Soviets Launch Six-Month Space Mission

By JOHN-THOR DAHLBURG
Associated Press Writer

MOSCOW (AP) — Two Soviet cosmonauts streaked today toward a rendezvous with the Mir orbiting laboratory, beginning a mission in space expected to last at least six months.

The cosmonauts blasted off from the Baikonur cosmodrome on the steppes of Soviet Central Asia at 12:38 a.m. today Moscow time (2:38 p.m. EST Thursday), in the first manned space launch since July.

Soviet television showed the waving cosmonauts climbing into the Soyuz TM-2 capsule atop the rocket amid swirling snowflakes and showed the rocket climb steadily into the sky atop of plume of smoke and flame.

Mission commander Yuri Romanenko, 42, and flight engineer Alexander Laveikin, 35, were to begin link-up operations Saturday night with the space station, Radio Moscow said today. The state-run radio's noon news broadcast gave no further details of the progress of the mission.

Officials said earlier that docking would place Sunday. There was no word on how long the mission would last, but it appeared the cosmonauts would stay aloft at least six months. News reports in January said they will be joined aboard Mir in July by a joint Soviet-Syrian crew now training.

Interviewed on television at the mission control center, Professor Konstantin P. Feokistov said the cosmonauts would check the capsule's instruments and links with ground-based systems today.

Once aboard the Mir, Feokistov said, the cosmonauts will conduct experiments in astrophysics and other scientific work. The Tass news agency said they had also prepared for medical and biological experiments, but gave no details.

During the commentary, when the rocket reached the point where one booster separated, Feokistov started to make an apparent reference to a past Soviet space accident. "In effect, once there was a case..." he began.

"Konstantin, let's not mention that case now," said the interviewer, cutting him off.

Four Soviet cosmonauts are known to have died during missions. It was not clear if Feokistov was referring to a known accident or one not previously reported.

The Mir, which means "peace" in Russian, has been unmanned since cosmonauts Leonid Kizim and Vladimir Solovov returned from orbit July 16 after 125 days in space. The station was launched in February, followed by Kizim and Solovov's spacecraft on March 13.

The United States has halted manned missions the shuttle Challenger exploded Jan. 28, 1986, and killed all seven people aboard.

The Soyuz TM-2 is a new generation of Soviet space capsule. The first model of the TM series, which replaces the old Soyuz T series, was tested in May 1986 with an unmanned flight and an automatic linkup with the Mir station.

News reports then said the Soyuz TM craft has more sophisticated docking controls, radios, computer equipment and emergency rescue facilities.

Conflicting Reports Cloud Waite Status

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Two taxi drivers said they saw 10 gunmen and four turbaned Shiite Moslem sheiks escorting Anglican Church envoy Terry Waite in a Beirut suburb, and that the missing hostage negotiator waved at onlookers.

"I stopped my taxicab to watch, but the escorts waved me away, shouting: 'Don't stop. Drive on.' I did," said one of the two drivers who reported seeing Waite walking in a street close to the airport highway in southern Beirut's Ghobeiry suburb at about 3 p.m. Thursday.

The report was one of several conflicting claims about the status and whereabouts of Waite, who has not surfaced publicly nor been in contact with the Church of England headquarters since Jan. 20.

Meanwhile, the highest ranking American educator in Lebanon was evacuated from Moslem west Beirut today. Police said Irene Faffler, 50, dean of Beirut University College, left the kidnap-plagued half of the city shortly before noon.

The U.S. Embassy's chief security officer, Jim McWhaiter, met Ms. Faffler after she crossed the Green Line dividing the capital into Moslem and Christian sectors, police said. He took her to the embassy in the Christian suburb of Aukar, 7 miles north of Beirut.

Of Waite, one of the witnesses said: "I saw him smiling and waving his hand to onlookers as he walked. He wore a gray raincoat. I haven't the slightest doubt about his identity. I know him and I saw him this afternoon."

The bearded, 230-pound Waite is 6 feet 7 inches tall and towers above the average Lebanese. He wore a raincoat when he was last seen by reporters Jan. 20 leaving the seaside Riviera Hotel in west Beirut to meet with members of the pro-Iranian Islamic Jihad. Islamic Jihad, made up of Shiite Moslem extremists, has claimed to be holding Americans Terry Anderson and Thomas Sutherland since 1985.

Waite, Archbishop of Canterbury Robert Runcie's personal emissary, has not contacted the church or his family since Jan. 20. There have been several unconfirmed reports he was seen, including in east Lebanon's Bekaa valley.

The weekly magazine Al-Shiraa today quoted informed Islamic sources in Beirut as predicting Waite would emerge, a free man, next week "after the U.S. military storm in the Mediterranean settles down." It quoted the same sources, not identified, as claiming to have "solid information" Waite is a CIA agent.

Reporter Seib Says 'No Spy'

By MAUREEN JOHNSON
Associated Press Writer

ZURICH, Switzerland (AP) — Wall Street Journal reporter Gerald F. Seib said today he was not physically harmed during nearly a week's detention in Tehran, and flatly denied that he was a spy.

"I am still not sure why I was detained, or how I was released," Seib told reporters after arriving at Zurich airport on a Swissair flight from Tehran. Iran had initially accused him of being a spy.

Seib read a prepared statement that lasted about four minutes and refused to answer questions. He would not say where he and his wife, Barbara Rosewicz, also a Journal reporter, were going. The couple is based in Cairo.

"I was simply doing my job. I am a journalist and that is all I am," he told about 30 reporters in a VIP lounge at Zurich airport after arriving at 2:35 p.m.

"I am thrilled and thankful to be here," said Seib. "This happens to be my 31st birthday. And just being here is the best birthday present possible."

"I know my wife, Barbara, my parents, my family and my colleagues have all been worrying about me. I want through you to tell all of them that I am just fine. I came to no physical harm in Iran."

Earlier today, there were conflicting reports about Seib's departure from Iran. Officials at Tehran airport had said Seib would fly from Tehran to Frankfurt, while others said it was not certain which flight Seib would be on.

Seib had a trimmed beard and was wearing brown flannel trousers and a sports jacket. He looked serious, but not overly tired or haggard.

The reporter thanked the Swiss government, whose diplomats had

Soviets Say A-Tests Will Be Resumed

By GARY LEE

L.A. Times-Washington Post

MOSCOW — The Soviet Union announced plans Thursday to resume nuclear testing after an 18-month pause, saying the decision was necessary because of growing risks to its security interests and the refusal of the United States to observe a mutual ban on nuclear explosions.

Soviet officials, however, offered hope that a joint moratorium could eventually be arranged that would lead to an ultimate permanent ban on nuclear testing to be agreed to by the superpowers.

Deputy Foreign Minister Vladimir Petrovsky said that as soon as the U.S. administration halted nuclear testing, the Soviet side would follow suit. He also said that Moscow would be willing to pursue compromise steps toward a complete ban, including a joint reduction in the frequency and yield of nuclear tests.

The Soviet announcement followed the first American nuclear explosion this year at a Nevada testing ground on Tuesday. The Soviet leadership declared last December that Moscow would be compelled to end its unilateral moratorium after the first U.S. test in 1987.

Calling the American test this week a "cynical act," Petrovsky said, "By this provocative step, the American administration has rejected the example of the Soviet Union and its calls to convert the moratorium into a two-way measure to halt the arms race."

"A situation has arisen which can seriously damage our security and that of our allies," Petrovsky said, adding that the U.S.S.R. would not be forced to start its own nuclear testing.

Petrovsky refused to give a date when the next Soviet nuclear test would be conducted, nor would he say whether preparatory work had begun at Soviet testing grounds.

"The day of our nuclear explosion will be decided by the Soviet government, taking all circumstances into consideration," he told a press conference.

"This is a forced measure," Petrovsky said of the Soviet decision to end the moratorium, which began on Aug. 6, 1985, the 40th anniversary of the day when the United States dropped an atomic bomb on Hiroshima.

Petrovsky said a resolution passed by House Democrats on Wednesday urging an end to nuclear testing provided "grounds for hope that reason will triumph and a responsible policy will be pursued." He and other Soviet officials declined to say whether the Soviet tests would be aimed at countering the U.S. Strategic Defense Initiative program for research toward a space-based antimissile system.

But Evgeny Primakov, director of the Institute for World Economics and International Relations, said Moscow does not intend to build weapons matching those in the SDI program, also known as Star Wars.

"Our response to the American Star Wars program will not be symmetrical," he said, "and nuclear tests will not be designed to build symmetrical systems."

Leading Soviet scientists and military officials have said that Moscow would confront any American antimissile defense shield by building cheaper countermeasures such as decoys that would undercut the ability of President Reagan's proposed SDI to target and intercept incoming nuclear missiles.

Evgeny Velikhov, vice president of the Soviet Academy of Science and a leading adviser to Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev, said the American objective of making nuclear weapons obsolete through an impenetrable space-based defense was impossible to achieve.

"I believe neither the United States nor anyone else in the world has a weapon which will make nuclear weapons obsolete and impotent," he said.

Speakers Support Six-District Plan

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

WINTERVILLE — Four speakers commenting on a proposed new method of electing members of the Pitt County Board of Commissioners Thursday night voiced support for a six-district plan.

But only one of the speakers said at-large representatives should also be included on the board.

Only 15 people attended the hearing at A.G. Cox School.

The present six commissioners are required to live in districts but are voted on by the county at-large.

Under the proposed plan, six commissioners would have to live in one of six new districts, but would be elected only by voters in the district. Three other commissioners could live anywhere in the county and would be elected by voters countywide.

Rebecca Davenport of Route 1,

Winterville, told commissioners "I'd like to see one (elected) from each district and (only) two at-large."

But the other speakers — Judy McLawhorn of Route 2, Winterville, D.D. Garrett of Greenville and William Elbert of Winterville — said no at-large seats should be included in the new voting plan.

"I am opposed to any of the at-large seats," Ms. McLawhorn said. "I like the six-district plan."

"I think if we would go with at-large seats (it would) give the city of Greenville an opportunity to have more people on the board."

Garrett, speaking as president of the Pitt County Chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said the six-district plan would "allow blacks" the opportunity to fill one-third of the seats on the board

Articles Featured

A new science teacher's reference published by the National Science Teachers Association includes a series of articles by an East Carolina University faculty couple which appeared in the journal "Science and Children" from 1978 to 1982.

The articles by Dr. Carolyn Hampton of the department of science education and her late husband, Dr. Carol D. Hampton, comprise a major portion of the book, "Classroom Creative Culture: Algae to Anoles."

The book is designed to provide teachers with guidance in collecting and caring for live organisms for classroom use.

A prefatory note by editor Phyllis

Marcuccio offers the compilation as part of the "living legacy" of Dr. Carol Hampton, who died last fall as the book went to press.

Labor Force

The November 1986 civilian labor force in Greene and Pitt counties was estimated at 57,030, down 570 from September and down 2,160 persons over the twelve-month period, according to Jim Hannan, manager of the Employment Security Commission in Greenville.

Total employment continued its seasonal plunge, decreasing by 1,170 workers since September 1986, said Hannan.

The unemployment estimates rose as the employment figures continued a downward trend. Agricultural and other nonagricultural related industries trimmed their seasonal workforce, inflating the unemployment figure by 28.2 percent since September 1986, he said.

Nonmanufacturing payrolls increased primarily due to government employment which rose by 4.9 percent over the two-month period. Manufacturing employment experienced some setbacks as the number of tobacco workers decreased by 33.8 percent from September 1986.

Overall, manufacturing employment declined by only 1.9 percent, Hannan said.

Training Seminar

Mary Shields, executive director for the Advocacy Center for Children's Education and Parent Training, conducted a training seminar in Greenville this week.

The ACCEPT program focuses on making parents of disabled or chronically ill children more aware of the rights concerning their child's education.

Immediate program goals are to organize and implement a network of parent groups which share the same goals, according to Ms. Shields. The network will strengthen the lines of communication from community to community and establish some shared insight for parents.

Teacher Of Year

LuAnn Jordan of Greenville has been selected "Teacher of the Year" at Sam D. Bundy Elementary School in Farmville.

She is in her fourth year of teaching the educable mentally handicapped class at the school.

A Hertford native, Miss Jordan attended College of the Albemarle in Elizabeth City and received a degree in special education from East Carolina University. She is pursuing a master's degree in learning disabilities.

'Dynamics' Seminar

The Pitt-Greenville Chamber of Commerce and the Pitt Community College Small Business Center are sponsoring a "People Dynamics" seminar Tuesday from 9 a.m. until noon at the Holiday Inn.

The seminar, conducted by Tim Miller of Bethesda, Md., will concern human behavior, management skills and handling conflict and stress.

For information or reservations call 752-4101 by noon Monday.

In 1985, Pitt County's average weekly manufacturing wage was $32.98.

NCSU Lists Honor Students

Local students have been named to honor lists for the fall semester at North Carolina State University.

To make the dean's list, students must earn an academic average of 3.25 or higher if they are carrying 15 or more hours of coursework or a 3.5 or better if they are carrying 12 to 14 hours.

Freight Trains Collide

CONCORD, N.Y. (AP) — Two freight trains collided today in western New York, killing one person and injuring four others, authorities said.

The accident occurred about 25 miles south of Buffalo and was reported to authorities at 8:57 a.m., said Erie County sheriff's dispatcher Timothy McGuire.

The freights were both Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co. trains.

The conditions of the injured, who were being taken to an area hospital, were not known, McGuire said.

In Buffalo, yardmaster Owen Lennon of the Chessie System, owner of the B&O, said one train with 50 cars was headed from Buffalo to Chicago and the second train with 23 cars was headed from DuBois, Pa., to Buffalo.

The crash happened where there is only one track, he said.

"One train was supposed to take a siding," he said. "We're not sure exactly which one as yet. One was to take the siding and the other was to proceed. The siding is just south of where they collided."

The county medical examiner was called to the scene, McGuire said.

IRS Promises To Simplify W-4

By JIM LUTHER
AP Tax Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Internal Revenue Service today acknowledged its new W-4 tax-withholding form is too confusing and promised an all-out effort to simplify the instructions — at least for most taxpayers.

IRS Commissioner Lawrence B. Gibbs refused to set any deadlines, but added, "I hope in the next several weeks we will be able to come out with something ... We are working night and day."

Gibbs also said that the IRS is trying to figure out a way to avoid imposing penalties on taxpayers who conscientiously try to have the proper amount withheld from their paychecks but fall short because the form is too complex.

Gibbs testified before the Senate Finance and House Ways and Means subcommittees that oversee the IRS. His command performance followed a month of complaints about the new W-4 form, which all taxpayers are required to file by Oct. 1 in order to adjust their withholding to meet the changes brought about by the landmark tax overhaul of 1986.

"The length of the form and number of computations have worked against our efforts to assist taxpayers in an early adjustment of their withholding for the effects of tax reform," Gibbs said.

"If this is the result, then our efforts towards accuracy are less production, and in the larger picture we risk having the public's perception of tax reform negatively affected," he added.

The new W-4 form is just like the one that has been used for 20 years — one-third page long and quite simple. But the instructions and worksheet designed to assist taxpayers in determining how many withholding allowances they should claim have been increased from almost two full pages to almost four.

The IRS said the increases were necessary to meet the requirement from Congress that most taxpayers be able to have just enough tax withheld to match their tax liability.

The commissioner made these points:
—The IRS hopes to develop quickly a simpler set of instructions and worksheets that will be usable by most lower- and middle-income taxpayers.

—A second, alternative form, for those with more complex tax situations, would come later.

—In both cases, Gibbs emphasized, "We don't want a simpler form that results in (significant) underwithholding or overwithholding. That is simply unacceptable."

Train Probe Centering On TV Set

WASHINGTON (AP) — Authorities today resumed dragging a river near the recent Amtrak accident in Maryland in search of a television, after a tipster raised the possibility that two train crewmen involved in the crash were watching a football game.

Bill Bush, a spokesman for the National Transportation Safety Board, said an agency official at the scene reported that divers resumed searching the river early today. They had broken off the effort in late afternoon Thursday without finding anything.

The NTSB disclosed Thursday that an anonymous telephone caller urged authorities to look at a certain location of the river near Baltimore, saying someone was seen throwing a television into the water shortly after the Amtrak train collided with a Conrail locomotive.

A National Football League playoff game between the New York Giants and San Francisco 49ers began about 30 minutes before the Jan. 4 accident, and several dramatic plays occurred in the minutes just before the collision.

A spokesman for the Baltimore County Police Department said divers stopped searching the Gunpowder River near the accident site late Thursday afternoon without finding anything but that a resumption of the search has not been ruled out.

Investigators have been focusing on the conduct of the Conrail engineer, Ricky Gates, and brakeman, Edward Cromwell, whose locomotive ran a series of signal warnings before skidding into the path of the Amtrak passenger train. Sixteen people were killed and 175 injured in the accident.

John Rehor, chief NTSB investigator in the accident, said any conclusion that the two Conrail crewmen may have been watching television in the locomotive cab remained "highly speculative."

Westmoreland

CAMP LEJEUNE, N.C. (AP) — Marine Cpl. Michael Westmoreland was sentenced to life in prison Thursday after being found guilty by a military jury of conspiracy to commit murder and murder by aiding and abetting a murder.

Westmoreland also was sentenced to forfeiture of all pay and allowances, reduction in rank to grade E-1 and a dishonorable discharge.

Westmoreland, 23, was charged with murder and conspiracy to murder in the July 30, 1984, stabbing of Constance H. Morelock, 23.

Kissinger, Soviet Dissident Sakharov Meet In Moscow

By JOHN-THOR DAHLBURG
Associated Press Writer

MOSCOW (AP) — Nobel Peace Prize laureates Henry Kissinger and Andrei Sakharov met for the first time, and Kissinger called the encounter "very moving."

Sakharov meanwhile told reporters he will return temporarily next month to his former home in exile so he can work in peace and retrieve belongings left there.

Kissinger, the former U.S. secretary of state, led a delegation from the U.S. Council of Foreign Relations that included former U.N. Ambassador Jeane Kirkpatrick.

The delegation pulled up to Sakharov's apartment building at 8 p.m. in a black Soviet-built limousine. The 65-year-old Soviet dissident had come down from his seventh-floor apartment to greet the Americans on the cold sidewalk.

"This is very moving," Kissinger said Thursday as he shook hands with Sakharov.

Sakharov thanked Mrs. Kirkpatrick for keeping his case before the world body during her tenure from 1981-85.

"I know of Madame Kirkpatrick and I am very grateful to you for the defense you gave me in your time," he said. An interpreter translated Sakharov's words into English for Mrs. Kirkpatrick, who bent her head closer to him as he spoke.

"This is a great pleasure, a great honor," she said.

She and the other Americans then entered Sakharov's apartment building for a discussion.

Defense Executives Get Higher Salaries

WASHINGTON (AP) — Defense contractors are paying their top executives in excess of 20 percent more than similar companies that do not work for the military, a new audit shows.

The pay differential within industry stems primarily from a practice by Pentagon contractors of providing larger, and more frequent, bonuses to executives, the audit found.

But annual base pay raises awarded by Pentagon contractors also outpace those at similar-size companies that don't perform defense work.

Those conclusions are spelled out in a 93-page audit, begun more than 2½ years ago by the Pentagon's independent Office of Inspector General. The audit report is dated Jan. 23 and was released Thursday.

The auditors, in framing recommendations for Pentagon procurement officials, noted the salaries of top defense industry executives "comprise less than 1 percent of total contract costs" charged to government contracts.

But the auditors also termed executive compensation "a highly visible and sensitive portion of the costs charged to government contracts" and concluded the Defense Logistics Agency and the Defense Contract Audit Agency could do a better job of monitoring salary costs charged to Pentagon contracts and forcing adjustments when needed. The results "reinforce the importance of contracting officials controlling and monitoring such costs," the auditors concluded.

The Pentagon cannot prevent a contractor from paying a large salary to an executive. But it can control the extent to which salary fees are charged to government contracts and thus included in reimbursable overhead costs.

The compensation audit was not designed to review specific Pentagon decisions on salaries included in individual contracts and indeed, does not disclose any specific dollar figures. Rather, its aim was to provide Pentagon officials with a snapshot view of how the defense industry compares generally with civilian commercial industry.

Earlier studies by Pentagon as well as congressional agencies have explored the question of whether defense work is more profitable than civilian work, for the most part concluding that Pentagon contracts do provide more profit.

Mayor Tours Streets

ATLANTA (AP) — Mayor Andrew Young spent 36 hours wandering his city disguised as a homeless man, unrecognized because most people looked away when the man wearing tattered clothing approached.

"I passed some of my good friends," Young said in an interview Thursday with ABC-TV. "I asked one of them for a quarter for a cup of coffee. I knocked on his car window as he was leaving the church, and he didn't even want to look at me."

The former U.N. ambassador and congressman hit the streets Jan. 26 during the taping of a series on the homeless for WSB-TV. He said the experience convinced him that those on the street aren't bums but people with no other choice.

"The tendency is to think that homeless people are bums who don't want to work," Young said. "But the night I spent in a shelter, fully one-third of the people there were getting up on their own and showering at 5 a.m. so they could get to the day labor center by 6 o'clock."

Young said that at times he was nervous and scared and that the experience was bearable only because he knew he eventually could go home.

He called the plight of the homeless a national emergency.

"It is when you have in a city as successful as Atlanta ... and still we have somewhere in the neighborhood (of) 5,000 to 10,000 people sleeping on our streets. There's something wrong there."

Young suggested attacking homelessness with job training, low-interest government home loans and education loans.

"We've got to line up people with jobs that exist," he said. "We find that about a third almost of the homeless that we have in our city, with about three to six months help we could put them in jobs and houses."

"We have the jobs. We don't have the houses."

Error Committed

It's not sound policy to let 250 people alter judgment on an issue that affects roughly 95,000.

But that's what the Pitt County Board of Education did when it refused to discuss two plans revising school attendance lines. After objections to the un-presented plans were aired by one group of residents, board members decided they wouldn't even look at the proposals.

The board should reconsider its haphazard decision and examine the plans. The proposals' merits affect the entire population of Pitt County — not just 250 vocal citizens. Whether or not either proposal is accepted, the plans are worthy of careful scrutiny, not hasty dismissal without deliberation.

Board members should remind themselves of the oath of responsibility they took for each of the roughly 95,000 citizens in Pitt County. When making decisions setting public policy, they are obligated to act in the county's best interests. Monday's action clearly violates that pledge.

Furthermore, the board's motion to have the staff prepare yet another set of attendance line revisions was redundant, considering the fact that the board didn't even take a peek at the first alternatives. The suggestion that an independent research group work with the board on redrawing attendance lines is equally futile.

If board members didn't even look at the first alternatives, how could they possibly know whether they objected to them? Without explanation or discussion, how could they determine whether outside help on the issue was needed? The board laid down criteria for preparing further options without even knowing whether the first proposals met these stipulations or not.

Monday's action amounts to the board letting 250 citizens think for them. The board allowed itself to be railroaded out of considering a proposal that could, in the long run, improve education in the county. The board's actions spell out a refusal to approach tough issues in the face of public controversy.

The options the board spurned are carefully thought-out, long-term approaches to the concept of redrawing school attendance lines. They are not Band-Aid approaches devised with a "fix-it now" mentality. They deserve recognition by the board.

The Pitt County Board of Education should admit its error and ask to consider the two alternatives. Then, it should examine them with the best interests of the citizens — all 95,000 — firmly in mind.

Shrinking Resource

To most citizens, water is a resource taken for granted. It's clean, cheap and readily available when the faucet is turned on.

A study that determined groundwater supplies are plummeting, however, sharply alters that image.

The study — funded in part by three Pitt County municipalities — revealed groundwater supplies have dropped over 100 feet in eastern North Carolina since 1900. That finding is a startling reminder that water is a limited resource — one that is feeling the pressure of economic growth and development.

It is a finding that must be heeded by governments and industries, including those in Pitt County, who are dependent on groundwater for existence.

The study contains facts that could scare any reasonable official or citizen into conservation measures. It is valuable both as a warning device and as a planning tool. The problem is a serious one, with repercussions far broader than deeper wells and bigger pumps.

The first, most obvious solution is conservation. A return to the days of placing bricks in toilet tops, however, and putting water savers on showers and kitchen faucets, may not be enough.

Planning officials may have to limit the size of groundwater pumps, restrict pumping to specified time periods and place new wells only in areas where groundwater levels are adequate.

These measures could hinder growth potential in areas where expansion has overtaxed ground water supplies. But the alternative — exhausting the resource most essential to growth — is neither feasible nor desirable.

Greenville is fortunate. It is not wholly dependent on groundwater for its water supply. But surrounding areas — municipalities like Farmville and Ayden and rural water corporations such as Bell Arthur and Eastern Pines — are completely dependent.

It is for these surrounding areas that the implications of a shrinking groundwater supply are most severe.

For this reason, the significance of planning should not be underplayed. Greenville and Pitt County officials should acknowledge the results of this study as crucial and prepare to take whatever steps are necessary to ensure the area's water supply remains intact.

Names Would Have To Change

RALEIGH — Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev's call for contested elections and secret balloting in the USSR promises to open a whole new industry for that country's troubled economy: campaign consulting.

Can't you see the campaign consultants licking their chops in Washington as they envision the consulting fees to be earned in the world's third largest country.

But, in running a campaign for the Politburo, campaign consultants will be confronted with troubles they'd rarely, if ever, experience in the U.S.

Take, for example, the design of campaign buttons. How will they ever make the Russian names fit? Eduard Shevardnadze, the foreign minister, would have to use a nickname, as did President Eisenhower. But somehow "Nad" lacks the voter appeal of "Ike."

How about bumper stickers? Soviet cars, those which they have, are too narrow for names like Vyacheslav Molotov.

No doubt, Soviet candidates would soon follow the lead of Gary Hart-pence and shorten their names. Mikhail Gorbachev would, of course, become Mike Bach. There'd be a Nicky K., Lenny Breeze, Yuri Andrews and Konnie Chernobyl.

Other American practices certainly would be copied. Candidates would board the Trans-Siberian express for a whistlestop tour of the Gulag. Citizens would find their mailboxes stuffed with candidate literature on the day before Election Day. (The government would likely open the mail for the citizenry as an added service.)

All of the candidates would want to look their best and project that youthful, all-Soviet glow which leaders of that country so often possess. Mike Bach would have to get rid of his spot, and incumbent members of the Politburo might paint their aluminum walkers day-glo red. The wives of Soviet politicians would be reassigned to the Baltic fleet and newer, sleeker wives, like Mrs. Gorbachev, would begin standing alongside the candidates.

In a nation as large as the USSR, TV campaigning would be essential. In their debates, the consultants would tell the candidates to ignore ideology, and focus on consumer issues, like the long lines at the vodka store.

Imagine the TV ads. Mike Bach's dad will be dragged out of his nursing home, deposited on the front porch of a thatched hut and told to talk about what a "good little communist" his boy was. "When I'd give him a ruble for shoveling snow, he'd always give it to the Central Committee for redistribution among the workers," he'll say.

The candidate and his wife would appear in the living room of their apartment and talk of how they never go to church, never establish individual goals and never wish to travel abroad. A dozen other adults and children would stand behind them as the candidate spoke of the socialist glory of sharing a two-bedroom apartment with three other families.

There'd have to be negative ads. In the USSR, the political spectrum is exactly opposite ours. "Conservatives" are on the left. "Liberals" are on the right. Gorbachev's liberalization would be denounced in the provinces. Candidates running on his ticket would be called "Gorbachev liberals," and be accused of losing Afghanistan to the God worshippers.

Maybe after the first couple of elections, American and Soviet politicians could begin meeting to share notes on campaign tactics and to trade technologies like the bumper stickers which stay stuck right through until the next campaign.

Student Rights And The Court

SALT LAKE CITY — From hundreds of platforms on Commencement Day, high school seniors are told that they live amidst unprecedented new opportunities; that to ensure an ever-improving society, they must continue to come up with innovations. On these and previous occasions, students are encouraged to be mavericks, to take challenges and to think for themselves.

Unfortunately, students' intrinsic idealism often collides with queasy school administrators who judge certain opinions and behavior to be inappropriate. Nowhere is this confrontation more common than to members of high school newspaper staffs.

It is fitting in this bicentennial year of the Constitution that the rights of high school students will be addressed by the U.S. Supreme Court. For what is at stake here is the future of democracy.

The other day, the high court agreed to determine the degree to which high school officials may regulate the content of newspapers written by high school students. The historic case involves a split federal appeals court decision last July that said a Hazelwood, Mo., high school principal violated the First Amendment rights of student journalists when he prohibited the publication of articles on teenage pregnancy and divorce in the school's newspaper, the Spectrum.

The principal says he prevented the Spectrum from profiling three pregnant students in order to protect their privacy and that of their parents. In the meantime, students on the Spectrum sought an injunction in federal district court, claiming the principal's action violated their First and Fourteenth Amendment rights.

In May of 1985, a federal district judge ruled that because the Spectrum was produced as part of the journalism department curriculum, it was not a public forum and thus not entitled to the same rights held by commercial newspapers. But the U.S. Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals reversed that judgment in a 2-1 decision last July, claiming the censored articles "would not have materially disrupted classrooms or given rise to substantial disorder."

Naturally, most school officials sympathize with the Hazelwood School District. They fear, as the Hazelwood School Board stipulates in papers filed with the Supreme Court, that, if sustained, the appellate court's decision would place "the school principal and journalism teachers in the untenable position of having to make highly technical and potentially costly legal judgments about tort liability and the limits of First Amendment protection."

The National School Board Association concurs. In a friend-of-the-court brief, the association declares that the potential economic costs to a school district outweigh the benefits of a free-wheeling, independent, student-run newspaper. The association predicts that if the Eighth Circuit Court's ruling stands, school boards across the country will eliminate student newspapers entirely. If that happens, will students be better off?

Probably so. At present, most high school newspapers are so watered down and irrelevant that few peers even bother to read them, unless one happens to be a star on the football team. If educators can't hook students on their own newspaper, what are the chances they'll read a community or urban newspaper when they reach voting age?

So what if high school student newspapers are terminated? Unless their writers have editorial freedom, students won't have the adrenalin to raise the funds, meet the odds and produce their own product, if necessary.

Few young people are deliberately cynical or calculating. Most feel forced into detachment and premature cynicism because few high school administrators offer them anything that is relevant or stable and meaningful, like their own student newspaper.

This is why every high school student who takes English should be required to file at least one article for the school newspaper before graduating. How else can students value an exchange of ideas?

Of course, a student-controlled newspaper that addresses the grievances and concerns of peers probably wouldn't decide whether anyone drops out of school. But it would set a tone of self-determination and respect for those who remain to graduate. That, in itself, would be worth any liability risk incurred by school districts.

Six-Year Itch Hits

WASHINGTON (AP) — At first glance, it may appear that the Reagan administration may be suffering a severe case of the six-year itch, or to be breaking out with a rash of resignations.

But White House officials insist the patient is in good health considering it has only two years to go. They say departures make way for "new energies."

As happens in an administration whose days are numbered by the no-third-term amendment to the Constitution, a number of officials, most recently White House Communications Director Patrick J. Buchanan, are leaving for new jobs.

White House aides, however, say they are untroubled by the loss of experienced people.

"I think we're healthy and in good shape," said presidential spokesman Marlin Fitzwater.

"I'm surprised there aren't more (resignations) here and in the Cabinet," said a White House official speaking on condition he not be identified.

Such resignations are common after an election, this official noted.

When Buchanan's departure was announced Tuesday, it was the third time in four days the White House had disclosed that someone was leaving the administration.

On Saturday, it had been Mitchell E. Daniels Jr., who is stepping out as White House political director to practice law and serve as a think-tank executive in his native Indiana.

On Monday, it was William J. Casey, the ailing director of central intelligence, who officials say resigned during a hospital visit by White House Chief of Staff Donald T. Regan and Attorney General Edwin Meese III.

Other recent departures have included John Poindexter as the president's national security adviser and Lt. Col. Oliver L. North, a top Poindexter aide at the National Security Council — both casualties of the controversy over secret arms sales to Iran and the diversion of proceeds from the sale to the anti-government rebels in Nicaragua.

Others who have left are White House spokesman Larry Speakes and his deputy, Peter Roussel; Cabinet secretary Alfred Kingon; drug-abuse adviser Carlton Turner; and presidential physician Dr. T. Burton Smith, among others.

Budget Director James C. Miller III has also been reported to have his eye on a university presidency or other job outside government, but his spokesman, Edwin L. Dale Jr., denied it.

"Miller has no plans to leave," Dale said. "What he has pledged is that he would stay through this budget cycle. And he has no plans to leave, even after that."

Strength For Today

Sometimes as we drive along a little-used back road we come upon hills that appear so steep as to be practically insurmountable. Yet somehow we get to the top much easier than we expected.

Sometimes in the evening when we consider the problems which confronted us during the day, the parable of the hills goes through our minds. In the morning when we went to work, it seemed that there were obstacles confronting us which we could never surmount. But somehow, at the end of the day, we see that the hills were not as steep as we thought they were. They appear impossible until we start to climb them. But best of all, we find that when we get to the hill, the power is always given which enables us to get over — not perhaps with ease, but at least under great difficulty, with triumph.

Reagan Nearly Stripped Nuclear Defenses

— Jerry F. Hough —

Misunderstanding

We have had a terrible time getting Mikhail S. Gorbachev right.

At first we thought that he was too young to be elected general secretary of the Communist Party. Then we thought that the collective leadership would not let him change personnel. Next we thought that he was a technocrat who was against reform. Now that Gorbachev clearly is a reformer, we still say that the Soviet Union cannot change, because resistance from the Politburo or the bureaucracy will stop him. This conclusion is as wrong as the previous ones.

The clearest example of the depth of our misunderstanding of the Soviet system is the widespread belief that Gorbachev, at last month's Central Committee plenum, had sought a significant change in the way that regional party secretaries are elected. Actually it is opponents of the Soviet leader who might want such a change, not Gorbachev himself.

Our basic problem is that we have been forgetting the lessons of 40 years of Western scholarship, and have been taking our interpretation from two unreliable sources: the emigrant-dissident Marxist view of the Soviet Union, and the "leaks" from the supporters of Gorbachev in the Soviet Union who are trying to strengthen his power.

Think about the current American conventional wisdom about the Soviet Union. It is a classic Marxist analysis: All power is in the hands of the managers of the means of production (the bureaucrats); the ruling class is parasitical and interested only in its economic privileges; the political leadership is a weak superstructure that is a tool of the ruling class, and the ideology is a conservative justification of the status quo.

Gorbachev's spokesmen are privately supporting this version of events for their own reasons. They want to distract the Soviet Union's liberals from the thought that Gorbachev is accumulating dictatorial powers, and indeed they want to enlist those liberals in this effort by treating the general secretary as a besieged figure who is extremely weak.

Yet as recently as the beginning of the Leonid I. Brezhnev era the scholarly image of the Soviet Union was very different. We said that the general secretary was extremely strong (even a dictator), that the "bureaucrats" were the weak and suppressed educated middle class and that ideology promoted change, sacrifice and a drive for world supremacy. Those conclusions were right. And they are still right.

The power of the general secretary flows from many factors, including political skill and a politically intelligent program. At its heart, however, the power of that position rests on the ability of the general secretary to control the selection of regional party officials and to build a political machine based on them. These officials have a dominant role in the party congress and the Central Committee, to which the Politburo is responsible, and they strongly tend to support "their" boss against Politburo opposition.

For this reason, if the selection of regional party secretaries were strongly influenced by a secret ballot, the very core of the general secretary's political power would be undercut. Gorbachev would support such a reform only if he were a Western-style democrat, and this is very unlikely. Gorbachev's actual language on the subject was extremely cautious.

The political story of the plenum is a continuation of Gorbachev's accumulation of power. His chief domestic and foreign-policy strategist, Alexander N. Yakovlev, was moved onto the Politburo. Meanwhile, the promotion of Belorussian party chief Nikolai P. Slyunkov to the Central Committee Secretariat means that Gorbachev will gain closer control of that republic with the selection of a new first secretary. Also, the process of discrediting Ukrainian party chief Vladimir V. Shcherbitsky has finally begun, preparing the way for his probable removal next year around the time of his 70th birthday.

Gorbachev is determined to transform the Soviet Union so that it can challenge again for world leadership. He is a Peter the Great both in his orientation to the West and his ruthlessness. The so-called conservative bureaucrats are the country's middle-class college graduates — the ones who wanted jazz and blue jeans and Western films when they were young — and they are more eager for change than Gorbachev is.

Jerry F. Hough is a professor of political science at Duke University and a staff member of the Brookings Institute in Washington.

WASHINGTON (AP) — James Schlesinger, as sharp of mind as he is casual of dress, served three presidents in major posts.

He ran the Pentagon, the Central Intelligence Agency, the Energy Department and the Atomic Energy Commission in his long government career under Presidents Nixon, Ford and Carter.

Unlike most bureaucrats, Schlesinger usually was willing to spare no punches in knocking down ideas he found intellectually flabby.

Operating now in the K Street canyon of think tanks and consulting firms in Washington, Schlesinger kicks off the latest issue of Foreign Affairs magazine with a zinger of an attack on President Reagan and what Schlesinger calls "a sense of drift and serious blunders" by the administration.

Schlesinger charges Reagan with nearly stripping U.S. nuclear defenses down mostly to an inadequate strategic bomber force during his summit meeting in Iceland with Mikhail Gorbachev.

He says Reagan went to Reykjavik with "an exaggerated faith in his powers of persuasion."

The president agreed with the general secretary that both sides should eliminate all nuclear ballistic weapons by 1996 with impulsive and casual Utopianism, Schlesinger writes.

This would amputate two legs of what nuclear strategists call the deterrent triad. That is, land-based intercontinental ballistic missiles and the ICBMs carried on nuclear submarines would be phased out.

Schlesinger says that would put the United States in the difficult position of depending largely on bombers as the nuclear deterrent to an attack on this country or on the West European allies.

Only a "tactical blunder" by the Soviet leader — trying to restrain the U.S. missile-shield program — rescued the United States from strategic nuclear disarmament, Schlesinger writes.

The former U.S. official considers the summit a disaster of far greater consequence than the Iran-Contra scandal.

"To say that the summit was ill prepared is to indulge in classic understatement," Schlesinger writes.

He says the Soviets were ready to offer sharp reductions in their strategic offensive forces if the United States had been alert to exploit the opportunity.

"Reykjavik represented a near disaster from which we were fortunate to escape," he writes. "It has quite likely forfeited the possibility of a major arms control agreement for the balance of the Reagan term."

Schlesinger also has harsh words for Reagan on the U.S. sale of arms to Iran.

As Schlesinger sees it, Reagan's decision to send seven plane-loads of U.S. weapons to Iran last year betrayed "an implicit social contract with the public."

Reagan was elected to be strong, to stand up to the nation's enemies, Schlesinger says. "Trafficking with terrorists was not his image," he writes. "It was not precisely Standing Tall."

And Schlesinger doubts the White House will be effective in its attempts to suggest "rogue elephants" in the National Security Council were out of control in setting up a surreptitious fund for Nicaraguan rebels with profits from the arms deals.

State Will Spend $750,000 To Seek Super Collider

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — Gov. Jim Martin says the state will begin spending $750,000 to promote North Carolina as the location for a superconducting super collider, the largest scientific instrument ever constructed.

The money was appropriated last year, but state officials had delayed spending it until President Reagan included the $6 billion project in his proposed budget. Martin said he did not expect Congress to delete the project.

"Our preliminary efforts have put us in an enviable, competitive position," Martin said Thursday. "Now the Board of Science and Technology can undertake preparation of our bid proposal."

The supercollider consists of an underground, circular tunnel 60 miles around in which beams of sub-atomic particles will travel at blinding speeds, then be smashed together.

The idea is to create conditions similar to those at the earliest moments of the universe, enabling scientists to seek answers to fundamental questions about the origin of matter and energy.

Construction of the SCC will create about 8,000 jobs, and the project will employ 3,000 people. Additionally, other high-tech industries are likely to spring up wherever the machine is located.

State officials have agreed to promote an area spanning Granville and Person counties as host of the SCC, based on geological factors as well as the area's proximity to the Research Triangle Park, major universities in Durham, Raleigh and Chapel Hill, and the Raleigh-Durham Airport.

The state's campaign will include a site survey of the proposed location, as well as development of technical information necessary to meet the criteria established by the U.S. Department of Energy.

Additionally, Martin said he would assemble an advisory panel of scientists from the state's universities to seek support for North Carolina's bid in the scientific community.

Competitors for the SCC include some of the biggest states, including California, Illinois and Texas, some of which are far outspending North Carolina on their promotional efforts.

Martin, however, said he saw no reason to spend more.

"We will put forward the best proposal that we can, I assure you of that," he said. "We intend to be successful. I do not think it would be wise or productive to engage at this stage in trying to up the ante in a bidding war, especially when I don't think that's going to have anything to do with the outcome."

On another matter, Martin said Correction Secretary Aaron Johnson had asked Ray DeBruhl to act as a consultant as the state proceeds with construction projects to enlarge its prison capacity.

DeBruhl was fired recently as director of the State Building Section in the Department of Administration. DOA officials described the move as part of a departmental reorganization that eliminated DeBruhl's job, but some lawmakers speculated that the firing was politically motivated. DeBruhl is a Democrat.

Martin said legislators had complained to him that DeBruhl's loss would hamper their efforts to work with the administration in reducing crowding in the prison system, which could lead to a federal takeover of the system.

"I think that we'll be able to keep stride" with the schedule of prison construction and renovation set by the Legislature, Martin said. He said he would propose emergency bills Monday, the day the Legislature convenes, to allow quick action to reduce the prison population.

One of the measures is expected to be a temporary cap of 18,000 on the prison population, a move endorsed by a legislative study committee. Another, Martin said, will cut some of the red tape involved in construction projects such as bid requirements.

Wandering Dog Comes Back Home After Long Trip

By TOM MINEHART
Associated Press Writer

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Jet's family was worried he would not recognize them when he returned from a harrowing transcontinental boxcar ride, but the black Lab pushed his way out of a pet carrier and licked his young mistress's face and hands after being flown back to North Carolina.

"What if he bites me," said Melinda Stroup before Jet arrived at Charlotte-Douglas International Airport Thursday.

But Jet pawed the door of his pet carrier and thumped his tail as 8-year-old Amanda Stroup of Waco approached.

"Hey, Jet," said Amanda as the dog rushed to lick her. "He looks just like he used to — a little skinny, though."

"I thought he was never coming back again," Amanda said. "I was glad he was OK."

The dog staggered from a boxcar in Portland, Ore., Jan. 22, more than a month after it apparently wandered into the car as it was being unloaded near Waco. The boxcar arrived in Portland Jan. 6, but wasn't opened for more than two weeks.

The dog, which had lost a fifth of its body weight while locked inside the car, has been fed a special high-protein diet and has gained 7 pounds in two weeks.

Jet started his journey to the West when he followed a neighbor to a lumberyard located on railroad tracks near the Stroup's farm and wandered into a boxcar, Mrs. Stroup said.

"It's like having Santa Claus come in February," Mrs. Stroup said as Jet lifted his front paw in greeting. She said the family made greeting signs and tied yellow ribbons around trees to welcome the dog back home.

Roger Stroup said Jet would eat special dog food provided by an Oregon veterinarian whose services were paid for by officials of the Oregon Plywood Co., whose employees found the dog.

"But we'll give him anything he asks for," said Stroup.

Amanda was more attached to the dog than her brother, Ted, 17, or her sister, Kim, 16, said Mrs. Stroup.

"Because we live in the country, he's the only friend she had to play with," Mrs. Stroup said. "If I walked out and could see Jet, I knew she was there, too."

"The man that called (from Oregon) said 'I've got some good news and some bad news. The good news is he's alive. The bad news is he's in Portland, Oregon.'"

"I was shocked," Ms. Stroup said. "I could not believe he was all the way out there."

Jet wore an identification tag, she said, because in the country "there's always the danger they can wander off, you know."

Jet received free air fare on Delta Airlines, said Charlotte Delta marketing official Frank Miller, because "we're just humane like anybody else."

Miller said the airline transports thousands of dogs every year and that normally Jet's trip home in a 727 would cost $100 to $150. The dog rode in an animal carrier in the cargo hold just under the first-class section of the airliner and, like many others traveling in the South, had to change planes in Atlanta.

HOME AT LAST — Melinda Stroup of Waco greets her dog, Jet, at Charlotte's Douglas Airport after the dog was flown back to North Carolina from Oregon Thursday. Jet was accidentally locked into a railroad boxcar in Shelby and traveled across country for more than a month before it was found in Portland, Ore. (AP Laserphoto)

Democrats Claim Martin Is 'Late' On School Issues

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — Gov. Jim Martin is trying to take credit for major initiatives in public education that rightfully belongs to Democratic legislators, the party's executive director and four educators say.

"We just think that it's very important for the people to know that Jim Martin is a Jimmy-come-lately to the issue of public education," Ken Eudy, executive director of the state Democratic Party, said Thursday.

Martin has included full funding for the Basic Education Program in his budget for fiscal 1987-89, but Democrats said Martin had done nothing to help win enactment of the BEP in 1985.

They said Martin failed the BEP at a crucial time by requesting only $66.3 million for it in fiscal 1985-86, its first two years. The Legislature allocated $133.7 million.

"Our governor had to run down the tracks and catch up with the train," Jeanette Council, elementary-school supervisor for Cumberland County, said. "It left the station two years ago, with engineers like (Lt. Gov.) Bob Jordan and (House Speaker) Liston Ramsey at the helm."

Ms. Council was one of four educators who attacked Martin's record on schools at a news conference at state Democratic headquarters.

Earlier, Martin defended his education record at his regularly scheduled news conference.

Noting that he was once a Davidson College chemistry professor and had served on numerous faculty committees, he said, "I don't think that's quite Johnny-come-lately."

Martin said he had been a strong supporter of public schools from his days as a Mecklenburg County commissioner. After becoming governor, he said, he continued the reversal begun the previous year of a 24-year trend of annual decreases in the percentage of the budget's general fund devoted to elementary and secondary education.

The reason his 1985 education spending proposals appeared inadequate to critics, Martin said, is that he sought less of an increase than had former Gov. Jim Hunt in the budget he submitted before leaving office.

Martin said he always had favored stronger state support of education, the BEP's philosophical underpinning.

"I also had the temerity to raise some questions about some of the priorities (in the BEP), and that has led some people ... to question whether that indicated that I was opposed to public schools," Martin said. "That's not the case at all."

DOT Doesn't Back Higher Speed Limit

HICKORY, N.C. (AP) — State Transportation Secretary James Harrington says his department probably will not recommend raising speed limits on rural interstates even if Congress allows it.

Harrington said Thursday the state Department of Transportation favors allowing states to set speed limits, but a preliminary study shows there are few segments of interstates in North Carolina where the proposed 65 mph speed limit would be appropriate.

Most interstate stretches outside major urban areas such as Charlotte, Raleigh-Durham and Greensboro-Winston-Salem-High Point would be eligible. But Harrington said the N.C.

Highway Patrol doesn't have enough staff to adequately police those areas.

Burlington Chairman Says Cards Stacked

GREENSBORO (AP) — The chairman of Burlington Industries, the nation's largest textile firm, says his company will continue to lobby for import protection despite an increase in profits this year.

"I don't like to be involved in an environment where the cards are so stacked," Frank S. Greenberg said in a news conference after Burlington's annual stockholder meeting Thursday.

Greenberg said the U.S. trade deficit passed $170 billion last year, and the loss of the American industrial base has not been offset by the growth in new jobs between 1979 and 1985. He said 44 percent of those new jobs paid poverty-level wages.

Greenberg said Burlington will press for a revised and ideally "veto-proof" version of a textile trade bill that President Reagan vetoed.

Greenberg said Burlington is recovering from a series of operating problems and is now poised to prosper.

"It's not crazy optimism, it's cautious optimism," he said. "We are cautiously optimistic in Burlington that our fortunes, which have been difficult the past few years, are on the mend."

For the year ended Sept. 27, 1986, Burlington had earnings of more than $56.5 million. The profits increased from about $12.6 million in 1985 — a devastating year for the entire import-plagued industry — but still fell short of 1984's $62.4 million. Sales were about $2.8 billion, slightly less than in 1985 and down from $3.2 billion in 1984.

Greenberg said he sought to assure stockholders that the "difficulties" had nothing to do with Burlington's 10-year modernization plan, which he said had been expensive but not without bringing in an acceptable return. Rather, he blamed operating problems in three areas that have now either been solved or are well on the way to being solved.

Writing Test Scores Drop

RALEIGH (AP) — Statewide writing tests show that North Carolina's sixth- and eighth-graders do not know their grammar as well as last year's students did, and that fewer sixth-graders are able to make a point when writing, school officials say.

The test was administered by the N.C. Department of Public Instruction in November.

William J. Brown Jr., a research assistant for the Public Instruction Department, said that although some test scores were lower than last year's, the test results showed that students could be taught to write better.

"At some schools they (test scores) are dramatically improved," Brown said. "You can teach students how to write well. This test proves where that is going on. We hope that will be the story throughout the school system."

The tests asked sixth-graders to describe the outside of a building so a reader could picture it. Eighth-graders were asked to support opinions on whether gum-chewing should be allowed in class.

Students were given a plus or minus score on grammar, spelling, word usage and sentence formation and were rated 1 to 4 on writing quality.

Statewide, 75.9 percent of sixth-graders and 81.3 percent of eighth-graders received pluses this year, down from 83.6 last year.

The scores on quality were based on a student's ability to find the main idea of the question, support it with details, organize the paper and write coherently. A 4 was the highest score. Students earning a 1 or 2 generally identified the main idea but showed a lack of focus or used vague words, the test summary said.

The median grade was considered to be 2.5, and 28.5 percent of sixth-graders and 37.69 percent of eighth-graders statewide were at or above the median.

Compared with last year, the number of students scoring above the median statewide dropped 10.05 percent for sixth-graders and increased 7.69 percent for eighth-graders.

RDU Boosts Air Gateway Bid

RALEIGH (AP) — Supporters of Raleigh-Durham Airport have sent Transportation Secretary Elizabeth Dole a photograph of American Airlines' $120 million hub there after Charlotte appeared to be leading in a bid to get service to London because of its existing Piedmont Airlines hub.

The public counsel of the U.S. Department of Transportation recently said Piedmont should get selected as a gateway because of its existing network.

"The public counsel of DOT is treating this hub as if it's a myth, and has based a recommendation with long term impact on a short term perspective," countered Thackara Brown Jr., director of the Raleigh-Durham to London Gateway Task Force.

"Apparently the public counsel felt it was in the public's interest to recommend an airline with no international experience, in a location that has less demand for service to London, and that serves a smaller geographic area," Brown said. "And, the only way to justify such a recommendation was to treat a $120 million hub here as if it would never open for business when in fact construction is ahead of schedule and American Airlines will be ready to provide service to London this summer."

'No-Smoking' Rules Become Official In U.S. Agencies

WASHINGTON (AP) — The OK-to-smoke signs are not all up yet, but starting today 890,000 federal employees in 6,800 buildings officially cannot smoke unless a sign says they can.

The new rules, affecting employees in buildings owned or leased nationwide by the General Services Administration, aim to minimize the exposure of non-smokers to second-hand smoke.

The old rules required special sections for non-smokers. Everywhere else, smoking was allowed.

Now the presumption has shifted in favor of the 70 percent of the employees who do not smoke. Smoking is banned in offices, corridors, meeting rooms and public areas unless a sign says otherwise.

At the federal building in Winston-Salem, the home of cigarette giant RJR Tobacco USA, the cafeteria has become the prime designated-smoking area. Officials say the cafeteria is the only common gathering place for employees of agencies housed in the building.

Although the GSA — the government's housekeeping agency and landlord — announced the guidelines two months ago, many government offices, including the White House, the Department of Energy, the Commerce Department and the Veterans Administration, are still formulating their plans.

Orders for signs, more than 27,000 so far, are still being received, said Gene Gillespie, sign group manager for Federal Prison Industries Inc., which manages shops in federal prisons that make the signs.

Despite some delays, GSA Administrator Terence C. Golden described the response as good. He said agencies that cannot meet today's deadline will be permitted to issue interim guidelines.

"Realistically we expect it will take time to get used to the rules, but we expect no more than the normal amount of startup glitches," he said.

Rep. Stephen Neal, D-N.C., said Thursday he plans to send a letter to Golden and "urge them to stop this nonsense." Neal said the Reagan administration "has proposed a number of regulations to limit what people can decide. This idea of having the government stop people from smoking is just another on their list."

The rules provide each agency with enough leeway to be miserly or generous with space allocated to smokers. Accommodations for them can range from an outdoor catwalk to a comfortable couch in a smoking lounge.

The Interior Department is leaving the decision to each office and is designating the wide corridors in its headquarters in Washington as smoking areas.

The approach of the Agriculture Department, according to Assistant Secretary for Administration John J. Franke Jr., "is not to make a fuss." Smoking prohibitions will apply only to "bullpen areas"; officials with enough rank to have their own offices will make their own decision, he said.

On the more restrictive side, the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta, which declared itself smoke-free on Jan. 1, allows no smoking in offices and provides only a few designated smoking areas, among them an outdoor catwalk.

The Environmental Protection Agency, which has responsibility for outdoor air quality, will ensure the indoor air quality by banning smoking in all work areas, including private offices.

Golden predicted the emergence of a consensus for stricter rules, with health agencies leading the way.

Brennan Moran, a spokeswoman for the Tobacco Institute, which lobbies for tobacco companies, called the GSA rules "the wrong answer for the wrong problem."

"Two percent of (indoor) air quality problems stem from smoking. The rest stem from causes like bad ventilation, bacteria and fungus," she said.

Harris Plant

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — A federal appeals court is considering whether the full-power license for the Shearon Harris nuclear plant in North Carolina should be suspended until an evacuation plan has been evaluated.

An attorney for the Coalition For Alternatives Against Shearon Harris Thursday asked the 4th U.S. District Court of Appeals to suspend the license because the public safety has been endangered.

Robert L. Epting told the court the Nuclear Regulatory Commission should not have issued a full-power license for the Carolina Power & Light Co. plant in Wake County without requiring a full-scale test of the emergency response plan.

Wake Forest Gift

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — A Wake Forest University graduate and his wife have given a $1 million gift to the university for two of its building projects, officials say.

The gift from Joseph W. Luter III and Barbara Luter will go toward a new student center and the coliseum the city plans to build.

Luter's gift will be part of the $5 million Wake Forest has pledged to spend on Winston-Salem's Lawrence Joel Memorial Coliseum. Construction of the coliseum is expected to start this spring and be complete by spring 1989.

The university intends to use the coliseum for its home basketball games. It is contributing $3 million for basic construction of the building, and $2 million more will be spent for special features such as plush private box seats, a private locker room, and a gold and black basketball floor.

Luter, who graduated from Wake Forest in 1962, is chairman of Smithfield Foods Inc. He was elected to the university's board of trustees in 1986.

Fire Deaths

JONESVILLE, N.C. (AP) — Authorities say an elderly Jonesville couple was killed when a fire swept through their home and they were unable to flee, despite the efforts of a woman who told firemen she tried to get them out.

Dr. Jerry T. Ziglar, the Yadkin County medical examiner, said the couple probably died of smoke inhalation in the Thursday fire. He said the bodies were tentatively identified as Harry Weldon Wagoner, 88, and his wife, 71-year-old Roberta Pruitt Wagoner.

A spokesman for the Yadkin County Sheriff's Department said that the bodies were found in the living room of the house. The fire, which was caused by a blanket falling on a baseboard electric heater, gutted their brick house, officials said.

Firefighters were called by Connie D. Hicks, who had been staying with the Wagoners.

Scholarship

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — Wake Forest University has announced a new scholarship program that will eventually award 80 scholarships averaging $2,500 each year, school officials say.

Earle Connelly, the Alumni Council's president, said Thursday that the recipients will not necessarily be chosen for academic merit or because of need. He said the scholarship is meant to attract students who have talents in the arts or business, or have demonstrated leadership at the high school level.

Robert D. Mills, an assistant vice president and the director of alumni activities, said about 20 renewable scholarships will be awarded to students entering Wake Forest in the fall of 1988 and in each subsequent year. The scholarships are to be paid for by the alumni association's annual giving campaign.

Seat Belts

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — North Carolina motorists have recorded the highest seat-belt usage rate in the country, according to a study done by researchers at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.

Seventy-eight percent of about 21,000 drivers and front-seat occupants were observed wearing seat belts at 72 sites across the state between Jan. 10 and Feb. 2 by UNC Highway Safety Research Center researchers.

The previous highest usage rate — about 75 percent — was recorded by researchers in Hawaii in 1986. Dr. B.J. Campbell, director of the UNC center, said Thursday. Texas and Connecticut both posted rates of 66 percent during 1986.

The survey was the first conducted since the state's 1985 mandatory seat belt law started packing a $25 fine for violators instead of just a warning.

Foiled Robbery

WILMINGTON (AP) — An armed man who entered a Magnolia bank Thursday and demanded $5,000 left emptyhanded when the teller crouched behind bullet-proof glass and activated the silent alarm, authorities say.

The man walked into the Branch Banking & Trust in Magnolia, which is managed by one teller, at 10:20 a.m. carrying a handgun. "He told the teller to give him $5,000," said Chief Deputy Glen Jernigan of the Duplin County Sheriff's Department.

"The teller didn't say anything. She just got on the floor under the counter behind the security glass," Jernigan said.

The would-be robber paused briefly, then left the bank.

It was the third area bank robbery in three days and the fourth in two weeks in the Wilmington area.

Sentenced

FAYETTEVILLE (AP) — Former Fayetteville lawyer W. Oliver Melvin, who asked that his probation be revoked because he couldn't afford to make court-ordered restitution to embezzlement victims during his probation, has been sentenced to five years in prison.

Last week, Melvin, 40, was ordered to serve a year in jail after Superior Court Judge Robert Farmer ruled he had failed to make restitution payments on time. Melvin had pleaded no contest in June to two charges that he embezzled from clients' estates. Each of the counts carried a three-year suspended sentence, to run consecutively.

Melvin asked Farmer in a letter to revoke his probation and impose an active sentence to run concurrently.

Check Fees

RALEIGH (AP) — A lawyer for a Pennsylvania company has convinced a Superior Court judge to dissolve a court order prohibiting the company from collecting a fee of more than $10 from people who write bad checks.

Judge Craig Ellis refused to extend the temporary court order until a complaint filed against Cheque-Rite Inc. of Erie, Pa., could be resolved by the court, despite objections by the North Carolina attorney general's office.

The attorney general's office has accused Cheque-Rite of violating a state law that sets a maximum collection fee of $10 per bad check.

Attorney Peter Bellott Jr. said Cheque-Rite buys bad checks from merchants and would have had to cancel all its contracts in North Carolina in the face of "astronomical" damages due to the court order.

In accordance with Section 32-3 of the Zoning Ordinance, the Greenville City Council will be conducting a public hearing for the purpose of considering any comments by the public regarding the use of the Elks Lodge Building and Grounds for recreational purposes by the Greenville Recreation and Parks Department. The property is located on an unimproved portion of Hardee Road and behind Dr. W.S. Dawson's office on the west side of Fourteenth Street extension.

The public hearing will be held in the City Council Chambers of the Municipal Building in the City of Greenville, NC, on Wednesday February 11, 1987 at 7:30 p.m. All interested persons are requested to be present at the hearing, and they will be afforded an opportunity to be heard.

Theorists Claim Creation Science Based On Facts

By GEORGE W. CORNELL
AP Religion Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — In the battle over life's beginnings, both evolutionists and those who believe in abrupt stages of origin say their theories are strictly scientific and not linked to religion in any way.

Each group specifies its theory is based solely on scientific data — generally the same, undisputed evidence, despite different interpretations.

However, a widespread impression exists, conveyed by some antagonists and in many news accounts, that what's called "creation-science," the theory that complex life forms appeared in abrupt stages, is based on religion.

"This definitely is not the case," says Wendell R. Bird, an Atlanta attorney who defended Louisiana's "balanced treatment" act before the U.S. Supreme Court, whose decision is pending.

Bird says "vast misinformation" prevails about the matter.

Contrary to many published reports, he says, nothing in "creation-science" derives from the biblical account of origins or parallels literalist views of it.

"This is a serious misunderstanding," he added in a telephone interview. Asked if the problem might be in the word "creation," suggesting a creator, Bird said the word is used in another sense, as in "originating."

"It does not imply a creator," he said, also citing the term's use by past scientists holding the abrupt-appearance theory.

He said it is based "explicitly and totally on scientific evidence," with no reliance whatever on the Book of Genesis or reference to it.

"You won't find Genesis in the evidence, or the evidence in Genesis," he said. "Teaching Genesis would be unconstitutional in a scientific classroom."

He also said nothing in "creation-science" postulated that the Earth was young, only 6,000 years old, as often reported. While some "creationists" argue this thesis, others don't.

"The age question is not a part of creation-science," Bird said. "The time that things occurred, ancient or recent, is not integral to the way they occurred."

Referring to "general evolution," the theory that all complex life developed gradually from primordial forms, in contrast to the staged abrupt-appearance theory, Bird said:

"Neither scientific theory is a bit more parallel to religion than the other. They're just different interpretations of the evidence."

However, both have resonances in different religions.

The abrupt-appearance theory seems more consistent with some special intervention, as by a creator, while evolution conforms more to gradual-change concepts of Buddhism, Hinduism and some Jewish-Christian views.

"Theistic evolutionists" see evolution as the way God worked.

However, parallels of either theory to religions are totally irrelevant to the case, Bird said, explaining that they were only different approaches to scientific evidence.

That evidence, voluminously cited in the 300 pages and 1,000 footnotes of Louisiana's appeal prepared by Bird, was not disputed by legal challengers to the "balanced treatment" act, led by the American Civil Liberties Union.

Most opposition to Louisiana's act, rather than dealing with cited scientific evidence, contended the act was religiously motivated as indicated by legislative comments in its passage.

These arguments hinged on subjective intents among lawmakers, rather than on content of the act itself, which mandated teaching of the abrupt-appearance theory if evolution is taught.

"It would offer students more scientific information, not less," Bird said. "It's a matter of academic freedom, of students' right to know. Nobody is saying the schools should teach less evolution, but only that they should also teach the rest of the elements as well."

While most scientists uphold general evolution and opposed Louisiana's act, claiming it had religious intent, they did not question the scientific evidence given as grounds for creation-science.

Nor did lower courts do so in throwing out the act.

However, in Bird's brief, numerous scientists were quoted, including evolutionists, affirming that creation-science relied on scientific evidence, but interpreted it differently.

In the statements, staunch evolutionists acknowledged that new kinds of life almost always appear suddenly, without intermediate links, in the fossil record, the only concrete record of past biological events.

Among other quotations cited:

Biochemist W. Scott Morrow of South Carolina's Wofford College, an evolutionist and agnostic: "My conclusions are that creation-science is scientific, nonreligious and educationally worthwhile in comparison with evolution ...

"Creation scientists offer ... affirmative evidence based on paleontology ... comparative morphology ... probability ... genetics ... and comparative unrelatedness. ... These involve scientific data and do not involve religious concepts."

Biology professor Dean H. Kenyon of San Francisco State University: "It is my professional opinion ... that creation-science is as scientific as evolution ... that creation-science is as nonreligious as evolution."

This same position — that Louisiana's act "has no direct religious reference whatever" — was asserted by a strong dissent in the previous narrowly split U.S. Appeals Court decision rejecting the act.

Even the bare 8-to-7 majority acknowledged that creation-science "may be supported by scientific evidence," but ruled that "irrespective of whether it is supported by scientific evidence, the theory of creation is a religious belief," and thus illegal.

Lawyer Turns Rabbi

BLOOMINGTON, Ill. (AP) — Distressed by what he saw as growing weaknesses in the religious leadership of the American Jewish community, Cliff Librach abandoned a successful legal career to become a rabbi.

"I was confident there would always be lots of excellent attorneys," he said. "But I was concerned that the religious leadership of the American Jewish community was becoming very weak: sentimental, maybe incapable of hard judgment and decidedly non-intellectual."

Rather than criticizing, Librach and his wife, Miriam, decided he would do the job himself.

So he graduated from Hebrew Union College-Jewish Institute of Religion in Cincinnati in 1985 and came to Moses Montefiore Temple in Bloomington last August — his first job since his ordination as a rabbi in June.

Librach has turned his back on the practice of secular law with no regrets, but he appreciates the benefits of his background.

"My legal experience is an asset every day," he says, adding that his exposure to the "real world" helps him understand people's problems, from the most intimate concerns to matters of public policy.

"I don't answer important questions in the abstract," Librach says. "Every question has facts, every case is different. You have to very carefully analyze and weigh those facts. That is what I'm supposed to do when I'm asked a specific question."

As a student rabbi in Michigan, he served in a congregation that conducted a Christmas gift-wrapping service in a large shopping center as an annual fund-raising event.

The big day for business in the booth was Saturday — the Jewish Sabbath.

Seminary To Certify Women As Cantors

NEW YORK (AP) — The nation's leading seminary for Judaism's Conservative branch says it will certify women as cantors to lead services among the movement's 1 million congregants.

The Jewish Theological Seminary's announcement Thursday came two years after it ordained its first woman rabbi.

Although the seminary has issued bachelor's degrees in sacred music to women, it has only issued cantorial certificates to men.

Unlike rabbis, who are viewed as teachers, cantors represent congregations in prayer.

The main objection to women as cantors had been that women are not obligated to perform all of the Bible's 613 commandments, said Ismar Schorsch, the seminary's chancellor.

But Schorsch said one rabbinic opinion, issued in connection with the ordination of women rabbis, found that women could take on the obligation to obey all of the commandments.

Schorsch said he expected some of

White Oak Speaker

Janice Buck, City Council member and former mayor of Greenville, will be the speaker Sunday at 11 a.m. at White Oak Missionary Baptist Church, Grimesland, for the 13th annual interracial worship service.

Guest Speaker

Carolyn Ferebee, principal of Third Street Elementary School, will speak during the 11 a.m. services Sunday at P.I.T.T. for Christ Evangelistic Tabernacle of Prayer for All People Church.

Ms. Ferebee's address will begin the guest lecture series in observance of Black History Month.

A traditional cultural dish will be served after each series. The Inspirational Voices of Tabernacle will provide the music.

Choir Anniversary

Holly Hill Junior Choir will celebrate its anniversary Sunday at 3 p.m. Evangelist Annie L. Perry will speak, and music will be provided by Perry's Temple Junior Choir.

Performance Set

Calvin Suggs and the Gospel Ensemble will perform Saturday at 7:30 p.m. in Mills Chapel Church.

Church Project

Progressive Free Will Baptist Church will sell chitterling, fish and chicken dinners in a benefit Saturday beginning at 11 a.m. Delivery services are available by calling 757-3585.

Quarterly Meeting

Morning Star Holy Church, Ayden, will begin quarterly meeting services Saturday at 7:30 p.m. with Holy Communion.

After regular 11 a.m. services Sunday, dinner will be served at 2 p.m. The Rev. Booker T. Wiggins and St. Paul Holy Church, Kinston, will be guests during the 3 p.m. service.

Spearman To Speak

The Rev. George Spearman, pastor of Waymon Chapel AME Church of Decatur, Ala., will speak during 62nd anniversary services Sunday at 11 a.m. in Holy Trinity United Holy Church.

The church's Clothes Bank will open Saturday from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m.

Church Groups Press Firms

NEW YORK (AP) — Church groups this year are pressing a record number of stockholder resolutions challenging policies and practices of American corporations.

A compilation by the interfaith Center on Corporate Responsibility shows 165 resolutions have been submitted to 122 companies for action at stockholder meetings, generally in the spring.

The previous record was 118 resolutions filed with 85 companies in 1983.

Many of the current resolutions seek to get companies to halt or modify operations in South Africa. Others challenge companies on producing nuclear weapons and question infant formula marketing or employment practices.

Both Protestant and Roman Catholic groups holding stocks are among those backing resolutions, which sometimes do not reach the floor because of management concessions or procedural rulings.

the more traditional congregations would be unhappy with his decision.

The seminary's cantorial program is a five-year program. The first women to receive the cantorial certificates will be Marla Barugel, 31, of Mamaroneck, and Erica Lippitz, 30, of Evanston, Ill., both of whom graduate in May.

"All of us feel called to this profession," said Ms. Lippitz, "and in my eyes, God does not look at gender. God has given me the gift of voice and I am returning this to the community."

Judaism's Reform movement has invested 44 women as cantors since 1975.

Orthodox Judaism, the most traditional branch, does not allow women to be rabbis or cantors.

Unitarian Universalism

is a liberal religion which tries to provide a warm, supportive community for people who believe that ethical living is the supreme witness of religion.

Aquino, Waite Get Awards For Efforts

By RONALD POWERS
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Philippine President Corazon Aquino and Terry Waite, special envoy of the Archbishop of Canterbury, have been honored for their efforts to promote change through peaceful means.

Mrs. Aquino was given the Society of the Family of Man's Golden Medallion Award on Thursday for "encouraging the fullest democratic participation of all Filipinos, for seeking peace through political and economic change and through negotiation."

Waite, who dropped out of sight in Beirut last month, received the award for his "success, in the face of long odds, in gaining the release of hostages held captive in Lebanon."

Mrs. Aquino accepted the award in her Manila office, addressing the approximately 1,000 people gathered at Manhattan's Hotel Pierre via a live television transmission.

Sitting at her desk and wearing her trademark bright yellow dress, Mrs. Aquino noted that her countrymen had just approved a new constitution.

"I ask for your prayers for long-lasting peace and the economic revival of our country," she said.

"We, too, have long sought to be one united family, founded on and guided by just and humane laws and inspired by the commandments and teachings of a just and loving God."

The Rev. Charles A. Cesaretti, deputy for Anglican Relations for the Episcopal Church in the United States and a longtime friend of Waite's, accepted the award.

"No one could replace Terry Waite on the platform, and indeed, anything I could say here would be inadequate other than to recall what he's doing at this moment," Cesaretti said.

On Jan. 20, eight days after arriving in Lebanon for his latest negotiating mission, Waite dropped out of sight while contacting the kidnapers of American hostages. There have been various reports that he was being held by one of the groups, and the Church of England has voiced its concern.

"Little did anyone know that the award dinner would occur at a time when Terry was in such need of support and solidarity," Robert Runcie, the Archbishop of Canterbury, said in a statement read at the gathering.

Waite has been credited with helping gain the release of three Americans held captives in Beirut.

The Society of the Family of Man, an interfaith and international group, was organized in 1963 by the New York Council of Churches to honor individuals for excellence in the service of mankind.

"The Church That Cares."

Facts About The BIBLE BY JOHN LEHTI

A LETTER TO PHILEMON

PHILEMON WAS AN ACTIVE MEMBER OF THE CHURCH IN COLOSSAE WHEN ST. PAUL WROTE TO HIM FROM ROME, PROBABLY IN A.D. 62. ACTUALLY, THE CHURCH IN COLOSSAE WAS IN PHILEMON'S OWN HOUSE. THE CITY, AT THAT TIME, WAS LOSING SOME OF ITS IMPORTANCE IN ASIA MINOR DUE TO THE FACT THAT THE TRADE ROUTES, FROM WEST TO EAST, HAD CHANGED THEIR SYSTEM OF ROADS AND THE NEIGHBORING CITY OF LAODYCEA WAS SURPASSING COLOSSAE IN POSITION AND WEALTH, ALTHOUGH COLOSSAE WAS STILL FAMOUS FOR ITS FINE WOOL! BE THAT AS IT MAY, A CHRISTIAN COMMUNITY HAD GROWN UP IN COLOSSAE AND, OBVIOUSLY, FROM ST. PAUL'S WRITINGS, THE CHURCH HAD ITS MEETINGS IN PHILEMON'S HOUSE. THE LETTER IS A BRIEF ONE, NOTING THE FACT THAT ONE OF PHILEMON'S SLAVES, BY NAME OF ONESIMUS, HAD RUN AWAY, TAKING SOME OF PHILEMON'S MONEY AND MADE HIS WAY TO ROME WHERE ST. PAUL HAD CONVERTED HIM. PAUL SAYS HE WOULD HAVE GLADLY RETAINED HIM AS A FREE ATTENDANT BUT WOULDN'T TAKE THE LIBERTY WITHOUT PHILEMON'S CONSENT. SO HE SENT ONESIMUS BACK WITH THE LETTER SO PHILEMON MIGHT RECEIVE HIM AS A BROTHER CHRISTIAN AND FORGIVE HIM AS JESUS CHRIST TAUGHT US TO DO. PAUL, FURTHERMORE, PROMISED TO PAY ANY LOSS OF MONEY THAT THE NEW CONVERT HAD CAUSED PHILEMON (PHILE. VS. 18, 19). THE LETTER REVEALS THE EFFECT OF CHRISTIANITY ON SOCIAL RELATIONSHIPS GENERALLY, THE SPIRIT OF LOVE AND JUSTICE WHICH WERE DESTINED TO REORGANIZE SOCIETY!

Christian Scientists Urge 'Openness' By Teachers

By GEORGE W. CORNELL
AP Religion Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — An organization of 2,500 scientists who are Christians are advising the nation's public schoolteachers to shun ideological absolutes about human origins and discuss it "with accuracy and openness."

In a time of conflict between exponents of "creation-science" and "general evolution," the American Scientific Affiliation deplors "dogmatists at either extreme who insist that theirs is the only tenable position."

The manual generally defends basic evolutionary concepts, but cites qualifications, weaknesses and limitations, saying these factors tend to be ignored "in the heat of the debate and much popular writing."

This leaves "the erroneous impression that all creationists are united against all evolutionists," the manual says, but adds that instead the differences arise "where the scientific data are inconclusive."

The organization is distributing its 49-page manual to about 40,000 biology teachers across the country, advising them to guard against unsubstantiated conclusions and deal more frankly with unresolved questions and problems.

"Such considerations are generally ignored in biology textbooks and museum displays," the guidebook says in regard to a particular absence of transitional fossils between species, adding:

"It is time for a more balanced account of the evidence for macroevolution at the level of general education. After all, coping with unsolved problems is what science is all about."

The booklet, "Teaching Science in a Climate of Controversy," details extensive evidence for the evolutionary theory, saying most scientists defend it as a key biological concept, but that calling it "fact" is unjustified.

"At present no consensus exists as to how evolution occurred," the booklet says, and the theory is built "only by extrapolation from small-scale evidence (and by reasoning that 'it must have happened')."

On the other hand, the booklet says most scientists agree that "creation science" which claims the Earth is only a few thousand years old lacks a sound theoretical basis. However, some creation scientists don't claim a young Earth.

The affiliation, with offices in Ipswich, Mass., includes "theistic evolutionists," those who see evolution as how God works, and some "creation scientists" who maintain complex life forms appeared in abrupt stages.

"A broad middle ground exists in which creation and evolution are not seen as antagonists," the booklet says. "With that middle ground in mind, a teacher need not 'take sides' at all."

Biochemist Walter R. Hearn of Berkeley, Calif., who edited the booklet with wide consultation, says "a lot of teachers have said it's been very helpful. Before they've only had these polemical attacks or defenses of evolution."

"We've tried not to take sides, but just weigh the evidence," Hearn said in a telephone interview. "In science, evidence is what counts."

In the present atmosphere, he added, "it's hard to say anything that somebody won't disagree with. People on both sides claim too much."

The booklet cites numerous uncertainties and continuing changes in evolutionary theory, and sometimes past frauds seeking to provide "missing links," such as the Pittdown man.

"The classic missing link, the last ancestor common to both apes and humans, is still missing," the booklet says, citing abandonment of earlier claims that ape-like Ramapithecus of 9 million to 14 million years ago led to humans.

Yet, "somehow the creature found its way into many textbooks" as a definite human ancestor, despite serious doubts raised about it even from the first, the booklet says.

It says the National Academy of Sciences, in a 1984 booklet sent to teachers, "ignores the current situation in anthropology" in contending the "missing links" that troubled Darwin... are no longer missing."

This is "dogmatic rather than tentative" and "in science tentative conclusions should be stated in tentative form," the booklet says.

The booklet also says that researchers now warn against past assumptions that the first cell life resulted from random chemical processes and that it now "must be considered highly improbable," adding: "At this stage in our scientific knowledge, it would be irresponsible to give students the impression that 'life arose by chance.' Scientists do not know how life arose."

However, teachers were told "it is unnecessary, and in many circumstances unwise, for a teacher to 'take sides' in class on the religious issue of Creator versus no-creator."

In the midst of current controversy over the subject, with all its explosive political, educational, religious and legal implications, teachers were advised:

"Science must be taught without omitting important points, overstating its claims or distorting the truth."

The booklet, prepared by the affiliation's Committee for Integrity in Science Education, headed by biologist David Price of Springville, Calif., and approved by a panel of consultants, says:

Sheriff's Deputy Volunteers As 'Cuddler' Of Sick Babies

EUGENE, Ore. (AP) — Veteran lawman Bill Kennedy has witnessed death in its most violent forms. But for the past 18 months, he has gained a new grasp on life.

For two nights a week, Kennedy cuddles babies.

The Lane County deputy sheriff is one of 14 volunteers who spend their spare time in Sacred Heart General Hospital's neonatal intensive care unit, where premature or seriously sick infants are cared for until they're well enough to go home.

As a "cuddler," Kennedy gives the babies the attention they otherwise might not get in their sterile hospital environment. Cuddlers are there just to hold, rock, comfort and talk to the tiny patients.

Kennedy is the first male cuddler at Sacred Heart, and might be the only cuddler anywhere who also works on a police force.

The seemingly strange juxtaposition of occupation and avocation is not entirely accidental.

"It's the opposite of what I used to see so much of — the death and dying," Kennedy says. "It's the beginning, where people are starting out."

Before cuddling a patient, he scrubs and dons a hospital gown. Greeting the nurses, he moves down the rows of incubators, where tiny bodies lie attached to cords and tubes of electronic monitors and respirators.

He stops beside Adam, a 4-pound, 16-day-old boy. The 6-foot-2, 209-pound Kennedy, 41 gently lifts Adam, sits down in a rocking chair and begins talking softly to him.

It's been years since Kennedy, who's married and the father of two teen-age girls, has done this with one of his own children. "But can you ever be too old to do this?" he asks with a grin.

He gently massages Adam's chest and arms. "Talk about soft skin," he says. He keeps up a quiet patter of talk to the infant, who seems to respond to Kennedy's voice with his eyes.

Hospital nurse Debbie Wilcox says Kennedy is a natural cuddler.

"He's real gentle with the babies, and the kids really seem to like his voice," she says. "He seems to love to cuddle them and they seem to be able to sense that, too. Just to have him even talk to a baby or stroke it seems to really help soothe it. We can tell by our equipment — just watching the heart rate slow down on the monitor."

While some of the unit's babies get regular cuddling from their parents, a lot of the babies are from out of town.

"We're busy enough that they can really use the extra care and attention," Ms. Wilcox says. "In nursing we're discovering that the loving, giving part that the cuddler can provide is really important for a baby's development."

Kennedy was born into a police family in Portland. His father and uncle were longtime Portland policemen, and his older brother, Jim, was a Lane County deputy when he joined the department in 1966.

"I worked five years on patrol, then undercover narcotics almost three years," he says. "I've worked detectives since '74, primarily crimes against persons — homicide, sexual abuse, that type of thing."

In 1975, Kennedy's detective partner, Roy Dirks, was killed. Kennedy took the loss hard, but thought he had put it behind him until it resurfaced in 1985 in the form of stress-related health problems.

He took a medical leave for 14 months. With time on his hands,

Kennedy looked for something to occupy it.

While a college student in Portland, Kennedy had worked Christmas vacations in costume as the Cinnamon Bear mascot of a department store. He liked it so well that he did it again years later during his off-duty hours.

On lunch hours, he's visit Sacred Heart's children's ward in costume. That got him acquainted with some of the hospital staff.

When Kennedy went on medical leave, he signed up for the hospital's volunteer program and asked to become a cuddler.

"I said, hey, when children get home, they're going to have a male influence, too, in most cases, so they should get used to a male voice and male image," he says.

Hospital officials agreed, and he's been doing it off and on since fall 1985, even after returning to work at the sheriff's office. He's now assigned to the county jail, where he works a graveyard shift. He goes there directly from cuddling duties.

That would seem to be a difficult switch to make. Not so, he says.

"You go to work feeling very mellow, very laid back, very good-feeling. It's nice."

Village Where Queen Of Scots Lost Her Head Expects Tourists

By GRAHAM HEATHCOTE

Associated Press Writer FOTHERINGHAY, England (AP) — Mary Queen of Scots was beheaded here 400 years ago and the little village of Fotheringhay is expecting more visitors this year because of it.

Alan Stewart, landlord of The Falcon inn, said Fotheringhay, 70 miles north of London, always is a bit of a tourist attraction: "We are more famous as the birthplace of King Richard III, but this year it will be Mary, of course."

Mary was executed in Fotheringhay Castle on Feb. 8, 1587. The castle was demolished long ago and there's only a mound there now, with Scotch thistles on it. Legend says Mary planted them.

Garden Farm, built in the 15th century, still stands. It was the New Inn in Mary's day and the executioner, Simon Bulle, stayed there the night before.

"He slept there over the archway," said the owner, Frank Garner, 66, a former farm manager.

"No, we don't use the room," he said. "It's so cold nobody will sleep there. We use it for lumber. Ghosts? No, never seen one — I'm not a nervous man."

Mary was buried in Peterborough Cathedral, seven miles away, until 1612 when her son, King James VI of Scotland who became King James I of England, ordered her coffin moved to London for burial in Westminster Abbey.

England and Scotland were separate kingdoms until 1707. Mary, a Roman Catholic, was deposed by Scottish nobles for alleged adultery, and her Protestant cousin, Queen Elizabeth I of England, gave her refuge in 1568.

The two queens never met. Mary was held captive for 19 years in 10 English castles and mansions, while her supporters plotted to restore the English throne to a Catholic.

Elizabeth's advisers finally persuaded her to get rid of Mary for plotting against her life, a charge Mary denied.

"Americans like these old historical places," Garner said.

"One last year asked where the castle was; said it was on his map so it must be here."

"I said it might say castle on the map, but that doesn't mean the castle is still there, and he got quite angry."

"When I was a boy, a Scotsman would come on Mary's anniversary," said Dick Elsey, 68, an ex-farmer who's lived here all his life. "He'd walk up the road and put a wreath of white flowers on the mound."

"We never knew who he was. He stopped coming about 1933."

A good-size crowd is expected to attend religious services on the execution anniversary at the Anglican village church of St. Mary and All Saints. A Catholic priest will say Mass for Mary.

The village has only 160 parishioners, says a notice on the porch asking for contributions to the church restoration fund.

King James I is said to have ordered the castle torn down because of his mother's execution there, but such historical "facts" find doubters these days in Fotheringhay.

"I think it was pulled down for building materials, or wasn't needed," said Richard Hillier, a librarian and local historian.

"Castles were cold and drafty, and there wasn't much need for them in the 17th century, when people wanted brick-built houses."

Hundreds of books about Mary say the executioner hit a glancing blow with his first swing of the ax; that Mary murmured, "Sweet Jesus," and that her head was then struck off with one or two more blows.

"I doubt he missed," Hillier said.

Martin Howe, Peterborough museum services curator, said: "Elizabeth made a fuss when she was told Mary was dead. She signed the death warrant but claimed she hadn't wanted it."

"I think she felt that if her courtiers could execute one queen, they could execute another."

"I think Mary knew her supporters plotted to kill Elizabeth," said Peter Thomas, a retired college historian who plans to go to the United States in March to lecture on the Queen of Scots.

Anthony Babington, executed for treason in 1586, engineered the last plot. His correspondence with Mary, including a letter from her approving of the idea of Elizabeth's death, was intercepted by Sir Francis Walsingham, Elizabeth's spymaster.

Thomas said Mary's supporters argue that Walsingham implicated Mary in the plotting by exposing her agents, and that some plotters' confessions were dubious because they were obtained by torture.

"But in the end Mary admitted the accuracy of the letter she wrote to Babington, so she was rightly condemned," said Thomas.

"I think that after 19 years' captivity she was in despair and out of touch with reality. She suffered periods of irrational behavior and was in a mental state to take a chance."

"In the end she was a victim of the fanaticism of her Protestant enemies and her own weaknesses," the historian said.

The 400th anniversary of the execution has begun a year's commemoration in England and Scotland, with heritage trails, pageants, concerts, exhibitions and lectures.

Not all approve.

Peterborough Cathedral will mark the day of her burial, but the city council canceled plans for a week-long festival after councilman Ray Palmer said, "This lady was tried and found guilty of treason. She deserved to lose her head."

Sorority Chapter Has Speakers

Laura Kesler and Jacque Price presented programs for meetings of Xi Gamma Xi chapter of Beta Sigma Phi.

Ms. Kesler, a United Cerebral Palsy spokesman, presented a slide presentation on activities and programs at the local UCP Center. She also told of the antique car show. Ms. Price discussed Camp Rainbow which was started in 1982 with a one-day in the park camp. It has been extended to a week and is held at Camp Don Lee near Arapahoe. She also showed slides on last year's camp.

A donation was made to International's Endowment Fund.

Tana Hill reviewed the Book of Sigma Phi on duties of officers and installation. An update on the group's catalog sales and upcoming fund raising dance was given by Carolyn Powell.

A discussion was held concerning a rush social on March 17.

Divorce Lawyer Uses Experience Helping Clients

By LEE LINDER
Associated Press Writer
PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Attorney Myrna Field's first marriage ended in divorce and because of that difficult experience she decided to help others better survive such a predicament.

"My experience with divorce lawyers was horrible, and I believed I could help others," she said. "Divorce is the worst trauma that a man or woman can have in their life, next to losing a child. I find that people are stunned, they can't believe that it is happening to them, and I want to see that my clients get their fair share of their marital assets."

But the 47-year-old attorney, who has a daughter by her first husband and is happily married again, said she keeps her divorce practice highly personalized.

"I want to see my clients move on to a good life, and a good life is not necessarily a second marriage," Ms. Field said. "I am anxious to see that they equip themselves educationally, and enter the world prepared to work in it, to live in it, to enjoy themselves. I don't want them secluded somewhere, brooding. I work very hard for that result."

Looking back on her own divorce, which took five years of bitter litigation to resolve, she said she was lucky because she was a lawyer and was able to make enough to pay her attorneys.

Legal fees often create the biggest trauma in divorce, especially for spouses who aren't wage-earners, and Ms. Field says it is important that people prepare themselves for appointments with lawyers to save both time and money.

"In divorce there is always a loser and a winner, somebody who wants out and somebody who doesn't, and it's more likely to be the man who doesn't," she said. "A non-working woman not only loses her man, but possibly the house and her entire way of life. Men have the same problems but not as much financial worry."

Then there are the children, and Ms. Field says a marriage breakup is traumatic to children of all ages.

"I tell my clients they have to keep communication with their children," she said, "and also try to keep communication with the spouse, at least on the subject of the children."

"Then I tell them to start to refocus themselves, to examine their options. I suggest counseling, and I also send them to places where they can get information on jobs. You have to understand that some women haven't had to work for 20 years, have for years never gone to dinner alone."

"These are problems that aren't easy to face, especially when it comes up suddenly. And even if you have warning it is hard to take if you don't want your marriage to end. It is very hard to handle, but people have to learn how to start feeling good about themselves." Ms. Field suggests a person heading for a divorce should take the following steps before going to a lawyer:

— Write down exactly why divorce can't be avoided, and what state law will provide once the legal action is started.

— Consider whether a trial separation might be best first.

— Determine the total worth of the marital estate, including house, cars, furniture, furnishings, cash and stock. Also include such lifestyle concerns as vacations, theater visits, household help, medical insurance and others.

— Assemble all records of assets and lifestyle for a lawyer.

"Remember, in divorce two people have to live separately on what they used to live on together," Ms. Field said.

Help, Blood Donors Are Needed

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: As a volunteer for the American Red Cross for many years, I have an important favor to ask. First, let me explain that the Red Cross Blood Bank is practically drained! I am sure the public is not aware of how serious this blood shortage is.

Many people have quit giving blood because they are afraid they might get AIDS from donating blood. This is not true. The fact is that the AIDS virus was found in some of the stored blood that was to be used for transfusions, but that threat is at a minimum, since there is a new screening process.

I am enclosing a column that you ran May 7, 1985. After this came out in the Chicago Tribune, we had blood donors standing in line. Please help us again. — WORRIED VOLUNTEER

DEAR WORRIED: Consider it done: WHAT GOOD IS A BLOOD DONOR?

A blood donor is good for people who go through windshields and red lights. For somebody with leukemia. For people being operated on. For barefoot kids who aren't careful. For people who are into feudin' and fightin'. For hemophiliacs and dare-devils. For people undergoing dialysis, while waiting for a kidney transplant. For people who fool around with guns. For little kids who manage to uncup a bottle of something poisonous.

A blood donor is good for people who have been badly burned. For new mothers who need transfusions. For new babies who need a complete change of blood supply. For people having open-heart surgery. For cancer patients. For people with severe hepatitis and anemia. For kids who fall out of trees or whatever. For anybody any age with bleeding ulcers. For people who were in the wrong place at the wrong time.

A blood donor is good for people who are in a lot worse shape than most people you know.

A BLOOD DONOR IS GOOD FOR LIFE.

DEAR ABBY: This is to thank you for an article you wrote about a year ago in praise of the National Stuttering Project. I wrote to the address you mentioned, and I was sent information and a local number to call. Since then, I have attended several meetings.

Cats Are Popular: Dogs Hold Secure

By DAVID T. POMEROY
Wilkes-Barre Times Leader
WILKES-BARRE, Pa. (AP) — When they were married, Craig Wilson bought his wife, Joyce, a dog. And darned if her wedding present to him wasn't a dog, too.

"At one point I actually had 13 dogs," said Wilson, who lives near Shickshinny Lake. "I loved them all."

Across America, dog ownership appears to be leveling off, with cats replacing dogs as the No. 1 domestic pet. Nevertheless, there are still 50 million households in the country where dogs remain supreme.

"I don't think dogs are losing out too much in popularity, at least not with this family," said Mrs. Wilson. In addition to being the mother of two young sons, she is the feeder, exerciser and onstant companion of two Labrador retrievers and a golden retriever. "They're just like kids to me," said Wilson, 26. "I just enjoy being with them and having fun with them. It's rewarding having them look up to you."

For others in the country, the willingness to own and provide decent care for a dog may be slackening. In part, this may be a result of urbanization.

While there are 50 million canines in homes and barns across the country, the number of cats has passed 56 million.

"If you dropped down from outer space and crashed through the ceiling of a typical American home, the chances are less likely now that you would find a dog than they were 20 years ago," said Drew McLandrich, manager of marketing communications of Iams Pet Food in Dayton, Ohio.

McLandrich says that there are more dogs in the country now than at any other time, but there has been a decrease in the proportion of dog-owning homes to cat-owning homes.

He says research indicates the canine population is nearly static, but that "cats are going off the scale. The whole thing has a lifestyle-driven edge to it."

McLandrich notes that working couples are looking for low maintenance pets. "In the long term, it looks like dogs are pretty flat," he said.

Writer about dogs Herm David, in a recent article in Dog World magazine, writes that changing demographics is the key to the shift.

The demographic trends include: an older population; more childless households; more families living in condominiums or homes where dog ownership is inconvenient; more two-paycheck families; and the maturing of the Baby Boom generation, which is less stable socially and economically.

"Those who have sat back and relied upon puppy and dog appeal to self-sell are going to have to learn new skills in merchandising and rethink their priorities and their budget distribution," David writes.

Roberta Vesley, a librarian at the American Kennel Club in New York City, questions such warnings.

"If there's any trend toward fewer dogs, I think it's a little slower than what Herm David is saying," Mrs. Vesley said.

Regular meetings of the city council are held at 7:30 p.m. on the second Thursday of each month. Meetings are held in the city council chambers, third floor, west wing of the municipal building, located at the corner of Fifth and Washington streets. Members of the public are urged to attend to express their views and observe city government in operation.

"We've been registering around a million dogs a year since 1972," she said. "The number just hovers around there. Sometimes it's a little more and sometimes it's a little less. Our figures just don't show dog ownership going down that drastically."

Mrs. Vesley predicts a possible boost in dog ownership by urban yuppies as they adopt a suburban lifestyle. "We're still not sure what direction they'll take," she said.

The dog population in Pennsylvania basically has been stable for years, according to Donald R. Moul, state director of the Bureau of Dog Law Enforcement in Harrisburg.

NEW YORK (AP) - The stock market was mixed today, spinning its wheels a bit after its dramatic advance so far in 1987.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials dropped 3.09 to 2,198.40 in the first half hour of trading. But gainers outnumbered losers by more than 5 to 4 in the early tally of New York Stock Exchange-listed issues, with 634 up, 487 down and 475 unchanged.

Volume on the Big Board came to 27.83 million shares as of 10 a.m. on Wall Street.

In other economic news, Labor Department statistics issued this morning showed an increase of 448,000 in nonfarm payroll employment last month.

Advancing issues outnumbered declines by about 9 to 5 on the NYSE, with 1,039 up, 586 down and 370 unchanged.

Iran Expels Seib

tried to obtain his release since his detention on Saturday. The Swiss Embassy has been handling U.S. interests in Iran since the U.S. Embassy closed after American diplomats were held hostage in Tehran at the embassy from 1979-1981.

Seib was accused by the Iranians of spying for Israel.

"All I know is that any suggestion I was involved in any kind of espionage is completely false," said the Hays, Kan., native. "I was in Iran as an invited reporter on a valid U.S. passport along with more than 50 other reporters from around the world, simply doing my job."

Seib had been in Iran 10 days, along with 56 other foreign reporters invited by Iran to report on the Iran-Iraq war, when he was detained.

Iran's official Islamic Republic News Agency said at the time a "spy of the Zionist regime" was arrested carrying a false passport and disguised as a journalist.

On Wednesday, Iran announced his expulsion following completion of a "judicial probe into his case" and said he would be permanently barred from returning to Iran.

No details of the investigation or its findings were released, but Seib apparently was cleared of the allegations. There has also been speculation that Seib's detention was a result of factional disputes within the Iranian leadership.

"I expect there are many people and organizations in many places who contributed to my release. I want to thank them all very much," said Seib.

Seib refused to say where he would go. There were no more flights scheduled today from Zurich to Cairo.

Offshore Search On For 10 People

SAN DIEGO (AP) - Coast Guard and Navy searchers hunted for as many as 10 people missing in waters off Baja California after a sport fishing boat apparently sank about 150 miles southwest of here, officials said.

A man and a woman were rescued in good condition Thursday night. They were among 12 people, all Americans, believed aboard the San Diego-based Fish 'N Pool, Coast Guard Petty Officer Charles Embleton said today from Long Beach.

Jim Sims, 28, of Riverside was found by Mexican fishermen and taken ashore, while Kathy Compton, age and hometown unknown, was plucked from a life raft by Coast Guard helicopter and treated for minor injuries, Embleton said.

because two of the proposed six districts are predominately black.

But he said "we don't want any at-large" because at-large seats would "dilute black strength (and) we don't think the (U.S.) Justice Department will approve" any at-large representatives.

Garrett said at-large seats are "discriminatory against blacks and poor people."

Elbert read a resolution adopted jointly by the Concerned Citizens for Justice (a civil rights group) and the Pitt County chapters of the NAACP and Southern Christian Leadership Conference, which supported the proposed six-district plan with no at-large seats.

The Thursday hearing was the sixth in a series of seven scheduled to receive comment on the proposed election changes. The final hearing in the series is scheduled at 7 p.m. Feb. 25 at Third Street School in Greenville.

Mike Crowell, a Raleigh lawyer hired by the board to assist in the development of a new election method, said the next step in the process, once the hearings are completed, is for the board to decide on what it wants to propose to the General Assembly.

Once the Legislature creates a new method of electing commissioners, the legislation must then be approved by the U.S. Justice Department.

If the Department of Justice gives its approval, the plan will go into effect in 1988.

Drug Proceeds

RALEIGH (AP) - U.S. Attorney Sam Currin announced Thursday the sharing of about $80,000 in forfeited drug proceeds with local law enforcement agencies in Onslow County.

Currin presented checks for $39,812 to both the Onslow County Sheriff's Department and the Jacksonville Police Department.

The money represents a portion of $159,000 seized from John Abercrombie, a defendant in a federal criminal investigation.

Psychologist Carl Rogers Dies At 85

The search for the others, called off late Thursday, was to resume today. Officials said some of the boaters may have swum to shore.

The boat ran aground about 12:30 p.m. Thursday on rocks 2 1/2 miles from the mainland and about 4 miles from Isla San Martin, an island where the fishermen took Sims, who apparently was uninjured, Embleton said.

A distress signal was picked up around 3:40 p.m. by a Coast Guard jet en route to La Paz, Mexico, Embleton said. Another aircraft sent to investigate spotted the woman waving from a life raft at 5:40 p.m.

"They ran aground on rocks and, according to (Sims) account, he and about seven other people started swimming to the first visible land, which was the island," he said.

"Over the course of their swimming he became separated from the others. He was grasping a big piece of plywood and he was eventually picked up by some Mexican fishermen."

"He said, 'Let's look for my friends,' which they did, but didn't find anything at all."

Injured Heels Pound State

By The Associated Press
Kenny Smith's bad knee apparently has become a good luck charm that gives the North Carolina player a good game after every one he is forced to sit out.

"The knee is definitely not 100 percent, but it's close to top-notch," Smith said Thursday after the third-ranked Tar Heels defeated North Carolina State 96-79. "About the only thing I couldn't do is dunk the ball with ease."

Smith sat out last Sunday's game against Notre Dame after undergoing arthroscopic knee surgery, but returned to the lineup Thursday and scored 21 points.

"I played pretty decent. I'm never totally happy with a performance, but I think overall, as a team, we played well," Smith said. "If we play well as a team, then Kenny Smith plays well."

The last time Smith sat out a game because of his knee, he returned to action and scored 41 points in a victory over Clemson.

Smith wasn't the only North Carolina player battling illness and injury Thursday.

Joe Wolf and Jeff Lebo were battling the flu. Wolf also scored 21 points and Lebo added 13. J.R. Reid, the only healthy North Carolina player in the starting lineup, added 16 points.

North Carolina is 19-2 and unbeaten after eight conference games.

That was about the only thing that didn't come with ease for North Carolina, which shot 65 percent from the field. Smith's eight-of-13 from the field was the worst among the Tar Heel starters. Reid was eight of 11, Dave Popson hit all four of his field goal attempts, Wolf was perfect in nine tries including a pair of 3-point baskets and Lebo was five of nine.

North Carolina led 46-38 at halftime, and an 8-2 start in the second half put the Tar Heels out of reach.

N.C. State, 12-9 and 4-4, shot 46.9 percent from the field and watched its troubles mount. The Wolfpack is in the midst of an eight-game losing streak.

"Luckily, Rocky and Angelina's kid still has his sense of humor or I'd be in trouble," Wolfpack coach Jim Valvano said. "Right now, I really feel badly for the kids. It really makes you think about the schedule."

In the only other Atlantic Coast Conference game Thursday, Wake Forest defeated Winthrop 71-50 in a non-conference game.

Wake Forest led 37-24 at the half, but built up a 20-point lead midway in the second half. The Deacons were able to stop a late Winthrop rally to boost their record to 11-9. Winthrop dropped to 5-16 with the loss.

The Deacons led 48-28 with 14:50 left in the game. The Eagles cut the deficit to six with 2:48 remaining on the clock, but that was as close as they got.

"We played excellent defense in the first half," Wake Forest Coach Bob Staak said. "We lost our concentration for a time there in the second half. We came back after they made their run at us and played some good ball in the last few minutes."

Winthrop Coach Steve Vacendak, who saw his team lose for the 11th time in a row, agreed that Wake Forest played "a fine game."

"Bob Staak has done a fine job in getting that program going. I do not know how much more our kids can give us," Vacendak said.

ECU Men On The Road Once Again

East Carolina's Pirates take to the road this weekend for two more Colonial Athletic Association games.

The Pirates will be in Williamsburg, Va., on Saturday for a 7:30 p.m. game against the William & Mary Indians. They travel on to the Virginia capital on Monday to face the University of Richmond, also in a 7:30 p.m. contest.

Meanwhile, ECU's Lady Pirates will play host to Richmond on Saturday at 7:30 p.m. in Minges Coliseum. Then, on Monday, the Lady Pirates will entertain William & Mary at 7:30 p.m. in Minges.

The Pirates go into the Saturday night game with an 11-10 record, 3-6 in CAA activity. They beat both the Indians and the Spiders in their earlier meetings in Greenville — their only wins in the first round of league play.

Richmond is 4-4 in the conference while William & Mary currently holds down the basement position with a 1-8 record.

The games loom important for the Pirates if they are to have a chance to move up into the upper division of the conference before the league's tournament at month's end. With five games still to play, the Pirates do have the opportunity to finish among the top four.

"We have to win and we have to win on the road," Coach Charlie Harrison said. "Our last road game was a big win (57-56) at (Virginia Commonwealth) and that gave us a lot of confidence. We know that we have a very talented basketball team, and the other schools in the league know it. But we have to lay it on the line and get some momentum before the tournament."

But winning isn't going to come easy, the Pirate coach admits. William & Mary has always been a tough game for East Carolina and Robins Center in Richmond has not been friendly to the Pirates either.

In its first meeting with the Indians, the Pirates came away with a 56-52 win behind 12 points by Marcell Henry and a season-high 11 by Manuel Jones. The win was the third in a row for the Pirates over William & Mary. But the Indians led on several occasions in the game, including 42-41 with 9:16 left before the Pirates moved out to an eight-point edge at 54-46 with 2:52 to go. The Tribe put on one last rally but a Blue Edwards' block of a Scott Trimble attempt sealed the win.

Tim Trout leads the Indian scoring with an 11.1 average and a 6.3 rebounding average. The 6-7 junior is one of the Tribe's forwards.

The other starters include 6-6 junior Mark Batzel at the other forward position, 6-10 senior Mark Boddy at center, and 6-0 freshman Curtis Pride and 6-2 senior Scott Trimble at the guards.

The Pirates won the opening game in Greenville, 78-70, over Richmond this year, but have not won in Robins Center since the 1980-81 campaign when they squeezed out a 67-65 victory. The win earlier this year was the first in six games for the Pirates over the Spiders.

East Carolina took a 25-10 lead over the Spiders early in the game in January and held a 10-point

Rampant Basketball Enjoys Success

By TOM MORRIS
Reflector Sports Writer

Basketball has been double the fun this winter at Rose High School, as both the boys and girls teams have jumped out to impressive records and unbeaten marks in the Big East Conference.

Heading into tonight's home game against Wilson Beddingfield, the Rampants have forged a 15-2 overall mark and a 9-0 conference record.

The Rampettes stand at 13-2 and 9-0.

For boys' coach Jim Brewington, the unbeaten conference record has been a surprise.

"I never thought we'd be 9-0 in the conference. I never thought we'd be 15-2 at this stage of the game," he said. "I thought we'd be a pretty fair basketball team but each game, they decide they want to play, that they want to win and they do it."

"(The key has been) playing good team basketball. These kids love to play together. They are not selfish."

The Rampants have done it without the big star or the big scorer. Brewington said the key has been balance.

"If you try to double team one of our kids, you are going to be in trouble," he said. "You never know who is going to be the leading scorer. Any of our starters can wind up being the leading scorer."

The leading scorers have been 6-4 forward Errol Wooten (14 ppg), 6-3 forward Terry Warren (13 ppg) and 6-3 center Melvin Jenkins (12 ppg).

"It's amazing with a group like this at 9-0 and 15-2 overall, all the scouts come to see the other team's players. It amazes us."

The seeds for this success were planted long before pre-season basketball practice started back in the late fall.

Starters David Lee, Warren, Wooten and Jenkins have been playing together for as long as three years, according to Brewington, and they were joined by point guard Keyford Langley and other team members while playing in the Vaughan Hill summer league against other teams from the county.

The lone losses this season have been to Jacksonville and cross county rival D.H. Conley. Along the way, the Rampants have also won two conference games in overtime. They topped Kinston 52-49 in overtime and Northern Nash in double overtime, 70-67.

"When you can go into overtime and win, that makes you grow up faster and it makes you a better ball club," Brewington said. "They don't know anything about pressure. They don't play like pressure bothers them."

"One instance against Jacksonville, Terry got hurt under the basket. I went out to see if he was all right. I said, 'You want to come out,' and he said, 'Coach, you know I'm not coming out for you.'"

In the next week, the Rampants face three games that will go a long way towards deciding who will win the regular season conference championship. They host fourth-place Wilson Beddingfield tonight and Kinston on Tuesday before traveling to Wilson Fike Friday night. Kinston and Fike are tied for second place behind Rose.

"We've got to win these ball games," Brewington said. "If we win the next three ball games we will be the conference championships. We've got a two game lead. That's why the next three games are so important."

Brewington said team captains Jenkins and Warren have also developed as team leaders, something he wasn't sure they were capable of a few years ago.

"Everybody kind of wrote them off. They were having problems with different school personnel but they've matured," Brewington said. "Coach (Dennis) Gibson and I try to show them we care for them and it's paid off. They care for us and that's been the history of this team."

Brewington's said each starter brings a different element to the game, providing a good mix in the starting lineup.

Lefty Gives Job Requirements

From Staff and Wire Reports

Former Maryland basketball coach Lefty Driesell met privately with several members of the East Carolina board of trustees in Raleigh Thursday and told them he would not be interested in the ECU head coaching position unless the school withdrew from the Colonial Athletic Association.

"Like I told them, I wouldn't coach if they stayed in the league," Driesell said, but did not go into his reasons for the request. He also said he thought it would be a very long shot for him to take the job."

There was also an unconfirmed report that Driesell said it would take $400,000 to bring him to East Carolina.

The coach, who left Maryland under a cloud, following the cocaine-induced death of all-star Len Bias, said the meeting was "very preliminary," and did not name the trustees with whom he met.

East Carolina Chancellor John M. Howell and board of trustee chairman C. Ralph Kinsey Jr., both said that the meeting was not authorized, nor were they aware of it.

The membership of a search committee to replace both Charlie Harrison as men's basketball coach and Emily Manwaring as women's coach was expected to be announced today during the meeting of the board of trustees on campus. Both coaches resigned last week, effective the end of the season.

Dr. Ken Karr, ECU director of athletics, contacted early today, said he anticipated a request from the chancellor to announce the committee to the board.

He also said that while he was unaware of Driesell's statement about the Colonial, that he would consider it "highly unlikely" that the school would withdraw from the league. "I would have to hear that from him personally before I would make any judgment on whether it might eliminate him from consideration," Karr said.

Driesell is also quoted as having said that he would not want to coach for any school which did not have a commitment to win the national championship.

Another top coach whose name has been mentioned as a candidate, Auburn's Sonny Smith, said he had not been contacted by East Carolina, but would be willing to talk with the school.

Two North Carolina based coaches, Atlantic Christian's Gary Edwards and Chowan's Bob Burke, have also been mentioned. A former ECU player, now an assistant coach at another school, said he believed N.C. State assistant Ed McLean and former Wake Forest aide Ernie Nestor would be applying for the job also.

Top-Ranked Rebels Roll Over Utah State, 113-78

By The Associated Press

Top-ranked Nevada Las Vegas defeated Utah State, 113-78 behind the play of Arnon Gilliam.

The Runnin' Rebels broke the 100-point mark for the fourth consecutive game and the 11th time this season as they built leads of as much as 45.

Gilliam led Nevada-Las Vegas, 22-1 overall and 10-0 in the Pacific Coast Athletic Association, with 22 points.

"We just came out every game and play hard," Gilliam said. "It's hard to get up for a game like this."

The visiting Runnin' Rebels used a 14-0 run in the first half to start the blowout rolling and the Aggies, 11-12 and 4-7, never had a chance.

Kevin Nixon led Utah State, which has lost 11 in a row to Nevada-Las Vegas, with 15 points.

No. 6 Temple 87, Rhode Island 75

Nate Blackwell scored 31 points, 21 on 7-of-10 shooting on 3-point field goal attempts, and Ramon Rivas added a career-high 22 points and 13 rebounds as the Owls remained unbeaten in the Atlantic 10 Conference.

Blackwell capped an 8-0 Temple run at the start of the second half with a 3-pointer that gave the Owls, 22-2, a 60-43 lead as the went on to their 31st consecutive victory in McGonigle Hall.

"I knew my play would come along eventually, it was just a matter of time," Rivas, a 6-foot-10, 260-pound

Bullets Use Twin Tower Approach

By The Associated Press

Move over, Akeem and Ralph. The NBA's Twin Towers are now in Washington.

Moses Malone led a third-quarter charge and Manute Bol blocked 12 shots Thursday night as Washington beat the Cleveland Cavaliers 94-85.

Malone, one of the best established big men in basketball at 6-foot-10, and Bol, at 7-foot-7 and still awkward in his second year, have rarely been on the court at the same time this season.

"The most we've played together was a minute or so before last week," said Bol, who shared 15 minutes of playing time with Malone against Cleveland.

Bol and Malone formed a pretty imposing front line, akin to Houston's pairing of 7-foot Akeem Olajuwon and 7-foot-4 Ralph Sampson. But, at least for the next six weeks, the Rockets' Twin Towers are under repair because of a knee injury to Sampson.

In other NBA games Thursday, the last night of play before Sunday's All-Star Game in Seattle, Portland beat the Los Angeles Lakers 105-104, Utah defeated the Los Angeles Clippers 126-103, New York beat New Jersey 135-118, Indiana downed Detroit 98-93, Milwaukee beat Chicago 120-105, San Antonio defeated Seattle 117-111, Phoenix stopped Denver 113-110 and Houston beat Golden State 120-110.

The host Bullets trailed 59-57 late in the third quarter before going on a 13-1 burst. Malone scored 13 of his 20 points in the third quarter and he put Washington ahead for good with a shot after a pass from Bol. The assist was Bol's first of the season in his 662nd minute of play.

Bol's 12 blocked shots tied the NBA season high set by Utah's Mark Eaton.

"We've been trying to get Manute and Moses on the floor at the same time all year," Bullets Coach Kevin Loughery said. "Tonight it worked great."

"When you're trying to win every game you want results, and sometimes you hit the hook too early. Because of the way the game was going, we had to get some spark defensively and force some turnovers, and I was pretty much sure that I'd leave them in."

Cleveland Coach Lenny Wilkens said his team helped Bol have a strong game.

"We made Bol look good by taking the ball to him," complained Cleveland Coach Lenny Wilkens. "We tried to take him on, and that wasn't smart."

Jay Vincent added 15 points and Darwin Cook and Jeff Malone had 12 each for Washington.

Brad Daugherty scored 17 points and John Williams 14 for Cleveland.

Trail Blazers 105, L.A. Lakers 104 Terry Porter scored 18 points, including two game-winning foul shots with four seconds left, as Portland won for the first time in 11 games against the Lakers.

Porter also had 10 rebounds and 13 assists for the first triple-double of his two-year pro career.

The visiting Lakers led 84-76 after three quarters before the Trail Blazers went on a 14-5 binge to start the final period.

Magic Johnson scored 26 points for the Lakers, including two free throws that gave the Lakers a 104-103 lead with nine seconds remaining. After Porter was fouled by Kareem Abdul-Jabbar and made his foul shot, Los Angeles' James Worthy missed an off-balance shot from the lane as time expired.

Knicks 135, Nets 118

Patrick Ewing scored 38 points with 15-for-19 shooting from the field and Gerald Wilkins scored nine of his career-high 34 points during an 18-0 streak in the fourth quarter as New York pummeled New Jersey, handing the Nets their eighth straight loss.

The Knicks recorded their highest point total since the opening game of the 1984-85 season and ended a seven-game losing streak against the Nets at Madison Square Garden.

New York scored the final 10 points of the first half for a 65-60 lead it never relinquished. Wilkins sparked the eight-minute burst early in the fourth quarter that made it 117-88.

Rockets 120, Warriors 110

Akeem Olajuwon scored 21 points, grabbed 11 rebounds and blocked nine shots to lead Houston past Golden State.

The Rockets led the entire game and won in their first outing since Ralph Sampson suffered a knee injury Tuesday night. He will miss at least six weeks.

Spurs 117, SuperSonics 111

Jon Sundvold scored 25 points as San Antonio won its seventh straight game by beating Seattle. The victory streak is the Spurs' longest since November 1981.

The Spurs led by 24 points in the third quarter before the visiting SuperSonics pulled within 111-109 with 2:25 left to play.

Cup Returns To America

PERTH, Australia (AP) — Under bright skies and in the stiff breeze that Dennis Conner likes, the America's Cup officially returned to U.S. possession today in a ceremony at its home since 1983.

Behind the Royal Perth Yacht Club and in front of the Swan River, at least 5,000 people watched as the gleaming silver trophy was presented to Commodore Fred Frye of the San Diego Yacht Club.

Stars & Stripes, the club's boat, climaxed a four-race sweep of Kookaburra III, the Australian defender, on Wednesday, and Conner climaxed his three-year mission to regain the cup he lost in 1983 — the first U.S. skipper to do so in the event's 132 years.

"This is a dream come true," the 44-year-old San Diegan said toward the end of the 55-minute ceremony. "It's a super day."

The band played "Stars & Stripes Forever" as the strong breeze, the kind in which Stars & Stripes was fastest, blew. Moored just behind the award platform was Kookaburra III, Conner's victim. The city skyline shone underneath the bright afternoon sun in the background.

When the schooner America first won the cup in an 1851 race around the Isle of Wight, "little did anyone realize that the America's Cup would become yachting's most prestigious prize," Frye said.

Australia II's victory was a turning point in the competition's history, taking it out of the U.S. for the first time, and "today marks another turning point," he added.

For its first 132 years, the Cup was held by the New York Yacht Club. On Saturday morning, Conner and other Stars & Stripes personnel leave Fremantle with the cup on a chartered flight to San Diego, its new home.

A meeting with President Reagan at the White House and a ticker-tape parade in New York are planned for early next week.

Friday's ceremony was more formal than the one on Sept. 27, 1983. Then, Alan Bond, head of the winning Australia II syndicate, accepted the prize in front of about 200 people outside a Newport, R.I., mansion.

Keyford Langley, junior point guard. "He's our floor leader. When he's on, we really go," Brewington said.

David Lee, senior guard. "He leads the teams in steals. He knows exactly what the coach wants done. He's the type of player that when pressure comes we have to have him in there," he said.

Errol Wooten, junior forward. "He's a pure shooter. We call him Downtown Errol. When he's on, he's unstoppable," Brewington said.

Terry Warren, senior forward. "We call him Captain. He does more to hold the team together than any one person. His role is that when the pressure comes, he's got to do it. He's a good ball handler. He's a good leaper. He's a real crowd pleaser," he said.

Melvin Jenkins, senior center. "He keeps us going. Without Melvin, we wouldn't be where we are today. He's our leading rebounder and one of our leading scorers," Brewington added.

Lady Rampant coach Bill Kuykendall also has been pleasantly surprised by his team's success.

"I felt like we would be a good defensive ball club and I felt like as the season went along we'd be fairly strong but our early season success surprised me somewhat," he said. "But our conference has not been as strong as it was last year and that's helped some."

Prior to the season, Kuykendall knew he had forwards Kim Dupree and Kim Bridges returning for their senior seasons, but his guards were a question mark.

However, juniors Nicole Maxon and Lisa Leisten have stepped in to fill the void at the guard positions, according to Kuykendall.

"We've got basically a young ball club," Kuykendall said. "There are only two seniors. Kim Dupree and Kim Bridges, two of the seniors, have done an outstanding job scoring wise, defensive wise and rebounding wise."

"The two juniors, Nicole Maxon and Lisa Leisten, have really done an outstanding job at the guard positions. Now our main strength is defense. We normally don't give up a lot of points. Nicole and Lisa generate a lot of steals which gets our running game going. The two big girls are also quick so when we get running, everybody runs."

Much like the boys' team, the Lady Rampants have also relied on balance this season. Dupree leads the team in scoring with an average of 16.5 points per game, followed by Bridges at 10.8 ppg and Leisten at 8.9 ppg.

"We are playing very well right now defensively," Kuykendall said. "Our shooting has come along. Everyone keys on Dupree because she's got the reputation, but we've had six girls in double figures."

The Lady Rampants will need that balance in the next week. They host Beddingfield and Kinston at home in their next two games before traveling to Wilson Fike on the following Friday.

Though in first place now, how Rose does during that three game spread will go a long way toward determining if they finish the regular season in the top spot.

"I would anticipate those to be extremely tough games," Kuykendall said. "I think next week is critical, plus (then) we have to go to Fike. They are difficult to beat on their home court."

Whitfield Gets Win

GRIMESLAND — Hosting G.R. Whitfield split a pair of junior high school basketball games with Wellcome Middle School Thursday.

Whitfield took a 42-38 decision in the boys' game. Wayne McCullough led the way with 14 points while Tyrell Barnhill added 12 and Randy Potter has 11. Danny Suggs, Chris Sawyer and Steve Staton each had eight for Wellcome.

In the girls' game, Wellcome rolled up a 27-10 win. P. Clark had 10 and T. Daniels had eight for Wellcome. Whitfield was led by Michele Yarborough and Tosha Telfaire, each with four.

A.G. Cox-Farmville WINTERVILLE — A.G. Cox Middle School swept a pair of junior high school basketball games from Farmville Thursday.

Cox won the boys' game, 50-40. Junior Farrow poured in 34 points to lead Cox while Shawn Mobley had nine. A. Foreman led Farmville with 12 while B. Foreman and D. Reid each had 10.

In the girls' game, Cox took a 38-12 win. Lendora Tyson led the way with 18 while Stacey Gardner had 13. Pam Lang led Farmville with five.

Both the Cox teams are 8-0 in conference play and 12-0 overall. Cox travels to Chicod on Monday.

Surprising Friars Utilize Two Styles

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — Providence College basketball Coach Rick Pitino is using two teams to go in one direction.

For the first time since 1978, the Friars, a cellar-dweller in the tough Big East Conference, find themselves in the Top 20.

On offense, the Friars move the ball quickly, more often than not getting a 3-point shot from guards Billy Donovan and Delray Brooks or forward Ernie "Pop" Lewis.

Defensively, Providence relies on a nagging press to bother opponents and uses foul after foul to prevent easy shots.

"It's almost like you have two different teams," Pitino said. "You have the finesse team on offense that moves the ball quickly and ball fakes quickly and is constantly looking for the 3-point shot, always looking for the break. And then you have a schizophrenic team. Once the ball goes in, it's like Dr. Jekyll takes over."

The combination has worked, launching Providence to the No. 17 spot in The AP's poll.

A last-second, one-point loss to Boston College last Wednesday damped the Friars' spirits as it ended a seven-game winning streak, six in the conference.

However, a victory over 13th-ranked Pittsburgh on Saturday would go a long way to proving the Friars weren't a beat-and-run Top 20 entry.

Beating Pittsburgh would also give the Friars 17 victories, two shy of the number Pitino thinks will lock up an NCAA tournament bid.

"Being in the Top 20, winning in the Big East, those things are great," Pitino said. "But what's really important to me is getting into the NCAA tournament."

A little over a year ago such talk would have been ridiculed.

Longtime Coach Joe Mullaney, a name synonymous with Providence's glory days, announced he was resigning after the 1985 season. The Friars finished with an 11-20 record.

Pitino was lured away from the staff of the NBA's New York Knicks, promising to restore the Friars' basketball program to respectability by the end of his four-year contract.

He found a shortcut. Providence finished 17-14 last year and advanced to the quarterfinals of the National Invitation Tournament.

Not satisfied, Pitino and his squad have emerged this season as the surprise of the East, knocking off Georgetown and St. John's in the past 10 days to vault into the rankings.

The Friars are leading the nation with an average of 8.5 3-point shots a game.

"That's obviously been our strength," Pitino said. "I wish we could look for it more. Some teams have been doing a good job shutting it down."

Credit for the long-range success rests largely with Donovan, Brooks and Lewis, who made a 3-pointer to beat Georgetown and another to send the St. John's game into overtime.

Donovan, overweight and awkward when he came to Providence as a freshman, has slimmed down, developed into a dangerous shooter and emerged as the team's leader in his senior year.

Lewis, a senior from Philadelphia, and Brooks, an Indiana high school standout who transferred to Providence from Indiana, spend hours working on their shooting.

"Last year we were a defensive team only and we struggled for points," Pitino said. "This year, we improved the range of Lewis and Brooks as soon as we heard about the 3-point shot. Because of their work ethic and dedication, everything is falling into place."

Opposing teams have taken notice, and Pitino said Providence's inside scoring has to improve for the outside game to remain successful.

Students and alumni have also taken notice. Providence, a national power in the 1960s with players such as John Thompson, Lenny Wilkens and Jimmy Walker, are again drawing sellout crowds.

"There's the myth of what happened in the past," Providence Athletic Director Louis Lamoriello said. "There's the feeling that what's happening now is creating an excitement a lot like in the past."

The Civic Center will be packed again Saturday, when the Friars try to avenge an earlier nine-point loss to Pitt.

"We played Pitt very well and I was disappointed we didn't win down there," Pitino said. "What happened in the stretch run was that they just took over with their athletes. They blocked shots, went inside, and overpowered us. What we have to do is make it a 94-foot game and take some of that athletic ability out away from the basket."

After the Pitt game, Providence has six Big East games remaining, including road games against Syracuse, St. John's, Georgetown and Seton Hall.

The tough road schedule makes the Pitt game all that more important to Pitino.

"This game is the most crucial game of the season for us," he said. "It's the most important game to get us into the NCAA tournament."

Leading Hawaiian Open

Surgeon Denies Wrongdoing

PROVO, Utah (AP) — The former orthopedic surgeon for Brigham Young's football team denies allegations that he illegally prescribed drugs to players and an assistant coach and will fight to keep his license to practice medicine, his attorney says.

Pavin Putts To Early Hawaiian Open Lead

HONOLULU, Hawaii (AP) — The greens on the Waialae Country Club course have the reputation of being among the best on the PGA Tour.

And history shows that scores in the Hawaiian Open, year after year, are among the lowest of the season.

All of which, Corey Pavin said, puts the premium on putting.

"If you can't putt well here, you're just not going to do well in the tournament," said Pavin, the defending title-holder in this $600,000 event.

"I've heard the stories about how great these greens used to be. They weren't quite up there the last couple of years, but now I see what they're talking about."

"These greens are the best I've seen. They're just getting better and better," said Pavin, winner of the Bob Hope Classic last month and the PGA Tour's leading money-winner at this early stage of the season.

And Pavin took full advantage of those good greens Thursday en route to a 7-under-par 65 for a one-shot lead over Mac O'Grady and Jack Renner after one round. Putting, he said, was the key.

"I'm very pleased with the way I putted. I made a lot of good putts, rolled the ball real well," Pavin said.

He was not alone.

Tom Watson, once recognized as the most dangerous putter on the Tour, used an altered putting grip to shoot a 67 that left him only two off the pace and full of enthusiasm.

"It's a great feeling to make some putts again," said Watson, a five-time British Open champion who is seeking an end to a two-year non-winning string.

"I changed my hand position on the putter, raised them a little. I was getting too wristy. And today, I didn't make a mistake on the greens."

"I'm rolling it where I'm aiming. The speed is right. It's starting to get good again," Watson said.

O'Grady and Renner shared second at 66, six under par on the windswept Waialae Country Club course.

O'Grady, winner of the Tournament of Champions that opened the 1987 season, had a 4-hole stretch that he played birdie, birdie, eagle, birdie, while Renner, a former winner here, got his spot among the leaders despite a double bogey.

Bruce Soulesby, a rookie from New Zealand was tied with Watson at 67.

Isao Aoki, the Japanese veteran who won this title with a last-hole eagle in 1983, led a group at 68 that also included Dave Eichelberger, Bill Britton and Dick Zokol.

edge at the half and for most of the second half before a Richmond rally cut the lead to four with 2:43 to go.

Henry led ECU with 27 while Leon Bass and Keith Sledge each hit 13. Peter Woolfolk, a 6-5 junior forward, led the Spiders with 20 while Steve Kratzer, a 6-8 junior center, added 13.

Woolfolk is the leading scorer for the Spiders with 14.8 points per game, and he leads in rebounding with an 8.4 mark.

Rodney Rice, a 6-3 junior guard, is averaging 12.6 points per game, while Kratzer has an 11.8 mark. The other starters include 6-4 freshman Scott Stapleton at the other forward post, and 6-0 freshman Ken Atkinson at the other guard slot.

East Carolina's scoring is led by Henry at 19.9 per game with Edwards hitting 15.8 per outing. Bass has a 10.7 average. The other starters include Sledge at 7.2 and either Howard Brown, 7.1, or Jeff Kelly, 1.4.

The Lady Pirates will be attempting to improve on their 5-2 CAA record against the Lady Spiders and Indians.

Richmond, 3-4 in the league, is 9-11 overall. East Carolina won their earlier meeting, 58-45, in Richmond.

The Lady Spiders are led by 6-2 junior front court player Laurie Governor, who sports a 17.3

average. Only one other Spider is in double figures, 5-6 freshman guard Pam Bryant. She is hitting 10.8 per game.

The Lady Tribe is 3-16 overall and 1-6 in the CAA. Their earlier game with the Lady Pirates ended in a 74-50 rout.

The Indians are led by 5-11 senior forward Karen Jordan, who averages 14.4 points per game. No other Lady Indian is in double figures. Second high for the team is 6-1 junior center Beth Hairfield, hitting 9.2 per outing.

There is another factor in this meeting of the teams, however. East Carolina will again be without the services of 6-0 junior forward Monique Pompili, out with a thumb injury. She has not played since briefly appearing against George Mason two weeks ago.

Pompili was the leading scorer for the Lady Pirates with a 13.4 average. She scored 11 points and pulled 11 rebounds against Richmond, but got only eight points and two rebounds against the Indians.

Alma Bethea averages 11.6 for the Pirates while Delphine Mabry has a 10.0 mark.

After this weekend's games, the men's team is idle until the following Saturday when they travel to UNC-Wilmington. The women, however, will play South Carolina State on Thursday before hosting UNCW on Saturday.

East Carolina To Host Diving Championships

East Carolina University will play host to the 32nd annual Atlantic Seaboard Interscholastic Swimming and Diving Championships tonight and Saturday.

Some 250 swimmers, representing 25 high schools ranging up and down the east coast from New Jersey to the Carolinas.

Calvert Hall of Maryland is the defending champion in the boys' favorite and is again expected to come away with the title. Mercersburg, from Pennsylvania, the defending champion for the girls is also expected to repeat.

Calvert Hall has won the last five years in a row, and 15 of the last 17 meets, having lost only in 1981 and 1976 to Peddie School of New Jersey.

Peddie is not competing this year.

Mercersburg has won the last three meets for girls, and also won back in 1977, the second year that competition was held for girls.

A total of 22 events will be held in the meet, 11 each for boys and girls.

Diving preliminaries are the only activity tonight, at 5:30 p.m.

Swimming trials being at 8:30 a.m. Saturday and the finals will be at 5:30 p.m.

In 1985, the assessed valuation of real property in Pitt County totaled $1,744,612,157; personal property was valued at $750,322,923.

 Many old lacy dresses are now confined to museums. This one was recently put on display at the Amherst Museum in the state of New York. Actress Sarah Bernhardt may have been the first woman to wear trousers. She was photographed wearing a "pant suit" in 1876. As more women participated in sports, women's pants became more acceptable. But it wasn't until 1933 that the first trouser suits for women appeared on the scene in London.

decide whether you would rather play or defend four spades after the opening lead of the king of hearts.
 Your four spade opening preempt achieved its purpose. Note that, as the cards lie, your opponents can make 11 tricks at a heart contract, and had you opened one spade they might have gotten there. After your barrage, however, neither opponent could safely venture into uncharted waters at the prevailing vulnerability.
 The fate of the hand seems to depend on the club finesse and the location of the ace of diamonds. One peek at East's hand and it would seem your contract is doomed. When East gains the lead with the king of clubs he will shift to the queen of diamonds, and that means down one.
 However, you don't have to let East in with the king of clubs. Discard a club on the opening lead instead of ruffing! Then you can take a ruffing finesse for the king of clubs and, whether it wins or loses, you will lose no more than three tricks. You will get at least two discards on clubs, and the king of diamonds is protected from attack.

 Perhaps, therefore, you have decided to declare four spades. Wrong! You should opt for defending. East can foil you by overtaking his partner's king of hearts with the ace, and later playing the ten when you lead a heart from dummy. That way you will not be able to keep him off lead, and he can make the fatal diamond shift.
 However, if East is that good a defender, send him to us. We need him on our team.

Movie Industry Shifts Emphasis To N.C., Where Films Cost Less

By MARGARET BELL
Associated Press Writer
RALEIGH (AP) — Since Dino De Laurentiis began making films in North Carolina in 1983, filmmakers have learned that box office hits can be made in this state for half the cost of other locations, a state official says.

Paramount Pictures' "Critical Condition," starring Richard Pryor, might have been filmed in Canada, but state Film Office director Bill Arnold says he convinced Paramount that a North Carolina location would cut costs in half.

"Paramount preferred the picture to be shot in Canada," Arnold said. "At that point, we had to prove to Paramount that not only did we have the location and the facilities here to accommodate the people, but that they could actually shoot the (film) more economically in North Carolina than in Canada."

An element of the low cost of business for producers in North Carolina is the state's freedom from compulsory unionization.

"Critical Condition" was filmed in nine weeks at an abandoned hospital in High Point and in neighboring Winston-Salem and Greensboro. The company spent four days filming in New York to fill in street scenes, warehouse scenes, prison scenes and courtroom scenes. The film edged "Star Trek IV" out of first place in the box office sweepstakes during the third week of January, dropping this week to number four.

"Paramount was pushing for Canada because of the favorable rate of exchange on the dollar," Arnold said. "A lot of films have been done in Canada recently just for that reason. As it worked out, they did shoot it here and more economically."

Arnold says the average cost of a Hollywood location film is $18.2 million, compared to $9 million in North Carolina.

But filmmakers aren't the only ones with something to gain in North Carolina. During eight weeks in the summer of 1985, Warner Brothers dumped $5 million into the economies of Union and Anson counties while filming "The Color Purple," Arnold said. The movie made $148 million in its first release.

Arnold said cost savings would motivate Paramount and other big names in the film industry to return to North Carolina and the state's own De Laurentiis Entertainment Group to continue to expand.

"Mr. De Laurentiis told Gov. Martin in November in Los Angeles that he was quite pleased with the activity that he was doing here because he was saving approximately half the cost of what it costs to make a movie in Los Angeles," Arnold said.

"De Laurentiis just finished his seventh sound stage and has plans to build two more in the next three months, which is an indication that he must be pleased with the results he's getting," Arnold said.

At one time, De Laurentiis had studios in Italy and Mexico, Arnold said. Now his only studio is in North Carolina.

"The Bedroom Window," a thriller released by the DEG, was shot primarily in Wilmington. The film included two weeks of shooting in Baltimore and some ballet from the North Carolina School of the Arts. The film is eighth in box office rankings this week, after placing seventh in its first week.

Another De Laurentiis release, "Crimes of the Heart," filmed in Southport, dropped from the top ten this week, after climbing to number nine a week ago.

"We're very fortunate to have it (DEG) here," Arnold said. "If nothing else, it's proved that you can make first-rate films in North Carolina with absolutely first-rate talent. 'Crimes of the Heart' had three Academy Award-winning actresses. The director, Bruce Beresford, won an Academy Award for 'Tender Mercies' about two years ago."

DEG's current release, "From the Hip," was also filmed in Wilmington and Charlotte, Arnold said.

"The future looks very good here with regard to filming," Arnold said. "The governor has thrown his weight behind the program and has given the industry his support, which is really the key to making it work."

High-Definition Television Gives Crisp, Sharp Picture

By PENNY PAGANO
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — At a local department store here this week, consumers got their first glimpse of a new technology that may one day give them the same quality pictures on their TV sets they see at movie theaters.

The demonstrations on three large-screen televisions, which included excerpts from the movie "Top Gun," frequently were followed by two questions from those who watched: "How much is it?" and "Where can I buy it?"

Welcome to the world of high-definition television, a technological advance that its advocates say will revolutionize television viewing in the same way that the advent of color affected black-and-white TV sets.

"This would be a completely new experience," says Thomas B. Keller, senior vice president for science and technology at the National Association of Broadcasters.

High-definition television produces a crisp, sharp picture that is comparable to the 35mm film that currently is used for the production of most feature films, commercial television programs and music videos. The images on a HDTV set are sharper because the technology uses 1,125 horizontal scanning lines to create a picture, compared to the current standard of 525 lines.

Consumers would have to buy a new, high-definition TV set to receive the full benefits of the technology, and special equipment is also needed to produce the programs.

Experts say the technology will be best suited for televisions sets with larger screens (at least 23 inches). In addition, the new sets are being designed to be one-third wider than today's TV sets because, experts say, the wider screen better approximates the normal field of vision. They also are expected to feature high-quality, digital sound.

At a recent seminar here on high-definition TV, Edward O. Fritts, president of the NAB, told an audience of industry and government representatives that "high-definition television's impact could probably be greater in the United States than anywhere else on Earth."

The Electronic Industries Association estimates that 98 percent of the 86 million U.S. households have televisions, and that 3 percent of those households now have large-screen projection televisions. In 1985, manufacturers sold dealers 266,000 large-screen televisions. In 1986, the number jumped to 320,000, and the estimate for 1987 is 365,000 sets.

However, while the state-of-the-art technology for high-definition television is a reality, telecommunications consultant Kaimann Schaefer says that mass producing it for the consumer market "is not imminent."

The Japanese have invested millions of dollars in developing high-definition television sets and production equipment, but engineering experts say that they are still three to five years away from the U.S. consumer market.

The next step is to develop inexpensive technology to mass produce the TV sets and equipment. And that in turn may hinge on the demand for the technology in Japan and abroad.

"The only way the Japanese can afford to buy the sets (in Japan) is if there is a world market so that the mass market will bring the price down," says one expert. Preliminary estimates place the cost of the new high-definition televisions at about $3,000.

While American consumers will have to wait to buy HDTV, they may see some first-hand use of the technology much sooner.

The technology already is being used in parts of the world by film makers and producers of some television programs, music videos and commercials. There are such production studios now in New York, Paris and Tokyo, and one is being planned for Los Angeles, according to Ben Crutchfield, who directs the project for the NAB.

According to Crutchfield, HDTV production enables use of some special effects that cannot be done with 35mm film. "You have all the effects available to television current, but in a much better quality," Crutchfield says.

He also says that those who have used this production equipment, which features one-inch, high-quality video tape, report that they get a quality comparable to 35mm film and also save time and money because they can see immediate results without having to wait for the film to be processed.

Crutchfield also believes that even without a HDTV television set at home, TV viewers will be able to notice some improved quality in productions made with the special new equipment. However, the full benefit will not be available without the special TV set.

And there may be other uses: Hollywood studios and production companies already are looking at HDTV as a possible new means to distribute their movies to theaters around the nation.

Instead of distributing individual copies of the films, the studios could distribute films using HDTV via satellites with scrambled signals to hundreds of theaters around the country. Some observers suggest this satellite delivery system would enable the studios to realize a faster return on their pictures.

"All the theater has to do is put an antenna on the top of its building to get the signal," says Schaefer. "This is where I see HDTV being used in the short term."

Coroner Checking Possibility Liberace Was Victim Of AIDS

PALM SPRINGS, Calif. (AP) — Liberace's fans and family gathered to attend today's memorial service, while officials rejected his death certificate and began an investigation into whether the flamboyant entertainer had AIDS.

Spokesmen for Liberace repeatedly have denied published reports that the 67-year-old pianist had the disease.

Dr. Ronald Daniels, who signed the death certificate, said Liberace's death Wednesday was caused by cardiac arrest due to congestive heart failure brought on by subacute encephalopathy, an inflammation of the brain.

"We're not disputing the cause of death," said coroner's office spokesman Sabas Rosas. "We simply want to conduct an independent investigation, which we have to do in these cases. We're not doing anything different in this case. We're following protocol."

State law requires coroners to investigate deaths suspected of being caused by contagious disease, and it is Riverside County policy to investigate deaths that occur in the home or without a physician present.

The county health department refused to accept the death certificate Thursday, when officials discovered the coroner had not been contacted as required, Coroner Raymond Carrillo said.

Carrillo said he did not know if an autopsy would be necessary to determine if Liberace had AIDS, but added that the body could not be entombed until the investigation was completed.

Daniels did not immediately return a telephone call made to his exchange after office hours Thursday. Liberace spokeswoman Denise Collier and publicist Jamie James also did not immediately return telephone calls.

Liberace is to be entombed at Forest Lawn Memorial Park near Hollywood, alongside his mother and brother, cemetery spokesman Dick Fisher has said. He did not say when the entombment was to take place.

Today's memorial service was scheduled at Our Lady of Solitude Roman Catholic Church, across the street from Liberace's palatial home in this desert resort town.

The family originally wanted to keep the memorial private, but "just got so many calls from people saying 'we want to be there, we want to be part of it,' they decided that Lee would have wanted it that way, and decided to open it up," Ms. Collier said.

Another public service is planned Feb. 12 at St. Anne's Roman Catholic Church in Las Vegas, Nev., where Liberace had a home and often performed.

The Hollywood Chamber of Commerce placed a wreath on Liberace's star on the "Walk of Fame" on Thursday. There was no ceremony.

Liberace, known for his rhinestone-studded costumes and extravagant jewelry, died a day after slipping into a coma, said publicist James.

"He had the rosary wrapped around his right hand. There was no jewelry. The rosary beads were his jewelry," James said.

Fans had kept a vigil outside the home for the last few days, along with dozens of reporters and photographers.

Simon Film Scheduled

FORT SMITH, Ark. (AP) — Universal Studios will start shooting "Biloxi Blues," the second work in playwright Neil Simon's semi-autobiographical trilogy, in Arkansas next month, state officials say.

The film will be shot in Fort Smith, Van Buren and Fort Chaffee, officials said Thursday.

The movie, based on the hit Broadway show of the same name, picks up where "Brighton Beach Memoirs" ended.

"Biloxi Blues" is the story of a young Brooklyn, N.Y., man going through the trials of an Army boot camp in the South and falling in love during the mid-1940s.

The film will be directed by Mike Nichols, and will feature Matthew Broderick reprising the protagonist's role, according to Executive Producer Joe Caracciola.

Filming is expected to last 10 weeks, and the movie should be in theaters by Christmas, Caracciola said.

Caracciola said Fort Chaffee was chosen because of the success of a "A Soldier's Story," which featured scenes filmed at the fort.

Martin Film Halted For Lack Of Snow

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. (AP) — Lack of snow, not too much of it, has brought filming of Steve Martin's new movie, "Planes, Trains and Automobiles," to a screeching halt.

Moviemakers had planned to shoot scenes for the movie here this weekend but canceled those plans Wednesday because there was no snow, state Film Commission Manager Gary Gonder said Thursday.

The weekend forecast calls for balmy 60-degree weather, which eliminates the snow machine option, officials said.

The storyline for the Paramount Pictures movie calls for Martin and co-star John Candy to have a tough time reaching Chicago during the holidays.

The weather in Chicago cooperated for filming several weeks ago, when there was 12 inches of snow. Background scenes shot in snowless Jefferson City wouldn't match those in the Windy City, Gonder said.

The scenes planned for Jefferson City probably will be shot in Calgary, Alberta, officials said.

Trashiness Runs Second In 'Two Mrs. Grenvilles'

By ROBERT BARR
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — H.D. Thoreau, inveighing against civilization from the shores of Walden Pond, warned against any enterprise that required new clothes. Look out, as well, for the miniseries that requires lots of old clothes.

NBC's publicity for "The Two Mrs. Grenvilles," airing Sunday and Monday, has harped about all the fabulous fashions of the 1950s provided for Ann-Margret and Claudette Colbert by designers Nolan Miller, Donald Brooks and Sue Yelland.

In an interview last year while the show was in production, Ann-Margret reported she had 44 costume changes.

"I always kid with my friends and say, 'I think 37 of them are nightgowns.' She's that kind of character."

It's that kind of show.

Don't look for character development, or a mystery, or anyone to hold your sympathy. This is about gorgeous rich people in beautiful clothes and ritzy locales being perfectly beastly to each other, in the manner of "Dynasty" and "Dallas."

"The Two Mrs. Grenvilles" is too muted and uncertain, however, to deliver the trashy delights associated with the Colbys and the Ewings.

Ann-Margret plays Ann Arden, a showgirl who marries upper-crust scion Billy Grenville (Stephen Collins) despite opposition from his mother (Claudette Colbert).

Their wild ardor cools when Billy goes off to fight the Japanese — "there's nothing like war to change a man," this sensitive soul writes home — and deteriorates further as Ann labors to ingratiate herself with the snobs in her new social set.

One dark and campy night, as lightning flashes and wind howls, Ann blasts Billy with both barrels of a shotgun. To keep the family's dirty laundry hidden, old Mrs. Grenville grits her teeth and supports her detested daughter-in-law's story that she thought she was shooting a prower.

The story is based on Dominick Dunne's best-selling novel of the same name, based on the sensational Woodward case of the 1950s.

The book portrayed Ann Grenville as a tough, grasping little cookie and gave little support to her claims that it was all an accident.

Ann-Margret, however, conceived of Ann as an innocent, despite all the clues in the script that she had means, motive and opportunity for murder.

"I, as an actress, could not do this part if I thought that it was premeditated. That's just me," the actress said. "I believe that it was an accident."

The character's supposed good intentions are a drag on the story from the start. After her first roll in the percale with Billy, she puts as he talks about the family bank and the house in Newport. "I wish you hadn't told me that," she says.

Right. The showgirl has come all the way from Kansas, spent her salary on flashy gowns and hangs around the dance floor of El Morocco.

U.S. Holding Suspected Drug Trafficker In Secret Location

By PAT LEISNER
Associated Press Writer

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — A Colombian brought here to face charges he heads the world's largest cocaine smuggling ring is being held in a secret location to prevent any rescue attempts, authorities said.

U.S. drug agents and their families worldwide, as well as American tourists in Colombia, were warned of possible retaliation for the extradition of reputed cocaine kingpin Carlos Lehder Rivas, a newspaper reported.

"Anytime you have a billionaire trafficker with a violent past, you have to be careful," U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration spokesman Billy Yout said in Miami, explaining the heavy security surrounding Lehder.

The 37-year-old self-proclaimed Nazi was captured by Colombian troops in a shootout at his jungle mansion Wednesday and flown here by U.S. Air Force jet, arriving early Thursday.

Despite his suspected wealth, Lehder asked for court-appointed counsel at a hearing Thursday because, he said, he had no funds with him.

"Most of my assets are frozen by the government in Colombia," he told U.S. Magistrate Elizabeth Jenkins in a heavily guarded courtroom here.

WJXT-TV in Jacksonville reported Thursday evening that he was being held at one of five military bases in the Jacksonville area.

An FBI agent contacted by The Associated Press at the Jacksonville office refused to release any information on Lehder's location. The agent did not give a name.

The magistrate ordered Lehder held for a formal hearing Monday in Jacksonville, where he is under a 6-year-old indictment on drug and conspiracy charges.

U.S. Attorney Robert Merkle urged Lehder's detention, saying there had been death threats against a judge.

"That's a lie!" Lehder shouted. Merkle did not elaborate.

After the hearing, plainclothes officers with shotguns and submachine guns stood guard outside as U.S. deputy marshals drove Lehder away. Deputies kept watch in and outside the courtroom. Police were stationed on streets and rooftops.

The worldwide alert to narcotics agents and their families was announced Thursday by DEA head

John Lawn, according to a story published in The Miami Herald today.

In Bogota, Colombia, national police and Foreign Ministry sources told the AP that threats of reprisals came in telephone calls from people who identified themselves only as members of the "extraditers group."

"We would like Americans to realize traveling in Colombia may be a problem in the short run," U.S. Rep. Larry Smith, D-Fla. said Thursday. "We can't say that for sure ... but we have to be very concerned."

Lehder is alleged to be one of four drug bosses who have earned billions of dollars smuggling cocaine from Colombia to the United States. Charges in Jacksonville include conspiracy, importing cocaine, possession with intent to distribute the drug and racketeering.

The indictment alleges that from 1978 to 1980 Lehder and his associates conspired to import cocaine into the United States through Norman's Cay in the Bahamas. About 4.4 tons of cocaine were shipped to the United States during that time, Merkle said.

Two Million Kids Left Alone Daily

WASHINGTON (AP) — The end of the school day means an empty house and time left on their own for more than 2 million American youngsters, largely children of white, upper income families, the Census Bureau reports.

Known as latchkey children, these boys and girls have drawn considerable attention in recent years as sociologists and politicians expressed concern about their welfare.

The new Census study of children ages 5 to 13 found that 7.2 percent of them, or 2,065,000, are on their own for at least some time after school — a share ranging from only about 1 percent of those age 5 to nearly 14 percent of the 13-year-olds.

And for those without supervision, the white, upper- and middle-class neighborhood appears the more common scene for their free time than the low-income scene.

"Children whose mothers were better educated or in white collar occupations and children in higher income households were more likely than others to be reported as unsupervised by an adult after school," the study found.

In families in which the mother worked full time, the share of children on their own after school varied from 10 percent for those with incomes of $10,000 or less, to 16.6 percent for incomes over $35,000.

Mothers who did not complete high school left 7.8 percent of the children on their own after school, compared with 14.8 percent for college-graduate mothers.

And when measured by mother's occupation, the share of children left alone varied from 10.8 percent for service workers to 16 percent for executives and administrators, according to the study.

This may result from some higher-income families having fewer relatives available to care for youngsters, the study suggests. And those families may live in neighborhoods which the family perceives safe for older children to be on their own.

"Self-care may be a product of confidence in the child and the environment for some parents, as much as it is produced by lack of alternatives or their inability to pay for care among others," the study states.

"Self-care was likely to be short-term," the study also found, with many on their own for less than an hour and only one in 10 for more than three hours.

On racial lines, despite the fact that black women are more likely than whites to work full time, black children were less likely to be left on their own, the Bureau found.

Unemployment Still Holding At Lowest Level Since 1981

By MATT YANCEY
AP Labor Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The economy created 375,000 to 450,000 jobs last month to hold the civilian unemployment rate at 6.7 percent, its lowest in nearly seven years, the government said today.

The number of unemployed Americans, meanwhile, rose by 74,000 to 8,023,000 after dipping below 8 million for the first time since mid-1981.

The job gains almost mirrored a growth in the labor force of 450,000. In December, the labor force had dropped by 90,000 and the jobless rate fell 0.2 percentage point from November's 6.9 percent.

The Labor Department said the normal seasonal decline in employment after the Christmas buying season did not develop this year, as some economists had expected. For instance, employment in retail stores and restaurants grew by 165,000 in January after seasonal adjustments.

"Because pre-Christmas hiring this season was less than in the past, post-holiday job cutbacks were smaller than usual," the Bureau of Labor Statistics said.

Without the seasonal adjustment process, however, the bureau reported an actual drop of 650,000 in retail trade jobs.

Construction employment also declined less than in a normal January — by 225,000. After seasonal adjustments, that job total rose by 140,000.

"Construction activity was more vigorous than usual, in part reflecting favorable weather conditions and a surge in building permits that occurred at the end of last year," said Janet L. Norwood, the commissioner of labor statistics, in testimony before Congress.

Some analysts had predicted an unusually large decline in construction jobs as a result of changes in the tax law. Manufacturers, meanwhile, added 3,000 jobs, seasonally adjusted, much fewer than the 41,000 December job gain, but still the fourth straight monthly increase.

Those job gains came in the lumber, printing and chemical industries, offsetting losses in the metal, machinery, auto and electrical industries.

After retail trade, the largest job gain was posted by business and medical services, 115,000.

Democrats Show Evidence Of Split Over Trade Policy

By MIKE ROBINSON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Democrats, eager to push ahead with a sweeping trade bill after two years of waiting, are nevertheless showing early signs of a split on the issue.

Such divided thinking, which also plagued Republicans when they controlled the Senate last year, separates lawmakers who dread the ravages of imports on their home states from those whose constituents are export minded.

Divided thinking could make the task of Democratic leaders more difficult as they attempt to win approval for legislation they have repeatedly urged as the U.S. trade deficit has deepened to a record $169.78 billion.

Despite a show of unity when major trade legislation was introduced Thursday, there were clear signs the split already has divided Democrats on just how far to go with the issue they call their top priority.

Lawmakers from states hit by plant closings are backing stringent features they say would force open markets in Asia and tilt the balance more in the direction of America's higher-paid workers.

Export-minded lawmakers, however, wince at crackdown-style legislation they fear could trigger retaliation that could fall on America's farmers and aircraft makers.

The split opened when Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, took the floor Thursday to push legislation he said "probably will be the last major trade bill of this century."

The measure, introduced earlier by Bentsen, would grant the administration authority to negotiate agreements in the current talks on modification of the 93-nation General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. It also calls for speeded up approval of such pacts and makes numerous adjustments in U.S. policy.

In return, the administration would have to present Congress with a detailed report on its trade objectives. Bentsen said setting these goals was the responsibility of the administration.

Majority Leader Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., a co-sponsor of the measure, praised Bentsen for introducing it but indicated he expected some changes.

"I hope, if I may say so, that we don't just ask the president where he's headed," Byrd said. "We have to tell him where to head. ... We've got to put a little backbone in him."

Earlier, Sen. Donald W. Riegle Jr., D-Mich., another of the bill's 55 co-sponsors, told the news conference at which Bentsen unveiled the measure that he would attempt to reshape it.

Citing plant closings in Michigan and elsewhere, the auto state lawmaker said he would seek to attach a measure calling for import restrictions.

He said he also would push for a plan to recognize unfair labor practices overseas as unfair trade practices. That in turn could conceivably add cost to inexpensive Korean-made cars as well as others on the way from Taiwan and Singapore.

Senators Disagree Over Their Rules

By SUSAN PAGE
L.A. Times-Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Senate Majority Leader Robert Byrd was mad. Senate Republican Leader Bob Dole was livid. Vice President George Bush was called out of a private lunch with President Reagan to join the dispute.

And the Senate ended up spending virtually all day Thursday enmeshed in parliamentary struggles over whether it would consider the Energy Policy and Conservation Act — not previously viewed as a major piece of legislation — which would require energy-efficient standards for household appliances.

In the end, everybody went home mad.

It started, naturally, with politics. Byrd — flush from the Senate's rebuff of Reagan Wednesday when it overrode his veto of the Clean Water Act — wanted to immediately bring up the popular appliance legislation, which Reagan pocket-vetoed last year.

But Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, wanted to delay the vote until after the week-long Lincoln's Birthday recess to avoid having Reagan embarrassed again so quickly. All Gramm had to do was delay the bill until after 1 p.m., so he repeatedly demanded quorum calls, lengthy roll calls of the membership.

A frustrated Byrd tried to circumvent Gramm and move on, backed by Sen. Harry Reid, the newly elected Democratic senator from Nevada, who happened to be presiding.

Dole rose to back Gramm, but Reid refused to recognize him. Visibly outraged, Dole telephoned Bush, who as vice president is also president of the Senate. Bush was called out of his private weekly luncheon with the president to rush to Capitol Hill.

Once presiding, Bush unsurprisingly ruled with the Republicans — enraging Byrd, who charged he had ignored Senate procedures. Bush, given rare permission to speak on the Senate floor, said he "acted only to guarantee fair play."

When it was over, Gramm succeeded in delaying the bill, but Dole vowed to review videotapes of the sessions today to prove that "our rights were denied." A Byrd aide snuffed that the Republicans were "still going through the transition period of becoming the minority."

And Reid, an aide said, left town fast, heading home to Nevada.

Texas Jails Filled As Prisons Close

HUNTSVILLE, Texas (AP) — Inmates at packed county jails slept on the floor as the state's prisons grappled with overcrowding by closing their doors to new convicts for a second straight day today and the second time in a month.

The population in the nation's second-largest corrections system remained above the ceiling set by the Legislature in 1983 despite the release of about 120 inmates Thursday, officials said.

"We'll have to have a few more days like that," said Charles Brown, a spokesman for the Texas Department of Corrections. "Actually, it would be good if we had a week like that."

As of midnight Wednesday, the department's 26 units held 38,523 inmates, or 135 over the limit of 95 percent capacity, officials said. The exact count at midnight Thursday was to be announced this afternoon.

Camps for minimum-security inmates and a new maximum security prison are under construction. Those facilities, which will add about 4,200 beds, will not open until later this year.

U.S. Says 'No Arms'

WASHINGTON (AP) — NASA is assuring its European, Canadian and Japanese partners in the U.S. space station project that the Pentagon will place no major weapons system aboard, even though the military will retain the right to conduct research.

James C. Fletcher, administrator of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, told Congress on Thursday that an agreement to that effect was worked out with the Defense Department, which had said it wanted to keep its options open for using the station.

Cables were sent by the State Department to the countries involved, containing proposed new texts for the international agreements to be negotiated at a meeting of the space station partners in Washington next Wednesday.

The military interest had not been known until December, and it caused consternation among the other nations that the civilian character of the station would change.

After telling the House Science and Technology Committee that the Pentagon will be allowed to do research on the station, Fletcher was asked by Rep. Robert Walker, R-Pa., if that would include weapons research.

"In terms of laser beams, no," Fletcher said, "but research on semiconductors would be fair game."

Fletcher did not offer details of the agreement, which one official said took weeks to reach.

Since 1960, Pitt County's population has increased from 69,942 to approximately 95,000.
