Suspected Drug Trafficker Faces Court In Tampa

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — A man alleged to be one of the world's top cocaine traffickers was in federal custody today after being captured in a shootout by Colombian authorities and extradited to the United States. Carlos Lehder Rivas, who was brought to Florida early this morning, was to appear in federal court in Tampa today, said Assistant U.S. Attorney Ernest Mueller in Jacksonville. Lehder then faces a detention hearing in Jacksonville, where the indictment that led to his extradition was handed up in 1981. Colombia long has been under pressure from the United States to curtail that nation's drug lords, and the capture and extradition of Lehder was hailed by U.S. Attorney General Edwin Meese as a major victory. Lehder, 37, who allegedly started out selling marijuana on New York streets, is reputed to be a member of the "Medellin Cartel," described by authorities as the world's biggest drug smuggling ring, responsible for 80 percent of U.S. cocaine imports.

Mueller, the prosecutor in the case, said Lehder has threatened the lives of those pledged to bring him to justice. "Not me personally," Mueller said late Wednesday. "He has made generic threats. He hasn't named anybody. He has said if he was caught, he would kill a federal judge a week until he is freed." Ana Barnett, a spokeswoman for the U.S. Attorney's office in Miami, said extraordinary efforts are being made to assure the safety of Lehder and those who are guarding him. "His past shows he's a violent man who is capable of many things," she said. "Security will be very tight." Mueller said the hearing in Jacksonville would be held in "the most secure facility available." He refused to elaborate. Lehder faces 29 charges in the United States. Charges in Jacksonville include conspiracy to import cocaine, importing cocaine, possession with intent to distribute the drug and racketeering.

Reporter To Leave Iran Soon

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — An Iranian Information Ministry official said Wall Street Journal reporter Gerald F. Seib was still in Iran today, but would leave the country within 24 hours. Seib was detained in Tehran on Saturday. Iranian officials had announced their decision to free Seib on Wednesday, five days after he was detained and accused of spying for Israel. The officials had said he would leave today. Seib had been invited to Iran along with other foreign journalists to cover the Iran-Iraq war. The Information Ministry official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said in a telephone interview today that Seib "has still not left but will leave within the next 24 hours." When asked to be more specific, he said: "No one can give you more information, so don't show any more curiosity. When it happens (Seib's departure), you will definitely find out about it." Officials at Tehran's Mehrabad airport said they had no information on when Seib would leave the country. At U.N. headquarters in New York, Iranian Ambassador Said Rajaie-Khorassani told a news conference late Wednesday that Seib was handed over to the Swiss Embassy in Tehran. Spokesmen for the embassy, which handles U.S. interests in Iran, would not comment. Paul Seib, the journalist's brother, said at the family home in Hays, Kan., that relatives were elated. But he added the family won't "take anything for granted" before hearing definitely that Seib has been freed.

In 1984, he was charged in Miami with one count of conspiracy to import and distribute controlled substances, two counts of possession with intent to distribute, one count of attempting to import controlled substances and one count of promoting international travel for purposes of importing controlled substances. The most recent indictment against Lehder, unsealed in Miami on Nov. 18, accuses the Medellin Cartel of sending 58 tons of cocaine to the United States from laboratories all over South America's Amazon Basin. Lehder was charged with 13 narcotics-related counts in that indictment. Much of the government's information about the cartel came from informant Barry Seal, a former drug smuggler himself who infiltrated the organization. He was killed Feb. 19 in Baton Rouge, La., allegedly by three Colombians acting on a $500,000 contract put out by leaders of the cartel. The three are awaiting trial. Lehder was captured Wednesday in a northwestern Colombia mansion, one of dozens allegedly maintained by drug traffickers in the area called Rio Negro near Medellin. Fifteen of Lehder's bodyguards also were captured in the pre-dawn raid, and one of them was wounded in a brief shootout, the national police and Defense Ministry said in a joint communique. "It was a very carefully prepared operation," said Defense Minister Rafael Samudio, speaking at a news conference in Bogota. "The United States asked for his extradition and that was agreed upon," Samudio said. "Our obligation is to keep our part of the bargain." The Colombian Defense Ministry said Lehder was put on a U.S. Air Force plane shortly after his arrest. Lt. Robert Duncan of the Tampa International Airport Police, said Lehder's plane arrived at a remote part of the airport around 1:15 a.m. today. Lehder is one of 109 Colombians the

Proposals For At-Large Seats On Pitt Board Draw Criticism

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

The majority of speakers at a hearing Wednesday night on proposals to change the method of electing members of the Board of County Commissioners voiced support for a six-district plan with no at-large representatives. The hearing, at Wahl-Coates School on East Fifth Street, was the fifth in a series of seven hearings scheduled to receive public comments on the proposed election changes. At present, the six commissioners are required to live in districts but are voted on by the county at-large. Under the proposed plan, six commissioners would have to live in one of six districts, but would be elected only by voters in the district. Three additional board members could live anywhere in the county and would be voted on by all the voters of in the county. Three speakers — Ed Griffith, Ed Carter and Farney Moore — out of the 13 people attending the Wednesday hearing, said they support the six-district plan, which includes two predominately black districts. But they said they are opposed to having at-large seats. Griffith suggested that at-large seats "dilutes the voting strength of minorities ... dilutes the voting strength of towns" and creates a situation where well-organized political groups can "dominate" an office. He said electing even one commissioner at-large could result in "under-representation" of blacks. He cautioned that suggestions that blacks could elect one of three at-large seats by one-shot voting "supports a return of racism at the polls." Carter, a member of the Greenville City Council, said "the only alternative we have" is to adopt the six-district plan, although there is "no guarantee" that two blacks will be elected to the board. He also said arguments for having three at-large members — having at least some members of the board feel they are representing the entire county — are "unsound." Hoping to elect one black for three at-large seats is "too much of a chance for us to take," Carter said. Carter said there has been some talk of appointing at least one black to an at-large seat initially. But he said "I find this totally unacceptable."

"I ask ... do what the people mandate," and establish six districts with no at-large seats, Carter said. But Bob Woodside told commissioners, "I wish to disagree" with Carter's position on at-large seats. "My fear," in having a district system with no at-large candidates, Woodside said, is that "I'll never get the chance to vote for a black candidate." Saying he has been an active civil rights worker, voted for black candidates in the past and contributed money to black candidates, Woodside said, "I think the gamble is worth it. I'd like to have some at-large black candidates." Tom Eamon told commissioners, "I have mixed feelings" about the

Allies Balk, White House Cancels Plans For Anti-Terrorism Summit

By BARRY SCHWEID
AP Diplomatic Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration, in a dispute with some of its closest allies, has been forced to abandon plans for a meeting on fighting terrorism, a U.S. official said today. The session was to have opened Friday in Rome. France, with support from Britain, objected that the allies might have been drawn into a controversial discussion of U.S. military options to combat terrorism in Lebanon, said the official, who demanded anonymity. An announcement was expected from the State Department later in the day. The continuing U.S. military buildup in the eastern Mediterranean apparently raised concerns in allied capitals of a possible attack in reprisal for the holding of eight American hostages in Lebanon. "Military action was not on the agenda," the U.S. official said. "But, presumably, any discussion of terrorism would touch on that." L. Paul Bremer, who heads the department's counter-terrorism office, was to head the U.S. delegation. The meeting was to be the first test of allied resolve since the seven industrialized democracies agreed, at U.S. behest last May at the Tokyo economic summit, to take a firm and coordinated stance against terrorism. The United States asked Italy to convene the session since this year's economic summit meeting will be held in Milan in June. Other countries that were due to attend the Friday meeting were Canada, Japan and West Germany. The U.S. official said the Reagan administration had planned to "compare notes" with the other governments on combatting terrorism and to seek another expression of unity. Even so, the official said, "France did not want to get involved" and Britain supported the French position. In Paris, a government spokesman confirmed France and Britain had opposed the proposal for a high-level meeting and said West Germany supported their position as well. "The French government holds to the bilateral character of contacts and exchanges of information," Denis Baudouin, a spokesman for Premier Jacques Chirac, said at a press briefing in Paris. "It is dangerous that 'the seven' appear like gendarmes of the world, especially in the current context," he said. "In the case of the hostages, one must act with caution." The spokesman also expressed concern about U.S. Navy movements in the Mediterranean. "We ask ourselves about the real and final intentions of the Americans," Baudouin said. "From the point of view of the hostages, it is disquieting." A flotilla of more than two dozen U.S. warships and support vessels is stationed off Lebanon where eight Americans and 18 other foreigners are missing and believed held by Shiite Moslem extremists. The White House has sought to dampen speculation that a military strike was in the offing. Indeed, informed sources at the Pentagon said today that the Defense Department may soon allow one of two Marine amphibious groups sailing in the Mediterranean to leave for home to discourage speculation that a military strike is in the offing. The sources, who agreed to discuss the matter only if not identified, said the Navy also intended to allow the aircraft carrier Kennedy to proceed toward a weekend port call in Israel, and that four of the Kennedy's smaller escorting warships had been informed they could soon sail for home.

'Warm But Humbling Feeling'

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan told the National Prayer Breakfast today that people tell him almost every day that they are praying for him, and it is a "warm but humbling feeling." The president and first lady Nancy Reagan joined in silent prayer for American hostages in Lebanon and for missing Church of England envoy Terry Waite as the annual breakfast session at a Washington hotel ended. Among those in attendance were Vice President George Bush, his wife Barbara and other government officials. "It gives one a very good feeling to see so many of our national leaders here," Reagan said. "Hardly a day goes by that I'm not told, sometimes in letters and sometimes by people I meet, that they are praying for me," he said. "That's a warm but humbling feeling." He said he sometimes answers by saying that "if they ever get a busy signal, it's because I'm in there ahead of them." "I was brought up in a home where we were taught to believe in intercessory prayer," the president said. "I know it is those prayers, and millions like them, that are building high and strong this cathedral of freedom we call America."

Martin Will Not Support Union Of Schools For Deaf

WILSON, N.C. (AP) — Gov. Jim Martin and Human Resources Secretary Phil Kirk said today they will not support a state task force recommendation to unify North Carolina's high school programs for the deaf and blind at a central campus near Greensboro.

"I hope to be able to reassure you of our commitment to move forward with our programs for the schools for the deaf in North Carolina," Martin told students, parents and teachers at the Eastern North Carolina School for the Deaf.

"Throughout the study, they examined the pluses and minuses of the system and came up with what they hoped would be the best solution," Martin said.

The "human kindness" factor, however, that includes having different facilities in different parts of the state, was left out, he said.

It was good news for parents who have children in the Wilson school, but they questioned whether funding would be available to improve the programs.

"I feel relief that they are not going to close the high schools," said Fallon Melvin of New Bern, whose son is a junior at ENCFD. "But I am not aware of the financial needs being met."

"The dorm rooms are the pits," he said. "They are not conducive to the warm environment a child needs when he is a way from home."

Tommy Wade, another parent, said the Wilson school needs $350,000 a year.

"It doesn't look like we're going to get it," he said. "I know the money is in the DHR (Department of Human Resources) budget, but I don't feel like we'll get our share."

Martin agreed it was a "tight year" for the state budget, adding, "All that says is we can't do all the good ideas at the same time."

He added that he would change his budget recommendation so "part-time permanent employees (teacher aides) would be eligible for the same benefits teacher aides in the public schools receive."

In a prepared statement, Martin said the possible savings of consolidating the systems was "miniscule compared to the effects of family disruption which will result."

"Many families have moved to Morganton and Wilson in order for their children to be able to go to those schools for 13 years without family disruption," Martin said.

Martin said he also opposes a suggestion that a legislative study commission be made to study the feasibility of consolidating the deaf schools into one state residential school in Greensboro by the year 2000. He also rejected another part of that recommendation, which would have the commission consider whether the schools should be moved from the Department of Human Resources to the Department of Public Instruction.

"We strongly oppose such a move," Martin said. "Setting any kind of closing date for schools so far in the future will rapidly erode the quality of education for those students that remain at the schools."

Martin endorsed the other five commission proposals, including:

- Expand the roles of residential schools for the deaf and blind to develop them as resource centers for local education agencies and other agencies serving hearing impaired and visually impaired children.

- Establish a statewide delivery system of preschool services-education for visually impaired children ages 0-5.

- Develop a comprehensive program to serve multi-handicapped students enrolled in the schools for the deaf and blind.

- Keep the Governor Morehead School intact in its present location in Raleigh.

- Recommend that a central school for the deaf in Greensboro not close and that the division continue to provide preschool through 8th grade programs on a regional basis as presently provided.

Farm Life School Decision Delayed

WILLIAMSTON — Martin County's Board of Education again has delayed a final decision on closing the Farm Life School.

Several speakers represented about 100 Farm Life residents who attended a public hearing Monday night on the board's proposal to close the school. Members of the school board agreed to the hearing only after being informed that it could not legally close the school without such a hearing.

Farm Life residents were angered when the board made a decision in executive session in the summer of 1986 to close the school, which has 94 students enrolled. Board members had agreed that because of its dwindling student body, the school no longer justified its operating expenses.

When enrollment dropped below 100, the N.C. Board of Education withdrew its allotment of a full-time principal. Additionally, the N.C. Department of Public Instruction estimates that closing the school could save between $80,000 and $120,000 annually if the students were transferred to other, larger schools in the county.

These estimates in savings, however, have failed to convince Farm Life parents and residents that their children would be better off enrolled in and being transported to Williamston Primary and E.J. Hayes Schools in Williamston.

One spokesman for keeping the school open, Freddie Griffin, said "I don't think any of us would be against moving if we honestly thought our children would get the same attention and level of instruction (at another school) that they do now."

In responding to claims by Farm Life residents that the decision to close the Farm Life School had been made too quickly, school board chairman Macon Holliday said, "We have discussed the possibility over and over again for the past 16 years."

Democrats Attacking Meese's Program

By LARRY MARGASAK
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — Ignoring their chairman's plea to respect, Senate Judiciary Committee Democrats attacked Justice Department policies with a furious assault that showed no sign of abating.

Wednesday's hearing — the first since liberal Democrats took control of the committee from conservative Republicans — revealed immediately a deep gulf between Sen. Joseph Biden's push for cooperation and his party colleagues' strategy of confrontation with the Reagan administration.

The committee kicked off its month-long effort to review the Justice Department budget and operations, with Meese and antitrust chief Charles F. Rule as its initial witnesses.

They were to be followed today by criminal division chief William Weld and John Lawn, administrator of the Drug Enforcement Administration.

The plea for respect from Biden, D-Del., lasted through his opening statement and through 20 minutes of questions by the chairman and ranking Republican Strom Thurmond, R-S.C. Then, Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., took over, and — along with Democrats Howard Metzenbaum of Ohio, Dennis DeConcini of Arizona and Paul Simon of Illinois — blasted virtually every department policy.

Democrats criticized Meese for budget cuts and infighting among agencies involved in the war on drugs; failure to appoint more women and minorities to judgeships; supporting an end to the "Miranda rule" that requires police to tell criminal suspects of their rights; and advising President Reagan that it was legal to withhold notification of Congress of arms sales to Iran.

"Mergers that corporate America would not ever have dreamed of, let alone tried 10 years ago, are going through the department with no problem at all," Metzenbaum said.

"Just when I thought the antitrust remedy couldn't get worse" the department's fiscal 1988 budget slashed 100 positions from the antitrust section, the Ohio Democrat said.

Metzenbaum added, "I believe you're saying to corporate America, 'It's your ball. Run with it any way you want. We won't interfere.'"

Rule replied, "There is a whole broad area of mergers that simply don't raise antitrust issues." He contended that recent court decisions, not the Reagan administration, have changed the merger rules.

Meese was not shy about defending himself and the department.

"Most of the things you said in your political diatribe are flat wrong," he told Kennedy, who had a laundry list of complaints ranging from department policies on civil rights, to its attempt to reinstate the death penalty without legislation, and its "cut and run" budget cuts on drug abuse items.

Meese said Kennedy's statement was filled with "inaccuracies and misstatements of fact."

To Simon, who "missed a sense of championing civil liberties and civil rights" in Meese's opening statement, the attorney general described himself as "one of the foremost defenders of individual rights."

And to Metzenbaum, who accused Meese of placing the president "above the law" with his advice on delaying arms sales notification, Meese said, "Let me repeat, in case you didn't hear. I do not think the president is above the law. There is a firm rationale for the advice I gave."

Justice Department spokesman Terry Eastland commended Biden for his "civility and his willingness and desire to have a civil hearing. Time will tell whether the committee members have the same desire."

Pay Raises Go Into Effect As Opponents Seek Repeal

By SANDY JOHNSON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congress and 3,000 top federal officials and judges are collecting hefty pay raises, at least temporarily, while opponents try to repeal the increases or kill them in court.

By almost all accounts, the pay raise took effect at midnight Tuesday when a 30-day deadline for disapproval expired, although the House cast a largely meaningless vote against it Wednesday.

"The statute says it's got to be disapproved in 30 days," General Accounting Office senior attorney Douglas Faulkner said. "Any disapproval passed (Wednesday) would not be effective. The pay raise went into effect."

Pay raise opponent Rep. Connie Mack, R-Fla., acknowledged the House vote against the increase "has no significance whatsoever."

The House disapproval was by voice vote; without a roll call vote, House members could tell their constituents they voted against increasing their pay 15.6 percent, from $77,400 to $89,500.

Rep. Robert Smith, R-N.H., criticized House leaders for "arrogantly and blatantly refusing a recorded vote" on the pay raise.

Smith and several other House members said they would introduce resolutions to repeal the pay raises, but since House leaders want the extra money, the repeal legislation might languish in committee and never reach the floor.

Indeed, the Senate on Wednesday approved such a repeal resolution by voice vote — its third action within a week against the raises. But House Speaker Jim Wright, D-Texas, said the House would not act on the Senate resolution.

"We are not going to spend all year voting on that (pay raise)," Wright said. He referred to the issue as "petty, puerile quarrels about who should be paid and how much."

Soon after the House voted on the pay raise, it adjourned for an extended President's Day holiday and will not be back for business until Feb. 18.

Sen. Gordon Humphrey, R-N.H., said he would try to force the House's hand by attaching the pay repeal to a bill the House couldn't ignore.

The Senate made the first move on the pay raises last week by approving a resolution of disapproval and then attaching the pay raise issue to a $50 million emergency appropriation for the homeless. The House had passed the homeless bill last Tuesday, and with Wednesday's voice vote, the emergency appropriation went to President Reagan for his signature.

But because the House leaders had shut down the chamber Tuesday without allowing a vote before the deadline, the pay raise was permitted to take effect at midnight.

Litigation to void the pay raises was a virtual certainty.

Humphrey and Smith had joined the National Taxpayers Union in filing a lawsuit last month challenging the method by which the pay raises are set. Their lawyer, William Strauss, said he expected that lawsuit in U.S. District Court to be amended to attempt to void the raises.

"We're looking at all possible ways of challenging this pay raise," Strauss said. "For both houses of Congress to vote against the pay raise and still get a pay raise is not what the (Constitution) framers had in mind."

There is also a question about whether the judicial pay raise can be repealed at all. The Constitution bars Congress from taking away salary increases already given to judges.

All told, the pay raises will cost an estimated $40 million this year. President Reagan approved the raises based upon suggestions from a federal pay commission that had recommended much higher increases.

Cabinet secretaries will begin earning $99,500, up 14.9 percent; Supreme Court justices $110,000, up 2.6 percent; appellate judges $95,000, up 10.9 percent; district judges $89,500, up 10.4 percent; deputy Cabinet secretaries $89,500, up 15.6 percent; assistant Cabinet secretaries $77,500, up 4.0 percent; and the vice president $115,000, up 14.9 percent.

Bennett Is Launching New Anti-Drug Drive

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of Education William J. Bennett is launching a new drive to highlight the achievements of schools that have found ways to rid their halls of drugs.

Bennett, who has been taking heat from Congress for proposing to cut in half the Reagan administration's drug education budget, hailed Washington-Lee High School in a Washington suburb, Arlington, Va., as the first school to enlist in his campaign called "Schools Without Drugs: The Challenge."

In a speech prepared for delivery at an assembly at the high school, Bennett said, "The purpose of the program is to help schools and communities mobilize their efforts. We will publish a new drug prevention newsletter that will provide descriptions of model anti-drug programs and the best available practical research on prevention."

The advice will be drawn from the popular handbook, "Schools Without Drugs," that Bennett's office published last September. The free handbook, of which more than 1.1 million copies have been distributed, offers advice to parents, schools, students and communities, including the police, on how to crack down on drugs.

Bennett said his department also will begin a search this fall for schools with exemplary programs to curb drug and alcohol use and will honor them in the next school year. He said 14 national associations — including both major teachers unions, the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, the International Association of Chiefs of Police and several other school groups — are participating in the drug challenge.

The grassroots program fits with his philosophy that what matters most in education "is the effort made at the local level," he said.

"There has been a certain amount of cynicism in the media lately about the federal commitment to fighting drugs," Bennett said. But he added that, "When principals start thinking about how to keep drugs out of their schools, they don't sit in their offices and ask themselves, 'What are those guys on Capitol Hill and in the Department of Education doing to keep drugs out of my school?'"

Social Security Head Says Hucksters Use 'Misleading' Letters

By CHRISTOPHER CONNELL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Concerned with deceptive Social Security fund-raising letters and sales pitches, Commissioner R. Hardie says she is considering a mass mailing of her own.

The head of the Social Security Administration went before the House Select Committee on Aging Wednesday to deplore what she called the "intolerably misleading" letters that direct mail outfits are using to raise millions of dollars, ostensibly to lobby against Social Security cuts or to provide such services as checking someone's Social Security record.

Those are services that Hardy's agency provides free of charge, and the outfits that charge $10 to $45 to check the records or secure a Social Security card for a child simply pass the customer's name on to the Social Security Administration, she said.

More than a dozen lawmakers attended the hearing and many expressed chagrin with some of the outfits they said arouse fear and misunderstanding among elderly citizens.

Several criticized one of the most successful direct mail fund-raisers, the National Committee to Preserve Social Security and Medicare, which raises more than $30 million annually from 4 million members.

Hardy, in an interview after the hearing, said she was considering mailing "a consumer alert" to all 37 million Social Security beneficiaries. The hearing made it clear that lawmakers are annoyed about the problem, she said.

But it would cost $2 million to stuff a message in the checks that the Treasury sends out each month and to arrange a separate mailing to the 40 percent of beneficiaries who get their benefits directly deposited into their bank accounts.

The direct mail groups were not called to testify, but the National Committee to Preserve Social Security and Medicare submitted an 18-page statement defending its track record and tactics. It also urged the aging committee to look not just at direct mail but to examine television ads that sell so-called "Medigap" health insurance policies to the aged.

The committee was formed in 1982 by James Roosevelt, a former congressman and eldest son of Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Reps. Constance A. Morella and Helen Bentley, both Maryland Republicans, complained that constituents had sent them $10 bills, mistakenly assuming they had a hand in sending out the National Committee's legislative petitions.

Hardy said that her 1,300 field offices typically get three complaints each after a committee mass mailing.

But National Committee spokesman Ken Hoagland said that is not many considering that the group sends out up to 25 million letters at a time.

"One of the reasons that members of Congress are mistakenly feeling that there is a lot of criticism of us from their constituents is because they're getting maybe 10 inquiries, maybe 15 complaints. They're not focusing on the fact that one out of six households in America are receiving our mail," Hoagland said.

The National Committee has recently expanded its lobbying staff and hired as a consultant Martha McSteen, who was acting commissioner of Social Security from 1983 to 1986.

Rep. George C. Wortley, R-N.Y., said, "I hope that this hearing exposes these money-hungry organizations for what they really are. These groups that say they represent the elderly are also robbing them behind their backs."

The committee denied allegations that it spends up to 80 percent of its budget on fund-raising. "In 1985 the National Committee spent 15 percent of its budget on fund-raising," the group said, adding that most of its mailings contain no request for funds.

And it challenged the assumption that the elderly are more vulnerable to direct mail appeals.

"The National Committee believes it is condescending and unfair to assume that a person's intelligence decreases in proportion to his age. 'Elderly' does not mean 'stupid,'" it said.

An expert on fund-raising by charities, David E. Ormstedt, an assistant attorney general of Connecticut, testified that it is often hard to find out how much they spend raising funds.

Wrong Decision

A school board elected entirely by residency districts creates a dangerously narrow body for setting public policy.

The Pitt County Board of Education made a mistake when it opted for an election plan utilizing that type of board structure. Members approved a 12-member board with two representatives elected by each of the six residency districts — and no members elected at large.

That plan is not consistent with the concept of sound local government. The proposal produces a board of 12 officials — each elected by a small minority of voters — that makes decisions for a majority of the citizens of Pitt County. This situation could encourage disunity, divisiveness and squabbling.

At-large representatives are a safety valve against such provincialism and bickering. Since at-large board members are voted on by the entire county, they answer politically to all citizens. This accountability ensures open-mindedness to the problems and needs of all sections of the county — not just the needs of one district.

The aims of a new election plan were to maintain the integrity of the individual vote and provide sufficient minority representation. A board elected by a combination of at-large and residency district voting would best incorporate both ideals. In addition it would provide more balanced representation and guarantee a less constricted point of view — two points that are important to the interests of good government.

A 12-member board is too large a body to govern a school system. Eight members would be preferable. A large board further encourages divisiveness. Interests can be widely divided — a fact which can bog down progress on crucial issues.

The board made the wrong decision when it opted for a 12-person board elected entirely by district voting. It should not have compromised on the important point of at-large representation. A broad perspective is necessary to effectively govern in the best interest of the people. A board elected solely by districts lacks that perspective.

Growing Program

Four regional committees are in the process of choosing some 30 semi-finalists who will be competing for the East Carolina University 1987 University Scholars Awards.

There were 110 applications for the scholarships and the regional committees are considering 65 students from seven states and Canada. Six or more full tuition and fees scholarships will be awarded this year bringing to 22 the number that have been awarded. The recipients will be evaluated on academic achievement and leadership potential. The scholarships are privately financed and each is based on a fund of at least $40,000. Regional committees will interview nominees on Feb. 14 and 12 finalists will be invited to the East Carolina University campus on March 7.

If East Carolina University is to fulfill its role as one of the nation's outstanding universities, as many of its supporters believe it will, a prestigious scholarship program which attracts the brightest and most motivated of the high school graduates is virtually essential. There is much to be done in attracting additional funding for the ECU University Scholars program but an impressive start has been made. These scholarships are rapidly becoming coveted by outstanding high school graduates.

The University Scholars program had its beginnings during the administration of John Howell and in future decades it may be seen as the most important contribution made by the soon-to-retire Chancellor Howell.

The program has quickly grown as families saw the opportunity to endow a scholarship to attract bright students to ECU and, in so doing, honor their loved ones. It is a certainty that the program will continue to grow.

Snow Plow Initiative

Despite what the President said last week, the country doesn't need a Star Wars program — it needs a Snow Plow Initiative. All Mr. Reagan had to do was look out the window of his limousine to realize the capital had been brought to a grinding halt without one Soviet missile being fired.

The idea of having enough snow-clearing equipment for Washington, D.C., has always been a dream of government scientists, many who live outside the Beltway.

Werner Zambrowski, a leading voice for developing the Snow Plow Initiative, claims it is not only feasible to produce such a system with present technology, but it is absolutely necessary considering the snow job the Soviets are doing on Moscow.

"The United States has the technical know-how to remove the snow from its streets," he said in his thick German accent. "It's just a question of getting the Congress to pay for it. To dump tomorrow we must be willing to invest in the future today. Our children and their children must never be snowed in. I see the day when not only our main streets but our side streets will be plowed out from curb to curb. I see the day when we can push all abandoned cars into the Potomac. And I see the day when Washington's honorable mayor will actually be in town when the snowstorm comes."

Opponents of the Snow Plow Initiative believe SPI is unrealistic. Jarrell Jerryboam is opposed because he doesn't think snow removal in Washington has any future. "Once the first snowflake hits the ground," he says, "everyone in the nation's capital panics. It doesn't matter how many snowplows you deploy, they're only going to be blocked by people taking early leave from the Pentagon."

Jerryboam showed satellite photographs of last week's storm to prove that snowplows are not the answer to snow removal. "It takes more than equipment to deter snow.

The truth is that there is no response to a Washington snowfall because the chance of human error is too great."

Secretary of Defense Cap Weinberger, caught in a storm on the George Washington Parkway, told reporters in an off-the-record wiener roast that Moscow has three times as many snowplows as Washington. These plows have a throw weight capable of clearing a six-lane highway from Pinsk to Minsk in less than an hour.

Asked why Washington is so short on trucks and bulldozers, and the Soviets so big on them, Weinberger blamed liberals soft on snow for drifting from one crisis to another. He told Ted Koppel, who happened to be on the parkway when a snow-removal report, "We're paying the price for 20 years of salt and sand neglect."

I called the White House and asked where the President stood on a Snow Plow Initiative. A spokesman replied, "The President's dream has always been to leave a clean Washington behind when he finished his term. He plans to go on television next week and deny that any U.S. snow-removal equipment was sold to Iran. He will also announce that he is appointing a snow-removal commission made up of those guilty of last week's disaster to recommend what Washington should do in case of a new storm. In an address to the nation the President will express sympathy for those who suffered during the past week and he intends to read a letter from a little girl who couldn't go to school and pray because of the snowstorm and the Supreme Court.

Finally he will cite a true national hero — a driver of a tow truck who was buried in an embankment for three days on I-66. When he was dug out he was asked by the highway patrol if he had any message for the American people and he said, "Send me more snow!"

To the editor:

Acknowledgement is due the Grace Fellowship, a newly formed Christian organization at East Carolina University, for bringing the Steve Green concert to Wright Auditorium on Jan. 23.

The concert was well-attended and seemed to be accepted as an outstanding program by all who attended. Steve Green's "For God and God Alone" was a dynamic expression of both his vocal ability and his spiritual commitment.

It is my hope that individuals, businesses and churches will continue to participate in enabling programs of this quality to be offered to our college-age public in the Greenville area.

Thanks again to Grace Fellowship, an outreach ministry of Grace Free Will Baptist Church, for providing an evening of musical enjoyment and spiritual depth.

To the editor:

Why should there be a Black History Month? What started out as a Black History Week is now expanded into the entire month of February and is celebrated more or less throughout this recalcitrantly racist nation.

No, it is not just because one of our greatest poets, Langston Hughes, was born on Feb. 1, or that one of our greatest leaders, W.E.B. DuBois, was born on the 23rd, or that two of the world's greatest classical singers, Leontyne Price (10th) and Marian Anderson (27th) were born during February, or that two of our most messianic leaders, Frederick Douglas (20th) and Malcolm X (21st) died, or that Augusta Institute (later to become Morehouse College) opened in Atlanta on Feb. 14, 1867.

February is sprinkled with events notable to Black History. John S. Rock was born Feb. 2 and was an outstanding leader during the post-Civil War period and the first Black to practice before the U.S. Supreme Court. The birth of Benjamin Banneker, the inventor of the first American clock to strike the hours, was Feb. 6, 1754.

And February is no more rich in memorable Black History dates than any other month.

Why then is there Black History month? It is needed because, in all probability, you do not know who Henry Highland Garnet was. Nor do you know the name of the Black doctor who developed the blood banking system, or the man who worked on the planning of Washington, D.C. I could go on. But this is exactly why Black History Month is needed — to remind Americans of the extremely major part Black people have played in the formation of this country, from the slavery that made it one of the richest countries to the music and dance that made it a unique cultural entity.

The question then should be revised. It should be asked, "Why isn't every month Black History Month?"

Rights, Wrongs And Options

WASHINGTON — What's wrong with sex education in the public schools? Just about everything, in the view of Secretary of Education William J. Bennett. Most such education, he recently told the National School Boards Association, lacks one crucial ingredient: It lacks any element of character. It rarely gets to questions of moral right and wrong.

"To neglect questions of character in a sex education class," Bennett said, "would be a great and unforgivable error. Sex education has to do with how boys and girls, how men and women, should treat each other and themselves. Sex education is therefore about character and the formation of character. A sex education course in which issues of right and wrong do not occupy center stage is an evasion and an irresponsibility."

In some schools, Bennett acknowledged, some teachers are doing an admirable job. In all too many places, sex education classes offer little more than technical information. The general approach is to explain that intercourse may lead to pregnancy, and that pregnancy offers options — single motherhood, marriage, adoption or abortion. The teacher then is supposed to ask the class, "Which solution do you like best? Which solution do you like least? Why?"

A teen-ager's pregnancy involves youngsters in a highly complex, sensitive, personal and serious situation, but the sex education that is widely offered is not geared to human emotions. A typical teacher's manual suggests only that "where strong differences of opinion exist on what is right or wrong sexual behavior, objective, informed and dignified discussion of both sides of such questions should be encouraged."

"What's wrong with this kind of teaching?" Bennett asked. "First, it is a very odd kind of teaching — very odd because it does not teach. It does not teach because, while speaking to a very important aspect of human life, it displays a conscious aversion to making moral distinctions. Indeed, it insists on holding them in abeyance. The words of morality, of a rational, mature morality, seem to have been banished from this sort of sex education."

It is not that the materials used in most schools are urging students to go out and have sexual intercourse. In fact, Bennett said, they give reasons why students might want to choose not to have intercourse, and they try to make students "comfortable" with that decision.

"Indeed, you sometimes get the feeling that, for these guides, being 'comfortable' with one's decision, with exercising one's 'option,' is the sum and substance of the responsible life. Decisions aren't right or wrong; decisions simply make you comfortable or not. It is as though 'comfortable' had become our moral compass."

The schools have to stop being so neutral, Bennett told the school board members. "I think most Americans want to urge not what might be the 'comfortable' thing, but the right thing. Why are we so afraid to say what it is?" The overwhelming majority of parents would gratefully welcome the teaching of old-fashioned values of chastity, virtue, and sex in the context of marriage. "Let us from time to time praise modesty."

Wholly apart from its bland neutrality, sex education in American schools seems not to be accomplishing much. By 1985, an estimated 70 percent of high school seniors had been subjected to sex education courses. Bennett found it doubtful that the courses are doing any good at all. "More than one-half of America's young people have had sexual intercourse by the time they are 17. More than one million teenage girls become pregnant each year. More than 400,000 teen-age girls now have abortions each year. Forty percent of today's 14-year-old girls will become pregnant by the time they are 19."

Big Bill Bennett, as I may have said before, is the best thing to hit American education since the McGuffey readers. His counsel may not be "sophisticated," but it sure makes sense.

Strength For Today

Many years ago, at a symposium, the celebrated Professor Thomas Huxley, an outstanding scientist of the period, insisted that the future would be dominated by people who stuck most closely to the facts.

But a member of Parliament rose and said, "I agree with Professor Huxley, but I want to add one word — 'all.' All the facts. And the greatest fact in history is God."

The course of events since this symposium has demonstrated the wisdom of that member of Parliament. The men who have stuck closely to scientific facts and have ignored moral and ethical factors — which are just as important as anything scientific — have gotten us into a position in which we face annihilation. It may well be that the only way to avoid this eventuality is to face the greatest fact of all — the will of God.

MANILA, Philippines — Just a few feet from the most sophisticated and independent vote-counting operation in the Philippines, discotheque lights flashed, Mick Jagger hopped around on a giant rock-video screen and waiters in white coats served shrimp tempura, gourmet Spanish stew and beer into the early morning hours Tuesday as Radio Station DZRH celebrated the return of democracy to a nation that had lived 20 years under dictatorship.

Few knew better than the owner and staff of DZRH, Manila's No. 1 station, that Monday's landslide victory for President Corazon Aquino was a watershed in their nation's troubled history: a fair, free and clean political exercise that now lays the foundation for a new era of freedom in a country that has known none of the above for decades.

Just one year ago, the daughter of then-President Ferdinand E. Marcos personally telephoned station owner Fred Elizalde on election night and threatened to throw him in jail if he continued airing his independent results, which showed Marcos losing to Mrs. Aquino in what became his last political stand.

Later, Marcos himself called and threatened to knock out Elizalde's transmitters.

So Monday night, as his station's vast computer network churned out the fastest and most reliable returns in the crucial referendum on Mrs. Aquino's proposed new constitution, Elizalde threw a party to celebrate what he and most Filipinos hope will be the most significant impact of Monday's historic vote: a backbone of democratic law that gives Mrs. Aquino's revolutionary government legitimacy for the first time since Marcos was driven into exile a year ago amid a military and civilian rebellion.

Equally, though, Elizalde and most political analysts in Manila resisted the euphoria that filled Mrs. Aquino's presidential palace Tuesday. Although the unofficial 75 percent approval of Aquino's 20,000-page document gave her government a legal standing that weakened her enemies overnight, it has not, as Mrs. Aquino claims, brought her government stability.

Nearly two-thirds of Mrs. Aquino's powerful armed forces voted against a constitution that sanctions her presidency until 1992. And, in the wake of last week's mutiny by about 500 of her soldiers, Mrs. Aquino, a former housewife who rose to power in a military-led rebellion, and her armed forces commanders must find a way to unify that same military behind her.

"The military took extreme effort to decide to rebel against Marcos," said one senior officer who conceded that he "would love to see the government fall." "So the soldiers see they have a real stake in it. The armed forces are overly politicized. And only through strong leadership can Mrs. Aquino get our support back."

At the same time, the political left, led by the Communist Party and its armed wing, the New People's Army, will also be working against Mrs. Aquino in the coming months.

Its forces in the south launched isolated attacks against the government Monday to disrupt the voting. And, as a 60-day cease-fire between the government and the estimated 23,200 rebels expires this weekend,

Mrs. Aquino is faced with leading her impoverished government and divided armed forces back into a protracted, 18-year guerrilla war against an enemy that claims the support of a full one-fifth of the nation's population.

Mrs. Aquino, whose government has been virtually paralyzed in the last two weeks by crises and by the campaigning for the referendum, also faces the continuing economic disaster area that Marcos left behind and that has been a fertile breeding ground for the Communists' ideology. The country still owes more than $26 billion to foreign banks; unemployment continues to soar, and the majority of the 54 million Filipinos live below the poverty line, 5 million of them as squatters in cardboard and plywood hovels.

"The constitution is not a self-executing or self-implementing document," said Mrs. Aquino's deputy foreign minister, Leticia Ramos-Shahani, who is considered one of the most astute and candid analysts in the government.

"It will remain for the government to deliver the basic services to the people.... This is where the credibility of the government will be tested and judged."

As Mrs. Aquino tries to answer critics who assert that her administration has been so obsessed in the past year with damage control that it has largely ignored the people's needs, she faces another major obstacle to governing: a second round of elections in the coming months.

On May 11, the nation is scheduled to elect a new bicameral legislature, and many of Mrs. Aquino's current Cabinet ministers have already said privately that they are running for either the Senate or the House of Representatives. Among those candidates are government ministers of such key Cabinet posts as land reform, budget and local government.

"You will see a lot of changes in the government after the referendum — primarily people resigning to run for office," said Mrs. Aquino's brother-in-law and adviser, Agapito Aquino. And political analysts note that the delivery of government services is likely to suffer during the coming void.

As the final unofficial returns poured in from remote regions of the country Tuesday, even Mrs. Aquino's enemies on the extreme left and right were forced to begin reassessing their future political options.

"This is really a tremendous vote of confidence for the president," said a magnanimous Rene Cayetano, who heads the right-wing Nacionalista Party, which is most closely associated with Mrs. Aquino's nemesis, ousted Defense Minister Juan Ponce Enrile. "I hope all of us will take this opportunity for a new beginning, a real reconciliation."

In conceding defeat Tuesday afternoon, a somewhat humbled Enrile — who had campaigned strenuously nationwide against the national charter — told reporters: "I take great pride as a Filipino in the triumph of the democratic processes in our country. We accept the verdict of the people."

Clearly, Monday's vote left the articulate and shrewd Enrile in a quandary.

UNC Preparing System-Wide Drug Policy

By The Associated Press
 University of North Carolina officials are drawing up their first system-wide drug policy that would require abuse prevention programs for students, employees and officers.
 The policy will be reviewed by chancellors on the UNC system's 16 campuses later this month before President C.D. Spangler Jr. presents it to the Board of Governors in March.
 "There are 16 schools, and they all have different policies," Spangler said in an interview. "(We're) trying to sort it all out and say what it is we should be doing."
 The goal of the policy would be to provide some consistency while continuing to give each chancellor as many options as possible to deal with campus drug use, he said.

 "The thing that will be new and different is that the Board of Governors has never passed a policy on drugs for the entire university," said Lloyd V. Hackley, a UNC vice president who is drafting the policy. "I think what the board will say (to the chancellors) is 'here are the minimum requirements you will have in your own policy.'"
 UNC officials refused to discuss specifics, pending presentation of the policy to the Board of Governors.
 But Hackley did say the policy would include a federal requirement that drug abuse prevention programs be made available to university administrators and employees as well as students.

 "We don't have any choice," Hackley said.
 In a directive late last year, the U.S. Department of Education said all universities must certify the availability of such programs or face losing federal aid to their students.
 The compliance must be certified by April 15, or universities may experience delays in student aid funding for 1987-88.
 Officials said the emphasis of the policy will be on education, but it could include sections on campus penalties and mandatory drug testing.
 For example, a student's first detected drug use could be treated as a medical problem "so that the first incidence does not have to go on his permanent record," Spangler said.

 If there are additional incidents and a student refuses to seek counseling, "then it becomes an administrative problem, and you have to do something about it."
 Spangler also said he is concerned about mandatory drug testing for athletes.
 "There is the question of why you test athletes and not the other students or those of us in the administration," Spangler said. "The principle I guess is that they represent the university in public. Well, there are many of us who represent the university in public. I wonder why only one group?"

State Officials Say Media Confuse Waste Site Issue

By JOHN FLESHER
 Associated Press Writer
RALEIGH (AP)—For Linda W. Little, executive director of the Governor's Waste Management Board, perhaps the most offensive four-letter word in the English language is D-U-M-P.
 That's because reporters and the public often use the word as a generic term to refer to virtually any facility that handles hazardous or radioactive wastes.
 In fact, however, a waste facility can be anything from an incinerator to plants that recycle waste or render it harmless through chemical processes.

Some radioactive and hazardous wastes indeed are put in landfills, but Ms. Little contends that even they should not be called "dumps" because they're not the typical solid-waste landfills that come to mind when one hears the word.
 "They're not just holes in the ground at which people back up a truck and let fly," Ms. Little said.
 She made that point Wednesday at a state-sponsored seminar for journalists who report on issues raised by waste management, an increasingly hot topic in North Carolina and nationwide.
 Government officials, environmentalists and average citizens are pondering what to do with dangerous by-products of a vast array of activities — from electrical power generation to the manufacture of atomic weapons, bathroom plumbing fixtures and even shoes.

 Officials say the public has a right to be concerned about the possibility that waste treatment or disposal facilities will be located in their communities. But they say emotion and misunderstanding often impair rational consideration of the issues.
 "The fear outruns the facts most of the time," Ms. Little said. Added Deborah G. Parker, chairperson of the Hazardous Waste Treatment Commission: "The perception, right or wrong, is what gets people stirred up and fired up."
 The officials blame news reports for much of what they call public confusion about waste treatment. For example, they said many news stories don't clarify the difference between hazardous waste, solid waste, and the two types of radioactive waste: high-level and low-level.
 Solid waste includes sewage, municipal refuse and the household trash you take to the county dump.
 Hazardous wastes are usually chemicals that are toxic, reactive, corrosive or flammable but not radioactive. Officials are searching for a place to put a state hazardous-waste treatment facility and have identified 139 potential locations in 41 counties.
 The Legislature has ordered the Hazardous Waste Treatment Commission to complete the search by April 1, but Ms. Parker wants more time to better educate the public.
 Low-level radioactive wastes include contaminated rags, clothing and other materials used in research plus liquids, control rods and other refuse from nuclear power plants.
 High-level radioactive waste includes spent fuel rods from nuclear plants and material used in making nuclear bombs.

Martin Promotes Education Policy

PINEHURST, N.C. (AP)—Gov. Jim Martin told the board of directors of the N.C. Retail Merchants Association that the state must continue to improve its educational opportunities if it wants to compete in the world marketplace.
 "The main weapon these competitors are using against us is education," he said Wednesday night. "They are making sure that their citizens, above all else, have the schooling they need to become productive participants in their nation's economies."
 Martin, a Republican who included funding of the Basic Education Plan in his latest budget proposal, said education must remain North Carolina's first priority.
 "We must recognize that we cannot compete successfully with other states and other nations unless we have an educated, highly skilled work force," he said. "This is basic to everything else we must do to foster growth."

 Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan, a Democrat who may run against Martin in the 1988 gubernatorial race, complimented Martin on his long-range plan for education. But he cautioned that government must be careful in its spending.
 The Basic Education Plan is crucial, he said, because it will "make North Carolina different from other states. But as we prepare leaders for tomorrow, we need to find money for construction (of school buildings)."
 He mentioned recent moves by North Carolina businesses, including RJR Nabisco from Winston-Salem to Atlanta.
 "We cannot ignore the signals that are out there," Jordan said. "This is not the same environment we had in the '70s and early '80s."

School Board Concerned Over Teacher Certification

By The Associated Press
 A study of the way North Carolina trains and certifies its teachers has raised fears among some members of the state Board of Education that it could lose some of its authority to determine who is qualified to be a teacher.
 Last year, a task force of the University of North Carolina Board of Governors studied teacher training programs at the request of the General Assembly.
 It recommended that university education departments and schools emphasize academics, strengthen admission standards and professional training courses, and raise the cutoff score that rising juniors must make on National Teachers Exam to enter a teacher education program. The exam assesses students' ability to communicate and their general knowledge.

 Those recommendations don't worry state board members.
 But several others, especially one suggesting that a professional practices commission be established to certify teachers, raised questions among the three members of the board's personnel committee Wednesday.

 The committee said that establishing certification standards and deciding whether teachers meet those standards are the state board's responsibility.
 Under the task force's recommendation, a new professional practices commission would certify teachers and set standards for certification. It would consist of 14 members, half of whom would be teachers, and the rest would be school administrators.

"Let's talk windows"

Air infiltration is a key measure of window performance. An industry standard specifies that windows allow no more than .50 CFM of air infiltration per foot of crack at a wind velocity of 25 mph. On a double hung window, the most popular, the following windows models are ranked in the order of the least air infiltration:

|---------------------------------|-----|-----|
| Season-all Thermalizer II | .06 | CFM |
| Pella 322424 | .15 | CFM |
| Andersen Perma-Shield Narroline | .17 | CFM |
| Caradco Classic | .30 | CFM |
| Marvin Magnum | .31 | CFM |

Source of test results: product brochures. (CFM=Cubic Feet per Minute)

The issue is not quality, because like Season-all, the above have strong quality reputations. Season-all's windows are made from extruded materials such as aluminum and vinyl which can be made to tighter tolerances with innovative designs to improve energy efficiency. Because wood will warp, extra allowances must be made. How many people have wood windows that open evenly and easily now, as opposed to when the windows were new? Wood windows also help sell a lot of storm windows.

Season-all, the nation's leading replacement window company, is represented by Sash & Sill, Inc. in Eastern North Carolina. Sash & Sill, Inc. would welcome the opportunity to help you solve your window problems and share with you the other benefits of Season-all replacement windows. Call Sash & Sill, Inc. at 756-8992 or visit the showroom at 1528 S. Evans Street in Greenville. Open weekdays 9:00 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. and Saturday from 9:30 a.m. to 1:00 p.m.

FAYETTEVILLE (AP) — CIA operatives in unmarked helicopters flew explosives to rebel units in Nicaragua last year despite a congressional ban on military aid, according to a civilian who says he participated.

Iain Crawford, 30, of Fayetteville — who also has said he briefed fired National Security Council aide Oliver North about a weapons delivery last April — said the unmarked helicopters delivered supplies to contra camps three or four times weekly.

"We flew missions supporting Contras on the ground, dropping equipment ... everything from humanitarian supplies to ammunition," Crawford said Wednesday. Asked if weapons were also dropped, Crawford replied, "I did see quite a few weapons, yes."

Crawford, an 11-year veteran of Special Forces who resigned in 1985, said he was asked to brief three people on April 20 during an airplane trip to Washington. Several months later, Crawford said, he saw North's picture on television and recognized him as one of those briefed.

Extradition

RUTHERFORDTON, N.C. (AP) — A fugitive who lived quietly in Rutherford County for 12 years under an assumed name has surrendered to authorities after a governor's warrant was issued for his return to Colorado.

Donald Smiley, 52, was convicted under the name of Donald Lee Fitzgerald and had served about two years of a seven- to 14-year sentence for forgery and assault with a deadly weapon when he escaped from a Colorado prison in 1965.

Smiley, who has worked as a subcontractor doing electrical, plumbing and carpentry work, has asked for clemency. He said he would like to serve the rest of his time in North Carolina.

Colorado authorities said Smiley would have to go to jail but they hoped some arrangement could be made to prevent him from spending too much time in prison.

Crack Arrest

FAYETTEVILLE (AP) — Authorities say 5½ pounds of crack worth about $500,000 have been seized from a motorist stopped by a state trooper on Interstate 95 in Cumberland County.

State troopers in April began a program to stem the flow of illegal drugs on the interstate. Troopers so far have confiscated more than $2 million in drugs and more than $334,000 in cash and have charged at least 27 motorists with drug offenses, authorities said.

Trooper T.L. Isaacs stopped a car about 1:30 a.m. Monday that was traveling 68 mph in a 55-mph zone. Authorities say Isaacs found 44 packets of crack in the car.

Jean Nicholas Joseph, 27, of Felton, Del., was charged with two counts of trafficking in cocaine, carrying a concealed weapon and speeding, records show.

Joseph was being held in Cumberland County Jail Wednesday on $500,000 bail, authorities said.

Hunting Rules

WADESBORO, N.C. (AP) — Anson County commissioners agreed they couldn't wait for the North Carolina Legislature to require deer hunters to wear "blaze orange" as protection in the woods.

Commissioners passed an ordinance requiring deer hunters to wear a hat, coat or vest made of hunter safety orange material when they carry a gun. The fluorescent clothing helps them stand out in the forest, even at twilight.

In 38 states, including South Carolina, laws require hunters to wear it.

North Carolina has no such law, and six persons died in hunting accidents during the 1986 deer season. Five of the victims were mistaken for game or caught in the line of fire. They were not wearing safety orange.

Federal Clean Water Act Will Pump $329 Million Into Tar Heel Projects

By The Associated Press

North Carolina officials say the state's $329.2 million share of Clean Water Act money freed by an override of President Reagan's veto will pay for scores of projects, including new developments for some towns that have been prohibited from building.

Congress Wednesday overrode Reagan's veto of the $20-billion act, which he had called pork-barrel legislation.

"Some of these smaller communities have been on the (funding) list for 10 years," Walter D. Taft, chief of the state's construction grants section in the division of environmental management, said. "Usually we can only fund 15 or 20 projects, and in some years a Greensboro and a Winston-Salem project might chew up all the money."

All projects are public-wastewater treatment plants or associated facilities, such as pumping stations and collection sewer lines. Most money is for construction or renovation of the plants.

North Carolina officials say this state's needed long-term wastewater projects alone could consume more than 10 percent of the funds allocated to states in the current bill.

North Carolina will receive roughly $43 million per year, said John Blackburn, environmental legislative assistant to Sen. Terry Sanford, D-N.C.

The state needs $907 million just to pay for immediate priorities, Taft said.

"For future needs through the year 2005, we would need an additional $1.4 billion," he added. "They are real projects. These are present and future needs. They are definitely real."

Anticipating the act's passage, state officials are preparing a 1988 list of 25 to 30 projects that would get the $43 million Congress is expected to appropriate for next year, Taft said.

Eure Will Be There

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — On Monday morning, Secretary of State Thad Eure will pull on a familiar pair of hickory-striped trousers, travel to his Capitol office and prepare to open the 1987 session of the North Carolina House of Representatives.

It will be the 26th time Eure has pounded the gavel to open a legislative session — a national record, according to an aide who checked with the Library of Congress. And he has worn the same pair of pants every time, beginning in 1933.

"I called my wife this morning and told her to send them out to be cleaned," Eure said Wednesday. "She said the crease was still in them from two years ago. I told her to send them out anyway."

Eure, 87, was first elected secretary of state in 1936 and has won 12 more consecutive four-year terms. But before that, he opened three sessions as clerk of the House, as was the custom until 1939.

Antidepressants Leading Drug Killer In N. Carolina For 1986

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — Overdoses of antidepressants killed 46 people in North Carolina in 1986, eclipsing deaths due to cocaine and heroin, but falling behind alcohol-related fatalities, says a researcher at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.

"We're not talking about what would normally be called massive overdoses of, say, 100 tablets," said Dr. Arthur McBay, chief toxicologist in the Office of the Chief Medical Examiner and professor of pathology at UNC. "We're talking on the order of only 10 to 20 tablets, and I'm not sure patients or even physicians realize how toxic these drugs can be."

Previously released state figures showed deaths from cocaine climbed more than 100 percent last year over 1985, from 11 to 23. During the same period, heroin-related deaths fell from 15 to seven.

Alcohol, however, remained the biggest killer. Drinking killed 80 people in North Carolina directly and an estimated 3,000 indirectly through automobile accidents, shootings and other accidents, McBay said.

"People forget that alcohol is a horrible drug when used to excess," he said. "As a societal problem, it's probably 10 to 20 times worse than all other drugs combined."

Forty-three of the 46 people killed by antidepressants such as amitriptyline, nortriptyline, doxepine and imipramine were white, and more than half were believed to be suicides, McBay said.

Changes in drug deaths reflect changes in society in many cases, he said.

"I attribute the decline in heroin deaths to a fear of AIDS passed on by contaminated needles," McBay said. "The rise in cocaine deaths may be due to the increasing availability and lower price of the drug and the use of 'crack,' a concentrated form of cocaine."

Deaths from painkillers like Darvon have held steady at 16, while there were six deaths due to barbiturates, continuing the downward trend from the 1970s, when there were as many as 50 deaths a year.

"One reason barbiturate deaths have been dropping is that Valium and Librium have become much more popular as a treatment for anxety and tension," McBay said. "We know there are people who are taking far too much of these compounds, but at least they are relatively safe, and we discovered no deaths from them."

McBay said there were seven deaths from aspirin, three from caffeine in the form of "stay awake pills," three from wood alcohol and one from rubbing alcohol.

Second Marine Force Sails Toward Fleet Off Lebanon

By NORMAN BLACK
AP Military Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The White House sought to dampen speculation that a military strike in the Middle East was in the offing as an amphibious force of 1,900 Marines sailed eastward in the Mediterranean toward a flotilla of U.S. warships off the coast of Lebanon.

Presidential spokesman Marlin Fitzwater told reporters at the White House on Wednesday that he could not rule out the possibility of a military strike, but he went out of his way to discourage talk of such action.

"I can't speculate on any future course of action," he said. "We always do have substantial forces in the area but I would urge (you) not to speculate along those lines."

"The forces are there to protect our strategic interests and to support our friends in the region," he added. "But we would not urge you to jump to any conclusions about any military activities."

Rising tensions in the Middle East and new hostage-takings in Lebanon have prompted the Pentagon in the past two weeks to marshal its battle force in the Mediterranean.

Pentagon officials, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the 1,900 Marines aboard five ships that left Spain on Tuesday would link up with U.S. forces already in the area by Friday.

The sources also disclosed the Navy force already on station is slightly larger than previously thought — including 21 warships, three Marine amphibious ships and four ammunition and oiler support vessels — and that several smaller warships had moved to within 50 to 100 miles of the Lebanese coast.

The main aircraft carrier battle groups were maintaining a standard patrol farther out to sea, the sources said. The carriers Nimitz and Kennedy were conducting routine air operations with their jet fighters remaining in the skies over the carriers and not venturing toward land.

Pentagon officials, as did Fitzwater, repeated assertions that no orders had been issued to the Navy force to prepare for a military strike. One official said the Kennedy was still scheduled to pay a port call this weekend at Haifa, Israel, although he cautioned those plans could change.

The arrival of the Marine's second Mediterranean Amphibious Ready Group, or MARG, will bring to eight the number of amphibious ships in the region with about 3,800 Marines aboard, the sources said.

The two carriers are operating together as a combined force but are maintaining a separation of about 100 miles from each other, the sources said. The Navy battle group is under the command of Vice Adm. Kendall E. Moranville, commander of the 6th Fleet, who is at sea with the group aboard his flagship, the guided missile cruiser Belknap.

Each carrier has an air complement of between 85 and 90 planes, primarily F-14 Tomcat jet fighters and A-6 Intruder attack jets.

The Kennedy battle group includes the carrier and two cruisers, three destroyers and four frigates, plus two support vessels. The Nimitz group includes the carrier and two cruisers, two destroyers, five frigates and two support ships.

The Belknap, as the flagship, operates with the two carrier groups, but is counted separately, bringing to five the number of cruisers now in the region.

Retired Navy Man Accused Of Spying

SAN DIEGO (AP) — A former Navy radioman faces court-martial on charges of selling classified information while employed at a strategic communications center in the Philippines.

Formal charges were announced Wednesday against Michael H. Allen, 53, who was arrested in the Philippines Dec. 4 and returned to San Diego for prosecution. He will be tried in a general court-martial and faces maximum punishment of life in prison, said Senior Chief Petty Officer Fred Larsen, a Navy spokesman.

Allen, who retired from the Navy in 1972, worked as a civilian clerk at the Cubi Point telecommunications center, one of the Navy's most important radio facilities in the Pacific region, handling message traffic for ships, aircraft carriers and submarines.

A native of Ponchatoula, La., Allen enlisted in the Navy in 1950 and served 22 years until his retirement with the rank of radioman senior chief.

The Navy has said there is no evidence he engaged in espionage during that time.

Although Allen was a civilian government employee, he can be tried by court-martial because of his prior status in the military.

Allen is charged under the Uniform Code of Military Justice with wrongfully copying and removing confidential material from the Naval Telecommunications Center at Cubi Point; communicating and delivering to foreign officials classified and unclassified information developed by U.S. military forces; and wrongfully soliciting another person to commit espionage against the United States.

Armed National Guardsmen Shock Students With Gunfire

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — The National Guard said its soldiers stormed into high schools firing blank ammunition to promote patriotism, but some students said they were more frightened than inspired.

"We weren't expecting anything like that. They scared and surprised everybody," Mark Jerrolds, a sophomore at Doyle High School, said Wednesday after 10 helmeted soldiers from the Tennessee Army National Guard fired blanks in the school's gymnasium before a patriotism speech was delivered.

"The sound system was bad, but at the end everybody sort of got patriotic, although a lot of people said it was stupid to have guns," he said. "All the soldiers had their faces painted in camouflage. At the end, they passed out little American flags that you can pin on your shirt."

Officials said Doyle was one of three east Tennessee schools that had the guard rallies.

At Fulton High School in Knoxville, students screamed and shouted when soldiers burst onto an auditorium stage and fired blanks. The 700 students knew beforehand of the program, but said they did not know what to expect.

However, they cheered after Sgt. Major Bob Gregory, leader of the guard's Delta Team, told them, "This was just a scenario. It's not for real."

At the end of the rally, students were asked to stand, raise their fists and shout, "Hooray."

Sgt. Randy Smith of the guard said the rallies are not geared toward finding recruits but toward inspiring patriotism. The programs have been used at several Tennessee high schools with approval of school principals, he said.

Fulton High Principal Winston Davis said the rally was a good history lesson for the students.

"I feel the students need to understand why we have the freedoms that we have today," Davis said. "For the most part it's because our ancestors in the past are willing to take up arms and defend them like that."

The American Civil Liberties Union said it will look into the practice.

"It seems inappropriate. We will be looking into it," said Hedy Weinberg, executive director of the Tennessee ACLU in Nashville.

Davis said he saw the program's plans in advance and approved because "with a high school group ... it takes a little showmanship."

But Ms. Weinberg said patriotism can be taught in other ways.

"If assemblies could be used to celebrate the Bill of Rights or the Constitution, we'd create a better atmosphere for patriotism," she said.

McAuliffe Censored

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — Christa McAuliffe upset White House officials when she praised the Kennedys and later toned down her political remarks, according to a new book about the space agency.

Joseph J. Trento wrote in "Prescription for Disaster" that Mrs. McAuliffe expressed admiration in a newspaper interview for President Kennedy and the Kennedy family.

"That made the White House upset," former NASA administrator James Beggs is quoted as saying. Michael Deaver, then a White House adviser, called and "told me to tell her not to talk," said Beggs.

The former administrator said, "I told the folks down at the astronaut office to say, 'Look, Christa, we can't tell you not to talk to the press ... but recognize the fact that you are in a very sensitive position politically and try not to be partisan.'"

The Concord, N.H., teacher selected to be the first ordinary citizen in space "observed that very carefully," in later interviews, said Beggs, who stepped down as administrator before Challenger exploded on Jan. 28, 1986, killing Mrs. McAuliffe and six other people.

U.S., Canada Agree On Niagara Clean-Up

TORONTO (AP) — A U.S.-Canadian agreement to cut in half the flow of toxic chemicals into the Niagara River by 1996 will help ensure the maintenance of a great natural resource, a U.S. official said.

Chiefs of environmental agencies for both countries signed a declaration of intent Wednesday to clean up the Niagara, one of the world's most polluted waterways and site of the famous falls.

"It's a lesson in what happens when neighbors dump garbage on one another's front lawn," said Canadian Environment Minister Tom McMillan.

An estimated nine metric tons of toxic chemicals enter the river daily come from American industries and dumps. Canada is alarmed because the river flows into Lake Ontario, which supplies drinking water to 4.5 million Canadians.

"We are committed to working with our counterparts in Canada in ensuring that the river, and the Great Lakes as a whole, are restored as a great world natural resource should be maintained," said Lee Thomas, administrator of the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency.

The two countries will share information on toxic chemicals entering the river on the U.S.-Canadian border, and hold each other to account for cleaning them up.

Henry G. Williams, New York State commissioner for environmental conservation, and Jim Bradley, Ontario environment minister, who also signed the accord, have much of the responsibility for enforcing the clean-up. Most of the cost will be borne by industries that caused the pollution, they said.

Canada sought a U.S. commitment to excavate toxic waste dumps rather than contain or extract contaminants from sites such as Hyde Park, which belongs to Occidental Chemical Corp. The EPA argued excavation was dangerous, technically difficult and costly.

Composer Challenges 'Chariots'

LONDON (AP) — A Greek composer who claims the theme music of the 1981 award-winning movie "Chariots of Fire" was plagiarized from his work told a court he didn't complain earlier because he had forgotten his own composition.

Stavros Logarides, in a suit which began this week, claims that the theme music for the film was copied from a song "City of Violets" he wrote for a 1975 television series.

The movie theme was written by Vangelis, who uses a single name professionally but whose real name is Evangelos Papathanasiou.

Logarides told the judge that after "Chariots of Fire" came out he did not relate the theme tune by Vangelis to his work "because I could not remember it that much."

Also, the 33-year-old Logarides said, he did not hear the film tune "consciously" until 1982, about the same time a TV producer pointed out to him its similarity to "City of Violets."

Both works were played in court. The bewigged Judge Sir John Whitford sat surrounded by electric pianos, synthesizers, mixing desks and other equipment.

EMI Publishing Music Ltd., which issue Logarides' music, offered expert testimony claiming that a key four-note phrase in both pieces was identical.

Vangelis, 37, maintains he did not hear the Logarides work until after composing the film tune.

Logarides claims he played his song for Vangelis in a London recording studio in 1976. But Vangelis' attorney, Robin Jacob, said Logarides did not play "City of Violets" during that session.

Lawmakers Vow To Close Tax Loopholes

AP Tax Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Trying to decide between a pleasure boat and a yacht? Go with the yacht, call it your second home and claim a full deduction for the interest. Chances are that if you pick a mere boat, your interest deduction will be limited — or if you wait too long, eliminated. That's one of the results of the landmark 1986 tax overhaul, and some lawmakers are vowing to change it. Why, Sen. John C. Danforth, R-Mo., asked at a Finance Committee session Wednesday, should interest on a yacht be completely deductible while loans for education, automobiles and medical expenses will be non-deductible once the new law is fully in effect? J. Roger Mentz, assistant secretary of Treasury for tax policy, told the committee he would have no objection if Congress eliminated the deduction for yachts claimed as second homes. Sen. John Chafee, R-R.I., whose state makes more yachts than any other, saw it differently. The yacht provision "is not a scandalous thing," he protested, adding that "there's been so much gobbling up of land in this country" that the government should praise — not condemn — somebody who opted to live on water. For many years, the tax laws have permitted yacht owners to claim their vessels as a second home and fully deduct the mortgage interest. As long as the boat has cooking and toilet facilities, Chafee said, it can be considered a home. The new law continues that provision, while reducing or eliminating several other benefits that were deemed to be unfair to most taxpayers. The law gradually eliminates deduction of consumer interest, including loans for education, automobiles and boats that are not homes. But the owner of a yacht-home may skirt that restriction by borrowing against the value of the vessel — taking out a second mortgage — and, within limits, using the proceeds for any purpose and still deduct the interest.

This provision was not inadvertent; Danforth and others noted it when the Senate debated the bill last September. Danforth, who voted against the bill, offered this scenario: "Joe Doak ... goes out and borrows money to pay for his wife's hospital bill. He cannot deduct it. Mr. Gotrocks has a 60-foot yacht. He can borrow against that yacht and he can deduct the interest payments against the yacht and use the proceeds to do anything he wants...." The yacht provision is one of several items in the new law that are candidates for change this year. At Wednesday's Finance Committee session, there was broad agreement on the need to correct a provision whose impact goes far beyond what was intended. The result is a classical example of what has become known as a loophole — one that is so big it could lose $20 billion in revenue over five years. The provision was sponsored by the since-retired Sen.

Russell B. Long, D-La., a vigorous champion of tax breaks for employers who turn over a share of the business to their workers through an employee stock ownership plan or ESOP. The 1986 law allows the estate of a deceased employer to avoid estate taxes on half the proceeds of stock sold to employees. This, it was estimated last year, would cost the government about $300 million over five years. Last Jan. 5, only four days after the provision took effect, the Internal Revenue Service saw the potential for a huge revenue loss and directed that the stock must have been owned by the deceased on the day of death. This ruling was aimed at ensuring that the estate did not use an after-death purchase of stock as a tax-avoidance device. "This was an obvious mistake," Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, chairman of the committee, said of the loophole. He and Mentz served notice to lawyers that they should expect the provision to be changed.

Rifle Lobby Will Oppose Proposal Requiring Waiting Period On Guns

By JAMES HANNAH
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The National Rifle Association has drawn a bead on legislation that would require a seven-day waiting period for the purchase of handguns, hoping to shoot down the proposal.

NRA spokesman David Conover said the group will oppose bills introduced Wednesday by Sen. Howard Metzenbaum and Rep. Edward Feighan, both D-Ohio. The measures are designed to give local law enforcement officials time for background checks of potential buyers before they can pick up their guns.

"There isn't any reason under the sun ... why there shouldn't be a seven-day delay when you want to buy a handgun," said Metzenbaum, a Senate Judiciary Committee member.

Metzenbaum said the measures are aimed at detecting people who are mentally ill or have criminal records. In addition, it would provide a cooling-off period for gun purchasers who are angry or upset, he said.

"It doesn't affect those who want to go hunting," said Metzenbaum. "It doesn't deter a homeowner who wants a gun for his or her home."

Conover said the group will oppose the legislation with all the resources it can muster.

He called the proposal a waste of scarce law enforcement resources and said studies have shown that most felons acquire handguns from fences or drug dealers or through theft and do not fill out forms.

"The only people going to be inconvenienced and affected are citizens law-abiding enough to go through the procedures in the first place," said Conover. And he said the system would lead to a nationwide computer file containing the most sensitive material in people's lives.

On the other side of the issue, representatives of the National Association of Police Organizations, the Fraternal Order of Police and Handgun Control, Inc. attended a news conference to support the legislation.

Sarah Brady, wife of presidential press secretary James Brady and a Handgun Control board member, said the organization will make the legislation its "flagship bill" in this Congress.

Brady and President Reagan were shot outside a Washington hotel March 30, 1981. John Hinckley was found innocent by reason of insanity in the shooting and has been confined to a federal institution.

"This shooting could have been prevented if legislation such as that proposed here had been in force in 1981," said Mrs. Brady.

She said Hinckley purchased the gun in a matter of minutes at a Dallas pawnshop after using a false address on the federal form.

"A simple check would have stopped him," she said. "John Hinckley might well have been in jail instead of on his way to Washington."

Fran Lipsie, of Dallas, said her 22-year-old son shot and killed himself last March after purchasing a handgun at a Dallas gun store. Previously, he had been in a psychiatric hospital for more than a year, she said.

"The easy access he had in purchasing the gun made it a fast and effective way for him to end his life," said Ms. Lipsie. "A waiting period for handgun purchases might have given him time to reflect on his actions."

In a related action, Rep. Robert Mrazek, D-N.Y., introduced a bill that would authorize a ban on the manufacture or import of firearms that cannot be detected by state-of-the-art security devices, such as X-ray machines and metal detectors. Under the measure, the ban could be put into effect until the security devices are improved to detect the weapons.

Greyhound's Fares Bring Out Crowds

More than 25,000 people will travel to practically anywhere in the nation this spring with 59-cent Greyhound bus tickets bought in a one-hour, 12-city promotion that left customers grateful and ticket agents with sore feet.

The sales in Southern cities only Wednesday caused disappointment to some Northerners, but brought out the best in others.

Jack Hattoway said he didn't mind waiting along with thousands of others in Dallas so he could be one of the promotional tickets to Charlotte, N.C.

"I've got a family I haven't seen in three years, so for that you can't beat it. It's going to be an awful big help to a lot of people like myself and others who haven't been able to get where they wanted to go," he said.

As 2,000 people waited in New Orleans, Willie and Alex Williams gave up their spots at the head of a line to let 66-year-old Thelma Hinton become the first person in the city to buy a ticket.

Mrs. Hinton said she arrived at midnight from Opelousas, 120 miles away, six hours after the Williams brothers started their wait. "They sure were some nice people," she said, to let her go ahead for a ticket to Alabama to visit her grandchild.

Willie Williams said he was going to Oakland, Calif., and Alex said he was planning a trip to San Antonio, Texas.

In addition to New Orleans, the 59-cent promotional fares went on sale at noon Wednesday at Greyhound stations in Atlanta; Miami, Orlando and Jacksonville, Fla.; Memphis and Nashville, Tenn.; Birmingham, Ala.; and Houston, Fort Worth, Dallas and San Antonio, Texas.

The sale ended at 1 p.m., but everyone in line by then qualified to buy two tickets good for travel between March 6 and April 5.

"Can't beat it for $1.18," said Jim Edwards in Atlanta referring to a round-trip ticket to San Francisco.

Herb Doherty, spokesman for the Phoenix, Ariz.-based Greyhound, said Wednesday that more than 25,000 of the 59-cent tickets were sold. He said the 12 cities were picked by Southern Greyhound Lines, one of four regional divisions, and the division that came up with the idea.

The promotional tickets will carry passengers far beyond the region.

"You name it, that's where they want to go; all over," said Orlando station manager Don Hutsell. "There's no indication of the general direction; Ohio, California, Iowa, New York."

Koop Gets Hate Mail

VIRGINIA BEACH, Va. (AP) — Surgeon General C. Everett Koop says he has been barraged with hate mail from fundamentalist Christians over his report calling for sex education to curb the spread of AIDS.

"No conservative Christian leader, no conservative Christian publication, to my knowledge, has been critical of the surgeon general's report or of me, but many constituents of those denominations and movements have been," Koop said Wednesday after appearing on "The 700 Club" on the Christian Broadcasting Network.

"I've gotten a tremendous amount of hate mail," he said. "It's vituperative. It again assumes, you know, that I've departed the faith, whatever that means."

Kremlin Abandons Ban On Nuclear Arms Tests

By CAROL J. WILLIAMS
Associated Press Writer
MOSCOW (AP) — Soviet officials today declared the Kremlin is abandoning its self-declared ban on nuclear testing, but declined to say when the next Soviet nuclear explosion would occur.

Deputy Foreign Minister Vladimir Petrovsky told reporters at a news conference that the decision to resume testing after the first U.S. nuclear test of this year was "dictated by consideration of our own security."

Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev said in December that Soviet testing would resume after the first U.S. test explosion of 1987, and called on the United States to join in a joint moratorium.

The Soviet Union has observed a unilateral ban since Aug. 6, 1985, the 40th anniversary of the U.S. bombing of Hiroshima.

The U.S. Department of Energy conducted an underground nuclear test in Nevada on Tuesday, drawing condemnation from the Soviets and anti-nuclear groups.

U.S. officials have defended the continuation of testing during the Soviet moratorium, saying tests are necessary as long as the West relies on nuclear weapons for defense. The tests are also connected to research for a space-based anti-missile system.

"With this provocative step the American administration has rejected the example of the Soviet Union and refused to convert the unilateral moratorium into a two-way measure which could be used the basis to stop the arms race," Petrovsky said.

Asked when the first Soviet nuclear test would be conducted, Petrovsky replied only that "this will be resolved by the Soviet government."

He and the other officials present for a discussion on "alternatives to the arms race" stressed the Kremlin's desire to open full-scale negotiations with the United States on a joint test ban or to agree to interim measures, such as limits on the size of nuclear detonations.

In Geneva, Switzerland, the chief Soviet delegate to the Geneva Conference on Disarmament, Yuri K. Nazarkin, said the test "constituted an open challenge to the world community which is seeking to remove the threat of nuclear war."

Nazarkin said it seemed that the test was "maliciously timed to coincide with the opening" of the 1987 session of the 40-nation conference.

A top U.S. arms control official, Kenneth Adelman, denied this.

Blast Kills 17 Miners

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Polish leader Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski praised 17 coal miners killed in an underground methane gas explosion as "brave, diligent people, committed to their hard and esteemed profession."

The blast Wednesday in a 150-year-old mine also left 22 people injured, six of them seriously, officials said.

The accident occurred in Myslowice, a town near the city of Katowice in the coal-rich Silesian district of southern Poland, about 150 miles southwest of Warsaw.

Sixty-four miners nearing the end of an overnight shift were working 1,650 feet beneath the surface when the blast occurred about 5:30 a.m., said Andrzej Zajac, an official with the Ministry of Mining.

Rescue crews worked for more than seven hours to remove the bodies and free 47 trapped miners, the official news agency PAP reported.

A special commission from the Supreme Office of Mining has been appointed to find out what touched off the methane explosion, Zajac said. Methane gas collects naturally in coal mines.

Jaruzelski and Prime Minister Zbigniew Messner expressed condolences to the victims' families, PAP reported.

"The tragic accident ... has torn away from among us, from among the miners' ranks brave, diligent people, committed to their hard and esteemed profession," Jaruzelski said. "Their unexpected death on duty has caused general sorrow and pain."

Messner, who was in Katowice for a local Communist Party meeting, visited the accident site, PAP said.

Aid Plan Called Inadequate

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration is proposing a $33 million increase in aid to South Africa's impoverished neighbors, but congressional critics say it's not enough.

"It is our bipartisan feeling that it should be more," Rep. Julian C. Dixon, D-Calif., said Wednesday after the administration proposal was made public.

Rep. Howard Wolpe, D-Mich., chairman of the House subcommittee on African affairs and a supporter of a proposal for $700 million in aid to the region over the next five years, said the administration commitment "falls far short."

Without increased aid, they said, South Africa with its hostile policies toward its black-governed neighbors will continue to dominate the region.

Details of the administration's proposal were being shared today with the potential recipient countries, members of the Southern African Development Coordination Conference. The organization is meeting in Gaborone, Botswana, with Western donor nation representatives, including Peter McPherson, administrator of the U.S. Agency for International Development.

The aim of the aid is to help Botswana, Mozambique, Zambia and other "frontline" nations reduce their economic dependency on white-ruled South Africa, notably to cut the need to ship most of their goods through South African ports.

In addition to transportation improvements, the money would be used to spur private enterprise and to help the countries in the region increase trade among themselves.

"Historically, the region around South Africa has had too much of an economic dependency on South Africa," McPherson said in an interview in Washington before he left for the conference.

Under the plan, the conference would get $36 million in the current fiscal year and $57 million in the fiscal year that begins Oct. 1. These amounts are in addition to roughly $100 million the United States had planned to give the regional group during the period.

Asked to respond to assertions the donation would be too small, McPherson said, "We have an economic assistance package of about $7 billion worldwide and enormous needs in a lot of places, and we feel confident that the balance we've struck is a good one."

He also said the United States is looking to other Western countries for the bulk of the assistance to the region.

"We regard ourselves as a player, but not in any way dominant, among the donors in this region," he said. "We see ourselves helping in a catalytic kind of way, but in no way providing a very large portion of the resources."

He urged South Africa to look favorably upon the aid because "the economic growth and political stability of these countries in the region is important for South Africa. They sell an enormous amount to each other. It's very much of a two-way trade operation."

Soviets Launch Major Offensive In Afghanistan

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (AP) — A second wave of Soviet troops prepared to attack rebel supply routes in Afghanistan after thousands of Afghan and Soviet forces launched a major offensive against guerrilla bases near the Pakistani border, sources said.

About 12,000 soldiers, including elite commandos and paratroopers, attacked rebel positions Wednesday around Zhawar in Afghanistan's Paktia province about 20 miles from the Pakistani border, according to guerrilla officials and other sources.

Soviet forces also attacked guerrilla bases in the Gagi area of Paktia province.

The major offensive came despite a cease-fire called Jan. 15 by Afghanistan's government, which is backed by an estimated 115,000 Soviet troops. Guerrilla leaders rejected the truce, and ordered their fighters to step up attacks.

Western diplomatic sources said

Tuesday the cease-fire appeared to have collapsed.

About 2,000 guerrillas faced Wednesday's assault in and around Zhawar and several hundred more fought in the Gagi area, sources said. Guerrilla reinforcements were trying to get through.

Guerrilla fighters had planted thousands of mines to hold off attacking troops, and at least six Afghan soldiers were killed in mine explosions, the guerrilla officials said.

They said their forces suffered losses, but there were few details on casualties. One official said three guerrillas were killed and eight were wounded in artillery attacks in one area Wednesday.

The Afghan Information Center, which monitors events in Afghanistan from the Pakistani border city of Peshawar, confirmed the guerrilla reports.

"The fighting is very severe. The guerrillas are coming under heavy attack. The situation is serious," said center director Sayed Majrooh.

Majrooh said a second Soviet force of about 6,000 soldiers was building up close to the Pakistani border in Ningrahar province and appeared to be preparing for an attack on key guerrilla supply routes.

Guerrilla officials said scores of Soviet and Afghan transport planes were ferrying troops and supplies into the government's main base at Khost in Paktia and they feared the attack would be expanded.

The Afghan government rarely allows Western journalists into Afghanistan. Reports from inside the country often cannot be checked independently.

Zhawar, a sprawling underground guerrilla base, was captured by Soviet forces after heavy fighting in April. The Soviet troops later pulled back and the guerrillas since have attempted to reconstruct the facility.

Mothers Unfairly Take Blame For Way Children Turn Out

By MARY JO KOCHAKIAN
L.A. Times-Washington Post
News Service

Teen-age pregnancy, suicide, drug abuse, cult membership — when such crises occur, you can bet there are mothers torturing themselves. "It's my fault," they think. "What did I do wrong?" they ask themselves over and over.

"It's just incredible how mother takes the blame for everything that happens in the family," says Jo Brans, co-author with Margaret Taylor Smith of "Mother, I Have Something to Tell You" (Doubleday, $17.95).

Mothers who see themselves as omnipotent determinants of their children's characters are operating under an unfair burden, Brans says, and a rather egotistic one at that. "It's as if you're playing God with your child's life."

"One of the things we hope this book will do is get mother off the hook," Brans says. Experts differ in their approaches to the question of maternal influence, but Brans holds to the theories of Jerome Kagan, a Harvard University professor and author of "The Nature of the Child."

In a nutshell, Brans says, "It's not in fact what the mother does; it's how the child interprets what the mother does."

"Successful mothering depends on a mysterious amalgam of personality and circumstance," Brans writes. "What works with one child will not work with his sister."

Overcoming unfounded guilt is but one hurdle for mothers whose children choose destructive behaviors or non-traditional lifestyles that jar the mothers' sensibilities.

"Mother, I Have Something to Tell You" is based on interviews with traditional women whose sense of self-worth was deeply invested in their children. They faced such situations as their children's becoming drug addicts, suffering mental illness, having abortions, becoming anorexic or disclosing their homosexuality.

From the interviews, Brans identified six stages through which the mothers passed before establishing healthy relationships with their grown children:

- Shock — when the mother is confronted with the behavior.
- Attention — seeing the child's true nature, discarding the idealized notion of who the child is.
- Action — seeking help from family, friends and experts.
- Detachment — learning to accept the limits of responsibility.
- Autonomy — recognizing independence from the child.
- Connection — establishing a new relationship with the child based on mutual respect.

Perhaps the most difficult part of the process, Brans says, is detachment. "What amazed me as a mother myself was the ability to eventually say, 'This is my child, and my child is not me' ... to quit thinking of children as ego satisfaction but to still maintain those connections with the children. They eventually wind up at a new level, an adult-to-adult level. That's really what almost all mothers want."

Should a mother find herself in such a crisis situation, Brans says, it is essential for her to look to others. "One problem was that some of the mothers depended on only one source of help," Brans says.

A determined person can hasten the process, Brans says. "Some of the mothers were really hung up in the shock stage a lot longer than they needed to be," she says. Brans advises: "Try to detach one's self as much as possible emotionally. The trick is focusing on the child rather than the mother's own feeling ... Look at this kid and see what this kid is saying."

If the mother is "really paying attention," Brans says, "action will suggest itself."

"Mothers have a very solid instinct if they just listen to themselves and trust their own judgment."

"Once that detachment comes, then that separation of responsibility comes, and the connection that's forged exists on a totally different level," Brans says. "It's not the mother with a dependent child, but the connection of two respecting and independent adults. Heaven knows what all parents want is for their children to become happy, independent and productive. Then we can be friends with them."

Warning Repeated On Refrigerators

Now the problem: I'm in a new area with new friends and peers, and none are aware of my past. I have fallen in love with a wonderful young lady and we're talking marriage. She is not aware of this episode in my life, and as we move closer to marriage I don't know what to say or how to say it. How should I go about letting her know about my past mistake? I just can't find the words. — CHICKEN

DEAR CHICKEN: Try this: "When I was in college I fathered a child by an older woman. Marriage was out of the question, but I faced up to my responsibility and agreed to pay child support."

Be prepared for some follow-up questions such as: "Have you ever seen your child?" "Do you plan to have a relationship with this child?" And many more. Your future wife has the right to know the extent of your involvement, and the sooner you tell her, the better.

DEAR ABBY: My prayers and suggestions culled from my experience as a registered nurse have done little to aid my suffering choir director at church, who sweats profusely and noticeably while conducting us.

Who can snicker in God's house as your conductor mops his brow between movements of music, when you are facing the audience or congregation? At intermission, he pleads, "Does anyone have a cure for sweating?" The poor man looks as though he has been standing under a shower!

Can you offer a graceful solution to this awkward dilemma? — PRAYERFUL TENOR IN PHOENIX

DEAR TENOR: Prayers won't help. Your choir director is suffering from "hyperhidrosis" — excessive sweating. He should consult a family physician, dermatologist or endocrinologist (gland specialist) — all or none of whom may be able to help him. Sweating is a natural function that can be controlled to some degree by medication, but some possible side effects could be worse than sweating, in which case it might be healthier to just sweat it out.

Warning Repeated On Refrigerators

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I appreciate your alerting readers to various dangers — the most recent concerning children riding on escalators.

Several years ago you cautioned readers who stored their old refrigerators in their garages or basements to either turn the refrigerator with the door facing the wall, or to remove the refrigerator door so that small children could not crawl into them and have the door close behind them and suffocate to death.

Recently, three young children were found dead in a refrigerator stored in a barn. Please repeat that warning. It could save lives. — CON-CETTA CICERELLA, PITT-SBURGH

DEAR CONCETTA: Thanks for the reminder. Over the years I have published this warning many times, and I am grieved when I read that this type of accident has occurred again.

Readers, if you see a temporarily stored or discarded refrigerator or freezer in your neighborhood — or anywhere else — you could prevent a possible tragedy by calling the potential safety hazard to the attention of the owner, or telephoning the police department for prompt attention in eliminating the danger.

CONFIDENTIAL TO W.W. IN SANTA ANA: "There's a time to wink as well as to see" (Benjamin Franklin). Wise man, Ben. You should have been seeing instead of winking.

DEAR ABBY: Four years ago, while I was still in college, I got a young woman (older than I) pregnant. Marriage was out of the question, but I faced up to my responsibility and agreed to pay child support. I have since moved 500 miles away and have been paying child support ever since.

Three Courtesies Remain Intact

At Wits End

Erma Bombeck

Recently, the world took a backward glance at the women's movement. In poking through 20 years of rubble, changes never thought possible were unearthed. Family structures, a new timetable for procreation, manners, morals, assignment of roles, all had undergone drastic surgery.

Only three traditional customs remained intact in the war of the sexes that both sides refused to give up:

- Men would continue to open doors for women.
- Men would continue to help women with their coats.
- Men would continue to help women in and out of cars.

It's an enigma when you think about it. Women who insisted doors to better jobs swing both ways still stand in front of their front door until it is pushed open. Women who host big business luncheons and flash a full deck of plastic cards wait until a waiter helps them into their coats. Women who build cars in the daytime still want someone to open the doors on them at night.

It makes one reflect on how and why these three little courtesies survived the long march to equality. What is so important about them that 90 percent of the persons queried, whether they were male, female, married, single, young or old, fought against their being casualties of independence?

Maybe it's because they were just that. Courtesies. When simple bits of thoughtfulness and respect for one another go, we don't have much left.

All three of these acts transcend duty, expectations and rules. They are just something a man does. It's like a woman who puts the car seat back when her husband has longer legs than hers or who gives him the egg without the broken yolk. She wants to do it.

As a woman who believes in equality under the law, I see nothing sexist about being assisted with a door or a coat. I have never felt so insecure about myself that I perceived someone was smothering me, being over-protective or was asserting dominance over me by holding my coat.

Sometimes people overreact like an elevator of psychiatrists who, when another one stepped on the elevator and said, "Good morning," the others said, "What did he mean by that!"

Heaven knows this country could use a resurgence of manners and courtesies. I've heard children with mouths like sewers, seen table manners that could make you give up eating, viewed conduct behind the wheel of a car that is reprehensible, and behavior in movie houses that defies comment.

Maybe that's why we cling to those three little vignettes of courtesy. They serve as a reminder that no matter what our potential and how much of a hurry we are in to get there ... without courtesy toward one another, we don't really have a lot.

Our children have to see it and they have to hear it. Thank you. (Now you say, "You're welcome.")

Flowers Add A Bright Touch

The calendar may say winter, but you can bring springtime into your home with a lovely basket of crocheted flowers. Have fun making an aster, a mum, a spider mum, a rose and a carnation with cotton crochet thread in yellow, yellow ombre, blue, white and rose. Mount them on wire stems to create a beautiful bouquet.

The five different designs will have many other uses. Tack a flower or two to simple place mats. Add a new look to a basic sweater or a plain straw shoulder bag. Add them to a pillow. The list is almost endless. Just let your imagination go.

To obtain directions for making the Crocheted Spring Bouquet, send your request for Leaflet No. Z-020187 with $2 and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to: Pat Trexler Crafts, The Daily Reflector, P.O. Box 419148, Kansas City, Mo. 64141.

Pat's Pointers

Or you may order Kit No. C-020187 by sending a check or money order for $12.95 to Pat Trexler Crafts at the same address. The kit price includes enough pastel crochet cotton and cloth-covered wire stems to complete 16 to 20 flowers.

Dear Pat: My sister is crocheting leg warmers and would like to finish each end in ribbing. Is there any way she can do this without crocheting a separate ribbed section and then having to attach it? She would like to crochet the ribbing in as she goes. — Gail M., Princeton Junction, N.J.

I have found a reasonable substitute for the separately crocheted type of ribbing. Working directly onto the crocheted piece, I alternate double crochet post stitches with half-double crochet stitches all across each row.

To be more specific, first work one row of double crochet, having an uneven number of stitches on the row. Chain two and turn. On the next row, work one half-double crochet in the first stitch and then work a front post double crochet on the next stitch if the front of your work is facing you. Work a back post double crochet if the wrong side of your work is facing you.

The "post" is simply the vertical bar formed by each double crochet stitch. To work a double crochet, you insert the hook from front to back through the top loops of a stitch from the previous row. To work a front post double crochet, however, after wrapping the yarn around the hook, you insert the hook under the post — or vertical bar — from right to left, passing under the post and coming out on the other side of it. From this position, you then complete the double crochet stitch.

To work a back post double crochet, you work in the same way except that you take the hook to the back of your work, insert it in the open space to the right of the post and pass it over the post, bringing it out on the wrong side, completing the double crochet as before.

When the right side of the work is facing you, use the front post stitch; when the wrong side is facing you, use the back post stitch. Always work the post stitches over the post stitch of the previous rows and the half-doubles over the half-doubles of the previous row.

When I was experimenting trying to develop this idea, I used full double crochets between each post stitch, but found that it worked much better to use the half-doubles instead. For those who might not know, a half-double crochet is worked like a full double crochet to the point where you have three loops on the hook. You complete the stitch by pulling the yarn through all three loops at once.

The reason for suggesting that you work this ribbing on an odd number of stitches is that it works best to have a half-double crochet at each end of the work. After the first half-double stitch, you alternate post stitches and half-doubles to the end.

Finally, I recommend that you use a hook three sizes smaller than that used for the main part of your project.

1986 Junior Miss Is Program Contestant

Mary Elizabeth Beckman is representing Pitt County in the 1986 North Carolina Junior Miss Program being sponsored by the Greensboro Jaycees.

The week of rehearsals and activities started last Saturday and concludes Friday and Saturday at 8 p.m. in War Memorial Auditorium in Greensboro.

"This is not a beauty pageant. It is a program seeking the well-rounded individual; not just someone who's pretty," Miss Beckman said.

Selection of the Junior Miss is based on the following criteria, scholastic achievement; poise and appearance; physical fitness; creative and performing arts, and the judges interview. The criteria are applicable for local, state and national levels of competition.

Miss Beckman has chosen "Meditation" (from Thais) as her violin solo. She will be wearing a black taffeta skirt, white ruffled blouse and a blue sequin belt for the presentation. The poise and appearance presentation will be enhanced by her choice of a turquoise silk organza gown styled with a fitted waist, full skirt and ruffled off-shoulder neckline.

During this week in Greensboro the following activities are scheduled, a reception for parents, host families and candidates; a beach party; WFMY-TV taping; eye makeup demonstration; movie; a historical tour; dinner by Greensboro Jaycees, and an awards banquet on Sunday morning.

A senior at Arendell Parrott Academy, Miss Beckman is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Edward Beckman III of Farmville. Upon graduation she plans to attend Salem College, Winston-Salem, to study in pre-law.

proposed changes and suggested there are good arguments for both district and at-large elections sides.

He said that districts could result in "more minority representation, (both) black and Republican (and) less expensive campaigns."

People filing at-large seats, he said, should have "an interest in the community at large ... a county interest."

"As for the best possible system," Eamon suggested "at least" six districts.

"At-large? That's a political question. You can make a good argument," for three at-large. Let's hope that in the end, we will all come out winners," Eamon said.

The only other speaker at the hearing, Steve Blades, said he appeared on behalf of the University Neighborhood Association. Blades said "our concern" is that a small portion of the neighborhood - 10 to 12 houses - seems to be separated from the rest of the area which is in the proposed 3rd District.

"We'd like to have the 10 or 12 houses taken out of the 1st District and put in District 3," Blades said.

The sixth hearing in the series will be held at 7 o'clock tonight at the A.G. Cox school in Winterville. The final hearing has been scheduled for 7 p.m. Feb. 25 at Third Street School in Greenville.

Youths Held

DENVER (AP) - Four youths suspected of attacking passers-by with golf clubs and knives as part of a gang initiation were being held today in a rash of attacks that left one woman dead, police said.

A fifth suspect was being held for investigation of car theft.

"Everybody that we were looking for in connection with the golf club assaults in the last couple of weeks is in custody," said police spokesman Detective John Wyckoff.

At least 15 such assaults were reported during the last two weeks, and Wednesday's arrests came a few hours after Police Chief Tom Coogan ordered a special task force of 70 officers to investigate the incidents.

"They aren't sneaky thieves," Division Chief Casey Simpson said about the assailants. "They're very brash. They jerk earrings out of ears, yank off necklaces and snatch purses."

Wyckoff said the arrested youths were believed to be members of a gang called the Rolling 30 Crips.

"It's our understanding that to join the Crips, prospective members have to inflict injury," he said.

Gerald Graham, 18, was being held for investigation of first-degree assault, as were three juveniles. The fifth suspect also is a juvenile, Wyckoff said.

Eight people were taken into custody Wednesday night after police acting on a tip staked out a house, but Wyckoff said only three of the eight were held. Two others were arrested Tuesday night shortly after the woman was beaten.

No charges had been filed in the death of the woman who was beaten Tuesday night as she walked home with a cart of groceries.

None of the other victims was seriously hurt, authorities said.

Police said a blunt object was used in the fatal assault, but they have not specified it was a golf club.

Higher Speed Limit May Depend On Any Capitol Hill Compromises

By ALAN FRAM

Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) - Americans may have a 65 mph speed limit and improved highways and mass transit systems in their future, but the House, Senate and President Reagan will have to perfect a three-way balancing act to get there.

The Senate approved a $6.4 billion, four-year package of highway and mass transit assistance Wednesday. But before the money can reach the states and cities, some dramatic differences with a $91 billion, five-year House bill must be smoothed over, and Reagan - who believes the measures are too expensive - must be faced.

Last fall, differences between the House and Senate scuttled transportation assistance and left states clamoring for the aid.

Sen. Quentin Burdick, D-N.D., chairman of the Environment and Public Works Committee, said he did not know what could be done about the president's objections. "We'll have to finish that the best we can," he said.

Suspect Captured

United States has sought since the two nations signed an extradition treaty in 1979. Thirteen have been sent to the United States.

Lehder was born in Colombia to a German father and Colombian mother. She took him to New York City after the couple separated. He was arrested there as a teen-ager on charges of trying to sell 200 pounds of marijuana and sent to a youth detention center for two years.

He returned to Colombia after his release and, in later interviews, boasted of having made his first $1 million by age 23. He bought an island in the Bahamas and, according to Colombian authorities, used it to relay marijuana to the United States.

A self-proclaimed Nazi, Lehder once summoned Colombian journalists to a jungle news conference to protest a 1984 U.S.-Colombia extradition treaty.

He called for a national plebiscite "to see if the people ... want to be the guide of their own destiny ... to defend their sovereignty against North American imperialism."

In Washington, Meese said Lehder's arrest was a major victory in Colombia's war on narcotics trafficking.

"The increased drug interdiction efforts in Colombia are clear evidence of the strength of that country's commitment to this war," Meese said in a statement.

Colombia stepped up its anti-drug efforts after two men on a motorcycle pulled alongside the car of Justice Minister Rodrigo Lara on April 30, 1984, and one killed him with a burst of fire from a submachine gun.

The government says drug czars were responsible for the killing of Lara, who helped arrange the extradition treaty, as well as the killings of a Supreme Court justice on a panel that approved extraditions and about 20 lower court judges who handled drug cases.

President Virgilio Barco said drug traffickers also ordered

Brown's 3-Pointer Lets Clemson Slip By Terps; Blue Devils Slug Virginia

By The Associated Press
Clemson reserve Michael Brown had thrown up two air balls, but he says he didn't think about them as he launched a game-winning 3-pointer with eight seconds left.

"When the game is on the line, I want the ball," Brown, a transfer from Syracuse, said after the 12th-ranked Tigers defeated Maryland 80-79 Wednesday night. "I had a good feeling that it was going in when I released it."

"I wanted the ball more in the second half, but I didn't get it," Brown said. "Just so I get it at the right time."

In the only other Atlantic Coast Conference game Wednesday, 16th-ranked Duke defeated Virginia 75-61.

"Michael's shot was not a set play," Clemson coach Cliff Ellis said. "We just played like it was any other time of the game."

"You have no conscience playing that way," Ellis said, "and some day it may backfire. But we're 2-and-0 playing that way (to the buzzer)."

The Terrapins, who led by as many as 12 points in the first half and then fell behind 70-62, took a 79-77 lead on two field goals by Derrick Lewis, the second with 18 seconds left.

After Brown's go-ahead 3-pointer, Clemson's ninth of the game, Maryland called two timeouts while moving the ball to the front court with three seconds remaining. A 3-point attempt by Dave Dickerson hit off the rim as time expired.

Horace Grant scored 18 of his 27 points in the second half for Clemson, 20-2 and second in the ACC at 6-2.

Lewis paced Maryland, 6-10 and 0-8, with 18 points.

In Durham, the bad blood started before the game and boiled over during the first half in an elbowing incident that both sides agree turned the game around.

In the pre-game introductions, Danny Ferry pulled back his hand when he thought Cavalier Mel Kenney was about to slap it instead of shake it and Kennedy made a kicking motion at him.

"I would have been happy to shake his hand, but I'm not going to leave my hand out there to get hurt," Ferry said. "I tried to shake his hand when we went out to mid-court and he wouldn't do it then. If somebody's going to try and smack my hand ... I'm not going to leave my hand out there for a target."

Then with 5:27 left in the half, Ferry caught an elbow from Tom Sheehey, who was ejected for a flagrant foul. Ferry sank two free throws to break a tie at 31.

"It was a physical game from the very start. We were banging the whole time and I caught an elbow," Ferry said. "It was too bad that things had to work out the way they did in terms of him going out of the game."

Virginia coach Terry Holland said Sheehey has previously been the target for abuse at Duke's Cameron Indoor Stadium and he had to stand up for him.

"It definitely was not an ejection-type foul situation, maybe a foul, maybe a flagrant foul even, but an ejection under the circumstances — absolutely not," Holland said. "I think it was very obvious that he was reacting to something that was done to him. It obviously distracted everyone, including me."

Holland continued to protest Sheehey's ejection until he was called for a technical foul.

"I said 'You took us out of the game. We're out here working our butts off and you took us out of the game,'" Holland said. "I said it as loud as I could say it because I had to above the crowd."

Tommy Amaker scored 14 points to lead Duke, 18-4 and 6-3.

Virginia, 14-6 and 4-4, got 15 points from Andrew Kennedy.

Hurry-Up Rule Wasn't Meant To Affect Outcome

By TOM FOREMAN Jr.
AP Sports Writer

Most rules aren't designed to affect the outcome of a basketball game, and that isn't the intent of the Atlantic Coast Conference's experimental hurry-up rule, says league supervisor of basketball officials Fred Barakat.

"It was meant to speed up the game. It was meant to encourage a spurt of readiness. It was meant to keep our game in a two-hour time period," Barakat said in an interview. "It was meant to get the players out of the huddle promptly — not to decide a game."

The rule, which has been enforced in three games this season, became the focus of a controversy last week at the end of North Carolina State-Virginia battle. Because the Wolfpack's Vinny Del Negro didn't get to the free-throw line in time, Virginia retained possession of the ball under the rule. John Johnson then scored the game-winning basket in a 61-60 victory.

"The officials were very concerned about that exact scenario occurring ... in a conference game and having it (affect) the outcome and their being blamed for it," he said.

Barakat designed the rule at the request of the league coaches, who felt ACC games were getting a little too long and that the coaches themselves may have been contributing to the slowdown. A proposal was presented to the coaches in the summer and agreed to by the coaches, although Barakat emphasized that there were portions of the rule that didn't garner unanimous favor.

"Different coaches presented different arguments," he said. "I'm not going to say every single guy liked every single aspect of it. But we came out as a group supporting it."

According to the rule, when a timeout is taken, the official timer is instructed to sound the horn after 45 seconds have elapsed. Fifteen seconds later, a horn sounds to signal the end of the timeout at which time the team huddles are to be broken up.

The inbounds official signals the ball ready for play, hands the ball to the trigger man or foul shooter, or places the ball on the floor if no one is in position and begins a five-second count.

If there's no free throw shooter in place, the ball is placed on the floor and a 10-second count is started. When the count is started, no player can cross an imaginary plane which intersects the top of the key. To break the count, a player has the option of calling timeout, but only the offense may do so. It was this portion of the rule that Del Negro violated, setting up Virginia's winning basket.

If the defense is not in place at the free throw line — the first two spaces under the basket on either side of the lane — the ball is handed to the free throw shooter who may then make an attempt. If he misses the first attempt, he gets another chance and the defense gets to take its positions.

If neither team is in position, a double violation is called and the ball is awarded to the team designated by the possession arrow at the scorer's table.

"The coaches were pretty confident that they would have no problem assuming the responsibility to get the teams out before that second horn," Barakat said. "That's pretty good in theory. It's another matter in principle."

Because the rule came into play at a crucial moment in the Wolfpack-Cavalier game, N.C. State coach Jim Valvano was upset about the experiment.

"We've lost ball games in a lot of different ways, but this is absurd," Valvano said. "It's an embarrassment to our league."

Barakat said he has not received any phone calls asking him to put the rule in mothballs. But he is already receiving suggestions on how to modify the rule for use in the ACC as well as throughout the NCAA. He said coaches might want to assign someone the duty of keeping an eye on elapsed time during timeouts, and to make sure the official timer isn't starting his countdown too soon.

Unheralded Manager Doesn't Mind Being Out Of Limelight

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

Behind the scenes, seldom noticed by the average fan, an integral part of the East Carolina University basketball team goes about his duties, and doesn't even mind if he's not observed.

"If things go smoothly, and I'm not noticed, I take that as a compliment," said Burt Jenkins, the manager of the Pirates.

Now in his third year with the team, the Williamston native, is grateful for the opportunity to work with the Pirate squad — and the coaching staff.

"I want to go into coaching, and I feel that I've learned a great deal over the past three years," Jenkins said. "I came to school wanting to be a coach when I finished college, and I feel like I have learned enough under Coach Harrison to be ready to coach."

But he's also looking forward to teaching, too, majoring in Health and Physical Education. He will graduate next December, and hopes to continue on to earn his masters before beginning his career.

"I could have graduated this year, but I decided to bypass my practice teaching until the fall so I could be with the team," he said.

At Williamston, and for a year at Hatteras High, Jenkins played four years of tennis and one year of basketball. And he hopes to return to the high school ranks shortly as a coach. "I want to coach basketball and I would like to start on the high school level and work my way up as high as possible. I want to coach on the college level sometime, but a lot will depend on where I am and how things go."

During his sophomore year at East Carolina, Jenkins joined the Pirates as an assistant manager. Last year, he moved up to being the head manager, and admits that it was a tough year. "I didn't have any help last year, but I do this year, so it's easier."

For his efforts, Jenkins received a partial grant his junior year and has a full grant this year.

Some may scoff at a manager being on grant, but none of the coaching staff will. He earns every bit of it.

Coach Harrison know from personal experience. "That's the way I worked my way through school, as a manager. I put managers under a microscope and Burt does more than he is asked to. He's a young man who likes what he does because he enjoys the involvement with the basketball team. Anyone who could hire a Burt Jenkins in any capacity will benefit from it. He does the job as thoroughly as it can be done," Harrison said.

Jenkins went over his duties. "On practice days, we (Jenkins and his assistant) put out all of the practice gear for each player. We also get things ready for the coaches too. Then, we check with the coaches to see if they want to see anyone, or have anything special done before practice."

"Then, we have to get the baskets in place, clean the floor and set up the scoreboard controls, if they're needed. During practice, we help in cleaning up wet spots on the floor, handing out towels and so forth. I've even helped out in some of the drills on the floor."

And while on the sidelines or on the court, Jenkins says he's picked up large stores of coaching information and ideas which he hopes will help him in the years to come.

After practice, all of the gear, both for the players and coaches, must be collected, cleaned and made ready for the next day's practice. The baskets and scoreboard equipment must also be put back into storage until the next day.

On game nights, Jenkins arrives at least an hour before the team, to get uniforms and other gear out. In addition, he must also provide towels to the officials in their dressing facility and on the court, and he works with the visiting manager to make sure that he has all that is needed by his team.

While preparing for a road trip, each player's equipment bag is packed by Jenkins, and loaded onto the bus. And although each player is responsible for his equipment while on the road, Jenkins still has to have it cleaned following each workout.

"Usually, I know most of the managers of the schools where we're playing, so I can use their facilities to wash. But this last trip, when we were in Washington, I thought we were not going to be going over to James Madison on Sunday (as planned), so I had to do the washing in the motel laundry. I was up until 4 (a.m.) doing it. It's rough sometimes, but I still wouldn't trade it for anything."

On the road, too, in addition to his duties before and after the game, he also handles the video taping equipment, filming the entire game.

But, Jenkins says, the rewards are worth it all.

"I've gotten to meet some great people — like Coach Harrison and his staff. And I've learned a lot of things that most people would not learn about how a basketball team works — the little things that are important."

"And I've been able to travel to some great places — Kentucky and Indiana for instance. Being able to be

Alford Sparks Indiana Victory

By The Associated Press
Indiana Coach Bob Knight used eight players in the Hoosiers' victory over Michigan State. Three escaped the coach's wrath; the rest are in for a change.

Steve Alford scored a career-high 42 points, setting an Assembly Hall scoring record, as the No. 2 Hoosiers beat the Spartans 84-80 for their first victory over Michigan State in Bloomington since the 1982-83 season.

The victory gave Indiana an 18-2 record and allowed it to keep a one-game lead over Iowa in the Big Ten with a 9-1 mark. However, Knight was still upset with most of the team.

"We won this because Steve Alford plays for us," Knight said. "Without Alford, Michigan State wins the ball game going away."

"I thought he got a lot of help from Darryl Thomas. Thomas really hung in there. Joe Hillman did a good job of getting the ball around. But I was disappointed with the rest of them."

"We will make some changes in our next lineup. And we'll get some people sitting ... on the bench until they decide they want to play."

In other games involving ranked teams Wednesday night, No. 4 Iowa beat Minnesota 78-47; No. 8 Oklahoma downed Nebraska 80-66; No. 9 Alabama defeated Mississippi State 76-55; No. 12 Clemson edged Maryland 80-79; No. 13 Pittsburgh beat Villanova 58-57; Baylor defeated No. 15 Texas Christian 66-63; No. 16 Duke downed Virginia 75-61; No. 18 Kansas needed two overtimes to beat Kansas State 80-75; and Kentucky defeated No. 20 Auburn 75-71.

Alford made 12 of 19 shots from the floor, including four of five 3-pointers, and hit 14 of 15 free throws in besting former Indiana star Steve Downing's 14-year-old Assembly Hall scoring mark by one point.

"There were a lot of things going right for me," Alford said. "My teammates were able to get me the ball. I don't think it was because no one else was helping. People were screening and setting me up in position to score. It was a night where I was shooting well and got a good touch. I thought my teammates just did an excellent job of looking for me. They did just as much as I did, if not more."

No one else scored 42 points but Thomas did have 20.

"We'd never beaten Michigan State at Assembly Hall since I've been here, and the seniors wanted to do that before we left," Alford said. "This was our last chance at it and it almost slipped away from us at the end."

The Hoosiers led 72-59 with 8:58 remaining but the Spartans, 8-12 and 3-7, outscored Indiana 10-2 over the next 5:14 to close within five. But Alford made eight free throws over the final 1:51 to secure the victory.

"I thought Alford played better tonight than any other game we've played against him," Michigan State Jud Heathcote said. "He scored 33 the first game (this season), 42 this game, and maybe he would have scored 50 if we played them again. Steve Alford does it all on smarts, moving well and he has just a great, great shooting touch."

Vernon Carr led Michigan State with 25 points, 17 in the second half, while Darryl Johnson had 21.

Heathcote didn't want Alford on the foul line at the end of the game.

"I think we were a little confused at the end," Heathcote said. "We told our kids to grab anybody but don't foul Alford. We got a lot of young kids out there and I guess it was a little miscommunication."

No. 4 Iowa 78, Minnesota 47

Iowa used its pressure defense and depth to crush the visiting Golden Gophers and improve its record to 20-2.

"I think No. 20 is kind of nice," first-year Iowa Coach Tom Davis said. "It's a good number. We try to think beyond 20, though."

Twenty was how many turnovers Minnesota had and the number could have been higher.

"First of all, I want to thank Tom for taking the press off in the second half," Minnesota Coach Clem Haskins said. "They probably could have scored 200 points."

Roy Marble scored 12 of his 14 points in the first half as the Hawkeyes took a 51-27 halftime lead and improved to 8-2 in the Big Ten. Freshman forward Jim Shikenjanski came off the bench to lead Minnesota, 9-11 and 2-8, with 13 points.

No. 8 Oklahoma 80, Nebraska 66

The Sooners earned their ninth straight victory and stayed in a first-place tie in the Big Eight with Kansas. Harvey Grant scored 22 and David Johnson added 16 for visiting Oklahoma, 18-3 and 6-1, which led by at least nine points throughout the second half.

The Cornhuskers, 12-8 and 2-5, were led by Brian Carr and Anthony Bailous with 15 points each.

No. 9 Alabama 76, Miss. State 55

Alabama used a 15-2 run at the start of the second half to erase a 31-24 halftime deficit. Mark Gottfried made three 3-pointers in the run and the senior guard had six long jumpers in the second half for all of his points to lead the visiting Crimson Tide, 17-3 and 10-1, who lead the Southeastern Conference.

Hubert Henderson led the Bulldogs, 5-15 and 1-10, with 12 points.

No. 13 Pittsburgh 58, Villanova 57

Jerome Lane and Charles Smith each scored 15 points, but it was Smith's blocked shot with 10 seconds to play that allowed the Panthers to move back into a first-place tie with Syracuse in the Big East.

Pittsburgh, 18-4 and 7-2, led 57-50 with 5:27 to play but the Wildcats, 12-9 and 5-5, closed within 58-57 on a 3-pointer by Harold Jensen with 1:52 remaining. Pittsburgh missed two free throws in the final 40 seconds, but Smith's defensive play against Jensen, who finished with 19, sealed the victory for the visitors.

Baylor 66, No. 15 Texas Christian 63

Baylor broke the Horned Frogs' 14-game winning streak and handed them their first Southwest Conference loss of the season.

Mark Buchanan's two free throws with 32 seconds left gave the Bears, 12-8 and 7-3, a 64-58 lead. TCU's Jamie Dixon, who finished with 23 points, all but two on 3-point field goals, hit a 3-pointer and two free throws to bring the Horned Frogs, 18-4 and 9-1, within a point. But that was as close as they got.

Michael Williams led Baylor with 15 points, eight in the game's final minutes.

No. 18 Kansas 80, Kan. State 75, 2 OT
Freshman Keith Harris scored four of his six points in the second overtime to lead the Jayhawks to their seventh consecutive victory.

Harris gave the Jayhawks, 16-5 and 6-1, the lead for good, 71-70, with 1:35 to play. His dunk with 42 seconds left gave Kansas a 74-70 lead.

"I can't think of any game more significant since I have been at Kansas," said Kansas Coach Larry Brown, who led the Jayhawks to the Final Four last year in his third season. "I think fatigue on their part was a big factor and our kids were tired also. This makes the trip home a lot easier."

Danny Manning led Kansas with 29 points despite fouling out with 59 seconds left in regulation.

Norris Coleman, who missed a free throw with three seconds left in regulation and the score tied, led the Wildcats, 14-6 and 4-3, with 22 points.

Kentucky 75, No. 20 Auburn 71

James Blackmon scored a career-high 27 points, hit 10 of 13 field goals, grabbed four rebounds, handed out two assists and had three steals as the Wildcats held off the Tigers.

Kentucky, 13-6 and 6-5, led by as many as 17 points in the second half at Rupp Arena before Auburn closed within 73-71 with 2:01 to play but Blackmon scored on a layup and Aundrae Davis' 3-pointer missed with six seconds to play.

Mike Jones and Frank Ford led Auburn, 12-7 and 5-5, with 18 points each.

Other Games

Booker James scored 40 points, grabbed 11 rebounds and handed out nine assists to lead Western Michigan to a 100-81 victory over Northern Illinois.

Ron Leggett scored 49 points to lead West Virginia State to a 100-69 victory over Alderson-Broadbent.

Gymnasts 4th In Meet

RALEIGH — Kerri Mareno took first place in the balance beam and floor exercise to lead Rose High School's gymnastics team to a fourth place finish in a six-team meet at Raleigh Broughton High School Wednesday.

Broughton won the meet with 158.9 points, followed by Raleigh Sanderson with 153.2, and Enloe at 146. Rose finished fourth with 137.9 points. Athens Drive and Raleigh Millbrook also participated in the meet.

Mareno, who finished third in the vault with a 8.9 score, was awarded a 8.7 in the floor exercise and 9.5 on the balance beam.

Susan Grimsley of Rose, who placed fourth in three events, scored 8.0 in the floor exercise, 8.3 on the balance beam, and 7.6 on the uneven bars.

The Rose gymnastics team will participate in a state meet at Raleigh Sanderson High School on Feb. 14.

Tennessee, Iowa In Kickoff

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — One year after being bypassed for not having an experienced quarterback, Tennessee is in the Kickoff Classic because Jeff Francis is now an experienced quarterback.

Offense is what the promoters of the game like to see and the Associated Press has learned that Tennessee and Iowa, two teams that like to throw the ball, will meet in the fifth annual Kickoff Classic to begin the 1987 college football season.

The official announcement was expected today. The game probably will be played on Monday night, Aug. 31, at Giants Stadium.

Iowa averaged 32 points a game during the 1986 regular season, third best in the school's history. The Hawkeyes, beset by injuries, finished with a 9-3 record, including a 39-38 victory over San Diego State in the Holiday Bowl, and were No. 16 in the Associated Press football rankings.

"This Iowa team far exceeded any of my preseason expectations, especially considering all the injuries," Coach Hayden Fry said. "It's the most incredible year that I've been associated with in 35 years of coaching."

The Hawkeyes were the second most prolific passing team in the Big Ten, averaging 228.1 yards a game. Although No. 1 quarterback Mark Vlasik has graduated, Iowa returns backups Tom Poholsky, Dan McGwire and Chuck Hartlieb. Poholsky started approximately half the time.

Tennessee is the first unranked team from the previous year to play in the Kickoff Classic. After a 2-5 injury-plagued start, the Vols won their last five games, capped by a 21-14 victory over Minnesota in the Liberty Bowl, and wound up 7-5.

They were second in passing in the Southeastern Conference with 204 yards a game and Francis was second in passing efficiency. During the regular season he completed 150 passes for 1,946 yards and nine touchdowns. His completions and yardage were the third highest for a Tennessee quarterback and his completion percentage of 64.4 percent was second.

Mt. Olive Tops Pitt By 91-82

MOUNT OLIVE — Mount Olive College's junior varsity basketball team held off Pitt Community College in the second half to gain a 91-82 victory Wednesday night.

It was the first action in over two weeks for the Paladins, who have accepted four forfeit wins over that time period. "The layoff hurt us," Coach Charles Coburn said. "We got out of our game plan and played a lot of individual ball out there. Too, we got too conscious of the three-point line and took way too many three-point shots."

Mount Olive pushed out into a 6-1 lead in the opening minutes of the ballgame, but Pitt rallied to finally tie it up at 8-8. But again the Trojans pulled away, building up a 20-8 lead with 14:30 left in the first half.

Pitt finally got back into action and fought back to tie it up at 39-39 with 2:30 to go. The Paladins then pushed out to a 43-39 lead before Darlee Eason hit a three-pointer at the horn to close it to 43-42.

In the second half, Pitt took a 54-50 lead with 14:50 showing, but Mt. Olive pushed back into the lead from there and was in control the rest of the way, holding off further Pitt rallies.

Eason finished with 19 points for Mount Olive while Jeff Garner had 189, Orlando Neal had 17 and Cedric Sanders hit 10. Jarvis Wiggins had 32 points to lead Pitt, while Tony Clemons had 23 and Mike Hathaway had 14.

After a fourth-place national finish in 1985, Tennessee probably would have been invited to the Kickoff Classic last year had not quarter-

Manager...

in Rupp Arena (Kentucky) or to see (Indiana's) Bobby Knight coach in person was something that you usually only dream about.

And there have been a lot of good times that Jenkins will treasure in the future, too.

"One night at home, we were getting ready to play someone and Coach Harrison came to me. There's a rule that one school can only scout you one time. We had already been scouted by a certain school and Coach Harrison saw a car in the parking lot with Virginia plates on it and a sticker with that school on it.

"Find out what the license number of that car is, call the campus cops and have it towed," Coach Harrison told me. But when I went out to check it, the license plate holder had 'Atlantic Coach Conference Official' on it. Hank Armstrong (who also calls in the ACC) was officiating our game that night, and I thought I really had a good one on Coach Harrison that time.

"I went back in and said, 'Coach, I don't think you better have that car towed. It's Hank Armstrong's.'"

"Coach Harrison never missed a blink. 'Have it towed after the first half,' he said."

Jenkins, who is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Burton Jenkins Jr. of Williamston, said he wouldn't mind serving a term as a graduate assistant at East Carolina, but doesn't see that happening.

"With my practice teaching in the fall, the season would already be a week or so along before I could join them. Then, too, some of the players who are back might see think of me as just the manager."

Ask the coaches, however, and they'll probably tell you there is no such thing as "just the manager." No, people like Burt Jenkins are a vital part of the program — a part that could not be done without.

To The Sports Editor:

I would like to comment on the ECU vs. Navy basketball game this past Monday night.

I have been to UNC games, Duke games, Maryland games and nearly all the ECU home games during the past two years and I have never been told by a student usher to sit down!

This particular usher told several people to sit down during a very exciting time in the game. Everyone in Minges Coliseum was standing at that time. The usher even told one fan to sit his — down. (You can fill in the blank.)

This just goes to show that the people in charge of the ushers simply freaked out at the sight of 6,500 people. Until ECU people in charge stop treating their fans and supporters like babies, the athletic program will go nowhere. ECU must take some chances and ushers telling excited fans to sit down is going to hurt the spirit, the pride and the Pirate Club's pocket book.

Kings Were Perfectly Imperfect

By The Associated Press
The Sacramento Kings were perfect in the first quarter — or maybe that should read imperfect. Actually, they were perfectly imperfect.

The lowly Kings showed why they are one of the worst teams in the NBA with a record-setting display of futility. And at least one of their records will never be broken — a first-quarter shooting percentage of .000 — 0-for-18 — as they fell behind the Los Angeles Lakers 40-4 in after 12 minutes. The final score was 128-92.

"The first time I looked at the score it was 22-0," said Los Angeles forward A.C. Green, who scored 12 of his 16 points during the Lakers' unprecedented 29-0 run at the start of the game. "I was out there hustling and playing as hard as I could. I never noticed that they hadn't scored a basket. My mind was just focused on doing my job."

The officials had a hand in the record since two Sacramento baskets were nullified by loose ball fouls. The Kings didn't score until Derek Smith made two free throws with 9:06 gone. "It felt good to get on the scoreboard because it was frightening to think you're not going to score in the quarter," Smith said.

Reggie Theus added two more with 31 seconds left, prompting Kings Coach Phil Johnson to quip, "It's a good thing we're a good free throw-shooting team."

Elsewhere, Boston edged Cleveland 104-102, Dallas trounced Seattle 124-94 and Philadelphia whipped New Jersey 121-95.

It was no surprise that Sacramento had problems against the Lakers. The last time they beat the Lakers in Los Angeles, the Kings represented Kansas City, Kareem Abdul-Jabbar played for Milwaukee and LA Coach Pat Riley was averaging 11 points a game for the Lakers.

It was the Lakers' 22nd consecutive victory over the Kings, their 19th straight in the regular season and their 32nd straight at home dating back to Oct. 20, 1974. The four points was an NBA all-time low for a first quarter and tied the standard for any period set by the Detroit Falcons in 1947 and tied by the Buffalo Braves in 1972.

"It didn't take an Einstein to realize that when they were up by 16 points and they were running plays for Kurt Rambis (who averages 6 points a game) to hit jump shots, we were in trouble," Smith said.

The Chicago Bulls are only other team to go an entire quarter without a field goal. They did it on Jan. 10, 1980, against ... the Kansas City Kings.

"I don't think any team embarrasses another team, but a team can embarrass themselves," Riley said. "I will never take any joy in beating anybody like that. That's not what it's all about."

Celtics 104, Cavaliers 102
Cleveland lost to Boston on the road for the 22nd consecutive time — but it took 29 points by Larry Bird, including four consecutive free throws in the final five seconds, for the Celtics to withstand the Cavaliers' comeback from an 18-point deficit.

Kevin McHale scored for 27 points and Danny Ainge 15 as the Celtics survived Cleveland rookie Ron Harper's career-high 40-point performance.

With the score 87-87, Boston's Dennis Johnson hit a jumper from the top of the key to put the Celtics in front to stay and Bird followed with a 20-footer. After Harper made a layup, McHale was credited with a basket on a goaltending call and Bird scored on a turnaround baseline shot. The Celtics are 22-1 at home.

"The All-Star break couldn't come at a better time," Boston Coach K.C. Jones said. "We were on vacation in the second half. Our bodies were there, but our minds were already packed for the All-Star break."

Mavericks 124, SuperSonics 94
Coach Dick Motta still squirms when Dallas is mentioned among the NBA's elite teams. But he couldn't ignore the fact that the Mavericks became the third team to win 30 games this season, joining the Lakers (35) and Celtics (34).

"We're 14 games above .500 (30-16), and that's better than I would have predicted before the season," Motta said. "I guess our record surprises me more than the way we've played."

"Our chemistry is better and Detlef Schrempf and James Donaldson have improved from last year. And I think we've picked up a few wins that we didn't expect because of injuries to other teams in the division."

All-Stars Mark Aguirre and Rolando Blackman scored 23 and 18 points.

Ralph's Injury Has Turned Rocket Dreams To Ashes

HOUSTON (AP) — The Houston Rockets' season, which started with the sweet afterglow of reaching the NBA finals and joining the league's elite, has turned to ashes.

Ralph Sampson's knee injury in the first quarter of Tuesday's 107-105 loss to Denver likely ended the 7-4 Twin Tower's season.

The incident added a chapter to the long list of bad news that has sent the Rockets crashing from the heights to the depths.

"You would never think all that's happened to us could happen to a team in a full season and ours is just half over," Rockets forward Rodney McCray said.

"There's nothing you can do about it. We just have to stick together and fight back."

Guard Robert Reid says the Rockets aren't ready to close the books on the 1986-87 season.

"We wouldn't be the Rockets if we folded our tents and told the fans, 'that's it for this season folks, see you next year,'" Reid said.

"Our young guys are going to have to come through now. We have to play smart. No more silly mistakes."

Sampson's injury was described as a large tear of the lateral cartilage in his left knee that will require surgery to repair.

Sampson says he's out for the season. The Rockets fear he is too, but they are holding out hope until Sampson gets additional medical advice.

"I'm probably out the rest of the season," Sampson said. "Now I have to get mentally tough to get ready for the rehabilitation, having a cast on my leg or whatever is necessary."

Sampson started Houston's season of misfortune by missing 11 of Houston's first 13 games with ankle injuries.

Akeem Olajuwon sprained an ankle Nov. 25 and missed seven games. Guard Robert Reid missed seven games after undergoing arthroscopic knee surgery Dec. 8.

The next bombshell came Jan. 13 when guards Lewis Lloyd and Mitchell Wiggins, key figures in last season's title push, were banned from the league for using cocaine.

Each time the Rockets have appeared to be putting their woes behind them, they've been slapped down once again.

Their season has included a 56-point loss to Seattle and several fourth-quarter fizzes, including a loss to Phoenix when the Rockets led by 21 in the second half.

The Rockets had made a charge since losing Lloyd and Wiggins.

They have a 13-5 record since Dec. 30 and Coach Bill Fitch was named NBA Coach of the Month after the Rockets went 11-4 in January.

Now they are back at the bottom and trying to climb.

"I am shocked, we'll just have to try to win every game," Olajuwon said. "When it happened, I didn't think it was that serious. Ralph just twisted his knee trying to keep up with his man."

Sampson appeared to slip on The Summit court with six minutes to play in Tuesday's game. He tried to return in the second quarter but could not get full extension of his knee.

Rockets trainer Dick Vandervoort said Sampson wanted to get more medical advice before deciding on treatment.

"I just told him it was very important to get it done as soon as possible," Vandervoort said.

Regardless of the surgery, Sampson will return at 100 per cent, Vandervoort said.

"It is in no way a career-threatening situation," Vandervoort said. "At this point, we don't feel there is any ligament damage."

Houston's hard-luck season is typified by the fact that shoe polish may have caused Sampson's injury.

Summit crews removed scuff marks from a pre-game warmup by a drill team with turpentine and players said slippery spots remained on the floor at the start of the game.

"That's the kind of luck we've been having this season," forward Jim Petersen said. "Every week or so we turn around and we have something else go wrong."

Petersen filled in for Sampson Tuesday and scored 19 points. Cedric Maxwell, obtained from the Los Angeles Clippers Jan. 16, also will get more playing time at the power forward position.

"I thought I'd be coming in here playing 17-20 minutes and watching Ralph and Akeem do their magic," Maxwell said. "But now I guess I've got my work orders."

The Rockets host the Golden State Warriors tonight in the Summit. Golden State has beaten the Rockets in all three meetings this season.

Six Tar Heels On Injured List

CHAPEL HILL (AP) — Six North Carolina basketball players, including four starters, are either sick or injured and it's unknown how many will play in the third-ranked Tar Heels' game against Atlantic Coast Conference rival North Carolina State.

Kenny Smith, the team's leading scorer averaging 17.7 points a game, had arthroscopic surgery on his knee Saturday and practiced only 10 minutes Wednesday, said Rick Brewer, North Carolina sports information director.

Trainer Marc Davis said Smith could play some against the Wolfpack tonight, but the final decision will be made before the game when he is examined by doctors.

Center Joe Wolf and guard Jeff Lebo both have the flu, Brewer said. Lebo did not practice Tuesday but did practice Wednesday for 10 minutes and will probably play against N.C. State, Brewer said. But Wolf, who has a bad case of the flu, has not practiced all week. There's a chance he could play, however, Brewer said.

Forward Dave Popson, who suffered a deep bruise in his left leg in Sunday's loss to Notre Dame, has not practiced all week. He might play tonight, but if he does his injury will hamper him some, Brewer said.

Freshman J.R. Reid is the only starter not injured or sick.

Also injured are Rodney Hyatt, a freshman guard, and Scott Williams, a freshman center. Hyatt suffered a stress fracture in the left leg, has been out for more than a week and is unlikely to play, Brewer said.

Williams suffered a thigh bruise in practice Wednesday but is expected to play.

Conner Expects To Be Back Into Cup Chase Next Time

FREMANTLE, Australia (AP) — More money will be spent by more countries on more technology than ever before the next time the bottomless silver pitcher known as the America's Cup goes up for bids.

And Dennis Conner, often blamed for transforming the chase from a few months' work to a non-stop pursuit, figures to be in the thick of it again.

"It's a little premature to make any announcements," he said of his Stars & Stripes crew, "but don't be surprised if you see most of us back together again in the defense."

This year, Conner was a challenger, the first time an American skipper had been put into that role.

After losing the cup in September, 1983 to Australia II, he spent three years and $20 million to turn his obsession — to restore his reputation and return the trophy to America — into reality.

"Dennis believes the cup belongs to the United States," his wife, Judy, said before Conner realized his dream.

On Wednesday, the cup's nearly 3 1/2-year exile in Australia ended, as Conner steered Stars & Stripes to a 1-knot, 59-second victory over Kookaburra III and a 4-0 sweep of the final series.

The next America's Cup battle will be in 1990 or 1991. The site will be determined by a committee of the San Diego Yacht Club, of which Conner is a member. San Diego, where Conner lives, and Hawaii, where the Stars & Stripes team trained, have been mentioned prominently as likely sites.

The next cup competition apparently will be the most heavily attended.

Australia will rejoin the challengers, while the United States becomes the defender. New Zealand, France, Great Britain, Italy and Canada — the other challengers this time — also want to return. Entries from West Germany, Japan, Sweden, Spain and Switzerland are expected.

From that group, one boat will emerge from the trials to challenge a U.S. defender.

"The event has become truly an international event, very similar to the Olympics," Peter Gilmour, Kookaburra III's starting helmsman, said today. "You'll continue to see it move around from country to country. You very well could see the Italians or Germans win next time. It will be a test of national technologies."

Conner said, "it's going to be a continuing challenge for America to come up with a strong defender."

A technological advance — the winged keel — was critical in Australia II's victory over Conner and Liberty in 1983.

"Going into 1983 in America, I think you could say there was a general disenchantment with technology and with the idea that there was significant progress available," Stars & Stripes design coordinator John Marshall said. "Then Australia II came along and you had to pick up the pieces and say, 'how did a bunch of Aussies beat us?'"

FOCUS

Going Next Door

On this day in 1971, Apollo 14 astronauts Alan Shepard and Edgar Mitchell spent four hours walking on the Moon. As with any object that orbits the Earth, the Moon actually falls toward Earth. But it stays in orbit because this falling motion is equally balanced by its sideways motion. Well, almost equally balanced. Actually, the Moon is slowly receding from the Earth, taking two-thousandths of second longer to complete its orbit each year.

DO YOU KNOW — What planet orbits closest to the Sun?

Horoscope

From The Carroll Righter Institute

FORECAST FOR FRIDAY Feb. 6

GENERAL TENDENCIES: Today finds it necessary for you to use special care in understanding all the practical aspects of whatever comes to your attention. Be reasonable and intelligent.

ARIES (March 21 to April 19): Go over every aspect of your practical affairs. Be with creative individuals who can be of assistance.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): You can gain what you desire in various ways. Consider them well but don't take any action yet.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): You may find it hard to gain your intimate aims at this time, so map out a plan for future use.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): Steer clear of the individuals who waste your time or cause you to spend too much money.

LEO (July 22 to August 21): Put aside civic duties for a while since you have other important duties to perform. Show your ethical side today.

VIRGO (August 22 to September 22): Study those new ideas well before you put them in operation. Be most careful while walking or driving.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22): Plan how to handle promises you have made in a most quiet and sure manner, otherwise trouble could ensue.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21): Outside associates could try to trap you into following a course you do not like, so be careful.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21): If you plan your time carefully you can get much accomplished, especially at the office.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 20): Be sure you count the cost of some amusement before you partake in the festivities.

AQUARIUS (January 21 to February 19): You have to be more cooperative at home if you are to avoid friction there. Be with persons you trust tonight.

PISCES (February 20 to March 20): Be careful when communicating with others or there can be much trouble. Try not to lose your temper.

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY ... he or she will be very magnetic but will also have prejudiced ideas that should be discouraged, otherwise little accord can be gained with others. Be sure to give as fine an education as you can afford and add psychology courses so that your progeny will understand others.

The bidding:
 South West North East
 1♥ Pass 1♣ Pass
 2NT Pass 3NT Pass
 Pass Pass
 Opening lead: Jack of ♣

There is a gamut of deceptive plays involving elaborate

falscards and other maneuvers. Equally effective, however, are those strategies that can be as simple as refusing to win a trick when it is offered. South fell victim to such a trap on today's hand.

Because of his primary controls and body, South felt his hand was too strong for an opening bid of one no trump. As a result, he stretched a trifle for his jump to two no trump over his partner's one-spade response. North's raise to game was automatic.

West led the top of his club sequence, and declarer could count only five sure winners outside of the spade suit. It seemed a straightforward matter to develop four spade tricks, so declarer ran the nine of spades at trick two. East followed low without a moment's hesitation. Impressed by the "success" of his finesse, South repeated it and East won with his now bare queen. That left declarer severed from dummy, and eventually he had to be satisfied with six tricks when he went after diamonds rather than hearts.

Some observers felt South would have done better had he overtaken the nine of spades with dummy's ten in an attempt to make the defenders think he held a singleton. However, it is unlikely that anyone would jump to two no trump with a singleton in partner's suit; regardless, if East was good enough to duck the nine of spades, he would probably have done the same thing even had an honor been played from the table.

King Of Glitter, Liberace, Dies At His Home

By MARK EVJE
Associated Press Writer

PALM SPRINGS, Calif. (AP) — Liberace, the glittering showman and pianist who captivated fans for four decades with an inimitable personal and musical style, died quietly at home, holding a simple rosary. He was 67.

Fans who kept a vigil at his desert home, Casa de Liberace, and friends in the entertainment community mourned the loss of the man born Wladziu Valentino Liberace on May 16, 1919, in West Allis, Wis.

"Lee was the nicest person in show business," said Shirley MacLaine.

"That he was a consummate artist is not really as important as my telling you he was one of the finest human beings I've ever known," said Frank Sinatra.

The entertainer known for rhinestone-studded costumes and extravagant jewelry died in quiet dignity Wednesday afternoon, surrounded by friends and family, said his publicist, Jamie James. He slipped into a coma Tuesday and never regained consciousness.

"He had the rosary wrapped around his right hand. There was no jewelry. The rosary beads were his jewelry," James said.

The cause of death was cardiac arrest due to congestive heart failure brought on by subacute encephalopathy, an inflammation of the brain, said Dr. Ronald Daniels.

Liberace had been gravely ill for weeks with what aides said was anemia, emphysema and heart disease. Spokesmen denied a report that he had AIDS.

Liberace was one of the nation's most enduring entertainers, a master of pizzazz long before entertainers like Elton John combined glitter with music. As a boy, he played in speakeasies for $35 a week; he later gave command performances before royalty and earned an estimated $5 million per year.

The Guinness Book of World Records said Liberace was the highest-paid pianist in a single season, earning more than $2 million per 26-week season with a peak of $138,000 for a single night's performance at New York's Madison Square Garden in 1954.

He sold 60 million records. Once in the 1950s, when a critic savaged him, Liberace retorted, "I cried all the way to the bank."

The candelabra that adorned his pianos became a trademark; his stage savvy earned him the title "Mr. Showmanship."

Fans packed houses ranging from Radio City Music Hall to the entertainment palaces of the Las Vegas Strip to see Liberace drive on stage in a mirrored Rolls-Royce, pop out of a giant pink egg in a pink feathered cloak, or soar across the stage suspended from wires.

"The trappings are an attention-grabber," he said in 1984. "But you have to back that up with ability and with music people want to hear. I think of myself as a decorative package with something good inside."

Sometimes scorned by critics, the pianist said that he delivered substance with style.

"There aren't too many entertainers who furnish the product I do," he said last year. "They've come to know me for the surprise elements. My costumes. Cars. If I'd done the same thing over and over, I'd have been old hat long before now."

The performer, who dressed conservatively offstage, said in an earlier interview, "For me to wear a simple tuxedo on stage would be like asking Marlene Dietrich to wear a housedress."

His mother, Frances, played piano. His father, Salvatore, played French horn with the John Phillip Sousa Band and in the Milwaukee Philharmonic.

Liberace could pick out entire melodies on the piano by the time he was 4. He was a soloist with the Chicago Symphony at 14. During the Depression, he performed with a five-piece band in strip joints and speakeasies using the name Walter Busterkeys.

He was man of gentle wit who lived quietly but relished consumption. He used 18 pianos, painted, mirrored and gilded, including instruments owned by Chopin and Gershwin. He owned hundreds more in miniature and full-size. He had dozens of antique cars and a desk owned by the last Russian czar. Three warehouses held the overflow.

The pianist, whose repertoire included light classics mixed with popular arrangements, received his first Las Vegas booking in 1948 after he inundated a hotel entertainment director with postcards praising himself. His popularity led to a 15-minute network television summer series in 1952. He had a popular syndicated series in 1953-55, a daytime show on ABC in 1958-59 and a summer show in 1969.

Liberace recently reached a new height in popularity and critical acceptance. When not doing concerts, he kept busy with plans for an expanded museum park to be centered around a piano-shaped building in Las Vegas. He also had 21 dogs, which he referred to as his children.

Rumors of ill health surfaced last fall after a tour touting the latest of his four books, "The Wonderful Private World of Liberace," a full-color inventory of his possessions sprinkled with favorite recipes and homages to his mother.

The book tour followed a Radio City sellout that left him drained, said longtime friend and manager Seymour Heller. Heller blamed Liberace's fatigue on a watermelon diet.

However, Dr. Elias Ghanem of Las Vegas, Liberace's personal physician, denied it played a role in the performer's death. He said Liberace went off the diet after losing weight last year.

Decades of performing began to take a toll two years ago, and the star had spent more of his time at homes in Las Vegas, Palm Springs, Hollywood, Malibu, New York and Lake Tahoe. He canceled all performances for 1987.

Liberace spent nearly four years embroiled in a lawsuit brought by his former chauffeur, Scott Thorson. Thorson, 27, originally sought $113 million, claiming he had lived with Liberace as a secretary, chauffeur, animal trainer and lover. The suit was settled out of court last year for $95,000; a judge earlier threw out Thorson's palimony claim.

The entertainer, who maintained Thorson was merely a vengeful former employee, said at a 1973 news conference that he believed homosexuality was wrong.

"No, I'm not a homosexual," Liberace said. "As I told a British court in 1959 when I won a $20,000 libel judgment against a London newspaper, my sexual feelings are the same as most people.

"I'm against the practice of homosexuality because it offends convention and society."

Among those at his bedside when he died were his sister-in-law Dora, sister Angelina Farrell and her family, Heller, and housekeepers Gladys Luckie and Dorothy MacMahain, said Denise Collier, his spokeswoman in New York.

Angelina is the sole surviving member of the immediate family.

Her son-in-law, Don McLaughlin, said public memorial services will be held in Palm Springs on Friday at Our Lady of Solitude Roman Catholic Church and next week in Las Vegas.

Private funeral arrangements were pending at Forest Lawn Memorial Park, Hollywood Hills, where Liberace's brother and mother are entombed.

In lieu of flowers, the family asked that contributions be made to the Liberace Foundation.

Medicine Abandoned Near End

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Liberace spent his final days without medication in the desert home he loved, surrounded by family and friends who kept a vigil at his bedside.

"They were trying to honor his wishes, to let him die with the dignity he wanted to die in," said Liberace's longtime publicist, Jamie James.

"He was very brave. He took no medication. He definitely was not afraid. His body did not want to go." The man Red Skelton called the P.T. Barnum of the symphony halls died Wednesday at age 67.

James had watched the man from Milwaukee capture America's musical heart, and his voice choked with emotion as he described the entertainer's last hours.

He said in a telephone interview from Los Angeles that those close to the flamboyant pianist knew he'd been sick for a year, but were unaware just how ill.

"Gladys, the housekeeper at Liberace's Las Vegas home, told me he moved his favorite car from Las Vegas to Palm Springs about six months ago," James said. "She said she knew then he would never come back."

James was called to Liberace's Palm Springs, Calif., home Monday.

"He was lying there, his eyes open," James recalled. "His nurse told us to talk to him. She said, 'Maybe he can hear you.' We talked to him. I was hoping he could watch it all and say 'God, they really do love me.'"

James said Liberace held a rosary in his hands. Music, including a Barbara Streisand tape Liberace loved, played in the room.

"He chose the dignity of dying in his own home, without the fuss and bother of being in a hospital with all the tubes and the oxygen and stuff."

Liberace's housekeeper came down last week from Las Vegas and fixed some of the entertainer's favorite foods. His requests included meat loaf and chicken and dumplings, James said.

In 1983, Liberace nearly died of uremic poisoning. He said he had a vision in which he was visited by a small nun, and a miraculous recovery followed.

"He always credited that mysterious vision for his turn for the better," James said. "I found myself looking down at him and thinking, 'God I wish that little nun would come in and solve his problem again.'"

James said Liberace knew he was not well while he was writing his book, "The Wonderful Private World of Liberace."

"The book was like he was writing a long letter to the world," James said. "I think he really believed something would change all this, that he would get well."

Liberace Scorned Critics As Fans Sent Him To Bank

By BOB THOMAS
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Liberace's most famous remark came 30 years ago when critics were scorning the flamboyant new star as "The Wizard of Ooze." His retort: "I cried all the way to the bank."

Until the end of his career, which came with his death at 67 on Wednesday, the self-styled Mr. Showmanship scorned his enemies as he amassed enough millions to found his own bank.

Liberace defused the attacks by his own brand of gentle self-mockery. "I'm no good," he told his adoring audiences, "I've just got guts."

But offstage he didn't minimize his abilities: "I consider myself an entertainer. There are very few people in show business I consider entertainers — people who can in the course of an evening draw all the elements of emotion from an audience. When I perform, I don't just play. I like to make people happy."

Few careers have been managed with greater shrewdness than Liberace's. Part of the credit is due to his longtime manager, Seymour Heller. But Liberace knew better than anyone how to sell his image and keep himself in the public's favor.

Liberace might easily have become one of the half-forgotten freak acts of early television. Mature women loved him, but critics attacked "the corny lighting with fadeouts and silhouettes; the confiding, lisping voice; the oh-so-gentle smiles; the understanding glance; the wink charged with meaning; the sticky-sweet musical interpretations."

Instead of toning down his onstage image, Liberace became more outrageous.

He traced the beginning of his peacock period to a 1952 engagement at the 20,000-seat Hollywood Bowl. He ordered a set of white tails "so they could see me in the last row." Next, a gold lame jacket in Las Vegas. When Elvis Presley appeared in a complete gold lame outfit, Liberace escalated his own costumes, bringing more critical blasts.

The Liberace vogue began to fade in the late 1950s when his handlers were booking him in huge arenas.

Concerts proved the ideal showcase for Liberace, allowing him to establish a rapport with his audience. His career never faltered after that.

Discovery Channel Will Bring Soviet TV Live To U.S.

By JOHN POMFRET
Associated Press Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — Millions of television viewers in all 50 states will be able to tune in on Soviet television the same week ABC presents "Amerika," its account of life in the United States under Soviet rule.

The Discovery Channel signed an agreement Wednesday to broadcast 62 hours of Channel 1, Moscow, to 14 million Discovery subscribers Feb. 15-22.

Soviet broadcasts often feature zany game shows where women compete at threading a needle on a city bus, Yellow Submarine-like cartoons, rhythmic aerobics led by shapely comrades and a healthy dose of Socialist Realism.

"Our mission is totally apolitical; it's simply to bring the world into the living rooms of our subscribers," said John S. Hendricks, chairman of the Discovery cable channel.

The agreement was signed with Orbita Technologies, a New York-based satellite transmission company. Hendricks said the contract was contingent on an agreement with the Soviet Union that no "made-for-America" programs will be slipped in and that subtitles explaining the general content of the shows will be allowed.

"You'll see tremendous differences and humongous similarities," said Orbita chairman Ken Schaffer. "It may be terrible television but it's always great viewing."

"Soviet TV has much to offer American friends," said Boris Malakhov, a spokesman for the Soviet Embassy in Washington. "We have ballets, cultural shows and friendly, humane cartoons for children."

Schaffer, a former press agent for rock singer Alice Cooper and guitarist Jimi Hendrix, said his goal is "to de-alienize the other guy, to replace the exclamation point next to the USSR with a question mark."

"Seeing Moscow as easily as you see downtown makes Moscow as close as downtown. It's not another planet, it's just a microwave away," he said.

The Discovery broadcast will be the first in what is hoped to be seven experiments nationwide with Soviet TV.

Hendricks said Discovery plans to poll its viewers after the week to gauge their reactions. Moscow will get the results.

Academics agreed that the shows are useful for language training, but varied on how much else could be learned.

Jonathan E. Sanders, assistant director of the W. Averell Harriman Institute for Advanced Study of the Soviet Union at Columbia University, said television provides scholars with a "window on Soviet reality."

Marshall I. Goldman, associate director of the Russian Research Center at Harvard University, said the programming "presents Moscow's best face" and a "sanitized version of Soviet reality."

Woodward's 'Equalizer' Finds Plea For Help On N.Y. Streets

By CARLA HALL
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

NEW YORK — The RV lurches through Manhattan traffic and the major elements of Edward Woodward's life go sliding onto the floor: framed photographs of his wife and young daughter, scripts and location schedules from "The Equalizer," the CBS television series in which he stars. He grabs a vase of tulips following the path to the floor.

"Don't worry!" he booms cheerfully as a visitor tries to prevent the avalanche. "We clean it all up later." He looks down at the photograph of his 3 year old. "Emily Beth doesn't mind being on the floor as long as she's face up." The vase is another matter, and he's reduced to sitting there holding it, brow furrowed in a cross between annoyance and resignation, a look not unlike one Robert McCall — the Equalizer — might flash when he's been trifled with.

"I feel silly doing this," Woodward says as he settles in with the vase.

Just another day in New York for "The Equalizer" (it airs Wednesday nights on CBS). McCall, the program's protagonist, is a well-heeled, disillusioned secret agent who left behind a shadowy life with "the agency." Now he's put his talents to use as a one-man strike force of sorts for the common man and woman in trouble, penetrating layers of foreboding in New York, dealing as expediently with malevolent landlords as with vengeful KGB agents. "Odds against you? Need help? Call the Equalizer," says his advertisement, which viewers get to read over the shoulders of numerous haggard and desperate victims.

"I'm not a city person," says the 56-year-old British actor. But for a second television season, Woodward has transported his family — "At my age, I wouldn't travel without them" — from the countryside near Stratford-on-Avon to a fashionable Upper West Side apartment with a view of downtown on one side and the Hudson River on the other. (Last month, he married 38-year-old actress Michele Dotrice, his companion of 12 years and the mother of his 3 year old). And mostly he finds himself spending 14-hour days running in and out of a trailer he calls "home."

"I love New York. Once I decided I liked the part ... I think it was the thing that clinched it for me," he says. Known in Britain for his television and theater work, he became familiar to American audiences through the acclaimed 1979 Australian film, "Breaker Morant," in which he played the title character. ("It's a film that kind of stays in people's minds," Woodward says.)

Now when Woodward and crew are spotted around New York City filming the series, he says, "I have had on occasion people saying, 'We've got a problem on our block.' It's done half joking, but it doesn't take you long to realize it's quite serious."

More commonly, people call out their approximation of his title: "Equivocator or Exterminator." Woodward deadpans. "Emphasizer was my favorite. I've been called all those. I hate the title. Loathe the title."

For a while last season, the series was in danger of having no title and no time slot as it made a rocky trek through the ratings. "Last year, I canceled my apartment, canceled Con Ed, canceled the telephone, packed everything to ship it home, and the day before I left they told me that we were coming back," he says.

But the show's highly stylized look and unusual leading character have drawn a cult of viewers, and this fall "The Equalizer" began to win its time slot against NBC's "St. Elsewhere" (which Woodward himself watches) and ABC's "Hotel."

"Of course it's good, but it's nothing that I can worry about," Woodward says of the ratings. "I can't get over-elated when they're high or terribly depressed when they're low. It is so totally un-part of my life. ... The only thing that's important to me is the series itself, working on it and what we do with it."

What Woodward has done is give it a texture unlike any other: the New York locations, which vary from grimy subway platforms to the crispness of city parks (the light, alone, is different in New York says frequent "Equalizer" director Richard Compton); the darkly rich, percussive music, composed by Stewart Copeland, former drummer of the Police.

Even the cast of "The Equalizer" looks different. Most are New York-based actors. Some well-known names in theater and film have made guest appearances — Sandy Dennis, Tammy Grimes (with whom Woodward performed on Broadway 20 years ago), Jessica Harper, Brian Bedford. Frequent Arena Stage actor Casey Biggs and Washingtonian Karen Akers made appearances on the show last season.

What Woodward has done is create a compelling hero: McCall, a complex man, aloof, with hints of past lives and loves and a bark of gruffness that sometimes foreshadows fury.

Beneath the steely exterior of the man who tells his clients, "That man will never bother you again" (or some variation), lies a soul tortured by whatever hideously dirty business he did for "the agency" that cost him peace of mind and made him neglect his family.

"When he says, 'Relax, I'll help you,' you believe it," says Compton, who has directed about one-third of "The Equalizer" shows. "I think he has this sense of sincerity. He's not a fake person."

Executive producer Jim McAdams says the character is like Shane.

"I always look for what's most interesting to play," says Woodward. "You find what's wrong with the man, where he doesn't work, where his weaknesses are — that to me is the most intriguing, far more than the character's strengths."

"Oh," Woodward says, pausing, "I wouldn't be able to live with the man for very long. He's got a vicious temper. There's a streak of viciousness in him — which he fights constantly. ... He is at times a very pompous man, he lectures far too much. He's a man full of inhibitions." His voice is rising to the stentorian tones of the Equalizer. "And he's at war with himself all the time. ... The man can go off on a tangent quite suddenly, as we've just done in an episode where he goes mad. I mean, he's berserk. You suddenly think to yourself, 'This man could do anything.'"

The sum of McCall's weaknesses becomes part of Woodward's knowledge of the character. "As long as you know it's there and the audience knows it's there, you don't have to keep showing it. You can make the man strong, you can make him macho, you can make him tough, providing that you know at any moment he could fall down on what he's doing. This to me adds a tension."

Women Alcoholics Share Cells With Criminals, No Treatment

By BART ZIEGLER
Associated Press Writer
BOSTON (AP) — Kathleen Neal spent seven days in prison last year although she had committed no crime.

She was supposed to get treatment and counseling to help her overcome an eight-year bout with alcoholism. Instead, the 34-year-old mother of three was taken to prison, confined with four women charged with serious crimes and left to endure the agony of withdrawal without benefit of medication.

"I kept asking everybody why I was in prison," Ms. Neal said in a recent interview. "They said, 'Here is where you are, you're here for 30 days.' That's all."

She was among scores of women sent to prison under a 1973 state law that allows doctors, relatives, guardians or police to ask a judge to commit for 30 days an alcoholic whose drinking may be harmful to himself or others. The law was passed after alcoholism was decriminalized in the state.

Male alcoholics are sent to Bridgewater State Hospital on the grounds of the Massachusetts Correctional Institution at Bridgewater, where officials say they receive appropriate alcoholism treatment and counseling.

Women, however, are sent to the state women's prison at Framingham because there are no other facilities. They are housed with criminals and receive little treatment.

"I thought I was going crazy," said Ms. Neal, who agreed to be committed in October at the suggestion of her social worker and court-appointed lawyer.

Like other committed alcoholics, Ms. Neal arrived at the prison in handcuffs and was isolated from the inmate population much of the day.

She shared a cell-like room with four other women, all charged with serious crimes.

"I was scared to death and they knew it. They picked on me the whole week," said Ms. Neal, who was released after appealing to a judge who apologized to her.

She sought private help and recently has gone weeks without a drink.

The women's plight went unnoticed until The Boston Globe last month published a story about the imprisonments.

"It's pretty clear that the entire issue has been mishandled for years," said state Human Services Secretary Philip Johnston. "We're rectifying that." He recently announced he would accelerate the completion of a 20-bed alcohol treatment center in Boston for women committed under the law. Meantime, women will be sent to private treatment centers at state expense. None will go to Framingham, he said.

The 1973 law mandates that state health agencies each month provide the courts a list of available public and private treatment centers, and requires that the state establish treatment programs.

Johnston could not explain why those requirements were ignored in the case of women alcoholics. Judges, having no other options, sent the women to Framingham.

About 60 women alcoholics were sent to the prison during the past three years, according to Mark Coven, an assistant secretary of human services. No figures were available for earlier years, he said.

To cut down on monthly water waste, put sealed plastic bottles filled with water and an inch or two of sand or pebbles in your toilet tank. In an average home, taking such a measure can save 10 or more gallons of water a day.

Huge Gem Cut And Polished

PLANO, Texas (AP) — A potato-size stone that had been purchased for $10 and turned out to be the world's largest uncut sapphire has been cut and polished, and the owner says he has not made any decision about selling the gem.

The oval, 1,154-carat lavender gem, now the world's largest star sapphire, was unveiled Wednesday after a cutter spent 67 hours over a 10-day period slicing more than 750 carats from the stone.

"We are not doing anything except to consider all offers and options," said Roy Whetstine, who purchased what is now called "The Star Of America" in a grab bag at a rock show. "There's just not another one in the world this large."

The stone has been appraised at $2.28 million, but dealers have said it could bring as much as $6 million, said Whetstine spokesman Shelley Katz.

"The rays are very, very straight," said gem cutter John Robinson of Plano, who cut and polished the opaque stone that had weighed 1,905.15 carats in the rough.

"The Guinness Book of Records has already contacted us," said Whetstine. Even after being cut to the size of a chicken egg and polished, it is larger than any rough sapphire previously found, he said.

The stone's weight was certified last year by the Gem Trade Laboratory Inc. of Los Angeles and is registered with the Gemological Institute of America.

The world's second-largest star sapphire is the Star of Queensland, an opaque stone weighing more than 700 carats. Third-ranked is the transparent Star of India, 500 carats cut weight.

Whetstine said he would return the stone to Tucson, Ariz., to try to sell it, but added it would not be an "overnight" sale.

Congress Eyes Stricter Rules On Covert Acts

By JIM DRINKARD
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — As part of the fallout from the Iran-Contra scandal, a move has begun in Congress to strip the executive branch of all discretion about when to notify Congress of covert intelligence actions.

Citing the delay of at least 10 months before Congress found out about President Reagan's initiative to sell arms to Iran, apparently as a swap for American hostages, House Intelligence Committee Chairman Louis Stokes has proposed strict new reporting requirements.

"It is ... important, to both the Congress and the intelligence community, to be able to sit back in a detached manner, listen to an intelligence briefing, and suggest that the proposed action is just plain stupid," Stokes said Wednesday in introducing his legislation.

At the same time, the committee issued a report finding "a litany of disaster" in the management of overall U.S. intelligence activities that has led to dozens of serious security breaches in recent years.

Stokes, an Ohio Democrat, induced legislation that would require prior written notice of any contemplated covert action to the House and Senate intelligence committees. In rare instances, the notification could be delayed by up to 48 hours.

Current law requiring notification of Congress for covert activities, written in 1980, was left deliberately vague on the subject of reporting deadlines to avoid a constitutional confrontation over the president's right to withhold notice, and that debate is likely to be re-ignited when the House panel holds hearings on Stokes' proposal, probably beginning next month.

Reagan signed a formal intelligence "finding" on Jan. 17, 1986, giving the go-ahead for U.S. arms sales to Iran. The finding contained a prohibition on notifying Congress, which did not find out until November when the initiative became public. Lawmakers say Reagan shattered the understandings implicit in the 1980 law.

"That bond of mutual respect and trust between the committees and the CIA ... has been broken," Stokes said in remarks on the House floor. "It has been replaced of late by a demonstration of arrogance that permits high-ranking government officials to look for ways to avoid the law rather than execute it."

Lack of criticism from Congress or others skeptical of the Iran arms sale kept advice from the president that could have spared the nation serious damage to its antiterrorism policy and relations with allies, administration critics have said.

Stokes' proposal is likely to run into strong White House opposition.

Faced with criticism on Capitol Hill Wednesday for having advised Reagan that he could withhold word of the Iran initiative from Congress, Attorney General Edwin Meese III said: "I do not think the president is above the law. There is a firm rationale for the advice I gave."

Further harsh criticism of the administration's handling of intelligence activities came in the committee's 41-page report, which found laxity in intelligence agencies' hiring practices, an "almost nonchalant attitude" toward recent espionage cases and looseness in controls over sensitive information.

The report's findings were similar to those of the Senate Intelligence Committee last year, but its criticism was stronger in tone.

"What has emerged is a pattern that causes deep dismay about the way U.S. intelligence is managed," the panel concluded, noting that 27 U.S. citizens had been charged with espionage from 1984 to 1986, including the celebrated Walker spy ring and the case of naval intelligence analyst Jonathan Pollard.

Often, intelligence managers ignored warning signs that could have minimized damage from those cases, the report said. They failed, for example, to check for financial, drug or alcohol problems among key personnel and failed to re-check periodically the security clearances of employees.

The principle that extremely sensitive information should be limited to only those who need to know it to carry out their jobs also has been compromised, the panel said. Some employees with low security clearances could pick up highly classified secrets through casual office conversations, it said.

The panel recommended sharp reductions in the numbers of documents that are classified and the numbers of people with security clearances as steps toward better management. By 1985 more than five million Americans held such clearances, a 40 percent increase over five years. And there are estimates that numbers of classified documents reach into the trillions, it said.

President Will Go Before Panel Again

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan's national security review board has arranged to interview him again on his role in the Iran-Contra affair.

The board created by Reagan to look into the operations of the National Security Council — where the arms-to-Iran and aid-to-the-Contras scheme apparently was hatched — said it would meet Reagan, at his own invitation, a second time at a date still to be fixed. It interviewed Reagan for 76 minutes Jan. 26.

Panel spokesman Herbert Hetu said the board could go back to Reagan as early as next week. He declined to say what subjects would be covered, but said the board headed by former Texas Republican Sen. John Tower has learned more since it talked with Reagan last month.

The board expects to look at Reagan's notes that he jots down at day's end in the privacy of his White House quarters. It has asked to see them, and the president has agreed.

Rebel Leader Says Contras Slipping Back To Nicaragua

By GEORGE GEDDA
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — A top Nicaraguan rebel leader says his forces have been re-infiltrating their homeland at the rate of 100 a day over the past two months and will have 15,000 troops spread throughout the country by spring.

Adolfo Calero, a leading figure in the United Nicaraguan Opposition, told a news conference Wednesday that 6,000 Contra forces have penetrated deep inside Nicaraguan territory since shortly after U.S. military aid was resumed last fall.

"We have regained the initiative," Calero said, adding that the rebels have encountered minimal resistance from the Sandinista Army while receiving an enthusiastic welcome from the local population.

But Nicaraguan Ambassador Carlos Tunnermann called Calero's statements "pure propaganda."

He said Calero was attempting to distract attention from the Contras' internal divisions. The fact that the rebels do not control even a single small town, Tunnermann said, is proof that Calero's claims of unopposed large scale infiltrations are unfounded.

Moreover, Tunnermann said the coffee crop is being harvested normally in the same areas Calero contends the Contras have infiltrated. If Calero's statements were true, the ambassador said, work on the harvest would have been disrupted.

Calero, at a news conference, repeated his earlier denials that profits from U.S. arms sales to Iran have been diverted to the Contras.

Disputing reports that the rebels received millions of dollars in outside aid last year, Calero said the Contras were so strapped for money they had to borrow $2 million to keep their operations going.

Receipts in 1986 barely totaled $1 million, Calero said, adding that he was certain that none of the money came from either Iran or Israel.

National Security Council staff deputy Oliver L. North, who was fired because of his alleged role in the diversion of money to the rebels, "never told me that we would get funds from Iran, Israel or from any other place," Calero said.

The meager 1986 income contrasted sharply with the period from 1984 to early 1985 when, he said, the rebels received between $20 million and $30 million.

Discussing the battlefield situation, Calero said there were more than 50 confrontations with Sandinista forces in many parts of Nicaragua during January. More than 200 Sandinista desertions have been reported, he said.

Calero has made optimistic statements in the past about the Contras' battlefield prospects but his past predictions on occasion have not been borne out. In August 1985, for example, he forecast a Contra victory within a year.

However, his claims of Contra re-infiltration of Nicaragua are substantiated by State Department estimates.

The Contra border crossings into Nicaragua, mostly from bases in Honduras, apparently began about a month after the resumption of U.S. military aid to the rebels in November.

Calero said a "small but important portion" of the U.S. aid has been delivered, including ground-to-air missiles. This, he said, influenced the rebel decision to move large numbers of troops back into Nicaraguan territory.

Growth of wholesale/retail, government and service employment in Pitt County exceeded 70 percent in the past decade.

Rare Disorder Brings Families Together In Self-Help Program

By MARY HELEN GILLESPIE
Associated Press Writer

WOODBURY, N.J. (AP) — The tumors that temporarily deformed 4-year-old Bethany Toughill's head and threatened to crush her brain are gone, but her parents remain committed to helping others afflicted with the rare disease.

"Who knows how many parents are out there who feel as lost as we did?" asked Bethany's father, Jeff Toughill. "That 'alone' feeling that you get when you find out is overwhelming."

Bethany was diagnosed at age 4 months as having the sometimes fatal histiocytosis-X, characterized by runaway production of white blood cells, or histiocytes.

The disease affects 200 to 300 Americans a year, according to Dr. Michael E. Osband, head of pediatric hematology-oncology at the Boston University School of Medicine and Boston City Hospital.

Bethany's disease is in remission, but doctors say the future holds no promises.

Meanwhile, Toughill and his wife, Sally, are busier than ever with the Histiocytosis-X Association of America Inc., the organization they started in their home three years ago to help other victims and their families.

The association publishes a monthly newsletter and has developed a mail and telephone network of information and support.

The Toughills, who have two healthy children and live in nearby Glassboro, have given support to a grieving mother in South Africa, as well as a distraught Israeli couple who lost their toddlers to the disease.

"It's so bittersweet. You hear happy stories and then ones where they lost their child. We feel like it's worth it," said Mrs. Toughill.

Toughill, 46, said the organization has had a dramatic impact on people. "They all call and say, 'I can't believe that I saw that word (histiocytosis) in print."

The runaway growth of histiocytes, which help control infection, is often treated with chemotherapy. The tumors are never malignant and can heal spontaneously.

As an infant, Bethany's neck and head were so swollen with tumors she couldn't sleep lying down. She underwent chemotherapy at Children's Hospital of Philadelphia.

"We sat there and thought we would love to talk to someone who knew about the disease to find out what's ahead," said Mrs. Toughill, 35. "We sat there among the leukemia patients. The only thing we had in common was the chemotherapy."

The couple began the association the next year with a small notice in a newsletter for cancer patients. They've received more than 100 responses from histiocytosis patients and their families around the world.

Toughill, who is head of security at Glassboro State College, and his wife, who works part-time as a medical assistant and is a part-time student at Gloucester County College, try to answer each letter with a phone call.

The association has received some funds from Boston University and a private donor, and members in Delaware, Pennsylvania, Wisconsin and California have donated time and services.

Bethany continues to do well after a scare 18 months ago. Doctors found a mass growing behind her eyes and around her pituitary gland, and the blonde-haired, green-eyed little girl had to undergo more chemotherapy.

"The doctors were afraid it was going to enlarge and crush into her brain. The chemotherapy halted the tumors," her mother said.

Bethany lives a fairly normal life these days, attending nursery school. But she still must undergo periodic checkups and a daily dose of hormones to control a kidney malfunction.

Pollution From Plastics Disrupts Underwater Life

By MICHAEL WEISSKOPF
L.A. Times-Washington Post

INDIAN SHORES, Fla. — The mangrove island in Boca Ciega Bay, so dazzling in the morning sun, so brilliantly ornamented by pelicans perched on boughs, bears a dark secret.

Inside the lush grove of tropical trees is death, an avian burial ground—skeletons of sea birds dangling from plastic fish line, feathers broken in the furious struggle for survival, a splintered wing fallen to the swampy island floor.

There are dozens of such islands off the west coast of Florida, and on most days they are scattered with winged victims—casualties of the plastic age.

Plastic, the synthetic invented by man to outlast, outperform and outsave natural resources, is ravaging nature in the process.

The very durability of plastic has created a disposal problem, and the tons of plastic products dumped daily into the nation's oceans, lakes and rivers are killing off the creatures that live there.

Hundreds of thousands of animals fall victim to plastic pollution each year, according to experts: curious seal pups in Alaskan waters that play in submerged fish nets, get entangled and choke to death; turtle hatchlings in the Gulf of Mexico that mistake plastic bags for jellyfish, fill their stomachs with the indigestible synthetic and die of intestinal blockage; whales in Cape Cod Bay that get so snarled in fishing gear that they cannot feed and then starve; and waterfowl in the Great Lakes that dive through six-pack rings and strangle themselves.

When a 12-pound hawksbill turtle died a few days after washing ashore near Honolulu in 1984, biologists performed an autopsy and found 3 pounds of plastic in its intestines.

The young turtle's gut was a trash bin for strands of plastic rope, a plastic balloon, shards of a hard plastic bottle, plastic beads, part of a plastic comb, a plastic golf tee, a plastic toothpaste cap, a plastic toy wheel, the top of a plastic syringe, plastic baggies and a plastic flower.

Federal and international laws ban marine dumping of many pollutants, but none apply to plastics. An annex to a 1973 antidumping treaty would ban ocean disposal of plastic articles, but the United States and other nations have declined to ratify it despite the pleas of ecologists.

"Plastic is an example of humans exploiting one resource without thinking out the consequences for other species and, thereby, for the future well-being for humans," said Phil Clapham, a New England whale biologist.

"We are depriving future generations of valuable resources and the simple esthetics of having a wide variety of wildlife to enjoy," Clapham said.

The history of plastics in this country dates to the 1860s, but it took the exigencies of World War II to spur large-scale production of the synthetic as a substitute for natural resources in short supply, such as rubber. Increased demand substantially reduced production costs, and plastics began replacing wood, metal, leather and glass as the material of the postwar era.

Last year, 1.2 trillion cubic inches of plastic were produced in the United States, nearly double the combined output of steel, aluminum and copper. Plastic is ubiquitous today, present in everything from Styrofoam cups to Army helmets to artificial hearts.

But plastic also has become a persistent pollutant in America's throw-away society, especially in the marine environment. The nation's seas and waterways are littered with the plastic wrappings and containers of myriad household products dumped by Navy vessels, merchant ships, commercial fishermen, passenger liners, pleasure boats and offshore oil and gas drilling rigs.

Those floating communities discharge hundreds of thousands of tons each year of plastic debris, according to a recent report by the Center for Environmental Education (CEE). The Navy alone was estimated to dump more than 60 tons a day.

Study Shows Reye's Can Strike Adults

Reye's syndrome, a potentially fatal disease that afflicts some children in the aftermath of routine viral infections, also can strike adults, according to physicians at the Bowman Gray School of Medicine.

The six-member Bowman Gray team described the recent case of a 61-year-old man who survived Reye's syndrome that followed type B influenza.

"This case demonstrates that Reye's syndrome may occur at any age," the team reported in the December issue of the medical journal, Archives of Internal Medicine.

Until this case, doctors had thought Reye's syndrome affected children and young adults, generally following viral infections such as influenza or chicken pox. A search of the medical literature turned up only one other case in an older adult — in a 51-year-old woman who also happened to be treated at N.C. Baptist Hospital, the team said.

Dr. E. Steve Roach, assistant professor of neurology and one of the authors, said the man had a proven case of type B influenza. He said the patient took aspirin for his influenza on top of the aspirin he had been taking daily to prevent strokes.

In children, use of aspirin during cases of influenza and chicken pox has been associated with Reye's syndrome.

Exercise May Not Be The Answer

L.A. Times-Washington Post
Exercise may not be the answer to helping women avoid the debilitating bone disease osteoporosis.

In a new study of almost 6,000 women, researchers from several Boston universities found that women who were athletic during and after college did not reduce their risk for the bone fractures associated with osteoporosis before or after menopause.

Approximately one in four women develops osteoporosis after menopause. Among the preventive measures are increasing calcium and vitamin D in the diet, which helps to build bone before age 35. After menopause, calcium, vitamin D and in some cases estrogen therapy may help slow the natural bone loss that leads to osteoporosis.

Load-bearing exercising, such as walking, jogging or lifting weights, had also been considered important in building bone and slowing later bone loss.

The new study, published in the January issue of Obstetrics and Gynecology, compared the rate of bone fractures among former college athletes and non-athletes both before and after menopause. While the athletes had a higher rate of bone fractures of all types because of injuries associated with exercise, when the researchers accounted for physical activity, there was no significant difference between the rates of fractures for women athletes and those who didn't exercise either before or after menopause.

How They Voted

Here's how area members of Congress were recorded on major roll call votes during the week ending Jan. 30.

HOMELESS AID — By a vote of 296 for and 76 against, the House passed and sent to the Senate legislation (HJ Res 102) to provide an additional $50 million this winter in emergency aid for the homeless.

The money was taken from a disaster relief account within the Federal Emergency Management Agency. It will fund food and shelter programs run by private organizations such as the United Way and American Red Cross.

Supporter Bruce Vento, D-Minn., said, "Literally within blocks of this Capitol building, the homeless are huddled for warmth on heating grates and in doorways. Across the nation emergency shelters are filled beyond capacity."

Opponent Robert Michel, R-Ill., said, "No one can quarrel with the need to assist the homeless," but that state treasuries, which have surpluses, are in a better position to help than the deficit-ridden U.S. Treasury.

Members voting yes supported the legislation.

North Carolina representatives voting yes were Walter Jones, D-1; Tim Valentine, D-2; Martin Lancaster, D-3; David Price, D-4; Stephen Neal, D-5; Charles Rose, D-7; W.G. Hefner, D-8; Alex McMillan, R-9, and James Clarke, D-11.

Those voting no were Howard Cole, R-6, and Cass Ballenger, R-10.

COMMITTEE FUNDING — By a vote of 58 for and 36 against, the Senate tabled (killed) an amendment to cut its committee spending by five percent during the First Session of the 100th Congress.

The Senate then approved a budget (S Res 80) of slightly more than $45 million this year for staff payroll, travel, consultants and virtually all other expenses of the 19 Senate committees.

The outlay is about three percent higher than last year's $43.6 million figure, with most of the increase allocated to raising staff salaries.

Wendell Ford, D-Ky., said approval of the cut would be "a declaration that the Senate does not believe it should make a 100 percent effort to deal with the serious problems faced by our farmers, miners, small businessmen, war veterans, aging citizens and others."

Steven Symms, R-Idaho, who sponsored the amendment, said that with the Potomac River in danger of being turned red by Washington's red ink, "the Senate is a good place to start on fiscal restraint."

Senators voting yes were opposed to cutting Senate committee budgets by five percent.

North Carolina Sen. Terry Sanford, D, voted yes. Sen. Jesse Helms, R, voted no.

PAY RAISE — The Senate approved, 88 for and 6 against, a resolution (SJ Res 34) to block hefty pay raises scheduled for early February for members of Congress, Cabinet secretaries, federal judges and top executive branch officials.

Salaries of House members and senators would rise 16 percent from $77,400 to $89,500, the pay of district court judges would rise from $81,000 to $89,500, and Cabinet officers' pay would be increased from $88,800 to $99,500.

The Senate sent the resolution to the House, where it must be passed and sent to President Reagan for his signature by midnight Feb. 3 if the increase is to be blocked.

Because the House had adjourned for the week without addressing the issue, and would not meet again until Feb. 3, it appeared the resolution would fail and the raises would take effect.

Charles Grassley, R-Iowa, said American public opinion is against lawmakers getting 16 percent higher pay.

John Glenn, D-Ohio, said his support for higher federal salaries was politically unpopular, but correct because, "I want to see highly talented people in government."

Senators voting yes wanted to block the pay raises for top federal officials.

N.C. Sens. Sanford and Helms both voted yes.

SALARY ISSUE — By a vote of 27 for and 66 against, the Senate rejected an amendment to exclude members of Congress from the substantial pay raises proposed for top federal officials (see preceding vote).

Sponsor Pete Wilson, R-Calif., said "It is just wrong" for lawmakers to receive 16 percent raises while they are trying to slash the federal deficit.

Opponent Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., said the amendment "would relegate Congress to a lower status" than the judicial and executive branches.

Senators voting yes wanted to exclude members of Congress from the proposed pay raises.

Sens. Sanford and Helms both voted no.

Senate Panel Says Cuts In Food Assistance Funds Are Too Severe

By DONNA CASSATA
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration should reconsider its proposed agriculture budget for fiscal 1988 because the planned cuts in farm subsidies and food assistance programs are too deep, say members of a Senate panel.

"The administration desperately needs to go back to the drawing board, and we'll join you there," freshman Sen. Kent Conrad, D-N.D., told Agriculture Secretary Richard E. Lyng at a hearing on the department's proposed budget Wednesday.

Members of the Senate Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition and Forestry criticized the budget for fiscal 1988, which begins Oct. 1, citing changes in the school lunch program and cuts in farm income supports.

"I'm not saying agriculture should be immune from scrutiny," said Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., the committee's chairman. "But what the administration has handed us is a blindfold and a meat cleaver, when what we need are the tools to perform delicate surgery on a very sick patient."

Lyng, who earlier in the year encouraged Congress to "stay the course" on price support programs, described the budget as meeting "the high priority needs of agriculture while at the same time being fiscally responsible."

He defended the proposal, saying the cuts were made necessary by the Gramm-Rudman deficit reduction law and its target of $108 billion in cuts.

"The nation, and particularly agriculture, will benefit greatly as a result of reducing the budget deficit," said Lyng.

The agriculture budget includes cuts in the domestic food assistance programs, with the elimination of subsidies for lunches served to upper-income school children and a cut in food aid to third-world countries. Such changes have been proposed in prior years but Congress largely ignored them.

Leahy contended that the plan is part of an administration policy that has worsened the nation's hunger problem.

Citing an article in the February 1987 issue of Scientific American, titled "Hunger in the United States," Leahy said the country has 12 million hungry children and 8 million hungry adults.

"Hunger was virtually eliminated in the 1970s with food stamps, the supplemental school lunch program," Leahy said. "The administration began reducing and modifying those programs so that by 1982, hunger was widespread."

Lyng, who challenged the article's accuracy, told the committee, "I do not believe we are ignoring the needs of the poor people and the growing number of hungry in this country."

Arguing for the change in the school lunch program, Lyng said, "It seems very strange to me that the taxpayer of this government should be asked to subsidize the school lunches of my grandchildren. They're affluent. Their families and parents are perfectly able to take care of themselves."

Lyng encountered more criticism on an administration farm subsidy proposal known as "decoupling," which is a broad term used to describe the basing of the subsidies on factors other than the amount of a farm's production.

Decoupling removes the links between government payments and crop production decisions, allowing farmers to receive the money regardless of the size of their crops.

"This is an optional program. Some farmers find it very good," Lyng said. "It has the advantage of reducing their cost and increasing their demand."

But Sen. Richard Lugar, R-Ind., questioned whether the federal government should "make payments this large to farmers who produce nothing."

China May Buy U.S. Wheat

WASHINGTON (AP) — China may be developing as one of the American farmer's best prospects for improving wheat and corn exports this year, according to a new Agriculture Department report.

The department's Foreign Agricultural Service said Wednesday that total U.S. wheat shipments to foreign buyers is forecast at 26.5 million metric tons in the marketing year that will end on May 31, up 6 percent from 1985-86.

Even so, total U.S. wheat exports have dropped 32 percent from 38.8 million tons in 1984-85 and are down 46 percent from the record level of 48.8 million tons in 1981-82.

Corn exports, forecast at 28.6 million tons, are expected to decline 9 percent from 1985-86 and be down 40 percent from 47.4 million tons shipped in 1984-85. The corn marketing year runs through Aug. 31.

A metric ton is about 2,205 pounds and is equal to 36.7 bushels of wheat or 39.4 bushels of corn.

For both grains, China is a big influence on future prospects. One reason is the recent announcement by USDA that China is eligible to buy up to 1 million tons of U.S. wheat under the Export Enhancement Program, which allows subsidized sales to designated countries. So far, China has not bought any under the program.

"The outlook for Chinese sales remains bright as wheat consumption has been accelerating rapidly," the report said, adding that if consumption continues to expand sharply, China could decide to increase imports from the current modest estimate of 6.5 million tons.

China imported as much as 13 million tons of wheat from all foreign sources during the early 1980s, including a peak of 8.7 million tons from the United States in 1981-82.

The introduction of new farm programs and a freer market atmosphere helped stimulate production, however. This, along with political considerations and foreign exchange shortages, caused wheat imports to be halved to about 6.7 million tons in 1985-86, including only 541,000 tons from the United States.

Although there has been some stabilization of U.S. wheat export prospects recently, the outlook still is "in a very depressed state," the report said. Since the records of the early 1980s, production has expanded by 16 percent in foreign countries, particularly in China, the European Common Market and the Soviet Union.
