucky to make it to the intersectional matchup because of a heavy snowstorm in Philadelphia.

"We tried to leave Thursday morning and then Thursday evening, but the airport was closed," he said. "We tried to leave Friday morning and our flight was pushed back.

"We went back and practiced on our home court. After catching a few hours sleep, we finally left after midnight," he said. Temple arrived in Birmingham at 7 a.m. for the noon CST game.

The Blazers, with Foster leading the way, hit seven 3-point shots in the first half to lead by as much as 11 points. UAB took a 33-26 lead at the half.

But Temple scored five unanswered points in the opening minutes of the second half to slice into the UAB lead. The lead see-sawed until Blackwell hit his 3-point shot to give the Owls a five-point lead that proved to be enough.

For Temple, Blackwell added 14 points and forward Tim Perry had 13. Center Ramon Rivas had 12 rebounds.

UAB was led by Foster's 23 points, while Ponder scored 20 points, including five consecutive 3-point shots in the first half. Forward Mike Charles had 11 points.

(17)Auburn 85
Mississippi 61

AUBURN, Ala. (AP) — Coach Sonny Smith's 17th-ranked Auburn Tigers turned it on in the second half and coasted to an 85-61 victory over Mississippi in a Southeastern Conference basketball game Saturday.

"I thought we played well in the second half," Smith said after his team used a 19-4 run at the start of the period to build a 21-point lead, with Jeff Moore and Chris Morris sparking the spurt.

"Morris took the first half off, but came out and was the most aggressive player on the court in the second half," Smith said. "He stepped forward and played when he was challenged."

"I think we botched up our chance in the last three minutes of the first half," Ole Miss Coach Ed Murphy said. "We could have gone down four, two or even, but we made some mistakes and went in down six (36-30). That is part of learning."

Murphy said Auburn was strong where his team has its problems — inside — and that the Tigers dictated play.

"Hopefully next time we will make them play our type of game," Murphy said. "If we do, Auburn will have to play really, really well to beat us."

The triumph snapped a two-game losing streak for the Tigers, 11-4 overall and 4-3 in the SEC.

With Auburn holding a 36-30 halftime lead, Moore scored eight points and Morris six in the run that staked the Tigers to a 55-34 advantage. Morris, who scored all but two of his 16 points in the second half, capped the run with a dunk with 12:26 remaining.

Auburn's biggest lead came with 1:40 remaining, when a layup by Johnny Lynn put the Tigers in front 82-56.

Moore led Auburn with 23 points and 13 rebounds. Mike Jones had 14.

The Rebels, who hit only 34 percent from the field, got 15 points from Roderick Barnes. Ronnie Miller added 11 and Charles Prater 10.

One of the Rebel stars, Eric Smith, was especially ineffective, hitting only three of 19 field-goal attempts.

The Rebels, losing for the fifth time in six games, fell to 9-7 overall and 2-5 in the conference.

(9)Illinois 82
Arizona 63

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. (AP) — Illinois Coach Lou Henson was pleased with his team's 82-63 victory over Arizona Saturday.

But he was particularly excited about the performance of senior guard Doug Altenberger.

Henson said Altenberger gave "one of the outstanding performances we've ever had by an Illinois player."

"He was unbelievable in today's game," Henson said.

Altenberger scored 26 points and played tough defense against Arizona forward Sean Elliott to lead No. 9 Illinois to the triumph. After the game, Arizona Coach Lute Olson also gave Altenberger glowing reviews.

"He's a competitor at both ends of the court and he never stops," Altenberger said. "Even if he is dead tired, he's going to give you everything he's got."

Altenberger's performance was witnessed by a nationwide television audience on NBC, but the senior from Peoria was matter of fact about the audience.

"You can't think about it," Altenberger said. "It's the only time you can see (NBC commentator) Al McGuire up close and that is about it."

The Illini played without senior point guard Tony Wysinger, who suffered a shoulder separation in Thursday's overtime loss to Purdue. Henson said Wysinger would be out for at least another week, but praised his replacement, freshman Steve Bardo.

"Bardo did a remarkable job considering the amount of time he has played," Henson said. "We are proud to have a freshman who can go out there and play that solid."

Bardo took only two shots from the field and missed both attempts. But he handed out nine assists, grabbed three rebounds and made all four of his free throw attempts in 37 minutes.

After leading 33-29 at intermission, the Illini broke the game open early in the second half, outscoring the Wildcats 10-4 in the first three minutes.

Glynn Blackwell added 23 points and Ken Norman 14 for Illinois. Arizona was led by Sean Elliott who scored 17 points and Ken Lofton who had 12.

The Illini never trailed in the game. They jumped to a 2-0 lead on a Lowell Hamilton slam dunk. Blackwell added a basket and Altenberger a 3-pointer to put the Illini up 7-2 early in the game.

The Wildcats, however, refused to fold and continued to stay within striking distance in the first half.

The Illinois defense took its toll forcing Arizona into 13 second-half turnovers.

The victory lifted Illinois to a 14-4 overall record, while Arizona dropped to 10-7. The Illini are 5-2 in Big Ten play, while Arizona is 5-3 in Pacific 10 play.

Pavin Takes Phoenix Open Lead

SCOTTSDALE, Ariz. (AP) — Corey Pavin, a winner last week, birdied two of his last three holes for a 5-under-par 66 that gave him a one-shot lead over Paul Azinger Saturday after three rounds of the $600,000 Phoenix Open golf tournament.

"Sure, I'd rather be leading," Pavin said, looking ahead to Sunday's final round of the chase for a $108,000 first prize.

"I'd rather be leading by five or six. But leading by one, well, that's just one more shot I have to play with."

Pavin completed three trips over the new TPC course at Scottsdale in 200, 13 shots under par.

But there was a group of 16 players — including Fuzzy Zoeller, defending title-holder Hal Sutton and PGA champion Bob Tway — within five strokes.

Azinger was the closest but didn't know it until the 18th hole.

"I didn't see a leaderboard until I was on the 18th green. I was just out there minding my own business. I figured 14 or 15 under was leading," he said.

Azinger did not make a bogey in a round of 65 that, he said, was compiled "in perfect weather conditions. That's why you're seeing such low scores."

The lowest of the tournament was turned in by Doug Tewell, who birdied six times in a stretch of seven holes and shot a 62, nine under par.

"Just one of those days when everything clicked. I felt I could birdie every hole," said Tewell.

He was tied at 202, 11 under par, with Zoeller and Jay Haas, who had a third round 68. Zoeller holed out a 177-yard 5-iron shot for an eagle-2 in his round of 66.

Tway scattered 10 "3s" across his card in a round of 63 that lifted him to 203.

"Not as good as Tewell, but I'll take it," said Tway, winner of four titles last year. "I feel like I'm finally getting it back in the groove a little."

The group at 204 included Mark O'Meara, Mark Calcavecchia, J.C. Snead, Bobby Wadkins and George Burns. Snead had a 66, Wadkins shot 67 and Burns 68, while O'Meara and Calcavecchia had 70s.

Sutton, with a 67, was in a large group at 204.

Pavin hit short irons inside of 4 feet on each of the first three holes and birdied each one.

He took the lead with a 4-wood second shot and a 12-foot birdie putt on the 11th, then surrendered it with a 3-putt bogey-6 on the 15th.

"That wasn't too swift. I was angry with myself. I had to get myself back together again," he said.

He did, rapping in 10-foot birdie putts on the next two holes to regain the top spot.

Scramble For The Ball

Clemson's Horace Grant (54) tries to keep the ball in play after landing on the floor with Duke's Quin Snyder (14) and Danny Ferry (35) in first half action at Littlejohn Coliseum Saturday. Clemson suffered its first defeat, 105-103, in overtime. (AP Laserphoto)

Miller Lifts Bruins Past Notre Dame

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The UCLA Bruins spent all but the final three minutes making Coach Walt Hazzard very unhappy Saturday.

But those final three minutes were enough to change Hazzard's outlook.

The Bruins overcame an 11-point deficit by outscoring Notre Dame 17-2 in that span to take a 63-59 decision from the Fighting Irish in a non-conference college basketball game.

After trailing the entire second half, the Bruins finally took the lead when Reggie Miller made a 3-point basket with 10 seconds remaining to put UCLA ahead 61-59.

"We never quit," Hazzard said. "With this team down by 11, I thought we were still in the game but I wasn't happy. Miller wins it with an All-American shot."

Notre Dame had opened a 57-46 lead on a layup by Mark Stevenson with less than 3½ minutes to play. The Bruins, using a full-court press that forced Notre Dame into repeated turnovers, then outscored the Fighting Irish 11-2 to pull within 59-58 on a dunk by Miller with 21 seconds left.

After calling time out, the Bruins forced another Notre Dame turnover and Miller launched a 28-foot jumper from the right side that hit nothing but net to give the Bruins a 61-59 lead.

"I thought that for 36 minutes, we played very, very well. But in the last four, we didn't," Notre Dame Coach Digger Phelps said. "In the last four minutes, we didn't execute against the press and I take the blame for that."

Hazzard said the Bruins' full-court pressure defense is something opponents will see more of in the future.

"The pressure at the end of the game really hurt them," he said. "Some day you'll see that press for 40 minutes. Our best playing days are ahead of us."

While the Bruins were rallying, it appeared to Phelps that the officiating had gone UCLA's way.

Rampant Tankers Sink Northeastern, Kinston

ELIZABETH CITY — Rose High School's Jim Gillahan took first place in the 50-meter free-style and the 100-meter fly to help the Rampant swimmers capture a victory over Northeastern and Kinston Saturday.

The Rampants totaled 82 points, while Kinston finished second with 65, followed by Northeastern at 42.

Meanwhile, Northeastern's lady tankers nipped Rose, 73-72, in the girls' swim meet. Kinston totaled 14 points to finish third.

Both squads face North Durham and Kinston at home Saturday at 11 a.m.

Pirates' Loss...

But a jumper by Darrin Mosley and four straight free throws by Sanders brought Mason back and tied it at 46-46. Then, after ECU scored again, baskets by Battle and Mosley put the Pats back up on top, 50-48 with 7:21 to play.

A technical foul on Brown gave Mason a 51-50 lead with 7:01 to go, and Davis followed with a three-pointer for a 54-50 edge.

East Carolina came back to regain the lead one last time on a four-point kplay by Sledge. He hit the three-point jumper and was fouled by Smith with 4:55 showing.

But that was it. Mason started its 11-point string there, taking command — and the win.

Turnovers hurt the Pirates, who committed 17. They seemed to come at key times when the Pirates needed a basket to put the game out of reach — or to get back into it.

East Carolina outrebounded Mason, 38-30, led by Edwards' 11 and Henry's 10.

Edwards also led the ECU scoring with 18 while Henry had 16. Sledge added 12 and Bass had 11.

Sanders led Mason with 19, all in the second half while Davis had 15, Mike Dufrene had 13 and Mosley had 10.

The loss was the fifth straight for ECU in Fairfax, extending back to the 1983-84 season. It was also the third in a row this year for ECU, which drops to 9-8 overall and 2-4 in the league.

Mason increased its record to 10-8 overall and 3-3 in the CAA.

The Pirates travel to Harrisonburg, Va., on Monday to play James Madison — a team they've never beaten on the road.

Duke...

The Blue Devils rallied from a 13-point second-half deficit to tie the game 92-92 at the end of regulation, then outscored the Tigers 13-11 in overtime.

Duke built its rally around the 3-point field goal as the Blue Devils made four in the last 3:30 of regulation. Clemson, meanwhile, missed two of five free throws in the last 1:08 to enable the Blue Devils to catch up.

After the Tigers' Michael Brown scored the first bucket of overtime, Duke scored the next two, with center John Smith hooking from the lane and then forward Billy King scoring on a driving layup to put the Blue Devils ahead 98-96. It was Duke's first lead since the 12:43 mark of the first half.

After Clemson tied the score at 98-98 and then at 100-100, Duke's Tommy Amaker canned a 3-point jump shot with 1:39 left to give the Blue Devils the lead for good, 103-100.

Report Released On Gooden Incident

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — One of the police officers involved in the scuffle with New York Mets pitcher Dwight Gooden screamed "break his arm" during the Dec. 13 incident, according to the prosecutor's files.

Gooden pleaded no contest to felony charges of resisting arrest with violence and battery of a police officer Friday. He was sentenced to three years probation, reduced to two years if he maintains a clean record and performs 80 hours of public service in a police-related field.

With the threat of a trial over, the prosecution file was released to the public. In addition to the arm-breaking threat, the file indicates the arresting officer didn't recognize Gooden as a baseball star and other officers laughed at Gooden when he was lying battered and hand-cuffed on the ground.

Cpl. James Thompson, who suffered a concussion allegedly when kicked by Gooden, told investigators he screamed for his fellow officers to break Gooden's arm.

Asked why he had made that statement, Cpl. Thompson said: "Well, you know, just trying to make him stop is all I was trying to do. I didn't mean to snap his arm off."

Officer Jeffrey Smith, who stopped Gooden, said he isn't a baseball fan and didn't recognize Gooden until he saw his license.

The post-fight laughter was discussed by officer Gary Hill. After being "involved in critical situations such as that, that's a good way to let out your emotions ... is to laugh about something," Hill said.

But the file indicated Gooden got in his licks in the scuffle. A by-stander, 23-year-old Andy Tannous of Tampa, told the prosecutor he saw the Mets star kick a police officer in the groin and "continue to kick at the officer and scream that he was going to kill the officer."

Gooden and four companions were arrested after a police officer spotted his silver Mercedes and a red Corvette driven by Gooden's nephew, Garry Sheffield, weaving in an out of traffic on Nebraska Avenue.

Sheffield, 18, a minor league player in the Milwaukee Brewers organization; Vance Lovelace, 23, a California Angels minor-league player; Phillip Walker Jr., 23, a truck driver, and Derrick Pedro, 17, also were arrested when they joined in the fight, police said.

Sheffield, Lovelace and Walker were charged on a single count of resisting arrest with violence. They decided not to contest the charges Friday and were sentenced to two years probation. Pedro's case is being handled by juvenile authorities.

Attorneys for Gooden have claimed police used excessive force in arresting the All-Star.

Police said Gooden got out of his car, used profane language and grabbed an officer's wrist before violently resisting arrest.

Some witnesses said Gooden, who suffered minor injuries, was beaten with nightsticks and flashlights. But the prosecution file showed that at least one of the witnesses who gave a pro-Gooden version of the events to the media later told prosecutors he didn't want to get involved in the investigation.

Two police officers also were treated for minor injuries.

During the scuffle, an officer pointed a gun at Gooden after Officer Larry Wolff reported Gooden was going for his gun. In the prosecution file, Wolff said Gooden grabbed the lower part of his holster.

After he had calmed down and had been taken to Tampa General Hospital for treatment of minor injuries, Gooden tried to explain his actions to officer Forrest Jahn.

"I didn't want to be thrown to the ground and my hands handcuffed behind me, because I was afraid that once that happened the police would be able to beat me and I wouldn't be able to protect myself," Jahn said Gooden told him.

He said Gooden also expressed regret about the incident.

"Just when all the rumors about me were clearing up, now this has to happen," he quoted Gooden as saying.

Gooden posted a 17-6 record in 1986 and helped the Mets to the world championship. He won the Cy Young Award in 1985 with a 24-4 record.

Mets' Bar Scuffle Trial Set To Begin Monday

HOUSTON (AP) — Felony assault charges against New York Mets pitcher Ron Darling were reduced to a misdemeanor assault, the Houston Chronicle reported Saturday.

However, prosecutors did not change the felony charges against Mets second baseman Tim Teufel, who was scheduled to go on trial Monday.

The players' attorney, Dick DeGuerin of Houston, said he could not confirm the Chronicle story.

"I won't be able to tell you until Monday," DeGuerin told The Associated Press Saturday about Darling's reduced charges. "The courts are closed on weekends.

"I only know what I read in the paper," he said, adding both players are still scheduled to be in Houston on Monday.

Assistant Harris County District Attorney Mike Anderson, who is prosecuting the case, also declined to confirm the lesser charge against Darling.

The charges against Darling, 26, and Teufel, 28, stem from a July 19 incident at Cooter's nightclub. The two are accused of fighting with two policemen who were off-duty and working at the club as security guards.

Teufel's aggravated assault trial was to be held in State District Judge Joe Kegans' court.

Attorneys and prosecutors are prohibited from talking about the trial because of a gag order issued by the judge last fall. The players have declined comment on the case since their arrests.

But the Chronicle reported that Anderson got Harris County grand jurors to reduce charges on Darling.

Throughout Friday, it was uncertain if the Mets case would be tried starting Monday. Judges are under a federal order to try older cases before more recent complaints.

Police said that Teufel left the nightclub's premises with an alcoholic drink, a violation of state law.

ECU, Old Dominion Split Swim Meet

Old Dominion University captured 10 first place finishes en route to a 118-97 men's swimming victory over East Carolina University Saturday in Minges Coliseum.

Old Dominion was well prepared for Saturday's meet against the Pirates, who fell to 7-3 on the season, according to ECU Coach Rick Kobe.

"ODU was well rested and shaved for us," Kobe said. "It went down to the very last relay and I couldn't be more pleased with our effort."

East Carolina's Raymond Kennedy won the 200-meter breaststroke and 200-meter individual medley events.

Meanwhile, ECU's Scotia Miller captured the 500-meter and 1,000-meter free-styles to lead the Lady Pirate tankers 121-95 win over Old Dominion.

With the victory, the Lady Pirates improved to 10-2.

Both ECU teams will next compete in the Colonial Athletic Association Championship meet to be held in Minges Coliseum Feb. 11 to Feb. 14.

Balanced Rampants Fly By Eagles

By DON REUTER
Reflector Staff Writer

Rose utilized a balanced scoring attack and a 24-point fourth quarter to remain undefeated in league play as the Rampants downed Northeastern, 62-52, in Big East Conference basketball action Friday night.

Keyford Langley poured in 15 points to lead three Rose players in double-figures. Errol Wooten and Terry Warren tallied 12 points apiece, while center Melvin Jenkins chipped in nine for the Rampants, who improved their first-place record to 7-0 in the conference and 13-2 overall.

With the loss, Northeastern falls to 3-3 and 8-5.

In the girls' game, the Rampettes routed the Lady Eagles, 67-23, to complete the sweep. The Rampettes, who are also sitting all alone in first place in the Big East standings, are 7-0 in the conference and 11-2 overall.

With the score tied at 38-38 after three quarters of play, Rose exploded for 15 points in the first five minutes of the fourth period while limiting the Eagles to four points to take a 55-42 lead with 3:28 to go.

The Rampants, who went on to outscore Northeastern, 24-14, over the final eight minutes to come away with the win, were able to beat an Eagle full-court press down the stretch.

"We've been handling the full-court press all year," Rose Coach Jim Brewington said. "So the stamina helps us out a lot when the fourth quarter rolls around."

With the victory, the Rampants take another step in their quest for the home-court advantage in the playoffs.

"It's going to be tough from here on in," Brewington said. "Right now, we're shooting for a home birth in the playoffs. I'm assuming that we're already in."

Rose broke in front in the fourth quarter when Warren sank a shot and Langley split two Northeastern defenders for a layup to give the Rampants a 42-38 lead with 6:59 remaining.

After Steve Price, who led the Eagles with 14 points, cut the lead in half, Warren and Jenkins scored to give Rose a 46-40 lead.

Northeastern's David Chamblee trimmed the lead to four points at 46-42, but the Rampants ran off nine unanswered points to take a 55-42 lead with 3:28 left. During the stretch, Jenkins, Langley, Wooten scored a bucket apeice, while Warren contributed three points.

A three-point play by Northeastern's Kelsey Brown with 32 ticks on the clock made it 60-50, but the Eagles weren't able to get any closer as Ande Johnson and Brown traded buckets in the final 10 seconds to conclude the scoring at 62-52.

In the first half, the Rampants, who never trailed in the contest, jumped out to a 22-14 lead on a 15-foot jumper by Langley with 3:43 to go until intermission.

Northwestern quickly ran off six unanswered points and two free throws by Price with 1:45 remaining in the half made the score 22-20.

After Kevin Cobb buried a jumpshot for Rose, Kelly McDowell canned a pair of free throws to put the count at 24-22.

Wooten nailed a 20-foot jumper with four seconds left to send the Rampants into the locker room with a 26-22 lead.

Rose tried to free up the paint in the first half by spreading out on offense, according to Brewington, who said the strategy didn't create many scoring opportunities.

"We tried to loosen them up on defense. We were doing it with the intent to score," Brewington said. "They were so big underneath. We tried to utilize our quickness.

"They (Northeastern) did a good job with it. They never did send the big boys out from under the basket."

In the third quarter, the Rampants extended their lead to 26-22 on a 12-footer by Langley with 5:33 left in the period. Northeastern then went on to outscore Rose, 10-4, and Price's basket tied the score at 36-36 with 1:18 remaining in the quarter.

After Warren sank a pair of free throws with 24 seconds on the clock, Spellman put back a rebound on a tip-in as time ran out in the third quarter.

Amy Barr came off the bench to lead the Rampettes in their 67-23 trouncing of the Lady eagles in a game that was never in doubt after the first quarter.

The Rampettes, who held a 10-7 lead after one period of play, underestimated the Lady Eagles, 1-6 in the league and 1-12 overall, according to Coach Bill Kuykendall.

"We didn't play really well in the first quarter," Kuykendall said. "I think they went out and took them lightly. Early in the quarter we called a time out and had a quick talk about it."

Despite the sluggish start, Kuykendall said he was pleased with the teams' performance over the final three quarters.

"We were running the ball well, and we were making extremely good passes," he said. "We really played well."

The Rampettes outscored Northeastern 20-8 in the second quarter to take a commanding 30-15 halftime lead.

Kim Bridges, who tallied 12 points for the Rampettes, pitched in six consecutive points during the quarter.

In the third quarter, Rose continued its torrid pace, scoring 16 points while allowing only a 15-foot jumper by Northeastern's Juantisa Brown with 4:15 to go in the quarter to lead 46-17 with eight minutes to play.

The Rampettes outscored the Lady Eagles, 21-6, in the fourth quarter to end the game at 67-23.

Kim Bridges chipped in 12 points for Rose, while Tracy Franklin led Northeastern with eight points.

Having beaten all of their Big East opponents in the first half of the season, the Rampettes need to be weary of their opponents when they meet for the second time, according to Kuykendall.

"We've gone through the first games unbeaten, but winning the second time is always harder," he said. "We're starting to get some depth (off the bench) we didn't have earlier in the season, and we're starting to play better than we have been."

GCA Gets Split With Friendship

RALEIGH — Michael Cooper scored 23 points to lead Friendship Christian Academy past Greenville Christian Academy, 74-65, in high school basketball action Friday night.

Friendship built up a 26-14 after the opening quarter and expanded that to 16 by halftime at 41-25.

GCA and Friendship played even in the third period with both teams scoring 14 points.

In the fourth quarter, GCA pulled within 66-64 with just under four minutes but that was as close as the score would get as Friendship used a late surge to put the game away.

Paul Hollingsworth led GCA, 10-4, with 20 points. Robin House added 16 and Clint Parker 15.

Doug Creech added 16 and Chuck Ferguson 13 for Friendship.

The GCA girls rolled over Friendship, 64-55, as Stephanie Stevens led the way with 16 points.

GCA broke open the game in the third quarter when they outscored Friendship 16-6 to go ahead 47-37.

Amber Tripp added 15, Joanie Cherry 13 and Sandy Johnston 10 for the winners, who improve to 8-1.

Friendship was led by Chrystal Thompson with 23.

GCA returns to action Monday, hosting Pungo Christian Academy.

LITTLEFIELD — Ayden-Grifton used timely free throw shooting in the final minutes to hold off an upset bid by C.B. Aycock, 67-66 Friday night to remain undefeated in the Eastern Plains Conference basketball standings.

James Woods, Eric Blount and Ronnell Peterson all hit free throws in the final 47 seconds to secure the win for the Chargers, who improved to 11-3 overall and 5-0 in the conference.

In the girl's game, Ayden-Grifton took a 45-42 win over the Lady Falcons.

Aycock had pulled within 63-62 with 1:08 remaining on a three-point play by Carlos Coley.

Woods was then fouled and went to the line for a one and one. He hit one of two to put the margin at 64-62 with 47 seconds to go in the game.

The Falcons then came down with a chance to tie and worked the ball into Dion Battle who then drove underneath the basket and was called for going out of bounds to turn the ball over to the Chargers with 31 seconds left.

With 29 seconds left, Blount was fouled and hit two free throws to bring the lead back to four at 66-62.

Johnny Smith countered for the Falcons with a jumper in the lane with 14 seconds remaining to pull Aycock back within two at 66-64.

The Chargers inbounded the ball and wittled the clock down tc five seconds when Peterson was fouled. He hit one free throw to put the Chargers safely in front 67-64. Ayden-Grifton then gave up an uncontested layup by Coley at the buzzer to provide the final margin.

"The whistle blew so many times, it broke our rhythm," said Charger Coach Bob Murphrey. "I was frustrated and it's hard when you're frustrated not to get them (the players) frustrated. I think we did some good things despite the situation."

The Chargers led most of the game but were never able to build more than a three to five point lead on the visitors.

Aycock led early, taking a 17-15 lead after the first quarter, but Ayden-Grifton outscored Aycock 23-15 in the second period to take a 38-32 lead into the lockerroom.

The Chargers stayed in control in the third quarter despite a charge that saw the Falcons pull within one point on two occasions. Heading into the final period, the Chargers held a 51-46 advantage.

In the fourth quarter, the Falcons battled back again and tied the game at 51 on a free throw by Smith with just under six minutes remaining.

Blount countered with a basket for the Chargers to make it 53-51, but Travis Spells knotted it up again at 53 with a jumper with just over five minutes remaining.

Blount then hit one of two free throws and Peterson added a jumper to give the Chargers the lead for good at 56-53. From there, the teams traded baskets until the final minute when the Chargers hit the free throws down the stretch to hold off the Falcons.

Blount led Ayden-Grifton with 18 points, while Peterson added 17.

Spells led Aycock, 9-6 and 2-3, with 18.

"I wasn't happy with the way we played overall," Murphrey said. "I think we played hard, but we made a lot of mistakes. I think Eric Blount did a good job shooting outside. He came off a poor game at Farmville and I think he had the best game (overall).

"Our bench came in and did a good job for us. Dixon and Harper did a creditable job. When we made a mistake, they would score. They handled the ball better than I thought they would."

With the win, the Chargers remain in sole possession of first place in the EPC.

"I'm to the point now where I want to play some good basketball and let the winning take care of itself," Murphrey said. "Wins are mighty important."

□ □ □

Juanita Murphy, playing with four fouls, hit four free throws in the final minute to allow the Lady Chargers to slip past Aycock, 45-42.

The game was tied at 40 with just under two minutes to play when Catina Powell connected on a jumper.

Powell later had a chance to put Aycock in front but missed the front end of a one and one with 1:49 to go.

Ayden-Grifton's Michelle Whitfield hit a free throw to make it 41-40. After Aycock's Monica Lewis missed on a one and one, Murphy hit a pair of free throws to make it 43-40.

Aycock failed to score on the ensuing possession and Murphy again hit a free throw to make it 44-40. Powell countered with a basket to make it 44-42.

Murphy was fouled in the final seconds and hit another free throw to provide the final margin.

The Lady Chargers appeared in control throught first half, building up a 23-11 lead after two quarters of play. Aycock rallied in the third period to pull within 35-33 heading into the final period of play.

Both teams were hampered by foul problems in the second half.

"Out of 10 people on the court, eight had four fouls each," said Ayden-Grifton Coach Kathy Frazier. "Especially in the fourth quarter, we were not able to be aggressive offensively (because of the fouls). We just really played a little bit timid because of foul trouble. But it was nice to play in a close game and win."

Mandlikova Upsets Navratilova

MELBOURNE, Australia (AP) — Czechoslovakia's Hana Mandlikova used an excellent return of service and sparkling passing shots to stun defending champion Martina Navratilova 7-5, 7-6 (7-1) today and win the women final at the $1.65 million Australian Open Tennis Championships at Kooyong.

Mandlikova, who recently applied for Australian citizenship, took full advantage of Navratilova's uncharacteristically inconsistent service in snapping her 58-match winning streak and winning a second Australian Open crown. Mandlikova won for the first time in 1980.

It was a Mandlikova's first win over Navratilova in their last 10 meetings, dating back to Mandlikova's win in the 1985 U.S. Open final, and only her seventh in 30 career matches.

"Beating Martina is like beating a legend," said Mandlikova. "I respect her as a player and a person and I've learned a lot from her. It's always nice to beat her.

"She is the player I have nothing to lose against."

Sweden's Stefan Edberg, the defending men's champion, tries for his second straight title Sunday when he meets Australian Pat Cash, who ousted the world's top-ranked player, Ivan Lendl, in the semifinals.

Edberg warmed up for that match by teaming with fellow Swede Anders Jarryd to win the men's doubles title today, beating Australians Peter Doohan and Laurie Warder 6-4, 6-4, 7-6 (7-3).

Navratilova, who was seeking her fourth Australian Open title, having won in 1981, 1983 and 1985, the last time the tournament was held, had problems finding any consistency with her shots.

Mandlikova exerted such pressure with an array of fine passing shots that many of Navratilova's volleys were off target.

Navratilova made 24 unforced errors to Mandlikova's nine.

"I never got my rhythm on the serve-and-volley," Navratilova said. "The whole match I was struggling. I missed more first volleys today than in the whole tournament in singles, doubles and mixed doubles.

"I could never really get my confidence going. It was always an uphill battle. That's the worst I've played in a final for a long time."

West Craven Overcomes Pam Pack For 77-64 Win

WASHINGTON — West Craven overcame a one-point halftime deficit and cruised past Washington 77-64 in a Coastal Conference basketball game Friday night.

Washington had taken a 34-32 lead heading into the lockerroom as Ryan Dixon scored 16 first half points and Frankie Warren scored 13, but West Craven outscored the Pam Pack 21-7 in the third quarter to take control of the gane.

Dixon ended up as the game's high scorer with 29 points. Warren chipped in 21 for the Washinton, which falls to 2-12 and 0-5.

Dexter Coward scored 20 points for West Craven, while Jesse Campbell added 16 and Gary Blount 15. West Craven moves to 12-3 overall and 4-1 in the conference.

West Craven slipped past Washington, 45-44, as Chundra Crouell hit on a three-point play with 1:45 remaining to give West Craven all the points it would need.

West Craven still had to sweat it out as Washington went ahead 43-42 with 2:01 left when Katherine Occhipinti drove in for a basket.

Crouell then hit her three point play to put West Craven up 45-43.

With one second left, Washington's Tonya Holley hit the first of two free throw to pull Washington within 45-44, but she missed the second and West Craven came away with the win.

Crouell led West Craven with 22 points while Deanna Davis led Washington with 13.

West Craven's girls improve to 12-4 overall and 3-2 in the conference. Washinton falls to 7-5 and 2-3.

Washington returns to action Tuesday at East Carteret.

Rozelle Discusses Expansion

ANAHEIM, Calif. (AP) — A 30-team National Football League might be only two years away.

Commissioner Pete Rozelle said Friday in his annual state of the NFL address that he hoped the league would expand by two teams as soon as 1989. He said he expected to appoint a committee on the subject this year, after collective bargining with the players is completed.

"I would hope we could expand by 1989 by two teams to 30 teams." he said. "Cities that have expressed an interest in a franchise include Memphis, Birmingham, Phoenix, Jacksonville, Oakland and Baltimore. Criteria will be developed, including population and stadium facilities as the main considerations.

"Then the owners will vote. In the final analysis, it takes 21 votes. I would like to have two new teams playing in the 1989 season."

Rozelle admitted that sentiment might exist among some owners to place expansion teams in Baltimore and Oakland, both of which have recently lost franchises — the Colts going from Baltimore to Indianapolis, the Raiders from Oakland to Los Angeles.

Rozelle's speech and question-and-answer session was interrupted when he was handed a subpoena to testify in the punitive damage phase of the case in which former San Diego Chargers owner Gene Klein sued Al Davis, owner of the Los Angeles Raiders. Klein charged that Davis caused him to suffer a heart attack. Klein won a $5 million judgment in the suit.

The punitive damage phase begins Monday in San Diego.

A Raiders spokesman, who asked not to be identified, said, "The lunacy of the Klein case necessitated that Rozelle be a witness. Mr. Rozelle is expected to testify as to the decrease in value of NFL teams plus the status of the television contracts, since we no longer have a contract after this game and the fact that we no longer have a labor agreement after this game. And it certainly is a valid subpoena."

Sheppard Leads NP

DEEP RUN — North Pitt's Ashley Sheppard scorched the nets for 17 points as the Panthers trampled South Lenoir 70-43 in Eastern Plains 2-A Conference basketball action Friday night.

In the girls' game, the Lady Devils never trailed en route to a 50-44 victory over North Pitt.

With the victory, the Panthers improve to 2-3 in the conference and 5-8 overall. South Lenoir falls to 1-5 and 6-9.

North Pitt jumped out to a 19-9 lead in the first quarter and moved out to a 41-19 lead by halftime. The Panthers increased the lead to 52-23 after the third period and held on for the 70-43 win.

Roy Williams led South Lenior with 15 points.

Sonya Kincy scored 20 points to lead the Lady Devils to a 50-44 victory over the Pant-HERS.

Keisha Pilgreen scored 16 points and Gwen Pilgreen added 15 in a losing effort for North Pitt, which drops to 1-4 and 7-7. South Lenior upped its record to 2-4 and 4-11.

The Lady Devils, who moved out to a 11-8 lead after eight minutes, outscored North Pitt, 11-6, in the second period to take a 22-14 halftime lead.

The Pant-HERS clawed to within 33-30 at the end of the third quarter, but South Lenoir took the fourth period, 17-14, to come away with the win.

Kelly Thompson added 10 points for the Lady Devils.

North Pitt hosts Pamlico in a conference matchup Thursday night.

Small Game Increasing

Several of the most popular hunting seasons have already come to a close until next year, but sportsmen who didn't get enough can still hunt quail, grouse and rabbits through Feb. 28. And biologists say these animals' populations are up from last year's levels.

"I've noticed considerably more quail this year than last, and reports from other biologists and sportsmen indicate that this pattern holds true throughout the state," said Terry Sharpe, small-game project leader with the N.C. Wildlife Resources Commission. "Rabbit populations also seem to be increasing, although this has been occurring for the past few years."

The bag limit for quail is 10 birds daily with a possession limit of 20, and the bag limit for rabbits is five daily with a possession limit of 10.

Biologists say the extremely dry weather last summer helped quail populations increase a great deal in certain areas. The wet weather in August caused many weeds to mature, which should provide an abundance of seeds eaten by quail.

Sharpe said squirrel hunting (which is allowed until Jan. 31) should also be excellent. The bag limit for squirrels is eight daily with a possession limit of 16.

Grouse also had a better than average productive season. The daily bag limit is three with a possession limit of six.

According to a recent hunter survey conducted by the commission, quail hunting was better in 1985 than in 1984. The study said that in 1985, hunters flushed an average of three coveys of quail per trip compared to only 2.4 the previous year. A corresponding rise in the bag was also noted.

"In 1984, hunters took about one bird more than in the previous year," Sharpe commented. "That's a significant increase. No one knows exactly why, but one reason might be that there was a big drop of pine mast in 1984. That meant that there was plenty of food in the woods, and the birds may not have moved as much. Consequently, hunters who stuck to their traditional haunts such as field edges probably just didn't find as many birds."

The survey also showed that grouse populations were stable. In both years, hunting parties killed an average of 11.5 birds per season and flushed an average of 4.5 birds per trip.

Sharpe said the information for the survey was gathered from "sportsmen who hunt often and do it successfully. If someone hunts only a few days a year, and has exceptionally good or bad days, the data is not valid."

He said participation was limited to sportsmen who hunted more than 15 times a year and bagged over 50 quail. About 200 quail hunters and 60 grouse hunters participated last year. Hunters were given cards on which they record for each trip the number of hours hunted, flushes or covey rises per trip, and the number of birds.

Sharpe is seeking additional participants for the study, but said that they must meet the criteria and be willing to make a long-term commitment.

"What we really need is hunters who are willing to participate for many years. It's not a lot of trouble, but does require that notes be kept on each hunting trip."

For more information contact Terry Sharpe, Division of Wildlife Management, N.C. Wildlife Resources Commission, 512 N. Salisbury St., Raleigh, N.C. 27611.

Fishing Contest Opens

The annual Grifton Shad Festival Hickory Shad Fishing Contest is officially open, according to contest chairman George Sugg of the Sport Shop in Grifton.

Although the first fish of the season is not usually caught until early February, the contest traditionally opens on Jan. 1 and closes the first day of the Shad Festival on April 1.

The contest is limited to fish caught on hook and line, and American shad are not eligible (because hickory shad outnumber American shad in the Grifton area). Fish must be weighed and recorded at the Sport Shop.

Trophies will be given after the festival's April 4 parade for the first shad entered in the contest, for the largest fish entered by an adult and for the largest fish entered by a youth under 12 years old.

Shad, a migratory fish living in the ocean, swim up coastal rivers to spawn in freshwater creeks. The date when the fish "run" up the creek varies according to the temperature of coastal waters. In eastern North Carolina, the peak of the shad run is March.

In addition to the Hickory Shad Fishing Contest, a bass fishing tournament is scheduled for April 4 from 7 a.m. until 4:30 p.m. with check-in at Lawson Creek in New Bern.

Trophies, cash and merchandise prizes will be given and a $50 fee per boat is charged. The bass tournament is sponsored by the W.E.T.S.U. Bassmasters of Kinston. Applications and further information can be obtained from Danny Joe Humphrey at 522-5478 or "Boo" Hayes at 527-7074. Last year, 80 boats and fishermen from from 19 towns participated.

Mitchell's Free Throws Aid Ahoskie

ROBERSONVILLE — Keith Mitchell sank a pair of free throws with 38 seconds to go to give Ahoskie a 48-47 Northeastern 2-A Conference victory over Roanoke Friday night.

Mitchell scored 20 points to pace the Cougars, who improved to 3-2 in league play and 5-4 overall. Jasper Council and Richard Moore poured in 10 points apeice to lead the Redskins, who dropped to 3-2 and 5-8.

Meanwhile, the Lady Redskins remained undefeated in conference action by downing the lady cagers from Ahoskie, 37-33.

In the boys' game, Roanoke moved out to a 11-6 first quarter, but the Cougars outscored the Redskins, 15-9, in the second period to take a 21-20 lead at intermission.

Roanoke bounced back and pulled ahead 33-31 after the third quarter, but Ahoskie overcame the deficit to pull out the victory.

After playing to an 8-8 draw in the first period, the Lady Redskins scored 11 second quarter points to take a 19-17 lead.

After Ahoskie moved out to a 25-23 lead, Roanoke outscored the Lady Cougars, 14-8, in the fourth quarter to seal the victory.

Joyce Outlaw scored 20 points to lead Roanoke, which improves to 5-0 and 7-6, while Cindy Smallwood tallied 14 points and Helen Balantine added 10 for Ahoskie, 1-4, 2-5.

Roanoke meets Edenton Tuesday night.

Kirk Sues Paper, Magazine

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — Lawyers for fired Memphis State basketball Coach Dana Kirk have filed lawsuits accusing the city's daily newspaper and Sports Illustrated of libel and asking for $20 million in damages.

In a separate complaint filed Friday in Shelby County Circuit Court, Kirk is asking for another $1.5 million from The Commercial Appeal, a restaurant and a restaurant manager as a result of an incident last May.

In a brief news conference at his lawyers' office, Kirk blamed "widespread media attention" for his dismissal by Memphis State and his indictment on tax charges by a federal grand jury last year.

"Two years ago, based entirely upon their zeal for sensationalism, The Commercial Appeal, Sports Illustrated and others following their lead began the publication of totally false news reports concerning me," Kirk said.

"Among these stories were reports that I had paid $10,000 or $12,000 to a basketball recruit to sign to play basketball at Memphis State, shaved points in games, was a gambler and deeply in debt for gambling losses, that I regularly associated with known felons and in general had brought disgrace to the Memphis State University basketball program," Kirk told reporters.

"All are false and I was fired from my job," he said.

The news organizations said they stand by their stories.

Kirk, who coached the Tigers for seven years, was fired by Memphis State last September, about one month before his indictment on charges of tax evasion, fraud and obstruction of justice. His trial is scheduled for May in U.S. District Court.

Kirk's complaint asks for a total of $10 million from Sports Illustrated as a result of six magazine articles published between June 24, 1985, and Nov. 19, 1986.

Super Bowl Hype Ends With Eyes On The Game

By BARRY WILNER
AP Sports Writer

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — Super Hype week ended today the same way it started — with a big yawn. Nobody said or did anything controversial or outlandish. None of the players or coaches predicted scores. No feuds were started.

No accupuncturists poked needles in quarterbacks. No QBs mooned a helicopter. No linebackers claimed an impending shutout.

Snowstorms may have hindered New York Giants fans from getting to the Super Bowl, but the team weathered the blizzard of media activity with no casualties. Even tight end Mark Bavaro reluctantly broke his silence to tell the world he didn't like being called "Rambo" any more than he enjoyed reading about himself in newspapers.

The Denver Broncos also showed up, although the oddsmakers seemed to question why. They made the AFC champions 9½-point underdogs, and in an informal survey reporters here picked the Giants by a 2½-to-1 margin.

Players on both sides ridiculed the point spread.

"I don't understand why we are such a big favorite," Giants quarterback Phil Simms said. "These guys played us very tough the last time."

"They're very confident, they've outscored teams 66-3 in the playoffs," Broncos linebacker Tom Jackson said. "But I don't believe any team is 10 points better than us. We didn't give up a touchdown offensively to them last time. I think it will be a close game."

So does NFL Commissioner Pete Rozelle, who said in his report to the media on Friday that "I believe Denver has a much better chance to win than the spread indicates."

Rozelle was served with a subpoena to testify in the punitive damage phase of the case in which former San Diego Chargers owner Gene Klein sued Al Davis, owner of the Los Angeles Raiders. Klein charged that Davis caused him to suffer a heart attack and won a $5 million judgment in the suit.

The punitive phase begins Monday in San Diego.

Rozelle also said the NFL was hoping to expand, perhaps as soon as 1989.

"We would expand to two cities and go to 30 teams," he said.

As always, Rozelle handled the media with ease. So did the Giants and Broncos, although there were moments of protestation from some New York players.

Giants linebacker Lawrence Taylor originally said he would be available to the media only once, but appeared at all three press sessions. Taylor said he did so under protest after the NFL ordered him to be at the news conferences.

But Taylor was open about everything except his off-field activities.

"I have no reason to talk about my personal life," he said.

Running back Joe Morris refused to talk about football one day, then was more cooperative the rest of the week.

Bavaro, who rarely gave interviews during the season — and when he did, he stuck to one-word answers — ran away from reporters on Tuesday, which also was photo day, explaining that he just attended to have his picture taken.

He was mobbed by reporters the next two days and, for him, was effusive. He even found time to crack a joke, saying if he had known he would have to speak two straight days, he would not have used up all of his best lines on Wednesday.

His best lines turned out to be one-word answers, too.

The Broncos seemed a bit more relaxed.

"Most people don't think we can win," quarterback John Elway said. "But we know what we can do as a team. We have a quiet confidence and it doesn't really matter what others say.

"We're enjoying all of this, as long as it doesn't interfere with our work."

That work, basically, has been to find the ingredients missing in the teams' earlier meeting, a 19-16 home victory for the Giants. Both clubs have used that game as an educational tool for the Super Bowl.

"It's a help because you can learn first-hand how some of their guys block and what they like to do in certain situations," Broncos All-Pro defensive end Rulon Jones said. "We also know we can play with them. They beat us by only three points in their place."

But the Giants did win and, according to defensive end Leonard Marshall, "that's a big edge."

"We know we can beat them because we did already, even though we didn't play that well," Marshall said.

The Giants were in the midst of a nine-game regular-season winning streak when they beat the Broncos. They have lost only once since the opening week of the season, which Coach Bill Parcells pointed to as a critical time.

"I was disturbed with the defense in the first game of the year," Parcells said of the 31-28 loss at Dallas. "I told them, 'You think this is a situation where you can turn it on when you want to.' I told them there can't be any more letdowns."

There have been none.

"We've been rolling pretty good," cornerback Elvis Patterson said. "We've been doing everything we need to win. Why should it stop now?"

The Broncos had a much bumpier trip following a 6-0 start this season. They split their final 10 games and were hammered 41-16 by Seattle in the season finale.

"That was the low point for us," wide receiver Steve Watson said. "Whenever you get beaten pretty soundly, the next game back is the one where you must put it together. Since that was a playoff game, we had to have it together no matter what happened during the season.

"And we did it, which has been the case for most of our history. We didn't lose two straight all year."

To avoid losing their second straight to the Giants, the Broncos must use their superior speed and multiple alignments to overcome New York's power and size.

Denver's trickery on defense could cause Morris problems. Since Morris is the key to New York's offense — he rushed for 1,516 yards this year — the Broncos' success in shutting him down is crucial.

"I like to break right and left, but Denver doesn't give you that chance," Morris said. "The cracks might be there, but with the way they move around it takes a while to find them.

"But if you stop Joe Morris, you also have to stop Phil Simms. You have to stop the run and the pass. One part doesn't win it alone."

North Carolina's first Baptist Conference was organized in Greenville in 1830.

N.Y. Giants' Reserves Ponder Playing Time

COSTA MESA, Calif. (AP) — For the most part, they will be standing on the New York Giants sidelines on Super Bowl Sunday.

Some have occupied the position most of the season, knowing they are one play, one injury away from playing. Others now stand there on injured reserve, knowing they will not play in the biggest Giants game in recent history.

"The closer it gets to the game, the more down I get about it," said running back George Adams, who has spent the season on injured reserve with a hip injury. "I'm just trying to keep myself up, but it's been hard for me to get on the bus this week and go watch them practice."

It's a feeling shared by Terry Kinard, the free safety who suffered torn knee ligaments in December and was lost for the season.

"I've been in the league for four years and this is the most frustrating thing that has ever happened to me," Kinard said. "It's hard knowing I won't be out there."

Center Brian Johnston has a chance of playing in the Super Bowl, as do quarterback Jeff Rutledge, tackle William Roberts and guard Damian Johnson. They won't play much unless someone is injured.

Johnston, in his second year, has been virtually glued to the bench with Bart Oates taking all the work. Making it worse, he wasn't even getting to play special teams and his name fequently appeared as the only one in the "did not play" category on the weekly stat sheet.

"It was really bad when everyone was jumping up and down on the sidelines," he said. "I was a four-year starter in college, and suddenly I was feeling like I was naked in a crowd."

There was a way out of it though and Johnston took it by begging with the special teams coaches and eventually landing a spot on some teams. His playing time could also increase tenfold if Oates is injured.

"You kind of have to pinch yourself sometimes, because it only takes one play and I'm playing in the Super Bowl," Johnston said. "That's why you have to work hard in practice. If you get the opportunity, you don't want to mess it up."

Roberts was the Giants' starting left tackle until injuring a knee in the 1984 season. His playing time has been limited ever since.

"Watching all season has been like one long play," Roberts said. "It's a long, long season, but you have to prepare like you are going to play tomorrow."

Watching also can make a player feel less a part of a team, Roberts said.

"It's hard to feel the same," he said. "You try to deal with it. We're winning. I'm not playing, but maybe one day I'll start again."

Damian Johnson is one player who might open some eyes in the Super Bowl. He's this year's Fridge, or in the Giants' case, part of The Omen backfield.

"I don't know if I'll get the opportunity to carry it, but I'm sure I'll get the opportunity to be in back there," he said.

Despite the bench time, all of them agree being in the Super Bowl takes away some of the disappointment.

"A lot of people like Harry (Carson) and George (Martin) wait 11 or 12 years to get here," Johnson said. "I feel lucky to be here so soon. It's been very enjoyable."

Broncos' Haynes Analyzes Foes

NEWPORT BEACH, Calif. (AP) — Of all the Denver Broncos, no one knows the New York Giants better than cornerback Mark Haynes. He played six years for the Giants, going to the Pro Bowl three times.

Although Haynes has been relegated to a reserve role this season for Denver, he has some astute observations about what it will take for Denver to beat the Giants in the Super Bowl on Sunday.

"We have to stop (running back) Joe Morris," Haynes said. "He's one of the strongest guys on the team and a very hard worker.

"He's so short he hides behind their linemen and then he accelerates through the hole before you see him. People consider him small, but I don't. He weighs 200 pounds."

Haynes calls Morris "World."

"We used to play basketball a lot, and he's a good basketball player — although not as good as me," Haynes said. "We stuck the name 'World B.' on him. He's only 5-7 but he can dunk the ball."

The Giants offense, Haynes said, doesn't resort to trickery. "They don't do anything fancy, just power football," he said. "Coming over from the Giants, I was used to the strong, powerhouse running teams in the NFC East. They play more finesse football in the AFC, and these two teams are typical of that (difference)."

Defensively, Haynes said the Giants have "one of the best front sevens in the business. They're similar to the Raiders. The first thing they do is stop the run, then they put pressure on the quarterback. Very few teams are able to do it as consistently as they do. They're a big, strong, no-nonsense type of team."

Haynes, who continues to live in New Jersey, says he remains friends with many of his former teammates. "I've talked with Harry (Carson), Zeke (Mowatt), World. We haven't said much about the game. We know what's at stake."

Haynes was acquired by Denver last spring for three draft picks. It was expected that he would displace Mike Harden at right cornerback and, paired with Louis Wright, would give the Broncos two solid man-to-man cover guys.

Stock Prices Collapse In Bizarre Session

By BILL MENEZES
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — After roaring along in an unprecedented year-opening rally, Wall Street tripped over an awesome selloff that saw stock prices take some king-size swings before plunging on the busiest day in market history.

In a wild session Friday, stocks generally moved lower and a record 302.39 million shares changed hands on the New York Stock Exchange, shattering the 253.12 million-share volume mark set just eight days earlier. Stocks lost $30.2 billion in market value.

Analysts disagreed on whether the plunge signaled the end of the young year's torrid rally, but there was little doubt the market had sailed into a historic maelstrom.

"I've never seen a day like this in my life. It's just insane," said Robert O'Toole, manager of over-the-counter trading at Shearson Lehman Brothers Inc. in New York.

"It was convulsive, to say the least," said Hildegarde Zagorski of Prudential-Bache Securities Inc.

While the overall market moved lower, the blue chips gave the most spectacular show.

After jumping a record 51.60 points Thursday, the Dow Jones average of 30 industrials plunged 44.15 points to 2,101.52, the fourth biggest daily loss ever. But a simple recitation of the Dow's close overlooked some incredible action.

At one point in afternoon trading, the Dow soared up about 64 points before taking a dizzying 110-point dive — all in about 90 minutes. It then clawed back to be up 10 points before going into a final tailspin.

"I never remember anything of that dimension taking place in that short space of time," said Monte Gordon, director of research for Dreyfus Corp.

Despite Friday's drop, the market finished higher on the week. The Dow average was 24.89 points higher than when the week began, and broader market indexes also showed gains.

Helping heighten Friday's trading frenzy was computerized program trading, which moves huge amounts of money and stock with lightning speed to profit from disparities between the prices of stock index futures and actual shares of stock.

Program trading has produced sharp swings in the past. This time the effect, centered on the blue chips, was more pronounced because of the market's astonishing runup since 1987 began.

The rally, during which the Dow rose 13 percent before Friday's selloff, was accelerated by buying programs. Once stock prices reached a level that prompted investors to cash in the gains made in the past three weeks, selling programs intensified the plunge.

A number of analysts said the price rises during the early 1987 rally had made the market ripe for investors to cash in their gains. And given the swiftness and intensity of the runup, it had been widely predicted that the ride down would be just as dramatic.

"Given what we've been through in the last two months, this is nothing unusual," said Bill Raftery of Smith Barney, Harris Upham & Co.

Although many professional money managers have expressed bafflement about the breadth and intensity of the rally that erupted with the new year, they agree it has been the result of several strong trends:

—Investors are flush with cash, particularly after heavily selling stocks late last year to take advantage of the old tax laws.

—Interest rates and inflation remain low, enhancing financial assets such as stocks. Stocks also are yielding bigger returns than bonds or money-market securities.

—The dollar's plunge has improved the outlook for stocks of U.S.-based multinational companies and American businesses that have been hurt by imports, and also has increased the buying power of foreign investors.

—The "herd instinct," or the simple fact that no investor wants to miss out on the rally.

"We've probably got a lot of nervous money coming in," Raftery said.

Consumer Spending Jumped In December

By MARTIN CRUTSINGER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Americans, buying big-ticket items to qualify for the sales-tax deduction, pushed spending up 2 percent in December in the biggest rise in more than a decade, while consumer incomes, inflated by farm subsidy payments, rose 0.8 percent, the government reported Friday.

The spending increase followed a 0.6 percent November advance after a record decline of 1.9 percent in October. The new gain was the largest for one month since a 2.5 percent rise in May 1975, the Commerce Department said.

Analysts were not impressed, however, saying the increase came primarily from a big jump in car sales in December as consumers rushed to make the purchases before the deduction for sales tax ended on Jan. 1.

Likewise, the 0.8 percent rise in incomes was discounted by economists, who noted that much of the strength came from a huge increase in government subsidy payments for farmers. Without the farm aid, incomes would have risen a weak 0.2 percent last month.

Growth in wages and salaries, considered the key income category, rose just 0.3 percent in December, matching lackluster gains in recent months.

"Wage growth has been very anemic and this will be a real constraint on future spending increases," said Bruce Steinberg, senior economist at Merrill Lynch, the New York-based investment firm.

Many economists are forecasting that consumer spending, which has been the driving force behind the recovery from the 1981-82 recession, will weaken substantially in the coming year because of a combination of sluggish income growth, record high debt levels and low savings rates.

For all of 1986, the savings rate fell to 3.9 percent, down from 5.1 percent in 1985. It was the lowest level in almost four decades, matching a 3.9 percent rate in 1949 and surpassing only the 3.1 percent rate in 1947.

Consumer spending, which accounts for two-thirds of economic growth, rose at a solid 4 percent rate, after adjusting for inflation, in 1986. But many forecasters look for spending to grow at just half that pace this year.

"Consumer spending will slow down sharply, but we should see an improvement in the trade deficit and that will keep us out of a recession," Steinberg said.

He predicted overall economic growth, as measured by the gross national product, would average 2 percent this year, even slower than the 2.5 percent GNP growth for 1986, which was the weakest showing since the recession year of 1982.

Friday's report said the 0.8 percent rise in overall incomes was the largest since a 1.2 percent increase last April and followed gains of 0.2 percent in November and 0.3 percent in October.

Wages and salaries rose $6.7 billion at an annual rate in December, down from a $9.9 billion November advance. Payrolls at manufacturing firms increased $2.6 billion last month after a $3.6 billion November increase which was inflated because of special bonus payments paid to auto workers.

Farm income rose $19.7 billion in December, reflecting the big subsidy payments, following a $3.9 billion November increase. Without the subsidy payments, farm incomes would have risen a tiny $900 million in December after an $800 million November increase.

Disposable, or after-tax incomes, rose 0.9 percent in December, after a tiny 0.1 percent November increase.

Personal consumption spending, which includes virtually everything except interest payments on debt, shot up at an annual rate of $57.3 billion in December, compared to a November rise of $17.1 billion.

NOW, FOUR YEARS OF COLLEGE TUITION ON THE HOUSE!

If you're in the position of facing college tuition payments, and you make too much to qualify for grants and aid, but too little to tote the bills out of current income—then we have the answer.

Equity Line from First Citizens Bank. Simply put, it is a line of credit based on the equity you now have in your home, and it offers a lot of benefits you won't find under ordinary loan programs.

First, even under the new tax laws, every penny of interest you pay is tax deductible.

Second, the interest rate is incredibly low. Prime plus 1½% on amounts up to $14,999 and prime plus 1% on Equity Line accounts set up for greater amounts.

And perhaps best of all, repayments can be extended over many years. Plus, since you write checks on your Equity Line account as you need the funds, you're not paying in advance for money you haven't used yet.

So, even if college is still a couple of years off, it makes sense to get your financing in place right now. Particularly since First Citizens has eliminated all origination fees. Like all mortgage backed loans of this type, closing costs may apply, but your First Citizens branch manager or loan officer will help you keep those to the absolute minimum.

College tuition on the house. It's a great idea for anyone whose dreams are bigger than their bank accounts.

Business Notes

Institute Participants

Nine Burroughs Wellcome Co. employees attended the Burroughs Wellcome Management Institute, held at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill's School of Business Administration.

The program was developed jointly by the Business School and Burroughs Wellcome.

Employees participating were T. Craig Williams, Jack Parker, Mike Renn, Charles W. Crew, Jerry Powell, Paul J. Donohue, Samuel R. Johnson, Grant A. Imsande and Warren Charlton.

Industrial Engineer

Kris Sheppard, vice president of engineering information systems for Grady-White Boats of Greenville, announced that Diane Bartz has joined the firm as industrial engineer.

The enginer will be involved in methods analysis and time studies, according to Ms. Sheppard.

A Wake Forest native, the new employee is a 1986 graduate of the School of Engineering at North Carolina State University.

Grady-White Boats builds fiberglass sportfishing boats in Greenville.

Account Executive

Carolina Securities Corp. has announced that Barbour Strickland has joined the firm's Greenville branch as an account executive.

Strickland, who previously served as president of Accu Copy in Greenville, received his bachelor's degree in economics from Vanderbilt University. A native of Winston-Salem, he is married to the former Kathryn Baehr of Pittsburg.

Carolina Securities is a Raleigh headquartered brokerage and investment banking company with 15 branch offices across North Carolina.

New Staff Member

Century 21 Janet Bowser & Associates of Greenville has announced the association of Gerry Lambert with the firm's staff of real estate agents.

The company said that Ms. Lambert recently completed her "2 and 1 Careertrak" training and will work as a full-time sales associate.

Advisory Board

Burney S. Warren III, president of First Federal Savings and Loan Association of Pitt County, has announced the formation of a First Federal Ayden Area Advisory Board.

Members named to serve on the new board are Delyle M. Evans, attorney; Horace Tripp, owner of Edwards Pharmarcy; Charlie Davenport, Ayden postmaster; Jesse Corbett, retired businessman; Dr. Danny Harris, a dentist, and Dr. James Galloway Jr., a physician.

Warren said the board members will begin their duties with the January meeting.

Seminar Scheduled

The Eastern North Carolina chapter of the Administrative Management Society will sponsor a seminar on "Substance Abuse in the Workplace" Feb. 12 at the Sheraton Greenville.

A spokesman said the event is open to top, middle and supervisory management.

He said the objectives of the session are to present information related to the development of employee assistance programs and referral services, to increase awareness of symptoms of substance abuse, to discuss legal responsibilities for employers in developing substance abuse policies, to present methods of substance abuse testing, and to acquaint participants with substance abuse services available from the state and proposed legislation.

The AMS is an international organization for management. The eastern chapter, chartered in 1985, includes members from Greenville, New Bern, Kinston, Plymouth, and several other eastern North Carolina towns.

Planters Promotion

William C. Cozart Jr. has been promoted to senior vice president and Oxford city executive for Planters National Bank, according to James B. Powers, chairman and chief executive officer, and J. Richard Futrell Jr., president.

Prior to his promotion, Cozart had served as vice president and Plymouth city executive since 1985.

Cozart began his career with PNB in 1961 as a trainee in Greenville. He served as assistant vice president and operations officer in the Raleigh office, and then as vice president and city executive in Ayden before transferring to Durham following a PNB acqusition.

A Greenville native, Cozart attended East Carolina University where he received a bachelor's degree in geography and science in 1958 and a master's degree in business administration in 1961. He is a graduate of the School of Banking of the South at Louisiana State University.

Cozart and his wife, the former June Hall of Durham, have two children.

WILLIAM C. COZART JR.

Registered Jeweler

Pauline Savage of Jolly's North Hills Jewelers at 325 Arlington Blvd. has been awarded the title of registered jeweler by the American Gem Society.

The AGS, an association of jewelers, said it awards the registered title to member jewelers who obtain advanced professional knowledge and skill through hands-on experience, gemological courses and annual examinations.

Ms. Savage, who has 15 years experience in the jewelry business, joined Jolly's in 1986 and serves as assistant manager of sales.

Herbert R. Levine, AGS president, said the registered jeweler title is held by only 1,350 retail jewelers in the United States and Canada.

Sales Mark Reached

Dave Miller, president of JC Penney stores and catalog, announced that annual catalog sales have reached the $3 billion mark for the first time in the company's history.

Miller said that when the first fall and winter catalog book was produced in 1963, it generated $10 million in demand. By comparison, the fall and winter 1986 catalog's demand will exceed $622 million.

Assistant VP Named

Planters National Bank has announced the election of Cassie Deyton to assistant vice president in the bank's Wilmington office.

Ms. Deyton joined Planters in 1980 as a staff auditor in the audit department in Rocky Mount. She was promoted to senior staff auditor in 1982, and was elected assistant auditor in 1983.

She was in charge of research and product development in the marketing department between 1983 and 1985. In November of 1985 she was transferred to the Wilmington office as operations officer/retail loan officer.

A native of Greenville, she received her bachelor's degree in economics from Duke University and is currently enrolled in the MBA program at the University of North Carolina at Wilmington.

Cash Dividend

The board of directors of Family Dollar Stores Inc. has declared a quarterly cash dividend on the company's common stock of 7 cents per share, payable April 15 to shareholders of record at the close of business on March 13.

Family Dollar said the dividend is an increase of 16 2/3 percent from the preceding quarterly cash dividend of 6 cents per share.

The North Carolina headquartered discount store chain has a facility on Memorial Drive in Greenville.

Income Increased

NCNB Corp. reported a 21 percent increase in net income for 1986 as figures totaled $198.8 million, compared to $164.5 million for 1985.

The company said net income for the fourth quarter of 1986 was $45.9 million, up 21 percent from $38 million in the comparable 1985 period.

NCNB Corp., the largest bank holding company in the Southeast and the 17th largest in the nation, had total assets of $27.5 billion on Dec. 31 compared to $19.8 billion a year earlier.

Acquisition Noted

Ray Pettitt, division manager of Mid-Atlantic Insulation & Energy Services Co., has announced the acquisition of ITAC, Infrared Thermal Analysis & Consultants, formerly of Windsor.

He said ITAC services include detection of insulation voids, roof moisture surveys, building envelope diagnosis, including energy conservation and heat-loss analysis. He said the service also offers electrical and mechanical equipment scans to assist in problem solving and preventive maintenance.

Carl Jordan, a graduate of the infraspection institute in Shelburne, Vt., is the operator of ITAC. Pettitt said Jordan has been certified in infrared thermal imaging equipment and diagnosis.

Sales Coordinator

Linda Daniels, sales manager of Grady-White Boats Inc. of Greenville, has announced that Valorie Williams has been promoted to sales coordinator for the firm.

Ms. Williams will be responsible for the supervision of all sales department functions.

A native of Williamston, Ms. Williams joined Grady-White in 1985 and previously managed orders for boat accessories in the sales department. She attended Peace College, Martin Community College and East Carolina University.

Mortgage Loan VP

Planters National Bank has announced the election of Gwen S. Tyson to vice president in its mortgage loan department in Kitty Hawk.

A Farmville native, Ms. Tyson joined Planters in 1983 as assistant vice president and manager of the mortgage loan office in Greenville. In 1985, she was named manager of the bank's mortgage loan office in Kitty Hawk.

Ms. Tyson, who attended Pitt Community College, has completed the mortgage loan underwriting program sponsored by the Mortgage Bankers Association of America.

The new vice president and her husband, Marty, have one child.

GWEN S. TYSON

MSPCA Seminar

Ken D. Armstrong, owner, and Woody R. Furlough, area manager of the Washington, N.C., office of Down East Cleaning Service, attended a water damage and restoration seminar recently in Winston-Salem sponsored by the Mid-South Professional Cleaning Assocation.

Seminar topics included working with insurance adjusters, principles and techniques of deflooding, and tools of the trade of deodorization.

NARTE Certification

The National Association of Radio and Television Engineers has announced that Lawrence Behr, president of Lawrence Behr Associates, was recently granted top certification from NARTE.

The organization, recognized as the primary certification vehicle for engineers in radio, television, telephone and data communications, said Behr was granted first class certification with both R.F. radiating master endorsement and non-radiating master endorsement.

Behr was also elected as a senior member of NARTE, the highest degree of membership. His firm is a broadcast and telecommunications consulting company.

Realtor Honored

Anne S. Duffus of Greenville was one of four realtors from among the 15,000 members of the North Carolina Association of Realtors honored at the first meeting of the NCAR board of directors recently in Greensboro.

Ms. Duffus was presented the "Realtor Citizenship Award" given to realtors or realtor-associates to recognize "contributions to the betterment of their community through outstanding public service."

Joseph L. Clark of Greensboro, Jackie Kiser of Charlotte, and Bob Measamer of Fayetteville were presented "Realtor Regional Service Awards."

Sales Associate

Foursite Realty of Greenville has announced the association of James W. Byrd Jr. as a sales associate and realtor in the area of residential and commercial properties.

Byrd was a sales associate for Property Management Inc. of Myrtle Beach, S.C., in 1985 before returning to complete his degree at East Carolina University.

Byrd is a member of First Presbyterian Church of Greenville where he has served as a member of the nominating committee for deacons and elders, and as a member of the pastoral search committee.

He is the son of Dr. J.W. Byrd Sr. and Marcy Byrd of Boone, formerly of Greenville.

General Manager

Bob Barbour Honda of Greenville has announced that Bill Warren has joined the dealership as general manager.

Warren joins Bob Barbour Honda from Voyager Automotive Group, an American Can Co. in Raleigh, where he served as senior vice president.

The new general manager is a 1969 graduate of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. He and his wife, Sharon, have two children, Miranda and Michael.

Officers Installed

New elected officers took their oaths at the annual installation dinner recently of the Greenville local union of the American Postal Workers Union at the Sheraton Greenville.

Officers installed were David Wiseman, president; Bill Brown, clerk craft vice president; Herbert Lewis, maintenance vice president, and Brenda Ross, secretary.

Bob Stutts from Jacksonville, APWU state president, and Archie Salisbury of Memphis, Tenn., regional coordinator, attended the meeting. Salisbury installed the local officers.

The Greenville affiliate has 43 members.

Quarterly Dividend

The board of directors of First Citizens BancShares Inc. declared a quarterly dividend of 6 cents per share on Class A and Class B common stock, payable April 1 to shareholders of record March 23.

Associate Broker

C.J. Harris and Co. Inc. has announced the association of William Walton III with the firm in Greenville office as an associate business broker.

The company said Walton will assist clients in mergers, acquisitions, divestitures and general business brokerage. He will also market other financial marketing consultant services.

Walton has a bachelor's degree in industrial technology and is currently pursuing a master's degree in business administration from East Carolina University.

Harris and Co. is a market and financial and marketing consulting firm based in North Carolina with corporate offices in Greenville and Raleigh.

Designations Earned

Six sales associates of Century 21 Janet Bowser & Associates in Greenville, have earned the professional designation of "Century 21 VIP Associate."

The firm said that Kathy Webb, Rhonda Bailey, James Gibson, Jeff Gaddis, Mike Davis and Mable Page achieved the designation by participating in a series of training courses and production exercises taught through the Century 21 professional development and office accreditation program, "Careertrak."

The career development program covers various aspects of real estate sales, including selling, financing and business planning.

The designation is granted to brokers and sales associates who meet requirements in one of four career specialty areas: residential sales, investments, referral/relocation and management.

Adult Day Program Giving Care

By CAROL TYER
Reflector Staff Writer

George Hamilton recently wrote to The Daily Reflector: "My mother-in-law has been living with us and, until recently, was independent, able to be left at home alone while my wife and I were at work. Recently, she fell, resulting in her loss of independence. We were in a dilemma.

Hamilton continued, writing, "But it was suggested to us that we examine the Creative Living Center, an adult day care center here in Greenville. This has been great! It has provided a convenient place to leave Sarah while we are at work."

His mother-in-law "receives stimulus from others present, which has helped her be more alert. And there are activity and exercise programs with loving and caring staff, all at moderate cost. I would like to advise anyone needing this kind of assistance to investigate the center as we did."

The Creative Living Center where Hamilton's mother-in-law spends each day was opened six months ago. Connie Kuenzi, a social worker experienced in working with the elderly, is its director.

The center has an average of 10 participants, with capacity for 30 at present staff and space levels. St. James United Methodist Church donates the facilities, charging the center only for utilities.

Sponsored by the East Carolina University School of Medicine, the center is funded through grants and participant fees. It has a 40-member board of directors drawn from the community.

Ms. Kuenzi, who once managed a 2400-member senior center in Memphis, Tenn., is enthusiastic about the program. She said she wishes participation were greater at this point, but is not discouraged. "Adult day care catches on slowly in most communities," she said. "People have to see the value over time before they elect to bring their loved ones into it."

Most of the participants at the center are older individuals living with adult children or elderly spouses. Some are just out of the hospital and need a little time to snap back; others have major disabilities. Most need medication dispensed on a regular basis. Perhaps more than anything else, all need interaction with others and a way to fill their days with stimulating activity, Ms. Kuenzi said.

Susan Redding, a nurse who works at the center four hours a day, administers medication. In some cases, she has even been able to spot potentially troublesome drug interaction and has suggested that patients check with doctors. She also performs routine health maintenance procedures like foot care and is constantly on the lookout for health education resources for participants. She invites speakers to the center, brings posters and pamphlets, and otherwise shares current information.

Janet Thomas, the center's social worker, leads reality orientation sessions, activities to help the participants know they are capable of using their memories in their daily lives. She also works on social needs like transportation and Medicaid problems and does the initial social assessment on each participant.

Glenda Saulter, occupational therapist, works with the participants two hours a day. She helps them regain fine motor skills with exercises and projects.

Activities director Shari Linton is with the clients all day. Many arrive by 7:30 a.m. and the last participant leaves at 5:20 p.m.

Ann Barfield, a program assistant, is often the staff member who works most closely with Alzheimer's patients, who often cannot enter into all the activities that Shari leads.

Activities range from reality orientation games like flash card identification to adapted physical exercise to work on craft items. Some of the projects are simple, some more complicated. For instance, this past fall, a friend of the center cut out plyboard Halloween figures and the clients painted them and took them home for lawn displays of their own.

Meals are sent from the hospital cafeteria each day. Snacks are often of the clients' own making. For instance, the day of this interview, the morning had been filled with the making of prune cake that would be used later in the day for snacking.

Outings have included Christmas shopping at a shopping mall, visiting Green Springs Park, and attending a Marine Band concert.

Special days with specific themes are planned. On Hawaii Day, the clients were greeted with leis for their necks and enjoyed everything from the hula to pineapple snacks. On Cuba Day, they had a Cuban family visit and share with them about their traditions.

The cost of a day at the center is $20 for the most well-off, less for many. Payment is based on ability of the client to pay. Income of other family of the client is not considered.

The program is in line to be certified by the North Carolina Department of Human Resources as a day health care center.

A recent Kate B. Reynolds Health Care Trust grant of $131,000 is being given to the center for further development of its educational component. Volunteer work at the center is already being done by persons minoring in gerontology at East Carolina University and by other students, including music therapy majors. Other programs will be developed to make the center a major component of the Greenville educational community.

"As everyone has heard so much, people are living longer and care of the elderly is constantly growing in importance in our society," Ms. Kuenzi said. "This is a program that we see as an asset, not only for each participant in the program, but for the caregiver responsible for the well-being of that person. We seek to give caregivers assistance and freedom from constant responsibility. We try to be constantly aware of the emotional and practical needs of the caregiver as well as the participant. In fact, we're thinking of starting a caregivers' support group, as an additional contribution to their needs."

Elizabeth and Hugh Carroll agree with the Hamiltons that the program is "an excellent one."

The Carrolls have both her mother, 78, and his mother, 86, living in their home. Ann Carroll, Carroll's mother, came from Long Island, N.Y., to live with them two years ago and Pearl Farris, Mrs. Carroll's mother, moved here from Morganton after the death of her husband of 51 years last July. Elizabeth Carroll, a nurse employed by Pitt County Memorial Hospital, said, "I can't begin to tell you how pleased we are with the program. It's meant the world to my mother in adjusting to the loss of my father. And it's much easier on Hugh and our children and me, having this wonderful place for both of our mothers to go each day. They enjoy it and we enjoy seeing them happier."

GAME TIME — Hazel Leichter waits for her numbers to be called in a game of bingo played by Creative Living Center participants.

SHARING MUSIC — Henry Queen, visiting artist from Pitt Community College, leads Creative Living participants in a music session and Ann Schwartz gets into the rhythm.

MANICURE TIME — Sally Cephus receives a beauty treatment for her hands during a personal grooming session at the Creative Living Center.

MEMORY GAME — Participants in the Creative Living program watch videotaped images flash onto a television screen and then match these with similar pictures on cards.

Candlelight Vows Spoken

WINTERVILLE — The candlelight wedding ceremony of Brenda Kay Carawan and Warren Brent Cade, both of Greenville, took place Saturday at 5:30 p.m. in the Winterville Free Will Baptist Church. The double ring ceremony was performed by the Rev. Ron Braxton.

A program of wedding music was presented by organist Gladys Corbett and soloist Wayne Vincent.

The daughter of E.T. and Leola Carawan of Winterville, the bride was escorted by her father. Parents of the bridegroom are F.P. and Grace Cade of Greenville.

The bride wore a white gown of chiffonet, Venise lace and English net with re-embroidered lace and silk flowers. It featured a Queen Anne neckline with fitted bodice and bishop shadow sleeves with crystal pleated cuffs. The basque waistline and the front of the skirst were accented with beaded lace medallions. Garlands of crystal pleating caught with silk flowers accented the cathedral train. She wore a halo of silk flowers and satin ribbon as a headpiece and carried a bridal bouquet of white open roses and pink sweetheart roses.

Debra Baker of Washington, N.C., sister of the bride, was matron of honor. She wore a formal gown of daphne rose silesta knit designed with a deep V-neckline and a full circular skirt with accordian pleats. The sleeveless gown was complemented by a sheer jacket of matching daphne rose chiffon. Daphne rose chantilly lace encircled the Victorian neckline and capped the long sheer sleeves of the jacket, and lace enhanced the waistline, forming a ruffled peplum. She carried a lighted lamp encircled with a mauve and lilac ice silk carnation arrangement with matching streamers. She wore baby's breath in her hair.

MRS. CADE

Regina Carawan, sister-in-law of the bride, wore a formal gown of lilac ice taffeta knit designed with a ballgown bodice with an asymmetrical back bodice caught with a candy box bow and streamers. She also carried a lighted lamp encircled with a mauve and lilac ice silk carnation arrangement with matching streamers. She wore baby's breath in her hair.

The father of the bridegroom was best man. Ushers were Ray Gladson and Dwayne Little, both of Greenville.

Debbie Smith of Greenville attended the register and the wedding was directed by Debby Gray of Winterville.

A reception given by the parents of the bride was held in the church fellowship hall following the ceremony.

The bride graduated from D.H. Conley High School and is employed by Burroughs Wellcome Co.in Greenville. The bridegroom is employed by Moseley Insurance and Realty Company of Greenville.

A wedding breakfast was given by Trudy Briley of Winterville and Debra Baker of Washington, N.C., Saturday at The Three Steers Restaurant. The couple was honored with a miscellaneous shower.

After a wedding trip the couple will reside in Greenville.

ARTHRITIS TREATMENT

ATLANTA (AP) — The Jacuzzi whirlpool bath, now a popular form of relaxation, was invented by Candido Jacuzzi to treat his son's arthritis, says the Arthritis Foundation.

In 1949, a doctor recommended hydrotherapy for 15-month-old Kenneth Jacuzzi, who had juvenile rheumatoid arthritis. Only big hospital tubs could provide hydrotherapy at that time, so Jacuzzi designed a pump that could be used in a bathtub. The pumps were marketed in the early 1950s.

Warm water is still recommended as a good way for people with arthritis to relax stiff, aching joints, says the foundation.

Engagements Announced

SARAH JAMES FLOYD — is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Linwood Floyd of Fairmont, who announce her engagement to Joel Randal Gould, son of Mr. and Mrs. George Wallace Gould III of Indianapolis, Ind. A March 28 wedding is being planned.

Make Friends By Volunteering

Dear Abby

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I am living with a very well-to-do businessman in this rather small town. We fell in love three years ago when I lived in another area. "Cliff" finally told his wife about us and asked for a divorce because I told him I would not continue seeing him unless he promised marriage.

I'm in my mid-30s and have been divorced twice (no children). Cliff's wife moved to another town with their three teen-aged children.

To make a long story short, I have made his home into a charming, welcoming residence, but I am bored to death. Hardly anyone visits us. Cliff is not very sociable, is a workaholic and doesn't seek friends. I like people and want some kind of social life.

I suppose the local people are unfriendly to me because of the circumstances. Please don't lecture me. I need to know how to get people to accept me as a person and "us" as a couple.

I do not see marriage for us in the near future because Cliff's wife's lawyer is a shark, and a settlement may take forever. Bless you if you can help me. — BIG PROBLEM, SMALL TOWN

DEAR BIG PROBLEM: The circumstances may not be entirely responsible for your unhappy plight. An unsociable workaholic who doesn't seek friends is not apt to be sought out socially unless he's a generous giver in the community. (Is he?) There are still some big people in small towns who do not judge others, so get out and make a few friends by volunteering your services. You won't have to look far to find organizations who will welcome your help. If you and Cliff contribute enough, you will make yourselves sufficiently attractive to be accepted. Good luck.

DEAR ABBY: Can you find that letter from a person who did not like to be touched? I read it several years ago, but never saved it. Now I wish I had because it described my feelings to a "T."

I need it to show a friend of mine who thinks there must be something wrong with a person who does not like to be touched. — ONE OF THEM

DEAR ONE: Found it.

DEAR ABBY: I do not like to be touched — meaning grabbed or clutched or jabbed — even in a playful or non-threatening manner.

My reaction (I naturally draw away) is taken as a rejection by some people, but I can't help it — that's just the way I am.

Am I alone or not? I am a male, age 37, if that makes a difference. TOUCH-ME NOT

DEAR TOUCH: You are not alone. Many people dislike being touched. They feel a certain violation of their space — and they react negatively.

DEAR ABBY: My wife has a degree in the medical field from a large, respected university, yet she thinks it's perfectly all right to allow our dog to drink out of the toilet bowl! The dog is even allowed to drink out of our swimming pool. She says it won't hurt him. This makes no sense at all to me. The pool man puts chemicals into the pool to kill the algae, so wouldn't that be harmful to our dog?

Please hurry your answer. We are having words about this. This is a second marriage for both of us, and I can't afford another divorce. — DOG TIRED

DEAR TIRED: Some dogs view toilets as humans view watering holes, and as long as the toilets are not contaminated with excessive amounts of strong disinfectants, detergents or bleaches, it won't hurt the dog. However, unless you know for certain that the water in your toilets is dog drinkable, you'd be wise to keep the lid down.

The swimming pool is another story. If the pool has been treated with a heavy dose of chemicals, your dog could get sicker than a dog.

(To get Abby's booklet "How to Write Letters for All Occasions," send a check or money order for $2.50 and a long, stamped (39 cents) self-addressed envelope to: Dear Abby, Letter Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054.)

Art Recaptured In Many Churches

By JOYCE JOHNSTON
St. Cloud Daily Times

COLD SPRING, Minn. (AP) — Frank Eisenschenk's resume reads like a gazetteer of central Minnesota Catholic parishes. He has put his stencils and paint brushes to work in churches in Cold Spring, Eden Valley, Freeport, Melrose, Rockville and Roscoe.

"There are so many churches," Eisenschenk said, "that sometimes when I think of it for a day or so, I catch some that I forgot."

Eisenschenk, 79, is a retired church decorator. But his twin sons, Erick and Patrick, 34, have continued the exacting family business. They have refurbished churches their father once decorated and have tackled decorating projects as far away as the Dakotas.

The elder Eisenschenk still paints statues and murals for his sons' company, Eisenschenk Decorators, in a Benedictine religious style called Beuron art.

According to Frank Kacmarcik, a Minneapolis artist, designer and national church art consultant, Eisenschenk may be the last living artist trained by one of the original masters of the complex style, which lost its popularity in the 1930s.

Beuronese designs are based on a precise mathematical formula developed by a Benedictine monk in the middle of the 19th century, Kacmarcik said. Paintings and sculptures created in the style are the visual equivalent of Gregorian chants, he said.

The figures in a Beuron art painting stand straight. They look flat and have none of the shadows and soft roundness of more naturally constructed figures.

The Beuronese method is exacting, Kacmarcik said. The oil paints are applied in layers and topped with a glaze of beeswax, he said.

Frank Eisenschenk learned the technique in the 1930s from Brother Clement Frischauf, OSB, a Beuronese master who had painted churches in Europe and South America before coming to the United States and St. John's University.

In 1934, he painted the sheep and five of the angels on Frischauf's 50-foot mural that still hangs in the university's Great Hall. In recent years, Frank Eisenschenk has restored some of the university's Beuronese paintings and sculpture.

French Feminist Film To Be Shown At ECU

French feminist Simone de Beauvoir is the subject of a documentary film scheduled for two screenings at East Carolina University Jan. 28.

The screenings are scheduled in conjunction with the first "open house" reception in the facilities of the ECU Women's Studies Program, Room 300, C Wing, Brewster Building. The open house will be held from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m.

The film will be shown at 3 p.m. in Brewster C-303 at 7 p.m. in the Jenkins Fine Arts Center Auditorium. Both screenings are open to the public at no cost.

Entitled "Simone de Beauvoir: A Documentary Film," the production was filmed in color and was a collaborative effort by Malka Ribowska and Jossee Davan. It includes French narration and dialogue with English subtitles and runs for 195 minutes.

The ECU screenings are sponsored by the ECU Women's Studies Program, the International Language Organization and the Department of Foreign Languages and Literatures.

Working to Serve You Better

Couple Marries Thursday Evening

FARMVILLE — The candlelight, double ring wedding ceremony of Nell Lewis Holloman and Clarence Anderson Beacham Jr. took place Thursday evening at six o'clock at the home of Mr. and Mrs. W.H. Lewis Jr., brother of the bride.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W.H. Lewis Sr. of Farmville and the bridegroom is the son of Julia Gerard and Clarence A. Beacham Sr., both of Washington, N.C.

The bride chose a street-length georgette dress of damask rose accented at the fitted waist with an overlay of embroidered cut-work with three-quarter, shirred full sleeves and a jeweled neckline with a V-back. She wore a silk cream orchid corsage and matching accessories.

The son of the bride, Lewis Gray Holloman, and the daughter of the bridegroom, Andrea Lynn Beacham, joined their parents at the altar for the ceremony.

The Rev. B.J. McKee, of the First Baptist Church of Washington, N.C., pastor of the bridegroom, performed the ceremony. An archway was placed before a bay window and was flocked with greenery and candles. Music was provided by Susan Beaman, pianist.

The ceremony was directed by Mrs. Lewis, sister-in-law of the bride.

The bride is an administrative assistant with Leasing Professionals, Inc. of Greenville and the bridegroom is branch manager of First Citizens Bank and Trust Co. in Washington, N.C.

After a wedding trip to Wintergreen Ski Resort the couple will live in Washington, N.C.

The couple was honored at a reception following the ceremony given by parents of the bride, Mr. and Mrs. Donald E. Evans, sister and brother-in-law of the bride, and Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Jr., brother and sister-in-law of the bride.

The house was decorated with candles and greenery. The refreshment table was covered with a hand-crocheted cloth made by the grandmother of the bride. A centerpiece of mixed spring flowers was flanked by silver candelabra with pastel pink tapers.

Assisting in serving were Anne Beaman Lewis, Lou Garrett Lewis and Elizabeth Lee Evans, all nieces of the bride. Mrs. Eddie Moore poured punch and Mrs. Harvey Thigpen served wedding cake.

Enjoys Rewards Of Songwriting

By JIMMY BELL
The Sun Herald

BILOXI, Miss. (AP) — Former elementary school teacher Wanda Mallette says that if "Looking for Love" remains as well sung throughout the world as it has for the past seven years, it could become the century's most popular song.

"It will bring in royalties throughout my lifetime, my children's lifetime, with some left over for my grandchildren," Ms. Mallette said of the recording.

Ms. Mallette's first major hit, "Looking for Love," even drew a royalty check from the Soviet Union late last year.

"It wasn't much," she said, "but it shows you that it's beginning to be heard and liked in far off places."

That song had been heard and liked by screen idol John Travolta, who in 1979 gave the formal nod for its inclusion in his motion picture, "Urban Cowboy."

The song was heard in the movie not one but three times, which Ms. Mallette says tremendously helped audiences walk away singing it.

Ms. Mallette, who lives with husband Kenneth and two teen-age sons in Orange Grove, was a second-grade teacher at Bel-Aire when she wrote "Looking for Love." Its sale accelerated her music career overnight.

And success has allowed her to continue doing what many entertainers must long to do: capture national attention from her own backyard.

"They told me in Nashville, New York and Hollywood that it couldn't be done — to make the big time, I'd have to move lock, stock and barrel to the big city," she said.

"Staying at home hasn't stopped me yet."

She's had 30 songs published, some of them written alone and others done in the company of fellow writers.

"Looking for Love" was developed jointly with her friend, Patti Ryan of Long Beach, and former Biloxi resident Bob Morrison, who now lives in Nashville. The three share equal billing on the song.

How does a world reknown song hit begin?

It is plausible that this one may have begun 40 years ago when her father, Justice Court Judge Jack Rutledge of McHenry, used to strum the guitar in local clubs, and her mother, Lillian, wrote songs in secret. Her mom never told anyone, not even Wanda, until Ms. Malette's song clicked in the Travolta movie seven years ago.

Her parents said that as a child in rural Stone County, Wanda was constantly making up songs, and she would "sing her life away while hanging out clothes or setting the table, composing words about the rain, her friends, her pets and her dreams."

It was more than 10 years ago that Ms. Mallette's first original composition surfaced. "I had written a poem," she said, "and instincitvely began singing it. I liked the tune."

She took two songs to her friend, Marion Carpenter, former band director at Biloxi High, who encouraged her to continue in the field.

"Next thing I knew, I had won the Kentucky Fried Chicken song contest in 1973," she recalled her prize was a tape recorder.

The die was cast: Wanda began to sing her songs to two spools of tape.

Next she entered the American Song Festival, where her work garnered two honorable mentions plus a recording contract from entertainers Seals and Croft.

"Then I wrote like a maniac — hundreds of songs popped out while I was frying potatoes and doing housework. I was fired up by a comment the American Song Festival judge had made to the effect that I showed promise," she said.

Then she contacted Morrison, already a succesful writer ("Shine On," "Love the World Away," "One in a Million," and others).

Morrison wrote her a letter advising her to "go for it," she recalled. "I got together with Patti Ryan and we started co-writing.

"In two afternoons, Patti and I sat down and finished a song I had started. It was called 'Looking for Love.' We mailed it and several others to Morrison, who called to say we had written a hit. He later published three of our best. We've since sold about 30 to Combine Music of Nashville."

Though the song was popular and published, no one in the Nashville recording world wanted to sing the song that would become a hit.

Two years passed.

"Then I got a call in 1979 from Bob. He had sent a bunch of our songs to Paramount Pictures. Johnny Lee, one of the voacalists in 'Urban Cowboy,' was flown to Los Angeles to pick one of them for the new Travolta movie," she said.

Lee selected 10 with which to work, narrowed that to three and then called Tavolta in for the final endorsement.

Ms. Mallette recalled, "Travolta fell in love with the song and said it was the one he wanted to become the theme song of the movie."

The song received two Grammy nominations and was among 12 finalists for an Oscar nomination that year.

The song turned life as Wanda knew it upside down.

She was teaching at Bel-Aire, and Patti was teaching at Gulfport High at the time, and "Looking for Love" quickly became their students' anthem.

"We couldn't conduct a class for that song," Wanda recalled.

"Looking for Love" has turned gold and is reaching platinum status. It has won six ASCAP awards and was tops in pops for six years in a row.

Critics have hailed it as an "anthem for a generation."

Ms. Mallette said the germ for the song came from her observations in the classroom. Children who misbehaved the most seemed to have the worst home life: "I saw that children were looking for love in all the wrong places — and what everyone wants is love."

Laundry Hints For Early Learners

Homemakers Haven

By EVELYN SPANGLER

There has been a marked increase in the number of children in families with both parents working or a single parent who has less time for household chores. Consequently, there is a corresponding increase in the involvement of children in helping with chores, including laundering clothes.

The Soap and Detergent Association offers guidelines for children to learn proper laundering techniques. The procedures can apply to laundering whether it is done at home, at a self-service laundry or away at school.

Initial time spent in introducing a youngster to correct, safe and energy-efficient procedures will save time in the future and help to avoid possible damage to clothes and to appliances. Start by acquainting the child with the use and care guides for the washer and dryer. Have children work with you and set standards for doing the job. Show them proper techniques for sorting clothes into loads, setting controls, and using detergents and additives. Supervise children until they can assume the responsibilities. Here are some guidelines:

Prepare clothes for washing by shaking out loose dirt, emptying pockets, closing fasteners, removing unwashable belts and any other such decorations, and tying sashes and strings.

Check items for heavy soil as well as spots and stains. Collars, cuffs, and socks may need some pretreatment to help remove heavy or ground-in dirt. Apply and rub in a liquid detergent or a paste of water and granular detergent. Or use a prewash soil and stain remover.

Keep a spot and stain removal chart handy to serve as a reference in treating stains. Following recommended procedures, remove several types of stains to show the child how it is done.

Stress the importance of sorting washloads. Blue jeans, red fuzzy sweatsuits, and white lacey bikinis cannot be washed together. Laundry must be seperated by color — whites or white background prints that won't run from colors; light colors in solids and prints from bright or dark colors that may run.

Clothes must also be sorted by fabric and construction. For example, separate loosely knit garments or lacey items from heavy duty blue jeans. Delicate garments require a shorter wash time with a slower washing action.

Some items such as bath towels, fuzzy sweatsuits and flannel pajamas give off lint while others such as permanent press shirts and nylon underwear attract lint. So, separate from those that are less dirty.

Load the washer by dropping the items into the machine loosely. Don't pack the clothes since they need to move freely through the water. Permanent press clothes and knits need more room to circulate than do towels and other sturdy cottons. The extra room helps prevent wrinkles.

A water level control on the washer can be set to match the size of the wash load. For smaller loads, check during washing to be sure there's enough water for good washing action. If not, stop the washer and set the water level control to a higher setting, then resume washing.

Other washer controls that need to be selected include the cycle and water temperature settings. The cycle determines the agitation and spin speeds as well as the time for washing clothes of different fabrics and weights. Regular and sturdy fabrics require the "normal/regular" or "heavy" setting. Permanent press items use the "permanent press" cycle. Delicates and knits need the "gentle" or "delicate" cycle.

Choose a wash water temperature to match the fabrics, colors, and degree of soil of each load. A "warm" setting can be used for most loads. Use the "hot" setting for whites and dirty or greasy clothes. Use the "cold" setting for bright or dark colors that may run. For the rinse cycle, use the "cold" setting for all loads.

With clothes sorted into proper wash loads and controls set accordingly, there is one other consideration to be made in the laundering process — the selection and use of a detergent or soap and any other laundry aids. Detergent or soap is the prime ingredient in getting clothes clean.

Soap works best in soft water while detergents may be used in either hard or soft water. It is important to read and follow the label directions for the amount of product to use. The amount needed varies with the load size, soil conditions, hardness of water and the amount of water used.

When using any laundry aid such as bleach, detergent booster or fabric softener, read and follow the label instructions carefully. Specific information is given on how to use the product effectively.

For dryer drying, load the appliance with the same loads of clothes washed together. Check the dryer instruction booklet for correct temperature and time settings. Overdrying clothes can cause them to shrink, wrinkle or cling to each other from build-up of static electricity. Articles of plastic, vinyl or rubber should be line-dried or dryer-dried on the "fluff or air" setting that provides no heat. When the dryer cycle ends, immediately remove clothes to eliminate wrinkling; hang them up or fold them.

Operate appliances safely. Do not put your hands in a washer while it is running. Let a washer or dryer stop completely before removing clothes.

Clean lint filters after each use. Clean up any spills from detergents and laundry aids to protect appliance surfaces.

Children who learn to do the family's laundry not only help in their busy households, but also learn a skill that they will need in their own busy schedules as they become older.

Crime Plans Are Stupid

At Wits End
By ERMA BOMBECK

We all know that "crime" doesn't even pay minimum wage these days. Law enforcement has become so sophisticated, the "rats" don't stand a chance.

We have revolving cameras in public buildings to record our every move, neighbors watching one another's houses, and alarm systems on cars that clear sinuses within a three-mile radius.

But still "creative crooks" try. They're doers who buck the system and think this time they can get away with it.

In Los Angeles, two men seethed as they watched cars and buses whiz by in the "diamond lane" which is reserved for vehicles with three or more passengers. They came up with a plan.

They stuffed a coat with towels, put a hat on it, strapped the dummy in the back seat and began traveling in the fast lane. Until they got caught. The men have not given up. They vow to try again. According to the officer, "I'll be out there waiting."

In Port Angeles, Wash., a husband and wife lusted after the first prize in a fishing derby -- a 17-foot boat. They came up with a plan. They got a 43- and a 36-pound salmon from their freezer, hooked them on their lines and dropped them in the water on the day of the competition, winning first and second place respectively.

Authorities became suspicious that the fish were frozen and the couple is under investigation.

In Cleveland Heights, Ohio, there was a man who loved to read books. He had a plan. He carried out 4,000 of them in a 20-year period. He never returned them.

Recently as he left the library with two books, two magazines and two pamphlets wrapped in newspaper, he was stopped by police. They searched his home and uncovered nearly $50,000 in books that belonged to the library. His crime, the way he saw it, "I never got a library card."

And how many of us are frustrated when a phone call takes forever to be put through and do nothing? A man in New Delhi had a plan. After repeated attempts and delays to place a call to Bombay, he entered the phone exchange at midnight and threatened operators with a pistol if they did not put through the urgent call for him. He also ordered his bodyguard to beat up an operator because his call was delayed.

When the press tried to call him for comment, they were unable to get through to the numbers listed in his name.

My favorite is the crook who was ripping off a little old lady. He tied her up and had all of her furniture stacked near the door to cart off. He noticed some pills by her bedside and with his mentality figured they were speed. He gulped them down. They were tranquilizers. He fell asleep before he could leave and was arrested by police.

All crooks have plans. But they forget one thing. They're stupid.

Student Fiction Has Ring Of History

By CHARLES HILLINGER
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

MADERA, Calif. — Students in teacher Bill Coate's junior high school U.S. history classes in this San Joaquin Valley town not only learn history, they write biographical novels.

Their first two novels, "The Minturn Chronicles" and "The Saga of Caney Creek," were printed locally, and novelist Irving Stone was so impressed by the young authors that he wrote forewords to the books

The 83-year-old novelist visited Madera last year to share the experience of writing with the 12-year-olds who wrote "The Minturn Chronicles."

"Children don't want to read or write because teachers don't excite them," Stone said. "It doesn't have to be that way. Thousands of teachers all over the country should follow Bill Coate's example and get their students involved in reading and writing."

Stone, who calls Coate's method of teaching "The Madera Movement," is author of biographical novels that have sold more than 30 million copies, including "The Agony and Ecstasy," "Lust for Life" and his most recent, "Depths of Glory."

Coate, 45, became a teacher when he was 30 after working in the grocery business 10 years. He was inspired to push his students into novel writing about five years ago when a friend spraying insecticide along a river bank on a Madera County farm happened upon three weed-choked 19th-century granite tombstones.

"I wondered who these people were — a man, Jonas Minturn, 1819-1884; his wife, Abby West Minturn, 1820-1899, and their son, Rowland Minturn, 1845-1894. I decided I would make the Minturns the subject of a yearlong project in my sixth-grade history class," Coate said.

He took his students to the graves, where they made rubbings from the headstones. The rubbings included the epitaph on Abby Minturn's granite marker: "Her children shall arise and call her blessed."

Coate and his 36 sixth graders made numerous trips to the Madera County courthouse searching census records, deeds, wills and various other legal documents containing information about the family. The students checked old newspapers and genealogical records. They uncovered 200 primary source documents with references to Jonas and Abby Minturn.

They found a descendant, Elizabeth Denning, 70, a great-granddaughter of the Minturns, living in Santa Cruz, about 60 miles south of San Francisco, and she invited the class to her home. There she showed the students furniture, china and other possessions of her great-grandparents.

She also provided them with a great deal of information about her ancestors.

Other background was developed by a junior high school class in Bristol, R.I., Jonas and Abby Minturn's home before they moved to California in 1870. Coate made contact with a teacher at the Rhode Island school.

Then each of Coate's 36 students assumed Abby Minturn's identity and wrote a fictionalized chapter representing a year of her life, based on facts gathered during their research.

"We marched through the 19th century with Abby, grew up with her and lived with her until her death in 1899," said Coate. "Having Irving Stone write the foreword to our book and having him appear before our class was pure elixir."

The class contracted with a Fresno printer to publish 500 copies of "The Minturn Chronicles," which sold for $10 each. Proceeds went to the establishment of an annual college history scholarship for a Madera High School student.

"The Minturn Chronicles" was the class project for 1984-85. Then, Joan Perry of Madera County, a great-granddaughter of a Confederate soldier from Texas, heard about Coate and presented the teacher with 100 letters written by her ancestors, Sam Hardeman and his wife, Sally, during the Civil War.

That became the class project for 1985-86. Students in junior high classes in Madera taught by Coate and by Arthur Davis, and seventh graders in Bay City, Texas, used the letters and supporting historical evidence to write "The Saga of Caney Creek."

Students at Bay City, near Caney Creek where the Hardemans owned a plantation, collected information from the archives of Matagorda County. "The Saga of Caney Creek" became a major sesquicentennial celebration for the Texas county.

A Texas barbecue held near the graves of Sam and Sally Hardeman attracted their descendants from several states, many of whom had never heard of each other. Students from Madera and Bay City read passages from their book, which sells for $19.95 a copy. Three hundred copies were printed.

It was at the barbecue that Coate was approached by Texas cattleman David E. Stewart, 50, who presented the teacher with two unpublished diaries written by William P. Huff, his great-great-grandfather, that have become the basis of the California teacher's history project for school year 1986-87. "I almost had cardiac arrest when Stewart gave me the diaries," Coate said.

Huff was a paleontologist whose collections of mastodon bones are housed in the British Museum and Harvard University. The scientist led a party of 22 gold seekers on an overland journey in wagon trains from Texas to California in 1849.

The journals describe daily events of the trip in great detail. Huff's group teamed with another party headed for California gold camps, led by the first provisional governor of Texas, Henry Smith.

Every morning for an hour at Brenda Junior High, Coate and his 39 eighth graders read from Huff's 137-year-old diary. Each day they review the events of the journey.

"We go over and over the material. I ask students questions about what has transpired. In coming months the class will be writing its biographical novel in Huff's style," explained Coate.

The journals were not finished. They end at Yuma, Ariz., at the Colorado River, the gateway to California. Coate's class has found the names of every member of Huff's party on the Mariposa County census for 1850. They know Huff died in 1886. They have found references to him and his party in other gold rush diaries.

They are searching for additional clues about Huff at the Huntington Library in San Marino, about 15 miles northeast of downtown Los Angeles; at the Bancroft Library in Berkeley, Calif., about 20 miles east of San Francisco, and in local archives in Mariposa County.

Junior high school students in Van Vleck, Austin and El Paso, Texas, and in Tucson, Ariz., are also involved in this year's project. Students from the three states will write this third biographical novel together.

"The project will culminate next June," Coate said. "Students in Van Vleck, where the journey started, will come to Madera and present a play about the overland expedition.

"They and their parents will follow the same route covered by Huff and pick up parents and students from the other schools involved in the project as they move westward. Here in Madera, the students from the three states will read portions of their contributions for the book. A half dozen historians will conduct a symposium."

Coate said that the program would conclude with a two-day, 40-mile wagon train trip from Madera to Mariposa and the gold country where Huff and his party worked their diggings.

Fifty years ago less than 10 percent of farms had electricity.

Officer Empathizes With Refugees

By LISA LEVITT RYCKMAN
Associated Press Writer

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — Robert Sayaphupha learned to be tough at a tender age.

At 12, he escaped the Communists in Laos. At 14, he had survived a Thai refugee camp. At 15, he swallowed his first helping of meaness American-style in the San Francisco junior high school where he was struggling to learn English and win acceptance.

"I was harassed by one black kid in machine shop," said the 23-year-old Oakland police officer. "He was real big, and he kept pushing me and calling me names. I never did anything. One day, I got real mad. I asked the teacher, 'Can I fight him?' and the teacher said, 'No, you don't fight in school.'

"After class, we walked into the stairwell, and he intentionally blocked my way. I decided that was enough. I pushed him, and we started fighting on the stairs," he recalled. "The teacher came and broke us up, and took him to the counselor's office and sent me back to class. The next day, he shook my hand, and we were friends."

Eight years later, Oakland Police Officer Sayaphupha, now the department's liaison officer with the Southeast Asian refugee community, tries to teach three generations of refugees how to stand up for their rights and how to use the American justice system to protect themselves.

"My main objective is to get people's trust out there," Sayaphupha said. "I tell them the police in the U.S. are not the same as back home. You can call us anytime you need us. Don't feel intimidated."

Sayaphupha faced fear while still a child. He was 12 when his mother sewed $50 in his clothes and paid another $50 — three months' wages in Laos — to people who promised to help him cross the Mekong River into Thailand, where his four older brothers were waiting.

"If they had seen us, they would have killed us," Sayaphupha said of the Communists who had taken over Laos at the time.

He spent two years in a refugee camp before coming to San Jose, where his family, including all seven children, settled after emigrating. He attended junior high school for a year, graduated early from high school and considered the Army but opted instead for community college and the police academy.

Despite his proficiency in Lao, Thai and three Chinese dialects, Sayaphupha remains self-conscious about his English. He's proud of the refugee children who chatter away at him in their adopted language when he visits, and he tries to convince their parents to learn, too.

"It's hard for the older generation," he said. "But I tell them to go to school, learn at much as they can, because they're living in this country now. They're going to need to speak English."

His outreach into the refugee community seems to have made an impact, even after six months. His phone rings not only when Asians are assaulted or robbed but when they have car accidents or family deaths as well.

"When I go out there now," he said, "and talk to a lot of (Laotians), they say, 'We're very happy to have you as an Oakland police officer because we have a lot of problems and cannot communicate with people, and you're the best person for us to talk to.'"

CAPTURE BOOSTS COMMERCIAL CARPET MAINTENANCE

Maximum life and excellence appearance are the two primary objectives of commercial carpet maintenance. Customers, clients or patients, all expect a pleasant and spotless atmosphere when they patronize your facility.

Your Milliken Place dealer can provide you with Milliken carpets specifically designed for commercial applications. And, once the carpet is installed, we work with you to develop a carpet maintenance program that will prolong the life and maintain the original beauty of your carpet investment.

The keystone to the Milliken carpet maintenance system is the Capture® dry carpet cleaner. Capture,® a dry powder designed to absorb soil and odors from carpet yarns, is simple to use, involving no mixing of chemicals, solvents or solutions.

Unlike wet carpet cleaning methods, Capture® will not cause seams to split, loosen adhesives nor shrink, delaminate or rot the carpet. Since Capture® is a dry cleaning agent, areas that are cleaned can be put into use immediately following treatment without disrupting the rest of the space.

Extensive testing proved to Milliken that traditional wet cleaning methods left soil attracting residues; therefore the research and development department structured Capture® so that it leaves no residue. In fact, Capture® supplements Milliguard,® both work to help keep your carpet clean.

Special conditions in the commercial sector have lead us to develop a set of specific maintenance recommendations. First, schedule regular vacuuming, then as spots occur, treat them with Capture.® Finally, plan a total Capture® treatment for your carpet for as often as the traffic in your operation calls for. Every commercial facility is different and at Milliken Place,® we work with you to develop your own custom maintenance system.

Adopt-A-Park Program

RALEIGH — Applications will be accepted through February 13 by the N.C. Division of Parks and Recreation from groups interested in participating in the "Adopt-a-Park" grant program.

The program, made possible by a grant from the Z. Smith Reynolds Foundation, provides grants of up to $1,000 to citizen groups for projects within the state parks, natural areas, or reservoirs in their area. The Adopt-a-Park purpose is to increase opportunities for citizen involvement, heighten the sense of stewardship for North Carolina's natural resources, and to develop a strong network of citizen support groups throughout the state.

Previous projects have included trails maintenance, river clean-up, interpretive programs, and construction of foot bridges on trails.

For more information or to receive an application, interested groups should contact their nearest state park superintendent, or write: Martha Williamson, Adopt-a-Park Coordinator; Visitor Services Section; N.C. Division of Parks and Recreation; 12700 Bay Leaf Church Road; Raleigh, N.C., 27614. Telephone: 846-9991.

Grandfather Mountain's Weather Is A Fascinating Study

GRANDFATHER MOUNTAIN — The month of January is named for the Roman god, Janus, who had two opposite faces, one looking back and one looking ahead.

A longstanding tradition arising from this "looking back and looking ahead" is the new year's resolution. Another relatively new January tradition is that of reviewing the year's weather at Grandfather Mountain, the highest peak in the Blue Ridge Mountains.

Mountain-top weather has its extremes and Grandfather is no exception. Mark Twain said, "Everybody likes to talk about the weather," so maybe some of the year's unique weather events at Grandfather Mountain will make for interesting conversation.

Grandfather has operated an official U.S. Weather Service Reporting Station for 31 years. It is located at the mile-high level of the 6,000-foot mountain so its summertime temperatures are several degrees cooler than in the more populated valleys. The station's wintertime temperatures and snowfall correspond to weather condition at the mountain's neighboring ski resorts. The mountain top also is a prime target for unusually strong winds.

This January's weather story, keeping with the Janus tradition, will try to look back at the 1986 events, then ahead at what to expect in 1987. Areas touched upon will be temperatures, rainfall, snowfall and winds.

The past year was much warmer than average with 10 of the 12 months registering above average temperatures. Only January and August were cooler. The warmest months, relatively speaking, were February and December. Their average temperatures were almost five degrees and three degrees above the norm, respectively.

For the year, there were 20 record daily high temperature marks established and 13 record daily lows. Despite the warm year and the continuous stream of 100-plus degree days throughout the Southeast, the highest temperature recorded at Grandfather Mountain for 1986 was a pleasant 79 degrees on July 17.

The low for the year was a bitter 19 below zero on Jan. 28. With accompanying winds of 80 mph, the wind chill factor placed the equivalent temperature that day at a life-threatening 90 degrees below zero.

One record daily high, a 75-degree reading on Oct. 3, was also an all-time record monthly high, eclipsing a 73-degree October record set in 1959. A 74-degree reading on April 28 and a 70-degree March 31 were all-time runner-up highs for their respective months. The 74 degrees registered on April 28 wasn't reached again until June 22.

The average daily high temperature of 70.1 degrees for June and 72.7 degrees for July were just below the all-time record high averages for each month. Warm weather touched the wintertime, too. The average temperature for the overall 1985-86 winter was two degrees higher per day than normal.

The most significant daily low records occurred in August when a 36-degree reading on Aug. 29 and a 38 the next day became the only August temperatures to drop into the 30s during the U.S. Weather Station's 31-year existence on top of Grandfather Mountain. Both days brought record early frosts and ice on automobiles. August was the year's coldest month, relatively speaking, averaging a degree and a half below the norm each day. The temperature reached the 70s only nine times in August.

This past winter (November 1985 through March 1986), the temperature plunged below zero seven times, which is normal. The lowest drop ever below zero at Grandfather Mountain was 32 degrees below zero on Jan. 21, 1985. Conversely, the highest temperature ever at Grandfather was 83 on Aug. 22, 1983.

Rainfall was the subject on most people's minds during 1986. A below average snowfall plus a dry spring left the mountains looking desperately for summer rains. What resulted was only .69 of one inch of rain in June, by far the lowest ever for that month.

For the first half-year, Grandfather Mountain rainfall totalled 14.28 inches compared to a normal six-month rainfall level of 28.22 inches. From July through November, three inches of the 14-inch deficit was made up. Then in December, a whopping 4.45 inches were recovered after a record 7.43 inches of rain for the month. That left the mountain only 5.71 inches below the average daily rainfall of 57.64 inches.

The rainfall recovery got under way in full force beginning Aug. 17. For the next 19 days, 12.4 inches of rain fell, almost as much as had fallen during the months of March, April, May, June, July and the first half of August combined. Ironically, a rainfall record was set during this dry period, the "most consecutive days with some type of precipitation." There was some rainfall, whether a trace or a measurable amount, for 25 straight days from May 7-30. The old consecutive rainfall record was for an 18-day period.

The record low annual rainfall for Grandfather Mountain came in 1963 with 39.73 inches. The most rain came in 1979 with 89.13 inches. Five of the seven years in the 1980s have produced below average rainfall levels.

Snowfall is the number one topic of weather conversation in the Grandfather Mountain area. This is especially true since the North Carolina High Country is the South's major ski center.

Unfortunately, during each of the past three winters, overall snowfall has averaged almost a foot below normal. Until this period, at no time in the 31 years of weather record keeping at Grandfather had there been three straight below normal snowfall winters. Average snowfall through December for the 1986-87 winter is 13 inches, but through December there have been only 1 1/2 inches, giving the current winter a poor start at breaking the below-average pattern. (NOTE: A 4 1/2-inch snow on Jan. 1 helped the cause.) Six of the seven winters preceding the current four-year "snow rut" had significantly above average snowfall.

Average snowfall for a Grandfather Mountain winter is 56.8 inches. The biggest snow months are February with an average of 15.5 inches and January with 14.1 inches.

The day that over 31 years of weather record keeping has provided more snow than any other has been February 12 with 34 inches. The days with the least snow have been Jan. 2 and 3 with two and three inches respectively.

Christmas at Grandfather Mountain is by far the biggest snow day of the month with a 24-inch accumulation over 31 years. Over this same time period, it has snowed 12 times, giving the mountain about a 40 percent chance of having a white Christmas.

The past year was windier than usual at Grandfather with 25 winds exceeding a hurricane force of 60 mph, compared to an average of 22 winds. During a normal year, winds on four occasions should surpass the 100-mph mark, but 1986 had seven.

The strongest wind of the year belongs to April 9 with 138 mph. The second strongest wind was 126 mph on July 13, marking the second time in the 1980s that 100-plus mph winds have leveled most of the 130 tents at the colorful Grandfather Mountain Highland Games and Gathering of Scottish Clans. In 1980, it was a 150 mph wind that did the damage.

The highest wind ever recorded at Grandfather Mountain was 161 mph on Nov. 18, 1976. Grandfather does not have a gust-o-meter so all winds recorded occurred during the day when at least one member of the mountain's staff was present.

More 1987 U.S. Stamp Issues Listed

By SYD KRONISH
AP Newsfeatures

Let's take a look at the second half of the U.S. stamp and stationery program for 1987. A couple of weeks ago we reported the first half of the U.S. Postal Service agenda (January through May).

On June 13, a pane of 50 commemorative stamps will hail American wildlife. The first day site, however, is not in the United States but Toronto, Canada. It will be the first time that U.S. stamps have been issued outside our borders since the 1978 souvenir sheet of 13-cent wildlife stamps — also issued in Toronto. The Postal Service notes that many of the animals depicted on the stamps inhabit both Canada and the United States.

A 22-cent commemorative on July 18 will honor the bicentennial of diplomatic relations between the U.S. and the Kingdom of Morocco. The place of issuance is Washington, D.C.

The long-delayed block of four 22-cent Lacemaking commemoratives will be released Aug. 14 in Ypsilanti, Mich. Later that month, on Aug. 25, a $5 stamp in the Great Americans Series will honor author Bret Harte. First day ceremonies will be in Twain Harte, Calif.

The next two issues will commemorate the U.S. Constitution. A booklet pane of five different designs and 20 total stamps will be released on Aug. 28. Then, on Sept. 17, there will be a single commemorative marking the anniversary of the document's signing.

Sept. 21 is the date for a 22-center honoring Certified Public Accountants. Four days later, Sept. 25, a 22-cent stamp will pay tribute to author William Faulkner.

A 14-cent Historic Preservation postal card will feature Timberline Lodge, on Sept. 28.

National Stamp Collecting Month will start on Oct. 1 with the issuance of a booklet of 22-cent stamps featuring historic locomotives. There will be a total of 20 stamps in the set.

Rounding out the program will be the two Christmas stamps. As usual, one will have a traditional theme and the other a contemporary one. Not revealed by the USPS are the stamps commemorating the 200th anniversaries of the states of Delaware, Pennsylvania and New Jersey.

One of the most popular stamps of the year will be the new 22-cent "Love" stamp. It will feature a pastel-colored heart. Like its predecessors of previous years, the new "Love" stamp will be used on envelopes for cards and letters celebrating birthdays, anniversaries and other special occasions where a message from the heart is delivered.

Information on first day cancellations will be provided next week.

Revered Afghan Poet Uses Words Instead Of Bullets

By BARRY RE FREW
Associated Pres Writer

ISLAMABAD, Pak tan (AP) — After a lifetime of riting poems about love and beau , Khalilullah Khalili now creates ngs of death and hatred. His words re his bullets.

Khalili, consid ed one of Afghanistan's finest living poets, spends the evening of is life writing about the war that ravaged his homeland. Too old to ry a gun, the 84-year-old poet wr s to inspire Afghan guerrillas fig ng the country's Soviet governme

"Before the Rus ns invaded Afghanistan, I wrote ut the beauty of nature. I was a et of flowers, of mountains, of clea nd beautiful rivers and of the peop ' Khalili said in an interview in th small, booklined room where he w ks and lives.

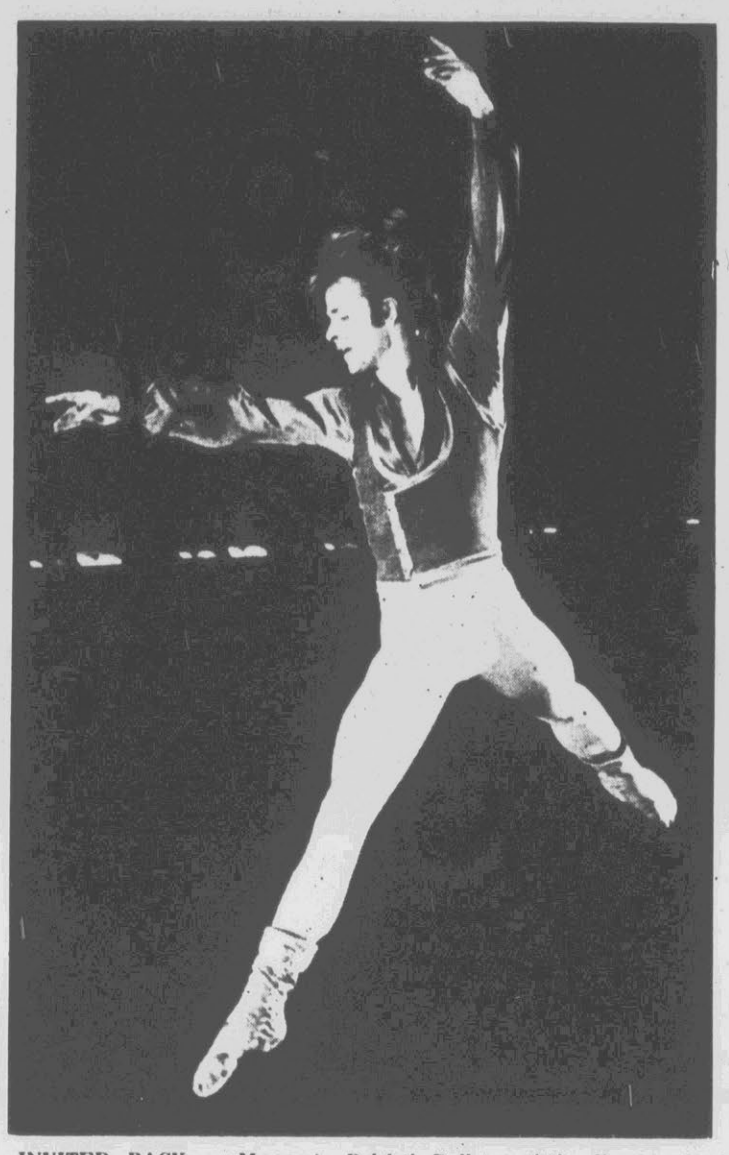
"Since the Russ ns invaded Afghanistan I have b ne a poet of blood and tears, suffering, atrocities and death. d the small man, his gray eyes hing as his hand sliced the air.

However, Khalili i just a poet writing about the l rs of war. Poets are greatly r ed in traditional Afghan societ d they have been honored throu e centuries as sages and guides people.

"In Afghanistan t et explains what cannot be see th the eyes. He sees with the eye ne heart," he said.

Khalili's poems are eagerly received by the Moslem guerillas fighting the Afghan government and the estimated 115,000 Soviet troops in Afghanistan. The guerrillas, who are called "mujahedeen" or holy warriors, learn such poems by heart or turn them into songs to be spread by word of mouth across the country.

"Poets must give something to the people. A poem can be a weapon in the hands of the people," Khalili said.



INVITED BACK — Moscow's Bolshoi Ballet artistic director Yuri Grigorovich has announced that dancer Mikhail Baryshnikov, who defected in 1974, has been invited to dance again in Moscow. Grigorovich claims he has official sanction of the Russian government to invite Baryshnikov to dance at the Bolshoi. (AP Laserphoto)

Writing in the Dari or Persian language of northern Afghanistan, Khalili's poems have a hard and unsparing message. He urges the guerrillas and their supporters never to think about when or if they will win the war, but just to keep on fighting whatever the cost.

In one poem, he says:

"We are this bitter fruit, falling upon the Earth."

"Thus are we in the clutches of time."

"Oh spring of liberty. What else but your grace"

"Shall render this bitter fruit sweet?"

When one believes very strongly in something, one cannot lose, Khalili said. "Even if we are killed or destroyed, we are the victors because our struggle goes on. We will not lose if we are all killed. The nation will win."

Khalili's poems mirror the zealous faith of the guerrillas, who often say they will fight until they triumph or the Afghan people cease to exist. Poet and guerrillas alike say they are fighting a "jihad" or holy war and their fate is in the hands of Allah.

But khalili's message is also that the people should not despair or become disillusioned in a war that is already more than eight years old and shows no sign of ending. Despair is something he must often wrestle with himself.

"If I did not write poems I would not be able to live because it is my only weapon to fight back. I am too old to take a gun now," he said.

His life reflects Afghanistan's cruel and bloody history of constant war and power struggle. His father was executed as a rebel by the ruling king when Khalili was 11 years old.

The boy was placed under house arrest for 10 years by the vengeful monarch as part of a punishment inflicted on the Khalili family. Alone and confined, the boy started to write poems and he soon began to earn a reputation as a poet.

But Khalili did not shirk politics despite the experiences of his childhood. He was taken prisoner by the Soviet army during a brief war in the 1930s and later emerged as the leader of a political party and as a close adviser and minister of the last king of Afghanistan.

He remained a poet, though, and became increasingly well known. His poems have been translated into Arabic, English and other languages and published in several countries.

Khalili was Afghanistan's ambassador in Iraq when the communists seized power in an April 1978 military coup. He refused to return home and went into exile. Now he fears he will die before he can return home.

He lives in a home in the Pakistani capital, always conscious that Afghanistan is just 100 miles away. "I am like an injured bird near his nest who cannot fly back. I live in hope I will again one day return to Afghanistan," he said.

Rails-To-Trails Program Hopes To Acquire Land For The Public

By BILL SCHULZ
Associated Press Writer

ATLANTA (AP) — More than a million acres of free public land — abandoned railroad rights of way — await state and local governments and conservation groups who want to turn it into a nationwide trail system.

The Rails-to-Trails Conservancy has been formed to help local conservation groups get those abandoned routes turned into hiking and riding trails before they can be cut up and sold.

"The public donated to the railroads for the public use over half of the right-of-way in this country," said David Burwell, president of Rails-To-Trails, a coalition of conservation groups. "Our position is, now that it is not needed (for railroads), that land should be given back for other public uses."

The 250,000-mile rail system has shrunk to 150,000 miles and another 3,000 miles of track are being abandoned by railroads every year, Burwel said.

There now are 79 nationally designated trails, covering 20,000 miles, in the United States. They range from the Appalachian Trail in the East to the Oregon Trail, which scores of settlers used as their route West.

Rails-To-Trails was formed nine months ago to help add to that beginning.

"We're in some pretty exciting projects," Burwell said. "There's a 200-mile abandonment right along the Missouri River from St. Louis west. It's prime peregrin falcon habitat, prime bald eagle habitat. The state of Missouri, to its great credit, filed to convert it to a trail with the Interstate Commerce Commission."

The states, he said, "are really beginning to recognize the value of these corridors. It's free recreational land for them. These are extremely valuable acreage."

The conservancy has prepared a manual for local groups seeking to preserve rights-of-way railroads want to abandon.

"The first thing to do is call us," if any conservation group hears about a proposed abandonment, Burwell said.

"The key is to find the lines. Once they've found the line and they have the idea of converting it and someone willing to manage it as a trail, we can maximize their possiblity of getting it."

A major part of the effort is federal law requiring the Interstate Commerce Commission to conside wheth the rail line could be used as a trail. "If there is a local organization willing to maintain it as a trail, is must be a trail rather than be abandoned," Burwell said.

Once the rights-of-way are abandoned, he said, "upon abandonment, these rights of way tend to be broken up and revert to other uses."

"If we wait just 10 years," he said, "many of these places will be gone forever."

Film About Vietnam Stirs Many Memories

A Battle Veteran Reviews The Film, 'Platoon'

EDITOR'S NOTE: Jan C. Scruggs served with a platoon of the 199th Infantry Brigade in Vietnam where he was wounded and decorated for valor in 1969. He is the founder and president of the Natonal Vietnam Veterans Memorial in Washington, and project director of the National Law Enforcement Officers Memorial Fund.

"Platoon": A Film Review
By JAN. C. SCRUGGS

Vietnam was a different kind of war.

Huge bodies of troops were not fighting their way toward Berlin or routing the enemy from Pacific Islands such as Iwo Jima. In Vietnam, most combat was characterized by small groups of Americans — platoons — fighting small groups of Vietnamese in deep jungles and on the outskirts of isolated villages whose inhabitants often helped the enemy.

And in Vietnam these Americans had an average age of 19.

Hollywood has not been very accurate in its portrayal of the Vietnam War or of those who fought it. John Wayne's "The Green Berets" and Jane Fonda's "Coming Home" — the former pro and the latter con — both made attempts to politicize the war.

In the late 1970s, both "The Deer Hunter" and "Apocalypse Now" did little to add to society's understanding of the war or its impact. Both tended to be surrealistic, relying more upon metaphor than realism in depicting the life of the combat soldier.

Now we have Oliver Stone's "Platoon." It is the best Vietnam movie made to date. More than any other, it captures some of what life was like for the infantrymen who experienced heavy combat in Vietnam.

Its message is universal. Through Chris Taylor (Charlie Sheen), one sees how war can turn the boy next door into a numbed individual who must forget all his society has taught him.

Taylor drops out of college because he thinks it unfair that only the sons of the poor fight America's war. He is welcomed to Vietnam by a half dozen GI corpses being loaded onto a cargo plane. He is then sent to his platoon where he is befriended by no one at first, except for Sergeant Elias (William DaFoe) who knows how frightened the young soldier is.

Taylor is wounded slightly during his first taste of combat, and his injury makes him better accepted by the platoon.

But he is soon transformed into an angry trooper when his friend, Manny, is captured and decapitated. Taylor finds a cowering villager suspected of being a Viet Cong and fires his rifle into the ground to make him dance.

One of the platoon's most important figures is the battle scarred (and facially scarred) Sergeant Barnes (Tom Berenger) whose only passion is killing enemy soldiers. His antithesis is Elias who stops the killing and intends to report the atrocities.

Elias, like Barnes, is a professional soldier, but he has not succumbed to the brutality that has transformed much of the platoon into heartless, angry young men. And in order to survive, young Taylor becomes a killing machine.

Stone ("Midnight Express," "Salvador"), himself a Vietnam vet, carves a living nightmare in the battle scenes. In one, the platoon's new officer calls in artillery which begins landing on his own men. The movie climaxes with a hellish battle and homicide.

But Stone also provides tender moments, such as the moving scene of the drunken platoon singing 1960s Motown hits as they dance together at a party.

Some of the genius of "Platoon" can be found in its preparation. Stone took the young actors into the jungles of the Phillipines where they learned what it was like to be infantrymen in Vietnam.

For 13 days the actors walked through the jungles with full packs and weapons; they slept at night after digging foxholes but got no more than five hours sleep because each was required to do guard duty each night.

The experience made the haggard faces and the "1,000 yard stare" of the actors real. The drama of the movie and the imagery of combat were also frighteningly real.

And unlike the incompetent, "Beetle Bailey" army Rambo singlehandedly defeated, the North Vietnamese in "Platoon" were portrayed the way they really were: determined, resourceful soldiers.

"Platoon," produced by Arnold Kopelson and released by Orion Pictures, is a brilliant piece of work. However, it is not the definitive film depicting the Vietnam War, nor the experience of the war's participants.

Its reliance on a plot involving homicide by a professional soldier is simply too far afield to be believable. Similarly, portraying American soldiers as cruel to civilians is not the way it usually was.

But as good as "Platoon" is, a truly great film has yet to emerge from the most divisive national experience of this century. In the words of Medal of Honor winner Brigadier General James Brady "The real story of Vietnam has yet to be told."

With a running time of 113 minutes, "Platoon" is rated R for violence.

Long Lines At Movie Theaters

By GEORGE ESPER
AP Special Correspondent

BOSTON (AP) — The movie, "Platoon," is taking Vietnam veterans on a patrol into the past. Fourteen years after U.S. troops abandoned the war zone, many of them are acclaiming the film the most realistic portrayal of the conflict.

"Platoon" is generating long lines and sold out theaters in cities across the United States.

Not only are veterans seeing it, often in support groups, but so, too, is a new generation of Americans, many of whom were toddlers in 1967 when the movie is set.

It has stirred emotions and flashbacks so strong that theater managers report some veterans walking out on scenes they found too painful, when American troops were killed and maimed in ambushes and attacks.

In one poignant scene, a medic futilely pounds on the chest of a wounded infantryman trying to revive him as he gasps for life.

John Morrissey, secretary of the Illinois Vietnam Veterans Leadership Program, said the movie put him on an emotional roller coaster from the exhilaration to the exhaustion of combat. He felt the "sadness, the sense of loss once again of your buddies dying."

"I relived my experiences during the movie," said Bob O'Brien, deputy director of the Illinois program. "It's the most accurate portrayal of what I went through over there. It's not something that I wanted to remember prior to seeing it."

O'Brien said some directors of veterans centers in the Chicago area reported their telephones had been busy since the movie first opened Dec. 19.

"A lot of people are experiencing renewal of flashbacks and nightmares they didn't have for a real long time," he said. "A lot of people haven't dealt with those experiences at all."

Mike Leaveck, communications director for the Vietnam Veterans of America in Washington, said many who telephoned were stunned at the realistic portrayal and cautioned it should not be seen alone because it is so hard-hitting.

"They should spend some time decompressing with friends later, talking about it," said Leaveck. "It's not a movie you can see and go out and have dinner with a girlfriend later."

Dermot Duggan, director of the Massachusetts Veterans Services Contact Offices in Boston, went to the movie with a dozen Vietnam veteran friends. He said he felt weary from tensing up as he watched the movie.

"It was very realistic, so a lot of fellows were wincing and ducking their way through the movie," he said.

Angel Almedina, director of the Vietnam veterans outreach program in New York City, said there was mixed reaction at his center.

"Some didn't appreciate it too much," he said. "There are some that no matter what you put on the screen, they'll never acknowledge it."

Oliver Stone, the Vietnam veteran writer-director of "Platoon," agrees.

In a telephone interview from his California home, Stone, who was wounded twice as an infantryman in Vietnam, said the movie was a semi-autobiographical account of his tour of duty in 1967-68.

"I had to use some dramatic license," he said. "It's not exactly me."

The movie shows a platoon in battle, suffering casualties from both the North Vietnamese and from its own misdirected friendly fire, its drug and racial problems, the atrocities its members commit against Vietnamese civilians and "fragging" within its ranks, with soldiers settling personal differences by maiming or even killing each other.

Stone said his movie differs from "The Deer Hunter" and "Apocalypse Now" in that those two big hit movies of the 1970s didn't really deal with these problems.

In one brutal scene, soldiers in the platoon, angered by seeing their buddies killed and one of them nailed to a pole, retaliate by murdering a Vietnamese man and a woman as they sweep through a village.

"Some vets will tell you it never happened and also that there were no drugs, no black and white problems," Stone said. "Everybody remembers their experience differently. I saw civilians murdered."

Nick Mills of Boston, commander of a combat photography team in Vietnam and author of "Combat Photographer," said he was disappointed with the movie.

"I thought it was just another good war movie," he said. "Somehow it didn't add up to any kind of a message for me. There were too many elements, a lot of cliches, the dehumanization of the troops, the dissension in the ranks, the tensions between blacks and whites, the booby traps."

Stone said he wrote the script in 1976 but had it turned down by everybody in the motion picture business as uncommercial.

He said "Platoon" was attracting so much attention because "people are responding to the fact that it's real. They're curious about the war in Vietnam after 20 years. It's safe to see because the wounds are supposed to have healed although there are similar situations brewing. Possibly people are responding to that fear in Nicaragua, Salvador and Honduras."

Several other Vietnam movies are scheduled for release this year, including Francis Ford Coppola's "Gardens of Stone" and Stanley Kubrick's "Full Metal Jacket."

EDITOR'S NOTE — George Esper, the Northeast regional reporter, covered the Vietnam War for the AP for 10 years.

A POETIC COLLECTION

NEW YORK (AP) — The New York Public Library recently received the Carl H. Pforzheimer collection, "Shelley and His Circle."

The library says it is "the world's preeminent private collection relating to the great 19th-century English Romantic writers."

The gift was made by the Carl and Lily Pforzheimer Foundation Inc. of New York. The collection has been conservatively appraised in excess of $20 million. The gift also provides a $3 million endowment fund for the continued maintenance of the collection.

The collection contains some 8,000 manuscripts, including the world's most extensive assemblage of autograph letters by poet Percy Bysshe Shelley as well as letters, journals, poetry and prose by members of his circle.

Book Hints At An Unpleasant Future

THE HANDMAID'S TALE — BEFORE AND AFTER. By Margaret Atwood. New York, Fawcett/Crest. $4.95

When I first began thinking about "The Handmaid's Tale" way back in 1981, I felt it was a very strange sort of book for me to be writing. Also, I was afraid people would think I was merely paranoid.

Like many books, this one began with the question, "What if?" I quess I was tired of having people say, "It can't happen here." They were right only if you accepted their definition of "it." "It" could mean Russian-style communism, or Germany under Hitler. But what if we were looking at the wrong "it"? What if, while we were busy staring down at the wolf at the front door, another one was creeping over the back fence?

Once any democracy starts curtailing freedom in the name of freedom, it may end up in trouble. What if you wanted to take over the United States today? What flag could you wave successfully?

"The Handmaid's Tale" is one answer to these "what if's." It's set in the near future, in a United States that is in the hands of a power-hungry elite who have used their own brand of "Bible-based" religion as an excuse for the suppression of the majority of the population. It's about what happens at the intersection of several trends, all of which are with us today: the rise of right-wing fundamentalism as a political force, the decline in the Caucasian birthrate in North American and northern Europe, and the rise in infertility and birth defects due, some say, to increased levels of chemical pollution and radiation, as well as to sexually-transmitted diseases.

Among the features of the resulting social order is a great deal of pressure on women to have babies, if they can, coupled with their harem-like seclusion and a form of polygamy for the richer and more powerful men. (If a thing is valued and in short supply, who usually gets more of it?) All of this is firmly based on the Bible, specifically Genesis 30: 1-13 — the story of Jacob, his two wives Rachel and Leah, and their two handmaids, who are required to produce children for them. Hence the title.

Despite its futuristic setting, "The Handmaid's Tale" is not science fiction, if by that you mean Martians, teleportation or life on Venus. Nor is it a sort of travelogue of the future. It's the story of one woman under this regime, told in a very personal way, and part of the challenge for me was the creation of her voice and viewpoint. But I also wanted my book to be firmly based on human nature and fact. There's nothing in it that we as species have not done, aren't doing now or don't have the technological capability to do. Our ideas of what is normal, moral and desirable can be influenced a great deal by circumstance, as any reading of history shows.

As I wrote, I kept a clippings file, and into it went all sorts of oddments, from PCB levels in polar bears to an account of collective hangings in 17th-century England. Many other things fed into the book as well: my reading of the Bible, which can be liberating or stifling depending on how it's interpreted and on which parts you stress; my study of Puritan New England, land of my ancestors; my travels in Iran and Afghanistan; my interest in military tactics; even the Old Dutch Cleanser box of the 1940s showing a woman with a face-concealing hat and large stick who would have frightened many children of my generation, including me, and whose clothes I used as a model for my handmaids' costumes. As I collected all these bits and pieces, I reflected that there isn't much in the realm of human eccentricity and outrageousness that hadn't already been done.

Upon publication of the book, I braced myself, clippings file at the ready, for the shouts of "paranoid," "impossible," and "ridiculous" that I was sure would arise. But few did. In my native Canada, the response from media people was a nervous, "Could it happen here?" In England, the book was treated more as a good yarn than as social realism — after all, they'd already done their own religious-repression number, under Cromwell. But in the United States, where these motifs were closer to home, they didn't even use the word "could." Instead it was, "How long have we got, and how can we prevent it?" I was even interviewed by radio and television stations that don't ordinarily do novels at all, only hard news. Hardly anyone thought this scenario was entirely farfetched.

The book sold much better than I'd thought it would.

Despite the book's success however, I sometimes wake up in the night with disturbing thoughts. "The Handmaid's Tale" shows a future most women and most men would not find pleasant, to put it mildly. We write such books, I think, partly to chart where we might be going, and to see whether we want to go there. But what if this book is not a warning but a forecast? What if it's more real than even I supposed? The way things are going in the world today, I'd be happy to have someone tell me my book was total, improbable nonsense — and be right.

A Reflector Review

Secrets Of A Writer

NONE BUT A BLOCKHEAD: On Being A Writer. By Larry L. King. New York. Viking. 322 pages, hardcover, $17.95.

The award-winning author directs his amusing message toward those would-be writers who have big dreams of making the best seller list. Using Samuel Johnson's philosophy, "No man but a blockhead ever wrote except for money," for his title, King, also author of "The Best Little Whorehouse in Texas," reveals the ups and downs writers encounter in the marketplace.

He contends that the only artists who show higher rate of unemployment other than writers are musicians too talented to play rock or punk, toe dancers, and those artists who paint.

Running hot and cold as a writer for more than 40 years, King demonstrates in his tell-tale book how his competence outweights his consistency. Although his Mark Twain style entertains readers, his gregarious life style has led him off on occasional tangents. He would accept large advances on a book, spend the money, and never finish the book.

Besides being entertaining, King's book teaches, telling less than tactfully at times, how to negotiate with unethical publishers and editors. It also offers educational glimpes into different author's methods of maintaining enough privacy to practice their craft.

For instance, in a Sarasota writing colony which included Pulitzer-prize-winning McKinley Kantor, best-selling authors John D. MacDonald, Borden Deal, David Weiss and others, the artists flew large "drinking flags" outside their homes when they wished to entertain. No banner meant no bourbon and no bull.

Some of King's other memoirs deal with his break-up with his first wife Jean and also with second wife Rosemary's ordeal with cancer. He candidly admits to falling in love with Rosemary after failing to "rekindle a fire" from the "cold dead ashes" of his first marriage.

Just as he admits to covertness in his relationship with his first wife Jean, he also admits to outright lies in hie efforts to sell his articles and books.

Although readers may not believe every word he writes, they may identify with some of the colorful anecdotes and sad torments King's life reveals.

"None But A Blockhead" ends with eight delightful short pieces the author wrote "mostly for fun (but also for money)".

This book is available at Sheppard Memorial Library.

FROM SHEPPARD MEMORIAL LIBRARY

By LINDA M. STANCILL

A group of high interest, low-level books for new readers has recently been added to the library's collection.

The "Adult Reading: Comprehension" set, attractively illustrated, is for the systematic development of adult literacy and reading comrehension. The program is organized into four topic themes: People, Messages, Cultures and Coping, with six books within each theme. The selections constantly enlist students in realistic adult experiences with no talking down.

There are more than 400 selections adapted from popular magazines and edited to lower reading levels, as well as selections especially written for the program.

Written for adult learners with limited reading skills, the "Adult Reader's Library" provides hgih interest, low-vocabulary books designed to encourage and promote reading for pleasure and information. Books resemble the typical pocket book format, each containing a single selection.

Books in the series include mystery and adventure, coping and how-to books, biographies and other non-fiction. Some of the titles are "Getting and Keeping a Job," "Your Body in Health and Sickness," "Truth is Stronger than Fiction," "Those Who Dared" (adventure stories from the Bible) and "Mother Teresa" (the biography of a nun who is spending her life helping poor people all over the world).

Scott, Foresman's Adult Literacy Program provides low-level, high interest reading with no "Baby Book" stigma. It's perfect for in- and out-of-class learning. Adult new readers can select titles and subjects of interest to them and gain the satisfaction of completing an entire book in a relatively short time.

For persons teaching literacy to adults, there is an instructor's guide. It includes a synthesis of adult education principles presented in a simplified, practical format.

Thomas Mann Still Important Today In German Culture

CLEARING THE ICE - Fisherman clear their cutter "Lilli" from the ice Monday, pressing together the hulls of the vessels, anchored in the harbor of the small fisherman's village of Friedrichskoot at the mouth of the River Elbe. By KEVIN COSTELLOE
Associated Press Writer

FRANKFURT, West Germany (AP) — A collection of the most popular short stories by the late Nobel Prize-winning writer Thomas Mann and the personal memoirs of his son Golo shared space on the West German best-seller list this fall.

About the same time, a movie based on a 1934 novel by his son Klaus opened in West German movie theaters.

Thirty-one years after Thomas Mann's death, he and his family figure heavily in West German cultural life.

Their work stretches from Thomas Mann's carefully drawn tale of the ill-fated attraction of a German writer for a young Polish boy in the classic "Death in Venice" to Klaus Mann's frenetic portrait of an actor in Nazi Germany in "Mephisto."

Golo Mann has attracted tens of thousands of readers with his recollections of growing up in Germany before the Nazi era. A new book has also come out about the late novelist Heinrich Mann, the brother of Thomas and a sharp social critic.

"Thomas Mann is the greatest German writer of this century; his brother, Heinrich, was a great writer as well," says Helmut Koopmann, an Augsburg University professor who wrote an afterword to the Heinrich Mann study.

Koopmann notes that young people in particular have been discovering Klaus Mann as a symbol of German "exile literature" during the Nazi era.

The most famous member of the family remains Thomas Mann.

The winner of the Nobel Prize for literature in 1929, he is known for such novels as "Buddenbrooks" about the decline of a German family in the northern city of Luebeck and for some of the most memorable short stories and novellas in German.

"Death in Venice" was made into a movie in 1970 by the Italian director Luchino Visconti.

The story is included in a collection of Mann's short stories and novellas released early in 1986 by the S. Fischer publishers of Frankfurt. The book spent 23 weeks on the best-seller list of the Stern newsmagazine starting in June.

Mann fled the Nazi regime in 1933 and lived in the United States from 1938 to 1952, teaching at Princeton University before moving to Pacific Palisades, Calif.

Golo, then 24, left Germany with his father in 1933 and eventually went to the United States as well. There he taught at Olivet College in Michigan and Clarement College in California during the period 1942-1957.

Golo Mann, a renowned historian who now lives in Switzerland, describes some of his American experience in his new book "Erinnerungen und Gedanken" — "Recollections and Thoughts."

"It was always going to be hard work for me to come to grips with strange landscapes," he writes. "As for the strangest of them — the deserts of Nevada and California — I just could never do it."

His book of memoirs has been on Stern's best-seller list since mid-September.

Golo Mann, now 77, stepped into an unusual controversy last July over whether schoolchildren in the southern state of Baden-Wuerttemberg should sing all of the verses of the "Deutschlandlied" ("Germany Song").

Several verses of the song, including the "Deutschland, Deutschland ueber alles" refrain, remain closely identified with the Nazi regime and Adolf Hitler's zeal for European conquest. The third verse is the official West German national anthem.

Mann was quoted in an interview with the Stuttgarter Nachrichten newspaper as saying the song taken as a whole is "more joyful, friendly and absolutely less warlike" than the French, British and American national anthems.

He cited the U.S. anthem as being "particularly blood-curdling with its flowing blood, exploding bombs and flag still waving at the end."

Klaus Mann stands out as the renegade of the family with books such as "Mephisto," which was made into an Oscar-winning movie starring Klaus Maria Brandauer in 1981.

The movie, with its story of a stage actor who improves his career during Hitler's Third Reich, first brought Brandauer international renown as an actor. It won Hollywood's Academy Award for the best foreign movie of 1981.

The movie just released in November is based on Klaus' novel, "Flucht in den Norden" ("Flight to the North").

It tells the story of young German Communist, Johanna, who flees to Finland at the start of the Nazi era.

Restoration For Rare Manuscripts

By VEDAT ERDAMAR
Associated Press Writer

ISTANBUL, Turkey (AP) — In a small building nestled under the shadow of the Suleymaniye Mosque's majestic dome, a group of women work to save decaying rare manuscripts in Arabic and Ottoman Turkish.

Some of their patients are 1,000 years old. A cure may require months or years of painstaking work with tweezers, curved knives, brushes, chemicals and special paper.

Saadet Gazi, a chemical engineer who heads the nine-woman staff of the book hospital, said they had been working for one year on a 7th-century Koran — the Moslem holy book — and the job was only half done.

The Koran is reputed to have been handwritten by Caliph Osman, the third caliph after the Prophet Mohammed. Only six Korans from that period remain in the world, Ms. Gazi said.

She is repairing the 800-page book with antelope skin, the original material used for the book's pages. She obtained the skin from Rome's Istituto Centrale per la Patologia del Libro, where she received her training in book pathology.

Another recent patient was a 14th-century handwritten Arabic translation of a medical text by 1st-century Greek scholar Pedanius Dioscorides, one of four copies left in the world.

The Kitabu'l Hasais, or book of medicinal plants, was in such bad shape — with many pages stuck together — that even though the book is usable again, the damage to the pictures was permanent.

The staff first measured the acidity level of the pages in case the book had to be treated for chemical disease. Then the pages were taken apart one by one and aired out before finally being placed between layers of special Japanese paper that is 100 percent celluloid.

Some books have been attacked by bacteria and have biological diseases. These require disinfection by chemicals.

A third category have been damaged in natural disasters such as floods, the volumes turning into solid, rock-hard forms with all the pages stuck together. These books are first moistened to separate the pages before repair work begins with special knives and paste.

The book hospital is part of the Suleymaniye library, built in 1557 as part of the Suleymaniye mosque complex.

The library has one of the richest collections in the world of books on Islamic art, science, literature and religion.

It contains a half million books, 125,000 of them handwritten manuscripts, according to library director Muammer Ulker.

The book hospital was opened in 1962. Since then, the personnel go through all the volumes once a year to determine which ones need urgent care.

Deciding on priority for treatment is a crucial matter.

"We couldn't restore all the damaged books in the library for a 100 years given our small staff and lack of modern equipment," said Ms. Gazi.

She said the hospital needs a hot and cold pressing machine, which costs about $35,000, for books suffering from oxidation and slowly burning away. She would also like a disinfecting machine which kills mold, bacteria and maggots.

JAZZ FELLOWSHIPS

WASHINGTON (AP) — Three outstanding American jazz musicians have been named recipients of 1987 Jazz Masters Fellowships from the National Endowment for the Arts' Music Program of $20,000 each.

The musicians are Cleo Patra Brown, Denver; Melba Liston, New York, and Jay McShann, Kansas City, Mo. They join 15 other American "Jazz Greats" who have been so honored by the federal government for achievement in the field of jazz over the past five years.

New Show At East Gallery

An exhibition titled "Winter Patterns," featuring the work of artists Holly Brewster Simons and David Camden, will open today at East Gallery, 646 Arlington Blvd.

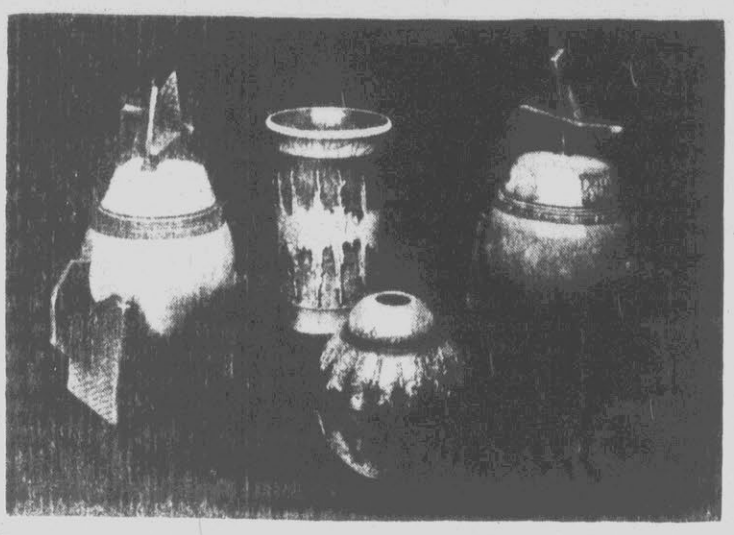
A reception, free and open to the public, will be held from 3 to 5 p.m.

Camden, a native of Petersburg, Va., now lives and works in the Richmond area. A teacher of both wheel throwing and hand-building pottery classes, he is artist in residence at the Hand Workshop in Richmond and president of the Richmond Craftsman's Guild.

Educated in Vermont, Camden displays his work in galleries and juried shows throughout the Eastern United States. In this exhibit he includes some of his award-winning Raku vessels and containers.

Ms. Simons, originally from Albany, N.Y., has lived in Raleigh since 1966. In 1974 she left a career as a genetics research technician to devote full time to painting.

In her paintings, she incorporates strong designs and contrasts. Since 1975 her work has been winning awards in juried shows including the N.C. Watercolor Society, Raleigh Fine Arts Society, Spring Mills and the Southern Watercolor Society.



CAMDEN POTTERY -- Shown here are four examples of pottery by artist David Camden, to be seen in "Winter Patterns," a show featuring work by Camden and Holly Brewster Simons going on view today at East Gallery in Greenville.

NCMA To Sponsor A West Coast Tour

RALEIGH — The North Carolina Art Society and the North Carolina Museum of Art are sponsoring a tour of major museums and other points of interest on the west coast of California from April 28 to May 8.

Deadline for reservations is Feb. 2.

The tour will begin in Los Angeles with visits to the Los Angeles County Museum of Art, the Norton Simon Museum of Art and the Huntington Art Gallery and Botanical Gardens.

The schedule will allow time for shopping and other sightseeing.

After driving up the coast from Marina del Rey and Santa Monica, the group will view the extensive collections of the J. Paul Getty Museum in Malibu. In Santa Barbara, participants will tour the Santa Barbara Museum of Art, as well as the estate of newspaper tycoon William Randolph Hearst.

After a stay in Carmel and a visit to the Monterey Aquarium, the tour will continue to San Francisco. A tour of the city will include the Golden Gate Bridge, the waterfront area, Chinatown and Nob Hill. Tours are scheduled also of the San Francisco Museum of Modern Art, the M.H. deYoung Memorial Museum, and the Asian Art Museum.

The trip will conclude with tours at the Sebastiani and Ingelnook vineyards and lunch at the Sliverado Country Club and Resort.

Cost of the trip is $1,197 ($2,697 single occupancy) and includes a $100 contribution to the N.C. Museum of Art. The tour is open to museum members only, and membership is available to those not currently members.

A signed, completed application form with a check for a $500 deposit is due by Feb. 25, with the balance due March 15. No reservations will be taken by phone.

For more details on the tour or membership, call 833-1935.

Zoo Members Gifts Exceed $52,000

ASHEBORO — Over 800 members of the North Carolina Zoological Society, responding to that organization's Project: North America campaign and a $150,000 challenge by the Kresge Foundation, have thus far sent over $52,000 in gifts.

Responding to the Society's annual Holiday Gift mailing and notification of a challenge grant from the Kresge Foundation of Troy, Michigan, 824 members of the Zoo Society have sent $52,889 in gifts so far.

Mostly year-end gifts, ranging from $5 to $1,000, they will help the Society secure funding required to receive $150,000 from the Kresge Foundation.

An independent, private foundation created by the personal gifts of Sebastian S. Kresge, the Kresge Foundation will donate $150,000 to the Society's campaign to raise $6 million in private gifts, if it has raised an additional $478,000 by April 1. The Society has been seeking and receiving other corporate, foundation and individual gifts as its seeks to meet the Kresge deadline.

The North Carolina Zoological Park will break ground soon for a $30 million addition which will create a North American continental region covering about 200 acres. Over 40 new, natural habitats will be offered when the continent opens in late 1991. Animals of 95 species and plants of as many as 200 species will be featured.

The state zoo now offers an African continental region on about 300 acres of the 1400-acre Park.

There are over 10,000 memberships held in the NC Zoological Society. Approximately 25,000 individuals are covered by those memberships. Most are North Carolinians, but there are members from a majority of the United States, including Alaska, plus Puerto Rico, Canada and West Germany.

Art Interns

RALEIGH — The North Carolina Arts Council's Community Development Section is offering its annual summer intern program in community arts administration to three individuals who are college graduates.

The three month program offers interns a chance to work with two community arts council in fostering the arts through training in arts administration, grants, management, marketing, etc.

Applicants will be evaluated for their familiary with the arts and be in a position to accept full time employment at the end of the summer. Deadline for applying is March 1.

The interns selected will receive a $600 monthly stipend.

For more details and to request an application form, write to: Community Development Section, N.C. Arts Council, Department of Cultural Resources, Raleigh, N.C. 27611, telephone 733-7897.

PAINTINGS ACQUIRED

LOS ANGELES (AP) — "Pastoral Landscape With a Will" by 17th-century French landscapist Claude Gellee and "Apollo and Phaethon" by the 18th-century Venetian painter Giovanni Battista Tiepolo have been acquired by the Los Angeles County Museum of Art.

Chowan Art Tour

MURFREESBORO — An opportunity to earn three hours of credit in art history while touring five European countries is being offered by the Division of Art of Chowan College.

The tour is from May 20 to June 2 and is open to anyone 18 or older. Doug Erbank, professor in Chowan's Division of Art, is the program's arranger.

Countries on the tour are France, Switzerland, The Netherlands, Germany and England. Departure is from Norfolk, Va. to New York City and on to Heathrow International Airport, London.

The group will visit major museums in Lucerne, Geneva, Munich, Heidelberg, Amsterdam, Paris and London as well as making sightseeing trips which will feature local guides and lectures.

All European travel will be by private air-conditioned deluxe motor coach, with a multilingual tour director to accompany the group on the entire tour. Accomodations will be in superior tourist class hotels, with continental breakfast every day and dinners in restaurants included. The round trip flight will include meals.

Persons who wish to make the trip can do so without participating for the college credit.

For complete details, write to: Doug Erbank, Chowan College, Murfreesboro, N.C., 27855, or call him at 398-4101.

New Mexico Trip

WINSTON-SALEM — Reservations are now being taken for a trip to New Mexico in April sponsored by the Associated Artists of Winston-Salem.

A total of seven days and six nights will be spent in the northern part of the state near Albuquerque, Santa Fe and Taos. The tour group will leave April 20 and return April 16.

Included in the tour will be a visit to the Tamarind Insitute in Albequerque, a lithography printing school; a stop at Echo Canyon, home of Georgia O'Keeke; Santa Clara Pueblo with its red and black pottery, and San Ildefonso Pueblo, home of Maria Martinzes, noted for her black matte and burnished pottery.

Other points to be visited will be the Taos Pueblo and the Millicent Rogers Museum of Art in Taos.

For more information on the trip contact the AAWS office at 722-0340 or 722-0446.

N.C. Indian Art Competition

RALEIGH — An art contest to recognize the talent of American Indian artists in North Carolina will be one of the many features of the Twelfth Annual North Carolina Indian Unity Conference to be held March 12-14 at the Sheraton Airport Plaza Hotel in Charlotte.

Persons who wish to enter the contest must be American Indians who are currently residing in the state of North Carolina.

Entries may be subitted in five categories: original drawings, paintings, basketwork, wood carvings and beadwork.

All entries must be submitted to one of the North Carolina Indian organizations no later than March 5.

All contest entries will be displayed during the Unity Conference, which is sponsored by the United Tribes of North Carolina. Judging will be held March 12, and awards will be presented during the conference banquet to be held March 13.

The North Carolina Commission of Indian Affairs, a member organization of UTNC, will coordinate the contest.

Indian organizations in the eastern area of North Carolina to which local Indians can send entries are:

• Haliwa-Saponi Tribe, P.O. Box 99, Hollister, N.C., 27844, telephone 586-4017.

• Meherrin Indian Tribe, P.O. Box 508, Winton, N.C., 27986, telephone 332-2733.

• Choarie Intra-Tribal Council, Route 3, Box 340-E, Clinton, N.C., 28328, telephone 564-6909.

• Lumbee Regional Development Association, Pembroke, N.C., 27844, telephone 521-8602.

• Waccamaw-Siouan Development Association, P.O. Box 221, Bolton, N.C., 28423, telephone 452-3411.

For more information on contest rules and regulations, contact Teresa Jones or Wanda Burns-Ramsey, N.C. Commission of Indian Affairs, P.O. Box 27228, Raleigh, N.C., or call 733-5998.

Art Depicts Black Lifesavers

BEAUFORT — "Black Lifesavers of Pea Island," a group of paintings depicting the former all-black crew of the Pea Island Lifesaving Station, is currently on view at the North Carolina Maritime Museum, 315 Front Street, Beaufort.

Pea Island, located at the northern end of Hatteras Island on North Carolina's Outer Banks, was the only all-black manned lifesaving station in the country from 1880 to 1949.

The all-black crew was assigned to Pea Island in 1880 to replace a negligent all-white crew that was court-martialed and dismissed for sleeping through a storm in which a vessel and crew perished. The all-black crew served admirably and without incident for the next 69 years.

A North Carolina artist, James Melvin, was inspired by a photograph of the Pea Island crew, which he had seen on exhibit in the N.C. Aquarium in Manteo. And in 1985, Melvin, funded by a grant from the Z. Smith Reynolds Foundation in Winston-Salem, completed 10 oil paintings of the all-black crew at Pea Island.

Working with aquarium director, Rhett White, artist Melvin researched his subjects by contacting local residents who served at the Pea Island station when it was under Coast Guard command.

They discovered that the early black lifesaving crew members stationed at Pea Island were from Currituck County and Roanoke Island and that their ancestors were free blacks or freedmen living in settlements on Roanoke Island after the Civil War.

Today, many of the lifesavers' descendants continue to live on the island or in nearby counties.

James Melvin maintains an art studio at Nags Head. He worked in advertising before turning to painting, which has been his vocation for the past 10 years. He has an arts education degree fom North Carolina A & T and served in the Peace Corps in Botswana, Africa. He concentrates on portraiture.

The exhibit of the Melvin paintings of "Black Lifesavers of Pea Island" will coninue on view at the North Carolina Maritime Museum through Feb. 28.

The museum is open weekdays from 9 a.m. until 5 p.m., from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. on Saturdays and from 2 to 5 p.m. on Sundays. Admission is free.

Seeking Families For Foreign Students

RALEIGH — American Scandinavian Student Exchange Programs (ASSE) is seeking local families to host Scandinavian, French, Spanish, German, Dutch, British, Swiss, Japanese and Australian girls and boys, 15 to 18 years of age, coming to this area for the upcoming high school year.

These foreign exchange students are in this country as part of a family, attending high school and sharing their culture and language with their newly adopted American family.

The students are fluent in English and are sponsored by the ASSE, a non-profit, public benefit organization, affiliated with the Swedish and Finnish Departments of Education and cooperating with the Canadian Provincial Ministries of Education.

The exchange students arrive from their home country shortly before school begins in late August and return at the end of the school year in June. Each ASSE student is fully insured, brings his or her own personal spending money and expects to bear his or her share of household responsibilities, as well as being included in normal family activities and lifestyles.

The students are screened and qualified by ASSE. Families may select the youngster of their choice from extensive student applications, family photos and biographical essays. Students and families are encouraged to begin corresponding prior to the students arrival.

ASSE is also seeking local American high school students to become ASSE exchange students abroad. Students should be between 15 and 18 years old and interested in living with a European, Canadian or Australian family, attending school and learning about the lands and people of Scandinavia, Canada and Australia. Students should have a good academic record and a desire to experience another culture and language through living with a volunteer family. Academic year and shorter term summer vacation programs are available.

Persons interested in obtaining more information about becoming a host family or becoming a student abroad should contact ASSE's local representative: Daisy Hassen, 1304 Keyes Court, Raleigh, N.C. 27615, telephone number 846-2743.

ECU Student Wins Award

ECU News Bureau

Manuel I. Cordero, a senior theatre arts major at East Carolina University, is a prize winner in a national competition for student designers.

Cordero's designs for the play, "The Time of Your Life," executed in a miniature scale set, won third place among scenic designs in the Wichita State University Theatre 12th Annual Scene and Costume Design Competition.

As winner, Cordero received a cash award. His design is included on a touring competition exhibit of 18 pieces — six scene designs and 12 costume designs.

Cordero was the only winner from an eastern campus. Other winners were student designers from Kansas, Missouri, Tulsa, Montana and North Dakota State Universities.

The touring exhibit was previously shown at Emporia State University, Western Kentucky University and ECU. Other stops on its tour are the University of Kansas, Central Missouri State University and at the USITT national conference in Minneapolis.

Manuel Cordero is a resident of Rio Peidras, Puerto Rico.

A Review

Hollywood Book Uses Old Literary Devices

ALL THAT GLITTERS. By Thomas Tryon. Knopf. 479 Pages. $18.95.

In 1888, Los Angeles was a city of 25,000 people. A scant eight miles northwest of the "downtown" intersection were barley fields and citrus fields.

The citrus ranch acquired a name — Hollywood. And in the years that followed, Hollywood became a place of bright lights and broken hearts; where being a "star" was the most important thing of all.

Novelist Thomas Tryon captures some of the feeling of the glory days of Hollywood — the Golden Age of Moving Pictures — in his latest book, "All That Glitters."

There are five prominent characters in the story. All women. All movie "stars." Babe, Belinda, April, Maude and Claire. Five individual stories, all told by an actor-turned-writer named Charlie Caine who knew them all. Caine explains early in the novel, "I know where the bodies are buried. And, given the chance, I tell." Caine certainly does know where the bodies are buried. And he isn't shy about telling.

But Caine is not a vindictive character, out to settle an old score. At least not with these five ladies. Each, in her own way, is a friend of Caine's, even, in the end, Claire Regrett, the nastiest of them all.

The "movie star" masks of each of the five women are stripped away — but the novel retains a feeling of fantasy and romance as all the bright stars in the sky are reminders of all the movie stars that made the industry great.

"All That Glitters" is a closely detailed, behind-the-scenes look at the formative years of the motion picture industry. Tryon contrasts the Hollywood of today with the Hollywood of yesterday and writes with a passion for his subject. As the character, Caine remarks: "You can't write intelligently about Hollywood; it's just about dreams, there's not much flesh there, only fantasy. It's fantasy even now, in this latter age of cable and MTV."

Maybe that's what's wrong with this novel. Tryon strips away the fantasy to reveal the flesh. But it's no longer news that actors are not the characters they portray, or stars shining brightly in the heavens, but imperfect human beings.

Thus, there is little to distinguish this novel from others like it. The characters are new, but the literary devices are old.

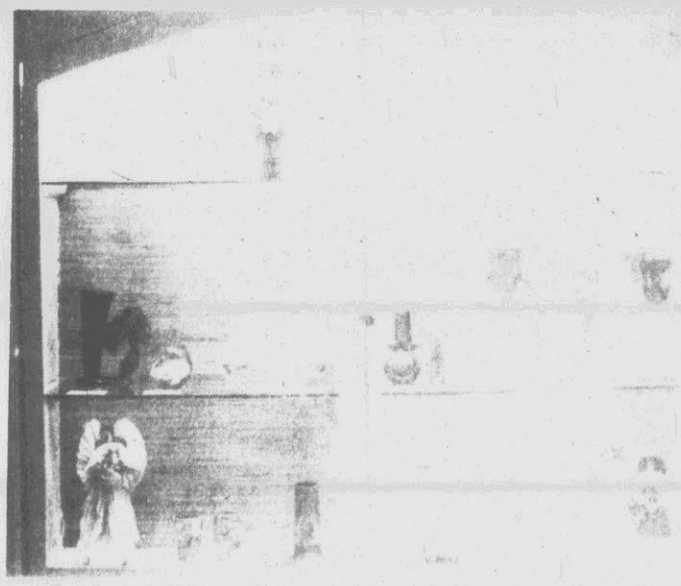
Art Shows At Gray And GMA Fit Well Into The Winter Mood

ENCHANTING LIGHT — A light structure of intricate design that glows in candy light colors is one of the pieces in "Structures Of Illumination" now on view at Gray Gallery. The exhibition features a wide variety of contemporary light creations by 16 artists.



LIMITED SHOWING — The hallway case in the Greenville Museum of Art has a collection of paper, clay and glass crafts being shown only for a short time. The main exhibition currently on view at GMA is work by husband and wife team David Lewis and Sandy Wilcox.

In these dark January days of winter, East Carolina University has a cheerful, light-filled refuge from grayness. It's an exhibition on view at Gray Gallery, titled "Structures of Illumination."

Both the words structures and illuminations are accurate, as these creations are works of art as well as pieces to provide light — some to a greater extent than others. Suffice it to say that most light provided is more in the area of soothing, decorative light than practical light for daily household needs like reading, cooking, sewing or tending to flu victims.

But the point of this show is not illumination one would find in a typical furniture or home decoratioins store — it is definitely about contemporary creations married to the technology of light sources. As such, it is almost consistently appealing, charming and often touched with comic affiliations.

The most conventional illuminations are three Akari light sculptures by Isamu Noguchi. Composed of traditional Japanese materials — higo, bamboo and washi, they have the familiar quiet, subdued beauty of light glowing through rich white paper that has so long been a hallmark of Oriental lighting in homes, temples and tea rooms.

And there's a fantasy light that will delight any child and bring memories of fairy tales back to oldsters in Thomas Lanigan-Schmidt's mixed media lamp, "Daytime Nightime, The Solitary Drinker." This richly detailed lamp has curves, small nobs, beads and is wrapped in a material like cellophane through which glows cherry pinks, lime greens, mellow yellows and quiet blues.

Tom Nussbaum's six piece set aligned on a shelf is another visual delight of the first order. Nussbaum has used common kitchen graters, tin cans, etc. as the main bodies of his pieces to which he has added heads and arms fashioned from smaller utilitarian objects. Much in the manner of Mexican tin art, he has cut precise patterns of small holes, painted the sextet dull black and lit them with tiny interior ruby lights. Titled "Six Robot Nightime Lanterns" they are totally festive and it matters little they provide scant light.

A trio by Russell Sharon, three "Painted Lamps" of watercolor on upright cylindrical paper tubes, is an effective example of beauty fashioned from the simplest of materials. One sports an encircling ring of orange figures, another is of green vertical leaves terminating in bright red tulip blossoms, and the third is painted in an abstracted design.

These are but a few of the fascinating light fixtures displayed by 16 artists engaged in combining contemporary approaches to art with light.

This exhibition is a fine example of the "something excitingly different" scheduled periodically at Gray Gallery. It's well worth braving the cold to take it in.

• At the Greenville Museum of Art, the current principal exhibition is a showing of 21 works by David Lewis and Sandy Wilcox, a husband and wife team of artists. The show is in the museum's North Gallery.

Unlike the whimsical, light-filled show at Gray Gallery, this show matches the starkness of winter in moods created by dark blacks and grays, touched only here and there with color. This mood exists even in Lewis' finely patterned studies of palm trees in ink, charcoal, wax and prisma on paper as much as it does in Willcox's smaller, more formally designed landscapes.

This is not to imply that the work of the two conveys an atmosphere of dreariness — far from it. There's instead the bewitching poetry of winter that permeates the work of both.

Lewis' study of Sheep, dark against gray hills, is wonderfully highlighted by touches of icy-blues in the shaggy texture of the sheep and a subdued explosion of light in a rim of the sky. He uses the same restrained details of blue in both palm tree studies.

Wilcox' pieces, particularly the linocuts and woodcuts, reflect a kinship to well-remembered woodcuts of the kind that once often illustrated favorite novels and travel books. It's good to see this type of work by a contemporary artist.

• Now being exhibited for a limited time period at GMA is a collection of small pieces from Linda Darty's collection, housed in the display case in the hall.

Here are crafts and art on a small scale by glass artists, ceramists, and fanfiful painted dolls made of corn shucks and found objects.

The collection includes paper weights by Richard Ritter, goblets by Robin Levin, glass pieces by Mark Peiser and Fritz Dreisbach, ceramics by Jane Peiser and David Keator, and Floss Perisho's dolls.

Both these shows and items from the permanent collection now on view make a visit to the Greenville Museum of Art worthwhile.

Stamps In The News

By SYD KRONISH
AP Newsfeatures

The first two commemorative stamps on the agenda for 1987 honors the 150th anniversary of Michigan Statehood and the Pan American Games.

Michigan was admitted as the 26th state in the Union on Jan. 26, 1837. Its petition for statehood originally was opposed by Southern legislators who objected to the admission of another free state. Their concern, however, was lessened by a compromise which admitted Arkansas, a slave state.

Conditional to its formation as a state, Michigan annexed the Upper Peninsula, then a part of the Wisconsin Territory, and conceded to Ohio a disputed section of land near the city of Toledo, Ohio.

The new 22 cent stamp features a White Pine, the Michigan state tree. The tree is seen in the foreground silhouetted over a sunrise on Lake Huron. At the base of the stamps the inscription "1837 1987 Michigan Statehood." The designer of the commemorative — Robert Wilbert of Detroit — explained that he depicted the tree and the lake to represent the importance of the timber industry and water-borne trade to the early development of the state.

First day cancellations are available in the usual two methods.

Collectors desiring to purchase the stamps at their local post office (after Jan. 26) may affix same to their own envelopes and send to Michigan Statehood Stamp, Postmaster, Lansing, MI 48924-9931. Orders must be postmarked by Feb. 25.

If you prefer to have the U.S. Postal Service affix the stamp, then enclose a check or money order for 22 cents per stamp and mail to Michigan Statehood Stamp, Postmaster, Lansing, MI 48924-9992. Deadline is Feb. [illegible].

Faculty Recital At 8:15 Tonight

Three faculty musicians and a graduate student, all of the School of Music, East Carolia University, will be heard in a faculty recital at 8:15 tonight in the A.J. Fletcher Recital Hall.

The recital is free and open to the public.

The three faculty members in the recital are: Donna Dease, mezzo-soprano; Brad Foley, saxophone, and Donna Coleman, piano. They will be assisted by Robert O'Brien, cello, a graduate student.

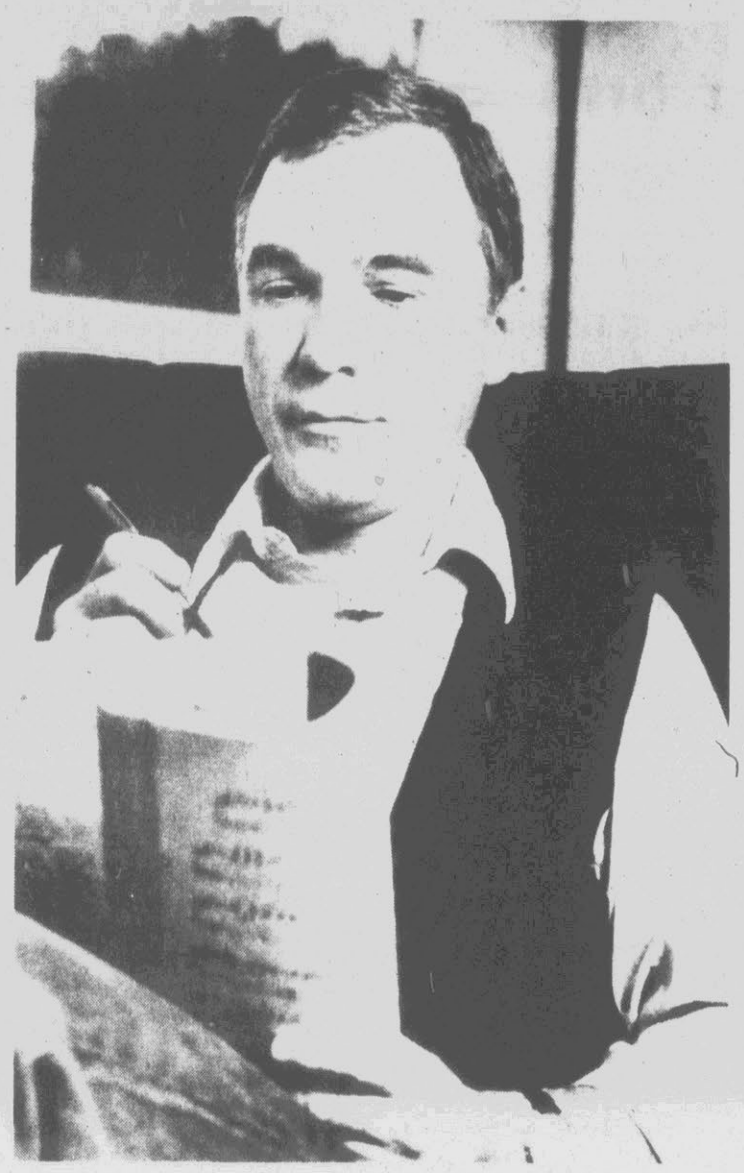
The program will open with three J.S. Bach arias to be sung by Dease, accompanied by Foley, Coleman and O'Brien. These are: "Ermuntert euch" from Cantata 176; "Kreuze und Krone" from Cantata 12, and "Gott ist unser Sonn' und Schild" from Cantata 79.

This will be followed by three Debussy melodies — "En Sourdine," "Clair de lune" and "Fantoches" from "Fetes Galantes I" (Verlaine) featuring Dease and Coleman; Warren Benson's "Aeolian Song" with Foley and Coleman; Paul Bonneau's "Caprice en forme de valse," with Foley as solo saxophonist.

After an intermission, the program will continue with "Le chant du veilleur" by Joaquin Nin, arranged by Londeix, to feature Dease, Foley and Coleman; four compositions by Charles Ives — "Evening," "The Innate," "The Things Our Fathers Loved" and "The Cage," featuring Dease and Coleman.

The program will conclude with Foley and Coleman performing two selections — Henry Cowell's "Air and Scherzo" and the Wiedoeft arrangement of Ring-Hager's "Danse Hongroise."

TO SING MANON — Leona Mitchell will sing the title role in Puccini's "Manon Lescaut" with the Metropolitan Opera on Saturday. The production will be broadcast live over radio WTEC, New Bern and WRRF, Washington, N.C., beginning at 2 p.m. Saturday. Others in the cast are Ermanno Mauro as Des Grieux; Brian Schexnayder as Lescaut, and Italo Tajo as Geronte. Julius Rudel will conduct. The live radio broadcasts from the Metropolitan are sponsored by the Texaco Company.



SOVIET CONDUCTOR — Vakhtang Jordania, who fled from the Soviet Union in 1983 and now heads the Chattanooga Symphony and Opera, works on a musical score in his Chattanooga home. (AP Laserphoto by Tim Barber)

Soviet Conductor In Chattanooga

By MARGARET HABERMAN
Associated Press Writer

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn. (AP) — Three years after he eluded a KGB guard and slipped across the Finnish border to freedom, Soviet conductor Vakhtang Jordania is thriving on the artistic independence he was denied in his homeland.

In his second season as head of the Chattanooga Symphony and Opera, Jordania no longer has to scramble for black market scores of Western composers and has been able to travel extensively as a guest conductor in Europe, Australia, Japan, Venezuela, New Zealand and South Korea.

"I had everything in my country — apartment, car, position. But I didn't have most important thing — freedom," the 44-year-old conductor said in a interview at his symphony office.

"I miss my family and friends, but I appreciate very much that this country gave me asylum and its heart. When I came to this country, everybody wanted to help me. I love this country."

The 53-year-old symphony has blossomed under the charismatic Jordania's tutelage. The budget has increased to $1.2 million from last year's $850,000, and the symphony has 14 new full-time musicians and the first sold-out season in its history.

Jordania also has made an effort to bring musicians to Chattanooga to make their American debuts, including two Bulgarian performers who sang in November in a presentation of Verdi's Requiem, the last work he conducted before he fled the Soviet Union.

He wants to mold the 72-member symphony into a regional force and eventually hopes the group will rival the nation's major orchestras. "I think this is realistic thing," he said. "But it takes time and money.

"This is my main job, making the orchestra happy, making my community happy — to prove I can make this orchestra work, then it will prove who I am." Although Jordania is trying to widen his exposure through guest conductor stints, he insists he has no immediate plans to leave Chattanooga for a more established symphony.

"My strong feeling is if I can reach my goal with this orchestra, why should I leave? It will be my product," he said. "And in this country, no matter where you live, you can visit, just pack a suitcase and get on plane." When he became a winner in the Herbert von Karajan competition in Berlin in 1971, Jordania said he had expected to tour throughout the world. He received countless invitations to guest conduct, but was refused permission to travel to the West for the next 10 years.

"When I went to West Berlin, I was so excited. I thought my career was getting wonderful," he said. "How could I think then that stupid government would stop me? The party organization and KGB never let me go and never gave me any explanation. He is sick, he is busy, that's what the Western countries were told.

"I decided in 1981 I didn't want to be in this jail anymore. I really decided that if I have opportunity to go to West, I would never come back. The decision was very hard, especially for me with two kids." Jordania has been married twice and has a 22-year-old son and a 12-year-old daughter.

His chance to leave came in 1983 when he convinced the Soviet hierarchy to let him accompany his protege, violinist Viktoria Mullova, on a concert tour of Finland. He went as her pianist even though he had not played publicly in more than 18 years.

Finland doesn't grant political asylum to Soviets, so Jordania and Ms. Mullova cajoled their KGB chaperone into going on a sightseeing trip without them, then grabbed a few belongings, took a taxi to the nearby Swedish border and crossed through a remote, unmanned checkpoint.

Four Volumes For Music Dictionary

By MARY CAMPBELL
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — When Grove's Dictionaries of Music decided to create its first dictionary of one country's music — the United States — it was thought two modest-size volumes would suffice.

But when "The New Grove Dictionary of American Music" was published in November, it appeared as four volumes. It sells for $495.

Talk about the dictionary began in 1980. Work began in 1981 and editing was completed in 1985.

One of the biggest tasks, though, was proofreading the 3,500 entries. It went on for a year. After the final entry, "Zydeco. A style of black Cajun music; see European-American Music," one proofreader wrote "Hallelujah. Amen."

The book contains a diverse array of musical names: Bernard Rands, who won the Pulitzer Prize for Music in 1984; Hugh Wolff, music director of the New Jersey Symphony; Madonna Ciccone, pop music's naughty girl who uses only her first name.

Some 25 specialists in various fields made suggestions as to who and what should be included. Pop entries were chosen on the basis of three lists submitted by New York critic John Rockwell.

"It was his evaluation in terms of potential longevity, significance, national impact and stylistic innovations," said H. Wiley Hitchcock, the American editor.

Pop music was not included in the 20-volume "New Grove Dictionary of Music and Musicians," which came out in 1980. Sir George Grove edited the first edition himself, from 1877 to 1890. It was included in the new work, said Stanley Sadie, the English editor, because pop is central to American music.

The American music entries, overseen by Hitchcock in the 20-volume "International Grove," were the springboard for the "American Grove." But many entries had to be completely rewritten. For example, in the "International Grove," Leonard Bernstein is treated primarily as a conductor. His American entry, much longer and written by a different person, also gives space to Bernstein the composer, lecturer and personality.

"The backbone of the dictionary is composers," Sadie said. "About 25 percent of the central classical tradition entries are composers."

There are also such items as historical surveys of band music, subjects on postage stamps and work songs with sections for sea shanties and slave, prison and railroad songs. The longest entry, 41 pages, is libraries and collections and is organized by states.

"The longest composer article is the one on Charles Ives," said Sadie. "The tradition in dictionaries is to grade people by importance. The least important gets the briefest entry." Ives rates 17 pages. George Gershwin gets 13 and Aaron Copland, nine.

"There's a long tradition to have articles with more than simply bedrock fact," Hitchcock said. "They give some sense of critical appraisal, but informed appraisal. We didn't want any jazzy opinions; we wanted informed opinions."

There is something about the "American Grove" that Hitchcock finds jazzy — the more than 700 illustrations and photographs and 200 musical examples. "For me, one of the most gratifying things was to see the level of illustrations," he said.

The hardest thing to find, he said, was authors for the articles about the history of music in 60 American cities. "People who can deal with the concert, sacred, ethnic and popular traditions of one city are not very numerous out there."

Now that it's over, Sadie is on to other projects. "There's a series of handbooks, and maybe some other reference books. And there's a 'The Man and Music' series starting on TV. I sort of supervise the musical side.

"There'll be 100 programs. The four that have been shot have the theme 'the composer at court' — Monteverdi, Louis XIV's court, Haydn and Liszt. They're doing it by place; there'll be six on Vienna, up to Schubert."

A series on American music also is planned, he said, and he hopes to have the assistance of Hitchcock, who is a professor of music at the City University of New York.

Singers Honored

The singers in E.B. Aycock Junior High School's "Show Biz" and their director, Patricai Hiss, have recently been honored. The honor comes from Heritage Music Press, which released a new publication titled "Scat I Where It's At."

The publication, written by Gene Grier and arranged by Dan Schwartz, was Aycock's Show Choir number for three-part mixed voices, and is dedicated to "Patricia Hiss and her wonderful group 'Show Biz.'"

Greer and Schwartz are both known nationally for their work as composers, clinicians and music educators.

Schwartz previously dedicated "Keep the Spirit" to the Aycock Choral Program and heard it performed by "Show Biz" at an American Choral Directors workshop at East Carolina University.

Playwrights Fund Auditions Slated

Auditions for a Playwrights Fund of North Carolina reading performance of "The Red Wheelbarrow," a play by Jean Battlo, will be held at 7:30 p.m. Wednesday.

The auditions will be at the Humber House, 117 West Fifth Street.

Readers needed for the roles are three females ages 30-40, one female age 70, one male, age 30, and another adult male, age not specified.

The date of performance is scheduled for Feb. 18 with a noon presentation at the Greenville Museum of Art and an evening reading program at the Humber House.

For further details call the Playwrights Fund office at 758-3628.

American Brass Quintet To Perform Wednesday

The American Brass Quintet, noted for its success in introducing the American concert-going public to brass quintet literature, will perform Wednesday at 8 p.m. in Hendrix Theater.

The concert, part of the Chamber Music Series, is co-sponsored by the East Carolina University School of Music and the ECU Department of University Unions.

The American Brass Quintet is a group of America's leading brass virtuosi and is known for playing a vast repertoire of works spanning five centuries. Members of the quintet are Raymond Mase, trumpet, educated at the New England Conservatory of Music who has performed as a soloist with the Boston Pops and other orchestras and ensembles; Chris Gekker, trumpet, has an impressive list of performances and of recordings of both brass quintet and chamber music; David Wakefield, horn, comes from the Juilliard School and performs regularly with the Metropolitan Opera and the Joffrey Ballet; Michael Powell, trombone, a free-lance tenor trombonist in New York performing with chamber ensembles and orchestras, and Robert Biddlecome, bass trombone, of the Juilliard School and an assistant dean of the Aspen Music School, a board member of Chamber Music America and executive director of the American Brass Chamber Music Association Inc.

Tickets for the performance are available from the Central Ticket Office in Mendenhall Student Center, open Monday through Friday from 11 a.m. until 6 p.m.

Tickets are by reserved seating.

The quintet will hold a free Master Class Thursday at 10 a.m. in the A.J. Fletcher Recital Hall. For more information call 757-6611, ext. 266.

NCSA Guided Tours Available

WINSTON-SALEM — Guided tours of the North Carolina School of the Arts and the Stevens Center, both in Winston-Salem, are now available to interested groups.

Tours of the NCSA campus are offered at 10:30 a.m. Wednesdays through the entire school. Visitors can watch dance classes, sit in on a drama class, walk through a visual arts class and attend a student performance in Crawford Hall.

The group may end the tour with lunch in the Student Commons cafeteria.

Tours of Stevens Center are offered the first Wednesday of each month.

Both tours are designed for groups but may be joined by individuals. Reservations are required three weeks in advance for group tours, with individuals often able to join a tour on short notice.

To schedule a tour, telephone Gwynne MacIntyre at 784-7170, ext. 2632.

Three Local Students Winners In Regional Competition

REGIONAL WINNERS — Three young Greenville musicians took top place in the nine-state regional competition of the Southern Division auditions of the Music Teachers National Association held in Louisville, Ky. The three, left to right, are Jennifer Lucht, Dan Davis and Shelley Lucht. They will now go to the national competition to be held in March in New York City. (Reflector Photo by Tommy Forrest)

First place honors went to three local music students during the nine-state regional Southern Division Auditions of the Music Teachers National Association held Jan. 16-18 at the University of Louisville, Kentucky.

Winners were Dan Davis, a junior in the East Carolina University School of music. Davis was winner in the collegiate percussion division.

Two Greenville school students were winners in their divisions. Shelley Lucht, violinist and a ninth grader at E.B. Aycock Junior High, was winner in the junior high string division.

Jennifer Lucht, a cello player and a junior at Rose High School, was winner in the high school string division. The two string players were accompanied on piano by Dr. Richard Lucht and Dr. Paul Tardif, both of the ECU keyboard faclty.

At Louisville, they competed against other state winners from the nine state region of the two Carolinas, Virginia, Georgia, Florida, Kentucky, Tennessee, Alabama and Mississippi.

As Southern Division winners, the three will compete in March at the national level during the Music Teachers National Association convention to be held in New York City.

The Greenville trio represented North Carolina as state winners in their respective categories in auditions held in Boone last October.

Davis is a native of Lexington. He studies percussion with Harold Jones at ECU. Shelley Lucht is a student of Joanne Bath, and Jennifer Lucht studies with Selma Gokcen.

Young Artists Competition

The final auditions of The Young Artist Competition will be held at 7 p.m. Thursday in the A.J. Fletcher Recital Hall on the East Carolina University campus.

The annual competition is open to any ECU student in the areas of keyboard, vocal and instrumental performance. Those who will be performing Thursday night are students selected from the preliminary round of auditions held earlier this year.

The winner receives a cash prize and will be presented in a recital later this year.

The competition is sponsored by the Student Forum for Musical Organizations in cooperation with the ECU School of Music.

The competition peformance is open to the public without charge.

AN EAST CAROLINA UNIVERSITY UNIONS CHAMBER MUSIC SERIES PRESENTATION

Senior Recitals

Two students in the School of Music, East Carolina University, are scheduled to give their senior recitals at the A.J. Fletcher Recital Hall on the East Carolina University campus this week.

The joint recitals, both at 7 p.m. Friday, are free and open to the public. The two recitalists are:

• Catherine Marie Callo of Chesapeake, Virginia, a student of Beatrice Chauncey, will perform on the flute. She will be assisted by Alisa Wetherington, piano.

For her program, she has listed: "Concerto No. 1 in G, K313" by Mozart; "Ensuite," comprised of the Entree, Saraband and Divertissement, by Pierre Max Dubois; "Fantasie," in two movements, Andantino and Allegro, by Gabriel Faure, and "Diversions for Flute and Marimba," March, Song and Finale, by Peter Tanner. This selection will be performed with her co-recitalist.

• James Arthur Pittman of Greenville is a student of Harold Jones. His senior recital is in percussion.

One of his selections, the "Diversions for Flute and Marimba," will be performed jointly with Callo.

Other selections for his recital program are: "Variations for Solo Kettledrums" by Jan Williams; "Etude for a Quiet Hall" by Christopher Deane; "Intercurrernce for Solo Percussion and Electronic Tape" by Daniel Kessner, and "Variations on Japanese Children's Songs" by Keiko Abe.

A Quick Look At 1987's Film Offerings

By BOB THOMAS
Associated Press Writer

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — If it's laughs you're looking for in 1987, you'll find them at movie theaters during the first half of the year.

There's romantic comedy, teen comedy, sophisticated comedy and outer-space comedy with such stars as Warren Beatty, Dustin Hoffman, Bette Midler, Eddie Murphy, Richard Pryor and Bruce Willis.

Why the onrush of comedy?

"It's traditional," says filmmaker Mel Brooks. "Whenever times are rough, people want to go to the movies. It's like the song, 'Forget your troubles, come on, get happy.' The audience doesn't want a message, unless it's a film like 'The Mission' that also offers adventure. The great unwashed just want to eat their popcorn and laugh."

Drama is also on the pre-summer menu. Two films about Vietnam by distinguished directors are eagerly awaited: Francis Coppola's "Gardens of Stone" and Stanley Kubrick's "Full Metal Jacket."

Gregory Peck returns to the screen in "Amazing Grace and Chuck," with Jamie Lee Curtis starring. Alan Parker ("Fame") directs Mickey Rourke and Robert DeNiro in a macabre adventure, "Angel Heart." Anne Bancroft and Anthony Hopkins star in "84 Charing Cross Road," based on the romantic novel.

Timothy Hutton appears in "Made in Heaven" as a man who returns after death to find his true love (Kelly McGillis). In "Black Widow," Debra Winger plays a Justice Department investigator on the trail of a beauty who marries and murders rich men. Steve Guttenberg goes dramatic in "The Bedroom Window," described as a Hitchcock-like suspense film. Another suspense movie is "Skip Tracer," with Michael Keaton and Rae Dawn Chong.

There's plenty of action-adventure this year as well. Sylvester Stallone turns to arm-wrestling in "Over the Top." Burt Reynolds is a former CIA man at odds with right-wing extremists in "Malone." Charles Bronson is again battling the bad guys in "The Assassination."

Nick Nolte and Powers Booth star in an a missing-in-action saga, "Extreme Prejudice." Richard Chamberlain is back in action with "Allan Quartermain and the Lost City of Gold." Mel Gibson and Danny Glover play cops on the trail of drug smugglers in "Lethal Weapon."

Youth will be served with such films as "Campus Man" and "Rites of Summer" (Kevin Bacon). And for the very young, Disney is re-releasing "Aristocats," and Cannon has new versions of "Rumplestiltskin" and "Sleeping Beauty."

The pre-summer offerings might well help theater operators maintain the fast box-office pace of the last half of 1986.

NCSA To Expand Auditions

WINSTON-SALEM — The North Carolina School of the Arts is planning expanded regional auditions across North Carolina for prospective students. The auditions, in upcoming weeks, will be for students wishing to apply for admission to the school's dance, design and production, drama, music, and visual arts programs.

This year, the North Carolina auditions will be held in four cities — one more than last years.

Auditions are scheduled in Raleigh on Feb. 7.; at Charlotte on Feb. 28; at New Bern on March 7, and at Asheville on March 31.

The audition point nearest Greenville, the one at New Bern, will be held at Barber Middle School in New Bern during the afternoon of March 7. All auditions in all four cities will be afternoon affairs.

Auditions for entry to NCSA are traditionally held each term of the school year at the Winston-Salem campus, with special auditions held by various disciplines at other times during the year.

Full details on the regional auditions as well as regular and special auditions at NCSA are available by calling 784-7170, extension 2511 or by writing to: Admissions Office, N.C. School of the Arts, P.O. Box 12189, Winston-Salem, N.C., 27117-2189.

The North Carolina School of the arts is part of the University of North Carolina, established in 1963 to train students for careers in the performing arts. The school presently enrolls more than 700 high school, college and graduate students from 41 states and 11 foreign countries.

'HATS' At NCSU

RALEIGH — "HATS" — a Tribute to Harriet Tubman, will be performed at 8 p.m. Wednesday at Center Stage, North Carolina State University, Raleigh.

The play's presentation is part of NCSU's Black Artist Series being held in Stewart Theater on campus.

The series will also offer two other performances in February related to Black Month activities. The Joseph Holmes Dance Theater will perform Feb. 4. On Feb. 7, the Broadway musical, "Don't Bother Me, I Can't Cope" will be presented by the N.C. Black Repertory Company.

Tickets for the "HATS" performance are $13 and can be purchased from the box office, 737-3104.

Duke Programs

DURHAM — The Ciompi Quartet, Duke University's resident string quartet, will present a program of contemporary music as part of the Instiutute of the Arts' third annual Winterfest of Contemporary Works on Saturday.

The program, which will take place at 8:15 p.m. in the Nelson Music Room, located in the East Duke Building on Duke's east campus, is free and open to the public.

As a prelude to its concert, on Tuesday the Quartet will give a free, informal 45-minute program introducing two of the works on the concert program and will discuss the approach to contemporary music in general. This program will be at 7 p.m. in the Von Canon Room B on the lower level of the Bryan Center on Duke's west campus.

For more details about this and other Winterfest programs, call 684-6654.

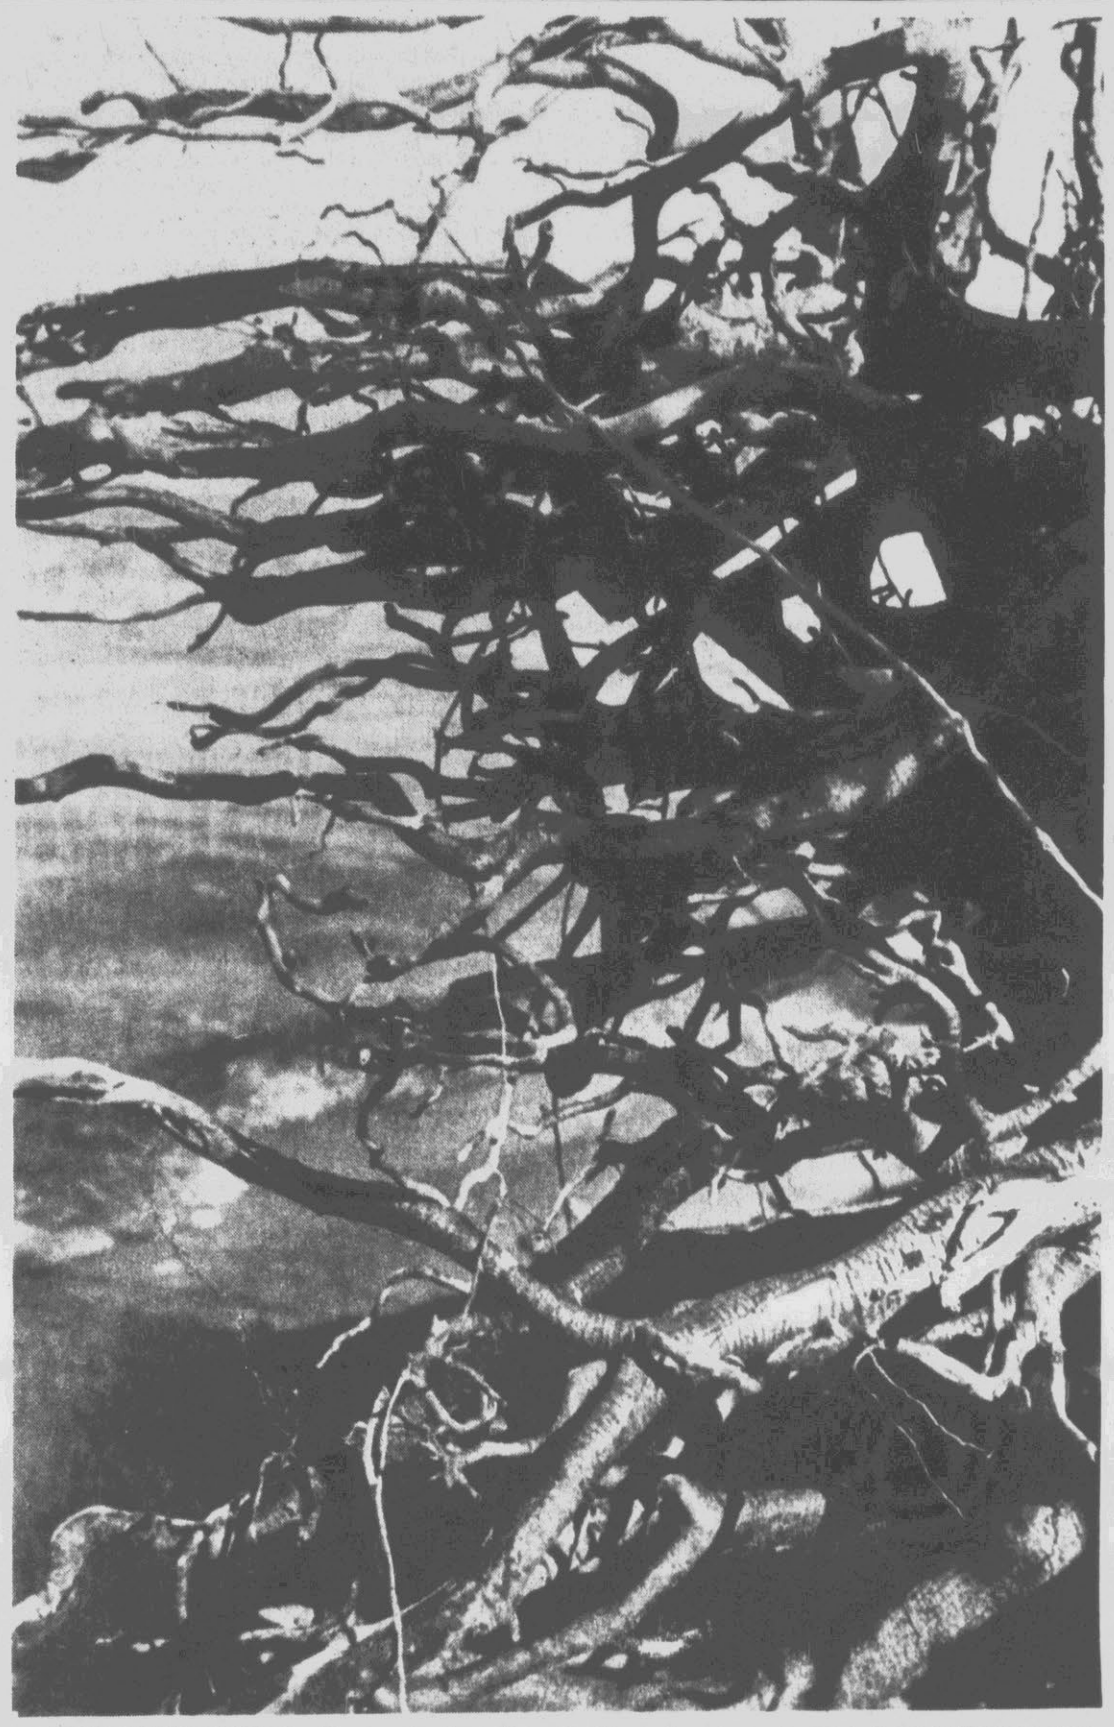
SALVAGE EFFORTS — Where large trees suitable for timber have been endangered by water washing beneath roots, property owners have cut the trees. Such action also reduces the likelihood of the trees being uprooted in a storm which in turn would further destabilize the shoreline's soil.



ONE THAT WAS TOPPLED — The massive formation of the roots of a large tree is dramatically displayed when the tree was toppled during a storm after the soil underlying the root system was washed away. The tree once stood several yards from the waterline along a small sandy beach that has eroded away.

Shores of rivers, bays, sounds and ocean are fragile

North Carolina's Changing Shorelines

Text And Photographs By Jerry Raynor

North Carolina, with 3,375 miles of shoreline, ranks fifth in the nation — after Louisiana, Florida, Maine and California — in the mileage of land fronting waters of coastal and near coastal bodies of waters — rivers, bays, sounds and ocean.

Maine and California, with much of their coastlines and shorelines washing against formations of more stable cliffs and rocks, do not suffer the easy erosion common to North Carolina, Florida, Louisiana and other coastal states whose coastal lands are primarily flat, sandy of swamp lands, easily carved and changed by any strong force of wind and water.

North Carolina is particularly vulnerable to the changes wrought by ever-shifting tides, winds, and storms since much of the land along the shores is at sea level or only a very few feet higher and is very fragile.

Occasionally, changes in shoreline or coastal (ocean front) areas are dramatic; changes that alter the landscape to the extent that property damage is extensive and lives endangered. The most recent disturbance of this magnitude on the North Carolina coast was on New Year's Day this year. The destructive onslaught of water battering low-lying land occurred as the storm hit Topsail Beach and other communities facing the ocean. It was feared the damage would have been much worse as the storm was due to coincide with exceptional high tides generated by a rare alingment of the earth, mood and stars — however, the storm arrived sufficiently ahead of the high tides to prevent a double combination of destructive power.

More often, changes wrought by the forces of nature are more subtle — the loss of a small strip of beach following a hurricane or a local powerful storm sweeping across water; the undermining of shoreside trees following such a storm and later weakened by the constant pressure of wave action, or a change in water levels caused by heavy rainfall that creates flood conditions affecting smaller bodies of water such as coastal rivers.

On this page is photographic evidence of shore changes of a less dramatic order — the kind that relentlessly takes place in hundreds of isolated stretches of shore. The photographs shown here were taken on the south shore of te Albemarle Sound at a point near the village of Mackeys in Washington County.

Some years ago, the area pictured enclosed a small, smooth beach several hundred yards in length. Then, several years ago a strong storm washed away the sand and undermined the roots of trees located at the time several feet above the waterline. Today, waves generated by storms eat a little deeper beneath the roots of the trees, which eventually topple. Some endangered larger trees have been cut — for two practical purposes; to salvage good timber trees and to lessen the possibility of trees being uprooted due to their top-heavy weight when undermined.

Any traveler who returns periodically to shorelines of eastern North Carolina rivers and sounds will discover that the face of a landscape may have been altered since a last visit. Such changes are the handiwork of nature created by the forces of wind and water where land and water meet.

Dalmatians Dominate The Louisiana Oyster Scene

CULLS OYSTERS — Kuzma Petrovich culls oysters he has just dredged up from his leased oyster beds in the Gulf of Mexico. As oystermen have been doing for 150 years, Petrovich immigrated to the Mississippi Delta from the Dalmation coast of Yugoslavia. Prospects for a good harvest were poor this winter, so most Louisiana oystermen sailed to the Texas coast. Petrovich is one of a few who will trust in a local harvest. (Photo by Kenneth C. Danforth, National Geographic Society)

BY KENNETH C. DANFORTH
National Geographic News Service

EMPIRE, La. — Hurricane Betsy, in 1965, and Camille, four years later, each left three feet of water in Kuzma Petrovich's house. He and his family weren't there. They were riding out the storms in Danica, his oyster boat.

Now he has a boat named Sometimes. "Sometimes she goes out, sometimes she doesn't," he says.

In spite of the leisurely approach to oystering that Sometimes implies, Petrovich is a worker of gargantuan energies. He tears oysters from the shallow reefs of the Gulf of Mexico. "I've been 'erstering' steady since 1955," he says.

A Flat Horizon

Kuzma Petrovich is one of a large tribe of Dalmatians who, in their hearts, have never really left their native villages on the Adriatic coast of Yugoslavia. Dalmatian oystermen have been going back and forth between the Mississippi Delta and Dalmatia for more than 150 years. They often return to Louisiana with brides.

In the Adriatic, the Dinaric Alps always loomed above their boats. Here, tidewashed spartina grass and the masts of other boats are often the highest things around.

The oystermen have settled in Empire, Buras, Venice, Triumph, and other towns that crouch uneasily between twin levees that hold back the river on one side, gulf storms on the other. The towns have a tentative look, as if people don't want to spend too much on what might be washed away. Not long ago, some of the Dalmatians were still living as the first newcomers did, in camps on high stilts out in the marshes, where the abundance of the wetlands — and the cyclical violence of the winds — was at their doorsteps.

Petrovich was 14 when he first saw his father. That was when he left the village of Duba on the Peljesac Peninsula and came to Plaquemines Parish, there to learn from his father the rough, all-weather occupation that his grandfather, too, had followed.

When fishermen from the Adriatic Coast of Yugoslavia immigrated to Louisiana, they found that oysters on the east side of the delta were plentiful but insipid. They transplanted many tons of them to the west side, where nutrients and salinity were such that small, watery oysters grew big and tasty. The Dalmatians started boating huge mounds of oysters to New Orleans, creating one of the most famous oyster markets in the world. Today almost a third of the oysters sold in the United States come from Louisiana.

And the Louisiana oyster industry is still mainly a Dalmatian enterprise. Many of the oystermen are several generations removed from the first immigrants. Others came recently. All of them speak Croatian. Other ethnic groups in the delta call them Takos, a term the Dalmatians themselves use only in jest.

No Roads In Old Days

Matt j. Ficovich, now 77, immigrated when he was 16. "When I came down here we didn't have no roads, no toilets, no electricity. But that was all right. I felt at home. The whole damn parish was Slavic."

Not quite, for other ethnic groups have preceded the Slavs. But today, Slavic names ring from levee to levee, a concatenation of "ich"-ending surnames: Dancevich, Lukinovich, Matcovich, Radovich, Zibilich, Vujnovich, Marinovich. "If it don't got an 'itch,' it ain't Tako," say the Cajuns, ignoring the Baricevs, Vlahos, Dujmovs, and Crnjaks.

Having settled along the river, the oystermen still cannot settle down. Oysters are subject to a host of enemies — silting, pollution, ironjawed black drumfish, oysters borers — and the harvest is not always dependable. In late October 1986, most of the area's oystermen decided they could do better in Texas waters. They said goodbye to their wives and children and started off on the 50-hour trip to the western gulf.

"We have to go to Texas to survive," says John A. Tesvich, president of the Plaquemines Oyster Association. "It's been an off year. I could name you 200 boats that'll be leaving here tomorrow."

Tesvich says the main problem is water quality. "Oysters need a brackish enviroment," he says. "Right now the water is too salty. The Mississippi has been low for several years, so there's not enough fresh water flowing out into the delta. The oysters won't spat." Tesvich's own harvest is down about 40 percent, he says.

Kuzma Petrovich has taken his boat to Texas three times in 20 years. This year he's staying in home waters. "You can still do good if you work hard," he says. And he likes to be in Empire every night: "The kids are the anchor of the ship."

Patrols Oyster Lease

So, on a warm dawn in late autumn, Petrovich wearily boards the steel barge he uses to patrol the oyster reef he leases from the state. He has been out too late at a rally for Bartol Taliancich, a parish candidate opposed to pollution and coastal erosion. Today he is going out to survey his boundaries and mark them with white plastic pipes.

"I was a 'cooner' for the first six years," he says. A cooner works in shallow water with tongs, and gets his sobriquet from the similarity of his methods with those of a racoon. "I used to tong 200 sacks a day." Some cooners gather oysters without tongs, standing waist deep, groping, wrenching oysters from the reefs with gloved hands.

N.C. Wine Industry's Future Brighter

By TOM MINEHART
Associated Press Writer

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — North Carolina's wine and grape industry, which led the nation before the Civil War but soured in the 1970s and '80s, is sparkling again and looking forward to some good years.

"There seems to be a new outlook and hope," said Jeff Morton, grape marketing specialist for the state Department of Agriculture. "It had gotten down pretty dismal until last year."

North Carolina wines, particularly those made from native scuppernong grapes, were the best-selling wines in the United States before the Civil War. But after the South lost the war, former rebels were not allowed to own wineries, said David Fussell, president of Duplin Wine Cellars in Rose Hill.

By the early 1970s, the state's grape industry had revived to an extent. There were more than 2,500 acres of grapes and 250 growers selling mostly to out-of-state wineries.

Growers were getting more than $300 per ton for their crop until a worldwide glut of grapes plunged prices to about $150 within five years, said Gerald Simmons, president of the North Carolina Grape Growers association. All but about 50 growers went out of business, leaving only 450 acres of muscadine grapes, the native type that includes scuppernong.

In 1986, Duplin and two affiliated North Carolina wineries got together to give the 50 remaining growers a higher price — more than $225 per ton. Although growers own 51 percent of Duplin, the decision to pay more than the going rate of $175 was not solely for their benefit.

"It was primarily a self-preservation thing," said Simmons. "They (the wineries) saw the decline in acreage ... and if they wanted our kind of grapes in the future, they saw they would have to pay more money to keep us in production."

Fussell said the growing production of North Carolina wineries enabled them to buy 90 percent of the 900-ton state crop in 1986.

"We could have used a lot more than we bought last year," he said.

With a 500,000-gallon storage capacity, Duplin is the state's largest winery, he said. It is affiliated with Carolina Winery in Rose Hill, with storage of 300,000 gallons, and with Southland Estate Winery, which is scheduled to open next spring near Selma along Interstate 95 with a capacity of 100,000 gallons.

Other North Carolina wineries make wines from European or hybrid grapes. The Biltmore Estates Winery in Asheville opened in May 1985 with an 85,000-gallon capacity, said Morton. In addition, there are smaller wineries in Germantown, Fayetteville and Hickory.

Morton said that with 500,000 gallons produced a year, wine is a $10-million industry in North Carolina, making the state ninth in the nation in wine production.

It could be even better, said Fussell.

"The big (U.S.) wineries will not allow competition from smaller companies like ourselves," he said. "They try to block us from getting to the shelves, and they're very influential. ... Small wineries have a difficult time unless there's a grocery manager who is actively and conscientiously supporting them."

Wine grapes could be a replacement crop for tobacco farmers because both crops thrive in the same types of soil and climate.

"But it takes a special breed of farmer to grow grapes," Fussell said. "They call it a gentleman's game — you must treat the vineyard as a lady. And they say the shadow of the owner is the best fertilizer."

Simmons said it costs growers about $3,000 per acre to set vines and grow grapes until they're three years old. The vines aren't in full production for another three years, he said.

Growers also are experimenting with a new market: grape juice and non-alcoholic champagne. Simmons said people lined up at the North Carolina State Fair in October to get samples of an experimental scuppernong juice, which he said could capture 3 percent of the market.

But Fussell yearns for the day when wine connoisseurs all over the world will once again rave about the fruity bouquet of wines made from scuppernong, which means "sweet tree" in the Algonquin Indian language and which grows only in the South.

"For 50 years, the French have been advertising that they're the only ones who can make good wines, and we were gullible enough to believe it," he said. "Then California came along, and people thought that the only good wine came from California or Europe.

"But you've got to have an open mind," he said. "If we would specialize in that grape, rather than try to copy New York and California ... with God's blessing, I think there would be a good future for the grape industry in this state."

Travel By Turks Barred By Denial Of Passports

By ZEYNEP ALEMDAR
Associated Press Writer

ANKARA, Turkey (AP) — Ali Taygun, a Turkish stage director and Yale School of Drama graduate, has been waiting for months for a passport so he can direct a play on the American stage.

Rubi Su, one of Turkey's most prominent musicians, was prevented from going abroad for medical treatment before dying of cancer a year ago.

Taygun, Su and thousands of other artists and intellectuals have not been able to leave their country to perform, work or visit abroad under Turkey's restrictive travel policies.

Some 300,000 Turks are denied travel rights, according to the leftist weekly Yeni Gundem. Turkey's chief of police, Saffet Arikan Beduk, said the figure was exaggerated, but he declined to give the exact number of Turks barred from foreign travel.

Taygun, who spent three years in jail for membership in the Turkish Peace Association, a pacifist group, says the American Repertory Theater in Cambridge, Mass., asked him to direct a play, but "being aware of my situation, sent an open invitation."

The Turkish constitution lists travel and freedom of movement as a fundamental human right. But it also says the right can be restricted during a criminal investigation or prosecution, or for prevention of a crime.

Following Turkey's 1980 military takeover, travel was further restricted when the law was modified to say that people whose trips abroad were considered harmful to the country's general security should not be issued passports.

"We are being punished for an unknown, unspecific crime," said Genco Erkal, another famous stage director and actor without a passport.

Turkish military and civilian authorities pride themselves on what they call a quick and smooth return to democracy after three years of military rule ending in 1983.

The foreign travel ban remains an embarrassing contradiction to this claim at a time when Turkey is preparing for full membership in the Common Market.

In an apparent attempt to improve Turkey's image in the West, the government last year empowered Premier Turgut Ozal to allow those who face trial but are not under arrest to travel abroad.

Another prominent leftist figure, Istanbul Bar Association Chairman Orhan Apaydin, died the day Ozal used his new power for the first time — to release him for medical treatment.

"A gesture that came too late," lamented an editorial in the prestigious leftist daily Cumhuriyet.

Since then, Ozal has rarely invoked his authority to grant passports.

Recently, Abdullah Basturk, former chairman of a banned leftist labor union, was allowed to go abroad for three months to attend a labor meeting.

Political observers viewed the gesture as an attempt to champion freedom of travel at a time when Turkey was demanding that the EEC allow Turkish workers freedom of movement within EEC-member countries.

"What about our right of free movement? First of all Turkey itself should grant this freedom to its own citizens," said Turgut Kazan, a lawyer who has been refused a passport.

Relatives of those who fled the country after the 1980 military coup report difficulties in getting passports.

Studies Efforts To Save Eroding Louisiana Shores

CODRIE, La. (AP) — A $14-million research center rising from the marshes of southernmost bayou country represents a new commitment to save a neglected coastline and keep Louisiana from washing away.

The new center is operated by the Louisiana Universities Marine Consortium, a state-created organization that draws on the knowledge and expertise of researchers from Louisiana's 13 public universities.

The center exists partly to save fish and wildlife from pollution and the subtle changes in the environment caused not only by man but by nature herself.

But consortium executive director Don Boesch said the center primarily is concerned with the disappearance of the state's marshy coast.

"It is certainly not the only issue we work on, but it kind of pervades the other work," Boesch said.

Some experts say as much as 60 square miles of the state's coast disintegrates each year.

It isn't just erosion by the Gulf of Mexico, Boesch said. Natural forces break up the marshes from within. Unfortunately, he added, man has accelerated the process by building in the marsh and changing the natural flow of water and drainage there.

"A marsh survives by building up sediment from within," he said. But the change in flow of water and sediment has hastened the breakup and slowed the marsh's natural regenerating process.

"We have a delicate environment," Boesch explained. "It is easily thrown out of balance."

To keep track of the marshes' health, researchers from the various universities join the four full-time consortium researchers to measure water levels, chart the flow of water, study sediment deposits and analyze the information they obtain.

And the work has just begun. The building still is mostly empty.

"We're still actually struggling with actual completion of the building. ... We hope to have it all completed by the end of the year," Boesch said.

He said the new center should change Louisiana's tendency to neglect the coast that provides much of its bounty, including offshore oil and seafood.

"Historically, we've let things happen here without really expecting anything in return," Boesch said. "Now I think you have a new generation of environmental leadership in the state, and they're trying to change that and bring the message home that we have some serious problems."

Awareness started growing in 1979 when legislators authorized construction of the center.

Although Louisiana has more coastal wetlands than any other state, produces more than 90 percent of the nation's offshore oil and gas and accounts for more than one-fourth of the nation's total commercial fishing catch, it was the only coastal state without a modern, university-run marine laboratory.

Louisiana also had been ignored by researchers, who can infuse a study program with millions of dollars in federal grant money. Boesch estimated that studies of the Texas-Louisiana coast have received only about 3 percent of the $400 million in federal marine-research money granted nationwide since 1974.

The consortium will concentrate its efforts on four areas of research in addition to studying coastal changes. They are:

— Biological productivity research to determine what marsh conditions are ideal for reproduction of aquatic species.

— Research into the effects of oil and gas development on the coastal environment.

— Research into the relationship between the Mississippi River and the Gulf of Mexico.

Lottery Wanes

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The school district's share of state lottery proceeds has fallen from $30 million in the first three months of the game to $12 million in the quarter ending in September.

"It is no joy to say, 'I told you so,'" said Board of Education President Rita Walters. "Every new game is supposed to bring sales back up, but they don't. The bloom is off the rose."

The amount the Los Angeles Unified School District receives is dependent on the number of lottery tickers sold.

Opulent Homes Of The South

By ELLIOTT MINOR
Associated Press Writer

THOMASVILLE, Ga. (AP) - An ornate house built more than a century ago for a Chicago merchant symbolizes the prosperity that arrived in Thomasville with the migration of wealthy northerners trying to escape harsh winters.

The Lapham-Patterson house, restored by the state and opened to the public in 1974, was among 50 "winter cottages" built in the area during the late 19th century.

Northerners began flocking to Thomasville about 1870 to avoid freezing temperatures and to breathe its pine-scented air, which was reputed to have curative powers. The town was billed as a "winter resort for northern invalids and pleasure seekers."

Many of the Victorian-style homes built by the winter guests have been preserved or restored, providing a glimpse into the city's opulent past.

Thomasville also has 71 plantations located south of town on a band of fertile soil known as the Red Hills. Many have been around since before the Civil War, but some were built in the early 20th century to satisfy the whims of rich northern industralists.

The plantations, occupying about 300,000 acres in south Georgia and north Florida, remain a haven for millionaires such as Atlanta television tycoon Ted Turner and Rankin Smith, owner of the Atlanta Falcons, who own homes there.

Tom Hill, director of the Thomas County Historical Society Museum and Archives, said Thomasville was a major resort from 1870 until about 1905. The millions of dollars generated annually by the tourist industry made the town prosper while the rest of the South was mired in the poverty of Reconstruction.

"We were willing to forgive and forget at least three months a year," joked Hill, noting that Thomasville lost 500 young men during the Civil War.

The influx of tourists boosted the town's population from 5,500 in the summer to 12,000 to 15,000 in the winter. To accommodate the visitors, entrepreneurs opened 25 boarding houses and 15 hotels, including the elegant Mitchell House and Piney Woods.

Some of the nation's wealthiest families paid $11 a night, the equivalent of a skilled craftsman's wages for one week, to rent suites at the two grand hotels.

The town also had two colleges, including Young's Female College, an opera house where some of the greatest entertainers of the period gave performances and an outstanding school for blacks.

Charles W. Lapham, who owned several shoe stores in the Chicago area, hired Danish-born architect Tudor Rommerdall to create one of the most fanciful of the winter cottages built during Thomasville's heyday as a winter resort.

Lapham's health had been damaged by the Great Chicago Fire of 1871, so he spent his winters in Thomasville trying to restore his vigor. He and his wife, Emma, moved into the house in 1885.

Rommerdall combined elements of Queen Anne, Moorish and other architectural styles popular at the time in the three-story house. It has fish-scale shingles, oriental-style porch decorations and a double-flue chimney through which the stairway passes. There are balconies or porches at each level, with doors leading to the outside from many of the rooms.

Lapham's collection of wild birds, squirrels and baby alligators led to the creation of a large community park on the outskirts of town that later became one of the nation's earliest country clubs.

When the Laphams left Thomasville in 1894, they sold the house to James Larmon, who died six months later. His widow sold it to James G. Patterson of Whiteville, N.C., in 1905. Patterson established a naval store company and used the house as a year-round residence.

One of his daughters inherited the house, but moved to Florida and left it unattended. It deteriorated until 1970 when the city purchased it and deeded it to the state the following year. In 1975, the house was designated a National Historic Landmark by the U.S. Department of Interior.

Hill said Thomasville's tourist industry went bust almost overnight, after scientists conquored the maleria and yellow fever that had made southern Florida a dangerous vacation spot.

"We could not compete temperature-wise with Miami," he said, noting that the Piney Woods burned mysteriously shortly after the tourists began trekking to Florida.

The Southwest Georgia Tourism Association is focusing on Thomasville's many historic attractions in an effort to lure tourists back.

Visitors can tour the Lapham-Patterson house and the Pebble Hill Plantation or rent a room at the antebellum Susina Plantation.

"We would welcome a few tourists to come look at us," said Hill.

Appalachia Folk School

By KRISTI UMBREIT
Associated Press Writer

NEW MARKET, Tenn. (AP) — The turbulent years of night riders and raids behind it, an unconventional folk school now works more quietly to make life better for Appalachia's poor.

The Highlander Research and Education Center, three rustic buildings overlooking the Smoky Mountains, is focusing on rural community problems that crept up while attention was fixed on dramatic issues of workers' and civil rights, says the school's director.

"There were times in the past when there was a much clearer focus in the public's perception of the problems, certainly in the '30s and '40s in terms of labor and the '50s and '60s in civil rights," Hubert Sapp, director of the 54-year-old center, said in a recent interview.

"Many of the issues today are just as serious but aren't the kinds of things that get in the headlines," he said. "We're quite busy. We don't see a slackening in the amount of work and effort. This is just a different period of time."

In its heyday, Highlander was a haven for people like Martin Luther King Jr., Rosa Parks and Pete Seeger to speak, learn and sing of people's basic rights.

Now the adult school, which sits on a 104-acre farm, provides a library, a meeting room filled with rocking chairs, literature and other resources for people tackling illiteracy, pollution and poverty in the rural South's forgotten pockets.

The school has 14 staff members who coordinate 30 workshops a year that also focus on job hazards, such as black lung, and ways to hang onto mountain heritage despite influences from outside the area.

The center raises its annual $500,000 budget mainly through donations from foundations and churches, Sapp said.

In addition, its small farming operations bring in some money. The center raises cattle and sometimes sells its alfalfa crop or rents out its barn for tobacco drying, he said.

The adult schooling has few formal lectures or teachers and does not hand out diplomas, but evidence of learning is seen in other ways, says Sapp.

At Yellow Creek in Kentucky, for example, rural residents have fought against pollution of their water by the Middlesboro Tanning Co., and recently the city announced plans to upgrade its waste water plant to handle the waste, Sapp said.

There still is activism these years, but it's less obvious, he said.

Protest songs still are written and sung, with coal miners' black lung disease as one theme, but the civil disobedience and big rallies of past decades have been replaced by videotaping information and toxic waste seminars.

Still, says 81-year-old Myles Horton, who started the school in 1932, there are remnants of the old issues.

"There are a lot of problems still hanging over civil rights. We still have discrimination, and those laws that resulted from the movement are being weakened by lack of practice," said Horton, a lanky, bearded man who says he is semi-retired from the school.

"The labor movement is weakened too. Now they actually negotiate wage cuts," he said.

Horton started the school in Monteagle, Tenn., near Chattanooga, to teach grassroots groups how to change society for the downtrodden, and it quickly became a spot for union members to learn how to organize.

In the 1950s and 60s, the center's focus on civil rights made it a target for attacks.

In the 1950s, following a visit by King, his likeness was dotted across the South on billboards that proclaimed he was attending a "communist training school."

In 1959, police raided and closed it for violating state segregation laws — the meetings were racially mixed — and while it was vacant, night riders burned it, says Horton, who believes the burnings were financed by coal operators and the Ku Klux Klan.

Horton got a new charter and reopened the Highlander in 1961 at an old house in Knoxville, which was later condemned.

Finally, he found this hilltop home, and the school returned to its mission, the education and support of people who agitate for reform.

"We're located in Appalachia and the edge of the deep South, the poorest parts of the United States," said Horton.

"A lot of Highlander's work is reform-type things — making life a little better for people," he said.

RECOMMENDATIONS FOR CHANGE

BARTLESVILLE, Okla. (AP) — Many car makers recommend an oil change every 7,500 miles.

But, according to Phillips 66, mileage limits are only one factor in oil change recommendations or in selecting the right oil to meet an engine's requirements.

An engine takes in 9,000 gallons of air for every gallon of gasoline used. This air is never free from abrasive dust despite air filtering.

Flourishing Replacement China Business Has Owner Smiling

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

When he was an auditor for the state of North Carolina, nobody was glad to see Bob Page.

Now that he sells old dishes and glasses for a living, he's welcome wherever he goes. And, adds the 41-year-old Greensboro, N.C., resident, he is much happier too.

"I'm having so much fun I sometimes have to stop and think about what day of the week it is," he said recently at his Replacements Ltd. warehouse in Greensboro where about half a million individual pieces are stored.

The reason behind Page's happiness is that the company he founded in 1981 to sell replacement china and crystal now has annual sales of more than $5 million.

In 1986, Page was named North Carolina's small businessman of the year by the U.S. Small Business Administration and Inc. Magazine put the company 81st in a list of the 500 fastest growing small businesses in the United States in its December issue.

Page, who is a certified public accountant, credits his business success to his training in financial management and organization. He has about 250,000 customers from all across the country on file and a list of about 1,500 antique dealers and other suppliers.

When he began his business, he listed his customers and the patterns and pieces they sought on index cards that were stored in a recipe box. He recorded his inventory in notebooks and kept the stock in his attic.

Today, a computer handles the voluminous records and employees use 35 terminals to fill orders. The company is currently packing up its 500,000 pieces of china and crystal to move from a 17,000-square-foot building to a new 40,000-square-foot space nearby.

The move is necessary since inventory is constantly growing. Each week, 3,000 to 4,000 pieces of china arrive and the company ships about 4,000 orders a month. The average order is about $150. Prices are based on supply and demand. Most of the stock is discontinued patterns but if the pattern is still in production, prices typically are about a third less than the maker's list.

Page, who does most of the pattern identification himself, may know more about 20th-century china and crystal than anyone else. Besides his own visual memory which he describes as "pretty fair," he has a number of reference books and pamphlets to help. If the customer doesn't know the name of the pattern, the firm can usually identify it from a picture.

"If it is a china pattern, we ask them to copy the front and back of a flat piece and indicate the colors, unless they have access to a color copy machine." There is no charge for the service.

For crystal, which virtually never has the pattern name on it, clients are asked to make a pencil rubbing of the design and to sketch the bowl and stem. "We have been able to identify thousands of crystal patterns using this method," he said.

Replacements Ltd. gets most of its merchandise from antique dealers and individuals and publishes a catalog of its wants and the prices the company is prepared to pay every two months. The firm is open to buy more than 15,000 patterns at present and adds several hundred new patterns in each catalog. They rarely take anything out of the catalog.

Sellers of china or crystal receive a check for half of the merchandise. The other half is sent after the pieces have been received and inspected.

Castleton China's "Sunnyvale," a romantic floral pattern which was probably made from the 1940s through 1972 when the firm ceased operation, is the most requested pattern. There are 1,200 customers for it. But, Page says that "there is no rhyme or reason" to the types of patterns in demand. "Most customers are filling in with replacement pieces or adding to place settings."

Nevertheless, there are some large orders. "Yesterday, a customer ordered $2,300 in one pattern." Others have ordered 48 place settings at a time, mostly because they have three or four children and want to leave a set to each child.

About 75 percent of the company's business is in china, possibly because crystal is more fragile. "After 30 or 40 years it is more economical to start a new set. Since it is much harder to identify, people may not even try," he speculated.

Page began his business as a sideline to his regular job. He spent weekends at estate sales and flea markets buying pieces to resell later.

"Soon people were asking me to be on the lookout for particular patterns to replace pieces that had been broken or lost," he recalled.

Eventually, his inventory began to overcrowd his attic. Furthermore, he was spending more time on his side business than his main job. "I would be up filling orders until one or two in the morning." And so, although "all my friends and family thought I was crazy," he quit his job and hired a student assistant and began to build his business. "There was a demand and nobody else was doing it," he concluded.

Housing Starts Data Misleading, Researchers Say

By BILL McCLOSKEY
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Housing starts, one of the key indicators of the nation's economic health, understate the amount of available new homes by as much as a third, private real estate researchers say, because of the new housing it doesn't count.

Although the Census Bureau which gathers the data and building supply companies which use it defend the number as a valuable economic indicator, all agree with the researchers who point out it leaves uncounted new homes created by a trend to rehabilitation of sturdy older buildings

"Each year we add between 400 thousand and 500 thousand units to the housing stock through rehabilitation, which creates new units," says Lewis Bolan, vice president of the Real Estate Research Corp.

"To be considered a new housing start a unit must have new foundations and new footings," he told reporters at a news conference releasing the group's annual "Emerging Trends in Real Estate."

"I mean converting a warehouse or a factory or loft building into residential units or chopping up a large house into apartments or adding an accessory apartment into an existing dwelling unit."

Although Census Bureau housing start figures show home construction in a slump, says Bolan, "the situation is not nearly as dire with respect to the number of new housing units created as the statistics themselves would indicate."

The research report says "most of the uncounted units are moderately priced. Because they are in existing structures, they are concentrated in older suburbs and central cities across the country."

In Alexandria, Va., a church has become apartments. Elsewhere, abandoned railroad stations and retired gasoline filling stations have been rebuilt as homes. Many communities are changing zoning laws to allow creation of "granny flats," separate apartments in the basement of an existing home.

Inland Architect magazine noted the trend toward re-using sturdy old buildings for housing in an article titled Born Again Buildings.

The former Chicago Old Town headquarters of the Dr. Scholl Company, manufacturer of products for the feet, has been transformed into Cobbler Square, a housing complex that includes 293 loft-style apartments.

Such projects have become attractive to builders because of the availability of federal urban development money and tax advantages for rehabilitating old buildings and preserving historic structures.

Milwaukee boasts several former factory buildings, including an old hosiery plant, now used as residential units.

In Indianapolis, the Lockerbie Glove Co. factory, a few blocks from the city's central business district, has become condominiums and townhouses.

Garden Clinic

Q. Is it best to plant onion seeds, onion plant or onion sets in the garden?

A. Onion sets are the easiest to handle and develop quickly for green onions as well as onions for winter storage. Onion plants are slower to develop but also produce good crops. Plants are usually used for growing the Bermuda and Spanish type onions. Seed for onions may be started early in cold frames or in the garden and thinned. They are suitable for green onions in early summer. But usually hot weather arrives, and long day lengths stop growth before large onions can develop.

Q. Are miniature roses winter hardy in North Carolina? I received one for Christmas.

A. Miniature roses are winter hardy in North Carolina. However, since your miniature rose has been growing in the warm indoors, wait until spring before planting it outside.

Q. Does horseradish need protection in the winter?

A. Horseradish can withstand winter's worst and grow quite well again in the spring. However, most commercial growers dig the roots each fall and store them over winter in a cool, dry place. North Carolina gardeners don't need to worry with this.

Q. Do I need to continue putting out seed for birds throughout winter?

A. You need to continue once the birds begin depending on an extra source of feed. A feeder will also draw other birds into the area. There may not be enough food in the area for these additional birds if you discontinue.

For answers to your gardening questions, contact your county agricultural extension service.

Roof Inspections Can Help Pinpoint Trouble Locations

By The Associated Press

Home owners can help prolong the life of a roof by taking the time and trouble to look for problem areas, according to construction experts, who say roof damage often can be minimized if these areas are spotted in the early stages.

A thorough roof inspection, especially in the fall and spring, is the most effective way to discover trouble areas.

Start your inspection indoors by looking for signs of interior water damage. Cracked paint, flaking plaster, peeling wallpaper or discolored plasterboard near the wall and ceiling joints indicate water leakage.

After a hard rain, go up to the attic and use a flashlight to examine the roof sheathing and rafters for wet, darkened or stained wood. In severe cases, the wood itself may be deteriorating.

Conduct an outdoor, ground-level visual inspection of the roof. Look for cracked, warped, frayed or missing shingles. Check for signs of aging and wear, such as shingle blistering or curling. If you live in a multistoried home, you may want to use binoculars to conduct your inspection.

Look for excessive wear in the valleys, where two sloping roof sections join at an angle. Water runs off toward and along the valley joint. Because water flows heavily down the valleys, they are especially vulnerable to leakage.

Anyone who goes on the roof should wear rubber-soled shoes to avoid slipping and use a firmly braced or tied-off ladder equipped with rubber safety feet. But keep in mind that each footstep on the roof loosens shingle surface granules, diminishing their waterproofing effectiveness.

In addition, serious injuries can result from falling off or through a badly damaged roof. It is best to leave this type of inspection (especially for steep roofs) to a professional roofer.

Another way to prolong roof life is to clean the gutters and downspouts regularly. Remove leaves and other debris that can cause rainwater to back up underneath the surface of the roof, damaging the shingles and underlying structure. If possible, remove the downspout elbow joints for periodic cleaning.

A small piece of window screen or chicken wire mesh, fastened to the gutter over the downspout hole, helps prevent leaves from clogging the downspouts.

In snowbelt areas, winter snows and ice can block gutters, especially if the gutter already is clogged with leaves and other debris. As ice and snow melt, water may back up under shingles.

For shingle or wood shake roofs, look for protruding nails on the roof surface. These should be tapped back flush with the shingle level, but not so far as to allow the nail heads to penetrate the roofing material.

If you have a slate or tile roof, check for cracked, missing or loose pieces of roofing material. These should be securely fastened or replaced.

On flat roofs, look for bare spots in the gravel surface. Also check for ponding (large pools of water that don't drain off quickly after a rain).

The National Roofing Contractors Association points out that regular maintenance inspections are important if your roof is 10-15 years old and nearing the end of its warranty period. It is a good idea to check your current warranty before contracting for repair work. Find out what kinds of problems are covered and be sure to check the disclaimer so that you do not void the warranty with unauthorized work.

If you think your roof needs repair or replacement, have it checked by a professional roofing contractor.

Ask the roofing contractor to determine the number of roofing material layers already on the home. Local building codes dictate the maximum number of layers allowed, but be aware that multiple roofing layers (more than three) can put excessive stress on the roof supports, lead to water damage or cause shingles to warp or curl.

Discuss roofing shingle colors with the roofing contractor so that the color you choose is compatible with the colors of the home and those in the surrounding area. Keep in mind that lighter roof tones will help a smaller house look larger. White shingles have the added benefit of reflecting sunlight, which helps reduce the amount of heat that the roof absorbs during the summer months.

A roof can be a homeowner's most expensive purchase, next to the price of the house itself. By taking a little time to look for problem areas before they cause trouble, you can help your roof wear better and last longer.

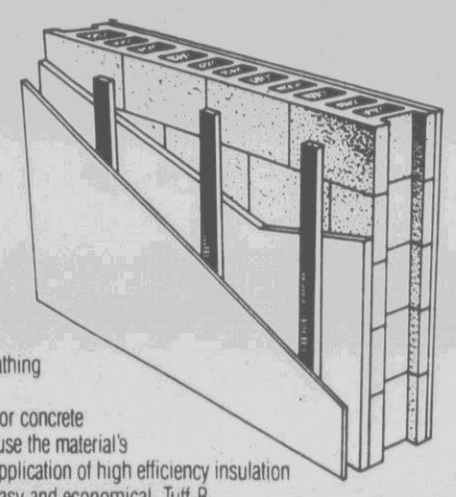
USE TUFF-R® INSULATING SHEATHING FOR ENERGY-EFFICIENT MASONRY OR CONCRETE WALL CONSTRUCTION.



Tuff-R® Insulating Sheathing by Celotex, is an ideal insulation for masonry or concrete wall construction, because the material's thin profile makes the application of high efficiency insulation easy and economical. Tuff-R Insulating Sheathing is lightweight, easy to cut and can be applied on the interior or exterior of the wall. Inch for inch, no other insulating sheathing gives greater energy efficiency than Tuff-R. And Tuff-R is supported by the prestigious Good Housekeeping Seal.

CRYPTOQUIP

1-24

T X L P H W S X L L W Q W T H W B P X N K P L B P S Q P Z Z S W N K H P P S.

Yesterday's Cryptoquip: UNUSUALLY GIFTED PROSPECTOR-TURNED-CRITIC STILL PANS FOR GOLD TODAY.

Today's Cryptoquip clue: H equals B

The Cryptoquip is a simple substitution cipher in which each letter used stands for another. If you think that X equals O, it will equal O throughout the puzzle. Single letters, short words, and words using an apostrophe can give you clues to locating vowels. Solution is accomplished by trial and error.

Horoscope

From The Carroll Righter Institute

FORECAST FOR SUNDAY Jan. 25

GENERAL TENDENCIES: Today is fine for reaching out for knowledge and wisdom. Project your finest ideas and plans for the future and relax in the evening.

ARIES (March 21 to April 19): The morning is fine for planning new advancement in your career. Take it easy tonight and rest up.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): Handle some situation that means much to you and your mate. Avoid one who doesn't have your best interests at heart.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): Discuss your plans over with associates. Steer clear of one who depresses you. Try to impress bigwigs.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): Get into activities that satisfy you the most. Discuss your finest plans with associates.

LEO (July 22 to August 21): It's an ideal day for having a good time and making plans for the future. Take it easy tonight and rest.

VIRGO (August 22 to September 22): This can be a most fascinating and constructive daytime at home, but don't overwork and get depressed.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22): Be at places where you can best gain your aims. Try to be with those who can inspire you to greater heights.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21): Think about how you can add to your abundance. Get new ideas from your newspaper and advice from financiers.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21): You can easily realize some cherished aim at this time. Be with many delightful friends.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 20): A fine day to be with the one you love the most and be happy, but don't argue about anything.

AQUARIUS (January 21 to February 19): Be your gregarious self and show your friends that you are more devoted than ever now.

PISCES (February 20 to March 20): Study your worldly ambitions and plan to get civic duties handled. Get your home in better order.

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY ... he or she will be one of thos charming young persons who will want to understand views and affairs that are different than those of the home environment. Be sure to add foreign languages to the curriculum and give an opportunity to travel. The latter part of life could be spent very happily in a foreign country.

FORECAST FOR MONDAY Jan. 26

GENERAL TENDENCIES: Today your judgment and intuition aren't correct or in harmony with one another, so don't put plans into effect without due consideration.

ARIES (March 21 to April 19): Stick to whatever you have already started successfully. Don't get into new outlets now.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): Carry through with your work without making any radical changes that could spoil it.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): A change may occur in some plan for recreation, so take this gracefully. Work on your talents another day.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): A situation arises that may seem limiting, but it is actually an opportunity to get ahead faster.

LEO (July 22 to August 21): Don't be pressured into taking any changes today. Make sure you keep a promise to your mate.

VIRGO (August 22 to September 22): Do whatever you can to hvave greater harmony at home. Show consideration for the desires of kin.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22): You want to change your philosophy of life but this could be a big mistake. Show more affection for your kin.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21): You could easily do something drastic where finances are concerned. By wise instead and remain poised.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21): Do not make any radical changes because you are feelign frustrated. Remain poised and conditions changes.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 20): Don't try to get rid of a problem in too drastic a manner or matters can make themselves worse.

AQUARIUS (January 21 to February 19): You want to see many persons today, but be discriminating in your choices.

PISCES (February 20 to March 20): You want to make big headway in the business world, but be sure of your real wishes before acting.

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY ... he or she will be one of those charming your persons who is prone to act too quickly and rashly. This one should be taught to study any ideas that occur to him, or her, before taking any action. Give a good education and add foreign languages since travel is possible here.

"The Stars impel; they do not compel." What you make of your life is largely up to you!

Bridge

By CHARLES GOREN AND OMAR SHARIF

TO BID, OR NOT TO BID . . .

Neither vulnerable. West deals.

	NORTH ♠ J 9 8 ♡ A 9 6 ◇ 9 2 ♣ Q J 8 4 2
WEST ♠ Q 7 6 5 4 3 ♡ K 8 7 2 ◇ K ♣ A 3		EAST ♠ K ♡ J 10 5 3 ◇ J 10 8 4 3 ♣ 10 9 7
	SOUTH ♠ A 10 2 ♡ Q 4 ◇ A Q 7 6 5 ♣ K 6 5

The bidding:

West	North	East	South
1 ♠	Pass	Pass	Dble
Pass	2 ♣	Pass	2 NT
Pass	3 NT	Pass	Pass
Pass

Opening lead: Five of ♠

We are frequently asked our opinion of light opening bids. Their proponents argue volubly in their favor; their antagonists are just as loquacious about their drawbacks. We can only maintain that both sides are right!

Here's a case where West's light opening bid worked to his disadvantage. South decided that his hand was too good for a balancing no trump, so he doubled first and then bid no trump to show a hand equivalent to a strong no trump opening. North felt that his fifth club just made his hand worth a raise to game.

The opening spade lead was covered by the king and won with the ace. The king of clubs forced the ace, and West cleared spades by cashing the queen and leading another. Declarer cashed his four clubs, coming down to Q-x of hearts and A-Q-x of diamonds. West clung to his two spades, so was known to hold only three red cards.

No self-respecting declarer could get this one wrong. Declarer had six tricks in the bag and the two red aces still to cash, and the opening bid marked West for both missing kings. Therefore, the diamond finesse was doomed to failure. However, one of West's kings had to be bare!

Declarer did not even have to guess which king it was. He simply cashed the ace of hearts and, when the king did not appear, he continued with a diamond to the ace. That king came tumbling down, and the queen of diamonds was the ninth trick. At the table, East had discarded down to three hearts and only two diamonds, so declarer was actually rewarded with an overtrick.

Where Humans Are Interlopers

By MIKE HEMBREE
The Greenville News

AWENDAW, S.C. (AP) — In the middle of Upper Summerhouse Pond, an alligator rests in the morning heat, its eyes barely visible above the water's surface.

A white ibis, its brillant feathers a contrast to the setting's dominant green, is perched on a limb overhanging the pond. On the dike which blocks one end of the pond, an Eastern cottonmouth slithers through the tall grass by the roadway.

This is the Cape Romain National Wildlife Refuge, more specifically Bulls Island on the southern tip of the refuge's 34,229 acres. Here animals rule and humans are the interlopers.

It is a land filled with thousands of birds, reptiles and mammals, none of which seem in any great hurry to go anywhere. It is as if they understand what the term refuge is all about.

Bulls Island is a wildlife lovers' paradise. Along 16 miles of trails and dirt roads, the visitor can see a wide assortment of animal life, including more than 300 bird species. About 40 mammal species have been identified on the island, and it also is home to an unsually large number of reptiles, species generally not abundant in saltwater environments.

Alligators are plentiful. Many sun on the earthen dikes around ponds. Others float patiently in the water.

Plentiful is the Eastern cottonmouth, one of four varieties of poisonous snakes in South Carolina. A stay of any considerable length on Bulls Island is likely to produce an encounter, close or otherwise, with a water moccasin, especially in the vicinity of the 1,000 acres of freshwater ponds and marshes.

The island also hosts such individuals as the squirrel tree frog, the green tree frog, the Atlantic loggerhead turtle, the yellow-bellied turtle, the diamondback terrapin, the Eastern lizard and the banded water snake.

The list of mammals on and around the island is limited but diverse. White-tailed deer are relatively populous in the island's interior, and several varieties of squirrels can be seen among the big oak and hickory trees in the heavily wooded sections. Raccoons are seen frequently, and visitors may get a glimspe of gray and red foxes and river otters.

The biggest attraction on Bulls Island, however, are the birds. Observers come from near and as far away as Europe to see the hundreds of species that are attracted to the island's welcoming habitat areas. Many birds may be seen at any time during the year, but the fall migratory season is probably the best for viewing.

Included on the Bulls Island bird list are loon, pelicans, storks, swans, geese, vultures, osprey, eagles, falcons, quail, gulls, doves, owls, bluebirds, starlings, warbles, orioles and, perhaps the biggest and most abundant: the mosquito.

Take insect repellent, especially in the spring and summer.

"If you want to get away, to get back nature, to get to a nice, quiet place, this is it," said Donny Browning, refuge assistant manager.

"Any time of the year is really a good time to come. There will always be something to see. Late fall and early spring may be best because the bugs are not so bad then, and there's a lot of wildlife to see."

Goerge Garris, the refuge manager, said visitors can see plenty of animals, including many of the less populous species, "by being as quiet as possible and by going far back into the woods. If you're quiet and you're looking, they're out there."

Camping is not allowed on the island, except during two weeks in November and December when the island is open to deer hunters using bow and arrow. Garris said the deer hunts are designed to control the size of the herd on the island.

1987 Nissan Maxima Burgundy, automatic, loaded. 9,000 miles	$15,450	$14,995

OR LEASE FOR $279 PER MONTH

Now that we are all becoming familiar with the new tax laws and understand how we can make them work for us, the decision to lease your new car or truck has been made a lot simpler. With no more I.T.C., and only partial interest deduction to the individual, vehicle leasing has never been more advantageous. And since maximum allowable depreciation for businesses or business use has now been stretched over five years, leasing becomes an even more attractive alternative to buying your new car or truck. Leasing allows you to deduct your true cost of depreciation annually (for business use).

So you see, leasing is really in your best interest. And at LeasePro, we like to think we're looking out for your best interest. Call the Leasing Professionals today and start putting the new tax laws to work for you in any type or model vehicle you need.

THE MOST INEXPENSIVE $40,000* CAR ON THE MARKET.

Peer beneath the glimmering hood ornaments of certain age-old status symbols, and you'll unveil a car that is just that age-old.

Examine a BMW 735i and you'll find quite the reverse. For example, the most enlightened use of automotive technology in the world. A prodigious new 3.5-liter engine. And an interior that bestows on the driver every luxury good taste could require.

Which means that if the true measure of expense is not what you pay, but what you receive for what you pay, then the BMW 735i is a truly prudent investment.

See us for a most rewarding test drive. THE ULTIMATE DRIVING MACHINE.

Cypress Creek Townhomes

CYPRESS CREEK - Elegant living in quiet, peaceful surroundings and a carefree life style is what Cypress Creek Townhomes offer you. We have a custom designed two bedroom, two bath flat, that features arched doorways, custom drapes and window treatments, tile floors, custom cabinets, all masonry fireplace with stone face and hearth and a private patio with storage. You must see this one to appreciate the loving care that has gone into it's design.

LYNNDALE - Luxurious 4 bedroom executive home, built-in Jenn-Aire Microwave, security system, central vac, intercom, double garage and much, much more.

WESTHAVEN - If contemporary is your thing then here is your dream home. Solarium, jaccuzzi, beautiful wooded corner lot. Qualifies for passive solar tax credit. A must see for contemporary taste.

NEAR THE HOSPITAL - privacy and a great location are only two of the many features this home has to offer. 3 bedrooms, 1½ baths, located on a wooded lot with virtually no traffic, great for the kids.

HOMES FOR SALE

WESTHAVEN - We have two new homes getting ready to start. If you desire a quality built home at a fair price we have the right combination for you. For copies of plans and specifications contact Coldwell Banker W.G. Blount & Assoc., Realtors.

HOSPITAL AREA - Brick ranch located in quiet wooded subdivision just 5 minutes from hospital. Features 3 bedrooms, 1½ baths, carport, woodstove and much more. Owners have moved and must sell.

WHEN YOU CALL COLDWELL BANKER W.G. BLOUNT & ASSOC., REALTORS ASK US ABOUT THE SEARS HOME BUYERS SAVINGS PLAN AND OUR BEST SELLERS PLAN. YOU AND YOUR POCKETBOOK WILL BE GLAD YOU DID!

TWIN CREEKS - Beautiful Tudor exterior sets this newly constructed home apart from the rest. Country living affordably priced. A lot of TLC has gone into this one.

UNIVERSITY AREA - If you love older homes and haven't seen this one you don't know what you're missing. Lots of people say "they just don't make them like they used to," and this home proves that point. You must see to appreciate.

BRANDYWINE ESTATES - EXCELLENT VALUE is what you will receive with this beautiful 3 bedroom, 2 bath, brick ranch, located in one of the area's prettiest wooded subdivisions. The builder is willing to buy down the loan rate on the new home. A must for the family seeking a quiet location and a lot of home for the money.

MULTI FAMILY

SHERATON VILLAGE - If you have been renting and are constantly asking yourself WHAT IF...you need to talk to us. You can buy your own townhome with payments not a great deal higher than average rents in our area. With the quality and affordability of Sheraton Village combined with the builder paying up to $1,200.00 closing cost and up to 3 discount points make Sheraton Village very affordable.

CYPRESS CREEK TOWNHOMES - A combination of design and location to give you the best of both worlds, elegant living and a quiet wooded setting located in the heart of Greenville. To experience for yourself give us a call.

QUAIL RIDGE - Beautiful end unit located in one of Greenville's most popular townhome complexes. This home features a jaccuzzi, built-in microwave, window treatments, 2 bedrooms and 2½ baths. This is a lovely townhome and should be seen to appreciate.

OFFICES FOR SALE AND OR LEASE

SHERATON SQUARE - one of the areas best kept secrets! We are offering beautiful Williamsburg designed offices for sale or lease. Sheraton Square offers many elegant features such as chairrail and crown mouldings, luxurious carpet and much more. We are located directly behind the Sheraton Inn on Landmark Street. For the most attractive exterior and elegant interior and one of the easiest to find locations in Greenville you owe it to yourself to take a look at Sheraton Square Office Condos. Call Coldwell Banker W.G. Blount & Assoc., Realtors for details.

Q. What can you tell us about Bob Hoskins, who won the Best Actor award at Cannes for playing the cheap crook and driver in the film "Mona Lisa"? Is he an Englishman or an American? Married? Age?—Jill Greengold, Queens, N.Y.

Actor Bob Hoskins

A. Bob Hoskins, 44, who played a screenwriter in "Sweet Liberty" and the gangster Owney Madden in "The Cotton Club," was born in Bury St. Edmunds, 60 miles north of London. The short, squatty son of a bookkeeper and a nursery-school teacher, Hoskins hated school and quit at 15. After working at odd jobs for several years, he joined his dad as an accounting clerk. Then, sitting at the bar in London's Unity Theatre one evening, he was called on to read for the lead in a play, "Feather Pluckers." Since he found the business world insufferably dull, Hoskins decided to chance acting. He got the part and an agent, later married a drama teacher. The marriage lasted six years and produced two children—Alex, now 18, and Sarah, 13. In 1981, Hoskins met another teacher, Linda. They married and have a pair of offspring—Rosa, 3, and Jack, 1. A playwright as well as a player, Hoskins is regarded as a versatile, gifted, hard-drinking, much-in-demand character actor—in fact, one of England's finest.

Q. I see that Vice Adm. John Poindexter, who was chief adviser in the National Security Council, ranked No. 1 among the 900 graduates of the U.S. Naval Academy's Class of 1958. But what were the academic rankings at Annapolis of Lt. Col. Oliver North and his deputy, Lt. Col. Robert Earl? All three officers maintained their constitutional rights in refusing initially to testify before the Senate Intelligence Committee in the Irangate scandal.—C.S., Washington, D.C.

A. In 1968, in his class of 836 at the U.S. Naval Academy, Oliver North ranked 468th. Robert Earl ranked 24th out of 890 in 1967 and won a Rhodes Scholarship to Exeter College at Oxford.

Lucky guy: Keith Daley and girlfriend, model Mandy Smith

Q. Could you run a photo of the ravishingly beautiful model Mandy Smith, who allegedly lived with the Rolling Stones' Bill Wyman as husband and wife when he was 47 and she was only 13?—G.J., Fort Bragg, N.C.

A. Above is a photo of Mandy Smith, now 16, with new boyfriend Keith Daley, 22, a student. After investigating the alleged "husband and wife" relationship, based on a tape made by a free-lance journalist, Scotland Yard dropped the Wyman case for lack of evidence of any punishable offense.

The Pope: Not invited?

Q. Why is it that John Paul II, the most widely traveled Pope in history, has not been to Israel, birthplace of Christianity? Surely it cannot be for security or safety reasons, as he has traveled to other "hot spots" and countries where Catholics are not in the majority. Israeli officials have said the Pope would be allowed to visit and have invited him. Then why the reluctance to go?—Tom Snyder, Arlington, Tex.

A. "It may be that the Roman Catholic bishops in Israel have not yet invited the Pope to make a pastoral visit," explains a spokesman at the Vatican Embassy in Washington. "There also may be other reasons to which we are not privy."

Q. Vanna White, hostess on the "Wheel of Fortune" TV game show—what is the secret of her appeal? All she seems to do is to turn letters on a word-puzzle board. What can you tell us about her?—Laura Schaeffer, Brooklyn, N.Y.

A. Vanna White, 29, was reared in North Myrtle Beach, S.C., where her dad is in real estate. She tried her luck as a model in Atlanta in 1976, migrated to Hollywood in 1980 and later was signed by Merv Griffin for "Wheel of Fortune." Her appeal seems to be based on her normalcy, her looks and the fact that she arouses no jealousy among females in the audience. For several years, Vanna lived with John Gibson, a TV actor, but he died last May in an aircraft accident. Of late, she has been dating Billy Hufsey of TV's "Fame." Vanna is now working on an autobiography in which she'll reveal much. Basically she is a non-Hollywood type who lives in the hills of Hollywood.

Q. I understand David Eisenhower has written a big, fat, 1000-page book on his grandfather, Gen. Dwight Eisenhower. Does he tell anywhere the true story concerning his grandfather's friendship with Kay Summersby, who drove for Ike during World War II?—S.S., Corvallis, Ore.

A. In "Eisenhower: At War 1943-1945," David Eisenhower writes that Kay Summersby alleged a love affair with Ike but concludes "the truth was known only by them, and both are gone." Beyond that, he has virtually nothing to say about the so-called "Eisenhower-Summersby affair."

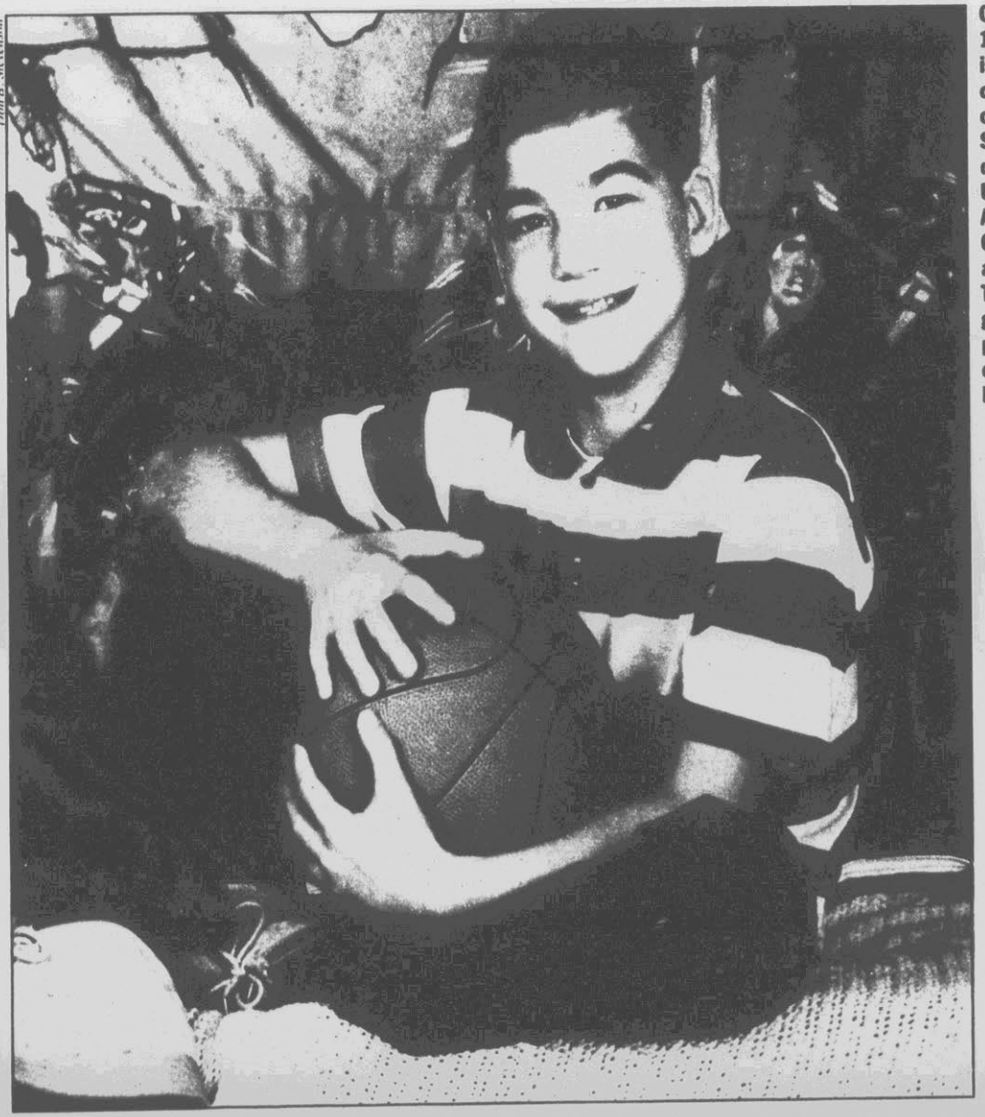
There is a desperate need for organ donors

So Others Might Live

BY DONALD ROBINSON



Don B. Stevenson

Conley Martin, 11, of Mesa, Ariz., is one of the lucky ones. He waited only two days last September before doctors at the University of Arizona Medical Center found him a new heart. Today, the sixth-grader says he plans to become an engineer when he grows up.

FIFTEEN THOUSAND PEOPLE IN THE United States needed organ transplants last year to save their lives. Fewer than one in 10 got them. There is an overwhelming need for kidneys, followed by livers, hearts and lungs, and pancreases.

Infant organs are the scarcest. "Pediatric organs are more priceless than gold," declares Brian Broznick of the Pittsburgh Transplant Foundation.

The shame is that vast numbers of human organs go to waste. Each year, 20,000 Americans who are potential donors are victims of fatal accidents. They are "brain-dead," but for a time their hearts are still beating. Only 15 percent of them become organ donors. The remainder are buried or cremated, and 100,000 transplantable organs—kidneys, hearts, livers and other body parts—are interred or cremated with them.

What is the reason for this appalling waste?

"The problem is that no one asks the victims' families for their consent for a transplant," says Dr. Thomas E. Starzl, the University of Pittsburgh surgeon who pioneered liver transplants. "The emergency-room doctors and other hospital personnel are too busy or too embarrassed. We don't work hard enough at getting transplants. As a result, thousands of people are dying who might live."

There are other problems, of course. "Transplants are very costly," Dr. Starzl points out. The charges for a heart transplant can reach $110,000; for a liver transplant, $238,000. Even a relatively simple kidney transplant can come to $30,000, and the bills don't stop after the surgery. A patient must take cyclosporine, which keeps the body from rejecting transplanted organs without destroying its ability to battle infection.

That drug and another, called prednisone, must be taken for life by the transplant recipient, says Dr. Eric Rose of Columbia-Presbyterian Medical Center in New York City. Last Oct. 16, Dr. Rose transplanted a heart into Brian MacNeill, the toddler shown on this week's cover. Brian is the son of Douglas and Rita MacNeill of North Plainfield, N.J. By late December, Mrs. MacNeill described her son, whose troubles began with a congenital heart defect, as "a typical 2-year-old." She added, "He never stops going. He's climbing, running, jumping. He eats well, he sleeps well—he must feel well."

Brian's surgery cost about $50,000, says Dr. Rose, most of which was paid for through the MacNeills' health insurance. The child was in the hospital a total of 10 weeks, and the wait for his new heart lasted about 10 days.

Most organs come from victims of auto accidents or falls. All come from donors who are brain-dead, and Rose stresses that the criteria are very strict: "If a patient can breathe on his own and has no higher function, he still is not brain-dead. Those who are declared brain-dead have no hope whatsoever of regaining any neurological function. There has never been a case of anyone declared brain-dead, by the current criteria, who has awakened."

To obtain life-saving body parts, Columbia-Presbyterian and hundreds of other medical centers around the country list their needs with the United Network for Organ Sharing of Richmond, Va. A typical listing will specify the organ required and give the waiting patient's blood type, age and weight, says Dr. Rose, adding that sex "doesn't matter." When a needed organ becomes available, Rose or another surgeon will take off from a nearby New Jersey airport in a privately contracted jet along with a "transplant coordinator" and a nurse. Rose says they may go "as far away as Dallas, often to Florida and even up to Nova Scotia."

Ideally, the time limit for transporting a heart to the waiting patient is no more than six hours, adds Rose. (The time limit varies among organs.) California, he explains, is "just a little bit out of our reach" by subsonic aircraft. Rose or the other surgeon sent to the donor hospital is likely to encounter two or three more surgeons in the operating room who are picking up kidneys or lungs or a liver; all donor parts are removed at the same time.

A heart removed for transplanting is packed in a saline solution in a Tupperware container ("because they're easy-open," says Rose) and then placed in a beer-cooler filled with slush ice. "If a heart muscle is frozen, it's destroyed," explains Rose. "The perfect temperature is like what you need for good white wine—about 4 degrees Centigrade." The team then returns to the airport and heads home to the prospective recipient, who is being readied for surgery.

Ten years ago, 80 percent of heart-transplant patients died within a year. Now 60 percent survive at least five years. The five-year survival rate for kidney transplants is well over 60 percent.

As a result, the use of transplants has increased sharply. In 1976, just 24 heart transplants, 14 liver transplants and fewer than 4000 kidney transplants were done in the United States. In 1985, 719 hearts, 602 livers and 7800 kidneys were transplanted.

Sarah Leen

The Edward Shimer family of Hainesport, N.J.: Andrea Lynn, now 17 months, got a new liver when she was only 4 months old.

Two surgeons have led the way. Dr. Norman Shumway of Stanford University made a success of heart transplants after almost every other surgeon had given up on them. Dr. Starzl did the world's first successful liver transplant in 1967. Since then, he has transplanted more than 800 livers. Kim Hudson of Polo, Ill., has lived a record 17 years with a transplanted liver. The record for a heart transplant is 16 years.

Infant organs are the scarcest. They are, says one donor advocate, "more priceless than gold."

Since transplants are no longer seen as experimental, Medicare is now considering payment for all such surgeries in approved medical centers, says Michael Batten, President Reagan's liaison with the Organ Transplantation Task Force. According to Batten, Medicare pays 80 percent of the cost of kidney transplants for all people, regardless of their age. It also covers some heart transplants for elderly and disabled people and some liver transplants for children. Medicaid coverage of transplants—for people on the welfare rolls—varies from state to state. Some states pay for them, some don't. Payment by Blue Cross and Blue Shield and the majority of commercial insurers for heart, liver and most other transplants varies from state to state.

Congress created the transplant task force—which includes 25 physicians, lawyers and other experts—in 1984 to examine the ethics of organ transplants. The group recommended last April that every acute-care hospital be required by law to notify the families of brain-dead patients of the "opportunity" to donate their organs to very sick people. Simultaneously, it urged every healthy person to carry a donor card authorizing the use of his or her organs in the event of death. The task force called on the federal government to establish a national network of private, nonprofit agencies to procure and distribute transplant

They Wait In Hope

For thousands of people—young and old alike—new, healthy body parts mean a second chance at life. The greatest need is for kidneys, as this list of 18 who were awaiting donor organs indicates, followed by livers, hearts, heart-and-lungs, then pancreases.

organs. The task force also advocated that the federal government pay all the costs of transplants for poor people. Rejected was a controversial proposal to give younger patients preference over older people in the allocation of transplant organs.

On occasion, Michael Batten has talked the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services into easing its rigid transplant rules, persuaded Medicaid and Blue Cross officials to pay questionable transplant bills and arranged with the Air Force to deliver transplant organs to failing patients.

To date, the White House liaison office says it has helped more than 800 people to get transplants.

The White House first became concerned with transplants in 1982 when Myron Teichholtz, a concerned New Jersey father, appealed for aid for his 31-year-old daughter, Sara Brookwood, who was dying of liver disease. No liver was found. After Miss Brookwood died, the President established the White House transplant liaison office to help people find organ donors.

Today, 60 percent of heart recipients survive at least five years. For patients who receive transplanted kidneys, the odds are even better.

Mr. Reagan began to make personal appeals in 1983 when Rep. Charles W. Stenholm (D., Tex.) wrote to ask his help for an 11-month-old Texas baby, Ashley Bailey, a liver-disease victim with two to three weeks left to live.

The President went on the radio to appeal for a donor. None was found, and the baby later died, but Mr. Reagan's plea did bring livers for other babies in need of transplants, and he continued to make TV and radio pleas for transplant organs.

A number of doctors have bitterly criticized the President for spotlighting individual transplant patients. They charge that his intervention permitted some patients to obtain organs ahead of others who had been waiting longer.

The White House disagrees. "When the President helps one transplant patient," says Michael Batten, "he's helping them all because he is demonstrating the crying need for organs."

In the case of 3-year-old Ryan Osterblom of Indialantic, Fla., President Reagan directed Margaret Heckler, then the Secretary of Health and Human Services, to visit Ryan in the hospital in Gainesville, Fla. Mrs. Heckler held a press conference there to stress Ryan's need for a new liver.

Within a week—three days before Easter 1985—the liver of a 9-month-old Chicago baby became available. A private plane hurried Ryan and his mother, Karen, to Pittsburgh. His father, Robert, went by commercial plane. The surgeons at Children's Hospital started operating at 4 a.m. the next morning. By 5 that afternoon, Ryan had a new liver.

When the Osterbloms returned from the hospital to the guest house where they were staying, they found a message waiting: "Please call Mrs. Reagan at the California White House."

"We talked for quite a while," Mrs. Osterblom says. "Mrs. Reagan has the most delightful voice. She said to us, 'What a beautiful, blessed Easter gift for you.'"

A half hour after that, Mrs. Reagan rang back. "My husband just came in," she said. "I said that I'd spoken with you, and he was very disappointed because he was anxious to talk to both of you too."

The President then got on the line and told the Osterbloms that he was determined to do all he could to make the American people aware of the vital need for transplant organs.

Ryan is now back home in Florida and doing fine.

On Christmas Eve, Mrs. Osterblom told PARADE: "I think everyone should consider donating their or their loved ones' organs so that a part of them can live on. That's surely the greatest gift of all."

What You Can Do

ALL YOU NEED DO TO BECOME AN ORGAN donor is fill out a donor card, according to the American Council on Transplantation. You can get one from most hospitals, any organ-procurement center or your state department of health. In many states, you merely have to make the proper notation on your driver's license.

You may specify which organ you want to donate upon death. There is no cost to your family, of course.

If you have any questions or doubts, the American Council on Transplantation suggests that you discuss them with your family, your physician and your clergyman. For further information, write the council at Dept. P2, P.O. Box 9999, Washington, D.C. 20016.

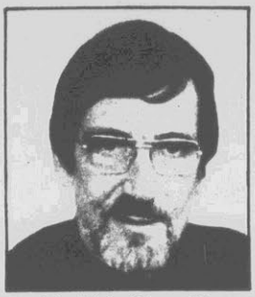
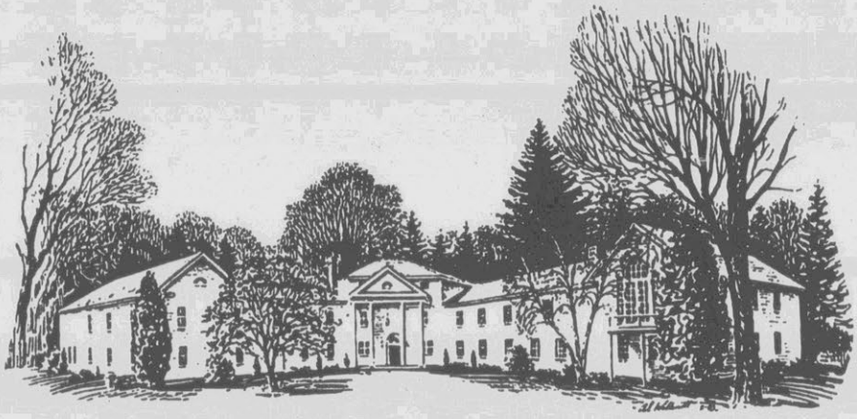
We're looking for people to write children's books



By Alvin Tresselt,
Dean of Faculty

Writing for children is the perfect way to take up writing, says the author of 53 children's books. "Your ideas come right out of your own experience. And while it's still a challenge, it's the straightest possible line between you and publication—if you're qualified to seek the success this rewarding field offers."



The Institute of Children's Literature deep in the Connecticut woods. The old mansion has been the home of this workshop for new writers since 1969.

IF YOU WANT TO WRITE AND GET PUBLISHED, I can't think of a better way to do it than writing books and stories for children and teenagers. Ideas flow naturally right out of your own life experience. While it's still a challenge, the odds of getting that first unforgettable check from a juvenile publisher are better than they are from any other kind of publisher I know.

Later on, you may get other checks from other publishers. But right now, the object is to begin—to break into print—to learn the feeling of writing and selling your work and seeing your name in type. After that, you can decide if you want your writing to take another direction.

But after 30 years of editing, publishing, and teaching—and 53 books of my own—I can tell you this: You'll go a long way before you discover anything as rewarding as writing for young readers.

Your words will never sound as sweet as they do from the lips of a child reading your books and stories. And the joy of creating books and stories that young people 'really like' is an experience you'll never have anywhere else. (In this age of boob tube illiteracy, convenient morality, and plastic values, do you know of a more important audience?)

A surprisingly big market

But, that's not all. The financial rewards go far beyond most people's expectations because there's a surprisingly big market out there for writers who are trained to crack it. More than 130 million young people's books are purchased each year. As many as 2,500 new titles appear annually and new authors account for up to half of them.

There are also 250 monthly magazines looking for material for young readers. You can imagine how much writing it takes just to keep them going!

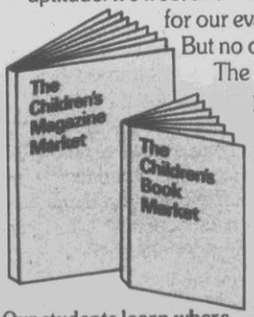
Yet two big questions bedevil nearly every would-be writer: "Am I really qualified?" and "How can I get started?"

'Am I really qualified?'

This is our definition of a "qualified person": It's someone with an aptitude for writing who can take constructive criticism, learn from it, and turn it into a professional performance. That's the only kind of person we're looking for.

The reasons are simple: Our reputation is built on success, and if prospective students don't have the earmarks of success, we probably can't help them. And we tell them so. It's only fair to both of us.

To help us spot potential authors, we've developed a revealing test for writing aptitude. It's free, and we don't charge for our evaluation. But no one gets into The Institute without passing it. Those who pass and enroll receive our promise: You will complete at least one manuscript ready to submit to a publisher by the time you finish the Course.



Our students learn where to sell their writing with our exclusive publishers' lists.

Learn one-to-one with your own instructor

I've learned a lot about writing for children and I love it. Now I'm passing my knowledge on to my students so they can profit from it. When I'm not writing my own books I spend my time at The Institute of Children's Literature, a workshop for new writers that does one thing and does it better than any other educational institution I know of: It trains qualified people to write for the young reader.

This is the way I work with my students, and my fellow instructors—all of whom are experienced writers or editors— work more or less the same way.

Learn at your own pace

When you're ready—at your own time and your own pace—you send your assignment to me and I read it and I reread it to get everything out of it you've put into it.

Then I edit your assignment with a red pencil just the way a publishing house editor would—if he had the time. I return it along with a detailed letter explaining my comments. I tell you what your strong points are, what your weaknesses are, and just what you can do to improve. It's a matter of push and pull with each assignment. You push and I pull and between us both, you learn to write.

'Now...I am a writer!'

This method really works. I wouldn't spend five minutes at it if it didn't. The proof of the pudding is that many students break into print even before they finish the Course. We receive hundreds of letters like these from students: "Before taking your Course, the short stories I scribbled for my two tiny tots never caught an editor's fancy," writes Emily Burns of Salem, Ore. "My first sale, to National Catholic Weekly, was a Course lesson. Then I sent another Course assignment to a writer's competition and won first prize of $400!"

Della Domangue, of New Orleans, LA writes: "Having taken several writing courses, I can truthfully say yours was the best. My instructor's personal comments, suggestions and encouragement were invaluable. I also learned the joys of... editors answering you personally."

Marilyn Day of Marissa, Ill. says, "Now I'm no longer a housewife, I am a writer!"

And Mary Carruth, Dublin, Cal., writes, "I sent out my first article with a prayer and it was accepted. Your Course, with its structure and support, has been everything I hoped for."

"When I started, I did not really think I had the ability" writes Sister M. Laetitia Mudde, West Haven, CT. "But my instructor made me believe in myself."*

I have a file full of similar letters. People like yourself so full of pride they could easily convince you that it is a pity more people don't take up writing for children.

Mrs. Ruby Forsythe with pupils of the Faith Memorial school on Pawley's Island, S.C., where she has taught for 47 years.

BY MICHAEL RYAN

BELOW THE billboards on Highway 17, which runs along the South Carolina coast, you can see the land as it used to be: trailer houses and shotgun shacks and little compounds in less than good repair, where the people who can never aspire to the nearby condominiums live.

And if you look to your right as you cross Pawley's Island, S.C., you will see a sign for Camp Baskervill, an Episcopal Church institution. In the big gray building on your right, you will likely find Mrs. Ruby Forsythe. Meet her, and you have met one of the finest ornaments of the South, old or new.

Nobody could have known, when she came to Pawley's Island in 1938, that Mrs. Ruby, as she's called, would end up a local resource, named Woman of the Year by the Rotary Club and the Civic Association and some other people she can't keep track of. In those days, you got to the island by ferry. "If you came in today, you couldn't leave until tomorrow," she remembers. "There weren't any cars. You had to ride from the ferry to your house with a mule and a wagon, or a horse and a wagon, whatever you had."

At that time, Mrs. Ruby had been a schoolteacher in Charleston for 15 years. She had married a young priest at her Episcopal church, the Rev. William Forsythe. But when he was transferred to Faith Memorial Church on Pawley's Island, she had stayed behind in the city, caring for her aged parents. For 10 years, they had a commuter marriage of sorts, together some weekends and in summers. When her parents died, she agreed to take over the one-room school next to her husband's mission church.

The change from city to near-wilderness was almost too much for her. "I would stand on the back porch and look at all those trees and just cry," the former city girl recalls. "For one solid month, I cried."

Although she was 34 years old, some of the locals thought she was too young to be a schoolteacher; they resisted her appointment. Then they fought the curriculum changes that Mrs. Ruby, with her undergraduate degree from South Carolina State and her graduate school training, wanted to make in their school. "When I had problems," she says, "my husband used to tell me, 'Mother, it's no use to run. You'll find problems wherever you go.' So we just stayed here and battled it out."

Ruby Forsythe was 70 when her husband died. By then, the new public schools on the island had long since integrated—Faith Memorial no longer was the only place a black child could get an education past elementary school. Ruby's only child, a son, had gone off to Howard University and become an administrator in the Charleston school system. She and her husband and the congregation had watched their old wooden church burn down and had built a new one of solid block construction. Then, when Route 17 became a four-lane highway, they had put the massive building on rollers and moved it back to a new foundation. Mrs. Ruby could justly have said that her work was done.

But some of her students' parents came to her. She recalls: "They said, 'We want this school to stay open. It's about the only cultural thing we have among our people on this island.' The bishop asked me if I would keep the school going. But he said the church couldn't support it fully—if the parents wanted it, they would have to support it."

They did. Nobody pays tuition at Faith Memorial, but when the building needs painting or the oil bill comes in, the parents find the money somewhere. Mothers and fathers come every weekend to clean the school. There are 53 children, from 3 to 10 years old, every one of them there because their parents believe Mrs. Ruby will give them something the public schools can't. And it doesn't seem to matter much that only two of the children are Episcopalian; the rest are Baptist, Methodist, Catholic, Pentecostal, Jehovah's Witness and other things.

They start arriving at 7:30 in the morning from as much as 30 or 40 miles away. Some come in buses, some come in old jalopies that look as if they could hardly run, but others come in late-model cars with sun roofs, driven by smartly dressed parents who enjoy a lifestyle their ancestors never knew.

"My daughter has been here since she was 3," says Deborah Greggs; her Aisha is now an 8-year-old third-grader. "The children progress more here. If Mrs. Ruby feels that a child needs individual help, she's willing to give it." Mrs. Greggs points at a blackboard filled with declarative sentences: "Most of her 4-year-olds can read those sentences," she says. "In the public school, kids at the age of 4 are just there for a couple of hours. They're not into reading—they're more into getting acquainted with their schoolmates. Mrs. Ruby lets children progress as fast as they can. She tells them, 'You're here to learn, and you're going to do just that.'"

In a good pair of heels, Mrs. Ruby may be all of 5 feet tall, but, at 81, she still has a lot of the energy that went into singing and dancing in her younger days—enough to keep her on her feet from 7:30 a.m. until, sometimes, 7 at night, when the last parent coming home from work stops by to pick up the last sleepy child. Volunteers often come in to help her teach, but much of the time she is alone with her kids, instructing one age group in seats on a platform at the front of the room while others quietly do their assignments at the desks below. She manages to run a fairly up-to-date program in her tiny school.

"I don't have all the modern equipment, but I do have some," she says. "The Catholics have given us a good copier. We have three or four recording machines. We don't have a movie projector, but the men were in from the Knights of Columbus the other day to see what we'd like to have. The Rotary Club helps us quite a bit. I'm not against computers, but I think that when people are dependent upon a machine they use their minds less, so I build the mind first. They can use the machine later."

Nowadays, Mrs. Ruby only teaches as far as fourth grade; then her students move on to the public school. For some, the things they've learned from Mrs. Ruby become the foundation for a lifetime of accomplishment. Others don't do so well. "I hate to hear of a girl or boy that's been in this school that's gone the wrong way," she says. "But it happens."

It also happens that her graduates go on to become ministers and lawyers and professionals, and send their own children and even grandchildren back to Mrs. Ruby's one-room schoolhouse. Every year at commencement, she finds a graduate who has become a minister to give the invocation, another who has been a success in life to give a speech and show her children what they can do with their own lives. Last year, she had one of the biggest thrills of her career. It involved a graduate who had gone on to be valedictorian at the public junior high and valedictorian again at the high school, then had won a scholarship to the Air Force Academy.

"The first year that she went away, she was very discouraged," Mrs. Ruby recalls. "We had to keep writing her—I and her white teachers at the public school. She'd write back that she was ready to give up. We kept on behind her. The second year, it was a little better. There were 12 black students in her class. They fell out, one by one. But she kept up to the end. When she graduated last year, she was one of two. She's in California now, and she's doing well. That a girl from a small place like this could make good . . . to see the children grow up making good—that's what has kept me in this work. That's what makes you proud."

Andy Levin

The parents of the 53 students—aged 3 to 10—who attend Faith Memorial believe Mrs. Ruby gives their children special attention the public schools can't.

RETIRE IN MEXICO ON $10 A DAY

(Special) Publisher Ross Paron announced release of the new book Paradise Found: How to Live in North America's Best Climate for Under $300 a Month. The book reveals how over 25,000 Americans live the good life on a beautiful, 60-mile long lake nestled in the mountains of Mexico. Please read this exclusive interview.

Question: Where is this paradise located?

Answer: It's simple to get there. You can drive there in a few days from anywhere in the U.S. or Canada. By air, it's just a few hours away.

Question: Why do so many Americans live there?

Answer: The climate is near perfect year round. You're never too cold or too hot. Prices are ridiculously low. You can get a nice hotel room for $7 a night...Full course meals less than $2. Many people live comfortably on social security or small pensions.

Question: Besides the near perfect climate and low cost of living, what else draws Americans there?

Answer: The sheer beauty of the place. You're on a magnificent lake 60 miles long, nestled in the mountains. You'll breathe fresh, clean, unpolluted air. You'll see stunning colors. Blue water, green mountains, red and yellow flowers.

I have travelled throughout Europe, the Carribbean and Hawaii and never have I seen such an enchanting place. That's why I call the book Paradise Found, it's the closest thing to Paradise you'll ever find.

Question: How do the local people treat Americans there?

Answer: You'll be treated with warmth and kindness. They love Americans. We provide most of the jobs for the townspeople. You can have a maid, gardener or cook for about 52¢ an hour. And you'll be paying more than the going wage rates.

Question: Do Americans get homesick?

Answer: Not at all. You have an American library there, medical care, American style shopping facilities, clubs and many social activities. Best of all, you'll be living in one of the world's best climates for a fraction of your present living costs.

Question: What else does the book cover about this Paradise?

Answer: The book explains everything you need to know. How to get there, where to stay, where to eat, what to do. You'll discover how to buy a home at ridiculous prices. How to earn extra money. Most important, you'll discover how to turn away from stress and tension and start enjoying life to the fullest.

Whether you're looking for a place to retire, a low-cost vacation spot or somewhere to get away from it all, this place has something for you.

Question: Sounds like you've really hit on something here. How can readers get a copy of Paradise Found: How To Live In North America's Best Climate For Under $300 a Month?

Answer: You can order direct from the publisher and save. Send only $12.95 plus $1 postage and handling to: United Research Publishers, 249 South Highway 101, Dept. RP-2, Solana Beach, CA 92075. You can return the book within 30 days and receive a full refund if not 100% satisfied.

Kids play "game show" on Square One TV

The producers of Sesame Street have come up with a great idea for a show to excite 8- to 12-year olds about math and encourage them to use problem-solving strategies in their everyday lives. Called Square One TV and made at a cost of $16 million, it has a magazine format that parodies game shows, music videos, mini-series, newscasts, even commercials. Every weekday beginning tomorrow, on PBS. Check local listings for the time.

TV Reporters Sit In a Hostage Hot Seat

A plane—Air Tiberius 99—is hijacked on its way to New York and lands in a Middle Eastern country. Hostages are taken, and a TV reporter is invited on board. No, it's not true... but it might be. In the Face of Terrorism poses a hypothetical situation that places panelists—TV reporter Lesley Stahl, anchorman Peter Jennings, Rep. Patricia Schroeder (D., Colo.) and others—in the hot seat to agonize about how they would respond to a terrorist's frightening demands on them. Tuesday, 10-11 p.m. on PBS. Check local listings, as date and time may vary.

READERS RESPOND ON CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

In "Are They Too Young To Die?" (PARADE, Oct. 19), we asked for readers' opinions on the question of capital punishment for juveniles. We received nearly 40,000 responses from all parts of the country. Here are the results:

- Nearly 80% believe there should be capital punishment in general, whereas 20% do not.
- Of those who support capital punishment, 46% said they believe there should nevertheless be a minimum age for the death penalty.
- The minimum age should be 18, said 23%, whereas 13% lowered it to 16, 10% to 15, and 8% dropped the age for execution to 10 or under. On the other hand, 11% said capital punishment should not apply until age 21.
- Almost 55% think there should be no minimum age for the death penalty.

The key: Create a personal lists of shows

HOW CAN PARENTS HELP THEIR youngsters watch TV more productively? Sit down together with this Sunday's newspaper, go through the TV offerings and make a selective list of what to watch over the next week, day by day. That's the approach recommended by Peggy Charren, co-author of The TV Smart Book for Kids ($6.95 at Waldenbooks and other bookstores). "I want that piece of furniture in the living room to be an Aladdin's lamp," Charren says. "I want kids to treat TV programs as separate entities, like books."

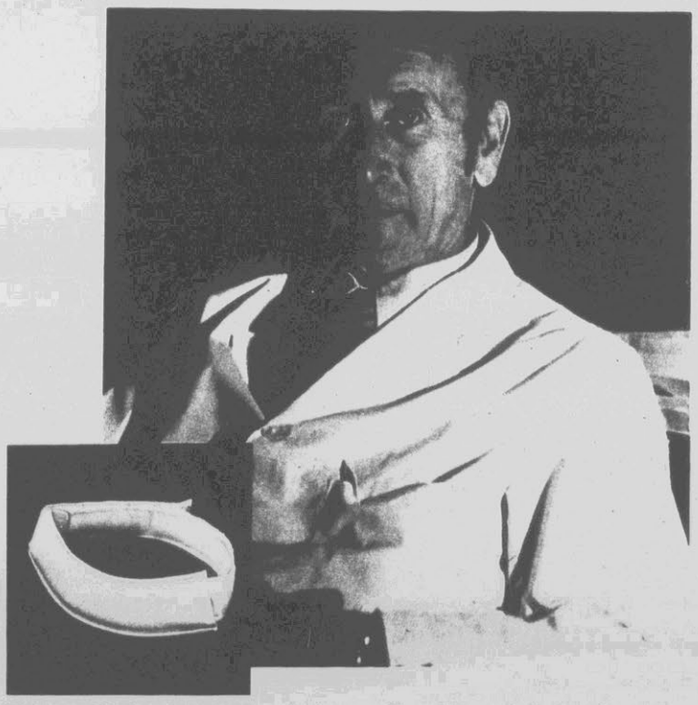
Do You Have A Sore Knee?

Free Yourself From Pain



If you suffer from knee pain, we don't have to tell you how distressing it can be. Even the simplest, every-day activities such as walking or climbing stairs can cause severe discomfort.

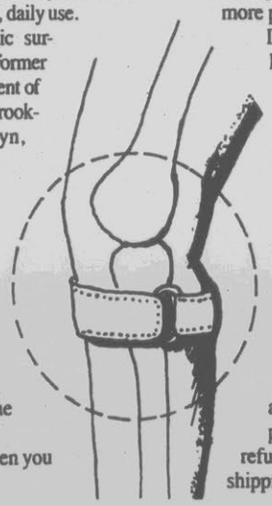
But now a revolutionary new knee strap offers genuine relief, whether you need it for sports or for ordinary, daily use. Designed by orthopedic surgeon Dr. Jack Levine, Former Director of the Department of Orthopedic Surgery, Brookdale Hospital, Brooklyn, N.Y., it has been discussed in leading medical journals. More importantly, thousands of people have actually tried it and liked it—The strap relieves pain and lets you move freely again.

Who needs the Levine Knee Strap?

If your knee hurts when you climb stairs...

If you have pain in your knee when sitting in one position for any length of time—and even worse pain when you get up...

If you have pain when playing tennis, when jogging, when engaging in any form of physical exercise—and even more pain after exercise...



If you occasionally feel your knee buckling when you're walking or running or dancing...

You need the Levine Knee Strap.

This method really works, even where ordinary elastic supports and traditional treatments have failed. The strap fits comfortably below the knee—weighs only one ounce—and will not be visible under your clothing. We guarantee you'll be thoroughly pleased—or return it for full refund of purchase price, except shipping charges of course.

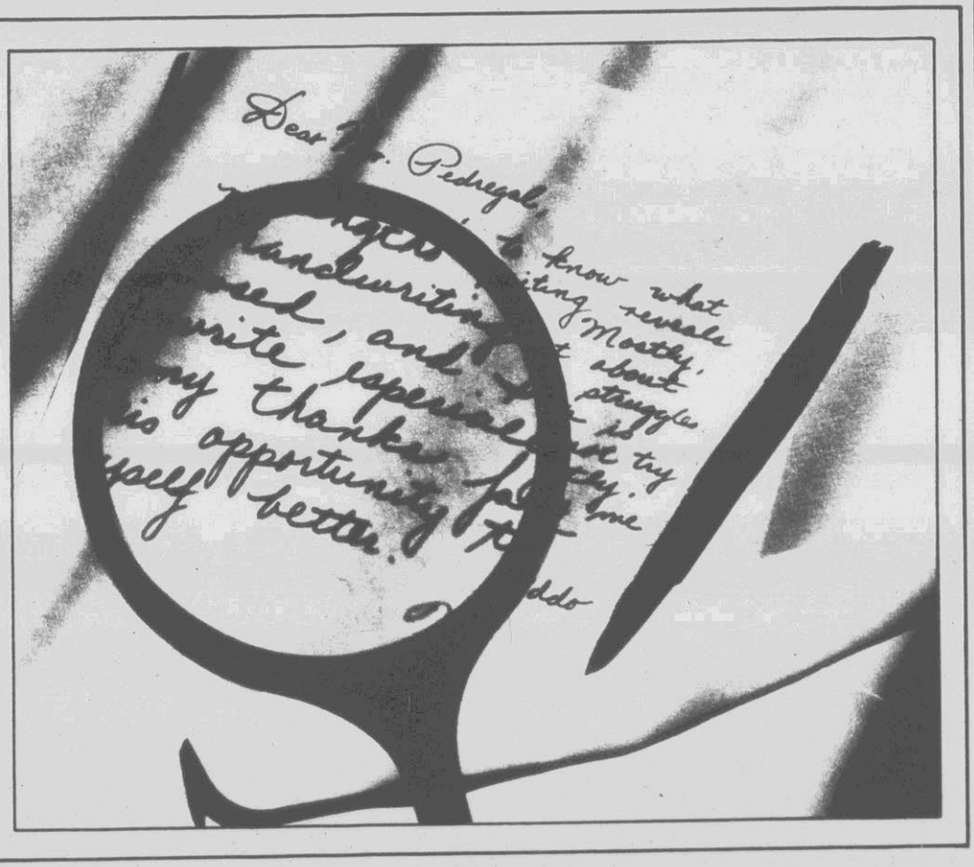
That's Write!

Want to find out what makes you tick? Just pick up a pen.

By J. J. Leonard



I seated myself in front of the round dining room table, shifted in the chair until I was quite comfortable, and prepared to copy out the paragraph on the sheet of blank paper in front of me. "Just think of this as a lark," I told myself as I began to scribble. "Just think of the stories you can dine out on when this guy's conclusions are all off-base."

I guess I'm a skeptic at heart. I make it a point not to trust in things like graphology. So I never expected anything to come of having my handwriting analyzed. A few laughs, maybe. But certainly nothing revealing. Nothing of consequence.

I was wrong.

I recognized the truth of most of graphologist Carlos Pedregal's assertions right away. But, when he announced that I was very decisive but often not patient enough, I was sure that I'd caught him in a mistake.

It took me a week to accept the fact that, as much as I didn't want to believe it, signs of my impatience stood out like highway markers in both my professional and personal life. I'd simply chosen to ignore them. I had to confess, Carlos Pedregal knew me—or at least certain aspects of my personality—better than I knew myself.

Had I known more about graphology at the time, I might not have been so surprised. Graphology operates on the same principle as, for example, the Rorschach psychological tests. In putting words on a piece of paper or interpreting inkblots—a person projects her unconscious personality. Where the writer chooses to first place her pen on the page indicates how she situates herself in relation to family and society. The shape and length of the lines reveal other personality traits.

From there the analysis narrows down to looking at specific letters—their size, shape, slant, and how they're grouped. Even the choice of writing implement, the pressure applied and legibility are considered. And of course, the signature is studied—the individual's personal creation that no parent or teacher has had a hand in transforming. "One characteristic, in isolation shows nothing," says Pedregal. "The conjunction of everything is used to analyze a person's handwriting."

In all, a graphologist examines over 300 aspects of a person's script. The result? "Your handwriting will tell an expert things that your best friend or mate wouldn't know after a full 10 years," says Pedregal. Not surprisingly, a handwriting analysis can often provide new insights into yourself, your relationships and your life as well.

Take Mike and Susan (not their real names) as an example. The couple decided they would both have their handwriting analyzed. For the most part, husband and wife were pleased with the results. Each, however, adamantly disagreed with one of the characteristics listed in their respective analyses. Mike's handwriting had revealed that he placed too much importance on himself and his family. "The rest of the world can die so long as we're okay," was the attitude that came through. Though Mike denied that this was true, his wife felt that the analysis was right on target.

Interestingly, Susan's point of contention was about a characteristic that was in direct opposition to the quality Mike had argued about. Her script showed a tendency to put other people's needs first, before her own or her family's, something which Mike had accused her of time and time again. "You don't care enough about our kids," he'd tell her. "You're always taking care of all the other kids in the neighborhood."

The conflicting reactions sparked numerous discussions between the two. Finally, Mike and Susan realized that they—and not the graphologist—were mistaken. Their opposing personality traits had blinded them to each other and fueled their conflict. That awareness allowed them to look at the situation from a new angle and put it in perspective.

Graphology can also reveal character traits that people who've been close most of their lives aren't aware of. For years the 65-year-old Canadian had felt that his five children didn't know who he really was. When he received his handwriting analysis he felt it was so accurate that he ended up mailing a copy to each of his now-adult kids. "For the first time, I felt that somebody understood me," he explained.

For some, the self-discovery that results from having their handwriting analyzed becomes a necessary catalyst for change. "I used to think that I was always right," says Nancy (not her real name). "So I always insisted that my family do things my way." Her handwriting, however, showed that she had become too involved with her family, at the expense of her own identity. The cause: her less than perfect childhood. The result: an overly demanding mother and wife, who only began to step back when the analysis of her handwriting made her aware of the problem and its origins.

Graphology can even shed light on "real life" mysteries. The adoptive mother of a 15-month-old foundling wrote Pedregal asking for help. "All my baby has of her natural mother is the note she was found with. Very possibly she will never have anything else. Could you please see what you can discover about the woman who left her from the note? I would like to be able to tell my daughter something about her mother when she is old enough to question her abandonment."

The note was very short, written on a corner of what looked like a brown paper shopping bag. Though there was not enough written material to be able to do a comprehensive analysis, Pedregal was able to learn a lot about the child's real mother. The writing showed her to be a sad and lonely young woman of about 23 years of age. The characteristics that surfaced in her handwriting included sensitivity, impressionability, generosity and sensuality. They also revealed a woman who was difficult to understand and constantly on the defensive—an outsider who had trouble adapting to society.

The analysis may not have turned up the specific woman who left her baby on the church steps, but it satisfied the child's new mother. "Thank you," she wrote Pedregal. "You've added substance to the shadow of the person who gave us such a wonderful gift."

Occasionally a graphologist can actually foresee the future when examining a person's handwriting. One young couple who'd recently become engaged was told that their marriage would not last more than six months. They'd been high school sweethearts, and their families very much wanted the two to marry. They did, in spite of the graphologist's warning. Five months later they separated. What the expert had concluded based on two handwriting samples unfortunately turned out to be all too true.

These examples may astound you, but they shouldn't. After all, "brain-writing" is what graphologists call handwriting, and they should know.

What Does Your Writing Say About You?

This is your chance to find out what your handwriting reveals about you. Though most experts charge $100 or more, Carlos Pedregal has agreed to a special arrangement for Parade readers. For only $12, your handwriting sample will be analyzed by this internationally renowned graphologist and his staff. You will learn which characteristics surface in your handwriting and you will receive a comprehensive printed explanation of their conclusions. To take advantage of this offer, simply follow the instructions on this page.

GET THE WRITE IDEA

To find out what your writing reveals about your personality, just follow these easy directions.

- Copy the letter on the right, designed to provide Pedregal with the sample he needs for the analysis. Use an ink or ballpoint pen and write in the blank space at the bottom of the page. (You can also use a sheet of unlined writing paper . . . just make sure to attach all the necessary information that's been requested.) And remember, don't try to write neatly. Just relax and write the way you usually do, and then sign your name.
- Be sure to complete the order form below. If you are sending more than one sample, include payment and an order form for each. Anyone over sixteen can participate.
- Send the entire page or clip along dotted line and send order form and sample with a check or money order for $12 plus $2 postage & handling to: GRAPHOLOGY OFFER, 230 Adams Ave., P.O. Box 16087, Hauppauge, NY 11788. Orders must be post-marked by March 31, 1987.

Dear Mr. Pedregal:

I'd like to know what my regular handwriting reveals about my personality. Mostly, I'd like to find out about my strengths and my struggles. My handwriting sample is enclosed, and I did not try to write especially neatly. Many thanks for giving me this opportunity to know myself better.

Don't forget your signature! If you use two different signatures, please include both.

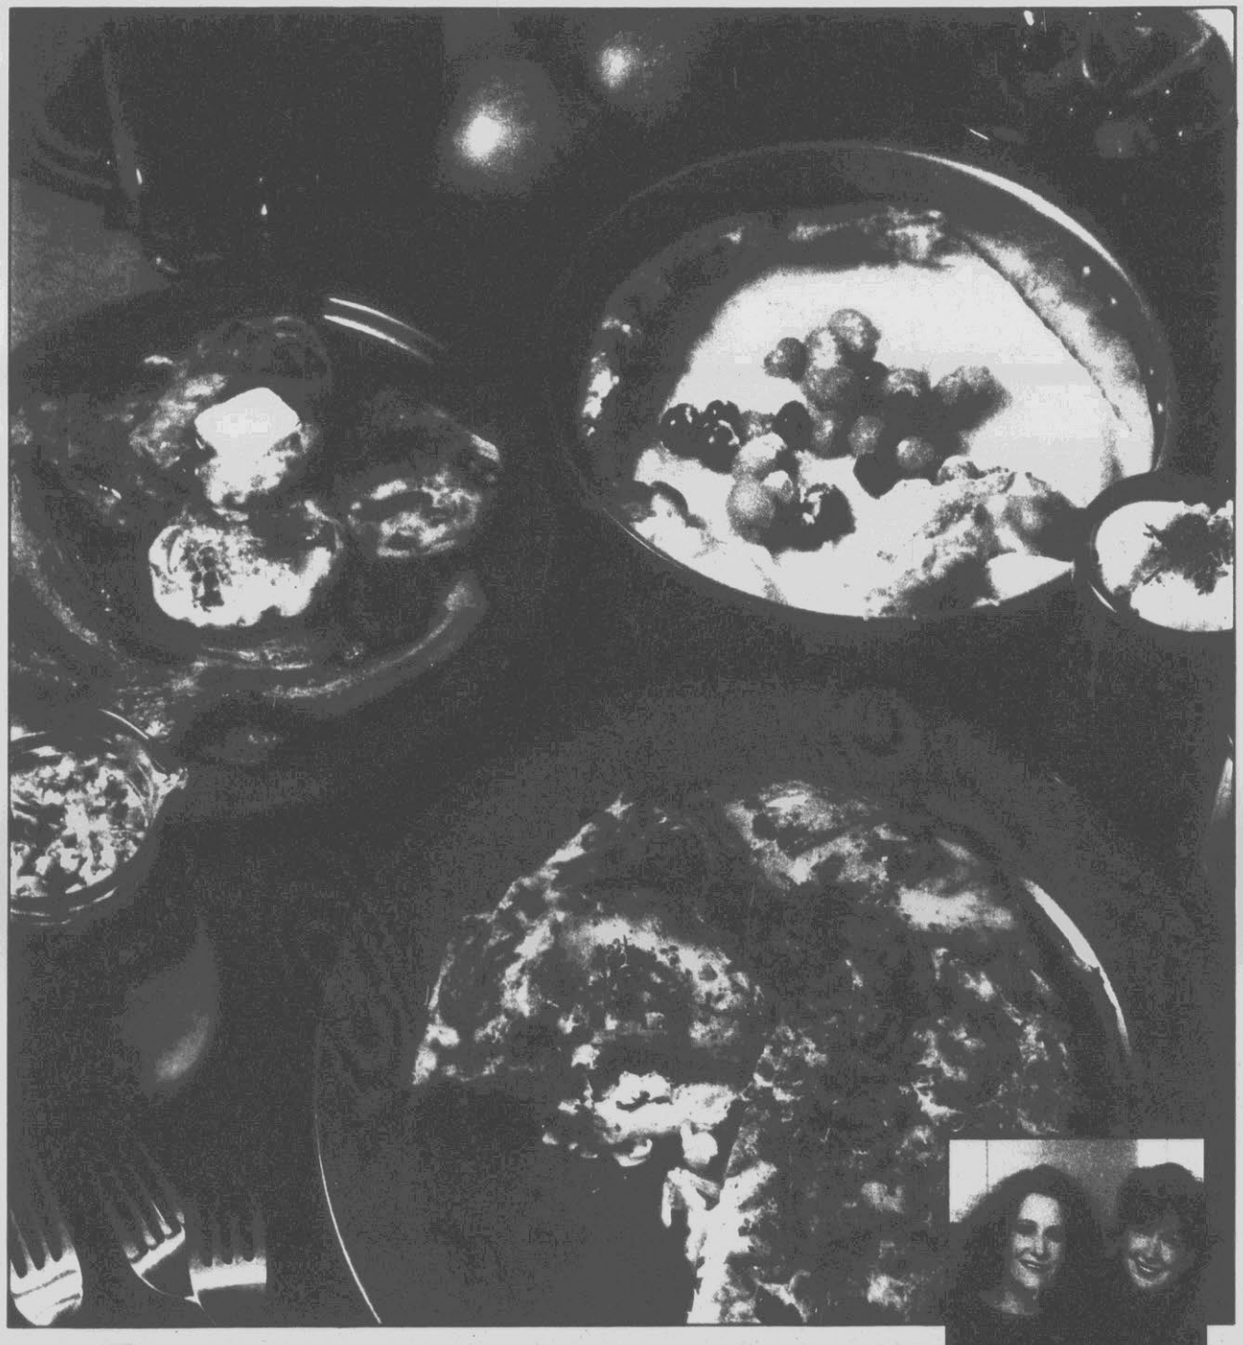
SIMPLY DELICIOUS

For many of us, the day's first meal has taken on new importance. We've realized that breakfast is a source of energy all day long, as well as an opportunity to collect ourselves before the day becomes active.

The keys to great breakfasts every morning are time and imagination. As a time-saver, we regularly stock breakfast basics—berries, juices or citrus fruits, eggs, a variety of grains, breads and nuts. And with the aroma of brewing cappuccino, the creativity comes like magic.

To begin the day lightly and with something warm, our Breakfast Popover with Sweetened Grapes (upper right in photo) is ever so special. For heartier appetites, our featherweight Pecan Flapjacks and syrup (upper left) are perfect. The Apple and Sausage Omelet (lower right) is foolproof to make and truly scrumptious.

Now you can rise and really shine!



Good Morning!

Delicious, healthy breakfasts—not for weekends only—can be yours with the dawn of every day. Here are three of our favorites.

Pecan Flapjacks & Warm Maple Syrup

Light-as-a-feather flapjacks, stacked high. Pecans inside and atop give just the right crunch.

1 cup all-purpose unbleached flour
1 teaspoon baking powder
1/2 teaspoon baking soda
1 teaspoon granulated sugar
1/2 teaspoon salt
1 egg yolk
2 tablespoons unsalted butter, melted
1 cup buttermilk
1½ cups pecan halves
1 egg white
4 tablespoons unsalted butter
1/4 cup corn oil

1. Sift first five (dry) ingredients into a large bowl.
2. In another bowl, beat egg yolk slightly and add melted butter and buttermilk; stir well. Gently fold dry ingredients into buttermilk mixture; then fold in pecans.
3. With an electric mixer, beat egg white until stiff. Gently fold into the batter, using a rubber spatula.
4. In a heavy skillet, melt 1 tablespoon butter with 1 tablespoon corn oil. Drop batter into skillet by the heaping tablespoonful. When top of flapjack bubbles, flip over and cook until golden. Remove to a warm plate. Continue until all the batter is used, adding more butter and corn oil to the skillet as necessary.
Yield: 16 flapjacks (3 inches across)

Pecan Maple Syrup

3 tablespoons unsalted butter
1/2 cup coarsely chopped pecans
1 cup fresh maple syrup

1. Heat butter in a small skillet over low heat. Add pecans and cook, stirring, for 1 minute.
2. Add maple syrup and heat through for 2 minutes. Serve warm with Pecan Flapjacks.
Yield: 1⅓ cups

Cappuccino

When you don't have a cappuccino machine, or yours is on the fritz, try this solution—it's just as quick!

3/4 cup milk, warmed
1 cup freshly brewed espresso coffee
1 tablespoon dark-chocolate shavings
Ground cinnamon

1. Place warm milk in blender and whip for 1 minute, or until frothy.
2. In a mug, combine equal amounts of warm milk and hot coffee.
3. Sprinkle chocolate shavings on top and dust with cinnamon. Serve with sugar, if desired.
Yield: 2 cups

Breakfast Popover With Sweetened Grapes

The lightest popover filled with ever-so-slightly-sweetened grapes—a heavenly way to begin a day.

8 tablespoons unsalted butter
1/2 cup milk
1/2 cup unbleached all-purpose flour
2 eggs
2 lemons, cut in half crosswise
Confectioners sugar
Red & Green Grape Compote (see recipe)

1. Preheat oven to 475°F.
2. Place butter in a heavy 10-inch ovenproof skillet. Melt butter in oven; when melted, carefully remove skillet from oven.
3. In a bowl, combine milk, flour and eggs—mix just enough to blend. Add mixture to hot butter in the skillet; return to oven and bake for 12 minutes, or until it has puffed up.
4. Remove puffed popover from oven to a platter. Sprinkle with juice from lemon halves and dust with confectioners sugar.
5. Cut into serving-size pieces and serve immediately with Red & Green Grape Compote, or with fresh fruit.
Serves 4

Red & Green Grape Compote

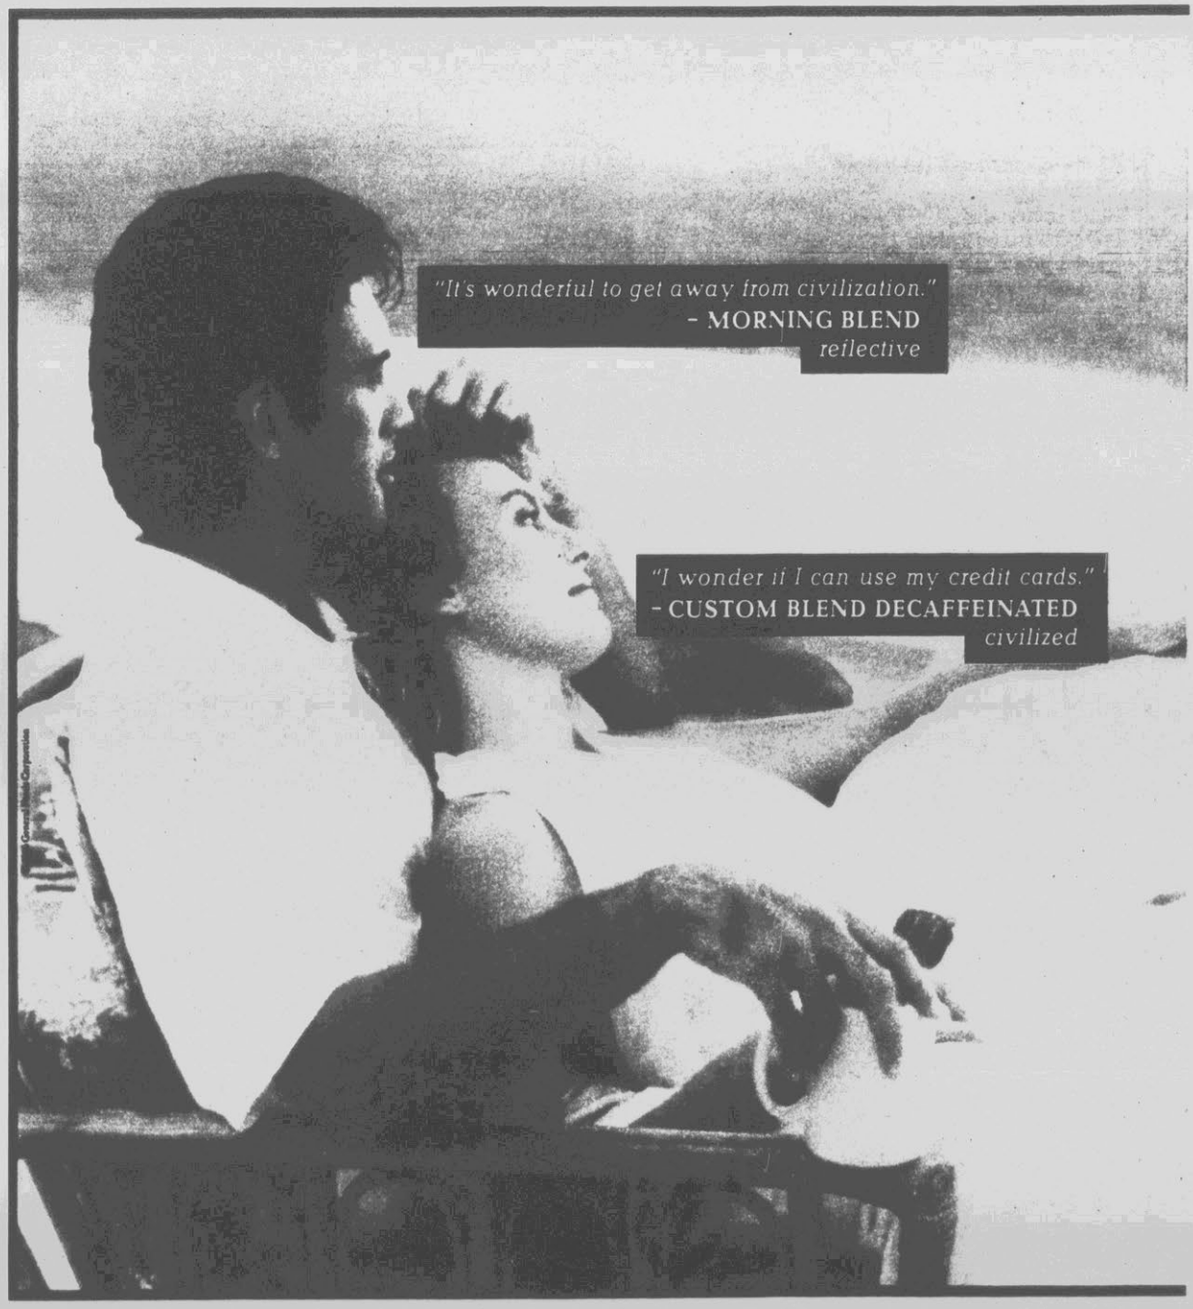
These lightly sweetened red and green grapes can also be served atop waffles or French toast.

1½ pounds seedless green grapes
1½ pounds seedless red grapes
2/3 cup fresh orange juice
2/3 cup granulated sugar
2 small cinnamon sticks
1 lemon, thinly sliced, seeds removed

1. Preheat oven to 350°F.
2. Wash grapes, pluck from stems and spread in the bottom of a shallow baking dish.
3. Combine remaining ingredients in a small, heavy saucepan. Warm through over medium heat, but do not boil. Pour liquid over grapes and mix well. Cover baking dish with aluminum foil. Bake for 35 minutes, basting occasionally.
4. Remove grapes from oven. Strain syrup into a heavy saucepan. Add the cinnamon sticks and lemon slices back into the saucepan. Place grapes in an attractive serving bowl.
5. Cook syrup over high heat until it is reduced by one-half. Remove cinnamon and lemon.
6. Pour syrup over grapes and gently toss. Serve with Breakfast Popovers, or spread lavishly on top of them.

MAXWELL HOUSE P

PRIVATE COFFEES FOR AL

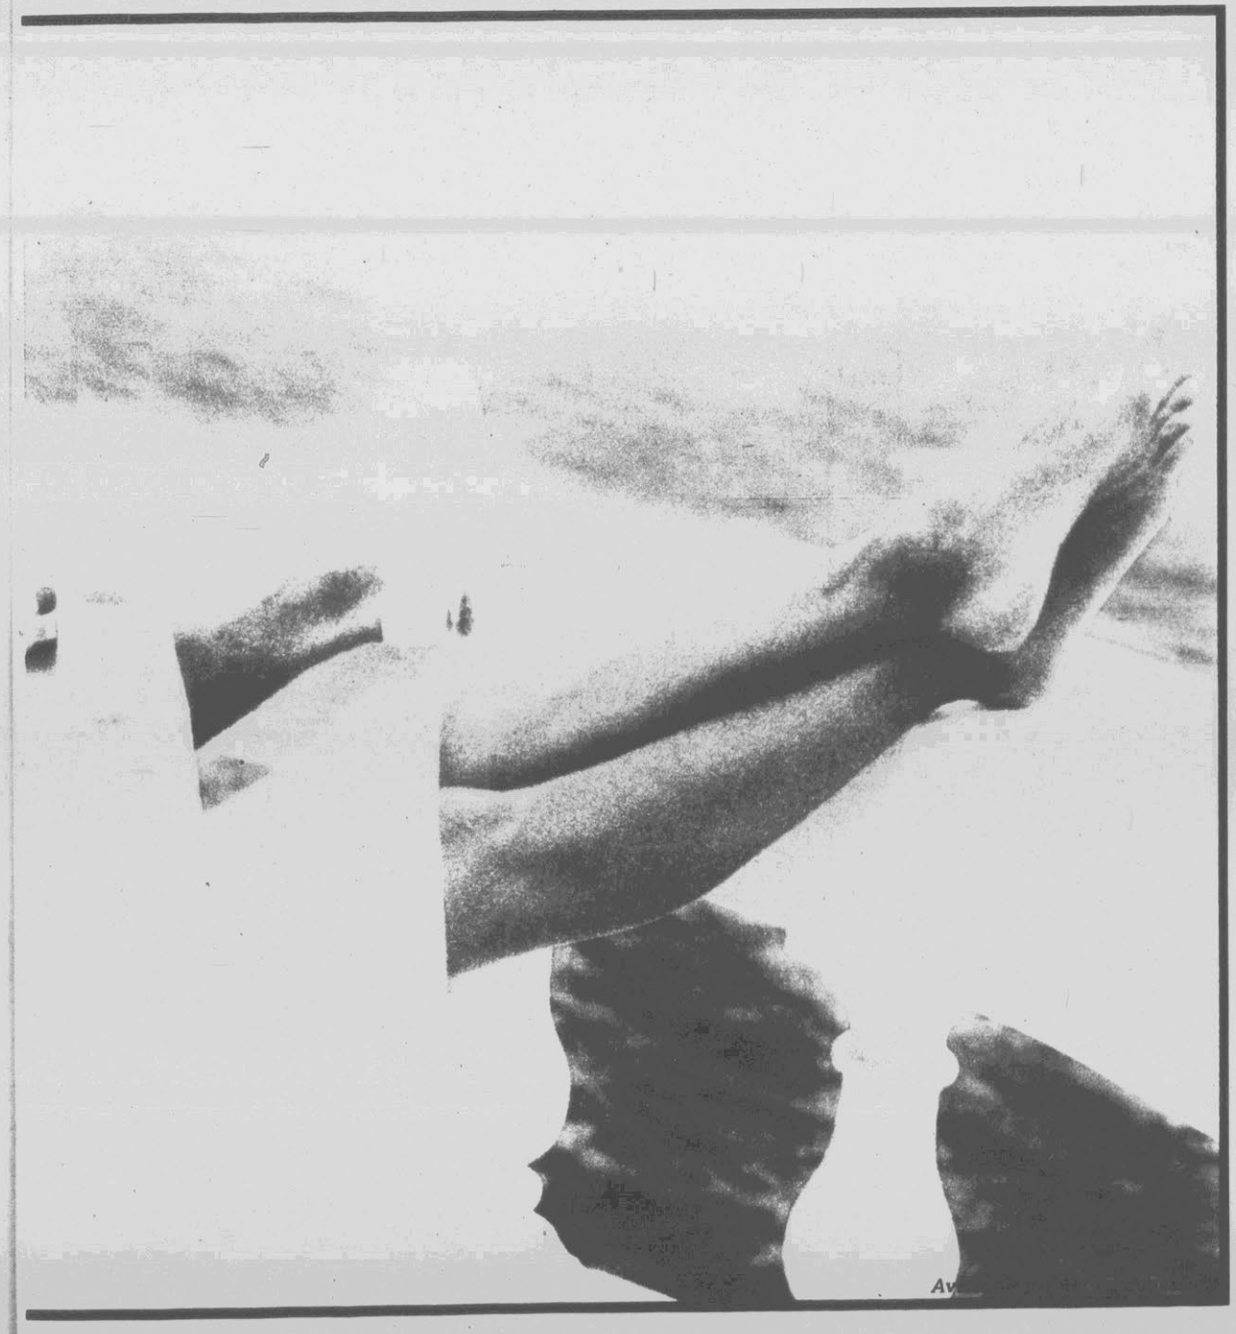


MORNING BLEND is a delicate mix of the more mellow, flavorful beans. Gently roasted into their prime. When brewed they yield a coffee with a smooth, satisfying taste and a thoughtful, almost haunting aroma. A very comfortable cup of coffee to just sit with and linger over.

"REFLECTIVE"

CUSTOM BLEND DECAFFEINATED is a blend of better cultivated, more savory high-altitude beans. Each roasted to an elegant perfection. And naturally decaffeinated to make a coffee with a full rich flavor and sophisticated aroma. A refined cup of coffee that'll appeal to your senses like a finely prepared meal.

RIVATE COLLECTION
L YOUR PRIVATE MOODS



"CIVILIZED"

INTRODUCING EIGHT PRIVATE COFFEES. Our Maxwell House Private Collection. Eight coffees with different dispositions. But of equal quality. Each the result of taking select beans, roasting them until they have all reached their peak colors, peak flavors and peak aromas. Then artfully blending the beans to make coffees of unique character and charm. Each vacuum packed for absolute freshness. And sealed with a 'freshness security valve' to guarantee its taste and aroma. Six are available in Whole Bean. All are available in Freshly Ground. In all, eight ideally made private coffees for any and all your private moods.

Apple & Sausage Omelet

One of the simplest ways we know to have an omelet that's hot and delicious every time.

5 teaspoons unsalted butter
3 sweet Italian sausages or 4 breakfast sausage links, cut into 1/4-inch slices
1 Idaho potato, peeled and very thinly sliced
1 medium-sized yellow onion, peeled and cut into thin rings
1 small Granny Smith apple, peeled, cored and thinly sliced
6 eggs
1/4 cup water
1 tablespoon plus 1 teaspoon chopped parsley
1 tablespoon olive oil
1½ teaspoons salt
1 teaspoon freshly ground black pepper

1. Melt 1 teaspoon of butter in a small heavy skillet over medium heat. Add sausages; sauté until browned and cooked through. Drain on paper towel. Reserve.
2. Melt remaining butter in a 10-inch nonstick skillet. Add potato and onion and cook over low heat for 5 minutes to soften. Add apple and cook an additional 5 minutes, stirring occasionally with a wooden spoon.
3. Whisk eggs, water and 1 tablespoon of parsley in a bowl. Reserve.
4. After potato mixture has cooked for 10 minutes, add oil, salt, pepper and reserved sausage. Stir and pour egg mixture into skillet. Swirl pan so that eggs spread evenly.
5. Cover skillet with a lid and cook over medium heat for 15 minutes, or until eggs are just set.
6. Carefully invert omelet onto a serving platter. Sprinkle with remaining parsley. Serve immediately.
Serves 2 to 4

A Hot Bloody Mary

Our favorite Bloody—served either warm or cold, virgin or laced, it's a real eye-opener.

1 quart tomato juice
1/2 cup freshly squeezed lemon juice
2 tablespoons prepared horseradish, well-drained
Freshly ground black pepper, to taste
Worcestershire sauce, to taste
Dash of Tabasco sauce
1½ cups vodka (optional)
Freshly chopped dill, and whole dill sprigs for garnish

1. Combine all except vodka and dill in a large saucepan. Simmer over medium heat for 5 minutes, or until hot.
2. Serve in a mug—with a jigger of vodka, if desired. Sprinkle with chopped dill and garnish with a sprig of dill. It's also great chilled.

SOMEone. is trying to silence THE truth about sugar

It's quite mysterious, but someone is trying to misinform America about real sugar. By popularizing misconceptions and perpetuating myths. By slanting the truth.

Who could be doing this? The users of cheaper substitute sweeteners, like corn syrup? Misguided health and diet faddists? Artificial sweetener manufacturers? Self-proclaimed "experts" who knock sugar to promote useless foods and diets?

We think it's time you knew the real truth about real sugar.

Sugar is a natural food.

Unlike artificial sweeteners that contain man-made chemicals, real sugar comes naturally from either sugar cane or sugar beets. Not from a laboratory. In fact, sugar is an important member of the carbohydrate family which is used by the body to provide energy.

Sugar isn't high in calories.

Actually it contains a lot less calories than most people suspect; only 16 calories per teaspoon.

Sugar is safe.

Artificial sweeteners are required to have warning labels. You'll never find a warning label on sugar. The U.S. Food and Drug Administration has placed sugar on its "Generally Recognized as Safe" list. No artificial sweetener is on this list. None.

Sugar tastes best.

Quite simply, sugar is good food...good for your body and good to your taste buds. It remains unmatched in taste. Unmatched in quality. Real sugar has always been the best. It still is.

Real Sugar

It's always been the best. It still is.

A New McEnroe?

McEnroes in London: He even said thanks

Have marriage and fatherhood reformed John McEnroe, the bad boy of professional tennis? In London recently, McEnroe—known to British fans as "Superbrat"—posed courteously in front of his hotel with his wife, the actress Tatum O'Neal, and their son, Kevin. McEnroe not only thanked photographers for taking the family photos but even acknowledged enthusiastically that he was most pleased to be playing again in Britain.

Trade Continues

The Japanese government favors the abolition of South Africa's repressive apartheid policy, but it will not compel Japanese companies that trade with South Africa to sever those commercial ties. In the Japanese scheme of priorities, business comes first.

Speaking recently at the University of South Africa in Pretoria, Japan's consul general in that nation, K. Sezaki, explained that his government believed firmly in free trade with all countries—South Africa included.

Sex at Stanford

Early this month, Stanford became one of the first universities in the nation to offer an undergraduate course on the social aspects of sexually transmitted diseases. It consists of lectures by professors, physicians and other guest experts on such subjects as AIDS, genital herpes and syphilis.

Michael Jang

Bowen: Bright idea

Titled "Biosocial Aspects of Sexually Transmitted Diseases," the course is the brainchild of Sylvia Cerel Bowen, a third-year medical student. Bowen, who's also a teaching assistant at Stanford, says: "Members of my generation—the post-Pill, post-penicillin generation—don't like to think that sex can have serious consequences, but of course it can. And it's time students know as much about it as possible."

Ward Cates, director of the sexually transmitted diseases division of the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta, says about 13 million people a year contract such diseases, which cost the country billions of dollars. Moreover, he notes that because AIDS is a terminal disease, information on how to avoid it should be virtually mandatory.

Par for the Course

Back on Nov. 6, 1985—despite warnings that he was not the man for her—actress Joan Collins, now 53, eloped to Las Vegas, where she took a fourth husband, Peter Holm, 14 years her junior. To give Holm status in the status-ridden community of Beverly Hills, Joan promptly appointed the tall, handsome Swede her manager and let him co-produce her TV mini-series.

Last month, Joan—who plays the bitchy, shrewish Alexis Carrington Colby in the Dynasty TV soap opera—decided to dump Holm via annulment or divorce, whichever was easier and financially more advantageous. Joan's decision to jettison Holm after 13 months surprised only those who had originally given the marriage just one year to last.

In response to his wife's annulment petition, Holm filed a declaration in superior court in which he explained: "Our relationship has always been a bit stormy in the sense that we have outspoken personalities, and these personalities sometimes clashed. However, my behavior has never been violent or irrational and, in fact, I have always done my utmost to protect the petitioner [Collins] both publicly and privately, in her personal and financial affairs...I would never intentionally hurt [her] either physically or emotionally. In fact, I am still hoping for a reconciliation, as I still love her."

Whether she still loves him is, of course, the important question.

In Hollywood, when an elderly actress marries a considerably younger man, she often does so to have an escort. When an elderly actor marries a considerably younger woman, he often does so to have a nurse.

IN STEP WITH:

BY JAMES BRADY

Lynn Redgrave

Eddie Adams

BRADY'S BITS

In Sweet Sue, Lynn and Mary Tyler Moore played two aspects of the same person. Was Mary depressed by the recent flop of her new television series? "Oh, no," said Miss Redgrave. "She's too professional for that. All that's on her mind is this new play." She paused. "That's all either of us is thinking about right now."

Lynn used to fret about being 170 pounds. That was before she reached Broadway with Mary Tyler Moore.

LYNN REDGRAVE IS, BY NOW, A FAIRLY SELF-CONFIDENT sort of person, but when I asked if her kids would be there on Broadway when their mommy and Mary Tyler Moore opened in a new play called Sweet Sue, Miss Redgrave threw up her hands and looked horrified. "Oh, no," she said. "I couldn't take that."

Opening-night nerves aside, Lynn seemed to have taken life by the shoulders and given it a good shake, balancing a marriage, kids, career, a tendency to pile on the pounds and a politically radical and even more famous (or infamous) sister, Vanessa.

It is more than 20 years since we saw Lynn on film in a wonderful British comedy called Georgy Girl. The late James Mason was the dirty old man and Lynn his plump, teenage prey. She was cute, lovable, sexy, but there is no denying she was plump. At one time, she weighed 170—which, even when you are 5 feet 10, is decidedly not skinny. She not only shed the weight but today is an official spokesperson for Weight Watchers.

Five members of the Redgrave clan (including Daddy, the late Sir Michael Redgrave) have been or are professional actors. Older sister Vanessa and brother Corin are always embroiled in controversy over their extreme left-wing views. I asked Lynn about that. "Corin's suffered for it a lot more than Vanessa. She was already established as an actress. He was just starting out. But no matter how much I disagree with them politically, they're still my brother and sister."

Lynn was a schoolgirl when she won a role in a London production of Shakespeare. Proudly, she phoned her father in New York. "You're not ready," he sternly informed her. Lynn ignored his advice, and her career was under way. At first, in Georgy Girl and My Fat Friend, Lynn seemed doomed to playing chubbies. She was a compulsive eater who even considered having her jaws cemented closed. But that seemed a bit drastic, and she threw herself into work instead. Whatever the reason, it worked, and the tall, slender Miss Redgrave had to have her costumes padded in Sweet Sue.

Films, theater, TV—she has done it all. For a while she was co-host of Good Morning America. A cable-TV network assigned her to cover the recent British royal wedding. Her co-stars have included Laurence Olivier, Rex Harrison, Woody Allen, Claudette Colbert. She only appeared once with her dad, in Hamlet.

Lynn and husband John Clark, a Britisher turned American, used to have a house overlooking the Irish Sea. Now they're Californians. "What about your children?" I asked. "Are they more British or California these days?" Lynn laughed, a pealing sound like bells. "Oh, California. We live out near the Valley, and my 5-year-old, well, she's a real Valley Girl."

I just love to hear Lynn say "Valley Girl" in that elegant British accent.

START NOW WITH 6 HIT ALBUMS FOR 1¢!

Yes, pick any 6 tapes or records for only 1¢. You agree to buy only 1 more hit at regular Club prices (usually $8.98 to $9.98) ...and take up to one full year to do it. Then you can choose another album free as a bonus. That's 8 smash hits for the price of one and there's nothing more to buy...ever!

No Further Obligation Whatsoever! It's all up to you! You buy what you want...when you want to. This is one music offer that really is different. And you pocket the savings!

Exciting "Members-Only" Benefits. Approximately every four weeks, you'll receive MEDLEY, the Club's exclusive music magazine featuring the Main Selection in your favorite music category, plus hundreds of other hits. You will also receive six special sale issues crammed with hit tapes and records—some as low as $4.98, $3.98 and even $2.98. In all, you'll have 19 convenient shop-at-home opportunities a year. As a member in good standing, send no money when you order, we'll bill you later. A shipping and handling charge is added to each shipment.

It's Easy To Get Your Favorite Hits! If you want the Main Selection do nothing. It will be sent to you automatically. If you want other selections, or none, just indicate your preference on the card always provided...and mail it back to us by the date specified. You'll always have at least 10 days to decide. But if you don't, you may return your Main Selection at our expense for full credit. You may cancel your membership whenever you wish upon completing your enrollment agreement. Or, remain a member and take advantage of future money-saving bargains.

FREE 10-Day No-Risk Offer! Listen to your 6 introductory hits for a full 10 days. If not satisfied, return them with no further obligation. You risk nothing! So don't delay. Pick your hits, write their numbers on the coupon, and mail today!

Garrett Morris Joins 'Hunter' Cast

By JERRY BUCK
AP Television Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — When Garrett Morris heard that NBC's "Hunter" was interested in making him a regular cast member, he figured he'd heard that tune before.

"I'd been on the show as a guest star with Isaac Hayes and Sheryl Lee Ralph," said Morris. "They said they liked me and wanted to bring me back, and I said, 'Yeah, yeah, yeah.' I'd heard that before. It wasn't until I saw the contract that I really believed it."

Morris, a member of the Not Ready for Prime-Time Players on the original "Saturday Night Live" TV show, plays a character called Sporty James on the detective drama.

"He's a street character," Morris said. "He's a bookie, probably. Been in jail. He has a lot of tentacles on the street. He wheels and deals and sometimes sells information to Hunter and sometimes barters it. In one episode he wants to get rid of a pusher who's using 8-year-olds. They're trying to make him into something more than just a mercenary."

Morris was dressed almost entirely in black and wore sunglasses so dark his eyes were invisible. His movements look fluid and effortless. He seems to glide from place to place.

He sees Sporty James as the same sort of character as Angel on "The Rockford Files." Stephen J. Cannell, who produces "Hunter," also turned out that classic detective show. Angel, played by Stuart Margolin, was a man with one foot on either side of the law. He walked whichever side was most advantageous at the moment.

Morris was also completing a role in a new Richard Pryor film called "Critical Condition."

"Richard is a patient who through a series of incidents becomes a doctor," he said. "I'm another patient, in the detox ward, playing a junkie, which is a real stretch for me because I know nothing about that kind of thing. I help him fly a helicopter since my character had been a 'copter mechanic in Vietnam.

"We're doing the looping for the TV version. Which means we're taking out all the good stuff. I can understand why, but you never get the same quality. In 'Car Wash' I had a line that never came out right for TV. It just wasn't the same without the four-letter word."

Morris was perhaps best-known on "Saturday Night Live" for the character Chico Esquela, the Latino baseball player who uttered, "Baseball has been berry, berry good to me."

He said Chico was his favorite character and the one that drew the most response from viewers. "We got letters and letters," he said, "and they made him a part of 'Weekend Update.' I loved Chico because I could hide behind him better than any other character. I felt I could do more outrageous things. I'm sorry I can't make as much use of it as I'd like to."

Morris is considered a comic actor, but said, "Most of my history in show business has been as a serious actor until 'Saturday Night Live.' After five years of that, people forgot that I had been a serious actor."

He grew up in New Orleans and his work in the church choir developed into a job with the Harry Belafonte Singers. He graduated from Dillard University with a degree in voice and composition. "I still write," he said, "but I have a writer's block I don't even want to discuss."

In New York, he lived at the Harlem YMCA, whose Drama Club was then featuring such newcomers as Cicely Tyson, Clarence Williams III, Isabel Sanford, Godfrey Cambridge and Diana Sands.

Morris soon landed parts in such Off Broadway productions as "Porgy and Bess," "Hallelujah Baby," and "I'm Solomon." He also wrote such plays as "Stagger Lee" and "The Secret Place."

He was hired as a writer for the movie "Coolie High," but ended up with a starring role. He also went to "Saturday Night Live" as a writer and became one of the stars.

HAS NEW ROLE ON 'HUNTER' — Garrett Morris, who was an original member of the 'Saturday Night Live' Not Ready for Prime-Time Players, joins the cast of "Hunter," playing a character called Sporty James. Of his new role, Morris says, "He's a street character. He's a bookie, probably. Been in jail. He has a lot of tentacles on the street."

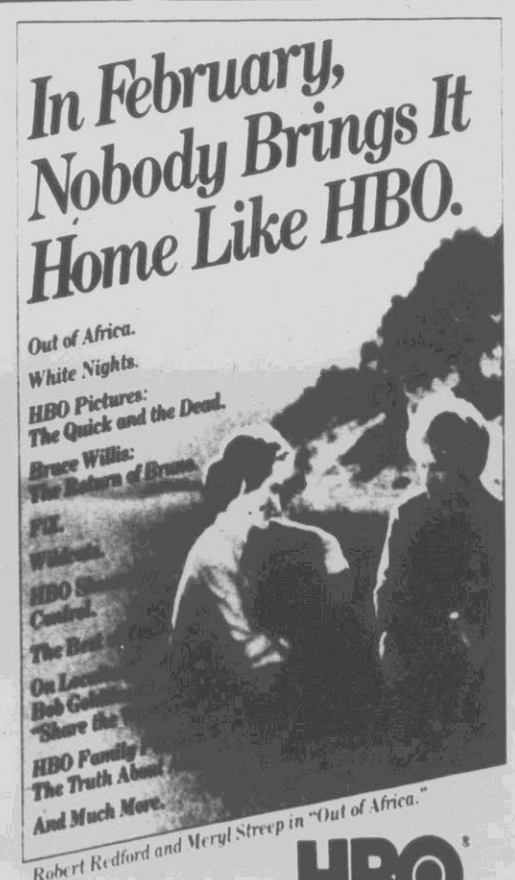
Toasty Tunes

MTV plans to warm up bleak February with some scorching rock 'n' roll specials. Outstanding in the lineup: "Howard Jones' 'Last World Dream' Concert"; a charity concert by guitar-smashing Who alumnus Pete Townshend; and the "Australian Made Concert," last month's tour of eight Aussie bands in Australia's capital cities.



Robert Redford and Meryl Streep in "Out of Africa."

WEDDING GOWN CARE

With all the excitement following the wedding, was your wedding gown put away and forgotten? Your bridal gown is a priceless investment. Proper care is important if you want to preserve it for sentimental enjoyment or perhaps for a daughter's wedding.

All fabrics are susceptible to deterioration over a period of time. The delicate lace and satin of a wedding gown is particularly fragile, so it should be cared for with special handling procedures. Many stains set very quickly and turn brown with age.

Come by A CLEANER WORLD and find out about the service available to brides by which wedding gowns and accessories are restored and packaged for long time storage in a beautiful bridal chest.

Nuovo "Nova"

"Nova," PBS's science series, has a crop of new programs. On Feb. 3, we find out why planes crash and what airlines are doing about it. For the rest of the month, rain-forest orangutans (Feb. 10), Sigmund Freud (Feb. 17) and a hole in the ozone layer (Feb. 24) occupy our attention. March brings us an interview with a weaponeer (March 3), a two-hour recap of "Nova,"'s best (March 10), a film of a human conception (March 17), the soil crisis (March 24) and the phenomenon of "desertification" (March 31).

'C&L' Welcomes Back An Ex-Sweathog

By Ian Harmer

HOLLYWOOD — Actor Robert Hegyes adopted a novel approach when the casting director of "Cagney & Lacey" called him in to read for a part — he spat in her eye.

It's not a technique he recommends for the average job-hunter, and it didn't get him the role he went in to audition for.

But it made enough of an impact for him to be remembered when the show's producers decided they needed a new regular at the 14th Precinct. Hegyes was recently signed for a three-year hitch alongside Tyne Daly and Sharon Gless.

He has been in voluntary exile from weekly TV since "Welcome Back, Kotter" ended its four-season run on ABC in 1979, preferring to concentrate on directing and writing. Hegyes played a Jewish-Puerto Rican cutup called Juan Luis Pedro Phillipo de Huevos Epstein in "Kotter." His newest incarnation is as undercover cop Bob Esposito.

The years he had spent off-camera writing scripts and "treatments" for a roster of show-biz pals, including "Kotter" cohort John Travolta, stood him in good stead when Esposito had to be brought to life.

"I turned up on the set the very first day with a four-page biography of Bob, and I think it says something for the creative quality of this show that the writers welcomed my suggestions," saysHegyes. "I would not have been upset if they had rejected my input, because I signed on purely as a performer, and in other series, actors are not encouraged to contribute. But 'Cagney & Lacey' is a team effort, and Esposito has been developed as a character beyond the original plan.

"To start with, I was called in on a week-to-week basis, but this season I'm in for 19 out of 22 episodes, and they just extended me for another two years after this one."

Hegyes' first contact with "Cagney & Lacey" came more than a year ago when a script called for a Puerto Rican character who was grief-stricken and angry with the police after his younger brother was killed while working as a paid informant.

COMING ATTRACTIONS

Slipcovers and all, Getty is golden

By Dennis Flaim

On TV, female camaraderie is an effective tonic for sagging Nielsen numbers. Girls' school high jinks made "The Facts of Life" NBC's longest-running sitcom; in "Cagney & Lacey" and "Kate & Allie," respectively, single moms' and lady cops' relationships strengthened CBS ratings.

Estelle Getty

But NBC's "The Golden Girls" has the jump on — and seniority over — these shows, with characters whose age, as well as sex, is their bond.

Estelle Getty, 61, plays Sophia, a cantankerous Sicilian mother who shares a house with her daughter (Bea Arthur), an amorous Southern belle (Rue McClanahan) and a kindhearted but mindless ditz (Betty White).

Getty, who claims that "I'm not nearly as attractive as the other three women," doesn't mind trudging through the show in Sophia's Red Cross shoes and frumpy dresses while her co-stars flaunt their golden-year waistlines in glamorous outfits.

"The Golden Girls" has been a hit with everyone — young and old, men and women.

Even my husband watches it; he never watches comedy. I'm not sure whether he watches it because he likes me or the show.

It's also a little risque.

It's grown up. It's irreverent. We say a lot of things and get away with it because there's something about an older woman saying it that makes it funny. An attractive young woman saying it becomes lewd.

No one must recognize you after you climb out from under Sophia's wig.

I'm happy that people don't recognize me on the street. It gives me a private life. Entertainment people are royalty in this country. People line up just to look at you.

Sophia seems to owe a great deal to the archetypal Jewish mother.

As a matter of fact, the most Jewish mothers in the world are Southern mothers. Real Jewish mothers pale in comparison.

Many of your roles — in Broadway's "Torch Song Trilogy," the feature film "Mask" — have been maternal ones.

I've been playing mothers most of my life. Maybe it's because I look like a mother. I tend to be a mothering person.

In real life, too? Do you blanket all your furniture in plastic slipcovers?

I would have, but my husband didn't let me. It bothered me for a long time that we didn't have plastic on anything.

MONDAY
REMEMBER THE ALAMO

Brian Keith (l.) stars as Davy Crockett and James Arness is Jim Bowie in "The Alamo: 13 Days to Glory." The NBC movie airs Monday, Jan. 26.

TUESDAY
SPY TIME

On "The Wizard," a teenager who hallucinates and thinks his science teacher is a Russian spy turns to Simon (David Rappaport) for help. It airs Tuesday, Jan. 27, on CBS.

TV Chatter

These days, classic 1950s and '60s TV shows have become hits all over again in syndication. But despite their popularity, the oldies but goldies are often criticized for presenting a rose-colored vision of family life. One sitcom that comes in for special derision because of its saccharine view of domestic bliss is "Father Knows Best," which aired from 1954 to 1963. Robert Young, now 79, played Jim Anderson, the all-knowing (or was that know-it-all?) dad on the show, and he still defends its hokey vision of the nuclear family. "I think the critics are right and wrong," he says. "They're right in that it shows only one side of the family, but that's the way the program was conceived. We couldn't deviate too far from that. Say in one episode the little girl who played Kathy (Lauren Chapin) suffers from polio and even dies. That would follow the pattern of the disease in real life. But what would it have done to the show? It would have killed it. We were forced to stay with this one-sided picture of the family. We weren't trying to show life in its entirety. It was fantasy."

If Peter Scolari had taken his agent's advice, he wouldn't be playing Michael, the yuppie talk-show producer, on CBS's "Newhart." Scolari had starred in many sitcoms, including "Bosom Buddies" and "Goodtime Girls," and his agent encouraged him to get away from comedy. "She said, 'Honey, nobody will ever accept you as a light comedian. You look normal!' But I seem to have proved her wrong." The 31-year-old actor's love interest on the show is Julia Duffy, who plays Stephanie, an heiress to a multimillion-dollar fortune and a maid at the Vermont inn owned by Dick Loudon (Bob Newhart). To help him understand Stephanie's character, which is selfish, childish, egocentric and hilarious, Scolari calls on memories of his teen years, when he worked as a counselor at a summer camp in Maine for the children of the rich and famous. The campers from years ago also help him interpret his own role as well. "I stole more than my share of attitude on the show from the youngsters at the camp, who went on to become tennis and golf players. There were little 'Stephanies' all over the place. You know, little blond-haired girls who rode horses to school."

Brian Robbins has a tough acting assignment as Eric, the street punk, on ABC's Wednesday-night sitcom "Head of the Class." Actually, Eric has heavier baggage than the leather jacket and slicked-back hairdo he sports on the show. He is also supposed to have the IQ of a genius, as do all his other classmates. Imagine John Travolta as a Mensa member. That's the difficult concept Robbins has to put across each week. The actor confides that his role requires a lot of stretching. "Eric is your basic street-smart intellectual. He's a street kid with a 200 IQ, which makes him very different from most street kids you see on TV, who are usually idiots. That's what's fun about it." Unfortunately, Robbins can't draw on his own high school experiences to interpret Eric. "I wasn't the greatest student in the world," he concedes.

Before shooting "The Golden Child" with Eddie Murphy, British model Charlotte Lewis found an unusual way to rehearse. "In the tube (subway) in London I used to practice on a poster of Eddie from 'Beverly Hills Cop.' I'd see his picture and talk to it. Well, I read lines from the script. I didn't just stand there and say, 'Hi, how are you today?' " ... Linda Hamilton explains why she didn't do any research for her role as a heart surgeon in the recent film "King Kong Lives!": "There really isn't any medical literature for performing open-heart surgery on a giant ape, so I didn't know who to talk to. We ended up using a chain saw on the Big Fella."

SOAP OPERA WEEK

Convinced that stars of 'SB' are family

By Kimberly Redmond

I'm convinced that Robin Mattson (Gina Capwell) and Lynn Clark (Lily Light), who play mother and daughter on "Santa Barbara," are related in real life. Am I right? — D.W., Hardy, KY.

Robin Mattson

Sorry, D.W., the two ladies are not related, but Clark was chosen for the role of Lily in part because of her striking resemblance to Mattson.

Whatever happened to the "Guiding Light" character of Beth Raines, played by Judi Evans? We suddenly noticed that she was no longer listed in the credits. — M.B., Red Oak, Iowa.

Evidentally you missed several episodes of "GH" over the past few months. Beth was kidnapped by Professor Blackburn and it was supposed that she had drowned in Stoney Lake along with Blackburn. Phillip Spaulding launched an all-out search for Beth's body, but it was never recovered. Later, Phillip's father, Alan Spaulding, faked proof of Beth's death in order to convince Phillip to forget about Beth and get on with his life. Judi Evans, who played Beth, is currently playing mystery woman Adrienne on "Days of Our Lives." So far all we know about Adrienne is that she has some connection to Steve "Patch" Johnson's past life.

Judi Evans

I'd like to know if Keith Charles, who plays the butler, Mr. Dowd, on "Ryan's Hope" has ever appeared on "The Young and the Restless." My mother says he did. — B.K., Levittown, PA.

Charles has played Ralph Mitchell on "As the World Turns," Rick Oliver on "Edge of Night," Branden Spaulding on "Guiding Light" and Nick Kane on "Secret Storm." To my knowledge, he's never appeared on "The Young and the Restless."

(Have a question about soap operas? Write Kimberly Redmond at 200 Park Ave., Room 602, New York, NY 10166. Questions cannot be answered personally but those of general interest will be answered in future columns.)

WEDNESDAY
LIFE WITHOUT CARLA

Being Carla's ex sure has its advantages when it means getting your own show. Dan Hedaya (center) stars as Nick Tortelli. Timothy Williams and Mandy Ingber play his son and daughter-in-law. "The Tortellis" airs Wednesday, Jan. 28, on NBC.

THURSDAY
GENTLE PERSUASION

On "L.A. Law" Michael (Harry Hamlin) doesn't take rejection well and desperately tries once again to get Grace (Susan Dey) to recognize his charm and go out with him. It airs Thursday, Jan. 29, on NBC. (Rebroadcast)

Take the Clara Johnson Test.

In Alamance County, North Carolina, Honda lawn mowers are assembled from the wheels up. Then each mower must pass rigid quality control standards before we ship it.

The final test is a critical performance check to ensure easy starting. We call it the Clara Johnson Test. At the end of the assembly line, each mower is started or it doesn't ship.

Come in and give the whole line of Honda mowers the Clara Johnson Test yourself. Each one will start easily, or it wouldn't be a Honda.

Three Hot Couples To Watch In '87

By Connie Passalacqua

Chemistry is the undefinable quality between two actors that changes a soap couple from being a mere romantic twosome into becoming a soap-opera legend. Bo and Hope ("Days of Our Lives"), Luke and Laura ("General Hospital"), Steve and Alice ("Another World") – all almost singlehandledly propelled the ratings of their respective soaps markedly upward. Right now, there exists three sets of actors whose characters' romances seem promising enough to make the pretty dull soap scene exciting again in 1987.

• Erica Kane and Travis Montgomery (Susan Lucci and Larkin Malloy) of "All My Children" – The recent casting of Malloy, who was magnificent as Sky Whitney on "Edge of Night," and good despite the dreadful material given to him during his two years as Kyle Sampson on "Guiding Light," to play La Lucci's latest love interest not only answered fans' prayers, but is probably the best soapcasting decision of the decade.

Erica Kane, who changes lovers as often and as regularly as other people renew drivers' licenses, has never met her match through 16 years of trying – until now. Malloy is a master at playing thefiery, forceful, immovable hero; all of which makes his character Erica's perfect counterpart. And maybe Malloy can help Lucci capture that elusive Emmy once and for all.

• Mason Capwell and Julia Wainwright (Lane Davies and Nancy Grahn) of "Santa Barbara" – Truly a soap couple for the '80s, Mason and Julia are intelligent, articulate and perfectly matched as clever attorneys. The thirtyish Julia, whose biological clock is ticking loudly, initially picked Mason only to father her out-of-wedlock child, but now she's falling in love with him. Grahn gives hercharacter a fine touch of vulnerability. which perfectly counters the acerbic edge Davies so masterfully gives to Mason, daytime's own Addison DeWitt.

• John Dixon and Lucinda Walsh (Larry Bryggman and Elizabeth Hubbard) of "As the World Turns" – If Mason and Julia are even vaguely evocative of Tracy and Hepburn, than these two are a couple straight out of "Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?"

Michele Will Tell

Dear Michele: Ruth Roman of "Knots Landing" really winds my clock. How old is she? Where was she born? — B. BOWMAN, JONESBORO, TENN.

The actress, who was recently seen as Sylvia Lean on "Knots Landing," was born Norma Roman on Dec. 22, 1923, in Lynn, Mass. Roman began her career with a bit part as a WAVE (Women Accepted for Volunteer Emergency Service) in the film "Stage Door Canteen" (1943). She appeared in bit roles for a few years before being cast in 1949's RKO thriller "The Window." Later that year, she appeared in "Champion," which ultimately established her career. Her film credits include "Three Secrets" (1950), "Lightening Strikes Twice" (1951), "The Far Country" (1955) and "Bitter Victory" (1958). Since the mid-'60s, she has graced the small screen in such series as "Dr. Kildare" and "Ironside." Roman married Jack Flaxman in 1940, but they divorced in 1941. In 1950, she married publisher Mortimer Hall. A son, Richard Hall, was born in 1952. The couple split in 1955. Roman's third marriage to agent Bud Moss in 1956 was annulled in 1960. An interesting note: Roman was a passenger on and survived the sinking of the Andrea Doria in 1956.

Dear Michele: Does comedian Jerry Lewis have any brothers or sisters? — LAURA GARCIA, PUEBLO, COLO.

Lewis was born Joseph Levitch on March 16, 1926, in Newark, N.J. He is the only child of singer Daniel Levitch and his pianist-wife Rae Lewis.

Dear Michele: Who appeared with Gene Kelly in the film "Singin' in the Rain"? — ELEANORE HERMAN, STREETSBORO, OHIO

Gene Kelly, Debbie Reynolds, Donald O'Connor, Jean Hagen, Cyd Charisse, Millard Mitchell, Madge Blake, Rita Moreno and Douglas Fowley appeared in this 1952 classic. Kelly shared the directorial reins with Stanley Donen.

It's Time To Remember The Alamo

By Robert DiMatteo

Back in 1960, when Hollywood was in the middle of a period of infatuation with big, expensive movie spectaculars, John Wayne directed and starred in a loud and long epic, "The Alamo." The tale of how a courageous band of Texans defended the famous fort against the attack of Mexican troops that far outnumbered them, the movie was stiff and clunky, but did have some memorable spectacles. Now, more than a quarter of a century later, NBC airs The Alamo: 13 Days to Glory (Jan. 26), a new three-hour version of the 1836 event. For symmetry, NBC's rendition features Wayne's son Ethan in a co-starring role, and uses the same Texas location that the 1960 picture used.

"The Alamo: 13 Days to Glory" also features some of TV's best western-type actors in a rare opportunity to show their shoot-'em-up prowess. Ever since the western went into decline, actors like James Arness ("Gunsmoke") and Lorne Greene ("Bonanza") have had their options limited. "The Alamo" gives them a chance to strap on their holsters again. Arness stars as Jim Bowie, Greene plays Sam Houston, and sagebrush veteran Brian Keith portrays Davy Crockett. Leading the Mexican army is Raul Julia as Gen. Santa Anna, while Alec Baldwin ("Dress Gray") is William Travis, the likably callow young officer who shares command with Bowie. Obviously, NBC's battle cry this week is "Remember the Alamo!"

With this past year's theatrical hit "The Fly," director David Cronenberg finally achieved the wide-scale recognition that fans of his earlier films could have predicted. On Jan. 25, ABC offers the 1983 Cronenberg film The Dead Zone, a skillful telling of the Stephen King story about a man (Christopher Walken) who comes out of a near-deadly accident with the ability to see into the future by touching people. The character's tactile sensitivity carries the burden of knowledge, and this surprisingly low-key thriller examines how one deals with troubling information about the fate of otherpeople. This is one of the best movies made from King stories, and it's a compelling example of Cronenberg's gifts as a filmmaker.

The week's repeats include two "made-fors" from previous seasons. On Jan. 25, NBC airs Shattered Vows, starring Valerie Bertinelli as a young nun torn between her love for God and her feelings for a priest. CBS's Passions (Jan. 27) asks us to consider the dilemma of a wife (Joanne Woodward) who finds out that her late husband (Richard Crenna) had sustained an eight-year affair with a young sculptress (Lindsay Wagner).

The Russians Are Coming

ABC's controversial "Amerika," which had Soviet authorities threatening to close the network's Moscow news bureau when the project was first announced, has been assigned an airdate. The 14-hour-plus miniseries stars Kris Kristofferson and Robert Urich among others, and will be broadcast Feb. 15-21. "Amerika" depicts life in the USA after 10 years of Soviet domination have resulted in Communist atrocities.

Grammy Whammy

New York City will host the 30th Grammy Awards at Radio City Music Hall, and CBS will broadcast the event in February 1988. Mayor Koch has been trying for five years to bring the honors, which recognize outstanding achievement in the recording field, back to the Big Apple. New York last hosted the Grammys in 1974 at the Uris Theater and in 1981 at the Felt Forum.

BEHIND THE SCENES

Documenting war, not media hype

By Frank Lovece

From the halls of California/to the shores of NYC/He'll fight his projects' battles and get them on TV.

Arnold Shapiro makes documentaries — what he calls "reality television." He was the producer/director/writer of "Scared Straight," the documentary about prison convicts whose lectures to young offenders helped keep some of them "straight"; he won an Oscar and an Emmy for it.

Arnold Shapiro

Since then, he's concentrated on producing, his documentaries have concentrated on war. "Return to Iwo Jima" (1985), "The Unknown Soldier" (1985) and now "POW: Americans in Enemy Hands." Check local listings for air times.

"The younger generation's idea of World War II is from 'Hogan's Heroes,'" Shapiro says incredulously. "All they know of Korea is 'M*A*S*H.' And 'Rambo' is what people understand — or don't understand — about POWs."

"POW," hosted by Robert Wagner, chronicles the experiences of nine prisoners from the three wars. Written and directed by Emmy winner Carol L. Fleisher, the documentary examines the men's capture and survival, torture, escape attempts, families and homecomings.

Shapiro himself is not a war veteran. He is, however, an amateur war historian who became interested in producing documentaries about war when his instincts failed to make sense of WWII.

"I couldn't comprehend it. The more you read, the more incredible it seems. The almost science-fiction nature of it overwhelmed me."

Then, too, the last few years have marked the 40th anniversary of several WWII events, a programmer's hook if there ever was one.

Shapiro began his career on a show called "Scholar Quiz," and graduated to countless documentaries and awards. Other positions included executive producer of the Disney Channel series "Wish Upon a Star."

He became accustomed early to having to fight to get documentaries on the air. Lately, he says, it's become more difficult as commercial networks continue to trim their news divisions.

"Everything's so expensive that the networks are afraid to take chances," Shapiro laments. Even with his track record, "it's getting harder and harder finding air time for documentaries. PBS is the last great refuge."

Super Bowl

By Adam Beckerman

Five toes and a callused instep. After all, the game is called "football," and in a sport where size, speed and strength are the criteria by which a player's raw skills are judged, it's often the place-kicking specialist, the average-sized fellow seen walking the sidelines with his jacket on, who in moments of great stress has to score vital points by kicking the pigskin through the goal posts.

A former kicker concluding his 25th year behind the microphone will be calling the play by play of Super Bowl XXI when CBS airs the game Sunday, Jan. 25. Pat Summerall, whose first broadcast was a 17-7 Browns win over the Giants in 1962, was drafted as an end out of the University of Arkansas by the Detroit Lions in 1952, but kicked for the St. Louis Cardinals from '53-56. "I was the kicker, but we didn't need field goals," he admits. "We needed touchdowns." Summerall arrived in New York in '57, one year after Ben Agajanian had kicked two field goals and five PATs in the Giants' title win over the Bears, and one year before Summerall's own 36-yarder would give New York a 3-0 lead over the Colts in 1958's "Greatest Game Ever Played."

In the '59 title rematch in Baltimore, the 10-2 Giants were leading the Colts 9-0 on the strength of Summerall's 23-, 37- and 22-yard efforts when, in the fourth quarter, New York was faced with a fourth down and inches on the Colt 28. "(Giant head coach) Jim Lee Howell motioned to me, so I started to trot out for a field goal. But (defensive coach) Landry was next to him and said to Jim Lee, 'We're gonna need more than three, coach. Our defense is about to break.' So Howell sent halfback Alex Webster into the right side of the line, where he was met by the entire Colt defense. Unitas then led Baltimore to 24 straight points and a 31-16 championship.

The first four Super Bowls produced their share of place-kicking lore: Kansas City Chief Mike Mercer's 31-yarder temporarily cut Green Bay's lead to 14-10 and represents the initial Super Bowl three-pointer. Don Chandler climaxed his productive career with four Packer field goals in Super Bowl II; Namath-tormentor Lou Michaels missed a 34-yard chippy to end Baltimore's first possession and set the tone for the Colts in Super Bowl III, and a year later, Jan Stenerud's 48-yarder, still a distance record, sent the underdog Chiefs on their way against the Vikings.

It was Super Bowl V, however, that finally produced a kick worthy of a Sports Illustrated cover. In a game full of blunders, the final gaff came as Colt linebacker Mike Curtis returned a Craig Morton interception from his 48 to the Dallas 28. Two plays later, up strode rookie place-kicker Jim O'Brien, known as Lassie by his teammates on account of his long locks. With nine seconds left, O'Brien strode through the ball confidently and gave the Colts a 16-13 victory.

Miami's attempt to cap its sublime 1972 17-0 season with a 17-0 defeat of the Redskins was ridiculously sidetracked by a balding 28-year-old left-footed sidewinder from Cyprus named Garo Yepremian. With just more than two minutes to go in Super Bowl VII, his 42-yard attempt was blocked by Bill Brundige. The ball bounced crazily back towards Yepremian, whose panic-stricken efforts at tossing it forward with his elbow landed into the grateful hands of Redskin Mike Bass, who raced 49 yards down the sideline to make it 14-7. Though victorious, a despondent Garo, a decent soul who hand-painted ties in the off-season, vowed to the public after the game never to pass again.

If the kicker's first motto is, "You're only as good as your last kick," surely his second must be, "It doesn't matter what they look like, as long as they go through."

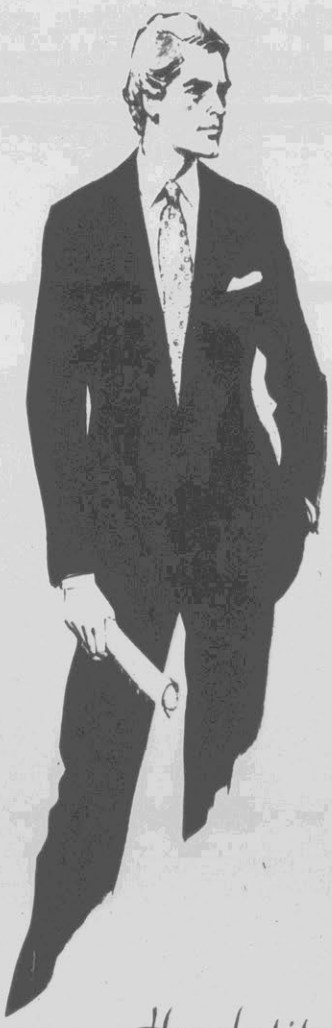
Do you fit your suit, or does it fit you?



All suits look great in the store. Freshly pressed and hanging straight. But since your body has curves and contours, all suits don't fit alike.

Hand stitching is the difference.

Most suits are machine-made. And machine stitching is rigid. That's why some makers' suits bunch in the back and sit up straight around the collar. You don't fit the suit.

A hand stitch is a looser stitch. It gives enough to fit your body. Hangs loose around the collar. Falls freely down your back. The suit fits you. In a day when quality is hard to find, all our suits have at least some hand stitching.

We think fit is important.

That's why we look into how our suits are manufactured. And carry suits that are partially hand-stitched. So you can choose your price and still be assured of Coffman's quality and fit. Visit us on the mall in Greenville and try on the Coffman's difference.
