Military Launches Largest Peacetime Call-Up

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Army and Marine Corps, with little public fanfare, have launched the nation's largest peacetime military call-up by preparing orders to some 257,000 inactive reservists to report for a single day of active duty.

The call-ups are part of a Defense Department effort to improve the readiness of the Individual Ready Reserve by screening reservists medically and reminding them they still have a military obligation.

All four branches of the military have been directed by Congress and Pentagon brass to begin mandatory one-day musters of their ready reserves during the current fiscal year. But the Army and Marine Corps are the first two services to launch the effort on a nationwide basis.

The Army, whose ready reserve force of more than 300,000 is by far the largest, got its program off to a rocky start in October thanks largely to a delay in congressional passage of the Pentagon's budget. But it is now sending out a stream of some 16,000 to 20,000 notices a month, ordering reservists to telephone recruiting stations and schedule their one-day appearance.

Reservists who report for screening are eligible for one day's pay and reimbursement of travel expenses.

The Marine Corps decided to narrow the number of inactive reservists it would recall this year by waiting until January to start the process, but its program is also now under way. The Marines are taking a slightly different tack compared with the Army, setting a specific weekend during each month when a group of reservists must report to one of 52 mobilization centers.

Because of various exemptions, the Army says its call-up program for the year is focusing on roughly 240,000 inactive reservists. The Marine Corps has targeted 16,900 of its 48,000 ready reserve members this year.

The Air Force and Navy say they will begin nationwide musters in April, but their plans are still being formulated.

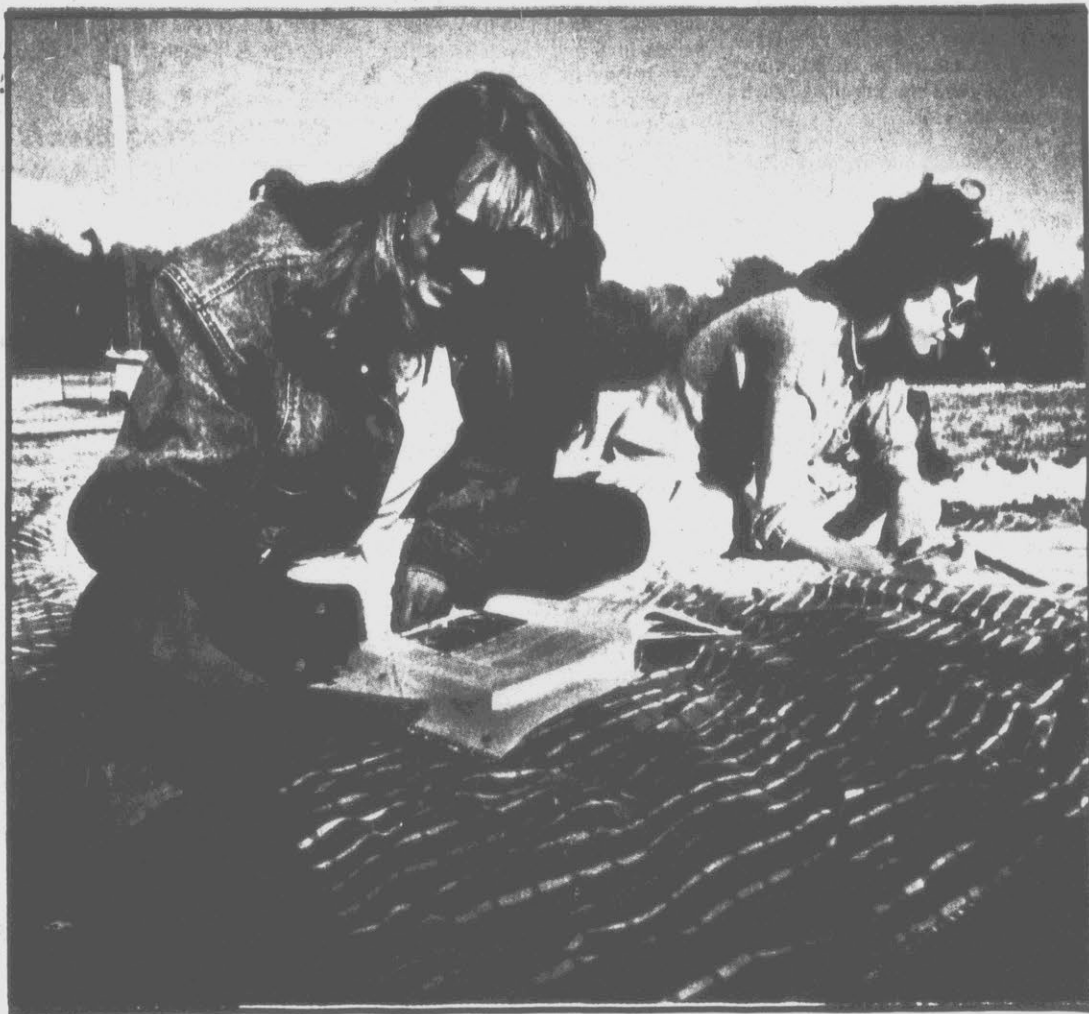

The Army says the current musters already constitute the largest ever undertaken in peacetime. Previous call-ups have been linked to specific wars, with the largest call-up of Army Reservists involving 240,500 soldiers mobilized during the Korean War.

All told, the four services have roughly 500,000 men and women in the ready reserve, compared with 2.1 million on active duty and 1.13 million in the Selected Reserve, which consists of the regular Reserve and National Guard.

Iranian Reports Say Seib Will Be Expelled

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Wall Street Journal reporter Gerald F. Seib, who had been detained in Iran and accused of spying, was ordered expelled today, the official Iranian news agency reported.

The Islamic Republic News Agency, monitored in Nicosia, quoted an unidentified source as saying Seib would leave the country Thursday. The agency did not elaborate.

In a previous dispatch, IRNA had quoted an unidentified Information Ministry official as saying Seib was expelled after a judicial probe into his case concluded.

There was no immediate explanation for the contradiction between the two dispatches. Both articles quoted officials as saying Seib would be barred permanently from Iran.

Iranian Prime Minister Hussein Musavi had said earlier today Seib would be "expelled" within two or three days.

Seib's brother, Paul, said from the family home in Hays, Kansas, that relatives were "upbeat and elated but also reserved because we don't take anything for granted until the Wall Street Journal tell us 2's definitely been released."

Seib, 30, was among a group of 57 foreign reporters who visited Iran at the invitation of the Iranian government last week. IRNA said the reporters had been invited to file reports of "new Iranian victories" in the war against Iraq.

Seib had been in Tehran 10 days when he was seized outside his hotel Saturday and accused of being a "spy of the Zionist regime."

Tehran Radio on Monday alleged Seib entered the country with a false passport disguised as a journalist.

Musavi said in a Tehran Radio interview today that Seib was "engaged in certain investigations and collecting intelligence at the front."

"After being questioned, the issue has been clarified," Musavi said.

Seib has been a Journal reporter since 1978, and has covered the Middle East from Cairo since 1985.

Jim Fusilli, a spokesman for the Journal in New York, said he was aware of a report that Seib "has been or is being (released) but we know nothing further."

"It's wonderful news if it can be confirmed," said Dennis Farney, a Journal colleague who is staying with Seib's parents to help field inquiries.

In Washington, Nancy Beck, a State Department spokeswoman, said today that she didn't know anything about reports of Seib being expelled.

The Swiss Embassy in Tehran, which has represented U.S. interests there since the 1979 Iranian revolution, today refused to comment on Seib's case.

Journal chairman Warren H. Phillips called the detention a "dreadful mistake" and said Seib had been seized "without any cause at all."

In Washington, the American Society of Newspaper Editors protested Seib's arrest in a telegram Tuesday to the Iranian Ministry of Islamic Guidance.

"This kind of mistake hurts the reputation of Iran anywhere in the world," ASNE President Michael G. Gartner said in the telegram.

Musavi also commented on the presence of U.S. warships in the eastern Mediterranean, saying, "America must know that any kind of attack on Moslems anywhere in the world will not go unanswered."

"Moslems have the capability to respond to any kind of attack and America will certainly not achieve anything from it," Musavi said.

Council Delays Action On City Pay Plan Study

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

The Greenville City Council, for some time planning a joint pay plan study with the Utilities Commission, held a special meeting with commission members Tuesday night to consider awarding contracts for the project.

But the council took no action, saying instead it would consider the contract at a workshop meeting on Monday.

The Utilities Commission board, however, did approve awarding the $50,000 contract to Arthur Young, subject to the council's approval next week.

The study, to be paid for half by the city and half by the Utilities Commission, will review about 250 job classifications to provide a compensation system that is objective, competitive, equitable, understandable and easily administered; assign pay grades; permit salary advances within ranges to pay for performance, and include pertinent benefits information.

A joint committee composed of three city representatives — Councilman Ed Carter, City Manager Gail Meeks and Personnel Director Gerry Dail — and three utilities representatives — Commissioner Andy Warren, General Manager Malcolm Green and support services manager Ed Askew — recommended that the Arthur Young firm be chosen to do the study.

The money for the project was included in both the city and utilities budgets this year and the committee has been working since last September to select a consultant to do the work.

The study is expected to take three to four months to complete.

Following a discussion of the proposed study, Mayor Les Garner told commission members "the council decided not to take action ... not to make a final decision here." Rather, he said, the council would consider the contract at its Monday meeting.

"We're not throwing you a curve," Garner said.

Wellness Centers Allowed On Medical District Sites

By DON REUTER
Reflector Staff Writer

The Greenville City Council has approved an amendment to the Zoning Ordinance which will allow wellness centers as permitted uses in three Medical District zoning classifications.

Council members approved the measure by a 4-2 margin at a special meeting Tuesday night.

A request for a more comprehensive definition of a wellness center, including screening requirements for outside facilities, was part of the amendment, which will allow facilities within the guidelines of the description in MD-3, MD-4 and MD-6 zoning classifications.

MD-3 is an office and institutional zone, while MD-4 is a zone designed for the sale of convenience goods and personal services and MD-6 is a highway commercial zone.

The city's Planning and Zoning Commission had recommended allowing exercise centers with indoor and outdoor activities in the three zones through special use permits.

The commission suggested calling a wellness center an indoor-outdoor exercise center since it is expected to include a swimming pool, tennis courts and jogging courses.

Council members Janice Buck, Lorraine Shinn, Ed Carter and Bill Hadden supported the amendment, while Inez Fridley and Nancy Jenkins opposed the measure, favoring the planning board's recommendation.

"I think sweat shops (gyms) around the hospital would disturb me, but a more professional center with appropriate medical attention ... would be more wholesome for that particular environment," Carter said.

Mrs. Buck said a wellness center is

GUC Will Purchase Cheaper Electricity

Greenville Utilities Commission customers should begin receiving some low-cost hydroelectric power from the Southeastern Power Administration (SEPA) this month, thanks to action by the GUC board Tuesday night.

The board authorized General Manager Malcolm Green to sign the contracts necessary for Greenville to begin receiving some power from the federal Kerr Project.

Green said the hydroelectric power won't mean a reduction in rates for customers. But he suggested that the new power source will help cushion future rate increases.

Farmville Wants DeVisconti House Restored

By CAROL TYER
Reflector Staff Writer

Farmville commissioners agreed Tuesday night to try once again to restore the Tabitha M. DeVisconti house willed to the town several years ago for use as a museum, rather than tear it down and build a replica.

The commissioners voted to ask the General Assembly to enact a local bill waiving the town from the purchasing and general contracting general statutes for this project, since the money is being provided entirely from a private source. It is hoped that, using local contractors, the house can be repaired and restored so as to be accessible to the public.

Miss DeVisconti left money at her death for making her house at the south end of the 200 block of South Main Street a museum and her yard a park. The house was vine-covered and unpainted and a repository for the antiques she lived with and the yard was a wild area and bird sanctuary. The town has, since her death, removed undergrowth from a tree-covered area and installed walkways. The house has been boarded up and the vines removed.

Judge John B. Lewis, a member of the May Commission which was charged with the responsibility of guiding the town in creating a park and museum of the property, appeared before the board, saying the commission has been unable to find a general contractor that would bid on the job and that estimates are coming in higher than the amount of money left in the fund — $205,957 as of Dec. 31, 1986 — to do the restoration work, even if a non-original rear portion of the house is removed.

He said the commission proposes to dismantle the house, keeping mantels, doors, good bricks, good flooring — whatever can be saved — to put into a replica of the house as it is believed to have looked when it was built about 1870. He showed a drawing of the proposed replica, including white paint and green shutters. The replica, he said, could be insulated, making it possible to heat and cool. He also proposed a ground-level addition at the rear of the building that would be a undivided space suitable for housing and displaying museum collections.

Commissioner Moses Moye said he believes that resorting to a replica would violate Miss DeVisconti's wishes. He said he believes removing the vines violated her wishes as would painting the house — that he believes she left the money so her house could be kept as nearly as possible as it looked when she lived there.

The commissioners did not rule out going to the replica plan later, but said they would first like to make a further effort at restoration first.

Approval was given for the purchase of new light fixtures and poles for the baseball field on Horne Avenue. Keith Huber, long a volunteer in the town's baseball programs, spoke on behalf of the improved lighting. He said the more-than-20-year-old lighting now in use so poor it creates dangerous playing conditions. Utilities Director Bill Modlin said that new lighting would be much more energy-efficient than the old. The cost is expected to be not more than $1,300.

A resolution was adopted authorizing the mayor to contract with the Southeastern Power Administration for the purchase of hydroelectric power beginning this month. This power is considerably less expensive than nuclear and coal-generated power purchased from Carolina Power and Light. It is estimated that this contract will save the town $42,000 per year, based on this year's power cost.

Approval was given for a change order to a contract with Barrus Construction for additional street resurfacing and construction. Improved will be the alley on the west side of Main Street between Wilson and Church streets; the 100 block of West Church Street; the 100 block of Mandarin Drive; Pinecrest Drive; Circle Drive, Melissa Drive, Prince Road, the 300 and 400 blocks of South Pitt Street; the 100 block of Park Street; the 100 block of West Jones Street;

Martin Lists School Needs

WILLIAMSTON — A study shows that Martin County's school needs could cost nearly $11 million if fully met.

That figure was arrived at through a survey requested by the North Carolina Department of Public Instruction. It was presented at the February meeting of the Martin County Board of Education.

County Commissioners later voted to inform the state the county could not finance the improvements.

The survey did not specify individual schools, but listed needs in five categories stipulated by the state. Categories one through three include facilities that can be renovated, while categories four and five are buildings that the state department recommends replacing as soon as possible, according to Martin County school Superintendent Boyd Bailey.

Cost estimates were based on the average statewide school construction price of $60 per square foot. Equipment costs, fees and other costs carry that figure up to $72 per square foot.

Based on those figures, replacement of obsolete school buildings in the county — ones not considered suitable for renovation — could cost as much as $7.9 million. Renovating schools suitable for long-range use, the report shows, could come to about $822,000. Other figures include $25,000 to provide for the hand-capped, and $225,000 for renovations to conserve energy. Additionally, updating schools to accommodate community functions would cost about $40,000.

Leary Says Drug Tests Aren't Needed

By CHERIE EVANS
Reflector Staff Writer

Team play and common sense are enough to determine whether a person is using drugs, said a spokesman for the cultural revolution of the 1960s. Drug tests used by the government and businesses to detect illegal drug use only invades a person's rights, he said.

"I don't know why we're allowing drug testing," said Dr. Timothy Leary during a press conference Tuesday in Mendenhall Student Center at East Carolina University.

Leary, a psychologist and author, directed the Harvard Psychodelic Research Project in 1959 and is currently president of Futique, a software company. He debated the drug testing issue with Peter Bensinger, former chief of the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration, Tuesday night in Hendrix Theater at the student center.

"If you're worried about health and welfare of the American people, what about pure water," he said, referring to President Reagan's veto of the Clean Water Bill.

Leary also said the federal deficit, nuclear war, poverty and the position of the United States in foreign policies should be emphasized rather than the drug testing issue.

"Other things are more lethal" than drugs such as affects of alcohol on automobile drivers, he said.

Individuals have "receptor sites that demand stimulation," Leary said as an explanation for some drug use. For example, nicotine gives smokers a five to 15 second rush, he said. People use tobacco "because there's a hunger for a change in the mood or in shifting gears."

"You know if somebody working with you is drunk or stoned" by observing them, Leary said. People such as pilots or surgeons who may endanger the lives of others by using drugs should take performance tests before they fly or operate.

"Athletes do it," he said, referring to warm-up exercises of athletes.

Bensinger, however, said "the theory that you can look at somebody and be safe does not work. People who need treatment need drug testing."

"To keep someone drug free, you need to drug test," he said.

Pilots were given "a joint (of marijuana) each" as part of an experiment to determine the effect the drug would have on their performance, Bensinger said. Twenty-four hours after taking the drug, pilots missed the runway by about 25 feet.

Drug testing "is not a moral issue," he said. "It's productivity." Companies are using drug testing to increase employee productivity and to reduce accidents on the job that may be linked to drug usage.

Time For Action

When the State Department told U.S. citizens in Lebanon to get out of the country, it was not kidding. The department, and we at home, were fed up with people offering themselves as easy targets for hostage-takers.

Those who violate the order could face up to five years in prison.

Reason for the action is known to all of us at home. The situation in that country, and in West Beirut especially, is so chaotic that no American citizen can be considered safe from terrorist action.

The mere fact they are Americans is enough for gangs who have tacit (and sometimes active) support of at least two and possibly more governments.

Incredibly, there are an estimated 1,500 U.S. citizens still in Lebanon. They have been given 30 days to leave the country before their passports become invalid.

Travel to Libya is also restricted.

Washington should have taken the action many months ago. It would have prevented a lot of heart-break and frustration experienced by their families and their government. In several ways the hostage-takers tied hands of people in government and prevented appropriate reaction.

It is beyond our understanding why any U.S. citizens would choose to place themselves in that position.

One Of Us

L.A. "Speed" Riggs was one of us in eastern North Carolina.

He was a tobacco auctioneer in the 1930s, which was something that many an eastern North Carolina boy aspired to be (there were no women tobacco auctioneers). Then he went off to New York and became famous as the auctioneer on Lucky Strike's "Your Hit Parade" radio and television programs.

There was a strong feeling of pride that the tobacco auctioneer's chant, so familiar to everyone in this area, was being heard throughout the nation — and it was one of us who was delivering it.

Never mind that the chant ended with the clear words "Sold American" (auctioneers actually selling tobacco slur right over the buyers' names), that was a bit of show business we could accept. Otherwise Riggs sounded just like the auctioneers on area warehouse floors, and in that tobacco-dominated era there was hardly anyone in eastern North Carolina who didn't regularly hear it.

Eventually cigarette ads were banned from radio and television. Many new cigarette brands were promoted for their filters or low tar content and thus ended the halcyon days of "Your Hit Parade" which — for those who don't recall — looked for new ways to present the top 10 popular tunes each week.

Riggs recently retired to his home in Goldsboro. He died last weekend and his death recalled that fascinating era of "Your Hit Parade", L.A. "Speed" Riggs and Lucky Strikes cigarettes.

Democrats May Need A Broker

WASHINGTON — With a mixture of glee and anxiety, Democratic political insiders see the possibility of the first brokered national convention in 36 years emerging from the latest tinkering with their presidential nomination machinery.

In mid-March, by when nearly 70 percent of the national convention delegates will have been selected, it is possible no candidate will be close to a majority. Unless somebody then performs the remarkable feat of sweeping the last few primaries, a convention of maneuver — and perhaps the backroom — beckons.

Who would emerge from that backroom is no less murky than early primary prospects. Nearly two deacades of costly "reform" have stripped the party of leaders and discipline. While Democrats now see 1988 as a year of opportunity, they remain uncertain about themes or candidates.

Now, they cannot even be sure of an early nominee — which seemed the one certainty when state after state moved up primaries to enhance their influence. The stampede toward "front-loading" carried unintended consequences: First, the 13 states bunched together on Mega-Tuesday, March 8, are less influential than they were before; second, it raises the possibility of a dispersion of support for a multicandidate field.

The conventional scenario had pointed in precisely the opposite direction — to front-runner Gary Hart using his head start in the Feb. 15 Iowa caucuses to build momentum for the Feb. 23 primary in New Hampshire, where he has a strong base. A double Iowa-New Hampshire win would make Hart invincible on Mega-Tuesday two weeks later. A variant of the conventional scenario will bring two finalists out of Iowa-New Hampshire to fight it out for a verdict Mega-Tuesday.

But Hart in fact is an exceptionally weak front-runner. The Los Angeles Times poll of last weekend's state Democratic convention delegates in California, scene of his smashing 1984 victory, gave Hart 21 percent in personal preference to New York Gov. Mario Cuomo's 23 percent. More to the point, Cuomo is now exciting considerably more interest than Hart in critically-important Iowa.

The truth is that Iowa is wide open between Hart, Cuomo, hard-working Rep. Richard Gephardt and charismatic Sen. Joseph Biden, with the possibility of a badly-fractured vote. The confusion could compound if, as now seems likely, Gov. Michael Dukakis of Massachusetts runs in New Hampshire. With or without a showing in Iowa, Dukakis could run at least second in his friendly neighbor state.

That opens the way for chaos on Mega-Tuesday, where all but three of the 13 primary states are Southern or Southwestern. The Rev. Jesse Jackson is guaranteed the black vote. If Sen. Sam Nunn of Georgia runs, he will cut into the white vote. If he doesn't, as many as three viable white candidates emerging from sene or gasoline and placed over the head of the ANC's victim. Then the tire and the victim are set afire.

The intimate relationship between the Soviet Union and the African National Congress is freely acknowledged. The ANC's official publication, Sechaba, could not be more candid: "We recognize that the Soviet Union and other socialist countries are our dependable allies, from whom no force is going to succeed in separating us."

Said Tambo, writing in African Communist, a monthly journal of the South African Communist Party (SACP): "The members of the ANC fully understand why both the ANC and the SACP are two hands of the same body, why they are two pillars of our revolution." Tambo has said that "ours is not merely a paper alliance; it is a living organism that has grown out of struggle."

Roughly half of the members of the ANC's board of directors are openly affiliated with the South African Communist Party.

Certainly Tambo's published speeches parrot the Moscow line. At every opportunity, prior to his meeting with Secretary Shultz, Tambo has denounced "U.S. imperialism." He has praised communist Cuba as a model. He has allied the ANC with the Palestinian Liberation Organization. In Zambia in 1985, he boasted that "the democratic, anti-feudal and anti-imperialist revolution in Afghanistan has been saved with the support of the Soviet Union." In Sechaba in 1984 he lashed out at "the imperialists, led by the Reagan administration," for launching "the criminal invasion of Grenada."

What in the world was Shultz's purpose in dignifying this man? Is the communist-ridden ANC truly the only available vehicle for reaching the mass of South African blacks? Why do we not make official overtures through so respected a leader as M.G. Buthelezi, chief of the Zulus, the largest of all African tribes?

Over the protest of President Reagan, Congress recklessly insisted upon imposing certain economic sanctions on South Africa. For members of Congress seeking to curry favor with their black constituents, the sanctions provided a marvelous opportunity. "Look at how fiercely we oppose apartheid!" In theory the sanctions were supposed to push the South African government toward further relaxation of racist laws. The sanctions have done nothing of the sort. On the contrary, they have contributed to ever more repressive censorship of the press; they have solidified the most determined white leaders; and though they have imposed some economic damage on the country, the sanctions also have fallen most harshly upon black workers themselves.

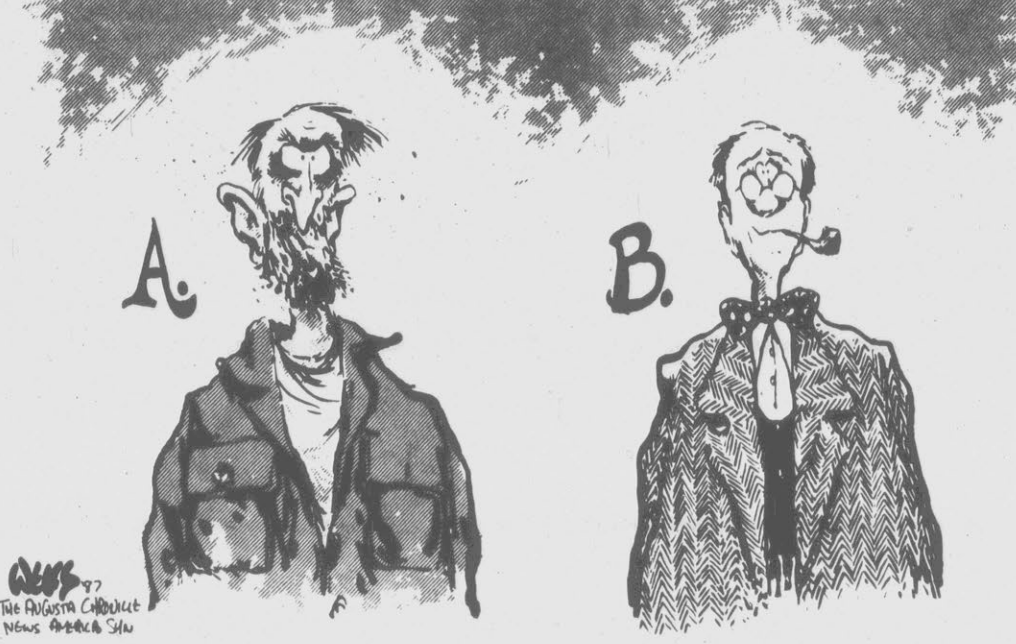

Now, by endowing Tambo with a new legitimacy, the administration has made bad matters worse. A few years ago the United States and strategic, anti-communist South Africa enjoyed friendly relations. Through moral suasion and constructive negotiations, South Africa steadily was eliminating the most noxious aspects of apartheid. Our influence today is greatly diminished, and we witness the sad spectacle of George Shultz shaking hands with Oliver Tambo. Truly it is written that he who lies down with dogs will get up with fleas.

View Is Better From The Outside

WASHINGTON — The resignation of White House Communications Chief Patrick Buchanan Tuesday and word that another high-ranking firebrand has given notice were seen by Republicans and administration officials as further evidence that Ronald Reagan's presidency has lost its way.

Chief White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater, reflecting concern over the public perception of the series of recent resignations, sought to depict them as the "natural departure of a lot of people" who are ready to "move on."

But a high aide to a Cabinet official blamed White House Chief of Staff Donald T. Regan for what he called a "suffocating" atmosphere, in which

"sadly, people are finding that there is no point staying on."

Fitzwater said that Buchanan, a former columnist and commentator who announced last month that he would not run for president despite the urging of some conservatives, will leave the White House March 1. "Pat ... feels he can better influence the issues and politics of 1988 ... from a vantage point outside the White House," he said.

Buchanan's profile has risen in recent months as he defended the president in the Iran-contra scandal. In an unusual attack on members of his own party, the outspoken conservative lambasted Republican leaders for "heading for the tall grass" and abandoning the president.

Fitzwater did not include the customary statement that the president had accepted Buchanan's resignation "with regret," but the spokesman did quote Reagan as saying of Buchanan, "I will miss his leadership and his support, but I count on his voice to remain a beacon for our political agenda."

Soon after Fitzwater's announcement, a senior Pentagon official confirmed that Richard Perle, the assistant secretary of defense for international policy, had conveyed to Secretary of Defense Caspar W. Weinberger his plans to leave soon. One source has put the date at March 1.

Some of the recent resignations were expected, as when the president announced Monday that CIA Director William Casey, who had brain cancer surgery in December, had quit because he could no longer handle his job. Last weekend, the White House lost its director of political operations, Mitchell Daniels, a moderate who a month ago told Chief of Staff Regan that Republicans throughout the country wanted him, Regan, to resign. Daniels' resignation came after two key members of his staff, Ed Rogers and Haley Barbour, quit. It was also learned Tuesday that Andrew Card, Reagan's representative among governors, is leaving.

On Monday, Fitzwater formally replaced Larry Speakes, who resigned to become vice president of communications for the investment firm of Merrill Lynch. Speakes once said he would remain the White House spokesman "until they carry me out feet first." Other officials, including James Miller, the budget director, are reportedly leaving soon, said a White House source.

Alfred Kingon, a top Regan aide who has been acting as Cabinet secretary, has resigned to become ambassador to the European Communities. And only this week did the White House move to replace its top anti-drug official, Dr. Carleton Turner, who quit more than a month ago, and the director of the Office of Policy Development, Jack Svahn, who resigned last summer.

A former high-ranking administration official said, "The White House is now becoming an organization of strangers and as a result we have an administration that has ... no direction, no movement."

Several officials placed the responsibility for the weaknesses in the staff on Regan, who is picking replacements for those who are quitting. And one source suggested that Regan will pick personnel who are loyal to him. No replacement for Buchanan has been chosen, but an official told Newsday that a leading contender is Mari Maseng, now in charge of hosting outside groups in the White House.

Because Regan runs virtually every facet of the White House, he has once again come under increasing pressure to quit — from administration officials, pragmatic Republicans and from Sen. David Boren, D-Okla., whose Senate Intelligence Committee report found Regan at the center of the scheme to sell arms to Iran.

But Fitzwater said Regan is staying on. And the Cabinet aide, a conservative Republican, said, "Regan has got such a lock on at the White House that Cabinet officers have stopped fighting and no one can dislodge him. As a result, people are leaving, and hearts are breaking for the president."

Strength For Today

The noted skeptic of a previous generation, Bertrand Russell, once said, "When I die, I rot." Russell, of course, meant that death ends everything and that life beyond the grave is an illusion.

No Christian can, of course, accept this conclusion, but in another context the statement contains important religious truth.

St. Paul, in the 15th chapter of First Corinthians, likens the dissolution of the body to the rotting of the husk of a seed in the ground. This part of the seed must first die before we can be ushered into a life beyond the grave.

In still another sense, even on this earth we must die in order to live. If our whole object is to save our lives — if we coddle them and try to squeeze out of them all the satisfaction we can, we lose the very thing we so ardently seek.

Tax Code Changes May Bring Windfall

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — Gov. Jim Martin says changing the state tax code to conform to federal revisions could bring the state a windfall of $50 million to $70 million and a chance to reduce or eliminate intangibles and inventory taxes for businesses this year.

State revenue officials originally forecast a windfall of $25 million, but Martin said Tuesday if the amount reaches the $50 million to $70 million projected by business analysts he will ask for a tax cut.

"It's our belief that we might very well experience a substantial tax increase by (adopting the federal revisions), and it seems to me that the fair thing to do is to provide for some offsetting tax reduction as a tradeoff ...," Martin said in a speech to Chamber of Commerce executives.

"This would give us an opportunity ... during this 1987 session of the General Assembly once again to consider a reduction in all or part of the intangibles tax (and) all or part of the inventory tax," Martin said, "because it would give us that extra revenue — if the predictions are correct — to be able to move forward in that way."

He said he would not know whether he would endorse the tax cuts until the Internal Revenue Service provides data that will show how the adjustments will affect North Carolina. He emphasized that regardless of the size of the windfall, at least $25 million should go to the general fund for education improvements and would not be included in a tax cut.

Legislative leaders generally have voiced support for adopting the federal tax changes.

David Crotts, senior fiscal analyst for the legislature, said he was wary about basing tax reduction on the assumption that there will be an annual windfall from conforming with the federal changes.

Crotts said his office had predicted that state tax collections would rise $20 million to $25 million as a result of changes in taxes on individuals, such as elimination of some individual retirement account deductions.

But the effect that incorporating the federal changes would have on business tax collections in North Carolina is "very uncertain," Crotts said, primarily because it isn't known how businesses will adjust to the new federal law.

"There's a lot of concern that the people ... on Capitol Hill did not take behavioral changes into account" when estimating the impact of the new tax law, Crotts said. "Basically, they had to get a revenue-neutral bill and they did."

According to Crotts, a publication issued by the National Association of State Budget Officers says that states "could create serious fiscal problems by basing tax cuts or spending increases on estimates that assume behavior will not change much."

Arden Firm Finds Gold Mine In Radon Worries

By TOM MINEHART
AP Business Writer

Growing concern over household radon, a radioactive gas that can cause lung cancer, has made AirChek Inc. of Arden one of the nation's largest providers of home radon tests.

"It all comes down to how worried you are," AirChek president B.V. Alvarez said in a telephone interview from Arden, near Asheville. "A lot of people are concerned about what they eat and a lot of people spend all their time in smoky bars. It all depends on where you place yourself on the worry chain."

Alvarez said enough people have been concerned — or simply curious — about how much radon their homes contain that the company has sold almost 50,000 of the testing devices in a little over a year since it was founded.

Radon is a colorless, odorless gas produced by the natural radioactive decay of radium in the ground. It is found around the United States in widely varying levels and can accumulate in enclosed houses.

The Environmental Protection Agency estimates that 20,000 Americans die annually from radon-related lung cancer, compared with about 130,000 who die of smoking-related lung cancer. The EPA says about 12 percent of U.S. homes have radon levels that could pose a health risk.

Alvarez said AirChek is probably one of the top two of hundreds of radon test providers in the country. He said its main competitor is the University of Pittsburgh.

The $11.95 test consists of a packet of activated carbon that a homeowner places in his house for two or three days, then sends in for analysis. Three packets cost $29.95. AirChek notifies the customer a few days later with a letter explaining what the results mean.

If the radon measures 20 picocuries per liter of air or above — a level the EPA says is equivalent to smoking more than a pack of cigarettes a day — AirChek sends an EPA manual explaining how the radon can be reduced. The company sends out more than 50 of these a week at a cost of 86 cents apiece.

"We can afford to lose a little money to help them out," said Alvarez. "I guess we're a little softer than most business people are."

High levels may warrant additional tests, which AirChek also sends for free. In extreme cases, the company has sent a technician to the house to double-check the results.

Alvarez, formerly a researcher with The Mother Earth News in Hendersonville, founded the company in October 1985 with Sue Amos, currently vice president. His nuclear physicist brother provided technical expertise.

"We took our life savings and gambled them," he said. Today, AirChek has annual sales of more than $450,000 and eight employees. It hasn't made a profit yet, but Alvarez expects it to this year.

The company sells many of its tests to professional home inspectors and is negotiating large contracts with state health departments. But it has refused to participate in a program with the state of New Jersey because officials there wanted to be able to release the names and addresses of people with high levels of radon.

"It could be lawsuit time if we did that," Alvarez said. "A lot of people, because of real-estate values, don't want it exposed. When we sell an answer, it belongs to that person."

Once, a man sent in for analysis an AirChek test showing 2,500 picocuries — about 2,500 times the average indoor level. It turned out the man had placed it in a dry well under his barn just to see what would happen.

"People in the lab were so scared they felt they had to clean their equipment afterward," Alvarez said. "I called the guy up, and he thought it was funny. His house only registered one picocurie."

Radon is found in every state in the union. Alvarez knows this, because his company has sold tests in every state.

But it is so widely varied that one house may register 100 picocuries, while the house next door may register one. Levels appear somewhat higher in hilly or mountainous areas or where deeper layers of rock or earth may be exposed.

Many older houses are susceptible to radon because their floors are exposed to the earth. Some can be fixed by sealing floors, walls and drainpipes. New houses can be made radon-proof by sealing with a soil-gas barrier at a cost of about one-half percent of the home's total cost, he said.

Death Penalty Stricken

Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — The state Supreme Court has struck down the death sentence for one of four youths convicted in the beating death of a Wilmington man in 1981, saying the sentence appeared to be "excessive and disproportionate."

The court Tuesday found no error in Freddie Lee Stokes' conviction for murder and felonious larceny, but voted 5-2 to reduce his death sentence to life in prison.

Stokes was charged in an attack on Kauno Lehto, operator of Wilmington Bonded Warehouse, on Dec. 28, 1981. Lehto was robbed and beaten, the court's opinion said. He died several hours later from brain hemorrhages.

One of the four assailants, Lorenzo Thomas, implicated the others, the court said. He received a 15-year sentence after pleading guilty to second-degree murder. Ricky Benbow was sentenced to 25 years in prison on a guilty plea for second-degree murder.

Juries convicted Stokes and James Murray of first-degree murder and recommended life imprisonment for Murray and death for Stokes, who was 17 years old at the time of the murder.

In an opinion written by Chief Justice James Exum, the court majority said Stokes "does not appear to be more deserving of death than Murray," although evidence appeared to show that both delivered the blows that killed Lehto.

The opinion said the court has an obligation to compare the case "with other cases ... which are roughly similar with regard to the crime and the defendant, such as, for example, the manner in which the crime was committed and the defendant's character, background and physical and mental condition."

If the death penalty is usually imposed in such cases, the court said, it was obliged to uphold capital punishment for Stokes.

Stokes "suffered from impaired capacity to appreciate the criminality of his conduct, and ... was under the influence of a mental or emotional disturbance at the time of the murder," the opinion said.

Prosecutors' arguments that Stokes was the "ringleader" and might have beaten the victim more savagely than Murray were unpersuasive, the court said. "There is simply no evidence in the record to support either contention."

In other cases, the court:

— Ruled that state courts lack jurisdiction to determine paternity when the mother, child and alleged father are members of the Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians, who are governed by tribal law.

Environmentalists Seek Martin's Aid

RALEIGH (AP) — Environmentalists want Gov. Jim Martin to help fight a proposed depot for high-level nuclear waste 100 miles west of Asheville because some of the nuclear wastes stored there will have to be transported through North Carolina.

But Martin Tuesday appeared reluctant to oppose funding for the Monitored Retrievable Storage depot the U.S. Department of Energy wants to build at an abandoned breeder reactor at Clinch River, Tenn.

"They take the position that no radioactive waste should be generated," Martin said of environmentalists. "What are we going to do with the waste? Where are we going to send it?"

"Maybe if (environmentalists) would propose some alternatives, they'd have a better chance than if they just oppose it," Martin said.

Spent nuclear fuel rods destined for permanent dumping would be brought to the MRS from the nation's nuclear power plants for packaging and temporary storage before shipment to permanent dumping grounds.

The Conservation Council of North Carolina and the Sierra Club think DOE should scrap the MRS proposal and require utilities to store their spent nuclear fuel rods at the power plants until a repository for nuclear waste is established.

"In the case of the MRS, it is an unnecessary, uneconomical and untested facility," said Bill Holman, an environmental lobbyist. "We think it would reduce transportation, reduce exposure and save money if you just keep it at the power plants until a repository is established."

Holman said environmentalists fear the nuclear waste would be moved from nuclear power plants to the MRS on Interstate 40, I-26 and rail lines through western North Carolina.

Court Says Fertilizer Firm Liable Only For Damages

GREENSBORO (AP) — The state Court of Appeals says a chemical company that sold fertilizer tainted with herbicide in 1984 did not agree to compensate farmers for their entire tobacco crop, but only their actual losses.

The fertilizer sold by W.R. Grace Co. in 1984 destroyed about 2,600 acres of tobacco in the state.

In a unanimous decision Tuesday, the appeals court ruled that the company did not agree to compensate Richard Seawell of Carthage for his entire crop, even though he was able to sell some of the tobacco.

Seawell, along with 47 other Moore County farmers, sued Grace and Continental Casualty Co. after rejecting offers to reimburse them only for their actual losses.

In his opinion, Associate Judge S. Gerald Arnold upheld a Moore County jury's decision, made in November 1984, that no contract existed between the farmers and the two companies. Arnold said there was insufficient evidence to have sent the case to a jury.

John Mitchell, a Winston-Salem attorney who defended Grace, said the decision was a "wonderful verdict."

"I would hope that the remaining Moore County farmers would be willing to discuss settling their claims on the basis of any actual damages they sustained," he said.

Seawell said company adjusters who visited his farm ruled that his entire crop had been destroyed. He was seeking about $71,000 in actual damages, and $15,000 in punitive damages from the company, he said.

Moore County was one of 20 North Carolina counties that suffered damage to its tobacco crop after farmers used a fertilizer contaminated with a herbicide in June 1984.

The appeals court also ruled Tuesday that judges cannot order school boards to provide educational programs for students who have been expelled or suspended.

"Our legislature did not impose upon the public schools or other agency a legal obligation to provide an alternative forum for suspended students, and a court may not judicially create the obligation," Judge Charles L. Becton wrote on behalf of a unanimous three-judge panel.

The ruling reversed an order by Gaston County District Judge Larry Langson in the case of Calvin Wayne Jackson Jr., who was suspended in 1985 for assaulting a student and a teacher and threatening another teacher.

After three juvenile petitions were filed against Jackson charging him with criminal offenses, Langson ordered the school board to place Jackson in "whatever type of school program the school system deems appropriate."

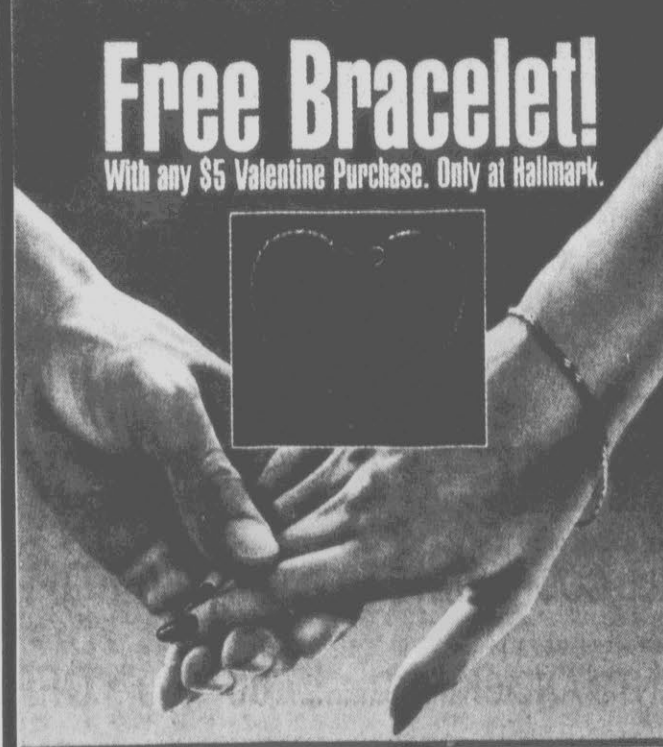

The board contended that the school system did not have a suitable program or funds to implement one.

"Judge Langson was obviously aware that 65 percent of America's crime, including 30 percent of the violent crime, is committed by juveniles that here in North Carolina, approximately 20 percent of those arrested for the most serious crimes are under 18; ... and that the Calvin Jacksons of this state should not be left free to roam at will," Becton wrote.

Cherokee's High-Stakes Bingo Game Is Closing

CHEROKEE, N.C. (AP) — The owner of a high-stakes bingo game on the Cherokee reservation has shut down the operation and given the tribe 30 days to buy him out before he starts selling the game's property.

Johnny Young has offered to sell the business to the tribe for $700,000, but Principal Chief Robert Youngdeer, in a letter to the tribe last week, said the Cherokees would be buying "a dead horse" if the U.S. Supreme Court or the U.S. Senate make reservation gambling illegal.

Young said the high-stakes game draws 50,000 people a year to Cherokee and has grossed $35 million since it opened five years ago. The game employs 150 full- and part-time workers with a payroll of $45,000 a month.

A game scheduled for Saturday was canceled and "if it stays closed for three or four months, I doubt it will ever be open again," Young said. "It's hard enough to run the game without putting up with the harassment of Robert Youngdeer."

The game has been the object of a number of skirmishes between Young, his former partner Dan McCoy and Youngdeer. McCoy is chairman of the Tribal Council.

The Supreme Court is expected to rule on the State of California vs. the Cabazon Band of Mission Indians, a case that addresses gaming on reservations, in July. Legislation in Congress also would make reservation gambling illegal.

The gambling — conducted by 85 tribes in 18 states — has long frustrated federal officials, but the law as it now stands exempts tribal gambling from regulation.

Young said he has agreed to put $500,000 of the purchase price in escrow until the issue is settled by both the Supreme Court and the Senate. If gambling on reservations is declared illegal, the $500,000 would go to the tribe.

Cherokee Bingo would be worth $1 million a year to the tribe and it now constitutes 31 percent of tribal revenues, Young said. In 1985, the tribe received $418,543 from the bingo operation, tribal records show.

In April, Youngdeer, acting as an individual, brought suit against the bingo game's management, McCoy, Young and Associates.

Youngdeer charged in his suit that the bingo operation was illegal because the contract with the tribe did not have the approval of the secretary of the interior or the commissioner of Indian affairs.

The Tribal Council later passed a resolution renegotiating the contract and McCoy dropped out of the enterprise. A new contract met federal approval.

Youngdeer's suit is still pending but he said that his opposition to buying the game is not related to the suit. "This is concerning the tribal money that I am responsible for," Youngdeer said Friday.

During a stormy Tribal Council session Jan. 23 the council passed a resolution suspending Youngdeer's power to act on the sale. Youngdeer then vetoed the council's resolution and the council called a special session for today.

Disney Channel

BURBANK, Calif. (AP) — Garrison Keillor's "A Prairie Home Companion" soon will keep people company on the Disney Channel.

John F. Cooke, president of the Disney Channel, and William Kling, president of Minnesota Public Radio, said the two-hour weekly radio program of music and storytelling will become a series beginning March 7 on the pay-television channel.

"The visual aspect of the show has delighted its theater audiences for more than 12 years," said Kling. The program is broadcast from the St. Paul, Minn., World Theater to more than 270 U.S. public radio stations.

Oxford Plant Closing

OXFORD, N.C. (AP) — Max Factor says it will close its 5-year-old cosmetics manufacturing plant near Oxford by July and lay off 842 workers in Granville and surrounding counties.

Officials said Tuesday they decided to close the Oxford plant because it duplicates operations at other plants owned by Revlon Group Inc., which purchased Max Factor last year. The Oxford operations will be transferred to plants in Edison, N.J., and Phoenix, Ariz.

David Williams, director of employee relations for Max Factor, said the company will retain ownership of the 500,000-square-foot plant and intends to resume making products there sometime in the future. But Williams said he did not know when the plant would resume operations.

"We certainly hope that if other manufacturings are resumed, there will be manpower requirements and re-employment for some people," Williams said, adding that Max Factor employees were not given any promise of future employment with Revlon.

Williams said some management-level employees may be given an opportunity to continue with Revlon.

Workers, many of whom have been with the company since it began operations in May 1982, were shocked by Tuesday's announcement.

"It just seemed like they dropped a bomb on us," said Nancy Claiborne, who earns $7.37 an hour working in the lipstick department. "This is a big shock, knowing you have a family to take care of and you have the only income. Jobs are really hard to find around here."

C. Mitchell Hester, 25, a mechanic who earns $9 an hour, told the News and Observer of Raleigh the announcement brought tears to the eyes of some workers.

"It was a big surprise," he said. "All the ladies were crying. Everyone was pretty upset."

IN THE STATE

New Warrant Issued

RUTHERFORDTON, N.C. (AP) — A District Court judge has dismissed a fugitive warrant against a Colorado prison escapee who lived quietly in Rutherford County for 12 years under an assumed name, but Colorado officials have asked for another warrant.

Rutherford County District Attorney John Snyder said Tuesday officials in North Carolina and Colorado did not appear interested in dropping Donald Smiley's case.

"Obviously, neither state is willing to do that. Colorado in pursuing the process and North Carolina is honoring Colorado's request," he said.

The fugitive warrant used to arrest Smiley last October was dismissed Tuesday because its 90-day term had expired, but Gov. Jim Martin was asked to issue another warrant, said Tim Pittman, Martin's press secretary.

"What happens now depends on Colorado," Pittman said. "The Department of Correction here says they will extend supervised parole if Colorado wants that. Or we will gladly respect any extradition request that Colorado issues."

Rutherford County authorities said Smiley would be asked to turn himself in once the warrant is received.

Smiley, 52, who has been living in Forest City, was convicted under the name of Donald Lee Fitzgerald and had served about two years of a seven-to-14-year sentence for forgery and assault with a deadly weapon when he escaped from a Colorado prison in 1965.

Cigarette Thefts Increasing

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. (AP) — A demand for black market cigarettes has spurred a rash of convenience store thefts in which shelves have been swept clean.

"They are a bold, fast operating group of individuals who obviously go for broke," Detective Charles Lynch of the Forsyth County Sheriff's Department said. The lucrative market for stolen cigarettes apparently makes it worth the risk, he said.

So far this year 1,638 cartons, or 327,600 cigarettes, have been stolen from six convenience stores in Forsyth County and one in Winston-Salem, according to police. With prices ranging from $7 to $10 a carton, the stolen merchandise was worth almost $14,000.

Council Approves Permuda Purchase

RALEIGH (AP) — The Council of State has approved the purchase of Permuda Island for a nature sanctuary despite objections by state Auditor Ed Renfrow that the state's $756,581 share of the $1.7 million price tag was too high.

The purchase, approved 8-1 Tuesday with Renfrow in the minority, will be made with the help of $987,066 in federal funds.

The North Carolina Nature Conservancy had purchased half the property in December for $1.02 million with the option to buy the other half for $724,000 after reaching an informal agreement with state officials that the state would buy the island and preserve it as part of the state estuarine sanctuary system.

Jim Smith Will Be There

WILMINGTON, N.C. (AP) — Anyone calling for Jim Smith in Wilmington this July had better have a little more information than just the name because the town is going to be inundated with Jim Smiths.

The Jim Smith Society, a national organization whose members share the same name, plans to hold its annual convention in Wilmington July 16 to 19.

The society, based in Camp Hill, Pa., was organized in 1969 by some Jim Smiths who wanted to take pride in one of the English-speaking world's most popular names. But it exists now solely for fun, said Jim W. Smith, a Dayton, Ohio, insurance agent who is chairman of a committee planning the annual "Fun Festival."

"I don't think most of us had heard much of our names except getting confused with somebody else," Smith said. "People look at you funny when you register at hotels."

Getting together at annual conventions is easy, Smith explained. All the members have to do is walk in and say "Hi, Jim."

The group has about 1,400 members nationwide. Smith said he has no idea how many potential members there may be. There are even about a half-dozen women named Jim Smith who are members.

Concord Eyes Annexation

CONCORD, N.C. (AP) — The Concord board of aldermen has taken the first step toward annexing nearly 60 square miles encircling the city limits.

If successful, the annexation would extend the city's borders to the Mecklenburg County line, taking in the Charlotte Motor Speedway on U.S. 29.

Under a recent ruling by the state Court of Appeals, the move would prevent other municipalities — mainly Charlotte and Kannapolis — from annexing the area.

"We don't know if all the areas will qualify for annexation, but we want to make sure nobody else interferes," said Mayor Bernie Edwards.

City officials approved Monday a resolution of consideration on 59.37 square miles. The city now contains a little less than 20 square miles.

Transit Workers Threaten Strike

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Charlotte transit workers voted nearly unanimously to reject a proposed contract, and union officials threatened to strike unless management revises its offer by Thursday night.

"There's a strong possibility of a strike Friday morning unless management gets off its tail," Fred Warlick, chief negotiator for United Transportation Union's Local 1715, said. "I would tell the riding public to make other arrangements for Friday morning."

Union members said their major objections to the Transit Management proposal were programs to reduce absence. One program gives workers bonuses for good attendance; the other assesses penalty points for absences.

Mildred Will Turn 21

LINVILLE, N.C. (AP) — While most ordinary bears will be hibernating Friday, Mildred the Bear will be eating birthday cake at her 21st birthday party on Grandfather Mountain.

Because the black bear is well cared for, she should have at least 14 more birthdays to celebrate, according to the Bill Hoff, former director of the North Carolina Zoological Park at Asheboro.

Grandfather Mountain has nine adult bears in its environmental habitats, but there is no question about Mildred being the favorite, says Hugh Morton, Grandfather Mountain president and Mildred's legal guardian.

Georgia Nominee Supports Athletics

ATLANTA (AP) — Charles B. Knapp, nominated to become president of the University of Georgia, declared himself a strong supporter of college athletics and said he will look for ways to push the Athens school into "world-class status" academically.

Knapp, a 40-year-old economics professor who now is the executive vice president of Tulane University, supervised the athletic department there when the basketball program was abolished in the wake of a point-shaving scandal.

But University System of Georgia Chancellor Dean Propst said his nomination of Knapp on Tuesday was not designed as a symbol of determination to clear up questions about academic treatment of athletes at Georgia.

"I wanted this recommendation to reflect more than just a statement about the athletic program at the university. ... I was concerned about identifying the candidates who could handle all of the interests of the university."

Propst made the nomination after Knapp was strongly recommended by a search committee of the Board of Regents, said Regent Sidney Smith, who chaired the committee. The full board will act on the nomination Feb. 11.

The Athens Daily News reported that an unidentified "top university source" said Knapp became the final candidate after two other candidates dropped out at the last minute.

Propst said there were two other candidates who were not brought to the campus because there was little likelihood they would be offered the job.

At a news conference, Knapp portrayed himself as a friend of athletics.

"Don't anybody get me wrong. I want to win," he said. He said he wants to continue the school's winning tradition "in a way that protects the academic integrity of the university."

Knapp said it too early to say if he will seek changes in the Georgia athletic program, which was rocked by disclosures in a federal lawsuit last year that athletes got special breaks in a remedial program.

Knapp had not visited the campus before Tuesday, but he said he talked with people across the country and found agreement "that the University of Georgia is an institution that is going to break into world-class status in the next few years. I'm not going to settle for anything less."

He said he will launch a planning process toward that goal.

Speed Bill Might Turn Into Bargaining Chip

By ALAN FRAM
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — A leader of Senate efforts to pass a multibillion-dollar highway bill says he may be willing to give up the 65 mph speed limit passed by his chamber — for a price.
The Senate approved a measure Tuesday that would allow states to increase speed limits 10 miles above the current 55 mph on segments of interstates in sparsely populated areas.
That provision was an amendment to the $52.4 billion highway bill, which the Senate was scheduled to continue debating today. The Senate also planned to discuss a bill that would authorize $10.8 billion in new spending for mass transit systems nationwide, and attach that legislation to the highway measure.

The House last month approved a $91 billion highway and mass transit aid package that would retain the 55 mph maximum. Thus, a showdown between the two chambers looms that must be settled before the transportation assistance can be dispensed to states and municipalities.
But Sen. Quentin Burdick, D-N.D., who as chairman of the Environment and Public Works Committee will play a leading role in the House-Senate conference committee that will iron out differences in the bills, said the higher speed limit might be used as a bargaining chip.

"We're going to try to hold on to the (speed limit) amendment as long as we can," Burdick said in an interview after the Senate approved the speed limit increase by a 65-33 vote. "The big fight is going to come on the House's additional projects. ... If we can get rid of those demonstration projects, maybe we'd think of taking out the speed limit or other provisions."
The House bill contains about 90 so-called demonstration projects, which are various road and bridge projects favored by House members from many states. Members of the Senate have objected to the cost of the projects, which the House says would cost $1.2 billion over five years.

James Howard, D-N.J., chairman of the House Public Works and Transportation Committee, and an ardent opponent of the 65 mph limit, said he could not predict what would happen when negotiators for the two chambers meet.
"I don't know where it's going to go from here," he said. "A lot of things are important, but not enough to hold the money up."
Ever since Congress failed to approve transportation aid legislation last year, state officials and construction companies have complained that the lack of money is causing delays in needed road and mass transit work.

The speed limit increase passed after a debate that largely pitted Westerners, favoring higher speeds on stretches of countryside roads, against Easterners arguing that the lower speed limit saves lives and conserves fuel.
Forty-two senators from states west of the Mississippi River and 23 Eastern lawmakers voted for the higher limit, while 27 Easterners and only six Westerners opposed it.
"I think it has perhaps been valid in, certainly, fuel consumption and saving of lives," Sen. Alan Simpson, R-Wyo., one of 18 Western legislators who co-sponsored the measure, said of the current limit. "But where it doesn't fit at all is to recognize the diversity of the United States of America."
The measure's lead sponsor, Sen. Steven Symms, R-Idaho, said the provision is "a modest, moderate amendment" because it would allow states to decide their own speed limits on parts of interstates.

Opponents said the government should retain control over speed limits on the federally operated interstates. But their main argument for retaining 55 mph was safety.
"Really the question is balancing time saved versus lives saved and serious injuries prevented," said Sen. John Danforth, R-Mo. "In my view, that is a very clear choice for us to make."
By a 57-40 vote, the senators also voted to kill an amendment that would have put more controls on billboards and made it easier for states to remove them from roadsides.
The measure's sponsor, Sen. Robert Stafford, R-Vt., called the question a "major environmental issue," but he was countered by lawmakers who said the roadside signs help small businesses and cause no harm.
"Americans like billboards," said Sen. Wendell Ford, D-Ky. "They like billboards. Tourists, businesses, even municipalities depend heavily on outdoor advertising."

House Gives Reagan Fiscal Defeat By Overriding Veto Of Water Bill

By DAVID GOELLER
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, lustily cheered by Congress last week when he urged restraint in federal spending, is losing his first big fiscal fight as the Democratic-controlled 100th Congress moves to override a $20 billion presidential veto.
The president took a lopsided wallop Tuesday when the House voted 401-26 to override his second veto of the popular Clean Water bill to reauthorize and strengthen the nation's fight against water pollution.

Despite a plea by Reagan for party unity, 147 of 177 House Republicans joined with 254 Democrats to oppose the president, who says the clean-water spending plan is too costly. He had offered a $12 billion compromise. The 26 votes to uphold the veto came from Republicans.
There was no reaction to the House action from the White House on Tuesday.
The veto-override focus shifts today to the Senate. There were no indications Reagan would fare any better in what he has called "the first great battle of the (budget) deficit in the 100th Congress."

"Congress is going to land a one-two punch with this override," Sen. Quentin Burdick, D-N.D., chairman of the Environment and Public Works Committee, said following the House vote.
He and other lawmakers said there has been no heavy lobbying by the White House to save the veto. To win in the Senate, Reagan needed the support of one-third of the members present and voting.
Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kansas, said it was "going to be very difficult" for the president to recoup in the Senate.

Sen. George Mitchell, D-Maine, said that "the House's overwhelming vote ... is yet another indication of the American people's commitment to clean water. The president will learn that he has picked the wrong issue and the wrong time to engage in confrontation with Congress."
The dispute between Capitol Hill and the White House centers on $18 billion authorized by the bill to provide assistance to the states through 1994 to build wastewater and sewage treatment plants. An additional $2 billion covers administrative and other expenses.

Deliberations ... As Carried Out By U.S. Senators

By TOM SEPPY
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — Scholars and senators like to refer to the Senate as the world's most deliberative body. Often, however, debate on the Senate floor is less than enlightening, no matter how deliberative.
Take a recent exchange between Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., and Senate Majority Leader Robert F. Byrd, D-W.Va., during consideration of a proposed congressional pay raise.
Helms told Byrd he understood the House did not intend to act on the legislation despite what the Senate did. He wanted to know if the Democratic leader had any more information on the subject.
Helms: "Does the distinguished majority leader have information from the speaker (of the House of Representatives) or anyone else on the House side?"
Byrd: "The House has gone out for today. So it could not act."
Helms: "Surely the House will be back by Tuesday."
Byrd: "Yes. The speaker asked me if the House would act today."
Helms: "I did not specify today in my question."
Byrd: "I beg the senator's pardon. I misunderstood him. They are out. I believe they are out until Tuesday. They are at least out for the remainder of this week."
Helms: "Could I ask my friend if he has discussed this matter at all with the speaker?"
Byrd: "Yes; I told him we would take up the resolution today."
Helms: "I do not want to ask the speaker to confide in me anything I am not supposed to know. But did the speaker indicate the House is not going to act on the resolution of disapproval at all?"
Byrd: "I will not divulge a private conversation that I have had with the senator from North Carolina, and I will not divulge a private conversation with the speaker of the House of Representatives."
Helms: "OK. Well, I think I prefaced it by saying I did not want the distinguished Democratic leader to discuss anything that was of a private nature."
Byrd: "The able senator did say that."
Helms: "Of course this is sort of a public nature, too."
Byrd: "It is. Yes. It is of a public nature. The senator is within his right to ask me the question."
Helms: "The senator is within his right not to answer me."
Byrd: "It is not a matter of my right. I am asserting here that if I have a private conversation with Mr. Dole, or any other member of the Congress, I would rather not divulge that."
Helms: "I am trying to find out whether the House is going to do anything or not."
Byrd: "I can say they are not in session the rest of this week. We hope to vote today on the resolution."
Helms: "Yes, I thank the senator."
Byrd: "I thank my friend."

very difficult" for the president to recoup in the Senate.
Sen. George Mitchell, D-Maine, said that "the House's overwhelming vote ... is yet another indication of the American people's commitment to clean water. The president will learn that he has picked the wrong issue and the wrong time to engage in confrontation with Congress."
The dispute between Capitol Hill and the White House centers on $18 billion authorized by the bill to provide assistance to the states through 1994 to build wastewater and sewage treatment plants. An additional $2 billion covers administrative and other expenses.
Reagan, who last year called for $6 billion in state aid, last month unsuccessfully offered Congress the $12 billion compromise. But his foes say that even $18 billion will leave states far short of the $108 billion the Environmental Protection Agency estimates will be required for plant construction by 2000.

Pay Raise Effected

WASHINGTON (AP) — House leaders used fancy parliamentary footwork to give themselves and 3,000 high-level government officials substantial pay raises while still casting a symbolic vote against it.
The House leadership deliberately delayed a vote on the controversial raise past last night's midnight deadline when it automatically took effect, thereby throwing into question the validity of a vote expected today.
No matter what ultimately happens to the $12,100-a-year increase for members of Congress and to the increases for federal officials, federal judges appeared almost sure of having the increase stick for them.
The Constitution says once a judge's salary is raised it cannot be lowered, although that, too, could be open to court interpretation since the rejection is likely to come before the increase actually takes effect, March 1.
Denouncing the tactics which allowed the raise to take effect without an up-or-down vote, Rep. Tom Petri, R-Wis., said, "The House leadership acted like a thief in the night, skulking away with its ill-gotten gains."

Homeless Find New Advocates

By MARIE COCCO
L.A. Times-Washington Post
News Service

WASHINGTON — Advocates for the homeless, who used to seek attention in Washington with hunger strikes and all-night vigils in the shadow of the Capitol's great white dome, have suddenly started showing up inside its marble chambers alongside the most powerful figures in Congress.

At Senate hearings last week, the advocates appeared as expert witnesses. On a tour of a homeless shelter near the Capitol, they explained to members of the House Budget Committee how federal funds were being used to transform a decrepit, surplus government building into a clean dormitory for hundreds of the down-and-out.

And Wednesday, they will be featured again as the House kicks off a round of hearings aimed at moving quickly on a comprehensive measure to aid the homeless. New York Gov. Mario Cuomo is among those scheduled to testify.

Those appearances are accompanying a burst of legislative activity and morally charged speeches by members of Congress about helping homeless people — indications that lawmakers have found new political urgency in dealing with the homeless.

The House and Senate, over objections from the Reagan administration, have approved an "emergency" $50-million measure that would shift Federal Emergency Management Agency funds from disaster relief to programs providing food and shelter for the homeless.

The legislation is billed as an effort to get more money to the homeless this winter, even though budget experts say the funds couldn't possibly be disbursed that quickly. Nevertheless, House Speaker Jim Wright, D-Texas, — who mentioned House passage of the measure in his nationally televised speech following President Reagan's State of the Union address last week — vowed he would not impede the legislation by bickering with the Senate over an unrelated amendment that blocks congressional pay raises.

"I think it would be very unbecoming of us if we were to allow that to become such a bone of contention that it delayed getting help to the homeless people who are out there suffering in the cold of winter," Wright said.

While the Senate prepared to take up its version of the homeless bill last Thursday, its subcommittee on Housing and Urban Affairs held its first-ever hearing on homelessness. Subcommittee chairman Sen. Alan Cranston, D-Calif., said the hearing would "kick off an action agenda" on homelessness, an agenda that he said would include a comprehensive measure to help homeless people. That legislation would be attached to a broader housing bill drafted and ready for floor action by the spring.

On the other side of the Capitol, a half-dozen House Budget Committee members toured the shelter — run by homeless activist Mitch Snyder, who embarrassed Congress earlier this winter by refusing to remove a statue of a homeless family from the Capitol grounds and by staging all-night protests beside it. The vigil ended after six weeks when Wright summoned Snyder inside for a meeting.

After the tour, the group — led by Budget Committee chairman William Gray, D-Pa., — vowed to include more than $500 million in new funds for the homeless in next year's budget.

The package — put together by Wright and other House leaders days after the session began — would provide additional funds for emergency housing, long-term housing subsidies, health care programs, food assistance and other programs.

It is this legislation that the House plans to begin hearings on Wednesday with the intent of beginning formal drafting sessions Thursday. The Senate is expected to move quickly on similar legislation.

Lawmakers and advocates for the homeless said the sudden surge of interest resulted from several factors.

Weinberger Wants More Navy Women

By NORMAN BLACK
AP Military Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Defense secretary wants more women in the Navy, even if the Navy brass don't.

Secretary Caspar Weinberger on Tuesday lifted an order putting a lid on female Navy enlistments, denying any change in plans to increase the Navy's female enlisted strength by about 10 percent over the next five years.

On Wednesday, Navy operations chief Adm. Carlisle A. H. Trost had decided to stop female enlistments.

Pentagon spokesman Robert Sims said the Navy would be free to make a case for changing its current goals for female sailors. But he said Weinberger was pleased with the Navy's original goal of increasing female enlisted strength.

"If the Navy has reasons for changing its policy ... I'm sure they can present it to him and he'll have an open mind on the subject," Sims said.

"But the fact is, he is pleased with the policy we had before. He was not consulted about any changes. He became aware of them and has asked that those proposed changes be rescinded."

Weinberger took the action because he doesn't like to learn of such things second-hand, because he is committed to including women to the greatest extent possible and because he wanted to head off any controversy with Congress, said an aide who asked not to be identified.

Asked why Weinberger had not been informed of Trost's decision in advance, Sims added: "I just can't explain it."

The Navy said Monday that Trost decided to limit the number of female sailors because of the congressional ban on assignment of women to combat ships. The Navy is currently growing toward a 600-ship fleet and needs men for those vessels, the service said.

Under Trost's decision, the number of enlisted women on active duty would have been capped at the current figure of 46,796 through fiscal 1991, instead of being allowed to grow as originally projected by roughly 10 percent to 51,300. Women make up about 9 percent of the Navy compared with 10.04 percent for all of the military.

Although Research Going 'Quite Well'

Shultz Says No Deployment Of 'Stars War' Expected Soon

By BARRY SCHWEID
AP Diplomatic Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of State George P. Shultz says no deployment of the space-based "Star Wars" program is likely soon.

Despite rapid progress in anti-missile research, President Reagan probably will not face a decision this year on whether to deploy the first phase of the controversial system, Shultz testified Tuesday.

He appeared before the Senate Armed Services Committee immediately after attending a top-level meeting with Reagan on arms control at the White House.

While Shultz refused to say what advice he had offered, he told uneasy senators: "There has been no decision made about deployment of any kind."

But Senate Republican leader Bob Dole offered reporters a different impression after Reagan met with GOP congressional leaders.

"I think the president supports at least the deployment of an early phase," the Kansan said. "I would conclude from that he must feel that we can do that without getting in the way of arms control."

Star Wars, known formally as the Strategic Defense Initiative, is based on the theory that lasers, X-rays and other futuristic technology could shield the United States from Soviet missiles.

Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev has denounced Star Wars as an acceleration of the arms race and refused to conclude agreements to reduce U.S. and Soviet nuclear weapons unless Reagan agrees to restrictions.

Other critics say Star Wars would simply spur the Soviets to develop new offensive weapons to punch through any U.S. shield.

Peppered with challenging questions, Shultz defended the research program as compatible with the 1972 U.S.-Soviet Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty that limits defenses against the missiles.

He said if SDI research produced a "positive answer," the United States should approach Moscow to revise the ABM agreement to permit deployment — or consider withdrawing from the accord if the Soviets refused.

"The research program is going quite well," Shultz said, "perhaps better than many had expected."

However, he said, questions about reliability and cost-effectiveness would have to be answered prior to a decision on whether to deploy an initial defense.

"I don't have any sense that there is something in the parking lot you can decide about," Shultz said.

Asked if Reagan would face such a decision by year's end, Shultz replied: "I shouldn't think so."

David Riley, a spokesman for the national Campaign to Save the ABM Treaty, said following the hearing, "Unilateral action by the administration to destroy the ABM treaty, which seriously endangers the world security, flies directly in the face of the law."

"The ABM treaty is widely recognized as the foundation of all strategic arms control," Riley said. "Its very existence was the essential pre-condition for the large advances foreshadowed at the recent summit in Iceland. Its reaffirmation is the only hope today for achieving major arms reductions."

At the hearing, Shultz also suggested his position on Star Wars was not in sharp conflict with that of Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger, who reportedly is eager to have Reagan approve steps to deploy the first phase of an anti-missile defense.

"The differences between us usually are exaggerated," Shultz said.

Sen. James Exon, D-Neb., who raised the issue, did not seem convinced. He said he had "quite a different opinion" about their views. Exon said Congress was getting "conflicting signals" from the two Cabinet officers.

At the Pentagon, meanwhile, spokesman Robert Sims said Weinberger had not called for deployment this year or next.

"He has said that our progress has been substantial, much more than we thought in the past, and we hope we can continue doing the research and that the research will lead to deployment," Sims said.

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said Reagan had indicated only that the question of whether to make an early decision on deployment was "under review."

"There has been no decision," Fitzwater said.

Another U.S. official, speaking only on condition of anonymity, said

Reagan's meeting at the White House with Shultz, Weinberger and other key advisers might lead to a directive from the president to concentrate research on certain kinds of weapons.

"This was a general discussion of the technologies being explored and the options for movement to develop the most promising of those technologies," another source said. "It was not a decision meeting on deployment. The president could now direct us to emphasize research in certain parts of the program, but that isn't the same as discussing deployment."

That prompted one senator to admit he was bewildered by where SDI now stands.

"The SDI situation is confusing," Sen. J. Bennett Johnston Jr., D-La., told Deputy Defense Secretary William H. Taft IV after he had testified before the committee.

"Yes, it is," Taft acknowledged.

The Pentagon official then said: "We are not pursuing SDI research for the fun of it. ... We intend to deploy SDI if we are successful (in research)."

U.S. Builds Mideast Force

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Pentagon is continuing to build up U.S. forces in the Middle East, moving a second Marine amphibious force from Spain to the Mediterranean, officials say.

Robert Sims, chief Pentagon spokesman, said a Mediterranean Amphibious Ready Group of about 1,900 Marines left Rota, Spain, early Tuesday, doubling the total number of U.S. Marines deployed in the Mediterranean.

Sims declined to pinpoint where the group was going, but sources who requested anonymity said it had been directed to sail eastward toward two aircraft carrier battle groups and another amphibious group already stationed in the area.

Over the past week, the Pentagon has marshalled a strong battle group in the eastern Mediterranean in response to rising tensions in the Mideast and new hostage-taking in Lebanon.

The carriers Kennedy and Nimitz and the original amphibious group of about 1,900 Marines were steaming around in the southeastern Mediterranean, south of Cyprus and relatively close to the coast of Lebanon, the Pentagon sources said.

They declined to say how close to the coastline the ships were operating.

The force now includes 22 warships and three amphibious landing vessels. The amphibious group that left Spain on Tuesday would add another five ships to the force.

The sources and Sims continued to stress that the Navy battle groups had received no orders to prepare for any military operation. One official said the carrier Kennedy would probably be allowed to pay a port call to Haifa, Israel, over the weekend.

"Our movements of our ships are entirely precautionary in nature," Sims said. "They represent prudent stationing of our forces where they would provide the greatest opportunity for the president to exercise whatever option he wished. They are not there as a threat to anyone, certainly not as a threat to anyone who is acting in a civilized way."

In a separate development, Sims offered an updated U.S. assessment of the fighting between Iran and Iraq, saying Iraqi forces "appear to have regained the initiative in the local Basra area."

Iran launched a major offensive against the southern Iraqi city of Basra on Jan. 9, establishing a beachhead of roughly five square miles on Iraqi territory.

Sims said Wednesday the two sides were still engaged in "intense fighting," but over the weekend, an estimated 20,000 Iraqi troops had succeeded in driving the Iranians from a small area west of Fish Lake and from a small island in the Shatt al Arab waterway.

Coast Guard Offices Closing

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Coast Guard is closing two district offices and establishing new maintenance and logistics commands to free more people for duties such as search and rescue and pursuit of drug smugglers, Transportation Secretary Elizabeth Dole says.

Mrs. Dole said Tuesday that district offices in New York City and Alameda, Calif., will be closed, but new maintenance and logistics commands will be located in those cities. Those new offices will be commanded by a rear admiral, who will report directly to the area commander, Atlantic or Pacific.

The moves will allow the reassignment of more than 500 shore personnel now working in support functions to operations, Mrs. Dole said.

The realignment stemmed from an internal study initiated by Adm. Paul A. Yost, the Coast Guard commandant, after he took over in May 1986. The study was designed to see where the service could grow from within to meet its expanded operational missions. The realignment is scheduled for completion by the end of 1987.

Greenville's current city council is headed by Mayor Leslie H. Garner. Council members include William J. Hadden Jr., who also serves as mayor pro tem, Janice B. Buck, Edward E. Carter, Inez Fridley, Nancy M. Jenkins and Lorraine G. Shinn.

U.S. Spent $672 Billion On Social Welfare In 1984

WASHINGTON (AP) — Spending on social welfare programs — from public schools to Social Security and Medicare — rose to $672 billion in fiscal 1984 but claimed a smaller share of the gross national product, federal figures show.

The total spent increased nearly $30 billion, or 4.7 percent, from fiscal 1983 to fiscal 1984, the most recent year for which figures are available. But after taking inflation into account, the increase in real dollars was $3.3 billion, or 0.5 percent, a federal researcher reported Tuesday.

That is "the lowest real year-to-year increase since 1978-79, when real expenditures dropped 0.1 percent," reported Ann Kallman Bixby of the Social Security Administration's Office of Research and Statistics.

The $672 billion includes all the money spent by every level of government — federal, state and local — on the whole panoply of social programs, Social Security, Medicare, Medicaid, welfare, veterans' programs, education, housing, pensions and others.

Social welfare expenditures' share of the GNP fell from 19.3 percent in 1983 to 18.2 percent in 1984. That was because while social spending was growing by 0.5 percent, real GNP grew nearly 7 percent in the same period, Bixby wrote in a brief statistical report.

In 1976, social welfare spending accounted for 60 cents of every dollar spent by government programs. In 1984, the social welfare programs spent less than 53 cents from every government dollar.

The figures, compiled annually by Bixby's office, show that state and local governments spent a larger share of their funds on social welfare than did the federal government: 59 percent versus 50 percent.

But Washington provided most of the dollars: $419.3 billion compared with $252.7 billion spent by state and local governments. That is a 62 percent to 38 percent split.

Social welfare spending still accounted for a majority share of the federal budget, but it contracted during the first three years of the Reagan administration. Social welfare programs claimed 53.9 percent of the federal budget in 1981 and 50.2 percent in 1984.

During the same period, social welfare expenditures by states and localities dropped from 62 percent to 59 percent of their budgets.

Here is a categorical breakdown of how the $672 billion was spent:

- $342.3 billion for social insurance, including Social Security, Medicare and government pensions.
- $152 billion for education.

—$89.9 billion for public aid, including Medicaid, food stamps, Aid to Families with Dependent Children and Supplemental Security Income.

—$37.9 billion for other health and medical care.

—$26.1 billion for veterans' programs.

—$10.4 billion for housing.

—$13.4 billion for assorted other services, including vocational rehabilitation, institutional care and child nutrition.

By comparison, Pentagon spending accounted for 25.9 percent of the federal budget in 1984 and 6 percent of GNP. Currently, the Defense Department budget accounts for 27 percent of all federal expenditures and 6.2 percent of GNP.

Official Soviet Media Condemns U.S. Nuclear Test

MOSCOW (AP) — The official media today condemned the United States' first nuclear test of 1987 as an "outrageous act" that threatened efforts to halt the nuclear arms race.

Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev said in December that he would end his nation's unilateral test moratorium, begun in August 1985, after the first U.S. test explosion of this year.

There was no immediate Kremlin comment following the U.S. test Tuesday under the Nevada desert.

However, the official news agency Tass said in a brief commentary a few hours after the blast that it could push the Kremlin to resume test explosions "with redoubled force."

The Soviet Union began its test moratorium Aug. 6, 1985, the 40th anniversary of the U.S. atomic bombing of Hiroshima, Japan, in World War II.

Despite repeated Soviet urgings, the United States refused to join the ban, saying tests were needed to develop President Reagan's space-based Strategic Defense Initiative, commonly called "Star Wars." There have been 25 U.S. test explosions since the Soviet moratorium took effect.

The Communist Party daily Pravda today carried a brief commentary from Washington under the headline "An Outrageous Act," accusing the Reagan administration of moving up the explosion originally set for Thursday to avoid demonstrations planned by anti-nuclear protesters.

The national daily Sovetskaya Rossiya complained that while the Soviet Union silenced its testing ranges for 547 days, the United States used the opportunity to advance its weapons testing.

Tass carried comments from foreign anti-nuclear groups and public figures who denounced the Nevada test as a Cold War tactic and a blow to detente.

"The explosion, conducted two days earlier than planned, undoubtedly will hold a special place in the Reagan administration's already odious 'service record' over the past six years," it said.

Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze, who was on a visit to East Germany, said, "If the U.S.A. continues its atomic tests, we cannot distance ourselves from nuclear explosions any longer without a risk for our security and the security of socialist states."

Women's Hair Styles Are Softer, Conservative

By SUE HINSON
Reflector Staff Writer

Never been one for outlandish hair styles, but concerned with being in tune with current fashion? Well, heave a sigh of relief, those spiked dos with hues of pinks, reds and blues are out.

What's in, according to local stylists, is a softer conservative look.

"Everybody's asking for the look, college kids, working-age people, even parents want their kids hair cut conservatively," says Mary McLawhorn of Unisex Limited.

According to Peter Maroulus of Hair By Rycke, the current style for women is a little bit longer, dried naturally with body waves, "a casual, easy look that requires minimum maintenance," but one that doesn't stand to attention.

The trend toward longer, softer, yet smooth conservative looks extends into men's styles as well, Maroulus said.

"We haven't seen much of it here yet, because Greenville is on the conservative side and a bit slower to take up current fashions, but in larger, more cosmopolitan areas, men are going with a little more length in the back."

Once the local mecca for current, wild, bizarre, unusual cuts — call them what you will — Hair By Rycke today rarely gets requests to do Mohawks or any of the other punk styles that were in during '85 and '86.

"We don't see a lot of the punk stuff, mostly because the ones with the more severe cuts do it themselves," Maroulus said.

Unlike Ms. McLawhorn and Maroulus, Mitchell's Hair Styling Academy Director Dale Chalmers said the academy still receives requests for punk cuts every now and then. "We've one little boy whose parents reward him by letting him choose any cut he wants. What he loves is a Mohawk, totally shaved except for a short strip on top that graduates to longer hair as it moves back over his head," she said.

Too, she said, there is an occasional request for a rat tail, "but those are getting less and less frequent. It's not in any more," she said.

So if you're despairing because the cut that looked so good six months ago is now out. Don't worry. "Hair is a renewable resource. It will grow back. Then you can have it done another way," Ms. Chalmers said.

But who or what determines what's in, what's out? According to the stylists interviewed, the trend setters in hair are a select group of cosmetologists who under the auspices of the National Hair Dressers and Cosmetology Association yearly present what they think will be the rage for the coming year.

To develop styles, the group works with the fashion industry, gearing and blending the coiffures with the styles that will appear in clothing stores the next year.

And as soon as the styles are released, the local shops go into action giving the cuts to anyone that wants them. "We start doing them right away," Maroulus said. He added, however, that usually a season passes before "everyone" wants the cut.

The new styles aren't right for everyone, though. For instance, Pitt County resident Diane Guy said she doesn't like to have her head look like everyone else's. She doesn't like for her hair to curl just like Krystle's on Dynasty.

"I remember when the bob came out, I had this hair dresser who tried to get me to have my hair done that way. 'It'd look so good on you,' he said. Then he said the same thing to three or four other women. But I didn't want a bob. I wanted what looked good on me in opposition to what was in style," she said.

While looking good in her own individual way is important to Ms. Guy, she said feeling good is also important. Getting her hair styled promotes that feeling.

"I feel like I owe it to myself to do something special every now and then. I have a little girl who is 10 months old so it's a boost to have something done for me, have some time for me. I'd like to have my hair done once a week if I could afford it," she said.

Maroulus agrees that getting a cut is a boost. "A lot of people come down when they're low or depressed about themselves and that individual attention, getting pampered for an hour, really picks them up," he said.

It's a boost for the stylist as well, "especially when they come in and want a totally different style and put their head in your hands, so to speak," Ms. McLawhorn said.

"Clients always remark that having their hair washed and done by someone else is so relaxing. It makes them feel as if they're special," she said.

LEARNING THE ROPES — Before Mitchell's Hair Styling Academy students are allowed to work on live models, they must master styling skills on mannequins. Techniques they must practice include frosting as demonstrated by Carol Cox (foreground) and curling and cutting methods shown (front to back) by LaWanda Jones, Jackie Williams and Barbara Daniels. (Reflector Photo by Tommy Forrest)

Men Spending More On Hair Care

In 1986, American men ran up bills in excess of $2.4 billion for hair care — $2.4 billion for 148 million hair cuts, 7 million hair colorations and 14 million permanent waves.

Those figures, supplied by "American Salon," a trade publication for the professional salon industry, reflect an 11.5 percent jump over numbers for 1985.

The figures also reflect men's overall dissatisfaction with their appearances, according to a 1972 "Psychology Today" study in which 15 percent of men surveyed responded that they did not like how they looked. In a 1985 reprise of the same study, the 15 percent figure more than doubled.

So what or who's to blame for the American male's lack confidence in his appearance? Possibly business and its pressures.

In an article in "Sales & Marketing Management," Dr. Jane Templeton, who heads the New York marketing research firm Choice Points, quoted a salesman she had met in one of her research groups. "When I shave and dress and blow my hair in the morning," the salesman said, "it's like checking over my rifle in a war zone."

A bank officer in another of Templeton's research groups said, "If I can't make my hair right, I don't want to meet my clients. Appearances really count in my business."

New York psychologist Stanley Teitelbaum, Ph.D., said he sees the recent preoccupation with appearance as fallout from the women's liberation movement.

"Women's liberation gave men permission to be less macho. Roles overlapped. Women were no longer defined as housewives. Men gained the permission to be softer, to express their gentler sides which heretofore were considered unmanly. In short, to be vain," he said.

"It's also a by-product of the whole health and fitness movement. Ten years ago, you didn't hear men talking about diets, for example. Now it's common," he said.

The concern with image is not the province of only the baby boomers. Veteran executives at the top of their professions submit themselves to cosmetic plastic surgery and hair replacement owing to fears of being overtaken in their careers by younger men.

Dr. Teitelbaum said this resistance to the ravages of time is an example of a new willingness to confront the crises of middle age.

"People get afraid of losing their hair, their jobs, their youth."

And hair, he said, is that part of our face we can most easily work with.

"It may be that people feel a greater sense of control over how they appear to others through their hair. They can create an image that gets a response."

UNUSUAL LOOKS — Today options range from traditional cuts favored by the majority of young businessmen to more elaborate and unusual looks popular among some of the adventurous.

Her 'Right' Caused Great Wrong

DEAR ABBY: My wife refused to wear a seat belt. She said it messed up her clothes, was uncomfortable and, besides, she might be trapped if the car ever went underwater — even though there is no water within 50 miles of here.

Well, she had an automobile accident last May, and now she is paralyzed from the shoulders down. There is no doubt that she could have prevented this tragedy had she worn a seat belt, but she had always said,

Dear Abby
By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

"It's my right to choose to wear a seat belt or not to wear one; it's my life, and it's nobody's business but my own." (Her exact words.)

Between my job and caring for her, I have no life at all. I'm only 42, and now all our dreams have gone up in smoke. I have all I can do to keep from printing her words on a poster in big block letters and placing it in her bedroom on the wall facing her, then walking out. Abby, at times I feel such hostility toward her, I don't know how much longer I can go on like this. God, give me strength! I've always worn a seat belt; so have our two practically motherless teen-age children. — DISGUSTED IN GEORGIA

P.S. I have a 48-year-old brother in Alabama who is dying from lung cancer. He's been a heavy smoker since age 17, and I find it difficult to feel sorry for him, too, but that's another story.

DEAR DISGUSTED: While your brother's plight may be "another story," the plots are similar in that both tragedies could have been avoided.

People owe it to their families to take good care of themselves. Those who live recklessly — and that includes doing drugs, and breaking the law — will not pay for their selfishness alone; their families and those who love them also suffer emotionally and financially.

Your anger is appropriate, but your wife is the principal victim, so get some counseling and learn how to deal with your anger. And persuade your wife to get counseling, too. Her guilt and anger must be overwhelming.

DEAR ABBY: I'm a grown man with teen-agers of my own, but I can't describe the guilt and shame I felt during my teen years because when I was 13, my mother took me aside and said, "I know you've been 'playing with yourself'" (she couldn't bring herself to use the word "masturbating"), "and if you don't stop it, you will lose your mind and end up in an insane asylum!"

Before Christmas my wife sent for your booklet, "What Every Teen-Ager Ought to Know," and she was so impressed with it, she sent for four more for her sisters to use as "stocking stuffers" for their teen-agers.

This morning I read the booklet, and when I read the chapter on masturbation, I couldn't help but recall the tirade of my mother and how damaging it was to my self-esteem. What a pity I couldn't have read your booklet when I was 13.

Please print that portion of your teen booklet in your column. You'd be helping thousands of young people and their parents as well. Sign me ... BORN TOO SOON IN ST. LOUIS

DEAR BORN: Here's the chapter: MASTURBATION

This will be the shortest chapter in the booklet. Why? Because all you need to know about masturbation is: It is normal. Every healthy normal person has masturbated.

Now I will tell you what it is not: It's not depraved, a crime, or harmful to your health. (But if it makes you feel guilty because you've been told it's wrong, don't do it.)

I repeat, all normal boys and girls (and some adults, too) practice this natural type of sexual gratification.

Now, isn't that a load off your mind?

Aiming High

North Pitt's Billy Hardison aims high as he releases a jumper during the North Pitt-C.B. Aycock game Tuesday night. Hardison and the Panthers topped the Falcons, 74-69. (Reflector Photo By Cliff Hollis)

By 74-69 Score

Panthers Hold Off Falcons

By TOM MORRIS
Reflector Sports Writer

BETHEL — Paul Blow connected on four of five free throws in the final minute of play as North Pitt held off a furious rally by C.B. Aycock to take a 74-69 Eastern Plains Conference basketball victory Tuesday night.

The Panthers led by as many as 18 points in the final quarter before getting sloppy down the stretch and missing on numerous one-and-one foul shot opportunities. The Falcons pulled within 66-62 with just over a minute to go when Blow began to take advantage of Aycock's fouling strategy.

"With the tempo of the game, they started fouling us and we didn't respond real well," said North Pitt coach Cobb Deans. "I think we got a little tired."

The Panthers' problems began with about four and half minutes left in the game. After Calvin Hunter gave the Panthers a 64-46 lead, the Falcons scored seven straight points to pull within 64-53.

First, Corey Ruffin hit two free throws. Then Greg Speight followed with a three-point play on a layup followed by a jumper by Travis Spells.

North Pitt's Calvin Hunter was fouled with 4:24 remaining. He missed the front end of a one and one and Dion Battle hit on a three-point play for Aycock to make it 64-56.

With 3:59 left, Blow also missed on another front end of a one-and-one but the Falcons failed to take advantage of the chance, turning the ball back to the Panthers.

Hunter was fouled again and missed the first shot of another one-and-one. Battle countered for Aycock and the score was 64-58.

With 2:22 to go, North Pitt's Billy Hardison was fouled and broke the Panthers' cold string by hitting two free throws that put the lead back to 66-58. Battle again hit for Aycock, this time on a tip-in to bring it to 66-60.

Hardison then missed a one-and-one shot with 1:34 left and Battle hit from inside to pull the Falcons within four at 66-62.

Reggie Daniels gave the Panthers some breathing room with a layup to make it 68-62. Battle countered for Aycock with a free throw to draw back within 68-63.

With 1:02 left in the game, Hunter hit two free throws in a one-and-one situation to make it 70-63.

A basket by Ruffin was followed by two free throws by Blow to make it 72-65. Speight then hit from outside to make it 72-67.

With 28 seconds remaining, Blow had a chance to ice the game but failed on a one-and-one and Battle again was there for Aycock to bring it to 72-69 with 18 seconds left.

Blow redeemed himself by hitting two free throws with 17 seconds left to provide the final margin.

"I think we gave a good team effort," Deans said. "We made some mental mistakes at the end but I feel we've learned something. We got a good game from Billy Hardison. We couldn't get the ball in his hands (at the end) but I was really pleased with the way he played."

The Panthers appeared in control for most of the game until the final four minutes.

They opened up strong, outscoring Aycock 22-10 in the first period. Hardison, starting his first game, hit two of his first three shots from the outside to open things up.

Things kept rolling for the Panthers in the second quarter as they took a 40-28 lead into halftime.

"What really set the trend for the whole ballgame was Billy Hardison coming out and hitting those shots. If we can hit those, we can hit Ashley Sheppard inside. Ashley did a good job on the boards."

Sheppard led the Panthers with 17 points. Blow had 13, Hunter 12 while Hardison and Daniels chipped in 10 apiece. The Panthers improve to 8-9 overall and 4-4 in the EPC.

The win followed a 56-37 loss to Farmville last Friday and Deans is hopeful that it is a sign of things to come.

"For the future, this is a foundation. You don't want to get in a lull," Deans said. "I still think even though we had that lull at Farmville we are improving on the things that we have been working on to improve, but now we've got some other things that have come up. The turning point of that comeback was when we had some kids go one-on-one."

In the girl's game, the Panthers expanded a six-point halftime advantage into an 15-point fourth quarter lead but had to hold off repeated rallies by the Lady Falcons down the stretch.

Driesbach Added To Pirate Staff

Chuck Driesbach, an assistant coach at Wake Forest University for the past three seasons, has joined East Carolina head football coach Art Baker's staff for the 1987 season, it was announced today.

Driesbach, 34, has coached both offensively and defensively during his 10-year collegiate coaching career. He coached the receivers last year for Wake's head coach Al Groh as the Demon Deacons enjoyed an outstanding offensive year.

A graduate of Villanova, where he started at wide receiver for three years, 1972-74, and captained the team as a senior, Driesbach also played one year with the Philadelphia Bell of the World Football League. A Doylestown, Pa., native, he began his coaching career in 1976 as a graduate assistant at Kansas State and continued as a member of that school's staff for eight years. In 1979 he was named defensive secondary coach under Jim Dickey.

The Wildcat pass defense ranked first in the nation in 1980, allowing 91.4 passing yards per game. Driesbach's 1982 unit finished eighth nationally and had two all-Big Eight selections.

"I'm very excited about getting started here at East Carolina," Driesbach said. "I've had the chance to see a lot of film on the players and there is a tremendous amount of potential."

Driesbach and his wife, Kim, have two daughters, Lindsay, 4, and Kate Delaney 1.

The announcement of Driesbach came following the departure of defensive line coach Wally Chambers, who accepted a similar position at Temple University.

Driesbach's coaching duties have yet to be decided.

Stars & Stripes Regains Cup

FREMANTLE, Australia (AP) — Dennis Conner, the man who lost the America's Cup, won it back today as Stars & Stripes swept Australia's Kookaburra III in four races to raise Old Glory over the Auld Mug again.

It was sweet revenge for the 44-year-old San Diego sailor, who dedicated three years of his life to recapturing yachting's biggest prize — which he lost to Australia II in 1983 in Newport, R.I.

"It's great. The sailing conditions were fantastic," Conner said while still aboard his boat.

"It's hard to explain, but it's a great day to be an American," said tactician Tom Whidden, who lost with Conner in '83. "I think we showed that not only are we the best nation technologically, but we have the sailors to go along with it."

"I'd like to say it was all skill, but we had the best boat." Thousands of spectators lined the harborfront to welcome Conner and his crew. As Stars & Stripes approached her dock, the mainsail came down and a huge U.S. flag was flown from the mast. The crew, wearing red, white and blue, waved to the crowds and celebrated by popping bottles of champagne.

"He just had a bit more (speed) than we had," losing skipper Iain Murray said of Conner. "The boat just hasn't got what he's got, and that's it. We thought we were sailing better than we've ever sailed before."

Referring to his crew, Murray, 28, sailing in his first America's Cup series, said: "I think they realize they've been beaten by a better boat and a better team on this occasion, and they accept that."

"We're very happy. We're disappointed but happy," he said.

Conner was the first American to lose the cup, which had been held by the New York Yacht Club since the schooner America won it in 1851. He won it in 1980 aboard Freedom.

Kookaburra III was never really in today's race, held in the medium sea breezes known as the Fremantle Doctor. Conner led from start to finish, as he had in the three previous races of the best-of-seven final.

It was the first sweep by an America's Cup skipper since Ted Turner steered Courageous past Australia in 1977.

Recognized as a master at sailing 12-meter cup racers, Conner and tactician Tom Whidden timed their start to a split-second, brushing by the starting buoy just as the opening cannon fired.

Stars & Stripes crossed the line five seconds ahead of Peter Gilmour, the aggressive helmsman who starts Kookaburra III before turning the wheel over to Murray.

Gilmour had tried to trap Conner, but couldn't. By breaking in front, Conner was able to call the tune the rest of the 24.1-mile race.

Kookaburra III never got close enough to use her quick-turning agility in a tacking battle.

Murray's lemon-yellow boat could only trail Conner's blue yacht around the Indian Ocean like a puppy on a leash. Conner put the race out of reach on the third of eight legs when he added 20 seconds to his lead, the equivalent of a 20-run inning in a baseball game.

When Conner crossed the finish line 1 minute, 59 seconds in front, the three-year residency of the trophy at the Royal Perth Yacht Club, which turned this sports-loving nation cup crazy, came to a bittersweet end.

It was the culmination of three years of practice, and planning for Conner and his Sail America syndicate from the San Diego Yacht Club. They built three yachts and spent $20 million — including $20,000 a day to keep the campaign here going — to bring the cup back up from under.

When Conner ended his personal nightmare and the Aussies' fairy-tale dream, Stars & Stripes, her portly skipper and his flawless crew got a raucous horn salute from the small flotilla of big Yank yachts that had crossed oceans to get here.

Stars & Stripes had to survive four

Edwards Is Top Player

Blue Edwards of East Carolina has been named the Colonial Athletic Association's Player of the Week, leading the Pirates through a 2-1 week, including wins over Virginia Commonwealth and American.

Edwards, a 6-5 junior forward from Walstonburg, scored 49 points and grabbed 29 rebounds in three games. His best single-game performance was a 20-point, 14-rebound game against American as the Pirates won, 71-56.

Edwards led the Pirates in scoring with 19 points in a losing effort against Navy on Monday night as the Midshipmen won by a 76-60 margin. He is currently averaging 16 points per game for the Pirates and six rebounds.

ECU is 11-10 on the season under Coach Charlie Harrison and travels to William & Mary on Saturday for its next game.

CDC Proposes Mandatory Testing For AIDS

By THOMAS WAGNER
Associated Press Writer
ATLANTA (AP) — A federal agency's proposal for mandatory AIDS tests for anyone admitted to a hospital and even for couples seeking marriage licenses "would drive the disease underground," a medical ethicist says.

Civil libertarians also condemned the tentative U.S. Centers for Disease Control proposal, saying screening would violate fundamental rights to privacy.

Dr. Walter Dowdle, the agency's AIDS director, said Tuesday's proposal and a public hearing later this month were a way to "explore issues related to using the test to prevent further infection."

But Carol Levine, who researches ethical issues related to AIDS at the Hastings Center in Hastings-on-Hudson, N.Y., said such screening would "drive the disease underground by driving people away from the setting in which they could get the needed treatment and help."

And Nan Hunter, a lawyer for the American Civil Liberties Union, called mandatory testing "a violation of fundamental privacy rights and, like many coercive measures, counterproductive."

The number of Americans who have contracted AIDS through heterosexual contact has risen from only a few in 1981 to 4 percent of the more than 30,000 confirmed cases. More than 16,800 people have died from the disease, and the CDC estimates AIDS will strike 270,000 people and kill 179,000 through 1991.

Dowdle said the steady increase, especially among heterosexuals, prompted the proposal to sharply expand testing. "We're saying these are the ways the test might be used. Here are the justifications, here are the obstacles."

Mandatory AIDS testing already is required for blood donors, military personnel and State Department foreign service employees and their families.

One obstacle, Dowdle said, might be a concern about confidentiality, and that hospitals and government agencies would have to ensure that test results remained secret to prevent discrimination.

Ms. Hunter agreed that confidentiality would be a concern.

"When you have a controversial political issue you can't assume medical records will remain confidential the way they are when you get treatment for flu," she said in a telephone interview from New York.

Ms. Hunter and other critics argued that research, education and counseling were the way to deal with the deadly disease.

"The Reagan administration has ignored AIDS education for five years," said Dr. Neil Schram, chairman of the Los Angeles City-County AIDS Task Force. "That has led to AIDS being out of control in this country."

"Rather than put in $1 billion for education and prevention programs, they continue to propose token testing of various populations."

The CDC has invited 250 public health officials and civil libertarians to an Atlanta public hearing Feb. 24-25 to discuss the proposal. Dowdle said the CDC would decide after the hearing whether to make a formal proposal.

Such a recommendation that hospitals or government agencies make the tests mandatory would not be binding, he said.

A person who tested positive for the AIDS antibody while applying for a marriage license would not be denied a license, but the information "would provide an opportunity for counseling and protect the non-infected potential partner as well as future children," Dowdle said.

Mandatory testing of hospital patients "would provide the physician with information that may directly relate to the way he cares for the patient," he said.

A person who tests positive for the AIDS antibody, indicating exposure to the virus, has a 20 percent to 30 percent chance of developing AIDS over a five-year period, Dowdle said. One million to 1.5 million Americans have been exposed to the virus.

"There is a 30 percent to 50 percent chance of a mother who tests positive for the AIDS virus passing the infection to the child," he said.

Acquired immune deficiency syndrome is a disease in which a virus attacks the body's immune system, leaving victims susceptible to a wide variety of infections and cancers.

It is most often transmitted through sexual contact. Other means of transmission include transfusions of tainted blood or blood products, and the sharing of contaminated hypodermic needles or syringes by drug abusers. AIDS can also be passed from mother to child at or before birth.

Computer Chip Expands Channels For Space Radio

By STEVE WILSTEIN
Associated Press Writer
STANFORD, Calif. (AP) — Scientists scanning the universe for radio signals from extraterrestrials have 10 million more channels to tune in on, thanks to a new computer chip developed by Stanford University graduate students.

The students developed a chip that is 40 times more powerful than current circuit boards and will be used in the National Aeronautics and Space Administration's Search for Extraterrestrial Intelligence program.

The SETI researchers are reading information from an 85-foot diameter radio telescope in the Mojave Desert in an attempt to find artificial radio signals in the natural noises from gaseous clouds, cosmic debris and stars.

Ivan Linscott, the program's team leader, said the students working with him developed the chip to increase to 10 million the number of radio channels that can be analyzed, while decreasing the size and cost of the analyzer.

Each of the new chips, about one-third of an inch square, contains 34,000 transistors and can perform 80 million arithmetic operations per second, said Bryn Eckroot, one of the seven graduate students on the team.

Linscott acknowledged there is debate over whether extraterrestrials exist, but said he hoped the 10-year SETI project would "change the issue from speculation to scientific investigation."

"We are trying to perform a measurement based on testable hypotheses that intelligent life exists elsewhere in the galaxy and has evolved in a technological fashion that is appropriate for communication."

Engineers at Stanford are focusing on an area of about 1,000 stars, and listening to them through the microwave portion of the radio spectrum, Linscott said. "There hasn't been any confirmed detection. From time to time, we'll get unusual signals that are not repeatable. We're left wondering whether it was local interference, a hoax or an isolated incident."

Stanford receives about $500,000 a year from NASA for the extraterrestrial search, said Allen Peterson, faculty adviser for the team.

Researchers speculate that extraterrestrials might be operating pulsing radio beacons to attract attention of civilizations throughout the galaxies.

"Those would be the signals our instrumentation would be programmed to find," Linscott said.

The search for signals is in the "microwave window" because researchers believe extraterrestrials would signal in the area with the least interference. The microwave region of the radio spectrum fits this criterion.

A system called a multichannel spectrum analyzer is connected to the radio telescope and scans a variety of signals. The most narrow of natural signals is 1,000 times broader than an artificial signal, so the very narrow signals read by the analyzer would be extraordinary and probably from an artificial source, Linscott said.

The project so far only is receiving signals. None have been transmitted.

"Why bark in the woods when we don't know what's out there," Linscott said.

Boat Racer Is Killed

MIAMI (AP) — World champion boat racer Donald Aronow, who became a millionaire by age 28 and went on to design record-holding speedboats, has been gunned down, authorities said.

While police early today refused to release any information on Tuesday's slaying, longtime business associate John Crouse said Aronow was shot in his Mercedes-Benz coupe after visiting a fellow boat builder.

Crouse said he was told the shots were fired from a black Lincoln Continental that had pulled alongside Aronow's car.

Aronow, 59, was pronounced dead of multiple gunshot injuries at 4:45 p.m., said Mount Sinai Medical Center spokeswoman Lori Fagenholz.

Metro-Dade Police spokesman Jim Hutton would only confirm that the dead man was Aronow, refusing to release any other details.

Aronow's boats have set 25 world speed records and won more than 300 races.

Astronaut Challenges Testing For Redesigned Rocket Booster

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — An astronaut monitoring the redesign of space shuttle rocket engines has questioned whether planned tests of new boosters will be rigorous enough.

Robert L. Gibson, who piloted one shuttle mission and commanded another, said a key test of a portion of the solid rocket booster engine did not include all the stresses the rocket could experience during a launch.

"It doesn't simulate the flight environment very well," Gibson told The Houston Post in a story published Tuesday. "That's the area I know John Young (chief of the astronaut corps) has a little bit of concern (about)."

He said the concern was being discussed with engineers on the rocket redesign team.

A solid rocket joint that leaked flame is blamed for the Challenger accident that killed seven crew members. The spacecraft exploded Jan. 28, 1986, just 73 seconds after it was launched from Florida's Kennedy Space Center.

The rocket joints are being redesigned and tested before the shuttle flies again.

Gibson said his concern was about a test to be conducted later this year at the Marshall Space Flight Center in Alabama.

The test involves burning a small amount of solid propellant loaded into a portion of a booster. The firing is to be in a vertical position and would last just long enough to test the rocket joint seal.

Gibson said the test would not mimic the stresses encountered by weight-bearing struts or braces attached to the rockets.

Changing the test would delay the resumption of shuttle flights, Gibson said. The first flight with the new rocket booster is set for Feb. 18, 1988, but Gibson called that "obviously a very optimistic schedule."

Gibson said another concern was finding a suitable new material for the rubberized O-rings used to seal joints in the solid rocket segments. A leaky seal is thought to have led to the Challenger accident.

Investigators believe low temperatures the morning of Challenger's launch may have played a role in causing the leak. Engineers have proposed putting heaters on the joints, but would prefer to find material that would be unaffected by cold because a heating system "gives you another possible point of failure," Gibson said.

In 1985, Pitt County's average weekly manufacturing wage was $332.98.

Survey Shows Today's Americans Are Eating Less Fat

By DON KENDALL
AP Farm Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — A marketing expert says the average American is eating 26 percent less fat per day from retail cuts of beef and pork than a decade ago.

John L. Stanton of St. Joseph's University in Philadelphia said Tuesday his industry-sponsored research showed a decline in beef and pork fat consumption from 1977 of more than 70 calories daily for men and 52 calories for women.

A consumer group spokeswoman said she had not reviewed the study but cautioned that such a reduction in consumption still left meat as the leading source of fat in the average American's diet.

"The American public is eating less meat, and the meat industry seems to be doing everything in its power to reverse that decline," said Bonnie Liebman, director of nutrition for the Washington-based Center for Science in the Public Interest.

Ms. Liebman added that both the beef and pork industries have earmarked millions of dollars to help increase meat consumption.

"It would clearly be detrimental to the public's health if those industries were to succeed in getting people to eat more red meat," she said.

The study was released as part of National Meat Week festivities organized by the American Meat Institute, which represents meat packers and processors, and other organizations representing industry, farm and livestock groups.

One of the goals of the study was to measure the impact of recent "quarter-inch trim" policies followed by some retailers who cut off excess fat from meat and the awareness of consumers about meat fat consumption.

Stanton said the Agriculture Department's 1977 Nationwide Food Consumption Survey, the most recent, was used in making the 10-year comparisons. He also conducted a national survey of food retailers to help determine current fat consumption from retail cuts of beef and pork.

For example, Stanton said he found that 86 percent of the retailers who responded to the survey had switched from a half-inch trim of fat in their meat departments to a quarter-inch trim.

The new information collected by Stanton included changes in the fat content of pork and beef as reported by USDA, changes in the proportion of consumers who eat all the fat from meat cuts, and the changes in fat trim policies of grocery stores. By inserting the new information into the USDA's 1977 survey, Stanton said he was able to simulate current individual fat consumption from fresh beef and pork. Stanton said it was important to note that the 26 percent reduction in fat consumption is an average figure and that there were wide variations. "That means some people had a very small reduction, but others experience dramatic changes," he said. "Twenty-seven percent of the individuals surveyed had more than a 40 percent reduction, 9 percent of the people were shown to have a 50 percent reduction." Ms. Liebman said a survey by the Department of Health and Human Services showed that in 1976-80 meat was the largest source of fat in the average diet, accounting for 27.9 percent of the total fat intake. That included all meat, fresh and processed, not just fresh beef and pork covered by Stanton's research. Dairy products and eggs were second with 18.3 percent of the fat in diets. Even if the 26 percent reduction were applied across the board to all meat fats, Ms. Liebman said, it still would leave meat at the top of the list as a source of fat in diets — accounting for about 20.7 percent of total fat consumed by the average American, down from 27.9 percent indicated by the HHS report. High fat consumption can contribute to heart disease and certain kinds of cancer, particularly colon and breast cancer, and Americans need to cut back even further than Stanton's study indicates, she said.

Interior To Impose Park Fees

WASHINGTON (AP) — Despite protests from some lawmakers, Interior Secretary Donald Hodel says admission charges should be in effect at 73 national parks by early next month.

Hodel said Tuesday in a letter to Sens. John Heinz and Arlen Specter, both R-Pa., that the administration has not backed away from the fees although he apologized for what he acknowledged has been some confusion over them.

"This entrance fee program remains a top priority in this administration, and we are working hard to develop a program that is fair, equitable and uniform with value to both the visitor and the national park system," Hodel said. "I expect new fees to be implemented at all areas around March 1."

The fees had been scheduled to go into effect Monday. Some did, including a $1 charge to visit the Statue of Liberty.

But Hodel said there would be no fee for visiting the Liberty Bell in Philadelphia's Independence Hall.

Also, no admission charges have been imposed yet at other sites in Philadelphia's Independence National Historical Park, where superintendent Hobart Cawood has been an outspoken critic of the plan.

The park service announced Dec. 15 that it would impose entrance fees at 73 parks, monuments and other installations for the first time in February, and raise entrance charges at 61 other sites.

According to an Interior Department statement, revenues from the collections would be used both for the individual park and the national park system.

Crew Failure Cited In Crash

WASHINGTON (AP) — A federal investigation into the 1985 crash of a Midwest Express DC-9 at Milwaukee concludes that a crew failure to diagnose and respond properly to an engine failure caused the plane to stall.

The National Transportation Safety Board in a final report Tuesday rejected arguments by the airline that both engines actually failed almost at the same time, resulting in an aircraft that could no longer fly.

All 31 people aboard the jetliner were killed in the Sept. 6, 1985, accident which occurred seconds after the plane lifted off from Milwaukee's Mitchell Field. The aircraft was airborne less than half a minute and reached only 700 feet.

The NTSB concluded that the "improper use of flight controls" in response to the breakup of the right engine was the probable cause of the crash. The board said the plane should have been kept aloft despite the failure of one engine.

Sri Lankan Baby Trade Booms As Officials Cry 'Slave Trade'

By DEXTER CRUEZ
Associated Press Writer

COLOMBO, Sri Lanka (AP) — Hundreds and maybe thousands of Sri Lankan babies are sold each year to foreign couples through an underground scheme that officials have likened to a "slave trade."

The island's commissioner of child care, Vinita Jayasinghe, says her efforts to stop the sale of babies, which often result in legal adoptions, are running into a well-organized network of middlemen.

"We have laws prohibiting slavery. We want to use them against all people involved in the buying and selling of humans," said Mrs. Jayasinghe. "If this is not a slave trade, what is it?"

Mrs. Jayasinghe and other officials say the baby trade involves hotel operators, doctors, lawyers and corrupt officials who bring in foreign couples, sell them babies and then arrange legal adoptions.

At least 1,500 babies leave the island each year under such adoptions, she said, and many more are believed sold without any legality.

"We know many local women carry either their own babies or someone else's, leaving the country for various reasons," Mrs. Jayasinghe said. "They thereafter give the infants to middlemen who sell the kids to West European couples."

The transactions usually begin through middlemen abroad, say government officials and sources in the baby trade.

Couples check into Sri Lankan hotels and are presented with infants for inspection or they pick out children from "baby farms," where several infants are put on display.

Once a baby is chosen, an adoption can be arranged after a court hearing that takes only a few minutes.

New attention was focused on baby sales in mid-January when police raided a hotel at Wadduwa, 27 miles south of this capital, and found 22 babies apparently ready to be sold. The owner and 20 local women were arrested.

The infants, ranging from 3 weeks to 6 months, were being cared for by the women, Police Inspector S. Sumanadasa said.

"We also found British, Dutch and German women, all married, feeding the kids with milk or cuddling them," said Police Inspector S. Sumanadasa said.

Police Superintendent Rukman Silva said when police began taking the babies away, some of the European women burst into tears.

He said it was believed the hotel had sent 600 Sri Lankan babies abroad in the last four years at an average price of $1,000 each.

Other officials, who spoke on condition they not be identified, said babies have been sold for more than $3,000, while mothers giving up the children sometimes get as little as $40.

Mrs. Jayasinghe said the system was difficult to stop because the adoptions themselves are legal, despite the sale of the baby and no investigation of the child's origin or of the prospective parents.

The basis for the baby trade is economic. Childless couples cannot find babies to adopt in Europe, with its affluence and falling birth rates. But babies are plentiful in Sri Lanka, where the annual per capita income is $360.

Officials say that not only the poor, but prostitutes and unwed mothers are easy prey for the baby sale racket.

One newspaper, the independent Sun, reported that prostitutes were being paid to have sex with European men to produce lighter skinned babies more attractive to foreign couples.

Police Superintendent Silva also said some of the children found in the raid at the Stamford Cabana Hotel could have been kidnapped. Police have put out an appeal asking for people to identify the children.

Police Inspector Sumanadasa said the hotel's owner would be charged with running a nursery without a license and with running a brothel. He said some of the women would be charged with prostitution.

Mrs. Jayasinghe said that if the baby trade is going to be stopped, stronger laws will have to be invoked and action will have to be taken against foreign buyers of the children.

"If there are no buyers, there will be no sellers in this whole disgraceful business," she said.

Benefactor To Sit On Panel

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — A New York financier who has pledged $20 million to Duke University would have a vote in approving professors for new positions created by the gift, university officials say.

Under the proposal, Disque D. Deane would sit on an executive committee that will vote on 20 new professors to be hired for an institute on "the human future," Duke vice chancellor Joel L. Fleishman said.

"It's merely a mechanism to prevent Duke from hiring people that I don't think will fulfill my mandate, and my mandate is for human futures professors ...," Deane said in a telephone interview from his New York office. "The only purpose is to make sure the professor adheres to the theories and instructions of the professorship grant."

Deane's pledge is in the form of a challenge grant. He has agreed to donate up to $20 million if Duke raises an equal amount from other donors. His gift would be the second-largest in Duke history, after James B. Duke's original gift in 1924.

Grand Jury Subpoenas Two N.Y. Congressmen

By GEORGE LARDNER JR.
L.A. Times-Washington Post
News Service

WASHINGTON — A federal grand jury in New York has subpoenaed two New York congressmen, the Bronx borough president and a former congressman from Maryland in connection with a bribery investigation of a South Bronx company that reaches all the way to the White House, according to informed sources.

The inquiry, which has resulted in appointment of a special prosecutor to deal with allegations against former Reagan White House aide Lyn Nofziger, took an abrupt turn in recent days when four top officials of the company began cooperating with investigators.

The four were named in sealed indictments and they pleaded guilty last week in U.S. district court in Manhattan at a proceeding that was then put back under seal, the sources said.

"Information is being developed at a very rapid pace," one official said. "Findings are being made on a daily basis. This has become a major investigation."

Subpoenaed to appear at the federal courthouse in Manhattan Wednesday, according to several sources, are Reps. Mario Biaggi, D-N.Y., and Robert Garcia, D-N.Y., Bronx Borough President Stanley Simon and Parren J. Mitchell, D-Md., the recently retired chairman of the House Small Business Committee. All have come under investigation in connection with alleged bribes paid by Wedtech, but all four Tuesday denied reports that they were already targets of the grand jury inquiry.

Wedtech, formerly the Welbilt Electronic Die Corp., has been under state and federal investigation for its payments to politically connected law firms and consultants, both Democrat and Republican, in recent years while picking up millions of dollars worth of no-bid military contracts.

The wide-ranging inquiry, according to law enforcement sources, has also reached into the White House for records of Attorney General Edwin Meese III and his deputy, James E. Jenkins, in the early 1980s when Meese was counselor to the president. According to the sources, the documents, provided to U.S. Attorney Rudolph Giuliani, contain numerous references to Wedtech.

At the Justice Department, Patrick Korten, a spokesman for the attorney general, said Meese was unaware of what documents concerning Wedtech were provided to Giuliani. Korten indicated that materials concerning Wedtech were more likely to have been generated by Jenkins because he had more involvement with the company than Meese did.

Jenkins, then deputy counselor to the president, presided at a May 1982 White House meeting that led to Wedtech's securing a long-sought $32 million Army contract under the minority business set-aside program.

Nofziger, who had left the White House earlier that year to set up a Washington consulting firm, wrote Jenkins shortly after the meeting asking his old White House colleague for help in securing a "letter of intent" from the Army concerning the business Wedtech wanted.

It was that contact, uncovered last fall by Giuliani's investigators, that led to the appointment this week of independent counsel James C. McKay to determine whether Nofziger had committed a crime. Ethics laws prohibit former high-ranking government officials from lobbying at their old agencies for a year after leaving.

Nofziger and his partner, Mark Bragg, eventually received close to $1 million worth of shares in Wedtech stock when the company went public in 1983. Jenkins joined Wedtech early last year as director of Wedtech marketing in Washington.

"YOUNG AND RESTLESS" REPORTER — Disc jockey John Moore launches into his "The Young and the Restless" report on a recent morning. Moore, a radio personality at WRQR, presents his version of the CBS soap opera each weekday morning. He fills his synopsis with humor, but says he tries to stick to the plot as it is acted out on the television serial. (Reflector Photo By Tommy Forrest)

Disc Jockey Gives His Best On Air To TV Soap Opera

By JANE WELBORN
Reflector Staff Writer

He narrowed down the suspects during the investigation of the shooting of "tramp" Jill Abbott and guessed the culprit correctly, filling his audience in on who had done what in the past.

He calls one of the characters "Danny Provolone" and says he often omits that part of the show because "it is boring."

He said he admires cocky Jack Abbott because he is "independent and bad-to-the-bone."

John Moore, a disc jockey with WRQR radio, is a "Young and the Restless" junkie, and he shares his addiction with the listeners of his "Moore in the Morning" radio show.

Around 7:45 a.m. each weekday morning, Moore gives a synopsis of the previous day's edition of the CBS serial "The Young and the Restless." He says he embellishes it just a tad, but he tries to be accurate with the story line.

"Everybody can relate to 'The Young and the Restless' a little bit," Moore said. "The soaps are addictive. You want something to happen and you watch for it to happen."

He said the soap opera update began because of a listener's obsession.

A man called the radio station one day last year to see if anyone there knew what had happened on "The Young and the Restless" the day before. Moore called his wife Margie, an avid soap opera watcher, to find out the plot.

"It was kind of boring that day, so I dressed it up a little" before reading it on the air, Moore said.

He received so many comments on his humorous recap of the events of the soap opera that he decided to make it a regular part of his morning show.

"It adds a lighter side to 'Moore in the Morning' and it probably helps the television ratings, too," he said.

Although Moore tapes the show to review each evening, he said he sometimes calls Kim Dale at WNCT television, which airs the soap opera at 12:30 p.m., to find out what happened.

"I have the notes of what happened, but it is not rehearsed," Moore said. "It is all spontaneous. Some of the best things I ever said were by accident."

Calling one of the characters "Ash-lee, Ash-lee, Ash-lee" with a melodramatic Southern twang comes from the way Scarlett O'Hara says the name in the movie "Gone With the Wind," Moore said. "I worked it into the bit, and people now quote it all the time."

He said he tries to localize the events of the soap opera. "For instance, if someone is in the hospital, I say it is Pitt Memorial," Moore said.

He said some of his editorial comments have inspired some listeners to defend the characters.

"If you put a little satire into it, you have to watch it," he said. "There was a lady who called and complained that I had called Jill a witch."

"People say, 'Jill wouldn't do that,' just like she's a real person," Moore commented. "Everybody feels sorry for Nikki, who used to be a stripper, just like she's the girl down the street."

"I began to wonder if anyone ever listened to me before I did it. I cannot go anywhere without people mentioning it. Everywhere I go people are talking about it," Moore said.

The disc jockey found out just how many people regularly listen to his show when he offered T-shirts to listeners who wrote to him and requested one. The shirts display the line, "Ash-lee, Ash-lee, Ashlee."

Moore only mentioned the offer once and received over 50 letters from throughout eastern North Carolina several days

Soaps Have Complicated Plots But Their Stories Are Simple

Reflector Staff Writer

Why do students arrange their schedules around soap operas? They want to keep abreast of the lives of such imagined families as the Hughes, the Abbotts, the Wallingfords, the Buchanans, the Cleggs.

Why do businessmen take their lunch hours to coincide with the weekday shows? To find out who is doing the backstabbing, loving, blackmailing, crying, cheating, feuding, killing or operating this week.

Why do housewives drop their dust rags when the theme music stops? So they can journey to Oakdale, Port Charles, Genoa City or Pine Valley and be in a world of glamour, sophistication and intrigue.

Why are so many video cassette recorders programmed to tape the soap operas each day? So that those who can't arrange to be in front of the serials are broadcast can keep up with the twisting plots and the scheming plans, the good and the evil.

Many people are addicted to the soap operas broadcast on weekday afternoons. The stories usually revolve around the trials and tribulations of families who have ordinary and extraordinary life experiences.

"As The World Turns," "One Life To Live," "All My Children," "The Young and the Restless," "Guiding Light," "Another World." The names hint at the drama and the adventure — and the everyday problems each person on earth must go through.

Dr. Jim Holte, an assistant professor in the Department of English at East Carolina University, said "People watch soap operas for the human relationships and the family settings that everyone can identify with."

"Soap operas deal with questions of values and having to make decisions. What the soaps show are questions — exaggerated for television — that concern people watching the shows. Divorce, disease, lawsuits."

"The soap operas also work in new issues, such as AIDS, drugs, malpractice suits, very shortly after those issues become important in the news," Holte said.

"A lot of people say that soap operas are really morality plays where you watch a working out of good and evil," he said. "They are just a modern version of that old story. The characters are complicated but the story is basically simple.

"Loyal viewers know who the good guys are and the bad guys are," Holte said. The audience decides which characters they like and which they don't like and watches to see the bad get their just desserts and the good get their rewards.

Some soap opera addicts can relate to a particular character or a certain event on the show. Some serial junkies want to be like a character and imitate their dress and actions. Some daytime drama watchers want to escape their everyday lives and escape in a dream world.

Can soap operas be bad for constant viewers?

"All the media can be bad if it's abused and can be good if it's used correctly," Holte said. "Any time anyone becomes addicted to something, his life becomes out of balance."

For people who watch soap operas for the entertainment value, the shows can be helpful as a tension reliever.

However, people who watch soaps obsessively may have their perception of reality distorted. "Sometimes people who watch soaps so much can't separate what's real and what isn't," Holte said. "They forget that the characters are just actors."

The adventures of the characters make for interesting viewing — and audiences become so involved in the story they watch it each weekday for many years.

The people who watch soap operas religiously can tell you the family

National Gallery To Show Wyeth's Long-Secret Works Featuring Helga

By ROBERT M. ANDREWS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The American public will get its first look at Andrew Wyeth's long-secret pictures of his mystery model Helga when the National Gallery of Art opens a four-month exhibition of 140 of the artist's watercolors and drawings on May 24.

Gallery director J. Carter Brown told reporters Tuesday that public interest in the show, which will travel to five other cities in the next two years, was "unprecedented in my experience," partly because of curiosity about Wyeth's relationship with Helga Testorf, his blonde, blue-eyed neighbor in Chadds Ford, Pa.

The Book-of-the-Month Club has chosen the full-color exhibition catalog, to be published by Harry N. Abrams Inc., as its main selection for July. It will be the first time in the club's 60-year history that it has extended that recognition to an art book.

Abrams publisher Paul Gottlieb said the first printing of the book will be 250,000 copies, which he said compares "extremely well" to other art books which usually have a first run of about 10,000 copies.

Editions also will be sold in England, France, Germany, Holland and Japan, making it the first time that a Wyeth book has been published outside the United States.

The Helga pictures were done by Wyeth over a 15-year period but were kept a closely guarded secret until a collection of 240 of the paintings, drawings and watercolors were bought last year by Leonard E.B. Andrews of Newtown Square, Pa., a millionaire publisher and art collector.

"Such close attention by a painter to one model over so long a period of time is a remarkable, if not singular, circumstance in the history of American art," John Wilmerding, deputy director of the National Gallery, wrote in an essay for the catalog.

Huge crowds are expected to see the Helga pictures, which so far have been seen only by the Wyeth family, Andrews, Wilmerding and a few other people. The show may well eclipse the National Gallery's record-breaking "Treasure Houses of Britain" last winter, which drew nearly 1 million visitors.

Brown said the intensely private artist had agreed to attend the exhibition's opening on May 24, but that no one knows Helga's whereabouts.

After its Washington engagement ends Sept. 27, the Helga pictures will travel to the Museum of Fine Arts in Boston, Oct. 28 to Jan. 3, 1988; the Museum of Fine Arts in Houston, Jan. 31 to April 10; the Los Angeles County Museum of Art, April 28 to July 10; the Fine Arts Museums of San Francisco, Aug. 13 to Oct. 16; and the Detroit Institute of Arts, Nov. 13 to Jan. 22, 1989.

The National Gallery's archival in the museum world, the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York, said it had a chance to show the Helga pictures but rejected the idea.

Spokesman John Ross quoted Metropolitan director Philippe de Montebello as saying, "We had an opportunity to show the Helga series. We quite pointedly and as a conscious decision declined to do so." Ross said Montebello would not elaborate.

Andrews denied he will be profiting personally from the Wyeth book sales. He refused to confirm or deny rumors that he paid as much as $10 million for the Helga pictures, but did say the interest payments on his purchase of the collection were "horrendous." Andrews said his share of revenues from the book, which will cost $40 in hardcover and $20 for the paperback museum catalog, will go toward financing his foundation's program to encourage talented local artists to exhibit their work.

Review Focuses On Antebellum N.C.

RALEIGH — Articles focusing on two aspects of political life in antebellum North Carolina — the decline of the Whig party and the importance of the public meeting — appear in the January, 1987, issue of the "North Carolina Historical Review." A third article makes contributions to our knowledge of labor history in North Carolina by examining the strikes and protest activities of High Point textile workers in the early 1930s.

The decline of the Whig party in antebellum North Carolina has been the subject of much controversy among North Carolina historians. Marc W. Kruman of Wayne State University adds fuel to the disagreement by challenging both traditional and revisionist interpretations of the dissolution of Whig power prior to the Civil War.

In his article titled "Thomas L. Clingman and the Whig Party: A Reconsideration," Kruman disputes the conclusions that Thomas E. Jeffrey presented in a recent award-winning article titled "Beyond 'Free Suffrage': North Carolina Parties and the Convention Movement in the 1850s." Readers who enjoy the lively quarrels of academe will find Kruman in good form on the twilight of Whiggery.

Grass roots democracy is the topic of "The Public Meeting in Antebellum North Carolina: The Example of Edgecombe County," by Alan D. Watson of the University of North Carolina at Wilmington. Watson contends that public gatherings were a longstanding tradition and fundamental component of participatory democracy in pre-Civil War North Carolina, a thesis he supports with case studies in which local and national issues, such as the John Brown raid, stirred the people of Edgecombe County to collective action.

"Better to Starve in the Shade than in the Factory": Labor Protest in High Point, North Carolina, in the Early 1930s," by John G. Selby of Roanoke College, Salem, Va, sheds new light on the long-obscure history of labor protest in North Carolina. Selby points out that although the South generally has been considered a "no-man's land" of the American labor movement, significant labor protest startled the region during the Great Depression.

Members of the N.C. Literary and Historical Association receive the "North Carolina Historical Review" as a benefit of membership. "Sometimes a family has a split, and it can go on for generations before it is resolved," Holte said.

"Soap operas have always been immensely popular," he said. "There is a large audience who from the beginning first listened to the soaps on the radio and then watched the soap operas on television."

CBS' "The Guiding Light" is now in its 50th year on radio and television. The ABC serial "General Hospital," the highest-rated soap since 1979, has been on for 23 years.

Daytime dramas have garnered a loyal following throughout the years. And new soap opera junkies are becoming addicted every year.

later. The letters came from students and professional people, men and women.

"I started doing it at 8:45 in the morning. I had a large group of school teachers who had to be at school before then. They asked if I could do it earlier," the disc jockey said.

He has found that he has listeners that range in age from school kids to the elderly. There are groups of people who ride to work and listen to it, and offices that tune into the program.

"I didn't know that so many people watched "The Young and the Restless," Moore said, "especially so many men."

A syndicated nationwide comedy service contacted Moore "to see how I do the show," he said. Moore contacted CBS about his update, and an agent of one of the soap opera's stars is interested in hearing tapes of the radio show.

"As far as I know, my show is unique," Moore said. "No one else I have contacted has heard of another one."

Moore said he will continue the soap opera update "as long as the market will bear it."

Olivier Plays Aging Actor In 'Ebony Tower' Friday

By KATHRYN BAKER
AP Television Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — What better role for the aging, flamboyant actor Sir Laurence Olivier than an aging, flamboyant artist in "The Ebony Tower" on PBS this Friday?
In the 90-minute screen version of a John Fowles story, Olivier plays Henry Breasley, a lusty old painter who abhors abstract art as evidence of modern society's lack of virility. He tosses it into his "ebony tower," a mental dumping ground for that which he considers useless.
Breasley enthusiastically delivers this opinion of modern painting to David Williams (Roger Rees), a young art critic and abstract painter who has come to Breasley's farm in the French countryside to gather material for an article.
Williams says that, while he disagrees with Breasley, he "respects" the old artist's opinion.

"Stop bloody well respecting everything!" Breasley explodes. "Hate if you want to! Can't hate, can't love, can't love, can't paint!"
Breasley and Williams are soon clinched in a duel that has much to do with male egos and little to do with art.
Williams arrived at Breasley's estate to find the old painter ensconced in a private little world, attended by two attractive young women with a tendency to lounge about in the nude. (The nudity is tame, as PBS cut the more explicit scenes for American television audiences.)
Pink-haired Ann, played by English rock star Toyah Willcox, and quietly intelligent Diana, played by Greta Scacchi, indulge Henry's egotistical need to treat them like personal playthings in front of the guest. Williams, for his part, acts the perfect gentlemen and frequently mentions his wife.

After calmly tolerating Breasley's drunken insults at dinner, Williams is congratulated by Diana. "You did very well. You were very reasonable, and Henry can't cope with that."
Williams may be reasonable, but his masculinity has been challenged, and Diana, a promising artist, becomes the prize in a tug-of-war between the two men.
Thanks to subtle performances from the rest of the cast, Olivier is free to go over the top as the blustering but vulnerable Henry, and the production — shot on location in France — manages to evoke creepy claustrophobia amid the pretty, rural scenery.
"The Ebony Tower" is the first of three "Great Performances," called "The Golden Years," featuring older actors in prize roles. Sir Alec Guinness and Jean Simmons will star, respectively, in the two upcoming dramas.

Valerie Talks Sex With Son

NEW YORK (AP) — It's a typical sitcom mixup: son runs errand to store and his personal purchase is accidentally opened by mother, with embarrassment all around.
What is untypical about this Sunday's episode of "Valerie" on NBC is that the teen-ager has purchased a package of condoms.
Valerie Harper, who plays Valerie Hogan, mother of three teen-age boys, expects the show to draw some critical mail because the mother does not tell her 17-year-old son, David, played by Jason Bateman, not to have sex. Instead, she awkwardly congratulates him for being responsible enough to use protection.
"I think there will be a reaction," Ms. Harper said in an interview. "But if they (viewers) can just hang in there past the mention of condoms, I think they'll be very happy with the ending of the show."
In the end, despite his purchase, David decides against having sex with a teen-age girlfriend.
The dialogue includes the word condom, not the euphemism the writers had prepared in case the censors cut the more explicit term.
With the spread of the sexually transmittable disease AIDS, television attitudes toward condoms seem to be changing. Several television stations have recently reversed policy and accepted advertising by makers of prophylactics. In a recent episode of "St. Elsewhere" on NBC, a character who learns she is pregnant says she should have "condomized" her partner.

Ms. Harper said although she strongly supported the episode's message, she was afraid the serious subject would kill its comedy, and "a situation comedy's absolute first job is that it be funny."
"I'm not a big fan of these, they call them 'drama-ettes,' or what's worse, 'warmovies,'" she said.
Ms. Harper is used to working in quality comedy. She won Emmys for "The Mary Tyler Moore Show," and later for the spinoff "Rhoda." "Valerie" is in its second season.

A Reflector Review 'Pianoplayers' Offers Novel of Love, Music

JOAN BRUNSKILL
Associated Press
Anthony Burgess, with characteristic gusto, creates a distinctive voice for the narrator of his latest novel, "The Pianoplayers." The voice is an earthy one, with a north-country English accent. It belongs to a spirited elderly woman, Ellen Henshaw, who dictates the reminiscences that form the novel from a village in the south of France where she now spends her summers.
Ellen's own life has been tough and colorful. With minimal formal education, she first learned street smarts tagging along with her father, a pianoplayer in movie houses and small resort theaters. Then on her own, after his death, she became wise to the ways of the world by being ushered naively into a phase as a child prostitute which she parlayed into a successful career as an independent professional woman; she eventually became proprietress of her own establishments, which included a chain of "School of Love."
However, at the heart of the book and in sharpest focus are Ellen's father and his work, which she describes in passages of passionate and compassionate recall. Her vivid detail illuminates the period, the 1920s and '30s, and the seedy life of an entertainer in the Lancashire resorts, backed by echoes of the popular music of the day. Ellen absorbed a great deal about music from her father and later developed a theory about the similarity between making music and making love which was taught in her schools.

Ellen has a salty expressiveness befitting the story she tells, in a vernacular — not rendered in dialect — which gives the novel a consistent flavor of robust comedy. Burgess is a composer and jazz musician in addition to being a writer and occasionally that enthusiasm threatens to upset the balance of the novel — but overall the main theme, the story telling, holds its own.

Japan Society Schedules Film Exhibition On WWII

By JOHN POMFRET
Associated Press Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — American audiences are getting a glimpse of how World War II looked from the other side of the Pacific, in a series of 27 Japanese movies made from 1937 to 1947 that emphasize honor and stoicism against an enemy as impersonal as gunfire.
"Japan at War: Rare Films from World War II" opens a window on the social, cultural and intellectual life of wartime Japan. The series, which starts Wednesday and runs until April 17, is sponsored by the Japan Society, a non-profit organization that studies Japanese culture.

The movies range from powerful stories about decimated families to clumsy historical allegories designed to prepare audiences for an Allied invasion that never came.
Unlike American World War II films, which seek to foster hatred of a fanatic, slant-eyed, buck-toothed enemy, the Japanese films focus on their own troops and civilians in order to reinforce traditional values of loyalty, patriotism and self-sacrifice.
When the enemy appears, he does so as a depersonalized, albeit malicious, force of nature, spewing gunfire or bombs from afar.
"Americans have never had a chance to see how the war was portrayed to the folks on the enemy's home front," said David Owens, a Japan scholar and film buff who organized the show. "We've come to the point where a whole generation in Japan and the U.S. has grown up without memories of the war. We wanted to begin to fill that gap."

The movies, which are subtitled, fall into three categories: those made from 1937 to 1940 when the Japanese government simply censored them; those made between 1940 and 1945 when the government controlled the movie industry; and those made after 1945 under censorship by the U.S. military occupation government.

Seven of the nine films making their U.S. premieres were confiscated by the U.S. occupation government in 1945 and preserved in the Library of Congress.
"Chocolate and Soldiers," a 1938 movie by Takeshi Sato, provides one of the best looks at the family in wartime Japan.
The devoted father of a downtrodden family is sent off to fight in China. While on the front, he repeatedly sends home chocolate wrappers to his children, who redeem them for toys. One day, however, the boys receive their final package — chocolate wrappers enveloping a notice of their father's death.
Grieving, the man's wife holds her children and accepts the death with correct stoicism.
The film's power comes from its honesty, Owens said. "It's not manufactured propaganda. It served the government's purpose, but it's also about good old-fashioned homestyle values."
The film so impressed U.S. military forces who confiscated it that they added explanatory narration to the sound track and used it in military training as a piece of counter-propaganda. Director Frank Capra said the American cinema could not equal such propaganda.
The other side of the coin is "The Divine Wind Blows," an historical allegory made by Santaro Marune in 1944, when the government controlled all aspects of the film industry.

The film is set in 13th-century Japan during the Mongol invasions, which were repulsed not by Japanese warriors but by typhoons off the western shore that destroyed the enemy fleet.
The movie, designed to provide hopeful inspiration to a populace facing certain destruction in the later stages of World War II, fails miserably.
"It's so obvious and mechanical that it's unconvincing. It just looks stupid," Owens said.
"Between War and Peace," made in 1947 by Fumio Kamei and Satsuo Yamamoto, exemplifies the "democratic" and "anti-war" genres mandated by the occupation government.
The movie, which portrays the depression, betrayal and sorrow faced by Japanese veterans as they re-entered society, was withheld by American censors because of its leftist content.
Scheduled to commemorate Japan's constitution in November 1946, the film finally premiered in 1947 to critical acclaim.
The famed director Akira Kurosawa is represented by five films, one of which — "The Men Who Tread on the Tiger's Tail," from 1945 — was condemned by both Japan's military government and the incoming Americans. The former censored it for allegedly ridiculing a legend of military bravery; the latter banned it for depicting feudal loyalty.

Conductor Is Out Of A Job

SAN DIEGO (AP) — David Atherton, who has had no sympathy to conduct since a contract dispute and lingering debts at the San Diego Symphony ended performances Jan. 9, now is officially out of a job.
"Since the recent decision of the Board of Directors to disband the orchestra has rendered my position superfluous, I would like to be in a position to accept other conducting engagements during forthcoming seasons," Atherton said in a resignation letter.
Atherton, who came to San Diego in 1980, on Monday was granted his request to get out of the remaining 2½ years of his $237,000-a-year contract.
"He resigned with no strings attached and made no requests for any type of payment, so no payment will be made," said Melissa Smith, symphony association spokeswoman.
No new talks are scheduled with the musicians.

We live in a small town

And if upon you, someone

Alike are all our names,

And if an unkind word you

Earth Gets A Tooth Fairy

By Patti Loftin

Long ago there were fairies that guarded all the planets except Earth. Among the fairies was one named Mischief who was always getting into trouble. One day she was sitting around thinking and decided she should guard Earth. Mischief went and told her mother her thoughts. Her mother explained that creatures called humans already guarded that planet.

Now Mischief didn't know what humans were so she decided to go to Earth and see for herself. When she arrived she was in New York City. Mischief was frightened and marveled at the same time. She saw a bunch of machines going up and down the road that had what must be humans operating them. Mischief tried to speak to them but she could not for only people who believed in fairies could speak to them. She flew farther down the road until she came to the country. There in an apple orchard she met a boy who believed in fairies. Now it happened the boy had a loose tooth. In fairy land fairies would die if loose teeth weren't pulled. The boy begged her not to pull his tooth. She told him she would give him some money if he let her pull it. Now Mischief was called the tooth fairy and until this very day she flies around the Earth at night taking teeth when children are sleeping and leaving money in return.

Patti Loftin, 10, a student at Chicod Elementary School receives special mention.

Dragon

By Daniel Cheng

The moon in the crescent
A layer of fog begins its descent

rises into the air.
Crimson eyes penetrate the night
A head with a mighty crest
Shimmering scales in the night

Upon a mountain crag
With fiery breath
That can melt to slag

It raises its wings high Pushes off
Soars into the night sky

A forked tail twitches on the barren ground

Leathery wings
creak in the wind

White talons gleaming in the moonlight

Pity the one who crosses it

A deadly beauty
Shiny, sleek body
A fine sight to see

A deadly beauty
Outside appearances
Are not all you should see
Death in disguise

Daniel Cheng, 15, a student at J.H. Rose High School receives special mention.

When No One Else Is There

The house seems so lonely else is there,

The rooms seem so far and distant when no one else is there,
You jump at every sound

your mind can wonder,

Emulsion

An emulsion is a mixture of liquids in which tiny drops of one liquid stay together and do not dissolve.

Mix a teaspoon of liquid detergent in a glass of water. Do not add anything to a second glass of water. Cut a piece of string or cord into little bits. Drop half of them into each glass. How do you think this action cleans clothes in a washing machine?

Andy Haddock, 9, a student at A.G. Cox School receives special mention.

Big Presidents

Materials:
A black or white picture of George Washington or Abraham Lincoln
Scissors
Pencils
Tape

Take a picture of one of the presidents and cut it into 4 pieces. Give some friends a part of the picture and you keep one.* All the pieces should be the same size. Now cut manilla or white paper into proportionate size. For example, if the small portrait pieces are two inches by three inches, the paper for you and your friends could be 8 inches by 12 inches. Now the individual pieces of the picture should be drawn with pencil, as carefully as possible, proportionately larger on the blank sheets of paper. When you all have finished with your drawings, rearrange the pieces, tape them together on the backs and hang them.

Getting Smart

Many college students now have to take special achievement tests during their freshman and senior years. French psychologist Alfred Binet began his work on intelligence testing in the late 1800s. In 1908, Sir Cyril Burt used the Binet Scale to measure school boys at such tasks as card-dealing, tapping out an irregular pattern of dots with a pencil, and tracing patterns in a mirror. During World War One, the U.S. Army used intelligence tests to classify 1.7 million men.

thing untoward might happen can be as devastating as if the evil really existed. South learned this lesson to his misfortune.

North-South did well to avoid three no trump, a contract which stood no chance as the cards lie, in favor of a five-club contract that rated to be a laydown. But West found a way to upset declarer's plans.

He led the ace of spades and continued with the four to his partner's king. East played a third round and declarer, afraid that West had started with a doubleton ace, chose to ruff with the queen. When East showed out on the second trump, declarer had to concede a trump trick for down one.

This hand illustrates two different types of imagination. First, West's spade lead was not only imaginative but logical. Both opponents had the opportunity to bid no trump, yet both had spurned it. Therefore, it was very likely that East held the king of spades, so the lead of the ace from A-Q was unlikely to cost a trick.

Declarer suffered from overactive brain cells. If West indeed had started with the doubleton ace of spades, East would have had six spades headed by the K-Q-J. Even if his side were not employing weak jump overcalls, East would certainly have grabbed the opportunity to show the master suit at the one-level. Had declarer taken a few moments to think matters out more clearly, he would have come to the conclusion there was no reason to panic. He could have afforded to ruff low, and the contract would have sailed home.

Enjoy Eastern Barbecue, But Pick The Occasion

By CHERIE EVANS
Reflector Staff Writer

When people of eastern North Carolina sit at their table for the traditional barbecue meal, it is doubtful they consider the amount of calories, fat and cholesterol they are about to consume.

But, what if they did? What kind of figures would they come up with from analyzing the food?

The figures probably would be similar to those in an analysis derived by the staff of the Eastern Carolina Family Practice Center. A meal of barbecue, coleslaw, hamburger bun, mayonnaise, french fries and hush puppies was analyzed in response to the six-week class, Eating for Health Heart, that meets at the center on Tuesday nights.

Barbecue from two local restaurants and one sold in the refrigerator case at a grocery store showed that calories ranged from 269 to 379 per 4-ounce serving. Fat contributed between 17 and 26 percent of the calories, the analysis said.

In comparison, fat accounts for about 25 percent of the calories in a lean cut of beef; 20 percent in pork loin; 19 percent in light meat turkey, and 15 percent in light meat chicken.

The pork in barbecue, however, does add important nutrients to the diet such as zinc, iron, thiamin and other B vitamins, the analysis said. The cholesterol in lean pork compares to that in roasted chicken at 92 milligrams per 4-ounce serving.

The analysis concludes that barbecue is moderately high in fat and should be considered a medium-fat meat to be eaten in moderation. But, other foods in the traditional barbecue feast create a meal that becomes high in cholesterol, fat and calories.

A typical 4-ounce serving of barbecue averages about 324 calories. Add to it about 182 calories for one-half cup coleslaw; about 100 calories for one hamburger bun; about 57 calories for one teaspoon of mayonnaise; about 280 calories for a regular serving of french fries, and about 145 calories for two 1/7-ounce hush puppies.

With those figures, the total calorie intake in the barbecue meal is 1,088.

Fat intake may range between 36.9 milligrams and 54.9 milligrams for the same serving size with barbecue contributing between 5 and 11 milligrams; coleslaw between 3 and 15 milligrams; hamburger bun, 3; mayonnaise, 4.9; french fries, 14, and hush puppies, 7.

The cholesterol intake would total about 124 milligrams with barbecue contributing 92 milligrams for the same serving amount; coleslaw, 12; mayonnaise, 4; french fries, 15, and hush puppies; 1.

So, what does this mean? Should people in eastern North Carolina dispose of their favored barbecue meal?

Probably not. But, they may consider saving the feast for special occasions.

BARBECUE FEAST — Many eastern Carolinians regularly enjoy a hearty meal of barbecue with all the fixings, but the traditional meal may add extra fat, cholesterol and calories to the diet. Serving the meal on special occasions may increase its enjoyment and aid in preserving good health. (Reflector Graphic by Marty Hardin).

Reduce The Cholesterol Intake For Better Health

By CHERIE EVANS
Reflector Staff Writer

Pure cholesterol is just a white, odorless powder substance, but when bound to proteins in the body, it contributes to coronary heart disease, said Cindy Mayo, a cardiovascular clinical nurse specialist with Pitt County Memorial Hospital.

Cholesterol and proteins combine to form lipoproteins, she said. Blood cholesterol is formed in low density lipoproteins (LDL) and high density lipoproteins (HDL).

Ms. Mayo explained the effect of blood cholesterol in the body to people in the second class of a six-week series, Eating for Heart Health. The class meets Tuesdays from 7 p.m. to 9 p.m. in the Eastern Carolina Family Practice Center.

"LDL's have a greater amount of cholesterol in them," she said. "It seems to be the most responsible for laying plaque in our blood vessels."

HDL's have the greatest amount of protein in them, and they seem to be transporters of cholesterol from the cells to the liver for processing or removal, according to "Facts About ... Blood Cholesterol," distributed by the National Heart, Lung and Blood Institute.

Blood vessels have "splinter injuries" or small crevices where cholesterol and other debris are deposited during blood circulation, Ms. Mayo said. The cholesterol and other debris create "a big, huge lump in the blood vessel," creating a condition called atherosclerosis where the blood vessel becomes narrower because of the mounting deposits.

"If we've lived with these build-ups, feeder vessels form," she said. Blocked vessels are aided by feeder vessels or collateral vessels to "take up where the other vessels left off."

The major blood vessel that supplies the feeder vessel, however, may eventually become blocked, thereby adding to the risk of heart disease, Ms. Mayo said.

Some professionals estimate that about 20 percent of the blood vessels in the average American is blocked by the age 20, Ms. Mayo said. "The disease is a natural kind of disease, and it's made worse by our diet." Symptoms of heart disease usually surface when 80 to 90 percent of the vessels are blocked.

The average middle-age adult in the United States has a blood cholesterol level of 215 milligrams per deciliter, according to the institute.

The institute suggests that "adults under the age 30 should have a cholesterol level of 180 mg/dl or less," Ms. Mayo said. People age 30 or more should have a cholesterol level of 200 mg/dl or less.

Food Labels Do More Than Identify Product

By CHERIE EVANS
Reflector Staff Writer

Do you know how to read the labels on the foods you buy?

Food labels have to provide the customer with certain information, said Kathryn Kolasa, professor and section head of Nutrition and Education Services at the Eastern Carolina Family Practice Center.

The label should include the name of the product, the net wet and the name and address of the manufacturer or distributor, she said. "Fortified foods and foods making a health claim have to have nutritional labeling on it."

But, some products such as mayonnaise and ice cream do not have to have nutritional labels because they are registered in the Federal Register as a standard of identity product, Ms. Kolasa said.

Mayonnaise would be a standard because most people know that eggs are a necessity in the production process, she said as an example, and ice cream uses milk.

"Products containing fat must specify the fat used," Ms. Kolasa said. Fat is described on labels in words such as mono-glycerides, di-glycerides and shortening.

Creative Cooks Turn Old Favorites Into New Dishes

If the quest for new dinner ideas is getting the best of you, do what chefs, cooking contest entrants and other creative cooks do: Pick one of your favorite foods and create a new way to serve it.

For example, a couple of changes transform individually stuffed green peppers into one, family-sized, filled pepper in the recipe for Stuffed Pepper Pie. In Tato Taco Supreme, tacos are the inspiration for the one-dish meal.

The secret ingredient in each of these recipes is mashed potato flakes. While many cooks rely on potato flakes as a quick accompaniment to meals, the versatile flakes also work well as an ingredient in a variety of recipes.

To make Stuffed Pepper Pie, start by lining a pie pan with green pepper halves that have been boiled for a few minutes to soften them. The easy filling of mashed potato flakes, sausage and onion goes together in minutes. Tomato wedges and shredded mozzarella cheese top off the pie. This hearty meal-in-one provides a wealth of nutrients, including 100 percent of the U.S. RDA for vitamin C.

If tacos are a favorite dinner choice, try this alternative — Tato Taco Supreme. Made in pizza pan, this giant taco has a tasty crust made with potato flakes, flour, Parmesan cheese, margarine and onion salt.

After baking the crust, pile it high with the toppings: shredded lettuce, seasoned ground beef, tomato, avocado and sour cream. Cut the taco pie into wedges to serve.

STUFFED PEPPER PIE

3 medium green peppers, halved, seeded
1/4 cup finely chopped onion
1 cup water
2 tablespoons margarine or butter
1 1/3 cups mashed potato flakes
1/4 cup milk
1 egg, slightly beaten
1 pound bulk pork sausage, cooked and drained
1 medium tomato, cut into wedges
4 ounces (1 cup) shredded mozzarella cheese

In large saucepan, bring 2 quarts water to rolling boil. Place peppers in boiling water and cook for 15 minutes; drain. Arrange around sides of ungreased 8 or 9-inch pie pan.

Heat oven to 350 degrees. In same saucepan, combine onion, 1 cup water and margarine; heat to boiling. Remove from heat. Stir in potato flakes, milk and egg until well combined. Stir in pork sausage. Spoon into pepper-lined pie pan. Arrange tomato wedges on top; sprinkle with cheese. Bake at 350 degrees for 15 to 20 minutes or until thoroughly heated and cheese is melted. Yield: 6 servings.

TATO TACO SUPREME

Crust:
1 tablespoon cornmeal
1 cup all-purpose or unbleached flour
1 cup mashed potato flakes
1/4 cup grated Parmesan cheese
1/8 teaspoon onion salt and salt
1/2 cup margarine or butter, softened
1/3 cup water
Topping:

1/2 cup chopped onion
1 teaspoon oregano leaves
1/2 teaspoon salt
1/4 teaspoon pepper
1/8 teaspoon cumin
1/2 cup taco sauce
4 cups shredded lettuce
1 tomato, cut into wedges
1 avocado, peeled, cut into wedges
1/2 cup dairy sour cream
Taco sauce

Heat oven to 375 degrees. Grease 12-inch pizza pan; sprinkle with cornmeal. Lightly spoon flour into measuring cup; level off. In medium bowl, combine flour, potato flakes, Parmesan cheese and onion salt. Cut margarine into potato flake mixture with fork until crumbly. Add water; stir with fork until mixture leaves sides of bowl and forms a soft, moist dough.

Additional water may be added 1 tablespoon at a time to achieve desired consistency. Press into bottom of prepared pan, greasing fingers if necessary to prevent sticking. Bake at 375 degrees for 18 to 24 minutes or until light golden brown.

Get Hooked On Some Fish Steaks

By NANCY BYAL
Better Homes and Gardens
Food Editor

Grapefruit juice punches up the marinade for these fish steaks. Brushing the steaks with the marinade as they broil keeps them moist, too. Fish cooks so quickly that portions less than 1 inch thick do not need to be turned while broiling.

CITRUS FISH STEAKS

3 fresh or frozen salmon, halibut, shark or swordfish steaks, cut 1 inch thick (about 1 1/2 pounds)
1 grapefruit
1/4 cup dry white wine
2 tablespoons snipped parsley
2 tablespoons cooking oil
1 green onion, sliced
1 teaspoon dried marjoram, crushed
1/2 teaspoon paprika
Arrange fresh fish steaks in a shallow dish. Finely shred enough grapefruit peel to make 1 teaspoon. Halve grapefruit. Squeeze out juice (should have 2-3rds cup). For marinade, combine grapefruit peel and juice, wine, parsley, oil, onion, marjoram and paprika. Pour over fish. Marinate in refrigerator, covered, for 4 to 6 hours. (For frozen fish steaks, marinate overnight.)
Drain fish, reserving the marinade. Brush rack of an unheated broiler pan with cooking oil. Place fish on broiler pan; brush with some of reserved marinade. Broil fish 4 inches from heat until fish flakes easily when tested with a fork. Allow 4 to 6 minutes per side. Carefully turn fish with a wide spatula when half done. Brush fish often with marinade to prevent fish from drying out. Serve immediately. Makes 3 servings.
Nutrition information per serving: 481 cal., 48 g pro., 8 g carbo., 28 g fat, 79 mg chol., 106 mg sodium. U.S. RDA: 15 percent vit. A, 35 percent vit. C, 23 percent thiamine, 18 percent riboflavin, 14 percent iron, 53 percent phosphorus.

A NEW WAY — Stuffed Pepper Pie is one dish that is the product of a little creativity.

Desserts Can Fit Diet

Delicious and nutritious. Is that combination really possible? "Yes," say home economists who note that the key to food that is "good for you" as well as "good to you" is choosing ingredients from basic food groups and preparing them with special diet needs in mind.

For instance, many of us today are watching our intake of calories, fat, salt and sugar to control weight, blood pressure and cholesterol levels. And we're adding more fiber in our diets to improve general fitness and reduce the risk of specific diseases.

But...the family loves desserts, which do not seem to have a place in diets for fitness and weight control. "Wrong," say nutritionists. They point out that desserts prepared from the fruits and cereals basic food groups and cooked without added fat and sugar provide needed nutrients and are low in calories.

Here's an apple cobbler recipe developed by the nutrition staff of the Hofstra Health Dome, a non-profit health center known nationally for its "Enlightened Eating" program. This recipe is from the Nutrition for Fitness and Health brochure series that Whirlpool Corporation offers to consumers. The three brochures give helpful techniques for storing, cooking and preserving food with emphasis on retaining nutrients. Brochures include microwave and standard oven recipes that are nutritious and taste good.

Hofstra apple cobbler teams fresh, unpared apples with naturally sweet pineapple juice, raisins and wholegrain cereals, providing vitamins, minerals, fiber and the complex carbohydrates necessary for energy. This naturally sweetened fruit dish requires no sugar or fat in its ingredient list. And best of all it's cooked in minutes in the microwave oven.

HOFSTRA APPLE COBBLER
(Total cooking time: 20 minutes)
8 cups sliced apples (about 3 lbs.)
6 oz. pineapple juice
1/2 cup uncooked oatmeal
1/2 cup raisins
1 teaspoon cinnamon
1/2 teaspoon nutmeg
2 tablespoons honey
1 cup Post Grape-nuts cereal

Cover bottom of 8" square microwave-safe baking dish with uncooked oatmeal. Mix together with uncooked oatmeal. Mix together with sliced apples, juice, raisins, cinnamon, nutmeg and honey; cover oatmeal with mixture. Cover with plastic wrap. Puncture wrap with a fork to open steam vents. Microwave 16 minutes at High; rotate dish 1/4 turn every 4 minutes. Remove plastic wrap. Sprinkle cobbler with Post Grape-nuts and microwave 4 minutes at High. Serve warm or cold. Serves 8.

Finger Foods Just Great For Parties

Make these party nibbles ahead and place them on baking sheets. Cover and store in the refrigerator for several hours. Just before your guests arrive, bake half the turnovers; bake the other half after the party starts. That way your guests can enjoy the pastries while they're warm.

CURRIED BEEF TURNOVERS
1/2 pound ground beef
1/2 cup finely chopped onion
1 teaspoon curry powder
1 tablespoon dry sherry
1 tablespoon soy sauce
1/4 cup mashed cooked potato
Pastry for 2-crust pie
1 egg yolk
1 tablespoon water, Dairy sour cream or plain yogurt (optional)

For filling, cook beef, onion and curry powder until beef is brown and onion is tender. Drain. Stir in sherry, soy sauce and potato. Cool. On a lightly floured surface roll half the pastry 1/8-inch thick. Use a 3-inch scallop-edge cutter to cut circles. Reroll to make 15 circles plus cutouts for decoration from remaining pastry. Place 1 teaspoon of filling on each circle. Brush edges lightly with water. Fold pastry over filling, forming a half circle; seal edges. Place on baking sheet. Repeat with remaining pastry and filling. Combine egg yolk and water; brush over turnovers. Place cutouts on turnovers; brush with egg-yolk mixture. Using a knife, make 1/2-inch slits in pastry. Bake in 400-degree oven for 18 minutes. Serve warm with sour cream. Makes 30.

Kids Choose What's Good Rather Than What's Best

By MARY JO KOCHAKIAN
L.A. Times-Washington Post
News Service

Give children a choice of cookies or carrots for a snack, and what will they choose?

Forget the carrots. Most children will go right for the cookies, time after time. Which makes parents of kids with such proclivities wonder about the common advice, "Don't worry, he'll eat what he needs."

The belief, espoused by many pediatricians, that children instinctively will select foods containing the nutrients they need is unrealistic, two University of Minnesota dietitians say.

In a recent issue of the New England Journal of Medicine, Mary Story and Judith E. Brown re-examine the research that gave rise to the idea. The studies of pediatrician Clara Davis, done in the 1920s and 1930s, have been taken by health professionals to mean that children will select a well-balanced diet if they have control over food choices, they say.

"Such a broad conclusion was not drawn by Davis, nor can it be concluded from her research or any other investigation," they write.

In Davis's research, infants were given a choice of 10 foods and two types of milk at each meal. The foods were different kinds of meats, fish, cereals, bone marrow, eggs, fruits and vegetables. Davis concluded: "With natural foodstuffs, young children could choose their diets and thrive without adult direction as to just what and how much of these foods they should eat."

But the study did not address what children would eat if the choices also included such things as ice cream and pastries.

"We speculate that children would select sweet foods over nonsweet, more nutritious foods if allowed free choice," Story and Brown write.

Free access to appealing, high-calorie, low-nutrient foods "very definitely encourages obesity in animals, and there's no reason to think it wouldn't do the same in children," says Dr. Ann Milanese, pediatrician and director of nutritional support services at Newington (Conn.) Children's Hospital.

Research has shown that animals fed standard laboratory rations do not overeat, even when plenty of food is available. But one study Brown and Story cited found that when laboratory rats of normal weight were given the opportunity to eat a "supermarket diet" that included such things as cookies, marshmallows, chocolate, peanut butter and cheese, they gained 269 percent more weight than rats given only laboratory rations.

Story and Brown say parents should limit the diets of young children to a variety of fresh or frozen vegetables and legumes; dairy products; unsweetened fruit and fruit juices; breads, pastas, rice, cereals and other grain products; and lean meats.

Sweets and other foods of low nutrient value do not have to be excluded from the diet, but they should be limited so as not to interfere with children's appetites for meals.

"We start off very well with babies," Milanese says. "We give them excellent formulas or breast milk. And the (solid) foods we give them are marvelous. We even start off giving them appropriate foods for dessert, like fruit. And then we mess ourselves up. We start to contaminate the pure work we have started by giving processed foods — cookies, puddings."

Convenience foods, "which mothers tend to rely on just to make life bearable," Milanese says, are a staple in many homes. And children's opinions of foods are influenced by television — both by what they see in commercials and what they see on shows.

Even though such corrupting influences are pervasive, parents should make an effort to limit processed foods consumed in the home, Milanese says. When children go to parties or eat snacks at friends' homes, do not worry about it, she says. "What happens at home is the largest part of life."

More damaging than the simple consumption of such foods is the child's learning to exaggerate their value. If sweets are used as rewards to encourage certain behaviors, the desire for them will become tangled in emotion. "It's a common trap," Milanese says.

Insisting children eat certain foods at dinner in order to get dessert "is one of the cardinal sins," Brown said in a telephone interview. "I think you should treat food as something the child learns to eat to help keep healthy and keep growing. You don't use it to manipulate."

"When children sit down hungry, they're ready to eat what's served. They might not eat everything, but they eat enough different things served at a meal. The problem comes when the child sits down and isn't hungry. Then the parents coax the child into eating. ... You start running into trouble when the child is seeing the importance placed on certain foods."

A Tasty Recipe For 'Raspberry Creme Brulee'

By ROSE DOSTI
L.A. Times-Washington Post
News Service

Dear SOS: Recently I tasted a "creme brulee," which was especially good, with raspberries at Le Chardonay restaurant in Los Angeles. Can you obtain the recipe? I hope it will not require a torch to crisp the top as some recipes dictate. —ADA

Dear Ada: What a hit this dessert made in our test kitchen. As for crisping the top, the recipe calls for broiling, not torching. To prevent the custard cups or souffle dishes from cracking under heat, they are placed in a tub of ice and water before broiling about two inches from the source of heat.

LE CHARDONNAY RASPBERRY CREME BRULEE
Sugar
8 egg yolks

1 quart whipping cream
1 teaspoon vanilla
1 1/2 baskets fresh raspberries
Gradually beat 6 1/2 tablespoons sugar into egg yolks in medium bowl. Whisk constantly until mixture is light and creamy. Whisk in cream and vanilla.

Place 7 raspberries into each of 8 ramekins. Pour custard mixture into ramekins. Place in large baking pan. Add warm water to reach halfway up ramekins. Bake at 350 degrees 50 minutes or until set. Remove from water and cool. Refrigerate a few hours.

Puree remaining berries in food processor to make puree, then strain. Pour 1 teaspoon puree onto each custard and sprinkle with 2 teaspoons sugar. Set cups in baking pan half filled with ice and water. Broil about 2 inches from heat about 3 minutes or until tops are caramelized. Makes 8 servings.

Dear SOS: One recipe I have not yet seen in your column is for steak Diane "flambe." If you have a recipe for steak Diane in your archives, I would very much appreciate a copy. —RICHARD

Dear Richard: We have printed numerous recipes for steak Diane in the past, particularly in the '70s, when there was a fashionable demand for them. The dish's popularity waned and we lost touch. It is time for a revival of this American classic, however, so thanks for asking. Here is a version likely to be found in restaurants where table-side cooking prevails.

Culinary SOS

STEAK DIANE

1/4 cup butter or margarine
1/4 cup minced shallots or green onions
2 tablespoons Worcestershire sauce
1/4 cup beef bouillon
1/2 teaspoon salt
1/8 teaspoon black pepper
2 (6-ounce) New York cut steaks, 1/2 inch thick
1/4 cup brandy

Melt butter, then add shallots and cook until tender but not browned. Add Worcestershire, bouillon, salt and pepper. Bring to boil and cook until liquid is reduced by about half.

Meanwhile, pan-broil steaks until rare or done as desired. Transfer meat and sauce to chafing dish or leave in skillet. Add steaks to sauce and turn to coat well.

Warm brandy. Pour over steaks, heat sauce and ignite. Let flames die down and serve at once. Makes 2 servings.

Dear SOS: I lost my recipe for an easy cheese pie, which consisted of bread, cheese, milk and eggs. It was wonderful for brunch. —MRS. W.B.H.

Dear Mrs. W.B.H.: Is this the recipe you mean? It can be varied by substituting diced green chiles for the green pepper and using Jack instead of Cheddar cheese.

EASY CHEESE PIE

4 to 5 slices day-old bread
1 1/2 cups shredded Cheddar cheese
1 1/4 cups milk
3 eggs, beaten
Salt, pepper
1/4 teaspoon cayenne pepper Cut bread into 1-inch cubes to make 3 cups. Place on bottom and sides of greased 9-inch pie plate. Sprinkle with cheese.

Mix milk, eggs, salt and pepper to taste and cayenne pepper. Pour into pie plate over bread. Bake at 375 degrees 30 to 40 minutes or until puffed and browned. Let stand 10 minutes before serving. Makes 5 to 6 servings.

In large skillet, brown ground beef and onion; drain. Add oregano, salt, pepper, cumin and 1/2 cup taco sauce; continue cooking until thoroughly heated.

Arrange lettuce over baked crust. Top with ground beef mixture, tomato, avocado and sour cream. Cut into wedges; serve with taco sauce. Yield: 8 servings.

Reduce Cholesterol

"Cholesterol can be found in animal fats and organ meats," such as beef kidney or beef liver, she said.

It also is found in animal products such as eggs, butter and cheese.

Blood cholesterol levels may be lowered by eating less saturated fat and eating more polyunsaturated fat, Ms. Mayo said. "When you're eating less saturated fat (in foods), you decrease your cholesterol (level)."

Reducing cholesterol reduces the risk of heart disease, and it reduces the risk of diseases such as obesity and hypertension, said LeeAnn Gekas, a doctor at the center.

Blood cholesterol also may be lowered with certain drugs, Dr. Gekas said, but reducing cholesterol through diet modifications usually is safer and less expensive.

"We don't know the whole story" about how the drugs work in reducing cholesterol, she said. "Drugs have side effects over the years," such as causing heartburn, gall stones or affecting the heart beat. "Every drug you take (to reduce the cholesterol level) does have side effects," she said.

Drugs used to reduce blood cholesterol also are very expensive, Dr. Gekas said. Prices may range from $90 to more than $100 per month.

"Many individuals can control their cholesterol levels through their diet," Ms. Mayo said. Those needing the aid of drugs in addition to a cholesterol-conscious diet "have to be willing to work with their doctor" to attain and maintain the proper cholesterol level.

The institute suggests several ways to decrease the intake of cholesterol:

- *Eat more vegetables, fruits, cereal grains and starches.
- *Eat fish, poultry and lean cuts of meat, and serve moderate portions.
- *Trim fat from meats before cooking.
- *Eat less or avoid organ meats.
- *Eat less sausage, bacon and processed luncheon meats.
- *Use skim or low fat milk, and choose low fat cheeses.
- *Eat less cream, ice cream and butter, and use low fat yogurt.
- *Eat less fried food in animal fats or shortening.
- *Eat fewer eggs, or eat fewer egg yolks.

Food

When ingredients are listed on the label, "the largest or heaviest ingredient is first on the ingredient label," she said.

Meats are being labeled more as an attempt to educate people on how to choose meat cuts, Ms. Kolasa said. "Pork has gotten leaner with less fat and less cholesterol," and labels identify those changes.

Other information found on meat labels include the number of calories per serving and the fat content.

"Advertising and labeling can be seductive and can be helpful," Ms. Kolasa said as she demonstrated how two packages of processed luncheon meats were labeled with a different emphasis and had a difference of price even though they had basically the same nutritional value.

One label described the luncheon meat as having 97 percent less fat for $1.69. For $1.89, the other label described the luncheon meat as containing 25 percent less fat and 15 percent less calories than its standard product.

Cooks Ready To Decide Best Recipe

Calling all backyard cooks. The debate has raged for years — "Where in the U.S. is the best place to enjoy the backyard barbecue?"

The debate need rage no longer, the answer is at hand. The best barbecue recipes in the land will be determined at the 1987 National Beef Cook-Off in Sun Valley, Idaho, when contestants representing all 50 states compete in the all-new "Barbecue Category" of the National Beef Cook-Off.

The Barbecue Category, like the Cook-Off's regular "indoor" contest, is open to anyone 18 years or older who has a non-professional food status. Anyone who has owned one or more head of beef or dairy cattle (or who lives in a household where any person has owned cattle) in the 12 months preceding Sept. 20, 1987, is ineligible. Deadline for entry is April 1, 1987.

All recipes must contain a minimum of one pound, and no more than five pounds of beef. Each serving must contain at least three ounces of cooked beef. Meat used must be exclusively beef and all barbecue recipes are required to be cooked over Kingsford Charcoal on Weber Grills. The recipe must be specific, with no use of brand names, and must state the number of servings, cooking time and approximate preparation time. The combined cooking and preparation time is not to exceed four hours.

Contestants should send their best beef barbecue recipe utilizing any cut of beef, except organ meats, to Barbecue Category, National Beef Cook-Off, 444 N. Michigan Ave., Chicago, Ill. 60611. Each recipe should include a name, address, phone number and a brief statement about the recipe's origin.

Winners of seven regional contests nationwide will prepare their recipes at the National Beef Cook-Off, Sept. 20-22, 1987, in Sun Valley where they will compete for the following prize money: first place, $2,500; second place, $1,500; third place, $750.

Judging criteria for the Barbecue Category will be based on the following point structure: taste, 40 points; ease of preparation and practicality, 30 points; originality, 20 points; appearance, 10 points.
