Howell: 'I'm Glad I Did It'

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

Dr. John Howell, chancellor of East Carolina University for the past five years, will retire Friday, ending a career at the university that began in 1957 when Howell joined the school's faculty as an associate professor of political science.

An Air Force sergeant before he began his career in education in 1950 — first as an instructor at the University of Idaho, then as an instructor or assistant professor at Randolph-Macon Women's College, Duke University, Sweetbriar College and Memphis State University — Howell had never planned to be a chancellor or hold any administrative post.

"I came into it sort of by accident," Howell said last week. "I never applied for any administrative job. It's not something I had a burning desire to do."

But he did.

Over the years at East Carolina, Howell has been a professor, department chairman, dean of the college of arts and sciences, dean of the graduate school, vice chancellor for academic affairs, acting chancellor and chancellor.

And he now says, "I'm glad I did it."

However, Howell celebrated his 65th birthday last month and he's ready to move on.

"Oh, yes ... I'm ready to retire," he says.

"We've both worked pretty incessantly for a long time," Howell said, including his wife, Gladys, who was forced to give up her teaching career with the department of sociology and anthropology when Howell became chancellor.

But she has continued to "work" for the school.

"My wife has played a very major role in this chancellorship," Howell said. "She doesn't tell me who to hire and fire," but she's been very active in helping to develop the university's "external relationships," Howell acknowledged.

"She's gone with me on a lot of official trips," according to Howell, and "managed" the entertaining the chancellor is required to do.

Being chancellor of the state's third largest university is "a job that just ties you down. You don't get away from it," according to Howell, suggesting "you get weary of the demands."

"It's a difficult job," too, Howell said. But he has enjoyed it. "I've made a lot of great friends."

East Carolina University has been, according to Howell, a very nice place to be in academic life (and) the universary and community have a very good relationship.

Then, too, the University of North Carolina system, of which ECU is a part, "is the envy of a lot of other public institutions in this country. Decisions are made on a rational basis (with) no political intrusion."

And East Carolina "is an institution where students want to get an education," Howell emphasized. "We have a very serious student

Probers Question McFarlane

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan's former national security adviser on Saturday again told a commission investigating the Iran-Contra affair that Reagan had approved the first shipment of U.S. arms to Iran in August 1985, sources said.

The assertion by Robert C. McFarlane disputes claims by White House Chief of Staff Donald T. Regan that the president did not give advance approval of the arms shipment.

It came during a three-hour interview at the Bethesda Naval Hospital with members of a panel appointed in November, said the sources, speaking on condition of anonymity.

In addition to questioning McFarlane about whether Reagan approved the first transfer of arms sent from Israel, the three commission members also took more testimony about a chronology of events prepared last Nov. 18-19 by past and present White House staffers, said the sources, who are familiar with the commission's work.

The three-member commission, headed by former Republican Sen. John Tower of Texas, is due to issue its report on Thursday. White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater has said, "It's going to be a very critical report and a very tough report."

CBS and ABC News, quoting sources close to the commission, reported Saturday that the panel has concluded that Regan played a key role in assembling a misleading chronology that was used to preare the president for his Nov. 19 news conference.

White House spokesman Dan Howard, questioned about the networks' report, said, "We ain't going to say anything till we get the Tower report."

Besides the Tower commission, two congressional committees and an independent counsel are investigating the sale of U.S. arms to Iran and the subsequent diversion of some of the profits to the Nicaraguan Contra rebels.

The controversy has become the most serious crisis of Reagan's presidency.

It was the second time in three days the Tower panel had interviewed McFarlane, who has been hospitalized in suburban Maryland since Feb. 9 after he took an overdose of the tranquilizer Valium in what police sources said was an attempted suicide.

Syrian Troops Ready To Intervene In Beirut

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — About 4,000 Syrian troops struck camp Saturday near Beirut and their scouts were reported in a suburb of the capital, indicating Syria was moving in to quell weeklong factional fighting in Moslem west Beirut.

Lebanese Moslem government leaders and chieftains of the feuding militias had requested the intervention during a meeting Friday with Syrian officials.

President Amin Gemayel, a Maronite Catholic, on Saturday denounced any such move, saying it would be unconstitutional. However, Gemayel wields no influence in Lebanon's Moslem-held areas.

At least 200 people have been killed and 400 injured since the battle for control of west Beirut began Feb. 15, pitting the Shiite Moslem Amal militia against an alliance of Druse militias and Lebanese Communists.

Sources who refused to be identified further said the Syrian intervention force consists of an armored brigade with 100 Soviet-made T-62 tanks and 200 armored personnel carriers, backed by an elite Special Forces battalion and a mechanized infantry battalion.

The estimated 4,000 Syrian troops have camped for three days in the central mountain resort of Sofar, about 15 miles east of Beirut, said a Lebanese army official, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

He said the Syrians would move toward west Beirut "once its deployment plan is finalized."

"Today, they dismantled their tents. That was the only indication they might move soon," he said. It would take the Syrians at least four hours to reach west Beirut from Sofar.

State-run Beirut Radio and the Moslem-controlled Voice of the Nation said a Syrian scouting patrol arrived in the southern Beirut suburb of Khaldeh shortly after nightfall.

Beirut police said they could not confirm the report.

A report by a Lebanese source in Damascus earlier Saturday that the Syrian troops "are already rolling" was misinterpreted to mean they had already reached west Beirut.

Local reporters said the Syrians have deployed hundreds of Soviet-made halftracks on both sides of a 28-mile-long highway connecting the town of Masnaa on the Syrian border with the mountain range in central Lebanon.

"The vehicles are guarding the supply route for the Syrian intervention force," said a Syrian army officer, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

One reporter counted at least 75 Syrian trucks loaded with military hardware and ammunition driving to Sofar from Chtoura, 10 miles to the east.

In west Beirut, the Lebanese army set up buffer zones to disengage warring factions in the districts of Tarik Jedideh, Cola, Abu Shaker and near the Arab University despite. The Lebanese were aided by about 500 Syrian troops who have been in the capital since last year.

Police said there was some sniping.

Heavy exchanges of rocket-propelled grenades and machine-gun fire prevented the security forces from entering the Karakol Druse district where Amal militiamen and their leftist foes are entrenched.

Democrats See Field Get Thinner

By EVANS WITT
AP Political Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The crowd on the road to the 1988 Democratic presidential nomination thinned out this past week, with Mario Cuomo getting off the campaign bus for good and Sam Nunn stepping aside for now.

Cuomo stunned the party on Thursday with a simple declaration in New York that he would "not add my name to that number" of presidential contenders.

Nunn edged away from the field at a party dinner Friday in Atlanta, saying, "I am not tossing my hat in the ring nor am I forming an exploratory committee."

But the Georgia Democrat, chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, said he has not "completely closed the door" to entering the race. He did so with a complicated reference to Cuomo, New York's governor, and to William Tecumseh Sherman, the Civil War general who destroyed Atlanta.

"Sherman-like statements may be OK in New York, but not in Atlanta," Nunn said. "And I'm not making that statement tonight."

More than a century ago, Sherman is credited with the most definitive statement rejecting a race for the presidency: "I will not accept if nominated, and will not serve if elected."

Nunn's reference to Sherman took on special meaning since the Democrats will be gathering in Atlanta in July 1988 for their national convention to pick a presidential nominee.

Tampa Violence Calms In Rain

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — After two nights of sporadic violence by youths, calm prevailed Saturday in a mostly black Tampa neighborhood as community leaders knocked on doors, urging parents to keep teen-agers off the streets.

At least 18 people ranging in age from 13 to early 20s were arrested and up to 10 people slightly injured from flying rocks or bottles in the melees Thursday and Friday nights. Roaming bands of young people set several fires.

Rain was falling Saturday, and no incidents had been reported by late evening, said police spokesman Johnny Barker.

Melvin Eugene Hair, 23, died Wednesday night after a white police officer subdued him with a choke hold. Hair was being taken into custody after a report that he threatened his mother and several others with a knife.

City, GUC Ponder Data Processing Decision

By DON REUTER
Reflector Staff Writer

The Greenville city manager says a joint data processing system between the city and the Greenville Utilities Commission will save tax dollars, but the general manager of the GUC claims a recent study proves the idea doesn't compute.

The city staff is in the late stages of evaluating bids for its data processing system, while the GUC has agreed to continue a contract with Arthur Young through the design, bidding and evaluation phases, at a cost not to exceed $32,000.

The City Council and GUC commissioners are scheduled to discuss the systems at a joint meeting Tuesday at 8 p.m. in the first floor conference room of City Hall.

"We believe there would be some economies of scale by having one system that is a little bit larger than what we propose to buy for the city and what the utilities has proposed to buy for the utilities that would service both of our needs," City Manager Gail Meeks said.

However, GUC General Manager Malcolm Green said the city based its decision to establish its own data processing system on a 1984 study conducted by North Carolina State University which didn't closely examine the needs of the utility.

"They (university consultants) showed several hundred thousand dollars worth of savings with a joint computer based on one-and-a-half hours of courtesy," Green said. "The things that bothered me in the report were estimated. I've got a problem with that. The cost estimates could not be determined."

According to the N.C. State study, consultants based their conclusions on assumptions that the city would pay the full cost of the data processing manager; the number of terminals and printers, central processing unit memory and disc storage, maintenance cost, and salary cost would remain constant, and no additional applications would be added within the five-year period.

Cost estimates did not include annual supply costs, site modification costs, utility cost of operating a large computer, cost of additional clerical staff that may be required, cost of miscellaneous hardware required to sort and mail utility bills since they could not be determined, the study said.

Ms. Meeks said the 1984 study was not designed to examine the possibility of a joint system, but consultants unofficially recommended it.

"Our study addresses the feasibility of a data processing system for the city. It identifies what applications are needed for the city," she said. "Although our study didn't address a joint system, we did talk about it with our consultants and asked them to look at it. They told us informally that they thought one was justified."

A study recently completed by Arthur Young, a national corporation that does management consultant and wage and personnel studies along with auditing and computers, more thoroughly scrutinized the activities of the utility, according to Green.

"During the process, these people came in here and spent literally days and days, and they identified almost every piece of paper, any request, where they came to and where they went," Green said, "They identified everything we need to know. They came in and they gave criteria for body ... compared with other schools.

Howell Nears ECU Retirement

"Their papas are not rich. They are not going home to be the vice president of the firm. They are going to have to get out there and make it the hard way," Howell said, so the students "are more interested in 'What can I learn here?' than they are at some institutions."

Looking back, Howell said "a lot has happened" in the 30 years he has worked for the university. As he remembers, there were about 4,000 students on campus in 1957 and "I knew the whole faculty within a week."

There was a president, a dean, a registrar, a business manager. "We had directors of all the departments," but the dean ran them, Howell said.

The school "has changed a great deal since then ... in the general sophistication and outlook on things."

Today there are 10,000 more students and a large number of deans and department chairman. Five vice chancellors handle the day-to-day operations of the school.

The Howells could have moved to other schools a number of times. But "we liked it here," Howell said. "We didn't see anywhere we'd enjoy as much as we were enjoying things in Greenville.

"Being in on the ground floor" at a growing school was exciting, Howell said. "You work harder (and) it's a lot more exciting. We enjoyed that."

He was present for the fight for university status, for the creation of the school of medicine. He's seen many new degree programs, new schools, new buildings.

"That was the news back then (and) a lot of people still yearn for that," Howell suggested.

But he said, "there's not any demand for it" now. The school has reached a certain maturity where the need for rapid expansion of facilities and programs doesn't exist as it did in the past.

"What we've been in the process of doing here for several years," Howell explained, "is to improve on the programs that we have ... get the academic reputation of the university more recognized and begin to raise more private money."

While there has been "no effort to screen out students," Howell said that during his tenure as chancellor, an effort has been made to "attract better students."

That effort has met with some degree of success. "In the past two years, the average SAT score (for students at ECU) has gone up 25 points. That's faster than the national average," Howell said.

"We still have more students applying than we can accommodate. Our application pool is growing faster than our capacity to take students." That helps improve the quality, he said.

"We encourage our faculty to publish." During the past five years, according to Howell, the number of faculty publications has "moved up rapidly."

The increased number of publications and the improved quality of students help boost the reputation of ECU. And as the school's reputation improves, it's easier to raise private money, Howell suggested.

"I've been more directly involved" in fund-raising activities than with the day-to-day operation of the university, Howell said.

That, too, has met with a some degree of success. With the help of university staff members and alumni, ECU has raised $25 million in private gifts in the past five years.

"We're ahead of a lot of public institutions in the nation," Howell said. "We have established, with a lot of our friends, that the university needs private money."

Howell smiled with a certain pride — not for himself especially, but for the university he has served for so long — when he recalled a U.S. News and World Report survey published last year.

"Seventh out of 158 comprehensive universities in the South and border states" is not a bad rating, Howell said. It suggests a "recognition of our academic quality" by the heads of colleges and universities who took part in the survey.

That was "really satisfying," and suggests ECU is "regarded well out-of-state."

Turning to the university's medical education program, Howell said "the medical school, without much effort on my part, has accomplished a lot. It is one of the best young medical schools in the country."

Giving much of the credit for the medical school's success to Vice Chancellor-Dean William Laupus," Howell termed the medical school "quite a factor in the improved reputation of the whole university."

Howell also suggested that East Carolina is "on a good course in athletics ... we have a national reputation in athletics."

The athletic program was "in a good bit of trouble ... in debt" when Howell became chancellor. The program is now in the black and ECU is a member of the National Collegiate Athletic Association's Division 1A.

What is ahead for Howell and his wife after Friday?

The more distant future is not clear, but two weeks in Paris, followed by two weeks in England, will begin in late April or early May, Howell said. Then may come a trip to New York to see some plays and quite a bit of time at the beach in the summer.

Nunn Bows Out

With the decisions by Cuomo and Nunn, the Democratic field began to settle down, with still a year to go before the first caucuses in Michigan and Iowa and the first primary in New Hampshire, leaving six serious hopefuls and two possible candidates.

Even as the field narrows, the Democratic campaign opens formally on Monday, when Rep. Richard Gephardt will stand up in the restored Union Station in St. Louis and become the first Democrat to publicly announce his candidacy.

At least two more Democrats are expected to announce their candidacies next month: former Arizona Gov. Bruce Babbitt on March 10 in New Hampshire, and Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis sometime during March.

Babbitt has already set up his official campaign committee.

Sen. Joseph Biden of Delaware will take another step toward his official declaration by about March 1, when he will set up an exploratory committee to finance what is known as testing the waters.

Former Colorado Sen. Gary Hart, the Democratic leader in early polls, is campaigning virtually full time from his Denver base. Hart is to announce on April 13 that he is again seeking the nomination that he came so close to winning in 1984. He has had an exploratory committee operating since late last year.

The Rev. Jesse Jackson, whose eloquence electrified crowds during his 1984 bid for the nomination, will be making another lap around the track in 1988. A date has not be set for his announcement, but it is expected to follow Hart's in the spring.

With his statement Friday, Nunn still tops the list of potential Southern candidates on the Democratic side in 1988. And Nunn, who is also on the select committee investigating the Iranian ams sales, promised to keep up on developments.

"I'll be watching the presidential race closely," he said. "We'll look and see how they present themselves in the South."

Nunn said he considers himself qualified to be president and questioned whether an early entry is really necessary to win.

"The political pundits say that a campaign that does not start in the next few weeks has no chance of success — so the experts will undoubtedly write me off for 1988. Perhaps they are right."

Perhaps more than other candidates, Nunn might be able to wait and still have an impact with a late entry into the contest. Nunn could be expected to do well on Super Tuesday 1988 — March 8 when Georgia joins all the other southern states to hold their presidential primaries.

House Fire

Three area fire departments responded to a house fire on N.C. 43 near Falklands at approximately 7:34 p.m. Saturday, a dispatcher with the Pitt County communications center said.

Members of the Falklands, Belvoir and Bell Arthur fire departments assisted in extinguishing the blaze in a two-story house located about eight miles north of Greenville, according to the dispatcher, who said no injuries were reported.

City And GUC Study Computer System

system requirements. They went into every department."

The Young study concluded the joint system will not lead to appreciable savings.

"We have examined the applications which the city is implementing in an attempt to assess the advantages and disadvantages of the city and GUC jointly developing a data processing system department," the study said.

"Because of the different nature of applications, it is not likely that there would be significant hardware or software cost savings if the city and GUC were to combine operations. In addition, if hardware were shared, the problem of setting priorities would likely be a very difficult issue to resolve, resulting in reduced service level to both the city and GUC."

The study also said, "While it is possible that there could be personnel savings if data processing were combined, we have not addressed this because it is outside of our scope."

The $61,000 Arthur Young study didn't adequately examine the possibility of a joint system, according to Ms. Meeks, who cited several reasons why the joint system would save money.

"The consultants do not believe a joint system is feasible, but they didn't analyze the cost because it was not within their scope of services," she said. "We would save money on the personnel to staff that system. Some economies would be realized from the maintenance and upkeep of one system versus two separate systems. There is a possibility, although we can't determine that for certain, that we may be able to use the same software packages primarily for financial management, purchasing, inventory, payroll, applicant tracking, vehicle maintenence."

Ms. Meeks said an overlap in assorted assignments would make the joint system workable.

"We (city staff) believe there are enough similarities in administrative and support service type functions that we can use some of the same soft-ware packages," she said. "We would certainly need to analyze that in more detail.

However, Arthur Young consultants have said sharing packages would be unlikely, according to Green.

"These people say everything on that computer has almost got to be duplicated," he said. "Every need that they have and every need we have is almost separate. There is no sharings because everything is different.

"Their comment was we'd be going to twice as big a box and there is no economy in going to twice as big a box versus two small ones. In fact, there is some economy going into the smaller ones."

Green said the Young consultants have designed a package which calls for fewer than three data processing people.

"We're going to need two and one half people. That's all the data processing staff we're going to have," Green said. "That's because he's written this thing in such a way that all the venders want to do all the programming."

Meanwhile, Green said the city's reasons for establishing its own data processing system instead of sharing with the county are still applicable.

"The work was satisfactory, but they had problems getting the county to give them the priority they needed," Green said. "Their report also showed that county and city functions are different. The county has different priorities for application development than the city.

"The county and the city are certainly more similar than the city and Greenville Utilities would be. It seems like the very reasons they left the county they ought to be thinking about if we're talking about a joint computer."

The N.C. State study listed the logic behind the separation from the county computer.

"City staff feel a lack of control in the areas of priorities for application development, desired enhancements to existing applications, and scheduling," the study said. "Because county and city functions are different, the county has different priorities for application development than the city."

Green also said conflict could arise over who has the authority to set priorities.

Something To Think About

Donovan Phillips
DIRECTOR

PREPLANNING CONSIDERATIONS

One of the great advantages of preplanning your funeral is that you have the leisure to shop around and select the funeral home which best suits you and your needs. Naturally your choice will be somewhat limited, depending on your religious faith.

One thing you will want to consider is price. Various independent consumer and government groups have found that both prices and services vary widely in the same area.

Reliability and compatibility are two other factors you should consider. You want to be assured that funeral director will honor your wishes, that there will be no pressure applied to spouse to add services and merchandise. You also want to feel that the funeral director is congenial to your wishes, especially if you are interested in anything unconventional. Be specific, ask questions, sound out the funeral director for his impressions.

Dorm Leaders Train At ECU

Residence halls play an integral role in establishing a stable environment for college students, East Carolina University Vice Chancellor of Student Life Elmer Meyer Jr. told about 135 dormitory leaders from across the state Saturday.

Student residence hall leaders from nine North Carolina colleges attended the 1987 N.C. Association of Residence Halls conference in Greenville for a weekend of leadership training.

"National studies and probably studies on your own campus show that students who live in residence halls have greater staying power at the university," Meyer said at breakfast buffet and opening assembly in Mendenhall Student Center Saturday morning.

"You are part of the university in a much greater way, and because you are that helps you with the academics. That helps you stay in the university."

Dormitory life has a definite impact on student activities, according to Meyer.

"What you do in your residence halls is important to those students," he said. "The ideas and the kinds of things that go on really are an important part of your college life."

Delegates representing Appalachian State, East Carolina, Elon, Lenoir Rhyne, UNC-Charlotte, UNC-Greensboro, UNC-Wilmington, Wake Forest and Western Carolina attended the conference.

The North Carolina Association of Residence Halls (NCARH) has recently reformed as the student branch of the North Carolina Housing Officers (NCHO), an organizations for professionals in student housing.

Bryan Lassiter, the president of ECU's Student Residence Association, is serving as the president of the NCARH for the 1986-87 term. Mike Kleinert, another ECU student, is serving as NCARH treasurer.

The programs presented by students and professional staff from the various schools, highlighted community building, motivation, recruitment and retention, marketing, team building, and the interrelationship of campus resources.

In addition to the training sessions, ECU held other activities including a banquet, a semi-formal dance, and casino party.

Commodity Foods Funding Reinstated For Fiscal '87

By JANE WELBORN
Reflector Staff Writer

Funds for the distribution of surplus commodity foodstuffs have been restored, according to information from the U.S. Department of Agriculture Food Nutrition Service in Atlanta.

"It is my understanding that the president signed a bill passed by Congress to reinstate the money for the rest of the 1987 fiscal year," said N.C. Agriculture Commissioner Jim Graham in a statement released by his office. "This assures that the much needed program will continue through Sept. 30 of this year."

The program provides for commodities such as cheese, butter and corn meal to be distributed to needy families throughout the state.

The administration budget for fiscal year 1988 does not contain a request for administrative funds for 1988, officials said.

"While I am very pleased that this program will continue through September 1987, there is still a lot of work to be done with Congress to ensure that this much needed help for low-income families continues after that date," said Pitt County Director of Social Services Edward Garrison. The commodities distribution program is coordinated by DSS in Pitt County.

The Pitt County program provides food staples to 10,000 needy families.

Legislation passed the U.S. Senate and House in late January and early February disapproving the Reagan administration's deferral of $28.6 million in adminstrative funds for the program in 1987. The administration wanted to defer the administrative funding for the program to provide all federal employees a 3 percent pay raise.

At the time, Garrison said, "The states won't receive any money, and the N.C. Department of Agriculture said it can't administer the program unless the administrative money is available."

North Carolina receives $1.2 million of the $50 million in administrative funds nationwide.

The February commodities distribution in Pitt County was postponed due to inclement weather. The distribution in March will be held March 4-5 in the basement of the Pitt County Office Building, 1717 W. Fifth St.

Heart Transplant Major Milestone For Pitt Complex

At Pitt County Memorial Hospital, one individual's heart beats in the chest of another.

In an age of medical miracles, the news of a heart transplant might seem ho-hum — except for the fact it was done at PCMH, for the first time, on a Beaufort County man.

The heart transplant performed Tuesday is a milestone in medical history for the hospital and for the East Carolina University Medical School. The operation offered hope for a man who, without the operation, had little chance for survival.

It is also a milestone for other patients in eastern North Carolina who are seriously ill, hold no hope for improvement and can't face the trauma and expense of traveling far from home for help.

The procedure, once again, reminded citizens of Pitt County that state-of-the-art health care is available virtually on their doorsteps.

Although the heart transplant was done by skilled professionals well-versed in delicate procedures, in medicine each milestone is, in concept, an experiment. Science treads the narrow realm between knowledge and the intangible. This life-giving operation and its results should be viewed in this context. Although initially termed a success, the procedure is a fragile one and the potential for failure is large. But regardless of the ultimate outcome, the transplant should be examined with the implications on the future in mind.

The recipient will directly benefit from the transplant. He received a gift of extended life. The contribution to others is the valuable knowledge and experience necessary for a facility to perform successful critical operations capable of giving those without further hope a second chance.

Pitt County's share in this endeavor is resource-related. The heart transplant puts PCMH and ECU in the company of the most distinguished research and health care organizations in the nation. It furthers the concept of PCMH as a major treatment center — a valuable asset to both Pitt County and eastern North Carolina.

Pork Barrel Fund Will Likely Stay

North Carolina's governor and lieutenant governor see almost eye to eye on doing away with the legislative pork barrel custom. There are also members of the General Assembly who take a different view. Some of the old hands claim the pork barrel brings state and local governments closer together.

Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan — who launched his effort to clean up the act about a year ago — bluntly says the custom used is at times to keep votes in line as well as to delay adjournment.

Gov. Jim Martin similarly sees the pork barrel money used as a process to discipline Democratic legislators to vote the way they were told to vote by the party leadership.

The millions of dollars involved, as well as the loose curb on contents of private applications, rarely received review by committee nor were hearings held to examine the need as is done with nearly all other legislation. The situation was ripe for abuse.

Since 1985 all pork barrel requests must be presented in bill form and include detailed information about the organization or program to be funded, where it is located and specifically how the money would be used.

Most causes are worthy, including such items as support for high school bands, fire departments, rescue squads, police departments, aid for counseling and crisis centers, money for arts and other activities.

But Jordan can point to duplications wherein beneficiaries received "pork" as well as funding from other state sources.

In 1985, when Governor Martin's office reviewed more than 1,400 items, 48 were never funded because no response was received on a questionaire asking details about the pork requests and how the money was going to be used.

The lieutenant governor suspects pork barrel legislation probably is here to stay and says the secret is to see the money goes to good causes. He is probably right; but we'd prefer using the proper channels to verify what one might call legitimacy of the requests.

There are designated committees in both houses that handle appropriations, and that's where they belong.

Ice Driving Is Different In Pitt

Alvin Taylor

Sunday Morning Notes

As is well known in these parts, driving is simply different from other areas of the country.

A yellow traffic light means speed up to some people, a red light means c'mon through and a light turning from red to green means repair your lipstick by looking into the rear view mirror.

A yellow line means pass now to some, and that middle lane in a five laned highway seems to mean high speed traffic for some.

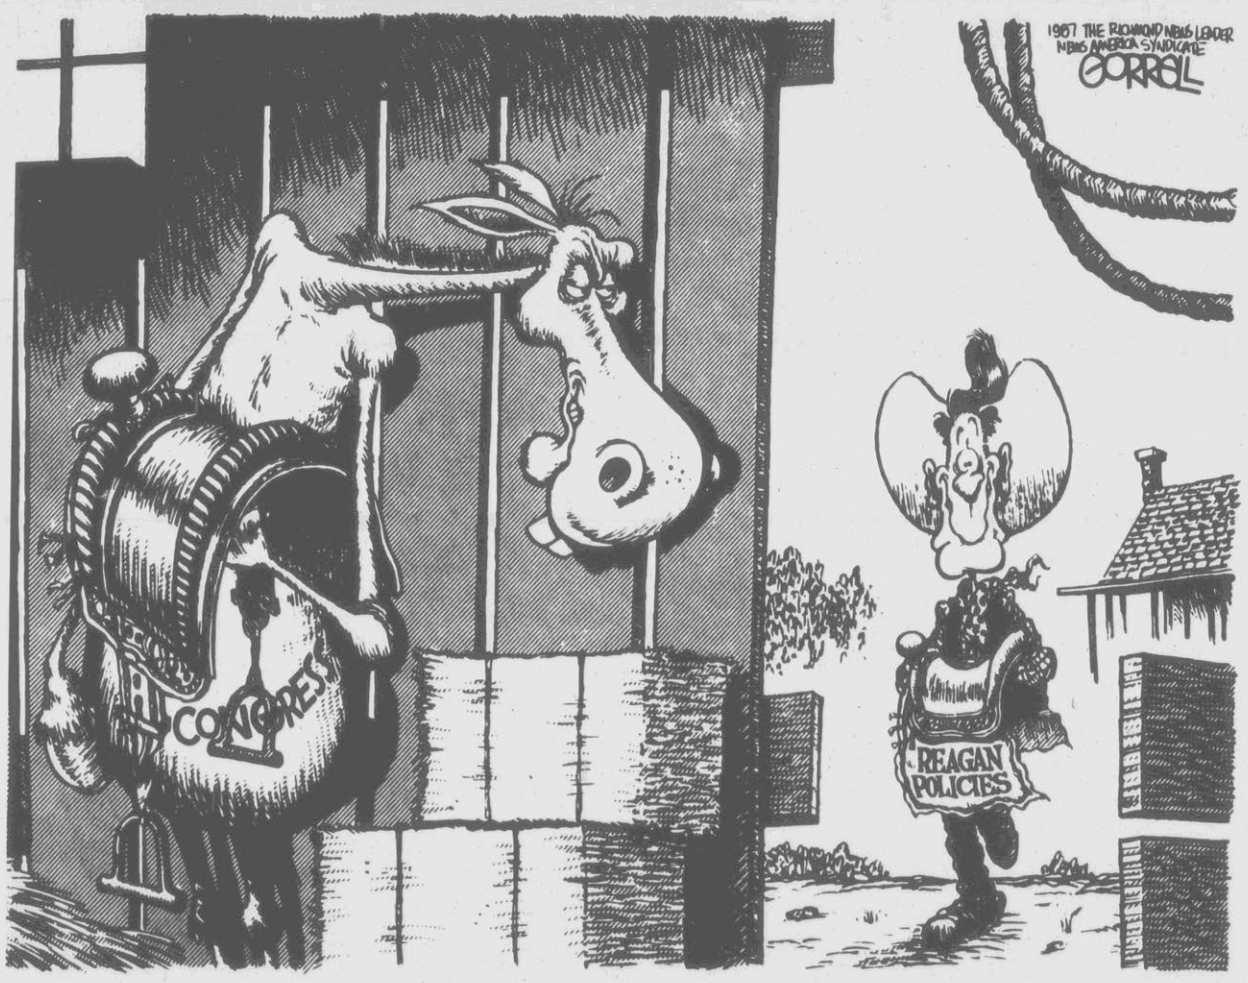

If you've come here from snowy country, you know that the first ice, sleet or snow falling is a sign for great rejoicing and certainly one doesn't rejoice by slowing down.

The idea in driving on ice is to see if one can maintain normal highway speeds and not wind up in the ditch, smash into the back of a truck and wrap the vehicle around a power pole. Sometimes those things can't be avoided but that is part of the thrill of driving on ice in Pitt County — where it's done different than anywhere else.

Anyway, the winter's major ice storm arrived last week and the results were predictable. Cars in ditches, auto fenders smashed and the usual number of vehicles trying to slide uphill on a glaze of ice. Monday it was sleet that furnished all the fun. It accumulated just like snow and caused a lot of slipping and sliding. Fortunately toward nightfall there was a slight warming trend. The precipitation turned to rain and the ice on highways and streets virtually disappeared by the time people went to work the next morning.

It can be safely said that slowing down wasn't in some motorist's plans as the roads became slick and, what seemed to many of us, unsafe. But what the heck. You only live once.

Nevertheless the weather didn't cooperate for those who have a death wish during winter storms. Following the hazardous conditions Monday the roads stayed clear in the Greenville area and most of Pitt County. To the west and north they weren't so lucky. Sleet accumulated by the inches in Raleigh and other Piedmont cities. To the north the storm turned mostly to snow, wrapping up many Virginia towns. No doubt there are drivers in cities with severe winter problems who don't slow down for winter storms, too. However, when the snow gets a foot deep it is difficult to speed.

'Do This, Do That' Just Doesn't Work

W. Dale Nelson

WASHINGTON (AP) — The troubles of White House chief of staff Donald T. Regan, fueled by the Iran arms sales crisis, are rekindling an old argument over whether the talents that spell success in business serve well in the upper ranks of government.

From "Engine Charlie" Wilson in the Eisenhower administration to Regan, who came to Washington after a brilliant career at Merrill Lynch, successful businessmen have found themselves in trouble on the banks of the Potomac.

"There are very few cases in American history in which businessmen have, I think, had a successful record as government officials," says William Niskanen, a former member of President Reagan's Council of Economic Advisers.

John C. Burton, dean of Columbia University's Business School in New York, offers a differing view. "Most people in the private sector who are competent people are doers and they find out how to do in different environments," he says.

As for Regan, says Harold Seidman, a guest scholar at the liberal-leaning Brookings Institute and an assistant budget director in the Johnson administration, "He tries to run the White House like he's running a business at Merrill Lynch, and it ain't Merrill Lynch."

Seidman and others argue that businessmen are by training ill equipped to deal with the bureaucratic and political aspects of Washington.

"Your business training is to winnow out points of view that do not seem critical to the decision," adds former Sen. Nicholas Brady, R-N.J., an investment banker. "You are taught not to consider all points of view. In government, all points of view are important."

Niskanen says, "I think the White House, when it runs well, looks like it is a mess from a businessman's point of view."

Burton, on the other hand, says, "I am sure Merrill Lynch has its characteristics as a bureaucracy as well." And as for the political aspects, he argues, "There are political sensitivities that exist in many situations."

Regan's admirers say his bureaucratic shrewdness helped him rise from trainee to president in 25 years at Merrill Lynch.

Disclosures that the Reagan administration secretly sold arms to Iran and that some of the money was diverted to aid rebels in Nicaragua apparently without President Reagan's knowledge, however, have led to criticism of Regan for letting things get out of hand at the White House.

On Nov. 26, just after the diversion was disclosed, Regan explained away his lack of knowledge: "Does a bank president know whether a bank teller is fiddling around with the books? No."

Even before the Iran-Contra scandal broke, some said that Regan, first as secretary of the treasury and then chief of staff, irritated legislators with his brusque, commanding style.

"Many businessmen come in with preconceptions about both the career service and politicians, and when they are dealing with people in Congress it shows," said Seidman.

Niskanen added, "They often feel, and probably correctly, that some of the people who are in a position to review their activities don't come across as being very swift, and that's probably true. People get to be a subcommittee chairman in the House and Senate on very different qualifications than it takes to become head of a big business firm."

President Eisenhower's first secretary of defense, Charles E. Wilson, is an often cited example. Dubbed "Engine Charlie" because he was plucked from the presidency of General Motors, Wilson once offended a group of dignified senators. They felt he treated them as subordinates when he addressed them as "you men."

Wilson's tart tongue got him in trouble time after time. Eisenhower biographer Stephen E. Ambrose writes that Ike found his secretary of defense "narrow and simplistic."

President Kennedy also tapped Detroit for his defense secretary, picking Robert S. McNamara, who was then president of Ford Motor Co. At the Pentagon, some called the secretary a human computer, a dispassionate technocrat who mapped out plans to win the Vietnam war with numbers, charts and objectives.

"I think McNamara was a disaster in the sense that he ... had kind of an obsession about details, but over time lost the big picture," said Niskanen, who first came to Washington as a Pentagon "whiz kid" in the early '60s and then worked as a defense analyst. Others admired McNamara's management skills, however, and he went on to a 13-year career as president of the World Bank.

President Carter picked Bert Lance, who had risen from bank teller to president at the Calhoun National Bank in Georgia, to head the Office of Management and Budget.

In September 1977, Lance resigned amid controversy over his banking practices. He was indicted on bank fraud charges in 1979 and found innocent 2½ years later.

After Iran, Will America Ever Be One Country Again?

David Boren

When the barrage of shouted news bulletins falls silent, will we have learned anything from the current Iranian arms controversy?

When the investigations are all completed, will we have learned something more valuable than answers to the simple journalistic questions of "who knew what, when, where and how?"

My fellow Oklahoman, Daniel Boorstin, has said that we live in an age that often confuses information with knowledge. We are so overburdened with facts that we fail to reflect upon their meaning. In cases such as the current crisis, we tend to focus on the symptoms instead of grasping and coping with the underlying problems.

The current fiasco presents a picture of American foreign policy in disarray. It is a record of reliance on private individuals, foreign nationals and naive amateurs in the making of policy and a failure to seek the expertise available within our own government.

These alarming developments are, however, merely a reflection of the underlying problem: the collapse of the concept of a bipartisan foreign policy. What we are now witnessing is the culmination of a process that began two decades ago when the nation was split apart by the Vietnam War.

'Disarray must be replaced by bipartisan unity. Mutual trust must replace legislative approaches appropriate to adversaries and not to Americans with a common duty to the nation.'

With alarming speed, bipartisanship in foreign policy continued to unravel further through the period of Watergate and the Carter administration's hesitant and uncertain reaction to the hostage crisis and other events. While party divisions widened, the partnership between the executive and legislative branches necessary for building a consensus in foreign policy fell apart. It has been replaced by a spiral of increasing hostility and distrust between the White House and Capitol Hill.

With each new breakdown of bipartisan consensus and trust comes a new list of congressional restrictions on the executive branch. With new restrictions come new initiatives by the White House aimed at evading what are viewed as unwise limitations upon the prerogatives of the commander in chief. Executive evasions breed more congressional distrust and the cycle continues, paralleling the arms race in its destructive and irrational escalation.

Nothing has done more to damage the reputation and standing of the United States around the world than this breakdown of a consensus on American foreign policy. Gone are the days when politics stopped at the water's edge. The days of consensus-building over breakfast with President Eisenhower and Democratic congressional leaders Rayburn and Johnson are only faded memories. America's allies around the world can no longer rely on the continuity of American foreign policy. Instead, they are afraid to follow us for fear that we will suddenly change direction. The diplomatic representatives of foreign countries have learned the game of enhancing their interests by playing Congress and the White House against each other.

Disarray must be replaced by bipartisan unity. Mutual trust must replace legislative approaches appropriate to adversaries and not to Americans with a common duty to the nation.

The writer, a Democratic senator from Oklahoma, is chairman of the intelligence committee.

Public Forum

To the editor:

Recently I heard or thought I heard, with disbelief, the end of a radio news broadcast that said a South Carolina legislator had introduced a bill to the South Carolina legislature for South Carolina to secede from the Union. Whoa, was it a joke on the part of the DJ or was it was real? The broadcast went on to say that the federal government was out of control, was the reason. That's believable! Visions of "Gone With the Wind," the antebellum South and Dixie stirred those feelings, always just below the surface, that come with being born in the South by the grace of God. The South, from the beginning, was always vastly different from the rest of the United States. The North and South are as opposite as day and night. Our own country again. The Confederate States of America! It had a beautiful sound and raised goose bumps. My head whirled with the advantages and benefits, if only it could happen again. All immigration into the South could be stopped or at least the undesirables, such as carpetbaggers, and when Carter took what Castro emptied out of his prisons, etc. We could cut welfare almost to nothing by making the receivers do hard physical public cleanup work, which would give them incentive to really look for work and rid us of the trash to be found everywhere at the same time. We could have public hangings to show would-be criminals what they can expect. We could untie law enforcement's hands. We could reverse the criminals having rights back to the victims and have automatic death sentences for heroin dealers, hijackers, spies, terrorists and so on, with no appeals. We could balance the budget, clean up the environment, get our educational system back up to the rest of the world, try to find capable honest politicians again. All these things would easily be within the capabilities of Southern minds.

Alas, I'm dreaming. But if enough fed up people rallied behind that South Carolina hero ...

To the editor:

I have learned that the Marine Corps soon will hold two public hearings on the draft Environmental Impact Statement relating to the proposal for additional military operations over much of the Cape Lookout National Seashore. The one nearest us will be on Wed., Feb. 25, at 7:30 p.m. in the Beaufort County Courthouse, Washington, N.C.

I have submitted a letter similar to this one for inclusion in the public record on this matter.

Because the draft E.I.S. gives no alternatives to increased pilot training in the skies above Cape Lookout National Seashore, it not only violates national environmental law (which requires the identification and analysis of such alternatives) but also ignores the unique ecological features which fostered the designation of this area as a National Seashore some years ago.

ILO designating this area of North Carolina's outer banks as the Cape Lookout National Seashore, the United States government affirmed its public value for recreation, wildlife observation, and for its special place in North Carolina's — and the nation's — history.

For the Marine Corps to unilaterally decide against including other alternatives to its E.I.S. shows a definite lack of awareness about the seashore itself and the feelings of the citizens who treasure it in its natural state. It isn't difficult to conclude that daily jet training flights over the Cape Lookout National Seashore will be detrimental to the area's wildlife and especially to people seeking the serenity and respite from urbanization long associated with the seashore. I urge officials at the Marine Corps Air Station in Cherry Point to see that a revised Environmental Impact Statement addressing those negative impacts and identifying alternative training areas be developed as soon as possible.

To the editor:

A few years ago, when the AIDS virus and its death-dealing sequelae were identified, there was an almost criminal cloud of apathy in the government. No one seemed to care since the "target group" consisted of homosexuals (it seemed). A few powerful, pious, not-so-Christian Christians beat their drums and blew their trumpets, claiming that, at last, God was showing His disfavor — indeed, the homosexuals were "paying for their sins."

Now we know that everyone, unless celibate, is at some risk for contracting AIDS. Competent sources predict that, by 1990, fully 20 percent of the sexually active adults in the USA will test positive for the AIDS antibody.

Now we know that homosexuals were and are part of a very high risk group due to their sexual practices.

Now we know that the marches by the Gay Coalition, et. al, to insist that AIDS research be funded, was a march for society and its future.

Now we know that legislators and citizens alike are providing funding for research. Inroads have been made — components and viruses isolated. We will beat this killer — for our children.

To the editor:

I see by the papers that Norfolk Southern Railway is trying to take over Piedmont Airlines. For about $900 million. The newspaper article says that the Railway could well afford to buy Piedmont: "As one analyst put it, Norfolk Southern is 'cash rich'."

Cash rich! How did they get so cash rich? I'll tell you. But not building overpasses, that's how. By exacerbating the nerves of mothers who are desperately trying to get the tots to school on time, but are demonically stalled at the crossing. By sending into near apoplexy the business man who is blocked by the inch-along train from keeping a life-or-death appointment. By raising the blood pressure of the ambulance driver, halted in his tracks the crossing while his ailing patients wail away.

When the train stops at 14th and Evans, all is silence. You look down the track. The caboose is not in sight. It is probably stretched back to Grimesland, its caretaker dreamily smoking his pipe while scratching out his memoirs. At the other end of the line, the engineer is not in sight either. There is nothing but stillness along the line. The engineer has stepped out for a bite, you suppose, and the train will not go until he has finished picking his teeth. After centuries, there is a clanging. A lurch. Stillness again. The mother is nearly in tears, her tots screaming wildly. The business man is gnashing his teeth, his heartbeat gone irregular. The ambulance driver, hearing his poor patient groan in the back, lays a curse upon the whole system. And all along the long line of waiting cars, clocks and watches are ticking, ticking, ticking their exasperated owners' lives away.

No! Let not that Railway take over that airline, lest, surely, bound by past habit, it find ancient, cunning ways to block traffic at the airport and on the tarmac, throwing passengers into despair.

Cash rich, indeed! Let 'em build overpasses, not buy airlines.

Regan's Successor

Rowland Evans & Robert Novak

WASHINGTON — The second-wave assault against Donald T. Regan has brought a concerted push by the New Right to replace him as White House chief of staff with Secretary of Education William Bennett.

New Rightist Paul Weyrich has been boosting Bennett, a neo-conservative former Democrat, as a chief of staff who would give the administration needed substance. The right-wingers much prefer Bennett to ex-transportation secretary Drew Lewis, often mentioned as Regan's successor. However, Regan has informed his own staffers and Weyrich that he has no intention of leaving.

A footnote: Regan opened a recent senior staff meeting by declaring gravely that he had a very important announcement. His aides froze, anticipating resignation was at hand. Regan then made a routine announcement of a coming meeting, showing he had not lost his sense of humor.

CIA Choice

Edward Bennett Williams was President Reagan's real choice to head the CIA after William J. Casey's brain surgery, but the 66-year-old criminal lawyer and Baltimore Orioles owner reluctantly said no.

Reagan's secret offer to the lifelong Democrat and member of the President's Foreign Intelligence Advisory Board shows he knew that such a dramatic nomination might give his administration the lift it desperately needs. Nevertheless, he finally settled on Deputy CIA Director Robert Gates, a career civil servant and a prosaic choice.

Another outsider, former senator Howard Baker, also turned down a CIA offer. But Baker offered none of the political glitz Williams would have brought.

Helms Bothers

Pressing national security adviser Frank Carlucci to support a hard-line Republican amendment on the pending Threshhold Test Ban Treaty, Sen. Jesse Helms not so gently reminded him about his "friends" in the Carter administration when Carlucci was deputy CIA director.

"You know, Frank, I'm not worried about Ronald Reagan," Helms said with 20 Republican senators listening in at a Senate GOP luncheon. "I'm worried about some future president, you know, one of the guys in your old crowd."

Although Carlucci laughed, the jibe by the Senate's most visible conservative delivered a pointed message. Despite a loyal record as deputy secretary of defense early in the Reagan administration, Carlucci is under constant scrutiny from the Republican right.

Kemp-Gramm?

Sen. Gordon Humphrey, the New Hampshire Republican most sought after by conservative presidential hopefuls, is privately suggesting that Rep. Jack Kemp would do well to make an early selection of Sen. Phil Gramm of Texas as his vice-presidential running mate.

Both Sen. Robert J. Dole and Kemp would love to win an endorsement from Humphrey, whose first choice — Sen. Bill Armstrong of Colorado — decided not to run for president. Humphrey has been hinting that Kemp would be all the more attractive if associated with Gramm.

A footnote: New Hampshire's other GOP senator, Warren Rudman, long has been committed to ex-senator Howard Baker for president. But Senate insiders say he would be rapturous if Baker decided not to run and he could back Dole.

Moscow Mission

David Aaron, deputy to Zbigniew Brzezinski on President Carter's National Security Council staff, went to Moscow at the invitation of Mikhail Gorbachev to attend the propaganda extravaganza billing the Soviet Union as the world's foremost advocate of peace.

Aaron accepted the Soviet invitation along with Yoko Ono, Norman Mailer and hundreds of others from American and European peace blocs. Gorbachev offered to pay all expenses for the trip and hotel accommodations in Moscow to hear his speech hailing the Kremlin's contributions to peace.

America Is Free To Tune In Or Tune Out 'Amerika'

Ilene Barth

Talk about suffering! "Amerika" was so slow-moving that it inspired coast-to-coast narcolepsy.

The producers had promised that the miniseries would provoke robust discussion in living rooms across the land. They were right. From Bangor to Honolulu, Americans who managed to stay awake debated which other channel to watch.

Yet the yawn of "Amerika" is worth talking about.

The curtain rose on Nebraska 10 years after Soviet occupation of the United States. How the Soviets had come to possess America is unclear. The production hints that the Soviets had out-machoed us (or bamboozled us into thinking they had) and that the United States had found itself friendless in the world. It clobbers us with the message that the Americans were too preoccupied with personal pursuits to resist foreclosure.

The central questions are ducked. What was the threat? Could resistance have succeeded? We simply have it on faith that the choice was not between dead or red.

We're told why we're friendless (blinded by anticommunism, the United States had forsaken the world's have-nots) by "Amerika's" fount of wisdom, a sympathetic Soviet administrator. The same oracle opines that armies aren't needed to occupy a nation that has lost its soul; all the occupier needs is control of the country's communications.

That's a weird assertion even in the melodrama's own terms since every little town in Amerika has a garrison of Communist soldiers. And curiously, the Soviets have dismantled the the U.S. communications network rather than use it. They've also closed Amerika's factories and fouled up its agriculture, creating massive unemployment and food shortages.

In the real world, of course, the Soviet Union can't "pacify" Afghanistan, much less the United States. But let's suspend disbelief for a minute and look at what — beyond political evangelism — might motivate one of the great powers to occupy the other.

The Soviet Union is a vast untapped market for American goods and, without a Soviet threat, the U.S. could all but erase its defense budget, jacking up U.S. standards of living. In time-honored imperialist tradition, Soviet citizens themselves would pay for American "protection."

If the boot were on the other continent, as in "Amerika," it's the Soviets who would benefit from decreased defense expenditures. Since the Soviets would like what America manufactures and grows, it would be idiotic to kill the golden goose by shutting down industry or screwing around with farms.

The standards of living of many Americans would drop in accord with export-plunder, government allotment of goods, lower productivity and wealth redistribution. But Americans probably wouldn't go hungry.

This is, after all, a country where farmers are now paid to grow all they can.

Back in the real world, the challenge isn't how to survive under the Russians or kick them out of Omaha, it's how to co-exist.

The "Amerika" script is right in saying that Americans wear liberty lightly, as shown by the commercials bracketing episodes. Ad after ad featured George Washington or Abraham Lincoln hawking cars, insurance or furniture. Putting George in the driver's seat won't put Ivan in the White House but that crassness suggests to the world there's little in America that's not for sale. But then again, it also says we're secure enough in our freedom to play with its symbols

No doubt about it. Our native ways are peculiar. Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev seemingly had trouble grasping that just as the United States doesn't outlaw bad taste, it won't stop a show that's distinctly undiplomatic.

It's probably not coincidental that Gorbachev chose the week "Amerika" aired to publicize the limited liberalization of the Soviet Union. The Soviet leader has identified television as the new opium of the masses but he still doesn't understand the United States of America, where each of us is free to tune in or tune out.

Proposals Revived To Change Second Primary

By F. ALAN BOYCE
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — North Carolina's second primary system, long criticized by blacks for discriminating against minorities, could be revamped or repealed if opponents can find a way to appeal to political realities.

Rep. H.M. "Mickey" Michaux, D-Durham, had been considering filing a lawsuit against the system, which requires the winner of a primary to have 50 percent of the vote to avoid a runoff. Michaux, a black who won a congressional primary only to lose in a runoff to Rep. Tim Valentine, D-N.C., said supporters of a bill to eliminate second primaries could win over black voters.

"It appears to me that this would make the determination as to who really wants it (the black vote)," Michaux said. "If I were running for higher office or higher position, I certainly wouldn't mind having a block like that behind me.

"They go after the conservative vote. They go after the fundamentalist vote. They go after the business and industry vote. Why can't they go after the black vote?"

Michaux and his predecessor, former Rep. Ken Spaulding, D-Durham, have mounted several unsuccessful attempts to change the primary laws. During the short session last year, when introduction of a bill would have required a two-thirds vote, Michaux tried to graft the bill on a proposal to put North Carolina in a Southern regional presidential primary. Michaux failed to get support in committee and a similar effort was ruled out of order on the House floor.

"We held off on a lawsuit, trying to be cooperative," he said. "I have a problem with that, since we had agreed to go forward in the last session if we could find a vehicle to attach it to. We found a vehicle and they (legislative leaders) backed off on it. I'm really tired of messing with this thing and getting promises that don't hold water."

House Speaker Liston Ramsey denied making any assurances.

"I don't know what leadership they're talking about," he said. "I haven't told anybody what bills to file or not file."

Michaux said the membership of the current House Election Laws Committee is unlikely to favor changing second primaries and suggested any new effort might originate in the Senate.

Asked about claims the committee was unfavorable, Ramsey said, "I'm not going to comment on that. I can't comment every time a member thinks a bill doesn't have a chance of passing."

"I have no objection to it," Ramsey added. "I'm not out there pushing for or against."

Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan also seemed content to keep his distance from the issue, although he said he favors reducing the threshold for victory in the first primary

"I've just promised that it would get an open and fair hearing and they would have to marshal their forces," he said. "You support it by seeing that it gets treated fairly. I've taken the position that I favor a threshold. As to what percentage it should be at, that's to be determined by the process."

Michaux said he favors only complete elimination of second primaries, but Rep. Dan Blue, D-Wake, said the minority caucus was discussing thresholds as well, particularly reducing the victory margin from 50 percent to 40 percent.

Blue agreed that the Senate might be the best place to start, saying, "There's been some frustration over here."

Blue also intimated that political realities might sway some lawmakers.

"I think that issues during the long session tend to give people a lot more time to think about them; to think about the implications, ramifications of them," he said. "I don't know that it will be a campaign issue, but I think that a lot of people are interested in it and are concerned about it and will be looking to see where people fall out on it."

State Environmental Programs Praised

WILMINGTON (AP) — North Carolina environmental protection programs, which scored strongly in the areas of air pollution reduction and solid waste recycling, are the seventh-best in the nation and the best in the Southeast, according to a report released this weekend.

The Fund for Renewable Energy and the Environment, an environmental advocacy group, ranked state programs in six areas — air pollution, soil conservation, groundwater protection, hazardous waste management, solid waste and recycling, and renewable energy and conservation.

The point assessment was arranged so that each state could earn 10 points in each area. By this measure, North Carolina earned 42 points, out of a possible 60.

Top-ranked Wisconsin earned 49 points. California earned 48 and New Jersey, 47. The three lowest-ranked states were Mississippi with 14, West Virginia with 15 and Wyoming, 16.

"Across the board, North Carolina has a fairly strong commitment to environmental protection," said Scott Ridley, a research analyst and one of the study's authors.

"People are only beginning to recognize the seriousness of the environmental problems," Ridley said. "They are no long just a matter of conservation, but a matter of public health."

North Carolina scored strong in categories of air pollution reduction, soil conservation, solid waste recycling, and renewable energy and conservation, the study said. It did less well in management of hazardous waste and groundwater protection.

North Carolina should establish a state "Superfund" to clean up hazardous waste, Ridley said. While the federal Superfund program has identified eight worst sites in North Carolina for cleanup, the state should establish its own program to clean up the other 706 hazardous waste sites identified.

"The state Superfund program would be used to monitor those sites and bring legal proceedings against their owners to get them cleaned up," Ridley said.

North Carolina's policy of monitoring its underground aquifers for hazardous waste and salt-water intrusion, and its land-use regulations over aquifers also earned it high marks, Ridley said.

North Carolina's solid waste management plan has been approved by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, while those of many states have yet to develop theirs, Ridley said.

While North Carolina does encourage recycling at the local level, it does not do enough on its own, Ridley said.

"A number of states (emphasize) the purchase of recycled materials, such as paper, that helps to break down market barriers," he said.

Jones Files AIDS Study Proposal

By DON REUTER
Reflector Staff Writer

A proposed legislative research commission on AIDS would be required to study the need for funding public information programs about the virus, according to a resolution filed by Rep. Walter B. Jones Jr., D-Pitt, in the 1987 N.C. General Assembly

"No state has been immune from the epidemic of AIDS, and North Carolina needs to protect itself from the insidious nature of the virus and modes of transmission," Jones said in the resolution.

The proposed joint resolution to establish the legislative research committee on AIDS was filed Friday.

The committee would study the need for legislation regarding the required testing of donated blood or body parts for HTLV-III antibodies and requiring any particular subgroup of the state's population to undergo mandatory testing for AIDS, according to the resolution.

The committee would also examine the adequacy of North Carolina's quarantine statute as it relates to AIDS, reporting requirements and identification and control in the state's prison population, the legislation said.

"The commission may report its findings and recommendations on these issues to the 1989 General Assembly and may submit an interim report to the 1987 General Assembly," Jones said.

Since the number of AIDS-related cases is increasing, legislators need to examine the health risks connected with the disease, according to Jones, chairman of the Committee on Commissions and Schools for the Blind and Deaf and vice chairman of the Committee on Children and Youth and the Human Resources Committee.

"The first cases of the disease were diagnosed in 1981, and there has been a rapid rate of increase in the incidence of new cases in a very short period of time," he said.

AIDS Education Program In Schools Being Prepared

By The Associated Press

A program designed to teach high school and middle school students about acquired immune deficiency syndrome will stress that the best defense is abstinence from sex and will be used only at the option of local school boards, officials say.

"We want kids to know how AIDS is and is not transmitted, and we want them to know what steps they can take to avoid contracting the virus," said David Jolly, a health educator with the Department of Human Resources. "We're not interested in creating controversy. We're interested in getting good information to young people, information that could save their lives."

Jolly is working with the Department of Public Instruction to develop a model curriculum about AIDS for use in classrooms next fall, but the material is not complete and has not been reviewed by school officials, he said.

Many young people are not sexually active, and the message to them should be, "That's great," Jolly said, adding that abstinence "will certainly be offered as a very, very positive, powerful way of avoiding contact with any sexually transmitted disease."

"But, at the same time, I think you want to face the fact that there are going to be some young people who are sexually active, and they've got to have some means of protecting themselves," he said. "We certainly feel strongly that condoms have proven effective in preventing sexually transmitted diseases."

The U.S. Surgeon General has said that 180,000 Americans may die of AIDS-related illnesses by 1991. AIDS damages the body's immune system and leaves the body susceptible to deadly infections and cancers.

The material that Jolly is preparing includes a detailed lesson plan, teachers' notes, a quiz, a glossary of terms and a list of resources. There may also be a pamphlet for young people.

Jolly said the information will stress that AIDS is not transmitted through casual contact, but generally through sex and the sharing of intravenous needles. Most of the victims so far have been homosexuals, drug users and hemophiliacs.

The draft material recommends that school systems using the curriculum hold a parent's night to give parents a preview of the information and to answer questions.

George Shackelford, the chief health consultant for the Department of Public Information, said the curriculum will be controversial.

"When you distribute anything on a statewide basis, you put it in the hands of a wide variety of people," he said, adding that some people believe it is wrong to even mention the topic to children.

Legislators Study Plan For 'Willie M.' Funding

By The Associated Press

State lawmakers are considering injecting more than $1.2 million into programs for emotionally disturbed and potentially violent Willie M. children in 30 North Carolina counties.

State Sen. Ollie Harris, D-Cleveland, has introduced a bill that would let the Willie M. program spend more than $1.2 million left over from the 1985-86 fiscal year. That money had reverted to the general fund.

"I think we can get it passed in the next 30 days," Harris said Friday.

Officials fear many services would have to be reduced if more money is not found by April 30. But Lawrence Bivens, director of Guilford County's mental health, mental retardation and substance abuse program said Friday he was optimistic.

"I think the Legislature realizes they can't afford for this to happen," he said.

Statewide, residential programs would be hardest hit, said Mike Pedneau, North Carolina's special deputy director for Willie M. services. He said he did not know how many children would be affected, but said it would not affect all 1,109 children being served.

In the Piedmont, the Sandhills Area Mental Health Program is $55,746 short of Willie M. funds, Pedneau said. That program serves Montgomery, Moore, Hoke, Anson and Richmond counties.

Five children could be affected who are served by the Sandhills program and the program serving Vance, Granville, Franklin and Warren counties, Pedneau said. Most of them are in group homes.

Other programs affected by the funding shortfall are the Blue Ridge, Foothills in Western North Carolina, Gaston-Lincoln, Piedmont, Cumberland, Southeastern Wilmington, Wayne and Wilson-Greene, Pedneau said.

Willie M. programs across the state were mandated by the settlement of a federal class-action law suit filed in 1979. The suit said the state for years had ignored the needs of children 18 and younger who had emotional or mental problems.

Martin Says Keep Going After Supercollider Despite Early Deadline On Plans

RALEIGH (AP) — Gov. Jim Martin says North Carolina should continue its effort to land the superconducting supercollider, a $6 billion project that could create hundreds of jobs in the state that gets it.

Martin said after a meeting with key advisers he did not think North Carolina should abandon its quest despite his disappointment with the U.S. Department of Energy's newly imposed August deadline for submitting bids.

"I would rather not have a curve ball thrown at me when I'm standing at the plate, and that's what it amounts to when they say 'we're now going to require you to submit a proposal in August but we're not going to tell you what we want in that proposal until April,'" Martin told reporters.

"But if you're going to play in the big leagues, you've to be able to hit curves," he added.

Martin said Friday he planned to urge Energy Secretary John Herrington to relax the project schedule.

He said he would ask legislative leaders to support spending the several hundred thousand dollars it would cost to prepare the state's bid.

Appropriations to purchase the necessary land are not needed until — and if — North Carolina is chosen to host the project, he said. "All we have to do now is express the willingness" to make the purchase, he said.

Martin met for about an hour with his science adviser, Earl Mac Cormac; project coordinator Patricia Poteat; Grace Rohrer, secretary of the Department of Administration and chairwoman of the state's collider task force; and his senior advisers.

North Carolina is not the only state that was upset by the announcement from the U.S. Department of Energy, Mac Cormac said.

The news generated "moral outrage" and protests from legislators and governors in Ohio, California, Illinois and New York, all of whom want the project, Mac Cormac said.

By moving the bidding deadline up to August, he contended, the government gave a big boost to Texas. That state already has selected a site for the supercollider and has lined up companies to build the powerful magnets the project requires, he said.

North Carolina has done preliminary geological and environmental tests on its site, Mac Cormac said, but it did not expect to need the final test results for about two years.

It would be asking a lot to do all the necessary work in six months, he said.

The state is considering a tract of land in Person, Granville and Durham counties for the 52-mile underground tunnel that the supercollider would require. The project is designed to measure the energy by the accelerated collision of nuclear particles.

The biggest curve thrown by the Energy Department, Mac Cormac said, is a requirement that all the land and mineral rights for the project be turned over to the federal government.

The bidders would have to demonstrate by August that they can buy or seize the land and rights through their powers of eminent domain.

Texas already has offered to donate its site to the government, Mac Cormac said. But he said that he has no idea whether North Carolina law allows the state to seize mineral rights or donate land to the federal government.

"I've never had eminent domain asked for a tunnel if you don't own the land above it," he said.

"The way the rules are written, it all points to Texas," he said. "It's almost as if (Vice President) George Bush wrote the rules."

Bush is a Texas native.

Martin said he still believes North Carolina is one of four or five states with a good chance of securing the project.

Herrington, the head of the federal Energy Department, said on Feb. 10 that the bidding process was designed to be fair to all.

The Energy Department will formally request bids on the project in April.

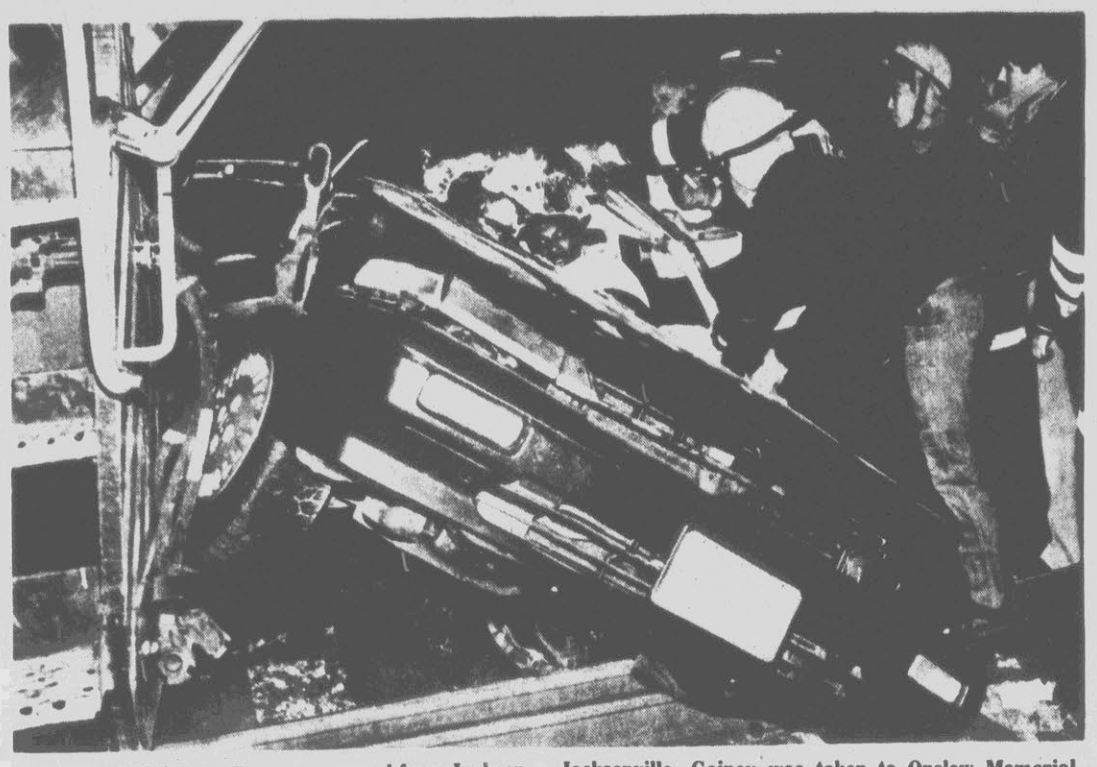

When the state started working on the supercollider, Mac Cormac said, the odds were about 10-1 against winning the contract. The odds are twice as long now, though, which is why the state should think again before spending the $400,000 on test borings, he said.

The state is moving ahead on the tests, and Mac Cormac planned Friday to brief the geologists who may bid on a contract to do some site testing.

Mac Cormac said that he would discuss the state's position with the consultants who have worked on the project before making his recommendation to Martin.

He said he also planned to consult with Sen. Kenneth C. Royall Jr., D-Durham, and Rep. William T. Watkins, D-Granville, the legislators who have been leading the supercollider effort.

Royall said he thinks that the state should go full steam ahead on the project, despite the longer odds. But he said that the state may need to reconsider if it finds too much favoritism given to a competing state.

Senate Creating New Post For Veteran Durham Solon

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — Senate veteran Kenneth Royall, D-Durham, is getting a new post that will help him retain considerable clout in the General Assembly even though he has relinquished the post of majority leader.

The Senate is expected to elect Royall deputy president pro tem, a job created especially for him, next week.

"Royall's our number-one senator and has been for a long time," Sen. J.J. "Monk" Harrington, the president pro tem, said Friday. He said the idea was his, and that Senate Democrats endorsed it unanimously at a recent party caucus.

Royall played a key role in Harrington's campaign for re-election to his leadership job. He narrowly turned back a challenge from Sen. Henson Barnes, D-Wayne, at a Democratic caucus in December.

Harrington and Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan said the title of deputy president pro tem would enable Royall to continue representing North Carolina on two organizations: the National Conference of State Legislatures and the National Council of State Governments.

Royall serves on the executive committees of both groups and is past president of the National Council of State Governments. "I call him our good ambassador from the Senate," Harrington said.

"He's been very influential in making some things happen as far as North Carolina is concerned over the years," Jordan said. He said Royall helped secure Jordan's appointment as 1987 chairman of the council's Governmental Affairs Committee.

The position "offers an opportunity to continue to take advantage of his talents," Jordan said. "It would not likely have happened for anyone else."

Royall will get no extra compensation in the 1987-89 biennium for being deputy president pro tem, Harrington said. But he said if the Senate decides to make the post a permanent one, he would recommend that the person holding it eventually get the same pay as the majority leader.

Royall said in an interview that in addition to his work with the national groups, he would assist Harrington any way he wants. Royall said he had advised Harrington on some of his appointments of senators to various national committees.

Royall said he would represent North Carolina next week at the NCSL's "Leader to Leader" meeting in Washington, where state officials will get briefings from Reagan administration and congressional leaders on the economy and other issues.

"These are very useful gatherings, very informative," Royall said. "I know people in just about every state ... (and) the exchange of ideas is good for our state government."

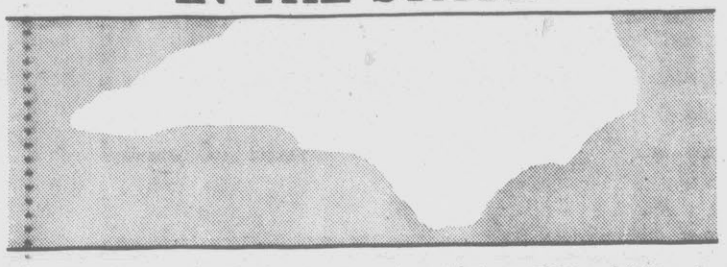

Royall, regarded as a parliamentary master and an expert on the state budget, served in the House from 1967-71. He has been a senator since 1972 and was majority leader for six terms, when he consistently was rated the Senate's most effective member.

Royall decided not to run again for majority leader this year. He was succeeded by state Sen. Tony Rand, D-Cumberland.

Although Royall's designation as deputy president pro tem is not yet official, a sign reading "Reserved — Deputy President Pro Tem" has replaced the sign that used to mark the majority leader's spot in the parking garage under the Legislative Building.

The largest contributors to the creation of new jobs in Pitt County between May 1984 and 1985 were wholesale and retail traders.

Back Wages

GREENSBORO (AP) — The owners of a family-care home in Caswell County have been ordered to pay more than a $250,000 to three former employees who performed around-the-clock service for substandard wages.

A Caswell District Court judge ruled last week that Elgin and Melinda Jefferson, who operate Jefferson Family Care Home, a state-licensed facility for the elderly and disabled, violated federal labor laws and apparently falsified records involving three women forced to work 24 hours a day, seven days a week.

The ruling is the result of a 1984 lawsuit and a trial in May in which the women argued they were victims of modern-day slavery. The women worked as supervisors and were primarily responsible for cooking and cleaning for elderly residents.

In exchange for their work, they received a 40-hour-a-week salary and room and board at the group home. The supervisors, however, were not allowed to leave the home unless they found and paid a replacement supervisor.

TV Thefts

GREENSBORO (AP) — Two Winston-Salem men have been charged with breaking into motel rooms in Guilford and Forsyth counties and stealing more than 60 color televisions, authorities say.

Almost all of the break-ins and thefts were reported at motels along interstates 40 and 85, said Roy Forrest, a Guilford County sheriff's detective who has worked with Winston-Salem and Greensboro police.

More than 40 sets were taken from motels in Winston-Salem, at least 16 from Guilford County and at least six from Greensboro, authorities said. Most were 19-inch color sets with remote control. The sets were pried from stands.

So far, police have recovered 22 televisions. Most of the stolen sets were sold on the street in east Winston-Salem, Forrest said. The sets cost between $350 and $400 each, Forrest said, placing the total value at more than $21,000.

Duke Lecture

DURHAM (AP) — James R. Schlesinger, an economist who served in Cabinet-level posts in the Nixon, Ford and Carter administrations, will give the 1987 Living History Lecture Monday night at Duke University.

Schlesinger's talk, "Reykjavik and the Iranian Revelations," will be held in Page Auditorium.

Jilted Romeo

HIGH POINT, N.C. (AP) — A jilted Romeo apparently took his anger out on a nightclub by shooting the front door, wall and sign of the Country Roads club.

An employee told police the trouble started about 12:50 a.m. Friday when an unidentified man tried to dance with a woman who was being escorted by another man. The two men went outside the club to resolve the problem, and one man was seen leaving in a pickup truck, police said.

The employee said he then heard a noise and went outside where he discovered the front door, wall and sign of the club hadbeen shot. The employee saw a pickup truck heading toward Lexington Avenue.

No one was injured in the incident. Damage to the club was estimated at $175.

Free Seed

RALEIGH (AP) — A $5.5 million shipment of corn and sorghum seed donated by an unidentified Midwestern seed company will be distributed to farmers in seven North Carolina cities next week.

"The seed is being distributed to farmers who can't afford to buy seed for spring planting because of losses last year," said Mark Carlson of the National Council of Churches.

Rail shipments of seed will be distributed in Monroe, Terrell, Shelby, Moncure, Rocky Mount, High Point and Whiteville.

Forum Says State's Schools Need Major Overhaul

RALEIGH (AP) — North Carolina public schools are "outdated and outmoded and woefully inadequate to deal with the needs of the '80s," according to a new report by the Public School Forum of North Carolina.

The Raleigh-based coalition of business, political and education leaders used the standards of business to study the efficiency of schools. The group asked a group of state business leaders: "If you ran a school, what would you do to run it more effectively and to assure the quality of work?"

The 66-page report identied three main obstacles to productivity in schools: work overload, bureaucracy and limited resources and outdated technology.

"Our schools, like many of our state's roads, are outdated and outmoded, built to accommodate educational needs of decades past and woefully inadequate to deal with the needs of the '80s and beyond," the report concludes.

"In a day and age when computers and robotics are making the routine activities of business and industry run more efficiently, teachers still have to manually fill out computer forms to report grades and attendance while they print tests on antiquated duplicating machines, and principals still schedule classes by moving pieces of paper around on a bulletin board."

Corporate advisers from such companies as IBM, Carolina Power & Light, Southern Bell and Duke Power participated in the study.

"If we really want accountability in schools, we need to give the principals and teachers far more flexibilty in decision-making so they can use their resources and structure themselves in a way that will best do the job in that building," said John Dornan, forum president. "And it won't be the same way building to building.

"What we've found on the school building level is enormous frustration on the part of principals and teachers because so much of what they are to do is controlled from the top down," he said.

The forum recently completed a month-long time study of more than 500 school principals, teachers and secretaries in Haywood, Granville, Northhampton, Johnston, Mecklenburg and New Hanover counties.

Researchers found that principals spent 26 percent of their time on discipline and student counseling, while teachers spent almost 16 percent of their time at school on non-instructional duties such as monitoring halls and lunch rooms and paperwork.

"Hourly employees could perform all of those guard-duty kinds of activities and free up teachers to spend more time working with students," Dornan said.

The business team recommended that schools have additional supervision at a level closer to the teaching faculty.

"In business, there's normally a ratio of one supervisor to roughly every 10 to 12 employees," Dornan said. "So a supervisor can really work with them and know their strengths. The average school principal is supervising 30 to 40 employees ... not to mention by the way, hundreds of parents, who also require time."

That recommendation parallels a recommendation made by the Carnegie Commission's Task Force on Teaching. The task force called for "lead teachers" who would teach part time and devote the bulk of their time to instructional leadership and personnel development.

The study will be distributed to school boards and administrative offices across the state, Dornan said.

"We're hoping to gear up to begin a study next of the administration at the county level of schools, Dornan said.

"I don't think you can make sweeping generalizations about solutions without looking next at the administrative offices of schools — superintendents and the head office — and also the policies that come down from Raleigh and Washington that create some of the problems that people are talking about."

Custody Fight Begins Over Harnett Girl

RALEIGH (AP) — A Harnett County woman, who was reunited with her daughter last week after a 10-year separation, has begun a custody battle with the child's father.

A Harnett County judge approved a request last week by Sue T. Fowler of Lillington to reaffirm temporarily a 1978 order giving her custody of her daughter, Stephanie A. Michno. The order also prohibits the father, Edward S. Michno of Rio Rancho, N.M., from having any contact with the girl before March 2, when a court hearing is scheduled.

"There's no intent her to try to permanently prevent him from seeing the child," said Gerald W. Haynes of Dunn, Mrs. Fowler's attorney. "It's just a precautionary thing based on prior experience."

Stephanie and her mother were reunited while Michno was in jail on what a prosecutor said was an invalid abduction charge. Michno has hired lawyers in New Mexico and Harnett County in an attempt to regain custody of Stephanie, whom he raised alone for the past 10 years.

"I'm only willing to say one thing: I will fight to get Stephanie back," Michno said in a telephone interview last week. "She's beautiful. She's an absolute doll. Any father in the world would be proud to have her as a daughter."

Michno and Mrs. Fowler were married and living in Lillington when he fled the state with Stephanie, then 3, in 1977. Mrs. Fowler did not see her daughter again until they were reunited in New Mexico.

The couple, married in Fayetteville in 1971, was divorced in 1978. Michno did not appear for any divorce proceedings, in which Mrs. Fowler was given custody of Stephanie.

A New Mexico neighbor called the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children after seeing a picture of Stephanie on a direct-mail advertising postcard, authorities have said. The information was forwarded to the N.C. Center for Missing Persons Feb. 6.

Michno was jailed Feb. 9 by New Mexico authorities on a 1984 Harnett County felony warrant charging him with transporting a child out of state in violation of a custody order.

But John W. Tisdale, Harnett County's district attorney, said Feb. 13 that the warrant should never had been issued, because Mrs. Fowler had not won legal custody of Stephanie until after Michno left the state with her. Michno was released from jail that day.

During Michno's four days in jail, New Mexico and North Carolina authorities set up the meeting between Mrs. Fowler and Stephanie, who had been told by her father that her mother died in a house fire years ago.

Guilty Plea Entered

ELIZABETH CITY, N.C. (AP) — A 23-year-old Raleigh hunter has pleaded guilty in the New Year's Eve shooting of a jet that was landing at the Raleigh-Durham airport, but he said his rifle went off accidentally.

A passenger aboard the jet was wounded when the bullet ripped through the plane's belly.

During a hearing in U.S. District Court here, Robert Raymond Proulx pleaded guilty to a charge of damaging an aircraft. Sentencing was expected in 30 days.

In an interview before he entered the plea, Proulx took issue with reports that he told his girlfriend the shooting was intentional and that he aimed at the pilot.

"When the FBI questioned my girlfriend, she did not know what was going on or anything. She has stated to me that they never asked her was I shooting at the pilot," Proulx said in the interview with WPTF radio in Raleigh. "What they asked her was did she know about the plane being shot and everything. She never said that I was shooting at the pilot."

Proulx was hunting with a friend Dec. 31 in a wooded area usually rich in deer about a mile from the end of the old runway at RDU. He said the rifle went off as he was checking it.

U.S. District Judge Terrence W. Boyle is expected to sentence Proulx in about 30 days. The charge carries a maximum sentence of 20 years.

SUC OKs Passing On 911 Costs

RALEIGH (AP) — Hoping to encourage more local governments to use 911 emergency telephone systems, the state Utilities Commission ruled Friday that it was proper for some of the costs of such systems to be paid for by telephone customers rather than taxpayers.

The commission, with two members dissenting, also said it would allow all local telephone companies in the state to collect a special 911 surcharge on phone bills that was authorized for Southern Bell Telephone $ Telegraph Co. in 1985.

But in a three-page dissent, commissioners S. Lindsey Tate and Julius A. Wright objected to telephone customers bearing the costs of 911 customers, saying the commission had exceeded its rate-making authority and was levying an "illegal tax."

The heart of the issue was whether 911 systems are an extra telephone feature or part of an essential government function.

The commission's ruling stemmed from a request by Buncombe County officials who sought approval to pass all of the costs of a 911 system, which allows callers to quickly get in touch with emergency agencies, to telephone customers.

The commission rejected the request, reaffirming its March 1985 ruling that allowed only the startup costs to be recovered from telephone customers.

Legislator Backs Plan For Merger

SADDLETREE, N.C. (AP) — State Rep. Joe Mavretic says Robeson County should proceed with a merger of its five school systems.

"Everyone has to give up something ... you don't win by grinding someone under your foot," Mavretic, D-Edgecombe, told about 500 Robeson County residents Thursday night.

"It's to no one's advantage in the county to make angry any large group of people, be they black, white or red," Mavretic said.

Robeson County commissioners passed a resolution Monday requesting the county's General Assembly delegation to introduce a bill calling for a county referendum on the merger issue.

The county's population is roughly one-third black, one-third white and one-third Indian. County residents have expressed concern that if the five school boards merge, there might not be equal representation for all groups.

Mavretic urged residents to acknowledge that race is an issue in the proposal.

Residents of Robeson County, the only county in the state with five school systems, have debated for years whether to merge into one system. County residents have favored the idea, arguing that county schools have a lower per-pupil expenditure than city schools. But many city residents have opposed the concept, saying a merger would not be cost-effective.

Besides the county system, Lumberton, Red Springs, Saint Pauls and Fairmont have their own school systems.

Garcia Enters Guilty Plea

RALEIGH (AP) — A Florida man has pleaded guilty to a federal charge of conspiracy to distribute cocaine in connection with a Wilmington-based operation that authorites say handled more than $10 million worth of cocaine a month.

Daniel Garcia of Fort Lauderdale and Miami, pleaded guilty in U.S. District Court in Elizabeth City to a charge of conspiracy to possess and distribute 44 pounds of cocaine. As part of the plea, accepted by Judge Terrence W. Boyle, he could be sentenced to a minimum prison term of 10 years and maximum of life, with a maximum fine of $4 million.

A date for Garcia's sentencing will be scheduled later, a court official said.

Thomas P. Swaim, an assistant U.S. Attorney who is prosecuting the case, said Garcia was one of the top drug dealers in the eastern United States. He said Garcia, who was indicted on 13 counts by a federal jury in November, had been arrested last year in Florida in an undercover operation that resulted from an investigation of cocaine smuggling in the Wilmington area.

"It's like we went out trolling and we snagged a whale," Swaim said. "He is a major violator."

Swaim said Garcia is one of 20 defendants arrested on cocaine smuggling charges stemming from the probe of an organization headed by Jose Guillermo Guiterrez, who is also awaiting sentencing on a cocaine smuggling conviction. He said the Guiterrez organization had obtained cocaine from South America and distributed 500 to 1,000 kilograms a month through Eastern North Carolina and Virginia.

Local Doctor Visits Chinese Counterparts

By MARGARET BUNCH
ECU News Bureau

Chengdu, a city in the Sichuan Province of China, and Greenville are on opposite sides of the world, but they have a common bond. Both cities have a university with a medical school.

Dr. Chihan Yang, associate professor of radiology, West China University of Medical Science, and his assistant, Dr. Jason Chen, read a textbook written by Dr. Irwin S. Johnsrude, a professor in the radiology department at East Carolina University medical school, and Dr. Donald Jackson, a radiologist in private practice in New Bern. They were impressed.

Drs. Yang and Chen, anxious to see some of the techniques and procedures they had read about in "A Practical Approach to Angiography," invited Johnsrude to visit them.

After a year of letters and negotiations, Dr. and Mrs. Johnsrude went to Chengdu for two weeks last May.

Johnsrude spent most of his time during the two weeks in the hospital performing radiographic and angiographic procedures that had been requested by the Chinese doctors and lecturing — through an interpreter — to doctors and technicians.

One of the procedures Johnsrude performed was dilation of an artery to the kidney of a teen-ager. The narrowing of the patient's artery caused her blood pressure to become abnormally high. It was the first time this particular procedure had been done in the medical school.

Dr. Johnsrude describes the medicine being practiced in the 1,200-bed teaching hospital as "very much like the medicine we practice here.

"I was very much impressed with the radiological practices," he said. "They are not as sophisticated as radiological practices are in the United States. Much of that is due to the lack of modernization, but the Chinese are working very hard to catch up with modern medicine."

Johnsrude describes the Chinese practice of medicine as very "frugal." Supplies that are throw-away items in a United States hospital are saved, sterilized and reused. These items include surgical gloves, needles and rubber tubing.

With the help of the ECU medical school administration and some hospital supply companies, Johnsrude was able to take nearly $6,000 dollars worth of supplies to Chengdu. On behalf of the medical school, he presented the radiology department at West China University $1,000 worth of educational tapes. For the special procedures which he planned to perform, he took approximately $5,000 worth of supplies.

One difference Johnsrude found between medicine here and in Chengdu was the pace. The doctors there performed two or three arteriograms per day as compared to eight or more performed at Pitt County Memorial Hospital where Johnsrude practices.

The typical workday of the radiologist is somewhat different in China. They begin work at 8 or 8:30 a.m. and work until about noon. Then there is a rest period and they begin working again at about 2:30 p.m. and work until 6:30.

An interesting medical practitioner in China is known as the "barefoot doctor," who has limited training and relies mostly on such traditional Chinese medical care as the use of herbs and acupuncture, Johnsrude said. Barefoot doctors are not generally accepted by the country's more highly trained physicians, and larger numbers of patients are turning to the modern, better trained doctor for their medical care, he added.

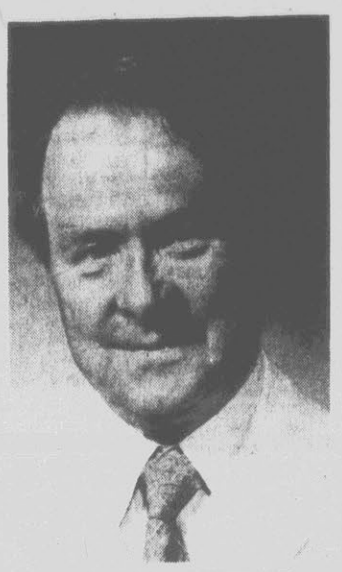

Most medical care is free in China, with one exception — farmers pay for some of their medical care. Under the reforms instituted by the current government, the farmer became the first "capitalist" in China since the revolution, Johnsrude said.

He observed that even though the people are forward-looking and eager for China to catch up to the more progressive western world, they are by no means ignoring or destroying their customs or traditions.

Dr. and Mrs. Johnsrude visited some of the historic monuments while in China, such as the Forbidden City in Peking, the largest statue of Buddha in the world and the zoo, which features Chinese pandas.

As the Johnsrudes traveled through the countryside, they saw farmers working with primitive tools. Crops are hand planted, plowed by oxen in some areas, while others have tractors. The crops are still harvested by hand and taken to market on any conveyance available. The farmers are also responsible for building the roads in their areas; this is done with shovels, then broken rock is rolled into the road bed.

Despite the masses of people, the Chinese appear well-fed. Dr. and Mrs. Johnsrude were treated to luncheons and banquets where there was more food than it was possible to eat, he said. Luncheons were 10-course affairs and the banquets were 20 courses: soups, goat's stomach, shrimp, fish, pork, chicken, duck, rabbit, various vegetables, cookies, fruit and very good beer.

DR. IRWIN JOHNSRUDE

Johnsrude's impression of the Chinese people is that they are "bright, knowledgeable, progressive thinking people, emerging from an era in which intellect and academic industry was frowned upon.

"They are striving hard to catch up to the pace and technology of the world around them," he said. "They are limited by funds and the sheer weight of the mass of people who need to be clothed, fed and housed, but they are a people with phenomenal ancient customs and traditions, who make a strong nation."

Klan Group Stages Georgia Rally To Protest School Principal's Death

By WILLIAM E. SCHULZ
Associated Press Writer

WINDER, Ga. (AP) — Sixty-five Ku Klux Klan members and supporters rallied on the courthouse steps in this northeast Georgia town Saturday, protesting the killing of a white school principal by a black teen-ager.

Members of the Southern White Knights of the KKK, joined by supporters, watched by 65 police officers and dressed in either combat fatigues or traditional white Klan robes and hats, distributed Klan literature before their courthouse rally.

Several speakers complained that police had reminded them of a city ordinance against inflammatory language; the slur "nigger," a common sound at suchspeeches, was conspicuously absent. Klansmen vowed to deliver "uncensored" speeches Saturday night at a planned cross-burning just outside the Barrow County seat.

A crowd of some 300 watched the KKK rally, according to an estimate by Winder Police Chief Jimmy Terrell. Among the spectators were about 20 blacks gathered on a corner of the courthouse square, laughing at whites carrying Confederate flags.

No incidents were reported.

Among the speakers were white racist J.B. Stoner of Marietta, convicted in the 1958 bombing of a black Alabama church, and Frank Shirley of Forsyth County, the scene of recent racial tensions and a massive civil rights march last month.

The rally was called in response to the November stabbing death of Bethlehem Elementary School Principal Murray Kennedy, a white man. A 13-year-old black student, Keyvin Jones, arrested after the scuffle in the principal's office, has been charged with murder.

A juvenile court judge ruled earlier this month that the teen-ager must stand trial as an adult — a ruling that drew protests from civil rights leaders including Southern Christian Leadership Conference President Joseph Lowery, who has attempted to help provide the boy's legal defense.

"Lowery has been up here taking up money to represent the perpetrator," Stoner said. "If he were a real Christian, he would be taking up money for the victims."

"In Barrow County, we have a problem with interference of the judicial system by Lowery and others," Shirley said.

"We want that perpetrator to have a fair trial," Shirley said. "But Lowery and the others want him cut loose."

Shirley, who was seen by a national TV audience earlier this month as he denounced blacks and Jews on a telecast of "The Oprah Winfrey Show" originating from Forsyth County, renewed his attack Saturday.

He called "the skyrocketing birth rate of the black race" a major threat to the United States.

Eight Thefts Investigated

Investigators said eight thefts were reported to Greenville police Friday and Saturday.

Officer W.E. Davis said a video cassette recorder and a color television were taken from an apartment at 1308 Dickinson Ave. in an incident reported at 1:52 a.m. Saturday, while video cassette recorders were also taken from 1001 Legion St. and 1206A Davenport St. in separate incidents reported early Saturday.

Officers said an AM-FM radio and phonograph valued at $400 were taken from 301 Moore St. in an incident reported at 8:23 a.m. Saturday, and a portable heater valued at $90 was taken from 608A W. 14th St. in an incident reported at 9:45 a.m. Saturday.

Investigators said a bicycle valued at $170 was taken from the backyard of 400 Crestline Boulevard in an incident reported at 2:06 p.m. Saturday

Police said a purse containing $106 in cash and miscellaneous credit cards were taken from a vehicle parked at Sav-A-Center in an incident reported at 5:06 p.m. Friday, while a wallet containing $197 and miscellaneous credit cards was taken at The Diet Center at 103 Oakmont St. in an incident reported at 7:07 p.m. Friday.

Correction

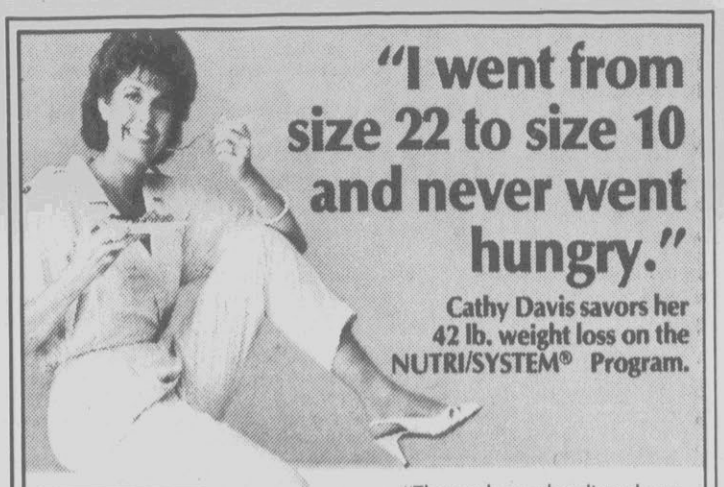

The Daily Reflector incorrectly reported in Thursday's edition the location of an alleged incident involving the arrest of a 20-year-old Snow Hill man on charges of attempted rape, kidnapping and auto larceny.

Deputies say the alleged incident occurred Wednesday at about 10 p.m. on U.S. 264 and N.C. 13, west of Greenville, near Frog Level.

Democratic Hopefuls Seek Women's Backing

By RITA BEAMISH
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The campaigns of five Democratic presidential hopefuls wooed a roomful of female political veterans Saturday at a conference the women said was convened "to celebrate women's new role as professional political operatives."

The women, many of whom held key campaign jobs in the 1984 and 1986 elections, heard presentations from Rep. Richard Gephardt, D-Mo., and from representatives of former Arizona Gov. Bruce Babbitt, the Rev. Jesse Jackson, former Sen. Gary Hart, and Sen. Joseph Biden, D-Del.

"You should be feeling very strong and powerful with what happened in 1986," Gephardt told the group, "because your work, your effort, your dedication and diligence is what is beginning to turn this country around." He referred to the election in which Democrats recaptured the majority in the U.S. Senate, and in which women managed 10 Democratic Senate races and eight gubernatorial campaigns.

Before launching into his campaign speech attacking Reagan administration economic policies and urging Democratic unity, Gephardt named the women in his campaign leadership and said he hopes to recruit more.

Saturday's conference, called Democratic Leadership: The Women Who Ran the '86 Campaigns, attracted more than 100 participants who had worked as campaign managers, press secretaries, fund raisers or other key jobs in 56 of the 1986 political campaigns.

Women "have begun to play a larger and larger role" in politics, Carol Tucker Foreman, one of the conference organizers, told the gathering.

"We're here to celebrate women's new role as professional political operatives," she said.

Paul Tully, who is Hart's political director and a veteran of five presidential campaigns, told the women that today's campaigns and issues are vastly more complex than when he entered the business, and that the Hart campaign is looking for talent.

"That's why I'm here and that's why I plan to find you all and plan to get you all."

Later, he said he had already recruited four women during the morning, "and the day is still young."

He said that when he was with Vice President Walter Mondale's 1984 presidential campaign, he wanted women in half of the general election state director jobs, but "the talent ran out" at 41 percent.

"In 1988, I believe Sen. Hart will have a majority of state coordinators who are women," he said.

Elaine Kamarck, Babbitt's deputy campaign manager, said she was looking to fill a deputy campaign manager slot at Babbitt's headquarters in Phoenix. "This is obviously a great place to recruit," she said.

The emergence of women in top campaign jobs is a fairly recent phenomena, Tully noted, with sexism still rampant among many of the old-guard politicos.

Two women's groups tried to break down the barriers by becoming fund-raising powers in 1986 — EMILY's List, an acronym for "early money is like yeast," and the Hollywood Women's Political Committee, which raised money for Democratic Senate candidates.

Many of the conference participants said after hearing the presidential presentations that they were still undecided about who they might hire on with for 1988.

"I think it's a tough choice for a lot of people to figure where to go at this point," said Ellen Malcolm, president of EMILY's List.

Carolyn Kazdin, representing Jackson, listed reasons why the women should look on the civil rights activist as a viable candidate, including his potential to make a strong showing on March 8, the day the southern states will hold their primaries.

Tim Ridley, Biden's administrative assistant, said Biden wants to change the "caste system" in which women got the underling jobs in politics. He said they should sign up with the Delaware senator because "the Biden campaign will be fun" and has "a sense of purpose."

Kamarck highlighted Arizona's advances in day care, Medicare for children and environmental concerns under Babbitt. One conference participant said that presentation "sparked some interest," but another dismissed it as "women's issues," adding, "We're political professionals" not a women's advocacy group.

Gephardt To Enter Presidential Race In Speech Monday

By BARRY MASSEY
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Richard Gephardt, at age 11, fixed himself in front of a television in south St. Louis and watched in wonderment as Democrats nominated Adlai Stevenson for president.

Thirty-five years later, the Missouri congressman is seeking that nomination for himself.

'I was always interested in politics and current events from an early age," confesses Gephardt, a redhead with a toothy grin who looks much younger than his 46 years.

Gephardt will return Monday to the St. Louis area district he has represented since 1976 to announce his candidacy for the 1988 Democratic presidential nomination. Immediately after the announcement, Gephardt will fly to Iowa, which will hold the first party caucuses of the presidential nominating season. He will end the week in New Hampshire, which will hold the first primary.

"I'm asking for people's help not so I can gain an office, but so that we can change the country," Gephardt says of his darkhorse presidential quest. "That's what I want to do."

But who is Richard Gephardt?

"He is really one of the first politicians I have ever met who looks at you, not through you," says a fellow member of the congressional class of '76, Rep. Dan. Glickman, D-Kan. "It's a compelling personal characteristic. You feel important when you deal with or talk to Dick Gephardt."

Jack Guthman, a Chicago lawyer and friend of Gephardt since their undergraduate days in student government at Northwestern University, puts it this way: "I remember him as always being earnest and desirous to work to improve whatever situation we were dealing with, and extraordinarily able to get along with others."

Gephardt acknowledges that his quest for the presidency will be a difficult one. Only one serving House member has been elected president — James Garfield.

Yet, Gephardt says candidates such as himself will be helped by New York Gov. Mario Cuomo's decision not to seek the Democratic nomination.

"With the field narrow, it's more possible for lesser-known candidates to receive the attention they will need," Gephardt said in a statement Thursday. "It will also make it easier to raise money in New York."

Don Foley, Gephardt's press secretary, says the congressman's strategy is simple: "Do well in Iowa. Do well in New Hampshire and have in place at that moment the outlines of an organization in the South that can translate what has been to that point a local campaign into a national campaign."

Since January 1985, Gephardt has spent 40 days in Iowa and about a dozen days in New Hampshire.

However, in the latest Iowa Poll by the Des Moines Register, Gephardt was a distant fourth among the potential Democratic presidential candidates.

Former Sen. Gary Hart of Colorado was the choice of 59 percent of the 255 Democrats surveyed in late January and early February; Cuomo was second with 14 percent, followed by the Rev. Jesse Jackson, 5 percent; and Gephardt, 3 percent.

In the House, Gephardt has risen quickly. As a freshman he gained a seat on the tax-writing Ways and Means Committee. Early on, he earned a reputation as a consummate legislator, one with the ability to form coalitions.

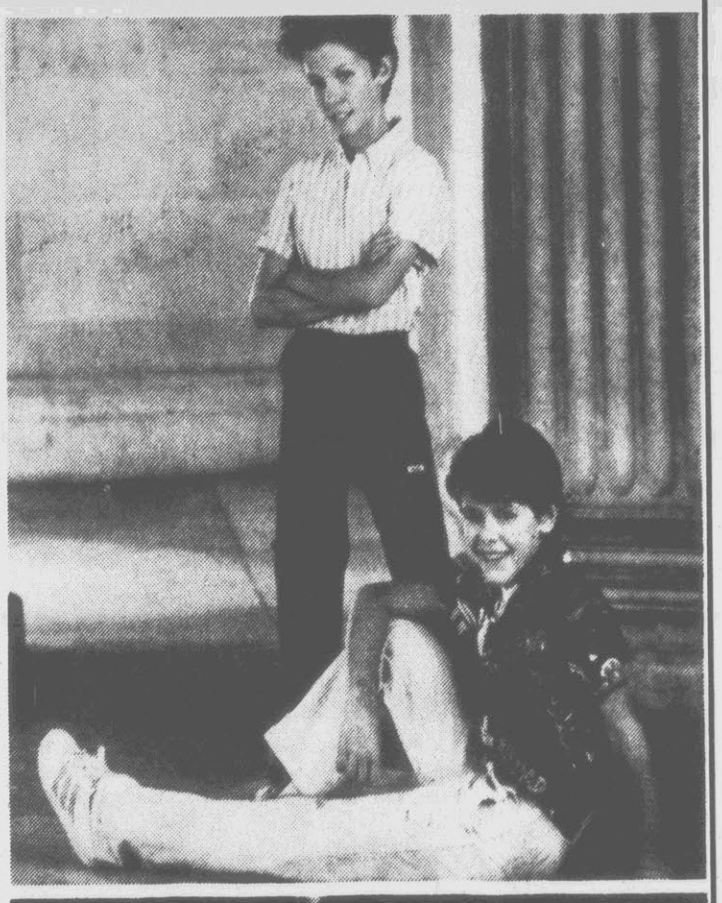

"I believe in getting things done," Gephardt says. "I believe an idea is very important but it doesn't mean anything unless you can make it happen and bring it into reality."

Governors Optimistic Over Welfare Reforms

By WILLIAM M. WELCH
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Leaders of the National Governors' Association, hoping to leave their imprint on welfare reforms, met with top Reagan administration officials Saturday and said afterward they saw bipartisan agreement on changes aimed at reducing government dependency.

The governors, opening their annual winter meeting, said they expected to endorse a welfare plan calling for work requirements and, as a long-range goal, a national standard for minimum welfare payments.

Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton, a Democrat who is chairman of the association, said the governors would try to sell the reforms by tying them to the issue of increasing the productivity of American workers and reversing the declining U.S. competitiveness in world markets — rather than as an expansion of government support for the poor.

"I hope at the end of this conference the governors will adopt, and I hope unanimously, a new position on welfare reform and then attempt to sell it to the U.S. Congress and to reconcile it with the president's position on the issue," Clinton said.

Republican Gov. John Sununu of New Hampshire, vice chairman of the governors, said he and Clinton were among 15 governors who met Saturday morning on the welfare proposals with Labor Secretary William Brock, Education Secretary William Bennett, Health and Human Services Secretary Otis Bowen and White House officials.

He said that while President Reagan's welfare proposal has a different emphasis on experimentation, there were no major differences in goals and objectives. Delaware Gov. Michael Castle, a Republican, said any differences were "diminimus."

"I think you'll see Republican governors at the conference endorsing a proposal of this nature and I think it is not going to be perceived as in conflict with what the White House proposes," Sununu said.

In a report issued at the outset of the meeting, the association warned, "A permanent underclass is being created in which poverty passes from one generation to the next."

The discussions are being held against a backdrop of increased support for major welfare change. While the president's plan is not yet in final form, Congress is working on its own proposals that go further.

"We will, I hope, adopt a comprehensive, bipartisan welfare reform policy which represents a considerable departure from the present system, and which is very different from what the president has proposed," Clinton said. "What we want to do is turn what is now primarily a payments system with a minor work component into a system that is first and foremost a jobs program, supported by an income assistance component."

The gathering is the governors' first since last November's elections added 21 new faces to their number and greatly strengthened the Republican presence at the governors' table.

The GOP has picked up eight governorships since the group last met, leaving Democrats with a 26-24 majority.

Governors in both parties have agreed on one point in sharp departure from the administration — that the changes they want will require more federal spending. Clinton said it would cost $1 billion to $2 billion more a year to implement the governors' changes.

Clinton and Sununu called that a small price and an investment that could be repaid by reducing the number of people on welfare. Clinton said while the administration is reluctant to back new spending, he hoped it would agree to a central element of the governors' plan — a contract between the government and each recipient pledging support in return for a promise to work, undergo job training or otherwise seek self-sufficiency.

The governors' report issued Saturday, called "Making America Work," said that "deep and troubling changes in the fabric of American society" have resulted from the decline in U.S. competitiveness in the world market, including increased welfare dependency and poverty among children and young women.

"Many of our young people are growing up without the hope of finding meaningful employment," it said.

The plan before the governors this week includes:

—A work requirement for all recipients of cash benefits who have children 3 years or older. Clinton said that age is a compromise, with some governors wanting no required work until the children reach 6, while others want it as early as 6 months.

—A long-term goal of a national family living standard, setting a standard formula for minimum payments taking into account varying costs of living in different states.

—Flexible state-designed work programs that include remedial education, training and job placement.

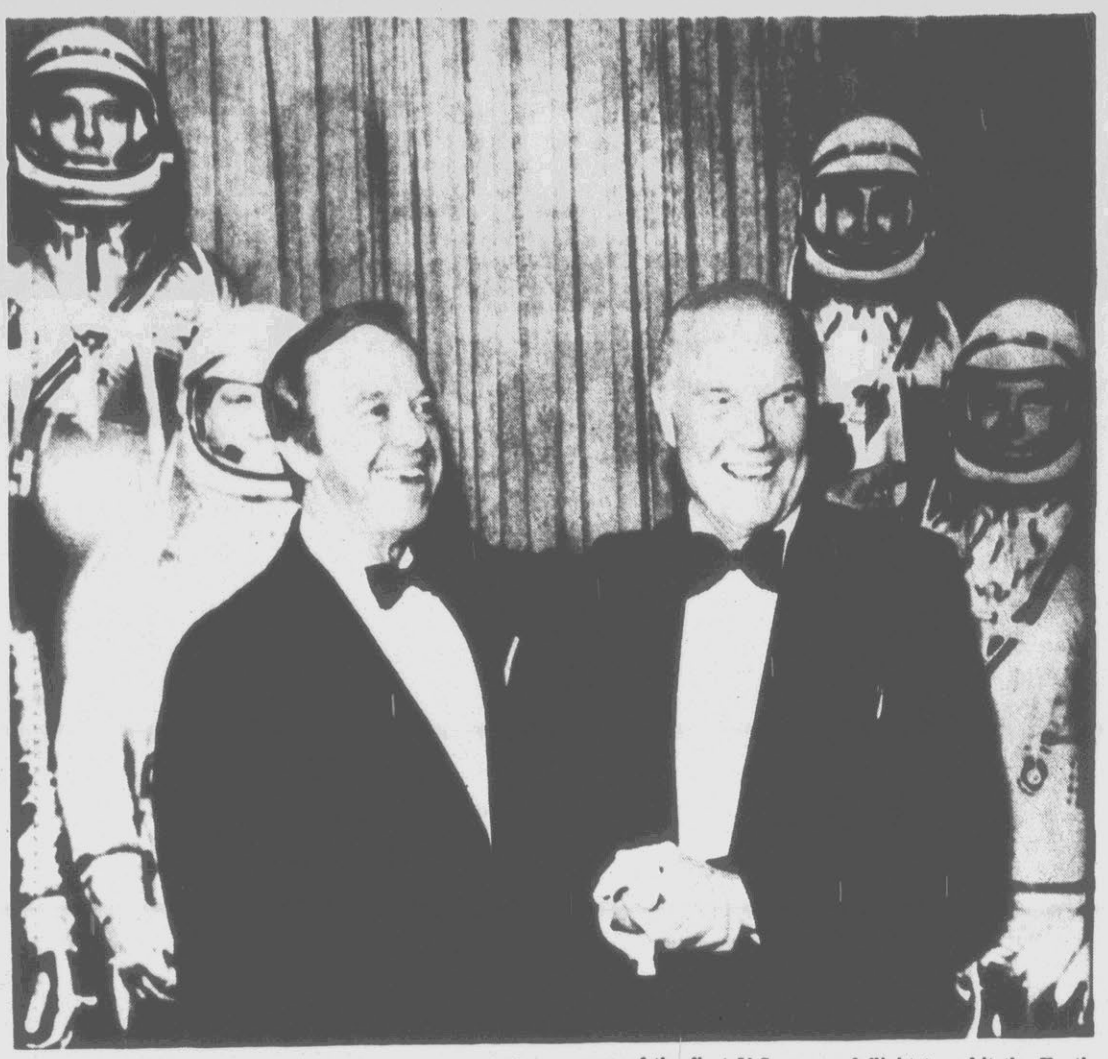

—A binding contract between the recipient and the government in which the temporary welfare support is promised in return for a commitment to strive for self sufficiency.

Clinton said assuring medical coverage and child care was essential for allowing welfare mothers to work.

The governors will be entertained by the president and first lady at a blak-tie dinner Sunday evening, and will be back at the White House Monday morning for an hourlong meeting.

They will hear from various administration officials, congressional leaders and business and urban officials.

They also plan a closed-door session on how the states are dealing with the new federal income tax law and the estimated $6 billion revenue windfall it will produce for more than 30 states. Some states are planning to return the money to taxpayers in state tax rate reductions, while others are planning to spend all or part of it.

FLIGHT CELEBRATION — Former astronaut Alan Shephard, left, and Sen. Six Of Original Astronauts Join To Celebrate Flight

By HARRY F. ROSENTHAL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Instead of silver space suits they wore tuxedos, and there were six, not seven, of them. But as they stood on the stage in front of a floor-to-ceiling American flag Project Mercury seemed to come alive again.

Not as trim perhaps as 25 years ago, hair a little grayer, but these men — the Original Astronauts — unmistakably were possessed of the Right Stuff, as a later biographer would dub them.

They had come together on Friday to observe properly, with food, drink and laughter, the 25th anniversary of John Glenn's orbital flight, the first by an American.

Ah, how profound their observations when asked what they remember of that day.

Deke Slayton begged off. "They used to tell me the second thing you lose when you get older is memory," he said. "I tell you, it's the first thing."

Alan Shepard recalled being "capsule communicator" on Glenn's flight, relaying orders from Earth to the space craft. "It's real difficult for a Navy guy to tell a Marine anything," he said.

Wally Schirra, who now sells a cold remedy on television, recalled that "we were trying to change to change the name from (space) capsule to spacecraft and now I'm plugging capsules."

But John Glenn remembered. "There was such an outpouring of national pride," he said. "I felt it everywhere we went."

And Scott Carpenter remembered. "We were inspired, as we should be now, by our competition with the Soviet Union."

There weren't a lot of serious speeches as 1,000 or more people spent Friday evening reminiscing about Feb. 20, 1962, when Glenn orbited Earth three times. Many of those in the room had worked on the Mercury program.

The reunion, a $150-a-plate dinner, was sponsored by the Mercury Seven Foundation, which gives scholarships to promising young men and women in areas of science and technology. Shepard, Slayton, Carpenter, Glenn and Gordon Cooper are founding directors. The seventh original astronaut, Gus Grissom, died in a fire on the launch pad during a rehearsal for the first Apollo flight. His widow is on the foundation board.

"We may be the only people in the country right now who are not watching the fifth episode of 'Amerika,'" said comedian Bob Hope. He called Iran-conscious Washington "the whodunnit capital of the world." And he said President Reagan thought he was watching "Amerika" the other night but it was five minutes "before he realized he was watching CBS News."

He said he knew Glenn would do good as a senator because "he's used to having a fire lighted under his tail."

In response, the Ohio senator said he had heard those Hope jokes in World War II, and that he'd heard them in Korea, and they were just as good now as they were then.

"I'm a government employee who once took three trips around the world at taxpayers' expense," he said.

And Glenn, the serious one of the Mercury Seven, couldn't help sounding a profound note. Many Americans, he said, ask why it matters whether their country has a space program.

"It matters," he said, "because exploration of the unknown is nothing less than an expression of the American spirit and if we ever let that spirit die, a little of America will die with it."

Labor Seeks Presidential Candidate

BAL HARBOUR, Fla. (AP) — Struggling to play Democratic party kingmaker and with New York Gov. Mario Cuomo out of the race, a union movement is scrambling to find a candidate to carry organized labor's banner into the 1988 presidential election.

AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland last week won a commitment from leaders of his 92 member unions to try again to unite behind one candidate well before the first primaries a year from now.

It's the same strategy the AFL-CIO pursued with Walter Mondale in 1984.

But, with Cuomo, their top choice, declaring his non-candidacy in a surprise announcement Thursday, most of the union leaders who ended their annual winter meeting here Friday believe the possibility of Kirkland's hoped-for AFL-CIO endorsement next October has all but disappeared.

And, remembering with bitterness the "special interest" tag that current front-runner Gary Hart pinned on them three years ago because of the Mondale endorsement, many union chiefs question the wisdom of even making the effort.

"There is no perfect way to go in this thing," said Albert Shanker, president of the American Federation of Teachers.

Concern Mounts Over Cost Of Navy Weapons

By RALPH VARTABEDIAN
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

A new controversy over soaring weapons costs, caused largely by the Pentagon's purchase of too many different types of arms in inefficiently small numbers, is building in Washington even as Congress tries to slow the growth of defense spending.

As Congress begins the budget process, the cost of Navy combat aircraft in particular has surfaced as an area of sharply increasing prices. One plane has doubled in price and several have jumped more than 50 percent in the last year.

"We have hundreds of new programs out there and we ought to be able to pick out one or two to kill to stop this absurd situation where the cost of each item is soaring," Sen. Carl Levin, D-Mich., a member of the Senate Armed Services Committee, said in an interview.

Rep. Les Aspin, D-Wis., chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, has also expressed growing frustration over the problem.

"Unit costs clearly have been rising and the standard explanation about inflation and increased sophistication of the weapons is not the whole story," Aspin said. "We want to get to the bottom of rising unit costs, but we haven't found the bottom yet."

The Navy's problems illustrate a broad emerging problem as the Pentagon tries to live with relatively flat budgets after years of robust spending growth.

The Navy, for example, will pay $66.8 million for each of its F-14s and their related equipment in the next fiscal year, a staggering 61 percent markup over the price paid this year. Other Navy planes are up even more. One example: the 117 percent price increase on the A-6 combat jet and its equipment.

The increases are driven by a number of factors but a common thread running through many of the cases is the fact that the Navy is buying the weapons in relatively small numbers.

In the early days of the Reagan administration, critics contend, the Pentagon started more programs and planned to buy more weapons than Congress was likely to pay for. The Navy paid millions of dollars for aircraft tools and factory capacity that it has never used.

Now, it is being forced to cut back the quantities on order. This means the factories are operating inefficiently as overhead — which includes the cost of the factory, tools and executive salaries — is divided among a smaller number of weapons.

The faulty assumptions about quantity created the appearance of low prices early on and some critics wonder whether that was a deliberate effort on the Navy's part to win early support for its plans.

It is not just the F-14 or A-6 that has experienced major price increases. Almost every jet aircraft program run by the Navy will show a big jump in overall price in fiscal 1988 — increases that the Navy contends are fully justifiable.

The Navy will pay 75 percent more for its EA-6B aircraft in fiscal 1988 than in the current fiscal year, 28 percent more for AV-8Bs, 49.5 percent more for E-2Cs, and 4.4 percent more for F-18s, according to the Defense Department's 1988 procurement budget.

The Navy has a fleet of about 6,000 aircraft, which represent a large part of its budget. Indeed, in some years the Navy spends more on buying airplanes than on ships. But the Navy, partly because it has so many different types of aircraft, is operating programs at inefficient rates of production.

In 1988, some Navy planes will be built virtually by hand — much like fine Italian sports cars, one congressional expert wryly observed. For example, the Navy is planning to buy only six radar-jamming EA-6Bs airplanes in the next fiscal year, a rate of only one every two months.

"If you run a production line at half speed, you almost double the cost of the aircraft," said Eugene Carroll, a retired admiral in navy aviation. "The Navy knew it was going to need 5 percent real growth in its budgets every year to pay for the aircraft programs it was planning. They kept closing their eyes and their brains."

A serious consequence of the Navy's cutback in the quantity of aircraft it buys is that the average age of its planes is growing.

To keep enough aircraft on all its ships, the Navy will keep its planes longer. According to Senate Armed Services Committee reports, the average age of the Navy's aircraft is 12.4 years and will be more than 13 years by 1989, several years older than the Air Force fleet. The "ideal" average age for Navy planes is supposed to be only seven years.

"The Navy aviation job is a tough one to do, and they do a good job of it, but do we really want all these old airplanes?" asked one Capitol Hill budget expert who asked not to be further identified. "Adding just one year on the average age is an enormous mortgage for the future."

Navy officials say they can explain the cost growth and age increases but critics in Congress and some research institutions question whether they can justify it.

"The aircraft programs have experienced cost growth for a number of reasons," Harriet Hughes, a senior Navy official responsible for aircraft budgets, said. "The major reason is that we are adding increased capability in a number of our combat aircraft. In addition to that, we have a problem with the quantity."

The F-14, she said, is getting new engines, radar and electronics that will make it a better weapon. The budget shows that the F-14 and its equipment will cost $66.8 million each in 1988, contrasted with $41.5 million last year. Significantly, the plane is expected to get even more expensive in 1989 when each one will cost an estimated $72.9 million.

Hughes said that the F-14 is going through a model changeover, which is accompanied by a large amount of one-time costs for test equipment and ground-support gear.

But, in practice, the Navy has "one-time" costs every year, according to House Armed Services Committee staff member Tony Battista, who has testified at length on weapons prices. Each time the service makes a modification or an update to a weapon, it is accompanied by additional one-time costs.

In cases of other Navy jets, Hughes said, the large price increases are the result of either more capability, one-time charges or reductions in quantity.

"I personally believe we have a defensible budget," Hughes said. "It is kind of like children — everyone would like to have all the toys in the store and children can't have everything. The reverberations of the kids' squabbling gets loose in the public and the impression is that we don't have the money to do the mission."

The history of Navy budgets does appear to show that the service has sharply scaled back its planned aircraft purchases.

In its 1987 budget, the Navy said that it planned to buy 278 aircraft in 1988. But in the 1988 budget, it had dropped its planned purchases for the year to 238 planes, federal documents show.

Just since last year, it has cut its planned purchases of fighter and attack aircraft over the next four years by 42 percent, largely because its buying power has been sapped by cost increases and other programs, according to congressional estimates.

The potential for this sort of problem was predicted in a March 1985 report by the Congressional Budget Office.

Navy Report Shows Plan To Expand SEAL Forces

By NORMAN BLACK
AP Military Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Navy plans to increase the size of its special warfare SEAL forces by roughly 1,000 men by 1990 and, in the process, has embarked on construction projects from Antigua and Puerto Rico to San Clemente Island, Calif., and Pearl Harbor, an internal document shows.

Despite the relatively modest increase in manpower, the growth is straining the Navy's ability to train new commandos, the document indicates. Much of the new construction involves training facilities, although there are some "operational" projects as well.

The unorthodox commando units are also acquiring new equipment, ranging from fast strike boats to underwater "swimmer delivery vehicles" equipped with their own torpedoes.

Those and other details of the secretive SEAL organization are contained in a censored version of the Navy's 1986 "Special Warfare Master Plan," obtained under the Freedom of Information Act by a Washington researcher.

The master plan discusses problems with training programs; confirms, by a brief reference, the existence of one SEAL team that the Navy never acknowledges; mentions a new initiative to improve joint operations between SEALs and Marines, and suggests — by a reference in the report's glossary — that some SEAL units can handle nuclear weapons.

The text, as censored, makes no mention of a nuclear capability. But in an uncensored glossary, the abbrevation "SADM" is listed, or Special Atomic Demolition Munition.

Pentagon sources have previously disclosed that Army Special Operations Forces can be equipped with small, portable nuclear weapons.

The Navy document, in recounting the history of the SEALs, also notes that SEALs "performed direct action missions during U.S. military operations in Grenada, and Naval Special Warfare forces supported military operations in Lebanon."

The Navy has previously acknowledged the participation of SEAL units in the 1983 invasion of Grenada, but has said nothing about any work in Lebanon the same year.

One Pentagon source, who asked not to be identified, suggested the SEALs were used merely to sweep the beaches of Beirut before a force of Marines landed. But recurring reports indicate that a special operations reconnaissance unit operated inside Beirut as well.

The Navy produced its first "master plan" for the SEALs in 1982 at a time when the Reagan administration was first beginning an effort to improve the readiness and strength of all Special Operations Forces, including the Army's Green Berets and Rangers and the Air Force's First Special Operations Wing.

The SEAL teams — it stands for the Sea-Air-Land — are the Navy's arm for conducting unconventional or guerrilla warfare. Members are trained to operate underwater and on land. They can drop from planes or helicopters.

The Navy master plan was updated in 1984 and again in 1986. Both were released in censored form last week to William Arkin, a defense analyst with the liberal Institute for Policy Studies in Washington.

While some details have been disclosed previously in a piecemeal fashion, including the "forward deployment" of SEAL teams to Puerto Rico, Scotland and Hawaii, the censored documents nonetheless shed new light on the unconventional forces.

For example, the 1986 document lists SEAL strength and five-year "billet growth goals" through fiscal 1990. The plan states that as of fiscal 1986, the various SEAL teams had 1,987 men: 276 officers and 1,711 enlisted.

By 1990, the plan adds, the Navy hopes to have increased that to 2,927 men: 417 officers and 2,510 enlisted.

Those numbers, however, do not include another SEAL team thought to number between 175 and 200 men, SEAL Team 6.

The Navy does not publicly acknowledge the existence of Seal Team 6 and it was left out of an organization chart included in the master plan. That team is the one Navy unit trained in counter-terrorism and rescue operations to augment the Army's so-called Delta Team.

Single Farmers Mingle At National Convention

By STEVEN P. ROSENFELD
Associated Press Writer

URBANDALE, Iowa (AP) — It can get lonely down on the farm, but a group of single farmers looking for a mate or just some good conversation is finally doing something about it.

"We're isolated. It's hard to get into the city to meet people. And when you do, you feel kind of different — not part of the crowd," says Craig Stratton, 32, of Collins, Iowa.

He's chairman of the first national convention of Singles in Agriculture, which has drawn 150 people to this Des Moines suburb this weekend.

The nonprofit group founded last year claims 300 members in 38 states and Canada and says it has a mailing list of 4,000 single people who farm or work in farm-related businesses.

"For a lot of people, there's a need to mingle with someone in the same circumstances," says Jerome Hoelscher, 50, who came to the convention from Garden City, Texas, where he lives with his mother.

"I went to supper with some people I had met for the first time and I felt as at home as if I had known them far longer," Hoelscher said.

Since gathering Friday night, the men and women have been thrown together for dining, dancing and group discussions. There have been quiet talks in lobbies and corridors.

Marcella Spindler, 47, a widow from Stacyville, Iowa, who is president of the group, says she knows from experience that it is hard to make acquaintances of any kind in a small community while trying to keep a farm going.

"There's no time to socialize," she said, and with times especially tough for farmers there are even fewer people available to meet. "The young go off to college, better jobs and bigger towns."

"People, in days gone by, accepted this as the way they had to live," Spindler said. Today, she said, they're organizing.

The group, which charges a $30 membership fee, disavows a role as a matchmaker or counseling service.

"We never intended to choose a mate for you — that's your challenge," says its newly published membership directory.

A 66-year-old Idaho woman describes herself as "Retired. Christian widow, non-smoker, non-drinker, likes bowling, cards, fishing, dancing; also quiet evenings at home."

Stratton says he often comes in from the field too tired to do anything but sit at home. Through his involvement in the organization, "I now have friends in 10 states I can call."

Insiders Betting That Nancy Will Outlast Regan

By SUSANNE M. SCHAFER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The apparent showdown between two of President Reagan's closest advisers, first lady Nancy Reagan and Chief of Staff Donald Reagan, has taken on all the flavor of a prime-time soap opera, and White House insiders are betting the first lady will win.

In the past week, various reports have put the first lady behind a move to drive the strong-willed Regan from office. Also, she is said to be involved in influencing the content of the president's State of the Union speech and limiting the president's access to the media.

Mrs. Reagan has denied all stories.

The latest headlines came when Mrs. Reagan and the chief of staff were said to have quarreled about the president's schedule — with one or the other hanging up in anger.

One White House aide said Saturday the relationship between Mrs. Reagan and Regan — who were often in communication more than once a day — has deteriorated to such an extent that they have not spoken to each other for some time. The aide would only discuss the matter if granted anonymity.

A Regan assistant, who also spoke on condition that he not be identified, said the chief of staff and first lady "talk to each other when they need to," but he declined to pinpoint the last time a conversation occurred.

Even some top Republicans have said it may be time for Regan to step down, pointing to the image of a White House immersed in conflict and unable to respond adequately to the growing Iran-Contra controversy.

Over the weekend, The Washington Post reported that Regan accused the first lady of meddling in the White House appointments process, telling his staff that the "East Wing" was to blame for an apparent oversight in checking the background of the new White House communications director, who belonged to a Nazi youth group at age 10.

Mrs. Reagan and her aides, whose offices are located in the East Wing of the White House, have repeatedly denied that she has anything to do with policy matters or personnel appointments in the White House.

"I don't understand the motivation of people putting this stuff out," said Mrs. Reagan's press secretary, Elaine Crispen, adding that the first lady is "always made out to be the heavy."

Mrs. Crispen said she had spoken with Mrs. Reagan about the reports that she had pushed the appointment of John O. Koehler to replace Patrick Buchanan and that the first lady had denied the reports. Mrs. Crispen quoted Mrs. Reagan as saying of Koehler, "I've never met him."

The press secretary also disputed the notion that Mrs. Reagan was still keeping the president on a limited scheduled because he was still recovering from prostate surgery. Doctors prescribed a six-week recovery period following the Jan. 5 operation.

"Sure, she had a hand in his schedule for the six weeks, but now the six weeks are over and she's out of it," Mrs. Crispen said.

When asked to comment on the reports of Mrs. Reagan's differences with Regan, Mrs. Crispen declined.

"We have not been commenting on that at all," she said.

But when asked whether Regan and the first lady have spoken recently, Mrs. Crispen said she did not believe they had.

Reports of the tiffs between the two have sparked repeated questioning of White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater.

On Friday, Fitzwater said Reagan has "full confidence in every member of this administration until he tells them otherwise — including Don Regan."

But even the president has fed the speculation, when he answered a question during a photo session last week that appeared to leave the door open for a Regan departure.

"Well, this is up to him," Reagan said, asked whether his chief of staff would be leaving. "I have always said that when the people that I've asked to come into government feel that they have to return to private life, that's their business and I will never try to talk them out of it."

It is well known within the White House that Mrs. Reagan has great influence over her husband, and that anyone's tenure with the president is put in jeopardy when there is strife with the first lady.

"Nancy doesn't lose," one aide observed.

Koehler 'Amazed' At Ado Over Past

By JOHN M. GOSHKO
L.A. Times-Washington Post
News Service

WASHINGTON — President Reagan's newly appointed communications director, John O. Koehler, said Saturday that his membership in a Nazi youth group in his native Germany when he was 10 has been known to government investigators for years and has no relevance to his political views or his ability to serve the president.

At a news conference here, Koehler, referring to his more than 30 years of experience with the Associated Press and other news agencies, said: "I am amazed at what has been made of this story. If I had been a reporter who dug up this information, which is a matter of public record, I would have said, 'Hey man! This is a non-story.'"

Koehler, 56, acknowledged that as a boy in Dresden during World War II he belonged for six months to the Jungvolk, which he described as "a Cub Scouts equivalent" — although it was run by the Nazi Party — which prepared German boys to move into the Hitler Youth movement when they grew older.

In denying that he ever had any sympathy for Nazi ideology, Koehler noted that his late wife and his present wife both were Jewish women whom he married in Jewish religious ceremonies. He said his late wife, who died in 1978, had been a board member of the B'nai B'rith Anti-Defamation League; and he expressed gratitude to ADL national director Nathan Perlmutter, who said in a statement Friday: "To judge a 56-year-old person by his associations as a 10-year-old is ludicrous logic and mean politics."

Hyman J. Bookbinder, former Washington representative of the American Jewish Committee, said Saturday that he believed Perlmutter's statement was an accurate reflection of opinion in Jewish circles. He added, "If this is all there is to the Koehler incident, then it is a non-story."

Koehler, who canceled a planned vacation in Acapulco and called the news conference at his own initiative, gave a detailed history of his life, describing how he left Dresden during the intense fighting of the war's final weeks and stumbled into an American Army unit that adopted him as a sort of mascot.

He said that using the English he learned from soldiers, he became an interpreter for several U.S. military organizations in post-war Germany and, after deciding on a career in journalism, emigrated in the 1950s first to Canada and then to the United States. He joined the AP in 1957 and rose to executive rank before retiring three years ago to become a public relations consultant.

One of his principal clients has been the U.S. Information Agency, whose director, Charles Z. Wick, recommended Koehler to succeed former White House communications director Patrick J. Buchanan. Koehler said he had been subjected to a detailed security check at the time he served in the Army in the 1950s. He added that the material about his boyhood was in his file, which USIA has had for months, and he said: "It came as a great surprise to me that the White House didn't know about it."

Koehler said he has known Reagan for years and is "on the same wave length" with the president politically. He said that when his wife was dying, Reagan had sent him "a most compassionate, handwritten note" which caused him to think, "If I could ever do anything for this man, I'm going to do it."

Nevada Lake Has Become Wasteland

By TOM GARDNER
Associated Press Writer

RENO, Nev. (AP) — Nature's cycles and man's thirst for water have humbled the Stillwater National Wildlife Refuge, where what became Nevada's largest lake three years ago is today a briny deathtrap for millions of fish.

Record runoffs in the winters of 1983 and 1984 swelled the usually dry Carson Sink at the north edge of the refuge into a 212,000-acre lake that merged with the nearby Humboldt Sink, engulfed the Lovelock airport 10 miles to the east and threatened at times to breach Interstate 80.

"It was the largest body of water in the state of Nevada," said Terry Retterer, a wildlife specialist with the Nevada Department of Wildlife. "It was bigger than Lake Tahoe, Pyramid Lake or Lake Mead."

Since then, precipitation has returned to average or below. Water from the Carson River that sustained the lake was siphoned off to Carson City and to Fallon, and the lake began to die.

As the water evaporated, the natural salts of the alkali flat and the chemical residue from scores of alfalfa and cantaloupe tracts concentrated to a salinity level a biologist said is two-thirds that of the ocean.

The freshwater fish, swept in by floodwaters earlier in the decade, could not survive. Last year, the perch were the first to die, then the carp by the hundreds of thousands.

Late in the year, the tui chub, the last survivors, began to drift ashore. About 7 million of the 8- to 10-inch scavenger fish now line the 30- to 40-mile circumference of the lake in a band up to four feet wide.

At the same time, some 1,500 waterbirds also have perished, apparently of an avian cholera unrelated to the fish deaths.

While tests continue to determine the causes of the fish die-off, biologists are certain the increasing salinity is the answer.

"The Stillwater marsh was a very vast, high-quality freshwater marsh. That's what Nevada had at one time. They don't have that any more," Refuge Manager Ron Anglin said last week. "It's a big pool that's shrinking and it's concentrating whatever's out there."

The 224,000-acre Stillwater Wildlife Management Area, 60 miles east of Reno, is one of the last remnants of prehistoric Lake Lahontan, which once spread across northwestern Nevada and into California.

Its levels have historically waxed and waned with the rainfall, which averages less than 5 inches annually in this high desert area.

As the waters receded from the runoff of 1984-85, the area's rich Indian heritage emerged. The human skeletons that were uncovered ranged from 150 years to 5,000 or more years old, anthropologists estimated.

The marsh, a sanctuary for some 30 species of waterfowl, was a hunter's paradise in its prime.

Its decline began early in the century when the Carson River, which ends in Carson Sink, was diverted to fields irrigated by the federal Bureau of Reclamation's Newlands Project.

"Stillwater is the biggest and most important wetland that this state has and it's a very important part of the Pacific Flyway. And it has no water rights, has no fresh water," he added.

Adding to the problems caused by a lack of water is the quality of the water, Anglin said. The Carson, once a clean-running river, has been polluted by arsenic, mercury and other byproducts of mining that began a century ago.

In addition, boron, selenium and other salts and toxins occur naturally in the area's soil and in the runoff from the rich farmlands served by the Newlands Project.

"We're at the end of everybody's drain," Anglin said. "The water is going to get worse. The only thing it gets is used water and it's used by everybody."

WRONG MAN — Tommy Darryl Pulliam of Chicago saw his life take a strange twist after he was cited for speeding by an Illinois state trooper near Chicago last Monday. Pulliam then was accused of desertion and turned over to the Navy. He said he was put in the brig for 24 hours, forced to exercise and then to have his hair cut. After that, the Navy — through a comparison of dental records — ruled that it had the wrong man and released him. Pulliam said he had never served in the Navy. (AP Laserphoto)

Wrong Man Spends Six Months In Jail

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — A man who spent six months in jail awaiting trial on robbery charges, unable to make $500 bail, was freed after a lawyer uncovered evidence he was at work in another state the day the robbery was committed.

"It was bad," Sylvester Kitchen told The Philadelphia Inquirer after a hearing Friday when charges were dropped. "It was not the place for me."

"I told them all along that they had the wrong person," said Kitchen, 22.

Kitchen, who had no police record, was arrested Aug. 19 after cab driver Miles Nutter spotted him walking along a street. Nutter told police he was positive Kitchen was the man who had robbed him at knifepoint and taken his cab four days earlier.

Assistant District Attorney Carol Sweeney agreed to re-examine the case last month, after assistant defender Peter G. Rossi told her he believed Kitchen was a victim of mistaken identification.

Rossi had found trucking company logs corroborating Kitchen's assertions that he was in South Carolina at the time of the robbery.

Kitchen was freed Feb. 13, pending Friday's hearing.

Part of the reason Kitchen was in jail so long was that a preliminary hearing in the case was postponed twice, the Inquirer reported, once because Nutter did not show up and again because Kitchen was not brought to court.

When the hearing was finally held Nov. 5, Nutter identified Kitchen as the robber, and Municipal Judge Thomas McCormack ordered him to stand trial.

Rossi was then assigned to the case, and he pursued Kitchen's statement that a truck driver, a friend of Kitchen's sister, had hired him to travel to South Carolina that week to unload sugar. Company logs showed Kitchen was telling the truth, Rossi said.

Pastor Goes To Jail

MOUNT PLEASANT, Iowa (AP) — A fundamentalist minister walked into jail Saturday to serve 30 days for educating his daughter without state approval, after telling supporters his children's education was worth imprisonment.

"The issue is very, very much important to us as church people, as Christians," said the Rev. T.N. Taylor before leaving home to address supporters at the Henry County courthouse. "We need to have our rights protected."

"We don't believe that certification makes a child get a good education," Taylor said. "All we see it does is give state control over the children."

About 350 people sang "Amazing Grace" as Taylor and his family walked about 150 yards to the jail. Some carried hand-lettered signs reading "My Children Belong to God, Not the State" and "Mommy, What Does the First Amendment Really Mean?"

Taylor, pastor of Mount Pleasant's First Assembly of God Church, taught his children at the Blue Bird Christian Academy, which he opened in 1983.

Taylor, who is not certified by the state, teaches four children, including his son Nicholas, 8, and daughter Stephanie, 13, in the one-room school.

In 1984, he and his wife, Sharon, were convicted of failing to have their children taught according to state standards, which require children to attend schools staffed with state-certified teachers.

Guy Rodgers, a lobbyist for home education, has estimated that up to 2,500 families teach their children at home in defiance of state law and that about 40 church schools operate without state certification.

Taylor's wife will begin serving her 30-day sentence once her husband completes his.

Baby boomers, once thought of as the distinctive generation that would forever change America, are returning to society's mainstream and embracing anew the churches and synagogues they were raised in and many had rejected.

Church attendance among baby boomers born between 1944 and 1955 rose 9 percent from 1972-74 to 1982-84, meaning 4 million more 22-to 32-year-olds participated in American religious life than compared with their same-aged peers a decade before, one national study reports.

"It's not a tidal wave or a cosmic shift but an observable trend," said Dr. Martin Marty, a University of Chicago Divinity School professor of modern Christianity history.

Marty said that conservative, evangelical churches are the "biggest beneficiaries" of the return of the baby boomers, the estimated 60 million people born between 1944 and 1964. That's because "those churches know you have to work to get people in and they have done that."

Marty said that baby boomers aren't turning to religious extremes. Members of the generation "who used to want gurus or be born-again or be Hasidic Jews are looking at church or synagogue as a way of life, not a passion-filled experience.

"They're going to moderate evangelical churches, or fashionable community churches. They've seen the instant promises offered by extreme religions haven't paid off."

Even with the return of the baby boomers, Marty predicts that American attendance at weekly worship will remain at 40 percent and church membership will remain about 60 percent, numbers that have been stable for years.

But not all experts agree with Marty's view.

A Hartford Seminary study last year showed that the return to churches is affecting institutions equally. The rise in church attendance among the baby-boom generation includes "the boomers who are blue collar, white collar or new collar," said Wayne Thompson, a research sociologist for the Presbyterian Church (USA), who worked on the Hartford study.

That study, which concentrated on people born between 1945 and 1955, found that baby boomers aren't returning to church just because of the conventional reason, because they now have children. Those without children also are returning.

Thompson said that he also believes that it is a myth to think baby boomers are flocking solely to conservative or fundamentalist churches.

Once they do return, most studies show, many baby boomers are atypical church-goers. They attend but do not necessarily join churches. And though they donate to religious institutions, churches and synagogues must compete for their contributions with various other causes.

"Parents of boomers believed church was the ultimate thing and gave most of their donations to the churches, but the boomers aren't doing that," Thompson said. "We don't know if that's because they don't trust churches or because they're giving to other causes, like environmental things."

National studies show that baby boomers are less likely to volunteer in their churches, are more pluralistic than their parents, and, being better educated, want more intellectual depth in sermons.

The generational return also has caused churches "to look at the boomers not knowing what to expect, and the baby boomers are looking at the churches in the same way," said Thompson.

Baby boomers were so named because they were born in the post-World War II population boom. Their number, which varies from 60 to 72 million, depending on the years of birth considered, is the largest ever for that age group. They make up a fourth of America's population.

They also are a "dislocated generation" because World War II uprooted their parents, who moved to suburbs forming "new communities without a history or a culture," said Dr. Barbara Hargrove, a professor of the sociology of religion at Iliff School of Theology in Denver.

" 'Leave it to Beaver' and 'Father Knows Best' was their culture," said Hargrove, who wrote "Religion For A Dislocated Generation."

In her work, she argues that churches were "suburban captives" and religion served to espouse nationalism. Baby boomers grew disenchanted with their parents' lifestyles, religion and most institutions, rejecting the conformity and what they saw as the shallowness of their parents' lives, Hargrove wrote.

She noted that some baby boomers joined cults, used drugs, joined campus rebellions, became Jesus freaks, followed Eastern gurus, lived in communes or just dropped out for a time.

But as the generation has matured, its members have rejoined the mainstream — at a later age than their predecessors. Baby boomers marry and have families later in life. And having babies later means they return to church later, Hargrove said.

She said that many baby boomers, because they are part of a society that "considers the self as the Holy Grail," will not participate in "the drudge work of churches or causes. Church is often part of the weekend recreation scene."

Other baby boomers want a more intense religious experience and seek out small groups because they have not found what they are seeking even in liberal denominations, said Hargrove.

Hargrove added that many baby boomers never will return to religion partly because of their disillusionment or lack of interest in making commitments.

Older boomers, who were "protesting in the streets in the '60s, were jogging in the streets in the '70s and we'll just have to wait to see what they'll be doing next," she said.

U.S. Official Says Soviets Ready For Talks On Arms

By BARRY SCHWEID
AP Diplomatic Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Soviet Union has rebuffed a U.S. proposal to ban all nuclear ballistic missiles but is making headway in arms control talks with the United States toward an agreement to rid Europe of intermediate-range warheads, according to a senior Reagan administration official.

"We're working hard to work out a detailed format of a treaty, but we haven't presented it yet," the official said in an appraisal of the current round of Geneva talks.

The treaty would require the two superpowers to withdraw all intermediate-range nuclear warheads from Europe. The Soviets could retain 100 warheads in Asia, while the United States would store a matching 100 warheads at home.

The official said negotiators also were "trying to move forward" on longer-range nuclear weapons. The goal is to reduce by 50 percent U.S. and Soviet arsenals of globe-girdling bombers, submarines and intercontinental ballistic missiles.

The Soviets, in a shift, are now willing to negotiate on a U.S. proposal for ceilings on various types of strategic weapons, the official said. Last November, when the two sides met in Vienna, "they wouldn't even talk about it," he said.

The idea behind the U.S. proposal for sub-ceilings is to force the Soviets to make sharp reductions in their heavy land-based missiles, the heart of their nuclear armory.

The two sides are stalled, however, on the proposal President Reagan made last October to General Secretary Mikhail S. Gorbachev for the elimination of all ballistic missiles in the second half of a 10-year pact.

"We've got it on the table, but it isn't actively being negotiated because their position is so far away from ours," the official said.

The official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said the Soviets were pushing their own proposal to eliminate all strategic nuclear weapons over 10 years.

That would mean scrapping long-range bombers, submarines and cruise missiles, but not the medium and short-range ballistic missiles Reagan would outlaw.

On defensive systems, meanwhile, Soviet negotiators insisted that the U.S. "Star Wars" program be confined to laboratory research, the official said. "They still haven't moved away from that," he said,

Asked if he expected a breakthrough before the round of talks ends on March 4, the official said, "I can't anticipate that."

Meanwhile, two senior U.S. arms control specialists were making plans for extensive consultation with America's allies around the world.

The tentative decision to send Paul H. Nitze and Edward Rowny to Western Europe, Asia and the Pacific this week indicated Reagan may be ready to implement a broad interpretation of the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty.

That would permit the Pentagon to try out exotic technology developed on a crash-basis in American laboratories for a possible space-based defense against Soviet missiles.

Reagan announced in October 1985 that the United States would adhere to a narrow interpretation even though a broader reading of the treaty was legal. Last Tuesday, the State Department said U.S. negotiators had explained the broad interpretation of the treaty to the Soviets at the Geneva arms control talks "and why we believe it's fully justified."

The senior U.S. official said "the Pentagon feels they could do better if one would implement the broader interpretation, rather than the narrow one."

But the official said Reagan had not decided to expand Star Wars tests. "It's still an unsettled matter within the administration, and between the White House and Congress, and with our allies, and we want to do some consultation before any decision is made," he said.

While Britain is inclined to support whatever decision Reagan makes, several of the other allies are "hesitant" about expanded testing because they feel it could hurt U.S. negotiations with the Soviet Union to reduce nuclear weapons, the official said.

Nitze, who is senior arms control adviser to Secretary of State George P. Shultz, and Rowny, who holds a similar job under Reagan, will consult with government leaders in Britain, France, West Germany, Italy, Belgium and the Netherlands, in Western Europe; China, Japan and South Korea, in Asia; and also Australia.

Details of which countries each would visit have not been worked out. In the past, Nitze has gone to Europe and Rowny to Asia.

Soviets Reported Ready To Conduct Nuclear Test

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union plans to resume nuclear tests within days and ordered U.S. scientists at the main Soviet test site to shut off their monitoring equipment Saturday, a member of the U.S. group said.

The exact time of the test was not known, but the monitors were told to keep their equipment turned off for at least three days.

There was no official Soviet announcement.

The Kremlin declared a unilateral moratorium on nuclear testing in August 1985, the 40th anniversary of the U.S. nuclear bombing of Hiroshima, and extended it four times before it expired Jan. 1.

Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev said in January the Soviets would contine to refrain from testing if the United States did the same. After a U.S. test Feb. 2., Gorbachev said he was no longer bound by the moratorium.

The nuclear testing issue is a key part of the Kremlin's public stand on arms control.

The United States refused to join the moratorium, claiming the Soviet Union was ahead of the United States in its testing program and citing problems with verifying compliance and the need to update its nuclear arsenal.

In Washington, State Department spokeswoman Sandra McCarty said Saturday she had no information on Soviet plans and could not comment.

Jacob Scherr, a member of a U.S. group monitoring the Soviet test site in northern Kazakhstan, said the scientists were told to shut off their equipment Saturday and keep it off for at least three days.

"We were told there was going to be a test," said Scherr, speaking by telephone from the city of Karkaralinsk, about 180 miles from the test site at Semipalatinski.

Scherr is a lawyer for the private, Washington-based Natural Resources Defense Council which has been monitoring the site under a June 1986 agreement with the Soviet Academy of Sciences. The scientists sought to show that a nuclear test ban can be verified.

Under the agreement, American and Soviet scientists installed American-made seismic equipment at three spots near the testing ground, about 1,700 miles southeast of Moscow. One station is staffed by Americans, the other two by Soviets.

Scherr said the Americans shut down their equipment at 10:45 a.m. Saturday. Asked about the other two stations, he said: "We assume that they will be going through similar procedures."

Scherr said the U.S. scientists had hoped to monitor an actual Soviet test to calibrate their instruments more accurately and collect information that could be used in the future to monitor a test ban.

Tom Cochran, head of the Natural Resources Defense Council, last week spoke to Gorbachev and Communist Party secretary Anatoly F. Dobrynin about getting permission to keep the monitoring devices running during the next Soviet test, Scherr said.

Scherr said he was not surprised the request was turned down.

"We were told earlier on that in the event of a test, we would have to shut down our equipment," he said.

He added, however, that the meetings with Dobrynin and Gorbachev made the U.S. team "hopeful there might be a reversal."

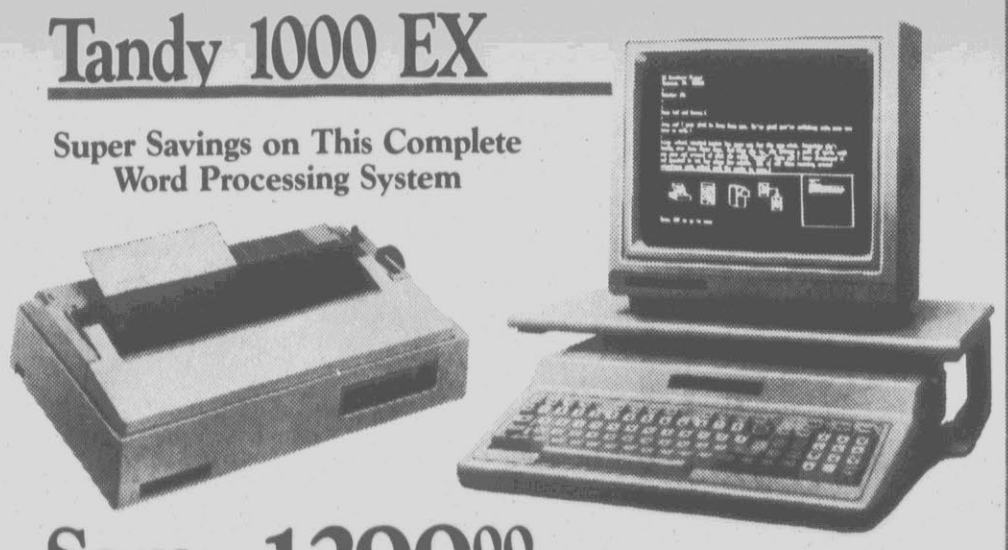

"We hope that in the future, we will be able to measure a Soviet test," Scherr said.

Report Says Gadhafi Was U.S. Raid's Target

NEW YORK (AP) — A small group of White House officials plotted last April's bombing of Libya as a way of assassinating Moammar Gadhafi, but the attempt failed because guidance systems on some bombers didn't work, according to an article to be published Sunday.

According to the article, which is to appear in Sunday's New York Times magazine, planning for the Libyan attack involved many of the same people who were working on sending arms to Iran, including Vice Adm. John M. Poindexter and Lt. Col. Oliver North.

The article, written by Seymour Hersh, quotes unidentified sources as saying that Israeli intelligence had pinpointed Gadhafi's location, but that laser guidence systems on four of nine F-111s failed and the bombs missed.

The Washington Post reported last year that the Reagan administration had hoped to kill Gadhafi. Administration officials denied vehemently at the time that Gadhafi's personal quarters were targeted.

One administration official, speaking on condition he not be identified, told The Associated Press on Saturday that people involved in target planning said the bombs that hit Gadhafi's compound "were actually aimed at the barracks of his personal guard."

The official said it may be true that lasers failed, but the bombs "were never aimed at his personal compound." The official added that the raid's planners "wouldn't have been upset" if Gadhafi had been killed.

The Times magazine also reported that William J. Casey, who resigned earlier this month as director of the Central Intelligence Agency, was the source of claims that Gadhafi had sent out "hit teams" targeting President Reagan and other high-ranking officials. The article said some colleagues believe he fabricated those reports.

Last month Iranian emigre sources told The Associated Press that Manucher Ghorbanifar, an Iranian arms dealer, was the source of the "hit team" reports, and that the CIA did not trust him because those reports were discredited. Ghorbanifar was a middleman in U.S. arms sales to Iran.

According to the magazine article, the official bombing orders supplied by the White House to the Pentagon did not list Gadhafi's tent or family home as targets, but one officer said the planes carried photographs indicating where Gadhafi was and where his family was.

"There's no question they were looking for Gadhafi," said an Air Force intelligence officer. "It was briefed that way. They were going to kill him."

Other sources said that Gadhafi's family had been sought out because their deaths would lead to a loss of face for Gadhafi when he could not defend his own family. Gadhafi's wife and eight children were hospitalized, and the Libyans said a 15-month-old adopted daughter of Gadhafi's was killed.

In advance of the bombings, according to one White House official, State Department lawyers began to prepare a legal paper that argued that "in the context of military action what normally would be considered murder is not."

President Reagan's involvement in targeting Gadhafi, the article said, was not clear. He was a strong supporter of covert action, but resisted the idea of bombing Libya at first.

The magazine said North proposed a series of other measures, including the use of the Stealth bomber; the launching of a conventionally armed Tomahawk cruise missile by a submarine; and a landing by a Navy SEAL team which would use a laser to direct bombs to Gadhafi.

All the proposals were rejected, the article said.

When Reagan announced the bombings, additional paragraphs were prepared for his speech in case Gadhafi's death was confirmed. Those paragraphs said Gadhafi's death was not retaliation or a crime, but an effort to prevent future attacks, the article said.

Border Tensions Discussed

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — President Mohammad Zia ul-Haq of Pakistani came to India on Saturday ostensibly to watch a cricket match, but he was met by Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi and they are expected to discuss recent Indian-Pakistani border tensions.

Zia waved to reporters, but said nothing as he and his wife, Shafique, arrived for the private visit. Gandhi and his wife, Sonia, greeted the couple at the airport. Zia and Gandhi drove off in the same limousine. The wives followed in a separate car.

The official reason given for Zia's visit is a cricket match Sunday between India and Pakistan in the desert city of Jaipur, 140 miles southeast of New Delhi. Indian Foreign Secretary K.P.S. Menon said Zia was on an "unofficial, private cricketing visit."

But Zia held a half-hour meeting with President Zail Singh and had dinner with Gandhi Saturday night. No statements were issued on their talks.

Indian Foreign Minister Narayan Dutt Tiwari said earlier said the leaders "are going to talk some."

"He has come here to see the cricket match," Tiwari added. "We have yet to know if he's coming with any proposals."

It was also announced Saturday, without elaboration, that diplomats from the two countries will meet Thursday in the Pakistani capital to discuss the border situation.

Zia's visit followed a buildup of Indian and Pakistani troops along the common border which aggravated already uneasy relations between the two countries, which fought three wars since independence in 1947.

Tension eased after Feb. 4, when the two countries agreed to a mutual withdrawal in the disputed Kashmir sector of the border. About 250,000 Indian and Pakistani troops still face each other in other areas, however.

One reason Zia's trip is not billed as a state visit may be because his last journey to New Delhi in December 1985 raised expectations of a Gandhi visit to Islamabad that never came about.

Since Zia's last visit, relations have seesawed. Promises of improved relations were followed by accusations that each nation was interfering in the other's affairs.

Relations deteriorated in December when India scheduled its largest military exercise ever in the desert state of Rajasthan, opposite Pakistan's politically volatile Sind province.

Pakistan then moved troops to its border opposite India's vulnerable Punjab state, where Sikh militants are demanding independence from India.

Both sides increased troop deployments in Kashmir, to the north, the scene of two of the three wars between India and Pakistan.

Soviet Journalists To Visit N. York

MOSCOW (AP) — Nine Soviet editors will visit New York to meet U.S. journalists and officials, six months after the KGB's arrest of American reporter Nicholas Daniloff forced cancellation of a similar exchange.

"We're delighted at the prospects of increasing cooperation between journalists of the U.S.A. and U.S.S.R.," said Rafail Moseev, secretary of the Union of Soviet Journalists. "We place great importance on such cooperation, and we hope that this trip will increase contacts between us."

Moseev said Friday the group had received U.S. visas and was scheduled to leave Sunday for a 10-day visit to New York.

The trip is at the invitation of the American Society of Newspaper Editors and is the first of three planned to the United States this year from the professional organization, Moseev sad.

ASNE officials told the editors they probably will meet with former President Richard M. Nixon, former U.S. ambassador to the United Nations Jeane Kirkpatrick, and possibly with New York City Mayor Edward Koch.

"The trip was supposed to be last year, in September," Moseev said. "But that was when we had this Daniloff affair. That was when we were asked to postpone our visit."

Rumors, But No Hard Clues, Follow Waite's Disappearance

By ED BLANCHE
Associated Press Writer

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Terry Waite, the Church of England envoy seeking to negotiate the release of American hostages in Lebanon, appears to have vanished into the labyrinth of Lebanon like the men he has been trying to free.

Waite, 47, was last seen Jan. 20 leaving his hotel in Moslem west Beirut, apparently for a rendezvous with the pro-Iranian, Shiite Moslem kidnappers of two of the eight missing Americans, Associated Press correspondent Terry Anderson and educator Thomas Sutherland.

Since then, his fate has been the subject of speculation and rumors, but no hard facts.

None of the bewildering array of hostage-holding factions in Lebanon has claimed to hold the 6-foot-7 Briton or made any demands involving him.

Walid Jumblatt, leader of the Druse militia that was guarding Waite on his fifth visit to Beirut, has pointed the finger at the Iranian-backed Shiite Hezbollah, or Party of God, and charged that its militants are holding Waite against his will.

"I strongly believe Waite is with Hezbollah," Jumblatt declared a week ago. "Some of the kidnappers thought it was possible to squeeze some money out of his abduction."

Jumblatt, whose powerful militia has seized control of much of Beirut's Moslem sector in fierce street battles with rival Moslem factions in the last few days, appealed to Hezbollah to free Waite.

Before the bloodletting began, Jumblatt said in an interview with the AP: "We're in touch with Hezbollah and hope they'll respond to us and release Waite if he is held by them."

Hezbollah, whose fundamentalists have been linked to Shiite extremists holding American, French and West German hostages, has denied it has Waite or even knows where he is.

Islamic Jihad, or Islamic Holy War, the Iranian-backed Shiite faction with whom Waite had conducted intermittent negotiations since November 1985, has made no mention of Waite in recent statements authenticated by photographs of its five American and French hostages.

Waite's disappearance has complicated an already complex pattern of negotiations to free the hostages.

The negotiations involve several governments and, on the face of it, a half-dozen different factions holding captives all making different demands, ranging from freedom for jailed comrades to fundamental changes in policies.

Britain's ambassador in Christian east Beirut, John Gray, a dapper diplomat who travels with two carloads of heavily armed bodyguards, is reluctant to concede that Waite is being held against his will, even a month after the negotiator dropped out of sight.

Publicly, at least, he is as much in the dark as everyone else with little to go on except the barrage of rumors on Beirut's grapevine.

These stories have had Waite shot while trying to escape; tried by a kangaroo court of Islamic fundamentalists; spirited out of Lebanon by the KGB, the Soviet intelligence agency, and caught with a secret locating device surgically implanted in his body by the CIA to pinpoint the kidnappers' hideouts.

None of those stories has been verified.

At least eight foreigners have been kidnapped in west Beirut since Waite returned there Jan.12 in a fanfare of publicity and openly guarded by Jumblatt's gunslingers, unlike his previous trips when his protection by the same gunmen had been far more discreet.

EDITOR'S NOTE — Ed Blanche, the AP's Middle East news editor, was based in Beirut until last year and covered Waite's early missions.

Ortega Discounts U.S. Funds

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — President Daniel Ortega said Saturday the Reagan administration will be unable to gain victory for U.S-backed rebels by giving them more money.

"Reagan cannot buy a victory in Nicaragua," Ortega said in a speech in Niquinohomo marking the 53rd anniversary of the assassination of Augusto Cesar Sandino, a rebel general who fought the U.S. Marine occupation of Nicaraua in the late 1920s-early 1930s. The left-wing Sandinistas take their name from him.

"It is not a matter of signing a check for a greater amount (of dollars)," Ortega said in a speech carried on government radio, referring to Reagan's proposal to send $105 million in aid to the rebels for the next fiscal year.

The United States is providing $100 million in mostly military aid to the rebels, known as Contras, most of whom have been operating from camps in southern Honduras.

Demjanjuk's Trial Allows Open Talk About Holocaust

By MASHA HAMILTON
Associated Press Writer

JERUSALEM (AP) — The John Demjanjuk trial opened in a converted theater to a standing-room-only audience last week, with the defendant blowing kisses to the crowd and attorneys in black robes recalling the horrors of the Holocaust.

Demjanjuk, a retired Ohio autoworker, is charged with being "Ivan the Terrible," a guard at the Nazi death camp Treblinka in 1942 and 1943 who whipped his victims on their way to the gas chambers and laughed as he switched on the gas.

The beefy, rosy-cheeked Demjanjuk denies any connection with the guard Ivan. The Ukrainian-born defendant says he is a victim of mistaken identity and was a prisoner of war in World War II. His lawyer says the real Ivan was killed during an inmate uprising in August 1943.

Holocaust historian Yitzhak Arad, the trial's only witness so far, spoke of the hundreds of thousands of naked Jews with shaved heads who walked to Treblinka's gas chambers along a footpath the Germans called "Road to Heaven."

In all, 850,000 people were killed at Treblinka.

Using photographs and diagrams, Arad described daily life in Treblinka in Nazi-occupied Poland. He gave only a few of the grisly details likely to come later from survivors of the Nazis' "Final Solution," the extermination European Jewry.

Ivan and another guard "drove the Jews to their deaths under a shower of blows and beatings ... using bayonets or metal bars," said Arad.

He spoke of the "shouts, crying and weeping ... (and) especially the smells, the smell of burning corpses." He described Treblinka as "the biggest cemetery of Polish Jewry."

The 66-year-old defendant entered the courtroom each day with his hands raised in greeting to the crowd and kissed his son, John Jr. 21, who came from Cleveland for the trial.

On the first day, the bald and bespectacled Demjanjuk blew kisses to the audience, shouted "boker tov," Hebrew for "good morning," and then added with a big smile: "Hello, Cleveland."

He "looks like a television game winner saluting an encouraging audience," said the English-language Jerusalem Post newspaper.

But once the proceedings began, Demjanjuk was all business. Wearing headphones for translation from Hebrew, he intently followed the testimony, ignoring the crowd which swelled during the day and sometimes murmured its support or disapproval of a line of questioning.

While no one in the audience would say he wanted to see Demjanjuk wrongly convicted, the crowd definitely was on the side of the prosecution led by Yonah Blattman. The defense is headed by Mark O'Connor of Buffalo, N.Y.

O'Connor spent hours cross-examining Arad, sometimes fingering his silver wire-rimmed glasses or adjusting the headphones he needed for translation.

The audience sighed and occasionally snickered as O'Connor argued for half an hour over the exact location of a barbed wire fence at Treblinka, trying to show that memories of the camp have faded after more than 40 years.

Judge Dov Levine at times grew impatient with O'Connor, asking him to get to the point and scolding him for facing the audience instead of the bench during some of his arguments.

"I'm doing the best I can," O'Connor told Levine, and at one point accused the court of "a pattern ... of characterizing me, your honor, in the record as being hostile or out of order."

The audience of up to 600 people included Holocaust survivors in wheelchairs, religious students in tall black hats, soldiers in olive-green uniform on a lunch break and young mothers who left their infants in baby carriages at the back of the theater.

During breaks, gray-haired survivors stood in corners recounting the past, attracting passers-by and journalists who stopped to hear the first-hand stories of Nazi-occupied Europe.

"I lost my mother and my sisters, and almost died myself. The memories still burn like fire inside me," said Fanny Englard, 61, interned in a work camp in Germany during World War II.

A young woman with dangling pink earrings and close-cropped hair dyed purple said her mother survived Treblinka. "She doesn't talk much about it and she would never agree to come here. I get goosebumps just looking at Demjanjuk," she said.

In the only other war crimes trial held here, Adolf Eichmann, who managed Hitler's extermination program, was convicted for his part in the deaths of 6 million Jews, two-thirds of European Jewry. He was hanged in 1962.

That trial served Israel's older generation, giving survivors their first chance to talk openly about the Holocaust, which previously had been a taboo topic because it was so horrifying.

Demjanjuk's trial primarily serves the younger generation, which is unlikely to see another such hearing as the survivors and suspects grow older.

The proceedings are broadcast live on Israel radio and videotaped for classroom use. Some teachers bring their students.

It is for this audience, and for history itself, that the lawyers and witnesses will be playing out memories of Holocaust for the three to four months the trial is expected to last.

MASSACRE REPORT — Philippine President Corazine Aquino talks with survivors of an encounter between government soldiers and communist guerrillas in a remote village north of Manila. A Manila newspaper reported 12 civilians were killed, many of them by the government troops. (AP Laserphoto)

Survivors Of Rebel-Army Battle Tell Aquino About Massacre Report

By EILEEN GUERRERO
Associated Press Writer

NAMULANDAYAN, Philippines (AP) — President Corazon Aquino sat down with villagers under a mango tree here Saturday to find out if it was true that their kin and friends were massacred by soldiers pursuing Communist rebels.

A spokesman said she was "visibly moved" after listening to survivors, one family at a time, in a grass hut, and promised them her government would protect civilians in its renewed war against Communist insurgents.

The fighting has escalated since a 60-day cease-fire expired on Feb. 8.

Presidential spokesman Teodoro Benigno described the meetings as emotional but refused to give details, saying the talks were "very intimate and confidential."

Residents and the army have given conflicting accounts about what happened after soldiers arrived Feb. 10 in the remote village of Namulandayan, 90 miles from Manila.

The military said an army lieutenant, five rebels and 12 civilians "caught in the crossfire" were killed in a three-hour battle. Local leaders said except for one soldier, the casualties were civilians, including five children and a couple in their 80s.

A Manila newspaper has quoted witnesses as saying after the rebels withdrew, soldiers herded several residents into a house, sprayed it with automatic rifle fire and set it ablaze. Some victims were shot in the face, the witnesses were quoted as saying.

"I want to talk to you personally and hear from your lips what really happened here," Mrs. Aquino, sitting in the shade of a mango tree, told the villagers in Tagalog. "Help me. I hope you will trust me. Tell me what you know."

She then moved to a peasant's tiny hut and spent almost two hours talking to survivors from at least six families who went in, one after another. The president was accompanied by Defense Secretary Rafael Ileto, Benigno and two Cabinet members.

"The president asked them to open their hearts to her," Benigno said. "And there were moments which were quite touching, particularly when some wept and recounted what happened. The president was visibly moved."

Marling Lagliva, whose daughter was killed in the incident, said Mrs. Aquino promised to help her build a new house to replace the one soldiers burned.

"She was very sad," Mrs. Lagliva told reporters. "It seemed that she was crying inside. I think she was holding back her tears."

From Namulandayan, Mrs. Aquino and her party flew to an army camp in her adjacent home province of Tarlac to talk with the soldiers involved in the incident. Benigno also declined to give details.

In other developments Saturday:

—Soldiers backed by helicopter gunships pursued Communist rebels in the hills in northern Isabela following a battle Friday in which at least seven soldiers and two rebels were killed.

Brig. Gen. Manuel Avila said he could not confirm reports by the official Philippine News Agency that 12 rebels were killed. He said troops found the bodies of only two rebel fighters.

At least 74 people have been killed since the truce expired.

—Military officials said 51 people were wounded, many seriously, when a homemade bomb exploded Friday night at a beauty pageant in Margosatubig town on southern Mindanao Island.

A report at the Zamboanga City regional military headquarters did not say who was behind the attack. Margosatubig is in an area where both Moslem separatist rebels and Communist guerrillas are known to operate.

—The Communist-led National Democratic Front demanded Mrs. Aquino bar retired U.S. Maj. Gen. John K. Singlaub from entering the Philippines, charging he was a CIA agent recruiting mercenaries to fight Filipino Communists.

U.S. Embassy and Philippine officials have said Singlaub frequently visits the Philippines because he is part of a group searching for a treasure Japanese Gen. Tomoyuki Yamashita buried in the country toward the end of World War II.

Singlaub, who has raised funds for the Nicaraguan Contra rebels through his World Anti-Communist League, has denied he was recruiting mercenaries and said the allegations were fabricated by Soviet agents.

White Academics Quit National Party

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Four prominent academics resigned Saturday from the governing National Party to protest what they said was the lack of progress toward significant political reform.

The dissidents are faculty members at Stellenbosch University, the most prestigious college for Afrikaners, the mainly Dutch-descended whites who dominate the National Party and the government.

On Friday, 27 Stellenbosch faculty members met privately with President P.W. Botha to express their discontent. Details of the meeting were not disclosed.

But at least four members of the group said Saturday they were leaving the National Party and indicated others also were preparing to back independents or candidates of the anti-apartheid Progressive Federal Party in the whites-only May 6 parliamentary election.

The resignations were the latest in series of blows to the National Party, which initially appeared to face an election challenge from the extreme right.

Instead, a more dramatic challenge has come from the left. Legislator Wynand Malan left the party to run as a pro-reform independent and Denis Worrall quit as ambassador to Britain to run as an independent against Constitutional Development Minister Chris Heunis.

Worrall is running in a district that includes part of Stellenbosch town, and reportedly is attracting substantial support from local Afrikaners.

One of the professors who resigned Saturday from the National Party was economist Sampie Terreblance, for years a leading party theoretician.

"The government does not possess the will or the vision to bring about the appropriate reforms," Terreblanche said.

By law and custom, apartheid establishes a racially segregated society in which the 24-million black majority has no vote in national affairs. The 5-million white minority controls the economy and maintains separate districts, schools and health services.

Rats Killed

PEKING (AP) — An estimated 15 million rats have been killed in an extermination campaign in Peking that began in November, the official Xinhua News Agency said.

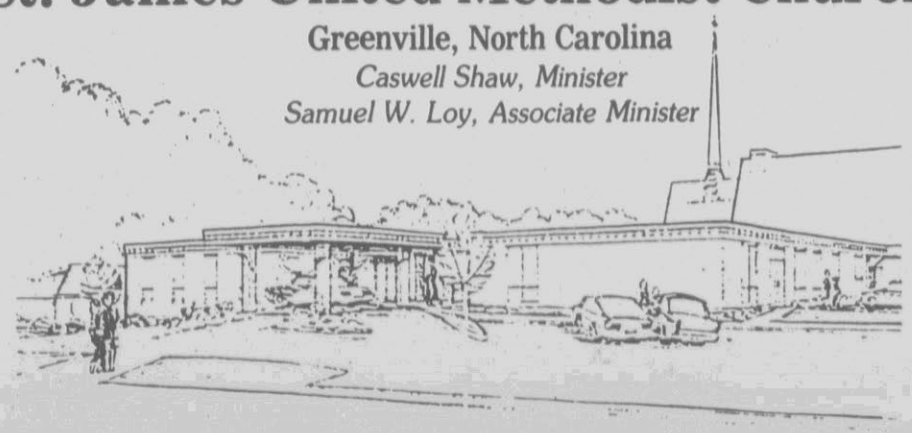

It said 1,150 tons of poison spread throughout the city wiped out about three-fourth's of the capital's 20 million rats. The anti-coagulant poison was distributed to every building in the city and placed throughout the city sewer system.

Rats long have infested China's cities, spreading disease and occasionally causing power outages by chewing through wires.

European Aircraft Maker To Test U.S. Sales Grip

By ROBERT BURNS
Associated Press Writer

TOULOUSE, France (AP) — In a dining room at Airbus Industrie headquarters, well out of earshot of the aircraft maker's assembly line, the sounds of hammering and drilling clash with the gentle hum of lunchtime chatter.

They are the sounds of expansion — not just of Airbus' spartan office compound on the outskirts of Toulouse but of its ambitions in the big-money, high-risk passenger airplane market dominated by U.S. manufacturers.

Europe's most advanced aircraft manufacturer is gearing up for the dogfight of its life, a struggle that will test the underpinnings of Western Europe's industrial strategy for competing with the United States and Japan.

Leaders of the four-nation Airbus consortium are planning a final go-ahead to build a new generation of jumbo jets for the 1990s and beyond: the twin-engine, medium-range A330 and the four-engine, long-haul A340. They would complement Airbus' existing family of three airliners.

It's a decision some say could brighten Europe's industrial future, which has been put in doubt by years of economic and technological stagnation. Judging from initial U.S. reaction to the proposed new Airbus jets, it also is likely to add new tension to U.S.-European trade relations, which have grown steadily worse in recent months.

Airbus is owned jointly by aerospace companies from Britain, France, West Germany and Spain. The four partner companies share in the development and building of Airbus jets, although final assembly is done by France's state-owned Aerospatiale in huge hangars near the Toulouse airport.

Even though Airbus has yet to turn a profit after 17 years in business, its executives and many government officials consider it a good investment. They see it as a model for the sort of pan-European cooperation that could help Western Europe overcome the fragmentation of its home market and remain an industrial force in the 21st century.

Airbus will not confirm any figures, but Michael Smith, the deputy U.S. trade representative, asserted in London on Feb. 2 that Airbus had absorbed as much as $10 billion in state aid since 1970.

Airbus already has put 360 of its aircraft in the skies. But Airbus executives say they need to develop a new generation of longer-range planes to give them a full range of products for the future.

The new jumbos on Airbus' drawing board would compete directly with Boeing Co.'s medium-range 767 and long-haul 747 jetliners, and could shoot down McDonnell Douglas Corp.'s newly launched MD-11 long-range jumbo.

The proposed new Airbus planes, planned for service by 1992, already have kicked up a transatlantic storm over U.S. charges of underhanded Airbus financing tactics.

Reagan administration sources in Washington said recently that the Cabinet-level Economic Policy Committee has agreed in principle to recommend punitive trade measures against the Europeans if no agreement is reached on clarifying international rules on financing new aircraft

Some European officials, in response, have accused the Reagan adminstration of trying to frighten Airbus' four sponsoring governments into scrapping the $2.5 billion project. Most or all of the money would be in the form of repayable government loans, and the United States says that gives Airbus an unfair edge over Boeing and McDonnell Douglas.

Michel Noir, the French minister for foreign trade, said recently that Airbus' access to government loans is no greater an advantage than the "massive" U.S. military contracts that he said allow Boeing and McDonnell to cross-subsidize their civil aircraft projects.

Boeing says 40 percent of its $16.3 billion in total revenue last year came from government military and space contracts. The company denies that this represents a form of aid for its civil aircraft projects.

"It's not a loan," said Thomas Cole, a spokesman for Boeing Commercial Airplane Co. in Seattle. "It's business, like any other business."

The Reagan administration sent a team of trade officials to Paris, Bonn and London in early February to apprise the main participating governments of U.S. concerns about the Airbus financing. The European response was a stern defense of the Airbus organization.

"The Americans want Airbus out of the game because it represents competition," said Willy De Clercq, the top trade official at the headquarters in Brussels, Belgium, of the European Economic Community, which speaks for its 12 member countries on trade matters.

"The question is not who is right with regard to the (trading) rules ... but if the Europeans want to defend their aerospace industry, if Airbus is worth the trouble of defending it," he added.

At Airbus headquarters, executives will talk only privately about a widespread suspicion in Europe that Boeing and McDonnell Douglas want to ground the new Airbus jets to keep out new competition. But they make no effort to hide their resentment of U.S. accusations that Airbus' use of government subsidies makes it an unfair competitor.

"You can't, in isolation, attack the Airbus system and say, 'This is not the same way that we do business and therefore it's not allowed.' That's rubbish," said Stuart Iddles, Airbus' senior vice president for marketing.

At the heart of the U.S. concern is a belief that, while Airbus says it will repay the governments from which it receives funds, the subsidies allow Airbus to use attractive price discounts to undercut Boeing and McDonnell Douglas, with an insufficient view to making a profit.

"It's rubbish to say there is no effort to make profit," said Iddles. He acknowledged, however, that the American suspicions are heightened because Airbus, in line with its legal status as a French-registered consortium, does not publish full financial accounts.

"There's no way you can work out what Airbus is actually doing," in terms of financial performance, said Keith Donaldson, an aerospace analyst who follows Airbus for the London investment firm of Philips and Drew.

Iddles said Airbus aims to become a profit-making enterprise by the mid-1990s.

So far only Lufthansa, the West German airline, has placed an order for the yet-to-be-built A340. Iddles said at least four other airlines are likely to announce advance orders for the plane by March 31.

Boeing and McDonnell Douglas, which together hold about 80 percent of the world market in passenger aircraft, already are scrambling to fend off a challenge from Airbus' newest plane, the short-range A320. It is scheduled to begin flight tests in March and to enter service with Air France and British Caledonian in 1988 in competition with Boeing's latest version of the popular 737 and the McDonnell Douglas MD-80.

Airbus already has 262 orders for A320s from 15 airlines, including the Northwest Airlines, which last Ocotber gave Airbus its most important foothold in the American market by agreeing to buy 10 of the jets by 1991 and taking an option to buy up to 90 more through 1995.

"There is no question about it, the A320 is a phenomenal success story," said Donaldson, the analyst. He predicted the A320 would become a profitable program by about 1992, although he said it remains questionable whether Airbus as a whole ever will be weaned from government aid.

Brazil Reverses Itself, Now Will Pay Interest On Its Foreign Loans

By SUSAN HAYWARD
Associated Press Writer

BRASILIA, Brazil (AP) — Brazil will resume paying interest to overseas banks holding most of the nation's $108 billion foreign debt after it negotiates with the banks, Foreign Minister Dilson Funaro said Saturday.

"We didn't break any contractual clauses," he said. "We're suspending remittance during the period of negotiations."

Brazil owes about $70 billion to foreign private banks, $10 billion to foreign governments and $28 billion to international lending agencies. The biggest creditors are U.S. banks, such as Citibank, Chase Manhattan and Morgan Guaranty.

On Friday, President Jose Sarney declared that Brazil would suspend indefinitely interest payments to foreign banks. He said Brazil was buying time "to avoid political instability, recession, unemployment and social crisis."

Funaro told reporters here that the suspension of interest payments was in the works 1½ years ago and will last as long as it takes to reach an agreement with the banks. Negotiations will begin in two or three weeks, and after that a renewal of payments could begin "in a week or five months depending on how long negotiations last," he said.

Funaro declined to give details on Brazil's position for the negotiations, but he said Brazil still will not deal with the International Monetary Fund. Brazil has refused to deal with the IMF because it claims the financial institution monitors internal economic progress.

"This is often the case with the IMF," he said. "It monitors the economic recuperations of a country that has an internal crisis totally isolated from the international picture."

Brazil has paid $25 billion in interest, representing an "incredible 25 percent of the debt," Funaro said.

Sarney said the central bank's protective hard-currency reserves were only $3.96 billion, down from $7.8 billion when he took office in March 1985.

Funaro said Brazil has an obligation to defend the reserves. "This is important for the nation and is important for the international financial system," he said. "Brazil will not fulfill its foreign obligations at the cost of recession."

The reserves fell with the failure of an inflation-control plan Sarney announced a year ago. The plan succeeded at first, but Brazil later had widespread product shortages as people bought up existing goods at government-frozen prices.

The country had to resort to emergency imports, and the healthy trade surpluses that once helped pay interest on the foreign debt dipped to 15 percent of past levels.

Funaro, one of the main authors of the plan, maintained the economic measures were succesful in holding back an inflation rate that threatened to reach 500 percent by the end of 1986.

Brazil had an inflation rate of 16.8 percent in January.

Political Tempers Flare As Britain Approaches Hard-Fought Elections

By KAREN DeYOUNG
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

LONDON — It was just another week in British politics. Opposition leader Neil Kinnock accused the governing Conservative Party of "sewer" tactics and described Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher as "bloody lethal" for Britain's future.

Thatcher's party called Kinnock "unfit" for leadership, and the prime minister herself implied that he was a "squealer" who could not take criticism.

Partisan repartee has always had a sharp edge here. The approach of what is sure to be a close and hard-fought election has noticeably shortened tempers and honed political knives razor-thin.

But to a growing number of commentators and senior politicians, the level of personal attacks between Kinnock and Thatcher and their two parties has sunk recently to a new and worrisome low.

In an unusual step, the chief parliamentary whips of both the Conservative and opposition Labor parties issued a joint statement Wednesday night pledging to stamp out personal abuse in the House of Commons. The two agreed that "for far too long now," such attacks "on the integrity of individuals have reached an unacceptable level, damaging to Parliament."

The current round of assaults began Monday, when Kinnock reaffirmed in a television interview an earlier comment that Thatcher was "absolutely bloody lethal" for Britain. Although "bloody" is not a word used in polite company here, Kinnock rejected a suggestion by the interviewer that he had sunk to "crudity."

On Tuesday, the government's junior health minister, Edwina Currie, lobbed a live grenade at Kinnock's wife. Glenys Kinnock, a member of the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament and frequent marcher in peace rallies, is a target over whom Labor takes particular offense, and is thus a favorite subject of Conservatives. They insist she is a dangerous pacifist, and has the same kind of influence over her husband's political views as Nancy Reagan is reputed to have over those of the American president.

"The Labor Party is being led by a woman, but she hasn't been elected to anything," Currie shouted in Parliament. "She's a housekeeper who makes the breakfast in the Kinnock household. That's who's leading the Labor Party, and she's leading them by the nose."

In Wednesday's House of Commons session, Conservative member Marcus Fox introduced three motions, signed by more than 100 of his colleagues, declaring that Kinnock was unfit both as party leader and as a potential prime minister.

"We really have to show the opposition that they cannot go on attacking the prime minister and expect to go unscathed," Fox said.

The speaker of the house, Bernard Wetherill, rejected the motions, and called for them to be stricken from the minutes. The incident, however, led to an emergency meeting between Conservative whip John Wakeham and his Labor counterpart, Derek Foster, which resulted in their joint pledge.

Thursday morning, Kinnock returned to the fray. Describing the attack on him Wednesday as "infantile and pathetic," he said the Tories had "slipped below their normal standards, I'd say roughly from the gutter to the sewer." As to supporters of the Conservative motions, he said, "They travel best in gangs, hanging around like clumps of bananas, thick-skinned and yellow."

Asked whether he believed the attack had been orchestrated by the Conservative Party Central Office, the party's political headquarters, Kinnock said it had "the sort of claw mark you would expect" from party chairman Norman Tebbit.

Tebbit, considered a tough political infighter, is widely held responsible for the Tories' current campaign theme that attacks Labor as dangerously radical and more socialist than East European governments.

Kinnock sat quietly during yesterday afternoon's parliamentary question time, the twice-weekly period when Thatcher must take questions in the House of Commons. But a Labor backbencher accused Thatcher of "making an ass" of her parliamentary whip, Wakeham, by "allowing" her office to arrange the motions attacking the Labor leader.

"I have been myself the result of attacks from you and many others," Thatcher retorted loudly above rising Labor catcalls. "And I have never squealed or complained about it, never, not once."

Proceedings then came to a halt as Labor MPs shouted out "Where's Edwina?" and "What about Currie?" causing speaker Weatherill to rise to his feet and shout, "That sounds like a rabble!"

Such was the level of disorder that even Foreign Secretary Geoffrey Howe, normally the most mild-mannered and soft-spoken of Thatcher's Cabinet ministers, was moved Thursday night to attack Kinnock. Returning to the East European theme, Howe said in a speech to Scottish Conservatives that the Labor leader was "unwilling to choose ideologically or politically between the United States and the Soviet Union."

Delivering what was perhaps the unkindest cut of the day, Howe noted that "on polling day, Britain will choose again whether to stay in the front rank of world powers, or subside into the irrelevance to which the outside world has assigned Mr. Kinnock."

George Mason University, led by a 21-point performance from Kenny Sanders, held off an East Carolina rally to claim a 67-60 Colonial Athletic Association basketball victory Saturday night.

East Carolina, down by as many as 12 points in the second half, rallied to tie the game at 53-53 with 4:25 to play, but could never gain the ball with a chance to go into the lead as Mason continued to hit the clutch shots.

And as it has been in so many CAA games, it was the foul line that made the difference for the Pirate opponent.

East Carolina hit five more field goals than did their foe, but were only seven of nine at the line as compared to 20 of 30 for Mason. ECU was also beaten in the three-point area, Mason canning five of nine while the Pirates made only one of seven.

ECU was also hampered by having one of its regulars sidelined. Keith Sledge, whom Coach Charlie Harrison says is still not fully recovered from knee surgery in the off-season, was in street clothes for the game.

"It's been hurting him all year. And at Winthrop the other night, we could see that he was in so much pain that he couldn't even move laterally. We didn't want to play him tonight so he'll have a chance to play in his final home game on Monday."

In his place, the Pirates moved Marchell Henry out to a guard position and put Derrick Battle in at a forward post. John Williams also made his first start at point guard in place of Jeff Kelly.

Kelly, meanwhile, has been starting lately in the absence of Howard Brown, who also was on the bench in street clothes. Brown, sent home from the Richmond trip two weeks ago for a breech of team rules, did not make the UNC-Wilmington-Winthrop trip, has not been suspended according to Harrison, but may not play the rest of the year.

"You look at the stats and we beat them everywhere but at the foul line," Harrison said. "We didn't play with a lot of quickness tonight, but we did come back on them. We just couldn't get over the hump."

Harrison also was disappointed in the play of forward Blue Edwards, who got only four points on the night, fouled out and played only 17 minutes. "I don't know what the problem was with Blue. He had complained at practice (Friday) about stomach cramps, but he didn't say anything to the trainers tonight. But he certainly didn't play like he was capable of playing."

In contrast, Harrison felt the Pirates got a "great game" from Leon Bass, who led the ECU effort with 20 points, hitting 10 of 14 shots from the floor.

"John Williams played well in a role (point guard) he's not used to. We used him to try and get a little taller lineup out there. I thought we'd get more scoring from a bigger lineup."

The Pirates, struggling throughout the game, began their rally on two free throws by Marchell Henry with 12:22 left in the game, cutting the 12-point lead back to 10.

Henry followed with a layup to cut it to 12, but a free throw by Anthony Davis upped it to nine. William Grady hit a short jumper to reduce it to nine, but a three-point play by Sanders ran it back to 10.

East Carolina continued to scramble back, however, getting a pair of free throws and a layup by Henry to cut the lead to 52-47 with 6:48 to go. Henry then added two more free throws to trim it to three and a jumper by Grady pulled ECU to within one, 52-51, with 5:56 left.

Tracy Battle upped the margin to two, making the first of two free throws, but Reid Lose canned an 18-footer with 4:25 to play, knotting the score at 53-53.

But Tracy Battle scored twice in a row to run the lead back to four, and the Pirates could never draw closer than two again.

Hammonds, Ferrell Lift Tech By Duke

By TOM FOREMAN Jr.
AP Sports Writer

DURHAM, N.C. (AP) — Tom Hammonds took care of the first half, Duane Ferrell handled the second half and the combination helped Georgia Tech sink No. 17 Duke 79-72 Saturday.

The Yellow Jackets relied almost exclusively on short jumpers and layups in the first half and shot 66.7 percent from the field, finishing at 65 percent. for the game. Hammonds scored 20 points in the first half and finished with 26.

"We knew we had to get the ball inside. That was the key to the last game with Duke," Hammonds said. "I knew that when I got the ball inside, I had to take it in and score, and I think I did that in the first half."

Duke's defense cooled Hammonds in the second half by sagging back to give help to the man assigned to defend Hammonds. That's when Ferrell took over, scoring 15 points in the period and finishing with 16.

"I came around and I finally got into the flow of things and that helped out a lot," Ferrell said. "I wanted the ball. They told me to just relax, calm down and just get myself set. Once I got started, I felt good and comfortable."

The Blue Devils trailed by as much as 10 points in the first half, but narrowed the gap to 36-32 at halftime on a Quin Snyder jumper five seconds before the buzzer. In the second half, Georgia Tech widened its lead to 61-48 on a 3-point basket by Craig Neal with 9:20 remaining.

Led by its defense, Duke made one last push and twice cut the lead to four, the latest a 69-65 deficit after two free throws by Danny Ferry with 2:58 left. Brian Oliver retaliated for Georgia Tech with a layup with 2:25 left.

Snyder missed a 3-point attempt with 2:03 to play and Georgia Tech center Antoine Ford came back with a hook to give the Yellow Jackets a 73-65 lead with 1:54 left.

Neal hit six straight free throws down the stretch to seal the victory and raise Georgia Tech's record to 16-8, 7-5 in the ACC.

Patriots' Late Push Dooms Lady Pirates

FAIRFAX, Va. — George Mason converted six straight free throws in the final 38 seconds to take a 61-54 win over East Carolina in women's Colonial Athletic Association action Saturday night.

ECU trailed by 13 at the half, 35-22, but edged slowly back into the game. The Lady Pirates cut the lead to eight, 39-31, on a 21-foot jumper by Chris O'Connor. Later, ECU tied the game at 45-45 after two straight baskets by Monique Pompili and one by Greta O'Neal.

George Mason then scored three unanswered baskets for six-point lead before ECU drew close again with 38 seconds left at 55-52.

ECU then fouled Angie Lewis, who hit both shots to make it 57-52. Lewis then was fouled again and hit two more from the line to make it 59-52 with 26 seconds left. Veronica Gilliard finished off the George Mason scoring with two from the line with 19 seconds remaining.

"At this time, we have lost so much to injury," said ECU coach Emily Manwaring, listing Pam Williams, knee surgery; Jody Rodriquez, possible knee cartilage damage; Tammy Laney out all year; Sarah Gray with a stress fracture; Irish Hamilton's knee injury and O'Neal (still) recovering from shoulder injury.

"Add that up with a lack of intensity and it equals a loss. I'm really disappointed to lose to a team that I haven't lost to in my three years."

George Mason was 1-10 in its series against the Lady Pirates prior to the game.

With the loss, ECU falls to 15-11 overall and 7-4 in the CAA.

The Lady Pirates travel to Harrisonburg, Va., for a Monday game with nationally ranked CAA leader James Madison.

ECU's Baseball Opener Postponed

East Carolina's opening baseball games with UNC-Asheville, scheduled for Saturday and Sunday, have been postponed.

The Pirates had been scheduled to play a doubleheader on Saturday with Asheville and finish the series with a single game today. However, field conditions would not allow the games to be played.

The Pirates will now hold their opening game again the University of Virginia this Saturday. The UNC-A games have been tentatively rescheduled for early May.

Tar Heels Blitz Clemson With Three-Point Barrage

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — North Carolina coach Dean Smith says his team usually likes to work the basketball inside, but it was bombs away Saturday as the third-ranked Tar Heels beat 10th-ranked Clemson at its own 3-point game.

Kenny Smith scored 19 points, hitting three of his team's 12 3-point field goals, enabling the Tar Heels to roll to a 96-80 victory. Jeff Lebo hit 3 of 4 3-point tries and led the Tar Heels with 24 points, and Joe Wolf was 4 of 5, with 21 points.

The victory gives the Tar Heels the top seed in the ACC Tournament.

"I can't believe this is our team here," Smith said about the 18 3-point field goal attempts. "For certain guys, it's open to take it, but when they miss, I kick myself.

North Carolina, shooting 43.5 percent for the season from the 3-point field goal range, sank 12 of 18, while the Tigers were only nine of 25. The Tigers shoot 48.8 percent from the 19-foot, 9-inch mark for the season.

Center Horace Grant picked up his third foul with more than three minutes left in the opening half, while forward Jerry Pryor fouled out of the contest with nine minutes left.

The Tar Heels, now 25-2, are two ACC victories away from a perfect 14-0 league mark. The last undefeated conference season was achieved by North Carolina in 1984.

The loss is Clemson's 32nd straight in Chapel Hill, dating back to 1926, and the team's first road loss in 11 outings.

Kenny Smith sparked a second-half Tar Heel rally by sinking two 3-point field goals and scoring on a slam dunk off a Scott Williams steal to turn a two-point halftime lead into a 64-53 advantage with 14:27 remaining.

Clemson, now 24-3 and 9-3 in the ACC, closed the gap to 64-59 on a pair of 3-pointers by Michael Brown and Michael Tait.

But that was the closest the Tigers would come. The Tar Heels increased the lead to 77-65 on a fast-break slam dunk by J.R. Reid with 7:40 left and led by as many as 18 points down the stretch.

Neither team could grab a lead of more than four points in the first 14 minutes of the first half.

Then North Carolina got hot from the outside and Ranzino Smith's 3-point field goal with six minutes left gave the Tar Heels a 33-28 lead. From that point, the Tar Heels went on a 12-5 spurt — six points coming on two 3-point field goals by Wolf — to take a 42-33 lead with 4:28 remaining.

Chen Takes Lead In L.A. Open

LOS ANGELES (AP) — T.C. Chen, propelled by a hole-in-one, carded his second consecutive 67 Saturday to take a one-shot lead over Danny Edwards after three rounds of the $600,000 Los Angeles Open.

Chen, a 28-year-old native of Taiwan, moved to 9-under-par 204 through 54 holes of the tournament at Riviera Country Club. Edwards had a round of 68.

Ben Crenshaw shot a 66, and Bobby Wadkins, the first-round leader, had a 68 Saturday to remain within close striking distance of the lead at 206.

Rick Fehr, who began the day tied with Edwards and Chen one stroke behind leader Bill Sander, shot 70 and was alone at 207.

In a group another shot back were Spain's Seve Ballesteros, with a third-round 69; Calvin Peete, with a 67; Don Pooley, with a 69; and Pat McGowen, with a 65.

Sander — with a 43 on the back nine — struggled to a 79 that left him at 215 as he slipped 11 shots behind Chen.

Craig Stadler and Lanny Wadkins, who started the third round two shots off the pace, fell further back as each had 73s for 211 totals.

Chen, a slight 5-foot-10, 145-pounder who took up golf as a teenager in Taipei, Taiwan, clipped five shots off par for a 30 on the front nine at Riviera Country Club, going to 10-under-par for the tournament.

He knocked in his 6-iron tee shot on the 171-yard, par-3 sixth hole to go 9-under at that point.

He birided the 10th hole to go to 11-under, but lost two shots to par with bogeys on No. 15 and No. 18.

Looking for his first PGA Tour victory, Chen had opened the tournament with a 70.

He joined the Tour in 1983 and had led the U.S. Open in 1985 until the final round, when he had a quadruple-bogey 8 on the fifth hole and finished with a 77 and tied for second behind champion Andy North.

Although Chen has yet to win on the Tour, he collected $85,690 while playing in 19 PGA tournaments in 1986.

He also has won three times in Asia, the 1981 Sapporo Open, the 1981 Asian International Open, and the 1981 KBC Augusta (Japan) Open.

Chen, who now lives in the Los Angeles suburb of Walnut, missed the cut at last week's tournament in San Diego. In his other two tournaments this year, he wound up in a tie for sixth in the Bob Hope Desert Classic and tied for 15th in the Phoenix Open.

LSU Pounds It Inside To Top Kentucky, 65-52

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — Nikita Wilson took control of the lane offensively in the second half, and Louisiana State University used a tough man-to-man defense to beat Kentucky 65-52 in a Southeastern Conference basketball game on Saturday.

"Every team we meet will play us a man-to-man defense, because we just don't have a very good inside game," Kentucky Coach Eddie Sutton said after the game.

Wilson had six points at halftime and finished with 22, hitting nine of 12 attempts from the field.

"He wanted the ball. He demanded the ball, and he didn't take any bad shots," said LSU Coach Dale Brown.

Wilson got four of his points in a 9-3 run opening the second half.

"I think both teams started the second half a little slow," Sutton said. "They didn't score a point on their first three possessions, and I don't think we even got a shot on our first three possessions.

"Just before we broke from the bench to begin the second half,I reminded our ball club that they'd have to reach down and find something.

"We were really tired the last 20 minutes."

"We did a horrible job defensively on Nikita Wilson," Sutton said. "He's a great forward, one of the best in the conference. He did the same thing to us here and at Lexington."

LSU pounded Kentucky 76-41 at Lexington, Ky., on Jan. 18.

Wilson said his teammates were responsible for his points. "I got great picks inside,"he said.

"This was probably my best game of the year, because I was more active."

Anthony Wilson and Darryl Joe had 12 points apiece for LSU, 17-12 overall and 7-9 in the SEC.

Rex Chapman had 24 for Kentucky, 16-8 and 9-7.

Kentucky opened a nine-point first half lead with a 14-0 scoring surge. Chapman had 9 of his points in that six and a half minute span. LSU narrowed Kentucky's 21-12 lead to 26-24 at halftime, then went ahead for good at the 10:16 mark on a layup by Anthony Wilson.

Chapman's 24 points was eight points over his average, but his running mate at guard, Ed Davender, was 13 points below his season average, scoring only two points and that in the final two minutes of the game.

Robert Lock had 12 points for Kentucky and Richard Madison had eight.

The teams battled evenly on the boards. LSU had 35 rebounds, Kentucky 34.

Individually, LSU's Oliver Brown had the best afternoon rebounding with 13. Lock and Chapman shared the lead for Kentucky with seven each.

Kentucky turned the ball over 17 times and 10 of those turnovers were on steals. LSU turned it over 15 times and six of those were results of Kentucky thefts.

LSU again had to go almost the whole game with its starting lineup, going to the bench only after Joe and Bernard Woodside fouled out in the closing minutes of the game.

Including the time played by Fess Irvin and Ben McDonald in relief of Joe and Woodside, LSU reserves totaled 14 minutes of playing time. Kentucky shot just 35 percent for the game and LSU hit 50 percent of its shots from the field.

S. Mississippi.....89
Virginia Tech.....77

HATTIESBURG, Miss. (AP) — Southern Mississippi took advantage of 26 Virginia Tech turnovers and Randolph Keys pumped in 23 points to lead all scorers as the Golden Eagles downed the Hokies 89-77 in Metro Conference basketball action Saturday.

After the Hokies scored the first two points of the game to take their only lead at 2-0, Southern Mississippi ran off 10 unanswered points to take a 10-2 lead early in the contest.

The Golden Eagles, shooting 59 percent early in the half, built their biggest lead of 29-12 at the 11:01 mark. Virginia Tech then rallied, scoring eight unanswered points to trim the Eagles' lead to three, 42-39, with 2:17 remaining in the first half.

At the half, Southern Mississippi led 49-41.

Virginia Tech closed to within four points early in the second half, as Bimbo Coles sank two technical shots assessed on the Southern Mississippi bench and Greg Brink sank a 10-foot jumper to make the score 49-45. But Virginia Tech could get no closer as the Golden Eagles recorded six second-half steals and Virginia Tech committed 16 second-half turnovers.

Aiding Keys' effort for Southern Mississippi was John White with 20 points and Derrek Hamilton with 17.

Virginia Tech had five players in double digits, led by Wally Lancaster with 18 points and Brink with 15. Roy Brow and Tim Anderson had 12 points each, and Coles scored 11.

Southern Mississisppi improves to 17-8 overall and 6-5 in the league. Virginia Tech slips to 10-15 and 5-5.

Temple Wins

WASHINGTON (AP) — Nate Blackwell scored a career-high 37 points, including 11 during a second-half run that lifted No. 5 Temple to an 88-77 Atlantic 10 Conference basketball victory over George Washington Saturday.

The victory, Temple's 15th straight, gave the Owls a school-record 28 victories against two losses. Temple is 17-0 in the league.

Temple trailed 64-60 early in the second half, but Blackwell made four baskets, including a three-pointer, and two free throws in a 19-7 surge that gave the Owls a 79-71 lead with 4:12 left.

Stickmen Get Win

East Carolina's club Lacrosse team won its season opener, topping Old Dominion, 13-7.

Hank McCracken led the Pirate scoring with five goals. Sal Anello and Joe Welch added two goals each. James Young and Kevin Thompson had nine saves apiece in the gaol for the Pirates.

ECU returns to action Tuesday against Brock University at the Intramural fields.

Mason then used the foul line to score six more points in the closing 1:13 of play.

"I thought we had something left (after ECU caught up) to carry through," Harrison said. "But we didn't play defense as well as we could have, and we missed some easy shots."

Harrison also singled out the play of Henry. "Nobody realized it, but he took a spill early in the game and came up with a big floor blister on his left hand. He didn't shoot as well after that, but he did dish out seven assists and score 17 points.

"And gag rule or not, I thought that the officiating was lousy," Harrison said. He singled out a foul called against Bass on a rebound when Harrison thought the big man had the superior position. Bass, usually unflappable, was shocked by the call, slamming the ball to the floor and drawing a technical as well as the personal. "There's no way that a call like that should be made in Division I basketball," the coach said. "They were bad — bad both ways. At least they can be consistent."

East Carolina held an early lead in the game, scoring the first two baskets, and was up by 8-2 with 14:26 left on a Bass layup.

But Davis hit a three-point jumper and was fouled by Edwards on the play, adding the fourth point to cut it to 8-6. Brian Miller than added another three-pointer to put Mason into a 9-8 lead.

East Carolina regained it at 10-9 as Bass scored again, but lost it right back on two free throws by Sanders. The Patriots pushed out by four, 16-12, before Bass scored two and Henry made a three-point play to put the Pirates back up, 17-16.

However, Sanders made two free throws and Miller made another three-point goal to push Mason back into a 21-17 lead and the Patriots never trailed again, moving out to as much as a five point lead, which they held at intermission, 32-27.

Mason quickly moved out by 10 in the early going of the second half, 39-29, and held right around that margin until Battle made a layup and Darrin Mosley hit one of two at the line for the 47-35 lead. After that, the Pirates made their rally, only to fall short.

Battle added 11 for the Patriots while Davis had 11.

The win boosts Mason to 15-11 overall and 7-6 in the conference. East Carolina falls to 11-15 overall, 3-10 in CAA play.

East Carolina will close out the 1986-87 regular season on Monday, playing host to James Madison.

It will be the final home game for five Pirate seniors: Bass, Derrick Battle, Henry, Sledge and Grady. "I just hope people will come out Monday to show their appreciation for these kids. They've worked hard through tough times, and they really deserve it."

SMU May Make History

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — The first man ever hanged for horse theft in all likelihood never even knew his special place in history.

The same cannot be said of SMU, a liberal arts college in Dallas which will soon learn if it is to be known forever as the first school to suffer the NCAA's "death penalty."

"I would have never dreamed it would be us," says Lonnie Kliever, SMU's faculty representative to the NCAA. "It embarrasses us. It grieves us that we are first."

SMU, already the NCAA's most-penalized school with six probations, stands on the brink of a football abyss. If allegations reported in the media of cash payments to players are true, the Mustang program could be ordered shut down for as long as two years by the NCAA Infractions Committeee.

It's the first case of its kind since June, 1985 when schools voted 427-6 to approve of sweeping changes in the NCAA penalty structure.

"The present system just isn't working," came the plea from Bill Hunt, then in charge of the enforcement department. "The idea is to make the risk so great, cheating isn't worth it."

A school convicted of a major violation is vulnerable to the death penalty for the next five years. Any sport at that school convicted of other major violations within that period is subject — at the discretion of the Infractions Committeee — to being shut down completely for up to two years.

That means no scholarships can be given. Coaches cannot recruit. Games cannot be played.

The term "death penalty" was quickly coined, sped along by the comment of then-Oklahoma State basketball coach Paul Hansen, who said, "Any program that gets hit with all that is going to the graveyard."

SMU, still serving a three-year football probation laid down in 1985, was accused in media reports last fall of continued wrongdoing. Cash payments to players were alleged by at least one former linebacker. The school president, athletic director and football coach resigned.

Then last week, Kliever and other SMU officials spent almost five hours behind closed doors with the six-person Infractions Committee. And, unlike past cases, SMU officials say, they have cooperated fully with NCAA probers and will not appeal the finding whatever it might be.

"I think it's pretty obvious we've just thrown outselves on the mercy of the court," said Kevin McKinney, a starting offensive lineman for the Mustangs.

SMU went into the hearing in San Diego with its own recommendation for punishment. The NCAA enforcement staff, he said, did not recommend the full two-year suspension of the program. But the Infractions Committee is not bound by the recommendation and could still shut down the program for any part of two seasons. There has been speculation the Mustangs will have to cancel the non-conference part of their schedule.

"What we have proposed would amount to a very significant penalty," Kliever said.

Nobody will know the verdict until this week when David Berst, director enforcement, holds a news conference in Dallas.

Opinion on what should happen has been divided.

"What's the point of having a death penalty if the most-penalized school in history gets caught one more time but is allowed to live?" said one administrator who asked that his name not be used. "The hard-core cheaters would see that and go about their merry way, knowing the NCAA lacked the guts to go all the way."

The 427-6 vote, a 98.61 percent approval, caught even Frank Remington, Infractions Committee chairman, a bit off-guard, and he declared on the spot that "a mandate" had been laid down.

Twenty months after that vote and two days after hearing SMU's presentation, Remington had not changed his mind.

"By that vote, the membership indicated they wanted serious infractions viewed seriously," Remington said from his office in Madison, Wis. "That message was loud and clear. There is no question that was the message the membership sent to the Infractions Committee."

But what message is the Infractions Committee sending back to to the membership?

Trinity Tops Raleigh

RALEIGH — Trinity Christian got off to a good start and rolled up a 69-43 basketball decision over hosting Raleigh Christian Saturday afternoon.

Raleigh's girls, however, downed the Trinity girls, 41-20, in their meeting.

The Tigers pushed out into a 17-8 lead in the opening period, then outscored Raleigh, 21-8, in the second period. That left Trinity in a 38-16 lead at intermission.

Both teams scored 14 points in the third quarter, which ended with Trinity up, 52-30. Trinity again outscored Raleigh, 17-13, in the final period.

Joey Braxton led Trinity with 20 points while Gerard Fulton and Michael Harrell each had 11. Paul Smith had 12 to pace Raleigh.

The Tigers may have lost starter Kyler Welch with a sprained ankle early in the second quarter. Welch is now listed as questionable for the Mid-Atlantic Christian Athletic Association's tournament, set for this weekend.

In the girls' game, Raleigh built up an 11-3 lead in the first period and ran that to 21-11 by halftime. In the third period, Raleigh boosted its margin to 29-16 and then outscored Trinity, 12-4, in the final quarter.

Wendy Johnson led Raleigh with 15 points while Shannon Webber added 14. No one scored in double figures for Trinity.

GCA Girls Win Tournement

Kim Faulkner came off the bench to score 17 points and lead the Greenville Christian girls past Wilson Christian to capture the East Carolina Christian Conference basketball tournament Saturday.

GCA jumped out to a 17-15 halftime lead before Wilson narrowed it to 32-29 by the end of three quarters of play.

Greenville outscored Wilson 17-9 over the final frame to take the win.

Stephanie Stevens added 12 points and Sandy Johnston chipped in 10 for GCA, 14-1. Johnston was selected the most valuable player in the girls' tournament and joined teammate Amber Tripp on the all-tournament team.

Tracy Burlingame led Wilson with 12 points.

In the boy's game, Friendship eased past GCA, 71-67, as Chuck Fergeson hit four free throws in the final 30 seconds to stall a GCA comeback.

GCA's Paul Hollingsworth hit with 30 seconds left to close the gap to two at 67-65. On Friendships' ensuing possession, Fergeson was fouled and hit two free throws to make it 69-65. GCA then turned the ball over and Fergeson was again fouled and made two more free throws to make it 71-65.

Hollingsworth hit at the buzzer to provide the final margin.

Fergeson, the tournament MVP, led both teams in scoring with 24 points. He also hit on all of his six free throw attempts in the final quarter.

Hollingsworth led GCA, 15-5, with 23 points, while Robin House added 15. The two also placed on the all-tournament team.

Seeding for the state tournament will be decided Monday.

Rarick Leads Hawaiian Open

HONOLULU (AP) — Cindy Rarick, who attended the University of Hawaii for two years, won her first LPGA tournament Saturday by shooting a 5-under-par 67 to take the 54-hole $300,000 Tsumura Hawaiian Ladies Open.

Rarick, who earned $45,000, ended the tournament at the Turtle Bay Hilton and Country Club course at 9-under 207, two strokes ahead of Jane Geddes, and three strokes ahead of Alice Ritzman.

Rarick, who placed second place after the first and second rounds, went into the final round at 4-under 140 and then shot the lowest score of the tournament.

She made birdies on the first and ninth holes to finish her first nine at 2-under 34.

On the par-3, 172-yard 11th hole, Rarick missed a five-foot putt for par and had to take a bogey.

"I was so frustrated," Rarick said. "But so many of my friends who were there yelling 'Hang in there Cindy, you're going great.'"

With encouragement from the gallery , Rarick birdied the 12th and 13th holes.

"I didn't know what the score was until after the 15th hole," Rarick said. "I heard someone from the croud yell, 'They're all even at 7-under.' After that I didn't look at the scoreboard. I just concentrated on my game."

The concentration paid off. Rarick birdied the 16th and 17th holes to bring her back nine score to 3-under 33.

"I'm so excited that my first win was in Hawaii," said Rarick, who attended the University of Hawaii from 1978 to 1980. "It was so fantastic to have a win on my third year with the tournament, and to have it in Hawaii is just the greatest."

Geddes, who was tied for the lead with Ritzman going into the final round, also birdied the first hole, but hit the bunker of the par-4, 376-yard fifth hole and two-putter for bogey.

On the back nine, Geddess birdied the 13th and 14th holes to tie with Rarick and Ritzman at 7-under after 15 holes.

Geddes, who pursed $27,750, missed birdies on the 15th and 16th holes and knew first place was disappearing.

"After the 17th I saw the scoreboard and that Cindy was two down," Geddes said. "Then I just tried to finish second."

Paired with Ritzman, Geddes managed to par the 17th and 18th holes.

Tied for fourth place at 4-under 212 were Lorie Petterson and Hollis Stacy.

UNLV Rallies Past New Mexico St.

LAS CRUCES, N.M. (AP) — Armon Gilliam's scored 23 points in the second half and No. 1 ranked Nevada-Las Vegas' fullcourt defense rallied the Runnin' Rebels from a 20-point first-half deficit to an 80-69 victory over New Mexico State Saturday.

Gilliam, who scored only four points in the first half, hammered the Aggies' defense in the final 20 minutes and finished with 27 points as the Rebels ran their winning streak to 13 straight and overall record to 28-1.

The Pacific Coast Athletic Conference basketball victory improved UNLV's league mark to 16-0. New Mexico State, which led 42-22 at one point in the first half, dropped to 14-13 overall and 8-8 in the PCAA.

Gilliam's second-half point production and a six-point play by Rebel senior guard Freddie Banks culminated UNLV's second-half rally.

UNLV, down 43-24 at halftime, outscored the Aggies 14-2 to start the second half to cut a 43-24 Aggie lead to 45-36.

The Rebels' fullcourt press forced seven NMSU turnovers in the first 7½ minutes of the second half, and Gilliam repeatedly turned them into points.

With 10:04 left in the game, NMSU's lead was cut to 54-51.

At that point, guard Kenny Travis, who had carried the Aggies in the first half with 22 of his 25 points, picked up his fifth foul. NMSU Coach Neil McCarthy argued the call and was called for a technical.

Banks converted four free throws and then scored on a reverse layup on UNLV's ensuing possession. That gave the Rebels their first lead since the opening minute of the game. A 10-2 UNLV run minutes later — spurred by a pair of Gilliam slam dunks and back-to-back 3-point goals from reserve guard Gary Graham — put the game away.

NMSU, playing before a loud partisan crowd of 13,002, scored 10 straight points early in the game to take a 12-5 lead. The Aggies hit 60 percent from the field en route to a 43-24 cushion at halftime.

Point guard Mark Wade added 13 points and Banks had 12 for UNLV. Sophomore center Steve McGlothin added 14 points for the Aggies.

Iowa 75

BLOOMINGTON, Ind. (AP) — Keith Smart scored 13 of his 17 points in the first half and Steve Alford came out of a shooting slump to score 24 as second-ranked Indiana beat No. 7 Iowa 84-75 in Big Ten Conference basketball Saturday.

Alford, 15 of 52 in his last three games as Indiana defeated the bottom three teams in the conference by a combined total of five points, was 5-of-7 in scoring 12 as the Hoosiers took command in the first half.

Daryl Thomas contributed 21 points to the victory as Indiana, undefeated in last 21 home games, avenged a 101-88 pounding it received last month in Iowa City — the Hoosiers' only loss in conference play.

The Hoosiers, 14-1 in conference play and 23-2 overall, pulled away midway in the first half, scoring eight consecutive points in a 14-2 spurt as Iowa failed to score on 11 consecutive possessions.

Smart made two free throws to ignite the spurt, giving Indiana a 29-21 advantage with 9:02 left in the half. A Dean Garrett dunk, a Garrett free throw and a Smart layin gave Indiana a 34-21 lead with 6:38 remaining.

Brad Lohaus' layup with 5:33 to go gave the Hawkeyes their first points in almost five minutes and Indiana responded with six more on two free throws by Joe Hillman, an Alford jumper and a 3-point shot by Hillman.

A 3-pointer by Alford from 22 feet with four seconds left in the half gave Indiana its biggest lead of the opening segment, 46-27.

The Hawkeyes, running players in and out all game, fell behind by 23 at 59-36 early in the second half and never seriously challenged again although Iowa pulled to within nine in the closing seconds.

A 3-point basket by Lohaus left Iowa trailing by 13 with 2:12 to play. Rick Calloway made two free throws for Indiana and Roy Marble, who topped Iowa with 20 points, sandwiched a pair of 3-pointers around a Thomas dunk to leave Iowa trailing 82-71 with 48 seconds to play.

A layin by B.J. Armstrong left the Hawkeyes nine points short with 42 seconds remaining and Calloway again made two free throws to give Indiana an 84-74 advantage with 15 seconds remaining.

Iowa slipped to 10-4 in the conference, 23-4 overall.

Pittsburgh 76
Connecticut 66

HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) — Sophomore Jerome Lane scored 20 points and grabbed a career-high 21 rebounds Saturday as eighth-ranked Pittsburgh beat Connecticut 76-66 in a Big East Conference basketball game.

Pittsburgh led by just six at halftime but built its margin to 18 points with 4:05 remaining to seal its ninth victory in its last 10 games. The Panthers are 22-5 overall and 11-3 in the Big East.

With the victory, Pittsburgh took sole possession of first place in the Big East, a half-game ahead of Syracuse, which plays Georgetown Sunday.

Lane, who leads the nation in rebounding, had his previous best efforts in games this season against Chicago State and Boston College, in which he grabbed 19 rebounds.

It was the fifth straight loss for Connecticut, which fell to 8-17 overall and 2-12 in the conference.

The undermanned Huskies were led by freshman Tate George who had 19 points and eight assists and Jeff King who had 17 points.

Charles Smith and Mike Goodson each added 14 points for Pittsburgh and freshman Rod Brookin, starting his first game in place of Curtis Aiken, made six of eight field goal attempts for 13 points.

The only other time Pittsburgh has won 22 games was in the 1973-74 season when it posted 25 victories.

Alabama 77
Auburn 75

AUBURN, Ala. (AP) — Guard Terry Coner drove the lane and sank an 8-foot shot with 50 seconds left to give Alabama a 77-75 victory over Auburn Saturday and at least a share of the Southeastern Conference basketball title.

No. 12 Alabama, 21-4 overall, improved to 14-2 in the SEC, two games ahead of Florida. Alabama closes its season at home against Tennessee and Florida.

The conference championship is Alabama's first since 1976 and its sixth in the 55-year history of the SEC.

The Crimson Tide's victory Saturday was its second this season over Auburn and its eighth in nine road games.

After Coner's basket, Auburn worked the clock down to 10 seconds, but Alabama freshman Keith Askins blocked a pass and then stole the ball.

After Coner missed a free throw, Auburn's Gerald White was wide on a desperation shot as the game ended.

The loss dropped Auburn to 14-10 overall and 7-8 in the SEC and dimmed hopes for an NCAA Tournament bid. Auburn has games remaining against Vanderbilt, Mississippi and Louisiana State.

Jim Farmer led Alabama's balanced scoring attack with 17 points, followed by Mark Gottfried with 16, Derrick McKey with 13, James Jackson with 11 and Coner with 10. Gottfried hit four 3-point field goals and Farmer had three.

Mike Jones paced the Tigers with 23 points, Jeff Moore had 13, Chris Morris 12 and Gerald White 11.

The Tigers jumped to an 11-point lead at the start of the second half but Alabama slowly closed the gap and tied the game 71-71 on two free throws by Gottfried with 5:30 remaining in the game. Auburn led 73-71 before Coner and Michael Ansley scored baskets to put Alabama ahead 75-73.

White sank two free throws to tie the score at 75 before Coner's winning basket.

Nebraska 97

NORMAN, Okla. (AP) — Dave Sieger scored a career-high 32 points — 24 coming on a Big Eight record eight 3-point shots — and teammate Tim McCalister became the top-scoring guard in the conference's history as No. 13 Oklahoma beat Nebraska, 133-97, in college basketball Saturday.

Oklahoma's 17 3-point baskets broke the Big Eight record of 13 made by Kansas State earlier this season against Nebraska. Their 27 attempts were one more than the conference record held by Kansas State.

The 133 points set a school record, and marked the first time a conference team had ever scored that many points.

The previous school record was 126 points against Southwest Texas in 1984. The previous Big Eight mark was 129 by Iowa State against Northeast Illinois in 1978.

With the victory, Oklahoma improved its record to 21-5 overall, 9-3 in the conference. Nebraska dropped to 15-10 and 5-7.

Sieger, in only his third start of the season, made six of his 3-pointers in the first half as the Sooners opened as much as a 20-point lead on their way to a 63-49 halftime advantage.

McCalister, a senior, passed former Kansas State player Mike Evans on the conference's scoring list for guards when he slam dunked to complete a fast break. McCalister finished with 18 for the game, giving him 2,124 for his career. Evans had 2,115.

Nebraska Coach Tom Nee was ejected from the game in the second half after he was assessed three technical fouls for arguing an officials' call.

Oklahoma's Ricky Grace, who made five of seven 3-pointers, finished with 23, while Harvey Grant had 19. Bernard Day scored 16 for Nebraska and Henry Buchanan added 15.

Kansas 62
St. John's 60

NEW YORK (AP) — Freshman Keith Harris made two free throws with no time remaining Saturday to give 15th-ranked Kansas a 62-60 victory over No. 20 St. John's in a non-conference college basketball game.

Harris, who finished with six points, was fouled by Matt Brust just before the buzzer sounded as he went up for a shot under the basket.

Danny Manning led the Jayhawks, 21-7, with 25 points and guard Cedric Hunter added 12.

Mark Jackson led the Redmen, 19-6, with 29 points, while Willie Glass added added 15.

Kansas' Kevin Pritchard hit a 3-point goal from the right side with 1:09 remaining to tie the score at 60. Jackson had converted two free throws with 2:15 left to give St. John's a 58-57 advantage. Then Glass hit a dunk with 1:26 to go to increase the lead to 60-57.

Kansas, which trailed by as much as 32-20 in the first half, took the lead for the first time in the second half at 53-52 on an overhand hook by the 6-foot-11 Manning with 5:39 to play. The lead then see-sawed until St. John's took its three-point advantage.

With the score 4-4, Jackson scored eight points, including two 3-point goals, as St. John's moved out to a 12-6 lead. The Redmen increased their advantage to 25-16 on a layup by Jackson following a steal.

Manning scored 16 of the first 20 points by the Jayhawks.

Texas Christian 52
Texas Tech 44

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — Larry Richard scored seven points in the last three minutes Saturday to rally 16th-ranked Texas Christian to a controversial 52-44 Southwest Conference victory over Texas Tech.

TCU, which has already clinched the SWC title, improved its overall record to 22-4 and 13-1 in conference play. It was the Horned Frogs' 24th consecutive victory in Daniel-Meyer Coliseum. Texas Tech dropped to 13-13 and 8-7.

TCU's Carven Holcombe, who led all scorers with 19 points, was involved in a bizarre play at the end of the first half that saw his field goal at the buzzer nullified.

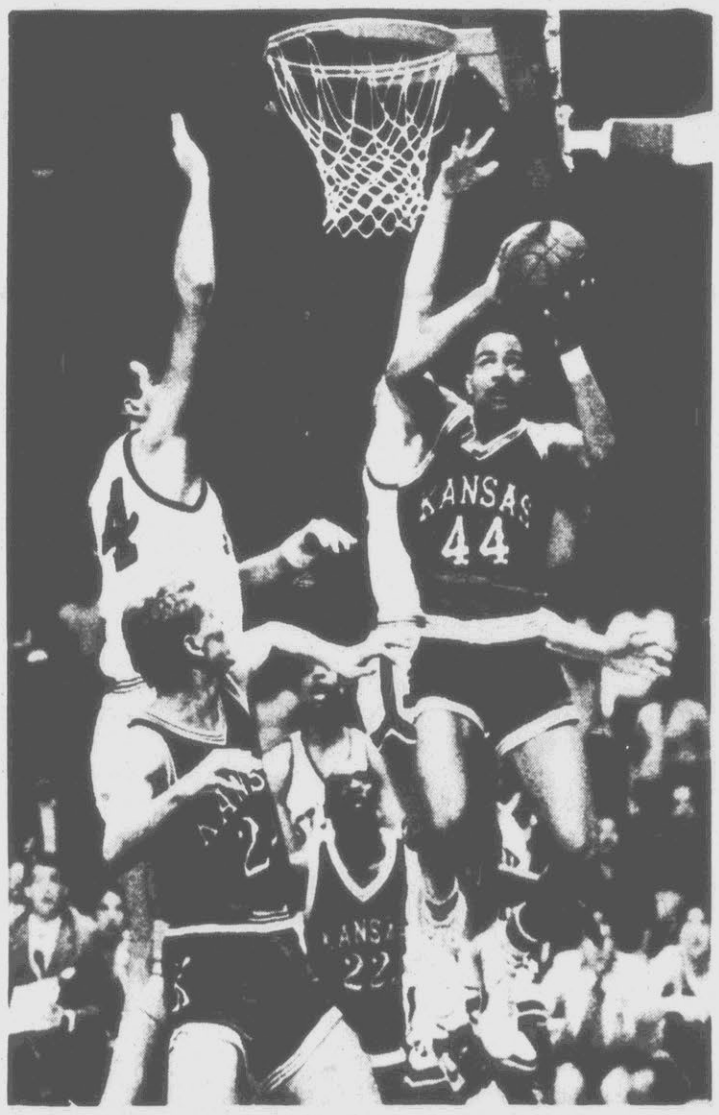

Official Jim Harvey originally ruled that Holcombe's shot was good. Holcombe also was awarded a free throw which he made.

However, the officials decided at halftime that Holcombe was fouled while in possession of the ball at the buzzer but wasn't shooting. They took the basket off the scoreboard which made the count 25-20 instead of 25-22. Holcombe got another free throw after the 15-minute halftime and made it.

TCU trailed by as much as 10 points and didn't lead until Holcombe made a basket at 9:22 of the second half.

Richard made two baskets and a free throw and Matt Minnis hit four clutch free throws down the stretch. Richard finished with 13 points.

Texas Tech was led by Greg Crowe who had 12 points and DeWayne Chism who added 11.

At The Buzzer

Keith Harris (44) of the University of Kansas leaps up to the basket during the final seconds of Saturday's game against St. Johns University. The game score was tied at the time, 60-60. Seconds later Harris was fouled by St. Johns' Marco Baldi (14) and Harris sunk the first of two foul shots to win the game. (AP Laserphoto)

Simms Gets Honored

MOREHEAD, Ky. (AP) — Phil Simms never led Morehead State to any championships, not even a winning season, but Saturday night he was given a hero's welcome by his alma mater.

It was "Phil Simms Day" for the New York Giants quarterback who led his team to the Super Bowl championship and was named Most Valuable Player. The school retired the No.12 he wore on his jersey as quarterback of the Eagles from 1975-78.

"I'm very honored and I'm very happy about it," Simms said of having his number retired. "I was very surprised.

"They asked me if I wanted to do it, and of course I wanted it done right and if everyone wanted it. I'm very honored."

Simms spoke at a news conference at a room in the Doran Student Center, the same place where it was announced that he had been made the Giants' first pick in the NFL draft nine years ago.

"I'm glad to be back," he said. "I'm happy to see this place again. I guess I'm happy to see the press again. I wish I could get back more."

Simms was honored at halftime of Morehead State's basketball game with Tennessee Tech by a representative of Gov. Martha Layne Collins reading a proclamation that officially declared Saturday as "Phil Simms Day."

"There's no one more deserving," said John Moses of Louisville, a center who played with Simms for three years at Morehead State. "We're awfully proud of him."

Morehead State had a 10-27-3 record with Simms at quarterback.

Players Union Files Grievance

NEW YORK (AP) — With pitchers and catchers having started spring training, baseball's major free agents remain players without a team. The situation has prompted two new grievances by the union.

The Players Association on Friday filed a second collusion grievance against the owners, charging them with restricting the movement of big-name free agents. Also included in the action were players who went to salary arbitration.

In a separate action Friday, the union filed a grievance over free agent Lance Parrish and the Philadelphia Phillies.

The players association also filed a grievance last year covering 1985 free agents. That action still is in hearings. The latest collusion grievance covers 1986 free agents as well as players who filed for arbitration.

Commissioner Peter Ueberroth is scheduled to testify before an arbitrator at the hearings into the first grievance.

There has not been a major free-agent signing since Bruce Sutter signed with the Atlanta Braves in December 1984. Last year's only major free agent, Kirk Gibson, re-signed with the Detroit Tigers. None of this year's big-name free agents — Tim Raines, Parrish, Bob Horner and Rich Gedman — has been able to find a new job.

Parrish was ready to accept a contract with the Phillies that would have paid him $1 million for 1987. However, the Phillies wanted him to sign a release saying he would not file a lawsuit or institute any other kind of legal procedure against the 26 major league teams, the two leagues, Commissioner Peter Ueberroth and the Player Relations Committee.

Don Fehr, executive director of the union, said the Phillies' refusal to sign Parrish without the release violated the collective bargaining agreement in several ways.

"It's not a special convenant that is of benefit to the player," Fehr said. "The agreement is conditioned on the player giving up his collective bargaining rights.

"It says he can't file a grievance. And when the Phillies insist that he sign a contract that says he can't sue other clubs, it violates the provision that says clubs have to act strictly on their own with free agents."

Parrish's agent, Tom Reich, said the player would have signed a release for the Phillies themselves, but not for any other club.

Barry Rona, the owners' chief labor representative, said he understood the Phillies' reason for proposing the release.

"Tom Reich has gone around bragging about the strategy that he would employ for Parrish and Raines," Rona said. "He would sign them for the best offer and sue the pants off baseball. The figure I heard was $200 million."

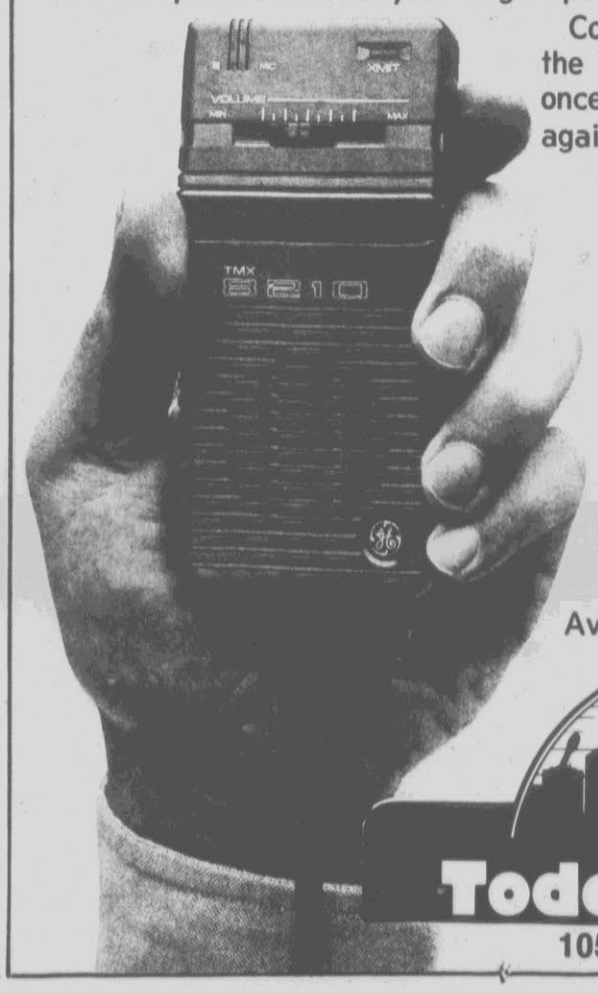

Fehr said arbitration was included in the latest grievance because the union contends a conspiracy by owners to restrict the movement of free agents has reduced their salaries and consequently has changed the basis for comparison of salaries in arbitration.

Ripken Ready To Assume Reins

MIAMI (AP) — Cal Ripken Sr. is from the old school.

He does what he is told without complaint, never asks questions, and bides his time while remaining a loyal employee.

More than 20 years ago, Ripken knew he would like to manage in the major leagues. But he did not get upset when he was bypassed for the job, and he didn't turn cartwheels when he was finally named manager by the Baltimore Orioles.

Most figured it was a dream come true when the Orioles picked him last October after Earl Weaver retired for the second time. But stoic Cal didn't look at it in the same light.

"I've never been a dreamer," Ripken said Saturday as he began his second day in charge at the Baltimore spring training camp. "I had the desire to be a major league manager, but I never had a timetable."

"I go back to my bridge and water story," Ripken said, explaining his ability to concentrate on the matter at hand, looking neither ahead nor behind. "I don't cross the bridge until I come to it, and water over the dam is gone forever."

Ripken, 51, is now in his 31st season in professional baseball, all with the Orioles' organization. He was a player and a manager in the minor leagues, and then scouted for a year before coaching at the major league level for 11 seasons.

When Weaver retired for the first time after the 1982 season, many thought Ripken would be named manager. Instead, the job went to Joe Altobelli, another longtime Baltimore employee who had left to manage the San Francisco Giants.

"Everybody thought I was upset," Ripken said. "I was disappointed, but I was tickled that he kept me as a coach."

Altobelli was fired in the middle of the 1985 season, and Weaver was lured out of retirement as Ripken again watched from the sidelines.

Finally, the break came when Weaver stepped aside after the Orioles of 1986 finished last for the first time in the club's 33-year history. Again staying within the organization, the Orioles turned to Ripken.

Ripken has not managed since 1974. But he spent more than 13 seasons as a manager in the minors, longer than either Weaver or Altobelli. In 12 seasons as a nonplaying manager, he finished below .500 only once.

"I'm anxious for the challenge of the job, but I don't feel any pressure," Ripken said. "As a player in the minors, or as the manager here, I give it my best everyday."

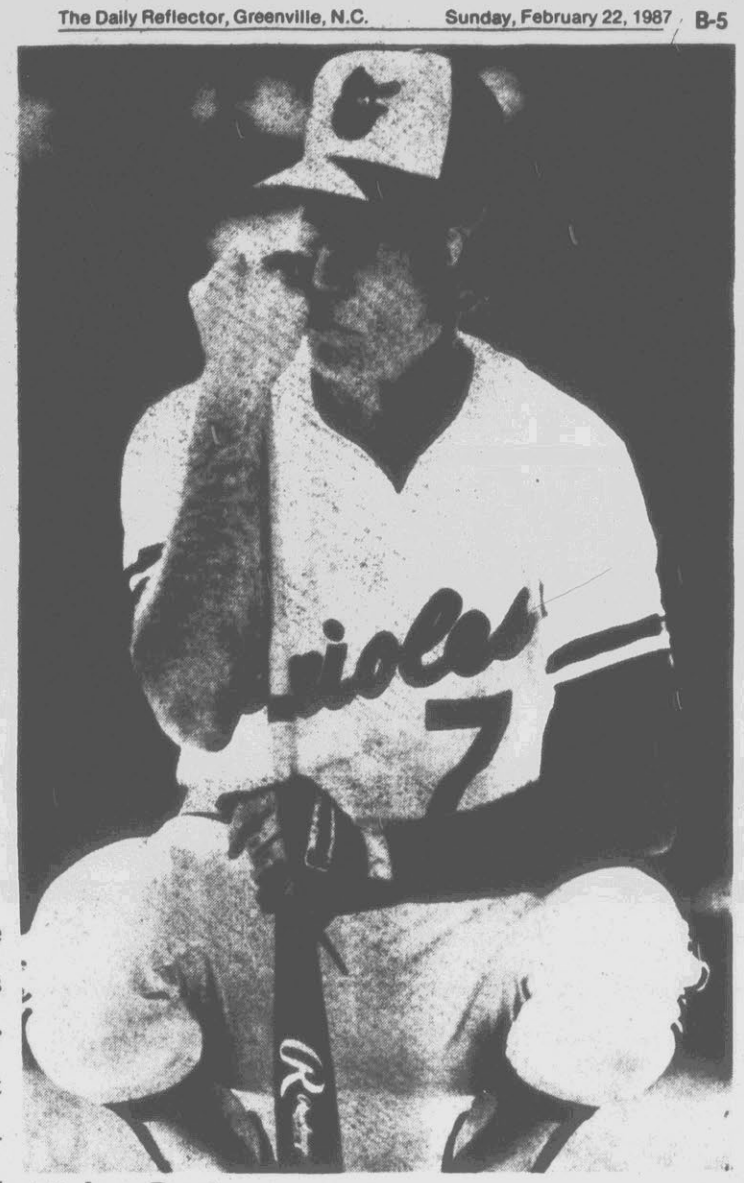

"A manager is only as good as his ballclub," Ripken said. "What we want is 24 players who want to win and can contribute something to winning...not just desire, but talent. If we can assemble 24 like that, they'll make me a good manager."

General Manager Hank Peters feels Ripken is in the right place at the right time, if the Orioles are to reverse a downward spiral that began after they won the 1983 World Series.

"Our club last year got away from fundamentals and execution," Peters said. "Cal has always been known as a taskmaster in those areas, so I expect they'll be given quite a bit of attention this spring."

"Earl was an experienced manager," Peters said, "but when he came out of retirement, he may have been unsure he was doing the right thing.

"This is Cal's first opportunity as a manager. He's full of enthusiasm for the task at hand, and knows he's doing what he wants to do."

Howser Returns As Royals Chief

FORT MYERS, Fla. (AP) — About 150 spectators stood and applauded as Dick Howser walked onto the field Saturday to resume his job as manager of the Kansas City Royals.

It was opening day of spring training for the Royals' pitchers and catchers, and Howser was in uniform for the first time since last July when he was found to have malignant brain tumor.

When the fans in Pigott Stadium spotted the frail 50-year-old manager walking acoss the infield, they rose and applauded. He waved in appreciation.

Howser, who has undergone surgery twice to remove parts of the cancerous growth, said it felt good to be back. And while some people doubted he would ever return to lead the American League West team, he was not one of them.

Howser again insisted he is capable of doing the job in 1987.

"I've planned on this since the first day after surgery," Howser said while his Royals, including some non-batterymen, went through a 2½-hour workout, 'This is what I've been looking forward to, getting started."

The manager joked with reporters and photographers about losing some 15 pounds and acknowledged he was surprised, and moved, by the greeting he received from fans who lined a fence to watch practice.

"It did feel a little different," he said. "And I'll tell you what it was. It was the cheers."

Howser stood for almost two hours of the workout, including 20 minutes for an informal news conference on the field.

He did a couple of sit-down interviews with television crews and then spent the final 25 minutes of practice watching from a seat in a shaded area.

"I wish I could tell you people how good I feel," he said at one point. "Sometimes I get a little tired in the afternoon and have to take a nap.

"But I feel good," he added. "People keep asking me, and all they're going to get is a positive answer."

Howser said he has not grown weary of questions about his illness. "It'll never go away, it's part of my life now," he said.

Some of his answers include references to his strengthened religious faith. "I always knew it was there, over my left shoulder. It didn't take me long to find it," he said.

"I don't want to beat anybody with a Bible, but I do want people to know what's happened to Dick Howser," he added. "This is a story that needs to be told."

While the Royals are happy to have Howser back, the club does have a contigency plan if he cannot do the job.

Former Minnesota Twins manager Billy Gardner is the team's new third-base coach and and will take over if the need arises.

That was the furthest thing from Howser's mind right now. He says he is confident Kansas City, World Series champions in 1985, will bounce back from last year's 76-86 finish.

And he is just as confident that he is the man who will preside over the resurgence.

"I don't want to talk about I can't do the job. They've asked me that since July," he said. "I can do the job. If I can't, then I'm going to bail out."

Schofield Wins Case

NEW YORK (AP) — Utility infielder Dickie Schofield of the California Angels won the final of 26 salary arbitrations heard this year, the players' association said Saturday.

Schofield was the 10th player to win his case this year and received the smallest award of any of the winners, $475,000. The Angels had offered him $305,000. Under the procedure, the arbitrator selects either the amount asked by the player or the figure offered by the team, with no middleground.

This year's winners were led by New York Yankee first baseman Don Mattingly who received $1.975 million, the highest in the 13-year history of salary arbitrations.

Slow-Starting Vikings Top West Carteret, 67-42

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

HOLLYWOOD — D.H. Conley's Vikings got off to a slow start, got into some foul trouble, but got some more than adequate help off the bench and polished off West Carteret, 67-42, in the final regular season basketball game of the year Friday night.

West Carteret's girls, meanwhile, rallied from ten points down after three quarters to gain a 56-48 win over the Valkyries.

Conley, which had already wrapped up the regular season championship, had little trouble with the Patriots, as the Vikings extended their record to 11-1 in the league, 15-7 overall.

The Conley girls end the year at 1-10 in the league 6-17 overall, in seventh place. The win by West Carteret, 8-4, assured the Lady Pats of a share of the league championship.

Conley jumped off to a 4-0 lead in the opening period of the boys' game, but West Carteret came running back to take the lead at 7-6 on a fast break basket by David Nelson with 2:29 left.

Bronswell Patrick returned the lead to Conley, but Rob Williams hit a turnaround jumper to give it back to the Patriots.

Jonathan Bonner hit with 46 seconds left to put Conley back on top and Ricky Farrow hit a jumper with two seconds to go, giving the Vikings a 12-9 lead.

They never trailed again.

Conley scored the first 10 points on the second quarter, a total of 14 unanswered points before Bruce Pollock finally broke the ice again for the Pats. But by then, it was 22-11, and the race was on.

Conley steadily pulled away, leading by as much as 17, 30-13, before taking a 32-15 lead into the locker rooms.

The Vikings got baskets from Farrow and Paul Merritt to quickly open the gap to 21, 36-15 before West Carteret suddenly found its feet, running off seven straight points.

But the lapse by Conley, which saw its lead shrink to 38-24, was only momentary, and by the end of the quarter, they were back out in front, 49-30, thanks to Patrick, who scored six of the final nine points in the frame.

Midway through the final period, up 53-36, Conley reeled off 12 straight points to run the margin out to 65-36, a 29-point bulge with 2:54 to play.

Patrick led the scoring for the Vikes with 17 points while Farrow added 14. Pollock had 17 to pace the Patriots.

"I was real pleased with our bench tonight," Coach Walter Claybrook said. "We got into foul trouble early and had to have something from the reserves and they gave it to us, especially Bronswell." Phil Medlin, the Viking center, drew two quick fouls at the start of the game, sat out the rest of the half, then got his third only minutes into the second half, seeing only limited action until he returned late in the third quarter.

"It was good experience for our bench and should give them some experience and confidence going into the tournament," Claybrook said. "It was a weird game from a coaching standpoint. You could never really get a flow going in the game because it was called so tightly."

Conley shot well, hitting 48.2 percent. West, however, made only a chilly 30.4 percent. Conley dominated the boards, 42-26, and had 12 fewer turnovers, 29-17.

After two early ties, Conley's girls moved into the lead, taking a 10-4 edge on baskets by Charlene Davenport, Glenda Hardy and Trellaney Boyd. West rallied, however, and trimmed the lead back to 14-12 at the end of the first period.

After a free throw by Cindy Murdoch, Wendi Nelson tossed in a basket from underneath to give West Carteret its first lead of the night, 15-14, and Nelson added two more to that at the line for a 17-14 lead.

Conley, behind two free throws each by Rhonda Jackson and Yvette Henderson, regained the lead, 18-17, only to lose it again on a basket by Murdoch, 19-18.

West held the lead until Boyd hit off a rebound to tie it at 21-21, and Beth McGhee canned a shot for a 23-21 lead.

Murdoch hit with seven seconds left in the half to knot it 23-23 at intermission.

Conley regained the lead on a pair of free throws by McGhee 37 seconds into the second half, and steadily pulled away, building up a 10-point lead at 36-26 with 2:25 to go. They held to that the rest of the half and led, 42-32, at the horn.

But the Lady Patriots, battling for their lives, awoke in the final period and turned the game around. Led by Murdoch, who scored eight points in the period, Jennifer Bedsworth and Nelson with six each, the Pats scored the first six points of the quarter, then added five more to close within 44-43.

Jackson provided Conley with a three-point edge again, but baskets by Mary Green and Bedsworth put West Carteret up for good, 47-46 with 3:42 remaining.

Laura Brown added a basket for a three-point edge, and free throws by Murdoch and Nelson opened up a 53-46 lead with 1:05 left, giving the Pats all the room they needed.

"We got beat off the boards in the final period and got away from what we were doing offensively in the third quarter," Conley coach Joy Riddick said. "We ran the patterns, but we took bad shots."

Riddick said she didn't want the team to spread the ball out with only one good ballhandler on the floor. "We haven't worked that much on the hesitation game.

"I'm not really that disappointed. If we had kept running our patterns well, we could have beaten the first place team in the league. We're young and we need that experience to win."

Murdoch led West Carteret with 23 points while Nelson added 13. Boyd paced Conley with 16 while Jackson added 11.

The league now moves to its tournament, to be played starting Monday at Havelock. Conley's girls, seeded seventh, will face the #2 seed, to be decided in a draw Saturday. That game will be played Tuesday at 5 p.m.

Conley's boys, with a first round bye, will play next on Wednesday at 8 p.m.

Friday Nights Are OK For Princeton's Tigers

By The Associated Press

With the Princeton Tigers running low, Mike Harnum certainly put something in their tank.

"I don't know when I'm going to get in, so I'm just happy to play in any situation," said the reserve guard, who came off the bench Friday night to help Princeton upset Cornell's Ivy League leaders 69-63 in college basketball.

Harnum was inserted into the game by Coach Pete Carril when Dave Orlandini picked up his fourth foul and proceeded to score 16 points — including nine in a row.

"When you get into these games," Princeton Coach Pete Carril said, "somebody has to stick his head out somewhere and do something good, like make some foul shots and grab some rebounds."

In other Ivy League action Friday night, it was Penn 94, Columbia 73; Yale 88, Harvard 76, and Dartmouth 83, Brown 73. In limited action elsewhere, Loyola Marymount defeated the University of San Francisco 93-78 and Pepperdine 64, Santa Clara 50. There were no ranked teams in action.

Princeton 69, Cornell 63

Coming off the bench, Harnum hit a three-point basket with 8:06 to play to put the Tigers ahead 45-44.

After a Cornell basket put the Big Red ahead by a point, Harnum hit two free throws, a layup and a baseline jumper to give Princeton a 51-46 edge with 5:29 to play and the Tigers never lost the lead.

Cornell, which led 29-26 at the half, got 21 points from John Bajusz. The Big Red, 14-9 overall and 8-3 in the league, retaining a half-game lead over Penn, whom they face tonight in Philadelphia.

Alan Williams added 12 points and 11 rebounds and Orlandini had 11 for the Tigers, 12-9 and 5-5.

"They did some big things out there that they haven't been doing," Carril said of his team. "(Alan) Williams blocked some shots. John (Thompson) made some great passes."

Incidentally, the victory improved Princeton's record on Friday nights to 5-0. On Saturdays, they are 0-4.

"Now we have to brave out the Saturday bugaboo," Carril said.

Penn 94, Columbia 73

Bruce Lefkowitz scored 27 points and Perry Bromwell had 25 to lead Penn over Columbia. The pair combined to make 19 of their 26 field goal attempts and help the Quakers make 62.5 per cent of their field goals.

Columbia's Sean Couch led the Lions with 20 points. In the second half, the Lions got no closer than five, 53-48, with 16:57 to play.

Yale 88, Harvard 76

Chris Dudley scored 22 points and grabbed 22 rebounds to lead Yale over Harvard. Yale led 40-35 at the half and stretched the lead to 72-58 with four minutes left in the game, thanks to eight straight points by Paul Maley.

Dartmouth 83, Brown 73

Bryan Randall scored 19 points and Jim Barton added 15 more to lead Dartmouth over Brown. The Big Green scored off the opening tip and never looked back, leading by as much as 17 before taking a 13-point advantage into the locker room at the half.

Todd Murray led the Bruins with 15 points.

Loyola Marymount 97, San Fran. 78

Mike Yoest scored 27 points and grabbed 10 rebounds to lead Loyola Marymount over San Francisco in a West Coast Athletic Conference game.

Yoest made 10 of 11 shots from the field and seven of eight foul shots as the Lions snapped a seven-game losing streak. Rodney Tention scored 16 points to lead San Francisco.

Pepperdine 64, Santa Clara 50

Eric White scored 24 points and grabbed 10 rebounds Friday night to lead Pepperdine over Santa Clara in a West Coast Athletic Association basketball game.

Pepperdine outscored Santa Clara 21-8 over the last 5½ minutes of the first half to open a 39-24 halftime advantage. Santa Clara could get no closer than eight points in the second half.

Moore's Late Push Leads Jags Past Greene Central

SNOW HILL — Gary Moore scored four of his 10 points in the final 24 seconds as Farmville slipped past Greene Central, 55-54, in Eastern Plains basketball action Friday night.

With the win, Farmville finished tied with Ayden-Grifton for the regular season championship at 10-2. The Jaguars were awarded the conference's top seed in the tournament and the sectionals by virtue of a one-point scoring differential in their two games with the Chargers this season.

Farmville led 48-41 before Greene Central's Anthony Jones nailed a jumper with 3:41 left to cut the lead to 48-43. The Rams' Jake Barrow then hit with 3:06 remaining to cut it to 48-45.

Alexander Daniels hit on a follow shot for Farmville to make it 50-45 before Woodrow Wallace countered for Greene Central with a basket that made it 50-47.

Kennedy Williams hit one of two free throws to make it 51-47 before Melvin Croom brought Greene Central back within 51-49 with 46 seconds left.

Barrow fouled Moore with 39 seconds left and Moore missed the front end of a one and one. Greene Central rebounded and with 28 seconds left, Croom hit one of two free throws to make it 51-50.

Moore was fouled with 24 seconds left and hit both shots to make 53-50. Moore then came up with a steal and went all the way for a layup to make it 55-50 with 17 seconds left.

With two seconds to go, Wallace scored to make it 55-52. Tyrone Hardy then stole the inbounds pass and Jones scored to narrow the gap to 55-54 at the buzzer.

Jones led the Rams, 5-7 and 9-13, with 16 points while Croom chipped in 13. Kennedy Williams led Farmville with 13 points.

Liesa Lang scored 30 points as the Farmville girls rolled over Greene Central, 63-43, to finish the EPC season undefeated at 12-0 in the EPC and 18-5 overall.

Farmville took a 29-20 lead at the half before Greene Central rallied within 42-39 at the end of the third quarter.

The Lady Jaguars then outscored the Lady Rams 21-12 over the final period to seal the win.

□ □ □

The Eastern Plains 2-A Conference will hold their tournament in its entirety at Ayden-Grifton High School. The other semifinal games will be played on Thursday, with the finals on Friday.

□ □ □

The Coastal 3-A Conference will play its tournament at Havelock High School, starting Monday with three games. D.H. Conley's Vikings won the regular season boys' championship and will have a bye. Havelock won the toss and will be seeded first getting a bye while West Carteret will be second seeded.

Monday night, #4 East Carteret will face the #5 North Lenoir girls at 5 p.m. in the opening game of the tournament. At 6:30 p.m. #3 Washington will take on #6 West Craven in a girls' game. Wrapping up the evening, #4 seeded East Carteret will face #5 Washington in a boys' game at 8 p.m.

Says Kirk Made Payments To Lee

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — Former Memphis State basketball coach Dana Kirk made cash expenditures of $14,600 to Keith Lee while the 6-foot-10 forward starred for the Tigers, a federal prosecutor says.

Kirk, who was fired by the university in September, is charged by a federal grand jury with tax evasion, fraud and obstruction of justice.

While discussing pretrial motions Friday before U.S. District Judge Odell Horton, U.S. Attorney Hickman Ewing Jr. responded to questions from defense attorneys on the government's computation of Kirk's income and spending.

"These were all cash," Ewing said, referring to a government document that raised a defense query. "They all went to Keith Lee both years, we will contend."

Ewing later told The Commercial Appeal, the major newspaper in Memphis, that he was talking about a $4,800 cash expenditure by Kirk in 1982 and one for $9,800 in 1983.

Lee, who now plays for the Cleveland Cavaliers of the National Basketball Association, is Memphis State's all-time scoring and rebounding leader.

Bob Price, a spokesman for the Cavaliers, said he contacted Lee at his residence in Cleveland and he declined comment on Ewing's allegations. Lee's telephone is unlisted.

Lee played high school ball in West Memphis, Ark., just across the Mississippi River from Memphis.

He came to Memphis State in 1981 as Kirk began a building program that turned the Tigers into a Top 20 contender.

Kirk has avoided reporters since his indictment and his telephone is unlisted.

During the grand jury investigation leading to Kirk's indictment, reports in The Commercial Appeal and Sports Illustrated magazine included allegations that he offered $10,000 to Lee's family while recruiting him.

Kirk has denied those allegations and has filed a libel suit against the two publications.

Lee has declined comment on the grand jury investigation or the charges against Kirk.

Kirk, 51, is accused in the federal charges of understating his income, seeking personal payoffs for sending the Tigers to basketball tournaments and trying to intimidate grand jury witnesses.

He has pleaded innocent and is scheduled for trial in May.

Thomas Carpenter, Memphis State's president, said the university does not know of any money exchanges between Kirk and Lee.

"I know there were some allegations of that nature and our investigation did not support them," Carpenter said.

Dean Named New LSU AD

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — Joe Dean accepted the job as athletic director at Louisiana State University with a promise to strike an accommodation between sports and academics.

In a unanimous 17-0 vote, the Louisiana State University Board of Supervisors on Friday chose Dean, 56, from among four nominees submitted by a search committee to succeed Bob Brodhead, who resigned in December after being placed on two months' suspension.

The other finalists were interim LSU Athletic Director Larry Jones, former New Orleans Saints President Eddie Jones and David Wagner, athletic director at Georgia Southern.

The LSU board met four hours behind closed doors, interviewed all four finalists, then emerged to take a unanimous vote for Dean, who said he expected to sign a five-year contract worth about $85,000 a year.

A former LSU basketball standout in the early 1950s, Dean became independently wealthy as a sales executive and promoter for the Converse Rubber Co., but recently sold his stock in that athletic shoe company.

As athletic director, Dean also will relinquish his job in March as color analyst for Jefferson Pilot Inc., which televises Southeastern Conference basketball games.

"I walked on this campus in 1948 knowing nothing. I was very homesick and wanted to go home. I was just being a little old basketball player from Indiana," Dean told supervisors after their vote.

"But I fell in love with this place. ... This is a dream come true in that I can come back and bounce the ball for your athletic programs.

"I promise you there will be integrity, stability and honesty in the athletic department. I hope we win a lot of national championships, and I hope all of our athletes graduate magna cum laude."

In submitting its list of nominees, the LSU Athletic Council — comprised of faculty, staff, alumni and students — approved Wagner and Eddie Jones by a 12-0 vote, Larry Jones by 11-1 and Dean by 7-5.

Larry Jones was generally portrayed as the candidate of Chancellor James Wharton and Dean as the candidate of the board.

Wharton said he hoped Dean's selection would put the issue to rest.

"I have never opposed Joe Dean. I begged him four years ago to take the job. I am happy that the board is together on this," Wharton said.

"I want to make this observation. This campus is a $260 milion-a-year operation. Of that, $11 million is for athletics. I try to give all their due."

Chargers Slip By Panthers

By TOM MORRIS
Reflector Sports Writer

BETHEL — Ayden-Grifton coach Bob Murphrey said his team is at its best in close games and the Chargers proved him right by slipping past North Pitt, 50-48, in Eastern Plains Conference basketball action Friday night.

Eric Blount connected on a three-point play with eight seconds remaining to provide the margin of victory for the Chargers.

The win gave the Chargers, 17-5 and 10-2, a tie for the regulars season EPC title with Farmville Central. The Jaguars, however, take the conference's top seed by virtue of scoring differential in the two teams' regular season meetings.

"We did what we had to," Murphrey said. "It wasn't pretty but it got the job done."

In the girl's game, North Pitt upset the Lady Chargers, 50-42, behind 18 points by Gwen Pilgreen.

The Charger boys took control of a tight game when Blount drove down the right side and flicked in a jumper with eight seconds remaining and then nailed a foul shot to complete a three-point play that gave the Chargers a 50-48 lead.

Ashley Sheppard, who was high scorer for both teams with 20 points, had a last second shot rim out at the buzzer to give the Chargers the win.

"Basically, I'm real pleased," said North Pitt coach Cobby Deans. "I was hoping we could win this and assume third seeding. Except for that last shot, I thought we hurt ourselves as much as they did."

The game was close all the way, particularly in the final quarter.

Sheppard hit a basket on a follow shot with 4:31 remaining to give the Panthers the lead, 44-41, but the Chargers came right back with Hilton Ellison hitting to free throws to narrow the gap to 44-43.

Ronnell Peterson then gave the Chargers the lead, 45-44, with a jumper with 3:05 remaining.

Sheppard countered with a basket for North Pitt to make it 46-45 with 2:48 to go before Aaron Harper knocked in a follow shot with just over two minutes remaining to give the lead back to the Chargers, 47-46.

Ayden-Grifton then took possession and Ellison was fouled. He missed the front end of the one and one but the rebound went out of bounds off of the Panthers.

Harper then collided with Sheppard and was called for traveling, turning the ball back over to North Pitt. Sheppard hit a jumper in the paint with 21 seconds remaining to give the Panthers a 48-47 lead.

The Chargers then put the ball in Blount's hands, cleared out the right side and the junior guard responded with the game-winning shot.

"We set the play to get him the ball," Murphrey said. "Then we more or less wanted to clear out the side to get him a shot."

Deans said the Panthers knew Blount would get the ball. "I told them he would be penetrating," he said. "I felt good. We had a man there. We just got beat on a good play."

North Pitt falls to 10-12 overall and 6-6 in the conference.

Sheppard scored 10 of the Panthers' 11 fourth-quarter points and barely missed on his last second shot.

"I knew it wasn't going to be an easy game," Murphrey said. "Sheppard is a force. We had trouble matching up with him."

The Panthers were ready for the Chargers, Deans said. At stake was third place in the EPC and better seeding for both the conference tournament and the sectional tournament.

"I felt North Pitt was well prepared for us," Murphrey said. "I'm happy with the way we played. I'm more satisfied with our defense than (I have been) in the past two weeks."

The game was nip and tuck all the way. The Panthers led after the first quarter, 12-10, and after the third quarter, 37-35.

"I was real concerned because we couldn't seem to close the gap," Murphrey said. "In close ball games we tend to be at our best. As long as we're close, we're still in the ball game.

"I think Shawn Farmer (10 points) hit some big shots when he had to. Of course, Blount's last basket, that was a big one. If we could get some inside scoring, we'd be a much more effective scoring team."

□ □ □

In the girl's game, North Pitt took the lead in the final quarter and held off the Lady Chargers, 50-42.

The two teams were tied 30-30 after three quarters of play but Gwen Pilgreen connected on four straight free throws with just over six minutes left to give the Pant-Hers the lead for good, 38-34.

Ayden-Grifton pulled within 38-36 before Keisha Pilgreen hit a free throw and Gwen Pilgreen added a jumper to move the lead to 41-36.

Karen Edmonds hit two straight baskets for Ayden-Grifton to make it 41-40 but Gwen Pilgreen scored on a follow shot and Climmie Harris added a free throw to make 44-40 and with 1:49 left.

Edmonds missed two free throws with 1:38 left and Amy Heath and Climmie Harris countered for North Pitt with a basket and two free throws, respectively, to make it 48-40 and put the game out of reach with 44 seconds left.

Keisha Pilgreen added 13 points for the Pant-Hers and Heath chipped in 10.

Michelle Whitfield led Ayden-Grifton, 17-5 and 10-2, with 15 points.

The Pant-Hers improved to 14-9 overall and 7-5 overall.

"I thought the free throws in the fourth quarter were real important," said Pant-Her coach Randy Avery. "Going from 1-4 to 7-5, these kids have shown a lot of character. I was real concerned about their press. They have the best press I've see in quite some time. (But) I felt like in a half-court game, we could beat them. I was a little concerned because it took us so long to get cranked up."

Indeed, the game was close throughout the first three quarters as the teams traded the lead back and forth. The Pant-Hers led 8-6 after the first quarter before Ayden-Grifton came back to take a 18-16 edge by halftime. Then after the third quarter, the teams were tied, 30-30.

"The girls did a super job defensively doing what we asked them to do," Avery said. "They played with a lot of character down the stretch. They've struggled but tried hard and all the work they've put in is starting to pay off."

Northeastern Tops Rampants, 65-60

ELIZABETH CITY — Northeastern High School, fighting for what it hoped would be fourth place in the Big East Conference, pulled off a 65-60 upset over regular season champ Greenville Rose Friday night, then found it had already lost a toss for that spot.

Rose's girls, also the Big East regular season champions, had little trouble in their game in taking a 54-28 victory.

The games, the final of the regular season, helped to set up the final pairings for the league's tournament, which starts Monday.

In that, Rose will play host to Rocky Mount in an 8:30 p.m. game Monday, while the girls entertain Northeastern at 7 p.m. to kick off the evening. Rose's boys will be on their own home court as long as they continue to win in the tournament. Rose's girls, however, will be tied to the top seeded remaining boys' team for their playing site.

Rose's boys, apparently without a great deal of intensity following their having wrapped up the league title on Thurday night, got off to a slow start against the Eagles.

Rose was held to only nine points while Northeastern stuffed in 13 to take the lead. The Eagles continued to hold sway in the second quarter, outscoring Rose, 22-15, to run their lead out to 35-24.

In the third period, however, the Rampants began to come to life, pouring in 22 points, led by Errol Wooten with 11. The Eagles managed only 11 points, and that knotted the game at 46-46.

But the Eagles had just enough umph left to pull it out, outscoring the Rampants by 19-14 in the final quarter to take the win.

"We just didn't play well in the first half," Coach Jim Brewington said. "I think we had lost some of our edge after winning the title. We came back well and had the chance to win it even late in the game." Brewington said that a pair of violations on inbounds plays hurt Rose, however, taking the ball out of the Rampants' hands. "They've got two different color lines painted on their court, and we just got a little confused a couple of times and didn't step fully off the court in making inbounds play. We thought we were behind the right line, but obviously we weren't.

Wooten led Rose with 22 points while Terry Warren added 13. Steve Price paced Northeastern with 25 while Kelly McDowell had 14 and Kelsey Brown had 10.

In the girls' game, Rose ran out to a 16-5 lead in the first period and never looked back. They matched Northeastern, 10-10, in the second quarter and held a 26-15 halftime lead.

The Rampettes outhit the Lady Eagles, 13-8, in the third quarter, raising their lead to 39-23. They then finished off the Eagles, 15-5, in the last quarter to wrap up the win and complete a perfect season in the league, 14-0.

Kim Bridges, who hit 12 of 15 shots at the foul line, and Lisa Leisten led Rose with 14 points each. Kim Dupree added 12. Juantisha Brown paced Northeastern with 12.

"We got off to a slow start in the first quarter," Coach Bill Kuykendall said, "but we got our running game going later in the period and played fairly well after that. It was difficult for us to keep up our intensity after having wrapped up the conference championship on Thursday night.

"I thought Tina Smith came off the bench and rebounded well for us, and Andrea Rodgers probably had her best game in rebounding, too," Kuykendall added. "I just hope we're getting ready to go (for the tournament)."

Greenville Christian Boys, Girls Advance To Finals

Greenville Christian Academy's boys' and girls' basketball team both made it to the finals of the Eastern Carolina Christian Conference tournament Friday night, but the boys had to fight through an overtime to do it.

Trinity's boys slipped past Wilson Christian, 59-51, in an extra period, while the girls downed Falls Road, 60-37.

The finals of the tournament were scheduled for Saturday. Falls Road faced Friendship in the girls' consolation game, while Wilson and Bethel battled in the boys' consolation. GCA's girls faced Wilson for the title, while the boys went against Friendship in the championship game.

In the boys' game, Wilson led 15-14 after one period, but Greenville came back with a 16-9 edge in the second frame. That left the Knights in the lead, 30-24, at intermission.

In the third quarter, however, Wilson rallied, 16-9, and inched back out front, 40-39. It remained close the rest of the way, with Wilson scoring with five seconds showing for a 49-47 lead.

Paul Hollingsworth dribbled down court for the Knights and hit a 22-footer at the horn to knot it at 49-49 and force the overtime.

GCA then took the lead and got the ball back, spreading it out and forcing Wilson to foul.

"We started out flat," Coach Dale Thatcher said, "but our defense brought us back and gave us a chance to win it."

Robin House poured in 32 points to lead the win for GCA while Paul Hollingsworth added 16. Joel Attoe led Wilson with 11 while Woody Rowe and Timothy Deans each had 10.

GCA's girls had little trouble in their win, powering out to a 22-6 lead in the first period. They extended that to 33-17 in the second period and took a 51-29 lead into the last quarter. GCA outscored Falls Road, 9-8, in that quarter.

Sandy Johnston led GCA with 18 points while Deborah Bailey had 14 and Candy Evans had 13 for Falls Road.

Greenville's boys are now 15-4 while the girls are 13-1.

Last Year's Champs Continue To Crumble As Season Wears On

By DICK JOYCE
AP Basketball Writer

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Amos Black arrives at Freedom Hall early for the Louisville-Florida State game. He has a good seat behind the basket and admires the cheerleaders doing their pregame routines.

"This'll be better than the game," the crusty old-timer said. "This is the worst team Denny Crum's ever had."

Louisville, however, wins the Wednesday night game in a rout, 87-71, giving Black an early start home to Harrodsburg.

Like Black, fans in this basketball-happy state expect big things from Louisville's team — lose some tough non-conference games early in the season and then close with a rush.

Who can blame them? It's the Coach Crum method. The Cardinals have been in the NCAA Final Four six times, including four of the last seven years, and were champions in 1980 and 1986.

Last season, the Cards won 21 of their last 22 games for a 32-7 record.

But winning consecutive national titles is unheard of these days; the last team to do it was UCLA in 1973.

And the ways things have been going for Louisville, even Crum admits that winning another title "would take a major miracle." With the Cards' 16-11 record, he'd settle for a berth in the NCAA playoffs.

"I told everyone before the season that we were an overrated team," Crum said. In the preseason polls, Louisville was second behind North Carolina but hasn't been rated since the early weeks.

"We don't have any players as good as Milt Wagner, Jeff Hall and Billy Thompson. If you lose three-fifths of your team to graduation, and replace them with freshmen who aren't as good, how can you be as good?"

The downfall began at the start, when Louisville lost all three games in the Great Alaska Shootout.

"Don't worry," was the cry, "Crum will have them ready come March."

But Louisville's chances of an NCAA berth aren't even certain at this stage.

It's obvious what ails Louisville is the backcourt, where Crum has tried six combinations involving 10 different players in attempting to replace Wagner and Hall. One of the them, sophomore Kevin Walls, quit the team after being relegated to the bench.

Crum has repeatedly chastised his players for not hustling and at one point said in exasperation, "I don't know what to do next."

In last Monday's win over Southern Mississippi, junior Herb Crook dribbled out the clock in regulation play with the score tied, thinking Louisville was leading. The Cards managed to win in overtime, 85-84.

Pervis Ellison, the 6-foot-9 freshman hero of Louisville's NCAA triumph over Duke last season, was a preseason All-American but he didn't get a single vote from the same people selecting the nation's top five players at midseason.

"He doesn't have a strong supporting cast around him," Crum said, "and he has to learn to work harder without the ball."

Ellison, whose intensity has been questioned by the media, isn't talking to the press.

Ellison (15.3), forwards Crook (15.7) and Tony Kimbro (11.5) and backup forward Mark McSwain (8.4) provide almost all of Louisville's offense. The current guards, freshman Keith Williams and senior Chris West earned their starting jobs because of defense. They average 3.6 points between them.

Teams double and triple team Ellison and Crook, Crums said, because his squad lacks outside shooters.

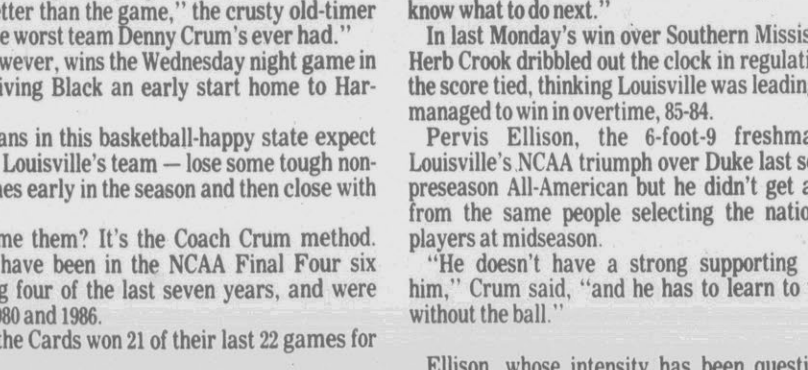

There have been some embarrassing lopsided losses for Louisville — 85-51 to rival Kentucky, 99-72 to Syracuse and 64-48 to Memphis State at home.

The Valentine's Day loss to Syracuse ended Louisville's longest winning streak this season — four games.

"It's been a frustrating season for everyone," said Kimbro, a 6-7 sophomore who played at guard this season. "But we're capable of winning again. It'll take a lot of hard work and a lot of luck."

Crook, who scored a career-high 29 points against Florida State, said, "It's been kind of frustrating. Early this season we didn't have the right attitudes."

Something to Do After Hunting Ends and Before Fishing Begins

Sportsmen who are a little depressed because hunting season is over and it's not quite time for fishing might try hunting with a camera while the weather is still cool and the mosquitoes aren't out.

If you enjoy hunting just for the sake of bagging an animal, then hunting with a camera may not be for you. But if you like hunting because of the pleasure you get from watching wildlife or just plain being outside, then hunting with a camera is as much fun (and as challenging) as hunting with a gun.

The months of February and March are an ideal time of the year to take pictures of wildlife in eastern North Carolina. Many of the animals hunted earlier in the year are still in the area. And the mosquitoes and snakes aren't out yet. If you're interested in waterfowl pictures, ducks, geese and swans are still wintering in parts of the state — probably where you hunted them during the waterfowl season.

If you do decide to go on a hunting trip with your camera, pretend you're hunting with a gun. If you want pictures of ducks, for example, take decoys and a call, wear camouflage clothing and leave as early in the morning as you would on a regular hunting trip.

Just as the purpose of hunting with a gun is to attract animals as close to you as possible, the purpose of a camera hunt is the same. The closer the subject is, the better the picture — unless you're photographing silhouettes against attractive backgrounds.

Hunting with a camera has several benefits. First, the animals aren't quite as wary because they haven't been shot at in a while. Second, because you're not scaring the animals away by loud gun shots, you are more apt to attract them closer to you.

Some of the easiest animals to photograph are squirrels, doves and swans because they are the least wary. Ducks, geese, quail, turkeys, deer and rabbits are more challenging. All make pretty framed enlargements, which are better to look at and display when you took them.

Some of the best places to go hunting with a camera are refuges and parks because they are easily accessible and usually have an abundance of wildlife. Less than two hours away from Greenville are Mattamuskeet and Pungo national wildlife refuges, both wintering grounds for thousands of ducks, geese and swans. Deer, quail and rabbits are also plentiful and can be spotted on occasion. Late afternoon or early morning are the best times to see these animals, but it's fun to spend an entire day at either place picnicking or sightseeing.

Closer to Greenville is River Park North, a 359-acre nature park with five ponds located off Mumford Road. This park also offers plenty of opportunities for wildlife photographs.

Wherever you go, remember to be quiet and be quick (animals won't pose for you), and keep in mind that an animal usually sees you or senses your presence before you are aware of it.

1987 Dixie Deer Classic

The Wake County Wildlife Club has announced that the 7th annual Dixie Deer Classic will be held March 13 and 14 in the Jim Graham Building at the N.C. State Fairgrounds in Raleigh.

The classic, an ongoing search for the finest white-tailed deer trophies taken in North Carolina and the Southeast, will feature more than 100 commercial exhibitors of deer hunting gear and equipment. On display will be firearms, archery gear, tree stands, camouflage clothing, guides and outfitters, vehicles and taxidermists.

Guests for the events include Dick Idol of "North American Whitetail" magazine; Ben Rogers Lee, noted Southern deer hunter; Dr. James Kroll, a whitetail researcher, author and deer hunter from Stephan F. Austin University in Texas, and Tink Nathan of "Tink's 69."

Admission is $7 at the gate. For more information, call 781-9490 or write Dixie Deer Classic, c/o Wake County Wildlife Club, P.O. Box 12202, Raleigh, N.C. 27605.

First Hickory Shad Caught

Seventeen years after winning the prize for the largest fish caught in the first Grifton Shad Festival Hickory Shad Fishing Contest, Jimmy Edwards of Grifton caught another prize-winner on Feb. 14.

Fishing at Pitchkettle Creek east of Grifton, Edwards hooked the first shad of the season, entitling him to a trophy to be awarded after the Shad Festival parade April 4.

Edwards' fish weighed in at one pound ten ounces and was caught about 2 p.m. on a No. 1 Reflecto spoon.

Edwards said the fish was not destined for mounting on his wall, but that he and his fishing companion Ricky Barrow planned to "clean and cook it immediately." Although some say shad is too full of tiny bones to eat, Edwards disagrees.

He said they're good to eat in spite of the bones if cut into thin slices and deep fried in very hot fat.

"The secret of cooking the bones so you can eat them is to be sure the fat is hot enough before you drop the fish in," Edwards said. "When you think the grease is hot enough, drop in a teaspoon of vinegar. If the vinegar crystallizes, it's hot enough to cook the fish."

Edwards said he enjoys catching hickory shad because they put up a real fight. "Hickory shad is a 'poor man's tarpon'; for those of us who can't afford the big bucks for tarpon, we just go out on little Contentnea Creek and catch a trophy fish here."

Trophies will also be awarded to the adult and child under 12 who enter the largest shad. Entries must be caught on hook and line and entered and weighed at the Sport Shop in Grifton.

Festival Sites Moved

RESEARCH TRIANGLE PARK, N.C. (AP) — The site for the fencing competition at U.S. Olympic Festival-'87 has been moved to Carmichael Auditorium at the University of North Carolina, officials say.

The competition was originally to be held at Fetzer's Gym on the UNC campus. The dates of the fencing competition remain the same — July 24-26, which follows the volleyball competition at Carmichael Auditorium July 18-23.

"The move was made to reduce the costs of staging the competition," said Bob McBee, N.C. Amateur Sports director of operations. "Carmichael will already be set up for volleyball from July 18-23. It will be both convenient and less expensive to move fencing in on July 24-26."

N.C. Amateur Sports, the local organizing committee for U.S. Olympic Festival-'87, also announced that daily times for the basketball competition July 18-22 at UNC's Dean E. Smith Center have been changed from 1 p.m. and 7 p.m. to 12:30 p.m. and 6:30 p.m. The gold medal games on July 22 will begin at 6 p.m., as previously announced.

U.S. Olympic Festival-'87 will be held July 13-26 in Raleigh, Durham, Chapel Hill, Cary and Greensboro.

Tribe Tops Aurora

BELHAVEN — Chocowinity's boys' basketball team, seeded fifth in the Tobacco Belt Conference tournament, pulled off a minor upset Friday night, downing number four Aurora, 63-48.

Chocowinity will now face Belhaven, the top seeded team in the field on Wednesday at 8:30 p.m. at Washington High School.

In other action in the tournament, Belhaven downed Bath 67-48, while Columbia topped Creswell, 83-61, and North Edgecombe took Mattamuskeet, 73-49.

Chocowinity put the game away in the first quarter of play, rolling up a 19-7 lead over the Trojans. The Indians came back with a 16-11 advantage in the second period, running their lead out to 35-18 at intermission.

Both teams pushed in 12 in the third quarter, leaving Chocowinity up 47-30 going into the final period. Aurora edged the Tribe in that, 18-17, to no avail.

Deryl Moore led Chocowinity with 22 points while Greg Heggie added 12 and Martin Abdullah had 11. Byron Hill led all scorers with 28 for Aurora.

Pam Pack Gets Sweep

WASHINGTON — Washington High School swept past East Carteret in a pair of Coastal Conference basketball games Friday night, winding up the regular season.

The Pam Pack downed the Mariners, 67-59, in the boys game and took a 36-35 win in the girls' contest.

Washington's boys completed the regular season with a 4-8 Coastal mark and a 6-16 overall record. They will be seeded fifth in the conference tournament which starts Monday.

The Lady Pam Pack, 7-5 in the conference and 13-7 overall, ended up in a tie for third place and was to face a Saturday draw to determine its pairing.

East Carteret held only a 19-18 lead after the first period of the boys' game, but the Pack took control in the second frame. Outscoring the Mariners, 17-11, Washington gained a 35-30 halftime advantage.

East came back with a 15-11 edge in the third period to cut the lead to just one, 46-45, at the third quarter's horn. But Washington outscored the Mariners down the stretch, 21-14, to pull out the win.

Frankie Warren led Washington with 27 points while Ryan Dixon added 17 and Franz Holscher had 10. East Carteret was led by Jack Garrison with 24 and Michael Hucks and Billy Ellison with 11 each.

East Carteret's girls also led after one period, 12-11. But Washington outhit the Lady Mariners, 9-4, in the second period and gained a 20-16 halftime lead.

In the third period, East cut the lead back to 32-29, and came back to have a chance to win at the end.

With 25 seconds left, Shelley Lewis made two free throws to close the Pam Pack lead to 36-35. After a time out, the Mariners worked the ball for a shot, not hearing their coach's call for another time out before the horn, and a last second shot try bounced off the win, preserving the win for Washington.

Tonya Holley led Washington with 12 while Lewis had 14 and Kim Oden had 13 for the Mariners.

Washington's boys will face East Carteret on Monday in Havelock in the first round of the Coastal tournament. Game time is 8 p.m. The Washington girls will play Monday at either 6:30 or 5 p.m., depending on the outcome of the draw, facing either North Lenoir or East Carteret.

Global All-Day Securities Trading Finds Snags

By STAN HINDEN
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Potholes are developing on the road to expanded international securities markets offering 24-hour trading.

A variety of conflicts and problems affecting global trading surfaced last week when the Securities and Exchange Commission invited officials of U.S. and foreign stock exchanges and investment firms to discuss obstacles to global competition.

U.S. institutional investors, in particular, asked the SEC to make it easier for foreign companies to do business with them by loosening the complex regulations that define who can sell securities here privately and under what circumstances.

The SEC is preparing a report for Congress on the massive growth of international securities markets.

Comments at the day-long discussion centered on these questions:

— How to protect U.S. investors here and abroad under rules and practices that may be outdated in an era of around-the-clock trading and a proliferation of financial products. "It's a cumbersome process to protect U.S. investors overseas," said Neal S. Garonzik, managing director, Morgan Stanley & Co.

— How to develop a flexible set of international-trading guidelines for sophisticated U.S. and foreign institutional investors who may not need all the protections designed for small investors. Institutional investor Peter C. Clapman of TIAA-College Retirement Equities Fund complained that it was "costing us millions" not to be able to participate in certain forms of overseas investment.

— How to get foreign governments to cooperate in sharing information needed for investigative activities — especially the identity of customers. SEC Chairman John S. R. Shad said the way to deal with any "secrecy havens" was "the same way you did with the pirates of Tripoli. You quarantine them and don't give them access to markets."

— How to organize efficient international mechanisms for settling cross-border trades after they are made. Settlement problems, said Robert Meyjes of Citicorp Investment Bank, London, "represent the single largest constraint in making the whole global equity business a smooth one."

U.S. laws require those who sell stock to the public to register with the SEC and provide full disclosure about what they are selling. But the rules get much more complicated when the game moves to the international arena.

U.S. firms who want to tap overseas securities markets can do so without registration and full disclosure. But they must avoid selling the securities to U.S. citizens and must not allow the securities to flow back into this country. Those requirements can cause problems for U.S. firms selling abroad. And foreign issuers also may have problems selling securities in this country.

One major international problem area is the so-called private placement — essentially securities sold privately. Private placements have become a multi-billion-dollar market. For instance, a new issue may be sold to an insurance company and does not have to be registered if it is purchased for investment, rather than resale. But those securities often turn up later in the secondary market.

Some of the difficult international questions that concern the SEC were voiced in a recent speech by Linda C. Quinn, director of the SEC's corporation finance division. She asked, "Can you have a private placement of securities in the U.S. as part of a public offshore offering? Can you sell unregistered securities offshore, and to whom and when can you resell securities sold abroad back into the U.S.?"

Quinn suggested that the process for offering securities, including private placements, should be eased for institutional investors while the traditional protections offered to retail investors are retained.

Meanwhile, two simmering home-grown controversies were revealed at the hearing.

One involved the year-old effort by the New York Stock Exchange and the American Stock Exchange to win SEC approval for new rules for listing foreign companies on their markets. Currently, foreign companies must meet the same standards involving shareholder-voting rights, the election of directors, quorum requirements and quarterly reporting as U.S. companies.

The exchanges want to modify their rules to consider overseas business customs and practices when deciding on a foreign company's application.

Robert J. Birnbaum, president of the NYSE, and Kenneth R. Leibler, president of the Amex, suggested that the SEC move ahead on their applications for the foreign-listing changes.

Shad responded that a decision on the proposal had been deferred until the commission considers a larger and more controversial issue. Called the "one share, one vote" issue, it deals with whether companies should be permitted to have more than one class of stock with unequal voting rights.

Birnbaum, discussing the matter after the hearing, expressed impatience with the SEC's pace on the foreign-listing question and said Shad "is the prime mover to hold it hostage to the one share, one vote (issue)."

Birnbaum added, "I have a lot of respect for the SEC," he said, "but the world is moving fast." U.S. exchanges are facing fierce competition from London and Tokyo, he said. "These countries are trying to figure out how to steal business in the U.S."

Leibler commented later that while he could see the SEC's reason for connecting the two issues, he hoped that the SEC would not hold up the foreign-listing decision until the final settlement of the one share, one vote question, which is expected to be drawn out.

"These stocks will be traded. The question is whether they'll be traded on our markets or in London," he said.

The other controversy involves the electronic link forged last year between the London Stock Exchange and the U.S. over-the-counter market operated by the National Association of Securities Dealers, called Nasdaq.

At the round-table meeting, James M. Davin, managing director of First Boston Corp. and a NASD official, complained that the SEC had been holding up an expansion of the overseas link because of a Nasdaq dispute with an information vendor.

Under a year-old pilot program, Nasdaq has been sending London price quotations on 300 U.S. stocks of interest to overseas investors while London has been sending Nasdaq quotes on 300 European stocks. While the exchanges share expenses, they do not charge each other for the information.

The London quotes appear on 3,000 Nasdaq trader-level terminals while the U.S. quotes appear on 8,000 general-use terminals in England.

Since the beginning, Nasdaq has been seeking SEC approval for a two-year study period so it could expand the number of listings and experiment with allowing traders to execute buy and sell orders across the Atlantic by computer rather than by telephone.

However, the effort has been bogged down for a year. The SEC initially gave Nasdaq only six months to try its new system and then two renewals of only three months each. The current period runs out April 3.

The delay is the result of an objection the SEC received from Instinet, a vendor of market information, which complained that the Nasdaq quotation system put Instinet "at a serious competitive disadvantage."

Instinet complained, in essence, that the London Stock Exchange was getting its information free, while Instinet would have to pay to get the same information. Instinet suggested that they should get the information free.

Frank Wilson, executive vice president for legal affairs, said he held recent talks with Instinet officials. "We're trying to work something out," he said. Wilson declined to predict the outcome of the negotiations.

Murray Finebaum, president of Instinet in New York, also declined to comment on the outcome of the talks.

Mutual Fund Boom Creates Confusion

By BILL SING
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

Carl McWade thought he was making a fool-proof investment a year ago when he bought a mutual fund investing in bonds backed by the Government National Mortgage Association, known as Ginnie Mae. After all, McWade thought, the U.S. government was standing behind the bonds.

But his delight turned to anger about seven months later when he cashed in the fund and discovered that he had lost about 5 percent of his original investment. Although the government protected against default on the bonds, it did not protect against rising interest rates cutting the value of the bonds.

"I feel like I got burned," McWade, a retired Seal Beach, Calif., advertising executive, said. "The advertising led you to believe it was a pretty stable price."

The confusion of McWade and thousands of investors like him illustrates that the unprecedented mutual fund boom of the past four years has not come without some mishaps and controversies.

Lured by the funds' convenience and hoping to capitalize on their spectacular returns, investors plowed four times more money into stock, bond and income mutual funds last year than was put into them during the entire decade of the 1970s. (Money-market funds, while also mutual funds, generally are treated separately from stock, bond and income mutual funds.) Responding to this insatiable appetite, mutual fund companies are creating funds at the rate of one a day, while cranking out new services and products unheard of a decade ago.

But industry officials — although pleased with the rush of new investors into funds — say that thousands of investors harbor widespread confusion and misunderstanding about mutual funds. Surveys show that investors are bewildered by the increased complexity and variety of funds and are often not aware of the risks of mutual fund investing. Many expect current high yields and returns to continue and could be shocked and disappointed if those profits turn to losses, as is highly possible.

Meanwhile, the industry boom — and its mad scramble to lure even more investors — has led to some excesses and questionable practices that, some critics say, could mar the industry's generally positive reputation and invite increased government regulation.

While some marketing and sales pitches have improved in recent years, many fund companies still use misleading, questionable or overly zealous promotional tactics, critics charge. Many newly created funds are risky and have unproven track records, they add. Some fund companies also inflate yields through risky practices not readily apparent to investors. And many fund companies are excessively boosting fees and sales charges — raising profits at the expense of investors' effective returns, critics contend.

The overly hyped promotion of some funds "is going to blow up in the face of the mutual fund industry," said William E. Donoghue, publisher of Donoghue's Moneyletter, a mutual-fund newsletter based in Holliston, Mass.

Eventually, some experts fear, a shakeout in the fund industry could ensue if the stock market dives sharply or if interest rates rise significantly.

Corporate America Restructures: Is It Better?

By JAMES F. PELTZ
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Corporate America is in an upheaval.

Companies of every stripe are undertaking major structural changes almost daily and together are producing deep changes in the landscape of U.S. industry.

The process is known as "restructuring," the shuffling of billions of dollars worth of assets through mergers and acquisitions, sales of subsidiaries, layoffs of workers, plant closings and consolidations, writeoffs of money-losing operations, heavy borrowing and stock buybacks.

As restructuring rages, so too does the debate over whether the overhauls are beneficial.

Proponents applaud restructuring for streamlining companies and making them more competitive with foreign rivals. They say it improves efficiency, shakes complacent executives and often shifts underutilized assets from unwieldly conglomerates into the hands of smaller, more productive managements.

"I don't believe it's a negative for the economy," said Kenneth Bodenstein, senior vice president of the investment research firm Duff & Phelps. "You'd have to bet your money that the small entrepreneurial structure operates more efficiently than the big corporate structure."

Supporters say the stock market's early-1987 rally shows investors believe the restructuring wave, although painful, is producing leaner companies able to reap profits even in times of economic sluggishness.

Critics, however, say too many companies are restructuring simply to thwart unwelcome takeover bids and thereby save the jobs of top managers or to satisfy Wall Street's preoccupation with short-term improvement in profits at the expense of long-term progress.

This trend "is detrimental to American industry, particularly so with regard to its ability to compete internationally," said Dorman L. Commons, who lost his job as chairman of Natomas Co. when it was acquired in 1983 by Diamond Shamrock Corp. Ironically, Diamond Shamrock has now proposed its own drastic restructuring in an effort to thwart a takeover bid led by Texas oilman T. Boone Pickens Jr.

Commons and others note many companies are financing their restructurings by taking on huge debts. The critics warn that could choke the businesses when the next recession hits and limit their ability to confront foreign competition.

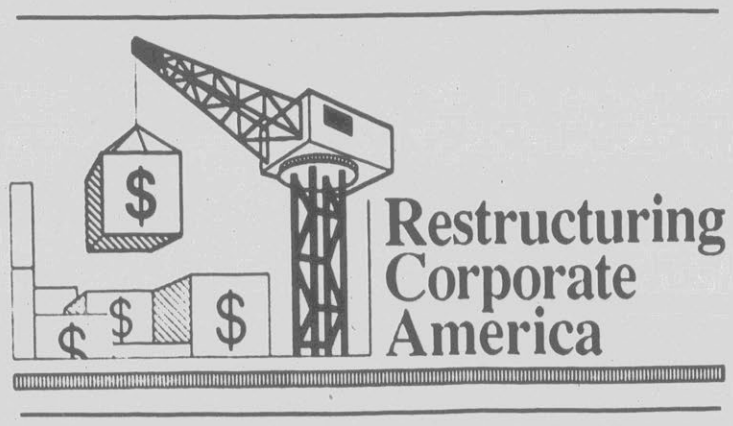

Concern over worker layoffs and transfers also keeps building.

Al Rappaport, a merger specialist with Northwestern University's Kellogg School of Management, says he worries about what the "displacement of people, in sometimes very awkward ways, is going to do to future efficiency from having employees that don't have much loyalty" to their jobs.

Yet neither the debate nor restructuring itself is new. Indeed, some people have long viewed restructuring as inherent in U.S. economic development.

One such theorist was Joseph A. Schumpeter, the late Harvard University economist, who termed restructuring "the process of creative destruction" and an "essential fact" of capitalism.

From 1915 to 1929, a wave of consolidation produced oligopolies, in which a few large companies came to dominate such industries as steel, oil and the railroads. Another such period occurred from the mid-1950s to 1970, when companies with unrelated businesses formed such conglomerates as Textron Inc. and Litton Industries Inc.

Several factors led to the current restructuring boom: weak economic growth, poor earnings, increased foreign competition, overcapacity, disinflation, deregulation, tax changes, takeover attempts and the acknowledgment that some past acquisitions simply failed.

"In the 1960s the conglomerate wave was to buy helter-skelter; it didn't have to make sense in terms of synergism or efficiency, it was to achieve growth," said Jerome E. Hass, finance professor at Cornell University's Johnson Graduate School of Management.

By the early 1980s, however, it was clear that size or market share alone did not guarantee success.

The high inflation that each year had helped propel earnings, and often hide mistakes, vanished. Large concerns found that their bloated bureaucracies and costs prevented them from reacting quickly to foreign rivals. The increase in global competition left many industries, such as steel, with excess capacity.

Many companies concluded that mergers "for the sake of putting things together really didn't make a lot of sense," Hass said.

Some companies that had gone on acquisition binges, such as Gulf & Western Inc. and ITT Corp., decided to shed dozens of units to refocus their operations.

For other companies, however, restructuring means pursuing new businesses while abandoning products once synonymous with their names. Singer no longer makes sewing machines; American Can sold its packaging business.

Still others in recently deregulated industries, such as Texas Air Corp., have gobbled up competitors. And in depressed industries such as energy, companies took huge writeoffs to reflect the slumping value of their holdings.

The result has been "the greatest overhauling of corporate America in the post-war era," said Irwin L. Kellner, chief economist of Manufacturers Hanover Corp.

In the merger area alone, 12,250 companies or corporate divisions valued at nearly half a trillion dollars changed hands over the past four years, up from 8,570 deals valued at $213 billion from 1980 through 1983, according to Mergers & Acquisitions magazine.

The shuffling produced a record 1,382 corporate name changes last year, up about a third from 1985, the consulting firm Anspach Gross Portugal Inc. says.

While the long-term effect of this activity might be clouded, there are some obvious winners.

So-called corporate raiders and other investors often benefit, since restructurings — especially those done in response to the raiders' takeover threats — frequently lift stock prices at least over the short run. The investment firms arranging the deals also profit.

There also are clear losers. Thousands of workers have lost their jobs or been forced to move because of mergers, plant closings and other cost-cutting steps. Communities lose individual and corporate taxes.

The nation's productivity also is threatened by a loss of worker loyalty due to widespread shuffling of assets, some observers contend.

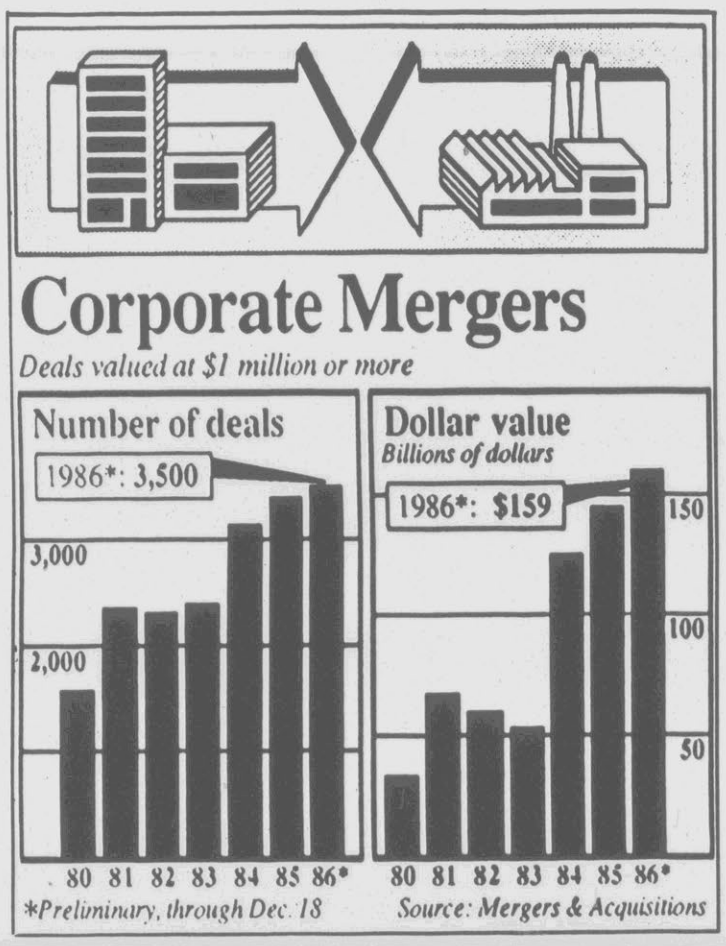

"It's a reflection of what has transpired in industry over the last five years, where companies have had to let some of their paternalistic ways go by in order to remain competitive," said John F. Johnson, president of Lamalie Associates, an executive recruiting firm.

However, Cornell's Hass said some restructurings might improve worker loyalty, at least among those who keep their jobs.

"This sort of activity, while it may be disturbing, also should be reassuring (to workers) because it would be better if those assets were in the hands of

American Hoechst Will Buy Celanese

WASHINGTON (AP) — American Hoechst Corp. will acquire Celanese Corp., but has promised to sell off a variety of assets to alleviate antitrust concerns raised by the government, the Federal Trade Commission announced Friday.

The commission had complained that the purchase would substantially reduce competition in the production of polyester fiber in the United States.

The agency said that it has now agreed to the takeover, since American Hoechst has signed a consent agreement promising to sell off certain assets and businesses.

Under the consent agreement, American Hoechst agreed to divest a package of either Celanese's or its own polyester textile fiber assets. The Celanese assets include manufacturing plants in Florence, S.C., Fayetteville, N.C., and Salisbury, N.C., and research and development facilities in Charlotte, N.C.

Th Hoechst package comprises its polyester textile fiber assets, including its production plant in Spartanburg, S.C.

American Hoechst agreed to make the sales within one year.

The companies also signed a "hold separate" agreement, under which the Celanese polyester textile fiber assets must be operated independently until the divestitures are made.

A trade commission complaint, made public Friday, charged that the acquisition, as originally proposed, would have substantially lessened competition in the production of polyester textile fiber in the United States.

The acquisition would have greatly increased concentration and significantly enhanced the likelihood of collusion among the remaining firms in the industry, the complaint alleged.

American Hoechst, based in Somerville, N.J., is a wholly owned subsidiary of Hoechst A.G. of Frankfurt, West Germany. The parent company is also named in the case. Celanese is based in New York City.

Reagan Wants Fuel Guides Nixed

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan's proposal to end federal auto fuel economy requirements will save American jobs and help hold down sticker prices, say two automakers who've had trouble meeting the standards in past years.

Both Ford Motor Co. and General Motors Corp. welcomed the news that Reagan wants to repeal fuel efficiency standards.

But Chrysler Corp. and several private groups claimed the administration is out to kill what has been one of the nation's most successful energy-saving programs.

A conservation-conscious Congress in 1975 enacted the fuel economy standards to reduce oil consumption, requiring all automakers to meet overall mileage standards or pay fines. The standard for 1986, 1987, and 1988 models require each automaker's car fleet to average 26 miles per gallon.

The massive "competitiveness" package unveiled Thursday by Reagan would end the program on grounds the requirements "place American automobile manufacturers at a competitive disadvantage and produce economic distortions."

Transportation Department spokesman Bob Marx said the rules already have served their purpose, with the carmakers' fuel economy performance doubling since 1975. Market demand for fuel-efficient cars will ensure that the pattern continues, he said.

GM and Ford, which both have had trouble meeting the standards, have threatened over the years to curtail production of larger cars, which would force them to lay off workers, if the requirements were not relaxed.

GM spokesman Bill Noack said Friday the fuel economy standards have put U.S. manufacturers in a "straightjacket" by favoring Japanese carmakers that specialize in building small cars.

Ford issued a statement Friday that said leaving the fuel economy standards in place would "result in higher vehicle prices and restricted consumer choices."

Investors Confident Inflation Will Hold

By CHET CURRIER
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — As Wall Street's bull market keeps rolling, American investors seem more confident about the inflation outlook than they have been for a long, long time.

To be sure, there have been some early signs lately that the consumer price index could well show a bigger increase in 1987 than its rise of less than 2 percent last year.

The producer price index of finished goods rose 0.6 percent in January, reflecting an upturn in the price of oil. Falling oil prices had played a large part in keeping the 1986 numbers down.

Nevertheless, few cries of alarm are being raised these days about any return to the kind of inflation that afflicted the economy in the 1970s and early 1980s.

"Inflation is an important issue for investors," said John Dessauer in the latest issue of his advisory letter Dessauer's Journal. "A sudden rebound in inflation rates would be negative not just for bonds but for stocks as well."

However, Dessauer argues, "the surprise of 1987 may be that inflation in the U.S. remains well below my present estimate of 3.5 percent."

Until recently, he says, "manufacturers have been tough on costs but slow to cut their selling prices. They have been fighting to preserve profit margins."

"In the initial phase of a better competitive environment and an improved economy, business will enjoy rising sales. Because costs have been controlled and profit margins improved, profits on new sales will be enormous," he said.

"Business will not have to raise consumer prices to enjoy substantial gains in profits. Consumer prices, at least for a while, can be expected to lag behind producer prices even as economic growth increases."

Stock traders lately appear to have shared that upbeat view. Thanks largely to a record-setting rise to a new high on Tuesday, the Dow Jones average of 30 industrials climbed 51.89 to 2,235.24 in the past week.

The New York Stock Exchange composite index gained 3.26 to 162.82, and the market value index at the American Stock Exchange was up 1.65 at 317.90.

Volume on the Big Board averaged 190.83 million shares a day, against 173.74 million the week before.

In one sense it's not especially remarkable that stock traders are feeling positive about inflation prospects at the moment. Thanks to the market's runaway rise, they are feeling positive about almost everything.

"The general presumption is that the market is telling us something," said Eric Miller at Donaldson, Lufkin & Jenrette Inc. "All news has been treated as good news."

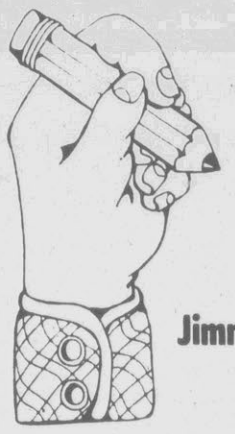

"We've seen the usual run of emotions, from fear to greed and then on to hysteria," said Edward Nicoski at Piper, Jaffray & Hopwood Inc. "But we suspect there's more to come."

Some skeptics say the bulls on inflation are overlooking the implications of the dollar's decline in foreign exchange, which makes imports more expensive in this country and leaves room for price increases by domestic producers who compete with imports.

On that point, Dessauer maintains, "all the evidence so far indicates that the U.S. economy is still so weak that it needs the stimulus of a lower dollar.

"Over the long term," he concedes, "efforts to stimulate the U.S. economy could prove too successful. We may eventually drive the inflation rate so high that tight money and rising interest rates will be required.

If you want deductible interest at a low cost, we can deliver.

Wachovia Equity BankLine® puts low cost, tax-deductible interest right on your doorstep.

A new tactic on taxes.
Equity BankLine is one of the few types of credit on which the interest is still fully tax deductible. That's because your line is secured by the equity in your home. (Certain limitations may apply.)

Save on interest.
The interest rate on Equity BankLine is based on Wachovia's Prime Rate.* So it may be substantially lower than on other types of credit you may have, such as charge cards, installment loans, etc.

Your Credit Line	Your Interest Rate	Annual Percentage Rate for February, 1987
$50,000 or more	Prime + ½%	8%
$15,000 to $49,999	Prime + 1%	8½%
$10,000 to $14,999	Prime + 1½%	9%

Rate for $50,000 or more effective April 1, 1987.

A money-wise move.
You can use Equity BankLine to pay off your balances on more expensive types of credit. And you can use it for any future borrowing needs. How you use your line of credit is up to you. When you need money, you simply write an Equity BankLine check.

No strings attached.
Unlike some other institutions, Wachovia does not require you to place large deposits with us to get a low rate. Your rate is based only on the amount of your line of credit.

Pay less to close.
We do everything possible to keep your closing costs to a minimum. We charge no origination fee, no points and no annual fee. While other mortgage loan closing costs will apply, we may not require an outside appraisal. If you have a Wachovia BankLine account, or can qualify for your line of credit unsecured, closing costs could be as little as $10.

A Personal Banker℠ can help.
A Wachovia Personal Banker will be glad to answer your questions about Equity BankLine and make it easy for you to open your account. Call or stop by any Wachovia office.

Wachovia Equity BankLine®

"Prime Rate" refers to that interest rate set by Wachovia from time to time as an interest rate basis for commercial and consumer borrowings. The Prime Rate is one of several interest rate bases used by Wachovia. Wachovia lends at interest rates above and below the Prime Rate. Your annual percentage rate may vary monthly. This information does not constitute a complete or conclusive interpretation of the new tax law. Before making your decisions it would be wise to consult your tax advisor.

Some Companies Opt To Purchase Their Own Shares

By JAMES F. PELTZ
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — U.S. companies are rushing to buy themselves back.

American Express Co., Time Inc., Gillette Co., CPC International Inc. and GTE Corp. are among the scores of companies that have recently opted to buy millions of shares back from investors.

The purchases, together with the rash of mergers and leveraged buyouts in which companies return to private ownership, have taken stock worth billions of dollars out of circulation.

In 1984, the value of buybacks by New York Stock Exchange-listed companies tripled to $17.4 billion from $5.3 billion in 1983, and in 1985 more than doubled again to $37.2 billion, Salomon Brothers Inc reports.

Last year, buybacks jumped 21 percent to an estimated $44.8 billion, Salomon Brothers estimates.

Because buybacks typically lift the market price of the remaining stock still on the market, companies often repurchase shares simply "to indicate to the market that the stock is underpriced," said Al Rappaport, a consultant and merger specialist at Northwestern University's Kellogg School of Management.

But recently the buybacks have been increasingly used as part of larger restructurings or to thwart unwelcome takeover attempts.

Nearly every takeover bid is priced above the current market value of the target company's stock. Thus, if a company rejects a bid it also assumes the burden of offering stockholders a similar value. Enter the stock buyback.

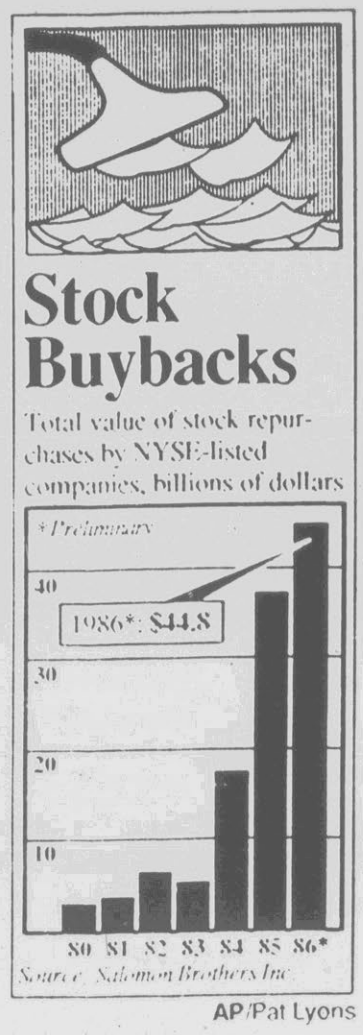

In some cases the buyback itself defuses the takeover threat by giving the suitor an outlet to sell whatever stock it already owns in the target.

Yet in their zeal to repurchase stock, many companies are borrowing heavily to pay for the shares. And that is one reason buybacks have come under fire from outsiders.

Critics contend buybacks not only raise debt to dangerous levels, they also misuse corporate funds. The buybacks sacrifice long-term growth for short term stock gains with money that would be better spent on research and new equipment, they assert.

Supporters counter that while some companies have too much debt, many stock buybacks involve companies reducing the size of their operations. Thus, the stock repurchases appropriately lower capital structures of companies — and their capital costs — by a like amount, the backers say.

In effect, the companies are evening both sides of their balance sheets, supporters say, adding that if companies need extra funds for investment they can always return to the capital markets.

Airline Price Wars Stay Hot

By MARTHA M. HAMILTON
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — The airline industry last week was flying through air thick with smoke signals about fares.

While American and United Air Lines were signaling an intent to drop deep discounts in favor of better yields, Texas Air Corp.'s Eastern and Continental were sending the opposite signal — that they intend to keep pressing their low-fare advantage.

The two Texas Air subsidiaries, which together account for more than 20 percent of the airline market, said they plan to keep the heat on other major airlines by extending their new, low-priced non-refundable fares.

Continental and Eastern, in one of their first joint initiatives after Eastern's formal acquisition by Texas Air chairman Frank Lorenzo, announced the "MaxSaver" fares Jan. 29, prompting speculation that a new fare war was in the making. The new fares, up to 40 percent cheaper than the discount fares they replaced, required only two days advance purchase but were non-refundable, a new twist.

Other carriers, including American and United, were forced to follow suit — despite higher costs that make the low-fare structures harder to sustain. But last week American began to talk about increasing fares, testing the waters. American was quickly joined by United and Trans World Airlines, which said they would adopt the same approach.

"American and United used to be able to do that. When they decided what the fares were going to be, they could do that," said Jeffrey D. Krida, senior vice president of Continental-Eastern Sales Inc. But Krida said Texas Air had no intention of buying into that strategy. Indeed, instead of dropping its deep discount fares May 20 as originally announced, the two lines will retain them indefinitely, he said.

"One decision we have made is that we like what this is doing for us, and this is a permanent structure," he said last week. However, some of the restrictions on the fares might be changed, and some of the fares might be adjusted as well, with some possibly rising. Those decisions are still pending, according to Krida.

The decision by Continental and Eastern to retain the MaxSaver may be the undoing of American's announced intention to restructure its fares. "I thought the American move was a very constructive move, as far as trying to stabilize fares," said Louis A. Marckesano, an analyst with Janney Montgomery Scott Inc. in Philadelphia. "The indications by Continental or Texas Air that they do not intend to change the MaxSaver fares sort of indicates that they are not ready to ease the pressure on fares. That's going to create problems for the industry."

American has said it will eliminate its "Super Sale" fare (its version of the MaxSaver) in half of its domestic markets as of March 2. In other markets, tickets will be sold at those rates until March 15 for travel until May 20.

At the same time, American is restructuring its "excursion" fares, discount fares that pre-dated the Super Sale. As of May 20, what is now a 30-day advance-purchase fare that is 50 percent refundable in the event of a change or cancellation by the purchaser will become non-refundable. The old package, with the 50 percent refund in the event of cancellation, will cost about $20 more each way. For about $60 more each way, the consumer can choose a seven-day advance-purchase fare with a 25 percent cancellation penalty.

Despite the fact that United and TWA have said they will follow suit, some analysts said the announced fare structure will collapse unless Texas Air falls in line. Texas Air appears to feel that way as well.

Finance Chiefs Seek Ways To Hold Dollar

PARIS (AP) — Senior monetary officials of the world's five richest democracies shuttled through the snowy streets of Paris Saturday to bilateral meetings aimed at forging agreement on ways to brake the decline of the dollar.

Officials refused to discuss the substance of the talks or provide details of Sunday's scheduled meeting of the Group of Five major industrialized nations — the United States, Japan, France, Britain and West Germany — plus Italy and Canada.

U.S. Treasury Secretary James Baker and Federal Reserve Board Chairman Paul Volcker met their West German counterparts at the official residence of U.S. Ambassador Joe M. Rodgers in one of the bilateral sessions, said a U.S. Embassy official who refused to be identified.

Analysts said they expected the officials to announce after Sunday's meeting an agreement to coordinate economic policies more closely to halt erratic swings in currency exchange rates. But they said it was unclear whether any such plan would succeed.

someone who can run them, as opposed to someone who can't and may in frustration shut them down," he said.

The restructuring boom is not expected to end soon. Many of the conditions fueling it remain in force, including ample sources of funds at relatively low borrowing costs, a stagnant business environment and foreign competition.

Union Strikes Kroger Stores In 3 States

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Leaders of about 1,500 striking meat handlers at Kroger Co. stores in three states said Saturday they were prepared for a long strike after contract talks with the food chain broke off.

Both sides said they were willing to resume negotiations, but no further talks were scheduled. The union's previous three-year pact expired Jan. 31.

Talks between the union and Kroger broke off Friday night when the two sides couldn't agree on issues concerning pay scales, salary increases and the number of part-time workers Kroger should hire, union officials said.

The members of Food and Commercial Workers' Local 405, who handle meat, delicatessen products and seafood in Tennessee, southern Kentucky and northern Alabama, began their strike Thursday night.

Specialist To Give Tips On Child Management

By ANGELA LINGERFELT
Reflector Staff Writer

Parents who are tired of their children arguing, lying, misbehaving, not doing homework or throwing tantrums — but feel they can't do anything about it — should make plans to attend an upcoming workshop by Adele Faber, a nationally acclaimed author and lecturer.

The free workshop, to be held Thursday at 7 p.m. in Wright Auditorium, is part of the 27th annual East Carolina University Family Life Conference.

According to Jeannie Golden, an assistant professor in the ECU Department of Psychology and chairman of the conference, "the workshop is designed to present practical, effective methods of communication that can be put to immediate use to make life with children easier and more rewarding."

Dr. Golden said Ms. Faber will "discuss and demonstrate how to deal with common conflict situations between adults and children through anecdotes, role-playing and audience interaction."

Ms. Faber, co-author of "Liberated Parents/Liberated Children" and "How To Talk So Kids Will Listen and Listen So Kids Will Talk," presents workshops throughout the country on better ways of communicating with children.

Dr. Golden, considered an expert on children and adolescents with behavior problems, said she is "constantly looking for new methods to use in dealing with children.

"I usually don't learn anything new from workshops and books. But when I picked up her (Faber's) book, "How To Talk So Kids Will Listen and Listen So kids Will Talk," I got excited because it gave me new ideas and changed my focus and approach in helping parents deal more effectively with behavior problems," Dr. Golden said.

Ms. Faber has also developed a program titled "Breaking Barriers" designed to teach communication skills to teenagers. She has written original scripts for television and her work with nursery schools, teachers and parents was documented for television in a three-part series shown on CBS.

Ms. Faber is a former member of the faculties of the Family Life Institute of Long Island University and the New York School of Social Research. She lives in New York and is the parent of three children. Ms. Faber recently has completed a new book, "Siblings Without Rivalry: How To Help Your Children Live Together So You Can Live Too", to be published in May.

"Many times the severity of behavior problems get parents so frustrated that they feel there's no other alternative except punishment," Dr. Golden commented. "This workshop will give parents a more positive outlook because they'll learn techniques that are supportive and friendly, and best of all, they work."

After attending the workshop, Dr. Golden said participants should be able to "demonstrate skills that help children cope with negative feelings, such as fear, frustration, disappointment, anger and resentment. They should also be able to identify skills that invite cooperation and leave adults and children feeling positive about themselves and each other."

The lecture by Ms. Faber is one of several events being presented Thursday as a part of ECU's Family Life Conference. For information about her lecture or other sessions that day, contact Dr. Golden at 757-6800.

On Friday, a related skill-building workshop for professionals and interested parents sponsored by the Eastern Area Health Education Center, will be held.

A fee is required for that workshop and interested persons may register by calling Mary Heckrotte, mental health coordinator, at 758-5200.

Dr. Golden said Ms. Faber's methods of communicating with children can best be described by a quote from the "Christian Science Monitor": Her methods "will bring about more cooperation from children than all the yelling and pleading in the world."

PIECES OF MEAT? — "What do you think we are, just pieces of meat?" a bachelor asked, as women in the audience inspected the cadre of men up for sale at Thursday's Bid for Bachelors at the Greenville Sheraton. Those selling their wares lined up on stage before the March of Dimes benefit auction began, their faces expressing emotions ranging from fright, apprehension and nervousness to vanity, arrogance, mischief and amusement. As the night progressed, most of the bachelors seemed to relax and enjoy the attentions of about 500 spectators, most of them female. (Reflector Photo by Angela Lingerfelt)

Bachelor Bids Bring In Bucks For Charity

By JANE WELBORN
Reflector Staff Writer

Twenty single women were double winners Thursday night at the first March of Dimes Bid for Bachelor's fund-raising event in Greenville.

They were the highest bidders for dates running the gamut from a night of dinner and theater in Greenville to a cruise to the Bahamas. As an added bonus, the money they bid for the dates, ranging from $100 to over $2,000, was a tax-deductible contribution to be used for the prevention of birth defects.

All told, over $12,000 was raised for the Coastal Plains chapter — and local bachelorettes were provided an opportunity to enjoy the company of single men offering a social engagement.

"I am terribly greatful to the community for supporting it," said Sybil Huggins, director of the Costal Plains chapter. "I think everybody had a great time. It was very successful."

The 20 bachelors, dressed in donated tuxedos, coaxed the cheering women to bid higher. As they walked down a runway, some men handed out flowers to the bidders, while others threw chocolate candy kisses. WITN television sports director Ken Ackerman and Lawrence Watts, loan administration manager for Wachovia Bank & Trust Co., tossed poker chips into the audience to encourage females to bid on their combined trip to casinos in Atlantic City, N.J. A few bachelors resorted to taking off their jackets and displaying their physique.

The highest bid of the evening was for a trip to Hilton Head, S.C., with 62-year-old Charles Alfred Forbes. Dian Boone pledged $2,100 for the opportunity to accompany the clothing store owner on the excursion.

However, the total amount of money Forbes brought in for the March of Dimes was $3,370. A group of his friends donated the remainder of the money after they lost out on the bidding for the date.

Female auctioneer Nora Henry had trouble keeping up with the fast-paced bidding, which began at $50 for each date. To bid, the women held up cardboard squares, each one containing a different number.

The women were provided brochures containing profiles of the bachelors and the dates they had planned. The age, height and hobbies of each of the bachelors was included for the perusal of the potential bidders, along with a description of the date being offered and paragraphs describing what makes each auctioned man special.

All of the bachelors expressed good feelings about the event. Several of the men were thrilled that dates with them brought so much money.

Long-Term Health Care Costly To Older Persons

By CHANGING TIMES
Kiplinger Magazine

The biggest catastrophic health expense for which older Americans have no insurance is the long-term care required when age, illness or disability renders them dependent.

In 1986, nursing home costs alone averaged roughly $21,000 annually per person. The bill can go as high as $50,000.

The question is who will foot the bills? Although a recent survey by the American Association of Retired Persons (AARP) revealed that a majority of its members polled believe Medicare or private insurance will pick up the tab, the facts are just the opposite.

Medicare covers no more than 100 days of nursing home skilled care, and private insurance typically follows the same pattern. In reality the average is about 25 days, because out-of-pocket copayments begin after 20 days. Compare this with the average stay in a nursing home of two and a half years.

Almost half of the cost of long-term care is borne by Medicaid, the medical assistance program financed jointly by the federal and state governments. But before a person can become eligible, assets, including life savings, must be pared down to a minimum. As many a horror story attests, that amounts to virtual impoverishment.

Now, about 30 insurance companies are offering policies designed to cover a large chunk of the costs of long-term care.

What does the insurance do? For an annual premium of around $100 to as much as $2,500, you can cover a specified stay in a long-term-care facility and, in an increasing number of instances, be reimbursed for certain home health services. Nursing home coverage can be as little as two years or as long as a "lifetime," with a cap that can range from $12,000 to $200,000.

Coverage is essentially an indemnity type; that is, insurers pay a fixed sum (say $40 to $50 per day) rather than a percentage of the fees customary in the community, as with comprehensive insurance. An indemnity policy tends to become outdated almost as soon as you sign the agreement. If it has no index for inflation, the onus is on you to peer down the road and try to gauge the amount of protection you would need to make a dent in future bills.

Insurance for long-term care is also relatively expensive because policies are sold only on an individual basis, though trials with groups are underway.

Before any level of care is covered, it must almost always be defined as medically necessary or be preceded by a medical event. Then, it generally shapes up like this.

— Skilled care. This is medically necessary care provided by licensed, skilled medical professionals — nurses and therapists, for example — working under supervision of a doctor.

— Intermediate care. It also requires supervision by a physician and skilled nursing care to keep the patent stabilized. The difference is that the care is needed only intermittently, rather than continuously over a prescribed period.

— Custodial care. Many elderly people reach a stage when performing such simple tasks as bathing, dressing and eating is unsettling. Supervised custodial care, which is the nursing home service in greatest demand, is the solution. Benefits cover mainly room and board plus payments for assistance with daily living.

— Home health care. Depending on the policy, benefits for home health care may range from homemaking and chore services to occupational therapy and laboratory services.

Changing Times suggests you be wary of the sales agent who promotes any policy as a cure-all for nursing home financial headaches. Even the best policies have restrictions that define when care can begin and under what circumstances. Restrictions typically require a stay in a hospital or skilled nursing facility before you can claim other benefits. Even then, between discharge and entry into a nursing home there is usually a delay, called a waiting, or elimination, period of up to 20 or even 100 days.

Like conventional health insurance, long-term-care policies carry exclusions for preexisting conditions, which usually won't be covered for six months or a year after a policy is in force.

When should you take out the protection? The need for long-term care shoots up markedly with age, with about half of those over age 65 eventually in need of some kind of service. Premiums start out at relatively modest levels for those in their 50s and rise steeply with advancing years, making the insurance costly or even prohibitive. One expert advises buying at around age 55 to lock in the lower rate. Others believe that signing up in the mid-60s is a good bet, if the beneficiary is in reasonably good health.

Before you choose a policy, there are other key points to pin down.

— Where will care be delivered? Language in the policy may require that care be provided in a skilled nursing facility or licensed nursing home. Ask local officials from agencies on health or aging for the makeup of various long-term-care facilities to help you evaluate competing policies.

— Is there a health screen to determine the state of the beneficiary's health.

Office Parties Stir Bad Feelings

Dear Abby
Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I grew up in a religious home believing it was a sin to smoke, drink or dance. My husband didn't grow up with those beliefs. We love each other and have a good relationship until party time, then I have trouble accepting his slow dancing with the women in his office. There are eight of them, and he says their feelings would be hurt if he didn't ask them to dance at the Christmas parties, etc. I notice not all the men in his group dance with their co-workers, and I can't understand why my husband thinks he has to.

I trust him, but I just don't think God meant for a man and woman to rub their bodies together in slow dancing with anyone except their own spouses.

Am I normal to feel jealous? If most wives feel jealous when their husbands slow-dance with other women, then I'll say, "Thank God I'm normal!" — JEALOUS

DEAR JEALOUS: Rejoice, you're normal. Moderation and discretion are recommended at these dancing parties. Your husband shouldn't leave you sitting while he slow- (or fast-) dances with other women. Neither should you expect him to give up dancing entirely if he enjoys it.

DEAR ABBY: I am really hurt! A friend and I decided to go out together to celebrate a special occasion because neither of us had a date. (We are both females.)

Three hours before we were to leave, she called and said that a guy she used to date called her and she accepted a date with him. She said her date wouldn't mind if I came along, but she didn't sound very sincere, so I declined.

Am I being overly sensitive, or do I have a right to feel snubbed? — THIN-SKINNED

DEAR THIN-SKINNED: Snubbed? Maybe, maybe not. You may have misjudged the depth of your friendship. Ask yourself: If a guy you used to date had called and asked you for a date, what would you have done? If you would have turned him down, then you have a right to feel snubbed.

DEAR ABBY: May I air my pet gripe? It's when visitors come to my home and decide to take a quick tour through the place when I haven't offered one. Very often I will return from fixing refreshments to find someone wandering through my home — looking into each room (even those with the doors shut). Isn't it bad manners to explore private areas of someone's home without having been invited to do so? Very often those doors are shut for a reason — to present a neater picture when visitors drop in on short notice. So, please remind your readers not to wander around someone's home unless invited to. Thanks. — OFF-LIMITS IN IOWA

DEAR OFF: I'll "remind" them, but I can't guarantee anything. Incurable snoops will not be deterred by a gentle reminder. Only a locked door will stop them.

Professors Are Commuting

BARTLESVILLE, Okla. (AP) — Although Darlene Wright had worked herself up to company sales director, with responsibility for more than 3,000 accounts nationwide, she still wanted to earn a master's degree and advance her career.

However, the prospect of commuting 100 miles round trip after a full day's work to a university in Tulsa, the nearest place such a course is offered, was not a pleasant prospect.

But thanks to the cooperative program between Wright's employer, the Phillips 66 Co., the University of Tulsa and Arco Pipeline, she has now earned her MBA degree without leaving home.

After discussions with corporate officials, representatives from the University of Tulsa's College of Business agreed to offer required MBA courses in Bartlesville, Phillips' hometown and the midpoint between Tulsa and Independence, Kan., where Arco Pipeline is based.

Classes are held twice a week, in a local technical school, with 20 professors commuting 50 miles to Bartlesville instead of the students going that distance to Tulsa. The courses are considered part of the professors' regular teaching load, but a $1,000 bonus per course is offered by the university as a shift differential.

"I was initially concerned that the university would send the low men on the totem pole for this assignment, but I was wrong," says Wright. "They sent their best."

Her professors have only praise for their students, finding them more motivated than those who take the program in residence. And both students and professors report the program is enriched by the participants' corporate backgrounds.

"They were the most interesting group of students I ever had," said Michael White, instructor in business policy, of the first group. "The students had all been working for several years and were very highly motivated."

According to the initial agreement, two sessions were to be offered, the first of which began in January 1985 and was recently completed. The second session began in January 1986 and is slated for completion in May 1989.

The MBA is a 60-credit-hour program but those who participated in the first session already had a large percentage of the requirements because of previous course work. Those new to the business arena enrolled in the second session for the full course load, which covers 3½ years.

The MBA program has been so successful that the university is now considering a third class, if enough students are interested and if they meet the criteria of the university for undergraduate grade point average and graduate testing.

Wright thinks the program should be continued as long as there are students to participate.

"This was a golden opportunity for me," she said. "The program is difficult enough without having to face a taxing commute of 100 miles a day. I would have hated to have done it that way.

"The time I would have spent on the road, I was able to study and keep my life in order. I was able to maximize my time. Even then," she added, "combining a full-time job and a heavy course load can at times make you doubt if you can do it."

Sweetening Wright's achievement was the fact that even though the price tag for her degree was $7,000 for books and tuition, Phillips reimbursed her 100 percent.

"I wanted an MBA," Wright says, "because I feel the degree is an essential credential to show I have the background for handling responsibilities at higher levels."

The Bartlesville MBA program is open to anyone, even if not employed by the organizing companies.

Engagements Announced

Children's Clothes Should Fit Need

Homemaker's Haven
Evelyn Spangler

Clothing needs change quickly for children not only because of their physical growth, but also because of their varied interests and activities. The Soap and Detergent Association offers several practical guidelines for selecting clothing that fit children and their needs.

Additions to a youngster's wardrobe need to be durable and versatile. Invest in clothing that can be worn for several types of activities. Look for clothing designs that allow for comfort, growth and safety.

A prime consideration is clothing care. Easy-care fabrics provide a low-maintenance wardrobe for children and hassle-free laundry days for you. Check labels for fabric content and care instructions before purchasing. A care label should tell you what fiber or fibers are used in the garment and how to care for it. Hang tags should include information about the garment such as whether it is colorfast, spot and stain resistant, crease resistent, shrink controlled or how much it can shrink.

For easy care, permanent press clothes are a good choice for children because little or no ironing is needed. Other fabrics, such as terries, knits and corduroys, can also go straight from the dryer to a closet or drawer without having to cross the ironing board.

Ensure purchases of durable garments by checking their construction. Clothes cut on the grain have threads crossing at right angles. These clothes hang straight and retain their shape better than clothes cut on the diagonal, or off the grain. Seams should have about 12 stitches per inch and be tied at the ends to prevent splitting. Felled seams with two rows of stitching lend extra strength to garments, especially sleepwear and playclothes.

Garments last longer if they have reinforcements at stress points; knees, elbows, crotch, pockets and buttonholes. Look for signs of reinforcements, such as patches, extra stitching, bar tacks, metal rivets, linings and interfacings.

Get longer service from clothing by selecting styles with features of growth allowance. Unfitted waistlines, adjustable straps, and extra material in hems and cuffs extend garments as a child grows. A feature that accommodates both growth and comfort is sleeve design. Styles with room to grow include raglan, kimono and gusseted inserts.

Dress a child with safety in mind. Check for trims that are sewn securely to the garment to prevent accidents. Pants and jeans are less likely to catch on playthings, such as bike pedals, if the legs are hemmed instead of cuffed. Consider light and brightly colored outer garments that are easier for drivers to see on dark days. Conversely, look for a raincoat and snowsuit with a separate hood or hat so that a child's vision is not obstructed.

As a child's dexterity increases, select clothes with self-help features. Examples include big buttons, front zippers, elastic waistbands and suspenders. In addition, a child should be able to distinguish easily between the fronts and backs of garments.

A child, when old enough, should be involved as much as possible in planning shopping trips for clothes and the actual selections. Also teaching a youngster how to care for new clothes will pay off later as a child increasingly assumes responsibility for a wardrobe and its care.

Engagement Announced

Mr. and Mrs. William P. Smith of Burlington announce the engagement of their daughter, Susan Powell Finch, to Stephen Thomas Ellstrom, son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert T. Ellstrom of Raleigh. An April 4 wedding is being planned.

Autry-Murray Vows Exchanged

SNOW HILL — Janet Sue Murray and William Ralph Autry were united in marriage in a candlelight ceremony Friday at 7 p.m. in the First Baptist Church. The Rev. William S. Brown performed the double ring ceremony.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ray Edward Murray of Snow Hill. The bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Chuck Autry of Greenville.

The bride was given in marriage for her father. She wore a tea length bridal gown fashioned in antique white chantilly lace over matching taffeta. The dress featured an open Queen Anne neckline outlined in a scalloped patterned silk Venise lace encrusted with pearls. The beaded lace also extended over the fitted torso bodice, which dropped to a basque waistline. The long fitted Renaissance sleeves finished with calla points at the wrist were emphasized by scalloped Venise lace and covered button closures. The full circular skirt was edged at the hemline with the scalloped lace. She selected an elbow length veil of illusion attached to a pearl headband accented with a spray of silk Venise lace and silk flowers. She carried a while bride's Bible centered with a white orchid and assorted flowers.

Music was presented by organist Mrs. William H. Sugg III of Snow Hill. Pamela G. Spence presided at the guest register.

Immediately following the ceremony, the bride's parents entertained at a reception in the fellowship hall of the church.

The bride is a graduate of Peace College in Raleigh and Pitt Community College. She is employed as a registered X-ray technologist at Pitt County Memorial Hospital.

MRS. AUTRY

The bridegroom is employed by the Credit Bureau of Greenville.

The couple will live in Greenville after a wedding trip to Williamsburg, Va.

Wedding Vows Said Saturday

Grace Free Will Baptist Church was the scene of the wedding of Patricia Lynn Jones and Kevin Dean Grimes Saturday at 7 p.m.

The double ring ceremony was conducted by the Revs. Ed Walker and Larry Stevens. Wedding music was presented by organist and vocalist Susan Forlines and Jon Forlines.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jesse J. Jomes of Greenville. She attended J.H. Rose High School. The bridegroom, a graduate of North Pitt High School, is the son of James C. Grimes of Greenville and the late Dean P. Grimes.

The bride was escorted by her father. She was attired in a white chantilly lace gown deigned with a miniature lace ruffle and a lace yoke accented with ruffles. The tapered lace sleeves of the gown closed with points over the hands and the skirt of cascading lace ruffles flowed into an attached cathedral train. She wore a cathedral length veil of silk illusion bordered with scalloped chantilly lace etched with pearls. She carried a silk bouquet of white roses, pastel blue miniature daisies and blue and white miniature lilies accented with a lace and satin bow tied in love knots.

The honor attendant was Faye Wilson of Grimesland. She wore a royal blue taffeta gown with a scalloped embroidered bodice and short sleeves. The gown was accented with a sash at the waistline. She carried a silk nosegay of white carnations, royal blue miniature dasies and baby's breath tied with a white satin bow.

Bridesmaids were Lisa Jones, sister of the bride, Patti Grimes, sister-in-law of the bridegroom, and Melody Owens, all of Greenville, and Kathy Jones of Rocky Mount, sister-in-law of the bride.

The bridesmaids each wore a romance blue taffeta gown designed like that of the honor attendant. They each carried a silk arm bouquet of white carnations, pastel blue carnations, lilies and baby's breath accented with white satin bows and streamers.

The flower girl was Jill Jones of Winterville. She wore a royal blue gown with a scalloped bodice and short sleeves.

The father of the bridegroom was best man. Ushers were Ed Jones of Rocky Mount, brother of the bride; James Ed Grimes, brother of the bridegroom, and Mitch Meeks, both of Greenville, and Howard Grimes, brother of the bridegroom, and Craig Hudson, brother-in-law of the bridegroom, both of Williamston. Ring bearer was Cliff Hudson of Williamston, nephew of the bridegroom.

The mother of the bride was remembered with a corsage of three white silk roses accented with baby's breath and a white satin bow, and the grandmother of the bride wore a corsage of double white carnations with baby's breath and a white satin bow. The sisters of the bridegroom had white carnation corsages enhanced with baby's breath and a white satin bow.

A reception was held in the church gymnasium following the ceremony.

MRS. GRIMES

Adam Jones and Aime Ashworth passed out bird seed bags.

After a wedding trip, the couple will live in Pactolus.

Making Coffee Is Status To Men

At Wits End

Erma Bombeck

When the history of women's deliverance from the chains of domesticity is written, an entire volume will undoubtedly be devoted to the "man who makes coffee in the morning."

He is the new patron saint of sacrifice ... the secure man of the '80s ... the pathfinder of kitchens. You can be sitting around talking with a woman who runs a house, holds down a full-time job, raises six children, pays the bills, volunteers and irons during David Letterman, only to have her husband say, "Yes, but who makes the coffee every morning?"

Making coffee has become the great compromise of the decade. It's the only thing "real" men do that doesn't seem to threaten their masculinity. They put it on the same plateau as carrying the baby during the last three months of pregnancy.

I don't want to sound ungrateful, but making coffee is one of the simpler things women do. To us, it's on the same domestic entry level as putting the spring back into the toilet tissue holder or taking a frozen chicken out of the freezer to thaw.

It's nice, but it certainly doesn't compare to getting a cracked egg out of a carton when it's stuck or taking lint off corduroy pants that were washed with a nose tissue in the pocket.

Making coffee became an equal opportunity job in the early '70s when the first man crossed over to the coffeepot one morning and said, "I'll make the coffee, Margaret. You get the breakfast, pack the lunches, get the kids off to school, de-ice the car and get ready for work." It was a major breakthrough. Although unisex coffee-making became acceptable in most homes, men didn't go public with it until the '80s. It became a status thing, signifying there were shared duties in the home and they were liberal enough to realize the term "working mother" was redundant.

I have a husband who "makes coffee." The first time he is introduced to you, he extends his hand and says, "Nice to meet you; I make coffee every morning." As a matter of fact, he has now become an expert in filters and measurements. The other morning I said, "I would have made coffee, but I don't know where you store it."

"It's in the freezer," he said. "Stays fresher than when you used to store it in a canister. Besides, you use too much coffee when you make it. After six cups, you have to cut back, and you never remember to turn it off and store it in the Thermos. I'll do it myself."

"That's impressive," I said. "Now do you think you're ready to take cereal out of the cupboard and put it on the table?"

"Don't be strident," he said. "It's unbecoming."

Bears Have Personality

By TERRI GLEICH
The Muncie Star

HARTFORD CITY, Ind. (AP) — Terry McVicker has a lot in common with Beartholomew, Robearto and Bearjamin — the jointed teddy bears she lovingly creates.

McVicker considers herself a bear artist, and in the year since she began crafting the furry creatures, she has built a reputation for herself among bear collectors.

She insists that each of her bears has its own personality and nothing delights her more than a customer who recognizes that quality and falls in love with a particular bear because of its quirky embroidered smile or quizzical expression.

She is emotionally attached to the stuffed animals. Speaking of a bear she sold recently, she said: "I was kind of sad to see him go, I wanted to look at him a couple more days.

"I make them one at a time. I don't like mass production because I get bored," she said as she stroked a half-finished, cream-colored teddy bear in her lap.

"I used to make the body first and stuff it and then put the face and ears on last. But now, I put the face on first because the bear gets personality, and then I enjoy finishing it."

McVicker has been making stuffed animals since high school, but her love affair with bears began a year ago when a friend insisted that she try her hand at the jointed variety.

She began with a pattern from a book in the library and gradually created her own design. McVicker's creations are reminiscent of antique teddy bears. Their long, thin arms and legs and humped backs date to the presidency of Teddy Roosevelt, the man who inspired the first such bears.

"The first couple I made, I gave away," she said. Her daughter's friends were first in line.

"I gave away a lot of bears — all of Mary's friends got experimental bears. As I would develop my pattern, I got rid of the ones I didn't like."

Since she began making bears, McVicker also has started collecting the works of other bear artists, and friendly ursine faces peek out from cabinets and cubbyholes throughout her house.

Her interest in the cuddly creatures mirrors what seems to be a national trend. Stuffed bears aren't just for children anymore. McVicker said about half of hers went to adult collectors.

"A lot of people had bears when they were kids, and I think they kind of take people back to their childhood," McVicker said. "Each bear has a personality. They are like an old friend or confidante."

McVicker, the mother of two and a former school teacher, is in the process of getting a retail merchant's license from the state. She said she planned to expand her business and was thinking about designing a line of bear clothing.

"I didn't intend for it to be a full-time business or job," she said. "But it looks like that's what it's going to be."

Famed Gotham Book Mart May Soon Leave The Scene

EDITOR'S NOTE — It's sort of a Carnegie Hall of modern American literature. Customers entering the Gotham Book Mart are following in the footsteps of writers like Ernest Hemingway, Dylan Thomas, e.e. cummings, W.H. Auden, Gertrude Stein, Anais Nin and John Dos Passos. But the store's 99-year-old founder fears Gotham's final chapter is being written.

By MITCHELL LANDSBERG
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Some people say the Gotham Book Mart is the only real bookstore left in New York. Others, possessed of more modesty, simply claim that it is the only one left with wooden floors that creak.

Neither statement is precisely true, but these claims speak volumes about Gotham, a cluttered relic of a place that may be as close to heaven as some book lovers will get.

Its founder, Frances Steloff, celebrated her 99th birthday on New Year's Eve with the future of her literary landmark under a legal cloud. But while Miss Steloff presses a lawsuit to establish ownership of Gotham's building, the store remains what it has been for nearly seven decades: a sort of Carnegie Hall of modern American literature.

All the greats have graced its stage. When customers descend the three steps off 47th Street into its Dickensian warmth, they are following in the footsteps of Ernest Hemingway, Dylan Thomas, e.e. cummings, W.H. Auden, Gertrude Stein, Anais Nin and John Dos Passos, to name a few of Gotham's celebrated customers.

When Henry Miller was writing books in France that were banned in the United States, Miss Steloff helped smuggle them to American readers. When the ever-impoverished Miller moved to Big Sur, Calif., Miss Steloff posted a sign reading, "Help Henry Miller," and asked customers to leave cans of food or household items for shipment to him.

Tennessee Williams worked as a wrapping clerk for a day but couldn't cut it. After Miss Steloff whipped together a package with blinding speed, she held it up to the astonished Williams and said: "That's a messy job. You can do better." He couldn't and quit.

Poet Allen Ginsberg recalled being fired by Miss Steloff after working at Gotham for a few weeks during a college vacation. "I was probably incompetent, confused," he said.

Ginsberg still shops at Gotham and calls it "a national treasure that ought to be preserved." He said it contains "the whole literary treasure of the United States for the last 80 years in the back of its brain."

Gotham is tucked away in the middle of the city's diamond district, a soft spot among harder gems. Many people know it mainly for its sign, depicting three fishermen whose lines have converged on one big fish. "Wise Men Fish Here," it proclaims.

The shop sells both new books and used and casual browsers can stumble across such unexpected pleasures as a first edition of Thomas Wolfe's "The Web and the Rock" for $8.50, or a 1914 edition of Jack London's "White Fang" for $2. Those looking for the latest thriller or diet book are advised to look elsewhere.

There is one prominent shelf devoted to Russian poetry, another devoted to Hemingway, and three shelves devoted to James Joyce, who used to order books from Gotham. The shop is the headquarters of the Joyce Society.

It also prominently features the work of illustrator Edward Gorey, whose peculiar Edwardian tales seem right at home at Gotham. So does Gorey, who often can be found prowling the shop in a full-length fur coat during trips to New York.

Savvy customers know to ask for a book if they can't find it. For one thing, the shop lines up the books two deep on its shelves, making it difficult to spot some. For another, roughly two-thirds of its stock is kept in storage areas that are closed to the public.

If a book can't be found on the premises, Gotham will order it.

Customers these days include Norman Mailer, John Updike, Joseph Heller, J.D. Salinger, Woody Allen, Joyce Carol Oates and Susan Sontag. Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis, now a book editor at Doubleday, "buys books almost on a daily basis," according to Miss Steloff's successor, Andreas Brown.

Miss Steloff opened the book mart on Jan. 1, 1920, two blocks from the present site. She invested $100 from a savings account, a $100 Liberty Bond, a $300 loan from her sister, a bookcase filled with her personal library and a love of language and ideas.

She had a dearth of books at the start — it's hard to imagine today — so she spread them out as much as possible, using magazines to fill in the empty spots. When one poet asked her to carry his out-of-print volumes, she accepted eagerly. "I needed books to cover up the holes in the wall," she says.

A petite, lively woman with watery light-blue eyes, Miss Steloff earned a reputation as a stern overseer who intimidated some of the best literary minds of several generations.

In 1946, Columbia University sold her a five-story brownstone on West 47th Street for $65,000 — the same price Columbia paid for it in 1913. Miss Steloff moved the shop into the first floor, took the third floor for her apartment and began storing books throughout the rest of the building. It is now filled to the rafters.

In 1967, she sold the business to Brown, a rare book appraiser and collector. She kept title to the building and stayed on as a consultant.

Those were trying times for Brown, who said he grew fearful of making any changes in the store for fear of incurring Miss Steloff's wrath.

"Remember, you don't own this shop, you're just the custodian," she once told him in a succinct explanation of her philosophy of commerce.

Although she insists that the bookshop ultimately belongs to its customers, its stock is a reflection of her interests in modern American fiction and poetry, with a strong emphasis on the avant garde; in philosophy, especially the Indian philosophers; and in film history and criticism.

Jack Salzman, director of the Center for American Culture Studies at Columbia University, compares Gotham to Shakespeare and Co., Sylvia Beach's famous shop in Paris, as among "the best of the bookstores that have been concerned with the way writers go about writing."

In 1980, at age 93, Miss Steloff agreed to donate Gotham's building to the American Friends of Hebrew University in memory of her parents. It was a decision she now bitterly regrets.

Her understanding, she says, was that the American Friends would immediately sell the building to Brown for its fair market value — roughly $1 million. She says it was a way to sell the real estate to Brown, avoid capital gains taxes and make a donation to a worthy cause.

But the American Friends did not sell the building to Brown, and the papers Miss Steloff signed — drafted by the organization's lawyers — contained no mention of such a sale. Miss Steloff began writing a series of letters to the charity, at first friendly, later pleading, finally angry and desperate. Meanwhile, the value of the building soared.

"I have read about such things happening to others but how could it happen to me?" Miss Steloff asked in one letter. "After all, was I not dealing with friends? And my motives seem so right, yet I have had nothing but anguish and heartache instead of the joy of giving."

Miss Steloff filed a lawsuit against the American Friends late last year. It is pending.

"The university certainly has no desire for the bookstore to close down," said a lawyer for the charity, David Ellenhorn. "Unfortunately, we've never been able to have a meaningful discussion with Mr. Brown. He seems to want to get a piece of property worth several million dollars for $1 million."

Brown insists that he only wants to ensure the future of the shop, which he said would be imperiled if Miss Steloff lost her suit.

"If we lost...it would be the end of the store," he said. "Because the moment Miss Steloff dies, and she's 99, they're going to throw me in the street. There's no doubt about that."

"The bottom line," Brown said, "is it's a terrible way to treat a nice old lady who tried to give them a million dollars."

Not too long ago, it would be unlikely for anyone to refer to Frances Steloff as "a nice old lady." As one old friend mused at Miss Steloff's 99th birthday party, "When did she become angelic?"

But angelic is a pretty good way to describe the white-haired woman who now speaks lovingly — and with remarkable clarity — about her customers through the years.

"I love the books and I love my customers," she said. "They all had something to say, and they all had ideas, and they all brought them here — to the Gotham Book Mart."

New Season In London

LONDON (AP) — The Royal Shakespeare Co. has scheduled 47 productions for its 1987-88 season, including a Russian play about Chernobyl and the complete dramatic works of the French poet and playwright Jean Genet.

Operating out of six theaters in London and in Stratford, the RSC will maintain its high profile in the United States as well. Its production of "Les Miserables," opening on Broadway March 12 at the Broadway Theater, has a record $7 million in advance sales. Christopher Hampton's "Les Liaisons Dangereuses" will open in April and a revival of Cole Porter's "Kiss Me, Kate" will open during the summer.

In the London season, Jeremy Irons will repeat his three roles in "The Rover," "The Winter's Tale" and "Richard II." Jonathan Pryce will reprise his highly-praised Macbeth. Seven plays by Shakespeare will be staged in Stratford.

The company will perform five plays by Genet, including "The Maids" and "The Balcony." The RSC will also stage the British premiere of "Sarcophagus," a play about the nuclear disaster at Chernobyl written by Vladimir Gubaryov, the science editor of the Soviet newspaper Pravda.

The story was written by Parker's wife, Joan, and is about an alcoholic and his teen-age daughter, who is also becoming an alcoholic.

BETSY DRAKE LEWIS' DECORATING TIPS

Proper lighting can enhance your decor dramatically, but there are certain rules and guidelines that should be followed.

Correct size is important for overhead light fixtures. A general rule of thumb for diameter in a 9 x 12 room, for example, would be to double the width and use an 18" diameter light fixture. Formality of the fixture is also important. Informal light fixtures could be made of rattan, wicker, stained glass, pewter, acrylic, etc. Formal fixtures often consist of brass and/or crystal. Chippendale goldleaf, bamboo fixtures could go either way. If the fixture is being used in the dining room the size of the table should be taken into consideration along with the width of the room.

Outside lanterns are generally placed at the wrong height. Proper placement would be either below eye level (About 3 feet above the ground) or above eye level (about 8 to 9 feet).

Lamps used on a dressing table should never have metal shades because they cast more shadows and are horrible for applying make-up.

Remember, the average living room or great room needs three to five lamps and the height should be uniform throughout. Also, room lighting should be well balanced.

Betsy Drake Interiors is currently overstocked with beautiful lamps from Wildwood, Speer, Heygill, Sedgefield and others. We just received 40 new lamps last week and just don't have room to display them properly. During the last week in February, we want to reduce this inventory and will feature all our lamps at 1/2 price.

Viennese Coffeehouse A Beloved Landmark

By GEORGE JAHN
Associated Press Writer

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — It's dingy, timeworn and easily overlooked. But Cafe Hawelka is more alive with Viennese history than many of the city's more showy landmarks.

Hawelka's is just a street away from the Graben, the trendy pedestrian mall where the well-to-do shop and show themselves. But inside the dim and smoky establisment, the Graben and the rest of modern Vienna seem ages removed.

Long-haired students, artists, prim matrons and businessmen squint at newspapers in the dim yellow light, converse animatedly, or just take it all in at round marble-topped tables stained with the burn marks of innumerable cigarettes.

Waiters in shabby tuxedos negotiate the narrow aisles with one of a dozen kinds of Vienna coffee specialties precariously balanced on silver trays. The only one serving in relatively informal attire is the boss, Leopold Hawelka.

Vienna has a coffeehouse tradition reaching back more than 300 years and boasts more than 1,800 such establishments. But the 76-year-old Hawelka holds the record for longevity, with 50 years of waiting on his customers.

Unlike most other coffeehouses, Hawelka's has resisted the trend of renovating and refurbishing into the 1980s. His establishment is straight out of "The Third Man," the movie classic of postwar Vienna.

But change has come nonetheless, according to the owner.

"Vienna's coffeehouses in general have deteriorated because of television," he said. Earlier, a cafe was a place to gather information, but "through television everybody gets deliveries of sports, literature and politics to their homes."

He and his wife Josefine took time out from business during a recent interview to reminisce about the last five decades. Many of their liveliest memories were of the immediate postwar years, when black market dealers took over the coffeehouse scene.

Austria, which had been part of Nazi Germany during World War II, was occupied by victorious U.S., Soviet, British and French forces in 1945.

The Allied troops supplied cigarettes, canned goods, medication and other rare items. In the gloom and destruction left by the war, coffeehouses became the ideal places to make a deal.

"All we had was an ersatz coffee and milk powder," the 73-year old Mrs. Hawelka said of that era. "There was no gas and light was available only by the hour."

That still was more comfort than in the bombed-out tenements, and people congregated at Hawelka's and other cafes.

"People lived here, they came to the coffeehouse because they were cold at home, there was no fuel, they had no light and no water," she said.

Most of the coffeehouse transactions were modest, but some were large-scale, according to Mrs. Hawelka, who remembered some shadowy figures dealing in lard by the boxcar.

"The reconstruction of Austria took place mostly in the coffeehouse, through illicit wheeling and dealing," her husband added.

It was a different crowd from that of the 1920s and 1930s, when Vienna's cafes offered a second home to thousands of young artists, writers and would-be revolutionaries.

For the price of a coffee, they sat for hours, reading, writing or politicizing. The coffeehouse was usually warmer, brighter and more comfortable than home.

Hawelka remembered one old habitue who used to come in "and sniff the air" up to his death several years ago.

Others of the prewar generation still can be seen at Hawelka's "but many have died, and as far as artists go, each now has a nice apartment and few of them come now," he said.

More comfortable dwellings and changing lifestyles appeared to threaten the very existence of the Vienna coffeehouse by the 1960s. The leisurely pace of life associated with such establishments did not fit with Austria's economic boom and the social changes it brought, and dozens of establishments were forced to close.

The turnaround came in the 1970s, when the Viennese paused for nostalgia and rediscovered past glories like the coffeehouse.

Its existence is now assured, judging by a survey commissioned by the city's chamber of commerce in 1982 in preparation for the 300th anniversary of the first Vienna cafe.

Of the 4,000 people polled, 80 percent said they were regulars at a particular establishment. Forty-two percent identified themselves as daily coffeehouse guests.

THEME OF CHILDHOOD

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — "Past-Imperfect: Eric Fischl, Vernon Fisher, Laurie Simmons" will be shown at the Walker Art Center April 12-June 14 prior to a national tour.

The exhibition features three contemporary American artists whose work addresses the theme of childhood.

The center says, "Departing from the longstanding artistic tradition of representing children largely as commentators on adult issues, these three artists accord the experience of growing up its own importance and integrity by creating work which reflects the child's view of the world."

Accepting Scholarship Applications

Applicants are now being considered for the first Henry Husted Wooten Scholarship in Keyboard at East Carolina University. The scholarship, consisting of $2,000 annually, will be awarded this fall to a freshman entering the ECU School of Music as a piano or organ major.

A second scholarship will be awarded the following academic year. Each Wooten Scholarship is renewable, accumulating to a total of $8,000 per recipient during the four undergraduate years of study.

The scholarships were established by Drs. John and Harriet Wooten of Greenville in memory of their son, a former music student. Winners of the scholarship will be selected on the basis of performance ability, talent, and potential for success in music as demonstrated through auditions for members of the ECU keyboard faculty.

Audition dates scheduled on campus this spring are March 20 and April 24. Inquiries concerning taped auditions and required audition repertoire should be addressed to Dr. Charles Bath, chairman of the ECU keyboard department, c/o ECU School of Music, 757-6851.

Black Art At St. John's

WILMINGTON — Two exhibitions relating to black art are currently on view at St. John's Museum of Art, 114 Orange Street, Wilmington. The shows will be up until March 28.

One exhibition, "Romare Bearden: Collages and Prints," focuses on the work of Charlotte native Romare Bearden. His long career in art includes paintings and collages reflecting life in rural Mecklenburg County and the streets of Harlem which he has long known. The exhibition was organized by the Jerald Melberg Gallery in Charlotte.

The second exhibition, "Traditional African Art" encompasses sculpture, musical instruments, textiles, beaded work and ceramics from Yoruba, Cameroon, Liberia and Zaire. The show was organized by Chares Jones of Wilmington, well known for his knowledge of the traditional art of Africa.

From time to time during these two exhibitions, the museum will present a series of lectures, films and children's workshops to explore the relationships between traditional African culture and contemporary black American life as reflected in the arts.

For details on these programs and for more information about the two exhibitions currently on view, call St. John's at 763-0281.

Admission to St. John's is free. Gallery hours are Tuesdays through Saturdays from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.

N.C. Zoo Areas Have Reopened

ASHEBORO — The two indoor exhibits at the North Carolina Zoological Park — the African Pavilion and the R.J. Reynolds Forest Aviary, have been reopened to the public.

The buildings were closed in late January and early February for routine cleaning and renovation. Outdoor exhibits remained open during the annual spruce-up of the indoor facilities.

A pair of African crested porcupines are back on exhibit in the pavilion, a 53,500 square-foot building. They have been off exhibit for nearly a year, and are replacing six springhaas, hare-like African mammals that are being taken off exhibit.

In the 40-acre African Plains habitat, lions, chimpanzees, elephants, rhinoceros, baboons, giraffes and ostriches are on exhibit, weather permitting.

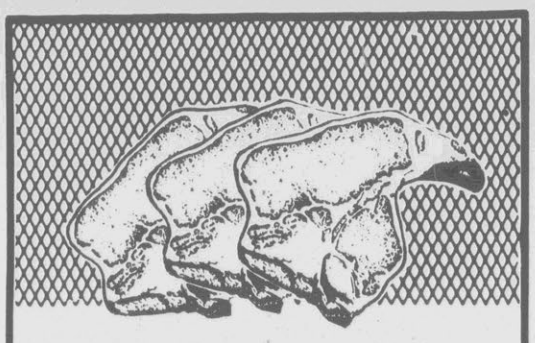

The viewing area overlooking the chimpanzee habitat has been temporarily closed due to damage received during the January snowstorms.

San Francisco Chosen For Rockefeller Mexican Folk Art

By ANTHONY MARQUEZ
Associated Press Writer

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — When Nelson Rockefeller's daughter went searching for a permanent home for her late father's extensive Mexican folk art collection, major museums across the country lined up and beckoned sweetly.

The wealthy museums understood that the former vice president and governor of New York would be an excellent draw because of his name and his collection of Mexican folk art dating back to 1933.

However, Ann Rockefeller Roberts remembered her father's lifelong battle to have those same museums be more serious about Mexican folk art and appreciate its enormous creativity.

Roberts decided to do what she thought would have pleased her father: She gave a significant portion of the collection to one of the youngest and smallest of the finalists — The Mexican Museum in San Francisco.

"She saw the potential there and that's to her credit," said the museum's executive director, David de la Torre. "She was willing to take a risk."

The risk is evident on a visit to the museum, where more than 500 objects from Rockefeller's personal collection are on exhibit inside the cramped, plain building at Fort Mason.

The exhibition includes textiles, masks, lacquerware, toys, ceramics and glassware that Rockefeller collected on his visits to Mexico from 1933 to 1978, shortly before he died. The bulk of his collection of about 2,500 folk art objects was awarded to the San Antonio Museum of Art in Texas.

Rockefeller collected much of the art from anonymous craftsmen who recorded ordinary daily life in Mexico in their works. Some of the works are by recognized artisans such as Candelario Medrano Lopez, Heron Martinez and Teodora Blanco.

Annie O'Neill, former curator of the Mexican folk art collection, remembers when an enthused Rockefeller met ceramic artist Blanco at her home in the Zapotec village of Santa Maria Atzompa, near Oaxaca, on his final trip to Mexico in 1978.

"He was really excited to meet her," O'Neill said, recalling they embraced warmly. "The general spirit was just a lot of 'simpatico' (congeniality)."

O'Neill said Blanco and Rockefeller ate tortillas she cooked, talked for a while in Spanish and then walked about, looking at and discussing her works.

"He bought everything she had there," O'Neill said. Blanco died in 1981.

The Mexican Museum was founded in 1975 by painter Peter Rodriguez and housed in the city's heavily Hispanic Mission District. Rodriguez operated the museum specifically to exhibit and collect Mexican art.

Torre, head of the museum since 1984, said his goal has remained the soul of the museum, something he believes eventually attracted Roberts.

The Rockefeller collection, he said, has doubled the museum's attendance and brought it prestige. Still, Torre believes the mission is not yet done, the museum's goal not yet reached.

"We want to be a nationally recognized fine arts museum," he said. "We want it to be a place where Latinos feel it's their museum, and that they use it."

But the museum's new Rockefeller art has stretched its physical resources, forcing it to store most of its other collections, including pre-conquest, colonial, Mexican fine art and Chicano fine art.

Along with the space shortage, a probable need for a permanent home and a small staff, a policy issue has developed over the direction the museum should take. Torre said the non-profit museum's board of directors is now grappling with these issues.

Battlefield Celebration Scheduled

CURRIE — The 211th anniversary celebration of the Battle of Moores Creek Bridge is scheduled for next weekend, Saturday and Sunday. The traditional celebration will be at 2:30 p.m. Sunday at Patriots Hall. Captain Frank Conlon, director of the U.S.S. North Carolina Battleship Memorial will be the principal speaker. Captain Conlon is a native of Baltimore, Maryland.

Throughout the weekend two living history groups representing both loyalists and patriots will be camped near the park's visitor center to demonstrate the life of an 18th century militia soldier.

The Guilford Militia will represent the patriot side while the North Carolina Highland Regiment will represent the loyalists.

Both groups will demonstrate cooking, clothing, weapons, militia drill and other aspects of camp life. They will also give firing demonstrations of the weapons used during the revolutionary war.

The encampment will be open to visitors Saturday from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and on Sunday from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. A schedule of the firing demonstrations will be available at the visitor center either day of the celebration.

The Topsail High School band will perform at this year's celebration on Sunday afternoon.

Moores Creek National Battlefield commemorates the Battle of the American Revolution on February 27, 1776 between North Carolina patriots and loyalists. The patriot victory notably advanced the revolutionary cause in the South.

The park is located 20 miles northwest of Wilmington on N.C. 210. You may call Moores Creek National Battlefield, 283-5591 for further information.

TRADITIONAL CELEBRATION — Moores Creek National Battlefield near Currie is presenting a traditional re-enactment celebration on Saturday and March 1 in honor of the 211th anniversary of the Revolutionary War battle at Moore Creek, where North Carolina Patriots defeated Loyalists. Interpreters of the national battlefield give living history demonstrations for visitors. The celebration is open without charge to the public. (National Park Service Photo by Richard Frear)

N.C. Affiliate Galleries Disband

RALEIGH — Representatives of the Affiliate Galleries, a program organized by the North Carolina Museum of Art more than a decade ago, voted recently to disband the program. The representatives also formed a steering committee which will work with the North Carolina Museums Council to involve all the state's visual arts organizations in a cooperative effort.

The Affiliate Galleries program was set up by the state museum in 1976 as a means of reaching areas around the state and assisting smaller visual arts institutions. Its primary focus in the initial years was a traveling exhibition program. However, this service was phased out in the early 1980s as the N.C. Museum of Art devoted its resources to opening the new museum building.

In recent years, affiliate representative said at the meeting, the function of the Affiliate Galleries program has been undefined.

Mary Ann Pennington, director of the Greenville Museum of Art and ad hoc chairperson of the meeting, told the group, "Since the inception of the Affiliate Galleries program the nature and number of art organizations in the state has changed dramatically. Many of the affiliates are now strong institutions, fully accredited by the American Association of Museums. We no longer need to rely on affiliation with the state museum to make us important."

Richard Schneiderman, director of the North Carolina Museum of Art, told the group that the North Carolina Museum of Art would continue to offer professional expertise to the institutions who have been affiliates and to consider their requests for loan of works of art from its collection. "However," he said, "this museum must extend equal support to all the state's museums and galleries."

Green Hill Show Opens Saturday

GREENSBORO — The exhibition, "Beyond Function: Art in Wood" will open Saturday at the Green Hill Center for North Carolina Art and will run through March 29.

The show will feature furniture, sculpture, turned vessels and musical instruments.

In conjunction with the show, Green Hill will sponsor special events. One, on March 5 at 8 p.m., will feature Wendell Castle, well-known wood craftsmen who will present a slide show, "Tradition in Transition". The second, on March 26 at 8 p.m. will feature a slide show by furniture designer Milo Baughman.

A small fee will be charged for the two slide presentations.

There is no fee for viewing the exhibition. For more details, call 373-4515.

Poetry Society Competition

WHISPERING PINES — The North Carolina Poetry Society has announced that entries are now being accepted for the Zoe Kincaid Brockman Memorial Award contest. The competition is open to poets who have published book-length volumes of poetry in 1986.

The winner will be announced in November and will receive a $200 cash prize and an engraved silver bowl.

The volume must be the original work of a single author, contain more than 20 pages, and carry a copyright date of 1986 — or a certification from the publisher by letter of the 1986 copyright date.

Entrants must be natives of North Carolina or current residents who have lived for three years in the state at the time of the book's publication.

Contestants are to submit a short biography with two copies of their book before June 15 to: Zoe Kincaid Brockman Contest, c/o Mary Belle Campbell, Chairman, 22-B Pinelake Drive, Whispering Pines, N.C., 28327. Non-members of the North Carolina Poetry Society are to enclose a $5 entry fee. One copy of the book will be returned if authors include a prepaid, self-addressed envelope with their entries. Those who wish to be notified of the contest results are to enclose a SASE.

The Brockman Memorial award was established in 1976 and is now endowed by Miss Christine Sloan of Gastonia. Brockman was a journalist, poet and first president of the poetry society.

A.R. Ammons will judge the contest this year. A native of North Carolina, Ammons is now a professor at Cornell University, Ithaca, N.Y. He is the winner of many awards, among them the National Book Award in 1972 and the Bollingen Prize for Poetry for 1974-75. In 1986, Ammons was one of five North Carolinians to receive the North Carolina Award for having distinguished himself in the field of literature.

Book News

FROM SHEPPARD MEMORIAL LIBRARY

By JULIE HICKS

Even before he received acclaim for "The Two Mrs. Grenvilles," Dominick Dunne had won a devoted following for his articles appearing in "Vanity Fair" — subtle fables of the "beautiful" and "not-so-beautiful" people. Now his articles are collected in book form, together with an introduction by the author that updated the essays and reveals the sensibility of his work.

"Fatal Charm," the title essay of the collection, recounts the notorious trial of Claus von Bulow, the society gentleman accused of attempting to murder his heiress wife, Sunny. In precise and vivid prose, Dunne paints a portrait of a consummate charmer who courts not only his mistress, Mrs. Reynolds, but the press, J. Paul Getty, Jr. (his secret benefactor), and even Dunne himself. About von Bulow, Dunne writes: "Whatever one felt about the guilt or innocence of the man, one could not deny his charm, which was enormous, in a European, upper-class, courtly sort of way."

In "Justice," the essay that established his reputation, Dunne, with controlled fury, chronicles the trial of his daughter's murderer, who, thanks to the curious machinations of the American justice system and those who know how to manipulate it, got off on a manslaughter charge. Dominique Dunne's murderer is now out of prison on parole.

Sometimes charm succeeds; sometimes it drags the charmer down. Dominick Dunne is fascinated with women such as Elizabeth Taylor, Gloria Vanderbilt, Diane Keaton, and Ava Gardner, all legends of today — and women who managed to live life on their own terms. And he tells the stories of others, including Alfred Bloomingdale's mistress, Vicki Morgan, who were trapped by charm.

Also included in this collection is Dunne's account of his bizarre encounter with Imelda and Ferdinand Marcos in exile in Hawaii. Dunne was the first and only American journalist to witness Imelda's life — and see her jewels — after the downfall of the Philippines's First Family.

Dominick Dunne's keen eye for detail — and his subtle, sharp moral sense — makes Fatal Charms both an entertaining and important books of tales about those who break the rules and either rise or fall.

Tryon Sets Symposium

NEW BERN — John H. Morley of London, a British expert on English interiors and furnishings, is the scheduled lead-off speaker for the 19th annual Tryon Palace Symposium. The symposium is set for March 22-24 at the Tryon Palace Restoration Complex.

Registration information is now available from the Tryon Palace Restoration Complex, 638-1560 or from the East Carolina University of Continuing Education, 757-6321. Since enrollment will be limited, interested persons are encouraged to enroll early.

Morley is the Keeper of Furniture and Interior Design at the Victoria and Albert Museum in London. His position includes responsibility for two English great houses, Ham House and Osterley Park. Ham House is one of the best known 17th century houses in England and contains the most complete set of original furnishings of its date in Europe. Osterley Park is famous for its Adam interiors.

Morely will speak on "The English Background: English Architecture and Interiors" at 4 p.m. on March 22 in the Reception Center auditorium.

He is the author of two books and was director of the Royal Paviliona, Brighton, for 17 years.

Other speakers during the three-day event are: Florence M. Montgomery, lecturer and consultant for historic textiles; John Bivins Jr., director of publications at the Museum of Early Southern Decorative Arts, Winston-Salem; Martha R. Severencs, curator of collections at the Gibbes Art Gallery in Charleston, S.C., and John B. Green III, registrar at Tryon Palace.

A concert, featuring the Piedmont Chamber Singers of Winston-Salem, is planned for the evening of March 22 at the First Presbyterian Church in New Bern.

A special attraction this year will be an exhibit designed especially for the 1987 Tryon Palace Symposium. The exhibit, prepared by John Greene of the palace staff, will feature archaeological artifacts recovered in the 1950s from the site of Tryon Palace. It can be viewed in the Tryon Palace Reception Center.

Wright Memorial Announces Fees

MANTEO — As a result of Public Law 99-952, in which Congress mandated the National Park Service to initiate an expanded one-year entrance fee program at national parks, memorials and other places, an entrance fee is now charged at Wright Brothers National Memorial at Kitty Hawk.

Entrance fees at the memorial will be $1 per person or $3 per car. The fee receipt is good for seven consecutive days of use. Also available for $10 is an annual Wright Brothers' pass good for one calendar year, designed particularly for those who visit the memorial with family and guests several times yearly.

Funds collected from the entry fees will directly benefit the memorial, in actions such as refurbishing the stainless steel and bronze doors and expanding visitor services.

Provisions providing for collecting entry fees to national parks, memorials, etc. will be in effect until Sept. 30 unless the provision is extended to a later date by an act of Congress.

N.C. Battleship Fees Are Listed

WILMINGTON — Admission fees during 1987 to the USS North Carolina Battleship Memorial have been announced. Admission price is $4 for adults; $2 for children 6-11, and free for children five and younger.

1987 admission fees to "The Immortal Showboat" spectacle are $3 for adults; $2 for children 6-11, and free to children five and younger.

The battleship memorial is open every day of the year from 8 a.m. to about sunset. The summer showboat drama is presented in the summer months nightly at 9 o'clock.

Visitors may view a ten-minute orientation film, and then take a two hour, self-guided tour which includes the crew's quarters, galley, sick bay, engine room, pilot house, guns, Kingfisher float plane and museum. There is, too, a Roll of Honor room which memorializes the names of 10,000 North Carolinians who gave their lives during World War II.

A Reflector Review

Monthly News Journal Provides Varied, Extensive Coverage

THE WORLD & I. A Chronicle Of Our Changing Era. Vol. 2, No. 1, January, 1987. Washington, D.C. Published by The Washington Times Corporation. Paper, 700 plus pages, illustrated. $10 monthly, $90 annual subscription.

The World & I monthly magazine very likely qualifies for the granddaddy of all periodicals for extensive coverage each month in a wide range of interests. This is evidenced by the major divisions of coverage listed in the index — Special feature; current issues; natural science; the arts; life; book world; culture, and cultures in modern thoughts.

THE AKHA WAY — Akha women carrying basket loads of wood in a small village in a remote mountain region of northern Thailand were photographed in color by Claudia Simms for her article, "Akhazan: A Vanishing Culture" appearing in the Jan. 1987 issue of The World & I.

This publication is oriented to serious, well-informed readers who want to keep abreast of what is happening in the world today. It is an ideal source of in-depth coverage of events and thoughtful analysis of trends, plus a wealth of shorter, colorful articles and photographis essays.

The January 1987 issue is The World & I's anniversary issue — publication first began only one year ago, Jan. 1986.

Longer articles, such as the special feature, "Assessing the Reagan Era," devotes 56 pages to the assessment is a cross-section of opinions and viewpoints expressed by five writers. The articles lean toward the scholarly without becoming obscured in theories. The best description of the flavor of the reportage on the Reagan assessment is in an editor's footnote to Tom Wolfe's "Thought and Culture". . . "Tom Wolfe established an international reputation in the mid-1960s as a proponent of the 'New Journalism,' which combined elements of fiction, scholarship, and news reporting."

This concept of informative journalism seems very much to be a major editorial goal in reportage contained in The World & I.

There is much to ponder in matters of import nationally and internationally. Typical is the coverage of one growing concern in America — immigration. Here again, the reportage affords a well-rounded look at the problems that exist, possible solutions and the human tragedy and dilemma inherent in a world where the social fabric of many societies have and continues to be drastically in a state of change. The articles — "Winning the Battle, Losing the War;" "The Case Against an Open Immigration Policy;" "Open Borders: The Real Immigration Solution," and "The Global Phenomena of Immigration" present the clearest look at immigration I have read and is undoubtedly a fuller picture than can be found other than in specialized books on the subject.

The quality of the articles, long and short, confirms that the editors have at their disposal writers who are knowledgeable in their subjects as well as having the ability to write well.

One might expect a publication of this nature to be overwhelmingly somber, but that is not the case. The pages are brightened with literally dozens of photographs, color and black and white, both of exceptional quality.

There are numerous fascinating glimpses into the world of nature, art, folk customs, travel and festivities, food and foreign heritages.

"In Praise of Country Ham and Sausage," for example, is writer-photographer Edward Clark's nostalgia recollection of the culinary joys of Tennessee pork in the form of country style smoked hams and sausages, with nods to firms that today carry out the art in carrying on the old traditions.

Claudia Simms in "Akhazan: A Vanishing Culture," opens the gate in photos and text to a colorful, but little known culture — that of five clans of people who share their ancient culture "whether they live in the region of their origins — Yunnan, China — or in Laos or Burma, or here in the northernmost mountains of Thailand." Simms' factual account of the way they live conveys the magic and excitement of imaginative fiction. Her photography is superb

Folklore is represented in this issue with an excellent account of "Home Remedies, Herb Doctors, and Granny Midwives" by Vennie Deas-Moore. The locale explored is a small hamlet on one of the Sea Islands of South Carolina. Any over-50 southerner will immediately respond to this article with a feeling of recognition of the relaxed lifestyle still existing in isolated areas of the old South.

Travel addicts can follow Martin Morse Wooster in "An American's Train Ride through Timeless Australia"; fanciers of moths and butterflies will experience delight in more than a dozen photographs of these creatures; and book lovers are furnished with in-depth analysis of more than a dozen books and writers in the Book World section spanning 100 pages.

In brief, The World & I, while loosely patterned on long-established periodicals that provide world coverage of events, does so on a much grander and rewarding scale.

Readers looking for a means of keeping informed with material sufficient to give them pleasurable reading for days and who are able to afford the $90 annual price tag can with confidence subscribe to The World & I. Those more cautious may first want to order a single issue at $10 plus $1 postage. The World & I is void of advertisement other than a couple of pages front and back. The address is: The World & I, 2850 New York Ave., N.E., Washington, D.C., 20077-0706.

It's a treasurehouse of information, a periodical to be saved and added to one's library.

The South Fascinates Author

BY SAM NIXON
UNC-Charlotte

CHARLOTTE — Brooklyn, N.Y. seems an unlikely place for a young boy to develop a fascination with the South.

But that's the way it worked for David Goldfield.

Goldfield, who is Robert Lee Bailey professor of history at the University of North Carolina at Charlotte, recently completed, "Promised Land: The South Since 1945," which will be published this month by Harlan Davidson, Inc. The book, his sixth, is a continuation of that unusual interest spawned in his youth.

"I first became interested in the South when I was nine or ten," Goldfield said. "My uncle began sending me books about the Civil War, and I became particularly interested in the Southern perspective because I'm a romantic, I suppose, and have a feeling for the underdog. Also, I grew up in a family which prided itself on a strong sense of the individual, and I began to view the Confederate cause as an expression of that self-determination."

Goldfield finds nothing odd about this fascination for the South developing in the middle of Brooklyn. Instead, he finds it quite natural.

"Being from Brooklyn probably accounts for my feeling for the underdog," he said. "Anyone from Brooklyn is used to being looked down on, especially by people from Manhattan."

After earning a Bachelor of Arts degree from Brooklyn College, Goldfield began a southern migration which has continued ever since, and he now says the South is the only area of the country in which he would choose to live. His first stop on this journey was the University of Maryland, from which he received his Master of Arts and doctoral degrees in history. While at Maryland, Goldfield studied with George Calcott, a noted Southern historian, and became particularly interested in the role of cities in the South, both past and present. Goldfield's doctoral dissertation explored the development and importance of antebellum cities in Virginia.

Goldfield expanded his interest in the historical importance of urban development in later writings, including an urban history textbook, "Urban America: From Downtown to Notown," and "Cotton Fields and Skyscrapers: Southern City and Region, 1607-1980," which won the 1983 Mayflower Cup as the best nonfiction work by a North Carolina author.

In "Promised Land," Goldfield explores the changes which have taken place in the South since World War II, a war which he feels had as much impact on the South, in its way, as did the Civil War. However, unlike the Civil War, which devastated the South for decades, the post-World War II period has been a time of economic and social growth for the south.

"Two things happened to the South after 1945," Goldfield said. "One was the monumental economic and social change. In 1940, the South was the nation's poorest region with the least educated people and the highest mortality rate. In virtually every index by which you measure a civilization, the South was last. By 1980, the South still lagged, but the trend had been reversed and the gap had been closed considerably. Socially, the fact that racial change has been paramount is obvious."

The other development in Southern culture over the past 40 years is more complex and different to measure, the ability of the South to maintain its regional identity despite enormous change, but Goldfield sees this as equally important to what the South has become.

"Through this whirlwind of change, the South has remained the same," he said. "And because Southern culture has persisted, the region hasn't lost its identity. In fact, change has meant finding its identity."

For Goldfield, the idea of the South finding its true identity through social and economic upheaval is tied to the laying to rest of an image of a poor, prejudiced region which made it difficult to appreciate positive aspects of Southern culture.

"By removing the burden of poverty and racism, the South has been better able to maintain its strong sense of place, the past, family, religion, manners. All of these have been so bound up with white supremacy and tremendous poverty and destruction after the Civil War that, rather than being positive factors, they became part of the problem. The Civil Rights movement and economic prosperity have liberated this culture, which is why I call the book "Promised Land." There's no guarantee, but the promise is there."

Just as social and economic changes have brought about the South's resurgence, Goldfield sees the need for continued change to fulfill the South's new promise.

Watching a skilled declarer battle expert defenders is a rare pleasure. This hand will reward careful study.

We are not thrilled with South's decision to jump rebid a five-card suit. We would have preferred a rebid of two diamonds. His partner's reaction to that would have dictated the course of the auction. Here, North would have raised to show a maximum no trump response with good diamond support. Note that six diamonds depends almost solely on a successful trump finesse.

What South might have lacked in bidding prowess he compensated for in the play. West attacked with the queen of hearts and continued the suit for declarer to ruff. Since trumps were likely to break 4-2, declarer realized he could not afford to draw trumps before setting up his diamonds, so at trick three he ran the jack of that suit.

It was East's turn to star. He smoothly allowed the jack of diamonds to hold the trick! Had declarer chosen to repeat the finesse, he would have been defeated by the subsequent diamond ruff and force in hearts. Although South did continue with the 10, he rose with the ace when West produced another low diamond. He then surrendered a trick to the king of diamonds.

East did as well as he could by continuing with a heart. Had declarer ruffed he might have lost control of the hand. Instead, he simply discarded his last diamond, and the defenders were helpless. East tried his last heart, but declarer simply discarded a club from hand and ruffed on the table. It was then a simple matter to draw trumps and claim the rest of the tricks.

Guttenberg Takes On Dramatic Role

By BOB THOMAS
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Steve Guttenberg, king of the wacko "Police Academy" comedies, takes a dramatic turn in his career with a murder thriller, "The Bedroom Window."

"I wanted to do something different, very, very much," says the Brooklyn-born actor. "That's the important part of your work — to meet a challenge. I don't think being different to be different is the reason. To be different and be good — that's the best reason."

Reviewers were split on whether "The Bedroom Window" was good but most found Guttenberg convincing as the young architect who becomes enmeshed in a murder plot when he tries to cover up his affair with the boss's wife (Isabelle Huppert). The film sold a respectable $9 million worth of tickets in its first 17 days.

Despite his success in comedies and fantasies like "Police Academy" and its sequels, "Cocoon" and "Short Circuit," Guttenberg said he had no trouble being considered for dramatic roles.

"I think that producers are pretty creative, for the most part," he observed. "They can be pretty imaginative. And it's imagination that can be the most important part of filmmaking. "For example, Dino DeLaurentiis wanted me for 'The Bedroom Window' because he felt that having me in the role would put a spin on it; I'd be somebody you'd never expect to see in that situation. That's what all good producers do.

"I think the audience out there is pretty smart. They're looking for a good story, whether it's comedy, drama, action-adventure or whatever."

Guttenberg comes across on the screen as a likable but fast-talking operator. It's no act. Coming out cold from New York as a would-be actor, he used all of his chutzpah to win entrance to the studios.

"I graduated from high school and two days later I came out to California," he recalled. "I was pretty lucky. I stayed with a good friend of my family's. He helped me out a great deal — I never had to worry about eating.

"I lived in Westwood in a small one-room apartment. My couch was my bed. To find work, I did a very unorthodox thing. I just kept pushing people, talking to casting directors and producers, catching people in the parking lot. I called and asked for interviews without an agent.

"I tried to get everybody enthusiastic about me. I was nobody. I was somebody to myself, but nobody knew that I wanted to be an actor. So I hustled. You gotta hustle all the time. I think all the great ones hustle. Great actors have to hustle — not that I'm a great actor.

"As I look back on the things I had to do just to get a little attention, I realize how you have to put your pride on the shelf. Sometimes casting agents and producers can be very cold. As an actor you can feel very small. You do that two or three times a day and come home and think about it, you can get hurt."

Guttenberg was willing to pay that price, and his hustle finally paid off. After weeks of crashing studio gates and being thrown out, he tried his act at Paramount. The casting director called the studio guards, but Steve was back the next day, pleading for a five-minute audience. The casting man gave him 45, called in eight associates, and Steve won his first role, in a TV movie "Something for Joey."

More roles followed, mostly in dramas like "The Boys from Brazil" and "Players." Meanwhile Guttenberg hedged his bets by studying dentistry at UCLA.

"The first real break I got was 'Diner,'" he said. "That was the first time I really got attention. Then came 'Police Academy.' It was an attempt — and we succeeded, thank goodness — at making something just real funny. It's like a candy bar. You love to eat it, but it doesn't change your life at all; it just makes you feel better."

Some actors who have achieved the position of Steve Guttenberg might scorn the hoke of "Police Academy," but he is happily facing "P.A. IV."

"To be honest, 'Police Academy' is obviously an economic opportunity for me," explained the actor, who has earned millions from his share.

"It is the kind of opportunity that comes very rarely in one's life. There may come a time when I might have to wait a year until I find a role I like. Having something of your own (such as 'Police Academy') can make that wait easier."

IN "MANON" — Singer Neil Shicoff will be heard as the Chevalier des Grieux in Massenet's opera, "Manon," to be aired Saturday over the Texaco-Metropolitan Opera Radio Network. Locally, the program will be aired over WTEB-New Bern and WRRF-Washington, N.C. beginning at 1:30 p.m.

Massenet's 'Manon' To Be Aired On Saturday

Beginning at 1:30 p.m. Saturday, Jules Massenet's opera "Manon" will have its first broadcast from the stage of the Metropolitan Opera since December, 1963. It can be heard locally over WTEB, New Bern, and WRRF, Washington, N.C.

Catherine Malfitano will sing the title role and Neil Shicoff will be heard as the Cheavalier des Grieux, with Michel Senechal as Guillot.

David Holloway will sing the role of Lescaut, James Courtney as de Bretigny, Ferruccio Furlanetto as Count des Grieux. The Metropolitan Opera orchestra will be conducted by Manuel Rosenthal.

For this season's new production of "Manon," the fourth most popular French opera in the Met's repertory — after "Carmen," "Faust" and "Romeo et Juliette," the Metropolitan will be using sung recitatives, instead of the usual spoken dialogues.

These recitatives were discovered early last year, in Massenet's own handwriting, in a score owned by his great-granddaughter. She brought them to the attention of Jean-Pierre Ponnelle, director of the Metropolian's new production. As a result, they are being heard for the first time ever at the Metropolitan this season.

Off-time air Saturday for the broadcast of "Manon" will be about 5:20 p.m.

Black South African Play In New York

By ANDREW TORCHIA
Associated Press Writer

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — From the political cauldron of segregated townships in South Africa to New York's off-Broadway goes a protest musical by Mbongeni Ngema, one of the the most talented stars of black African theater.

"Asinamali," the story of five imprisoned black men, is tentatively scheduled to open at the Jack Lawrence Theater in New York this spring.

"Asinamali" ("We Have No Money") grew out of the forced removals of blacks and black rent boycotts in Zulu areas around Durban.

"During these times, it is impossible to do a play without a serious message," Ngema said in an interview. "If you look at what's happening in the streets, there will always be a seriousness, even if it is a love story.

"But I never want to push politics above everything else. Politics should be like a spice in the production."

The writer-director-actor-musician-choreographer expects to be back in New York in October with "Sarafina," a new musical about black students in Soweto. "Sarafina" opens in Johannesburg in May at the Market Theater, the stage that led black productions from garages and backyards in the townships to racially mixed audiences in the city.

"Sarafina" was recently previewed in a second-floor rehearsal hall in a crumbling, warehouse district of Johannesburg, where Ngema has established his own company called Committed Artists.

As the audience listened, the cast sang about soldiers in the townships and the arrival of the first whites in 1652: "They came from the sea. ... They took the gold, they took the diamonds."

Ngema and a handful of others have lead a black South African charge onto American and European stages in the past five years. Ngema, Percy Mtwa and Barney Simon, the white former Market Theater director, wrote "Woza Albert," and Ngema and Mtwa performed the two-man musical about the return of Christ to Earth in South Africa.

Last September, "Asinamali" and "Bopha," Mtwa's story of a black policeman and his activist daughter, were part of a festival of five South African plays at Lincoln Center in New York.

Ngema used donations from the "Asinamali" players and a $10,000 award from the Woza Afrika Foundation in New York to assemble 19 young men and women for "Sarafina." Many came from an amateur group formed near Durban to keep children off the streets after anti-apartheid protests closed schools.

As some of the girls were only 16, Ngema promised their parents to supervise their housing and tutoring and to take care of any medical problems.

He coached the untrained cast in the basics of movement and voice production, allowing six months for rehearsal instead of the six weeks in which professionals can usually put together a musical.

Ngema, 31, grew up near Durban, a police officer's son who pushed wheelbarrows and mixed concrete after he dropped out of school.

"I was always playing the guitar," he said. "Ten years ago, I wrote the music for a friend's play and was in the band.

"One night, the male lead didn't turn up for a performance at a men-only hostel at a sugar factory. Those guys would never have understood why the show didn't go on, so I volunteered to do the part."

Three years later, he moved to Soweto, met Mtwa and "Woza Albert" came about.

"Mbondeni is one of the most exciting emergent talents," said Market Theater director Mannie Manim. "His is one of half a dozen black theater companies that have really got things underway. We're at the beginning of great times."

GOES OVER DETAILS — Dr. John Locke, right, conductor of the Wind Ensemble at the University of North Carolina, Greensboro, discusses a score in connection with the group's upcoming concert at Tully Hall in New York City's Lincoln Center on March 11. The performance by the 54-member UNCG student group will mark the first time a college or university student group from North Carolina has been invited to perform at Lincoln Center. Controversy Over 'Aida'

By WILLIAM C. MANN
Associated Press Writer

LUXOR, Egypt (AP) — Placido Domingo will sing "Aida" in the 3,500-year-old Pharaonic temple Giuseppe Verdi had in mind when he wrote the opera about doomed lovers.

The event might be heaven for opera buffs, but it's generating a headache for its producers and is coughing up yet another controversy for the Mexican tenor.

For one thing, Domingo, who canceled a December performance in London's Wembley Arena because he thought the $22 to $72 tickets were too expensive, will be singing Radames on May 2 to an audience paying $250 to $500 a ticket.

For another, he is singing only in the premiere of the 10-performance "Aida" series at Luxor Temple, a fact not mentioned in advertising brochures that have flooded opera circles in Europe and the United States for the past few months.

But preparation continues. Workmen's hammers ring out where pharaohs once walked at Luxor Temple, piecing together the four platforms where the opera will be staged.

Backdrops are the Nile River, across Luxor's corniche from the temple, and the colossus of Pharaoh Ramses II, who ruled from 1292-25 B.C., and an 82½-foot-tall red granite obelisk Ramses erected.

Fawzi Mitwali, the Egyptian-born entrepreneur who conceived the opera event, is importing fake palm trees and a plastic obelisk to replace one French adventurers took in the early 19th century.

Grandstands are being built in front of the temple to accommodate 3,800 people, and 70 toilets are being brought in to be re-exported after the series ends on May 12.

Tickets are being sold only in packages, some costing thousands of dollars, to ensure that this ancient Egyptian capital has enough accommodations for the visitors. Authorities say 61 tour boats will be on the Nile to augment the city's 4,360 first-class hotel beds.

Mitwali said 60 European princes and princesses and 2,000 patrons of New York's Metropolitan Opera are among the estimated 30,000 people coming to Luxor for Verdi's masterpiece about a doomed love affair between the Egyptian prince Radames and the Ethiopian slave girl Aida.

He envisions the production, starring Italy's Verona Opera Co., as the gala that Verdi missed 118 years ago. In 1869, Egypt's spendthrift monarch Khedive Ismael built an ornate opera house in Cairo and commissioned Verdi to write an opera for European royalty participating in weeks of celebrations to open the Suez Canal. Verdi missed the deadline, and "Aida" debuted in the opera house in 1871.

There are differences in the Luxor production and previous performances of the opera. The triumphal march, in which the Egyptians bring back Aida and other booty from their conquests, will be grander than ever before. The march, with members of the Egyptian military acting as spear-carrying extras, will make its way down the Avenue of Sphinxes to the temple's portal.

"Verdi meant to show that the expedition to Ethiopia was not only for slaves but was for a lot of other things," Mitwali said. "Our grand march will include silks, animals — we have horses, tigers — everything, as well as slaves."

Luxor Temple, seriously threatened by underground water and salt pollution, is among the most fragile of Egypt's treasures of ancient monuments. However, the government strongly backs the "Aida" project.

Tourism Minister Fouad Sultan appeared at a Cairo news conference in mid-January to announce strong government backing for the production.

"It's a very good opportunity to combine culture with tourism," he said. "We will mobilize all forces to make it a success." He said the event would generate $15 million for Egyptian private enterprise.

The government's enthusiasm is not unanimous, however. There has been grumbling from some who are worried about potential damage to the temple complex, from Egyptian opera buffs over prices and even from the government's own Egyptian Antiquities Organization.

Antiquities complained that the contract's only payment for the temple's use was $5 a ticket to the provincial government. Mitwali later agreed to give an equal share. The antiquities organization said its architects and engineers are monitoring the work to make sure nothing is damaged.

Egypt's small opera community has complained that locals who would love to see the opera were being mistreated in favor of tourists.

A spokeswoman for the Thomas Cook travel agency, which is handling the opera in Egypt, said most performances, including the premiere, were sold out abroad.

The cheapest package remaining for Egyptians costs $410: round-trip air travel from Cairo, an overnight stay in Luxor with a $250 opera ticket, full board and a half-day's sightseeing at the Valley of the Kings across the Nile. The $160 difference between the ticket and the total is more than double what an Egyptian normally would pay in the off-season for air fare, hotel accommodation and touring the tombs.

A QUINTET OF PLAYERS — Five members of the Pin Point Theater Company's cast to perform in "1001 Black Inventions" are shown above. '1001 Black Inventions' Wednesday

A series of entertainment on black inventors and achievers in a docudrama form, "1001 Black Inventions," will be presented Wednesday at 8 p.m. in Auditorium 244 of the Mendenhall Student Center on the East Carolina University campus.

The performance will be presented by Pin Points, a musical theater group that takes subjects such as biology, history, and math and puts them into theatrical formts.

Admission is $2, with tickets to be available at the door only. No advance tickets are being sold.

The presentation, sponsored by the Department of University Unions, features the lives of great black innovators and focus on the lives of black leaders who eventually realized the awards of perseverance. Among these men are:

• Jan Ernst Matzeliger — ridiculed by the experts of his day who swore it was impossible to erect a machine that could duplicate the multiplexed movement of the fingers. Nevertheless, Matzeliger forged ahead to invent the shoe lacing machine and thus boosted substantially the progress of the world's billion dollar shoe industry.

• Benjamin Banneker — the romance of this self-taught mathematician-astronomer is a touching documentary. He built America's first clock, then became involved romantically with Anola, the slave he offered his life for.

• George Washington Carver — his convictions remained intact when he refused large sums of money offered for his discoveries. He helped save the South from economic destruction through his inventions of over 400 products from the peanut and the potato.

• Daniel Hale Williams — his courage allowed him to overcome a frightening episode in an emergency ward. He risked his medical career by treating a patient stabbed through the heart. Despite the pressures, the operation was a success, making him the very first to perform open heart surgery.

"1001" Black Inventions" is portrayed in a comic manner around the framework of an attempt to watch a family trying to survive in contemporary society without the use of black inventions.

Wrong Name Listed

In an article on officers of The Playwrights Fund of North Carolina carried in the Feb. 15 edition of The Daily Reflector, the name Harvey Sharp Wooten was listed as one of the directors. That name should have been listed as Mrs. Michael Flanagan.

Connors Joins Cast

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Mike Connors has joined the all-star cast of ABC's 30-hour miniseries, "War and Remembrance," as Col. Hack Peters.

His character has an affair with Rhoda (Polly Bergen), the wife of Pug Henry. Robert Mitchum stars as Henry, a naval officer who participates in many of crucial events of World War II.

NEH Library Grants

WASHINGTON (AP) — The National Endowment for the Humanities is awarding $424,000 in matching government funds to 848 public libraries in every state, from Philadelphia to tiny Gregory, S.D., to stock their shelves with books about the U.S. Constitution.

Each $500 grant must be matched privately. Endowment officials said elementary school children in Sewickley, Pa., sold teddy bears to raise their local library's $500 share, and bar association members in Rutland, Vt., are signing up pledges in behalf of the Rutland Free Library.

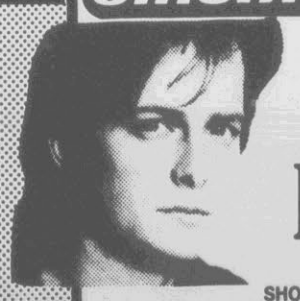

"These 'Bicentennial Bookshelves' will make the writings of the founders and important works of constitutional scholarship readily available to citizens around the country," said endowment chairwoman Lynne V. Cheney.

ECU Dance Theater To Present Its 1987 Dance Program

A diverse program of dance will be presented by The East Carolina Dance Theater on Friday and Saturday, and will then continue on March 2 and 3 of the following week.

Performances will be at 8:15 p.m. in McGinnis Theater on the East Carolina University campus.

Tickets are priced at $5 per person and at $3 for groups of ten or more. Tickets may be purchased at the McGinnis Theater box office between 10 a.m. and 4 p.m. Monday through Friday, and at 11 a.m. on dates of performance. Tickets can also be reserved by calling 757-6390.

This year's evening of dance will feature four dance compositions choreographed by members of the dance faculty of the Department of Theater Arts.

Broadway veteran Mavis Ray's composition, "Dancers Doodling: WNCT FM 108," will open the evening on a light and humorous note. "I was lulled by the music of WNCT FM 108 while searching for an idea, setting and music for my piece," Miss Ray said.

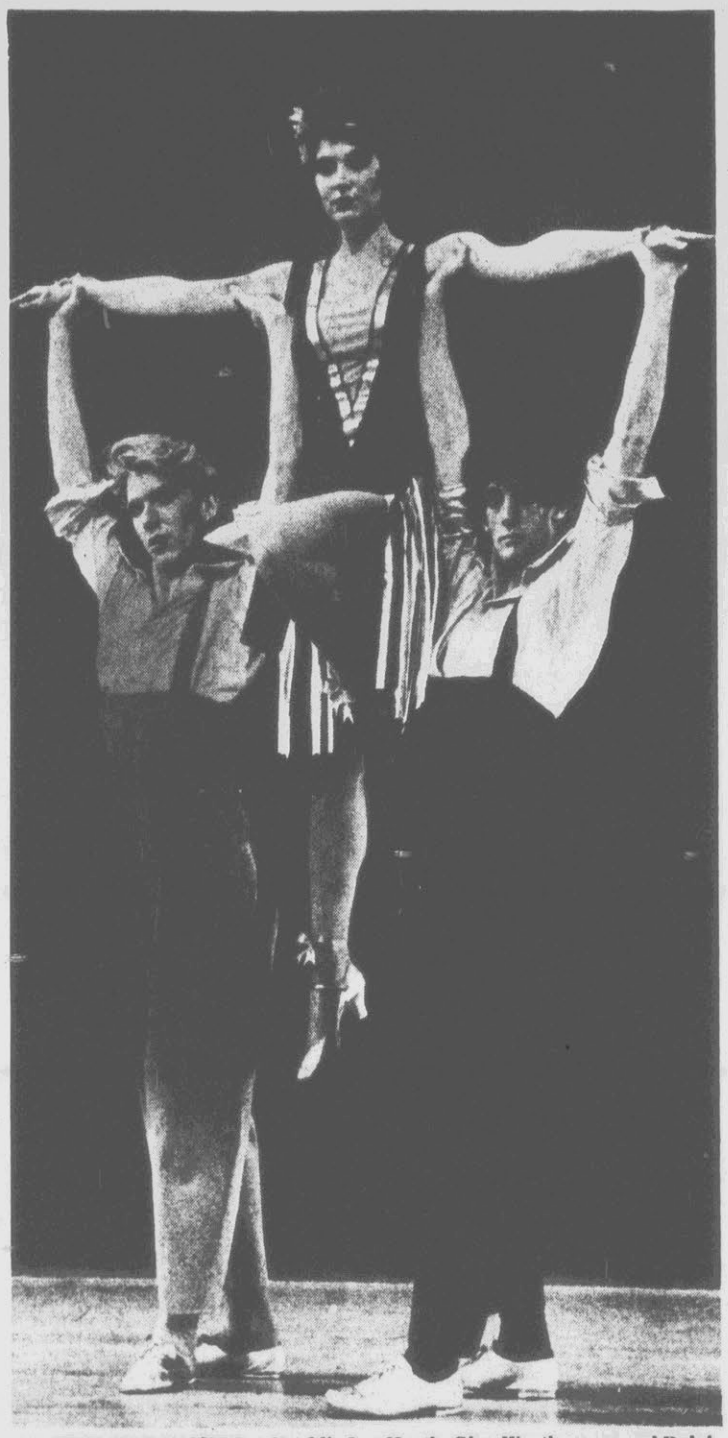

With a selected variety of music, Miss Ray has her dancers within a casual backstage setting listening to WNCT while waiting for a rehearsal to begin. The 11 dancers more or less improvise through a wide range of dance styles.

After "Doodling," the next dance is "The Great Expectation: Having It All," choreographed by Patricia Weeks and featuring Rodger L. Belman, a guest artist from Washington, D.C. Weeks' dance shows a young couple trying to have all the desirable things that the typical young American wants — a physically fit body, a family, a career — and a time for romance.

Appearing in the beginning, the end, and at times between, the two provide transitions from one aspect of the couple's life to another by juggling objects which represent various phases of the couple's life. Although all the activities can be quite stressful, Weeks takes a light look at the situation.

A counter view of love and life is offered by choregrapher David Wanstreet in the third composition of the Dance Theater. "No Deposit, No Return" is a terse jazz/ballet collage suggesting the many moods of contemporary love. Wanstreet's piece will be danced by his tour oriented company and is titled ". . . 5, 6, 7 and 8!!!!"

The 1987 Dance Theater presentation of four dances will close with a romantic, nostalgic dance composition titled "Cheek to Cheek." The dance is based on ballroom dancing and is choreographed by Patricia Pertalion. It will feature the two-step, tango, fox trot and several other forms of ballroom dancing.

A TRIO OF DANCERS — Freddie Lee Heath, Gina Weatherman and Ralph Bass, left to right, are shown as they appeared in last year's Dance Theater. The three will perform again during this year's Dance Theater program, to be presented Friday and Saturday and again on March 2 and 3. Performances will be at McGinnis Theater on the ECU campus with curtain time each evening at 8:15 p.m. For ticket details and other information, call 757-6390.

Outdoor Dramas Set Auditions

CHAPEL HILL — Outdoor drama companies from Valdese and from Lincoln City, Indiana and Big Stone Gap, Virginia, have announced plans to attend auditions at the upcoming Institute of Outdoor Drama at the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill. These three bring to 18 the number of companies planning to be on hand during the auditions.

The auditions are set for March 21 on the UNC campus in Chapel Hill. Representatives of outdoor drama groups attending will be looking for actors, singers, dancers and technicians interested in summer theater work.

Persons who audition on that date must be 18 years or older and have had previous theater training or credit. Singers are to bring two prepared numbers with music; dancers will perform exercises and modern choreography; actors will perform a one-minute prepared monologue, and technician interviews will be scheduled during callbacks.

North Carolina outdoor drama producers who will be seeking cast and technicians for their 1987 shows are: "From This Day Forward," Valdese; "Horn in the West," Boone; "The Liberty Cart," Kenansville; "The Lost Colony," Manteo; "The Sword of Peace," Snow Camp, and "Unto These Hills," Cherokee.

Representative from 12 out-of-state drama groups will also be looking for persons for their outdoor productions.

A full day of auditions is scheduled for March 21 — with morning sessions for acting and singing; with dance auditons, callbacks and technician interviews in th afternoon.

Mark Sumner, director of the outdoor institute, estimates that nearly 200 auditionees are expected to attend the March 21 auditions.

Favorite Music Maker Of Alaska's Indians Is The Fiddle

EDITOR'S NOTE — The fiddle found its way to the American frontier early on, so it should come as no surprise that it's a favorite instrument of Alaska's Indians. But theirs is a new kind of music, developed from the strains passed down mouth-to-mouth, ear-to-ear over the decades.

By DEAN FOSDICK
Associated Press Writer

FAIRBANKS, Alaska (AP) — In the chill and darkness of Alaska winter, Indians along the Yukon River gather to keep alive a fiddling tradition that owes as much to mail order-catalogs as to fur traders.

Hudson Bay fur trappers introduced violin music to the Athapascans of interior Alaska in the 1820s. With the music came dancing; light-hearted reels, jigs, square dances and waltzes with roots in Scotland, French Canada and the Orkney Islands.

But it was Sears, Roebuck & Co. and Montgomery Ward that a century later supplied phonographs, records and fiddles in exchange for furs. And that brought country and western music by steamboat to the Yukon.

"I was raised in the wilderness where my dad used to hunt and fish," says Bill Stevens, 53, from Fort Yukon. "We'd come into the villages for dancing, which was always done to fiddles and guitars.

"Pretty soon I asked my mother to get me a fiddle and she ordered one from a Sears Roebuck catalog.

"I was about 15 then and I learned to play it by ear. Where I was, there was no formal training. No teachers. It wasn't until years later in California that I learned I was holding it wrong."

Since that time Stevens has won scores of trophies in fiddling contests. He has cut an album and traded his Sears violin for a blue plastic model, an electric instrument similar to the kind used by many professionals.

That's a sizable improvement over some of the instruments once carried in dog sleds to potlatches, festivals and dances.

The people along the river found it easier to pack a violin or guitar for their travels than anything else, Stevens says. And they were easier to repair. Lynx or marten gut was used when violin strings broke. Rabbit-snare wire was wrapped around battered instruments to hold them together.

Stevens talked with a reporter while Indian musicians representing more than 25 villages in Alaska and Canada played in groups of two or three on the stage of the local Eagles Hall.

No penguin-garbed musicians on this stage. The majority wore baseball caps, plaid flannel shirts, suspenders and hunting boots.

Each played in 15- to 30-minute sets, turning out a blend of foot-stompin', hand-clappin' music that had scores of couples whirling and wheeling on the dance floor.

Many of the men and women wore beaded, ankle-length moccasin dancing shoes worth hundreds of dollars. Others wore foam insulated moon boots and jogging shoes as they rounded the floor in time to the music.

The occasion was the Institute of Alaska Native Arts Fourth Annual Fiddling Festival, three days of jam sessions, workshops and dancing in late November.

It's the waiting time between fishing and trapping for these performers, most of whom live in roadless villages near the Yukon River north of Fairbanks.

But one had returned home from Maine and two others showed up from Tuktoyaktuk, a Canadian village on an island in the Beaufort Sea.

"What you see out there on the dance floor, basically, are people who like simple tunes," says Gordon Olin, an Athapascan who had grown up in the Kokrines, an area of low hills, trees, hunting and fishing camps near the Yukon River.

"The majority of the people don't like to hear music they don't understand," says Olin, who now lives in Millinocket, Maine. "And they want to be able to dance to it."

Joe Wilson is a blues-and-gospel musician who has attended the festival for two of its four years. The first time he came as an observer for the National Endowment for the Arts, which had supplied seed money to help get the festival going.

The second time he came as a consultant, paid by the festival to document the music and help maintain the tradition.

"Somebody told me that 30 percent of the music was Scottish, some from Orkney, some this, some that," Wilson said in a telephone interview from Elkhorn, Miss., where he was performing with his group.

"Actually, a large part of it was learned from old Sears Roebuck 78s. There was a time when you could send skins down to Chicago and they'd send back crank-type phonographs and records."

You can get an idea of what part of the river the musicians are from by watching their feet, Wilson says.

"Some of them do a foot clog. That's where a fiddler beats accompaniment with both feet. All the old French voyageurs played that way.

"But there's a difference in the music as you go downriver," he says. "There's more blues and country, more of a modern influence. And you see them keeping time with one foot.

"English is really the only thing they have in common."

Wilson, who grew up in the hills and hollows of East Tennessee, says the Athapascans are developing a new kind of music from the strains passed down mouth-to-mouth, ear-to-ear over the decades.

"It sparkles," he says. "It has a wild, wonderful quality to it.

"These people are hunters. I think they play music sometimes the way they hunt. I hear an untamed quality about them. This horse doesn't have a bridle on it. There's discipline there, but the boundaries are different."

John Karsnak — Greenville's Mr. Hardware

More than 65 years have passed since Scranton, Pa. native John Karsnak, then a 16-year-old lad eager for adventure, heeded the siren call to come to the warmer climes of the South to seek his fortune and softer winters. For about a year, somewhat in the manner of a bird seeking a nesting place, he sampled life for brief intervals in Kinston, Hobgood and Rocky Mount before discovering Greenville in the latter months of 1921.

Greenville soon became the place he wanted to stay, to make his home — a fact that surely places Karsnak in the forefront of pioneers in the early influx of Yankees journeying south to Pitt County.

And for most of those 65 years, John Karsnak has been in the hardware business in Greenville, at first working for others beginning in 1928 and from 1947 until a few years ago as owner and proprietor of John's Hardware on South Pitt Street.

John's Hardware has become synonomous with permanancy in a Greenville that has seen constant changes of locations within the last two decades.

John Karsnak has also become one of the best known "figures of legend" in Greenville, particularly among oldtimers who have been astounded by his knowledge of hardware and for his ability to spin a good tale drawn from his life experiences and of people he has known.

Karsnak is proud of the motto he said he often repeated to customers: "I told my customers that if they couldn't find what they wanted in my store, it was probably something they didn't need anyway." He immediately added, "of course, if they really needed something I didn't have, I'd make all sorts of efforts to find out where they could get it."

He claims that the motto still holds true for John's Hardware even a decade after selling the business to Ted and Ruth Turner. And he's not altogether disassociated from the hardware business. Since selling his business to the Turners, he remains active there, working for two and a half days each week.

Another thing that amazes his friends and associates is Karsnak's memory of names, dates, events. At 83 (he reached that age on Feb. 8), Karsnak's memory shines as clearly as the gleam of the new items stocked in the hardware store. He has, too, a talent for relating little events that tell a bigger story about the past.

The Early Years

"It was shortly before Christmas in 1920, on December 4, in fact, that I made a decision to leave home. At that time in Pennsylvania, boys who did not want to go on to high school by law had to attend a manual training school one day each week, or work. I took a look at the high schools and decided I'd rather work. I was 13 and one-half then, and had just finished the 8th grade.

"There were five boys in my family, I was the second oldest. Scranton, which incidentally was the first American city to have electricity throughout the town, was a coal town. I didn't want to work in the coal mines, so another brother and I found work at a factory in Pittston that made paper boxes of the kind used for shoes and other small items. We traveled to and from work each day by what was called the third rail, a conveyance similar to a streetcar. Pittston is located across the Susquehanna River from Scranton. In summer it was very hot, in winter very cold."

It was late in 1920 that the factory they worked in closed. "That was when I decided to be a runaway. I recalled reading in my geography book how warm it was even in winter, down South. So, without saying anything — after all I was nearly 17 — I bought a railroad ticket to Philadelphia and then started hitchhiking South." Karsnack said he had numerous rides, mostly uneventful as he thumbed his way South.

Sometimes, however, his by-thumb travel was not so humdrum. "In Washington, D.C., late one night, I met three men eating chocolates. They gave me some to eat, and I was glad, because I was hungry. Later, when they gave me a ride, it became clear they had robbed a candy store, so on some pretext or other I got them to let me off.

The next day he was walking along a Virginia highway and teamed up with a man. "We walked for awhile along the road together. I remember he had a coconut and he shared it with me."

A little further on a man gave Karsnak and another lad a ride to Henderson, his first destination in North Carolina. "He was a kind man, gave each of us a couple of dollars and five dollors for our supper and a room for the night."

From Henderson, there was a ride east "with a Mr. King from Kinston. He was an insurance man returning to Kinston. Unfortunately, there was an accident in Johnston County and my skull was fractured. We were taken to the clinic in Goldsboro. I didn't give the people my right name."

The next morning, Father Freeman, a Catholic priest in Goldsboro, came to see me. I suppose because I am Catholic I decided to give the priest my real name and the name and address of my folks. He sent a message back home, and right away my folks sent me $30. I got back home just in time for Christmas 1920, all bandaged up with a fractured skull, but they were so glad to see me they never got around to fussing with me about running away."

By March, 1921, Karsnak had recuperated from the accident. "Somehow word got to me about the trial of the men who were involved in the accident. I made up my mind to hitchhike back to Kinston for the trial. I went to see Mr. King, found out both his knees were injured, he couldn't walk. And the trial was already over."

From Kinston, Karsnak hopped a freight train. It ended up in Hobgood. "I got off there, found a job with Mr. and Mrs. Frank McLenmore, who operated a hotel. After six months they closed the hotel and went to Rocky Mount where they opened a store. She did ladies clothing, he was a tailor. Mrs. McLenmore was a second mother to me."

It was at the beginning of the 1921 tobacco season that John Karsnak left Rocky Mount to come to Greenville to work in Matt Duke's grocery store on South Pitt Street. "I worked there until the end of the tobacco season early in 1922. Remember that the season was much longer then, not like now. When the season ended, Mr. Duke said he'd had to let me go, but would find a job for me. The man was C.W. Harvey, owner of Greenville Ice and Coal Co. As a clerk there, I loaded wagons, sent out orders. We had seven wagons and four ice trucks and the company also sold coal and wood. Mr. Duke had paid me $15 a week, but Mr. Harvey could only pay $12 a week.

"After six years my pay had been raised to $35 a week. Mr. Harvey was the best man I ever worked for."

By 1927, Karsnak was a young man of 23, and felt he was ready to settle down and have a family. "On Nov. 6, 1927, I married a Greenville girl, Emma Mallison, so later this year we will celebrate our 60th wedding anniversary. She's been a patient, understanding wife, putting up with me all those years when I spent so much time in hardware."

John and Emma Karsnak have two children — a son, John Jr., who lives in the western part of the state; and Elizabeth Stokes. They have three grandchildren and one great-grandchild.

First Hardware Experience

Karsnak's entry into the world of hardware was in early 1928. "I went to work at C.H. Edwards Hardware at $25 a week. Mr. Edwards always kept his store opened on Wednesday afternoons although other stores closed then. One day when there was a ball game, a Coastal Plain game on Wednesday afternoon, I made up my mind I was going. Mr. Edwards had given me bills to collect. I managed to collect all the bills during the morning. At dinnertime I gave Mr. Edwards half what I'd collected, pocketed the rest. At 1:30 I came back to the store, and told Mr. Edwards I was going out to finish collecting. Of course I headed out to Guy Smith Stadium, thoroughly enjoyed the game. A friend of mine, Hogan Gaskins, sat next to me.

"After the game," Karsnak said, "I went back to the store with the other half of what I'd collected that morning. Mr. Edwards told me how good I'd done collecting it all in one day."

But the deception was unveiled first thing next morning. "Hogan came in, mentioned to Mr. Edwards how much I seemed to enjoy the ball game. Mr. Edwards asked me if I'd gone and I told him that I sure did. But he never would be convinced that I went to the game."

Karsnak said this was one of several tricks he and the other clerk, Herman Gaylor, played on Mr. Edwards.

Joint Venture

In 1937, Karsnak and Herman Gaylor made a decision to go into a hardware business of their own. "R.M. Garrett, James Ficklen, Sr. and J.D. Aman backed the two of us financially in opening a new store. We all had a one-fifth share in the business. We named the store Pitt Hardware Company. It was located on Dickinson Avenue and we operated it from 1937 until 1947. The store prospered and in 1947, our three backers bought us out. Herman decided to go to work at the old A&P Store. At that time I bought the property where the hardware store now operates. At first I sold from a building behind a house that was there. It was soon moved from the site and I built the store."

Greenville and area customers soon came to know that whatever item of hardware they wanted, it would only take a moment for John Karsnak to know exactly where it could be found. This was true not only of items that were easily seen and often sold, but of seldom called for goods. "He still knows exactly where everything is," said Les Turner. "Ruth and I never cease to wonder how he does it."

One of the factors that prompted Karsnak to reach his decision to sell to the Turners, he said, "was the problem I had with keeping help. Through the years, I had a lot of boys and young men work for me. All of them were good, hard working lads. But somebody always came along who could offer them better jobs and they would leave. I certainly couldn't blame them, they owed it to themselves, but the end result was that I came to be a training school for others."

Recollections

Anyone around town who knows John Karsnak will tell you that his recollection of things that happened is the past makes fascinating listening — and particularly his recall of hectic, often humorous things that took place during World War II.

A few examples are:

• "Before the war, I used to buy a good supply of triple enameled pots and pans from a firm in Canandaigua on the U.S.-Canadian border in upper state New York. Their man called on me for orders once a year, but I was out of those items. So in October I decided to go up there to see what I could get.

"The plant was two miles outside the town. I walked there. I never minded walking, loved it, still do. Anyway, an old gentleman was seated at a desk. He told me to look at his order book, check what I wanted. Later, he took me home to eat supper with him. Two weeks later I received a big half truck of enamelware. I'd checked what I wanted, but had not indicated how many of each. But it paid off well, I had no trouble selling all of them."

• Another visit during the years of wartime scarcity also was rewarding.

"We just couldn't get nails," Karsnak said. "I took the train to Baltimore to the Jones & Loughlin firm. I insisted on seeing the head man in the office and explained the urgent need of farmers and the tobacco industry for nails.

"He looked at me and said 'your firm never bought from me. I can't let you have them now.'"

Karsnak said the man softened his attitude a bit and asked him where he was from originally. It developed that the nail man and Karsnak had grown up in the same neighborhood in Scranton. "We compared streets, schools, friends and neighbors.

"That year I received two carloads of nails. It was a real help in the area. People were really suffering from the lack of nails."

• On another occasion, Karsnak said he decided to combine business with pleasure. "Wake Forest was playing Army at West Point, a game I especially wanted to see. So I decided to visit Scharade Cutlery on the other side of West Point. To get to the cutlery plant, I had to take a train to Newburgh, cross the Hudson River by ferry, and then take a bus to a little crossroads. I ate there, had a big, lovely meal of fish, tomatoes, coffee, dessert, everything. And it cost me 50 cents, a real bargain even in the 1940s.

"I found out the cutlery firm was six miles out in the country with no bus service there. I started walking. A man on a pickup truck gave me a ride, let me out in front of a big, old brick building. When I told the old gentleman there my name, he immediately said, 'Oh, you're from Greenville, North Carolina. I remember getting orders from you.' After I'd ordered what I needed in knives, scissors and hair clippers, I was taken on a tour of the plant. I was told that the firm depended on older men as artisans. The youngest was 45, most were past 70. The majority of their craftsmen were from England, men knowledgeable in doing fine work in metal. I was shown one project where men worked on an order of 50 dozen gold plated knives.

"These were being sold to Macy's Department store for $1,000 each for presentation to important people."

Karsnak's order was more utilitarian. "Besides the items I normally ordered, I asked for 60 dozen pocket knives. Within a week I'd sold all of them."

• One wartime scoop that created a local problem was Karsnak's decision to order new fangled plastic clothes pins from California. "You simply could not get wooden pins," he said. "I received a shipload of the plastic pins. Word got around I had them, was selling at 15 cents a dozen, limiting purchased to two dozen per customer.

"The store was like a circus. Soon I got a call from James Ficklen, Sr. who told me he was having problems keeping the women working in his tobacco factory at work. He said he wished I'd stop selling the clothespins for awhile."

Likes Retirement

John Karsnak admits to feeling good about being retired. "But I'm glad to have my hand in hardware for a couple of days each week. It keeps me young."

When things are not busy at John's Hardware, whoever is handy is asked to join in a card game in one corner of the store.

And Karsnak is proud of an exceptional recognition given him. The Estwing Company, manufacturers of hammers and hatchets, presented him with a plaque honoring him for half a century in hardware — the plaque bears a gold-plated hammer inscribed with Karsnak's name.

Karsnak remembers with pleasure four years service in the National Guard and his time as a volunteer with the Greenville Fire Department. "But now, my spare time is spent fishing as often as possible."

Karsnak owns a cottage at Bayview. He and a friend, Don Edgerley, also retired, fish in the Tar and Pamlico Rivers.

Karsnak feels he's been a lucky man. "I've enjoyed working at every job I ever had, and have never tired of meeting and getting to know people. That has been important to me all these years."

"I told my customers that if they couldn't find what they wanted in my store, it was probably something they didn't need anyway."

HELPING A CUSTOMER — John Karsnak, left, and Ruth Turner, center, both concentrate on serving a customer, Randy Manning of Greenville, an employee of Evans Street Auto.

Antiques Should Add Warmth To Your Home

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

The connection between collecting and home decorating has always been close. Recently, heightened interest in traditional interiors has made that relationship even more intimate.

As an example, take this year's Winter Antiques Show in New York.

A number of the 75 exhibitors hired a professional designer to lay out their booths, and the show's management sponsored a panel of decorators who talked about living with antiques.

Show management also enlisted the services of fashion and furniture designer Ralph Lauren to decorate some of the show spaces and of florist J. Barry Ferguson to create a number of impressive floral arrangements.

In a sense the show's emphasis on decorating with antiques has led to its success. Mario Buatta, a decorator, has chaired the show since 1976.

"The first year, I asked Lee Radziwill to do the decorations for the preview party and for the next nine days everyone came in and asked, 'Where is the Lee Radziwill room'?" he recalled during the show's run this February.

Buatta says this occurrence made him realize that enlisting the aid of celebrity decorators could boost prestige and profits. The next year he included fashion designers in the festivities and realized another jump in income.

Last year, some $500,000 was raised for the benefit of the East Side House Settlement and about the same amount is expected this year.

Buatta says the lectures and programs that accompany the show always include aspects of collecting and integrating antiques into the home.

"The one that always sells out first deals with decorating with antiques. People want to see how other people live and also want to know how they can use the antiques they have in their own home."

The kinds of questions that come up often include how to place old things within a contemporary setting and whether everything has to match, said Buatta. He added that a concern with scale was also evident.

At this year's decorating with antiques discussion, Mariette Himes Gomez, a New York designer, showed slides of contemporary, period and remodeled-barn homes furnished with antiques.

She says antiques go well in any type of environment. Their major role is to add to the warmth of a home and to give the eye something to feast on.

"People worry that they have to have a matched sort of environment, which is really not true," says Gomez, who actually prefers a mix to the authentic period room which can be dull, predictable and outdated.

"Mix things up according to what you like and you create your own style. Most people have a personal style and they don't know it," she said, adding that to some extent buying antiques also allows you to recoup your errors.

"Most people can't afford to make expensive mistakes. If they take a chance and buy a purple carpet without realizing it may give a purplish cast to white walls, it can be expensive." But if an antique doesn't work out, in these days of rising values you usually can sell it.

Certain types of antiques, Gomez says, look good almost everywhere, such as hooked rugs and antique quilts, both of which add texture to a room.

Besides being a place to pick up decorating ideas, the show offers an opportunity in a few hours to see the wares of major dealers from all over the country.

Trends in antiques collecting have a way of surfacing or at least being noticed at this event. This year's edition, for example, confirmed the growing interest in formal interiors with much 19th-century furniture and many large pieces for sale.

Russell Carrell, show manager, noted several possible trends in the making, such as a new emphasis on prints and watercolors of interiors and architectural drawings and a growing number of antique pillows.

Buatta saw more porcelain on view and a number of commentators found that animal representations, especially dogs, turned up in a number of spaces. According to Buatta "there were at least eight pairs of iron dogs, and they all sold."

Traditional Styling At Its Best

Definition of traditional styling speaks for itself in this excellent design. Among the many features of this traditional home are the two copper-roofed bay windows and the stone veneer trim. At the front entrance, an attractive circle head transom above the weather protected front door adds refinement to this plan. Vaulted ceilings extend in the foyer, master bedroom, dining room and the breakfast room, giving these rooms added spaciousness, while sliding glass doors from the breakfast room open onto the outside wooden deck. The kitchen has a connecting pantry for plenty of closet and storage space. Also, walk-in closets are utilized in all bedrooms, while the master bedroom has a dressing room in its bath area. A full basement is offered in this plan.

China Can Be Repaired At Home

By COUNTRY LIVING
A Hearst Magazine

Everybody has a favorite ceramic piece that needs repair — and you may be able to do-it-yourself using the right techniques and materials.

The materials you need, according to an article in the March issue of Country Living, are easily obtained from art shops or hardware stores, model or toy shops, and drugstores.

The first step in putting back together a broken piece of china is to clean every piece thoroughly with dishwashing liquid and an old toothbrush. Practice joining the pieces before you try bonding. In cases of multiple breaks, decide the best order to avoid "locking out" the last piece.

The best adhesive for bonding china is slow-setting epoxy-resin. Apply it as thinly as possible to one side of the join only.

It comes in two tubes; equal parts are mixed together with an orange stick, metal spatula or similar, non-plastic tool. Have a bottle of acetone and a cotton rag handy to clean off spilled adhesive before it dries. Do not use near open flames.

Support and tape the piece or pieces while the adhesive hardens. Lay many small pieces of cellophane tape, evenly spaced across the entire length of the join, while using firm, even pressure to push the pieces together.

As you tape, keep checking the alignment and adjust as necessary.

On awkward pieces such as a broken arm on a figure, use plasticine (an oil-based clay) as well as tape for support and lay the figure down at an appropriate angle. A cake tin of clean sand or salt is a good support. Do not allow plasticine to come in contact with the join.

Remove the tape after 24 hours. Use acetone to wipe off tape stains and a sharp knife for excess dried adhesive.

Chipped pottery is another repairable problem. Fill in chips using a putty of epoxy-resin as a base, with titanium dioxide — a strong white pigment — for color, and kaolin powder as a filler. Do not inhale kaolin powder.

Add kaolin until the putty is fairly stiff; then transfer some to the chip with a small metal spatula or orange stick, pressing it in. Use a wet finger to pat it into shape. Always underfill rather than overfill.

After a few hours but before the filler is rock hard, rub it down with small cut-up squares of sandpaper, starting with a coarse, a medium, then a fine grade.

For more elaborate modeling, such as a cup handle, follow the same procedure but make sure the filler is really stiff with kaolin powder and left for two or three hours to harden before modeling to the required shape.

To obtain a closer match to the background color than plain white, buy a range of fine-ground dry artist's pigments from a good art shop and add to the filler.

For any decoration, mix dry pigments with a varnish medium in a metal or china eggcup or small glass jar. Enamel paints from model shops are a convenient but less versatile alternative to dry pigments. When paint is dry, cover with a clear varnish.

Don't begin your do-it-yourself repairs, Jeff Oliver advised in Country Living, on anything too valuable or ancient.

Restoration of such pieces is best left to an expert such as Jonathan Mark Gershen, one of the very few restorers of porcelain, pottery and glass, whose clients include museums, antique dealers and private collectors.

Gershen, a member of the American Institute of Conservation of Historic and Artistic Works, employs two levels of restoration — the highest level reserved for important cabinet and display pieces and a less expensive process intended for items in daily use. The average repair takes three to six months.

Gershen can be reached at 1463 Pennington Rd., Ewing Township, NJ, 08618.

Here's The Answer

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

Q. — We want to remodel our kitchen. We both are fairly handy. Do you think it is something we can do ourselves?

A. — This question, asked frequently, cannot be answered by anybody who does not know your capabilities. But there is an added obstacle to replying to your question in this case. What do you mean by "remodel?" It can mean putting up a few extra cabinets or perhaps merely refinishing them. It can mean an entire paint job or knocking down a wall or two. It can mean completely redesigning the facilities you have or adding some new ones. In short, it can mean a weekend or two of work or six months to a year of it. You surely know what skills you have. Do not be afraid to try something you haven't done before, but be careful you don't enter into areas about which you have neither the knowledge nor the ability. For instance, remodeling a kitchen often includes a lot of electrical and plumbing work, some of which you may not be permitted to do even if you know how. If you know somebody who has tackled such a job, or even someone who has had it done professionally, talk it over in detail and find out what's involved.

Q. — We plan on putting up a solid-board fence soon. Do we have to set the posts in concrete?

A. — Generally, yes. A solid-board fence has to be built extra strong because it must take the full force of high winds.

Q. — I'm thinking about putting curved clay tiles on the roof when it comes time to reroof. There are wooden shingles on the roof now. Will a regular roof be able to hold the weight of the tiles, which I find are very heavy?

A. — Only a roofer who makes a personal inspection can tell you that, but consider this: When a house is built on which there will be curved clay tiles, such as in Spanish-style architecture, the roof is built extra strong to hold them. Therefore, most houses, without extensive work, will not support curved clay tiles.

Q. — I will soon be getting my roof done with asphalt shingles, the same as are on it now. I hear the term "self-sealing" a lot. What does that mean?

A. — That the shingles have self-sealing strips on the surface to keep them from blowing off in high winds. The self-sealing portion bonds to the shingle with the help of the sun's rays.

Q. — We want to paint the baseboards in a bedroom that will be entirely painted a few weeks later. Is there any reason this cannot be done?

A. — Not especially. It just makes one wonder the reason for such an unusual sequence. By the way, no one should walk in that particular room for most of the day the baseboards are painted.

Q. — I painted our house a couple of months ago. It looked all right for a time, but now seems to have developed wrinkles in certain areas. What causes this?

A. — Nearly always, wrinkling so soon after a paint job is a sign too much paint was applied in the affected locations. When paint is applied too thickly, the top part of it dries before the bottom part. If you decide to repaint, you will have to smooth the present surface first.

(Kinds of paint, surface preparation, rollers and brushes are among the topics discussed in Andy Lang's booklet, "Paint Your House Inside and Out," which can be obtained by sending 50 cents and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to Know-How, P.O. Box 477, Huntington, NY 11743. Questions of general interest will be answered in the column.)

Garden Clinic

Q. Will it hurt to cut my liriope back?

A. If your liriope is beginning to look ragged, cut it back before new growth begins. The same is true for pampas grass.

Q. I have clay soil. How can I turn it this spring without it clodding?

A. Turn the soil when it is becoming a bit dry. Later, disk or till the soil to break the clods further. Keep adding as much sawdust, compost, manure and other organic matter as possible to the soil each year.

Q. What is the forsythia that blooms in the winter? The branches are dark green and not as stiff as other forsythias.

A. The plant you refer to is not a forsythia, although at a distance its form and yellow flowers may remind you of a forsythia. The shrub is winter jasmine (Jasminum nudiflorum), a tolerant, low-growing shrub with pendulous branches.

Q. Can broccoli be grown as a spring crop?

A. Yes. As a spring crop, broccoli should be set out between March 1 and March 15. In the Mountains plant 10 to 20 days later, and in the Coastal Plain plant 10 to 20 days earlier.

Q. Are poinsettias poisonous?

A. No. This false rumor raises its ugly head every year. Research has proven that poinsettias are not harmful to human or animal health if eaten.

Q. I want to install a bird feeder in my garden. If I start feeding the birds now, will I have to continue putting out feed all winter?

A. Yes. You need to continue once the birds begin depending on an extra source of feed. A feeder will also draw other birds into the area. There may not be enough food in te area for these additional birds if you discontinue.

SPECIAL OF THE WEEK

1984 Mazda Pickup Beige, 5 speed, air conditioning, camper top, low miles..... WAS $6,295 SALE $5,995

Now that we are all becoming familiar with the new tax laws and understand how we can make them work for us, the decision to lease your new car or truck has been made a lot simpler. With no more I.T.C., and only partial interest deduction to the individual, vehicle leasing has never been more advantageous. And since maximum allowable depreciation for businesses or business use has now been stretched over five years, leasing becomes an even more attractive alternative to buying your new car or truck. Leasing allows you to deduct your true cost of depreciation annually (for business use).

So you see, leasing is really in your best interest. And at LeasePro, we like to think we're looking out for your best interest. Call the Leasing Professionals today and start putting the new tax laws to work for you in any type or model vehicle you need.

THE BMW 325es. A CAR DESIGNED TO FIRE UP THE DRIVER'S INTERNAL COMBUSTION ENGINE.

To the embarrassment of some two-seater, so-called sports whirlwinds, we present the BMW 325es.

"A beautifully refined hot rod from Bavaria" (Motor Trend)

Its 6-cylinder Eta engine provides a torque-rich driving force. A BMW sports suspension endows the car with rare turn-and-corner prowess.

Delivering you from speed to safe standstill is BMW's anti-lock braking system (ABS)—as standard.

And further performance hallmarks include spoilers front and rear, low profile tires, sports seats, and an M-Technic steering wheel.

Q. In all the articles about Prince Edward, who recently quit the Royal Marines, he is described as "the 22-year-old prince who is fifth in line to the British throne." Who are the four ahead of him?—Rosemary W., Asbury Park, N.J.

A. Prince Charles is first in line to inherit the throne from his mother, Queen Elizabeth II. He is followed in the accession order by his two sons: Prince William, 4, and Prince Harry, 2. In fourth position is Prince Andrew, and in fifth is Prince Edward—both of them the younger brothers of Prince Charles.

Q. Can you please name the composer and title of the theme music played for the Gallo wine commercial? It is hauntingly beautiful. Is it available in music stores?—A. McGrath, Redondo Beach, Calif.

A. The title of the music is "Hymne," by Vangelis Papathanassiou, best known for his score for the film "Chariots of Fire." The selection is part of the Vangelis album "Opera Sauvage" (Polydor), available wherever records are sold.

Q. I read in the papers that Johnny Carson is about to take a fourth bride in the form of Alex Maas, a shapely blonde he met on the beach near his house. How much support money does Johnny have to pay his third wife, Joanna?—Anna Silverman, Los Angeles, Calif.

A. The former Joanna Holland, to whom the comic was married from 1972 to 1985—reportedly receives $20,000 a month. The divorce settlement also gave her ownership of several properties.

Q. How old is Gloria Vanderbilt, and how many husbands has she had? Was director Stanley Kubrick one of them?—Cheryl D., Sioux City, Iowa

A. Gloria Vanderbilt, 63, has been married four times—to talent agent Pat di Cicco, orchestra conductor Leopold Stokowski, director Sidney Lumet and writer Wyatt Cooper. Only Lumet, 62—director of such films as "Dog Day Afternoon," "Network" and "The Morning After"—survives.

Q. Harold Macmillan, the former British prime minister who recently died at 92, had a wife, Dorothy, daughter of the ninth Duke of Devonshire. It was well known in upper-class British circles that she cheated on her husband. Was her lover Winston Churchill?—A.L., Washington, D.C.

A. Her lover was Robert Boothby, a life peer and member of the House of Lords. Lady Dorothy Macmillan died in 1966.

Q. I understand that Sylvester Stallone is so afraid that harm will come to his wife, Brigitte, who towers above him, that he has hired at least three bodyguards to look after her at all times. Is that true?—Kimberley H., Henderson, N.C.

A. Stallone's wife, the former Brigitte Nielsen, seems always to have at least one bodyguard within arm's length—except when she goes to the powder room, and then the guard stands outside. It is Stallone, however, who is accompanied by a minimum of three bodyguards.

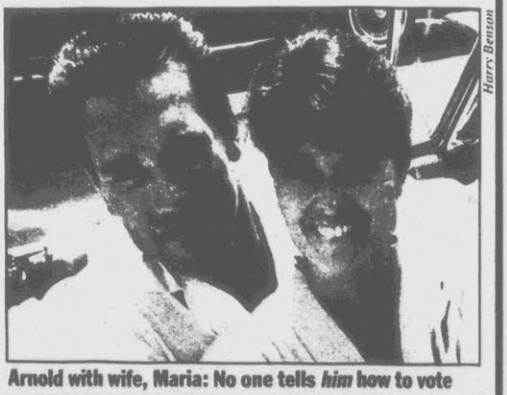

AP/Wide World

Brigitte and "Sly" Stallone: Real muscle waits nearby

Q. Is it true that Arnold Schwarzenegger—the body-builder, film star and California real-estate entrepreneur—is a Republican, even though he's married to Maria Shriver, the most successful grandchild of the Joseph P. Kennedy Democratic dynasty?—Susan Kessler, Santa Cruz, Calif.

A. Schwarzenegger makes no secret of the fact that he is a Republican and a staunch supporter of Ronald Reagan.

Harry Benson

Arnold with wife, Maria: No one tells him how to vote

Q. Is it true that Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. was uncontrollably oversexed? Is that why he had harems in so many cities across the country? And isn't that why a jealous J. Edgar Hoover of the FBI had his phones tapped? Didn't he plan to ruin King's marriage and reputation by distributing those tapes to the press?—Ilena Morales, El Paso, Tex.

A. There is no evidence that Dr. King was "uncontrollably oversexed" or "had harems in so many cities across the country." He was, however, a charismatic personality who attracted women of all races to his hotel rooms—in many of which the FBI had recording equipment. Hoover, a lifelong bachelor, detested King—not only because of the black leader's expansive sex life but also because he felt King was under the influence of Stanley Levison, a lawyer and adviser who allegedly was a Communist. Hoover's assistant, William Sullivan, had tape recordings attesting to King's activities in the bedroom mailed to several reporters and King's associates in the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, but the tactic did not bring King down. A good book on the subject is "Bearing the Cross," by David J. Garrow.

The First-Ever STAR TREK® Collector Plate

The powerful science-fiction drama of Star Trek has enthralled millions for more than two decades. And from the very beginning, the Science Officer of the Starship Enterprise, Mr. Spock, earned the admiration of millions with his superior intellect, cool demeanor, and intriguing Vulcan appearance.

Now the legendary Star Trek series and the popularity of Mr. Spock have inspired the first-ever Star Trek limited-edition collector plate. Susie Morton, well-known portraitist of celebrities, was commissioned to create this important first issue for The Hamilton Collection, in association with Ernst Enterprises.

All the superb intellect of Spock and his steady, calm demeanor have been captured in this colorful and highly realistic work. The background features a rendering of the Starship Enterprise and a planet of another solar system. Ms. Morton also designed an original border in blue and silver, with an inscription of the famous Star Trek motto: "The Voyages of The Starship Enterprise... To Boldly Go Where No Man Has Gone Before." "Mr. Spock" will endure for generations, because this portrait is permanently fused to a gleaming, 8½" fine porcelain plate.

"Mr. Spock" will be strictly limited to a 90-day firing period. To document the issue for future generations, each plate will be serially hand-numbered, and accompanied by a same-numbered Certificate of Authenticity.

"Mr. Spock" premieres a collection of eight fine porcelain plates portraying the main characters of Star Trek. You will have the guaranteed right to own all subsequent issues at the original issue price of $29.50 each. But you will never be under any obligation to acquire any further plates.

In addition to "Mr. Spock," issues will include: "Dr. McCoy," the strong and likeable Medical Officer of Starship Enterprise; "Sulu," the humorous, but most efficient Helmsman; "Scotty," the adventurous Engineering Officer; "Uhura," the beautiful and elegant Communications Officer; "Chekov," the handsome, young Ensign; "Captain Kirk," the strong yet versatile Starship Commander; and a final group portrayal of all of these leading characters.

Furthermore, you may order "Mr. Spock" with absolutely no risk. Under The Hamilton Collection 100% Buy-Back Guarantee, you may return any plate within 30 days of receipt, for a full refund.

Richard Widmark at 72: "I'm having the best time of my life."

Eddie Adams

The 'Bad Guy' Wins In The End

AS A MOVIE STAR, Richard Widmark is one of a rare species that's all but extinct in Hollywood: He has been married to the same woman for nearly 45 years. He also owns a farm in Connecticut and a horse ranch in Hidden Valley, Calif.; spends his winters hibernating in a "small shack," as he calls it, near Santa Barbara, securely tucked away from Hollywood's tinsel whirl; drives old cars, sometimes a truck; has kept his own name; doesn't appear in commercials; doesn't drink; doesn't do drugs; and—probably strangest of all—doesn't have a publicity agent in a business that thrives on hype.

"We always led kind of private lives," Widmark said during lunch in an empty banquet room at the Santa Barbara Biltmore Hotel. "I've used this business to great advantage," he continued, a smile gently creasing his deeply tanned face. The once-blond hair has turned to silver, but the blue eyes are still lively. "It has given me a wonderful life, and I've tried to prevent it from using me. And doing publicity, in my opinion, is where it uses you."

For a man who has appeared in 70 movies in 40 years, Widmark has done a good job of keeping the publicity lid on. I was able to find only three interviews in which the actor discussed his private life in print. And he doesn't do talk shows.

"I've just never gone that route," he said. "Perhaps I could have accomplished more with it, but I wouldn't have enjoyed my life as much. I've no regrets. I've had lots of fun, lots of challenging experiences, and I'm very grateful for it."

Yet in 1961 he had told The New Yorker, "I suppose I wanted to act in order to have a place in the sun. I'd always lived in small towns, and acting meant having some kind of identity."

I suggested that perhaps he was more interested in a place in the shade. "As far as I'm concerned," he replied, "I got my place in the sun. I did what I wanted to do, professionally. As for my personal life, I like to keep it separate. It's a matter of taste. I don't like a lot of ostentatious show. I don't need a mansion and a Rolls-Royce to know who I am. It may be totally wrong, but it's the way I always wanted to live."

"Actually," he added, "there's one guy I always admired for just the way he lived—Jimmy Cagney. He loved the country, the simple life. He built a little stone house at his farm in New York, did it with his own hands—with help, of course—and that was his house. I mean, if you looked at it, you'd think, 'What, Jimmy Cagney lives there?' That's how he wanted to live, and I pretty much feel the same way."

Widmark and Cagney had more in common than their simple lifestyles. Both of their film careers were launched by a single violent scene. In The Public Enemy (1931), Cagney shoves a half-grapefruit into Mae Clark's face, an act that The New York Times critic Bosley Crowther called "one of the cruelest, most startling acts ever committed on film."

In Kiss of Death (1947), Widmark's first film, he went Cagney one better. In the role of the psychopathic Tommy Udo, Widmark pushes an old woman in a wheelchair down a flight of stairs, all the while laughing like a loon. But before sending her on her fatal trip, Udo delights in describing his plans for her son: "You know what I do with squealers? I let 'em have it in the belly so they can roll around a long time, thinking it over." In his review of the film in Time magazine, James Agee wrote of Widmark: "It is clear that murder is one of the kindest things he is capable of."

His performance earned him an Oscar nomination. "I thought, 'Jeez, this is easy,' " he told me, laughing. "I haven't come close since." (However, 24 years later, Widmark received an Emmy nomination for his first TV movie, Vanished.)

He almost didn't get the part in Kiss of Death. "The director, Henry Hathaway, didn't want me," he recalled. "I have a high forehead; he thought I looked too intellectual. But Darryl Zanuck [head of 20th Century-Fox] wanted me to test. For the test, I wore a wig that brought my hairline way down like an ape. But Henry sat on the test. Finally, the production manager sent it to Zanuck. My getting the part didn't make Henry too happy. He gave me kind of a bad time."

But Widmark wasn't about to let a director ruin his movie debut.

"By then," he said, "I'd spent nine years in New York doing plays and live radio—all kinds of stuff—plus 26 plays in college. All that mounts up. I wasn't a kid. I was 32, and I'd been around a long time. I felt secure in my trade. I figured, what the hell, if it doesn't work out, I'll go back to New York. Still, though, I wanted it. I enjoyed the life of a movie actor.

"And I never liked the life of the theater. When you're doing a play, you have to dedicate your whole life to it. You wake up in the morning knowing you're going on at 8:30 that night, and also at 2:30 on matinee days—eight performances a week. You've got to keep fit, get your rest. It's physically demanding. If it's a hit, it goes on forever."

It took Widmark a long time to get to Hollywood, but his success was sudden.

"The rule of thumb in those days was that it took an actor seven good pictures to become known," he explained. "I was lucky. That scene with the old woman had enormous impact. But that's pretty much the way it is with movies. They're generally about moments. People don't remember whole movies. They remember Cagney with the grapefruit. They don't know what picture it was. It's that moment that sticks.

"Also, people can get stuck on a facet of an actor's performance personality they may not even be aware of. They get stuck on a piece of Paul Newman or Clint Eastwood that means a lot to them. That's what keeps big stars up there."

Widmark laughed. "It's weird, the effect actors have on an audience. With the roles I played in those early movies, I found that quite a few people wanted to have a go at me. I remember walking down the street in a small town and this lady coming up and slapping me. 'Here, take that, you little squirt!' she said. Another time I was having dinner in a restaurant when this big guy came over and knocked me right out of my chair."

That people could mistake this gentle, kindly man for the rough characters he has played is a testament to his acting talent. "I hate violence and I hate guns," he said with conviction. "I won't have a gun in my house. I don't hunt, and the one time I went fishing, I caught a little trout. I took him to the basement to scrape him. I called him George. It broke my heart that I had caused his death."

Born in Sunrise, Minn., on Dec. 26, 1914, the son of a traveling salesman, Widmark lived in a succession of small Midwestern towns before his family settled over a bakery his father bought in Princeton, Ill. His father, Carl Henry Widmark, was of Swedish descent, and his mother, Mae Ethel Barr, was Scottish, English and Irish.

"I was a movie nut from the age of 3," he said, "but I don't recall having any interest in acting. I was only in one play in high school. What I had discovered early on was that I enjoyed talking in public. I started giving three-minute speeches in my freshman English class. I loved doing it because I was very shy, and yet, when I got up before an audience, I felt comfortable. Then one day I addressed the whole student body and talked for about 10 minutes. All of a sudden, I was making them laugh, I was making them listen, and I felt very powerful. It was an exhilarating feeling.

"In those days, the only thing to do when you discovered you could talk was to become a lawyer. So from high school I went to Lake Forest College as a pre-law student on a four-year combination athletic-academic scholarship."

Besides attaining high grades and being president of his high school senior class, Widmark lettered four years in football and played another four years at Lake Forest. But it was the college's drama department that caught his fancy.

"I became the protégé of the drama coach," he recalled. "He made me realize that I could make a go at this. I did all kinds of plays, directed some, then stayed on as his assistant for two years."

At Lake Forest, Widmark fell in love with Ora Jean Hazlewood. "We were just kids," he remarked. She preceded him to New York, where she attended the American Academy of Dramatic Arts. They were married in 1942, and their daughter, Anne, was born in 1945. During World War II, Widmark was rejected for military service three times because of a perforated eardrum.

In New York, he started out in radio, doing soap operas and melodramas. "After a couple of years," said Widmark, "I became part of a very busy coterie of actors. Orson Welles had the Mercury Theatre, and he was on every radio show known to man. I worked with a great group of people: Joe Cotten, Van Heflin, Agnes Moorehead, Arlene Francis, Robert Walker. Radio was a great education."

Widmark made his Broadway debut in the comedy Kiss and Tell, followed by roles in Get Away Old Man, Trio, Kiss Them for Me, Dunnigan's Daughter and a Chicago production of the Elmer Rice play Dream Girl.

In Hollywood, his immediate problem was to avoid being typecast as a heavy. His contract with 20th Century-Fox gave Zanuck a seven-year option on his services. Between 1947 and 1954, Widmark made 20 movies for Fox, working with some of the movie industry's top actors and directors.

Some of those early movies include Street With No Name, Road House, Yellow Sky, No Way Out and Panic in the Streets, which offered the actor his first role as a family man. The heavy in that one was Jack Palance. "We rehearsed a scene with a rubber gun," Widmark recalled, "but, unbeknownst to me, for the take he switched to a real gun and bonged me on the head. I was out for about 20 minutes. I was mad as hell when I came to, but I wasn't about to attack him." Widmark shuddered. "He's one tough guy, strong as a gorilla. Offstage, to get himself charged up for his scenes, he'd hammer on Zero Mostel, who played his flunky. Zero kept crying, 'Don't do that!' After a week of this, they took Zero, who was black and blue, to a hospital to soak him in Epsom pads."

In Don't Bother to Knock, Widmark was cast opposite Marilyn Monroe. "She wanted to be this great star, but acting just scared the hell out of her," he said. "That's why she was always late—couldn't get her on the set. She had trouble remembering lines; her performance was glued together line by line. But none of it mattered. With a very few special people, something happens between the lens and the film that is pure magic. That's what makes a great movie star. It has nothing to do with talent, just an ephemeral piece of a personality that clicks. And she had it."

"The trouble with this business," he added, "in order to do the work, you've got to remain vulnerable, to be child-like—a kid playing games, making up stories. At the same time, you've got to be tough as nails to withstand the pressure and competition. It's a paradoxical situation, for when that vulnerability goes, that certain piece of you the public saw can disappear. It's doubly hard for a woman, or our concept of a woman."

The most fun Widmark said he had making a movie was in Two Rode Together, with Jimmy Stewart, directed by John Ford: "We all had tin ears. I'm deaf in one ear, Jimmy's deaf in the other, and Ford was nearly deaf in both. It was four months of the three of us going, 'What? What? What?' "

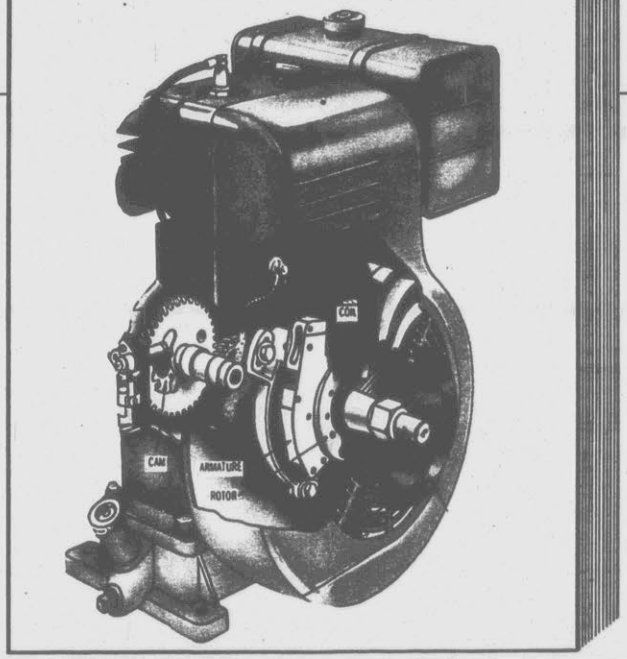

Although he has made many excellent movies, Widmark doesn't have any favorites. "I've discovered in my dotage that I now find the whole moviemaking process irritating," he said with a twisted smile. "I don't have the patience anymore. I've got a few more years to live, and I don't want to spend them sitting around a movie set for 12 hours to do two minutes of film. I want to get going." He snapped his fingers. "I'm always saying, 'Come on, let's move, let's go.' I haven't got that much time to waste. Kids don't mind. They'll sit around, have a great time. They think they're immortal. I guess I used to also. I didn't feel it was so urgent to get it done."

When we met for lunch, the actor had just completed a CBS movie, A Gathering of Old Men, with Lou Gossett. "I had the best time I've had in years making a movie," he said. "The whole cast was great, none of this Hollywood ego crap. The story's about 20 old black guys, a real fascinating group, and I'm the Southern sheriff who comes to ferret out who shot the white man lying there. For the first time in their lives, they stand up to the establishment, and they win. My buddy, Sandman Sims, is in it, and he's the funniest guy. By mid-afternoon, I'd say, 'I'm losing my mind,' and he'd yell, 'What mind?' "

As we left the banquet room, I asked Widmark how he occupies himself when he's not making movies. He gave me that quizzical Widmark stare. "I'm more busy than when I'm working," he said. "I've got my horse ranch, I play tennis, I play golf, keep a few irons in the fire. I don't know—I just live. I'm just having the best time of my life."

We shook hands, said goodbye, and went our separate ways. I turned for a last look. His stride was leisurely, his back ramrod-straight; his silver hair shone in the California sunlight. At 72, he has portrayed every character imaginable in the movies except what he really is: the quintessential gentleman.

SHOULD YOU TAKE VITAMINS?

Many readers have asked about the value and risks of taking vitamins. This article, adapted from Dr. Stuart Berger's new book, "How To Be Your Own Nutritionist," provides some of the answers.

Eddie Adams

Essential for health, can they also help inhibit some diseases? A nutrition doctor talks about benefits and risks.

ALL OF US ARE BOMBARDED with confusing information about vitamins, ranging from warnings of potential dangers to promises of miracle cures. Well, what are vitamins? And, more important, are they good for you?

Why take vitamins? Many of my patients ask why I prescribe vitamin supplements for them. After all, they protest, they eat a balanced diet, so don't they get enough of the crucial nutrients they need?

They may—if they eat the proper proportions of carbohydrates, proteins and fats—but very few people do eat a truly well-balanced diet. Unless you make a dedicated effort to eat fresh foods, you probably don't get as much of certain vital elements as you think. And we're all different. Even if we're eating right, many of us—joggers, women, smokers, the elderly—have special needs.

So, for most of us, vitamins can be an important tool in our search for good health. In fact, each year we Americans spend an estimated $2 billion on vitamin supplements, and about 37 million, or 15 percent of us, determine our own diagnoses, schedules and dosages.

But what is it we're taking?

The simple truth about vitamins. Vitamins are chemicals, and they are absolutely essential to life. Among their many tasks is to insure proper functioning of your nervous system and heart, promote good vision, create strong bones and teeth, and form normal blood cells. Since your body cannot manufacture its own vitamins, you must get them from your food and/or from supplements, depending on your individual needs.

There are principally two kinds of vitamins. The fat-soluble vitamins—A, D, E and K—are stored in your body fat and liver, so you do not need to consume them every day in order to maintain adequate levels. The water-soluble vitamins, on the other hand—the nine B-complex vitamins and C—dissolve in the water of your body, and your body generally stores them less well. In some cases, it can't store them at all, so you should consume them every day.

For both kinds of vitamins, your body's cells do not require huge doses to function well. With most vitamins, your body can only absorb a finite amount, so the excess is either stored or flushed out in your urine. In some cases, enormous doses—or stored excesses built up over time—can produce adverse side effects.

Deficiencies. Believe it or not, there are people in our country who do not get enough vitamins. Recently, a nutritional abstract stated that fully one half of elderly people in institutions may have classic scurvy—caused by a gross lack of vitamin C. In a landmark 1965 study reported in the American Journal of Clinical Nutrition, researchers tested 120 low-income patients newly admitted to a hospital. Only 12 percent had proper levels of all vitamins, using the conservative Recommended Daily Allowance standard. Almost 90 percent lacked at least one essential vitamin, and more than half came up short in two essential vitamins. Yet most of them were consuming what appeared to be a normal diet, by American standards. And two-thirds showed no overt signs of vitamin deficiencies.

Deficiency states occur when a particular vitamin is either grossly lacking or improperly absorbed by your body. As we age, our physiological systems change, and our vitamin needs are partly tied to the aging changes in our bodies. This has an impact on how well our bodies use vitamins and therefore on how much we require to stay in good health. In older age, our risk of vitamin deficiency for one or more vitamins increases.

Vitamins and disease. Evidence is accumulating that vitamins may play a larger role in inhibiting disease than previously had been thought. Recent studies in several countries suggest that in areas where people get little vitamin C, the overall cancer rate is high. A recent study in this country indicates that black men with a low intake of vitamin C may have twice the risk of esophageal cancer as those with a much higher intake of C. And in another study, it was found that women with cervical dysplasia—a condition we believe is a precursor to cancer of the cervix—had consumed much less C than those who did not suffer from this condition.

At Harvard, researchers studied more than 1200 elderly men and women and found that those who eat a lot of vegetables containing beta-carotene (a form of vitamin A) are far less likely to get cancer than those who don't.

A 1975 study in the Journal of the American Medical Association reported that heart patients taking niacin (B_3) reduced their recurrence of heart attacks by 29 percent. And a key study in The New England Journal of Medicine found that niacin seems to boost the action of certain cholesterol-lowering drugs by up to 25 percent and may help reverse atherosclerosis. (Niacin also may cause an irregular heartbeat—carefully moderated doses are required.)

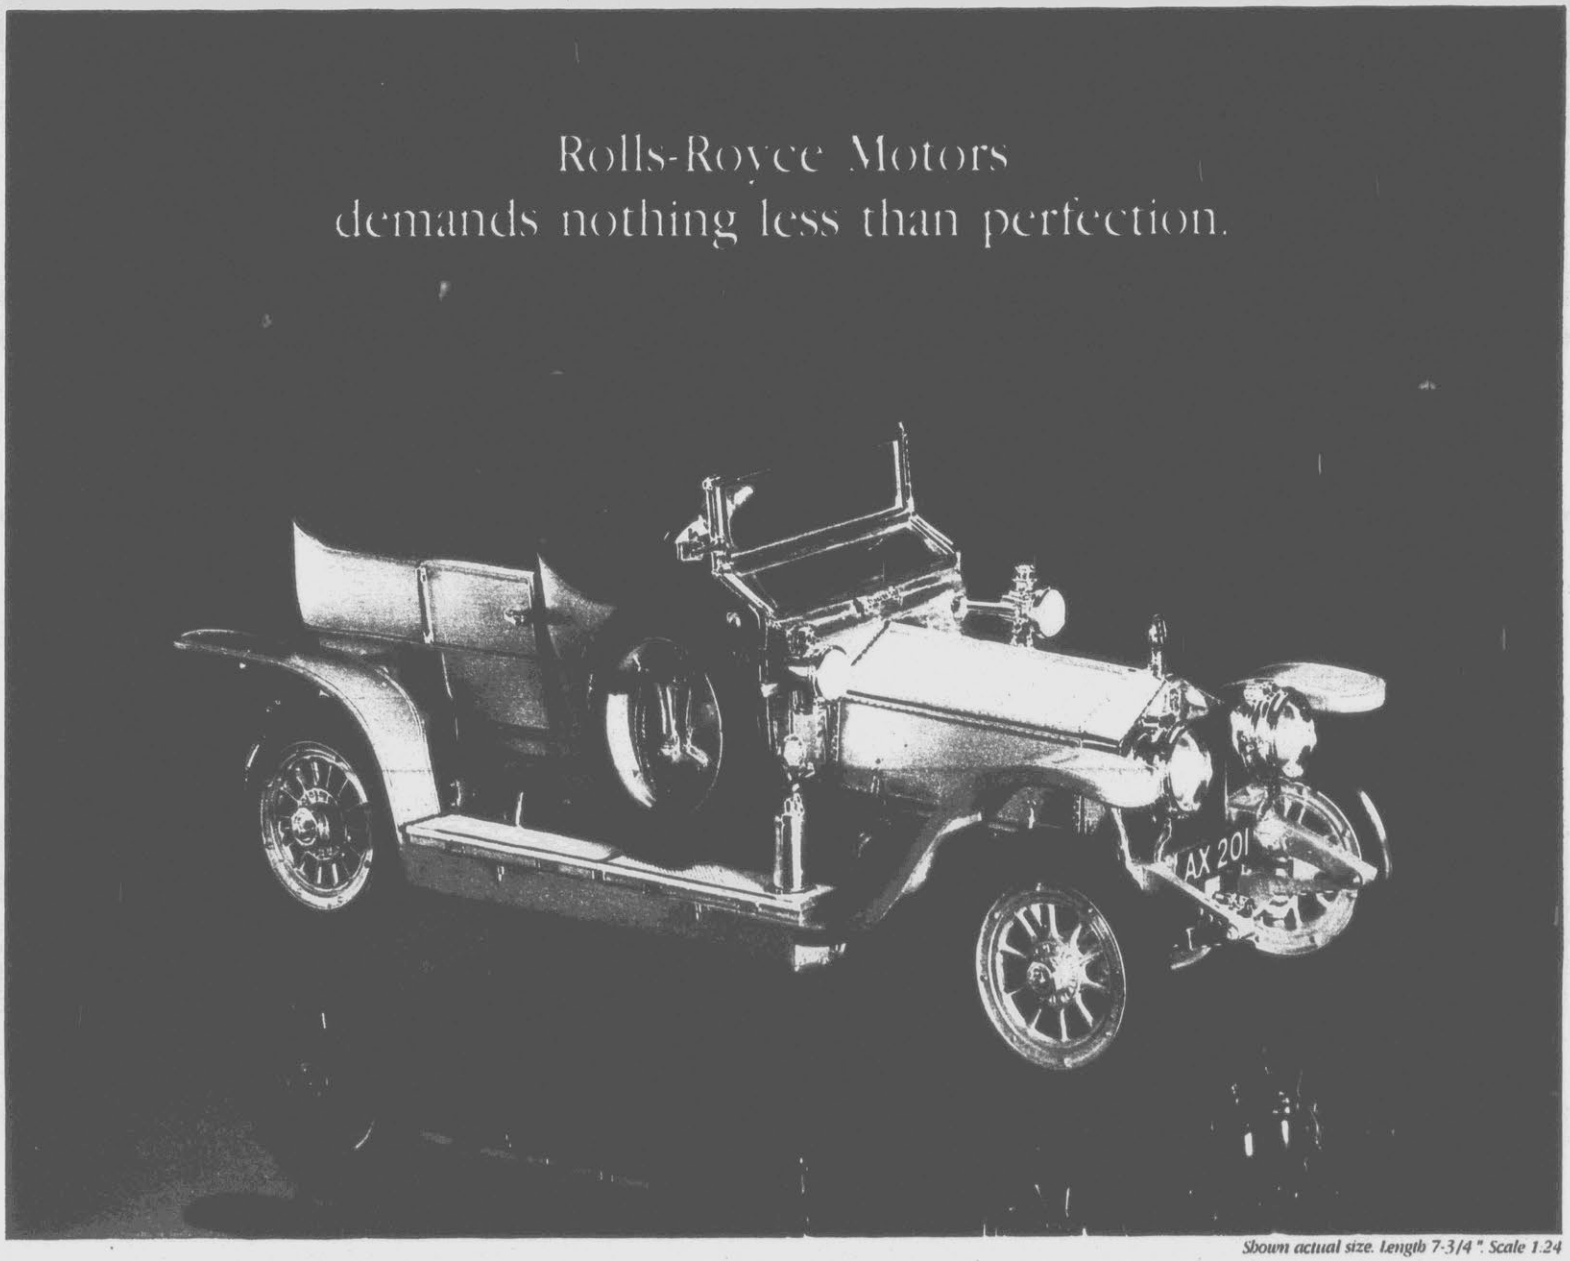

A lack of vitamin B_6 may play a role in depression, according to recent research from Columbia Medical School. There, one-fifth of patients admitted to a depression-treatment program were found to have lower than average B_6 levels.

Megadoses and toxicity. Though the absolute numbers are still small, more and more people are taking vitamins and minerals many times over the safe limits. We are seeing increasing reports of toxicity. Over a long period, for example, 25,000 IUs of vitamin A, a daily dosage often recommended by health-food enthusiasts, can produce liver damage. A long-term excessive intake of vitamin D can be highly toxic. And recent research has shown that sustained high doses of B_6 can cause neurologic damage. (Individual requirements and tolerances vary greatly. Details about proper doses and side effects of overdoses are given in How To Be Your Own Nutritionist.)

Are vitamins good for you? They can be. Vitamin supplements can help you feel better, look better and have more energy. They can even help prevent disease. But they also can be ineffective—and even dangerous. Taking vitamins means taking responsibility for your own good health. Be informed. Talk to your family doctor or to a good nutritionist or nutrition doctor. Know exactly what you need, what you are taking and why. Get the facts. You'll feel better.

THE SILVER GHOST

The authorized die-cast model of the most famous Rolls-Royce ever. Plated with sterling silver to match the original.

The 1907 Rolls-Royce Silver Ghost. It advances a revolutionary concept in the fascinating field of model car collecting. Perfection.

A scale re-creation with such convincing standards of detail, quality and precision that Rolls-Royce Motors has recognized it as the authorized die-cast model of The Silver Ghost.

And so scrupulously accurate that company officials have verified the model for authenticity.

Named for its silver-plated trim, metallic-silver paintwork and extraordinary silence, The Silver Ghost offered luxury and performance previously unknown. And the prototype for this die-cast model is based directly on first-hand studies of the original Silver Ghost.

Steel dies taken from the prototype are used to cast over 127 components needed to build a single model.

The elegant Roi des Belges coachwork is painted with metallic-silver automotive lacquer. And the exterior trim is plated with sterling silver—protectively coated—matching the original exactly.

There are soft tufted seats, doors and tool boxes that open and close, fully operable steering, complete instrumentation—and engine detailing that shows the two sparkplugs on each of six cylinders.

What price perfection? A custom model of this quality would cost hundreds or even thousands of dollars. But The Silver Ghost is just $120, payable in four installments of $30 each.

Crafted and imported exclusively by Franklin Mint Precision Models, it's available by direct application only and won't be sold in any stores. So be sure to order by March 20, 1987.

Bring the best island flavors to your table with (clockwise from upper right) Baked Red Snapper topped with Papaya Salsa, spicy Black-Eyed Peas and Rice, and a sweet and hot Seafood Pepperpot.

The island food and tropical mood of the Caribbean come north

CALYPSO COOKING

THE BEST THING, OF COURSE, IS TO ESCAPE TO the carefree and charming islands of the Caribbean. But if you can't be sitting under a palm tree in a turquoise paradise, you can create a calypso feast right where you are.

Here are the foods that island daydreams are made of. We have a tropical Seafood Pepperpot—the culinary anthem of the Caribbean—our combination of sweet island shrimp, sea scallops, crabmeat, grouper with tomatoes, red peppers and jalapeños. For true island authenticity, we must serve it with Black-Eyed Peas and Rice—a dish that's also scrumptious on its own. Our Baked Red Snapper is laced with limes to emphasize the freshest island flavor—when topped with our Papaya Salsa, it's heaven. Four of our favorite sun-drenched ingredients—cashews, coconuts, bananas and vanilla—make up a Banana Cream Pie that will produce memories to soothe body and soul.

SEAFOOD PEPPERPOT

Sweet seafood combined with sweet and hot peppers are favorites of all islanders—residents and visitors alike.

1 pound bacon, cut crosswise into 1/2-inch pieces
1½ pounds okra, tops removed, sliced diagonally (or canned okra, drained)
2 tablespoons olive oil
2 sweet red bell peppers, cut into 1/2-inch dice
1 large yellow onion, peeled and cut into 1/2-inch dice
6 large cloves of garlic, peeled and minced
2 cups canned plum tomatoes and their juice
3 fresh chili or jalapeño peppers, seeded and finely minced
4 teaspoons dry thyme
3 large bay leaves
1 teaspoon cayenne pepper
3 cups bottled clam juice
2 cups chicken broth
2 pounds grouper fillets, cut crosswise into 2-inch slices
1 pound sea scallops
1 pound large shrimp, peeled and deveined
1/2 pound lump crabmeat, cartilage removed
Grated zest of 2 oranges
1/4 cup chopped Italian parsley

1. In a large casserole, cook bacon over medium heat until translucent. Add okra; continue cooking until okra is slightly brown and edges curl. (If using canned okra, add it in Step 3.)
2. Add olive oil, red peppers, onion and garlic. Continue cooking until vegetables are soft.
3. Add tomatoes, chili peppers, thyme, bay leaves and cayenne pepper (and canned okra). Cook over medium-low heat for 15 minutes. NOTE: Wear rubber gloves when working with hot peppers. Be sure to wash hands well when finished.
4. Add clam juice and chicken broth. Cook, partially covered, for 30 minutes more.
5. Add the grouper and scallops and cook over medium-high heat for 2 minutes. Add shrimp and cook an additional 3 minutes. Add crabmeat and cook 1 minute more. Stir gently after each addition.
6. Fold in orange zest; sprinkle with parsley. Serve immediately.

BLACK-EYED PEAS AND RICE

Each nation of the Caribbean has its own version of rice and beans—rich in spicy island flavors. Here's our favorite.

1/2 pound salt pork, rind removed, cut into 1/2-inch dice
2 red bell peppers, seeded, cored, cut into 1-inch dice
6 ripe plum tomatoes, cut into 1/2-inch dice
1 medium-sized yellow onion, peeled, cut into 1/2-inch dice
6 cloves of garlic, peeled and finely chopped
1 cup converted rice
2 cups chicken broth
6 cups cooked black-eyed pea beans (cook according to package directions)
1 cup green, pitted martini olives
1/4 cup capers, drained
6 anchovy fillets, finely chopped
2 tablespoons dried oregano
1 teaspoon ground allspice
1 teaspoon butcher-grind black pepper
1/2 teaspoon cayenne pepper
1/2 teaspoon salt
3/4 cup scallions, sliced on the diagonal
1/2 cup chopped parsley

1. In a large, heavy casserole, sauté salt pork over low heat until the fat has been rendered. Do not let it brown.
2. Add peppers, tomatoes, onion and garlic to salt pork and cook 5 more minutes over low heat.
3. Add rice, stir for a minute and add remaining ingredients except for scallions and parsley. Cook, covered, for 20 minutes, until most of liquid is absorbed.
4. Add scallions and parsley; gently mix together. Serve hot.

HAIR CARE

ARE YOU CONDITIONING THE CLEAN OUT OF YOUR HAIR?

Isn't it frustrating...you shampoo your hair to get it clean and shiny. Then you use a conditioner to do something extra nice for your hair. But suddenly, you realize your hair isn't acting like it's fresh. It feels weighed down, almost like it's coated. That's not what you had in mind at all.

Are you doing something wrong or is it your imagination? No, it's a fact: residue from conditioner build-up can cause dull, lifeless hair.

The Reason: Most conditioners are formulated with fatty oils and waxes that stay on your hair even after you rinse. That's where the heavy, sometimes even greasy feel comes from.

The secret of really clean, perfectly manageable hair: A conditioner that won't leave residue behind. One that conditions cleanly and rinses out thoroughly, leaving hair fresh and beautifully manageable.

Where can you find an oil-free conditioner? There is one patented to protect its unique method of conditioning. It's from Neutrogena.® Their breakthrough formula is totally free of fatty oils and waxes. The result? A conditioner that leaves hair fresher, cleaner, livelier.

Test results show that one conditioning cycle with Neutrogena® Conditioner was proven to leave virtually no residue build-up. This compares to an average of six times more residue left by competitors.*

*Excerpt from Neutrogena Skin Care Institute Report.

And be Prepared: Neutrogena Conditioner won't feel slippery like the ones you may be used to. So you can look forward to a new conditioning experience. One that's really fresh because it's really clean!

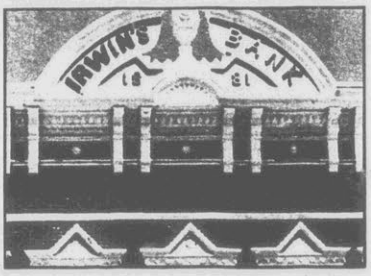

Last Word: Oil-free conditioning means more effective conditioning. It means shinier, more manageable hair. Your style will stay fuller longer and your shine will last because Neutrogena Conditioner won't fight "the clean" of your shampoo.

$1.00 Rebate Offer. To get your $1.00 rebate on your purchase of Neutrogena Conditioner, cut out the front panel of the folding carton, send with your sales receipt and your name, address and phone number to: Neutrogena Conditioner Rebate Offer, P.O. Box 4345, Hemet, CA 92343-0361.

Allow 8 weeks for processing. Good in U.S.A. only. Limit one per household. Offer expires August 31, 1987.

The Town That TRIUMPHED

"Large Arch," by Henry Moore, graces the library plaza, across street from the First Christian Church, by Eliel Saarinen.

COLUMBUS, INDIANA, may be the best of all possible worlds.

No smokestacks blight the commercial district; lush green lawns, flowers and trees abound in both public and private gardens; sculptures adorn the parks and plazas.

But most remarkable of all is that this city of 32,000—nestled in the heartland of conservative, small-town America—is the repository of 50 works of the finest modern architecture by I.M. Pei, Harry Weese, Eliel and Eero Saarinen, and other masters. Columbus is also the bastion of a progressive civic consciousness that regards clean streets and smoke-free air, as well as sufficient housing, employment and social services, as fundamental to good society.

What has been called an "experiment in advanced architecture" was initiated by J. Irwin Miller, a member of the board of directors of the Cummins Engine Co., Columbus' oldest and leading firm. Miller believed that improving people's surroundings also would improve the quality of their lives.

Following World War II, during which the population of Columbus almost doubled, the school and housing facilities were overcrowded, and new construction became the order of the day. The town planned 10 new schools, but the first two that it built were prefabricated. "They were terrible environments for kids to be in," Miller recalls. "And they obviously were going to deteriorate pretty quickly."

And so in 1957, Miller, a graduate of Yale and Oxford who had always nurtured an interest in architecture, presented the city officials with an option. He gave them a list of young architects, told them to select one and promised to pay the fee through the Cummins Engine Foundation, which he set up to finance public works and other projects. To date, the foundation has spent $9 million refurbishing Columbus.

"It is expensive to be mediocre in this world," says Miller. "Quality is always cost-effective. The tragic mistake in history that's always been made by the well-to-do is that they have feathered their own nests. Today we know that society does not survive unless it is generally perceived that it works pretty well for everybody."

This philosophy—"the best for the most"—can be seen in the quality and diversity of the structures that serve the citizens of Columbus. For example:

A giant bronze sculpture by Henry Moore graces the pavilion of the library; and in the center of the shopping mall stands "Chaos I," a 30-foot-tall kinetic sculpture created out of Indiana scrap machinery by the Swiss architect Jean Tinguely. The First Christian Church, designed by Eliel Saarinen, was one of the first modern churches in the U.S. and is the oldest building of contemporary design in Columbus; the ecumenical North Christian Church, designed by Eliel's son, Eero, features a 192-foot spire whose gold-leaf cross appears to pierce the heavens. And in the lobby of the Cummins Engine Co., parts of a model diesel engine are displayed as an abstract sculpture.

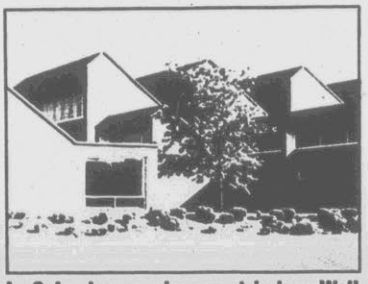

The architectural achievements in Columbus have not gone unnoticed by those outside—or inside—the community. The city has received more than 45 awards, including several from the American Institute of Architects. And 40,000 visitors tour the city every year.

How responsive to the beauteous environment created by Miller are the people of Columbus? Have their lives really been transformed?

Chris Lemley, 46, has run a restaurant and catering business in Columbus for 20 years. She once studied cooking in Paris but still insists she "wouldn't live or work anywhere else."

"Columbus is like an oasis in the cornfields," says Lemley. "It's as though we've become more culturally aware almost by osmosis. The architecture even influences our children, I think, by making them aware of how important it is to take care of their community and of their physical and spiritual environment. There's a feeling on the streets of Columbus that every person is proud to be here."

"The Cummins Engine Foundation may pay the architects' fees," adds Dr. Ralph Lieber, the superintendent of schools, "but public tax dollars pay the construction costs. The people in this community are sensitive to the town's artistic efforts, or they wouldn't allow their tax dollars to pay for them."

In Columbus, environment is key. Well-designed schools like this are a priority.

Good Movie For The Family on TV

Places in the Heart—for which Sally Field won her second Oscar—makes its network debut Tuesday. Field gives a strong, affecting performance as a sheriff's widow struggling to save her cotton farm and support her two children in 1930s Depression-era Texas. The movie is based on the director Robert Benton's memories of his Waxahachie boyhood and features gritty, wrenching portrayals by Danny Glover as a loyal farmhand and John Malkovich as a blind boarder. A wonderful story for the family, on NBC, 9-11:16 p.m. EST.

AUDIOTAPES

A THRILLER THAT COULD KEEP YOU UP NIGHTS

Don't listen to The Manchurian Candidate at night if you have to get up early in the morning. It's a marvelously chilling political thriller about a Medal of Honor winner, now an influential journalist, who doesn't know he has been brainwashed by the Communists to kill on command at some future moment. You won't be able to stop listening till its just-in-the-nick-of-time finish. Read with cool menace by that man from U.N.C.L.E., Robert Vaughn, it's $14.95 from Listen for Pleasure.

MOVIES

Annie Leibovitz

Lea Thompson (l) and Mary Stuart Masterson stand Eric Stoltz on his head in Some Kind of Wonderful, the new John Hughes-Martin Deutch teen epic about a high school senior involved in a love triangle and struggling against pressure from his father to go to college. Hughes proved in 16 Candles, The Breakfast Club and Pretty in Pink—which have a feel for adolescent angst—and in the $70 million smasheroo Ferris Bueller's Day Off—which portrays parents and teachers as boobs—that he knows what teenagers want to see. From Paramount.

BOOKS

Sherlock Holmes Celebrates A Happy 100th Birthday

It's just 100 years since an impecunious young physician named Arthur Conan Doyle wrote the first Sherlock Holmes story (A Study in Scarlet, as if you didn't know), so it's entirely appropriate that a book titled Sherlock Holmes: A Centenary Celebration (Harper & Row, $22.50) should appear on the scene.

The author, Allen Eyles, covers the familiar ground of how the stories came to be written and their subsequent history in crisp, businesslike fashion. But his main interest lies in the various reincarnations Holmes has undergone in stage, screen, radio and TV versions, and he has compiled a comprehensive dossier on these, marvelously illustrated in color.

Also newly available are two excellently printed paperbacks together containing the complete Holmes novels and stories. Issued by Bantam at $4.95 each, these books represent the most bountiful Holmes bargain ever published.

Improved Hearing Aid For the President

Reuters/Bettmann Newsphotos

McFarlane and Reagan: Signals crossed?

One of the unresolved key questions in the Iran-Contra scandal is whether Ronald Reagan authorized the selling of arms to Iran in exchange for U.S. hostages held in Lebanon.

Robert McFarlane, then the President's national security affairs adviser, has testified that in August 1985 Mr. Reagan orally authorized him to notify the Israelis that the U.S. approved of their transferring arms to Iran and that we would replenish the Israeli arsenal.

Donald Regan, White House chief of staff, and Edwin Meese III, the attorney general, have contradicted McFarlane's testimony. They have stated that the President did not approve the Israeli move in advance but okayed the transfer only after he had learned it was a fait accompli, an accomplished fact.

Who is telling the truth? Can it be that all three men are? Can it be that President Reagan, a man of fitful memory, has forgotten his oral authorization to McFarlane? Or can it be that the President, being hard of hearing, never completely heard McFarlane's request for authorization and—like many people who suffer such an impairment—merely nodded as

BY LLOYD SHEARER ©1987

McFarlane briefed him, and McFarlane interpreted the nodding as acquiescence?

For years, Ronald Reagan has suffered from acoustic trauma of the right ear and presbycusis of the left. (Presbycusis is the impairment of hearing characteristic of the elderly.) "An estimated one half of all men and one third of all women over age 65 suffer from impairment of sufficient degree to compromise social interaction," writes Dr. Maurice Miller in the December 1986 issue of Geriatrics.

Siemens Hearing Instruments

Model 007-ASP, inside ear

Hearing loss is a concomitant of old age, and at 76 the President is no spring chicken. Byron Burton, a hearing-aid specialist from Santa Ana, Calif., fitted Reagan with a pair of hearing aids in his first term. The President was then suffering from a marked hearing loss of high-frequency tones. After that, however, he found increased difficulty in discriminating between speech and background noise when both were amplified by the devices snuggled into his external auditory canals. "When I receive applause," the President told Burton, "it's so loud that I just have to grin and bear it."

During the Christmas of 1985, when Reagan was in Los Angeles, Burton fitted him with a pair of automatic signal processors (Model 007-ASP). The new devices, made by Siemens Hearing Instruments Inc., automatically reduce background noise to the tolerance level of the individual user.

"As of Jan. 2, 1986," says Byron Burton, "the President's audiological scores are normal when he wears his signal-processing aids. He can hear anything a man of normal hearing can hear. Background noise doesn't bother him at all."

Unfortunately, the President was not equipped with his 007-ASPs (which sell for about $750 each) when he first discussed with Robert McFarlane in August 1985 the selling of U.S. arms to Iran, a country of fanatical American-haters.

Future Problem

The Soviet Union has promised to build two nuclear power plants for its client state, Cuba, and construction of them apparently is under way in Cienfuegos, a port city in southwestern Cuba. Since plutonium—a potentially hazardous radioactive element—is a product of nuclear-powered generators as well as an ingredient of atomic bombs, the possibility exists that Cuba could divert some of it from fuel use to weapons production.

Another U.S. worry on the nuclear power front involves Mexico, whose first nuclear reactor—designed by General Electric and situated at Laguna Verde in the state of Veracruz—should be finished any day now, if it isn't already. The overall worry concerns the adoption of minimal safety standards for such plants in a country on our southern border.

Favorite Sports

Do you participate in sports? If so, which? The Gallup pollsters queried a national sampling on participatory athletics not too long ago and concluded that swimming, the nation's longtime favorite, remains No. 1. Some 43% of those adults who were asked said they had gone swimming one or more times in the previous year. Bicycling (35%) was the second most popular sports activity. Fishing (33%) was third, and jogging or running (28%) was fourth.

BY JAMES BRADY

Jean Stapleton

DON'T CALL HER "DINGBAT." Jean Stapleton is a large, handsome woman who tells you flat out not to confuse her with Edith Bunker. She played the role delightfully and without reservations for nearly 10 years, winning three Emmy Awards and making good money. She had the guts to walk away from it in 1980, and she says she has never looked back.

I've interviewed her twice, a few years ago and then recently while she was starring on Broadway as one of the marvelously wacky (and gently homicidal) sisters in a revival of Arsenic and Old Lace. This time the critics had been less than kind to the play, but audiences aren't critics, and the crowds were turning out. I asked Jean about the bad reviews. "I get my reviews from the seats," she said. "We've got 1000 people out there every performance, laughing and applauding, and that's why we're in the theater."

There were so many things I didn't know about Jean. First off, she's no relation to the actress Maureen Stapleton. Jean, not Angela Lansbury, was the producers' first choice to star in the big television hit Murder, She Wrote. She's an authority on Eleanor and Franklin Delano Roosevelt. She's a soprano of such quality that she has drawn praise from the usually restrained New York Times for her operatic roles. And, when she isn't earning her living as a performer, she's out campaigning for women's rights

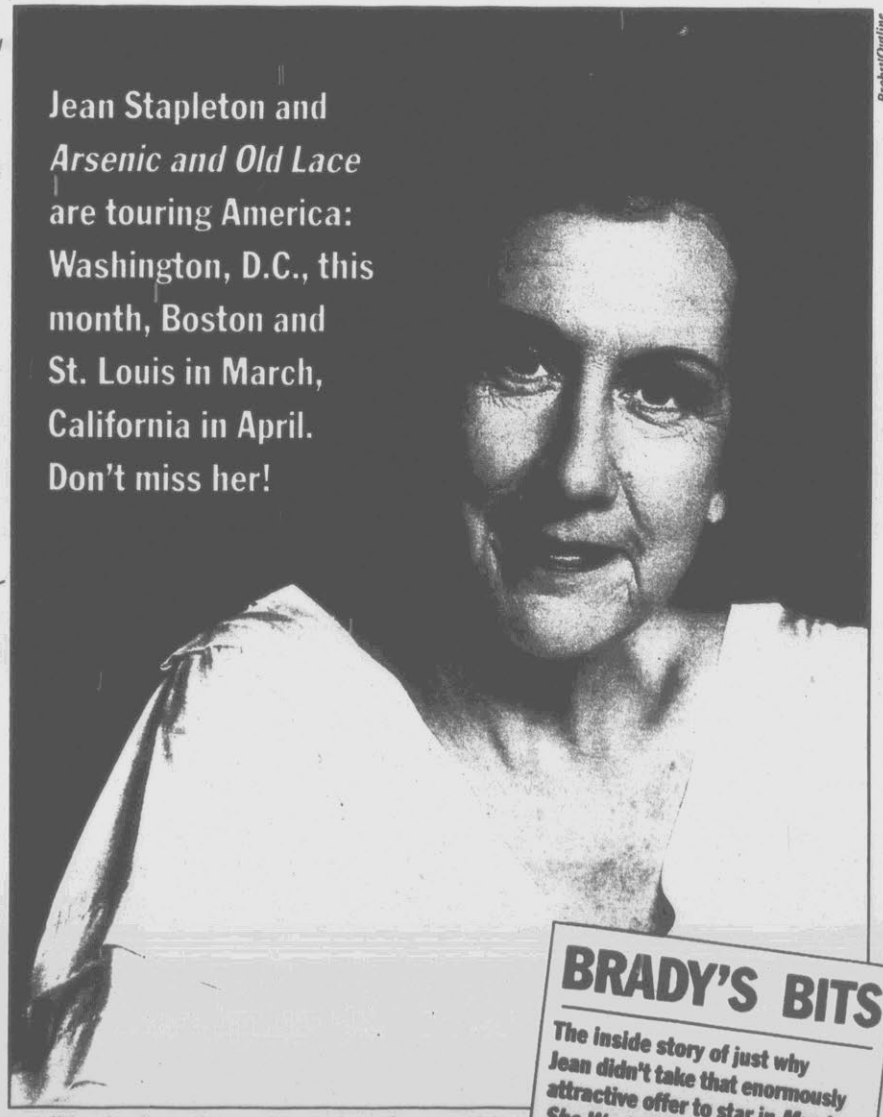

Before "marrying" Archie Bunker, her career had been busy and professionally satisfying, if not the stuff of magazine cover stories. For more than 20 years, she was a reliable, respected stage actress with Broadway and touring company productions of such plays as Damn Yankees and Bells Are Ringing. And even when her big breakthrough came as "Dingbat," she continued to work summers as the star of Totem Pole Playhouse, a small rural theater in Pennsylvania.

How do you get a big TV star to do summer theater out in the sticks? Easy. William Putch, manager of the Totem Pole, talked her into it. In real life, Jean was Mrs. William Putch until his death three years ago.

When she quit All in the Family, she made a conscious effort to take on acting jobs totally unlike her lovable housewife image. She played a striking bank employee, the mother of a user of the drug "angel dust," an overqualified and badly paid office worker. And, to raise funds to restore Valkill, the Hudson River cottage of Eleanor Roosevelt, she created an Eleanor Roosevelt monologue that led to her being cast in the 1982 TV special Eleanor, First Lady of the World.

This is no glamour-puss. This is a perfectly wonderful professional actress, a woman alone who has made a home for herself in the theater, where, when she is working, there are always 1000 or 1200 close friends sitting in her front parlor.

BORN: Jan. 19, 1923, in New York City.
PERSONAL: Married to William H. Putch, 1957-83; one son, one daughter.
BIG BREAK: Playing Myrtle Mae in national tour of Harvey, 1948.
BROADWAY: Includes In the Summer House, 1953; Damn Yankees, 1955; Bells Are Ringing, 1956; Juno, 1959; Rhinoceros, 1961; Funny Girl, 1964; Arsenic and Old Lace, 1986.
FILMS: Include Damn Yankees, 1958; Something Wild, 1961; Up the Down Staircase, 1967; Klute, 1971.
TELEVISION: Includes All in the Family, 1971-79 (three Emmys); Archie Bunker's Place, 1979-80; Isabel's Choice, 1981; Angel Dusted, 1981; Eleanor, First Lady of the World, 1982; A Matter of Sex, 1984; Grownups, 1985; Dead Man's Folly, 1986.

Jean Stapleton and Arsenic and Old Lace are touring America: Washington, D.C., this month, Boston and St. Louis in March, California in April. Don't miss her!

Photo/Outline

BRADY'S BITS

The inside story of just why Jean didn't take that enormously attractive offer to star in Murder, She Wrote tells you a lot about the woman, the kind of person she is. Jean had made a commitment to sing a new opera by a young woman composer in an obscure little opera house in Baltimore. Promises are promises. And Jean Stapleton turned down CBS, and a fortune, to fulfill her commitment to the opera company. Few performers say no to the networks. She did.

Hale The Faithful On 'Perry Mason'

By Evan Levine

Let's play "Sidekicks": There's Tonto ("Lone Ranger"), Lois Lane ("Superman"), even Wife (McMillan and"). In the annals of TV law-and-order folk, the busy work behind the throne — and often the last-minute solutions — belong to a parade of hard-working, unsung assistants. And none are more hard-working, unsung assistants. And none are more hard-working, or unsung than Della Street, Perry Mason's secretary-and-so-much-more. She returns in "Perry Mason: The Case of the Lost Love." (Monday, Feb. 23, NBC.)

In the original series and the string of successful TV movies, pillar-of-stability Street has been played by Barbara Hale, who's delighted by the success of "Perry Mason," but is at a loss to explain it.

Yes, before there was "L.A. Law," there was Mason's Law: That steely gaze (Are you sure, Mr. Jones?") survived nine seasons. This movie, with the reappearance of Mason's former love, his first on-screen kiss, (tune in to see who gets it) and some subsequent worrying by Street, also promises to deliver.

"The viewing audience accepted us, we've become like family," Hale offers, trying to explain their popularity. "And the books (by Erle Stanley Gardner) on which the show was based are still popular.

"I like Della — she was one of the first TV ladies given real strength. I met so many people doing 'Perry Mason'; even Bette Davis guest-starred. And Raymond Burr (whom Hale has known since 1944) is a great practical joker. Once I came back to my dressing room, and he had painted the walls black, filled everything with roses and let loose 24 white doves. You can imagine what my carpet looked like."

Hale is pleased to be working with someone else in the recent "Perry Mason" movies — her son, actor William Katt.

"I had nothing to do with his getting the role of Paul Drake's son," she promises. 'The producer said that he knew a talented fellow — the star of "The Greatest American Hero' — but didn't know where to reach him. I told him that I did. 'You know him?' the producer asked. 'I changed his diapers,' I told him. 'He's my son.'

"Doing the show is a joy. There's a real camaraderie, and we've gotten to go all over. We've filmed in Canada; the next one is being done in Colorado Springs. Maybe the slogan should be 'Join Perry Mason and see the world.'"

Gene Barry (c.) is no run-of-the-mill criminal: His wife (Jean Simmons, l.) was Perry Mason's former lover — and now she wants the quick-witted attorney to defend her husband against murder charges. Meanwhile, Della Street (Barbara Hale, r.) is as stoic as ever.

AT GARMENT CARE

DICKIE ROOK

A CLEANER WORLD says leather garments continue to be more and more popular every year. With the unlimited color selection available today, leather can be used for an infinite variety of clothing. There are many different qualities of leather resulting in some problems with the care of the garments.

Shrinkage is one of the main problems of leather garments. There is always some slight relaxation shrinkage in leather garments. Leather skins dry out and, hence they lose natural oils. It is best to buy the garment a little larger so that this shrinkage can be allowed for later.

The color of some of the skins may appear to be lighter than others on a garment. This is caused by the difference in penetration of the dye on the different pieces. After cleaning, especially, the skins may have a noticeable difference in coloring.

You should not let your leather garments become overly soiled as this will decrease the drycleaners chances of restoring your garment to its best possible appearance. When the time comes for your garment to be cleaned, entrust it to A CLEANER WORLD.

Ol' Blue Eyes himself, Frank Sinatra, looks like the living is pretty easy when he makes a rare acting appearance as a retired detective who joins up with Magnum (Tom Selleck) to track a killer. "Magnum, P.I." airs Wednesday, Feb. 25, on CBS.

Barbara Walters, the duchess of disclosures, has a heart-to-heart with Michael Douglas, who may even grant his audience an impression of his famous father. Other guests include Patrick Duffy, with whom she discusses the murder of his parents. "The Barbara Walters Special" airs Wednesday, Feb. 25, on ABC.

TV Chatter

By Frank Sanello

Is "Designing Women" anti-men? On just about every episode of the CBS series, one of the female stars seems to cast aspersions on the opposite sex. "Oh, please don't make me throw up!" says cast member Delta Burke, who disagrees with the assertion. "My character loves men." If "Designing Women" does have an anti-male flavor, Burke says, then a lot of other TV shows are anti-women. "Look at 'Mike Hammer,' " she says. "The women don't even say, 'Hi, good morning!' before they're saying, 'Let's go to bed.' I know. I've played that stuff. I've been one of those broads on 'Mike Hammer.' "

The casting couch is alive — and unwell — according to Ana-Alicia, who plays temptress Melissa Agretti Cumson on "Falcon Crest." During her salad days, when the striking brunette was just another starlet about town, she recalls that a producer asking her out to lunch. The man raved on and on about how potentially talented she was — while at the same time pointing out the flaws that would hinder her acting career. "He told me I needed to learn how to dress and in the same breath started rattling on about how his wife didn't understand him." The naive aspiring actress told him how sorry she was that he and his wife weren't getting along. When the man propositioned her, she just as politely turned him down. Then he launched into a tirade about her lack of talent and predicted she'd never make it in Hollywood. The producer now lives around the corner from her. "In a much smaller house," she says.

It's not that big a stretch for Christine Ebersole to play the loose-living ex-chorus girl who returns home to live with her pious Irish Catholic dad on CBS's "The Cavanaughs." Although Ebersole never paraded around a Las Vegas showroom, she did spend years on the road appearing in stage musicals before her one-year stint on "Saturday Night Live" during the Eddie Murphy-Joe Piscopo era. "It would be more of a stretch if I had to play a nun," she says. Ebersole, however, does have a hard time identifying with Kit's smoking habit. A reformed smoker, Ebersole complains every time the script calls for her to take a puff on screen. "I keep asking the writers when they are going to write an episode where I decide to quit smoking," she says. The writers may be heading in that direction. "Other characters on 'The Cavanaughs' have told me to sit in the Protestant section when I light up."

Why are so many British actors so popular in America? Christopher Hewett, a transplanted Brit and star of ABC's "Mr. Belvedere," returns the compliment. "All American stars are big stars in England," he says. "They positively worship Tom Selleck in England." ... Of all the dream roles an actor might have, "Night Court" 's John Larroquette's might be the most bizarre. The two-time Emmy winner says that his ideal role would be playing Walter Matthau's son.

The Chosen

Robert Osbourne, resident host for The Movie Channel and Hollywood reporter for CBS's "Morning Program," has released his picks for the "Ten Best Movies of 1986." In alphabetical (not aesthetical) order, they are: "Aliens," "Children of a Lesser God," "F/X," "Hannah and Her Sisters," "Marlene," "Platoon," "A Room with a View," "Round Midnight," "Sid and Nancy" and "Stand By Me."

Adolescent Adults

Teen fathers seem to be getting more attention from ABC than their female counterparts — at least in program titles. After airing an Afterschool Special entitled "Teen Father," ABC is currently producing "Daddy." The two-hour movie presents two high schoolers (Dermot Mulroney and Patricia Arquette) faced with a crucial decision. John Karlen ("Cagney & Lacey"), Tess Harper ("Crimes ofthe Heart") and Danny Aiello ("The Purple Rose of Cairo") are the concerned adults who offer advice.

BEHIND THE SCENES

It's an antic world for Grammy producer

By Frank Lovece

Pierre Cossette doesn't sound like someone named Pierre Cossette.

Pierre Cossette

"Hey, how ya doin'?" he asks cheerfully. "You had breakfast yet?" He wears jeans and an open-necked shirt; a leather jacket is draped on his chair. Definitely not what you'd expect from the executive producer of the Grammy Awards (airing Tues., Feb. 24, on CBS).

Then again, Cossette has always had a reputation for being, well, unconventional. As the Grammys' producer since the 1960s, Cossette has resorted to some way-out tactics to keep them on TV. The most infamous came about when he jumped into bed (fully clothed) with a CBS executive and the executive's wife to plead his case.

"You wanna know why I jumped into their bed?" Cossette asks. "I was desperate! It was important to keep the show on the air. The guy was a friend of mine, so he took it in stride. He said he should've expected it!"

Cossette's tribulations at that time came about because ABC didn't want to telecast the 1966 Grammys from Nashville.

"ABC said that if I telecast from Nashville, they wouldn't pick up the show. And it had gotten enormous ratings the year before! They said they didn't want a country-music show, that I couldn't get performers to go to Nashville. I didn't dream they were serious. But by 5 o'clock on the Friday before their option ran out, they still hadn't called."

The National Academy of Recording Arts and Sciences, which administers the Grammys, still wanted its royalties, and Cossette had to scramble. He convinced rival-network NBC to air a compromise, and from 1966 to 1970, the network ran taped highlight specials.

"But when I went back for the 1971 show, NBC turned me down. They said they didn't want the imagery of long-haired hippies."

That's when, for Cossette, TV politics made strange bedfellows. Since then, the Grammys have become a high-rating CBS institution.

The rest of the year Cossette stays busy producing feature films such as the upcoming "Great Balls of Fire"; TV movies and specials; even a musical called "Ziegfeld Presents Will Rogers."

It sounds as if Cossette's overworking himself. But he swears he's not. "This whole business," he says enthusiastically, "is my relaxation."

Guide for March

Showtime premieres for March: "Down and Out in Beverly Hills," the frenetic comedy starring Bette Midler, Richard Dreyfuss and Nick Nolte; "Pretty in Pink," with Molly Ringwald as a girl from the wrong side of town; "P.O.W.: The Escape," led by David Carradine; "Return of the Jedi," the third and final installment of the intergalactic saga; and "The Gods Must Be Crazy," the South African art-house hit that demonstrated the havoc a Coca-Cola bottle wreaks on a tribe of African bushmen.

Take the Clara Johnson Test.

In Alamance County, North Carolina, Honda lawn mowers are assembled from the wheels up. Then each mower must pass rigid quality control standards before we ship it.

The final test is a critical performance check to ensure easy starting. We call it the Clara Johnson Test. At the end of the assembly line, each mower is started or it doesn't ship.

Come in and give the whole line of Honda mowers the Clara Johnson Test yourself. Each one will start easily, or it wouldn't be a Honda.

Pearl Shines On 'Santa Barbara'

By Connie Passalacqua

Every once in a while (and it's a great while, now that daytime soaps are in a dreadful lull), an actor comes along who alone is worth turning on the set in the afternoon. If you're a blase soap fan, then check out Robert Thaler, who plays Pearl on "Santa Barbara."

Pearl, the Capwell family's former chauffeur, usually sports a baseball cap in addition to an earring and a hair braid. He is by far the most unorthodox character on daytime's most unorthodox soap. The plot got even crazier last fall when it was revealed that the Brooklyn-accented, emotional Pearl is really a Boston Brahmin named Michael Baldwin Bradford III.

Although Thaler says he's an "introverted, private guy, not like my character," he still seems just as funny and analytic. Raised in Marion, Iowa (so Pearl's accent is a put-on!), he says, "I had no early inkling of becoming an actor because everyone in my family — my mother, brother and two sisters — is a doctor or in a related profession."

He says he decided to attend the University of California at Berkeley "when I saw a poster of a beautiful naked blond girl descending into the Pacific, and thought, 'God, I have to have that.' "

The anti-war protests of the '60s also affected Thaler. "Yeah, I did that whole trip," he says. "Actually, that's how I got into street theater — parading in demonstrations, being in riots, running from tear gas. That was drama!"

Michele Will Tell

By Michele Marks:

Dear Michele: Is rock star Huey Lewis related to comedian Jerry Lewis? — NOLA KENNEDY, KENANSVILLE, N.C.

Before Huey Lewis skyrocketed to rock fame and fortune, he was known to family and friends as Hugh Cregg III. He was born in New York City but soon moved west with his family and settled inMill Valley, Calif. Lewis' parents split when he was 12, and he returned east to attend the posh Lawrenceville prep school in New Jersey. He graduated in 1967. The 36-year-old singer has been married to the former Sidney Conroy since 1984. The couple have two children, daughter Kelly and son Austin.

You may be confusing Huey with comedian Jerry Lewis' son Gary. Gary, born in 1945, was a rock star during the '60s as part of Gary Lewis and the Playboys. The band had such hits as "This Diamond Ring," "Save Your Heart for Me" and "Count Me In." Following his military service in Vietnam, Lewis returned stateside in 1969 and found no one interested in his music. His career came to a screeching halt, and by the early '70s he had become an alcoholic and a drug addict. To his credit, Gary has now beaten his problem. His father gave him a big break toward a comeback when he let him perform on the 1986 Labor Day telethon.

Dear Michele: I heard that Michael J. Fox is married and has two children. Is this correct? How old is he? — BERTHA S. HOUTS, STATE COLLEGE, PENN.

Michael J. Fox is not married. He never has been married and he has no children. The 25-year-old actor is too busy with his burgeoning film career and hit TV series for a wife and kiddies. You can see him each week on "Family Ties" and in the upcoming film "Light of Day."

Dear Michele: Are Gene Shalit and Jane Pauley related? — EUNICE McCOY, JONESBORO, TENN.

Yes — and Bryant Gumbel i heir proud papa. Just kidding! Shalit, Pauley, Gumbel and Willard Scott are all part of "The Today Show" family, but they are certainly not related.

ROCK VIEW

Dark-horse rocker uses dark-age dinos

By Marianne Meyer

On Tuesday night, the biggest stars in the music industry will be running hands through multicolored hair and biting jeweled fingernails as the winners of this year's Grammy Awards are announced. You'll see and hear some of the hottest stars on record: Whitney Houston, Steve Winwood, Janet Jackson, Luis Cardenas ...

Luis Cardenas

Luis who? Though he's far from a household word, the young (22) Hispanic rocker has been nominated along with Dire Straits, Paul McCartney, the Pointer Sisters and Supertramp for best long-form video, and you can bet he'll be sitting anxiously in the audience, awaiting the outcome.

"I still kinda don't believe it," the soft-spoken Cardenas says as he starts a day of interviews related to his dark-horse nomination. But a peek at his three-segment video, "Runaway," reveals why he's in league with the big boys. The title-track clip, a concept video for Del Shannon's classic tune, uses stop-motion clay animation to surround the real-life drummer with funky dinosaur bandmates. The reptilian rockers are actually complex clay models that were photographed frame by frame, and then superimposed on film of a junkyard performance by Cardenas.

"It's hard to picture what isn't there; I felt a little dumb reacting to empty air," Cardenas recalls, "but we had choreographed dancers who worked with me to show how the 'dino-stars' would be moving in the finished clip." What it amounts to is on-the-job training in the Spielberg school of special-effects reaction acting.

The $500,000 "Runaway" clip and a 15-minute "making of" documentary are grouped in Cardenas' home-video package (Allied Artists Video, $19.95), along with an in-concert number he performs with his very human metal-pop band, Renegade.

"Renegade is my full-time job. This was for fun," Cardenas says of the solo LP, "Animal Instinct," from which "Runaway" was pulled. He points out the cameo shots of the other members of Renegade in the clip (Del Shannon and Donny Osmond also have walk-ons), and compares the band/solo relationship to that of Genesis and Phil Collins.

With one exception. If Collins comes home with any Grammys, he'll no doubt be pleased, but under control. And if Cardenas wins?

"I'll probably freak out!"

Look For Lots Of Rock Plots Ahead

By E.A. Vare

We may be seeing quite a bit of rock on TV if some of the following pilots get picked up on the networks this fall. First, ABC is readying "Starstruck," a sitcom-with-music based on the Australian rock 'n' roll movie of the same name. Shawnee Smith stars as an aspiring popster. Also ordered by ABC is an adventure series called "Jon Sable," based on the exploits of a comic-book hero. Gene Simmons of the heavy-metal band Kiss (and co-star of the current feature film "Wanted: Dead or Alive") will star. There's a nice symmetry to all this, since Kiss themselves were once stars of acomic book.

Further on down the dial, Michael Mann — producer of "Miami Vice" and "Crime Story" — is working on a dramatic series called "Tropix." Set behind the scenes of the music industry, "Tropix"should be a natural for the guy who gave us "MTV cops." The folks over at "Throb" must be having palpitations.

Also planned for fall airing is "Rock Candy," a syndicated sitcom about a music teacher and his punked-out daughters.

Comedian George Carlin makes his music-video debut in "Something Special," the theme song from the Bette Midler-Shelley Long movie "Outrageous Fortune." Carlin also costars with vocalist Patti La Belle in the promo clip. And, in a similar vein, comic magicians Penn & Teller are co-writing and co-starring in Run-DMC's next video clip, "It's Tricky."

It had to happen: Riding the nostalgia wave — and a few real ones — are those original beach party animals, Frankie Avalon and Annette Funicello. Frankie and Annette have been signed by Paramount Pictures to reunite in "Back to the Beach."

'Santa Barbara"s bizarre plot twists

By Kimberly Redmond

Can you tell me why the writers of "Santa Barbara" killed off the character of Mary Duvall in such a bizarre manner? — K.E., Easton, Pa.

Victoria Wyndham

According to a reliable source, Mary was killed off "for story-line purposes," presumably to open up possibilities for her fiance, Mason Capwell. "SB" is known for bizarre plot twists; the fact that Mary was killed when the "C" in the Capwell Hotel sign fell on her was unexpected, but not surprising.

In an "Another World" story line, Rachel Cory (Victoria Wyndham) never loved Mitch Laurence (William Gray Espy), she only slept with him because he had threatened to kill her husband Mac (Douglass Watson). Now that Mitch is back, Rachel is trying to decide which man she loves. In our minds there's no question about who she loves — it's Mac. — M.H., Bethlehem, Pa.

Melody Thomas Scott

As often happens when soaps change head writers, the story lines become diluted and some of the characters' histories are manipulated so that current stories can be jazzed up. Rachel's conflicting emotions over the two men are being used to spice up what was formerly a pretty dull story line.

I heard that Melody Thomas Scott, who plays Nikki Newman on "The Young and the Restless," is very ill in real life, just as her character is in the show. Is the rumor true? — A.W., Rocky Mountain, Va.

Don't believe everything you hear. Nikki may be critically ill in the "Y&R" story line, but Scott is alive and well in real life.

THURSDAY

The trademark grins belonging to Dr. Huxtable (Bill Cosby) and his youngest daughter Rudy (Keshia Knight Pulliam) have helped make their TV family the most popular in America. NBC's "The Cosby Show" airs Thursday, Feb. 26.

(Stations reserve the right to make last-minute changes.)

"You got me into this mess, now get me out," Larry (Mark Linn-Baker, l.) seems to be saying to Balki (Bronson Pinchot) on a less-than-successful weekend on the slopes in search of female companionship. Part two of "Snow Way to Treat a Lady" airs on ABC's "Perfect Strangers," Wednesday, Feb. 25.

Key College Games Highlight Hoop Action

By Adam Beckerman

With conference schedules drawing to a close, several college hoop squads fighting for either a league championship or a favorable seeding in their conference tournament will receive network coverage on Sunday, Feb. 22. ABC airs Metro Conference action as defending national champion Louisville meets Memphis State. CBS airs the confrontation between two Big East powers, John Thompson's Georgetown Hoyas and the Syracuse Orangemen. The teams resume a nasty rivalry in the Carrier Dome. Meanwhile, NBC airs the match between DePaul and Georgia Tech.

* On Saturday, Feb. 28, ABC begins its horse-racing coverage with the Flamingo Stakes from Hialeah, Fla. Eight other races will be shown throughout the next seven months, including the Florida Derby and Santa Anita Derby (April 4), Wood Memorial (April 18), Kentucky Derby Trial (April 25), Kentucky Derby (May 2), Preakness Stakes (May 16), Belmont Stakes (June 16) and Travers Stakes from Saratoga (Aug. 22).

* On Sunday, Feb. 22, final-round coverage of the Nissan Los Angeles Open from the Riviera Country Club will follow college basketball on CBS. This Hollywood-ish landscape, the last course designed by George C. Thomas, cost more than $650,000 back in 1925, when $100,000 was the going rate. Its lush beauty belies its mercilessness, with eight holes making the PGA Tour's list of 100 toughest holes. Some Riviera features include a circular green with a bunker for a center, a par-4 with matching fairways and a final green built into the base of a huge amphitheater — the first example of "stadium golf.";

But what Riviera is most infamous for is kikuyu, an African weed that when shorn tight makes a lovely fairway grass, but when let grown wild around the fairways creates all sorts of problems for inaccurate golfers. Hall Sutton, winner here in '83, suggests that when he's on "the perched lie, I prefer to use a stiff-wrist method to clip the ball crisply off the bed of grass. But when the ball's sitting down, the only alternative is to play it back on your stance and hit down on the shot with a wristy motion. In either shot, expect no backspin."

That piece of advice comes from "Golf Courses of the PGA Tour" (Harry N. Abrams), a picturesque book compiled by Golf magazine editor George Peper. Leaf through its photographs, lavish color illustrations, instructional tips, scorecards and historical text, and you'll dream of taking a golf vacation even if you don't play the game.

Happy Anniversary

This week, on Feb. 27, "Washington Week in Review" will celebrate 20 years on the air — the first PBS program to boast such longevity. The weekly current-affairs series was also feted by New York's Museum of Broadcasting earlier this month. A roundtable discussion of the week's political developments by leading newspaper and magazine journalists, the program consistently draws its highestratings during periods of national crisis.

The Constitution of the United States of America

The Original 7 Articles

PREAMBLE

We, the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect Union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquility, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America.

ARTICLE I

Section 1—Legislative powers; in whom vested

All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives.

Section 2—House of Representatives, how and by whom chosen. Qualifications of a Representative. Representatives and direct taxes, how apportioned. Enumeration. Vacancies to be filled. Power of choosing officers, and of impeachment.

1. The House of Representatives shall be composed of members chosen every second year by the people of the several States, and the electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State Legislature.

2. No person shall be a Representative who shall not have attained to the age of twenty five years, and been seven years a citizen of the United States, and who shall not, when elected, be an inhabitant of that State in which he shall be chosen.

3. (Representatives and direct taxes shall be apportioned among the several States which may be included within this Union, according to their respective numbers, which shall be determined by adding to the whole number of free persons, including those bound to service for a term of years, and excluding Indians not taxed, three-fifths of all other persons.) (This provision was superseded by Amendment XIV section 2.) The actual enumeration shall be made within three years after the first meeting of the Congress of the United States, and within every subsequent term of ten years, in such manner as they shall by law direct. The number of Representatives shall not exceed one for every thirty thousand, but each State shall have at least one Representative; and until such enumeration shall be made, the State of New Hampshire shall be entitled to choose three, Massachusetts eight, Rhode Island and Providence Plantations one, Connecticut five, New York six, New Jersey four, Pennsylvania eight, Delaware one, Maryland six, Virginia ten, North Carolina five, South Carolina five, and Georgia three.

4. When vacancies happen in the representation from any State, the Executive Authority thereof shall issue writs of election to fill such vacancies.

5. The House of Representatives shall choose their Speaker and other officers, and shall have the sole power of impeachment.

Section 3—Senators, how and by whom chosen. How classified. Qualifications of a Senator. President of the Senate, his right to vote. President pro tem., and other officers of the Senate, how chosen. Power to try impeachments. When President is tried, Chief Justice to preside. Sentence.

1. The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, chosen by the Legislature thereof. (The preceding five words were superseded by Amendment XVII, section 1.) for six years; and each Senator shall have one vote.

2. Immediately after they shall be assembled in consequence of the first election, they shall be divided as equally as may be into three classes. The seats of the Senators of the first class shall be vacated at the expiration of the second year, of the second class at the expiration of the fourth year, and of the third class at the expiration of the sixth year, so that one-third may be chosen every second year; and if vacancies happen by resignation, or otherwise, during the recess of the Legislature of any State, the Executive thereof may make temporary appointments until the next meeting of the Legislature, which shall then fill such vacancies. (The words in parentheses were superseded by Amendment XVII, section 2.)

3. No person shall be a Senator who shall not have attained to the age of thirty years, and been nine years a citizen of the United States, and who shall not, when elected, be an inhabitant of that State for which he shall be chosen.

4. The Vice President of the United States shall be President of the Senate, but shall have no vote, unless they be equally divided.

5. The Senate shall choose their other officers, and also a President pro tempore, in the absence of the Vice President, or when he shall exercise the office of President of the United States.

6. The Senate shall have the sole power to try all impeachments. When sitting for that purpose, they shall be on oath or affirmation. When the President of the United States is tried, the Chief Justice shall preside: and no person shall be convicted without the concurrence of two-thirds of the members present.

7. Judgment in cases of impeachment shall not extend further than to removal from office, and disqualification to hold and enjoy any office of honor, trust or profit under the United States: but the party convicted shall nevertheless be liable and subject to indictment, trial, judgment and punishment, according to law.

Section 4—Times, etc., of holding elections, how prescribed. One session each year.

1. The times, places and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives, shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations, except as to the places of choosing Senators.

2. The Congress shall assemble at least once in every year, and such meeting shall (be on the first Monday in December.) (The words in parentheses were superseded by Amendment XX section 2) unless they shall by law appoint a different day.

Section 5—Membership, quorum, adjournments, rules. Power to punish or expel. Journal. Time of adjournments, how limited, etc.

1. Each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns and qualifications of its own members, and a majority of each shall constitute a quorum to do business, but a smaller number may adjourn from day to day, and may be authorized to compel the attendance of absent members, in such manner, and under such penalties as each House may provide.

2. Each House may determine the rules of its proceedings, punish its members for disorderly behavior, and, with the concurrence of two-thirds, expel a member.

3. Each House shall keep a journal of its proceedings, and from time to time publish the same, excepting such parts as may in their judgment require secrecy; and the yeas and nays of the members of either House on any question shall, at the desire of one-fifth of those present, be entered on the journal.

4. Neither House, during the session of Congress, shall, without the consent of the other, adjourn for more than three days, nor to any other place than that in which the two Houses shall be sitting.

Section 6—Compensation, privileges, disqualifications in certain cases.

1. The Senators and Representatives shall receive a compensation for their services, to be ascertained by law, and paid out of the Treasury of the United States. They shall in all cases, except treason, felony and breach of the peace, be privileged from arrest during their attendance at the session of their respective Houses, and in going to and returning from the same; and for any speech or debate in either House, they shall not be questioned in any other place.

2. No Senator or Representative shall, during the time for which he was elected, be appointed to any civil office under the authority of the United States, which shall have been created, or the emoluments whereof shall have been increased during such time; and no person holding any office under the United States, shall be a member of either House during his continuance in office.

Section 7—How to originate all revenue bills. Veto. Bill may be passed by two-thirds of each House, notwithstanding, etc. Bill, not returned in ten days, to become a law. Provisions as to orders, concurrent resolutions, etc.

1. All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives, but the Senate may propose or concur with amendments as on other bills.

2. Presidential electors for District of Columbia.

1. The District constituting the seat of government of the United States shall appoint in such manner as the Congress may direct:

A number of electors of President and Vice President equal to the whole number of Senators and Representatives in Congress to which the District would be entitled if it were a State, but in no event more than the least populous State; they shall be in addition to those appointed by the States, but they shall be considered, for the purposes of the election of President and Vice President, to be electors appointed by a State; and they shall meet in the District and perform such duties as provided by the twelfth article of amendment.

2. The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

Amendment XXIV

Poll taxes, etc., prohibited.

1. The right of citizens of the United States to vote in any primary or other election for President or Vice President, for electors for President or Vice President, or for Senator or Representative in Congress, shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or any State by reason of failure to pay any poll tax or other tax.

2. The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

Amendment XXV

Succession to the Presidency, vice Presidency, and Presidential disability.

1. In case of the removal of the President from office or of his death or resignation, the Vice President shall become President.

2. Whenever there is a vacancy in the office of the Vice President, the President shall nominate a Vice President who shall take office upon confirmation by a majority vote of both Houses of Congress.

3. Whenever the President transmits to the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives his written declaration that he is unable to discharge the powers and duties of his office, and until he transmits to them a written declaration to the contrary, such powers and duties shall be discharged by the Vice President as Acting President.

4. Whenever the Vice President and a majority of either the principal officers of the executive departments or of such other body as the Congress may by law provide, transmit to the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives their written declaration that the President is unable to discharge the powers and duties of his office, the Vice President shall immediately assume the powers and duties of the office as Acting President.

Thereafter, when the President transmits to the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives his written declaration that no inability exists, he shall resume the powers and duties of his office unless the Vice President and a majority of either the principal officers of the executive departments or of such other body as the Congress may by law provide, transmit within four days to the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives their written declaration that the President is unable to discharge the powers and duties of his office. Thereupon the Congress shall decide the issue, assembling within forty-eight hours for that purpose if not in session. If the Congress, within twenty-one days after receipt of the latter written declaration, or, if the Congress is not in session, within twenty-one days after the Congress is required to assemble, determines by two-thirds vote of both Houses that the President is unable to discharge the powers and duties of his office, the Vice President shall continue to discharge the same as Acting President; otherwise, the President shall resume the powers and duties of his office.

2. The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.
